en: (qere:my-lord), Lord-of-, [ketiv:my-lord] | es: (mi-señor), [mi-señor], el-Señor-de | fr: armée, et-armée, rébellion | de: [ומרא], [מרא], [מראי] Dan 2:47; Dan 4:19; Dan 4:24

מְרֹדַךְ בַּלְאֲדָן H4757 N-proper-ms (1×)
Merodach-baladan, king of Babylon (proper name of a historical ruler)
Merodach-baladan was a king of Babylon during Hezekiah's time. His name in Akkadian (Marduk-apal-iddina) means 'Marduk has given a son'. He appears in 2 Kings 20:12 and Isaiah 39:1, where he sends envoys with letters and gifts to Hezekiah after hearing of the king's recovery from illness. Hezekiah's ill-advised display of his treasures to these envoys prompts Isaiah's prophecy of Babylonian exile. The name reflects the prominence of the god Marduk in Babylonian religion.

(1×) Merodach-baladan, a Babylonian king whose name honors the god Marduk (Meroach). His diplomatic mission to Hezekiah sets the stage for prophetic warnings about future Babylonian conquest. The name preserves Akkadian royal titulature, with translations maintaining the proper name rather than translating its theophoric elements. The historical figure represents emerging Babylonian power that would eventually destroy Jerusalem. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12407 WITH 3 SENSES
en: Merodakh-Baladan | es: Merodac-baladán | fr: [מרדך בלאדן] | de: [מרדך בלאדן] Isa 39:1

מַרְאֶה H4758 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3mp (104×)
Sight, appearance, or vision; the outward look of a person or thing, a prophetic visionary experience, or the act of seeing.
A Hebrew noun rooted in the verb ra'ah (to see), mar'eh spans the entire arc of visual experience. At its most common it describes outward appearance—how someone or something looks to the eye, as when Scripture notes the beauty of Sarah (Gen 12:11) or Rachel (Gen 29:17). In Ezekiel and Daniel it takes on prophetic weight, denoting the supernatural visions through which God discloses his purposes (Ezek 43:3). Less frequently it refers to the raw act or faculty of seeing itself, as in the disturbing 'sight of your eyes' in Deuteronomy 28:34. The Arabic cognate mar'a and the Korean hwansang for the visionary sense confirm how languages partition physical seeing from prophetic revelation.

1. appearance, outward form (83×) The outward visual form or look of a person, creature, or object—covering beauty, countenance, and general presentation. This is by far the dominant sense (83x), used of attractive women like Sarah and Rebekah, of the servant of the LORD whose appearance was marred (Isa 52:14), and of Daniel's healthy countenance (Dan 1:15). Spanish apariencia and German Angesicht align here, while the construct state mar'eh often functions attributively ('beautiful of appearance'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: appearance, like-appearance-of, like-appearance-of- | es: apariencia, aspecto, como-apariencia | fr: apparence, vision | de: Angesicht, von-Aussehen, wie-das-Aussehen Gen 12:11; Gen 24:16; Gen 26:7; Gen 29:17; Gen 39:6

2. vision, prophetic sight (12×) A supernatural or prophetic visual revelation, concentrated in Ezekiel and Daniel. In Ezekiel 43:3 the prophet sees a vision like the one by the river Chebar; Numbers 8:4 describes the lampstand made 'according to the vision' shown to Moses. Arabic ru'ya and Korean hwansang capture this prophetic-visionary nuance, and Swahili maono likewise distinguishes revelatory sight from ordinary looking. The twelve occurrences cluster tightly in apocalyptic and priestly literature. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: according-to-the-vision, and-appearances, and-vision-of | es: Y-visión-de, como-la-apariencia, como-la-visión | fr: et-de-il-a-vu, et-vision, selon-le-vision | de: der-Aussehen, gemaess-zu-der-Vision, in-Aussehen Num 8:4; Ezek 8:4; Ezek 11:24; Ezek 43:3

3. sight, act of seeing (9×) The faculty or act of visual perception, or a spectacle beheld. In Exodus 3:3 Moses says 'let me turn aside and see this great sight'; Deuteronomy 28:34 warns of madness 'from the sight of your eyes.' This sense also includes being visible or in view. Nine occurrences carry this meaning, bridging the gap between the physical and the figurative—what one witnesses rather than how something looks. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-from-sight-of, and-in-the-sight-of, and-sight | es: a-vista-de, la-visión, por-vista-de | fr: [למראה], apparence, de-sight-de | de: [ובמראי], [למראה], [מראיו] Exod 3:3; Num 12:8; Deut 28:34; Deut 28:67; Job 41:9

מַרְאֶה H4759a Prep-b (10×)
A prophetic vision; a supernatural visual revelation from God, often occurring at night or in a trance state.
Denotes a divine vision granted as a medium of revelation, distinct from dreams or audible speech. God declares in Numbers 12:6 that he makes himself known to prophets 'in a vision' (mar'ah), setting this mode alongside dreams. The young Samuel's first encounter with God is called a mar'ah (1 Sam 3:15), and Ezekiel repeatedly describes his transported experiences as 'visions of God' (Ezek 1:1; 8:3; 40:2). Spanish 'vision' and English 'vision' both capture the visual, revelatory character. The plural construct 'visions of the night' (Gen 46:2) and 'visions of God' (Ezek 1:1) highlight the supernatural origin of the experience.

vision, prophetic revelation (10×) A supernatural visual experience through which God communicates with prophets and chosen individuals. Distinct from the related mar'eh (appearance), this noun emphasizes the revelatory event itself. In Numbers 12:6, God distinguishes vision (mar'ah) as his chosen medium for prophetic communication, while Samuel's first prophetic encounter at Shiloh is designated a mar'ah (1 Sam 3:15). Ezekiel's elaborate transported visions—to the river Chebar (Ezek 1:1), to Jerusalem's temple (Ezek 8:3), and to the future temple (Ezek 40:2)—are called 'visions of God.' Both Spanish 'visiones' and English 'visions' consistently render this as a revelatory sight from God. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-a-vision, in-the-vision, in-visions-of | es: En-visiones, en-la-visión, en-visiones-de | fr: [במראה], [במראות], [המראה] | de: [במראה], [במראות], [המראה] Gen 46:2; Num 12:6; 1Sam 3:15; Ezek 1:1; Ezek 8:3

מַרְאָה H4759b Prep-b / N-fpc (1×)
mirrors, polished metal surfaces used for seeing one's reflection
This word refers to mirrors, polished metal surfaces used for viewing one's reflection. It appears in Exodus 38:8 describing the bronze basin in the tabernacle: it was made 'from the mirrors of the serving women who served at the entrance of the tent of meeting'. These mirrors were likely polished bronze, donated by women for sacred purposes. The term emphasizes the object as an instrument of seeing oneself. The voluntary sacrifice of personal beauty items for worship demonstrates devotion.

(1×) Polished metal mirrors used for seeing one's reflection. In Exodus, Israelite women donate their bronze mirrors to create the laver for priestly washings. The transformation of personal vanity items into sacred objects carries symbolic weight—what served self-regard now serves divine service. Ancient mirrors were valuable possessions, making this gift significant. All translations render this as 'mirrors'. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-mirrors-of | es: con-espejos-de | fr: de-mirrors-de | de: von-mirrors-von Exod 38:8

מְרָאָה H4760 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

crop, the food storage organ in a bird's throat (containing partially digested food)

This noun refers to the crop, the enlarged pouch in a bird's gullet where food is stored and softened before digestion. It appears in Leviticus 1:16 in instructions for burnt offerings of birds: the priest is to remove the crop with its contents and throw it beside the altar. The crop contains partially digested food and feathers, making it unsuitable for the altar. The term is anatomical vocabulary specific to avian physiology, showing the precision of priestly regulations.

(1×) The crop or alimentary pouch of a bird, where food is stored before digestion. Levitical law requires removing this organ (with its impure contents) before burning the bird as an offering. The regulation reflects ritual purity concerns and practical knowledge of bird anatomy. Translations consistently render this as 'crop', with some versions adding explanatory phrases about contents or feathers. FLESH AND BODY

en: its-crop | es: buche-suyo | fr: son-crop | de: sein-Kropf Lev 1:16

מְרַאֲשׁוֹת H4761 N-fpc / 2mp (1×)

place at the head, the head-place (location near or at someone's head when lying down)

This word refers to the place at someone's head, the head-area or head-place where something is positioned when a person is lying down. It appears in contexts involving sleeping: Jacob's stone pillow at Bethel, the cruse of water near Saul's head, Goliath's spear. In Jeremiah 13:18, however, the text is likely corrupt—BDB and ancient versions suggest reading 'from your heads' instead. The term is locative, describing spatial relationship to the head region rather than the head itself.

(1×) The location at or near a person's head, especially when reclining or sleeping. Biblical narratives use this to position objects —Jacob's stone, water near Saul, Goliath's weapons—all situated at the 'head-place'. The Jeremiah occurrence likely represents textual corruption, with translators following ancient versions that read a simpler form. The compound conveys specific spatial orientation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-your-heads | es: de-cabezas-vuestras | fr: [מראשותיכם] | de: [מראשותיכם] Jer 13:18

מָרֵשָׁה H4762 N-proper-fs (8×)

Mareshah — a city in the Shephelah lowlands of Judah; also a personal/clan name in Calebite genealogy

A proper noun identifying a city in the Shephelah (western foothills) of Judah, probably modern Tell Sandahanna near Beit Jibrin, about one mile south of the ancient site. Mareshah appears in Joshua's allotment list (Josh 15:44), among Rehoboam's fortifications (2 Chr 11:8), and as the site of King Asa's great victory over the Cushite army of Zerah (2 Chr 14:9-10). Micah 1:15 includes it in the prophetic dirge over Shephelah towns. In the Calebite genealogies of 1 Chronicles 2:42 and 4:21, the name appears as a clan or personal designation reflecting the settlement pattern of the region.

Mareshah (city in Judah) (8×) The place name Mareshah, designating a Judahite city in the Shephelah lowlands and, in genealogical contexts, a clan name among the descendants of Caleb and Shelah. Listed in the allotment of Judah (Josh 15:44), fortified by Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:8), and the setting of Asa's dramatic victory over the Cushite invasion force (2 Chr 14:9-10). Micah 1:15 includes it in a prophetic wordplay on Shephelah cities. All translations preserve the name as a direct transliteration — English 'Mareshah,' Spanish 'Maresa/Mareshah,' French 'Maréscha' — with variation only in prepositional prefixes (from, to, and). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mareshah, and-Mareshah, at-Mareshah | es: Maresa, Mareshah, de-Maresa | fr: Maréscha, [למרשה], [ממרשה] | de: [למרשה], [ממרשה], [מרשה] Josh 15:44; 1Chr 2:42; 1Chr 4:21; 2Chr 11:8; 2Chr 14:9

מְרַאֲשׁוֹת H4763 N-fpc / 3ms (11×)

Headrest, place at the head — the spot beside or beneath someone's head, typically while sleeping or resting

The noun מְרַאֲשׁוֹת (mera'ashot) designates the area at a person's head during sleep. Jacob places a stone at his head-place before sleeping at Bethel (Gen 28:11, 18). Michal positions the household idol at David's head-place to deceive Saul's men (1 Sam 19:13, 16). David creeps into Saul's camp and finds the king's spear at his head-place, taking it as proof of mercy (1 Sam 26:7, 11-12, 16). Elijah awakens to find provisions at his head-place (1 Kgs 19:6). The word always implies proximity and vulnerability during sleep. Spanish 'cabecera' and French 'chevet' capture the spatial sense.

head-place, headrest, area at the head (11×) The place at or beside someone's head during sleep, marking the spot of greatest proximity and vulnerability. Jacob places a stone at his head-place at Bethel (Gen 28:11, 18), Michal positions a teraphim at David's head-place in the bed (1 Sam 19:13, 16), Saul sleeps with his spear at his head-place in the camp (1 Sam 26:7, 11-12, 16), and Elijah finds provisions placed at his head-place in the wilderness (1 Kgs 19:6). The word consistently frames intimate, unguarded moments — theophany at Bethel, deception at Gibeah, mercy in the Wilderness of Ziph, and divine provision at Horeb. Spanish 'cabecera' and French 'chevet' both denote the head-end of a sleeping place. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [at-his-head], at-head-its, at-his-head | es: (Qeré), a-su-cabecera, cabecera-suya | fr: [at-son-head], headrest-son, à-son-tête | de: [at-sein-head], bei-Haupt-sein, bei-sein-Haupt Gen 28:11; Gen 28:18; 1Sam 19:13; 1Sam 19:16; 1Sam 26:7

מֵרַב H4764 N-proper-fs (3×)

Merab, Saul's elder daughter promised to David but given to another

Merab was King Saul's firstborn daughter, first mentioned alongside her sister Michal in the genealogy of 1 Samuel 14. Saul promised her to David as wife in exchange for military exploits against the Philistines, but when the time came, he gave her instead to Adriel the Meholathite. This broken promise was part of Saul's pattern of using his daughters as pawns in his conflict with David. Her name appears in only three verses, marking her as a figure of unfulfilled covenant and royal manipulation.

(3×) Merab, the elder daughter of King Saul. First Samuel 14:49 lists her alongside Michal in Saul's family. In 18:17 Saul offers her to David: 'Here is my elder daughter Merab; I will give her to you for a wife.' But verse 19 records the betrayal: 'at the time when Merab, Saul's daughter, should have been given to David, she was given to Adriel.' The LXX rendering Μερoβ and cross-linguistic consistency (Spanish Merab, French Merav) preserve this proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Merav | es: Merab, Merav | fr: Merav | de: Merav 1Sam 14:49; 1Sam 18:17; 1Sam 18:19

מַרְבָד H4765 N-mp (2×)

coverlets, bedspreads, or decorative coverings for beds

This masculine plural noun denotes coverlets or bedspreads, decorative bed coverings. Both occurrences describe luxurious textiles. Proverbs 7:16 has the adulteress boasting, 'I have spread my couch with coverings, colored linens from Egypt.' Proverbs 31:22 describes the virtuous woman: 'She makes bed coverings for herself; her clothing is fine linen and purple.' The term suggests high-quality woven or embroidered textiles used to beautify beds. In Proverbs 7, they're part of seduction; in chapter 31, evidence of skillful homemaking. The noun emphasizes craft and luxury rather than mere utility.

(2×) Coverlets, bedspreads, or decorative bed coverings. The adulteress's bed in Proverbs 7 is spread with expensive Egyptian linens, creating an atmosphere of exotic luxury to entice her victim. The noble woman of Proverbs 31 makes her own coverlets, demonstrating domestic skill and ensuring her household's comfort and dignity. The plural 'coverings' suggests multiple layers or pieces, not just a single blanket but elaborate bedding. The Spanish 'cobertores' captures this specialized bed textile, distinguished from ordinary blankets by quality and appearance. LINEN AND FABRIC
en: coverings, with-coverings | es: Cobertores, cobertores | fr: מרבדים | de: [מרבדים] Prov 7:16; Prov 31:22

מַרְבֶּה H4766 Adv (2×)
increase, abundance, or greatness; used as a noun or adverb for plenty or expansion
This noun or adverb denotes increase, abundance, or greatness, appearing twice in Isaiah. 'They divide the spoil in abundance' (33:23) uses it adverbially meaning 'in great quantity.' 'For the increase of his government and of peace there will be no end' (9:7, though textually difficult) uses it as a noun meaning expansion or multiplication. The term derives from the verbal root 'to be many/great,' thus signifying augmentation or amplification. Whether describing plunder divided abundantly or messianic government expanding endlessly, the core idea is increase beyond normal measure.

(2×) Increase, abundance, or expansion. Isaiah 33:23 envisions eschatological reversal: even the lame will take abundant plunder, with 'abundance' (marbe) modifying the dividing of spoil. Isaiah 9:7 (9:6 English) is textually challenging; if correct, it promises endless increase of the Davidic ruler's dominion and peace. The BDB notes this might be textual corruption, with some reading 'great' (rabbâ) instead. Either way, the semantic field involves multiplication, growth, and exceeding normal bounds—divine blessing manifest in measurable expansion of goods, territory, or governance. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH
en: for-increase-of, in-abundance | es: (De-lo-grande-de), mucho | fr: [(למרבה)], [מרבה] | de: [(למרבה)], [מרבה] Isa 9:7; Isa 33:23

מִרְבָּה H4767 N-fs (1×)
much, great capacity (containing or holding a large amount)
This noun means much or great capacity, referring to something that contains a large amount. It appears in Ezekiel 23:32 in a prophecy against Samaria and Jerusalem, using the image of a cup 'deep and large, containing much'. The cup metaphor represents judgment and suffering. BDB suggests this may actually be a Hiphil participle rather than a noun, meaning 'causing to be much' or 'making abundant'. The textual uncertainty reflects scribal difficulty, but the sense of large capacity remains clear.

(1×) Great capacity or abundance, the quality of containing much. Ezekiel's cup of judgment is described as both deep and having much capacity—it holds an overwhelming measure of divine wrath. Whether noun or participle, the term emphasizes the devastating abundance of judgment. Translations vary from 'much to contain' to 'holding much', with some following emendation to a Hiphil form. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH en: much | es: lo-mucho | fr: de-grande | de: [מרבה] Ezek 23:32

מַרְבִּית H4768 N-fsc / 3mp (5×)
increase, great number, abundance; interest on food; the greater part; greatness (of wisdom)
A noun denoting increase or abundance in various concrete and abstract applications. In Leviticus 25:37 it refers specifically to interest or increment on food-stuffs, paired with nesek (usury on money), reflecting ancient Near Eastern lending law. It can indicate the greater part of a group (1 Chr 12:30) or the greatness of something abstract like wisdom (2 Chr 9:6). Spanish 'abundancia' and 'multitud' capture the quantitative breadth well.

(5×) Increase or offspring in a familial sense, referring to the growth of a household or lineage. In 1 Samuel 2:33 it appears in construct with a family line, denoting the increase or progeny that will come from Eli's house. The multilingual glosses ('increase-of') confirm a concrete, generative nuance rather than abstract quantity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-for-increase, increase-of, most-of-them | es: abundancia-de, la-multitud-de, multitud-de | fr: [מרבית], [מרביתם], augmente-de | de: [מרבית], [מרביתם], increase-von Lev 25:37; 1Sam 2:33; 1Chr 12:30; 2Chr 9:6; 2Chr 30:18

מַרְבֵּץ H4769 Prep-l / N-msc (2×)
a resting place or lair; where animals lie down, especially flocks or wild beasts
This masculine noun denotes a resting place where animals lie down, appearing in two prophetic oracles of judgment. Ezekiel 25:5 declares God will make Rabbah 'a resting place for camels and Ammon a lair for flocks'—cities reduced to pasture for animals. Zephaniah 2:15 describes Nineveh's desolation: 'she has become a lair for wild beasts'—a once-great city now sheltering animals instead of humans. Both uses depict urban centers reverting to wilderness, where instead of human habitation, animals make their resting places. This reversal signals complete devastation.

(2×) A lying-down place, resting place, or lair for animals. Ezekiel's 'resting place for camels' and 'lair for flocks' transforms Ammonite cities into pastoral wilderness, the ultimate reversal of civilization. Zephaniah's 'lair for wild beasts' in Nineveh's ruins emphasizes desolation: wild animals bed down in what were royal palaces. The term comes from the root 'lie down, recline,' thus denoting any place where animals habitually rest. The judgment imagery is powerful: human achievement becomes animal shelter, proud cities become waystations for livestock and wildlife. RECLINING AND LYING en: a-lair, as-resting-place-for- | es: como-aprisco-de, guarida | fr: lieu-de-repos | de: [למרבץ], [מרבץ] Ezek 25:5; Zeph 2:15

מַרְבֵּק H4770 N-ms (4×)
marbeq — stall, feeding place for fattening livestock, especially calves
This noun literally means 'tying-place' or 'stall,' referring to an enclosure where animals were tied and fattened for eventual slaughter. The term appears four times, always in connection with calves (egel), highlighting the practice of stall-feeding to produce well-fattened animals. Both literal and figurative uses occur: Saul offers a 'stall-fed calf' for a meal in 1 Samuel, while prophets use 'calves of the stall' as metaphors for prosperity (Malachi), arrogant wealth (Jeremiah), and self-indulgent luxury (Amos). The concept of stall-feeding represented a luxury, as most livestock grazed freely.

(4×) A stall or tying-place where calves were kept and fattened, producing premium meat. In 1 Samuel 28:24, it refers literally to a calf kept in a stall that could be quickly prepared for an honored guest. Amos 6:4 uses it to critique the elite who eat 'calves from the midst of the stall,' symbolizing their excessive luxury. Jeremiah 46:21 employs it metaphorically, comparing Egypt's mercenaries to 'stall-fed calves'—well-fed and arrogant. Malachi 4:2 (3:20 MT) reverses the image positively: the righteous will leap 'like calves from the stall,' conveying exuberant joy and freedom at God's vindication. FATNESS AND RICHNESS
en: stall, the-stall | es: el-engorde, engordado, engorde | fr: [מרבק], crèche, stall | de: [מרבק], stall 1Sam 28:24; Jer 46:21; Amos 6:4; Mal 4:2

מַרְגּוֹעַ H4771 N-ms (1×)
rest, repose (relief from labor or distress, tranquility of spirit)
This word means rest or repose, relief from labor and inner tranquility. It occurs in Jeremiah 6:16 where God invites His people to stand at the crossroads and ask for the ancient paths, 'and walk in it, and find rest for your souls'. The term is poetic vocabulary for spiritual and physical refreshment. The promise of rest for the soul echoes Psalm 23 and anticipates Jesus' invitation in Matthew 11:29. The context makes disobedience tragic—they refuse the offered rest.

(1×) Rest, repose, or refreshment for the soul—relief from burdens and inner peace. Jeremiah's appeal promises rest to those who return to God's ancient paths, but the people refuse. The term combines physical rest with spiritual tranquility, a comprehensive peace. The Hebrew root suggests settling down or being at ease. Later Jewish and Christian tradition would mine this verse for its theology of Sabbath and divine rest. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: rest | es: descanso | fr: [מרגוע] | de: [מרגוע] Jer 6:16

מַרְגְּלוֹת H4772 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3ms (6×)

Place at the feet, feet-area: the spot near someone's feet, especially where one lies down.

A feminine plural noun derived from regel ('foot'), denoting the place at or near someone's feet. It appears almost exclusively in the book of Ruth, in the famous threshing-floor scene where Naomi instructs Ruth to uncover 'the place of his feet' and lie down (Ruth 3:4, 7, 8, 14). Its one other occurrence, Daniel 10:6, describes the gleaming appearance of the angelic figure's lower limbs. The word is carefully distinguished from regel itself — margelot emphasizes the location or area rather than the body part, adding a spatial and perhaps euphemistic dimension to the Ruth narrative.

place at the feet, feet-area (6×) The area at or near someone's feet, especially the place where one lies at another's feet. Predominantly a Ruth narrative term (Ruth 3:4, 7, 8, 14), used in Naomi's instructions for the threshing-floor encounter with Boaz, where it carries spatial and possibly euphemistic overtones. In Daniel 10:6 it refers to the lower extremities of the angelic vision. Spanish 'a sus pies' and German 'Fuesse' both render it as 'feet,' but the Hebrew plural denominative form (from regel) specifically denotes the place of the feet rather than the feet themselves. FEET AND LEGS

en: [ketiv], and-his-feet, his-feet | es: [a-sus-pies], a-sus-pies, sus-pies | fr: [cétiv], et-pied, ses-pieds | de: Fuesse, [ומרגלתיו], seinen-Fuessen Ruth 3:4; Ruth 3:7; Ruth 3:8; Ruth 3:14

מַרְגֵּמָה H4773 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)

sling, weapon for hurling stones (implement for projecting stones with force)

This word refers to a sling, a weapon or tool for hurling stones. It appears in Proverbs 26:8 in a proverb about fools: 'Like binding a stone in a sling is giving honor to a fool'. The comparison is puzzling —some interpret it as making the weapon useless (why tie down a stone meant to be thrown?), others as creating danger (the stone might fly back). BDB notes ancient versions differed, with some reading 'stone-heap' instead of 'sling'. Either way, the image warns against misplaced honor.

(1×) A sling, the weapon used to hurl stones at targets or enemies. Proverbs uses this in a wisdom saying about the futility or danger of honoring fools. The proverb's exact logic is debated—does binding a stone in a sling waste the weapon, or create a dangerous backfire? Either reading warns against the absurdity of elevating those unworthy. The sling imagery evokes David's victory over Goliath. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: in-a-sling | es: en-honda | fr: dans-במרגמה | de: [במרגמה] Prov 26:8

מַרְגֵּעָה H4774 Art / N-fs (1×)

rest, repose (refreshment and relief, parallel to 'resting place')

This word denotes rest or repose, refreshment from weariness. It occurs in Isaiah 28:12 where God identifies the true rest He offers, yet the people refuse to listen: 'This is the rest, give rest to the weary; and this is the repose'. The term appears in parallel with menuchah (resting place), reinforcing the theme of divinely offered relief. The people's rejection of this rest brings judgment. The word is poetic vocabulary, closely related to H4771 but with a slightly different form.

(1×) Rest, repose, or refreshment offered by God to weary people. Isaiah uses paired synonyms to emphasize the rest theme—this is both the rest and the repose God provides. The tragic refusal to accept this rest leads to stumbling and captivity. The term conveys relief from labor and spiritual refreshment. The parallel structure intensifies the offer's importance and the people's culpability in refusing it. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: and-not | es: es-el-descanso | fr: [המרגעה] | de: [המרגעה] Isa 28:12

מָרַד H4775 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-1cp (25×)

To rebel or revolt against authority; also used substantively for rebels — those who defy a sovereign, overlord, or God.

A verb denoting open defiance and revolt against established authority, whether political or divine. It appears in narratives of vassal kings breaking free from overlords — as when Hezekiah rebelled against Assyria (2 Kgs 18:7) or Zedekiah against Babylon (2 Chr 36:13). Spanish consistently uses 'se rebelo' and French preserves the Hebrew form untranslated in several places, reflecting its strong, unambiguous force. The related Arabic cognate carries the sense of bold audacity in disobedience. In a few prophetic passages the participle functions as a noun — 'the rebels' — designating a class of people defined by their defiant stance against God.

1. rebel against authority (22×) To rebel, revolt, or rise in defiance against a sovereign authority. Used of political rebellion — vassal kings breaking treaty obligations (Gen 14:4; 2 Kgs 18:7, 20; 24:1) — and of spiritual rebellion against God (Num 14:9; Josh 22:16-19; Neh 2:19). Spanish 'se rebelo/nos rebelamos' and the Arabic cognate marada ('be bold and audacious in rebellion') both confirm the force of open, willful defiance rather than mere passive resistance. Ezekiel 17:15 uses it of Zedekiah's fateful revolt against Nebuchadnezzar. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE

en: against-me, and-he-rebelled, and-he-rebelled- | es: Y-se-rebeló, nos-rebelamos, os-rebeláis | fr: [וימרד], [וימרדו], [למרוד] | de: [וימרד], [וימרדו], [ומרדנו] Gen 14:4; Num 14:9; Josh 22:16; Josh 22:18; Josh 22:19

2. rebel (substantive) (3×) A substantival participle — 'rebel, one who rebels' — designating persons characterized by defiance. At Job 24:13 the 'rebels against light' are those who reject moral illumination. Ezekiel 2:3 labels Israel a 'rebellious' nation, and Ezekiel 20:38 speaks of purging 'the rebels' from among the people. Spanish renders 'los rebeldes' (the rebels), confirming the shift from verbal action to a fixed characterization of persons defined by their stance of revolt. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE

en: among-rebels-of, the-rebelling, the-rebels | es: de-los-que-se-rebelan-contra-, las-rebeldes, los-rebeldes | fr: dans-במרדי, se-révolter | de: [במרדי], [המורדים], [המרדים] Job 24:13; Ezek 2:3; Ezek 20:38

מֶרֶד H4776 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

rebellion, revolt (opposition against authority, especially against rulers)

This noun means rebellion or revolt, specifically opposition against established authority. It appears in Ezra 4:19 in a report to King Artaxerxes about Jerusalem, claiming investigation shows 'rebellion and sedition have been made in it from ancient times'. The Aramaic term (this is from the Aramaic section of Ezra) is used to justify stopping the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls. The accusation of historic rebellion references Jerusalem's resistance to various empires. The political vocabulary reflects Persian administrative language.

(1×) Rebellion or revolt against political authority, particularly against imperial rule. Ezra's opponents use this charge to convince Artaxerxes that rebuilding Jerusalem poses a threat. The term is formal administrative vocabulary, the kind used in official reports and royal archives. The accusation is historically grounded—Jerusalem did rebel against Babylon—but used here to block post-exilic restoration efforts. The Aramaic reflects the multilingual bureaucracy of the Persian Empire. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8365 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-rebellion | es: y-rebelión | fr: [ומרד] | de: [ומרד] Ezra 4:19

מֶרֶד H4777 Prep-b / N-ms (1×) rebellion, revolt (treacherous uprising against divine or human authority)

This word means rebellion or revolt, specifically treacherous opposition to authority—whether divine or human. It occurs in Joshua 22:22 in the eastern tribes' defense when accused of building an unauthorized altar. They swear, 'If it was in rebellion or if in treachery against the Lord, do not spare us this day'. The term appears paired with 'treachery' (maal), emphasizing the gravity of the charge. The altar was actually built for testimony, not rebellion, but the accusation reveals how seriously Israel took unauthorized worship.

(1×) Rebellion or revolt, especially treacherous uprising against divine authority. Joshua 22 uses this in a hypothetical oath—if the eastern tribes built their altar in rebellion, they deserve death. The pairing with 'treachery' intensifies the charge. The term focuses on the relational betrayal involved in rebellion, not just political opposition. The incident shows Israel's vigilance against anything that might splinter covenant unity. REBELLION REVOLT
en: in-rebellion | es: en-rebelión | fr: dans-rebellion | de: in-rebellion Josh 22:22

מֶרֶד H4778 N-proper-ms (2×)
a personal name meaning 'rebellion,' borne by a man in the tribe of Judah Mered appears as a personal name in the genealogies of Judah (1 Chronicles 4:17-18). He married Bithiah, daughter of Pharaoh, making him a notable figure in the tribal history. The name means 'rebellion,' an unusual choice that may reflect family circumstances at his birth or a later nickname. The genealogical context shows complex family relationships typical of Chronicles' detailed tribal records. The Greek translations vary considerably (Porad, Noroēl, Morad, Moraed, Barad, Marō), reflecting the challenges of rendering Hebrew names into Greek. This represents an actual historical figure despite the sparse information.

(2×) Proper name of a man in Judah's genealogy. First Chronicles 4:17-18 provides fragmentary information: Mered is listed among descendants with his wife Bithiah identified as Pharaoh's daughter, indicating either an Egyptian connection or symbolic naming. Verse 18 mentions 'Mered' again, possibly the same person in complex genealogical notation. The name's meaning ('rebellion') contrasts with typical positive theophoric names, suggesting either historical circumstances or later interpretation of the person's character or actions. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8365 WITH 3 SENSES en: Mered, and-Mered | es: Mered, y-Mered | fr: [ומרד], [מרד] | de: [ומרד], [מרד] 1Chr 4:17; 1Chr 4:18

מָרֶד H4779 Adj-fsd (2×)
rebellious, defiant; a city characterized by political insurrection and resistance to authority
This Aramaic adjective means 'rebellious,' appearing twice in Ezra 4 in the letter accusing Jerusalem. 'The rebellious city, harmful to kings' (v. 12) and 'search the book of records and you will find... this city is a rebellious city' (v. 15). The enemies of Judah petition the Persian king, claiming Jerusalem has a history of sedition and revolt. The adjective describes political rebellion, insurrection against imperial authority. The accusations had enough historical basis (Babylonian revolt) to be credible, though the letter exaggerates to prevent Jerusalem's rebuilding. The term carries legal-political weight in imperial correspondence.

(2×) Rebellious, characterized by political insurrection or defiance of authority. Ezra 4:12 accuses the returned exiles of rebuilding 'the rebellious and harmful city,' while verse 15 claims archival records will prove 'this is a rebellious city.' The Aramaic emphatic state forms (mārādā', mārādetā') function as definite descriptors: 'the rebellious one.' This is accusatory language in Persian imperial administration, where rebellion justified intervention. The charge had historical grounding in Judah's revolts against Babylon, making it rhetorically effective even if presently false. The term belongs to political-legal vocabulary, not moral or religious rebellion. STUBBORNNESS REBELLION
en: rebellious | es: rebelde | fr: [מרדא], [מרדתא] | de: [מרדא], [מרדתא] Ezra 4:12; Ezra 4:15

מַרְדּוּת H4780 Art / N-fs (1×)
rebelliousness, stubbornness (quality of being rebellious or perversely obstinate)
This noun means rebelliousness or stubborn opposition to authority. It appears in 1 Samuel 20:30 when Saul angrily insults Jonathan: 'You son of a perverse, rebellious woman!'. The Hebrew phrase is difficult, and textual scholars suggest emendations. BDB notes some ancient versions read differently, and the phrase may mean 'son of a rebellious girl' or involve Aramaic roots related to discipline. Regardless of the exact reading, Saul's fury at Jonathan's loyalty to David is clear. The term emphasizes character—rebellious spirit rather than isolated acts.

(1×) Rebelliousness, the characteristic quality of being stubbornly defiant or perversely obstinate. Saul hurls this insult at Jonathan, attacking his mother's character to wound him. The textual difficulty reflects scribal puzzlement over an unusual expression. Whether the term means rebellion against authority or straying from discipline, Saul intends maximum offense. Translations vary widely, from 'rebellious' to 'perverse', all capturing Saul's rage. REBELLION REVOLT
en: rebellious | es: la-rebelión | fr: rebellious | de: rebellious 1Sam 20:30

מְרֹדַךְ H4781 N-proper-ms (1×)
Marduk, chief god of Babylon (proper name of Babylonian deity)
Marduk (Hebrew Merodach) was the chief god of Babylon, especially prominent during Nebuchadnezzar's era. The name appears in Jeremiah 50:2 in an oracle against Babylon: 'Bel is put to shame; Marduk is dismayed'. The prophecy declares the humiliation of Babylon's patron deity, signaling the empire's fall. In Akkadian, Marduk was the supreme god who defeated chaos and created order. The Hebrew rendering preserves the divine name while announcing its impotence before Yahweh. The theophoric element appears in royal names like Merodach-baladan.

(1×) Marduk, the chief god of Babylon and patron deity of that empire. Jeremiah's oracle declares this powerful god will be shattered along with Bel (another name for Marduk or a related deity). The prophecy asserts Yahweh's supremacy over even Babylon's mightiest divine protector. The name preserves Akkadian Marduk, rendered into Hebrew script. Ancient readers would recognize the claim: Israel's God defeats Babylon's god. GODS AND DEITIES en: Merodak | es: Merodak | fr: [מרדך] | de: [מרדך] Jer 50:2

מָרְדֳּכַי H4782 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (60×)
Mordecai — the Jewish leader in the Persian court, cousin and adoptive father of Esther, hero of the Purim narrative.
Mordecai (Hebrew Mordekhai, possibly derived from the Babylonian deity name Marduk) is the central male figure of the book of Esther and appears briefly in Ezra 2:2 among those returning from exile with Zerubbabel. In Esther, he is introduced as a Benjaminite descended from the exiles taken with Jeconiah (Esth 2:5-6), who raises his orphaned cousin Hadassah (Esther) as his own daughter. His refusal to bow before Haman sets the entire plot in motion, and his eventual elevation to vizier (Esth 10:3) reverses the threatened genocide. The name is transliterated consistently across languages — Spanish Mardoqueo, French Mardochee, German Mordechai — reflecting its status as a fixed proper noun throughout the biblical tradition.

Mordecai (Jewish leader in Persia) (60×) The personal name Mordecai, referring primarily to the Jewish leader in the Persian court who raises Esther and thwarts Haman's genocidal plot (Esth 2:5-7; 4:1-17; 8:1-2; 10:3), and secondarily to a figure listed among the returnees with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:2; Neh 7:7). Possibly derived from the Babylonian divine name Marduk. All target languages transliterate rather than translate — Spanish Mardoqueo, French Mardochee — confirming its proper-noun status. PROPER NAMES

(PERSONAL)
en: Mordecai, Mordechai, Mordekhay | es: Mardoqueo | fr: Mardochée | de: Mordechai Ezra 2:2; Neh 7:7; Esth 2:5; Esth 2:7; Esth 2:10

מִרְדָּף H4783 N-ms (1×)
persecution, oppressive pursuit (act of pursuing to harm or oppress)
This noun means persecution, the act of oppressive pursuit or harassment. It appears in Isaiah 14:6 describing Babylon's tyranny: striking peoples with fury, ruling nations in anger 'with unrelenting persecution'. The term emphasizes sustained, unrelenting oppression rather than isolated attacks. BDB notes the form resembles a Hophal participle, suggesting passive or intensive force. Ancient versions vary, with some reading an active participle 'persecutor'. The context celebrates the end of Babylon's merciless persecution of subjected peoples.

(1×) Persecution or unrelenting oppressive pursuit, sustained harassment of subjected peoples. Isaiah's taunt-song against Babylon's king describes tyranny characterized by continuous persecution without relief. The rare form (possibly Hophal or noun derived from Piel) intensifies the sense of sustained oppression. Ancient translators struggled with the form but grasped the meaning—unending, merciless pursuit. The term captures the relentless nature of imperial oppression. PERSECUTE PURSUE en: persecution-of | es: perseguido | fr: [מרדף] | de: [מרדף] Isa 14:6

מָרָה H4784 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-2mp (45×)
To be rebellious, contentious, or disobedient; to defy authority, especially God's commands; also bitter provocation.
Marah is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for defiant rebellion against divine authority. Its Qal form captures the raw act of disobedience — a son who is 'stubborn and rebellious' (Deut 21:18), Israel defying God at Meribah. The Hifil intensifies this into active provocation, deliberately goading God to anger. Arabic maraa ('to dispute') and Syriac Pa'el 'contend with' preserve the adversarial core, but Hebrew expands the range into deeper theological indictment: covenantal treachery. A peripheral sense surfaces in Lam 1:20 and 1 Sam 30:6, where the root shades into bitter grief — the same consonants that spell 'rebellion' also evoke the bitterness that drives it.

1. rebel against, provoke to anger (Hifil) (18×) The causative Hifil sense: to rebel against, provoke to anger, actively defy a superior authority. This is the most frequent cluster (18 occurrences), concentrated in Deuteronomy and the historical books where Israel's rebellions are catalogued. In Deut 1:26 and 1:43 Israel refuses to go up and then presumptuously attacks — both acts of marah against Yahweh's explicit command. Spanish rebelarse and French se rebeller both select active-defiance vocabulary, while German widerspenstig ('obstinate, refractory') captures the willful quality. The Hifil causative force means this is not passive disobedience but deliberate provocation. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE
en: and-rebelled-, and-rebelled-against, and-she-rebelled | es: Y-se-rebelaron, Y-se-rebeló, lo-provocaron | fr: [וימרן], et-se-rebeller, et-tu-se-rebella | de: [וימרו], [ותמר], [למרות] Deut 1:26; Deut 1:43; Deut 9:23; Josh 1:18; 1Sam 12:14

2. rebel, be disobedient (Qal) (15×) The basic Qal finite sense: to rebel, be disobedient, act in defiance of authority. Covering 15 occurrences across all Qal conjugations, this is the unmarked rebellion sense without the intensifying causative nuance. In Num 20:24 and 27:14 Moses and Aaron 'rebelled against' God's command at Meribah; in 1 Kgs 13:21 and 13:26 the man of God 'disobeyed' the word of the LORD. Spanish fui rebelde ('I was rebellious') and French se rebeller both treat this as straightforward disobedience. The distinction from sense 1 is grammatical (Qal vs. Hifil) but also semantic — the Qal describes the act of rebellion itself, while the Hifil foregrounds the provocation of the authority. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE
en: I-rebelled, I-rebelled-against, and-rebel | es: fui-rebelde, me-rebelé, os-rebelasteis | fr: de-se-rebeller, et-se-rebeller, et-tu-fera-rebelle | de: [ומריתם], [מרו], [מריתי] Num 20:24; Num 27:14; 1Sam 12:15; 1Kgs 13:21; 1Kgs 13:26

3. rebellious, defiant (Qal participle) (5×) The Qal participial/adjectival sense: rebellious, defiant — used substantively to characterize persons or communities as inherently rebel. Five occurrences, including the memorable legal formula ben sorer umoreh ('a stubborn and rebellious son,' Deut 21:18, 20) and the exasperated address to Israel as hamnmorim ('you rebels!') in Num 20:10. Spanish los rebeldes and French rebelle both nominalize the adjective, confirming that cross-linguistically this functions as a characterizing label rather than an event description. Ps 78:8 and Jer 5:23 extend this to describe Israel's national character across generations. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE
en: and-rebellious, the-rebels | es: los-rebeldes, y-contenciosa, y-contumaz | fr: et-de-se-rebeller, et-rebelle, et-se-rebeller | de: [ומורה], der-rebels, und-rebellious Num 20:10; Deut 21:18; Deut 21:20; Ps 78:8; Jer 5:23

4. bitter, bitterness (4×) A stative/adjectival sense: bitter, bitterness, bitter provocation. Four occurrences where the root overlaps with or borrows coloring from the related root marar ('to be bitter'). In 1 Sam 30:6 David is 'bitter of soul'; in 2 Kgs 14:26 Israel's affliction is 'very bitter'; in Lam 1:20 the infinitive absolute maro intensifies Jerusalem's grief. Spanish amarga/amargamente ('bitter/bitterly') and German bitter confirm that translators recognize this as a distinct semantic zone. The connection between rebellion and bitterness is not accidental — the place-name Marah (Exod 15:23) and this verb share the same consonantal root, and biblical theology often treats disobedience as a bitter draught. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-in-their-provocations, bitter, rebelling | es: amarga, amargamente, y-en-sus-provocaciones | fr: amer, et-être-rebelle-eux, se-rebeller | de: bitter, und-widersetzte-sich, widersetzte-sich 1Sam 30:6; 2Kgs 14:26; Job 17:2; Lam 1:20

5. (3×) Persistent characterization of Israel as rebellious — three occurrences in Deut 9:7, 9:24, and 31:27 where the participle or adjective mamrim functions as a summary label for Israel's chronic disposition toward God. These are not narrating a single act of rebellion but describing an enduring national trait. Spanish rebeldes and German widerspenstig both select habitual-character vocabulary. Moses' farewell speech in Deut 31:27 is particularly striking: 'I know your rebellion (meriyekha) and your stiff neck — while I am still alive with you today you have been rebellious (mamrim) against the LORD.' The evidence suggests this is a specialized rhetorical-summary usage of the participial form rather than a new semantic sense per se, but the consistent Deuteronomic clustering warrants separate treatment. STUBBORNNESS REBELLION
en: rebellious | es: Rebeldes, rebeldes | fr: rebelle | de: widerspenstig Deut 9:7; Deut 9:24; Deut 31:27

מָרָה H4785 N-proper-fs (5×)
Marah, the bitter spring encountered by Israel in the Sinai wilderness after the Exodus Marah is the place name given to a spring in the Sinai peninsula whose waters were too bitter to drink (Exodus 15:23). The name itself derives from the root mar, meaning 'bitter,' and the narrative records how God made the waters sweet through a thrown tree. Numbers 33:8-9 lists Marah as a station in Israel's wilderness itinerary. The name became emblematic of trial transformed by divine provision.

(5×) Proper noun designating the bitter spring in the Sinai wilderness where Israel stopped after crossing the Sea of Reeds. All five occurrences cluster in the Exodus-Numbers wilderness narrative (Exod 15:23 three times with directional he 'Marah-ward'; Num 33:8-9 in the itinerary). Spanish 'a-Marah' and French 'Mara' preserve the toponym consistently, and the directional suffix in Hebrew shows locative use. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Marah, Marah-ward, from-Marah | es: Marah, a-Marah, de-Mara | fr: Mara, Mara-garde, dans-Marah | de: Mara, Mara-ward, in-Marah Exod 15:23; Num 33:8; Num 33:9

מֹרָה H4786 N-fsc (1×)
bitterness, grief (emotional pain or distress, especially sorrow of spirit)

This word means bitterness or grief, specifically emotional distress and sorrow of spirit. It occurs in Genesis 26:35 describing Isaac's response to Esau's Hittite wives: they 'brought bitterness of spirit to Isaac and Rebekah'. The term emphasizes internal anguish rather than physical bitterness. The construct 'bitterness of spirit' (ruach) indicates deep emotional pain, disappointment, or grief. Esau's marriage choices create family discord and foreshadow future conflicts. The phrase expresses parental grief over a child's decisions.

(1×) Bitterness of spirit, emotional grief or internal distress rather than physical bitterness. Genesis uses this to describe Isaac and Rebekah's anguish over Esau's marriages to Canaanite women. The term captures parental disappointment and sorrow, the grief of seeing a son make destructive choices. The construct with 'spirit' emphasizes the inward, emotional dimension. Later tradition would see this as part of Esau's unfitness to receive the blessing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bitterness-of | es: amargura-de | fr: amertume-de | de: eine-Bitternis Gen 26:35

מְרֹרָה H4787 N-fsc (1×)

bitterness, misery (inner anguish or suffering known to the sufferer's own heart)

This noun denotes bitterness or misery, specifically the inner anguish that only the sufferer fully knows. It appears in Proverbs 14:10: 'The heart knows its own bitterness, and no stranger shares its joy'. The term emphasizes the private, incommunicable nature of personal suffering. One's own misery—like one's own joy—has depths that others cannot fully penetrate. The wisdom saying acknowledges the isolation inherent in subjective experience. The construct 'bitterness of its soul' (nephesh) locates the pain in the core of personal identity.

(1×) The bitterness or misery that resides in one's inner being, the personal anguish known fully only to oneself. Proverbs uses this to express the incommunicable nature of subjective suffering—the heart knows its own bitterness in ways no outsider can share. The parallel with 'joy' suggests both painful and pleasant experiences have private dimensions. The term emphasizes inward, emotional anguish rather than external circumstances. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-bitterness-of | es: amargura-de | fr: מרת | de: [מרת] Prov 14:10

מָרוּד H4788 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3fs (3×)

Homelessness, wandering, or the state of being driven out without refuge

This term describes the condition of being homeless or fugitive—wandering without stable shelter. Isaiah uses it when commanding God's people to bring 'the homeless poor' into their houses. Lamentations employs it twice to describe Jerusalem's misery: her wanderings during days of affliction, and the remembrance of affliction and wandering that embitters the soul. It captures not just physical displacement but the emotional and social desolation of having no place to belong or rest.

(3×) Homelessness or fugitive wandering. Isaiah 58:7 commands: 'Is it not to share your bread with the hungry and bring the homeless poor into your house?' Lamentations 1:7 recalls 'all her treasures' Jerusalem had 'in the days of her affliction and wandering.' In 3:19, the speaker cries 'remember my affliction and my wandering, the wormwood and the gall.' The French 'errant' and Spanish 'vagabundeo' both emphasize the rootless, driven-out quality of this condition. WANDERING AND GRIEVING

en: and-her-wandering, and-my-wandering, wandering | es: errantes, y-mi-vagabundeo, y-sus-vagabundeos | fr: errant, et-errant, et-ses-errances | de: [ומרודי], [ומרודיה], [מרודים] Isa 58:7; Lam 1:7; Lam 3:19

מֵרוֹז H4789 N-proper-ms (1×)

Meroz, a town in northern Israel (proper name, location unknown, cursed for not helping)

Meroz is a town in northern Israel, location unknown, mentioned only in Judges 5:23. In Deborah's victory song, the angel of the Lord curses Meroz 'because they did not come to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty'. The town's name and location have been lost to history, but its curse is preserved. Some suggest the name means 'refuge' or relates to a root meaning 'lean' or 'weak'. Whatever its etymology, Meroz represents those who failed to join Israel's battle against Canaanite oppression.

(1×) Meroz, a town cursed in Deborah's song for failing to join Israel's battle against Sisera. The precise location is unknown, likely somewhere in the tribal territories of northern Israel. The curse is fierce—contrasted with Jael's blessing—for those who stayed neutral when God's people needed help. The name survives only in this prophetic curse, a cautionary example of failed solidarity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Meroz | es: a-Meroz | fr: Meroz | de: Meroz Judg 5:23

מָרוֹחַ H4790 Adj-msc (1×)

crushed, having crushed testicles (condition making one ritually unfit for priestly service)

This term refers to crushed or damaged testicles, a physical condition that disqualified someone from serving as a priest. It appears in Leviticus 21:20 in a list of physical defects that prevent priestly service. BDB suggests the root may mean 'rub' (resulting in damage by rubbing away) or relate to an Aramaic root meaning 'enlarged'. Textual variants suggest some read this as 'enlargement' rather than 'crushing'. Either way, the term describes male genital damage that affected ritual eligibility. The regulation reflects ancient purity codes linking physical wholeness with cultic service.

(1×) Crushed or damaged testicles, a condition disqualifying one from priestly service according to Levitical purity laws. The term appears in a catalog of physical conditions precluding altar service—not because of moral unworthiness, but ritual wholeness requirements. The exact condition is debated (crushing vs. enlargement), but both readings indicate genital abnormality. The regulation reflects ancient Near Eastern concepts linking bodily integrity with sacred service. BRUISED CRUSHED

en: crushed | es: aplastado-de | fr: écrasa | de: zermalmte Lev 21:20

מָרוֹם H4791 Prep-l (54×)

Height, elevated place, or the heavenly heights; used of physical summits, the celestial dwelling of God, and as a title of divine exaltation.

The Hebrew noun marom (מָרוֹם) is a poet's word for height — it appears overwhelmingly in elevated literary contexts rather than prosaic narrative. Its most frequent deployment, comprising over half its occurrences, points upward to the celestial realm: God 'looks down from his marom' (Ps 102:19), sends help 'from on high' (2 Sam 22:17), and makes peace 'in his heights' (Job 25:2). Spanish splits this beautifully between 'de lo alto' (from on high) for the divine sphere and 'altura' (height) for physical geography. The physical sense surfaces in vivid topographical images — the 'heights of the field' where Naphtali fought (Judg 5:18), the summit of Lebanon's cedars (2 Kgs 19:23). Two rare occurrences push beyond geography and theology into direct address: 'O Exalted One' (Ps 56:2) and 'the exalted ones of the earth' (Isa 24:4), where height becomes a metaphor for pride or majesty itself.

1. heaven, the celestial realm (32×) The heavenly heights, the celestial realm where God dwells — 'on high' or 'from on high.' This is the dominant poetic use, appearing in nearly two-thirds of all occurrences. God sends rescue 'from on high' (2 Sam 22:17); He makes peace 'in his heights' (Job 25:2); the Spirit is poured out 'from on high' (Isa 32:15). Spanish consistently renders this as 'de lo alto' or 'desde lo alto' (from on high), French as 'de hauteur,' and German as 'Hohe.' The prepositional phrases bam-marom and lam-marom function almost as technical terms for the divine sphere, paralleling shamayim (heavens) in many poetic cola. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-kings, from-on-high, height | es: a-lo-alto, de-lo-alto, desde-lo-alto | fr: dans-hauteur, de-hauteur, de-s'élever | de: Hoehe, [במרום], [למרום] 2Sam 22:17; 2Kgs 19:22; Job 5:11; Job 25:2; Job 39:18

2. physical height or elevated place (20×) A literal, physical height or elevated terrain — the summit of a mountain, the crest of a hill, or high ground. Naphtali risked his life 'on the heights of the field' (Judg 5:18); Sennacherib boasted of ascending 'the height of the mountains, the farthest reaches of Lebanon' (2 Kgs 19:23). Spanish uses 'altura de' or 'alturas,' and German 'Hohe von,' maintaining the concrete geographical sense. The construct forms merom harim (height of the mountains) and merom tsiyyon (height of Zion, Jer 31:12) keep the word anchored in real topography even as Zion itself carries theological weight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: -the-heights-of, from-the-height-of, from-the-heights | es: a-la-altura, altura-de, alturas | fr: -le-heights-de, dans-hauteur, de-hauteur | de: -der-heights-von, Hoehe, Hoehe-von Judg 5:18; 2Kgs 19:23; Job 16:19; Job 31:2; Ps 102:19

3. (1×) A vocative or title of address meaning 'O Exalted One,' used in direct address to God or an exalted figure. The single occurrence at Psalm 56:2 (or 56:3 in some versifications) uses marom as an epithet — English renders 'O Exalted One' or 'O Most High,' Spanish 'altivez,' and German 'O erhohter Einer.' This is neither geography nor cosmology but doxology: height has become a name. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: O-Exalted-One | es: altivez | fr: de-s'élever | de: O-erhöht-einer Ps 56:2

4. (1×) A substantival use referring to exalted persons — 'the lofty ones' or 'the exalted ones of the earth.' Isaiah 24:4 speaks of the merom of the people languishing in judgment. Spanish renders 'los altos de' (the lofty of), French 'hauteur,' and German 'von Erhabenheit' (of sublimity). The plural or collective force marks this as distinct from the singular vocative: these are human beings elevated in status who are brought low by divine judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-exalted-ones | es: los-altos-de | fr: hauteur | de: von-Erhabenheit Isa 24:4

מְרוֹם H4792 N-proper-fs (2×)
a place name meaning 'heights,' location of the Waters of Merom in northern Canaan Merom appears exclusively in the phrase 'waters of Merom' in Joshua 11:5, 7, the site where Joshua defeated a northern Canaanite coalition led by Jabin king of Hazor. The Israelites came 'suddenly' to the waters of Merom and attacked. Most scholars identify this with Lake Huleh (modern Hula Valley) in upper Galilee, north of the Sea of Galilee, though the identification is debated. The name means 'height' or 'elevation,' appropriate for the area's geography. This victory secured Israelite control of northern Canaan, paralleling the southern and central campaigns.

(2×) Proper name of a location in northern Canaan, known for its waters. Joshua 11:5 describes the Canaanite kings gathering 'at the waters of Merom to fight against Israel,' and verse 7 records Joshua's surprise attack there. The definite phrase 'the waters of Merom' suggests a known landmark, likely a lake or major spring. Traditional identification with Lake Huleh fits the geographical and strategic context—a northern gathering point for coalition forces. The victory at Merom completed Joshua's conquest of Canaan's major regions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Merom | es: Merom | fr: Merom | de: Merom Josh 11:5; Josh 11:7

מֵרוּץ H4793 Art / N-ms (1×)
A running or race, particularly the competitive footrace mentioned in Ecclesiastes 9:11
This rare noun appears only once in the Old Testament, in Ecclesiastes 9:11's famous reflection that "the race is not to the swift." The term specifically denotes competitive running—a footrace where speed would seem decisive. Yet Qoheleth uses it to illustrate life's unpredictability: skill and ability don't guarantee victory. The multilingual evidence (English "the race," Spanish "la carrera") confirms its athletic, competitive connotation rather than mere movement.

(1×) Denotes a competitive footrace or running contest. The single occurrence in Ecclesiastes 9:11 uses this term in a proverbial reflection on life's uncertainties, where even the swift may not win. The context emphasizes athletic competition as a metaphor for human endeavor, where outcomes transcend mere ability. Cross-linguistic glosses consistently render this as a formal race or contest rather than casual running. STRUGGLE AND CONTEST
en: the-race | es: la-carrera | fr: le-המרוץ | de: [המרוץ] Eccl 9:11

מְרוּצָה H4794 N-fsc (5×)
running, manner of running; course of life or conduct
A feminine noun from the root ruts ('to run') describing either the physical act and style of running or, metaphorically, the course of one's life and conduct. In 2 Samuel 18:27 Ahimaaz is recognized by his distinctive running style, while Jeremiah uses it for the wayward moral course of the people (Jer 8:6; 23:10). Spanish 'carrera' neatly spans both the athletic and figurative dimensions.

(5×) The physical manner or style of running, used to identify a person by how they run. In 2 Samuel 18:27, the watchman recognizes the runner's gait as that of Ahimaaz son of Zadok. Spanish 'carrera-de' and the construct form merutsat confirm the sense of a characteristic running motion belonging to an individual. Both occurrences in 2 Samuel 18:27 (Qere and variant) point to this concrete athletic sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: [Q], in-their-running, like-running-of | es: (a-su-carrera), [a-su-carrera], carrera-de | fr: [(במרוצתם)], [[במרצותם]], [מרוצתם] | de: [(במרוצתם)], [[במרצותם]], [מרוצתם] 2Sam 18:27; Jer 8:6; Jer 23:10

מָרוּק H4795 N-mpc / 3fp (1×)
Bodily treatments or rubbings, referring to cosmetic preparations applied during the year-long beautification process
This noun describes the elaborate cosmetic treatments Persian harem candidates underwent. Esther 2:12 mentions "the days of their rubbings"—a full year of oil treatments, perfumes, and beautification procedures before each young woman could appear before King Ahasuerus. The term literally means "scrapings" or "rubbings," capturing the physical application of ointments and cosmetics. While English uses "purification," the Hebrew emphasizes the tactile, bodily dimension of these extended beauty regimens that transformed provincial girls into candidates fit for a royal court.

(1×) Refers to the year-long cosmetic preparation process involving application of oils, perfumes, and beautification treatments. The hapax in Esther 2:12 describes bodily rubbings or scrapings—the physical act of applying cosmetics. The context reveals Persian court protocol: six months with myrrh oil, six months with perfumes and other preparations. Spanish "embellecimientos" (beautifications) captures the cosmetic purpose, while the Hebrew root emphasizes the manual, tactile nature of these treatments. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING
en: their-purification | es: sus-embellecimientos | fr: [מרוקיהן] | de: [מרוקיהן] Esth 2:12

מָרוֹת H4796 N-proper-fs (1×)
Maroth, a town in Judah mentioned in Micah's prophetic lament over cities facing Assyrian invasion
Maroth appears only in Micah 1:12, part of a prophetic wordplay sequence naming Judean towns in the path of Assyrian invasion. The prophet says the inhabitants "wait anxiously for good," but disaster comes instead. The name likely derives from the root for "bitterness," creating an ironic pun: the people of "Bitterness-ville" hope for sweetness but receive calamity. These town names in Micah 1 form a powerful poetic device, with sound and meaning reinforcing the prophet's message of coming judgment.

(1×) A town in the Shephelah (lowland) of Judah, mentioned in Micah's prophecy against cities threatened by Assyrian invasion (circa 701 BC). The name appears in a passage employing wordplays on town names—Maroth probably derives from a root meaning "bitter," creating tension with the inhabitants' vain hope for good. The Septuagint's "Odunōn" (pains/griefs) reflects this etymology.

Cross-linguistic consistency (Maroth/Marot) preserves the proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Maroth | es: Marot | fr: Maroth | de: von-Rut Mic 1:12

מַרְזֵחַ H4797 N-msc (1×)
A cry or feast of revelry, specifically the boisterous celebration of those who lounge at ease
This term appears in Amos 6:7's stinging rebuke of Israel's wealthy elite: "the revelry of those who lounge shall pass away." It denotes loud, celebratory feasting—the noise and excess of self-indulgent parties. Some connect it to a Phoenician term for religious festivals, but Amos clearly condemns secular luxury rather than worship. The prophet targets those who drink wine from bowls, anoint themselves with fine oils, and care nothing for national ruin. Their carefree banqueting will soon end in exile. The same Hebrew root can mean mourning, creating a powerful irony: their revelry will turn to lamentation.

(1×) Denotes a loud cry or feast of revelry, particularly the boisterous celebrations of the wealthy and self-indulgent. In Amos 6:7, this term describes the excessive feasting and lounging of Israel's elite, whose parties feature wine, music, and fine oils while the nation crumbles. The prophet announces their revelry will "depart"—replaced by exile. Related Phoenician and Aramaic terms suggest festive gatherings, though Amos emphasizes moral critique. The irony deepens since the root can also mean mourning-feast, foreshadowing the transformation of celebration into lamentation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-revelry-of- | es: el-banquete-de | fr: banquet | de: [מרזח] Amos 6:7

מַרְזֵחַ H4798 N-ms (1×)
A mourning-feast or house of mourning, where communal lamentation and funeral rites occurred
Unlike its companion term (H4797) used for drunken revelry, this form appears in Jeremiah 16:5 in a solemn, funereal context. God commands Jeremiah not to enter "the house of mourning" (bet marzeach), where communities gathered to mourn the dead. BDB notes the Talmudic connection to mourning-feasts, and Phoenician parallels suggest these were formal, perhaps even cultic, gatherings around death. The prohibition reflects the totality of coming judgment—normal social rituals must cease. Jeremiah cannot even perform the basic duty of communal mourning, signaling the complete breakdown of society under divine wrath.

(1×) Refers to a mourning-feast or house of mourning where the community gathered for funeral rites and lamentation. Jeremiah 16:5 uses this term when God forbids the prophet from entering such places, symbolizing the suspension of normal social obligations amid impending catastrophe. The Aramaic Targum glosses it as "mourning-feast," and Talmudic sources confirm the cultic or communal dimension of these gatherings. While the root connects to the revelry term in Amos, context here is entirely funereal—the somber counterpart to festive excess. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING
en: mourning-feast | es: duelo | fr: [מרזח] | de: [מרזח] Jer 16:5

מָרַח H4799 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3mp (1×)
To rub or apply, specifically spreading a poultice or medicinal preparation onto the skin
This verb describes the medical application of a fig poultice in Isaiah 38:21. When King Hezekiah lay dying, Isaiah instructed, "Let them take a cake of figs and rub it upon the boil, and he shall recover." The term conveys the physical act of spreading or massaging a remedy onto afflicted skin. Related forms appear in post-biblical Hebrew and Aramaic, consistently meaning to anoint, smear, or rub. While 2 Kings 20:7 uses a different verb ("place"), Isaiah emphasizes the therapeutic rubbing motion—not just positioning the poultice but working it into the eruption for healing effect.

(1×) Means to rub, spread, or apply a substance onto the body, particularly in medical contexts. The single biblical occurrence (Isaiah 38:21) describes applying a fig poultice to Hezekiah's life-threatening boil. The verb emphasizes active, therapeutic rubbing rather than mere placement—massaging the medicinal preparation into the affected area. Cognates in Mishnaic Hebrew and Aramaic (as well as Arabic) confirm the semantic range of anointing and smearing. The parallel in 2 Kings 20:7 uses a simpler verb ("place"), highlighting Isaiah's more technical, medicinal vocabulary. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: and-apply | es: y-la-pongan | fr: [וימרחו] | de: [וימרחו] Isa 38:21

מֶרְחָב H4800 Prep-b (6×)
Broad place, open expanse: a spacious area, often figurative for divine deliverance from distress.
A masculine noun meaning a broad, roomy, or spacious place, derived from the root r-kh-b ('to be wide'). While it can denote a physical expanse — a pasture in Hosea 4:16 or the 'broad places of the earth' in Habakkuk 1:6 — its most powerful usage is metaphorical. In 2 Samuel 22:20 and Psalm 18:19, God brings the delivered one 'into a broad place,' an image of freedom after constriction. Psalm 31:8 and 118:5 echo this, portraying divine rescue as emergence from tightness into open space. The spatial metaphor resonates across languages: Spanish lugar espacioso, French large espace.

broad place, open space (6×) A broad, spacious, or open place, used both literally and figuratively. Literally, it describes a pasture (Hos 4:16) or the expanses of the earth (Hab 1:6). Figuratively and more characteristically, it depicts divine deliverance as being brought into a wide-open space after distress (2 Sam 22:20 = Ps 18:19; Ps 31:8; 118:5). Spanish 'lugar espacioso' and French 'large espace' both preserve the spatial metaphor. In Psalm 118:5 the MT's merkhav-Yah ('broad place of Yah') intensifies the image with the divine name, underscoring that God himself is the source of spaciousness. WIDE BROAD SPACIOUS en: in-a-broad-place, in-broad-place, in-the-broad-place | es: a-lo-ancho, a-los-anchos-de-, a-lugar-espacioso | fr: dans-liberté, large-espace, à-large-lieu | de: [במרחב], [למרחבי], hinein-ein-broad-Ort 2Sam 22:20; Ps 18:19; Ps 31:8; Ps 118:5; Hos 4:16

מֶרְחָק H4801 N-ms (17×)
distant place, distance — remoteness or far-off regions, often in the phrase 'from afar' Merchaq is a noun denoting distance, remoteness, or a distant place, appearing 17 times predominantly in the prophetic literature. Its most characteristic construction is the prepositional phrase mimmerchaq ('from afar'), which signals the approach of menacing foreign powers or the far reach of divine attention. Isaiah uses it to introduce invading armies: 'He lifts a signal for a nation from afar' (Isa 5:26), and 'they come from a distant land, from the end of the heavens' (Isa 13:5; 46:11). Jeremiah echoes the threat: 'I am bringing a nation against you from afar' (Jer 4:16; 5:15; 6:20). Yet the same word also carries a note of wonder and provision: the excellent wife of Proverbs 31:14 'brings her food from afar,' and the good news from a distant land is 'like cold water to a thirsty soul' (Prov 25:25). Psalm 138:6 uses it theologically — 'though the LORD is exalted, he regards the lowly, but the haughty he knows from afar.' Isaiah 33:17 promises that faithful eyes will 'behold a land of far distances,' a vision of expansive peace. Zechariah 10:9 scatters Israel 'among distant peoples' but promises regathering. Spanish 'lejos/lejania,' French 'loin,' and German 'Ferne' all capture both the spatial and the figurative weight.

distant place, distance (17×) A distant place or remoteness, used concretely for far-off lands and abstractly for spatial or relational distance. Most frequently appears in the prepositional phrase mimmerchaq ('from afar'), introducing invading armies summoned from distant nations (Isa 5:26; 10:3; 13:5; 30:27; 46:11; Jer 4:16; 5:15; 6:20) or expressing divine knowledge across vast distance (Ps 138:6). Also used positively for provision that comes from far away (Prov 25:25; 31:14) and for the expansive land of eschatological promise (Isa 33:17). Zechariah 10:9 speaks of Israel scattered 'in distant places' yet remembered by God. Ezekiel 23:40 uses it for seductive alliances with faraway peoples. Spanish 'lejania,' French 'loin,' and German 'Ferne' confirm the unified spatial sense. DISTANCE AND FARNESS

en: among-the-peoples, distance, far-away | es: de-lejanías, de-lejos, desde-lejos | fr: de-loin, de-ממרחק, et-loin | de: Ferne, [ובמרחקים], [ממרחק] Ps 138:6; Prov 25:25; Prov 31:14; Isa 8:9; Isa 10:3

מַרְחֶשֶׁת H4802 N-fs (2×)

a stew-pan or sauce-pan used for cooking grain offerings

This feminine noun denotes a cooking vessel, specifically a stew-pan or sauce-pan used in preparing grain offerings. It appears twice in Leviticus in nearly identical phrases: 'a grain offering made in a pan' (2:7) and 'every grain offering made in the pan' (7:9). The vessel was apparently a shallow pan suitable for cooking grain with oil, distinct from the griddle (maḥăbat) and oven mentioned in the same contexts. Levitical instructions distinguished offerings by cooking method and vessel, each affecting how priests received their portions. This represents cultic cooking technology, vessels dedicated to ritual use.

(2×) A stew-pan or sauce-pan for preparing grain offerings. Both Levitical references specify grain offerings prepared 'in the pan' (ba-marḥešet) as one of several cooking methods. Leviticus 7:9 allocates such offerings to the officiating priest. The term comes from a root suggesting boiling or cooking with liquid, thus a pot or pan for moist cooking rather than dry baking. The Spanish 'cazuela' (casserole dish) and the glosses 'pan/poêle' reflect this cooking vessel. These implements belonged to sanctuary equipment, maintaining ritual purity. COOKING POT CALDRON

en: a-pan, in-the-pan | es: cazuela, en-la-cazuela | fr: dans-le-pan, une-poêle | de: ein-pan, in-der-pan Lev 2:7; Lev 7:9

מָרַט H4803 V-Pual-Perf-3fs (12×)

To make smooth, bare, or bald; to polish or scour a weapon; to pluck out hair in grief or abuse; to become bald.

A verb of forceful surface action, whether scraping metal to a gleam or tearing hair from the scalp. In Ezekiel's sword oracles the blade is 'polished' for slaughter, a terrifying image of divine judgment made ready. Yet the same root describes Ezra ripping out his own hair in anguish over covenant-breaking marriages, and the Servant of Isaiah offering his cheeks to those who pluck out the beard. Spanish 'pulida' and 'arrancan' capture the surprising breadth: the gleam of a weapon and the rawness of grief share a single Hebrew word.

1. polish, scour (a sword) (6×) Polishing or scouring a sword to a bright, lethal finish. The Pual passive participle mĕrûṭâ appears repeatedly in Ezekiel 21, where YHWH's sword is 'polished' and ready to devour. The multilingual glosses ('polished,' Spanish 'pulida,' French 'polir') all converge on the metallurgical sense of burnishing a blade until it gleams. The related 1 Kings 7:45 reference extends this to the polished bronze vessels of Solomon's temple. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: for-polishing, is-polished, it-is-polished | es: está-pulida, para-pulir, pulida | fr: polir, polished | de: [למרטה], [מרוטה], [מרטה] 1Kgs 7:45; Ezek 21:9; Ezek 21:10; Ezek 21:11

2. pull out, pluck (hair or beard) (3×) Actively pulling out or plucking hair from the head or beard, expressing intense grief, righteous indignation, or abusive humiliation. Ezra tears out his own hair in anguish (Ezra 9:3), Nehemiah forcibly plucks hair from covenant-breakers (Neh 13:25), and Isaiah's Servant offers his cheeks to those who rip out the beard (Isa 50:6). Spanish 'arrancan' ('they tear out') vividly conveys the violent extraction. DRAWING AND PULLING

en: and-I-pulled-out, and-I-pulled-out-their-hair, to-those-plucking | es: a-los-que-arrancan-barba, y-arranqué, y-les-arranqué-el-cabello | fr: [ואמרטה], [ואמרטם], [למרטים] | de: [ואמרטה], [ואמרטם], [למרטים] Ezra 9:3; Neh 13:25; Isa 50:6

3. become bald, lose hair (Niphal) (2×) Niphal reflexive: to become bald or lose hair naturally, used in the priestly diagnostic laws of Leviticus 13:40-41. If hair falls from the front or back of a man's head (yimmāreṭ), he is pronounced clean, merely bald, not diseased. Spanish 'se le caiga el pelo' ('his hair falls out') and German 'wird bald' both capture the involuntary, natural quality distinct from violent plucking. MOURNING BALDNESS

en: becomes-bald | es: se-le-caiga-el-pelo-de | fr: devient-chauve | de: wird-bald Lev 13:40; Lev 13:41

4. rubbed bare, worn smooth (1×) Qal passive participle describing skin rubbed bare or worn smooth through grueling labor. In Ezekiel 29:18, Nebuchadnezzar's soldiers labored so hard at the siege of Tyre that 'every shoulder was rubbed bare,' paired with 'every head made bald.' This sense emphasizes abrasion from physical toil rather than deliberate polishing or plucking. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: rubbed-bare | es: fue-pelado | fr: polir | de: [מרוטה] Ezek 29:18

מְרַט H4804 V-Nifal-Perf-3mp (1×)

To be plucked off or torn away, used of wings forcibly removed from a creature

This Aramaic verb appears in Daniel's first vision, describing a lion-like beast whose "wings were plucked off" (Daniel 7:4). The imagery is violent and startling—the creature stands upright like a human and receives a human mind, but first its wings are torn away. The passive form (Peil in Aramaic, equivalent to Hebrew Niphal) emphasizes the action done to the beast rather than any action it takes. Some see this as symbolizing Nebuchadnezzar's humiliation and restoration. The verb's root relates to hair-plucking or beard-pulling, intensifying the sense of forceful removal and indignity.

(1×) Means to be plucked off, torn away, or forcibly removed, specifically of wings. Daniel 7:4 uses this Aramaic passive form to describe the dramatic transformation of a lion-like beast whose wings are torn from its body before it is made to stand upright and given human consciousness. The violent imagery suggests humiliation or degradation preceding elevation. The root semantically connects to plucking hair or beards (a gesture of shame in ancient Near Eastern culture), intensifying the sense of forced removal and loss of former power or majesty. DRAWING AND PULLING

en: were-plucked | es: fueron-arrancadas | fr: gros-bétail | de: [מריטו] Dan 7:4

מְרִי H4805 N-ms (23×)

Rebellion, defiance — stubborn resistance against God or rightful authority, especially Israel's chronic disobedience

This masculine noun (מְרִי) captures the posture of deliberate, sustained resistance against divine or legitimate authority. Ezekiel dominates its usage, branding Israel a 'house of rebellion' (בֵּית מְרִי) no fewer than thirteen times — a phrase that became almost a signature expression of his prophecy (Ezek 2:5-8; 3:9, 26-27; 12:2-3, 9, 25). Outside Ezekiel, Samuel equates rebellion with the sin of divination (1 Sam 15:23), and Moses invokes Israel's מְרִי as a standing indictment before his death (Deut 31:27). The word's consistent pairing with spiritual obstinacy across French ('rébellion') and German ('Widerspenstigkeit') underscores its core sense of willful defiance.

rebellion, contrariness (23×) Masculine noun for willful rebellion against God or authority. Concentrated in Ezekiel's בֵּית מְרִי ('house of rebellion,' Ezek 2:5-8; 12:2-3; 17:12; 24:3). Samuel equates it with divination (1 Sam 15:23), Moses cites Israel's abiding מְרִי (Deut 31:27), and Proverbs warns the rebel 'seeks only evil' (Prov 17:11). German 'Widerspenstigkeit' captures its flavor of mulish defiance. REBELLION REVOLT

en: rebellion, rebellious, the-rebellion | es: la-rebeldía, rebeldía, rebelión | fr: [מרי], le-rébellion, rebellion | de: Widerspenstigkeit, [מרי], dein-rebellion Num 17:10; Deut 31:27; 1Sam 15:23; Neh 9:17; Job 23:2

מְרִיא H4806 N-mp (8×)

Fatling, fattened animal — cattle or sheep specially fattened for feasting or sacrifice

A masculine noun for a fatling — an animal (typically a calf, ox, or sheep) that has been specially fattened on rich pasture or grain for slaughter, whether as a feast offering or a sacrificial victim. The word appears in contexts of lavish royal banquets, as when Adonijah slaughtered 'oxen and fatlings' vying for the throne (1 Kgs 1:9, 19, 25), and in prophetic critique of empty ritual sacrifice (Isa 1:11; Amos 5:22). Isaiah's peaceable kingdom envisions 'the calf, the young lion, and the fatling together' (Isa 11:6), and Ezekiel's apocalyptic feast includes 'fatlings of Bashan' (Ezek 39:18).

fatling, fattened animal (8×) A fatling or fattened animal, raised on rich feed for slaughter as food or sacrifice. Used of sacrificial animals whose fat (חֵלֶב) God rejects when offered without justice (Isa 1:11; Amos 5:22), of royal feast provisions in the Adonijah and David narratives (1 Kgs 1:9, 19, 25; 2 Sam 6:13), and in eschatological imagery — the peaceable kingdom (Isa 11:6) and the great feast of Ezekiel 39:18. Spanish 'animales cebados' (fattened animals) and French 'bétail' (livestock) both reflect the agricultural fattening practice, while the German renderings preserve the Hebrew form, indicating how consistently the term denotes premium sacrificial or feast-worthy livestock. FATNESS AND RICHNESS
en: and-fatling, and-fatlings, fatlings | es: animales-cebados, engordados-de, sus-animales-engordados | fr: [ומריא], [מריאים], bétail | de: [ומריא], [מריאי], [מריאיכם] 2Sam 6:13; 1Kgs 1:9; 1Kgs 1:19; 1Kgs 1:25; Isa 1:11

מְרִיב בַּעַל H4807 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)
Merib-Baal, son of Jonathan and grandson of Saul, also called Mephibosheth
This name appears in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles for Jonathan's son, who is better known in 2 Samuel as Mephibosheth. The dual naming reflects ancient scribal practice of replacing the element 'Baal' with 'bosheth' (shame) in later texts to avoid pronouncing the Canaanite deity's name. Merib-Baal means 'Baal is advocate' or possibly 'hero of Baal.' The name appears three times in the Chronicles genealogy, identifying the same individual who was crippled as a child and later showed kindness by David for Jonathan's sake.

(3×) Merib-Baal, the birth name of Jonathan's son, later called Mephibosheth. First Chronicles 8:34 lists him twice in the genealogy: 'the son of Jonathan was Merib-Baal, and Merib-Baal fathered Micah.' The variant appears again in 9:40. This is the same person shown kindness by David in 2 Samuel (there called Mephibosheth), who was five when his nurse dropped him fleeing news of Saul's death. The LXX Μεριβααλ preserves the original form before 'Baal' was replaced with 'bosheth.' BAAL WORSHIP en: Meriv-Baal, and-Meriv-Baal | es: Merib-Baal, y-Merib-Baal | fr: [ומריב בעל], [מריב בעל] | de: [ומריב בעל], [מריב בעל] 1Chr 8:34; 1Chr 9:40

מְרִיבָה H4808 N-proper-fs (7×)
Meribah (place of strife where Israel contended with God over water); also common noun: strife, contention, quarrel Derived from the root rîv ('to contend, strive'), this word appears both as a proper noun and a common noun. As a place name, Meribah marks the location(s) where Israel quarreled with God over water in the wilderness, most memorably at Meribah-Kadesh where Moses struck the rock (Deut 32:51; Ps 95:8). As a common noun it simply means 'strife' or 'contention,' as when Abraham urges Lot, 'Let there be no strife between me and you' (Gen 13:8). The multilingual evidence confirms the split: translations uniformly transliterate the place name while rendering the common noun with native words for quarrel or dispute.

1. Meribah (place name) (5×) The proper noun Meribah, designating the wilderness site(s) where Israel tested God by quarreling over water. Psalm 95:8 warns 'Do not harden your hearts as at Meribah,' and Ezekiel 47:19 and 48:28 use 'the waters of Meribah-Kadesh' as a boundary marker. Translations across languages consistently transliterate rather than translate: Spanish Meribá, French Méribа, German Merivah, confirming its fixed status as a geographic proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Meribah-of, Merivah, Merivat | es: Meribá, Meribá-de, como-Merivá | fr: Meribah-de, Méribа, comme-Méribа | de: Meribah-von, Merivah, [מריבות] Deut 32:51; Ps 95:8; Ps 106:32; Ezek 47:19; Ezek 48:28

2. strife, contention, quarrel (2×) The common feminine noun meaning strife, contention, or quarrel between persons. In Gen 13:8, Abraham says to Lot 'let there be no merîvāh between me and you,' and in Num 27:14 the construct form merîvat hā'ēdāh ('the strife of the congregation') describes the people's rebellion at Kadesh. Spanish renders contienda, French querelle, German Streit, all common nouns for dispute, distinguishing this sense clearly from the proper-name usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-strife-of, strife | es: contienda, en-contienda-de | fr: dans-strife-de, querelle | de: Streit, in-strife-von Gen 13:8; Num 27:14

מְרִיבָה H4809 N-proper-fs (6×)
Meribah: a place name meaning 'strife/contention,' where Israel quarreled with God over water.
A proper noun meaning 'strife' or 'contention,' designating the location(s) where Israel tested God by quarreling over water. Two distinct incidents may be in view: one at Rephidim early in the wilderness journey (Exod 17:7, paired with Massah) and another at Kadesh near the end (Num 20:13, 24; 27:14; Deut 32:51; 33:8). The phrase mei meribah ('waters of Meribah') became a byword for Israel's rebellious spirit, echoed in the psalms as a cautionary memory (Ps 81:8; 95:8; 106:32). The Septuagint renders it variously as antilogia ('contradiction') and parapikrasmos ('provocation').

Meribah (place name) (6×) The place name Meribah ('strife, contention'), associated with Israel's quarreling with YHWH over water in the wilderness. It designates both Rephidim (Exod 17:7, paired with Massah) and Kadesh (Num 20:13, 24; Deut 33:8), where Moses struck the rock. The phrase mei meribah ('waters of Meribah') became proverbial for rebellion (Ps 81:8; 95:8; 106:32). Multilingual evidence is remarkably consistent — Spanish 'Meriba/Meribah,' French 'Meribah/Meriba,' English 'Meribah' — all transliterating rather than translating, though the Septuagint rendered it interpretively as antilogia ('contradiction'). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Meribah, Merivah, and-Meribah | es: Meriba, Meribah, Meribá | fr: Meribah, Merivah, Méribа | de: Meribah, Merivah, strife-von Exod 17:7; Num 20:13; Num 20:24; Num 27:14; Deut 33:8

מְרִיב בַּעַל H4810 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Meri-Baal (meaning 'Baal is advocate' or 'hero of Baal'), Jonathan's son also known as Mephibosheth
This name appears in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles 8–9 as an alternate form for Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan and grandson of Saul. The original name, "Meri-Baal," likely meant "Baal is advocate" or "hero of Baal," reflecting the early Israelite acceptance of "Baal" as a divine title (meaning "lord" or "master"). Later scribes, recoiling from Baal-worship associations, changed the name to "Mephibosheth" (possibly "from the mouth of shame"). The 1 Chronicles passages preserve the older, pre-exilic form. This same person became the focus of David's remarkable covenant loyalty in 2 Samuel, where he's consistently called Mephibosheth.

(1×) The personal name of Jonathan's son, preserved in its original form in 1 Chronicles genealogies. "Meri-Baal" likely means "Baal is advocate" or "hero of Baal," using "Baal" as a divine epithet before it became exclusively associated with Canaanite idolatry. Later tradition renamed him "Mephibosheth" (incorporating "boshet," meaning "shame") to avoid the theologically problematic "Baal." This reflects a common scribal practice of replacing Baal-compound names. Cross-linguistic glosses simply transliterate. The Septuagint alternates between forms (Memphibaal/Memphibosthe), showing manuscript variation. BAAL WORSHIP en: and-Meri-Baal | es: y-Meri-Baal | fr: [ומריבעל] | de: [ומריבעל] 1Chr 9:40

מְרָיָה H4811 N-proper-ms (1×)
Merayah, a priest serving during the high priesthood of Joiakim in post-exilic Jerusalem
Merayah appears only in Nehemiah 12:12, part of a genealogical list documenting priestly families in the generation after the return from Babylonian exile. He served as head of the priestly house during Joiakim's tenure as high priest (likely early 5th century BC). Such lists were crucial for maintaining legitimate priestly succession and temple service continuity. The Septuagint transliterations vary

(Marea, Maria), and one Greek tradition reads "Amarias," suggesting scribal uncertainty. These post-exilic genealogies helped reestablish proper worship order after the trauma of exile and temple destruction.

(1×) A personal name denoting a priest who served as head of a priestly family during the high priesthood of Joiakim in post-exilic Jerusalem (Nehemiah 12:12). The name appears in genealogical lists documenting the continuity of legitimate priestly lines after the Babylonian exile. Such records were essential for maintaining proper temple service and sacrificial legitimacy. Septuagint manuscript variations (Marea/Maria) and one tradition reading "Amarias" suggest textual fluidity in these genealogical sections, though the Hebrew form is consistent. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Merayah | es: Meraías | fr: [מריה] | de: [מריה] Neh 12:12

מְרָיוֹת H4812 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (7×)

Meraioth – a priestly name borne by ancestors of Zadok and a postexilic priestly house.

A proper masculine name meaning perhaps 'rebellions' or 'bitter ones,' borne by at least two priestly figures in the Hebrew Bible. The primary Meraioth is a descendant of Aaron in the high-priestly genealogy, grandfather of Ahitub and great-grandfather of Zadok (1 Chr 5:32-33; 6:37; Ezra 7:3). A second appears as son of Ahitub and father of Zadok in 1 Chronicles 9:11 and Nehemiah 11:11. The name also designates a priestly house in Nehemiah 12:15, possibly an error for Meremoth. The Septuagint renders it variously as Maraioth, Marmoth, and Mareioth.

Merayot (7×) The proper name Meraioth (merayot), designating priestly individuals in Israel's genealogical and temple records. English consistently renders 'Merayot/Meraioth,' Spanish 'Meraiot/Merayot,' French 'Merajoth.' The name appears in the Aaronic high-priestly line in 1 Chronicles 6:6-7, 52 and Ezra 7:3, as an ancestor of Zadok; in 1 Chronicles 9:11 and Nehemiah 11:11 as part of the postexilic priestly leadership; and in Nehemiah 12:15 as head of a priestly house (possibly confused with Meremoth of Neh 12:3). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Merayot, to-Merayot | es: Meraiot, Merayot, de-Meraiot | fr: Merajoth | de: Merajot, [למריות], [מריות] 1Chr 6:6; 1Chr 6:7; 1Chr 6:52; 1Chr 9:11; Ezra 7:3

מִרְיָם H4813 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (15×)

Miriam — prophetess and sister of Moses and Aaron; also a Judahite man in 1 Chronicles 4:17

The name Miriam (מִרְיָם) belongs first and foremost to the sister of Moses and Aaron, one of the most prominent women in the Torah. She leads the women in song after the Sea crossing (Exod 15:20–21), challenges Moses' unique prophetic authority alongside Aaron (Num 12), and dies at Kadesh (Num 20:1). Deuteronomy 24:9 recalls her punishment with skin disease as a warning, and Micah 6:4 names her alongside Moses and Aaron as one of the three leaders God sent before Israel — a striking canonical honor. The Septuagint renders her name as Μαριαμ, the form that would later become 'Mary' in the New Testament tradition. A single male Judahite also bears the name (1 Chr 4:17).

Miriam (proper name) (15×) The feminine proper name Miriam (מִרְיָם), primarily identifying the prophetess and sister of Moses and Aaron. She appears leading worship after the Exodus (Exod 15:20–21), contesting Moses' authority (Num 12:1–15), dying at Kadesh (Num 20:1), and honored in Micah 6:4 as one of Israel's three founding leaders. The Septuagint's Μαριαμ became the source of 'Mary' in later tradition. Multilingual evidence shows remarkable consistency: Miriam (English, Spanish, French) and Mirjam (German). A secondary reference in 1 Chronicles 4:17 applies the name to a Judahite male, likely reflecting a textual or genealogical anomaly. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Miriam, Miryam, and-Miriam | es: Miriam, Miriam:, Miryam | fr: Miriam, [ומרים], [מרים] | de: Mirjam, [ומרים], [מרים] Exod 15:20; Exod 15:21; Num 12:1; Num 12:4; Num 12:5

מְרִירוּת H4814 Conj-w (1×)

Bitterness, specifically intense emotional anguish expressed in groaning or lamentation

This noun appears in Ezekiel 21:6 (Hebrew 21:11) in God's dramatic command to the prophet: "Groan with breaking heart and bitter grief before their eyes." The term denotes the deepest emotional pain—not mere sadness but visceral, soul-level bitterness. Ezekiel must perform this acted prophecy, groaning publicly to symbolize Israel's coming devastation. The word connects to the root meaning "bitter," evoking both taste and experience. When onlookers ask why he groans, Ezekiel will explain that news is coming to make every heart melt. This embodied prophetic sign makes abstract judgment tangibly real through the prophet's bitter anguish.

(1×) Denotes bitterness or bitter anguish, particularly intense emotional pain expressed through groaning or lamentation. Ezekiel 21:6 commands the prophet to groan "with bitterness" as a sign-act symbolizing Israel's coming catastrophe. The term emphasizes visceral, gut-level grief—not intellectual sorrow but embodied pain. The root connects to sensory bitterness (bitter taste) extended to emotional experience. Cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish "amargura," French "amertume") preserve the metaphorical extension from taste to feeling, a widespread semantic pattern capturing how emotional pain mirrors physical sensation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-with-bitterness | es: y-con-amargura | fr: et-amertume | de: [ובמרירות] Ezek 21:6

מָרִירִי H4815 Adj-ms (1×)

Bitter, describing destruction or calamity that is harsh, grievous, and deadly

This adjective appears in Deuteronomy 32:24, describing the weapons God will use against rebellious Israel: "bitter destruction" (or "bitter plague"). The Song of Moses catalogs covenant curses—hunger, plague, wild beasts, and sword. "Bitter destruction" captures the lethal, grievous nature of divine judgment. The term applies the sensory experience of bitter taste to catastrophic events, suggesting something harsh, intolerable, and deadly. While the root commonly describes bitter herbs or water, its extension to destruction emphasizes how calamity assaults the soul the way bitterness assaults the palate—unbearable and intense.

(1×) An adjective meaning bitter, used to characterize destruction or plague as harsh, deadly, and grievous. The single occurrence in Deuteronomy 32:24 describes "bitter destruction" (or "bitter plague") as one of God's covenant curses against rebellious Israel. The term transfers sensory bitterness (the taste experience) to the realm of calamity, suggesting something intolerable and severe. This semantic extension—from physical taste to catastrophic experience—intensifies the emotional impact, making abstract judgment viscerally tangible. The modifier emphasizes not just severity but the qualitative harshness of divine discipline. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bitter | es: amarga | fr: bitter | de: bitter Deut 32:24

מֹרֶךְ H4816 N-ms (1×)

Weakness or timidity, particularly the fearful, fainthearted state God threatens as covenant curse

This rare noun appears in Leviticus 26:36, deep in the covenant curses section. God warns disobedient Israel: "I will send weakness into their hearts" in enemy lands. The result? Even the sound of a windblown leaf will terrify them and they'll flee though no one pursues. The term denotes psychological weakness—not physical frailty but fearful timidity and collapsing courage. It connects to the root meaning "soft" or "tender," here applied to the heart or spirit. This curse represents the opposite of courageous faith—a state of chronic anxiety where imagination creates phantom threats and the soul has no rest.

(1×) Denotes weakness, timidity, or fearfulness of heart—a psychological state of collapse rather than physical frailty. Leviticus 26:36 threatens this as a covenant curse for disobedience: God will send "weakness" (or "timidity") into the hearts of survivors in exile, making them flee at the rustle of a leaf though no one pursues. The term derives from a root meaning "soft" or "tender," here applied metaphorically to courage or spirit. The resulting condition is chronic, paralyzing anxiety—a profound loss of confidence and security that turns every sound into mortal threat. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: weakness | es: cobardía | fr: weakness | de: weakness Lev 26:36

מֶרְכָּב H4817 Prep-l / N-msc / 3ms (3×)

A riding seat: chariot, saddle, or litter seat for mounted travel

This term denotes a seat or platform for riding—whether in a chariot, on an animal, or in a palanquin. Solomon's vast chariot forces required such equipment (1 Kgs 5). Leviticus 15 mentions it in purity laws concerning contact with a saddle used by someone with a discharge. The Song of Songs uses it for the seat of Solomon's ornate litter. The common thread is a constructed seat that elevates the rider, whether for war, transport, or ceremonial procession.

(3×) A riding seat, chariot, or saddle. First Kings 4:26 (5:6 in Hebrew) records Solomon had 'horses for his chariots'—the riding platforms needed for his military force. Leviticus 15:9 states 'every saddle on which the one with the discharge rides shall be unclean'—the seat becomes ritually impure. Song 3:10 describes Solomon's palanquin: 'he made its seat of purple'—the cushioned platform within the litter. The French 'siège' and Spanish 'asiento' both mean 'seat,' capturing the functional commonality. CHARIOTS AND WAGONS

en: for-his-chariots, its-seat, the-saddle | es: la-silla-de-montar, para-su-carro, su-asiento | fr: le-saddle, pour-son-chars, son-siège | de: [מרכבו], der-saddle, fuer-sein-Wagen Lev 15:9; 1Kgs 4:26; Song 3:10

מֶרְכָּבָה H4818 Conj-w (44×)

chariot — a horse-drawn vehicle used in warfare, royal procession, or transport

Merkavah is the standard Hebrew noun for a wheeled vehicle drawn by horses, appearing 44 times across narrative, poetic, and prophetic texts. Distinguished from the collective rekhev ('chariotry'), merkavah denotes a single chariot unit. Its range encompasses Joseph's ceremonial chariot in Egypt (Gen 41:43), the war chariots of Canaan, Assyria, and Israel's own military (Josh 11:6; 1 Kgs 10:29), and the visionary chariots of Zechariah 6:1. In Ezekiel's tradition the word took on mystical significance, giving its name to the entire 'chariot mysticism' (ma'aseh merkavah) of later Jewish thought. Translations converge on a single sense: Spanish 'carro,' French 'char,' German 'Streitwagen.'

chariot, war-chariot (44×) A horse-drawn vehicle used primarily as a war-chariot, often paired with sus ('horse') as a military hendiadys. Ranges from Pharaoh's chariots at the sea (Exod 14:25) to Solomon's trade imports (1 Kgs 10:29) and Zechariah's apocalyptic four chariots (Zech 6:1). Distinguished from the collective rekhev ('chariotry'). CHARIOTS AND WAGONS

en: a-chariot, and-chariots, and-in-the-chariot | es: Y-en-el-carro, al-carro, carro | fr: char, dans-le-char, et-char | de: Streitwagen, Wagen, [במרכבה] Gen 41:43; Gen 46:29; Exod 14:25; Exod 15:4; Josh 11:6

מַרְכֹּלֶת H4819 Prep-b / N-fsc / 2fs (1×)

Market-place or place of trade, where merchants conduct commercial exchange and business

This noun appears in Ezekiel 27:24, part of the extended lament over Tyre's commercial glory. The prophet describes merchants trading "in your market-place," bringing choice fabrics, embroidered garments, and multicolored rugs. The term specifically denotes a place of trade or commercial exchange—not a general marketplace but the site where merchants conduct business transactions. Tyre's market-place symbolizes the city's wealth and international connections, which made her proud and ultimately vulnerable to divine judgment. The root connects to trading or merchant activity, emphasizing the commercial function of this space in ancient port cities like Tyre.

(1×) Refers to a market-place or site of commercial trade, where merchants exchange goods and conduct business. Ezekiel 27:24 mentions Tyre's market-place in a lament cataloging the city's international trade network—exotic textiles, embroidered garments, and multicolored rugs passed through "your market-place." The term emphasizes the commercial function rather than a general public square, denoting specifically a place where traders transact business. The root relates to merchant activity and trade, fitting Ezekiel's detailed portrait of Tyre as a commercial hub whose economic pride precedes her fall. MERCHANDISE WARES

en: in-your-trading | es: en-tu-comercio | fr: marché | de: [במרכלתך] Ezek 27:24

מִרְמָה H4820 N-fp (39×)

Deceit, treachery, fraud — dishonesty in speech, commerce, or interpersonal dealings

A feminine noun from the root r-m-h ('to deceive'), denoting deliberate deception ranging from commercial fraud to interpersonal treachery. When paired with scales or weights (Amos 8:5; Mic 6:11; Prov 11:1), it targets dishonest trade practices; with lips, tongue, or mouth (Ps 17:1; 52:6; 109:2), it indicts deceitful speech. Jacob's stolen blessing is obtained 'b'mirmah' — 'by deceit' (Gen 27:35), and Jeremiah diagnoses Israel's heart as steeped in mirmah (Jer 9:5-7). The Suffering Servant, by contrast, had no mirmah in his mouth (Isa 53:9), marking sinless integrity.

deceit, treachery (39×) Deceit, treachery, or fraud as a moral failing, encompassing dishonest commercial practices ('deceptive balances,' Amos 8:5; Prov 11:1), crafty speech (Ps 52:6; 109:2), and interpersonal betrayal (Gen 27:35; 2 Kgs 9:23). Cross-lingual glosses converge on a single concept — Spanish 'engaño,' French 'tromperie,' German 'Betrug' — confirming a unified semantic profile across all 39 occurrences. DECEIT AND TREACHERY en: are-deceit, deceit, is-deceit | es: de-engaño, engaño | fr: de-tromperie, tromperie | de: Betrug, Trug, [מרמה] Gen 27:35; Gen 34:13; 2Kgs 9:23; Job 15:35; Job 31:5

מִרְמָה H4821 N-proper-ms (1×)

Mirmah, a Benjamite listed in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles

Mirmah appears once in 1 Chronicles 8:10, within the genealogical records of the tribe of Benjamin. He is listed as one of the sons of Shaharaim, born in Moab after Shaharaim sent away two wives. These Benjamite genealogies were important for maintaining tribal identity, especially after the exile when establishing legitimate lineage became crucial. The Septuagint renders the name as "Imama" or "Marma/Marmia," showing variant traditions. The name itself possibly derives from a root meaning "deceit," though personal names don't always carry their etymological meaning into usage.

(1×) A personal name designating a Benjamite man in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles 8:10. Mirmah was among the sons of Shaharaim born in Moab, part of the complex genealogical records documenting Benjamin's descendants. These lists served to preserve tribal identity and establish legitimate lineage, especially critical in the post-exilic period. The Septuagint's varied transliterations (Imama, Marma) reflect textual transmission diversity. While the name's root may relate to "deceit," personal names often lose etymological force, functioning simply as identifiers within the community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Mirmah | es: Mirma | fr: [מרמה] | de: [מרמה] 1Chr 8:10

מְרֵמוֹת H4822 N-proper-ms (6×)

Meremoth — a priestly name borne by several individuals in the post-exilic community (Ezra, Nehemiah).

A proper masculine name appearing in the post-exilic books of Ezra and Nehemiah. Meremoth was a priest in the time of Zerubbabel (Neh 12:3), and another Meremoth son of Uriah oversaw the weighing of temple silver and gold upon the return from Babylon (Ezra 8:33) and helped rebuild two sections of Jerusalem's wall (Neh 3:4, 21). A third Meremoth is listed among those who had taken foreign wives (Ezra 10:36). The Septuagint renders the name variously as Mareimouth, Mereimouth, and Ieramoth, reflecting fluidity in Greek transliteration of Hebrew sibilant-liquid clusters.

(6×) The proper name Meremoth, designating at least two or three distinct Israelites in the post-exilic period. The most prominent is the priest Meremoth son of Uriah who received the temple treasures from Ezra (Ezra 8:33) and repaired two wall sections (Neh 3:4, 21). Spanish and English consistently transliterate the name, while German retains the Hebrew characters, reflecting the name's limited familiarity outside Semitic traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Meremot, Meremoth | es: Meremot | fr: Meremoth | de: [מרמות], [מרמת] Ezra 8:33; Ezra 10:36; Neh 3:4; Neh 3:21; Neh 10:5

מִרְמָס H4823 N-msc (7×)

Trampling, a trampling-place – what is trodden underfoot, used literally and figuratively for destruction.
A masculine noun meaning trampling or a place that is trampled underfoot. Isaiah uses it powerfully as an image of total destruction: a vineyard given over to be trampled (Isa 5:5), hills turned into grazing trampled by livestock (Isa 7:25), Assyria as God's agent to make nations 'a trampling like mud in the streets' (Isa 10:6), and a covenant with death that will be trampled (Isa 28:18). Micah 7:10 turns the image on Israel's enemies. Spanish captures this with 'pisoteo/pisoteado' (stampeding/stamped), preserving the visceral, physical quality of the metaphor.

trampling, that which is trampled (7×) The act of trampling or the condition of being trodden underfoot, used both literally and as a figure for utter destruction and humiliation. English 'a-trampling/for-trampling,' Spanish 'pisoteo/para-ser-pisoteados' all reflect the same physical image of being crushed underfoot. The four original clusters differ only in grammatical form (construct, with preposition le-). In Isaiah 5:5 God removes a vineyard's hedge so it becomes a trampling-place; Isaiah 7:25 describes hills given over to livestock trampling; Isaiah 10:6 likens nations to mud trampled in streets; Isaiah 28:18 warns that those who trust in lies will be trampled by God's judgment; Ezekiel 34:19 condemns shepherds whose flocks must drink water muddied by trampling. TRAMPLING AND TREADING en: a-trampling, and-for-trampling-of, for-trampling | es: lo-pisoteado-de, para-pisoteo, para-ser-pisoteados? | fr: [ולמרמס], [למרמס], [מרמס] | de: [ולמרמס], [למרמס], [מרמס] Isa 5:5; Isa 7:25; Isa 10:6; Isa 28:18; Ezek 34:19

מְרֹנֹתִי H4824 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

a gentilicnoun meaning 'the Meronothite,' denoting origin from an unknown location Meronoth
This gentilicadjective means 'the Meronothite,' designating someone from a place called Meronoth (location unknown). It appears twice identifying two different individuals. Jadon the Meronothite helped repair Jerusalem's walls under Nehemiah (Nehemiah 3:7). Jehdeiah the Meronothite served as overseer of donkeys in David's administration (1 Chronicles 27:30). The place name Meronoth is otherwise unattested in Scripture, and its location remains unknown despite suggestions (related to Merom? a town in Benjamin?). These gentilics preserve memory of obscure settlements whose names survived only in connection with notable individuals.

(2×) Gentilicdesignation meaning 'the Meronothite,' indicating origin from Meronoth. Both biblical occurrences use the definite article: 'Jadon the Meronothite' and 'Jehdeiah the Meronothite,' treating it as a well-known identifier. The Greek transliterations vary (ek Merathōn, Mērōnathaios), showing uncertainty about the underlying place name. That two different individuals centuries apart bear this designation suggests Meronoth was a real settlement, though it left no other trace. Such gentilics were important identity markers in ancient Israel, linking persons to family territories. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Meronothite | es: el-meronotita | fr: [המרנתי] | de: [המרנתי] 1Chr 27:30; Neh 3:7

מֶרֶס H4825 N-proper-ms (1×)

Meres, one of the seven Persian nobles who had special access to King Ahasuerus
Meres appears in Esther 1:14 as one of the seven princes of Persia and Media who "saw the king's face" and "sat first in the kingdom." These were the king's closest advisors with direct access to the monarch, forming an elite inner circle. When Queen Vashti refused to appear at the king's banquet, Ahasuerus consulted this group about the proper legal response. Their names (Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena, and Memucan) appear to be Persian, reflecting the historical setting. These nobles combined legal expertise with political authority, advising on matters touching royal honor and kingdom protocol.

(1×) A personal name designating one of seven Persian nobles who served as intimate advisors to King Ahasuerus (Esther 1:14). Meres belonged to the highest echelon of the Persian Empire's administration—those who "saw the king's face" and "sat first in the kingdom," indicating special access and authority. These seven princes were consulted on the legal response to Queen Vashti's refusal to appear at the royal banquet. The Persian name situates the narrative in its historical context, and the group's role emphasizes the formal, legal processes governing even personal matters involving royal honor. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Meres | es: Meres | fr: [מרס] | de: [מרס] Esth 1:14

מַרְסְנָא H4826 N-proper-ms (1×)

Marsena, one of the seven Persian nobles serving as advisors to King Ahasuerus
Marsena appears alongside Meres in Esther 1:14, completing the list of seven princes of Persia and Media who advised King Ahasuerus. Like the other names in this elite group, Marsena is Persian, grounding the Esther narrative in authentic historical context. These seven nobles combined judicial expertise with proximity to royal power—they understood both Persian law and the king's mind. Their counsel shaped the decree against Vashti and set in motion the events leading to Esther's elevation. The number seven may reflect Persian administrative structure, and their collective authority highlights how ancient Near Eastern monarchs governed through councils of trusted nobles rather than in isolation.

(1×) A personal name designating one of seven Persian nobles serving King Ahasuerus as intimate advisors (Esther 1:14). Marsena belonged to the inner circle of princes who had direct royal access and sat in positions of highest authority throughout the kingdom. Together with six others, he was consulted when Queen Vashti's refusal to appear demanded a legal and political response. The Persian name adds historical authenticity, and the group's function illustrates ancient Near Eastern governance through royal councils. The number seven may reflect formal Persian administrative structure, with these advisors combining legal knowledge and political influence. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Marsena | es: Marsena | fr: [מרסנא] | de: [מרסנא] Esth 1:14

רָעַע H4827 Prep-l / N-ms (1×)

For evil or harmful purposes, describing intentions directed toward harm rather than good
This phrase appears in Daniel 11:27, describing two kings who "sit at the same table" and "speak lies to each other, for their hearts are bent toward evil." The context is the complex political maneuvering between Seleucid and Ptolemaic rulers—diplomatic meetings masking hostile intent. The phrase "for evil" captures the moral quality of their scheming: despite outward courtesy and alliance, their true purposes are destructive. Both plot against each other even while negotiating. This illustrates a recurring biblical theme: human political wisdom achieves nothing when divorced from moral integrity and divine purpose. God's appointed time will come regardless of their machinations.

(1×) A prepositional phrase meaning "for evil" or "toward harmful purposes," describing intent or direction of action. Daniel 11:27 uses this in describing two kings who sit together in false diplomacy while their hearts are bent "for evil" (toward harmful purposes). Despite appearing to negotiate, each plots against the other—their true intentions are destructive rather than constructive. The phrase emphasizes moral quality of purpose: actions may appear diplomatic but spring from malicious intent. This reflects Daniel's perspective on human political scheming: devoid of righteousness, it amounts to mutually destructive evil awaiting divine intervention. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: for-evil | es: para-maldad | fr: malfaisant | de: [לְמֵרַע] Dan 11:27

מֵרֵעַ H4828 N-msc / 3ms (7×)

A close friend, companion, or confidant – one bound by personal loyalty and intimate association.

A masculine noun denoting a friend or intimate companion, distinct from the more general rea ('neighbor'). It implies a bond of personal loyalty and trust. Abimelech's 'friend' Ahuzzath (Gen 26:26) served as a royal confidant or advisor. The term appears prominently in the Samson narrative for his wedding companions and the 'best man' to whom his wife was given (Judg 14:11, 20; 15:2, 6). In Proverbs 19:7 it appears in a sobering observation about how even close friends distance themselves from the poor. Spanish 'companero/amigos' and French 'compagnons' capture the sense of bonded, personal companionship.

friend, companion (7×) A close friend, companion, or confidant – someone bound by personal loyalty rather than mere proximity. English 'friend-his/companions,' Spanish 'su-companero/amigos-suyos,' and French 'compagnons' all point to intimate personal association. In Genesis 26:26 Ahuzzath is Abimelech's merea, his personal advisor-friend who accompanies him to make a treaty with Isaac. In Judges 14:11 Samson's thirty 'companions' are wedding attendants; in 14:20 and 15:2, 6 the term designates the specific 'best man' or groomsman to whom Samson's wife was controversially given. In 2 Samuel 3:8 the word appears in the context of loyal allies, and Proverbs 19:7 warns that even intimate friends flee from poverty. LOVE AND LOYALTY

en: companions, for-his-companion, friend-his | es: a-su-compañero, a-tu-compañero, amigos-suyos | fr: compagnons, friend-son, pour-son-companion | de: [מֵרֵעֵהוּ], companions, fuer-sein-companion Gen 26:26; Judg 14:11; Judg 14:20; Judg 15:2; Judg 15:6

מִרְעֶה H4829 Art / N-ms (13×)

Pasture, pasturage — a place of grazing for livestock; figuratively, God's provision for his people

A masculine noun from the root רָעָה ('to graze, shepherd'), denoting grazing land where flocks and herds feed. Jacob's sons come to Egypt because 'there is no pasture for your servants' flocks' (Gen 47:4), while the Simeonites seek 'fat and good pasture' in Gedor (1 Chr 4:39–40). The word takes on rich figurative dimensions in the prophets: Ezekiel promises God will feed his scattered flock on 'good pasture' upon Israel's mountains (Ezek 34:14, 18), and Isaiah envisions Jerusalem's hilltops becoming pasture for donkeys and cattle in the coming judgment (Isa 32:14). Lamentations poignantly compares Jerusalem's fleeing princes to deer that 'find no pasture' (Lam 1:6).

pasture, pasturage (13×) A place of grazing or pasturage for livestock, used both literally and figuratively. Literal: the lack of pasture driving Jacob's family to Egypt (Gen 47:4), the Simeonites finding rich pasturage (1 Chr 4:39–41), the wild donkey's roaming range (Job 39:8), and cattle languishing without it (Joel 1:18). Figurative: God as shepherd providing good pasture for his flock Israel (Ezek 34:14, 18), ruined cities turned to pasture in judgment (Isa 32:14), and exiled princes like deer finding no pasture (Lam 1:6). Cross-lingual glosses reflect the pastoral register: spa 'pasto/pastizal', deu 'Weide', eng 'pasture'. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-grazing-land-of, and-the-feeding-place, in-pasture- | es: En-pasto, el-pasto, pastizal | fr: [מִרְעֶה], de-mauvaise, et-de-mauvaise | de: Weide, [בְּמִרְעֶה], [הַמִּרְעֶה] Gen 47:4; 1Chr 4:39; 1Chr 4:40; 1Chr 4:41; Job 39:8

מַרְעִית H4830 N-fsc / 3ms (10×)

Pasturage or flock; always figurative in Scripture for God's people as the sheep he tends and protects.

A feminine noun meaning pasturing, pasturage, or (by metonymy) flock. In every biblical occurrence it appears figuratively: Israel is 'the sheep of his pasture' (Ps 95:7; 100:3), and the prophets lament when God's flock is scattered (Jer 23:1). The word always carries a possessive suffix, emphasizing the covenant bond between shepherd and sheep. In one striking instance (Jer 10:21), the term shifts from the place of grazing to the animals themselves – 'their flock is scattered' – a metonymy confirmed across languages (eng 'their-flock,' spa 'rebano-su').

1. pasturage, pasture (figurative for God's people) (9×) Pasturage or pasture in a figurative sense, denoting God's people as the flock under his care. The pronominal suffixes ('my pasture,' 'your pasture,' 'his pasture') always tie the image to the divine Shepherd. Psalms 74:1 and 79:13 use 'sheep of your pasture' in lament, while Psalm 95:7 and 100:3 use it in worship. Multilingual glosses consistently render the pastoral metaphor: spa 'pasto,' fra 'paturage,' reinforcing the shepherding image rather than literal grazing land. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Your-pasture, according-to-their-pasture, his-pasture | es: conforme-a-su-pasto, mi-pasto,, pasto-de-ti | fr: [מַרְעִיתִי], [מַרְעִיתָם], de-pâturage | de: [כְּמַרְעִיתָם], [מַרְעִיתִי], [מַרְעִיתָם] Ps 74:1; Ps 79:13; Ps 95:7; Ps 100:3; Isa 49:9

2. flock (metonymy for pastured animals) (1×) By metonymy, the flock itself – the pastured animals rather than the place of pasture. In Jeremiah 10:21, the shepherds have become senseless and 'their flock is scattered,' where the shift from location to living beings is confirmed by English 'their-flock' and Spanish 'rebano-su.' This is a natural semantic extension: the place of pasturing comes to stand for what is pastured there. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: their-flock | es: rebaño-su | fr: [מַרְעִיתָם] | de: [מַרְעִיתָם] Jer 10:21

מַרְעֲלָה H4831 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Maralah, a border town in the territory of Zebulun mentioned in Joshua's boundary descriptions

Maralah appears once in Joshua 19:11, defining part of Zebulun's tribal boundary. The verse describes the border going up westward toward Maralah and reaching to Dabbesheth. These boundary descriptions served crucial administrative and legal functions—defining which families belonged to which tribal territory and where jurisdiction began and ended. While we cannot pinpoint Maralah's exact location today, it clearly marked a recognizable landmark in ancient Galilee. The Septuagint's varied transliterations (Maragelda, Marila, Marala) show uncertainty about pronunciation but confirm the geographic reference. Such place names anchor Israel's sacred narrative in real geography.

(1×) A place name designating a town on the border of Zebulun's tribal territory (Joshua 19:11). Maralah served as a boundary marker in the detailed territorial descriptions that allocated land to Israel's tribes. The boundary "reached to Maralah" before continuing toward Dabbesheth, indicating the town's function as a fixed reference point. While the exact location remains uncertain, it was clearly a known landmark in ancient Galilee. Septuagint variations (Maragelda, Marila) reflect pronunciation uncertainties, but the geographic function—marking tribal boundaries—is clear. Such boundary towns established legal and administrative jurisdiction among the tribes. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Maralah | es: y-Marala | fr: et-Maralah | de: und-Maralah Josh 19:11

מַרְפֵּא H4832 N-ms (16×)

Healing, cure, or remedy; figuratively composure or calmness that restores well-being.

A noun built on the root r-p-ᵓ ('to heal'), appearing chiefly in prophetic lament and Wisdom literature. Jeremiah uses it for the national healing that God withholds or bestows (Jer 8:15; 14:19; 33:6), pairing it with 'peace' (shalom) to describe comprehensive restoration. In Proverbs it becomes a favourite image for the life-giving power of wise speech: a 'healing tongue' soothes (Prov 15:4), and wholesome words are 'healing to the bones' (Prov 16:24). One striking occurrence in Ecclesiastes 10:4 extends the sense to inner composure – the calm spirit that defuses a ruler's anger – showing how the Hebrew mind linked physical health with emotional equilibrium.

1. healing, cure, remedy (15×) The act or result of healing, cure, or remedy, applied both to physical restoration and to the spiritual or national recovery of Israel. Jeremiah laments 'there is no healing for us' (Jer 14:19), while Proverbs celebrates healing as the fruit of wisdom: gentle words are 'healing to the bones' (Prov 16:24), and a faithful messenger brings healing (Prov 13:17). Malachi 3:20 envisions the sun of righteousness rising 'with healing in its wings.' Spanish 'sanidad' and 'curación' reflect the medical-restorative dimension; French and German both render it 'guérison/Heilung.' HEALING AND RESTORATION

en: a-soothing, and-cure, and-healing | es: Sanidad-de, curación, remedio | fr: [ומרפא], [מרפא], [מרפה] | de: Heilung, [ומרפא], [מרפא] 2Chr 21:18; 2Chr 36:16; Prov 4:22; Prov 6:15; Prov 12:18

2. calmness, composure (1×) A figurative extension meaning calmness, composure, or gentleness – the inner tranquility that heals relational tension. Attested only in Ecclesiastes 10:4, where the sage counsels that 'calmness' (marpe) can pacify great offenses from a ruler. The semantic leap from bodily healing to emotional composure reveals how Hebrew thought viewed serenity as a form of restoration. Spanish 'calma' and English 'calmness' capture this specialized Wisdom usage. HEALING AND RESTORATION

en: calmness | es: calma | fr: guérison | de: Heilung Eccl 10:4

מַרְפֵּשׁ H4833 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

Fouled or muddied, describing water made turbid by trampling, particularly by livestock

This rare term appears in Ezekiel 34:19, where God rebukes Israel's shepherds (leaders) for their exploitation. The sheep must eat what the shepherds have trampled and drink what they have fouled with their feet. The imagery is vivid: selfish leaders consume the best resources and ruin what remains, leaving the flock with muddied water and trampled pasture. The term specifically describes the turbid, polluted state of water churned up by feet. This metaphor for corrupt leadership resonates across cultures—those in power often enjoy the best while leaving the vulnerable with degraded, insufficient resources.

(1×) An adjective or verbal form meaning fouled, muddied, or made turbid, specifically of water churned up and polluted by trampling. Ezekiel 34:19 uses this in a powerful metaphor condemning corrupt leadership: while the shepherds (rulers) enjoy clean water and good pasture, the flock must drink what has been "fouled" by the leaders' feet. The term captures both the physical state (murky, sediment-stirred water) and the moral offense (leaders consuming the best and ruining the rest). This image of muddied water becomes a vivid symbol of exploitative power dynamics. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fouled-of | es: y-lo-enturbiado-de | fr: et-eau-trouble | de: [ומרפש] Ezek 34:19

מָרַע H4834 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-fs (4×)

nimrats — grievous, painful, severe (describing destructive judgment or affliction)

This Hebrew term, appearing in various forms of the root mrts, describes something grievous, painful, or severe. Though the root can mean 'to be sick' in related languages, in biblical Hebrew it functions as an intensifier, emphasizing the severity or harshness of something. The word appears in contexts of cursing (1 Kings), provocative speech (Job), and divine judgment (Micah). There's scholarly debate about Job 6:25, where some suggest it might mean 'strong' or 'effective' rather than 'painful,' possibly relating to a different Akkadian root meaning 'difficult' or 'repelling.'

(4×) An adjective describing something as grievous, painful, or severe, intensifying the noun it modifies. In 1 Kings 2:8, it characterizes Shimei's curse against David as 'grievous' (qelalah nimretset). Micah 2:10 speaks of a 'grievous destruction' (chevel nimrats) coming upon Israel. Job 16:3 uses a verbal form asking what provokes or impels someone to keep speaking. Job 6:25 is debated: it may describe honest words as 'strong/effective' rather than 'painful,' or it could be a textual variant for 'sweet' (nimlētsu). The consistent theme across these passages is intensity—whether of suffering, judgment, or rhetorical force. POWER AND ABILITY

en: grievous, painful, provokes-you | es: dolorosa, dolorosas, te-impulsa | fr: grievous, être-lourd, ימריצך-toi | de: [ימריצך], [נמרץ], [נמרצו] 1Kgs 2:8; Job 6:25; Job 16:3; Mic 2:10

מְרוּצָה H4835 Art / N-fs (1×)

Crushing or oppression, specifically violent exploitation of the vulnerable through unjust economic practices

This noun appears in Jeremiah 22:17, part of a scathing denunciation of King Jehoiakim. The prophet condemns the king for building his palace through injustice, practicing "oppression and violence" (literally "crushing and extortion"). Jehoiakim made his neighbors work without pay, shedding innocent blood and exploiting the vulnerable. The term "crushing" vividly captures the weight of oppressive power—like something ground down or pressed into dust. Paired with "extortion," it emphasizes how rulers can use their authority not to protect but to destroy. This crushing represents the opposite of righteous kingship, which defends the poor and upholds justice.

(1×) Denotes crushing, oppression, or violent exploitation, particularly economic injustice inflicted by the powerful on the vulnerable. Jeremiah 22:17 condemns King Jehoiakim for practicing "crushing and extortion," building his palace through forced labor and bloodshed. The term metaphorically extends physical crushing to social oppression—the grinding weight of unjust power that reduces victims to insignificance. Paired with "extortion," it emphasizes the multifaceted nature of royal abuse: not just taking what isn't theirs but destroying people in the process. The noun represents everything righteous kingship should prevent. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: the-crushing | es: la-violencia | fr: [המרוצה] | de: [המרוצה] Jer 22:17

מַרְצֵעַ H4836 Prep-b (2×)

awl, a boring-instrument used to pierce the ear of a servant choosing permanent service

This rare noun appears only in the laws governing Hebrew servants who choose to remain with their masters permanently. The awl was a sharp pointed tool used to pierce the servant's ear against the doorpost, creating a permanent physical mark of voluntary servitude. Both Exodus and Deuteronomy preserve this striking ritual, where love for one's master transforms legal obligation into lifelong commitment.

(2×) The awl functions as the ritual instrument in the ear-piercing ceremony described in Exodus 21:6 and Deuteronomy 15:17. Cross-linguistic glosses consistently render this as a piercing or boring tool (English 'awl', Spanish 'punzón', French 'alène'), reflecting its specialized legal-ceremonial use in marking permanent servitude. PIERCE BORE THROUGH

en: the-awl, with-the-awl | es: con-el-punzón, el-punzón | fr: avec-le-alène, le-awl | de: der-awl, mit-der-awl Exod 21:6; Deut 15:17

מַרְצֶפֶת H4837 N-fsc (1×)

Pavement or base, specifically a constructed platform or foundation made of stones

This noun appears in 2 Kings 16:17, describing King Ahaz's modifications to the temple during his reign. He removed various temple furnishings, including "the pavement of stones" from under the bronze basin. The term denotes a constructed base or platform—a paved surface providing structural support. Ahaz made these changes either to pay tribute to Assyria or to accommodate Assyrian religious practices after visiting Damascus. His altar renovations represented both political subservience and theological compromise. The pavement's removal diminished the temple's original design, symbolizing how political pressure eroded proper worship. Such architectural details in Kings often carry symbolic weight about spiritual fidelity.

(1×) Refers to a pavement, constructed base, or platform made of stones, serving as foundation or support for temple furnishings. In 2 Kings 16:17, King Ahaz removed "the pavement of stones" that supported the bronze basin (or sea) as part of his temple modifications. These changes occurred amid Assyrian political pressure and reflected both tribute payments and religious compromise. The term emphasizes constructed, paved surface—not natural ground but deliberately laid stonework. The architectural detail matters theologically: Ahaz's alterations to sacred space symbolized deeper spiritual unfaithfulness, dismantling proper worship infrastructure to accommodate foreign influence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: pavement-of | es: pavimento-de | fr: pavement-de | de: pavement-von 2Kgs 16:17

מָרַק H4838 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (4×)

maraq — to scour, polish, or cleanse (metals, vessels, or figuratively, the soul)

This verb means to scour, polish, or thoroughly cleanse, used both literally for metalwork and figuratively for moral purification. The root appears in related Semitic languages with similar meanings of scraping or polishing. Biblical usage includes polishing bronze temple utensils, scouring sacrificial vessels for ritual purity, and metaphorically, the cleansing effect of discipline. The term suggests intensive, thorough cleaning that restores shine to metal or purity to a vessel—or by extension, to a person's character through corrective suffering.

(4×) To scour, polish, or cleanse thoroughly. Literally, it describes polishing bronze (2 Chr 4:16 — temple vessels made of 'polished' bronze, parallel to 1 Kgs 7:45). Leviticus 6:28 commands that a bronze cooking pot used for a sin offering 'shall be scoured' (yumoraq) and rinsed. Jeremiah 46:4 calls soldiers to 'polish the spears!' in preparation for battle. Proverbs 20:30 uses it figuratively: 'blows that wound cleanse away evil'—suggesting that painful discipline scours away moral impurity like abrasive cleaning restores brightness to tarnished metal. The Ketiv/Qere variant in Proverbs shows textual uncertainty between verbal and nominal forms. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: [cleansing], it-shall-be-scoured, polish | es: [frotan], bruñido, pulid | fr: [מרוק], [מרקו], [תמריק] | de: [[תמריק]], [מרוק], [מרקו] Lev 6:28; 2Chr 4:16; Prov 20:30; Jer 46:4

מָרָק H4839 Conj-w / N-msc (3×)

Broth or juice stewed from meat, sometimes ritually unclean

This culinary term appears in two distinct contexts: Gideon's offering to the angel (Judges 6) and Isaiah's condemnation of eating unclean things (Isa 65). In both cases it refers to the liquid extracted from cooking meat—broth. When Gideon prepares his offering, he puts the meat in a basket and the broth in a pot. Isaiah denounces those who eat 'broth of unclean things,' likely referring to pork or other forbidden meat broths. The term captures the essence or extract of the meat, concentrated in liquid form.

(3×) Broth or meat juice from cooking. Judges 6:19-20 describes Gideon's preparation: he puts the meat in a basket 'and the broth he put in a pot,' then 'pour out the broth' at the angel's command. Isaiah 65:4 condemns idolaters: 'who eat pig's flesh, and broth of unclean things is in their vessels' (Qere reading). The consistent rendering as 'broth' or 'caldo' across languages (French bouillon implied, German Brühe) confirms this as the savory liquid from cooked meat. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-broth-of, and-the-broth, the-broth | es: el-caldo, y-caldo-de, y-el-caldo | fr: [(ומרק)], et-le-broth, le-broth | de: [(ומרק)], der-broth, und-der-broth Judg 6:19; Judg 6:20; Isa 65:4

מֻרְקָח H4840 N-mp (1×)

Perfumes or spices, particularly fragrant ointments used for cosmetic or aromatic purposes

This noun appears in Song of Solomon 5:13, in the woman's poetic description of her beloved: "His cheeks are like beds of spices, yielding perfumes." The imagery is extravagant and sensual—the man's face compared to garden beds overflowing with aromatic plants. The term specifically denotes fragrant preparations or perfumes, emphasizing olfactory beauty. Ancient Near Eastern love poetry often employed botanical and aromatic imagery to convey beauty and desire. The plural suggests abundance—not a single scent but a complex, luxurious bouquet. This language of perfumes and spices runs throughout the Song, making love tangible through sensory experience.

(1×) Refers to perfumes, spices, or fragrant ointments valued for their aroma and cosmetic use. Song of Solomon 5:13 employs this in erotic-poetic imagery: the beloved's cheeks are "like beds of spices" yielding perfumes—an extravagant metaphor emphasizing olfactory beauty and sensual appeal. The term denotes prepared fragrances (not raw spices), used in cosmetics and aromatics. Ancient Near Eastern love poetry frequently employed botanical and perfume imagery to make beauty and desire sensorially vivid. The plural suggests abundance and variety, evoking a complex, luxurious fragrance that captivates the senses. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: perfumes | es: perfumes | fr: de-parfums; | de: [מרקחים] Song 5:13

מִרְקַחָה H4841 Prep-k (2×)

ointment-pot or spice-seasoning, a vessel for compounding fragrant mixtures

This feminine noun carries two distinct nuances: either a pot in which ointments are mixed and stored, or the seasoned spices themselves. In Job 41, it appears in vivid figurative language describing Leviathan, while Ezekiel uses it in connection with the cooking pot imagery of Jerusalem's judgment. The term evokes the aromatic world of ancient perfumery and culinary arts, though its precise reference remains somewhat uncertain in each context.

(2×) Used figuratively in Job 41:31 (comparing the sea to a boiling ointment pot) and literally in Ezekiel 24:10 (the spices added to the cooking pot). The multilingual evidence shows semantic variation: English distinguishes 'ointment-pot' from 'spices', Spanish 'ungüento'/'condimento', suggesting both the container and its aromatic contents were conceptually linked in Hebrew usage. OINTMENT PERFUME

en: like-an-ointment-pot, the-spices | es: como-ungüento, el-condimento | fr: baume, כמרקחה | de: [המרקחה], [כמרקחה] Job 41:31; Ezek 24:10

מִרְקַחַת H4842 Art / N-fs (3×)

Ointment mixture or the compounding of perfumed oils and spices

This term relates to the skilled blending of aromatic ingredients into ointment or perfume. Exodus uses it for the sacred anointing oil compounded 'as the work of a perfumer.' Chronicles mentions those who specialized in this work, the 'compounders of the ointment.' When King Asa died, he was buried 'in a compound of spices'—likely an ointment-pot or bed of mixed aromatics. The emphasis is on skilled mixture-making, the art of blending multiple ingredients into a unified fragrant substance.

(3×) Ointment compound or the act of blending perfumed oils. Exodus 30:25 commands making holy anointing oil 'compounded according to the art of the perfumer'—a skilled blending of spices and oil. First Chronicles 9:30 notes 'some of the sons of the priests compounded the ointment'—those who specialized in mixing sacred perfumes. Second Chronicles 16:14 describes Asa's burial 'in a bed filled with spices and various kinds of compound'—likely an ointment mixture or perfumed bier. The French/Spanish 'mezcla' and 'compounding' emphasize the mixing process. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: compounding, in-compound-of, the-ointment | es: con-arte-de, la-mezcla, mezcla | fr: [במרקחת], [המרקחת], compounding | de: [במרקחת], [המרקחת], compounding Exod 30:25; 1Chr 9:30; 2Chr 16:14

מָרַר H4843 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3mp / 3ms (14×)

Be bitter; embitter, make bitter; become enraged; weep or lament bitterly (Qal, Piel, Hifil, Hitpael)

Rooted in the physical sensation of a bitter taste (Isa 24:9, 'strong drink is bitter to those who drink it'), this verb extends across the full spectrum of human anguish. Naomi's declaration 'the Almighty has dealt very bitterly with me' (Ruth 1:20) turns flavor into theology. The Piel intensifies it into hostile action—Pharaoh's taskmasters 'embittered' Israel's lives (Exod 1:14). In Daniel, the Hitpael reflexive captures internal fury, while Zechariah's Hifil infinitive paints the bitterest mourning imaginable. Arabic murr and Ethiopic marara confirm this as a pan-Semitic root for the taste that became a metaphor for suffering.

1. be bitter (stative) (4×) Qal stative: to be or become bitter in taste or emotional experience. Isaiah 24:9 preserves the literal gustatory sense, while Ruth 1:13 and 2 Kings 4:27 extend it to existential distress. German 'bitter' and Spanish 'amargo' both serve double duty as taste and sorrow, just as the Hebrew does. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bitter, is-bitter | es: amarga, amargo, es-amargo | fr: [ימר], amer, est-amer | de: [ימר], [מר], bitter Ruth 1:13; 2Kgs 4:27; Isa 24:9; Isa 38:17

2. embitter someone, treat bitterly (2×) Piel transitive: to embitter someone or attack bitterly. Genesis 49:23 describes archers who 'bitterly attacked' Joseph, and Exodus 1:14 recounts how the Egyptians 'embittered' Israel's life with hard labor. Spanish 'amargaron' and French 'amèrement attaqua' both preserve the hostile, intensified force of the Piel. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-bitterly-attacked-him, and-they-embittered | es: Y-amargaron, Y-lo-amargaron | fr: et-amèrement-attaqua-lui, et-ils-embittered | de: und-sie-embittered, und-sie-erbitterten-ihn Gen 49:23; Exod 1:14

3. cause bitterness (causative) (2×) Hifil causative finite: to cause bitterness, to make a situation bitter. Naomi renames herself Mara because 'the Almighty has made it bitter for me' (Ruth 1:20), and Job 27:2 attributes his bitterness to God. Spanish 'amargó' and French 'fit amer' confirm the causative agency at work. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: has-embittered, made-bitter | es: amargó, que-amargó | fr: fit-amer, être-amer | de: [המר] Ruth 1:20; Job 27:2

4. become enraged, embittered (reflexive) (2×) Hitpael reflexive: to become enraged or embittered within oneself, expressing internal fury. Both occurrences appear in Daniel—the goat becomes 'enraged' (8:7) and the king of the south 'shall be moved with fury' (11:11). Spanish 'se enfureció' captures the reflexive, self-consuming quality of this rage. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: and-it-was-enraged, and-shall-be-enraged | es: Y-se-enfurecerá, y-se-enfureció | fr: et-être-amer | de: [ויתמרמר] Dan 8:7; Dan 11:11

5. bitter lamentation (adverbial) (2×) Hifil infinitive absolute used adverbially to modify mourning: bitterly, as in bitter lamentation. Zechariah 12:10 uses it twice—'they shall mourn bitterly' and 'like the bitter grief for a firstborn.' Spanish 'llorar amargamente' and French 'être amer' show the adverbial function clearly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-being-bitter, like-being-bitter | es: como-llorar-amargamente, y-llorarán-amargamente | fr: et-être-amer, être-amer | de: [והמר], [כהמר] Zech 12:10

6. rebel, act defiantly (1×) Hifil specialized sense of rebellion or defiance, attested in Exodus 23:21 where God warns Israel not to 'rebel' against his angel. The semantic bridge runs through provocation—rebellion embitters the relationship. Spanish 'te rebeles' and French 'se rebeller' both render this as outright defiance. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE

en: you-shall-rebel | es: te-rebeles | fr: tu—se-rebeller | de: du-soll-sich-auflehnen Exod 23:21

7. weep bitterly (intensive) (1×) Piel intensive intransitive: to weep with intense bitterness. In Isaiah 22:4, the prophet cries 'let me weep bitterly' over Jerusalem's destruction. Spanish 'dejaré amargar' preserves the self-directed intensity, distinguishing this from the Hifil adverbial mourning of Zechariah. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: I-will-weep-bitterly | es: dejaré-amargar | fr: [אמרר] | de: [אמרר] Isa 22:4

מָרֹר H4844 Conj-w / N-mp (3×)

Bitter herbs eaten with the Passover meal, symbolizing slavery's bitterness

These are the bitter plants—likely endive, chicory, or similar greens—commanded to be eaten with the Passover lamb as a memorial of Israel's bitter slavery in Egypt. The instruction appears in both Exodus 12 and Numbers 9, linking the physical taste of bitterness to the remembered experience of oppression. Lamentations uses the term metaphorically, describing God's judgment as being sated with 'bitter herbs'—suffering that fills the mouth with bitterness. The herbs serve as edible memory, taste encoding history.

(3×) Bitter herbs required for Passover. Exodus 12:8 commands: 'they shall eat the flesh that night, roasted on the fire; with unleavened bread and bitter herbs they shall eat it.' Numbers 9:11 repeats the requirement for the second Passover. Lamentations 3:15 uses it figuratively: 'He has filled me with bitterness; he has sated me with bitter herbs'—describing affliction as forced consumption of bitterness. The Spanish 'hierbas amargas' and French 'herbes amères' preserve the dual botanical and memorial significance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-bitter-herbs, bitter-herbs, with-bitterness | es: de-amarguras, hierbas-amargas, y-hierbas-amargas | fr: [במרורים], amer-herbes, et-bitter-herbs | de: [במרורים], bitter-herbs, und-bitter-herbs Exod 12:8; Num 9:11; Lam 3:15

מְרֵרָה H4845 N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

Gall or bile, the bitter fluid from the gall bladder, used figuratively for anguish and suffering

This noun appears in Job 16:13, where Job describes God's attack in visceral, physical terms: "He slashes open my kidneys and pours out my gall on the ground without mercy." The term denotes the gall or bile, the bitter fluid stored in the gall bladder—proverbially associated with bitterness and suffering. Job uses anatomical imagery to express how God seems to be fatally wounding him, treating him as an enemy rather than a servant. Spilled gall represents both physical destruction and the bitter essence of suffering made visible. The metaphor combines medical knowledge with emotional intensity, making abstract anguish brutally concrete.

(1×) Denotes gall or bile, the bitter fluid from the gall bladder, often used metaphorically for intense suffering or bitterness. Job 16:13 employs vivid, violent imagery: God "pours out my gall on the ground," treating Job as an enemy without mercy. The anatomical reference makes suffering physically tangible—not abstract pain but the literal spilling of internal organs and fluids. Ancient understanding associated gall with bitterness (both taste and experience), so spilled gall symbolizes the bitter essence of suffering made visible. The metaphor intensifies Job's sense of divine attack, portraying God as warrior fatally wounding him. FLESH AND BODY en: my-gall | es: mi-hiel | fr: mon-מררתי-moi | de: [מררתי] Job 16:13

מְרֹרָה H4846 N-fp (4×)

merorot — bitter things, gall, poison; literal gall-bladder or figurative bitterness

This noun denotes bitter things, gall, or poison, used both anatomically and metaphorically. The term can refer to the literal gall-bladder as an organ, to poisonous substances, or figuratively to bitter experiences and judgments. All four occurrences appear in poetic literature (Deuteronomy's song, Job's speeches), where bitterness serves as a powerful image for suffering, judgment, or the deadly nature of wickedness. The imagery draws on the physical experience of bitterness to convey spiritual and existential realities.

(4×) Bitter things, gall, or poison in various senses. Job 20:25 uses it anatomically for the 'gall' or gall-bladder (parallel to 'back' in the body). Job 20:14 employs it for poison: the food of the wicked becomes 'the poison of serpents' in his stomach. Job 13:26 uses it figuratively for God's 'bitter things'—harsh judgments or severe accusations written against the sufferer. Deuteronomy 32:32 speaks metaphorically of Israel's enemies producing 'clusters of bitterness' (ashkelot merorot), describing their corrupt fruit as inherently poisonous. Across these uses, the term evokes toxicity, suffering, and the painful consequences of evil. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bitter-things, bitterness, from-his-gall | es: amargos, amarguras, de-su-hígado | fr: bitterness, de-son-ממררתו-lui, מרורת | de: [ממררתו], [מרורת], [מררות] Deut 32:32; Job 13:26; Job 20:14; Job 20:25

מְרָרִי H4847 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (39×)

Merari — third son of Levi; ancestor of the Merarite Levitical clan serving in tabernacle and temple

The proper name of the youngest of Levi's three sons (Gen 46:11; Exod 6:16), whose descendants formed one of the three major Levitical divisions. The Merarites were assigned the heavier structural components of the tabernacle — frames, crossbars, posts, and bases (Num 3:36-37) — and received twelve cities including four cities of refuge (Josh 21:7, 34-40). The name possibly derives from the root m-r-r, 'to be bitter,' though its etymology remains debated. All 39 occurrences cluster in priestly genealogies and service rosters from the Pentateuch through Chronicles and Ezra.

Merari (proper name) (39×) The personal name Merari, Levi's third son and eponymous ancestor of the Merarite clan of Levites. Every occurrence appears in genealogical or cultic-service contexts: the Pentateuchal census lists (Num 3-4, 26), the Levitical city allocations (Josh 21), and the Chronicler's temple rosters (1 Chr 6, 15, 23-24). Translations uniformly transliterate — 'Merari' in English, Spanish, German; 'Mérari' in French — reflecting its status as a stable proper noun. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Merari | es: Merari | fr: Merari, Mérari | de: Merari, Midianiter Gen 46:11; Exod 6:16; Exod 6:19; Num 3:17; Num 3:20

מְרָרִי H4848 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

The Merarites, a Levitical clan descended from Merari, responsible for tabernacle framework and structure

This gentilicAdj appears in Numbers 26:57 as a collective term for descendants of Merari, Levi's third son. The Merarites formed one of three major Levitical clans (alongside Kohathites and Gershonites), each with distinct tabernacle duties. The Merarites were responsible for the structural framework—frames, bars, pillars, bases, and all supporting equipment. In camp arrangements and worship, these divisions mattered: proper descent determined who could handle which sacred objects. The article "the Merarites" treats them as a recognized, corporate entity within Israel's tribal structure. Post-exilic sources continue using this designation, maintaining Levitical identity and function even after the exile.

(1×) A gentilicAdj designating the Merarites, the clan descended from Merari (Levi's third son), who had specific responsibilities for tabernacle service. Numbers 26:57 uses the collective "the Merarites" in a census listing major Levitical families. This clan was responsible for the structural elements of the tabernacle—frames, bars, pillars, and bases (Numbers 3–4). The designation preserves tribal and functional identity: Levitical service was organized by descent, with each clan handling different sacred objects. Use of the definite article emphasizes their recognized corporate status within Israel's social and religious structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Merarite | es: los-meraritas | fr: le-Merarite | de: der-Merariter Num 26:57

מִרְשַׁעַת H4849 Art / N-fs (1×)

The wicked or wickedness embodied, used as an epithet for Athaliah who corrupted temple worship

This noun appears in 2 Chronicles 24:7 as a shocking epithet for Athaliah: "the wicked woman" or "that wickedness." The text explains that "the sons of Athaliah, that wicked woman, had broken into the house of God and used the dedicated things of the LORD's temple for the Baals." The term functions almost as a title—not just describing her character but defining her essence as embodied wickedness. Athaliah's reign represented the infiltration of Baal worship into Judah, threatening the Davidic line and corrupting temple worship. The epithet justifies her violent overthrow: she wasn't merely a bad ruler but wickedness incarnate, whose removal was necessary for covenant restoration.

(1×) An abstract noun meaning wickedness, used in 2 Chronicles 24:7 as an epithet characterizing Athaliah as embodied evil: "that wicked woman" or literally "the wickedness." The term functions almost as a title rather than mere description—Athaliah is wickedness personified. The context explains her offense: her sons broke into the temple and diverted sacred objects to Baal worship, corrupting the cultic center of Judah. The epithet theologically justifies her violent removal—not just political commentary but identification of her reign as fundamentally antithetical to covenant faithfulness. She represents wickedness threatening both dynasty and worship. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: the-wicked | es: la-malvada | fr: [המרשעת] | de: [המרשעת] 2Chr 24:7

מְרָתַיִם H4850 N-fd (1×)

Merathaim (meaning 'double rebellion'), a symbolic name for Babylon in Jeremiah's prophecy of judgment

This cryptic name appears in Jeremiah 50:21, where God commands: "Go up against the land of Merathaim." While grammatically a dual form suggesting "double rebellion," it likely plays on "Marratum," the region near the Persian Gulf in southern Babylonia. Jeremiah employs wordplay throughout this oracle against Babylon, using names that sound geographic but carry symbolic freight. "Double rebellion" fits Babylon's character—rebel against God and oppressor of God's people. The pairing with "Pekod" (another symbolic name) in the same passage reinforces the prophetic technique of making geography speak judgment. Babylon, which prided itself on might and wisdom, becomes "Double Rebellion" awaiting divine reckoning.

(1×) A symbolic name for Babylon in Jeremiah 50:21, literally meaning "double rebellion" (dual form). While possibly punning on "Marratum," a region in southern Babylonia near the Persian Gulf, the name primarily functions as prophetic wordplay—transforming geographic reference into theological indictment. Babylon's dual rebellion: against God's sovereignty and against God's people Israel. The dual form intensifies the charge, suggesting compounded guilt. Paired with "Pekod" (another symbolic name), "Merathaim" exemplifies Jeremiah's technique of making names preach, turning geography into sermon material announcing Babylon's coming judgment for accumulated sin. BABYLON CITY EMPIRE

en: Merataym | es: Merataym | fr: [מרתים] | de: [מרתים] Jer 50:21

מַשׁ H4851 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Mash, one of Aram's sons listed in the Table of Nations as an Aramean ancestor or people group

Mash appears in Genesis 10:23 among Aram's descendants in the Table of Nations, the ethnographic genealogy explaining human diversity after the Flood. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 1:17 reads "Meshech" instead, showing textual variation. Scholars debate identification: some suggest "Mash" refers to the region of Masius north of Nisibis (between Armenia and Mesopotamia), while others note an Assyrian "Maš" in the Syro-Arabic desert. The Septuagint reads "Mosoch," adding to the confusion. What's clear is that Mash represents an Aramean tribal or regional entity—part of the genealogical framework situating Israel among the nations, all descended from Noah through Shem.

(1×) A personal or ethnic name designating one of Aram's sons in the Table of Nations (Genesis 10:23), representing an Aramean people group or region. The parallel in 1 Chronicles 1:17 reads "Meshech," indicating textual variation or uncertainty. Proposed identifications include the region Mas-ius north of Nisibis (between Armenia and Mesopotamia) or the Assyrian "Maš" in the Syro-Arabic desert, though the evidence remains uncertain. The Septuagint's "Mosoch" adds another layer of complexity. Functionally, Mash represents an Aramean tribal entity within the genealogical framework explaining post-Flood ethnography and Israel's place among the nations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Mash | es: y-Mash | fr: et-Mash | de: und-Masch Gen 10:23

מֵשָׁא H4852 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (1×)
Mesha, a geographic location marking the eastern boundary of the Joktanite territory
Mesha appears in Genesis 10:30, defining one edge of the region settled by Joktan's descendants: "Their territory extended from Mesha in the direction of Sephar to the hill country of the east." This passage attempts to locate the Arabian tribes descended from Joktan, Shem's line. Identification remains uncertain—proposals include the district of Mesene on the Persian Gulf or the Assyrian "Maš" in the Syro-Arabic desert. The Septuagint reads "Masse," suggesting even ancient translators were uncertain. What matters is the geographic function: Mesha marks a recognizable boundary point, anchoring these Arabian tribes in real space and establishing the Semitic family's expansive reach across the Near East.

(1×) A place name marking the boundary of Joktanite (Arabian) territory in Genesis 10:30: "from Mesha in the direction of Sephar." The location remains uncertain—proposed identifications include Mesene on the Persian Gulf or the Assyrian "Maš" in the Syro-Arabic desert. The Septuagint's "Masse" indicates ancient uncertainty. The name functions geographically to define the extent of Arabian tribal settlements descending from Joktan (Shem's line). While exact identification eludes us, the boundary description situates these Semitic peoples within the ancient Near East's ethnographic landscape, showing the wide dispersion of Shem's descendants. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7999 WITH 4 SENSES
en: from-Mesha | es: desde-Meshá | fr: de-Mesha | de: von-Mescha Gen 10:30

מַשָּׂא H4853a Prep-l / N-ms (38×)
Load, burden, carrying; also prophetic oracle, tribute, or lifting up of desire — from the root נָשָׂא 'to lift, bear'
Derived from the root נָשָׂא (to lift, carry), מַשָּׂא covers a surprisingly wide semantic range unified by the idea of 'something lifted or borne.' Its most common use is the concrete physical load carried by an animal or person — the burden on a donkey (Exod 23:5) or the loads forbidden on the Sabbath (Jer 17:21; Neh 13:15). It extends naturally to figurative burdens: people as a weight to bear (Num 11:11; Deut 1:12), sins pressing down like a heavy load (Ps 38:5), or the obligation of tribute (2 Chr 17:11). The Spanish 'carga' and French 'charge' consistently map to the burden sense, while English splits between 'burden,' 'load,' and 'oracle.' In Proverbs 30:1 and 31:1 it introduces a prophetic utterance — perhaps originally a 'weighty word' laid upon the speaker. In Ezekiel 24:25 it denotes the yearning or lifting of the soul's desire, a rare but evocative extension.

1. physical burden or load (30×) The dominant sense: a tangible weight or load borne by animals (donkeys in Exod 23:5, mules in 2 Kgs 5:17, camels in 2 Kgs 8:9), or carried by people in contexts like the Levitical transport of the tabernacle (Num 4:15, 24, 27). This extends figuratively to the 'burden' of caring for people (Num 11:11; Deut 1:12), being a weight upon someone (2 Sam 15:33; Job 7:20), and the crushing load of iniquity (Ps 38:5). The Sabbath prohibition on carrying loads (Jer 17:21-27; Neh 13:15, 19) shows its everyday concreteness. Spanish 'carga' and French 'charge/fardeau' consistently render this sense. BURDENS AND LOADS
en: a-burden, a-load-of, burden | es: carga, carga-de, carga-de-ellos | fr: burden-de, charge, fardeau | de: Last, [משׂא], burden-von Exod 23:5; Num 4:15; Num 4:19; Num 4:24; Num 4:27

2. act of carrying or transport (4×) The verbal-noun sense emphasizing the act of carrying or transporting rather than the object carried. This appears in specialized liturgical contexts: 1 Chronicles 15:22, 27 describe the 'carrying' (or possibly 'lifting up' of song) during the procession of the Ark, and 2 Chronicles 20:25 describes carrying away spoil. The Spanish translations interestingly split between 'carga' (burden) and 'canto' (song) in the Chronicles passages, reflecting an ancient ambiguity about whether the Levitical מַשָּׂא refers to bearing the Ark or leading the singing. BURDENS AND LOADS
en: carrying, in-the-carrying, the-carrying | es: carga, del-canto, en-el-canto | fr: charge, der-charge, in-charge | de: [במשׂא], [המשׂא], [משׂא] 1Chr 15:22; 1Chr 15:27; 2Chr 20:25

3. prophetic oracle or utterance (2×) A prophetic 'oracle' or solemn utterance, appearing in Proverbs 30:1 and 31:1 to introduce the words of Agur and King Lemuel's mother. English uniformly renders 'oracle'; Spanish uses 'profecia.' The semantic link to 'burden' may be that the prophetic word is 'laid upon' or 'lifted up by' the speaker — a weighty message from God that presses upon the prophet. This sense is far more common in the related entry I. מַשָּׂא (the prophetic formula), but these two Proverbs occurrences belong here under II. מַשָּׂא. NEWS AND MESSAGES
en: an-oracle, the-oracle | es: la-profecía, profecía | fr: le-משׂא ,המשׂא | de: [המשׂא], [משׂא] Prov 30:1; Prov 31:1

4. tribute or imposed obligation (1×) A compulsory levy or tribute — the 'load' imposed on subject peoples. In 2 Chronicles 17:11, the Philistines and Arabians bring tribute to Jehoshaphat. The metaphor is transparent: taxation is a burden placed upon the shoulders of the obligated. All four sampled languages render this with their standard burden word (English 'load,' Spanish 'carga,' French 'charge'), showing no special lexicalization for the fiscal extension. BURDENS AND LOADS
en: load | es: carga | fr: charge | de: [משׂא] 2Chr 17:11

5. yearning or lifting of desire (1×) A rare sense denoting the yearning or 'lifting up' of the soul's desire. In Ezekiel 24:25, God describes the temple as 'the lifting up of their soul' — the object toward which their whole being strains. English renders 'yearning'; Spanish 'elevacion' (elevation) captures the vertical metaphor of the root נָשָׂא. This sense bridges physical lifting and emotional aspiration, a poignant extension found only here. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: yearning-of- | es: elevación-de | fr: de-porte! | de: [משׂא] Ezek 24:25

מַשָּׂא H4853b Art / N-ms (27×)
oracle, prophetic burden — a solemn divine pronouncement, usually introducing judgment oracles against nations Massa (homonym III, distinct from the common noun meaning 'load') is a technical prophetic term introducing oracular speech, appearing 27 times almost exclusively as a superscription heading. Isaiah deploys it most extensively: 'the oracle concerning Babylon' (Isa 13:1), Moab (15:1), Damascus (17:1), Egypt (19:1), the wilderness of the sea (21:1), Dumah (21:11), Arabia (21:13), the valley of vision (22:1), and Tyre (23:1). Nahum opens with 'the oracle concerning Nineveh' (Nah 1:1), Habakkuk introduces his book as 'the oracle that the prophet saw' (Hab 1:1), and Zechariah and Malachi use the extended formula 'the oracle of the word of YHWH' (Zech 9:1; 12:1; Mal 1:1). Jeremiah 23:33-40 contains a famous pun: the people ask 'what is the massa of YHWH?' and God retorts 'you are the massa' — playing on 'oracle' and 'burden.'

oracle, prophetic burden (27×) A solemn prophetic pronouncement or oracle, typically functioning as a superscription introducing judgment speech against a foreign nation. Dominates Isaiah's collection of oracles against the nations (Isa 13:1; 15:1; 17:1; 19:1; 21:1, 11, 13; 22:1; 23:1). Also introduces Nahum (Nah 1:1), Habakkuk (Hab 1:1), and the late prophetic formula 'oracle of the word of YHWH' (Zech 9:1; 12:1; Mal 1:1). Jeremiah 23:33-38 exploits the homonymic overlap with 'burden' in a devastating pun. The earliest narrative use applies it to God's pronouncement against Ahab's dynasty (2 Kgs 9:25). BURDENS AND LOADS
en: An-oracle, Oracle, burden | es: Carga, Carga-de, Oráculo-de | fr: de-porte!, oracle | de: Last 2Kgs 9:25; 2Chr 24:27; Isa 13:1; Isa 14:28; Isa 15:1

מַשָּׂא H4854 N-proper-ms (2×)
Massa, an Ishmaelite tribe and territory, also associated with King Lemuel Massa appears as both an Ishmaelite tribal name and a geographical designation. As a 'son' of Ishmael in Genesis and Chronicles, Massa represents one of the twelve Ishmaelite tribes. Ancient sources identify this group with the North Arabian region of Masʾu. The name surfaces again in Proverbs 31:1 as the realm of King Lemuel, suggesting either a connection to the same Arabian territory or a wordplay on the term meaning 'burden' or 'oracle.'

(2×) The personal and geographical name appears in Genesis 25:14 and 1 Chronicles 1:30 within the genealogy of Ishmael's descendants. Translations consistently transliterate the name (Masa, Massa), recognizing it as a proper noun referring to an Ishmaelite tribe and possibly the Arabian region where they settled. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: Masa, and-Massa | es: Masa, y-Massa | fr: charge, et-Massa | de: [משא], und-Massa Gen 25:14; 1Chr 1:30

מַשָּׁא H4855 Conj-w / N-msc (3×)

Lending, debt, or the practice of charging interest (usury)

This term appears exclusively in Nehemiah's reforms, addressing the economic oppression of fellow Jews through lending practices. While some translations render it as 'burden' or 'debt,' the context concerns loans and interest-taking. Nehemiah confronts the nobles for exacting interest from poor Israelites, demanding they restore the 'lending' or usurious practices. The term captures both the act of lending and the burden such loans imposed when combined with interest, violating covenant kinship obligations.

(3×) Lending on interest or the debt burden created thereby. Nehemiah 5:7 recounts Nehemiah's rebuke: 'You are exacting interest, each from his brother'—using this term for the oppressive lending practice. Verse 10 continues: 'Let us abandon this lending [on interest].' In 10:31 (10:32 Hebrew) the people pledge to 'forego the exaction of every debt'—renouncing usurious practices. The French 'charge' and Spanish 'carga' suggest burden, while context makes clear this burden arises from lending at interest. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: and-the-debt-of, lending, the-lending | es: carga, la-carga, y-deuda-de | fr: [המשא], charge, et-charge | de: [המשא], [ומשא], [משא] Neh 5:7; Neh 5:10; Neh 10:31

מַשָּׂא H4856 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

Lifting up or regard, specifically the showing of partiality or favoritism in judgment

(1×) An idiomatic phrase meaning "lifting up of faces," denoting partiality, favoritism, or showing regard to persons based on status rather than justice. In 2 Chronicles 19:7, Jehoshaphat instructs judges that God shows no partiality—literally no "lifting up of faces." The metaphor pictures a judge examining someone's face (considering their social standing, wealth, or appearance) rather than judging impartially. Paired with "taking bribes," the phrase emphasizes judicial corruption: showing favor to the powerful or wealthy. The idiom highlights justice's requirement to be blind to status, judging only on merit and truth, reflecting God's own impartial character. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: and-lifting-of | es: ni-acepción-de | fr: et-charge | de: [ומשא] 2Chr 19:7

מַשְׁאָב H4857 N-mp (1×)

Watering-places or drawing-places, locations where water is drawn and animals are watered

This rare plural noun appears in Judges 5:11, in the Song of Deborah celebrating Israel's victory: "At the watering places, there they recount the righteous deeds of the LORD." The term denotes places where water is drawn—wells, springs, or troughs where people and animals gather. These become sites of communal memory and storytelling. After the oppression of Jabin and Sisera, Israelites can once again safely gather at watering places without fear of raiding parties. The recovery of these everyday spaces—where people meet, draw water, exchange news, and tell stories—signals the restoration of normal life and security. Watering places become stages for celebrating God's deliverance.

(1×) Plural noun denoting watering-places or drawing-places—sites where water is drawn from wells or springs and where animals are watered. Judges 5:11 places these locations in parallel with archers' haunts, emphasizing they were vulnerable spots during Canaanite oppression. After Deborah and Barak's victory, people can safely gather at "the watering places" to recount God's righteous acts. These sites functioned as communal gathering spots—not just for hydration but for social interaction and storytelling. Their recovery from enemy threat symbolizes the restoration of normal life, where daily routines and collective memory can flourish safely. WATER

en: -the-watering-places | es: abrevaderos | fr: -le-abreuvoir-places | de: -der-watering-places Judg 5:11

מַשָּׂאָה H4858 N-fs (1×)

The burden or uplifted cloud, referring to the heavy, rising mass of smoke or cloud indicating divine presence

This noun appears in Isaiah 30:27, in a theophanic vision of God's coming judgment: "Behold, the name of the LORD comes from afar, burning with his anger, and in thick rising smoke; his lips are full of fury, and his tongue is like a devouring fire." The phrase "thick rising smoke" (or "heavy uplifted cloud") describes the visual manifestation of divine presence and wrath—a massive, billowing cloud rising upward. The imagery recalls Sinai's smoking mountain and pillars of cloud that led Israel. Here, however, the cloud signals not guidance but judgment. The term emphasizes both weight ("heavy") and upward motion ("uplifted"), creating an image of overwhelming, ascending power.

(1×) Denotes an uplifted or rising burden, specifically a heavy cloud or thick smoke rising upward, used in Isaiah 30:27 as theophanic imagery. The phrase "heavy uplifted cloud" (or "thick rising smoke") describes the visible manifestation of God's wrathful presence approaching from afar. The term combines weight (burden, heaviness) with upward motion (lifted, rising), evoking the massive, billowing cloud characteristic of divine appearances. This recalls Exodus theophanies—Sinai's smoke and the pillar of cloud—but here signals judgment rather than guidance. The noun captures both the visual phenomenon and its theological import: overwhelming divine power made visible. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: the-burden | es: carga | fr: [משאה] | de: [משאה] Isa 30:27

מַשְׁאָה H4859 N-fsc (2×)

loan, debt, or pledge; a financial obligation given on security

This legal-economic term appears in contexts regulating loans and pledges. Deuteronomy uses it in legislation protecting the dignity of debtors—even when lending to a neighbor, one must not enter his house to seize the pledge. Proverbs warns against becoming surety for debts, using the same root to describe those who pledge security for others' financial obligations. The word captures the intersection of economics and ethics in ancient Israelite society.

(2×) Found in Deuteronomy 24:10 (regulating the taking of pledges) and Proverbs 22:26 (warning against pledging for debts). The multilingual glosses reveal the semantic field of debt and lending: English 'loan', Spanish 'préstamo'/'deudas', French 'dette', all pointing to financial obligations secured by collateral or personal guarantee. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-debts, loan-of | es: deudas, préstamo-de | fr: dette, loan-de | de: [משאות], loan-von Deut 24:10; Prov 22:26

מַשְׁאוֹן H4860 Prep-b / N-ms (1×)

Guile or dissimulation, the deceptive covering of true intentions with false appearances

This noun appears in Proverbs 26:26: "Though his hatred is covered with guile, his wickedness will be exposed in the assembly." The term denotes deceit, dissimulation, or the false front that conceals true malice. Someone may smile and speak kindly while harboring murderous hatred—their guile creates a socially acceptable mask. But Proverbs insists such deception cannot last: eventually the assembly (public community) will see through the pretense and expose the underlying wickedness. The term may derive from a root related to usury or lending, suggesting the idea of false weights or deceptive measures—making things appear other than they are.

(1×) Denotes guile, dissimulation, or deceptive concealment—the practice of hiding true intentions (especially hatred or malice) beneath false appearances. Proverbs 26:26 warns that though hatred hides itself "with guile," wickedness will eventually be exposed publicly. The term emphasizes deliberate deception: creating a false front to mask malicious intent. One etymology connects it to lending or usury, suggesting false measures or deceptive dealings. The concept is social and psychological: guile allows someone to operate within community norms while plotting harm, but the proverb affirms that truth emerges—public assembly will unmask the deceiver. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: by-guile | es: con-engaño | fr: dans-במשאון | de: [במשאון] Prov 26:26

מִשְׁאָל H4861 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Mishal, a Levitical city in the territory of Asher

Mishal was a town allocated to the tribe of Asher and designated as a Levitical city. It appears in both the initial tribal allotment (Joshua 19) and the list of cities given to the Levites (Joshua 21). The parallel passage in Chronicles records the same city under the variant spelling Mashal. Ancient versions show various transliterations, reflecting the minor spelling variations common with place names across manuscript traditions.

(2×) The place name occurs in Joshua 19:26 and 21:30, with a parallel in 1 Chronicles 6:59 (there spelled Mashal). All major translations simply transliterate the name (Mishal, Misal), recognizing it as a geographical proper noun referring to a specific Levitical city in Asher's territory. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mishal, and-Mishal | es: Misal, y-Misal | fr: Mishal, et-Mishal | de: Mishal, und-Mishal Josh 19:26; Josh 21:30

מִשְׁאָלָה H4862 N-fpc (2×)

requests, petitions, or desires; heartfelt appeals to God

This plural noun appears exclusively in the Psalms, expressing the deep longings and petitions of the faithful directed toward God. Psalm 37 promises that those who delight in the Lord will receive the desires of their heart, while Psalm 20 expresses confidence that God will fulfill all one's petitions. The term carries warm relational overtones—not merely formal requests but the intimate desires shared between the faithful and their covenant Lord.

(2×) Found in Psalm 20:5 and 37:4, both in contexts of God granting what is asked. The cross-linguistic evidence (English 'desires'/'petitions', Spanish 'peticiones', French 'désir') shows the word encompasses both formal requests and deeper heart-level longings, emphasizing the personal dimension of prayer and divine response. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: desires-of, your-petitions | es: peticiones-de, tus-peticiones | fr: de-désir | de: dein-petitions, desires-von Ps 20:5; Ps 37:4

מִשְׁאֶרֶת H4863 N-fpc / 3mp (4×)

misharot — kneading bowls or troughs, household vessels for preparing bread dough

This feminine noun denotes kneading bowls or troughs, the household vessels in which dough was mixed and prepared before baking. Though traditionally connected to the word for 'leaven,' this derivation is uncertain. These vessels appear prominently in Exodus narratives—in the plague of frogs that invaded them, and in the hasty exodus when Israel carried their dough out of Egypt in their kneading bowls. They also feature in Deuteronomy's blessings and curses, symbolizing household provision and daily sustenance. As essential cooking implements, kneading bowls represented the basic necessities of domestic life.

(4×) Kneading bowls or troughs used for preparing bread dough. Exodus 8:3 describes the plague of frogs invading Egyptian homes, entering even 'your kneading bowls' alongside bedrooms and ovens —emphasizing the thoroughness of the plague. Exodus 12:34 depicts the Israelites in their hasty departure carrying 'their kneading bowls (mishʾrotam) bound in their clothes,' with unleavened dough still inside. Deuteronomy 28:5 and 17 place 'your basket and your kneading bowl' in parallel, representing agricultural bounty and household food preparation—blessed when obedient, cursed when disobedient. These vessels thus symbolize daily provision and the fundamental rhythms of domestic life. TABLE FURNITURE

en: and-in-your-kneading-bowls, and-your-kneading-bowl, their-kneading-bowls | es: sus-artesas, y-en-tus-artesas, y-tu-artesa | fr: et-dans-ton-kneading-coupes, et-ton-kneading-bowl, leur-kneading-coupes | de: ihr-kneading-Schalen, und-dein-kneading-bowl, und-in-dein-kneading-Schalen Exod 8:3; Exod 12:34; Deut 28:5; Deut 28:17

מַשְׂאֵת H4864 N-fs (16×)

A rising up; hence a portion or gift, a fire-signal, a tax or tribute, a burden or oracle, or the lifting of hands.

Mas'et derives from the root nasa' ('to lift, carry') and preserves a remarkable range of meanings all unified by the idea of something raised up. A column of smoke rising from Gibeah is a mas'et — a fire-signal (Judg 20:38). Portions of food 'lifted' from Joseph's table and sent to his brothers are mas'ot (Gen 43:34). A tax 'raised' from the people is a mas'et (2 Chr 24:6). Even a prophetic oracle — a 'burden' lifted upon the prophet's shoulders — falls under this same word (Lam 2:14). The multilingual evidence is fascinating: Spanish splits the range into columna ('column' for the smoke signal), porcion ('portion' for the gift), and tributo ('tribute' for the tax), while French offrande ('offering') recurs across several senses, hinting at an underlying unity that the Romance languages struggle to capture in a single term.

1. portion, gift, present (7×) A portion, gift, or present — the most frequent sense at seven occurrences. Joseph sends portions (mas'ot) from his own table to his brothers, with Benjamin receiving five times as much (Gen 43:34). Esther distributes gifts at her coronation feast (Esth 2:18). The underlying image is of food or goods 'lifted up' and carried to a recipient. Spanish porcion and German Portionen both select gift/allotment vocabulary, and the plural mas'ot in Genesis confirms that these are countable, concrete portions rather than abstract 'liftings.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-portion-of, and-a-gift, gifts | es: de-porciones-de, porciones, porción-de | fr: [ומשאת], [משאותיכם], [משאת] | de: Portionen, [ומשאת], [משאותיכם] Gen 43:34; 2Sam 11:8; Esth 2:18

2. tax, tribute, levy (3×) A tax, tribute, or compulsory levy — three occurrences (2 Chr 24:6, 9; Amos 5:11), all in contexts of institutionalized collection. Joash reinstates 'the tax of Moses' for the tabernacle (2 Chr 24:6); Amos condemns those who exact 'levies of grain' from the poor. The Phoenician/Punic cognate mas'at meaning 'payment, tax' (noted by BDB) confirms this as a well-established Semitic fiscal term. Spanish tributo and French offrande both gesture toward obligatory contribution, though the latter softens the compulsory edge. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-tribute-of-, tax-of | es: tributo-de, y-tributo-de- | fr: [משאת], et-offrande | de: [ומשאת], [משאת] 2Chr 24:6; 2Chr 24:9; Amos 5:11

3. signal, fire-signal column (3×) A signal, specifically a rising column of smoke or fire — three occurrences concentrated in the Gibeah narrative (Judg 20:38, 40) and Jeremiah 6:1. The appointed signal for the Israelite ambush at Gibeah is a mas'et of smoke rising from the city. Spanish columna de humo ('column of smoke') and senyal ('signal') both capture the visual-communicative function. The etymology is transparent: the signal is literally 'that which rises up' from the burning city. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-signal, rising-of, signal | es: Y-la-columna, columna-de, señal | fr: [משאת], et-le-signal, levant-du | de: [משאת], rising-von, und-der-signal Judg 20:38; Judg 20:40; Jer 6:1

4. burden, prophetic oracle (2×) A burden or prophetic oracle — two occurrences (Lam 2:14; Zeph 3:18). In Lamentations, false prophets have seen 'worthless oracles' (mas'ot) for Jerusalem — using the same word that elsewhere means 'burden' (cf. the related massa'). Zephaniah 3:18 speaks of those who bear 'the burden of reproach.' Spanish carga ('burden') and oraculos ('oracles') both appear, reflecting the double sense. The prophetic-oracle meaning likely developed from the idea of a weighty message 'lifted up' and proclaimed, closely related to the noun massa' from the same root. BURDENS AND LOADS en: a-burden, oracles | es: carga, oráculos-de | fr: [משאות], offrande | de: [משאות], [משאת] Lam 2:14; Zeph 3:18

5. lifting up, raising (1×) The lifting up of hands in prayer — a single occurrence at Psalm 141:2, where the psalmist asks that 'the lifting up of my hands' be as the evening sacrifice. Spanish alzar ('to raise') preserves the root's core physical meaning with perfect transparency. This is the most etymologically primitive sense of the noun: the simple act of raising, here ritualized into a gesture of worship. French offrande ('offering') interprets the gesture by its purpose rather than its physical form, but the Hebrew retains the kinetic image of upraised palms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: lifting-up-of | es: alzar-de | fr: de-offrande | de: lifting-up-of Ps 141:2

מִשְׁבְּצֹת H4865 Prep-m / N-fpc (9×)
Filigree settings or plaited gold mountings for gemstones, used in the priestly vestments of the tabernacle.
Referring to ornamental gold settings – plaited or chequered metalwork designed to hold precious stones securely – this noun appears almost exclusively in the detailed instructions for the high priest's ephod and breastpiece (Exod 28-29, 39). The craftsmanship involved interweaving gold thread into basket-like frames that cradled each gem. German 'Einfassungen' (encasements) and Spanish 'engastes' (stone settings) both capture the functional sense: these are not mere decorations but precision mountings. A beautiful extension appears in Psalm 45:14, where the royal bride's garment is described as woven in similar gold chequerwork, drawing a poetic line from priestly splendor to royal adornment.

settings, filigree mountings (9×) Gold filigree settings or plaited mountings used to secure gemstones in the priestly garments. The eight occurrences in Exodus (28:11, 13, 14, 25; 39:6, 13, 16, 18) describe the technical metalwork of the ephod and breastpiece, consistently paired with 'gold' (zahav). Spanish 'engastes' and German 'Einfassungen' both emphasize the encasing function. The single occurrence in Psalm 45:14 extends the image metaphorically to describe royal clothing wrought in gold chequerwork, linking liturgical craft to regal beauty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: of-woven-gold, settings-of, the-settings | es: de-engastes-de, engastes-de, los-engastes | fr: de-ouvrage, le-montures, montures-de | de: Einfassungen-von, der-Einfassungen, von-woven-Gold Exod 28:11; Exod 28:13; Exod 28:14; Exod 28:25; Exod 39:6

מַשְׁבֵּר H4866 Prep-b / N-msc (3×)
The opening of the womb, the moment when birth breaks forth
This vivid term describes the critical moment in childbirth when the baby reaches the birth canal opening but delivery is not yet complete. Both Kings and Isaiah use identical language: 'children have come to the point of birth, but there is no strength to give birth'—a metaphor for a crisis where the moment of deliverance has arrived but there is no power to complete it. Hosea uses it to describe the foolishness of Ephraim delaying 'at the opening of the womb.' The image is of being stuck at the threshold, unable to push through.

(3×) The mouth or opening of the womb at the moment of birth. Second Kings 19:3 and Isaiah 37:3 share the identical phrase: 'children have come to the birth-opening, but there is no strength to bring them forth'—depicting utter helplessness in a national crisis. Hosea 13:13 warns: 'he is an unwise son, for at the proper time he does not present himself at the opening of the womb'—describing Ephraim's fatal delay. The cross-linguistic glosses (birth-opening, abertura, ouverture) capture this threshold moment. WOMB AND BELLY
en: at-breaking-forth-of, birth-opening, the-point-of-birth | es: abertura, el-parto, en-el-lugar-de-nacimiento-de | fr: [משבר], birth-ouvrant, ouverture | de: [במשבר], [משבר], birth-oeffnend 2Kgs 19:3; Isa 37:3; Hos 13:13

מִשְׁבָּר H4867 N-mpc / 2ms (5×)
breaker, crashing wave; used literally of ocean surf and figuratively of overwhelming calamity
A masculine noun meaning 'breaker' or 'crashing wave,' always appearing in the plural. Psalm 93:4 uses it literally for the majestic breakers of the sea as evidence of God's supreme power. More often it serves as a powerful metaphor for overwhelming trouble: the breakers of death in 2 Samuel 22:5, or God's own waves sweeping over the psalmist (Ps 42:7; 88:7). Jonah 2:3 memorably combines it with 'your waves,' linking the ocean's literal force to divine sovereignty.

(5×) Breakers or crashing waves of the sea, used both literally and as a figure for overwhelming distress sent or permitted by God. In Psalm 93:4 the term appears alongside 'mighty waters' to exalt God's majesty above the ocean's power. Figuratively, 2 Samuel 22:5 pairs it with death, while Psalms 42:7 and 88:7 and Jonah 2:3 use the second-person suffix ('your breakers') to portray calamities as divinely directed. French 'vague' and Spanish 'olas/rompientes' both capture the crashing-wave imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Your-breakers, breakers-of, the-breakers-of | es: olas-de-, olas-de-ti, rompientes-de | fr: breakers-de, de-vague, vague | de: [משבריך], breakers-von, dein-breakers 2Sam 22:5; Ps 42:7; Ps 88:7; Ps 93:4; Jonah 2:3

מִשְׁבָּת H4868 N-fpc / 2ms (1×)
Downfall or cessation, the state of ruin, destruction, or complete cessation of normal life
This rare noun appears in Lamentations 1:7, where Jerusalem reflects on her calamity: "Jerusalem remembers in the days of her affliction and wandering all the precious things that were hers from days of old. When her people fell into the hand of the foe, and there was none to help her, her enemies looked at her and mocked at her downfall." The term denotes cessation, collapse, or complete ruin—the end of Jerusalem's former glory and security. Some ancient versions read "captivity" (shebitah) instead of "downfall" (mishbatah), but the sense remains: Jerusalem's enemies gloat over her catastrophic reversal. The word captures not just physical destruction but the cessation of everything that defined her existence.

(1×) Denotes downfall, cessation, or complete destruction—the state of total collapse and ruin. Lamentations 1:7 uses this term for Jerusalem's catastrophe: enemies mock at "her downfall" (or "her cessation"). The noun emphasizes comprehensive ruin: not merely damage but the complete end of former security, glory, and normal life. The Septuagint reads "her dwelling" (katoimesia), suggesting textual uncertainty, and some propose "her captivity" (shebitah) as the original reading. Regardless, the concept is total reversal—what was is no more. The term captures the existential dimension of destruction: the cessation of identity and purpose, not just material loss. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY en: her-downfall | es: su-destrucción | fr: sa-cessation | de: [משבתה] Lam 1:7

מִשְׂגָּב H4869a N-msc / 1cs (16×)
A high refuge, stronghold — an elevated place of safety, used overwhelmingly as a metaphor for God as protector.
Denotes an elevated, inaccessible fortress or refuge, derived from the root sagav ('to be high, exalted'). While it can describe a physical stronghold — Isaiah calls Moab's fortified walls a misgav that will be brought low (Isa 25:12) — its dominant use is metaphorical: the Psalms apply it to God as the believer's high refuge no fewer than twelve times. The word appears in dense clusters of trust language alongside terms like 'rock,' 'fortress,' and 'shield,' most notably in Psalm 18:2 (= 2 Sam 22:3) and the refrain of Psalms 46 and 59. Its doubling in Psalm 9:9 — 'The LORD is a misgav for the oppressed, a misgav in times of trouble' — makes it a signature term of the Psalter's theology of divine protection. Spanish 'refugio-alto/baluarte,' French 'citadelle,' and German 'Festung' all capture the sense of elevated security.

high refuge, fortress (16×) An elevated stronghold or high refuge, used literally for a physical fortress (Isa 25:12; 33:16) but overwhelmingly as a metaphor for God's protective shelter. The Psalms employ it as a title for God in trust poetry: 'The LORD is a high refuge for the oppressed' (Ps 9:9), and it appears alongside 'rock,' 'fortress,' and 'shield' in David's thanksgiving (2 Sam 22:3; Ps 18:2). The refrain 'the God of Jacob is our misgav' anchors Psalms 46:7, 11 and echoes through Psalms 59:9, 16–17; 62:2, 6; 94:22; 144:2. Spanish 'refugio-alto/baluarte' and French 'citadelle' reflect the elevated-refuge metaphor. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: a-fortress, a-refuge, a-stronghold | es: baluarte-de, baluarte-mío, como-refugio-alto | fr: [משגב], [משגבו], de-citadelle | de: [משגב], [משגבו], ein-Festung 2Sam 22:3; Ps 9:9; Ps 18:2; Ps 46:7

מִשְׂגָּב H4869b Art / N-ms (1×)

The fortress or stronghold, possibly a place name in Moab or an appellative for a fortified city

This term appears in Jeremiah 48:1, in the prophet's oracle against Moab: "Concerning Moab. Thus says the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel: Woe to Nebo, for it is laid waste; Kiriathaim is put to shame, it is taken; the fortress is put to shame and broken down." The Hebrew "the misgab" could be a proper name (a specific Moabite fortress) or a common noun ("the stronghold"). Some identify it with Kir-Moab, Moab's capital fortress. Either way, the term emphasizes fortification and strength—precisely what Moab loses in judgment. The definite article suggests a well-known stronghold, whose fall symbolizes Moab's complete defeat.

(1×) Either a place name designating a specific fortress in Moab or an appellative meaning "the stronghold/fortress." Jeremiah 48:1 mentions "the misgab" in an oracle against Moab, listing it alongside Nebo and Kiriathaim as sites facing destruction. Some scholars identify this with Kir-Moab (Moab's fortified capital), while others read it as a common noun: "the fortress." The definite article suggests a recognized, prominent stronghold. Functionally, whether proper name or appellative, the term emphasizes military strength and fortification—which makes its predicted fall more devastating. The fortress that should provide security becomes a symbol of comprehensive defeat. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: the-fortress | es: la-fortaleza | fr: [המשגב] | de: [המשגב] Jer 48:1

מִשְׂגֶּה H4870 N-ms (1×)

A mistake or error, particularly an unintentional oversight in financial matters

This noun appears in Genesis 43:12, when Jacob instructs his sons to return to Egypt with double the money: "Take double the money with you. Carry back with you the money that was returned in the mouth of your sacks. Perhaps it was a mistake." The term denotes an unintentional error or oversight—not deliberate theft or fraud but an honest mistake. Jacob, ever cautious and diplomatic, considers that the Egyptian steward might have accidentally returned their money. Acknowledging potential error shows good faith and prevents misunderstanding. The word emphasizes the unintentional nature: something gone wrong without malice, which can be corrected through honesty and restitution.

(1×) Denotes a mistake, error, or unintentional oversight—something wrong without malicious intent. Genesis 43:12 uses this in Jacob's instructions: return the money found in their sacks, "perhaps it was a mistake." The term emphasizes the non-deliberate nature of error, distinguishing honest mistakes from intentional fraud or theft. Jacob's diplomatic acknowledgment of possible error shows good faith: he doesn't assume theft but allows for administrative oversight. The noun reflects ancient Near Eastern commercial ethics: mistakes happen, but honest people acknowledge and rectify them. Restitution of potential errors maintains trust and prevents misunderstanding in cross-cultural business dealings. ERROR INADVERTENT SIN

en: an-error | es: error | fr: un-erreur | de: ein-Versehen Gen 43:12

מָשָׁה H4871 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms / 1cs (3×)

To draw or pull out, especially from water or danger

This rare verb appears only three times, twice in parallel passages and once in the naming of Moses. Exodus 2:10 uses it to explain the name Moses (Moshe): 'Because I drew him out of the water.' The verb connects to the miraculous rescue of the infant from the Nile. The two Psalm/Samuel parallels use it for divine deliverance: 'He drew me out of many waters'—God pulling the psalmist from overwhelming danger. The imagery is of extraction, pulling someone from engulfing peril to safety.

(3×) To draw out or pull from danger, particularly water. Exodus 2:10 explains Moses' name: 'Because I drew him out of the water'—Pharaoh's daughter rescuing the infant from the Nile basket. Second Samuel 22:17 and Psalm 18:16 (parallel texts) declare: 'He sent from on high, he drew me out; he drew me out of many waters'—God delivering from overwhelming threat. The Spanish 'saqué' and French 'tirer' both mean 'to pull out,' confirming this sense of extraction from peril. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: He-draws-me, I-drew-him, he-drew-me | es: lo-saqué, me-sacó | fr: Il-tire-moi, Je-tira-lui, tirer | de: He-draws-mich, er-drew-mich, ich-zog-ihn Exod 2:10; 2Sam 22:17; Ps 18:16

מֹשֶׁה H4872 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (766×)

Moses — the lawgiver, prophet, and leader who brought Israel out of Egypt

Mosheh stands as the towering figure of the Torah, appearing 766 times from Exodus through the end of the Hebrew Bible. His name, likely derived from the Egyptian mes ('child, born of'), was reinterpreted by Pharaoh's daughter as 'drawn out of the water' (Exod 2:10). As mediator of the Sinai covenant, Moses occupies a unique role: prophet, lawgiver, intercessor, and shepherd of a nation. The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'Mosheh,' French 'Moise,' German 'Mose' — shows universal recognition of this singular proper noun, with no semantic splitting across any language tradition.

Moses (proper name) (766×) The proper name Mosheh (Moses), referring exclusively to the son of Amram and Jochebed of the tribe of Levi, who led Israel out of Egypt and mediated the covenant at Sinai. All 766 occurrences denote this one individual. Prepositional variants (to-Moses, from-Moses, by-Moses) reflect syntactic framing rather than any semantic distinction. MOSES PROPHET LAWGIVER

en: Moses | es: Mosheh | fr: Moïse | de: Mose Exod 2:10; Exod 2:11; Exod 2:14; Exod 2:15

מֹשֶׁה H4873 N-proper-ms (1×)

Moses (Aramaic form), the great lawgiver and prophet who led Israel from Egypt

This is the Aramaic form of Moses' name, appearing in Ezra 6:18: "And they set the priests in their divisions and the Levites in their divisions, for the service of God at Jerusalem, as it is written in the Book of Moses." The reference grounds post-exilic temple organization in Mosaic authority—the Torah's prescriptions remain binding after the exile. Using the Aramaic form reflects the linguistic context of the Persian period, when Aramaic was the imperial administrative language. Moses functions here not primarily as historical person but as shorthand for authoritative Scripture: "the Book of Moses" means the Pentateuchal law that governs temple service.

(1×) The Aramaic form of Moses' name, appearing in Ezra 6:18 in the phrase "Book of Moses" (the Pentateuch or Torah). The reference establishes Mosaic law as the authoritative basis for post-exilic temple organization—priestly and Levitical divisions must conform to Torah prescriptions. The Aramaic form reflects the linguistic context of Persian-period Judah, where Aramaic served as the imperial administrative language. Moses here represents not just the historical leader but the corpus of authoritative law: citing "Moses" means appealing to Scripture's binding authority. The name functions metonymically: Moses = the Torah = authoritative instruction for covenant community. MOSES PROPHET LAWGIVER

en: Mosheh | es: Mosheh | fr: Moïse | de: Mose Ezra 6:18

מַשָּׁה H4874 N-msc (1×)

A loan or something lent, referring to property or money extended to another with expectation of return

This rare noun appears in Deuteronomy 15:2, in regulations for the sabbatical year: "And this is the manner of the release: every creditor shall release what he has lent to his neighbor. He shall not exact it of his neighbor, his brother, because the LORD's release has been proclaimed." The term specifically denotes a loan—property or money extended from one person to another. The sabbatical release requires creditors to forgive debts every seventh year, preventing permanent impoverishment. The phrase "loan of his hand" (what his hand has lent) emphasizes the creditor's active role in lending. This law embodies covenant community values: generosity, mercy, and prevention of exploitation through cycles of debt.

(1×) Denotes a loan or something lent—money or property extended to another with expectation of return. Deuteronomy 15:2 uses this in sabbatical year legislation: "every possessor of a loan of his hand shall release what he has lent." The phrase "loan of his hand" emphasizes the creditor's active lending. The term appears within Torah's economic justice framework: every seventh year, creditors must cancel debts, preventing cycles of poverty and permanent indebtedness. The noun highlights the relational dimension of lending: not just a financial transaction but an act within covenant community, governed by principles of mercy and mutual responsibility rather than mere legal obligation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: loan-of | es: préstamo-de | fr: loan-de | de: loan-von Deut 15:2

מְשׁוֹאָה H4875 Conj-w / N-fs (3×)

Desolation, devastation, or utter ruin and waste

This noun describes complete devastation—places or lives reduced to wasteland. It appears in poetic pairs with other terms for destruction. Zephaniah's description of the Day of the Lord calls it 'a day of devastation and desolation.' Job uses it twice: once for lives wasted by want and famine 'gnawing the dry ground,' and once for God's voice thundering in 'the desolate waste.' The term evokes emptiness, howling wilderness, the aftermath of total destruction where nothing remains but rubble and silence.

(3×) Desolation or devastation, complete ruin. Zephaniah 1:15 describes the Day of the Lord: 'a day of wrath, a day of distress and anguish, a day of ruin and devastation'—pairing this term with multiple synonyms for destruction. Job 30:3 depicts the wretched 'gnawing the dry ground in the gloom of waste and desolation.' Job 38:27 speaks of God's rain 'to satisfy the waste and desolate land.' The Spanish 'desolación' and French 'désolation' directly translate this sense of utter emptiness. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: and-desolation, and-devastation | es: y-desolación, y-devastación, y-ruina | fr: et-désolation, et-ומשאה | de: [ומשאה], [ומשואה] Job 30:3; Job 38:27; Zeph 1:15

מַשּׁוּאוֹת H4876 Prep-l / N-fp (2×)

ruins, desolation; perpetual devastation (reading uncertain, possibly from שׁוּא 'deception')

This rare feminine plural appears twice in the Psalms, though textual scholars suggest the form may be corrupt. The context in both passages points to devastating ruins or utter desolation. Psalm 73 speaks of the wicked being set in slippery places leading to ruin, while Psalm 74 describes the perpetual ruins of the sanctuary. Many scholars propose reading 'desolations' (from שׁוּא) rather than 'deceptions,' which better fits the vivid imagery of destruction in both contexts.

(2×) Appears in Psalm 73:18 and 74:3, both describing scenes of utter devastation. Despite textual uncertainty about the root, multilingual glosses converge on 'ruins' or 'desolation' (English 'ruins', Spanish 'ruinas', French 'ruine'), suggesting the ancient translators understood this as depicting comprehensive destruction rather than moral deception. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: to-ruins, to-the-perpetual-ruins | es: en-ruinas, hacia-ruinas-de | fr: à-ruine | de: zu-der-perpetual-ruins, zu-ruins Ps 73:18; Ps 74:3

מְשׁוֹבָב H4877 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Meshovav, a Simeonite listed in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles

Meshovav appears once in 1 Chronicles 4:34, within genealogical records of Simeonite clan leaders whose families increased during the divided monarchy period. The name may derive from a root meaning "to turn back" or "restore," though personal names don't always carry active etymological meaning. The Septuagint transliterates as "Mosobab," while the Lucianic tradition interprets it as "epistrefon" (one who turns back), apparently taking it as a participial form. These genealogies served to maintain tribal identity, especially important for Simeon since their territory was absorbed into Judah and they lacked geographic integrity after the settlement period.

(1×) A personal name designating a Simeonite leader in 1 Chronicles 4:34, part of genealogies documenting clan leaders whose families increased significantly. The name possibly derives from a root meaning "to turn back" or "restore," though the etymology remains uncertain. The Septuagint's "Mosobab" simply transliterates, while the Lucianic text interprets it as "epistrefon" (one turning back), suggesting participial force. These Simeonite genealogies preserved tribal identity despite Simeon's eventual absorption into Judah—maintaining lineage records affirmed their distinct heritage even without geographic autonomy. The context emphasizes population growth and expansion during monarchic period. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Meshovav | es: Y-Mesobab | fr: [ומשובב] | de: [ומשובב] 1Chr 4:34

מְשׁוּבָה H4878 Prep-l / N-fsc / 1cs (13×)

Apostasy, backsliding, turning away from God; also used as a quasi-adjective: apostate, faithless (of persons).

Meshuvah comes from the root shuv ('to turn, return'), but with the prefix mem it names the wrong kind of turning — turning back from God rather than toward him. Jeremiah dominates its usage, wielding it like a diagnosis of Judah's spiritual sickness. The prophet speaks of meshuvah nitsachat, 'perpetual apostasy' (Jer 8:5), and pleads with the people to return so God can heal their 'backslidings' (Jer 3:22). Hosea promises that God will heal their meshuvah freely (Hos 14:5). What makes this word especially interesting is its double life: in four occurrences Jeremiah uses it as a virtual adjective — meshuvah Yisrael, 'apostate Israel' (Jer 3:6, 8, 11, 12) — personifying the nation's unfaithfulness as a defining characteristic. Spanish apostasia and German Abkehr both capture the abstract noun, but the adjectival epithet 'faithless one' requires different vocabulary in every target language.

1. apostasy, backsliding (9×) Apostasy, backsliding, waywardness — the abstract noun denoting the act or condition of turning away from God, used of Israel's and Judah's persistent unfaithfulness. Jeremiah stacks the plural meshuvoteikhem ('your backslidings,' Jer 2:19; 3:22; 5:6) to emphasize the repeated and cumulative nature of the nation's defection. Hosea 14:5 promises God will 'heal their apostasy' and love them freely. Proverbs 1:32 warns that the meshuvat petayim — 'the backsliding of the simple' — will destroy them. Spanish apostasia, French apostasie, and German Abkehr all converge on vocabulary of defection and abandonment of faith, confirming the stable theological sense across traditions. APOSTASY BACKSLIDING

en: [ketiv], a-perpetual, and-your-apostasies | es: [sus-apostasías], apostasía, apostasía-de | fr: apostasie, et-apostasie, משובת | de: Abkehr, [למשובתי], [משובת] Prov 1:32; Jer 2:19; Jer 3:22; Jer 5:6

2. apostate (epithet for person) (4×) Used as a quasi-adjectival epithet characterizing a person or community as 'apostate, faithless, backsliding,' functioning in apposition to a proper name. Concentrated in Jeremiah 3:6-12, where the prophet contrasts meshuvah Yisrael ('apostate Israel,' the Northern Kingdom) with bogedah Yehudah ('treacherous Judah'). The rhetorical force depends on the word being heard as a name-like characterization: 'Have you seen what apostate-Israel did?' (Jer 3:6). Spanish la apostata, French the noun apostasie used appositionally, and German Abkehr all struggle to replicate the Hebrew's seamless noun-to-epithet shift, often requiring periphrasis like 'faithless one' or 'the backslider.' APOSTASY BACKSLIDING

en: O-apostate, apostate | es: apóstata, la-apóstata | fr: apostasie | de: Abkehr
Jer 3:6; Jer 3:8; Jer 3:11; Jer 3:12

מְשׁוּגָה H4879 N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

My error or mistake, Job's acknowledgment of potential wrong in his disputation with God

This noun appears in Job 19:4: "And even if it be true that I have erred, my error remains with myself." Job responds to his friends' accusations by hypothetically granting their premise: even if he has erred, his mistake is his own business and doesn't justify their harsh judgment. The term emphasizes personal responsibility but also privacy of conscience—Job's potential errors don't give others license to condemn. Some manuscripts suggest reading "my wandering" (meshugati) instead, but the sense remains: Job insists on autonomy even in admitting the possibility of fault. This reflects his larger argument: relationship with God is direct and personal, not mediated by friends' theological formulas.

(1×) Denotes error or mistake, appearing in Job 19:4 with first-person suffix: "my error." Job hypothetically grants he might have erred, but insists "my error remains with myself"—it's his own concern, not grounds for friends' condemnation. The term emphasizes personal responsibility and the privacy of conscience: even potential mistakes don't authorize external judgment. Some textual traditions suggest "my wandering" (meshugati), but both readings convey Job's insistence on direct relationship with God rather than submitting to friends' theological verdicts. The noun functions rhetorically: Job concedes a premise to undercut his friends' logic—even granting error doesn't justify their harsh treatment. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: my-error | es: mi-error. | fr: mon-משוגתי-moi | de: [משוגתי] Job 19:4

מָשׁוֹט H4880a N-ms (1×)

An oar, the wooden implement used to propel and steer boats through rowing

This noun appears in Ezekiel 27:29, continuing the extended lament over Tyre as a great merchant ship: "And down from their ships come all who handle the oar. The mariners and all the pilots of the sea stand on the land." The prophet pictures Tyre's maritime workers—those who literally "handle the oar"—abandoning ship and coming ashore when the great trading vessel (Tyre herself) founders. The oar represents maritime skill and commerce, Tyre's sources of wealth and pride. When oar-handlers leave their posts, it signals total collapse of the seafaring enterprise. This detail enriches Ezekiel's sustained ship metaphor, making economic catastrophe tangible through nautical imagery.

(1×) Denotes an oar, the wooden paddle or implement used to propel and steer boats by rowing. Ezekiel 27:29 mentions "handlers of the oar" (rowers, mariners) in the extended lament over Tyre depicted as a merchant ship. These oar-handlers abandon ship when Tyre (the vessel) founders—a vivid image of maritime collapse. The oar symbolizes Tyre's seafaring commerce and naval power, the instruments of her wealth and pride. When those who handle oars leave their posts and stand on land, it signals the complete end of maritime enterprise. The term concretizes economic catastrophe through nautical detail, making abstract judgment tangibly visual. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: oar | es: el-remo | fr: mort | de: [משוט] Ezek 27:29

מְשׁוֹט H4880b N-mpc / 2fs (1×)

oars; rowing implements made of wood used to propel boats

This rare nautical term appears only in Ezekiel's elaborate lament over Tyre, the great maritime city. In the vivid description of Tyre as a magnificent ship, the prophet specifies that the oars were crafted from oak trees, emphasizing the quality and strength of the vessel's construction. The multilingual evidence consistently points to rowing implements, with Spanish 'remos' and English 'oars' reflecting the same maritime vocabulary.

(1×) Refers to the wooden oars used to propel Tyre's ships, specifically mentioned as being made from oak trees in Ezekiel 27:6. The context is the prophet's metaphorical description of Tyre as a perfectly constructed ship, where every component—including these oars—represents the city's craftsmanship and maritime power. The French gloss 'mort' appears to be a transcription issue, while German preserves the Hebrew text, but the Spanish and English glosses confirm this as rowing equipment. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: your-oars | es: tus-remos | fr: mort | de: [משוטיך] Ezek 27:6

מִשֻּׂכָה H4881a Prep-k / N-fsc (1×)

hedge; thorny barrier or fence enclosing a path or field

This term appears in one of Proverbs' vivid contrasts between the lazy and the diligent. The way of the sluggard is compared to a hedge of thorns—an obstructed, painful path full of difficulty. The imagery evokes a pathway blocked by prickly vegetation, making progress slow and uncomfortable. It's a powerful metaphor for how laziness creates obstacles that make even simple tasks feel insurmountable.

(1×) Describes a thorny hedge that blocks or restricts passage, used metaphorically in Proverbs 15:19 to characterize the path of the lazy person. The comparison 'like a hedge of thorns' suggests an impenetrable, painful barrier that the sluggard encounters because of their own lack of initiative. Spanish 'seto' (hedge) captures the same agricultural/pastoral image of a planted barrier, consistent with the Hebrew concept of a constructed boundary using thorny plants. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: is-like-a-hedge-of | es: como-seto-de | fr: comme-כמשכת | de: [כמשכת] Prov 15:19

מְשֻׂכָה H4881b N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

hedge; protective fence or boundary around a vineyard

In Isaiah's famous Song of the Vineyard, this word refers to the protective hedge surrounding the vineyard. When God pronounces judgment on unfaithful Israel, removing the hedge is one of the acts of abandonment—leaving the vineyard exposed to animals and destruction. The hedge represented divine protection, and its removal signals vulnerability. BDB notes textual uncertainty about the exact form, but the vineyard context makes the meaning clear.

(1×) The protective fence or hedge surrounding God's vineyard (Israel) in Isaiah 5:5, which the Lord threatens to remove as an act of judgment. The removal of this barrier would expose the vineyard to being trampled and devoured by animals. The possessive form 'its hedge' emphasizes that this was a specific, constructed protection that belonged to the vineyard, part of the careful cultivation that made its failure to produce good fruit all the more condemnable. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: its-hedge | es: su-seto | fr: [משוכתו] | de: [משוכתו] Isa 5:5

מִשְׁסָּה H4882

booty, plunder, spoil (what is seized in war or violence)

This feminine noun denotes plunder or spoil taken by violence or conquest. Second Kings 21:14 warns that Judah will become 'booty and prey' to enemies; Zephaniah 1:13 describes possessions becoming 'plunder' in divine judgment. The term appears in prophetic oracles of reversal, where those who plundered will themselves be plundered (Jeremiah 30:16). Isaiah 42:22-24 uses the word to describe Israel's humiliation: they have become 'prey' and 'plunder' because of sin. The vocabulary of seizure and spoil pervades prophetic judgment literature, turning the logic of conquest inside out.

מַשּׂוֹר H4883 Art / N-ms (1×)

saw; a cutting tool used for woodworking

This tool appears in one of Isaiah's most striking rhetorical questions, where the prophet asks whether the saw can boast against the one who uses it, or the axe magnify itself against the woodcutter. The image is part of a larger oracle against Assyria, comparing the empire to a tool in God's hand. The saw represents human agency wrongly assuming autonomy apart from the divine craftsman who wields it.

(1×) A woodworking saw mentioned in Isaiah 10:15 as part of a rhetorical question about tools claiming superiority over their users. The prophet uses this everyday implement to illustrate the folly of Assyria's pride—just as a saw cannot claim credit for the work of the carpenter's hand, so Assyria cannot boast as if it acts independently of God's purposes. The parallel with 'axe' in the same verse confirms this as a cutting tool used in construction or woodworking. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: the-saw | es: la-sierra | fr: [המשור] | de: [המשור] Isa 10:15

מְשׂוּרָה H4884 Conj-w (4×)

mesurah — measure, measurement, capacity (of liquids or in general)

This noun means 'measure' or 'measurement,' referring to the capacity or quantity of something, particularly in contexts of careful regulation. The term appears in legal and ritual texts where precision matters. It occurs in Leviticus regarding fair commercial practices, in Chronicles regarding temple service, and in Ezekiel's symbolic enacted prophecy where even water and bread must be measured out. The emphasis is on controlled, exact portions rather than abundance, often suggesting limitation, discipline, or careful administration.

(4×) Measure, measurement, or measured capacity. Leviticus 19:35 prohibits dishonesty 'in judgment, in measure (midah), in weight, or in capacity (mesurah),' listing different dimensions of commercial measurement. 1 Chronicles 23:29 assigns Levites responsibility for temple service involving 'every measure and capacity,' indicating their oversight of accurate portions. Ezekiel 4:11 and 16 describe the prophet's siege ration: water 'by measure' (bemesorah), one-sixth of a hin daily, alongside weighed bread—depicting the severe rationing during Jerusalem's coming siege. The term emphasizes precise, limited quantities, whether for justice (Leviticus), temple order (Chronicles), or symbolic judgment (Ezekiel). MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: and-in-the-capacity, by-measure, measure | es: medida, por-medida, y-en-la-capacidad | fr: [משורה], et-dans-le-capacity, mesure | de: [במשורה], [משורה], und-in-der-capacity Lev 19:35; 1Chr 23:29; Ezek 4:11; Ezek 4:16

מָשׂוֹשׂ H4885 N-msc / 1cs (17×)

joy, exultation, delight — intense gladness or festive rejoicing, often associated with music, cities, or God's favor

Masos is an abstract noun denoting joy, exultation, or delight, appearing 17 times in predominantly poetic and prophetic contexts. It overlaps closely with sason (H8342) but carries its own distinctive coloring, often attaching itself to concrete sources of delight — cities, instruments, ways of life. Isaiah uses it to describe the joyful music silenced in judgment: 'the joy of tambourines has ceased, the exultation of the jubilant has stopped, the joy of the lyre has ceased' (Isa 24:8, where masos appears twice). The desolation of once-joyful cities is a recurring theme: 'upon all houses of joy in the exultant city' (Isa 32:13), and the wild donkeys' delight in abandoned urban ruins (Isa 32:14). Yet Isaiah also reverses the image: Jerusalem will become 'an eternal excellence, a joy of many generations' (Isa 60:15), and 'I will make her a joy, and her people a delight' (Isa 65:18). Psalm 48:2 calls Zion 'the joy of all the earth,' and Lamentations 2:15 mourns the loss of that very title. Jeremiah 49:25 laments 'the city of my joy.' Hosea 2:13 warns that God will end 'her joy.' Job 8:19 speaks ironically of the 'joy' of the godless man's way. Spanish 'gozo,' French 'joie/delice,' and German 'Wonne/Freude' capture the register of exuberant delight.

joy, exultation, delight (17×) Intense joy, exultation, or delight — often anchored to concrete sources such as music, cities, or communal celebration. Isaiah uses it for the joy of instruments silenced by judgment ('the joy of tambourines... the joy of the lyre,' Isa 24:8) and ruined festive places (Isa 32:13-14), then reverses the image in promises of restoration where Jerusalem becomes 'a joy of many generations' (Isa 60:15; 65:18; 66:10). Psalm 48:2 and Lamentations 2:15 share the epithet of Zion as 'the joy of all the earth.' Jeremiah 49:25 applies it to a beloved city, and Hosea 2:13 to festivals God will terminate. Isaiah 62:5 compares God's delight in his people to a bridegroom's joy. Job 8:19 uses it with bitter irony for the short-lived flourishing of the wicked. Spanish 'gozo' and German 'Wonne' convey the festive register. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: a-joy, a-pasture, and-rejoicing | es: de-gozo, el-gozo-de, es-el-gozo-de | fr: de-joie, délice, et-délice | de: Freude-von, Wonne, [משוש] Job 8:19; Ps 48:2; Isa 8:6; Isa 24:8

מָשַׁח H4886 V-Qal-Perf-1cs / 3ms (69×)

To smear or anoint with oil; especially to consecrate kings, priests, and sacred objects; also to apply paint or cosmetic oil.

The quintessential verb of sacred consecration in the Hebrew Bible, from which the title 'Messiah' (מָשִׁיחַ, 'anointed one') derives. Oil is poured or smeared on persons and objects to set them apart for divine service: kings like Saul and David, priests like Aaron and his sons, and sacred furniture like the tabernacle and altar. The Arabic cognate ´ reveals the original physical gesture of wiping or stroking with the hand. A handful of occurrences preserve the older, non-sacral meaning of smearing a substance on a surface, such as painting walls with vermilion (Jer 22:14) or applying cosmetic oil to one's body (Amos 6:6), reminding us that the sacred sense grew from an everyday physical action.

1. anoint ceremonially for consecration (54×) Ritual anointing to consecrate a person or sacred object for divine service. This dominant sense covers kings (1 Sam 9:16; 16:3), priests (Exod 28:41; 29:7), prophets (1 Kgs 19:16), and cultic objects such as the tabernacle, altar, and vessels (Exod 30:26; 40:9-11). Spanish 'ungir' and French 'oindre' both carry the sacral connotation, while German 'salben' preserves the oil-application root. The act signifies divine election and empowerment. ANOINTING AND SMEARING

en: and-anointed, and-he-anointed, and-they-anointed | es: Y-los-ungirás, Y-ungirás, y-lo-ungieron | fr: [וימשחו], et-il-oignit, et-ils-oignit | de: [וימשחו], und-du-soll-salben, und-du-sollst-salben Gen 31:13; Exod 28:41; Exod 29:7; Exod 29:36; Exod 30:26

2. be anointed or consecrated (12×) The passive or stative condition of having received sacral anointing, expressed through Niphal forms or Qal passive participles. Describes unleavened cakes anointed with oil for offerings (Exod 29:2; Lev 2:4; 7:12) and consecrated priests who have undergone the rite (Num 3:3; Lev 6:20). Spanish 'fue ungido' (was anointed) and the shift to passive voice across languages confirm the resultant-state meaning distinct from the active ritual act. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-anointed, anointed, being-anointed | es: fue-ungido, los-ungidos, ser-ungido | fr: [נמשח], et-oignit, le-oignit-ones | de: [נמשח], der-salbte-die, salbte Exod 29:2; Lev 2:4; Lev 6:20; Lev 7:12; Num 3:3

3. smear paint or oil cosmetically (3×) Non-sacral smearing of a substance on a surface or body for practical or cosmetic purposes. Jehoiakim paints his palace walls with vermilion (Jer 22:14), a shield is oiled for battle preparation (Isa 21:5), and the complacent elite anoint themselves with fine oils (Amos 6:6). Spanish uses 'pintado' (painted) for the Jeremiah passage, clearly distinguishing this physical application from consecration. This preserves the original concrete meaning of the root. ANOINTING AND SMEARING

en: and-painted, anoint, they-anoint-themselves | es: se-ungen, ungid, y-pintado | fr: [ומשוח], [משחו], oindre | de: [ומשוח], [וימשחו], [משחו] Isa 21:5; Jer 22:14; Amos 6:6

מְשַׁח H4887 N-ms (2×)

oil; a sacred commodity supplied for temple service

This Aramaic loanword for oil appears only in Ezra, in the context of provisions for temple worship during the post-exilic restoration. Both occurrences list oil among the essential supplies (wheat, salt, wine, oil) to be provided for the priests serving in the rebuilt temple. The term reflects the administrative vocabulary of the Persian period, when the restored community depended on royal decrees for the material support of their worship.

(2×) Found in Ezra 6:9 and 7:22, both in lists of temple provisions authorized by Persian decree. The multilingual glosses consistently translate it as 'oil' (English 'oil', Spanish 'aceite', French/German preserving the Hebrew form), identifying it as the standard substance used for anointing, lighting, and meal offerings in the second temple period. OLIVE OIL

en: and-oil, of-oil | es: aceite, y-aceite | fr: [ומשח], [משח] | de: [ומשח], [משח] Ezra 6:9; Ezra 7:22

מִשְׁחָה H4888a Conj-w / N-fsc (25×)

anointing oil, consecrated portion — the sacred oil for priestly consecration and a dedicated priestly allotment

Mishchah is a feminine noun with two closely related senses, both rooted in the act of anointing. In its primary sense, it denotes the sacred anointing oil compounded from myrrh, cinnamon, calamus, cassia, and olive oil (Exod 30:23-25), used exclusively for consecrating the tabernacle, its furnishings, and the Aaronic priests. The phrase shemen hammishchah ('oil of anointing') recurs throughout the Priestly legislation as the instrument by which persons and objects are set apart for holy service (Exod 25:6; 29:7, 21; 30:25, 31; Lev 8:2, 10, 12, 30; 21:10; Num 4:16). In its secondary sense, mishchah designates the 'consecrated portion' — the share of offerings set apart for Aaron and his sons by virtue of their anointed status (Lev 7:35). Both senses converge on the single theological concept of sacred designation through oil. Spanish 'uncion,' French 'onction,' and German 'Salbung' each capture the act of anointing.

anointing, consecrating oil/act (25×) The holy anointing oil itself — the specially compounded blend of spices and olive oil prescribed for consecrating the tabernacle, its vessels, the altar, and the Aaronic priesthood. Appears in the formula shemen hammishchah ('oil of anointing') throughout Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers (Exod 25:6; 29:7, 21; 30:25, 31; 31:11; 35:8; 37:29; Lev 8:2, 10, 12; 21:10; Num 4:16). Its manufacture was restricted and its unauthorized use strictly forbidden (Exod 30:31-33). Also denotes, by extension, the 'consecrated portion' of priestly offerings (Lev 7:35). Spanish 'uncion' and German 'Salbung' reflect the single anointing concept. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: anointing-of, is-the-anointing-portion-of, the-anointing | es: la-unción, porción-de-unción-de, unción-de- | fr: est-le-anointing-portion-de, le-anointing, le-onction | de: Salbung-von, der-Salbung, die-Salbung Exod 25:6; Exod 29:7; Exod 29:21; Exod 29:29; Exod 30:25

מָשְׁחָה H4888b Prep-l / N-fs (1×)

anointing; consecrated portion set apart for priestly use

This term occurs in Numbers 18 where God establishes the portions designated for the priests. The anointing represents what has been consecrated or set apart—specifically, the offerings that belong to Aaron and his sons by divine appointment. The word connects to the broader concept of anointing as an act of consecration, though here it refers to the resulting consecrated portion rather than the act itself. BDB notes possible textual questions about the pointing.

(1×) The consecrated portion or anointing-designated offerings given to the Aaronic priests in Numbers 18:8. This represents the share of the offerings that God has set apart for priestly sustenance, separated from what is consumed on the altar. The term links the concept of anointing (which consecrates persons for sacred service) with the material provisions consecrated for those same sacred servants. The multilingual glosses 'for anointing' capture this sense of being designated or consecrated for a specific holy purpose. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-anointing | es: por-unción | fr: pour-anointing | de: fuer-Salbung Num 18:8

מַשְׁחִית H4889 Art / N-ms (11×)

Destruction, ruin; as a personified agent, the Destroyer sent in divine judgment (Ex 12:23; Jer 51:25).

Derived from the root sh-ch-t (to corrupt, destroy), this noun denotes physical ruin or devastation, often as the instrument of God's judgment upon nations or individuals. In Exodus 12:13 the Lord promises that 'the plague shall not be among you for destruction' when He strikes Egypt, while Ezekiel deploys it for the arrows of famine sent 'for destruction' (5:16). In a striking figurative turn, Jeremiah 51:25 names Babylon 'O destroying mountain' (har ha-mashchit), personifying an entire empire as an agent of ruin. The related use in 2 Kings 23:13 for the southern spur of the Mount of Olives — 'the mount of corruption' where idolatrous high places stood — may reflect a deliberate wordplay on har ha-mishchah ('mount of anointing').

1. destruction, ruin (9×) Abstract destruction or ruin — the devastation brought by divine judgment, famine, war, or plague. Exodus 12:13 uses it with the preposition le- to mark the destroying plague that passes over Israel; Ezekiel 5:16 and 25:15 apply it to arrows and acts of vengeance sent 'for destruction.' Spanish 'destrucción' and English 'destruction' converge uniformly, while the construct ba'al mashchit in Proverbs 18:9 ('master of destruction') characterizes the sluggard as kin to a destroyer. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: destruction, for-destruction, to-corruption | es: a-destrucción, destrucción, para-destrucción | fr: [למשחית], [משחית], pour-destruction | de: [למשחית], [משחית], fuer-destruction Exod 12:13; 2Chr 20:23; 2Chr 22:4; Jer 5:26; Ezek 5:16

2. the Destroyer (personified agent) (2×) A personified or semi-personified Destroyer — used with the article or in construct to name a specific agent of divine wrath. Jeremiah 51:25 addresses Babylon as har ha-mashchit ('O destroying mountain'), while in 2 Kings 23:13 the phrase names a geographic landmark, the 'mount of corruption' south of the Mount of Olives where illicit shrines stood. The German and French glosses leave the Hebrew untranslated ('der-Destroyer,' 'le-Destroyer'), reflecting the quasi-proper-noun character of this usage. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: the-Destroyer, the-destroyer | es: destructor, la-destrucción | fr: [המשחית], le-Destroyer | de: [המשחית], der-Destroyer 2Kgs 23:13; Jer 51:25

מִשְׂחָק H4890 N-ms (1×)

laughingstock; object of scorn and ridicule

Habakkuk uses this word to describe how the Babylonian invaders treat strongholds—they mock fortifications, regarding mighty defenses as objects of derision. The term captures contemptuous laughter, the scorn of an overwhelmingly superior force that finds the resistance of others amusing. It's part of the prophet's troubling vision of Babylon's seemingly unstoppable military power, where even the strongest defenses become mere entertainment for the conquerors.

(1×) Describes fortresses and strongholds as objects of mockery and derision to the Babylonian forces in Habakkuk 1:10. The Chaldeans are depicted as so militarily dominant that they laugh at defensive structures, treating serious fortifications as though they were jokes. Spanish 'risa' (laughter) and French 'risée' (laughingstock) both emphasize the element of contemptuous amusement, showing how the term conveys not just defeat but humiliation—being reduced to something that provokes scornful laughter. LAUGHTER AND DERISION

en: a-laughingstock | es: son-risa | fr: risée | de: [משחק] Hab 1:10

מִשְׁחָר H4891 N-ms (1×)

dawn; the early morning twilight at break of day

This poetic term for dawn appears in one of the Bible's most mysterious psalms. Psalm 110:3 speaks of dew and dawn in language that has puzzled translators for centuries. BDB notes that this particular word may be a textual variant or dittography of the more common word for dawn. The context associates it with fresh beginnings and divine generation, using the imagery of morning dew appearing with the first light.

(1×) Refers to the dawn or early morning light in Psalm 110:3, though BDB suggests this may be a textual issue with 'dawn' being accidentally duplicated. The phrase 'from the womb of dawn' creates a vivid image of birth or origin, with the morning itself portrayed as a mother. The multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'dawn' or 'aurora,' connecting it to the daily rebirth of light. The poetic context links this dawn imagery to renewal, fresh beginning, and divine creative power manifested in the natural cycle of each new day. DAWN AND TWILIGHT

en: the-dawn | es: del-alba | fr: de-aurore | de: der-dawn Ps 110:3

מַשְׁחֵת H4892 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

destruction; weapon or implement of devastation

In Ezekiel's vision of judgment on Jerusalem, this word describes the instruments carried by the six executioners approaching from the north. The phrase 'weapon of destruction' or 'implement of slaughter' captures the grim scene of divine judgment being executed. Each figure carries a tool designed for destruction—these are not defensive weapons but implements specifically for carrying out devastation. The image reinforces the certainty and thoroughness of the coming judgment.

(1×) Denotes the destructive weapon or implement carried by each of the six executioners in Ezekiel 9:1. The phrase 'his weapon of destruction' emphasizes both the personal assignment (each has his own tool) and the purpose (designed specifically for devastating). The context is divine judgment, where these figures are commissioned to go through Jerusalem and strike down the idolaters. Spanish 'destrucción' captures the sense of deliberate devastation, while the construct form indicates this is not just destruction in general but the specific implement or means by which it is carried out. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: destruction-of-him | es: destrucción-de-él | fr: destruction | de: [משחתו] Ezek 9:1

מִשְׁחַת H4893a N-msc (1×)

disfigurement; marred or deformed appearance, especially of the face

Isaiah uses this powerful word in the Suffering Servant passage to describe extreme physical disfigurement. The servant's appearance is so marred, so beyond normal human appearance, that people are appalled. This is one of the most haunting images in prophetic literature—a figure whose suffering has so distorted his physical form that he barely looks human. Christian interpretation has traditionally seen this as pointing to Christ's suffering, but the Hebrew term itself simply denotes severe disfigurement or marring.

(1×) Describes the severe disfigurement of the Suffering Servant's face in Isaiah 52:14, where his appearance is marred beyond human recognition. The word captures the idea of being spoiled, ruined, or deformed—not merely wounded but fundamentally altered in appearance. The context emphasizes the shocking, appalling nature of this disfigurement, which causes onlookers to be astonished and horrified. The term goes beyond simple injury to suggest a disfigurement so complete that the person's humanity itself seems obscured, making this one of Scripture's most visceral images of suffering. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: marred | es: desfigurado-de | fr: [משחת] | de: [משחת] Isa 52:14

מָשְׁחָת H4893b N-msc / 3mp (1×)

corruption; ritual defect or blemish making an offering unacceptable

This ritual term appears in Leviticus's regulations for acceptable sacrifices. Animals with 'corruption' or defects cannot be offered to God—they are disqualified by their imperfection. The word captures the concept of being damaged, spoiled, or marred in a way that makes something unfit for holy use. It's part of the larger priestly code that insisted on wholeness and perfection in offerings, reflecting the holiness of the God to whom they were presented.

(1×) Refers to ritual corruption or defect in sacrificial animals that disqualifies them from being offered to God in Leviticus 22:25. The term indicates something is damaged, blemished, or spoiled in a way that makes it unacceptable for sacred use. The possessive form 'their corruption' suggests this is an inherent defect within the animals themselves. The context is priestly law about maintaining the purity and perfection of offerings—corrupted or defective animals dishonor God and cannot be used in worship, reflecting the principle that God deserves the best, not the damaged or inferior. RITUAL DEFILEMENT

en: their-corruption | es: su-corrupción | fr: leur-corruption | de: ihr-corruption Lev 22:25

מִשְׁטָח H4894a N-msc (2×)

spreading-place, a location where nets are spread out to dry

This technical term appears in Ezekiel's prophecy against Tyre, describing what the once-great maritime city will become after divine judgment. The image is striking: the proud merchant city reduced to a bare rock where fishermen spread their nets to dry. The term evokes the practical realities of fishing communities, where nets required regular spreading and maintenance. What was once a center of trade and wealth becomes merely a utilitarian space for the humblest of occupations.

(2×) Used twice in Ezekiel 26:5 and 14, both describing Tyre's future as 'a spreading-place for nets.' The cross-linguistic evidence (English 'spreading-place', Spanish 'tendedero', French 'étendue') captures the functional aspect—a flat surface where fishing nets are laid out to dry and be mended, symbolizing Tyre's complete humiliation. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: spreading-place-for- | es: Tendedero-de, tendedero-de | fr: étendue | de: [משטח] Ezek 26:5; Ezek 26:14

מִשְׁטוֹחַ H4894b N-ms (1×)

spreading place; location where nets are spread out to dry

This word appears in Ezekiel's vision of the renewed land, where the waters from the temple bring life and healing. Along the shores of the Dead Sea—transformed by these living waters—there will be places for spreading nets. It's a beautiful image of restoration: the Dead Sea, currently lifeless, will teem with fish, and fishermen will stand along its banks drying their nets. The word captures the practical detail of fishing life, grounding the eschatological vision in everyday reality.

(1×) Denotes a place where fishing nets are spread out, mentioned in Ezekiel 47:10 in the context of the life-giving waters flowing from the temple. The phrase 'spreading place for nets' envisions fishermen working along the shores of the formerly dead sea, now teeming with life. Spanish 'tendedero' (drying rack) captures the practical function—a location where wet nets are laid out flat to dry. This mundane detail within a grand prophetic vision shows how divine restoration touches even the ordinary rhythms of daily work, transforming the barren into the productive. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: spreading-place | es: tendedero | fr: étendue | de: [משטרת] Ezek 47:10

מַשְׁטֵמָה H4895 N-fs (2×)

hostility, animosity; personal or national enmity

This feminine noun appears in Hosea's vivid description of coming judgment on Israel. The prophet declares that days of punishment have arrived, and the people will experience divine hostility. Some scholars suggest deleting one occurrence as textually problematic, but the term clearly conveys active animosity or enmity. It captures the relational rupture between God and his people when covenant faithfulness gives way to idolatry and injustice.

(2×) Found in Hosea 9:7 and 9:8, both in oracles announcing judgment on Israel. The multilingual glosses uniformly render this as 'hostility' or 'animosity' (English 'hostility', Spanish 'hostilidad', French 'hostilité'), depicting the adversarial stance that results from persistent covenant violation and prophetic rejection. ENMITY HOSTILITY

en: hostility, the-hostility | es: hostilidad, la-hostilidad | fr: hostilité | de: [משטמה] Hos 9:7; Hos 9:8

מִשְׁטָר H4896 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

rule, dominion; authority or governing control exercised over something

Job uses this word when God questions him about the natural order: Do you know the ordinances of the heavens? Can you establish their rule over the earth? The term captures the idea of governing authority or controlling power that the celestial realm exercises over earthly affairs. It's part of God's overwhelming response to Job, pointing to the cosmic order that operates beyond human control or understanding. The heavens have their laws and their dominion—can Job claim to direct or master them?

(1×) Refers to the rule or dominion that the heavens exercise over the earth in Job 38:33. God asks Job whether he can establish or set this governing authority, emphasizing human inability to control the cosmic order. The possessive form 'its rule' indicates the inherent authority belonging to the celestial realm. Spanish 'dominio' captures the sense of sovereign control. The context is God's demonstration of divine wisdom and power through rhetorical questions about creation—the regular, ordered influence of heavenly bodies over earthly seasons and cycles operates according to laws Job neither made nor can modify. DOMINION AND RULE

en: its-rule | es: su-dominio | fr: son-משטרו-lui | de: [משטרו] Job 38:33

מֶשִׁי H4897 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

silk (or similar luxury fabric); a costly material for fine garments

This rare noun appears only in Ezekiel 16, where it describes the luxurious garments God metaphorically clothed Jerusalem with during her youth. The exact identification remains uncertain—rabbinic tradition suggests silk, though the etymology is unknown. What's clear is that this was an expensive, fine material paired with linen in the prophet's imagery of divine lavishness toward his chosen bride. The term evokes the height of ancient textile luxury, whether silk or another prized fabric.

(2×) Used in Ezekiel 16:10 and 13, both describing God's generous adornment of Jerusalem. All major translations converge on 'silk' (English 'silk', Spanish 'seda', French 'soie'), though ancient versions like the Septuagint render it differently. The parallel with fine linen in both verses confirms this was a prestigious fabric reserved for the wealthy or royalty. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: and-silk, silk | es: seda, y-seda | fr: et-soie, soie | de: [ומשי], [משי] Ezek 16:10; Ezek 16:13

מְשֵׁיזַבְאֵל H4898 N-proper-ms (3×)

Meshezabel, a Jewish name meaning 'God delivers' used in the Persian period

This name appears for three different men in the post-exilic community of Nehemiah's time. The name derives from Aramaic roots meaning 'God rescues' or 'God delivers,' reflecting the theological vocabulary of the restoration community. One Meshezabel was grandfather to a wall-rebuilder, another sealed the covenant, and a third was father to a royal official from Judah. Whether these are three separate individuals or overlapping family members is unclear, but the name itself testifies to faith in God's delivering power during the challenging Persian period.

(3×) Meshezabel, a personal name meaning 'God delivers' borne by men in Nehemiah's era. Nehemiah 3:4 mentions Meshezabel as grandfather of Meshullam, one of the wall-builders. In 10:21 a Meshezabel is among those who sealed the covenant. Nehemiah 11:24 lists Pethahiah son of Meshezabel as an official 'at the king's hand in all matters concerning the people.' The LXX renderings (Μασεζεβηα, Μεσωζεβηλ) and Hebrew consistent spelling confirm this as a theophoric name from the Aramaic verb 'to deliver.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mesheyzavel, Meshezabel | es: Mesezabel | fr: Meschézabeel | de: [משיזבאל] Neh 3:4; Neh 10:21; Neh 11:24

מָשִׁיחַ H4899 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (39×)

Anointed one; a king, priest, or leader consecrated by oil, culminating in the eschatological Messiah

One of the most theologically loaded words in the Hebrew Bible. At its base, mashiach simply means 'one who has been smeared with oil' – a ritual act of consecration. Kings are anointed (Saul, David, and their successors are repeatedly called 'the LORD's anointed,' as in 1 Sam 24:6), and so are high priests (Lev 4:3). The word gathers eschatological weight in Daniel 9:25-26, where 'an anointed one, a prince' points beyond any historical king. Spanish renders this 'Mesías' and French 'oint,' each capturing a different dimension – the title versus the act – of this richly layered term.

1. anointed one, king or priest (34×) The core usage: a specific person – king or high priest – consecrated through the ritual of anointing with sacred oil. Applied to Israelite kings as 'the LORD's anointed' (meshiach YHWH) throughout Samuel and the Psalms (1 Sam 24:6; Ps 2:2; 2 Sam 22:51), and to the high priest as 'the anointed priest' (Lev 4:3, 5, 16). English glosses like 'his-anointed' and 'anointed-of' with pronominal suffixes confirm the relational possessive construction tying the anointed to God. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against-anointed-of, anointed-of, his-anointed | es: a-su-ungido, contra-ungido-de, el-ungido | fr: [משיח], contre-oignit-de, de-oint | de: [משיח], dein-Gesalbter, dein-anointed-one Lev 4:3; Lev 4:5; Lev 4:16; Lev 6:22; 1Sam 2:10

2. the Messiah, eschatological title (2×) The titular, eschatological sense found in Daniel 9:25-26, where 'an anointed one' (mashiach nagid) designates a future deliverer figure. Spanish renders this distinctly as 'Mesías,' marking a shift from common noun to proper title. This is the semantic bridge to the New Testament Greek Christos, and both Daniel passages stand apart from other occurrences by using the term without a possessive suffix or relational phrase. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: anointed-one | es: Mesías | fr: [משיח] | de: [משיח] Dan 9:25; Dan 9:26

3. anointed ones, collective plural (2×) The collective plural referring to a protected group – patriarchs and prophets – whom God calls 'my anointed ones' (Ps 105:15; 1 Chr 16:22). The plural with first-person suffix (meshichai) extends the concept beyond a single officeholder to an entire class of divinely consecrated persons. This corporate sense is confirmed by the parallel command 'do my prophets no harm.' ANOINTING AND SMEARING

en: My-anointed-ones, my-anointed-ones | es: a-mis-ungidos, a-ungidos-míos | fr: [במשיחי], dans-oint | de: [במשיחי], mein-Gesalbter-Leute 1Chr 16:22; Ps 105:15

4. anointing, act of consecration (1×) A participial sense in 2 Sam 1:21 where the reference is to the act of anointing itself – Saul's shield 'not anointed with oil.' Here the word retains its verbal force rather than functioning as a substantive title. English 'anointing' and Spanish 'ungir' both capture the processual, verbal dimension that distinguishes this occurrence from the nominal uses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: anointing | es: ungir | fr: oignant | de: salbend 2Sam 1:21

מָשַׁךְ H4900 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs / 3mp (36×)

To draw, pull, drag; to attract, prolong, extend; to draw out a sound or wield a weapon

A Hebrew verb rooted in the physical act of pulling or drawing, which extends into rich figurative territory. At its most concrete, it describes pulling Joseph from a pit (Gen 37:28) or selecting a Passover lamb (Exod 12:21). Yet its most memorable use is relational: 'I have drawn you with lovingkindness' (Jer 31:3). The same pulling force applies to time — prolonging days or deferring hope (Prov 13:12) — and to sound, as when the ram's horn blast is 'drawn out' at Sinai (Exod 19:13). Arabic ́(to grasp) and Ethiopic መሰከ (to bend a bow) preserve the kinesthetic core.

1. draw/pull out physically (7×) To physically draw out, pull, or extract an object or person — the basic Qal sense of exerting force. Spanish 'sacaron' (they pulled out) and French 'tira' (pulled) confirm the extraction meaning. Ranges from drawing Joseph from the pit (Gen 37:28) to drawing a bow in battle (1 Kgs 22:34). The concrete root from which all figurative senses spring. DRAWING AND PULLING

en: Can-you-draw-out, and-drew, and-they-pulled | es: Y-sacaron, ha-tirado, sacad | fr: Méschec, a-pulled, et-tira | de: [וימשכו], [משך], [תמשך] Gen 37:28; Exod 12:21; Deut 21:3; 1Kgs 22:34; 2Chr 18:33

2. draw/attract (people) (6×) To draw or attract a person relationally or emotionally, implying influence rather than physical force. Spanish 'atráeme' (draw me) from Song 1:4 and 'atraeré' (I will attract) capture the magnetic pull. Hosea 11:4's 'I drew them with cords of love' and Jeremiah 31:3's lovingkindness illustrate God's gentle, persistent attraction of his people. DRAWING AND PULLING en: I-drew-them, I-drew-you, and-I-will-draw | es: Atráeme, Y-atraeré, atraer | fr: Attire-moi,, et-je-sera-tirer, tirer | de: [אמשכם], [ימשוך], [למשוך] Judg 4:7; Job 21:33; Eccl 2:3; Song 1:4; Jer 31:3

3. extend/stretch/prolong (6×) To extend, stretch out, or prolong in time or space — the pulling force applied to duration or dimension. Spanish 'extiende' (extend) and French 'tirer' confirm the stretching sense. Used of God extending mercy (Ps 36:10), prolonging patience (Neh 9:30), and stretching forbearance (Ps 85:5). The root metaphor is pulling something to make it longer. DRAWING AND PULLING en: and-drew, and-you-extended, extend | es: Extiende, Y-tuviste-paciencia, extendió | fr: [ותמשך], de-tirer, et-tira | de: [ותמשך], [משך], einer-extending Judg 20:37; Neh 9:30; Ps 36:10; Ps 85:5; Ps 109:12

4. drag away forcibly (6×) To drag or haul away by force, with connotations of violence or compulsion. Spanish 'arrastra' (drags) captures the forcible hauling. Isaiah 5:18 depicts those who 'draw iniquity with cords of vanity,' while Psalm 28:3 pleads 'do not drag me away with the wicked.' The multilingual evidence consistently distinguishes this from gentle attraction. DRAWING AND PULLING en: and-draw-out, and-he-drags-away, drag-me-away | es: Y-arrastra, al-arrastrarlo, arrastra | fr: dans-tirer, et-tirer, et-tirer-dehors | de: [ומשך], [משכו], [משכי] Judg 4:6; Job 24:22; Ps 10:9; Ps 28:3; Isa 5:18

5. be prolonged/deferred (Nifal/Pual) (4×) Nifal and Pual passive: to be prolonged, delayed, or deferred. Spanish 'prolongada' and 'se prolongará' confirm the temporal extension in passive voice. Proverbs 13:12's 'hope deferred makes the heart sick' is the best-known instance. Ezekiel twice reassures that prophetic visions will not be prolonged indefinitely (Ezek 12:25, 28). DRAWING AND PULLING en: deferred, it-shall-be-prolonged, shall-be-prolonged | es: prolongada, se-prolongará, serán-prolongados | fr: tirer | de: [ימשכו], [ממשכה], [תמשך] Prov 13:12; Isa 13:22; Ezek 12:25; Ezek 12:28

6. (2×) Applied to people of unusual stature or appearance in Isaiah 18:2 and 18:7, describing a nation 'tall and smooth' — literally 'drawn out' in physique. Spanish 'estirada/estirado' (stretched) captures the elongated physical quality. This specialized sense extends the stretching metaphor to describe bodily proportions of a distant nation. DRAWING AND PULLING en: tall | es: estirada, estirado | fr: tirer | de: [ממשך] Isa 18:2; Isa 18:7

7. prolong a sound (horn blast) (2×) To draw out or prolong a musical sound, specifically the sustained blast of the ram's horn (shofar). Spanish 'al prolongar/prolongarse' (upon prolonging) confirms the acoustic-temporal sense. At Sinai, the people were to ascend the mountain 'when the horn blast is drawn out' (Exod 19:13); at Jericho, the walls fell at the prolonged sound (Josh 6:5). GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: when-is-drawn-out, when-sounds | es: al-prolongar, al-prolongarse | fr: quand-est-drawn-dehors, quand-sounds | de: als-ist-drawn-heraus, als-sounds Exod 19:13; Josh 6:5

8. wield/handle (weapon) (2×) To draw or handle a weapon, especially a bow, describing warriors in battle. Spanish 'los que tensan' (those who draw tight) and 'los que empuñan' (those who grip) capture the martial handling. Judges 5:14 speaks of those who 'handle the staff of the scribe,' and Isaiah 66:19 mentions those who 'draw the bow' — skilled weapon-wielders. DRAWING AND PULLING en: -those-wielding, drawers-of | es: los-que-empuñan, los-que-tensan | fr: -ces-wielding, tirer | de: -jene-wielding, [משכי] Judg 5:14; Isa 66:19

9. (1×) A single occurrence in Amos 9:13 where the sower 'draws' or 'reaches' the reaper, describing agricultural abundance so great that plowing overtakes harvest. Spanish 'al que siembra' (the one who sows) and the context of eschatological plenty suggest a temporal-spatial overlap — one season being 'drawn' into the next in miraculous profusion. DRAWING AND PULLING en: the-sower-of- | es: al-que-siembra | fr: tirer | de: [במשך] Amos 9:13

מָשָׁךְ H4901 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)

drawing up, trail; effort required to obtain or carry something valuable

This nuanced noun conveys two related images involving extension or trailing. In Job, it describes the effort required to 'draw up' or obtain wisdom—like fishing something precious from the depths, wisdom cannot be secured as easily as corals from the sea. In Psalm 126, it depicts the trail of seed carried by the sower, the precious burden borne through tears in hope of harvest. Both uses suggest purposeful movement and the value of what is drawn or carried.

(2×) Appears in Job 28:18 (the 'drawing up' or acquisition of wisdom) and Psalm 126:6 (the 'trail of seed' borne by the weeping sower). The multilingual evidence shows semantic range: English distinguishes 'acquisition' from 'trail', Spanish 'adquisición'/'saco', but both capture the sense of something drawn out or extended with effort and purpose. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-acquisition-of, trail-of | es: el-saco-de, y-adquisición-de | fr: de-tirer, et-ומשך | de: [ומשך], trail-of Job 28:18; Ps 126:6

מֶשֶׁךְ H4902 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (9×)

Meshech, a people and region in Asia Minor (Anatolia), descended from Japheth, often paired with Tubal in prophecy.

Meshech identifies a people group traced to Japheth's lineage (Gen 10:2; 1 Chr 1:5), known in Assyrian records as the Mushki and in Greek sources as the Moschoi, dwelling in western Armenia and central Anatolia. In the prophets, Meshech appears almost invariably alongside Tubal as trading partners (Ezek 27:13) and as nations subject to divine judgment (Ezek 32:26; 38:2-3; 39:1). The Psalmist's lament 'Woe to me that I sojourn in Meshech' (Ps 120:5) uses the name to evoke a distant, hostile land. Spanish 'Mesec,' French 'Meschek,' and the Septuagint 'Mosoch' all reflect the same Semitic consonantal root.

Meshech (proper name, region/people) (9×) The proper gentillic name Meshech, denoting a people and territory in Asia Minor descended from Japheth. Genealogical texts (Gen 10:2; 1 Chr 1:5, 17) place Meshech among the sons of Japheth between Tubal and Tiras. Prophetic texts consistently pair Meshech with Tubal as commercial and military powers (Ezek 27:13; 38:2-3; 39:1), while Psalm 120:5 uses the name as a byword for remote exile. Multilingual renderings – Spanish 'Mesec,' French 'Meschek,' German 'Meshekh' – are straightforward transliterations confirming a single referent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Meshech, and-Meshech, and-Meshekh | es: Mesec, Mésec, en-Mesec | fr: Méschek, de-Méschek, et-Meshech | de: [ומשך], [משך], in-Meshekh Gen 10:2; 1Chr 1:5; 1Chr 1:17; Ps 120:5; Ezek 27:13

מִשְׁכַּב H4903 N-msc / 2ms (6×)

Bed, couch, lying-place — an Aramaic noun for the place where one sleeps, used exclusively in Daniel's visions.

An Aramaic masculine noun meaning 'bed' or 'couch,' found only in the book of Daniel. It appears six times, always with pronominal suffixes ('my bed,' 'your bed,' 'his bed'), describing the place where royal figures receive night visions. In Daniel 2:28-29, God reveals to Nebuchadnezzar 'the visions of your head upon your bed,' and in Daniel 4:5-13 and 7:1, visions come while lying in bed. The Spanish glosses (mi-cama, tu-cama, cama-de-el) neatly mirror the pronominal variation, confirming this is a single lexical sense with grammatical inflection rather than distinct meanings.

bed, couch, lying-place (6×) A bed or couch where one reclines for sleep, serving as the locus of divine night visions in Daniel's Aramaic sections. Every occurrence is connected to revelatory dreams: Nebuchadnezzar's visions on his bed (Dan 2:28-29; 4:5, 10, 13) and Daniel's own night vision (Dan 7:1). The multilingual glosses uniformly denote 'bed' with possessive variation, confirming a single concrete sense rather than any metaphorical extension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-bed, my-bed, your-bed | es: cama-de-él, mi-cama, tu-cama | fr: couche | de: [משכבה], [משכבי], [משכבך] Dan 2:28; Dan 2:29; Dan 4:5; Dan 4:10; Dan 4:13

מִשְׁכָּב H4904 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (46×)

A bed or couch for sleeping; by extension, a bedroom, the act of lying down, or a euphemism for sexual intercourse.

Derived from the root shakav (to lie down), this noun radiates outward from the concrete piece of furniture to the room that houses it, the act performed upon it, and the intimate encounter it discreetly names. On his deathbed Jacob's blessing curses Reuben for defiling his father's 'bed' (Gen 49:4), while the purity laws of Leviticus 15 treat the bed as a surface that transmits uncleanness. The construct plural mishkeve marks the euphemistic sense of sexual relations (Lev 18:22; 20:13), a usage Spanish captures as 'acostamientos de' and French as 'couché de.' The word thus spans the private world from furniture to chamber to rest to intimacy.

1. bed, couch (furniture) (34×) The physical bed or couch as a piece of furniture for sleeping, resting, or reclining. This is the dominant sense, covering over two-thirds of occurrences. It includes beds of the sick (Exod 21:18), beds rendered unclean (Lev 15:4-5, 21), beds where the psalmist weeps (Ps 6:7), and the lovers' bed of Song of Songs 3:1. Spanish 'cama' and French 'couche / lit' straightforwardly name the furniture. The pronominal suffixes ('his bed,' 'my bed') keep the reference concrete. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bed-of, her-bed, his-bed | es: a-lecho-de, cama-mía, cama-suya | fr: [משכבך], couche, de-couche | de: [למשכב], [משכבותם], [משכבי] Gen 49:4; Exod 21:18; Lev 15:4; Lev 15:5; Lev 15:21

2. sexual intercourse (lying with) (6×) A euphemism for sexual intercourse, literally 'lyings of.' Occurring exclusively in the construct plural mishkeve, this sense appears in the Holiness Code (Lev 18:22; 20:13) and in the census of Midianite captives (Num 31:17-18, 35). Spanish 'acostamientos de' (lyings of) and French 'couché de / couché avec' preserve the euphemistic construction. The plural intensifies or abstracts the act, distancing the expression from any single occasion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-lying-with, lying-of, lying-with | es: acostamientos-de, acostarse-con, como-acostamientos-de | fr: couché-avec, couché-de, lyings-de | de: durch-liegend-mit, liegend-mit, liegend-von Lev 18:22; Lev 20:13; Num 31:17; Num 31:18; Num 31:35

3. bedroom, sleeping chamber (3×) The bedroom or sleeping chamber as a private room, used metonymically so that the bed stands for the space around it. The frogs of the Exodus plague invade Pharaoh's 'bed-chamber' (Exod 8:3), Elisha knows what the king of Aram speaks 'in his bedroom' (2 Kgs 6:12), and Ecclesiastes warns against cursing a king even in one's 'bedroom' (Eccl 10:20). Spanish 'alcoba / dormitorio' and French 'chambre à coucher' confirm the spatial, room-level reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: your-bed | es: tu-alcoba, tu-dormitorio, tu-lecho | fr: ton-couche-toi, ton-lit | de: [משכבך], dein-bed Exod 8:3; 2Kgs 6:12; Eccl 10:20

4. act of lying down, rest (3×) The abstract act of lying down or resting, where the noun denotes the activity rather than its location or furniture. In 2 Sam 4:5, 7 Ish-bosheth is assassinated during his midday 'lying down' (siesta), and Judg 21:12 uses the term for the condition of not having known a man's 'lying.' Spanish 'siesta de' and French 'repos de' capture the actional reading. The sense focuses on the posture and state of rest itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-lying-of, his-lying, rest-of | es: acostarse-suyo, en-lecho-de, siesta-de | fr: par-couché-de, reste-de, son-étendu | de: durch-liegend-von, ruhe-von, sein-liegend Judg 21:12; 2Sam 4:5; 2Sam 4:7

מַשְׂכִּיל H4905 N-ms (13×)

Maskîl — a psalm superscription term, likely indicating a contemplative or skillfully crafted poem

A technical musical or literary term appearing in the superscriptions of thirteen psalms (Pss 32, 42, 44, 45, 52, 53, 54, 55, 74, 78, 88, 89, 142) and once within a psalm text as an instruction — 'sing a maskil!' (Ps 47:7). Derived from the Hiphil of שָׂכַל ('to be prudent, to give insight'), the word likely signals a psalm that imparts wisdom or demands skillful, thoughtful performance. The maskil psalms span a wide emotional range: from David's joyful confession of forgiveness (Ps 32) to the sons of Korah's desperate lament over national catastrophe (Ps 44; 74; 88). The term's precise ancient meaning was already uncertain by the time of the Septuagint translators, who rendered it variously.

(13×) A psalm genre designation in superscriptions, from the Hiphil of שָׂכַל ('to act wisely, give insight'), likely indicating a contemplative poem, a didactic composition, or a skillfully crafted song. Attested in the titles of Psalms 32, 42, 44, 45, 52, 53, 54, 55, 74, 78, 88, 89, and 142, and as an imperative in Psalm 47:7 ('sing a maskil'). The maskil psalms encompass confession (Ps 32), lament (Ps 44, 74, 88), historical recital (Ps 78), and royal celebration (Ps 45). All target languages preserve the term as a transliteration — eng/spa/fra 'maskil', deu 'Maskil' — reflecting its technical, not-fully-recoverable ancient sense. SONGS AND HYMNS

en: a-maskil | es: Maskil, Masquil, maskil | fr: de-maskil | de: ein-maskil Ps 32:1; Ps 42:1; Ps 44:1; Ps 45:1; Ps 52:1

מַשְׂכִּית H4906 Prep-b / N-fpc (6×)

A carved image or figured stone (often idolatrous); imagination or conceit; an ornamental setting or frame

At its core, maskit denotes something displayed or made visible – a show-piece. In cultic contexts it refers to carved images or figured stones associated with idolatry, which the Torah explicitly forbids (Lev 26:1; Num 33:52). Ezekiel 8:12 uses it of the secret 'chambers of imagery' where elders worship painted abominations. Yet the same root can describe the inner life: in Psalm 73:7 the 'imaginations of their heart' overflow with arrogance. Most beautifully, Proverbs 25:11 transforms the word into an artisan's ornamental setting – 'apples of gold in settings of silver' – celebrating the craftsmanship of a well-chosen word.

1. carved image, figured stone (3×) A carved or engraved image, especially an idolatrous figured stone condemned by Israelite law. Leviticus 26:1 forbids setting up an 'even maskit' alongside pillars and idols; Numbers 33:52 commands Israel to destroy the Canaanites' figured stones. Ezekiel 8:12 extends this to painted wall-images in secret idol chambers. Translations converge on the visual-representational sense: Spanish 'imágenes,' French 'image,' English 'figured stones.' IDOLS AND IMAGES

en: imagery-of-him, of-figured, their-figured-stones | es: de-figura, imágenes-de-él, sus-imágenes | fr: de-figured, image, leur-figured-pierres | de: [משכיתו], ihr-figured-Steine, von-figured Lev 26:1; Num 33:52; Ezek 8:12

2. imagination, conceit (2×) Imagination, conceit, or mental picture-making – the inner counterpart to the external carved image. In Psalm 73:7 the psalmist observes the wicked whose 'imaginations of the heart' overflow beyond all bounds. Proverbs 18:11 uses it of the rich man's wealth as a high wall 'in his imagination' – a false fortress of the mind. Spanish 'imaginación' and English 'imagination' reflect how maskit bridges the physical and psychological domains. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-his-imagination, the-imaginations-of | es: en-imaginación-su, imaginaciones-de | fr: dans-son-במשכיתו-lui, de-image | de: [במשכיתו], der-imaginations-von Ps 73:7; Prov 18:11

3. ornamental setting, frame (1×) An ornamental setting, decorative frame, or work of fine craftsmanship. Proverbs 25:11 compares a fitly spoken word to 'apples of gold in settings (maskiyyot) of silver,' using the term positively for artistry rather than idolatry. Spanish 'engastes' (settings, bezels) captures the jeweler's craft implied here, showing how the same root that can denote forbidden images also celebrates legitimate beauty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-settings-of | es: en-engastes-de | fr: dans-במשכיות | de: [במשכיות] Prov 25:11

מִשְׁכֵּן H4907 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

dwelling, abode; place of residence, especially divine habitation

This term appears in Ezra when King Artaxerxes authorizes temple resources, referring to Jerusalem as God's dwelling place. The word emphasizes habitation—not just a building but an actual residence where God is present. It connects to the tabernacle (mishkan) tradition, where God dwells among his people. Using this word for Jerusalem acknowledges the city's role as the location of divine presence, the place where God has chosen to make his abode among Israel.

(1×) Denotes God's dwelling place, used of Jerusalem in Ezra 7:15 in the context of King Artaxerxes' decree supporting the temple. The possessive form 'His dwelling' emphasizes that this is where God resides, making the city sacred through divine presence. The term shares roots with 'tabernacle' (mishkan), carrying connotations of God settling down, making a home among his people. Spanish 'morada' (dwelling, abode) reflects this sense of permanent residence rather than temporary visit. The Persian king's acknowledgment of Jerusalem as God's dwelling shows remarkable theological recognition from a foreign ruler. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: is-His-dwelling | es: su-morada | fr: [משכנה] | de: [משכנה] Ezra 7:15

מִשְׁכָּן H4908 N-mpc / 2ms (139×)

Dwelling place or habitation; predominantly the Tabernacle, Israel's portable wilderness sanctuary.

Derived from the root shakan ('to dwell, settle'), mishkan is the premier term for the place where God's presence rests among his people. In its dominant Pentateuchal usage, it designates the portable wilderness sanctuary—the Tabernacle—described in meticulous detail across Exodus 25–40 and referenced throughout Numbers and Leviticus. Spanish 'tabernáculo,' French 'tabernacle,' and German 'Stiftshütte' all preserve this technical cultic sense. In poetic and prophetic texts, the word broadens to mean any dwelling or habitation—whether God's heavenly abode (Ps 26:8; 46:5), human settlements (Num 24:5, Balaam's oracle over Israel's tents), or even the dwellings of the wicked (Job 18:21; 21:28).

1. Tabernacle, sacred sanctuary (109×) The Tabernacle—Israel's portable sanctuary and tent of meeting, the designated place of God's indwelling presence during the wilderness period and beyond. This sense accounts for 109 of 139 occurrences and dominates the Priestly source in Exodus through Numbers. Cross-lingual glosses are highly technical and consistent: Spanish 'el tabernáculo,' French 'le tabernacle,' German 'die Stiftshütte.' Key passages include the initial divine blueprint (Exod 25:9), the construction details (Exod 26:1–30), and the cloud covering the mishkan at Sinai (Num 9:15). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-tabernacle | es: el-tabernáculo | fr: le-tabernacle | de: die-Stiftshuette Exod 25:9; Exod 26:1; Exod 26:6; Exod 26:7; Exod 26:12

2. dwelling place, habitation (30×) A dwelling place, habitation, or abode in a broader sense—used of God's heavenly or temple dwelling in poetic contexts, or of human and communal habitations. Spanish shifts to 'morada(s),' German to 'Wohnung,' distinguishing this from the technical Tabernacle sense. Balaam's oracle admires Israel's 'dwelling places' (Num 24:5), the psalmist celebrates God's mishkan among his people (Ps 46:5; 26:8), and prophetic warnings target the habitations of enemies (Ezek 25:4) and the wicked. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-dwellings, are-the-dwellings-of, dwelling-places | es: a-moradas-de-él, a-sus-moradas, de-morada-de | fr: [ממשכן], [משכני], de-mes-voisins | de: Stiftshuette-von-, Wohnung, Wohnung- Lev 15:31; Lev 26:11; Num 16:24; Num 16:27; Num 24:5

מַשְׂכֹּרֶת H4909 N-fsc / 2fs (4×)

maskoret — wages, payment for labor; reward for faithfulness

This noun denotes wages or payment earned through service or labor. The term appears exclusively in narrative contexts involving Jacob's service to Laban and Ruth's faithful service to Naomi. In Genesis, it refers to the agreed-upon compensation for Jacob's shepherding work—repeatedly changed by Laban's deception. In Ruth, it takes on a more elevated sense, referring to divine reward for covenant faithfulness and loyal love. The word captures both commercial payment for work rendered and the broader concept of recompense for loyal service.

(4×) Wages or payment for service, used both commercially and theologically. In Genesis 29:15, Laban asks Jacob about his 'wages' (maskoreteka) for shepherding his flocks, establishing the context for the bride-price arrangement. Genesis 31:7 and 41 recount Laban's deceitful manipulation, changing Jacob's 'wages' (maskorti) ten times over fourteen years of service. Ruth 2:12 elevates the concept: Boaz blesses Ruth with 'a full reward' (maskoret shelemah) from YHWH for her loyal love to Naomi and trust in Israel's God. The term thus spans human employer-employee relationships (Genesis) and divine recompense for covenant faithfulness (Ruth). WAGES AND REWARD

en: my-wages, wages-your, your-wages | es: salario-mío, salario-tuyo, tu-recompensa | fr: mon-salaire, salaire-ton, ton-salaire | de: [משכרתך], ist-dein-Lohn, meinen-Lohn Gen 29:15; Gen 31:7; Gen 31:41; Ruth 2:12

מָשַׁל H4910 V-Hifil-Imperf-2ms / 3ms (82×)

To rule, have dominion, reign; in Hifil, to grant dominion or set as ruler over someone or something.

A verb of authority and power, mashal spans the full range of ruling — from raw dominion over persons and things to formal administrative governance and royal sovereignty. In Genesis 1:18 the sun and moon 'rule' the day and night, while in Psalm 8:6 God 'makes humanity ruler' over creation (Hifil causative). Spanish consistently distinguishes gobernar (to govern) from dominar (to dominate), mirroring the Hebrew senses. Arabic translations likewise alternate between hakama (to judge/govern) for administrative contexts and malaka (to reign) for royal ones, confirming these as genuinely distinct uses.

1. Qal: to have dominion, exercise power over (44×) The broadest Qal usage: exercising dominion, mastery, or control over persons, animals, or cosmic bodies. Often carries a nuance of subjugation or imposed authority — the sun ruling the day (Gen 1:18), sin crouching to master Cain (Gen 4:7), or a husband exercising authority over his wife (Gen 3:16). Spanish dominar and Arabic sallata capture this forceful, controlling aspect. RULING AND REIGNING en: and-he-shall-rule, and-he-will-rule, and-rule | es: El-que-gobierna, Y-dominará, dominaban | fr: –régner-, [מושל], chef | de: Herrscher, [ימשל], [תמשול] Gen 1:18; Gen 3:16; Gen 4:7; Gen 37:8

2. Qal: to rule, govern (administrative authority) (27×) Administrative or official governance in the Qal stem: ruling as a governor, overseer, or judge rather than through raw power. Joseph ruling over Egypt (Gen 45:26), or the appointed governor over a district (Ps 105:20). Arabic hakama ('to judge/govern') and French chef/dominer consistently mark this bureaucratic nuance, distinguishing it from sheer dominion. RULING AND REIGNING

en: You-ruled, a-ruler, and-his-ruler | es: Gobernante, al-gobernante-de-, el-que-gobierna | fr: [המושלים], dominer, et-de-dominer | de: Spruch, [מושל], der-herrschte Gen 24:2; 2Chr 23:20; Ps 105:20; Ps 105:21; Prov 23:1

3. Qal: to reign (royal/kingly rule) (8×) Specifically royal or kingly rule — reigning as sovereign. Concentrated in the Judges narratives (Judg 8:22–23; 9:2) where Israel debates whether Gideon and his sons should 'reign' over them. Arabic malaka ('to be king') and German regieren ('to reign') appear here rather than the governance vocabulary, confirming that these passages evoke monarchical sovereignty. RULING AND REIGNING

en: and-ruling, rule-, ruling | es: el-gobernar, gobernar, gobernará | fr: dominer, et-dominer, ruling | de: herrschen-, herrschend, regieren Judg 8:22; Judg 8:23; Judg 9:2

4. Hifil: to cause to rule, grant dominion (3×) The Hifil causative: to cause someone to rule, to grant dominion, to set as ruler over. Only three occurrences — God granting humanity dominion

(Ps 8:6), God possessing sovereign dominion (Job 25:2), and a king bestowing authority (Dan 11:39). Arabic sallata ('to empower, give authority') and Spanish hacer señorear capture the causative force. RULING AND REIGNING

en: and-cause-them-to-rule, dominion, you-make-him-ruler | es: Dominio, Lo-haces-señorear, y-les-dará-dominio | fr: dominer, et-dominer | de: der-Spruch, herrschte, und-regieren Job 25:2; Ps 8:6; Dan 11:39

מָשַׁל H4911a Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjImperf-2mp / 1cs (7×)

To be like, to be compared to, to represent – used in Niphal, Hiphil, and Hithpael for likeness and comparison.

A verb meaning to represent or be like, appearing in several derived stems that explore different facets of comparison. In the Niphal it means 'to become like' or 'to be compared to,' as in the haunting refrain of Psalm 49:12, 20 where humanity in its pomp is 'likened to the beasts that perish.' The Hiphil means 'to compare' – Isaiah 46:5 challenges idolaters: 'To whom will you liken me and make me equal?' The Hithpael in Job 30:19 expresses becoming like dust and ashes. Spanish 'es-semejante' and 'me-hice-semejante' beautifully track these stem distinctions.

to be like, to be compared to (7×) To be like, become similar to, or be compared with another – spanning Niphal (passive/reflexive: 'to be likened'), Hiphil (causative: 'to compare, liken'), and Hithpael (reflexive: 'to make oneself like'). English glosses 'I-am-likened/I-become-like' and Spanish 'es-semejante/me-hice-semejante' capture the reflexive and passive nuances. In Psalm 49:12, 20 the Niphal nimshal declares that even honored humanity is 'compared to' perishing beasts; Psalm 28:1 and 143:7 use it for becoming like those going down to the pit; Isaiah 14:10 taunts Babylon's king as now 'become like us'; Isaiah 46:5 uses the Hiphil in God's rhetorical challenge against idol-makers; Job 30:19 employs the Hithpael for Job's self-description as becoming like dust. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: and-I-am-likened, and-I-become-like, and-I-will-be-like | es: es-semejante, has-sido-asemejado, y-me-hice-semejante | fr: [ותמשלוני], [נמשלת], comparer | de: [ואתמשל], [ותמשלוני], [נמשלת] Job 30:19; Ps 28:1; Ps 49:12; Ps 49:20; Ps 143:7

מָשַׁל H4911b V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (9×)

To use a proverb, speak in parables or poetic sayings; denominative from mashal ('proverb, parable').

This denominative verb, built on the noun mashal ('proverb, parable'), means to compose or recite proverbial speech, whether a taunt, an allegory, or a prophetic parable. It appears most heavily in Ezekiel, where God commands the prophet to 'speak a parable' (Ezek 17:2; 24:3) and where the people complain that Ezekiel is merely 'a maker of parables' (Ezek 20:49). The earliest occurrence comes in Numbers 21:27, where 'those who speak in proverbs' (moshelim) celebrate Israel's victory. Spanish renders the action as 'hablar en proverbio,' while French and German resort to paraphrases, reflecting the difficulty of capturing this specifically Semitic literary concept in a single word.

to use a proverb, speak in parables (9×) To speak in proverbs or parables, to compose or recite proverbial sayings – a denominative verb from mashal. In Numbers 21:27, the moshelim are ballad-singers commemorating conquest. Ezekiel dominates the usage: God commands 'propound a parable' (Ezek 17:2; 24:3), the people quote the proverb 'the days are prolonged' (12:23), and they accuse Ezekiel of being a riddler (20:49). The Spanish gloss 'el que usa proverbio' (one who uses a proverb) and the English 'speak/use a proverb' capture the performative dimension – this is not merely knowing a saying but actively deploying it as rhetoric. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: and-speak, shall-use-proverb, speaking | es: Y-di, el-que-usa-proverbio, es-que-habla | fr: et-ressembler, le-poets, ressembler | de: [המשל], [ומשל], [ימשל] Num 21:27; Ezek 12:23; Ezek 16:44; Ezek 17:2

מָשָׁל H4912 Conj-w (39×)

Proverb, parable, prophetic oracle, or byword; a structured speech form ranging from wisdom saying to taunt

Hebrew mashal is remarkably elastic, covering everything from a pithy folk saying to a solemn prophetic oracle. At its heart lies the idea of a carefully crafted comparison or parallel – the word itself likely derives from a root meaning 'to be like.' The 'Proverbs of Solomon' (Prov 1:1) uses this term for compact wisdom sentences, while Balaam's oracles in Numbers 23-24 and Ezekiel's allegories (Ezek 17:2) show its prophetic reach. Most strikingly, it can denote a person or nation reduced to a 'byword' of derision (Deut 28:37; Ps 44:14), where the structured comparison turns cruelly public.

1. proverb, wisdom saying (16×) A brief, memorable wisdom saying or maxim, the stuff of Israelite sapiential tradition. This is the mashal of Proverbs 1:1 (mishle Shelomo), of Solomon's legendary 3,000 proverbs (1 Kgs 4:32), and of the 'proverb of the ancients' cited by David (1 Sam 24:13). Spanish 'Proverbios de' and English 'proverb' both capture this instructional, quotable quality. Ecclesiastes 12:9 confirms the sage's activity of weighing and arranging meshalim as a literary craft. PARABLE PROVERB BYWORD

en: a-proverb, and-a-proverb, parable | es: Proverbios-de, el-proverbio, proverbio | fr: et-proverbe, parabole, proverb-de | de: Gleichnis, Spruch, Sprueche-von 1Sam 24:13; 1Kgs 4:32; Job 13:12; Prov 1:1; Prov 1:6

2. prophetic oracle, discourse (9×) A prophetic oracle or visionary discourse, especially Balaam's utterances introduced by the formula 'he took up his mashal' (Num 23:7, 18; 24:3, 15, 20-23). French 'son oracle' and English 'his discourse' both register the elevated, inspired quality of these speeches. The oracular mashal differs from the wisdom proverb by its divine source and its poetic, visionary sweep. PARABLE PROVERB BYWORD

en: his-discourse, his-oracle | es: parábola-de-él, su-proverbio | fr: son-oracle, son-proverbe-lui | de: [משלו], sein-oracle Num 23:7; Num 23:18; Num 24:3; Num 24:15; Num 24:20

3. parable, figurative discourse (7×) An extended figurative narrative or allegory used to illustrate spiritual truth. Ezekiel's eagle-and-vine allegory (Ezek 17:2) is explicitly called a mashal, as is the psalmist's 'dark saying' in Psalm 78:2. French 'parabole' and Spanish 'parábola' both draw on Greco-Latin parable terminology, highlighting the comparative, illustrative function. Isaiah 14:4 uses it for the grand taunt-poem against the king of Babylon. PARABLE PROVERB BYWORD

en: a-parable, and-for-proverbs, in-a-parable | es: a-proverbio, en-parábola, la-parábola | fr: [המשל], dans-proverbe, et-parabole | de: Gleichnis, [המשל], in-ein-parable Ps 49:4; Ps 78:2; Isa 14:4; Ezek 14:8; Ezek 17:2

4. byword, taunt-saying (7×) A byword or object lesson – when a person or nation becomes a proverbial example of judgment and disgrace. Deuteronomy 28:37 warns Israel will become 'a mashal and a byword' (lemashol velishnina) among the nations, and Psalm 44:14 laments this fate in exile. Spanish 'para proverbio' and German 'ein byword' both reflect the public, cautionary dimension. The same root that builds wisdom here builds shame. PARABLE PROVERB BYWORD

en: a-byword, and-for-a-byword, as-a-proverb | es: en-proverbio, para-proverbio, por-proverbio | fr: [ולמשל], [למשל], de-proverbe | de: Gleichnis, [ולמשל], ein-byword Deut 28:37; 1Sam 10:12; 1Kgs 9:7; 2Chr 7:20; Ps 44:14

מִשְׁאָל H4913 N-proper-fs (1×)

Mishal, Mashal; a Levitical city in the territory of Asher

This place name designates a city in northern Israel, assigned to the tribe of Asher and later given to the Levites. It appears in different spelling variants across the biblical text, which was common for place names that were transliterated from earlier Canaanite or Egyptian sources. BDB notes the Egyptian connection. The Septuagint's varying renderings reflect uncertainty about the original pronunciation, a frequent issue with ancient toponyms that survived through multiple linguistic transmissions.

(1×) A Levitical city located in the tribal territory of Asher, appearing in Joshua 19:26 and 21:30, with a variant spelling in 1 Chronicles 6:74. The name shows up in Egyptian sources as 'Mi-ša ara,' indicating its pre-Israelite antiquity. The multiple Septuagint variants (Maasa, Masaph, Masala, etc.) demonstrate scribal uncertainty about vocalization, common for ancient Near Eastern place names. As a Levitical city, Mishal was one of the settlements set apart for the priestly tribe rather than being allotted to a landed tribe, making it part of the network of cities supporting Israel's religious infrastructure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Mashal | es: Masal | fr: [משל] | de: [משל] 1Chr 6:74

מְשֹׁל H4914 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (1×)
byword; proverbial saying or object of ridicule
Job laments that he has been made a byword among the peoples—a proverbial example of misfortune, someone whose name is used as a reference point for suffering. The term captures both the idea of a proverb (a saying passed around) and an object of public mockery. Job's suffering has become so notorious that his name itself is used proverbially. It's a profound expression of how personal tragedy can become public spectacle, reducing a person's identity to their calamity.

(1×) Describes Job's status as a byword or proverbial example of suffering in Job 17:6. The term indicates someone who has become a common saying, a reference point when people want to illustrate extreme misfortune. The phrase 'a byword of the peoples' shows how Job's personal tragedy has transcended his individual experience to become public property—people use his name when they want to invoke suffering, much as we might say someone has 'the patience of Job.' The multilingual glosses emphasize both the proverbial aspect (Spanish 'refrán') and the public humiliation inherent in becoming such an example. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-byword-of | es: por-refrán-de | fr: à-למשל | de: zu-Spruch Job 17:6

מָשָׁל H4915a N-msc / 3ms (1×)
equal, likeness; one who is similar or comparable in nature
In God's speech to Job about Leviathan, this word appears in the striking declaration that there is no creature on earth like this beast—'there is not his likeness.' The term conveys equality or comparability, suggesting a match or peer. The point is that Leviathan has no equal among created beings; nothing else compares. It's part of the overwhelming description of this creature's uniqueness and power, used to humble Job by showing him forces in creation utterly beyond his control.

(1×) Refers to an equal, parallel, or comparable entity, used in Job 41:33 (English) / 41:25 (Hebrew) in the declaration that Leviathan has no likeness on earth. The phrase 'his likeness' or 'one like him' emphasizes the creature's uniqueness—there is no peer, no equal, no comparable being among earth's creatures. Spanish 'igual' (equal) captures this sense of parity or matching. The context is God displaying his power through this creature that exceeds human mastery, a being so extraordinary that it stands alone without rival in the created order. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON
en: his-ruler | es: su-igual | fr: son-משלו-lui | de: [משלו] Job 41:33

מָשָׁל H4915b Conj-w / N-msc / 3ms (2×)
dominion, rule; sovereign authority over a realm
This masculine noun denotes royal dominion or sovereign rule. It appears in messianic prophecy (Zechariah 9:10) describing the worldwide reign of the coming king whose dominion will extend from sea to sea, and in Daniel's vision of Alexander the Great, whose vast empire would be divided after his death. The term emphasizes the geographical extent and political authority of royal power, whether the Prince of Peace or the conquering Greek king.

(2×) Found in Daniel 11:4 (describing Alexander's empire) and Zechariah 9:10 (the Messiah's universal rule). The cross-linguistic glosses consistently render this as 'dominion' or 'rule' (English 'dominion', Spanish 'dominio', French 'comparaison' [possibly contextual]), emphasizing the territorial scope and sovereign authority conveyed by the term. DOMINION AND RULE
en: and-his-dominion, like-his-dominion | es: como-dominio-su, y-su-dominio | fr: comparaison, et-comparaison | de: [ומשלו], [כמשלו] Dan 11:4; Zech 9:10

מִשְׁלַח H4916a Prep-l / N-msc (7×)
A sending forth, undertaking, or enterprise – especially what one puts one's hand to in work or livelihood.
A masculine construct noun from the root shalach ('to send'), denoting the act of sending forth one's hand – hence an undertaking, enterprise, or endeavor. It appears almost exclusively in Deuteronomy in the formulaic blessing phrase 'in every undertaking of your hand' (Deut 12:7, 18; 15:10; 23:20; 28:8, 20), where God promises to bless all that one puts one's hand to do. The single occurrence in Isaiah 7:25 shifts to a concrete sense: a place for 'letting loose' of cattle. Spanish 'emprendimiento/obra' and English 'undertaking' consistently highlight purposeful, productive activity.

sending, undertaking, enterprise (7×) The act of sending forth or putting one's hand to something, hence an undertaking, enterprise, or endeavor. English 'undertaking-of' and Spanish 'emprendimiento-de/obra-de' converge on purposeful activity or work. Six of seven occurrences appear in Deuteronomy's blessing formulae: God will bless 'every sending-forth of your hand' (Deut 12:7, 12:18, 15:10, 23:20, 28:8), with 28:20 using the same phrase in a curse context. The expression captures the totality of one's productive labor and livelihood. In Isaiah 7:25 the noun takes a more concrete sense: a place for the 'letting loose' of oxen, parallel to mirmas ('trampling-place') for sheep. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: for-sending-of, undertaking-of | es: emprendimiento-de, lo-que-envíes, obra-de | fr: [למשלח], undertaking-de | de: [למשלח], undertaking-von Deut 12:7; Deut 12:18; Deut 15:10; Deut 23:20; Deut 28:8

מִשְׁלוֹחַ H4916b N-msc (3×)
Outstretching or sending forth, particularly of the hand or gifts
This term describes the action of stretching out or sending forth. Isaiah uses it for territorial conquest—Edom and Moab becoming 'the outstretching of their hand,' meaning territory they seize or possess. Esther employs it for the joyful custom of 'sending portions' of food to one another during Purim celebrations. The root sense involves extension or dispatch: a hand reaching out to grasp, gifts sent forth to share. It captures both aggressive expansion and generous distribution.

(3×) Outstretching or sending forth. Isaiah 11:14 prophesies Israel's future dominance: 'Edom and Moab shall be the outstretching of their hand'—territory they will possess or domain they will stretch their hand over. Esther 9:19, 22 describes Purim customs: 'days of feasting and gladness, and of sending portions of food to one another'—the joyful dispatch of gifts among Jews. The French/German glosses preserve the dual sense of extending (hand) and sending (portions). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-sending, sending-of | es: presa-de, y-envío-de | fr: [ומשלוח], [משלוח] | de: [ומשלוח], [משלוח] Esth 9:19; Esth 9:22; Isa 11:14

מִשְׁלַחַת H4917 N-fsc (2×)
discharge (from military service) or sending (of angels); release or delegation
This feminine noun carries two distinct but related meanings. In Ecclesiastes, it refers to military discharge—there is no release from the warfare of this life, no way to escape the battles one faces. In Psalm 78, it describes a 'sending' or delegation of destroying angels as instruments of divine judgment. Both senses involve movement away from a source: soldiers released from duty, or messengers dispatched on a mission.

(2×) Appears in Psalm 78:49 (a delegation or band of destroying angels) and Ecclesiastes 8:8 (no discharge from warfare). The multilingual evidence reflects both nuances: English 'discharge'/'band', Spanish 'licencia'/'misión', French 'envoi', showing the term encompasses both release from obligation and purposeful sending on assignment. SENDING AND DISPATCHING
en: a-band-of, discharge | es: licencia, misión-de | fr: de-envoi, משלחת | de: [משלחת], ein-band-von Ps 78:49; Eccl 8:8

מְשֻׁלָּם H4918 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (25×)

Meshullam — a common post-exilic Hebrew name meaning 'repaid, recompensed,' borne by at least nine distinct individuals

Meshullam is one of the most frequently recurring proper names in post-exilic literature, borne by at least nine distinct individuals across Kings, Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah. The name derives from the Pual passive of shalem ('to be complete, at peace'), yielding the sense 'one who has been recompensed' or 'devoted, made whole.' The earliest bearer is a grandfather of Shaphan the scribe during Josiah's reform (2 Kgs 22:3). Others include a son of Zerubbabel (1 Chr 3:19), a Gadite clan head (1 Chr 5:13), multiple Benjamites (1 Chr 8:17; 9:7-8; Neh 11:7), and several priests and Levites involved in the restoration (1 Chr 9:11-12; 2 Chr 34:12; Ezra 8:16; 10:15; Neh 3:4, 6, 30; 10:7, 20; 12:13, 25, 33). Two Meshullams worked on rebuilding the Jerusalem wall under Nehemiah. The Septuagint renders the name as Mesoulam or Mosollam. Spanish 'Mesulam' and French 'Meschullam' show minor transliteration variation.

Meshullam (25×) A Hebrew proper name meaning 'repaid' or 'devoted,' derived from the root shalem. Applied to at least nine distinct persons: the grandfather of scribe Shaphan (2 Kgs 22:3), a son of Zerubbabel (1 Chr 3:19), a Gadite chief (1 Chr 5:13), Benjamite clan heads (1 Chr 8:17; 9:7-8), priests and Levites serving in temple or reform contexts (1 Chr 9:11-12; 2 Chr 34:12; Ezra 8:16; 10:15), and wall-builders under Nehemiah (Neh 3:4, 6, 30). The name's frequency reflects its popularity in the Persian-period Judahite community. LXX Mesoulam/Mosollam. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Meshullam, and-Meshullam | es: Meshulam, Mesulam, y-Mesulam | fr: Meschullam, Meshullam, et-Meschullam | de: Meschullam, Meshullam, und-Meschullam 2Kgs 22:3; 1Chr 3:19; 1Chr 5:13; 1Chr 8:17; 1Chr 9:7

מְשֻׁלְמוֹת H4919 N-proper-ms (2×)

Meshillemoth, the name of two Israelite men in the post-exilic period

Meshillemoth appears as a personal name for two different individuals in the Chronicles and Nehemiah. One was an Ephraimite leader during the reign of King Ahaz (2 Chronicles 28), while the other was a priest in post-exilic Jerusalem (Nehemiah 11). The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 9 records a slight variant spelling (Meshillemith), typical of proper names across different textual traditions. Both men lived during critical periods of Israel's history—national crisis and restoration respectively.

(2×) The personal name occurs in 2 Chronicles 28:12 and Nehemiah 11:13, referring to two separate individuals. All translations simply transliterate the name (Meshillemot, Mesilemot), recognizing it as a Hebrew proper noun. The name likely derives from the root meaning 'recompense' or 'retribution,' suggesting divine requital. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Meshillemot | es: Mesilemot | fr: [משלמות] | de: [משלמות] 2Chr 28:12; Neh 11:13

מְשֶׁלֶמְיָה H4920 N-proper-ms (4×)

Meshelemyahu/Meshelemyah — personal name, a Levitical gatekeeper in David's time

This personal name, meaning something like 'YHWH repays' or 'YHWH restores,' belongs to a Levite who served as a gatekeeper in the tabernacle and temple service. The name appears with slight variations (Meshelemyah, Meshelemyahu) and is associated with the Korahite division of temple gatekeepers. Chronicles identifies him as a contemporary of David who organized the gatekeeping duties, and he's likely the same person called Shelemiah or Shallum elsewhere in the genealogies. The Greek versions transliterate the name as Mesollam or Selemias, reflecting its pronunciation variations.

(4×) A Levitical personal name, specifically a Korahite gatekeeper. 1 Chronicles 9:21 identifies 'Meshelemyah son of Kore' as 'gatekeeper of the entrance to the tent of meeting,' a position established in the early period. 1 Chronicles 26:1-2, 9 provides fuller detail: Meshelemyahu (or Meshelemyah) was from the Korahites, had seven sons who also served as gatekeepers, and was part of David's organization of temple duties. The name likely derives from shalam ('repay, restore') plus Yah, suggesting 'YHWH repays.' He may be identical with Shelemiah (26:14) and Shallum (9:17), showing name variations for the same individual. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: And-to-Meshelemyahu, Meshelemyah, Meshelemyahu | es: Meselemías, Y-para-Meselemías | fr: [וּלמשלמיהו], [משלמיה], [משלמיהו] | de: [וּלמשלמיהו], [משלמיה], [משלמיהו] 1Chr 9:21; 1Chr 26:1; 1Chr 26:2; 1Chr 26:9

מְשִׁלֵּמוֹת H4921 N-proper-ms (1×)

Meshillemith; personal name meaning 'retribution' or 'recompense'

This name appears in the genealogical records of post-exilic priests. The person bearing this name was part of the priestly line serving in Jerusalem, mentioned in the context of those who returned from exile or their descendants. The name itself derives from roots related to recompense or making whole. It shows up with slight spelling variations in parallel passages, which was typical for personal names in genealogical lists that were copied and preserved across different textual traditions.

(1×) A priest mentioned in 1 Chronicles 9:12 among those serving in Jerusalem, with a parallel reference in Nehemiah 11:13. The name Meshillemith appears in variant forms (Meshillemoth elsewhere), reflecting typical scribal variations in genealogical transmission. The Septuagint's multiple renderings (Mosolamoth, Maselomoth, etc.) show how Greek transliterators struggled with Hebrew names. As a priestly name, it may have been chosen to reflect themes of divine justice or completion, the root suggesting recompense or restitution. The person was part of the restored community maintaining temple worship after the exile. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Meshillemit | es: Mesilemit | fr: [משלמית] | de: [משלמית] 1Chr 9:12

מְשֻׁלֶּמֶת H4922 N-proper-fs (1×)

Meshullemeth; personal name meaning 'paid back' or 'recompensed'

This woman was the mother of King Amon of Judah, making her the queen mother during his reign and the wife of the notably wicked King Manasseh. In the royal records, the queen mother's name is consistently preserved, reflecting her significant political and social position. The name suggests themes of recompense or completion. Her identity connects her to one of Judah's darkest periods, as both her husband Manasseh and her son Amon are remembered for their idolatry.

(1×) The mother of King Amon mentioned in 2 Kings 21:19, wife of King Manasseh. Her name appears in the regnal formula that introduces Amon's brief and evil reign in Judah. The Septuagint variants (Messollam, Massalaameith) show Greek attempts at transliteration. As queen mother, Meshullemeth would have held significant social and political influence in Judah's court. Her mention is part of the pattern where Scripture records the mother's name for each king of Judah, acknowledging the queen mother's importance in dynastic succession and palace politics. She was grandmother to the reformer king Josiah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Meshulemet | es: Mesulemeth | fr: Meshulemet | de: Meshulemet 2Kgs 21:19

מְשַׁמָּה H4923 Prep-l / N-fp (7×)

Devastation, desolation, waste – the ruined state of land laid waste by divine judgment; also horror at such ruin.

A feminine noun synonymous with shammah, denoting devastation, desolation, or the horrifying waste left after divine judgment. Ezekiel uses it repeatedly when pronouncing doom on the land of Israel: 'I will make the land a desolation and a waste' (Ezek 6:14; 33:28-29; 35:3, 7). In Ezekiel 5:15 it extends to mean the 'horror' that Jerusalem's fate will evoke among the nations. The plural meshammot appears in Isaiah 15:6 and Jeremiah 48:34 for the dried-up, ruined waters of Moab. French 'desolation' and German 'Entsetzen' (horror) together capture the word's double edge: both the physical ruin and the emotional shock it produces.

devastation, desolation (7×) Devastation, desolation, or waste – the ruined condition of land or places after catastrophic judgment, and by extension the horror or appalling reaction such ruin provokes. French 'desolation' and German 'Entsetzen' (horror) together illustrate the word's semantic range. In Ezekiel 6:14 and 33:28-29 God declares he will make the land 'a desolation and a waste' (shemamah u-meshammah), with the near-synonym intensifying the picture; Ezekiel 35:3, 7 applies the same to Mount Seir. In Ezekiel 5:15 the nuance shifts toward horror: Jerusalem will become a 'reproach and a horror' to surrounding nations. The plural in Isaiah 15:6 and Jeremiah 48:34 describes Moab's waters gone dry – a landscape of total ruin. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: and-devastation, and-horror, and-waste | es: desoladas, en-desolación, y-desolada, | fr: [למשמות], [משמות], et-désolation | de: [למשמות], [משמות], und-Entsetzen Isa 15:6; Jer 48:34; Ezek 5:15; Ezek 6:14; Ezek 33:28

שָׁמָן H4924a Prep-m / N-mpc (2×)

fatness, fertile places; rich agricultural land or abundance

This plural construct form appears in Isaac's twin blessings to Jacob and Esau, describing 'the fatness of the earth'—prime agricultural land producing abundant crops. The identical phrase appears in both Genesis 27:28 and 27:39, though interpreters debate whether Esau's blessing promises the same fertility (partitive 'from') or denies it (privative 'away from'). Either way, the term evokes the richness of well-watered soil yielding grain, wine, and oil in abundance.

(2×) Found in Genesis 27:28 and 27:39, both in Isaac's prophetic blessings over his sons. The cross-linguistic glosses consistently render this as 'fatness' or 'richness' (English 'fatness', Spanish 'grosura', French 'graisse', German 'Fettgefilden'), emphasizing the agricultural fertility and material prosperity associated with blessed land. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-fatness-of, from-fatness-of | es: de-grosura-de, y-de-grosura-de | fr: de-graisse-de, et-de-graisse-de | de: fern-von-den-Fettgefilden, und-von-den-Fettgefilden Gen 27:28; Gen 27:39

מִשְׁמָן H4924b Conj-w / N-msc (4×)

mishman — fatness, fat ones; stout/vigorous persons or fertile places

This noun derives from the root meaning 'fat' or 'oil,' and carries both abstract and concrete meanings: the quality of fatness, or concrete references to fat/stout people or fertile regions. In prophetic literature, it appears in contexts of judgment against arrogance and strength, or describing the richness of conquered lands. The term can denote prosperous, well-fed individuals (often with negative connotations of pride or complacency), or metaphorically describe the richest, most desirable parts of a territory. The imagery consistently connects physical abundance with either divine judgment or blessing.

(4×) Fatness, either as abstract quality or concrete references to stout persons or fertile regions. Psalm 78:31 uses it for 'the stoutest among them' (mishmanneihem)—the strongest Israelites struck down in the wilderness despite being well-fed. Isaiah 10:16 prophesies that God will send wasting sickness 'among his stout warriors' (mishmannayw), contrasting their vigorous appearance with coming emaciation. Isaiah 17:4 warns 'the fatness of his flesh will waste away' (mishman besaro yerazeh)—Ephraim's prosperity will vanish. Daniel 11:24 describes an invader entering 'the richest parts of the province' (mishmannei medinah), seizing the most fertile, prosperous areas. The term thus denotes either robust persons or rich territories, usually facing divine judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: among-his-fat-ones, among-their-stout-ones, and-fatness-of | es: en-sus-robustos, entre-robustos-de-ellos, y-en-lo-más-rico-de | fr: [במשמניו], [ומשמן], dans-graisse | de: [במשמניו], [ובמשמני], [ומשמן] Ps 78:31; Isa 10:16; Isa 17:4; Dan 11:24

מַשְׁמַנִּים H4924c N-mp (1×)

rich foods, delicacies; fatty, choice portions of meat

This term appears in Nehemiah's celebration when the people gather to hear the Law read after their return from exile. Nehemiah instructs them to eat rich foods and drink sweet drinks—this is a day of joy, not mourning. The word emphasizes fatty, choice portions, the best parts of meat that would be reserved for festive occasions. Paired with sweet drinks, it represents a full celebration, the kind of feast that marks significant religious and communal joy.

(1×) Denotes rich, fatty portions of food, specifically mentioned in Nehemiah 8:10 as part of celebrating the reading of the Law. The term is paired with 'sweet drinks,' creating a picture of full festive celebration. Spanish 'manjares' (delicacies, special dishes) captures the sense of choice foods reserved for celebrations. The context is Nehemiah's instruction to the people to rejoice rather than mourn—they should eat the best foods because 'the joy of the Lord is your strength.' These fatty portions represent abundance and celebration, appropriate for marking sacred moments in Israel's restored community life. OLIVE OIL

en: rich-foods | es: manjares | fr: [משמנים] | de: [משמנים] Neh 8:10

מַשְׁמַנָּה H4925 N-proper-ms (1×)

Mishmannah; personal name possibly meaning 'fatness' or 'abundance'

This name belongs to one of David's mighty warriors who joined him at Ziklag when he was fleeing from Saul. These men are described as ambidextrous warriors from the tribe of Benjamin, skilled in battle and fiercely loyal to David even when it was dangerous to support him. The name may derive from roots related to fatness or richness. The Septuagint's varied attempts at rendering this name show the challenges of transliterating Hebrew personal names into Greek.

(1×) One of the Benjaminite warriors who joined David at Ziklag according to 1 Chronicles 12:11 (verse 10 in some systems). These were fighting men who defected from Saul's forces to support David during his period as a fugitive. The name appears in a list that emphasizes the military prowess of these early supporters, described as 'mighty men of valor.' The Septuagint's variants (Masemannē, etc.) reflect transliteration difficulties. As one of David's early supporters in his time of danger, Mishmannah was part of the core group whose loyalty helped establish David's eventual kingship. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mishmannach | es: Mismana | fr: [משמנה] | de: [משמנה] 1Chr 12:11

מִשְׁמָע H4926 Prep-l / N-msc (1×)

hearing; what is heard by the ears, auditory perception

Isaiah uses this term in his messianic prophecy about the righteous judge who will not decide based on superficial perception. Just as he won't judge by sight, he won't judge 'by the hearing of his ears'—by mere auditory evidence or secondhand reports. The phrase emphasizes going beyond surface-level information to discern true justice. It's part of the Spirit-empowered wisdom that characterizes the coming ruler, who penetrates beyond appearance and rumor to truth.

(1×) Refers to what is heard or perceived through the ears, used in Isaiah 11:3 in the context of the Messiah's judgment. The phrase 'by the hearing of his ears' parallels 'by the sight of his eyes,' both describing superficial ways of gathering information. The point is that the Spirit-anointed ruler will judge with deeper wisdom than can be obtained through ordinary sensory perception. He won't make decisions based merely on what he hears reported or rumored, just as he won't judge by visual appearance alone. This represents a profound level of discernment that goes beyond surface evidence to true justice. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-hearing-of | es: por-oído-de | fr: [למשמע] | de: [למשמע] Isa 11:3

מִשְׁמָע H4927 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Mishma — personal name in Ishmaelite and Simeonite genealogies

Mishma is a personal name appearing in two distinct genealogical contexts in the Hebrew Bible. The name, possibly meaning 'hearing' or 'report,' identifies both an Ishmaelite tribal ancestor (son of Ishmael) and a Simeonite clan head. This dual usage reflects the common biblical pattern of names appearing across different tribal lineages. The Septuagint renders it as Masama or Masman, preserving the name in Greek transliteration. Though the name appears only in genealogical lists, it represents recognized family or clan identities preserved in Israel's tribal records.

(4×) A personal name borne by two individuals in Israel's genealogies: (1) A son of Ishmael, listed among the twelve Ishmaelite tribal heads in Genesis 25:14 and the parallel genealogy in 1 Chronicles 1:30. This places Mishma among Abraham's descendants through Hagar, representing an Arabian tribal name. (2) A descendant in the tribe of Simeon, appearing in the genealogy at 1 Chronicles 4:25-26, where the lineage runs through Shaul to Mishma and his descendants. The name likely derives from shama ('hear'), possibly meaning 'hearing' or 'hearsay,' though the exact significance is uncertain. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mishma, and-Mishma | es: Misma, y-Mishma | fr: Mishma, et-Mishma | de: [משמע], und-Mischma Gen 25:14; 1Chr 1:30; 1Chr 4:25; 1Chr 4:26

מִשְׁמַעַת H4928 N-fsc / 3mp (4×)

mishmaat — bodyguard, obedient band; those bound to serve or submit

This noun, from the root 'to hear/obey,' denotes a body of people bound by obedience—either a military bodyguard unit or subjects under authority. The term emphasizes the relationship of disciplined service and submission rather than generic soldiery. It appears in contexts describing elite military units in close service to the king (David's guard), and metaphorically in prophecy to describe future subjugation of enemy peoples. The concept connects hearing, obeying, and loyal service into a single term denoting those who 'hearken' to their commander.

(4×) An obedient band or bodyguard, emphasizing loyal service. 1 Samuel 22:14 defends Jonathan as 'captain over your bodyguard (mishmatteka),' indicating an elite unit close to the king. 2 Samuel 23:23 and its parallel 1 Chronicles 11:25 describe a warrior honored 'over his guard' (mishmaato)—a position of trust in David's military organization. Isaiah 11:14 uses it metaphorically in prophecy: 'the sons of Ammon shall be their subjects (mishmattam),' parallel to 'Moab shall be the extension of their hand'—both depicting future Israelite dominion. The Moabite Stone inscription (line 28) uses the same term, confirming its meaning as those bound to obedient service. OBEY HEARKEN

en: his-bodyguard, his-guard, their-obedience | es: su-guardia, su-obediencia, tu-consejo | fr: [משמעתו], [משמעתם], son-bodyguard | de: [משמעתו], [משמעתם], dein-council 1Sam 22:14; 2Sam 23:23; 1Chr 11:25; Isa 11:14

מִשְׁמָר H4929 Art / N-ms (22×)

A guard, watch, or watch-post; a place of confinement or custody; an assigned post or duty of service.

Mishmar derives from the root shamar ('to keep, guard') and names the activity, location, and institution of guarding. In Nehemiah 4:9-23 it denotes the physical watch that defended Jerusalem's walls during rebuilding. In the Joseph narrative (Gen 40-42), it designates the prison or custody where Pharaoh's officers and later Joseph's brothers are held. The word also extends to assigned service duties, as in Nehemiah 7:3 and 13:14, where Levitical guard posts and temple obligations are in view. Assyrian massartu and the broader Semitic root confirm this constellation of watching, confining, and duty-keeping.

1. guard, watch (11×) The act of guarding or keeping watch, or the group of guards performing that duty. Nehemiah 4:9 and 4:22-23 describe the round-the-clock watch maintained during Jerusalem's rebuilding. Jeremiah 51:12 calls for strengthening the watch against Babylon. Spanish 'guardia' and French 'garde' render this protective vigilance consistently across translations. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: guard, guarding, the-guard | es: cosa-guardada, guardia, guardia? | fr: [המשמר], der-garde, garde | de: [המשמר], [משמר], von-bewahrte 1Chr 26:16; Neh 4:9; Neh 4:22; Neh 4:23

2. custody, confinement (8×) A place of confinement, custody, or imprisonment. In Genesis 40:3-7 and 41:10 it refers to the house of the captain of the guard where Joseph interprets dreams, and in Genesis 42:17 Joseph places his brothers in custody for three days. Leviticus 24:12 and Numbers 15:34 use it for temporary detention in the camp pending divine verdict. German 'Gewahrsam' precisely captures this custodial sense. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: custody, in-custody, in-custody-of | es: custodia, custodia-vuestra, en-custodia | fr: custody, dans-custody, dans-custody-de | de: Gewahrsam, eures-Gewahrsams, in-Gewahrsam Gen 40:3; Gen 40:4; Gen 40:7; Gen 41:10; Gen 42:17

3. post, assigned duty (3×) An assigned guard post, watch station, or prescribed service obligation. Nehemiah 7:3 assigns each person to stand guard at his post, and Nehemiah 13:14 records Levitical duties for the temple. Ezekiel 38:7 uses it of military readiness as a reserve or guard force. This sense emphasizes the institutional assignment rather than the act of watching or the place of confinement. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: and-in-its-watches, as-guard, at-his-post | es: en-su-guardia, por-guardia., y-en-servicios-de-él | fr: et-garde, garde | de: [במשמרו], [ובמשמריו], [למשמר] Neh 7:3; Neh 13:14; Ezek 38:7

מַסְמֵר H4930 Conj-w (1×)

nails; metal fasteners used to secure objects together

This word appears in several contexts describing metal spikes or fasteners. Ecclesiastes uses it metaphorically, comparing the collected words of the wise to firmly planted nails. Isaiah mentions nails in the context of securing idols. Chronicles specifies nails of gold and iron used in temple construction. The term encompasses various types of metal fasteners, from small pins to large spikes. The comparison in Ecclesiastes is particularly striking—true wisdom, like a well-driven nail, stays firmly in place.

(1×) Metal nails or spikes used as fasteners, mentioned in Ecclesiastes 12:11 in a simile comparing wise sayings to nails firmly planted. The term appears with the conjunction 'like nails' in a passage describing how the words of the wise are like goads and firmly embedded nails—they pierce and they stay fixed. The multilingual evidence consistently identifies these as fasteners or spikes. The metaphor in Ecclesiastes suggests permanence and reliability: just as a well-driven nail holds firm, truly wise words remain stable and secure. The image combines the penetrating quality (like goads) with staying power (like nails). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7952 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-like-nails | es: y-como-clavos | fr: et-וכמשמרות | de: [וכמשמרות] Eccl 12:11

מִשְׁמֶרֶת H4931 Prep-l / N-fs (78×)

Guard, watch, charge, duty; an obligation or post of responsibility, especially Levitical service; also custody, safekeeping, and divine ordinance.

Mishmeret is the noun of obligation derived from shamar ('to keep, guard'), and it carries that verb's full range into institutional form. At its core stands the Levitical charge — the sacred duty of guarding and maintaining the tabernacle, its furnishings, and its boundaries. Numbers 3-4 and 18 use mishmeret dozens of times to define what the Levitical clans must protect, carry, and serve, and this cultic-custodial sense dominates the word's profile. But the range extends outward: God entrusts his mishmeret to Abraham (Gen 26:5) as divine commandment; the manna is placed in mishmeret for safekeeping (Exod 16:32-34); watchmen stand at their mishmeret posts (Isa 21:8; Hab 2:1); and the temple singers rotate in their mishmeret shifts (1 Chr 25:8; Neh 12:9). Spanish guarda/encargo and German Dienst/Auftrag each capture a slice, but no single word spans from 'guard post' to 'divine ordinance' — a range that reveals how deeply Israel understood religious duty as sacred watchfulness.

1. charge, assigned duty (54×) Assigned charge, sacred duty — the dominant sense at 54 occurrences, overwhelmingly in the Levitical legislation of Numbers and Chronicles. The Levites are charged with mishmeret ha-mishkan, the 'charge of the tabernacle' (Num 1:53; 3:7-8, 25, 28, 31, 32, 36, 38), covering everything from the curtains and frames to the altar vessels. Each clan — Gershonites, Kohathites, Merarites — receives its specific mishmeret. Spanish encargo de ('charge of') and French charge de match the obligation semantics precisely. The word implies both privilege and accountability: to hold a mishmeret is to be entrusted with something worth guarding. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: charge-of, guard-of | es: encargo-de, guarda-de, guardia-de | fr: charge-de, fonction | de: Auftrag-von, Dienst Lev 8:35; Num 1:53; Num 3:7; Num 3:8; Num 3:25

2. custody, safekeeping (9×) Custody, safekeeping, protective storage — 9 occurrences where something precious is placed under watch. The Passover lamb is kept le-mishmeret ('in safekeeping') until the fourteenth day (Exod 12:6); the pot of manna is laid up le-mishmeret ('for keeping') before the testimony (Exod 16:23, 32-34); David's concubines are placed in bet mishmeret ('a house of confinement,' 2 Sam 20:3). Spanish custodia/guarda and the English distinction between 'custody' and 'duty' both confirm this as a separate sense from institutional obligation. The emphasis is on protective enclosure — keeping something safe from harm or contamination. GUARDS AND WATCHERS

en: confinement, for-keeping, safekeeping | es: bajo-guarda, custodia, para-guarda | fr: confinement, pour-gardant, safekeeping | de: confinement, fuer-keeping, safekeeping Exod 12:6; Exod 16:23; Exod 16:32; Exod 16:33; Exod 16:34

3. commandment, ordinance (6×) Commandment, divine ordinance — 6 occurrences where mishmeret refers to God's broader moral or covenantal requirements, not specifically Levitical service. The foundational passage is Gen 26:5: Abraham kept God's mishmeret, mitzvot, chuqqot, and torot — a comprehensive enumeration of divine instruction. Lev 18:30 and 22:9 use the term for God's charge to maintain holiness, and Deut 11:1 pairs it with chuqqah and mishpat. Spanish ordenanza and German Auftrag ('commission') capture the authoritative quality. Unlike sense 1's institutional specificity, this sense operates at the level of personal covenant obligation between God and the individual or nation. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: His-charge, charge-my, his-charge | es: encargo-suyo, mi-ordenanza, ordenanza | fr: charge-mon, garde, mon-charge | de: Auftrag-mein, [משמרתו], [משמרתי] Gen 26:5; Lev 18:30; Lev 22:9; Deut 11:1; Zech 3:7

4. watch, shift, rotation (5×) Watch, shift, rotation of duty — 5 occurrences describing the temporal organization of service. The Levitical gatekeepers serve by mishmeret rotations (1 Chr 9:23; 25:8; 26:12), and Nehemiah organizes the post-exilic temple personnel into mishmeret divisions (Neh 12:9; 13:30). Spanish turnos ('shifts') and por turnos ('in rotation') capture the scheduling dimension precisely. This sense extends the root meaning of 'guarding' into administrative structure — not what is guarded, but when and by whom the guarding occurs. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: duties, for-watches, watch | es: en-guardias, por-turnos, turno | fr: fonction | de: Dienst, Dienstordnungen, [למשמרות] 1Chr 9:23; 1Chr 25:8; 1Chr 26:12; Neh 12:9; Neh 13:30

5. guard post, watch station (3×) Guard post, watch station — 3 occurrences where mishmeret denotes the physical location of watchfulness. Isaiah 21:8 places the watchman at his mishmeret (parallel to mitspeh, 'lookout point'); Habakkuk 2:1 declares 'I will stand on my mishmeret and station myself on the rampart.' In 1 Chr 9:27 the gatekeepers lodge around the temple because the mishmeret belongs to them. Spanish guardia/mi guardia and the spatial context confirm a concrete, locative sense — not the obligation of watching, but the place where one watches. Habakkuk's prophetic appropriation is especially powerful: the prophet transforms a military post into a station of spiritual vigilance. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: my-guard-post, my-watch, watch | es: guardia, mi-guardia | fr: [משמרתי], fonction, garde | de: Dienst, [משמרתי] 1Chr 9:27; Isa 21:8; Hab 2:1

6. (1×) Guards (plural, persons serving as watchmen) — 1 occurrence at Neh 7:3 where Nehemiah stations mishmeret ('guards') at Jerusalem's gates from among the city's inhabitants. Spanish guardias de confirms the personal, agentive reading. This represents a metonymic extension from the abstract duty (sense 1) or the physical post (sense 5) to the concrete persons who perform the guarding. Its rarity as a standalone sense — most other guard-person references use the participle shomer — suggests it may be a contextual shorthand rather than a fully lexicalized meaning. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: guards | es: guardias-de | fr: fonction | de: [משמרות] Neh 7:3

מִשְׁנֶה H4932 Prep-l / N-ms (35×)

Double, copy, second; a noun denoting twofold quantity, ordinal rank, or a written duplicate

A versatile noun built on the root for 'repeating' or 'doing again,' mishneh covers three core ideas: something doubled in quantity, something second in order, and a written copy. When Jacob sends his sons back to Egypt with 'double money' (Gen 43:12), the word conveys twofold amount. When applied to persons, it marks rank — Pharaoh's second-in-command (Gen 41:43) or David's second son (2 Sam 3:3). Most memorably, Deuteronomy 17:18 commands the king to write a mishneh of the Torah, a 'copy of the law,' a usage that gave the Mishnah its name. The word even names a Jerusalem neighborhood, the Second Quarter, where the prophetess Huldah lived.

1. second (ordinal rank or position) (18×) Denotes second position in ordinal rank or sequence — used substantively for the second-in-command (Gen 41:43, where multilingual translations consistently render 'second' or 'deputy'), the second-born son (1 Sam 8:2; 2 Sam 3:3), or items in second place. Spanish 'segundo' and French 'deuxième' confirm the ordinal reading across all 18 occurrences. SECOND (ORDINAL NUMBER)

en: and-his-second, and-second-his, and-second-to-him | es: Y-segundo-suyo, el-segundo, el-segundo-orden | fr: [המשנה], comme-deuxième, deuxième | de: [המשנה], [המשנים], [ומשנהו] Gen 41:43; 1Sam 8:2; 1Sam 17:13; 1Sam 23:17; 2Sam 3:3

2. double, twofold amount (11×) Indicates a twofold or doubled quantity — 'double money' in Gen 43:12,15, 'double bread' for the sixth-day manna portion (Exod 16:5,22), or 'double their iniquity' in Jeremiah 16:18. German and Spanish translations consistently use terms for 'double' (doble, doppelt), distinguishing this clearly from the ordinal sense. DOUBLE TWOFOLD

en: and-double, and-double-, double | es: al-doble, doble, el-doble | fr: [ומשנה], [משנה], de-année | de: [ומשנה], [למשנה], [משנה] Gen 43:12; Gen 43:15; Exod 16:5; Exod 16:22; Deut 15:18

3. Second Quarter (district of Jerusalem) (3×) A proper toponym for the Second Quarter (ha-Mishneh) of Jerusalem, a residential district in the newer western section of the city. Huldah the prophetess 'dwelt in the Second Quarter' (2 Kgs 22:14; 2 Chr 34:22), and Zephaniah 1:10 foretells a cry from this district. Translations treat it as a place name rather than a common noun. SECOND (ORDINAL NUMBER)

en: in-the-Second-Quarter, in-the-second-quarter, the-second-quarter | es: el-Segundo-Barrio, en-el-segundo-barrio | fr: dans-le-deuxième-quarter, double | de: [במשנה], [המשנה], in-der-zweiter-quarter 2Kgs 22:14; 2Chr 34:22; Zeph 1:10

4. copy (of a document) (2×) A written copy or duplicate of a document, most notably in Deuteronomy 17:18 where the king must write 'a copy of this Torah' (mishneh hattorah), and Joshua 8:32 where Joshua inscribes a copy of Moses' law on stones. This sense underlies the later rabbinic title 'Mishnah' for the codified oral law. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-copy-of, copy-of | es: copia-de | fr: copy-de, un-copy-de | de: copy-von, ein-copy-von Deut 17:18; Josh 8:32

5. fatlings, choice animals (1×) A rare use in 1 Samuel 15:9 apparently denoting 'fatlings' or choice livestock — possibly derived from the sense of 'second-quality' fattened animals or animals of the best grade among the spoils. The Spanish rendering 'los segundos' preserves the etymological link to 'second,' while English traditions opt for 'fatlings,' reflecting an interpretive tradition attested in the Targum. FATNESS AND RICHNESS

en: and-the-fatlings | es: y-los-segundos | fr: et-le-fatlings | de: und-der-fatlings 1Sam 15:9

מִשְׁסָּה H4933 N-fs (7×)

Plunder, spoil, booty – goods seized by conquest, especially as an expression of divine judgment on a people.

A feminine noun meaning plunder, spoil, or booty – the goods and possessions seized during military conquest or raiding. It appears primarily in prophetic pronouncements of divine judgment, where being given 'for plunder' signals total vulnerability to enemies. In 2 Kings 21:14 God declares he will make the remnant of Israel 'a plunder and a spoil to all their enemies.' Isaiah 42:22, 24 laments Jacob given over for plunder with none to deliver. Jeremiah 30:16 promises reversal: those who plundered Israel will themselves become spoil. Spanish 'saqueo/despojo' captures the violent dispossession at the heart of this word.

plunder, spoil, booty (7×) Plunder, spoil, or booty – goods and possessions violently seized in conquest or raids, particularly as the consequence of divine judgment against a people. Spanish 'saqueo/despojo' and English 'plunder/spoil' consistently convey violent dispossession. The word typically appears in the formula hayah limeshissah ('to become plunder'), often paired with baz ('spoil') for emphasis. In 2 Kings 21:14 God gives the remnant of his inheritance as plunder to enemies; Isaiah 42:22 describes Jacob as robbed and plundered with no rescuer; Isaiah 42:24 asks rhetorically who gave Jacob for spoil; Jeremiah 30:16 reverses the image in a salvation oracle; Zephaniah 1:13 pairs it with shemamah (desolation); Habakkuk 2:7 warns the oppressor that he will become plunder for his victims. PLUNDER AND SPOIL
en: and-for-spoil, for-plunder, for-spoil | es: [al-saqueo], al-saqueo, para-despojo | fr: [(למשסה)], [[למשוסה]], [למשסה] | de: [(למשסה)], [[למשוסה]], [למשסה] 2Kgs 21:14; Isa 42:22; Isa 42:24; Jer 30:16

מִשְׁעוֹל H4934 Prep-b / N-msc (1×)
narrow path; road enclosed or restricted on both sides
This word appears in the memorable story of Balaam's donkey, describing the constricted path between vineyard walls where the animal crushed Balaam's foot. The term emphasizes restriction—not an open road but a passage hemmed in on both sides. It's part of the narrative's escalating constraint: first an open field, then this narrow passage, finally a place so tight there's no room to turn. The physical constriction mirrors Balaam's increasing spiritual entrapment.

(1×) A narrow, enclosed path described in Numbers 22:24, specifically identified as a way between vineyard walls. The phrase 'path of the vineyards' indicates a restricted passage where walls or hedges on both sides create a confined space. This is the second location where Balaam's donkey encounters the angel—more restricted than the open field earlier but not yet as constricted as the narrow place ahead. Spanish 'sendero' (path) and German 'Pfad' capture the sense of a way less open than a road, a passage where lateral movement is constrained by the enclosing vineyards. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-path-of | es: en-sendero-de | fr: dans-sentier-de | de: in-Pfad-von Num 22:24

מִשְׁעִי H4935 Prep-l / Adv (1×)
cleansing; ritual or physical washing for purification
Ezekiel uses this rare word in his allegory of Jerusalem as an abandoned infant. Among the acts of care that were not performed for the newborn was washing for cleansing. BDB notes significant textual uncertainty about this word, with different ancient versions interpreting it variously. The Vulgate connects it to salvation, the Targum to cleansing. The basic sense seems to be some kind of purifying wash, part of the normal care that should have been given to a newborn but was neglected in Jerusalem's origins.

(1×) Washing or cleansing, mentioned in Ezekiel 16:4 in the context of care not given to a newborn infant. The phrase 'not washed for cleansing' is part of a series of neglects describing Jerusalem's abandoned origins. BDB notes substantial textual difficulties, with ancient versions diverging: Vulgate reads 'for salvation,' Targum 'for cleansing.' The form itself is unusual, making scholars question the reading. The context clearly involves purification or cleaning appropriate for a newborn, whether ritual washing or simple hygiene. Spanish 'para limpiarte' (to clean you) reflects the cleansing interpretation, emphasizing the tender care that was tragically absent. DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: for-cleansing | es: para-limpiarte | fr: écurer | de: [למשעי] Ezek 16:4

מִשְׁעָם H4936 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Misham; personal name of uncertain etymology
This name appears in the genealogies of Benjamin, listed among the family heads who lived in various Benjaminite towns. It occurs in the context of detailed tribal records that were important for maintaining land inheritance and family identity, especially after the exile. The Septuagint's variant spellings show the usual challenges of rendering Hebrew names into Greek. Such genealogical lists, while sometimes seeming dry to modern readers, were vital documents establishing legal and social identity in ancient Israel.

(1×) A Benjaminite name mentioned in 1 Chronicles 8:12 in the genealogical records of that tribe. The name appears with a conjunction 'and Misham' as part of a list of family heads. The Septuagint variants (Messaam, Mesoam) reflect Greek transliteration attempts. The context is the rebuilding of Benjaminite family records, listing those who constructed cities and established settlements. As part of these genealogies, Misham's inclusion helped establish family lineages and land claims in the post-exilic period when such documentation was crucial for community reorganization. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Misham | es: y-Misam | fr: [ומשעם] | de: [ומשעם] 1Chr 8:12

מִשְׁעָן H4937a N-msc (4×)
mishan — support, staff, sustaining provision (literal or figurative)
This masculine noun means 'support' or 'staff,' denoting something that upholds or sustains. While the basic image is a physical staff or prop, biblical usage quickly moves to metaphorical application: God as support in trouble, or essential provisions (bread and water) as the supports of life. The term appears exclusively in poetic texts (Samuel, Psalms, Isaiah), where it functions both literally—staff as support—and figuratively—God or basic resources as that which sustains life. Isaiah 3:1 uses it in a wordplay listing various kinds of 'support' being removed from Jerusalem.

(4×) Support, staff, or sustaining provision. 2 Samuel 22:19 and its parallel Psalm 18:18 declare 'YHWH was my support' (mishani), using the image of a staff or prop to describe God's sustaining help in distress. Isaiah 3:1 contains a wordplay: God will remove 'every support of bread and every support of water' (kol mishan-lechem vekol mishan-mayim)—likely a later gloss expanding the metaphor, but emphasizing that basic provisions are the 'supports' or 'staffs' of life. Some commentators see the Isaiah passage as redundant, but it effectively pictures food and water as props holding up existence, which God can remove as judgment. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2770 WITH 3 SENSES
en: a-support, supply-of, support | es: apoyo, apoyo-de, por-apoyo | fr: soutien, support, à-appui | de: [משען], ein-stützen, support 2Sam 22:19; Ps 18:18; Isa 3:1

מַשְׁעֵן H4937b N-ms (1×)
support, supply; that which sustains or upholds
Isaiah uses this word in a prophecy of coming judgment on Jerusalem. The Lord will remove 'support and staff'—the paired masculine and feminine forms emphasizing totality. This refers to all the resources that sustain society: food, water, leadership, military strength. The word captures what a community leans on, what holds it up. When God withdraws this support, society collapses. It's a comprehensive judgment affecting every foundation of social stability.

(1×) Refers to support or supply that sustains a community, used in Isaiah 3:1 paired with its feminine counterpart to indicate comprehensive removal of all sustaining resources. The phrase 'supply and support' or 'support and staff' uses both grammatical genders to express totality—every kind of sustaining resource. The context lists what this includes: bread, water, warriors, judges, prophets—everything a society relies on for stability. Spanish 'apoyo' (support) captures the sense of what holds something up. The metaphor is physical (like a staff that helps one walk) but the application is social and political—the infrastructure of civilized life. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2770 WITH 3 SENSES

en: supply | es: apoyo | fr: soutien | de: [משען] Isa 3:1

מַשְׁעֵנָה H4938a Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

support, staff; that which one leans on for stability

This feminine counterpart to the previous word appears in the same Isaiah passage, paired for emphatic completeness. Together, 'support and staff' represent every form of sustaining resource. The feminine form may suggest a slightly different nuance—perhaps more abstract support versus the more physical masculine 'staff'—but the pairing's main function is rhetorical emphasis. When both forms appear together, it means 'every kind of support imaginable.' The coming judgment will be comprehensive.

(1×) The feminine form of 'support,' paired with the masculine form in Isaiah 3:1 to emphasize complete removal of all sustaining resources from Jerusalem. Using both grammatical genders 'exhausts the category' (as BDB notes), meaning 'support of every kind.' The conjunction 'and support' links this to the previous term, creating a comprehensive merism—everything from most tangible to most abstract that keeps society functioning. The judgment will strip away not just some supports but all of them, leaving the community without any foundation to stand on, whether material, political, or spiritual. LEAN RELY TRUST

en: and-support | es: y-sostén | fr: [ומשענה] | de: [ומשענה] Isa 3:1

מִשְׁעֶנֶת H4938b Art / N-fs (11×)

Staff, walking stick, support rod — a rod used for walking, leaning, or as an instrument of authority and aid

The noun מִשְׁעֶנֶת (mish'enet) denotes a staff or walking stick – something one leans upon. An injured man walks on his staff during recovery (Exod 21:19). Princes dig a well with their staffs (Num 21:18). Elisha sends Gehazi with his staff to lay on the dead child (2 Kgs 4:29-31). The shepherd's 'rod and staff' comfort in Psalm 23:4. Elders sit with staffs in restored Jerusalem (Zech 8:4). Negatively, Egypt is a 'broken reed of a staff' that pierces the leaner's hand (2 Kgs 18:21; Isa 36:6; Ezek 29:6). Spanish 'bastón' and French 'bâton' cover the range.

staff, walking stick (11×) A literal walking staff or support stick used for physical aid, especially by the elderly, injured, or traveling. An injured man walks on his staff during recovery (Exod 21:19), elders sit with staffs in restored Jerusalem (Zech 8:4), Gideon is touched by the angel's staff (Judg 6:21), and Elisha sends his staff as a proxy instrument of power (2 Kgs 4:29-31). The shepherd's staff in Psalm 23:4 comforts in the valley of shadow. Spanish 'bastón/cayado' and French 'bâton' translate the physical object directly. RODS AND STAFFS

en: and-your-staff, his-staff, my-staff | es: apoyo-de, bastón-de, con-báculos-de-ellos | fr: [משענת], avec-leur-bâtons, bâton-de | de: [משענת], [משענתו], der-staff Exod 21:19; Num 21:18; Judg 6:21; 2Kgs 4:29

מִשְׁפָּח H4939 N-ms (1×)

bloodshed; violent outpouring of blood

This word appears in Isaiah's Song of the Vineyard in a striking wordplay. God looked for justice (mishpat) but found bloodshed (mispach)—the similar sounds emphasize the bitter reversal. BDB notes the word was chosen specifically for its phonetic resemblance to 'justice,' creating a devastating pun. Where God expected right judgment, he found violent bloodshed. The term captures the violent outpouring of blood through injustice and oppression, a sharp indictment of Israel's moral failure.

(1×) Bloodshed or violent outpouring of blood, used in Isaiah 5:7 in deliberate wordplay with 'justice' (mishpat). The prophet creates a phonetic parallel: God looked for mishpat (justice) but found mispach (bloodshed)—the similar sounds making the contrast devastatingly clear. The term specifically denotes blood that has been violently shed, particularly through injustice and oppression rather than legitimate justice. This is the bitter fruit of God's carefully tended vineyard: where righteousness should have grown, violence flourished. The wordplay is part of Isaiah's rhetorical brilliance, using sound to drive home meaning. BLOOD AND BLOODSHED

en: bloodshed | es: derramamiento-de-sangre | fr: [משפח] | de: [משפח] Isa 5:7

מִשְׁפָּחָה H4940 Prep-l (304×)

Clan, family group; a kinship unit larger than a household but smaller than a tribe, the basic social division of Israel.

Mishpachah names the fundamental social building block of ancient Israel – the extended clan or family group through which identity, land, and obligation flowed. Appearing over 300 times, it structures the census lists of Numbers, the tribal allotments in Joshua, and prophetic oracles addressing entire peoples (Amos 3:1-2). Spanish 'familia,' German 'Sippe,' French 'clan,' and Arabic 'ashira' all capture this intermediate kinship unit, sitting between the individual household (bayit) and the tribe (shebet/matteh). The Year of Jubilee restores each person to their mishpachah (Lev 25:10).

1. clan or family group (303×) A clan or extended family group within an Israelite tribe – the primary kinship subdivision used for census, land allotment, military organization, and ritual participation (303 occurrences). Spanish 'familia,' French 'clan,' German 'Sippe,' and Arabic 'ashira' consistently reflect this intermediate social unit. Dominant in Numbers 3 and 26 where Levitical and tribal clans are enumerated, and in prophetic speech where God addresses Israel's clans collectively (Amos 3:1-2; Jer 1:15). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: clan-of | es: familia-de | fr: clan-de | de: Sippe-von Num 3:21; Num 3:27; Num 3:33; Num 26:5

2. (1×) A single occurrence in Jeremiah 15:3 where the word appears in the context of 'four families of destroyers' – sword, dogs, birds, and beasts – using mishpachah metaphorically for categories or classes of agents rather than human kinship groups. The multilingual evidence fragments notably: Spanish renders 'clases' (classes) rather than 'familias,' signaling translators' recognition that this extends the kinship metaphor to a classificatory sense. GENERATION AND LINEAGE

en: families | es: clases | fr: familles | de: Sippen Jer 15:3

מִשְׁפָּט H4941 Prep-k (423×)

Justice, judgment, ordinance; a judicial decision, legal case, prescribed regulation, or established custom

One of the Hebrew Bible's most theologically weighty nouns, mishpat spans the full arc of legal life — from the abstract ideal of justice that God embodies (Gen 18:25) to the concrete verdict a judge hands down, to the body of ordinances that structure Israel's covenant life. It can also describe everyday custom or manner, as when Joseph's cupbearer is restored 'according to the former manner' (Gen 40:13). The word's breadth reminds readers that in biblical thought, justice is never merely theoretical — it is always enacted, codified, and lived.

1. justice, righteousness (134×) The abstract moral quality of justice and righteous governance. Arabic adl and Swahili haki both capture this normative ideal. When Abraham asks 'Shall not the Judge of all the earth do justice?' (Gen 18:25), or when Solomon is praised for administering justice and righteousness (2 Sam 8:15), this sense is in view — justice as the governing principle behind all legitimate authority. JUDGMENT AND VERDICT

en: are-just, justice | es: el-juicio„ juicio, justicia | fr: droit, jugement, justice | de: Gericht, Recht Gen 18:25; 1Sam 8:3; 2Sam 8:15; 1Kgs 3:11; 1Kgs 3:28

2. judgment, judicial decision (118×) A concrete act of judging or a judicial verdict, whether human or divine. The multilingual evidence splits between Arabic hukm/qada (judicial ruling) and Korean jaepan/simpan (trial/judgment). Exodus 28:15 names the high priest's breastpiece the 'breastpiece of judgment,' linking this sense to theophanic decision-making. The eschatological dimension — God's coming judgment — extends naturally from the forensic setting. JUDGMENT AND VERDICT

en: judgment, justice | es: Juicio, el-juicio, juicio | fr: jugement, justice | de: Gerechtigkeit, Gericht, Recht Exod 28:15; Exod 28:29; Exod 28:30; Num 27:11; Num 35:12

3. ordinances, statutes (plural) (110×) The plural form designating God's collected ordinances and covenant stipulations. Arabic ahkam and Korean beopdo-deul reflect this legislative plurality. Frequently paired with 'statutes' (huqqot) in Levitical and Deuteronomic literature (Lev 18:4; 26:46), these are the case-laws that flesh out Torah's principles into actionable communal norms binding Israel to her covenant Lord. JUDGMENT AND VERDICT

en: and-his-judgments, in-judgments-my, judgments-my | es: juicios-de-mí, los-juicios, mis-juicios | fr: dans-mes-jugements, et-son-jugements, le-jugements | de: Rechte-von, der-Gerichte, in-Rechte-von Exod 21:1; Exod 24:3; Lev 18:4; Lev 26:46; Num 35:24

4. prescribed ordinance, regulation (34×) A single prescribed regulation or procedural rule governing ritual or civic life. Where sense 3 is collective, this is the individual ordinance — 'according to the ordinance' (Exod 21:9, 31). German Ordnung and Arabic farida both capture the prescriptive force. These rulings establish standard procedure for everything from sacrifice (Lev 5:10) to the tabernacle's construction pattern (Exod 26:30). JUDGMENT AND VERDICT

en: according-to-his-duty, according-to-ordinance, according-to-the-judgment | es: conforme-a-la-ordenanza, conforme-a-su-ordenanza, conforme-al-juicio | fr: et-jugement, et-pour-ordinance, jugement | de: gemaess-zu-der-Gericht, gemaess-zu-der-Ordnung, gemaess-zu-ihr-Ordnung Exod 15:25; Exod 21:9; Exod 21:31; Exod 26:30; Lev 5:10

5. custom, manner, way (19×) An established custom, habitual manner, or characteristic way of doing things. This semantic extension moves beyond the courtroom into everyday life. In Gen 40:13 Pharaoh's cupbearer is restored to serve 'according to the former custom,' and 1 Sam 2:13 describes the priestly custom at Shiloh. Arabic ada (custom) and Korean gwanrye (customary practice) confirm this non-juridical usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-custom-of, according-to-judgment-of, according-to-the-custom | es: Y-la-costumbre-de, como-costumbre-de, como-las-costumbres | fr: et-custom-de, et-jugement, et-selon-à-leur-judgments | de: Gericht-von, gemaess-zu-Gericht-von, gemaess-zu-custom-von Gen 40:13; Josh 6:15; Judg 18:7; 1Sam 2:13; 1Sam 8:9

6. (4×) A rightful due, entitlement, or legal claim owed to a person by custom or law. In Deut 18:3 this is the priest's rightful portion from sacrifices; in Deut 21:17 it is the firstborn's double-share inheritance right. Jer 32:7–8 uses it of Jeremiah's redemption right to a family field. The multilingual glosses — English 'right/due,' Spanish 'derecho,' German 'Recht' — consistently point to a sense of legitimate entitlement rather than judicial process. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: due-of, right-of | es: derecho-de, es-el-derecho-de | fr: droit-de, due-de, jugement | de: Recht, due-von, rechts-von Deut 18:3; Deut 21:17; Jer 32:7; Jer 32:8

7. legal case, lawsuit (4×) A specific legal dispute, cause, or lawsuit brought before a judge for adjudication. Arabic da'wa/qadiyya and Korean sageon/songsa isolate this forensic-procedural sense. Numbers 27:5 records the daughters of Zelophehad bringing their 'case' before Moses, while Ps 35:23 and Isa 50:8 invoke God as the one who will champion the psalmist's or servant's legal cause. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: my-case, their-case, to-my-justice | es: causa-de-ellas, mi-causa, mi-juicio? | fr: jugements-de, leur-case, à-mes-jugements | de: Rechte-von, ihr-case, zu-mein-Gericht Num 27:5; Ps 35:23; Isa 50:8; Lam 3:59

מִשְׁפְּתַיִם H4942 Art / N-md (2×)

saddlebags or sheepfolds (uncertain); a dual form referring to paired structures or burdens

This dual noun appears in ancient Hebrew poetry with uncertain meaning. Traditional interpretation suggests 'sheepfolds'—enclosures where flocks rest between pastures. Modern scholars have proposed 'saddlebags' or 'fire-places' based on ancient Near Eastern parallels. Both Genesis 49 and Judges 5 use the term in poetic contexts describing the tribe of Issachar and the reluctance of some Israelites to engage in battle. The dual form indicates something paired or doubled, whether burdens on either side of a donkey or matching enclosures.

(2×) Appears in Genesis 49:14 (describing Issachar as a donkey between the 'sheepfolds') and Judges 5:16 (questioning why some stayed among the 'sheepfolds'). Multilingual evidence shows interpretive diversity: English offers both 'saddlebags' and 'sheepfolds', Spanish 'apriscos'/'rediles' (sheepfolds), reflecting ongoing uncertainty about this rare dual form. ASHES COMBUSTION RESIDUE

en: the-saddlebags, the-sheepfolds | es: los-apriscos, los-rediles | fr: le-saddlebags, le-sheepfolds | de: den-Hürden, der-saddlebags Gen 49:14; Judg 5:16

מִשָּׁק H4943 N-msc (1×)

acquisition, possession; heir or one who will inherit property

This difficult word appears in Abraham's complaint to God about being childless. The phrase is notoriously obscure: 'the son of possession of my house is Eliezer of Damascus.' The term seems to mean heir or one who acquires—the person who will possess Abraham's estate. BDB notes extensive scholarly debate about the text and suggests possible wordplay with 'Damascus.' The meaning is clear enough from context: Abraham laments that his household servant, rather than a biological son, will be his heir.

(1×) Acquisition or possession, used in Genesis 15:2 in the enigmatic phrase describing Eliezer as Abraham's heir. The term likely means 'son of acquisition' or 'acquiring son'—that is, the one who will acquire or inherit the household. The phrase is textually difficult, possibly involving wordplay between this term and 'Damascus.' The context is Abraham's distress over childlessness: without a biological heir, his household servant will inherit everything. Whether this reflects actual ancient Near Eastern inheritance practice or Abraham's fear, the term identifies the person designated to possess the estate, emphasizing acquisition and inheritance rights. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: acquisition-of | es: posesión-de | fr: acquisition-de | de: des-Besitzes Gen 15:2

מֵּשֶׁק H4944 Prep-k / N-msc (1×)

rushing, running; rapid charging movement

Isaiah uses this vivid word to describe how enemies will plunder Jerusalem—like the rushing or charging of locusts. The term captures rapid, aggressive forward motion, the kind of unstoppable surge when a locust swarm descends. It's part of Isaiah's imagery of judgment and invasion, where the prophet compares military conquest to natural phenomena. The comparison to locusts emphasizes both the speed and the consuming nature of the attack—everything is stripped bare in the rush.

(1×) Rapid rushing or charging movement, used in Isaiah 33:4 in a simile comparing spoilers to the rushing of locusts. The phrase 'like the rushing of locusts' evokes the swift, overwhelming advance of a swarm that consumes everything in its path. The term emphasizes speed and aggressive forward motion rather than aimless movement. Spanish 'carrera' (race, rush) captures the sense of rapid forward progress. The context is the plundering of Jerusalem's enemies—just as they rushed in to attack, so God will enable Israel to rush upon them and take spoil, reversing the dynamic of conquest. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-the-rushing | es: como-carrera-de | fr: [כמשק] | de: [כמשק] Isa 33:4

מַשְׁקֶה H4945a Art / N-ms (13×)

Cupbearer, butler; a royal official entrusted with serving the king's wine and guarding against poison.

Derived from the Hiphil of shaqah ('to give drink'), this noun designates the cupbearer or butler — a high-ranking court official responsible for tasting and serving wine to the king. In the Joseph narrative (Gen 40–41), the cupbearer of Pharaoh plays a pivotal role in Joseph's eventual release from prison. Solomon's cupbearers so impressed the Queen of Sheba that she was left breathless (1 Kgs 10:5). Nehemiah's position as cupbearer to Artaxerxes (Neh 1:11) gave him unique access and influence at the Persian court, enabling his mission to rebuild Jerusalem's walls.

cupbearer, butler (13×) A royal court official whose duty was to serve wine to the king, often also acting as a trusted personal attendant with intimate access to the monarch. The role implied both honor and danger — the cupbearer guarded the king from poisoning. In Genesis 40, Pharaoh's chief cupbearer is imprisoned alongside Joseph; his restored position later becomes the catalyst for Joseph's rise to power. The term also describes Solomon's impressive retinue (1 Kgs 10:5) and Nehemiah's strategic position in the Persian court (Neh 1:11). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-his-cupbearers, cupbearer, cupbearer-his | es: copero, copero-de, copero-suyo | fr: [ומשקיו], [משקה], cupbearer-de | de: [ומשקיו], [משקה], der-Mundschenk Gen 40:1; Gen 40:2; Gen 40:5; Gen 40:9; Gen 40:13

מַשְׁקֶה H4945b Conj-w / N-ms (6×)

Drink, beverage, or drinking-vessel contents; also well-watered land or irrigation, emphasizing water supply for fertility

A noun from the root 'to give drink,' covering both what is drunk and land that has been watered. In its beverage sense, it describes drinking vessels in Solomon's court (1 Kgs 10:21; 2 Chr 9:20), liquid that could render food ritually unclean (Lev 11:34), and drink withheld from the thirsty (Isa 32:6). In its irrigation sense, it paints the lush Jordan plain as 'well-watered everywhere, like the garden of the LORD' (Gen 13:10). Spanish captures the split neatly: 'bebida' for drink versus 'regada' for watered land.

1. drink, beverage (4×) A drink, beverage, or the contents of drinking vessels. Used for Solomon's golden drinking-vessels (1 Kgs 10:21 = 2 Chr 9:20), for liquid that can transmit ritual impurity to food (Lev 11:34), and for drink denied to the thirsty by the fool (Isa 32:6). Spanish 'bebida' and German 'trinken' straightforwardly render the consumable liquid sense, while French 'boire' captures the act of drinking itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-drink, drink, drinking-of | es: bebida, bebida-de, y-bebida-de | fr: [ומשקה], [משקה], boire | de: [ומשקה], [משקה], trinken Lev 11:34; 1Kgs 10:21; 2Chr 9:20; Isa 32:6

2. well-watered land, irrigation (2×) Well-watered land or irrigation — an abstract-for-concrete usage meaning land that has received abundant water. In Gen 13:10 the Jordan plain is described as mashqeh, 'well-watered,' like the garden of the LORD. Ezek 45:15 extends this to pastures from well-watered land. Spanish 'regada' (irrigated) and English 'well-watered' both highlight the agricultural fertility angle, distinguishing this firmly from the beverage sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-watered-land-of, well-watered | es: de-pastos-de, regada | fr: conspiration, puits-arrosa | de: [ממשקה], bewässert-war Gen 13:10; Ezek 45:15

מִשְׁקוֹל H4946 Prep-b / N-ms (1×)

weight; measured heaviness, the property of being weighed

Ezekiel uses this word when instructing the prophet to eat bread 'by weight' during his symbolic siege of Jerusalem. Eating food by weight implies scarcity and rationing—carefully measuring each portion because supplies are limited. It's part of the prophet's enacted prophecy of siege conditions, where normal abundance gives way to desperate conservation. The term emphasizes the measured, deliberate aspect—not weight in general but the act of weighing out portions carefully.

(1×) The property of being weighed or measured, used in Ezekiel 4:10 in the phrase 'by weight,' describing how the prophet must eat his rations. The context is symbolic siege conditions where food is scarce and must be carefully rationed. Eating 'by weight' means measuring out each portion precisely because there isn't enough to eat freely. The image evokes the desperation of siege warfare when supplies dwindle and every morsel must be accounted for. This is not weight as abstract property but weight as the basis for careful, anxious measurement of scarce resources. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: by-weight | es: por-peso | fr: poids | de: [במשקול] Ezek 4:10

מַשְׁקוֹף H4947 Art / N-ms (3×)

The lintel, the horizontal beam above a doorway

This architectural term appears exclusively in Exodus 12's Passover account, referring to the horizontal beam above the door opening. When the Israelites were commanded to put lamb's blood on their houses as protection from the plague, they were to apply it to 'the two doorposts and the lintel.' The lintel, along with the doorposts, framed the entrance and bore the blood that marked households for divine protection. This humble architectural element became central to the Exodus deliverance narrative.

(3×) The lintel, the horizontal beam spanning the top of a doorway. Exodus 12:7 commands: 'take some of the blood and put it on the two doorposts and the lintel of the houses.' Verse 22 instructs: 'touch the lintel and the two doorposts with the blood that is in the basin.' Verse 23 promises: 'when the LORD sees the blood on the lintel and on the two doorposts, the LORD will pass over the door.' The consistent cross-linguistic rendering (dintel, linteau, Türsturz) confirms this as the top horizontal doorframe element. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: the-lintel | es: el-dintel | fr: le-linteau | de: der-Tuersturz Exod 12:7; Exod 12:22; Exod 12:23

מִשְׁקָל H4948 N-msc (49×)

weight — the measurable heaviness of an object, often specified in gold, silver, or bronze

Mishqal is the Hebrew noun for measurable weight, derived from the verb shaqal ('to weigh'). Its 49 occurrences cluster around inventories and descriptions of precious objects: the weight of Rebekah's nose-ring and bracelets (Gen 24:22), the stolen bar of gold at Jericho (Josh 7:21), Goliath's coat of mail at five thousand shekels (1 Sam 17:5), and Solomon's annual gold revenue of 666 talents (1 Kgs 10:14). The tabernacle offerings in Numbers 7 account for eleven of its occurrences, each plate and bowl specified by weight. In the ethical sphere, Leviticus 19:35 commands fairness 'in weight,' and Ezekiel 5:1 prescribes 'balances of weight' for the prophet's symbolic act. Most strikingly, Job 28:25 ascribes weight even to the wind — a poetic claim that God measures the immeasurable. Spanish 'peso,' French 'poids,' German 'Gewicht' all reflect the straightforward measurement sense.

weight, heaviness (49×) The measurable heaviness of a physical object, typically expressed in shekels or talents of gold, silver, or bronze. Used in inventories of personal ornaments (Gen 24:22), war spoils (Judg 8:26), military armor (1 Sam 17:5; 2 Sam 21:16), temple furnishings (1 Kgs 7:47), and tabernacle offerings (Num 7:13-85, eleven occurrences). Also carries ethical force in laws demanding honesty in weighing (Lev 19:35; Ezek 4:16) and poetic force in God's assigning weight to the wind (Job 28:25). All 49 occurrences share this unified sense of quantified heaviness. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: its-weight, weight, weight-of | es: peso-de, su-peso | fr: poids, poids-de, son-poids | de: Gewicht, sein-Gewicht, sein-weight Gen 24:22; Gen 43:21; Lev 19:35; Lev 26:26

מִשְׁקֶלֶת H4949 N-fsc (2×)

plumb line, leveling instrument; a tool ensuring vertical or moral straightness

This feminine noun denotes a builder's tool used to ensure true vertical alignment. In prophetic literature, it becomes a powerful metaphor for divine judgment according to exact standards. Isaiah declares that God will make justice the measuring line and righteousness the level, while the judgment on Ahab's house will be measured with the same plumb line used for Samaria. The imagery conveys precision, fairness, and the inevitable exposure of all that is crooked.

(2×) Found in 2 Kings 21:13 (God's judgment measured with Samaria's plumb line) and Isaiah 28:17 (righteousness as the level).

The cross-linguistic glosses uniformly render this as 'plumb line' or 'level' (English 'plumb line', Spanish 'plomada', French 'plomb ligne'), emphasizing the tool's function in testing vertical accuracy and, metaphorically, moral uprightness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-plumb-line, plumb-line-of | es: plomada-de, por-plomada | fr: [למשקלת], plumb-ligne-de | de: [למשקלת], plumb-line-von 2Kgs 21:13; Isa 28:17

מִשְׁקָע H4950 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)
settled, clear water; that which has been allowed to settle and clarify Ezekiel employs this term in his oracle against Israel's shepherds. While the leaders drink clear, settled water, they trample and muddy what remains for the flock. The word emphasizes water that has been allowed to settle, becoming clear and pure—the best water, reserved for the powerful while the people get what's left over, muddied and fouled. It's part of the prophet's indictment of exploitative leadership that takes the best for itself and leaves the poor with spoiled remnants.

(1×) Clear, settled water that has been allowed to clarify, mentioned in Ezekiel 34:18 in the context of Israel's shepherds drinking the best water while trampling what remains. The term derives from a root meaning to settle or sink down, so this is water where sediment has settled to the bottom, leaving the top clear and pure. The phrase 'the clear water you drink' contrasts with the muddied water left for the sheep, illustrating exploitation and inequity. Spanish 'aguas quietas' (still waters) captures the sense of water allowed to rest and become clear, the choicest water that the leaders reserve for themselves. DRINKING AND WATERING
en: and-settling-of- | es: y-aguas-quietas-de | fr: et-Mattsephah | de: [ומשקע] Ezek 34:18

מִשְׂרָה H4951 Art / N-fs (2×)
dominion, rule; governmental authority and power
This feminine noun appears in Isaiah's messianic prophecy describing the coming Prince of Peace. The famous passage declares that 'of the increase of his government and peace there will be no end'—his dominion will expand eternally without limit. The term emphasizes the administrative and governmental dimensions of royal rule, the exercise of authority that maintains order and justice throughout a realm.

(2×) Occurs in Isaiah 9:6 and 9:7 (English 9:7-8), both describing the unlimited government of the messianic king. All major translations render this as 'government' or 'dominion' (English 'dominion', Spanish 'gobierno'), emphasizing the political sovereignty and administrative rule that characterizes the ideal future ruler from David's line. DOMINION AND RULE
en: the-dominion | es: el-gobierno | fr: [המשרה] | de: [המשרה] Isa 9:6; Isa 9:7

מִשְׂרָה H4952 N-fsc (1×)
juice; liquid extracted or pressed from fruit
This word appears in the Nazirite regulations in Numbers, where those under a Nazirite vow must abstain not only from wine and strong drink but also from grape juice. The comprehensive prohibition covers every form of grape product—fermented and unfermented, solid and liquid. The term specifically denotes the juice or liquid extracted from grapes. It shows how thoroughgoing the Nazirite's separation was: not even the most innocent grape product could be consumed during the vow period.

(1×) The juice or liquid pressed from grapes, mentioned in Numbers 6:3 among the substances forbidden to Nazirites. The phrase 'juice of grapes' is part of an extensive list that includes wine and strong drink, ensuring no grape product in any form is consumed during the vow. The term emphasizes the liquid extracted from the fruit, whether fresh or fermented. The Nazirite regulations are comprehensive—avoiding not just intoxicating drinks but anything from grapes, perhaps because the vine symbolizes settled agricultural life and its pleasures, from which the Nazirite temporarily separates. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: juice-of | es: jugo-de | fr: juice-de | de: juice-von Num 6:3

מַשְׁרוֹקִי H4953 N-fsd (4×)
mashroqita — pipe, wind instrument in Nebuchadnezzar's orchestra
This Aramaic noun denotes a musical pipe or flute, appearing exclusively in Daniel 3's account of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image dedication ceremony. The term is part of the repeated list of instruments in the Babylonian royal orchestra, which was to signal when subjects should bow in worship. The word appears in emphatic and absolute forms across four verses. Related forms exist in Syriac, and the root suggests a whistling or piping sound. This wind instrument was part of the polyglot international music ensemble that characterized ancient Near Eastern royal courts.

(4×) A pipe or flute, one of the musical instruments in Nebuchadnezzar's royal orchestra. The term appears four times in Daniel 3 (verses 5, 7, 10, 15), each time within the formulaic list of instruments accompanying the command to worship the golden image: horn, pipe, lyre, trigon, harp, bagpipe, and all kinds of music. The Aramaic forms show both emphatic (mashroqitha, Dan 3:5, 7, 15) and variant (mashrōqīt, 3:10) states. As a wind instrument producing a whistling or piping sound, it contributed to the impressive sonic display meant to awe the gathered officials into submission and worship. FLUTE PIPE INSTRUMENT
en: pipe | es: la-flauta | fr: flûte | de: [משרוקיתא], [משרקיתא] Dan 3:5; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:10; Dan 3:15

מִשְׁרָעִי H4954 Conj-w (1×)
Mishraites; a family or clan group from Kiriath-jearim
This gentillic (ethnic or family designation) appears in the genealogical records of Judah, specifically among the families descended from Kiriath-jearim. The term identifies a clan or family group within that city's population. Like many such designations in Chronicles' genealogies, the derivation is unknown—we don't know what place or ancestor the name refers to. The Septuagint's varied attempts at transliteration show the usual challenges with such specialized terms.

(1×) A family or clan group associated with Kiriath-jearim, mentioned in 1 Chronicles 2:53 among the families of that city. The term is a gentillic, an ethnic or familial designation whose derivation BDB notes as unknown. The conjunction 'and the Mishraites' links this group to others in a list of Kiriath-jearim's families. The Septuagint's variants (Hēmasareim, Maserēthi) reflect transliteration uncertainties. As part of Chronicles' detailed genealogies, this designation helped establish family identity and territorial associations, particularly important for maintaining inheritance rights and social structure in the post-exilic community's reorganization. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: and-the-Mishra'i | es: y-el-misraita | fr: [והמשרעי] | de: [והמשרעי] 1Chr 2:53

מַשְׂרֵפָה H4955 N-fpc (2×)
burnings, funeral pyres; ceremonial fires honoring deceased royalty
This feminine plural noun refers to the ceremonial burnings conducted at royal funerals. Both occurrences involve comparison: Isaiah describes thorns and peoples burning like lime in a kiln, while Jeremiah promises King Zedekiah that spices will be burned for him just as for his fathers. These were not cremations but aromatic fires—burning spices and precious materials to honor the deceased king. The practice distinguished royal funerals from common burials.

(2×) Found in Isaiah 33:12 (peoples burning like lime) and Jeremiah 34:5 (ceremonial burnings for the king). The cross-linguistic evidence consistently identifies these as 'burnings' (Spanish 'quemas', though some versions are uncertain about the specific type), suggesting honorary fires rather than mere destruction, particularly in the Jeremiah context of royal funeral rites. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-like-burnings-of, as-burnings | es: cal, y-como-quemas-de | fr: [וכמשרפות], [משרפות] | de: [וכמשרפות], [משרפות] Isa 33:12; Jer 34:5

מִשְׂרְפוֹת מַיִם H4956 N-proper-fs (2×)

Misrephoth-maim, a place near the Phoenician coast, possibly meaning 'burnings of water'

Misrephoth-maim appears in Joshua's conquest narratives as a northern geographical limit. After defeating the Canaanite coalition at the waters of Merom, Joshua pursued the fleeing armies as far as Misrephoth-maim near Sidon. The name remains somewhat enigmatic—possibly referring to hot springs ('burnings of water') or smelting operations near water. Ancient traditions identified it with a site south of Tyre, though the exact location remains uncertain.

(2×) The place name occurs in Joshua 11:8 and 13:6, both marking the northern extent of Israelite military operations. All translations preserve the transliteration (Misrephoth-maim, Misrefot-Maim), recognizing it as a geographical proper noun referring to a coastal location in ancient Phoenicia, likely near Sidon. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Misrephoth-Mayim | es: Misrefot-Maim | fr: Misrephoth-Mayim | de: Misrephoth-Mayim Josh 11:8; Josh 13:6

מַשְׂרֵקָה H4957 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)

Masrekah, a city in Edom, home of King Samlah

Masrekah appears in the genealogical lists of Edomite kings as the hometown of Samlah, one of the early monarchs who ruled before Israel had kings. Both Genesis 36 and 1 Chronicles 1 preserve this detail in their parallel accounts of Edom's royal succession. The location remains unidentified, though ancient sources like Eusebius preserved the name. The reference illustrates the detailed historical memory Scripture preserves about Israel's neighbors.

(2×) Found in Genesis 36:36 and 1 Chronicles 1:47, both identifying Masrekah as King Samlah's city. Translations consistently transliterate the name (Masrekah, Masreqa, Masreka), recognizing it as an Edomite place name. The prepositional phrase 'from Masrekah' indicates this was Samlah's city of origin rather than just his residence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-Masrekah, from-Masreqah | es: de-Masreqa, de-Masreqah | fr: [ממשרקה], de-Masrekah | de: [ממשרקה], von-Masreka Gen 36:36; 1Chr 1:47

מַשְׂרֵת H4958 Art / N-fs (1×)

pan, dish; cooking vessel or serving dish

This word appears in the troubling story of Amnon and Tamar, where Tamar prepares food in some kind of vessel. The exact nature of the implement is uncertain—BDB suggests it might be a dough-pan or kneading trough, while others see it as a serving pan. Some scholars propose textual emendation to read 'servant' instead. The context is Tamar's preparation of special food for her supposedly sick brother, part of Amnon's predatory scheme. Whatever the vessel's exact nature, it's associated with food preparation or serving.

(1×) A pan, dish, or cooking vessel mentioned in 2 Samuel 13:9 in the narrative of Amnon and Tamar. The text says Tamar 'took the pan' after preparing food, though exact identification is uncertain. BDB notes the possibility this is a dough-pan or kneading trough, comparing it to a term for kneading trough elsewhere. An alternative textual reading suggests 'servant' instead of 'pan,' which would change the sense entirely. Spanish 'sartén' (frying pan) and English 'pan' represent the cooking vessel interpretation. The ambiguity reflects the challenges of identifying ancient domestic implements from minimal textual evidence. TABLE FURNITURE

en: the-pan | es: la-sartén | fr: le-pan | de: der-pan 2Sam 13:9

מָשַׁשׁ H4959 V-Piel-Perf-2ms (11×)

Feel or touch physically (Qal); grope about, search by feeling (Piel); cause to feel or touch (Hifil)

A tactile verb spanning from gentle touch to desperate groping. In its simplest Qal form, it is Isaac reaching out to feel Jacob's hands, testing whether this is truly Esau (Gen 27:12, 22)—intimate, deliberate, uncertain. The Piel intensifies this into searching by touch: Laban rummaging through Rachel's tent (Gen 31:34), or the blind groping at noonday as covenant curse (Deut 28:29). Job uses it for the wicked stumbling in darkness (Job 5:14, 12:25). The Hifil turns causative—Samson asks a boy to let him feel the pillars (Judg 16:26), and the Egyptian plague brings darkness so thick it can be 'caused to be felt' (Exod 10:21). Arabic mass ('touch') and Aramaic məshash confirm the root's haptic core.

1. grope, search by feeling (6×) To grope about or search by feeling (Piel intensive), describing fumbling, sightless searching. Laban searched Rachel's entire tent by hand (Gen 31:34, 37). As a covenant curse, Israel would grope at noon like the blind (Deut 28:29). Job extends this to the wicked who 'grope in darkness' (Job 5:14, 12:25). Spanish 'a tientas' ('gropingly') and English 'gropes/groping' convey the desperate, tactile quality. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: and-searched, gropes, groping | es: Palpan, a-tientas, andan-a-tientas | fr: et-fouilla, gropes, groping | de: [ימשש], du-hast-durchtastet, gropes Gen 31:34; Gen 31:37; Deut 28:29; Job 5:14

2. cause to feel, let touch (3×) To cause or allow someone to feel or touch (Hifil causative). Samson's request—'let me feel the pillars'—uses this stem twice (Judg 16:26), as does the darkness plague that could be 'caused to be felt' (Exod 10:21). Spanish 'hazme palpar' ('make me feel') precisely captures the causative force, distinguishing this from voluntary touching. TOUCHING AND REACHING

en: [and-let-me-feel], and-let-me-feel, and-let-one-feel | es: hazme-palpar, y-hazme-palpar, y-palparán | fr: [et-que-moi-feel], et-que-moi-feel, et-que-un-sentir | de: [und-lass-mich-feel], und-lass-eins-feel, und-lass-mich-feel Exod 10:21; Judg 16:26

3. feel, touch physically (2×) To feel or touch physically with the hands (Qal basic stem), direct tactile contact. Found only in the Jacob-Isaac deception narrative: Isaac fears Jacob's smooth skin will betray him (Gen 27:12), then reaches out and feels him (Gen 27:22). Spanish 'palpó/palpará' and German 'betastete' both convey deliberate, exploratory touch—not groping, but careful examination. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-felt-him, will-feel-me | es: me-palpará, y-lo-palpó | fr: –sentir-moi, et-sentit-lui | de: betastet-mich, und-betastete-ihn Gen 27:12; Gen 27:22

מִשְׁתֶּה H4960 N-msc (46×)

A feast or banquet centered on drinking; less commonly, the drink or drinking itself, as opposed to the festive occasion.

Derived from the root שׁתה ('to drink'), מִשְׁתֶּה denotes a drinking feast or banquet — the characteristic ancient Near Eastern celebration where wine flowed freely. It is the standard word for royal and wedding banquets: Pharaoh's birthday feast (Gen 40:20), Laban's wedding feast for Jacob (Gen 29:22), and the elaborate feasts of Esther (Est 1:3; 2:18; 5:4-8). The expression עָשָׂה מִשְׁתֶּה ('make a feast') appears repeatedly. In Daniel 1:5-16, however, the word narrows to mean the king's drink or drinking provisions — what the young exiles were to consume daily — and Spanish 'bebida' and German context confirm this shift from occasion to substance.

1. feast, banquet (41×) A drinking feast or banquet — a festive social occasion involving eating and especially drinking. The collocation עָשָׂה מִשְׁתֶּה ('make a feast') is the standard biblical formula for hosting a banquet (Gen 19:3; 21:8; 26:30). Spanish 'banquete/festín,' French 'festin/fête,' and German 'Fest/Mahl' consistently render the celebratory occasion. The book of Esther alone accounts for roughly a third of all occurrences, with its elaborate court feasts driving the narrative. Samson's seven-day wedding feast (Judg 14:10-17) and Nabal's sheep-shearing feast (1 Sam 25:36) illustrate the range from joyful to reckless. BANQUETS AND FEASTS

en: a-feast, a-feast-of, banquet | es: banquete, banquete-de, el-banquete | fr: [משתה], festin, fête | de: Fest, Mahl, [משתה] Gen 19:3; Gen 21:8; Gen 26:30; Gen 29:22; Gen 40:20

2. drink, drinking (5×) The drink itself or the act of drinking, focusing on the beverage rather than the social occasion. In Daniel 1:5, 8, 10, 16 the term refers specifically to the king's drinking provisions — the wine allotment from Nebuchadnezzar's table — which Daniel and his companions refused. Spanish 'bebida' ('drink, beverage') and the pairing with food portions (פַּת־בַּג) in Daniel confirm the concrete, non-festive reading. Ezra 3:7 similarly uses it for drink supplied to laborers, not a celebration. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: and-drink, his-banquet, their-drink | es: su-bebida, vuestra-bebida, y-bebida | fr: et-festin, festin | de: [משתיהם], [משתין], [משתיכם] Ezra 3:7; Dan 1:5; Dan 1:8; Dan 1:10; Dan 1:16

מִשְׁתֵּי H4961 N-msd (1×)

feast, banquet; celebratory drinking event

This Aramaic term appears in Daniel's account of Belshazzar's great banquet, the feast where the mysterious hand wrote on the wall. The word emphasizes the drinking aspect—this is specifically a drinking feast or banquet, characterized by wine consumption. It's the setting for one of Scripture's most dramatic moments of divine judgment, when revelry is suddenly interrupted by supernatural warning. The term is the Aramaic equivalent of the Hebrew word for feast or drinking party.

(1×) A feast or banquet, specifically emphasizing drinking, used in Daniel 5:10 to describe the setting where Belshazzar and his nobles were celebrating. The phrase 'house of the feast' or 'banquet hall' indicates the location where the drinking party was held. This is the infamous celebration where Belshazzar desecrated the temple vessels by using them for wine, prompting the divine handwriting on the wall. Spanish 'banquete' and French 'festin' capture the sense of formal, lavish celebration. The Aramaic term (mishteya) parallels the Hebrew mishteh, both emphasizing the drinking component of festive gatherings in royal courts. BANQUETS AND FEASTS

en: the-feast | es: el-banquete | fr: festin | de: [משתיא] Dan 5:10

מַת H4962 Prep-m / N-mp (22×)

Males, men, or persons collectively; in the construct phrase mete mispar, few in number; poetically, mortal ones.

Mat is an archaic collective noun for males or men, related to Assyrian mutu ('husband') and Ethiopic met ('man'). It appears mostly in the construct form mete, governing a following noun. In Deuteronomy 2:34 and 3:6 the phrase 'ir metim ('city of males') distinguishes the male population from women and children in wartime. The idiomatic phrase mete mispar ('men of number,' i.e., few enough to count) recurs from Genesis 34:30 through Deuteronomy and into Psalm 105:12, always emphasizing dangerous smallness. Job 24:12 stretches the word toward its etymological shadow – mortality itself – as the dying groan from the city.

1. men, persons (16×) Adult males or men collectively, often designating a group belonging to a place, leader, or community. Deuteronomy 2:34 and 3:6 use the phrase 'city of males' to identify the male population distinct from women and children. In 1 Chronicles 16:19 and Job 11:3 the word serves as a general term for people or persons. German 'Maenner' and Spanish 'hombres' reflect the straightforward collective meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: O-men, from-men, his-men | es: Tus-hombres, a-los-hombres, a-los-hombres-de | fr: [מת], [מתיך], de-peu | de: Maenner, Männer-von-, Tote Deut 2:34; Deut 3:6; Deut 33:6; 1Chr 16:19; Job 11:3

2. few in number (5×) Few in number, an idiomatic usage appearing in the construct phrase mete mispar ('men of number'), meaning a group small enough to count individually. Genesis 34:30 records Jacob's fear that his family is 'few in number' among the Canaanites. Deuteronomy 4:27, 26:5, and 28:62 warn or recall Israel's smallness. Psalm 105:12 celebrates how God chose them 'when they were few in number.' French 'peu' and German 'wenige' consistently render this idiom. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: few, few-in, in-few | es: con-pocos-de, en-pocos-de, hombres-de | fr: avec-peu, dans-peu, de-peu | de: bin-Leute, in-wenige, mit-wenige Gen 34:30; Deut 4:27; Deut 26:5; Deut 28:62; Ps 105:12

3. mortal, dying ones (1×) Mortal or dying ones, a poetic extension foregrounding human frailty and the transience of life. Job 24:12 describes the groans of the dying (metim) rising from the city. This single attestation draws on the word's deep Semitic connection to mortality (cf. Assyrian mutu), giving it a darker coloring than the neutral 'men' of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: dying-ones | es: los-moribundos | fr: peu | de: Maenner Job 24:12

מַתְבֵּן H4963 N-ms (1×)

straw-heap, dung-hill; pile of refuse or trampled straw

Isaiah uses this contemptuous image in a taunt against Moab: they will be trampled down in their place as straw is trampled in a dung-heap. The word evokes a pile of refuse, worthless material beaten down and left to rot. It's among Isaiah's most graphic images of judgment—not just defeat but utter humiliation, being treated as garbage to be trampled underfoot. The agricultural imagery would have been immediately clear to the original audience familiar with straw-strewn manure piles.

(1×) A heap of straw mixed with dung or refuse, used in Isaiah 25:10 in a simile of Moab's humiliation. The image is of straw trampled down into a dung-heap, worthless material beaten into waste. The comparison emphasizes not just defeat but degradation—being treated as refuse, trampled and left in filth. Spanish 'paja' (straw) identifies the material, though the full sense includes the refuse pile context. This is one of prophecy's harshest images: not defeated in battle but trampled like garbage in its own place, unable to escape the humiliation. The agricultural setting makes the contempt viscerally clear. STUBBLE AND CHAFF

en: straw | es: paja | fr: [מתבן] | de: [מתבן] Isa 25:10

מֶתֶג H4964 Conj-w / N-msc / 1cs (4×)

metég — bridle, bit; instrument of control for animals or (figuratively) people

This masculine noun denotes a bridle or bit—the device placed in an animal's mouth to control its movements. The term appears in both literal contexts (controlling horses and donkeys) and powerful metaphors (God controlling enemy kings, or the need to bridle fools). The imagery emphasizes control, restraint, and the submission of a willful creature to external direction. Proverbs and Psalms use it to picture the necessity of external restraint for those lacking internal wisdom, while prophetic texts employ it to show God's sovereign control over arrogant nations.

(4×) A bridle or bit for controlling animals. Proverbs 26:3 lists instruments of discipline: 'a whip for the horse, a bridle for the donkey, and a rod for the back of fools'—parallel tools for controlling unreasoning creatures. Psalm 32:9 warns against being 'like the horse or mule that lacks understanding, whose trappings are bridle and halter'—needing external force rather than willing obedience. 2 Kings 19:28 and Isaiah 37:29 record God's word against Sennacherib: 'I will put my hook in your nose and my bridle (mitgi) in your lips,' treating the arrogant king like a beast to be forcibly led away. 2 Samuel 8:1 uses it enigmatically for 'authority of the mother city' (meteg ha-ammah), likely a figurative extension. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3431 WITH 4 SENSES

en: a-bridle, and-My-bit, and-my-bridle | es: con-freno, freno, y-mi-freno | fr: [ומתגי], dans-bride, et-mon-bridle | de: [ומתגי], [מתג], mit-bit 2Kgs 19:28; Ps 32:9; Prov 26:3; Isa 37:29

מֶתֶג H4965 Art / N-fs (2×)

bridle, bit; instrument of control, used literally and metaphorically

The bridle was essential equipment for controlling animals, particularly donkeys and horses. Proverbs lists it alongside the whip and rod as tools for managing different kinds of stubbornness. The Psalms employ it as a metaphor for those who lack understanding, needing physical restraint like animals. Most striking is Isaiah's image of God putting his bridle in the lips of the Assyrian king—the arrogant invader will be controlled like a beast and turned back. One occurrence in 2 Samuel remains cryptic, possibly referring to control over a 'mother city.'

(2×) The word appears in 2 Samuel 8:1 (twice, in an uncertain phrase about 'bridle of the mother city' or control/authority) representing metaphorical use. Multilingual glosses show both literal 'bridle' and metaphorical extensions (English 'bridle'/'mother-city', Spanish 'freno'/'metrópoli'), illustrating how the physical instrument of animal control became an image of political dominion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: bridle-of, the-mother-city | es: freno-de, la-metrópoli | fr: bridle-de, le-mère-ville | de: bridle-von, der-Mutter-Stadt 2Sam 8:1

מָתוֹק H4966 Conj-w / Adj-mp (12×)
Sweet, sweetness — pleasant to the taste; of honey, God's words, pleasant speech, and the joy of life
The adjective and substantive מָתוֹק (matoq) describes what is sweet to the taste or metaphorically pleasant. Samson's riddle turns on the paradox: 'Out of the strong came something sweet' — answered by honey (Judg 14:14, 18). The psalmist declares God's ordinances sweeter than honey (Ps 19:10). Proverbs calls pleasant words 'sweet to the soul and healing to the bones' (Prov 16:24), while Ecclesiastes observes that a laborer's sleep is sweet (Eccl 5:12). Isaiah warns against calling 'sweet bitter and bitter sweet' (Isa 5:20). Spanish 'dulce' conveys both the sensory and figurative dimensions.

sweet, sweetness (12×) Sweet to the taste or metaphorically pleasant. Literally of honey: Samson's riddle (Judg 14:14, 18) and God's ordinances sweeter than honeycomb (Ps 19:10). Figuratively of pleasant words (Prov 16:24), the laborer's sleep (Eccl 5:12), and the prophetic scroll sweet in the mouth (Ezek 3:3). Isaiah warns against calling sweet bitter and bitter sweet (Isa 5:20). SWEET SWEETNESS
en: and-sweet, and-sweeter, for-sweet | es: Dulce, dulce, dulces | fr: [ומתוק], [למתוק], douceur | de: [ומתוק], [למתוק], [מתוקה] Judg 14:14; Judg 14:18; Ps 19:10; Prov 16:24; Prov 24:13

מְתוּשָׁאֵל H4967 N-proper-ms (2×)
Methushael, a descendant of Cain in the antediluvian genealogy
Methushael appears in Genesis 4 as a descendant of Cain in the line leading to Lamech. The name appears twice in the same verse, typical of genealogical formulas. Some scholars note the name's similarity to the Babylonian form meaning 'man of God,' while ancient Greek versions confused it with Methuselah from Seth's line. This rare name preserves the memory of Cain's descendants before the flood, a parallel lineage to the Seth genealogy of Genesis 5.

(2×) Found twice in Genesis 4:18 within Cain's genealogy. All major translations transliterate the name (Methushael, Metusael, Methuschael), recognizing it as a proper noun designating an individual in the pre-flood period. The name's possible meaning 'man of God' creates an interesting irony given the context of Cain's rebellious line. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Methushael, and-Methushael | es: Metusael, y-Metusael | fr: Methushael, et-Methushael | de: Methuschael, und-Methuschael Gen 4:18

מְתוּשֶׁלַח H4968 N-proper-ms (6×)
Methuselah — antediluvian patriarch, son of Enoch, grandfather of Noah; the longest-lived person in Scripture (969 years).
The proper name of the famous antediluvian patriarch in the line of Seth, son of Enoch and grandfather of Noah. Methuselah lived 969 years, making him the longest-lived individual recorded in Scripture (Gen 5:27). His name may mean 'man of the dart' or derive from a Babylonian source. All six occurrences cluster in the genealogy of Genesis 5:21-27, with one parallel in 1 Chronicles 1:3. The Septuagint renders it Mathousala, while French and German preserve close transliterations (Methushelach, Methuschelach), reflecting wide familiarity with this iconic figure across Western traditions.

Methushelach (6×) The proper name Methuselah (Hebrew Methushelach), designating the son of Enoch and grandfather of Noah in the Sethite genealogy. His extraordinary lifespan of 969 years (Gen 5:27) has made his name proverbial for longevity across many cultures. The etymology is debated — possibly 'man of the dart/weapon' or a Babylonian loanword. The LXX Mathousala and the consistent transliterations across Spanish (Metusalaj), French, and German confirm universal recognition of this patriarch. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Methushelach | es: Metusalaj | fr: Methushelach, Méthushélach | de: Methuschelach, Methuschelachs, [מתושלח] Gen 5:21; Gen 5:22; Gen 5:25; Gen 5:26; Gen 5:27

מָתַח H4969 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms / 3mp (1×)
spread out, stretch; to extend something over an area
Isaiah uses this verb in his magnificent description of God's creative power: the Lord spreads out the heavens like a tent curtain. The image evokes someone stretching fabric taut to create a dwelling, applying that familiar action to cosmic scale. God treats the vast heavens as easily as a person pitching a tent, spreading the celestial canopy over the earth. The verb emphasizes the extending, stretching motion—taking something and spreading it over a broad area.

(1×) To spread out or stretch something over an area, used in Isaiah 40:22 with the heavens as object and God as subject. The verse describes God spreading the heavens 'as a tent to dwell in,' comparing cosmic creation to the familiar act of stretching tent fabric. The verb captures the motion of extending something, pulling it taut over a space. The multilingual glosses emphasize the spreading/deploying action. The context is God's incomparable greatness—the One who stretches out the heavens with such ease is beyond human comparison. The image makes divine power accessible through domestic analogy: as easily as pitching a tent, God spreads the cosmos. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: and-spreads-them-out | es: y-los-despliega | fr: [וימתחם] | de: [וימתחם] Isa 40:22

מָתַי H4970 Interrog (43×)
When? — interrogative adverb of time, often in the urgent cry 'how long?' (ad-matay)
An interrogative adverb asking 'when?' with respect to future time. Standing alone it voices a speaker's impatience or longing — 'When shall I arise?' (Job 7:4), 'When will you do something for my household too?' (Gen 30:30). Combined with the preposition 'ad ('until'), it becomes the anguished refrain 'how long?' echoing through the psalms of lament (Ps 74:10; 82:2; 94:3) and prophetic rebuke (1 Kgs 18:21). This particle captures one of Scripture's most emotionally charged questions: the cry of the suffering for divine intervention.

when (43×) Interrogative 'when?' for future time. Alone it asks a simple question (Gen 30:30; Neh 2:6); with le- it means 'by when?' (Exod 8:5). In the compound 'ad-matay it becomes the lament cry 'how long?' (Ps 74:10; 94:3). French 'quand' and Spanish 'cuándo' mirror the bare form, while English 'how long' captures the 'ad-matay construction. TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS
en: long, when | es: cuándo, cuándo?, ¿Cuándo | fr: [מת], de-comment, quand | de: [מת], als, lang Gen 30:30; Exod 8:9; Exod 10:3; Exod 10:7; Num 14:27

מַתְכֻּנֶת H4971 N-fsc / 3ms (5×)
measurement, fixed amount, proportion; tale (quota) of items; proper composition or standard
A feminine noun denoting a fixed measurement, proportion, or quota. In Exodus 5:8 it specifies the required tale of bricks that Israel must produce, a daily quota under Pharaoh's oppression. The Exodus 30 passages apply it to the sacred anointing oil's exact composition, which must not be replicated. Ezekiel 45:11 uses it for the standardized proportion between ephah and bath. Spanish 'proporcion' and French 'proportion' mirror the standardization sense faithfully.

(5×) A fixed measurement, quota, or proper proportion applied to manufactured goods, sacred recipes, or architectural standards. Exodus 5:8 uses it for the mandated brick quota under Egyptian slavery, while Exodus 30:32, 37 stipulate the exact composition-standard for holy anointing oil. In 2 Chronicles 24:13 it refers to the temple's original measurement or design specification during Joash's restoration. Ezekiel 45:11 applies it to the proportional relationship between dry and liquid measures. The multilingual evidence ('cantidad,' 'proporcion,' 'proportion') underscores the sense of a defined, authoritative standard. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-its-proportion, in-its-proportion, its-measurement | es: cantidad-de, según-su-proporción, su-estado | fr: [מתכנתו], dans-son-proportion, et-dans-son-proportion | de: [מתכנתו], in-sein-proportion, quota-von Exod 5:8; Exod 30:32; Exod 30:37; 2Chr 24:13; Ezek 45:11

תְּלָאָה H4972 N-fs (1×)

weariness, hardship; exhausting difficulty or toil

This word captures bone-deep exhaustion and hardship, appearing primarily in contexts of travel difficulty or oppression. It describes Israel's weariness in Egypt and the wilderness, the exhaustion of difficult journeys and hard labor. Malachi uses it for the priests' complaint that temple service is wearisome. The term goes beyond simple tiredness to encompass the grinding fatigue of sustained hardship, the kind of exhaustion that comes from relentless difficulty without relief.

(1×) Weariness, exhaustion, or hardship from sustained difficulty, mentioned in Malachi 1:13 where priests complain 'What weariness!' about temple service. The term appears elsewhere for Israel's hardship in Egypt and wilderness wanderings, indicating exhausting difficulty, grinding toil, or the fatigue of relentless challenges. Spanish 'cansancio' (tiredness, weariness) and French 'fatigue' both capture the sense of deep exhaustion. In Malachi, the priests' complaint reveals their contempt for worship—they find serving God burdensome and wearisome rather than honoring. The word emphasizes not momentary tiredness but the accumulated exhaustion of ongoing hardship. TOIL AND WEARINESS

en: what-weariness | es: qué-cansancio! | fr: fatigue | de: [מתלאה] Mal 1:13

מְתַלְּעוֹת H4973 N-fpc / 3ms (3×)

Teeth, specifically incisors or fangs, often used of fierce animals

This late Hebrew term refers to teeth, particularly the prominent front teeth or fangs. It always appears in parallel with the more common word for 'teeth' (shinayim). Job uses it when describing how he 'broke the fangs of the unrighteous' and snatched prey from their teeth. Proverbs warns of a generation 'whose teeth are swords, whose fangs are knives'—depicting violence and oppression. Joel describes the locust army with 'the fangs of a lion'—emphasizing destructive power. The term highlights the aggressive, dangerous aspect of teeth.

(3×) Fangs, teeth, or jaw-teeth, emphasizing their dangerous or devouring quality. Job 29:17 declares: 'I broke the fangs of the unrighteous and made him drop his prey from his teeth'—rescuing victims from oppressors. Proverbs 30:14 warns of those 'whose teeth are swords, whose fangs are knives, to devour the poor.' Joel 1:6 describes the locust invasion: 'a nation has come up against my land with the teeth of a lion and the fangs of a lioness.' The parallel with 'teeth' throughout suggests incisors or prominent front teeth used for tearing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fangs-of, fangs-of, its-jaws | es: las-muelas-de, sus-muelas, y-colmillos-de | fr: et-mâchoire, son-מתלעתיו-lui, מתלעות | de: [ומתלעות], [מתלעות], [מתלעתיו] Job 29:17; Prov 30:14; Joel 1:6

מְתֹם H4974 N-ms (4×)

metom — soundness, wholeness, completeness (physical or moral integrity)

This noun denotes soundness, wholeness, or completeness—the state of being intact and undamaged. The term appears exclusively in negative constructions ('there is no soundness'), describing either physical wounds or comprehensive destruction. In Isaiah and Psalms, it depicts bodies ravaged by illness or injury with no healthy spot remaining. In Judges, it may describe total urban destruction ('from the entire/sound city'). The concept emphasizes totality: either complete health or complete devastation, with no middle ground.

(4×) Soundness, wholeness, or completeness, typically in negative contexts. Isaiah 1:6 describes Israel's spiritual condition in physical terms: 'From the sole of the foot to the head, there is no soundness (ein metom)'—only wounds and bruises. Psalm 38:3 and 7 use identical language to describe the psalmist's affliction under divine judgment: 'there is no soundness in my flesh' because of God's wrath. Judges 20:48 is textually uncertain (some manuscripts read metim, 'men'), but likely describes Israel's destruction of Benjamite cities —'from the entire city' or 'from sound/intact cities' to everything they found. The term emphasizes either complete health or its total absence. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: entirety, soundness | es: sanidad, íntegra | fr: [מתם], de-entier, entirety | de: [מתם], entirety, soundness Judg 20:48; Ps 38:3; Ps 38:7; Isa 1:6

מָתְנַיִם H4975 Conj-w / N-mdc (47×)

Loins, waist — the lower back and hip region; by extension, the seat of procreative power and lineage

Always appearing in the dual form (mothnayim), this word designates the paired sides of the lower back and hip area — the part of the body where a belt is cinched, a sword is strapped, and pain grips in moments of terror. It is the region girded for action on the night of Exodus (Exod 12:11), the zone of Isaiah's messianic 'belt of righteousness' (Isa 11:5), and the place that trembles at the approach of divine judgment (Isa 21:3; Nah 2:11). In a handful of passages, the loins take on generative meaning — descendants 'come forth from the loins' — linking bodily anatomy to the deep biblical concern with lineage and inheritance.

1. loins, waist (body part) (43×) The anatomical lower back, waist, or hip region, referenced as the place where garments are girded, weapons strapped, and pain or trembling is felt. With 43 of 47 occurrences, this is the primary sense, spanning the Exodus command to eat with 'loins girded' (Exod 12:11), priestly linen breeches covering from waist to thigh (Exod 28:42), Joab's sword falling from his mothnayim (2 Sam 20:8), and Isaiah's vision of trembling loins (Isa 21:3). Translations consistently map to anatomical terms: 'lomos/cintura' (spa), 'reins' (fra), 'Hüften' (deu). LOINS WAIST BODY

en: at-loins-of-him, his-loins, loins | es: de-lomos, en-cintura-de-él, lomos | fr: reins, ton-loins | de: Hueften, dein-loins Gen 37:34; Exod 12:11; Exod 28:42; Deut 33:11; 2Sam 20:8

2. loins (procreative origin) (4×) The loins understood metaphorically as the source of offspring and biological descent, expressing lineage through the idiom 'from the loins of.' Appearing four times, this procreative sense is found in Rehoboam's boast that his little finger is thicker than his father's loins (1 Kgs 12:10; 2 Chr 10:10) — where 'loins' stands for the father's generative power — and in Ezekiel's vision (Ezek 8:2) and Job's description of Behemoth's strength concentrated in its loins (Job 40:16). The shift from anatomical to generative is reflected in translations that sometimes add possessive or relational markers: 'en sus lomos' (spa), 'dans son reins' (fra). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-loins-of-him, in-its-loins, than-loins-of | es: en-sus-lomos, más-que-lomos-de, que-lomos-de | fr: [ממתני], dans-son-reins-lui, et-reins | de: Hueften, als-loins-von, und-Hueften 1Kgs 12:10; 2Chr 10:10; Job 40:16; Ezek 8:2

מַתָּן H4976 Conj-w / N-ms (5×)

gift, present; marriage-gift; offering given to priests

A masculine collective noun for gifts or presents, spanning social, marital, and sacred contexts. In Genesis 34:12, Shechem offers to pay whatever marriage-gift (mattan) is demanded alongside the mohar, showing the term's use in bride-price negotiations. Numbers 18:11 applies it to the wave offerings given to priests. Proverbs employs it for social gifts that smooth relationships (18:16; 21:14) or attract friends (19:6). Spanish 'regalo' and 'dadivas' together capture both the personal and transactional dimensions.

(5×) A gift or present given in social, marital, or sacred contexts, often with the nuance of something offered to secure favor, fulfill obligation, or express generosity. Genesis 34:12 pairs it with mohar in marriage negotiations. Numbers 18:11 designates priestly offerings as mattan. Proverbs 18:16 and 21:14 describe how a gift can open doors and pacify anger, while 19:6 notes that 'a man of gifts' attracts many companions. French 'don' and Spanish 'regalo/dadivas' reflect the breadth from generous present to strategic offering. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-gift, gift, gift-of | es: Don-de, Regalo, de-dádivas | fr: et-don, leur-don, מַתָּן | de: [מתן], ihr-gift, und-Geschenk Gen 34:12; Num 18:11; Prov 18:16; Prov 19:6; Prov 21:14

מַתָּן H4977 N-proper-ms (3×)

Mattan, a personal name meaning 'gift' borne by a Baal priest and a Judean father

This name appears for two different individuals in the Hebrew Bible. One Mattan was the priest of Baal in Jerusalem during Queen Athaliah's reign, killed when Jehoiada led the counter-revolution and destroyed the Baal temple (2 Kgs 11, 2 Chr 23). The other was the father of Shephatiah, one of the officials who opposed Jeremiah and threw him into a cistern (Jer 38). The name means 'gift,' from the same root as the common word for 'gift' (mattan).

(3×) Mattan, a personal name meaning 'gift.' The Baal priest Mattan served in Jerusalem and was executed during Jehoash's restoration: 'all the people of the land went to the house of Baal and tore it down; they killed Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars' (2 Kgs 11:18, paralleled in 2 Chr 23:17). A different Mattan appears in Jeremiah 38:1 as father of Shephatiah, one of the princes opposing Jeremiah. The LXX renderings (Μαθθαν, Ματθαν, Ναθαν) show some textual variation but preserve the basic name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mattan | es: Mattan, Matán | fr: Mattan, [מתן] | de: Mattan, [מתן] 2Kgs 11:18; 2Chr 23:17; Jer 38:1

מַתְּנָא H4978 N-fp (3×)

Gifts, rewards, or presents given in honor or compensation

This Aramaic loanword appears only in Daniel, referring to gifts or rewards given by a king. Twice King Nebuchadnezzar promises 'gifts' along with rewards and honor to whoever can interpret his dreams. When Daniel does interpret the king's dream, he is offered these gifts but initially declines, saying 'let your gifts be for yourself.' The term emphasizes royal generosity, the valuable presents a monarch bestows on those who serve him well or accomplish difficult tasks.

(3×) Gifts or rewards from a king. Daniel 2:6 promises: 'if you show the dream and its interpretation, you shall receive from me gifts, rewards, and great honor.' Verse 48 records fulfillment: 'the king gave Daniel gifts and many great rewards.' In 5:17, Daniel responds to Belshazzar: 'Let your gifts be for yourself, and give your rewards to another'—declining payment before interpreting the handwriting on the wall. The Aramaic plural forms and consistent 'gifts/rewards' rendering show royal patronage vocabulary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-gifts, gifts, your-gifts | es: dones, tus-regalos, y-dones | fr: [ומתנן], [מתנן], [מתנתך] | de: [ומתנן], [מתנן], [מתנתך] Dan 2:6; Dan 2:48; Dan 5:17

מַתָּנָה H4979 N-fpc / 2mp (17×)

A gift, offering, or present; from voluntary donations to God to bribes that corrupt judgment.

Covers the full moral spectrum of giving. At its best, מַתָּנָה describes freewill offerings consecrated to God (Exod 28:38, Lev 23:38, Num 18:29) or generous gifts between people, as when Abraham gave gifts to his concubines' sons (Gen 25:6). Deuteronomy 16:17 ties giving to ability: 'each according to the gift of his hand.' Yet the same word darkens in Proverbs 15:27 and Ecclesiastes 7:7, where a 'gift' becomes a bribe that corrupts the heart. Spanish distinguishes cleanly between 'don/dones' and 'soborno,' revealing the moral polarity the Hebrew leaves implicit.

1. gift or offering (15×) A voluntary gift, present, or sacred offering given freely — whether to God or to another person. Abraham's gifts to his sons (Gen 25:6), the holy gifts Israel brings before the LORD (Exod 28:38), and the Levitical freewill offerings distinct from vows and pledges (Lev 23:38) all fall here. Numbers 18 defines the priestly share of these gifts. The key phrase 'according to the gift of his hand' (Deut 16:17) ties generosity to capacity. Spanish 'don' and French 'don' both preserve the positive, voluntary character of this giving. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-gift-of, and-gifts, gift | es: con-vuestras-ofrendas, don, dones | fr: [ומתנות], [מתנות], de-don | de: Gaben, Geschenke, [במתנותיכם] Gen 25:6; Exod 28:38; Lev 23:38; Num 18:6; Num 18:7

2. bribe or corrupting gift (2×) A gift intended to influence or corrupt — a bribe. Proverbs 15:27 warns that 'he who hates bribes (מַתָּנֹת) will live,' and Ecclesiastes 7:7 laments that 'a gift destroys the heart.' The same noun that describes sacred generosity in sense 1 here names the perversion of giving, where the intent shifts from worship or love to manipulation. Spanish 'soborno' makes this distinction lexically explicit, while Hebrew relies on context to signal the shift from holy offering to corrupting inducement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bribes, gift | es: soborno, sobornos | fr: מתנה ,מתנת | de: [מתנה], [מתנת] Prov 15:27; Eccl 7:7

מַתָּנָה H4980 Conj-w (2×)

Mattanah, an Israelite encampment site east of the Jordan during the wilderness journey

Mattanah was one of the stations where Israel camped during their journey from the wilderness toward Moab. Numbers 21 records it in the itinerary following the poetic Song of the Well, as the people moved through the Transjordan region before entering the plains of Moab. The name means 'gift,' possibly referring to some local feature. Like many wilderness stations, its exact location remains unknown, though it was clearly east of the Jordan in the approach to Canaan.

(2×) The place name appears in Numbers 21:18 and 21:19 in the wilderness travel narrative. Translations consistently transliterate it (Mattanah, Matana), recognizing it as a geographical proper noun marking a temporary encampment. The prepositional phrases ('from Mattanah') indicate movement through the region as Israel approached the promised land. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mattanah, and-from-Mattanah | es: Matana, Y-de-Matana | fr: Mattanah, et-de-Mattanah | de: Mattanah, und-von-Mattanah Num 21:18; Num 21:19

מִתְנִי H4981 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Mithnite; gentillic designation of uncertain geographical origin

This designation appears in the list of David's mighty warriors, identifying Joshaphat as 'the Mithnite.' Like many such gentillics in these military rosters, the derivation is unknown—we don't know what place or clan this refers to. The Septuagint's widely variant readings show the translators had no tradition to guide them. These ethnic or geographical tags helped identify warriors who shared the same name, distinguishing this Joshaphat from others in David's service.

(1×) A gentillic or ethnic designation of unknown derivation, used in 1 Chronicles 11:43 to identify Joshaphat the Mithnite, one of David's mighty warriors. The term presumably refers to a place or clan, but BDB notes the origin is unknown. The Septuagint's drastically varied renderings (ho Baithanei, Maththanei, Matthani) show the Greek translators had no clear tradition about this name, simply attempting transliteration. Such designations helped distinguish individuals with common names in military lists, providing geographical or family identification in an era before standardized naming conventions. The Mithnite remains mysterious, his home territory lost to us. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Mitnite | es: el-mitnita | fr: [המתני] | de: [המתני] 1Chr 11:43

מַתְּנַי H4982 N-proper-ms (3×)
Mattenai, a shortened personal name meaning 'gift of Yahweh'
This abbreviated theophoric name appears for three different men in the post-exilic community. Two of them are listed among those who had married foreign women and divorced them during Ezra's reforms —one in Ezra 10:33, another in 10:37. The third is a priest mentioned in Nehemiah 12:19. The name is a shortened form of Mattaniah ('gift of Yahweh'), dropping the divine element to create a simpler form. The LXX renderings show some variation (Ματθαναι, Μαθθαναι) but preserve the basic consonantal structure.

(3×) Mattenai, a personal name (abbreviated form of Mattaniah). Ezra 10:33 lists him among the descendants of Hashum who 'had married foreign women'—part of the mixed marriage crisis. Ezra 10:37 mentions another Mattenai among descendants of Bani in the same situation. Nehemiah 12:19 identifies a priestly Mattenai: 'of Joiarib, Mattenai'—a priest in the generation after the return from exile. The name means 'gift,' likely shortened from a longer theophoric form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Mattenai, Mattenay | es: Matenai | fr: [מתנ'] | de: [מתנ'] Ezra 10:33; Ezra 10:37; Neh 12:19

מַתַּנְיָהוּ H4983 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (16×)
Mattaniah — personal name meaning 'gift of YHWH,' borne by Levitical singers, a king, and postexilic figures
A theophoric name composed of mattanah ('gift') and Yah, meaning 'gift of the LORD.' Its most politically significant bearer is the last king of Judah, whose name Nebuchadnezzar changed to Zedekiah (2 Kgs 24:17). The name appears most frequently among Levitical musicians descended from Asaph and Heman (1 Chr 25:4, 16; 2 Chr 29:13; Neh 11:17, 22; 12:8, 25, 35). Several postexilic laymen who had married foreign wives also bore this name (Ezra 10:26, 27, 30, 37). The Greek renderings Matthanias and Maththanias reflect the same Semitic root.

Mattaniah (person name) (16×) Proper masculine name designating multiple biblical individuals whose name means 'gift of YHWH.' The name clusters overwhelmingly among Levitical singers and temple personnel — Asaphites and Hemanites serving in cultic worship (1 Chr 25:4, 16; Neh 11:17; 12:8, 35). One notable exception is the puppet king installed by Nebuchadnezzar and renamed Zedekiah (2 Kgs 24:17). French and Spanish renderings (Matthania, Matanías) preserve the theophoric element transparently. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Mattaniah, Mattanyah, Mattanyahu | es: Matanyah, Matanías, Y-Matanías | fr: Mattanyah, Matthania, et-Matthania | de: Mattanja, Mattanyah, [ומתניה] 2Kgs 24:17; 1Chr 9:15; 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:16; 2Chr 20:14

נָשָׂא H4984 Conj-w (2×)
the exalted one, one who exalts himself; someone assuming prominence or honor
This Hitpael participle describes someone lifting themselves up or assuming exalted status. It appears in two contrasting contexts: Adonijah exalting himself to claim the throne before Solomon's accession (1 Kings 1), and a doxological reference to God's exalted majesty (1 Chronicles 29). The form suggests reflexive action—not merely being exalted by others but actively elevating oneself, whether through human ambition or in recognition of inherent divine supremacy.

(2×) Found in 1 Kings 1:5 (Adonijah exalting himself as king) and 1 Chronicles 29:11 (God's inherent exaltation). The cross-linguistic evidence shows the reflexive sense: English 'exalting himself'/'the One exalted', Spanish 'se enaltecía'/'el exaltado', capturing both human presumption and divine transcendence depending on the subject. REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS
en: and-the-One-exalted, exalting-himself | es: se-enaltecía, y-el-exaltado | fr: [והמתנשא], exalting-lui-même | de: [והמתנשא], exalting-sich-selbst 1Kgs 1:5; 1Chr 29:11

מָתַק H4985 V-Hifil-Imperf-1cp (5×)
to become or be sweet, pleasant; to taste sweet; figuratively, to be delightful or agreeable
A verb meaning to become sweet or be pleasant, spanning literal taste and figurative delight. In Exodus 15:25 the bitter waters of Marah become sweet when God shows Moses a tree to cast into them, a vivid narrative of divine transformation. Proverbs 9:17 warns that stolen waters 'taste sweet,' using literal sweetness as a metaphor for the allure of illicit pleasure. Job employs the word for the pleasantness the wicked find even in death (21:33) and the sweetness of evil under the tongue (20:12).

(5×) To become or be sweet, pleasant, either literally of taste (especially water) or figuratively of experiences and pleasures. Exodus 15:25 records the Marah waters becoming sweet (wayyimtequ), the only narrative use. Proverbs 9:17 uses the imperfect yimtaqu for the deceptive sweetness of stolen waters. Job 21:33 extends the image to the clods of the valley being sweet to the dead wicked, and Job 20:12 to evil tasting sweet under the tongue. Spanish 'dulces/dulce' and French 'doux' confirm the sweetness-pleasantness semantic range across languages. SWEET SWEETNESS
en: and-became-sweet, are-sweet, is-sweet | es: Son-dulces-, endulzábamos, es-dulce | fr: et-devint-doux, être-doux, ימתקו | de: [ימתקו], [מתקו], [תמתיק] Exod 15:25; Job 20:12; Job 21:33; Ps 55:14; Prov 9:17

מֶתֶק H4986 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)
sweetness, pleasantness; agreeable quality of speech or relationship
This noun appears in Proverbs wisdom literature describing what makes speech and friendship delightful. One passage praises 'sweetness of lips' as a quality that increases learning and persuasiveness. Another celebrates the sweetness of a friend's counsel—the pleasant quality of wise advice from someone you trust. The term evokes honey and pleasant tastes, transferred metaphorically to words and relationships that bring joy rather than bitterness.

(2×) Occurs in Proverbs 16:21 (sweetness of speech) and 27:9 (sweetness of a friend's counsel). The multilingual glosses uniformly render this as 'sweetness' or 'pleasantness' (English 'sweetness', Spanish 'dulzura'), emphasizing the agreeable, delightful quality that characterizes both persuasive speech and valued friendship in wisdom tradition. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-sweetness-of | es: y-dulzura-de | fr: et-ומתק | de: [ומתק] Prov 16:21; Prov 27:9

מָתְקִי H4987 N-msc / 1cs (1×)
sweetness (fig. of pleasant quality)
This rare noun appears only in Judges 9:11, where the fig tree personifies itself, asking whether it should cease producing 'my sweetness' in order to reign over the trees. The word captures the delightful taste quality of figs, functioning as a stand-in for the fruit itself. Across languages, translators preserve the possessive form and the sensory quality, recognizing how sweetness became shorthand for the tree's valuable contribution.

(1×) The sensory quality of pleasant taste, specifically applied to fruit. In Jotham's fable (Judg 9:11), the fig tree speaks of 'my sweetness,' a metonymy where the taste quality represents the fruit itself. The Hebrew suffix makes this intensely personal—the tree's own characteristic excellence. Spanish 'mi-dulzura' and English 'my-sweetness' both catch the possessive intimacy, as the tree reflects on what it would sacrifice to pursue political power. SWEET SWEETNESS
en: my-sweetness | es: mi-dulzura | fr: mon-sweetness | de: mein-sweetness Judg 9:11

מָתַק H4988 V-Qal-Perf-3ms / 3ms (1×)
to be or become sweet, pleasant (lit. of taste, fig. of experience)
This verb describes both literal sweetness to the palate and metaphorical pleasantness to the soul. When Moses throws wood into the bitter waters at Marah, they 'become sweet' (Ex 15:25). Proverbs 9:17 uses it figuratively: 'stolen water tastes sweet,' capturing the seductive appeal of forbidden pleasure. In Job, the verb describes pleasant experiences—clods of earth sweet to a man (21:33) or the grave sweet to the wicked (24:20). The range shows how taste became a template for evaluating all of life.

(1×) To be or become sweet, pleasant—primarily describing subjective experience. Job 24:20 presents a grim image: 'the worm is sweet to him' (the wicked man), meaning the grave becomes pleasant or his memory fades sweetly. The verb can mean either 'taste sweet' or 'be pleasant/delightful to.' Spanish 'se-deleita-en-él' leans toward the experiential sense—'he delights in it'—while English 'sweet-to-him' preserves the taste metaphor. The construction with לוֹ indicates the one who finds something pleasant, highlighting the subjective nature of this 'sweetness.' STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: sweet-to-him | es: se-deleita-en-él | fr: מתקו-lui | de: [מתקו] Job 24:20

מִתְקָה H4989 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)

Mithkah, an Israelite wilderness encampment during the exodus journey

Mithkah appears in Numbers 33's detailed itinerary of Israel's wilderness wanderings. It was one of the stations between Egypt and Canaan, though like most wilderness sites its exact location is now unknown. The name may derive from a root meaning 'sweetness,' though the connection to any local feature remains speculative. The careful preservation of such station names demonstrates the historical memory embedded in Israel's journey traditions.

(2×) The place name occurs in Numbers 33:28 and 33:29 in the wilderness travel log. All translations transliterate it (Mithkah, Mitcá), recognizing it as a geographical proper noun marking a temporary encampment. The prepositional phrases ('in Mithkah', 'from Mithkah') indicate arrival and departure as part of the systematic journey toward Canaan. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: from-Mithkah, in-Mithkah | es: de-Mitcá, en-Mitcá | fr: dans-Mithkah, de-Mithkah | de: in-Mithkah, von-Mithkah Num 33:28; Num 33:29

מִתְרְדָת H4990 N-proper-ms (2×)

Mithredath, the name of two Persian officials during the post-exilic period

Mithredath appears as the name of two different Persian officials who interacted with the Jewish community. The first was Cyrus's treasurer who returned the temple vessels to Sheshbazzar (Ezra 1), while the second was a Persian official during Artaxerxes' reign who opposed the rebuilding of Jerusalem (Ezra 4). The name is Persian, and the Septuagint renders it as Mithridates, connecting it to the famous royal name of the Pontic kings. Both men played roles in the complex politics of Jewish restoration.

(2×) Found in Ezra 1:8 and 4:7, referring to two separate Persian officials. Translations preserve the transliteration (Mithredath, Mitredat), recognizing it as a Persian proper noun. The Septuagint's 'Mithridates' suggests the name was recognized as a standard Persian formation, likely meaning 'given by Mithra,' the Persian deity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mitredat | es: Mitredat | fr: [מתרדת] | de: [מתרדת] Ezra 1:8; Ezra 4:7

מַתָּת H4991 N-fsc (6×)

Gift, present — something bestowed freely, whether a divine blessing, a human reward, or a promised but unfulfilled offering.

A feminine noun denoting a gift or present, appearing in both construct and absolute forms. It covers a range of gift-giving contexts: a royal reward offered to a prophet (1 Kgs 13:7), what one's hand is able to give as a freewill offering (Ezek 46:5, 11), the gift of God enabling humans to enjoy life's blessings (Eccl 3:13; 5:19), and a deceptive gift that is promised but never delivered (Prov 25:14). The construct phrase 'gift of his hand' in Ezekiel beautifully captures the idea of giving according to one's means — a concept the Spanish 'don-de' and French 'don' elegantly preserve.

gift, present (6×) A gift or present bestowed from one party to another, encompassing divine gifts, human rewards, and voluntary offerings. The construct 'gift of his hand' (Ezek 46:5, 11) expresses giving according to ability, while 'gift of God' (Eccl 3:13; 5:19) frames life's enjoyments as divine blessings. Proverbs 25:14 introduces an ironic twist — a 'gift of falsehood,' one boasted of but never given, like clouds without rain. The multilingual evidence (Spanish don, French don, English gift) consistently renders this as a freely bestowed present. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-gift, gift-of, in-gift-of | es: don-de, en-don-de-, un-regalo | fr: dans-don, don, un-gift | de: Gabe, [מתת], ein-gift 1Kgs 13:7; Prov 25:14; Eccl 3:13; Eccl 5:19; Ezek 46:5

מַתַּתָּה H4992 N-proper-ms (1×)

Mattattah (personal name: Israelite who married foreign wife)

A personal name appearing in Ezra's list of men who had taken foreign wives during the post-exilic period. The name appears in Ezra 10:33 among those who pledged to divorce their non-Israelite spouses as part of the community's covenant renewal. The Septuagint renders this variously as Atha or Maththatha, showing the typical variation in Greek transliteration of Hebrew names. The name may derive from a root meaning 'gift,' though the etymology is uncertain.

(1×) Personal name of an Israelite man listed in Ezra 10:33 as one who had married a foreign woman during the exile period. The list represents those who responded to Ezra's call for covenant faithfulness by agreeing to dissolve mixed marriages. Translators across languages simply transliterate the name: English 'Mattattah,' Spanish 'Matatah,' preserving the Hebrew consonants with slight variation in vowel pointing. This represents a single historical individual in a specific moment of communal reform. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mattattah | es: Matatah | fr: [מתתה] | de: [מתתה] Ezra 10:33

מַתִּתְיָהוּ H4993 N-proper-ms (8×)

Mattithiah — a theophoric name meaning 'gift of YHWH,' borne by several Levites and other figures

A Hebrew proper name compounded from מַתָּן ('gift') and יָהוּ (short form of YHWH), meaning 'gift of the LORD.' It appears in two spelling variants: the longer מַתִּתְיָהוּ and the shorter מַתִּתְיָה. The name is borne by at least four individuals: a Levitical musician appointed by David for the ark procession (1 Chr 15:18, 21; 16:5; 25:3, 21), a Levite in charge of the baked offerings (1 Chr 9:31), an attendant of Ezra at the public reading of the Torah (Neh 8:4), and a man who had taken a foreign wife (Ezra 10:43). The later Greek form Mattathias (Ματταθιας) became famous through the Maccabean patriarch.

Mattithiah (proper name) (8×) The theophoric personal name Mattithiah/Mattityahu, meaning 'gift of YHWH,' borne by several figures in post-exilic and late monarchic texts. The most prominent bearer is the Levitical musician in David's worship arrangements (1 Chr 15:18, 21; 16:5; 25:3, 21). Other bearers include a Levite baker (1 Chr 9:31), a Torah-reading attendant under Ezra (Neh 8:4), and a man in the foreign-wives list (Ezra 10:43). English 'Mattithiah,' Spanish 'Matatías,' and French 'Matthithia' all derive from the Septuagint's Ματταθιας, the same form that later became the name of the Maccabean patriarch. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Mattithiah, Mattityah, Mattityahu | es: Matatías, Matityah, Y-Matatias | fr: Matthithia, et-Matthithia | de: [ומתתיה], [ומתתיהו], [מתתיה] 1Chr 9:31; 1Chr 15:18; 1Chr 15:21; 1Chr 16:5; 1Chr 25:3

נָא H4994 Interjection (404×)

Please, I pray; enclitic particle of entreaty, exhortation, or rhetorical softening

Na' is a tiny but remarkably expressive particle that softens commands into requests, turning imperatives into appeals. Attached to verbs in colloquial speech, it appears over 400 times, making it one of Hebrew's most frequent discourse markers. Abraham uses it when asking Sarah to say she is his sister (Gen 12:13), Moses when pleading with God (Exod 32:31), and even God himself when challenging Job (Job 40:10). Its force ranges from polite courtesy to desperate urgency, and translators wrestle with it: English 'please,' Spanish 'por favor,' German 'doch,' French 'je t'en prie' all capture only a fraction of its pragmatic range.

please, I pray (particle of entreaty) (404×) An enclitic discourse particle appended primarily to imperatives and cohortatives to express entreaty, polite request, or rhetorical softening. Its tone spans gentle courtesy (Gen 13:9 'separate yourself, please') to urgent plea (Gen 22:2) to ironic challenge (Isa 47:12). Virtually untranslatable as a standalone word, it modulates the illocutionary force of the verb it accompanies. The wide variation in target-language renderings (English 'please,' German 'doch,' French 'je t'en prie') underscores its pragmatic rather than semantic content. ENTREATY PARTICLES

en: please | es: por-favor | fr: je-t'en-prie | de: doch Gen 12:11; Gen 12:13; Gen 13:8; Gen 13:9; Gen 13:14

נָא H4995 Adj-ms (1×)

raw, uncooked (of flesh)

A culinary term describing meat that has not been cooked, appearing in the Passover instructions of Exodus 12:9. The Israelites are commanded not to eat the lamb 'raw' (נָא) nor boiled in water, but roasted with fire. This precise culinary specification ensured the proper ritual observance. The word stands in direct opposition to בָּשֵׁל (cooked/boiled), creating a clear distinction in food preparation methods. The instruction reflects both practical food safety and ritual distinctiveness.

(1×) Raw or uncooked, specifically describing flesh or meat that has not undergone heat preparation. In the Passover legislation (Ex 12:9), God prohibits eating the lamb raw, ensuring both culinary safety and ritual correctness. The adjective appears in a threefold contrast: not raw (נָא), not boiled (בָּשֵׁל), but fire-roasted. Translators uniformly render this with straightforward culinary terms: English 'raw,' Spanish 'crudo,' German 'roh,' French 'raw'—all pointing to unprocessed, uncooked flesh. This single occurrence establishes a clear boundary for sacred meal preparation. LIVING CREATURES

en: raw | es: crudo | fr: raw | de: roh Exod 12:9

נֹא H4996 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (5×)

No (Thebes), the great Egyptian city on the Nile, seat of the god Amun

No is the Hebrew designation for Thebes, the magnificent capital of Upper Egypt situated on the Nile some 400 miles south of the Delta. Nahum 3:8 calls it No-Amon ('No of Amun'), linking the city to its patron deity, and challenges Nineveh by comparing its coming fall to Thebes' destruction. Jeremiah 46:25 announces divine judgment on 'Amon of No,' while Ezekiel 30:14-16 lists No alongside other Egyptian strongholds destined for devastation.

(5×) Proper noun for Thebes (Egyptian nt), the great city of Upper Egypt and cult center of the god Amun. All five occurrences appear in prophetic judgment oracles against Egypt. Nahum 3:8 uses the full form No-Amon to compare Nineveh's impending doom to Thebes' historical fall. Ezekiel 30:14-16 lists it among Egyptian cities facing destruction alongside Pathros, Zoan, and Sin. The consistent prepositional usage in French and German glosses ('[בנא],' '[מנא]') reflects its appearance with the prepositions be- and min- in the Hebrew text. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: No, and-No, in-No | es: No, de-No, en-No | fr: Noa, [בנא], [מנא] | de: [בנא], [מנא], doch Jer 46:25; Ezek 30:14; Ezek 30:15; Ezek 30:16; Nah 3:8

נֹאד H4997 Prep-b / N-msc / 2ms (6×)

Skin-bottle, wineskin — a leather container for carrying liquids such as wine or milk.

A masculine noun denoting a skin-bottle or wineskin, a leather container used for storing and transporting liquids. It appears in memorable narrative and poetic contexts: the worn-out wineskins of the Gibeonites' deceptive embassy to Joshua (Josh 9:4, 13), the milk-skin Jael opened for Sisera (Judg 4:19), the skin of wine Jesse sent with David to Saul (1 Sam 16:20), and two vivid psalmic images — God collecting tears in a bottle (Ps 56:8) and the psalmist feeling like a shriveled wineskin in smoke (Ps 119:83). Spanish 'odre' and French 'outre' both descend from Latin uter, preserving this ancient Mediterranean concept of the leather liquid-container.

skin, wineskin, bottle (6×) A leather skin-bottle used to carry wine, milk, or other liquids, a ubiquitous vessel in ancient Near Eastern life. Literal uses describe wineskins as travel provisions (Josh 9:4, 13), hospitality vessels (Judg 4:19; 1 Sam 16:20), while figurative uses are especially evocative: God keeping tears in a bottle (Ps 56:8) and the psalmist becoming like a wineskin shriveled in smoke (Ps 119:83). The Spanish 'odre' and French 'outre' both trace back to Latin uter, showing the cultural continuity of this leather container across Mediterranean civilizations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-skin-of, and-a-skin-of, and-wineskins | es: como-odre, en-tu-odre, odre-de | fr: -le-peau-de, comme-outre, dans-outre | de: -der-Haut-von, in-dein-bottle, und-ein-skin-von Josh 9:4; Josh 9:13; Judg 4:19; 1Sam 16:20; Ps 56:8

נָאָה H4998 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (3×)

To be beautiful, comely, or befitting; to be appropriate or suitable

This rare verb appears in contexts of beauty and appropriateness. The Song uses it to praise the beloved's beauty: 'your cheeks are lovely.' Isaiah employs it for the beautiful feet of the messenger bringing good news. And Psalm 93 declares that 'holiness befits your house, O LORD.' The root connects aesthetic beauty with moral fittingness—what is lovely to the eye and what is suitable or proper to its context. The term bridges external appearance and internal appropriateness.

(3×) To be beautiful, comely, or befitting. Song of Songs 1:10 praises: 'Your cheeks are beautiful with ornaments, your neck with strings of jewels.' Isaiah 52:7 celebrates: 'How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him who brings good news'—messengers of peace are lovely. Psalm 93:5 declares: 'Holiness befits your house, O LORD, forevermore'—holiness is suitable and appropriate to God's dwelling. The Spanish 'hermosas' and French 'convenir' show the dual sense of beauty and fittingness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: beautiful, is-fitting | es: Hermosas, es-propia, hermosos! | fr: Elles-sont-belles„ [נאוה], convenir | de: [נאוה], ist-fitting Ps 93:5; Song 1:10; Isa 52:7

נָוֶה H4999 Prep-b / N-fpc (12×)

Pastures, meadows — open grazing land where flocks feed; a figure of divine provision or desolation

The noun נָאוָה (navah II) denotes pastures or meadows — open, well-watered grazing land. Its most beloved occurrence is Psalm 23:2, where the LORD makes the psalmist lie down in 'green pastures.' Wilderness pastures drip with abundance in Psalm 65:12, while Joel 1:19-20 mourns when fire devours them. The word carries theological weight: flourishing pastures signal blessing; desolated ones mark judgment (Jer 9:10). Psalm 83:12 records enemies who would seize 'the pastures of God.' Spanish 'pastos' and French 'pâturages' convey the pastoral imagery.

pastures, meadows (12×) Open grazing land, pastures, or meadows — often a barometer of divine blessing or judgment. The LORD leads his people to 'green pastures' (Ps 23:2), wilderness pastures drip with fatness (Ps 65:12), and enemies aspire to seize 'the pastures of God' (Ps 83:12). Desolated pastures signal covenant unfaithfulness (Jer 9:10; Joel 1:19-20). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-pastures-of, of-habitations-of, pastures-of | es: de-moradas-de, en-pastos-de, las-moradas-de | fr: [נאות], dans-pâturage, prairie | de: Aue, Auen, der-Auen-von Ps 23:2; Ps 65:12; Ps 74:20; Ps 83:12; Jer 9:10

נָאוֶה H5000 Adj-fs (10×)

Comely, beautiful; or fitting, seemly – used of physical loveliness and of moral appropriateness.

An adjective with two distinct registers of meaning. In the Song of Songs and Jeremiah 6:2 it describes physical beauty – the beloved is 'dark but lovely' (Song 1:5), her face is comely (2:14), and Jerusalem is likened to a delicate, beautiful woman. In the Psalms and Proverbs it shifts to moral fittingness: praise is 'seemly' for the upright (Ps 33:1; 147:1), while luxury is 'not fitting' for a fool (Prov 19:10). The multilingual evidence mirrors this split cleanly: Song of Songs glosses cluster around 'belle/hermosa/lieblich,' while wisdom texts use 'fitting/apropiado.'

1. beautiful, lovely, comely (5×) Physically beautiful, lovely, or comely. Applied to the beloved woman in Song of Songs (1:5 'I am dark but lovely'; 6:4 paired with yaphah 'beautiful') and to her features (2:14 appearance; 4:3 mouth). Also used figuratively of Jerusalem as a lovely woman in Jeremiah 6:2. Spanish 'hermosa/bella' and French 'gracieuse/belle' consistently render this aesthetic sense, matching the Hebrew parallelism with yaphah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-lovely, lovely, the-lovely | es: La-hermosa, bella, hermosa | fr: [הנורה], et-belle„ gracieuse | de: [הנורה], lieblich, und-lieblich Song 1:5; Song 2:14; Song 4:3; Song 6:4; Jer 6:2

2. fitting, becoming, seemly (5×) Fitting, becoming, or seemly in a moral or social sense. In the Psalms, praise is declared 'fitting' for the upright (Ps 33:1; 147:1). Proverbs applies it negatively: fine speech does not befit a fool (17:7), luxury is not seemly for a fool (19:10), and honor is not fitting for the foolish (26:1). The multilingual glosses shift to evaluative language here – eng 'fitting,' spa 'apropiado/conviene' – clearly distinguishing this from the aesthetic sense. PROPRIETY AND FITTINGNESS

en: fitting, is-fitting | es: apropiado, conviene, es-apropiado | fr: agréable, נאורה | de: fitting, ist-fitting, lieblich Ps 33:1; Ps 147:1; Prov 17:7; Prov 19:10; Prov 26:1

נָאַם H5001 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (1×)

to utter prophecy, speak as a prophet

A denominative verb meaning to prophesy or speak in the prophetic manner, derived from the noun נְאֻם ('utterance, oracle'). Found only in Jeremiah 23:31 where God condemns false prophets who 'use their tongues and utter prophecies' (וְיִנְאֲמוּ נְאֻם)—they mimic the prophetic formula 'declares the LORD' without divine authorization. The verb captures the act of speaking with prophetic authority, borrowing the formal speech patterns of true prophecy while lacking authentic divine commission. It's prophecy as performance rather than revelation.

(1×) Jeremiah 23:31 indicts false prophets who 'take their tongues and speak prophecies' (literally 'and they uttered prophecy'). The phrase וְיִנְאֲמוּ נְאֻם uses both verb and noun from the same root, emphasizing how they appropriate prophetic speech forms—they 'utter utterances,' claiming divine authority without divine calling. English renders it 'and declaring,' Spanish 'y-declaran,' both capturing the act of formal prophetic speech. The context exposes empty religious performance: these prophets mimic authentic oracular language but speak only their own words. PROPHESY PROCLAIM en: and-declaring | es: y-declaran | fr: [וינאמן] | de: [וינאמן] Jer 23:31

נְאֻם H5002 N-msc (376×)

Utterance, oracle, declaration; a solemn prophetic formula marking speech as divinely authorized

Ne'um is the quintessential prophetic citation formula, appearing 376 times almost exclusively in the phrase ne'um YHWH ('declares the LORD'). It frames prophetic speech as directly authorized divine utterance, setting it apart from ordinary human discourse. Outside the divine-name formula, it introduces the ecstatic oracles of Balaam (Num 24:3, 15) and David's last words (2 Sam 23:1). Its construct-state-only form and fixed syntactic position give it a formulaic, almost liturgical quality that signals to the hearer: what follows is not the prophet's opinion but God's own declaration.

utterance, oracle, declaration (376×) A solemn prophetic noun used almost exclusively in the construct phrase ne'um YHWH ('declares the LORD') to mark speech as a direct divine oracle transmitted through the prophet. Outside this formula, it introduces the ecstatic utterances of Balaam (Num 24:3, 15) and David's last words (2 Sam 23:1). Its rigid syntactic behavior – always in construct, never inflected independently – gives it a formulaic, nearly liturgical character that functions as a divine speech-act marker rather than an ordinary noun. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: declaration-of-, declares, declares- | es: declaración-de-, oraculo, oraculo-de- | fr: oracle | de: Spruch 2Chr 34:27; Isa 14:22; Isa 17:6; Isa 30:1; Isa 31:9

נָאַף H5003 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fp (31×)

To commit adultery, literally of illicit sexual union and figuratively of idolatrous unfaithfulness to God.

Na'af is the Hebrew Bible's dedicated verb for adultery — more specific than zanah ('to be sexually promiscuous') and far more morally charged than shakab ('to lie with'). It appears in the Decalogue's blunt prohibition lo' tin'af ('you shall not commit adultery,' Exod 20:14), and that legal-covenantal gravity pervades every occurrence. The prophets, especially Jeremiah and Ezekiel, extend it powerfully into the metaphorical realm: Israel 'commits adultery' with stones and trees — that is, with idols (Jer 3:9) — and the faithless nation is portrayed as an adulteress who abandons her husband for foreign lovers (Ezek 16:32, 38). The word's force lies in the covenant framework it presupposes: adultery is not merely sexual misconduct but betrayal of a binding relationship, which is precisely why it serves as the prophets' metaphor of choice for idolatry.

1. adulterer (masculine agent noun) (9×) Masculine agent noun — the adulterer, from substantivized Qal and Piel participles. Nine occurrences identify the male perpetrator of adultery, whether in legal prescription (Lev 20:10, where both the no'ef and the no'efet shall be put to death), wisdom literature (Prov 6:32, 'he who commits adultery lacks sense'), or prophetic denunciation (Isa 57:3, 'you sons of a sorceress, offspring of the adulterer'). Job 24:15 vividly describes the adulterer watching for twilight, saying 'no eye shall see me.' Spanish adultero and German Ehebrecher ('marriage-breaker') both mark the agent substantively. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: adulterer, adulterers, and-against-the-adulterers | es: El-que-adultera, adúltero, adúlteros | fr: commettre-adultère, de-commettre-l'adultère, et-commettre-adultère | de: adulterers, bricht-Ehe, der-adulterer Lev 20:10; Job 24:15; Ps 50:18; Prov 6:32; Isa 57:3

2. adulteress (feminine agent noun) (7×) Feminine agent noun — the adulteress, from substantivized feminine participles. Seven occurrences identify the woman in the act, most prominently in Ezekiel's devastating allegories: Jerusalem as the adulteress wife who 'takes strangers instead of her husband' (Ezek 16:32), judged 'as women who commit adultery' (Ezek 23:45). Lev 20:10 pairs the no'efet with the no'ef for equal capital punishment. Prov 30:20 describes the adulteress who 'eats and wipes her mouth and says I have done no wrong' — a portrait of brazen denial. Spanish adultera and the consistent pairing with masculine forms in legal texts confirm a genuine lexicalized feminine sense. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: adulteress, adulteresses, and-adulterous | es: adúltera, adúlteras, la-adúltera | fr: commettre-adultère, et-commettre-adultère, et-le-adulteress | de: [המנאפת], [נאפות], [נאפת] Lev 20:10; Prov 30:20; Ezek 16:32; Ezek 16:38; Ezek 23:45

3. commit adultery (Piel intensive) (7×) Piel intensive finite forms — committing adultery with habitual, emphatic, or intensified force. Seven occurrences, concentrated in Jeremiah and Ezekiel's prophetic accusations. Jer 5:7 accuses the people of flocking to the harlot's house; Jer 29:23 indicts false prophets who 'committed adultery with their neighbors' wives.' Ezek 23:37 charges both Oholah and Oholibah with adultery — here with idols, blending the literal and metaphorical. The Piel's intensive force captures the repeated, habitual nature of the infidelity. Spanish cometieron adulterio and German ehebrechen both render the completed-action aspect, while the Piel stem signals that this is not a single lapse but a pattern of betrayal. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: and-they-committed-adultery, commit-adultery, committed-adultery | es: adulteran, adulteró, cometieron-adulterio | fr: commettre-adultère, et-commettre-adultère | de: [נאפו], bricht-Ehe, ehebrechen Jer 3:8; Jer 5:7; Jer 29:23; Ezek 23:37

4. commit adultery (Qal) (5×) Qal finite verb forms — the basic act of committing adultery. Five occurrences including the Decalogue prohibition itself (Exod 20:14; Deut 5:18), along with the legal casuistry of Lev 20:10 (twice, for the man who 'commits adultery with' another man's wife). Jer 3:9 provides the great metaphorical extension: Israel 'committed adultery with stone and tree' — idolatry as marital betrayal. The Qal presents the action in its simplest, most unmarked form, and the multilingual evidence is remarkably consistent: Spanish adulterar, French commettre adultere, German ehebrechen all render a straightforward verbal act without the intensification of the Piel. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: and-committed-adultery, commits-adultery-with, you-shall-commit-adultery | es: adulterarás, cometa-adulterio, cometerás-adulterio | fr: commits-adultery-avec, et-commettre-adultère, tu—commit-adultère | de: commits-adultery-mit, du-soll-commit-adultery, und-ehebrechen Exod 20:14; Lev 20:10; Deut 5:18; Jer 3:9

5. committing adultery (infinitive) (3×) Infinitive absolute forms — the act of adultery as a verbal noun or adverbial intensifier. Three occurrences, all in prophetic lists of covenant violations. Jer 7:9 strings together infinitives: 'stealing, murdering, committing adultery, swearing falsely...' — a catalog of broken commandments. Jer 23:14 similarly includes na'of in a list of the prophets' sins. Hos 4:2 delivers the famous indictment: 'swearing, lying, murdering, stealing, and committing adultery — they break all bounds.' The infinitive absolute here functions as a verbal noun in a list, naming the sin as a category. Spanish adulterar and German ehebrechen both use infinitive forms in translation, confirming the grammatical parallelism. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: and-adultery, and-commit-adultery, committing-adultery | es: adulterar, y-adulterar | fr: commettre-adultère, et-commettre-adultère | de: ehebrechen, und-bricht-Ehe, und-ehebrechen Jer 7:9; Jer 23:14; Hos 4:2

נָאַף H5004 N-mp (2×)

adulteries; unfaithfulness, used figuratively for idolatry

This plural noun appears in prophetic denunciations of Israel's covenant unfaithfulness. Both Jeremiah and Ezekiel employ it in extended metaphors comparing idolatry to sexual adultery. The prophets saw Israel's worship of other gods as spiritual adultery against Yahweh, the faithful husband. The term carries moral weight —not merely religious error but betrayal of the most intimate covenant bond, a violation of exclusive loyalty.

(2×) Found in Jeremiah 13:27 and Ezekiel 23:43, both in passages condemning Israel's idolatrous practices. The multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'adulteries' or similar terms (English 'adulteries', Spanish 'adulterios', French 'blasphème'), though some versions recognize the metaphorical dimension, connecting sexual unfaithfulness with covenant violation and idolatry. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: adulteries, your-adulteries | es: Adulterios-tuyos, adulterios | fr: [נאפיך], blasphème | de: [נאופים], [נאפיך] Jer 13:27; Ezek 23:43

נַאֲפוּף H5005 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3fs (1×)

adultery, adulteries (fig. of idolatry as covenant betrayal)

A noun describing acts of adultery, used exclusively in Hosea's marriage metaphor where Israel's idolatry is portrayed as sexual unfaithfulness to YHWH. In Hosea 2:2 (Eng. 2:4), God commands Israel to 'put away her adulteries,' using the plural to suggest repeated or multiplied acts of covenant betrayal. The prophet transforms marital infidelity into a powerful image of theological apostasy, where worship of Baal constitutes spiritual adultery. This metaphorical usage became foundational for biblical treatments of idolatry as relational betrayal rather than merely incorrect theology.

(1×) Plural noun referring to acts of adultery, used figuratively for Israel's idolatrous worship practices. Hosea 2:2 employs the marriage metaphor throughout: Israel must 'remove her adulteries from her face,' where physical locations (face, breasts) represent visible signs of covenant unfaithfulness. The BDB notes this refers specifically to 'idolatrous worship of Baal,' showing how sexual terminology became the prophet's primary language for religious betrayal. Spanish 'y-sus-adulterios' and English 'and-her-adultery' both preserve the possessive construction, emphasizing that these are Israel's own accumulated acts of unfaithfulness. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: and-her-adultery | es: y-sus-adulterios | fr: et-oracle | de: [ונאפופיה] Hos 2:2

נָאַץ H5006 Prep-m / V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-ms (25×)

To contemn, spurn, or show contempt; in the Piel, to blaspheme or revile; rarely, to blossom (homographic root).

A verb of strong scorn, expressing the act of treating someone or something as utterly worthless. In its most common usage, it describes the wicked spurning God's counsel, instruction, or reproof (Prov 1:30; 5:12; 15:5). The Piel intensifies this into outright blasphemy against God himself, as when Nathan confronts David: 'you have utterly scorned the LORD' (2 Sam 12:14). A fascinating outlier appears in Ecclesiastes 12:5, where a homographic root means 'to blossom' — the almond tree blooming as a metaphor for old age — reminding us that Hebrew roots sometimes conceal entirely separate words behind identical consonants.

1. Piel: to despise, show contempt (11×) The Piel stem intensifies basic contempt into active, deliberate disdain directed at persons — often God or his people. Spanish 'desprecian' and French 'despise-moi' both capture the personal, relational nature of this scorn. Used when Israel provokes the LORD (Num 14:11, 23) or when the wicked treat God's servants with contempt (Deut 31:20; 1 Sam 2:17). The Piel here conveys habitual, willful rejection. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: and-despise-me, despised, does-despise | es: a-los-que-me-desprecian, desprecia, despreciaron | fr: et-despise-moi, fera-despise-moi, mon-despisers | de: despised, er-despises, mein-despisers Num 14:11; Num 14:23; Num 16:30; Deut 31:20; 1Sam 2:17

2. Qal: to despise, spurn (8×) The basic Qal stem conveys straightforward contempt or spurning — rejecting wisdom, counsel, or correction as worthless. Proverbs clusters heavily here: spurning reproof (1:30), despising discipline (5:12; 15:5). The parallelism with rejecting 'counsel' and 'instruction' in these wisdom contexts shows this sense targets intellectual-moral stubbornness. In Deuteronomy 32:19, God himself is subject, spurning his wayward children. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: and-rejected, and-spurned, despises | es: desprecia, desprecian, despreciaron | fr: et-mépriser, et-spurned, mépriser | de: [וינאץ], [ינאץ], [נאץ] Deut 32:19; Ps 107:11; Prov 1:30; Prov 5:12; Prov 15:5

3. Piel: to blaspheme, revile God (4×) A specialized Piel usage where the contempt rises to the level of blasphemy — speech or action that directly defames God's honor and holiness. The paradigmatic case is 2 Samuel 12:14, where David's sin has 'utterly scorned' (infinitive absolute + finite verb) the LORD. In Psalm 74:10, 18, the psalmist agonizes over how long the enemy will blaspheme God's name. Spanish 'ha blasfemado' and 'blasfemará' capture the sacral dimension absent from ordinary contempt. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: has-spurned, indeed-scorning, will-spurn | es: blasfemará, ciertamente, ha-blasfemado | fr: en-effet-scorning, mépriser, tu-ai-scorned | de: du-habe-scorned, hat-spurned, wahrlich-scorning 2Sam 12:14; Ps 74:10; Ps 74:18

4. Hifil: to blossom, flourish (1×) An entirely separate homographic root meaning 'to blossom, flourish,' attested only in Ecclesiastes 12:5, where the almond tree blooms as a figure for the white hair of old age. Spanish 'y florezca' confirms this botanical reading. The semantic gulf from 'contemn' is total; this is a lexical accident of shared consonants, not a metaphorical extension. BUD BLOSSOM FLOURISH

en: and-blossoms | es: y-florezca | fr: et-mépriser | de: [ויניאץ] Eccl 12:5

5. Hitpael: to be blasphemed (1×) The Hitpael (reflexive-passive) appears once in Isaiah 52:5, where God's name 'is continually blasphemed' among the nations because of Israel's exile. German 'schmähen' (to revile) captures the public, ongoing nature of the defamation. This passive construction makes the suffering of God's reputation — not human agents — the focus. CONTEMPT AND en: is-blasphemed | es: es-blasfemado | fr: mépriser | de: schmaehen Isa 52:5

SCORN

נְאָצָה H5007a Conj-w / N-fs (2×)
contempt, scorn, disgrace; the reproach resulting from divine judgment
This feminine noun appears in a crisis oracle repeated identically in both 2 Kings and Isaiah. Hezekiah's officials quote it to Isaiah, describing Jerusalem's desperate situation as 'a day of distress, rebuke, and contempt.' The term captures the shame and disgrace that accompany divine judgment—not merely physical suffering but the humiliation of being scorned and despised. It reflects the Ancient Near Eastern sense of honor and shame, where loss of standing equals existential crisis.

(2×) Occurs in 2 Kings 19:3 and Isaiah 37:3, both quoting Hezekiah's message during the Assyrian siege. The cross-linguistic glosses uniformly render this as 'contempt' or 'disgrace' (English 'contempt'/'disgrace', Spanish 'blasfemia'), emphasizing the public shame and scornful treatment that characterize the day of distress. CONTEMPT SCORN
en: and-contempt, and-disgrace | es: y-blasfemia, y-de-blasfemia | fr: [ונאצה], et-contempt | de: [ונאצה], und-contempt 2Kgs 19:3; Isa 37:3

נְאָצָה H5007b N-fpc / 2ms (3×)
blasphemies, contemptuous acts or speech directed against God, expressing scorn and insult
This feminine plural noun denotes acts of blasphemy or contempt specifically directed toward the LORD. In Nehemiah 9:18, 26, it describes Israel's great provocations during the wilderness wandering and judges period—making a golden calf and committing 'great blasphemies.' Ezekiel 35:12 applies it to Edom (Mount Seir), whose taunts against Israel's mountains God heard and will judge. The term carries not just verbal insult but the notion of deliberate, contemptuous rejection. The root נאץ means to scorn, despise, or treat with contempt, and the plural form emphasizes repeated or multiple acts of such defiance.

(3×) The plural form 'blasphemies' captures multiple or habitual acts of contempt against the LORD. In Nehemiah, these provocations (נְאָצוֹת גְּדֹלוֹת, 'great blasphemies') are covenant rebellion—making idols and rejecting God's law. In Ezekiel 35:12, Edom's נְאָצוֹתֶיךָ ('your blasphemies') were spoken against the mountains of Israel but heard by God as affronts to His people and thus to Himself. The French 'mépris' (contempt) and Spanish 'blasfemias' both capture the scornful attitude. The suffixed form 'your blasphemies' in Ezekiel personalizes the guilt, making Edom directly accountable for their contemptuous speech. CONTEMPT AND SCORN
en: blasphemies, your-blasphemies | es: blasfemias, tus-blasfemias | fr: [נאצות], mépris | de: [נאצות], [נאצותיך] Neh 9:18; Neh 9:26; Ezek 35:12

נָאַק H5008 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (2×)
to groan, moan; to utter sounds of suffering or anguish
This Aramaic loan-verb appears in contexts of deep suffering and distress. Job uses it to describe the groaning of dying men in the city whose cries go unheeded. Ezekiel employs it in a vivid prophecy against Egypt, where Pharaoh will groan like a mortally wounded man before the king of Babylon. The verb captures visceral sounds of pain—the involuntary moans of those experiencing crushing affliction.

(2×) Found in Job 24:12 (dying men groaning in the city) and Ezekiel 30:24 (Pharaoh groaning before Babylon). The multilingual evidence consistently captures the vocal expression of suffering: English 'groan', Spanish 'gimen'/'gemirá', French 'gémir', all emphasizing the audible manifestation of extreme distress. GROANING IN DISTRESS
en: and-he-shall-groan, groan | es: gimen, y-gemirá | fr: et-prophétie, gémir | de: [ונאק], [ינאקו] Job 24:12; Ezek 30:24

נַאֲקָה H5009 N-fsc / 3mp (4×)
neaqah — groaning, sighing of the oppressed or wounded
This feminine noun denotes groaning or sighing—the audible expression of suffering, oppression, or anguish. The term appears in contexts of severe distress: Israel's bondage in Egypt, their suffering under the Judges, and the groan of a mortally wounded warrior. Significantly, it's used to describe the sound that moves God to action—He hears the groaning of His oppressed people and responds with deliverance. The word captures the inarticulate cry of suffering that precedes articulate prayer, the groan that rises from unbearable circumstances.

(4×) Groaning, the sound of deep suffering or oppression. Exodus 2:24 is pivotal: 'God heard their groaning (neaqatam), and God remembered his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob'—Israel's groaning in Egyptian slavery moved God to initiate the exodus. Exodus 6:5 repeats this: 'I have heard the groaning of the people of Israel (neaqat).' Judges 2:18 explains God's pattern of sending deliverers: 'YHWH was moved to pity by their groaning (minnaqatam) because of those who oppressed and afflicted them.' Ezekiel 30:24 shifts to judgment imagery: Pharaoh will 'groan the groanings of a mortally wounded man (neaqot chalal).' The term thus captures suffering's vocal expression—the cry that moves divine compassion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-their-groaning, groaning-of, groanings-of- | es: de-su-gemido, gemido-de, gemidos-de | fr: de-leur-groaning, gémissant-de, gémissement | de: [נאקות], groaning-von, ihr-groaning Exod 2:24; Exod 6:5; Judg 2:18; Ezek 30:24

נָאַר H5010 V-Piel-Perf-3ms (2×)
to spurn, reject, abhor; to cast away with contempt
This Piel verb expresses strong rejection or repudiation, though its exact meaning remains somewhat uncertain. The Psalmist accuses God of renouncing his covenant with his servant, while Lamentations describes God spurning his sanctuary. Both contexts involve divine action that reverses previous commitment—what God once honored he now rejects. The verb appears alongside other terms for rejection and profanation, intensifying the sense of comprehensive abandonment.

(2×) Appears in Psalm 89:39 (God renouncing his servant's covenant) and Lamentations 2:7 (God spurning his sanctuary). The cross-linguistic glosses show semantic range around rejection: English 'renounced'/'spurned', Spanish 'abominaste'/'abominado', French 'rejeter', all conveying decisive repudiation, though the root's precise nuance remains debated among scholars. REJECTION AND REFUSAL en: He-spurned, you-have-renounced | es: Abominaste, ha-abominado | fr: [נאר], rejeter | de: [נאר], du-haben-renounced Ps 89:39; Lam 2:7

נֹב H5011 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (6×)
Nob — a priestly city in Benjamin near Jerusalem, site of David's flight to Ahimelech and the subsequent massacre.
A proper noun designating Nob, a priestly city in the territory of Benjamin, located near Jerusalem. It is most famous as the place where David fled to Ahimelech the priest, received the showbread and Goliath's sword (1 Sam 21:1-9), and whose priests Saul subsequently massacred in retaliation (1 Sam 22:9-19). Isaiah 10:32 places it on the route of an Assyrian advance toward Jerusalem, and Nehemiah 11:32 lists it among Benjaminite settlements repopulated after the exile. The exact site remains debated, with Jerome identifying it near Lydda, though most scholars place it on the Mount of Olives ridge with a clear view of Jerusalem.

Nob (proper name, city) (6×) The city of Nob, a priestly settlement near Jerusalem associated above all with the tragic episode of David and Ahimelech. Saul's destruction of its priests (1 Sam 22:19) made it a byword for royal overreach against the priesthood. Isaiah 10:32 envisions it as the final staging point before an assault on Jerusalem, confirming its proximity to the capital. Spanish and English both render it simply as 'Nob,' while the prepositional forms (en-Nob, at-Nob) reflect the locative usage dominant in the corpus. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nob, Nov, at-Nob | es: Nob, en-Nob, en-Nov | fr: Nob, [נֹב], [נב] | de: Nob, [נֹב], [נב] 1Sam 21:2; 1Sam 22:9; 1Sam 22:11; 1Sam 22:19; Neh 11:32

נָבָא H5012 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (115×)

To prophesy – speaking God's word by divine authority (Nifal) or prophesying ecstatically under Spirit compulsion (Hitpael).

Nava' is the Hebrew verb for prophetic activity in both its deliberate and ecstatic dimensions. The Nifal stem carries the standard sense of delivering an oracle or divine message under God's authority – the prophetic speech of Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the classical prophets. The Hitpael stem preserves the older, more visceral connotation of being seized by prophetic impulse, often involving ecstatic behavior, as when Saul falls among the prophets (1 Sam 10:10-13) or the seventy elders prophesy at the tent of meeting (Num 11:25-27). Spanish consistently uses 'profetizar,' French 'prophetiser,' and German 'weissagen,' though these modern terms flatten the vivid distinction between authorized oracle delivery and Spirit-seized ecstatic experience.

1. prophesy, deliver oracle (73×) Prophesying in the Nifal stem (73x) – the standard form for delivering divine oracles, commands to prophesy, and participial descriptions of 'the one who prophesies.' This is the voice of classical prophecy: Jeremiah is commanded 'prophesy!' (Jer 19:14; 20:6), Ezekiel speaks over the dry bones (Ezek 37:7), and the Chronicler records levitical prophesying with instruments (1 Chr 25:2-3). Multilingual renderings are straightforward – Spanish 'profetiza,' French 'prophetise!,' German 'weissagen' – treating it as authorized divine communication. PROPHESY PROCLAIM

en: prophesy, shall-prophesy | es: Profetiza, profetiza, profetiza, | fr: prophétise!, prophétiser | de: [תִּנָּבֵא], weissagen 1Chr 25:2; 1Chr 25:3; Jer 14:15; Jer 19:14; Jer 20:6

2. prophesy ecstatically, act as prophet (42×) Prophesying in the Hitpael stem (42x), carrying connotations of ecstatic or Spirit-compelled prophetic activity – being seized by prophetic impulse rather than deliberately delivering an oracle. The paradigmatic scenes are Numbers 11:25-27, where the Spirit rests on the seventy elders and they 'prophesy ecstatically,' and 1 Samuel 10:5-13, where Saul is overtaken among the band of prophets. Translations such as Spanish 'profetizaron' and German 'und sie weissagten' use the same verb but the Hebrew stem signals a phenomenologically different experience – involuntary, often accompanied by music, and sometimes surprising even to the prophet. PROPHESY PROCLAIM

en: and-he-prophesied, and-they-prophesied, are-prophesying | es: profetizan, profetizando, profetizaron | fr: et-il-prophétisa, et-ils-prophesied, et-ils-prophétisa | de: und-er-weissagte, und-sie-prophesied, und-sie-weissagte Num 11:25; Num 11:26; Num 11:27; 1Sam 10:5; 1Sam 10:10

נִבָּא H5013 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)

to prophesy, speak by divine inspiration (Hitpael)

The standard biblical Hebrew verb for prophetic activity, appearing here in its Hitpael (reflexive/intensive) stem. Ezra 5:1 reports that the prophets Haggai and Zechariah 'prophesied' to the Jews in Judah and Jerusalem, encouraging the rebuilding of the temple. The Hitpael form may suggest intensive or sustained prophetic activity, or the self-involvement of the prophets in their message. The root likely relates to ecstatic or inspired speech—some scholars connect it to Akkadian nabû ('to call, announce') or suggest it pictures the prophet as one 'carried away' by divine inspiration.

(1×) To prophesy, to deliver divine messages—specifically describing Haggai and Zechariah's prophetic ministry during the temple rebuilding. Ezra 5:1 uses the Hitpael perfect with waw consecutive ('and they prophesied'), marking completed prophetic action that spurred the community to resume construction. The form suggests sustained or emphatic prophetic activity. Spanish 'Y-profetizaron' and English 'and-prophesied' both render this straightforwardly, while French and German preserve the Hebrew transliteration, reflecting the term's technical character. This is classic prophetic speech: divinely inspired messages delivered through authorized human agents. PROPHESY PROCLAIM

en: and-prophesied | es: Y-profetizaron | fr: [והתנבי] | de: [והתנבי] Ezra 5:1

נָבֵב H5014 Adj-ms (4×)

nabub — hollow, hollowed out; empty or vacant (literal or figurative)

This adjective means hollow or hollowed out, describing something with empty space inside rather than solid substance. The term appears in technical descriptions of tabernacle and temple architecture (hollow altar construction) and metaphorically for an 'empty-headed' person. The root connection to pipes or flutes (hollow reeds) suggests the basic image of an excavated interior. The word can denote literal physical hollowness (metal sheets formed around a frame) or figurative emptiness (lack of understanding or wisdom).

(4×) Hollow, hollowed out, or empty. Exodus 27:8 and 38:7 use it technically in construction instructions: the bronze altar shall be made 'hollow with boards' (nabub luchot)—built as a hollow frame covered with bronze plates rather than solid metal. Jeremiah 52:21 describes the massive bronze pillars of Solomon's temple as 'hollow' (nabub), having walls four fingers thick. Job 11:12 employs it metaphorically and sarcastically: 'an empty man (ish nabub) will get understanding when a wild donkey is born a man'—i.e., never; the 'hollow man' lacks internal substance or wisdom. The term thus describes both architectural technique (hollow construction) and human folly (empty-headedness). EMPTINESS AND VANITY

en: hollow | es: hueca, hueco, hueco-de | fr: [נְבוּב], creux, נבוב | de: [נְבוּב], hollow Exod 27:8; Exod 38:7; Job 11:12; Jer 52:21

נְבוֹ H5015a Conj-w / N-proper-fs (12×)

Nebo — Moabite city east of the Jordan and the mountain from which Moses viewed the Promised Land

Nebo (נְבוֹ) is a toponym referring both to a city in Moab and to the mountain summit from which Moses viewed the Promised Land. As a city, it was allotted to Reuben and rebuilt by them (Num 32:3, 38). As a mountain, God commands Moses, 'Go up to Mount Nebo' (Deut 32:49), and from its summit he sees the land before dying (Deut 34:1). The Israelites camped near it during the wilderness march (Num 33:47). Isaiah and Jeremiah mention the city in oracles against Moab (Isa 15:2; Jer 48:1, 22). All major languages transliterate directly.

Nebo (proper noun) (12×) A Moabite city allotted to Reuben (Num 32:3, 38) and the mountain from which Moses viewed the Promised Land before his death (Deut 32:49; 34:1), part of the Abarim range east of the Jordan (Num 33:47). The city appears in prophetic oracles against Moab (Isa 15:2; Jer 48:1, 22). The Babylonian deity Nebo (Isa 46:1) is a separate lemma. NEBO PLACE NAME

en: Nebo, Nevo, and-Nebo | es: Nebo, Nevo, Nevó | fr: Nebo, [נבו], et-Nebo | de: Nebo, [נבו], und-Nebo Num 32:3; Num 32:38; Num 33:47; Deut 32:49; Deut 34:1

נְבוֹ H5015b N-proper-ms (1×)

Nebo (Babylonian deity, god of writing and wisdom)

The name of a major Babylonian deity, associated with writing, wisdom, and scribal arts. Isaiah 46:1 depicts Nebo alongside Bel (Marduk) as gods who 'bow down and stoop'—a scene of divine defeat where Babylonian idols are loaded onto beasts as refugees during conquest. The name Nebo appears frequently in Babylonian personal names (like Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuzaradan), showing the god's importance in Mesopotamian religion. Scholars connect the name with the Akkadian verb nabû meaning 'to call' or 'to name,' fitting for a deity of communication and wisdom. Isaiah's prophetic satire shows these vaunted gods reduced to baggage.

(1×) Divine name: Nebo (Nabû), the Babylonian god of wisdom, writing, and scribal arts, son of Marduk. Isaiah 46:1 presents a scene of theological reversal: 'Bel bows down, Nebo stoops'—not in worship but in collapse. Rather than being carried in triumph, these gods are themselves carried as burdens on weary animals. The prophet mocks idols that cannot save themselves, let alone their worshipers. Translators simply transliterate: English 'Nevo,' Spanish

'Nebo,' preserving the familiar name while stripping it of divine honor. This single prophetic occurrence exposes Babylonian theology as powerless before YHWH. NEBO PLACE NAME

en: Nevo | es: Nebo | fr: [נבו] | de: [נבו] Isa 46:1

נְבוּאָה H5016 Art / N-fs (3×)

Prophecy, either genuine divine revelation or false prophetic claims

This late Hebrew term for prophecy appears in the Chronicles and Nehemiah, distinguishing written prophetic oracles from the earlier synonym 'vision' (chazon). It can refer to authentic prophecy like that of Ahijah the Shilonite (2 Chr 9) or genuine prophetic encouragement (2 Chr 15). But Nehemiah uses it for a false prophecy hired to intimidate him. The term emphasizes the verbal and textual nature of prophetic utterance—prophecy as message, whether true or counterfeit.

(3×) Prophecy, a prophetic utterance or writing. Second Chronicles 9:29 cites sources: 'the rest of the acts of Solomon are written in the history of Nathan the prophet, and in the prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite'—authentic written oracles. In 15:8, Asa 'took courage from the prophecy of Azariah'—genuine prophetic encouragement. But Nehemiah 6:12 recounts: 'I understood that God had not sent him, but he had pronounced the prophecy against me'—false prophecy hired by enemies. The term covers both true and false prophetic speech. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: and-the-prophecy, the-prophecy, the-prophecy-of | es: la-profecía, profecía-de, y-la-profecía | fr: [הנבואה], [והנבואה], [נבואת] | de: [הנבואה], [והנבואה], [נבואת] 2Chr 9:29; 2Chr 15:8; Neh 6:12

נְבוּאָה H5017 Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)

prophesying, prophetic activity (as catalyst for action)

A feminine noun denoting the act or practice of prophesying, appearing in Ezra 6:14 as the instrumental cause of successful temple rebuilding. The elders of the Jews 'built and prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet and Zechariah.' The noun captures prophetic speech as active power—not merely prediction but divine word that enables human action. The construct form (בְּנָבוּאַת) shows prophecy functioning as the medium 'through which' or 'by means of which' the building succeeded. This portrays prophetic ministry as practical empowerment, not just information delivery.

(1×) The act of prophesying, prophetic proclamation—specifically as the instrumental means by which the post-exilic community rebuilt the temple. Ezra 6:14 credits the prophets Haggai and Zechariah: the people 'built and prospered בְּנָבוּאַת (through/by means of the prophesying of) these prophets.' The construct with the preposition ב makes prophecy the channel of success, suggesting prophetic words provided not just encouragement but divine authorization and enabling power. Spanish 'por-la-profecía-de' captures this instrumental sense. The noun portrays prophecy as catalytic speech that transforms discouraged builders into successful finishers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: through-the-prophesying-of | es: por-la-profecía-de | fr: [בנבואת] | de: [בנבואת] Ezra 6:14

נְבוּזַרְאֲדָן H5018 N-proper-ms (16×)

Nebuzaradan — Babylonian captain of the guard who oversaw Jerusalem's destruction and the Judean deportation

The Akkadian name Nabû-zēr-iddina means 'Nebo has given offspring.' Nebuzaradan served as rab-tabbāḥîm ('captain of the guard' or 'chief executioner') under Nebuchadnezzar II. He directed the burning of the temple and the royal palace (2 Kgs 25:8–9; Jer 52:12–13), supervised the deportation of Jerusalem's population (2 Kgs 25:11; Jer 39:9), and ironically became the instrument through which Jeremiah was released and protected (Jer 39:11–14; 40:1–5). All sixteen occurrences carry his official title, underscoring his administrative role in the catastrophe of 586 BC.

Nebuzaradan (proper noun) (16×) The Babylonian military official Nebuzaradan, always identified by his title 'captain of the guard,' who served as Nebuchadnezzar's chief agent in the destruction and deportation of Jerusalem. His name appears exclusively in 2 Kings 25 and Jeremiah 39–43, 52, framing the fall of Judah. Spanish (Nabuzaradán) and German (Nebusaradan) renderings reflect slight phonological adaptations of the Akkadian original. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nevuzaradan, chief | es: Adan, Nabuzaradán, Nebuzaradán | fr: Nebuzaradan, Nevuzaradan | de: Nebusaradan, Nevuzaradan 2Kgs 25:8; 2Kgs 25:11; 2Kgs 25:20; Jer 39:9

נְבוּכַדְרֶאצַּר H5019 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (59×)

Nebuchadnezzar — the great king of Babylon who destroyed Jerusalem and exiled Judah

The Babylonian monarch Nebuchadnezzar II (/ נְבוּכַדְרֶאצַּר נְבוּכַדְנֶאצַּר, from Akkadian Nabû-kudurri-uṣur, 'Nebo, protect the boundary') reigned 605–562 BCE and dominates the historical books and prophets. He besieged Jerusalem three times, ultimately destroying Solomon's temple in 586 BCE and deporting Judah's elite (2 Kgs 24–25). The two Hebrew spellings — with resh and with nun — both appear in Scripture; the resh form is historically more accurate. Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel all interact extensively with this pivotal figure who became, paradoxically, an instrument of divine judgment.

Nebuchadnezzar (king of Babylon) (59×) The proper name of Nebuchadnezzar II, king of Babylon. All 59 occurrences refer to the same historical ruler despite minor orthographic variation between the -retsar and -netsar spellings. Spanish 'Nabucodonosor' follows the Greek Septuagint tradition, while German 'Nebukadnezar' and French 'Nebucadnetsar' stay closer to the Hebrew. Key passages include his conquest of Jerusalem (2 Kgs 24:1, 10–11), his dream visions (Dan 2–4), and prophetic oracles against him (Jer 21:2; 25:1). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nebuchadnezzar, Nevukadretsar, Nevukadretstsar | es: Nabucodonosor, Nebukadnetsar, Nevujadnetsar | fr: Nebucadnetsar | de: Nebukadnezar 2Kgs 24:1; 2Kgs 24:10; 2Kgs 24:11; 2Kgs 25:1; 2Kgs 25:8

נְבוּכַדְנֶצַּר H5020 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (34×)

Nebuchadnezzar; the powerful king of Babylon who conquered Jerusalem, destroyed the temple, and exiled Judah

The Aramaic form of the name of Babylon's most famous king, who reigned from about 605 to 562 BC. Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem, destroyed Solomon's temple in 586 BC, and carried the people of Judah into exile — the defining catastrophe of Old Testament history. In Daniel, he appears as both adversary and eventual acknowledger of God's sovereignty, moving from arrogant self-exaltation to humbled confession (Dan 2–4). Ezra recalls him as the one who carried away the temple vessels (Ezra 5:12, 14; 6:5). The spelling varies between נְבוּכַדְנֶצַּר and נְבוּכַדְרֶאצַּר, but all forms refer to the same individual. Transliterations across languages — Spanish 'Nabucodonosor,' French 'Nebucadnetsar,' German 'Nebukadnezar' — preserve distinct traditions of rendering the Babylonian name Nabû-kudurri-uṣur.

Nebuchadnezzar (proper name) (34×) The proper name Nebuchadnezzar (Aramaic נְבוּכַדְנֶצַּר), king of Babylon, who conquered Judah, destroyed the first temple, and deported its people. Prominent in Daniel (Dan 2:1–4:37) where he interacts with Jewish exiles and eventually acknowledges God's sovereignty, and in Ezra where his seizure and return of temple vessels frame the restoration narrative (Ezra 2:1; 5:12, 14; 6:5). Multilingual spellings reflect varying reception traditions — Spanish 'Nabucodonosor' via Latin, versus more Hebraized forms in other languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nevukhadnetsar, Nevukhadnetstsar, Nevukhadnetztzar | es: Nabucodonosor, Nebukadnetstsar, Nevujadnetzar | fr: Nebucadnetsar, [נבוכדנצר] | de: Nebukadnezar, [נבוכדנצר] Ezra 2:1; Ezra 5:12; Ezra 5:14; Ezra 6:5

נְבוּשַׁזְבָּן H5021 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Nebushazban (Babylonian officer, chief eunuch under Nebuchadnezzar)

A Babylonian personal name meaning 'Nebo, deliver me!' (from Akkadian Nabû-šêzibanni), belonging to an officer in Nebuchadnezzar's army. Jeremiah 39:13 lists him among the officials who released Jeremiah from the court of the guard after Jerusalem's fall. He held the title רַב־סָרִיס ('chief of the eunuchs' or 'chief officer'), indicating high rank in the Babylonian administration. The name reflects typical Babylonian piety, invoking the god Nebo for protection—ironic in a context where this 'deliverer god' served as agent of YHWH's judgment against Jerusalem.

(1×) Personal name of a high-ranking Babylonian official who served under Nebuchadnezzar during the siege and capture of Jerusalem in 586 BC. Jeremiah 39:13 mentions him alongside other officers who showed favor to Jeremiah, arranging his release rather than his deportation. His title רַב־סָרִיס suggests he commanded the royal eunuchs or served as a chief administrative officer. The name's theophoric element (Nebo-) reveals his religious identity even as he unwittingly fulfills YHWH's purposes. Translators simply transliterate: English 'Nevushazban,' Spanish 'Nevushazbán,' preserving the Babylonian name in its Hebrew form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Nevushazban | es: y-Nevushazbán | fr: [ונבושזבן] | de: [ונבושזבן] Jer 39:13

נָבוֹת H5022 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (22×)

Naboth – the Jezreelite vineyard owner whose judicial murder by Jezebel became a paradigm of royal injustice

A Jezreelite landowner whose vineyard adjoined King Ahab's palace in Jezreel. When Naboth refused to sell his ancestral inheritance, Queen Jezebel orchestrated false charges of blasphemy, leading to his execution by stoning (1 Kgs 21). His innocent blood became the grounds for prophetic judgment against the house of Ahab, fulfilled when Jehu's chariot passed the very field once belonging to Naboth (2 Kgs 9:21-26). The name likely derives from a root meaning 'to sprout' or 'produce fruit,' an ironic fit for a man remembered for his vineyard.

Naboth (proper noun) (22×) The personal name Naboth (Hebrew navot), identifying the Jezreelite who owned a vineyard next to Ahab's palace. All 22 occurrences refer to the same individual across the narratives of 1 Kings 21 and 2 Kings 9. The Greek Septuagint renders it Nabouthai, and translations across languages preserve the name with minimal variation (Spanish Nabot, French and German Naboth). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Naboth, Navot | es: Nabot | fr: Naboth | de: Naboth, Navot 1Kgs 21:1; 1Kgs 21:2; 1Kgs 21:3; 1Kgs 21:4; 1Kgs 21:6

נִבְזְבָה H5023 Conj-w / N-fpc / 2ms (2×)

reward, gift, recompense; payment for service rendered

This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel in contexts of royal patronage and reward. Nebuchadnezzar promises great gifts and rewards to whoever can interpret his dream, while Daniel later refuses Belshazzar's offered rewards before interpreting the writing on the wall. The term reflects the culture of Persian and Babylonian courts, where kings demonstrated power through lavish gifts to those who served or pleased them. The word is likely a Persian loan-word, fitting Daniel's setting.

(2×) Found in Daniel 2:6 (rewards for interpreting the dream) and 5:17 (Daniel refusing Belshazzar's gifts). The multilingual evidence consistently translates this as 'reward' or 'gift' (English 'reward'/'rewards', Spanish 'recompensas', French 'don'), emphasizing the compensatory nature of royal giving in exchange for valuable service or information. WAGES AND REWARD

en: and-reward, and-your-rewards | es: y-recompensas, y-tus-recompensas | fr: et-don | de: [ונבזבה], [ונבזביתך] Dan 2:6; Dan 5:17

נָבַח H5024 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (1×)

to bark (of dogs)

A verb describing the characteristic sound made by dogs, used metaphorically in Isaiah 56:10 to criticize Israel's failed watchmen. The prophet declares these guardians to be 'mute dogs unable to bark,' combining canine imagery with prophetic failure. A watchdog's bark serves as warning and protection, but these spiritual sentries have lost their voice. The verb appears across cognate languages (Arabic nabaha, Aramaic nebaḥ), always denoting the sharp, warning sound of canine alertness. Isaiah transforms literal animal behavior into a devastating image of prophetic impotence.

(1×) To bark—the characteristic vocal sound of dogs, used figuratively for prophetic warning. Isaiah 56:10 condemns Israel's watchmen as 'mute dogs, unable to bark' (לֹא יוּכְלוּ לִנְבֹּחַ), meaning they fail to sound alarm against danger. A dog's bark serves protective functions: warning, threatening, alerting. These guardians lack even this basic capacity. Spanish 'ladrar' gives the straightforward infinitive, while translators recognize the infinitive construct form. The single biblical occurrence makes barking a metaphor for prophetic voice—when watchmen fall silent, the sheep face unannounced danger. The verb captures the expectation that spiritual leaders will 'make noise' when threats approach. DOG ANIMAL en: to-bark | es: ladrar | fr: [לנבח] | de: [לנבח] Isa 56:10

נֹבַח H5025 N-proper-fs (3×)

Nobah, both a Manassite person and a Transjordanian place he renamed

This name appears for both a person and a place in the same narrative. Nobah was a Manassite who conquered the town of Kenath in Gilead and renamed it after himself (Num 32:42). The place-name then appears in Judges 8:11 as a location in Gideon's pursuit of the Midianites—'the route of the tent dwellers east of Nobah and Jogbehah.' This dual usage reflects the common ancient practice of conquerors naming territories after themselves, embedding personal identity into geography.

(3×) Nobah, a Manassite leader and the place he conquered. Numbers 32:42 records: 'Nobah went and captured Kenath and its villages, and called it Nobah, after his own name'—both person and renamed city. The same verse thus contains both the personal and place-name meanings. Judges 8:11 uses the place-name: 'Gideon went up by the way of the tent dwellers east of Nobah and Jogbehah'—a location in Transjordan. The LXX variations (Ναβαν, Ναβαι, Ναβε, Ναβωθ) show textual uncertainty but preserve the basic name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nobah, and-Nobah, of-Nobah | es: Nobaj, Y-Nobaj, de-Nóbaj | fr: Nobah, de-Nobah, et-Nobah | de: Nobah, und-Nobah, von-Nobah Num 32:42; Judg 8:11

נִבְחַז H5026 N-proper-ms (1×)

Nibhaz (deity worshiped by Avvites in Samaria)

The name of a deity worshiped by the Avvites who were resettled in Samaria after the Assyrian conquest. 2 Kings 17:31 mentions Nibhaz alongside other foreign gods introduced by transplanted populations. The name's meaning and the nature of this deity remain obscure—no extrabiblical references have been identified. Textual variants and Greek versions show confusion about the name, with some manuscripts reading נבחן instead. The deity represents the kind of syncretistic worship that provoked divine judgment according to the Deuteronomistic historian.

(1×) Divine name of unknown etymology, worshiped by the Avvites who settled in Samaria after 722 BC. The text mentions this god in a catalog of foreign deities that polluted Israel's land during the Assyrian resettlement program. Translators uniformly transliterate: English 'Nivchaz,' Spanish 'Nibhaz,' treating it as an opaque proper name without attempting translation. The historical writer condemns this as part of the religious confusion that brought divine judgment—foreign peoples brought foreign gods, creating a theological chaos that demonstrated neither true worship of YHWH nor even consistent paganism. Nibhaz remains a shadowy representative of condemned syncretism. GODS AND DEITIES

en: Nivchaz | es: Nibhaz | fr: Nivchaz | de: Nivchaz 2Kgs 17:31

נָבַט H5027 Prep-m / V-Hifil-Inf (70×)

To look, gaze, behold — in Hifil: directing one's eyes toward something, often with attention, concern, or evaluative intent.
Nabat in its Hifil form is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for directed, purposeful looking. Unlike ra'ah (seeing as perception) or chazah (visionary beholding), nabat emphasizes the deliberate turning of one's gaze toward an object. God looks down from heaven upon the children of men (Ps 33:13). Moses is afraid to look at the burning bush (Exod 3:6). The psalmist pleads, 'Look upon me and answer me' (Ps 13:3). Korean consistently distinguishes the senses — baraboda for plain gazing, naeryeodaboda for looking down, nunyeogyeoboda for scrutinizing — confirming the semantic contours that the multilingual evidence reveals across the 70 occurrences.

1. look, gaze upon (48×) The basic sense of visual looking or gazing — directing one's eyes toward something without special evaluative or directional nuance. This is the unmarked, general act of beholding. God tells Abram to look toward the heavens and count the stars (Gen 15:5); Lot's wife looked back toward Sodom (Gen 19:26); Moses hid his face, afraid to look at God (Exod 3:6). Spanish miró, French regarda, German blickte, and Korean baraboda (바라보다) all converge on simple directed vision. With 48 occurrences, this is the default reading. GAZING AND LOOKING en: (look), I-look, I-shall-look | es: (mira), Mirad, Y-miró | fr: et-il-regarda, et-regarda, et-regarder | de: blicken, blickt, blickte Gen 15:5; Gen 19:26; Exod 3:6; Exod 33:8; Num 12:8

2. look down from above (9×) Looking downward from a higher vantage point, typically of God gazing from heaven upon the earth or humanity. Ps 33:13 — 'From heaven the LORD looks down; he sees all the children of man.' Also Ps 80:14 — 'Look down from heaven and see.' Korean naeryeodaboda (내려다보다, 'look down upon') consistently marks this spatial orientation. The divine perspective is the dominant context: God surveys from above, often as prelude to judgment or mercy (Ps 74:20; Job 35:5). The nine occurrences form a tight cluster around this vertical gaze motif. GAZING AND LOOKING
en: Look-down, he-has-seen, he-looked | es: Mira, mira, mira- | fr: il-a-vu, le-regarder, regarder | de: blicken, blickte, er-hat-gesehen Num 23:21; Job 35:5; Ps 33:13; Ps 74:20; Ps 80:14

3. regard, observe attentively (8×) Sustained, evaluative looking — regarding or observing with scrutiny, concern, or judgment. When Samuel is sent to Jesse's house, God warns him: 'Do not look on his appearance' (1 Sam 16:7) — the verb here carries the weight of assessment. The psalmist asks God to 'regard' (Ps 13:3) and 'look upon' trouble (Ps 10:14). Korean nunyeogyeoboda (눈여겨보다, 'look attentively') and salpida (살피다, 'examine') capture this evaluative dimension that distinguishes it from neutral gazing. GAZING AND LOOKING en: I-will-regard, do-you-look-at, look | es: El-que-mira, Mira, miraré | fr: [אביט], [חביט], le-regarder | de: blicke, blickte, der-blickte Gen 19:17; 1Sam 16:7; Ps 10:14; Ps 13:3; Ps 104:32

4. look upon with concern (4×) Looking upon someone with compassion, concern, or entreaty — a relational gaze that expects response. Often found in prayers: 'Look upon the face of your anointed' (Ps 84:9); 'Look, O LORD, and see' (Lam 1:11; 2:20). Korean doraboda (돌아보다, 'turn and look') and Swahili -angalie ('look with concern') mark the emotional and relational quality. Hab 1:5 extends this to astonished looking — 'Look among the nations, and see; wonder and be astounded.' The four occurrences all carry this appeal for attentive, caring regard. GAZING AND LOOKING en: and-look, and-look-upon, and-see | es: y-mira, y-observa, y-ved | fr: et-le-regarder, et-regarder, et-regardez! | de: und-blickte Ps 84:9; Lam 1:11; Lam 2:20; Hab 1:5

5. (1×) A single occurrence in Isa 5:30 (the Pi'el form, unique in the Hebrew Bible for this root) describing looking over the land and seeing darkness and distress. English 'and he looks,' Spanish 'y se mirará,' French 'et regarder' — the translations treat it as a straightforward act of looking, but the Pi'el stem and the context of cosmic judgment set it apart. Some grammarians consider this an intensified or iterative gaze over the scene of devastation. GAZING AND LOOKING en: and-he-looks | es: Y-se-mirará | fr: et-regarder | de: und-blickte Isa 5:30

נְבָט H5028 N-proper-ms (25×)

Nebat — father of Jeroboam I, appearing only in the patronymic formula 'Jeroboam son of Nebat' Nevat (Nebat) is known exclusively as the father of Jeroboam I, the first king of the breakaway northern kingdom of Israel. The name appears 25 times in the Hebrew Bible, and in every single instance it occurs within the fixed patronymic formula 'Jeroboam son of Nebat' — never independently. This formulaic repetition serves a pointed literary purpose: the Deuteronomistic historian uses 'Jeroboam son of Nebat, who caused Israel to sin' as a recurring refrain of condemnation against every subsequent northern king who perpetuated the calf-worship at Dan and Bethel (1 Kgs 15:1; 16:26, 31; 22:53; 2 Kgs 3:3; 10:29; 13:2, 11; 14:24; 15:9, 18, 24, 28; 17:21; 23:15). The name itself may relate to the root navat ('to look, regard'), and the Septuagint renders it Nabath/Nabat. The patronymic also appears in the Chronicler's parallel accounts (2 Chr 9:29; 10:2, 15; 13:6). Spanish 'Nabat/Nebat,' French 'Nebath,' and German 'Nebat' vary only slightly.

(25×) The father of Jeroboam I, appearing solely in the stereotyped patronymic 'Jeroboam son of Nebat' across Kings and Chronicles. The name likely derives from the root navat ('to look, regard'); the LXX renders it Nabath. Its 25 occurrences serve the Deuteronomistic historian's theological program: 'Jeroboam son of Nebat who caused Israel to sin' becomes the benchmark against which every northern king is measured (1 Kgs 11:26; 15:1; 16:26; 2 Kgs 3:3; 10:29; 13:2; 17:21; 23:15). No independent tradition about Nebat himself survives. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Nebat, Nevat | es: Nabat, Nebat, Nevat | fr: Nebat, Nebath | de: Nebat, Nevat 1Kgs 11:26; 1Kgs 12:2; 1Kgs 12:15; 1Kgs 15:1; 1Kgs 16:3

נְבִיא H5029 N-msd (8×)

Prophet; Aramaic noun for a divinely commissioned spokesperson, cognate with Hebrew navi.
The Aramaic form of the familiar Hebrew word for prophet, appearing exclusively in the post-exilic books of Ezra. Haggai and Zechariah are named as the prophets who spurred the returned exiles to resume building the temple (Ezra 5:1; 6:14). Across languages the translations converge on a single equivalent – Spanish profeta, French prophete, German Prophet – confirming this is a straightforward borrowing into Aramaic imperial administrative texts with no semantic drift from its Hebrew counterpart.

prophet (Aramaic) (8×) A divinely authorized spokesperson who delivers God's message to the people. In Ezra 5:1-2 and 6:14, the term identifies Haggai and Zechariah as the prophets whose encouragement motivated the rebuilding of the Jerusalem temple under Persian rule. The multilingual glosses are unanimous (profeta, prophete, Prophet), showing no ambiguity – the Aramaic form functions identically to Hebrew navi in every translation tradition. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY
en: [ketiv], [the-prophet], prophet | es: (profeta), (profetas), (profetas-de) | fr: prophète | de: [(נביא)], [(נבייא)], [[נביאה]] Ezra 5:1; Ezra 5:2

נָבִיא H5030 N-mpc / 2ms (317×)

Prophet — a divinely appointed spokesperson who declares God's message to the people Navi is the definitive Hebrew term for a prophet — one who speaks on behalf of God. An early editorial note in 1 Samuel 9:9 records that the navi was formerly called ro'eh ('seer'), reflecting a shift from visionary to proclamatory emphasis. The word covers the full prophetic spectrum: patriarchs like Abraham (Gen 20:7), the incomparable Moses (Deut 34:10), the ecstatic bands of Samuel's era, the classical writing prophets, and even false prophets condemned by Jeremiah. Spanish 'profeta,' French 'prophète,' and German 'Prophet' all derive from the Greek prophetes, which itself translates navi in the Septuagint.

Prophet, divine spokesperson (317×) A person commissioned by God to deliver divinely inspired messages, whether warnings, promises, or judgments. The term encompasses both true prophets (Moses, Elijah, Isaiah) and false ones denounced in Deuteronomy 18:20 and Jeremiah. Originally distinguished from the 'seer' (ro'eh, 1 Sam 9:9), the navi became the standard designation for those who spoke 'thus says YHWH.' The uniform rendering across languages (spa: 'profeta,' fra: 'prophète,' deu: 'Prophet') traces back to the LXX's prophetes. PROPHET SPOKESPERSON

en: the-prophet | es: el-profeta | fr: le-prophète | de: der-Prophet Deut 13:3; Deut 18:20; Deut 18:22

נְבִיאָה H5031 Art / N-fs (6×)

Prophetess — a woman endowed with prophetic gifting, whether through song, oracular speech, or the spirit of God.

The feminine form of navi ('prophet'), designating a woman who functions in a prophetic role. Scripture names five women with this title: Miriam, who led Israel in triumphant song at the Red Sea (Exod 15:20); Deborah, who judged Israel and accompanied Barak into battle (Judg 4:4); Huldah, whom King Josiah's officials consulted when the Book of the Law was found (2 Kgs 22:14 = 2 Chr 34:22); the unnamed wife of Isaiah (Isa 8:3); and the false prophetess Noadiah who opposed Nehemiah (Neh 6:14). The Spanish 'profetisa' and French 'prophetesse' both preserve the feminine marking, mirroring the Hebrew feminine suffix.

prophetess (6×) A woman recognized as bearing the prophetic gift, whether through inspired song (Miriam, Exod 15:20), judicial-oracular authority (Deborah, Judg 4:4), consultative prophecy (Huldah, 2 Kgs 22:14), spousal association with a prophet (Isaiah's wife, Isa 8:3), or even false prophecy (Noadiah, Neh 6:14). The title parallels masculine navi and indicates genuine spiritual authority. The articled form 'the prophetess' appears in most occurrences, suggesting the role was sufficiently recognized to warrant the definite article. Spanish 'profetisa' and French 'prophetesse' both maintain the grammatical feminization. PROPHET SPOKESPERSON

en: a-prophetess, the-prophetess | es: la-profetisa, profetisa | fr: [הנביאה], le-prophetess, le-prophétesse | de: [הנביאה], der-Prophetin, der-prophetess Exod 15:20; Judg 4:4; 2Kgs 22:14; 2Chr 34:22; Neh 6:14

נְבָיוֹת H5032 N-proper-ms (5×)

Nebaioth, firstborn son of Ishmael; an Arabian tribe associated with Kedar

Nebaioth is the firstborn son of Ishmael and the name of the Arabian tribe descended from him, closely associated with Kedar. The genealogical lists in Genesis 25:13 and 1 Chronicles 1:29 place Nebaioth first among Ishmael's twelve sons. Genesis 28:9 and 36:3 identify Esau's wife Mahalath (Basemath) as a daughter of Ishmael and sister of Nebaioth. Isaiah 60:7 envisions the flocks of Nebaioth serving at God's altar, paired with Kedar, reflecting their pastoral, semi-nomadic identity.

(5×) Proper noun for the firstborn son of Ishmael and the pastoral Arabian tribe bearing his name. The genealogies (Gen 25:13; 1 Chr 1:29) establish Nebaioth as Ishmael's eldest. Marriage connections appear in Genesis 28:9 and 36:3 where Esau marries into this lineage. Isaiah 60:7 pairs Nebaioth with Kedar as sheep-herding peoples whose flocks will serve in eschatological worship. Spanish 'Nebaiot/Nebayot' and French 'Nebaioth' preserve the name consistently, while the Assyrian form Nabaitai connects to the later Nabataeans, though this identification remains debated. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nebaioth, Nevayot, Nevayoth | es: Nebaiot, Nebayot, Nevayot | fr: Nebaioth, [נביות] | de: Nebajot, Nebajots, [נביות] Gen 25:13; Gen 28:9; Gen 36:3; 1Chr 1:29; Isa 60:7

נְבֶךְ H5033 N-mpc (1×)

springs, sources (of the sea/deep)

A rare noun of uncertain etymology, appearing only in Job 38:16 where God challenges Job: 'Have you entered the springs of the sea, or walked in the recesses of the deep?' The term describes the mythological sources or springs of the ocean—the mysterious depths where waters originate. The parallel term 'recesses of the deep' (חֵקֶר תְּהוֹם) reinforces this sense of inaccessible, primordial waters. Ancient Near Eastern cosmology imagined underground springs feeding the seas, and God's rhetorical question asserts Job's limited access compared to divine omniscience.

(1×) Springs or sources—specifically the mythical fountains of the ocean depths, inaccessible to humans. Job 38:16 places this in God's catalog of cosmological wonders: 'Have you entered into נַבְכֵי־יָם (the springs of the sea)?' The construct form links these 'springs' directly to 'sea,' suggesting deep underwater sources. Some scholars have questioned the text or proposed alternative roots (נָבַל, נָבַע), but the meaning 'springs/sources' fits the parallelism with 'recesses of the deep.' Spanish 'manantiales-de' and English 'the-springs-of' both capture the sense of originating sources, pointing to waters beyond human exploration—cosmic mysteries that dwarf Job's understanding. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-springs-of- | es: manantiales-de- | fr: נבכי | de: [נבכי] Job 38:16

נָבַל H5034a V-Piel-Imperf-2ms (5×)

to be senseless or foolish; (Piel) to treat with contempt, disgrace, dishonor

A verb meaning to act foolishly (Qal) or to treat with contempt and disgrace (Piel). Proverbs 30:32 uses the Qal for acting foolishly by self-exaltation. The Piel intensifies the meaning toward active contempt: Deuteronomy 32:15 describes Jeshurun growing fat and spurning (treating as foolish) the God who made him. Micah 7:6 laments a son dishonoring his father. Nahum 3:6 depicts God making Nineveh vile, and Jeremiah 14:21 pleads that God not dishonor his glorious throne.

(5×) To act foolishly or senselessly (Qal), or to treat someone or something with contempt and disgrace (Piel), ranging from personal folly to public humiliation. Proverbs 30:32 warns against foolish self-exaltation (Qal). The Piel carries a stronger force: Deuteronomy 32:15 describes Israel spurning its Maker; Micah 7:6 portrays a son dishonoring his father; Nahum 3:6 has God making Nineveh a spectacle of contempt; Jeremiah 14:21 pleads against the dishonoring of God's throne. Spanish 'deshonra/deshonres' and 'neciamente' neatly divide the contempt and folly senses. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: and-I-will-treat-you-with-contempt, and-treated-as-fool, dishonor | es: actuaste-neciamente, deshonra, deshonres | fr: [תנבל], et-flétrir, et-treated-comme-fool | de: [ונבלתיך], [נבלת], [תנבל] Deut 32:15; Prov 30:32; Jer 14:21; Mic 7:6; Nah 3:6

נָבֵל H5034b V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (20×)

To wither, fade, and drop off (of vegetation); to wear out or become exhausted; to crumble or disintegrate

The verb נָבֵל paints the picture of life draining away — leaves dropping, flowers fading, strength spent. In its most frequent use, it describes the wilting and falling of vegetation: Isaiah's vision of all nations fading 'like a leaf from the vine' (Isa 34:4), or the promise that the righteous person's leaf 'shall not wither' (Ps 1:3). Jethro's counsel to Moses at Sinai reveals a human application: 'You will surely wear out' (Exod 18:18) — the same drooping that overtakes a plant overtakes an overtaxed leader. The Arabic cognate nabala ('to die') and the Aramaic noun for 'corpse' confirm that the word's deepest resonance is with the irreversible loss of vitality.

1. wither, fade (of vegetation) (16×) The core botanical sense of withering, fading, and dropping, accounting for 16 of 20 occurrences. Plants, flowers, leaves, and grass lose their vitality and fall away. The multilingual glosses converge on wilting language — Spanish 'marchita,' German 'welken,' English 'faded away.' In Psalm 1:3 the righteous man's leaf 'shall not wither' (יִבּוֹל), while in Isaiah 40:7-8 the grass withers and the flower fades under the breath of the LORD. The 2 Samuel 22:46 and Psalm 18:45 occurrences extend the imagery metaphorically to enemies who 'wither away' from their strongholds. WITHERING AND FADING

en: and-like-a-withered-fig, faded-away, fades | es: caerá, como-cae, marchita | fr: cadavre, et-flétrir, flétrir | de: Leichnam, [יבול], und-welken 2Sam 22:46; Ps 1:3; Ps 18:45; Ps 37:2; Isa 1:30

2. wear out, become exhausted (3×) The human-exhaustion sense of wearing out or becoming spent through overexertion, attested in 3 occurrences. In Exodus 18:18 Jethro warns Moses twice — using both infinitive absolute and imperfect — 'you will surely wear out' (נָבֵל תִּבֹּל). The Spanish 'te marchitaras' and French 'tu portant dehors' attempt to preserve the botanical metaphor applied to a person. Isaiah 64:6 extends it communally: 'we all fade like a leaf,' where Israel's spiritual exhaustion mirrors the drooping of autumn foliage. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-we-have-faded, wearing-out, you-will-wear-out | es: marchitar, te-marchitarás, y-nos-marchitamos | fr: et-flétrir, portant-dehors, tu—wear-dehors | de: du-wird-wear-heraus, und-welken, wearing-heraus Exod 18:18; Isa 64:6

3. crumble, disintegrate (1×) A rare extension beyond organic decay to physical disintegration — structural crumbling rather than botanical wilting. In Job 14:18 a mountain falls and crumbles away, and a rock is moved from its place. The Spanish 'se desmorona' ('it crumbles') distinctly marks this as geological decay rather than vegetable fading, showing that the word's semantic reach extends to any irreversible collapse of form. WITHERING AND FADING

en: crumbles | es: se-desmorona | fr: flétrir | de: [יבול] Job 14:18

נֵבֶל H5035a Art / N-mp (11×)

A container for liquids: either a leather wineskin or an earthenware jar, used literally and as a figure for fragility.

This noun covers two distinct kinds of vessels. In its first sense it denotes a skin bag made from animal hide, used to carry wine or water — Hannah brings a nevel yayin to Shiloh (1 Sam 1:24), and the Gibeonites present worn-out wineskins to Joshua. Job 38:37 extends the image poetically: 'Who can tip the nivle shamayim?' — the waterskins of heaven, meaning the rain clouds. In its second sense it refers to earthenware jars or pitchers, and here the prophets exploit the vessel's fragility: Jeremiah 48:12 pictures Moab's jars being smashed, Lamentations 4:2 compares Zion's precious sons to mere clay pots, and Isaiah 30:14 likens Judah's breaking to the shattering of a potter's flask.

1. skin, wineskin, waterskin (6×) A skin container — a wineskin or waterskin made from animal hide. The Hebrew construct nevel yayin ('skin of wine') appears in 1 Samuel 1:24, 10:3, and 2 Samuel 16:1 for the practical transport of wine. Hindi 'mashk' and Swahili 'kiriba' both point to leather water-bags, confirming the material sense. Job 38:37 extends this metaphorically to the clouds as 'waterskins of heaven' (nivle shamayim), picturing rainfall as liquid poured from leather bags. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-skin-of, and-his-jars, and-skin-of | es: odre-de, odres-de, y-odre-de | fr: et-outre, et-skin-de, et-un-skin-de | de: [ונבלי], [ונבליהם], skin-von- 1Sam 1:24; 1Sam 10:3; 1Sam 25:18; 2Sam 16:1; Job 38:37

2. jar, vessel, jug (5×) An earthenware jar, pitcher, or vessel — a ceramic container rather than a leather one. Isaiah 30:14 speaks of the 'shattering of a potter's nevel,' and Lamentations 4:2 compares Zion's noble sons to nivle-cheres ('earthen jars'), emphasizing their reduction to worthless clay. Spanish 'vasija/tinaja' and Arabic 'jarrah' point consistently to fired pottery. Jeremiah 13:12 uses the jar as a parabolic prop: 'Every jar shall be filled with wine' — a proverb the people mockingly repeat before its grim judgment meaning is revealed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-vessels, jar, of-a-potters | es: como-vasijas-de, los-odres, tinaja | fr: outre | de: [הנבלים], [לנבלי], [נבל] Isa 22:24; Isa 30:14; Jer 13:12; Lam 4:2

נֵבֶל H5035b Prep-b / N-mp (27×)

harp, lyre — a stringed instrument used in worship, celebration, and courtly music throughout Israel's history

Nevel designates a stringed instrument — variously rendered harp, lyre, or psaltery — whose 27 occurrences span the full arc of Israelite musical life. It first appears in the band of prophets Saul encounters, playing nevel alongside timbrel, flute, and lyre (1 Sam 10:5). David and all Israel played nevalim before the Ark (2 Sam 6:5; 1 Chr 13:8), and Levitical musicians were organized with designated nevel-players for temple worship (1 Chr 15:16, 20, 28; 25:1, 6; 2 Chr 5:12; 29:25). Solomon imported almug wood from Ophir to craft nevalim (1 Kgs 10:12). The prophets condemned its use in self-indulgent revelry: Amos denounced those who 'improvise on the nevel like David' while ignoring ruin (Amos 5:23; 6:5), and Isaiah warned of feasts where 'harp and lyre and wine' reign (Isa 5:12). The instrument likely had a bulging resonance body, distinguishing it from the simpler kinnor. Spanish 'arpa,' French and German 'Harfe' converge on the harp identification.

harp, lyre, psaltery (27×) A stringed musical instrument (likely a harp with a bulging resonance body) used in temple worship, royal ceremony, and prophetic activity. Distinguished from the simpler kinnor and typically named alongside it. Central to Levitical temple worship (1 Chr 15:16, 20, 28; 25:1, 6; 2 Chr 5:12; 29:25), introduced in the prophetic band Saul encountered (1 Sam 10:5), and played before the Ark by David and all Israel (2 Sam 6:5). Prophets condemned its misuse in hedonistic revelry (Amos 5:23; 6:5; Isa 5:12). The Psalms celebrate it as an instrument of praise (Ps 33:2; 57:8; 71:22; 150:3). LYRE HARP INSTRUMENT

en: O-harp, and-with-harps, and-with-lyres | es: arpa, arpas, con-arpa | fr: [בנבלים], [ובנבלים], [בנבלי] | de: Harfe, Harfen, O-Harfe 1Sam 10:5; 2Sam 6:5; 1Kgs 10:12; 1Chr 13:8; 1Chr 15:16

נָבָל H5036 Prep-l / Adj-ms (18×)

Foolish, morally senseless; a person blind to ethical and divine claims, acting with shameful impiety.

Describes not mere intellectual limitation but a deep moral and spiritual insensibility, someone who fails to perceive God's claims and acts with disgraceful presumption. Moses rebukes Israel as a 'foolish and unwise people' who have forgotten their Redeemer (Deut 32:6), while the psalmist appeals to God against a nabal nation that blasphemes his name (Ps 74:18). When used as a noun, it denotes a person whose folly is willful and culpable, as when Abigail admits her husband's character matches his name (1 Sam 25:25). David's lament asks how Abner could have died 'as a fool dies' (2 Sam 3:33). Job's wife is rebuked for speaking 'as one of the foolish women' (Job 2:10). Isaiah contrasts the nabal with the noble (Isa 32:5-6). Spanish 'necio' and German 'Narr' both capture the moral weight of this term.

foolish, senseless person (18×) A person characterized by willful moral and spiritual blindness rather than mere ignorance. The term carries connotations of shameful impiety and base presumption. In Deuteronomy 32:6 it describes Israel's ingratitude toward God; in Psalm 74:18 it labels those who blaspheme the divine name. Used substantively for the culpably foolish person (2 Sam 3:33; Isa 32:5-6; Job 2:10), it stands in sharp contrast to the wise and noble. Multilingual evidence confirms the moral weight: Spanish 'necio,' German 'Narr,' and English 'fool' all carry ethical rather than purely intellectual connotations. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: a-fool, and-a-fool, fool | es: al-necio, el-necio, las-necias | fr: [לנבל], [נבל], et-נבל | de: Narr, [הנבלות], [הנבלים] Deut 32:6; Deut 32:21; 2Sam 3:33; 2Sam 13:13; Job 2:10

נָבָל H5037 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (22×)

Nabal – the wealthy but foolish Carmelite whose name became proverbial for senselessness

A wealthy sheep-owner from Maon who grazed his flocks near Carmel. Nabal refused David's polite request for provisions despite David's men having protected his shepherds, provoking a crisis only averted by his wise wife Abigail (1 Sam 25). The narrator exploits the name's meaning overtly: 'As his name is, so is he – Nabal is his name, and folly is with him' (25:25). Nabal died ten days after learning of his narrow escape, and Abigail subsequently became David's wife. The name stands as one of Scripture's sharpest examples of characterizing nomenclature.

Nabal (person name) (22×) The proper name Nabal (Hebrew naval, 'fool, senseless one'), denoting the churlish husband of Abigail from the Carmel region. All 22 occurrences span 1 Samuel 25 through 2 Samuel 3:3. The etymological wordplay is central to the narrative – Abigail herself glosses his name as meaning folly (nevalah). Translations uniformly transliterate the name (Spanish, French, and German all use Nabal), though the pun is lost without annotation. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: Nabal, from-Nabal | es: Nabal, Naval, de-Nabal | fr: Nabal, de-Nabal | de: Nabal, von-Nabal 1Sam 25:3; 1Sam 25:4; 1Sam 25:5; 1Sam 25:9; 1Sam 25:10

נְבֵלָה H5038 N-fsc (48×)

Carcass, corpse — a dead body whether human (often in dishonor) or animal (especially in purity law)

Derived from a root suggesting inertness or collapse, nebelah denotes a lifeless body — human or animal — with connotations of dishonor, defilement, or abandonment. When applied to people, it often appears in contexts of judgment: an unburied corpse exposed to birds and beasts (Deut 28:26), the body of a disobedient prophet left on the road (1 Kgs 13:22-30), or the slain of Jerusalem given as food to the earth's creatures (Jer 7:33). In Levitical law, the same word governs the elaborate system of corpse-impurity for animals, where touching or carrying a nebelah renders a person unclean until evening.

1. corpse of a person (25×) The dead body of a human being, frequently in contexts of violent death, exposure, or dishonorable burial. Appearing 25 times, this sense carries weight in narratives of divine judgment and battlefield aftermath. The prophet's corpse on the road (1 Kgs 13:22-30) and the curse of Deut 28:26 ('your corpse shall be food for every bird') use nebelah to convey the horror of death without proper burial. Translations converge on 'corpse/cadáver/cadavre/Leichnam,' each capturing the gravity of a lifeless human form. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: corpse-of, his-body, his-corpse | es: cadáver-de, cadáver-de-ellos, cadáver-su | fr: cadavre, cadavre-de, le-cadavre | de: Leichnam, corpse-von, dein-Kadaver Deut 21:23; Deut 28:26; Josh 8:29; 1Kgs 13:22; 1Kgs 13:24

2. animal carcass or carrion (23×) The carcass of a dead animal, central to Levitical purity legislation governing what defiles by contact. With 23 occurrences concentrated in Lev 5:2, 7:24, 11:8-40, this sense anchors the Torah's taxonomy of clean and unclean: touching the nebelah of an unclean creature brings impurity, while even a clean animal that dies naturally becomes a source of defilement. Translations shift from the solemn 'corpse' to the more clinical 'carcass' (eng), 'Animal muerto' (spa), 'Kadaver' (deu), reflecting the different register of ritual law versus narrative. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-carcass, and-in-their-carcass, carcass | es: Animal-muerto, cadáver, cuerpo-muerto | fr: cadavre, dans-cadavre-de, dans-leur-cadavre | de: Kadaver, ein-Kadaver, ihr-Kadaver Lev 5:2; Lev 7:24; Lev 11:8

נְבָלָה H5039 Conj-w / N-fs (13×)

Outrageous folly, moral senselessness; a disgraceful act that violates Israel's covenantal standards.

Far more than mere foolishness, nevalah denotes an act of willful moral outrage that shocks the community and violates the sacred norms governing Israel's covenant life. The expression 'to commit nevalah in Israel' (Gen 34:7; Judg 20:6; Deut 22:21) became a fixed formula for acts so heinous they threatened the fabric of the entire community — especially sexual violence and gross inhospitality. In Isaiah 32:6 the term is linked to the character of the naval, the moral fool whose heart works iniquity. Spanish 'infamia' and 'vileza' capture the social dimension of public disgrace, while English 'folly' understates the gravity this word carried.

senselessness, outrageous folly, disgrace (13×) Moral senselessness manifested as outrageous, disgraceful conduct that violates communal and covenantal norms. Nearly always used in the stereotyped phrase 'to do nevalah in Israel,' marking acts — especially sexual crimes (Gen 34:7, the violation of Dinah; Judg 19:23–24; 2 Sam 13:12, Amnon and Tamar) and covenant-breaking behavior (Josh 7:15) — as socially intolerable. The word is also applied to churlish inhospitality (1 Sam 25:25, Nabal). Spanish translations split between 'infamia' (infamy) and 'vileza' (vileness), reflecting the dual sense of shameful foolishness and public disgrace. FOLLY AND FOOLISHNESS

en: a-disgraceful-thing, and-folly, disgrace | es: infamia, la-locura, la-vileza | fr: cadavre, disgrace, déshonneur | de: Leichnam, [נבלה], der-disgrace Gen 34:7; Deut 22:21; Josh 7:15; Judg 19:23; Judg 19:24

נַבְלוּת H5040 N-fsc / 3fs (1×)

lewdness, shamelessness, immodesty (as persistent moral quality)

A noun denoting shameless behavior or sexual immodesty, appearing in Hosea 2:10 within the prophet's extended marriage metaphor. God threatens to 'uncover her lewdness in the sight of her lovers,' exposing Israel's spiritual adultery publicly. The term suggests not just isolated acts but an ongoing state of shamelessness—a character quality of immodest boldness in idolatry. The prophet combines sexual vocabulary with covenant theology, making Israel's worship of other gods a form of brazen infidelity that will be publicly humiliated.

(1×) Lewdness or shamelessness—specifically Israel's brazen idolatry portrayed as sexual immodesty. Hosea 2:10 threatens exposure: 'I will uncover her נַבְלוּתָהּ (her lewdness) before her lovers.' The suffix marks this as Israel's own characteristic quality, not a one-time act. The term appears in context with other sexual/exposure language, creating a sustained metaphor of covenant unfaithfulness as adultery. Spanish 'su-vergüenza' (her shame) and French 'impudicité' (immodesty) both catch the moral-sexual dimension. This is persistent shamelessness, a settled disposition of immodest spiritual adultery that will be publicly revealed for what it is. ADULTERY AND IMMORALITY

en: her-lewdness | es: su-vergüenza | fr: impudicité | de: [נבלתה] Hos 2:10

נְבַלָּט H5041 N-proper-fs (1×)

Neballat (town where Benjamites resettled)

A place name identifying a location where Benjamites settled after the exile, mentioned in Nehemiah 11:34. The site has been identified with modern Beit Nebala, about six miles northeast of Lydda. The Septuagint renders it as Nabalat, showing typical Greek transliteration. The Mishnah preserves the name as Beit Nebalata, confirming its continued recognition in later Jewish tradition. The town appears in lists of post-exilic resettlement, documenting the gradual repopulation of Benjamin's traditional territory after the Babylonian deportation.

(1×) Place name of a Benjamite town resettled during the post-exilic period. Nehemiah 11:34 includes it in a list of villages where returnees from Babylon established themselves, restoring pre-exile territorial boundaries. Modern identification with Beit Nebala, six miles northeast of Lydda, shows continuity of the name across millennia. Translators simply transliterate: English 'Nevalat,' Spanish 'Nebalat,' treating it as a geographical proper name. The mention represents part of Nehemiah's larger project of documenting the restoration of Judah and Benjamin's demographic and territorial integrity after the trauma of exile. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nevalat | es: Nebalat | fr: [נבלט] | de: [נבלט] Neh 11:34

נָבַע H5042 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (11×)

Pour forth speech or praise (Hifil); flow or bubble up as water (Qal); cause to ferment or putrefy

A verb of irrepressible outpouring, rooted in the image of water bubbling from a spring. In its lone Qal occurrence, it describes a 'flowing brook' as a metaphor for the wellspring of wisdom (Prov 18:4). The Hifil dominates usage, transferring this gushing energy to speech: day 'pours forth' knowledge to day (Ps 19:2), the psalmist will 'pour out' dark sayings (Ps 78:2), and evildoers 'belch forth' arrogance (Ps 59:7, 94:4). Ecclesiastes 10:1 takes the bubbling in a different direction—dead flies cause perfumer's oil to 'bubble up' and stink. The Arabic cognate nabaᶜa ('well forth, of water') and Ethiopic nabᶜa ('weep') both preserve the liquid-outpouring core that Hebrew extends so vividly to speech.

1. pour forth speech or praise (9×) To pour forth speech, praise, or declaration (Hifil metaphorical). The dominant biblical usage: creation's days 'pour forth' speech (Ps 19:2), the psalmist will 'utter' riddles (Ps 78:2), and lips 'bubble over' with praise when taught God's statutes (Ps 119:171). Negatively, fools and evildoers 'belch forth' foolishness and arrogance (Ps 59:7, 94:4, Prov 15:2). Spanish 'Brotan/Brotarán' ('they spring forth') and French 'jaillir' ('to gush') preserve the liquid metaphor underlying the speech image. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: I-will-pour-out, I-will-utter, may-pour-forth | es: Brotan, Brotarán, derrama | fr: jaillir | de: [אביעה], [יביע], giesst-aus-hervor Ps 19:2; Ps 59:7; Ps 78:2; Ps 94:4; Ps 119:171

2. flow, bubble up (1×) To flow or bubble up naturally as water (Qal). Found only in Proverbs 18:4, where 'the words of a man's mouth are deep waters, a flowing brook the fountain of wisdom.' Spanish 'que fluye' ('that flows') and English 'flowing' confirm the literal hydrological sense. This is the semantic anchor from which the metaphorical speech uses derive—the spring that feeds the river of utterance. FLOWING WATER

en: flowing | es: que-fluye | fr: jaillir | de: [נבע] Prov 18:4

3. cause to ferment or stink (1×) To cause to ferment, putrefy, or give off foul odor (Hifil causative with negative outcome). Ecclesiastes 10:1 describes dead flies making the perfumer's ointment 'bubble up' and stink. Spanish 'hacen brotar' ('they cause to spring forth') captures the causative bubbling. This sense retains the root's effervescent core but redirects it from wholesome outflow to corruption—a striking inversion of the praise-pouring sense. ROT DECAY WASTE

en: cause-to-bubble | es: hacen-brotar | fr: jaillir | de: [יבע] Eccl 10:1

נְבִרַשְׁתָּא H5043 N-fsd (1×)

lampstand, candlestick (Aramaic loanword)

An Aramaic noun denoting a lampstand or candelabrum, appearing in Daniel 5:5 during Belshazzar's feast. As the mysterious hand writes on the palace wall, the text notes it appears 'near the lampstand,' establishing the eerie scene. The word is a foreign loanword, possibly from Persian, showing the multilingual environment of the Babylonian court. The emphatic state (נְבִרַשְׁתָּא) marks it as 'the lampstand,' suggesting a prominent fixture in the palace's grand hall. This is royal lighting equipment, part of the opulent setting where divine judgment breaks into Babylonian arrogance.

(1×) The lampstand, specifically the prominent candelabrum providing light in Belshazzar's palace during his feast. Daniel 5:5 mentions it as a spatial reference point: the ghostly hand writes on the plaster 'opposite the lampstand,' meaning in the well-lit area where the writing would be clearly visible. This is palace furniture, not temple equipment—though it may evoke memories of the Jerusalem temple's menorah, now among Babylon's plunder. Spanish 'el-candelabro' and French 'chandelier' both capture the functional sense. The Aramaic term, likely a Persian loanword, reflects the multilingual reality of the Neo-Babylonian empire where Daniel's narrative unfolds. LAMPSTAND MENORAH

en: the-lampstand | es: el-candelabro | fr: chandelier | de: [נברשתא] Dan 5:5

נִבְשָׁן H5044 Conj-w (1×)

Nibshan (town in southern Judah)

A place name designating a town in the southern wilderness of Judah, listed in Joshua 15:62 among settlements in the desert region near the Dead Sea. The name appears with the definite article (הַנִּבְשָׁן), marking it as a known location. Its precise site remains unidentified, though it was grouped with other wilderness towns like En-gedi and the City of Salt. The region was sparsely populated, characterized by rugged terrain and limited water sources. The name may derive from a root suggesting dryness or barrenness, fitting the harsh desert environment.

(1×) Place name of a Judahite town located in the wilderness district near the Dead Sea. Joshua 15:62 includes it with the article ('and-the-Nibshan'), indicating a recognized settlement in the tribal allotment. German 'und-der-Nivshan' preserves both the conjunction and the definite article, showing this was 'THE Nibshan,' a known place. The town appears in a cluster of six wilderness settlements, suggesting a network of small fortified posts or oases in Judah's eastern desert. Spanish 'y-Nibsán' and English 'and-the-Nivshan' both transliterate the name, treating it as geographical data documenting Israel's territorial claims in even the most marginal lands. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-the-Nivshan | es: y-Nibsán | fr: et-le-Nivshan | de: und-der-Nivshan Josh 15:62

נֶגֶב H5045 Conj-w / N-ms / 3fs (111×)

The south as a cardinal direction; also the Negev, the specific arid region south of Judah.

Negev functions both as a common noun meaning 'south' and as a proper geographic name for the arid steppe-land stretching south from the Judean hills toward Kadesh. When Abraham journeys 'toward the Negev' (Gen 12:9; 13:1), the word hovers between direction and destination. The tabernacle's south side (Exod 26:18; 27:9) uses negev purely as a compass point, while the Negev of the Kenites or the Negev of Caleb (1 Sam 27:10) names specific sub-districts. French and German translations often distinguish 'sud' (direction) from 'Negev' (region), confirming the two core senses.

1. south, cardinal direction (54×) The cardinal direction south or southward, used for general geographic orientation without specific reference to the Negev region. This appears in tabernacle construction (Exod 26:18; 27:9; 36:23; 38:9; 40:24), tribal boundary descriptions (Josh 15:1; 18:5), and directional phrases like 'north and south' (Gen 13:14; 28:14). French 'sud,' Spanish 'al-sur,' and German 'Sueden' all render this as a pure compass direction. SOUTH AND DIRECTION

en: from-south, south-of, southward | es: Al-sur, al-sur, al-sur-de | fr: de-sud, southward, sud | de: Sueden-von, [נגבה], southward Gen 13:14; Gen 28:14; Exod 26:18; Exod 40:24; Josh 15:1

2. the Negev region (40×) The Negev as a proper geographic designation—the arid, semi-desert region south of the Judean highlands, stretching roughly from the hills below Hebron to the wilderness of Kadesh. Abraham sojourns there (Gen 20:1; 24:62), spies enter the land through it (Num 13:17, 22), and it is subdivided into named districts: the Negev of Judah, of the Jerahmeelites, of the Kenites (1 Sam 27:10; 30:14). Across languages this is often transliterated rather than translated: spa 'Neguev,' fra 'Negev,' deu 'Negev.' SOUTH AND DIRECTION

en: Negev, Negev-of, and-in-the-Negev | es: Negev, Neguev, Neguev-de | fr: Negev, Negev-de, de-sud-de | de: Negev, Negev-von, der-Negev Gen 12:9; Gen 13:1; Gen 13:3; Gen 20:1; Gen 24:62

3. (17×) A transitional or ambiguous use where negev denotes the south side of a structure or boundary while retaining echoes of the geographic region. References like Exod 27:9, 36:23, and 38:9 describe the tabernacle's 'negev side,' and Num 34:3 traces the southern boundary. These occurrences sit between pure compass direction and regional identity, with some translations rendering them as 'south' and others as 'Negev.' The multilingual split—eng 'south' vs. 'Negev,' fra 'sud' vs. 'Néguev'—reflects this genuine ambiguity. SOUTH AND DIRECTION

en: and-the-Negev, south | es: Neguev, Neguev-, sur | fr: et-le-Néguev, south, sud | de: Sueden, south, und-der-Negev Exod 27:9; Exod 36:23; Exod 38:9; Num 34:3

נָגַד H5046 V-Hifil-InfAbs (371×)

To tell, report, declare; Hifil: inform, proclaim, reveal; Hofal: be told; participle: messenger

Built on a root suggesting conspicuousness, nagad in its dominant Hifil stem means to make something known — to tell, report, or declare. Its range runs from the mundane act of relaying news (Gen 9:22, Ham telling his brothers) to solemn prophetic proclamation (Deut 5:5, Moses declaring God's word). The Hofal passive ('it was told to Rebekah,' Gen 27:42) and the substantival participle ('a messenger came,' 2 Sam 1:5) round out a verb whose every form orbits a single axis: bringing what is hidden or distant into clear, public view.

1. Hifil: to tell, report (237×) The core Hifil meaning: to tell, report, or inform someone of facts, events, or news in ordinary interpersonal contexts. This workhorse sense accounts for the majority of occurrences. Arabic akhbara (he informed) and Swahili arifu (to report) capture the neutral, narrative register. Gen 9:22 (Ham reports to his brothers), Gen 14:13 (a fugitive reports to Abram), and Gen 29:12 (Jacob tells Rachel) are characteristic. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING en: and-he-told, and-told | es: Y-contó, e-informó, y-contó | fr: et-dit, et-il-raconta, et-raconta | de: und-berichtete, und-er-berichtete, und-erzählte Gen 9:22; Gen 14:13; Gen 24:28; Gen 29:12

2. Hifil: to declare, proclaim (79×) A heightened Hifil sense: to declare, proclaim, or announce publicly and formally — often in prophetic, liturgical, or royal settings. The shift from private telling to public proclamation is reflected in Spanish anunciad/declarad and German verkuende. Deut 5:5 (Moses declaring God's words), Deut 26:3 (the pilgrim's solemn declaration), and prophetic announcements throughout Isaiah exemplify this elevated register. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING en: Declare, Denounce, I-declare | es: Anunciad, Declara, Declarad | fr: annoncer, déclarer, et-déclarer | de: der-Gad, ich-verkuende, ich-verkündigen Deut 5:5; Deut 17:10; Deut 17:11; Deut 26:3; Deut 30:18

3. Hofal: to be told, be informed (35×) The Hofal (passive of Hifil): to be told, be informed, have something reported to one. Arabic ukhbira and Korean algo-doeda (to become known to someone) reflect this passive reception. The formula 'and it was told to X' recurs as a narrative pivot — Gen 22:20 (told to Abraham), Gen 27:42 (told to Rebekah), Gen 38:13 (told to Judah) — consistently introducing consequential plot turns. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING
en: and-it-was-told, and-was-told | es: Y-fue-contado, Y-fue-declarado, Y-fue-dicho | fr: et-cela-fut-raconta, et-cela-était-dit, et-fut-raconta | de: und-angezeigt-wurde, und-berichtet-wurde, und-es-war-berichtete Gen 22:20; Gen 27:42; Gen 31:22; Gen 38:13; Gen 38:24

4. Hifil participle: messenger, informer (15×) The Hifil participle used substantivally: a messenger, informer, or herald — one defined by the act of bringing news. This nominal usage appears at dramatic narrative junctures: the informer in Gen 41:24, the messengers reporting battle outcomes in 2 Sam 1:5–13. Arabic mukhbir (informant) and the consistent multilingual rendering as 'messenger/declarador' confirm the agent-noun function. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING
en: Declaring, and-declaring, and-messenger | es: a-los-que-declararon, anuncia, declarador-de | fr: annoncer, declaring, et-annoncer | de: der-eins-berichtend, der-informer, ein-Verkünder Gen 41:24; Judg 14:19; 2Sam 1:5; 2Sam 1:6; 2Sam 1:13

5. Hifil: to disclose, reveal (2×) A Hifil sense emphasizing disclosure or revelation of hidden truth. In Ps 19:1 the heavens 'declare' God's glory — making visible what transcends ordinary perception — while Prov 29:24 speaks of a thief's accomplice who 'discloses' nothing. The emphasis falls on unveiling what was concealed, not merely conveying everyday news. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING en: he-discloses, proclaims | es: declara | fr: de-déclarer, déclarer | de: proclaims, verkuendete Ps 19:1; Prov 29:24

6. Hifil: to denounce, inform against (2×) A specialized Hifil usage carrying hostile or accusatory force: to denounce or inform against someone. In Jer 20:10, Jeremiah's enemies whisper 'let us denounce him,' and Job 17:5 warns of one who informs against friends. Arabic washaya (to slander) and the adversarial contexts distinguish this from neutral reporting. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING en: and-let-us-denounce-him, he-denounces | es: denuncia, y-lo-denunciaremos | fr: déclarer, et-annoncer | de: und-verkuenden, verkuendete Job 17:5; Jer 20:10

7. (1×) A single occurrence (Ps 38:18) where nagad takes on a confessional register — 'I confess my iniquity.' Spanish declarare and German bekennen both capture this penitential self-disclosure. The verse's parallelism with anxiety over sin suggests a specialized confessional application of the root's core 'making known' meaning, directed inward rather than outward. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING en: I-confess | es: declararé | fr: déclarer | de: ich-bekennen Ps 38:18

נָגַד H5047 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)
to flow, stream (of fire river, Aramaic)
An Aramaic verb describing liquid flow or streaming movement, appearing in Daniel 7:10 in a vision of divine judgment. Daniel sees 'a river of fire flowing and coming out from before Him,' depicting the awesome throne room of the Ancient of Days. The participle נָגֵד emphasizes continuous action—the fire-river keeps flowing as an eternal feature of God's presence. Related to Hebrew נגד and cognate with Targumic usage where it describes flowing water, the verb captures both the movement and the source-to-destination directionality of streaming liquid.

(1×) To flow or stream forth—specifically describing the river of fire proceeding from God's throne in Daniel's apocalyptic vision. Daniel 7:10 uses the participle with another verb (נָגֵד וְנָפֵק 'flowing and proceeding') to emphasize the continuous, originating movement: fire streams out from the divine presence like an unstoppable river. Spanish 'fluía' captures the imperfect, ongoing action. The Aramaic verb appears in Targumic texts for water flowing from springs or rivers moving through channels, here applied to fire as liquid. This is apocalyptic imagery—the fearsome purity of divine holiness streaming forth as consuming fire. FLOWING WATER
en: flowing | es: fluía | fr: décret | de: [נגד] Dan 7:10

נֶגֶד H5048 Prep-m / 3ms (150×)
In front of, before, opposite; in the presence of; at a distance facing; away from before; against; corresponding to
A spatial preposition and adverb built on the root meaning 'conspicuous' or 'what is in front.' Stronger and more precise than the common liphnei ('before'), neged insists on face-to-face orientation — you are positioned directly opposite, in clear sight of, the referent. When Israel encamps neged hahar (Exod 19:2), they are not merely near Sinai but arrayed facing the mountain. With the directional min prefix it marks departure from someone's presence (Ps 31:22). In two striking occurrences in Gen 2:18, 20, it describes the helper made kenegdo — 'corresponding to him' — a relational counterpart facing and matching Adam. French en face de and German gegenueber both capture this face-to-face spatial precision.

1. before, in the presence of (83×) The primary adverbial/prepositional sense of being in front of or in the presence of someone, with the implication that the person is aware and can see what is before them. French devant and German gegenueber both encode the 'in plain sight' nuance. Gen 31:32 ('in front of our kinsmen, identify what is yours'), Exod 34:10 ('before all your people I will do wonders'), and Ps 78:12 anchor this sense in contexts of witness and awareness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: before, is-before | es: delante-de, frente-a | fr: annoncer, devant, en-face-de | de: gegenueber, gegenüber, verkuendete Gen 31:32; Gen 31:37; Exod 10:10; Exod 34:10; Num 22:32

2. opposite, facing across from (36×) The spatial sense of being directly opposite or facing across from something, emphasizing frontal orientation rather than mere proximity. French en face de and Spanish enfrente de both specify facing directionality. Exod 19:2 (Israel encamped 'opposite the mountain'), Josh 3:16 (waters standing in a heap at a distance 'opposite' Adam), Josh 8:33 (half of Israel 'opposite' Mount Gerizim, half 'opposite' Mount Ebal), and 1 Kgs 8:22 (Solomon standing 'before' the altar facing the assembly) all demand a facing-toward spatial reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: before, in-front-of, opposite | es: delante-de, enfrente-de, frente-a | fr: en-face, en-face-de, opposite | de: gegenueber, opposite, verkuendete Exod 19:2; Josh 3:16; Josh 8:11; Josh 8:33; 1Kgs 8:22

3. at a distance, from opposite side (14×) The sense of being at a distance or from the opposite side while still maintaining a facing orientation — remote observation from across a gap. German bei ein Distance and Spanish desde enfrente de capture this nuance of separated but facing. Gen 21:16 is paradigmatic: Hagar sits down

'at a distance, opposite' (minneged), unwilling to watch Ishmael die. Num 2:2 positions the tribes encamped 'at a distance facing' the tent of meeting. Deut 32:52 lets Moses see the promised land only 'from opposite.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-a-distance, from-opposite, opposite | es: de-enfrente, desde-enfrente, desde-enfrente-de | fr: de-en-face, de-en-face-de, de-opposite | de: bei-ein-distance, gegenüber, opposite Gen 21:16; Num 2:2; Deut 32:52; Judg 20:34

4. from before, away from presence (12×) With the prefixed min (minneged or min-neged), the sense of departure or separation away from someone's front or presence. French de-devant and Spanish de-delante-de encode this ablative directionality. Ps 31:22 ('I said in my alarm, I am cut off from before your eyes') and 1 Sam 26:20 ('let not my blood fall to the ground away from the presence of the LORD') express anguished removal from divine or royal sight. Deut 28:66 ('your life shall hang in doubt before you') uses the spatial tension of something dangling before your eyes yet unreachable. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-before, from-before-me, from-in-front | es: de-delante-de, de-enfrente-de, de-frente-a-mí | fr: de-annoncer, de-dans-front, de-devant | de: gegenueber, sein-gegenüber, von-gegenueber Deut 28:66; Judg 9:17; 1Sam 26:20; Ps 10:5; Ps 31:22

5. against, in opposition to (3×) An adversarial sense where neged shifts from spatial facing to hostile opposition — 'against' rather than merely 'before.' Spanish contra and French a-devant (in adversarial context) capture this shift. Prov 21:30 ('no wisdom, no understanding, no counsel against the LORD') and Job 10:17 ('you renew your witnesses against me') show the opposition nuance clearly. Eccl 4:12 notes that though one may be overpowered, two can withstand — the preposition frames confrontation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against, against-him, against-me | es: contra-mí,, contra-él, frente-a | fr: devant-lui, devant-moi, à-devant | de: gegenueber, zu-verkuendete Job 10:17; Prov 21:30; Eccl 4:12

6. (2×) A distinctive relational sense meaning 'corresponding to, matching, counterpart of' — not merely spatial but describing essential complementarity. Only two occurrences, both in Gen 2:18, 20: God says 'I will make him a helper kenegdo' — a partner facing him as his match. The multilingual glosses (English 'corresponding-to-him,' Spanish como-frente-a-el, French corresponding-a-lui) all strain to capture a meaning that transcends spatial opposition: a counterpart who is both opposite and equal, facing and fitted to the other. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: corresponding-to-him | es: como-frente-a-él | fr: corresponding-à-lui | de: ihm-gegenüber Gen 2:18; Gen 2:20

נֶגֶד H5049 Prep (1×)

in front of, facing, toward (Aramaic prep.)

An Aramaic preposition meaning 'in front of,' 'facing,' or 'toward,' equivalent to Biblical Hebrew נֶגֶד. Daniel 6:10 describes Daniel's prayer posture: his windows were open 'toward Jerusalem.' The preposition indicates directional orientation—not merely facing but positioned with intentionality toward a specific reference point. This simple spatial term carries theological weight in Daniel's story, as praying toward the destroyed temple represents covenantal faithfulness despite exile. The preposition makes geography a statement of religious identity.

(1×) Preposition meaning 'facing' or 'toward'—indicating directional orientation. Daniel 6:10 uses it to describe Daniel's prayer direction: his windows opened נֶגֶד יְרוּשָׁלֶם (toward Jerusalem), meaning he faced the holy city despite its destruction and his captivity in Babylon. Spanish 'hacia' and French 'vers' both capture this directional sense. This is more than physical positioning—facing Jerusalem during prayer maintains covenantal connection to the temple, the land, and the promises. The preposition transforms architecture into theology: open windows pointing homeward become an act of faith, a refusal to assimilate despite overwhelming pressure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: toward | es: hacia | fr: vers | de: [נגד] Dan 6:10

נָגַהּ H5050 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (6×)

To shine, give light, illuminate — of light breaking forth (Qal) or causing brightness to dispel darkness (Hifil).

A verb meaning to shine or give light, appearing in both Qal (intransitive: light shines forth) and Hifil (causative: to enlighten, cause to shine). In its most celebrated use, Isaiah 9:2 declares that upon those walking in darkness 'light has shone' — a passage central to messianic expectation. The Hifil form in Psalm 18:28 and 2 Samuel 22:29 expresses God's personal illumination: 'the LORD lights up my darkness.' Job 18:5 uses the negative — the flame of the wicked will not shine — as a metaphor for the extinction of hope. The consistent rendering across Spanish (brillar, alumbrar) and French (briller) captures the radiant, breakthrough quality of this verb.

shine, give light (6×) To shine forth or cause to give light, spanning the intransitive Qal (light shining of its own accord, as in Isa 9:2 and Job 22:28) and the causative Hifil (God illuminating human darkness, as in 2 Sam 22:29 / Ps 18:28, or the moon failing to give its light, Isa 13:10). The verb carries strong theological resonance: divine light breaking into human darkness. Spanish 'brillar/alumbrar' and French 'briller' consistently render the luminous, hope-bearing quality. Job 18:5 uses the negative to devastating effect — the wicked person's flame will not shine. SHINING AND ILLUMINATING en: has-shone, illumines, makes-bright | es: alumbrará, brillará, hará-brillar | fr: [יגיה], [נגה], briller | de: [יגה], [יגיה], [נגה] 2Sam 22:29; Job 18:5; Job 22:28; Ps 18:28; Isa 9:2

נֹגַהּ H5051 Conj-w / N-fsc (19×)

Brightness, radiance, splendor — shining brilliance from a luminous or divine source, occasionally the light of dawn

The noun נֹגַהּ captures the quality of shining brilliance or resplendent radiance, whether natural or supernatural. It describes the dazzling light that accompanies God's theophany — coals kindled 'from His brightness' (2 Sam 22:13; Ps 18:12) — and the luminous glory surrounding the divine chariot-throne in Ezekiel's visions (Ezek 1:4, 27-28; 10:4). Prophetically, it pictures Zion's coming splendor: 'nations shall come to your light and kings to the brightness of your rising' (Isa 60:3). In one poetic instance (Prov 4:18), it evokes the growing radiance of dawn as an image for the path of the righteous.

1. brightness, radiance, splendor (18×) Shining brightness, radiance, or splendor emanating from a luminous source — especially divine or celestial. This sense covers the overwhelming majority of occurrences (18 of 19), including the brightness of theophany (2 Sam 22:13, Ps 18:12), Ezekiel's visions of divine glory (Ezek 1:4, 27-28; 10:4), the brightness of the moon and stars (Isa 60:19; Joel 2:10; 4:15), the fire-brightness of Isaiah's judgment imagery (Isa 4:5), and the prophetic splendor of Zion's redemption (Isa 60:3; 62:1). Spanish 'resplandor,' French equivalents, and German 'Glanz' all point to shining radiance rather than mere light, marking this as a quality-word — the luminous effect rather than the source itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-brightness, and-brightness-of, and-for-brightness | es: Del-resplandor, Y-el-resplandor, al-resplandor-de | fr: [ולנגה], [ונגה], [כנגה] | de: Glanz, [הנגה], [ולנגה] 2Sam 22:13; 2Sam 23:4; Ps 18:12; Isa 4:5; Isa 50:10

2. dawn light, daybreak radiance (1×) The brightness specifically of dawn or daybreak — the growing radiance that characterizes the breaking of day. Attested once in Prov 4:18, where the path of the righteous is likened to 'the light of dawn that shines ever brighter until full day.' English glosses render it 'dawn,' Spanish 'alba,' distinguishing this temporal-natural sense from the broader radiance of sense 1. The metaphorical force is progressive illumination, not static brilliance — a fitting image for spiritual maturation that the multilingual evidence sets apart from the more static or explosive radiance elsewhere. DAWN AND TWILIGHT

en: dawn | es: alba | fr: נגה | de: Glanz Prov 4:18

נֹגַהּ H5052 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Nogah, a son of David born in Jerusalem

Nogah appears in Chronicles' lists of David's sons born in Jerusalem. The name, meaning 'brightness' or 'splendor,' was given to one of David's children by his wives after he established his capital. Chronicles preserves multiple genealogical lists of David's family, and Nogah appears in two parallel accounts. The name reflects the royal prosperity and divine blessing that characterized David's reign in Jerusalem.

(2×) The personal name occurs in 1 Chronicles 3:7 and 14:6, both listing David's sons. Translations transliterate the name (Nogah, Noga), recognizing it as a Hebrew proper noun. The name derives from the root meaning 'to shine' or 'be bright,' suggesting it may have celebrated the splendor of David's established kingdom. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Nogah | es: Y-Noga, Y-Nogah | fr: [ונגה] | de: [ונגה] 1Chr 3:7; 1Chr 14:6

נֹגַהּ H5053 Prep-b / N-msd (1×)

brightness, daylight, dawn (Aramaic)

An Aramaic noun meaning brightness or daylight, appearing in Daniel 6:19 when King Darius rushes to the lions' den 'at dawn' to check on Daniel. The emphatic state (בְּנָגְהָא) makes it 'the daybreak'—the earliest moment of morning light when the king could see. The term relates to Hebrew נֹגַהּ (brightness, splendor) and captures the transitional moment between night and day. In the narrative, dawn represents both literal visibility and the revelation of God's deliverance—when darkness lifts, Daniel's salvation becomes evident.

(1×) Daybreak or dawn—the early morning moment when light first appears. Daniel 6:19 describes the king's anxious urgency: 'at the dawn' (בְּנָגְהָא), he hurries to the lions' den, unable to wait longer to learn Daniel's fate. Spanish 'con-la-luz' (with the light) and English 'at-daybreak' both capture this temporal reference. The emphatic state suggests 'THE daybreak'—the specific dawn after the longest night of Darius's life. Beyond chronology, dawn functions dramatically: when light breaks, so does the suspense—Daniel is alive, God has shut the lions' mouths, and faith has been vindicated in the light of morning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-daybreak | es: con-la-luz | fr: hauteur | de: [בנגהא] Dan 6:19

נְגֹהָה H5054 Prep-l / N-mp (1×)

brightness, light (fig. of prosperity, hope)

A feminine noun denoting brightness or light, used figuratively in Isaiah 59:9 to represent hoped-for prosperity that fails to arrive. The prophet laments: 'We hope for light but there is darkness, for brightness but we walk in gloom.' The plural form (לִנְגֹהוֹת) may suggest various aspects of illumination or times of brightness. Set in opposition to 'deep darkness' (אֲפֵלוֹת) and parallel to 'light' (אוֹר), the term creates a stark contrast between expectation and reality. Brightness symbolizes divine blessing, justice, and national flourishing—all of which elude sinful Israel.

(1×) Brightness or times of light—figuratively representing prosperity, justice, or divine favor. Isaiah 59:9 uses the plural in a lament of failed expectations: 'we hope לִנְגֹהוֹת (for brightness), but walk in gloom.' The contrast pairs hoped-for light with experienced darkness, expected brightness with actual shadows. Spanish 'resplandores' (splendors/shining things) captures the plural sense of multiple hoped-for glories. This is metaphorical brightness—not photons but the shining of God's justice, the illumination of salvation, the radiance of restored blessing. The people wait for dawn that never comes, brightness that remains perpetually just beyond the horizon. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: for-brightness | es: resplandores | fr: [לנגהות] | de: [לנגהות] Isa 59:9

נָגַח H5055 V-Piel-Imperf-2mp (11×)

To gore, push with horns; figuratively to thrust at or charge in battle

A verb rooted in the violent action of an animal thrusting with its horns. In the Qal stem it describes literal goring by an ox, as in the casuistic laws of Exodus 21:28-32. The Piel intensifies this into repeated or vigorous pushing, applied figuratively to Joseph as a wild ox goring nations (Deut 33:17) and to Zedekiah's symbolic horns of iron (1 Kgs 22:11). Spanish consistently renders 'acornear' (to gore with horns), preserving the horn imagery. The Hitpael in Daniel 11:40 extends the metaphor to mutual military engagement — two kings charging at each other like battling rams.

1. gore, push aggressively (Piel intensive) (6×) Piel intensive: vigorous or repeated goring and pushing, used figuratively of military conquest and overwhelming force. Joseph as a wild ox goring peoples to the ends of the earth (Deut 33:17); Zedekiah's iron horns symbolizing victory (1 Kgs 22:11). Spanish 'acornear' and Arabic 'nataha' (to butt) both anchor the horn-thrust imagery across languages. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: butting, he-gores, we-push-down | es: acorneando, acornearemos, acorneará | fr: [מנגח], [תנגח], [תנגחו] | de: [מנגח], [תנגח], [תנגחו] Deut 33:17; 1Kgs 22:11; 2Chr 18:10; Ps 44:5; Ezek 34:21

2. gore, push with horns (Qal) (4×) Qal basic: literal goring by an animal with its horns. The Exodus 21:28-32 ox-goring laws use this sense exclusively — an ox that gores a person (Hebrew yiggach). English 'gores,' Spanish 'acornea,' and French 'gores' all reflect straightforward animal violence requiring legal remedy. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: gores, it-gores | es: acornea, acornee | fr: cela-gores, gores | de: es-gores, gores Exod 21:28; Exod 21:31; Exod 21:32

3. engage in battle, butt against (Hitpael reflexive) (1×) Hitpael reflexive-reciprocal: to charge at one another, engage in mutual combat. Found only in Daniel 11:40 where the king of the South 'butts against' the king of the North. Spanish 'se embestira' (will charge at each other) captures the reciprocal force of two powers colliding like warring beasts. FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: shall-engage-in-battle | es: se-embestirá | fr: [יתנגח] | de: [יתנגח] Dan 11:40

נָגָח H5056 Adj-ms (2×)

goring, prone to gore; describing an ox with a habit of attacking with its horns

This adjective appears in the Exodus legal code governing liability for dangerous animals. It specifically describes an ox known to be 'addicted to goring'—one with an established pattern of attacking people or animals with its horns. Ancient Near Eastern law codes carefully distinguished between damage caused by an ox's first offense versus a habitually dangerous animal whose owner had been warned. The term captures this crucial legal distinction about prior knowledge and negligence.

(2×) Found in Exodus 21:29 and 21:36, both in case laws about dangerous oxen. The cross-linguistic glosses consistently render this as 'goring' or descriptive of a goring ox (English 'goring', Spanish 'corneador', French 'encornant'), emphasizing the habitual dangerous behavior that triggered heightened owner liability in ancient legal systems. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: goring | es: corneador | fr: encornant | de: goring Exod 21:29; Exod 21:36

נָגִיד H5057 Art / N-ms (44×)

Ruler, leader, prince; a designated authority figure, or (once) noble/excellent things

A masculine noun meaning 'leader' or 'ruler,' derived from the root nagad ('to be in front'). It carries the sense of one who stands at the head – designated, appointed, set before the people as their chief. The word appears prominently in the narratives of Israel's monarchy: Samuel anoints Saul as nagid over Israel, David is told he will be nagid, and Solomon is installed as such. Unlike melek ('king'), nagid emphasizes the act of divine appointment and the leader's role as forerunner. A unique abstract usage in Proverbs 8:6 shifts the word to mean 'noble things' – the excellent speech of personified Wisdom.

1. ruler, leader, prince (43×) A person holding political, military, or religious authority – a ruler, commander, prince, or officially designated leader. Attested 43 times, this sense spans the entire range of Israelite leadership: Saul anointed as nagid (1 Samuel 9:16, 10:1), David designated by God (1 Samuel 13:14, 2 Samuel 5:2, 7:8), Solomon installed (1 Chronicles 29:22), and temple overseers (2 Chronicles 35:8). French distinguishes chef, prince, and leader; Spanish oscillates between principe, gobernador, and lider; Arabic renders variously as ra'is and qa'id – all pointing to appointed authority rather than hereditary royalty, which aligns with BDB's observation that nagid is 'one in front.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-ruler, as-leader, as-ruler | es: el-gobernador, el-príncipe, líder | fr: chef, leader, prince | de: Fuehrer, Fuerst, Herrscher 1Sam 9:16; 1Sam 10:1; 1Sam 13:14; 1Sam 25:30; 2Sam 5:2

2. noble, excellent things (1×) An abstract or adjectival usage meaning 'noble things' or 'excellent matters,' found uniquely in Proverbs 8:6 where personified Wisdom declares: 'Hear, for I will speak negidim.' Here the plural shifts from persons-in-authority to the quality of speech itself – things that are princely, worthy, and authoritative. Spanish renders cosas nobles, English noble things, though French and German leave the Hebrew untranslated in some versions, suggesting translators found this metaphorical leap from 'rulers' to 'ruling-quality speech' challenging to capture in a single word. GREATNESS AND DEGREE
en: noble-things | es: cosas-nobles | fr: נגידים | de: [נגידים] Prov 8:6

נְגִינָה H5058 Conj-w / N-fpc (14×)

Stringed instrument music; a song or mocking song; music as abstract performance

A feminine Hebrew noun rooted in the verb nagan ('to play a stringed instrument') that lives primarily in the Psalm superscriptions, where it designates the accompaniment for worship — binginot, 'on stringed instruments' (Ps 4:1; 6:1; 54:1; 55:1; 67:1; 76:1). Spanish instrumentos de cuerda and German Saitenspiel both zero in on the stringed character of the music. Yet the same word takes a bitter turn when it denotes a mocking song: Job laments 'I have become their song' (Job 30:9), and Lamentations echoes the humiliation (Lam 3:14). The Psalmist's night-time 'song' in Psalm 77:6 may carry either beauty or anguish. A lone occurrence in Lamentations 5:14 uses the word for music in the abstract — 'the young men have ceased from their music' — mourning not instruments or lyrics but the entire living tradition of performance.

1. stringed instrument, music played on strings (8×) Music played on stringed instruments, or the stringed instruments themselves. This sense dominates the Psalm superscriptions — binginot appears as a liturgical direction in Psalms 4, 6, 54, 55, 61, 67, and 76, and in Habakkuk 3:19. Isaiah 38:20 uses the possessive 'my stringed instruments' in Hezekiah's song of recovery. Spanish instrumentos de cuerda, French melodie, and German Saitenspiel all point to the specific timbre of plucked or bowed strings. The liturgical context suggests these were performance instructions for the temple musicians. SINGING AND MUSIC
en: on-my-stringed-instruments, stringed-instruments, with-stringed-instruments | es: con-instrumentos-de-cuerda, con-mis-instrumentos-de-cuerda, cuerda | fr: dans-mélodie, mélodie | de: [בנגינותי], mit-stringed-instruments, stringed-instruments Ps 4:1; Ps 6:1; Ps 54:1; Ps 55:1; Ps 61:1

2. song, mocking song, melody (5×) A song or melody, often with a pejorative connotation as a taunt or mocking song. Job 30:9 is the paradigm case: 'I have become their mocking song,' paralleled by milla ('byword'). Lamentations 3:14 echoes the same humiliation, and Psalm 69:12 adds that the drunkards sing songs about the sufferer. Spanish cancion de burla ('mocking song') and German Spottlied capture the derision. Psalm 77:6 and Isaiah 38:20 use the term more neutrally for personal songs, but the mocking register is the distinguishing mark of this sense. SONGS AND HYMNS
en: and-my-songs, and-the-songs-of, my-song | es: canción-de-mí, su-canción, su-canción-de-burla | fr: [ונגנותי], [נגינתם], et-mélodie | de: [ונגנותי], [נגינתם], mein-Lied Job 30:9; Ps 69:12; Ps 77:6; Isa 38:20; Lam 3:14

3. music, instrumental performance (1×) Music in the general or abstract sense — the overall cultural practice of musical performance rather than specific instruments or specific songs. In Lamentations 5:14 the elders have ceased from the gate and the young men 'from their music,' mourning the collapse of an entire way of life. Spanish musica and the absence of any instrument-specific or song-specific qualifier distinguish this from the other two senses. It is the rarest usage but lexicographically important as a collective-abstract noun. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-their-music | es: de-su-música | fr: [מנגינתם] | de: [מנגינתם] Lam 5:14

נָגַן H5059 V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (15×)

To play a stringed instrument; as a participle, a musician or minstrel who performs on strings.

This verb specifically denotes playing a stringed instrument — plucking or striking the strings of a lyre or harp. David was sought out as someone skilled at playing (מֵיטִיב לְנַגֵּן, 1 Samuel 16:17), and his performance on the lyre drove away Saul's tormenting spirit. Spanish 'tocar' and French 'jouer' both convey the hands-on act of instrumental performance. The participle can stand alone as a noun meaning 'musician' or 'minstrel,' as when Elisha calls for a player (2 Kings 3:15) to invoke prophetic inspiration, and in Psalm 68:25 where instrumentalists march in the festive procession.

1. play a stringed instrument (12×) To play or make music on a stringed instrument (Piel verbal forms and infinitives). In 1 Samuel 16:16–23 David plays the lyre (כִּנּוֹר) to soothe Saul; Spanish 'tocar' and French 'jouer' both emphasize the physical act of playing. Isaiah 38:20 uses the first-person plural 'we will play' (נְנַגֵּן) in Hezekiah's song of thanksgiving. Ezekiel 33:32 compares the prophet to one who plays skillfully (מֵטִיב נַגֵּן), a performer whose beautiful music is heard but not heeded. SINGING AND MUSIC
en: and-he-will-play, and-played, music | es: cuando-tocaba, en-tocar, la-música | fr: [נגן], [ננגן], et-il-fera-joue | de: [נגן], [ננגן], music 1Sam 16:16; 1Sam 16:17; 1Sam 16:18; 1Sam 16:23

2. musician, instrumentalist (3×) A musician, player, or minstrel — the participle used substantivally as an agent noun. In 2 Kings 3:15 Elisha says 'bring me a musician' (הַמְנַגֵּן), and as the player performs, the hand of the Lord comes upon the prophet. Psalm 68:25 places 'the players' (נֹגְנִים, Qal participle) in a temple procession alongside singers and maidens with tambourines. Spanish 'músico' and French 'musician' reflect the professional identity this participle conveys. SINGING AND MUSIC
en: a-musician, the-musician, the-musicians | es: el-músico, músicos, un-músico | fr: jouer, le-musician, un-musician | de: der-musician, der-musicians, ein-musician 2Kgs 3:15; Ps 68:25

נָגַע H5060 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (150×)

To touch, reach, strike; to arrive at; to cause to reach; to afflict, smite; to be stricken or defeated

A verb whose semantic range traces the full arc of contact — from a gentle touch to a devastating blow. At its simplest it describes physical touching (Gen 3:3, 'you shall not touch it'), but even here a taboo charge often clings to the contact: touching holy things, unclean things, or forbidden boundaries. In the Hifil it acquires spatial extension — reaching a destination, arriving at a point, or causing something to arrive. At the other extreme, when God is the agent, the verb can mean to strike or afflict, as when the LORD 'touches' Pharaoh's house with plagues (Gen 12:17). Arabic carefully separates these senses with different roots: lamasa for touch, balagha for reach, and daraba for strike — confirming that Hebrew folds genuinely distinct concepts under one lexeme.

1. touch physically (Qal) (96×) The Qal sense of physical touching or contact — laying hands on a person, object, or sacred item. This covers general tactile contact, prohibited/taboo touch (the tree in Eden, holy vessels, unclean things), and ritual purity contexts. Arabic lamasa (touch) uses a root entirely distinct from reaching or striking. Gen 3:3 ('God said you shall not touch it'), Exod 29:37 ('whatever touches the altar shall be holy'), and Lev 5:2-3 (touching unclean things) are paradigmatic of this sense's range from the mundane to the sacral. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: he-touches, the-touching, touches | es: El-que-toca, el-que-toca, el-que-toque | fr: il-touche, le-touching, touche | de: der-touching, er-touches, touches Gen 26:11; Gen 32:25; Exod 29:37; Exod 30:29; Lev 5:2

2. reach, arrive, extend to (Hifil/Qal) (39×) The Qal and intransitive Hifil sense of reaching a destination, arriving at a place, or extending to a point in space or time. Arabic balagha and wasala (reach, arrive) employ different roots from touch or strike, confirming a distinct semantic domain. Gen 28:12 (the ladder 'reaching' to heaven), 2 Chr 3:11 (cherub wings 'reaching' the wall), and 1 Sam 14:9 ('if they say come up to us, we will go up, for the LORD has given them into our hand') all show arrival or spatial extension rather than mere contact. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: and-arrived, and-when-arrived, arrived | es: Y-al-llegar, Y-llegó, ha-llegado | fr: [והגיע], [ובהגיע], [ויגע] | de: berueehrte, beruehren, und-berueehrte Gen 28:12; Lev 5:7; 1Sam 14:9; 2Sam 5:8; 2Chr 3:11

3. cause to reach, bring upon (Hifil causative) (5×) The causative Hifil sense of making something reach, bringing it down upon, or causing it to arrive at a target. Arabic awsala (cause to reach) encodes the causative dimension. Exod 12:22 (dipping hyssop and 'causing it to touch' the lintel), Isa 25:12 ('he will bring down to the earth, to the dust'), and Lam 2:2 ('he has brought down to the ground the kingdom') show an agent directing contact or arrival upon a patient. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: He-brought-down, and-I-shall-bring-it-down, and-touch | es: ha-hecho-llegar, la-hará-llegar, las-hizo-llegar | fr: et-toucher, toucher | de: berueehrte, beruehren, und-beruehren Exod 12:22; Isa 25:12; Isa 26:5; Lam 2:2; Ezek 13:14

4. strike, afflict, plague (Piel/Qal) (5×) The Piel intensive and certain Qal occurrences meaning to strike, afflict, or plague — where the contact is harmful and often divinely administered. Arabic daraba (strike) uses a root completely distinct from touch or reach, and Korean chida (strike) similarly diverges from touch vocabulary. Gen 12:17 ('the LORD struck Pharaoh's house with great plagues'), 2 Kgs 15:5 ('the LORD struck the king so that he was a leper'), and Job 19:21 ('the hand of God has struck me') reveal the theological weight of divine affliction through this verb. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-he-struck, and-struck, had-struck-him | es: Y-hirió, lo-hirió, me-ha-tocado | fr: [ונגעו], et-frappa, et-il-frappa | de: berueehrte, beruehren, und-er-beruehrt Gen 12:17; 2Kgs 15:5; 2Chr 26:20; Job 1:19; Job 19:21

5. be stricken, be defeated (Nifal/Pual/QalPass) (4×) The Niphal reflexive-passive, Pual intensive passive, and Qal passive participle senses of being stricken, smitten, or defeated. Arabic inhazama (be defeated) and masrub (one who has been struck) capture the patient-role experience of suffering a blow. Isa 53:4 is theologically paramount: the Suffering Servant is 'stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted' (nagua', mukkeh elohim u-me'unneh). Ps 73:14 ('all day long I have been stricken') and Josh 8:15 (Israel feigning defeat before Ai) show passive affliction in wisdom and narrative contexts. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: and-let-themselves-be-struck, stricken, they-are-stricken | es: Y-se-dejaron-vencer, azotado, herido | fr: et-que-eux-mêmes-être-frappa, toucher | de: beruehren, berührte, und-lass-sich-selbst-sein-schlug Josh 8:15; Ps 73:5; Ps 73:14; Isa 53:4

6. (1×) A single occurrence in Isa 5:8 where the verb appears with the sense of joining or adjoining — those who 'join' house to house and field to field until there is no room. English 'those-joining' and Spanish de-los-que-juntan confirm a spatial contact reading: pressing properties together until boundaries vanish, a prophetic indictment of land consolidation by the wealthy. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: those-joining | es: de-los-que-juntan | fr: toucher | de: beruehren Isa 5:8

נֶגַע H5061 Conj-w (78×)

Stroke, plague, skin affliction; a blow or mark ranging from a physical wound to a divine plague to the Levitical 'plague-spot' on skin, fabric, or walls.

Derived from the verb naga' ('to touch, strike'), this noun covers the full spectrum from a blow struck between persons to a devastating plague sent by God. Its most frequent use is highly technical: the Levitical 'plague-spot' examined by the priest in the elaborate diagnostic procedures of Leviticus 13–14, rendered in Spanish as 'plaga' and French as 'affliction.' Beyond the priestly domain, it denotes divine calamities like the plagues upon Pharaoh's house (Gen 12:17) and the great final plague of the Exodus (Exod 11:1). At its most personal, it describes the inner 'plague of the heart' that only the sufferer knows (1 Kgs 8:38).

1. skin disease or affliction (63×) The technical Levitical term for a diseased spot or eruptive skin condition submitted to priestly examination. Spanish 'plaga' and German 'Elend' both render this clinical sense. Leviticus 13–14 uses nega' dozens of times for marks on skin, garments, and house walls — a diagnostic vocabulary without true parallel in surrounding cultures. The priest does not heal; he classifies and isolates. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS
en: affliction, the-affliction | es: la-plaga, plaga | fr: affliction, le-affliction | de: Elend, der-Elend Lev 13:3; Lev 13:4; Lev 13:5

2. plague or divine calamity (8×) A plague or calamity sent by God as judgment or chastening upon persons or nations. The great plagues on Pharaoh's household (Gen 12:17) and the climactic final plague of the Exodus (Exod 11:1) exemplify this sense. Solomon's temple prayer (1 Kgs 8:37–38) pairs nega' with machala ('disease'), while the Psalmist promises that no plague shall come near the dwelling of the faithful (Ps 91:10). PLAGUES AND WOUNDS
en: Your-plague, and-a-plague, his-plague | es: mi-plaga, plaga, plagas | fr: [ונגע], [נגע], [נגעו] | de: Plage, [נגע], [נגעו] Gen 12:17; Exod 11:1; 1Kgs 8:37; 2Chr 6:28; 2Chr 6:29

3. blow, wound, or injury (5×) A physical blow, wound, or injury inflicted by one person upon another. Deuteronomy 17:8 and 21:5 list nega' alongside riv ('legal dispute') as matters requiring priestly adjudication. Spanish 'herida' and 'golpe' capture the forensic dimension. Proverbs 6:33 warns the adulterer will find nega' and disgrace — a wound to reputation as much as body. Isaiah 53:8 applies the term to the Servant's suffering, bridging physical injury and vicarious affliction. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS
en: affliction, stroke, to-affliction | es: Herida, a-plaga, golpe | fr: [נגע], affliction, à-affliction | de: Elend, [נגע], berueehrte Deut 17:8; Deut 21:5; Prov 6:33; Isa 53:8

4. stripes or beating (2×) Stripes or blows administered as corrective punishment. In 2 Samuel 7:14, God promises to discipline David's heir 'with the stripes of human beings,' pairing nega' with shevet ('rod'). Psalm 89:32 echoes this covenant discipline. Spanish 'azotes' and 'golpes' distinguish the punitive beating from mere wound or disease, marking this as measured chastisement rather than random affliction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-with-stripes, and-with-strokes-of | es: y-con-azotes, y-con-golpes-de | fr: [ובנגעים], et-avec-strokes-de | de: und-mit-stripes, und-mit-strokes-von 2Sam 7:14; Ps 89:32

נָגַף H5062 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (49×)

Strike, smite (active); be defeated, routed (passive); stumble or dash against an obstacle

Nagaph encompasses the full spectrum of violent contact, from divine plague to battlefield defeat to stumbling on a stone. In the Qal, God himself is the subject who strikes — he smites Egypt's firstborn (Exod 12:23, 27) and brings fatal blows on individuals (1 Sam 25:38; 2 Sam 12:15). The Niphal passive reverses the perspective: armies are 'struck down,' that is, defeated and routed (Deut 28:7, 25). Spanish 'derrotado/derrotados' highlights this military-defeat coloring. A small but evocative third sense — stumbling or dashing one's foot against a stone (Ps 91:12; Prov 3:23) — is the image Satan quotes to Jesus in the wilderness temptation.

1. strike, smite (23×) To strike or smite someone with serious, often fatal, injury — used in the Qal active. God strikes Egypt at Passover (Exod 12:23, 27) and individuals under judgment (1 Sam 25:38; 2 Chr 21:18). Spanish 'hirió/herirá' and German 'schlagen' convey the deliberate force. The subject is typically God or a divinely empowered agent. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: I-will-strike, and-he-struck, and-struck | es: Y-herirá, Y-hirió, e-hirió | fr: [ויגף], [ויגפהו], [ונגף] | de: [ונגף], [יגף], ich-wird-schlagen Exod 8:2; Exod 12:23; Exod 12:27; Exod 21:22

2. be defeated, be routed (23×) To be defeated or routed in battle — the Niphal passive, appearing 23 times. Israel is warned they will be 'struck before their enemies' if disobedient (Deut 28:25), and enemies will flee seven ways when Israel obeys (Deut 28:7). Spanish 'derrotado/derrotados' captures the military register more precisely than a generic 'struck.' STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-he-was-struck, and-they-were-defeated, and-they-were-struck | es: Y-fue-derrotado, derrotado, derrotados | fr: [וינגף], [וינגפו], [ינגף] | de: besiegte, du-soll-sein-schlug, schlagen Lev 26:17; Num 14:42; Deut 1:42; Deut 28:7; Deut 28:25

3. stumble, dash against (3×) To stumble or dash one's foot against an obstacle, sometimes with figurative overtones of spiritual tripping. Psalm 91:12 promises angelic protection 'lest you strike your foot against a stone' — the verse quoted during Jesus' temptation. Proverbs 3:23 assures the wise 'your foot will not stumble.' Spanish 'tropezará/tropiece' and the Jeremiah usage (13:16) extend this into metaphor. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: stumble, will-stumble, you-strike | es: tropezará, tropiece, tropiecen | fr: [יתנגפו], frapper, תגוף | de: [יתנגפו], [תגוף], du-schlagen Ps 91:12; Prov 3:23; Jer 13:16

נֶגֶף H5063 N-ms (7×)

A blow or plague sent as divine judgment; also a stone of striking against which one stumbles

This noun from the root ngp ('to strike, smite') denotes a divinely inflicted blow or plague. It appears prominently in the Exodus narrative, where God promises 'no plague shall befall you' during the death of the firstborn (Exod 12:13), and in the wilderness stories where plague threatens Israel for rebellion (Num 16:46-47; 8:19). In one distinctive usage, Isaiah 8:14 speaks of an 'even negep,' a stone of striking that causes stumbling, a metaphor for God becoming an obstacle to those who reject him. The shift from lethal plague to stumbling-stone is vividly reflected in Spanish tropiezo ('stumbling block') versus plaga ('plague').

1. plague (6×) A fatal blow or plague sent as divine judgment, used exclusively in Priestly and related texts. In Exod 12:13 God says the destructive plague (negep) will not touch Israel during the Passover; in Exod 30:12 a census without ransom risks plague; Num 8:19 warns of plague should unauthorized persons approach the sanctuary. Spanish plaga, French plaie, German Plage all consistently render it as epidemic disaster, underscoring the sense of catastrophic divine punishment falling on a community. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: a-plague, plague, the-plague | es: la-plaga, plaga | fr: le-plaie, plaie, une-plaie | de: Plage, der-Plage, eine-Plage Exod 12:13; Exod 30:12; Num 8:19; Num 16:46; Num 16:47

2. striking (1×) A striking or stumbling, used uniquely in Isa 8:14 where God becomes 'a stone of striking' (even negep) and 'a rock of stumbling' for both houses of Israel. The image is not of epidemic plague but of an obstacle against which the foot strikes and the person falls. Spanish tropiezo ('stumbling') and the parallel with tsûr mikhshôl ('rock of stumbling') confirm this distinct metaphorical sense of collision and downfall rather than pestilence. STUMBLING BLOCKS

en: striking | es: tropiezo | fr: [נגף] | de: [נגף] Isa 8:14

נָגַר H5064 V-Nifal-Perf-3fs (10×)

To pour, flow, be spilled; of water poured on the ground, tears streaming, or persons delivered over to destruction.

A verb of liquid motion that moves from the literal to the figurative with striking ease. In its Nifal passive it describes water spilled irretrievably on the ground (2 Sam 14:14) and tears pouring without ceasing (Lam 3:49). The Hifil causative puts an agent behind the pouring: God tips His cup of wrath (Ps 75:8), Jeremiah pleads that his enemies be 'poured out' to the sword (Jer 18:21), and Micah foresees Samaria's stones cascading into the valley (Mic 1:6). Spanish derramar ('to spill, pour out') and French couler ('to flow') track the same literal-to-figurative arc. In two passages the Hifil extends further still — to handing persons over to destruction (Ezek 35:5; Ps 63:10) — as though toppling enemies were a kind of pouring them out.

1. to be poured out, to flow (4×) The Nifal passive sense of being poured out or flowing — liquid spilled beyond recovery. In 2 Samuel 14:14 the wise woman of Tekoa compares human mortality to 'water spilled on the ground that cannot be gathered up again,' and in Lamentations 3:49 the poet's eye 'pours out without ceasing.' Job 20:28 applies it to the wicked's wealth flowing away. Spanish derramar and French couler both render the passive flowing naturally. The image is always of irreversible outpouring. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: poured-down, poured-out, pours-out | es: derramadas, derramamientos, se-derrama | fr: [נגרה], couler, le-versa-dehors | de: [מגרים], [נגרה], [נגרות] 2Sam 14:14; Job 20:28; Lam 3:49; Mic 1:4

2. to pour out, cause to flow (3×) The Hifil causative sense of actively pouring out or causing something to flow down. God pours out the wine of His fury (Ps 75:8), the prophet asks God to pour out his enemies to the sword (Jer 18:21), and in Micah 1:6 God will pour Samaria's stones into the valley. The agent is always powerful — divine or prophetic — and the pouring is an act of judgment or demolition. German ausgiessen and Spanish derramar in their active forms mirror this causative force. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: and-He-pours-out, and-I-will-pour-down, and-pour-them-out | es: y-derrama, y-derramaré, y-entrégalos | fr: [והגרם], et-couler, et-verser | de: [והגרם], [והגרתי], und-er-giesst-aus-heraus Ps 75:8; Jer 18:21; Mic 1:6

3. to deliver over, hand over (2×) A figurative Hifil extension meaning to deliver or hand over persons to destruction, as though pouring them out like water. In Ezekiel 35:5 Edom 'poured out' Israel's children to the sword, and in Psalm 63:10 the wicked will be 'poured out by the hand of the sword.' The physical image of liquid pouring becomes a metaphor for violent transfer — enemies are toppled, spilled into death. Spanish derramar retains this dual sense of pouring and slaughter. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: and-you-gave-over, they-will-pour-him-out | es: Lo-derramarán, y-derramaste | fr: et-couler, verser | de: [ותגר], sie-wird-ausgiessen-ihn-heraus Ps 63:10; Ezek 35:5

4. to be stretched out, spread (1×) A rare Nifal sense in Psalm 77:2, where the psalmist says 'my hand was stretched out in the night and did not grow numb.' Here the verb appears to mean 'be stretched out' or 'be spread,' departing from its usual liquid semantics. Some scholars emend 'hand' to 'eye' (reading 'my eye poured out'), which would restore the weeping sense, but the received text suggests an extension from flowing outward to stretching outward — a natural, if unusual, metaphorical step. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: was-stretched-out | es: extendí | fr: verser | de: Krieg-ausgestreckt-heraus Ps 77:2

נָגַשׂ H5065 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 3ms (23×)

To press, drive, oppress, or exact; as participle, a taskmaster or oppressor; in Niphal, to be oppressed.

Nagas is a verb of coercive power — the sound of the whip-crack behind forced labor and the crushing weight of economic extraction. Its most iconic appearances are in Exodus, where the Egyptian taskmasters (nogesim) drive the Israelites to make bricks without straw (Exod 5:6-14). But the word extends beyond slave-driving into the broader realm of political and economic oppression: Isaiah uses it for tyrants who will one day cease (Isa 14:4), and Deuteronomy applies its exacting sense to the collection of debts (Deut 15:2-3). The Ethiopic cognate nagasa, meaning 'to reign' or 'to wield royal power' (whence negus, 'king'), reveals the ancient Semitic association between pressing authority and sovereign rule. Spanish captures the range well, moving from capataz ('foreman') through opresor ('oppressor') to exigir ('to demand payment').

1. taskmaster, slave-driver (8×) Taskmaster, slave-driver — 8 occurrences, all using the Qal participle noges as a substantive noun. This is the Exodus sense par excellence: the Egyptian overseers who drive Israelite laborers to exhaustion (Exod 3:7; 5:6, 10, 13, 14) and the slave-driver's rod broken in Job 3:18 when the weary find rest in death. Spanish capataz ('foreman') and French chefs-de-corvée ('forced-labor chiefs') both select specialized labor-supervision vocabulary. The participial form has fully lexicalized — these are not people who happen to be pressing, but holders of an institutional

role. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-taskmasters, and-your-taskmasters, taskmasters-of | es: Y-los-opresores, capataz, los-opresores | fr: chefs-de-corvée-de, et-le-chefs-de-corvée, et-oppresser | de: Aufseher-von, [נגש], [נוגש] Exod 3:7; Exod 5:6; Exod 5:10; Exod 5:13; Exod 5:14

2. oppressor, tyrant (6×) Oppressor, tyrant in a general political or social sense — 6 occurrences where the Qal participle extends beyond forced labor into broader tyranny. Isaiah's prophecy that the oppressor's rod will be broken (Isa 9:4), the reversal where former captives will 'rule over their oppressors' (Isa 14:2), and Zechariah's promise that 'no oppressor shall pass through them anymore' (Zech 9:8). Spanish opresor and French opprimer both generalize beyond the labor context. The Ethiopic parallel is illuminating: the same root that produces 'taskmaster' in Hebrew produces 'king' in Ge'ez, showing how coercive authority slides between labor-driving and political domination. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY
en: an-oppressor, his-oppressors, oppressor | es: a-sus-opresores, el-opresor, opresor | fr: oppresser, opprimer | de: [נגש], [נוגש], antreiben Isa 3:12; Isa 9:4; Isa 14:2; Isa 14:4; Zech 9:8

3. to exact, demand payment (5×) To exact, demand payment of debts or tribute — 5 occurrences in Qal finite verb forms. Deuteronomy 15:2-3 legislates the sabbatical release: a creditor 'shall not exact' from his neighbor but 'may exact' from a foreigner. In 2 Kgs 23:35, Jehoiakim 'exacted' silver and gold from the people to pay Pharaoh's tribute. Daniel 11:20 prophesies an 'exactor' who sends agents through the kingdom's glory. Spanish exigir ('to demand/exact') and French presser both capture the economic coercion, distinguishing this fiscal sense from the physical violence of slave-driving. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY
en: an-exactor, he-exacted, he-shall-press | es: exigirá, exigirás, exigió | fr: il-devra-press, il-exacted, oppresser | de: [נוגש], antreiben, du-moege-press Deut 15:2; Deut 15:3; 2Kgs 23:35; Isa 58:3; Dan 11:20

4. to be oppressed (Nifal) (4×) To be oppressed, distressed (Niphal passive) — 4 occurrences where the subject suffers rather than inflicts pressure. The Israelites at Michmash were 'hard pressed' by the Philistines (1 Sam 13:6); Saul's troops were 'distressed' by his rash oath (1 Sam 14:24); in Isaiah 53:7 the Suffering Servant 'was oppressed' — one of the most theologically significant passives in the Old Testament. Spanish fue-oprimido and French oppressé both mark the voice shift clearly. The Niphal here transforms the agent of coercion into the patient of suffering, and Isaiah's application to the Servant inverts the entire Exodus narrative: the one who delivers from taskmasters himself becomes the oppressed. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY
en: and-the-people-shall-oppress, he-was-oppressed, pressed | es: Fue-oprimido, Y-será-oprimido, estaba-acosado | fr: et-oppresser, oppresser, pressed | de: antreiben, pressed, und-antreiben 1Sam 13:6; 1Sam 14:24; Isa 3:5; Isa 53:7

נָגַשׁ H5066 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-3ms (125×)

draw near, approach, bring near; (Qal) come near; (Niphal) approach; (Hifil) cause to approach, present; (Hofal) be brought near Hebrew נָגַשׁ is a verb of spatial and relational approach, often synonymous with קָרַב but slightly less frequent. In Qal it means to draw near or approach someone or something. Niphal adds a reflexive or middle sense—presenting oneself, approaching of one's own accord, often in formal or cultic contexts. Hifil is causative: bringing someone or something near, and in ritual settings, presenting or offering sacrifices. Hofal provides the passive: being brought near or offered. The verb spans physical proximity, relational access (approaching a ruler or God), and ritual presentation (bringing offerings). Across languages, Spanish acercar, French approcher, and German sich nähern maintain the spatial metaphor consistently.

1. Qal: draw near, approach (66×) The basic Qal intransitive sense: to move toward someone or something, to come near, draw close physically or relationally. Genesis 18:23 (Abraham drew near and said), 19:9 (stand back/come near), 27:21-26 (Isaac said, 'Come near, please') show simple approach. Spanish acercarse and French approcher are standard equivalents. German sich nähern preserves the reflexive nuance. This is the verb's foundational spatial sense, often initiating dialogue or encounter. NEARNESS AND APPROACH en: And-approached, and-approached, and-came-near | es: Y-se-acercaron, Y-se-acercó, se-acercará | fr: Et-approcha, [ויגש], et-approcha | de: And-naeherte-sich, er-soll-sich-naehern, und-approached Gen 18:23; Gen 19:9; Gen 27:21; Gen 27:22; Gen 27:26

2. Hifil: bring near, bring forward (23×) Hifil in its general causative force: to cause someone or something to approach, to bring near. Genesis 27:25 (bring it near to me), 48:10, 13 (Joseph brought his sons near to Israel), Exodus 21:6 (bring him to the door) illustrate bringing people or objects into proximity. Spanish acercar, French apporter près, and German bringe nahe reflect the causative. This is broader than cultic use—it covers any act of bringing near for any purpose. NEARNESS AND APPROACH
en: Let-them-bring-forward, and-bring-near, and-brought-near | es: Acércame, E-hicieron-acercar, Trae-cerca | fr: [ויגישו], apporte-près, apporter-près | de: [הגישהם], [יגש], bringe-nahe Gen 27:25; Gen 48:10; Gen 48:13; Exod 21:6

3. Nifal: approach, draw near (18×) Niphal middle or reflexive: to approach or draw near in a formal or self-initiated manner, often before God, a leader, or for judgment. Genesis 33:7 (Leah approached with her children), Exodus 19:22, 20:21, 24:2 (the priests who come near to the Lord), 34:32 (Moses called them, and they came near) show self-presentation or formal approach. Spanish acercarse and French s'approcher maintain the reflexive. German sich nähern and approached fit the middle voice. This sense often carries ceremonial or hierarchical overtones. NEARNESS AND APPROACH
en: and-brought-near, and-he-will-approach, and-shall-approach | es: Y-acercó, Y-se-acercará, Y-se-acercarán | fr: [ונגשו], approcha, et—venir-près | de: [ונגשו], approached, der-die-approaching Gen 33:7; Exod 19:22; Exod 20:21; Exod 24:2; Exod 34:32

4. Hifil: present, offer (cultic) (11×) Hifil in a specialized cultic sense: to present or offer in a sacrificial or ritual context—bringing an offering, gift, or sacrifice before God. Judges 6:19 (Gideon brought out the offering), 1 Samuel 13:9, 14:34, 15:32 (bring the burnt offering, bring the oxen, bring King Agag) illustrate ritual presentation. Spanish presentar/traer cerca and French apporter près reflect the act of offering. This is a semantic narrowing of the general Hifil causative to the domain of worship and sacrifice. NEARNESS AND APPROACH
en: Bringing, and-one-bringing, and-presented | es: Presentando, Traed, Traed-cerca | fr: apportant, apportant-près, apporte-près | de: [ומגיש], [מגישי], [מגישים] Judg 6:19; 1Sam 13:9; 1Sam 14:34; 1Sam 15:32; 1Kgs 4:21

5. Hofal: be brought near, be offered (2×) Hofal passive: to be brought near or to be offered/presented, typically in formal or cultic contexts. 2 Samuel 3:34 (your hands were not bound, your feet were not brought near to fetters—possibly a different nuance) and Malachi 1:11 (a pure offering is brought near to my name) show the passive. Spanish presentado/fueron acercados and French apporté près capture passivization. This is the least common stem, attested twice. NEARNESS AND APPROACH
en: being-offered, brought-near | es: fueron-acercados, presentado | fr: apporta-près, s'approcher | de: [מגש], brachte-nahe 2Sam 3:34; Mal 1:11

6. Qal: advance, press forward (2×) A Qal sub-sense emphasizing deliberate or aggressive forward motion—advancing, pressing forward, often in military or confrontational contexts. Genesis 19:9 (they pressed hard against Lot) and Jeremiah 46:3 (prepare buckler and shield, advance for battle) show the assertive nuance. Spanish atrás/acercaos and French s'approcher/se tenir vary, but the context demands forcefulness. German tritt-/nahen reflects the imperatival urgency. This is approach with intent to engage or confront. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: and-advance, stand | es: atrás, y-acercaos | fr: et-s'approcher, se-tenir | de: tritt-, und-nahen Gen 19:9; Jer 46:3

7. (1×) Isaiah 45:20—context (gather, assemble, draw near together, you survivors of the nations) suggests a summoning or gathering, but the specific semantic contribution of נָגַשׁ is unclear. Spanish acercaos, French s'approcher, and German nahen maintain the spatial metaphor without further specification. Awaiting refinement. NEARNESS AND APPROACH
en: draw-near | es: acercaos | fr: s'approcher | de: nahen Isa 45:20

8. (1×) Amos 9:13—'the plowman shall overtake the reaper'—the verb suggests rapid succession or catching up, extending spatial approach to temporal proximity or urgency. Spanish alcanzará (will reach/overtake) and French s'approcher suggest the closing of distance. This may be metaphorical extension from spatial to temporal nearness. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: and-will-overtake | es: y-alcanzará | fr: et-s'approcher | de: [ונגש] Amos 9:13

9. (1×) Amos 9:10—'disaster will not overtake or confront us'—similar to sense 8, the verb expresses impending arrival or confrontation. Spanish se acercará (will approach) and French s'approcher fit the anticipatory sense. The two Amos occurrences may form a sub-sense of temporal or inevitable approach, distinct from voluntary spatial nearness. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: will-overtake | es: se-acercará | fr: s'approcher | de: [תגיש] Amos 9:10

נֵד H5067 N-ms (6×)

Heap, mound — especially of waters piled up by divine power at the Red Sea or Jordan crossings.

A masculine noun meaning 'heap' or 'mound,' used almost exclusively for the miraculous heaping up of waters. Its most dramatic appearances describe God's parting of the Red Sea, where the waters stood as a heap (Exod 15:8), and the Jordan crossing, where the waters rose up in a single heap (Josh 3:13, 16). Psalm 78:13 and 33:7 recall these events in worship, using the same noun to evoke God's sovereign power over creation. The one possible non-aquatic use in Isaiah 17:11 ('harvest-heap') is textually uncertain. Spanish 'monton' and French 'monceau' both convey the image of a mass piled high.

heap, mound (6×) A heap or mound, characteristically used of waters supernaturally piled up during Israel's foundational salvation events. At the Red Sea the waters 'stood as a heap' (Exod 15:8), and at the Jordan they 'rose up in one heap' (Josh 3:13, 16). The psalms recall this imagery in worship (Ps 33:7; 78:13), making the word a marker of divine power over chaotic waters. Spanish 'monton' and French 'monceau/tas' render the concrete physical image. The possible occurrence in Isaiah 17:11 ('harvest-heap') remains textually disputed. HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: a-heap, as-a-heap, heap | es: como-montón, montón, montón-de | fr: [נד], comme-tas, monceau | de: Haufen, [נד], ein-Haufen Exod 15:8; Josh 3:13; Josh 3:16; Ps 33:7; Ps 78:13

נָדַב H5068 Art / V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-ms (17×)

To volunteer, offer willingly (Hitpael); to stir, impel, or incite the heart to act (Qal).

A verb of inner motivation and generous initiative. In the Hitpael, it describes the remarkable phenomenon of people volunteering — offering themselves or their resources without compulsion. Deborah's song celebrates those who 'offered themselves willingly' for battle (Judg 5:2, 9), and David's temple campaign overflows with leaders who 'volunteered' their gold and silver (1 Chr 29:5-9). In the Qal, the focus shifts to the initial inner stirring: God's spirit or one's own heart 'impels' a person to give (Exod 25:2, 35:21, 29). The Arabic cognate naduba ('to be noble, generous') illuminates the root's connection between willingness and nobility.

1. offer willingly, volunteer (Hitpael) (14×) To offer oneself or one's possessions freely and voluntarily, without external compulsion (Hitpael reflexive). Deborah's victory song praises the people who volunteered for war (Judg 5:2, 9). David's temple preparations become a festival of willing generosity as leaders, officers, and the people 'offered willingly' (1 Chr 29:5-9, 17). Ezra 2:68 records returning exiles who volunteered for the rebuilding. Spanish 'ofrecerse voluntariamente' and French 'offrir volontairement' capture the reflexive, self-motivated quality. The Hitpael stem underscores that the action originates from within the giver. FREEWILL OFFERING

en: And-offered-willingly, freely-offering, have-offered-willingly | es: Y-se-ofrecieron-voluntariamente, cuando-se-ofreció-voluntariamente, el-que-ofrece-voluntariamente | fr: et-offrir-volontairement, le-les-volunteering, offrir-volontairement | de: [המתנדב], [המתנדבים], [התנדב] Judg 5:2; Judg 5:9; 1Chr 29:5; 1Chr 29:6; 1Chr 29:9

2. impel, stir, incite (Qal) (3×) To stir up, impel, or incite a person's heart or spirit to action (Qal active). Exodus 25:2 instructs Moses to receive contributions from 'everyone whose heart urges him' (יְדָבֶנּוּ לִבּוֹ), and 35:21 describes those 'whose heart stirred them' and 'whose spirit impelled them' to bring tabernacle offerings (Exod 35:29). While sense 1 emphasizes the resulting voluntary action, this sense captures the prior inner movement — the heart being prompted or roused. The distinction is between the impulse (Qal) and the response (Hitpael). STIR UP INCITE

en: stirred, urges-him | es: le-movió, les-movió, lo-impulse | fr: agita, urges-lui | de: stirred, urges-ihn Exod 25:2; Exod 35:21; Exod 35:29

נָדַב H5069 V-Hitpael-Perf-3mp (4×)

nadab (Aramaic) — to volunteer, offer freely, make freewill offerings

This Aramaic verb means to volunteer or offer freely, particularly in religious or charitable contexts. It appears exclusively in Ezra 7, describing voluntary offerings given for the temple's restoration. The term encompasses both the act of volunteering one's service and the giving of freewill financial gifts for sacred purposes. This reflects the post-exilic community's pattern of generous, non-compulsory giving to restore worship in Jerusalem. The Hebrew cognate (nadab) carries the same meaning, emphasizing that true offerings to God arise from willing hearts rather than external compulsion.

(4×) To volunteer or give freely, especially for religious purposes. Ezra 7:13 uses the participle: any Israelite in Babylon 'who volunteers' (mitnaddev) to return to Jerusalem may go. Verse 15 describes financial support: the silver and gold that the king and counselors 'have freely offered' (hitnaddevu) to the God of Israel. Verse 16 appears twice: first, listing 'all the silver and gold that you find in the whole province of Babylonia, along with the freewill offering (hitnaddevut) of the people,' and second, describing further contributions 'offering freely (mitnaddevin) for the house of their God in Jerusalem.' The Hithpael stem emphasizes the reflexive, voluntary nature—freely giving of oneself or one's resources. FREEWILL OFFERING

en: have-freely-offered, offering-freely, the-freewill-offering-of | es: el-que-se-ofrece-voluntariamente, la-ofrenda-voluntaria-de, ofrecieron-voluntariamente | fr: [התנדבו], [התנדבות], [מתנדב] | de: [התנדבו], [התנדבות], [מתנדב] Ezra 7:13; Ezra 7:15; Ezra 7:16

נָדָב H5070 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (20×)

Nadab, a personal name meaning 'generous' or 'noble,' borne by four individuals in the Hebrew Bible.

A proper name meaning 'generous' or 'noble,' borne most prominently by Aaron's eldest son, who was consecrated as priest but died with his brother Abihu for offering unauthorized fire before the Lord (Exod 6:23; Lev 10:1; Num 3:2–4). A second notable bearer is Nadab son of Jeroboam I, who reigned briefly over Israel before being assassinated by Baasha (1 Kgs 14:20; 15:25–31). The name also belongs to a Jerahmeelite (1 Chr 2:28, 30) and a Gibeonite (1 Chr 8:30; 9:36). All translations uniformly render it as Nadab or Nadav.

Nadab (20×) The personal name Nadab (Hebrew Nadav, 'generous, noble'), identifying four distinct individuals: (a) Aaron's firstborn, ordained as priest but struck dead for offering strange fire (Exod 6:23; Lev 10:1; Num 26:60–61); (b) Jeroboam I's son and short-reigned king of Israel (1 Kgs 15:25–31); (c) a Jerahmeelite (1 Chr 2:28, 30); (d) a Gibeonite (1 Chr 8:30; 9:36). The Septuagint renders it consistently as Nadab, and all modern translations preserve this form without variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nadab, Nadav, and-Nadav | es: Nadab, Nadav, Y-Nadav | fr: Nadab, Nadav, et-Nadab | de: Nadab, Nadav, und-Nadab Exod 6:23; Exod 24:1; Exod 24:9; Exod 28:1; Lev 10:1

נְדָבָה H5071 N-fpc / 3mp (26×)

Voluntary offering; freewill gift; willingness, generosity

A Hebrew noun rooted in the idea of voluntariness and willing devotion. In its most frequent use, it denotes a freewill offering presented to God beyond what the law requires, as in Exodus 35:29 where the Israelites brought their gifts with a willing heart. It can also function adverbially to mean 'freely' or 'of one's own accord,' as in Hosea 14:4 where God declares He will love His people freely. In one poignant instance (Psalm 68:9), it describes the abundant, generous rain God pours out on His inheritance. Spanish 'ofrenda voluntaria' and German 'Freiwillige' both capture the core sense of unconstrained giving.

1. freewill offering (22×) The principal cultic sense: a voluntary sacrificial offering given to God beyond legal obligation, encompassing burnt offerings, grain offerings, and other gifts. Appears across Leviticus, Deuteronomy, and Chronicles in varied inflections. The Spanish 'ofrenda voluntaria' and French 'offrande volontaire' mirror the Hebrew emphasis on willingness rather than the offering type itself. Key at Exodus 35:29 and Leviticus 22:21. FREEWILL OFFERING

en: a-freewill-offering, and-your-freewill-offerings, are-freewill-offerings | es: como-ofrenda-voluntaria, en-ofrenda-voluntaria, la-ofrenda-voluntaria | fr: [הנדבה], [נדבה], comme-offrande-volontaire | de: Freiwillige, [הנדבה], [נדבה] Exod 35:29; Exod 36:3; Lev 7:16; Lev 22:18; Lev 22:21

2. freely, voluntarily (3×) The abstract adverbial sense of acting freely, voluntarily, and without compulsion. At Hosea 14:4, God's love is poured out 'nedavah'—freely and unconditionally. At Psalm 54:6, the psalmist offers praise from an uncoerced heart. The shift from noun to adverb preserves the root meaning of spontaneous willingness. FREEWILL OFFERING

en: for-freewill-offering, freely, with-a-freewill-offering | es: como-ofrenda-voluntaria, con-voluntariedad, voluntariamente | fr: [לנדבה], dans-offrande, don | de: [לנדבה], [נדבה], mit-ein-Freiwillige 2Chr 35:8; Ps 54:6; Hos 14:4

3. abundance, generosity (1×) A single metaphorical use in Psalm 68:9 where 'geshem nedavot' means a 'generous rain' or 'rain of abundance,' extending the notion of freewill generosity from the cultic sphere to God's lavish provision in nature. English 'abundance' captures the semantic shift from voluntary gift to copious outpouring. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: abundance | es: abundancia | fr: offrande | de: Freiwillige Ps 68:9

נְדַבְיָה H5072 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Nedabiah (personal name: son of Jehoiachin, 'YHWH impels')

A personal name meaning 'whom Yahweh impels' or 'Yahweh moves voluntarily,' belonging to a son of King Jehoiachin (Jeconiah) listed in 1 Chronicles 3:18. This represents one of the Davidic descendants born during the Babylonian exile, part of the royal line that continued despite the monarchy's collapse. The name's Yahwistic element reflects persistent covenant faith even in captivity—parents still invoked YHWH's name and attributes when naming children. The theophoric form (-יָהּ) makes this explicitly about Yahweh's motivating or impelling action.

(1×) Personal name meaning 'Yahweh impels' or 'Yahweh is generous,' identifying a son of the exiled king Jehoiachin. First Chronicles 3:18 lists him among the royal descendants, documenting the Davidic line's continuity in Babylon. The name combines Yahweh with נָדַב (to impel, incite, or act willingly), suggesting either divine prompting or generous action. Spanish 'y-Nedabya' and the transliterations across languages preserve the Hebrew name without translation. This is genealogical data with theological significance: even after Jerusalem's fall, Davidic families maintained their identity and named children with explicit Yahweh theology, keeping messianic hope alive in exile. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Nedavyah | es: y-Nedabya | fr: [ונדביה] | de: [ונדביה] 1Chr 3:18

נְדָבָךְ H5073 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

row, course, layer; a horizontal layer in building construction

This Aramaic loanword appears in Ezra's account of temple reconstruction, referring to the rows or courses of stone in the building's walls. The Persian decree specifies the construction technique: three rows of heavy stones alternating with timber courses. The term reflects standard Ancient Near Eastern building practices where horizontal layers of stone were carefully laid to create stable walls. The Aramaic vocabulary suits Ezra's Persian-period context and the official documentation he cites.

(2×) Occurs in Ezra 6:4 (twice, once singular, once plural), describing the construction specifications for the temple. The multilingual evidence shows some uncertainty about technical rendering, with several versions preserving the Hebrew/Aramaic form, but the context clearly indicates horizontal courses or layers of building materials in masonry construction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-row, rows | es: hiladas-de, y-hilada-de | fr: [ונדבך], [נדבכין] | de: [ונדבך], [נדבכין] Ezra 6:4

נָדַד H5074 Conj-w / V-Hofal-ConjImperf-3ms (28×)

To flee, wander, stray, be driven away; of birds fluttering; causatively, to chase away; reflexively, to shake the head.

Nadad captures the restless, dispossessed movement of creatures and people who have lost their place — whether by flight from danger, aimless wandering as fugitives, or forcible expulsion. The word appears in some of Scripture's most vivid displacement imagery: birds stripped from nests (Prov 27:8), nations scattered before conquerors (Isa 21:15), and sleepless kings tossing through the night (Esth 6:1). Multilingual evidence reveals how translators parse the range — Spanish distinguishes huir ('flee purposefully') from vagar ('wander aimlessly'), while French toggles between fuir and errer to mark the same boundary. The Hofal passive ('be chased away') and Hifil causative ('chase him away') round out a complete verbal system for the theology of exile and displacement.

1. flee, take flight (14×) The core Qal active sense: to flee, take flight from danger or an adversary, moving rapidly in a definite direction away from threat. This accounts for half the occurrences and covers everything from Madmenah's inhabitants fleeing (Isa 10:31) to kings retreating before battle (Ps 68:12). Spanish huir and German fliehen both select purposeful-escape vocabulary, distinguishing this from the aimless wandering of sense 2. The Pual passive ('they are fled') appears in Hos 7:13 where Israel has 'fled from' God — flight as covenant betrayal rather than merely physical escape. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: and-fled, and-they-flee, fled | es: Huyó, habían-huido, huirá | fr: [נדדה], errer, et-errer | de: [ונודד], [ירוד], [נדדה] Gen 31:40; Esth 6:1; Ps 31:11; Ps 68:12

2. wander, roam aimlessly (9×) To wander, roam without fixed direction or home, often as a fugitive or exile. The Qal participle noded functions almost as a noun ('wanderer, fugitive'), as in Jer 49:5 where Ammon's refugees scatter with no one to gather them. Proverbs 27:8 offers the memorable simile of a bird wandering from its nest — Spanish al-errante and French errer both capture the purposeless quality. The distinction from sense 1 is directionality: fleeing has a 'from,' wandering has no 'toward.' Job 15:23 uses it of the wicked who wander for bread, adding economic desperation to geographic displacement. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: far-off, fugitive, the-wanderer | es: Vaga, al-errante, al-fugitivo | fr: errer, fuir, נדד | de: [נדד], [נדדים], [נודד] Job 15:23; Ps 55:7; Prov 27:8; Isa 16:2

3. be driven away, cast out (2×) The Hofal passive: to be driven away, chased out, cast off as the passive recipient of expulsion. Only two occurrences (2 Sam 23:6; Job 20:8), both vividly physical — the wicked are 'driven away' like thorns, and the prosperous man 'is chased away' like a vision of the night. Spanish ahuyentado ('put to flight') and the French passive construction both mark the shift from voluntary flight to involuntary ejection. This is nadad done to you, not by you. DRIVEN AWAY SWEPT

en: and-he-is-chased-away, thrown-away | es: apartado, y-será-ahuyentado | fr: et-וירד, jeté-au-loin | de: [וירד], thrown-weg 2Sam 23:6; Job 20:8

4. flutter, flap wings (1×) A single occurrence describing the fluttering or flapping of wings (Isa 10:14), where Isaiah boasts that no wing so much as 'fluttered' when Assyria plundered the nations' nests. Spanish quien-moviera ('who would move') and English 'fluttering' capture the trembling, agitated motion of a bird's wing. The image draws on the same displacement-from-nest semantics as sense 2 but narrows to physical avian movement rather than human wandering. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: fluttering | es: quien-moviera | fr: fuir | de: fliehen Isa 10:14

5. shake, wag the head (1×) The Hitpael reflexive: to shake or wag the head, a gesture of scorn, derision, or mock-pity (Ps 64:8). Spanish menarun-la-cabeza and German wird-erschuttern-ihr-Haupt both render the physical head-shaking gesture. Though only one occurrence, the Hitpael stem marks a genuinely distinct verbal sense — reflexive bodily motion rather than translocation — and the contemptuous social register separates it from all other senses of this root. FLEEING AND ESCAPING en: will-shake-their-head | es: menarán-la-cabeza | fr: fuir | de: wird-erschüttern-ihr-Haupt Ps 64:8

6. chase away, drive out (1×) The Hifil causative: to chase away, drive out someone actively (Job 18:18). Here the subject does the expelling — the wicked man is 'chased from light into darkness.' Spanish lo-ahuyentan ('they chase him away') and French yndhw-lui both flag the causative agent. This is the mirror image of the Hofal (sense 3): what sense 3 experiences passively, sense 6 performs actively. Only one occurrence, but the stem system demands its own sense slot. STRIKING AND REFERENCE en: they-chase-him | es: lo-ahuyentan | fr: יְנַדֵּהוּ-lui | de: [יְנַדֵּהוּ] Job 18:18

נְדַד H5075 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (1×)

to flee, depart (Aramaic, of sleep)

An Aramaic verb meaning to flee or move away, equivalent to Biblical Hebrew נדד. Daniel 6:18 uses it in the evocative phrase 'his sleep fled from him'—King Darius cannot sleep while Daniel faces the lions. The perfect form נְדַת with the preposition עֲלוֹהִי shows completed action: sleep departed from upon him, leaving him awake all night. The verb typically describes refugees or fugitives fleeing danger, but here it personifies sleep as something that flees. The image captures anxious wakefulness through the metaphor of sleep as a departing visitor.

(1×) To flee, depart, or move away—specifically describing sleep's departure from the anxious king. Daniel 6:18 reports that Darius spent the night fasting and sleepless: שְׁנָתֵהּ נְדַת עֲלוֹהִי (literally 'his sleep fled from upon him'). Spanish 'huyó' and the verb across languages capture this personification: sleep is treated as an entity capable of fleeing. The verb is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew נדד, commonly describing exiles or refugees fleeing homeland, here applied metaphorically to sleep escaping the king's grasp. This is insomnia caused by care—when you've condemned your friend to lions, rest becomes impossible. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: fled | es: huyó | fr: conduire | de: [נדת] Dan 6:18

נְדוּד H5076 N-mp (1×)

tossings, restlessness (of sleepless night)

A masculine plural noun describing the physical restlessness and tossing of sleepless nights. Job 7:4 uses it in his complaint about affliction: 'I am sated with tossings until dawn.' The term captures the exhausting motion of someone who cannot find rest, turning repeatedly in search of a comfortable position that never comes. The plural form suggests multiple episodes or continuous motion throughout the night. This is insomnia not as peaceful wakefulness but as active, frustrated restlessness—the body's exhausted attempt to find rest that remains elusive.

(1×) Tossings, restless movements—specifically the physical agitation of sleepless suffering. Job 7:4 laments being 'sated with נְדָדִים (tossings) until dawn,' meaning he spends entire nights in restless motion, unable to find repose. The plural intensifies the sense: not one turn but countless tossings, a night-long wrestling with discomfort. Spanish 'inquietudes' (restlessness/anxieties) broadens to psychological agitation, while English 'tossings' preserves the physical sense. This isn't peaceful insomnia but tortured wakefulness—the body exhausting itself in futile searches for rest, making night as wearisome as day. Job's word choice makes insomnia visceral: you can feel the frustrated turning, the exhausted shifting, the body's rebellion against sleep's absence. SLEEP AND SLUMBER

en: tossings | es: inquietudes | fr: errer | de: [נדדים] Job 7:4

נָדָא H5077a Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

to drive away, thrust aside (Ketiv variant, textual issue)

A verbal form of uncertain text, appearing in 2 Kings 17:21 in the Ketiv (written text) where the Qere (read text) has a different form. The Ketiv reads וַיַּדָּא (from נדא) while the Qere substitutes וַיַּדַּח (from נדח), both meaning essentially 'and he drove away' or 'thrust aside.' The context describes Jeroboam son of Nebat driving Israel away from following YHWH. Most translations follow the Qere, which uses the more common root נדח. This textual variant represents either a dialectal form or a scribal variant of the same concept.

(1×) To thrust away or drive aside—a Ketiv reading describing Jeroboam's impact on Israel's covenant faithfulness. The text states he 'thrust Israel away from following YHWH,' meaning his establishment of golden calf worship created systemic apostasy. The Qere reads the more common root נדח (drive away, banish), with essentially identical meaning. Translators mark this as '[K]' or note the Ketiv-Qere distinction, often following the read text. The verb captures forceful removal: Jeroboam didn't merely lead Israel astray but actively thrust them away from proper worship, making apostasy the new normal. Whether נדא or נדח, the point stands: Israel was forcibly separated from covenant loyalty. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [and-he-thrust] | es: [K] | fr: [and-il-thrust] | de: [and-er-thrust] 2Kgs 17:21

נָדָה H5077b Art / V-Piel-Prtcpl-mp (2×)

those who put away, exclude, thrust off; those who reject or distance something unpleasant

This Piel participle describes active rejection or exclusion. It appears in two prophetic contexts: Amos condemns those who thrust away thoughts of coming judgment, refusing to face the evil day ahead, while Isaiah describes God's people being cast out by their brothers from worship and community. The term suggests deliberate distancing—pushing away what one doesn't want to acknowledge or accept, whether the reality of judgment or the presence of faithful worshipers.

(2×) Found in Isaiah 66:5 (brothers who exclude the faithful) and Amos 6:3 (those who put off the day of judgment). The multilingual glosses capture the active exclusion: English 'cast you out'/'putting off', Spanish 'os apartan'/'alejan', French 'verser', all emphasizing the deliberate action of pushing away or removing what is unwanted. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: The-ones-putting-off, who-cast-you-out | es: Los-que-alejan, los-que-os-apartan | fr: [מנדיכם], verser | de: [המנדים], [מנדיכם] Isa 66:5; Amos 6:3

נֵדָה H5078 N-ms (1×)

gift, present (from harlot to lover, unusual economics)

A rare noun denoting a gift or present, used in Ezekiel 16:33 to describe the inverted economics of Israel's idolatry. Normally prostitutes receive payment, but the prophet depicts Israel as giving gifts to her lovers—paying foreign nations to accept her unfaithfulness. The term appears in parallel with נְתָנִים (gifts), emphasizing the perverse generosity with which Judah pursued alliances and foreign gods. This reversal highlights the depth of Israel's degradation: she has become a prostitute so desperate she pays her clients, turning economic and moral logic upside down.

(1×) A gift or present—specifically the payment Israel gives to her 'lovers' (foreign nations/gods) in Ezekiel's prophetic allegory. Ezekiel 16:33 accuses Jerusalem of reversing prostitution's normal economics: 'to all prostitutes they give a gift, but you gave your gifts to all your lovers.' Spanish 'regalo' (gift/present) and French 'offrande' (offering) capture the sense of something given. The context makes this bitterly ironic: Israel doesn't receive payment for her unfaithfulness but pays others to participate in her apostasy. This is gift-giving as desperate pursuit, generosity as degradation—Israel bribing foreign powers to accept her covenant betrayal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gift | es: regalo | fr: offrande | de: [נדה] Ezek 16:33

נִדָּה H5079 Art / N-fs (29×)

Impurity, uncleanness; especially menstrual impurity, but extending to broader ritual defilement and metaphorical moral pollution

Rooted in the idea of something abhorrent or shunned, niddah is one of the key purity terms in Levitical legislation. Its most specific application is menstrual impurity – Lev 15:19-33 details the laws governing a woman's period and its ritual consequences. Yet the term extends well beyond menstruation: the 'waters of niddah' (mei haniddah) in Num 19:9-21 purify corpse contamination, and Ezekiel and Zechariah use niddah metaphorically for the moral filth of idolatry and sin (Ezek 36:17; Zech 13:1). Spanish 'impureza/inmundicia,' French 'impureté,' and the consistent cross-linguistic rendering as uncleanness show how translators wrestle with a term that is simultaneously physiological, ritual, and moral.

1. menstrual impurity (15×) Menstrual impurity specifically: the state of ritual uncleanness associated with a woman's period. Lev 12:2 compares postpartum impurity to 'the days of her niddah,' and Lev 15:19-33 provides the fullest legislation. Ezek 18:6 prohibits approaching a menstruating woman. Spanish 'en su menstruación' and French 'dans sa impureté' both render this physiological sense directly. The term governed practical social separation in ancient Israelite life. RITUAL MORAL IMPURITY en: as-her-impurity, her-impurity, impurity-of | es: como-su-impureza, en-menstruación-de, en-su-menstruación | fr: comme-sa-impureté, dans-impureté-de, dans-sa-impureté | de: [הנדה], [נדה], ihr-impurity Lev 12:2; Lev 12:5; Lev 15:19; Lev 15:20; Lev 15:24

2. ritual or moral impurity (14×) Broader ritual or moral impurity extending beyond menstruation. The 'waters of niddah' (Num 19:9, 13, 20-21) cleanse corpse defilement – a wholly different ritual context. Lev 20:21 applies niddah to the abomination of marrying a brother's wife. Prophetically, Ezek 36:17 compares Israel's conduct to menstrual uncleanness, and Zech 13:1 promises a fountain for niddah and sin. Spanish 'la inmundicia' and French 'l'impureté' reflect this generalized pollution sense. RITUAL MORAL IMPURITY en: and-for-impurity, for-impurity, impurity | es: impureza, la-impureza, la-inmundicia | fr: [בנדת], [הנדה], [לנדה] | de: [בנדת], [הנדה], [ולנדה] Lev 20:21; Num 19:9; Num 19:13; Num 19:20; Num 19:21

נָדַח H5080 Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf / 2ms (52×)

To impel, thrust, banish; in Nifal to be outcast; in Hifil to drive away, seduce, lead astray

A Hebrew verb of forceful displacement, spanning physical expulsion, spiritual seduction, and the sorrowful state of exile. In the Hifil it describes God driving nations into banishment (Jer 16:15) or false prophets leading Israel astray (Deut 13:5). The Nifal passive yields the poignant substantive 'the outcast' — those banished and scattered whom God promises to regather (Mic 4:6; Isa 56:8). Arabic cognates like ʿ(to expel) and ʿ(to lead astray) mirror both the physical and moral dimensions of this root.

1. drive away, banish (Hifil) (19×) Hifil: to drive away, banish, or expel from land or community. Arabic ʿand Korean 쫓아내다 both confirm the exile sense. Used prominently of God scattering Israel among nations (Jer 8:3, 16:15) and of forcible religious expulsion (2 Chr 13:9). The Hifil marks the agent as the cause of banishment. EXPELLING AND PRODUCING en: He-banished-them, I-drove, I-drove-them | es: arrójalos, expulsaron, expulsaros-yo | fr: [הדחתם], chasser, drove-tu | de: [והדחתיו], cast-ihnen-heraus, und-verstossen Deut 30:1; 2Chr 13:9; Ps 5:10; Jer 8:3; Jer 16:15

2. be banished, outcast (Nifal) (18×) Nifal passive: to be banished or made an outcast, frequently as a substantival participle meaning 'the banished one.' Spanish 'desterrado/expulsada' and Arabic طُرِدَ capture this exilic state. Central to restoration promises — God will gather 'the outcasts of Israel' (Isa 56:8). The moving dialogue in 2 Samuel 14:13-14 turns on this very word. EXPELLING AND PRODUCING en: Outcast, a-banished-one, and-the-outcast | es: Expulsada, a-los-desterrados, desterrado | fr: [נדחכם], chasser, et-chasser | de: Verstossene, [והנדחה], [נדחה] Deut 30:4; 2Sam 14:13; 2Sam 14:14; Neh 1:9

3. lead astray, seduce (Hifil) (6×) Hifil with moral force: to lead astray, seduce, or entice away from faithfulness. Arabic ʿ(to lead astray) and Korean 유혹하다 (to seduce) confirm the spiritual dimension. Concentrated in Deuteronomy's warnings against false prophets and idolatrous enticers (Deut 13:5, 10, 13), and in the historical judgment on Jeroboam (2 Kgs 17:21). SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: (and-he-thrust), and-led-astray, and-they-led-astray | es: desviarte, e-hizo-desviarse, lo-sedujo | fr: (and-il-thrust), [וידח], chasser | de: [ותדיחנו], und-sie-fuehrte-astray, und-verstossen Deut 13:5; Deut 13:10; Deut 13:13; 2Kgs 17:21; 2Chr 21:11

4. thrust down, push (Hifil) (2×) Hifil with physical force: to thrust down or push violently, emphasizing bodily impact rather than exile. Korean 떨어뜨리다 (to cause to fall) and Arabic ʿ(to push) highlight the violent kinetic sense. Absalom warns David that Joab will 'thrust' calamity upon Jerusalem (2 Sam 15:14); the psalmist describes enemies pushing to topple him (Ps 62:4). THRUST DOWN TOPPLED
en: and-he-thrust, to-thrust-down | es: para-derribar, y-traiga | fr: et-il-thrust, à-chasser | de: und-er-thrust, zu-thrust-hinab 2Sam 15:14; Ps 62:4

5. be driven, hunted (Hofal/Pual) (2×) Hofal and Pual passives: to be driven or hunted as an intensive passive, emphasizing the helplessness of the victim. Arabic ʿ(hunted, pursued) fits the hunted-animal imagery. Isaiah 8:22 describes those driven into darkness, and Isaiah 13:14 compares Babylon's fall to a hunted gazelle — scattered and defenseless. EXPELLING AND PRODUCING en: driven-away, hunted | es: ahuyentada, expulsado | fr: chasser | de: verstossen, von-verstiess Isa 8:22; Isa 13:14

6. be drawn away, enticed (Nifal) (2×) Nifal with internal seduction: to be drawn away or enticed in one's heart, particularly toward idolatry. Korean 유혹되다 (to be seduced) and Arabic ʿ(to be swept away) capture the passive internal yielding. Both occurrences appear in Deuteronomy's solemn warnings: being drawn to worship sun, moon, and stars (Deut 4:19) or turning from the LORD (Deut 30:17). DECEPTION AND ASTRAY
en: and-you-are-drawn-away, and-you-are-driven | es: y-fueres-arrastrado, y-seas-arrastrado | fr: et-tu-sont-driven, et-tu-sont-tiré-away | de: und-du-sind-drawn-weg, und-du-sind-vertrieben Deut 4:19; Deut 30:17

7. (1×) A Nifal use in Deuteronomy 19:5 describing the axe head that 'slips' or 'is driven' from the handle — an accidental forceful displacement of an object. The Spanish 'y se deslice' (and it slips) and German 'und ist vertrieben' confirm the involuntary mechanical sense, applied to the laws of the cities of refuge. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: and-is-driven | es: y-se-deslice | fr: et-est-driven | de: und-ist-vertrieben Deut 19:5

8. (1×) Qal infinitive in Deuteronomy 20:19 describing the act of wielding or swinging an axe against trees during a siege. Spanish 'blandiendo' (brandishing) captures the implement-handling sense. This is the basic physical meaning of the root — impelling a tool — from which the figurative senses of banishment developed. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: to-swing | es: blandiendo | fr: à-swing | de: zu-swing Deut 20:19

9. (1×) A Nifal participle in Deuteronomy 22:1 applied to a stray animal that has been 'driven away' or has wandered off — extending the exile concept from persons to livestock. Spanish 'extraviados' (strayed) captures the sense. The law requires returning the animal, paralleling the ethical concern for 'outcasts' found elsewhere with this root. STRAYING AND ERRING
en: driven-away | es: extraviados | fr: driven-away | de: vertrieben-weg Deut 22:1

נָדִיב H5081 N-fs (29×)

Noble, prince; willing, generous — a person of high rank, a generous spirit, or noble qualities

The adjective and noun נָדִיב comes from the root נָדַב ('to impel, volunteer') and holds together the ideas of social nobility and inner generosity. As a substantive it names princes and leaders — those who dug the well in the wilderness song (Num 21:18) and sit alongside kings (Ps 113:8). As an adjective it describes the willing-hearted donors of the tabernacle (Exod 35:5, 22) and the 'willing spirit' David prays for (Ps 51:12). Isaiah 32:5-8 plays on both dimensions: the truly noble person devises noble things, while the fool is no longer called נָדִיב.

1. noble, prince (person of rank) (19×) A noble person, prince, or dignitary — used substantively for someone of high social standing or political authority. The Song of the Well celebrates nobles (נְדִיבֵי) who dug with their staffs (Num 21:18), Hannah sings of God seating the poor among princes (1 Sam 2:8), and Job and the Psalms frequently pair נְדִיבִים with kings and rulers (Job 12:21; 34:18; Ps 47:10; 83:12; 107:40; 113:8; 118:9; 146:3). Spanish príncipes and French noble confirm the social-rank reading throughout. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-noble, and-nobles, in-princes | es: a-nobles, en-príncipes, los-nobles, | fr: [נדיבים], dans-noble, de-prince! | de: [ונדיבים], [לנדיב], [נדיב] Num 21:18; 1Sam 2:8; Job 12:21; Job 21:28; Job 34:18

2. willing, generous, noble-hearted (6×) Willing, generous, or noble-hearted — describing a person's inner disposition rather than social rank. The tabernacle call gathers every נְדִיב לֵב, 'willing of heart' (Exod 35:5, 22), David prays for a רוּחַ נְדִיבָה, 'willing spirit' (Ps 51:12), and Hezekiah addresses those whose hearts are willing for temple service (2 Chr 29:31). Spanish generoso/voluntario and French disposé ('disposed, willing') consistently mark the volitional, inward quality that distinguishes this sense from mere rank. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: But-the-noble, willing, willing-of | es: generoso, generoso-de, voluntario | fr: [ונדיב], [נדיב], disposé-de | de: [ונדיב], [נדיב], willig-von Exod 35:5; Exod 35:22; 1Chr 28:21; 2Chr 29:31; Ps 51:12

3. noble things (abstract) (4×) Noble things or noble qualities considered abstractly — the virtues, plans, or deeds that characterize true nobility. Isaiah 32:5 warns that the fool will no longer be called נָדִיב, and 32:8 declares that the noble person devises נְדִיבוֹת ('noble things') and by noble things stands. Song 6:12 contributes the enigmatic עַמִּי נָדִיב, which may mean 'my noble people' in abstract. Spanish noblezas and French noble as an abstract adjective capture this shift from person to quality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: noble, noble-things | es: noble, noblezas | fr: [נדיב], [נדיבות], noble. | de: [נדיב], [נדיבות] Song 6:12; Isa 32:5; Isa 32:8

נְדִיבָה H5082 N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

nobility, honor, dignity (as personal quality or status)

A feminine noun denoting nobility, honor, or dignified status. Job 30:15 uses it in Job's lament about his social collapse: 'My dignity is driven away like the wind.' The term can refer both to noble character and to the honor that comes with social standing. Isaiah 32:8 uses the plural for 'noble things'—the counsel and actions characteristic of a truly noble person. The word captures the convergence of inner nobility and outer honor, the qualities that mark someone as distinguished in character and respected in society.

(1×) Nobility, honor, or dignity—the quality and status of elevated position. Job 30:15 mourns the loss of this: 'my נְדָבָתִי (my dignity/honor) is driven away like wind,' parallel to 'my welfare passes like a cloud.' This is social standing and personal worth simultaneously vanishing. The suffix makes it intensely personal: MY nobility, the honor that defined Job's identity. Spanish 'mi-dignidad' perfectly captures this compound sense of inner worth and outer respect. Job describes catastrophic status loss: from honored elder to social pariah, from dignified counselor to object of mockery. His nobility —both character and reputation—has evaporated, leaving him stripped of everything that constituted his social self. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: my-dignity | es: mi-dignidad | fr: mon-נדבתי-moi | de: [נדבתי] Job 30:15

נָדָן H5083 N-mpc / 2fs (1×)

gifts, presents (from harlot to lovers, ironic economics)

A masculine plural noun meaning gifts or presents, appearing in Ezekiel 16:33 in the same metaphor as אֶתְנָן. The prophet piles up gift-terminology to emphasize the absurdity of Israel's behavior: giving gifts (נְדָנִים) alongside gifts (אֶתְנָן) to foreign lovers. The term likely derives from a root meaning 'to give generously,' making it particularly ironic here—Israel's generosity flows toward those who should be paying her. The plural with possessive suffix (נְדָנַיִךְ, 'your gifts') personalizes the accusation: these are YOUR gifts, evidence of YOUR degradation.

(1×) Gifts, presents—specifically the payments Israel lavishes on foreign nations and gods in her desperate pursuit of alliances. Ezekiel 16:33 accuses Jerusalem of giving 'your gifts (נְדָנַיִךְ)' to lovers who should be paying her. Spanish 'regalos-de-ti' (gifts from you) and the possessive constructions across languages emphasize the source: these are Israel's own gifts, her own resources squandered. The term appears paired with אֶתְנָן in double accusation, creating a crescendo of gift-language that mocks Israel's frantic generosity. This is economic and moral inversion: prostitute becomes patron, the pursued becomes pursuer, covenant bride becomes desperate suitor bribing others to betray her husband. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gifts-your | es: regalos-de-ti | fr: don | de: [נדניך] Ezek 16:33

נָדָן H5084 N-msc / 3fs (1×)

sheath (for sword, container)

A masculine noun meaning sheath—the protective case for a sword. First Chronicles 21:27 describes YHWH commanding the angel of judgment to return his sword 'to its sheath,' signaling the end of the plague on Israel. The term is a Persian loanword found also in Aramaic and later Hebrew, indicating it entered the language during or after the exilic period. The image is striking: God's sword of judgment, drawn and threatening, is resheathed as mercy prevails. The sheath represents cessation of violence, the storage place for weapons during peace.

(1×) The sheath or scabbard that holds a sword when not in use—symbolizing the ending of divine judgment. First Chronicles 21:27 reports that YHWH commanded His angel to return the sword אֶל־נִדָּנָהּ (to its sheath), stopping the plague that had killed 70,000 Israelites. Spanish 'su-vaina' (its sheath) preserves the possessive: the sword returns to ITS proper container. This is more than practical storage—sheathing God's sword represents mercy interrupting judgment, wrath yielding to compassion. The word is likely a Persian loanword, reflecting the late biblical period of Chronicles. The image captures suspended judgment: the weapon remains available but is no longer active. SWORD SHEATH

en: its-sheath | es: su-vaina | fr: [נדנה] | de: [נדנה] 1Chr 21:27

נִדְנָה H5085 N-ms (1×)

sheath, body (Aramaic, possibly 'on account of this')

An Aramaic word of disputed meaning in Daniel 7:15, traditionally understood as 'sheath' but possibly representing a textual corruption. The phrase רוּחִי בְּגוֹ נִדְנָהּ literally reads 'my spirit in the midst of (its) sheath,' interpreted as 'my spirit within my body'—the body as container for the spirit. However, scholars suggest reading בְּגִין דְּנָה ('on account of this') instead, which would mean 'because of this,' making better contextual sense. The uncertainty reflects the challenges of Aramaic vocabulary and textual transmission.

(1×) Traditionally understood as 'sheath' in the sense of container or body, but textually uncertain. Daniel 7:15 reads literally 'my spirit in the midst of נִדְנָהּ,' which has been interpreted as 'my spirit within its sheath (my body).' The image would depict the body as a scabbard containing the spirit, a striking metaphor. However, the expression is strange, leading scholars to propose emending to בְּגִין דְּנָה ('on account of this' / 'because of this'), which would mean Daniel is troubled 'because of this' vision. Spanish 'vaina-de-él' and English 'its-sheath' follow the traditional reading, while acknowledging textual difficulties. Whether sheath or textual error, the passage conveys Daniel's deep disturbance at apocalyptic visions. BODY (PHYSICAL FORM)

en: its-sheath | es: vaina-de-él | fr: base | de: [נדנה] Dan 7:15

נָדַף H5086 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs / 3mse (9×)

Drive away, blow about; to scatter or be scattered like chaff before the wind, depicting divine judgment or helpless dispersal.

Evokes the vivid image of wind scattering chaff, leaves, or stubble – a staple metaphor for divine judgment and the fate of the wicked. Psalm 1:4 sets the classic scene: the ungodly are 'like chaff that the wind drives away.' The verb operates in two voices: the active Qal pictures God or the wind as agent forcefully blowing enemies apart, while the passive Nifal portrays the helpless being driven about. Spanish captures both poles with 'aventar' (to winnow/scatter) and 'ser aventado' (to be winnowed).

1. be driven, blown about (Nifal passive) (6×) Nifal passive: to be driven, blown about, or scattered helplessly, describing chaff, stubble, or leaves carried away by wind. Leviticus 26:36 warns that the disobedient will flee at 'the sound of a driven leaf,' and Isaiah 19:7 applies it to vegetation along the Nile. Psalm 68:2 uses the simile 'as smoke is driven away.' Spanish 'aventada' and 'arrastrada' reflect the passive, powerless quality; French uses 'chasser' in its passive construction. DRIVEN AWAY SWEPT en: as-is-driven-away, be-driven-away, driven | es: Como-es-aventado, arrastrada, aventada | fr: [נדף], comme-chasser, driven | de: [נדף], vertrieben, wie-treibt Lev 26:36; Job 13:25; Ps 68:2; Prov 21:6; Isa 19:7

2. drive away, blow away (Qal active) (3×) Qal active: to drive away or blow something apart, with God or wind as the agent who scatters enemies or chaff. Psalm 1:4 provides the paradigmatic image – the wind actively 'drives away' the ungodly like chaff from the threshing floor. In Job 32:13, Elihu warns Israel not to say 'God will thrust him away.' Spanish 'aventarás' (you will scatter) and 'lo dispersa' (he scatters it) emphasize the forceful, intentional agency behind the dispersal. EXPELLING AND PRODUCING en: drive-them-away, drives-away, will-thrust-him-away | es: aventarás, lo-derrotará, lo-dispersa | fr: chasser, ידכנו | de: [ידכנו], treibt Job 32:13; Ps 1:4; Ps 68:2

נָדַר H5087 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (31×)

To vow, make a solemn promise to God; to pledge an offering, service, or act of devotion, often conditionally.

A verb of solemn religious commitment, nadar describes the act of binding oneself before God with a promise—often conditional ('if you do X, I will do Y'). Jacob vows at Bethel (Gen 28:20), Hannah dedicates her unborn son (1 Sam 1:11), and Jephthah makes his fateful pledge (Judg 11:30). The cognate noun neder (vow) almost always accompanies it in the phrase nadar neder, 'to vow a vow.' Spanish 'hizo voto' and German 'geloben' both reflect the formal, binding quality of this pledge. Wisdom literature cautions: better not to vow than to vow and fail to pay (Eccl 5:4-5).

make a vow (31×) To make a solemn vow or pledge to God, typically involving a conditional promise of offerings, dedication, or service. The classic pattern is nadar neder, 'to vow a vow,' seen in Jacob's Bethel vow (Gen 28:20), Hannah's prayer (1 Sam 1:11), and the Nazirite consecration (Num 6:2). Deuteronomy and Ecclesiastes stress the gravity of fulfillment: a vow once spoken becomes a binding obligation before the Lord. PRAYER AND SUPPLICATION

en: I-vowed, and-they-will-vow-, and-vowed | es: E-hizo-voto, Y-juró, haga-voto | fr: [ונדרו], [נדרנו], elle-vows | de: [ונדרו], [נדרנו], du-geloben Gen 28:20; Gen 31:13; Lev 27:8; Num 6:2; Num 6:21

נֶדֶר H5088 N-mpc / 3fs (60×)

A vow — a solemn pledge made to God, promising sacrifice, service, or devotion in exchange for divine favor.

Neder is the standard Hebrew noun for a vow, a voluntary but binding commitment made before God. Its semantic range runs from the intensely personal — Jacob's midnight vow at Bethel promising a tithe if God will protect him (Gen 28:20) and Hannah's tearful pledge of her unborn son to lifelong Nazirite service (1 Sam 1:11) — to the elaborately regulated: Numbers 30 devotes an entire chapter to the legal validity of vows, specifying when a father or husband may annul a woman's neder. Ecclesiastes 5:4-5 warns that it is better not to vow at all than to vow and fail to pay. Multilingual renderings converge tightly: Spanish voto, French voeu, German Gelubde — all pointing to a single semantic core of solemn religious pledge.

vow or solemn pledge (60×) A solemn vow or pledge made to God, encompassing both the act of promising and the thing promised — whether a sacrifice (Lev 7:16; 22:21), personal consecration as a Nazirite (Num 6:2, 5, 21), or a conditional commitment seeking divine favor (Gen 28:20; 1 Sam 1:11; 2 Sam 15:7-8). Numbers 30 provides detailed legislation on the binding force and annulment of vows. All target languages use a single dedicated term — Spanish voto, French voeu, German Gelubde — confirming its tight semantic unity. PRAYER AND SUPPLICATION

en: a-vow, my-vows, the-vow | es: mis-votos, un-voto, voto | fr: [נדר], faire-un-vœu, un-voeu | de: [נדר], der-Gelübde, ein-Gelübde Gen 28:20; Gen 31:13; Lev 7:16; Lev 22:21; Lev 23:38

נֹדַי H5089 N-ms (1×)

eminence, distinction, prominence (or 'lamentation' per versions)

A noun of uncertain meaning appearing in Ezekiel 7:11, part of a challenging prophetic text about coming judgment. The Masoretic Text reads 'no eminence is among them,' suggesting the loss of any distinction or notable quality. However, ancient versions (Septuagint, Theodotian, Symmachus) read this as 'lamentation,' leading many modern translations to follow that interpretation. The context describes total destruction sweeping away violence, crowd, wealth, and whatever נֹדַי represents—whether that's prominence that distinguished them or mourning that honors them.

(1×) Possibly 'eminence' or 'distinction'—a quality that sets people apart, now absent in judgment. Ezekiel 7:11 declares 'no נֹדַי among them,' meaning either no distinguished person remains or no prominence survives the catastrophe. The ancient versions preferred 'lamentation,' yielding 'no mourning for them,' which fits the context of total destruction. Spanish 'lamento' and French 'lamentation' follow this versional reading. The textual uncertainty reflects prophetic Hebrew at its most compressed and difficult. Whether eminence or lamentation, the point is privation: violence has bred violence, and judgment leaves nothing—neither distinction nor dignity, neither prominent persons nor proper mourning. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: lamentation | es: lamento | fr: lamentation | de: [נה] Ezek 7:11

נָהַג H5090a V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (30×)

Drive or herd livestock; lead or conduct persons; guide with care (Piel); drive away or carry off by force

At its core this verb depicts the action of moving living beings from one place to another by urging, guiding, or compelling them forward. Whether a shepherd driving a flock (Exodus 3:1), a king leading a nation (Psalm 80:1), or God guiding His people with deliberate care (Psalm 78:26), the word spans a spectrum from gentle guidance to forceful removal. The Aramaic cognate emphasizes 'leading,' while the Arabic root stresses 'keeping to the road,' together illuminating a verb that encompasses both the tender hand of the shepherd and the harsh compulsion of the captor.

1. lead, conduct persons (9×) Leading or conducting people on a journey or along a path. Psalm 80:1 invokes God as the one who 'leads Joseph like a flock,' and Ecclesiastes 2:3 uses it for guiding one's own heart. Spanish 'guiaré/conducirá' and French 'conduire' reflect the active, purposeful sense of a leader bringing others along a route, whether physical or figurative. GOING AND LEADING en: I-will-lead-you, You-who-lead, and-he-led | es: Te-guiaré, conducidos, conducirá | fr: Je-te-conduirais,, [וינהג], conduire | de: [אנהגך], [וינהג], [ינהג] Exod 3:1; 1Chr 20:1; 2Chr 25:11; Ps 80:1; Eccl 2:3

2. drive, herd livestock (9×) The concrete pastoral sense of physically driving or herding livestock – flocks, herds, or donkeys – by urging them forward. Genesis 31:18 describes Jacob driving away all his cattle, and 1 Samuel 23:5 tells of David driving off the Philistines' livestock. Spanish 'condujo' and French 'chasse' (drove) capture the energetic, hands-on nature of moving animals en masse. GOING AND LEADING en: and-he-drove, and-he-drove-away, and-let-them-drive-away | es: Conduce, Y-condujo, conduce | fr: [נהגים], chasse, conduire | de: [ינהגו], [נהגים], drive Gen 31:18; 1Sam 23:5; 1Sam 30:20; 1Sam 30:22; 2Sam 6:3

3. guide carefully (Piel) (8×) The Piel intensive stem conveys deliberate, sustained guidance by a figure of authority. God guides the east wind across the sky (Psalm 78:26) and leads His people through the wilderness (Exodus 14:25, where He 'drove' the Egyptian chariot wheels). French 'conduire' and Spanish 'guiaste' (you guided) reflect the careful, authoritative quality that distinguishes this intensified stem from ordinary driving. GOING AND LEADING

en: You-led, and-he-drove, and-he-guided-them | es: conducirá, e-hizo-conducirlos, guiaste | fr: conduire, drives-tu, et-conduire | de: [וינהגם], [נהגת], drives-du Exod 14:25; Deut 4:27; Deut 28:37; Ps 48:14; Ps 78:26

4. drive away, carry off (4×) Driving away by force or carrying off as plunder. Genesis 31:26 has Laban accusing Jacob of 'driving away my daughters like captives,' and 1 Samuel 30:2 describes the Amalekites driving off captives. Lamentations 3:2 extends this to God driving the speaker into darkness. Spanish 'condujeron' and the shift toward compulsion mark this sense as the harsh, hostile end of the verb's semantic range. GOING AND LEADING

en: He-drove, and-drove-away, and-you-drove-away | es: condujo, me-haguiado, y-condujeron | fr: chassa, conduire, et-drove-au-loin | de: [נהג], und-drove-weg, und-weggeführt-hast-du Gen 31:26; Exod 10:13; 1Sam 30:2; Lam 3:2

נָהַג H5090b V-Piel-Prtcpl-fp (1×)

to moan, lament (like doves, Piel)

A verb in the Piel stem meaning to moan or lament, appearing in Nahum 2:7 in a scene of Nineveh's conquest. Captive women are 'moaning like the voice of doves,' beating their breasts in grief. The verb derives from a root suggesting labored breathing or heavy sighing—Arabic cognates point to breathlessness or panting. The Piel participle (מְנַהֲגוֹת) presents continuous action: they keep moaning, an ongoing expression of anguish. The comparison to dove sounds gives the lamentation a particular acoustic quality—soft, repetitive, mournful cooing.

(1×) To moan or lament, specifically with the sound of doves—expressing grief through vocal sounds resembling cooing. Nahum 2:7 describes captive women from Nineveh: מְנַהֲגוֹת כְּקוֹל יוֹנִים (moaning like the voice of doves), while beating their breasts. The participle shows continuous action: they keep moaning, sustained lamentation. Spanish 'gimen' (they groan/moan) captures the vocal expression of grief. The dove comparison adds acoustic texture: not loud wailing but softer, repeated sounds—the gentle but persistent vocalization of bereavement. This is the soundtrack of conquest: defeated women producing mourning sounds like trapped doves, their voices marking Nineveh's humiliation. GOING AND LEADING en: are-moaning | es: gimen | fr: conduire | de: [מנהגות] Nah 2:7

נָהָה H5091 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (3×)

To wail, lament, or mourn with audible grief

(3×) To wail or lament with voiced grief. First Samuel 7:2 records a turning point: 'all the house of Israel lamented after the LORD'—audible longing during the ark's absence. Ezekiel 32:18 commands the prophet: 'wail for the multitude of Egypt and send them down'—prophetic mourning as enacted judgment. Micah 2:4 predicts: 'In that day they shall take up a taunt song against you and wail with bitter lamentation'—enemies mocking with mournful chants. The Aramaic cognate and onomatopoetic quality suggest this is the sound of crying out in grief. MOURNING AND LAMENTING en: and-lamented, and-they-lamented, wail | es: lamenta, y-se-lamentaba, y-se-lamentará | fr: et-ils-se-lamenta, et-se-lamenter, se-lamenter | de: [ונהה], [נהה], und-sie-lamented 1Sam 7:2; Ezek 32:18; Mic 2:4

נְהִי H5092 Conj-w / N-ms (7×)

Wailing, lamentation; a mournful dirge or mourning song, especially in prophetic contexts of divine judgment.

A noun denoting a loud, mournful cry or mourning song, closely associated with prophetic announcements of divine judgment. In Jeremiah 9:10-20, it appears alongside tears (dim'ah) and funeral dirges (qinah), painting a vivid picture of communal grief. Amos 5:16 speaks of professional mourners 'skilled in lamentation' (yod'e nehi), revealing an ancient Near Eastern institution of trained wailing. The Spanish 'endecha' and French 'lamentation' both capture the formalized, ritualized quality of this grief, distinguishing it from spontaneous weeping.

lamentation, wailing (7×) A formalized wailing or lamentation, typically raised in response to prophetic judgment or catastrophic loss. In Jer 9:10 it is 'lifted up' (nasa') over the mountains, paired with weeping (bekhi) and the funeral dirge (qinah). Amos 5:16 references professional mourners who are 'skilled in nehi,' indicating this was not merely spontaneous grief but a structured vocal art. Micah 2:4 uses it as a cognate accusative, intensifying the act of lamenting. Ezekiel 2:10 lists it alongside mourning ('evel) and moaning (misped) on the prophetic scroll. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: a-lament, a-wailing, and-lamentation | es: endecha, lamento, y-lamento | fr: et-lamentation, lamentation | de: Wehklage, [ו]נהי, und-Wehklage Jer 9:10; Jer 9:18; Jer 9:19; Jer 9:20; Jer 31:15

נְהִיָּה H5093 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (1×)

lamentation (noun, probably textual corruption)

A problematic noun in Micah 2:4, part of a phrase that has puzzled interpreters: 'wailing a wailing, it has happened' (נָהֹה נָהִי נֶהְיָה). The form appears to be a feminine noun related to wailing or lamentation. However, the text is likely corrupt—the Septuagint omits it, and scholars suggest various emendations or consider it a dittography (scribal duplication). If original, it intensifies the lamentation language through repetition. The passage describes judgment coming upon land-grabbers, and this phrase represents either emphatic mourning or a textual problem that even ancient translators struggled with.

(1×) Probably a form meaning 'lamentation' in a textually difficult phrase, though possibly corrupted. Micah 2:4 reads נָהֹה נָהִי נֶהְיָה, traditionally translated something like 'with wailing lamentation it has happened' or 'mourning a mourning has occurred'—a piling up of lament-language to emphasize devastating loss. However, the Septuagint omits parts of this phrase, and scholars debate whether נֶהְיָה comes from נהה (wail) or from היה (be/happen). Spanish 'sucedió' (it happened) and English 'it-has-happened' interpret this as a verb (היה), not a lament noun. The underlying issue: prophetic Hebrew at its most compressed, possibly corrupted in transmission, leaving translators with multiple interpretative paths. GOING AND LEADING en: it-has-happened | es: sucedió | fr: lamentation | de: [נהיה] Mic 2:4

H5094 Conj-w / N-msd (1×)

light (Aramaic, Qere reading)

The Qere (read) form of an Aramaic noun meaning 'light,' appearing in Daniel 2:22. The text describes God's attributes: 'He reveals deep and hidden things; He knows what is in darkness, and light dwells with Him.' The Qere reads נְהוֹרָא while the Ketiv has נְהִירָא, representing dialectal or orthographic variants of the same word. Both point to light as a divine quality or possession—light 'dwells' with God, making Him the source and dwelling place of illumination. This is metaphorical light: knowledge, revelation, wisdom that dispels darkness.

(1×) Light (Qere reading)—divine illumination that dwells with God. Daniel 2:22 declares that 'light וְנְהוֹרָא dwells with Him,' parallel to God knowing what is in darkness. Spanish '(y-la-luz)' and French 'et-lumière' both render this as 'and light,' though the Aramaic has the emphatic state. This is not physical light but the light of wisdom and revelation: God sees what is hidden, knows what is dark, possesses light as an inherent attribute. The Qere-Ketiv variation (נְהוֹרָא vs. נְהִירָא) represents dialectal differences in Aramaic, not meaning change. Light dwelling with God makes Him the ultimate source of illumination, the revealer of mysteries, the one who eliminates all darkness. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: (qere:and-light) | es: (y-la-luz) | fr: et-lumière | de: [ונהורא] Dan 2:22

נְהִיר H5094a Conj-w / N-msd (1×)

light (Aramaic, Ketiv reading)

The Ketiv (written) form of an Aramaic noun meaning 'light' in Daniel 2:22. The written text reads נְהִירָא while the traditional reading (Qere) has נְהוֹרָא, both meaning 'light' with slight spelling variation. The Ketiv form may reflect a different Aramaic dialect or orthographic tradition. In context, the verse celebrates God as possessor of light: 'light dwells with Him,' making Him the source of revelation and knowledge. Ancient versions and Targums consistently use forms related to נְהוֹר (light), confirming the meaning despite spelling variation.

(1×) Light (Ketiv reading)—the written form in Daniel 2:22 where God's attributes include that 'light וְנְהִירָא dwells with Him.' The Ketiv reads נְהִירָא while the Qere prefers נְהוֹרָא, representing orthographic or dialectal variants. Translators mark this with '[ketiv:and-light]' notation, acknowledging the textual variation while maintaining the same meaning. Both forms derive from roots meaning 'light' or 'shine,' cognate with Hebrew נהר. This is divine light: the illumination that enables God to 'know what is in darkness,' the revelation that makes hidden things manifest. Whether spelled with yod or waw, the point stands: light is God's native element, His essential attribute as revealer and knower. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: [ketiv:and-light] | es: [y-la-luz] | fr: et-lumière | de: [ונהירא] Dan 2:22

נַהִירוּ H5094b N-fs (2×)

illumination, insight, light; intellectual brilliance and understanding

This Aramaic feminine noun appears in Daniel's description of Daniel's extraordinary wisdom. King Nebuchadnezzar (and later the queen mother) testifies that Daniel possesses illumination—intellectual light beyond normal human understanding—along with wisdom and insight comparable to divine knowledge. The term evokes both literal light and metaphorical enlightenment, suggesting Daniel's mind was illuminated by divine revelation, enabling him to understand mysteries hidden from others.

(2×) Occurs in Daniel 5:11 and 5:14, both describing Daniel's exceptional qualities. The cross-linguistic glosses uniformly render this as 'light' or 'illumination' (English 'light', Spanish 'luz', French 'lumière'), emphasizing the enlightenment motif. In both passages it appears alongside wisdom and understanding, forming a triad of exceptional intellectual-spiritual qualities. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: and-light, light | es: luz, y-luz | fr: et-lumière, lumière | de: [ונהירו], [נהירו] Dan 5:11; Dan 5:14

נָהַל H5095 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (10×)

To lead or guide, especially to a watering place or resting station; to conduct gently at a measured pace.

A verb whose Piel stem means to lead or guide someone along a journey, often with the connotation of bringing them to water or rest. The most beloved instance is Psalm 23:2, 'He leads me beside still waters,' where the shepherding imagery captures the word's core meaning of guiding to refreshment. God leads his redeemed people (Exod 15:13), and leaders conduct captives to safety (2 Chr 28:15). The single Hitpael occurrence (Gen 33:14) adds a nuance of gentleness – Jacob will 'lead on slowly' to accommodate the children and nursing flocks.

1. lead, guide, conduct (9×) Piel: to lead, guide, or conduct someone toward a destination, especially a place of water or rest. The root is connected to Arabic manhal 'watering-place,' illuminating the pastoral background. God guides his people in lovingkindness to his holy habitation (Exod 15:13), leads beside still waters (Ps 23:2), and will guide them to springs of water (Isa 49:10). Spanish 'guiar/conducir' and French renderings consistently capture the directional, purposeful leading. Also used of human leaders conducting others (2 Chr 28:15; 32:22). PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: He-leads, You-guided, and-guide-me | es: guiará, guiaste, los-conducirá | fr: Tu-guided, [וינהלום], [וינהלם] | de: Du-guided, [וינהלום], [וינהלם] Gen 47:17; Exod 15:13; 2Chr 28:15; 2Chr 32:22; Ps 23:2

2. proceed gently, lead on slowly (1×) Hitpael: to proceed gently, to lead on at a slow, accommodating pace. In Genesis 33:14, Jacob tells Esau he will 'lead on slowly' (etenaahalah) at the pace of the children and livestock. The reflexive-iterative Hitpael conveys measured, careful movement rather than vigorous marching. German 'gemachlich-ziehen' ('pull along gently') and Spanish 'conducire' reflect this unhurried nuance, distinguishing it from the more active Piel guidance. GOING AND LEADING

en: will-lead-on-gently | es: conduciré | fr: –conduire-sur-gently | de: will-gemächlich-ziehen Gen 33:14

נַהֲלַל H5096 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (3×)

Nahalal or Nahalol, a Levitical town in the territory of Zebulun

This place-name appears with slight spelling variations (Nahalal in Joshua, Nahalol in Judges) for the same Zebulunite town given to the Levites. Joshua 19:15 lists it among Zebulun's inheritance, and 21:35 assigns it as a Levitical city. Judges 1:30 notes that Zebulun 'did not drive out the inhabitants of Nahalol,' who became forced laborers instead. The site's exact location is unknown, though it was somewhere in Zebulun's territory in Lower Galilee. The LXX shows significant variation in rendering the name.

(3×) Nahalal (or Nahalol), a town in Zebulun's territory. Joshua 19:15 lists cities in Zebulun's inheritance including 'Kattath, Nahalal, Shimron, Idalah, and Bethlehem.' Joshua 21:35 assigns it to the Levites: 'out of the tribe of Zebulun, Jokneam with its pasturelands, Kartah with its pasturelands, Dimnah with its pasturelands, Nahalal with its pasturelands.' Judges 1:30 records incomplete conquest: 'Zebulun did not drive out the inhabitants of Nahalol, so the Canaanites lived among them.' The name appears with variant spellings but identifies the same location. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nahalal, Nahalol, and-Nahalal | es: Nahalal, Nahalol, y-Nahalal | fr: Nahalal, Nahalol, et-Nahalal | de: Nahalal, Nahalol, und-Nahalal Josh 19:15; Josh 21:35; Judg 1:30

נַהֲלֹל H5097 Art / N-mp (1×)

pastures, watering places (where animals/people gather)

A masculine plural noun denoting pastures or watering places where animals gather, appearing in Isaiah 7:19. The prophet describes coming invasion: enemy forces will settle 'in all the pastures,' meaning even agricultural areas will be occupied. The term may specifically indicate watering places where livestock congregate, making them strategic locations. Some scholars (Encyclopedia Biblica) suggest it means 'watering-place' specifically, while others take it more generally as 'pasture.' Either way, it represents vulnerable agricultural infrastructure that invaders will commandeer.

(1×) Pastures or watering places—locations where livestock gather for grazing or water. Isaiah 7:19 warns that invading armies 'will come and settle, all of them, in הַנַּהֲלֹלִים (the pastures/watering places),' meaning they will occupy even rural agricultural areas. The definite article marks these as recognized features of the landscape. Spanish 'los-abrevaderos' specifically chooses 'watering troughs/places,' while English 'the-pastures' goes more generally with grazing areas. The prophetic point: invasion will be total—not just cities but also the open lands where animals graze and water, leaving no corner of the land unoccupied by foreign forces. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-pastures | es: los-abrevaderos | fr: [הנהללים] | de: [הנהללים] Isa 7:19

נָהַם H5098 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3ms (5×)

to growl (as a lion devouring prey) or groan (in suffering or anguish)

A vivid sound-word that captures two distinct registers of deep, guttural vocalization. When predators are in view, it denotes the low, rumbling growl of a lion over its prey — distinct from the roar (shaag) of the initial attack. Isaiah deploys it twice to portray Assyria's terrifying advance (Isa 5:29-30). In human contexts, it shifts to the groan of one in physical or emotional anguish, as in the regretful sufferer of Proverbs 5:11 and the silent mourners of Ezekiel 24:23.

(5×) The deep, sustained growl of a lion while feeding on its kill, distinct from the attacking roar. Spanish 'bramará' and 'ruge' capture the bestial rumble well. Used figuratively of Assyria as a devouring lion in Isaiah 5:29-30 and of a wicked ruler in Proverbs 28:15. ROAR GROAN CRY

en: and-he-growls, and-you-groan, and-you-shall-groan | es: Y-bramará, Y-gimas, que-ruge | fr: [וינהם], et-rugir, et-ונהמת | de: [וינהם], [ונהמת], [ונהמתם] Prov 5:11; Prov 28:15; Isa 5:29; Isa 5:30; Ezek 24:23

נַהַם H5099 N-ms (2×)

growling, roar; the threatening sound made by a lion

This masculine noun captures the menacing growl of a lion, used in Proverbs as a metaphor for royal anger. Both occurrences compare a king's wrath to a lion's roar—the terrifying sound that precedes attack. The imagery would have been vivid to ancient audiences familiar with lions in the region. Just as a lion's growl warns of mortal danger, so a king's displayed anger threatens those who provoke him. The sound itself becomes a symbol of lethal power.

(2×) Found in Proverbs 19:12 and 20:2, both comparing the king's wrath to a lion's growl. The multilingual evidence consistently translates this as 'growling' or 'roar' (English 'growling', Spanish 'rugido'), capturing the intimidating vocalization that signals danger. The parallel structure in both verses equates royal anger with the predator's warning sound. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: growling | es: Rugido | fr: נהם | de: [נהם] Prov 19:12; Prov 20:2

נְהָמָה H5100 Prep-m / N-fsc (2×)

growling, groaning; of sea's roar or heart's anguish

This feminine noun captures intense vocal expression—either the menacing growl of a predator or the deep groaning of human suffering. Isaiah uses it to describe the sea's roar, comparing it to an Assyrian lion's growl (Is 5:30). The psalmist employs it for the anguished groaning of his own heart (Ps 38:9), where it parallels 'roaring.' The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'bramido/gemido,' French 'rugissement') confirms both the animalistic and human emotional dimensions.

(2×) Found only twice in Scripture, this term appears in two vivid metaphors. In Isaiah 5:30, it describes the threatening roar of the sea, likened to an enemy's advance. In Psalm 38:9, it becomes deeply personal—the psalmist's heart-groan of distress. The cross-linguistic pattern ('as-roaring-of' / 'from-anguish-of') shows translators recognized both the physical sound and the emotional weight, capturing a noise that signals danger or deep pain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-roaring-of-, from-anguish-of | es: como-bramido-de, por-gemido-de | fr: [כנהמת], de-rugissement | de: [כנהמת], von-anguish-von Ps 38:8; Isa 5:30

נָהַק H5101 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (2×)

bray, cry out harshly; of wild asses or desperate outcasts

This verb describes a harsh, braying sound—typically of a wild donkey, but extended metaphorically to human cries of desperation. Job uses it first in a rhetorical question about the wild ass braying over grass (Job 6:5), illustrating that complaints arise only when there's genuine need. Later, it describes the pitiful cries of social outcasts living in the wilderness (Job 30:7). The root connections in Hebrew, Aramaic, and Arabic consistently associate this word with the donkey's distinctive harsh call.

(2×) Appearing in Job's discourses, this verb paints a picture of harsh vocal expression. The wild ass doesn't bray when it has green grass; Job uses this natural observation to defend his own complaints (6:5). Then in 30:7, the same verb describes desperate people reduced to animal-like existence, braying among the bushes. The Spanish 'rebuznar' (donkey's bray) and the rhetorical question format ('does it bray?') in translations capture both the literal animal sound and the degrading comparison to human outcries. ROAR GROAN CRY

en: does-bray-, they-bray | es: rebuznan, ¿Acaso-rebuzna | fr: הינהק, ינהקו | de: [הינהק], [ינהקו] Job 6:5; Job 30:7

נָהַר H5102a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (4×)

nahar — to flow, stream toward something; move in flowing abundance

This verb means to flow or stream, always used figuratively in the Hebrew Bible to describe people flowing like water toward a destination. The imagery evokes rivers streaming toward the sea or tributaries converging at a central point. Prophetic texts use it to depict either nations streaming to Jerusalem for worship or Israel streaming toward God's blessings. The word captures movement that is both abundant (like flowing water) and directional (toward a specific goal). It conveys the picture of eager, enthusiastic convergence—people drawn irresistibly to a center of blessing or worship.

(4×) To flow or stream toward, used exclusively in figurative contexts of people moving in abundance toward a destination. Isaiah 2:2 and its parallel Micah 4:1 prophecy that 'all nations shall flow to it (vnaharu elav/alaw)'—streaming to the exalted mountain of YHWH's temple in Jerusalem to learn His ways. Jeremiah 31:12 reverses the direction: restored Israel 'will stream to (vnaharu el) the goodness of YHWH,' flowing toward His blessings of grain, wine, and oil like water toward a fountain. Jeremiah 51:44 describes nations no longer 'streaming to' (yinharu) Bel in Babylon—the flow of worshipers will cease. The verb consistently pictures eager, abundant movement toward a source of worship or blessing. FLOWING WATER shine, be radiant; beam with joy or light

en: and-they-will-stream, and-will-stream, to-it | es: fluirán, y-fluirán | fr: [ונהרו], [ינהרו], et-affluer | de: [ונהרו], [ינהרו] Isa 2:2; Jer 31:12; Jer 51:44; Mic 4:1

נָהַר H5102b Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2fs (2×)

This verbal form depicts radiance or beaming—whether with physical light or with joy. Both occurrences use it figuratively for human emotional expression. In Psalm 34:6 (often emended), those who look to God 'are radiant' with hope. Isaiah 60:5 promises Jerusalem will 'beam with joy' when she sees her children returning. The Aramaic cognates and the broader Semitic root family all relate to daylight and shining, making this a natural metaphor for the brightness that comes from divine blessing.

(2×) This rare verb appears in two prophetic contexts of restoration and hope. Psalm 34:6 (with likely textual adjustment) speaks of faces radiant from looking to God—a visual expression of faith's effect. Isaiah 60:5 uses it for Jerusalem's emotional response to seeing her scattered children return: 'you will see and be radiant.' The French 'couler' (flow) in one translation interestingly captures how radiance seems to stream from the face, while Spanish 'resplandecer' directly expresses the shining quality. The parallelism with seeing in both texts suggests radiance as the visible response to receiving good news. FLOWING WATER

en: and-be-radiant, and-were-radiant | es: y-resplandecerás, y-resplandecieron | fr: [ונהרת], et-couler | de: [ונהרת], und-waren-radiant Ps 34:5; Isa 60:5

נָהָר H5103 N-msd (15×)

River (Aramaic) — the Euphrates or a river in general, used in Ezra for the Trans-Euphrates region and in Daniel for a river of fire

This Aramaic noun (נְהַר) appears almost exclusively in the formulaic phrase 'beyond the River' (עֲבַר נַהֲרָה) in Ezra, designating the Persian satrapy west of the Euphrates — the administrative region that included Judah. The term functions as a political-geographic shorthand: Persian imperial correspondence repeatedly references governors and peoples 'beyond the River' (Ezra 4:10–20; 5:3, 6; 6:6, 13; 7:21, 25). Its sole non-Euphrates occurrence is Daniel 7:10, where a 'river of fire' (נְהַר דִּי נוּר) streams from before the Ancient of Days — a stunning apocalyptic image. Spanish 'Río' and French 'fleuve' capture the grandeur the term carries.

the River (15×) An Aramaic noun for 'river,' used predominantly as a geographic-political designation for the Euphrates in the phrase 'beyond the River' (עֲבַר נַהֲרָה), referring to the Trans-Euphrates satrapy of the Persian Empire. This formulaic usage dominates Ezra's imperial correspondence (Ezra 4:10, 11, 16, 17, 20; 5:3, 6; 6:6, 8, 13; 7:21, 25; 8:36). In Daniel 7:10, the same noun takes on apocalyptic force as a 'river of fire' (נְהַר דִּי נוּר) flowing from the divine throne. German 'Strom' and Spanish 'Río' reflect the word's sense of a major, defining waterway. RIVERS AND STREAMS
en: river-of, the-River | es: Naharáh, Río, el-río | fr: fleuve, rivière | de: Strom Ezra 4:10; Ezra 4:11; Ezra 4:16; Ezra 4:17; Ezra 4:20

נְהַר H5104 Conj-w (119×)
River, stream — a perennial flowing watercourse; often 'the River' (the Euphrates) or poetic cosmic floods Nahar denotes a substantial, continuously flowing watercourse — distinguished from nachal (seasonal wadi) by its permanence. When used with the article ('the River') it typically means the Euphrates, the great river that defined the northeastern boundary of the promised land (Gen 15:18; Deut 1:7; Josh 24:2). The compound Aram Naharayim ('Aram of the two rivers,' Gen 24:10) gives us Mesopotamia. In poetry, nahar takes on cosmic overtones: rivers that clap their hands (Ps 98:8), primordial floods that lift their voice against God (Ps 93:3), and eschatological streams flowing from the temple (Ezek 47:1-12). Spanish 'rio,' French 'fleuve,' and German 'Strom' capture the sense of a major watercourse.

river, stream (119×) A perennial river or major stream, used for specific watercourses such as the Euphrates ('the River,' Gen 15:18; Deut 1:7), the rivers of Eden (Gen 2:10-14), and the Nile region streams (Isa 19:6). In poetic and prophetic texts nahar takes on cosmological and eschatological dimensions — primordial floods that challenge God's sovereignty (Ps 93:3), rivers that rejoice at his coming (Ps 98:8), and healing waters flowing from the future temple (Ezek 47:1-12). Spanish 'rio,' French 'fleuve,' and German 'Strom' convey the sense of a major permanent watercourse, distinct from the seasonal wadi (nachal). RIVERS AND STREAMS
en: rivers, the-River, the-floods | es: Ríos, el-río, los-ríos | fr: fleuve, le-Fleuve, le-River | de: Stroeme, Strom, am-Strom Gen 31:21; Gen 36:37; Exod 23:31; Num 22:5; Deut 1:7

נְהָרָה H5105 N-fs (1×)
light, daylight (poetic, opposite of darkness)
A feminine noun denoting light or daylight, appearing in Job 3:4 in Job's curse on his birth day. He wishes that day would remain in darkness: 'let not light shine upon it.' The term is equivalent to Aramaic נְהוֹרָא and relates to Hebrew נהר ('shine'). Job uses light-darkness opposition to curse his existence: may that day be erased from the calendar, never illuminated, swallowed by perpetual darkness. Light represents existence, blessing, divine favor—all of which Job wishes removed from his birth day.

(1×) Light, daylight—the illumination that marks day as opposed to darkness. Job 3:4 curses his birth day: 'let that day be darkness; let not God seek it from above, let not נְהָרָה shine upon it.' This is light as positive phenomenon, the glow that marks days as real and recognized. Job wants his birthday deleted from reality—let darkness claim it, let no light ever touch it. Spanish 'luz' and French simply transliterate, acknowledging the poetic term. This is cosmological light: the brightness that makes days count, that brings them into being. By cursing his day to remain unlighted, Job curses his entry into existence itself. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION
en: light | es: luz | fr: נהרה | de: Strom Job 3:4

נוּא H5106 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp / Pn (9×)
Hinder, forbid, discourage; to restrain someone from fulfilling a vow, frustrate a plan, or dishearten a community from action.
Covers two related but distinct kinds of obstruction: legal restraint and psychological discouragement. In the vow legislation of Numbers 30, a father or husband may 'forbid' a woman's oath, effectively annulling it by withholding consent on the day he hears it. But in Numbers 32:7-9 the same root describes the devastating psychological effect of the spies' evil report – they 'discouraged the heart' of Israel from entering the Promised Land. Psalm 33:10 extends the word to cosmic scope: the LORD 'frustrates' the plans of the nations.

1. hinder, forbid, restrain (6×) To hinder, forbid, or restrain, especially in the legal context of annulling vows. Numbers 30:5-11 establishes that a father or husband who 'forbids' (heni) on the day he hears a woman's vow effectively nullifies it before God. Psalm 33:10 broadens the sense to divine frustration of nations' schemes. Spanish 'prohibió/deshizo' and French 'interdit/dissuader' both capture the authoritative act of blocking or overriding another's intention. NETS AND SNARES
en: He-thwarts, forbade, forbids | es: deshizo, prohibió, prohíba | fr: dissuader, interdit, le-dissuader | de: er-thwarts, forbids, lass-refuse Num 30:5; Num 30:8; Num 30:11; Ps 33:10

2. discourage, dishearten (3×) To discourage or dishearten, breaking a group's resolve and willingness to act. Numbers 32:7-9 uses this specifically of the tribal leaders who 'discourage the heart of the children of Israel' from crossing into Canaan, recalling the catastrophic faithlessness triggered by the spies' report. Spanish 'desalentaréis' (you will dishearten) directly conveys the emotional devastation – not merely legal prevention but the sapping of courage and corporate will. DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: -, and-discouraged, do-you-discourage | es: desalentaréis, y-desalentaron | fr: -, et-discouraged, faire-tu-discourage | de: -, tun-du-discourage, und-discouraged Num 32:7; Num 32:9

נוּב H5107 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (4×)
nub — to bear fruit, produce, flourish; bring forth results
This poetic verb means to bear fruit, produce, or flourish, appearing exclusively in wisdom and worship literature. The imagery draws from fruit trees bearing their harvest, applied figuratively to righteous people producing wisdom, the wicked producing wealth, or God causing young people to flourish. The term emphasizes fruitfulness and productivity as visible results of an underlying condition—righteousness produces wisdom as naturally as a healthy tree produces fruit. The Polel stem intensifies the idea to 'cause to flourish' or 'make to bear abundant fruit.'

(4×) To bear fruit, produce, or flourish, used exclusively in figurative contexts. Proverbs 10:31 declares 'the mouth of the righteous bears the fruit of (yanub) wisdom,' picturing wise speech as natural productivity of a righteous life. Psalm 92:14 promises the righteous 'will still bear fruit (yenubun) in old age,' remaining productive despite advanced years. Psalm 62:10 warns 'if wealth bears fruit (yanub, increases), do not set your heart on it'—prosperity shouldn't capture affections. Zechariah 9:17 uses the Polel: 'grain will make young men flourish (yenobev), and new wine the young women'—God's blessing will cause the next generation to thrive abundantly. The verb thus depicts fruitful productivity arising from an inner source. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: brings-forth, it-increases, they-will-bear-fruit | es: aumenta, brota, darán-fruto | fr: porter-du-fruit, יְנוּב | de: [יְנוּב], [יְנוּבֻבוּ], es-increases Ps 62:10; Ps 92:14; Prov 10:31; Zech 9:17

H5108 N-ms (2×)
fruit (ketiv variant); produce of lips
This noun appears as a ketiv (written) variant for 'fruit,' occurring in Isaiah 57:19's famous phrase about creating 'fruit of the lips'—that is, praise or speech. The passage promises peace to those far and near. Most translations follow the qere (read) form, but the ketiv preserves an alternate spelling tradition. The cross-linguistic evidence shows translators consistently rendered it as 'fruit,' particularly fruit associated with speech or produce.

(2×) Both occurrences are actually the same reference (Is 57:19), appearing twice due to textual variants. The context is God's promise to create 'fruit of the lips' (i.e., praise, thanksgiving) for both distant and near. This connects fruit imagery to verbal expression, a common biblical metaphor where speech is harvest. The notations [[נוב]] in translations indicate the relationship to other fruiting/budding vocabulary, showing translators recognized this as part of the semantic field of produce and growth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv:fruit], fruit-of | es: [Ketiv], fruto-de | fr: [(ניב)], [[נוב]] | de: [(ניב)], [[נוב]] Isa 57:19

נוֹב H5108a

fruit (especially 'fruit of lips'; Ketiv in Isaiah 57:19 for Qere נִיב)

This noun appears in Isaiah 57:19 (Ketiv) meaning 'fruit,' specifically 'fruit of lips'—a metaphor for speech, praise, or thanksgiving. The Qere reads נִיב, but both forms convey the same sense: words as produce of the mouth. Hebrews 13:15 later picks up this imagery: 'the fruit of lips that confess his name.' The agricultural metaphor for human speech—lips as trees bearing fruit—pervades biblical poetry, linking verbal expression to the generative, life-giving processes of creation.

נִיב H5108b Conj-w / N-msc / 3ms (1×)

fruit, produce (of table/altar, what is yielded)

A masculine noun meaning fruit or produce, appearing in Malachi 1:12 in a complaint about defiled offerings. The people profane God's table, saying 'its fruit (נִיבוֹ), its food, is contemptible.' Here 'fruit' functions as a metonymy for the offerings placed on God's altar—the produce or yield that the altar generates. The parallel term 'food' (אָכְלוֹ) clarifies that this refers to sacrificial offerings, which represent the 'fruit' or product of the worship system. The prophet condemns treating sacred offerings as worthless produce.

(1×) Fruit or produce—specifically the offerings that represent the 'yield' of God's altar. Malachi 1:12 records the people's contemptuous attitude: 'its fruit וְנִיבוֹ (and its fruit/produce), its food, is despised.' The possessive suffix links this fruit to 'the Lord's table' (the altar), making offerings the altar's characteristic product. Spanish 'y-fruto-suyo' (and its fruit) and French 'et-fruit' both preserve this possessive sense. This is culinary-agricultural language applied to worship: what the altar 'produces' (receives as sacrifice) is being treated as contemptible food rather than sacred gift. The fruit metaphor makes offerings into produce, and the people's attitude reduces sacred meals to worthless leftovers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-fruit | es: y-fruto-suyo | fr: et-fruit | de: [וניבו] Mal 1:12

נוֹבַי H5109 N-proper-ms (2×)

Nebai/Nobai; name of a chief of the people under Nehemiah

This proper name designates one of the chiefs who sealed the covenant in Nehemiah's time (Neh 10:20). The name appears with textual variation between ketiv and qere readings—'Nobai' versus 'Nebai'—reflecting different manuscript traditions. The Greek translations (Septuagint) render it as 'Nobai,' while other versions preserve different vocalizations. This type of minor spelling variation was common in ancient manuscripts, particularly for less prominent personal names.

(2×) This individual appears among the leaders who committed to the covenant renewal in post-exilic Jerusalem (Neh 10:19 in some versifications). The double listing in translations reflects ketiv/qere variants—the tension between how the name was written and how it was traditionally read aloud. Palmyrene inscriptions preserve similar name forms, suggesting this may have been a recognizable name pattern in the broader Aramaic-speaking world. The multiple spellings across translations (Nebai, Nobai, Nibai) mirror the ancient textual diversity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nebai, [ketiv] | es: (Nebai), [Nobai] | fr: [נובי], [ניבי] | de: [(ניבי)], [[נובי]] Neh 10:19

נוּד H5110 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (25×)

To move to and fro, wander; to show grief or sympathy by shaking, nodding, or moaning; causatively, to drive away.

Nud is a verb that lives in the body — its semantic range connects the restless physical motion of a fugitive, the swaying of a reed in the wind, and the visible gestures of mourning: shaking the head, rocking back and forth in grief, moaning aloud. Cain's punishment of being a 'wanderer' (nad, Gen 4:12, 14) and Job's friends coming 'to show sympathy' (Job 2:11) seem far apart in English, but the Hebrew holds them together through the image of agitated, unsettled movement. The multilingual evidence confirms this bodily core: Spanish splits between andar-errante ('wander aimlessly') and condolerse/lamentarse ('grieve/lament'), while French secouer ('shake') surfaces across nearly every sense, preserving the kinetic thread that English translations obscure.

1. wander, flee, be fugitive (9×) Qal of physical displacement: to wander, flee, be a fugitive, moving about without fixed direction or home. This is the sense of Cain's curse — 'a wanderer and a fugitive you shall be on the earth' (Gen 4:12, 14). The participle nad becomes virtually a title for the displaced. Spanish andarás-errante ('you shall wander aimlessly') and French errer ('to roam') both capture the purposeless, driven quality. Ps 11:1 and Prov 26:2 extend the image to birds fleeing, and Jer 4:1 and 49:30 use it of nations scattering before invaders. Nine occurrences form a tight cluster around involuntary, directionless movement. WANDERING AND GRIEVING en: [ketiv], and-fugitive, flee | es: [huye], andarás-errante, han-huido | fr: errer, et-fugitive, secouer | de: [ketiv], [לנוד], fliehen Gen 4:12; Gen 4:14; Ps 11:1; Prov 26:2

2. grieve, lament, show sympathy (9×) Qal of emotional response: to grieve, lament, show sympathy or condolence for another person's suffering. Job's three friends came 'to show him sympathy and comfort him' (Job 2:11); after his restoration, relatives 'showed him sympathy' (Job 42:11). The psalmist waited for someone to 'show sympathy' but found none (Ps 69:20). Spanish compadecerse ('to feel compassion') and condolerse ('to grieve with') capture the empathetic dimension. The connection to sense 1 is kinesthetic: mourners sway, rock, and move their bodies in expressions of grief, so the 'moving to and fro' of the wanderer becomes the 'moving to and fro' of the mourner. WANDERING AND GRIEVING

en: and-they-showed-sympathy, for-sympathy, grieve | es: compadecerse, condoleos, os-lamentéis | fr: et-וינדו, secouer, à-errer | de: [וינדו], [ינוד], [לנוד] Job 2:11; Job 42:11; Ps 69:20; Isa 51:19; Jer 15:5

3. cause to wander, shake, drive away (3×) Hifil causative: to cause to wander, shake, or drive away — the active, transitive counterpart of senses 1 and 4. God will shake Israel like a reed (1 Kgs 14:15 belongs here conceptually through the Hifil framework); the psalmist prays that the 'hand of the wicked' not 'drive me away' (Ps 36:11); and heads are wagged at ruined cities (Jer 18:16). Spanish hacer-vagar ('cause to wander') and German schuetteln ('shake') both reflect the causative force. Only three occurrences, but they confirm the verb's core meaning of agitated motion by showing what it looks like when someone imposes that motion on another. WANDERING AND GRIEVING

en: and-will-shake, let-drive-me-away, to-wander | es: a-hacer-vagar, me-mueva, y-moverá | fr: errer, et-secouer, à-wander | de: lass-drive-mich-weg, und-schuetteln, zu-wander 2Kgs 21:8; Ps 36:11; Jer 18:16

4. sway, shake, totter (2×) Qal/Hitpael of physical oscillation: to sway, shake, or totter, describing unsteady back-and-forth movement of objects or bodies. Israel will be shaken 'as a reed is shaken in the water' (1 Kgs 14:15), and the earth 'sways like a drunkard' (Isa 24:20). Spanish bambolearse ('to wobble/sway') and the English 'sway' both zero in on the oscillating, pendulum-like quality. This is arguably the most basic physical sense of the root, from which both wandering and mourning gestures derive metaphorically. SHAKING AND TOTTERING

en: and-sways, sways | es: se-mece, y-se-bambolea | fr: et-secouer, sways | de: sways, und-schuetteln 1Kgs 14:15; Isa 24:20

5. moan, bemoan oneself (1×) Hitpael reflexive/intensive: to moan or bemoan oneself in personal lamentation, expressing intense inner grief turned inward. A single occurrence in Jer 31:18, where Ephraim is overheard 'moaning' in self-directed sorrow. Spanish lamentándose and the reflexive Hitpael morphology both confirm the inward-facing quality: not sympathy for another (sense 2) but the subject's own rocking, groaning grief. French secouer ('shake') still surfaces, maintaining the kinetic undertone. WANDERING AND GRIEVING
en: moaning | es: lamentándose | fr: secouer | de: schuetteln Jer 31:18

6. shake the head (1×) Hitpael as gesture of derision: to shake or wag the head at someone in mockery, pity, or astonishment. In Jer 48:27 the taunt against Moab asks whether Israel was 'shaken at' — i.e., mocked with a head-shake. Spanish menear-la-cabeza ('wag the head') and German schuetteln ('shake') both identify the gesture precisely. Though only one occurrence, the cross-lingual evidence consistently renders it as a visible physical gesture of contempt, distinguishing it from the sympathetic movement of sense 2. WANDERING AND GRIEVING en: you-shake-your-head | es: meneas-la-cabeza | fr: secouer | de: schuetteln Jer 48:27

נוּד H5111 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (1×)
to flee, escape (Aramaic, from danger/presence)
An Aramaic verb meaning to flee or escape, related to Hebrew נוּד and Aramaic נְדַד. Daniel 4:14 uses it in Nebuchadnezzar's dream: a voice commands beasts to 'flee from beneath' the great tree before it is cut down. The imperfect form תְּנַדָּ expresses command or permission: 'let them flee.' The verb captures urgent departure from danger—animals sensing threat and running to safety. This is instinctive flight, the natural response to approaching catastrophe that even beasts recognize.

(1×) To flee or escape from danger—specifically animals fleeing from beneath the great tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. Daniel 4:14 records the heavenly command: 'let the beasts תְּנַדָּ מִן (flee from) beneath it, and the birds from its branches,' clearing the area before judgment falls. Spanish 'huyan' (let them flee/may they flee) captures the jussive/command sense. This is urgent evacuation: the tree (representing the king) is about to be cut down, and all who found shelter there must escape. The verb emphasizes the instinctive self-preservation of creatures sensing approaching doom, fleeing protection that has become dangerous. FLEEING AND ESCAPING
en: let-flee | es: huyan | fr: fuir | de: [תְּנַדָּ] Dan 4:14

נוֹד H5112 N-msc / 1cs (1×)
wandering, exile (fig. of homeless restlessness)
A masculine noun meaning wandering or homeless exile, appearing in Psalm 56:8 where the psalmist appeals to God: 'You have kept count of my wanderings.' The term captures rootless movement, the restless instability of someone without home or settled place. Related to the verb נוּד (wander, flee), the noun makes wandering into a condition rather than just an action. God's attention to the psalmist's נֹדִי suggests not just tracking movements but caring about his homeless state. The parallel with 'put my tears in Your bottle' emphasizes God's attentive compassion toward suffering.

(1×) Wandering, homeless roving—the condition of one without settled place or security. Psalm 56:8 appeals to divine care: 'You number my נֹדִי (my wandering/my exile),' meaning God tracks every restless movement of the fugitive psalmist. Spanish 'mi-vagar' (my wandering/roaming) and French 'errance' (wandering) both catch this sense of unsettled movement. This is more than physical travel—it's existential homelessness, the fugitive state of someone hunted and displaced. The possessive suffix personalizes it: MY wandering, the specific path of MY restless flight. That God 'numbers' this wandering suggests both omniscient tracking and compassionate attention—God knows every step of exile. WANDERING AND GRIEVING en: my-wandering | es: mi-vagar | fr: errance | de: mein-wandering Ps 56:8

נֹד H5113 N-proper-fs (1×)
Nod — the land east of Eden where Cain wandered as a fugitive after killing Abel Nod appears only once in Scripture, naming the region where Cain settled after murdering his brother. The Hebrew root suggests wandering or exile, making this a fitting designation for the fugitive's new home. Genesis describes it as east of Eden, a geographical marker that also carries theological weight—movement away from God's presence into a land defined by restlessness.

(1×) The proper name of a territory mentioned in Genesis 4:16, literally 'the land of Nod,' where Cain dwelt after being banished. The name itself resonates with the verb for wandering (נוּד), creating a wordplay: the wanderer goes to the land of Wandering. Ancient versions struggled with whether to treat this as a place name or translate it descriptively as 'land of fugitives.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nod | es: Nod | fr: Nod | de: Nod Gen 4:16

נוֹדָב H5114 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Nodab — an Arab tribe defeated by the Transjordanian Israelite tribes, mentioned alongside Jetur and Naphish Nodab appears in a brief catalogue of nomadic peoples conquered by the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh. Chronicles links them with descendants of Ishmael, placing them within the broader Arabian tribal network that Israel encountered east of the Jordan. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though some connect it to the root for nobility or willing offering.

(1×) A gentile designation (people group name) found in 1 Chronicles 5:19, identifying one of three Arab tribes defeated by Israelite forces. The context pairs Nodab with Jetur and Naphish, both attested elsewhere as Ishmaelite clans, suggesting a similar origin. The conjunction prefix in Hebrew ('and-Nodab') shows this is part of a military victory list. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Nodav | es: y-Nodab | fr: [ונודב] | de: [ונודב] 1Chr 5:19

נָוָה H5115a Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjImperf-1cs / 3ms (1×)
beautify, glorify, adorn with praise — to honor God through worship and exaltation
This rare verb appears in Moses' victory song at the Red Sea, where Israel responds to divine deliverance with worship. The root connects to beauty and comeliness, suggesting that true praise adorns its object. The parallel with 'exalt' indicates this is no mere aesthetic appreciation but active glorification through word and deed. Later Jewish tradition developed this root further in the language of beautifying commandments.

(1×) The Hiphil form (causative) meaning 'I will beautify/adorn him,' used in Exodus 15:2 with God as the direct object. Moses declares his intent to glorify YHWH through praise, paralleled by 'I will exalt him.' The verb's aesthetic roots (related to נָאֲוָה 'comely, beautiful') suggest worship that honors God by presenting him in his true splendor. Ancient versions render this as 'glorify' (Greek δοξάσω, Latin glorificabo), capturing the theological sense. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT
en: and-I-will-praise-Him | es: y-lo-glorificaré | fr: et-Je—louer-Lui | de: und-ich-wird-loben-Ihn Exod 15:2

נָוָה H5115b V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)
abide, dwell, remain — to settle or remain in a place (denominative from 'dwelling') This verb appears once in Habakkuk's description of the arrogant man whose appetite is insatiable. The text says such a person 'will not abide'—cannot find rest or contentment. The verb derives from the noun for dwelling or pasture, creating a verbal form that means to settle down or remain. The textual tradition shows uncertainty here, with various ancient scholars proposing alternative readings.

(1×) The Qal imperfect 'he will not abide' in Habakkuk 2:5, describing the restless nature of the proud and greedy. Formed from the noun נָוֶה (dwelling, pasture), this denominative verb conveys inability to settle or find rest. The context contrasts with the righteous who live by faithfulness. Some ancient interpreters proposed emendations (the Syriac read 'be at rest,' others suggested 'be satisfied'), reflecting the difficulty of this rare verbal form. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: will-abide | es: descansa | fr: habiter | de: [ינוה] Hab 2:5

נָוֶה H5116a N-msc / 3ms (34×)

Dwelling-place, habitation; pasture or meadow for flocks; fold or resting-place where animals lie down in safety.

The Hebrew noun naveh evokes the pastoral world at the heart of Israel's self-understanding — a place where sheep graze, shepherds dwell, and God's people find rest. Rooted in the imagery of settled habitation, it spans from God's holy dwelling (Exod 15:13, 'You guided them to Your holy habitation') to the open meadows where flocks feed (Isa 65:10) to the sheltered fold where lambs lie down secure (Jer 23:3). Spanish distinguishes morada (dwelling) from pastizal (pasture) and majada (fold), and German shifts between Wohnung, Weide, and Hurde, revealing that what Hebrew collapses into a single pastoral term, most languages must split along the axis of shelter versus openness. The prophets especially exploit this word's resonance: God as shepherd restoring Israel to their naveh is simultaneously a return to homeland, to green pasture, and to safety.

1. dwelling-place, habitation (22×) A settled dwelling-place or habitation for people or for God, emphasizing an established, often beautiful home or abode. This dominant sense (22 occurrences) spans from God's holy habitation in the Song of the Sea (Exod 15:13) to Job's hope that God will restore the habitation of his righteousness (Job 8:6). It also encompasses the prophetic vision of Jerusalem or Zion as God's dwelling (Jer 25:30; 31:23; 50:7). Spanish morada, French habitation, and German Wohnung converge on residential permanence, while Hindi निवास and Arabic مسكن confirm the sense of settled, secure dwelling. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-habitation, a-haunt, a-pasture-of | es: a-la-morada-del, en-la-morada, en-morada-de | fr: et-pâturage, habitation-de, pâturage | de: Weide, [ונוה], [לנוה] Exod 15:13; 2Sam 15:25; Job 5:3; Job 5:24; Job 8:6

2. pasture, meadow (7×) Open pasture or green meadow where flocks graze freely, highlighting the pastoral landscape of feeding rather than enclosure. Seven occurrences focus on the shepherd-and-flock imagery: God took David from the naveh — the sheep pastures — to shepherd Israel (2 Sam 7:8; 1 Chr 17:7), and Sharon shall become a pasture for flocks (Isa 65:10). Spanish pastizal/pradera, French paturage, and German Weide all deploy dedicated grazing vocabulary. The prophetic passages in Jeremiah 49:20 and 50:19, 45 picture restoration as return to lush pastureland, interweaving national hope with pastoral imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-pasture-for, his-pasture, in-a-meadow | es: el-pastizal, en-pradera, para-majada-de- | fr: [הנוה], demeure, le-pasture | de: Weide, [בנוה], [נות] 2Sam 7:8; 1Chr 17:7; Isa 65:10; Jer 49:20; Jer 50:19

3. fold, resting-place for flocks (5×) A fold or sheltered resting-place where flocks lie down in protected safety, distinguished from open pasture by the connotation of bounded enclosure and secure rest. Five occurrences cluster in prophetic contexts: God will bring the scattered sheep back to their fold (Jer 23:3), Ammon's land will become a resting-place for camels (Ezek 25:5), and the restored people will find good pasturage and lie down on good fold (Ezek 34:14). Spanish majada, French bergerie, and German Hurde occasionally appear alongside the more general 'pasture' terms, while the parallel vocabulary in these passages — rabats (lie down), mireh (grazing-place) — confirms a sense of enclosed, secure rest distinct from open meadow. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-pasture-for-, his-fold, in-pasture-of | es: como-pastizal-de, en-morada, morada-de-ellas | fr: demeure, pâturage | de: Weide Jer 23:3; Jer 25:30; Ezek 25:5; Ezek 34:14

נָוָה H5116b Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

she who stays at home, dwelling at home — describing women who remain in the household

This unusual form appears in Psalm 68, a victory hymn celebrating God's triumph and the distribution of spoils. The phrase describes women who remained at home while men went to battle, a common ancient pattern. The construct form links dwelling and house, creating a participial phrase that became proverbial for the homefront.

(1×) An adjectival participle in construct form, literally 'dwelling of house' or 'the one abiding at home,' found in Psalm 68:12. The feminine form refers to women who stayed in the household while warriors went to battle. This became a way to speak of domestic roles in contrast to military campaigns. The construction uses the root נָוָה (dwell, abide) in participial form attached to 'house,' creating a compound designation. SITTING AND DWELLING

en: and-she-who-remains-at | es: y-la-que-mora | fr: et-demeure | de: und-sie-der-bleibt-bei Ps 68:12

נוּחַ H5117 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-1cs (67×)

To rest, settle, be at ease; in Hifil, to give rest or set down; of persons resting from labor, the Spirit alighting, or God granting relief.

Nuach is the verb behind Noah's name and one of the Bible's great rest-words. In its Qal stem it describes the cessation of toil — God resting on the seventh day (Exod 20:11), the ox and donkey resting on the Sabbath (Exod 23:12) — but also the physical settling of objects and spirits: the ark coming to rest on Ararat (Gen 8:4), the Spirit of the LORD resting upon the Messiah (Isa 11:2). The Hifil is even richer, splitting into two distinct senses that multilingual evidence sharply distinguishes: granting relief from enemies (Arabic araaha 'to give rest,' the causative of rest) and physically setting something down in a location (Arabic anzala 'to lower, deposit'). The theological arc from creation-rest to promised-land rest to messianic rest runs through this single root.

1. Hifil: give rest, grant relief (27×) Hifil causative: to give rest or grant relief, especially God granting his people respite from enemies, war, or oppression. This is the covenantal rest-promise that structures Deuteronomy's theology of the land (Deut 3:20; 12:10; 25:19) and echoes through Joshua and Chronicles. Arabic araaha (Form IV causative of r-w-h) mirrors the Hebrew causative morphology exactly, while Spanish dar descanso and German Ruhe geben both select 'give rest' phrasing. The 27 occurrences cluster heavily in the Deuteronomistic history, marking this as a theologically loaded promise-word. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: I-have-caused-to-rest, and-He-gave-rest, and-I-gave-rest | es: Y-haré-reposar, dio-descanso, dio-reposo | fr: a-donné-se-reposer, donna-reste, donna-se-reposer | de: [וניחך], er-liess-ruhen, gab-Ruhe Exod 33:14; Deut 3:20; Deut 12:10; Deut 25:19; Josh 1:13

2. Qal: rest from labor (21×) Qal intransitive: to rest from labor, cease from work, find repose. The creation-Sabbath sense par excellence — God rested on the seventh day (Exod 20:11), and the command extends to servants, animals, and aliens (Exod 23:12; Deut 5:14). Arabic istaraha (Form X reflexive, 'to seek and find rest') distinguishes this self-directed repose from the causative granting of sense 1, and Spanish descansar versus dar descanso confirms the same boundary. Job's anguished 'I am not at ease, nor am I quiet, nor do I rest' (Job 3:26) uses this sense to express the absence of the peace that should attend life. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: I-rested, I-should-wait-quietly, and-rest | es: Descansa, al-reposar, descansan | fr: et-faire-reposer, et-ils-rested, et-reposer | de: [אנוח], [ונוח], [ינוח] Exod 20:11; Exod 23:12; Deut 5:14; Josh 3:13; 1Sam 25:9

3. Qal: settle, alight, come to rest (of objects/spirit) (11×) Qal: to settle, alight, come to rest in a place — of objects, animals, or the Spirit rather than personal repose. The ark settles on Ararat (Gen 8:4), locusts settle on the land (Exod 10:14), and most strikingly, the Spirit of the LORD rests upon the seventy elders (Num 11:25-26) and upon the coming Branch (Isa 11:2). Arabic istaqarra ('to become stationary, settle') and German ruhen-lassen ('to let rest upon') both select spatial-placement vocabulary distinct from personal rest, confirming this as a separate sense. The 11 occurrences span narrative, prophetic, and wisdom literature. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: and-rested, and-they-will-rest, and-when-resting-it | es: Reposó, Se-ha-aliado, Y-al-reposar | fr: et-faire-reposer, et-quand-resting-cela, et-se-reposa | de: als-ruhte, rests, ruhen-lassen Gen 8:4; Exod 10:14; Num 10:36; Num 11:25; Num 11:26

4. Hifil: set down, deposit, lay in place (6×) Hifil with a physical-placement meaning: to set down, deposit, or lay something in a specific location. Distinct from sense 1's abstract 'grant rest,' this is concrete positioning — Ezekiel is set down in a valley of dry bones (Ezek 37:1), then on a high mountain (Ezek 40:2); Moses lowers his hands and Amalek prevails (Exod 17:11). Arabic anzala (Form IV of n-z-l, 'to send down, set down') and Spanish bajar ('to lower') diverge sharply from the relief/rest vocabulary of sense 1, marking a clear semantic boundary even within the same stem. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: and-I-shall-rest, and-he-set-me, and-set-me-down | es: bajaba, hará-reposar, para-hacer-reposar | fr: et-reposer, faire-reposer, lowered | de: lowered, ruhen-lassen, und-ruhen-lassen Exod 17:11; Isa 30:32; Ezek 5:13; Ezek 37:1; Ezek 40:2

5. (1×) A single difficult occurrence at Lam 5:5 where the sense may be 'there is no rest for us' in the context of exhaustion under persecution. The verse describes being pursued with yokes on necks and no respite. English 'rest,' Spanish descanso, and French reposer all treat this as the basic rest sense, but its isolation likely reflects either a rare Hofal passive or an unusual syntactic construction rather than a genuinely distinct meaning. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: rest | es: hay-descanso | fr: faire-reposer | de: [הונח] Lam 5:5

6. (1×) A parsing anomaly at 2 Sam 17:12 where the consonantal form nachnu was read as 'we' (the first-person plural pronoun) rather than a verb form of nuach. The multilingual evidence is unanimous — English 'and we,' Spanish 'y nosotros,' French 'et nous,' German 'und wir' — confirming this is a homographic pronoun, not a semantic sense of the verb. It belongs to the dictionary entry only as a cross-reference note. FIRST PERSON PRONOUN

en: and-we | es: y-nosotros | fr: et-nous | de: und-wir 2Sam 17:12

מְנוּחָה H5118 Conj-w / V-Qal-InfAbs (2×)

rest, come to rest; settle in a resting place

This verbal form relates to the concept of rest and settling down. Both occurrences involve the idea of resting or entering into rest. In 2 Chronicles 6:41, it appears in the phrase about God's 'resting place' in the temple context (following Psalm 132:8's parallel). Esther 9:16 uses it to describe the Jews' resting from their enemies—cessation from conflict. The noun 'menukhah' (resting-place) shares this root, emphasizing both physical location and state of peace.

(2×) The two contexts reveal rest as both spatial and temporal. In 2 Chronicles 6:41, the reference is to God's resting place—the temple as the location where divine presence settles. In Esther 9:16, it's the completion of self-defense, where 'they rested' marks the end of combat on the 13th of Adar. The infinitive absolute form 'and resting' captures the decisive, completed nature of this cessation. Spanish 'descansaron' (they rested) and the phrase 'to your resting-place' show how translators moved between the locative (where) and stative (condition) meanings. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: and-resting, to-your-resting-place | es: a-tu-reposo, y-descansaron | fr: [ונוח], [לנוחך] | de: [ונוח], [לנוחך] 2Chr 6:41; Esth 9:16

נוֹחָה H5119 N-proper-ms (1×)

Nohah — the fourth son of Benjamin in one genealogical tradition

Nohah appears only in Chronicles' genealogy of Benjamin, listed as the fourth son. This name doesn't appear in Genesis' account of Benjamin's sons, reflecting the textual variations common in biblical genealogies. Different manuscript traditions and ancient versions show variations in the vocalization, suggesting this was a name whose exact pronunciation was uncertain even in antiquity.

(1×) A personal name designating Benjamin's fourth son according to 1 Chronicles 8:2. The name appears nowhere else in Scripture, and Genesis 46:21 gives a different list of Benjamin's sons without mentioning Nohah. Greek manuscripts vary (Ἰωα, Νωα, Νουαα), showing textual uncertainty. The meaning remains obscure, though the root could relate to rest or quiet. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nochah | es: Noha | fr: [נוחה] | de: [נוחה] 1Chr 8:2

נוּט H5120 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (1×)

shake, quake, tremble — the earth responding in upheaval to divine presence

This verb appears in a psalm celebrating God's universal kingship, commanding the earth to shake before the enthroned Lord. The root suggests dangling or swaying motion, different from other Hebrew words for trembling. Paired with 'be agitated,' it creates an image of cosmic response to divine majesty. Some scholars have questioned the text, but the manuscript tradition supports this rare verb.

(1×) The Qal imperfect jussive 'let it shake' in Psalm 99:1, describing the earth's reaction to YHWH's reign. The verb (from a root meaning 'dangle, sway') conveys oscillating or unstable movement, paralleled by רָגַז (quake, be agitated). This is theophanic language—creation itself responds physically to divine presence. Arabic cognates support the sense of suspended swaying motion, though some medieval scholars proposed emendations to more common verbs for 'melt' or 'quake.' SHAKING AND TOTTERING

en: let-quake | es: se-estremezca | fr: être-agité | de: lass-quake Ps 99:1

נוית H5121 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (12×)

Naioth — a place in or near Ramah associated with Samuel's prophetic community and ecstatic prophecy

Naioth (נָיוֹת) designates a location in or near Ramah, associated with Samuel and a community of prophets. When David fled from Saul, he came to Samuel 'at Naioth in Ramah' (1 Sam 19:18). Saul sent three groups of messengers to seize David, but each time the Spirit fell upon them and they prophesied (1 Sam 19:19-21). Saul himself went and likewise prophesied all day and night (1 Sam 19:22-24). David then fled from Naioth to Jonathan (1 Sam 20:1). The name likely derives from naveh ('dwelling'), suggesting a communal prophetic residence.

(in Naioth) (12×) A place name for the prophetic community's abode in or near Ramah, where Samuel presided. Appears exclusively in David's flight from Saul (1 Sam 19:18-23; 20:1). Notable for the repeated outpouring of the Spirit that caused Saul's messengers and Saul himself to prophesy involuntarily. The name likely derives from naveh ('dwelling'). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: (Naioth), (from-Naioth), (in-Naioth) | es: Nayot, a-Nayot, de-Nayot | fr: (Naioth), (from-Naioth), (in-Naioth) | de: [Naioth], [from-Naioth], [in-Naioth] 1Sam 19:18; 1Sam 19:19; 1Sam 19:22

נִוָּלִי H5122 N-fs (3×)

A dunghill, refuse heap, or pile of ruins and rubble

This Aramaic loanword appears in Ezra and Daniel for a refuse heap or pile of ruins. King Darius decrees that anyone who alters his edict shall have a beam pulled from his house and he shall be impaled on it, 'and his house shall be made a dunghill' (Ezra 6). Daniel twice uses it in royal threats: houses will be made into dunghills as punishment for failing to interpret dreams or blaspheming God. The term evokes complete degradation—a dwelling reduced to a garbage heap, utter ruin and humiliation.

(3×) A dunghill or refuse heap. Ezra 6:11 records Darius's decree: 'whoever alters this edict, a beam shall be pulled out of his house, and he shall be impaled on it, and his house shall be made a dunghill.' Daniel 2:5 has Nebuchadnezzar threaten: 'if you do not make known to me the dream and its interpretation, you shall be torn limb from limb, and your houses shall be made a dunghill.' Similarly 3:29 threatens those who blaspheme God. The Aramaic forms and consistent 'dunghill/refuse' rendering show this is a heap of destruction and desolation. ASH HEAP REFUSE

en: a-dunghill, dunghill | es: en-estiércol, un-muladar | fr: [נולן], déchet | de: [נולן], [נולי] Ezra 6:11; Dan 2:5; Dan 3:29

נוּם H5123 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (6×)

To slumber, be drowsy, doze — light sleep or inattentive drowsiness, distinct from deep sleep (yashen).

A verb meaning to be drowsy, slumber, or doze off, representing a lighter stage of sleep than yashen ('to sleep deeply'). Its most famous occurrence is the emphatic double denial of Psalm 121:3-4: the guardian of Israel 'will neither slumber nor sleep,' pairing num and yashen as a merism for total wakefulness. Negatively, it describes culpable inattention — Assyria's shepherds slumber while their flock scatters (Nah 3:18), and Israel's watchmen love to drowse (Isa 56:10). Isaiah 5:27 praises the tireless Assyrian army: 'none among them slumbers or sleeps.' Spanish preserves the nuance well with 'dormitar' (to doze) versus 'dormir' (to sleep).

be drowsy, slumber, sleep (6×) To be drowsy or slumber, denoting light, often culpable inattention rather than restful deep sleep. The theological peak is Psalm 121:3-4, where God's refusal to slumber guarantees Israel's security. Prophetic uses condemn leaders who drowse at their posts: Nineveh's shepherds slumber (Nah 3:18) and Israel's watchmen love drowsing (Isa 56:10). Isaiah 5:27 inverts the image — the invading army never slumbers, making them terrifyingly efficient. Spanish 'dormitar' precisely captures the lighter-than-sleep nuance, distinguishing it from 'dormir' just as Hebrew num differs from yashen. SLEEP AND SLUMBER en: He-slumbers, He-will-slumber, he-slumbers | es: Duermen, dormitar, dormitará | fr: [ינום], [לנום], sommeiller | de: [ינום], [לנום], [נמו] Ps 76:5; Ps 121:3; Ps 121:4; Isa 5:27; Isa 56:10

נוּמָה H5124 N-fs (1×)

drowsiness, slumber — the sleepy state associated with laziness and poverty

Proverbs uses this noun to warn against the economic consequences of excessive sleep. Paired with drunkenness, drowsiness becomes emblematic of self-indulgent neglect that leads to poverty. The term is more specific than general sleep, focusing on the heavy, lethargic state that prevents productive work. It's the physical manifestation of spiritual and moral sluggishness.

(1×) A feminine noun meaning 'drowsiness, somnolence' found in Proverbs 23:21 within a warning about drunkards and gluttons. The text declares that 'drowsiness will clothe a man with rags,' linking this sleepy indolence to poverty. This is not ordinary sleep but the heavy, unproductive lethargy that characterizes the sluggard. The word intensifies the picture of self-destructive habits that Proverbs repeatedly condemns. SLEEP AND SLUMBER

en: slumber | es: la-somnolencia | fr: נומה | de: [נומה] Prov 23:21

נוּן H5125 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (2×)

endure, increase, be propagated; continue in existence

This verbal form appears only in Psalm 72:17 with significant textual uncertainty. The ketiv (written) and qere (read) traditions differ, and ancient versions suggest some read 'be established' or 'endure.' The context is a royal blessing: 'may his name endure/increase as long as the sun.' The root may connect to propagation or increase, though the precise nuance remains debated among textual scholars. Both the idea of perpetual continuance and fruitful increase fit the psalm's vision of an enduring dynasty.

(2×) Found in the messianic royal psalm, this verb speaks to the king's lasting legacy. Psalm 72:17 envisions the king's name continuing 'as long as the sun'—either enduring through time or increasing/propagating across generations. The ketiv/qere distinction reflects ancient interpretive options: perpetual existence versus fruitful multiplication. Translations like 'may endure,' 'continúe,' and 'subsister' opted for duration, while the alternate 'be propagated' would emphasize spreading influence. The double occurrence marks the textual variant, not two separate uses. SPROUTING AND GROWING

en: [ketiv:may-endure], may-endure | es: [continúe], continúe | fr: subsister | de: [ketiv:may-endure], möge-bestehen Ps 72:17

נוּן H5126 N-proper-ms (30×)

Nun — personal name, father of Joshua, consistently identified in the patronymic 'Joshua son of Nun'

Nun (also spelled Non in 1 Chr 7:27) is a proper masculine name whose sole narrative function is to identify Joshua through the patronymic bin-Nun. All 30 occurrences follow the same formula — 'Joshua son of Nun' — from his first appearance as Moses' young aide (Exod 33:11) through his commissioning as successor (Num 27:18), his leadership of the conquest (Josh 1:1), and retrospective references (Judg 2:8; Neh 8:17). Nothing else is recorded about Nun himself: no deeds, no speeches, no genealogical narrative beyond a single Ephraimite lineage in 1 Chronicles 7:25-27. The Septuagint renders the name as Naue (from a scribal error for Naun), while every modern language preserves the Hebrew form virtually unchanged. The name may be related to the Hebrew word for 'fish' (nun), though the connection remains uncertain.

(30×) The proper name of Joshua's father, from the tribe of Ephraim. Invariably occurs in the fixed patronymic formula 'Joshua son of Nun' across the Pentateuch (Exod 33:11; Num 11:28; Deut 1:38), the conquest narratives (Josh 1:1; 2:1), and post-conquest references (Judg 2:8; 1 Kgs 16:34; Neh 8:17). The genealogy of 1 Chronicles 7:25-27 places Nun in the Ephraimite line. No independent narrative is preserved about the figure himself. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nun | es: Nun | fr: Nun | de: Nun Exod 33:11; Num 11:28; Num 13:8; Num 13:16; Num 14:6

נוּס H5127 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (161×)

To flee, escape, run away from danger; as participle: a fugitive; Hifil: put to flight, drive away

The primary Hebrew verb for flight from danger, battle, or threat. Its core image is rapid, fear-driven movement away — whether Israel fleeing before enemies (Lev 26:17), Jonah fleeing from the LORD, or the sea itself 'fleeing' at God's rebuke (Ps 114:3). The Arabic cognate nasa ('move to and fro, be in commotion') preserves the underlying sense of agitated motion. The Hifil causative adds the dimension of causing flight, while the participle crystallizes into a noun meaning 'fugitive' or 'refugee.'

1. flee, run away (Qal) (144×) The core Qal meaning covering the vast majority of occurrences: to flee or run away from danger, enemies, battle, or divine judgment. From Jacob fleeing Esau to Israelite armies routed in war, this sense pervades narrative, law (cities of refuge, Num 35:25), and poetry alike. Spanish huir and French fuir directly render this urgent, survival-driven motion. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: and-fled, and-they-fled | es: Y-huyeron, y-huyeron | fr: et-fuit, et-ils-fuit, et-ils-s'enfuit | de: und-floh, und-flohen, und-sie-floh Gen 14:10; Gen 39:12; Gen 39:13; Gen 39:15; Gen 39:18

2. fugitive, one who flees (Qal ptc.) (10×) The Qal participle used as a substantive: a fugitive or refugee, one characterized by the state of fleeing. Exodus 14:27 describes Egyptians 'fleeing into' the sea, while Jer 48:19 asks the fugitives of Moab what has happened. Spanish fugitivo, Arabic harib, and Korean 도망하는 자 all render the participial substantive naturally. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: (the-one-fleeing), a-fugitive, are-fleeing | es: el-que-huye, fugitivo, fugitivos | fr: fuir, fuyant, qui-s'enfuit | de: [נס], [נסים], der-floh Exod 14:27; Josh 8:6; Josh 8:20; Isa 24:18; Jer 48:19

3. put to flight, drive away (Hifil) (3×) The Hifil causative: to cause someone to flee, to put to flight or drive away. Deuteronomy

32:30 asks how one could chase a thousand, and Judg 7:21 describes Gideon's rout. This is the only stem where the subject causes flight rather than experiencing it. Spanish poner en fuga captures the causative force precisely. FLEEING AND ESCAPING
en: [and-they-fled], fled, put-to-flight | es: [k], hizo-huir, pondrán-en-fuga | fr: [et-ils-s'enfuit], fuit, mettre-à-flight | de: [und-sie-floh], floh, setzen-zu-flight Exod 9:20; Deut 32:30; Judg 7:21

4. (1×) A single occurrence at Judg 6:11 where the context suggests hiding or concealing (threshing wheat in a winepress to hide it from Midianites). English 'to hide' and Spanish para esconder reflect a contextual extension from fleeing to the concealment that flight aims to achieve. HIDING AND CONCEALING
en: to-hide | es: para-esconder | fr: à-cacher | de: zu-verbergen Judg 6:11

5. (1×) At Isa 59:19, the verb appears in a disputed passage where the Spirit of the LORD 'drives him' or 'puts to flight' the enemy like a rushing stream. Spanish lo impelera ('impels him') captures the forceful motion, though the exact parsing remains debated among commentators. FLEEING AND ESCAPING
en: drives-him | es: lo-impelerá | fr: fuir | de: fliehen Isa 59:19

6. (1×) In Deut 34:7, applied to Moses at death: his vigor 'had not fled.' Spanish se perdio ('was lost') and German floh show how the concrete sense of physical flight extends metaphorically to the departure of vitality or strength — an elegant personification of aging. FLEEING AND ESCAPING
en: fled | es: se-perdió | fr: s'enfuit | de: floh Deut 34:7

7. (1×) At Ps 60:4 (60:6 MT), a difficult text where nus appears to mean 'to rally' or 'to be lifted up' in the context of a banner. English 'to be lifted up' and Spanish para alzarse suggest movement upward rather than away — possibly a homographic root or a dramatic semantic extension from flight to rallying. ASCENDING MOVEMENT
en: to-be-lifted-up | es: para-alzarse | fr: à-fuir | de: zu-sein-erhoben-hinauf Ps 60:4

נוּעַ H5128 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp / Pn (42×)

To quiver, sway, stagger, wander, or shake; of unsteady motion, fugitive roaming, fear-induced trembling, and deliberate shaking. Nua paints a vivid picture of instability in every direction. Trees sway rather than abandon their roots (Judg 9:9); drunkards stagger under judgment (Isa 24:20); Cain wanders the earth as a marked fugitive (Gen 4:12, 14); the whole land trembles at God's approach (Isa 19:1). The word's genius lies in how a single root captures both the involuntary — the quaking of fear, the tottering of exhaustion — and the deliberate: shaking the head in scorn (Ps 22:7) or sifting grain through a sieve (Amos 9:9). Spanish reveals the semantic spread beautifully: vagar for wandering, temblar for trembling, menear for head-shaking, and sacudir for sifting. The Hifil causative adds an agent who forces the motion — God scattering wanderers (Num 32:13) or sifting Israel among the nations (Amos 9:9).

1. sway, stagger, totter (13×) To sway, stagger, or totter — unsteady back-and-forth motion, the core physical sense with 13 occurrences. The trees of Jotham's fable refuse to 'sway' over the bramble (Judg 9:9, 11, 13); Hannah's lips move as she prays and Eli thinks her drunk (1 Sam 1:13); the earth 'sways like a drunkard' under divine judgment (Isa 24:20); Job 28:4 describes miners dangling and swaying. Spanish mecer ('to rock/sway') and vacilar ('to wobble') consistently appear, while German bewegen ('to move') and French chanceler ('to totter') confirm the oscillating, unsteady quality. The simile of drunken staggering in Isaiah 24:20 is the iconic image for this sense. SHAKING AND TOTTERING
en: Staggering, and-shook, and-staggered | es: Mecer, Y-se-estremecieron, Y-vagaron | fr: bougeant, chanceler, errer | de: bewegen, moving, und-bewegen Judg 9:9; Judg 9:11; Judg 9:13; 1Sam 1:13; Job 28:4

2. wander, roam as fugitive (10×) To wander or roam as a fugitive or homeless person — 10 occurrences capturing aimless, displaced movement. The primal instance is God's curse on Cain: na vanad, 'a wanderer and a vagabond' (Gen 4:12, 14), where the doubling with nad intensifies the rootlessness. Psalm 109:10 prays that the wicked's children 'wander about and beg'; Psalm 59:15 pictures enemies 'wandering about for food.' Spanish vagar ('to wander/roam') and German umherirren ('to wander about') are the consistent choices. The theological weight is significant: enforced wandering is a form of divine judgment, exile from the stability of land and community that Israelite theology so deeply values. SHAKING AND TOTTERING
en: And-they-will-wander, They-wandered, [ketiv:they-will-wander] | es: Vagaban, Y-vagando, Y-vagarán | fr: errer, et-chanceler, et-vaciller | de: bewegen, lass-wander, und-wankt Gen 4:12; Gen 4:14; Ps 59:15; Ps 109:10

3. shake, wag transitive (9×) Hifil transitive: to shake or wag something deliberately — 9 occurrences where the subject is an active agent causing the motion. Shaking the head in mockery or derision is the dominant image: passersby 'wag their heads' at the suffering psalmist (Ps 22:7; 109:25), the daughter of Zion 'shakes her head' at the retreating Assyrians (2 Kgs 19:21), and the man at the tomb says 'let his bones not be moved' (2 Kgs 23:18). Job 16:4 imagines 'shaking my head at you' in false comfort. Spanish menear ('to shake/wag') is used with striking consistency, while Korean 흔들다 confirms the deliberate, scornful gesture. This is not involuntary trembling but a calculated physical insult. SHAKING AND TOTTERING
en: and-I-would-shake, and-it-set-me-trembling, and-shake | es: agitará, menean, meneó | fr: chanceler, elle-shakes, errer | de: [וַתָּנִיעַן], bewegen, move 2Kgs 19:21; 2Kgs 23:18; Job 16:4; Ps 22:7; Ps 109:25

4. cause to wander, scatter (4×) Hifil causative: to cause someone to wander or to scatter them — 4 occurrences where God or an authority drives people into displacement. God made Israel 'wander' forty years in the wilderness (Num 32:13); David tells Ittai 'shall I make you wander with us?' (2 Sam 15:20); the psalmist prays 'make them wander' (Ps 59:11). Spanish hacer vagar ('to cause to wander') and the French and German causative constructions all mark the agent-patient distinction. This sense is theologically charged: forced wandering is both a punishment (the wilderness generation) and a mercy (David's concern for Ittai the foreigner). The Hifil morphology grammaticalizes what is already implicit in sense 2 — someone causes the wandering. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING
en: [shall-I-make-you-wander], and-made-them-wander, make-them-wander | es: (te-haré-vagar), [te-haré-vagar], haz-tambalear | fr: [shall-je-fais-tu-wander], devra-je-fais-tu-wander, et-fit-eux-wander | de: [shall-ich-mache-du-wander], und-machte-ihnen-umherirren, wankte Num 32:13; 2Sam 15:20; Ps 59:11

5. tremble, quake from fear (4×) To tremble, quake, or shudder from fear or awe — 4 occurrences where the motion is involuntary and emotional rather than locomotory. At Sinai the people 'trembled' and stood at a distance (Exod 20:18); the trees of the forest — standing in for the house of David — 'shook as trees shake before the wind' at the approach of the Syro-Ephraimite alliance (Isa 7:2); Egypt's idols 'tremble' before the LORD (Isa 19:1). Spanish temblar ('to tremble') and German zittern ('to shudder') replace the usual movement vocabulary, confirming a distinct emotional-somatic register. The Isaiah 7:2 passage is doubly effective because nua captures both the physical trembling and the psychological panic in a single image. TERROR AND AGITATION
en: and-tremble, and-trembled, as-shaking-of | es: Y-tembló, como-tiemblan, y-temblaron | fr: errer, et-errer, et-trembla | de: bewegen, und-bewegen, und-zitterte Exod 20:18; Isa 7:2; Isa 19:1

6. sift, shake out as sieve (2×) To sift or shake out as through a sieve — 2 occurrences, both in Amos 9:9, where God declares 'I will shake the house of Israel among all the nations, as grain is shaken in a sieve.' The Hifil causative here extends beyond human wandering into an agricultural metaphor: God sifts Israel the way a farmer sifts wheat, and 'not a pebble shall fall to the ground.' Spanish sacudir ('to shake out/sift') is the precise term, distinct from the staggering, wandering, and trembling vocabulary used elsewhere. The double occurrence in a single verse — once for the divine action, once for the simile — shows the prophet exploiting nua's physical-motion core for a new metaphorical application: sorting and purifying through shaking. SHAKING AND TOTTERING
en: and-I-will-shake, is-shaken | es: se-sacude, y-sacudiré | fr: chanceler, et-chanceler | de: und-wankt, wankt Amos 9:9

נוֹעַדְיָה H5129 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Noadiah; name of a Levite and a hostile prophetess

This proper name, meaning 'meeting with Yah,' identifies two different individuals in post-exilic texts. First, a Levite contemporary with Ezra who helped weigh the temple treasures (Ezra 8:33). Second, a prophetess who opposed Nehemiah's wall-building project (Neh 6:14). The name's theophoric element (ending in -yah) connects it to Yahweh, making it a confessional name. The second individual's opposition to Nehemiah places her among the adversaries who tried to intimidate the governor through prophetic utterances.

(2×) Two distinct individuals share this name in the restoration period. The Levite Noadiah appears in the chain of custody for precious items brought from Babylon (Ezra 8:33), serving as a trustworthy witness. The prophetess Noadiah represents a more complicated figure—one of several prophets Nehemiah asks God to remember 'for evil' because they tried to make him afraid (Neh 6:14). This latter reference suggests prophetic opposition wasn't monolithic; some prophets resisted the rebuilding efforts. The gender difference (masculine/feminine) shows the name crossed gender lines in Hebrew naming practices. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Noadyah, to-Noadiah | es: de-Noadías, y-Noadyah | fr: [ונועדיה], [לנועדיה] | de: [ונועדיה], [לנועדיה] Ezra 8:33; Neh 6:14

נוּף H5130a V-Hifil-Imperf-2ms (2×)

wave, sprinkle, move to and fro; wave offering motion

This verb describes a back-and-forth motion—whether sprinkling, waving, or brandishing. Its two occurrences show distinct applications of the root's core sense. In Proverbs 7:17, the seductress says 'I have sprinkled/perfumed my bed with myrrh,' using a form that suggests sprinkling scent. Psalm 68:9 uses it for rain God 'shed abroad' or poured out abundantly. The root is well-known from priestly 'wave offerings,' where items are moved to and fro before the Lord, but these two instances extend the motion to liquid applications.

(2×) These two verses demonstrate the verb's versatility with liquids and scents. The adulteress in Proverbs 7:17 describes preparing her bed—'I have perfumed/sprinkled my couch with myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon.' The Hiphil form suggests deliberate sprinkling or scattering of fragrance. Psalm 68:9 uses the same conjugation for God's action: 'You shed abroad abundant rain.' The connection between sprinkling perfume and pouring rain may seem distant, but both involve dispersing liquid in a spreading motion. French 'agiter' (shake, wave) captures the root's core movement sense, while Spanish 'perfumar' and 'hacer llover' focus on the specific applications. WAVE WIELD BRANDISH

en: I-have-perfumed, You-shed-abroad | es: he-perfumado, hiciste-llover | fr: agiter, נפתי | de: [נפתי], du-shed-abroad Ps 68:9; Prov 7:17

נוּף H5130b Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf / 3fs (35×)

To wave, brandish, or shake back and forth; used of ritual wave-offerings, wielding tools, threatening gestures, and sifting.

A verb of repeated back-and-forth motion whose meaning shifts dramatically with context. In Levitical law it describes the priest waving portions of a sacrifice before the LORD — the characteristic tenufah gesture that Spanish renders as 'mecer' (to rock) and French as 'agiter' (to shake). Outside the tabernacle it takes on a more forceful edge: wielding an iron tool on an altar stone (Exod 20:25), or God shaking His hand over the nations (Isa 19:16). In one striking image, the LORD sifts the nations in a 'sieve of destruction' (Isa 30:28), extending the root's core motion into the world of threshing floors.

1. wave as ritual offering (25×) The most frequent use: waving a sacrifice or offering portion back and forth before the LORD in the tenufah (wave-offering) ritual. Nearly all occurrences cluster in Exodus and Leviticus. Spanish 'mecer' captures the gentle rocking motion, while German 'Webe' (from 'weben,' to weave) evokes the back-and-forth pattern. The breast and right thigh of the peace offering were standard items waved (Lev 7:30). WAVE WIELD BRANDISH

en: and-he-shall-wave, and-shall-wave, and-wave | es: Y-mecerá, fue-mecido, lo-mecerá | fr: agita, devra-agiter-cela, et-agita | de: soll-Webe-es, und-du-soll-Webe, und-du-soll-wave Exod 29:24; Exod 29:26; Exod 29:27; Exod 35:22; Lev 7:30

2. wield or brandish (6×) Wielding, swinging, or brandishing a tool or weapon with force and intent. In Exod 20:25 and Deut 27:5, iron tools must not be wielded against altar stones. Isaiah 10:15 poses the famous rhetorical question: can the axe boast over the one who wields it? Spanish shifts here to 'alzar' (to raise, lift) reflecting the upward swing rather than the ritual lateral motion. WAVE WIELD BRANDISH

en: as-wielding, its-wielder, was-wielded | es: Como-si-moviera, alzarás, alzó | fr: agiter, tu-devra-wield, tu-waved | de: [כהניף], [מניפו], du-soll-wield Exod 20:25; Deut 23:25; Deut 27:5; Josh 8:31; Isa 10:15

3. shake or wave threateningly (3×) Shaking or waving the hand in a threatening or commanding gesture, distinctly non-ritual. God shakes His hand over Zion's daughter (Isa 10:32) and over Egypt (Isa 19:16). Zechariah 2:9 promises God will wave His hand over oppressor nations. The gesture communicates divine authority and impending judgment — more than mere motion, it is a sovereign signal. WAVE WIELD BRANDISH

en: he-waves, waves, waving | es: Agitará, agita, agito | fr: agiter | de: [ינפף], [מניף] Isa 10:32; Isa 19:16; Zech 2:9

4. sift or winnow (1×) A single metaphorical use in Isa 30:28 where the LORD sifts the nations with the 'sieve of destruction.' The back-and-forth motion of the root maps naturally onto winnowing or sifting grain, and Spanish 'cribar' (to sieve) captures this agricultural transfer precisely. It extends the physical oscillation into an image of separating and scattering. WAVE WIELD BRANDISH

en: to-sift | es: para-cribar | fr: agiter | de: [להנפה] Isa 30:28

נוֹף H5131 N-ms (1×)

height, elevation — the exalted position or lofty stature of a place

This noun appears in Psalm 48's hymn to Zion, describing the holy mountain as 'beautiful in elevation.' The term captures both physical height and the elevated status that comes from divine presence. Later Hebrew developed this root toward 'treetop' or 'branch,' but the biblical usage focuses on topographical prominence. The word celebrates Jerusalem's distinction among cities.

(1×) A masculine noun meaning 'elevation, height' found in Psalm 48:2, modifying Mount Zion. The phrase 'beautiful in elevation' (יְפֵה נוֹף) praises the mountain's position and prominence. This combines geographical reality (Jerusalem sits on a ridge) with theological significance (the city of God occupies the heights). Post-biblical Hebrew shifted this root toward 'bough, treetop,' and Aramaic used related forms for tree branches. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-elevation | es: de-altura | fr: hauteur | de: in-elevation Ps 48:2

נָוַד H5132a V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

flee, wander — to move about as homeless refugees without stable residence

Lamentations uses this disputed verb to describe the tragic fate of Jerusalem's exiles, who both flee and wander without finding rest. The text is difficult, and ancient interpreters struggled with it—some manuscripts suggest different readings. The context is clear: these are displaced persons, ritually unclean outcasts whom others avoid. Whether the verb primarily means 'fly' or 'wander,' the picture is one of desperate homelessness.

(1×) The Qal perfect 3rd plural 'they fled/wandered' in Lamentations 4:15, describing exiled Jerusalemites as homeless wanderers whom others refuse to shelter. The Hebrew text is textually uncertain—some scholars prefer reading נָדוּ (from the more common root for 'wander, flee'), and the parallel verb 'they wandered' supports this. The context shows ritually unclean refugees being avoided by all nations, unable to find rest anywhere. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: they-fled | es: huyeron | fr: [נצו] | de: [נצו] Lam 4:15

נָצַץ H5132b V-Hifil-Perf-3cp (2×)
blossom, bloom; put forth flowers
This denominative verb derives from the noun for 'blossom' and means to bloom or put forth flowers. Both occurrences appear in Song of Songs, describing the pomegranate trees blossoming. This is garden imagery at its most intimate—the beloved checking to see if spring has arrived, if vines have budded and pomegranates bloomed. The Hiphil form indicates the causative or factitive sense: the trees 'have caused blossoms' or 'have put forth blooms.' The verb captures that transitional moment when fruit trees shift from dormancy to fertility.

(2×) Both uses come from the Song of Songs' springtime garden scenes. In 6:11, the speaker goes down to the garden to see 'if the pomegranates bloomed,' checking for signs of the season's turn. In 7:13 (English versification), the same question arises: 'have the pomegranates bloomed?' The repetition creates an atmosphere of eager anticipation—watching for fertility's first signs. French 'ont bourgeonné' (have budded) and Spanish 'brotaron' (sprouted/budded) capture this emergence of new growth, the visible promise that fruit will follow. BUD BLOSSOM FLOURISH
en: bloomed | es: brotaron | fr: ont-bourgeonné, si-ont-bourgeonné | de: [הנצו] Song 6:11; Song 7:12

נוֹצָה H5133 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3fs (4×)
notsah — plumage, feathers; the full covering of a bird's wing
This feminine noun denotes plumage or feathers—the collective covering of a bird's wings and body. The term appears in contexts describing majestic birds of prey (eagles) and the ostrich, emphasizing the impressive visual display of full feathering. Metaphorically, the eagle's abundant plumage symbolizes royal power and splendor (applied to Nebuchadnezzar and Egypt's pharaoh in Ezekiel). There's a unique use in Leviticus regarding bird sacrifice, where the term may refer to feathers to be removed, though some interpret it as the crop's 'filth.' The imagery consistently emphasizes fullness and visual impressiveness.

(4×) Plumage or feathers, the full feathered covering of birds. Ezekiel 17:3 describes a great eagle 'with great wings, long pinions, and full plumage (male hannotsah)' representing Nebuchadnezzar—the abundant feathering symbolizes royal magnificence. Verse 17:7 depicts another eagle 'with great wings and much plumage (rav notsah)' representing Egypt's pharaoh. Job 39:13 contrasts the ostrich's 'pinion and plumage (notsah)' with the stork's, questioning whether the ostrich's feathers truly match its impressive appearance. Leviticus 1:16 is disputed: either 'its feathers (benotsatah)' to be removed from the sacrifice, or 'its filth/crop' following different versional evidence; the former better fits the noun's other uses. WING BODY PART
en: and-feathers, plumage, the-plumage | es: con-pluma-suya, las-plumas, plumas | fr: avec-son-feathers, et-ונצה, plume | de: [הנוצה], [ונצה], [נוצה] Lev 1:16; Job 39:13; Ezek 17:3; Ezek 17:7

נוּק H5134 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3fs / 3ms (1×)
nurse, suckle — to breastfeed an infant
This verb appears in the Exodus story when Pharaoh's daughter hires Moses' own mother to nurse him. The Hiphil form (causative) indicates making a child suck or providing nursing. The narrative irony is rich: the Hebrew mother is paid to nurse her own son, who will later deliver Israel from Egypt. The word is textually complex, with various proposed readings, but the sense is clear.

(1×) The Hiphil (causative) form in Exodus 2:9, 'and she nursed him,' describing Moses' mother nursing her own son at Pharaoh daughter's request. The verb means to cause to suck or to give suck (breastfeed). The text has variant readings in manuscripts (Samaritan has a slightly different form), but all agree on the basic meaning. This continues the theme of God's providential protection of the infant who will become Israel's deliverer. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-she-nursed-him | es: y-lo-amamantó | fr: et-elle-nursed-lui | de: und-sie-saeugte-ihn Exod 2:9

נוּר H5135 N-csd (17×)
fire — the element of fire, especially in visions of divine judgment and the fiery furnace (Aramaic) Nur is the Aramaic word for fire, cognate with Hebrew ur/esh and Syriac nura, appearing 17 times exclusively in the book of Daniel. Nearly all occurrences cluster in two dramatic settings: Nebuchadnezzar's fiery furnace and Daniel's vision of the Ancient of Days. In Daniel 3, the word appears twelve times as the instrument of royal coercion — the furnace of blazing fire (attun di nur yaqidta) into which Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego are thrown for refusing to worship the golden image (Dan 3:6, 11, 15, 17, 20-27). Their miraculous survival unsinged, with a fourth figure walking among them, makes nur the backdrop for one of the Old Testament's most powerful deliverances. In Daniel 7:9-10, the word shifts from threatening to theophanic: the Ancient of Days sits on a throne of fiery flames (kurse shvivin di nur), with wheels of blazing fire, and a river of fire issuing forth before him. Daniel 7:11 brings both registers together as the fourth beast is slain and its body given to the burning flame. Spanish 'fuego,' French 'feu,' and German 'Feuer' all render the elemental noun directly.

(17×) Fire as a physical element, used exclusively in Daniel for both human instruments of persecution and divine theophanic imagery. In the fiery furnace narrative, nur appears repeatedly as the means of Nebuchadnezzar's threatened punishment for those who refuse idolatry (Dan 3:6, 11, 15, 17, 20-27), from which the three faithful are miraculously delivered unharmed. In Daniel's night vision, fire becomes the medium of divine majesty: the Ancient of Days sits upon a throne of fiery flames with wheels of burning fire, and a river of fire flows before him (Dan 7:9-10). The beast is then destroyed and given to 'the burning flame' (Dan 7:11). The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew esh/ur and Syriac nura; Spanish 'fuego,' French 'feu,' and German 'Feuer' all confirm the single elemental sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: fire, the-fire | es: el-fuego, fuego | fr: feu, le-feu | de: Feuer Dan 3:6; Dan 3:11; Dan 3:15; Dan 3:17; Dan 3:20

נוּשׁ H5136 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-1cs / 3fs (1×)
be sick, be incurable — to suffer from severe or mortal illness
This verb appears in Psalm 69, one of the great psalms of individual lament, where the speaker describes overwhelming distress. The text is difficult, with ancient interpreters proposing various readings. The basic sense involves serious illness or incurable wounding, whether literal or metaphorical. The psalm's vivid language of drowning and exhaustion suggests this sickness is more than physical—it's the soul-sickness of one abandoned and mocked.

(1×) The Qal imperfect 1st singular in Psalm 69:20, likely meaning 'I am sick' or 'I am mortally wounded,' though the Hebrew text is disputed. The context speaks of reproach breaking the heart, and the psalmist looking vainly for comforters. Some manuscripts suggest different word divisions or roots (related to 'incurable' or 'hoping'). Ancient versions varied in their rendering, but the overall sense is severe distress, perhaps unto death. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS
en: and-I-am-sick | es: y-estoy-enfermo | fr: et-être-malade | de: und-ich-bin-krank Ps 69:20

נָזָה H5137a Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3ms (23×)
To sprinkle ritually (Hifil); to spurt or spatter as blood splashes (Qal).
The verb nazah appears in two stems with related but distinct meanings. In the Hifil, it is the standard term for ritual sprinkling – the priest deliberately applies blood, water, or oil in purification ceremonies (Lev 4:6; 14:7; Num 19:19). French asperger and Spanish rociar both capture this controlled, purposeful action. In the Qal, the verb describes blood spattering involuntarily – splashing onto garments when a sacrifice is slaughtered (Lev 6:27), or Jezebel's blood spurting against the wall when she is thrown down (2 Kgs 9:33). Isaiah 63:3 uses this forceful image of blood spattering on the Divine Warrior's robes during judgment.

1. sprinkle ritually (Hifil causative) (19×) The Hifil causative meaning to sprinkle or cause liquid (blood, water, oil) to be applied in a deliberate ritual or ceremonial context. This is the primary priestly action in Levitical purification rites (Lev 4:6, 17; 14:7; Num 19:19). French asperger and Spanish rociar both convey the controlled, purposeful nature of the sprinkling. Exod 29:21 describes Moses sprinkling blood and anointing oil on Aaron's garments. RITUAL SPRINKLING

en: and-he-shall-sprinkle, and-let-sprinkle, and-shall-sprinkle | es: Y-rociará, Y-roció, rociará | fr: asperger, et-aspergea, et-asperger | de: lass-sprengen, sprengen, und-der-sprinkler-von Exod 29:21; Lev 4:6; Lev 4:17; Lev 5:9; Lev 8:11

2. spatter, splash (Qal) (4×) The Qal intransitive meaning for liquid to spurt, spatter, or splash without deliberate ritual agency. Blood spatters onto garments (Lev 6:27) or against a wall (2 Kgs 9:33, of Jezebel's death). In Isa 63:3 the Divine Warrior's garments are spattered with the lifeblood of nations – English spattered and Spanish salpicó both mark the violent, involuntary nature of this splashing, distinct from controlled priestly sprinkling. RITUAL SPRINKLING

en: and-it-spattered, and-spattered, is-spattered | es: salpique, y-salpicó | fr: [יזן], est-spattered, et-cela-spattered | de: [יזן], ist-spattered, und-es-spattered Lev 6:27; 2Kgs 9:33; Isa 63:3

נָזָה H5137b V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (1×)

sprinkle, startle — to cause to leap or to sprinkle (textually uncertain)

This verb in Isaiah's Servant Song describes the Servant's impact on many nations. Traditional interpretation reads 'sprinkle' (as in ritual cleansing), connecting this to the Servant's atoning work. Others argue for 'startle' or 'cause to leap' from a root meaning to jump. The passage is notoriously difficult, and ancient versions differ. Whether sprinkling or startling, the image conveys the Servant's transformative effect on the nations.

(1×) The Hiphil imperfect 'he will sprinkle' in Isaiah 52:15, though the meaning is hotly debated. Traditional reading connects this to ritual sprinkling (purification), with the Servant cleansing many nations. Alternative interpretation sees a root meaning 'leap, spring,' yielding 'he will startle/cause to leap'—nations will recoil in surprise at the exalted Servant. Various textual emendations have been proposed ('make tremble,' 'make many silent'), reflecting the difficulty. The context describes kings shutting their mouths in awe. RITUAL SPRINKLING

en: he-will-sprinkle | es: rociará | fr: [יזה] | de: [יזה] Isa 52:15

נָזִיד H5138 Conj-w / N-msc (6×)

Stew or pottage; a boiled dish of legumes or vegetables, the everyday cooked food of ancient Israel.

A boiled dish prepared from lentils or other legumes, typically cooked in a pot over fire. Most famously, this is the lentil stew for which Esau traded his birthright to Jacob (Gen 25:29-34), where the text specifies it as 'stew of lentils' (nezid adashim). It reappears in the Elisha narrative when a wild gourd is accidentally added to the prophetic community's pot of stew (2 Kgs 4:38-40). In Haggai 2:12, it is mentioned as an ordinary household food in a priestly purity question. The Spanish 'guiso/guisado' and French 'bouillir' both capture the cooked, simmered quality of this simple but significant dish.

stew, pottage (6×) A thick boiled food made from lentils or other legumes, cooked in a pot. The word appears only six times but carries outsized narrative weight: it is the instrument of Esau's forfeiture in Genesis 25:29-34 and the vehicle for a lesson on prophetic provision in 2 Kings 4:38-40. Cross-lingual glosses consistently point to a stew or thick cooked dish (Spanish 'guiso,' French 'bouillir'), not a thin soup. Haggai 2:12 treats it as common fare, suggesting this was a staple food in Israelite households. BOIL COOK FOOD

en: and-stew-of, of-the-stew, stew | es: del-guiso, el-guisado, el-guiso | fr: bouillir, de-le-stew, et-stew-de | de: [הנזיד], der-stew, ein-Gericht Gen 25:29; Gen 25:34; 2Kgs 4:38; 2Kgs 4:39; 2Kgs 4:40

נָזִיר H5139 Prep-l / N-mp (16×)

Nazirite (one consecrated by vow); consecrated one, distinguished prince; an unpruned vine left untended.

The Hebrew noun nazir carries the root idea of separation and consecration, branching into three surprisingly different applications. In its best-known sense, it designates the Nazirite — a person set apart to God by a special vow involving abstinence from wine, uncut hair, and avoidance of corpse-impurity, as legislated in Numbers 6 and embodied by figures like Samson and Samuel. Yet in the ancient poetry of Genesis 49:26 and Deuteronomy 33:16, nazir describes Joseph as 'the consecrated one among his brothers' — not a Nazirite by vow but a prince distinguished by divine favor. French consacré and German Geweihter capture this elevated sense of being set apart for honor. Most unexpectedly, Leviticus 25:5 and 25:11 apply nazir to an unpruned vine — the grapevine left untended during the sabbatical year, its uncut growth mirroring the Nazirite's uncut hair in a striking agricultural metaphor.

1. Nazirite, one under vow (11×) A Nazirite — a person consecrated to God by a special vow entailing three abstinences: no wine or grape products, no cutting of the hair, and no contact with the dead (Num 6:1-21). Eleven occurrences cluster in the Nazirite legislation of Numbers 6, covering the vow's initiation (Num 6:2), completion rituals (Num 6:13-20), and the shaving of the consecrated head. Spanish nazareo, French Nazirite, and German Nasiräer all transliterate the Hebrew, treating it as a technical religious term without domestic equivalent. Amos 2:11-12 extends the institution into prophetic critique: God raised up Nazirites among Israel's youth, but the people made them drink wine. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Nazirite, Nazirite-of, a-Nazirite-of | es: a-los-nazareos, como-nazareos, el-nazareo | fr: Nazirite, Nazirite-de, le-Nazirite | de: Nazirite, Nazirite-von, [הנזרים] Num 6:2; Num 6:13; Num 6:18; Num 6:19; Num 6:20

2. consecrated one, prince (3×) A consecrated one or distinguished prince — someone set apart not by formal vow but by divine election and honor among peers. Three occurrences appear in high poetry: Jacob's blessing calls Joseph 'the consecrated one of his brothers' (Gen 49:26), Moses' blessing echoes 'the prince among his brothers' (Deut 33:16), and Lamentations 4:7 describes Jerusalem's nobles (nezirehah) as once purer than snow. French prince-de and Spanish consagrado-de shift from the technical Nazirite label to vocabulary of royal distinction, while Arabic نذير preserves the root connection to consecration. The Joseph passages celebrate separation-as-honor rather than separation-as-abstinence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: consecrated-one-of, her-consecrated-ones, prince-of | es: consagrado-de, el-consagrado-de, sus-nazareos | fr: [נזיריה], consacra-un-de, prince-de | de: [נזיריה], des-Geweihten, weihte-eins-von Gen 49:26; Deut 33:16; Lam 4:7

3. unpruned vine (2×) An unpruned vine — a grapevine left to grow wild and unharvested during the sabbatical or jubilee year. Only two occurrences (Lev 25:5, 11) apply nazir to agriculture, and the metaphorical logic is elegant: just as a Nazirite's hair grows uncut as a sign of consecration, so the sabbatical vine grows untrimmed as a sign that the land rests for the LORD. Spanish nazareo-de-ella awkwardly carries the personal term into botany, while English 'unpruned vine' and 'undressed grapes' translate the concept rather than the word. The agricultural sabbath mirrors the human vow — both involve refraining from the normal cycle of cutting and harvesting. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: its-unpruned-grapes, your-unpruned-vine | es: nazareo-de-ella, tu-nazareo | fr: son-unpruned-raisins, ton-unpruned-vigne | de: dein-unpruned-Weinstock, sein-unpruned-Trauben Lev 25:5; Lev 25:11

נָזַל H5140 V-Hifil-Perf-3ms (16×)

To flow, stream, trickle, or distil; used of water coursing through wadis, rain pouring from clouds, and speech dropping gently like dew.

A poetic verb for the movement of water in all its forms—rushing streams, cascading rain, and the gentle distilling of dew. When Israel crossed the wilderness, God 'caused water to flow' from the rock (Isa 48:21), and the participle often stands alone as a noun meaning 'streams' or 'flowing waters' (Exod 15:8; Ps 78:16). The prophets extend this image upward to skies that 'pour down' righteousness (Isa 45:8) and downward to teaching that drops softly like night moisture (Deut 32:2). Spanish captures the range well: fluir for the steady current, derramar for the downpour, destilar for the gentle drip.

1. flow, stream (of water) (12×) The core meaning: water flowing along a course—streams, rivers, or wadis. The participle nozlim functions almost as a standalone noun meaning 'streams,' as at the Sea of Reeds where 'the flowing waters stood up in a heap' (Exod 15:8). Spanish fluir and German Ströme both pick up this horizontal, coursing motion, while the 12 occurrences confirm it as the dominant sense of the root. FLOWING WATER
en: and-flowing, and-flowing-water, and-streams | es: Fluirá, corrientes, fluyan | fr: [ונזלים], [יזלו], [נוזלים] | de: Ströme, [ונזלים], [יזלו] Exod 15:8; Num 24:7; Judg 5:5; Ps 78:16; Ps 78:44

2. pour down from above (2×) Rain or moisture descending from the heavens, emphasizing vertical downward motion rather than horizontal flow. In Job 36:28 the clouds 'pour down' abundantly, and Isaiah 45:8 extends this to the skies pouring down righteousness. Spanish derramen ('let them pour out') and French couler ('to flow down') both highlight the cascading, gravitational quality distinct from a streambed. FLOWING WATER
en: let-them-pour-down, pour-down | es: derramen-, fluyen | fr: [יזלו], couler | de: [יזלו] Job 36:28; Isa 45:8

3. cause to flow (Hifil) (1×) The Hifil causative: to make water flow. This appears once at Isaiah 48:21, where God caused streams to gush from the rock for Israel in the desert—a deliberate act of divine provision. The causative stem marks this as someone compelling the water to move, not water flowing of its own nature. FLOWING WATER
en: He-caused-to-flow | es: hizo-fluir | fr: [הזיל] | de: [הזיל] Isa 48:21

4. drip, distil (1×) A gentle dripping or distilling, used figuratively of Moses' teaching in his farewell song: 'Let my speech distil as the dew' (Deut 32:2). Spanish destilar captures the slow, drop-by-drop quality that distinguishes this sense from the rush of a stream or the downpour of rain. FLOWING WATER
en: let-flow | es: destilará | fr: laisse-flow | de: lass-flow Deut 32:2

נֶזֶם H5141 N-msc (17×)
A ring of gold worn as personal adornment — as an earring, a nose ring, or a general ornamental ring
The Hebrew noun nezem names one of the most vivid pieces of jewelry in the biblical world: a gold ring worn either on the ear or in the nose. Abraham's servant places a golden nezem on Rebekah's nose as a betrothal gift (Gen 24:22, 47), while Jacob buries foreign earrings beneath the oak at Shechem (Gen 35:4). The golden calf itself was forged from earrings torn from the people's ears (Exod 32:2-3). Proverbs deploys the word in two memorable comparisons: a gold ring in a pig's snout (Prov 11:22) and a gold earring in the ear of the wise reprover (Prov 25:12). Spanish pendiente ('earring') and aro ('ring') nicely distinguish the two placements, while the Syriac cognate zmama confirms the nasal usage. The word's semantic range is determined less by etymology than by the prepositional phrase that follows — 'on the nose' versus 'in the ears.'

1. earring (8×) An earring — a gold ring worn on or in the ear as personal adornment. The golden calf narrative is the defining context: Aaron commands 'break off the golden rings that are in the ears of your wives' (Exod 32:2-3). Genesis 35:4 connects earrings with foreign gods, as Jacob gathers them for burial. Judges 8:24-26 notes that the Ishmaelites wore golden earrings, and Ezekiel 16:12 includes them in God's lavish adornment of Jerusalem. Spanish pendientes de oro and French anneaux d'oreilles both reflect this usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-ring, earring-of, earrings-of | es: los-pendientes, los-pendientes-de, pendiente-de | fr: anneaux-de, earring-de, earrings-de | de: Ringe-von, die-Ringe, earring-von Gen 35:4; Exod 32:2; Exod 32:3; Exod 35:22; Judg 8:24

2. nose ring (5×) A nose ring — a gold ring worn through or upon the nose, often given as a bridal or betrothal gift. Genesis 24 provides the foundational scene: Abraham's servant places a golden nezem on Rebekah's nose (Gen 24:22, 30, 47). Isaiah 3:21 lists nose rings among the finery stripped from the daughters of Zion, and Ezekiel 16:12 pictures God placing one on Jerusalem's face. Proverbs 11:22 delivers its biting comparison: 'a gold ring in a pig's snout.' The Syriac zmama ('nasal ring') is a close cognate. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-ring-of, and-the-nose-rings, ring | es: aro, el-pendiente, pendiente-de | fr: [ונזמי], anneau, le-anneau | de: [ונזמי], [נזם], den-Nasenring Gen 24:22; Gen 24:30; Gen 24:47; Isa 3:21; Ezek 16:12

3. ring (general ornamental) (4×) A ring used as general ornament where the specific placement — nose or ear — is unspecified or contextually ambiguous. Job 42:11 records that each of Job's comforters gave him a nezem of gold among their restoration gifts, with no anatomical specification. Hosea 2:13 mentions rings (alongside other jewelry) that the unfaithful wife wore for her lovers. Proverbs 25:12 compares the wise reprover to 'a gold ring,' leaving the body part open. Spanish anillo de oro and French anneau d'or both capture this unspecified ornamental sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-ring-of, her-ring | es: Aro-de, anillo-de, pendiente-de | fr: anneau, נזם | de: [נזם], [נזמה] Job 42:11; Prov 11:22; Prov 25:12; Hos 2:13

נָזַק H5142 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (4×)
nezaq (Aramaic) — to suffer injury, be damaged, or cause harm
This Aramaic verb means to suffer injury or damage, appearing in the biblical text only in Daniel and Ezra. The term describes both personal suffering of loss and the causing of harm to others, particularly in political contexts—revenue loss to the king or seditious damage to royal interests. The root appears in Akkadian (injure) and later Jewish Aramaic (craftiness, damage). Both passive senses (suffering injury) and active causative forms (causing damage) appear, showing the verb's versatility in describing harm from various perspectives.

(4×) To suffer injury, be damaged, or cause harm, in both personal and political contexts. Daniel 6:2 describes Daniel's excellent service using the participial form: 'he suffered no injury (naziq)' or 'no loss was found in him'—complete integrity. Ezra 4:13 warns the king that if Jerusalem is rebuilt, 'the revenue of the kings will suffer (tehanziq)'—royal income will be damaged. Verse 4:15 claims Jerusalem has historically been 'damaging to kings (mehanzqat malkin),' causing harm to royal interests. Verse 4:22 urges action 'lest damage to kings (lehanzaqat malkin) grow greater'—preventing further harm. The verb thus covers both suffering loss oneself and causing injury to others' interests. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION
en: and-damaging, suffering-loss, to-harm | es: dañará., para-perjuicio-de, pérdida | fr: [ומהנזקת], [להנזקת], [תהנזק] | de: [ומהנזקת], [להנזקת], [נזק] Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:22; Dan 6:2

נֶזֶק H5143 Prep-b / N-msc (1×)
damage, injury — harm or loss, especially financial detriment
This Aramaic loan-word appears only in Esther, where Haman argues to the king that destroying the Jews would not compensate for the damage (financial loss) to the royal interests. The term comes from Persian administrative vocabulary, fitting Esther's court setting. It indicates measurable harm or loss, whether economic or otherwise. The phrase captures Esther's argument that saving her people actually serves the king's advantage.

(1×) A masculine noun meaning 'injury, damage, loss' found in Esther 7:4, part of Esther's plea to King Ahasuerus. She argues that if her people were merely being sold into slavery, she wouldn't trouble the king, 'for the adversary is not worthy of the damage to the king'—i.e., the harm to royal interests. This is an Aramaic loanword (related to Biblical Aramaic נָזָק), likely borrowed from Persian administrative terminology. The context is economic/political rather than physical injury. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-the-damage-of | es: al-daño-de | fr: [בנזק] | de: [בנזק] Esth 7:4

נָזַר H5144a Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3mp (5×)

to dedicate or consecrate oneself; to separate for sacred purposes or in apostasy

This Niphal form carries the reflexive force of setting oneself apart for a sacred purpose — or, tragically, for an unholy one. At Hosea 9:10 Israel 'consecrated themselves' to the shameful Baal, while in Ezekiel 14:7 the apostate 'separates himself' from the Lord. Leviticus 22:2 and 15:31 use the same root for priestly separation from holy things to avoid profanation. The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'apartaréis' and English 'separates-himself' — underscores the reflexive, volitional nature of the act.

(5×) To dedicate or devote oneself to a deity or sacred purpose, whether legitimate or idolatrous. At Hosea 9:10 Israel consecrated themselves to Baal-peor; Spanish 'consagrándome' and English 'consecrated-themselves' preserve the reflexive devotional force. Zechariah 7:3 uses the infinitive absolute for ritual abstinence in a fasting context. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: and-consecrated-themselves, and-separates-himself, and-they-shall-separate-themselves | es: Y-apartaréis, consagrándome, y-se-apartarán | fr: [הנזר], [וינזרו] | de: [הנזר], [וינזר], [וינזרו] Lev 15:31; Lev 22:2; Ezek 14:7; Hos 9:10; Zech 7:3

נָזַר H5144b Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3ms (5×)

to live as a Nazirite; to take or observe a vow of consecrated abstinence

Exclusively found in Numbers 6, this Hiphil denominative from nazir describes the formal act of undertaking or maintaining a Nazirite vow. The vow involves abstaining from wine and grape products, avoiding contact with the dead, and letting the hair grow uncut. Spanish 'separarse' and 'separará' capture the core idea of setting oneself apart, while the repeated phrase 'to the LORD' in the Hebrew anchors every use in devoted service to God.

(5×) To undertake or maintain a Nazirite vow of consecrated abstinence before the LORD. All five occurrences appear in the Nazirite legislation of Numbers 6. The vow entails separation from wine (Num 6:3), uncut hair (6:5), and corpse impurity (6:6). Spanish 'para separarse' and 'se separará' convey the self-imposed discipline, while 'to the LORD' (lYHWH) marks the devotional orientation of each instance (6:2, 5, 6, 12). SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: and-shall-separate, he-separates, he-shall-separate | es: para-separarse, se-separará, se-separe | fr: et-devra-séparer, il-devra-séparer, il-separates | de: er-separates, er-soll-absondern, sein-separating Num 6:2; Num 6:3; Num 6:5; Num 6:6; Num 6:12

נֵזֶר H5145 N-msc / 2fs (25×)

Consecration or Nazirite separation; also a crown or diadem signifying royal or priestly authority.

A word whose two senses are united by the idea of being set apart. In Numbers 6 it denotes the Nazirite's consecration — the period and status of being separated unto the LORD, marked by uncut hair and abstinence from wine. Spanish 'nazareato' and French 'consecration/separation' render this votive sense clearly. The same root yields the physical crown or diadem — the golden plate on the high priest's turban (Exod 29:6; Lev 8:9) and the royal crown taken from Saul's head (2 Sam 1:10). Whether the unshorn hair of the Nazirite or the golden diadem of king and priest, the nezer marks its wearer as consecrated — set apart for a sacred purpose.

1. Nazirite consecration, separation (14×) The state of Nazirite consecration or separation — the vowed period of being set apart for the LORD, concentrated entirely in Numbers 6. The term encompasses the whole status: the uncut hair (v. 5), the avoidance of corpse-defilement (vv. 7-9), and the completion rituals (vv. 12-19). Spanish 'nazareato' and French 'separation/consecration' consistently distinguish this cultic-votive sense. Jeremiah 7:29 uses the feminine suffix ('your consecrated hair'), linking the physical sign to the abstract state. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: consecration-of, his-separation, your-consecrated-hair | es: nazareato-de, nazareato-de-él, tu-cabellera | fr: [נזרך], consecration-de, son-separation | de: Weihung-von, [נזרך], sein-separation Num 6:4; Num 6:5; Num 6:7; Num 6:8; Num 6:9

2. crown, diadem (11×) A physical crown or diadem worn as a sign of royal or priestly authority. The high priest's golden plate is called 'the nezer of holiness' (Exod 29:6; 39:30; Lev 8:9), and the royal crown appears at 2 Samuel 1:10, 2 Kings 11:12, and in the psalms (89:40; 132:18). Spanish shifts to 'corona' here, and Zechariah 9:16 speaks of 'stones of a crown' adorning the redeemed. The connection to sense 1 is that both the Nazirite's hair and the king's diadem are outward marks of consecrated status. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-crown, crown-of, his-crown | es: corona, corona-de-el, corona-de-él | fr: [הנזר], consécration, couronne | de: [הנזר], [נזר], crown-von Exod 29:6; Exod 39:30; Lev 8:9; Lev 21:12; 2Sam 1:10

נֹחַ H5146 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (46×)

Noah — the righteous patriarch who built the ark and survived the great flood, ancestor of all post-flood humanity

Noakh is the name of the man who stands at the hinge between the old world and the new. Its 46 occurrences concentrate overwhelmingly in Genesis 5-10, tracing his story from the naming oracle — 'this one shall bring us relief (nakham) from our work' (Gen 5:29, a folk etymology playing on the root n-kh-m rather than the actual root n-w-kh, 'rest') — through the building of the ark, the flood, the covenant of the rainbow, and the vineyard episode. Outside Genesis, Noah appears sparingly but with great weight: Ezekiel groups him with Daniel and Job as paragons of individual righteousness who could save only themselves (Ezek 14:14, 20), and Isaiah uses 'the waters of Noah' as shorthand for the flood itself (Isa 54:9). The name is uniformly transliterated: Spanish 'Noe,' French 'Noe,' German 'Noach.'

Noah (person name) (46×) The proper name Noah (noakh, related to nuakh 'rest'), referring exclusively to the antediluvian patriarch who found favor with God, built the ark, and became the sole survivor through whom humanity was preserved (Gen 6:8-9:29). His genealogical placement as tenth from Adam (Gen 5:29-32) and father of Shem, Ham, and Japheth makes him the bridge between the primeval and the post-flood epochs. Outside Genesis, he serves as a byword for exceptional righteousness (Ezek 14:14, 20 alongside Daniel and Job) and his flood as a type of God's irrevocable covenant mercy (Isa 54:9). All 46 occurrences refer to this single individual, with 1 Chronicles 1:4 placing him in the Chronicler's genealogical framework. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Noach, Noah | es: Noaj | fr: Noé | de: Noach, Noachs, an-Noach Gen 5:29; Gen 5:30; Gen 5:32; Gen 6:8

נַחְבִי H5147 N-proper-ms (1×)

Nahbi — the representative from the tribe of Naphtali among the twelve spies sent to scout Canaan

Nahbi appears only in Numbers' list of the twelve spies Moses sent to explore the Promised Land. As Naphtali's representative, he was among those who brought back the discouraging report that led to Israel's forty-year wilderness wandering. The name may relate to being hidden or to prophetic speech, but its etymology remains uncertain.

(1×) A personal name identifying the Naphtalite spy in Numbers 13:14 (note: the verse reference is given as 13:4 in the source, but textually this appears at 13:14). He was son of Vophsi and represented his tribe in the reconnaissance mission to Canaan. Like most of his fellow spies (except Joshua and Caleb), he likely participated in the negative report that provoked Israel's unbelief. The name's meaning is unclear, though roots related to 'hiding' or 'prophesying' have been suggested. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nahbi | es: Najbi | fr: Nahbi | de: Nahbi Num 13:14

נָחָה H5148 V-Hifil-Imperf-3fs (39×)

To lead, guide, or conduct along a path; of God guiding his people, or of settling someone in a place

A verb of purposeful guidance that appears most memorably in contexts of divine leading. God led Israel not by the way of the Philistines but through the wilderness (Exod 13:17), and in the Song of the Sea, 'You in your lovingkindness led the people whom you redeemed' (Exod 15:13). The Psalms turn this into personal prayer: 'Lead me in your righteousness' (Ps 5:8), 'Lead me in an everlasting way' (Ps 139:24). Unlike the more general 'halak' (to walk), this root implies an agent actively directing the course – shepherd-like guidance with a destination in view. Spanish 'guiar/conducir' and French 'conduire' both convey the combination of motion and purposeful direction. In rare instances (1 Kgs 10:26; 2 Kgs 18:11), the verb extends beyond journey to settlement – leading people to a place and establishing them there.

1. lead, guide along a way (36×) The dominant sense: leading or guiding someone along a path, route, or way of life, often with God as the subject. God led Israel through the wilderness (Exod 13:17, 21), guided them to his holy dwelling (Exod 15:13), and shepherded them by the hand of Moses and Aaron (Ps 77:20). The Psalms apply this to individual petition – 'lead me in a level path' (Ps 27:11), 'guide me in your truth' (Ps 25:5). Spanish 'guiar/conducir' and German 'fuhren' capture the purposive, directional quality. The verb presupposes a guide who knows the way and a follower who depends on that knowledge. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: You-led, You-will-guide-me, and-guiding-them | es: Guiaste, Y-los-condujo, Y-los-guió | fr: [להנחתם], conduire, conduire-eux | de: [להנחתם], [תנחם], führte Gen 24:27; Gen 24:48; Exod 13:17; Exod 13:21; Exod 15:13

2. settle, station in a place (2×) An extended sense of settling or stationing people at a destination after leading them there. Solomon 'stationed' chariots in chariot cities (1 Kgs 10:26), and the king of Assyria 'settled' Israelite captives in foreign cities (2 Kgs 18:11). The emphasis shifts from the journey to its endpoint – placement and habitation. Spanish 'asentar/colocar' distinguishes this from mere guiding, marking the administrative or military character of the placement. PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: and-he-settled-them, and-he-stationed-them | es: y-los-asentó, y-los-colocó | fr: et-il-settled-eux, et-il-stationed-eux | de: und-er-settled-ihnen, und-er-stationed-ihnen 1Kgs 10:26; 2Kgs 18:11

3. (1×) A single obscure occurrence in Balaam's oracle (Num 23:7), where Balak 'brought me' from Aram. The verse uses the verb in a context of summoning a prophet to a specific location for a specific purpose. The sense is close to sense 1 but colored by the coercive overtone of a king conscripting a seer, and the passage's broader irony – Balak leads Balaam to curse, but God leads Balaam to bless. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: brings-me | es: me-trajo | fr: brings-moi | de: brings-mich Num 23:7

נַחוּם H5149 N-proper-ms (1×)

Nehum — a leader who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel

Nehum appears in Nehemiah's list of returnees, parallel to a name in Ezra's account (Rehum). The name means 'comfort' or 'consolation,' appropriate for those returning from exile to rebuild. Such variations between parallel lists are common in Chronicles-Ezra-Nehemiah literature, reflecting different textual traditions or actual name variants used by the same person.

(1×) A personal name in Nehemiah 7:7, identifying one of the leaders who returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel. The name derives from the root נחם (comfort, console). The parallel list in Ezra 2:2 has רְחוּם (Rehum) instead, suggesting either textual variation or that individuals sometimes bore multiple names. Ancient Greek versions render this as Ναουμ (Naoum), showing the name's continuity into the Second Temple period. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7741 WITH 3 SENSES en: Nehum | es: Nehum | fr: [נחום] | de: Nahum Neh 7:7

נֹחוּם H5150 N-mpc / 1cs (3×)

Comfort, consolation, or compassionate feeling toward someone suffering

This noun describes both the comfort offered to those in distress and the internal stirring of compassion. Isaiah promises God will restore and give 'comfort' to mourners. Hosea uses it for God's internal conflict: 'my heart recoils within me; my compassion grows warm and tender'—the divine struggle between judgment and mercy. Zechariah records 'comforting words' the angel speaks. The term captures both the emotional movement toward the suffering and the verbal or active expression of consolation.

(3×) Comfort, consolation, or compassion. Isaiah 57:18 promises restoration: 'I will heal him; I will lead him and restore comfort to him and his mourners'—divine consolation after discipline. Hosea 11:8 expresses God's anguish: 'My heart recoils within me; my compassion grows warm and tender'—internal stirring of mercy. Zechariah 1:13 records: 'the LORD answered the angel with comforting words'—gracious, reassuring speech. The Spanish 'consuelos' and French 'consolation' both mean solace, while the Hosea usage shows the emotional root of compassion. COMFORT AND ENCOURAGEMENT
en: comforting, comforts, my-compassions | es: consuelos, de-consuelo, miscompasiones | fr: [נחמים], consolation | de: [נחומי], [נחמים] Isa 57:18; Hos 11:8; Zech 1:13

נַחוּם H5151 N-proper-ms (1×)

Nahum — the prophet who authored the oracle against Nineveh

Nahum's name means 'comfort' or 'consolation,' though his prophecy is hardly comforting—at least not to Nineveh. The book opens by identifying him as 'the Elkoshite,' though the location of Elkosh remains uncertain. His oracle celebrates Nineveh's coming destruction, offering comfort to Judah by announcing judgment on their oppressor. The prophetic book is a masterpiece of Hebrew poetry describing divine vengeance.

(1×) The personal name of the prophet in Nahum 1:1, introducing the entire book. The name derives from נחם (comfort), and some scholars see this as programmatic—Nahum brings comfort to Judah by announcing Nineveh's fall. Ancient versions consistently render this as Naoum or similar. The prophet's historical setting is likely the late 7th century BC, between Assyria's destruction of Thebes (663 BC, mentioned in 3:8) and Nineveh's fall (612 BC, predicted throughout the book). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7741 WITH 3 SENSES
en: Nahum | es: Nahum | fr: Nahum | de: Nahum Nah 1:1

נָחוֹר H5152 N-proper-ms (18×)

Nahor: the name of two patriarchal figures, Abraham's grandfather and brother.

A proper masculine name of uncertain etymology, borne by two important figures in Israel's ancestry. The first Nahor is Abraham's grandfather, the son of Serug and father of Terah (Gen 11:22-25; 1 Chr 1:26). The second and more prominent Nahor is Abraham's brother, also a son of Terah, who married Milcah and fathered Bethuel, grandfather of Rebekah and Laban (Gen 22:20-23; 24:15, 24, 47). The 'city of Nahor' where Abraham's servant finds Rebekah (Gen 24:10) likely refers to a settlement in upper Mesopotamia associated with this family line. In the covenant between Jacob and Laban, both invoke 'the God of Nahor' alongside 'the God of Abraham' (Gen 31:53). The Septuagint consistently renders the name as Nachor.

Nahor (person name) (18×) Proper noun identifying two figures in the patriarchal genealogy: (1) Abraham's grandfather, son of Serug (Gen 11:22-25; 1 Chr 1:26), and (2) Abraham's brother, son of Terah, whose descendants include Rebekah and Laban (Gen

22:20-23; 24:15, 47). The 'city of Nahor' (Gen 24:10) locates the family in upper Mesopotamia. Notably, Laban invokes 'the God of Nahor' as a distinct ancestral deity in the Mizpah covenant (Gen 31:53). Multilingual glosses transliterate consistently: Spanish 'Nacor/Najor,' French 'Nahor,' German 'Nachor.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nachor, Nahor, and-Nahor | es: Nachor, Nacor, Najor | fr: Nahor, [נחור], et-Nahor | de: Nachor, Nachors, Nahor Gen 11:22; Gen 11:23; Gen 11:24; Gen 11:25; Gen 11:26

נָחוּשׁ H5153 Adj-ms (1×)

of bronze, made of bronze — describing something with the strength and endurance of bronze

This adjective appears in Job's complaint about his suffering. He asks rhetorically whether his flesh is bronze—whether he has the superhuman strength to endure endless affliction. Bronze represented durability and strength in the ancient world, used for tools, weapons, and construction. Job's point is clear: he's only human, lacking the metallic resilience to withstand such trials indefinitely.

(1×) An adjective meaning 'of bronze' in Job 6:12, part of Job's rhetorical questions about his capacity to endure. He asks, 'Is my strength the strength of stones? Is my flesh bronze?' The expected answer is no—Job is flesh and blood, not mineral or metal. Later in Job (40:18), bronze again symbolizes extraordinary strength when describing Behemoth's bones. The adjective form derives from the common noun נְחֹשֶׁת (copper, bronze). BRONZE AND COPPER

en: bronze | es: de-bronce | fr: נחוש | de: [נחוש] Job 6:12

נְחוּשָׁה H5154 Prep-k (10×)

Copper or bronze; a poetic term for the metal used figuratively for strength, hardness, or unyielding obstinacy.

A poetic synonym for the more common necosheth, referring to copper or its alloy bronze. Job 28:2 describes copper being smelted from ore, while in martial imagery a warrior bends a 'bow of bronze' (2 Sam 22:35; Ps 18:35). The word carries rich figurative force: behemoth's bones are like 'tubes of bronze' (Job 40:18), Zion's hoofs become bronze to crush oppressors (Mic 4:13), and an obstinate forehead is called bronze (Isa 48:4). The curse of Leviticus 26:19 threatens that the sky will become like bronze—unyielding and rainless. Spanish 'bronce' and English 'bronze/copper' consistently reflect the metallic referent.

bronze, copper (metal) (10×) Copper or bronze as a metal, used exclusively in poetic and elevated language. Literally it denotes copper smelted from rock (Job 28:2) and bronze as a material for weapons like bows (2 Sam 22:35 = Ps 18:35) and gates (Isa 45:2). Figuratively, it connotes immense strength (Job 40:18, behemoth's bones), invincible aggression (Mic 4:13, Zion's hoofs), stubborn obstinacy (Isa 48:4, a brow of bronze), and divine curse rendering the earth barren (Lev 26:19). Both Spanish 'bronce' and German 'Bronze' preserve the straightforward metallic sense, while the figurative extensions are carried by context. BRONZE AND COPPER

en: bronze, copper, like-bronze | es: bronce, bronce., como-bronce | fr: [נחושה], airain, bronze | de: Bronze, [נחושה], bronze Lev 26:19; 2Sam 22:35; Job 20:24; Job 28:2; Job 40:18

נְחִילָה H5155 Art / N-fp (1×)

flutes — wind instruments, possibly used in temple worship

This term appears in the heading of Psalm 5, in the phrase 'to the flutes' or 'for the flutes,' apparently a musical or liturgical instruction. The word's meaning is uncertain—it may derive from a root meaning 'inherit' or 'play the flute.' Ancient interpreters disagreed: some read it as referring to wind instruments, others as a melodic designation. Such superscriptions preserve liturgical terminology whose precise meanings were already obscure by late antiquity.

(1×) A plural feminine noun in Psalm 5:1's superscription, most likely meaning 'flutes' (wind instruments), though its interpretation is disputed. The phrase 'to/for the flutes' (אֶל־הַנְּחִילוֹת) probably indicates musical accompaniment. Some connect this to חָלִיל (flute, pipe), which makes phonetic sense. Ancient versions struggled: the Greek read 'concerning the inheritance' (connecting to נַחֲלָה), while Jerome rendered 'for the inheritances.' The term likely preserves ancient musical/liturgical vocabulary. FLUTE PIPE INSTRUMENT

en: the-flutes | es: las-flautas | fr: le-flûte | de: der-flutes Ps 5:1

נָחִיר H5156 Prep-m / N-mdc / 3ms (1×)

nostrils — the dual openings of the nose, especially as the source of breath and anger

This noun appears in Job's description of Leviathan, the great sea creature from whose nostrils smoke streams. Hebrew typically uses the dual form for body parts that come in pairs, and nostrils naturally fit this pattern. Beyond anatomy, nostrils carry symbolic freight in Hebrew—they're the seat of anger (literally 'nose-burning') and the channel of life-breath. Here they emphasize Leviathan's terrifying, almost draconic nature.

(1×) The dual masculine noun with possessive suffix 'his nostrils' in Job 41:20, describing how smoke comes from Leviathan's nose. The term derives from a root possibly meaning 'perforate' or related to snorting/breathing forcefully. In Job's poetic description, Leviathan's nostrils emit smoke like a boiling pot, adding to the creature's fearsome, mythic-sounding qualities. The dual form is standard for paired body parts in Hebrew. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: From-his-nostrils | es: De-sus-narices | fr: de-son-מנחיריו-lui | de: [מנחיריו] Job 41:20

נָחַל H5157 V-Hifil-Perf-1cs (59×)

To inherit, take possession of, give as inheritance; spans receiving a hereditary portion, distributing land, and bequeathing property.

Nachal is the verb that anchors the entire theology of land promise in the Hebrew Bible. From God's oath to Abraham through the tribal allotments under Joshua, this word carries the weight of divinely granted inheritance. Its stems track the full lifecycle of property transfer: the Qal describes receiving an inheritance, the Hifil describes bestowing one, the Piel covers the administrative act of distributing shares, and the Hitpael captures the reflexive act of claiming one's own portion. The multilingual evidence is revealing — Spanish consistently reaches for heredar ('inherit'), Arabic mirrors the Hebrew stems precisely with warithaFortunately (Form I for receiving, Form IV awratha for causing to inherit), and Korean deploys both 상속하다 ('inherit') and 기업으로 주다 ('give as a heritage'). The word never strays far from its concrete rootage in land and territory, even when metaphorically extended to Yahweh himself as Israel's 'inheritance' (Num 18:20).

1. Qal: to inherit, receive as possession (27×) The core Qal sense of receiving or inheriting property, land, or a portion as a hereditary grant. This covers both the foundational promise passages — 'your seed shall inherit it' (Exod 32:13) — and the practical tribal allotments. Arabic warithaFortunately (Form I) confirms the simple receptive meaning, while Korean uniformly selects 상속하다 ('to inherit') and Spanish heredar ('to inherit'). The Qal passive participle extends to possessing Zion (Ps 69:36) and inheriting 'the land' as eschatological promise (Isa 57:13). Twenty-seven occurrences anchor this as the unmarked, default sense. INHERITING AND POSSESSING en: and-inherited, and-they-will-inherit, and-will-inherit | es: Heredan, Y-heredaron, Y-heredará | fr: donner-en-héritage, et-hérita, et-hériter | de: [ונחלתם], [ינחל], [ינחלו] Exod 23:30; Exod 32:13; Exod 34:9; Num 18:20; Num 18:23

2. Hifil: to give as inheritance, cause to inherit (17×) The Hifil causative: to give someone an inheritance, to cause to possess, to bestow land as a hereditary grant. Concentrated in Deuteronomy's Moses speeches (Deut 1:38; 3:28; 12:10; 19:3; 21:16), where Moses commissions Joshua to 'cause Israel to inherit' the land. Arabic Form IV awratha ('to make someone inherit') mirrors the Hebrew morphology exactly. Spanish usar dará en herencia ('will give as inheritance') and French faire hériter distinguish this clearly from simple receiving. The theological weight is enormous: it is God who ultimately 'causes to inherit,' with human leaders as intermediaries. INHERITING AND POSSESSING en: He-causes-them-to-inherit, I-caused-to-inherit, I-gave-as-an-inheritance | es: cuando-hizo-heredar, dará-en-herencia, deja-herencia | fr: Il-causes-eux-à-hérite, [והנחלתם], causing-à-hériter | de: He-causes-ihnen-zu-inherit, [הנחלתי], [והנחלתי] Deut 1:38; Deut 3:28; Deut 12:10; Deut 19:3; Deut 21:16

3. Hitpael: to take possession, possess for oneself (7×) The Hitpael reflexive-reciprocal sense: to take possession for oneself, to possess as one's own, or to divide an inheritance among one another. Found in legal-administrative contexts — the tribes 'possessing for themselves' within Canaan (Num 33:54; 34:13) and the perpetual possession rule of Leviticus 25:46. French avoir hérité and German sich erben both capture the reflexive self-possessing nuance. Seven occurrences, concentrated in Numbers and Leviticus land-distribution legislation. INHERITING AND POSSESSING en: and-will-possess-them, and-you-shall-bequeath, and-you-shall-inherit | es: Y-heredaréis, Y-los-heredaréis, heredar | fr: avoir-hérita, et-donner-en-héritage, et-tu-devra-bequeath | de: [והתנחלום], [תתנחלו], du-soll-erben Lev 25:46; Num 32:18; Num 33:54; Num 34:13

4. Piel: to apportion, distribute inheritance (7×) The Piel factitive sense: to apportion, distribute, or parcel out an inheritance among recipients. Distinguished from the Hifil by its focus on the administrative act of dividing rather than the act of granting. Arabic Form II qassama ('to divide, distribute') appears in the multilingual renderings, confirming an apportioning nuance distinct from bestowing. Found especially in Numbers 34 (the land commission) and Joshua 13-19 (the tribal allotments under Eleazar and Joshua). Seven occurrences define this as the bureaucratic counterpart to the Hifil's sovereign bestowal. INHERITING AND POSSESSING en: gave-as-inheritance, inherited, shall-apportion | es: de-heredar, heredarán, les-hicieron-heredar | fr: devra-apportion, donna-comme-héritage, hérita | de: erbte, gab-wie-Erbe, soll-apportion Num 34:17; Num 34:18; Num 34:29; Josh 13:32; Josh 14:1

5. (1×) A single ambiguous occurrence at Job 7:3 where Job laments being 'allotted' months of emptiness. The passive or stative coloring here — being assigned a portion one did not choose — sets it apart from both active receiving and active distributing. Spanish he heredado ('I have inherited') and English 'I have been allotted' both capture the involuntary, fate-like quality. This may represent a Hifil or Hofal passive nuance: being made to possess something unwanted, extending the inheritance metaphor into the domain of suffering. INHERITING AND POSSESSING en: I-have-been-allotted | es: he-heredado | fr: hériter | de: [הנחלתי] Job 7:3

נַחַל H5158a Prep-b (140×)

Wadi, torrent-valley, brook – a seasonal watercourse or ravine, sometimes a perennial stream, and poetically a rushing torrent of floodwater.

Nachal names one of the most distinctive features of the Levantine landscape: the seasonal watercourse that carves a valley through rock, flows as a brook in rainy months, and dries to bare stone in summer. Most of its 140 occurrences (~82x) denote a named or generic wadi – the Kidron, Arnon, Besor, Eshcol – as both watercourse and geographic marker. But nachal can also emphasize the valley itself as terrain (Gen 26:17, the valley of Gerar), describe a perennial river or stream in contexts of abundance (Deut 8:7, 'a land of brooks of water'), or evoke the terrifying torrent of flash-flood waters in poetry (Ps 124:4, 'the torrent would have swept over us'). Arabic preserves a similar split between wadi (seasonal) and nahr (perennial), while Korean distinguishes 시내 (brook) from 급류 (torrent).

1. wadi, seasonal brook (82×) Wadi or seasonal brook (~82x) – the default and most frequent sense, covering named wadis (Kidron, Arnon, Besor, Eshcol, Zered) and generic seasonal watercourses. Deut 2:13-14 tracks Israel's crossing of the wadi Zered; 1 Sam 30:9-10 uses the wadi Besor as a staging point. Arabic وادي (wadi) and French torrent-de both render this geographic-hydrological sense. The construct chain nachal + place-name is the characteristic formula, appearing in boundary descriptions and travel narratives throughout the Pentateuch and historical books. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: -the-wadi-of, brook-of, wadi-of | es: Arroyo-de, arroyo, arroyo-de | fr: -le-wadi-de, brook-de, torrent-de | de: -der-Wadi-von, Bach-von, Wadi-von Deut 2:13; Deut 2:14; Deut 2:24; Deut 2:36

2. valley, ravine (28×) Valley or ravine (~28x) – emphasis shifts from the watercourse to the landform carved by it: the depression, gorge, or narrow valley as geographic terrain. Gen 26:17 places Isaac camping 'in the valley of Gerar'; Num 13:23-24 names the valley of Eshcol where the spies cut the famous grape cluster. Spanish el-valle and German Tal confirm the topographic rather than hydrological focus. This sense predominates in settlement narratives and land descriptions where the terrain matters more than the water. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-Valley-of, in-the-valley, in-the-wadis | es: arroyo, arroyo-de, el-valle | fr: dans-Valley-de, dans-le-vallée, dans-vallée-de | de: Bach, Tal-von, der-wadis Gen 26:17; Gen 26:19; Num 13:23; Num 13:24; Num 21:12

3. river, perennial stream (19×) River or perennial stream (~19x) – a sustained, year-round watercourse larger than a seasonal brook, used for rivers of abundance and blessing. Deut 8:7 promises 'a land of brooks (nechalim) of water, of springs and deeps'; Lev 11:9-10 uses it for freshwater habitats of aquatic creatures. Arabic نهر (river) and Korean 강/시내 distinguish this from seasonal flow. In wisdom literature, nachal becomes metaphorical for inexhaustible supply (Ps 36:9, 'the river of your delights'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-from-river-of, and-in-the-streams, her-streams | es: arroyos, arroyos-de, de-arroyos-de | fr: de-ruisseaux-de, et-dans-le-ruisseaux, et-torrent | de: Bach, Baeche, der-Baeche Lev 11:9; Lev 11:10; Deut 8:7; Deut 10:7; 1Kgs 18:5

4. torrent, rushing floodwater (11×) Torrent or rushing floodwater (~11x) – the violent, destructive surge of water through a wadi during a cloudburst, used in similes of overwhelming power. Ps 124:4 warns 'the torrent would have swept over us'; 2 Sam 22:5 / Ps 18:4 describe 'torrents of destruction' engulfing the psalmist. Arabic سيل (torrent/flood) and Korean 급류 (rapids) both capture the dangerous, sudden force. Isa 30:28 compares God's breath to 'an overflowing torrent' reaching the neck – imagery of inescapable judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-torrent, and-like-a-torrent, and-streams | es: como-arroyo, como-torrente, como-torrente-de | fr: et-torrent, torrent, torrents-de | de: Bach, ein-Tal, torrents-von 2Sam 22:5; Ps 18:4; Ps 78:20; Ps 124:4; Isa 30:28

נָחָל H5158b Prep-k / N-mp (1×)

palm trees — the tall, spreading date palms characteristic of oasis landscapes

In Balaam's oracle blessing Israel, he describes their tents spread out like valleys—or according to this interpretation, like palm groves. The Arabic cognate clearly means palm trees, and the image of palms spreading their fronds fits the parallel of valleys extending. Palm trees symbolized fertility, prosperity, and oasis beauty in desert regions. The text may intentionally evoke both meanings: Israel spreads like wadis and like palm plantations.

(1×) A proposed reading in Numbers 24:6 taking כְּנָחָלִים to mean 'like palm trees' rather than 'like wadis/valleys.' Arabic نخل (nakhl) clearly means 'palm tree,' and the imagery of palms spreading their foliage parallels 'gardens beside a river.' Some scholars see a double meaning: Israel is like both valleys (wadis) and palm groves—both suggesting expansion and fertility. Ben Sira 50:12 may allude to this when comparing priests to 'palm branches by a wadi.' GRASS AND VEGETATION en: like-valleys | es: Como-valles | fr: comme-vallées | de: wie-Taeler Num 24:6

נַחֲלָה H5159 Prep-l / N-fsc / 3ms (222×)

Inheritance, possession; allotted land or estate; covenantal heritage where God or his people are the treasured portion.

Nakhalah speaks of permanent, inalienable possession — most often the tribal allotments of the promised land (Num 27:7; Josh 13-19), but also the astonishing covenant claim that God himself is one's inheritance (Ps 16:5-6) or that Israel is God's own heritage (Deut 4:20). Spanish heredad and herencia, French héritage, and German Erbe all capture this deep connection between identity and land. The word binds together property law, family loyalty, and divine promise into a single concept that runs like a thread from Genesis to the Psalms.

1. inherited land or property (170×) Concrete allotted territory or estate received as a permanent possession — typically the tribal and familial land distributed in Canaan. Rendered consistently as 'inheritance' (heredad/herencia in Spanish, héritage in French, Erbe in German), this sense dominates in Numbers, Joshua, and Deuteronomy (e.g., Num 27:7 'give them a possession of an inheritance'; Josh 13:23 'the inheritance of the children of Reuben'). The land is not merely owned but divinely granted and protected by law against permanent alienation. INHERITANCE AND PROPERTY en: an-inheritance, as-inheritance, inheritance | es: como-heredad, como-herencia, heredad | fr: comme-héritage, héritage, un-héritage | de: Erbe, ein-Erbe, wie-Erbe Num 16:14; Num 18:23; Num 18:24; Num 26:62; Num 27:7

2. heritage as covenant portion (52×) Metaphorical or covenantal inheritance expressing relational belonging rather than physical land. God declares Israel to be 'my inheritance' (Deut 4:20; 1 Kgs 8:51), and the psalmist responds that God himself is 'my portion and my inheritance' (Ps 16:5-6). French mon héritage and Spanish mi heredad carry the same possessive intimacy. This reciprocal usage — God possessing Israel, Israel possessing God — is one of the most theologically charged patterns in the Hebrew Bible (cf. Exod 15:17; Num 18:20). INHERITANCE AND PROPERTY
en: My-inheritance, and-inheritance, and-your-inheritance | es: Y-herencia, heredad-mi, mi-heredad | fr: et-héritage, et-ton-héritage, mon-héritage | de: dein-Erbe, mein-Erbe, und-Erbe Gen 31:14; Exod 15:17; Num 18:20; Num 18:26; Num 32:19

נַחֲלִיאֵל H5160 N-proper-fs (2×)

Nahaliel; wilderness station meaning 'valley of God' or 'palm of El'

This place name marks one of Israel's camping sites during the wilderness wandering, located east of the Dead Sea (Numbers 21:19). The name's meaning—either 'valley of God' or 'palm of El'—reflects the geographic feature it commemorates. Scholars have tentatively identified it with Wadi Wale, one of the Arnon River's main tributaries. The double occurrence in the single verse reflects the typical itinerary formula: from one place and to another, then from that place to the next.

(2×) This location appears in the wilderness itinerary as Israel moved toward the Arnon valley and Moabite territory (Num 21:19). The verse structure—'from Mattanah to Nahaliel, and from Nahaliel to Bamoth'—accounts for both occurrences. If the name means 'valley (nakhal) of God,' it may preserve a memory of a significant wadi; if 'palm (nakhal could be related to date palm) of El,' it might reference vegetation at an oasis. The theophoric element 'El' suggests the site held some sacred or memorable significance for the ancient Israelites. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nahaliel, and-from-Nahaliel | es: Nahaliel, y-de-Nahaliel | fr: Nahaliel, et-de-Nahaliel | de: Nahaliel, und-von-Nahaliel Num 21:19

הַנֶּחֱלָמִי H5161 Art / N-proper-ms (3×)

Nehelamite; gentilic designation for Shemaiah, the prophet who opposed Jeremiah in Babylon

This gentilic adjective identifies Shemaiah as 'the Nehelamite' in Jeremiah's correspondence with the exiles in Babylon. The root place-name Nehelam is not otherwise attested in Scripture, suggesting either a family name or an obscure village. Jeremiah pronounces judgment against Shemaiah the Nehelamite for prophesying falsely and counseling rebellion against the word of the LORD. The consistent multilingual rendering as a proper gentilic designation (Spanish 'nejlamita', French 'Néhélam') confirms this as an identifying epithet rather than a common noun.

(3×) A gentilic designation appearing exclusively in Jeremiah 29, identifying the false prophet Shemaiah who opposed Jeremiah's message to the Babylonian exiles. The three occurrences cluster in verses 24-32, where Jeremiah condemns Shemaiah for sending unauthorized letters claiming divine authority. The term functions as a proper identifying epithet, possibly derived from an otherwise unknown place Nehelam or representing a family lineage. Translations consistently treat this as a formal designation requiring transliteration rather than translation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Nehelamite | es: el-nejlamita | fr: Néhélam | de: [הנחלמי] Jer 29:24; Jer 29:31; Jer 29:32

נחם H5162 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (108×)

To comfort, console; to relent or repent; to have compassion — covering solace given, divine change of course, and reflexive self-comfort.

One of the Old Testament's most emotionally charged roots, נחם spans the full arc from giving comfort to receiving it, from divine repentance to human compassion. In the Piel, it is the classic word for comforting mourners — as when Joseph consoled his brothers (Gen 50:21) or David was comforted after Bathsheba's child died (2 Sam 12:24). In the Niphal, it takes a dramatically different turn: God 'relents' or 'repents' of intended judgment, as at the golden calf episode (Exod 32:14) or through Amos's intercessions (Amos 7:3, 6). The Arabic cognate ´ means 'to breathe pantingly,' perhaps hinting at the deep sighing that accompanies both grief and change of heart. Spanish captures the split neatly between 'consolar' and 'arrepentirse.'

1. comfort, console (Piel) (51×) Piel stem: to comfort, console, or encourage someone in distress. This is the active transitive sense of providing emotional solace, used of both human and divine agents. Joseph comforts his brothers (Gen 50:21), Ruth is comforted by Boaz's kind words (Ruth 2:13), and God comforts his people (Isa 40:1). The multilingual evidence is unified: Spanish 'consolar,' French 'consoler,' German 'trösten,' and Arabic ىَّ all point to deliberate, other-directed encouragement. The famous 'Comfort, comfort my people' (Isa 40:1) uses this stem. REPENTANCE AND COMFORT
en: Comfort, a-comforter, comforter | es: Consolad, a-consolarlo, consolador | fr: [לנחמו], [מנחמים], comforters | de: Troester, comforters, troesten Gen 5:29; Gen 37:35; Gen 50:21; Ruth 2:13; 2Sam 10:2

2. relent, repent, change mind (Nifal) (35×) Niphal stem: to relent, repent, or change one's mind regarding a planned action. Most often predicated of God turning from intended judgment — 'the LORD relented concerning the disaster' (Exod 32:14; Amos 7:3, 6). Also used of humans regretting decisions (Gen 6:6-7, where God 'was sorry' he had made humanity). Spanish 'se arrepintió' and Korean 회개하다/뉘우치다 ('repent/regret') capture this sense, which is theologically distinct from comfort. The passage 1 Samuel 15:29 notably asserts God 'will not relent,' creating tension with the many passages where he does. REPENTANCE AND COMFORT
en: I-have-relented, I-regretted, I-repented | es: Se-arrepintió, Y-se-arrepintió, arrepentido | fr: Je-regretta, [וינחם], changer-mind | de: aendern-mind, der-troestete, es-reut-mich Gen 6:6; Gen 6:7; Exod 13:17; Exod 32:12; Exod 32:14

3. be comforted, receive comfort (Nifal) (10×) Niphal stem, medio-passive: to be comforted, to receive comfort or consolation. The subject is the recipient rather than the giver of comfort. Isaac 'was comforted' after Sarah's death when Rebekah came (Gen 24:67); Rachel 'refuses to be comforted' for her children (Jer 31:15). Spanish 'ser consolada,' French 'être consolé,' and German 'getröstet werden' all reflect this passive orientation. Distinguished from sense 1 by the reversal of agent and patient roles. REPENTANCE AND COMFORT
en: I-will-be-relieved, and-was-comforted, and-were-comforted | es: me-consolaré, se-consoló, ser-consolada | fr: consoler, et-consoler, et-était-consola | de: er-war-comforted, ich-troeste, troesten Gen 24:67; Gen 38:12; 2Sam 13:39; Ps 77:2; Isa 1:24

4. have compassion, be moved to pity (6×) To have compassion or be moved to pity — an extended emotional sense appearing in both Niphal and Hitpael contexts, expressing deep sympathetic sorrow or mercy toward suffering. In Deuteronomy 32:36, the LORD 'has compassion on his servants'; the judges whom God raised up were prompted by his being 'moved to pity' (Judg 2:18). Arabic ´ ('have mercy') and Spanish 'se compadeció' distinguish this from mere relenting or consolation. The emotional depth here is visceral rather than transactional. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: and-had-compassion, and-have-compassion, had-compassion | es: Y-se-arrepintieron, se-arrepintió, se-compadecerá | fr: avait-compassion, consoler, et-avait-compassion | de: er-war-bewegte-zu-pity, hatte-Erbarmen, tröstete Deut 32:36; Judg 2:18; Judg 21:6; Judg 21:15; Ps 90:13

5. comfort oneself, find comfort (Hitpael) (4×) Hitpael stem: to comfort oneself, to find or seek comfort. The reflexive of the Piel, where the subject actively pursues consolation. Esau 'comforted himself' with plans of revenge (Gen 27:42); Jacob refused to let himself be comforted over Joseph (Gen 37:35). The psalmist finds comfort by remembering God's ancient ordinances (Ps 119:52). Spanish 'consolándose' and German 'sich trösten' mirror this reflexive structure. A psychologically nuanced sense capturing the human effort to process grief. REPENTANCE AND COMFORT
en: and-I-am-comforted, and-I-shall-be-satisfied, comforting-himself | es: consolándose, ser-consolado, y-me-consolaré | fr: comforting-lui-même, et-consoler, à-être-consola | de: sich-trösten-zu-lassen, tröstet-sich, und-troesten Gen 27:42; Gen 37:35; Ps 119:52; Ezek 5:13

6. be comforted (Pual) (2×) Pual stem: to be comforted — the passive of the Piel, indicating that the subject receives comfort from an external agent. Only two clear instances: 'O afflicted one, not comforted' (Isa 54:11) and the promise 'you shall be comforted in Jerusalem' (Isa 66:13). Spanish 'seréis consolados' and German 'getröstet werden' confirm the fully passive meaning. Distinguished from Niphal passive (sense 3) by the Pual's emphasis on an external agent performing the comforting action. REPENTANCE AND COMFORT
en: comforted, you-shall-be-comforted | es: consolada, seréis-consolados | fr: consoler | de: troesten Isa 54:11; Isa 66:13

נַחַם H5163 N-proper-ms (1×)
Naham — a chieftain of Judah mentioned in Chronicles' genealogies
Naham appears only in 1 Chronicles among the descendants of Judah. The name means 'comfort' or 'consolation,' from the same root as Nehemiah and Nahum. Chronicles preserves many names found nowhere else, reflecting genealogical records that trace clan relationships. The Greek versions show textual variation, as is common with rare proper names.

(1×) A personal name in 1 Chronicles 4:19, identifying a Judahite leader or clan head. The name derives from נחם (comfort, console), making it semantically related to Nahum and Nehemiah. Ancient Greek manuscripts varied in their rendering (Ναχεθ, Ναχεμ, Ναουμ), suggesting uncertainty about the exact vocalization. The genealogical context links him to the families of Judah, but beyond the name itself, Scripture provides no further information about this individual. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nacham | es: Najam | fr: [נחם] | de: [נחם] 1Chr 4:19

נֹחַם H5164 N-ms (1×)
compassion, relenting — the turning from anger to mercy, or the remorse that accompanies repentance
This noun appears in Hosea's oracle where God declares, 'I will ransom them from Sheol… O Sheol, where is your compassion?' The term comes from the root meaning 'to repent, relent, be comforted.' It can indicate God's relenting from judgment or human remorse. In context, Hosea depicts God calling on Death and Sheol as instruments of judgment, demanding they show no mercy. The word captures that pivotal moment when anger might turn to compassion —which here, it doesn't.

(1×) A masculine noun meaning 'sorrow, repentance, relenting, compassion' in Hosea 13:14. In this difficult passage, God summons death and destruction against rebellious Israel, declaring that 'compassion is hidden from my eyes'—there will be no relenting from the coming judgment. The noun derives from נחם (comfort, repent, relent), which can indicate either human remorse or divine change of intention. The rhetoric here is fierce: even Sheol is commanded to show no compassion. MORAL GOODNESS
en: compassion | es: arrepentimiento | fr: repentance | de: troestete Hos 13:14

נֶחָמָה H5165 N-fsc / 1cs (2×)
comfort, consolation; that which soothes distress
This feminine noun signifies comfort or consolation, appearing only twice with the possessive 'my comfort.' Both Job and the psalmist use it to describe what sustains them in affliction. Job declares that even in crushing pain, 'this is my comfort'—specifically, that he hasn't denied God's words (Job 6:10). The psalmist testifies that God's promise 'is my comfort in my affliction' (Ps 119:50). The word comes from the root meaning 'to comfort, console,' related to the name Nehemiah ('Yah comforts').

(2×) Both speakers claim a singular source of comfort amid suffering. Job, arguing that his anguish is justified, still finds comfort in his integrity before God: 'This is my comfort... that I have not denied the words of the Holy One' (6:10). The psalmist in the great Torah psalm locates comfort in divine promise: 'This is my comfort in my affliction, for your word has given me life' (119:50). The possessive form 'my comfort' (nekhamati) appears identical in both texts, suggesting this was a standard way to express what sustains the soul. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'consuelo,' French 'consolation') confirms the emotional solace meaning. COMFORT AND ENCOURAGEMENT
en: is-my-comfort, my-comfort | es: consuelo-de-mí, mi-consuelo | fr: consolation, mon-נחמתי-moi | de: [נחמתי], ist-mein-trösten Job 6:10; Ps 119:50

נְחֶמְיָה H5166 N-proper-ms (8×)
Nehemiah; personal name meaning 'Yah comforts,' borne by the governor of Judah and two other figures.
A theophoric name meaning 'YHWH comforts,' most famously borne by Nehemiah son of Hachaliah, the cupbearer to the Persian king Artaxerxes who became governor of Judah and led the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls (Neh 1:1; 8:9). The name also belongs to a ruler of half the district of Beth-zur (Neh 3:16) and to one of the twelve leaders who returned with Zerubbabel from exile (Ezra 2:2). All translations preserve the name phonetically – Nehemias, Nehemie, Nehemia – reflecting its deep recognition across Christian and Jewish tradition.

(8×) The proper name Nehemiah, designating three distinct individuals: (a) the governor of Judah under Artaxerxes who rebuilt Jerusalem's walls and instituted religious reform (Neh 1:1; 8:9; 10:2; 12:26, 47), (b) a district ruler who helped repair the wall (Neh 3:16), and (c) a returnee from exile listed alongside Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:2 = Neh 7:7). The theophoric element -yah ('Yah comforts') is reflected in the consistent cross-linguistic transliterations: Spanish Nehemias, French Nehemie, German Nehemia. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nechemyah, Nehemiah, Nehemyah | es: Nehemías | fr: Néhémie | de: Nehemia Ezra 2:2; Neh 1:1; Neh 3:16; Neh 7:7; Neh 8:9

נַחֲמָנִי H5167 N-proper-ms (1×)
Nahamani — a leader among those who returned from exile with Zerubbabel and Nehemiah Nahamani appears in Nehemiah's list of returnees, bearing a name that means 'compassionate' or 'Yah has comforted.' He's among the leading men who accompanied Zerubbabel and Nehemiah back to Jerusalem. Such names were common in the exile and return period, reflecting hopes for divine comfort after judgment. The Greek version shows textual complications, possibly confusing this name with Nehemiah.

(1×) A personal name in Nehemiah 7:7, identifying one of the leaders who returned from Babylonian captivity. The name means 'compassionate' or possibly 'Yahweh has shown compassion,' formed from נחם (comfort, console) with theophoric or adjectival ending. Ancient Greek manuscripts render this as a genitive form of Nehemiah (Νεεμιου), suggesting textual confusion or that some Greek translators identified Nahamani with Nehemiah himself. The name fits the comfort-theology common among exilic and post-exilic names. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nahamani | es: Nahamaní | fr: [נחמני] | de: [נחמני] Neh 7:7

נַֽחְנוּ H5168 Pro-1cp (5×)

we (first-person plural pronoun, abbreviated form of anachnu)

An abbreviated form of the standard first-person plural pronoun anachnu ('we'). It appears sparingly in the Hebrew Bible, mainly in direct speech that carries emotional weight — Joseph's brothers protesting their innocence (Gen 42:11), Israel grumbling against Moses in the wilderness (Exod 16:7-8), the Reubenites pledging to cross the Jordan armed (Num 32:32), and the communal confession of Lamentations 3:42. Cognate forms appear in Arabic (nahnu), Ethiopic, and Aramaic.

(5×) First-person plural personal pronoun 'we,' functioning identically to anachnu but in a shorter, possibly older or dialectal form. Spanish 'nosotros' and French 'nous' render it straightforwardly. Its five occurrences all appear in emotionally charged direct speech: collective self-identification (Gen 42:11), complaint (Exod 16:7-8), military pledge (Num 32:32), and penitential confession (Lam 3:42). FIRST PERSON PRONOUN

en: We, and-we, we | es: Nosotros, nosotros, y-nosotros | fr: [נחנו], et-nous, nous | de: [נחנו], und-wir, wir Gen 42:11; Exod 16:7; Exod 16:8; Num 32:32; Lam 3:42

נָחֵץ H5169 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

urgent, pressing — requiring immediate attention or quick action

This participle describes King Saul's business when David fled to the priests at Nob. David claimed the king's matter was so urgent he had left without provisions or weapons. The word suggests pressing haste or compelling necessity. Text-critically it's uncertain, with various emendations proposed, but the sense of urgent business fits the narrative—David is fabricating an excuse for his hurried, suspicious arrival.

(1×) A Qal passive participle functioning adjectivally, 'urgent, pressed, hurried,' in 1 Samuel 21:9 (English 21:8). David tells the priest Ahimelech that 'the king's business was urgent,' explaining why he came without proper supplies or weapons. This is part of David's deception as he flees from Saul. The Hebrew root is uncertain —possibly related to Arabic ´ (urge, press insistently). Ancient versions render with words for haste or urgency (Greek κατὰ σπουδήν). Some scholars propose reading נָאוֹץ from אוץ (press, urge). URGE PRESS INSIST

en: urgent | es: urgente | fr: urgent | de: urgent 1Sam 21:9

נַֽחַר H5170a N-msc / 3ms (1×)

snorting — the forceful exhalation through the nostrils, especially of a horse

This noun appears in Job's magnificent poem about the war horse, whose snorting is terrible. The word captures the sound and fury of a spirited stallion—nostrils flaring, breathing heavily, eager for battle. It's onomatopoetic in feel, evoking the horse's powerful presence. The term derives from a verb meaning to snort or breathe heavily, emphasizing the horse's barely-restrained energy.

(1×) A masculine noun with possessive suffix 'its snorting' in Job 39:20, describing the terrifying sound of the war horse. Job asks rhetorically, 'Do you make him leap like a locust? His majestic snorting is terrifying.' The word emphasizes the auditory impact—the loud, forceful breathing that announces the horse's presence and intimidates enemies. It derives from a root related to heavy breathing or snorting through the nose. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: its-snorting | es: su-relincho | fr: son-נחרו-lui | de: [נחרו] Job 39:20

נַחֲרָה H5170b N-fsc (1×)

snorting — the sound of horses' heavy breathing, heard as a sign of approaching cavalry

Jeremiah uses this feminine form to describe the sound of invading horses—their snorting heard all the way from Dan in Israel's far north. The prophet depicts the Babylonian invasion as an overwhelming cavalry force, and the sound of war horses becomes a harbinger of doom. This auditory image creates terror: before the enemy is even visible, their horses' breathing announces catastrophe. It's the same root as Job's war horse description, but in Jeremiah it signals judgment.

(1×) A feminine construct noun 'the snorting of' in Jeremiah 8:16, describing the sound of enemy horses heard from Dan. The full phrase reads, 'From Dan is heard the snorting of his horses; at the sound of the neighing of his stallions the whole land trembles.' This is prophetic announcement of invasion—the Babylonian cavalry approaching from the north. The word shares its root with the masculine form in Job 39:20, both evoking the fierce, loud breathing of war horses. It's an aural warning of coming destruction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-snorting-of | es: resoplido-de | fr: [נחרת] | de: [נחרת] Jer 8:16

נַחֲרַי H5171 N-proper-ms (2×)

Naharai/Nachrai; one of David's mighty warriors, Joab's armor-bearer

This personal name identifies a Beerothite warrior who served as armor-bearer to Joab, David's military commander. He appears in the roster of David's 'mighty men'—the elite warriors who fought alongside David. The parallel texts in 2 Samuel 23:37 and 1 Chronicles 11:39 preserve slightly different spellings, reflecting common manuscript variation. The Septuagint shows even more diversity in rendering the name, indicating ancient translators struggled with the precise form of this less common personal name.

(2×) This warrior appears in the heroic catalog of David's champions. Identified as 'Naharai the Beerothite, armor-bearer to Joab son of Zeruiah' (2 Sam 23:37), he held a position of trust—carrying the weapons of Israel's chief general. The parallel in 1 Chronicles 11:39 preserves the same information with minor spelling variation (Naharai vs. Nachrai). Being from Beeroth (a Gibeonite city absorbed into Benjamin) shows David's fighting force included men from various tribal and ethnic backgrounds. The specific role of armor-bearer required proximity to leadership during battle, suggesting Naharai was among Joab's most trusted men. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nachrai, Naharai | es: Najrai, Najray | fr: Naharai, [נחרי] | de: Naharai, [נחרי] 2Sam 23:37; 1Chr 11:39

נָחַשׁ H5172 Conj-w | V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (11×)

Practice divination, interpret omens — to read signs or portents; prohibited in Israel, yet used of Joseph's cup

The verb נָחַשׁ (nachash II) means to practice divination or interpret omens. The Holiness Code forbids it (Lev 19:26), and Deuteronomy condemns the menachesh as an abomination (Deut 18:10). Both kingdoms fell into this sin (2 Kgs 17:17; 21:6; 2 Chr 33:6). Yet Joseph's steward claims the silver cup is one 'by which my lord divines' (Gen 44:5, 15) – whether genuine lecanomancy or a ruse is debated. Laban 'divined' that the LORD blessed him through Jacob (Gen 30:27). Spanish 'adivinar' and French 'deviner' convey the range.

practice divination, interpret omens (11×) To practice divination or read omens as a mantric art, a practice categorically prohibited in Israelite law. The Holiness Code forbids nachash alongside other occult practices (Lev 19:26), and Deuteronomy condemns the menachesh as an abomination (Deut 18:10). The kings of Israel and Judah are indicted for committing this sin (2 Kgs 17:17; 21:6; 2 Chr 33:6). The verb covers various techniques of sign-reading used to access hidden or future knowledge. Spanish 'practicar adivinación' and French 'pratiquer la divination' translate the prohibited act. SORCERY WITCHCRAFT en: I-divined, and-he-practiced-sorcery, and-they-practiced-sorcery | es: adiv-

ina, adivinar, adivinaron | fr: Je-divined, [ונחש], divined | de: divined, ich-habe-geahnt, oder-eins-practicing-sorcery Gen 30:27; Gen 44:5; Gen 44:15

נַחַשׁ H5173 N-ms (2×)

divination, enchantment; the practice of seeking supernatural knowledge through omens or occult means

This noun refers to the practice of divination or enchantment, the attempt to gain hidden knowledge or influence events through supernatural means. Both occurrences appear in the Balaam narrative, where the text emphasizes that Israel needs no divination or enchantment because God speaks directly to them. The term appears in parallel with קֶסֶם (qesem, 'divination'), reinforcing the semantic field of occult practices that were forbidden in Israel but common among surrounding nations. The multilingual evidence consistently points to divinatory practices, with Spanish 'encantamiento' highlighting the enchantment aspect.

(2×) The practice of divination or enchantment, seeking supernatural knowledge through omens or occult means. Both passages (Num 23:23, 24:1) occur in the Balaam narrative, where the prophet's relationship with divination is explicitly addressed. The term stands in contrast to direct divine revelation, emphasizing that Israel has access to God's word without resorting to divinatory techniques. The parallel with קֶסֶם strengthens the connection to prohibited occult practices. SPELL ENCHANTMENT

en: divination, omens | es: encantamiento, encantamientos | fr: divination, omens | de: divination, omens Num 23:23; Num 24:1

נְחָשׁ H5174 N-msd (9×)

Bronze or copper (Aramaic), used in Daniel for the metallic imagery of Nebuchadnezzar's statue and related visions.

The Aramaic noun for bronze or copper, cognate with the more common Hebrew nechoshet. All nine occurrences fall within the book of Daniel, where bronze carries heavy symbolic weight. In Nebuchadnezzar's dream statue, the belly and thighs are bronze (Dan 2:32), representing the third kingdom. The metal recurs as the statue is shattered (2:35, 45) and in the description of the fourth beast's claws (7:19). Spanish, French, and German all render it straightforwardly as 'bronce/Bronze,' showing no ambiguity. The bands of bronze and iron on the tree-stump (Dan 4:15, 23) extend the image from political allegory to personal judgment.

bronze, copper (Aramaic) (9×) Bronze or copper as a material, specifically the Aramaic form used in Daniel's apocalyptic visions. The noun describes the bronze portion of the composite statue (Dan 2:32, 35, 39, 45), the bronze claws of the fourth beast (Dan 7:19), and the bronze-and-iron bands on the symbolic stump (Dan 4:15, 23). Multilingual glosses – Spanish 'bronce,' French 'bronze,' German 'Bronze' – are uniform, reflecting the unambiguous material referent. As the Hebrew cognate nechoshet covers both copper and its alloys, this Aramaic form likewise encompasses the full copper-bronze spectrum. BRONZE AND COPPER

en: and-bronze, bronze, the-bronze | es: bronce, el-bronce, y-bronce | fr: bronze, et-bronze, le-bronze | de: Bronze, die-Bronze, und-Bronze Dan 2:32; Dan 2:35; Dan 2:39; Dan 2:45; Dan 4:15

נָחָשׁ H5175 Art / N-mp (31×)

Serpent, snake; the archetypal creature of Eden and a symbol of danger, cunning, and divine judgment.

The primary Hebrew word for serpent or snake, nachash carries enormous symbolic weight. It denotes the crafty creature in the Eden narrative (Gen 3), the deadly 'fiery serpents' in the wilderness (Num 21:6), and the bronze serpent Moses raised for healing (Num 21:9). Prophetic texts employ it as a figure of cunning enemies and eschatological judgment (Isa 27:1). Across translations—German 'Schlange,' Spanish 'serpiente,' French 'serpent'—the word maps consistently to a single zoological and symbolic sense. Whether literal or figurative, nachash always evokes primal danger and the tension between curse and cure.

1. serpent (literal reptile, natural danger) (16×) Split from sense 117296. Criteria: Literal snake as natural creature: fiery serpents in Numbers 21:6-9, sudden danger in Amos 5:19 and Ecclesiastes 10:8

en: a-serpent, like-a-serpent, like-the-serpent | es: a-la-serpiente, como-la-serpiente, como-serpiente | fr: comme-serpent, le-serpent, le-serpents | de: Schlange, [הנחש], [כנחש] Gen 49:17; Exod 4:3; Exod 7:15; Num 21:6; Deut 8:15

2. serpent (archetypal tempter/cosmic enemy) (15×) Split from sense 117296. Criteria: The Eden tempter (Gen 3:1-14), the bronze serpent as healing symbol (Num 21:9), and Isaiah 27:1's cosmic sea-monster figure — theologically potent symbol of evil and chaos

en: And-the-serpent, a-serpent-of, and-He-shall-slay | es: Y-la-serpiente, como-la-serpiente, la-serpiente | fr: Et-le-serpent, [כנחש], et-serpent | de: Schlange, Schlange-von, [כנחש] Gen 3:1; Gen 3:2; Gen 3:4; Gen 3:13; Gen 3:14

נָחָשׁ H5176 N-proper-ms (9×)

Nahash, a personal name borne by an Ammonite king in the time of Saul and David, and possibly by other individuals.

Nahash is primarily the name of the Ammonite king who besieged Jabesh-gilead, provoking Saul's first military action (1 Sam 11:1-2). His death later occasioned David's diplomatic gesture of condolence to his son Hanun, which backfired into war (2 Sam 10:2; 1 Chr 19:1-2). A separate Nahash is mentioned as father of Abigail and Zeruiah (2 Sam 17:25), though some scholars identify this figure with Jesse. The name itself means 'serpent' in Hebrew, though the multilingual evidence – Spanish 'Najas,' French 'Nachash,' German 'Nahash' – treats it purely as a transliterated proper name. The Septuagint renders it consistently as Naas.

Nahash (personal name) (9×) The proper masculine name Nahash, primarily designating the Ammonite king whose siege of Jabesh-gilead catalyzed Saul's kingship (1 Sam 11:1-2; 12:12). The same or a successor Nahash maintained relations with David (2 Sam 10:2; 1 Chr 19:1-2; possibly 2 Sam 17:27). A distinct Nahash appears as a parent of David's sisters (2 Sam 17:25). German curiously glosses one occurrence as 'Bronze' (confusing this name with the homographic noun nachash/nechash), but all other languages – Spanish 'Najas/Najash,' French 'Nachash/Nahash' – correctly transliterate it as a personal name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nachash, Nahash | es: Najas, Najash | fr: Nachash, Nahash, [נחש] | de: Bronze, Nachash, Nahash 1Sam 11:1; 1Sam 11:2; 1Sam 12:12; 2Sam 10:2

נַחְשׁוֹן H5177 N-proper-ms (10×)

Nahshon, son of Amminadab; leader of the tribe of Judah during the wilderness period and ancestor in the line of David.

The personal name of the chieftain of Judah during the Exodus and wilderness wanderings. Nahshon son of Amminadab served as the tribal prince who presented the first dedication offering at the tabernacle (Num 7:12-17) and led Judah's camp on the march (Num 2:3; 10:14). He was also Aaron's brother-in-law through his sister Elisheba (Exod 6:23). The genealogies of Ruth 4:20-22 and 1 Chronicles 2:10-11 place him in the direct ancestral line from Judah to David, making him a key link in the messianic lineage. The Septuagint renders his name as Naassōn.

Nahshon (proper name) (10×) The proper name Nahshon (literally perhaps 'little serpent' or related to nachash), designating the prince of Judah during the wilderness period. He appears in the Priestly census and marching lists (Num 1:7; 2:3; 10:14), offered the inaugural tabernacle dedication gifts (Num 7:12-17), and was Aaron's brother-in-law (Exod 6:23). The genealogical texts of Ruth 4:20-22 and 1 Chronicles 2:10-11 anchor him as an ancestor of David. Spanish 'Naasón' reflects the Septuagint Naassōn, while French 'Nahshon' and German 'Nahshon' stay closer to the Hebrew. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nachshon, Nahshon, and-Nachshon | es: Naasón, Najshon, Najson | fr: Nachschon, Nachshon, Nahshon | de: Nahshon, [ונחשון], [נחשון] Exod 6:23; Num 1:7; Num 2:3; Num 7:12; Num 7:17

נְחֹשֶׁת H5178a Conj-w (139×)

Copper or bronze as raw metal and crafted material; in dual form, bronze fetters used to bind prisoners.

One of the most frequently mentioned metals in the Hebrew Bible, nechoshet spans the full range from raw copper ore (Deut 8:9) to the refined bronze used in tabernacle and temple construction. Tubal-cain is credited as the first to forge it (Gen 4:22), and Solomon's temple required enormous quantities (1 Kgs 7:14-47). The dual form nechushtayim appears exclusively for fetters — the paired shackles clamped onto prisoners like Samson (Judg 16:21) and King Zedekiah (2 Kgs 25:7). Spanish and French consistently render 'bronce,' while German distinguishes Kupfer (raw) from Bronze (worked), reflecting the same material spectrum the Hebrew covers in a single word.

1. bronze/copper as metal (131×) The metal bronze or copper in all its applications — raw ore mined from the earth (Deut 8:9), refined material for sacred vessels and architectural overlays (Exod 26:11; 1 Kgs 7:45), and a symbol of strength or stubbornness. Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly converge on a single metallurgical term (bronce, Bronze, bronze), confirming this as the core, undifferentiated sense covering 131 of 139 occurrences. BRONZE AND COPPER

en: bronze | es: bronce | fr: bronze | de: Bronze, in-Kupfer Gen 4:22; Exod 26:11; Exod 26:37; Exod 27:2; Exod 27:3

2. bronze fetters or shackles (8×) The dual form nechushtayim designating a pair of bronze fetters or shackles used to imprison captives. All eight occurrences describe binding — Samson at Gaza (Judg 16:21), Zedekiah by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kgs 25:7), Manasseh in Assyrian captivity (2 Chr 33:11). Spanish renders 'con bronces' (with bronzes) and Hindi uses a chains-specific term, both capturing the metonymy where the material stands for the instrument of bondage. BRONZE AND COPPER

en: my-bronze-chains, to-bronze-fetters, with-bronze-fetters | es: a-bronces, con-bronces, con-cadenas-de-bronce | fr: avec-bronze-fetters, bronze, à-bronze-fetters | de: Bronze, [נחשתי], mit-Bronze-fetters Judg 16:21; 2Sam 3:34; 2Kgs 25:7; 2Chr 33:11; 2Chr 36:6

נְחֹשֶׁת H5178b N-fsc / 2fs (1×)

nakedness, lust — possibly female nakedness exposed for immoral purposes, or figuratively, shameless lust

This difficult word appears in Ezekiel's extended metaphor of Jerusalem as an unfaithful wife. The context involves sexual imagery —nakedness and harlotry. While spelled like the common word for 'bronze,' the context demands a different meaning, perhaps 'lust' or 'naked shame.' The text may be corrupt, and ancient interpreters proposed various readings. The larger passage uses shocking language to depict covenant unfaithfulness as sexual betrayal.

(1×) A disputed noun with feminine possessive suffix in Ezekiel 16:36, possibly meaning 'your nakedness' or 'your lust,' though the text is textually problematic. The verse parallels this word with 'nakedness/pudenda' (עֶרְוָה), suggesting sexual exposure or lustful behavior. The consonants match 'bronze' (נְחֹשֶׁת), but context requires a sexual term. Medieval Jewish commentators suggested 'lust' or 'harlotry,' while modern scholars propose various emendations (תַּזְנוּתַיִךְ 'your harlotries,' בָּשְׁתֵּךְ 'your shame'). The passage uses extreme sexual language to depict idolatry as adultery. BRONZE AND COPPER

en: lust-your | es: lujuria-de-ti | fr: Néhuschtan | de: [נחשתך] Ezek 16:36

נְחֻשְׁתָּא H5179 N-proper-fs (1×)

Nehushta — the mother of King Jehoiachin, taken captive to Babylon with her son

Nehushta was the queen mother when Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem and deported the young king Jehoiachin. In the ancient Near East, the queen mother held significant status and influence. Her name, possibly meaning 'bronze woman' or related to the serpent, appears at a pivotal moment—2 Kings mentions her specifically when narrating the royal family's deportation. This began the final chapter of Judah's monarchy.

(1×) A feminine personal name in 2 Kings 24:8, identifying the mother of King Jehoiachin (also called Jeconiah). She was daughter of Elnathan of Jerusalem and went into Babylonian exile with her son in 597 BC. The name may derive from נְחֹשֶׁת (bronze) or be related to נָחָשׁ (serpent). Ancient versions vary in their rendering (Greek Νεσθα, Ναισθα, Νεεσθαν). Her mention alongside Jehoiachin emphasizes the comprehensiveness of the deportation—even the queen mother was not spared. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nechushta | es: Nejusta | fr: Nechushta | de: Nechushta 2Kgs 24:8

נְחֻשְׁתָּן H5180 N-proper-ms (1×)

Nehushtan — the derogatory name King Hezekiah gave to the bronze serpent when he destroyed it

Nehushtan was the name assigned to Moses' bronze serpent when Hezekiah destroyed it during his religious reforms. The word is likely a contemptuous pun, meaning 'mere bronze thing' or 'bronze idol.' What had been a legitimate sign of God's healing (Numbers 21) had become an object of idolatrous worship. By naming it dismissively, Hezekiah demoted it from sacred relic to mere metal. The name's exact meaning is debated—whether 'bronze god' or simply 'piece of bronze'—but the action was clear: Israel would not worship created things.

(1×) A name given to the bronze serpent in 2 Kings 18:4 when King Hezekiah destroyed it. The object Moses had made in the wilderness (Numbers 21:9) had become an idol to which Israelites burned incense. The name is apparently pejorative, possibly meaning 'bronze thing/idol' (from נְחֹשֶׁת 'bronze' with nominal ending). Ancient versions varied: Greek Νεσθαλει, Νεεσθαν. Some scholars propose the name combines נָחָשׁ (serpent) + תָּן (a divine element), meaning 'serpent god,' which Hezekiah mockingly reduced to 'piece of bronze.' The text's wordplay on נְחֹשֶׁת נָחָשׁ (bronze serpent) supports the punning nature of Nehushtan. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nechushtan | es: Nehustán | fr: Nechushtan | de: Nechushtan 2Kgs 18:4

נָחַת H5181 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (10×)

To go down, descend; press down or bend; sink in; bring down; be shattered — a poetic Aramaic-colored verb of downward motion and force

A poetic verb with strong Aramaic roots, used almost exclusively in elevated literary passages. It describes downward movement in vivid physical and metaphorical terms: arrows sinking into flesh (Ps 38:2), God's hand descending in chastisement, a reproof that penetrates the heart (Prov 17:10), and the wicked going down to Sheol in a moment (Job 21:13). The Piel intensifies this into bending or pressing down, as when God trains the warrior's hands so that a bow of bronze is bent low (2 Sam 22:35; Ps 18:34). Spanish 'se clavaron' for the Niphal and German translations struggling to render it show how this word resists easy equivalents across languages.

1. descend, go down (4×) The basic Qal sense of descending or going down, whether physically or figuratively. In Jer 21:13, it describes an attack descending upon a target; in Job 21:13, the wicked descend to Sheol swiftly. In Prov 17:10, a rebuke 'goes deeper' into a discerning person than a hundred blows into a fool — the multilingual glosses (Spanish 'penetra,' English 'goes-deeper') highlight this figurative penetration. The Aramaic cognate neheth confirms the basic directional meaning. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-has-come-down, goes-deeper, they-go-down | es: Penetra, descenderá, descienden. | fr: [יחת], et-descendre, יחתו | de: [יחת], [יחתו], und-hat-kommen-hinab Job 21:13; Ps 38:2; Prov 17:10; Jer 21:13

2. press down, bend low (3×) The Piel intensive form meaning to press down, bend low, or cause to settle under weight or force. In 2 Sam 22:35 and Ps 18:34, God trains the warrior's arms so they can bend a bow of bronze — an image of supernatural strength pressing unyielding metal downward. In Ps 65:10, God settles the earth's furrows with rain. Spanish 'asentando' (settling) and 'y-baja' (and lowers) capture these complementary nuances of pressing and settling. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-bends, settling, so-that-can-bend | es: asentando, y-baja, y-es-doblado | fr: descendre, et-bends, et-descendre | de: settling, so-der-kann-bend, und-bends 2Sam 22:35; Ps 18:34; Ps 65:10

3. sink in, be driven in (1×) The Niphal passive sense of sinking in or being driven into something, as projectiles fixed into a target. In Ps 38:2, God's arrows 'have sunk into' the psalmist — a harrowing image of divine discipline experienced bodily. Spanish 'se clavaron' (were nailed in) vividly conveys the force of this passive penetration, while English 'have-sunk' preserves the downward trajectory. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: have-sunk | es: se-clavaron | fr: descendre | de: haben-sunk Ps 38:2

4. bring down, cause to descend (1×) The Hiphil causative sense of bringing down or causing to descend from above. In Joel 3:11 (4:11 in Hebrew), the prophet calls on God to bring down His warriors — a petition for divine intervention descending from heaven to earth. This is the rarest attested form, with only one clear occurrence. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: bring-down | es: haz-descender | fr: descendre | de: [הנחת] Joel 3:11

5. be shattered, be broken (1×) A distinct Niphal sense meaning to be shattered or broken, found in Hannah's song (1 Sam 2:10) where the adversaries of the LORD 'will be shattered.' Spanish 'serán-quebrantados' (will be crushed) aligns with this destructive sense. Some scholars connect this to a separate root (hathath, to shatter), but the textual tradition and ancient versions associate it with the downward-force semantic field of naheth. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: will-be-shattered | es: serán-quebrantados | fr: fera-être-shattered | de: wird-sein-shattered 1Sam 2:10

נְחֵת H5182 V-Hifil-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (6×)

Aramaic verb: to descend, come down (Peal); to deposit, place, store (Haphel); to be deposed (Hophal)

An Aramaic verb appearing in Daniel and Ezra, cognate with Arabic 'nazala' (to descend). In the Peal stem, a heavenly watcher 'comes down from heaven' in Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan 4:13, 23). The Haphel causative shifts to administrative language: royal documents are 'deposited' in the Babylonian archives (Ezra 6:1), and temple vessels are ordered to be placed back in Jerusalem (Ezra 5:15; 6:5). The Hophal passive delivers the most dramatic use: Nebuchadnezzar 'was deposed' from his royal throne when his heart was lifted up in pride (Dan 5:20).

1. deposit, place, store (Haphel causative) (3×) To deposit, place, or store in a designated location (Haphel causative). In Ezra 6:1 the passive participle describes royal records 'deposited' in the Babylonian treasure house; Ezra 5:15 and 6:5 command the temple vessels to be carried and placed back in the Jerusalem sanctuary. Spanish 'depositados/puestos' and English 'deposit/were deposited' reflect the bureaucratic-administrative register of this stem. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-you-shall-deposit, deposit, were-deposited | es: eran-depositados, llévalos, y-sean-puestos | fr: [מהחתין], et-sous, une | de: [אחת], [מהחתין], und-unter Ezra 5:15; Ezra 6:1; Ezra 6:5

2. come down, descend (Aramaic Peal) (2×) To come down or descend from above (Peal, equivalent to Hebrew Qal). Used exclusively in Daniel's vision of the divine watcher 'coming down from heaven' (Dan 4:13, 23). Arabic 'nazala' (descend) is the closest cognate. Spanish 'descendiendo/descendía' and English 'coming down' capture the theophanic gravity of a heavenly being's descent. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: coming-down | es: descendiendo, descendía | fr: descendre | de: [נחת] Dan 4:13; Dan 4:23

3. be deposed, be brought down (Hophal passive) (1×) To be deposed or brought down from a position of authority (Hophal passive). Daniel 5:20 declares that when Nebuchadnezzar's heart was lifted in pride, 'he was deposed from his royal throne.' The passive causative turns physical descent into political downfall. Spanish 'fue depuesto' and English 'he was deposed' show how the root's spatial meaning extends to the loss of sovereign power. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: he-was-deposed | es: fue-depuesto | fr: descendre | de: [הנחת] Dan 5:20

נָחַת H5183a Prep-b / N-fs (7×)

Quietness, rest, tranquility; a state of peaceful calm or satisfying repose, contrasted with toil and agitation.

A feminine noun conveying a deep sense of quietness, rest, or settled tranquility. Isaiah 30:15 pairs it with hashqet ('stillness'), declaring that in quietness and trust lies Israel's strength – a powerful theological statement about restful dependence on God. Ecclesiastes uses it as the opposite of restless toil: 'a handful of quietness' outweighs 'two fistfuls of labor' (4:6). In Proverbs 29:9, it contrasts with raging and laughing, suggesting composure in the face of folly. The Spanish 'quietud' and French 'repos' both reflect its contemplative, settled quality.

rest, quietness, tranquility (7×) A state of quietness, rest, or peaceful tranquility, often set in deliberate contrast to agitation, toil, or foolish striving. In Isa 30:15 nachat is paired with hashqet as the twin pillars of Israel's salvation – quiet trust rather than frantic alliance-seeking. Ecclesiastes 4:6 famously contrasts a 'palm-full of rest' with two handfuls of labor and chasing wind. Proverbs 29:9 uses it as the opposite of ragaz ('raging'), and Eccl 9:17 affirms that wise words spoken 'in quietness' are heard above a ruler's shouting. Job 36:16 extends the image to the comfort and abundance of a table 'full of fatness.' REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: and-rest, and-the-rest-of, in-quietness | es: de-descanso, descanso, en-quietud | fr: [ונחת], dans-repos, et-repos | de: [בנחת], [ונחת], [נחת] Job 17:16; Job 36:16; Prov 29:9; Eccl 4:6; Eccl 6:5

נַחַת H5183b Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

descent, lowering — the downward movement or coming down of something

This noun appears in Isaiah's prophecy describing God's judgment with thunderous imagery. The phrase 'the descent of his arm' pictures God's arm coming down in a crushing blow. It's a theophanic image—divine warfare depicted in physical terms. The word emphasizes downward motion, the lowering of something from height. In context, it's part of a cluster of judgment images: thunder, flame, storm, and the arm of God descending on Assyria.

(1×) A masculine construct noun meaning 'descent, lowering' in Isaiah 30:30, specifically 'the descent of his arm' referring to YHWH's arm coming down in judgment. The phrase pictures God's striking motion against Assyria—his arm descending in a powerful blow. The word derives from a root meaning 'go down, descend' (נחת), forming a nominal that emphasizes the downward movement. This is combined with images of divine voice, consuming fire, and tempest to create an overwhelming picture of theophanic judgment. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: of-His-arm | es: y-descenso-de | fr: [ונחת] | de: [ונחת] Isa 30:30

נַחַת H5184 N-proper-ms (5×)

Nahath — name of an Edomite clan leader, a Levite, and a temple overseer under Hezekiah

A personal name borne by three distinct individuals in the Old Testament. The earliest is a grandson of Esau through Reuel, listed among the Edomite clan chiefs (Gen 36:13, 17; 1 Chr 1:37). A second Nahath appears in the Levitical genealogy as a descendant of Elkanah (1 Chr 6:26), likely a variant of Tohu/Toah. The third served as a temple overseer managing contributions and tithes during Hezekiah's reforms (2 Chr 31:13). The Septuagint renders the name variously as Nachoth, Nacheth, and Naath.

(5×) Nahath son of Reuel, grandson of Esau, an Edomite clan chief. Listed in the Edomite genealogies at Genesis 36:13, 17 and 1 Chronicles 1:37. The Septuagint renders the name as Nachoth or Nacheth. Spanish 'Najat' preserves the guttural opening consonant. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nachath, Nahath, and-Nachat | es: Najat, y-Najat | fr: Nahath, [ונחת], [נחת] | de: Nachat, [ונחת], [נחת] Gen 36:13; Gen 36:17; 1Chr 1:37; 1Chr 6:26; 2Chr 31:13

נָחֹת H5185 Adj-mp (1×)
descending, going down — moving downward, especially toward a specific location
This participial adjective appears in 2 Kings during Elisha's warning to Israel's king about Aramean troop movements. The prophet reveals where the enemy is 'going down' or 'descending'—perhaps into a valley or toward a lower position for ambush. The text is textually difficult, and ancient Greek versions suggest reading 'hidden' or 'lying in wait' instead. Either way, Elisha's supernatural knowledge gives Israel tactical advantage.

(1×) A masculine plural participle functioning adjectivally in 2 Kings 6:9, possibly meaning 'descending' or 'going down.' The phrase in context is 'Beware that you do not pass by such-and-such a place, for the Arameans are descending there.' However, the Hebrew text is uncertain—the Septuagint reads 'hidden/lying in ambush' (suggesting נֶחְבִּים from חָבָא), which many scholars prefer. The form נָחֹתִים would derive from נחת (go down, descend), describing enemy troops moving into position, possibly descending into a valley for ambush. DESCENDING AND TEARING en: is-going-down | es: acampados | fr: est-allant-en-bas | de: ist-gehend-hinab 2Kgs 6:9

נָטָה H5186 Conj-w | V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mpc (216×)
stretch out, incline, turn aside, spread — verb of directional extension: literal (hand, arm, tent) or figurative (heart, ear, justice)
This verb (216×) covers both physical stretching—hand, arm, tent curtains—and metaphorical inclining or turning. In Qal it means 'stretch out' (Ex 7:5), 'turn aside' (Gen 38:16), or 'pitch a tent' (Gen 12:8). Hifil causative forms mean 'incline' (heart, ear toward instruction) or 'turn aside' (someone from a path). Participles describe God as the one 'stretching out the heavens' (Isa 40:22, Job 9:8). Arabic نطو, madda (stretch), mala (incline), Korean 펴다/기울이다, Spanish extender/inclinar, and Swahili kunyoosha/kuelekeza all converge on this root's dual sense of extension and deviation.

1. stretch out hand/arm (Qal) (45×) Qal 'stretch out hand/arm' (45×) describes physical extension, most famously God or Moses stretching out a hand in judgment or miracle. Arabic ́ (madda), Korean 펴다/뻗다, Spanish extender, Swahili kunyoosha all confirm this literal sense. Concentrated in Exodus plagues (Ex 7:5, 7:19, 8:5–6, 8:16) and conquest (Josh 8:18–19, 26). The 'outstretched arm' becomes a theological motif for divine power. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: and-I-shall-stretch-out, and-I-stretch-out, and-I-will-stretch-out | es: Extiende, Y-extenderé, Y-extendió | fr: et-étendit-dehors, et-étendre, étendre-dehors | de: ausstrecken-heraus, und-ausstrecken, und-breitete-aus Exod 7:5; Exod 7:19; Exod 8:5; Exod 8:6; Exod 8:16

2. incline ear/heart (Hifil causative) (37×) Hifil 'incline ear/heart' (37×) is the causative-metaphorical sense: directing attention or devotion toward God, instruction, or wisdom. Arabic ́/ṛ, Korean 기울이다, Spanish inclinar support this semantic field. Classic examples: 'Incline your ear and hear' (2 Kgs 19:16), 'incline your heart to the LORD' (Josh 24:23). The multilingual glosses clearly distinguish this from physical stretching. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: Incline, bow-down, incline | es: Inclina, Inclina-, inclina | fr: incline, le-étendre, étendre | de: ausstrecken, breitete-aus, incline Gen 24:14; Josh 24:23; 1Kgs 8:58; 2Kgs 19:16; Ezra 7:28

3. outstretched arm (Qal passive participle) (30×) Qal passive participle 'outstretched' (30×) describes a state of extension—almost exclusively God's 'outstretched arm' (זְרוֹעַ נְטוּיָה), a fixed expression for redemptive power. Arabic ́ة, Korean 펴신, Spanish extendido/extendida, German der-outstretched. Deuteronomy formula: 'with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm' (Deut 4:34, 5:15, 7:19, 9:29, 11:2). STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: outstretched, stretched-out, the-outstretched | es: extendida, extendido, la-extendida | fr: le-étendu, outstretched, étendre | de: ausstrecken, der-outstretched, neigte Exod 6:6; Deut 4:34; Deut 5:15; Deut 7:19; Deut 9:29

4. turn aside intransitively (Qal) (24×) Qal intransitive 'turn aside' (24×) means to deviate from a path or standard—no external object. Arabic ٹ, Korean 돌아섰다/벗어났다, Spanish se-apartaron/desvíate, Swahili kugeuka. Judah 'turned aside' to Timnah (Gen 38:1, 38:16), Israel 'turned not aside' from the road (Num 20:17, 21). Moral deviation in Ex 23:2, 1 Sam 8:3, Ps 73:2. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: [ketiv:had-slipped], and-they-turned-aside, and-turned | es: Vuélvete, [se-apartaron], desvíate | fr: avait-se-tourna, et-ils-se-tourna-de-côté, et-tourna | de: breitete-aus, er-hatte-wandte, er-wandte Gen 38:1; Gen 38:16; Exod 23:2; Num 20:17; Num 20:21

5. turn aside/divert causatively (Hifil) (21×) Hifil causative 'turn aside' (21×) means to cause someone/something to deviate: leading astray, diverting from a path. Arabic ́, Korean 돌리다, Spanish apartar/desviar. Balaam's donkey 'turned aside' (Num 22:23), David 'turned aside' into Obed-edom's house (2 Sam 6:10). Context often implies intentionality or leadership (2 Sam 3:27, 16:22, 19:14). STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: and-he-turned, and-he-turned-it, and-she-spread-it | es: Desvían, E-inclinó, apartaron | fr: et-elle-étendit-cela, et-il-se-tourna, et-il-se-tourna-cela | de: ausstrecken, breitete-aus, neigte- Num 22:23; 2Sam 3:27; 2Sam 6:10; 2Sam 16:22; 2Sam 19:14

6. incline/bow (Qal intransitive) (16×) Qal intransitive 'incline, bow' (16×) describes physical inclination without an object: shadows declining (Judg 19:8), Issachar bowing his shoulder (Gen 49:15), Samson bowing with all his might (Judg 16:30). Arabic ٹ or ́, Korean 기울어지다/숙이다, Spanish se-inclinó. Includes God inclining mercy toward Joseph (Gen 39:21), Asher's territory 'sloping toward' (Num 21:15). STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: I-have-inclined, I-have-turned, and-He-bowed | es: E-inclinó, Incliné, Y-se-inclinó | fr: comme-étendre, declining-de, et-Il-s'inclina | de: declining-von, extends, neigte Gen 39:21; Gen 49:15; Num 21:15; Judg 9:3; Judg 16:30

7. pervert justice (Hifil) (14×) Hifil 'pervert justice' (14×) is a morally charged specialization: twisting or distorting judgment. Arabic ́, Korean 왜곡하다, Spanish torcer/pervertir. Found in legal contexts: 'Do not pervert justice' (Ex 23:6, Deut 16:19, 24:17, 27:19). Also 1 Sam 8:3 ('his sons turned aside after gain and perverted justice'), Prov 17:23, 18:5, Amos 5:12. Multilingual glosses strongly differentiate this from neutral 'turn aside'. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: To-turn-aside, and-they-perverted, and-turning-aside- | es: Al-torcer, Para-apartar, Y-los-que-se-desvian | fr: et-ils-perverted, et-le-étendre, et-étendre | de: ausstrecken, breitete-aus, du-soll-pervert Exod 23:2; Exod 23:6; Deut 16:19; Deut 24:17; Deut 27:19

8. spread out heavens/tent (Qal active participle) (12×) Qal active participle 'stretcher (of heavens)' (12×) describes God as the one who spreads out cosmic structures—tent-like imagery for creation. Arabic ́ or ́, Korean 펴시는, Spanish el-que-extiende. Concentrated in Job (9:8, 26:7) and Isaiah (40:22, 42:5, 44:24, 45:12, 51:13). The 'stretcher of the heavens' (נֹטֶה שָׁמַיִם) becomes a divine epithet. See also Ps 104:2, Jer 10:12, Zech 12:1. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: Stretcher-of, am-extending, and-Stretcher-of-them | es: El-que-extiende, Extendiendo, el-que-extiende | fr: et-étendre, étendre | de: ausstrecken, ausstreckend, breitete-aus 1Chr 21:10; Job 9:8; Job 26:7; Ps 104:2; Isa 40:22

9. pitch a tent (Qal) (10×) Qal 'pitch a tent' (10×) is a concrete application: setting up a tent or tabernacle by stretching out its fabric. Arabic ́, Korean 쳤다, Spanish extendió/armó, German aufgespannt. Patriarchs 'pitched their tent' (Gen 12:8, 26:25, 33:19, 35:21), Moses 'pitched the tent of meeting' (Ex 33:7). The verb naturally extends from 'stretch' to 'erect a structure by stretching'. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: and-he-pitched, and-pitched, and-pitched- | es: extendió, extendió-, había-extendido | fr: et-dressa, et-dressa-, et-il-dressa | de: ausstrecken, er-aufgespannt-hatte-, pitched Gen 12:8; Gen 26:25; Gen 33:19; Gen 35:21; Exod 33:7

10. spread out/stretch (Qal perfect/imperfect misc) (7×) Qal finite 'spread out, extend' (7×) overlaps with sense 1 but emphasizes cosmic or territorial spreading: God 'spread out the heavens' (Isa 45:12, Jer 10:12), valleys 'spread out' (Num 24:6), shadows 'lengthen' (Jer 6:4). Arabic ́/, Korean 펴셨다/뻗다. Job 15:29 uses the verb for branches 'not spreading'. Distinct from participle (sense 8) by finite verb form. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: He-stretched-out, are-lengthening, bends | es: extendieron, extendió, se-

extienden | fr: ils-étendre-dehors, étendre | de: ausstrecken, breitete-aus, sie-ausstrecken-heraus Num 24:6; Job 15:29; Isa 45:12; Jer 6:4; Jer 10:12

נָטִיל H5187 N-mpc (1×)

laden with, carrying — bearing or loaded with something heavy

This adjective appears in Zephaniah's judgment oracle against Jerusalem's merchant quarter. The prophet announces doom on 'those laden with silver'—the wealthy traders whose riches cannot save them. It's economic judgment: those who accumulated wealth will lose it all. The word suggests being weighed down or burdened with something, here applied to silver-carrying merchants. The image anticipates the coming catastrophe when material wealth proves worthless.

(1×) A plural construct participial adjective meaning 'laden with, carrying, bearing' in Zephaniah 1:11. The phrase 'those laden with silver' (נָטִילֵי כָסֶף) identifies wealthy merchants or traders who will be destroyed in God's coming judgment on Jerusalem. The word suggests being loaded or burdened with weight—here, the weight of silver. The root נטל appears in later Hebrew meaning 'take up, lift, carry,' and this adjectival form describes those who carry or are laden with wealth. The judgment context indicates their riches won't save them. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: those-laden-with | es: cargados-de | fr: chargé | de: [נטילי] Zeph 1:11

נְטִיפָה H5188 Art / N-fp (2×)

pendants, drop-shaped ornaments; jewelry resembling drops

This feminine plural noun designates drop-shaped ornaments or pendants—jewelry that hangs and resembles water drops or pearls. The etymology connects to the verb 'to drip,' making these 'dripping ornaments.' One occurrence lists them among the spoils from the defeated Midianite kings (Judges 8:26). The other appears in Isaiah's catalog of women's finery that will be removed in judgment (Is 3:19). These were luxury items, part of the elaborate personal adornment of the wealthy or royalty.

(2×) The two contexts reveal these as valuable ornamental jewelry. In Judges 8:26, 'the pendants' appear among the golden spoils Gideon took from the Midianite kings—alongside crescent ornaments and purple garments. Their inclusion with royal plunder suggests these were prestigious items. Isaiah 3:19 lists them in a long inventory of women's accessories that divine judgment will strip away—'the pendants' appear with crescents, earrings, and veils. The connection to 'drops' (from the root nataf, to drip) indicates they were teardrop-shaped or hung like droplets. Some scholars suggest they could be pearls, which also resemble drops and were highly valued. BRACELET ARMLET

en: and-the-pendants, the-pendants | es: Los-pendientes, y-los-pendientes | fr: [הנטיפות], et-le-pendants | de: [הנטיפות], und-der-pendants Judg 8:26; Isa 3:19

נְטִישָׁה H5189 Art / N-fp (3×)

Tendrils, shoots, or spreading branches of a vine

This term describes the extending shoots or tendrils of a grapevine—the parts that spread and climb. Isaiah uses it in judgment imagery: God will 'remove the tendrils' of the vineyard representing a nation. Jeremiah quotes this imagery when commanding the destroyers to 'remove her tendrils'—stripping away the spreading growth. Jeremiah 48 uses it metaphorically for Moab's former prosperity: 'your tendrils crossed the sea,' depicting extensive influence. The term emphasizes the vine's reaching, expanding quality—growth that extends territory or influence.

(3×) Tendrils or spreading branches of a vine. Isaiah 18:5 describes judgment: 'before the harvest, when the blossom is over and the flower becomes a ripening grape, he cuts off the shoots with pruning hooks, and the spreading branches he lops off and clears away.' Jeremiah 5:10 commands destroyers of the vineyard: 'go up through her vine rows and destroy, but make not a full end; strip away her branches.' Jeremiah 48:32 laments Moab: 'your branches spread to the sea, reached to the Sea of Jazer'—depicting former prosperity. The imagery is of vines extending their growth. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS

en: her-branches, the-spreading-branches, your-branches | es: los-sarmientos, sus-ramas, tus-ramas | fr: [הנטישות], [נטישותיה], [נטישתיך] | de: [הנטישות], [נטישותיה], [נטישתיך] Isa 18:5; Jer 5:10; Jer 48:32

נָטַל H5190 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms / 3mp (4×)

natal — to lift, bear, carry; take up and transport

This verb is a poetic synonym of the more common nasa', meaning to lift, bear, or carry. It appears rarely in biblical Hebrew, primarily in elevated poetic texts. The imagery involves lifting something up and bearing its weight, whether literal (God taking up islands like dust) or figurative (bearing people in compassion, laying responsibility upon someone, or accepting a burden). The Piel stem can intensify the meaning to 'carry along' or 'bear away.' The term suggests not just momentary lifting but sustained bearing or carrying of weight.

(4×) To lift, bear, or carry, used in poetic and prophetic contexts. 2 Samuel 24:12 has textual issues; many read noteh ('stretching out') rather than notel ('bearing') following the parallel in 1 Chronicles 21:10. Isaiah 40:15 declares that God 'takes up the coastlands like dust (iyyim kanaq yittol)'—lifting islands as if they were weightless particles. Isaiah 63:9 describes God's redemptive love: 'He lifted them and bore them (vaynatlem),' the Piel form emphasizing sustained carrying of His people through their history. Lamentations 3:28 counsels sitting alone in silence 'when He has laid it upon him (natal alaw)'—accepting the burden God places. The verb pictures both divine power and divine compassion in bearing weight. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: He-has-laid-it, He-takes-up, am-laying | es: ha-puesto, impongo, levanta | fr: [וינטלם], [יטול], [נטל] | de: [וינטלם], [יטול], [נטל] 2Sam 24:12; Isa 40:15; Isa 63:9; Lam 3:28

נְטַל H5191 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-3fs (2×)

lift up, be lifted; raise (eyes or objects)

This Aramaic verb means to lift or be lifted up, appearing in Daniel's visions. Nebuchadnezzar lifts his eyes to heaven after his humiliation (Dan 4:34), marking the moment his sanity returns. Later, Daniel sees a vision where a beast 'was lifted from the earth' (7:4). The verb parallels Hebrew 'nasa' but is the standard Aramaic form. The passive (Peil) form in 7:4 describes something being lifted by external force, while the active form in 4:34 shows deliberate action.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in Daniel's Aramaic sections. In 4:34, Nebuchadnezzar narrates his restoration: 'I lifted my eyes to heaven'—the physical gesture marking spiritual awakening and recognition of the Most High. In 7:4, Daniel's vision shows a lion-like beast with eagle's wings; 'it was lifted from the earth and made to stand on two feet like a man.' This lifting signifies transformation, making the beast human-like. The contrast between self-directed lifting (eyes in worship) and passive lifting (the beast being raised) shows the verb's flexibility. French uses separate words (lever, être levé) to capture the active and passive senses. LIFTING AND REMOVING

en: I-lifted, and-it-was-lifted | es: levanté, y-fue-levantada | fr: et-lever, lever | de: [ונטילת], [נטלת] Dan 4:34; Dan 7:4

נֶטֶל H5192 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

weight, burden — the heaviness or load of something

This noun appears in Proverbs in a saying about the comparative weight of sand and stone versus a fool's provocation. The word means burden or weight, that which presses down. Paralleled with 'heaviness,' it emphasizes how physical weight is nothing compared to the exasperating burden of dealing with a fool. It's wisdom literature using concrete, measurable imagery to communicate emotional and relational reality.

(1×) A masculine construct noun meaning 'weight, burden' in Proverbs 27:3. The verse reads, 'A stone is heavy, and sand is weighty (literally: 'and the burden of sand'), but a fool's vexation is heavier than both.' The word נֵטֶל parallels כֹּבֶד (heaviness, weight), both emphasizing physical burden. The proverb uses tactile, measurable weight to express the far greater burden of suffering a fool's provocation. The noun derives from roots related to lifting or carrying. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-burden-of | es: y-carga-de | fr: et-ונטל | de: [ונטל] Prov 27:3

נָטַע H5193 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (59×)

To plant vegetation, trees, or vineyards; figuratively, to establish people in a land or fix something in place

One of the Bible's most vivid agricultural verbs, נָטַע pictures the act of setting a living thing into the earth so it can take root and grow. God himself 'planted a garden in Eden' (Gen 2:8), and the image threads through Scripture as vineyard planting, orchard tending, and the promise of settled agricultural life. Prophetically, God 'plants' his people in their land — a powerful metaphor where Spanish 'Los plantaste' and French 'plante eux' capture the tenderness of divine settlement. In rare cases the root extends beyond agriculture to fixing tent-stakes or driving nails into place (Eccl 12:11).

1. plant vegetation (48×) The literal agricultural sense: to plant trees, vines, gardens, or other vegetation in the ground. This is the dominant usage across the Hebrew Bible, from God planting the Garden of Eden (Gen 2:8) and Noah planting the first vineyard (Gen 9:20), through laws about newly planted fruit trees (Lev 19:23), to prophetic promises of planting vineyards and eating their fruit (Amos 9:14). The Spanish 'Y plantó' and German 'du pflanzen' faithfully reflect this concrete horticultural action across diverse passage types. PLANTING VEGETATION

en: And-planted, I-planted, and-he-planted | es: Y-plantó, plantarás, planté | fr: Et-planta, et-il-planta, et-planta | de: [ונטעו], [נטעת], du-pflanzen Gen 2:8; Gen 9:20; Gen 21:33; Lev 19:23; Num 24:6

2. establish people in a place (9×) A metaphorical extension: to plant or establish people firmly in a place, especially of God settling Israel in the Promised Land. The image transfers the rootedness of a planted tree to the security of a settled nation. God 'planted them' at Sinai's song (Exod 15:17), promised David he would 'plant' Israel so they would dwell undisturbed (2 Sam 7:10; 1 Chr 17:9), and Jeremiah observes that God 'planted' even the wicked and they took root (Jer 12:2). Spanish 'Los plantaste' and French 'plante eux' with pronominal objects marking persons rather than plants make this metaphorical shift visible in translation. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: And-I-will-plant-them, You-planted-them, and-I-will-plant | es: Los-plantaste, Y-los-plantaré, y-lo-plantaré | fr: [ונטעתיהו], et-Tu—planter-eux, et-je-fera-plante-eux | de: [ונטעתים], pflanzen, und-Du-wird-Pflanze-ihnen Exod 15:17; 2Sam 7:10; 1Chr 17:9; Ps 44:2; Jer 12:2

3. pitch or fix in place (2×) A rare extended sense: to pitch, drive in, or fix firmly in place — applied to non-vegetative objects. In Eccl 12:11, the words of the wise are like 'planted' nails (firmly driven in), and in Dan 11:45, a king 'plants' his palatial tents between seas. The root idea of thrusting something into the ground persists, but the object is a stake, nail, or tent rather than a living plant. Spanish 'plantados' for the nails and 'plantará' for the tents preserve the verbal connection to planting while the context shifts the referent entirely. PLANTING VEGETATION

en: and-he-shall-pitch, planted | es: Y-plantará, plantados | fr: et-planter, planter | de: [ונטעים], und-pflanzen Eccl 12:11; Dan 11:45

נְטַע H5194 N-mpc (4×)

neṭa — plantation, planting, plant; what has been planted and cultivated

This noun denotes a plantation, planting, or cultivated plant—something intentionally planted rather than naturally growing. The term appears in prophetic and wisdom literature, often with metaphorical significance. Isaiah uses it figuratively for Israel as God's planting and for idolatrous practices. Job employs it in a simile about human renewal. The concept emphasizes intentional cultivation and the relationship between the planter and what is planted, making it particularly apt for theological metaphors about God's people or human religious devotions.

(4×) A plantation, planting, or plant, often with metaphorical significance. Isaiah 5:7 interprets the vineyard parable: 'the vineyard of YHWH of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah are his pleasant planting (neta)'—God's deliberately cultivated people. Isaiah 17:10 condemns idolatry: 'you plant pleasant plants (nitei namanim)'—cultivating foreign worship rather than true devotion. Verse 17:11 continues: 'in the day of your planting (niteka) you make it grow,' describing energetic but futile religious activity. Job 14:9 offers hope: a cut-down tree can sprout again 'and its shoots will not cease, like a young plant (kaneta)'—comparing human resurrection hope to botanical renewal. The term emphasizes intentional cultivation. PLANTING PLANTATION

en: plant-of, planting, plants-of | es: de-tu-plantar, planta, planta-de | fr: [נטע], [נטעי], [נטעך] | de: [נטעי], [נטעך], pflanzte Job 14:9; Isa 5:7; Isa 17:10; Isa 17:11

נְטִיעַ H5195 Prep-k / N-mp (1×)

plants, shoots — young plants or plantings, used figuratively for vigorous young men

This noun appears in Psalm 144's prayer for national blessing, where sons are compared to plants grown tall in their youth. The metaphor evokes healthy agriculture—sturdy, well-established young plants representing the next generation's strength. Ancient Israel was agricultural, so such imagery naturally expressed hopes for family and national prosperity. Vigorous sons like thriving plants; fruitful daughters like carved palace pillars—these are signs of divine blessing.

(1×) A masculine plural noun meaning 'plants, plantings' in Psalm 144:12, used figuratively. The verse prays, 'May our sons in their youth be like plants grown large,' comparing young men to well-developed plants or saplings. The imagery suggests strength, health, and promise—young plants that have grown successfully represent the vigorous next generation. This agricultural metaphor pairs with the following verse's description of daughters as carved palace corner-pillars, both images of beauty, strength, and blessing. PLANTING VEGETATION

en: like-plants | es: como-plantas | fr: comme-plantation | de: wie-pflanzt Ps 144:12

נְטָעִים H5196 N-proper-fs (1×)

Netaim — a location in Judah where royal potters lived and worked

Netaim appears only in Chronicles, identified as a place where potters lived and worked for the king. The name likely means 'plantings' or 'planted places,' possibly indicating gardens or cultivated fields. These were royal craftsmen engaged in producing pottery—an essential industry in the ancient world. The location is otherwise unknown, preserved only in this brief genealogical note about Judahite settlements.

(1×) A place name in 1 Chronicles 4:23, apparently a settlement in Judah where royal potters dwelt. The text describes these residents as 'potters dwelling at Netaim and Gederah; they lived there with the king for his work.' The name נְטָעִים derives from the root נטע (plant), possibly meaning 'plantings' or 'planted places/gardens.' Ancient Greek manuscripts varied in their rendering (Αζαειμ, Αταειμ, Νταειμ). The location is unidentified today, preserved only in this reference to royal potters. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Neta'im | es: Netaim | fr: [נטעים] | de: [נטעים] 1Chr 4:23

נָטַף H5197 V-Hifil-Imperf-2mp (18×)

To drip or drop (of liquid); figuratively, to prophesy or preach (letting words flow forth)

Nataf begins with the concrete image of liquid falling in drops: rain dripping from storm clouds at Sinai (Judg 5:4), myrrh dropping from a lover's hands (Song 5:5), honeyed words dripping from lips (Prov 5:3). The prophets then commandeered this vivid image for speech itself. In the Hifil stem, nataf means to let words drop or flow forth, that is, to prophesy or preach. Remarkably, this metaphor nearly always carries negative connotations: in Amos 7:16 and Micah 2:6, opponents tell the prophets to stop 'dripping' their unwanted messages. Spanish captures the split neatly, using 'destilar' (to distill) for the physical and 'profetizar' (to prophesy) for the figurative. French similarly distinguishes 'distiller' from 'prophetiser.'

1. to drip, drop (Qal) (9×) Intransitive physical dripping of liquid in the Qal stem: rain from clouds, myrrh from hands, honey from lips. Judges 5:4 describes clouds dripping water during the Sinai theophany, while Song of Solomon 4:11 and 5:13 use it for myrrh and honeycomb. French 'distiller' and Spanish 'destilar/gotear' consistently render the slow, drop-by-drop quality. DRIPPING LIQUID

en: drip, dripped, dripped- | es: destilan, destilarán, goteaba | fr: distillant, distillent, distiller | de: [יטפו], [נטפן], [נטפות] Judg 5:4; Job 29:22; Ps 68:8; Prov 5:3

2. to prophesy, preach (Hifil) (8×) Hifil figurative sense meaning to prophesy or preach, literally to cause words to drip forth. This metaphor nearly always carries hostile overtones: Amos 7:16 records the priest Amaziah ordering Amos not to 'drip' against Israel, and Micah 2:6 quotes opponents saying 'do not preach.' Spanish shifts to 'profetizar' and 'predicar,' while French uses 'prophetiser,' marking the clear semantic leap from liquid to speech. PROPHESY PROCLAIM

en: I-will-preach, and-drip, preach | es: prediques, profeta-de, profeticéis | fr: et-prophétiser, prophétiser | de: [אטף], [והטף], [יטיפון] Ezek 20:46; Ezek 21:2; Amos 7:16; Mic 2:6

3. to cause to flow (Hifil causative) (1×) A single Hifil occurrence retaining the literal physical sense in a causative frame: mountains causing sweet wine to drip in the eschatological abundance of Amos 9:13. Though grammatically Hifil like sense 2, the meaning is not prophetic speech but agricultural superabundance, the hills themselves becoming agents of liquid flow. This bridges the physical and figurative uses of the root. PROPHESY PROCLAIM

en: and-will-drip | es: y-destilarán | fr: et-prophétiser | de: [והטיפו] Amos 9:13

נָטָף H5198a N-mpc (1×)

drops (of water) — small amounts of liquid falling or condensed

This noun appears in Job's description of the water cycle, where God gathers drops of water that distill as rain. The word emphasizes smallness and plurality—individual droplets that collectively form rain. It's part of Job's sustained argument about divine wisdom in nature: God manages the minutest details of weather, gathering countless drops and transforming them into life-giving precipitation. The term captures the building blocks of meteorological phenomena.

(1×) A masculine plural construct noun meaning 'drops of (water)' in Job 36:27. Elihu describes how God 'draws up the drops of water' (or 'gathers the water drops'), which then distill as rain from his mist. The word emphasizes the individual small droplets that constitute moisture before condensing into rain. This is part of Elihu's lengthy discourse on God's wisdom displayed in natural processes. The plural form suggests numerous tiny drops, the discrete units that aggregate into storms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: drops-of- | es: gotas-de- | fr: נטפי | de: [נטפי] Job 36:27

נָטָף H5198b N-ms (1×)

stacte — an aromatic gum resin used in sacred incense, gathered as drops

Stacte was one of four ingredients God commanded for the sacred incense in the tabernacle. The name relates to 'drops,' suggesting a resin that oozes or drips from plants. Its exact botanical identity is uncertain—possibilities include myrrh-related resins, storax, or balsam. Ancient versions transliterated or used 'stacte,' a Greek term for aromatic drops. The inclusion in sacred incense indicates it was precious and fragrant, part of the restricted formula for worship at God's dwelling place.

(1×) A masculine noun in Exodus 30:34 identifying one of four ingredients for the sacred incense. God commands Moses: 'Take sweet spices—stacte, and onycha, and galbanum—sweet spices with pure frankincense.' The Hebrew נָטָף is related to 'dripping' or 'drops,' suggesting a resin collected as it exudes from plants. Exact botanical identification is uncertain: suggestions include a myrrh variety (Greek σταχτή, Latin stacte), storax resin, or opobalsamum. Rabbinic tradition identified it with balsam sap. The word emphasizes the substance's liquid or semi-liquid form when harvested. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: stacte | es: estácte | fr: stacte | de: Stakte Exod 30:34

נְטֹפָה H5199 N-proper-fs (2×)

Netophah; town in Judah meaning 'dripping' or 'dropping'

This place name designates a town in Judah, etymologically related to 'dropping' or 'dripping'—perhaps referencing a spring or water source. It appears in the lists of returning exiles, where the 'men of Netophah' number 56 (Ezra 2:22) or 188 (Neh 7:26), depending on which census list is followed. The town was also associated with a group called the Netophathites, some of whom were among David's warriors. Its exact location remains uncertain, though it was clearly in the Judean hill country.

(2×) The twin references come from parallel post-exilic census lists recording those who returned from Babylonian exile. Ezra 2:22 and Nehemiah 7:26 both mention 'the men of Netophah,' though with different population counts—a common feature in these duplicate lists, likely reflecting different census moments or traditions. The Septuagint Greek renderings (Netōpha, Netōphati) preserve the name with minor variations. The gentilics 'Netophathite' appears elsewhere for residents of this town, including some of David's elite warriors (2 Sam 23:28-29), suggesting Netophah had a martial reputation despite being a small settlement. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Netofah, and-Netophah | es: Netofá, y-Netofa | fr: [ונטפה], [נטפה] | de: [ונטפה], [נטפה] Ezra 2:22; Neh 7:26

נְטֹפָתִי H5200 N-proper-ms (11×)

Netophathite — gentilic of Netophah, a village near Bethlehem; home to David's warriors and Levitical singers

The gentilic נְטוֹפָתִי (Netophathi) identifies a person from Netophah, a village near Bethlehem. David's elite warriors Maharai and Heleb bear this designation (2 Sam 23:28-29; 1 Chr 11:30; 27:13, 15). After Jerusalem's fall, Seraiah the Netophathite rallies to Gedaliah (2 Kgs 25:23; Jer 40:8). In genealogical records, Netophathites appear among Judah's clans (1 Chr 2:54) and among Levitical singers who settled near Netophah after the exile (1 Chr 9:16; Neh 12:28). Spanish 'netofatita' preserves the gentilic form.

Netophathite (gentilic) (11×) A gentilic denoting a native or inhabitant of Netophah, a Judahite village near Bethlehem. The designation marks elite warriors in David's guard — Maharai and Heleb/Heled the Netophathite (2 Sam 23:28-29; 1 Chr 11:30; 27:13, 15) — as well as military officers who gathered to Gedaliah after Jerusalem's destruction (2 Kgs 25:23; Jer 40:8). Post-exilic records associate Netophathites with Levitical musical families and gatekeepers who resettled in villages surrounding Netophah (1 Chr 2:54; 9:16; Neh 12:28). The gentilic consistently evokes loyalty, military service, and Levitical heritage rooted in the Bethlehem district. Spanish 'netofatita' and French 'Netophathite' preserve the adjectival form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Netofati, Netophati, and-Netophathi | es: Netofa, Netofatí, el-netofatita | fr: Nethophathite, [הנטפתי], et-Nethophathite | de: [הנטופתי], [הנטפתי], [ונטופתי] 2Sam 23:28; 2Sam 23:29; 2Kgs 25:23; 1Chr 2:54; 1Chr 9:16

נָטַר H5201 Prep-l / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (9×)

Keep, guard; to watch over a vineyard or maintain wrath – preserving what is entrusted or harboring what should be released.

A poetic verb with two strikingly different applications of the same core meaning 'to keep.' In the Song of Solomon, the beloved laments that while she was made to 'keep' others' vineyards, her own she neglected (1:6) – a tender image of custodial faithfulness. Yet in prophetic and legal texts, the same word describes holding onto anger: Nahum 1:2 declares that the LORD 'keeps wrath' against His enemies, and Leviticus 19:18 forbids bearing a grudge. The tension between these senses reveals a word about tenacious holding – whether that grip is virtuous care or destructive resentment.

1. bear a grudge, maintain anger (5×) To bear a grudge, maintain anger, or harbor wrath over time. Leviticus 19:18 commands 'you shall not keep (a grudge)' alongside the famous love-your-neighbor injunction. Jeremiah 3:5 and 3:12 ask whether God will 'keep anger forever,' while Nahum 1:2 affirms that the LORD 'keeps wrath' for His adversaries. Spanish 'guardarás rencor' and 'guardará enojo' use the same root 'guardar' (to keep/guard) applied to resentment, mirroring the Hebrew semantic link between guarding and grudge-bearing. HATRED AND HOSTILITY

en: I-will-keep, Will-He-keep, and-keeping-wrath | es: guardará-enojo, guardarás-rencor, guardaré-ira | fr: [אטור], [הינטר], et-garder-rancune | de: [אטור], [הינטר], [ונוטר] Lev 19:18; Ps 103:9; Jer 3:5; Jer 3:12; Nah 1:2

2. keep, guard, watch over (4×) To keep, guard, or watch over something entrusted to one's care, particularly vineyards. Song of Solomon 1:6 provides the memorable confession: 'they made me keeper of the vineyards, but my own vineyard I have not kept,' where the repeated verb creates a poignant contrast between duty to others and self-neglect. Song 8:11-12 uses the participial form for professional vineyard-keepers. Spanish 'guardadora' and French 'gardienne' both emphasize the faithful custodial role. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: I-kept, keeper-of, to-the-keepers | es: a-los-guardas, guardadora-de, guardé | fr: aux-gardiens, aux-gardiens;, gardienne | de: [לנטרים], [נטרה], [נטרתי] Song 1:6; Song 8:11; Song 8:12

נְטַר H5202 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (1×)

keep, preserve — to guard or retain something, especially in the mind or heart

This Aramaic verb appears in Daniel's apocalyptic visions, where the prophet states that he kept the matter in his heart. It's the language of careful preservation—not forgetting or disclosing what was revealed. The verb is used in Aramaic portions of Scripture and related to Hebrew נָצַר (watch, guard). Daniel's response to overwhelming revelation is protective retention, holding the vision securely while pondering its meaning. Similar language appears when Mary 'treasured up' all these things in her heart.

(1×) An Aramaic Pe'al (G-stem) perfect 1st singular verb meaning 'I kept, I preserved' in Daniel 7:28. Daniel concludes his account of the vision of four beasts: 'Here is the end of the matter. As for me, Daniel, my thoughts greatly troubled me… but I kept the matter in my heart.' The verb indicates careful guarding or preserving, especially of information or memory. This is Biblical Aramaic, related to Hebrew נָצַר and Syriac ܢܛܪ. The context shows Daniel holding the troubling vision privately, not immediately disclosing it. GUARDING AND KEEPING en: I-kept | es: guardé | fr: Néhémie | de: [נטרת] Dan 7:28

נָטַשׁ H5203 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (40×)

To leave, forsake, abandon; also to spread out, scatter abroad, let loose, or cast down in judgment.

Natash covers a wide range of 'letting go' — from the sting of divine abandonment to leaving a field fallow. At its emotional core, it describes God or a person forsaking a covenant relationship: Israel cries 'the LORD has forsaken us' (Judg 6:13), while Moses warns that prosperity leads to forsaking the Rock (Deut 32:15). Yet the same verb describes armies spreading across a valley (2 Sam 5:18), quails scattered by divine wind (Num 11:31), and ropes loosened on a mast (Isa 33:23). Spanish splits between abandonar and esparcir, French between abandonner and s'etendre, confirming genuinely distinct senses unified by the root idea of releasing control.

1. abandon, forsake (23×) The dominant relational sense: to deliberately abandon, forsake, or leave behind a person, people, or covenant bond. Twenty-three of forty occurrences carry this meaning. In Gen 31:28 Laban accuses Jacob of not letting him kiss his grandchildren goodbye; in Judg 6:13 Gideon protests that Yahweh has forsaken Israel; in 1 Sam 12:22 Samuel reassures that God will not forsake his people 'for his great name's sake.' Spanish abandonar, French abandonner, and German verlassen all converge here, and the pairing with synonyms like azab confirms this as a distinct lexicalized sense of covenant disloyalty or personal desertion. LEAVING AND REMAINING en: I-have-abandoned, I-will-forsake, You-have-abandoned | es: Y-abandonaré, Y-abandonó, Y-dejó | fr: [ונטש], abandoned, abandonner | de: [ונטש], [נטשה], [תטש] Gen 31:28; Exod 23:11; Deut 32:15; Judg 6:13; 1Sam 10:2

2. spread out, scatter (6×) To spread out, deploy, or be scattered over an area — six occurrences concentrated in the military narratives of Judges and Samuel. The Philistines 'spread out in the Valley of Rephaim' (2 Sam 5:18, 22), Judah's forces 'spread out' in Lehi (Judg 15:9), and plundering raiders are found 'spread out over all the land' (1 Sam 30:16). The spatial-dispersal semantics are confirmed by Spanish esparcir/extender and French s'etendre, which select spreading vocabulary entirely distinct from their 'forsake' equivalents. The passive participle netushim in 1 Sam 30:16 captures the resultant state of wide dispersal. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-spread, and-spread-out, and-they-spread-out | es: esparcidos, se-extendieron, y-se-esparcieron | fr: abandonner, et-ils-étendit-dehors, et-répandre-dehors | de: spread-heraus, und-ausbreiten-heraus, und-sie-spread-heraus Judg 15:9; 1Sam 4:2; 1Sam 30:16; 2Sam 5:18; 2Sam 5:22

3. cast down, hurl away (6×) To cast down, hurl away, or throw off as an act of forceful rejection or divine punishment — six occurrences, mostly in Ezekiel's judgment oracles. God will 'cast' Pharaoh into the wilderness (Ezek 29:5), the great cedar is 'thrown down' and its branches 'fall' on every valley (Ezek 31:12). The violent, downward directionality distinguishes this from the relational 'forsake' of sense 1. Spanish arrojar ('to hurl') and the English 'cast' both mark the forceful physical action, while Num 11:31 uses it for the divine wind hurling quails to earth — a vivid image of God letting something drop from above. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: and-I-will-cast-you, and-let-fall, and-they-abandoned-it | es: Y-te-abandonaré, Y-te-arrojaré, me-dejes | fr: abandonner, et-abandonner, et-laisse-tomber | de: [ויטשהו], [ונטשתיך], cast-mich-weg Num 11:31; Ps 27:9; Ezek 29:5; Ezek 31:12

4. leave, let alone (3×) A lighter, non-relational sense: to leave alone, let be, or cease involvement — three occurrences. In 1 Sam 17:28 Saul asks whom David 'left' the sheep with; in Prov 17:14 wisdom counsels to 'leave off' contention before it escalates; in Hos 12:14 the sense is leaving consequences in place. Spanish dejar ('to leave, let') and the German lassen family capture this permissive, hands-off nuance. Unlike sense 1, there is no betrayal or covenant violation — just pragmatic disengagement. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: have-you-left, he-will-leave, leave | es: abandona, dejará, dejaste | fr: abandonner, ai-tu-gauche | de: [ויטש], [נטש], habe-du-linke 1Sam 17:28; Prov 17:14; Hos 12:14

5. (1×) A hapax or near-hapax usage at Isa 33:23 describing ropes that 'are loosened' or 'let go' on a ship's mast. The English 'are loosened,' Spanish fueron soltadas, and the imagery of a disabled vessel all suggest physical slackening — ropes released from tension. This may be a specialized extension of the root 'letting go' metaphor applied to nautical rigging, or a distinct denominative usage. The single occurrence makes it difficult to confirm independently, but the nautical context is specific enough to warrant separate notice. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: Are-loosened | es: fueron-soltadas | fr: abandonner | de: verlassen Isa 33:23

6. (1×) A single occurrence at Isa 21:15 where the passive participle feminine netushab describes a 'drawn' sword — that is, a sword that has been 'let loose' from its sheath. Spanish desenvainada ('unsheathed') captures the sense precisely, while English 'drawn' and the military context of fleeing from battle confirm this as a concrete, physical 'releasing' of a weapon. The metaphorical extension from 'abandon/let go' to 'unsheathe' is natural, but the usage is isolated and lexically distinctive. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: drawn | es: desenvainada | fr: abandonner | de: verlassen Isa 21:15

בְּנִי H5204 Prep-b / N-msc / 3mp (1×)
wailing, lamentation — mourning cries, especially those raised over the destroyed
This term appears in Ezekiel's lament over Tyre, though the text is textually uncertain. The context involves raising a funeral dirge over the fallen merchant city. The word relates to mourning and lamentation, expressing grief through vocal wailing. Ancient Near Eastern mourning practices included professional wailers who led communal expressions of grief. The text may be corrupt here—some versions read 'their sons' instead—but the overall sense is clear: Tyre will receive a lament befitting her catastrophic fall.

(1×) A disputed masculine noun possibly meaning 'wailing, lamentation' in Ezekiel 27:32. The text reads 'they will raise over you in their wailing a lament' (or 'their sons will raise a lament'), within a sustained lament over Tyre's destruction. The word בְּנִיהֶם could be 'in their wailing' (from נָהִי/נְהִי = lamentation) or 'their sons' (בָּנֶיהָם). Ancient versions divided: Greek and Syriac read 'their sons.' Many modern scholars view בְּנִיהֶם as textual corruption or gloss, preferring to omit it. If retained, it emphasizes the mourning context of this elaborate dirge. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING
en: in-their-wailing | es: en-su-llanto | fr: lamentation | de: ihre-Soehne Ezek 27:32

וְנִיד H5205 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)
quivering motion of lips (in expressing sympathy)
This rare noun appears only in Job 16:5, describing the movement of Job's lips as he imagines offering sympathy to his friends. The Hebrew emphasizes the physical gesture—perhaps a trembling or compassionate quiver—that would accompany words of comfort. Ancient readers would have recognized this as the visible sign of emotional engagement with another's suffering, the kind of embodied empathy Job wishes his friends had shown him.

(1×) The term captures the physical manifestation of sympathy in Job 16:5, where Job contrasts his hypothetical compassionate lip-movement with his friends' harsh words. The Spanish 'movimiento' and English 'moving' preserve the kinetic sense, though modern translations often render the phrase interpretively as 'consolation' rather than preserving the concrete bodily gesture. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-moving-of | es: y-movimiento-de | fr: et-נִיד-ונ | de: [ונִיד] Job 16:5

נִידָה H5206 Prep-l / N-fs (1×)
impurity, uncleanness (ritual and moral)
In Lamentations 1:8, Jerusalem is personified as a woman whose impurity has become visible to all. The term parallels niddah (menstrual impurity) in verse 17 of the same chapter, creating a shocking metaphor: the holy city now resembles a ritually unclean woman. This vocabulary typically belongs to Levitical purity law but here serves poetic-prophetic purposes, expressing the depth of Judah's spiritual and moral defilement after the Babylonian conquest.

(1×) The single occurrence in Lamentations 1:8 employs ritual purity language for theological effect. Cross-linguistically, translators struggle to render the cultic overtones: Spanish 'inmunda' (unclean), French 'impureté,' and German versions often resort to explanatory phrases. The preposition 'for impurity' suggests Jerusalem has become an object of disgust, like something ritually contaminated. UNCLEAN AND PROFANE
en: for-impurity | es: por-inmunda | fr: en-impureté | de: [לְנִידָה] Lam 1:8

נִיחֹחַ H5207 Art / N-ms (43×)
Soothing, pleasing — a sacrificial term for the aroma acceptable to God (reach nikhoakh)
A noun derived from the root n-w-kh ('to rest, settle'), describing the quality of an offering's aroma that brings divine satisfaction. It appears almost exclusively in the cultic formula reach nikhoakh, 'a soothing aroma,' the standard Priestly description of properly performed burnt offerings, grain offerings, and peace offerings ascending to YHWH (Lev 1:9, 13, 17). The term first appears when Noah sacrifices after the flood and God smells 'the soothing aroma' (Gen 8:21). Ezekiel extends the phrase both positively — to the restored worship of the future (Ezek 20:41) — and negatively — to idolatrous incense (Ezek 6:13; 16:19).

soothing, pleasing (aroma) (43×) A soothing or pleasing quality ascribed to sacrificial aromas. Bound almost entirely to the formula reach nikhoakh (Gen 8:21; Exod 29:18; Lev 1:9 and 30+ Priestly texts), conveying that the offering 'settles' divine displeasure. Spanish 'agradable' and French 'agréable' capture the qualitative sense. In Numbers 28:2, God personalizes it: nikhoakhi, 'my soothing aroma.' PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT
en: pleasing | es: agradable, descanso, grato | fr: agréable | de: pleasing Gen 8:21; Exod 29:18; Exod 29:25; Exod 29:41; Lev 1:9

נִיחוֹחַ H5208 N-mp (2×)
pleasing aromas, soothing offerings; fragrant sacrifices that appease
This Aramaic plural noun denotes soothing or pleasing offerings, specifically those with fragrant smoke that rises acceptably to deity. The term appears in contexts involving sacrifice and worship. In Ezra 6:10, the Persian king commands that provisions be given so the priests can offer 'pleasing aromas to the God of heaven.' In Daniel 2:46, Nebuchadnezzar commands that offerings and 'incense' be presented to Daniel. The word is a Hebrew loanword in Aramaic, from the root 'nukh' (rest, settle), suggesting offerings that bring tranquility or acceptance.

(2×) Both occurrences involve Gentile rulers and the worship of Israel's God. Ezra 6:10 records Darius's decree supporting the Jerusalem temple: supplies should be given daily so priests can 'offer pleasing aromas to the God of heaven and pray for the life of the king.' The language shows Persian understanding of sacrificial vocabulary—offerings that create acceptable fragrance. Daniel 2:46 shows Nebuchadnezzar's overwhelming response to Daniel's interpretation: he orders 'an offering and incense' be presented to Daniel (though Daniel would certainly redirect this to God). The paired terms 'offerings and incense/perfumes' suggest both grain offerings and fragrant substances. The Aramaic plural form marks these as repeated or multiple offerings. REST AND REFRESHMENT
en: and-incense, pleasing-aromas | es: ofrendas-de-olor-agradable, y-perfumes | fr: [נִיחוֹחִין], et-parfum | de: [וְנִיחֹחִין], [נִיחוֹחִין] Ezra 6:10; Dan 2:46

נִין H5209 Conj-w (3×)
Offspring, posterity, or descendants (parallel with 'grandchildren')
This term for descendants appears always in parallel with 'neked' (grandchildren/posterity), forming a merism for complete lineage. Abraham makes Abimelech swear 'that you will not deal falsely with me or with my offspring or with my posterity.' Job describes the wicked as having 'no offspring or posterity among his people.' Isaiah prophesies Babylon will be destroyed, leaving 'neither name nor remnant, neither offspring nor posterity.' The paired terms emphasize total generational extinction or preservation—no survivor in any generation.

(3×) Offspring or descendants, immediate posterity. Genesis 21:23 records Abimelech's requested oath: 'swear to me here by God that you will not deal falsely with me or with my offspring or with my posterity'—covering all generations. Job 18:19 describes the fate of the wicked: 'He has no posterity or progeny among his people, and no survivor where he used to live.' Isaiah 14:22 prophesies against Babylon: 'I will cut off from Babylon name and remnant, offspring and posterity.' The consistent pairing with 'neked' shows these are complementary generational terms. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: and-offspring, and-with-my-offspring, offspring | es: hijo, y-a-mi-hijo, y-descendiente | fr: [וְנִין], et-avec-mon-postérité, נִין | de: [וְנִין], [נִין], und-meinen-Enkel Gen 21:23; Job 18:19; Isa 14:22

נִינְוֵה H5210 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (17×)
Nineveh — ancient capital of Assyria on the Tigris, site of Jonah's prophetic mission and symbol of imperial power under divine judgment.
One of the most storied cities of the ancient Near East, Nineveh served as the grand capital of the Assyrian Empire, situated on the eastern bank of the Tigris opposite modern Mosul. In Scripture it appears as both a mighty metropolis — called 'the great city' in Jonah 3:3 — and a target of divine wrath. Jonah's reluctant mission there and Nahum's oracle against it frame the city as a vivid case study in repentance, pride, and ultimate ruin. The multilingual glosses uniformly render the name without variation, underscoring its fixed identity across all traditions.

Nineveh (17×) The proper name of the Assyrian capital, appearing in Genesis 10:11-12 as founded in primordial history, in 2 Kings 19:36 and Isaiah 37:37 as Sennacherib's royal residence, and most prominently in Jonah and Nahum as the object of prophetic warning and doom. Translations across English, Spanish, French, and German uniformly transliterate as 'Nineveh/Ninive,' confirming its universal recognition as a geographic proper noun. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nineveh, and-Nineveh, in-Nineveh | es: Ninive, Nínive, Y-Ninive | fr: Ninive, [בנינוה], dans-Nineveh | de: Ninive, [בנינוה], [נינוה] Gen 10:11; Gen 10:12; 2Kgs 19:36; Isa 37:37; Jonah 1:2

נוּס H5211 Art / N-ms (1×)
one fleeing (Ketiv reading, alternate textual tradition)
This is a textual variant (Ketiv/Qere) in Jeremiah 48:44, part of an oracle against Moab describing inescapable judgment. The consonantal text reads 'the fleeing one,' though scribal tradition proposes an alternate reading. Prophecies against Moab frequently employ hunting and escape imagery—those who flee the terror fall into the pit, those who climb from the pit are caught in the snare. The vocabulary of flight pervades Jeremiah's judgment oracles, where even swift feet cannot outrun divine decree.

(1×) Appearing in Jeremiah 48:44 as a Ketiv reading, this participial form designates someone in the act of fleeing. Translations typically follow the Qere (scribal reading) rather than the written consonantal text, explaining why most English versions render the phrase differently. The multilingual evidence shows translators often bracketing this as a textual note rather than translating directly. FLEEING AND ESCAPING
en: [ketiv:the-one-fleeing] | es: [kethiv] | fr: [[הניס]] | de: [[הניס]] Jer 48:44

נִיסָן H5212 N-proper-fs (2×)
Nisan; first month of Jewish calendar (March-April), month of Passover
This month name, borrowed from Babylonian 'Nisannu,' designates the first month of the Hebrew calendar in post-exilic texts. It corresponds to the pre-exilic 'month of Abib.' Nisan typically falls in March-April and is forever associated with Passover and the Exodus. The two biblical occurrences both come from the Persian period: Nehemiah receives bad news about Jerusalem in Nisan (Neh 2:1), and Haman casts lots in Nisan to determine when to destroy the Jews (Est 3:7). This Babylonian calendar adoption reflects the cultural influence of exile.

(2×) Both references place significant events in this first month. Nehemiah 2:1 sets the date: 'in the month of Nisan, in the twentieth year of King Artaxerxes'—when Nehemiah's sad expression leads to his request to rebuild Jerusalem. Esther 3:7 notes that 'in the first month, which is the month of Nisan,' Haman cast pur (lots) to choose an auspicious day for genocide. The parenthetical explanation 'the first month' shows the writer knew some readers would need help with the Babylonian name. The sacred associations of Nisan (the Exodus month) add bitter irony to Haman's plot being hatched precisely then. The name became standard in post-exilic Judaism and remains so today. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES
en: Nisan | es: Nisán | fr: [נִיסָן] | de: [נִיסָן] Neh 2:1; Esth 3:7

נִיצוֹץ H5213 Prep-l / N-ms (1×)
spark (of fire)
Isaiah 1:31 uses this word in a devastating metaphor: the strong man becomes tinder, his work becomes a spark, and both burn together with none to quench. The prophet transforms images of strength into images of consumption. A spark is simultaneously tiny and dangerous—too small to fight, too hot to ignore. In ancient combustion technology, a single spark could ignite dry materials instantly, making this an apt figure for how the mighty will ignite their own destruction.

(1×) This hapax legomenon in Isaiah 1:31 functions within a fire-judgment metaphor. Spanish 'chispa' and English 'spark' capture the diminutive yet destructive nature. German and French translations sometimes struggle with the rare term, occasionally bracketing it or offering alternate renderings. The imagery is that the idolater's work becomes the very thing that ignites judgment. FIRE AND BURNING
en: as-spark | es: como-chispa | fr: [לְנִיצוֹץ] | de: [לְנִיצוֹץ] Isa 1:31

נִיר H5214 V-Qal-Imp-mp (2×)
break up (fallow ground), till freshly; plow untilled land
This verb means to break up untilled ground, to plow fallow land that has been lying dormant. Both occurrences appear in prophetic calls to spiritual renewal, using agricultural imagery. Jeremiah commands, 'Break up your fallow ground, and do not sow among thorns' (Jer 4:3). Hosea similarly urges, 'Break up your fallow ground, for it is time to seek the Lord' (Hos 10:12). The verb takes a cognate accusative—'break up the breakup,' i.e., break up the unbroken ground. This is about preparation, creating receptive soil before planting.

(2×) Both prophets employ this imperative as a metaphor for repentance and spiritual preparation. Jeremiah 4:3 uses it in a call to Judah: 'Break up your fallow ground'—stop trying to plant in hard, thorn-infested soil. The image is preparation for receiving God's word properly. Hosea 10:12 makes the spiritual application explicit: 'Break up your fallow ground, for it is time to seek the Lord, that he may come and rain righteousness upon you.' Unbroken ground can't receive seed; an unbroken heart can't receive truth. French 'labourer' (to work/plow) and Spanish 'romper' (break up) both capture the initial hard work of turning neglected soil, preparing what has grown hard for new growth. SOWING AND PLANTING
en: break-up | es: Romped, romped | fr: [נִירוּ], labourer | de: [נִירוּ] Jer 4:3; Hos 10:12

נִיר H5215 N-msc (4×)
nir — fallow ground, untilled field; land that needs breaking up for cultivation
This noun denotes fallow ground or untilled land—soil that has been left unused and now requires breaking up before it can be productive. Hosea and Jeremiah use it metaphorically for spiritual renewal: just as hardened fallow ground must be broken and turned before planting, so hardened hearts require radical repentance before they can receive God's word. Proverbs uses it literally to describe poor people's land that could be productive if properly worked. The imagery emphasizes both the potential of uncultivated ground and the difficult work required to make it fruitful.

(4×) Fallow ground, untilled or unused land needing cultivation. Hosea 10:12 commands metaphorically: 'Break up your fallow ground (niru lakem nir),' urging Israel to renewed spiritual receptivity rather than continuing in hardened rebellion—internal transformation as thorough as plowing unused soil. Jeremiah 4:3 uses identical imagery: 'Break up your fallow ground, and do not sow among thorns'—prepare hearts properly for God's word. Proverbs 13:23 observes that 'the fallow ground of the poor (nir rashim) yields much food,' but it's swept away by injustice—even marginal land can be productive if given opportunity. Proverbs 21:4 is textually uncertain (some read 'lamp' ner rather than nir). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: fallow-ground, is-the-fallow-ground-of, lamp-of | es: barbecho, campo-de, la-lámpara-de | fr: [נִיר], labourer, נִיר | de: [נִיר], [נר] Prov 13:23; Prov 21:4; Jer 4:3; Hos 10:12

נֵר H5216a Conj-w / N-mpc / 3mp (44×)

Lamp; a literal oil lamp (especially of the tabernacle/temple) or a figurative lamp symbolizing life, dynasty, or divine guidance.

In its most concrete sense, this noun denotes the oil lamps that burned in Israel's sacred spaces – the tabernacle lampstand (Exod 25:37) and the temple (1 Kgs 7:49). Spanish uniformly renders 'lampara,' French 'lampe,' and German 'Lampe,' all preserving the physical referent. Yet the word carries a rich figurative life in poetry and wisdom: the lamp of YHWH searching the human spirit (Prov 20:27), the lamp of the wicked being snuffed out (Job 18:6; 21:17), and David called 'the lamp of Israel' whose extinction would mean national ruin (2 Sam 21:17). The promise that David's dynasty will always have a lamp (1 Kgs 11:36; 15:4) weaves physical light into covenantal hope.

1. physical lamp or lamps (26×) A literal oil lamp or set of lamps, particularly the golden lamps of the tabernacle lampstand (Exod 25:37; 30:7-8) and temple furnishings (1 Kgs 7:49; 2 Chr 4:20). Translations across Spanish ('lamparas'), French ('lampe'), and German all preserve the concrete artifact sense. Also used of Zechariah's visionary lampstand (Zech 4:2) and household lamps (Prov 31:18). LAMPS AND TORCHES

en: and-its-lamps, and-their-lamps, its-lamps | es: las-lámparas, lámparas, lámparas-de-él | fr: et-lampe, lampe, le-lampes | de: [והנרות], [ונרתיה], [ונרתיהם] Exod 25:37; Exod 30:7; Exod 30:8; Exod 35:14

2. lamp as metaphor for life or guidance (18×) Lamp used metaphorically for life-force, prosperity, dynastic continuity, or divine guidance. David is 'the lamp of Israel' (2 Sam 21:17); God lights the psalmist's lamp (2 Sam 22:29 / Ps 18:28); the lamp of the wicked is extinguished (Job 18:6; Prov 24:20). French and German renderings remain 'lampe,' but Hebrew context shifts entirely from artifact to symbol of vitality and covenant promise. LAMPS AND TORCHES

en: His-lamp, a-lamp, and-his-lamp | es: Lámpara, Lámpara-de, Y-lámpara-de | fr: [נר], [נרי], et-lamp-de | de: Lampe, [ונר], [ונרו] Exod 27:20; Lev 24:2; 1Sam 3:3; 2Sam 21:17; 2Sam 22:29

נִיר H5216b N-ms (4×)

nir — lamp, light; symbol of ongoing dynasty or life-giving blessing

This noun means lamp or light, used exclusively in figurative contexts to symbolize ongoing dynastic succession, life, or blessing. The imagery draws from ancient household practice where a continuously burning lamp represented ongoing family life and prosperity. In the Davidic covenant context, God promises to maintain 'a lamp' for David—ensuring his dynasty's continuation on the throne. The lamp metaphor also appears in wisdom literature as a symbol of life and prosperity. A lamp burning represents presence, vitality, and hope; its extinction means death or dynasty's end.

(4×) A lamp, used figuratively for dynastic continuation or blessing. 1 Kings 11:36 explains why God doesn't remove the entire kingdom from Solomon: 'that David my servant may always have a lamp (nir) before me in Jerusalem'—ensuring ongoing Davidic presence on the throne. Similarly, 1 Kings 15:4 states God gave Abijam a son 'to raise up a lamp (nir) for David in Jerusalem,' continuing the dynasty despite Abijam's sin. 2 Kings 8:19 and 2 Chronicles 21:7 repeat that God wouldn't destroy Judah because He promised 'to give a lamp (nir) to him and to his sons forever.' The lamp symbolizes the sustained presence and vitality of David's royal line. LAMPS AND TORCHES en: a-lamp, lamp | es: lámpara, una-lámpara | fr: [נִיר], un-lamp | de: [נִיר], ein-lamp 1Kgs 11:36; 1Kgs 15:4; 2Kgs 8:19; 2Chr 21:7

נָכָא H5217 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (1×)

they were struck down, scourged, driven out

This Aramaic-influenced verb appears only in Job 30:8, where Job describes the outcasts of society who were 'scourged out of the land.' The language is harsh and physical—not simply expelled but beaten out, struck down and driven away like animals. Job uses this striking imagery as he reflects on how these very outcasts, society's lowest, now mock him in his affliction. The verb's rare form (Niphal perfect) underscores the completed, irreversible nature of their expulsion.

(1×) In Job 30:8, this Nifal form conveys violent expulsion. The verb is an Aramaizing form related to the more common nakah (to strike). Spanish 'fueron golpeados' (they were beaten) and English 'struck' preserve the physical violence. The passive voice emphasizes these people suffered beating at others' hands, reinforcing Job's point about society's cruelty to the vulnerable. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: they-were-struck | es: fueron-golpeados | fr: נכאו | de: [נכאו] Job 30:8

נָכָא H5218a N-mp (1×)

stricken, prostrated (by conquest or disaster)

In Isaiah 16:7, Moab's people mourn 'utterly stricken' after military defeat. The adjective describes a people beaten down, prostrated by conquest—not merely defeated but thoroughly humbled. Isaiah's oracle against Moab oscillates between sympathetic lament and declaration of judgment, and this word captures the pathetic state of a once-proud nation now broken. The term's rarity heightens the emotional intensity: this is not routine defeat but utter prostration.

(1×) This rare adjective modifies Moab's remnant in Isaiah 16:7, depicting total demoralization. Spanish 'abatidos' (cast down) captures the psychological and physical collapse. The word shares roots with the striking/smiting vocabulary but functions adjectivally to describe a state rather than an action. Moab's stricken condition forms part of the oracle's complex tone—judgment tinged with pathos. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: stricken | es: abatidos | fr: [נכאים] | de: [נכאים] Isa 16:7

נְכֵא H5218b Adj-fs (3×)

Crushed, broken, or stricken (especially of the spirit)

This adjective describes a crushed or broken condition, used exclusively in Proverbs for a 'broken spirit' or 'crushed spirit.' The term appears in wisdom sayings contrasting the effects of joy and sorrow on the inner person. A joyful heart makes the face cheerful, but 'a crushed spirit dries up the bones.' A cheerful heart is good medicine, but 'a crushed spirit dries up the bones.' Proverbs asks, 'a crushed spirit who can bear?'—recognizing the unbearable weight of inner devastation. The imagery is of being beaten down, shattered internally.

(3×) Crushed or broken, specifically of the spirit. Proverbs 15:13 teaches: 'A glad heart makes a cheerful face, but by sorrow of heart the spirit is crushed.' Proverbs 17:22 contrasts: 'A joyful heart is good medicine, but a crushed spirit dries up the bones'—inner devastation affecting physical health. Proverbs 18:14 asks: 'A man's spirit will endure sickness, but a crushed spirit who can bear?'—acknowledging the unbearable weight of inner brokenness. The consistent rendering as 'crushed' or 'broken' (Spanish abatido) shows this is traumatic inner damage. BRUISED CRUSHED

en: broken, is-crushed | es: abatido | fr: נכאה | de: [נכאה] Prov 15:13; Prov 17:22; Prov 18:14

נְכֹאת H5219 N-fs (2×)

aromatic gum, spice (possibly tragacanth); trade commodity

This feminine noun designates an aromatic gum or spice, traditionally identified as tragacanth gum from the astragalus bush, though some scholars suggest it might be the flowering tops of another aromatic plant. Both occurrences list it among valuable trade goods and gifts. Joseph's brothers see a caravan carrying 'gum, balm, and myrrh' to Egypt (Gen 37:25). Later, Jacob tells his sons to take 'gum' along with honey, balm, nuts, and almonds as a gift to the Egyptian official (Gen 43:11)—not knowing it's Joseph.

(2×) These two Genesis passages show the spice's commercial and diplomatic value. In 37:25, Ishmaelite traders transport 'gum (nekot), balm (tzori), and myrrh (lot)' from Gilead to Egypt—a standard luxury commodity route. These are the very traders who will carry Joseph into slavery. In 43:11, the same three substances appear in Jacob's gift package for Egyptian negotiation, accompanied by honey, pistachios, and almonds. The repetition of the trio (gum, balm, myrrh) suggests this was a recognized set of Transjordanian exports. The exact botanical identification remains debated—whether tragacanth resin or aromatic flower tops—but the value as an aromatic trade good is clear across translations. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: gum | es: especias | fr: gum | de: Tragakant Gen 37:25; Gen 43:11

נֶכֶד H5220 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

Posterity, grandchildren, or later descendants (parallel with 'offspring')

This term denotes grandchildren or later-generation descendants, always appearing paired with 'nin' (offspring) to cover the full span of progeny. The linguistic pairing creates a comprehensive picture: immediate children and their children's children. Abraham's oath with Abimelech covers 'offspring and posterity'—all future generations. Job's description of the wicked having 'no offspring or posterity' means complete generational extinction. Isaiah's prophecy against Babylon promises to cut off 'offspring and posterity'—no survivor in any generation. The term emphasizes continuity beyond the immediate next generation.

(3×) Posterity or grandchildren, later descendants. Genesis 21:23 has Abimelech request: 'swear to me that you will not deal falsely with me or with my offspring or with my posterity'—covering sons and grandsons. Job 18:19 declares of the wicked: 'He has no offspring or posterity among his people'—no children or grandchildren survive. Isaiah 14:22 threatens Babylon: 'I will cut off from Babylon name and remnant, offspring and posterity'—complete generational annihilation. The pairing with 'nin' throughout shows this is the next generation after immediate children. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: and-descendant, and-with-my-posterity, descendant | es: nieto, y-a-mi-nieto, y-posteridad | fr: [נכדו], et-avec-mon-posterity, נכד | de: [נכדו], [נכד], und-meinen-Urenkel Gen 21:23; Job 18:19; Isa 14:22

נָכָה H5221 Conj-w / V-Hifil-Imp-ms (502×)

to strike, smite, hit; to kill, defeat; to beat, wound; to afflict with plague; to clap (hands)

This verb of violent impact appears 502 times, never in Qal but almost exclusively in Hifil causative ('cause to be struck'), with rare Niphal passive, Pual passive, and Hofal. The semantic core is physical striking, but context determines whether the blow is military (smiting enemies in battle, 362x), disciplinary (beating a person, 35x), lethal (striking dead, 21x), or divine (afflicting with plague, 19x). A delightful outlier: clapping hands (4x). Multilingual evidence shows Spanish distinguishing golpear (hit personally) from herir (wound in battle) from matar (kill), Korean separating 치다 (strike generically), 때리다 (beat personally), and 죽이다 (kill), while Hebrew uses the single Hifil stem for all, letting context and object determine intensity.

1. Hifil: to strike in battle, smite enemies (362×) The primary military Hifil (362x) dominates Scripture's warfare narratives. Moses 'struck Egypt with all His plagues' (Exod 7:20, 8:17, 9:25), Joshua 'struck the Canaanites' (Josh 10:28-40 repeatedly), David 'struck the Philistines' (2 Sam 5:20, 8:1). All languages use generic 'strike/smite': Spanish herir/golpear, Korean 치다, Arabic ´, Swahili piga. The military context involves striking enemies, armies, cities in battle, with varying lethality. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-He-struck, and-he-struck, and-struck | es: E-hirió, Y-golpeó, e-hirió | fr: et-Il-frappa, et-frappa, et-frappa- | de: und-He-schlug, und-er-schlug, und-schlug Exod 2:12; Exod 7:20; Exod 8:17; Exod 9:25; Num 11:33

2. Hifil: to strike, beat (physical blows) (35×) Non-lethal physical striking (35x) includes beating, hitting, or disciplining persons outside warfare. 'If a man strikes his servant with a rod' (Exod 21:20), 'Should I strike you to the ground?' (2 Sam 2:22), 'Moses saw an Egyptian beating a Hebrew' (Exod 2:11). Korean shifts to 때리다 (beat personally rather than generic 치다), Spanish uses azotar/golpear (beat/hit), Arabic ´ (beat). The distinction from #1 is non-military, interpersonal violence. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-strike-me, he-shall-strike-him, should-I-strike-you | es: Ciertamente-golpear, El-que-golpeaba, Golpeando | fr: de-ainsi, devrait-je-frappe-tu, et-frapper-moi | de: er-soll-schlagen-ihn, schlage-, schlagend Gen 32:11; Gen 34:30; Exod 2:11; Exod 2:13; Exod 7:17

3. Hifil: to strike dead, kill, slay (21×) Lethal striking (21x) where the blow results in death. 'Whoever strikes Cain, vengeance will be taken sevenfold' (Gen 4:15), 'Let us kill him' (Gen 37:21, literally 'let us strike him dead'). Spanish uses matar/matador (kill/killer), Korean 죽이다 (kill), Arabic ʃ (kill), Swahili kuwaua (kill). The glosses explicitly mark death as outcome, distinguishing this from wounding (#2) or military smiting (#1). STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-he-struck-him, and-he-struck-them, and-he-will-strike-them | es: como-si-matara-, golpearlos, herir- | fr: de-ainsi, et-frapper, et-ils-frappa | de: ihn-schlage-, lasst-uns-ihn-schlagen, schlagen Gen 4:15; Gen 37:21; Num 25:17; Josh 20:3; Josh 20:9

4. Hifil: to strike with affliction, plague (19×) Divine affliction with plague or curse (19x). 'I struck you with blight, mildew, hail' (Deut 28:22, 27, 28, 35), 'The LORD struck the people with a great plague' (Num 11:33), 'The LORD will strike you with blindness' (Deut 28:28). English uses 'with blindness/plague' constructions, Spanish herir (afflict), Korean 치다 (strike with affliction), Arabic ´ (strike). God as subject and disease/curse as instrument distinguish this sense. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: He-strikes, I-struck, I-struck-you | es: Golpeé, Os-herí, Te-herirá | fr: et-fera-frappe, et-fera-frappe-tu, et-le-ainsi | de: er-schlaegt, schlagen, schlug Deut 28:22; Deut 28:27; Deut 28:28; Deut 28:35; 1Kgs 14:15

5. Hifil: to defeat, overcome (18×) Figurative or military 'defeat, overcome' (18x) emphasizes conquest over mere striking. 'Abraham defeated them' (Gen 14:17), 'You shall defeat them utterly' (Deut 7:2), 'Whoever strikes Kirjath Sepher and captures it' (Josh 15:16). Spanish uses vencer/derrotar (conquer/defeat), Korean 이기다 (defeat), Swahili shinda (conquer). The emphasis is victory/conquest, not just physical impact. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-I-strike-him, and-I-will-strike-you, and-strikes-me | es: Golpéame, de-golpear, de-herir | fr: de-frappant, et-frappe-moi, et-je-fera-frappe-tu | de: der-schlug, schlaegt, schlaegt-ihn Gen 14:17; Gen 36:35; Deut 7:2; Deut 29:7; Josh 15:16

6. Hofal: to be struck, smitten (16×) Hofal passive 'be struck, smitten' (16x) marks the recipient state. 'The taskmasters of the Israelites were beaten' (Exod 5:14, 16), 'A man is found breaking in and is struck so that he dies' (Exod 22:2), 'Cozbi was struck' (Num 25:14-15). Spanish usa fue golpeada/herido (was struck/wounded), Korean 맞다 (be struck), Arabic ʃ (was struck). The Hofal passive participle describes those who have suffered striking. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: I-was-struck, and-he-is-struck, and-they-were-beaten | es: Fue-golpeada, Herido-está, Y-fueron-golpeados | fr: battu, de-ainsi, de-car | de: beaten, der-schlug, der-so Exod 5:14; Exod 5:16; Exod 22:2; Num 25:14

7. Hifil: to strike an object/entity (14×) Striking non-personal objects (14x): land, city, water, rock. 'I will strike the water of the Nile' (Exod 7:17), 'You shall strike the rock' (Exod 17:6), 'Joshua struck the land' (Josh 10:28, 30). Feminine pronominal suffixes (הָ־, אֹתָהּ, 'it/her') and neuter English 'it' mark the inanimate direct object, Korean 치다 (strike object), Spanish golpear/atacar (strike/attack). Objects rather than persons receive the blow. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: I-will-strike-it, and-he-will-strike-it, and-it-struck | es: Lo-heriré, a-golpearla, y-ataco | fr: et-frappa-cela, et-frappa-il, et-frappa-il- | de: ich-wird-schlagen-es, und-schlagen, und-schlug Gen 32:8; Num 14:12; Num 22:25; Josh 10:28; Josh 10:30

8. Hifil: to wound, injure (5×) Wounding without killing (5x) in royal assassination narratives. 'They struck him' (2 Kgs 8:29, 9:15, wounding King Joram), 'Servants struck and killed Joash' (2

Kgs 12:21). Arabic shifts to ´ (jaraḥa, 'wound') instead of usual ´ (strike), English uses 'wounded' rather than 'struck,' Korean 부상시키다 (wound). The context shows injury without immediate death, creating narrative tension. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: had-struck-him, struck-him, they-struck-him | es: le-hirieron, lo-golpearon, lo-hirieron | fr: avait-frappa-lui, frappa-lui, frapper | de: hatte-schlug-ihn, schlagen, schlug-ihn 2Kgs 8:29; 2Kgs 9:15; 2Kgs 12:21; 2Kgs 19:37; 2Chr 22:6

9. Hifil: to clap (hands) (4×) Clapping hands together (4x), a metaphorical extension. 'I struck My hands together in anger' (Ezek 22:13), 'They clapped their hands' (2 Kgs 11:12, coronation). Spanish batir (clap), Korean 치다 (strike/clap hands), English 'clapped,' Arabic ´ (clap, Form II of ṣ-f-q). The striking is self-directed (hands together) in gesture of emotion or celebration. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: I-have-struck, and-strike, and-they-clapped- | es: golpeé, y-batieron, y-golpea | fr: et-frapper, et-ils-clapped-, j'ai-frappé | de: schlagen, und-schlagen, und-sie-clapped- Exod 8:16; 2Kgs 11:12; Ezek 21:14; Ezek 22:13

10. (2×) Two Pual passive occurrences (Exod 9:31-32) in the hail plague narrative: 'The flax and barley were struck' by hail. Spanish fueron golpeados (were struck), Korean 맞았다 (were struck), French furent frappées (were struck). The rare Pual stem marks passive reception of the hail's impact on crops. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: struck, were-struck | es: fueron-golpeados | fr: frappa, étaient-frappa | de: schlug, waren-schlug Exod 9:31; Exod 9:32

11. Non-verbal / misassigned token (2×) Two tokens flagged as non-verbal (1 Sam 4:13, 2 Kgs 3:24). 1 Sam 4:13 is a ketiv-qere marginal note, 2 Kgs 3:24 may be misassigned. Glosses show [ketiv-side], 'in it/her,' suggesting these are textual apparatus rather than genuine verbal forms. Requires manual review and reassignment outside the core verbal paradigm. DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [ketiv-side], in-it | es: [junto], en-ella | fr: [ketiv-side], dans-cela | de: [ketiv-side], in-es 1Sam 4:13; 2Kgs 3:24

12. (1×) Balak to Balaam: 'Perhaps I shall be able to strike them' (Num 22:6, 1x). Spanish golpear (strike), Korean 치다 (strike), French frapper (strike). The conditional construction with Balak hoping to curse/strike Israel through Balaam's oracles. The striking is wished-for future military defeat via magical means. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: to-strike | es: golpear | fr: à-frapper | de: zu-schlagen Num 22:6

13. (1×) 'He shall strike root like Lebanon' (Hos 14:5, 1x). Spanish echar (cast/put forth), Korean 내리다 (send down), French frapper (strike). Unique agricultural metaphor where 'striking root' means sending roots downward, taking firm hold. The image is growth and stability, not violence. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-shall-strike | es: y-echará | fr: et-il-frappa | de: und-er-schlug Hos 14:5

14. (1×) Niphal passive: 'He shall be struck and die' (2 Sam 11:15, 1x, David's order for Uriah). Spanish será herido (will be struck), Korean 맞아 죽다 (be struck and die), French sera frappé (will be struck). The only Niphal occurrence in a passive construction, showing Uriah as passive recipient of lethal blow in battle. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-he-will-be-struck | es: y-será-herido | fr: et-il-fera-être-frappa | de: und-er-wird-sein-schlug 2Sam 11:15

15. (1×) Eli's servant 'struck the pan, kettle, cauldron, or pot' with a fork (1 Sam 2:14, 1x). Spanish meter (put/thrust), Korean 찌르다 (stab/thrust), French frapper (strike). Unique culinary context where striking means thrusting the fork into vessels to extract sacrificial meat. The violent verb applied to food preparation creates dark irony given Eli's sons' corruption. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-he-struck | es: Y-metía | fr: et-il-frappa | de: und-er-schlug 1Sam 2:14

נָכֶה H5222 Adj-mp (1×)
smitten ones, afflicted people, cripples
Psalm 35:15 uses this term in a disturbing scene where the psalmist's enemies gather like a mob. Most interpreters understand 'smitten ones' as cripples or social outcasts who joined in mocking the afflicted. The irony cuts deep: those who themselves bear the marks of suffering show no solidarity but instead join the strong in ridiculing the weak. Alternatively, some read this as 'smiters'—professional attackers hired to harm—though the passive participial form makes 'smitten ones' more likely.

(1×) In Psalm 35:15, this plural adjective describes the psalmist's mockers. The lexical debate between 'smitten ones' (outcasts/cripples) and 'smiters' (attackers) affects interpretation significantly. French 'frapper' (to strike) and Spanish 'golpeadores' suggest active agents, while 'smitten ones' emphasizes their own wounded state. The psalm's context of betrayal and social ostracism supports reading them as society's marginal people who perversely turn on one suffering like themselves. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: smiters | es: golpeadores | fr: frapper | de: smiters Ps 35:15

נָכֶה H5223 Conj-w / Adj-msc (3×)
smitten, stricken; physically disabled or spiritually contrite
This adjective describes those who are physically struck down or spiritually broken. The Hebrew root conveys being smitten in a way that leaves lasting impact. In 2 Samuel it describes a man crippled in both feet from a childhood injury, while Isaiah uses it metaphorically for one who is 'contrite of spirit'—crushed inwardly by recognition of sin. The multilingual evidence shows the word bridges physical disability (lisiado, crippled) and spiritual humility (contrito), suggesting the underlying concept is being fundamentally stricken or broken.

(3×) The term applies to both physical impairment (2 Samuel's use for feet crippled by injury) and inner spiritual brokenness (Isaiah 66:2's pairing with 'poor in spirit'). Cross-linguistic patterns show this dual application: Spanish 'herido' and 'contrito' capture the wound and humility senses. The word appears in construct form, always describing what part is stricken (feet, spirit), emphasizing the localized nature of being smitten. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-contrite-of-, crippled-of, stricken | es: herido-de, lisiado-de, y-contrito-de- | fr: [נְכֵה], crippled-de, stricken | de: crippled-von, stricken, und-schlug 2Sam 4:4; 2Sam 9:3; Isa 66:2

נְכֹה H5224 N-proper-ms (3×)
Necho II, Egyptian pharaoh contemporary with Josiah (611-605 BC)
This proper name refers to the Egyptian pharaoh Necho II who reigned during the final years of Judah's independence. He killed King Josiah at Megiddo when Josiah tried to block his march north (2 Kings 23:29). The name derives from Egyptian 'Nkw' (Nekawō), also appearing in Assyrian records as 'Nikû.' Scripture consistently identifies him with his royal title 'Pharaoh Necho,' underscoring his significance in the geopolitical upheavals that preceded Babylon's conquest of Jerusalem. His defeat of Josiah marked a tragic turning point for Judah.

(3×) Necho appears in Chronicles and Jeremiah always in connection with military campaigns and Judah's vassalage. The consistent rendering across languages (Neko, Néco, Necho) reflects the transmission of this Egyptian royal name through Hebrew into multiple translation traditions. All three occurrences link him to pivotal moments: Josiah's death, the installation of puppet kings, and the battle of Carchemish (Jeremiah 46:2) where Babylonian power eclipsed Egyptian influence. PHARAOH TITLE
en: Necho | es: Neko | fr: Néco | de: [נכו] 2Chr 35:20; 2Chr 35:22; 2Chr 36:4

נָכוֹן H5225 N-proper-fs (1×)
Nacon (personal name, owner of a threshing floor)
This name appears in 2 Samuel 6:6 as the owner of the threshing floor where Uzzah died after touching the ark of the covenant. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 13:9 calls the same location 'the threshing floor of Kidon,' creating a textual puzzle. Place names in narratives often preserve local memory—this threshing floor became permanently associated with a tragedy, remembered by the landowner's name. Ancient threshing floors were flat, open spaces, often on hilltops to catch the wind, making them natural stopping points for the ark's journey to Jerusalem.

(1×) This proper name in 2 Samuel 6:6 identifies a threshing floor's owner. The Septuagint offers various renderings (Nodab, Nachon), and the synoptic text in Chronicles provides 'Kidon' instead, suggesting possible textual corruption or variant traditions. Across translations, the name is typically transliterated (Spanish 'Nacón,' French 'Nachon') rather than translated, preserving it as a personal identifier. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nachon | es: Nakon | fr: Nachon | de: Nachon 2Sam 6:6

נֹכַח H5226 Prep / 3ms (2×)

in front of, opposite to; directly before

This substantive functions prepositionally to mean 'in front of' or 'opposite to.' It describes spatial positioning—being directly before something or someone. The two occurrences with the third masculine suffix mean 'opposite it' or 'in front of it.' Exodus 14:2 commands Israel to camp 'opposite it' (Pi-hahiroth). Ezekiel 46:9 describes worshipers exiting 'straight ahead' (opposite himself, i.e., going out the way opposite to entry). The root relates to 'neged' (before, in front of) and can also have the figurative sense of 'in the sight of.'

(2×) Both uses involve precise positioning. In Exodus 14:2, God directs Moses: 'Tell the people of Israel to turn back and camp in front of Pi-hahiroth, between Migdol and the sea, in front of Baal-zephon; you shall camp facing it (nikho), by the sea.' This positioning is strategic—it makes Israel look trapped to Pharaoh. Ezekiel 46:9 describes temple traffic flow during festivals: those entering by the north gate exit by the south, and vice versa—'he who enters by the way of the north gate to worship shall go out by the way opposite it (nikho).' This prevents congestion. Both contexts use 'nikho' for direct spatial orientation—'opposite it, facing it, straight ahead from it.' Spanish 'frente a' and French 'en face' capture this frontal positioning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: opposite-it | es: de-frente-a-él, frente-a-él | fr: en-face, en-face-cela | de: [נכחו], opposite-es Exod 14:2; Ezek 46:9

נֹכַח H5227 Prep (23×)

Opposite, facing, in front of (spatial); on behalf of; straight ahead (directional)

A spatial word at heart, this term places something squarely before the eyes or directly opposite in position. The candlestick stands facing the table (Exod 26:35), armies encamp opposite one another (1 Kgs 20:29), and Proverbs 5:21 reminds that a person's ways lie open before the eyes of the LORD. Arabic muqabil (opposite) and Hindi samne (in front of) both confirm the core spatial force. One intriguing occurrence in Genesis 25:21 extends the facing posture into intercession, where Isaac prays on behalf of his wife, standing before God for her sake. In Proverbs 4:25 it takes a directional turn: let your eyes look straight ahead.

1. opposite, facing, before (spatial) (21×) A spatial preposition meaning opposite, facing, or in front of, indicating direct positional alignment. Used of objects placed before other objects (Exod 26:35), armies camped face to face (1 Kgs 20:29), and the awareness of being in someone's sight (Prov 5:21). German gegenueber, French devant, and Spanish enfrente-de all converge on this frontal orientation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: before, facing, in-front-of | es: Delante-de, delante-de, enfrente-de | fr: [נכח], dans-devant-de, devant | de: [נכח], facing, gegenüber Gen 30:38; Exod 26:35; Exod 40:24; Num 19:4; Josh 15:7

2. on behalf of (figurative) (1×) A figurative extension from standing before someone to acting on their behalf, used in Genesis 25:21 where Isaac entreats the LORD on behalf of Rebekah. The spatial image of facing God becomes the posture of intercession, with Arabic min ajli (for the sake of) and Spanish frente-a reflecting this relational shift. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: on-behalf-of | es: frente-a | fr: sur-part-de | de: angesichts Gen 25:21

3. straight ahead (directional) (1×) A directional adverb meaning straight ahead or forward, indicating movement in a direct line rather than static position. Proverbs 4:25 counsels the young person to let their gaze go straight before them. Spanish hacia-adelante (toward the front) captures the forward momentum that distinguishes this usage from mere spatial facing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: straight-ahead | es: hacia-adelante | fr: à-לנכח | de: [לנכח] Prov 4:25

נָכֹחַ H5228 Adj-msc / 3ms (4×)

nakoach — straight, right, honest; straightforward in conduct or speech

This adjective means straight, right, or honest, describing both literal straightness (walking a straight path) and figurative uprightness (honest words, righteous conduct). The term appears in wisdom and prophetic literature emphasizing moral straightforwardness as opposed to crookedness or deception. Words can be 'right' (leading directly to truth), conduct can be 'straightforward' (walking without deviation), and arguments can be 'honest' (presented truthfully). The imagery consistently contrasts the straight path or honest word with twisted, deceitful alternatives.

(4×) Straight, right, honest, or straightforward in character. 2 Samuel 15:3 has Absalom deceptively tell petitioners, 'your words are good and right (nekochim)'—affirming their claims as legitimate. Proverbs 8:9 describes Wisdom's words: 'all of them are right (nekochim) to him who understands, and straight to those who find knowledge'—they lead directly to truth. Proverbs 24:26 (textually difficult) may affirm that honest lips 'give a right answer' or 'kiss' truthfully. Isaiah 57:2 describes the righteous one 'who walks in his straightness (nekhocho)'—living with consistent uprightness. The term emphasizes directness and lack of crookedness in both speech and conduct. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS

en: and-right, are-right, right | es: rectamente, rectas, y-rectas | fr: [נכחו], et-droite, נכחים | de: [נכחו], [נכחים], und-rechte 2Sam 15:3; Prov 8:9; Prov 24:26; Isa 57:2

נְכֹחָה H5229 N-fp (4×)

nekochah/nekhochot — uprightness, straightforwardness, honesty; right conduct

This feminine noun form denotes uprightness, straightforwardness, or honesty as an abstract quality or concrete practice. It describes what is morally straight or right, particularly in contexts examining justice, truthfulness, and ethical conduct. Isaiah uses it extensively to diagnose Israel's moral condition—their inability to practice uprightness or their outright rejection of it. Amos employs it to indict the wealthy elite who don't know how to 'do' uprightness. The term emphasizes not just right belief but right action—the actual doing of what is straight and honest.

(4×) Uprightness, straightforwardness, honesty, or right conduct. Amos 3:10 indicts the oppressors: 'they do not know how to do uprightness (ashot nekochah)'—they're incapable of honest, just dealing. Isaiah 26:10 observes that even when shown favor, 'the wicked will not learn righteousness; in the land of uprightness (nekochot) he deals corruptly'—moral environment doesn't reform him. Isaiah 30:10 condemns those who demand of prophets, 'do not speak to us uprightness (nekochot),' preferring flattering lies. Isaiah 59:14 laments justice and righteousness's exile: 'uprightness (nekochah) cannot enter'—straightforwardness is barred from the public square, parallel to truth stumbling in the streets. The term diagnoses societies that have lost moral straightness. UPRIGHTNESS EQUITY

en: and-uprightness, of-uprightness, right | es: lo-recto, rectitud, rectitudes | fr: [ונכחה], [נכחות], droiture | de: [ונכחה], [נכחה], [נכחות] Isa 26:10; Isa 30:10; Isa 59:14; Amos 3:10

נָכַל H5230 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-3mp (4×)

nakal — to be crafty, deceitful; plot with cunning intent to harm

This verb means to be crafty, deceitful, or knavish, describing deliberate cunning designed to harm or deceive others. The term appears in Akkadian (be crafty), Aramaic, and Syriac with similar meanings of deception and plotting. Biblical usage includes both the basic quality of being a knave or deceiver and active plotting against others. The contexts involve treacherous conspiracy (Joseph's brothers), enemy deception (Midianites), and faithless worship (offering blemished sacrifices). The word emphasizes not mere lying but calculated, cunning schemes to achieve selfish or harmful ends.

(4×) To be crafty, deceitful, or knavish; to plot with cunning. Genesis 37:18 describes Joseph's brothers: 'they plotted against him (vayitnakkelu oto) to kill him'—forming a cunning conspiracy. Numbers 25:18 warns against the Midianites 'for they beguiled you (nikkelu lakhem nikhleihem) with their wiles'—using a cognate accusative emphasizing the craftiness of their deception in the Baal-Peor incident. Psalm 105:25 describes how God 'turned their heart to deal craftily (lehitnakkel) with his servants'—using cunning oppression against Israel in Egypt. Malachi 1:14 pronounces curse on 'the deceiver (nokhel)' who vows a perfect animal but sacrifices a blemished one—cunning religious fraud. The verb emphasizes calculated treachery. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: and-plotted, deceiver, they-deceived | es: a-tratar-con-astucia, engañador, os-engañaron | fr: et-plotted, ils-deceived, tromper | de: [נוכל], sie-betrog, und-schmiedeten-Ränke Gen 37:18; Num 25:18; Ps 105:25; Mal 1:14

נָכְלֵי H5231 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3mp (1×)

wiles, craft, deceitful schemes (in warfare or deception)

Numbers 25:18 describes how the Midianites employed 'their wiles' against Israel through the incident at Peor—using sexual temptation and idolatry as weapons. The term denotes cunning, strategic deception, not mere lies but carefully planned schemes. The plural form suggests multiple tactics working in concert. Ancient Near Eastern warfare recognized that guile could accomplish what force could not; this vocabulary acknowledges the Midianites' sophisticated psychological and spiritual warfare that exploited Israel's weaknesses.

(1×) This plural noun with suffix appears only in Numbers 25:18, describing Midianite stratagem. Spanish 'con engaños' (with deceits) and English 'wiles' both capture the deliberate, crafty nature of the deception. The cognate accusative construction intensifies the meaning—they 'wiled with their wiles.' The Peor incident showed how religious-sexual seduction proved more dangerous to Israel than military assault. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: by-their-wiles | es: con-engaños-de-ellos | fr: par-leur-wiles | de: durch-ihr-wiles Num 25:18

נְכַס H5232 N-mp (2×)

goods, property, possessions; riches subject to confiscation

This Aramaic plural noun denotes property, possessions, or material goods. Both occurrences appear in Ezra's account of Persian support for rebuilding the temple. The term appears in official Persian correspondence about funding sources and potential penalties. One reference concerns using royal goods/funds for temple construction (Ezra 6:8). The other warns of confiscation of property as penalty for disobedience (7:26). The word is standard in Aramaic, Syriac, and later Egyptian Aramaic for material wealth and possessions.

(2×) Both instances come from Persian imperial decrees recorded in Aramaic. Ezra 6:8 contains Darius's order: 'the cost is to be paid to these men in full and without delay from the royal revenue, the tribute of the province from Beyond the River' (literally 'from the goods/property of the king, the taxes of Beyond-the-River'). This secures funding for the temple. Ezra 7:26 lists penalties for those who won't obey God's law or the king's law: 'let judgment be strictly executed on him, whether for death or for banishment or for confiscation of goods (nikhsin) or for imprisonment.' The phrase 'confiscation of property' ('anash nikhsin) shows these goods could be seized as punishment. The pairing 'from the goods of' (6:8) and 'confiscation of goods' (7:26) demonstrates the term's range from general property to forfeitable assets. POSSESSIONS AND PROPERTY en: and-from-the-goods-of, goods | es: bienes, y-de-los-bienes-de | fr: biens, et-biens | de: [ומנכס׳], [נכסין] Ezra 6:8; Ezra 7:26

נְכֶס H5233 Conj-w / N-mp (5×)

riches, wealth, possessions; treasures (probably an Assyrian/Aramaic loanword)

A term for accumulated wealth and material possessions, appearing only in the plural (nekasim). Likely borrowed from Akkadian nikasu ('property, gain'), it carries a slightly formal, even exotic flavor in Hebrew. It often appears alongside osher ('riches') and kavod ('honor'), as in Solomon's request (2 Chr 1:11-12) and the Teacher's lament over wealth one cannot enjoy (Eccl 5:19; 6:2). Joshua 22:8 uses it for the livestock and spoil the Transjordan tribes carried home.

(5×) Material wealth, riches, and possessions viewed as accumulated property. Spanish 'bienes' and French 'possessions' capture the tangible, inventory-like quality. Frequently paired with osher and kavod to form a triad of prosperity (2 Chr 1:11-12; Eccl 6:2). In Ecclesiastes 5:19 God grants nekasim as a gift to be enjoyed; in Joshua 22:8 the term denotes cattle, silver, gold, and spoil distributed among the eastern tribes. POSSESSIONS AND PROPERTY en: and-possessions, and-wealth, wealth | es: Con-riquezas, bienes, y-bienes | fr: [ונכסים], [נכסים], avec-possessions | de: [ונכסים], [נכסים], mit-Besitztum Josh 22:8; 2Chr 1:11; 2Chr 1:12; Eccl 5:19; Eccl 6:2

H5234 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (1×)

he shall acknowledge, recognize (Qere reading)

This Hiphil verb form appears in Daniel 11:39 (Qere reading) within a prophecy about a king who 'shall acknowledge' or 'give recognition to' those who help him conquer. The vocabulary often involves formal recognition—acknowledging authority, legitimating claims, or granting honor. In Deuteronomic law, the verb appears in contexts of acknowledging firstborn rights or recognizing legitimate children. Here in apocalyptic literature, it suggests the king will reward collaborators by officially recognizing their status and granting them authority.

(1×) In Daniel 11:39, the Qere (scribal reading) presents this Hiphil imperfect form meaning 'he shall give recognition.' Spanish 'reconocerá' and French 'reconnaître' preserve the formal acknowledgment sense. The Ketiv offers a different reading, but the Qere suggests official recognition or legitimation of supporters, perhaps granting them territorial authority as the verse continues with 'he shall divide the land for a price.' SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: (qere:he-shall-acknowledge) | es: (reconocerá) | fr: reconnaître | de: [יכיר] Dan 11:39

נָכַר H5234a Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf / 1cs (42×)

To recognize, discern, or acknowledge; also to show partiality, make oneself known, or deny recognition

A verb of perception and social judgment centered on the act of identifying someone or something. Its most common Hiphil usage denotes recognizing a person by sight, as when Joseph's brothers failed to recognize him (Gen 42:8) or when Boaz noticed Ruth gleaning in his field. The word extends into the moral realm: 'recognizing faces' becomes the Hebrew idiom for showing partiality in judgment (Deut 1:17; Prov 24:23). Spanish 'reconocer' and French 'reconnaitre' preserve this breadth from visual identification to social acknowledgment, while the rarer Piel and Hitpael stems push toward deliberate denial or self-revelation.

1. recognize or identify (30×) The primary Hiphil sense: to recognize or identify by perception. Joseph recognized his brothers but they did not recognize him (Gen 42:8); Naomi's neighbors recognized her upon return (Ruth 1:18). Spanish 'reconocio' and French 'reconnaitre' map directly. This covers visual identification, discerning voices, and perceiving situations through evidence. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: He-knows, I-recognized, and-I-perceived | es: Y-reconoció, Y-reconocí, lo-reconocieron | fr: [ואכירה], [מכירים], de-reconnaître | de: [אכיר], [הכירהו], [ואכירה] Gen 27:23; Gen 31:32; Gen 37:32; Gen 37:33; Gen 38:25

2. show partiality (4×) The idiom hakker panim, 'recognizing faces,' meaning to show partiality or favoritism, especially forbidden in judicial contexts. Deuteronomy 1:17 and 16:19 prohibit judges from 'recognizing faces,' while Proverbs 24:23 and 28:21 warn that partiality is not good. Spanish 'hacer acepcion de' captures the technical legal nuance of prejudicial distinction. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: partiality-of, you-shall-recognize, you-shall-show-partiality | es: Hacer-acepción-de-, Hacer-distinción-de-, reconocerás | fr: reconnaître, tu-devra-montrer-partiality, tu-devra-recognize | de: [הכר], du-soll-recognize, du-soll-zeigen-partiality Deut 1:17; Deut 16:19; Prov 24:23; Prov 28:21

3. acknowledge or regard (4×) To acknowledge or formally regard someone's status or claim. Deuteronomy 21:17 requires a father to 'acknowledge' the firstborn's rights; Isaiah 63:16 laments that Abraham does not 'acknowledge us.' The sense moves beyond mere visual recognition to deliberate social or covenantal acceptance. Spanish 'reconocera' and German evidence confirm this relational weight. SEEING AND PERCEIVING
en: I-will-regard, [ketiv:he-acknowledged], acknowledges-us | es: [reconocer], nos-reconoce, reconocerá | fr: [אכיר], [יכירנו], il-devra-acknowledge | de: [אכיר], [הכיר], [יכירנו'] Deut 21:17; Isa 63:16; Jer 24:5; Dan 11:39

4. make oneself known (1×) Hitpael reflexive: to make oneself known or reveal one's character. Proverbs 20:11 says even a youth 'makes himself known' by his deeds. This sole occurrence carries a proverbial flavor of self-revelation through action rather than words. The reflexive stem distinguishes it from external recognition. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: makes-himself-known | es: se-da-a-conocer- | fr: reconnaître | de: [יתנכר'] Prov 20:11

5. deny or disown (1×) Piel with a privative or negative force: to refuse recognition, deny, or disown. Job 21:29 challenges the friends: 'Do you not recognize their signs?' The rhetorical context implies willful failure to acknowledge obvious evidence. The Piel intensification underscores deliberate, not accidental, non-recognition. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: you-recognize | es: desconocéis. | fr: reconnaître | de: [תנכרון] Job 21:29

6. be regarded or favored (1×) Piel passive-stative: to be regarded or shown preference. Job 34:19 declares God does not 'regard' the rich above the poor. This single occurrence parallels the adjacent phrase 'does not lift the face of princes,' confirming a sense of preferential treatment being negated. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: is-regarded | es: es-reconocido- | fr: reconnaître | de: [נכר] Job 34:19

7. be recognized (1×) Nifal passive: to be recognized or identified by others. Lamentations 4:8 mourns that the Nazirites' faces are 'not recognized' in the streets because of famine's devastation. Spanish 'son reconocidos' preserves the passive. The physical transformation is so severe that identity itself is lost. SEEING AND PERCEIVING en: they-are-recognized | es: son-reconocidos | fr: [נכרו] | de: [נכרו] Lam 4:8

נכר H5234b Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-3ms (7×)

To disguise oneself, feign identity; to misconstrue or misattribute; to deliver over as foreign; to profane, treat as alien

Built on the root נכר ('foreign, strange'), this denominative verb explores what happens when familiar things are treated as alien — or alien things as familiar. Joseph 'made himself strange' to his brothers (Gen 42:7), and Jeroboam's wife disguised herself before the prophet (1 Kgs 14:5-6), both in the Hitpael reflexive. Spanish disfrazándose and the recurring idea of 'feigning' capture the deliberate deception. The Piel extends the root into darker territory: enemies who 'misconstrue' God's acts (Deut 32:27) and those who 'profane' sacred space by treating it as foreign (Jer 19:4). Each sense orbits the same axis — the dangerous blurring of what is known and what is strange.

1. disguise oneself, feign to be a stranger (4×) To disguise oneself or feign to be a stranger (Hitpael reflexive). Joseph deliberately makes himself unrecognizable to his brothers (Gen 42:7), and Jeroboam's wife disguises herself before Ahijah (1 Kgs 14:5-6). Spanish disfrazándose and te disfrazas ('you disguise yourself') capture the intentional self-concealment. In Prov 26:24 a hater 'disguises himself' with his lips — the deception moves from physical costume to verbal camouflage. KNOWING AND LEARNING
en: and-he-made-himself-strange, disguises-himself, pretending-to-be-a-stranger | es: disfrazándose, finge, te-disfrazas | fr: et-il-fit-lui-même-strange, feignant-à-être-un-stranger, reconnaître | de: [נכר'], pretending-zu-sein-ein-stranger, und-stellte-sich-fremd Gen 42:7; 1Kgs 14:5; 1Kgs 14:6; Prov 26:24

2. misconstrue, misattribute (1×) To misconstrue or misattribute, treating what is familiar as if it were foreign (Piel). In Deut 32:27 Moses warns that Israel's enemies might 'misconstrue' their victory, attributing to their own power what was actually God's judgment. Spanish entiendan mal ('misunderstand') preserves the cognitive distortion — a failure of recognition that inverts the truth of events. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS
en: misunderstand | es: entiendan-mal | fr: misunderstand | de: misunderstand Deut 32:27

3. deliver over, hand over to a stranger (1×) To deliver over or hand someone to a stranger, estranging them from their proper place (Piel). In 1 Sam 23:7 Saul declares God has 'delivered' David into his hand — though the Hebrew text is debated (LXX reads mākar, 'sold'). Spanish lo rechazó ('rejected him') and French a délivra capture the sense of cutting someone off from divine protection, treating a covenant member as an outsider. REPAYING AND RENDERING en: has-delivered | es: lo-rechazó | fr: a-délivra | de: hat-befreite 1Sam 23:7

4. make foreign, profane (1×) To make foreign or profane, rendering sacred space alien (Piel). In Jer 19:4 the people have 'made this place foreign' by introducing alien worship. Spanish profanaron ('they profaned') highlights the sacrilege: the familiar holy ground of the Temple precincts is treated as though it belonged to foreign gods, erasing its identity as the dwelling place of YHWH. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS en: and-they-made-foreign | es: y-profanaron | fr: [וינכרו] | de: [וינכרו] Jer 19:4

נֵכֶר H5235 N-msc / 3ms (2×)

misfortune, disaster, calamity; harmful fate

This masculine noun signifies calamity, misfortune, or disaster—harmful events that befall someone. Job uses it to describe what the unrighteous should expect: 'Is not calamity for the unrighteous?' (Job 31:3), where it parallels 'disaster' (eyd). Obadiah uses it with a possessive suffix for Edom's day of judgment: 'you should not have gloated over your brother on the day of his misfortune' (Ob 12). The word comes from a root related to 'foreign' or 'strange,' suggesting calamity as something alien or estranging.

(2×) Both speakers address disaster as a principle or event. Job argues from moral order: if he had committed secret sins, 'Is not calamity (neker) for the unrighteous, and disaster (eyd) for evildoers?' (31:3). The rhetorical question assumes calamity rightly falls on the wicked—making Job's suffering puzzling. Obadiah condemns Edom's behavior during Jerusalem's fall: 'you should not have gloated over Judah on the day of their destruction, nor rejoiced... on the day of his misfortune (nakhro)' (Ob 12). Here the possessive 'his misfortune' (nakhr + suffix) personalizes the disaster as belonging to the victim. French 'malheur' and Spanish 'desgracia' (misfortune) capture the sense of adverse fate, while German 'Unglück' emphasizes the bad fortune aspect. CALAMITY AND DISASTER en: and-disaster, his-misfortune | es: su-desgracia, y-extrañeza | fr: de-son-malheur„ et-ונכר | de: [ונכר], seines-Unglücks Job 31:3; Obad 1:12

נֵכָר H5236 Art / N-ms (36×)

Foreignness; what is alien — used of foreign gods (אֱלֹהֵי נֵכָר) and of foreign persons (בֶּן־נֵכָר)

A noun denoting what belongs to another people or nation, capturing both the abstract quality of foreignness and the concrete person who embodies it. In its attributive use it most often modifies 'gods' — Jacob commands his household to put away the 'gods of foreignness' (Gen 35:2), and Deuteronomy warns against the 'foreign god of the land' (Deut 31:16). As a substantive it designates a non-Israelite: a 'son of foreignness' barred from the Passover (Exod 12:43) yet welcomed in Isaiah's eschatological vision (Isa 56:3). Spanish and French translations split cleanly between 'ajeno/extraño' for the attribute and 'extranjero/étranger' for the person, confirming the two semantic poles.

1. foreigner, foreign person (18×) Substantive use referring to a person of foreign origin — an outsider, alien, or non-Israelite. The multilingual glosses consistently choose person-nouns (eng 'foreigner', spa 'extranjero', fra 'étranger'). Key construct phrase: בֶּן־הַנֵּכָר 'son of foreignness' = foreigner (Gen 17:12; Exod 12:43; Isa 56:3). In 2 Sam 22:45 the plural 'sons of foreignness' denotes subjugated nations. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: a-foreigner, foreigner, foreigners | es: el-extranjero, extranjero | fr: [נכר], foreigner, l'étranger | de: Auslaender, [הנכר], [נכר] Gen 17:12; Gen 17:27; Exod 12:43; Lev 22:25; 2Sam 22:45

2. foreign, foreignness (attribute) (18×) Abstract or attributive sense: the quality of being foreign or strange, typically modifying another noun. Most prominent in the phrase אֱלֹהֵי (הַ)נֵּכָר 'gods of foreignness' = foreign gods (Gen 35:2, 4; Josh 24:20, 23; Judg 10:16). Spanish and German translations use adjectives ('ajeno', 'fremd') rather than person-nouns here. The singular אֵל נֵכָר 'a foreign god' appears in Deut 32:12; Ps 81:10; Mal 2:11, always in contexts contrasting Yahweh with other deities. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: foreign, foreignness, the-foreign | es: ajeno, el-extranjero, el-extraño | fr: [הנכר], foreignness, le-foreign | de: [הנכר], [נכר], der-Fremde Gen 35:2; Gen 35:4; Deut 31:16; Deut 32:12; Josh 24:20

נָכְרִי H5237 Prep-m / Adj-fs (46×)

Foreign, alien; a stranger or outsider, especially the 'foreign woman' of Proverbs wisdom literature

An adjective marking someone or something as outside the covenant community — foreign land (Exod 2:22), foreign wives (1 Kgs 11:1), foreign gods. Unlike ger (resident alien with protected status), nokri emphasizes otherness and distance. In Deuteronomic law it governs economic distinctions: interest may be charged to the nokri but not to a brother (Deut 23:20). Proverbs develops a distinctive feminine substantive — the ishah nokriyah — warning against the seductive "foreign woman" whose ways lead to death (Prov 2:16; 5:20; 7:5).

1. foreign, alien (attributive adjective) (22×) Attributive adjective modifying nouns: foreign land (Exod 2:22), foreign women (1 Kgs 11:1; Ezra 10:2), foreign garments (Zeph 1:8). Spanish extranjera/extranjero and French étrangère consistently render the national or ethnic outsider sense. The emphasis falls on belonging to another people rather than moral judgment. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: [foreigners], alien, foreign | es: [extraños], extranjera, extranjeras | fr: [נכריה], der-étrangères, foreign | de: [נכריה], als-Fremde, der-foreign Gen 31:15; Exod 2:22; Exod 18:3; Exod 21:8; Deut 17:15

2. foreigner, stranger (substantive masculine) (16×) Substantive masculine use: the foreigner as a legal category distinct from the ger (protected resident). Deuteronomy's economic legislation permits charging interest to the nokri (Deut 23:20) and selling carrion to him (Deut 14:21). German Ausländer captures this legal-outsider nuance well. Solomon's prayer in 1 Kings 8:41 envisions the nokri coming from afar to worship at the Temple. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: a-foreigner, and-a-foreigner, and-the-foreigner | es: Al-extranjero, a-extranjeros, al-foráneo | fr: [לנכרים], et-le-étranger, et-étranger | de: Auslaender, [הנכרי], der-Auslaender Deut 14:21; Deut 15:3; Deut 23:20; Deut 29:22; Judg 19:12

3. foreign woman (Proverbs figure) (8×) The 'foreign woman' (nokriyah) of Proverbs — a substantive feminine figure representing sexual and moral danger. Paired with ishah zarah (Prov 2:16; 7:5), she symbolizes the path of folly and death. Ruth 2:10 provides a poignant counterpoint: Ruth calls herself a nokriyah, yet Boaz's kindness overturns the expected social boundary. French étrangère and Spanish extranjera both serve here, though the Proverbs figure carries connotations far beyond mere nationality. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: (foreign-woman), a-foreign-woman, a-foreigner | es: (una-extranjera), de-extranjera, de-la-extranjera | fr: de-étrangère, un-étranger, étrangère | de: fremd Ruth 2:10; Prov 2:16; Prov 5:20; Prov 6:24; Prov 7:5

נְכֹת H5238 N-fsc / 3ms (3×)

treasure, treasury; the stored wealth of a king

This rare noun denotes a treasure-house or the valuables stored within it. The etymology is debated—possibly borrowed from Assyrian 'bit nakamti' (house of treasure) from a root meaning 'to heap up.' It appears only in parallel accounts of Hezekiah showing Babylonian envoys 'all that was in his treasure-house' (2 Kings 20:13 = Isaiah 39:2). The context emphasizes royal wealth: silver, gold, spices, and precious oil. Spanish and French translations ('tesoro,' 'trésor') capture the concentrated wealth implied, while the dual Isaiah references underscore the narrative's significance.

(3×) The word appears exclusively in the Hezekiah narrative where the king displays his accumulated riches to Babylonian messengers—an act Isaiah condemns as prophetically dangerous. The multilingual glosses focus on 'treasure' and 'treasury,' with possessive forms ('his treasure,' 'de su tesoro') emphasizing royal ownership. The suffixed form 'his treasure-house' (בֵּית נְכֹתֹה) suggests a specific architectural space for storing wealth, not merely portable valuables. RICHES AND WEALTH

en: and-the-gold, his-treasure, the-silver | es: (de-su-tesoro), [de-sus-tesoros], sus-tesoros | fr: [(נכתו)], [[נכתה]], son-trésor | de: [(נכתו)], [[נכתה]], sein-Schatz 2Kgs 20:13; Isa 39:2

נלה H5239 Prep-k / V-Hifil-Inf / 2ms (1×)

when you finish, when you complete (disputed text, probably error for 'when you finish')

Isaiah 33:1 contains a textual puzzle: the consonantal text seems to read 'when you destroy' (from a rare root), but most scholars follow the ancient scribal suggestion to read 'when you finish destroying' (from the common root kalah). The verse announces judgment on Assyria—when they finish plundering, they themselves will be plundered. The wordplay and reversal are typical of Isaiah: the destroyer becomes the destroyed, the betrayer becomes the betrayed. The textual uncertainty hasn't obscured the message: tyranny contains the seeds of its own downfall.

(1×) This hapax in Isaiah 33:1 is likely a scribal error or rare form. BDB suggests reading it as an infinitive from kalah (to finish, complete) rather than from the dubious root nalah. Spanish 'cuando termines' (when you finish) and French translations follow the emended reading. The parallel structure with 'when you cease from betraying' supports understanding this as temporal: when the Assyrian oppressor finishes his violent work, divine justice will respond in kind. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: you-shall-be-destroyed | es: cuando-termines | fr: [כנלתך] | de: [כנלתך] Isa 33:1

בָּזֶה H5240 N-fs (1×)

despised, contemptible (thing or person)

This adjective appears in 1 Samuel 15:9 describing what Saul and his army refused to destroy after defeating the Amalekites: 'everything despised and worthless.' The command was total destruction (herem), but human calculation crept in—why waste good livestock? The 'despised' things were scrawny animals, weak stock, things with no market value. Yet Saul's selective obedience revealed the heart issue: he would obey when it cost him nothing. The vocabulary of contempt (from bazah, to despise) becomes ironic since Saul's own disregard for clear commands would lead to his rejection as king.

(1×) In 1 Samuel 15:9, this passive participle describes animals deemed worthless and therefore suitable for destruction. Spanish 'despreciada' and French 'méprisé' capture the valuation sense—judged to have no worth. The irony runs deep: Saul destroyed what seemed valueless but kept what seemed valuable, inverting God's command. His contempt for weak animals paralleled his contempt for absolute obedience, a substitution of human economics for divine instruction. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: despised | es: despreciada | fr: méprisa | de: despised 1Sam 15:9

נְמוּאֵל H5241 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (3×)

Nemuel, name of two Israelites: son of Simeon and a Reubenite

This personal name identifies two different individuals in Israel's tribal genealogies. The first is a son of Simeon (Numbers 26:12, 1 Chronicles 4:24), elsewhere called Jemuel in earlier lists (Genesis 46:10, Exodus 6:15)—a common pattern of name variation in genealogies. The second Nemuel was a Reubenite, brother of the infamous rebels Dathan and Abiram who challenged Moses' leadership (Numbers 26:9). The name's meaning is uncertain, though the consistent Greek rendering 'Namouēl' shows stable transmission. The dual identity requires context to distinguish which Nemuel is in view.

(3×) All three occurrences appear in genealogical or census contexts within Numbers and Chronicles. The multilingual evidence shows simple transliteration (Nemuel, Nemuel, Nemuel) with prepositional variations reflecting the Hebrew construct ('to Nemuel,' 'of Nemuel'). The Simeonite Nemuel heads a clan (the Nemuelites), while the Reubenite Nemuel is mentioned to locate Dathan and Abiram within their family tree, forever linking the name to Israel's wilderness rebellion. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nemu'el, Nemuel, to-Nemuel | es: Nemuel, de-Nemuel | fr: Nemuel, [נמואל], à-Nemuel | de: Nemuel, [נמואל], zu-Nemuel Num 26:9; Num 26:12; 1Chr 4:24

נְמוּאֵלִי H5242 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Nemuelite (clan designation, descendants of Nemuel)

Numbers 26:12 lists this clan (with definite article) among the families of Simeon during the wilderness census. Clan designations (gentilic adjectives) functioned like surnames in ancient Israel, marking lineage and land inheritance rights. The census in Numbers 26 follows the plague that killed 24,000 Israelites; it's both a military muster and a record of who survived to enter Canaan. The Nemuelites were part of Simeon, a tribe that would later be absorbed into Judah, their identity preserved in genealogical memory even as their territorial distinctiveness faded.

(1×) This gentilic form with article appears in Numbers 26:12, designating Nemuel's descendants. Spanish 'los nemuelitas' and French 'le Nemuelite' preserve the collective sense with appropriate articles. Such clan names anchor individuals in family networks that determined inheritance, military organization, and social identity. The Septuagint's transliteration shows Greek translators recognized this as an ethnic-familial identifier rather than a common noun requiring semantic translation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Nemuelite | es: los-nemuelitas | fr: le-Nemuelite | de: der-Nemuelite Num 26:12

מָלַל H5243a V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (4×)

malal — to wither, fade, languish; decline and waste away

This verb, a secondary root apparently derived from umal, means to wither, fade, or languish—describing the wilting of plants or the decline of people. The imagery consistently draws from botanical withering applied to human mortality or judgment. Grass withering in heat becomes a metaphor for the wicked's swift demise or human frailty. Job uses it to describe both life's brevity and the withering of the wicked's prosperity. The Polel stem intensifies to emphasize the process of withering. Most modern scholars read these forms as Qal rather than Niphal.

(4×) To wither, fade, or languish, describing plant-like decline. Psalm 37:2 promises the wicked 'will soon wither like grass (yimmallu),' parallel to 'fade like the green herb'—swift divine judgment. Job 14:2 laments human frailty: man 'comes out like a flower and withers (vayyimmal)'—life's brevity illustrated by a wilting blossom. Job 18:16 describes the wicked's fate: 'his roots dry up beneath, and his branch withers (yimmal) above'—total systemic failure. Job 24:24 observes the wicked 'are exalted a little while, then gone; they wither (yimmalu) like heads of grain'—cut down suddenly. Psalm 90:6 uses the Polel: grass 'withers (yemolel) and dries up' by evening. The verb captures progressive deterioration unto death. WITHERING AND FADING

en: and-withers, they-are-cut-off, they-wither | es: se-marchita, serán-cortados, son-cortados. | fr: circoncire, et-ימל, וימל | de: [וימל], [ימל], [ימלו] Job 14:2; Job 18:16; Job 24:24; Ps 37:2

מָלַל H5243b Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-2mp (1×)

you shall circumcise (Niphal form, possibly passive or reflexive)

Genesis 17:11 contains God's covenant command to Abraham: 'You shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin.' The verb here appears in an unusual Niphal (passive/reflexive) form, which some scholars attribute to a variant root (malal) though most now see it as simply a form of the common mul (circumcise). The construction may emphasize the community's participation—'you shall have yourselves circumcised'—or reflect dialectal variation. Circumcision marked Israelite males as covenant participants, a permanent bodily sign of relationship with YHWH, performed on eight-day-old infants and adult converts alike.

(1×) This Niphal perfect (or possibly Qal from variant root) appears in Genesis 17:11 within the Abrahamic covenant. Spanish 'circuncidaréis' and French 'circoncire' render it as active command, smoothing over the unusual form. The passive/reflexive voice may stress covenant participation rather than mere ritual performance—this is something done to oneself as entry into community, not merely a surgical procedure performed on another. CIRCUMCISION RITE

en: and-you-will-circumcise | es: Y-circuncidaréis | fr: et-tu—circoncire | de: und-ihr-sollt-beschneiden Gen 17:11

נְמָלָה H5244 Art / N-fp (2×)

ant; small industrious insect known for diligent gathering

This feminine noun denotes the ant, appearing in Proverbs' wisdom literature as an example of diligence and foresight. The singular form addresses the sluggard: 'Go to the ant, you sluggard; consider her ways and be wise' (Prov 6:6). The plural describes ants as a weak but wise creature: 'the ants are a people not strong, yet they prepare their food in summer' (30:25). The ant's instinctive industriousness, working without overseer, makes it a natural emblem for self-motivated labor and preparation.

(2×) Both proverbs hold up ants as teachers of human wisdom. Proverbs 6:6 commands the lazy person to observe ant behavior: 'which, having no chief, officer, or ruler, prepares her bread in summer and gathers her food in harvest' (6:7-8). The ant's self-directed work ethic shames those who need external motivation. Proverbs 30:25 lists ants among four small but exceedingly wise creatures: 'The ants are a people not strong, yet they provide their food in summer.' Calling them 'a people' elevates their communal organization. The focus on summer gathering appears in both texts, highlighting forethought—working when resources are available to prepare for scarcity. Cross-linguistic translations consistently identify this as the common ant. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: the-ant, the-ants | es: Las-hormigas, la-hormiga | fr: le-הנמלים, נמלה | de: [הנמלים], [נמלה] Prov 6:6; Prov 30:25

נָמֵר H5245 Prep-k / N-ms (1×)

like a leopard (comparison in apocalyptic vision)

Daniel 7:6 describes the third beast in Daniel's apocalyptic vision as 'like a leopard.' Ancient readers knew leopards as solitary, stealthy hunters with explosive speed—up to 58 km/h in short bursts—and the ability to drag prey twice their weight into trees. The beast has four heads and four wings, suggesting rapid multi-directional expansion and rule. Interpreters traditionally identify this with Greece and Alexander's lightning conquest of the Persian Empire, which fractured into four kingdoms after his death. The leopard captures both speed and predatory efficiency.

(1×) This prepositional phrase in Daniel 7:6 employs animal symbolism common in apocalyptic literature. Spanish 'como leopardo' and French 'âne' (though 'âne' meaning 'donkey' appears to be an error in the gloss data—should be 'léopard') render the simile. The leopard's characteristics—speed, spots, arboreal habits, solitary hunting—invite symbolic interpretation. Daniel's vision uses wild animals to represent empires, and the leopard's swiftness matches historical accounts of Alexander's rapid campaigns. LEOPARD PREDATOR

en: like-leopard | es: como-leopardo | fr: âne | de: [כנמר] Dan 7:6

נָמֵר H5246 Prep-m / N-mp (6×)

Leopard; a large spotted predatory cat used in prophetic imagery for swiftness, danger, and coming judgment.

The leopard (Panthera pardus), a powerful spotted predator that appears in Hebrew Scripture almost exclusively in prophetic and poetic contexts. Its defining characteristic in biblical usage is its spots – Jeremiah 13:23 asks whether the leopard can change them, a proverb for the impossibility of moral transformation. Hosea 13:7 uses it as a metaphor for God's fierce judgment, while Habakkuk 1:8 emphasizes the terrifying swiftness of the Chaldean cavalry by comparing their horses to leopards. Isaiah 11:6 envisions the messianic age as a time when the leopard lies down with the young goat. The Spanish 'leopardo' and French 'leopard' directly reflect the same animal across all translation traditions.

leopard (animal) (6×) The leopard (Panthera pardus), a large predatory cat known for its spotted coat, swiftness, and stealth. Biblical writers employ it consistently in figurative and prophetic language: Jeremiah 13:23 uses its unchangeable spots as a proverbial image; Habakkuk 1:8 highlights its speed in describing the Babylonian threat; Hosea 13:7 likens God's coming judgment to a lurking leopard; and Isaiah 11:6 places it alongside a kid goat in the peaceable kingdom vision. Song of Songs 4:8 references 'mountains of leopards' as a wild, dangerous landscape. All six occurrences point to the same animal across singular and plural forms. LEOPARD PREDATOR

en: and-leopard, leopard, leopards | es: como-leopardo, leopardo, los-leopardos | fr: [ונמר], [נמר], des-léopards. | de: [ונמר], [כנמר], [מנמרים] Song 4:8; Isa 11:6; Jer 5:6; Jer 13:23; Hos 13:7

נִמְרָה H5247 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Nimrah (place name east of Jordan)

This Transjordanian location appears in Numbers 32:3 among the cities the tribes of Reuben and Gad requested as inheritance. The name possibly relates to 'leopard' or to 'clear/fresh water,' and the site is likely Tell Nimrin, about six miles east of the Jordan near Jericho. The territory was suitable for livestock (the reason Reuben and Gad wanted it), with adequate water and grazing. Moses initially interpreted their request as refusal to join the conquest, but they clarified: they would fight alongside their brothers, then return to these eastern lands.

(1×) This proper noun in Numbers 32:3 identifies a Transjordanian settlement. Spanish 'y Nimrá' and translations across languages preserve it as a transliteration. The site is associated with Beth-nimrah elsewhere, suggesting 'house of Nimrah' or 'house of the leopard.' Geographic names often encoded features of landscape or fauna; the region may have been known for leopard activity, or the name may derive from the clear waters of the area. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Nimrah | es: y-Nimrá | fr: et-Nimrah | de: und-Nimrah Num 32:3

נִמְרֹד H5248 N-proper-ms (4×)

Nimrod, legendary hunter and mighty warrior; founder of Mesopotamian cities including Babel, Nineveh, and Calah

Nimrod stands as one of Scripture's most enigmatic figures—a 'mighty hunter before the LORD' whose name became proverbial (Gen 10:9). As a descendant of Ham through Cush, he founded the kingdom of Shinar (Babylon) and built several major Mesopotamian cities. The exact etymology remains uncertain, though some ancient interpreters connected it with rebellion. Later tradition in Micah 5:6 uses 'land of Nimrod' as a synonym for Assyria, showing how his legacy became emblematic of Mesopotamian imperial power.

(4×) The historical or legendary figure Nimrod appears exclusively as a proper name across Genesis, Chronicles, and Micah. The multilingual evidence uniformly treats this as a transliterated personal name rather than a descriptive title, maintaining the Hebrew form across European languages. Genesis 10:8-9 establishes his reputation as both a hunter and city-builder, while Micah's 'land of Nimrod' demonstrates how the name evolved to represent broader geographic and political entities. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nimrod, like-Nimrod | es: Nimrod, como-Nimrod | fr: Nimrod, [נמרוד], comme-Nimrod | de: Nimrod, [נמרד], [נמרוד] Gen 10:8; Gen 10:9; 1Chr 1:10; Mic 5:6

נִמְרִים H5249 N-proper-fs (2×)

Nimrim; place in Moab, possibly meaning 'wholesome waters'

This place name appears in oracles of judgment against Moab, always in the phrase 'waters of Nimrim.' Isaiah and Jeremiah both lament its desolation. The location was likely in the Wadi Numeirah area at the southeastern end of the Dead Sea, though identification remains tentative. The name may connect to Arabic roots suggesting 'wholesome' or 'clear' water—making its drying up particularly tragic. Ancient sources like the Onomasticon reference a similar place name in the region.

(2×) Both prophets use identical phrasing in their Moab oracles. Isaiah 15:6 mourns: 'the waters of Nimrim are a desolation; the grass is withered, the vegetation fails, the greenery is no more.' Jeremiah 48:34 echoes this in his longer Moab prophecy, listing devastated locations culminating in Nimrim. The 'waters of Nimrim' evidently represented a known water source whose failure would spell disaster for the region—hence its use as a symbol of total desolation. The Septuagint and other ancient versions preserve the name with minor variations, confirming it as a recognized geographic feature. The prophetic convention of pairing place names with their characteristic features ('waters of Nimrim') emphasizes what made each location significant. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nimrim | es: Nimrim | fr: [נמרים] | de: [נמרים] Isa 15:6; Jer 48:34

נִמְשִׁי H5250 N-proper-ms (5×)

Nimshi — grandfather (or ancestor) of King Jehu of Israel

The name of Jehu's grandfather (or more distant ancestor), consistently used in the patronymic formula 'Jehu son of Nimshi.' This identifying phrase appears across the narratives of Elijah's commission to anoint Jehu (1 Kgs 19:16), Jehu's revolt and anointing (2 Kgs 9:2, 14, 20), and the Chronicler's account of Ahaziah's death (2 Chr 22:7). The Septuagint renders it Namesthei or Namessei. The name may derive from the root m-sh-h ('to draw out').

(5×) Nimshi, the ancestor of King Jehu, used exclusively in the patronymic 'Jehu son of Nimshi.' All five occurrences serve as a fixed identifying formula across both Kings and Chronicles. Spanish 'Nimsi' and French 'Nimshi' preserve the form. The designation links Jehu's dynasty to a recognized clan lineage, from Elijah's prophetic commission (1 Kgs 19:16) through the coup narrative (2 Kgs 9:2, 14, 20). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Nimshi | es: Nimsi, Nimsí | fr: Nimshi, [נמשי] | de: Nimshi, [נמשי] 1Kgs 19:16; 2Kgs 9:2; 2Kgs 9:14; 2Kgs 9:20; 2Chr 22:7

נֵס H5251 N-ms (20×)

A banner, standard, or ensign raised as a rallying point; a pole or mast; a warning sign

The noun נֵס evokes something raised high and visible from far off — a standard planted on a hilltop to rally the nations or signal the onset of war. Isaiah is the great poet of the נֵס: God 'lifts up a banner for the nations' (Isa 5:26), the root of Jesse 'stands as an ensign for the peoples' (Isa 11:10), and the scattered of Judah are gathered when the banner is raised (Isa 11:12). In its more concrete use, Moses sets the bronze serpent on a נֵס — a simple pole — so that anyone bitten might look and live (Num 21:8-9). The word also appears in the altar name יְהוָה נִסִּי, 'The LORD is my banner' (Exod 17:15), commemorating Israel's victory over Amalek.

1. banner, standard, ensign (17×) The dominant sense of a banner, standard, or military ensign raised on a prominent height as a rallying point or signal, covering 17 of 20 occurrences. The multilingual glosses consistently use banner vocabulary — Spanish 'bandera/estandarte,' French 'banniere/etendard,' German 'Banner.' Isaiah uses it repeatedly for God's eschatological signal to the nations (Isa 5:26, 11:10, 11:12, 13:2, 18:3, 49:22, 62:10), while Jeremiah deploys it for the signal of approaching doom (Jer 4:6, 4:21, 50:2, 51:12,27). Psalm 60:4 applies the image devotionally: 'You have given a banner to those who fear You.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-banner, a-sail, as-banner | es: bandera, como-estandarte, de-estandarte | fr: bannière, et-étendard, étendard | de: Banner, ein-Banner, und-Banner Ps 60:4; Isa 5:26; Isa 11:10; Isa 11:12; Isa 13:2

2. pole, mast (2×) A concrete physical sense of a pole, mast, or staff on which something is displayed or mounted. In Numbers 21:8-9, God instructs Moses to make a bronze serpent and set it 'on a pole' (עַל־נֵס) — here the word denotes the object itself rather than what it signals. Isaiah 33:23 may extend this to a ship's mast. The Spanish 'asta' and English 'pole' clearly differentiate this from the banner-signal sense, focusing on the upright support structure rather than the rallying emblem. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-pole, the-pole | es: asta, el-asta | fr: le-pole, un-pole | de: der-pole, ein-pole Num 21:8; Num 21:9

3. sign, warning signal (1×) A rare use as a warning sign or object lesson raised for public visibility. In Numbers 26:10 the earth swallowed the company of Korah and they became 'a sign' (לְנֵס) — their destruction displayed as a permanent cautionary example. The Spanish 'por senal' and English 'for sign' mark this as a communicative act: the event itself is raised up, metaphorically, as a visible admonition to the community, paralleling the physical raising of the military standard but now serving moral pedagogy. SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: for-sign | es: por-señal | fr: pour-signe | de: fuer-Zeichen Num 26:10

נְסִבָּה H5252 N-fs (1×)

turn of affairs, circumstances, providence

This rare noun appears in 2 Chronicles 10:15 (parallel to 1 Kings 12:15), explaining why King Rehoboam rejected wise counsel and accepted foolish advice, leading to the kingdom's division: 'For it was a turn of affairs brought about by God.' The term suggests circumstances that pivot history, moments when events swivel in unexpected directions. Here it names divine providence working through human foolishness—God used Rehoboam's arrogance to fulfill prophecy. The word acknowledges that history has hinges, turning points where everything changes, and sometimes God is the one turning the handle.

(1×) This feminine noun in 2 Chronicles 10:15 parallels sibbah in the Kings account, both meaning 'circumstance' or 'cause.' Spanish 'causa' captures the causal sense. The vocabulary points to an orchestrated reversal or redirection of events. The chronicler emphasizes that Rehoboam's disastrous choice wasn't merely political incompetence but divine arrangement—a 'turn' engineered by God to establish the prophesied split between Judah and Israel. CAUSE REASON PRETEXT

en: a-turn-of-events | es: causa | fr: [נסבה] | de: [נסבה] 2Chr 10:15

סוּג H5253 Prep-k / V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mpc (9×)

To move back, remove a boundary, retreat, or be driven away; used of unlawful boundary removal, spiritual backsliding, and the defeat of justice.

A verb whose semantic heart is unauthorized displacement – moving something or someone from where they rightfully belong. Its most distinctive biblical use is the Hifil prohibition against moving a neighbor's boundary stone (Deut 19:14, 27:17, Prov 22:28, 23:10), a crime that struck at the very foundations of Israelite land theology. The Nifal forms describe retreat and withdrawal, applied powerfully to justice and truth being 'turned back' in Isaiah's courtroom indictment (Isa 59:13-14). Hosea compares Judah's princes to boundary-movers (Hos 5:10), fusing the concrete and covenantal dimensions. The BDB entry also records the related root שׂוּג with identical meaning, and Arabic cognates confirm the core sense of going back and forth.

1. move, remove (a boundary) (5×) Hifil: to move or remove a boundary marker, the unlawful displacement of a neighbor's landmark. This is the most frequent sense (5 occurrences) and the most culturally loaded, since boundary stones guaranteed each family's ancestral inheritance in the promised land. Deuteronomy 19:14 and 27:17 place this act under solemn curse, while Proverbs 22:28 and 23:10 extend the prohibition with wisdom urgency. Hosea 5:10 applies the image metaphorically to Judah's princes, likening covenant violation to land theft. Spanish como-los-que-mueven ('like those who move') and English 'like movers of' both preserve the participial comparison. TURNING BACK APOSTASY

en: like-movers-of, move, one-moving | es: como-los-que-mueven, el-que-redujere, moverás | fr: comme-ceux-qui-déplacent, tu-devra-move, un-moving | de: [כמסיגי], [תסג], du-soll-bewegen Deut 19:14; Deut 27:17; Prov 22:28; Prov 23:10; Hos 5:10

2. turn back, retreat (2×) Nifal: to turn back, retreat, or withdraw intransitively. In Isaiah 59:13, justice is described as 'turning back' from the community, personifying righteousness as a figure who retreats in the face of oppression. Micah 2:6 uses the form in the context of prophetic speech being silenced. Spanish se-apartarán ('they will turn away') captures the reflexive withdrawal. This sense extends the boundary-displacement idea inward: it is now moral reality, not a stone, that has been pushed from its proper place. TURNING BACK APOSTASY

en: and-turning-back, will-turn-away | es: se-apartarán, y-apartarse | fr: [ונסוג], [יסג] | de: [ונסוג], [יסג] Isa 59:13; Mic 2:6

3. be driven back (1×) Hofal (passive of Hifil): to be driven back or thrust aside by an external force. Isaiah 59:14 declares that justice 'is driven back' in the public square, using the passive to emphasize that righteous judgment has been forcibly expelled by corrupt powers. English 'is driven back' and Spanish fue rechazado ('was rejected/pushed back') both highlight the involuntary nature of this displacement, forming a devastating courtroom image alongside the Nifal in the preceding verse. DRIVEN AWAY SWEPT en: And-is-driven-back | es: Y-fue-rechazado | fr: [והסג] | de: [והסג] Isa 59:14

4. put aside, take away (1×) Hifil: to remove or put aside something beyond the specific domain of boundary stones. In Micah 6:14, God pronounces judgment: 'you will remove but not rescue,' describing futile attempts to save possessions under divine discipline. Spanish retirarás ('you will withdraw/remove') captures the broader transitive action. This sense generalizes the Hifil from land-boundary contexts to any act of taking away or setting aside. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: and-you-will-remove | es: y-retirarás | fr: et-il-reculera | de: [ותסג] Mic 6:14

נָסָה H5254 Prep-l / V-Piel-Inf (36×)

To test, prove, or try; whether God testing humans, humans testing God, or attempting something daring

A Piel-intensive verb whose force depends entirely on who is testing whom. When God tests Abraham (Gen 22:1), the purpose is to prove and refine faith; when Israel tests God at Massah (Exod 17:2; Ps 78:18), the act is rebellious provocation. A third, rarer use means simply 'to attempt' – as when Deuteronomy 4:34 asks whether any god has 'attempted' to take a nation from within another nation. Spanish keeps the senses distinct: 'probar' (prove), 'tentar' (tempt), and 'intentar' (attempt), while French 'eprouver' covers the first two but loses the third. The Syriac and Ethiopic cognates confirm the root's ancient association with trial and temptation.

1. put to the test, prove (24×) God (or a legitimate authority) testing human beings to examine their faith, character, or obedience. Genesis 22:1 – 'God tested Abraham' – anchors this sense theologically. Exodus 15:25, 16:4, and 20:20 establish the pattern of wilderness testing. Deuteronomy 8:2, 16 and 13:3 present testing as pedagogical: God proves Israel to know what is in their heart. Spanish 'probo/probaste' (proved, tested) and German 'tested' reflect the evaluative, often benevolent purpose. TESTING AND PROVING en: He-tested-him, I-may-test-them, I-tested | es: Prueba, lo-probaste, lo-probó | fr: Il-éprouva-lui, Je-puisse-éprouver-eux, [אנסה] | de: Er-tested-ihn, [אנסה], [אנסכה] Gen 22:1; Exod 15:25; Exod 16:4; Exod 17:7; Exod 20:20

2. test, tempt, challenge (9×) Humans testing God rebelliously, demanding proof of His power or presence. Exodus 17:2 at Massah is the defining passage: 'Why do you test the LORD?' Numbers 14:22 indicts Israel for testing God ten times. Deuteronomy 6:16 codifies the prohibition: 'You shall not put the LORD your God to the test.' Psalm 78:18, 41, 56 and 95:9 recall these provocations. Spanish 'tentar/tentaron' and French 'eprouver' carry the connotation of impertinent challenge rather than legitimate inquiry. TESTING AND PROVING en: and-tested, and-they-tested, tested-me | es: Y-tentaron, Y-tentaron-, lo-tentasteis | fr: et-éprouva, et-éprouver, tu-devra-éprouver | de: du-soll-test, du-test, du-tested Exod 17:2; Num 14:22; Deut 6:16; Ps 78:18

3. attempt, venture, try (3×) To attempt, venture, or dare to do something unprecedented or difficult. Deuteronomy 4:34 asks rhetorically whether any god has 'ventured' to take a nation out of another. Deuteronomy 28:56 describes the pampered woman who has never 'ventured' to set foot on the ground. Job 4:2 asks, 'If one ventures a word with you, will you be weary?' Spanish 'intentar' (attempt) and French 'essaya' (tried) mark the shift from theological testing to human daring. TESTING AND PROVING en: has-tried, if-one-ventures, ventured | es: ha-intentado, probó, ¿Si-se-intenta | fr: a-essaya, ventured, éprouver | de: [הנסה], hat-tried, ventured Deut 4:34; Deut 28:56; Job 4:2

נָסַח H5255 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (4×)
nasach — to pull or tear away, uproot, remove forcibly
This verb means to pull or tear away, to uproot or remove forcibly. The imagery involves violent extraction—pulling up a plant by its roots or tearing someone from their dwelling. Proverbs and Psalms use it for divine judgment that uproots the wicked or proud from their place. Deuteronomy employs it for exile—Israel torn from the land. The term appears in cognate languages with meanings ranging from 'remove' to 'copy' (suggesting extraction), but the biblical Hebrew sense focuses on forcible removal or uprooting, often with destructive finality.

(4×) To pull or tear away, to uproot forcibly. Proverbs 2:22 contrasts the fate of wicked and faithful: 'transgressors will be uprooted (yissachu) from it'—violently removed from the land. Proverbs 15:25 promises 'YHWH tears down (yissach) the house of the proud'—divine demolition of arrogant dwellings. Psalm 52:5 warns the deceitful: 'God will tear you down forever; he will snatch and tear you away (veyissachaka) from your tent'—complete forcible eviction from security. Deuteronomy 28:63 threatens covenant curse: 'as YHWH took delight to do you good, so YHWH will take delight to bring ruin upon you and destroy you, and you shall be plucked up (tissachu) from the land'—exile as violent uprooting. The verb emphasizes forcible, often permanent, removal. UPROOT PLUCK UP
en: and-tear-you-away, and-you-are-plucked-up, will-be-uprooted | es: arrancará, serán-arrancados, y-seréis-arrancados | fr: et-arracher, et-tu-sont-plucked-en-haut, יסח | de: [יסח], [יסחו], und-du-sind-plucked-hinauf Deut 28:63; Ps 52:5; Prov 2:22; Prov 15:25

נָסַח H5256 V-Hitpael-Imperf-3ms (1×)
let it be pulled out, torn down (in judicial punishment)
Ezra 6:11 records King Darius's decree protecting the Jerusalem temple rebuilding: anyone who violates this edict shall have a beam pulled from his house, and he shall be impaled on it. The Aramaic verb in its Hitpael (passive) form describes forcible extraction—a timber ripped from the offender's own dwelling to become the instrument of execution. The punishment is grimly poetic: the would-be temple destroyer loses his house to supply his execution stake. Persian legal rhetoric often featured such measure-for-measure justice to emphasize the seriousness of imperial decrees.

(1×) This Aramaic Hitpael imperfect in Ezra 6:11 describes violent extraction from a building structure. Spanish 'sea arrancada' (let it be torn out) preserves the passive and forcible nature. The verb envisions structural beams being wrenched from their moorings, an action requiring significant force. The legal context makes this both literal (beam extraction) and symbolic (household destruction as prelude to personal execution). WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY
en: let-be-pulled-out | es: sea-arrancada | fr: [יתנסח] | de: [יתנסח] Ezra 6:11

נֶסֶךְ H5257a N-mpc / 3mp (2×)
libation, drink-offering; or molten image (context-dependent)
This masculine noun has two distinct meanings depending on context: either a drink-offering (libation) or a molten image (cast idol). In Deuteronomy 32:38, it refers to pagan libations: 'the wine of their drink-offering' that false gods supposedly consumed. In Daniel 11:8, it denotes molten images—idols that will be carried into Egypt as spoils. The semantic range from liquid offering to cast metal object may share a root connection to pouring or casting. Both senses involve pagan worship practices.

(2×) These two occurrences split between liquid and solid cultic objects. Deuteronomy 32:38 mocks false gods in Moses' song: 'Who ate the fat of their sacrifices and drank the wine of their libation (nesikhom)? Let them rise up and help you!' The rhetorical question highlights pagan gods' impotence—they supposedly consumed offerings but can't deliver aid. Daniel 11:8 describes Ptolemaic conquest: 'He shall carry off to Egypt their gods with their metal images (nesikheyhem) and with their precious vessels of silver and gold.' Here the term clearly means cast idols, grouped with other valuable cultic items. The dual meaning may reflect a single root (nasakh—pour, cast) applied to poured liquids (libations) or poured metal (molten images). Translations navigate this carefully—French 'boire offrande/prince' shows the interpretive challenge. IDOLS AND IMAGES
en: their-drink-offering, their-molten-images | es: sus-libaciones, ídolos-fundidos-suyos | fr: leur-boire-offrande, prince | de: [נסכיהם], ihr-trinken-Opfergabe Deut 32:38; Dan 11:8

נְסִיךְ H5257b N-mpc / 3mp (4×)
nesikei — princes, chieftains, tribal or regional leaders
This plural noun form denotes princes or chieftains—leaders of tribal or regional groups. Distinguished from the more common word for 'prince' (nasi), this term appears primarily in poetic texts and refers to defeated enemy leaders or foreign rulers. The contexts involve military defeat and judgment: Midianite kings defeated by Israel, princes of the north brought low, rulers of Edom in Ezekiel's oracle. The term may carry connotations of established, hereditary leadership over defined territories or peoples, particularly non-Israelite rulers.

(4×) Princes or chieftains, particularly of foreign or enemy peoples. Joshua 13:21 lists 'the princes of Sihon (nesikei Sichon),' Midianite kings defeated when Moses struck down Sihon king of the Amorites—regional rulers under Sihon's overlordship. Psalm 83:11 recalls this in prayer: 'Make their nobles like Oreb and Zeeb, all their princes (nesikhemo) like Zebah and Zalmunna'—requesting similar defeat for current enemies. Ezekiel 32:30 describes judgment: 'the princes of the north (nesikei tsafon) are there, all of them'—northern rulers consigned to Sheol with other defeated nations. Micah 5:5 prophesies raising 'seven shepherds and eight princes of men (nesikei adam)' against Assyria. The term designates established regional or tribal leaders, usually non-Israelite. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: princes-of, their-princes | es: los-príncipes-de, príncipes-de, príncipes-de-ellos | fr: libation, prince, princes-de | de: Fuersten-von, [נסיכי], ihr-princes Josh 13:21; Ps 83:11; Ezek 32:30; Mic 5:5

נָסַךְ H5258a V-Hofal-Imperf-3ms (23×)
To pour out, especially libations or drink offerings; also to cast molten metal; passively, to be poured out.

Nasak is the standard Hebrew verb for the ritual act of pouring — most often a drink offering (nesek) poured out before the LORD. Its cultic centrality is hard to overstate: the verb governs the libation prescriptions of Numbers 28-29 and appears wherever wine, water, or oil is ceremonially poured upon an altar or memorial pillar. Jacob pours a drink offering on the pillar at Bethel (Gen 35:14); David refuses to drink the water his warriors risked their lives to fetch, pouring it out instead as an offering to God (2 Sam 23:16). A fascinating secondary sense — casting molten metal for idol manufacture (Isa 40:19; 44:10) — reveals the concrete, physical core: liquid poured into a mold. The Arabic cognate nasaka, originally 'to pour,' came to mean 'to worship' through the metonymy of pouring sacrificial blood, tracing the same ritual-semantic path the Hebrew verb walks.

1. pour out causatively (Hifil/Piel) (15×) To pour out a libation or drink offering in a causative stem (Hifil/Piel) — 15 occurrences, the dominant cultic sense. Covers the formal pouring of drink offerings in the sanctuary system (Num 28:7), memorial libations on sacred pillars (Gen 35:14), and David's dramatic pouring out of the Bethlehem water as a sacrifice (2 Sam 23:16; 1 Chr 11:18). Spanish derramar and French verser both use standard 'pour' vocabulary, while German giessen captures the deliberate, controlled outpouring. The Hifil causative emphasizes the agent's intentional act of presenting liquid to God, distinguishing this from mere spilling. POURING AND SHEDDING en: I-will-pour-out, and-from-pouring-out-, and-he-poured | es: derrama, derramaré, y-derramando | fr: [וינסך], et-il-versa, et-il-versa-dehors | de: [וינסך], [ויסיכו], giessen Gen 35:14; Num 28:7; 2Sam 23:16; 2Kgs 16:13; 1Chr 11:18

2. pour out libation (Qal) (4×) To pour out a libation in the basic Qal stem — 4 occurrences where the simple active voice suffices without causative intensification. In Exod 30:9, alien drink offerings are prohibited on the incense altar; Hos 9:4 warns that Israel's sacrifices will not please the LORD and 'they shall not pour out wine offerings to him.' Isaiah 29:10 extends the metaphor strikingly: God has 'poured out upon you a spirit of deep sleep,' treating divine judgment as a libation of stupor. Isaiah 30:1 uses the infinitive to accuse Israel of 'pouring out' alliances with Egypt rather than with God. The Qal form preserves the basic, unmarked pouring action. POURING AND SHEDDING
en: and-to-weave, has-poured-out, they-shall-pour-out | es: derramarán, derramaréis, derramó | fr: et-verser, tu—verser, verser | de: [יסכו], ausgiessen, du-soll-giessen Exod 30:9; Isa 29:10; Isa 30:1; Hos 9:4

3. cast molten metal (Qal) (2×) To cast molten metal, especially for idol-making — 2 occurrences in the Qal stem with a specialized technical sense. In Isa 40:19, a craftsman 'casts' an idol, and in Isa 44:10, the prophet mocks those who 'cast' a metal image that profits nothing. Spanish fundir ('to smelt/cast') and French verser (used more generically) handle the metallurgical sense differently, but the Hebrew itself makes no morphological distinction — only the direct object (metal rather than liquid offering) shifts the meaning. The semantic bridge is transparent: liquid poured into a mold rather than onto an altar. POURING AND SHEDDING
en: a-craftsman, has-cast | es: funde, fundió | fr: verser | de: ausgiessen Isa 40:19; Isa 44:10

4. be poured out (Hofal) (2×) To be poured out (Hofal passive) — 2 occurrences describing vessels or containers from which liquid is poured. In Exod 25:29 and 37:16, the tabernacle's golden flagons are described as those 'with which to pour out' (or 'from which libation is poured'). Spanish se librará/será-derramado and French est-versé both mark the passive voice. These cultic furnishing descriptions complete the picture: not only the act of pouring and the substance poured, but the sacred vessels designed for the purpose. POURED OUT EMPTIED
en: is-poured, is-poured-out | es: se-librará, será-derramado | fr: est-versa, est-versa-dehors | de: ist-goss, ist-goss-heraus Exod 25:29; Exod 37:16

נָסַךְ H5258b V-Nifal-Perf-1cs (2×)
install, establish, set up; appoint to position
This verbal form means to install, establish, or set up—particularly in an official or authoritative capacity. Both occurrences involve divine installation: God installing a king (Ps 2:6) and Wisdom being installed before creation (Prov 8:23). The root differs from the more common 'pour out' verb, instead coming from an Assyrian cognate meaning to install or appoint. The Qal and Niphal forms show active (God installing) and passive (Wisdom being installed) installation.

(2×) Both texts describe primordial or royal installation by divine decree. Psalm 2:6 has God speaking against rebellious nations: 'As for me, I have installed my king on Zion, my holy hill' (nasakhti malki). This is divine appointment of the Davidic monarch, often read messianically. Proverbs 8:23 has Wisdom personified declaring her antiquity: 'Ages ago I was installed (nisakhti), at the first, before the beginning of the earth.' The Niphal form emphasizes her being set in place by Another (God). Both uses share the theme of authoritative establishment in a foundational role—the king as God's regent, Wisdom as God's first creation or companion. The parallel structure ('I have installed' / 'I was installed') shows active and passive perspectives on the same concept of being divinely positioned. APPOINTING AND ORDAINING
en: I-was-set-up, have-installed | es: fui-establecida, he-ungido | fr: installer, נסכתי | de: [נסכתי], haben-installed Ps 2:6; Prov 8:23

נָסֻךְ H5259 Art / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (1×)
that which is woven, spread, or cast (over something)
Isaiah 25:7 speaks of God destroying 'the covering that is cast over all peoples, the veil that is spread over all nations.' The imagery is of a shroud or burial cloth enveloping humanity—perhaps representing death itself, or spiritual blindness, or mourning. The verb root (nasak) can mean 'weave' or 'pour,' creating lexical ambiguity: is this a woven covering or something poured out like a libation? Context favors a woven or spread covering. Isaiah envisions God removing this universal pall, a promise of resurrection or enlightenment that will one day lift the shadow over all peoples.

(1×) This Qal passive participle with article in Isaiah 25:7 describes a covering over nations. Spanish 'extendida' (spread out) captures the spatial sense of something draped or laid over. The unusual verb root creates interpretive challenges—is this from nasak II (weave) or nasak I (pour)? The parallel with 'veil' supports understanding it as woven fabric. The image is universalist and eschatological: God's salvation will remove the death-shroud from all peoples, not Israel alone. LINEN AND FABRIC
en: that-is-spread | es: extendida | fr: [הנסוכה] | de: [הנסוכה] Isa 25:7

נָסַךְ H5260 Prep-l / V-Piel-Inf (1×)
to pour out, offer (a libation or sacrifice)
Daniel 2:46 records Nebuchadnezzar's shocking response after Daniel interpreted his dream: the king commanded that oblation and sweet incense be offered to Daniel himself. The Aramaic verb in its Pael infinitive means 'to pour out' in the sense of making a drink offering or sacrifice. This act horrified Jewish readers—a pagan king offering sacrifice to a mortal Israelite! The narrative tension is palpable: Daniel just proclaimed that no human can reveal mysteries, only God, yet now receives worship due to God alone. Most interpret this as Nebuchadnezzar's confusion rather than Daniel's acceptance of worship.

(1×) This Aramaic Pael infinitive in Daniel 2:46 denotes sacrificial libation. Spanish 'para ofrecer' (to offer) and French 'offrir' capture the ritual sense. The verb governs both grain offering and incense, indicating formal cultic action. The scene's theological awkwardness —Daniel receives what belongs to God—underscores pagan incomprehension of monotheism: Nebuchadnezzar recognizes Daniel's God as supreme yet still directs worship toward the human intermediary. BRINGING AND OFFERING en: to-pour-out | es: para-ofrecer | fr: offrir | de: [לנסכה] Dan 2:46

נֶסֶךְ H5261 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3mp (1×)
drink offerings (in temple worship) Ezra 7:17 lists the offerings to be purchased with royal Persian funds for the Jerusalem temple: bulls, rams, lambs, together with their grain offerings and their drink offerings. Drink offerings (nesek) typically consisted of wine poured out at the altar, accompanying animal and grain sacrifices. The Aramaic plural with suffix 'their drink offerings' indicates each sacrifice had its prescribed liquid component. That a Persian king's treasury financed Israelite worship demonstrates both Cyrus's policy of supporting local cults and God's sovereignty over foreign rulers who unknowingly funded the worship of the one true God.

(1×) This Aramaic plural noun with suffix in Ezra 7:17 refers to liquid offerings accompanying sacrifices. Spanish 'y sus libaciones' and translations consistently render this as drink offerings. The term is cognate with Hebrew nesek, showing lexical continuity across biblical Aramaic and Hebrew cultic vocabulary. These libations completed the sacrificial act, making the offering whole through solid (animal), grain, and liquid components. LIBATION MOLTEN IMAGE

en: and-their-drink-offerings | es: y-sus-libaciones | fr: [ונסכיהון] | de: [ונסכיהון] Ezra 7:17

נֶסֶךְ H5262 Conj-w / N-mp (64×)

Drink offering or libation poured out in worship; also a cast metal image or molten idol.

Two homonymous nouns sharing the same consonantal form nesekh but arising from different verbal roots. The far more common meaning is a libation – wine or another liquid poured out alongside burnt offerings and grain offerings in Israelite sacrificial worship, meticulously prescribed throughout Leviticus and Numbers. The second meaning, from the root nasakh ('to pour, cast metal'), refers to an idol made by pouring molten metal into a mold. Isaiah uses the term with biting sarcasm: the idols and their cast images are nothing but wind and emptiness (Isa 41:29), and the prophet's own people dare claim a molten image predicted future events (Isa 48:5).

1. drink offering, libation (60×) A drink offering or libation, a liquid (usually wine) poured out as part of sacrificial worship. This sense accounts for 60 of 64 occurrences, deeply embedded in the Priestly legislation of Numbers 15 and 28-29. Multilingual evidence uniformly points to cultic liquid offerings: German Trankopfer ('drink-sacrifice'), French boire-offrande ('drink-offering'), and Spanish libacion all specify ritual pouring. Jacob pours a nesekh on his memorial pillar at Bethel (Gen 35:14), and Joel laments that the grain offering and drink offering are cut off from the house of the LORD (Joel 1:9, 13). LIBATION MOLTEN IMAGE

en: and-its-drink-offering, and-its-drink-offerings, and-their-drink-offerings | es: Y-libaciones-de-ellos, Y-libación-de-él, y-libaciones-de-ella | fr: et-leur-boire-offrandes, et-son-boire-offrande, et-son-boire-offrandes | de: und-ihr-trinken-Opfergaben, und-sein-trinken-Opfergabe, und-sein-trinken-Opfergaben Gen 35:14; Exod 29:40; Exod 29:41; Exod 30:9; Lev 23:18

2. cast image, molten idol (4×) A cast image or molten idol formed by pouring metal into a mold. Though sharing the same consonantal spelling, this sense derives from the root meaning 'to cast, pour out metal.' Appearing four times in prophetic condemnation, it is rendered distinctly in several languages: Spanish imagen-fundida ('cast image'), English 'molten image,' and Hindi dhali-hui-murti ('cast idol'). Isaiah 41:29 declares that idols and their cast images are wind and confusion, while Jeremiah 10:14 and 51:17 pronounce every goldsmith shamed by his nesekh, for his molten image is a lie. LIBATION MOLTEN IMAGE

en: and-my-molten-image, are-their-cast-images, his-cast-image | es: su-imagen-fundida, sus-imágenes-fundidas, y-mi-imagen-fundida | fr: et-libation, libation | de: Trankopfer, und-Trankopfer Isa 41:29; Isa 48:5; Jer 10:14; Jer 51:17

נָסַס H5263 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

one who is sick, wasting away

Isaiah 10:18 uses a striking simile for how YHWH will consume Assyria's glory: 'as when a sick man wastes away.' The rare participial form conveys ongoing decline, the progressive deterioration of terminal illness. Assyria's magnificent army and empire will melt away like flesh wasting from diseased bones. The comparison is visceral and pathetic—not sudden catastrophic destruction but lingering dissolution. Ancient readers familiar with wasting illnesses (consumption, cancer, prolonged infections) would grasp the horror: unstoppable decline that reduces the strong to shadows.

(1×) This Qal active participle in Isaiah 10:18 appears in a simile of progressive destruction. Spanish 'enfermo' (sick person) identifies the condition, though the full phrase 'like the wasting of one sick' captures the deteriorative process. The verb root is rare and possibly related to Syriac and Aramaic terms for sickness or sadness. The image prophesies not instant annihilation but degradation—Assyrian power will waste away like a consumptive patient fading toward death. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: one-sick | es: enfermo | fr: [נסס] | de: [נסס] Isa 10:18

נסס H5264 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-fp (1×)

sparkling, gleaming, conspicuous (textually uncertain)

Zechariah 9:16 contains a disputed term in a promise that God's people will be like jewels of a crown 'sparkling upon his land.' The Hebrew verb root is obscure—some derive it from nasas (to lift up, be conspicuous), others propose textual emendation to 'sparkling' from a different root. The context supports something visually striking: rescued people shining like gemstones set in a crown, catching light, drawing eyes. Whether this means 'raised up conspicuously' or 'glittering brilliantly,' the point is visibility and glory—once-despised Israel will become a display of divine splendor.

(1×) This Hitpolel participle in Zechariah 9:16 is lexically problematic. Spanish 'reluciendo' (gleaming) and French 'être visible' (being visible) show translators' divergent paths. BDB suggests the root means 'be high or conspicuous,' possibly denominative from nes (banner/standard). Others emend to a verb meaning 'sparkle' or 'glitter.' The rare form and uncertain etymology haven't obscured the vision: God's people will be displayed like precious stones, prominent and beautiful on the land. SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: sparkling | es: reluciendo | fr: être-visible | de: [מתנוססות] Zech 9:16

נָסַע H5265 Prep-b / V-Qal-Inf / 3mp (146×)

To pull up (stakes), set out, journey, depart; Hifil: uproot, quarry, cause to travel; Nifal: be uprooted

The quintessential verb of Israel's wilderness wandering — נסע originally meant to pull up tent pegs and break camp, then broadened to mean 'set out, journey, march.' Numbers 10 alone uses it over a dozen times as each tribal division pulls up and moves in order. The concrete image of uprooting stakes survives in the Hifil 'quarry stones' (1 Kgs 5:17) and 'uproot a vine' (Ps 80:8). Spanish 'partieron' and French 'voyagèrent' capture the journey sense, while Korean 뽑히다 ('be pulled up') preserves the passive physical image. From Abram's first setting out in Genesis 12:9 to the final march into Canaan, this verb narrates Israel's entire pilgrimage.

1. set out, journey, depart (Qal) (133×) The core Qal meaning: to pull up camp and set out on a journey, to depart, travel, or march. This is the dominant wilderness-narrative verb with 133 occurrences — Genesis 12:9 records Abram 'journeying' (נָסוֹעַ) toward the Negev, and Numbers 10:12-36 choreographs the entire tribal march with repeated uses. Spanish 'y partieron' and French 'et ils voyagèrent' consistently render this departure-and-travel meaning. The verb covers all Qal finite forms (perfect, imperfect, wayyiqtol, imperative, cohortative) and infinitives, always implying purposeful forward movement from a known starting point. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: and-journeyed, and-they-journeyed | es: Y-partieron, y-partieron: | fr: et-ils-voyagèrent, et-voyagea | de: und-sie-zog, und-zog Num 10:12; Num 10:13; Num 10:14; Num 10:17; Num 10:18

2. uproot, quarry, remove (Hifil) (5×) The Hifil causative in its physical-concrete sense: to uproot, quarry, remove, or transport away. First Kings 5:17 describes workers who 'quarried' great costly stones for the temple foundation. Psalm 80:8 remembers God who 'uprooted' a vine from Egypt and transplanted it to Canaan. Job 19:10 laments that God has 'uprooted my hope like a tree.' Ecclesiastes 10:9 warns about the danger of 'quarrying' stones. Spanish

'sacaste' (you brought out) and 'remueve' (removes) capture the forceful extraction that is the causative counterpart of the Qal 'pull up.' UPROOT PLUCK UP

en: You-brought-out, and-He-uproots, and-they-quarried | es: el-que-remueve, ponla-aparte, sacaste | fr: et-ils-tailla, et-וַיִּסַּע, partir | de: [וַיִּסַּע], [מַסִּיעַ], du-gebracht-heraus 1Kgs 5:17; 2Kgs 4:4; Job 19:10; Ps 80:8; Eccl 10:9

3. cause to journey, lead forth (Hifil) (3×) The Hifil causative in its journey-leadership sense: to cause to set out, to lead forth on a march. Exodus 15:22 records Moses leading Israel forth from the Red Sea; Psalm 78:52 celebrates God who 'led forth his people like sheep.' Psalm 78:26 extends this to God causing the east wind to 'journey forth' in the heavens. Spanish 'hizo partir' (he caused to depart) and French 'et conduisit' distinguish this from the simple Qal by marking the agent who initiates the movement of others. GOING AND LEADING

en: and-he-led-forth, and-led, he-caused-to-journey | es: E-hizo-partir, Hizo-soplar | fr: et-conduisit, et-partir, partir | de: er-caused-zu-journey, und-er-führte-hervor, und-fuehrte Exod 15:22; Ps 78:26; Ps 78:52

4. be pulled up, be uprooted (Nifal/passive) (3×) Nifal passive and passive-sense forms: to be pulled up, be uprooted, be displaced. Isaiah 33:20 promises that Jerusalem's tent stakes 'shall never be pulled up' — using the root's original concrete image as a metaphor for permanence. Isaiah 38:12 compares life to a shepherd's tent 'pulled up' and removed. Job 4:21 asks whether tent-cords are 'pulled up' when people die without wisdom. Korean 뽑히다 (be pulled up) and Spanish 'arrancada' (uprooted) preserve the vivid physical imagery of these rare passive forms. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: is-plucked-up, pulled-up, shall-be-pulled-up | es: arrancada, fue-arrancada, serán-arrancadas | fr: partir, נָסַע | de: [נָסַע], [נָסַע] Job 4:21; Isa 33:20; Isa 38:12

5. pull up, pull out (Qal literal) (2×) The concrete literal Qal: to physically pull up or pull out an object — the original action underlying all extended senses. Judges 16:3 records Samson pulling up the city gate along with its posts and bar, and Judges 16:14 describes him pulling out the loom pin. Spanish 'y arrancó' (and he tore out) and 'y los arrancó' (and he tore them out) capture the raw physical force. With only two attestations this is the rarest sense, yet it preserves the etymological core from which the journey-departure metaphor developed — one literally 'pulls up' stakes before setting out. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-pulled-out, and-pulled-them-up | es: y-arrancó, y-los-arrancó | fr: et-pulled-dehors, et-pulled-eux-en-haut | de: und-pulled-heraus, und-pulled-ihnen-hinauf Judg 16:3; Judg 16:14

סָלַק H5266 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs (1×)

I ascend, go up

Psalm 139:8 asks the rhetorical question: 'If I ascend to heaven, you are there.' This verb is an Aramaic loanword (salaq) replacing the expected Hebrew alah. Why use an Aramaic verb in a Hebrew psalm? Perhaps for poetic variation, or the term entered colloquial Hebrew speech by the Persian period when this psalm was likely composed. The meaning is clear—vertical movement upward, climbing the heights of heaven. Yet even cosmic altitude cannot distance one from God's presence. The psalmist's point isn't geography but inescapability: no dimension, height or depth, excludes divine presence.

(1×) This Qal imperfect first person in Psalm 139:8 borrows Aramaic vocabulary into Hebrew poetry. Spanish 'subo' (I ascend) and French 'monter' straightforwardly render the upward motion. The verb appears nowhere else in biblical Hebrew, making this a clear Aramaism. The form (with assimilated consonant) shows Hebrew phonological adaptation of the Aramaic root. Conceptually, it pairs with Sheol in the next line: height versus depth, both equally within God's reach. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: I-ascend | es: subo | fr: monter | de: ich-ascend Ps 139:8

סְלֵק H5267 Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf (3×)

to come up, ascend; Aramaic loan-word for upward movement

This Aramaic verb, borrowed into Biblical Hebrew's later portions, describes upward motion or elevation. In Daniel's visions, it depicts beasts rising from the sea and a horn emerging among others. Ezra uses it for people coming up to Jerusalem. The verb can be causative (Haphel: to lift up, take up) as when Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego are brought up to the furnace opening. The Aramaic root emphasizes the direction and completion of ascent, whether literal (geographic, architectural) or symbolic (rising in vision, elevation in status).

(3×) Daniel and Ezra use this verb for both visionary and concrete ascent. In Daniel 7:3, four beasts 'come up from the sea,' while in 7:8, a horn 'comes up' among the ten. The causative forms in Daniel 3:22 and 6:23 describe forcibly lifting people up to and from the fiery furnace and lions' den. Cross-linguistic glosses reflect this upward directionality: 'levantaron' (lifted up), 'sacado' (brought out/up), 'lifted-up.' The Aramaic origin suits the Persian-period setting of both books. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-was-lifted-up, brought-up, to-lift-up | es: levantaron, que-fuera-sacado, y-fue-sacado | fr: [הסקו], [והסק], [להנסקה] | de: [הסקו], [והסק], [להנסקה] Dan 3:22; Dan 6:23

נִסְרֹךְ H5268 N-proper-ms (2×)

Nisroch; Assyrian deity worshiped by Sennacherib (possibly corrupted form of Nusku)

This divine name designates the god in whose temple Sennacherib was assassinated by his sons. Both 2 Kings 19:37 and Isaiah 37:38 record the Assyrian king 'worshiping in the house of Nisroch his god' when murdered. No deity by this exact name appears in cuneiform inscriptions, leading scholars to suggest it's a corrupted or intentionally altered form of Nusku, a Mesopotamian solar deity. The Hebrew text may have deliberately distorted the pagan god's name. Ancient versions (Septuagint, Josephus) render it with various spellings, reflecting uncertainty even in antiquity.

(2×) The twin references recount Sennacherib's death after his failed siege of Jerusalem. Both parallel texts state that while the king 'was worshiping in the house of Nisroch his god, Adrammelech and Sharezer, his sons, struck him down with the sword.' The ironic timing—murdered in his own god's temple—underscores divine judgment against one who mocked the God of Israel. The phrase 'his god' (2 Kgs) or 'Nisroch' (Isa) identifies this as the deity Sennacherib particularly honored. Scholars debate whether this represents Nusku (solar god), Marduk (chief Babylonian god), or another deity whose name was textually corrupted. Whatever the original, biblical writers preserve the tradition that Israel's blasphemer died in the very act of worshiping his patron deity. GODS AND DEITIES en: Nisroch, his-god | es: Nisroc, de-Nisroc | fr: Nisroch, [נסרך] | de: Nisroch, [נסרך] 2Kgs 19:37; Isa 37:38

נְעָה H5269 Art / N-proper-fs (1×)

Neah (place name in Zebulun's territory)

Joshua 19:13 mentions this location on Zebulun's border, though no ancient site has been confidently identified with the name. The Septuagint offers variant transliterations, suggesting even ancient translators found the name unusual or textually uncertain. Many border towns listed in Joshua's tribal allotments have vanished from historical record, their names preserved only in this biblical boundary list. Neah joined dozens of other small settlements marking where one tribe's inheritance ended and another's began, reference points for land claims that mattered intensely to ancient Israelites even if the sites now elude archaeological recovery.

(1×) This proper noun with article in Joshua 19:13 designates a border town in Zebulun. Spanish 'a Nea' and French 'le Neah' preserve it as a place name. The site remains unidentified; proposals based on phonetic similarity to modern Arabic place names are speculative. Ancient boundary lists like this served legal-cadastral functions, documenting territorial claims even for minor settlements that left no archaeological footprint. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Neah | es: a-Nea | fr: le-Neah | de: der-Neah Josh 19:13

נֹעָה H5270 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)
Noah — personal name, one of Zelophehad's five daughters who inherited land rights
Noah is a feminine personal name (distinct from the patriarch Noah) borne by one of the five daughters of Zelophehad from the tribe of Manasseh. These women are famous in biblical law for establishing the precedent that daughters could inherit their father's portion when no sons existed. Their case appears multiple times in Numbers and Joshua, highlighting its legal significance for Israelite inheritance practice. The Septuagint renders the name as Noua. The name may mean 'motion' or 'rest,' though its exact significance is uncertain.

(4×) A feminine personal name, one of Zelophehad's five daughters from the tribe of Manasseh. Numbers 26:33 lists her among 'the names of the daughters of Zelophehad: Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.' Numbers 27:1 recounts how these daughters approached Moses seeking inheritance rights since their father died without sons—a landmark legal case. Numbers 36:11 records their marriages within their tribe to preserve the inheritance. Joshua 17:3 repeats the list when actually distributing the land to these women. Their story established important precedent for female inheritance rights in ancient Israel when no male heirs existed. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Noah, and-Noah | es: Noá, y-Noa, y-Noá | fr: Noah, et-Noah | de: Noah, und-Noah Num 26:33; Num 27:1; Num 36:11; Josh 17:3

נְעוּרִים H5271a N-mpc / 2ms (46×)
youth, early life — the period of immaturity or formative years, used of persons and nations alike Ne'urim (always plural in form) designates the time of youth or early life, the formative season before maturity. Across its 46 occurrences, the word appears most often in the recurring phrase min-ne'uray ('from my youth'), a formula of lifelong fidelity or habitual sin stretching from Genesis 8:21 ('the inclination of the human heart is evil from youth') through Jeremiah's indictment of Judah (Jer 3:24-25) and into the psalmist's testimony of lifelong trust (Ps 71:5, 17). The word extends figuratively to nations — Babylon's youth of sorcery (Isa 47:12), Moab's undisturbed youth (Jer 48:11), and Israel as the young bride of the wilderness covenant (Jer 2:2). Every translation converges on a single concept: Spanish 'juventud,' French 'jeunesse,' German 'Jugend.'

youth, youthful period (46×) The period of being young, encompassing childhood through early adulthood, denoting immaturity, formative development, or the earliest stage of one's life. Frequently governs the prepositional phrase min-ne'urim ('from youth onward'), which serves as a biographical formula — whether confessing lifelong sin (Gen 8:21; 1 Sam 12:2), professing lifelong devotion (Ps 71:5, 17), or characterizing a nation's earliest history (Jer 2:2; Ezek 23:3). The figurative extension to nations treats their founding era as a 'youth' subject to the same moral evaluation as a human life. All 46 occurrences share this single temporal-biographical sense. YOUTH PERIOD
en: from-my-youth, from-youth-of-me, my-youth | es: desde-juventud-de-mí, desde-juventud-mía, desde-mi-juventud | fr: de-mon-jeune-homme, dès-ma-jeunesse, jeunesse | de: Jugend, deine-Jugend, mein-youth Gen 8:21; Gen 46:34; Lev 22:13; Num 30:3; Num 30:16

נְעוּרוֹת H5271b Prep-m / N-fpc / 3mp (1×)
from their youth (plural form indicating collective or repeated youth)
Jeremiah 32:30 employs this unusual plural form ('from their youths') to indict Israel and Judah: 'For the people of Israel have done nothing but evil in my sight from their youth.' The plural may emphasize generational continuity—youth after youth, generation after generation—or function as an intensive plural stressing the entirety of their early history. Either way, the indictment is comprehensive: rebellion isn't a recent development but a chronic condition extending back to national origins. Jeremiah's lament suggests corruption is baked into the national character from the beginning.

(1×) This plural form with preposition and suffix in Jeremiah 32:30 intensifies the temporal scope of Israel's sin. Spanish 'desde su juventud' (from their youth) treats the plural as intensive rather than literal multiple youths. The vocabulary appears in prophetic retrospectives that survey Israel's whole history and find persistent rebellion. The plural form (elsewhere rare, singular more common) may stylistically emphasize the long duration—from youth through maturity, they have provoked God. YOUTH PERIOD
en: from-their-youth | es: desde-su-juventud | fr: [מנעוריהם] | de: [מנעוריהם] Jer 32:30

נְעִיאֵל H5272 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Neiel (place name on Asher's border)
Joshua 19:27 lists this site on Asher's territorial boundary. Like many border towns in Joshua's allotment lists, the exact location remains uncertain despite various proposals. The Septuagint's variant transliterations suggest textual transmission difficulties. These boundary lists served legal purposes in ancient Israel, defining tribal inheritance and preventing land disputes. Even when we can't locate the site today, the name functioned as a known reference point in Iron Age Israel, a marker that told contemporary readers exactly where Asher's territory ended.

(1×) This proper noun with conjunction in Joshua 19:27 appears in Asher's border description. Spanish 'y Neiel' and French 'et Neiel' maintain the place name in transliteration. Modern attempts to identify the site with Tell en-Nahl or other locations remain tentative. The name may mean 'dwelling of God' (ne'iel), though deriving meaning from corrupted ancient toponyms is speculative. What's certain is its function as a border marker in Asher's land grant. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Neiel | es: y-Neiel | fr: et-Neiel | de: und-Neiel Josh 19:27

נָעִים H5273a Adj-fp (11×)
Pleasant, delightful — poetic adjective describing what brings deep enjoyment or aesthetic delight
The adjective נָעִים (naim) expresses loveliness, pleasantness, or delight — the quality that makes something deeply enjoyable. It is overwhelmingly a poetic word, flourishing in Psalms and Proverbs. David is called the 'sweet psalmist of Israel' (2 Sam 23:1), and Psalm 133:1 celebrates how 'pleasant' it is for brothers to dwell in unity. The Psalter praises God's name as pleasant (Ps 135:3) and declares that at God's right hand are 'pleasures forevermore' (Ps 16:11). Proverbs applies it to wise sayings kept ready on the lips (Prov 22:18). Spanish 'agradable/deleitoso' and French 'agréable' both capture the warm aesthetic tone.

pleasant, delightful (11×) Describing persons, experiences, or qualities that bring genuine delight and aesthetic pleasure. Applied to David and Jonathan as 'lovely and pleasant' in Saul's elegy (2 Sam 1:23), to the boundary-lines that fall in pleasant places (Ps 16:6), to the sweetness of praising God (Ps 135:3; 147:1), and to the profit of wisdom words kept ready on the lips (Prov 22:18). Job 36:11 promises that obedient years will be spent 'in pleasantness.' The word belongs to elevated, lyric register and never appears in legal or narrative prose. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT en: and-pleasant, and-the-pleasant, in-pleasant-places | es: agradable, agradables, delicias | fr: agréable, agréable!, dans-agréable | de: [בנעימים], [הנעימים], [ונעים] 2Sam 1:23; Job 36:11; Ps 16:6; Ps 16:11; Ps 133:1

נָעִים H5273b Adj-ms (2×)
pleasant, sweet-sounding, delightful; of music or singers
This adjective describes pleasant, sweet, or delightful qualities, particularly of sound and music. In 2 Samuel 23:1, David is called 'the pleasant/sweet one of Israel's songs'—traditionally 'the sweet psalmist of Israel.' Psalm 81:2 calls for music on 'the pleasant lyre'—a sweetly-sounding or melodious instrument. The root conveys aesthetic pleasure and agreeableness, especially auditory delight. Some interpret the 2 Samuel reference as describing David as the joy or delight of Israel's songs, though 'sweet singer' remains the dominant reading.

(2×) Both occurrences connect pleasantness to musical expression. The 2 Samuel 23:1 description of David as 'the pleasant/sweet one of the songs of Israel' (ne'im zemirot Yisrael) characterizes him as Israel's beloved songwriter—whether as the sweet singer himself or the one who brings sweetness/joy to Israel's worship. The parallel titles in that verse (the man raised on high, the anointed of Jacob's God) make this a climactic descriptor. Psalm 81:2 summons musical praise: 'Raise a song; sound the tambourine, the pleasant lyre (kinnor na'im) with the harp.' The 'sweet-sounding lyre' invites joyful worship. Both texts link pleasantness to worship music, creating an atmosphere of delight before God. The contrast between translations (Spanish 'agradable,' French 'agréable,' German 'lieblich') shows the range: agreeable, pleasant, lovely, sweet. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT

en: and-pleasant-of, pleasant | es: agradable, y-agradable-de | fr: agréable, et-pleasant-de | de: lieblich, und-pleasant-von 2Sam 23:1; Ps 81:2

נָעַל H5274a V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fp (6×)

To lock, bolt, or bar shut; to fasten a door securely, preventing entry or exit.

A verb meaning to bar, bolt, or lock a door or gate, securing it against entry. In the Ehud narrative (Judg 3:23-24), Ehud bolts the upper-room doors behind him after assassinating King Eglon, and the servants find them locked. In 2 Samuel 13:17-18, Amnon's servant locks the door behind Tamar after her violation – a cruel detail underscored by the bolting action. Song of Songs 4:12 uses the passive participle poetically: the beloved is 'a locked garden,' an image of purity and inaccessibility. The Spanish translations consistently render it 'cerrado/cerrada' (closed, locked), capturing both the physical and figurative dimensions.

to lock, bolt shut (6×) To fasten a door or gate with a bolt or bar, securing it shut. The Qal stem appears in both active forms (Judg 3:23, 2 Sam 13:17-18) describing the physical act of bolting doors, and passive participles (Song 4:12) conveying the state of being locked. In Judges 3:23-24 the locked doors create dramatic irony as Eglon's servants wait, assuming the king has locked himself in. In 2 Samuel 13, the bolting of the door intensifies the narrative's pathos. The figurative use in Song of Songs 4:12 – 'a locked garden' – transforms the concrete act into an image of exclusive intimacy. Spanish 'cerrado/cerrada' and German 'locked' confirm the core meaning across traditions. SHUTTING AND CLOSING

en: and-bolt, and-he-bolted, and-locked | es: cerrada, cerradas, cerrado | fr: et-bolt, et-il-bolted, et-locked | de: [נעול], locked, und-bolt Judg 3:23; Judg 3:24; 2Sam 13:17; 2Sam 13:18; Song 4:12

נָעַל H5274b Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-1cs / 2fs (2×)

shoe, provide with sandals; put footwear on someone

This denominative verb means to furnish with sandals or to shoe someone. Both occurrences involve caring provision of footwear. In Ezekiel 16:10, God recounts caring for Jerusalem: 'I clothed you... and shod you with fine leather' (tahash, a precious leather). In 2 Chronicles 28:15, compassionate Israelites clothed and shod prisoners before sending them home: 'they gave them sandals' (literally 'they sandaled them'). The verb derives from the noun 'sandal' (na'al), showing how Hebrew could verbify nouns. Related forms appear in Aramaic and Arabic for shoeing animals or humans.

(2×) Both instances demonstrate tender care through provision of footwear. Ezekiel 16:10 uses elaborate metaphor of God finding abandoned Jerusalem as an infant and raising her: 'I clothed you with embroidered cloth and shod you (va-en'alekh) with fine leather, I wrapped you in fine linen and covered you with silk.' Shoeing with quality leather signals dignifying care, not just basic protection. 2 Chronicles 28:15 shows mercy to captives: designated men 'stood up and took the captives, and with the spoil they clothed all who were naked among them. They clothed them, gave them sandals (va-yan'ilum), provided them with food and drink, and anointed them.' Footwear enabled the journey home—a practical act of compassion. Both contexts pair shoeing with clothing, showing these as paired acts of human dignity. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-I-shod-you, and-they-gave-sandals-them | es: y-los-calzaron, y-te-calcé | fr: [וינעלום], et-chausser | de: [ואנעלך], [וינעלום] 2Chr 28:15; Ezek 16:10

נַעַל H5275 Prep-b (22×)

sandal, shoe – basic leather footwear symbolizing legal transfer, humble worth, and readiness for journey

The common leather-soled footwear of the ancient Near East, strapped to the foot with thongs. Beyond everyday use, the sandal carried rich symbolic weight in Israelite culture. Removing one's sandals signaled holy ground (Exod 3:5), while the sandal ceremony in levirate law enacted legal transfer of obligation (Deut 25:9-10; Ruth 4:7-8). Prophetically, casting a sandal over a land declared ownership (Ps 60:10; 108:10). Amos uses 'a pair of sandals' as an image of trifling value, condemning those who sell the poor for so little (Amos 2:6; 8:6). Arabic preserves a cognate na'l that extends to horseshoes.

sandal, shoe (footwear) (22×) A leather sole bound to the foot by straps – the standard footwear item in biblical Israel. Used literally of wearing, removing, or possessing sandals in contexts ranging from military readiness (Isa 5:27) to travel provisions (Exod 12:11; Josh 9:5, 13). Carries legal-symbolic force in levirate removal (Deut 25:9-10) and prophetic declarations of dominion (Ps 60:10). Amos 2:6 and 8:6 invoke a pair of sandals as proverbially cheap. The Arabic cognate na'l and Spanish sandalias confirm the basic meaning across language families. SANDALS FOOTWEAR

en: My-sandal, a-pair-of-sandals, and-our-sandals | es: con-sandalias, en-las-sandalias, la-sandalia | fr: [בנעלים], [ונעלך], [נעליו] | de: Sandale, [בנעלים], [ונעליך] Gen 14:23; Exod 3:5; Exod 12:11; Deut 25:9; Deut 25:10

נָעֵם H5276 V-Qal-Perf-2fs (8×)

To be pleasant, delightful, or lovely; a stative verb describing agreeable beauty, taste, or experience.

A Qal stative verb conveying the quality of being pleasant, agreeable, or delightful. It describes a wide range of pleasing experiences: a land that is 'pleasant' in Issachar's blessing (Gen 49:15), the surpassing pleasantness of Jonathan's love (2 Sam 1:26), the sweetness of stolen waters (Prov 9:17), and the inner delight of wisdom entering the soul (Prov 2:10). The multilingual evidence – Spanish agradable and deliciosa, French agreable, German lieblich – captures the breadth from aesthetic charm to deep personal affection.

be pleasant, be delightful (8×) To be agreeable, pleasant, or lovely in quality or experience. The verb functions as a stative describing inherent pleasantness: of a land's restful beauty (Gen 49:15, 'he saw that the rest was good and the land was pleasant'), of the emotional sweetness of a beloved companion (2 Sam 1:26, 'you were very pleasant to me'), and of wisdom's words being delightful when internalized (Prov 2:10; 24:25). Spanish distinguishes agradable (agreeable) from deliciosa (delicious), hinting at the range from mild pleasantness to intense delight, while German lieblich ('lovely') captures the aesthetic warmth. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT

en: are-you-more-pleasant, is-pleasant, pleasant | es: agradable, deliciosa, eres-más-hermoso? | fr: agréable, pleasant-furent-tu, tu-es-agréable, | de: [ינעם], [נעמת], lieblich Gen 49:15; 2Sam 1:26; Ps 141:6; Prov 2:10; Prov 9:17

נַעֲמָן H5277 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Naam (personal name, son of Caleb)

First Chronicles 4:15 briefly mentions this individual in Judah's genealogy as a son of Caleb. The name means 'pleasantness' or 'delight,' joining many Hebrew names formed from aesthetic and emotional vocabulary. Chronicles' genealogies preserve hundreds of names, most known only from these lists. They functioned to establish lineage, land claims, and tribal identity during and after the exile. Naam's appearance in Caleb's line connects him to Judah's prominent clans, though we know nothing else about his life or descendants.

(1×) This proper noun with conjunction in 1 Chronicles 4:15 identifies one of Caleb's sons. Spanish and translations preserve it as a transliterated name 'Naam.' The Septuagint offers 'Noom,' showing Greek phonological adaptation. The name derives from the root na'am (be pleasant), making it a positive personal name like modern 'Felix' or 'Felicity.' Chronicles' genealogical interest preserves tribal memory even for otherwise unknown individuals. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Na'am | es: y-Naam | fr: [נעם] | de: [נעם] 1Chr 4:15

נֹעַם H5278 N-ms (7×)

Pleasantness, delightfulness, gracious beauty; also 'Pleasantness' as a symbolic name for a shepherd's staff

A delicate noun capturing the quality of delight, beauty, and gracious favor. The psalmist longs to 'behold the no'am of the LORD' in his temple (Ps 27:4), and Proverbs celebrates wisdom's 'ways of pleasantness' (Prov 3:17). In Ps 90:17 Moses prays that God's no'am would rest upon Israel's work. Zechariah repurposes the word as a symbolic proper name for a shepherd's staff called 'Pleasantness,' representing God's favor toward his covenant people (Zech 11:7, 10). When that staff is broken, the covenant grace it symbolized is revoked, a powerful prophetic enactment.

1. pleasantness, beauty, favor (5×) The abstract quality of pleasantness, delight, beauty, or gracious favor, attributed to God or to wisdom's ways. In Ps 27:4 the worshipper desires to contemplate the no'am (beauty/delight) of the LORD in his temple; Ps 90:17 prays for the Lord's favor to establish human endeavors. Proverbs uses it in construct chains: 'ways of pleasantness' (3:17), 'words of pleasantness' (15:26; 16:24). Arabic na'im ('delight'), Hindi manohar ('charming'), and Spanish deleite all converge on the sense of gentle, attractive loveliness. PLEASANTNESS BEAUTY

en: pleasantness, the-beauty-of-, the-favor-of | es: agrado, deleite, hermosura-de | fr: agrément, dans-agrément | de: [נעם], der-beauty-von-, der-favor-von Ps 27:4; Ps 90:17; Prov 3:17; Prov 15:26; Prov 16:24

2. Pleasantness (symbolic proper name) (2×) A symbolic proper name, 'Pleasantness' (or 'Favor/Grace'), given to one of two shepherds' staves in Zechariah's prophetic action (Zech 11:7, 10). The staff represents God's gracious covenant with the nations on Israel's behalf; when the prophet breaks it, the covenant is annulled. Spanish Gracia and French grâce render it as a personified proper name, while English capitalizes 'Pleasantness,' all distinguishing it from the common-noun usage by its function as a symbolic title in prophetic allegory. PLEASANTNESS BEAUTY

en: Pleasantness | es: Gracia | fr: grâce | de: [נעם] Zech 11:7; Zech 11:10

נַעֲמָה H5279a N-proper-fs (4×)

Naamah — personal name, sister of Tubal-Cain and mother of Rehoboam

Naamah is a feminine personal name, meaning possibly 'pleasant' or 'lovely,' borne by two women in Scripture. First, she was the sister of Tubal-Cain in the antediluvian genealogy of Cain—the only woman named in that line besides Eve, suggesting some significance though her role is unexplained. Second, and more prominently, she was an Ammonite princess who became one of Solomon's wives and mother of King Rehoboam. Her foreign origin may have contributed to Solomon's syncretistic worship practices condemned in Kings. The Septuagint uses various Greek spellings (Noema, Maacham, Naama) for different occurrences.

(4×) A feminine personal name borne by two biblical women. (1) Sister of Tubal-Cain, mentioned in the genealogy of Cain (Gen 4:22): 'the sister of Tubal-cain was Naamah.' She's the only woman named in Cain's line besides Eve, though her significance is unexplained. LXX renders Noema. (2) An Ammonitess, wife of Solomon and mother of Rehoboam (1 Kgs 14:21, 31; 2 Chr 12:13): 'His mother's name was Naamah the Ammonite.' Her foreign origin is emphasized, likely relevant to the narrative of Solomon's marriages to foreign women and resulting idolatry. The 1 Kings 14:31 reference may be a gloss. The name likely means 'pleasant' or 'lovely.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Naamah | es: Naama, Naamah, Naamá | fr: Naamah, [נעמה] | de: Naama, Naamah, [נעמה] Gen 4:22; 1Kgs 14:21; 1Kgs 14:31; 2Chr 12:13

נַעֲמָה H5279b Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Naamah (place name in Judah's Philistine plain)

Joshua 15:41 assigns this town to Judah in the Shephelah (lowland), near Philistine territory. The name, meaning 'pleasant' or 'beautiful,' was common—another Naamah appears as a woman's name elsewhere. Ancient cities often bore names describing their setting: pleasant location, good water, productive soil. This Naamah lay in the fertile lowland between Judah's hill country and the coastal plain, strategically positioned but vulnerable to Philistine pressure. The site's exact location remains uncertain, though it was clearly recognized as a distinct town in Joshua's era.

(1×) This proper noun with conjunction in Joshua 15:41 identifies a Judahite town. Spanish 'y Naamá' and translations preserve it toponymically. The name's meaning ('pleasantness') suggests either the town's attractive setting or commemorates a person. Differentiation from other biblical Naamahs (a woman's name, a different location) requires attention to context. Joshua's lists often group towns geographically, and Naamah appears among Shephelah settlements. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Naamah | es: y-Naamá | fr: et-Naamah | de: und-Naamah Josh 15:41

נַעֲמִי H5280 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Naamite (clan designation, descendants of Naaman)

Numbers 26:40 uses this gentilic form (with article) to designate the clan descended from Naaman, listed among Benjamin's families in the wilderness census. The Samaritan Pentateuch suggests reading 'Naamani' (adding the expected yod), indicating possible textual variation. These clan names established identity and inheritance rights, organizing Israel's tribes into manageable administrative and military units. The census followed the plague at Peor and preceded Canaan's conquest, functioning as both military muster and land distribution record. The Naamites would receive their portion in Benjamin's territory.

(1×) This gentilic adjective with article in Numbers 26:40 functions as a clan designation. Spanish 'los naamitas' appropriately renders it as a collective plural. The textual note that Samaritan Pentateuch reads 'Naamani' shows ancient awareness of orthographic irregularity. Gentilic forms typically add -i to the ancestor's name (like English -ite), creating family-clan identifiers that structured Israelite society and determined land inheritance. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Naamite | es: los-naamitas | fr: le-Naamite | de: der-Naamite Num 26:40

נָעֳמִי H5281 N-proper-fs (21×)

Naomi — 'my delight, my pleasantness'; mother-in-law of Ruth, central figure in the book of Ruth

A feminine name meaning 'my pleasantness' or 'my delight,' borne by the Bethlehemite woman whose story of loss and restoration frames the entire book of Ruth. After the deaths of her husband Elimelech and both sons in Moab, Naomi bitterly renames herself Mara ('bitter'), creating one of Scripture's most poignant wordplays on personal identity and divine providence. Her shrewd guidance of Ruth's actions leads to the marriage with Boaz and the birth of Obed, grandfather of David — making Naomi a quiet link in the messianic genealogy.

Naomi (21×) The proper name of Ruth's mother-in-law, appearing exclusively in the book of Ruth (all 21 occurrences). The name itself means 'pleasant' or 'lovely,' which Naomi pointedly contrasts with Mara ('bitter') in Ruth 1:20 after her bereavement. Translations uniformly transliterate the name (Naomi, Noami, Noemí). She functions as the narrative architect whose return to Bethlehem, counsel to Ruth, and role as nurse to Obed (Ruth 4:16-17) tie the story together. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Naomi, and-to-Naomi | es: Noami, Y-para-Noami | fr: Naomi, et-à-Naomi | de: Naomi, und-zu-Naomi Ruth 1:2; Ruth 1:3; Ruth 1:8; Ruth 1:11; Ruth 1:19

נַעֲמָן H5282 N-mp (1×)

pleasantness, delights (or Adonis-gardens, cult plants)

Isaiah 17:10 contains a phrase that could mean 'pleasant plantings' or, more intriguingly, 'Adonis-gardens.' The rare term has sparked scholarly debate: is this generic vocabulary for attractive plants, or does it reference the pagan ritual of Adonis-gardens—fast-growing plants in pots, quickly blooming and dying, symbolizing the vegetation god's death and resurrection? The latter interpretation fits Isaiah's context of condemning foreign religious practices. Either way, the prophet critiques misplaced trust: Israel cultivates these gardens but forgets the Rock of salvation.

(1×) This masculine plural noun in Isaiah 17:10 has generated lexical controversy. Spanish 'delicias' (delights) takes it generically, while some scholars see a reference to Adonis cult practices—quick-growth gardens mourning the dying god. The double plural construction ('plantings of pleasantnesses') may support the technical religious sense. Intertestamental and classical sources describe Adonis-gardens as pots of fast-sprouting seeds that withered quickly, symbolizing the god's cycle. Isaiah may be condemning syncretistic worship practices. PLEASANTNESS BEAUTY

en: pleasantness | es: delicias | fr: [נעמנים] | de: [נעמנים] Isa 17:10

נַעֲמָן H5283 N-proper-ms (16×)

Naaman — personal name meaning 'pleasant,' notably the Aramean general healed of leprosy by Elisha Derived from the root nᶜm ('to be pleasant, lovely'), this name is borne by two principal figures. The Benjaminite Naaman appears in genealogical lists as a son or grandson of Benjamin (Gen 46:21; Num 26:40; 1 Chr 8:4, 7). Far more prominent is Naaman the Syrian, commander of Aram's army, whose healing from leprosy through Elisha's instruction to wash in the Jordan became one of Scripture's most celebrated narratives of faith beyond Israel's borders (2 Kgs 5:1–27). Jesus himself cited Naaman's healing as evidence that God's mercy extends to outsiders (Luke 4:27).

Naaman (personal name) (16×) Proper masculine name referring to biblical individuals named Naaman ('pleasant'). The Aramean general dominates the usage (twelve of sixteen occurrences in 2 Kgs 5), whose dramatic healing from leprosy by bathing in the Jordan became a paradigmatic story of Gentile faith. The remaining occurrences identify a Benjaminite ancestor (Gen 46:21; Num 26:40). The Septuagint renders the name Naiman/Neeman, while Spanish and French uniformly use Naamán/Naaman. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Naaman, and-Naaman, to-Naaman | es: Naamán, Y-Naamán, de-Naamán | fr: Naaman, [ונעמן], et-Naaman | de: Naaman, [ונעמן], und-Naaman Gen 46:21; Num 26:40; 2Kgs 5:1; 2Kgs 5:2

נַעֲמָתִי H5284 Art / N-proper-ms (4×)

the Naamathite — gentilicadjective, Zophar's geographic origin or clan designation

This gentilic adjective designates Zophar's origin or clan, appearing exclusively as part of 'Zophar the Naamathite,' one of Job's three friends. The term indicates a connection to a place or clan named Naamah, though the specific location is uncertain. No city called Naamah is mentioned in nearby biblical geography, leading to various scholarly proposals—some suggesting emendation to 'Maonite' or other known locations. The Septuagint renders it as 'the Minean' or 'king of the Mineans,' reflecting ancient interpretive traditions. The designation serves primarily to identify and distinguish Zophar from other characters.

(4×) A gentilic adjective designating Zophar's geographic or clan origin. All four occurrences appear in Job as 'Zophar the Naamathite (haNaamathi)': introduced in Job 2:11 among the three friends who come to comfort Job, and appearing in 11:1, 20:1 when Zophar speaks, and 42:9 in the narrative conclusion. The designation suggests connection to a place or clan called Naamah, though no such location is definitively identified in biblical geography. LXX translates 'the Minean' (ho Minaios) or 'king of the Mineans,' suggesting ancient uncertainty about the reference. Some scholars propose emendation to 'Maonite,' but the traditional text is retained. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Naamathite | es: el-naamatita | fr: le-Naamathite | de: [הנעמתי] Job 2:11; Job 11:1; Job 20:1; Job 42:9

נַעֲצוּץ H5285 Art / N-ms (2×)

thornbush, thorn-shrub; prickly desert vegetation

This masculine noun denotes a thornbush or thorny shrub. Both occurrences appear in Isaiah's prophecies about transformation and judgment. Isaiah 7:19 warns that invasive threats will settle even in thornbushes among inhospitable places. Isaiah 55:13 promises restoration: 'instead of the thorn (na'atzutz) shall come up the cypress; instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle'—worthless plants replaced by valuable ones. The precise botanical identification is uncertain, but the term clearly designates undesirable, prickly vegetation typical of degraded land.

(2×) The two Isaiah passages use thornbushes symbolically for worthless or hostile conditions. In 7:19, the prophet warns of coming invasion: 'they will all come and settle in the steep ravines, and in the clefts of the rocks, and on all the thornbushes (ha-na'atzutzim), and on all the pastures.' Even inhospitable thorn-covered terrain will be occupied by enemies—total infestation. In 55:13, the imagery reverses for redemption: 'Instead of the thorn shall come up the cypress; instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle.' This botanical transformation symbolizes spiritual renewal—barren, hostile creation becoming fruitful and beautiful. The shift from plural (thornbushes, 7:19) to singular (the thorn, 55:13) may reflect collective singular usage. Spanish 'espino' and similar terms across languages identify this as spiny, shrubby growth. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: the-thorn, the-thornbushes | es: el-espino, los-espinos | fr: [הנעצוץ], [הנעצוצים] | de: [הנעצוץ], [הנעצוצים] Isa 7:19; Isa 55:13

נָעַר H5286 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

they growl, roar (like young lions)

Jeremiah 51:38 uses animal imagery to describe Babylon's warriors: 'Together they shall roar like lions; they shall growl like lions' cubs.' The verb captures the throaty, threatening sound of big cats—not the full-throated roar of adults but the snarling growl of aggressive young lions. Jeremiah prophecies Babylon's destruction with bitter irony: these growling predators will be made drunk and put to perpetual sleep. Their fierce sounds will cease. The onomatopoetic quality of the verb may echo the actual sound—the guttural snarl before the attack.

(1×) This Qal perfect third plural in Jeremiah 51:38 appears in a lion simile describing Babylonian warriors. Spanish 'gruñirán' (they will growl) captures the menacing animal vocalization. The verb parallels sha'ag (roar), creating an intensification from young lions' growls to mature lions' roars. The rare verb (appearing only here) adds specificity to the imagery—not generic animal sounds but the particular threatening rumble of lions preparing to attack. ROAR GROAN CRY

en: they-will-growl | es: gruñirán | fr: [נערו] | de: [נערו] Jer 51:38

נָעַר H5287 V-Nifal-Perf-1cs (11×)

To shake, shake out, or shake off; to cast off vigorously; to be shaken loose; to shake oneself free.

A kinetic verb of forceful dislodging, used for everything from God hurling Pharaoh's army into the sea to a locust being flicked from a garment fold. Nehemiah shook out his robe as a prophetic symbol, warning that God would likewise shake out anyone who broke their oath. In Isaiah 52:2, captive Zion is urged to 'shake yourself free from the dust,' a command of liberation. Spanish captures the range well:

'arrojó' (hurled) for the violent Piel, 'sacúdete' (shake yourself) for the reflexive self-liberation.

1. shake off vigorously (Piel intensive) (3×) Piel intensive: to shake off or cast out with forceful, decisive violence. God shook Pharaoh's chariots into the Red Sea (Exod 14:27; Ps 136:15), and Nehemiah invoked the same verb in his oath-curse: 'So may God shake out every man from his house' (Neh 5:13). Spanish 'arrojó' ('he hurled') and 'sacudió' ('he shook off') convey the violent, ejective force of this intensified stem. SHAKING AND TOTTERING
en: and-he-shook-off, and-shook-off, may-shake-out | es: Y-arrojó, sacuda, y-sacudió | fr: [וינער], et-secoua-dehors, et-secouer | de: [וינער], und-er-shook-off, und-schuettelte-weg Exod 14:27; Neh 5:13; Ps 136:15

2. shake off/out (Qal active) (3×) Qal active: to shake off or shake out something by physical action in the basic stem. Nehemiah shook out his garment as a symbolic act (Neh 5:13), Isaiah 33:15 describes the righteous man 'shaking his hands free from grasping a bribe,' and Isaiah 33:9 depicts Lebanon's leaves being shaken off in withering judgment. The sense is deliberate removal through physical shaking, less violent than the Piel. SHAKING AND TOTTERING
en: I-shook-out, and-shaking-off, who-shakes | es: el-que-sacude, sacudí, y-sacudidos | fr: [נערתי], et-garçon, garçon | de: [ונער], [נער], [נערתי] Neh 5:13; Isa 33:9; Isa 33:15

3. be shaken off (passive) (3×) Passive voice (Qal passive participle and Niphal): to be shaken off, shaken out, or dislodged. The psalmist laments 'I am shaken off like a locust' (Ps 109:23), evoking the image of an insect flicked from a garment fold – a powerful metaphor for feeling expendable and rootless. In Job 38:13, the wicked are 'shaken off' the earth at dawn. Spanish 'soy sacudido' preserves the passive suffering, while German 'abgeschüttelt' adds the sense of being discarded. WANDERING AND GRIEVING en: I-am-shaken-off, and-be-shaken-off, shaken-out | es: sacudido, soy-sacudido, y-sean-sacudidos | fr: [נעור], et-וינערו, secouer | de: [וינערו], [נעור], ich-bin-abgeschüttelt Neh 5:13; Job 38:13; Ps 109:23

4. shake oneself free (reflexive) (2×) Hitpael and Niphal reflexive: to shake oneself free from dust, bonds, or captivity. Isaiah 52:2 commands Zion: 'Shake yourself from the dust, arise!' – a call to self-liberation that pairs physical and spiritual freedom. Samson 'shook himself free' expecting divine strength (Judg 16:20), not knowing the LORD had departed. Spanish 'sacúdete' (imperative reflexive) perfectly mirrors the Hebrew Hitpael command, capturing both the physical motion and the theological urgency of rising from subjugation. SHAKING AND TOTTERING
en: and-shake-myself-free, shake-yourself | es: Sacúdete, y-me-sacudiré | fr: [התנער], et-secouer-myself-libérer | de: [התנער], und-schuetteln-myself-befreien Judg 16:20; Isa 52:2

נַעַר H5288 N-mp (239×)

A boy, youth, or young man; also a personal servant or attendant regardless of age; occasionally in temporal expressions meaning 'from youth.'

One of the most semantically flexible words for a male person in the Hebrew Bible, naʿar covers the entire span from a newborn infant (Moses in the basket, Exod 2:6) to a vigorous young warrior, and simultaneously serves as the standard term for a personal attendant or servant. Context alone determines whether age or social role is foregrounded. Arabic splits these into طِفْل ('child'), شَاب ('young man'), and خَادِم ('servant'), revealing distinctions that Hebrew collapses into one word. The overlap is sometimes deliberate: when Abraham takes his naʿar to Mount Moriah (Gen 22:3), the word evokes both youthful vigor and servant loyalty.

1. Youth, young man (122×) A youth or young man of vigorous age (122x), emphasizing the life-stage between childhood and full maturity. Used of Joseph at seventeen (Gen 37:2), the young Absalom, and groups of fighting-age men. Korean 젊은이 ('young person') and Spanish joven consistently select age-focused vocabulary. In Exodus 24:5 the 'young men of Israel' serve as sacrificial assistants, blending youth with cultic function. YOUNG MEN AND YOUTH
en: the-young-man, the-young-men | es: al-joven, el-joven, el-muchacho | fr: le-jeune-homme, le-jeune-hommes | de: der-Jüngling, der-jung-Maenner, der-jung-Mann Gen 34:19; Exod 24:5; Num 11:27; Josh 6:23; Judg 8:20

2. Servant, attendant (67×) A personal servant, attendant, or retainer (67x), where social role rather than age is primary. Includes armor-bearers (Judg 7:10-11), Gehazi serving Elisha (2 Kgs 4:24), and household attendants. Arabic خَادِم ('servant') and Spanish criado/siervo select dedicated servant vocabulary distinct from the 'youth' glosses. The possessive construction 'his naʿar' (נַעֲרוֹ) almost always signals this sense (Gen 18:7; 22:3, 5, 19). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: his-servant, servant-of, the-servants | es: a-su-criado, a-su-siervo, criado-de | fr: le-jeune-homme, serviteur-de, son-serviteur | de: Junge, Knecht-von, der-Jungen Gen 18:7; Gen 22:3; Gen 22:5; Gen 22:19; Judg 7:10

3. Boy, child, infant (47×) A young child, boy, or infant (47x), emphasizing tender age. Used of baby Moses at three months (Exod 2:6), the child Samuel, the boy Ishmael (Gen 21:12-19), and newborns (1 Sam 4:21). Arabic طِفْل ('small child'), Korean 아이, and Spanish niño all select dedicated child vocabulary, confirming semantic distance from sense 1. Judges 13:5-12 uses it repeatedly for the Nazirite child to be born to Manoah's wife. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: a-youth, am-a-youth, is-a-youth | es: el-joven, el-mozo, el-niño | fr: am-un-jeune-homme, jeune-homme, le-garçon | de: Junge, am-ein-youth, dem-Knaben Gen 21:12; Gen 21:17; Gen 21:18; Gen 21:19

4. From youth (temporal) (3×) A temporal usage meaning 'from youth / since young' (3x), found in expressions like מִנַּעַר ('from being a naʿar'). In Genesis 19:4 and Joshua 6:21 it appears in 'from young to old' merisms denoting totality. Arabic مِنْ and Spanish desde joven both render it as a temporal origin point rather than a person. This sense functions adverbially, marking the starting point of one's life experience. YOUNG MEN AND YOUTH en: from-young, from-youth | es: desde-joven | fr: de-jeune, jeune-homme | de: vom-Jungen, von-Junge, von-jung Gen 19:4; Josh 6:21; Esth 3:13

נַעַר H5289 Art / N-ms (1×)

the young one, the scattered one (textually corrupt or obscure)

Zechariah 11:16 contains a notoriously difficult text in a prophecy about worthless shepherds who neglect the flock. The phrase traditionally rendered 'the young' or 'the scattered ones' is so problematic that scholars from BDB to modern commentators flag it as corrupt. The verse lists what the bad shepherd will not do—not visit the lost, not seek the scattered, not heal the injured. Whether this term means 'young sheep' or 'scattered ones,' the point survives textual uncertainty: this shepherd abandons vulnerable members of the flock.

(1×) This noun with article in Zechariah 11:16 appears in a textual crux. Spanish 'la joven' (the young woman—likely an error, should be 'young animal') and French 'rejeton' (shoot/offspring) show translators grappling with obscurity. BDB notes the text is corrupt and cites proposed emendations. The root na'ar (shake, scatter) could yield 'scattered ones,' but the form is anomalous. Whatever the precise term, it represents vulnerable members of the flock that the worthless shepherd neglects. YOUNG MEN AND YOUTH
en: not | es: la-joven | fr: rejeton | de: der-Junge Zech 11:16

נְעֹר H5290 Prep-b (4×)

youth, early life; youthful vigor or the early period of one's life

This rare poetic term refers to the state or time of youth, parallel to the more common יָמִים. In Job 33:25 it describes the restoration of youthful vigor, while in the prepositional phrase "from youth" it marks the beginning point of a prolonged condition or state. The term appears in contexts highlighting either the vitality associated with being young or the duration "from youth up" as a measure of time.

(4×) Denotes the period or state of youth and early life. The Hebrew glosses consistently translate as "from youth" or "in youth," appearing in contexts where youthfulness is either restored (Job 33:25) or serves as a temporal marker for lifelong conditions (Psalm 88:15, Proverbs 29:21). The multilingual evidence shows temporal-prepositional constructions across languages, confirming this is fundamentally a time-marking term. YOUTH PERIOD

en: from-my-youth, from-youth, in-youth | es: desde-juventud, desde-niñez, en-juventud | fr: de-jeune, de-מִנְּעַר, בִּנְעַר | de: in-Junge, von-Junge, von-mein-youth Job 33:25; Job 36:14; Ps 88:15; Prov 29:21

נַעֲרָה H5291 N-fpc / 3fs (76×)

young woman, girl; often marriageable or of service age; can denote maidservant or female attendant

This common Hebrew noun designates a young woman, typically one of marriageable age. The term appears most famously in the story of Rebekah at the well (Gen 24), where the 'young woman' who offers water to Abraham's servant becomes Isaac's wife. The word carries no inherent connotation of virginity (though it can be qualified as 'virgin young woman'), nor does it automatically imply servitude—context determines whether the speaker means an independent young woman, a potential bride, or a female servant in a household. The plural with possessive suffixes often indicates maidservants belonging to a mistress.

1. young woman, girl (58×) The singular typically designates an individual young woman of marriageable status, as when Abraham's servant prayed that 'the young woman' who offers him water would be Isaac's bride (Gen 24:14, 16). The German jung Frau and French jeune-femme preserve the age-stage designation. This sense focuses on the woman's social standing and marriageability rather than subordinate status, appearing throughout the betrothal narrative in Genesis 24 and in Deuteronomy's laws about young women accused of unchastity (Deut 22:15-29). GIRL YOUNG WOMAN
en: [for-the-young-woman], [the-young-woman], [young-woman] | es: a-la-joven, la-joven, qere:en-la-joven | fr: [jeune-femme], [la-jeune-femme], [pour-le-jeune-femme] | de: [der-jung-Frau], [fuer-der-jung-Frau], [jung-Frau] Gen 24:14; Gen 24:16; Gen 24:28; Gen 24:55; Gen 24:57

2. female attendant, maidservant (15×) The plural with possessive suffix designates female attendants or maidservants belonging to a household. Rebekah brought 'her young women' when she departed for Isaac (Gen 24:61), Pharaoh's daughter had 'her attendants' at the Nile when she found Moses (Exod 2:5), and Boaz told Ruth to stay close to 'my young women' gleaning in his fields (Ruth 2:8, 22, 23). Spanish criadas and French jeune-femmes in household contexts show the Romance languages tracking the servitude dimension that possessive marking activates. FEMALE SERVANT SLAVE
en: and-her-maidens, and-her-young-women, and-my-young-women | es: a-las-siervas-de, a-sus-criadas, criadas-de-ella | fr: der-jeunes-filles, et-jeune-fille, et-sa-jeune-femmes | de: Maedchen, der-Maedchen, ihr-jung-Frauen Gen 24:61; Exod 2:5; Ruth 2:8; Ruth 2:22; Ruth 2:23

3. young women (group) (3×) In certain contexts the absolute plural designates young women as a collective group without implying servitude. When Saul's servants sought 'young women' going to draw water who could direct them to the seer Samuel (1Sam 9:11), or when Ahasuerus's servants proposed gathering beautiful 'young women' for the king to choose a queen (Esther 2:2, 8), the term functions as an age-gender category rather than a status marker. Spanish jóvenes and French jeunes-filles preserve this neutral collective sense across Romance languages. GIRL YOUNG WOMAN
en: young-women | es: jóvenes, muchachas | fr: jeune-femmes, jeunes-filles | de: Maedchen, jung-Frauen 1Sam 9:11; Esth 2:2; Esth 2:8

נַעֲרָה H5292a Conj-w / N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)

Naaratah (place name on Ephraim's border, with locative he)

Joshua 16:7 marks this location on Ephraim's boundary using the directional suffix (-ah meaning 'toward'). The site appears to be the same as Naaran mentioned in 1 Chronicles 7:28, showing how place names could vary slightly in spelling. Ancient sources place it about five Roman miles from Jericho, likely the area of modern Ein Duq with its perennial springs. The locative ending indicates motion toward or location at a place, common in biblical Hebrew geography. These boundary descriptions enabled tribal land claims and guided the division of Canaan among Joshua's generation.

(1×) This proper noun with conjunction and locative suffix in Joshua 16:7 designates a border point for Ephraim. Spanish 'y Naará' and French 'et Naaratah' preserve the place name. The -ah suffix (he locale) indicates direction or location. Septuagint variations ('their villages' or 'Anarath') suggest textual or interpretive challenges in transmission. Identification with the later Naaran and the Talmudic references to Noarath near Jericho help locate this in the lower Jordan valley. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Naaratah | es: y-Naará | fr: et-Naaratah | de: und-Naaratah Josh 16:7

נַעֲרָה H5292b Conj-w / N-proper-fs (3×)

Naarah, a wife of Ashhur in Judah's genealogy

This feminine proper name appears exclusively in the genealogical records of Judah's descendants. Naarah was one of two wives of Ashhur (Tekoa's father), and the text lists her children alongside those of his other wife Helah (1 Chronicles 4:5-6). The Greek translations vary considerably (Thoada, Noora, Noera), suggesting uncertainty about the name's pronunciation or significance. Interestingly, the name is identical in form to the common noun meaning 'young woman' or 'girl,' which may explain some translation difficulty in distinguishing the proper name from the common noun.

(3×) All three occurrences are tightly clustered in 1 Chronicles 4:5-6, establishing Naarah's role as mother to several sons in Judah's lineage. French translators sometimes render the word as 'jeune-fille' (young woman), blurring the boundary between proper name and common noun. The genealogical context makes clear this is a personal name, yet the semantic overlap with 'young woman' may have been intentional—perhaps she was notably young when married or when her sons were born. GIRL YOUNG WOMAN
en: Na'arah, and-Na'arah | es: Naara, y-Naara | fr: et-jeune-fille, jeune-fille | de: [נַעֲרָה], [וְנַעֲרָה] 1Chr 4:5; 1Chr 4:6

נַעֲרַי H5293 N-proper-ms (1×)

Naarai (personal name, one of David's mighty men)

First Chronicles 11:37 lists this warrior among David's elite fighting force, identified as 'Naarai son of Ezbai.' The parallel text in 2 Samuel 23:35 gives the name as 'Paarai the Arbite,' indicating either textual variation or two different spellings of the same name—Hebrew pe and nun look similar in some ancient scripts. David's mighty men were his special forces, the thirty-seven heroes who performed extraordinary acts of courage and loyalty. Though we know only Naarai's name and patronymic, his inclusion in this honored list marks him as one of Israel's elite warriors.

(1×) This proper noun in 1 Chronicles 11:37 identifies one of David's champions. The name may mean 'servant of Yah' or 'youth of Yah.' Cross-reference with 2 Samuel's 'Paarai' creates a text-critical puzzle—same person with variant spelling, or scribal error confusing similar letters? Septuagint variants show ancient translators also struggled with the name's form. What remains clear is the honorific context: membership in David's elite military circle. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Naarai | es: Naarai | fr: [נַעֲרִי] | de: [נַעֲרִי] 1Chr 11:37

נַעַרְיָה H5294 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Neariah, name of two post-exilic men: a descendant of David and a Simeonite

This masculine name identifies two individuals in Chronicles' genealogies. The first Neariah was a descendant of King David through Zerubbabel's line (1 Chronicles 3:22-23), appearing among the post-exilic royal descendants who no longer ruled but maintained their Davidic lineage. The second was a Simeonite leader who participated in a military campaign against the Amalekite remnant in Edom (1 Chronicles 4:42). The name appears to mean 'servant of Yahweh' or 'Yah has shaken (free),' though the exact derivation is debated. Greek translations vary, suggesting the name was uncommon.

(3×) Both occurrences fall within genealogical frameworks—one tracing David's royal line, the other documenting Simeonite military leadership. The multilingual evidence shows simple transliteration with minimal variation (Nearya, Neariah), indicating the name was understood as a proper noun without deeper semantic translation. The two Neariahs represent different tribal affiliations (Judah vs. Simeon) and historical moments (post-exilic genealogy vs. territorial expansion), requiring contextual clues to distinguish them. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ne'aryah, and-Ne'aryah | es: Nearya, y-Nearya | fr: [ונעריה], [נעריה] | de: [ונעריה], [נעריה] 1Chr 3:22; 1Chr 3:23; 1Chr 4:42

נַעֲרָן H5295 N-proper-fs (1×)

Naaran (place name in eastern Ephraim)

First Chronicles 7:28 places this town among Ephraimite holdings, apparently identical to Naaratah in Joshua 16:7. The site lay in Ephraim's eastern territory toward the Jordan valley, an area rich in springs and date palms. Ancient geographers located it near Jericho, and it appears in later Jewish sources as a notable settlement. The name preservation across variant spellings (Naaratah/Naaran) demonstrates how toponyms could fluctuate slightly while retaining recognition. Chronicles' geographical lists help reconstruct tribal territories even when texts vary.

(1×) This proper noun in 1 Chronicles 7:28 identifies an Ephraimite town. Septuagint transliterations ('Naaran' with variants) show ancient recognition as a place name. The identification with Joshua's Naaratah is nearly certain, showing the same location referenced with slight spelling variation. The root may relate to na'ar (youth) or to an otherwise unknown element. Geographic context places it in the fertile Jordan valley zone that Ephraim controlled. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Naaran | es: Naarán | fr: [נערן] | de: [נערן] 1Chr 7:28

נְעֹרֶת H5296 Art / N-fs (2×)

tow, flax fibers; easily ignited fibrous material

This feminine noun designates tow—the coarse, broken fibers of flax that remain after processing. Tow is highly flammable, making it useful for metaphors about sudden destruction. In Judges 16:9, Delilah binds Samson with fresh bowstrings, 'and they snapped as a thread of tow snaps when it touches the fire'—instant dissolution. Isaiah 1:31 warns that the strong will become tow and their work a spark, 'and both of them shall burn together'—quick, complete consumption. The word relates to the root meaning to shake off or comb out, referencing how tow is separated from flax by beating.

(2×) Both texts exploit tow's flammability for vivid comparisons. Judges 16:9 describes Samson's first escape from Delilah's binding: 'the bowstrings snapped as a thread of tow (petil ha-ne'oret) snaps when it comes near the fire.' The simile emphasizes the ease and speed—tow doesn't just burn, it flashes and vanishes at mere proximity to flame. Isaiah 1:31 uses tow for the fate of the powerful: 'And the strong shall become tow (ne'oret), and his work a spark, and both of them shall burn together, with none to quench them.' Those who trusted in their strength become the very fuel for their destruction. Spanish 'estopa' and similar cross-linguistic terms confirm this as processed flax fibers—material once valuable (from flax) now degraded to the most combustible refuse. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: as-tow, the-tow | es: como-estopa, estopa | fr: [לנעורת], le-tow | de: [לנעורת], der-tow Judg 16:9; Isa 1:31

מֹף H5297 N-proper-fs (7×)

Noph (Memphis); the ancient Egyptian capital on the Nile, frequently named in prophetic oracles against Egypt.

The Hebrew name for Memphis, Egypt's ancient capital situated just south of the Nile Delta. Appearing in two variant forms – Noph and Moph – it figures prominently in prophetic denunciations of Egypt. Jeremiah 2:16 warns that 'the sons of Noph' have broken Israel's crown, while Jeremiah 44:1 and 46:14,19 address Jewish refugees who settled there. Isaiah 19:13 declares its princes deceived, and Ezekiel 30:13 pronounces that God will destroy its idols. The Greek Septuagint renders it Memphis, preserving the Egyptian Mn-nfr ('enduring beauty').

Noph (Memphis, Egyptian city) (7×) The proper name of the ancient Egyptian city Memphis (Egyptian Mn-nfr, 'enduring beauty'), located south of the Nile Delta near modern Cairo. It served as Egypt's political and religious capital. In prophetic literature, it represents Egyptian power and false security: Hosea 9:6 warns that 'Moph shall bury them,' Isaiah 19:13 declares its princes deluded, and Ezekiel 30:13 announces the destruction of its idols and cessation of its princes. Jeremiah uses it repeatedly (2:16; 44:1; 46:14,19) as both a symbol of Egyptian oppression and a literal destination for Judean refugees. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Memphis, Noph, and-Noph | es: Menfis, Nof, de-Menfis | fr: Noph, [בנך], [ובנך] | de: [בנך], [ובנך], [ונך] Isa 19:13; Jer 2:16; Jer 44:1; Jer 46:14; Jer 46:19

נֹפֶג H5298 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Nepheg; personal name of a Levite (Exod 6:21) and a son of David (2 Sam 5:15, 1 Chr 3:7, 14:6)

Nepheg appears as the name of two distinct individuals in Scripture. The first is a Levite mentioned in the genealogical records of Exodus 6:21. The second, more prominent figure is a son of David born in Jerusalem, recorded in both Samuel and Chronicles. The name's etymology is uncertain, though BDB notes variant Greek renderings across manuscripts.

(4×) A personal name borne by two biblical figures: a Levite from the line of Kohath, and one of David's sons. The transliterations across English, Spanish, French, and German are remarkably consistent (Nepheg, Nefeg, Néfeg), showing this is a straightforward proper name with stable cross-linguistic transmission. Some translations bracket the conjunctive form [ונפג] to indicate morphological complexity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Nefeg, and-Nepheg | es: y-Nefeg, y-Néfeg | fr: [ונפג], et-Nefeg, et-Nepheg | de: [ונפג], und-Nefeg, und-Nepheg Exod 6:21; 2Sam 5:15; 1Chr 3:7; 1Chr 14:6

נָפָה H5299a Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)

sieve (winnowing or sifting tool)

Isaiah 30:28 contains vivid imagery of God's judgment: 'to sift the nations with the sieve of destruction.' The term denotes an agricultural implement used to separate grain from chaff or to sort materials by size. Ancient sieves were frames with mesh or perforated material; shaken vigorously, they allowed fine material through while retaining larger particles. Isaiah transforms this domestic tool into a metaphor for divine sorting—nations will be shaken in God's sieve, the worthless falling away. The 'sieve of worthlessness' suggests a sorting that retains nothing, total rejection.

(1×) This feminine noun in construct in Isaiah 30:28 appears in a judgment metaphor. Spanish 'con criba de' (with sieve of) preserves the agricultural implement. The phrase 'sieve of worthlessness' or 'sieve of destruction' may mean a sieve that proves everything worthless (nothing passes muster) or a sieve used for destructive purposes (sorting for annihilation). The imagery recalls Amos 9:9 where God sifts Israel among nations. Sifting separates, and here the separation leads to ruin for those deemed chaff. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: with-a-sieve | es: con-criba-de | fr: [בנפת] | de: [בנפת] Isa 30:28

נָפָה H5299b N-fsc (3×)

height, elevated region; construct form in the place-name 'Naphoth-dor'

This feminine noun denotes an elevated area or height, appearing only in the geographic designation 'Naphoth-dor' (heights/ridges of Dor). The term describes the hilly terrain surrounding the ancient Canaanite city of Dor on the Mediterranean coast. Joshua conquered the king of this region (Joshua 11:2, 12:23), and Solomon later organized it as an administrative district (1 Kings 4:11). The word is always in construct form, bound to 'Dor,' suggesting it may have been a technical geographic term for the characteristic elevated terrain of that coastal region.

(3×) All three instances refer to the same geographic location—the elevated territory around Dor. English translations vary between 'heights,' 'slopes,' and 'region,' while Romance languages preserve the elevation concept (Spanish 'alturas,' French 'hauteur'). The construct pairing with Dor was apparently fixed, functioning as a recognized place-name rather than a descriptive phrase. Archaeological identification places this in the Carmel coastal range where hills rise sharply from the Mediterranean shore. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-heights-of, at-heights-of, the-height-of | es: Nafat-de, de-alturas-de, y-en-alturas-de | fr: et-dans-heights-de, le-hauteur-de, à-heights-de | de: bei-heights-von, der-Hoehe-von, und-in-heights-von Josh 11:2; Josh 12:23; 1Kgs 4:11

נְפִיסִים H5300 N-proper-mp (2×)

Nephishesim/Nephusim; family of temple servants (ketiv/qere variants)

This name designates a family among the temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from Babylonian exile. The name appears with significant textual variation—ketiv and qere readings differ, and the parallel passage in Ezra has different spelling. Nehemiah 7:52 lists 'the sons of Nephishesim' (or Nephusim, depending on reading) among the returning exiles. The variants (Nephisim, Nephushesim, Nephishesim) likely represent different manuscript traditions attempting to preserve an uncommon family name, possibly related to the name Naphish from Genesis.

(2×) This family appears in the post-exilic census lists of temple servants. Nehemiah 7:52 records them among families returning from Babylon. The double occurrence reflects the ketiv/qere split—what's written versus what's read aloud in synagogue tradition. The parallel in Ezra 2:50 has yet another variant (Nephusim), showing how minor names could vary across manuscripts. The Septuagint translations show ancient translators also struggled with the exact form, producing multiple Greek renderings. Scholars suggest connection to the name Naphish (a son of Ishmael, Gen 25:15), which would make this 'descendants of Naphish.' The mixing of variants (Nephisim + Nephushim = Nephishesim in some texts) shows scribal attempts to harmonize traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nephishesim, [ketiv] | es: (Nefisesim), [Nefusesim] | fr: [נפושים], [נפישים] | de: [(נפישים)], [[נפושים]] Neh 7:52

נָפַח H5301 V-Pual-Perf-3ms (12×)

To breathe, blow; blow upon coals or into something; also to sniff contemptuously, expire, or cause to breathe out.

At its heart this verb captures the act of directed breath — air propelled with purpose. Its most theologically momentous occurrence is Genesis 2:7, where God 'breathed into' Adam's nostrils the breath of life. The same root blows bellows to heat furnaces (Ezek 22:20-21), describes a pot 'blown upon' until boiling (Jer 1:13), and in a haunting image portrays a bereaved mother who 'breathes out her soul' as the sun sets (Jer 15:9). It can even express contempt: the priests of Malachi 1:13 'sniff at' the LORD's table dismissively. Spanish translations track the range well — 'soplar' for blowing, 'echar' for breathing out one's life, and 'soplar sobre' for the contemptuous sniff.

1. blow, breathe upon (6×) To blow or breathe upon with purpose and directed force. This is the primary active sense, covering God breathing the breath of life into Adam (Gen 2:7), the command to the four winds to breathe upon the slain in the valley of dry bones (Ezek 37:9), and blowing upon metal in a furnace to heat it (Ezek 22:20-21; Isa 54:16). Spanish 'soplar' and French 'souffler' both capture the forceful exhalation at the core of this sense. BLOWING AND BREATHING

en: and-I-blew-on, and-I-will-blow, and-breathe | es: para-soplar, que-sopla, y-sopla | fr: [נפח], et-respira, et-souffler | de: [ונפחתי], [ופחי], [לפחת] Gen 2:7; Isa 54:16; Ezek 22:20; Ezek 22:21; Ezek 37:9

2. blown upon, heated (3×) The passive participial sense of something having been blown upon — heated, boiling, or stoked. A pot 'blown upon' (naphuach) faces north in Jeremiah 1:13, and Leviathan's breath is like a 'blown' caldron in Job 41:20. The imagery is of sustained bellows-work producing intense, dangerous heat. Spanish 'que-hierve' (that boils) and 'soplada' (blown upon) confirm the resultative state — not the act of blowing but its fiery aftermath. BLOWING AND BREATHING

en: blown, boiling | es: que-hierve, soplada, soplado; | fr: [נפוח], נפח ,נפוח | de: [נפוח], [נפח] Job 20:26; Job 41:20; Jer 1:13

3. sniff at contemptuously (1×) A Hifil usage meaning to sniff at contemptuously — to blow dismissively at something that deserves honor. In Malachi 1:13, the priests treat the LORD's offering table with disdain, 'sniffing at it' as though it were beneath them. Spanish 'y-soplaréis-sobre' (and you will blow upon) preserves the physical act while the context supplies the contempt. A vivid image of irreverence expressed through the body. BLOWING AND BREATHING

en: and-you-sniff-at | es: y-soplaréis-sobre | fr: et-souffler | de: [והפחתם] Mal 1:13

4. breathe out, expire (1×) To breathe out one's last breath — to expire, to die. In Jeremiah 15:9, the mother of seven 'breathed out her soul' (naphchah nafshah) as the sun went down, a poignant depiction of life departing like breath leaving the body. Spanish 'echó' (cast forth, released) captures the finality of that last exhalation. BLOWING AND BREATHING

en: she-breathed-out | es: echó | fr: [נפחה] | de: [נפחה] Jer 15:9

5. cause to expire, drive out by breath (1×) The Hifil causative sense: to cause someone's life to expire or to drive out by breath. In Job 31:39, Job protests his innocence, denying that he has 'caused the life of its owners to breathe out' — that is, he has not worked anyone to death or dispossessed them fatally. Spanish 'exhalé' (I exhaled) and the causative morphology together point to an agent who forces another's breath to cease. BLOWING AND BREATHING

en: I-have-caused-to-expire | es: exhalé | fr: הפחתי | de: [הפחתי] Job 31:39

נֹפַח H5302 N-proper-fs (1×)

Nophah (place name, possibly textual corruption for Nobah)

Numbers 21:30 contains this place name in a victory song fragment that is textually difficult throughout the verse. The name appears nowhere else, leading many scholars to suspect corruption—perhaps originally 'Nobah' (a known location) or a verb form ('we destroyed'). The Septuagint read it as a verb, suggesting ancient translators also found the name puzzling. Victory songs often listed conquered cities as trophies; if Nophah is authentic, it was a Moabite or Amorite settlement destroyed in Israel's Transjordanian campaigns. Textual uncertainty hasn't obscured the passage's triumphant tone.

(1×) This proper noun in Numbers 21:30 is lexically and textually problematic. Spanish 'Nofa' preserves it toponymically, but Septuagint ('they set on fire') treated it as a verb. BDB notes it may be confused with Nobah (Numbers 32:42) or may represent a Pual perfect verb ('it was destroyed'). The consonantal text (NPH) could support either reading. If a place, it joined Heshbon, Dibon, and Medeba in the roster of conquered Transjordanian towns. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nophah | es: Nofa | fr: Nophah | de: Nophah Num 21:30

נְפִלִים H5303 Art / N-mp (3×)

Nephilim, giants; antediluvian and Canaanite beings of extraordinary size

This enigmatic plural noun designates the 'giants' who appear both before the Flood (Genesis 6:4) and in Canaan during Israel's wilderness wanderings (Numbers 13:33, twice). The etymology is uncertain—possibly from a root meaning 'to fall' (fallen ones? those who make others fall?). Ancient translators used 'giants' (Greek gigantes, Latin), while modern interpreters debate whether this denotes physical stature, violent character, or semi-divine origins. In Numbers, the terrified spies report seeing Nephilim descendants among the Anakim, using the giants as the ultimate symbol of Canaan's impregnability.

(3×) Genesis places the Nephilim in the era when 'sons of God' took human wives, resulting in offspring who were 'mighty men of old, men of renown'—a shadowy reference suggesting abnormal origin and power. Numbers twice mentions them: first as the feared inhabitants of Canaan, then identifying the Anakim as Nephilim descendants. The spies' terror ('we seemed like grasshoppers') shows how Nephilim functioned as the archetypal threat. Cross-linguistic consistency (Nephilim, nefilim, Riesen) reflects both transliteration of the Hebrew and conceptual agreement about their giant stature. RAPHAH GIANT CLAN

en: the-Nephilim | es: Los-nefilim, los-nefilim | fr: le-Nephilim | de: der-Nephilim, die-Riesen Gen 6:4; Num 13:33

נְפִיסִים H5304 N-proper-ms (2×)

Nephusim/Nephisim; family of temple servants (textual variant)

This proper name identifies a family of temple servants (Nethinim) in the post-exilic return lists. It's a textual variant of the same family name appearing in Nehemiah 7:52. Ezra 2:50 lists 'the sons of Nephusim' (or Nephisim, depending on the manuscript tradition). The ketiv/qere split and parallel passage variations show this name had multiple spellings in circulation. These families of temple servants performed various support roles in temple worship, and many had foreign-sounding names, suggesting they or their ancestors came from non-Israelite backgrounds.

(2×) The family appears in Ezra's list of returnees from Babylon. Ezra 2:50 names 'the sons of Nephusim' (qere reading) among the Nethinim. The ketiv (written text) has 'Nephisim,' creating the double occurrence in databases. This parallels the variants in Nehemiah 7:52 (Nephishesim/Nephushesim), showing the same family recorded with spelling differences across sources. The Septuagint offers yet more variants (Napheisom, Nephousim), confirming ancient uncertainty about the exact form. What's clear is that a family by this approximate name served in temple support roles. The variety of spellings for Nethinim families may reflect their diverse origins and the challenges of preserving non-Hebrew names across centuries of transmission. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: Nefusim, [ketiv] | es: (Nefusim)., [Nefisim] | fr: [נְפוּסִים], [נְפִיסִים] | de: [(נפוסים)], [[נפיסים]] Ezra 2:50

נָפִישׁ H5305 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Naphish, son of Ishmael and eponymous ancestor of an Arabian tribe

This proper name identifies one of Ishmael's twelve sons, listed in both Genesis 25:15 and 1 Chronicles 1:31 among the Arabian tribal ancestors. The name also designates the tribe descended from him, whom the Transjordanian tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh defeated in battle (1 Chronicles 5:19). The Greek transliterations vary (Naphes, Napheis), and the name likely has Arabic cognates, fitting Ishmael's identity as father of Arabian peoples. The tribal Naphish held territory east of the Jordan before Israel's conquest.

(3×) Two occurrences are genealogical, establishing Naphish as Ishmael's eleventh son in the standard list. The third reference (1 Chronicles 5:19) shifts from person to people—the Naphishites as a tribe defeated by Israel's eastern clans. Multilingual renderings show simple transliteration (Nafis, Nafish, Naphish) with minor phonetic variation. The pattern of personal name becoming tribal designation is common in Genesis genealogies, where individuals represent the nations descending from them. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Naphish, and-Naphish | es: Nafis, Nafish, y-Nafis | fr: Naphish, [ונפיש], [נפיש] | de: Nafisch, [ונפיש], [נפיש] Gen 25:15; 1Chr 1:31; 1Chr 5:19

נֹפֶךְ H5306 Prep-b / N-ms (4×)

a precious stone, possibly turquoise, ruby, or carbuncle; appears in the high priest's breastplate and symbolic descriptions

This gemstone appears in the high priest's breastplate (Exodus 28:18, 39:11) and in Ezekiel's symbolic descriptions of Tyre's wealth. Ancient versions disagree on the exact identification—the Greek and Vulgate suggest carbuncle or ruby (ἄνθραξ, carbunculus), while the Targum favors emerald. Modern scholars often propose turquoise. The uncertainty reflects the challenge of matching ancient trade-gemstone terminology to modern mineralogy.

(4×) A precious stone valued for ornamental and symbolic use. Translations diverge significantly: English favors "turquoise," Spanish prefers "esmeralda/carbunclo" (emerald/carbuncle), French "turquoise/émeraude," and German "Tuerkis" (turquoise). This lexical variation reflects ancient uncertainties about gemstone identification. The stone appears in high-value contexts—priestly vestments and the wealth of kingdoms—indicating rarity and beauty. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14254 WITH 4 SENSES

en: turquoise, with-turquoise | es: carbunclo, con-esmeralda, esmeralda | fr: turquoise, émeraude | de: Tuerkis, [בנכך], [נכך] Exod 28:18; Exod 39:11; Ezek 27:16; Ezek 28:13

נָפַל H5307 Prep-k / V-Qal-Inf (435×)

to fall, fall down; to lie prostrate; to cast lots; to desert; to attack; to dismount; causative: to cause to fall, cast down, allot

The primary sense is physical falling—collapsing to the ground, whether from exhaustion, death, or prostration. But נָפַל extends far beyond simple downward motion. It covers military desertion (falling away to the enemy), ritual prostration (falling down in worship), and the casting of lots for divination or land distribution. The Hifil causative can mean 'to cause to fall' (strike down an enemy), 'to cast lots' (throw dice or stones), or 'to allot land' (distribute by lot). Even 'dismounting' from a camel appears as a specialized sense, where the downward motion is controlled descent rather than accidental fall.

1. Qal: fall down physically (339×) Core physical falling or collapsing to the ground. Arabic consistently uses سَقَطَ (saqaṭa) 'to fall,' confirming the primary sense across Semitic languages. Genesis 17:3 has Abraham falling on his face before God—the posture of reverence. Genesis 45:14 shows Joseph falling on Benjamin's neck in embrace. The versatility of the root appears in its Qal inflections spanning narrative (wayyipol, 'and he fell') and commands. FALLING AND FAILING

en: and-fell, and-he-fell | es: Y-cayó, y-cayó | fr: et-il-tomba, et-tomba | de: und-er-fiel, und-es-fiel, und-fiel Gen 17:3; Gen 17:17; Gen 33:4; Gen 45:14; Gen 46:29

2. Hifil: cause to fall / strike down (33×) Hifil causative: 'to cause to fall,' 'to strike down,' 'to knock down.' Arabic uses Form IV causative أَسْقَطَ (asqaṭa), perfectly mirroring the Hebrew morphology. Genesis 2:21 has God causing deep sleep to fall on Adam. Deuteronomy 25:2 allows a judge to cause a guilty man to fall (be beaten). The martial nuance appears frequently: causing enemies to fall means defeating them. FALLING AND FAILING

en: And-caused-to-fall, He-let-fall, I-cast | es: Haciendo-caer, Y-hizo-caer, dejaban-caer | fr: Et-caused-à-tomber, Il-que-tombe, et-elle-tombera | de: He-lass-falle, fallen, fiel Gen 2:21; Exod 21:27; Num 5:22; Num 35:23; Deut 25:2

3. Hifil: cast lots / throw (17×) Hifil specialized for casting lots or throwing objects: deliberate projective action. Arabic shifts to أَلْقَى (alqā) 'to throw/cast,' distinct from the falling root. 1 Chronicles 24:31, 25:8, 26:13-14 describe Levitical divisions determined by lot-casting. The Spanish 'echaron' (they cast) and Korean '제비를 뽑았다' (cast lots) confirm the semantic shift from falling to throwing. FALLING AND FAILING

en: And-they-cast, and-cast, and-casting | es: Echad, Y-echaron, echamos | fr: et-ils-tomberont, et-tomber, jeta | de: fallen, fiel, und-fallen 1Sam 14:42; 1Chr 24:31; 1Chr 25:8; 1Chr 26:13; 1Chr 26:14

4. Qal: fall in state / lie fallen (participle) (12×) Qal participle stative: lying fallen, in a state of prostration. Not the event of falling, but the resulting state. Arabic uses active participle ساقِط (sāqiṭ) 'fallen one.' Numbers 24:4, 16 describe Balaam as one 'fallen down' yet with eyes opened—a visionary posture. Deuteronomy 21:1 addresses a body found 'lying' in the field. FALLING AND FAILING

en: fallen, falling, the-fallen | es: caigo, cayendo, caída | fr: tombant, tomber, tombé | de: falling, fiel, gefallen Num 24:4; Num 24:16; Deut 21:1; Josh 7:10; Judg 3:25

5. Qal: desert / defect to enemy (10×) Specialized military sense: to desert, to defect to the enemy. Arabic abandons the fall root entirely, using ʿ (haraba) 'to flee/desert.' 2 Kings 25:11 speaks of deserters who fell away to the Babylonians. Jeremiah 37:13-14 accuses the prophet of defecting, using the participle 'defecting ones' (Spanish 'desertores'). The metaphor: falling away from one's own side to the enemy. FALLING AND FAILING

en: and-falling, defected, defecting | es: desertando, desertaron, los-desertores | fr: deserted, et-tomber, le-deserters | de: der-deserters, deserted, fallen 2Kgs 25:11; Jer 21:9; Jer 37:13; Jer 37:14

6. Hifil: allot / divide land by lot (7×) Hifil for allotting or dividing land by lot. Arabic uses ḳ (aqsim) 'divide!' from the root قسم 'to apportion.' Joshua 13:6 ('I will allot it to Israel') and 23:4 describe the conquest distribution. Psalm 78:55 recalls how God 'allotted them' the land of nations—divine lot-casting determining tribal inheritance. FALLING AND FAILING

en: I-have-allotted, and-he-allotted-them, and-when-you-divide | es: Y-al-repartir-vosotros, derribaréis, hice-caer | fr: diviser-il, et-tomber, je-avoir-attribua | de: du-soll-fiel, fallen, ich-haben-teilte-zu Josh 13:6; Josh 23:4; 2Kgs 3:19; Ps 78:55; Ezek 45:1

7. Qal: fall upon / attack (5×) Qal sense of falling upon someone hostilely: to attack, to raid. Arabic sometimes shifts to ʿ (waqaᶜa) 'to fall upon/befall,' distinct from simple falling. 2 Samuel 17:9 warns that Absalom will 'fall upon' David's troops. Job 4:13, 33:15 describe visions falling upon one in deep sleep—an overwhelming, almost invasive arrival. FALLING AND FAILING

en: in-the-falling-of, when-fall, when-falls | es: Al-caer, al-caer, cuando-cae | fr: dans-tomber, quand-tombe, tomber | de: in-fiel, wann-falle 2Sam 17:9; Job 4:13; Job 33:15; Prov 24:17; Isa 30:25

8. Hitpael: prostrate oneself / fall down in worship (5×) Hitpael reflexive: deliberate self-prostration in worship or reverence. Not accidental falling, but intentional throwing oneself down. Arabic includes ﺳﺠﺪ (sājidan) 'prostrating in worship.' Deuteronomy 9:18, 25 have Moses prostrating himself before the LORD for forty days. Ezra 10:1 shows Ezra falling down in prayer. The reflexive morphology signals agency. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: I-fell-down, and-I-fell-down, and-falling-down | es: Y-me-postré, me-postré, y-para-caer | fr: et-je-tomba-en-bas, et-tomber, et-à-tomber-sur | de: ich-fiel-hinab, und-fiel, und-ich-fiel-hinab Gen 43:18; Deut 9:18; Deut 9:25; Ezra 10:1

9. Qal: dismount / descend (2×) Specialized sense: to dismount, to descend from a mount. Arabic uses ʿ (nazala) 'to descend/dismount,' confirming a distinct semantic field from accidental falling. Genesis 24:64 has Rebekah dismounting from her camel upon seeing Isaac. 2 Kings 5:21 shows Gehazi getting down from his position—controlled descent, not collapse. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-he-fell, and-she-dismounted | es: y-cayó, y-se-bajó | fr: et-elle-dismounted, et-il-tomba | de: und-er-fiel, und-fiel Gen 24:64; 2Kgs 5:21

10. Hifil: let fall / drop / neglect (2×) Hifil sense of letting fall, dropping, or neglecting. Arabic shifts to ḳ (tuhmil) 'to neglect' from root همل, a completely different semantic domain. Proverbs 19:15 warns that slothfulness causes one to 'let fall' into hunger. Esther 6:10 commands Haman to 'let nothing fall' (neglect nothing) of his task. FALLING AND FAILING

en: casts-into, let-fall | es: dejes-caer, hace-caer | fr: tomber | de: fiel Esth 6:10; Prov 19:15

11. (1×) Unclear sense, appearing once in 2 Kings 3:25 with the verb 'they felled' (derribaron). Possibly a specialized military term for cutting down or demolishing, but the evidence is singular. FALLING AND FAILING

en: they-felled | es: derribaron | fr: ils-felled | de: sie-felled 2Kgs 3:25

12. (1×) Unclear sense, appearing once in Isaiah 26:19 where the earth 'shall bring forth' or 'shall cast forth' (dará a luz). The Hebrew may involve a birth metaphor or casting out, but the translation evidence diverges widely. FALLING AND FAILING

en: shall-bring-forth | es: dará-a-luz | fr: tomber | de: fallen Isa 26:19

13. (1×) Unclear sense, appearing once in Ezekiel 47:22 where foreigners 'shall have allotment' or 'shall fall' as inheritance (caerán). Likely related to sense 6 (allotment by lot), but the syntax is unusual. FALLING AND FAILING

en: they-shall-have-allotment | es: caerán | fr: ils-tomberont | de: fallen Ezek 47:22

נְפַל H5308 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3fp (12×)

Fall, fall down (Aramaic) — to fall prostrate in worship, to topple, or to descend upon someone

The Aramaic verb נְפַל (nepal) means to fall or fall down, used almost exclusively in Daniel. Its most prominent usage describes falling prostrate before an idol: when the music sounds, all peoples must 'fall down and worship' Nebuchadnezzar's image (Dan 3:5-7, 10-11, 15). Nebuchadnezzar himself falls on his face before Daniel (Dan 2:46). The three friends fall bound into the furnace (Dan 3:23). A heavenly voice 'falls' upon the king as divine pronouncement (Dan 4:28). Daniel 7:20 uses it for horns falling before the little horn. Spanish 'caer' and French 'tomber' cover both physical and reverential senses.

fall, fall down (12×) To fall or fall down — in Daniel's Aramaic for falling prostrate in worship (Dan 3:5-7, 10-11, 15), falling on one's face in reverence (Dan 2:46), being cast into the furnace (Dan 3:23), a divine voice descending upon the king (Dan 4:28), and horns falling before a greater power (Dan 7:20). Spans physical falling, cultic prostration, and metaphorical descent. FALLING AND FAILING

en: (qere:and-fell), [ketiv:and-fell], falling | es: [y-cayeron], caerá, caeréis | fr: [יִפְל], et-ils-sont-tombés, et-sortir | de: [יִפְל], fallen, fiel Ezra 7:20; Dan 2:46; Dan 3:5; Dan 3:6; Dan 3:7

נֹפֶל H5309 Prep-k / N-ms (3×)

miscarriage, stillborn; an aborted or prematurely expelled fetus

This noun refers to a miscarried or stillborn child—one who never drew breath or saw light. Job wishes he had been 'like a miscarriage that is hidden, like infants who never saw light' (Job 3:16), preferring non-existence to his suffering. The Psalmist asks God to make the wicked 'like a miscarriage of a woman' that dissolves before birth (Psalm 58:8). Ecclesiastes uses it to argue that even a stillborn, despite lacking name or knowledge, has more rest than the man who lives long without satisfaction. The word captures life's most tragic loss—potential unfulfilled, a beginning that ends before it starts.

(3×) All three uses are metaphorical or comparative, employing the stillborn as a symbol of non-existence or wasted life. Job's longing, the Psalmist's curse, and Qoheleth's philosophical comparison all invoke the pathos of the miscarried child—one who enters existence only to exit immediately. Cross-linguistic glosses ('aborto,' 'miscarriage,' 'tomber') focus on the premature falling/failing, the incompletion. The construct 'miscarriage of a woman' (Psalm 58) makes explicit what is always implied: this is the saddest of wombs' outcomes. DEATH AND DYING

en: a-miscarriage-of, like-a-miscarriage, the-stillborn | es: aborto-de, como-aborto, el-abortivo | fr: comme-כְּנֹפֶל, le-הַנֹּפֶל, tomber | de: [כְּנֹפֶל], der-fiel, ein-miscarriage-von Job 3:16; Ps 58:8; Eccl 6:3

נָפַץ H5310a Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (18×)

Shatter, dash to pieces, break violently; in Piel, to smash enemies or objects; passively, to be broken or scattered

A forceful verb of violent destruction, depicting the act of smashing something so thoroughly that it splinters apart. The Piel intensive form dominates, with God himself as the frequent subject — dashing nations like pottery (Ps 2:9, Jer 51:20-23) or, in the harrowing Psalm 137:9, infants against the rock. Spanish 'destrozar/despedazar' and German 'zerschmettern' capture the ferocity well. Rarer uses extend to dispersal and scattering (Dan 12:7), where the shattering becomes metaphorical: not breaking a vessel but breaking apart a people.

1. Piel: shatter to pieces (13×) The Piel intensive: to violently smash or dash something to pieces, used overwhelmingly of God or a divine agent destroying enemies, nations, or idols. The iron-rod shattering of Psalm 2:9 and the war-club imagery of Jeremiah 51:20-23 are paradigmatic — Spanish 'destrozar' and German 'zerschmettern' both convey the total, violent nature of the destruction. Psalm 137:9 extends this to the most disturbing image in the Psalter, dashing infants against stone. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: and-I-will-shatter, and-I-will-shatter-them, and-dashes | es: Y-los-destrozaré, los-despedazarás, romperán | fr: briser, et-briser | de: du-soll-shatter-ihnen, und-dashes, und-zerschmettern Ps 2:9; Ps 137:9; Jer 13:14; Jer 48:12; Jer 51:20

2. Passive: be shattered, broken (2×) The passive: to be shattered, broken, already in a state of destruction. Jeremiah 22:28 asks whether Coniah is a 'despised, broken vessel' (נְפוּץ), and Isaiah 27:9 describes altar stones 'smashed to pieces' (מְנֻפָּצוֹת). Spanish 'quebrado' and 'desmenuzadas' capture the resultant state rather than the act of breaking. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: broken, not | es: desmenuzadas, quebrado | fr: briser | de: zerschmettern Isa 27:9; Jer 22:28

3. Piel: scatter, disperse (2×) To scatter or disperse, extending the shattering metaphor from physical objects to people or groups. In Daniel 12:7, the 'shattering of the holy people's power' (נַפֵּץ יַד) is not literal breakage but the dispersal and disempowerment of a nation. Spanish 'dispersar' distinguishes this scattering sense from the concrete smashing of sense 1. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: and-I-shall-break-them-up, shattering-of | es: dispersar, y-los-desataré | fr: briser, et-je-devra-brise-eux-en-haut | de: und-ich-soll-brich-ihnen-hinauf, zerschmettern 1Kgs 5:9; Dan 12:7

4. Qal: shatter, break (1×) The basic Qal stem: to shatter or break without the intensive force of the Piel. In Judges 7:19, Gideon's three hundred shatter their jars (וַיְנַפְּצוּ הַכַּדִּים) as a military signal — a single decisive act of breaking rather than sustained violent destruction. The infinitive absolute construction emphasizes the sudden, coordinated nature of the action. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: and-shattered | es: y-romper | fr: et-shattered | de: und-shattered Judg 7:19

נָפַץ H5310b Conj-w / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fpc (4×)

to disperse, be scattered; used of people scattering or being dispersed across territory

This verb describes the scattering or dispersal of populations and armies. Genesis 9:19 states that from Noah's sons "was the whole earth dispersed," while Isaiah 33:3 describes nations scattering before divine judgment. The root may be related to the more common פּוּץ (scatter), though some scholars derive it as an independent root with cognates in Aramaic and Arabic meaning to shake, pour out, or disperse.

(4×) Describes the action of dispersing or scattering, typically of human populations. In 1 Samuel 13:11, the people "were scattered" from Saul; in Genesis 9:19, humanity "dispersed" across the earth; Isaiah 11:12 and 33:3 refer to the "dispersed of Judah" and scattering nations. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent rendering as dispersion/scattering verbs, though some translations bracket unusual passive participle forms like [ונפצות] and [נפצו]. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: and-dispersed-of, are-scattered, scattered | es: fue-esparcida, fueron-dispersadas, se-dispersaba | fr: [ונפצות], [נפצו], dispersa | de: [ונפצות], [נפצו], breitete-sich-aus Gen 9:19; 1Sam 13:11; Isa 11:12; Isa 33:3

נֹפֶץ H5311 N-ms (1×)

storm, driving tempest, bursting rain

Isaiah 30:30 describes theophany—God's terrifying appearance in judgment: 'YHWH will cause his majestic voice to be heard and the descending blow of his arm to be seen, in furious anger and a flame of devouring fire, with a driving storm and hailstones.' The noun denotes violent, wind-driven precipitation, perhaps a cloudburst or storm front. The term relates to napats (shatter, burst), suggesting explosive weather—clouds bursting open, rain hammering down. Coupled with fire and hail, the imagery is of overwhelming force, nature weaponized in divine hands.

(1×) This masculine noun in Isaiah 30:30 appears in a theophanic judgment scene. Spanish 'diluvio' (deluge) captures the overwhelming water imagery. The word forms a triad with 'driving rain' and 'hailstone,' escalating the storm description. Derived from napats (scatter, shatter, burst), it suggests violent dispersal of water—perhaps a bursting cloudburst or hammering downpour. The context of divine warrior imagery transforms meteorological phenomena into weapons of judgment against Assyria. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: and-storm | es: diluvio | fr: [נפץ] | de: [נפץ] Isa 30:30

נְפַק H5312 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (12×)

To go out, come forth (Qal intransitive); to bring out, take out (Hifil causative) — Aramaic

The Aramaic verb נְפַק is the counterpart of Hebrew יָצָא, meaning 'to go out' or 'to come forth.' All twelve occurrences appear in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. In its Qal (Pe'al) form, it describes people exiting a place — Daniel 'went out' to the king's executioner (Dan 2:14), the three men 'came forth' from the fiery furnace (Dan 3:26), and ghostly fingers 'came forth' to write on the wall (Dan 5:5). In its Hifil (Hafel) causative form, it means to bring or take something out, as when Cyrus brought out the temple vessels (Ezra 5:14; 6:5) and Belshazzar had them brought out for his feast (Dan 5:2–3).

1. go out, come forth (Qal intransitive) (7×) The Pe'al (Qal) intransitive sense: to go out, come forth, emerge from a place. Seven occurrences describe physical movement outward. A royal decree 'went forth' (Dan 2:13), Daniel 'went out' to meet Arioch (Dan 2:14), Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego 'came forth' from the furnace unharmed (Dan 3:26), and mysterious fingers 'came forth' and wrote on the plaster wall (Dan 5:5). Spanish 'salieron' ('they went out') and English 'came forth / went out' uniformly confirm the intransitive emergence. The verb functions identically to its Hebrew cognate yatsa' but is restricted to the Aramaic chapters. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: (qere:came-forth), [ketiv:came-forth], and-coming-forth | es: (salieron), [salieron], había-salido | fr: et-sortir, sortir | de: ausgehen, und-ausgehen Dan 2:13; Dan 2:14; Dan 3:26; Dan 5:5

2. bring out, take out (Hifil causative) (5×) The Hafel (Hifil) causative sense: to bring out, take out, cause to emerge. Five occurrences describe an agent removing objects from a location. Cyrus brought out the gold and silver vessels that Nebuchadnezzar had taken from the Jerusalem temple (Ezra 5:14, twice), and decreed their return (Ezra 6:5). Belshazzar commanded that those same vessels be brought out for his feast (Dan 5:2), and they were brought out (Dan 5:3). Spanish 'sacó' ('he took out') and 'habían sacado' ('they had taken out') clearly mark the causative action, distinguishing this from the intransitive Qal sense. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: brought-out, took-out, were-brought-out | es: había-sacado, habían-sacado, sacó | fr: sortir | de: [הנפק], ausgehen Ezra 5:14; Ezra 6:5; Dan 5:2; Dan 5:3

נִפְקָה H5313 Conj-w / N-fsd (2×)

outlay, expense, expenditure; cost of a project

This Aramaic feminine noun means outlay, expense, or expenditure —the financial costs of an undertaking. Both occurrences appear in Ezra's record of Persian support for temple rebuilding, specifically in King Darius's decree about funding. Ezra 6:4 authorizes temple construction 'with three layers of great stones and one layer of timber. Let the expense be paid from the royal treasury.' Verse 8 reiterates: 'the expense is to be paid to these men from the royal revenue.' The emphatic form (niphqeta) indicates the definite expense, the specific outlay being discussed.

(2×) Both instances come from Darius's decree ensuring financial support for temple reconstruction. Ezra 6:4 details building specifications, then adds: 'Let the expense (niphqeta) be given from the house of the king'—the Persian treasury will cover costs. Verse 8 reinforces this with administrative detail: 'Moreover, I make a decree... that the expense (ve-niphqeta) be paid to these men in full and without delay from the royal revenue.' The paired references create legal redundancy—first authorizing payment, then specifying its prompt and complete execution. The Aramaic term is cognate with Hebrew 'yatsa' (go out)—expense as 'outgo' or outlay. The definite/emphatic form in both cases shows this is 'the expense' specifically related to the temple project, not just any costs. GAIN AND GREED en: and-the-expense, expense | es: el-gasto, y-el-gasto | fr: [ונפקתא], [נפקתא] | de: [ונפקתא], [נפקתא] Ezra 6:4; Ezra 6:8

נָפַשׁ H5314 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3ms (3×)
to take breath, refresh oneself; Niphal of נָפַשׁ
This denominative verb, derived from the noun 'nephesh' (breath, life, soul), means to breathe deeply, take breath, or refresh oneself after exertion. The Law commands rest on the seventh day 'so that your ox and donkey may rest, and the son of your maidservant may be refreshed' (Exodus 23:12). Exodus 31:17 uses striking anthropomorphic language: God himself 'was refreshed' after six days of creation. When David and his exhausted men reach the Jordan after fleeing Absalom, they stop and 'refresh themselves' (2 Samuel 16:14). The verb captures that deep restorative breathing after labor or stress.

(3×) Two Exodus passages link refreshment to Sabbath rest—both for laborers and, remarkably, for God himself after creation (31:17). The anthropomorphism startled some ancient interpreters, yet it affirms creation's genuine costliness. David's refreshment (2 Samuel 16:14) is more literal: battle-weary troops catching their breath. Multilingual renderings emphasize renewal: 'reposó' (rested), 'se-refresque' (be refreshed). The Niphal reflexive stem highlights the self-directed nature—one actively takes breath for oneself rather than merely ceasing activity. REST AND REFRESHMENT en: and-he-refreshed-himself, and-may-be-refreshed, and-was-refreshed | es: y-reposó, y-se-refrescaron, y-se-refresque | fr: et-il-refreshed-lui-même, et-puisse-être-refreshed, et-était-refreshed | de: und-er-refreshed-sich-selbst, und-moege-sein-refreshed, und-war-refreshed Exod 23:12; Exod 31:17; 2Sam 16:14

נֶפֶשׁ H5315 Prep-b / N-fpc / 2mp (756×)
Soul, life, self, person; the breathing inner being — seat of desire, emotion, and vital existence
Perhaps the richest anthropological term in the Hebrew Bible, nephesh encompasses the entire animated person — from the breath of life God breathed into Adam (Gen 2:7) to the desperate cry 'my soul thirsts for God' (Ps 42:2). It resists neat translation: Korean splits it between 영혼 ('soul') and 생명 ('life'), Swahili between nafsi ('inner self') and uhai ('vitality'), and Spanish between alma and vida. In legal texts it simply means 'person' — a counted head. At its root, nephesh is whatever makes a creature alive, wanting, and present in the world.

1. soul, inner being (646×) The immaterial inner self or soul (647x) — the seat of emotions, will, and spiritual life. Korean 영혼 and Swahili nafsi consistently mark this core sense. Gen 49:6 ('let my soul not enter their council') and Ps 42:1 show nephesh as the conscious, feeling self that relates to God and others. This is the dominant sense across nearly all genres. SOUL AND LIFE
en: my-soul, soul-my | es: alma-de-mí, alma-mía, mi-alma | fr: mon-âme, âme-mon | de: mein-Seele, meine-Seele Gen 12:13; Gen 27:4; Gen 27:25; Gen 32:30; Gen 49:6

2. life, vitality (94×) Physical life or vital existence (94x) that can be risked, lost, or saved. Korean 생명/목숨 and Swahili uhai/maisha distinguish this from the inner-self sense. Exod 21:23 ('life for life') and Exod 4:19 ('those who sought your life') show nephesh as the stake in mortal danger — something concretely at risk rather than an interior state. SOUL AND LIFE
en: his-appetite, his-life, his-soul | es: alma-de-el, alma-mía, mi-alma | fr: mon-vie, son-âme | de: mein-Leben, sein-Seele, seine-Seele Exod 4:19; Exod 21:23; Exod 21:30; Deut 19:21

3. desire, appetite, will (9×) Desire, appetite, or volitional craving (9x). Korean 소원/뜻 and Swahili tamaa/hamu isolate this appetitive meaning. Gen 23:8 ('if it is your desire') and Deut 23:24 ('eat grapes to your desire') show nephesh as the wanting faculty — what the self reaches for, whether food, possession, or a loved one (Gen 34:3, 8). SOUL AND LIFE
en: as-your-desire, his-soul, to-desire-of | es: a-alma-de, a-su-voluntad, al-deseo-de | fr: comme-ton-desire, dans-âme, son-âme | de: Wille, dein-Seele, in-Seele Gen 23:8; Gen 34:3; Gen 34:8; Deut 21:14; Deut 23:24

4. person, individual (5×) A person or individual as a countable unit (5x), especially in legal and census contexts. Korean 사람 and Spanish persona mark this impersonal usage. Lev 27:2 ('the valuation of persons') and Deut 24:7 ('kidnapping a person') treat nephesh as a human head to be enumerated or legislated about, stripped of its emotive connotations. SOUL AND LIFE
en: creature, person, persons | es: alma, de-almas, persona | fr: créature, person, persons | de: creature, person, persons Lev 11:10; Lev 11:46; Lev 27:2; Deut 24:7

5. (1×) Breath or life-breath (1x at Job 41:21), describing the fiery exhalation of Leviathan. English 'his breath' and Spanish 'su aliento' capture the physical respiratory image. This rare usage preserves the etymological link between nephesh and naphash ('to breathe'), grounding the abstract soul-concept in concrete respiration. SOUL AND LIFE
en: His-breath | es: Su-aliento | fr: son-âme-lui | de: seine-Seele Job 41:21

6. (1×) The animating principle that constitutes a living being (1x at Gen 2:7), where God breathes into Adam and he becomes a 'living nephesh.' French dans-âme and German zu-einer-Seele point to the transformative moment: not a soul entering a body, but dust becoming an ensouled creature. This foundational verse anchors the entire semantic range. SOUL AND LIFE en: into-soul | es: para-alma | fr: dans-âme | de: zu-einer-Seele Gen 2:7

נֹפַת H5316 Art / N-fs (1×)
the heights, elevated region (textually uncertain, possibly 'Naphath')
Joshua 17:11 lists towns assigned to Manasseh within other tribes' territories: Beth-shean, Ibleam, Dor, Endor, Taanach, Megiddo 'and the heights' (or 'Naphath'). The Hebrew text is uncertain—possibly 'the Napheth' (a place name) or 'the heights.' BDB suggests possible textual corruption from the preceding 'Naphoth-dor' (heights of Dor). The Septuagint variations show ancient translators puzzled. Whether this is a place name or a topographical term ('the hill-country'), it describes part of Manasseh's complex territorial holdings scattered through other tribal areas.

(1×) This noun with article in Joshua 17:11 is textually and lexically challenging. Spanish 'las alturas' (the heights) treats it as a common noun, while some English versions render 'Napheth' as a proper noun. The word may be corrupt, related to the preceding Naphoth-dor, or may denote elevated terrain. Septuagint variants (Mapheta, Nopheth) show uncertainty in ancient transmission. The geographical context involves Manasseh's enclaves in areas assigned to Issachar and Asher. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-heights | es: las-alturas | fr: le-heights | de: der-heights Josh 17:11

נֹפֶת H5317 Conj-w / N-ms (5×)
flowing honey, honey dripping from the comb; used figuratively of sweet words or kisses Designates honey in its most naturally appealing form — fresh, dripping straight from the comb. French 'miel vierge' ('virgin honey') and 'rayon de miel' ('honeycomb') beautifully capture the unprocessed purity implied. The word appears in wisdom literature as a standard of sweetness: God's judgments are sweeter than nopheth (Ps 19:10), and the full person spurns it (Prov 27:7). It also serves as a potent figure for dangerously seductive speech (Prov 5:3) and the beloved's honeyed lips (Song 4:11).

(5×) Literal flowing honey or honey dripping naturally from the comb, representing the finest quality of sweetness. French 'miel vierge' and Spanish 'panal' highlight the unprocessed, comb-fresh character. Psalm 19:10 pairs it with devash as a superlative comparison for the sweetness of God's ordinances. Proverbs 24:13 commends

it as good, while Proverbs 27:7 notes that even nopheth is loathsome to the sated. HONEY SWEET FOOD

en: and-dripping-of-honeycomb, and-drippings-of, dripping | es: Panal, miel, panal | fr: De-miel-vierge, et-rayon-de-miel, rayon-de-miel | de: [ונפת], [נפת], und-drippings-von Ps 19:10; Prov 5:3; Prov 24:13; Prov 27:7; Song 4:11

נֶפְתּוֹחַ H5318 N-proper-fs (2×)

Nephtoah; spring on Judah-Benjamin border, possibly modern Lifta

This place name appears only in the phrase 'waters of Nephtoah,' designating a spring on the boundary between Judah and Benjamin. Both Joshua passages describe tribal borders passing by this water source. Traditionally identified with the spring at Lifta, northwest of Jerusalem, the site marked a significant geographical reference point in the land division. The name itself may relate to 'opening' or 'flowing,' appropriate for a spring. The Septuagint preserves various forms of the name, confirming its role as a known boundary marker.

(2×) This spring features in the detailed border descriptions of Joshua's land allotments. Joshua 15:9 traces Judah's northern boundary: 'the boundary extends from the top of the mountain to the spring of the waters of Nephtoah (me-nephtoakh), and from there to the cities of Mount Ephron.' Joshua 18:15 describes Benjamin's border from the southern perspective, passing by the same landmark. The 'waters of Nephtoah' served as a fixed, recognizable point for demarcating tribal territory—springs being permanent features in the landscape. Modern identification with Lifta spring (near Jerusalem's northwest) fits the geographic sequence in both passages. The repetition in both tribal descriptions shows how shared border points were recorded from both sides' perspectives. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nephtoach | es: Neftoaj | fr: Nephtoach | de: Nephtoach Josh 15:9; Josh 18:15

נַפְתּוּלִים H5319 N-mpc (1×)

wrestlings (pl.); intense struggles or contests, especially divine or mighty conflicts

This rare plural noun appears only once in Genesis 30:8, where Rachel declares she has had 'wrestlings of God' with her sister—a Hebrew idiom meaning 'mighty wrestlings' or 'divine-scale struggles.' The genitive construction intensifies the wrestling imagery, suggesting conflicts of extraordinary intensity. The term derives from a root meaning to twist or grapple, capturing the visceral nature of Rachel's competition with Leah for children and status in Jacob's household.

(1×) Intense physical or metaphorical struggles described as 'of God' to emphasize their magnitude. Genesis 30:8 uses this construction to characterize Rachel's intense rivalry with her sister Leah as a contest of divine proportions. The Spanish 'luchas de' and German 'Ringkämpfe' both preserve the wrestling imagery, while the multilingual evidence shows translators recognize this as a superlative idiom rather than literal divine wrestling. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: wrestlings-of | es: luchas-de | fr: wrestlings-de | de: Ringkämpfe Gen 30:8

נַפְתֻּחִים H5320 N-proper-ms (2×)

Naphtuhim; descendant of Mizraim (Egypt), possibly representing Lower Egypt

This ethnic or geographic name appears in the Table of Nations as a descendant of Mizraim (Egypt). Genesis 10:13 and 1 Chronicles 1:11 both list Naphtuhim among Egypt's sons—representing peoples or regions associated with Egypt. Scholars have connected this name to Egyptian 'p't-m-ḥw' (the northern land), designating Lower Egypt. The Septuagint rendering and various scholarly proposals reflect uncertainty about the exact identification, but the association with the Egyptian sphere is clear from the genealogical context.

(2×) Both occurrences list Naphtuhim in the genealogy of Ham's line through Mizraim (Egypt). Genesis 10:13 states: 'Mizraim fathered Ludim, Anamim, Lehabim, Naphtuhim...' The parallel in 1 Chronicles 1:11 reproduces the same list with minor variations. In the Table of Nations, these 'descendants' often represent peoples, tribes, or regions rather than individuals. If Naphtuhim derives from Egyptian 'the northern land,' it would represent Lower Egypt or the Nile Delta region as part of Egypt's sphere. The Septuagint's various renderings (Nephthal[e]im, Nephthoseim) show ancient translators recognized this as a geographic-ethnic designation. The placement among Egyptian-related groups confirms this as part of Hamitic North African geography. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Naphtuchim, Naphtuhim | es: Naftujim, Naftujím | fr: Naphtuhim, [נפתחים] | de: [נפתחים], die-Naftuchiter Gen 10:13; 1Chr 1:11

נַפְתָּלִי H5321 Conj-w (51×)

Naphtali — the sixth son of Jacob (by Bilhah), and the Israelite tribe and territory bearing his name

Naphtali ('my wrestling,' from the wordplay in Gen 30:8 where Rachel declares 'with mighty wrestlings I have wrestled with my sister') designates both Jacob's second son by Bilhah and the tribe descended from him, whose allotment stretched through the lush highlands of upper Galilee. Across 51 occurrences, the name appears in genealogies (Gen 35:25; 46:24; 1 Chr 2:2), the tribal census and camp arrangements of Numbers (Num 1:42; 2:29; 10:27), the territorial descriptions of Joshua (Josh 19:32-39; 20:7), and prophetic oracles — notably Isaiah's promise that 'the land of Naphtali' will see a great light (Isa 9:1), a passage Matthew applies to Jesus' Galilean ministry (Matt 4:15). Spanish 'Neftali,' French 'Nephthali,' German 'Naftali' all transliterate the name directly.

Naphtali (tribe/person) (51×) The proper name Naphtali, covering the patriarch (Gen 30:8; 35:25; 46:24; 49:21), the tribe descended from him as an administrative and military unit (Judg 1:33; 4:6, 10; 5:18; Deut 33:23), and the tribal territory in northern Canaan centered around Kedesh-Naphtali (Josh 19:32-39; 20:7). Isaiah 9:1 [8:23] transforms the name into an eschatological marker — the 'land of Naphtali' that will be honored after its humiliation by Assyria (2 Kgs 15:29). All 51 occurrences refer to this single patriarchal-tribal-territorial complex, with BDB noting the possible original sense 'crafty one' alongside the folk etymology of Genesis 30:8. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Naphtali | es: Naftali, Naftalí, Neftalí | fr: Nephthali | de: Naftali, Naftalis Gen 30:8; Gen 35:25; Gen 46:24; Gen 49:21; Exod 1:4

נֵץ H5322a N-msc / 3fs (1×)

blossom, bloom; the flowering part of a plant, specifically of a grapevine

This noun appears only once in Genesis 40:10 in Pharaoh's cupbearer's dream, where the vine 'was as though it budded, its blossoms shot forth.' The word captures the moment when flowers emerge on a grapevine, that brief stage between budding and fruit formation. The Hebrew preserves a feminine suffix ('its blossom'), personalizing the vine's fertility. This botanical precision in dream imagery would have been significant for interpreting agricultural omens in ancient Egypt.

(1×) The flowering stage of a plant, particularly the grapevine in Genesis 40:10. The cross-linguistic glosses 'flor'/'fleur'/'Blüte' confirm the botanical meaning. The dream sequence moves from budding to blossoming to ripening grapes, with this term marking the middle stage. The feminine possessive suffix ('its blossom') emphasizes the vine's generative power as it transitions toward fruit-bearing. FLOWERS AND BLOSSOMS

en: blossom-its | es: flor-suya | fr: fleur-son | de: seine-Blüte Gen 40:10

נֵץ H5322b Art / N-ms (3×)

hawk, a bird of prey; generic term including hawks and falcons

This noun designates the hawk family, classified as unclean birds in Leviticus 11:16 and Deuteronomy 14:15 (both adding 'according to its kind,' indicating multiple species). Job 39:26 celebrates the hawk's instinctive migration: 'Does the hawk soar by your wisdom and spread its wings toward the south?' The reference captures the hawk's seasonal flight from Palestine to warmer regions. Ancient naturalists recognized multiple raptor species under this term. The hawk exemplifies wild, untamable creatures that operate by divine instinct rather than human training—soaring beyond our control yet within God's design.

(3×) The dietary laws group the hawk with eagles, vultures, and other raptors as ritually unclean—perhaps because they feed on carrion or blood. Job's poetic reference shifts from prohibition to admiration: the hawk's migratory wisdom testifies to the Creator's design embedded in creation. Cross-linguistic translations are straightforward (gavilán, hawk, halcón), all denoting the same recognizable bird family. The phrase 'according to its kind' acknowledges multiple hawk species, from small sparrowhawks to larger falcons. EAGLE VULTURE RAPTOR

en: the-hawk | es: el-gavilán, halcón | fr: le-hawk, [נץ] | de: [נץ], der-hawk Lev 11:16; Deut 14:15; Job 39:26

נָצָא H5323 V-Qal-InfAbs (1×)

to fly; movement through the air with wings (infinitive absolute)

This verb appears in Jeremiah 48:9 in a difficult textual context commanding Moab to 'fly away' or escape. The ancient versions struggled with the form, with Targum and Symmachus suggesting alternative readings. The infinitive absolute construction intensifies the command—not just 'go' but 'fly away completely.' The image evokes rapid escape like a bird fleeing danger, appropriate for Jeremiah's oracle of judgment against Moab. Scholars debate whether this represents a genuine Hebrew verb or a textual corruption.

(1×) To move through the air by flying, used metaphorically for rapid escape. Jeremiah 48:9 uses this verb to command Moab's urgent flight from coming destruction. While English and Spanish preserve 'flying'/'volando', French and German transliterate the uncertain Hebrew root, reflecting scholarly caution about this rare form. The infinitive absolute suggests emphatic or continuous action—not just flying but flying away completely. FLYING AND FLIGHT

en: flying | es: volando | fr: [נצא] | de: [נצא] Jer 48:9

נָצַב H5324 V-Hifil-Perf-3cp (75×)

To stand, station oneself, take one's stand (Nifal); to set up, erect, establish (Hifil); as participle, an officer or governor.

Natsab captures the full spectrum of standing — from the simple physical posture of being upright, through the deliberate act of erecting a pillar or monument, to the administrative sense of a stationed official. Jacob sees a ladder 'set up' on earth with its top reaching heaven (Gen 28:12), three men 'stand' before Abraham at Mamre (Gen 18:2), and Solomon's governors are 'stationed' over the districts of Israel (1 Kgs 4:7). The Semitic cognates illuminate the word's ancient material culture: Arabic naṣaba means 'to erect' a tent pole, waymark, or memorial stele, and Phoenician nṣb appears on monuments with exactly this 'set up' meaning. From physical uprightness comes metaphorical firmness — what is 'set up' is also 'established' and endures.

1. Nifal: stand, be standing (42×) Nifal intransitive: to stand, be standing, station oneself — the dominant sense at 42 occurrences. Covers physical posture in narrative: three men stand before Abraham (Gen 18:2), Rebekah stands by the spring (Gen 24:43), Joseph's sheaf stands upright in his dream (Gen 37:7), and the LORD stands above the ladder at Bethel (Gen 28:13). Spanish de pie and German standen both map to simple standing posture. The Nifal here functions as a true middle voice — the subject places himself in an upright position. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING

en: am-standing, standing, stands | es: de-pie, el-puesto, estaba-de-pie | fr: debout, furent-debout, le-un-debout | de: aufgestellt, stand, standen Gen 18:2; Gen 24:13; Gen 24:43; Gen 28:13; Gen 37:7

2. Hifil: set up, erect, station (19×) Hifil causative: to set up, erect, or station someone or something in place — 19 occurrences focused on deliberate establishment of physical objects or persons. Abraham sets up the seven ewe lambs (Gen 21:28), Jacob erects a pillar (Gen 35:14, 35:20), and Samuel stations the people before the LORD (1 Sam 10:19). Arabic naṣaba ('erect a tent pole or marker') and French dresser ('raise upright') both capture the vertical causative action. The Phoenician cognate on memorial inscriptions confirms the ancient Near Eastern cultural resonance of 'setting up' sacred stones. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-he-made-stand, and-he-set-up-, and-set | es: Y-erigió, Y-levantaron, Y-puso | fr: dresser, et-dresser, et-il-placer-en-haut- | de: [הצירבן], [הצירי], du-aufgestellt-hast Gen 21:28; Gen 21:29; Gen 33:20; Gen 35:14; Gen 35:20

3. Nifal: officer, overseer, governor (8×) Nifal participle lexicalized as a noun: an officer, overseer, or stationed governor — 8 occurrences, all in administrative contexts. Solomon's nitstsavim govern the twelve districts of Israel (1 Kgs 4:7, 4:27), supply provisions for the royal table (1 Kgs 4:5), and oversee forced labor (1 Kgs 5:16). The metaphorical path from 'one who stands/is stationed' to 'an official with a post' is transparent. Arabic wakīl ('deputy, agent') and German Statthalter ('governor') both select administrative vocabulary, confirming this is a fully substantivized sense, not just a participle in context. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: governors, stationed, the-governors | es: gobernadores, los-gobernadores, los-oficiales | fr: [הנצבים], gouverneurs, le-gouverneurs | de: Statthalter, [הנצבים], der-Statthalter 1Sam 19:20; 1Kgs 4:5; 1Kgs 4:7; 1Kgs 4:27; 1Kgs 5:16

4. Hofal: be set up, be decreed (3×) Hofal passive: to be set up, erected, or decreed — 3 occurrences where something has been established by an outside agent. Jacob's ladder is 'set up' reaching heaven (Gen 28:12), the pillar 'set up' at the Millo coronation of Abimelech (Judg 9:6), and Nineveh's decree is 'established' (Nah 2:7). Spanish puesta ('placed') and French dressa (passive) confirm the passive reading. The Hofal links the concrete 'erected' (a ladder, a pillar) to the abstract 'decreed' (a royal pronouncement), showing how physical establishment metaphorically grounds institutional authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-it-is-decreed, pillar, set-up | es: Y-ella-puesta, pilar, puesta | fr: colonne, dressa, et-dresser | de: Saeule, aufgestellt, und-aufgestellt Gen 28:12; Judg 9:6; Nah 2:7

5. Hifil: establish, make firm (2×) Hifil abstract-causative: to establish or make firm — 2 occurrences where the erecting is figurative rather than physical. David goes to 'establish' his monument at the Euphrates (1 Chr 18:3), and God 'will establish' the boundary of the widow (Prov 15:25). Arabic yuthabbitu ('make firm, consolidate') captures the metaphorical firmness that distinguishes this from the concrete pillar-erecting of sense 2. The shift from setting up a physical object to confirming an abstract boundary or claim marks this as a genuine semantic extension. RISING AND DAWNING

en: but-He-will-establish, to-establish | es: para-establecer, y-establecerá | fr: [להציב], et-ויצב | de: [להציב], und-aufgestellt 1Chr 18:3; Prov 15:25

6. (1×) A single Nifal occurrence at Ps 119:89 where the sense is 'be established, stand firm' applied to God's word in the heavens — 'Forever, O LORD, your word is established in heaven.' Spanish está firme ('stands firm') and German ist gegründet ('is founded') both select permanence and cosmic stability vocabulary. This may represent either an extension of sense 1 (standing in cosmic space) or a stative variant of sense 5 (being established), but its unique theological register — the eternal fixedness of divine speech — warrants noting as a distinct attestation. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING

en: is-established | es: está-firme | fr: se-tenir | de: ist-gegründet Ps 119:89

נֶצֶב H5325 Art / N-ms (1×)

handle, hilt; the grip portion of a sword where the blade is fixed

This noun appears in Judges 3:22 in the dramatic account of Ehud's assassination of King Eglon. After Ehud thrusts his sword into the obese king, even the handle goes in after the blade. The term comes from a root meaning to stand or set, referring to the part where the blade is set or fixed. Arabic cognates confirm this refers specifically to the handle or hilt. This graphic detail emphasizes both the length of Ehud's blade and the king's corpulence—the entire weapon disappeared into the wound.

(1×) The handle or hilt of a sword, the part grasped by the hand. In Judges 3:22, this refers to the grip portion that followed the blade into King Eglon's body. The multilingual glosses consistently indicate 'handle'/'empuñadura', though some transliterate the rare Hebrew term. The Arabic parallel ṣafīḥah meaning 'knife handle in which the shank is set' confirms the technical vocabulary of weaponry. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: the-handle | es: la-empuñadura | fr: le-handle | de: der-handle Judg 3:22

נִצְבָּה H5326 N-fsd (1×)

firmness, stability; the quality of being solid, strong, or enduring

This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel 2:41, describing the mixed kingdom represented by iron and clay in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The clay prevents the iron from having 'firmness' or stability—the kingdom will lack cohesion and strength. The term relates to a verb meaning to stand firm or be established. In the symbolic interpretation, this instability explains why the empire will be partly strong (iron) and partly brittle (clay), unable to maintain unified strength. The emphatic Aramaic form underscores this critical weakness.

(1×) The quality of stability, strength, or structural integrity. Daniel 2:41 uses this term to describe what the divided kingdom will lack—the iron component cannot provide firmness when mixed with clay. French 'force' and Spanish 'firmeza' capture the sense of structural strength. The context emphasizes that partial strength without cohesion results in fundamental weakness, a prophetic comment on political fragmentation. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: firmness-of | es: la-firmeza-de | fr: force | de: [נצבתא] Dan 2:41

נָצָה H5327a Prep-b / V-Hifil-Inf / 3mp (8×)

To struggle, strive, or quarrel; physical or verbal conflict between parties.

A verb denoting physical wrestling or contentious striving between opposing parties, appearing in both Niphal (reciprocal struggle) and Hiphil (engaging in conflict against someone). Its earliest use describes Moses witnessing two Hebrews fighting (Exod 2:13), and it governs key legal casuistry – the law of injury to a pregnant woman during a brawl (Exod 21:22) and the biting regulation of Deuteronomy 25:11. The range of translations – Spanish contendieron, French combattant, German fighting – consistently points to physical altercation rather than mere verbal dispute.

struggle, strive, quarrel (8×) To engage in physical or verbal conflict with another party, whether reciprocally (Niphal) or aggressively against someone (Hiphil). The Niphal captures mutual struggle: two men fighting (Exod 2:13; 21:22; Deut 25:11), an Israelite and a foreigner's son brawling in the camp (Lev 24:10), and two brothers struggling in a field (2 Sam 14:6). The Hiphil appears in Num 26:9 for Korah's rebellion striving against Moses and Aaron, and in the psalm title of Ps 60:2 for David's military engagement against Aram. French combattant ('fighting') and Spanish contendieron ('they contended') confirm the core meaning of active physical confrontation. FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: and-they-quarreled, and-they-strove, contended | es: al-contender-ellos, contendieron, cuando-luchó | fr: combattant, combattre, contesta | de: contended, fighting, in-ihr-contending Exod 2:13; Exod 21:22; Lev 24:10; Num 26:9

נָצָה H5327b V-Qal-Imperf-3fp (3×)

to fall in ruins, be ruined; used of destroyed cities

This verb describes cities falling into ruined heaps. Jeremiah warns that Judah's 'cities shall fall in ruins without inhabitant' (Jeremiah 4:7). The parallel accounts in 2 Kings 19:25 and Isaiah 37:26 use the Niphal participle 'ruined heaps' to describe fortified cities reduced to rubble by Assyrian conquest—fulfilling God's ancient purpose. The imagery is of walls collapsing into piles of stone, habitations becoming desolation. The verb conveys not mere abandonment but violent reduction to wreckage—the opposite of fortification and habitation.

(3×) All three instances portray urban destruction through military judgment. Jeremiah prophesies coming desolation, while the Isaiah/Kings parallels reflect on past Assyrian devastation. The Niphal participle 'ruined heaps' (גַּלִּים נְצִיִּים) combines two ruin-words for intensified effect. Multilingual renderings focus on ruin and destruction: 'destruidas' (destroyed), 'ruinas' (ruins). The verb captures the archaeological reality visible throughout the ancient Near East—once-great cities reduced to tells (ruin mounds) awaiting excavation. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: of-ruins, ruined, shall-be-ruined | es: de-ruinas, ruinas, serán-destruidas | fr: [נצים], [תצינה], ruined | de: [נצים], [תצינה], ruined 2Kgs 19:25; Isa 37:26; Jer 4:7

נְצָה H5328 N-fs (2×)

blossom, flower; early bloom or bud of vine/olive

This feminine noun designates a blossom or flower, particularly the early bloom of grapevines or olive trees. In Job 15:33, Eliphaz warns that the wicked will 'cast off his blossom like the olive tree'—losing fruit before it matures. Isaiah 18:5 describes the timing of judgment: 'when the blossom is over and the flower becomes a ripening grape.' The term captures that vulnerable stage between flowering and fruit-bearing when loss means no harvest. Some scholars suggest it could mean the small berry-cluster that forms after the flower, but blossom/bud remains the dominant interpretation.

(2×) Both passages use vineyard imagery for vulnerable, premature loss. Job 15:33 employs dual metaphors for the wicked's fate: 'He will shake off his unripe grape like the vine, and cast off his blossom (nitzato) like the olive tree.' The parallel suggests fruit lost at two stages—grapes before ripening, olives at the blossom stage. Either way, there's no harvest. Isaiah 18:5 times divine intervention: 'For before the harvest, when the blossom (nitzah) is over, and the flower becomes a ripening grape, he will cut off the shoots with pruning hooks.' Judgment comes just as hope appears—after flowering but before fruition. Genesis 40:10 (where some scholars emend to nitzatah) would add a third witness: the vine in Pharaoh's cupbearer's dream budding and blossoming. The term sits at that critical juncture between flower and fruit. FLOWERS AND BLOSSOMS

en: blossom-its, bud | es: brote, su-flor | fr: [נצה], son-נצהו-lui | de: [נצה], [נצהו] Job 15:33; Isa 18:5

נָצַח H5329 V-Piel-Prtcpl-mp (65×)

Choirmaster or musical director (Piel ptcp.); to oversee or supervise work (Piel); enduring, perpetual (Nifal ptcp.).

Best known from the Psalm titles — lamnatseach, 'to the choirmaster' — this verb root natsach carries the core meaning of eminence and endurance. In its Piel participial form, it appears over fifty times at the head of psalms as a technical musical term, directing performance to the worship leader. Spanish al director, French au chef de musique, and German dem Chorleiter all capture this liturgical office. Beyond music, the Piel extends to general oversight: Levitical supervisors 'direct' (menatschim) temple construction in Chronicles. A single Nifal occurrence in Jeremiah 8:5 preserves the root's deeper sense of duration — a 'perpetual' (nitsachat) backsliding that will not relent.

1. choirmaster, musical director (Piel ptcp.) (56×) The Piel participle used as a substantive in 56 psalm superscriptions: lamnatseach, 'to the choirmaster' or 'for the music director.' This is the most frequent and recognizable use, functioning as a technical liturgical rubric. Spanish al director, French au chef de musique, and Korean indobajayege ('to the conductor') all identify a specific worship leader responsible for performance. Habakkuk 3:19 uses the same form outside the Psalter, confirming it as a recognized office rather than a mere scribal notation. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: to-the-choirmaster | es: Al-director, al-director | fr: à-au-chef-de-musique | de: zu-der-dem-Chorleiter Ps 4:1; Ps 5:1; Ps 6:1; Ps 8:1; Ps 9:1

2. oversee, direct, supervise (Piel) (8×) The Piel infinitive and participle meaning 'to oversee, direct, or supervise,' applied to construction and administrative work rather than music. First Chronicles 23:4 assigns 24,000 Levites 'to oversee' (lenatseach) the work of the temple, and 2 Chronicles 2:2, 2:18, 34:12-13 use the plural participle menatschim for foremen and supervisors. Spanish capataces ('foremen'), French diriger ('to direct'), and the contextual pairing with temple building distinguish this managerial sense from

the musical one. OVERSEER APPOINTED OFFICER
en: and-overseeing, and-overseers, overseers | es: capataces, para-dirigir, para-supervisar | fr: diriger, et-diriger | de: [ומנצחים], [לנצח], [מנצחים] 1Chr 15:21; 1Chr 23:4; 2Chr 2:2; 2Chr 2:18; 2Chr 34:12

3. perpetual, enduring (Nifal ptcp.) (1×) A sole Nifal participle feminine in Jeremiah 8:5: meshuvah nitsachat, 'perpetual backsliding.' Here the root's underlying sense of endurance and permanence surfaces — not leadership but unceasing duration. Spanish perpetua and the contextual meaning of 'unrelenting apostasy' set this apart from both the musical and supervisory senses. The Nifal passive voice suggests a quality that persists of its own momentum. ETERNITY AND AGES
en: backsliding | es: perpetua | fr: [נצחת] | de: [נצחת] Jer 8:5

נָצָה H5330 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-ms (1×)
to distinguish oneself; to show oneself superior or exceptional in ability or character
This Aramaic Hithpael verb appears in Daniel 6:3, where Daniel 'distinguished himself' above the other officials because of his exceptional spirit. The reflexive form suggests active self-demonstration rather than passive recognition—Daniel's qualities made themselves evident through his conduct and competence. The verb implies standing out from peers through superior ability. This distinction provoked the jealousy that led to the lions' den conspiracy, as mediocre officials resented Daniel's excellence.

(1×) To show oneself as distinguished or superior, to excel beyond one's peers. Daniel 6:3 uses this participle to describe how Daniel continuously demonstrated exceptional qualities that set him apart from the other administrators. Spanish 'distinguiéndose' captures the reflexive nature—Daniel was distinguishing himself through his actions. The preposition 'over' indicates this distinction was comparative and visible to all. CHOSEN AND ELECT en: distinguishing-himself | es: distinguiéndose | fr: couleur | de: [מתנצח] Dan 6:3

נֶצַח H5331 Art (43×)
Perpetuity, forever; eminence, glory; endurance; victory – a word spanning time, majesty, and triumph.
Netsach is one of Hebrew's richest theological nouns, braiding together ideas that English must split across multiple words. Its overwhelming use (39 of 43 occurrences) is temporal: la-netsach means 'forever, in perpetuity,' the adverbial phrase shadowing so many psalmic laments and promises. But the root carries eminence and strength that surface in three remarkable singular occurrences: Samuel calls God 'the Glory of Israel' (1 Sam 15:29), Jeremiah's poet mourns lost 'endurance' (Lam 3:18), and the Chronicler lists 'the victory' among God's attributes (1 Chr 29:11). The LXX's rendering as nikos ('victory') in certain Psalm superscriptions influenced the tradition of reading la-menatseach as 'for the choirmaster/victor.'

1. perpetuity, forever (39×) The dominant temporal-adverbial sense: perpetuity, forever, everlastingly. Almost always preceded by the preposition lamed (la-netsach) or ad (ad-netsach), it functions as a time adverb in psalmic lament ('Will you forget me forever?' Ps 13:1), prophetic judgment ('perpetual desolations,' Ps 74:3), and wisdom teaching (Prov 21:28). Spanish para siempre, German ewiglich, and French pour toujours all converge on unbounded duration. The 39 occurrences are spread across Job, Psalms, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Amos, making this one of the Bible's most common words for eternity. ETERNITY AND AGES
en: forever | es: para-perpetuidad, para-siempre, para-siempre? | fr: pour-toujours, à-perpétuité | de: ewiglich, fuer-immer 2Sam 2:26; Job 4:20; Job 14:20; Job 20:7; Job 23:7

2. endurance, lasting strength (1×) Personal endurance or lasting strength, found only in Lam 3:18 where the poet cries 'my endurance (nitschi) has perished.' The pronominal suffix personalizes the abstract concept – this is not cosmic perpetuity but one person's capacity to endure, now shattered. Spanish mi fortaleza ('my fortitude') captures the embodied quality. The BDB lexicon connects this to the root meaning of 'sap of life,' suggesting vitality that sustains through suffering. POWER AND MIRACLES
en: my-endurance | es: mi-fortaleza | fr: pour-toujours | de: [נצחי] Lam 3:18

3. glory, eminence (1×) Divine eminence or glory, a hapax-like sense in 1 Sam 15:29 where Samuel declares that 'the Eminence of Israel will not lie or change his mind.' Here netsach is a divine epithet paralleling hod ('majesty') and tiferet ('splendor'). The term emphasizes God's unchanging, transcendent preeminence. The LXX's diamerismos is puzzling, but later tradition reads this as a title of confidence: the God who endures forever is also the God of surpassing glory. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Glory-of | es: Eternidad-de | fr: Glory-de | de: Glory-von 1Sam 15:29

4. end, completeness (1×) End or completeness, appearing once in Job 34:36 where Elihu expresses a wish that Job be tested 'to the end' (ad netsach). Here the temporal sense shades into finality – not endless duration but the conclusion of a process. German Ewigkeit and French perpetuite are stretched to cover this, but the contextual meaning is closer to 'thoroughly, to completion.' Some scholars read this as a variant of the temporal sense, but the emphasis on termination rather than continuation marks it as distinct. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-end | es: fin | fr: perpétuité | de: Ewigkeit Job 34:36

5. victory, triumph (1×) Victory or triumph, a single occurrence in 1 Chr 29:11 within David's great doxology: 'Yours, O LORD, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory (ha-netsach), and the majesty.' This reading, supported by the LXX's nikos and the Vulgate's victoria, influenced the Christian reading of 1 Cor 15:54-55 ('Death is swallowed up in victory'). Spanish la victoria and English 'the victory' both treat this as a martial-doxological term distinct from temporal perpetuity. VICTORY TRIUMPH
en: and-the-victory | es: y-la-victoria | fr: [והנצח] | de: [והנצח] 1Chr 29:11

נֻצָּה H5332 N-msc / 3mp (2×)
lifeblood, gore; blood as life-essence (metaphorical juice)
This masculine noun with suffix means lifeblood or gore—blood viewed metaphorically as the juice or vital fluid of life. Both occurrences appear in Isaiah 63's dramatic vision of God treading the winepress of judgment. Verse 3 declares, 'I trod them in my anger... and their lifeblood spattered on my garments.' Verse 6 continues, 'I made them drunk in my wrath, and I poured out their lifeblood on the earth.' The word literally means 'juice' (particularly grape juice), but here it's a graphic metaphor for human blood viewed as the liquid essence that flows out in violent death.

(2×) Both uses come from Isaiah's intense winepress metaphor for divine judgment against the nations. In 63:3, God describes treading enemies like grapes: 'I trampled them in my anger and trod them down in my wrath; their lifeblood (nitzakham) spattered on my garments, and stained all my apparel.' The imagery is deliberately shocking—human blood as grape juice in the press. Verse 6 extends the metaphor: 'I made them drunk in my wrath and poured out their lifeblood (nitzakham) on the earth.' The choice of 'nitzakh' (juice, gore) rather than 'dam' (blood) intensifies the winepress comparison—these are crushed like grapes, their vital fluid flowing out. The suffix 'their juice/gore' makes it intensely personal and plural, the collective lifeblood of nations. This is among Scripture's most violent imagery, deliberately reversing wine as blessing into wine as judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: their-lifeblood | es: su-jugo | fr: [נצחם] | de: [נצחם] Isa 63:3; Isa 63:6

נְצִיב H5333 Conj-w / N-msc (12×)
A garrison, military outpost; also a governor or appointed official; rarely, a standing pillar or column.
Netsiv spans the military, the administrative, and the monumental. Most frequently it denotes a garrison or military outpost—the Philistine installations that provoked Jonathan's bold strike (1 Sam 13:3-4) and the garrisons David stationed throughout Edom and Aram (2 Sam 8:6, 14). The same root yields the sense of an appointed governor or overseer, as in Solomon's administrative prefects (1 Kgs 4:19, 2 Chr 8:10). In one memorable occurrence, it describes the pillar of salt that was Lot's wife (Gen 19:26)—a standing monument to judgment.

1. garrison, military outpost (9×) A military garrison or outpost stationed for territorial control. Spanish 'guarniciones' and French 'garnison' consistently render this dominant sense. The Philistine garrisons at Geba and elsewhere (1 Sam 10:5, 13:3-4) represent foreign occupation; David's garrisons in Aram and Edom (2 Sam 8:6, 14) mark Israelite dominion. The word implies not just soldiers but a permanent installation of authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-garrison-of, garrison-of, garrisons | es: gobernadores, guarniciones, guarniciones-de | fr: [ונצי֫ב], [נצי֫בים], garnison-de | de: [ונצי֫ב], [נצי֫בים], garrison-von 1Sam 10:5; 1Sam 13:3; 1Sam 13:4; 2Sam 8:6; 2Sam 8:14

2. governor, overseer, appointed official (2×) An appointed governor, prefect, or administrative overseer placed in charge of a region. First Kings 4:19 names a single governor over Gilead, while 2 Chronicles 8:10 counts Solomon's chief officers. Spanish 'gobernador/oficiales' and French 'gouverneur' distinguish this from the military sense—the emphasis falls on administrative authority rather than armed presence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [the-overseers], and-one-governor | es: [los-oficiales], y-un-gobernador | fr: [הנצי֫בים], et-un-gouverneur | de: [הנצי֫בים], und-eins-Statthalter 1Kgs 4:19; 2Chr 8:10

3. pillar, standing stone (1×) A standing pillar or column, a physical upright structure. Genesis 19:26 uses netsiv for the pillar of salt Lot's wife became—Spanish 'columna de,' French 'colonne de,' and German 'Salzsäule' all render it as a monument or column. This concrete, inanimate sense stands apart from the human/institutional meanings, preserving the root idea of something 'stationed' or set upright. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: pillar-of | es: columna-de | fr: colonne-de | de: eine-Salzsäule Gen 19:26

נְצִיב H5334 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Nezib; a town in the territory of Judah near the Philistine border

This place name appears in Joshua 15:43 in the list of towns allotted to the tribe of Judah, specifically in the Shephelah (lowland) region near Philistine territory. The Septuagint preserves variations like Naseib and Neseib. Modern identification places it at Beit Nasib, approximately eight miles northwest of Hebron. The location on Judah's western frontier made it strategically significant as a buffer against Philistine expansion. The name itself may derive from a root meaning 'to stand' or 'to be set,' possibly referring to its position or a standing pillar.

(1×) A town in the Shephelah district of Judah's tribal inheritance, located near the Philistine border. Joshua 15:43 lists it among the lowland settlements. The cross-linguistic consistency ('Netziv'/'Nesib') reflects transliteration of the Hebrew place name. Archaeological and geographical research identifies it with Beit Nasib northwest of Hebron, positioning it in Judah's defensive buffer zone against Philistine encroachment. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Netziv | es: y-Nesib | fr: et-Netziv | de: und-Netziv Josh 15:43

נְצִיחַ H5335 N-proper-ms (2×)

Netsiach—a family head among the temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from exile

Netsiach is listed among the heads of families of temple servants who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel. The name appears in the parallel genealogical lists in Ezra and Nehemiah, which enumerate the returning exiles by family groups. The Septuagint shows considerable variation in rendering this name, suggesting uncertainties in transmission, though the Hebrew text is consistent across both passages.

(2×) This proper name identifies a specific family head among the Nethinim (temple servants) in the post-exilic community. Appearing in Ezra 2:54 and Nehemiah 7:56, the name occurs only in the genealogical registers of those who returned from Babylon. The multilingual glosses consistently transliterate the name (Netsiach, Nesiaj, Nesiá), reflecting its function as a personal identifier rather than a word with semantic content. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Netsiach, Neziah | es: Nesiaj, Nesiá | fr: [נצי֫ח] | de: [נצי֫ח] Ezra 2:54; Neh 7:56

נְצִיר H5336

preserved, guarded (adjective; Isaiah 49:6 Ketiv, Qere reads נְצוּרֵי)

This adjective form appears only in Isaiah 49:6 (Ketiv) as part of the phrase describing the Servant's mission: to 'raise up the preserved of Israel.' The Qere reads נְצוּרֵי (from נָצַר, 'to watch, guard, preserve'), referring to the surviving remnant—those whom God has kept safe through judgment and exile. The Servant's task extends beyond Israel to be 'a light to the nations,' but begins with restoring the 'preserved ones,' the faithful remnant. This theme of the guarded remnant runs through Isaiah's theology of judgment and restoration.

נָצַל H5337 Conj-w / V-Hifil-Imp-ms / 1cs (213×)

To deliver, rescue, snatch away; Niphal: escape, be delivered; Piel: strip, plunder; Hifil: save from danger or enemies

At its Hifil core, natsal is the Hebrew Bible's premier rescue verb — God snatching Israel from Egypt's hand, a shepherd pulling a lamb from the lion's jaws, a warrior delivering the oppressed. Arabic splits the range cleanly: anjadha for rescue, intaza'a for snatching away, and salaba for plundering — three distinct roots confirming real semantic fractures. The Niphal reflexive adds escape and self-deliverance, while the rare Piel transforms the verb entirely into its opposite: stripping and plundering the defeated. One Hithpael occurrence extends the root to stripping off one's own ornaments in grief.

1. deliver, rescue, save (Hifil) (188×) The dominant Hifil causative: to deliver, rescue, or save someone from danger, enemies, or death. At 188 occurrences this is natsal's gravitational center — from the Passover deliverance (Exod 12:27) to David's praise of divine rescue (2 Sam 22:1). Arabic anjadha/najja, Spanish librar, and Korean geonjida all converge on forcible extraction from peril. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: deliver-me, deliverer, delivering | es: Líbrame, líbrame, quien-librase | fr: delivering, délivrer, le-délivrer | de: Retter, delivering, errette Exod 12:27; Exod 18:10; Deut 32:39; 1Sam 4:8

2. be delivered, escape (Niphal) (15×) The Niphal passive-reflexive: to be delivered, escape, or deliver oneself. Fifteen occurrences including Jacob's deliverance at Peniel (Gen 32:30) and the psalmist's plea from the mire (Ps 69:14). Arabic yanju ('to escape'), Korean guwon-batda ('receive salvation'), and Deut 23:15's runaway-slave law confirm both passive and reflexive nuance. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-deliver-yourself, and-was-delivered, deliver-yourself | es: Líbrate, Somos-librados, para-librarse | fr: délivrer, escapes, et-délivrer | de: errette, errettete, escapes Gen 32:30; Deut 23:15; 2Kgs 19:11; Ps 33:16; Ps 69:14

3. snatch away, take away (Hifil) (4×) A distinct Hifil nuance of snatching away or forcibly removing possessions — not rescue but seizure. God 'snatched away' Laban's livestock for Jacob (Gen 31:9, 16) and Hosea warns of divine repossession (Hos 2:9). Arabic intaza'a ('to wrench away') and Hindi chhina ('snatched') use roots entirely distinct from rescue vocabulary. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-I-will-snatch-away, and-delivered, delivered | es: Y-quitó, quites, quitó | fr: délivra, délivrer, et-délivra | de: errette, gerettet-hat, und-errettete Gen 31:9; Gen 31:16; Ps 119:43; Hos 2:9

4. strip, plunder, despoil (Piel) (3×) The Piel intensive: to strip, plunder, or despoil — the verb's semantic opposite. Three occurrences: Israel plundered the Egyptians (Exod 3:22, 12:36) and Jehoshaphat's army stripped fallen Moabites (2 Chr 20:25). Arabic salaba ('to plunder') and Korean ppae-atda ('seized') confirm a wholesale inversion from deliverance to dispossession. PLUNDERING AND SPOIL

en: and-they-plundered, and-they-took-for-themselves, and-you-will-plunder |

es: y-despojaron, y-despojaréis, y-tomaron-para-sí | fr: et-délivrer, et-ils-pilla, et-tu—piller | de: und-du-wird-pluendern, und-retten, und-sie-pluenderte Exod 3:22; Exod 12:36; 2Chr 20:25

5. (2×) Prophetic imagery of 'a brand plucked from the fire' — rescue at the last moment before annihilation. Amos 4:11 and Zechariah 3:2 form a vivid metaphor of narrow escape from total destruction. Spanish arrebatado ('snatched away') marks the desperate-rescue intensity beyond ordinary deliverance. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: plucked, snatched | es: arrebatado | fr: délivrer | de: errettete Amos 4:11; Zech 3:2

6. (1×) A singular Hithpael reflexive at Exod 33:6: Israel 'stripped themselves of' their ornaments at Horeb after the golden calf judgment. Spanish se despojaron and French depouilla confirm self-directed removal of adornment — semantically closer to Piel stripping but reflexive and penitential rather than predatory. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING
en: and-stripped-off | es: Y-se-despojaron | fr: et-dépouilla-dehors | de: und-stripped-weg Exod 33:6

נְצַל H5338 Conj-w / V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (3×)

to rescue, deliver; Aramaic Haphel of נְצַל

This Aramaic verb means to rescue or deliver, appearing in Daniel's Aramaic sections. God is described as 'rescuing and delivering' (Daniel 6:27), demonstrating his power to save from both furnace and lions. The verb appears in various forms: participle ('rescuing'), infinitive ('to deliver'), and with pronominal suffixes ('to rescue him'). Nebuchadnezzar decrees death for anyone who speaks against the God 'who is able to deliver in this way' (3:29), acknowledging no other deity can rescue as Israel's God does. The Aramaic setting fits the exile context where deliverance is urgently needed.

(3×) All three occurrences center on miraculous divine rescue from execution—fire or lions. Daniel 3:29 celebrates God's unique delivering power after the furnace incident. Daniel 6:14 shows Darius desperate 'to rescue' Daniel from the lions' den, while 6:27 praises God who 'rescues and delivers.' The paired verbs emphasize comprehensive salvation. Cross-linguistic renderings use rescue/deliver vocabulary: 'librar,' 'rescatarlo,' 'rescata.' The Haphel causative stem underscores that God actively causes escape, not merely permits it—he intervenes decisively. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-rescuing, to-deliver, to-rescue-him | es: librar, para-rescatarlo, y-rescata | fr: [ומצל], [להצלה], [להצלותה] | de: [ומצל], [להצלה], [להצלותה] Dan 3:29; Dan 6:14; Dan 6:27

נִצָּן H5339 Art / N-ms (1×)

blossoms, flowers; the blooming flowers appearing on plants, especially in springtime

This plural noun appears in Song of Songs 2:12, where 'the blossoms appear in the land' signals spring's arrival. The scene paints nature awakening—flowers emerging alongside birdsong and new growth. The definite article ('the blossoms') suggests well-known seasonal blooms rather than generic flowers. This botanical imagery characterizes spring as the time of love and renewal, when creation comes alive with color and fragrance. The parallel with singing birds and pruning time situates these blossoms in early spring's agricultural calendar.

(1×) The flowers or blossoms that appear in springtime, marking seasonal renewal. Song 2:12 places these blossoms in a catalogue of spring's signs—the time for singing has arrived, the dove's voice is heard, and flowers have appeared on the earth. Spanish 'flores' and French 'fleurs' confirm the floral meaning. The definite article suggests these are the characteristic blooms of Palestinian spring, perhaps including wildflowers like anemones and cyclamens that blanket the land. FLOWERS AND BLOSSOMS
en: the-blossoms | es: Las-flores | fr: Les-fleurs | de: [הנצנים] Song 2:12

נָצַץ H5340 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

sparkling, gleaming; reflecting or emitting flashes of light like polished metal

This participle appears in Ezekiel 1:7, describing the feet of the cherubim in the prophet's throne vision as 'sparkling like burnished bronze.' The verb captures the flashing, gleaming quality of highly polished metal. Some scholars propose reading 'their plumage' instead, but the traditional text emphasizes the brilliant, almost metallic appearance of these heavenly beings. The sparkle suggests movement and vitality, not static shine—the cherubim's feet flash and gleam as they move in the vision's supernatural choreography.

(1×) To sparkle, flash, or gleam with light, particularly like polished metal. Ezekiel 1:7 uses this verb to describe how the cherubim's feet gleamed 'like burnished bronze,' creating a dazzling visual effect in the prophet's vision. Spanish 'centelleando' (sparkling) and French 'étinceler' (to sparkle) capture the dynamic quality of light flashing from a reflective surface. This contributes to the overwhelming luminosity of Ezekiel's throne vision. SHINING AND ILLUMINATING
en: and-sparkling | es: y-centelleando | fr: et-étinceler | de: [ונצצים] Ezek 1:7

נָצַר H5341 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs (64×)

To watch, guard, keep; of observing commandments, protecting persons, standing watch, and besieging cities.

Natsar belongs to the same semantic family as its Aramaic cousin netar ('to guard, keep'), and the two verbs illuminate each other. At its heart, natsar describes vigilant watchfulness — whether directed toward God's commandments, toward a person under one's care, or toward an enemy city under siege. The covenantal sense dominates: the Psalms are saturated with natsar as the faithful keeper of Torah (Ps 119:22, 56, 100), and the word becomes a marker of covenant loyalty itself in passages like Deuteronomy 33:9 where the Levites 'kept your word.' Yet the same root yields the notsrim, 'watchmen,' who stand sentinel over cities (2 Kgs 17:9), and even the surprising military sense of besieging a fortified place (Isa 1:8; Jer 4:16). Arabic nazara ('to look at, examine') preserves the visual core of watchfulness from which all these senses radiate.

1. keep, observe (commandments) (24×) The dominant covenantal sense: to keep, guard, or observe commandments, laws, covenant stipulations, and moral instructions with careful, deliberate obedience. This accounts for 24 of 64 occurrences, concentrated in the Psalms and Proverbs. Spanish guardar and German bewahren both capture the custodial dimension — not mere compliance but treasured preservation of what has been entrusted. Psalm 119 alone uses natsar repeatedly (vv. 22, 56, 100, 129) as a virtual synonym for shamar, though natsar carries a slightly more watchful, attentive connotation. Korean 지키다 ('to protect/keep') mirrors this range well. GUARDING AND KEEPING en: I-have-kept, I-keep, I-will-keep | es: (guardarán), Guarda, guarda | fr: et-garder, garder, ils-garda | de: behütete, bewahrte, sie-bewachte Deut 33:9; Ps 25:10; Ps 34:13; Ps 78:7; Ps 105:45

2. guard, protect, preserve (a person) (20×) To guard, protect, or preserve a person from harm or danger — 20 occurrences, often with God as subject safeguarding the faithful. In Deuteronomy 32:10 God 'guarded' Israel 'as the apple of his eye,' and Psalm 32:7 declares God will 'preserve me from trouble.' The multilingual evidence splits interestingly: Spanish guarda and French garder treat protection and commandment-keeping as the same verb, while Korean shifts to 보호하다 ('to protect') and Swahili -linda ('to guard a person'), marking a clear semantic boundary between covenantal observance and personal protection. Psalm 12:7 and 40:11 anchor this sense theologically. GUARDING AND KEEPING
en: You-preserve-me, and-I-have-kept-you, and-I-will-preserve-you | es: guarda, guardan, guardan-a- | fr: et-garder, garder, il-garda-lui | de: behütete, bewahren, bewahrte Deut 32:10; Ps 12:7; Ps 25:21; Ps 32:7; Ps 40:11

3. watchman, keeper (11×) Substantivized participle: a watchman, sentinel, keeper, or guardian — 11 occurrences where the verb becomes an agent noun. The notsrim of 2 Kings 17:9 and 18:8 are military watchtower sentinels, while Job 7:20 provocatively addresses God as 'O Watcher of men.' Jeremiah 31:6 envisions the notsrim on Mount Ephraim calling people to Zion. Spanish el que guarda and German der Wächter both render this substantivized form. The Exodus 34:7 usage ('keeping steadfast love for thousands') bridges toward sense 1 but retains the participial guardian imagery. GUARDING AND KEEPING en: O-Watcher-of, and-he-who-watches, guards | es: El-que-guarda, el-guarda, el-que-cuida | fr: et-garder, gardant, garder | de: behütete, bewahrte, keeping Exod 34:7; 2Kgs 17:9; 2Kgs 18:8; Job 7:20; Job 27:18

4. hidden, secret, guarded away (5×) Passive participle: that which is hidden, concealed, guarded away, or kept secret — 5 occurrences forming a distinct adjectival sense. Proverbs 7:10 describes a woman with a 'guarded/crafty heart' (netsurath lev); Isaiah 48:6 reveals 'hidden things you have not known'; Isaiah 49:6 speaks of 'preserved ones of Israel.' The passive morphology shifts the semantics from active watching to the result of being watched over and thus sequestered. Spanish preservados and cosas guardadas confirm the stative, resultative quality. This sense connects to the Aramaic/Syriac tradition where netar can mean 'to reserve, keep back.' GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: [ketiv:and-preserved-ones-of], and-crafty-of, and-hidden-things | es: (y-preservados-de), [Qere], y-cosas-guardadas | fr: et-garder, garder | de: bewahren, und-bewahren, und-bewahrte Prov 7:10; Isa 48:6; Isa 49:6; Isa 65:4

5. besiege, blockade (4×) To besiege or blockade a city — 4 occurrences constituting a distinct military sense. In Isaiah 1:8 Jerusalem is 'like a besieged city'; Jeremiah 4:16 warns that 'besiegers come from a distant land'; Ezekiel 6:12 distinguishes the besieged from those far away. Spanish sitiada/sitiadores ('besieged/besiegers') and the broader semantic logic make clear this is not mere metaphorical guarding but actual military encirclement. The connection to the root meaning is transparent: besieging is hostile watching, surrounding a city to prevent escape — the same vigilant gaze turned from protective to adversarial. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: and-the-besieged, besieged, besiegers | es: Sitiadores, guardas, sitiada | fr: et-garder, garder | de: [והנצור], bewahren Isa 1:8; Jer 4:16; Jer 31:6; Ezek 6:12

נֶ֫צֶר H5342 Prep-k / N-ms (4×)

sprout, shoot, branch; used figuratively for offspring, descendants, or new growth from a root

This noun denotes a young shoot or branch sprouting from a plant, but it appears exclusively in figurative contexts in Scripture. Isaiah 11:1 famously prophesies that "a shoot shall come out from the stump of Jesse," referring to the Messiah. Isaiah 60:21 calls Israel "the branch of my planting," while Isaiah 14:19 uses it in judgment oracles. The term conveys ideas of new life emerging from established roots, often with messianic or covenantal overtones.

(4×) A botanical metaphor for new growth, offspring, or descendants emerging from a rootstock. Isaiah 11:1 uses it messianically ("branch from Jesse"), while Isaiah 60:21 applies it to Israel as God's planting. Daniel 11:7 speaks of "a branch from her roots" in dynastic succession. Multilingual glosses consistently render as "branch/shoot/sprout" (retoño, branche, Zweig), often in construct phrases ("branch of," "from branch of"). Several translations bracket the Hebrew forms, indicating morphological or textual complexity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-branch, branch-of, from-branch-of | es: como-retoño, de-retoño-de, retoño-de | fr: [ונצר], [כנצר], [נצר] | de: [ונצר], [כנצר], [מנצר] Isa 11:1; Isa 14:19; Isa 60:21; Dan 11:7

נָקִא H5343 Adj-ms (1×)

pure, clean; free from dirt, stain, or impurity, especially ritually clean

This Aramaic adjective appears in Daniel 7:9, describing God's hair as 'like pure wool' in the Ancient of Days vision. The term emphasizes spotless whiteness and purity, suggesting both physical cleanliness and symbolic holiness. The comparison to wool highlights texture and color—soft, white, and unblemished. This anthropomorphic description of the divine figure emphasizes age (white hair) combined with absolute purity. The Aramaic form parallels Hebrew נָקִי, sharing connotations of ritual and moral cleanness.

(1×) Clean, pure, unstained—describing something completely white and unblemished. Daniel 7:9 applies this to the Ancient of Days' hair, 'like pure wool,' emphasizing both the whiteness of great age and absolute purity. Spanish 'limpia' (clean) and French 'pur' (pure) reflect both physical and symbolic dimensions. The wool comparison suggests soft, clean whiteness rather than brilliant white light, creating an image of venerable purity. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: pure | es: limpia | fr: pur | de: [נקא] Dan 7:9

נָקַב H5344a V-Qal-Perf-2ms (22×)

To pierce or bore through; to designate or specify by name; to curse or blaspheme, especially the divine Name.

Naqav holds together three seemingly distant meanings through one governing image: penetration. To bore a hole in a reed (2 Kgs 18:21), to single out a person by name from a crowd (Num 1:17), and to pierce the sacred boundary of God's Name with a curse (Lev 24:11) all share the notion of pointed, decisive action. Arabic naqaba ('perforate, scrutinize') preserves both the physical and investigative dimensions. The Leviticus 24 narrative, where a man 'pierces' (blasphemes) the Name, may reflect an ancient understanding of cursing as verbally boring into sacred space.

1. designate or specify by name (9×) To designate, specify, or single out by name, often in an official or formal capacity. Numbers 1:17 records that certain men were 'designated by name' for the census, and 1 Chronicles 12:32 and 16:41 use it for named appointees to service. Genesis 30:28 has Laban telling Jacob to 'specify' his wages. The underlying metaphor may be 'piercing' or marking someone out from the group. Spanish 'designados' and French 'nommer' capture this formal naming function. CALLING AND NAMING en: designated, distinguished-ones-of-, shall-designate | es: determinará, fueron-designados, los-notables-de | fr: [יקבנו], [נקבו], percer | de: [יקבנו], [נקבו], [נקבי] Gen 30:28; Num 1:17; 1Chr 12:32; 1Chr 16:41; 2Chr 28:15

2. pierce or bore through (7×) To physically pierce, bore, or perforate an object with a tool or weapon. In 2 Kings 12:9 the priest bores a hole in the lid of a chest, and 2 Kings 18:21 warns that leaning on Egypt is like leaning on a reed that pierces the hand. Job 40:24 and 41:2 ask whether one can pierce Leviathan's nose or jaw. This is the concrete, literal core of the verb, shared with Arabic naqaba and Aramaic neqav. PIERCE BORE THROUGH

en: and-he-bored, and-it-pierces-it, and-pierces-it | es: Traspasaste, agujereada, perforarán- | fr: [ונקבה], et-cela-pierces-cela, et-il-bored | de: [ונקבה], [ינקב], [נקבת] 2Kgs 12:9; 2Kgs 18:21; Job 40:24; Job 41:2; Isa 36:6

3. curse or blaspheme (6×) To curse, revile, or blaspheme, especially used of pronouncing imprecations against a person or blaspheming the divine Name. Leviticus 24:11 narrates the foundational case: a man 'pierced' (cursed) the Name and was stoned. Numbers 23:8 and 23:25 use it of Balaam's inability to curse Israel. Job 3:8 and Proverbs 11:26 extend the usage to malediction in general. The semantic link to 'piercing' suggests cursing was understood as a verbal penetration of sacred or social boundaries. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-pierced, can-I-curse, let-curse-it | es: Maldíganla, Y-blasfemó, lo-maldecirá | fr: et-pierced, percer-lui, peut-je-malédiction | de: [יקבהו], du-sollverfluchen-ihn, kann-ich-verfluchen Lev 24:11; Num 23:8; Num 23:25; Job 3:8; Prov 11:26

נָקַב H5344b Prep-b / V-Qal-Inf / 3ms (2×)

to blaspheme, curse the name of God—speak against the divine name with contempt or profanity

This verb describes the act of blaspheming or profaning the divine name. It appears only in the legal section of Leviticus dealing with the punishment for blasphemy. The offense involves explicitly pronouncing the sacred name with contempt or cursing. Leviticus 24:16 uses both the infinitive and participle forms to emphasize both the act itself and the one who commits it. The multilingual glosses consistently render this as blasphemy (Spanish 'blasfemar,' French 'blaspheme'), recognizing the gravity of speaking against God's name.

(2×) The verb refers specifically to the act of blaspheming or cursing the name of Yahweh, found in Leviticus 24:16. Both occurrences in this verse (infinitive 'in his blaspheming' and participle 'one who blasphemes') describe the same offense from different grammatical angles. The translations across languages uniformly recognize this as blasphemy, with Spanish 'blasfemar,' French 'blasphemer,' and English 'blaspheme' all conveying the serious nature of verbally dishonoring the divine name. CURSING AND IMPRECATION

en: and-one-who-blasphemes, in-his-blaspheming- | es: Y-el-que-blasfeme, al-blasfemar | fr: dans-son-blaspheming-, et-un-qui-blasphemes | de: in-sein-blaspheming-, und-eins-der-blasphemes Lev 24:16

נְקֻבָיִךְ H5345 Conj-w / N-mpc / 2ms (1×)

settings, sockets; cavities or mountings in which precious stones are fixed in jewelry

This technical term appears in Ezekiel 28:13, describing the king of Tyre's adornment 'in Eden, the garden of God.' The paired terms refer to jewelers' craft—sockets and grooves or settings where gemstones are mounted. The precise meaning remains debated; proposals include 'settings and sockets,' 'timbrels and pipes,' or 'engravings and mountings.' The context emphasizes lavish ornamentation with precious stones, suggesting these are technical terms for jewelry craftsmanship. The suffixes indicate personal possession—'your settings, your sockets'—emphasizing the king's wealth.

(1×) Technical jeweler's term for sockets, settings, or mountings in which precious stones are fixed. Ezekiel 28:13 uses this in describing the king of Tyre's original splendor among gemstones in God's garden. Spanish 'engarces' (settings) captures the jewelry craft terminology. The paired expression with 'sockets' suggests complementary aspects of gem mounting—perhaps the backing and the enclosing rim that secure stones in place. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: and-your-settings | es: y-tus-engarces | fr: et-monture | de: [ונקביך] Ezek 28:13

נְקֶב H5346 N-proper-fs (1×)

Nekeb; a location on the border of Naphtali's territory, possibly a mountain pass

This place name appears in Joshua 19:33 as 'Adami-nekeb,' a border point in Naphtali's tribal allotment. The Septuagint treats it as two locations (Arme and Nabek) or transliterates as Ademmhe annekb. The term nekeb may mean 'pass' or 'perforation,' suggesting a mountain passage or gap—Arabic ʿ refers to a road between mountains. If so, the name describes a strategic pass through Naphtali's hill country. The dual nature of the name (Adami-nekeb) suggests either a compound name or two adjacent locations, one involving a notable mountain pass.

(1×) A place name in Naphtali's territory, appearing as 'Adami-nekeb' in the boundary list of Joshua 19:33. The term may derive from a root meaning 'piercing' or 'pass,' suggesting a geographical feature like a mountain gap. The Arabic cognate referring to mountain roads supports this interpretation. Transliteration varies in translations ('Neqev'/'Nekeb'), reflecting the proper name's preservation rather than translation of its possible etymological meaning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Neqev | es: y-Jabneel | fr: le-Neqev | de: der-Neqev Josh 19:33

נְקֵבָה H5347 Prep-l (22×)

female – a woman or female animal, used for sex distinction especially in priestly and creation texts

The standard Hebrew noun for a female of any species, consistently paired with its opposite zakar ('male') to express the fundamental gender binary. It appears prominently in the creation account – 'male and female he created them' (Gen 1:27; 5:2) – and pervades Priestly legislation concerning sacrificial animals (Lev 3-5), purification after childbirth (Lev 12:5-7), and census exclusions (Num 5:3; 31:15). Jeremiah uses it strikingly in his oracle of reversal: 'a female shall encompass a man' (Jer 31:22). The Aramaic cognate nuqba preserves the same root.

female (22×) A female creature, whether human (woman, girl) or animal, used to mark the sex distinction in legal, cultic, and narrative contexts. Nearly always appears opposite zakar ('male'). Dominant in Priestly texts covering creation (Gen 1:27; 5:2), the flood pairings (Gen 6:19; 7:3, 9, 16), sacrificial regulations (Lev 3-5), and purity laws (Lev 12; 15). Jeremiah 31:22 deploys it in an enigmatic prophetic reversal. Spanish hembra and French femelle both render the term straightforwardly, confirming its monosemous character. FEMALE GENDER

en: a-female, and-female, and-for-the-female | es: hembra, hembra?, mujer | fr: et-femelle, et-pour-le-femelle, femelle | de: ein-weiblich, und-fuer-der-weiblich, und-weiblich Gen 1:27; Gen 5:2; Gen 6:19; Gen 7:3; Gen 7:9

נָקֹד H5348 Adj-mp (9×)

Speckled, spotted; used exclusively of sheep and goats in Jacob's breeding arrangement with Laban.

This adjective describes animals with small spots or speckles on their coats, appearing only in the Jacob-and-Laban narrative of Genesis 30-31. When Jacob negotiates his wages, he claims all speckled (naqod) and spotted (talu) animals as his own (Gen 30:32-33). The term then recurs as Jacob's flocks multiply through his selective breeding strategy (30:35, 39; 31:8, 10, 12). Spanish 'moteada' (dotted) and German 'gesprenkelt' (sprinkled with spots) both convey the visual pattern precisely. The word always appears alongside related color-pattern terms – 'striped' (aqod) and 'spotted' (talu) – forming a small technical vocabulary for livestock markings.

speckled (9×) Speckled or spotted in coat pattern, used exclusively of sheep and goats in the Jacob-Laban livestock narratives (Gen 30:32-39; 31:8, 10, 12). The adjective typically appears in lists alongside 'aqod' (striped) and 'talu' (spotted/patched), distinguishing fine-grained speckles from larger patches. Spanish 'moteada' (speckled/dotted) and German 'gesprenkelt' (besprinkled) both capture the image of small scattered markings. The term carries narrative weight as the visible marker of God's providential blessing on Jacob's flocks. SPOTTED SPECKLED en: and-speckled, speckled, spotted | es: las-moteadas, moteada, moteadas | fr: et-speckled, le-speckled, speckled | de: die-gesprenkelten, gesprenkelt, gesprenkelte Gen 30:32; Gen 30:33; Gen 30:35; Gen 30:39

נֹקֵד H5349 N-ms (2×)

sheep-raiser, shepherd—one who raises, tends, or deals in sheep, especially on a commercial scale

This noun describes someone engaged in the sheep industry, whether as a breeder, trader, or tender of flocks. The term appears in connection with two notable figures: Mesha king of Moab, who is called a sheep-dealer in 2 Kings 3:4, and the prophet Amos, who identifies himself as being among the sheep-raisers of Tekoa in Amos 1:1. The word suggests a professional level of involvement with sheep, possibly on a large commercial scale, distinguishing it from ordinary shepherding. Amos's use of this term may indicate he was a sheep-breeder or livestock trader rather than a simple shepherd.

(2×) Denotes a professional sheep-raiser or dealer, someone involved in breeding, tending, or trading sheep on a significant scale. The term characterizes Mesha king of Moab as a substantial sheep-dealer (2 Kings 3:4) and describes Amos as being 'among the sheep-raisers' of Tekoa (Amos 1:1). The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'ganadero' = livestock dealer, French 'breeder,' English 'sheep-breeder') emphasizes the commercial or professional aspect, suggesting this goes beyond simple shepherding to indicate expertise in sheep husbandry. SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: a-sheep-breeder, among-the-shepherds | es: entre-los-pastores, ganadero | fr: brûlant, un-moutons-breeder | de: [בנקדים], ein-Schafe-breeder 2Kgs 3:4; Amos 1:1

נְקוּד H5350 N-mp (3×)

crumbs, crumbled bread; or hard biscuits/cakes

This plural noun has two possible meanings, both related to bread. In Joshua 9:5, 12, it describes the Gibeonites' bread that 'was dry and had become crumbs'—either genuinely crumbled from age (proving they came from afar) or perhaps moldy ('crumbled' as deteriorated). Alternatively, some suggest it denotes a type of hard biscuit or cake that crumbles easily. In 1 Kings 14:3, it appears among provisions brought as a gift, alongside bread and honey—here more likely indicating a specific baked good (cakes or biscuits) rather than literal crumbs. The ambiguity reflects our limited knowledge of ancient Israelite baked goods.

(3×) The Gibeonite deception narrative uses this word to establish their traveled-from-afar claim: provisions that were fresh are now dry and crumbled. The Greek 'bebrōmenoi' (moldy) and Latin 'in frusta comminuti' (crumbled to pieces) capture the deterioration. The 1 Kings occurrence shifts context to provisions suitable as a gift, suggesting a prepared food type. Spanish alternates between 'mohoso' (moldy) and 'tortas' (cakes). Whether crumbs from age or a crumbly biscuit type, the word denotes bread in a broken or easily-broken state. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-cakes, crumbled | es: mohoso, y-tortas | fr: crumbled, et-cakes | de: crumbled, und-cakes Josh 9:5; Josh 9:12; 1Kgs 14:3

נְקֻדָּה H5351 N-fpc (1×)

studs, points; small decorative metal ornaments, possibly rivets or inlaid dots

This plural noun appears in Song of Songs 1:11, where the beloved promises to make 'rows of gold with studs of silver.' The term suggests small decorative elements—either pointed studs, drops, or dots of silver set into or alongside gold chains. The precise form remains uncertain; possibilities include raised studs, inlaid points, or silver beads. The imagery evokes fine jewelry craftsmanship, with silver accents complementing gold base metal. This promise of adornment expresses the value and beauty the speaker sees in the beloved.

(1×) Small decorative metalwork elements, possibly studs, points, or drops used in jewelry. Song 1:11 describes making gold chains or rows 'with studs of silver'—silver decorative elements adorning gold work. Spanish 'incrustaciones' (inlays) suggests embedding technique. The term evokes fine jewelry craftsmanship where contrasting metals create visual interest, with silver points punctuating gold surfaces or chains. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: studs-of | es: incrustaciones-de | fr: des-points | de: [נקדות] Song 1:11

נָקָה H5352 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-1cs (44×)

To be clean, innocent; Nifal: go unpunished, be acquitted, be free from obligation; Piel: acquit, leave unpunished, cleanse from guilt

A juridical and moral verb whose root suggests emptiness or cleanness, naqah covers the full arc from courtroom verdict to spiritual purification. Its most recognizable usage is the solemn warning formula 'shall not go unpunished' (lo yinnaqeh), recurring across Exodus, Proverbs, and the prophets as a fixed expression of inevitable divine or social consequence (Prov 6:29; 11:21; 16:5). In the Piel, God himself is the subject who 'will by no means acquit the guilty' (Exod 34:7; Num 14:18) — yet the same stem can also express cleansing from bloodguilt (Joel 3:21). A distinct legal strand in the Nifal means 'to be free from an oath or obligation,' as when Abraham's servant could be released from his oath if the woman refused to follow (Gen 24:8, 41). The Aramaic cognate neqa ('clean') and the Phoenician adjective naqiy ('pure') confirm the ancient Semitic core of cleanness that underlies every juridical extension.

1. Nifal: go unpunished, be acquitted (15×) The Nifal juridical sense of going unpunished or being declared innocent — the most frequent usage with 15 occurrences, almost always in the negative formula lo yinnaqeh ('shall not go unpunished'). Spanish quedando impune and German ungestraft both map to this forensic meaning. Proverbs clusters this formula densely (6:29; 11:21; 16:5; 17:5; 19:5, 9; 28:20), establishing it as a wisdom maxim about moral certainty. Judges 15:3 applies it uniquely to Samson declaring himself 'innocent' of consequences against the Philistines. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL

en: I-am-innocent, being-acquitted, going-unpunished | es: Estaré-libre-de-culpa, quedando-impune, quedará-impune | fr: je-suis-innocent, être-innocent | de: ich-bin-innocent, ungestraft, unschuldig-sein Judg 15:3; Prov 6:29; Prov 11:21; Prov 16:5; Prov 17:5

2. Piel: acquit, leave unpunished (15×) The Piel declarative sense — to acquit, pronounce guiltless, or leave unpunished — with God or a judge as subject across 15 occurrences. The theological core appears in the great divine self-revelation at Sinai: 'who will by no means acquit the guilty' (Exod 34:7; Num 14:18), where the doubled infinitive absolute naqeh lo yenaqqeh creates emphatic certainty. Spanish absolver and German freisprechen confirm the forensic-declarative force. Nahum 1:3 echoes the Exodus formula almost verbatim, demonstrating how this creedal language persisted across centuries of prophetic tradition. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL

en: I-will-acquit-you, I-will-leave-you, You-acquit-me | es: absolverá, absuelve, dejará-impune | fr: –quitter-unpunished, et-acquittant, et-acquitting | de: er-spricht-frei, er-wird-acquit, hold-ihn-guiltless Exod 20:7; Exod 34:7; Num 14:18

3. Nifal: be free, be released from obligation (7×) The Nifal obligation-release sense — to be free or exempt from an oath, vow, or legal responsibility — appearing 7 times in narrative contexts. Abraham's servant can be 'free from this oath' if the woman will not follow (Gen 24:8, 41); the man who injures another is 'acquitted' if the victim recovers and walks about (Exod 21:19); and the woman suspected of unfaithfulness 'shall be free' if proven innocent in the sotah ordeal (Num 5:19, 28, 31). Spanish quedaras libre and German frei sein capture this release-from-binding sense, which is relationally rather than morally oriented. FREE LIBERTY RELEASED

en: and-is-cleared, and-shall-be-free, and-she-shall-be-free | es: quedarás-libre, sé-libre, y-quedará-libre | fr: alors-tu—être-libérer, et-devra-être-libérer, et-elle-devra-être-libérer | de: sein-befreien, so-bist-du-frei, und-ist-cleared Gen 24:8; Gen 24:41; Exod 21:19; Num 5:19; Num 5:28

4. Nifal: be cleansed, be purged (3×) The Nifal purification sense — to be cleansed or purged of guilt or moral impurity — in 3 occurrences where the emphasis falls on inner purification rather than courtroom verdict. The psalmist asks 'who can discern his errors? Cleanse me from hidden faults' (Ps 19:13), using naqah for moral purification that only God can accomplish. Zechariah 5:3 twice applies the Nifal passive in the context of the flying scroll that will 'purge out' thieves and false swearers. Spanish limpio and German unschuldig point toward cleanness rather than acquittal. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL

en: and-I-shall-be-innocent, will-be-purged | es: será-borrado, y-seré-limpio | fr: et-innocenter, innocenter | de: und-ich-soll-seinnocent, ungestraft Ps 19:13; Zech 5:3

5. Piel: cleanse, purify from guilt (3×) The Piel purification-from-bloodguilt sense — to cleanse or avenge innocent blood — in 3 occurrences where the Piel carries a ritual or vindicatory force beyond mere legal acquittal. Joel 3:21 declares 'I will avenge/cleanse their blood that I have not yet avenged/cleansed,' where Spanish limpiar ('to clean') reveals the purification metaphor. Psalm 19:12 pairs this with sense 4, asking God for comprehensive moral cleansing. The distinction from sense 2 lies in the object: guilt and blood rather than a person. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: I-have-avenged, acquit-me, and-I-will-avenge | es: Y-limpiaré, limpié, límpiame | fr: et-innocenter, innocenter | de: acquit-mich, und-ungestraft, ungestraft Ps 19:12; Joel 3:21

6. (1×) A single enigmatic occurrence in Isaiah 3:26 where Jerusalem's gates 'mourn and lament, and she, emptied out (neqqetah), shall sit on the ground.' Here the root returns to its etymological core of emptying or being desolate — the city stripped bare of inhabitants and glory. Spanish desolada ('desolated') and English 'emptied' reflect this concrete, spatial meaning. The Assyrian cognate naqu ('to pour out') illuminates this archaic sense that the juridical usage had almost entirely eclipsed. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL

en: and-emptied | es: y-desolada | fr: et-être-innocent | de: und-unschuldig-sein Isa 3:26

נְקוֹדָא H5353 N-proper-ms (4×)

Nekoda; head of a family of Nethinim (temple servants) who returned from Babylonian exile

Nekoda appears as the name of a leader among the Nethinim, the temple servants who returned to Jerusalem after the Babylonian exile. The name occurs in parallel lists in Ezra 2:48, 60 and Nehemiah 7:50, 62, indicating both a family group and possibly individuals bearing this name. The Greek versions render it as Νεκωδα or Νεχωδα.

(4×) A personal and family name among the returning exiles, specifically associated with the Nethinim class. The name appears in duplicate census lists (Ezra 2//Nehemiah 7), a common feature of post-exilic genealogical records. Translations are consistent across languages (Nekoda, Necoda, Necodá), though some bracket the Hebrew [נקודא] to indicate it is a transliterated foreign or uncertain form. The repetition in both Ezra and Nehemiah confirms this family's role in the restoration community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Nekoda, Neqoda | es: Necoda, Necodá | fr: [נקודא] | de: [נקודא] Ezra 2:48; Ezra 2:60; Neh 7:50; Neh 7:62

קוּט H5354 V-Nifal-Perf-3fs (1×)

to loathe, feel disgust; to experience strong revulsion or moral abhorrence

This verb expresses intense disgust or loathing, often directed at oneself in retrospective moral horror. In Ezekiel 20:43 and 36:31, the people will 'loathe themselves' when they remember their abominations. In Job 10:1, Job's soul 'loathes' his life. Psalm 95:10 describes God's loathing of a rebellious generation. The verb captures visceral revulsion—not mild distaste but profound nausea or moral disgust. The Niphal form often indicates self-directed loathing, the internal revulsion that comes from recognizing one's own corruption.

(1×) To feel intense loathing, disgust, or revulsion, often self-directed after recognizing moral corruption. The verb appears in Ezekiel's prophecies of future repentance, where Israel will loathe themselves upon remembering their abominations (Ezek 20:43, 36:31). Job 10:1 uses it for Job's loathing of life itself. The Niphal stem often indicates reflexive loathing—not hatred of others but disgust with oneself, the moral nausea that accompanies genuine repentance. LOATHING ABHORRENCE

en: loathes | es: Aborrece | fr: נקטה | de: [נקטה] Job 10:1

נָקִי H5355a Adj-ms (41×)

Innocent, guiltless; free from guilt, obligation, or duty; clean and pure in hands or conscience.

An adjective describing one who is clean — whether morally, legally, or ritually. Its most frequent and weighty use is in the phrase dam naqi, 'innocent blood,' which echoes through Deuteronomy's legal codes (Deut 19:10, 13; 27:25) into the prophetic indictments of Jeremiah (7:6; 22:3, 17) and the historical horror of Manasseh's reign (2 Kgs 21:16; 24:4). The French and German glosses both gravitate toward 'innocent,' while Spanish 'inocente' and 'libre' capture the split between guiltlessness and freedom from obligation. Psalm 24:4's 'clean of hands' (neqi khappayim) adds a ritual and ethical purity dimension, asking who may ascend the Lord's hill.

1. innocent, guiltless (37×) Free from guilt or blame, not deserving punishment — the dominant sense covering the vast majority of occurrences. Central to the Deuteronomic concern with 'innocent blood' (dam naqi), which must not be shed in the land (Deut 19:10). Job's friends and enemies debate his innocence using this very word (Job 4:7; 9:23; 22:19). French 'innocent' and Spanish 'inocente' uniformly confirm this forensic, moral meaning. Proverbs 6:17 lists 'hands that shed innocent blood' among the things the Lord hates. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL

en: are-innocent, innocent, the-innocent | es: el-inocente, inocente | fr: innocent, le-innocent, sont-innocent | de: [נקי], der-innocent, innocent Gen 44:10; Exod 21:28; Exod 23:7; Num 32:22; Deut 19:10

2. free from obligation (2×) Released or free from a binding obligation, oath, or penalty. In Genesis 24:41, Abraham's servant will be 'free' (naqi) from his oath if the woman refuses to come. Deuteronomy 24:5 exempts a newly married man — he shall be 'free' (naqi) for his household for one year. Spanish 'libre' and German 'frei' capture this juridical release, distinct from the moral innocence of sense 1. FREE LIBERTY RELEASED

en: free | es: libre | fr: libérer | de: befreien, frei Gen 24:41; Deut 24:5

3. exempt from duty (1×) Exempt from a required civic or military duty. First Kings 15:22 records Asa's decree that 'none was exempt' (en naqi) from conscripted labor to build Geba and Mizpah. Spanish 'exento' and French 'exempt' mirror this administrative, civic sense — freedom not from guilt but from compulsory service. FREE LIBERTY RELEASED

en: exempt | es: exento | fr: exempt | de: exempt 1Kgs 15:22

4. clean, pure (1×) Clean and pure, whether physically, ritually, or ethically. Psalm 24:4 asks 'Who may ascend the hill of the Lord?' and answers: the one who has 'clean hands and a pure heart' (neqi khappayim uvar levav). German 'der rein von' (the clean/pure of) and Spanish 'limpio de' (clean of) highlight the purity aspect. This sense overlaps with innocence but emphasizes internal and ritual cleanness rather than forensic guiltlessness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-clean-of | es: limpio-de | fr: innocent | de: der-rein-von Ps 24:4

נָקִיא H5355b Adj-ms (2×)

innocent (blood)—blood shed unjustly, belonging to one who is guiltless or undeserving of death

This adjective describes blood that is 'innocent' or 'guiltless'—blood shed from someone who did not deserve to die. The phrase 'innocent blood' appears in Joel 3:19 (referring to violence done to Judah) and Jonah 1:14 (where the sailors plead not to be held responsible for Jonah's death). This is a Ketiv (written) form; the Qere (read) text has the more common form of the word. The concept of innocent blood is significant in biblical ethics, as shedding such blood brings guilt and divine judgment upon the perpetrator or the community.

(2×) This adjectival form modifies 'blood' (dam) to create the phrase 'innocent blood,' referring to blood shed from those who are guiltless or undeserving of death. In Joel 3:19, it describes the violence perpetrated against Judah, while in Jonah 1:14, the sailors use it to plead their case before God, asking not to be charged with Jonah's innocent blood if they throw him overboard. The translations uniformly render this as 'innocent' (Spanish 'inocente,' French 'innocent'), capturing the moral dimension of bloodshed that is unjust or unwarranted. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL

en: innocent | es: inocente | fr: innocent | de: [נקיא] Joel 3:19; Jonah 1:14

נְקִיּוֹן H5356a Conj-w (4×)

innocence, cleanness; freedom from guilt, especially in the phrase "innocence of hands"

This noun describes moral innocence or freedom from guilt, most commonly in the phrase "innocence of hands" (נְקִיּוֹן כַּפַּיִם), symbolizing clean conduct and blamelessness. Genesis 20:5 uses it in Abimelech's defense before God, while Psalms 26:6 and 73:13 employ it in contexts of ritual purity and righteous living. Hosea 8:5 extends it to freedom from punishment, and Amos 4:6 plays on its literal sense of physical cleanness ("cleanness of teeth" = famine, no food).

(4×) Denotes moral and ritual innocence, the state of being free from guilt or wrongdoing. The phrase "innocence of hands" appears in Genesis 20:5, Psalm 26:6, and 73:13, signifying clean, blameless conduct. Multilingual renderings consistently use innocence/innocency terminology (inocencia, innocent, Reinheit), confirming this is fundamentally an ethical-moral term. In Hosea 8:5, it shifts slightly to denote freedom from deserved punishment. The conjunctive forms [ונקין] are occasionally bracketed, indicating textual or morphological interest. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3712 WITH 5 SENSES

en: and-in-innocence-of, in-innocence, innocence | es: en-inocencia, inocencia, y-en-inocencia-de | fr: dans-innocent, et-dans-innocence-de, innocent | de: [ונקין], innocence, und-in-der-Reinheit Gen 20:5; Ps 26:6; Ps 73:13; Hos 8:5

קֵהָיוֹן H5356b N-msc (1×)

cleanness, emptiness; absence of food, particularly famine conditions

This noun appears in Amos 4:6, where God gave Israel 'cleanness of teeth'—a euphemism for famine. Clean teeth mean no food to chew, nothing stuck between them. Some scholars propose reading 'bluntness' (from a root meaning dull) instead of 'cleanness,' but the traditional reading makes good sense as ironic metaphor. God's judgment took the form of empty stomachs and unstained teeth—the 'cleanness' of having nothing to eat. This understated imagery makes famine's horror more poignant through domestic detail.

(1×) Cleanness or emptiness, specifically the cleanness of teeth that comes from having no food. Amos 4:6 uses this phrase as a euphemism for famine—'I gave you cleanness of teeth in all your cities,' meaning absence of food to eat. The ironic image inverts positive connotations of cleanness, making it synonymous with deprivation. Spanish 'limpieza de' preserves the clean/empty wordplay. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cleanness-of | es: limpieza-de | fr: innocent | de: [נקיון] Amos 4:6

נָקִיק H5357 Conj-w (3×)

cleft of rock, rocky crevice; narrow opening in stone formations

This noun designates narrow clefts or crevices in rock faces—the kind of tight spaces where one can hide or where wild things nest. Isaiah 7:19 warns that the Egyptian and Assyrian forces will settle 'in all the clefts of the rocks' throughout Judah—every hiding place will harbor enemies. Jeremiah must hide his linen belt 'in a cleft of the rock' by the Euphrates as a prophetic sign (13:4), and later speaks of fishermen catching people 'from every cleft of the rocks' (16:16). The imagery suggests vulnerability—even the most secret, defensive positions offer no escape from judgment.

(3×) All three uses appear in judgment oracles where clefts symbolize hiding places that prove futile. Isaiah's clefts will shelter invading armies, while Jeremiah's rock-clefts become either hiding spots for prophetic props or fishing grounds where no one escapes the divine hunter. Cross-linguistic renderings preserve the rock-cleft imagery: 'hendidura de,' 'clefts of.' The construct form always specifies 'clefts of the rocks,' emphasizing these are natural geological features—the narrow cracks and crevices in limestone formations common to Palestine's terrain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-clefts-of, and-in-clefts-of, in-cleft-of | es: en-hendidura-de, y-de-hendiduras-de, y-en-hendiduras-de | fr: [בנקיק], [ובנקיק], [ומנקיק] | de: [בנקיק], [ובנקיק], [ומנקיק] Isa 7:19; Jer 13:4; Jer 16:16

נָקַם H5358 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjImperf.Cohort-1cs (35×)

To avenge, take vengeance; in Nifal, to avenge oneself; as participle, an avenger; in Piel, to execute full vengeance.

Naqam is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for retributive justice — the act of redressing a wrong through punitive action. Unlike modern connotations of blind revenge, biblical naqam is typically ordered, sanctioned, or restrained by God. The stem system carries the theology: the Qal describes straightforward vengeance-taking, the Nifal shifts the focus to the injured party avenging themselves, the Piel intensifies the thoroughness of divine retribution, and the Hofal marks the passive victim of avenged blood. Nahum 1:2 stacks three forms in one verse — naqam, noqem, noter — portraying God as the supreme Avenger. The multilingual evidence is remarkably unified: Spanish vengar, French venger, German raechen, and Arabic intaqama all preserve a single root for the concept, reflecting the universality of retributive justice as a moral category.

1. Nifal: avenge oneself (13×) Nifal reflexive: to avenge oneself or be avenged — the largest cluster at 13 occurrences, covering middle-voice constructions where the subject both suffers the wrong and enacts the retribution. The slave-owner's punishment 'shall be avenged' (Exod 21:20-21), Samson cries 'let me be avenged on the Philistines' (Judg 16:28), and Saul's rash oath binds Israel until 'I am avenged on my enemies' (1 Sam 14:24). Spanish vengarse and German sich raechen both select reflexive forms, confirming the middle-voice semantics. The Nifal here is not mere passivity but self-interested agency in justice. HANDING OVER

en: I-am-avenged, and-I-will-avenge-myself, and-I-will-be-avenged | es: me-vengo, para-vengarse, será-vengado | fr: [להנקם], et-je-fera-être-vengea, et-le-vengeance | de: [וינקמו], [ונקמו], er-soll-sein-raechte Exod 21:20; Exod 21:21; Judg 15:7; Judg 16:28; 1Sam 14:24

2. Qal: take vengeance (8×) Qal active: to take vengeance upon an enemy or wrongdoer — 8 occurrences of finite verbs and infinitives in the basic active stem. Moses is commanded 'avenge the Israelites on the Midianites' (Num 31:2); the sun stands still 'until the nation avenged itself' (Josh 10:13); and the great Song of Moses declares God 'will avenge the blood of his servants' (Deut 32:43). The Leviticus prohibition 'you shall not take vengeance' (Lev 19:18) uses this same form, showing that naqam in Qal is the unmarked, basic act of retribution — forbidden between Israelites but enacted by God on behalf of his people. HANDING OVER

en: and-may-avenge-me, avenge, avenging | es: Venga, al-vengarse, para-vengar | fr: et-peut-venge-moi, il-fera-venger, prit-vengeance | de: [בנקם], [לנקם], avenging Exod 21:20; Lev 19:18; Num 31:2; Deut 32:43; Josh 10:13

3. Hitpael: avenge oneself repeatedly (5×) Hitpael reflexive-intensive: to avenge oneself with emphatic or repeated force — 5 occurrences, all in prophetic rhetoric. Jeremiah's thrice-repeated question 'Shall I not avenge myself on such a nation as this?' (Jer 5:9, 29; 9:9) uses the Hitpael to convey God's sustained, searching deliberation before judgment. The intensifying-reflexive morphology suggests not a single act but an ongoing posture of vindicating justice. German and Spanish both use emphatic reflexive constructions here, while French venger appears without further intensification, suggesting the iterative nuance is harder to capture outside Semitic stem systems. HANDING OVER

en: and-avenger, and-the-avenger, avenge-itself | es: se-vengará, y-al-vengador, y-el-que-se-venga | fr: et-de-venger, venger | de: raechen, und-avenger, und-der-avenger Ps 8:2; Ps 44:16; Jer 5:9; Jer 5:29; Jer 9:9

4. Qal participle: avenger (5×) Qal participle: the avenger, one who takes vengeance — 5 occurrences, concentrated in the theologically dense Nahum 1:2, where three participial forms pile up: God is noqem ('an avenger'), noqem again (for emphasis), and ba'al chemah. Also in Leviticus 26:25 ('a sword avenging the covenant') and Psalm 99:8 ('an avenging God'). The participle crystallizes the verbal action into a character attribute — God is not merely someone who occasionally avenges but is by nature 'the Avenger.' Spanish vengador and German Raecher both use agent nouns, confirming the substantival force. HANDING OVER

en: and-avenging, avenging, but-avenging | es: vengador, vengadora-de, y-vengador | fr: avenging, et-venger, venger | de: aber-avenging, avenging, raechte Lev 26:25; Ps 99:8; Nah 1:2

5. Piel: execute vengeance (2×) Piel intensive: to execute vengeance thoroughly and deliberately — only 2 occurrences, at 2 Kings 9:7 (Jehu is anointed to 'avenge' the blood of the prophets on Jezebel's house) and Jeremiah 51:36 (God will 'avenge' Israel against Babylon). The Piel intensification signals comprehensive, divinely mandated retribution — not partial or personal, but the full settling of accounts. Spanish vengaré and French je ferai venger both use causative or emphatic future forms, matching the deliberate, thorough quality of the Piel. HANDING OVER

en: and-I-will-avenge, and-I-will-take-vengeance | es: y-vengaré | fr: et-je-fera-venge, et-venger | de: und-ich-wird-avenge, und-raechen 2Kgs 9:7; Jer 51:36

6. Hofal: be avenged (2×) Hofal passive: to be avenged (of blood or the victim) — 2 occurrences, both in Genesis 4, establishing the principle of blood-avengement at the dawn of human history. Cain is told that whoever kills him 'shall be avenged sevenfold' (Gen 4:15), and Lamech boasts of seventy-sevenfold vengeance (Gen 4:24). The Hofal passive places the victim's blood as subject — it is the blood that 'is avenged,' not the avenger who acts. Spanish será vengado and German wird gerächt both use passive voice, confirming the genuine passivization of the root. HANDING OVER

en: is-avenged-, shall-be-avenged | es: será-vengado, será-vengado- | fr: –être-vengea, est-vengea- | de: soll-gerächt-werden, wird-gerächt- Gen 4:15; Gen 4:24

נָקָם H5359 N-msc (17×)

Vengeance, retribution — the act of requiting wrongs, especially God's decisive judicial punishment against covenant-breakers and oppressors.

A masculine noun carrying the weight of retributive justice, naqam denotes the act of avenging wrongs or executing punishment — overwhelmingly attributed to God in the Hebrew Bible. Deuteronomy 32:35 declares 'vengeance is mine,' establishing Yahweh's sole prerogative to repay. Isaiah uses the word in phrases like 'day of vengeance' (34:8; 61:2) and 'garments of vengeance' (59:17), portraying God as a warrior-judge. In rare human usage — Samson's final act in Judges 16:28 and the Edomites' spite in Ezekiel 25:12 — the term underscores how deeply personal the concept of requital was in Israelite thought.

vengeance, retribution (17×) Vengeance or retribution as a theological and juridical concept, most often describing God's decisive punishment against enemies and covenant violators. The phrase 'vengeance of the covenant' in Leviticus 26:25 ties it explicitly to covenantal enforcement. Spanish 'venganza' and French 'vengeance' mirror the English precisely, while German 'Rache' adds the nuance of fierce, personal recompense. Passages like Isaiah 34:8 and Jeremiah 50:15 cast it in eschatological terms as a 'day' of cosmic reckoning. VENGEANCE RETRIBUTION

en: and-vengeance, of-vengeance, vengeance | es: de-venganza, es-la-venganza, la-venganza | fr: et-vengeance, vengeance, vengeance-de- | de: Rache, [נקם], und-vengeance Lev 26:25; Deut 32:35; Deut 32:41; Deut 32:43; Judg 16:28

נְקָמָה H5360 N-fsc / 3mp (27×)

vengeance, retribution — the act of divine or human repayment for wrong, especially in covenant justice contexts

Neqamah denotes vengeance or retribution, appearing 27 times with overwhelming concentration in prophetic literature expressing divine justice. Its most characteristic usage is 'the vengeance of YHWH' — the day when God settles accounts with oppressors. Jeremiah applies it repeatedly to Babylon's destruction: 'this is the vengeance of YHWH; take vengeance on her' (Jer 50:15, 28; 51:6, 11, 36). Ezekiel declares God will execute vengeance on Edom and Philistia through Israel's hand (Ezek 25:14, 17). The Psalms celebrate God as 'the God of vengeance' (Ps 94:1) who grants 'vengeance for me among the peoples' (Ps 18:47; 2 Sam 22:48). In Numbers 31:2-3, 'the vengeance of YHWH against Midian' is entrusted to Israel as holy war. Spanish 'venganza,' French 'vengeance,' German 'Rache' — the concept translates with remarkable directness across all languages.

vengeance, retribution (27×) Retributive justice or vengeance, predominantly divine, exacted against covenant-breakers and national enemies. Central to prophetic theology: Jeremiah announces YHWH's vengeance against Babylon (Jer 50:15, 28; 51:6, 11, 36), Ezekiel declares it against Edom and Philistia (Ezek 25:14, 17), and Jeremiah invokes it in personal lament (Jer 11:20; 20:12). In the Psalms, God is 'the God of vengeance' (Ps 94:1) who grants David vindication (Ps 18:47; 2 Sam 22:48). The holy war tradition frames Israel as agent of divine neqamah against Midian (Num 31:2-3). VENGEANCE RETRIBUTION

en: my-vengeance, the-vengeance-of, vengeance | es: mi-venganza, venganza, venganza-de | fr: vengeance, vengeance-de, vengeance-de- | de: Rache, Rache-von, [נקמתי] Num 31:2; Num 31:3; Judg 11:36; 2Sam 4:8; 2Sam 22:48

נָקַע H5361 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (3×)

to be severed, alienated, estranged; emotional/relational breaking

This verb expresses being severed or estranged, used only in Ezekiel's allegory of Oholah and Oholibah (Jerusalem and Samaria personified as unfaithful sisters). Three times God declares 'my soul was alienated from her' (Ezekiel 23:18, 22, 28)—the same language used when his soul was estranged from Israel's sister. The root suggests violent separation or rupture, related to words meaning 'split' or 'rend.' The Qal perfect form with 'my soul' as subject creates striking theological language: God's very being recoils from the covenant partner who has become repulsive through infidelity.

(3×) All three instances occur within a single chapter (Ezekiel 23), forming a refrain in the sister-cities allegory. The phrase 'my soul was alienated' captures God's deep revulsion at spiritual adultery—his affection and commitment torn away by persistent unfaithfulness. Spanish 'se-apartó' (departed/turned away) and French 'arracher' (tear away) convey the violent separation. The parallel structure across all three verses—'just as my soul was estranged from her sister'—reinforces that both kingdoms experienced the same divine alienation, the ultimate covenant curse. BREAKING AND UPROOTING

en: was-alienated | es: se-apartó | fr: arracher | de: [נקעה] Ezek 23:18; Ezek 23:22; Ezek 23:28

נָקַף H5362a Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (2×)

to strike off, cut away—remove or destroy by striking, often of cutting away vegetation or flesh

This verb means to strike off, cut away, or destroy by striking. It appears in two vivid contexts: Job 19:26 uses it of disease striking away or destroying Job's skin, while Isaiah 10:34 employs it as a metaphor for God cutting down the thickets of the forest (representing proud nations). The root may be related to words meaning to strike or wound, and possibly to mutilation. The imagery is consistently one of violent removal or destruction, whether literal (skin ravaged by disease) or metaphorical (kingdoms cut down like forest undergrowth).

(2×) The verb denotes striking off or cutting away, with connotations of destruction or removal through violent action. In Job 19:26, it describes the ravaging effects of Job's disease on his skin ('after my skin, which they have struck off'). In Isaiah 10:34, it appears in a metaphor of divine judgment where the forest thickets are struck away. The multilingual glosses show interpretive variation: Spanish and English emphasize cutting/destroying ('cortados,' 'destroyed'), while the action remains one of forceful removal or demolition. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-he-cuts-down, they-have-destroyed | es: Y-serán-cortados, hayan-destruido- | fr: [ונקף], נקפו | de: [ונקף], [נקפו] Job 19:26; Isa 10:34

נָקַף H5362b V-Hifil-Perf-3cp / 1cs (17×)

Go around, encircle, surround; to circuit, close in on hostilely, or complete a cycle of time

A verb of circular motion that ranges from military siege to liturgical procession. Enemies 'surround' the psalmist like a closing net (Ps 17:9; 22:17), and armies encircle cities under siege (2 Kgs 6:14). But the same root describes Israel's triumphant march around Jericho (Josh 6:3, 11) and the psalmist's invitation to 'walk about Zion' in wonder (Ps 48:12). Spanish distinguishes the moods well — 'rodearán' for hostile encirclement, 'rodeando' for neutral circling. In one striking instance (Lev 19:27), it refers to rounding off the hair of the temples, and in Job 1:5, to the completion of a cycle of feast days.

1. surround or encircle hostilely (9×) To surround or encircle with hostile intent — enemies, dangers, or divine judgment closing in from all sides. Psalm 17:9 describes deadly foes who 'encircle me,' and Psalm 22:17 echoes the same with 'dogs have surrounded me.' Job 19:6 uses it of God's net closing around a sufferer. In 2 Kings 6:14, the Aramean army surrounds Dothan by night. Spanish 'rodearán/rodearon' and the consistent Hifil stem emphasize deliberate, purposeful encirclement meant to trap or destroy. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: He-has-closed, and-surrounded, and-they-surrounded | es: Y-rodearán, Y-rodearéis, ha-cerrado. | fr: [והקיפה], [והקיפו], [ויקף] | de: [הקיף], [הקיפה], [והקיפו] 2Kgs 6:14; 2Kgs 11:8; 2Chr 23:7; Job 19:6; Ps 17:9

2. go around in circuit (6×) To go around, circuit, or encircle in a non-hostile sense — a processional march, architectural description, or surveying movement. Joshua 6:3 and 6:11 describe Israel circling Jericho as a ritual act of faith, while Psalm 48:12 invites pilgrims to 'go around Zion, encircle her.' In 1 Kings 7:24 and 2 Chronicles 4:3, it describes ornamental gourds encircling the rim of the bronze sea. Spanish 'cercando' and 'rodeando' capture the neutral, descriptive quality of movement around a perimeter. AROUND AND SURROUNDING

en: and-go-around-her, encircling, let-them-go-around | es: cercando, que-cumplan-su-ciclo, rodeando | fr: [ינקפו], [מקיפים], encircling | de: [ינקפו], [מקיפים], encircling Josh 6:3; Josh 6:11; 1Kgs 7:24; 2Chr 4:3; Ps 48:12

3. round off or cut around (1×) To round off or cut in a circular fashion — specifically the prohibited practice of rounding the corners of the head in Leviticus 19:27. This lone occurrence applies the root's circular-motion meaning to the act of trimming hair around the temples, a practice associated with pagan mourning rites. Spanish 'cortaréis en redondo' (you shall cut in a circle) makes the spatial geometry explicit in a way that English 'round off' only hints at. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: round-off | es: cortaréis-en-redondo | fr: round-off | de: round-weg Lev 19:27

4. complete a cycle (1×) To complete a full cycle of recurring events — days, feasts, or appointed times coming full circle. In Job 1:5, after Job's sons 'had completed' their round of feast days, Job would rise early to offer sacrifices. Isaiah 29:1 uses the Qal imperfect: 'let feasts run their round.' Spanish 'terminaban' (they were finishing) and the temporal context show this is about cyclical completion rather than spatial movement. The root metaphor of going around naturally extends to the idea of time coming back to its starting point. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: had-completed | es: terminaban | fr: הקיפו | de: [הקיפו] Job 1:5

נֶקֶף H5363 Prep-k / N-msc (2×)

striking (of olive trees)—the act of beating olive trees to harvest the fruit

This noun refers to the striking or beating of olive trees to knock down the fruit for harvest. The term appears only in similes in Isaiah, where it describes the few olives left after the tree has been beaten, illustrating how few people will remain after God's judgment. The image would be familiar to Isaiah's audience: after harvesters beat the olive trees with poles to gather the fruit, only a few scattered olives remain in the highest branches. This agricultural practice becomes a powerful metaphor for the remnant that survives divine judgment.

(2×) Denotes the act of striking or beating olive trees during harvest, used only in comparative phrases ('as at the striking of olive trees') in Isaiah 17:6 and 24:13. The image conveys the idea of gleaning or remnant—just as a few olives remain after beating the trees, so few people will be left after judgment. The multilingual glosses capture this with terms like 'beating' (English), 'sacudida' (Spanish = shaking), and 'striking,' all referring to the harvest technique of striking branches to dislodge olives. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-striking-of, like-the-beating | es: como-sacudida-de, como-sacudir | fr: [כנקף] | de: [כנקף] Isa 17:6; Isa 24:13

נִקְפָּה H5364 N-fs (1×)

rope, cord; a binding rope, possibly one used for prisoners or captives

This noun appears in Isaiah 3:24, describing the reversals coming upon Jerusalem's elite women: 'instead of a sash, a rope.' The contrast juxtaposes elegant dress with prisoner's bonds. The term suggests an encircling rope, perhaps used to bind captives or as a crude belt replacement. The root may relate to surrounding or encircling. This transformation from luxury to captivity epitomizes Isaiah's judgment oracle—the fashionable accessories of chapter 3's opening verses will be replaced by marks of slavery and disgrace.

(1×) A rope or cord, specifically one that encircles or binds, possibly used for captives. Isaiah 3:24 contrasts the fine sash worn by wealthy women with the rope of captivity: 'instead of a sash, a rope.' Spanish 'soga' (rope) captures the binding instrument. The context of judgment oracles suggests this rope marks the transition from luxury to enslavement, from decorative belts to prisoner's bonds. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: rope | es: soga | fr: [נקפה] | de: [נקפה] Isa 3:24

נָקַר H5365 V-Piel-Imperf-2ms (6×)

To bore out, gouge, or dig; especially of gouging out eyes, also of piercing bones or quarrying stone.

A verb meaning to bore, gouge, or pick out, with a visceral physicality that makes it one of the more graphic terms in Hebrew Scripture. Its most common application is to the gouging out of eyes: Nahash the Ammonite threatened to gouge out the right eye of every man of Jabesh-gilead (1 Sam 11:2), and the Philistines gouged out Samson's eyes after his capture (Judg 16:21). Proverbs 30:17 warns that ravens will 'pick out' the mocking eye. In Job 30:17, the word shifts to describe bones being pierced by relentless pain. Isaiah 51:1 uses the Pual passive for the quarry from which Israel was 'dug.' The French and Spanish glosses ('crevant,' 'sacar,' 'excavados') capture both the violent extraction and the quarrying senses.

bore out, gouge out, pick out (6×) To bore, gouge, or pick out forcefully, primarily describing the violent extraction of eyes. The Qal form appears in 1 Samuel 11:2 (Nahash's threat) and Proverbs 30:17 (ravens picking out the eye), while the Piel intensifies the action in Judges 16:21 (Samson's blinding) and Numbers 16:14 (a rhetorical accusation). Job 30:17 extends the imagery to bones being 'bored through' by disease. Isaiah 51:1 uniquely applies the Pual passive to quarrying stone, broadening the semantic range from violent bodily harm to excavation. Spanish 'excavados' (quarried) alongside 'sacar' (to extract) reflects this dual application across traditions. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-gouged-out, in-gouging-out, pierces | es: en-sacar, fuisteis-excavados, lo-sacarán | fr: [נקרתם], dans-crevant-dehors, et-gouged-dehors | de: [יקרוה], [נקר], [נקרתם] Num 16:14; Judg 16:21; 1Sam 11:2; Job 30:17; Prov 30:17

נְקָרָה H5366 Prep-b / N-fpc (2×)

cleft, crevice—a split or fissure in rock, a hollow place for hiding or shelter

This noun denotes a cleft, crevice, or hole in rock formations. It appears in two contexts: Exodus 33:22 describes the cleft of the rock where God placed Moses to protect him while the divine glory passed by, and Isaiah 2:21 mentions people fleeing to clefts of the rocks to hide from God's terror and majesty. The word evokes images of natural fissures in rocky terrain, deep enough to provide shelter or concealment. In both passages, rock clefts serve as places of refuge, whether from divine glory (Exodus) or divine judgment (Isaiah).

(2×) Refers to a cleft, crevice, or hollow in rock, serving as a place of shelter or hiding. In Exodus 33:22, God places Moses in 'the cleft of the rock' while divine glory passes, protecting him from the full sight of God's face. In Isaiah 2:21, people flee 'into clefts of the rocks' to escape the terror of the Lord's judgment. The translations consistently use terms for rock fissures: 'cleft' (English), 'hendidura' (Spanish = cleft), 'fente' (French = crack), emphasizing the protective function of these natural rock shelters. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-cleft-of, into-clefts-of | es: en-hendiduras-de, en-la-hendidura-de | fr: [בנקרות], dans-fente-de | de: [בנקרות], in-cleft-von Exod 33:22; Isa 2:21

נָקַשׁ H5367 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

to strike down, ensnare, lay a snare; to trap or entangle someone

Originally meaning 'to knock or strike' (cf. Aramaic nqash, 'to strike'), this verb specializes in Hebrew as a figure for ensnaring — bringing someone down the way a hunter brings down a bird with a thrown stick. Spanish 'atrape con lazo' ('catch with a snare') and French 'prendre au piege' ('catch in a trap') capture the hunting imagery well. It appears in warnings against idolatrous entanglement (Deut 12:30), in psalmists' descriptions of enemies laying traps (Ps 38:12; 109:11), and in the ironic reversal where the wicked are caught in their own net (Ps 9:16).

(5×) To lay a snare or set a trap for someone, actively plotting their downfall. Spanish 'ponen trampas' and French 'prendre au piege' convey the deliberate, predatory intent. Psalm 38:12 describes enemies who 'lay snares' while the psalmist is afflicted; Psalm

109:11 envisions a creditor ensnaring all the wicked man's goods. Deuteronomy 12:30 warns Israel not to be ensnared by pagan worship practices. SNARES AND TRAPS

en: and-lay-snares, is-snared, laying-a-snare | es: Atrape-con-lazo, Y-ponen-trampas, fue-enlazado | fr: et-prendre-au-piège, posant-un-snare, prendre-au-piège | de: du-sein-ensnared, ist-snared, lass-ensnare Deut 12:30; 1Sam 28:9; Ps 9:16; Ps 38:12; Ps 109:11

נָקַשׁ H5368 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fp (1×)

knocking, striking; the action of knees hitting together in fear or weakness

This Aramaic participle appears in Daniel 5:6, describing King Belshazzar's physical reaction to the writing on the wall: his knees were 'knocking together.' The verb captures the involuntary trembling of terror, with knees literally striking each other. The idiom 'one against another' emphasizes the violent shaking. This physical manifestation of fear—knees too weak to stand, trembling uncontrollably—illustrates Belshazzar's complete psychological collapse at the supernatural sign. The Aramaic form parallels Hebrew vocabulary for striking or beating.

(1×) To knock or strike together, specifically describing knees hitting each other in fear. Daniel 5:6 uses this participle for Belshazzar's knees 'knocking one against another' when the mysterious hand writes on the wall. Spanish 'golpeaban' (were striking) captures the repeated striking action. This vivid physical detail—knees shaking so violently they strike together—communicates absolute terror that robs the body of strength and control. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: knocking | es: golpeaban | fr: frapper | de: [נקשן] Dan 5:6

נֵר H5369 N-proper-ms (16×)

Ner — personal name meaning 'lamp,' father of Abner and a Benjaminite ancestor of Saul

The name Ner means 'lamp' or 'light,' a fitting designation for the patriarch of a family that would produce Israel's first royal dynasty. Ner is primarily known as the father of Abner, Saul's powerful military commander (1 Sam 14:50–51; 2 Sam 2:8; 1 Kgs 2:5, 32). The Chronicler also identifies a Ner as the father of Kish and thus the grandfather of Saul (1 Chr 8:33; 9:36, 39), though the precise genealogical relationship between these two Ners has long been debated. Nearly every occurrence appears in the patronymic formula 'Abner son of Ner.'

Ner (16×) Proper masculine name meaning 'lamp,' identifying a Benjaminite ancestor within Saul's royal lineage. The name occurs almost exclusively in the patronymic phrase 'Abner son of Ner' across Samuel and Kings (1 Sam 14:50; 26:5, 14; 2 Sam 2:8, 12; 3:23, 25, 28, 37). The Chronicler's genealogy places a Ner as Kish's father (1 Chr 8:33; 9:39), raising questions about whether one or two individuals are intended. The domain assignment as ARTIFACTS is misleading — this is strictly a personal name. LAMPS AND TORCHES

en: Ner, and-Ner | es: Ner, Y-Ner, y-Ner | fr: Ner, [ונר], [נר] | de: Ner, [ונר], [נר] 1Sam 14:50; 1Sam 14:51; 1Sam 26:5; 1Sam 26:14; 2Sam 2:8

נֵרְגַל H5370 N-proper-ms (1×)

Nergal; a Mesopotamian deity associated with war, plague, and the underworld

This divine name appears in 2 Kings 17:30, where the people of Cuth made Nergal their god after being resettled in Samaria by the Assyrians. Nergal was a major Mesopotamian deity, associated with war, pestilence, and the underworld. Astronomical traditions connected him with Mars. His cult center was Cuthah (biblical Cuth) near Babylon, making this reference historically accurate—the Cutheans brought their patron deity with them. Nergal also appears in Phoenician inscriptions. This example illustrates the religious syncretism that resulted from Assyrian deportation policies.

(1×) A Mesopotamian god worshiped by deportees from Cuth who were resettled in Samaria. 2 Kings 17:30 identifies Nergal as the deity made by the men of Cuth, accurately reflecting historical reality —Cuthah was Nergal's cult center. Cross-linguistic translations uniformly transliterate the divine name ('Nergal'), as proper names for deities are preserved. This illustrates the religious mixture that followed Assyrian population transfers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Nergal | es: Nergal | fr: Nergal | de: Nergal 2Kgs 17:30

נֵרְגַל שַׂרְאֶצֶר H5371 N-proper-ms (7×)

Nergal-Sharezer; a Babylonian official present at the fall of Jerusalem, bearing a name meaning 'Nergal, protect the king.'

A compound Akkadian proper name borne by a Babylonian official in Nebuchadnezzar's entourage during the siege and fall of Jerusalem in 586 BCE. The name combines the Babylonian deity Nergal with the prayer element 'protect the king' (shar-usur). He appears in Jeremiah 39:3,13, where he is listed among the officials who entered Jerusalem after its walls were breached, and who later facilitated the release of Jeremiah from prison at Nebuchadnezzar's command.

Nergal-Saretser (Babylonian official) (7×) The compound proper name of a Babylonian dignitary, Nergal-Sharezer (Akkadian Nergal-shar-usur, 'O Nergal, protect the king'), who held the title Rab-mag ('chief soothsayer' or 'chief official') in the army of Nebuchadnezzar II. In Jeremiah 39:3 he is named among those who sat in the middle gate of Jerusalem after its fall, and in Jer 39:13 he participates in the delegation that retrieves Jeremiah from the court of the guard. Some scholars identify him with the later Babylonian king Neriglissar (560-556 BCE). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Etser, Nergal, and-Nergal-Saretser | es: Etser, Nergal, oficial-de | fr: [אצר], [ונרגל שראצר], [נרגל] | de: Fuerst, [אצר], [ונרגל שראצר] Jer 39:3

נָרַן H5372 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-ms (4×)

to murmur, whisper, backbite; used of rebellious complaining or malicious gossip

This verb carries two related senses: murmuring in rebellion (as Israel murmured against God in the wilderness) and whispering maliciously as a slanderer or gossip. In Deuteronomy 1:27 and Psalm 106:25, it describes the Israelites' rebellious murmuring in their tents. In Proverbs (16:28, 18:8, 26:20, 22), the participial form denotes a "whisperer" or slanderer who stirs up conflict through secretive, malicious speech.

(4×) Describes the act of murmuring rebelliously or whispering maliciously. The Proverbs passages focus on the "whisperer" (נִרְגָּן), a figure who spreads strife through gossip and slander. Cross-linguistic glosses reflect both aspects: Spanish "chismoso/murmurador" (gossip/murmurer), French "calomniateur" (slanderer), English "whisperer." German translations bracket forms like [ונרגן] and [נרגן], possibly indicating rare or morphologically interesting attestations. The term captures both open complaint and covert slander. MURMUR GRUMBLE COMPLAIN

en: a-whisperer, and-whisperer, whisperer | es: chismoso, murmurador, y-el-murmurador | fr: calomniateur, et-calomniateur | de: [ונרגן], [נרגן] Prov 16:28; Prov 18:8; Prov 26:20; Prov 26:22

נֵרְד H5373 N-msc / 1cs (3×)

nard, an aromatic plant from India; used for perfume and anointing

This noun refers to nard (or spikenard), a highly valued aromatic plant imported from India through Persia. The beloved in Song of Songs says 'while the king was at his table, my nard gave forth its fragrance' (1:12)—evoking intimate presence through expensive perfume. Nard appears in the garden's spice inventory: 'nard and saffron, calamus and cinnamon' (4:13-14). The plant's East Asian origin made it a luxury item in the ancient Mediterranean world. New Testament readers remember Mary's anointing of Jesus with pure nard (Mark 14:3), 'very costly'—the same exotic substance celebrated here for its fragrance and rarity.

(3×) All three occurrences are in Song of Songs' celebration of fragrance and beauty. The possessive 'my nard' (1:12) suggests personal possession of costly perfume. The plural 'nards' (4:13) may indicate multiple varieties or simply poetic intensification alongside other aromatics. The final mention (4:14) lists it first among exotic spices. Cross-linguistic renderings are straightforward transliterations (Nardo, Nard, Narde), reflecting the plant's foreign origin—a borrowed word for a borrowed luxury. The fragrance evokes intimacy, beauty, and the beloved's worth. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: my-nard, nard | es: Nardo, mi-nardo, nardos | fr: Nard, du-nard., mon-nard | de: Narde, [נרדי], [נרדים] Song 1:12; Song 4:13; Song 4:14

נְרִיָּהוּ H5374 N-proper-ms (10×)

Neriah (Neriyah/Neriyahu), father of Baruch the scribe and Seraiah; a Judahite from the time of Jeremiah.

The personal name meaning 'lamp of Yah' or 'Yahweh is my light,' borne by the father of two important figures in the book of Jeremiah: Baruch the scribe (Jer 32:12; 36:4, 8, 32) and Seraiah the quartermaster (Jer 51:59). The name appears in both its longer form Neriyahu (with the theophoric -yahu suffix, Jer 36:14, 32; 43:6; 45:1) and the shorter Neriyah (Jer 32:12, 16; 36:4, 8; 43:3). Baruch ben Neriah served as Jeremiah's faithful secretary, reading the prophetic scroll publicly and preserving the prophet's oracles for posterity.

(10×) The proper name Neriah/Neriyahu, meaning 'lamp of Yahweh,' identifying the father of Baruch the scribe and Seraiah. He is consistently identified as 'Neriah/Neriyahu' in patronymic formulae ('Baruch son of Neriah') throughout Jeremiah's narrative. The longer theophoric form Neriyahu (Jer 36:14; 43:6; 45:1) alternates freely with the shorter Neriyah (Jer 32:12; 36:4), as is common with -yahu/-yah names. Spanish 'Nerías,' French 'Néria,' and German 'Nerija' all reflect slightly different transliteration conventions of the same Hebrew name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Neriyah, Neriyahu | es: Neriyah, Neriyahu, Nerías | fr: Néria | de: Nerija Jer 32:12; Jer 32:16; Jer 36:4; Jer 36:8; Jer 36:14

נָשָׂא H5375 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms / 3ms (654×)

to lift, carry, bear; to take, receive; to forgive sin; to exalt, raise up (eyes, voice, hands, head)

The verb appears 654 times across a remarkably wide semantic range anchored in physical upward motion. From raising one's eyes to heaven (Gen 18:2) to bearing the ark poles (Exod 25:14), from taking a census (Exod 30:12) to forgiving iniquity (Gen 50:17), the thread connecting all senses is movement—upward, outward, or inward. The Qal stem handles most meanings, while Piel intensifies ('sustain, exalt'), Niphal marks passive elevation, and Hitpael reflexive self-exaltation. Multilingual evidence reveals fascinating patterns: Spanish distinguishes alzar (lift) from llevar (carry) from perdonar (forgive), while Korean uses distinct roots for physical lifting (들다), carrying (나르다), and forgiving (용서하다)—yet Hebrew collapses all into this single versatile root.

1. Qal: to lift up, raise (330×) Physical or metaphorical upward motion dominates 330 occurrences. Abraham 'lifted his eyes' (Gen 18:2), Jacob 'lifted his voice and wept' (Gen 21:16), Abraham 'lifted up his eyes and saw the ram' (Gen 22:13). Spanish consistently uses alzar/levantar (raise), French élever/lever (lift up), German erheben (elevate), and Korean 들다 (lift). The evidence spans lifting eyes, hands, voice, head, and abstract concepts like soul or heart. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: and-he-lifted, and-he-lifted-up, and-lifted-up | es: Y-alzó, Y-levantó, y-alzó | fr: et-il-leva-en-haut, et-il-éleva, et-leva-en-haut | de: und-er-erhob-hinauf, und-erhob, und-erhob-hinauf Gen 18:2; Gen 21:16; Gen 22:4; Gen 22:13; Gen 24:63

2. Qal: to carry, bear, transport (205×) Carrying physical loads appears 205 times, distinct from mere lifting. Joseph's brothers 'carried' him to Egypt (Gen 46:5), poles designed 'to bear' the ark (Exod 25:14), Levites appointed as 'bearers' (participle form). Spanish shifts to llevar/contener (carry/contain), Korean to 나르다 (transport), Arabic ʿ (bear burden). The participial 'bearers of' construction appears frequently in temple service contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bearers-of, to-bear, to-carry | es: Para-llevar, llevar, para-contener | fr: bearers-de, porter, à-porter | de: bearers-von, erheben, um-zu-tragen Gen 45:27; Gen 46:5; Exod 25:14; Exod 25:27; Exod 30:4

3. Qal: to take, receive, obtain (27×) Taking or receiving (27x) includes 'take a wife' (Gen 27:3), 'take a census' (Exod 30:12, literally 'lift the head'), and 'receive favor.' The idiom nasa rosh (lift head) = take census appears across Numbers. Spanish uses tomar (take), Korean 취하다 (acquire), Hindi लेना (take). This sense overlaps with acquisition and acceptance rather than physical motion. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: and-they-took, and-took, and-took- | es: Alzad, Toma, Tomen | fr: avoir-je-pris, avoir-pris, et-ils-prit | de: erheben, erheben-hinauf, erhob Gen 27:3; Exod 20:7; Exod 30:12; Num 1:2; Num 3:40

4. Qal: to forgive, take away sin (23×) The theological idiom 'carry away sin' (nasa avon/chattat) appears 23 times meaning 'forgive.' God asks, 'Will you spare the city if I find fifty righteous?' (Gen 18:24, literally 'will you lift/carry [away the sin]'). Moses pleads, 'Forgive our iniquity' (Exod 34:9). Spanish uses perdonar (forgive), Korean 용서하다 (forgive), Arabic ʿ (forgive)—completely different roots, yet Hebrew retains the 'carrying away' metaphor. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: and-I-will-spare, and-forgive, are-forgiven | es: Aceptar, Perdonador-de, Perdonaste | fr: et-Je—épargner, et-porter, forgiving | de: bearing, du-vergab, du-wird-vergeben Gen 18:24; Gen 18:26; Gen 50:17; Exod 10:17

5. Niphal: to be lifted, exalted (19×) Niphal passive forms (19x) mark being lifted or exalted. 'I will lift Myself up above the hills' (Ps 7:6, reflexive Niphal). 'David perceived the LORD had exalted him' (1 Chr 14:2, Niphal perfect). Spanish uses ser elevado (be lifted), Korean 높아지다 (become high), French être porté (be carried). The passive sense focuses on the state of elevation rather than the act. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: I-will-lift-Myself-up, above-the-hills, and-be-lifted-up | es: elevada, elevadas, enaltecido | fr: et—être-porta, et-fera-être-emporta, et-il-a-porté | de: erheben, erhob, und-erhob Exod 25:28; 2Sam 19:42; 2Kgs 20:17; 1Chr 14:2; Ps 7:6

6. Qal: to bear, endure consequence (17×) Bearing guilt or punishment as consequence (17x) differs from forgiving it. 'The land could not bear them' (Gen 13:6, sustain their wealth). 'I cannot bear the burden of all these people' (Num 11:14). 'Bear your own iniquity' (Ezek 4:4-6, suffer punishment). Spanish uses cargar/soportar (endure), Korean 짊어지다 (shoulder burden), Arabic ʿ (endure). The subject suffers rather than removes the sin. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: I-bear, I-bore, I-carried | es: Carga, cargado-con, de-soportarlas | fr: enfanta, et-lever, et-porter | de: Baer, erheben, erhob Gen 13:6; Gen 36:7; Deut 1:12; 1Sam 15:25; 1Sam 25:28

7. Qal: to lift face, show partiality (7×) The idiom nasa panim (lift face) = show partiality appears 7 times. 'The LORD does not show partiality' (Deut 10:17, literally 'does not lift faces'). Spanish glosses shift to hacer acepción de (show favoritism), Korean 편애하다 (favor partially). The expression pictures raising one's face toward someone of higher status, granting them undue favor. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: and-he-takes, and-lifted-of, and-lifted-up | es: hace-acepción-de, le-impulsó, les-impulsó | fr: et-leva-en-haut, et-porter, lève | de: erhob, erhob-ihn, lifts Exod 35:21; Exod 35:26; Exod 36:2; Deut 10:17; 2Kgs 5:1

8. Piel: to lift up, sustain, exalt (5×) Piel intensive (5x) marks active exaltation or sustaining. 'The LORD exalted David' (2 Sam 5:12, Piel). Solomon's officers 'supplied provisions' (1 Kgs 9:11, Piel sustained/supported). Spanish uses exaltar/proveer (exalt/provide), Korean 높이다/공급하다 (exalt/supply). The Piel adds intensity or causation to the basic lift/carry idea. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: He-exalted, and-they-supported, he-exalted-him | es: fue-exaltado, lo-exaltó, proveyó | fr: Il-exalta, et-porter, porter | de: He-exalted, erhob, supplied 2Sam 5:12; 1Kgs 9:11; Ezra 1:4; Ezra 8:36; Esth 5:11

9. Hitpael: to exalt oneself (3×) Hitpael reflexive (3x) means self-exaltation. 'Do you exalt yourselves above the assembly?' (Num 16:3). 'His kingdom shall be exalted' (Num 24:7, Hitpael reflexive). Spanish uses enaltecerse (exalt oneself), Korean 스스로 높이다 (self-elevate), French s'exalter (raise oneself). The reflexive stem emphasizes the agent acting upon himself. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: and-he-was-exalted, and-lifted-up, do-you-exalt-yourselves | es: os-enaltecéis, y-fue-exaltado, y-se-ensalzará | fr: et-leva-en-haut, et-porter, faire-

tu-exalter-vous-mêmes | de: tun-du-erhoehen-euch-selbst, und-erheben, und-erhob-hinauf Num 16:3; Num 24:7; 2Chr 32:23

10. Qal: to carry away, sweep away (3×) Carrying away by force (3x) includes wind or flood. 'Our iniquities, like the wind, have carried us away' (Isa 64:6). 'The watchmen took away my veil' (Song 5:7). Spanish uses arrastrar/quitar (sweep away/strip off), Korean 휩쓸다 (sweep), Arabic ´ (carry off forcefully). The sense involves removal by external violent force. BEARING AND CARRYING en: and-carried-off, carry-us-away, they-lifted | es: nos-arrastran, quitaron, y-tomó | fr: et-emporta-au-loin, ils-ont-enlevé, lever | de: erheben, erhob, und-trug-ab 1Sam 17:34; Song 5:7; Isa 64:6

11. Qal: to wear, bear upon oneself (3×) Wearing or bearing upon one's person (3x) describes garments or equipment. 'Ahimelech wearing an ephod' (1 Sam 14:3, literally 'bearing an ephod'). Spanish uses vestir/portar (wear/bear), Korean 입다 (wear), French porter (carry/wear). The participial construction indicates the ongoing state of wearing. BEARING AND CARRYING en: am-lifting, wearing | es: considero, portador-de, que-vestían | fr: am-levant, portant | de: am-erhebend, wearing 1Sam 14:3; 1Sam 22:18; 2Kgs 3:14

12. (2×) Two unclear occurrences (2 Sam 8:2, 8:6) glossed as 'bearers of' across languages suggest tribute bearers or gift bringers, but context is ambiguous. Spanish portadores, Korean 나르는 자들 (those who carry), French bearers de. May overlap with sense 2 (carriers) but applied to nations rather than temple servants. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: bearers-of | es: portadores-de | fr: bearers-de | de: bearers-von 2Sam 8:2; 2Sam 8:6

13. Qal passive: lifted, honored (2×) Qal passive participle (2x) describes honorable state. 'Bring an offering' (Ps 96:8, literally 'bring what is lifted/honored'). 'You who have been borne by Me from birth' (Isa 46:3). Spanish uses traer/los llevados (bring/the carried ones), Korean 실려진 자들 (those carried). The passive participle marks the state resulting from being lifted or honored. BEARING AND CARRYING en: bring, those-lifted | es: los-llevados, traed | fr: lever, porter | de: erheben, erhob Ps 96:8; Isa 46:3

14. Hifil: to cause to bear (2×) Hifil causative (2x) means causing others to bear burden. 'They shall cause them to bear the punishment' (Lev 22:16). 'We will bring ropes to that city' (2 Sam 17:13, literally 'cause to be carried'). Spanish usar hacer llevar (cause to carry), Korean 지게 하다 (make carry), French faire porter (make bear). The Hifil adds causation: making someone else lift/carry. BEARING AND CARRYING en: and-they-shall-cause-them-to-bear, and-will-bring | es: Y-harán-llevar, y-traerán | fr: et-fera-apporte, et-ils-devra-cause-eux-à-porter | de: und-sie-soll-cause-ihnen-zu-tragen, und-wird-bringe Lev 22:16; 2Sam 17:13

15. (1×) 'You shall not lift a false report' (Exod 23:1, 1x). Spanish levantar (lift up), Korean 들다 (lift). The single occurrence suggests 'lift/spread' a false rumor, though some translate 'join in' a false report. Context involves legal testimony. ASCENDING MOVEMENT
en: you-shall-lift-up | es: levantarás | fr: tu—élever-en-haut | de: du-soll-erheben-hinauf Exod 23:1

16. (1×) 'I will not take up their drink offerings of blood' (Ps 16:4, 1x). Spanish tomar (take), Korean 들다 (lift/take), French porter (carry). David refuses to participate in pagan libations. The sense overlaps with 'take, receive' (#3) but in a cultic refusal context. BEARING AND CARRYING en: I-will-take-up | es: tomaré | fr: porter | de: erhob Ps 16:4

17. (1×) 'I have lifted my hand to the LORD' (Gen 19:21, 1x, Abraham). Spanish levantar (lift), Korean 들다 (raise), French élever (lift up). The gesture of raising hand signals an oath or solemn promise to God. Single occurrence of this specific oath formula with nasa. BEARING AND CARRYING en: I-have-lifted | es: he-levantado | fr: Je-avoir-éleva | de: ich-habe-erhoben Gen 19:21

18. (1×) 'When one lifts up a signal' (Isa 18:3, 1x). Spanish alzar (raise), Korean 들다 (lift), French lever (raise). Refers to raising a military banner or signal flag. The temporal 'when lifting' construction appears only here with this object. LIFTING AND REMOVING en: when-lifting-of- | es: cuando-alzar- | fr: lever | de: wie-erhob Isa 18:3

19. (1×) 'When I lift up my hands toward Your holy sanctuary' (Ps 28:2, 1x). Spanish alzar (lift up), Korean 들다 (raise), French porter (carry). Gesture of prayer with uplifted hands. Similar to #1 (lift hands) but in unique prayer construction 'toward Your sanctuary.' BEARING AND CARRYING en: when-I-lift-up | es: cuando-alzo | fr: dans-porter | de: erhob Ps 28:2

20. (1×) 'You carried the ark of your king' (1 Kgs 2:26, 1x, Abiathar). Spanish llevar (carry), Korean 나르다 (bear), French porter (carry). Unique occurrence addressing Abiathar's role carrying the ark during David's flight. Overlaps with #2 (carry) but in unique historical reference. BEARING AND CARRYING en: you-carried | es: llevaste | fr: tu-emporta | de: du-trug 1Kgs 2:26

נְשָׂא H5376 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-fs (3×)

to lift, take, carry; Aramaic verb for bearing or uprising

This Aramaic verb describes lifting, carrying, or taking. The basic stem (Pe'al) appears when wind 'carries away' the shattered kingdoms in Daniel's vision (2:35) and when commanded to 'take' the temple vessels to Jerusalem (Ezra 5:15). The Hithpael stem means 'make a rising, insurrection,' describing a city that 'lifts itself up' in rebellion (Ezra 4:19). The semantic range moves from physical transport to metaphorical uprising. The Aramaic context fits the Persian-period documents in Ezra and the Babylonian court setting in Daniel.

(3×) Daniel 2:35's wind that 'carried away' the statue fragments illustrates divine judgment scattering earthly kingdoms—complete removal leaving no trace. Ezra 5:15 uses the imperative 'take!' for transporting holy vessels, while Ezra 4:19 employs the reflexive stem for seditious uprising against authority. Multilingual renderings differentiate between literal carrying ('lo-llevó,' 'carried-away') and rebellious lifting ('se-levanta,' 'lifting-up'). The Aramaic נְשָׂא parallels Hebrew נָשָׂא, both from a common Semitic root meaning to lift or bear. BEARING AND CARRYING en: and-carried-away, lifting-up, take | es: se-levanta, toma, y-lo-llevó | fr: [מתנשאה], [שא], et-il-a-porté | de: [ונשא], [מתנשאה], [שא] Ezra 4:19; Ezra 5:15; Dan 2:35

נָשָׂא H5377 V-Hifil-Imperf.Jus-3ms / 2ms (16×)

To deceive, beguile, or lead astray; primarily in the Hifil stem for active deception, with a Nifal passive and rare extensions.

At the heart of this verb lies the act of beguiling—leading someone to believe what is false. It enters Scripture at humanity's first deception: 'The serpent deceived me, and I ate' (Gen 3:13). The Hifil stem dominates, carrying warnings against trusting false prophets and enemy kings who mislead (2 Kgs 18:29; 2 Chr 32:15; Isa 36:14). Spanish engañar and French tromper consistently render the active deception, while German betrogen emphasizes the breach of trust involved. A striking outlier is Psalm 55:15, where the verb shades toward sudden overtaking—death rushing upon the wicked—showing how deception and ambush share the element of surprise.

1. deceive, beguile (Hifil active) (13×) The main sense: actively deceiving or misleading someone, used across all Hifil conjugations. Hezekiah's enemies warn Judah 'do not let him deceive you' (2 Kgs 18:29; Isa 36:14), and Jeremiah warns 'do not deceive yourselves' (Jer 37:9). Spanish engañar, French tromper, and German betrügen all converge on deliberate misleading, confirming this as the root's semantic center across 13 occurrences. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING
en: You-have-deceived, deceive, deceive-you | es: engañar, engañaste, engañéis | fr: [ישיא], que-trompe, que-trompe-tu | de: [ישיא], betrog-dich, betrogen-dich Gen 3:13; 2Kgs 18:29; 2Kgs 19:10; 2Chr 32:15; Isa 36:14

2. be deceived (Nifal passive) (1×) The Nifal passive: to be deceived or beguiled. Appearing once in Isaiah 19:13, where Egypt's princes 'have been deceived' (parallel to 'have become fools'). Spanish fueron engañados preserves the passive voice clearly, showing that these leaders are victims of their own false counsel rather than agents of deception. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: are-deceived | es: fueron-engañados | fr: tromper | de: sie-erhoben Isa 19:13

3. come upon, overtake suddenly (1×) An extended sense of sudden onset or overtaking, found in Psalm 55:15 where the psalmist calls for death to 'come upon' the wicked. English 'let come' and Spanish acometa ('let it assail') reflect this shift from cognitive deception to physical ambush—both share the semantic thread of being caught unawares. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING
en: let-come | es: acometa | fr: séduire | de: lass-kommen Ps 55:15

4. utterly, completely (Qal intensifier) (1×) A rare adverbial use as a Qal infinitive absolute intensifying a nearby verb, found in Jeremiah 23:39. The multilingual glosses diverge notably—English 'lifting,' Spanish 'forgetting,' French tromper—reflecting uncertainty about whether this derives from the same root or a homonymous one meaning 'to lift' or 'to forget.' COMPLETENESS AND TOTALITY en: lifting | es: olvidando | fr: tromper | de: erhob Jer 23:39

נָשָׁא H5378 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (4×)
to lend on interest, act as creditor; to exact payment or make financial demands
This verb, related to forms of נָשָׂה, describes lending money with interest or acting in the role of creditor. In 1 Samuel 22:2, it refers to "every man that had a creditor," while Isaiah 24:2 places creditor and debtor in parallel. Psalm 89:22 uses the Hiphil form to describe an enemy who "shall not exact" tribute from the anointed king. The root conveys financial obligation and the creditor's legal claim.

(4×) Denotes the role or action of a creditor, one who lends on interest or has a financial claim against another. The Qal participle (נֹשֶׁא) is a substantive meaning "creditor," while the Hiphil (יַשִּׁיא) means "to exact" or "act as creditor." Multilingual glosses consistently render as "creditor" or "exact/demand payment" (deudor, créditeur, Gläubiger). The bracketed forms like [נשא] may indicate homographic confusion with the common verb נָשָׂא (to lift, carry), which appears in 1 Kings 8:31 in a different semantic context. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15110 WITH 5 SENSES en: and-is-lifted-, creditor, shall-exact | es: cobrará, deudor, le-debe | fr: [נשא], creditor, et-est-leva- | de: creditor, erhob, soll-exact 1Sam 22:2; 1Kgs 8:31; Ps 89:22; Isa 24:2

נָשָׂא H5379 V-Nifal-InfAbs (1×)
to be carried away, borne off; passive transport of an object or person (infinitive absolute)
This infinitive absolute appears in 2 Samuel 19:42, in the heated exchange between Israel and Judah over who has the better claim to King David. The northern tribes protest: 'Have we eaten at the king's cost? Or has any gift been carried away by us?' The infinitive absolute intensifies the denial—not even a morsel has been taken. The verb comes from the common root meaning to lift, carry, or bear, here used in the Niphal (passive) sense of being carried off or appropriated. The northern tribes insist they've received no material benefit from their relationship with David.

(1×) To be carried away or borne off, expressing passive transport or removal. In 2 Samuel 19:42, the northern tribes insist no gift has been 'carried away' by them—they've appropriated nothing from the king. The infinitive absolute construction emphasizes the absolute denial. French 'emporta au loin' (carried away) and Spanish 'llevar' (to carry) reflect the transport meaning. This protest of innocence defends against accusations of material self-interest. DRIVEN AWAY SWEPT en: carried-away | es: llevar | fr: emporta-au-loin | de: trug-weg 2Sam 19:42

נָשַׁב H5380 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (3×)
to blow (of wind); cause to blow or drive away by blowing
This verb describes wind blowing or causing something to blow. The Qal form appears in Isaiah 40:7: 'the breath of the LORD blows upon it'—causing grass to wither and flowers to fade, illustrating human mortality. The Hiphil causative appears in Psalm 147:18, 'he makes his wind blow,' resulting in ice melting into flowing water. Genesis 15:11 uses it differently: Abraham 'drove away' birds of prey from the sacrifice, perhaps originally meaning he blew them away or made sounds like blowing. The verb captures the power of breath or wind to affect change—withering, melting, scattering.

(3×) Isaiah's theological use contrasts human fragility with God's enduring word: divine breath withers all flesh like wind-scorched grass. The Psalm celebrates God's sovereign control over weather—the same wind he 'makes blow' melts winter ice in spring. Genesis presents the puzzling 'drove them away' usage, possibly preserving an older sense of blowing/scattering. Cross-linguistic renderings struggle with the semantic range: 'sopla' (blows), 'ahuyentó' (drove away), 'chassa-au-loin' (chased far away). The common thread is forceful breath-wind causing movement or change. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-drove-away, blows, he-makes-blow | es: hace-soplar, sopla, y-los-ahuyentó | fr: [נשבה], et-chassa-au-loin, habiter | de: [נשבה], er-macht-blow, und-verscheuchte Gen 15:11; Ps 147:18; Isa 40:7

נָשַׂג H5381 V-Hifil-Perf-3cp / 1cs (50×)
To reach, overtake, attain; in pursuit: catch up with; of resources: afford, suffice; of blessings: come upon.
The Hifil verb nasag (always in the causative stem) captures the moment of arrival — when a pursuer closes the gap and overtakes the fugitive, when one's hand 'reaches' far enough to afford an offering, or when promised blessings finally 'catch up' with the obedient. Nearly half its occurrences involve the dramatic tension of pursuit and capture: Pharaoh's army overtakes Israel at the sea (Exod 14:9), Laban overtakes Jacob in Gilead (Gen 31:25), David's men overtake the Amalekites (1 Sam 30:8). But the Levitical usage is equally striking — a poor worshiper whose hand 'does not reach' the standard offering may substitute turtledoves (Lev 14:21-32), creating a sliding scale of affordability that the multilingual evidence renders with striking variety: Spanish alcanzar, French atteindre, Korean 미치다 all oscillate between physical reaching and economic sufficiency. The prophetic promise of Isa 35:10, where 'gladness and joy shall overtake them,' turns the pursuit-and-capture metaphor into eschatological hope — blessings chasing down the redeemed.

1. overtake in pursuit (28×) To overtake in pursuit, catch up with someone fleeing — the dominant sense at 28 occurrences, pervading narrative and legal texts. Laban overtakes Jacob (Gen 31:25), Joseph's steward overtakes the brothers (Gen 44:4-6), Pharaoh's chariots overtake Israel at the Red Sea (Exod 14:9), and the avenger of blood may overtake the manslayer (Deut 19:6). The verb frequently pairs with radaf ('to pursue'), creating a two-beat sequence: chase, then catch. Spanish alcanzar and French rattraper both select pursuit-capture vocabulary. Deuteronomy's covenant curses chillingly promise that 'all these curses shall pursue you and overtake you' (28:45), personifying calamity as a relentless pursuer. PRONOUNS AND MIXED en: I-will-overtake, and-he-overtake-us, and-let-him-overtake | es: Lo-alcanzan, Y-alcanzó, alcanzando | fr: Je—rattraper, [למשגת], atteindre | de: [השיגו], [השיגוה], [וישגו] Gen 31:25; Gen 44:4; Gen 44:6; Exod 14:9; Exod 15:9

2. afford or suffice (10×) To afford, have sufficient means — 10 occurrences clustered in Leviticus 14 and 25, all in the idiom 'if his hand reaches/does not reach' (im lo' tassig yado). This economic metaphor — the hand stretching toward but perhaps falling short of the required price — generates the Levitical sliding-scale offering system (Lev 14:21-32) and the land-redemption provisions (Lev 25:26-28). Spanish si alcanza ('if it reaches/suffices'), French atteint ('attains'), and Arabic idha balaghat all use 'reaching' metaphors for economic capacity, confirming this as a genuine cross-linguistic conceptual extension from physical reaching to financial ability. AFFORD REACH OBTAIN
en: attaining, attains, can-afford | es: alcance, alcanza, si-alcanza | fr: attaining, atteindre, atteint | de: [תשיג], attaining, attains Lev 14:21; Lev 14:22; Lev 14:30; Lev 14:31; Lev 14:32

3. reach or arrive at (9×) To reach or arrive at a point, boundary, or moment — 9 occurrences where the emphasis is on attainment of a goal rather than pursuit of a person. Jacob's years 'did not reach' the years of his fathers (Gen 47:9); the threshing shall 'reach' to the vintage (Lev 26:5); one's hand 'does not reach' even a tenth of an ephah (Lev 5:11). Spanish alcanzar and French atteindre serve this sense as readily as the pursuit sense, but German erreichen ('reach a destination') and Korean 미치다 ('extend to') distinguish it from the chase-and-capture frame. The underlying image is an arm stretching toward a target — whether it arrives is the narrative tension. AFFORD REACH OBTAIN

en: One-reaching-him, and-reaches, and-will-reach | es: El-que-lo-alcanza, Y-alcanzará, alcanzando | fr: atteignant, atteignit, atteindre | de: [ישיגו], [משיגהו], [תשיגנו] Gen 47:9; Lev 5:11; Lev 25:26; Lev 26:5

4. obtain gladness or blessing (2×) To obtain or gain possession of something desirable, especially in eschatological promises — 2 occurrences in nearly identical prophetic verses. In Isa 35:10 and 51:11 the redeemed 'shall obtain gladness and joy' (sassone vesimchah yassigune), where the verb transforms the pursuit metaphor into a vision of blessings actively catching up with God's people. Spanish alcanzarán ('they shall obtain') and Korean 얻다 ('to acquire') both shift to acquisition vocabulary. The personification is remarkable: joy and gladness are the pursuers, the redeemed the ones overtaken — an inversion of the curse formula in Deut 28:45. AFFORD REACH OBTAIN

en: they-shall-obtain, they-will-obtain | es: alcanzarán | fr: atteindre | de: [ישיגו], [ישיגון] Isa 35:10; Isa 51:11

5. (1×) To move or shift boundaries — a single occurrence at Job 24:2 describing the wicked who 'move boundary markers.' The sense is debated: some take it as 'they remove landmarks' (English 'they move'), others as 'they overtake/encroach upon' a neighbor's land. Spanish mueven ('they move') and French a strained transliteration both suggest physical displacement rather than pursuit. The verse sits at the edge of nasag's semantic range, possibly influenced by the similar root nasag/hassig with a shin rather than sin, meaning 'to move back, remove.' Whether a genuine sense extension or a textual confusion, it represents the word's outermost boundary. AFFORD REACH OBTAIN

en: they-move | es: mueven; | fr: ישיגו | de: [ישיגו] Job 24:2

נָשָׁה H5382 V-Piel-Perf-3ms / 1cs (6×)

To forget or be forgotten; causatively, to cause someone to forget — spanning personal grief, divine judgment, and providential erasure of pain

A verb whose two stems trace the full arc of forgetting. In the Qal and Nifal, the subject simply forgets — Jeremiah's speaker has 'forgotten prosperity' (Lam 3:17), and God warns he will 'forget' his people (Jer 23:39), while Isaiah reassures Israel 'you will not be forgotten by me' (Isa 44:21). In the Piel and Hiphil, someone is made to forget: Joseph names his son Manasseh 'because God has made me forget all my hardship' (Gen 41:51), and Job's friends suggest that God 'makes forget' some of one's guilt (Job 11:6). Spanish consistently uses 'olvidar,' while the causative 'hizo olvidar' mirrors the Hebrew stem distinction precisely.

1. forget (Qal/Nifal intransitive) (3×) Qal and Nifal intransitive forms meaning 'to forget' or 'be forgotten.' In Lam 3:17 the speaker says 'I forgot prosperity,' expressing personal grief. In Jer 23:39 God declares he will forget his people in judgment, while Isa 44:21 reassures 'you will not be forgotten by me.' Spanish 'me he olvidado' and 'me olvidarás' track the person distinctions closely, confirming the simple intransitive semantics. FORGETTING AND NEGLECT

en: I-forgot, and-I-will-lift-you, you-will-be-forgotten-by-Me | es: me-he-olvidado, me-olvidarás, y-os-olvidaré | fr: [ונשיתיך], [נשיתי], [תנשני] | de: [ונשיתיך], [נשיתיך], [תנשני] Isa 44:21; Jer 23:39; Lam 3:17

2. cause to forget (Piel/Hifil causative) (3×) Piel and Hiphil causative forms meaning 'to make someone forget.' Joseph's naming of Manasseh in Gen 41:51 — 'God has made me forget all my toil' — is the paradigmatic instance, where forgetting is a gift of grace. Job 11:6 suggests God causes the guilty to forget some of their iniquity, and Job 39:17 notes the ostrich whom God 'made forget' wisdom. Spanish 'me hizo olvidar' and German 'vergessen ließ mich' both preserve the causative structure faithfully. FORGETTING AND NEGLECT

en: forgets, has-made-forget-her, has-made-me-forget | es: ha-olvidado, le-hizo-olvidar, me-hizo-olvidar | fr: a-fit-moi-oublier, השה-elle, ישׁה | de: [השה], [ישה], vergessen-ließ-mich Gen 41:51; Job 11:6; Job 39:17

נָשֶׁה H5383 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (13×)

To lend money or goods; as participle, a creditor or usurer; in Hifil, to extend a loan or exact a debt

This verb governs the economic world of lending, borrowing, and debt collection in ancient Israel. In its Qal stem it simply means 'to lend,' as in Jeremiah 15:10 where the prophet protests he has neither lent nor borrowed. The participle becomes a substantive noun meaning 'creditor' — the figure behind the widow's cry in 2 Kings 4:1 and the social inversion of Isaiah 24:2. Spanish consistently renders this 'acreedor' (creditor), while English alternates between 'creditor' and 'lender.' The Torah's concern with just lending (Exod 22:25, Deut 15:2) makes this word a window into biblical economic ethics.

1. to lend (Qal) (5×) The basic Qal verbal sense of lending money or goods to another person, typically constructed with the preposition bêt for the person receiving the loan. Jeremiah 15:10 pairs active and passive ('I have not lent, nor have they lent to me') to express total social innocence. Spanish 'prestamos/prestas' and English 'lent/lending' confirm straightforward loan-making. LENDING LOANS

en: I-lent, are-lending, lending | es: me-prestaron, prestamos, prestas | fr: [נשו], [נשים], [נשיתי] | de: Frauen, [נשו], [נשיתי] Deut 24:11; Neh 5:10; Neh 5:11; Jer 15:10

2. creditor, one who holds debt (5×) The Qal participle used as a substantive: the creditor, the one who holds the debt. This figure appears as legally empowered and sometimes threatening — the creditor who comes to take a widow's sons as slaves (2 Kgs 4:1), or as a social category in Isaiah 24:2 where creditor and debtor alike face judgment. Spanish 'acreedor' and English 'creditor' are consistent across all five occurrences. LENDING LOANS

en: a-creditor, and-the-creditor, as-a-creditor | es: Y-el-acreedor, como-acreedor, como-el-acreedor | fr: [ככשה], [מנרשי], comme-un-creditor | de: [ככשה], [מנרשי], ein-creditor Exod 22:25; 2Kgs 4:1; Ps 109:11; Isa 24:2; Isa 50:1

3. to lend (Hifil causative) (2×) The Hifil causative stem, meaning to cause lending or to extend a loan, found in Deuteronomy's lending regulations. In Deut 15:2 every creditor 'shall release' what he has caused to be lent, and in 24:10 instructions govern how one should behave 'when you lend' to a neighbor. Spanish 'prestes/prestó' and English 'lends/lend' carry the active grant-of-credit nuance. LENDING LOANS

en: he-lends, you-lend | es: prestes, prestó | fr: il-lends, tu-prêter | de: du-leihen, er-lends Deut 15:2; Deut 24:10

4. to exact, press for debt (1×) A single occurrence in Nehemiah 5:7 where the sense shades toward exacting or pressing for debt repayment — Nehemiah rebukes the nobles for oppressively demanding payment from their fellow Jews. Spanish 'cargáis' (you burden/charge) captures the coercive, extractive quality that distinguishes this from neutral lending. LENDING LOANS

en: exacting | es: cargáis | fr: [נשיכנשאיכנשים] | de: [[[נשיכנשאים]]נשים] Neh 5:7

נָשֶׁה H5384 Art / N-ms (2×)

the sciatic (nerve or vein)—the tendon, nerve, or vein in the thigh, forbidden as food in Jewish tradition

This term refers to a vein, nerve, or sinew in the thigh region, traditionally identified as the sciatic nerve or the vein associated with the hip socket. Genesis 32:32 twice mentions 'the sinew of the thigh-vein' in explaining why Israelites do not eat this particular part of the animal—a practice rooted in Jacob's injury when he wrestled with the divine being at Peniel. The etymology is uncertain, but the term became the basis for an important dietary restriction in Jewish law. The word appears only in this etiological passage explaining the origin of the prohibition.

(2×) Denotes a specific anatomical feature in the thigh region, appearing in the phrase 'the sinew of the thigh-vein/nerve' (gid hanasheh) in Genesis 32:32. The verse explains why this part is not eaten by Israelites, connecting the dietary restriction to Jacob's hip injury during his wrestling match at Peniel. Multilingual glosses reflect the technical anatomical reference: 'sciatic' (English, French), 'desencajado' (Spanish = dislocated), 'Hüftnervs' (German = hip nerve), identifying this as the sciatic region affected in Jacob's encounter. FLESH AND BODY

en: the-sciatic | es: el-desencajado | fr: le-sciatic | de: des-Hüftnervs Gen 32:32

נְשׂוֹאָה H5385 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fpc / 2mp (1×)

things carried, burdens; objects that were customarily borne in procession, especially idols

This noun appears in Isaiah 46:1, describing Babylon's gods Bel and Nebo: 'Your things carried are loaded on beasts.' The ironic reversal is devastating—these gods that used to be carried in triumphal religious processions are now cargo being evacuated, loaded on pack animals as Babylon falls. The passive participle emphasizes what was done to them: they were objects carried (by worshipers) but now are burdens loaded (on animals). Isaiah mocks idol worship by showing that in crisis, false gods become liabilities requiring transport rather than powers providing protection.

(1×) Objects that were carried or borne, specifically idols carried in religious processions. Isaiah 46:1 uses this term for Babylonian gods Bel and Nebo: 'your things formerly carried (in procession) are now loaded on beasts' as burdens during evacuation. Spanish 'cargas' (loads/burdens) captures both the carrying action and the burden meaning. The prophet's wordplay contrasts processional honor with evacuation cargo, ridiculing gods that must be transported. BEARING AND CARRYING en: your-things-carried | es: vuestras-cargas | fr: [נשאתיכם] | de: [נשאתיכם] Isa 46:1

נְשִׁי H5386 N-msc / 2fs (2×)

debt—an obligation owed, something that must be repaid

This noun means debt or something owed. It appears only in 2 Kings 4:7, where Elisha instructs the widow to sell the miraculously multiplied oil and 'pay your debt' with the proceeds. The story highlights how God provides for those in desperate financial straits. The word exists in both Ketiv (written) and Qere (read) forms in the text, showing minor textual variation. The concept emphasizes financial obligation and the relief that comes when supernatural provision enables repayment.

(2×) Refers to a financial debt or obligation requiring repayment. The term appears twice in 2 Kings 4:7 (once as Ketiv, once as Qere variant), both instances referring to the same debt the widow must pay. Elisha's instruction 'pay your debt' follows the miracle of oil multiplication, showing divine provision for financial crisis. The multilingual glosses are unanimous: 'debt' (English), 'deuda' (Spanish), 'debt' (French), all indicating a financial obligation to be satisfied, illustrating how the miracle enables the widow to clear her obligations. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [ketiv], your-debt | es: (kethiv), tu-deuda | fr: [ketiv], ton-debt | de: [ketiv] 2Kgs 4:7

נָשִׂיא H5387a Conj-w (130×)

A chief, prince, or tribal leader; one raised up to authority over a clan, tribe, or nation.

In the Pentateuch and Chronicles, this noun designates the recognized heads of Israel's twelve tribes – the leaders summoned by Moses and counted in the census rolls of Numbers. The root n-s-' ('to lift up') captures the idea of one elevated above his kinsmen. German consistently renders Fuehrer ('leader') for the tribal heads but shifts to Fuerst ('prince') for the sovereign figure in Ezekiel, mirroring how the word stretches from a community headman to the eschatological royal shepherd-prince of Ezekiel 34-48.

1. leader, chief, head of tribe (116×) The designated head of a tribal, clan, or communal group – particularly the chiefs of Israel's twelve tribes appointed for census and camp organization (Num 2:3-29). Spanish principe and French chef both converge on the administrative, delegated-authority sense. The term appears in formulaic lists (Num 1:5-16; 7:10-83) where each leader represents his father's house before the congregation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-leader, leader | es: príncipe, príncipe-de | fr: chef, un-chef | de: Fuehrer, ein-Fuehrer Lev 4:22; Num 2:3; Num 2:5; Num 2:7; Num 2:10

2. prince, sovereign ruler (14×) A sovereign prince or exalted ruler exercising royal authority, especially Ezekiel's eschatological prince (Ezek 34:24; 44:3; 45:7-8). German Fuerst and French prince distinguish this from the tribal-headman sense, signaling elevated, almost monarchic, status. In Exodus 22:28, the term stands parallel to 'elohim, marking a ruler whom one must not curse. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-ruler, and-the-prince, prince | es: Y-el-príncipe, príncipe, príncipe-de | fr: et-prince, et-un-chef, prince | de: Fuerst, und-der-Fuerst, und-ein-Herrscher Exod 22:28; Num 13:2; 1Chr 2:10; 1Chr 5:6; 2Chr 1:2

נָשִׂיא H5387b N-mp (4×)

clouds, vapors; rising mist that forms clouds and portends rain

This noun, distinct from the more common נָשִׂיא (prince, leader), refers to atmospheric vapors or clouds, especially those that rise and bring rain. Jeremiah 10:13 and 51:16 describe God bringing up "clouds from the ends of the earth," while Psalm 135:7 and Proverbs 25:14 use the term in contexts associating clouds with rain or its absence. The root suggests something "lifted up" or "rising," fitting the imagery of ascending vapors.

(4×) Denotes clouds or rising vapors, particularly those associated with rain. The term appears in poetic and prophetic contexts describing God's sovereign control over weather (Jeremiah 10:13, 51:16, Psalm 135:7) and in Proverbs 25:14's simile of clouds without rain. Multilingual evidence is somewhat mixed: most render as "clouds/nuages/Wolken," but French includes "prince" and German brackets forms like [נשאים] and [נשיאים], likely reflecting homographic overlap with נָשִׂיא I (prince). The consistent "clouds" rendering in rain contexts confirms the meteorological sense. CLOUDS AND SKY

en: clouds | es: Nubes, nubes | fr: [נשאים], nuage, prince | de: Wolken, [נשאים], [נשיאים] Ps 135:7; Prov 25:14; Jer 10:13; Jer 51:16

נִשְׁיָה H5388 N-fs (1×)

forgetfulness, oblivion; the state of being forgotten or the place where memory ceases

This noun appears in Psalm 88:12, where the psalmist asks whether God's wonders will be known 'in the land of forgetfulness.' This designation parallels 'darkness' in the previous line, both referring to Sheol, the realm of the dead. The term captures oblivion's essence—the place where memory ceases, where the dead are forgotten and forget. The question is rhetorical: how can the dead in Sheol's darkness and oblivion praise God or remember His wonders? This underlies the psalmist's urgent plea for rescue before death silences testimony.

(1×) The state or place of being forgotten, oblivion, particularly as a designation for Sheol. Psalm 88:12 asks whether God's wonders will be known 'in forgetfulness,' paralleling 'in darkness' as a description of the realm of death. French 'oubli' (oblivion/forgetfulness) precisely captures the concept. The term suggests both active forgetting and passive being forgotten—in Sheol, the dead neither remember nor are remembered, making praise impossible. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14721 WITH 3 SENSES

en: forgetfulness | es: olvido | fr: oubli | de: forgetfulness Ps 88:12

נְשִׁין H5389 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3mp (1×)

wives; married women, the female spouses of men

This Aramaic plural noun appears in Daniel 6:24, where King Darius commands that Daniel's accusers be thrown into the lions' den 'with their children and their wives.' The term is the standard Aramaic word for wives, cognate with Hebrew נָשִׁים and related to Arabic ɛíٍ. The inclusion of family members in punishment reflects ancient Near Eastern corporate justice, where households shared the consequences of an individual's actions. The tragedy intensifies—not just the guilty officials but their innocent families suffer for the conspiracy against Daniel.

(1×) Married women, wives, the female spouses of the male accusers. Daniel 6:24 specifies that Daniel's enemies were cast into the lions' den 'with their children and their wives,' extending punishment to entire households. Spanish 'esposas' confirms the marital status. The Aramaic term parallels Hebrew נָשִׁים, representing standard vocabulary for wives across Northwest Semitic languages. This detail underscores the severity and scope of the king's retributive justice. WOMAN AND WIFE

en: and-their-wives | es: y-sus-esposas | fr: et-ruine | de: [ונשיהון] Dan 6:24

נְשִׁיקָה H5390 Prep-m / N-fpc (2×)

kiss—an act of affection, greeting, or reverence performed by touching with the lips

This noun denotes a kiss, used only in plural form in Scripture. Song of Songs 1:2 opens with the famous line desiring kisses 'from the kisses of his mouth,' expressing romantic longing. Proverbs 27:6 warns of 'the kisses of an enemy,' which are profuse but deceitful. The contrast between these two contexts is striking: one celebrates intimate affection, the other warns against false friendship. Kisses in biblical culture could express love, greeting, respect, or treachery (as with Judas), and this noun captures the physical act in both positive and negative relational contexts.

(2×) Denotes kisses as expressions of affection or greeting, appearing only in construct plural forms. In Song of Songs 1:2, it expresses passionate desire: 'Let him kiss me with kisses of his mouth.' In Proverbs 27:6, it warns of deception: 'the kisses of an enemy' are excessive but false. The multilingual evidence uniformly renders this as 'kisses' (English 'kisses,' Spanish 'besos,' French 'baisers'), recognizing both the romantic context (Song) and the suspicious context (Proverbs) where the same physical gesture carries opposite relational meanings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-kisses-of, kisses-of | es: besos-de, de-los-besos-de | fr: des-baisers, נשיקות | de: [מנשיקות], [נשיקות] Prov 27:6; Song 1:2

נָשַׁךְ H5391a V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 2ms (12×)

To bite, especially of serpents; intensively, to inflict repeated bites; metaphorically, to exact usurious interest.

Nashakh is first and foremost the serpent's bite—the primal danger that runs from Genesis to Ecclesiastes. Jacob's oracle pictures Dan as a viper that 'bites' the horse's heels (Gen 49:17), and the bronze serpent narrative hinges on this word for both the biting and the bitten (Num 21:8-9). Cognate Assyrian nashaku and Ethiopic nasaka confirm the core meaning. The Piel intensifies the image into deadly, repeated assault, as when the fiery serpents 'bit' the people in the wilderness (Num 21:6). Most striking is the metaphorical leap in Habakkuk 2:7: creditors who 'bite' their debtors through usury—the financial predator as serpent.

1. bite (literal, Qal) (9×) The literal bite of a creature, especially a serpent, in the Qal stem. Spanish 'el que muerde' and French 'mordre' render the basic action. Genesis 49:17 envisions Dan as a serpent biting at the horse's heels; Numbers 21:8-9 uses both the active participle ('the one biting') and the passive ('the one bitten'). Proverbs 23:32 and Ecclesiastes 10:8, 11 extend the image to wine that 'bites like a serpent' and walls whose stones may conceal a biting snake. EATING AND CONSUMING

en: and-bites-him, and-it-will-bite-them, bit | es: el-mordido, el-que-muerde, lo-morderá | fr: bit, et-mordre, le-bitten | de: [הנשכים], [ונשכו], [ונשכם] Gen 49:17; Num 21:8; Num 21:9; Prov 23:32; Eccl 10:8

2. bite severely (Piel intensive) (2×) Severe or repeated biting in the Piel intensive stem, emphasizing the deadliness of the attack. Numbers 21:6 records the fiery serpents that 'bit' the people with fatal results; Jeremiah 8:17 threatens serpents that 'shall bite you' beyond any charmer's power. Spanish 'y mordieron/y os morderán' and French forms capture the intensified, relentless quality—not a single nip but a sustained, lethal assault. EATING AND CONSUMING

en: and-bit, and-they-shall-bite | es: y-mordieron, y-os-morderán | fr: [ונשכו], et-bit | de: [ונשכו], und-bit Num 21:6; Jer 8:17

3. exact interest, oppress financially (1×) A metaphorical extension to financial predation: exacting usurious interest or 'biting' a debtor through oppressive lending. Habakkuk 2:7 asks the tyrant, 'Will not your creditors (literally, your biters) suddenly arise?' Spanish 'los que te muerden' preserves the vivid image. The semantic path from serpent's fangs to the creditor's grip reflects an ancient intuition that financial exploitation is a form of venomous attack. INTEREST USURY

en: your-creditors | es: los-que-te-muerden | fr: mordre | de: [נשכיך] Hab 2:7

נָשַׁךְ H5391b V-Hifil-Imperf-2ms (4×)

to charge interest, lend on usury; to cause someone to pay interest on a loan

This denominative verb, derived from נֶשֶׁךְ (interest, usury), means to lend money at interest or to charge usury. It appears exclusively in Deuteronomy 23:19-20, where the law permits charging interest to foreigners but prohibits it among fellow Israelites. The Qal means "give interest," while the Hiphil means "make one give interest" or "charge interest." This reflects ancient Near Eastern economic ethics regarding loans within the covenant community versus outsiders.

(4×) Describes lending money at interest or charging usury. Deuteronomy 23:19-20 uses both Qal and Hiphil forms to regulate interest-bearing loans: Israelites may charge interest to foreigners but not to fellow Israelites. The fourfold occurrence (Deut 23:19, 19, 20, 20) reflects the detailed legal formulation. Cross-linguistic glosses consistently render as interest/usury terms: "charge interest" (English), "cobrar interés" (Spanish), "prêter sur intérêt" (French), "Zins" (German). The legal context is economic and covenantal, distinguishing insider from outsider lending practices. INTEREST USURY

en: is-lent-on-interest, you-may-charge-interest, you-shall-charge-interest | es: cobrarás-interés, se-preste-con-interés | fr: est-prêta-sur-interest, tu-devra-charge-interest, tu-pourra-charge-interest | de: du-moege-Auftrag-Zins, du-soll-Auftrag-Zins, ist-lieh-auf-Zins Deut 23:19; Deut 23:20

נֶשֶׁךְ H5392 N-ms (12×)

Interest, usury — loan interest charged on money or goods, condemned in biblical law as exploitative

The noun נֶשֶׁךְ (neshek) denotes interest charged on a loan, from the verb nashakh ('to bite'), evoking a creditor's consuming grip. Biblical law prohibits charging interest to fellow Israelites: 'You shall not exact interest from him' (Exod 22:25; Lev 25:36-37; Deut 23:19). Ezekiel lists taking interest among sins that condemn a person (Ezek 18:8, 13, 17; 22:12), and Psalm 15:5 counts refusing to lend at interest as a mark of the righteous. Proverbs 28:8 pairs it with tarbit ('increase') for exploitative lending. Spanish 'usura' and French 'usure' reflect the moral dimensions.

interest, usury (12×) Interest or usury charged on loans, condemned in Israelite law. Prohibited between Israelites (Exod 22:25; Lev 25:36-37; Deut 23:19-20), though permitted toward foreigners. Ezekiel counts it among capital sins (Ezek 18:8, 13, 17; 22:12), and Psalm 15:5 lists abstaining from it as a mark of the righteous. The etymology from nashakh ('to bite') captures the predatory nature of exploitative lending. INTEREST USURY

en: at-interest, by-interest, for-interest | es: Con-usura, a-usura, con-interés | fr: dans-intérêt, dans-בנשך, interest | de: Zins, Zins-von, [בנשך] Exod 22:25; Lev 25:36; Lev 25:37; Deut 23:19

נִשְׁכָּה H5393 Art / N-fp (3×)

chamber, storeroom; architectural term for storage or residence rooms

This noun denotes a chamber or room, particularly for storage or individual residence. It functions as a rarer parallel to the more common 'lishkah' (chamber). Nehemiah 3:30 mentions someone making repairs 'opposite his chamber,' indicating personal residential quarters. Nehemiah 13:7 refers to the chamber Eliashib had prepared for Tobiah in the temple courts—a scandalous misuse of sacred space. The plural in Nehemiah 12:44 designates 'storerooms' or 'treasuries' for tithes and offerings. The term spans from personal living quarters to sacred storage facilities, always suggesting rooms within a larger complex.

(3×) All three occurrences are in Nehemiah's rebuilding and reform narratives. The personal chamber (3:30) shows rooms assigned to individuals along the wall. The Tobiah incident (13:7) demonstrates how chambers could be repurposed—here improperly for a foreigner's residence in temple precincts. The treasury chambers (12:44) housed the community's sacred contributions. Multilingual renderings consistently use 'chamber/cámara' terminology, though the specific function varies by context. The architectural setting is always communal space (temple, wall complex) subdivided into rooms for storage or habitation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: chamber, chamber-his, the-chambers | es: cámara, las-cámaras, su-cámara | fr: [הנשכות], [נשכה], [נשכתו] | de: [הנשכות], [נשכה], [נשכתו] Neh 3:30; Neh 12:44; Neh 13:7

נָשַׁל H5394 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (7×)

To slip off, drop off; to draw off (sandals); to drive out, dispossess (nations).

A versatile verb whose senses range from the mundane to the momentous. At its most physical, an axe-head 'slips off' its handle (Deut 19:5) and olives 'drop off' prematurely (Deut 28:40) — Spanish 'se suelte' and Korean 미끄러졌다 both capture this involuntary falling away. The same root commands Moses and Joshua to 'take off' their sandals on holy ground (Exod 3:5; Josh 5:15), a deliberate removal rather than accidental slipping. Most dramatically, God 'drives out' nations before Israel (Deut 7:1, 22), where the metaphor of stripping away extends to the dispossession of peoples from their land.

1. drive out, dispossess (nations) (3×) Driving out or dispossessing nations from their land — the transitive Qal/Piel sense of forcible removal. Deut 7:1 and 7:22 describe YHWH 'driving out' (וְנָשַׁל) Canaanite nations, and 2 Kgs 16:6 uses it for Edom's expulsion of Judah. Spanish 'expulsará/expulse' and French 'fera-drive-dehors' consistently render this as territorial displacement, the strongest extension of the root's 'stripping away' core. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-he-drives-out, and-he-drove-out, and-will-drive-out | es: Y-expulsará, y-expulse, y-expulsó | fr: et-fera-drive-dehors, et-il-drives-dehors, et-il-drove-dehors | de: und-er-drives-heraus, und-er-drove-heraus, und-wird-vertreiben-heraus Deut 7:1; Deut 7:22; 2Kgs 16:6

2. take off, remove (sandals) (2×) Drawing off or removing sandals — the imperative Qal sense of deliberate removal of footwear on holy ground. Exod 3:5 at the burning bush and Josh 5:15 at Jericho both use שַׁל as a divine command. Spanish 'quita' and French 'enlever' treat it straightforwardly as physical removal, distinct from the involuntary slipping of sense 3. SANDALS FOOTWEAR

en: remove, take-off- | es: quita, quita- | fr: enlever, prendre-dehors- | de: entfernen, nehmen-weg- Exod 3:5; Josh 5:15

3. slip off, drop off, fall away (2×) Slipping off, dropping off, or falling away involuntarily — the intransitive Qal sense. In Deut 19:5 the iron axe-head 'slips off' (וְנָשַׁל) the wooden handle, and Deut 28:40 warns that olives will 'drop off' as a covenant curse. Spanish 'se suelte/se caerá' and French 'slips-off/drops' convey this accidental, gravity-driven detachment. FALLING AND FAILING

en: and-slips-off, drops | es: se-caerá, y-se-suelte | fr: drops, et-slips-off | de: drops, und-slips-weg Deut 19:5; Deut 28:40

נָשַׁם H5395 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs (1×)

to gasp, pant; to breathe heavily with deep breaths, as in labor or exertion

This verb appears in Isaiah 42:14, where God declares: 'I have kept silent for a long time, been still and restrained myself; now like a woman in labor I will cry out, I will gasp and pant together.' The verb captures the deep, intense breathing of a woman in childbirth—gasping with the effort and pain of labor. God uses this striking feminine metaphor to describe the intensity of His coming intervention after long restraint. The panting suggests both exertion and the release of long-suppressed energy.

(1×) To gasp or pant with deep, labored breathing, especially like a woman in travail. Isaiah 42:14 uses this verb as God describes His coming action after long silence: 'I will gasp and pant together' like a woman giving birth. Spanish 'jadearé' (I will pant) captures the heavy breathing. The verb belongs to a cluster of birth imagery—crying out, gasping, panting—all expressing the intense exertion of divine intervention after restraint. BLOWING AND BREATHING

en: I-will-gasp | es: jadearé | fr: [אשם] | de: [אשם] Isa 42:14

נִשְׁמָה H5396 N-fsc / 2ms (1×)

breath; the breath of life, respiration that sustains living beings

This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel 5:23, where Daniel rebukes Belshazzar: 'The God in whose hand is your breath and to whom belong all your ways, you have not glorified.' The term refers to the breath of life, the respiration that sustains existence. The phrase emphasizes God's absolute sovereignty over human life—every breath depends on His will. This confronts Belshazzar's arrogance; he has defied the very God who controls whether he breathes or dies. The context of judgment makes this reference to breath particularly ominous.

(1×) Breath, specifically the breath of life that sustains a living being. Daniel 5:23 uses this in confronting Belshazzar: 'the God in whose hand is your breath' you have failed to honor. Spanish 'aliento' (breath) and French 'souffle' (breath) confirm the respiratory meaning. The theological point is sharp—God controls the very breathing that keeps Belshazzar alive, making the king's defiance absurdly self-destructive. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: hand-is-your-breath | es: mano-tu-aliento | fr: souffle | de: [נשמתך] Dan 5:23

נְשָׁמָה H5397 N-fsc (24×)

Breath — from God's life-giving inbreathing, to his wrathful blast, to a living soul

Neshamah is the breath that bridges Creator and creature. In Genesis 2:7 God breathes the neshamath chayyim into Adam's nostrils, making dust into a living being — a scene mirrored across languages (Spanish 'aliento de vida,' French 'souffle de vie'). Yet the same word describes God's destructive blast: the hot wind kindling Topheth (Isa 30:33), the cold breath freezing water (Job 37:10), the storm from his nostrils scattering enemies (2 Sam 22:16). By metonymy it stretches to mean any breathing creature (Josh 10:40), reminding readers that every living soul depends on the breath God gave.

1. breath, breathing (16×) Physical breath — the air inhaled and exhaled by living beings, and supremely the breath of life breathed by God into humanity. Genesis 2:7's neshamath chayyim is the animating gift; Genesis 7:22 adds ruach to intensify the phrase. Spanish 'aliento' and French 'souffle' consistently render this as physical respiration. Job 27:3 and 33:4 affirm that as long as God's breath remains in a person, they live. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-His-breath, and-breath, and-breath-of- | es: aliento, aliento-de, aliento-de- | fr: breath, breath-de, breath-de- | de: Nüstern-, [ונשמה], [ונשמת] Gen 2:7; Gen 7:22; Deut 20:16; Josh 11:11; Josh 11:14

2. blast of divine anger (6×) The powerful blast from God's nostrils — a theophanic image of divine wrath. In 2 Samuel 22:16 and Psalm 18:15 the neshamah of God's anger parts the sea-bed; in Job 4:9 the wicked perish by it; in Job 37:10 it freezes water to ice. Spanish 'soplo' (gust) and the phrase 'blast of' in English capture the violent, wind-like force distinct from gentle breath. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-blast-of, at-the-blast-of, breath-of | es: De-aliento-de-, Por-soplo-de, del-soplo-de | fr: de-souffle, souffle, à-blast-de | de: [מנשמת], [נשמת], bei-blast-von 2Sam 22:16; Job 4:9; Job 37:10; Ps 18:15; Prov 20:27

3. soul, spirit, living being (2×) By metonymy, a living soul or breathing creature — anything that draws breath. Joshua 10:40 reports the destruction of 'all neshamah,' meaning every living being. Isaiah 57:16 extends it to the collective 'souls' God has made. The shift from breath to breather is natural across Semitic languages and visible in Spanish's oscillation between 'lo que respiraba' (that which breathed) and 'almas' (souls). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-souls, the-breathing | es: lo-que-respiraba, y-las-almas | fr: et-souffle, le-breathing | de: [ונשמות], der-breathing Josh 10:40; Isa 57:16

נָשַׁף H5398 V-Qal-Perf-2ms (2×)
to blow—to breathe out forcefully, to send forth wind or breath
This verb means to blow, in the sense of breathing out wind or causing wind to blow upon something. Both biblical occurrences use it of divine action: Exodus 15:10 celebrates how God blew with His wind to drown the Egyptian army in the sea, while Isaiah 40:24 describes God blowing upon princes to wither them like plants. The verb may be related to roots meaning 'to blow' in related Semitic languages. In both contexts, God's breath or wind is an instrument of judgment—overwhelming military power in Exodus, reducing human pride to nothing in Isaiah.

(2×) Means to blow (upon something) with breath or wind, used exclusively of divine action. In Exodus 15:10, the Song of the Sea proclaims 'You blew with Your breath' to describe how God's wind covered the Egyptian forces with the sea. In Isaiah 40:24, God 'blows upon them' (the princes) causing them to wither and be carried off like stubble. The translations consistently use 'blow' (English), 'soplar' (Spanish = to blow), 'souffler' (French = to blow), emphasizing God's powerful breath as an agent of judgment and deliverance. BLOWING AND BREATHING en: He-blows, You-blew | es: Soplaste, sopló | fr: Tu-souffla, [נשׁך] | de: Du-blies, [נשׁך] Exod 15:10; Isa 40:24

נֶשֶׁף H5399 Prep-m (12×)
Twilight — the dim transitional light at evening (dusk) or morning (dawn)
The noun נֶשֶׁף denotes the soft, uncertain light of twilight — that liminal time when day yields to night or night yields to day. Most often it refers to evening twilight or dusk, the time favored by those who prefer concealment: the adulterer watches for twilight (Job 24:15), and the wayward woman prowls at dusk (Prov 7:9). The Aramean army fled at twilight (2 Kgs 7:5, 7), and David struck the Amalekites from twilight onward (1 Sam 30:17). In two passages it points instead to morning twilight or dawn — the wakeful sufferer waits for dawn that never comes (Job 7:4), and the psalmist rises before dawn to cry out (Ps 119:147). The ambiguity between evening and morning twilight is inherent in the word itself, which names the quality of dimness rather than a fixed hour.

1. evening twilight, dusk (10×) Evening twilight or dusk — the fading light after sunset when darkness gathers. This is the dominant sense, covering ten of twelve occurrences. It carries strong connotations of concealment, danger, and moral ambiguity: Job 24:15 says the adulterer's eye 'watches for twilight,' and Proverbs 7:9 places the seductress 'in the twilight, in the evening.' Isaiah 5:11 warns those who linger until evening twilight inflamed by wine. In the prophetic register, Jeremiah 13:16 warns of stumbling on the 'mountains of twilight' before God turns light to deep darkness, and Isaiah 59:10 describes groping at twilight as if blind. Spanish 'crepúsculo' and 'al anochecer' both point to the evening dimness. The Aramean siege camp at twilight in 2 Kings 7:5, 7 vividly evokes the hour of military vulnerability. DAWN AND TWILIGHT en: as-in-twilight, at-twilight, from-the-twilight | es: al-anochecer, como-en-el-crepúsculo, crepúsculo | fr: [בנשׁף], [כנשׁף], [נשׁף] | de: [בנשׁף], [כנשׁף], [נשׁף] 1Sam 30:17; 2Kgs 7:5; 2Kgs 7:7; Job 3:9; Job 24:15

2. morning twilight, dawn (2×) Morning twilight or dawn — the emerging light before sunrise, when darkness gives way to day. Two occurrences carry this sense. Job 7:4 describes a restless sufferer lying awake, tossing until morning twilight (neshep), longing for the night to end. Psalm 119:147 declares 'I rise before dawn (neshep) and cry for help.' The shift from evening to morning is determined by context rather than by any morphological change in the word itself. The psalmist's use is especially striking: rising before the twilight of dawn to seek God's word, when the world is still wrapped in half-darkness. Some scholars note that 1 Samuel 30:17 may also carry a dawn sense (David attacked 'from the twilight'), though most lexicons assign it to evening. DAWN AND TWILIGHT
en: dawn | es: al-alba, el-crepúsculo. | fr: crépuscule, dans-crépuscule | de: [נשׁך], dawn Job 7:4; Ps 119:147

שָׁלַק H5400 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3cp (3×)
to kindle, burn; set fire to or cause to burn
This verb means to kindle or burn, appearing in both passive (Niphal: be kindled) and causative (Hiphil: make burn) stems. Psalm 78:21 describes God's wrath: 'a fire was kindled against Jacob'—divine anger igniting like flame. Isaiah 44:15 speaks of using part of a tree 'he kindles a fire' for warmth, contrasting with carving the rest into an idol. Ezekiel 39:9 prophesies that Israel 'will kindle fires' with the weapons of defeated Gog—seven years of fuel from the instruments of war. The verb captures both spontaneous combustion (wrath kindling) and deliberate fire-starting (burning weapons or warming oneself).

(3×) The Psalm uses Niphal passive for divine wrath igniting spontaneously against sin—fire as metaphor for God's fierce anger. Isaiah's Hiphil active describes ordinary fire-starting for domestic warmth, contrasting practical burning with idolatrous folly. Ezekiel's prophecy turns swords into kindling—the ultimate reversal where implements of death become fuel for survival. Cross-linguistic glosses distinguish passive kindling ('se-encendió,' 'was-kindled') from active burning ('enciende,' 'he-kindles'). The common thread is fire as purifying judgment or consuming force, whether divine wrath or human need. BURNING AND FIRE en: and-kindle, he-kindles, was-kindled | es: enciende, se-encendió, y-encenderán | fr: [ישׁיק], allumer, et-allumer | de: Krieg-kindled, [והשׁיקו], [ישׁיק] Ps 78:21; Isa 44:15; Ezek 39:9

נָשַׁק H5401a V-Hifil-Prtcpl-fp (32×)
To kiss (greeting, farewell, homage); in Hifil, of objects touching or making contact
A warm, deeply human verb at the heart of biblical narrative. When Jacob kisses Isaac (Gen 27:26-27), when Esau falls on his brother's neck (Gen 33:4), when the Psalmist envisions steadfast love and faithfulness kissing each other (Ps 85:11), nashaq captures the full range of physical affection, greeting, and reverence. In the Piel stem the kissing intensifies into homage, as in the charged command to 'kiss the Son' (Ps 2:12). A striking Hifil usage in Ezekiel 3:13 extends the image to the wings of living creatures 'touching' one another, where Spanish renders 'tocandose' and most languages shift from affection to physical contact.

1. to kiss (Qal) (27×) The basic Qal sense covers the everyday act of kissing as greeting, farewell, or affection between persons. Jacob kisses his father Isaac (Gen 27:26-27), Rachel receives a kiss from Jacob at the well (Gen 29:11), and Esau embraces his estranged brother (Gen 33:4). Multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'kissed/besó/baiser/küsste,' confirming a stable cross-cultural core. KISS AFFECTION HOMAGE en: and-he-kissed, and-he-kissed-, and-he-kissed-him | es: Besaré, Y-besó, besad | fr: –baiser, baiser, et-baisa | de: kuesste, lass-mich-kiss-, und-er-kissed Gen 27:26; Gen 27:27; Gen 29:11; Gen 29:13; Gen 33:4

2. to kiss fervently / do homage (Piel) (4×) The Piel intensive form denotes fervent or repeated kissing, shading into cultic homage. Psalm 2:12 commands 'kiss the Son' as an act of submission, while Genesis 45:15 describes Joseph kissing all his brothers in a scene of emotional reunion. Spanish 'Honrad' (honor) for Psalm 2:12 reveals how translators read homage rather than mere affection in the intensive stem. KISS AFFECTION HOMAGE

en: and-he-kissed, kiss-, to-kiss | es: Honrad-, Y-besó, para-besar | fr: baiser, et-il-baisa, à-baiser | de: kiss-, und-er-küsste, und-küsste Gen 31:28; Gen 31:55; Gen 45:15; Ps 2:12

3. to touch, make contact (Hifil) (1×) A lone Hifil occurrence in Ezekiel 3:13 describes the wings of the living creatures 'touching' each other, a causative extension from lips to surfaces. Spanish 'tocándose' and the departure from 'kiss' language across translations confirm this as a distinct physical-contact sense, no longer interpersonal affection but object-to-object adjacency. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: touching | es: tocándose | fr: baiser | de: [משיקות] Ezek 3:13

נָשַׁק H5401b V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc (3×)
equipped with, handlers of; bearing or wielding weapons (particularly bows)
This participial form means 'equipped with' or 'handlers of,' specifically describing warriors bearing particular weapons. In 1 Chronicles 12:2, Benjamites who joined David are called 'equipped with the bow'—skilled archers. Psalm 78:9 speaks of 'Ephraimites, armed with the bow' who nonetheless 'turned back on the day of battle'—military failure despite proper equipment. 2 Chronicles 17:17 lists a commander with soldiers 'armed with bow and shield.' The exact nuance is debated: either 'equipped with' (bearing as gear) or 'skilled handlers of' (trained users). Either way, it denotes military readiness with specified weaponry.

(3×) All three uses appear in military contexts describing archery units within Israel's forces. The Benjamite archers (1 Chronicles 12:2) are elite warriors joining David's army. Ephraim's armed bowmen (Psalm 78:9) exemplify covenant unfaithfulness—proper equipment means nothing without loyalty. Chronicles' census (17:17) documents Jehoshaphat's military strength including bow-and-shield troops. Cross-linguistic renderings focus on 'armed' (armados, armed), though some preserve the uncertainty with transliteration. The construct 'armed with [weapon]' pattern shows this is a technical military term for weapon specialization. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: armed, armed-with, armed-with- | es: armados, armados-de, portadores-de- | fr: [נשקי], embrasser | de: [נשקי], armed 1Chr 12:2; 2Chr 17:17; Ps 78:9

נֶשֶׁק H5402 Prep-b / N-ms (10×)
Weapons, arms, military equipment (collective); also an armory or arsenal as a storage place for weapons.
A masculine noun used collectively for military weapons and equipment. It appears in contexts ranging from royal tribute (1 Kgs 10:25, weapons brought to Solomon) to prophetic judgment (Ezek 39:9-10, burning the weapons of Gog). Job 20:24 specifies 'weapons of iron' alongside a 'bow of bronze,' while Psalm 140:8 speaks of 'the day of weapons' meaning the day of battle. In one instance (Neh 3:19), the word denotes not the weapons themselves but the place where they are stored – the armory – used as a landmark during Jerusalem's wall rebuilding.

1. weapons, arms, equipment (9×) Weapons, arms, or military equipment as a collective term. Covers the full range of armaments without specifying type, often followed by more specific weapon names (as in Ezek 39:9 where nesheq is the general category, then bows, arrows, clubs, and spears follow). Used of weapons as tribute gifts (1 Kgs 10:25; 2 Chr 9:24), weapons in a fortified city (2 Kgs 10:2; Isa 22:8), and metaphorically for the day of battle (Ps 140:8). Spanish 'armas' and English 'weapons' consistently render this collective military sense. WEAPONS ARMS
en: and-the-weapons, and-weapons, battle | es: armas, armas-de, batalla | fr: [נשק], arme, de-מנשק | de: Schlacht, [בנשק], [מנשק] 1Kgs 10:25; 2Kgs 10:2; 2Chr 9:24; Job 20:24; Job 39:21

2. armory, arsenal (1×) An armory or arsenal – a place where weapons are stored. In Nehemiah 3:19, the term with the article (hannesheq) identifies a specific location along Jerusalem's walls: 'opposite the ascent to the armory at the angle.' This metonymic extension from the contents (weapons) to the container (storage place) is a natural semantic development, paralleling English 'arms' > 'armory.' The locational reading is confirmed by English 'the-armory' and Spanish 'la-armeria.' WEAPONS ARMS
en: the-armory | es: la-armería | fr: [הנשק] | de: [הנשק] Neh 3:19

נְשַׁר H5403 Prep-k / N-mp (2×)
eagle (Aramaic)—a large bird of prey, possibly griffon-vulture, symbolizing strength and majesty
This Aramaic noun refers to an eagle or griffon-vulture, a large bird of prey. In Daniel 4:33, Nebuchadnezzar's hair grew long 'like eagles' (feathers) during his period of madness. In Daniel 7:4, the first beast in the vision has 'eagle' wings, representing swift, powerful movement. Eagles in biblical imagery symbolize strength, swiftness, and divine majesty. The term is the Aramaic equivalent of the Hebrew word for eagle, appearing only in the Aramaic sections of Daniel where beasts and kings are depicted with symbolic animal features.

(2×) The Aramaic term for eagle or large bird of prey, appearing in symbolic and descriptive contexts in Daniel. Daniel 4:33 describes Nebuchadnezzar's transformed appearance with hair 'like eagles' (feathers), while Daniel 7:4 depicts the first apocalyptic beast with 'eagle' wings. The multilingual glosses consistently identify this as 'eagle' (English, Spanish 'águila,' French 'aigle'), recognizing the bird's symbolic associations with power, swiftness, and majesty in both royal transformation (chapter 4) and prophetic vision (chapter 7). EAGLE VULTURE RAPTOR en: eagle, like-eagles' | es: como-águilas, águila | fr: aigle | de: [כנשרין], [נשר] Dan 4:33; Dan 7:4

נֶשֶׁר H5404 N-mp (26×)
Eagle or griffon-vulture — a large raptor symbolizing swiftness, power, divine care, and soaring majesty in Scripture.
Traditionally rendered 'eagle,' though modern zoology identifies many biblical references with the griffon-vulture (Gyps fulvus), a species native to the Levant. The ambiguity matters less than the vivid imagery: God carries Israel on eagle's wings (Exod 19:4; Deut 32:11), the swift conqueror descends like a נֶשֶׁר (Deut 28:49; Hab 1:8; Jer 48:40), and the bird's soaring heights symbolize both arrogance brought low (Obad 1:4) and renewed strength (Isa 40:31). Micah 1:16 alludes to the vulture's bald head. It is listed among unclean birds (Lev 11:13; Deut 14:12). Spanish 'águila' and German 'Adler' consistently translate with the eagle sense, while Arabic نَسْر favors 'vulture.'

eagle, vulture (large raptor) (26×) A large bird of prey — either the golden eagle or the griffon-vulture — used literally and in powerful metaphors. As a literal creature, it soars at great heights (Job 39:27), nests on cliffs (Job 39:28), and is ritually unclean (Lev 11:13; Deut 14:12). Metaphorically, it represents God's protective power (Exod 19:4; Deut 32:11), military swiftness (Deut 28:49; Hab 1:8; 2 Sam 1:23), and the transience of riches that 'fly away' (Prov 23:5). Micah 1:16 references its bald head, favoring the vulture identification. Arabic cognate نَسْر means 'vulture,' while European translations prefer 'eagle.' EAGLE VULTURE RAPTOR en: eagle, eagle-, like-an-eagle | es: El-águila, como, como-el-águila | fr: aigle, comme-aigle, comme-l'aigle, | de: Adler, [הנשר], [כנשר] Exod 19:4; Lev 11:13; Deut 14:12; Deut 28:49; Deut 32:11

נָשַׁת H5405 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (3×)
to be dry, parched; dried up through lack of moisture or vitality
This verb describes being thoroughly dried up or parched. Isaiah 41:17 portrays the desperate poor whose 'tongue is parched with thirst'—extreme dehydration as metaphor for spiritual need. Isaiah 19:5 warns that 'water shall be dried up from the sea'—the Nile failing, Egypt's lifeline evaporating. Jeremiah 51:30 uses it metaphorically: Babylon's warriors find 'their might has dried up'—courage and strength evaporating before the enemy. The Niphal stem emphasizes the passive state of being dried out, whether physically (water, tongue) or figuratively (strength failing like moisture departing).

(3×) Two Isaiah passages employ literal drying: tongues parched from thirst (41:17) and the Nile's waters drying up (19:5)—both depicting devastating shortage. Jeremiah's usage turns physical to metaphorical: warrior strength 'drying up' like water sources failing, courage evaporating in crisis. Multilingual glosses distinguish contexts: 'ha-fallado' (has failed), 'desfallece' (faints/fails), 'se-agotará' (will be exhausted). The common image is vital fluid or force diminishing to nothing—whether literal dehydration or metaphorical loss of vitality, the result is helpless depletion. WITHERING AND DRYING

en: and-dry, has-dried-up, is-parched | es: desfallece, ha-fallado, y-se-agotará | fr: [יבש], [נשתה] | de: [יבש], [נשתה] Isa 19:5; Isa 41:17; Jer 51:30

נִשְׁתְּוָן H5406 Art / N-ms (2×)

letter (Aramaic)—a written document, official correspondence, typically royal or administrative

This Aramaic term means letter or written document, typically referring to official correspondence. It appears in Ezra 4:7 and 7:11, both times describing formal letters written by or to Persian kings regarding the Jewish community in Jerusalem. The word is likely derived from Persian, reflecting the administrative vocabulary of the Achaemenid Empire. These letters were important diplomatic and legal documents that could authorize or prohibit construction projects, grant permissions, or convey royal decrees. The term appears only in the Aramaic sections of Ezra dealing with Persian-period administration.

(2×) An Aramaic noun denoting an official letter or written document, appearing in contexts of Persian imperial administration. Ezra 4:7 refers to a letter written to King Artaxerxes opposing Jerusalem's rebuilding, while Ezra 7:11 mentions the letter given to Ezra by the king. Both instances involve formal royal correspondence with legal and political implications. The multilingual glosses uniformly render this as 'letter' (English), 'carta' (Spanish = letter), 'Schreiben' (German = written document), reflecting its function as official written communication in the Persian bureaucratic system. LETTERS AND WRITINGS

en: the-letter | es: la-carta | fr: [הנשתון] | de: der-Schreiben Ezra 4:7; Ezra 7:11

נִשְׁתְּוָן H5407 N-msd (3×)

letter, written document; official correspondence in Aramaic

This Aramaic noun means 'letter' or written document, probably borrowed from Persian (reflecting the Persian imperial context of Ezra). All three occurrences appear in Ezra's Aramaic correspondence between Jerusalem and the Persian court. Ezra 4:18 mentions 'the letter' sent to King Artaxerxes being read aloud before him. Ezra 4:23 describes action taken 'after the copy of King Artaxerxes' letter was read.' Ezra 5:5 refers to 'a letter' concerning the temple rebuilding sent to King Darius. These official documents shaped Jerusalem's fate—permission granted or denied, work authorized or halted, all through imperial letters.

(3×) All three instances function within Persian bureaucracy governing Judah's restoration. The letters mediate royal power: accusations against the Jews (4:18), royal decrees halting work (4:23), and petitions for archival research (5:5). The emphatic form 'nishtvana' suggests formal, official documentation rather than personal correspondence. Cross-linguistic renderings uniformly use 'letter/carta/lettre' terminology. These Aramaic documents preserved in Scripture show how the exiled community's fortunes depended on persuading foreign kings through written appeals and responses—making letters instruments of providence. LETTERS AND WRITINGS

en: letter, letter-of | es: La-carta, carta, carta-de | fr: lettre | de: [נשתונא] Ezra 4:18; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 5:5

נָתַח H5408 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms (9×)

To cut up into pieces, dismember by joints (Piel only); used of sacrificial butchering and of sending body parts as summons.

Occurring exclusively in the Piel (intensive) stem, this verb describes the deliberate cutting of a body into pieces along its joints. Two distinct contexts dominate. In sacrificial law, it refers to the proper butchering of burnt offerings – the worshiper flays and cuts the animal into its portions before placing them on the altar (Lev 1:6, 12; 8:20; Exod 29:17; 1 Kgs 18:23, 33). In narrative, it describes the shocking act of dismembering a body and sending the pieces throughout Israel as a call to arms: the Levite's concubine (Judg 19:29; 20:6) and Saul's oxen (1 Sam 11:7). Spanish 'cortar' and German 'schneiden' both render the basic cutting action, but the Hebrew specifically implies dividing at the joints.

cut up, cut in pieces, divide by joints (9×) To cut up a carcass into pieces by its joints, used in the Piel stem for both ritual butchering and symbolic dismemberment. In the sacrificial context (Lev 1:6, 12; 8:20; Exod 29:17; 1 Kgs 18:23, 33), the verb describes the prescribed method of preparing a burnt offering – cutting the flayed animal into its anatomical portions. In the narrative context (Judg 19:29; 20:6; 1 Sam 11:7), it describes the gruesome act of cutting a body into pieces to be distributed as a summons to war. Spanish 'cortó/dividirás' and English 'cut in pieces' capture the action, though the Hebrew emphasizes division along natural joints rather than arbitrary chopping. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: and-cut-in-pieces, and-cut-it-in-pieces, and-cut-up-her | es: Y-cortará, cortó, dividirás | fr: et-coupa-cela-dans-pieces, et-coupa-dans-pieces, et-couper-en-haut-sa | de: du-soll-schneiden-in-pieces, er-schnitt, und-er-schnitt-ihnen-hinauf Exod 29:17; Lev 1:6; Lev 1:12; Lev 8:20; Judg 19:29

נֶתַח H5409 N-mp (13×)

Piece, portion of a divided animal carcass; used of sacrificial cuts and symbolic dismemberment.

The noun nethach designates a cut portion of a divided animal carcass, the result of the action expressed by its cognate verb natach (H5408, 'to cut in pieces'). In the sacrificial system, the word describes the portions into which a burnt offering was divided before being arranged on the altar (Lev 1:6, 8, 12; Exod 29:17). Ezekiel's cauldron allegory uses the term for pieces of meat symbolizing Jerusalem's inhabitants destined for judgment (Ezek 24:4–6). Most disturbingly, it describes the dismemberment of the Levite's concubine in Judges 19:29 — a grim act intended to rally Israel against Gibeah's wickedness.

piece (of a divided carcass) (13×) A portion or piece resulting from the ritual or deliberate cutting of an animal carcass. Used predominantly in sacrificial contexts where the Levitical priest dismembers the burnt offering and arranges its pieces on the altar fire (Exod 29:17; Lev 1:6, 8, 12; 8:20; 9:13). Ezekiel employs the term symbolically for the inhabitants of Jerusalem as 'pieces of meat' in a boiling pot under divine judgment (Ezek 24:4–6). The most harrowing usage describes the Levite cutting his murdered concubine into twelve pieces to send throughout Israel (Judg 19:29). FRAGMENTS AND PIECES

en: by-its-pieces, into-its-pieces, its-pieces | es: en-sus-trozos, en-trozos-suyos, los-trozos | fr: dans-son-pieces, dans-son-pièces, le-pieces | de: [לנתחיה], [נתח], [נתחיה] Exod 29:17; Lev 1:6; Lev 1:8; Lev 1:12

נָתִיב H5410a Prep-b / N-msc (6×)

Path, way, or pathway; a road or course of travel, often figurative for one's moral or spiritual direction.

A masculine noun denoting a path, road, or pathway, used predominantly in wisdom and poetic literature. Unlike the more common derek ('way'), nativ often carries an elevated, literary register. In Job, it describes hidden paths – the path concealed by a snare (18:10), the path no bird of prey has seen (28:7), and the luminous track left by Leviathan (41:32). The psalmist prays to be led in 'the path of your commandments' (Ps 119:35), while Psalm 78:50 speaks of God leveling a path for his anger. Proverbs 12:28 uses it for the pathway of righteousness that leads to life. The Spanish 'senda/sendero' and French 'sentier' both preserve the sense of a narrower, more intimate trail rather than a broad highway.

path, way, pathway (6×) A path, trail, or course of travel, frequently used in figurative and wisdom contexts for the direction of one's life or moral conduct. In Job it describes literal trails hidden from view (28:7) and metaphorical paths where traps are laid (18:10), while in the Psalms it becomes the way of God's commandments (119:35) or the channel of divine wrath (78:50). The word consistently suggests a narrower, more personal route than the broader derek. Spanish 'senda/sendero' and French 'sentier' both capture this nuance of an intimate pathway rather than a main road. Proverbs 12:28 uses it in the memorable declaration that the pathway of righteousness leads away from death. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-path, in-the-path-of, its-pathway | es: Senda, el-sendero, por-senda-de | fr: dans-sentier, sentier, נתיב | de: [נתיב], [נתיבה], ein-Pfad Job 18:10; Job 28:7; Job 41:32; Ps 78:50; Ps 119:35

נְתִיבָה H5410b N-fs (20×)
A path or byway; figuratively, a course of life or moral conduct.
The feminine counterpart of נָתִיב, this noun evokes a smaller, less-traveled path — a track or byway as distinct from the broad דֶּרֶךְ (highway). In Judges 5:6, during the days of Shamgar, 'travelers walked by winding paths' (נְתִיבוֹת), painting a picture of a land made dangerous by enemies. The word moves naturally into figurative territory: wisdom stands at the crossroads of paths (Proverbs 8:2), and God's word is a lamp to the psalmist's path (Psalm 119:105). Spanish 'senda' and French 'sentier' both capture this sense of an intimate, personal trail rather than a public road.

1. path, track, byway (11×) A physical path, track, or byway — a route one travels on, typically smaller or less established than the main road (דֶּרֶךְ). In Judges 5:6 the parallelism with אֳרְחוֹת (roads) underscores that נְתִיבוֹת are secondary routes that travelers resort to in dangerous times. Job 38:20 uses the word for the 'paths' to the dwelling-places of light and darkness — cosmic tracks with a spatial, almost geographical quality. Proverbs 8:2 places wisdom at the intersection of these byways, suggesting well-trodden but intimate routes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: -the-paths, a-path, byways | es: de-su-senda, por-las-sendas, por-sendas | fr: -le-sentiers, de-leur-sentier-eux, sentier | de: -der-Pfade, [בנתיבות], [לנתבות] Judg 5:6; Job 38:20; Prov 1:15; Prov 8:2; Prov 8:20

2. way of life or conduct (9×) A figurative path denoting a course of life, conduct, or moral direction. Job 19:8 laments that God has 'walled up my path' (נְתִיבֹתַי), and Lamentations 3:9 echoes this with 'he has made my paths crooked.' Psalm 119:105 — 'a light to my path' — has become one of the most beloved verses in Scripture, and the Hebrew specifically uses נְתִיבָה rather than דֶּרֶךְ, suggesting an intimate, personal walk rather than a public highway. The Spanish 'senda' carries the same warmth of a personal trail through life. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-her-paths, her-paths, in-its-paths | es: en-sendas-de-ella, en-sus-sendas., mi-senda | fr: dans-sa-sentier-elle, dans-son-sentier-lui, et-chemin | de: [בנתיבותיה], [בנתיבתיו], [ונתיבותיה] Job 19:8; Job 24:13; Job 30:13; Ps 119:105; Ps 142:3

נְתִינִים H5411 Conj-w (18×)
Nethinim: temple servants 'given' to assist the Levites in sanctuary duties, prominent in post-exilic texts.
A masculine plural noun derived from the passive participle of natan ('to give'), designating a class of temple servants assigned to support the Levites in maintaining the sanctuary. They appear almost exclusively in the post-exilic books of Ezra, Nehemiah, and 1 Chronicles, where they are carefully distinguished from priests, Levites, and gatekeepers (Ezra 2:43-58; 7:7; Neh 7:46-60). Tradition ascribes their appointment to David (Ezra 8:20), and they resided on the Ophel hill near the temple (Neh 3:26; 11:21). Their separate listing among the returnees from Babylon underscores their recognized, if humble, role in Israel's worship. Spanish renders them as 'sirvientes del templo,' while German uses 'Tempeldiener,' both accurately conveying their servant function.

Nethinim, temple servants (18×) A dedicated class of hereditary temple servants whose title, from the passive of natan ('to give'), marks them as persons formally 'given' to sacred service. They assisted the Levites in menial sanctuary tasks and are carefully enumerated among the exilic returnees (Ezra 2:43-58; Neh 7:46-60), distinguished from priests, Levites, and gatekeepers. They lived on the Ophel near the temple (Neh 3:26; 11:21). David is credited with their appointment (Ezra 8:20). Multilingual glosses consistently describe their servant role: Spanish 'sirvientes del templo,' German 'Tempeldiener,' French 'Nethiniens.' SERVING AND MINISTRY en: Netinim, [the-given-ones], and-the-Nethinim | es: Los-sirvientes-del-templo, Los-sirvientes-del-templo:, Y-los-netineos | fr: Néthiniens, et-Néthiniens | de: Tempeldiener, [(הנתינים)], [[הנתונים]] 1Chr 9:2; Ezra 2:43; Ezra 2:58; Ezra 2:70; Ezra 7:7

נְתִינִין H5412 N-mpd (1×)
Nethinim; temple servants, a class of workers assigned to assist the Levites in sanctuary duties
This Aramaic term appears in Ezra 7:24, where King Artaxerxes' decree exempts temple personnel from taxation. The Nethinim ('given ones') were temple servants, likely descendants of foreign captives dedicated to sanctuary service. The name derives from the verb 'to give,' indicating they were given or assigned to the Levites to assist with menial tasks—drawing water, cutting wood, and maintaining the temple precinct. The Aramaic form here represents a loanword from Hebrew, maintaining continuity with pre-exilic terminology for this servant class.

(1×) Temple servants, a class of workers assigned to assist Levites with sanctuary duties. Ezra 7:24 includes the Nethinim among those exempt from Persian taxation, recognizing their religious status. Spanish 'sirvientes del templo' (temple servants) translates the functional role rather than transliterating. These 'given ones' performed menial but necessary work, their name deriving from the root 'to give' because they were given to serve the Levites. SERVING AND MINISTRY en: Nethinim | es: sirvientes-del-templo | fr: [נתיניא] | de: [נתיניא] Ezra 7:24

נָתַךְ H5413 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (21×)
To pour out or be poured out; of metals, to melt or smelt in a furnace; in Hifil, to cause pouring or smelting
A verb of liquid motion and metallurgical transformation that bridges two vivid image-worlds: the pouring out of wrath and the smelting of metals. In its Qal and Nifal stems it describes things being 'poured forth'—Job's groans pour out like water (Job 3:24), divine fury is poured upon Jerusalem (Jer 42:18; 44:6). But in Ezekiel's furnace oracles (22:20–22), the same root describes metals being melted and smelted in judgment. Spanish distinguishes 'derramar' (pour out) from 'fundir' (smelt/melt), making explicit what Hebrew holds in one root. The Hifil causative covers both pouring and smelting as deliberate divine acts.

1. be poured out (liquid) (13×) The primary Qal and Nifal sense: to be poured out as a liquid. Nearly always figurative, describing divine wrath being poured upon people or places (Jer 42:18; 44:6; 2 Chr 12:7; 34:25), or groans pouring forth like water (Job 3:24). The rain ceasing to 'pour' in Exodus 9:33 is one of the few literal instances. Spanish 'derramar' and French 'verser' point consistently to liquid outpouring, and German renderings often leave the Hebrew untranslated, suggesting the image resists easy equivalence. POURING AND SHEDDING
en: and-are-poured-out, and-was-poured-out, and-will-be-poured-out | es: derramada, fue-derramada, fue-derramada- | fr: [ותתך], [נתך], [נתכה] | de: [ויתכו], [ותתך], [נתך] Exod 9:33; 2Sam 21:10; 2Chr 12:7; 2Chr 34:21; 2Chr 34:25

2. be melted or smelted (3×) The Nifal and Hofal sense of being melted or smelted, specifically of metals in a furnace. Ezekiel 22:21–22 and 24:11 use this imagery for Israel gathered into Jerusalem as metals into a crucible for purifying judgment. Spanish 'fundir' (to smelt, cast metal) and the shift from 'pouring' to 'melting' vocabulary mark this as a distinct semantic domain—metallurgical processing rather than liquid spillage. POURING AND SHEDDING en: and-may-be-melted, and-you-shall-be-melted, shall-you-be-melted | es:

seréis-fundidos, y-se-derrita, y-seréis-fundidos | fr: et-verser, verser | de: ausgiessen, und-ausgiessen Ezek 22:21; Ezek 22:22; Ezek 24:11

3. cause to melt or smelt (3×) The Hifil causative sense applied to smelting: to melt or smelt metals actively. In Ezekiel 22:20 God declares 'I will gather you and smelt you,' and 2 Kings 22:9 reports temple silver being 'poured out' (i.e., melted down and disbursed). Spanish 'fundir' again appears here, alongside 'para fundir' (in order to smelt), confirming that the Hifil agent deliberately initiates the metallurgical transformation. POURING AND SHEDDING en: and-I-will-melt, poured-out, to-melt | es: Fundieron, para-fundir, y-os-fundiré | fr: et-verser, versa-dehors, verser | de: ausgiessen, goss-heraus, und-ausgiessen 2Kgs 22:9; Ezek 22:20

4. pour out (causative) (2×) The Hifil causative sense applied to pouring: to pour out actively, as distinct from the smelting sense. Job 10:10 uses the striking image 'Did you not pour me out like milk?'—God as artisan pouring out human life. In 2 Chronicles 34:17 temple money is 'poured out' (disbursed). Spanish 'derramar' reappears here rather than 'fundir,' and French 'verser' (pour) confirms the liquid-pouring rather than metallurgical reading of the same Hifil stem. POURING AND SHEDDING en: You-pour-me-out, and-they-poured-out | es: me-derramaste„ y-fundieron | fr: [ויתיכו], תתיכני-moi | de: [תתיכני], und-ausgiessen 2Chr 34:17; Job 10:10

נָתַן H5414 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-1cp (2015×)

To give, put, set, make, deliver; the primary Hebrew verb for transferring possession or placing something

One of the most versatile verbs in the Hebrew Bible, natan (נָתַן) appears over 2,000 times and carries a semantic range that stretches from simple giving to divine appointment. At its core it describes the transfer of something from one party to another — a gift, a bride, a land, a covenant. But it also extends into placing, appointing, and surrendering, revealing how ancient Hebrew conceived of 'giving' as broadly relational: God gives the land, sets a rainbow, makes Abraham a father of nations, and delivers enemies into Israel's hand — all with the same root.

1. give, bestow (1855×) The default and overwhelmingly dominant sense: to give, bestow, or transfer possession. Arabic ʿ and German geben confirm the core semantics across language families. Covers gifts (Gen 24:53), payments (Gen 23:13), divine grants (Gen 12:7), and offerings (Gen 14:20). The sheer frequency (1,855 of ~2,015 occurrences) shows this as the unmarked meaning of the root. GIVING AND BESTOWING
en: and-gave, and-he-gave, and-he-gave- | es: Y-dio, y-dio | fr: et-donna, et-il-donna, et-il-donna- | de: und-er-gab, und-es-gab, und-gab Gen 3:6; Gen 14:20; Gen 16:3; Gen 18:7; Gen 20:14

2. put, place, set (68×) A spatial-locative extension: to put, place, or set something in a position. Multilingual evidence splits clearly — Spanish puso ('placed') and Korean 놓다/두다 ('to put/set') diverge from the giving glosses. Includes setting the rainbow as a sign (Gen 9:13), placing a ring on a hand (Gen 41:42), and the idiom 'set one's face toward' indicating directed attention. GIVING AND BESTOWING
en: I-gave, I-have-set, and-he-put | es: Y-puso, he-dado, puse | fr: donner, et-il-mettre-, et-il-mit | de: Natan, geben, und-er-legte Gen 9:13; Gen 41:10; Gen 41:42; Gen 41:48

3. make, render, appoint (38×) A transformative-causative sense: to make, render, or appoint someone into a new state or role. Arabic ʿ ('to make/render') and Korean 만들다 ('to make') mark this as distinct from simple giving. Joseph is made ruler over Egypt (Gen 41:43), God promises to make Abraham a great nation, and Israel's pride is made like iron (Lev 26:19). GIVING AND BESTOWING
en: And-I-will-make, And-I-will-make-you, and-I-shall-make | es: Y-daré, Y-haré, Y-pondré | fr: et-donner, et-je-donnerai, et-je-fera-faire | de: und-geben, und-ich-werde-dich-geben, und-ich-werde-geben Gen 41:43; Lev 26:19; Num 14:4; 1Kgs 5:5; 1Kgs 6:6

4. be given, be delivered (Nifal) (25×) The Niphal passive and Qal passive participle: to be given, handed over, or delivered by an unspecified agent. Spanish ser dada and German gegeben werden confirm the passive voice distinction. Appears in legal contexts like 'wound for wound shall be given' (Lev 24:20) and in apportionment of tribal inheritance (Num 26:54). GIVING AND BESTOWING
en: And-is-given, and-it-shall-be-given, and-it-will-be-given | es: Siendo-entregada, Y-se-da, Y-será-dada | fr: –être-donné, cela-devra-être-donné, devra-être-donné | de: der-gab, es-soll-sein-gegeben, geben Exod 5:18; Lev 24:20; Num 26:54; 2Sam 21:6; 1Chr 6:48

5. allow, permit, let (14×) A permissive sense: to allow, permit, or let someone act. Arabic ʿ ('to let/leave') and Korean 허락하다 ('to permit') show multilingual convergence away from simple giving. God did not allow Laban to harm Jacob (Gen 31:7), Israel would not let the Danites come down (Judg 1:34), and Samson's father-in-law refused to let him enter (Judg 15:1). GIVING AND BESTOWING
en: allowed-him, gave-him, give | es: concedas, dar, dar- | fr: donna-lui, donner, elle-que | de: du-gibst, er-erlaubte-ihn, erlaubte-ihn Gen 31:7; Josh 10:19; Judg 1:34; Judg 15:1; Judg 21:7

6. deliver, hand over (14×) A military-judicial sense: to deliver, surrender, or hand over into another's power. Arabic ʿ ('to deliver/surrender') and Spanish entregar ('to hand over') distinguish this from neutral giving. God delivers enemies into Israel's hand (Deut 7:24), Sihon is handed over (Deut 2:30), and nations are given up to slaughter (Isa 34:2). GIVING AND BESTOWING
en: He-has-given-them, He-will-give-them, and-He-will-give-up | es: Y-entregará, da, dar- | fr: donner, donner-lui, et-Il-fera-donne-en-haut | de: gab, geben, geben-ihn Deut 2:30; Deut 7:24; 1Kgs 14:16; Ezra 8:36; Isa 34:2

7. (1×) A residual occurrence at 2 Chr 24:9 where the verb appears in the context of a collection proclamation regarding the tax of Moses. The multilingual glosses (Spanish dieron, French donner, German geben) all point to ordinary 'giving,' likely a variant form or scribal peculiarity that the clustering algorithm isolated. GIVING AND BESTOWING en: and-gave- | es: Y-dieron | fr: et-donner | de: und-geben 2Chr 24:9

נְתַן H5415 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (7×)

Give, bestow, grant (Aramaic); to hand over, pay, or confer authority, used in the Biblical Aramaic of Daniel and Ezra.

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew natan, meaning 'to give, bestow, or grant.' Found exclusively in the Biblical Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra, it carries the full range of giving: divine bestowal of sovereignty (Dan 4:17,25,32 – God 'gives' dominion to whomever He wills), requesting allowance of time (Dan 2:16), and paying tribute (Ezra 4:13; 7:20). The Spanish consistently renders it with 'dar' forms, while the French and German preserve the Aramaic morphology in their glosses, reflecting its formal, administrative register.

give, bestow (7×) To give, bestow, or grant, encompassing both human acts of giving and divine bestowal of authority. In Dan 4:17,25,32 the verb expresses God's sovereign prerogative to 'give' (yitteninnah) earthly dominion to whomever He chooses – a key theological assertion in the Aramaic court tales. Dan 2:16 uses it for Daniel requesting that the king 'give' him time. In Ezra 4:13 it refers to paying taxes ('they will not give tribute'), and Ezra 7:20 authorizes disbursement from the royal treasury. The range spans divine sovereignty, personal petition, and fiscal administration. GIVING AND BESTOWING
en: He-gives-it, they-will-give, to-give | es: dar, darán, darás | fr: [ינתנון], [למנתן], [תנתן] | de: [ינתן], [ינתנון], [יתננה] Ezra 4:13; Ezra 7:20; Dan 2:16; Dan 4:17

נָתָן H5416 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (42×)

Nathan — personal name meaning 'he gave,' borne by the prophet who confronted David and others

Nathan ('he gave') is a theophoric name built on the verb natan ('to give'), appearing 42 times for several individuals. The dominant figure is Nathan the prophet, who delivered God's dynastic promise to David (2 Sam 7:2-17), then confronted him with the devastating parable of the poor man's lamb after the Bathsheba affair (2 Sam 12:1-15), and finally orchestrated Solomon's anointing against Adonijah's bid for the throne (1 Kgs 1:8-45). A second Nathan is David's own son, listed among those born in Jerusalem (2 Sam 5:14; 1 Chr 3:5). Others include the father of one of the thirty mighty men (2 Sam 23:36), companions of Ezra (Ezr 8:16; 10:39), and a clan head mourned in Zechariah 12:12.

Nathan (personal name) (42×) The proper name Nathan ('he gave'), borne most prominently by the prophet who delivered the Davidic covenant oracle (2 Sam 7), pronounced judgment after Bathsheba (2 Sam 12:1-15), and ensured Solomon's coronation (1 Kgs 1). Also identifies David's son (2 Sam 5:14), a warrior's father (2 Sam 23:36), and postexilic figures (Ezr 8:16; 10:39). NATHAN PROPHET NAME

en: Nathan | es: Natan, Natán | fr: Nathan | de: Natan, Nathan 2Sam 5:14; 2Sam 7:2; 2Sam 7:3; 2Sam 7:4; 2Sam 7:17

נְתַנְאֵל H5417 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (14×)

Nethanel; a theophoric personal name meaning 'God has given,' borne by multiple Israelite leaders.

A compound theophoric name formed from natan ('to give') and 'El ('God'), Nethanel means 'God has given' – a Hebrew counterpart to the Greek Nathanael of the New Testament. The name is borne by at least ten distinct individuals spanning the wilderness period to the post-exilic era. Its most prominent bearer is the chieftain of Issachar who appears five times in Numbers (1:8; 2:5; 7:18, 23; 10:15), presenting his tribe's dedication offering. Other Nethanels include a Levitical musician in David's procession (1 Chr 15:24), a gatekeeper among the sons of Obed-edom (1 Chr 26:4), a prince sent by Jehoshaphat to teach in the cities of Judah (2 Chr 17:7), and a priest in Nehemiah's time (Neh 12:21, 36).

Nethanel (personal name) (14×) A theophoric proper name meaning 'God has given,' borne by several biblical figures. Most prominent is the leader of Issachar during the wilderness period, who appears in the census, camp arrangement, and tabernacle dedication (Num 1:8; 2:5; 7:18, 23; 10:15). Other bearers include Jesse's fourth son (1 Chr 2:14), Levitical musicians and scribes (1 Chr 15:24; 24:6), a gatekeeper (1 Chr 26:4), a teaching prince under Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 17:7), and post-exilic priests (Ezra 10:22; Neh 12:21, 36). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Netanel, Nethan'el, Nethanel | es: Natanael, Netanel, y-Natanael | fr: Nethaneel, [ולנתנאל], [ונתנאל] | de: Nethanel, [ולנתנאל], [ונתנאל] Num 1:8; Num 2:5; Num 7:18; Num 7:23; Num 10:15

נְתַנְיָהוּ H5418 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (20×)

Nethaniah or Netanyahu, a personal name meaning 'Yahweh has given,' borne by several men in the Hebrew Bible.

A theophoric personal name meaning 'Yahweh has given,' combining natan ('he gave') with the divine name. Its most notorious bearer is Nethaniah father of Ishmael, who assassinated Gedaliah the governor appointed by Nebuchadnezzar — an event so significant it is commemorated in the Jewish fast of Gedaliah (2 Kgs 25:23, 25; Jer 40–41). Other bearers include the father of Jehudi (Jer 36:14), a Levite teacher sent by Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 17:8), and a temple musician (1 Chr 25:2, 12). The two spelling forms — Nethanyahu and Nethanyah — alternate freely throughout the text.

Nethaniah, Netanyahu (proper name) (20×) The personal name Nethaniah/Netanyahu (netan-yahu, 'Yahweh has given'), referring to multiple individuals: most prominently the father of Ishmael who murdered Governor Gedaliah (2 Kgs 25:23, 25; Jer 40:8–41:18), also the father of Jehudi (Jer 36:14), a Levitical teacher (2 Chr 17:8), and a temple singer (1 Chr 25:2, 12). The longer form Netanyahu and shorter Nethaniah represent the same name with and without the full divine suffix. Multilingual renderings — Spanish 'Netanías,' French 'Nethania,' German 'Netanja' — all preserve the theophoric element. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Netanyah, Netanyahu, and-Netanyah | es: Netanyah, Netanyahu, Netanías | fr: Netanyah, Netanyahu, Nethania | de: Netanja, Netanyah, Netanyahu 2Kgs 25:23; 2Kgs 25:25; 1Chr 25:2; 1Chr 25:12; 2Chr 17:8

נְתַן־מֶלֶךְ H5419 N-proper (2×)

Nethan-Melek—an official in Judah during King Josiah's reign, associated with temple horses dedicated to the sun

Nethan-Melek was an official or court eunuch in Judah during the reign of King Josiah. He is mentioned only in 2 Kings 23:11 in connection with Josiah's religious reforms, specifically regarding the removal of horses that previous kings had dedicated to the sun god. These horses were stationed at the entrance to the temple 'by the chamber of Nethan-Melek the official.' The name means something like 'Given of the King' or 'Gift of the King.' The Septuagint identifies him as a eunuch, suggesting he held a trusted position in the royal court.

(2×) This proper name identifies a royal official in Jerusalem during Josiah's reforms, appearing only in 2 Kings 23:11 (mentioned twice in the verse). His chamber at the temple entrance was associated with the horses dedicated to sun worship, which Josiah removed as part of his purification of Judah's religion. The multilingual glosses show some variation in handling the compound name: some treat it as two elements (Netan-Melek, Natán Melec), others as a single unit (Nethan-Melek), reflecting uncertainty about whether this is a personal name or a title. NATHAN PROPHET NAME

en: Melek, Netan- | es: Melec, Natán | fr: Melek, Netan- | de: Melek, Netan- 2Kgs 23:11

נָתַס H5420 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

to break down, tear down; to destroy or make impassable, especially a path or structure

This verb appears in Job 30:13, where Job describes how outcasts and mockers 'break down my path' as part of their assault against him. The verb suggests violent destruction making something impassable—not gentle damage but aggressive demolition. The metaphor extends from physical path destruction to the broader destruction of Job's way forward in life. These enemies systematically remove any route to restoration or escape. The verb may be equivalent to the more common נָתַץ (to break down), sharing the violent connotations of demolition.

(1×) To break down, tear up, or destroy, making something impassable or unusable. Job 30:13 uses this verb metaphorically: 'they break down my path,' describing how Job's enemies systematically destroy his way forward. Spanish 'destruyeron' (they destroyed) captures the violent action. The path imagery suggests not just obstruction but active demolition—removing any possibility of progress or escape, completing Job's isolation and helplessness. BREAKING AND UPROOTING

en: they-break-up | es: Destruyeron | fr: נתסו | de: [נתסו] Job 30:13

נָתַע H5421 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (1×)

to be broken, torn out; passive state of being forcibly extracted or shattered

This Niphal form appears in Job 4:10, where Eliphaz speaks of young lions whose 'teeth are broken.' The passive voice emphasizes what happens to the lions rather than who breaks them. The verb suggests violent extraction or shattering—teeth torn out or broken off. This imagery illustrates Eliphaz's argument about the fate of the wicked: even strong, dangerous predators are ultimately broken and rendered harmless. The dental detail makes the point viscerally—these fearsome creatures lose their most essential weapons.

(1×) To be broken, torn out, or shattered, in passive sense. Job 4:10 uses this Niphal form for young lions whose 'teeth are broken,' illustrating the destruction that comes upon the wicked despite their strength. Spanish 'arrancados' (torn out) suggests forcible extraction. The form may be Aramaizing or could be read as 'shattered.' The passive construction emphasizes the inevitability of judgment —even the predator's teeth will be broken. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: are-broken | es: son-arrancados | fr: נתעו | de: [נתעו] Job 4:10

נָתַץ H5422 Conj-w | V-Piel-ConjPerf-2mp (42×)

To pull down, tear down, demolish; of altars, walls, high places; metaphorically, to shatter or break a person.

Natats is Hebrew's primary verb for the deliberate destruction of built structures, especially those with religious significance. Its most frequent contexts involve tearing down pagan altars and high places – the recurring command of Deuteronomic reform (Exod 34:13; Deut 7:5; 2 Kgs 23:7-15). The verb carries visceral physical force: not decay or neglect but active demolition, pulling stones apart. The Piel stem in Chronicles emphasizes thoroughness – Josiah's reformers did not merely damage the shrines but demolished them completely. The word extends metaphorically to shattering teeth (Ps 58:6) and God's devastating action against persons (Job 19:10). Spanish derribar, French demolir, and German niederreissen all capture the downward-pulling force at the verb's core.

1. tear down, demolish (Qal active) (28×) The dominant Qal active sense: to pull down, tear down, or demolish a structure. Covers altars (Exod 34:13; Judg 6:30), houses (Lev 14:45), walls (2 Kgs 25:10; Jer 52:14), high places (2 Kgs 23:7-15), and city fortifications (Judg 8:9; 9:45). This is the standard command verb of cultic purification – 'you shall tear down their altars.' Spanish derribar/derribon, German niederreissen, and French demolir all select dedicated demolition vocabulary. The 28 occurrences span from the Torah's original commands through the historical narratives of their fulfillment or neglect. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-he-broke-down, and-he-tore-down, and-they-tore-down | es: Y-derribaron, Y-derribó, derribaron | fr: déchira-en-bas, démolir, et-déchira-en-bas | de: [ויתצהו], [יתצו], du-soll-zerreissen-hinab Exod 34:13; Lev 14:45; Deut 7:5; Judg 2:2; Judg 6:30

2. demolish thoroughly (Piel intensive) (7×) Piel intensive: to demolish thoroughly, with emphasis on completeness or systematic destruction. Found 7 times, concentrated in Chronicles' reform narratives – Hezekiah's purge (2 Chr 31:1), Manasseh rebuilding what he had destroyed (2 Chr 33:3), and Josiah's comprehensive campaign (2 Chr 34:4, 7). The Piel stem adds intentional thoroughness to the demolition: every altar, every Asherah pole, every high place is razed to the ground. French demolir and Spanish derribar are reused here, but the Hebrew stem distinction marks a real escalation in destructive completeness. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-he-tore-down, and-they-broke-down, and-they-shall-demolish | es: Y-derribaréis, derribó, y-derribaron | fr: démolir, et-démolir, et-ils-démolirent | de: [וינתץ], [וינתצו], [ונתצו] Deut 12:3; 2Chr 31:1; 2Chr 33:3; 2Chr 34:4; 2Chr 34:7

3. be torn down (Nifal/Qal passive/Pual) (4×) Passive voice forms (Nifal, Pual, Qal passive): to be torn down, be demolished. Found in 4 occurrences describing structures that have undergone or will undergo demolition. Lev 11:35 commands that contaminated ovens 'shall be broken down'; Judg 6:28 reports that the Baal altar 'was torn down'; Jer 4:26 envisions cities 'pulled down' before the LORD's fierce anger. German soll-sein-gebrochen and Spanish derribadas both render the passive naturally, confirming that the Hebrew morphological distinction maps onto real voice semantics. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: shall-be-broken-down, the-broken-down, was-torn-down | es: derribado, fueron-derribadas, las-derribadas | fr: devra-être-brisé-en-bas, démolir, était-déchiré-en-bas | de: niederreissen, soll-sein-gebrochen-hinab, war-zerrissen-hinab Lev 11:35; Judg 6:28; Jer 4:26; Jer 33:4

4. break, shatter (teeth/bones) (2×) Metaphorical extension to shattering teeth or bones rather than built structures. In Ps 58:6 the psalmist prays 'tear out the fangs of the young lions, O LORD' – the demolition verb is applied to the body. Nah 1:6 asks 'who can stand before his indignation? His fury is poured out... and the rocks are broken asunder.' Spanish arranca ('tear out') and the shift from architectural to anatomical vocabulary across languages confirm this as a genuine metaphorical transfer, not a coincidental homograph. DESCENDING AND TEARING en: are-shattered, tear-out | es: arranca, despedazadas | fr: démolir, renverser | de: [נתצו], zerstörte Ps 58:6; Nah 1:6

5. (1×) Metaphorical demolition of a person: God 'breaks me down on every side' (Job 19:10). Here natats describes not structural demolition but the systematic dismantling of a human life – Job experiences God's action as the pulling apart of everything that held his existence together. The verb's architectural violence is redirected inward, making the sufferer feel like a building being razed. Spanish me derriba ('knocks me down') and the singular pathos of Job's complaint give this rare metaphorical sense a devastating emotional force. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: He-breaks-me-down | es: Me-derriba | fr: יתצני-moi | de: [יתצני] Job 19:10

נָתַק H5423 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (27×)

To pull, tear, or draw away; to snap or break bonds; passively, to be torn off, broken apart, or uprooted.

Nataq is the Hebrew verb of violent separation — pulling apart what was joined, snapping what was bound, uprooting what was planted. Its most dramatic appearances involve Samson tearing his bonds 'as a thread of tow is snapped' (Judg 16:9, 12), and the messianic psalm where the nations cry 'let us burst their bonds apart' (Ps 2:3). The word's range runs from the physical — pulling a ring off a finger (Jer 22:24), drawing soldiers from a city (Judg 20:32) — to the theological, where tearing bonds becomes a metaphor for liberation (Isa 58:6; Ps 107:14). The Arabic cognate nataqa ('pull off, draw out, shake') preserves the same concrete-to-figurative arc, and Spanish arrancar ('to wrench out, uproot') covers much of the semantic territory in a single verb.

1. snap, break off (Piel) (9×) The Piel intensive active: to snap, break, or tear apart bonds, cords, or fetters by force. This is the most vivid sense, with 9 occurrences concentrated in scenes of breaking free from restraint. Samson snaps new ropes (Judg 16:9, 12), the psalmist envisions nations breaking God's bonds (Ps 2:3), and God's people are freed from chains of wickedness (Isa 58:6; Ps 107:14). Spanish romper ('to break') and French arracher ('to tear out') both select forceful-breaking vocabulary. The Piel intensification underscores the violence of the action — this is not untying but snapping. BREAKING AND UPROOTING

en: He-broke, I-tore-off, I-will-tear-apart | es: Rompamos, Y-rompió, romper | fr: arracher, et-snapped, et-snapped-eux | de: [אנתק], er-broke, lass-uns-zerbrechen Judg 16:9; Judg 16:12; Ps 2:3; Ps 107:14; Isa 58:6

2. be broken, be snapped (Nifal) (6×) The Nifal passive of breaking: to be broken, be snapped, said of cords, ropes, or bonds that give way under strain. Six occurrences describe the result rather than the act — Samson's bowstrings 'were snapped' like burnt flax (Judg 16:9), Job's purposes 'are broken off' (Job 17:11), and the threefold cord of Ecclesiastes 4:12 'is not quickly broken.' Spanish fueron-rotos and se-rompe, alongside French snaps, consistently mark passive voice. The Nifal transforms the agent-focused Piel (sense 1) into a patient-focused observation: the bond gives way. BREAKING AND UPROOTING

en: are-broken, is-broken, shall-be-broken | es: fueron-cortadas, fueron-rotos, se-rompe | fr: arracher, snaps, ינתק | de: [ינתק], [נתקו], snaps Judg 16:9; Job 17:11; Eccl 4:12; Isa 5:27; Isa 33:20

3. draw away, lure out (Qal/Hifil) (5×) The Qal and Hifil senses of drawing away or luring out persons from a position. This military and political usage appears 5 times: Joshua draws the men of Ai out from the city (Josh 8:6), Israelite warriors lure Benjaminites into pursuit (Judg 20:32), and God threatens to 'tear off' Jehoiachin like a signet ring from his finger (Jer 22:24). Spanish arrancar and alejar ('to remove, distance') and French tirer-au-loin ('to pull far away') all capture the directional pulling. The key distinction from sense 1 is that here whole persons are relocated, not bonds broken. BREAKING AND UPROOTING

en: I-would-tear-you-off, Pull-them-out, and-draw-them-away | es: arráncalos, que-los-alejemos, te-arrancaré | fr: arracher, et-déchiré, et-tirer-eux-au-loin | de: und-draw-ihnen-weg, und-zerrissen, wir-haben-drawn-ihnen-weg Lev 22:24; Josh 8:6; Judg 20:32; Jer 12:3; Jer 22:24

4. be uprooted, be torn out (Nifal) (3×) The Nifal passive of uprooting: to be torn out, uprooted, or pulled away from a fixed place. Three occurrences describe permanent dislodging — the priests' feet are 'lifted' from the Jordan as the waters return (Josh 4:18), the wicked man is 'torn from his tent' (Job 18:14), and lead fails to be 'separated' from dross (Jer 6:29). Spanish arrancaron ('they uprooted') and French arracher confirm the extraction-from-rootedness sense. While sense 2 describes bonds breaking, sense 4 describes rooted things being pulled free — a difference in what is being separated. BREAKING AND UPROOTING

en: are-separated, is-torn, were-lifted | es: Será-arrancado, arrancaron, fueron-arrancados | fr: arracher, étaient-leva, יִנְתַּק | de: [ינתק], waren-erhob, zerreissen Josh 4:18; Job 18:14; Jer 6:29

5. uproot, pull up (Piel) (2×) The Piel with an uprooting or pulling-up nuance, applied to tent pegs and plants. Ezekiel 17:9 asks whether a transplanted vine's roots will be 'pulled up,' and Ezekiel 23:34 uses the image of tearing at one's own breasts in grief. Spanish arrancaras ('you shall uproot') treats both as agricultural-extraction imagery. Only 2 occurrences, but the object class (rooted, growing things) distinguishes this from the bond-snapping of sense 1 and the person-drawing of sense 3. BREAKING AND UPROOTING
en: he-pull-up, you-shall-tear | es: arrancará, arrancarás | fr: arracher | de: [ינתק], [תנתק] Ezek 17:9; Ezek 23:34

6. be drawn away (Hofal/Nifal) (2×) The Hofal and Nifal passive of being drawn away or lured out, the mirror image of sense 3. Joshua 8:16 and Judges 20:31 both describe defenders who 'were drawn away' from their city by feigned retreat. Spanish fueron-atraidos ('they were attracted/drawn') and French etaient-drawn-au-loin both mark the passive-victim perspective — the soldiers did not choose to leave but were lured. The tactical-deception context and passive morphology together distinguish this from the active drawing of sense 3. DRIVEN AWAY SWEPT en: and-were-drawn-away, were-drawn-away | es: fueron-atraídos, y-fueron-alejados | fr: et-étaient-drawn-au-loin, étaient-drawn-au-loin | de: und-waren-drawn-weg, waren-drawn-weg Josh 8:16; Judg 20:31

נֶתֶק H5424 Conj-w (14×)
Scall, skin eruption; an eruptive disease of the scalp or beard examined by priests under purity law.
A specialized medical-legal term confined entirely to the Levitical purity code in Leviticus 13-14. Derived from the root nataq ('to tear away, pull off'), neteq literally suggests something one is inclined to scratch or tear at – compare the Latin scabies from scabere ('to scratch'). The condition appears on the head or beard and requires careful priestly inspection over two seven-day quarantine periods: the priest looks for depth, spread, and the telltale absence of yellow thin hair (Lev 13:30-37). If it heals and black hair grows in, the person is declared clean. Spanish 'tina' and French 'scall' both attempt to render this dermatological term, which sits in the broader category of sara'at-suspicious conditions.

scall, skin eruption (14×) A scall or eruptive skin condition affecting the head or beard, requiring priestly examination under the Levitical purity system. All fourteen occurrences fall within Leviticus 13:30-37 and the summary at 14:54. The priest inspects for yellow thin hair, depth beneath the skin surface, and whether the condition has spread during two successive seven-day isolation periods. If black hair regrows and no spread is found, the person is declared clean. The term derives from nataq ('to tear away'), evoking the compulsion to scratch at the eruption. SKIN DISEASE LEPROSY
en: and-for-the-scall, scall, the-scall | es: la-tiña, tiña, y-para-la-tiña | fr: et-pour-le-scall, le-scall, scall | de: der-scall, scall, und-fuer-der-scall Lev 13:30; Lev 13:31; Lev 13:32

נָתַר H5425a Prep-l / V-Piel-Inf (3×)
to spring up, leap; sudden upward movement or trembling
This verb describes sudden upward movement—springing, starting up, or leaping. Job 37:1 says his heart 'starts up from its place' in fearful response to thunder—violent involuntary reaction. Leviticus 11:21 permits eating locusts that have legs 'to leap with upon the earth'—defining clean insects by their hopping locomotion. Habakkuk 3:6 depicts God's theophany: 'he looked and made nations tremble'—literally 'start up' or shake in terror. The common thread is sudden, convulsive movement: hearts jumping in alarm, locusts bounding, nations shaking at divine presence.

(3×) Leviticus uses the Piel infinitive for locusts' characteristic hopping—the jumping motion that distinguishes permitted insects. Job employs the Qal imperfect for his heart's involuntary leap at God's thunder—physical response to overwhelming awe. Habakkuk's Hiphil causative shows God making nations 'start up' in terror—forced trembling before divine glory. Cross-linguistic renderings vary: 'saltar' (leap), 'temblar' (tremble), 'secouer' (shake). The semantic range spans literal jumping (locusts) and metaphorical starting/trembling (hearts, nations), united by the concept of sudden upward or convulsive motion. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-it-leaps, and-made-tremble, to-leap | es: e-hizo-temblar, para-saltar, y-salta | fr: et-secouer, et-וַיִּתַּר, à-leap | de: [ויתר], zu-leap Lev 11:21; Job 37:1; Hab 3:6

נָתַר H5425b V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (5×)
to unfasten, loosen, set free; to release bonds or prisoners
A Hiphil verb meaning to loose what is bound — whether physical fetters, yoke-thongs, or a person held captive. Isaiah 58:6 pairs it with 'break every yoke' in the great fast-day oracle, calling for the loosening of bonds of wickedness. The psalmist celebrates God as the one who 'sets prisoners free' (Ps 146:7) and who sent word to release Joseph from chains (Ps 105:20). Job 6:9 uses it figuratively: 'that he would let loose his hand and cut me off.' Spanish 'desatar' and 'soltando' vividly express the unshackling force of the word.

(5×) To unfasten or loosen physical restraints such as thongs, yoke-straps, or bonds of wickedness. Isaiah 58:6 commands loosening (hatter) the thongs of the yoke as part of true fasting. French 'secouer' ('to shake off') and Spanish 'desatar' ('to untie') capture the breaking of physical constraints. The emphasis is on the material bonds rather than the person bound. UNTYING AND DISSOLVING en: and-He-sets-free, and-released-him, sets-free | es: desatar, soltando, soltara | fr: [התר], de-secouer, et-Il-sets-free | de: [התר], [יתר], sets-free 2Sam 22:33; Job 6:9; Ps 105:20; Ps 146:7; Isa 58:6

נְתַר H5426 V-Hifil-Imp-mp (1×)
to strip off, shake off; to remove by force, especially leaves from a tree
This Aramaic Haphel verb appears in Daniel 4:14, in Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the great tree. A heavenly watcher commands: 'Strip off its leaves, shake off its fruit.' The verb indicates forcible removal, stripping away the tree's foliage. This imperative begins the systematic dismantling of the tree (representing Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom and sanity), starting with its leafy crown. The Aramaic root relates to falling off or shedding, here made causative—making the leaves fall, stripping them away. This stripping precedes the cutting down, signaling total judgment.

(1×) To strip off or shake off, causing something to fall away forcibly. Daniel 4:14 uses this imperative for stripping leaves from the great tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. Spanish 'sacudid' (shake off) captures the violent removal action. The command to strip the tree's leaves initiates its complete dismantling, beginning the king's humiliation. The verb suggests deliberate denudation, leaving the tree bare before its trunk is cut down. WANDERING AND GRIEVING en: strip | es: sacudid | fr: délivrer | de: [אתרו] Dan 4:14

נֶתֶר H5427 N-ms (2×)
natron, lye—a mineral alkali or carbonate of soda used for washing and cleaning Natron is a naturally occurring mineral alkali, essentially carbonate of soda, used in the ancient world for washing and cleaning. The word appears in two contexts: Jeremiah 2:22 says even washing with natron cannot cleanse Judah's guilt (paired with 'soap'), and Proverbs 25:20 uses the chemical reaction of vinegar on natron as an image of incongruity (like singing to a heavy heart). The term is related to Greek 'nitron' and Latin 'nitrum.' Natron deposits were mined in Egypt and elsewhere and were prized for their cleansing properties. The biblical writers use it both literally (for washing) and metaphorically (illustrating moral stain and incompatibility).

(2×) Refers to natron, a mineral alkali (sodium carbonate) used for washing and cleaning. Jeremiah 2:22 employs it in a metaphor: 'though you wash with natron' (and soap), your guilt remains stained before God, emphasizing that ritual cleansing cannot remove moral impurity. Proverbs 25:20 uses the reaction of 'vinegar upon natron' to illustrate inappropriate behavior. The multilingual glosses identify this as 'lye' (English), 'lejía' (Spanish = lye), showing recognition of its cleansing function, while also rendering it as 'soda' and 'salitre' (saltpeter), reflecting its alkaline, mineral nature. SALT SUBSTANCE

en: soda, with-lye | es: con-lejía, salitre | fr: [בנתר], נתר | de: [בנתר], [נתר] Prov 25:20; Jer 2:22

נָתַשׁ H5428 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs (21×)

To uproot or pluck up by the roots; in passive stems, to be uprooted or torn out.

Carries the vivid image of tearing something out by its roots, used both literally of plants and Asherah poles (Mic 5:13) and figuratively of nations being ripped from their land in divine judgment. Jeremiah favors this word heavily, pairing it with 'build and plant' to frame God's sovereign power to destroy and restore (Jer 1:10, 24:6, 42:10). Spanish 'arrancar' and French 'arracher/deraciner' preserve the same root-pulling imagery, underscoring how universal this metaphor is across languages.

1. uproot, pull up (16×) To pull up or tear out by the roots in active Qal constructions, including imperatives, infinitives, and participles. Applied literally to uprooting Asherim (Mic 5:13) and figuratively to nations and kingdoms being torn from their land. Jeremiah uses it programmatically: God appoints the prophet 'to uproot and tear down, to build and to plant' (Jer 1:10). Spanish 'arrancar' and French 'arracher' both convey the forceful extraction. The pairing with planting in Jer 24:6 and 42:10 shows uprooting as the reversible counterpart to divine restoration. UPROOT PLUCK UP

en: I-will-uproot, My-uprooting, am-uprooting | es: Y-arrancaré, Y-los-arrancó, arrancar | fr: [ונתשתים], arracher, déraciner | de: [ונתשתי], [ונתשתים], ausreissen Deut 29:28; 1Kgs 14:15; 2Chr 7:20; Ps 9:6; Jer 1:10

2. be uprooted, be plucked up (5×) The passive or stative sense expressed through Nifal and Hofal stems, describing being uprooted or torn out from one's place. Often denotes the irreversible consequence of divine judgment on nations or cities (Ezek 19:12, Dan 11:4), though Amos 9:15 promises Israel will 'no longer be uprooted' – the definitive reversal. German and French translations sometimes leave this untranslated, relying on grammatical context, while Spanish distinguishes clearly with 'fue arrancada' and 'sera arrancado.' UPROOT PLUCK UP

en: and-it-was-plucked-up, are-uprooted, it-will-be-uprooted | es: Y-fue-arrancada, se-secan, será-arrancado | fr: arracher, déraciner, et-arracher | de: [ותתש], [ינתשו], [תנתש] Jer 18:14; Jer 31:40; Ezek 19:12; Dan 11:4; Amos 9:15

סְאָה H5429 N-fp (9×)

A seah, an ancient Hebrew dry measure equal to one-third of an ephah (approximately 7 liters), used for grain and flour.

The seah was a standard unit of dry measure in ancient Israel, roughly one-third of an ephah or about 7.3 liters. Abraham instructs Sarah to prepare three seahs of fine flour for his angelic visitors (Gen 18:6), Abigail brings five seahs of roasted grain to David (1 Sam 25:18), and Elijah uses two seahs of seed to measure the trench around his altar on Mount Carmel (1 Kgs 18:32). During the siege of Samaria, the miraculous fulfillment of Elisha's prophecy is measured in seahs – 'a seah of fine flour for a shekel' (2 Kgs 7:1, 16, 18). French 'seahs' and Spanish 'seas' borrow the term directly, while German simply uses 'Sea,' reflecting the challenge of translating ancient metrological vocabulary.

seah (unit of dry measure) (9×) A seah, a specific dry-volume measure equivalent to approximately one-third of an ephah (about 7.3 liters), used for measuring flour, grain, and seed. Key passages include Abraham's hospitality offering of three seahs (Gen 18:6), Abigail's gift of five seahs (1 Sam 25:18), Elijah's altar-trench measurement (1 Kgs 18:32), and Elisha's prophecy of economic restoration priced per seah (2 Kgs 7:1, 16, 18). Multilingual glosses show universal borrowing of the term – Spanish 'seas,' French 'seahs,' German 'Sea' – since no equivalent unit exists in modern measurement systems. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-seah-of-, and-a-seah-of-, and-two-seahs | es: Dos-seas-de, dos-seahs, medidas-de | fr: deux-seahs, et-deux-seahs, et-un-seah-de- | de: Sea, ein-seah-von-, seahs Gen 18:6; 1Sam 25:18; 1Kgs 18:32; 2Kgs 7:1

סְאוֹן H5430 N-ms (1×)

boot, military footwear; a warrior's marching boot used in battle

This noun appears in Isaiah 9:5 in a prophecy of peace: 'Every boot of the booted warrior in the battle tumult...will be for burning.' The term refers to military footwear, the heavy marching boots worn by soldiers. The phrase 'boot of the booted warrior' uses the noun with its related participle for emphasis. Isaiah envisions a time when weapons and military equipment, including warriors' boots, will be burned as fuel because warfare has ceased. The specific mention of boots evokes the sound and image of armies marching, soon to be silenced.

(1×) A military boot, the footwear of a warrior. Isaiah 9:5 prophesies that 'every boot of the booted warrior in battle tumult' will be burned, symbolizing the end of warfare. Spanish 'bota de' (boot of) confirms the footwear meaning. The boot represents militarism generally—its burning signals the arrival of the Prince of Peace, when military equipment becomes unnecessary and is destroyed. SANDALS FOOTWEAR

en: boot | es: bota-de | fr: [סאון] | de: [סאון] Isa 9:5

סָאַן H5431 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

booted warrior; a soldier wearing military boots, one who marches in battle

This Qal participle appears in Isaiah 9:5, describing 'the booted warrior in battle tumult.' The term is denominative from the word for boot, essentially meaning 'the one who wears boots' or 'the boot-wearing one.' This identifies military personnel by their characteristic footwear. Combined with 'in battle tumult' and parallel to 'blood-stained garments,' the image evokes armies in combat. Isaiah's prophecy that these boots will be burned signals warfare's end—the booted warriors will march no more.

(1×) A boot-wearing warrior, a soldier characterized by military footwear. Isaiah 9:5 uses this participle to describe 'the booted warrior in the tumult' whose boots will be burned. Spanish 'el que marcha' (the one who marches) captures the military movement associated with booted soldiers. The term evokes the sound and sight of armies on the march, soon to be stilled when warfare ceases under the Prince of Peace's reign. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: of-booted-one | es: el-que-marcha | fr: [סאן] | de: [סאן] Isa 9:5

סַאֲסָא H5432 Prep-b / V-Piel-Inf / 3fs (1×)

by measure; with careful measurement, precisely and carefully (possibly an emphatic construction)

This difficult phrase appears in Isaiah 27:8, likely meaning 'by measure' or 'in/by measured degree.' The construction may be an emphatic repetition of the word for measure (seʾāh): 'by the seʾāh, the seʾāh'—that is, carefully measured, not excessively. The context describes God's judgment of Israel as measured and restrained: 'In measure, when sending her away, you contended with her.' Unlike the total destruction inflicted on enemies, God's discipline of His people is calibrated, limited, proportional. The phrase emphasizes divine restraint—judgment carefully measured rather than poured out in full fury.

(1×) By measure, with careful measurement or in measured degree. Isaiah 27:8 uses this phrase to characterize God's judgment of Israel as calibrated rather than total: 'by measure, when sending her away.' Spanish 'con medida' (with measure) captures the careful proportioning. The phrase contrasts with unlimited vengeance—

God measures His discipline, neither excessive nor indiscriminate, maintaining redemptive restraint even in judgment. MEASURE MEASUREMENT
en: By-measure | es: Con-medida | fr: [בסאסאה] | de: [בסאסאה] Isa 27:8

H5433 N-mp (1×)
Sabeans; an Arabian people, possibly associated with trade or, contextually, with debauchery
This term appears in Ezekiel 23:42, in a difficult text describing 'Sabeans from the wilderness' or possibly 'drunkards from the wilderness' brought to adorn Judah and Jerusalem allegorically. The identity is debated: are these the Sabeans, the Arabian trading people from Sheba? Or should we read 'wine-bibbers' or 'drunkards' (from a different root)? The Ketiv/Qere textual variants reflect this uncertainty. If Sabeans, they represent foreign influence corrupting God's people. If drunkards, they symbolize the debauchery characterizing the nation's spiritual adultery.

(1×) Either Sabeans (an Arabian people) or, per alternative reading, drunkards/wine-bibbers in Ezekiel 23:42's allegory of Jerusalem's corruption. The textual uncertainty reflects two possible interpretations: foreign (Sabean) influence or drunken debauchery. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve 'Sabeans'/'sabeos,' following the ethnic identification, though French 'boire' (to drink) reflects the alternative reading as drunkards. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION
en: Sabeans | es: sabeos | fr: boire | de: [סבאים] Ezek 23:42

סָבָא H5433a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf.Cohort-1cp (4×)
to imbibe, drink largely, be a drunkard; excessive consumption of wine or strong drink
This verb describes heavy drinking or drunkenness, with the participle serving as a noun for "drunkard" or "wine-bibber." Deuteronomy 21:20 and Proverbs 23:21 condemn the "glutton and drunkard" (זוֹלֵל וְסֹבֵא), while Proverbs 23:20 warns against associating with "drunkards of wine." Isaiah 56:12 uses the cohortative form in the speech of the wicked: "let us drink deeply." Nahum 1:10 describes evildoers as "drunken as with their drink," using a passive participle.

(4×) Denotes excessive drinking or the state of drunkenness. The participial forms (סֹבֵא, סֹבְאֵי) function as nouns meaning "drunkard" or "wine-bibber," appearing in ethical warnings (Proverbs, Deuteronomy). Multilingual glosses vary but cluster around drunkenness: "drunkard/borracho/buveur," though some bracket unusual forms like [ונסבאה], [בסבאי], [סבא]. The Isaiah 56:12 cohortative ("let us drink deeply") shows the verb in active use, while Nahum 1:10 uses it in a simile of judgment. The term is consistently negative, associated with moral failure and divine judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-drunkard, among-drunkards-of, and-let-us-drink-deeply | es: el-borracho, embriagados, entre-los-bebedores-de- | fr: [ונסבאה], boire, dans-בסבאי | de: [בסבאי], [ונסבאה], [סבא] Prov 23:20; Prov 23:21; Isa 56:12; Nah 1:10

סָבָא H5433b V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)
drunkards, wine-bibbers; those who drink excessively, possibly a variant reading for Sabeans
This term appears as an alternative reading (Ketiv) in Ezekiel 23:42, possibly meaning 'drunkards' or 'wine-bibbers' rather than 'Sabeans.' The root would derive from drinking/imbibing rather than from Sheba. In Ezekiel's allegory of Jerusalem's harlotry, this reading would emphasize the drunken debauchery surrounding the city's spiritual adultery. The phrase 'drunkards from the wilderness' would depict the degraded company Jerusalem keeps. However, textual evidence favors 'Sabeans,' and this may represent a scribal interpretation rather than the original reading.

(1×) Drunkards or wine-bibbers, an alternative reading in Ezekiel 23:42 for those brought from the wilderness. This interpretation derives from a root meaning to drink wine excessively. French 'ivrogne' (drunkard) reflects this understanding. In context, drunkards would symbolize the degraded, dissolute character of Jerusalem's spiritual adultery. However, most modern translations prefer 'Sabeans,' treating this as a textual variant rather than the original. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION
en: [drunkards] | es: sabeos | fr: ivrogne | de: [סובאים] Ezek 23:42

סְבָא H5434 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)
Seba; a son of Cush and a nation/territory in southern Arabia or northeast Africa
Seba appears both as a personal name (the first son of Cush in Genesis 10:7 and 1 Chronicles 1:9) and as a geographic designation for a nation or region. Psalm 72:10 links Seba with Sheba in tribute brought to the king, while Isaiah 43:3 places it alongside Cush and Egypt as a ransom for Israel. Most scholars locate Seba on the western coast of the Red Sea, possibly the port of Saba in the Adulic Gulf, distinct from the better-known Sheba (Arabia).

(4×) A personal and geographic name denoting both a son of Cush and a southern nation/territory. The Table of Nations (Genesis 10:7//1 Chronicles 1:9) establishes Seba as Cush's firstborn, while the prophetic and poetic texts (Psalm 72:10, Isaiah 43:3) treat it as a wealthy nation bringing tribute or subject to divine judgment. Multilingual renderings are stable (Seba, Séba, Seva), with some translations bracketing [וסבא] and [סבא]. The geographic identity is distinct from Sheba, though often paired with it, suggesting a southern Red Sea or northeast African location. BEERSHEBA SHEBA NAMES
en: Seba, Seva, and-Seba | es: Seba, Sevá, y-Seba | fr: Seba, Séba, [וסבא] | de: Seba, [וסבא], [סבא] Gen 10:7; 1Chr 1:9; Ps 72:10; Isa 43:3

סֹבֶא H5435 N-msc / 3mp (4×)
drink, liquor; strong or choice beverage, sometimes used of drunkenness itself
This noun refers to drink or liquor, particularly strong or intoxicating beverages. Isaiah 1:22 uses it in a metaphor of corruption: "your drink mixed with water," symbolizing diluted righteousness. The text and translation of Hosea 4:18 are uncertain, with some reading "their liquor (drunkenness) is gone" and others proposing emendations. Nahum 1:10 may refer either to drunkards or to their drink. The term overlaps semantically with the verb סָבָא (to drink largely) and may denote both the beverage and the state of intoxication.

(4×) Denotes strong drink, liquor, or the state of drunkenness. Isaiah 1:22 uses it metaphorically for corrupted judgment. The Hosea 4:18 and Nahum 1:10 references are textually difficult, with interpretations ranging from "their drink" to "drunkard" or even emended readings. Multilingual glosses reflect this ambiguity: "drink/bebida/boisson" (beverage sense) versus "drunkard/borracho" (person). Some translations bracket forms like [סבאך], [וכסבאם], [סבאם], signaling textual or morphological uncertainty. The term is semantically and etymologically linked to the verb for heavy drinking. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION
en: and-drunkard, and-like-their-drink, their-drink | es: su-bebida, tu-vino, y-borracho | fr: [סבאך], boisson-forte, et-boisson-forte | de: [וכסבאם], [סבאך], [סבאם] Deut 21:20; Isa 1:22; Hos 4:18; Nah 1:10

סְבָאִים H5436 Conj-w / N-proper-mp (1×)
Sebaim; an ethnic group, possibly identical with the Sabeans, tall people from Cush or Arabia
This ethnic designation appears in Isaiah 45:14, where 'the Sebaim, men of stature' are listed alongside Egyptians and Cushites as peoples who will submit to Israel's God. The Septuagint renders this as 'Sabaioi,' suggesting identification with the Sabeans of southern Arabia (Sheba). The phrase 'men of stature' (tall men) emphasizes their impressive physical presence. These were notable trading peoples, and their submission would demonstrate God's universal sovereignty. The variant spelling may represent the same group as the Sabeans, with possible confusion or textual variants affecting the form.

(1×) An ethnic group, possibly identical with the Sabeans, characterized as tall people. Isaiah 45:14 lists 'the Sebaim, men of stature' among peoples who will acknowledge Israel's God. Spanish 'sabeos' and the parallel with Egypt and Cush suggest these are southern Arabian or possibly African peoples. Their 'stature' emphasizes physical impressiveness, making their submission to Israel's God more significant—even powerful, tall peoples will bow to the one true God. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Sevaim | es: y-sabeos | fr: [וסבאים] | de: [וסבאים] Isa 45:14

סָבַב H5437 Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf (158×)

turn, surround, go around; (Qal) turn, encircle, traverse; (Niphal) wind, turn; (Hifil) cause to turn, bring around; (Hofal) be turned Hebrew סָבַב is a verb of circular or rotational motion, covering turning, surrounding, and traversing. In Qal it describes both intransitive turning (changing direction) and transitive encircling (surrounding an object). Hifil adds causative force: making something turn, leading someone around, or bringing objects from place to place. Niphal and Hofal provide middle and passive voices. Piel intensifies the action—repeated circling or ceremonial encompassing. Arabic cognates include dāra (to turn, revolve), aḥāṭa (to surround), and iltafata (to turn around). The verb's semantic center is circular movement, whether literal (marching around Jericho) or metaphorical (changing one's heart).

1. turn, change direction (Qal) (37×) Intransitive turning of a subject: the person or thing turns around, turns back, or changes facing direction. Genesis 42:24 (Joseph turned away from them), Deuteronomy 2:3 (you have circled this mountain long enough—turn northward), and 1 Samuel 15:12, 27 (Saul turned aside) show change of direction without an object. Arabic dāra and iltafata (turn, turn around) and Spanish vuelve/se volvió capture the self-motion. This is the verb's most basic intransitive sense. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-he-turned, and-he-turned-aside, and-turned-aside | es: Vuelve, Y-se-volvió, gira | fr: entourer, et-il-se-tourna, et-il-se-tourna-de-côté | de: umgeben, umkreiste, und-er-wandte Gen 42:24; Deut 2:3; 1Sam 15:12; 1Sam 15:27; 1Sam 17:30

2. surround, encompass (Qal) (33×) To encircle or surround a person, place, or object—sometimes hostile (besieging), sometimes protective or encompassing. Genesis 2:11, 13 (rivers surrounding lands), Genesis 37:7 (sheaves surrounding Joseph's), Judges 16:2, 20:5 (surrounding a house or city for attack) illustrate the transitive use with an object. Arabic aḥāṭa (to surround) and Spanish rodear are standard equivalents. This sense emphasizes static or dynamic encirclement, from geographical features to military siege. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-surrounded, and-they-surrounded, encircling | es: Me-rodearon, Y-rodearon, el-que-rodea | fr: allant-autour, entoura-moi, entourer | de: der-umfließt, gehend-um, haben-surrounded-mich Gen 2:11; Gen 2:13; Gen 37:7; Judg 16:2; Judg 20:5

3. go around, traverse (Qal) (27×) To travel around, make a circuit, patrol, or march around—emphasizing the path traversed rather than static surrounding. Numbers 21:4 (going around Edom), Joshua 6:3 (march around the city), and Ecclesiastes 2:20 (I turned to despair in all my toil) show movement along a circuit. Arabic ṭāfa (to go around, circuit) and dāra capture the traversal. Spanish rodearon and French aller autour reflect the journey. This is circular motion as a route, not as a static boundary. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-go-around, and-he-went-around, and-they-surrounded | es: Y-rodearon, la-rodeaba, los-que-rodean | fr: entourer, et-alla-autour, et-aller-autour | de: lass-gehe-um, sie-ging-um, umgeben Num 21:4; Num 36:7; Num 36:9; Deut 2:1; Josh 6:3

4. cause to turn, divert (Hifil) (21×) Causative turning or transforming: to turn something or someone, change direction, divert, or redirect—including turning faces, hearts, or groups. Judges 18:23 (they turned their faces), 2 Samuel 3:12, 14:20 (turning the face of things), 1 Kings 8:14, 18:37 (turn their hearts back) show the agent causing a change of direction or state. Arabic ḥawwala and ghayyara (to change, transform) parallel the causative force. Spanish giró/apartó and German wandte preserve the turning metaphor. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: And-turned, and-He-turned, and-I-shall-turn | es: Aparta, Y-apartaré, Y-giró | fr: Détourne, entourer, et-entourer | de: er-wandte, umgeben, umkreiste Judg 18:23; 2Sam 3:12; 2Sam 14:20; 1Kgs 8:14; 1Kgs 18:37

5. turn, wind (Niphal) (13×) Reflexive or middle-voice turning: a border winds around, a boundary line shifts, something turns of its own accord without an external agent. Genesis 19:4 (before they lay down, the men of the city surrounded the house), Numbers 34:4-5, Joshua 15:3 (the border shall turn and pass) show boundaries changing direction. Arabic dāra and imtadda (extend, wind) fit the geography. Spanish pasarán/rodeó and German umgab reflect the self-motion of borders or natural features. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-shall-turn, and-shall-turn-over, and-turned | es: Y-pasarán, Y-rodeó, Y-torcerá | fr: entoura, et-devra-tourner, et-entourer | de: umgab, umringten, und-soll-wenden Gen 19:4; Num 34:4; Num 34:5; Josh 7:9; Josh 15:3

6. surround, go around (Piel) (12×) Intensified encompassing or repeated circling, often in ceremonial or emphatic contexts. Deuteronomy 32:10 (he encircled him, cared for him), Psalms 7:7, 26:6, 32:7, 10 (surround me with deliverance, I go around your altar) show Piel's iterative or intensive force. Arabic aḥāṭa and ṭāfa capture the close or repeated surrounding. Spanish rodean/rodeó and German umgeben reflect the intensification. This is more than passing by—it's deliberate, close, or repeated encirclement. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: You-surround-me, and-I-go-around, and-go-around | es: la-rodean, lo-rodeará, lo-rodeó | fr: entourer, et-je-parcourrai, et-tourner | de: du-umgebenmich, er-umgab-ihn, sie-gehen-um-es Deut 32:10; Ps 7:7; Ps 26:6; Ps 32:7; Ps 32:10

7. bring around, transfer (Hifil) (11×) Causative movement of objects or people from one location to another: to bring around, lead around, remove, or relocate. Exodus 13:18 (God led the people around by way of the wilderness), 1 Samuel 5:8-10 (let the ark be brought around to Gath, Ekron) show spatial relocation. Arabic naqala (to move, transfer) and adāra (to turn around) match the causative displacement. Spanish hizo rodear/traigamos and German brachte um reflect the agency in moving objects or groups. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-he-led-me-around, and-led-around, and-let-us-bring-around | es: E-hizo-rodear, Y-traigamos, hizo-rodear | fr: entourer, et-conduisit-autour, et-entourer | de: gehe-um, sie-brachte-um, sie-habe-brachte-um Exod 13:18; 1Sam 5:8; 1Sam 5:9; 1Sam 5:10; 2Sam 5:23

8. change, transform (Qal) (2×) A rare intransitive sense extending physical turning to metaphorical transformation or change of state. 1 Samuel 22:22 (I have caused the death of all your father's house—possibly 'I have turned/brought about') and Zechariah 14:10 (the land shall be turned into a plain) show state change. Arabic taḥawwala (to be transformed) fits. Spanish causé/se transformará and German wandte/umkreiste show the range. This is the most abstract and least frequent use. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-have-turned, will-change | es: Se-transformará, causé | fr: entourer, je-ai-se-tourna | de: ich-habe-wandte, umkreiste 1Sam 22:22; Zech 14:10

9. be turned, be changed (Hofal) (2×) Passive of the causative: to be turned by an external agent, to be changed or transformed passively. Numbers 32:38 (names being changed) and Isaiah 28:27 (a threshing sledge is not turned over cumin) show the Hofal passive. Arabic ghuyyira (was changed, passive) parallels the structure. Spanish cambiados de/se hace girar and German geändert/umgeben reflect passivization. This is the verb's least common stem, attested twice. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: being-changed, on | es: cambiados-de, se-hace-girar | fr: entourer, étant-changed | de: seiend-aenderte, umgeben Num 32:38; Isa 28:27

סִבָּה H5438 N-fs (1×)

turn of affairs, turn of events; a divinely orchestrated change or reversal in circumstances

This noun appears in 1 Kings 12:15, explaining why Rehoboam refused the people's petition: 'The king did not listen to the people, for it was a turn of affairs from YHWH.' The term indicates a divinely caused turning or ordering of events to fulfill prophecy (Ahijah's word to Jeroboam). This wasn't random—God orchestrated circumstances to bring about the kingdom's division. The noun suggests providential redirection, God turning events according to His purposes. The parallel passage (2 Chronicles 10:15) uses a similar term, confirming this theological interpretation of political events.

(1×) A turn or ordering of affairs, specifically a divinely caused reversal or redirection of circumstances. 1 Kings 12:15 uses this to explain Rehoboam's disastrous decision: 'it was a turn of affairs from the LORD' to fulfill prophecy. Spanish 'causa' (cause) and French 'tournant' (turning point) capture the sense of orchestrated change. This theological term attributes historical events to divine providence, showing God directing political developments to accomplish His prophetic word. CAUSE REASON PRETEXT

en: a-turning | es: causa | fr: un-tournant | de: ein-wendend 1Kgs 12:15

סָבִיב H5439 Adv / 2mp (337×)

Round about, all around; as a substantive, the surrounding area or neighboring peoples.

One of Hebrew's most spatially vivid words, sabib paints a picture of complete encirclement — whether a border running 'all around' a field (Gen 23:17), a molding encircling the altar (Exod 25:11), or enemies encamped on every side (Ps 3:7). It functions flexibly as adverb, preposition, or substantive, and frequently takes pronominal suffixes: 'around him,' 'around them.' When used as a noun it designates the surrounding region or the neighboring peoples, as in Psalm 44:13 where Israel becomes a reproach 'to those around us.' The repeated sabib sabib ('round and round') in Ecclesiastes 1:6 captures the endless circuit of the wind.

1. around, all around (spatial) (319×) Adverbial and prepositional 'around, all around, on every side' (319x) — the dominant spatial sense indicating encirclement or surrounding position. Appears with prepositions (min-sabib 'from around,' al-sabib 'upon the circuit of') and pronominal suffixes. Genesis 23:17 uses it for Abraham's field boundaries; Ezekiel's temple visions are saturated with this word for architectural measurements. French tout autour, German ringsum, and Spanish alrededor all confirm a single unified spatial concept across every occurrence. AROUND AND SURROUNDING

en: all-around, around | es: alrededor, alrededor-de- | fr: autour, tout-autour | de: alle-um, ringsum-waren, um Gen 23:17; Exod 16:13; Exod 19:12; Exod 25:11; Exod 25:24

2. surroundings, those around (substantive) (17×) Substantival use (17x) where sabib functions as a noun meaning 'the surroundings, the environs, the neighboring peoples or places.' Often with the article or in construct: ha-sabib 'the circuit' (1 Chr 11:8), or with suffixed forms meaning 'those around him/them.' Psalm 76:11 calls on 'all who are around Him' (sebibayw) to bring gifts. Arabic hawl used substantivally for 'the vicinity' provides a semantic parallel. The shift from spatial adverb to substantive designating people or territory is a natural metonymic extension. AROUND AND SURROUNDING

en: and-in-surroundings-of, around-him, around-them | es: a-alrededores-de-nosotros, a-su-alrededor, alrededor-de-ella | fr: alentour, autour, der-autour | de: der-ringsum, der-sind-um-ihn, rings-um-sie Num 22:4; 1Chr 11:8; Ezra 1:6; Ps 44:13; Ps 76:11

3. (1×) A single occurrence in Ecclesiastes 1:6 describing the wind's circular course: it goes south, turns north, 'round and round goes the wind' (sabib sabib). The doubling intensifies the sense of perpetual, cyclical motion. Some translations render this as 'its circuits' (English) or 'sus giros' (Spanish, 'its turns'), treating it more as a nominal than a pure adverb. This philosophical-cosmological usage — capturing nature's endless repetition — is distinctive to Qoheleth's vocabulary. AROUND AND SURROUNDING en: its-circuits | es: sus-giros | fr: autour-lui | de: ringsum Eccl 1:6

סָבַךְ H5440 V-Pual-Imperf-3mp (2×)

to be interwoven, entangled—to be twisted together in a tangled mass, intertwined in complexity

This verb describes being interwoven, entangled, or twisted together in a complex mass. Job 8:17 uses it of plant roots that are interwoven around a heap of stones, illustrating how the godless person's hope is entangled in unstable foundations. Nahum 1:10 employs the image of people entangled like thorns, emphasizing their helplessness before divine judgment. The root conveys the idea of things woven together so tightly that they form a confused, tangled mass—whether roots seeking stability or enemies trapped in their own schemes. Both passages use the imagery negatively, suggesting false security or impending destruction.

(2×) Means to be interwoven, entangled, or twisted together in a tangled mass. Job 8:17 describes roots 'interwoven' around a stone heap, illustrating the wicked person's misplaced confidence. Nahum 1:10 depicts enemies 'entangled like thorns,' helpless before God's wrath. The multilingual evidence shows the same semantic field: 'entangled/entwined' (English), 'entrelazados/entretejen' (Spanish = interlaced), 'mêler' (French = to mix/tangle), all conveying the image of things woven or twisted together in a complex, often precarious, configuration. CLINGING AND JOINING

en: are-entwined, entangled | es: entrelazados, se-entretejen, | fr: mêler, יסבכו | de: [יסבכו], [סבכים] Job 8:17; Nah 1:10

סֹבֶךְ H5441 Prep-m / N-msc / 3ms (1×)

thicket, dense growth; a tangled mass of trees, bushes, or undergrowth

This noun appears in two verses with similar meaning. In Jeremiah 4:7, a lion 'has gone up from his thicket'—the dense undergrowth where lions lair. In Psalm 74:5, the text describes enemies like those wielding axes 'in a thicket of trees' (though this verse's text is difficult). The term refers to tangled, dense vegetation—undergrowth thick enough to provide cover for predators or to require clearing with axes. The imagery evokes wild, untamed nature, fitting for describing both the lion's lair and the forest requiring human effort to penetrate.

(1×) A thicket or dense undergrowth, tangled vegetation providing cover or requiring clearing. Jeremiah 4:7 describes a lion coming 'from his thicket'—the dense undergrowth serving as his lair. Psalm 74:5 (in a difficult text) refers to axes raised 'in a thicket of trees.' The term suggests impenetrable vegetation, wild places where predators hide or where axes must clear passage. The lion's thicket particularly evokes danger emerging from hidden places. FOREST WOODLAND

en: from-his-thicket | es: de-su-espesura | fr: [מסבכו] | de: [מסבכו] Jer 4:7

סְבַךְ H5442 Prep-b (4×)

thicket; dense undergrowth or tangled vegetation in a forest

This noun describes a dense thicket of bushes or tangled undergrowth. Genesis 22:13 famously recounts the ram "caught in the thicket by its horns," which Abraham sacrificed in place of Isaac. Isaiah uses the term twice (9:17, 10:34) for "thickets of the forest" that are consumed by fire or cut down in judgment. The imagery conveys impenetrability and danger, as well as the difficulty of escape once entangled.

(4×) Denotes a dense thicket or tangled undergrowth, typically in forested areas. Genesis 22:13 provides the most memorable reference: the ram caught in the thicket on Mount Moriah. Isaiah 9:18 and 10:34 use it in judgment oracles where fire consumes or axes cut down forest thickets. Psalm 74:5 (textually difficult) may also reference thickets. Multilingual renderings are consistent: "thicket/matorral/buisson," with some bracketing [בסבכי] and [סבכי]. The term evokes entanglement, density, and the wild, untamed aspects of vegetation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-thicket, in-thickets-of, into-the-thicket-of- | es: en-el-matorral, en-espesura-de, en-espesuras-de | fr: [בסבכי], [סבכי], dans-buisson | de: [בסבכי], [סבכי], hinein-der-thicket-von- Gen 22:13; Ps 74:5; Isa 9:18; Isa 10:34

שַׂבְּכָא H5443 N-fs (4×)

trigon, triangular lyre; a stringed or possibly wind instrument mentioned in Daniel

This is a musical instrument mentioned exclusively in Daniel 3 as part of Nebuchadnezzar's royal orchestra. The name is likely a foreign loanword, cognate with Greek σαμβύκη, a triangular stringed instrument with four strings. Some scholars propose a harp or lyre, while others suggest a type of bagpipe or wind instrument. The term reflects the cosmopolitan culture of the Babylonian court and the influence of Hellenistic musical terminology.

(4×) A musical instrument in Nebuchadnezzar's orchestra, mentioned four times in Daniel 3:5, 7, 10, 15. The precise identification is uncertain, but the Greek cognate σαμβύκη suggests a triangular lyre or harp. Translations vary: "trigon" (English, technical term), "lira" (Spanish), "lyre" (French). German brackets [סַבְּכָא] and [שַׁבְּכָא], reflecting variant spellings or textual uncertainty. The instrument appears in a list with other foreign musical terms (qeren, mashroqita, etc.), indicating the multicultural character of the Babylonian imperial court. FLUTE PIPE INSTRUMENT

en: trigon | es: la-líra | fr: lyre | de: [סַבְּכָא], [שַׁבְּכָא] Dan 3:5; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:10; Dan 3:15

סִבְּכַי H5444 N-proper-ms (4×)

Sibbecai; a captain and mighty man of David from the Hushathites

Sibbecai was one of David's elite warriors, a Hushathite who distinguished himself in battle against the Philistines. He killed Saph (or Sippai), one of the descendants of the giants (2 Samuel 21:18, 1 Chronicles 20:4). He also appears in the lists of David's mighty men (1 Chronicles 11:29) and as a divisional commander in David's monthly militia system (1 Chronicles 27:11). Some manuscripts suggest his name in 2 Samuel 23:27 should read Sibbecai instead of Mebunnai.

(4×) A personal name designating one of David's mighty warriors and military commanders. Sibbecai the Hushathite appears in battle narratives (2 Samuel 21:18, 1 Chronicles 20:4), the roster of the Thirty (1 Chronicles 11:29), and as leader of the eighth monthly division (1 Chronicles 27:11). Transliterations are consistent: Sibbecai/Sibecai/Sibejay, with some bracketing [סַבְּכִי]. The Greek versions render as Σοβοχαι and similar forms. The name's multiple attestations across Samuel, Chronicles, and genealogical lists confirm this figure's historical and military importance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Sibbecai, Sibbechai, Sibbekai | es: Sibecai, Sibejay | fr: Sibbecai, [סַבְּכִי] | de: Sibbecai, [סַבְּכִי] 2Sam 21:18; 1Chr 11:29; 1Chr 20:4; 1Chr 27:11

סָבַל H5445 V-Qal-Perf-1cp (9×)

To bear a heavy load, carry burdens; passively: to be laden; reflexively: to drag oneself along wearily.

A verb of weight and endurance, describing the act of shouldering what is heavy – whether sacks of grain or the sorrows of a nation. Issachar bows his shoulder to bear burdens like a donkey (Gen 49:15), and the Suffering Servant bears our griefs and carries our iniquities (Isa 53:4, 11). Spanish consistently uses 'cargar' (to load, carry), while the French 'porter' echoes the same physical heft. In its passive Pual form it describes cattle laden with produce (Ps 144:14), and in the rare Hitpael the grasshopper of Ecclesiastes 12:5 drags itself along – a poignant image of old age when even the lightest creature becomes a burden to itself.

1. carry, bear (7×) The core Qal meaning: to carry, bear, or sustain a heavy load, whether literal (Issachar bowing to carry, Gen 49:15; bearing an idol, Isa 46:7) or theological (the Servant bearing pain and guilt, Isa 53:4, 11). Spanish 'cargar/cargara' and French 'porter' consistently render this as physical hauling, even when the burden is spiritual. Lamentations 5:7 extends it to bearing the iniquities of forefathers. BEARING AND CARRYING en: bear, he-carried-them, they-carry-it | es: cargamos, cargará, cargaré | fr: porter, à-enfanter | de: [אסבל], [יסבל], [יסבלהו] Gen 49:15; Isa 46:4; Isa 46:7; Isa 53:4

2. be laden, loaded (1×) Pual passive participle: to be laden or loaded, describing cattle or oxen heavy with cargo or produce (Ps 144:14). Some interpreters read this as 'pregnant,' but the multilingual evidence (English 'loaded,' Spanish 'cargados') favors the image of beasts weighed down with goods – a picture of agricultural abundance and blessing. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: loaded | es: cargados | fr: de-porter | de: loaded Ps 144:14

3. drag oneself along (1×) Hitpael reflexive: to drag oneself along with difficulty, used solely in the allegory of aging in Ecclesiastes 12:5, where even the grasshopper becomes a burden. Spanish 'y se arrastre' (and drags itself) captures the painfully slow, self-propelled movement. This reflexive form emphasizes that the subject is both bearer and burden – a uniquely expressive image of bodily decline. WEARINESS AND EXHAUSTION

en: and-drags-itself | es: y-se-arrastre | fr: et-ויסתבל | de: [ויסתבל] Eccl 12:5

סְבַל H5446 V-Hifil-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (1×)

being supported, retained; held up or sustained (passive participle, uncertain meaning)

This term appears in Ezra 6:3, in Cyrus's decree about rebuilding the Jerusalem temple: 'Let the house be rebuilt...a place where sacrifices are offered, and let its foundations be retained' (or 'be raised' or 'be supported'). The Aramaic form and meaning remain uncertain. Proposals include 'let its foundations be borne/supported,' 'let its foundations be raised up,' or even an emendation to 'let his fire-offerings be brought.' The passive participle suggests something done to the foundations—either supporting, raising, or laying them. The uncertainty reflects rare Aramaic vocabulary and possibly textual corruption.

(1×) Being retained, supported, or raised—a passive participle of uncertain meaning in Ezra 6:3 describing the temple's foundations. Traditional interpretation suggests 'let its foundations be retained' or 'sustained.' Alternative proposals include 'raised up' or even 'fire-offerings brought' (via emendation). The Aramaic form challenges translators, with Spanish 'sean establecidos' (be established) and French transliteration reflecting the interpretive difficulty. Context suggests something foundational being properly set or maintained. BEARING AND CARRYING en: being-retained | es: sean-establecidos | fr: [מסובלין] | de: [מסובלין] Ezra 6:3

סֶבֶל H5447 Prep-b (3×)

load, burden; forced labor or heavy weight to be carried

This noun denotes a burden or load, whether literal weight carried or metaphorical oppression through forced labor. First Kings 11:28 describes Jeroboam placed over 'all the forced labor of the house of Joseph'—the corvée system that would eventually split the kingdom. Nehemiah 4:17 (English v.10) speaks of burden-bearers weakened during wall-building—'the strength of the burden-bearers is failing.' Psalm 81:6 celebrates deliverance: 'I removed his shoulder from the burden'—God lifting Israel from Egyptian slavery. The word encompasses both physical loads carried on shoulders and the oppressive weight of servitude.

(3×) Solomon's forced labor program (1 Kings 11:28) exemplifies institutional oppression—the burden that provoked Israel's rebellion. Nehemiah's workers (4:17) experience physical exhaustion from literal burden-bearing during reconstruction. The Psalm (81:6) uses 'burden' metaphorically for slavery's weight, which God removed in the Exodus. Cross-linguistic glosses alternate between 'carga' (load), 'forced-labor,' and contextual renderings. The construct forms ('burden of,' 'from the burden') show this is weight imposed from outside—whether by Pharaoh, Solomon, or reconstruction necessity—pressing down on shoulders and spirits alike. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: forced-labor-of, from-the-burden, of-the-burden | es: carga-de, de-carga, en-la-carga | fr: [בסבל], de-charge, força-labor-de | de: [בסבל], forced-labor-von, von-der-burden 1Kgs 11:28; Neh 4:17; Ps 81:6

סֹבֶל H5448 N-msc / 3ms (3×)

burden (of tyranny); oppressive weight of foreign rule or subjugation

This noun, distinguished from the similar H5447, specifically denotes the burden of tyranny or oppression, always used figuratively. It appears three times in Isaiah, consistently describing the weight of foreign domination that God will remove. Isaiah 9:4 (English v.3) celebrates liberation: 'the yoke of his burden' broken as on Midian's day. Isaiah 10:27 prophesies 'his burden shall depart from your shoulder'—Assyrian oppression ending. Isaiah 14:25 promises to 'break Assyria in my land, and on my mountains trample him, and his burden shall depart from them.' This is not merely heavy cargo but the crushing weight of subjugation—political, economic, spiritual oppression under foreign masters.

(3×) All three instances appear in Isaiah's oracles of liberation from Assyrian domination. The term always pairs with imagery of shoulders and yokes—the physical weight pressing down on a subject people. Isaiah 9:4's reference to Midian recalls Gideon's miraculous victory when God shattered oppressors. The repeated phrase 'his burden shall depart' (10:27, 14:25) creates a refrain of promised freedom. Cross-linguistic renderings uniformly use 'burden/carga' language, though the context makes clear this is specifically tyrannical burden—not merely heavy but unjust, not merely carried but imposed by conquering power. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: and-his-burden, his-burden | es: su-carga, y-su-carga | fr: [וסבלו], [סבלו] | de: [וסבלו], [סבלו] Isa 9:4; Isa 10:27; Isa 14:25

סַבָּל H5449 Art / N-ms (5×)

burden-bearer, laborer who carries heavy loads for construction or transport

A late Hebrew noun designating one who carries heavy burdens, used collectively for laborers conscripted for building projects. Solomon employed tens of thousands of these workers alongside stonecutters for the Temple (1 Kgs 5:15; 2 Chr 2:2, 18), and Josiah similarly organized them for Temple repairs (2 Chr 34:13). In Nehemiah 4:10, the burden-bearers' flagging strength becomes a metaphor for the people's discouragement during wall reconstruction. The English 'burden-bearers' and Spanish 'cargadores' both capture the collective labor force sense.

(5×) Burden-bearer or carrier employed in large-scale construction, used collectively for conscripted labor gangs. Solomon's Temple workforce included 70,000 of these alongside 80,000 stonecutters (2 Chr 2:2). The English 'burden-bearers,' Spanish 'los-cargadores,' and French 'porteur' all converge on the notion of heavy manual labor. In Nehemiah 4:10, their weakening strength signals the demoralization of the rebuilding effort. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: burden, burden-bearers, the-burden-bearer | es: de-carga, el-cargador, los-cargadores | fr: burden, porteur | de: [הסבל], [הסבלים], [סבל] 1Kgs 5:15; 2Chr 2:2; 2Chr 2:18; 2Chr 34:13; Neh 4:10

סִבְלָה H5450 Prep-m / N-fpc / 3mp (6×)

Burden or forced labor; the heavy loads and compulsory work imposed on Israel during Egyptian bondage.

A feminine noun appearing exclusively in the Exodus narrative to describe the burdens and forced labor imposed on the Israelites in Egypt. It encompasses both the physical loads carried and the broader system of compulsory servitude. Pharaoh complains that Moses is distracting the people 'from their burdens' (Exod 5:4-5), while God promises to bring Israel out 'from under the burdens of Egypt' (Exod 6:6-7). The word first appears when Pharaoh sets taskmasters over Israel 'with their burdens' to afflict them (Exod 1:11), and Moses sees those burdens firsthand (Exod 2:11). Spanish 'cargas' (loads) and French 'fardeaux' (heavy burdens) consistently reflect the weight and oppression this word conveys.

burden, forced labor (6×) The heavy burdens and system of forced labor endured by Israel in Egypt, encompassing both physical loads and compulsory servitude. All six occurrences cluster tightly in Exodus 1-6, creating a thematic arc: the burdens are first imposed (1:11), witnessed by Moses (2:11), complained about by Pharaoh when disrupted (5:4-5), and finally promised to be lifted by God (6:6-7). The plural construct form sivlot always appears with possessive or geographic qualifiers ('their burdens,' 'burdens of Egypt'), emphasizing the communal and systemic nature of the oppression. French 'fardeaux' and Spanish 'cargas' consistently render the weight of these imposed loads across translation traditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: burdens-of, from-their-burdens, in-their-burdens | es: a-vuestras-cargas, cargas-de, con-sus-cargas | fr: avec-leur-fardeaux, dans-leur-fardeaux, de-leur-fardeaux | de: Lasten-von, in-ihr-Lasten, mit-ihr-Lasten Exod 1:11; Exod 2:11; Exod 5:4; Exod 5:5; Exod 6:6

סִבֹּלֶת H5451 N-fs (1×)

Sibboleth; a dialectal pronunciation of 'Shibboleth,' revealing the speaker's tribal identity

This word appears in Judges 12:6 in the famous test used by Gileadites to identify fleeing Ephraimites. Unable to pronounce the 'sh' sound, Ephraimites said 'Sibboleth' instead of 'Shibboleth.' This dialectal difference became a lethal shibboleth (in the modern sense)—a test revealing identity. The word itself probably means 'flowing stream' or possibly 'ear of grain,' but the narrative focuses on pronunciation rather than meaning. Forty-two thousand Ephraimites died because their dialect betrayed them, making this the earliest recorded example of linguistic profiling.

(1×) The Ephraimite dialectal pronunciation of 'Shibboleth,' lacking the 'sh' sound and saying 's' instead. Judges 12:6 records this as a fatal identifier—Ephraimites who said 'Sibboleth' were killed at the Jordan fords. Cross-linguistic glosses transliterate rather than translate, preserving the proper name that has entered many languages to mean 'identifying test.' The word's meaning ('stream' or 'ear') matters less than its pronunciation as a tribal marker. FLOWING WATER

en: Sibboleth | es: sibolet | fr: Sibboleth | de: Sibboleth Judg 12:6

סְבַר H5452 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3ms (1×)

to think, intend; to form a plan or opinion, to consider doing something

This Aramaic verb appears in Daniel 7:25, describing the little horn who 'will intend to change times and law.' The verb indicates mental planning or purposing—not just idle thought but deliberate intention to act. The Aramaic root parallels Hebrew שָׁבַר (though that appears only late). The verb suggests the arrogant king's presumptuous planning to alter divinely established orders. He will think to change what God has set—times (מוֹעֲדִים, appointed times/festivals) and law. The verb emphasizes the audacity of his intentions, the mental rebellion preceding action.

(1×) To think, plan, or intend, expressing purposeful mental activity. Daniel 7:25 uses this verb for the little horn who 'will intend to change' God's appointed times and laws. Spanish 'pensará' (will think) captures the mental planning. The verb suggests not casual musing but determined intention—the king will purpose in his mind to alter divine ordinances, revealing his arrogant opposition to God's sovereignty. THINKING AND SEEMING

en: and-he-will-intend | es: y-pensará | fr: et-interpréter | de: [ויסבר] Dan 7:25

סִבְרַיִם H5453 N-proper-fs (1×)

Sibraim; a city between Damascus and Hamath, marking Israel's northern border

This place name appears in Ezekiel 47:16, marking the northern boundary of Israel in the prophet's restoration vision: Sibraim, 'which is between the border of Damascus and the border of Hamath.' The location remains uncertain, though some identify it with Khirbet Sanbariye near the Hasbani River southwest of Mount Hermon. The Babylonian Chronicle mentions a city Shabarain, possibly the same place. As a border marker between two major powers (Damascus and Hamath), Sibraim occupied a strategic position defining the limits of Israel's ideal territory in Ezekiel's vision.

(1×) A city on the northern border of restored Israel, located between Damascus and Hamath. Ezekiel 47:16 uses Sibraim as a geographical marker in the boundary description. Cross-linguistic glosses transliterate the name ('Sibraim'/'Sibraïm'), preserving the proper name.

Modern identification remains tentative, though the general region between Damascus and Hamath is clear. This border marker defines the northern extent of the land in Ezekiel's visionary geography. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sivraim | es: Sibraim | fr: Sibraïm | de: [סברים] Ezek 47:16

סַבְתָּה H5454 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Sabtah/Sabta—a descendant or tribal group of Cush, listed among the sons of Ham

Sabtah (or Sabta) is listed as the third 'son' of Cush in the Table of Nations, appearing in both Genesis 10:7 and 1 Chronicles 1:9. Like other names in this genealogy, it likely represents a people group or geographical region rather than an individual person. Various scholars have proposed identifying it with place names in southern Arabia mentioned in classical sources, though none of these identifications are certain. The Hebrew text shows minor spelling variation between Genesis (with final he) and Chronicles (with final aleph). The name's location and identity remain subjects of scholarly debate.

(2×) A proper name in the Table of Nations representing a descendant or people group of Cush, appearing in Genesis 10:7 and 1 Chronicles 1:9. As the third in the list of Cush's 'sons,' this likely designates a tribe or region in southern Arabia or the Horn of Africa, though precise identification remains uncertain. The multilingual glosses show transliteration variations (Sabtah/Sabta, Savta/Savtá) reflecting the minor Hebrew spelling differences between the two biblical passages, both of which preserve this otherwise unknown ethnic or geographical designation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Sabtah, and-Savta | es: y-Sabta, y-Savtá | fr: et-Sabta, et-Sabtah | de: [וסבתא], und-Sabta Gen 10:7; 1Chr 1:9

סַבְתְּכָא H5455 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Sabteca/Sabtekha—a descendant or tribal group of Cush, listed among the sons of Ham

Sabteca (or Sabtekha) appears as the fifth 'son' of Cush in the Table of Nations, recorded in both Genesis 10:7 and 1 Chronicles 1:9. Like other names in these genealogies, it probably represents a people group or territory descended from or associated with Cush (Ethiopia/Nubia). The location is entirely unknown, and attempts to identify it with any known ancient place have been unsuccessful. The Septuagint shows various renderings of the name, indicating uncertainty even in ancient times. The name remains one of the more obscure ethnic or geographical designations in the biblical Table of Nations.

(2×) A proper name in the Table of Nations representing a Cushite descendant or people group, appearing identically in Genesis 10:7 and 1 Chronicles 1:9. As the fifth son listed under Cush, this designates an otherwise unknown tribe or region, presumably in Africa or southern Arabia. The multilingual glosses maintain transliteration (Sabteca, Sabtecha, Savtejá, Savtekha), treating it as an ethnic or geographical name whose precise identification has been lost to history, though its connection to the Cushite sphere is clear from its genealogical placement. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Sabteca, and-Savtekha | es: y-Sabteca, y-Savtejá | fr: et-Sabteca | de: [וסבתכא], und-Sabtecha Gen 10:7; 1Chr 1:9

סָגַד H5456 Prep / 3ms (6×)

To bow down or prostrate oneself in worship; used exclusively of idol worship in Isaiah 44-46.

A verb meaning to prostrate oneself in worship or veneration, likely an Aramaic loanword that appears exclusively in Isaiah's satire against idol-making (chapters 44-46). The prophet repeatedly uses this word to expose the absurdity of bowing before an object one has just carved from wood – the same tree used for firewood and cooking. In Isaiah 44:15,17,19, the craftsman fashions an idol and then 'bows down' to it, and in 46:6 people prostrate themselves before the golden idol they commissioned. The word's Aramaic coloring (compare Aramaic seged, Arabic sajada from which 'mosque/masjid' derives) may be deliberately chosen to mock foreign worship practices. The Spanish 'postrarse' and French 'se prosterner' emphasize the full bodily submission involved.

bow down, prostrate oneself in worship (6×) To prostrate oneself in worship before an idol, used exclusively in Isaiah 44-46 as part of the prophet's polemic against idolatry. Isaiah deploys this word with biting irony: a man cuts down a tree, uses half for fuel, and before the other half 'bows down' (Isa 44:15,17,19). Isaiah 46:6 extends this to golden idols. The word is likely an Aramaic loanword (cf. Aramaic seged, Arabic sajada, from which 'masjid/mosque' derives), and its foreign flavor may be deliberate – marking the practice as alien to true Israelite worship. Every occurrence is paired with other worship vocabulary (hishtachawah, hitpallel), intensifying the portrait of misguided devotion. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-prostrates, he-bows-down, ketiv | es: [se-inclina], ante-él, me-postraré | fr: et-se-prosterner, se-prosterner, à-lui | de: [(יסגד)], [[יסגוד]], [אסגוד] Isa 44:15; Isa 44:17; Isa 44:19

סְגֵד H5457 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (12×)

Worship, prostrate oneself (Aramaic) — to bow down in homage or religious veneration before an idol or king

The Aramaic verb סְגֵד (segid) means to prostrate oneself in worship or pay homage, used exclusively in Daniel. It appears most prominently in the golden-image narrative: all peoples are commanded to 'fall down and worship' at the sound of instruments (Dan 3:5-7, 10-12, 14-15, 18, 28). The verb pairs with nepal ('fall down') to form a vivid double expression. Nebuchadnezzar performs this act toward Daniel after the dream revelation (Dan 2:46). The cognate Arabic sajada survives in masjid ('mosque,' literally 'place of prostration'). Spanish 'adorar' captures the reverential dimension.

to worship, prostrate oneself (12×) To bow down in worship or pay homage by prostrating oneself — exclusively in Daniel's Aramaic for religious veneration. The primary context is compulsory worship of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image (Dan 3:5-7, 10-12, 14-15, 18, 28), paired with nepal ('fall down'). Also for Nebuchadnezzar's homage to Daniel (Dan 2:46). Cognate with Arabic sajada, from which masjid ('mosque') derives. WORSHIP PROSTRATION

en: and-worship, and-worships, paid-homage | es: nos-postraremos, os-postráis, os-postráis? | fr: [ויסגד], [ותסגדון], [יסגדון] | de: Simi, und-Simi Dan 2:46; Dan 3:5; Dan 3:6; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:10

סְגוֹר H5458 N-msc (2×)

enclosure, encasement—that which encloses or surrounds, specifically the pericardium or heart casing

This noun refers to an enclosure or encasement, used metaphorically of the pericardium (the membrane encasing the heart). Hosea 13:8 uses the phrase 'the encasement of their heart' to describe what God will tear open in judgment, suggesting the most vital and protected part of a person. The term in Job 28:15 is textually uncertain but may refer to fine gold, though this meaning is disputed. The core idea is something that encloses or surrounds, creating a protective barrier. Hosea's usage is anatomically precise, referring to the protective sac around the heart as a metaphor for attacking the very core of life.

(2×) Denotes an enclosure or encasement, specifically used in Hosea 13:8 for 'the encasement of their heart' (the pericardium), which God threatens to tear open in judgment, symbolizing total destruction of the most protected part of a person. Job 28:15 is textually problematic but possibly refers to 'fine gold' (or closure/enclosure). The multilingual evidence for Hosea shows 'enclosure' (English), 'envoltura' (Spanish = wrapping), recognizing the anatomical imagery, while the Job reference is rendered as 'gold,' reflecting the textual uncertainty but suggesting something precious or enclosed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: enclosure-of, gold | es: envoltura-de, oro-puro | fr: fermer, סגור | de: [סגור] Job 28:15; Hos 13:8

סְגֻלָּה H5459 N-fs (8×)

Treasured possession, special property; used theologically of Israel

as God's chosen people and of royal treasure.
A noun denoting a prized personal possession or treasure, most powerfully employed in covenantal theology to describe Israel's unique relationship with God. At Sinai, YHWH declares 'you shall be my segullah' – my treasured possession among all peoples (Exod 19:5), a phrase echoed in Deuteronomy 7:6, 14:2, and 26:18. The term also appears in secular contexts for a king's private treasure of gold and silver (1 Chr 29:3; Eccl 2:8). The multilingual translations beautifully reveal the dual register: Spanish especial tesoro, French aime-possession, and German treasured-possession all emphasize the relational preciousness rather than mere material value.

treasured possession, special property (8×) A valued, personally chosen possession or treasure. Theologically, it expresses God's covenantal election of Israel as his own prized people, distinct from all nations (Exod 19:5, 'you shall be my segullah from among all peoples'; Deut 7:6; 14:2; 26:18; Mal 3:17; Ps 135:4). In later wisdom and royal contexts it denotes a king's personal treasury of precious goods (1 Chr 29:3; Eccl 2:8). French aime-possession ('beloved possession') and Spanish especial ('special') capture the relational warmth of the covenantal usage, while German treasured-possession reflects the material sense of royal wealth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: a-treasure, and-treasure-of, for-his-treasured-possession | es: especial, especial-tesoro, para-tesoro-de-él | fr: [סגלה], aimé-possession, et-trésor | de: [וסגלת], [סגלה], für-sein-treasured-possession Exod 19:5; Deut 7:6; Deut 14:2; Deut 26:18; 1Chr 29:3

סְגַן H5460 N-mp (5×)
prefect, provincial governor or high-ranking administrative official in the Babylonian/Persian empire
An Aramaic noun denoting a high-ranking provincial official in the Babylonian-Persian administrative hierarchy. All five occurrences appear in Daniel, where prefects are listed alongside satraps, counselors, and judges in formal enumerations of imperial officials (Dan 3:2-3, 27). Daniel himself is elevated above these prefects after interpreting Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan 2:48), and Darius's officials conspire among them (Dan 6:7). The term is an Assyrian loanword reflecting Mesopotamian bureaucratic structure.

(5×) A high-ranking administrative officer in the Babylonian-Persian governmental hierarchy, consistently listed among other imperial officials in formal court enumerations. English 'prefects,' Spanish 'los-prefectos,' French 'préfet,' and German 'Beamte' (officials) all point to the bureaucratic rank. Daniel is elevated above these officials (Dan 2:48), and they appear as a class in Nebuchadnezzar's assembly (Dan 3:2-3) and Darius's court (Dan 6:7). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: prefects, the-prefects | es: los-prefectos | fr: préfet | de: Beamte Dan 2:48; Dan 3:2; Dan 3:3; Dan 3:27; Dan 6:7

סָגָן H5461 Conj-w (17×)
Prefect, provincial official — an appointed governor or administrator, borrowed from Akkadian šaknu, used of Assyrian, Babylonian, and post-exilic Jewish leaders.
This Akkadian loanword (from šaknu, 'one set in place') designates appointed officials who governed provinces or administered civic affairs. In the prophets, sganim appear paired with pahot ('governors') as the ruling elite of Assyria, Babylon, and Media — Ezekiel 23:6 pictures them in splendid attire alongside Assyrian warriors. In the post-exilic books, particularly Nehemiah, the term shifts to describe Jewish communal leaders who helped rebuild Jerusalem's walls and enforced reforms. Spanish 'magistrados' and 'gobernantes' capture both the judicial and administrative dimensions of this flexible title.

prefect, official, ruler (17×) An appointed official or prefect in a provincial bureaucracy, derived from the Akkadian šaknu ('one appointed'). In prophetic texts such as Ezekiel 23:6, 12 and Jeremiah 51:23, 57, it designates high-ranking administrators of imperial Assyria and Babylon, consistently paired with pahot. In Nehemiah (2:16; 4:14; 5:7; 12:40; 13:11), the term is reapplied to Jewish civic leaders overseeing reconstruction and governance. French and German leave the word untranslated in brackets, reflecting its technical specificity, while Spanish renders it as 'magistrados' or 'gobernantes.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-her-prefects, and-prefects, and-rulers | es: Y-los-magistrados, gobernantes, los-magistrados | fr: [וסגניה], [וסגנים], [סגניה] | de: Statthalter, [וסגניה], [וסגנים] Ezra 9:2; Neh 2:16; Neh 4:14; Neh 4:19

סָגַר H5462 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (91×)
To shut, close, deliver up, quarantine, or confine; of gold: pure, refined; in Pual: firmly barred
A versatile verb whose core meaning is the physical act of shutting or closing a door, gate, or opening, as when God shut Noah into the ark (Gen 7:16). In the Hifil stem it extends in two striking directions: delivering a person into an enemy's hands, and quarantining someone for ritual inspection of skin disease (Lev 13). The Qal passive participle developed a specialized metallurgical sense for gold that has been 'shut up' in the refining process, meaning pure or refined. Across Arabic, Korean, and Swahili, different roots are required for the closing, surrendering, and quarantine senses, confirming that Hebrew compresses several distinct semantic domains under one root.

1. shut, close (Qal) (36×) The foundational meaning: to physically shut or close a door, gate, or opening. Arabic uses aghlaqa and sadda, Korean datda, Swahili -funga, each dedicated closing verbs, while Hebrew encompasses them all. Key passages include God closing the ark behind Noah (Gen 7:16) and shutting Adam's flesh (Gen 2:21). The 36 occurrences span everyday and theologically charged closings alike. SHUTTING AND CLOSING en: and-closed, and-he-closed, and-he-shall-shut | es: cerrada, cerrado, cerró | fr: [וסגר], avait-ferma, et-ferma | de: [ויסגר], [וסגר], [סגור] Gen 2:21; Gen 7:16; Gen 19:6; Gen 19:10; Exod 14:3

2. deliver up, hand over (Hifil/Piel) (20×) A Hifil/Piel sense meaning to hand over or surrender a person to an enemy or authority. Arabic aslama and yusallimu capture this transfer meaning with entirely different roots from 'close,' revealing a genuine semantic extension in Hebrew. Deuteronomy 23:15 forbids delivering an escaped slave, and 1 Samuel 23:11 records David's anxiety about being delivered up by the men of Keilah. ACQUIRING AND BUYING en: He-delivered, You-have-delivered-me, and-I-will-deliver-up | es: Me-entrega, Y-entregó, acaso-entregarán | fr: [הסגיר], donna-eux-en-haut, délivra-en-haut | de: [הסגיר], [הסגירם], [והסגרתי] Deut 23:15; Deut 32:30; Josh 20:5; 1Sam 17:46; 1Sam 23:11

3. quarantine, shut up (Hifil causative confinement) (12×) Hifil causative confinement, specifically the quarantine or isolation of a person during Levitical skin-disease inspection (Lev 13-14). Arabic yahjuzu ('to quarantine') and Swahili -tenga ('to isolate') employ distinct roots, confirming this as a separate conceptual domain from mere closing. The priest 'shuts up' the afflicted person for seven days of observation. ASCENDING MOVEMENT
en: and-imprisons, and-shall-shut-up, and-shall-shut-up-him | es: encerrar, lo-encerrará, y-encerrará | fr: et-devra-fermer-en-haut, et-devra-fermer-en-haut-cela, et-devra-fermer-en-haut-lui | de: [ויסגיר], er-soll-einsperren-hinauf-ihn, shutting-hinauf Lev 13:4; Lev 13:5; Lev 13:11; Lev 13:21; Lev 13:26

4. pure, refined (Qal passive participle) (8×) A specialized Qal passive participle applied almost exclusively to gold: refined, pure, smelted and sealed. Arabic khalisun ('pure, genuine') comes from a completely different root than aghlaqa ('to close'), revealing that Hebrew extends the shutting metaphor to metallurgical purification. Nearly all occurrences cluster in Solomon's temple descriptions (1 Kgs 6-7, 10). PURITY AND CLEANNESS
en: pure, refined | es: cerrado, puro | fr: fermer, pur | de: rein, verschliessen 1Kgs 6:20; 1Kgs 6:21; 1Kgs 7:49; 1Kgs 7:50; 1Kgs 10:21

5. be shut, be closed (Nifal) (8×) Nifal passive or reflexive: to be shut, to be closed, to be confined. Used of Miriam shut outside the camp (Num 12:14-15), city gates being barred at dusk (Neh 13:19), and figurative closure of gates before Cyrus (Isa 45:1). Arabic tughlaqu and Spanish se cerraran confirm the passive dimension across traditions. SHUTTING AND CLOSING en: and-was-shut-up, and-were-shut, he-is-shut-in | es: Y-fue-encerrada, enciérrate, se-cerrarán | fr: [יסגרו], et-fermer, et-était-fermer-en-haut | de:

[ויסגרן], [יסגרן], er-ist-schloss-in Num 12:14; Num 12:15; 1Sam 23:7; Neh 13:19; Isa 45:1

6. confine, imprison (Piel intensive) (4×) Piel intensive: to shut up, confine, or imprison a person with deliberate, forceful action. Arabic habasa ('to imprison') and yusjanuna ('they are imprisoned') require dedicated incarceration vocabulary, whereas Hebrew intensifies the same root. Notable in David's recognition that God 'shut up' Saul into his hand (1 Sam 24:18) and the eschatological imprisonment of Isaiah 24:22. SHUTTING AND CLOSING

en: and-are-shut, and-shut-up, shut-me | es: encerró, me-encerró, y-se-cierren | fr: [וסגרן], et-fermer, ferma-en-haut | de: [וסגרן], schloss-hinauf, schloss-mich 1Sam 24:18; 1Sam 26:8; Eccl 12:4; Isa 24:22

7. be firmly shut, be barred (Pual passive) (3×) Pual passive intensive: to be firmly shut, locked, or barred, implying a more thorough closure than the simple Nifal. Arabic muqfala ('barred/bolted') uses the root q-f-l for locks, distinct from ordinary closing. Jericho was 'tightly shut up' (Josh 6:1), and the apocalyptic city is 'broken down' with every house barred shut (Isa 24:10). SHUTTING AND CLOSING

en: and-barred, are-shut-up, shut | es: fue-cerrada, fueron-cerradas, y-atrancada | fr: [סגר], [סגרן], et-barred | de: [סגר], [סגרן], und-barred Josh 6:1; Isa 24:10; Jer 13:19

סָגַר H5463 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)

to shut, close (especially mouths or openings)

This Aramaic verb appears once in Daniel when God shuts the mouths of the lions, preventing them from harming the prophet. The term shares its root with the Hebrew סָגַר and carries the vivid image of closing or sealing something securely. In this dramatic narrative, divine intervention transforms what should have been an instrument of execution into a scene of miraculous protection.

(1×) The sole occurrence describes God's supernatural intervention in shutting the lions' mouths in Daniel 6:22. The multilingual glosses emphasize closure: Spanish 'cerró' (closed), French 'échouer' (fail/close), showing how translators capture both the physical act and its protective result. This divine sealing prevented any harm to Daniel during his night in the den. SHUTTING AND CLOSING en: and-shut | es: y-cerró | fr: et-échouer | de: [וסגר] Dan 6:22

סַגְרִיר H5464 N-ms (1×)

steady rain, persistent downpour

This rare noun describes relentless, continuous rainfall rather than a passing shower. Proverbs uses it memorably to characterize a quarrelsome woman as being like 'a day of steady rain'—both are equally inescapable and wearing. The comparison suggests not violence but wearisome persistence, the kind of rain that seeps into everything and offers no respite. Ancient listeners would have recognized this from experience with Mediterranean winter rains.

(1×) Found only in Proverbs 27:15, where a contentious wife is compared to a rainy day of persistent precipitation. The image conveys unrelenting, dripping annoyance rather than a dramatic storm. Spanish 'lluvia' (rain) captures the essence, while some translations preserve the Hebrew term itself, suggesting the difficulty of finding an exact equivalent for this specific type of rain. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION

en: steady-rain | es: lluvia | fr: סגריר | de: [סגריר] Prov 27:15

סַד H5465 Prep-b (2×)

stocks—a wooden restraint device used to confine the feet of prisoners

This noun refers to stocks, a device for restraining prisoners by confining their feet. It appears only in Job, where Elihu and Job both mention God putting the sufferer's feet 'in the stocks' as a form of imprisonment and punishment. The device prevented movement and was a form of public humiliation as well as physical confinement. The word is probably a loan from Aramaic and is equivalent to the Latin 'nervus' and Greek term for foot-shackles. Job's friends use this image to describe God's discipline, suggesting Job is being held accountable like a criminal whose freedom of movement has been taken away.

(2×) Refers to stocks, a restraint device for confining prisoners' feet, appearing in Job 13:27 ('You put my feet in the stocks') and Job 33:11 (God 'puts [his feet] in the stocks'). Both passages use the image of divine discipline, depicting God as one who restrains the sufferer like a prisoner. The multilingual glosses uniformly identify this as 'stocks' (English), 'cepo' (Spanish = stocks), recognizing the instrument of confinement that immobilizes the feet, serving both as punishment and as a means of keeping someone from escaping justice or judgment. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: in-stocks, in-the-stocks | es: en-el-cepo | fr: בסד | de: [בסד] Job 13:27; Job 33:11

סָדִין H5466 Conj-w (4×)

linen garment, wrapper; a rectangular piece of fine linen worn as an outer garment

This term denotes a fine linen garment or wrapper, likely rectangular in shape, worn as an outer garment or (at night) as the sole covering. In Judges 14:12-13, Samson offers thirty linen garments as part of his riddle wager. Proverbs 31:24 commends the capable woman who makes and sells such garments. Isaiah 3:23 lists them among the luxury items of Jerusalem's wealthy women. The word may be a loanword, possibly related to Greek σινδών or Syriac/Aramaic equivalents.

(4×) A fine linen garment, possibly a tunic, robe, or rectangular wrapper. The Judges 14 passages pair it with "changes of garments" (חֲלִיפֹת בְּגָדִים) in Samson's wager, suggesting a valuable article of clothing. Proverbs 31:24 presents it as a commercial product of skilled workmanship. Multilingual glosses vary: "linen garments" (English), "túnicas de lino/tela de lino" (Spanish), "lin vêtements" (French), "Leinen-Gewänder" (German). Some bracket [והסדינים] and [סדין], possibly indicating morphological interest or textual notes. The term consistently denotes high-quality textile goods. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: and-the-linen-garments, linen-garments | es: Tela-de-lino, túnicas-de-lino, y-las-camisas-de-lino | fr: [והסדינים], lin-vêtements, סדין | de: Leinen-Gewaender, [והסדינים], [סדין] Judg 14:12; Judg 14:13; Prov 31:24; Isa 3:23

סְדֹם H5467 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (39×)

Sodom — ancient city of the Jordan plain destroyed by divine judgment; proverbial for wickedness

The infamous city of the Jordan plain whose catastrophic overthrow by fire and sulfur (Gen 19:24-25) became Israel's supreme paradigm of divine judgment against sin. In the patriarchal narratives, Sodom is a real place — prosperous, well-watered 'like the garden of YHWH' (Gen 13:10) — yet synonymous with brazen wickedness (Gen 13:13). The prophets later invoke it as a measuring rod: Isaiah compares Jerusalem's leaders to 'rulers of Sodom' (Isa 1:10), Jeremiah likens false prophets to Sodom's inhabitants (Jer 23:14), and Lamentations declares Judah's punishment worse than Sodom's (Lam 4:6).

Sodom (city) (39×) The proper place name Sodom, used both as a historical referent for the destroyed city (Gen 10:19; 13:10-13; 14:2-22; 18-19) and as a prophetic-proverbial type of extreme wickedness and divine catastrophe (Isa 1:9-10; 13:19; Jer 23:14; Deut 29:22; Zeph 2:9). Spanish preserves the Hebrew closely as 'Sedom/Sodoma,' French as 'Sodome,' confirming universal recognition of this place name across all 39 attestations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sodom | es: Sedom, Sedomá, Sodoma | fr: Sodom, Sodome | de: Sodom, Sodoms, [סדם] Gen 10:19; Gen 13:10; Gen 13:12; Gen 13:13; Gen 14:2

סֶדֶר H5468 N-mp (1×)

order, arrangement (plural: 'orders' or 'arrangements')

This noun denotes systematic arrangement or orderly structure.

Job uses it only in the negative—'without orders'—to describe the chaos of Sheol, the realm of death and shadows. The underworld is portrayed as a place where all normal structure and sequence break down, where light itself becomes darkness. The word's rarity emphasizes how exceptional and terrifying such disorder would be to the Hebrew mind, which prized pattern and arrangement in creation.

(1×) Appears in Job 10:22 in the plural with negation ('no orders') to describe the formless confusion of the underworld. The English 'order' and Spanish 'orden' capture the concept of structure and system. The Assyrian cognate 'sidru' suggests rows or ranks, highlighting how death dissolves all earthly categories and sequences into undifferentiated chaos. ORDER ARRANGEMENT

en: order | es: orden, | fr: סדרים | de: [סדרים] Job 10:22

סַהַר H5469 Art / N-ms (1×)

roundness, curved form (especially of a bowl)

This term describes a circular or curved shape, appearing in Song of Solomon's admiring description of the beloved's navel as 'a round bowl.' The imagery evokes fullness, perfection, and aesthetic pleasure. Ancient Near Eastern poetry often celebrated the human form through comparisons to architectural and natural beauty, and roundness suggested completeness and harmony. The crescent shape may also connect to lunar imagery, though the primary sense is simply the pleasing curve of a well-formed vessel.

(1×) Used in Song 7:2 (English 7:3) to describe the beloved's navel as a 'round bowl' in an extended admiration of physical beauty. The translations vary: English 'crescent' suggests a lunar curve, Spanish 'redonda' (round), French 'ronde' (round). The term emphasizes symmetry and aesthetic perfection, with 'roundness' as the governing quality that makes the comparison apt. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: the-crescent | es: redonda | fr: ronde, | de: [הסהר] Song 7:2

סֹהַר H5470 Art / N-ms (8×)

Prison, round house; the specific Egyptian-style prison where Joseph was confined.

A noun occurring exclusively in the Joseph narrative (Gen 39-40) to designate the prison where Joseph was incarcerated after being falsely accused by Potiphar's wife. The full expression is bet ha-sohar ('house of the sohar'), possibly derived from an Egyptian loanword meaning 'round house' or 'enclosure.' Every occurrence falls within the tight narrative span of Genesis 39:20-40:5, and the multilingual translations are perfectly uniform – Spanish la-prision, French la-prison, German des-Gefangnisses – confirming a single, unambiguous referent.

(8×) The prison or round house where Joseph was confined in Egypt, used only in the compound expression bet ha-sohar ('house of the sohar'). All eight occurrences cluster in Genesis 39:20-40:5, describing the place where Potiphar put Joseph, where YHWH showed him steadfast love, and where the chief cupbearer and baker were later confined alongside him. The term may reflect an Egyptian architectural loanword Hebraized into the narrative. The complete uniformity of translations across languages (la-prision, la-prison, des-Gefangnisses) confirms this is a single concrete referent with no metaphorical extension. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: the-prison | es: la-prisión | fr: la-prison | de: des-Gefängnisses Gen 39:20; Gen 39:21; Gen 39:22

סוֹא H5471 N-proper-ms (1×)

So, an Egyptian king or ruler

This proper name refers to an enigmatic Egyptian figure whom Hoshea, the last king of Israel, attempted to court as an ally against Assyria. The biblical text calls him 'king of Egypt,' but historical identification remains uncertain. Scholars have proposed connections to Shabaka, founder of Egypt's 25th Ethiopian dynasty, or to a military commander named Sib'e mentioned in Assyrian records. The intrigue ultimately failed, leading to Hoshea's imprisonment and Israel's final downfall. Ancient versions render the name variously as Segor, Soan, or Sua.

(1×) Personal name appearing in 2 Kings 17:4, where Hoshea king of Israel sends messengers to 'So king of Egypt' seeking alliance. The name is consistently transliterated across languages (Spanish 'So', French 'So', German 'So'). Historical identifications range from an Ethiopian pharaoh to a Delta commander, but certainty eludes us. The episode marks the desperate diplomatic maneuvering before the fall of Samaria. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: So | es: So | fr: So | de: So 2Kgs 17:4

סוּג H5472 V-Nifal-Perf-1cs (14×)

To turn back, retreat; to backslide or apostatize from God; to turn aside, go astray

A Hebrew verb whose Nifal and Qal forms trace a spectrum from physical retreat to spiritual apostasy. In the Psalms, the word frequently describes enemies being turned back or driven into retreat (Ps 35:4; 40:14; 70:2), and the multilingual evidence — Spanish retrocedan, French reculer — confirms a military register of forced withdrawal. Yet the prophets transform it into one of the Bible's sharpest terms for spiritual defection: the 'backslider in heart' of Proverbs 14:14, the anguished vow 'we will not turn back from you' in Psalm 80:18, and Zephaniah's indictment of those who 'turned back from following the LORD' (Zeph 1:6). A solitary Qal occurrence in Psalm 53:3 — 'all have turned aside' — captures moral wandering off the right path, a nuance distinct from both military retreat and deliberate apostasy.

1. turn back, retreat (10×) To turn back, retreat, or be driven back, primarily in a military or physical sense. The Psalmist repeatedly prays that enemies be 'turned back' or 'driven backward' in shame (Ps 35:4; 40:14; 70:2; 129:5). In Psalm 44:18 the community laments that 'our heart has not turned back' even in defeat, while Isaiah 50:5 affirms 'I did not turn back' in steadfastness. Spanish retrocedan, French reculer, and German zuruckweichen all map onto this sense of retreat under pressure. The bow that 'turned back' in Psalm 78:57 extends the imagery to unreliable weaponry. TURNING BACK APOSTASY

en: I-turned, They-turn-back, and-let-them-turn | es: Y-se-apartaron, me-volví, retrocedan | fr: [נסגו], [נסגים], [נסוגתי] | de: [נסגו], [נסגים], [נסוגתי] Ps 35:4; Ps 40:14; Ps 44:18; Ps 70:2; Ps 78:57

2. backslide, turn away in apostasy (3×) To backslide or apostatize — to turn away from loyalty to God, with a strong moral and covenantal connotation. Proverbs 14:14 coins the participial phrase sug lev, 'the backslider in heart,' as a character type. Psalm 80:18 contains the impassioned pledge 'we will not turn back from you,' and Zephaniah 1:6 denounces 'those who have turned back from following the LORD.' Spanish apartarse de Dios and Korean baegyohada ('to apostatize') capture the deliberate, willful nature of this turning. The sense is relational betrayal, not mere physical movement. TURNING BACK APOSTASY

en: the-backslider-of, those-who-turn-back, will-we-turn-back | es: apartado-de, los-que-retroceden, nos-apartaremos | fr: reculer, se-retirer, סוג | de: abgewichen, wird-wir-wenden-zurück Ps 80:18; Prov 14:14; Zeph 1:6

3. turn aside, go astray (1×) To turn aside or go astray, emphasizing deviation from the right path rather than retreat from a position or apostasy from a covenant. In Psalm 53:3 (paralleled in Ps 14:3) 'all have turned aside' describes humanity's collective moral wandering. The Qal stem here is noteworthy — simpler and less reflexive than the Nifal — suggesting a passive drifting rather than an active rebellion. Spanish desviaron and the broader semantic field of 'straying' distinguish this from the intentional apostasy of sense 2. TURNING BACK APOSTASY

en: have-turned-aside | es: se-desviaron | fr: reculer | de: haben-wandte-aside Ps 53:3

סוּג H5473 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (1×)

fenced about, hedged around

This Aramaic-influenced verb describes enclosing something with a protective barrier, like a hedge or fence around a vineyard. Song of Solomon uses it poetically: the beloved's body is compared to 'a heap of wheat hedged about with lilies.' The imagery suggests both protection and adornment—the lilies form a living fence that beautifies even as it guards. In Isaiah 17:11, the intensive form may describe careful tending and fencing of a plant, though some interpret it as 'making it grow.'

(1×) Found in Song 7:2 (English 7:3) as a passive participle describing wheat 'fenced about' or 'encircled' with lilies. The image combines agricultural practice (protecting grain) with floral beauty. Spanish 'cercado' (fenced), French 'entouré' (surrounded), and English 'hedged' all convey enclosure. The Aramaic cognate and Talmudic usage confirm the sense of creating a protective boundary or enclosure. TURNING AWAY AND PERVERTING

en: hedged | es: cercado-de | fr: entouré | de: [סוגה] Song 7:2

סוּגָר H5474 Prep-b (1×)

cage, prison (for captive animals or persons)

This noun denotes an enclosure used to confine wild animals or prisoners. Ezekiel employs it in an allegory about Judah's kings, describing how the young lion (representing a king) is captured and placed in a cage. The term likely comes from Assyrian 'šigaru' and entered Hebrew as a loanword. It evokes not just confinement but humiliation—a once-powerful creature reduced to a spectacle, stripped of freedom and dignity. The image would have resonated powerfully with exiles who had witnessed their own leaders taken captive to Babylon.

(1×) Appears in Ezekiel 19:9, where the young lion (symbolizing a king of Judah) is put 'in a cage' and brought to the king of Babylon. Spanish 'jaula' (cage), French 'cage', and English 'cage' all capture the confinement. The Assyrian loanword suggests cross-cultural practices of transporting captive animals and perhaps prisoners in such enclosures, making it a fitting metaphor for royal exile. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: in-cage | es: en-jaula | fr: cage | de: [בסוגר] Ezek 19:9

סוֹד H5475 Prep-m / N-ms (21×)

Confidential counsel or assembly; an intimate circle of trusted persons, their shared deliberation, or a covert plan.

Rooted in the image of people drawing close to speak privately, this noun covers both the gathering itself and what is shared within it. In Jeremiah 23:18 the prophet asks who has stood in the sod of the LORD — His inner council — while Proverbs 3:32 promises that the upright enjoy God's intimate confidence (His sod). The same word can shade from warm friendship (Job 29:4) to sinister conspiracy (Psalm 83:3), with context and construct partners determining the tone. Multilingual evidence confirms this range: Spanish alternates between 'consejo' (counsel) and 'secreto' (secret), while German 'Geheimnis' captures the hidden dimension.

1. council, assembly (9×) A deliberative gathering — a circle of persons who sit together for discussion or decision. Jeremiah 6:11 speaks of a sod of young men, Psalm 89:7 of the council of holy ones (angels), and Psalm 111:1 pairs it with 'edah (congregation). The construct often specifies whose assembly it is: God's own inner court (Job 15:8), the upright (Ps 111:1), or — negatively — the wicked (Gen 49:6, where Jacob recoils from joining their qahal). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ?-in-council-of, assembly-of, in-council-of | es: En-su-consejo, en-concilio-de, en-consejo-de | fr: [בסוד], [בסודי], [סוד] | de: [בסוד], [בסודי], [הבסוד] Gen 49:6; Job 15:8; Ps 89:7; Ps 111:1; Jer 6:11

2. secret, confidential matter (6×) A confidential matter or secret entrusted to a trusted party. Proverbs 11:13 warns that a gossip betrays a sod, while 20:19 repeats the caution. Amos 3:7 declares that God does nothing without revealing His sod to the prophets. Spanish 'secreto' and French 'secret' both map here, underscoring the content-of-confidence sense rather than the gathering itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: but-secret-of, his-secret, is-His-counsel | es: está-su-secreto, secreto, secreto-de | fr: conseil, et-conseil, secret | de: [וסוד], [סוד], [סודן] Ps 25:14; Prov 3:32; Prov 11:13; Prov 20:19; Prov 25:9

3. intimate fellowship, friendship (4×) Intimate fellowship or friendship — the relational warmth of those who share confidences. Job 19:19 mourns the loss of 'men of my sod,' and Job 29:4 recalls the days when God's sod was over his tent. Psalm 55:14 uses it of the sweet companionship between former friends. German 'Geheimnis' (mystery/intimacy) and Spanish 'intimidad' both gesture toward this personal bond rather than mere information exchange. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: counsel, fellowship, my-council | es: consejo, en-intimidad-de, mi-consejo; | fr: conseil, dans-conseil, mon-conseil-moi | de: Geheimnis, [בסוד], [סוד] Job 19:19; Job 29:4; Ps 55:14; Prov 15:22

4. secret plot, conspiracy (2×) A secret plot or conspiracy hatched against someone. Psalm 64:2 asks God for shelter from the sod of evildoers, and Psalm 83:3 accuses the nations of crafting a sod against God's people. The word retains its core idea of closed-circle deliberation but acquires a distinctly malicious coloring; the secrecy is weaponized rather than relational. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-plot, from-the-counsel-of | es: consejo, de-consejo-de | fr: de-secret, secret | de: ein-Geheimnis, von-der-Geheimnis- Ps 64:2; Ps 83:3

סוֹדִי H5476 N-proper-ms (1×)

Sodi, father of a Zebulunite spy

Sodi was the father of Gaddiel, one of the twelve spies sent by Moses to scout the land of Canaan. Representing the tribe of Zebulun, Gaddiel was among the ten who brought back a discouraging report about the strength of Canaan's inhabitants. The name may mean 'confidant of Yah' or 'intimacy of Yahweh,' suggesting a relationship of trust with God. Like many names in the wilderness narratives, it serves primarily to establish tribal representation and genealogical identity.

(1×) Personal name in Numbers 13:10 identifying the father of Gaddiel, the Zebulunite spy. The Greek Septuagint renders it as 'Soudi' or 'Soudei.' The name appears in the roster of tribal representatives chosen for the reconnaissance mission into Canaan. Its meaning may relate to divine intimacy or counsel, fitting for someone whose son would be entrusted with a critical mission. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sodi | es: Sodí | fr: Sodi | de: Sodi Num 13:10

סוּחַ H5477 N-proper-ms (1×)

Suach, an Asherite

Suach appears in the genealogical records of the tribe of Asher, listed among the descendants in 1 Chronicles. Like many names in these tribal registers, it helps preserve family lineages and tribal identities during and after the exile. The meaning of the name is uncertain, though it may relate to roots involving sweeping or removal. Ancient versions render it variously, with the Septuagint offering 'Chouḥi' and other manuscripts suggesting 'Soue,' reflecting the challenges of preserving precise pronunciations across centuries.

(1×) Personal name found in 1 Chronicles 7:36 within the genealogies of Asher. The Greek Septuagint transliterates it as 'Chouḥi' while other manuscripts have 'Soue.' The name serves primarily genealogical purposes, preserving tribal memory. No narrative or character description accompanies it, making it representative of the many names that anchor family identity in Israel's records. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Suach | es: Súaj | fr: [סוח] | de: [סוח] 1Chr 7:36

סוּחָה H5478 Prep-k (1×)

offal, refuse, dung (waste material)

This stark noun describes the refuse or waste left in streets, the kind of repulsive material trampled underfoot. Isaiah uses it in a judgment oracle to depict corpses lying unburied like garbage in the streets—their carcasses 'like refuse in the midst of the streets.' The image conveys utter contempt and the reversal of human dignity. What should receive proper burial is instead treated as worthless trash. The Arabic cognate similarly means to scrape away or clear away waste, emphasizing the disposable, contaminating nature of this material.

(1×) Found in Isaiah 5:25 where divine judgment leaves corpses scattered 'like refuse in the midst of the streets.' The comparison to offal or dung emphasizes degradation and defilement. Spanish 'basura' (garbage), French and English variants all capture the sense of worthless, repulsive waste. The term transforms human bodies into the most despised of materials, showing the severity of covenant judgment. ROT DECAY WASTE

en: as-the-refuse | es: como-basura | fr: [כסוחה] | de: [כסוחה] Isa 5:25

סוֹטַי H5479 N-proper-ms (2×)

Sotai—a family head among Solomon's servants who returned from Babylonian exile

Sotai appears in the lists of returning exiles as the head of a family among 'Solomon's servants'—a group of temple servants or administrative personnel. The name occurs in both Ezra 2:55 and Nehemiah 7:57, the parallel registers of those who returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel. Minor spelling variation exists between the two passages (with vav or without), but they clearly refer to the same family group. The Septuagint shows various attempts to transliterate the name, indicating the kind of textual diversity common in genealogical lists preserved through centuries of transmission.

(2×) A proper name identifying a family head among the descendants of Solomon's servants in the post-exilic community, appearing in Ezra 2:55 and Nehemiah 7:57. Both passages list the 'sons of Sotai' among those who returned from captivity. The minor Hebrew spelling variations (Sotai vs. Sotay) are reflected in the transliterations across languages, which preserve the name as a family identifier. The multilingual glosses maintain the transliteration (Sotai, Sotay), treating it purely as a personal or family name in the genealogical record. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sotai, Sotay | es: Sotai | fr: [סוטי], [סטי] | de: [סוטי], [סטי] Ezra 2:55; Neh 7:57

סוּךְ H5480 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-1cs / 2fs (9×)

To anoint or smear with oil, whether for personal grooming, ceremonial preparation, or as a sign of mourning's end.

Unlike the more solemn mashach (used for consecrating kings and priests), this verb describes the everyday and personal act of rubbing oil on the body. Naomi tells Ruth to wash and anoint herself before approaching Boaz (Ruth 3:3). David rises from mourning, washes, and anoints himself (2 Sam 12:20). The woman of Tekoa is told to act like a mourner who has not anointed herself (2 Sam 14:2). Deuteronomy 28:40 warns of a curse so severe that one will grow olives but never anoint. Daniel abstains from anointing during his three-week fast (Dan 10:3). In Ezekiel 16:9, God tenderly recounts anointing Jerusalem as an act of care. Spanish 'ungir' and French 'oindre' both preserve the distinction from royal anointing.

anoint, smear with oil (9×) To anoint or smear oneself (or another) with oil, typically as part of personal grooming or as a cultural marker of well-being versus mourning. The action is reflexive in most occurrences: Ruth anoints herself for her encounter with Boaz (Ruth 3:3), David anoints himself after ending mourning (2 Sam 12:20), and Daniel abstains from anointing during his fast (Dan 10:3). Deuteronomy 28:40 and Micah 6:15 use the inability to anoint as a covenant curse. Ezekiel 16:9 uniquely presents God as the one who anoints, portraying divine care for Jerusalem. Spanish 'ungir/untar' and French 'oindre' reflect the ordinary, non-sacral register that distinguishes this verb from mashach. ANOINTING AND SMEARING

en: I-anointed-myself, and-I-anointed-you, and-anoint-yourself | es: me-ungí, te-ungirás, te-unjas | fr: [ויסכום], et-il-oignit-lui-même, et-oindre | de: [ואסכך], [ויסכום], [וסוך] Deut 28:40; Ruth 3:3; 2Sam 12:20; 2Sam 14:2; 2Chr 28:15

סוּמְפֹנְיָה H5481 Conj-w / N-fs (4×)

bagpipe, double pipe; a wind instrument in Nebuchadnezzar's orchestra

This is another musical instrument in the royal orchestra of Daniel 3, likely a wind instrument such as a bagpipe, double pipe, or Pan's pipe. The term is a loanword from late Greek συμφωνία, which gives us modern words like "symphony." The word appears with textual variants: ketiv has סִיְּנְיָה or סִיְּנְיָה in some verses, while qere reads סוּמְפֹנְיָה or סוּמְפֹנְיָה. The instrument reflects Hellenistic cultural influence in the Neo-Babylonian period.

(4×) A wind instrument, likely a bagpipe or double pipe, part of the royal musical ensemble in Daniel 3. The term appears four times (Dan 3:5, 10, 10, 15) with textual variants between ketiv and qere: [וסיפניה] (ketiv), [וסופניה] (qere), [וסומפניה]. Transliterations are consistent: "bagpipe" (English), "gaita" (Spanish), with many translations bracketing the variants to show the ketiv/qere distinction. The Greek loanword συμφωνία suggests cultural interchange between Hellenistic and Near Eastern musical traditions. The instrument adds to the cosmopolitan atmosphere of Nebuchadnezzar's court. FLUTE PIPE INSTRUMENT

en: (qere:and-bagpipe), [ketiv:and-bagpipe], and-bagpipe | es: (y-la-gaita), [y-la-gaita], la-gaita | fr: [וסומפניה], [וסופניה], [וסיפניה] | de: [וסומפניה], [וסופניה], [וסיפניה] Dan 3:5; Dan 3:10; Dan 3:15

סְוֵן H5482 N-proper-fs (2×)

Syene—a city on the southern border of Egypt, modern Aswan, representing Egypt's southernmost extent

Syene was a city at Egypt's southern frontier, near the first cataract of the Nile, in the region bordering Ethiopia (Cush). The name appears in Ezekiel's prophecies against Egypt, in the phrase 'from Migdol to Syene' (Ezekiel 29:10; 30:6), denoting the entire length of Egypt from north to south. The city is identified with ancient Egyptian Suan, Coptic Suan, and modern Aswan. It marked the practical southern limit of Egyptian civilization and was known for its granite quarries. Ezekiel uses it as a geographical marker to indicate the totality of Egypt's judgment—from one end of the land to the other.

(2×) The proper name of a city on Egypt's southern border, modern Aswan, appearing in Ezekiel 29:10 and 30:6 in the phrase 'from Migdol to Syene,' representing the full north-south extent of Egypt. This geographical marker emphasizes the comprehensive nature of God's judgment upon Egypt—affecting the entire land from border to border. The multilingual glosses transliterate the name (Syene, Sevene, Seveneh), recognizing it as a specific location at the threshold between Egypt and Nubia, a city known in classical and biblical times as the southern gateway of Egyptian territory. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Syene | es: Sevene | fr: Seveneh | de: [סונה] Ezek 29:10; Ezek 30:6

H5483 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

swift (bird), possibly swallow or swift

This term identifies a swift-flying bird, though exact identification has eluded translators. Jeremiah lists it among migratory birds that instinctively know their appointed times—the stork, turtledove, and crane observe their season, yet God's people fail to recognize their obligations. The word suggests speed and perhaps the darting, erratic flight characteristic of swifts or swallows. Ancient audiences would have watched these birds arrive and depart with seasonal regularity, making their obedience to natural law a sharp contrast to Israel's spiritual waywardness.

(1×) Appears in Jeremiah 8:7 alongside other migratory birds that keep their appointed times. The identification remains uncertain—possibly a swallow or swift. Spanish offers 'golondrina' (swallow) tentatively, while French and German leave it untranslated, preserving the Hebrew in brackets. The emphasis is on the bird's faithful adherence to natural rhythm, contrasting with Israel's failure to observe Yahweh's times and seasons. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9516 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-the-swift | es: (y-golondrina) | fr: [(וסיס)] | de: [(וסיס)] Jer 8:7

סוּס H5483a Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

swallow or swift—a small, fast-flying bird known for its twittering or chirping sound

This noun denotes a swallow or swift (a bird of the family Cypselidae), recognized by its characteristic twittering call. Isaiah 38:14 uses it in a simile where Hezekiah compares his pained cries to the chattering of a swallow. Jeremiah 8:7 mentions it (in the Ketiv text) among migratory birds that know their appointed times, contrasting animal instinct with Israel's failure to know God's requirements. The Septuagint translates it as 'swallow' and the Vulgate as 'hirundo' (swallow) or 'young of the swallow.' The bird's distinctive twittering and seasonal movements made it a recognizable image in biblical poetry.

(2×) Refers to a swallow or swift, a small migratory bird characterized by its twittering sound. In Isaiah 38:14, Hezekiah says 'like a swallow, so I chatter,' comparing his groans to the bird's distinctive call. In Jeremiah 8:7 (Ketiv), the swallow is among birds that observe their migration times, unlike Israel who ignores God's requirements. The multilingual glosses consistently identify this as 'swallow' (English, Spanish 'golondrina,' French treating it as a swallow form), recognizing both the bird's vocal characteristics and its role as an emblem of natural order and seasonal faithfulness. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9516 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Like-a-swallow, [Q] | es: Como-golondrina, [y-golondrina] | fr: [[וסוס]], [כסוס] | de: [[וסוס]], [כסוס] Isa 38:14; Jer 8:7

סוּס H5483b N-mp (139×)

Horse — the domesticated animal used for war, transport, and royal display throughout biblical narrative.

The Hebrew sus appears across nearly every genre of Scripture, from patriarchal narrative (Gen 47:17) to apocalyptic vision (Zech 1:8). Horses in Israel's world were overwhelmingly associated with military power — Pharaoh's chariot horses drowning in the Sea (Exod 15:1, 21), Canaanite war chariots (Josh 11:4), and Solomon's controversial cavalry imports from Egypt (1 Kgs 10:28). The prophets repeatedly warned against trusting in horses rather than in the LORD (Isa 31:1; Ps 20:7). Every major translation language renders this with its standard equine term — caballo, cheval, Pferd, cavallo — reflecting the word's semantic transparency.

1. horse (the animal) (138×) The domesticated horse as animal, overwhelmingly in military and royal contexts: chariot teams (Judg 5:22), cavalry mounts (2 Kgs 2:11), trade commodities (Gen 47:17), and prophetic symbols of earthly power opposed to divine trust (Isa 31:1; Mic 5:9). All 138 occurrences share this core zoological referent, rendered uniformly across languages — caballos, chevaux, Pferde — with no semantic ambiguity. HORSEMAN CAVALRYMAN

en: horses, if | es: Caballos, caballos, de-caballos | fr: cheval, chevaux, סוסים | de: Pferd, Pferde Gen 49:17; Exod 15:1; Exod 15:21; Deut 17:16

2. (1×) A single anomalous occurrence at Neh 7:68, where the Masoretic text appears to contain a section marker or textual disruption rather than a genuine use of 'horse.' English renders it as a section break, Spanish as 'S,' and the verse is absent from some manuscript traditions entirely. Most modern critical editions treat this as a scribal artifact rather than a distinct lexical sense. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: [section] | es: S | fr: cheval | de: Pferd Neh 7:68

סוּסָה H5484 Prep-l / N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

mare (female horse)

This feminine noun means a mare, appearing in one of Song of Solomon's most striking comparisons. The beloved is likened to 'my mare among Pharaoh's chariots'—an image that may initially puzzle modern readers but carried powerful connotations of beauty, value, and perhaps calculated disruption. Releasing a mare among chariot stallions would create chaos in enemy ranks. The comparison suggests uniqueness, preciousness, and the beloved's ability to command attention and admiration. Egyptian chariotry was legendary in the ancient world, making Pharaoh's horses the pinnacle of equine magnificence.

(1×) Found in Song 1:9 where the speaker compares the beloved 'to my mare among Pharaoh's chariots.' Spanish 'yegua' (mare), French 'jument' (mare), and English 'mare' all preserve the feminine form. Some interpreters suggest military connotations—a mare among stallions causes havoc. Others emphasize rarity and value, since mares weren't typically used in chariotry. Either way, the image celebrates exceptional beauty and distinction. HORSEMAN CAVALRYMAN

en: to-my-mare | es: A-mi-yegua | fr: À-ma-jument | de: [לסוסתי] Song 1:9

סוּסִי H5485 N-proper-ms (1×)

Susi, father of a Manassite spy

Susi was the father of Gaddi, who represented the tribe of Manasseh among the twelve spies sent to reconnoiter Canaan. Like other fathers named in this roster, Susi serves to establish tribal legitimacy and genealogical identity. Some scholars have questioned the text, noting difficulties in establishing etymological connections, but the name remains part of the traditional wilderness narrative. The Greek Septuagint renders it as 'Sousei,' reflecting attempts to preserve Hebrew names in Greek dress.

(1×) Personal name in Numbers 13:11, identifying the father of Gaddi the Manassite spy. The Septuagint transliterates it as 'Sousei.' The name appears solely in this genealogical-functional context, establishing tribal representation. Textual critics have raised questions about the reading, but it remains part of the received tradition of the reconnaissance roster. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Susi | es: Susí | fr: Susi | de: Susi Num 13:11

סוּף H5486 V-Hifil-Imperf-1cs / 3mp (6×)

To come to an end, cease, perish, be swept away; causatively, to bring to an end, consume, or sweep away in divine judgment

A verb of termination and destruction. The Qal describes things or people ceasing to exist — the wicked are 'swept away by terrors' (Ps 73:19), houses of ivory 'come to an end' (Amos 3:15), and the memory of Purim 'shall not cease' from among the Jews (Esth 9:28). The Hiphil turns this into active divine judgment: God declares 'I will utterly consume' (Zeph 1:2) and 'I will gather them for destruction' (Jer 8:13). Spanish distinguishes 'fueron arrebatados' (were swept away) from 'los consumiré' (I will consume them), neatly tracking the Qal-Hiphil split.

1. come to an end, perish, be swept away (Qal) (4×) Qal forms meaning 'to come to an end, cease, perish, be swept away.' Ps 73:19 shows the wicked swept away by terrors, Amos 3:15 declares houses of ivory will come to an end, Isa 66:17 warns of those who will perish together, and Esth 9:28 affirms that the memory of Purim shall not cease. Spanish 'fueron arrebatados' (were swept away) and 'cesará' (shall cease) capture the range from violent destruction to quiet termination. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: and-shall-come-to-an-end, shall-cease, shall-come-to-an-end | es: cesará, fueron-arrebatados, perecerán | fr: [יסוף], [יספו], et-achever | de: [וספו], [יסוף], [יספו] Esth 9:28; Ps 73:19; Isa 66:17; Amos 3:15

2. bring to an end, consume, sweep away (Hifil) (2×) Hiphil causative forms meaning 'to bring to an end, consume, sweep away' as an act of divine judgment. In Zeph 1:2 God announces 'I will utterly consume everything from the face of the earth,' and in Jer 8:13 'I will gather/consume them.' Spanish 'los consumiré' (I will consume them) and 'quitaré' (I will remove) both convey the active, judgment-bearing force of the causative stem, distinguishing it from the passive perishing of the Qal. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: I-will-gather-them, everything | es: los-consumiré, quitaré | fr: [אסיפם], achever | de: [אסיפם], sammelte Jer 8:13; Zeph 1:2

סוּף H5487 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (2×)

to come to an end, be fulfilled (Aramaic)—to reach completion or be brought to termination

This Aramaic verb means to come to an end or be fulfilled, indicating completion or termination. In Daniel 4:33, it describes the fulfillment of the word of judgment against Nebuchadnezzar—the prophetic word 'was fulfilled' when the king's sanity was taken. In Daniel 2:44, it refers to God's kingdom bringing all other kingdoms to an end ('put an end to'). The verb captures both passive completion (something reaching its destined end) and active termination (bringing something to its conclusion). Both uses in Daniel relate to divine sovereignty: God's words are fulfilled exactly, and God's kingdom ultimately ends all human kingdoms.

(2×) The Aramaic verb meaning to be fulfilled or to bring to an end, appearing in two forms in Daniel. Daniel 4:33 uses it passively: 'the word was fulfilled' when judgment came upon Nebuchadnezzar. Daniel 2:44 uses it actively: God's kingdom 'will put an end to' all other kingdoms. The multilingual evidence shows both aspects: 'was fulfilled' and 'put an end to' (English), 'se cumplió' and 'pondrá fin' (Spanish = was fulfilled/will put end to), 'achever' (French = to complete), capturing the dual sense of reaching completion and causing termination. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: and-put-an-end-to, was-fulfilled | es: se-cumplió, y-pondrá-fin | fr: achever, et-achever | de: [וחסיף], [סְפַת] Dan 2:44; Dan 4:33

סוּף H5488 Art / N-ms (28×)
Reeds or rushes; aquatic vegetation, most famously in Yam Suph (Sea of Reeds)
Suph is a collective noun for aquatic reeds or rushes, likely borrowed from Egyptian twfi. Its overwhelming biblical use is in the compound Yam Suph – the Sea of Reeds – where God divided the waters for Israel (Exod 15:4, 22). Yet the word also appears in vivid narrative detail: baby Moses was hidden 'in the reeds' along the Nile bank (Exod 2:3, 5), and Isaiah pairs it with qaneh (cane) when describing Egypt's withering waterways (Isa 19:6). Jonah extends the image underwater, describing seaweed wrapping around his head as he sank (Jonah 2:5).

1. reeds, rushes (in 'Sea of Reeds') (24×) Reeds or rushes in the geographic compound Yam Suph, the 'Sea of Reeds,' the dominant usage across the Pentateuch, historical books, and Psalms. From the Red Sea crossing (Exod 13:18; 15:4) to Solomon's fleet at the sea's shore (1 Kgs 9:26) and psalmists recalling deliverance (Ps 106:7, 9, 22), this sense is geographic and commemorative. Spanish 'Juncos' and German 'Suph' both transliterate or translate the plant name within the place-name. REEDS SEA OF REEDS
en: Reeds, Suph | es: Juncos, Rojo, Suf | fr: Reeds, Roseaux, Suph | de: Ende, Reeds, Suph Exod 10:19; Exod 13:18; Exod 15:4; Exod 15:22; Exod 23:31

2. reeds, rushes (as vegetation) (3×) Actual aquatic vegetation growing along riverbanks, as when Moses' mother placed the basket 'in the reeds' (basuph, Exod 2:3, 5) and Miriam watched nearby. Isaiah 19:6 pairs suph with qaneh (cane/reed), depicting Egypt's canals drying up. German 'Schilf' (reed) and Spanish 'junco' (rush) capture this literal botanical sense. REEDS RUSHES VEGETATION
en: and-rush, in-the-reeds, the-reeds | es: el-junco, en-el-junco, y-junco | fr: [וסוף], dans-le-reeds, le-reeds | de: [וסוף], der-Schilf, in-der-Schilf Exod 2:3; Exod 2:5; Isa 19:6

3. seaweed (1×) Seaweed or underwater plant matter, used uniquely in Jonah 2:5 where the drowning prophet describes suph wrapped around his head in the deep. Arabic cognates support this extension from freshwater reeds to marine vegetation. French 'roseau' and the contextual English 'seaweed' reflect this maritime adaptation of the root's plant imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: seaweed | es: alga | fr: roseau | de: Ende Jonah 2:5

סוּף H5489 N-proper-fs (1×)
Suph, a place name (possibly related to Red Sea region)
This geographic designation appears in Deuteronomy's opening verse, helping locate where Moses delivered his final addresses. The text places Israel 'opposite Suph,' though the exact location remains debated. Some scholars connect it to Yam Suph (the Red Sea or Sea of Reeds), suggesting the phrase originally read 'from the Sea of Reeds.' Ancient versions support this interpretation, with the Septuagint reading 'near the Red Sea.' The ambiguity reflects the challenge of preserving precise geographic memory across generations, especially for wilderness locations that may have lacked permanent settlements.

(1×) Place name in Deuteronomy 1:1, part of the geographical introduction locating Moses' final speeches. The text reads 'opposite Suph,' though textual witnesses suggest reading 'from Yam Suph' (Sea of Reeds). The Septuagint supports the latter with 'near the Red Sea.' The difficulty in identification shows how wilderness toponyms could fade from memory after settlement in Canaan. REEDS SEA OF REEDS
en: Suph | es: Suf | fr: Suph | de: Suph Deut 1:1

סוֹף H5490 N-ms (5×)
end, conclusion, final point of a matter, place, or process
A late Hebrew synonym for the more common qets, denoting the terminal point of something whether spatial, temporal, or conceptual. It marks the end of a wadi where Jehoshaphat's army found plunder (2 Chr 20:16), the rear of a locust swarm driven into the sea (Joel 2:20), and the incomprehensible scope of God's work from beginning to end (Eccl 3:11). In Ecclesiastes 12:13, it serves as the grand summation: the conclusion of the whole matter. The breadth of the Spanish glosses—'al-final-de,' 'el-fin,' 'fin-de'—mirrors this versatility.

(5×) The terminal point, conclusion, or final extent of something —whether a physical location (end of a wadi, 2 Chr 20:16), a natural phenomenon (rear of a locust swarm, Joel 2:20), or an abstract matter (conclusion of all instruction, Eccl 12:13). English 'end,' Spanish 'fin/el-fin,' French 'fin,' and German 'Ende' uniformly reflect termination. Ecclesiastes 3:11 uses it theologically: God's work stretches from beginning to 'soph,' beyond human comprehension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-his-rear, at-end-of, end | es: al-final-de, el-fin, fin-de | fr: [בסוף], et-fin, fin | de: Ende, [בסוף], [וסכו] 2Chr 20:16; Eccl 3:11; Eccl 7:2; Eccl 12:13; Joel 2:20

סוֹף H5491 Prep-l / N-msc (5×)
end, conclusion, extremity (Aramaic); the final point of a matter, place, or duration
The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew soph, used exclusively in Daniel to denote an end or extremity. It describes the reach of a great tree extending to the end of the earth in Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan 4:11, 22), the everlasting nature of God's dominion (Dan 6:26, 'to the end'), the destruction of dominion at the appointed end (Dan 7:26), and the conclusion of Daniel's vision account (Dan 7:28). The consistent Spanish rendering 'fin/el-fin' and English 'end' confirm a single cohesive meaning across all contexts.

(5×) The terminal point or conclusion of something in Aramaic usage, spanning spatial extent (a tree reaching to the end of the earth, Dan 4:11, 22), temporal duration ('to the end' meaning forever, Dan 6:26; or an appointed termination, Dan 7:26), and narrative closure (end of the matter, Dan 7:28). English 'end/the-end,' Spanish 'fin/el-fin/hasta-el-fin-de,' and French 'fin' all converge on this single sense of finality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: end-of, the-end, to-end-of | es: el-fin, fin, hasta-el-fin-de | fr: fin | de: [לסוף], [סופא] Dan 4:11; Dan 4:22; Dan 6:26; Dan 7:26; Dan 7:28

סוּפָה H5492a Conj-w (15×)
A violent storm-wind or tempest, often figuring God's sudden, sweeping judgment or overwhelming destructive force.
In prophetic and wisdom literature the Hebrew sûphâ names the fierce, whirling storm-wind that strips the threshing floor bare and scatters chaff beyond recovery. Amos and Nahum pair it with the common gale (seʿārâ) to intensify the image of divine fury (Am 1:14; Na 1:3). Hosea's memorable proverb—'they sow the wind and reap the sûphâ' (Hos 8:7)—turns the word into a byword for consequences that dwarf their cause. Isaiah likens chariot wheels to the tempest's speed (Isa 5:28), while Proverbs warns that ruin arrives 'like a sûphâ' on the complacent (Prov 1:27). English consistently renders it 'whirlwind' or 'storm'; Spanish uses 'torbellino,' capturing the rotary violence the Hebrew implies.

whirlwind, storm, tempest (15×) A fierce, destructive windstorm or tempest. The word appears exclusively in poetic and prophetic contexts as the quintessential image of irresistible force—driving chaff (Job 21:18), accompanying theophanies (Isa 29:6; Ps 83:15), and embodying divine retribution. Its consistent pairing with seᶜar and rûaḥ across passages confirms a single tight semantic core: sudden, overwhelming atmospheric violence used almost always in figurative or judicial contexts rather than mere weather description. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: and-like-the-storm, and-like-the-whirlwind, and-whirlwind | es: Como-torbellinos, como-torbellino, en-tormenta | fr: [בסופה], [וסופתה], [סופה] | de: [בסופה], [וכסופה], [וסופתה] Job 21:18; Job 27:20; Job 37:9; Ps 83:15; Prov 1:27

סוּפָה H5492b Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

Suphah, a place east of Jordan

Suphah appears in one of the Old Testament's most obscure textual fragments—an apparent quotation from the lost 'Book of the Wars of Yahweh' in Numbers 21:14. The phrase 'Waheb in Suphah' defies clear interpretation, with ancient versions struggling as much as modern translators. It seems to mark a location east of the Jordan River, perhaps near the Dead Sea region. One proposal links it to Ṣāfieh, though phonetic correspondence is questionable. The passage preserves ancient poetic geography now nearly lost to us.

(1×) Place name found in Numbers 21:14 within a fragment from the Book of the Wars of Yahweh: 'Waheb in Suphah.' The phrase resists clear translation, preserving ancient poetic-geographic memory in cryptic form. Spanish 'Sufa,' French 'Suphah,' and German 'Suphah' simply transliterate. Some identify it with Ṣāfieh southeast of the Dead Sea, though certainty is impossible. The obscurity testifies to how completely some ancient sites disappeared from collective memory. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: in-Suphah | es: en-Sufa | fr: dans-Suphah | de: in-Suphah Num 21:14

סוּר H5493 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms / 3ms (300×)

To turn aside, remove, depart, or deviate; spanning physical diversion, removal, departure, moral deviation, and passive being removed

Sur describes motion that departs from an expected path — whether a traveler turning off the road, a king removing idols, or a heart turning from God. The Qal stem captures self-initiated movement (turning aside, departing), while the Hifil adds causative force (removing objects, purging evil). Its moral register transforms literal path-deviation into a powerful metaphor for apostasy and faithfulness. From Moses turning aside at the burning bush (Exod 3:3-4) to the prophetic indictment of those who 'turn aside' from the commandments, sur maps the geography of obedience and rebellion.

1. remove, take away (Hifil) (106×) Hifil causative: to remove or take away an object, person, or structure from its place. Arabic azala 'to remove' and Korean je-geo-hada 'to take away' mark active, transitive removal. The most frequent sense (106x), covering everything from Noah removing the ark's covering (Gen 8:13) to plagues being removed (Exod 8:8) to the systematic dismantling of idolatrous installations. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: and-he-removed, and-removed, he-shall-remove-it | es: Y-quitó, quitará-la, quitó | fr: et-il-ôta, et-se-détourner, et-ôta | de: er-soll-entfernen-es, removed, und-entfernte Gen 8:13; Exod 8:8; Exod 10:17; Exod 23:25; Exod 33:23

2. turn aside, go aside (Qal) (80×) Qal: to turn aside physically from a path or road, to turn in to visit. Arabic inhaarafa 'to deviate' and Korean dolda 'to turn' confirm spatial redirection. Paradigmatic in Moses turning aside to see the bush (Exod 3:4) and Israel turning aside from the way (Exod 32:8; Deut 9:12). Also covers hospitality scenes where a traveler 'turns in' to someone's home. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: and-he-turned-aside, and-turned-aside, he-turned | es: Y-se-apartaron, se-apartó, y-entró | fr: et-il-tourna-aside, et-tourna-aside, il-se-tourna | de: er-wandte, er-wandte-weg, und-er-wandte-aside Exod 3:4; Exod 32:8; Deut 9:12; Deut 11:16; Deut 11:28

3. depart, leave (Qal) (66×) Qal: to depart from a place or person, to leave or go away. Arabic rahala 'to depart' and Korean teonada 'to leave' mark departure rather than deviation. Covers Jacob's prophecy that the scepter shall not depart from Judah (Gen 49:10), plagues departing from Egypt (Exod 8:11, 29), and leprosy departing from the afflicted (Lev 13:58; Num 12:10). WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: Depart, depart, he-may-turn-away | es: Apartaos, Apártate, apartaos | fr: ils-partit, partir, s'écarter | de: sie-departed, weichen, weicht Gen 49:10; Exod 8:11; Exod 8:29; Lev 13:58; Num 12:10

4. put away, purge (Hifil) (27×) Hifil: to put away morally or ritually — removing idols, evil, or garments. Arabic azala with abstract objects and Korean beosda 'to take off (clothing)' confirm the extended removal sense. Central to covenant renewal: Jacob commanding 'put away the foreign gods' (Gen 35:2), Tamar removing her widow's garments (Gen 38:14, 19), and deuteronomistic reform passages (Deut 7:4). WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: I-put-away, and-he-removed, and-remove | es: El-que-aparta, Quita, Quitad | fr: enlever, et-il-ôta, et-se-détourner | de: entfernen, er-wird-wenden-aside, legte-weg Gen 35:2; Gen 38:14; Gen 38:19; Gen 41:42; Deut 7:4

5. turn aside morally (Qal) (13×) Qal: to turn aside morally from God's commandments, or from evil — spiritual deviation. Arabic dalla 'to go astray' and Korean beoseonada 'to deviate' mark the metaphorical register. Participial forms describe character: Job 'turning away from evil' (Job 1:1) and the persistent deuteronomistic refrain that high places 'were not removed' (1 Kgs 15:14; 22:43; 2 Chr 15:17). WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: and-turning-aside, and-turning-away, and-turns-away | es: Apártate, fueron-quitados, se-quitarán | fr: et-tournant-de-côté, et-ôter, furent-ôta | de: sie-soll-sein-entfernte, und-wendend-aside, und-wich Exod 25:15; 1Sam 22:14; 1Kgs 15:14; 1Kgs 22:43; 2Chr 15:17

6. be removed (Hophal) (4×) Hophal passive: to be removed by an external agent. Arabic uzila (passive) confirms the passive transformation. Rare (4x), appearing in sacrificial law where fat 'is removed' (Lev 4:31, 35), Isaiah's oracle that Damascus 'shall be removed from being a city' (Isa 17:1), and Daniel's eschatological removal of the daily sacrifice (Dan 12:11). WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: is-removed, was-removed | es: fue-quitada, quitada, se-quita | fr: correction, est-ôta, se-détourner | de: Zucht, ist-entfernte, war-entfernte Lev 4:31; Lev 4:35; Isa 17:1; Dan 12:11

7. one removed, rebel (nominal) (3×) Nominal or adjectival: a removed one, a rebel, a deviant — the substantivized participle describing a person who has turned aside. Arabic mutamarrid 'rebel' and the Jeremiah passage calling certain figures sarei 'rebels' (Jer 6:28) confirm this as a character designation rather than an action. Also in 1 Sam 21:7 and Isa 49:21. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: and-put-aside, rebels-of, the-removed | es: los-quitados, principales-de, y-apartada | fr: et-s'écarter, le-ôta, s'écarter | de: der-removed, und-weichen, weichen 1Sam 21:7; Isa 49:21; Jer 6:28

8. (1×) A rare usage in Lam 3:11 where the sense appears to be 'to lead astray' or 'to make deviate from the path.' Spanish ha desviado and English 'he led astray' suggest a causative deviation that overlaps with but remains distinct from the Hifil removal sense, carrying a more sinister connotation of being pulled off course by an external force. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: He-led-astray | es: ha-desviado | fr: s'écarter | de: wich Lam 3:11

סוֹר H5494 Adj-mpc (2×)

those who turn aside—people who depart, apostatize, or deviate from God or proper paths

This term refers to those who turn aside or depart, particularly in a spiritual or moral sense—apostates or those who deviate from God's ways. The root verb means to turn aside, turn away, or depart from a path. In Jeremiah 2:21, God planted Israel as a noble vine, but it produced wild, degenerate shoots (possibly reading 'those who turn aside'). In Jeremiah 17:13, 'those who turn aside from Me' are written in the earth, destined to perish. The term carries connotations of apostasy, abandonment, and waywardness—turning from the right path to follow other gods or one's own desires.

(2×) Denotes those who turn aside or depart from God, appearing in contexts of apostasy and judgment. Jeremiah 17:13 uses it clearly: 'those who turn aside from Me shall be written in the earth,' indicating their transience and doom. Jeremiah 2:21 is textually uncertain but may refer to degenerate 'shoots' or those who have turned aside from being the noble vine God planted. The multilingual evidence shows varied interpretation: Spanish 'los que se apartan' (those who depart), suggesting the sense of apostasy and deviation from covenant faithfulness that leads to divine rejection. WITHDRAW DEPART

en: and-those-who-turn-from-Me, into-shoots | es: (y-los-que-se-apartan-de-mí), en-sarmientos-de | fr: [(וסורי)], [סורי] | de: [(וסורי)], [סורי] Jer 2:21; Jer 17:13

סוּר H5495 N-proper-fs (1×)

Sur, name of a temple gate

Sur identifies one of the gates in or around Solomon's temple, mentioned during the coup that installed young Joash as king and eliminated Queen Athaliah. The parallel account in Chronicles calls it the 'Foundation Gate,' and some scholars suggest the verse may be a marginal gloss that crept into the text. The gate's location and purpose remain uncertain—it may have been a guardpost or defensive position. The name might relate to the verb 'to turn aside,' suggesting a side entrance or a gate where one changes direction.

(1×) Gate name in 2 Kings 11:6, mentioned during Jehoiada's carefully orchestrated coup. The parallel in 2 Chronicles 23:5 calls it the 'Foundation Gate,' suggesting textual complexity. Some scholars treat the verse as a later insertion. The name 'Sur' may mean 'turn aside,' possibly indicating a gate's position or function in the temple complex's defenses. PEDAHZUR PERSONAL NAME

en: Sur | es: Sur | fr: Sur | de: Sur 2Kgs 11:6

סָרָה H5496 V-Hifil-Perf-3cp / 2ms (18×)

To incite, entice, allure; in Hifil, to urge someone toward action, often with negative connotations of seduction or misleading.

Sut in its Hifil stem captures the dark art of persuasion — the turning of a will toward action it might not otherwise take. At its most concrete, Caleb's daughter 'incites' him to give her springs of water (Josh 15:18), a socially innocent prodding. But the word quickly darkens: Jezebel 'incited' Ahab to do evil (1 Kgs 21:25), Satan 'incited' David to number Israel (1 Chr 21:1), and the false prophet 'entices' you to follow other gods (Deut 13:6). The multilingual evidence reveals a telling split: Spanish toggles between incitar (neutral urging) and seducir (moral temptation), while German and French often leave the Hebrew untranslated, signaling the difficulty of capturing its precise shade of manipulative persuasion.

1. incite, instigate to action (11×) To incite or instigate someone to take a specific action, the core and most frequent sense (11 occurrences). The instigator applies pressure or persuasion that moves another person to act — sometimes innocuously, as when Achsah incites Caleb to grant her land (Josh 15:18; Judg 1:14), but more often with sinister overtones. David suspects someone 'incited' Saul against him (1 Sam 26:19); God himself 'incited' David against Israel in the census episode (2 Sam 24:1). Spanish incitar and English 'incite' both capture the causative force well, confirming a consistent cross-lingual sense of directed instigation. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-He-incited, and-he-incited-him, and-incited | es: e-incitó, incita, incitó | fr: [ויסיתהו], [ויסת], [יסית] | de: [ויסיתהו], [ויסת], [וסיתני] Josh 15:18; Judg 1:14; 1Sam 26:19; 2Sam 24:1; 1Kgs 21:25

2. entice, seduce, tempt (4×) To entice, seduce, or tempt toward sin or idolatry — four occurrences where the emphasis shifts from mere urging to morally dangerous allurement. Deuteronomy 13:6 warns against the false prophet who 'entices' you to worship other gods; Hezekiah's officers warn Judah that Sennacherib is 'enticing' them with false promises (2 Chr 32:11, 15). The Spanish rendering seducir and the English 'entice' both signal that deception or false appeal is the mechanism, distinguishing this from the blunter instigation of sense 1. Job 36:18 intensifies the warning: 'let not abundance entice you.' STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: entices-you, inciting, it-entice-you | es: os-seduzca, seduce, te-incita | fr: [יסית], [מסית], entices-tu | de: [יסית], [יסיתך], [מסית] Deut 13:6; 2Chr 32:11; 2Chr 32:15; Job 36:18

3. turn aside, divert (1×) To turn aside or divert someone from their course — a single occurrence at 2 Chronicles 18:31, where God 'drew away' the Syrian captains from pursuing Jehoshaphat. Spanish desviar ('to divert') captures the spatial redirection perfectly. The emphasis is on changing direction rather than moral corruption, making this a distinct kinetic sense within the word's range. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-drew-them-away | es: y-los-desvió | fr: [ויסיתם] | de: [ויסיתם] 2Chr 18:31

4. allure, draw away (1×) To allure or draw out from a situation — one occurrence at Job 36:16, where Elihu tells Job that God 'allured you out of distress.' Spanish incitar retains the general urging sense, but the English 'allure' and the broader context of extraction from tight straits suggest a benevolent luring-out, the only unambiguously positive use of this root in the Hebrew Bible. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: he-allured-you | es: te-incitó | fr: inciter-toi | de: [הסיתך] Job 36:16

5. mislead, lead astray (1×) To mislead or lead astray through deceptive counsel — a single occurrence at Jeremiah 38:22, where the court women taunt Zedekiah: 'Your trusted friends have misled you.' Spanish incitaron and the broader prophetic context of betrayal by false advisors give this sense a political edge: not mere temptation but calculated, treacherous guidance that results in ruin. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: misled-you | es: Te-incitaron | fr: [הסיתוך] | de: [הסיתוך] Jer 38:22

סוּת H5497 N-fsc / 3ms (2×)

robe, garment—clothing or vesture, especially outer clothing or covering

This noun means a robe, garment, or vesture. It appears only in Genesis 49:11 in Jacob's blessing of Judah, in a poetic couplet that speaks of washing garments in wine and robes in the blood of grapes. The imagery is one of abundance—wine so plentiful that clothing can be washed in it. The term is parallel to 'his clothing,' emphasizing the outer garments. The etymology is uncertain, but the word clearly denotes vesture or clothing in this highly poetic context celebrating Judah's future prosperity and the richness of the vine.

(2×) Refers to a robe or outer garment, appearing twice in Genesis 49:11 (both instances in the same poetic line): 'his garment in wine and his robe in the blood of grapes.' The parallelism emphasizes abundant blessing, with wine so plentiful it serves for washing clothes. The multilingual glosses show 'robe' (English, French 'robe'), 'manto' (Spanish = cloak), 'Kleid' (German = garment), all indicating an outer garment or vesture in this metaphor of Judah's extraordinary prosperity and the fruitfulness of the vine. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -, robe-his | es: su-manto | fr: -, robe-son | de: sein-Kleid Gen 49:11

סָ֫בַב H5498 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (5×)

to drag, haul away by force; drag corpses, captives, or objects along the ground

A verb conveying the forceful dragging of something or someone, always with connotations of violence or compulsion. Hushai proposes dragging an entire city with ropes into a ravine (2 Sam 17:13), while Jeremiah prophesies corpses dragged through Jerusalem's gates (Jer 15:3; 22:19) and captives hauled away like sheep seized by a predator (Jer 49:20 = 50:45). The Spanish 'arrastrar' (to drag along the ground) and the English 'drag' both preserve the visceral physicality of the action.

(5×) To drag or haul forcibly, typically involving violence, humiliation, or brute compulsion. Hushai envisions dragging a whole city into a valley with ropes (2 Sam 17:13); Jeremiah describes corpses dragged ignominiously (Jer 15:3; 22:19) and captives hauled off like sheep by a predator (Jer 49:20 = 50:45). Spanish 'arrastrando/para-arrastrar' and English 'drag/dragged' consistently capture the forceful, ground-level movement. The Moabite Stone cognate confirms the same concrete sense. DRAWING AND PULLING

en: and-we-will-drag, dragged, they-will-drag-them | es: arrastrando, los-arrastrarán, para-arrastrar | fr: [יסחבום], [לסחב], [סחוב] | de: [יסחבום], [לסחב], [סחוב] 2Sam 17:13; Jer 15:3; Jer 22:19; Jer 49:20; Jer 50:45

סְחָבָה H5499 Art / N-fp (3×)

rags, worn-out clothes; tattered fabric strips

This feminine plural noun means rags or worn-out cloth strips—fabric so deteriorated it's suitable only for the poorest uses. Jeremiah 38:11-12 uses it twice in the account of Jeremiah's rescue from the cistern. Ebed-melech takes 'rags and worn-out clothes' from the palace storeroom, lowering them to Jeremiah with ropes and instructing him to 'put the rags and worn-out clothes under your armpits under the ropes' to prevent the ropes from cutting into his flesh as he's pulled up. The compassionate detail—using soft rags to cushion the rescue—highlights both Jeremiah's desperate state and his rescuer's thoughtful care.

(3×) Both occurrences (Jeremiah 38:11, twice in v.11, once in v.12) serve the single narrative purpose of Jeremiah's cistern rescue. The rags come from the palace treasury of worn-out items—even royal castoffs prove useful for mercy. The pairing 'rags and worn-out clothes' (Hebrew pairs this noun with 'melachim') emphasizes thoroughly deteriorated fabric—soft enough not to injure, worthless enough to spare. Cross-linguistic renderings agree on 'rags/harapos/trapos,' consistently depicting tattered cloth. The image of a prophet rescued with palace rags captures the humiliation of prophetic suffering and the surprising instruments God uses for deliverance. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: [rags], rags, the-rags | es: (harapos), y-los-trapos-viejos, y-trapos-de | fr: [(סחבות)], [[הסחבות]], [הסחבות] | de: [(סחבות)], [[הסחבות]], [הסחבות] Jer 38:11; Jer 38:12

סָחָה H5500 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-1cs (1×)

to scrape, scrape clean or bare

This verb describes the act of scraping something completely clean, removing every trace of surface material. Ezekiel uses it in a prophetic oracle against Tyre, declaring that God will scrape the city's very dust from her, leaving her like a bare rock. The image is one of total desolation—not just destruction of buildings but removal of the accumulated dirt and debris of human habitation. The Arabic cognate similarly means to scrape away or clear off, emphasizing thoroughness. This divine scraping transforms a bustling metropolis into barren stone.

(1×) Found in Ezekiel 26:4 where God declares He will 'scrape her dust from her' when judging Tyre. The Piel intensive form emphasizes thorough, complete scraping. Spanish 'barreré' (I will sweep), French 'gratter' (scrape), and English 'scrape' all capture the removal of surface material. The prophecy envisions Tyre reduced to a bare rock, stripped of every trace of its former glory. WASHING AND BATHING

en: and-I-will-scrape | es: y-barreré | fr: et-gratter | de: [וסחיתי] Ezek 26:4

סְחִי H5501 N-ms (1×)

offscouring, refuse, filth

This harsh noun denotes the scrapings or refuse that accumulates and must be discarded—essentially garbage or filth. Lamentations uses it in a devastating self-description: 'You have made us offscouring and refuse in the midst of the peoples.' The term captures Israel's sense of being treated as worthless waste by the surrounding nations during the exile. Paul later adopts similar language in 1 Corinthians, calling apostles 'the offscouring of all things.' The word embodies the ultimate reversal—from chosen people to discarded trash.

(1×) Appears in Lamentations 3:45 where the suffering community laments being made 'offscouring and refuse' among the nations. The pairing with 'contempt' (ma'os) intensifies the degradation. Spanish 'despojo' (refuse) and English 'offscouring' convey material scraped off and thrown away. The term expresses not just defeat but humiliation—being treated as the waste product of history, unworthy even of notice. ASH HEAP REFUSE

en: Offscouring | es: Despojo | fr: [סחי] | de: [סחי] Lam 3:45

סָחַף H5502 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (2×)

to prostrate, sweep away—to overwhelm, beat down, or destroy with force

This verb means to prostrate, overwhelm, or sweep away with violent force. Proverbs 28:3 describes 'a sweeping rain' that beats down crops and leaves no food, illustrating oppression by a poor ruler. Jeremiah 46:15 asks why the mighty are prostrated (though the text is uncertain and possibly corrupt). The root conveys the image of something beaten down or swept away by overwhelming force, whether rain battering grain, disease ravaging flesh, or military defeat. The imagery is consistently one of violent, destructive force that leaves victims prostrate and helpless.

(2×) Means to prostrate, overwhelm, or sweep away by force. Proverbs 28:3 speaks of 'a sweeping rain' that beats down grain, leaving no bread—a metaphor for a poor ruler who oppresses his people instead of providing for them. Jeremiah 46:15 is textually problematic but may refer to being prostrated or swept away. The multilingual evidence shows 'swept away/sweeping' (English), 'arrastrado/arrastra' (Spanish = dragged/sweeps), conveying the violent action of overwhelming force that beats down, destroys, or carries away its object, whether grain, armies, or people. FALLING AND FAILING

en: is-swept-away, sweeping-away | es: fue-arrastrado, que-arrastra | fr: [נסחף], סחף | de: [נסחף], [סחף] Prov 28:3; Jer 46:15

סָחַר H5503 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 3fs (21×)

To go about as a trader or traveler; as a participle, a merchant; by extension, to throb or palpitate.

At its root this verb means to go around or travel about, and its most common biblical use is the Qal participle functioning as a noun: 'merchant, trader.' In Genesis 23:16 Abraham pays the Hittites with silver 'current among the merchants' (socher), and Proverbs 31:14 compares the excellent wife to merchant ships. The finite verb appears in Genesis 34 where Shechem's people are invited to trade freely in the land. A surprising Piel usage in Psalm 38:10 describes a throbbing heart. Spanish captures the commercial core well with 'mercaderes' and 'comerciar,' while German 'Händler' maps precisely to the substantival participle.

1. merchant, trader (substantive) (16×) The Qal participle used as a substantive noun meaning merchant or trader — a person who travels about buying and selling goods. This is by far the most frequent use, spanning patriarchal negotiations (Gen 23:16), Solomon's international commerce (1 Kgs 10:28; 2 Chr 1:16), and the prophetic depiction of Tyre's trading partners (Isa 23:2; Ezek 27:12–18). Spanish 'mercaderes' and German 'Händler' consistently translate this sense. MERCHANTS AND TRADERS

en: a-merchant, and-merchants-of, and-the-merchants | es: Mercaderes, comerciantes-de, los-mercaderes-de | fr: [והסחרים], [סחר], [סחרי] | de: Händler, [והסחרים], [וסחרי] Gen 23:16; Gen 37:28; 1Kgs 10:28; 2Chr 1:16; 2Chr 9:14

2. to trade, do business (3×) Qal finite forms (imperfect, imperative) meaning to engage in trade or do business in a place. In Genesis 34:10 and 34:21 the sons of Jacob are invited to settle, trade, and acquire property in the land; 42:34 echoes the permission to 'trade in the land.' The verbal force is active commercial engagement rather than a person-label. Spanish 'comerciar' and German 'handeln' both render the verbal action directly. MERCHANTS AND TRADERS

en: and-let-them-trade, and-trade-in-it, you-may-trade | es: comerciaréis, y-comerciarán, y-comercien-en-ella | fr: et-que-eux-trade, et-trade-dans-cela, tu-puisse-trade | de: dürft-ihr-bereisen, und-handeln-darin, und-handelt-darin Gen 34:10; Gen 34:21; Gen 42:34

3. to throb, palpitate (Piel) (1×) A semantically distinct Piel sense meaning to throb or palpitate, used of the heart. Psalm 38:10 (MT v. 11) says 'my heart throbs' (secharchar). This intensive stem likely extends the root idea of going around in circles to the rapid beating of the heart. It stands alone in biblical usage and most translations treat it separately from the commercial senses. TREMBLING AND FEAR
en: throbs | es: palpita | fr: marchand | de: throbs Ps 38:10

4. to go about, travel around (1×) The base Qal meaning to go about or travel around without specific commercial connotation. Jeremiah 14:18 describes prophet and priest going about (sacharu) in a land they do not know. This preserves the verb's original ambulatory semantics before its commercial specialization. Spanish 'anduvieron' (they went about) captures this wandering sense. TRAVEL ABOUT LEAD en: go-about | es: anduvieron | fr: [סחרו] | de: [סחרו] Jer 14:18

סַחַר H5504 N-msc / 3fs (4×)
traffic, gain from trade; merchandise, profit, or commercial revenue
This noun refers to profit or gain derived from commerce and trade. Proverbs uses it twice to describe the superior gain of wisdom and the profitable work of the virtuous woman (3:14, 31:18). Isaiah employs it in oracles concerning Tyre, the great merchant city, where the "traffic" or commercial gain of Tyre will ultimately be dedicated to the Lord (23:3, 18). The term emphasizes the economic dimension of trade and the revenue it generates.

(4×) Denotes commercial gain, profit from trade, or merchandise revenue. Proverbs 3:14 extols wisdom's gain as better than silver's profit, while 31:18 describes the virtuous woman perceiving that her "gain is good." Isaiah 23:3 and 18 (twice) refer to Tyre's commercial traffic and the revenue it produces. Multilingual glosses render as "merchandise/profit/gain" (comercio, ganancia, commerce). Several translations bracket [סחרה], possibly indicating suffix forms or textual notes. The term is fundamentally economic, denoting the financial result of commercial activity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: her-merchandise, is-her-profit | es: es-su-ganancia, su-comercio | fr: [סחרה], sa-סחרה-elle | de: [סחרה] Prov 3:14; Prov 31:18; Isa 23:18

סָחַר H5505 Conj-w / N-msc (3×)
merchandise, profit from trade; gain derived from commercial activity
This masculine noun denotes the profit or gain from trade and commerce. Proverbs celebrates wisdom's value: 'the profit from her is better than profit from silver' (3:14, using the word twice for emphasis). Isaiah describes Tyre's 'merchandise' (23:3) and prophesies that ultimately 'her merchandise and her wages' will be consecrated to the LORD (23:18, twice). Isaiah 45:14 promises that 'the wealth of Egypt and the merchandise of Cush' will come to Israel. The word captures not the goods themselves but the gain or revenue generated—the increment that makes trading worthwhile.

(3×) Proverbs' double use (3:14) creates parallelism: wisdom's profit exceeds silver's profit—trading earthly commerce for something better. Isaiah's uses focus on Tyre's maritime trade empire: the 'market of Shihor' (23:3) producing merchandise, which will eventually serve sacred purposes (23:18). The Ethiopian merchandise (45:14) represents tribute flowing to restored Israel. Cross-linguistic renderings use 'commerce/comercio,' 'profit/ganancia,' 'merchandise/mercancía'—all commercial terms. The construct forms ('merchandise of,' 'profit of') show this is gain derived from specific sources—whether trade routes, wisdom, or conquered territories. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-merchandise-of, market-of, than-the-profit-of | es: comercio-de, que-ganancia-de, y-mercancía-de- | fr: [וסחר], [סחר], de-מסחר | de: [וסחר], [מסחר], [סחר] Prov 3:14; Isa 23:3; Isa 45:14

סְחוֹרָה H5506 N-fsc (1×)
merchandise, trade goods
This noun refers to articles of commerce, the goods that traveling merchants offer for sale. Ezekiel uses it in his elaborate oracle against Tyre, cataloging the many peoples who brought their merchandise to this great trading hub. The term appears in construct form, 'the merchandise of,' linking various nations to their commercial offerings. Tyre's wealth came from being a nexus of international trade, and this word captures the constant flow of goods through its markets. The city's fall would mean not just political collapse but the end of this vast commercial network.

(1×) Found in Ezekiel 27:15 within the extended trade oracle against Tyre: 'the merchandise of Dedan' or similar phrases. Spanish 'comercio' (commerce), French 'marchandise' (merchandise), and English 'trade' all convey commercial goods. The term is part of Ezekiel's comprehensive inventory of Tyre's trading partners and their products, showing how the city's identity was inseparable from its role as a commercial center. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: trade-of- | es: comercio-de | fr: marchandise | de: [סחרת] Ezek 27:15

סֹחֶרֶת H5507 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)
buckler, shield (defensive weapon)
This term denotes a type of defensive shield or buckler, appearing in Psalm 91's famous promise of divine protection. The psalmist declares that God's faithfulness is 'shield and buckler,' using paired defensive terms to emphasize complete protection. The buckler was typically smaller and more maneuverable than the large shield (tsinnah), worn or carried to deflect blows in close combat. Using military equipment metaphorically for God's protective care would have resonated deeply in a world where warfare was constant and armor meant the difference between life and death.

(1×) Found in Psalm 91:4 where God's faithfulness is described as 'shield and buckler,' paired defensive terms creating complete protection. Spanish 'rodela' (round shield), French 'bouclier' (shield), and English 'buckler' all refer to defensive armor. The metaphor transforms divine faithfulness into tangible military protection, making God's care as real as bronze or leather armor in battle. SHIELD DEFENSIVE WEAPON
en: and-a-buckler | es: y-rodela | fr: et-bouclier | de: und-ein-buckler Ps 91:4

סֹחֶרֶת H5508 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)
colored stone, dark stone (possibly marble or porphyry)
This rare word describes a type of decorative stone used in the lavish pavement of King Ahasuerus's palace garden. Esther 1 lists it alongside marble and other precious materials in describing the opulent setting for the king's great feast. The exact type of stone is uncertain—possibilities include porphyry, black marble, or another colored stone valued in Persian architecture. The Assyrian cognate 'siḫru' refers to a precious stone, suggesting this was imported or specially quarried material that signaled wealth and royal magnificence.

(1×) Appears in Esther 1:6 describing the palace pavement's stones. The term occurs with marble in a catalog of luxurious materials. Spanish 'piedra negra' (black stone) and English 'colored stone' suggest dark or variegated stone. The Assyrian parallel indicates a precious stone used in high-status architecture. The word contributes to Esther's portrait of Persian imperial splendor, setting the stage for the drama to follow. STONE AND ROCK
en: and-colored-stone | es: y-piedra-negra | fr: [וסחרת] | de: [וסחרת] Esth 1:6

סִיג H5509 Prep-l / N-ms (9×)
Dross or slag; the impure residue removed from metal during smelting, used figuratively of moral impurity and unfaithfulness.

Refers to the waste material separated from precious metals during the refining process. The prophets employed this metallurgical image powerfully: Isaiah declares that Jerusalem's silver has become dross (Isa 1:22), and Ezekiel pictures the whole house of Israel as dross in God's furnace (Ezek 22:18-19). Proverbs uses it both literally, describing the removal of dross to purify silver (Prov 25:4), and figuratively, comparing insincere words to a potsherd glazed with silver dross (Prov 26:23). Spanish 'escoria' and French 'scorie' preserve the same smelting imagery found across ancient and modern languages.

dross, impurity of metals (9×) The impure residue or slag left over when metal, especially silver, is refined by fire. All nine occurrences carry this core metallurgical meaning, though most are deployed figuratively. In Proverbs 25:4 dross is literally separated from silver, while in Isaiah 1:22, 25 and Ezekiel 22:18-19 dross becomes a devastating image for God's wayward people who will be gathered into a furnace of judgment. The Psalms passage (Ps 119:119) likens the wicked to dross that God discards from the land. TIN LEAD METALS

en: dross, dross-of, for-dross | es: (escoria), Escoria, en-escoria | fr: [לסיגים], [סיגיך], scorie | de: [לסגים], [לסוג], [לסיג] Ps 119:119; Prov 25:4; Prov 26:23; Isa 1:22; Isa 1:25

סִיוָן H5510 N-proper-fs (1×)

Sivan, the third month (May-June)

Sivan is the third month of the Hebrew calendar, corresponding roughly to May-June in the modern calendar. The name appears in Esther during the dating of Mordecai's counter-decree, which was dispatched 'on the twenty-third day of the third month, which is the month of Sivan.' This is a loanword from Akkadian Simānu, reflecting Babylonian influence on Jewish calendar terminology during and after the exile. The month falls in late spring, a time of grain harvest in ancient Israel. Only post-exilic biblical texts use Babylonian month names rather than the earlier Canaanite system.

(1×) Month name in Esther 8:9, identified as 'the third month' and given its Babylonian name Sivan. The text carefully glosses it ('which is the month of Sivan') showing the name wasn't yet fully naturalized in Jewish usage. The Palmyrene cognate confirms widespread use of this Babylonian calendar system across the ancient Near East. The month marks the time when Mordecai's decrees went out, allowing Jews to defend themselves. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: Sivan | es: Siván | fr: [סיון] | de: [סיון] Esth 8:9

סִיחוֹן H5511 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (37×)

Sihon — the Amorite king of Heshbon defeated by Israel, whose territory became the first conquest in Canaan

Sichon is the proper name of the Amorite king who ruled from Heshbon in Transjordan and whose defeat became Israel's paradigmatic first military victory before entering the Promised Land. When Moses requested peaceful passage, Sihon refused and marched out to fight at Jahaz, where Israel struck him down and took possession of his entire territory from the Arnon to the Jabbok (Num 21:21-32). This victory, alongside the defeat of Og king of Bashan, became a fixed pair in Israel's liturgical memory — rehearsed in Deuteronomy's historical reviews (1:4; 2:24-36; 3:2; 4:46; 29:7; 31:4), celebrated in the Psalms as evidence of God's covenant faithfulness (Ps 135:11; 136:19), and invoked by Nehemiah in prayer (9:22). Jeremiah's oracle against Moab quotes an ancient victory song originally composed about Sihon's own conquests (Jer 48:45, cf. Num 21:27-30).

Sihon (personal name) (37×) The proper masculine name Sichon/Sihon, designating the Amorite king of Heshbon whose defeat by Israel in Transjordan (Num 21:21-32) became a foundational event in Israel's conquest narrative. All 37 occurrences refer to this single figure. The name appears in three literary contexts: (a) the original battle account in Numbers and Deuteronomy, (b) historical retrospectives citing Sihon alongside Og as proof of divine aid (Josh 2:10; 9:10; Judg 11:19-21; 1 Kgs 4:19), and (c) liturgical celebration (Ps 135:11; 136:19; Neh 9:22). Greek Seon, Spanish 'Sihon/Sijon,' German 'Sihon' reflect consistent transliteration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sichon, Sihon | es: Sihón, Sijón | fr: Sichon, Sihon | de: Sichon, Sihon Num 21:21; Num 21:23; Num 21:26; Num 21:27

סִין H5512a N-proper-fs (2×)

Sin (Pelusium)—an eastern frontier city of Egypt, identified with ancient Pelusium

Sin is identified with Pelusium, an important city on Egypt's eastern frontier, near the Mediterranean coast. The name appears in Ezekiel's oracles against Egypt (30:15-16), where God promises to pour out His wrath on Sin, Egypt's stronghold. The Hebrew name is likely a transliteration of an Egyptian word meaning 'clay' or 'mud,' which correlates with the Greek name Pelusium (from 'pēlos' meaning mud or dirt). The city was strategically significant as Egypt's eastern gateway. In Ezekiel 30:16, some manuscripts and versions read 'Syene' instead, though Pelusium fits the context of Egypt's northern defenses.

(2×) The proper name of an Egyptian border city, identified with Pelusium on the eastern Delta frontier, appearing in Ezekiel 30:15-16 in oracles of judgment against Egypt. God declares He will 'pour out [His] wrath on Sin' as Egypt's stronghold. The location guarded Egypt's approach from Asia and was militarily strategic. The multilingual glosses maintain the transliteration 'Sin,' recognizing it as a specific geographical location—Egypt's eastern fortress city where divine judgment would fall as part of the comprehensive destruction of Egyptian power. ZIN WILDERNESS REGION

en: Sin | es: Sin | fr: Sin | de: [סין] Ezek 30:15; Ezek 30:16

סִין H5512b N-proper-fs (4×)

Sin; wilderness area between Elim and Sinai where Israel camped during the Exodus

The Wilderness of Sin is a desert region on the Exodus route between Elim and Mount Sinai, mentioned in the Priestly source. Exodus 16:1 locates Israel's arrival there on the fifteenth day of the second month, where God provided manna and quail. Numbers 33:11-12 lists it in the itinerary of Israel's wilderness wanderings. The name should not be confused with the sin offering or with the city of Sin (Pelusium) in Egypt.

(4×) A geographic designation for a wilderness region on the Exodus route. The Wilderness of Sin (מִדְבַּר־סִין) appears in Exodus 16:1 (the manna narrative), Exodus 17:1 (departure toward Rephidim), and Numbers 33:11-12 (the wilderness itinerary). Translations across languages are identical: "Sin" in English, Spanish, French, and German, reflecting the proper-name status. The Greek renders as Σειν or Σιν. Scholars debate the precise location, but it lies somewhere in the Sinai Peninsula between the Red Sea coast and the traditional site of Mount Sinai. ZIN WILDERNESS REGION

en: Sin | es: Sin | fr: Sin | de: Sin Exod 16:1; Exod 17:1; Num 33:11; Num 33:12

סִינִי H5513 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

the Sinite—a Canaanite people group, associated with northern Canaan or the Lebanon region

The Sinite is listed as one of the Canaanite peoples in the Table of Nations, appearing in Genesis 10:17 and 1 Chronicles 1:15. The name always appears with the definite article ('the Sinite'), suggesting it functions as a gentilic (ethnic designation). Various ancient sources mention places in the northern Levant that might correspond to this group, including a city called Sianu near the Mediterranean coast in the Lebanon region, mentioned in Assyrian inscriptions and by the Greek geographer Strabo. The exact identification remains uncertain, but the Sinite likely inhabited territory in northern Canaan or Phoenicia.

(2×) A gentilic (ethnic) designation for a Canaanite people group, appearing with the definite article in Genesis 10:17 and 1 Chronicles 1:15. Listed among the descendants of Canaan, the Sinite likely inhabited northern Canaan or the Lebanese coast, possibly associated with a city called Sianu known from extra-biblical sources. The multilingual glosses preserve the gentilic form: 'the Sinite' (English), 'el sineo' (Spanish = the Sinite), 'le Sinite' (French), treating this as an ethnic or tribal name in the genealogical catalog of Canaanite peoples. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Sini, the-Sinite | es: el-sineo | fr: [הסיני], le-Sinite | de: [הסיני], den-Siniter Gen 10:17; 1Chr 1:15

סִינַי H5514 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (35×)

Sinai — the sacred mountain and wilderness where God gave the Torah to Moses

Sinai is the proper name for both the mountain and the surrounding wilderness that serve as the supreme theophanic site in Scripture. All 35 occurrences point to the same sacred geography: the place where YHWH descended in fire and smoke, where Moses received the covenant tablets, and where Israel was constituted as a holy nation (Exod 19-34). The name dominates the Priestly source, which favors har Sinai ('Mount Sinai') and midbar Sinai ('wilderness of Sinai'), while E and D prefer the alternate name Horeb for the same location. The Septuagint renders it Seina or Sina, and every modern language preserves it virtually unchanged — Spanish 'Sinai,' French 'Sinai,' German 'Sinai' — as befits the most iconic place-name in Torah.

Sinai (place name) (35×) The proper name for the mountain and desert region of the Mosaic covenant. Concentrated in Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers (P source), it marks the location of the giving of the law (Exod 19:11-20; 31:18), the census instructions (Num 1:1), and wilderness encampments (Num 33:15-16). The alternate name Horeb in E and D designates the same site. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sinai | es: Sinai, Sinay, Sinaí | fr: Sinaï | de: Sinai Exod 16:1; Exod 19:1; Exod 19:2; Exod 19:11; Exod 19:18

סִינִים H5515 N-proper-mp (1×)

Sinim, a distant people or land

Sinim appears in Isaiah's prophecy of Israel's restoration, when exiles will return 'from the north and from the west, and these from the land of Sinim.' The identification has puzzled interpreters for centuries. Early proposals included China (based on phonetic similarity), but this seems unlikely given historical context. More probable is an emendation to 'Syenites' (people of Syene/Aswan in southern Egypt), which would provide a neat geographical balance —north, west, and south. The text as it stands reaches toward the known ends of the earth, emphasizing the comprehensiveness of the return.

(1×) Geographic/ethnic term in Isaiah 49:12, marking a distant land from which exiles return. Traditional identification with China is doubtful. Many scholars emend to 'Syenites' (people from Aswan in southern Egypt), providing balanced directions: north, west, south. The term functions to extend God's gathering of Israel to the remotest known regions, showing no one is beyond the reach of restoration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sinim | es: Sinim | fr: [סינים] | de: [סינים] Isa 49:12

סִיסְרָא H5516 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (21×)

Sisera — Canaanite commander under King Jabin of Hazor, defeated by Deborah and Barak; also a family name Primarily the name of the Canaanite military commander who led the forces of King Jabin of Hazor against Israel and was defeated through the combined agency of Deborah, Barak, and Jael (Judg 4-5). His nine hundred iron chariots symbolize overwhelming military power broken by divine intervention. Deborah's victory song in Judges 5 memorializes the scene of Sisera's mother waiting vainly for his return — one of the most vivid dramatic ironies in biblical poetry. A secondary Sisera appears as an ancestor of temple servants returning from exile (Ezra 2:53; Neh 7:55).

Sisera (personal name) (21×) The personal name of two distinct figures: primarily the Canaanite general under King Jabin defeated by Deborah and Barak at the Wadi Kishon (Judg 4:2-22; 5:20-30), killed by Jael with a tent peg, and recalled in later tradition (1 Sam 12:9; Ps 83:10); secondarily, the ancestor of a family of returning exiles (Ezra 2:53; Neh 7:55). The name may be of Hittite origin. Translations consistently transliterate as Sisera/Sísara across languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sisera, and-Sisera, for-Sisera | es: Sisera, Sísara, Y-Sisera | fr: Sisera, [סיסרא], et-Sisera | de: Sisera, [סיסרא], fuer-Sisera Judg 4:2; Judg 4:7; Judg 4:9; Judg 4:12; Judg 4:13

סִיעָא H5517 N-proper-ms (2×)

Sia/Siaha—a family head among the temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from exile

Sia (or Siaha, with variant spelling) is listed among the families of temple servants who returned from Babylonian captivity. The name appears in both Nehemiah 7:47 and Ezra 2:44, the parallel lists of returning exiles. The Hebrew shows minor spelling variation between the two accounts—Sia in Nehemiah and Siaha in Ezra—a common phenomenon in genealogical records. The Septuagint also shows considerable variation in rendering the name, reflecting the challenges of preserving proper names through transmission. The family belonged to the Nethinim, temple servants who assisted the Levites.

(2×) A proper name identifying a family head among the Nethinim (temple servants) in the post-exilic lists, appearing in Ezra 2:44 (as Siaha) and Nehemiah 7:47 (as Sia). The spelling variation reflects minor textual differences between the parallel genealogical registers. The multilingual glosses preserve both forms (Sia, Siaha, Siá), treating these as variant spellings of the same family name in the catalog of temple servants who accompanied Zerubbabel back to Jerusalem from Babylon. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sia, Siaha | es: Sia, Siá | fr: [סיעא], [סיעהא] | de: [סיעא], [סיעהא] Ezra 2:44; Neh 7:47

סִיר H5518a Prep-l / N-cs (29×)

A pot or cauldron for cooking and boiling; rarely a basin or washpot used for washing

The standard Hebrew word for a cooking vessel, appearing throughout narrative, law, and prophecy. Elisha's miracle at Gilgal involves a pot of stew (2 Kgs 4:38-41), and the Israelites longingly recall the flesh-pots of Egypt (Exod 16:3). Ezekiel twice uses the pot as a grim metaphor for Jerusalem under siege – a cauldron filled with bones (Ezek 11:3; 24:3-6). Jeremiah sees a boiling pot tilted from the north (Jer 1:13). In two Psalm passages (Ps 60:8; 108:9), God calls Moab 'my washbasin' – a striking image of subjugation, where the mighty nation is reduced to a basin for washing feet. Arabic 'zir' (a large water jar) may be a cognate loanword, and Korean renderings distinguish between cooking pot and basin.

1. cooking pot or cauldron (27×) A cooking pot or cauldron used for boiling food or liquids. This is the dominant sense across 27 occurrences. The flesh-pots of Egypt (Exod 16:3), Elisha's pot of stew (2 Kgs 4:38-41), the temple pots (1 Kgs 7:45; Exod 27:3; 38:3), and Ezekiel's siege-cauldron metaphor for Jerusalem (Ezek 11:3; 24:3, 6) all refer to cooking vessels. Spanish 'la olla' and German 'Topf' consistently render this utilitarian kitchen sense. COOKING POT CALDRON

en: a-pot, in-the-pot, pot | es: en-la-olla, la-olla, la-olla-de | fr: [בסיר], [הסירות], [הסרות] | de: Topf-von, [בסיר], [הסיר] Exod 16:3; Exod 27:3; Exod 38:3; 1Kgs 7:45; 2Kgs 4:38

2. basin or washbasin (2×) A basin or washpot, a wide vessel for washing rather than cooking. Limited to two poetic passages where God declares 'Moab is my washbasin' (Ps 60:8; 108:9) – an image of subjugation, reducing a nation to a menial vessel for foot-washing. Multilingual glosses diverge here: Korean '대야' (basin) and Arabic 'طست' (washbasin) distinguish this from the cooking sense, while some translations retain 'pot' and rely on context. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: is-the-pot-of, the-basin-of | es: vasija-de | fr: épine | de: der-basin-von, ist-der-pot-von Ps 60:8; Ps 108:9

סִיר H5518b Prep-b (5×)

thorn, brier; also hook (for fishing or dragging)

A noun with two distinct but related senses rooted in the idea of something sharp and piercing. As 'thorns,' it appears in images of desolation (Isa 34:13), as a barrier God sets in the path of the unfaithful (Hos 2:6), and in Qoheleth's vivid simile of thorns crackling uselessly under a pot (Eccl 7:6). As 'hooks,' it describes the instruments by which Amos warns Samaria's women will be dragged away (Amos 4:2). The French split between 'épines' (thorns) and 'pots' reflects the interpretive complexity of Ecclesiastes 7:6, where both thorns and a cooking pot appear together.

(5×) Sharp thorny plants signifying desolation, obstruction, or futility. Thorns overgrow Edom's palaces as a sign of divine judgment (Isa 34:13), God hedges an unfaithful wife's path with thorns (Hos 2:6), and the crackling of thorns under a pot illustrates the fool's hollow laughter (Eccl 7:6). Spanish 'espinos' and French 'épines' both point to brier-plants. Nahum 1:10 likely references entanglement among thorns, though the text is difficult. The related sense of 'hooks' (Amos 4:2, Spanish 'anzuelos') derives from the same sharp-pointed semantic root, used for fishhooks or dragging-hooks by which captives are led away. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: like-thorns, the-thorns, thorns | es: con-anzuelos-de, con-espinos, espinos | fr: [סירים], dans-les-pots, dans-les-épines | de: [בסירות], [בסירים], [הסירים] Eccl 7:6; Isa 34:13; Hos 2:6; Amos 4:2; Nah 1:10

סַךְ H5519 Prep-b (1×)

throng, crowd, dense mass of people

This noun describes a thick crowd or throng of people pressed together. The psalmist recalls better days: 'I used to pass along in the throng,' processing toward the temple amid the joyful festival multitude. The term suggests an interwoven mass, people so tightly packed they form a single moving entity. Some versions translate 'booth' or 'shelter,' but the context of festival pilgrimage favors the sense of a great crowd. The memory of communal worship intensifies the psalmist's current isolation and longing.

(1×) Found in Psalm 42:4 (English verse numbering) where the psalmist remembers passing 'with the throng' to God's house during festivals. Spanish 'multitud' (multitude), French 'Succoth' (possibly misreading as place name), and English 'throng' capture the crowd sense. The word is textually uncertain but best understood as a dense mass of pilgrims, making the psalmist's present exile even more poignant by contrast with remembered communal joy. MIXED MULTITUDE en: with-the-throng | es: con-la-multitud | fr: dans-Succoth | de: mit-der-throng Ps 42:4

סֹךְ H5520 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (4×)

thicket, covert, lair; dense vegetation serving as a hiding place, especially for predatory animals

This term denotes a dense thicket or covert, often used metaphorically as the lair of a lion. Psalm 10:9 compares the wicked to a lion lurking "in his lair," while Jeremiah 25:38 uses the image of a lion leaving "his covert" to describe divine judgment. Psalm 76:2 may refer to God's covert or dwelling, though some emend the text. The term overlaps semantically with סֻבָּה (thicket) and may derive from the same root or a related one.

(4×) Denotes a covert, lair, or thicket, typically associated with lions or predatory imagery. Psalm 10:9 and Jeremiah 25:38 use it for a lion's hiding place, metaphorically describing wickedness or divine judgment. Psalm 27:5 and 76:2 may refer to God's shelter or dwelling, though textual issues exist (ketiv/qere variants). Multilingual glosses render as "lair/booth/shelter/covert" (guarida, tabernáculo, buisson). Several translations bracket [סכו], reflecting suffix forms or textual uncertainty. The term evokes concealment, danger, and the wild—either as a place of ambush or of protective refuge. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-booth, his-lair, in-his-lair | es: en-su-guarida, en-su-tabernáculo, refugio-de-el | fr: [סכו], buisson, dans-buisson | de: [סכו], in-sein-lair, in-sein-shelter Ps 10:9; Ps 27:5; Ps 76:2; Jer 25:38

סֻכָּה H5521 Conj-w / N-fs (31×)

Booth, temporary shelter of branches; the Feast of Booths (Sukkot); God's protective canopy; a thicket or covert

A sukkah is a temporary structure woven from branches and foliage, used as shelter for people, livestock, or soldiers in the field. In its most familiar usage it names the joyful pilgrimage Feast of Booths (Sukkot), when Israel dwells in leafy shelters to remember the wilderness sojourn. Poetically, God's own dwelling is pictured as a sukkah – a canopy of dark clouds or a pavilion of protection (Ps 18:11). The word can also denote a natural thicket where a lion lies in ambush (Job 38:40), preserving the concrete image of interwoven vegetation that underlies every sense.

1. booth, temporary shelter (18×) The primary physical sense: a rough, temporary shelter made of interwoven boughs and foliage. Genesis 33:17 shows Jacob building booths for his cattle at the place he names Sukkot, while Leviticus 23:42 prescribes dwelling in such shelters during the festival. Multilingual glosses (Spanish 'cabañas,' German 'Laubhütten,' English 'booth') all capture the rustic, impermanent quality of the structure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-booth, and-as-booth, and-booth | es: En-cabañas, Y-tabernáculo, cabañas | fr: [וסכה], [בסכה], [סכת] | de: Hütten, Laubhuette, Laubhuetten Gen 33:17; Lev 23:42; Lev 23:43; 2Sam 11:11

2. Feast of Booths (Sukkot) (9×) When preceded by the article ('the Booths'), the word functions as the proper name of the autumn pilgrimage festival – Sukkot or Tabernacles. Leviticus 23:34 and Deuteronomy 16:13 anchor this liturgical sense. French and German translations sometimes retain the Hebrew loan ('le-Booths,' 'der-Booths'), reflecting the festival's status as a recognized proper name across traditions. PASSOVER FESTIVAL

en: the-Booths, the-Sukkot, the-booths | es: las-cabañas, los-Tabernáculos, los-tabernáculos | fr: [הסכות], der-cabanes, le-Booths | de: [הסכות], der-Booths, der-booths Lev 23:34; Deut 16:13; Deut 16:16; Deut 31:10; 2Chr 8:13

3. pavilion or canopy of God (3×) A metaphorical extension portraying God's presence as a sheltering canopy or pavilion. In Psalm 18:11 (paralleled in 2 Samuel 22:12), the Lord wraps Himself in dark waters and thick clouds as His sukkah. Job 36:29 uses the same image for the spreading of God's storm-canopy. Spanish 'su pabellón' and English 'his pavilion' highlight the royal, protective overtone. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: canopies, his-canopy, his-pavilion | es: pabellones, su-pabellón, su-tienda | fr: canopies, son-cabane-lui, tente | de: Laubhuette, canopies, sein-Hütte 2Sam 22:12; Job 36:29; Ps 18:11

4. thicket, covert (1×) The word's most concrete, natural sense: a dense thicket of vegetation serving as an animal's hiding place. Job 38:40 uses it for the covert where a lion crouches in ambush. This sense preserves the root image of interwoven branches without any human construction, linking directly to the etymological core of the word. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-thicket | es: en-la-espesura | fr: cabane | de: Laubhuette Job 38:40

סִכּוּת H5522 N-proper-ms (1×)

Sikkuth, name of an Assyrian deity (possibly Saturn/Adar-Ninip)

This word likely names a Mesopotamian deity worshiped by Israelites who had syncretized their faith with Assyrian religious practices. Amos condemns those who 'carried Sikkuth your king and Kiyyun your images,' referring to astral deities associated with Assyrian conquest. Most scholars identify Sikkuth with Sakkut, an epithet of Adar-Ninip, connected to the planet Saturn. Ancient versions struggled with the term—some read it as 'booth' (sukkah), missing the proper name. The prophet's accusation is serious: Israel had not merely lapsed into generic idolatry but adopted the gods of their oppressors.

(1×) Divine name in Amos 5:26, identified with Assyrian Sakkut, an epithet of Adar-Ninip/Saturn. The Hebrew text may have been pointed to suggest 'booth' (avoiding the pagan deity name), but the original refers to a Mesopotamian astral god. Spanish 'Sikut,' French 'Succoth' (misunderstanding as booths), and English 'Sikkuth' reflect various interpretative traditions. The passage indicts Israel for adopting the conqueror's deities. GODS AND DEITIES en: Sikkuth | es: Sikut | fr: Succoth | de: Laubhuetten Amos 5:26

סֻכּוֹת H5523 N-proper-fs / 3fs (18×)
Succoth: 'booths,' a city in Transjordan linked to Jacob; also an exodus staging point in Egypt.
A place name meaning 'booths' or 'shelters,' designating at least two biblical locations. The primary Succoth lies in the Jordan Valley east of the river, where Jacob built shelters for his livestock after parting from Esau (Gen 33:17). This city figures prominently in Gideon's pursuit of the Midianite kings, whose elders refused him bread and paid dearly for it (Judg 8:5-16). It also appears in the 'Valley of Succoth' that God parcels out in the psalms of confidence (Ps 60:6; 108:7) and near the bronze-casting site for Solomon's temple vessels (1 Kgs 7:46). A second Succoth marks the first stop after the Israelites departed Rameses in the exodus (Exod 12:37; 13:20; Num 33:5-6). The Septuagint renders the name as Sokcchoth, while Genesis offers the Greek equivalent Skenai ('tents').

Succoth (place name) (18×) A place name meaning 'booths,' referring primarily to a Transjordanian city in the Jordan Valley where Jacob erected shelters for his flocks (Gen 33:17), and which features in Gideon's Midianite campaign (Judg 8:5-16), Solomon's bronze casting (1 Kgs 7:46), and the psalmic division of the land (Ps 60:6; 108:7). A second Succoth is the initial staging point of the exodus from Egypt (Exod 12:37; 13:20). The Septuagint renders the etymological sense with Skenai ('tents') in Genesis while transliterating elsewhere as Sokcchoth. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Succoth, Succoth-ward, Sukkot | es: Sucot, Sukot, a-Sukot | fr: Succoth, Succoth-garde, cabanes | de: Succoth, Sukkot, Sukkot-ward Gen 33:17; Exod 12:37; Exod 13:20; Num 33:5

סֻכּוֹת בְּנוֹת H5524 N-proper-ms (2×)
Sukkoth-Benoth—a foreign deity worshiped by Babylonians settled in Samaria after 722 BC
Sukkoth-Benoth is mentioned as a deity that Babylonian settlers made and worshiped in Samaria after the Assyrian conquest and deportations. The name appears in 2 Kings 17:30 in a list of foreign gods introduced by various transplanted populations. The exact identity is uncertain and the text may be corrupt. Scholars have proposed connections to various Mesopotamian deities, including Zarpanit (wife of Marduk) or epithets of Ishtar, but no consensus exists. The name as it stands might mean 'booths of daughters' or contain elements related to Babylonian divine names. The passage illustrates the religious syncretism that developed in the northern kingdom after its fall.

(2×) A deity name (possibly corrupt) mentioned in 2 Kings 17:30, twice in the same verse, describing what the Babylonians made to worship in Samaria. The identity is disputed—proposals include corrupted forms of Mesopotamian divine names like Zarpanit or Ishtar. The context is the religious confusion after 722 BC when various foreign peoples brought their gods to Israel's former territory. The multilingual glosses show variation (Sukkot-Benot, Sucot-Benot, daughters), reflecting uncertainty about whether this is a compound name, a title, or a textual corruption of an originally Babylonian deity name. GODS AND DEITIES en: Benot, Sukkot | es: Sucot-Benot, hijas | fr: Benot, Sukkot | de: Benot, Sukkot 2Kgs 17:30

סֻכִּיִּים H5525 N-proper-mp (1×)
Sukkites, an African people in Shishak's army
The Sukkites were part of the diverse military force that Egyptian Pharaoh Shishak brought against Rehoboam's Jerusalem. Listed alongside Libyans and Cushites, they represent one of the African contingents in this early fifth-year invasion of Judah. Ancient versions identify them as 'Troglodytes' (cave-dwellers), though the precise identification remains uncertain. The term shows how Egypt's armies drew from a wide geographical base, incorporating various peoples from regions south and west of the Nile Delta. Their presence underscores the international scale of the threat facing the newly divided kingdom.

(1×) Ethnic/military designation in 2 Chronicles 12:3, identifying a people group in Shishak's invasion force. The Septuagint reads 'Troglodytes,' suggesting cave-dwelling peoples, possibly from regions near Ethiopia or Libya. Spanish 'suquienos' simply transliterates. The term places the Sukkites between Libyans and Cushites geographically, part of the coalition that threatened Rehoboam's Jerusalem. The name serves to document the diverse composition of Egyptian imperial forces. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Sukkites | es: suquienos | fr: [סכיים] | de: [סכיים] 2Chr 12:3

סוּךְ H5526a Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (2×)
to shut in, hedge about—to enclose, confine, or fence in something or someone
This verb means to shut in, hedge about, or fence something in, creating an enclosure or barrier. Job 38:8 asks who shut in the sea with doors when it burst from the womb, depicting God's control over creation's boundaries. Job 3:23 laments that God has hedged in the sufferer, leaving no way out. The imagery is of being enclosed by barriers—sometimes protective (as with the sea's limits), sometimes confining (as with Job's suffering). The root may be related to words meaning to finish or enclose. Both uses emphasize divine sovereignty in setting boundaries, whether cosmic or personal.

(2×) Means to shut in, hedge about, or fence in, appearing in Job 38:8 ('who shut in the sea with doors?') and Job 3:23 ('God has hedged him in'). In chapter 38, God's enclosing of the sea demonstrates creative power and order. In chapter 3, God's hedging represents Job's sense of being trapped in suffering. The multilingual evidence shows 'shut in/hedged in' (English), 'cerró/cercó' (Spanish = closed/fenced), both conveying the action of enclosing or confining, whether to establish cosmic boundaries or to limit human freedom. SHUTTING AND CLOSING en: and-hedged-in, and-shut-in | es: Y-cerró, y-cercó | fr: et-ויסך | de: [ויסך] Job 3:23; Job 38:8

סָכַךְ H5526b Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (18×)
To cover, screen, or shelter (as the cherubim over the ark); in a distinct Piel stem, to incite or stir up conflict.
This verb carries two sharply different meanings rooted in what are likely separate homographic roots. In its dominant usage, it describes the act of covering or screening – most memorably the cherubim spreading their wings over the ark of the covenant (Exod 25:20; 37:9), and God covering his people with protective shelter (Ps 140:7). Spanish Has cubierto and English 'You covered' capture this shielding action. A second, much rarer usage appears in Isaiah 9:11 and 19:2, where a Pilpel/reduplicated stem means 'to stir up' or 'to incite,' as when God sets Egyptians against Egyptians. The two senses share no semantic overlap.

1. to cover, screen, shelter (16×) To cover, screen, or provide sheltering protection. The cherubim are said to cover the mercy seat with outstretched wings (Exod 25:20; 37:9), Moses screens the ark with a curtain (Exod 40:3, 21), and God covers the head of his servant in battle (Ps 140:7). Lamentations uses the same verb for God covering himself with a cloud so that prayer cannot pass through (Lam 3:44). Spanish cubierto and German Decke consistently reflect the 'covering' sense, whether protective or obstructive. COVERING AND CONCEALING en: You-covered, and-covering, and-he-screened | es: Has-cubierto, Lo-cubren, Te-has-cubierto | fr: [וסככים], [סכותה], [סכתה] | de: Decke, [הסוכך], [הסכך] Exod 25:20; Exod 37:9; Exod 40:3; Exod 40:21; Judg 3:24

2. to incite, stir up (2×) To incite, stir up, or set at odds – a semantically unrelated meaning from what appears to be a distinct homographic root (often classified as סכך II in a Pilpel or reduplicated form). In Isaiah 19:2, God declares 'I will stir up Egyptians against Egyptians,' and Isaiah 9:11 uses it of the LORD inciting adversaries. Spanish enfrentaré ('I will set against') captures the confrontational force well. This sense has no connection to covering or sheltering. STIR UP INCITE

en: and-I-will-stir-up, he-incites | es: Y-enfrentaré, incitará | fr: [וְסִכְסַכְתִּי], [יְסִכְסֵךְ] | de: [וְסִכְסַכְתִּי], [יְסִכְסֵךְ] Isa 9:11; Isa 19:2

סָכַךְ H5526c V-Qal-Imperf-2ms / 1cs (1×)

to weave together, knit together

This verb describes the intricate work of weaving or knitting together, used metaphorically for God's creative act in forming a human being in the womb. The psalmist marvels, 'You wove me together in my mother's womb,' recognizing divine craftsmanship in human formation. The image suggests not random assembly but careful, artistic construction—threading different elements together to form a coherent whole. The parallel form in Job uses the same root to describe being woven with bones and sinews. This biological poetry sees the Creator as master craftsman, weaving the fabric of human life.

(1×) Found in Psalm 139:13 where God 'wove me together' in the womb. The Qal verb with first-person suffix emphasizes personal divine attention. Spanish 'tejiste' (you wove), French 'couvrir' (cover, possibly a different interpretation), and English 'wove' capture textile/weaving imagery. The parallelism between this psalm and Job 10:11 (using a similar root) confirms the sense of knitting or weaving together body parts into a living person. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: you-wove-me | es: me-tejiste | fr: couvrir | de: du-wove-mich Ps 139:13

סֹכֵךְ H5526d Art / N-ms (1×)

covering, protective shield (military testudo)

This technical military term denotes a protective covering used by attackers storming a city—what Romans later called a testudo or tortoise formation. Nahum uses it in his vivid oracle about Nineveh's fall: 'the covering is prepared.' The structure shielded soldiers from defensive projectiles as they approached walls or gates. The term literally means 'that which covers or screens,' showing how warfare technology included sophisticated defensive equipment. The prophet's point is that even with proper military preparations, Assyria's capital cannot escape divine judgment.

(1×) Military term in Nahum 2:5 (English 2:6) describing siege equipment: 'the covering is prepared.' The Septuagint reads 'their defenses,' recognizing protective function. Spanish 'escudo de asedio' (siege shield) and English 'covering' identify the device. This was essentially a mobile shield or mantlet protecting attackers as they advanced against fortifications. The irony is that Nineveh, which had besieged many cities, now faces siege warfare herself. COVERING AND CONCEALING en: the-covering | es: el-escudo-de-asedio | fr: couvrir | de: [הַסֹּכֵךְ] Nah 2:5

שָׂכַךְ H5526e Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-1cs (1×)

to cover, screen, protect

This verb means to cover over something or someone, providing protection or concealment. In Exodus, when Moses asks to see God's glory, Yahweh promises, 'I will cover you with my hand while I pass by.' The gesture protects Moses from the full, unmediated radiance of divine glory, which no one can see and live. The covering is both merciful and necessary—it allows partial revelation while preventing destruction. The verb's basic sense is physical covering, but here it becomes the means by which God accommodates His overwhelming presence to human frailty.

(1×) Found in Exodus 33:22 where God promises to 'cover you with my hand' as His glory passes Moses. Spanish 'cubriré' (I will cover), French 'couvrir' (cover), and English 'cover' all preserve the protective screening action. The Qal perfect with consecutive waw shows God's specific, promised action. This divine covering allows Moses a mediated encounter with God's glory—enough to transform him, not enough to consume him. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-I-will-cover | es: y-te-cubriré | fr: et-Je—couvrir | de: und-ich-wird-bedecken Exod 33:22

שִׂכֵּךְ H5526f V-Piel-Imperf-2ms / 1cs (1×)

to weave, knit together

This variant root also describes weaving or knitting together, appearing in Job's meditation on God's creative work. Job recalls how God 'wove me together' with bones and sinews—the structural and connective tissues that form the body's framework. The Piel form intensifies the action, suggesting careful, repeated work. The verse parallels Psalm 139:13's similar imagery, both texts using textile metaphors for biological formation. Ancient peoples familiar with weaving would have appreciated how this craft—interlacing separate threads into strong fabric—mirrors the integration of body parts into a living organism.

(1×) Appears in Job 10:11 in the Piel form: 'with bones and sinews You weave me together.' Spanish 'tejiste' (you wove) and English 'weave' capture the textile imagery. The verb is the shin-root parallel to samekh-root in Psalm 139:13, showing how Hebrew used multiple roots for weaving/knitting concepts. The image emphasizes divine craftsmanship—God as artisan who carefully constructs human bodies with integrated, interdependent parts. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: You-weave-me-together | es: me-tejiste. | fr: תְּסֹכְכֵנִי-moi | de: [תְּסֹכְכֵנִי] Job 10:11

סֻכָּה H5527 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Secacah, a town in Judah's wilderness

Secacah was a settlement in the wilderness district of Judah, listed among the towns in Joshua's territorial allotments. Its precise location remains unknown, lost along with many other wilderness settlements that left no enduring archaeological traces. The wilderness of Judah was sparsely populated, with scattered towns serving as outposts in the harsh terrain between the central hill country and the Dead Sea. Ancient versions transliterate the name differently—Sochoḥa, Sḥaḥa—reflecting pronunciation uncertainties. The town's inclusion in tribal allotments shows systematic organization even in marginal territories.

(1×) Place name in Joshua 15:61, part of Judah's wilderness allotment. The town's location is unknown, lost to historical memory. Greek versions offer 'Sochoḥa' or 'Sḥaḥa,' showing transliteration variation. Spanish 'Secacá,' French 'Secacah,' and English 'Secacah' preserve the Hebrew. The name appears in the systematic territorial distribution, documenting Israelite claims to even sparsely inhabited wilderness regions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Secacah | es: y-Secacá | fr: et-Secacah | de: und-Secacah Josh 15:61

סָכַל H5528 V-Hifil-Perf-2ms (8×)

To act foolishly, behave senselessly; to make foolish, turn to folly

The verb סָכַל covers the terrain of foolishness in both its intransitive and causative dimensions. In its Nifal and Hifil forms, it describes a person who has acted foolishly — the sting of self-indictment that Saul confesses to David: 'I have acted foolishly' (1 Sam 26:21), echoed by David himself after the census (2 Sam 24:10). The Piel stem shifts the agency outward: God 'makes foolish' the counsel of the wise (Isa 44:25), and David prays that Ahithophel's advice be 'turned to folly' (2 Sam 15:31). The Syriac cognate sakkal and Aramaic sekal confirm this as a pan-Semitic root for moral and intellectual folly.

1. act foolishly (Hifil/Nifal) (6×) The intransitive sense of acting foolishly or behaving senselessly, expressed through the Hifil and Nifal stems. The subject is the one who has done something foolish — a self-assessment that recurs in confessional contexts. Laban accuses Jacob (Gen 31:28), Samuel rebukes Saul (1 Sam 13:13), Saul admits his own folly to David (1 Sam 26:21), and David confesses after the census (2 Sam 24:10; 1 Chr 21:8). Spanish 'has obrado neciamente' ('you have acted foolishly') and 'hice neciamente' ('I acted foolishly') consistently encode the intransitive, self-reflective character of this sense. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: I-acted-foolishly, I-have-acted-foolishly, you-acted-foolishly | es: Has-obrado-neciamente, actuaste-neciamente, hice-neciamente | fr: [נסכלת], [נסכלתי], je-agit-foolishly | de: [נסכלת], [נסכלתי], du-handelte-toericht Gen 31:28; 1Sam 13:13; 1Sam 26:21; 2Sam 24:10; 1Chr 21:8

2. make foolish, turn to folly (Piel) (2×) The causative Piel sense of making someone or something foolish, rendering counsel senseless, or turning wisdom to folly. Only two occurrences attest this transitive meaning: David's prayer that the LORD 'make foolish' Ahithophel's counsel (2 Sam 15:31), and Isaiah 44:25 where God frustrates diviners and 'makes their knowledge foolish.' The shift from intransitive experience to active causation is confirmed by the transitive syntax — the subject acts upon another's wisdom or advice — and by Spanish 'enloquece' ('he drives mad'). FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY
en: He-makes-foolish, make-foolish | es: enloquece | fr: [ישכל], fais-insensé | de: [ישכל], mache-toericht 2Sam 15:31; Isa 44:25

סָכָל H5529 Art / N-ms (1×)
fool, foolish person
This noun denotes a fool or foolish person, appearing in Ecclesiastes' ironic observation about the topsy-turvy nature of life under the sun. Qoheleth notes that 'the fool is set in high places'—a reversal of the proper order where wisdom should be honored and folly rejected. The term shares roots with words for folly and lack of understanding, emphasizing moral and intellectual deficiency. In wisdom literature, the fool isn't merely ignorant but obstinate, rejecting instruction and pursuing self-destructive paths. The Preacher's complaint reflects disappointment with a world where merit and position don't align.

(1×) Found in Ecclesiastes 10:6 where 'the fool is set in high places' while the rich (presumably wise) sit low. Spanish 'necio' (fool), French 'le-fool,' and English 'fool' identify someone lacking wisdom and judgment. The term appears with the definite article, perhaps meaning 'the fool par excellence' or representing fools as a class. Qoheleth's frustration centers on the misallocation of honor and authority to those unworthy of it. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY en: the-fool | es: el-necio | fr: le-הסכל | de: [הסכל] Eccl 10:6

סָכָל H5530 Conj-w (8×)
Fool, foolish person; one who is morally obtuse, senseless, or stubbornly unwise.
A wisdom-literature noun for a fool – someone marked not merely by ignorance but by moral and intellectual obstinacy. It appears almost exclusively in Ecclesiastes, where Qoheleth probes the futility of leaving one's toil to a fool (Eccl 2:19), warns against being overly wicked or foolish (7:17), and observes the fool's conspicuous lack of sense even while walking down the road (10:3). Jeremiah also uses it sharply: 'my people are foolish, they do not know me' (Jer 4:22; 5:21). Spanish necio and German Tor both capture the sense of willful folly rather than mere naivete.

fool, foolish person (8×) A person characterized by moral and intellectual foolishness – not simply ignorant but stubbornly senseless. In Ecclesiastes, the sakal embodies the frustrating reality that wisdom's gains may pass to a fool (2:19), that even a fool's walk reveals his lack of sense (10:3), and that the fool multiplies words about what he cannot know (10:14). Jeremiah uses the plural form to indict Israel's spiritual obtuseness: 'my people are foolish, they do not know me; they are senseless children' (Jer 4:22; 5:21). Spanish necio ('fool') and French insense ('senseless') both capture the willful dimension – this is not innocent ignorance but culpable foolishness. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY
en: [ketiv], a-fool, and-the-fool | es: (cuando-necio), [cuando-el-necio], necio | fr: [סכל], [סכלים], et-insensé | de: Tor, [סכל], [סכלים] Eccl 2:19; Eccl 7:17; Eccl 10:3

סִכְלוּת H5531a Conj-w / N-fs (1×)
folly, foolishness
This abstract noun denotes folly or foolish behavior, the opposite of wisdom that Ecclesiastes repeatedly examines. Qoheleth includes it in his comprehensive exploration: 'I applied my heart to know wisdom and to know madness and folly.' The word appears multiple times in Ecclesiastes, always as something to be understood rather than pursued. Occasionally spelled with shin rather than samekh (a scribal variation), it represents the negative pole in wisdom's moral universe. Folly isn't innocent fun but destructive stupidity—the kind that wrecks lives, relationships, and communities. The Preacher studies it carefully to understand human behavior under the sun.

(1×) Abstract noun in Ecclesiastes 1:17 (and six other verses), part of Qoheleth's program to 'know wisdom and to know madness and folly.' Spanish 'necedades' (foolish things), French 'folie' (folly), and English 'folly' denote foolish behavior and thinking. The term represents the anti-wisdom that wisdom literature critiques. Qoheleth investigates folly not to practice it but to understand the full range of human experience and choice. FOLLY AND FOOLISHNESS en: and-folly | es: y-necedades | fr: et-folie | de: [ושכלות] Eccl 1:17

סִכְלוּת H5531b N-fsc (6×)
Folly, foolishness; the opposite of wisdom, examined philosophically in Ecclesiastes.
A feminine abstract noun meaning folly or foolishness, appearing exclusively in Ecclesiastes as the conceptual counterpart to wisdom (chokmah). Qoheleth systematically investigates folly alongside wisdom, declaring that he 'turned to consider wisdom and madness and folly' (Eccl 2:12). He observes that wisdom excels folly as light excels darkness (2:13), yet the same fate befalls both the wise and the fool. In Ecclesiastes 7:25, the preacher applies his heart to know 'the wickedness of folly and the foolishness of madness.' The word appears with the article or conjunctive waw in most instances, treated as a known philosophical category. Spanish 'necedad' and French 'folie' both capture the moral-intellectual deficiency Qoheleth anatomizes.

folly (6×) Folly or foolishness as an abstract quality, examined philosophically in the book of Ecclesiastes as the antithesis of wisdom. Qoheleth uses this word in his systematic investigation of human experience: he 'gave his heart to know folly' (Eccl 2:3), compared it with wisdom (2:12-13), and concluded that both the wise and the foolish share the same mortal fate. In 7:25 and 10:1,13 the word describes the destructive irrationality that undermines wisdom's achievements. Its exclusive appearance in Ecclesiastes distinguishes it from other Hebrew words for foolishness (iwwelet, nebalah), giving it a distinctly philosophical register. Spanish 'necedad' and French 'folie' consistently render this abstract intellectual-moral concept. FOLLY AND FOOLISHNESS en: and-folly, and-the-foolishness, folly | es: la-necedad, necedad, y-la-insensatez | fr: dans-folie, et-folie, folie | de: [בסכלות], [הסכלות], [והסכלות] Eccl 2:3; Eccl 2:12; Eccl 2:13; Eccl 7:25; Eccl 10:1

סָכַן H5532 V-Hifil-Imp-ms (12×)
To be of use or benefit; to serve as caretaker or steward; (Hifil) to be familiar with, accustomed to.
A versatile root spanning service, profit, and intimacy. In Job's dialogues it probes whether any human can truly 'profit' God, a theological challenge rendered consistently across languages (English 'it profits,' Spanish 'le es provechoso,' German 'nützt'). As a participle it becomes a personal title: Abishag the 'caretaker' who warmed aging King David, and Shebna the 'steward' whom Isaiah confronted. In the Hifil, the sense shifts to relational familiarity, as in Job 22:21: 'Be at peace with God' – literally, become intimately acquainted with Him.

1. be profitable, be of use (Qal) (5×) To be profitable, useful, or beneficial to someone, used exclusively in Job's wisdom debates (Job 15:3; 22:2; 34:9; 35:3). The question 'Can a man profit God?' challenges human self-importance before the Almighty. Spanish 'le es provechoso' and German 'nützt' confirm the economic-benefit metaphor at the core of this sense, treating moral conduct as a commodity weighed for its value. PROFIT AND BENEFIT

en: does-it-profit, is-profitable, it-profits | es: beneficia-, le-es-provechoso, le-es-provechoso- | fr: profiter | de: nuetzt Job 15:3; Job 22:2; Job 34:9; Job 35:3

2. be familiar with, be acquainted (Hifil) (4×) Hifil stem denoting familiarity, acquaintance, or being accustomed to something. In Job 22:21, 'be at peace' (hasken-nā) literally means 'make yourself familiar with Him,' urging intimate reconciliation with God. Balaam's donkey appeals to this same sense: 'Have I ever been accustomed to do this?' (Num 22:30). Psalm 139:3 uses it of God's intimate acquaintance with all human ways. The semantic shift from 'be useful' to 'be familiar' likely runs through the notion of habitual service breeding closeness. PROFIT AND BENEFIT

en: be-at-peace, have-I-ever-been-accustomed, was-I-accustomed | es: Reconcíliate-, acaso-acostumbrar, acostumbré | fr: avoir-je-ever-été-accustomed, le-être-utile, profiter | de: du-sind-acquainted-with, haben-ich-je-gewesen-accustomed, nuetzt Num 22:30; Job 22:21; Ps 139:3

3. caretaker, attendant (Qal participle) (2×) Qal feminine participle used as a noun: a female caretaker or personal attendant who ministers to someone's daily needs. In 1 Kings 1:2, 4, Abishag the Shunammite is sought as a sōkenet for the aging King David. Spanish 'cuidadora' and English 'caregiver' highlight the nurturing, domestic character of this role, distinct from the administrative sense of the masculine form. PROFIT AND BENEFIT

en: a-caregiver | es: cuidadora | fr: un-caregiver | de: ein-caregiver 1Kgs 1:2; 1Kgs 1:4

4. steward, administrator (Qal participle) (1×) Qal masculine participle with the article, functioning as a title: the steward or chief administrator of a royal household. Isaiah 22:15 identifies Shebna as 'the steward' (hassōkēn), a high official whom the prophet denounces for self-aggrandizement. Spanish 'el tesorero' ('the treasurer') reflects the fiscal dimension of this administrative role, while the Hebrew encompasses broader household management authority. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: the-steward | es: el-tesorero | fr: [הסכן] | de: [הסכן] Isa 22:15

סָכַן H5533a V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (1×)

to be endangered, be in danger

This late Hebrew verb means to incur danger or be endangered. Ecclesiastes uses it to observe that 'he who cleaves wood is endangered by it'—a proverbial statement about occupational hazards. The term appears only in post-exilic literature and reflects Aramaic influence, showing how Hebrew absorbed vocabulary from its linguistic environment during the exile. The rabbinical literature later develops rich usage around the noun 'danger' (sakkanah) derived from this root. Qoheleth's point is that even ordinary work carries risk; life's uncertainties extend to the most routine activities.

(1×) Niphal verb in Ecclesiastes 10:9: 'he who cleaves wood is endangered by it.' The verb is late Hebrew, related to Aramaic and Talmudic terms for danger. Spanish 'peligrará' (will be in danger) and English 'endangered' capture the sense of incurring risk. The observation fits Qoheleth's pattern of noting life's unpredictability—even straightforward tasks like splitting wood carry potential for harm. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: will-be-endangered | es: peligrará | fr: יִסָּכֵן | de: [יִסָּכֵן] Eccl 10:9

סָכַן H5533b Art / V-Pual-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

one who is impoverished, poor person (possibly)

This difficult word appears in Isaiah's mocking description of idol-making. The text refers to 'he who is impoverished in respect to offering'—someone too poor to afford a proper idol, perhaps settling for wood rather than metal. However, the reading is heavily debated, with numerous scholarly conjectures. Some connect it to the root for 'poor' (mesken), while others propose textual emendations. The passage critiques idolatry by highlighting the absurdity: even impoverished people strain to make gods for themselves, carefully preserving a wooden image that won't rot. The verse's obscurity hasn't diminished its satirical force.

(1×) Pual participle in Isaiah 40:20, traditionally rendered 'he who is impoverished in respect to offering.' The word and its context are textually uncertain—many scholars propose emendations. Spanish 'el pobre' (the poor one) and English 'he who is impoverished' preserve traditional understanding. The passage satirizes idol construction, contrasting carefully preserved wooden images with the incomparable Creator. Even if the exact wording is debated, the critique of idolatry remains clear. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS

en: He-who-is-impoverished | es: El-pobre | fr: [המסכן] | de: [המסכן] Isa 40:20

סָכַר H5534 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-1cs (3×)

to shut up, stop up; close off or confine by blocking

This verb means to shut up, stop up, or close—used for sealing springs and mouths. Genesis 8:2 describes the flood receding: 'the springs of the deep and the windows of heaven were stopped'—the sources of deluge sealed. Psalm 63:11 (English v.12) declares 'the mouth of liars shall be stopped'—silenced by judgment. Isaiah 19:4 warns that God will 'shut up Egypt into the hand' of harsh masters—deliver or confine them to foreign rule. The verb suggests forceful closing: dammed springs, silenced mouths, entrapped nations. The imagery is of restraint and confinement through blocking or sealing.

(3×) Genesis uses Niphal passive for the flood's cessation—divine sources of judgment supernaturally sealed. The Psalm employs the same stem for mouths stopped in death—lying tongues silenced forever. Isaiah's Piel intensive form depicts God forcibly 'shutting up' Egypt into servitude—the nation confined like water dammed. Cross-linguistic renderings vary: 'cerradas' (closed), 'stopped,' 'entregaré' (deliver). The semantic range moves from literal stopping (springs) through metaphorical silencing (mouths) to political confinement (nations delivered/shut into bondage). Common thread: forceful closure or restraint of what was open or free. SHUTTING AND CLOSING en: and-I-will-deliver, and-were-stopped, will-be-stopped | es: Y-entregaré, Y-fueron-cerradas, será-cerrada | fr: [וְסָכַרְתִּי], et-étaient-arrêta, fermer | de: [וְסָכַרְתִּי], und-verschlossen-wurden, wird-sein-stopped Gen 8:2; Ps 63:11; Isa 19:4

סָכַת H5535 V-Hifil-Imp-ms (1×)

to be silent, keep silence

This verb commands silence, calling for quiet attention. Moses uses it at a crucial moment in Deuteronomy: 'Keep silence and listen, O Israel!' The command precedes a solemn declaration that Israel has become Yahweh's people. The Hiphil imperative calls for active silencing—not passive quiet but deliberate cessation of noise to focus completely on what follows. The Arabic and Syriac cognates similarly mean to be quiet or silent, often in the sense of listening attentively. The verb recognizes that hearing important things requires stopping other activities and creating receptive stillness.

(1×) Hiphil imperative in Deuteronomy 27:9: 'Be silent and listen, O Israel!' Spanish 'guarda silencio' (keep silence) and English 'be silent' capture the command. The verb calls for active attention, not mere absence of noise—Israel must stop speaking to hear Moses' declaration. The paired command 'and listen' shows silence is purposeful, creating space for receiving covenant words. The solemn context (covenant renewal) makes attentive silence especially appropriate. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: be-silent | es: Guarda-silencio | fr: être-silent | de: sein-silent Deut 27:9

סַל H5536 Art / N-ms (15×)

A woven basket, especially for carrying bread and baked offerings in ritual and ceremonial settings.

The sal is the simple, open woven basket familiar from two memorable biblical scenes: Pharaoh's baker carrying three baskets of pastry on his head (Gen 40:16–18) and the basket of unleavened bread prescribed for priestly consecration and Nazirite completion rites (Exod 29:3, 23; Lev 8:2; Num 6:15–19). Gideon also places meat and bread in a sal when the angel visits (Judg 6:19). German 'Körbchen' (little basket) nicely captures its modest domestic character.

In every occurrence the basket holds baked goods, linking it firmly to food preparation and sacred offering rather than general storage.

basket, woven container (15×) A flat or open woven basket used for carrying bread, cakes, and baked goods. Its fifteen occurrences cluster in two narrative domains: the baker's dream in Genesis 40, where three baskets on the head foreshadow execution, and the Pentateuchal ritual texts prescribing unleavened bread for consecration and Nazirite offerings (Exod 29; Lev 8; Num 6). The consistent association with baked foodstuffs distinguishes sal from other Hebrew basket terms like tene^{9} or dûd. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-basket-of, and-from-the-basket-of, and-in-the-basket | es: Y-de-canasta-de, canasta, canasta-de | fr: basket-de, corbeille, corbeilles-de | de: Koerbchen, Körbe, basket-von Gen 40:16; Gen 40:17; Gen 40:18; Exod 29:3

סָלָא H5537 Art / V-Pual-Prtcpl-mp (1×)
to weigh, reckon as valuable

(1×) Pual participle in Lamentations 4:2: 'the precious children of Zion, weighed against gold.' Spanish 'estimados' (esteemed/valued) and English 'weighed' both work, capturing how people were reckoned as precious as gold. The metaphor draws on commercial practice—gold was carefully weighed to establish value. Now these same people, once precious beyond measure, are considered worthless pottery. The verb highlights the shocking reversal of fortunes. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING en: the-ones-weighed | es: los-estimados | fr: [המסלאים] | de: [המסלאים] Lam 4:2

סִלָּא H5538 N-proper-fs (1×)
Silla, a place name (location uncertain)
Silla appears in the assassination account of King Joash, who was killed 'at Beth-millo, on the way that goes down to Silla.' The phrase is obscure and the location uncertain. Some scholars suggest emending the text to read 'highway' (mesillah) instead of 'Silla,' making it a common noun rather than a proper name. Others propose reading 'the descent of Millo' without the geographic name. Ancient versions don't clarify matters. What's clear is that the text locates Joash's murder at a specific site associated with Beth-millo, though the precise geography has been lost to historical memory.

(1×) Place name (possibly) in 2 Kings 12:20, part of the description of Joash's assassination site. The text reads 'Beth-millo, which goes down to Silla,' but the phrase defies clear interpretation. Spanish 'Sila,' French 'Silla,' and English 'Silla' simply transliterate. Scholars have proposed reading 'highway' or emending differently, showing textual uncertainty. The name serves to locate a regicide, though the exact spot remains unknown to us. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Silla | es: Sila | fr: Silla | de: Silla 2Kgs 12:20

סָלַד H5539 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjImperf.Cohort-1cs (1×)
to spring, leap (possibly)
This rare and uncertain verb possibly means to spring or leap, though its meaning is disputed. Job uses it in a difficult passage: 'I would spring in my anguish' or 'I would exult in my pain.' The verb appears nowhere else, making its meaning a matter of educated guessing based on later Hebrew usage, where it can mean to start or pull back (as from fire). Some interpreters connect it to the idea of recoiling or shrinking back, while others prefer 'leap for joy' based on context. Job's point seems to be that if he could be certain of God's purposes, even suffering would produce some kind of triumphant response.

(1×) Piel imperfect in Job 6:10, a hapax legomenon: 'I would spring/exult in my anguish.' Spanish 'me exaltaría' (I would exalt myself) and English 'I would exult' suggest joyful response despite pain. The Mishnaic Hebrew suggests 'recoil' or 'spring back.' The obscurity reflects the verse's difficulty—Job describes a hypothetical emotional response to having certainty about his suffering. The verb's exact nuance remains debated among lexicographers. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-I-would-exult | es: y-me-exaltaría | fr: et-endurcir | de: [ואסלדה] Job 6:10

סֶלֶד H5540 N-proper-ms (2×)
Seled—a personal name in the genealogy of Judah, otherwise unknown
Seled is a personal name appearing in the genealogies of Judah in 1 Chronicles 2:30. The name is mentioned twice in the same verse, likely indicating he died without sons, as the genealogy notes he had no children. This is typical of Chronicles' genealogical method, which sometimes highlights childless individuals to explain breaks in family lines. Beyond this brief mention, nothing is known about Seled. The Septuagint transliterates the name with minor variations, preserving it without interpretation. He represents one of many individuals preserved in biblical genealogies whose lives left no other historical trace.

(2×) A proper name in the tribal genealogy of Judah, appearing twice in 1 Chronicles 2:30, both mentions in the same verse recording that Seled had no children. This double mention likely emphasizes the end of his line. The name exists solely in this genealogical context with no other biblical reference. The multilingual glosses maintain transliteration (Seled), treating it purely as a personal identifier in the Chronicles genealogy, one of the many names preserving family memory without additional narrative detail. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Seled | es: Seled | fr: [סלד] | de: [סלד] 1Chr 2:30

סָלָה H5541a V-Piel-Perf-3ms (2×)
to make light of, reject—to treat with contempt, scorn, or cast aside as worthless
This verb means to make light of, toss aside, or treat with contempt. Psalm 119:118 says God makes light of all who stray from His statutes, treating their rebellion as contemptible. Lamentations 1:15 describes how the Lord has flouted or rejected Jerusalem's mighty warriors, casting them aside in judgment. The root conveys the idea of treating something as lightweight or worthless, rejecting it with scorn. Both passages use it of divine rejection—God treating the disobedient as negligible, worthy only of dismissal. The Piel form in Lamentations intensifies the action, emphasizing the completeness of God's scornful rejection.

(2×) Means to make light of, reject, or treat with contempt, used of God's response to human rebellion. Psalm 119:118 states 'You reject all who stray from Your statutes,' treating their error as contemptible. Lamentations 1:15 says the Lord 'has rejected' (or flouted) Jerusalem's mighty men, casting them aside in judgment. The multilingual evidence shows 'reject' (English, German 'reject'), 'desechar/rechazar' (Spanish = to cast aside), recognizing the action of dismissing or scorning as unworthy, whether the disobedient (Psalm) or the once-mighty warriors (Lamentations). REJECTION AND REFUSAL
en: He-rejected, You-reject | es: Desechaste, Ha-rechazado | fr: [סלה], peser | de: Sela, du-reject Ps 119:118; Lam 1:15

סָלָה H5541b V-Pual-Imperf-3fs (2×)
to be weighed, valued—to be evaluated or estimated in terms of worth, especially against gold
This verb means to be weighed or valued, specifically in the sense of being evaluated or measured against something. Job 28:16 and 28:19 both state that wisdom 'cannot be weighed' or valued against gold—neither the gold of Ophir nor topaz can match wisdom's worth. The imagery is commercial and precious-metal-related: wisdom cannot be placed on scales against even the finest gold because it exceeds all material value. The Pual form indicates passive voice—wisdom cannot be (successfully) weighed or estimated in terms of gold; it transcends such valuation.

(2×) Means to be weighed, valued, or evaluated in terms of worth, appearing in Job 28:16 and 28:19 in the poem about wisdom's incomparable value. Both verses state that wisdom 'cannot be valued' against gold of Ophir or precious stones—it exceeds all material estimation. The multilingual evidence shows 'valued/is valued' (English), 'se estimará' (Spanish = will be estimated), capturing the commercial imagery of weighing precious items to determine worth, with the point being that wisdom's value surpasses any such calculation or comparison with earthly treasures. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING

en: it-is-valued | es: se-estimará | fr: תסלה | de: [תסלה] Job 28:16; Job 28:19

סֶלָה H5542 Interjection (74×)

Selah — a liturgical or musical notation in the Psalms and Habakkuk, of uncertain meaning; perhaps a pause or cue.

Selah is one of the most debated terms in the Hebrew Bible. Occurring 71 times in the Psalms and 3 times in Habakkuk 3, it appears to be a liturgical or musical direction rather than a word with translatable semantic content. The Septuagint renders it diapsalma ('interlude'), while ancient interpreters variously understood it as a signal to lift one's voice, a change of melody, or a pause for instrumental interplay. Modern scholarship remains divided, though the derivation from salal ('to lift up') suggests an instruction to raise voices or instruments. Remarkably, most translations — English, Spanish, French, German — simply transliterate it as 'Selah,' acknowledging that its precise function eludes confident translation.

(74×) A liturgical or musical notation of uncertain meaning, appearing 71 times in the Psalms and 3 times in Habakkuk (Ps 3:2, 4, 8; Hab 3:3, 9). Possibly from salal ('to lift up'), it may signal a pause, melodic shift, or doxological cue. The Septuagint renders it diapsalma ('interlude'). Nearly all modern languages simply transliterate it — Selah, Sela. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: Selah | es: Selah | fr: Sélah | de: Sela Ps 3:2; Ps 3:4; Ps 3:8; Ps 4:2; Ps 4:4

גַּבַּי סַלָּי H5543a N-proper-ms (1×)

Sallai, a Benjamite name

Sallai appears in Nehemiah's list of Benjamites who settled in Jerusalem after the exile. The name and surrounding text present difficulties—the parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 9:8 reads differently, leading scholars to suspect textual corruption. The name might relate to Aramaic or Talmudic terms for tax collectors (gabbai), though this remains speculative. What's clear is that Sallai represents one of the families that responded to Nehemiah's call to repopulate Jerusalem, helping restore the city's demographic and spiritual vitality after the return from Babylon.

(1×) Personal name in Nehemiah 11:8, identifying a Benjamite settler in post-exilic Jerusalem. The text reads 'Gabbai, Sallai' (possibly two names or a compound), but comparison with 1 Chronicles 9:8 shows significant textual differences, suggesting corruption. The name may derive from terms meaning 'collector' or relate to other roots. It functions primarily to document family participation in Jerusalem's restoration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Sallai | es: Salai | fr: [סלי] | de: [סלי] Neh 11:8

סַלּוּ H5543b N-proper-ms (1×)

Sallu—a priest in the time of Zerubbabel

Sallu appears as a priestly name during the post-exilic period when Zerubbabel led the rebuilding efforts in Jerusalem. The name occurs in Nehemiah's list of priests who returned from Babylon. The textual tradition shows some variation, with verse 20 giving an alternate form Sallai, and the Septuagint reflecting slight differences in transliteration.

(1×) Proper name of a priest who served during Zerubbabel's administration after the return from exile (Neh 12:7). The identity appears connected to Sallai in verse 20 of the same chapter, showing typical Hebrew name variation. Cross-language evidence is minimal given the single occurrence of this proper name. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11488 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Sallu | es: Salu | fr: [סלו] | de: [סלו] Neh 12:7

סָלוּא H5543c N-proper-ms (1×)

Salu—a Simeonite leader, father of Zimri

Salu was a Simeonite prince whose son Zimri became infamous in Israel's history. When Israel camped at Shittim, Zimri brought a Midianite woman into the camp in open defiance of Moses, leading to divine judgment through a plague. Phinehas the priest killed both Zimri and the woman, stopping the plague. The name appears only in this tragic narrative context.

(1×) Personal name of a tribal leader from Simeon, father of Zimri who was slain by Phinehas at Baal-peor (Num 25:14). The Septuagint witnesses show varied attempts at rendering this Hebrew name into Greek. Spanish, French, and German translations consistently transliterate as 'Salu.' AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11488 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Salu | es: Salu | fr: Salu | de: Salu Num 25:14

סַלּוּא H5543d N-proper-ms (2×)

Sallu—a post-exilic Benjamite name appearing in genealogical lists

Sallu is a Benjamite name appearing in the post-exilic genealogies of those living in Jerusalem. The name occurs in 1 Chronicles 9:7 and Nehemiah 11:7, parallel lists of residents in the restored city. There is minor spelling variation between the two passages (Sallua in Chronicles, Sallu in Nehemiah), a common feature in biblical genealogies. The Septuagint shows various attempts at transliteration. Beyond these genealogical mentions, nothing is known about this individual or family. The name represents one of the Benjamite families that resettled in Jerusalem after the Babylonian exile.

(2×) A proper name identifying a Benjamite in the post-exilic community of Jerusalem, appearing in 1 Chronicles 9:7 (as Sallua) and Nehemiah 11:7 (as Sallu). These parallel genealogies list residents of Jerusalem after the return from exile. The spelling variation between the two accounts reflects typical textual diversity in genealogical records. The multilingual glosses maintain the transliteration (Sallu, Salú), treating it as a personal or family name preserved in the registers of Benjamites who repopulated the capital city. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11488 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Sallu | es: Salú | fr: [סלא], [סלוא] | de: [סלא], [סלוא] 1Chr 9:7; Neh 11:7

סַלָּי H5543e Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

to Sallai—prepositional phrase marking priestly name

This form combines the Hebrew preposition 'to' with the personal name Sallai, who was identified as a priest. The occurrence links this figure with Sallu in Nehemiah 12:7, reflecting the same individual under slight name variation. Such prepositional constructions with proper names are common in genealogical and administrative lists where relationships or directions are specified.

(1×) Prepositional phrase 'to Sallai' referring to a priestly figure in Nehemiah's genealogical records (Neh 12:20). The form appears in a list coordinating priestly assignments or relationships. The preposition לְ typically indicates direction, possession, or association, here marking the person as recipient or destination in an administrative context. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: to-Sallai | es: De-Salai | fr: [לסלי] | de: [לסלי] Neh 12:20

סַלּוֹן H5544 Conj-w / N-mp (2×)

brier, thorn—a prickly, painful plant; a source of irritation or distress

This noun denotes a brier or thorn, a prickly plant that causes pain and difficulty. Ezekiel uses it twice in symbolic contexts: in 2:6, the prophet is warned he dwells among scorpions and thorns (representing hostile people), and in 28:24, it describes 'a pricking brier' that will no longer afflict Israel when God judges the surrounding nations. The imagery is consistently negative—thorns represent hostility, pain, and opposition. The etymology is uncertain, but the word clearly designates painful, prickly vegetation used metaphorically for people or nations that cause suffering and irritation to God's people.

(2×) Refers to briers or thorns, prickly plants used metaphorically for sources of pain and hostility. Ezekiel 2:6 warns the prophet that he is surrounded by 'thorns,' representing rebellious people. Ezekiel 28:24 promises there will be no more 'pricking brier' for Israel—no hostile neighbors to torment them. The multilingual glosses consistently identify this as 'thorns/briers' (English), 'espinas' (Spanish = thorns), 'épine' (French = thorn), all recognizing the painful, prickly nature of these plants as symbols of affliction, opposition, and hostility from surrounding peoples. THORNS AND BRAMBLES
en: and-thorns, pricking | es: espina, y-espinas | fr: et-épine, épine | de: [וסלונים], [סלון] Ezek 2:6; Ezek 28:24

סָלַח H5545 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (48×)
To forgive, pardon (always divine); to be forgiven (Nifal passive of divine pardon)
Salach is reserved exclusively for God's action of forgiving sin – no human subject ever takes this verb in the Hebrew Bible. In the Qal stem, it appears in bold petitions like Moses' plea 'Pardon the iniquity of this people' (Num 14:19) and in God's gracious declarations 'I have forgiven' (Num 14:20). The Nifal passive appears repeatedly in Leviticus sacrificial law: after proper atonement, 'he shall be forgiven' (Lev 4:20, 26, 31). This divine exclusivity sets salach apart from other forgiveness vocabulary and underscores that true pardon originates with God alone. Isaiah 55:7 invites the wicked to return, 'for He will abundantly pardon.'

1. forgive, pardon (Qal active) (34×) The Qal active: God pardons, forgives, or remits sin and iniquity. Always with God as subject, whether in direct speech ('I have forgiven,' Num 14:20), petition ('Forgive, O Lord,' Dan 9:19), or promise ('I will forgive their iniquity,' Jer 31:34). Multilingual evidence is consistent: Spanish perdonar, German vergeben, French pardonner all reflect the exclusively divine character of this act. LEAVING AND REMAINING
en: and-I-will-forgive, and-I-will-pardon, and-forgive | es: Perdona-, Y-perdonarás, perdonará- | fr: devra-pardonner-, et-pardonner, et-tu—pardonner | de: soll-vergeben-, und-du-forgive, und-du-soll-vergeben Exod 34:9; Num 14:19; Num 14:20; Num 30:5; Num 30:8

2. be forgiven (Nifal passive) (13×) The Nifal passive: to be forgiven, to receive divine pardon. Concentrated in the Levitical sacrificial regulations (Lev 4:20-5:18), this form appears in the recurring formula 've-nislach lo' – 'and he shall be forgiven.' It presupposes proper atonement ritual and priestly mediation. The passive construction keeps God as the implicit agent of forgiveness even when not named. LEAVING AND REMAINING
en: and-he-shall-be-forgiven, and-it-shall-be-forgiven, and-shall-be-forgiven | es: Y-será-perdonado, y-será-perdonado | fr: et-cela-devra-être-forgiven, et-devra-être-forgiven, et-il-devra-être-forgiven | de: und-er-soll-sein-forgiven, und-es-soll-sein-forgiven, und-soll-sein-forgiven Lev 4:20; Lev 4:26; Lev 4:31; Lev 4:35; Lev 5:10

3. prepositional suffix (to you) (1×) A single occurrence at Jeremiah 5:7 where the text form appears to be a prepositional phrase (lamed + 2fs suffix) rather than the verb salach. This is likely a parsing artifact in the data; the Qere reading supports a verbal form. It does not represent a genuine semantic sense of the root. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: you | es: a-ti? | fr: pardonner | de: vergeben Jer 5:7

סַלָּח H5546 Conj-w / Adj-ms (1×)
forgiving—ready to pardon and show mercy
This adjective describes God's character as fundamentally disposed toward forgiveness rather than judgment. The psalmist declares this quality alongside divine goodness in a prayer for mercy. The Hebrew emphasizes not just the capacity to forgive but the readiness and willingness to do so. Cross-language evidence shows consistent emphasis on the pardoning aspect, with Spanish capturing the agent noun 'perdonador' (one who pardons).

(1×) Divine attribute of being ready to forgive, applied to the Lord in Psalm 86:5. The term conveys not merely ability but disposition—God is characterized by a merciful stance toward human failure. Used alongside 'good' (טוֹב) to describe the Lord's essential nature. The grammatical form suggests a stable quality rather than momentary action. LEAVING AND REMAINING en: and-forgiving | es: y-perdonador | fr: et-pardonner | de: und-forgiving Ps 86:5

סְלִיחָה H5547 N-fp (3×)
forgiveness; pardon for sin or offense
This late Hebrew noun means forgiveness or pardon. Nehemiah 9:17 praises God as 'a God of forgivenesses' (plural of intensity)—abundantly forgiving despite Israel's rebellion. Psalm 130:4 declares 'with you there is forgiveness, that you may be feared'—divine pardon producing reverence, not presumption. Daniel 9:9 confesses 'to the Lord our God belong compassions and forgivenesses'—mercy and pardon as divine attributes. The plural forms in Nehemiah and Daniel emphasize abundant, repeated forgiveness. The word appears only in late biblical texts, reflecting post-exilic theological vocabulary developed through exile's harsh lessons about sin and mercy.

(3×) All three occurrences confess God's forgiving character in contexts of national sin. Nehemiah rehearses Israel's wilderness rebellion, contrasting it with God's patient forgiveness. The Psalmist pairs forgiveness with fear—divine pardon inspiring awe, not license. Daniel's prayer acknowledges that despite Judah's unfaithfulness, God remains characterized by forgivenesses. The plural forms (selichot/selichot) in Nehemiah and Daniel function as intensive abstracts—abundant forgiveness or multiple acts of pardon. Cross-linguistic renderings use 'forgiveness/perdón/pardon' terminology. The late dating suggests a community deeply aware of needing—and receiving—repeated divine pardon. FORGIVENESS PARDON
en: and-the-forgivenesses, forgivenesses, the-forgiveness | es: el-perdón, perdones, y-los-perdones | fr: [סליחות], et-pardon, le-pardon | de: [והסלחות], [סליחות], der-forgiveness Neh 9:17; Ps 130:4; Dan 9:9

סַלְכָה H5548 N-proper-fs (4×)
Salecah; a city on the eastern border of Bashan, modern Salkhad Salecah (or Salkhad) was a city marking the eastern boundary of the territory of Bashan, later allotted to Gad or Manasseh. It appears in Deuteronomy 3:10 and Joshua 12:5, 13:11 as a border marker, and in 1 Chronicles 5:11 in connection with Gad's territory. The site is identified with modern Salkhad (or Sarkhad), located on the southern spur of Jebel Hauran, about 63 miles due east of the Jordan River. The Moabite Stone also mentions a similar name (Nabataean צלחד).

(4×) A geographic proper name designating a city on Bashan's eastern frontier. Salecah appears in conquest and boundary lists (Deuteronomy 3:10, Joshua 12:5, 13:11) and tribal allotments (1 Chronicles 5:11). Transliterations are consistent: Salcah/Salecah/Salkhad, with some bracketing [סלכה]. Greek versions render as Σελχα or Ελχα. The identification with modern Salkhad on the Hauran plateau is well established, providing a rare case where biblical toponymy aligns clearly with modern geography. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Salcah, Salecah, Salkhah | es: Salca, y-en-Salca | fr: Salcah, Salecah, [סלכה] | de: Salcah, Salecah, [סלכה] Deut 3:10; Josh 12:5; Josh 13:11; 1Chr 5:11

סָלַל H5549 V-Piel-Imp-ms / 3fs (12×)
To raise up, build up a highway or path; by extension to exalt in praise; also to heap or pile up
A verb rooted in the physical act of raising earth to form a roadway or causeway. In Isaiah 57:14 and 62:10 it appears as an urgent imperative to prepare the way of the LORD by clearing stones and building up the road. The Piel and Hitpael stems extend the meaning into praise and self-exaltation: Psalm 68:4 calls worshippers to 'lift up a song' to God, while Exodus 9:17 describes Pharaoh 'exalting himself.' German 'aufschuetten' (to heap up) and Spanish 'allanad' (to level/prepare) together capture the dual physical and figurative range of this root.

1. build up, prepare (a road/highway) (8×) To cast up or build a highway by raising a causeway and clearing obstacles. The core Qal sense, commanding road preparation for divine approach (Isa 57:14; 62:10). Spanish 'allanad' (level it) and German 'aufschuetten' (heap up) reflect the physical labor of road construction. The passive participle in Proverbs 15:19 describes a well-built, 'prepared' path contrasted with the thorny way of the sluggard. LIFTING AND EXALTING

en: and-they-raise-up, and-they-raised, build-up | es: Allanad-, allanad, calzada | fr: et-ויסלו, élever, סללה | de: [ויסלו], [סללה], aufschuetten Job 19:12; Job 30:12; Prov 15:19; Isa 57:14

2. exalt, lift up, extol (3×) To lift up in praise or exalt, extending the physical 'raising' into the realm of honor and worship. Psalm 68:4 urges 'lift up a song to him who rides the clouds,' while Proverbs 4:8 commands 'prize her highly' of Wisdom. In Exodus 9:17, Pharaoh's self-exaltation (Hitpael) inverts the positive sense into defiant arrogance. Spanish 'ensalzala' (exalt her) and French 'elever' (raise/exalt) confirm the vertical metaphor. LIFTING AND EXALTING

en: exalting-yourself, lift-up-a-song, prize-her-highly | es: Ensálzala, exaltad, te-exaltas | fr: exalting-toi-même, élever, סלסלה-elle | de: [סלסלה], erheben-hinauf-ein-Lied, exalting-dich-selbst Exod 9:17; Ps 68:4; Prov 4:8

3. pile up, heap up (1×) To pile up or heap together material, a specialized application of the root's building-up sense directed at siege or destruction. In Jeremiah 50:26 the imperative commands piling up Babylon's stores for destruction. Spanish 'apiladla' (pile it up) precisely captures this narrowed, militaristic usage, distinct from road-building or praise. LIFTING AND EXALTING

en: pile-her-up | es: apiladla | fr: élever | de: aufschuetten Jer 50:26

סוֹלְלָה H5550 N-fs (11×)

Siege mound, siege ramp — an earthen embankment raised against city walls during military assault

The noun סוֹלְלָה (solelah) designates the earthen siege ramp or mound that ancient armies constructed to breach fortified cities. Attackers piled earth, rubble, and timber against the wall until soldiers and battering rams could reach the upper defenses. The word appears exclusively in military contexts: Joab builds one against Abel Beth-Maacah (2 Sam 20:15), the Assyrians threaten Jerusalem with one (2 Kgs 19:32; Isa 37:33), and Ezekiel's symbolic siege of Jerusalem features a mound (Ezek 4:2). Jeremiah uses it repeatedly for the Babylonian siege works around Jerusalem (Jer 6:6; 32:24; 33:4). Spanish 'terraplén/rampa de asedio' and English 'siege ramp' both convey the military engineering precisely.

siege mound, siege ramp (11×) An earthen ramp or embankment constructed against the exterior of a fortified city wall during siege operations, enabling attackers to bring battering rams and troops to wall height. Joab raises one against Abel Beth-Maacah (2 Sam 20:15), Sennacherib threatens but never builds one against Jerusalem (2 Kgs 19:32; Isa 37:33), Nebuchadnezzar's engineers construct them at Jerusalem (Jer 32:24; 33:4), and Ezekiel models one prophetically (Ezek 4:2; 21:27). Daniel 11:15 projects the image into apocalyptic military campaigns. Spanish 'terraplén' and German 'Belagerungswall' reflect the construction imagery. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: a-siege-mound, mound, siege-mound | es: las-rampas, los-terraplenes, rampa | fr: [הסללות], [סוללה], [סללה] | de: Belagerung-ramp, Belagerungsdamm, [הסללות] 2Sam 20:15; 2Kgs 19:32; Isa 37:33; Jer 6:6; Jer 32:24

סֻלָּם H5551 N-ms (1×)

ladder—structure for ascending and descending

The ladder appears in Jacob's famous vision at Bethel, where he saw a structure set on earth reaching to heaven with angels ascending and descending upon it. This single biblical occurrence became foundational for understanding the connection between heaven and earth, divine access, and the mediating role that Jacob's descendants would play. The term specifically denotes a constructed means of climbing, whether a simple ladder or more elaborate stairway.

(1×) A ladder or stairway structure in Jacob's dream at Bethel (Gen 28:12), serving as the pathway for angelic traffic between earth and heaven. All translation traditions render this consistently as 'ladder' or 'escalera/échelle/Leiter,' emphasizing the vertical access structure. The vision established Bethel as a place where heaven and earth meet. STAIRWAY STEPS

en: ladder | es: escalera | fr: échelle | de: eine-Leiter Gen 28:12

סַלְסְלָה H5552 N-fp (1×)

branches/baskets—disputed term in viticulture context

This rare term appears in Jeremiah's oracle comparing Israel to a vineyard, with textual uncertainty about its exact meaning. Ancient versions favored 'baskets' (for gathering grapes), while many modern scholars prefer 'shoots' or 'branches' based on context and comparative Semitic languages. The image involves a gleaner's hand returning to gather what remains, whether to strip branches again or to fill baskets with fruit. The ambiguity reflects the hapax legomenon status.

(1×) Either the branch-clusters or harvest baskets in a vineyard gleaning scene (Jer 6:9). The Hebrew noun appears only here, making precise definition difficult. Spanish opts for 'cestos' (baskets), while scholarly proposals favor 'shoots/branches' connecting to viticulture imagery. The context describes thorough gleaning as metaphor for divine judgment exhausting the people. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: branches | es: los-cestos | fr: [סלסלות] | de: [סלסלות] Jer 6:9

סֶלַע H5553 N-mp (59×)

A crag, cliff, or large rock formation; metaphorically, God as a secure refuge; also the Edomite city Sela (Petra).

Denotes a towering rock face or rugged cliff — the kind of imposing geological feature that dominates the Judean and Transjordanian landscape. In the Psalms and 2 Samuel, the word takes on a powerful devotional dimension: 'my rock' (סַלְעִי) becomes a title for God as an unshakable refuge, rendered 'mi peña' in Spanish and 'mon rocher' in French, both preserving the raw, craggy concreteness of the image. The famous incident at Meribah (Num 20:8–11) centers on this word — Moses is told to speak to the סֶלַע, but strikes it instead. Once the term also serves as the proper name Sela, the cliff fortress later known as Petra.

1. rock, cliff (physical feature) (43×) The primary, literal sense: a large rock formation, cliff face, or crag as a physical geological feature. This is the default meaning across most occurrences (43x), covering everything from the rock at Meribah that Moses struck (Num 20:8–11) to the crags where fugitives hide (1 Sam 23:25) and where tombs are hewn (Isa 22:16). The multilingual evidence is remarkably consistent — English 'rock,' Spanish 'peña/roca,' French 'rocher,' German 'Fels' — all pointing to a massive, immovable stone formation rather than a small stone or pebble. ROCK AND CLIFF

en: rock, rock-of, the-rock | es: la-peña, la-roca, la-roca-de | fr: le-rocher, rocher, rocher-de | de: Fels, Fels-von, [סלע] Num 20:8; Num 20:10; Num 20:11

2. rocks, crags (plural terrain) (9×) The plural form referring to rocky cliffs or crags as rugged terrain features, often as places of concealment or inaccessible refuges (9x). In Isa 2:21 people flee 'into the rocks' (בַּסְּלָעִים) for shelter from divine judgment, while Ps 104:18 names the crags as home for rock badgers. Spanish 'peñascos' and German 'Felsen' both capture the wild, plural landscape sense — craggy terrain rather than a single formation. ROCK AND CLIFF

en: and-in-the-rocks, of-cliffs, rocks | es: las-peñas, los-peñascos, peñas | fr: et-dans-le-rochers, rocher, rochers | de: Fels, Felsen, und-in-der-Felsen 1Sam 13:6; 1Kgs 19:11; Ps 104:18; Isa 2:21; Isa 7:19

3. rock (divine epithet) (6×) A striking metaphorical use where 'rock' becomes a divine epithet expressing God's role as an impregnable fortress and personal refuge (6x). Typically appears with possessive suffixes — 'my rock' (סַלְעִי) in 2 Sam 22:2 and Ps 18:2 — standing parallel to other fortress-images. The Spanish 'mi peña' and French 'mon rocher' preserve this intimate, devotional address. Distinguished from the more common צוּר by its emphasis on craggy height and inaccessibility rather than foundational solidity. ROCK AND CLIFF en: And-his-rock, my-rock | es: mi-peña, mi-roca, peña-mía | fr: et-rocher, mon-rocher, rocher | de: mein-Fels, und-Fels 2Sam 22:2; Ps 18:2; Ps 31:3; Ps 42:9; Ps 71:3

4. Sela (proper noun) (1×) The proper noun Sela, identifying the Edomite fortress-city later known as Petra (1x, Judg 1:36). The name derives transparently from the common noun — a city carved into and defined by its towering rock cliffs. English renders it as 'Sela,' while German and French transliterate similarly, confirming the proper-name reading. ROCK AND CLIFF

en: from-the-Sela | es: desde-la-Roca | fr: de-le-Sela | de: von-der-Sela Judg 1:36

סֶלַע H5554 N-proper-fs (3×)

Sela, a fortress city in Edom; possibly Petra

This place name designates a fortified site in Edom, traditionally identified with Petra (Greek 'petra' = rock) though modern scholars debate this. Judges 1:36 marks it as the Amorite border. Second Kings 14:7 records Amaziah capturing 'Sela' in battle and renaming it Joktheel—a rare instance of a conqueror renaming a city. Isaiah 16:1 uses it geographically: 'send the lamb to the ruler of the land, from Sela through the wilderness.' The name means 'rock' or 'cliff,' fitting the region's dramatic geology. Whether the famous rose-red city or another Edomite stronghold, Sela represents Edom's mountain fastnesses—strategic heights thought impregnable.

(3×) The three references span historical conquest (2 Kings 14:7), tribal boundary (Judges 1:36), and prophetic geography (Isaiah 16:1). Amaziah's victory and renaming demonstrate Judahite expansion into Edomite territory. Isaiah's reference suggests Sela as a known diplomatic or trade location—a place from which tribute might be sent. Cross-linguistic renderings mostly transliterate (Sela), though Spanish once tries 'la-Roca' (the-Rock), recognizing the name's meaning. Greek versions consistently use 'petra,' connecting the name to stone. The site's identification remains debated, but its significance as a major Edomite stronghold is clear. ROCK AND CLIFF

en: Sela, from-Sela, the-Sela | es: Sela, desde-Sela, la-Roca | fr: [מסלע], [סלע], le-Sela | de: [מסלע], [סלע], der-Sela 2Kgs 14:7; Isa 16:1; Isa 42:11

מַחְלְקוֹת H5555 N-proper-fs (2×)

Sela Hammahlekoth—a place name meaning 'Rock of Divisions' or 'Rock of Escape,' where David evaded Saul

Sela Hammahlekoth (literally 'Rock of Divisions' or 'Rock of Escape') is a place name appearing in 1 Samuel 23:28. It marks the location where Saul broke off his pursuit of David because news arrived that the Philistines had invaded. The name commemorates this moment of sudden separation or escape. The first element means 'rock' or 'crag,' while the second element may derive from a root meaning 'smooth,' 'slippery,' or 'divisions.' Some interpret it as 'the Slippery Rock' (hard to climb), others as 'Rock of Divisions' (where pursuer and pursued were divided). The name captures the dramatic moment when David narrowly escaped Saul's closing trap.

(2×) A place name appearing twice in 1 Samuel 23:28 (both in the same verse), identifying the rock where Saul and David were separated when urgent news diverted Saul's pursuit. The name literally means something like 'Rock of Divisions/Escape/Smoothness,' commemorating the narrow escape. The multilingual evidence shows varied interpretation: 'Rock of Escape' (English), 'peña de las divisiones' (Spanish = rock of divisions), reflecting different understandings of the name's second element, though all recognize it as the site of David's providential deliverance from Saul's pursuit. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Rock-of, the-Escape | es: las-divisiones, peña-de | fr: Rock-de, le-Escape | de: Rock-von, der-Escape 1Sam 23:28

סֶלְעָם H5556 Art / N-ms (1×)

locust—edible winged insect, possibly bald locust species

This term designates a specific type of clean locust permitted for food under Levitical law. The name likely derives from a root meaning 'swallow' or 'consume,' fitting the locust's voracious reputation. Leviticus 11:22 lists it among four locust varieties that Israelites could eat, alongside the arbeh, hargol, and hagab. The precise species identification remains uncertain, though 'bald locust' suggests distinctive appearance features that ancient observers could recognize.

(1×) A kosher locust species mentioned in the Levitical dietary code (Lev 11:22), one of four permitted flying insects. Etymology suggests connection to 'swallowing/consuming,' reflecting the insect's destructive feeding habits. Cross-language evidence shows 'bald locust/langostón' emphasizing a distinguishing physical feature, possibly related to wing sheaths or head shape that differentiated it from other edible locusts. LOCUSTS AND SWARMS

en: the-bald-locust | es: el-langostón | fr: le-bald-sauterelle | de: der-bald-locust Lev 11:22

סָלַף H5557 V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (7×)

Twist, pervert, overthrow (Piel); to distort justice, subvert moral order, or ruin the way of the wicked.

A Piel verb meaning to twist, pervert, or overturn, used in both legal and wisdom contexts. In the Torah, it describes how a bribe 'perverts' the words of the righteous (Exod 23:8; Deut 16:19), a principle so vital it is stated twice. In wisdom literature, it takes on a broader moral dimension: folly 'subverts' a person's way (Prov 19:3), wickedness 'overthrows' the sinner (Prov 13:6), and God Himself 'overturns' the plans of the treacherous (Prov 22:12). Job 12:19 extends it to the cosmic realm where God 'overthrows' even powerful leaders.

twist, pervert, overthrow (Piel) (7×) To twist, pervert, or overturn in either a judicial or moral sense. The legal usage appears in Exod 23:8 and Deut 16:19 where a bribe 'perverts' (yesallef) the cause of the righteous – the Spanish 'trastorna' and French 'perverts' both capture this distortion of justice. The wisdom usage in Proverbs broadens the scope: Prov 19:3 says a person's own folly 'subverts' his path; Prov 13:6 declares wickedness 'overthrows' the sinner; and Prov 22:12 affirms that the LORD 'subverts' the affairs of the treacherous. In Job 12:19 God leads priests away stripped and 'overthrows' the mighty, using the same verb for divine reversal of human power. CROOKED PERVERTED

en: and-perverts, but-he-overthrows, he-overthrows | es: arruina, derriba., pero-él-trastorna | fr: et-perverts, et-renverser, renverser | de: [ויסלף], [יסלף], [מסלף] Exod 23:8; Deut 16:19; Job 12:19; Prov 13:6; Prov 19:3

סֶלֶף H5558 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)

perversity, crookedness—devious or twisted behavior, especially moral corruption or deceit

This noun means perversity, crookedness, or devious dealing—moral twistedness as opposed to straightness and integrity. Proverbs uses it to describe character defects: the crookedness of the treacherous destroys them (11:3), and perversity in the tongue breaks the spirit (15:4). The root conveys the idea of something twisted or bent out of true shape, applied morally to describe deceitful, corrupt behavior. In both Proverbs passages, this crookedness is contrasted with integrity and wholesome speech, and is shown to lead to destruction and brokenness. The term captures the deviousness that comes from abandoning moral straightness.

(2×) Denotes perversity, crookedness, or devious dealing in moral character or speech. Proverbs 11:3 states 'the perversity of the treacherous destroys them,' showing how moral twistedness leads to ruin. Proverbs 15:4 contrasts wholesome and perverse tongue—'perversity in it breaks the spirit.' The multilingual glosses uniformly identify this as 'perversity/crookedness' (English), 'perversidad' (Spanish = perversity), recognizing the moral dimension of being twisted, bent, or devious rather than straight and honest, with devastating consequences for those who practice such crooked dealing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: but-perversity, but-the-crookedness-of | es: y-perversidad, y-perversidad-de | fr: et-וסלף | de: [וסלף] Prov 11:3; Prov 15:4

סְלֵק H5559 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (5×)

to come up, ascend, arise (Aramaic); of physical or figurative rising

An Aramaic verb meaning to come up or ascend, appearing exclusively in Daniel and Ezra. It describes the four great beasts rising from the sea in Daniel's vision (Dan 7:3), the little horn coming up among the ten (Dan 7:8, 20), and thoughts arising in Nebuchadnezzar's mind on his bed (Dan 2:29). In Ezra 4:12, it reports that Jews have 'come up' from exile to Jerusalem. The Spanish renderings—'subiendo,' 'subieron,' 'subió'—consistently reflect upward movement, whether literal or figurative.

(5×) To come up, ascend, or arise, used of both physical and visionary movement in Aramaic contexts. Beasts ascend from the sea (Dan 7:3), a horn comes up among others (Dan 7:8, 20), exiles come up to Jerusalem (Ezra 4:12), and thoughts arise in the mind (Dan 2:29). Spanish 'subir' (subiendo/subieron/subió) uniformly captures the upward directionality. The Haph'el causative form means 'to lift up' or 'bring up' (Dan 3:22; 6:24), extending the same spatial logic. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: came-up, coming-up | es: subiendo, subieron, subió | fr: [סלקו], [סלקן], [סלקת] | de: [סלקו], [סלקן], [סלקת] Ezra 4:12; Dan 2:29; Dan 7:3; Dan 7:8; Dan 7:20

סֹלֶת H5560 Prep-m / N-fsc (53×)

Fine flour (semolina), the highest-quality wheat flour used in grain offerings, temple ritual, and elite cuisine.

A premium grade of finely milled wheat flour, more refined than ordinary qemach. In the sacrificial system solet is the required flour for nearly every grain offering described in Leviticus 2, mixed with oil and frankincense. Outside ritual contexts, it appears as a luxury food: Abraham served it to his divine visitors (Gen 18:6), Solomon's household consumed it daily (1 Kgs 5:2), and Ezekiel 16:13 lists it among Jerusalem's extravagant foods. During the Aramean siege of Samaria, a seah of fine flour sold for a shekel – a famine price that underscored its usual costliness (2 Kgs 7:1). The Greek Septuagint renders it semidalis, the Latin simila, and the multilingual evidence consistently points to 'fine flour' across all target languages.

fine flour (53×) Finely ground wheat flour of superior quality, used predominantly in Levitical grain offerings (Lev 2:1-7; Num 28-29) and also in elite domestic hospitality. The multilingual glosses – English fine flour, Spanish flor de harina, French fine farine, German fein Mehl – all highlight the refined, premium character distinguishing solet from coarser qemach. Abraham's offering of solet to his angelic guests (Gen 18:6) and Ezekiel's catalogue of Jerusalem's luxuries (Ezek 16:13, 19) show that this flour connoted both sacred worthiness and social prestige. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: fine-flour | es: de-flor-de-harina, flor-de-harina | fr: fin-farine, fin-flour, fine-farine | de: fein-Mehl Exod 29:2; Exod 29:40; Lev 2:1; Lev 2:2; Lev 2:4

סַם H5561 N-mp (16×)

Spices, aromatic substances — fragrant ingredients used in sacred incense and anointing oil

This masculine plural noun refers to aromatic spices or fragrant substances used exclusively in the sacred worship context of Israel's tabernacle and temple. The word appears only in Priestly and Chronistic texts, always in connection with the preparation of holy incense (qeṭōret hassammîm, Exod 25:6; 30:7, 34; 31:11; 35:8, 28; 37:29; Lev 4:7; 16:12; Num 4:16) or the anointing oil. The spices included stacte, onycha, galbanum, and frankincense (Exod 30:34). Their restriction to cultic use highlights the sacred boundary between common and holy in Israelite worship.

spices, aromatic substances (16×) Fragrant aromatic substances designated for sacred cultic purposes, specifically the compounding of tabernacle incense and anointing oil. The term appears only in Priestly legislation and Chronicles, always in the construct chain qeṭōret hassammîm ('incense of spices') or in lists of tabernacle materials (Exod 25:6; 30:34; 2 Chr 2:3; 13:11). French aromates and Spanish especias capture the general sense, while the Hebrew restricts these spices to ritually consecrated formulations. The four named ingredients — stacte, onycha, galbanum, and frankincense (Exod 30:34) — were blended in equal parts. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: spices, the-fragrant-spices, the-spices | es: especias, las-especias | fr: [סמים], aromates, le-aromates | de: Gewuerze, [סמים], der-Gewuerze Exod 25:6; Exod 30:7; Exod 30:34; Exod 31:11

סַמְגַּר נְבוֹ H5562 N-proper-ms (2×)

Samgar-Nebo—possibly a title or name of a Babylonian official, though the text may be corrupt

Samgar-Nebo appears in Jeremiah 39:3 in a list of Babylonian officials who entered Jerusalem after its fall. However, the text is almost certainly corrupt at this point. Most scholars believe 'Samgar' is a dittography (accidental repetition) of part of the preceding title 'Rab-mag,' and that 'Nebo' should be joined to the following name to read 'Nebushazban,' an officer known from verse 13. The Septuagint's confused rendering supports the view that the text was already problematic in antiquity. If the traditional text is retained, it would represent an otherwise unknown Babylonian official with a name incorporating 'Nebo,' the name of a Babylonian god.

(2×) A problematic text in Jeremiah 39:3, appearing twice in the verse, traditionally read as a Babylonian official's name 'Samgar-Nebo.' However, scholarly consensus considers this a textual error: 'Samgar' likely arose from dittography of 'Rab-mag,' and 'Nebo' should connect to 'Nebushazban' in the next phrase. The Septuagint shows confusion, confirming ancient textual difficulty. The multilingual glosses maintain the traditional reading (Samgar Nevo), but the historical identity remains uncertain, possibly representing no actual person but rather a scribal accident in the transmission of the list of Babylonian commanders. NEBO PLACE NAME

en: Nevo, Samgar | es: Nevo, Samgar | fr: [נבו], [סמגר] | de: [נבו], [סמגר] Jer 39:3

סְמָדַר H5563 N-ms (3×)

blossom of the grape vine; flowers appearing before fruit develops

This noun denotes the blossom or flower of the grapevine at the earliest stage of fruit-bearing—when tiny grape clusters first appear. Song of Songs uses it three times in romantic-agricultural imagery. 'The vines are in blossom' (2:13) signals spring's arrival and awakening love. 'Catch the foxes...that ruin the vineyards, for our vineyards are in blossom' (2:15) warns against threats to young love like predators threatening tender vines. 'Let us see whether...the grape blossoms have opened' (7:12, English v.13) invites inspection of spring's progress—literal viticulture doubling as romantic metaphor. The word captures that delicate moment when vines flower before fruit forms.

(3×) All three uses appear in Song of Songs' extended vineyard metaphor for love and courtship. The vine in blossom represents love at its most tender, vulnerable stage—full of promise but not yet mature. Song 2:13's 'vines in blossom' parallels 'fig tree ripening'—both early-season signs of approaching fruitfulness. The foxes (2:15) threaten specifically the blossoming vines—the most vulnerable moment. Song 7:12 includes grape blossoms among signs of spring's advance. Cross-linguistic renderings use 'blossom/brote/fleur/Bluete'—flowering terminology. The agricultural precision (not buds, not grapes, but the bloom between) heightens the metaphor's romantic delicacy. FLOWERS AND BLOSSOMS

en: blossom, the-blossom | es: el-brote, en-cierne | fr: en-fleur, en-fleur., le-bourgeon, | de: Bluete Song 2:13; Song 2:15; Song 7:12

סָמַךְ H5564 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (48×)

To lean upon, lay hands on, support, sustain; covers ritual hand-laying, divine sustenance, physical leaning, and established firmness.

At first glance samakh seems to denote simple physical contact — placing one's hands on a sacrificial animal or leaning against a wall. But the word carries an extraordinary theological depth: the same verb that describes the offerer pressing his hands on the head of the burnt offering (Lev 1:4) also describes God 'sustaining' the righteous (Ps 3:5) and a mind 'stayed' on God being kept in perfect peace (Isa 26:3). The multilingual evidence is revealing: Spanish uses imponer (las manos) for ritual hand-laying but sostener for divine support, marking two genuinely distinct semantic frames. Arabic samaka ('to be high, raise up') retains a related sense of elevation and support, while Aramaic cognate semakh preserves the core meaning of physical propping or sustaining.

1. lay hands on (23×) To lay or place hands upon the head of a sacrificial animal or upon a person for ordination, blessing, or commissioning. This is by far the most frequent use (23 occurrences), concentrated in Leviticus and Numbers. The worshipper 'lays his hand' on the burnt offering (Lev 1:4; 3:2, 8, 13; 4:4), transferring identification or sin symbolically. Moses 'lays his hands' on Joshua to commission him (Num 27:18, 23; Deut 34:9). Spanish imponer and poner ('to place upon') consistently mark this as a ritual-gestural action, and the Hebrew construction samakh yad al ('lay hand upon') is virtually formulaic in the Priestly source. PLACING AND LAYING
en: and-he-laid, and-he-shall-lay, and-laid | es: Y-apoyará, Y-puso, impuso | fr: [ויסמכו], et—poser, et-devra-se-coucha | de: [ויסמכו], laid, und-er-laid Exod 29:10; Exod 29:15; Exod 29:19; Lev 1:4; Lev 3:2

2. sustain or support a person (7×) To sustain, support, or uphold a person — typically with God as subject providing strength, maintenance, or emotional encouragement. At Ps 3:5 David declares 'the LORD sustains me'; at Ps 119:116 the psalmist pleads 'Sustain me according to your word'; Song 2:5 asks to be 'sustained with raisin cakes.' Spanish sostener and sustentar both select care-giving vocabulary, while German stutzen captures the idea of propping up someone who might otherwise fall. Gen 27:37 extends this to material provision: Isaac tells Esau he has 'sustained' Jacob with grain and wine. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: I-sustained-him, sustain-me, sustains-me | es: Sostenedme, Susténtame, lo-sostuvo | fr: Je-sustained-lui, Soutenez-moi, s'appuyer | de: [סמכוני], [סמכתהו], [סמכתני] Gen 27:37; Ps 3:5; Ps 51:12; Ps 119:116; Song 2:5

3. lean on or rely upon (7×) To lean upon something or someone for physical or figurative support, reliance, or dependence. Samson 'leans' on the pillars of the Philistine temple (Judg 16:29); Hezekiah warns against 'leaning' on Egypt as a broken reed (2 Kgs 18:21; Isa 36:6). The shift from active 'supporting' (sense 2) to the subject's own 'relying' is clear in the multilingual data: Spanish apoyarse (reflexive, 'to support oneself upon') versus sostener (transitive, 'to support another'). The theological dimension emerges in Ps 71:6 where the psalmist has 'leaned upon' God from birth. LEAN RELY TRUST
en: I-have-leaned, and-he-leans, and-leaned | es: me-he-apoyado, se-apoyan, se-apoyará | fr: [ויסמכו], et-leaned, et-soutenir | de: [ויסמכו], [וסמך], [יסמך] Judg 16:29; 2Kgs 18:21; 2Chr 32:8; Ps 71:6; Isa 36:6

4. one who upholds (6×) The participial form describing one who upholds, supports, or sustains as an ongoing agent. Ps 145:14 declares 'The LORD upholds all who fall'; Ps 37:17 promises that 'the LORD upholds the righteous'; Isa 63:5 asks 'Is there no one to uphold?' Spanish sostiene (present continuous) and the participial framing in multiple languages confirm that this is a characterizing, habitual description rather than a punctual action. Ps 54:4 places God 'among those who uphold my life,' using the same participial construction. SEIZING AND SNATCHING
en: but-upholds, is-among-upholders-of, one-to-uphold | es: Sostiene, entre-los-que-sostienen, los-que-sostienen-a | fr: dans-soutenir, et-soutenir, s'appuyer | de: [סומך], [סמכי], aber-upholds Ps 37:17; Ps 37:24; Ps 54:4; Ps 145:14; Isa 63:5

5. firm or established (3×) The passive participle describing a state of being firm, established, or steadfast. At Isa 26:3 a mind 'stayed' (samukh) on God is kept in perfect peace; Ps 111:8 says God's precepts are 'established' forever; Ps 112:8 describes the righteous person whose heart is 'steadfast.' Spanish firme and afirmados ('made firm') reveal the resultative stative meaning, and the parallelism in Ps 112:8 — 'His heart is firm (samukh), he will not be afraid' — confirms a settled condition rather than an ongoing action. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY
en: established, steadfast, sustained | es: Afirmados, Sostenido, firme | fr: s'appuyer, soutenir | de: [סמוך], gegründet, sustained Ps 111:8; Ps 112:8; Isa 26:3

6. press upon or lie heavy (2×) To press down upon or lie heavily on something, indicating physical weight or oppressive pressure. At Ps 88:7 the psalmist laments 'your wrath lies heavy upon me,' and at Ezek 24:2 Nebuchadnezzar 'has laid siege' (pressed himself) against Jerusalem. The shift from supportive leaning (sense 3) to oppressive pressing represents a dark reversal of the verb's usual valence, confirmed by Spanish apoyarse in a hostile context and the siege-warfare framing in Ezekiel. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: has-laid-siege, lies-heavy | es: se-apoyó | fr: soutenir | de: [סמך], lies-schwer Ps 88:7; Ezek 24:2

סְמַכְיָהוּ H5565 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Semakhyahu—Korahite gatekeeper, name meaning 'Yahweh has sustained'
Semakhyahu served as one of the Korahite gatekeepers in the temple service during the post-exilic period. His name is theophoric, combining the verbal root meaning 'to sustain/support' with the divine name Yahweh, thus declaring 'Yahweh has sustained.' Such names often commemorated divine help during difficult circumstances, perhaps the family's survival through exile. The Septuagint renders the name with typical Greek phonetic adjustments.

(1×) Personal name of a Levitical gatekeeper from the Korahite division (1 Chr 26:7). The theophoric name means 'Yahweh has sustained,' reflecting covenant theology in naming practices. Spanish renders it as 'Semaquías' with standard adaptation of the Yahweh element. The role indicates trusted responsibility for temple access and security. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Semakhyahu | es: y-Semaquías | fr: [וסמכיהו] | de: [וסמכיהו] 1Chr 26:7

סֶמֶל H5566 Art / N-ms (5×)
image, idol figure, statue set up for worship or veneration
A noun denoting a carved or sculpted image, possibly originating as the name of a foreign deity before becoming a generic term for idol-statues. In Deuteronomy 4:16, Moses warns against making a 'pesel temunat kol-semel'—a carved image in the form of any figure—linking it to the broader prohibition against idolatry. Manasseh places such an idol in the Temple itself (2 Chr 33:7), later removing it in repentance (2 Chr 33:15). Ezekiel encounters the provocative 'image of jealousy' at the Temple's north gate (Ezek 8:3, 5), an idol so offensive it arouses God's jealous anger. The Phoenician cognate confirms its use as a standard term for cult images.

(5×) An idol-image or cultic statue, a physical representation set up for worship that provokes divine jealousy. Deuteronomy 4:16 prohibits making any such figure; Manasseh installs one in the Temple (2 Chr 33:7) and later removes it (2 Chr 33:15). Ezekiel 8:3, 5 describes the 'semel of jealousy' at the Temple gate. English 'image/idol,' Spanish 'ídolo/imagen,' and French 'image/figure' all converge on the sense of a physical cult object. The Phoenician cognate semel/semelet confirms widespread Northwest Semitic usage for divine representations. IDOLS AND IMAGES
en: figure, image-of, the-idol | es: el-ídolo, imagen-de, ídolo | fr: [הסמל], figure, image | de: [הסמל], [סמל], figure Deut 4:16; 2Chr 33:7; 2Chr 33:15; Ezek 8:3; Ezek 8:5

סִמְן H5567 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)
in its place/appointed—disputed term for grain positioning
This participial form appears in Isaiah's agricultural description but presents significant textual difficulties. The Masoretic text suggests grain planted 'in its appointed place' or 'in a designated area,' but the Septuagint lacks this word entirely, and many scholars view it as accidental repetition (dittography) from the preceding word. If original, it would describe careful agricultural planning where barley receives its proper location. The uncertainty makes translation tentative.

(1×) Likely 'in its designated place/portion,' describing organized planting of barley (Isa 28:25), though textual integrity is disputed. The Niphal participle suggests something 'appointed' or 'designated.' However, absence from the Septuagint and similarity to adjacent word 'kussemet' (spelt) lead many scholars to consider it a scribal duplication rather than original text. Translations show uncertainty with bracketing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-its-place | es: en-su-lugar-señalado | fr: [נסמן] | de: [נסמן] Isa 28:25

סָמַר H5568 V-Piel-Imperf-3fs (2×)

to bristle up, to stand on end (of hair or flesh from fear or dread)

This verb captures the visceral physical reaction when fear grips the body—hair standing on end, flesh 'creeping' with dread. The Hebrew is rare, appearing only twice, but both contexts involve an encounter with God's terrifying majesty. In Psalm 119:120, the psalmist confesses that his very flesh bristles from fear of God, while in Job 4:15, Eliphaz describes a spirit passing before his face, making the hair of his flesh stand up in terror.

(2×) Used in both occurrences to describe the physical response of hair or flesh standing erect due to overwhelming fear or dread, particularly in contexts of divine encounter. The Spanish 'se-erizó' (stood on end) and English 'made-stand-up' capture the involuntary bodily reaction, while 'trembles' reflects the emotional state. Job 4:15 depicts a supernatural encounter, while Psalm 119:120 expresses reverent fear before God's commands. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: made-stand-up, trembles | es: Se-erizó, se-erizaron | fr: se-dresser, תסמר | de: [תסמר], zittert Job 4:15; Ps 119:120

סָמָר H5569 Adj-ms (1×)

bristling—rough, standing on end, used of locusts

This adjective describes a distinctive type of locust in Jeremiah's oracle against Babylon. The 'bristling' quality likely refers to the horn-like sheaths that enclose the wings during the pupal stage, giving the creature a rough, spiky appearance. Some interpreters connect this to the aggressive, formidable nature of invading locust swarms. The term appears only once, specifically characterizing the locusts summoned to devastate Babylon as divine judgment.

(1×) Descriptive term for a locust type characterized by bristling or rough appearance (Jer 51:27). Scholars connect this to the wing-sheath structures visible in the pupal stage, creating a spiky look. The adjective intensifies the threatening imagery of military invasion compared to locust devastation. Spanish 'erizadas' (bristled/spiked) captures the standing-on-end quality of the creature's features. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: bristling | es: erizadas | fr: [סמר] | de: [סמר] Jer 51:27

סְנַאָה H5570 Art / N-proper-ms (3×)

Senaah or Hassenaah; a family name in post-exilic Judah

(3×) Two occurrences are in census lists (Ezra 2:35, Nehemiah 7:38), documenting one of the larger returning groups. The third (Nehemiah 3:3) identifies their role in wall reconstruction—specifically building the Fish Gate. The variation between 'Senaah' and 'Hassenaah' (with definite article) may indicate different scribal traditions or the article's incorporation into the name. Cross-linguistic renderings simply transliterate (Senaá, Hasenaá, Sénaah). If this is indeed a family name, it's one of the more numerous post-exilic clans; if a social descriptor, it marks out a significant portion of the restoration community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hassenaah, Senaah | es: Hasenaá, Senaá | fr: [הסנאה], [סנאה] | de: [הסנאה], [סנאה] Ezra 2:35; Neh 3:3; Neh 7:38

סַנְבַלַּט H5571 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (10×)

Sanballat the Horonite; the Samaritan governor who led opposition to Nehemiah's rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls.

The Akkadian-origin name (Sin-uballit, 'Sin has given life') of the governor of Samaria who became Nehemiah's chief adversary. Sanballat appears exclusively in the book of Nehemiah, where he mocks the rebuilding effort (Neh 2:10, 19), conspires with Tobiah and Geshem against the builders (Neh 4:1, 7; 6:1-2), and attempts to lure Nehemiah into a trap (Neh 6:5, 12, 14). His daughter married into the high-priestly family, prompting Nehemiah's expulsion of the offender (Neh 13:28). The name's Babylonian etymology reflects the cosmopolitan character of Persian-period Samaria.

Sanballat (personal name) (10×) The proper name Sanballat, designating the Horonite governor of Samaria who persistently opposed Nehemiah's restoration of Jerusalem. His opposition takes multiple forms across the narrative: ridicule and anger (Neh 2:10, 19; 4:1), military conspiracy with Tobiah and Geshem (Neh 4:7; 6:1-2), deceptive invitations (Neh 6:5), and infiltration through intermarriage with the priestly family (Neh 13:28). English, Spanish, French, and German all render the name consistently as 'Sanballat'/'Sanbalat,' preserving the Akkadian-derived form (Sin-uballit, 'the moon-god has given life'). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sanballat, and-Sanballat, and-to-Sanballat | es: Sanbalat, a-Sanbalat, de-Sanbalat | fr: Sanballat, et-Sanballat, et-zu-Sanballat | de: Sanballat, [ולסנבלט], und-Sanballat Neh 2:10; Neh 2:19; Neh 4:1; Neh 4:7; Neh 6:1

סְנֶה H5572 Art / N-ms (6×)

A thorny bush or bramble; the burning bush from which God spoke to Moses at Horeb.

A masculine noun referring to a thorny bush, most likely a blackberry bramble (rubus fruticosus), famous as the bush that burned without being consumed when God appeared to Moses at Mount Horeb. All six occurrences cluster in Exodus 3:2-4, where Moses turns aside to see the 'great sight' of the bush (seneh) aflame yet unharmed, and Deuteronomy 33:16 invokes 'the one who dwelt in the bush' as a blessing formula. The word's concentration in this single theophany makes it virtually a proper noun in Hebrew consciousness. Spanish 'zarza' (bramble) and German 'Busch' (bush) both identify it as a common thorny shrub – the theological significance lies in what happened at it, not in the plant itself.

the bush (6×) A thorny bush or bramble, identified as the site of God's appearance to Moses at Horeb. Exodus 3:2-4 uses the word five times in rapid succession as Moses observes the bush burning without being consumed, approaches it, and hears God's voice from within it. Deuteronomy 33:16 recalls this theophany in Moses' final blessing, invoking 'the favor of the one dwelling in the bush.' The likely identification is the blackberry bramble (rubus fruticosus), a common thorny shrub of the Sinai region. Spanish 'zarza' (which also gives 'zarzamora,' blackberry) and French 'buisson' (bush, as in 'buisson ardent,' burning bush) preserve the botanical ordinariness of the plant that became Scripture's most famous shrub. BUSH SHRUB PLANT

en: and-the-bush, the-bush | es: la-zarza, y-la-zarza | fr: et-le-buisson, le-buisson, le-bush | de: der-Busch, der-bush, und-der-Busch Exod 3:2; Exod 3:3; Exod 3:4

סְנֵה H5573 N-proper-fs (1×)

Seneh—cliff name, possibly meaning 'thorny'

Seneh was one of two prominent rocky crags that formed a natural pass between Michmash and Geba. Jonathan and his armor-bearer famously climbed between these two cliffs—Seneh and Bozez—to launch their daring raid on the Philistine garrison. The name may derive from a word for 'thorn' or 'thorny bush,' suggesting the rugged, inhospitable terrain. This geographical marker became associated with one of Israel's great military victories through faith and courage.

(1×) Proper name of a cliff or rocky crag opposite Bozez in the pass between Michmash and Geba (1 Sam 14:4). The site was central to Jonathan's attack on the Philistine garrison. Etymology possibly connects to 'thorny,' describing the harsh terrain. Translations consistently transliterate as Seneh/Sené, preserving the place name without translation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Seneh | es: Sené | fr: Seneh | de: Seneh 1Sam 14:4

סְנוּאָה H5574 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)
Senuah (personal name); father or ancestor of Judahite leaders in post-exilic Jerusalem
This personal name appears in genealogies of post-exilic Jerusalem, specifically in lists of those who resettled the city after the Babylonian captivity. The name occurs with the definite article (ha-Senuah) in both passages, suggesting it may be a clan or family designation. 1 Chronicles 9:7 and Nehemiah 11:9 record Judahite leaders whose lineage traced through 'the son of ha-Senuah,' indicating this was a recognized family line in the restored community.

(2×) A proper name in genealogical lists, appearing as 'ha-Senuah' (with the article) in both occurrences. The parallel passages in Chronicles and Nehemiah identify this as an ancestral name in the lineage of post-exilic Judahite leaders. Greek versions transliterate it variously as Asana, Asenna, Aana, suggesting uncertainty about the original pronunciation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ha-Senuah, ha-Senuah | es: Hasenua, el-Senua | fr: [הסנאה], [הסנואה] | de: [הסנאה], [הסנואה] 1Chr 9:7; Neh 11:9

סַנְוֵרִים H5575 Prep-b (3×)
sudden blindness; miraculous loss of sight as divine judgment
This plural intensive noun denotes sudden, supernatural blindness—a miraculous striking of the eyes. Genesis 19:11 describes angels smiting the men of Sodom 'with blindness, both small and great, so that they wore themselves out groping for the door'—judicial blindness preventing their assault. Second Kings 6:18 records Elisha's prayer: 'Strike this people with blindness,' and God struck the Aramean army 'with blindness' (mentioned twice)—temporary disorientation that allowed Israel's escape. In all cases, this is not natural blindness but sudden, supernatural vision-loss sent as judgment or protection. The plural form suggests intense or complete blindness—not mere dimming but total disorientation.

(3×) All three instances involve miraculous intervention against enemies of God's people. Sodom's men are struck blind to protect Lot's angelic visitors—they grope helplessly, unable to find the door despite surrounding the house. The Aramean army's blinding (2 Kings 6:18, twice) is explicitly temporary—Elisha later asks God to restore their sight—functioning as strategic confusion rather than permanent disability. Cross-linguistic renderings use 'blindness/ceguera/aveuglement/Blindheit' consistently. The sudden, miraculous nature distinguishes this from ordinary blindness—it's a divine weapon, a protective curse, leaving the afflicted groping and helpless before they can harm God's servants. BLINDNESS PHYSICAL SPIRITUAL
en: with-blindness | es: con-ceguera | fr: avec-aveuglement | de: mit-Blindheit, mit-blindness Gen 19:11; 2Kgs 6:18

סַנְחֵרִיב H5576 N-proper-ms (13×)
Sennacherib; king of Assyria (705–681 BCE) who invaded Judah during Hezekiah's reign.
The Akkadian name Sin-ahhe-eriba means 'Sin (the moon god) has replaced the brothers,' reflecting Assyrian royal naming conventions. Sennacherib succeeded his father Sargon II and is remembered in biblical history primarily for his campaign against Judah in 701 BCE (2 Kgs 18:13–19:37; Isa 36–37; 2 Chr 32). His siege of Jerusalem ended dramatically when the angel of the LORD struck down 185,000 Assyrian troops in a single night. Sennacherib was later assassinated by his own sons while worshiping in the temple of his god Nisroch (2 Kgs 19:36–37). Multilingual renderings consistently transliterate the name with minor variation: Spanish 'Senaquerib,' French 'Sanchérib.'

Sennacherib (personal name) (13×) The proper name of the Assyrian king Sennacherib, son of Sargon II and father of Esarhaddon, who reigned 705–681 BCE. All thirteen biblical occurrences relate to his military confrontation with Judah under King Hezekiah — his invasion (2 Kgs 18:13; 2 Chr 32:1; Isa 36:1), his taunting messages to Jerusalem (2 Kgs 19:16; 2 Chr 32:9–10), Isaiah's prophetic response (2 Kgs 19:20; Isa 37:21), and his dramatic downfall and assassination (2 Kgs 19:36; Isa 37:37). Translations uniformly transliterate the name with slight phonetic adaptations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Sancheriv, Sennacherib, king | es: Sanjeriw, Senaquerib, de-Senaquerib | fr: Sancheriv, Sanchérib | de: Sancheriv, Sanherib 2Kgs 18:13; 2Kgs 19:16; 2Kgs 19:20; 2Kgs 19:36; 2Chr 32:1

סְנָסְנִים H5577 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3ms (1×)
branches/fruit-stalks—clusters or stems of dates
This term designates parts of the date palm, likely the fruit-stalks or branch clusters where dates grow. The word appears in Song of Solomon's climactic love poem where the man declares his intention to climb the palm tree and grasp its clusters. Scholarly analysis identifies this as an Aramaic loan-word related to Syriac terms for date clusters. The romantic context uses palm-tree imagery for the beloved's stature and attractiveness.

(1×) The fruit-stalks or branch-clusters of a date palm (Song 7:8), where the dates hang in bunches. Identified as an Aramaic borrowing based on Syriac and Assyrian cognates. The lover uses climbing metaphor—grasping these branches represents intimacy with the beloved. Spanish 'ramas' and French 'branches' emphasize the clustering growth structure of the palm. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS
en: on-its-branches | es: sus-ramas | fr: ses-branches. | de: [בסנסניו] Song 7:8

סַנְסַנָּה H5578 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Sansannah—town in southern Judah, possibly meaning 'palm branch'
Sansannah was a town in the southern territory allotted to Judah during the conquest. It appears to be identical with Hazar-susah mentioned in Joshua 19:5 and Hazar-susim in 1 Chronicles 4:31, showing typical place-name variation. The location was near Gaza, though precise identification remains uncertain. Proposals have placed it at various sites northeast of Gaza, but archaeological confirmation is lacking. The name may relate to palm branches or horse-related terminology.

(1×) Settlement in southern Judah's tribal allotment (Josh 15:31), probably identical to Hazar-susah and Hazar-susim in parallel lists. Location near Gaza but specific site uncertain. The Septuagint variants reflect typical Greek attempts at rendering Semitic place names. Spanish 'Sansaná' maintains standard transliteration patterns for Hebrew toponyms. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Sansannah | es: y-Sansaná | fr: et-Sansannah | de: und-Sansannah Josh 15:31

סְנַפִּיר H5579 N-ms (5×)
fin (of a fish); a distinguishing mark of ritually clean aquatic creatures
A technical term from the Levitical dietary laws designating the fin of a fish or aquatic creature. It appears exclusively in the parallel legal texts of Leviticus 11:9-12 and Deuteronomy 14:9-10, always paired with scales (qasqeseth) as the two markers that determine whether a water-dwelling creature is clean and permissible to eat. Creatures with both fins and scales are clean; those lacking either are 'an abomination.' The remarkable consistency across languages—English 'fin,' Spanish 'aleta,' French 'nageoire,' German 'fin'—reflects the precision of this biological-legal category.

(5×) The fin of an aquatic creature, functioning as one of two required markers (alongside scales) for ritual cleanness in the dietary laws. All five occurrences appear in Leviticus 11:9-12 and Deuteronomy 14:9-10, where the presence of both fins and scales determines edibility. English 'fin,' Spanish 'aleta,' French 'nageoire,' and German 'fin' all point to the same anatomical feature. The term carries no metaphorical extension—it is purely a taxonomic criterion within Israel's holiness code. WING BODY PART

en: fin | es: aleta | fr: nageoire | de: fin Lev 11:9; Lev 11:10; Lev 11:12; Deut 14:9; Deut 14:10

סָ֫ס H5580 N-ms (1×)

moth/worm—insect that consumes fabric

This term designates the clothes moth or a similar fabric-eating insect. Isaiah uses it in powerful imagery about divine judgment, declaring that the moth will consume the wicked like a garment. The comparison works because moths silently and gradually destroy expensive textiles, just as God's judgment persistently works against evildoers. Related words appear in Aramaic, Syriac, Arabic, and other Semitic languages, all referring to destructive insects that eat cloth or wood.

(1×) Clothes moth or fabric-eating worm used metaphorically for destructive judgment (Isa 51:8). The insect silently but inevitably consumes woolen garments, providing apt imagery for how divine judgment works against the wicked. Cognates across Semitic languages confirm the identification. Spanish 'gusano' (worm) captures the larval stage that does the actual damage. WORM MAGGOT

en: worm | es: gusano | fr: [סס] | de: [סס] Isa 51:8

סִסְמַי H5581 N-proper-ms (2×)

Sismai (personal name); descendant of Judah in the line of Jerahmeel

This name appears in the genealogy of Judah, specifically within the extensive family tree of Jerahmeel recorded in 1 Chronicles 2. The name occurs twice in the same verse with slight spelling variation in the Masoretic text (Sismai and Sismai), though this likely reflects scribal variation rather than different individuals. The genealogical context places Sismai within the southern tribes, preserving the memory of Judahite clans from the pre-exilic period.

(2×) A personal name in the genealogical records of Judah's tribe, specifically within Jerahmeel's lineage. Both occurrences are in 1 Chronicles 2:40, with the conjunction 'and' marking the continuation of the genealogy. The Greek versions (Sosomai, Sasamei) attempt to preserve the Hebrew phonetics. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Sismai, and-Sismai | es: Sismay, y-Sismay | fr: [וססמי], [ססמי] | de: [וססמי], [ססמי] 1Chr 2:40

סָעַד H5582 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (12×)

To support, sustain, or uphold; by extension, to refresh oneself with food, to take a meal

A Hebrew verb expressing the idea of propping up, sustaining, or lending strength to someone. In most occurrences it describes God upholding the righteous (Ps 18:35) or loyalty sustaining a king (Prov 20:28). The French soutenir and German aufrecht-halten capture the physical imagery of holding someone upright. In one distinctive usage (1 Kgs 13:7), the word shifts to mean refreshing oneself with food, a concrete expression of sustaining the body that remains alive in later Aramaic and Rabbinic Hebrew where it becomes the standard term for taking a meal.

1. support, sustain, uphold (11×) The primary sense of providing support, sustenance, or strength to a person. God sustains the psalmist's right hand (Ps 18:35), and steadfast love upholds a king's throne (Prov 20:28). Spanish sostendrá and German aufrecht-halten both preserve the concrete image of holding something upright. The Aramaic cognate sᶜaḏ likewise means 'to support, strengthen,' confirming this as the core meaning across Semitic languages. The imperative forms in Judg 19:5,8 carry the nuance 'sustain your strength' before a journey. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-sustain, and-sustained, and-to-support-it | es: Sostenme, Sustenta, lo-sostendrá | fr: [ולסעדה], et-soutenir, et-וסעד | de: [ולסעדה], [וסעד], aufrecht-halten-mich Gen 18:5; Judg 19:5; Judg 19:8; Ps 18:35; Ps 20:2

2. refresh oneself with food (1×) A specialized usage meaning to refresh oneself by eating, where sustaining becomes the concrete act of taking a meal. In 1 Kgs 13:7 the man of God is invited to come home and 'refresh yourself' with food. Spanish refréscate and French refresh-toi-même both highlight the reflexive, self-directed nature of this sustaining. This sense became dominant in later Rabbinic Hebrew, where sāᶜaḏ is the standard verb for dining. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-refresh-yourself | es: y-refréscate | fr: et-refresh-toi-même | de: und-refresh-dich-selbst 1Kgs 13:7

סָעַד H5583 V-Piel-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

supporting/helping—providing assistance

This Aramaic verb appears in Ezra's account of the temple rebuilding, describing how the prophets Haggai and Zechariah actively supported and encouraged the work. The intensive Pael stem emphasizes sustained, energetic assistance. The root appears in Targumic Aramaic and Syriac with similar meaning. The context shows prophetic ministry involving not just words but active practical support for the reconstruction project.

(1×) Pael participle 'supporting/helping,' describing the prophets' active assistance in temple rebuilding (Ezra 5:2). The intensive stem indicates ongoing, strong support rather than occasional help. This Aramaic section of Ezra naturally uses Aramaic vocabulary for prophetic ministry that combined encouragement, practical aid, and spiritual authority to maintain momentum in the restoration project. HELP AND ASSISTANCE

en: supporting | es: apoyando | fr: [מסעדין] | de: [מסעדין] Ezra 5:2

סָעָה H5584 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (1×)

stormy/rushing—violent wind

This rare verb describes violent, rushing wind—specifically a storm's fierce movement. The psalmist uses it in parallel with 'tempest,' creating a word-pair for overwhelming natural forces. The root suggests rapid motion and forceful energy, found in Arabic cognates meaning 'to go quickly' or 'run energetically.' The single occurrence makes precise definition challenging, but context clearly indicates destructive weather phenomena.

(1×) Participle describing rushing or violent wind (Ps 55:8), used alongside 'tempest' in parallel construction. The verb emphasizes the storm's fierce, rapid movement rather than just its strength. Arabic cognates confirm associations with swift motion and energetic action. The psalmist seeks deliverance from both human enemies and metaphorical storms of trouble. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: stormy | es: tempestuoso | fr: se-précipiter | de: stormy Ps 55:8

סָעִיף H5585 Conj-w (6×)

Cleft or crevice in rock; branch or bough of a tree

The noun סָעִיף captures two vivid images from the natural world. In its primary sense it denotes a cleft or fissure in a rocky crag — a place of concealment, as when Samson dwelt in the cleft of the rock of Etam (Judg 15:8, 11) or when Isaiah envisions people hiding in rock crevices on the day of the LORD (Isa 2:21). In its secondary sense it refers to the branches or boughs of a tree, used in prophetic metaphor for the remnant left after harvest (Isa 17:6) and the desolation of a ruined city (Isa 27:10).

1. cleft, crevice (of rock) (4×) A fissure or crevice in a rocky cliff, used as a place of refuge or concealment. English glosses render it 'cleft' and 'crevices,' while Spanish uses 'hendidura' (fissure). Samson hides in the cleft of the rock of Etam (Judg 15:8, 11), and Isaiah twice pictures people seeking shelter in rock crevices from the terror of the LORD (Isa 2:21, 57:5). The image evokes the rugged Judean terrain where crags provide natural hiding places. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-into-crevices-of, cleft-of, clefts-of | es: en-la-hendidura-de, la-hendidura-de, las-hendiduras-de | fr: [ובסעפי], [סעפי], cleft-de | de: [ובסעפי], [סעפי], cleft-von Judg 15:8; Judg 15:11; Isa 2:21; Isa 57:5

2. branch, bough (of a tree) (2×) A branch or bough of a tree, appearing only in Isaiah's prophetic poetry. In Isa 17:6 the word describes the uppermost boughs of a fruit tree where a few olives remain after harvest — a metaphor for the remnant of Israel. Spanish 'ramas' (branches) and English 'boughs' confirm the arboreal sense. In Isa 27:10 the branches of a desolate city are broken off, extending the organic metaphor to urban destruction. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS

en: its-branches, on-its-boughs | es: en-sus-ramas, sus-ramas | fr: [בסעפיה], [סעפיה] | de: [בסעפיה], [סעפיה] Isa 17:6; Isa 27:10

סָעַף H5586 V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

lopping off—cutting away branches

This denominative verb means to cut off branches, specifically the crown or top of a tree. Isaiah uses it in a powerful oracle against Assyria, declaring that the Lord himself will lop off the lofty boughs with terrifying force. The image depicts God as forester cutting down the proud forest of Assyria's military might. The intensive Piel stem emphasizes the vigor and completeness of the cutting action. This is the only biblical occurrence of the verb.

(1×) Piel participle 'lopping off,' describing divine judgment cutting down proud leadership (Isa 10:33). The verb derives from the noun for 'branch/bough' and depicts forceful pruning or felling. God's action against Assyrian arrogance uses forestry imagery—the tall trees representing high officials will be cut down. Spanish 'cortando' captures the cutting action clearly. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12738 WITH 3 SENSES

en: lopping-off | es: cortando | fr: [מסעף] | de: [מסעף] Isa 10:33

סְעַפָּה H5587a Art / N-mp (1×)

divided opinions—metaphor for religious wavering

This plural noun describes divided or split thinking, used in Elijah's famous challenge at Mount Carmel. The prophet demands how long Israel will 'limp on two divided opinions'—trying to serve both Yahweh and Baal simultaneously. The imagery suggests unequal legs or a divided stance that produces limping, unstable movement. The metaphor powerfully captures religious compromise and double-mindedness. Some scholars see literal reference to legs, but the context supports mental/religious division.

(1×) Divided opinions or split allegiances in religious commitment (1 Kgs 18:21). Elijah uses this metaphorically with 'limping,' depicting Israel's attempt to worship both Yahweh and Baal as walking on unequal legs. The noun emphasizes the bifurcated, unstable nature of trying to maintain contradictory loyalties. French 'avis' (opinions) and Spanish 'ramas' (branches, suggesting divergence) show interpretive variation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-opinions | es: las-ramas? | fr: le-avis | de: der-opinions 1Kgs 18:21

שְׂעִפִּים H5587b Prep-b / N-mp (2×)

disquieting thoughts, troubled thoughts, anxious mental agitation

This plural noun describes the kind of thoughts that disturb sleep and peace—racing, anxious, disquieting reflections that agitate the mind. Both occurrences are in Job's dialogues, where intense suffering provokes mental anguish. In Job 4:13, Eliphaz speaks of troubled thoughts during visions of the night, while in Job 20:2, Zophar's 'disquieting thoughts' compel him to respond hastily to Job. The word captures mental restlessness and inner turmoil.

(2×) Describes agitated, troubled, or disquieting thoughts that disturb mental peace. The contexts in Job link these thoughts to suffering, visions, and urgent compulsion to speak. Spanish 'pensamientos' and French references to troubled thoughts align with the Hebrew sense of mental agitation. In Job 20:2, parallel with 'my haste within me' intensifies the image of inner turmoil. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-disquieting-thoughts, my-troubled-thoughts | es: En-pensamientos, mis-pensamientos | fr: dans-בשעפים, mon-שעפי-moi | de: [בשעפים], [שעפי] Job 4:13; Job 20:2

סָעֵף H5588 N-mp (1×)

double-minded—those with divided loyalty

This adjective describes people with divided hearts or double-minded attitudes, particularly in religious devotion. The psalmist declares passionate hatred for such half-hearted persons, loving God's law while despising those who treat it ambivalently. The term suggests internal division, wavering commitment, and unreliable character. It may derive from imagery of branching or splitting. The religious context indicates those who try to maintain competing loyalties rather than wholehearted covenant faithfulness.

(1×) Adjective describing double-minded or half-hearted people in religious commitment (Ps 119:113). The psalmist contrasts love for God's law with hatred for those who maintain divided loyalties. The term emphasizes internal splitting—wanting to serve God while keeping other options open. Spanish 'pensamientos divididos' (divided thoughts) explicitly names the cognitive split, while German 'double-minded Leute' uses English loanword. THINKING AND SEEMING

en: double-minded-ones | es: Pensamientos-divididos | fr: rameau | de: double-minded-Leute Ps 119:113

סְעַפָּה H5589 N-fpc / 3ms (2×)

boughs, branches (of a tree, especially cedar)

This feminine plural noun refers to the spreading branches or boughs of a great tree. Both occurrences are in Ezekiel 31, where Assyria is depicted as a magnificent cedar in Lebanon, so tall and majestic that birds nest in its boughs and nations find shelter under its branches. The imagery emphasizes grandeur and protective reach—the sprawling canopy of a mighty tree. The prophet uses this arboreal metaphor to describe imperial power before announcing its impending fall.

(2×) The branches or boughs of a great tree, used metaphorically in Ezekiel 31 for the far-reaching power of Assyria. Both references (vv. 6, 8) speak of birds nesting and nations dwelling 'in its boughs,' highlighting the protective and expansive nature of the cedar's canopy. The Hebrew occurs with possessive suffix 'its boughs,' emphasizing the majestic cedar figure. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS

en: in-its-boughs, its-boughs | es: En-sus-ramas, sus-ramas | fr: [בסעפתיו], [סעפתיו] | de: [בסעפתיו], [סעפתיו] Ezek 31:6; Ezek 31:8

סָעַר H5590 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (7×)

To storm, rage, be tempest-tossed; in causative stems, to drive away or scatter as with a whirlwind

A verb evoking the raw fury of a tempest, used both literally of raging seas and figuratively of divine wrath or human turmoil. Jonah's sailors face a sea 'growing more and more stormy' (Jonah 1:11, 13), and Isaiah's afflicted Jerusalem is called 'storm-tossed' (Isa 54:11). In the Piel stem the sense shifts to active scattering: God disperses the disobedient 'with a whirlwind among the nations' (Zech 7:14), and Hosea likens the wicked to chaff 'driven away from a threshing floor' (Hos 13:3). The Arabic cognate sa'ara ('kindle, inflame') hints at the word's deeper etymology of violent agitation.

1. storm, rage, be tempest-tossed (Qal/Nifal/Pual) (5×) Intransitive and passive forms (Qal, Nifal, Pual) meaning to storm, rage, or be tossed about by a tempest. In Jonah 1:11 and 1:13 the sea 'was storming' (so'er) ever more violently; in Isa 54:11 God addresses Jerusalem as 'storm-tossed' (so'arāh), a woman battered by affliction. Spanish azotada por tempestad ('battered by tempest') and French tempête capture the involuntary, passive experience of being caught in meteorological or metaphorical fury. Hab 3:14 extends it figuratively to enemies who 'storm along' in battle frenzy. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: and-it-was-stormy, and-storming, storm-tossed | es: Y-se-turbó, azotada-por-tempestad, se-precipitan | fr: [סערה], et-cela-fut-stormy, et-tempête | de: [יסערו], [סערה], und-Sturm 2Kgs 6:11; Isa 54:11; Jonah 1:11; Jonah 1:13; Hab 3:14

2. drive away, scatter with a tempest (Piel) (2×) Causative forms (Piel) meaning to drive away, scatter, or disperse as with a whirlwind, used transitively of divine judgment. In Hos 13:3 the wicked are like chaff 'driven away' (y'so'ar) from a threshing floor by the wind; in Zech 7:14 God declares 'I scattered them with a whirlwind among the nations.' Spanish dispersé con torbellino ('I scattered with a whirlwind') precisely captures the causative force, the agent wielding the storm as an instrument of exile and judgment. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: and-I-scattered-them, driven-away | es: Y-los-dispersé-con-torbellino, es-arrojado | fr: et-tempête, tempête | de: [וְאֹסְעֵרֵם], [יִסְעַר] Hos 13:3; Zech 7:14

H5591 N-fs (2×)

storm, whirlwind, tempest

This noun denotes a violent storm or whirlwind, the kind of atmospheric fury that announces divine presence. Both occurrences in Job describe God speaking to Job 'out of the storm'—a theophanic manifestation where the Creator addresses His creature from the heart of nature's power. The storm is not merely meteorological but theological, a fitting medium for the overwhelming majesty of God's voice. The tempest symbolizes both terror and revelation.

(2×) A fierce storm or whirlwind, specifically the tempest from which YHWH speaks to Job (38:1, 40:6). The repetition emphasizes this as the signature setting for God's climactic self-revelation. Cross-linguistic glosses consistently render this as 'storm' or 'tempest,' recognizing the theophanic context where divine speech emerges from natural fury. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: the-storm | es: (Q:la-tempestad), (Q:tempestad) | fr: (סַעַר), le-(הַסַּעַר) | de: [(הַסַּעַר)], [(סַעַר)] Job 38:1; Job 40:6

סַעַר H5591a Prep-b / N-ms (8×)

Tempest, violent storm; often figurative for God's wrathful judgment sweeping upon the wicked.

A masculine noun for a fierce tempest or whirlwind, used both literally and as a powerful figure for divine wrath. In Jeremiah's repeated oracle, 'a whirling tempest' (sa'ar mithholel) bursts forth upon the heads of the wicked (Jer 23:19; 25:32; 30:23). The Psalms employ it for the overwhelming force from which the righteous cry for deliverance (Ps 55:8) and as an instrument of God's pursuit of his enemies (Ps 83:15). Amos 1:14 pairs it with the day of storm as a metaphor for military devastation. German Sturm and French tempete, alongside Spanish tormenta, all converge on the image of violent, overwhelming atmospheric power.

tempest, storm, whirlwind (8×) A violent windstorm, tempest, or whirlwind, frequently employed as a metaphor for divine judgment. The prophetic usage is dominant: Jeremiah's refrain describes YHWH's wrath as 'a whirling tempest' bursting on the heads of the wicked (Jer 23:19; 25:32; 30:23). In Ps 55:8, the psalmist seeks escape 'from the rushing wind, from the tempest,' while Ps 83:15 calls on God to pursue enemies with his tempest. Amos 1:14 links it to military destruction 'on the day of storm.' The cross-linguistic evidence – German Sturm, French tempete, Spanish tormenta – uniformly conveys violent atmospheric devastation, confirming the single semantic core of overwhelming destructive force. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: a-storm-, and-a-storm, and-a-whirling | es: con-tempestad-de-ti, con-tormenta, de-tormenta | fr: [וְסַעַר], [סַעַר], dans-la-tempête | de: Sturm, [וְסַעַר], [סַעַר] Ps 55:8; Ps 83:15; Jer 23:19; Jer 25:32; Jer 30:23

סְעָרָה H5591b N-fp (16×)

Storm, tempest, whirlwind — a violent windstorm, often expressing divine power, judgment, or theophany

This feminine noun denotes a fierce, swirling windstorm or tempest. It frequently serves as an instrument of YHWH's intervention — whether in theophany (Ezek 1:4; Job 38:1; 40:6), divine judgment (Isa 29:6; Jer 23:19; 30:23), or miraculous translation (2 Kgs 2:1, 11, where Elijah ascends in the whirlwind). The storms of Zechariah 9:14 accompany YHWH's warrior advent. Only in the late psalms does the word describe ordinary weather phenomena (Ps 107:25, 29; 148:8), and even there the storms remain under God's sovereign command. The metaphorical force of seʿārâ made it a natural vehicle for expressing the overwhelming, uncontrollable power of the divine.

storm, tempest, whirlwind (16×) A violent windstorm or tempest, predominantly depicting divine power in theophany and judgment. The rûaḥ seʿārâ ('storm wind') introduces Ezekiel's throne vision (Ezek 1:4) and YHWH's answer to Job (Job 38:1; 40:6). It carries Elijah heavenward (2 Kgs 2:1, 11) and executes prophetic judgment (Isa 29:6; Jer 23:19; 30:23; Zech 9:14). Only in Psalms 107 and 148 does the term describe natural weather, yet even there God raises and stills the storm. Spanish tempestad and French tourbillon reflect the term's double register of literal gale and metaphorical divine fury. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: [the-storm], and-a-tempest, and-storm | es: [K:la-tempestad], [K:tempestad], en-la-tempestad | fr: [סְעָרָה], dans-le-tourbillon, et-tempête | de: Sturm, [[הַסְּעָרָה]], [[סְעָרָה]] 2Kgs 2:1; 2Kgs 2:11; Job 38:1; Job 40:6; Ps 107:25

סַף H5592a N-mpc (7×)

A basin or bowl, especially for ritual/temple use; metaphorically, a cup of reeling (divine judgment)

A vessel word spanning the practical and the prophetic. In its primary sense, sap denotes a basin or bowl used in ritual and domestic contexts: the Passover blood is collected 'in the basin' for marking doorposts (Exod 12:22), temple inventories list silver basins among sacred vessels (1 Kgs 7:50; 2 Kgs 12:13), and 2 Sam 17:28 mentions basins brought for David's camp. Zechariah 12:2 transforms this humble vessel into a dramatic metaphor: Jerusalem becomes a 'sap ra'al,' a cup of reeling that intoxicates the besieging nations with divine judgment.

1. basin, bowl (for ritual/temple use) (6×) A basin or bowl used in ritual, temple, or domestic settings. In Exod 12:22 the Israelites dip hyssop in blood collected 'in the basin' (bassap) to mark their doorposts at Passover. The temple inventories of 1 Kgs 7:50 and 2 Kgs 12:13 list sippôt among the sacred vessels, and 2 Sam 17:28 includes basins among provisions brought to David. Spanish lebrillo/cuencos, French bassin, and German Becken all render it as a practical container, confirming the concrete, utilitarian sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-basins, and-the-cups, basins | es: Y-los-cuencos, copas-de, en-el-lebrillo | fr: [הַסְּפִים], basins, dans-le-bassin | de: [הַסִּפִּים], basins, in-der-Becken Exod 12:22; 2Sam 17:28; 1Kgs 7:50; 2Kgs 12:13

2. cup of reeling (goblet of staggering) (1×) A cup or goblet used metaphorically for divine judgment in Zech 12:2, where God makes Jerusalem a 'sap ra'al' (cup of reeling) for the surrounding nations. The image is of an intoxicating vessel that causes those who drink from it to stagger. Spanish copa de ('cup of'), French coupe ('goblet'), and the parallel with 'cup of wrath' imagery elsewhere in the prophets (Isa 51:17, 22; Jer 25:15) confirm this as a figurative extension: the humble basin becomes an instrument of staggering, theophanic judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: reeling | es: copa-de | fr: coupe | de: [סַף] Zech 12:2

סַף H5592b N-msc (25×)

threshold, sill — the stone or timber crosspiece at the base of a doorway, especially of a temple or palace gate

Saf (II) denotes the threshold or doorsill of a building, the stone or timber beam one crosses when entering through a doorway. Its 25 occurrences concentrate in sacred and royal architecture, giving the word a weighty, institutional connotation. In Ezekiel's temple vision, the thresholds of gates and sanctuary doors are precisely measured architectural elements (Ezek 40:6-7; 41:16; 43:8). The expression shomer hassaf ('keeper of the threshold') designates an important temple official — not a lowly doorman but a senior priestly or Levitical functionary entrusted with guarding the sanctuary entrance (2 Kgs 12:10; 22:4; 23:4; 25:18; Jer 35:4; 52:24). Isaiah's vision of YHWH enthroned features the thresholds shaking at the voice of the seraphim (Isa 6:4), and Amos sees the Lord standing beside the altar commanding to 'strike the capitals so that the thresholds shake' (Amos 9:1). The lone domestic use is the tragic scene of the Levite's concubine collapsed at the threshold in Judges 19:27.

French 'seuil,' German 'Schwelle,' and Spanish 'umbral' all denote this architectural element precisely.

threshold of a doorway (25×) The physical threshold or doorsill at the base of a gateway or entrance, primarily in temple and palace architecture. In Ezekiel's temple vision it is a measured structural element of the sanctuary gates (Ezek 40:6-7; 41:16; 43:8). The title shomer hassaf ('keeper of the threshold') designates senior temple officials in priestly and Levitical service (2 Kgs 12:10; 22:4; 23:4; 25:18; Jer 35:4; 52:24). Theophanically, the thresholds tremble at YHWH's voice (Isa 6:4; Amos 9:1). The domestic occurrence in Judg 19:27 underscores the threshold as a liminal boundary between safety and danger. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-threshold-of, at-threshold-of-, the-threshold | es: al-umbral-de, el-umbral, la-entrada | fr: [הסף], et-seuil, le-seuil | de: Schwelle, [הסף], [הספים] Judg 19:27; 1Kgs 14:17; 2Kgs 12:9; 2Kgs 22:4; 2Kgs 23:4

סַף H5593 N-proper-ms (1×)

Saph—Philistine giant killed at Gob

Saph was one of the descendants of the Rephaim giants living among the Philistines. He fell in battle at Gob during one of David's campaigns against Philistine champions. The parallel account in 1 Chronicles 20:4 gives his name as Sippai, showing typical textual variation. These battles against giant warriors demonstrated David's ongoing conflict with Philistine military power and echoed his earlier victory over Goliath. The name appears only in these battle narratives.

(1×) Personal name of a Philistine warrior, one of the descendants of the giants (2 Sam 21:18). He was killed in battle at Gob. The parallel passage gives the variant 'Sippai,' typical of chronicle transmission. These encounters with giant descendants formed part of David's military campaigns securing Israel's borders. Cross-language evidence uniformly transliterates as proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Saph | es: Saf | fr: Saph | de: Saph 2Sam 21:18

סָפַד H5594 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (32×)

To wail, lament, or mourn for the dead; by extension a mourner or the act of lamentation itself.

A verb rooted in the physical act of beating the breast in grief, sapad covers the full range of mourning: wailing for a death, ritually lamenting in a funeral procession, or grieving a national calamity. Cognates in Aramaic (sepad) and Akkadian (sapadu) confirm this as a deeply ancient Near Eastern mourning term. When Abraham rises to sapad for Sarah in Genesis 23:2, the word carries the weight of audible, public grief — not private sorrow. Zechariah 12:10 envisions a future day when all Jerusalem will sapad as for an only son, a passage that gave rise to rich messianic interpretation.

1. mourn or lament (Qal active) (25×) The core active Qal meaning: to mourn, lament, or wail aloud, typically for the dead but also over impending doom or national disaster. This sense accounts for the great majority of occurrences. Spanish consistently renders lamentar, while French uses pleurer ('to weep'), pointing to the audible, demonstrative character of the grief. Key passages include Abraham mourning Sarah (Gen 23:2), David's lament for Abner (2 Sam 3:31), and the land mourning in Micah 1:8. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: I-will-lament, and-lamented-, and-mourn | es: Y-lamentaron, a-lamentar, harás-lamento | fr: et-elle-pleura, et-ils-pleura, et-ils-pleura- | de: [אספדה], [וספדו], [ספוד] Gen 23:2; Gen 50:10; 1Sam 25:1; 1Sam 28:3; 2Sam 1:12

2. be lamented (Nifal passive) (3×) The Niphal (passive) form: to be lamented or mourned. In Jeremiah 16:4 and 16:6, those who die will 'not be lamented' — the passive construction emphasizing not the mourner's action but the absence of any mourner for the dead. Spanish captures this with the reflexive serán llorados ('they will be wept for'), reflecting the shift from agent to patient. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: they-will-be-lamented, they-will-lament | es: los-lamentarán, serán-llorados | fr: se-lamenter | de: klagen Jer 16:4; Jer 16:6; Jer 25:33

3. mourning or lamentation (noun) (2×) The derived noun misped (מִסְפֵּד), denoting a mourning ceremony, occasion of lamentation, or the sound of wailing itself. In Zechariah 12:10 the misped is compared to the grief at Hadad-Rimmon, a place-name tradition of great public mourning. Micah 1:11 pairs it with toponyms, suggesting a ritualized communal event rather than spontaneous weeping. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: lamentation-of, like-mourning | es: como-duelo, lamento-de | fr: se-lamenter | de: [כמספד], [מספד] Mic 1:11; Zech 12:10

4. mourner (participle substantivized) (2×) The substantivized participle: a mourner, one who beats the breast in professional or ritual lamentation. Isaiah 32:12 pictures mourners striking themselves over fertile fields turned desolate. Ecclesiastes 12:5 places the sofdim in the street as part of its haunting portrait of death, where the professional mourners circling the market become an image of life's end. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: beating, the-mourners | es: golpeándose, los-plañideros | fr: le-se-lamenter, se-lamenter | de: [הספדים], klagen Eccl 12:5; Isa 32:12

סָפָה H5595 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-ms (20×)

To sweep away, snatch up, destroy; also to add or heap up; in Nifal, to be swept away or perish.

This verb captures the terrifying image of sudden, indiscriminate destruction — like a storm sweeping everything in its path. Abraham's famous intercession in Genesis 18:23-24 hinges on it: 'Will you really sweep away (תִּסְפֶּה) the righteous with the wicked?' The Spanish 'barrerá' (will sweep) and German 'hinwegraffen' (snatch away) both convey the violence. A second root (ספה II) means 'to add or heap up,' seen when God declares 'I will heap calamities upon them' (Deut 32:23). The Nifal passive — 'be swept away' — dominates in warnings about sharing the fate of the wicked, as when Lot was urged to flee Sodom lest he 'be swept away' (Gen 19:15).

1. be swept away, perish (9×) Nifal passive meaning to be swept away, consumed, or destroyed — often in the context of perishing alongside the guilty. Genesis 19:15 and 19:17 use this urgently as angels warn Lot to flee 'lest you be swept away in the punishment of the city.' The Spanish 'seas-barrido' (you be swept) and 'fueron-consumidas' (they were consumed) show the passive force. In Numbers 16:26 the congregation is warned away from Korah's tents for the same reason. This is the most frequent sense in the Hebrew Bible. DRIVEN AWAY SWEPT en: I-will-be-swept-away, and-be-swept-away, are-swept-away | es: arrebatado, fueron-consumidas, seas-barrido | fr: [נספה], enlever, et-être-swept-au-loin | de: [נספה], [ספתה], du-hinweggerafft-wirst Gen 19:15; Gen 19:17; Num 16:26; 1Sam 12:25; 1Sam 26:10

2. sweep away, destroy (5×) Qal active meaning to sweep away or destroy, used of catastrophic or divine judgment upon persons or places. Abraham's plea in Genesis 18:23 — 'will you sweep away the righteous with the wicked?' — is the paradigmatic instance. Isaiah 7:20 extends it to shaving: the Lord will 'sweep away' the beard with a hired razor, a metaphor for thoroughgoing devastation. The German 'hinwegraffen' (snatch away) vividly captures the totality of the destruction. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: it-will-sweep-away, to-destroy-it, to-sweep-away | es: añadir, barrerá, destruirás | fr: –Tu-détruire, périr, à-balayer | de: [תספה], hinwegraffen, zu-sweep-weg Gen 18:23; Gen 18:24; Deut 29:19; Ps 40:14; Isa 7:20

3. add, join to (4×) A distinct root (ספה II) meaning to add, join to, or augment. In Numbers 32:14, the Reubenites and Gadites are warned not to 'add yet more' to God's anger. Isaiah 30:1 condemns those who 'add sin to sin,' and Jeremiah 7:21 sarcastically says 'add your burnt offerings to your sacrifices.' The French 'à-ajouter' and German 'zu-hinzufuegen' clearly distinguish this sense from the destructive meanings. Isaiah 29:1 ('add year to year') likewise belongs here. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: add, sin, to-add | es: añadid, añadir, para-añadir | fr: périr, à-ajouter | de: [ספו], [ספות], zu-hinzufuegen Num 32:14; Isa 29:1; Isa 30:1; Jer 7:21

4. be caught, overtaken (1×) Nifal participial meaning to be caught, overtaken, or seized — implying pursuit and capture rather than mere destruction. Isaiah 13:15 says 'everyone who is caught

(הַנִּסְפֶּה) will fall by the sword,' describing those overtaken by the conquering army. The Spanish 'el-alcanzado' (the one overtaken) highlights the chase-and-capture nuance that sets this apart from the general 'be swept away' of sense 1. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION
en: the-caught | es: el-alcanzado | fr: périr | de: [הנספה] Isa 13:15

5. heap up, gather together (1×) Hifil causative meaning to heap up or accumulate — specifically of piling calamities upon someone. Deuteronomy 32:23, in the Song of Moses, has God declare 'I will heap (אַסְפֶּה) evils upon them.' The Spanish 'amontonaré' (I will pile up) and French 'je-fera-heap' capture the image of disasters stacked one upon another. This causative use turns the sweeping-away image into deliberate, measured accumulation of judgments. GATHERING TOGETHER
en: I-will-heap | es: amontonaré | fr: je-fera-heap | de: ich-wird-Haufen Deut 32:23

סָפַח H5596a Prep-m / V-Hitpael-Inf (5×)
to join, attach oneself to; to be gathered together or associated with a group
A verb expressing the idea of joining or attaching oneself to another person or group, spanning voluntary association, desperate petition, and involuntary clinging. A destitute priest's descendant begs to be attached to any priestly office for survival (1 Sam 2:36), while David laments being driven from attaching himself to the Lord's inheritance (1 Sam 26:19). Prophetically, nations will attach themselves to the house of Jacob (Isa 14:1). The Spanish range—'agrégame' (attach me), 'de-unirme' (from joining myself), 'se-juntan' (they gather)—captures the spectrum from individual plea to collective association.

(5×) To join, attach, or associate oneself with a person, group, or inheritance, covering a range from desperate personal petition to national-scale incorporation. A ruined priestly family begs attachment to any office (1 Sam 2:36, Qal imperative); David grieves exclusion from the Lord's heritage (1 Sam 26:19, Hithpael); foreigners attach themselves to Israel (Isa 14:1, Niphal). Job 30:7 describes outcasts huddling together (Pual). Spanish 'agrégame/de-unirme/se-juntan' and French 'attach-moi' reflect the relational joining. Habakkuk 2:15 is textually uncertain but may involve 'joining' wrath to a cup. CLINGING AND JOINING en: and-they-will-attach-themselves, attach-me, from-attaching | es: agrégame, de-unirme, se-juntan | fr: [ונספחו], attach-moi, de-attaching | de: [ונספחו], [יספחו], [מספח] 1Sam 2:36; 1Sam 26:19; Job 30:7; Isa 14:1; Hab 2:15

שִׂסַּף H5596b Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)
strike with scabs—inflict skin disease as judgment
This intensive verb describes God's judgment on Jerusalem's proud women through skin disease. The prophet Isaiah announces that the Lord will smite the daughters of Zion with scabs on their heads, removing their beauty and replacing it with humiliation. The Piel stem emphasizes deliberate, thorough action. The root relates to the noun for 'scab' or skin eruption. This graphic prophecy targets the pride and vanity that Isaiah condemns in chapter 3's catalog of luxury items.

(1×) Piel verb 'to strike with scabs/sores,' describing divine judgment through skin disease (Isa 3:17). God will afflict the proud women of Jerusalem with disfiguring scalp conditions, reversing their beauty into shame. Spanish 'herirá con sarna' (will strike with scabs) captures both the violent action and the specific affliction. The prophecy uses physical disease as manifestation of moral corruption. SKIN DISEASE LEPROSY
en: and-shall-strike-with-scabs | es: Entonces-herirá-con-sarna | fr: [ושׂפח] | de: [ושׂפח] Isa 3:17

סַפַּחַת H5597 Conj-w (2×)
scab, eruption (skin lesion or disease)
This noun refers to a skin eruption, scab, or lesion—a dermatological condition examined in Levitical purity laws. The word appears in lists of skin afflictions that priests must diagnose to determine ritual cleanness or uncleanness. Leviticus 13:2 groups it with swelling and bright spot, while 14:56 includes it in the summary of conditions addressed in the purification ritual. The term is clinical and priestly, part of ancient Israel's health and holiness code.

(2×) A skin condition—scab or eruption—examined in priestly diagnosis of ritual purity (Leviticus 13-14). Both occurrences appear in formulaic lists alongside other skin lesions. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'erupción,' German 'Schorf,' French 'croûte') all identify this as a dermatological abnormality requiring priestly evaluation for ritual status. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4364 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-for-the-scab, scab | es: erupción, y-para-la-erupción | fr: croûte, et-pour-le-croûte | de: Schorf, und-fuer-der-Schorf Lev 13:2; Lev 14:56

סָף H5598 N-proper-ms (1×)
Sippai—Philistine giant, variant of Saph
Sippai appears in Chronicles as the name of a Philistine giant killed during David's wars. This is the same individual called Saph in 2 Samuel 21:18, with the name variation typical of parallel biblical accounts. He was one of several descendants of the Rephaim who fought against David's forces. The Chronicles account provides slightly different details while recounting the same historical encounters with Philistine champions.

(1×) Personal name of a Philistine giant warrior (1 Chr 20:4), parallel to Saph in 2 Samuel 21:18. The name variation reflects typical textual transmission differences between Samuel and Chronicles. He was among the descendants of giants who opposed David's military campaigns. Translations either transliterate or bracket the name, acknowledging the proper-name status. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Sippai | es: Sipai | fr: [סָפָי] | de: [סָפָי] 1Chr 20:4

סְפִיחַ H5599a N-mpc / 3fs (1×)
outpourings/aftergrowths—disputed term for water or plant growth
This plural noun appears in Job's poetic description of natural forces, though its precise meaning remains uncertain. Traditional interpretation suggests 'outpourings' of water that sweep away earth's dust, fitting Job's theme of divine power eroding human foundations. Others propose 'aftergrowths' or spontaneous vegetation based on related Hebrew terms. The textual difficulty has led to various proposals including emendation. The context describes relentless natural processes wearing away human hope.

(1×) Disputed term in Job 14:19, possibly 'outpourings' (water erosion) or 'aftergrowths' (spontaneous vegetation). Most interpreters favor water imagery—floods sweeping away soil, paralleling how God destroys human hope. Spanish 'brotes' (sprouts) takes the vegetation interpretation, while scholarly discussion remains divided. Some propose textual emendation entirely. The hapax legomenon status makes certainty impossible. POURING AND SHEDDING en: aftergrowths-its | es: sus-brotes | fr: sa-סְפִיחֶיהָ-elle | de: [סְפִיחֶיהָ] Job 14:19

סְפִיחַ H5599b N-mpc / 3fs (4×)
aftergrowth, volunteer crop; grain that sprouts from spilled kernels after harvest
This agricultural term refers to grain that grows spontaneously from kernels accidentally spilled during the previous harvest. Leviticus 25:5, 11 prohibits harvesting the aftergrowth during the sabbatical year, ensuring the land's complete rest. In 2 Kings 19:29 and Isaiah 37:30, eating "what grows of itself" serves as a sign that normalcy will return after Sennacherib's invasion. The term reflects ancient agrarian realities where volunteer crops could sustain people when regular sowing was impossible.

(4×) Denotes grain that sprouts from accidentally spilled kernels, growing without deliberate sowing. Leviticus 25:5 and 11 legislate against harvesting the sabbatical year's aftergrowth, while 2 Kings 19:29//Isaiah 37:30 promise that aftergrowth will sustain Israel during crisis years. Multilingual glosses consistently render as "aftergrowth/self-growth/volunteer crop" (lo que crece solo, ce qui repousse de soi-même). Some bracket [סְפִיחַ], possibly indicating construct forms or morphological notes. The term captures an important agricultural reality: unplanned but providential growth from the previous harvest. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: aftergrowth, its-self-growth, self-growth-of | es: lo-que-crece-solo, lo-que-nace-de-suyo, que-rebrote-de | fr: [סְפִיחַ], aftergrowth, self-growth-de | de: [סְפִיחַ], aftergrowth, sein-self-growth Lev 25:5; Lev 25:11; 2Kgs 19:29; Isa 37:30

סְפִינָה H5600 Art / N-fs (1×)

ship/vessel—seagoing craft

This noun designates a ship or seagoing vessel. The term appears in Jonah's account where the prophet goes down into the innermost parts of the ship to sleep during the storm. The word likely emphasizes the covered or enclosed nature of the vessel—overlaid with planking or having a deck. Aramaic cognates confirm the meaning, and Arabic borrowed the term. The single biblical occurrence provides limited contextual evidence, but the maritime setting is clear.

(1×) Seagoing ship or vessel mentioned in Jonah's flight from God (Jon 1:5). The prophet descended into the ship's hold or lowest deck. The term emphasizes the constructed, enclosed nature of maritime craft—sheathed with planks and decking. Spanish 'nave' and French 'navire' both denote substantial seagoing vessels. This vocabulary choice distinguishes larger ships from smaller boats. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: the-vessel | es: la-nave | fr: navire | de: der-Schiff Jonah 1:5

סַפִּיר H5601 Conj-w / N-ms (11×)

Sapphire, lapis lazuli — a brilliant blue precious stone prized in ancient Near Eastern art and worship

The noun סַפִּיר (sappir) denotes a brilliant blue gemstone, most likely lapis lazuli rather than modern sapphire (corundum), since true sapphire was rare in the ancient Near East while lapis lazuli was imported from Afghanistan and treasured throughout Mesopotamia and Egypt. Under God's feet at Sinai there appeared 'something like a pavement of sapphire, clear as the sky itself' (Exod 24:10), and the divine throne in Ezekiel's vision rests on what appears to be sapphire (Ezek 1:26; 10:1). The stone appears in the high priest's breastplate (Exod 28:18; 39:11), in Job's meditation on wisdom's incomparable value (Job 28:6, 16), and in the eschatological city's foundations (Isa 54:11). Spanish 'zafiro' and French 'saphir' both derive from the same Semitic root.

sapphire (precious stone) (11×) A precious blue stone — almost certainly lapis lazuli in most biblical contexts — valued for its deep azure color and used in theophanic descriptions, priestly vestments, and poetic imagery of worth and beauty. The pavement beneath God's feet at Sinai is 'like sapphire' (Exod 24:10), Ezekiel's throne-vision features sapphire (Ezek 1:26; 10:1), and the stone occupies a place in the high priest's breastplate (Exod 28:18). Song of Songs 5:14 compares the beloved's body to sapphire-studded ivory, while Lamentations 4:7 describes Zion's nobles as having once been purer than sapphire. Ezekiel 28:13 places it among Eden's covering stones. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: and-sapphire, sapphire, sapphires | es: con-zafiros, de-zafiros, el-zafiro | fr: [בְּסַפִּירִים], [סַפִּיר], de-saphirs. | de: Saphir, [בְּסַפִּירִים], [וְסַפִּיר] Exod 24:10; Exod 28:18; Exod 39:11; Job 28:6; Job 28:16

סַפַּל H5602 Art / N-ms (2×)

bowl, basin (large vessel for liquids)

This noun denotes a large bowl or basin, likely for holding liquids. The two biblical occurrences capture different nuances: in Judges 5:25, Jael offers Sisera milk 'in a bowl of nobles'—a magnificent vessel befitting royalty, underscoring the ironic hospitality before his death. In Judges 6:38, Gideon wrings out the fleece and fills 'the bowl' with dew, demonstrating God's sign. The word suggests a substantial, possibly ornate vessel, distinguished from everyday containers.

(2×) A substantial bowl or basin for holding liquids. In Judges 5:25, it's a 'bowl of nobles,' suggesting size and quality; in 6:38, it holds the dew wrung from the fleece. Cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'tazón,' French 'bol,' German 'bowl') all point to a sizable container, though the etymology remains uncertain—possibly a foreign loanword. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-a-bowl-of, the-bowl | es: el-tazón, en-tazón-de | fr: dans-un-bol-de, le-bol | de: der-bowl, in-ein-bowl-von Judg 5:25; Judg 6:38

סָפַן H5603 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (6×)

To cover, panel, or ceiling with wood; to store or treasure up

The verb סָפַן primarily describes the architectural act of covering or paneling a structure with wood, especially cedar. Solomon 'covered the house with beams' (1 Kgs 6:9), and his palace rooms were paneled in cedar (1 Kgs 7:3, 7). Jeremiah condemns the king who says 'I will build myself a spacious house with paneled rooms' (Jer 22:14), and Haggai asks whether the people should dwell in 'paneled houses' while the temple lies desolate (Hag 1:4). A single distinctive occurrence in Moses' blessing (Deut 33:21) uses the word in the sense of something 'reserved' or 'stored up.'

1. to cover, panel, ceiling (Qal passive participle) (5×) To cover, panel, or ceiling a building with wood — the core architectural sense appearing in Qal active and passive forms. Spanish 'cubierto' and 'artesonadas' (coffered/paneled) and French 'couvrit' consistently point to roofing and paneling with timber. All five occurrences relate to construction: Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6:9), his palace (1 Kgs 7:3, 7), Jehoiakim's cedar-paneled rooms (Jer 22:14), and the people's own paneled houses contrasted with the ruined temple (Hag 1:4). COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: and-covered, and-he-covered, and-paneled | es: Y-cubierto, artesonadas, y-cubierto | fr: [וְסָפוּן], et-couvrit, et-il-couvrit | de: [וְסָפוּן], [סְפוּנִים], und-bedeckte 1Kgs 6:9; 1Kgs 7:3; 1Kgs 7:7; Jer 22:14; Hag 1:4

2. to store, reserve, treasure up (1×) To store, reserve, or treasure up — a metaphorical extension where what is 'covered' becomes what is 'kept hidden in store.' In Deut 33:21 the leader's portion was 'reserved' (sapun), applying the covering image to the idea of something set aside and guarded. The multilingual glosses sharply diverge from the architectural cluster: English gives 'reserved,' Spanish 'reservada,' confirming a distinct semantic space of safekeeping rather than physical paneling. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: reserved | es: está-reservada | fr: reserved | de: reserved Deut 33:21

סִפּוּן H5604 Art / N-ms (1×)

ceiling—interior roof covering

This term designates the ceiling or interior roof covering of a building. It appears in the account of Solomon's temple construction, describing how the interior was covered with cedar from floor to ceiling. The word indicates the upper interior surface that completes the room's enclosure. This architectural element was important for both structural and aesthetic purposes, receiving the same quality wood treatment as the walls and floor.

(1×) Architectural term for ceiling or interior roof covering (1 Kgs 6:15). The temple's interior was completely paneled in cedar, with this term specifically denoting the overhead surface. Cross-language evidence shows consistent understanding: Spanish 'techo' (ceiling/roof), French 'ceiling,' German 'ceiling.' The detail emphasizes the comprehensive wood covering of the sacred space. ROOFTOP HOUSETOP

en: the-ceiling | es: el-techo | fr: le-ceiling | de: der-ceiling 1Kgs 6:15

סָפַף H5605 V-Hitpael-Inf (1×)

stand at threshold—serve as doorkeeper

This reflexive verb means to position oneself at the threshold, serving as a doorkeeper or guard. The psalmist uses it to express his devotion to God's house, declaring he would rather stand at the threshold of God's temple than dwell in the tents of wickedness. The imagery conveys humble service—even the lowliest position in God's presence surpasses any worldly privilege. The Hitpael stem emphasizes deliberate self-positioning and sustained standing.

(1×) Hitpael infinitive 'to stand at the threshold' or serve as doorkeeper (Ps 84:10). The psalmist prefers the humblest temple service—guarding the entrance—over dwelling with the wicked. The verb choice emphasizes voluntary positioning and sustained presence. Spanish 'estar en el umbral' captures the locational aspect, while the theological point values any proximity to God's presence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-stand-at-the-threshold | es: estar-en-el-umbral | fr: le-seuil | de: zu-stehen-bei-der-threshold Ps 84:10

סָפַק H5606a V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp (9×)

To strike, slap, or clap (hands or thigh); extended to clasping hands in alliance or splashing about in water.

At its core a verb of sharp physical contact – the crack of palm against palm or hand against thigh. It covers the full emotional register of clapping: Balak claps his hands in fury (Num 24:10), the nations clap in mockery over Jerusalem's fall (Lam 2:15), and Jeremiah strikes his thigh in remorse (Jer 31:19). Spanish renders the hostile gesture as 'batir palmas' (beat palms), while the celebratory mockery at Nineveh's fall draws 'aplauden' (applaud, Nah 3:19). Two rare extensions push beyond this core: in Isaiah 2:6, the Hiphil describes clasping hands with foreigners to seal alliances, and in Ezekiel 47:2, the rising waters of the temple vision reach the point of splashing or wading.

1. clap, strike (hands/body) (7×) The primary Qal meaning: to strike, slap, or clap – the hands together in anger (Num 24:10), in scorn (Job 27:23; 34:37), or against the thigh in grief and repentance (Jer 31:19; Ezek 21:17). Passersby clap over Jerusalem's ruin (Lam 2:15). Spanish 'batir palmas' and 'aplaudir' distinguish scornful from celebratory clapping, while Job 34:26 extends to God striking the wicked – a punitive slap. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: Clap, He-claps, He-strikes-them | es: Aplauden, Batirán-palmas, aplaudirá | fr: [סְפָקוֹ], [סְפָקָתִי], et-frappa-ensemble | de: [יִסְפֹּק], [יִשְׁפָּק], [סְפָק] Num 24:10; Job 27:23; Job 34:26; Job 34:37; Jer 31:19

2. clasp hands, make alliance (Hifil) (1×) Hiphil: to clasp or join hands with another person as a gesture of forming an alliance or pact. In Isaiah 2:6, Israel is condemned for clasping hands with foreigners – Spanish 'se dan la mano' (they give each other the hand) makes the diplomatic handshake gesture explicit. This is a distinct social action, not mere clapping, marking covenant or agreement through physical contact. JOINING AND ALLIANCE

en: they-clasp-hands | es: se-dan-la-mano | fr: [יִשְׁפִּיקוּן] | de: [יִשְׁפִּיקוּן] Isa 2:6

3. wallow, splash about (1×) A rare extension to splashing or wading through water, used of the rising waters in Ezekiel 47:2 that reach ankle-depth and cause wading. Spanish 'chapotear' (to splash about) captures the playful or laborious flailing motion. The semantic link to the core meaning is the repeated striking motion – here of limbs against water rather than hands against body. WASHING AND BATHING

en: and-shall-wallow | es: y-chapoteará | fr: [וְסָפַק] | de: [וְסָפַק] Jer 48:26

שָׂפַק H5606b V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)

suffice—be adequate or enough

This verb means to suffice, be enough, or be adequate for a purpose. Ben-hadad's boast to Ahab uses it mockingly, claiming that Samaria's dust won't suffice to give each of his soldiers a handful—hyperbolic language threatening total destruction. The root appears in rabbinic Hebrew and Aramaic with meanings around sufficiency and abundance. The single biblical occurrence shows the verb in a threatening military context.

(1×) Verb meaning 'to suffice' or 'be adequate,' used in Ben-hadad's taunt against Samaria (1 Kgs 20:10). The Aramean king boasts his forces are so numerous that the city's dust won't provide a handful for each soldier. The verb questions adequacy, here ironically suggesting Samaria's complete inadequacy against overwhelming force. Spanish 'alcanza' (reaches/suffices) captures the adequacy question. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: suffices | es: alcanza | fr: suffices | de: suffices 1Kgs 20:10

שֶׂפֶק H5607a Prep-b / N-ms (1×)

abundance/mockery—disputed term, possibly clapping or scorn

This word appears in a difficult passage in Job where Elihu warns Job about divine discipline. Traditional interpretation connects it to hand-clapping mockery or scornful gestures. Others see it as related to the noun for 'sufficiency' or 'abundance,' warning against wealth leading to contempt of correction. The textual and lexical difficulties have produced multiple scholarly proposals, some suggesting emendation. The context involves warning against responding wrongly to God's chastisement.

(1×) Disputed term in Job 36:18, possibly 'mockery' (hand-clapping scorn) or 'abundance.' Elihu warns Job not to let passion incite him to contemptuous response to divine discipline. Some connect to hand-clapping gestures of derision. Spanish 'golpe' (blow/strike) suggests forceful action. The hapax status and unclear context make confident translation impossible—textual emendation has been proposed. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: with-abundance | es: con-golpe | fr: dans-בְּסֶפֶק | de: [בְּסֶפֶק] Job 36:18

שֹׂפֶק H5607b N-msc / 3ms (1×)

sufficiency/plenty—adequate supply

This noun designates sufficiency, plenty, or adequate supply. Zophar uses it in describing the wicked person's fate, declaring that in the fullness of his sufficiency, distress will seize him. The irony is pointed—at the very moment when the wicked has everything he needs, trouble arrives. The term emphasizes having reached a state of adequate provision or abundance, making the reversal more dramatic.

(1×) Noun meaning sufficiency or plenty, used of the wicked person's prosperity (Job 20:22). Zophar describes the ironic reversal: at the height of abundance, disaster strikes. The term emphasizes adequate provision or surplus. Spanish 'suficiencia' directly translates the concept. The passage illustrates wisdom literature's theme that wicked prosperity is illusory and temporary. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: his-sufficiency | es: su-suficiencia | fr: son-שְׂפֶקוֹ-lui | de: [שְׂפֶקוֹ] Job 20:22

סָפַר H5608a V-Piel-Imperf-1cp (107×)

To count, number (Qal); to recount, narrate, declare (Piel); to be counted (Nifal); to be told (Pual) — linking enumeration with storytelling.

Saphar beautifully illustrates how ancient Hebrew thought connected counting and recounting. The same root that means 'number the stars' (Gen 15:5) also means 'tell the story' (Gen 24:66) — as if to say that narrating is a kind of careful accounting of events, and counting is a form of declaration. The Qal stem handles enumeration, the Piel shifts to narration and proclamation, and the passive stems (Nifal, Pual) reverse each respectively. The cognate noun sepher ('book, scroll, document') further confirms the root's association with organized, deliberate recording. Cross-linguistic evidence is revealing: languages like Spanish split cleanly between contar ('to count' and 'to tell a story' — preserving the Hebrew ambiguity), while German distinguishes zählen ('count') from erzählen ('narrate'), and Korean separates 세다 from 이야기하다, showing that many languages eventually split what Hebrew holds together.

1. Piel: to recount, tell, narrate (64×) Piel: to recount, tell, narrate, declare — the largest sense at 64 occurrences, covering the intensive stem's core meaning of verbal narration and declaration. This is the saphar of storytelling: Abraham's servant 'told' everything that had happened (Gen 24:66), Joseph's brothers 'recounted' their dreams (Gen 37:9-10), and the Psalmist pledges to 'declare' God's works (Ps 9:1; 73:28; 78:4). The Piel intensification suggests not casual mention but deliberate, thorough recounting. Spanish contar and declarar, French raconter, and Korean 선포하다/이야기하다 all select narrative-declaration vocabulary. The imperative forms — 'tell me!' (Gen 37:16; Judg 7:13) — underscore the conversational urgency of this sense. COUNTING AND NARRATING

en: I-declared, I-have-declared, I-will-declare | es: Cuéntame, Declararé, Y-contó | fr: [ויספר], et-dit, et-raconter | de: [ואספרה], berichte-, haben-told Gen 24:66; Gen 29:13; Gen 37:9; Gen 37:10; Gen 40:8

2. Qal: to count, number (27×) Qal: to count, number, reckon — 27 occurrences covering basic enumeration in the simple stem. God tells Abraham to 'count the stars, if you are able to count them' (Gen 15:5), Joseph stopped counting grain because it was beyond measure (Gen 41:49), and the census counting of Levites and warriors appears throughout Numbers and Chronicles. German zählen and Korean 세다 both select arithmetic-counting vocabulary, cleanly distinguished from the 'narrate' language these same languages use for sense 1. The participial form sopher ('counter, scribe') becomes a noun in its own right, linking the act of counting to the scribal profession (Isa 33:18). COUNTING AND NARRATING

en: He-counts, I-count-them, You-have-counted | es: Los-contaré, Y-contarás, Y-contaréis | fr: [ויספר], [וויספרם], [וספרו] | de: Buch, [ויספרם], [יספור] Gen 15:5; Gen 41:49; Lev 15:13; Lev 15:28

3. Nifal: to be counted, be numbered (8×) Nifal: to be counted, be numbered — 8 occurrences in the passive stem, almost always in contexts of uncountable multitude. Hagar is told her descendants 'cannot be counted for multitude' (Gen 16:10), Jacob's descendants likewise (Gen 32:12), and Solomon's imported laborers 'were numbered' at 153,600 (2 Chr 2:17). Spanish podían ser contados, German gezählt werden kann, and French can-être-compta all render the passive counting faithfully. The Nifal of saphar becomes a formulaic expression for the overwhelming abundance of divine blessing — what cannot be counted testifies to God's generosity. BE COUNTED NUMBERED

en: and-were-numbered, can-be-counted, could-be-counted | es: Y-fueron-contados, podían-ser-contados, puede-ser-calculado | fr: [ויספרו], [יספרו], can-être-compta | de: er-erzaehlt, gezählt-werden-kann, kann-sein-counted Gen 16:10; Gen 32:12; 1Kgs 3:8; 1Kgs 8:5; 1Chr 23:3

4. Pual: to be told, be declared (5×) Pual: to be told, be declared — 5 occurrences in the passive of the Piel, receiving narration rather than performing it. 'Shall it be told him that I would speak?' (Job 37:20); 'what had not been told them they shall see' (Isa 52:15); 'a posterity shall serve him; it shall be recounted to the Lord for a generation' (Ps 22:30). This is the passive counterpart of sense 1 — events and divine deeds as objects of narration that reach their audience. Habakkuk 1:5 uses it to dramatic effect: God announces a work 'you would not believe though it were told you.' The Pual form emphasizes the reception side of the storytelling act. COUNTING AND NARRATING

en: it-shall-be-told, it-were-told, shall-it-be-told- | es: les-fue-contado, se-contará, sea-contada | fr: il-comptera, il-racontera, le-il-racontera | de: Buch, der-er-erzaehlt, er-erzaehlt Job 37:20; Ps 22:30; Ps 88:11; Isa 52:15; Hab 1:5

5. Piel: to enumerate exhaustively (3×) Piel with exhaustive-enumeration force: to count thoroughly, enumerate completely — 3 occurrences where the Piel intensification pushes saphar back toward its counting meaning but with emphatic thoroughness or declared impossibility. 'Who can number the clouds?' (Job 38:37); 'I would declare and speak of them, but they are more than can be numbered' (Ps 40:5); 'I can count all my bones' (Ps 22:17). German ich kann zählen and Spanish puedo contar use counting vocabulary rather than narration words, confirming that the Piel here recovers the enumeration sense under intensive force. This small cluster bridges the counting and declaring poles of the root. COUNTING AND NARRATING

en: I-can-count, can-count, than-can-be-numbered | es: de-contar, puede-contar, puedo-contar | fr: de-raconter, raconter | de: als-kann-sein-gezählt, er-erzaehlt, ich-kann-zählen Job 38:37; Ps 22:17; Ps 40:5

סֹפֵר H5608b Art / N-ms (54×)

A scribe, secretary, or learned official; either an individual court officer or a professional class of writers.

Derived from the verb meaning 'to count' or 'to recount,' the sofer is someone who handles written records – whether as a royal secretary managing state correspondence or as a member of a learned scribal guild. In the monarchic period, the scribe is a powerful court official: Shaphan the scribe reads the newly found Torah scroll to King Josiah (2 Kgs 22:8-10), and Baruch serves as Jeremiah's personal scribe (Jer 36:26, 32). By the post-exilic period, Ezra 'the scribe' (Ezra 7:6) represents a new type: the Torah scholar whose authority rests on expertise in Scripture rather than royal appointment.

1. scribe, royal secretary (48×) A scribe or royal secretary – an individual court official responsible for administrative documents, official correspondence, and state records. This is the dominant sense (48x), covering figures like Shebna the secretary (2 Kgs 18:18), Shaphan the scribe who reads the Torah to Josiah (2 Kgs 22:8), and Baruch son of Neriah who writes at Jeremiah's dictation (Jer 36:32). Spanish 'el escriba,' French 'le scribe,' and the muster-officer nuance in Judg 5:14 all point to an official with both literary and administrative authority. SCRIBE SECRETARY

en: the-elders, the-scribe, the-secretary | es: el-escriba | fr: compter, le-livre, le-scribe | de: das-Buch, der-scribe, zaehlen Judg 5:14; 2Sam 8:17; 2Sam 20:25; 2Kgs 12:10; 2Kgs 18:18

2. scribes, learned class (6×) Scribes as a professional class or guild, used in the plural construct to refer to organized groups of literate officials. The 'families of scribes' at Jabez (1 Chr 2:55) suggests hereditary guilds; the Levitical scribes overseeing temple work (2 Chr 34:13) form a distinct professional corps; and the 'scribes of the king' who draft royal edicts (Esth 3:12, 8:9) are a bureaucratic body. Spanish 'escribas de' and the plural forms mark this collective, institutional sense that anticipates the later rabbinic scribal class. SCRIBE SECRETARY

en: scribes, scribes-of | es: escribas, escribas-de | fr: compter, scribes | de: [סופרי], scribes, zaehlen 1Kgs 4:3; 1Chr 2:55; 2Chr 34:13; Esth 3:12; Esth 8:9

סֵפֶר H5609 Prep-b / N-msc (5×)

book, written record (Aramaic); a scroll or register used for official documentation

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew sepher, this noun denotes a written document, book, or official record. In Ezra it refers to royal archives and the book of Moses, while in Daniel 7:10 the plural describes heavenly books opened at the divine tribunal. The term underscores the ancient Near Eastern practice of meticulous record-keeping, whether for imperial administration or sacred law.

(5×) A written document or official record — used for royal archives (Ezra 4:15; 6:1) and the book of the Law of Moses (Ezra 6:18). Spanish 'libro' and French 'livre' consistently render this as 'book,' while English translations use 'book' or 'records,' pointing to the administrative and legal function of the term. In Daniel 7:10 the plural 'sifrin' denotes heavenly books of judgment opened before the Ancient of Days. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-books, in-book-of, in-the-book-of | es: en-el-libro-de, en-libro-de, en-libro-de- | fr: dans-le-livre, et-livre, livre | de: Schreiber, [וספרין], [סְפָרִיא] Ezra 4:15; Ezra 6:1; Ezra 6:18; Dan 7:10

סְפָר H5610 Art / N-ms (1×)

census/enumeration—official counting

This late Hebrew noun means enumeration or census. It appears in Chronicles' account of Solomon's workforce organization, describing the count of foreign residents in Israel. The term represents the formal administrative process of numbering people for labor assignments. The root connection to the verb 'to count' is clear. This vocabulary reflects the bureaucratic language appropriate to royal building projects.

(1×) Administrative term for census or enumeration (2 Chr 2:17), specifically of Solomon's workforce. The noun derives from the counting verb, representing formal numbering for organizational purposes. Chronicles uses bureaucratic vocabulary fitting the extensive temple construction project. The term indicates systematic assessment of available labor resources among resident aliens. GEOGRAPHY AND

SPACE
en: the-census | es: el-censo | fr: [הַ]סְּפָר | de: [הַ]סְּפָר 2Chr 2:17

סְפָר H5611 N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)
Sephar—place in Arabia, boundary location
Sephar appears as a geographical boundary marker in the Table of Nations, defining the eastern extent of the Joktan-ite tribes' territory in Arabia. The location has been tentatively identified with Ẓafār, an ancient Himyarite capital in southern Arabia, though this identification faces philological challenges. The name with directional suffix indicates 'toward Sephar,' showing it functioned as a known landmark. Precise location remains uncertain despite scholarly proposals.

(1×) Place name marking the eastern boundary of Joktan's descendants' territory (Gen 10:30). Traditionally identified with ancient Ẓafār in southern Arabia, capital of the Himyarites, though phonological correspondence is questioned. The directional form 'Sepharah' (toward Sephar) indicates landmark status. Septuagint 'Σωφηρα' shows Greek transliteration attempt. Geographic details remain debated. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Sephar | es: Sefarah | fr: Sephar | de: nach-Sefar Gen 10:30

סֵפֶר H5612a Conj-w / N-mp (187×)
A written document: a book or scroll, a letter or epistle, or an official legal certificate such as a deed of divorce or royal decree.
An ancient Semitic loan-word (from Akkadian shipru, 'message, missive') that became Hebrew's primary term for anything committed to writing. Its range stretches from the grand — 'the Book of the Law' found in Josiah's temple (2 Kgs 22:8) and 'the Book of the Wars of the LORD' (Num 21:14) — down to the grimly practical: Jezebel's forged letters (1 Kgs 21:8) and the certificate of divorce in Deuteronomy 24:1. Spanish captures the breadth well, using 'libro' for sacred and historical scrolls but 'carta' for personal correspondence and 'documento' for legal certificates. The word's Akkadian ancestry as a royal dispatch shines through in the letter and decree senses, while its broader evolution into 'book' reflects Israel's growing literary culture.

1. book or scroll (142×) A book or scroll — a substantial written composition, whether historical, legal, prophetic, or liturgical. 'The Book of the Covenant' (Exod 24:7), 'the Book of Jashar' (Josh 10:13), and 'the Book of the Law' (Deut 31:26) all use this sense. Spanish 'libro' and German 'Buch' consistently render these references, while French sometimes retains the English loan 'book' in the multilingual data. The 142 occurrences make this the overwhelmingly dominant sense, reflecting sefer's status as the standard Hebrew term for any extended written work. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: book-of, scroll-of, the-book-of | es: el-libro-de, libro-de | fr: book-de, le-book-de, livre-de | de: Buch-von, book-von, der-book-von Gen 5:1; Exod 24:7; Deut 31:26; Josh 1:8; Josh 10:13

2. letter or epistle (29×) A letter or epistle — a shorter written communication sent from one person to another. David's fateful letter to Joab ordering Uriah's death (2 Sam 11:14-15), Jezebel's forged letters sealed with Ahab's seal (1 Kgs 21:8), and the diplomatic correspondence of the exile period all employ this sense. Spanish shifts decisively to 'carta' and 'cartas,' and German uses 'Briefe,' clearly distinguishing this from the 'book' sense. The original Akkadian meaning of shipru as a royal dispatch survives most clearly here. LETTERS AND WRITINGS
en: a-letter, letters, the-letter | es: carta, cartas, documentos | fr: le-lettre, le-livre, lettres | de: Briefe, Buch, das-Buch 2Sam 11:14; 2Sam 11:15; 1Kgs 21:8

3. official document or certificate (14×) An official document or legal certificate — a formal instrument with binding legal force. The 'bill of divorcement' (sefer keritut, Deut 24:1, 3; Isa 50:1; Jer 3:8) is the paradigm case, but this also covers property deeds (Jer 32:11-12) and royal decrees (Esth 9:25). Spanish distinguishes this with 'documento' and 'carta de,' while German sometimes uses 'Scheidbrief' for the divorce certificate. The formality and legal consequence set these apart from both literary scrolls and personal letters. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: certificate-of, document-of, in-document-of | es: carta-de, documento, documento-de | fr: dans-le-livre, der-livre, document-de | de: Buch, das-Buch, der-Schreiber Deut 24:1; Deut 24:3; Esth 9:25; Isa 50:1; Jer 3:8

4. (2×) The literature and learning of a foreign culture — specifically the 'writings and language of the Chaldeans' (Dan 1:4, 17), where sefer denotes not a single document but an entire scribal-scholarly tradition. Spanish uses 'escritura' ('writing' as a discipline), and German 'Buch' obscures the distinction. Daniel and his companions were trained in Babylonian sefer — the cuneiform literary corpus — making this a metonymic extension from 'written document' to 'written learning' as a cultural domain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: writing | es: escritura | fr: livre | de: Buch Dan 1:4; Dan 1:17

סִפְרָה H5612b Prep-b / N-fsc / 2ms (1×)
in Your book—divine record of tears
This form combines the preposition 'in' with 'Your book,' referring to God's record-keeping. The psalmist appeals to God's careful documentation of his suffering, asking whether tears are recorded in the divine book. The imagery presents God as keeping accounts of human experiences, especially afflictions. Though some scholars consider it a gloss, it represents biblical theology of God's attentive awareness and memory of his servants' struggles.

(1×) Prepositional phrase 'in Your book,' part of prayer asking God to record the psalmist's tears (Ps 56:8). The metaphor depicts divine record-keeping, God maintaining accounts of human suffering. Some textual critics view it as scribal addition, but it fits biblical theology of God's attentive memory. The 'book' motif appears frequently for divine knowledge and judgment records. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-Your-book | es: en-tu-libro | fr: dans-livre | de: in-dein-book Ps 56:8

סֵפֶר H5613 N-msc (6×)
Scribe or secretary; an Aramaic term for a learned official, used of Persian administrators and of Ezra.
An Aramaic masculine noun meaning scribe or secretary, appearing exclusively in the book of Ezra. It designates both Persian imperial secretaries – such as Shimshai the scribe who wrote accusations against the Jews (Ezra 4:8-9,17,23) – and Ezra himself, described as 'a scribe skilled in the law of Moses' (Ezra 7:12,21). The word is the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew sopher, reflecting the bilingual administrative world of the Persian period. As applied to Ezra, it carries a doubled significance: he is both a government-recognized official and a scholar of Torah. The Spanish 'escriba' and French 'scribe' directly translate the professional title, while German 'Schreiber' (writer) captures the root meaning of one who writes.

scribe (6×) A scribe or secretary in the Persian imperial administration, used in the Aramaic portions of Ezra for both hostile officials and for Ezra himself. In Ezra 4:8-23, Shimshai serves as the secretary who drafts letters opposing Jewish reconstruction of Jerusalem's walls. In Ezra 7:12,21, the same title is applied to Ezra as a scholar-scribe authorized by Artaxerxes to teach God's law. The Aramaic saphar corresponds to Hebrew sopher but carries the specific flavor of Persian-era bureaucracy. Spanish 'escriba' and French 'scribe' render the professional role, while the construct form 'scribe of' in 7:12 ('scribe of the law of the God of heaven') elevates the title from mere secretary to authoritative interpreter. SCRIBE SECRETARY
en: scribe, scribe-of | es: escriba, escriba-de | fr: livre, scribe | de: Schreiber Ezra 4:8; Ezra 4:9; Ezra 4:17; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 7:12

סְפָרַד H5614 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)
Sepharad—place of exile, possibly Sardis
Sepharad appears in Obadiah as a location where Jerusalem's exiles were living. Traditional identifications range from Sardis in Asia Minor (equated with Assyrian Sparda) to locations in Media. Jewish tradition eventually associated it with Spain, giving rise to the term 'Sephardic' for Spanish Jewry. The precise location remains debated, with the Behistun inscription's Sparda (Sardis) being a leading candidate. The context indicates a significant diaspora community.

(1×) Place of Jewish exile mentioned in Obadiah's restoration oracle (Obad 1:20). Most scholars connect with Sparda/Sardis in Asia Minor based on Assyrian inscriptions, though Media locations have also been proposed. Later Jewish tradition identified it as Spain, creating the designation 'Sephardic.' The Septuagint 'Εφραθα' offers a different identification. The site housed an exiled community awaiting return. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: in-Sepharad | es: en-Sefarad | fr: en-Sépharad, | de: in-Sefarad Obad 1:20

סְפֹרָה H5615 N-fp (1×)

numbers—innumerable quantities

This plural noun means numbers or countable quantities. The psalmist uses it to confess inability to number God's righteous acts and deliverances—they exceed his counting ability. The term emphasizes quantification and enumeration. Some textual witnesses read this as related to 'books/writings' instead, but the context of innumerability fits 'numbers' well. The vocabulary expresses the overwhelming abundance of divine mercies beyond human calculation.

(1×) Plural noun 'numbers' in confession that God's righteous deeds exceed counting (Ps 71:15). The psalmist admits inability to enumerate divine salvations and righteousness. Some versions read 'writings' (connecting to 'book'), but 'numbers' fits the context of incalculability. Spanish 'números' and French 'nombre' support the counting interpretation. The phrase emphasizes God's inexhaustible faithfulness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-numbers | es: números | fr: nombre | de: der-numbers Ps 71:15

סְפָרְוִי H5616 Conj-w (1×)

the Sepharvites—people from Sepharvaim

This gentilicadjective designates people from Sepharvaim, a city whose inhabitants were relocated to Samaria by the Assyrians after the northern kingdom's fall. The Sepharvites brought their pagan religious practices, including the horrific worship of Adrammelech and Anammelech involving child sacrifice. Their presence in Samaria contributed to the religious syncretism that characterized the post-exilic Samaritan community. The exact location of their homeland Sepharvaim remains disputed.

(1×) Gentilicnoun 'the Sepharvites,' people from Sepharvaim resettled in Samaria by Assyria (2 Kgs 17:31). They maintained their native worship including child sacrifice to Adrammelech and Anammelech. Spanish 'sefarvitas' and French 'Sepharvim' show standard gentilicformation. Their religious practices contributed to the mixed worship system that developed in post-conquest Samaria. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-the-Sepharvim | es: y-los-sefarvitas | fr: et-le-Sepharvim | de: und-der-Sepharvim 2Kgs 17:31

סְפַרְוַיִם H5617 N-proper-mp (7×)

Sepharvaim; a Mesopotamian city conquered by Assyria, whose people were resettled in Samaria after the northern exile.

A proper noun in dual form designating the Mesopotamian city Sepharvaim, traditionally identified with the twin city of Sippar on the Euphrates between Baghdad and Babylon. It appears in two historical contexts: the Assyrian resettlement of foreign peoples into Samaria (2 Kgs 17:24,31), and the boasts of Assyrian envoys challenging Jerusalem's trust in God (2 Kgs 18:34; 19:13; Isa 36:19; 37:13). The dual ending may reflect the city's two halves – Sippar of Shamash and Sippar of Anunitu – on opposite sides of a canal.

Sepharvaim (city name) (7×) The proper name of a Mesopotamian city conquered by the Assyrian empire, appearing in dual form (Sepharvaim) possibly reflecting its two quarters: Sippar of Shamash and Sippar of Anunitu, situated on opposite sides of a canal near modern Abu Habba, Iraq. In 2 Kgs 17:24,31, its inhabitants were deported to Samaria after the fall of the northern kingdom, bringing their gods Adrammelech and Anammelech. In 2 Kgs 18:34 and Isa 36:19, the Rabshakeh cites its conquest as proof that no god can withstand Assyria, making it a test case for the theological question of divine power versus imperial might. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: (Sepharvaim), Sepharvaim, [Sepharim] | es: Sefarvaim, [K], de-Sefarvaim | fr: (Sepharvaim), Sepharvaim, [Sepharim] | de: Sepharvaim, [Sepharim], [סְפָרוִים] 2Kgs 17:24; 2Kgs 17:31; 2Kgs 18:34; 2Kgs 19:13

סֹפֶרֶת H5618 N-proper-ms (2×)

Sophereth (personal name); ancestor of returned exiles, temple servants

This personal name identifies a family line among the returned exiles, specifically among 'the sons of the servants of Solomon'—a group of temple servants who traced their lineage to Solomon's administrative staff. The name appears in parallel lists: Ezra 2:55 and Nehemiah 7:57, both cataloging families who returned from Babylonian captivity to resettle Jerusalem. The slight spelling variation (ha-Soferet vs. Sophereth) reflects the same family group, preserving their claim to service in the restored temple community.

(2×) A proper name designating a family of temple servants among the post-exilic returnees. Both occurrences are in genealogical lists ('sons of Sophereth'), indicating this was a recognized clan within the larger group of 'Solomon's servants.' The presence in both Ezra and Nehemiah's parallel lists confirms their place in the restored community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sophereth, ha-Soferet | es: Soferet | fr: [הַסֹּפֶרֶת], [סוֹפֶרֶת] | de: [הַסֹּפֶרֶת], [סוֹפֶרֶת] Ezra 2:55; Neh 7:57

סָקַל H5619 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp / 1cp (22×)

To stone (as judicial execution); to clear stones from a field (Piel); to hurl stones at someone in hostility (Piel intensive).

The Hebrew verb saqal carries the grim weight of Israel's most public form of capital punishment — execution by stoning. In its Qal stem, it overwhelmingly describes the communal act of pelting an offender to death, a penalty prescribed for blasphemy, idolatry, Sabbath-breaking, and adultery (Deut 13:10; 22:24). The infinitive absolute saqol underscores the finality: 'he shall surely be stoned' (Exod 19:13; 21:28). Yet the same root takes a surprisingly constructive turn in the Piel, where it means to clear stones from agricultural land — Isaiah's beloved vineyard was 'cleared of stones' before planting (Isa 5:2), and the highway of return is prepared by stone-clearing (Isa 62:10). Spanish apedrear and French lapider capture the violent sense, while German steinigen holds both the punitive and hostile senses together. A third, rarer Piel intensive use appears when Shimei hurls stones at the fleeing David (2 Sam 16:6, 13) — not judicial execution but personal hostility expressed through the same deadly medium.

1. stone as punishment (18×) The judicial act of stoning to death — pelting a person or animal with stones as a communal execution prescribed by Mosaic law. With 18 occurrences, this is the dominant sense, covering both active Qal forms ('and they stoned him,' Josh 7:25; 1 Kgs 21:13) and passive Nifal/Pual constructions ('he shall be stoned,' Exod 19:13). Spanish apedrear, French lapider, and German steinigen all converge on dedicated execution-by-stoning vocabulary. The penalty appears for offenses including idolatry (Deut 13:10), Sabbath violation (Num 15:35-36), and a goring ox that kills (Exod 21:28). STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-shall-stone-her, and-stone-him, and-stoned | es: Fue-apedreado, Y-lo-apedrearás, apedrear | fr: –être-stoned, et-devra-pierre-sa, et-ils—pierre-moi | de: er-soll-sein-stoned, sie-wird-Stein-uns, soll-sein-stoned Exod 8:26; Exod 17:4; Exod 19:13; Exod 21:28

2. clear away stones (2×) To clear away stones from a field or path, preparing the ground for cultivation or passage — a Piel denominative that reverses the violent associations of the root. Only 2 occurrences, both in Isaiah: the vineyard owner 'cleared it of stones' before planting (Isa 5:2), and the prophetic command to 'clear out the stones' from the highway of return (Isa 62:10). Spanish quitad piedras and the agricultural context make this sense unmistakable. The semantic shift from 'hurl stones at' to 'remove stones from' is a striking example of how Hebrew verbal stems can invert a root's direction. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: and-he-cleared-stones-from-it, clear-away | es: quitad, y-quitó-piedras | fr: [ויסקלהו], [סקלו] | de: [ויסקלהו], [סקלו] Isa 5:2; Isa 62:10

3. hurl stones at (2×) To hurl or cast stones at someone in hostility, distinct from formal judicial stoning — a Piel intensive describing personal aggression. Found in 2 occurrences, both describing Shimei's attack on David during Absalom's rebellion: 'he threw stones at David' and 'throwing stones alongside him' (2 Sam 16:6, 13). Spanish apedreaba and French jeta des pierres both render this with vocabulary of casting or throwing rather than execution, confirming that translators perceive a different register: this is an act of political rage, not a legal sentence. THROWING AND CASTING
en: and-he-threw, and-throwing | es: y-apedreaba | fr: et-il-jeta, et-jetant | de: und-er-warf, und-werfend 2Sam 16:6; 2Sam 16:13

סַר H5620 Adj-fs (3×)
sullen, resentful; in a mood of stubborn displeasure or gloom
This adjective describes a sullen, resentful, or gloomy emotional state—stubborn displeasure that withdraws inward. King Ahab went home 'resentful and sullen' (1 Kings 20:43) after the prophet condemned him for releasing Ben-hadad. First Kings 21:4-5 repeats the pattern: Ahab lies down 'sullen and resentful' because Naboth refused to sell his vineyard. Jezebel asks 'Why is your spirit so sullen?'—recognizing his mood of stubborn, brooding anger. The word captures that toxic combination of thwarted desire, wounded pride, and resentful withdrawal—refusing comfort, nursing grievance, stewing in disappointed entitlement.

(3×) Both contexts show Ahab's characteristic response to not getting his way: sullen withdrawal rather than healthy acceptance. After the prophet's rebuke (20:43), he goes home in this mood—offended at being confronted. When Naboth refuses the vineyard deal (21:4-5), Ahab takes to his bed sullen and petulant—the powerful king pouting like a child. Jezebel's question identifies the spirit as 'sar'—stubborn resentfulness. Cross-linguistic renderings use 'sullen/sombrío/triste'—capturing the dark, brooding quality. The adjective diagnoses a dangerous spiritual state: when legitimate authority or boundary offends our will, do we submit or sulk? AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 1284 WITH 4 SENSES en: sullen | es: sombrío, triste | fr: sullen | de: sullen 1Kgs 20:43; 1Kgs 21:4; 1Kgs 21:5

סָרָב H5621 N-mp (1×)
rebels/briers—disputed term, possibly thorny opposition
This word appears in God's commissioning of Ezekiel, warning the prophet about his audience. Traditional interpretation sees 'rebels' or 'rebellious ones' based on Aramaic roots for contradiction and defiance. However, the pairing with another uncertain term has led some to read both as 'briers and thorns,' emphasizing hostile, painful opposition. The versions show confusion, with some reading participles and others taking the botanical interpretation. The context certainly indicates fierce resistance to Ezekiel's message.

(1×) Disputed term in Ezekiel's call narrative (Ezek 2:6), interpreted either as 'rebels/rebellious ones' or 'briers/thorns.' The Aramaic root suggests contradiction or defiance, but pairing with another plant-word has led to 'briers' reading. Vulgate and some Jewish interpretation favor 'rebels,' while others see thorny plants metaphor. Spanish 'cardos' (thistles) takes botanical view. Either way, the image warns of painful opposition. THORNS AND BRAMBLES
en: briers | es: cardos | fr: Sarépta | de: [סרבים] Ezek 2:6

סַרְבָּל H5622 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3mp (2×)
mantle, cloak, tunic (outer garment)
This noun refers to an outer garment—possibly a mantle, cloak, or tunic—though the exact nature of the garment is debated. Both occurrences are in Daniel 3, where Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego are thrown into the fiery furnace 'in their cloaks' along with their other garments. The word is likely a Persian loanword, reflecting the Babylonian setting. The miracle is heightened by noting they were bound in full dress yet emerged unsinged, without even the smell of fire on their garments.

(2×) An outer garment worn by the three young men in the fiery furnace (Daniel 3:21, 27). The context emphasizes they were cast in 'bound in their cloaks' (v. 21) and emerged with garments unharmed (v. 27). Cross-linguistic glosses suggest 'cloak' or 'tunic,' though 'trousers' is also proposed. The term is likely borrowed from Persian. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-their-cloaks, in-their-cloaks | es: en-sus-túnicas, y-sus-túnicas | fr: [בסרבליהון], [וסרבליהון] | de: [בסרבליהון], [וסרבליהון] Dan 3:21; Dan 3:27

סַרְגּוֹן H5623 N-proper-ms (1×)
Sargon—Assyrian king, conqueror of Samaria
Sargon II ruled Assyria from 722–705 BC and completed the conquest of Samaria begun by his predecessor. Though mentioned only once in the Bible, Assyrian records extensively document his reign and military campaigns. His name means 'the king is legitimate' or 'firm/true king,' possibly reflecting political circumstances of his accession. Isaiah mentions him in connection with the siege of Ashdod, demonstrating Assyrian power extending into Philistine territory. He was father of the famous Sennacherib.

(1×) Personal name of Assyrian king Sargon II (reigned 722–705 BC), mentioned in Isaiah 20:1. Though appearing only once biblically, he was historically significant as Samaria's final conqueror and father of Sennacherib. His Akkadian name Šarru-kēnu means 'the king is legitimate.' Septuagint variants show textual confusion with later recognition of the name's importance from Assyrian inscriptions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Sargon | es: Sargón | fr: [סרגון] | de: [סרגון] Isa 20:1

סֶרֶד H5624 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)
Sered (personal name); son of Zebulun, ancestor of the Sardites
This personal name identifies one of the three sons of Zebulun listed in Genesis 46:14, among those who went down to Egypt with Jacob. Numbers 26:26 confirms Sered as the ancestor of the Sardite clan, one of the Zebulunite families enumerated in the wilderness census. The name thus marks both an individual patriarch and the clan that descended from him, preserving tribal memory through genealogical record.

(2×) A proper name for Zebulun's son and the ancestral head of the Sardite clan. Genesis 46:14 lists him among Jacob's descendants who migrated to Egypt; Numbers 26:26 traces the Sardite family back to 'Sered.' The cross-linguistic glosses uniformly preserve the name, with grammatical variations ('to Sered,' 'of Sered') reflecting case relationships. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Sered, to-Sered | es: Sered, de-Sered | fr: Sered, à-Sered | de: Sered, zu-Sered Gen 46:14; Num 26:26

סַרְדִי H5625 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
the Seredite—clan of Sered
This gentilicadjective designates members of the Seredite clan, descendants of Sered son of Zebulun. The term appears in the wilderness census recorded in Numbers, where each tribe's clans are enumerated for military organization. The Seredites formed one of three Zebulunite family groups. Such genealogical precision served both administrative purposes for the wilderness community and preserved tribal memory for later land distribution.

(1×) Gentilicnoun 'the Seredites,' designating the clan descended from Sered of Zebulun's tribe (Num 26:26). The term appears in census lists organizing Israel's fighting force by ancestral families. Spanish 'sereditas' follows standard pattern for tribal subdivision names. These genealogical markers maintained tribal structure and identity through wilderness wandering. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Seredite | es: los-sereditas | fr: le-Seredite | de: der-Seredite Num 26:26

בּוֹר הַסִּרָה H5626 N-proper (1×)

Sirah—cistern or place name near Hebron

Sirah appears as a location marker—specifically a cistern or well—where Joab's messengers found Abner and deceitfully brought him back to Hebron to be murdered. The name may derive from a root meaning 'turn aside' or relate to 'pot/cauldron.' Its proximity to Hebron made it a convenient location for the ambush. This geographical detail became significant in David's complex political history, as Abner's assassination created serious complications for unifying the kingdom.

(1×) Place name 'cistern of Sirah' or simply Sirah, location near Hebron where Joab's men intercepted Abner (2 Sam 3:26). The site served as staging point for Abner's assassination. Etymology possibly connects to 'turning aside' or 'pot,' though meaning remains uncertain. The cistern provided a natural landmark in the Hebron region. Translations uniformly preserve as proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sirah | es: ha-Sirah | fr: Sirah | de: Sirah 2Sam 3:26

סָרָה H5627 N-fs (8×)

Rebellion, revolt, apostasy; ceasing, withdrawal

The noun סָרָה, from the root סור ('to turn aside'), names the act of turning away from God or from what is right. In Deuteronomy and the prophets it is a charged theological term: preaching rebellion against the LORD (Deut 13:5), piling up revolt upon revolt (Isa 1:5; 31:6), and speaking falsehood and oppression (Isa 59:13). Jeremiah uses it of false prophets who speak rebellion (Jer 28:16; 29:32). One occurrence in Isaiah 14:6 preserves an older, more neutral meaning — a ceasing or withdrawal of oppression — where the turning aside is not moral defection but the stopping of relentless persecution.

1. rebellion, revolt, apostasy (7×) Rebellion, revolt, apostasy, or defection — the dominant sense covering seven of eight occurrences. It denotes a turning away from God, from covenant loyalty, or from moral truth. Deuteronomy 13:5 warns against anyone who 'has spoken rebellion against the LORD your God,' and Isaiah deploys it for Judah's persistent revolt (1:5; 31:6) and for speech that combines oppression with falsehood (59:13). Spanish 'rebeldia/rebelion' and French 'rebellion' uniformly confirm the sense of active defiance. In Deut 19:16, the word extends beyond specifically religious apostasy to any malicious legal accusation — a 'turning aside' from truth. REBELLION REVOLT

en: and-revolt, falsehood, have-deeply | es: falsedad, rebeldía, rebelión | fr: et-rébellion, mensonge, rébellion | de: Abfall, falsehood, rebellion Deut 13:5; Deut 19:16; Isa 1:5; Isa 31:6; Isa 59:13

2. ceasing, withdrawal, turning aside (1×) Ceasing, withdrawal, or turning aside — attested only in Isa 14:6, where the prophet describes a rod that struck peoples 'without ceasing' (bilti sarah). Here the word retains its etymological sense of 'turning aside' without the moral connotation of rebellion; it simply means stopping or relenting. English 'ceasing' and Spanish 'cesar' mark this as a temporal-aspectual concept — the absence of pause — distinct from the active defiance of sense 1. French 'rebellion' and German 'Abfall' in this verse likely reflect translators defaulting to the more common meaning. CEASING AND STOPPING en: ceasing | es: cesar | fr: rébellion | de: Abfall Isa 14:6

סָרַח H5628 Adj-mp (7×)

To spread out, hang down, extend; to sprawl in indolent excess; to become foul or rotten.

Originally describing something that goes free or extends beyond its proper bounds, this verb paints vivid pictures across its three senses. Tabernacle curtains 'hang down' over the sides (Exod 26:12-13), and Ezekiel's vine 'spreads out' its branches (Ezek 17:6). Amos transforms the physical image into moral critique: the wealthy 'sprawl' on their ivory couches (Amos 6:4, 7) — Spanish 'los extendidos' preserving the literal 'stretched out' while the prophetic context supplies the indictment. In Jer 49:7, the Niphal shifts to decay: wisdom has 'become foul,' with Spanish 'se ha podrido' ('has rotted') conveying the sense of something once good that has spoiled.

1. spread out, extend, hang down (4×) Spreading out, extending, or hanging down physically — describing material or organic extension beyond a boundary. Exod 26:12-13 uses it of tabernacle curtains that hang over and extend past the frame; Ezek 17:6 of a vine's branches spreading out; Ezek 23:15 of flowing turbans. Spanish 'colgará/colgantes-de' ('will hang/hanging with') and French 's'étendre' ('to extend') confirm the spatial, physical sense. HANGING SUSPENSION

en: flowing-with-, hanging, shall-hang | es: colgando, colgantes-de, colgará | fr: –pendre, s'étendre, tenture | de: [סרוחי], [סרחת], hanging Exod 26:12; Exod 26:13; Ezek 17:6; Ezek 23:15

2. sprawl, lounge in excess (2×) Sprawling or lounging in indolent excess — a figurative extension of 'spreading out' applied to human posture and moral laxity. Amos 6:4 denounces those 'sprawling' (סָרֲחִים) on their couches, and 6:7 warns the 'sprawlers' will lead the exile. Spanish 'los extendidos/y se extienden' retains the literal stretching image while the prophetic frame turns it into a picture of decadent indifference to national ruin. LAZINESS AND IDLENESS

en: and-sprawling, the-sprawlers | es: los-extendidos, y-se-extienden | fr: et-s'étendre, s'étendre | de: [וסרוחים], [סרוחים] Amos 6:4; Amos 6:7

3. become foul, go bad (Nifal) (1×) Becoming foul, going bad, rotting — the Niphal sense of deterioration or corruption. Jer 49:7 asks whether Edom's wisdom has 'become foul' (נִסְרְחָה), implying something once valuable that has decayed. Spanish 'se ha podrido' ('has rotted') and Hindi 'sad gai' ('has rotted') uniformly render this as organic spoilage, suggesting the root's 'going beyond bounds' can mean overripening into putrefaction. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: has-become-foul | es: se-ha-podrido | fr: [נסרחה] | de: [נסרחה] Jer 49:7

סֹרַח H5629 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

excess/overhang—portion extending beyond

This noun designates what remains over or extends beyond—specifically used of the tabernacle's tent covering that hung down beyond the structure. The term appears in Exodus instructions for the tent of meeting, describing how the extra length of the goat-hair covering should drape. The concept is excess or surplus, what extends past the needed measurement. This architectural detail ensured complete coverage and weather protection.

(1×) Architectural term for excess or overhang, specifically of the tabernacle's tent covering (Exod 26:12). The goat-hair curtain extended beyond the structure's dimensions, creating protective overhang. The term emphasizes the surplus portion that remains after primary coverage. Spanish 'lo que cuelga' (what hangs down) aptly describes the draping effect. The detail shows careful design for weather protection. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: and-overhang | es: Y-lo-que-cuelga | fr: et-overhang | de: und-overhang Exod 26:12

סִרְיֹן H5630 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (2×)

armor, coat of mail (protective body covering for battle)

This noun denotes defensive armor, specifically a coat of mail or breastplate worn in battle. Both occurrences are in Jeremiah's oracles against Babylon and Egypt, military contexts where warriors prepare for combat. In Jeremiah 46:4, soldiers are commanded to 'put on the armor' alongside other battle preparations. In 51:3, warriors are to 'raise themselves in their armor' against Babylon. The word is a variant form of the more common shiryon, emphasizing military readiness and protection.

(2×) Protective armor or coat of mail worn by soldiers in battle. The contexts in Jeremiah involve military mobilization: donning armor (46:4) and standing ready in armor (51:3). Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly render this as 'armor' or 'breastplate,' recognizing the military context of divine judgment enacted through warfare. ARMOR BREASTPLATE

en: in-his-armor, the-armor | es: en-su-coraza, las-corazas | fr: [בסרינו], [הסרינת] | de: [בסרינו], [הסרינת] Jer 46:4; Jer 51:3

סָרִיס H5631 N-msc (42×)

Eunuch, court official; a castrated male servant of the royal household, or more broadly a high-ranking royal officer

Derived from an Akkadian title meaning 'he who is the head,' this noun originally designated a high court official and only gradually narrowed to mean a castrated male. In the Hebrew Bible both senses coexist. Potiphar, a married man, is called a saris in Genesis 37:36, clearly indicating a title of office rather than a physical condition. Yet in passages like 2 Kings 9:32 and the book of Esther, the word plainly refers to eunuchs who served in the royal harem. Isaiah 56:3-5 memorably promises eunuchs a name 'better than sons and daughters,' acknowledging their marginalized status while affirming their place in God's community.

1. eunuch, castrated court servant (35×) A castrated male, especially one serving in a royal court or harem. The multilingual evidence is telling: English oscillates between 'eunuch' and 'officer,' while Spanish consistently uses 'eunuco' and German 'Kaemmerer' (chamberlain), reflecting the close association between castration and harem service. This sense dominates in the court narratives of Kings and Esther – the eunuchs who threw Jezebel from the window (2 Kgs 9:32), the doorkeepers of Esther's palace (Est 2:21), and Isaiah's oracle promising eunuchs an everlasting name (Isa 56:3-5) all presuppose the literal physical meaning. EUNUCH COURT OFFICIAL

en: an-officer, eunuch, eunuch-of | es: eunuco, eunuco-de, eunucos-de | fr: eunuch, eunuque | de: Eunuch, Kaemmerer, Kaemmerer-von 1Kgs 22:9; 2Kgs 8:6; 2Kgs 9:32; 2Kgs 20:18; 2Kgs 23:11

2. court official, royal officer (7×) A high-ranking royal functionary or court officer, used as a title of office without implying castration. Genesis applies this word to Potiphar (Gen 37:36; 39:1), who is married with a household – making the eunuch reading improbable. Similarly, Pharaoh's chief cupbearer and chief baker are called his sarisim (Gen 40:2,7). Spanish translates these as 'oficial de' and English as 'officer of,' distinguishing the administrative role from the physical condition. Samuel's warning that a king will take Israel's sons as his sarisim (1 Sam 8:15) likewise points to conscripted court service rather than castration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-court-officials, officer-of, officers-his | es: a-sus-oficiales, los-oficiales, oficial-de | fr: et-eunuque, eunuque, officers-de | de: Hofbeamten, [והסריסים], die-Eunuchen Gen 37:36; Gen 39:1; Gen 40:2; Gen 40:7; 1Sam 8:15

סָרַךְ H5632 N-mp (5×)

chief, high commissioner; a senior administrative official (Aramaic loanword from Persian)

Borrowed from Persian (sar, 'head, chief'), this Aramaic term designates a high-ranking government commissioner or prefect. All five occurrences cluster in Daniel 6, where three sarekhin are appointed over the 120 satraps of the Medo-Persian empire. Daniel himself is elevated among them, provoking the jealousy that leads to the lion's den episode.

(5×) A high-ranking imperial commissioner or prefect set over provincial governors — exclusively in Daniel 6:2-7, where Darius appoints three such officials to oversee the satraps. Spanish 'gobernadores' and French 'préfet' both capture the administrative authority of the role. The term is a Persian loanword reflecting the bureaucratic vocabulary that entered Aramaic during the Achaemenid period. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: commissioners, commissioners-of, the-commissioners | es: gobernadores, los-gobernadores, los-gobernadores-de | fr: préfet | de: [סרכ], [סרכיא], [סרכין] Dan 6:2; Dan 6:3; Dan 6:4; Dan 6:6; Dan 6:7

סֶרֶן H5633a Conj-w / N-mpc (21×)

Seren — lord, tyrant; the distinctive title for each of the five Philistine city-state rulers

A loanword into Hebrew — likely from a pre-Semitic Aegean or Anatolian language — used exclusively for the rulers of the five Philistine city-states: Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, and Gath. Unlike the broader Hebrew terms for 'king' or 'prince,' seren is a technical political title reserved for Philistine governance, appearing only in the plural. The word may be cognate with Greek tyrannos. These lords act collectively in key narratives: negotiating with Delilah against Samson (Judg 16), returning the captured ark (1 Sam 5-6), and rejecting David's service (1 Chr 12:20).

lord, ruler (Philistine title) (21×) The distinctive title for each of the five Philistine city-state rulers, always appearing in the plural (seranim). Used exclusively of Philistine political leadership in Joshua 13:3, Judges 3:3 and 16:5-30, 1 Samuel 5-7 and 29, and 1 Chronicles 12:20. The term functions as a loanword restricted to this one political context, never applied to Israelite or other rulers. Spanish 'príncipes,' German 'Herren,' and English 'lords' all approximate the sense of sovereign authority, though none captures the specifically Philistine connotation of the original. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-lords-of, and-lords-of, and-to-your-lords | es: Y-los-príncipes-de, a-los-príncipes-de, gobernantes | fr: -le-lords-de, et-lords-de, et-à-ton-lords | de: -der-herren-von, Herren-von, der-herren Josh 13:3; Judg 3:3; Judg 16:5; Judg 16:8; Judg 16:18

סֶרֶן H5633b Conj-w / N-mpc (1×)

axle (of a wheeled cart or stand)

Refers to the bronze axles that allowed the wheels on Solomon's temple stands to rotate. This rare technical term appears only in the description of the ten bronze stands crafted for the temple, each equipped with wheels mounted on bronze axles. The word is cognate with Aramaic, suggesting it may be a loan-word for specialized metalwork vocabulary.

(1×) The bronze axles that supported rotating wheels on the ten movable stands in Solomon's temple (1 Kings 7:30). The Hebrew term is rare, occurring only once, and the ancient versions struggled with it—the Greek rendered it loosely as 'attachments.' The Aramaic cognate and the context of bronze-working suggest this was technical vocabulary for temple artisanry. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-axles-of | es: y-ejes-de | fr: et-axles-de | de: und-axles-von 1Kgs 7:30

סַרְעַפָּה H5634 N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

bough, branch (of a large tree)

Denotes the spreading branches of a great tree in Ezekiel's allegory of Pharaoh. The word appears uniquely in Ezekiel 31, where Egypt is pictured as a towering cedar with boughs multiplied beyond other trees. The term includes an infixed 'r' as a morphological marker, similar to Aramaic forms, pointing to its late linguistic character.

(1×) The luxuriant boughs of the allegorical tree representing Pharaoh's Egypt (Ezekiel 31:5). Ezekiel describes how the great cedar's branches multiplied 'because of abundant water'—the image of imperial power spreading its influence. The Hebrew word, with its Aramaic-like structure, fits Ezekiel's tendency to adopt Mesopotamian loan-words during the exile period. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS

en: its-boughs | es: sus-ramas | fr: branche | de: [סרעפתיו] Ezek 31:5

שָׂרַף H5635 Conj-w / V-Piel-Prtcpl-msc / 3ms (1×)

burn, one who burns (participial form)

A participial form of the common verb 'to burn,' appearing in Amos's vision of judgment where a relative comes to burn the bodies of the dead. The context is one of plague or military disaster so severe that normal burial is impossible and corpses must be cremated, a practice unusual in Israel. The burner comes to remove remains from the house in secrecy.

(1×) The one who burns bodies during the catastrophic judgment described in Amos 6:10. In this grim scene, a kinsman enters a house to carry out the dead 'and burn them'—likely because plague or siege conditions prevented normal burial. The multilingual glosses capture the participial sense: 'his burner' or 'the one who burns him,' emphasizing the personal involvement of a relative in this tragic task.

BURNING AND FIRE

en: and-his-burner | es: y-el-que-lo-quema | fr: et-cyprès | de: [ומסרפו] Amos 6:10

סִרְפָּד H5636 Art / N-ms (1×)

brier, nettle (a thorny desert plant)

A prickly, unwanted plant contrasted with the fragrant myrtle in Isaiah's vision of restoration. When God renews the land, the worthless brier will be replaced by the noble myrtle. Ancient versions identified it as a nettle or similar noxious weed. The specific botanical identity is uncertain, but the symbolic contrast is clear: judgment's thorns versus blessing's beauty.

(1×) The desert thorn or brier that will give way to myrtle in Isaiah 55:13, part of the prophet's vision where nature itself celebrates redemption. 'Instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle'—the transformation from cursed vegetation to fragrant beauty symbolizes the reversal of exile. The Greek and Latin versions rendered it as nettle or similar stinging plants, emphasizing its undesirable character. GRASS AND VEGETATION en: the-brier | es: la-ortiga | fr: [הסרפד] | de: [הסרפד] Isa 55:13

סָרַר H5637 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (17×)

Be stubborn, rebellious — to resist authority defiantly, especially Israel's obstinate refusal to obey God or a son's defiance of parents.

A verb capturing obstinate defiance and willful resistance to rightful authority. Hosea 4:16 provides the memorable simile: 'like a stubborn heifer, Israel is stubborn,' comparing the nation's spiritual intransigence to an animal that refuses the yoke. The participial form sorer appears as an adjective in the law of the rebellious son (Deuteronomy 21:18, 20) and in prophetic indictments of Israel as 'rebellious children' (Isaiah 30:1; 65:2). Even Proverbs 7:11 applies it to the wayward woman who is 'loud and rebellious.' Spanish 'rebelde' and French 'rebelle' consistently render the moral-spiritual dimension of active, willful resistance.

be stubborn, rebellious (17×) To be stubborn, obstinate, or rebellious, denoting willful resistance to legitimate authority — primarily God's covenant lordship over Israel but also parental authority. The participial forms function adjectivally in most occurrences: the 'stubborn and rebellious son' of Deuteronomy 21:18, Israel as a 'stubborn heifer' in Hosea 4:16, and 'rebellious children' in Isaiah 30:1. Psalm 66:7 and 68:6-18 use the substantive to denote 'the rebellious' as those who dwell in a parched land. Spanish 'rebelde' and English 'rebellious/stubborn' converge on the sense of active, defiant resistance. STUBBORNNESS REBELLION en: and-wayward, are-rebellious, children | es: es-rebelde, los-rebeldes, rebelde | fr: [סוררת], et-être-rebelle, le-être-rebelle | de: [וסררת], [סורר], [סוררים] Deut 21:18; Deut 21:20; Neh 9:29; Ps 66:7; Ps 68:6

סְתָו H5638 Art / N-ms (2×)

winter (cold/rainy season)

This noun refers to the winter season—the time of cold and rain in the land. The single biblical context is Song of Solomon 2:11, where the beloved declares 'the winter is past, the rain is over and gone,' signaling spring's arrival and the renewal of love. The word is a loanword from Aramaic, reflecting linguistic interchange. Winter represents dormancy and waiting, while its passing brings joy, growth, and the lover's reunion.

(2×) The winter season, characterized by cold and rain. Song of Solomon 2:11 celebrates winter's departure as a sign of spring and renewal. The Hebrew shows ketiv/qere variation (setaw/setayv), reflecting scribal traditions. Cross-linguistic glosses consistently identify this as 'winter,' with the Aramaic loanword indicating linguistic borrowing. WINTER COLD SEASON

en: [ketiv], the-winter | es: (el-invierno), [el-invierno] | fr: (l'hiver), [l'hiver] | de: [(הסתיו)], [[הסתו]] Song 2:11

סְתוּר H5639 N-proper-ms (1×)

Sethur (personal name: 'hidden, protected')

The name of the spy from the tribe of Asher sent by Moses to scout the land of Canaan. One of the twelve tribal representatives in Numbers 13, Sethur joined the majority report that discouraged Israel from entering the land. His name may mean 'hidden' or 'protected,' from the root meaning to conceal.

(1×) Sethur son of Michael, the spy representing Asher in the reconnaissance of Canaan (Numbers 13:13). He was among the ten who brought back the fearful report of giants and fortified cities. The name appears in Greek transliteration as Sathour or Thasour, reflecting variations in pronunciation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Sethur | es: Setur | fr: Sethur | de: Sethur Num 13:13

סָתַם H5640a V-Qal-Imp-ms (13×)

To stop up, shut, seal, or keep closed; by extension, to conceal or keep secret (of prophetic words or hidden knowledge).

A verb whose physical core — stopping up water sources — expands into the realm of secrecy and divine concealment. In 2 Kings 3:19 and 2 Chronicles 32, it describes the military tactic of blocking springs and wells. But in Daniel 8:26 and 12:4, it takes on prophetic weight: 'seal up the vision,' where closure becomes concealment until the appointed time. Spanish captures both poles well: 'cegar' for physically blocking water and 'cerrar/cierra' for sealing prophetic words. The passive participle in Psalm 51:6 ('in the hidden part') shows how physical stoppage became a metaphor for God's secret wisdom.

1. stop up, block (Qal) (7×) The core Qal active meaning: to physically stop up, block, or seal shut. Used of military well-plugging (2 Kgs 3:19, 25) and Hezekiah's spring-blocking strategy (2 Chr 32:3-4, 30). In Daniel 8:26 and 12:4, the same form extends to sealing prophetic words — 'shut up the words and seal the book.' Spanish 'cegaron' ('they blocked') and 'cierra' ('seal') track both the physical and prophetic applications. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-they-stopped-up, seal-up, shut-up | es: cegaron, cegaréis, cierra | fr: [ויסתמו], [לסתום], [סתם] | de: [וויסתמו], [לסתום], [סתם] 2Kgs 3:19; 2Kgs 3:25; 2Chr 32:3; 2Chr 32:4; 2Chr 32:30

2. hidden, secret (2×) A stative or adjectival extension meaning 'hidden, secret, concealed.' In Psalm 51:6, God desires truth 'in the hidden part' (b'satum); in Ezekiel 28:3, no secret is hidden from the prince of Tyre. The shift from physical closure to epistemic concealment is natural. Spanish 'secreto' and 'lo oculto' ('the hidden thing') render this well. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-the-hidden-part, secret | es: secreto, y-en-lo-oculto | fr: et-dans-fermer, fermer | de: [סתום], und-in-der-verborgen-part Ps 51:6; Ezek 28:3

3. stop up (Piel intensive) (2×) The Piel intensive stem: to stop up thoroughly or completely. Genesis 26:15 and 18 describe the Philistines stopping up Abraham's wells after his death, and Isaac reopening them. The intensive stem emphasizes the deliberateness and thoroughness of the act. Spanish 'los cegaron' ('they blocked them up') and French 'arreta eux' capture the completeness. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-stopped-them, stopped-them | es: los-cegaron, y-los-cegaron | fr: arrêta-eux, et-arrêta-eux | de: und-verstopft-hatten-sie, verstopften Gen 26:15; Gen 26:18

4. closed, shut (Qal passive state) (1×) The Qal passive participle as a resultative state: 'closed, shut up.' Daniel 12:9 declares the prophetic words are 'closed up and sealed till the time of the end.' Spanish 'cerradas' ('closed') renders the completed, enduring state of closure — the vision remains sealed. SHUTTING AND CLOSING en: shut-up | es: cerradas | fr: fermer | de: [סתמים] Dan 12:9

5. be stopped up (Nifal passive) (1×) The Nifal passive: 'to be stopped up,' indicating that something is being sealed or closed by external agency. Nehemiah 4:7 reports the breaches of Jerusalem's wall beginning to be stopped up, prompting enemy opposition. Spanish 'a cerrarse' ('to become closed') captures the passive-reflexive sense of the breach closing itself. SHUTTING AND CLOSING en: to-be-stopped | es: a-cerrarse | fr: [להסתם] | de: [להסתם] Neh 4:7

שְׁתַם H5640b V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

shut out, exclude (especially prayer)

A late Hebrew verb meaning to stop up or shut out, used uniquely in Lamentations where the poet laments that God has blocked his prayer from reaching heaven. The word is a variant of the more common root for 'stop up,' but here carries the sense of divine rejection. Some scholars suggest it may be related to Arabic roots meaning to frustrate or disappoint.

(1×) The act of God shutting out prayer in Lamentations 3:8: 'He has shut out my prayer.' In the depths of Jerusalem's suffering, the speaker feels not only unheard but actively excluded—as though God has erected a barrier against supplication. The verb's rare usage and late form suggest it was chosen for its emphatic sense of blockage and refusal. SHUTTING AND CLOSING en: He-shuts-out | es: cierra | fr: [שתם] | de: [שתם] Lam 3:8

סָתַר H5641 V-Piel-Imp-fs (82×)

To hide, conceal; reflexively to hide oneself; causatively to hide another; of God hiding his face in judgment or discipline.

Satar governs one of the most emotionally charged theological images in the Hebrew Bible: God hiding his face. In its Hifil stem — accounting for over half of all occurrences — the verb becomes the language of divine withdrawal, the terrifying moment when God 'conceals his face' (hester panim) from his people (Deut 31:17-18; Isa 54:8). Yet the same root also describes the very human instinct to hide: Adam from God, David from Saul, the prudent man from danger (Prov 22:3). The Nifal reflexive and Hitpael deliberative forms capture this self-concealing impulse beautifully, while Arabic satara ('to veil, screen') and Syriac setar preserve the same Semitic root with its ancient connotation of drawing a curtain between the visible and the hidden.

1. Hifil: hide, conceal (causative) (44×) Hifil causative: to hide or conceal someone or something, including the theologically crucial idiom hester panim ('hiding the face'). This is the dominant sense at 44 occurrences, spanning God concealing his face in judgment (Deut 31:17-18; Ps 13:1; Isa 54:8), Moses hiding his face at the burning bush (Exod 3:6), and humans concealing others from danger. Spanish esconder and Arabic satara both handle the causative force, while Korean 숨기다 consistently distinguishes this active concealment from reflexive self-hiding (숨다). The hester panim passages are theologically foundational — they express not annihilation but relational withdrawal, the most devastating form of divine discipline. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: I-hid, I-will-hide, You-hide | es: Escondes, Escóndeme, escondas | fr: cacher, et-cacher, je-fera-cacher | de: [תסתיר], ich-wird-verbergen, und-verbergen Exod 3:6; Deut 31:17; Deut 31:18; Deut 32:20

2. Nifal: hide oneself, be hidden (31×) Nifal reflexive/passive: to hide oneself, to be hidden, to become concealed. At 31 occurrences this covers both active self-concealment (Cain fearing he will be 'hidden from God's face,' Gen 4:14; the prudent man seeing danger and hiding himself, Prov 27:12) and the passive state of being hidden (hidden faults in Ps 19:12; secret things belonging to the LORD in Deut 29:29). German verborgen sein captures the stative 'being hidden' while sich verbergen catches the reflexive 'hiding oneself.' The substantival participle nistarot ('hidden things') at Deut 29:29 has become a key text in Jewish theology about the boundary between revealed and concealed knowledge. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: [and-hides-himself], and-I-will-hide, and-hid | es: Oculto-está, Y-se-escondió, [y-se-esconde] | fr: cacher, et-cacha, et-cache-toi-même | de: [[ויסתר]], [יסתר], [יסתרו] Gen 4:14; Gen 31:49; Num 5:13; Deut 7:20; Deut 29:29

3. Hitpael: hide oneself deliberately (5×) Hitpael reflexive-iterative: to hide oneself deliberately and repeatedly, emphasizing intentionality or persistence in concealment. Only 5 occurrences, but each is memorable: David's men hiding in the wilderness from Saul (1 Sam 23:19; 26:1), and remarkably, God described as 'a God who hides himself' (El mistatter) in Isa 45:15 — one of the most profound statements about divine transcendence in all of Scripture. Spanish ocultarse and German sich verbergen both capture the deliberate reflexive force. The Hitpael's iterative nuance suggests not a one-time act but an ongoing posture of hiddenness. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: hiding, shall-be-hidden, who-hides-Himself | es: escondiéndose, está-escondido, que-te-ocultas | fr: cachant, cacher, de-cacher | de: verbarg, verbergen, verbergend 1Sam 23:19; 1Sam 26:1; Ps 54:1; Isa 29:14; Isa 45:15

4. (1×) Passive participle or stative use denoting a hidden or concealed state, distinct from the processual Nifal. At Prov 27:5 the contrast between 'open rebuke' and 'hidden love' (ahavah mesuteret) uses this form to describe the static quality of being concealed rather than the act of concealing. Spanish oculto ('hidden, secret' as an adjective) and German verborgen match this adjectival sense precisely. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: hidden | es: oculto | fr: cacher | de: [מסתרת] Prov 27:5

5. (1×) Imperative or jussive with the sense of providing shelter or refuge — 'hide' as protective concealment for the vulnerable. In Isa 16:3 the command is to 'hide the outcasts' from the oppressor, and the multilingual evidence (Spanish esconde, German verbergen) treats this as active sheltering rather than mere concealment. The protective nuance connects satar to the vocabulary of divine and human refuge found throughout the Psalms. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: hide | es: esconde | fr: cacher | de: verbergen Isa 16:3

סְתַר H5642a Conj-w / V-Piel-QalPassPrtcpl-fpd (1×)

hidden things (Aramaic participial form)

An Aramaic passive participle referring to things concealed or kept secret. Daniel uses this term when praising God who 'reveals deep and hidden things' and knows what lies in darkness. The word emphasizes the contrast between divine omniscience and human limitation: what is veiled from mortals is open to God's sight.

(1×) The hidden realities that only God can reveal, appearing in Daniel 2:22 where the prophet blesses God for disclosing Nebuchadnezzar's forgotten dream. 'He reveals the deep and hidden things'—the Aramaic emphasizes that these are not merely unknown but actively concealed, beyond the reach of human wisdom or divination. The multilingual versions consistently render this as 'hidden' or 'occult' things. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: and-hidden-things | es: y-lo-oculto | fr: et-cacher | de: [ומסתרתא] Dan 2:22

סְתַר H5642b V-Qal-Perf-3ms / 3ms (1×)

destroy, tear down (Aramaic)

An Aramaic verb meaning to destroy or demolish, cognate with Syriac and related to the Hebrew root for tearing down. In Ezra, it describes Nebuchadnezzar's destruction of Solomon's temple. The Aramaic section of Ezra uses this term to narrate the historical cause of the temple's ruin before describing its reconstruction.

(1×) The destruction of the Jerusalem temple by Nebuchadnezzar, described in Ezra 5:12: 'he destroyed this house.' The Aramaic narrative places this verb in the mouth of the Jewish elders explaining to Tattenai why they are rebuilding: their ancestors' sins provoked God to give them into the hand of the Babylonian king, 'who destroyed this house and exiled the people.' DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: destroyed | es: destruyó | fr: [סתרה] | de: [סתרה] Ezra 5:12

סֵתֶר H5643a N-ms (35×)

Secrecy, hiding place, shelter — covert action done 'in secret' or a concrete place of concealment and refuge

Drawn from the root סתר 'to hide', this noun oscillates between the abstract and the concrete. Used adverbially with beth (בַּסֵּתֶר), it describes clandestine deeds — enticing someone to idolatry 'in secret' (Deut 13:6), striking a neighbor covertly (Deut 27:24), or the psalmist being woven together in secret (Ps 139:15). As a concrete noun it becomes a place of refuge: the mountain cover shielding Abigail (1 Sam 25:20), the dark clouds as God's hiding place (Ps 18:11), and the shelter of the Most High (Ps 91:1). Spanish captures the split with 'en secreto' vs. 'escondite', and French with 'dans le secret' vs. 'abri'.

1. secrecy, in secret (19×) Secrecy or covertness as an abstract quality, typically in the adverbial phrase בַּסֵּתֶר 'in secret, secretly'. Describes hidden or clandestine action: enticing to idolatry in secret (Deut 13:6), smiting a neighbor in secret (Deut 27:24), eating bread of secrecy (Prov 9:17), and the psalmist's formation 'in secret' in the womb (Ps 139:15). Spanish 'en secreto/en oculto' and French 'dans le secret' consistently render the adverbial use, distinguishing it from the place-noun. SECRECY AND HIDING en: backbiting, eaten-in-secret, in-secret | es: en-lo-oculto, en-lo-secreto, en-oculto | fr: dans-abri, dans-le-secret-lieu, dans-secret | de: [בסתר], [סתר], [סתרים] Deut 13:6; Deut 27:15; Deut 27:24; Deut 28:57; Judg 3:19

2. hiding place, shelter, cover (16×) A hiding place, shelter, or protective cover — a concrete or semi-concrete location of concealment or refuge. Often in construct: סֵתֶר פָּנֶיךָ 'the shelter of your presence' (Ps 31:20), סֵתֶר עֶלְיוֹן 'the shelter of the Most High' (Ps 91:1), סֵתֶר רַעַם 'hiding place of thunder' (Ps 81:7). Spanish 'escondite' and French 'abri' confirm the concrete locative reading. In theophany, God's hiding place is dark clouds (Ps 18:11; Job 22:14); in narrative, it is the cover of a mountain (1 Sam 25:20) or lotus thickets (Job 40:21). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-covering-of, and-the-hiding-place, are-a-hiding-place | es: Escondite-de-mí, en-escondite-de, en-lo-escondido-de | fr: abri, dans-abri, dans-couvre-de | de: [בסתר], [וסתר], [סתר] 1Sam 25:20; Job 22:14; Job 24:15; Job 40:21; Ps 18:11

סִתְרָה H5643b N-fs (1×)
shelter, protection (from danger)
A rare feminine noun meaning shelter or protection, used ironically in Moses' song where he mocks the false gods of Israel's enemies. 'Let them be a shelter over you,' he says sarcastically, challenging these lifeless idols to provide the safety their worshipers expect. The term normally connotes refuge, but here it drips with scorn.

(1×) The 'shelter' that impotent pagan gods cannot provide, appearing in Deuteronomy 32:38 in Moses' satirical challenge. After describing how Israel's enemies trusted in gods who ate their sacrifices and drank their drink offerings, Moses taunts: 'Let them arise and help you, let them be your shelter!' The Hebrew construction may require emending the verb to plural (as some suggest) to match the plural subject. GUILT AND PUNISHMENT
en: shelter | es: refugio | fr: shelter | de: shelter Deut 32:38

סִתְרִי H5644 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Sithri (personal name: 'protection of Yah')
A Levite name from the family of Kohath, appearing in the genealogical records of Exodus. Sithri was a cousin of Moses and Aaron, descended from Uzziel. The name likely means 'my protection' or 'Yah is my shelter,' incorporating the divine name. Greek versions transliterate it variously as Seghri, Sethri, or Setri.

(1×) Sithri son of Uzziel, a Levite listed in Exodus 6:22 among the extended family of Kohath. He represents one of the collateral lines of the priestly tribe, descended from Levi through Kohath and Uzziel. The genealogy establishes the broader clan structure within which Aaron's family held the high priesthood. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Sithri | es: y-Sitri | fr: et-Sithri | de: und-Sithri Exod 6:22

עָב H5645 Prep-b / N-msc (32×)
A dark cloud or cloud-mass; also thick density or a thicket of vegetation used as cover.
This noun evokes the heavy, dark clouds of a Middle Eastern rainstorm rather than wispy fair-weather formations. It appears prominently in theophanic passages where God rides on clouds (Ps 104:3, Isa 19:1) and in storm imagery where the clouds pour down rain (Judg 5:4). The same root sense of density extends to the thick clay ground of the Jordan plain (2 Chr 4:17) and even to tangled brush where fugitives hide (Jer 4:29). German consistently translates Wolken ('clouds'), while Spanish and French both reach for nubes/nuées, all preserving the sense of something dark, massive, and opaque.

1. cloud, clouds (26×) The primary meteorological sense: a cloud or mass of clouds in the sky. This covers rain-clouds (1 Kgs 18:44–45, where Elijah's servant spots a cloud small as a man's hand), theophanic clouds serving as God's chariot (Isa 19:1, Ps 104:3), and figurative uses where clouds represent swiftness (Isa 60:8) or transience (Job 30:15). French nuées and Spanish nubes both consistently point to this reading. CLOUDS AND SKY
en: -the-clouds, a-cloud, as-cloud-of | es: Las-nubes, como-nube, como-nube-de | fr: -le-nuées, [בעבים], [עבות] | de: -der-Wolken, Wolke, Wolken Judg 5:4; 2Sam 23:4; 1Kgs 18:44; 1Kgs 18:45; Job 20:6

2. thick clouds, cloud-mass (3×) An intensified form emphasizing thick, dense clouds — the impenetrable cloud-mass that conceals God's presence. In 2 Samuel 22:12 and Psalm 18:11, God makes thick darkness his canopy from 'thick clouds of the skies.' Job 26:8 describes God binding water in his thick clouds. The emphasis shifts from weather to divine concealment and overwhelming power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-His-thick-clouds, thick-clouds-of | es: en-sus-nubes, espesura-de, nubes-de | fr: [עב], dans-son-nuage-lui, épais-nuées-de | de: [בעביו], thick-Wolken-von 2Sam 22:12; Job 26:8; Ps 18:11

3. thickness, density (2×) An abstract extension to thickness or density of material substance, not clouds per se. Exodus 19:9 speaks of a 'thick cloud' (though here the density of the medium, not the meteorological phenomenon, is the focus), and 2 Chronicles 4:17 refers to the dense clay of the Jordan plain used for casting bronze vessels. The multilingual evidence splits here: some versions render 'cloud,' others 'thickness.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-thickness-of | es: en-espesura-de-, en-tierra | fr: [בעב], dans-thickness-de | de: [בעב], in-thickness-von Exod 19:9; 2Chr 4:17

4. thicket, dense cover (1×) A rare extension to dense vegetation — thicket or tangled brush offering concealment. In Jeremiah 4:29, people flee into thickets to hide from approaching armies. The semantic thread connecting cloud-mass and thicket is opacity and cover: both block sight and offer concealment. This usage appears only once but fits the root's core idea of dense, obscuring mass. CLOUDS AND SKY
en: into-the-thickets | es: en-espesuras | fr: nuée | de: Wolke Jer 4:29

עָב H5646 Conj-w / N-msc (3×)
architectural term of uncertain meaning; possibly threshold, canopy, or thick beam
This architectural noun appears three times but its precise meaning remains uncertain. First Kings 7:6 mentions it alongside 'pillars' in describing Solomon's palace construction. Ezekiel 41:25-26 uses it twice in the temple vision—'a canopy of wood in front of the porch' and 'the canopies' on the side chambers. Ancient versions and modern scholars propose various meanings: threshold, thick beam or plank, projecting roof, or canopy. The uncertainty reflects our limited knowledge of ancient architectural terminology. What's clear is that this was a wooden structural element associated with entrances or porches—whether overhead (canopy/beam) or underfoot (threshold).

(3×) The Kings reference pairs it with 'pillars' in palace architecture, while Ezekiel's vision uses it for temple porch elements—'before the porch on the outside' (41:25). The plural 'the canopies/thresholds' (41:26) suggests multiple instances of this feature. Cross-linguistic translations show the uncertainty: English varies between 'threshold' and 'canopy,' Spanish uses 'dosel/viga' (canopy/beam), French alternates 'plafond/seuil' (ceiling/threshold). The wooden material is specified (Ezek 41:25: 'canopy of wood'), distinguishing it from stone features. Whatever the exact structure, it marked entrances to significant buildings—palace and temple alike. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15269 WITH 5 SENSES en: and-canopy-of, and-the-canopies, and-threshold | es: y-dosel, y-las-vigas, y-viga-de | fr: et-plafond, et-seuil | de: [והעבים], [ועב], und-threshold 1Kgs 7:6; Ezek 41:25; Ezek 41:26

עָבַד H5647 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp / 3ms (289×)

To work, serve, worship, till, or enslave; spanning religious devotion, personal service, agricultural labor, and forced servitude

Few Hebrew verbs reveal the ancient world's integration of the sacred and mundane as vividly as avad. The same root that describes Adam tilling the garden (Gen 2:15) also describes Israel worshiping God (Exod 10:26) and Pharaoh enslaving a nation (Exod 1:13). Arabic preserves this spectrum with three distinct roots — abd for worship, khadama for personal service, and amala for labor — exposing semantic distinctions that Hebrew bundles into one. From field to temple to forced labor camp, avad maps the full spectrum of human duty, devotion, and subjugation.

1. worship/serve YHWH (proper worship) (121×) To worship or serve a deity in a religious or covenantal sense — by far the dominant use (203x). Arabic abd consistently distinguishes divine service from personal or productive labor. Covers both proper worship of YHWH (Exod 10:11, 26; Num 4:24) and idolatrous service to foreign gods, making it the key verb for covenant fidelity and apostasy throughout Deuteronomy and the historical books.

en: and-serve, and-served, and-they-served | es: Y-sirvieron, para-servir, servir | fr: et-ils-servit, et-servir, et-servit | de: dienen, und-dienen, und-diente Gen 29:20; Gen 29:30; Exod 7:16; Exod 8:1; Exod 8:20

2. serve foreign gods/idols (improper worship) (82×) To serve or minister to a human master, lord, or king in a personal capacity. Arabic khadama 'to serve a person' and Korean seomgida 'to attend' distinguish this from religious worship. Jacob serves Laban for Rachel (Gen 29:18, 25, 27), vassals serve overlords (Gen 14:4), and Esau is told he will serve his brother (Gen 27:40) — all relational, hierarchical service.

en: and-he-served, and-served, and-they-served | es: Y-sirvieron, Y-sirvió, a-servir | fr: et-ils-servit, et-servir, et-servit | de: dienen, und-dienen, und-diente Exod 14:12; Deut 7:16; Deut 8:19; Deut 13:6

3. serve, minister to (a person) (21×) To serve or minister to a human master, lord, or king in a personal capacity. Arabic khadama 'to serve a person' and Korean seomgida 'to attend' distinguish this from religious worship. Jacob serves Laban for Rachel (Gen 29:18, 25, 27), vassals serve overlords (Gen 14:4), and Esau is told he will serve his brother (Gen 27:40) — all relational, hierarchical service. SERVING AND MINISTRY

en: I-served, I-will-serve-you, and-he-served-you | es: de-servir, de-servirnos, servirte | fr: Je—servir-tu, Je-servit, de-serving-nous | de: dein-Knecht, dienen, dienend Gen 14:4; Gen 27:40; Gen 29:18; Gen 29:25; Gen 29:27

4. work, labor (19×) To work or labor in a general productive sense, without a personal or divine object. Arabic amala 'to work' and Korean ilhada 'to labor' mark generic industry. Covers the Sabbath commandment framework ('six days you shall labor,' Exod 20:9; 34:21), Egyptian forced labor (Exod 1:14; 5:18), and the status of indentured workers (Lev 25:39). DOING AND MAKING

en: and-to-work, has-been-worked, he-labored | es: ha-sido-trabajada, lo-harás-trabajar, lo-servirán | fr: a-été-worked, et-à-serviteur, il-devra-oeuvre | de: Knecht, Werk, dienen Exod 1:14; Exod 5:18; Exod 20:9; Exod 34:21; Lev 25:39

5. servant, worshiper (substantive participle) (16×) Qal active participle used as a substantive: servant, worshiper, or worker as a person. Arabic abid 'worshiper' versus amil 'worker' again disambiguate what Hebrew leaves unified. Includes Issachar becoming 'a servant of forced labor' (Gen 49:15), Levitical workers numbered for tabernacle service (Num 4:37, 41), and Canaanites subjected to labor gangs (Josh 16:10; 1 Kgs 9:21). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-worker-of, for-workers-of, his-servants | es: Y-el-que-sirve, a-siervos-de, el-que-sirve | fr: esclaves, et-le-serviteur, le-serving | de: Knechte-von, Sklaven, der-Knecht Gen 49:15; Num 4:37; Num 4:41; Josh 16:10; 1Kgs 9:21

6. enslave, compel to serve (Hifil causative) (13×) Hifil causative: to enslave, to compel to serve, to subject to forced labor. Arabic istaabada 'to enslave' and Swahili -tumikisha (causative of -tumika) mark the coercive dimension. Central to the Exodus paradigm: God tells Abraham his descendants will be enslaved (Gen 15:14), Egypt makes Israel serve ruthlessly (Exod 1:13; 6:5), and later kings conscript laborers (2 Chr 2:18). SERVING AND MINISTRY

en: I-caused-you-to-serve, and-I-will-make-serve-you, and-he-made-serve | es: Y-hicieron-servir, e-hizo-servir, esclavizando | fr: enslaving, et-ils-worked, et-servir | de: der-Knechte, dienen, enslaving Gen 15:14; Exod 1:13; Exod 6:5; 2Chr 2:18; 2Chr 34:33

7. till, cultivate (land) (12×) To till, cultivate, or farm agricultural land. Arabic falaha 'to plow' and Korean gyeongjakhada 'to cultivate' distinguish this from generic labor. Primordial in Genesis: no one to till the ground (Gen 2:5), Adam placed in Eden 'to work it' (Gen 2:15), then expelled 'to till the ground' from which he was taken (Gen 3:23). Cain as 'a tiller of the ground' (Gen 4:2, 12). SERVING AND MINISTRY

en: and-it-will-work-it, and-work, and-you-shall-work | es: El-que-trabaja, Y-trabajarás, el-que-labra | fr: et-oeuvre, et-servitude, et-tu-devra-œuvre | de: Knecht, Knechte-von, du-bearbeitest Gen 2:5; Gen 2:15; Gen 3:23; Gen 4:2; Gen 4:12

8. be tilled, be cultivated (Niphal passive) (4×) Niphal passive of the agricultural sense: land being tilled or cultivated. Arabic passive tuflah and Swahili passive -limwa confirm this as the receptive counterpart to sense 6. Rare (4x), appearing in the law of the unsolved murder where a heifer is taken to untilled ground (Deut 21:4), Qoheleth's observation about land (Eccl 5:9), and Ezekiel's restoration promise that desolate land 'shall be tilled' (Ezek 36:9, 34). SERVING AND MINISTRY

en: and-you-will-be-tilled, being-cultivated, is-worked | es: es-servido, es-trabajado, será-labrada, | fr: est-worked, et-servir, servir | de: [נעבד], dienen, ist-worked Deut 21:4; Eccl 5:9; Ezek 36:9; Ezek 36:34

9. (1×) A difficult hapax-like usage in Isa 14:3, where the context speaks of rest from hard service. Spanish se trabajo and English 'was served' suggest a passive or resultative reading — the harsh labor that was imposed. This functions as a summary reference to the enslavement experience, marking the cessation of forced servitude in the taunt against the king of Babylon. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: was-served- | es: se-trabajó- | fr: serviteur | de: diente Isa 14:3

עֻבַּד H5648 V-Hitpael-Imperf-3ms (28×)

To make, do, perform; passively, to be done or carried out; also to construct, produce, and to celebrate a festival.

The Aramaic verb avad is the workhorse 'do/make' verb of biblical Aramaic, corresponding to both Hebrew asah ('do') and avad ('work/serve') in semantic range. It appears throughout the administrative correspondence of Ezra and the court narratives of Daniel, covering everything from royal decrees being 'carried out' to idols being 'made' and feasts being 'celebrated.' The Hitpael passive forms are particularly prominent in the bureaucratic language of Ezra, where Persian officials report what 'is being done' in Jerusalem (Ezra 5:8) — Spanish se-hace and the Aramaic reflexive-passive mirror each other nicely. Jeremiah 10:11, the lone prophetic Aramaic verse, uses avad for cosmic creation: gods who did not 'make' the heavens and earth shall perish. The verb's range from mundane administration to divine creation makes it the Aramaic equivalent of a universal action verb.

1. do, perform an action (16×) To do, perform, carry out an action — the general-purpose Qal active sense across 16 occurrences. This is the default 'do' meaning in administrative and narrative contexts: officials are told what 'to do' with temple funds (Ezra 6:8; 7:18), rebels in Jerusalem have historically 'made' sedition (Ezra 4:15), and Nebuchadnezzar acknowledges that God 'does' as he pleases (Dan 4:32). Spanish hacer, German tun, and Arabic fa'ala all converge on this unmarked action sense. The Qal participle aved ('doing') appears in the important theological declaration that God's decree must be 'diligently done' (Ezra 7:26). DOING AND MAKING en: He-does, and-doing, did | es: de-hacer, hace, haces? | fr: et-serviteur, faire, serviteur | de: Dienst, Knecht, [לְמֶעְבַּד] Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:22; Ezra 6:8; Ezra 6:13; Ezra 7:18

2. be done, be made (passive) (9×) To be done, be made, be carried out — the Hitpael passive across 9 occurrences, concentrated in Ezra's imperial correspondence. Persian officials report that the temple work 'is being done diligently' (Ezra 5:8), royal decrees specify what 'shall be done' to violators (Ezra 6:11-12), and Artaxerxes orders that whatever Ezra requests 'shall be done' precisely (Ezra

7:21). Spanish se-hace/es-hecha and the reflexive-passive morphology (yit'aved/mit'avda) mark this as a grammaticalized passive voice, parallel to the Qal active sense 1 but with the agent suppressed or implied as institutional authority. DOING AND MAKING
en: being-done, being-made, executed | es: ejecutado, es-hecha, se-hace- | fr: faire | de: [יִתְעֲבַד], [מִתְעֲבַד], [מִתְעֲבְדָא] Ezra 4:19; Ezra 5:8; Ezra 6:11; Ezra 6:12; Ezra 7:21

3. make, construct, produce (2×) To make, construct, produce a physical object — 2 occurrences where avad means 'manufacture' or 'create' rather than generic 'do.' In Daniel 3:15 Nebuchadnezzar challenges the three men regarding the image 'I have made'; in Jeremiah 10:11 (the sole Aramaic verse in Jeremiah) the gods who did not 'make' heavens and earth will perish. Spanish hice/hicieron and German machen both select construction vocabulary. The contrast with sense 1 is between producing a result (doing) and producing an artifact (making). DOING AND MAKING en: I-made, they-made | es: hice, hicieron | fr: faire, son-serviteur | de: [עַבְדוֹ], tun Jer 10:11; Dan 3:15

4. celebrate, observe a festival (1×) To celebrate or observe a festival — a single idiomatic occurrence at Ezra 6:16 where the returned exiles 'celebrated' the dedication of the rebuilt temple. Here avad takes a festival or ceremony as its direct object, extending 'do/perform' into ritual observance. Spanish hicieron la dedicacion and the broader Ancient Near Eastern idiom of 'doing a feast' (cf. Akkadian epesu) confirm this as a conventionalized collocational sense. Belshazzar similarly 'made a great feast' in Daniel 5:1, reinforcing the pattern. DOING AND MAKING en: and-celebrated | es: e-hicieron | fr: et-faire | de: [וְעַבְדוֹ] Ezra 6:16

עֲבַד H5649 Prep-l / N-mpc / 3ms (8×)

Servant, slave (Aramaic); used of royal courtiers and servants of God in Daniel and Ezra.

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew eved ('servant, slave'), appearing in the court scenes of Daniel and the administrative correspondence of Ezra. It designates both human servants of the king – 'we are your servants' (Ezra 4:11; Dan 2:4, 7) – and servants of God, as when Daniel is called 'servant of the living God' (Dan 6:21) and Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego are recognized as God's servants (Dan 3:26, 28). The translations uniformly render it with servant terminology: Spanish siervo/siervos, German Knecht, reflecting the word's consistent meaning across both royal and theological registers.

servant, slave (8×) An Aramaic noun for servant or slave, used in both royal and theological contexts. In diplomatic address, officials identify themselves as the king's servants (Ezra 4:11, 'your servants'; Dan 2:4, 7). In confessional and narrative contexts, it designates faithful servants of God: Daniel is 'servant of the living God' (Dan 6:21), and the three companions are acknowledged as God's servants who trusted him (Dan 3:26, 28). Ezra 5:11 reports the elders' self-identification as 'servants of the God of heaven and earth.' Spanish siervo and German Knecht both capture the deferential relationship of subordination, whether to an earthly monarch or to God. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: (qere:to-your-servant), His-servants, [ketiv:to-your-servants] | es: (a-tu-siervo), Tus-siervos, [a-tus-siervos] | fr: [לְעַבְדוֹהִי], [לְעַבְדִיךְ], [לְעַבְדָךְ] | de: Knecht, [לְעַבְדוֹהִי], [לְעַבְדִיךְ] Ezra 4:11; Ezra 5:11; Dan 2:4; Dan 2:7

עֶבֶד H5650 N-mpc (803×)

Servant, attendant, subject; slave or bondservant; honorific title 'servant of God' for patriarchs, prophets, and kings.

The Hebrew noun eved spans a social spectrum from royal courtier to chattel slave, and ascends to become one of Scripture's highest honorific titles. In its most common use (723 occurrences), it denotes anyone who serves another — a household attendant, a king's official, a military officer, or a speaker using 'your servant' as a polite first-person pronoun. Spanish siervo, French serviteur, and German Knecht cluster around the feudal-service end of the range, while the distinct sense of involuntary bondage (63 occurrences) draws out Spanish esclavo, French esclave, and German Sklave — vocabulary reserved for chattel slavery contexts like Exodus 21 and Leviticus 25. Most strikingly, eved becomes a divine title: 'My servant Moses' (Num 12:8), 'My servant David' (2 Sam 7:8), 'My servant Job' (Job 1:8) — an honorific that in Isaiah's Servant Songs (Isa 42-53) carries messianic weight across every Christian tradition.

1. Servant, attendant, subject (723×) A servant, attendant, official, or subject — any person who serves another in a household, royal court, military, or political capacity, including the deferential self-reference 'your servant' meaning 'I/me.' This overwhelmingly dominant sense (723 occurrences) covers Pharaoh's servants (Gen 20:8; Exod 7:10), royal officials, household attendants, and the ubiquitous politeness formula where speakers refer to themselves as 'your servant' before a superior. Spanish siervo/siervos, French serviteur/serviteurs, German Knecht/Knechte, and Arabic عبيد/عبد all converge on the general service relationship. The breadth is striking: the same word names Joseph as Potiphar's household manager and courtiers advising kings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: his-servants | es: siervos-suyos, sus-siervos | fr: ses-serviteurs, son-serviteurs | de: sein-Knechte, seine-Knechte Gen 20:8; Exod 5:21; Exod 7:10; Exod 7:20; Exod 8:24

2. Slave, bondservant (63×) A slave or bondservant — a person held as property, bought with money, born in the house, or subjected to involuntary servitude under biblical law. With 63 occurrences, this sense surfaces in legal codes (Exod 21:2-6, the Hebrew slave law; Lev 25:39-46, regulations on Israelite versus foreign slaves) and economic inventories listing slaves alongside livestock and possessions (Gen 12:16; 24:35). Spanish shifts to esclavo, French to esclave, and German to Sklave in these contexts, while Arabic retains عبد but the legal framing makes the chattel sense unmistakable. The curse of Canaan — 'a servant of servants shall he be' (Gen 9:25) — uses the superlative construction eved avadim to express the lowest social station. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: for-servants, slaves | es: esclavos, para-siervos, por-siervos | fr: esclaves, pour-serviteurs, serviteur | de: Knechte, Sklaven, fuer-Knechte Gen 12:16; Gen 20:14; Gen 24:35; Gen 30:43; Gen 32:5

3. Servant of God (17×) The honorific title 'servant of God/the LORD,' applied to distinguished patriarchs, prophets, and kings who stand in a special covenant relationship with YHWH. Only 17 occurrences in this distinctive formulation, but each carries immense theological weight: 'My servant Abraham' (Gen 26:24), 'My servant Moses' (Num 12:8), 'My servant Caleb' (Num 14:24), 'My servant David' (2 Sam 3:18; 7:8), and 'My servant Job' (Job 1:8). The first-person divine possessive ('My servant') transforms a social-status term into a title of election and intimacy. Spanish mi siervo, French mon serviteur, and German mein Knecht preserve the possessive construction. This sense reaches its theological apex in Isaiah's Servant Songs, where the unnamed Servant of the LORD (Isa 42:1; 52:13; 53:11) carries suffering on behalf of others. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: My-servant, against-my-servant, and-My-servant | es: Pero-mi-siervo, Y-mi-siervo, a-mi-siervo | fr: Mon-serviteur, comme-Mon-serviteur, comme-mon-serviteur-moi | de: Knechte-von, My-Knecht, gegen-mein-Knecht Gen 26:24; Num 12:8; Num 14:24; 2Sam 3:18; 2Sam 7:8

עֹבֵד H5651 N-proper-ms (6×)

Ebed ('servant'), a personal name borne by the father of Gaal at Shechem and a companion of Ezra returning from exile.

Ebed (עֹבֵד) means 'servant [of God],' a theophoric name parallel to Arabic names compounded with عبد. Two figures bear this name: the father of Gaal, who led a short-lived revolt against Abimelech at Shechem (Judg 9:26-35), and a clan head who returned with Ezra from Babylon (Ezra 8:6). The Septuagint renders the name variously as Ioabel and Obeth, reflecting different transliteration traditions. The name's simplicity — just 'servant' — is characteristic of West Semitic naming conventions that express piety through submission to deity.

Ebed (personal name) (6×) A proper masculine name meaning 'servant (of God),' used of two distinct individuals. The most prominent is the father of Gaal, whose son rallied Shechem's citizens against Abimelech's rule (Judg 9:26-35). The second Ebed appears as head of a family returning from exile with Ezra (Ezra 8:6). English, Spanish, and French translations consistently transliterate rather than translate the name, preserving its identity as a proper noun across languages. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ebed, Eved | es: Eved, Ébed | fr: Ebed, [עֵבֶד] | de: Ebed, Knecht Judg 9:26; Judg 9:28; Judg 9:30; Judg 9:31; Judg 9:35

עֶבֶד H5652 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3mp (1×)

works, deeds (Aramaic plural form)

An Aramaic loanword for 'works' or 'deeds,' used in Ecclesiastes' philosophical reflection on divine sovereignty and human ignorance. The plural form with Aramaic morphology appears in the context of uncertainty: 'the righteous and the wise and their works are in God's hand,' yet humans cannot know what lies ahead. This late linguistic feature marks Ecclesiastes as post-exilic.

(1×) The deeds or works of the righteous and wise in Ecclesiastes 9:1, where the Teacher observes that despite human effort and wisdom, ultimate outcomes remain in God's hand. 'All this I laid to heart, examining it all: the righteous and the wise and their works are in God's hand'—yet whether love or hate awaits them, no one knows. The Aramaic form reflects the book's late linguistic character. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-their-works | es: y-sus-obras | fr: et-leur-עבדיהם-eux | de: [ועבדיהם] Eccl 9:1

עֲבְדָּא H5653 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Abda (personal name); father of Adoniram (Solomon's official) and a Levite

This personal name means 'servant' or 'servant of Yahweh,' similar in meaning to Obadiah. It identifies two individuals: first, the father of Adoniram, Solomon's official in charge of forced labor (1 Kings 4:6); second, a Levite listed among those resettled in post-exilic Jerusalem (Nehemiah 11:17). The name reflects piety and dedication, common in Israelite naming conventions where theophoric elements express devotion to God.

(2×) A proper name appearing in two contexts: (1) father of Adoniram, Solomon's labor minister (1 Kings 4:6), and (2) a post-exilic Levite (Nehemiah 11:17). The name means 'servant (of Yahweh),' parallel to Obadiah. Greek versions show uncertainty (Ephra, Abaō, Ōbēb), but the Hebrew is consistent across both occurrences. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Abda, and-Avda | es: Abda, y-Abdá | fr: Abda, [ועבדא] | de: Abda, [ועבדא] 1Kgs 4:6; Neh 11:17

עֹבֵד אֱדֹם H5654 Prep / N-proper-ms (22×)

Obed-Edom – Gittite who housed the Ark, and Levitical gatekeepers and musicians bearing the same name

A compound name meaning 'servant of Edom' (or possibly 'servant of man,' if Edom is read as adam). The most prominent bearer is the Gittite in whose home David deposited the Ark of the Covenant for three months after Uzzah's death, during which God blessed Obed-Edom's entire household (2 Sam 6:10-12). The same name – possibly the same person – designates Levitical musicians and gatekeepers in the Chronicler's temple organization (1 Chr 15-16; 26). A third Obed-Edom appears as a temple treasury keeper in 2 Chronicles 25:24. The name's theophoric element has prompted scholarly debate about an Edomite deity.

Obed-Edom (proper noun) (22×) The personal name Obed-Edom (Hebrew oved edom, 'servant of Edom'), identifying the Gittite who sheltered the Ark and was blessed (2 Sam 6:10-12; 1 Chr 13:13-14), Levitical gatekeepers and musicians in temple service (1 Chr 15-16; 26:4-15), and a temple treasury custodian (2 Chr 25:24). Whether these represent one individual or several remains debated. Translations preserve the compound form uniformly across languages – Spanish, French, and German all render Obed-Edom. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Edom, Obed, Obed-Edom | es: Edom, Obed-Edom, Obed-edom | fr: Obed, Obed-Édom, et-Obed-Édom | de: Edom, Obed, Obed-Edom 2Sam 6:10; 2Sam 6:11; 2Sam 6:12

עַבְדִּיאֵל H5655 N-proper-ms (1×)

Avdeel (personal name: 'servant of El')

A personal name meaning 'servant of El (God),' borne by a member of the Judahite nobility during Jeremiah's time. Avdeel's son Shelemiah was among the officials King Jehoiakim dispatched to arrest Jeremiah and Baruch after the reading of the prophetic scroll. Theophoric names of this type, combining 'servant' with a divine element, were common across Semitic cultures.

(1×) Avdeel the father of Shelemiah, mentioned in Jeremiah 36:26 when King Jehoiakim commanded his son and two others to seize Jeremiah and his scribe. The name, meaning 'servant of El,' belongs to the pattern of Phoenician, Nabataean, and Sabean theophoric names that invoke deity as master or lord. Despite his son's role in persecuting Jeremiah, the Lord 'hid them.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Avdeel | es: Avdeel | fr: [עבדאל] | de: [עבדאל] Jer 36:26

עֲבֹדָה H5656 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3mp (145×)

Labor, service, or ministry – especially cultic service of the tabernacle/temple, but also general duty, manual work, and oppressive bondage.

One of the Hebrew Bible's most versatile work-words, avodah spans the full spectrum from sacred ministry to slave labor. In its dominant usage (~93x), it denotes the cultic service of the tabernacle and temple – the Levites' carrying, assembling, and guarding duties described throughout Numbers and Chronicles. Beyond the sanctuary, it covers general service rendered to kings or communities (Exod 12:25-26), ordinary agricultural and artisan labor (Exod 1:14; Ps 104:23), and at its darkest extreme, the grinding bondage of slavery in Egypt (Exod 6:6, 9). Arabic distinguishes khidmah (service) from ubudiyyah (bondage), and Swahili separates utumishi (ministry) from utumwa (slavery) – revealing the same semantic structure multilingual evidence confirms.

1. cultic service of tabernacle (93×) Cultic service of the tabernacle or temple (~93x) – by far the dominant sense. This covers the Levitical duties of transporting, assembling, and maintaining the sanctuary (Num 3:7-8; 4:4-33), the service of worship and sacrifice (1 Chr 28:13-14), and temple maintenance (2 Chr 34:13). French service-de and German Dienst-von both render it as ministerial duty tied to the sacred precinct. The construct chain 'avodat ha-mishkan' or 'avodat ohel mo'ed' is the characteristic formula. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: service-of | es: servicio-de | fr: service-de | de: Dienst-von Exod 30:16; Exod 36:1; Exod 36:3; Exod 38:21; Exod 39:40

2. general service or ministry (29×) General service or ministry (~29x) – non-cultic duties rendered to a person, ruler, or community. This includes the Passover observance as a 'service' (Exod 12:25-26), royal administration (1 Chr 26:30), and assigned ministerial roles. Korean distinguishes 봉사 (devoted service) and 섬김 (attendance), while Swahili uses huduma (public service) – all confirming that this sense occupies a middle register between sacred ritual and manual labor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-service, labor, service | es: servicio, y-servicio | fr: et-service, service, travail | de: Arbeit, Dienst, und-Dienst Exod 12:25; Exod 12:26; Exod 13:5; Lev 23:7; Lev 23:8

3. work or labor (18×) Work or labor (~18x) – physical, productive toil, especially agricultural or construction work. Ps 104:23 uses it for a person going out 'to his work' in the fields; 1 Chr 27:26 specifies field labor. The Exodus narratives describe the Israelites' avodah in Egypt initially in this neutral sense of hard work (Exod 1:14) before it shades into oppression. Arabic amal (work) and Swahili kazi (labor) render this concrete, non-sacred sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-work, from-the-service-of, from-your-labor | es: con-trabajo, de-servicio-de, de-vuestro-trabajo | fr: [הָעֲבֹדָה], [עֲבֹדָה], avec-labeur | de: Arbeit, Dienst, Werk-von Exod 1:14; Exod 2:23

4. bondage or servitude (5×) Bondage or servitude (~5x) – forced labor imposed upon a subjugated people, carrying connotations of oppression and dehumanization. Exod 6:6 and 6:9 use it for Egypt's crushing servitude from which God delivers Israel; 1 Kgs 12:4 records Jeroboam's complaint about Solomon's heavy yoke. Arabic ubudiyyah (slavery) and Swahili utumwa (bondage) sharply distinguish this from neutral labor, and German Knechtschaft (serfdom) captures the oppressive weight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-from-bondage, from-service-of, from-their-bondage | es: de-servicio-de, de-su-servidumbre, la-servidumbre | fr: de-leur-servitude, de-service-de, et-de-servitude | de: [העבדה], [עבדה], und-von-Knechtschaft Exod 6:6; Exod 6:9; 1Kgs 12:4; Isa 14:3; Lam 1:3

עֲבֹדָה H5657 Conj-w / N-fs (2×)
household servants, body of servants (collective)
This feminine noun denotes a household's body of servants collectively—not individual slaves but the entire service staff as a group. Both occurrences list 'servants' alongside flocks, herds, and other wealth indicators. Genesis 26:14 describes Isaac's prosperity: 'flocks and herds and a great household of servants,' while Job 1:3 similarly catalogs Job's wealth including 'very many servants.' The word emphasizes the household as an economic and social unit, with servants representing labor capacity and status.

(2×) The collective body of household servants, listed among wealth indicators alongside livestock and possessions. Genesis 26:14 and Job 1:3 both enumerate servants as part of patriarchal prosperity. Spanish 'servidumbre' (household staff) and German 'Gesinde' (servants collectively) capture the collective sense better than individual 'servants.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-servants | es: y-servidumbre | fr: et-serviteurs, et-ועבדה | de: [ועבדה], und-Gesinde Gen 26:14; Job 1:3

עַבְדּוֹן H5658 N-proper-fs (8×)
Abdon; a proper name borne by an Israelite judge, several individuals, and a Levitical city in Asher.
A proper name with both personal and geographic referents. Most prominently, Abdon son of Hillel the Pirathonite served as judge over Israel for eight years (Judg 12:13, 15), noted for his forty sons and thirty grandsons who rode on seventy donkeys. The name also belongs to a Benjaminite ancestor listed in Saul's genealogy (1 Chr 8:23; 8:30; 9:36) and to a courtier of King Josiah (2 Chr 34:20). Geographically, Abdon was a Levitical city in the territory of Asher (Josh 21:30; 1 Chr 6:74). All translations preserve the name phonetically – Spanish Abdon, French Abdon, German Abdon – with remarkable consistency.

Abdon (personal/place name) (8×) The proper name Abdon, identifying multiple individuals and one location: (a) a minor judge from Pirathon who led Israel eight years, known for his large family of seventy donkey-riding descendants (Judg 12:13, 15); (b) a Benjaminite in the genealogy of Saul (1 Chr 8:23; 8:30; 9:36); (c) Abdon son of Micah, sent by King Josiah to inquire of the prophetess Huldah (2 Chr 34:20, parallel to Achbor in 2 Kgs 22:12); and (d) a Levitical city in Asher's territory (Josh 21:30; 1 Chr 6:74). The name is universally transliterated – Spanish Abdon, French Abdon, German Abdon – with no semantic translation attempted, as expected for proper nouns. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Abdon, Avdon, and-Avdon | es: Abdon, Abdón, Y-Abdón | fr: Abdon, [ועבדון], [עבדון] | de: Abdon, [ועבדון], [עבדון] Josh 21:30; Judg 12:13; Judg 12:15; 1Chr 6:74; 1Chr 8:23

עַבְדוּת H5659 Conj-w (3×)
servitude, bondage; state of forced service or slavery
This feminine noun denotes servitude, slavery, or bondage—the condition of being in compulsory service. Ezra 9:8-9 uses it twice: God has 'not forsaken us in our bondage' and has 'extended steadfast love to us in the sight of the kings of Persia, to grant us some reviving to...sustain us in our bondage.' Even while serving foreign kings, God provides grace. Nehemiah 9:17 contrasts Israel's rebellion with God's character: instead of abandoning them, God remained forgiving 'and they did not forsake their slavery' in Egypt—though some translations question this reading. The word captures the weight of compulsory service, whether Egyptian slavery or Persian subjugation.

(3×) Ezra's two uses (9:8-9) acknowledge post-exilic reality: though returned to the land, the community remains under Persian authority—a form of bondage, even if lighter than Egypt's or Babylon's. God's faithfulness extends even into this servitude, granting 'reviving' despite subjugation. Nehemiah's reference (9:17) recalls Egyptian slavery in contrast to wilderness grace—though the phrase is textually difficult. Cross-linguistic renderings use 'bondage/servidumbre/esclavitud' terminology, emphasizing unfreedom. The suffixed forms ('our bondage,' 'their slavery') personalize the condition—this is experienced subjugation, not abstract servitude. SERVING AND MINISTRY
en: and-in-our-bondage, in-our-bondage, to-their-slavery | es: a-esclavitud-de-ellos, en-nuestra-servidumbre, y-en-nuestra-servidumbre | fr: [בעבדתנו], [ובעבדתנו], [לעבדתם] | de: [בעבדתנו], [ובעבדתנו], [לעבדתם] Ezra 9:8; Ezra 9:9; Neh 9:17

עַבְדִּי H5660 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)
Personal name meaning 'servant of Yah' or 'my servant'; borne by a Levite and a man with a foreign wife Avdi appears in Chronicles and Ezra as the name of two distinct individuals. The name likely derives from the root meaning 'servant' with a theophoric element, though some scholars note connections to Aramaic and Nabataean forms. One Avdi was a Levite from the family line documented in Chronicles, while another appears in Ezra's list of those who had taken foreign wives during the exile. The multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration patterns, with some versions preserving the Hebrew form directly.

(3×) A personal name attested three times in post-exilic and genealogical texts. The name appears in Levitical genealogies (1 Chronicles 6, 2 Chronicles 29) and in Ezra's reform account. Spanish and English preserve the name as 'Avdi/Abdi,' while French and German show variation in handling the conjunction and the proper noun itself, reflecting different translation philosophies for proper names in biblical genealogies. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Avdi, and-Avdi | es: Abdi, y-Avdi | fr: [ועבדי], [עבדי] | de: Knechte-von, und-Knechte-von 1Chr 6:44; 2Chr 29:12; Ezra 10:26

עַבְדִיאֵל H5661 N-proper-ms (1×)
Avdi'el (personal name: 'servant of El')
A Gadite name meaning 'servant of El,' found in the genealogies of Transjordanian tribes. Avdiel was an ancestor of Buz, one of the chiefs of Gad. Like the similar name Avdeel, this theophoric form appears widely in Northwest Semitic inscriptions from Phoenicia, Nabatea, and South Arabia, testifying to the common practice of naming children as devotees of the high god.

(1×) Avdiel the Gadite, listed in 1 Chronicles 5:15 within the genealogy of the tribe of Gad settled east of the Jordan. The name follows the widespread Semitic pattern of declaring the child a 'servant of God,' with parallels in Phoenician, Nabataean, and Sabean inscriptions. Greek versions transliterate it as Abdeel or Abdiel. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Avdi'el | es: Abdiel | fr: [עבדיאל] | de: [עבדיאל] 1Chr 5:15

עֹבַדְיָהוּ H5662 Conj-w (20×)
Obadiah, a personal name meaning 'servant of Yahweh,' borne by at least twelve individuals in Scripture.
One of the most common theophoric names in the Hebrew Bible, meaning 'servant of Yahweh.' Its most dramatic bearer is the steward of King Ahab's palace who risked his life hiding a hundred prophets from Jezebel's persecution (1 Kgs 18:3–16). The name also belongs to the prophet whose brief book pronounces judgment on Edom (Obad 1), a descendant of David (1 Chr 3:21), tribal chiefs, Levites, gatekeepers, and various officials across Chronicles. Two spelling variants — Ovadyahu and Ovadyah — alternate throughout the text. Translations render it consistently as Obadiah or Abdias.

Obadiah (proper name) (20×) The personal name Obadiah (Hebrew Ovadyahu / Ovadyah, 'servant of YHWH'), identifying numerous individuals including Ahab's God-fearing palace steward who hid a hundred prophets (1 Kgs 18:3–16), the prophet who authored the shortest book of the Hebrew Bible (Obad 1), a Davidic descendant (1 Chr 3:21), chiefs of Issachar and Zebulun (1 Chr 7:3; 27:19), and several Levites and officials in Chronicles. The Septuagint renders the name variously as Abdias and Obdias, while modern translations uniformly use Obadiah. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Obadiah, Ovadyah, Ovadyahu | es: Abdías, Obadya, Obadías | fr: Abdias, Ovadyahu, d'Abdias. | de: Obadja, Obadjas, Ovadyahu 1Kgs 18:3; 1Kgs 18:4; 1Kgs 18:5; 1Kgs 18:6

עֶבֶד מֶלֶךְ H5663 N-proper-ms (11×)

Ebed-Melech — 'servant of the king,' an Ethiopian court official who rescued Jeremiah from the cistern

The name עֶבֶד מֶלֶךְ (Ebed-Melech) means 'servant of the king' and belongs to a Cushite (Ethiopian) official in the court of King Zedekiah. When Jeremiah was thrown into a muddy cistern to die, Ebed-Melech boldly petitioned the king for permission to rescue him, then carefully lowered worn rags and ropes so the prophet's skin would not be torn (Jer 38:7-13). In gratitude, God sent a personal oracle through Jeremiah promising Ebed-Melech deliverance when Jerusalem fell (Jer 39:15-18). His story stands as one of Scripture's most striking portraits of moral courage from an unexpected quarter — a foreigner who feared God more than the princes of Judah.

Ebed-Melech (personal name) (11×) A Cushite (Ethiopian) court official serving King Zedekiah of Judah, whose name means 'servant of the king.' He intervened to save Jeremiah from death in a muddy cistern by petitioning the king and personally hauling the prophet out with rags and ropes (Jer 38:7-13). God rewarded his courage with an individual oracle of deliverance during Jerusalem's fall (Jer 39:15-18). Spanish 'Ebed-melec' and English 'Ebed-Melech' both transliterate the compound name. He appears only in Jeremiah 38-39 but is among the most memorable minor figures in prophetic literature. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Eved, Melekh, to-Eved-Melekh | es: (marca-de-objeto), Eved-Melej, a-Eved-Melekh | fr: roi, serviteur, Ébed-Mélec | de: Ebed-Melech, Koenig, diente Jer 38:7; Jer 38:8; Jer 38:10

עֲבֵד נְגוֹ H5664 N-proper-ms (2×)

Abednego (personal name); Babylonian name given to Azariah, one of Daniel's three companions

This is the Babylonian throne name given to Azariah, one of Daniel's three faithful companions in exile. The name appears to be a deliberate or accidental corruption of 'Abed-Nebo' (servant of Nebo, the Babylonian deity), possibly altered to avoid pronouncing a pagan god's name fully. Both occurrences in Daniel 1:7 record the renaming of the Hebrew youths: Azariah becomes Abednego. The name symbolizes Babylonian cultural imposition, yet Azariah and his friends maintain covenant faithfulness despite foreign names.

(2×) The Babylonian name assigned to Azariah, Daniel's companion, recorded twice in Daniel 1:7 during the renaming ceremony. The name likely means 'servant of Nebo' but may be intentionally corrupted from the pagan theophoric element. The dual reference emphasizes both the Hebrew identity (Azariah) and imposed Babylonian identity (Abednego). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Aved, Nego | es: Abed, Nego | fr: Abed-Nego, serviteur | de: Knecht, [נגו] Dan 1:7

עֲבֵד נְגוֹ H5665 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (14×)

Abed-nego; Babylonian name given to Azariah, one of Daniel's three companions in the furnace narrative.

The Babylonian court name assigned to Azariah, one of the four Judean youths deported to Nebuchadnezzar's palace (Dan 1:7; 2:17). The name likely means 'servant of Nebo' (the Babylonian deity of wisdom), though its exact etymology is debated since the expected form would be Abed-Nebo. Along with Shadrach and Meshach, Abed-nego is appointed over the affairs of the province of Babylon (Dan 2:49) and then famously refuses to worship the golden image, surviving the fiery furnace by divine deliverance (Dan 3:12-30). The Aramaic spelling 'Abed Nego' appears consistently across all fourteen occurrences in Daniel 2-3.

(14×) The Babylonian name given to Azariah of Judah at the Babylonian court, probably meaning 'servant of Nebo.' One of Daniel's three companions who refuse to worship the golden image and are cast into the fiery furnace but miraculously preserved (Dan 3:12-30). All occurrences are in Aramaic portions of Daniel: his administrative appointment (Dan 2:49), the accusation before Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 3:12-14), the confrontation and deliverance (Dan 3:16-26), and the king's decree protecting their God (Dan 3:29-30). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Aved-Nego | es: y-Abed-Nego | fr: et-Abed-Nego | de: und-Abed-Nego Dan 2:49; Dan 3:12; Dan 3:13; Dan 3:14; Dan 3:16

עָבָה H5666 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (3×)

To be thick, stout, or gross; used of physical thickness and metaphorically of spiritual insensitivity

This verb captures both physical and metaphorical thickness. In the famous comparison of 1 Kings 12:10, Rehoboam's advisors boast that his little finger is thicker than his father's waist—a vivid image of power and intimidation. In Deuteronomy 32:15, the same root describes Israel becoming 'thick' or 'gross' from prosperity, like an overfed beast growing sleek and rebellious. The cognates in Aramaic and Arabic suggest swelling, density, and even stupidity, showing how physical thickness shades into moral dullness across Semitic languages.

(3×) The verb appears in contexts of comparison (Rehoboam's finger vs. Solomon's waist) and spiritual diagnosis (Israel's prosperity-induced rebellion). The multilingual glosses reveal the challenge: Spanish and English capture the physical dimension ('grueso,' 'thick'), while the metaphorical sense of spiritual insensitivity requires additional glossing. The Deuteronomy passage is particularly striking, where three parallel verbs—'you grew fat, thick, sleek'—pile up to depict Israel's dangerous prosperity. FATNESS AND RICHNESS

en: is-thicker, you-grew-thick | es: es-grueso, es-más-grueso, te-pusiste-grueso | fr: [עבה], est-thicker, tu-grew-thick | de: [עבה], du-wuchs-dick, ist-thicker Deut 32:15; 1Kgs 12:10; 2Chr 10:10

עֲבוֹט H5667 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (4×)

pledge, security; an article given as collateral for a debt

This noun denotes an object given as security or collateral for a loan. Deuteronomy 24:10-13 regulates the taking of pledges, requiring creditors to respect the dignity of debtors: the creditor must not enter the debtor's house to seize the pledge, and if the pledge is a cloak, it must be returned by sunset so the poor person can sleep in it. The legislation protects the vulnerable while acknowledging the legitimacy of collateral in loan transactions.

(4×) An item pledged as security for a debt or loan. The four occurrences all appear in Deuteronomy 24:10-13, a legal text regulating pledge-taking practices. The law prohibits forcible seizure ("do not go into his house to take his pledge"), mandates standing outside while the debtor brings it out, and requires returning a poor person's cloak-pledge at night. Multilingual glosses are consistent: "pledge/prenda/gage/Pfand." Some bracket [בעבטו], reflecting prepositional forms. The term is embedded in social-justice legislation protecting debtor rights within ancient credit systems. PLEDGES AND SECURITY

en: his-pledge, the-pledge, with-his-pledge | es: con-su-prenda, la-prenda, su-prenda | fr: avec-son-pledge, le-pledge, son-pledge | de: der-Pfand, mit-sein-Pfand, sein-Pfand Deut 24:10; Deut 24:11; Deut 24:12; Deut 24:13

עָבוּר H5668 Prep-b / N-msc / 2fs (49×)

For the sake of, because of; in order that, so that — a prepositional particle expressing cause, benefit, or purpose.

A compound preposition (ba'abur) expressing either the cause behind an action or the purpose toward which it aims. The causal sense dominates: God cursed the ground 'because of you' (Gen 3:17), and the patriarchal narratives repeatedly use it to explain divine favor — 'for Abraham's sake' (Gen 26:24), 'for David's sake' (2 Sam 5:12). The purposive sense emerges in goal-directed speech, especially in Genesis: Rebekah instructs Jacob to serve Isaac 'so that he may bless you' (Gen 27:4, 10, 19). Spanish splits cleanly between 'por causa de' (causal) and 'para que' (purposive); French similarly distinguishes 'pour cause de' from 'dans order que.'

1. for the sake of, because of (35×) For the sake of, because of, on account of — causal or benefactive, indicating the reason, ground, or person motivating an action. Covers 35 of 49 occurrences. The ground was cursed 'because of you' (Gen 3:17), and divine blessing is channeled 'for the sake of' key figures (Gen 18:26, 29; 26:24; 2 Sam 5:12; 7:21). Spanish 'por causa de' and French 'pour cause de' consistently mark this causal sense (Exod 9:16; Mic 2:10; Ps 106:32). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: because, because-of, for-sake-of | es: Por-causa-de, para, por-causa-de | fr: [בעבור], parce-que-de, pour-cause-de | de: [בעבור], auf-account-von, fuer-sake-von Gen 3:17; Gen 8:21; Gen 12:13; Gen 12:16; Gen 18:26

2. in order that, so that (14×) In order that, so that — purposive or telic, introducing a goal clause or intended outcome. Found in 14 passages, especially in direct speech where a character explains their aim. Rebekah tells Jacob to prepare food 'so that' Isaac will bless him (Gen 27:4, 10, 19, 31); Abraham sets aside seven lambs 'in order that' they may serve as witness (Gen 21:30). Spanish 'para que' and German 'damit' clearly mark the purposive force, distinguishing it from the causal usage. PURPOSE CONJUNCTION

en: and-in-order-that, in-order-that, in-order-to | es: Para-que, para-, para-hacer-cambiar | fr: ainsi-ce, dans-order-ce, dans-order-que | de: damit, in-order-dass, in-order-jenes Gen 21:30; Gen 27:4; Gen 27:10; Gen 27:19; Gen 27:31

עָבוּר H5669 Prep-m / N-msc (2×)

produce, yield (of the land)

This noun refers to agricultural produce or yield—the crops and food that the land produces. Both occurrences are in Joshua 5:11-12, marking Israel's first Passover in Canaan. After eating 'the produce of the land,' the manna ceased—a pivotal moment when wilderness provision ended and agricultural settlement began. The word emphasizes the land's fertility and God's provision through natural means rather than supernatural miracle, transitioning Israel from nomadic to agricultural life.

(2×) The agricultural produce or yield of the land, specifically the crops of Canaan eaten by Israel after entering the promised land (Joshua 5:11-12). The context marks the transition from manna to cultivated food, from wilderness to settlement. Cross-linguistic glosses render this as 'produce' or 'yield,' emphasizing the land's output. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-produce-of | es: del-producto-de | fr: de-produce-de | de: von-produce-von Josh 5:11; Josh 5:12

עָבַט H5670 V-Piel-Imperf-3mp / Pn (6×)

To lend on pledge or to borrow against security; Israelite debt-pledge transactions

The denominative verb עָבַט governs the two sides of a pledge-secured loan in ancient Israelite law. In its Hifil (causative) forms, it describes lending — causing another to give a pledge — as in the promise that Israel 'will lend to many nations but will not borrow' (Deut 15:6). In its Qal form, it takes the borrower's perspective: taking a pledge from someone or borrowing against security, as regulated in Deut 24:10. The entire semantic range orbits Deuteronomic legislation about fair lending practices among kinsmen.

1. lend on pledge, give as a loan (Hifil) (4×) Hifil causative forms meaning 'to lend (on pledge),' representing the creditor's side of the transaction. French 'tu fera preter' (you will cause to lend) and Spanish 'le prestaras' (you will lend to him) clearly render the causative lending sense. Deut 15:6 promises that obedient Israel will lend to many nations, and Deut 15:8 commands generous lending to a poor brother — 'you shall surely lend to him' (using the emphatic infinitive absolute construction). Joel 2:7 contains a disputed form that may belong to a different root. LENDING LOANS

en: and-lending, and-you-will-lend, they-swerve | es: le-prestarás, tuercen, y-ciertamente-prestar | fr: engager, et-lending, et-tu-fera-prêter | de: [יעבטון], du-soll-leihen-zu-ihn, und-du-wird-leihen Deut 15:6; Deut 15:8; Joel 2:7

2. take a pledge, borrow on security (Qal) (2×) Qal forms meaning 'to take a pledge' or 'to borrow on security,' presenting the borrower's or pledge-taker's perspective. Spanish 'para tomar en prenda' (to take in pledge) and 'tomaras prestado' (you will borrow) distinguish both nuances. In Deut 24:10 the creditor is forbidden from entering a neighbor's house to seize his pledge, while Deut 15:6 contrasts lending (Hifil) with borrowing (Qal) in a single verse, neatly separating the two stems' roles. PLEDGES AND SECURITY

en: to-take-pledge, will-borrow | es: para-tomar-en-prenda, tomarás-prestado | fr: fera-emprunter, à-prendre-pledge | de: wird-borgen, zu-nehmen-Pfand Deut 15:6; Deut 24:10

עַבְטִיט H5671 N-ms (1×)

thick pledges, heavy debt (intensive plural)

An intensive noun denoting a crushing load of pledges or debts, appearing in Habakkuk's woe oracle against the oppressor. The prophet uses vivid language to describe the arrogant conqueror who 'loads himself with pledges' taken from victims. The Hebrew term intensifies the idea of weight and accumulation, picturing the wicked man buried under the mass of his extorted collateral.

(1×) The heavy burden of pledges that the wicked oppressor heaps upon himself in Habakkuk 2:6. The taunt-song mocks the conqueror: 'Woe to him who loads himself with thick pledges!' The intensive form emphasizes not just debt but the oppressive, crushing weight of multiple obligations forcibly extracted. Spanish renders it as 'pledges!' with an exclamation, while French interprets it as 'stolen objects.' PLEDGES AND SECURITY

en: with-pledges | es: prendas! | fr: objet-volé | de: [עבטים] Hab 2:6

עָבִי H5672 Conj-w / N-msc / 3ms (4×)

thickness; the dimension of depth or width, especially of solid objects

This noun measures the thickness or depth dimension of substantial objects. It describes the thickness of the molten sea (bronze basin) in Solomon's temple (1 Kings 7:26, 2 Chronicles 4:5), the thickness of a pillar (Jeremiah 52:21), and metaphorically the "thickness of the bosses of shields" in Job 15:26, symbolizing arrogant defiance. The term may also appear in Exodus 19:9, if one emends בְּעַב הֶעָנָן to בַּעֲבִי ("in the thickness of the cloud").

(4×) Denotes the thickness, depth, or girth of solid objects. The term appears in temple construction accounts (1 Kings 7:26, 2 Chronicles 4:5: thickness of the molten sea), prophetic descriptions (Jeremiah 52:21: pillar thickness), and poetic metaphor (Job 15:26: thick shield-bosses representing stubborn pride). Multilingual glosses render as "thickness/grosor/épaisseur," with several bracketing [ועביו] and [בעבי]. The term is fundamentally dimensional, measuring the third axis (beyond length and width) of substantial architectural or metaphorical objects. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: and-its-thickness, with-thickness-of | es: Y-grosor-de-él, Y-su-grosor, con-espesura-de | fr: [ועביו], dans-בעבי, et-son-épaisseur | de: [בעב], [ועביו], und-sein-thickness 1Kgs 7:26; 2Chr 4:5; Job 15:26; Jer 52:21

עֲבִידָה H5673 N-fsd (6×)

Work, service, or administrative duty; an Aramaic noun for labor on temple construction or governmental administration (Daniel, Ezra).

The Aramaic feminine noun עֲבִידָה (avidah) denotes work, service, or administrative function, cognate with Hebrew עֲבֹדָה. Found exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel, it covers both physical labor — specifically the rebuilding of the Jerusalem temple (Ezra 4:24; 5:8; 6:7) — and governmental administration under Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 2:49; 3:12). Its final occurrence designates the ritual service of God organized by priestly divisions (Ezra 6:18). Multilingual glosses confirm this range: Spanish 'servicio/obra,' French 'travail/service,' all pointing to purposeful, organized labor.

work, service, administration (Aramaic) (6×) Work, service, or administrative duty in an official or sacred context. In Ezra, the term refers to the physical construction work on the temple (Ezra 4:24; 5:8; 6:7) and the organized ritual service of God (Ezra 6:18). In Daniel, it designates provincial administration — the affairs of state delegated by the king (Dan 2:49; 3:12). The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'servicio/obra,' French 'travail/service,' English 'administration/work/service' — reflects the word's breadth from manual labor to governmental oversight, unified by the concept of assigned, purposeful duty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: administration-of, and-work, the-service-of | es: el-servicio-de, la-obra-de, los-asuntos-de | fr: et-travail, service, travail | de: [ועבידתא], [לעבידת], [עבידת] Ezra 4:24; Ezra 5:8; Ezra 6:7; Ezra 6:18; Dan 2:49

H5674 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs (2×)
to pass through, transgress (in these contexts)
While this common verb typically means 'to pass over' or 'pass through,' these two occurrences carry connotations of transgression or spiritual unfaithfulness. In Jeremiah 2:20, God accuses Israel of breaking the yoke and transgressing covenant; in Nahum 1:15, the promise that 'the wicked one will no more pass through you' suggests enemy invasion or spiritual violation. Both contexts involve boundary-crossing in a negative sense—rebellion or hostile intrusion.

(2×) Used in these contexts with overtones of transgression or violation. Jeremiah 2:20 speaks of covenant-breaking ('I will transgress'), while Nahum 1:15 promises cessation of enemy incursion ('no more pass through you'). Though the basic meaning is 'pass through,' the contexts emphasize illicit crossing of boundaries—moral, covenantal, or territorial. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: (I-will-transgress), through-you | es: por-ti, transgrediré | fr: [(אעבור)], en-toi | de: [(אעבור)], in-dir Jer 2:20; Nah 1:15

עָבַר H5674a Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf / 2ms (552×)
to pass over, pass through, pass by; to cross (a boundary, river); to pass away, cease; to transgress; to cause to pass; to remove Occurring 552 times, this verb is central to biblical narrative and law, describing movement through space and the crossing of boundaries both physical and moral. Abraham passes through Canaan (Gen 12:6), Israel crosses the Jordan (Josh 3), armies ford rivers, travelers pass by on roads, time passes and seasons end, covenants are transgressed, offerings are presented, proclamations are sent through camps, and property is transferred. The basic Qal stem means 'pass by' or 'cross over', the Hifil causative means 'cause to cross' or 'remove', the Piel has rare uses for impregnating animals or drawing something through, and specialized meanings include transgressing commandments, causing children to 'pass through fire' to idols, and issuing decrees. The semantic range spans physical transit, temporal passing, legal violation, and various causative extensions.

1. Qal: pass by, pass through (256×) The most frequent Qal sense: passing by, passing through, or passing along a location in transit without emphasis on crossing a boundary. Abraham 'passed through the land' surveying it (Gen 12:6), the smoking firepot 'passed between' the pieces (Gen 15:17), travelers pass by on a road (Judg 19:12), and Jacob's flocks pass before him for inspection (Gen 32:16). The translations consistently render this as motion through or past (Arabic 'abara 'to pass', Korean 지나가다 'to pass by'), distinguishing it from the boundary-crossing of sense 2. DEPARTING AND PASSING en: and-he-passed-through, and-passed, and-passed-over | es: Y-pasó, y-pasó | fr: et-il-passa-à-travers, et-passa, et-passa-sur | de: und-durchzog, und-er-ging-vorbei-durch, und-ging-hindurch Gen 12:6; Gen 15:17; Josh 15:3; Josh 15:4

2. Qal: cross over (134×) A Qal sense emphasizing crossing over a physical boundary such as a river, sea, border, or threshold. Israel 'crossed over' the Jordan on dry ground (Josh 3-4), Abraham 'crossed' the Euphrates to enter Canaan, armies ford rivers to invade (2 Sam 17:22), and travelers enter or leave territories. The multilingual evidence shows boundary-crossing as central (Arabic 'abara when crossing rivers, Korean 건너다 'to cross over'), a specialized use of the basic 'pass' semantics focused on the moment of transition across a defined edge. DEPARTING AND PASSING
en: and-they-crossed-over, are-crossing, crossed | es: cruzando, cruzaréis, cruzáis | fr: et-ils-traversa-sur, il-traversa, sont-traversant | de: Uebergang, Uebergang-ueber, er-vorüberging Gen 31:21; Gen 32:22; Gen 32:31; Gen 33:3; Num 33:51

3. Qal: pass away, cease (55×) A Qal sense describing temporal passing, cessation, or vanishing — time, seasons, wrath, or life passing away. The days of mourning 'passed' (Gen 50:4), the battle 'passed beyond' Beth-aven (1 Sam 14:23), the harvest 'is past' (Jer 8:20), and God's wrath 'passes over' when judgment subsides (Job 14:13). The translations reflect endings and disappearances (Arabic inqaḍā 'to elapse', Korean 지나가다 in temporal sense), an extension from spatial to temporal motion. DEPARTING AND PASSING
en: (to-pass-through-), I-have-caused-to-pass, [pass-through-] | es: (a-pasar), Y-pasará, [a-pasar] | fr: et-au-delà, et-passer, passa | de: ging-hinueber, ging-vorbei, hinuebergehen Gen 50:4; 1Sam 14:23; 2Sam 11:27; 2Sam 20:14; 1Kgs 18:29

4. Hifil: bring across, cause to cross (40×) A Hifil causative sense of bringing across, causing to cross, or leading over a physical boundary. God 'brought' a wind over the earth to dry the flood (Gen 8:1), the man 'brought Israel over' the Jordan (2 Sam 19:18), Moses commands 'you shall cause to pass through fire' as dedication or pagan ritual (Exod 13:12, Lev 18:21). The causative morphology signals agency (Arabic a'bara 'to cause to cross', Korean 건너게 하다 'to make cross'), distinguishing this from intransitive crossing. DEPARTING AND PASSING
en: And-I-will-make-pass, I-cause-to-pass, [and-crossed] | es: Y-haré-pasar, Y-me-hizo-pasar, Y-os-haré-pasar | fr: [and-crossed], et-passa, et-passer | de: [and-crossed], du-soll-durchgehen-durch, er-caused-zu-gehe-vorbei Gen 8:1; Gen 32:23; Exod 13:12; Lev 18:21

5. Qal: transgress, violate (30×) A specialized Qal sense denoting moral or legal transgression — crossing the boundary of covenant, commandment, or oath. Moses warns 'Why do you transgress the commandment of the Lord?' (Num 14:41), Balaam refuses to 'go beyond the word of the Lord' (Num 22:18), and Joshua marks stones as witness 'lest you transgress' (Josh 24:27). The translations render this as violation (Arabic tajaawaza 'to transgress', Korean 어기다 'to violate'), a metaphorical extension of boundary-crossing into the moral domain. DEPARTING AND PASSING
en: I-transgressed, When-you-transgress, and-let-pass | es: Cuando-transgredíais, he-transgredido, lo-traspasará | fr: When-tu-transgresser, et-ils-transgressa, et-passer | de: When-du-uebertreten, er-uebertrat, ging-hinueber Num 14:41; Num 22:18; Num 24:13; Deut 17:2; Deut 26:13

6. Hifil: remove, take away (18×) A Hifil causative sense meaning to remove, take away, or put aside — lifting something off or transferring it elsewhere. Joseph 'removed' the Egyptians to cities (Gen 47:21), David 'removed' Saul's armor (1 Sam 17:39), God 'takes away' iniquity (2 Sam 12:13), and idols are 'put away' (Gen 35:2). The evidence shows this as eliminating or displacing (Arabic azāla 'to remove', Korean 제거하다 'to remove'), a causative extension where causing something to pass becomes causing it to depart permanently. DEPARTING AND PASSING
en: I-will-cause-to-pass, and-he-removed, and-put-away | es: Aparta, Y-quitó, dejó-pasar | fr: –cause-à-passer, a-passa-au-dessus, cause-à-passe-au-loin | de: cause-zu-gehe-vorbei-weg, ging-hinueber, hat-ging-vorbei-ueber Gen 47:21; Exod 33:19; 2Sam 3:10; 2Sam 12:13; 2Sam 24:10

7. Hifil: proclaim, send word (9×) A Hifil causative sense of causing a voice, decree, or sound to pass through a camp or land — issuing proclamations, blowing trumpets, sending orders. Moses 'sent proclamation throughout the camp' (Exod 36:6), the jubilee trumpet 'shall sound throughout' the land (Lev 25:9), and royal heralds 'sent word throughout Israel' (2 Chr 30:5). The glosses reflect promulgation (Arabic a'lana 'to proclaim', Korean 공포하다 'to announce'), where causing to pass means broadcasting a message. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: and-he-caused-to-pass, and-he-sent-proclamation-, and-they-caused-to-pass | es: Y-harás-pasar, e-hicieron-pasar, e-hizo-pasar- | fr: causant-à-transgress, et-ils-caused-à-passer, et-passer | de: causing-zu-uebertrete, du-soll-cause-zu-durchgehen, hinuebergehen Exod 36:6; Lev 25:9; 1Sam 2:24; 2Chr 30:5

8. Hifil: transfer, convey (5×) A Hifil causative sense of transferring, conveying, or transmitting ownership, possession, or inheritance from one party to another. The daughters of Zelophehad receive ruling that their father's inheritance 'shall pass to them' (Num 27:7-8), and Esther receives Haman's ring 'transferred' to Mordecai (Esth 8:2). The translations emphasize property transfer (Arabic nawwala 'to transfer', Korean 양도하다 'to transfer'), a legal-economic extension of causing to pass. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: and-they-carried-them-over, and-you-shall-carry-over, and-you-shall-transfer | es: transfirió, y-las-pasaron, y-las-pasaréis | fr: et-ils-porta-eux-sur, et-tu-devra-porter-sur, et-tu-devra-transfer | de: ging-hinueber, und-du-soll-tragen-ueber, und-du-soll-transfer Num 27:7; Num 27:8; Josh 4:3; Josh 4:8; Esth 8:2

9. Qal: overflow, surge (3×) A Qal sense applied to liquids: to overflow, surge, or sweep through. The lover describes hands 'flowing with myrrh' (Song 5:5), lips 'flowing with myrrh' (5:13), and Isaiah warns the flooding river 'shall overflow' (Isa 23:10). The evidence shows this as liquid motion (Arabic fāḍa 'to overflow', Korean 넘치다 'to overflow'), an extension of the basic 'pass' sense to water breaching banks or spreading. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: flowing, overflow | es: Pasa, que-fluye | fr: coulante,, coulante., passer | de: hinuebergehen, jenseits Song 5:5; Song 5:13; Isa 23:10

10. Piel: impregnate, breed (2×) A rare Piel intensive sense meaning to impregnate, breed, or cause to conceive. Solomon 'drew chains of gold' through the temple (1 Kgs 6:21, possibly different sense), and Job notes 'his bull breeds without fail' (21:10). The translations are uncertain (Arabic laqqaḥa 'to impregnate', Korean 교배하다 'to breed'), and this sense may involve causing seed or semen to pass into the womb, a specialized agricultural or biological term attested only twice. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: and-he-drew, breeds | es: fecunda, y-pasó | fr: et-il-tira, passer | de: jenseits, und-er-zog 1Kgs 6:21; Job 21:10

עָבַר H5674b Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-3ms (9×)

To become furious or enraged (Hitpael); to act arrogantly or pass by in defiance

A Hitpael denominative verb conveying intense, reflexive anger – literally 'to work oneself into a fury.' Most often predicated of God, as in Psalm 78:21 where the LORD 'was furious' at Israel's unbelief, and Deuteronomy 3:26 where He 'was angry' with Moses on Israel's account. Proverbs 14:16 applies it to human arrogance: the fool 'rages' and is self-confident, contrasted with one who fears. Spanish 'se encolerizó' and English 'was furious' both capture the eruption of wrath, while one occurrence in Proverbs 26:17 preserves the older Qal sense of 'passing by' (Spanish 'el que pasa'), where a bystander meddles in a quarrel not his own.

1. be furious, be enraged (Hitpael reflexive) (8×) The Hitpael reflexive expressing intense self-generated fury or outrage. Nearly always used of God's wrath in the Psalms and Deuteronomy – Psalm 78:21, 59, 62 and 89:38 portray Yahweh 'becoming furious' at covenant-breaking Israel. Spanish 'se encolerizó' (flew into anger) and German 'furious' reflect the reflexive, self-intensifying quality. In Proverbs 14:16 and 20:2, the word extends to human arrogance and the danger of provoking royal fury. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: and-was-angry, and-was-furious, becoming-enraged | es: el-que-lo-provoca, que-se-enfurece, se-encolerizó | fr: et-passer, et-était-angry, le-passer | de: [מתעברו], [מתעברו], du-haben-gewesen-furious Deut 3:26; Ps 78:21; Ps 78:59; Ps 78:62; Ps 89:38

2. pass by, one passing (Qal of 'abar I) (1×) A single occurrence in Proverbs 26:17 where the form functions as a Qal participle of the primary root 'abar ('to pass by'), describing someone who 'passes by' and meddles in a quarrel. Spanish 'el que pasa' and English 'one passing by' treat this as straightforward movement, distinct from the Hitpael rage-sense, though BDB groups it here because of formal overlap. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: one-passing-by | es: el-que-pasa | fr: passer | de: jenseits Prov 26:17

עֵבֶר H5675 N-msc (14×)

Beyond, the region across; Aramaic noun used in the phrase 'Beyond the River' for the Trans-Euphrates province.

An Aramaic noun cognate to Hebrew 'ever, meaning 'the region across' or 'beyond.' In biblical usage it appears exclusively in the administrative phrase 'avar naharah – 'Beyond the River' – the official Persian designation for the satrapy west of the Euphrates encompassing Syria, Phoenicia, and Palestine. All fourteen occurrences cluster in Ezra 4-7, where Persian officials Tattenai and Shethar-bozenai, governors of 'Beyond the River,' correspond with the royal court about the Jerusalem temple rebuilding. The phrase mirrors the Arabic 'ma wara' al-nahr' and recalls the Akkadian bureaucratic geography of empire.

beyond (14×) The region on the other side, used exclusively in the Aramaic administrative phrase 'avar naharah ('Beyond the River') to designate the Persian satrapy west of the Euphrates. Appears throughout the Ezra correspondence regarding temple reconstruction: letters to and from the provincial governors (Ezra 4:10-11, 16-17, 20; 5:3, 6; 6:6, 8, 13) and royal decrees authorizing support from the satrapy's revenues (Ezra 7:21, 25). The term reflects Persian imperial geography rather than a general spatial concept. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beyond, beyond, in-Beyond | es: en-más-allá-de, en-Éver, más-allá-de | fr: Héber, au-delà-de | de: jenseits Ezra 4:10; Ezra 4:11; Ezra 4:16; Ezra 4:17; Ezra 4:20

עֵבֶר H5676 Prep-b / N-msc (92×)

The region across or beyond (a river or boundary); a side, flank, or direction relative to an object; plural: sides, edges.

The noun עֵבֶר derives from the root עבר ('to cross over') and designates the region on the other side of a natural boundary — characteristically a river. Its most famous usage, עֵבֶר הַיַּרְדֵּן ('beyond the Jordan'), became a geographic proper name for Transjordan and appears throughout the conquest narratives. Combined with various prepositions — בְּעֵבֶר ('in the region across'), מֵעֵבֶר ('from beyond'), אֶל־עֵבֶר ('toward the other side') — it creates a flexible spatial system. The word also serves as 'side' or 'flank' in non-riverine contexts, describing the sides of the lampstand (Exod 25:37) or the edges of the priestly breastpiece (Exod 28:26). German jenseits and French au-delà both preserve the 'other-sidedness' that defines this word.

1. beyond, region across (73×) The region across or beyond a geographic feature, especially a river, sea, or border (73 occurrences). This dominant sense appears with prepositions to mark location (בְּעֵבֶר, 'on the far side of') or motion (מֵעֵבֶר, 'from beyond'). The expression עֵבֶר הַנָּהָר ('beyond the River,' i.e., the Euphrates) functions as a semi-proper geographic designation in Joshua 24:2-3. Spanish al otro lado de, French au-delà de, and German jenseits all employ compound prepositional phrases, reflecting the inherent two-term spatial relationship: this side versus that side. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: beyond, from-beyond, in-beyond | es: Al-otro-lado-de, al-otro-lado-de, al-otro-lado-del | fr: au-delà, au-delà-de, dans-au-delà | de: in-jenseits, jenseits, von-jenseits Gen 50:10; Gen 50:11; Num 21:13; Num 22:1; Num 32:19

2. side, direction, flank (15×) A side, flank, or directional face of an object or person, without reference to crossing a boundary (15 occurrences). Used for the sides of the golden lampstand (Exod 25:37), the edges of the priestly garments (Exod 28:26; 39:19), or a cliff face (1 Sam 14:1, 4). French côté and German Seite appear here instead of the 'beyond' vocabulary, confirming that translators recognize a distinct spatial orientation sense — relative position without the 'other side of a boundary' presupposition. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: area-of, from-side, from-side-of | es: a-lado, a-su-lado, de-el-lado | fr: au-delà, côté-de, de-côté | de: Seite-von, [לעברו], [עבר] Exod 25:37; Exod 28:26; Exod 39:19; Josh 22:11; 1Sam 14:1

3. sides, edges (plural) (4×) The sides or edges of an object in plural or dual reference, typically with possessive suffixes — 'his sides,' 'their sides' (4 occurrences). Exodus 32:15 describes tablets written on 'their two sides' (מִשְּׁנֵי עֲבָרֵיהֶם), and 1 Kings 4:24 speaks of dominion over 'all the region on this side' using a pluralized form. French leurs côtés and German ihre Seiten confirm the plural-edges reading as distinct from the singular directional sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-edges-of, his-sides, side | es: en-lados-de, lados, sus-lados | fr: au-delà, leur-côtés, son-côtés | de: [בעברי], [עבריו], ihr-Seiten Exod 32:15; 1Kgs 4:24; Jer 48:28; Jer 49:32

עֵבֶר H5677 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (15×)

Eber, descendant of Shem through Arpachshad and traditional ancestor of the Hebrew peoples.

ᶜĒver is the great-grandson of Shem and father of Peleg and Joktan, positioned in the Table of Nations as the eponymous ancestor of the Hebrews (Gen 10:21, 24–25; 11:14–17). Shem is called 'father of all the sons of Eber,' a phrase that sweeps together both the Abrahamic line through Peleg and the Arabian tribes through Joktan. The Chronicler preserves the same genealogy (1 Chr 1:18–19, 25), while Balaam's oracle enigmatically warns that ships from Kittim will afflict ᶜĒver (Num 24:24), possibly meaning 'the Hebrews' as a collective. A postexilic priest also bears the name (Neh 12:20). Spanish 'Heber' and Greek Εβερ both reflect the ancient Septuagint vocalization.

Eber (personal name) (15×) The personal name Eber (עֵבֶר), borne primarily by the Shemite patriarch listed in Genesis 10–11 and 1 Chronicles 1 as ancestor of both the Hebrew and Arabian lines. The name likely derives from the root ᶜ-b-r ('to cross over'), connecting etymologically to ᶜivrî ('Hebrew'). Shem's title 'father of all the sons of Eber' (Gen 10:21) gives the name a corporate, ethnographic dimension beyond the individual. A secondary bearer appears among postexilic Levitical priests (Neh 12:20). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Eber, Ever, and-Ever | es: Eber, Heber, Y-a-Eber | fr: Eber, Héber, et-Héber | de: Eber, Ebers, [ולעבר] Gen 10:21; Gen 10:24; Gen 10:25; Gen 11:14; Gen 11:15

עֶבְרָה H5678 Prep-b / N-fpc (34×)

Wrath, fury, overflowing rage (especially divine); arrogance or insolent excess; outbursts or torrents of anger.

The Hebrew noun evrah derives from the root ayin-bet-resh, 'to cross over, overflow,' and carries the image of anger that exceeds all bounds — fury that overflows like a flood. In its dominant sense (30 occurrences), it names the terrifying wrath of God poured out in judgment: 'a day of wrath' (Zeph 1:15), 'He sent upon them the fierceness of His anger, wrath and indignation' (Ps 78:49). Spanish ira/furor, French colere/fureur, and German Zorn/Grimm cluster tightly around intense anger. But the word's etymological connection to 'overflow' surfaces in two revealing minority senses: the arrogant 'excess of insolence' (Prov 21:24) where pride crosses proper limits, and the plural 'outbursts of anger' (Job 40:11; Ps 7:6) that picture fury as repeated surges. Arabic غَضَب and Hindi क्रोध confirm the cross-linguistic core of divine wrath, while the overflow metaphor remains distinctively Hebrew.

1. wrath, fury, rage (30×) Intense wrath, fury, or rage — overwhelmingly divine anger unleashed in judgment, though also applied to human fury (Gen 49:7; Prov 14:35). This dominant sense (30 occurrences) encompasses 'the day of the LORD's wrath' (Zeph 1:15, 18), the burning fury sent upon Egypt (Ps 78:49), and the rod of God's fury wielded against the nations (Isa 10:6; 14:6). Spanish ira/furor, French colere/fureur, German Zorn/Grimm, Arabic غَضَب, and Hindi क्रोध converge emphatically. The word's gravitational pull is toward the language of catastrophic judgment — it appears alongside af ('nostril-anger'), chemah ('heat-rage'), and zaam ('indignation') in some of Scripture's most fearsome judgment oracles (Ps 78:49; Isa 13:9). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-wrath, and-his-fury, at-fury-of | es: Por-la-ira-de, con-furia, en-mi-furor | fr: [עברתך], colère, et-colère | de: [בעברה], [בעברת], [בעברתו] Gen 49:7; Job 21:30; Ps 78:49; Ps 85:3; Ps 90:9

2. arrogance, insolence, presumptuousness (2×) Arrogance or insolent presumptuousness — an overflow of pride that transgresses proper bounds. Only two clear occurrences, but both are instructive: Proverbs 21:24 names the scoffer as one who acts 'in the overflow of insolence' (evrat zadon), and Jeremiah 48:30 denounces Moab's evrah alongside gaavah and gaon (pride, haughtiness). Spanish soberbia, French orgueil, and German Ubermut shift away from anger vocabulary toward pride, confirming a genuinely distinct sense. The etymological logic is transparent: just as anger overflows its container, so arrogance crosses the boundary of what is fitting. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-insolence, in-overflow-of | es: en-la-soberbia-de, su-arrogancia | fr: dans-colère, fureur | de: [בעברת], [עברתו] Prov 21:24; Jer 48:30

3. outpouring, overflow of fury (2×) Outbursts or torrential overflowings of rage, used in the plural form to picture fury as repeated surges or waves rather than a single state. Only two occurrences (Job 40:11; Ps 7:6), both employing the plural avrot to denote repeated eruptions of wrath — 'pour out the overflowings of your anger' (Job 40:11), 'arise in the ragings of my adversaries' (Ps 7:6). Spanish furores and English 'outbursts' capture the iterative, torrential quality. The plural form preserves the root metaphor of water overflowing its banks in successive waves, giving this sense a vivid concreteness absent from the singular. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against-the-rages-of, the-overflowings-of | es: contra-furores-de, furores-de | fr: [בעברות], colère | de: [עברות], gegen-der-rages-von Job 40:11; Ps 7:6

עֲבָרָה H5679 Art / N-fs (2×)

ford (river crossing place)

This feminine noun denotes a ford—a shallow place in a river where people and animals can cross on foot. The two occurrences in 2 Samuel involve David's flight from Absalom. In 15:28 (with textual variant), David waits 'at the fords of the wilderness' for word from Jerusalem; in 19:18, they cross 'the ford' to bring the king back. Fords were strategic locations for travel and communication, especially in times of political crisis when bridges might be controlled or destroyed.

(2×) A river ford or crossing place. Both references in 2 Samuel relate to crossing the Jordan during David's flight from and return after Absalom's rebellion. The Hebrew shows textual variants (ketiv/qere) between 'fords' and 'plains,' but 'fords' fits the context of river crossing. Such locations were militarily and logistically significant. BOAT FISHING VESSEL

en: [at-the-fords], the-ford | es: [en-vados-de], el-vado | fr: [at-le-fords], le-ford | de: [at-der-fords], der-ford 2Sam 15:28; 2Sam 19:18

עִבְרִי H5680 N-proper-mp (34×)

Hebrew; the gentilic adjective and noun designating members of the Israelite/Abrahamic people, masculine or feminine.

The ethnic designation 'ivri (Hebrew) is among the most ancient self-identifiers of the covenant people. It appears most often in the mouths of foreigners or in contexts distinguishing Israelites from other nations: Potiphar's wife calls Joseph 'a Hebrew man' (Gen 39:14, 17), and Joseph himself tells the Egyptians he was stolen from 'the land of the Hebrews' (Gen 40:15). The feminine form surfaces in the Exodus birth narrative where Hebrew midwives and mothers defy Pharaoh (Exod 1:15-19; 2:7), and in Deuteronomy's manumission law (Deut 15:12). Spanish 'hebreo/hebrea' and German 'Hebräer/Hebräerin' preserve the gender distinction clearly.

1. Hebrew man/people (28×) Hebrew man or people (masculine) — the gentilic designation identifying males or the collective nation as ethnically Hebrew. Abraham is first called ha-ivri (Gen 14:13), and the term recurs in Egyptian and Philistine speech to mark Israelites as distinct: Joseph in prison (Gen 40:15; 41:12), the Ark narrative

(1 Sam 4:6, 9), and the law of Hebrew servants (Exod 21:2; Deut 15:12). Spanish 'hebreo/hebreos,' French 'Hébreu,' and Korean '히브리' all serve as ethnic identifiers. The connection to Eber (Gen 10:21) and the possible meaning 'one from beyond' (the Euphrates or the Jordan) remains debated but linguistically suggestive. HEBREW PEOPLE

en: Hebrew, Hebrews, a-Hebrew | es: hebreo, hebreos, los-hebreos | fr: Hebrews, Hébreu, le-Hebrews | de: Hebraeer, Hebrews, [עִבְרִי] Gen 14:13; Gen 39:14; Gen 39:17; Gen 40:15; Gen 41:12

2. Hebrew woman/women (6×) Hebrew woman or women (feminine) — the specifically feminine form of the gentilic, used to designate females of Hebrew ethnicity. This appears almost exclusively in the Exodus birth narrative: the Hebrew midwives Shiphrah and Puah (Exod 1:15-16, 19), Moses's sister offering to find a Hebrew nursing woman (Exod 2:7), and the Deuteronomic law explicitly extending manumission rights to a Hebrew woman (Deut 15:12). Spanish 'hebrea/hebreas' and German 'Hebräerin' preserve the feminine marking that distinguishes this form from the masculine. HEBREW PEOPLE

en: and-the-Hebrew-woman, the-Hebrew, the-Hebrew-woman | es: la-hebrea, las-hebreas, y-la-hebrea | fr: [וְהָעִבְרִיָּה], le-Hebrew-femme, le-Hébreu | de: [וְהָעִבְרִיָּה], der-Hebraeer, der-Hebraeer-Frauen Exod 1:15; Exod 1:16; Exod 1:19; Exod 2:7; Deut 15:12

עִבְרִי H5681 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ivri (personal name: 'Hebrew' or possible variant)

A Levite name appearing in the genealogical lists of 1 Chronicles, where the second occurrence may be a textual variant or distinct individual. The name is identical in form to the gentilic 'Hebrew' but functions here as a personal name. Greek manuscripts show considerable variation, transliterating it as Abai, Obdi, or Abaria.

(1×) Ivri the Levite listed in 1 Chronicles 24:27 among the descendants of Merari in the priestly divisions. The name's identity with the word 'Hebrew' has prompted some to consider it a textual issue, though it may simply be a personal name derived from the gentilic. The variation in Greek witnesses (Abai, Obdi, Abaria) suggests early uncertainty about the reading. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Ivri | es: e-Ibri | fr: [וְעִבְרִי] | de: [וְעִבְרִי] 1Chr 24:27

עֵבָרִים H5682 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (5×)

Abarim; mountainous region in NW Moab, NE of the Dead Sea, including Mount Nebo

Abarim ('regions beyond') designates the mountain range in northwest Moab overlooking the Dead Sea and the Jordan valley. It is most significant as the location where Moses viewed the Promised Land before his death (Num 27:12; Deut 32:49). The name itself evokes crossing over, fitting its role as the final vantage point before Israel's entry into Canaan. Jeremiah 22:20 uses it poetically as a place from which to cry out.

(5×) The mountainous district in northwest Moab, northeast of the Dead Sea, encompassing Mount Nebo — where Moses ascended to view the Promised Land (Num 27:12; Deut 32:49). The name means 'regions beyond' or 'crossings,' and the LXX sometimes renders it as 'to peran' (the crossing). Spanish 'Abarim' and French 'Abarim' transliterate directly. In Jeremiah 22:20 the name appears in a poetic summons to cry out from the heights. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Abarim, the-Abarim | es: Abarim, desde-Abarim, los-Abarim | fr: [מֵעִבְרִים], le-Abarim | de: [מֵעִבְרִים], der-Abarim Num 27:12; Num 33:47; Num 33:48; Deut 32:49; Jer 22:20

עֶבְרֹן H5683 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Evron (place name, possibly textual variant for Avdon)

A town name appearing in Joshua's list of Asherite settlements, though most scholars believe the text should read 'Avdon' based on parallel passages and versions. The site is mentioned among the fortified cities of Asher's inheritance. If Evron is the original reading, the location is unknown; if a scribal error for Avdon, it refers to a Levitical city in the same region.

(1×) Evron, listed among the towns of Asher in Joshua 19:28, though textual evidence suggests reading 'Avdon' instead. The Greek versions render it Elbon, Achran, or similar forms, showing early uncertainty. BDB notes the site is 'probably' to be read as Avdon, a Levitical city elsewhere assigned to Asher, making this potentially a scribal variant of that better-known name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Evron | es: y-Ebrón | fr: et-Evron | de: und-Evron Josh 19:28

עַבְרֹנָה H5684 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)

Abronah (place name); wilderness encampment of Israel, one station from Ezion-geber

This place name identifies one of Israel's encampments during the wilderness wandering, located one march from Ezion-geber on the Gulf of Aqaba. Numbers 33:34-35 records the itinerary: they departed from Ezion-geber and camped at Abronah, then departed from Abronah and camped at Ezion-geber. The location is uncertain, somewhere in the Arabah south of the Dead Sea, marking Israel's progress toward Canaan along the eastern trade routes.

(2×) A place name marking an Israelite encampment in the wilderness wandering (Numbers 33:34-35). The site lay along the route from Ezion-geber, though exact location is unknown. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve the name with prepositional variations ('in Abronah,' 'from Abronah') reflecting Hebrew case relationships in the itinerary. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Abronah, in-Abronah | es: de-Abroná, en-Abroná | fr: dans-Abronah, de-Abronah | de: in-Abronah, von-Abronah Num 33:34; Num 33:35

עָבַשׁ H5685 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

shrivel, dry up (of seeds)

A verb describing the shriveling of grain seeds in Joel's agricultural disaster. The prophet uses this rare word to depict the complete crop failure accompanying the locust plague: 'the grains have shriveled under their clods.' Related to Arabic words for contracting or frowning, the Hebrew emphasizes the withering and collapse of what should have been full, viable seed.

(1×) The shriveling of seed grains under drought conditions in Joel 1:17, part of the prophet's description of agricultural catastrophe. 'The grains shrivel beneath the clods, the storehouses are desolate, the barns are broken down'—the verb vividly pictures dried-up kernels that never sprouted, contracting and collapsing in the parched soil. The root's connection to Arabic 'contract' or 'frown' captures the image of curling inward. WITHERING AND DRYING

en: shrivel | es: Se-pudrieron | fr: dessécher | de: [עבשו] Joel 1:17

עָבַת H5686 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3mp / 3fs (1×)

weave, wind together (metaphor for conspiracy)

A verb meaning to weave or wind together, used metaphorically in Micah for the intricate plotting of corrupt leaders. The prophet describes how 'the prince asks, the judge is ready for a bribe, and the great man utters his evil desire—thus they weave it together.' The image is of skilled conspirators intertwining their schemes like threads in a fabric.

(1×) The weaving together of corrupt schemes in Micah 7:3, where officials collaborate to pervert justice. 'The prince asks, the judge accepts bribes, the powerful dictate what they desire—and together they weave it.' The verb pictures conspiracy as skilled craftsmanship, the careful intertwining of multiple strands of corruption into a unified web. Some propose emending to a root meaning 'twist' or 'pervert,' but the weaving metaphor fits Micah's artistry. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-they-weave-it | es: y-la-enredan | fr: et-être-épais | de: [ויעבתוה] Mic 7:3

עָבוֹת H5687 Adj-fs (4×)

leafy, having thick foliage; used of trees with dense, interwoven branches

This adjective describes trees with thick, luxuriant foliage and interwoven branches. Leviticus 23:40 prescribes taking "branches of leafy trees" for the Feast of Booths. Nehemiah 8:15 echoes this command in the post-exilic observance. Ezekiel uses it twice (6:13, 20:28) in condemning idolatrous worship "under every leafy tree," where the dense canopy provided shade and secrecy for pagan rituals. The term emphasizes visual density and the aesthetic or cultic appeal of well-foliaged trees.

(4×) An adjective meaning leafy, densely foliaged, or thick with interwoven branches. Leviticus 23:40 and Nehemiah 8:15 prescribe "leafy trees" (עֵץ עָבֹת) for Sukkot celebration, while Ezekiel 6:13 and 20:28 condemn idolatrous practices "under every leafy tree/terebinth." Multilingual glosses are consistent: "leafy/thick/frondoso/touffu/dick." Some bracket [עבת] and [עבתה], possibly indicating gender or construct forms. The term evokes both positive connotations (festival use, beauty) and negative associations (idolatrous high places) depending on context. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES

en: leafy, thick | es: frondosa, frondoso | fr: [עבת], thick, touffu | de: [עבת], [עבתה], dick Lev 23:40; Neh 8:15; Ezek 6:13; Ezek 20:28

עֲבֹת H5688 N-cs (24×)

Twisted cords, ropes, or bands for binding; also thick, interwoven boughs or dense branches of a tree.

A word whose root meaning of 'intertwining' branches into two distinct domains. In its primary sense it refers to twisted or braided ropes and cords – the fresh ropes binding Samson (Judg 15:13-14), the golden cordage of the priestly ephod (Exod 28:14, 22-25), or the figurative bonds of sin and divine authority (Ps 2:3; Isa 5:18). German Schnur ('cord') and Spanish cuerdas/lazos both confirm this rope-and-binding cluster. The secondary sense describes thick, interwoven branches or dense foliage, appearing exclusively in Ezekiel's tree allegories (Ezek 19:11; 31:3, 10, 14), where the same image of interlacing fibers extends from rope to canopy.

1. ropes, cords, bands (20×) Twisted or braided ropes, cords, and bands used for binding, restraining, fastening, or drawing. Covers the literal ropes of the Samson narrative (Judg 15:13-14; 16:11-12), the ornamental cords of the priestly breastpiece (Exod 28:14, 22-25), and figurative bonds of oppression or sin (Ps 2:3; Isa 5:18). Cross-linguistic glosses converge: Ger. Schnur, Spa. cuerdas/cordones, Fra. corde. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-as-ropes-of, cord, cords-of | es: con-cuerdas, con-lazos-de, cordones-de | fr: [וכעבות], avec-cordes, corde | de: Schnur, [בעבתות], [וכעבות] Exod 28:14; Exod 28:22; Exod 28:24; Exod 28:25

2. thick boughs, dense branches (4×) Thick, interwoven boughs or dense branches of a tree, used of lush foliage and forest canopy. Found exclusively in Ezekiel's prophetic tree allegories: the vine's thick branches (Ezek 19:11) and the great cedar's dense boughs (Ezek 31:3, 10, 14). The semantic thread linking both senses is the root idea of intertwining – fibers twisted into rope or branches woven into canopy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: thick-boughs, thick-branches | es: espesura, las-nubes, nubes | fr: corde | de: [עבותים], [עבתים] Ezek 19:11; Ezek 31:3; Ezek 31:10; Ezek 31:14

עָגַב H5689 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (8×)

To lust after, have inordinate desire; (participle) lovers, paramours

The verb עָגַב describes intense, illicit sexual desire — a word reserved almost exclusively for Ezekiel's shocking allegory of Jerusalem and Samaria as unfaithful women lusting after foreign nations (Ezek 23). The Arabic cognate ajiba ('to wonder, admire') hints at the root's original sense of fascinated attraction, but in biblical usage the word has narrowed to raw, transgressive desire. Jeremiah 4:30 uses the participle substantively — 'your lovers' — shifting from the act of lusting to the persons lusted after. Spanish 'se apasiono' ('she became passionately attached') captures the verb's consuming intensity.

1. and lusted (7×) To lust after, have inordinate desire or passion for — the verbal sense in the Qal perfect and imperfect. All seven occurrences cluster in Ezekiel 23, the extended allegory of Oholah (Samaria) and Oholibah (Jerusalem) as women who 'lusted after' Assyrian and Babylonian warriors (23:5, 7, 9, 12, 16, 20). The construction takes the preposition al ('upon, after'), marking the object of desire. Spanish 'se apasiono/y se apasiono' and French 'se precipiter' capture the headlong, consuming quality of this lust. The word is deliberately vulgar in context, serving Ezekiel's rhetorical strategy of shock. DESIRE AND COVETING

en: [and-she-lusted], and-she-lusted, she-lusted | es: Y-se-apasionó, se-apasionó, y-se-apasionó | fr: et-se-précipiter, se-précipiter | de: [ותעגב], [ותעגבה], [עגבה] Ezek 23:5; Ezek 23:7; Ezek 23:9; Ezek 23:12; Ezek 23:16

2. lovers (1×) Lovers, paramours — the participle used as a substantive noun in Jer 4:30, where the prophet addresses personified Jerusalem: 'your lovers despise you; they seek your life.' Here the word shifts from the verbal act to the persons themselves. Spanish 'los amantes' ('the lovers') confirms the nominal reading. This participial use provides the semantic bridge from the verb's action to its agents — those who lust become the lustful ones, the paramours. LOVE (ABSTRACT NOUN)

en: lovers | es: los-amantes | fr: [עגבים] | de: [עגבים] Jer 4:30

עֲגָבִים H5690 N-cp (2×)

sensuous love, lustful words or desires (plural intensive)

This plural noun conveys sensuous or lustful love—desire with overtones of impropriety or insincerity. The sole clear occurrence is Ezekiel 33:32, where God tells Ezekiel, 'You are to them like a love song,' meaning the people enjoy his words aesthetically but don't obey them. The intensive plural suggests passionate but shallow affection. Some manuscripts include another occurrence in verse 31, though this is textually disputed. The word captures the danger of religious entertainment replacing genuine devotion.

(2×) Sensuous or lustful love, used metaphorically in Ezekiel 33:32 to describe Israel's superficial attraction to prophetic words without commitment to obey. The 'love song' comparison suggests aesthetic pleasure divorced from moral response. The plural form intensifies the sense of passionate but ultimately empty affection. Spanish 'amores' and 'lisonjas' (flatteries) capture the insincere dimension. LOVE (ABSTRACT NOUN)

en: lustful-words | es: amores,, lisonjas | fr: amour | de: [עגבים] Ezek 33:31; Ezek 33:32

עֶגְבָּה H5691 N-csc / 3ms (1×)

lustfulness, inordinate desire

A feminine noun denoting lustful craving or inordinate passion, used in Ezekiel's allegory of Jerusalem's adultery. The prophet describes personified Jerusalem as exceeding even her 'sister' Samaria in her lustfulness and harlotry. The word is parallel to 'fornications,' emphasizing the intensity and perversity of Judah's idolatry portrayed as sexual unfaithfulness.

(1×) The lustful passion of personified Jerusalem in Ezekiel 23:11, where the prophet accuses Judah of surpassing Samaria in spiritual adultery. 'She became more corrupt than her sister in her lust and in her harlotries'—the Hebrew term emphasizes intense, degrading craving. The parallel with 'harlotries' reinforces the image of covenant unfaithfulness as compulsive sexual betrayal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: her-lust | es: pasión-de-ella | fr: désir | de: [עגבתה] Ezek 23:11

עֻגָה H5692 N-fs (7×)

Cake, bread-cake; a round flat bread baked on coals or hot stones, used in everyday and ritual meals.

A feminine noun denoting a round, flat cake or bread-disc, typically baked directly on hot stones or coals. It appears in memorable narratives of provision and hospitality: Abraham's urgency in preparing 'ugot from fine flour for his angelic visitors (Gen 18:6), the unleavened cakes baked in haste at the Exodus (Exod 12:39), the manna ground and made into cakes (Num 11:8), and Elijah's miraculous coal-baked cake in the wilderness (1 Kgs 19:6). Hosea 7:8 uses it as a vivid metaphor: Ephraim is 'a cake not turned' – burnt on one side, raw on the other.

cake, bread-cake (flat baked item) (7×) A round, flat bread-cake baked on hot stones or coals, made from various grains and used in both ordinary hospitality and sacred contexts. In Gen 18:6 Abraham instructs Sarah to make 'ugot from fine flour (solet) for the three visitors – the Spanish 'torta' and French 'cake' both convey its flat, round shape. Exod 12:39 describes the unleavened 'ugot baked from the dough carried out of Egypt. Num 11:8 records the Israelites grinding manna and making it into cakes. In 1 Kgs 17:13 the widow of Zarephath makes a small cake for Elijah, and 1 Kgs 19:6 describes the angel's provision of a 'cake of hot stones' (ugat retsaphim). Hosea 7:8 memorably compares Ephraim to 'a cake not turned' – half-baked and therefore ruined. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-cake-of, cake, cake-of | es: Y-torta-de, torta, torta-de | fr: cake, cake-de, cakes | de: Kuchen, [עֻגֹת], [עֻגָה] Gen 18:6; Exod 12:39; Num 11:8; 1Kgs 17:13; 1Kgs 19:6

עָגוּר H5693 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)
crane or swallow (bird, exact species uncertain)
This noun denotes a bird, likely a crane or swallow, though the exact species is debated. Isaiah 38:14 uses it alongside 'swallow' to describe Hezekiah's groaning in illness ('like a swallow or crane'), while Jeremiah 8:7 lists it among migratory birds that 'know their appointed times'—a rebuke to Israel who don't know God's ordinances. The bird's mournful cry or seasonal instinct provides prophetic imagery. Textual and etymological uncertainties persist, but the bird clearly represents either lamentation or natural obedience.

(2×) A bird species, traditionally identified as crane or swallow. Isaiah 38:14 focuses on its cry (expressing pain); Jeremiah 8:7 emphasizes its migratory instinct (knowing divine timing). Cross-linguistic glosses settle on 'crane' or 'swallow,' though Hebrew etymology is uncertain. The bird serves as metaphor for human suffering and obedience to natural law. LIVING CREATURES en: and-the-crane, or-a-crane | es: grulla, y-grulla | fr: [וְעָגוֹר], [עָגוֹר] | de: [וְעָגוֹר], [עָגוֹר] Isa 38:14; Jer 8:7

עָגִיל H5694 Conj-w / N-mp (2×)
ring, earring, hoop (ornament worn on ear or body)
This noun refers to a ring or hoop, typically an earring worn as adornment. Numbers 31:50 lists it among gold jewelry offered as tribute, alongside bracelets and chains. Ezekiel 16:12 describes God adorning personified Jerusalem with 'earrings on your ears' plus a nose ring, symbolizing covenant love and royal beautification. The word emphasizes personal ornamentation and wealth, often with covenantal or religious significance when jewelry is dedicated to God or received as divine gift.

(2×) A ring or hoop, specifically earrings in both occurrences. Numbers 31:50 includes them in spoils of war dedicated to YHWH; Ezekiel 16:12 uses them metaphorically for God's covenant adornment of Israel. Spanish 'pendiente' and cross-linguistic 'earring' confirm the ornamental function, with religious and symbolic dimensions in covenant contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-earrings, earring | es: pendiente, y-pendientes | fr: earring, et-gâteau | de: [וְעָגִילִים], earring Num 31:50; Ezek 16:12

עֵגֶל H5695 N-mp (35×)
calf, young bull — a young bovine, literal or as a molten idol (the golden calf) Egel denotes a young bull, appearing 35 times across both pastoral and polemical contexts. Its most notorious uses center on the golden-calf episodes: Aaron's molten calf at Sinai (Exod 32:4-35) and Jeroboam's twin calves at Bethel and Dan (1 Kgs 12:28-32), which became bywords for idolatry. Hosea wields the image with particular scorn — 'your calf, O Samaria' (Hos 8:5-6) and 'they kiss calves!' (Hos 13:2). In non-polemical settings the word describes stall-fed calves for sacrifice or feasting (1 Sam 28:24; Mal 4:2) and appears in Isaiah's messianic peaceable-kingdom vision alongside the lion (Isa 11:6). Cognates across the Semitic family — Aramaic igla, Arabic ijl — confirm the straightforward zoological meaning.

calf, young bull (35×) A young bovine animal, used literally of a calf raised for food or sacrifice (1 Sam 28:24; Mal 4:2) and figuratively as a molten idol. The golden calf at Sinai (Exod 32:4-24) and Jeroboam's calves at Bethel and Dan (1 Kgs 12:28) dominate polemical usage. Hosea's 'your calf, O Samaria' (8:5) and Isaiah's peaceable kingdom (11:6) extend the image. CALF YOUNG BULL
en: a-calf, calf, calves-of | es: becerro, becerro-de, becerros-de | fr: [עֵגֶל], calves-de, le-veau | de: Kalb, [הָעֵגֶל], [כְּעֵגְלֵי] Exod 32:4; Exod 32:8; Exod 32:19; Exod 32:20; Exod 32:24

עָגֹל H5696 Adj-ms (6×)
Round, circular; describing the shape of objects in Solomon's temple, including the molten sea, throne, and basin frames.
The adjective עָגֹל (agol) means 'round' or 'circular,' appearing exclusively in descriptions of Solomon's temple furnishings and throne (1 Kgs 7:23-35; 10:19; 2 Chr 4:2). It describes the great molten sea as 'round all around' (עָגֹל סָבִיב), the basin stands with their round openings (contrasted with מְרֻבָּעוֹת, 'square'), and the rounded back of the royal throne. The term's six occurrences all cluster in a single architectural-descriptive context, and multilingual glosses — Spanish 'redondo/a,' English 'round,' French 'autour' — uniformly confirm a single geometric meaning.

(6×) Round or circular in shape, used as a physical descriptor of manufactured objects. All six occurrences appear in the temple and palace descriptions of 1 Kings 7-10 and 2 Chronicles 4. The molten sea is described as 'round all around' (עָגֹל סָבִיב, 1 Kgs 7:23 = 2 Chr 4:2), the basin frames have round openings contrasted explicitly with square ones (1 Kgs 7:31, 35), and the king's throne has a rounded top (1 Kgs 10:19). Spanish 'redondo/redonda' and English 'round' confirm the straightforward geometric sense across all attestations. WIDE BROAD SPACIOUS en: round | es: redonda, redondo, redondos | fr: [עָגוֹל], autour | de: [עָגוֹל], round 1Kgs 7:23; 1Kgs 7:31; 1Kgs 7:35; 1Kgs 10:19

עֶגְלָה H5697a Prep-b / N-fsc / 1cs (12×)
Heifer — a young cow used in sacrifice, covenant ceremony, and as a prophetic metaphor for nations
The noun עֶגְלָה (eglah) designates a young female cow, a heifer, in ritual, legal, and metaphorical contexts. Abraham's covenant ceremony requires a three-year-old heifer (Gen 15:9). Deuteronomy 21:3-6 prescribes breaking a heifer's neck to expiate unsolved murder. Samson accuses the Philistines of 'plowing with my heifer' to discover his riddle (Judg 14:18). The prophets use the heifer as a national metaphor: Jeremiah compares Egypt to 'a beautiful heifer' stung by a gadfly (Jer 46:20) and Babylon to a threshing heifer (Jer 50:11). Hosea portrays Ephraim as a trained heifer yoked for harder labor (Hos 10:11). Spanish 'becerra' and French 'genisse' specify the young female bovine.

heifer, young cow (12×) A young female cow used in sacrifice, law, and figurative speech. In ritual: Abraham's covenant sacrifice (Gen 15:9). In law: neck broken to expiate unsolved murder (Deut 21:3-6). In metaphor: Samson's 'my heifer' for his wife (Judg 14:18), Egypt as a beautiful heifer (Jer 46:20), and Ephraim as a trained heifer yoked for harder labor (Hos 10:11). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-heifer, for-the-calves-of, heifer | es: becerra-de, como-novilla, con-mi-novilla | fr: [כְּעֶגְלָה], [עֶגְלָה], [עֶגְלַת] | de: [כְּעֶגְלָה], [לְעֶגְלוֹת], [עֶגְלָה] Gen 15:9; Deut 21:3; Deut 21:4; Deut 21:6

עֶגְלַת H5697b N-proper-fs (2×)
Eglath (place name); location in Moab, possibly 'third Eglath' or 'three-year-old heifer'

This place name appears in prophetic oracles against Moab, with the enigmatic phrase 'Eglath Shelishiyah' (literally 'third Eglath' or possibly 'Eglath of the three-year-old heifer'). Isaiah 15:5 and Jeremiah 48:34 locate it near Zoar on Moab's southern border. The exact meaning and location are disputed—it may be a place name modified by 'third' or an image of a heifer. The Septuagint translates as 'three-year-old heifer,' suggesting the phrase may be metaphorical rather than purely geographical.

(2×) A place name in Moab, appearing in the phrase 'Eglath Shelishiyah' (Isaiah 15:5; Jeremiah 48:34). The second element means 'third' or 'three-year-old,' leading to interpretations as either 'third Eglath' (implying multiple towns of that name) or 'heifer of three years' (metaphor). Located near Zoar, it marks Moab's southern territory in judgment oracles. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: heifer-of | es: novilla-de | fr: [עגלת] | de: [עגלת] Isa 15:5; Jer 48:34

עֶגְלָה H5698 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (2×)

Eglah (personal name); wife of David, mother of Ithream

This personal name means 'heifer' and identifies one of David's wives during his reign in Hebron. Both occurrences—2 Samuel 3:5 and 1 Chronicles 3:3—list her as the mother of Ithream, David's sixth son. The name Eglah joins other pastoral names like Leah ('cow') and Rachel ('ewe'), reflecting ancient naming conventions that drew from animal imagery. She appears last in the list of Hebron wives, suggesting she may have been David's final wife before moving the capital to Jerusalem.

(2×) A proper name for one of David's wives, mother of Ithream. The name means 'heifer,' fitting the pattern of pastoral names among biblical women (Leah, Rachel). Both references appear in parallel genealogical lists of David's sons born in Hebron. The name is consistently preserved across versions, with minor transliteration variants. PERSONAL NAMES

en: to-Eglah | es: de-Egla, para-Eglah | fr: [לעגלה], à-Eglah | de: [לעגלה], zu-Eglah 2Sam 3:5; 1Chr 3:3

עֶגְלָה H5699 N-fs (25×)

A cart or wagon — a wheeled vehicle for transporting goods, people, or offerings; also the threshing cart rolled over grain.

Derived from the root idea of rolling (related to the round wheel), this noun denotes a wheeled cart drawn by oxen. It appears prominently in the Joseph narrative, where Pharaoh sends 'agalot' to carry Jacob's family to Egypt (Gen 45:19-27), and in the ark narrative, where a new cart transports the ark of God (1 Sam 6:7-14; 2 Sam 6:3). Spanish 'carreta/carretas' and German 'Wagen/Karren' consistently render the vehicle sense. In Isaiah 28:27-28 the same word appears in an agricultural setting, where the threshing cart is rolled over cumin and grain — a specialized but natural extension of the basic 'wheeled vehicle' meaning.

1. cart or wagon (23×) A cart or wagon — a wheeled vehicle drawn by animals for transporting persons, goods, or sacred objects. Central in the Joseph cycle (Gen 45:19, 21, 27; 46:5) where Pharaoh provides carts for the migration to Egypt, and in the ark narratives (1 Sam 6:7-14; 2 Sam 6:3; 1 Chr 13:7). Numbers 7:3-8 describes covered wagons ('agalot tsav') donated for Tabernacle transport. Spanish 'carreta/carretas,' French 'chariot,' and German 'Wagen' all confirm the standard vehicle sense. Amos 2:13 uses it in a simile of crushing weight. CHARIOTS AND WAGONS

en: cart, carts, carts-of | es: a-la-carreta, carreta, carretas | fr: [בעגלה], [עגלה], cart | de: Karren, Wagen, [בעגלה] Gen 45:19; Gen 45:21; Gen 45:27; Gen 46:5; Num 7:3

2. threshing cart wheel (2×) A threshing cart or its wheel, used as an agricultural implement for separating grain. At Isaiah 28:27-28 the prophet distinguishes proper threshing technique: cumin is not threshed with a cart wheel, and the cart is not endlessly rolled over bread grain. Spanish uses 'carreta/su carreta' here, and French leaves the Hebrew transliterated, but the context clearly specifies the cart's function as a threshing tool rather than a transport vehicle. This is a natural specialization of the rolling-vehicle concept applied to the threshing floor. CHARIOTS AND WAGONS

en: the-wheel, wheel | es: carreta, su-carreta | fr: [עגלה], [עגלתן] | de: [עגלה], [עגלתן] Isa 28:27; Isa 28:28

עֶגְלוֹן H5700 N-proper-fs (13×)

Eglon; a Canaanite city in Judah's Shephelah and also the name of a king of Moab.

The name Eglon (possibly from egel, 'calf,' hence 'calf-like' or 'place of calves') refers to two distinct biblical figures: a Canaanite city in the lowland region of Judah conquered during Joshua's southern campaign (Josh 10:3–37; 12:12; 15:39), and the obese king of Moab who oppressed Israel for eighteen years before being assassinated by the left-handed judge Ehud (Judg 3:12–17). Multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration across all languages — Spanish 'Eglón,' French 'Églon,' German 'Eglon' — confirming its status as a recognized proper noun.

Eglon (proper noun) (13×) A proper noun with two referents: (a) A Canaanite royal city in the Shephelah (lowlands) of Judah, whose king Debir joined the five-king coalition against Gibeon (Josh 10:3, 5). Joshua captured and destroyed Eglon during his southern campaign (Josh 10:34–37), and it appears in the allotment list for Judah (Josh 15:39). (b) A king of Moab who subjugated Israel for eighteen years until Ehud's dramatic assassination (Judg 3:12–17). Translations uniformly transliterate the name across all languages. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Eglon, and-Eglon, from-Eglon | es: Eglón, a-Eglón, de-Eglón | fr: de-Églon, et-Églon, Églon | de: Eglon, und-Eglon, von-Eglon Josh 10:3; Josh 10:5; Josh 10:23; Josh 10:34; Josh 10:36

עָגַם H5701 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (1×)

be grieved, feel anguish (for another)

A verb expressing deep grief or anguish for another's suffering, appearing in Job's self-defense. Job asks rhetorically, 'Did I not weep for the one whose day was hard? Was not my soul grieved for the poor?' The word conveys sympathetic suffering, the inner anguish one feels witnessing another's misery. Cognates in Aramaic and possibly Akkadian carry similar emotional intensity.

(1×) Job's grief for the suffering poor in Job 30:25, where he protests his innocence by recalling his compassion. 'Did I not weep for the one in trouble? Was not my soul grieved for the needy?'—the verb emphasizes inner anguish, not mere pity but soul-level suffering with those in distress. The parallel with 'weep' shows this is more than intellectual sympathy; it is emotional participation in another's pain. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: grieved | es: se-entristeció | fr: עגמה | de: [עגמה] Job 30:25

עָגַן H5702 V-Nifal-Imperf-2fp (1×)

shut oneself off (from marriage), remain unmarried

A Niphal verb meaning to shut or confine oneself, used in Ruth for voluntary abstention from marriage. Naomi asks her daughters-in-law whether they would 'shut themselves off from belonging to a man' while waiting for her infant sons to grow up. The image is of self-imposed isolation or confinement, withdrawing from normal life. Later rabbinic Hebrew uses related forms for refraining from marriage.

(1×) The self-imposed seclusion from marriage in Ruth 1:13, where Naomi rhetorically asks whether Ruth and Orpah would 'shut yourselves off so as not to belong to a man.' The verb pictures voluntary confinement or withdrawal—restraining oneself from marriage while waiting indefinitely. The context shows the absurdity of Naomi's situation: even if she bore sons tonight, would these young women seclude themselves until the boys matured? ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: would-you-be-shut-up | es: se-encerrarían | fr: serait-tu-être-shut-en-haut | de: [תעגנה] Ruth 1:13

עַד H5703 Prep (51×)

Perpetuity, forever; as noun: everlasting duration (past or future); as preposition: unto, until, as far as.

The Hebrew word 'ad conveys the idea of time stretching forward without limit — or, more rarely, reaching back into the immemorial past. Its most familiar use is in the great doxological formula le'olam wa'ed ('forever and ever'), where it intensifies 'olam to evoke unending duration, as in Exodus 15:18's declaration that 'the LORD shall reign forever and ever.' Yet the word's prepositional backbone — 'unto, as far as' — never fully disappears, lending even its most exalted uses a sense of time pressing forward toward a goal. In the messianic title 'avi-'ad ('Father of Eternity,' Isa 9:5), it reaches its theological summit, naming the coming King as sovereign over endless time itself. The multilingual evidence is telling: Spanish para siempre, French à jamais, and German ewiglich all converge on the future-perpetuity sense, while German bis and French jusqu'à preserve the prepositional 'until' that lies at the word's etymological root.

1. perpetuity, forever (future) (40×) Future-directed perpetuity: 'forever, evermore,' the dominant sense at 40 occurrences. Found overwhelmingly in the liturgical formula le'olam wa'ed (Exod 15:18; Ps 9:5; 1 Chr 28:9) and in prophetic promises of enduring kingship and righteousness (Ps 21:7; Prov 12:19; 29:14). The multilingual convergence is strong — Spanish para siempre, French pour toujours, German ewiglich, and Korean 영원히 all select dedicated 'forever' vocabulary rather than mere 'continuation' words, confirming this as a lexicalized temporal-infinity sense distinct from the prepositional root. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: forever | es: para-siempre | fr: [לְעַד], jusqu'à, pour-jusqu'à | de: [לְעַד], ewiglich, zu-bis Exod 15:18; 1Chr 28:9; Job 19:24; Ps 9:5; Ps 9:18

2. unto, until, as far as (7×) Prepositional endpoint: 'unto, until, as far as, up to' — 7 occurrences where 'ad functions spatially or temporally to mark a limit or terminus. In Num 24:20 Amalek's end is 'unto destruction'; in 2 Sam 3:28 David declares his innocence 'forever' but the Hebrew construction functions as a boundary marker. French jusqu'à and German bis both preserve this directional-limit semantics. The sense is the etymological core from which the perpetuity meaning develops by extension of the endpoint to infinity. UNTIL (TEMPORAL LIMIT)

en: for, to, until | es: hasta, para-, para-siempre | fr: à, à-jamais | de: bis, für, zu Num 24:20; Num 24:24; 2Sam 3:28; Ps 83:17; Ps 92:7

3. antiquity, remote past (2×) Remote past, antiquity: 'of old, from ages past' — only 2 occurrences, but lexicographically important. In Job 20:4 Zophar asks 'since man was placed on earth' (minni 'ad, 'from of old'), and Hab 3:6's harere 'ad describes 'ancient mountains' that have stood since primordial time. The same word that typically points forward here gazes backward. Spanish la eternidad and German bis attempt to capture this, though less precisely than the English 'antiquity.' BDB rightly parallels this with 'olam in its backward-looking sense. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: antiquity, eternity | es: la-eternidad, siempre, | fr: jusqu'à, עַד | de: bis Job 20:4; Hab 3:6

4. Eternity (in divine title) (1×) Eternity in a divine title: the nomen rectum in the messianic compound 'avi-'ad, 'Father of Eternity' (Isa 9:5 [Eng. 9:6]). Here 'ad is neither past nor future but absolute, naming boundless temporal sovereignty as an attribute of the coming ruler. Spanish Avi-Ad transliterates rather than translates, while French éternité and German Ewigkeit both reach for their strongest 'eternity' vocabulary. A single occurrence, but theologically monumental — the word transcends its temporal axis to become a royal attribute. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: Father-of-Eternity | es: Avi-Ad | fr: éternité | de: [אֲבִיעַד] Isa 9:6

5. eternity (abstract concept) (1×) Abstract eternity as a divine attribute: in Isa 57:15 God is described as shoken 'ad, 'inhabiting eternity,' where 'ad denotes unbounded time as the very dwelling-place of God. Unlike the doxological 'forever' of sense 1, this is not about duration but about God's mode of existence — eternity as a realm. Spanish la eternidad and German bis attempt to render this, but the theological weight presses beyond temporal vocabulary into ontology. The only occurrence of this particular construal, marking the outer edge of the word's semantic range. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: eternity | es: la-eternidad | fr: jusqu'à | de: bis Isa 57:15

עַד H5704 Conj-w / Prep / 2ms (1263×)

Until, as far as, unto, while, even; a preposition and conjunction of extent marking spatial, temporal, and scalar limits.

The Hebrew particle ad (עַד) draws a line — in space, in time, or in degree — and says 'this far.' It marks the endpoint of a journey ('as far as Haran'), the limit of a duration ('until morning'), or the extreme of a scale ('even to the sole of the foot'). In its poetic variant adei (עָדֵי), it reaches for eternity in the phrase adei-ad, 'forevermore.' The rhetorical question ad-matay or ad-anah — 'how long?' — rings through the Psalms as the cry of the afflicted. Spanish 'hasta' and French 'jusqu'a' consistently capture the 'up to' directionality, while German 'bis' mirrors the boundary-marking function precisely.

1. until, unto, as far as (1238×) The core prepositional sense of spatial or temporal extent: 'until, unto, as far as, up to.' This overwhelmingly dominant usage (1,238 occurrences) marks boundaries in both dimensions — 'until you return to the ground' (Gen 3:19), 'from man to beast' (Gen 6:7), 'as far as Sidon' (Gen 10:19). With conjunctive waw and pronominal suffixes it yields 'and-until,' 'unto-him,' etc. The cross-linguistic signatures are tightly consistent: Spanish 'hasta,' French 'jusqu'a,' German 'bis' — all boundary-marking prepositions. The spatial and temporal uses are syntactically identical, distinguished only by context. UNTIL (TEMPORAL LIMIT)

en: to, to-, until | es: hasta, hasta- | fr: envers, envers-, jusqu'à | de: bis, bis-, noch- Gen 3:19; Gen 6:7; Gen 7:23; Gen 8:7; Gen 10:19

2. how long, until when (17×) The interrogative-lament construction ad-matay (עַד־מָתַי) and ad-anah (עַד־אָנָה): 'how long? until when?' — a rhetorical formula expressing impatience, protest, or anguished appeal. Concentrated in the Psalms (4:2, 6:3, 13:1–2) and prophetic literature, this is the cry of the suffering righteous before God. The fourfold 'how long?' of Psalm 13:1–2 is among Scripture's most intense laments. Spanish 'Hasta' and French 'jusqu'a' maintain the 'until' base while the interrogative context transforms it. The 17 occurrences carry disproportionate theological and emotional weight. UNTIL (TEMPORAL LIMIT)

en: forever-, how-, to-me | es: Hasta, Hasta-, a-mí | fr: jusqu'à, à-moi | de: bis, bis-, zu-mich Num 23:18; Ps 4:2; Ps 6:3; Ps 13:1

3. while, during (5×) The conjunctive-temporal sense: 'while, during, as long as,' indicating simultaneous duration rather than an endpoint. Ehud escaped 'while' the servants delayed (Judg 3:26), the priest inquired 'while' the noise grew (1 Sam 14:19), and Job receives news 'while' the previous messenger still speaks (Job 1:18). French renders 'pendant-que' and German 'waehrend,' both clearly durational rather than limitative. Only 5 occurrences, but the shift from boundary-marking to duration-marking is a genuine semantic distinction. UNTIL (TEMPORAL LIMIT)

en: while, while- | es: Mientras, hasta, mientras | fr: jusqu'à, pendant-que, pendant-que- | de: bis, waehrend, waehrend- Judg 3:26; 1Sam 14:19; 2Kgs 9:22; Job 1:18; Ps 39:1

4. perpetuity, ever (2×) The substantival sense of 'perpetuity, eternity,' where ad functions as a noun rather than a preposition. Found in the poetic phrases la-ad (לָעַד, 'forever') and the intensified adei-ad (עָדֵי־עַד, 'forevermore,' lit. 'perpetuity of perpetuity'). Psalm 92:7 declares the wicked flourish 'to be destroyed forever (adei-ad),' and Psalm 83:17 calls for shame 'forever (la-ad).' Spanish 'siempre' ('always/forever') and German 'bis' attempt to capture the eternal dimension. This rare nominal use (2 occurrences in the corpus) connects to the broader Semitic root sense of 'passing on' into endless duration. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: ever | es: siempre | fr: jusqu'à | de: bis Ps 83:17; Ps 92:7

5. even, as much as (1×) The emphatic-scalar adverb: 'even, as much as,' intensifying a statement to include an extreme or unexpected element. In Deuteronomy 2:5 God warns Israel regarding Esau's territory: 'I will not give you of their land, not even (ad) the treading of the sole of a foot.' The scalar force pushes 'until' into 'even as much as,' indicating the absolute minimum that is still denied. French 'même' and German 'sogar' both render the emphatic particle, while Spanish 'ni' ('not even') captures the negative-scalar nuance. Only 1 clear occurrence, but it demonstrates the full elasticity of this boundary-marking particle. UNTIL (TEMPORAL LIMIT)

en: even | es: ni | fr: même | de: sogar Deut 2:5

עַד H5705 Conj-w / Prep (35×)

until, up to — Aramaic preposition and conjunction marking temporal, spatial, or quantitative limit

This Aramaic preposition, cognate with Biblical Hebrew ad, appears 35 times exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra, serving as the standard marker for temporal and spatial endpoints. It governs durations ('for thirty days,' Dan 6:8), deadlines ('until the Ancient of Days came,' Dan 7:22), quantitative limits ('up to a hundred talents,' Ezra 7:22), and spatial extent ('up to here,' Dan 7:28). The compound conjunction ad di ('until that') introduces temporal clauses throughout Daniel's visions. Every target language renders it with a single limit-particle: Spanish 'hasta,' French 'jusqu'a,' German 'bis' — confirming a unified prepositional function with no semantic splits.

until, up to (temporal/spatial limit) (35×) An Aramaic preposition marking a boundary in time, space, or quantity, equivalent to Hebrew ad. Temporal use dominates: 'until the time of the end' (Dan 7:26), 'until now' (Ezra 5:16). Also marks amount ('up to a hundred talents,' Ezra 7:22) and space ('up to here,' Dan 7:28). The conjunction ad di introduces temporal subordinate clauses (Dan 2:34; 4:30). UNTIL (TEMPORAL LIMIT)
en: for-, on, to- | es: cuando, hasta, hasta- | fr: jusqu'à | de: bis Ezra 4:21; Ezra 4:24; Ezra 5:5; Ezra 5:16; Ezra 6:15

עַד H5706 N-ms (3×)

Booty, prey, spoil; that upon which one advances or falls in conquest

This noun denotes the spoils of war or hunting, the prize seized in conquest. Jacob's blessing of Benjamin in Genesis 49:27 pictures him as a ravenous wolf devouring prey, a prophecy of the tribe's fierce reputation. Isaiah 33:23 speaks of 'prey of great spoil,' an abundant haul of plunder. The root suggests the idea of advancing upon or falling upon something to seize it. Zephaniah 3:8 uses it in a divine oracle where God describes His own 'rising up to the prey'—a startling reversal where Yahweh Himself becomes the predator against the nations.

(3×) The three occurrences show semantic range from literal hunting prey (Benjamin as wolf) to military spoil (Isaiah) to theological metaphor (Yahweh's judgment). Interestingly, some translations render Isaiah 9:5 as 'everlasting father' rather than 'father of booty,' showing textual complexity. The multilingual evidence reveals confusion: some versions treat it as temporal ('jusqu'à,' 'until'), suggesting this entry has been conflated with a different homograph meaning 'witness' or 'duration.' The Genesis and Zephaniah contexts clearly support the 'prey' sense. UNTIL (TEMPORAL LIMIT)
en: as-a-witness, plunder, prey | es: botín-de, como-testigo, presa | fr: jusqu'à, pour-jusqu'à, proie | de: Beute, bis, zu-bis Gen 49:27; Isa 33:23; Zeph 3:8

עֵד H5707 Art / N-mp (70×)

Witness: a person who testifies in legal, covenantal, or divine settings; also evidence or attestation (a thing serving as testimony).

The Hebrew noun ed ('witness') spans both persons and things that testify. In its primary sense, it names the human being who sees, knows, and can give account — the legal witness required 'two or three' for capital verdicts (Deut 17:6; 19:15), the covenantal witness who seals agreements (Gen 31:48, 50), and even God himself as witness in the heavens (Job 16:19). Spanish testigo, French temoin, and German Zeuge all hold this personal-testimony sense firmly. But ed also extends to inanimate attestation: a heap of stones 'is a witness' between Jacob and Laban (Gen 31:44, 52), a torn animal carcass serves 'as evidence' in a dispute over borrowed livestock (Exod 22:13), and the song of Moses is written down 'as a witness' against future apostasy (Deut 31:19, 21). The multilingual evidence confirms this split: when ed refers to evidentiary function, Spanish shifts to para-testimonio and German to fuer Zeuge.

1. witness (person who testifies) (59×) A witness as a person — someone who has seen or knows something and can testify to it, whether in a legal proceeding, a covenant ceremony, or a divine tribunal. This dominant sense (59 occurrences) covers the ninth commandment's 'false witness' (Exod 20:16), the requirement of multiple witnesses for conviction (Num 35:30; Deut 17:6), Laban declaring God as witness to the Mizpah covenant (Gen 31:48, 50), God as Job's witness in heaven (Job 16:19), and prophetic appeals where Israel is called as YHWH's witnesses (Isa 43:10, 12). Spanish testigo, French temoin, and German Zeuge all preserve the personal dimension, with Korean 증인 and Arabic شاهد confirming the cross-linguistic stability of the person-who-testifies concept. WITNESSES AND TESTIMONY
en: a-witness, a-witness-of, is-a-witness | es: Testigo, es-el-testigo, testigo | fr: le-témoin, témoin, un-témoin | de: Zeuge, bis, der-Zeuge Gen 31:48; Gen 31:50; Exod 20:16; Exod 23:1; Lev 5:1

2. witness (evidence or attestation) (11×) Witness as evidence or attestation — an object, monument, song, or document that serves the evidentiary function of testifying, often in prepositional phrases meaning 'as a witness' or 'for a witness.' With 11 occurrences, this sense appears when Jacob and Laban erect a stone heap 'as a witness' between them (Gen 31:44, 52), when the torn carcass of a borrowed animal serves as proof of innocence (Exod 22:13), when the Song of Moses is written 'as a witness' that will testify against Israel when they turn away (Deut 31:19, 21, 26), and when the altar east of the Jordan stands 'as a witness' that the Transjordan tribes worship the same God (Josh 22:27-28, 34). Spanish para-testimonio and German fuer-Zeuge shift toward abstract testimony vocabulary, marking the transition from a person to an evidentiary function. WITNESSES AND TESTIMONY
en: and-for-witness, as-witness, for-a-witness | es: Testigo, para-testigo, para-testimonio | fr: comme-témoin, et-à-jusqu'à, pour-jusqu'à | de: Zeuge-ist, fuer-Zeuge, und-zu-bis Gen 31:44; Gen 31:52; Exod 22:13; Deut 31:19; Deut 31:21

עֵדָה H5708 N-mp (1×)

menstruation, menstrual period (metaphorical)

A plural noun denoting menstruation or the menstrual period, used metaphorically in Isaiah for ritual impurity. The prophet compares Israel's best deeds to 'a garment of menstruation'—stained, unclean, utterly defiled. The image is deliberately repulsive, emphasizing that even the nation's righteousness is contaminated by sin. The word evokes the ceremonial uncleanness associated with menstrual flow in Levitical law.

(1×) The menstrual stain metaphor in Isaiah 64:6, where the prophet confesses, 'All our righteous deeds are like a garment of menstruation.' The image shocks: what Israel considers good works are, before God's holiness, as unclean as a cloth stained with menstrual blood. The plural form may intensify the sense of defilement. The parallel with 'we all are unclean' shows this is about pervasive ritual and moral pollution. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8231 WITH 3 SENSES
en: menstruation | es: inmundicia | fr: [עדים] | de: [עדים] Isa 64:6

עֲדָא H5709 V-Hifil-Perf-3mp (9×)

To pass away or cease (Qal); to remove or depose (Haphel) – Aramaic verb used in Daniel

An Aramaic verb appearing exclusively in Daniel, covering both intransitive 'passing away' and causative 'taking away.' In its Qal (Pe'al) forms, it describes things that cease to exist or continue: the fire 'passed over' the three men without harm (Dan 3:27), Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom 'passed away' (Dan 4:31), and Daniel's dominion 'shall not pass away' (Dan 7:14). The Haphel causative is reserved for God's sovereign removal of power – He 'removes kings' (Dan 2:21) and 'they took away' Belshazzar's honor (Dan 5:20). Spanish 'quita/quitaron' (takes away, they removed) and Hindi

'hatata hai' (removes) both spotlight the decisive, irreversible quality of divine deposition.

1. pass away (Qal intransitive) (5×) Intransitive Qal (Pe'al) forms meaning 'to pass on, pass away, or cease,' used of fire passing harmlessly over bodies (Dan 3:27), a kingdom departing from a ruler (Dan 4:31), laws that cannot be revoked (Dan 6:8, 12), and dominion that will never pass away (Dan 7:14). Spanish 'pasó/pasará' and Hindi 'hategi' underscore the sense of cessation or irreversible transition. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: has-passed, passed, passes-away | es: ha-pasado, pasará, pasó | fr: elle-a-convoqué, passer | de: vergehen Dan 3:27; Dan 4:31; Dan 6:8; Dan 6:12; Dan 7:14

2. take away, remove (Hifil causative) (4×) Causative Haphel forms meaning 'to take away, remove, or depose,' with God as the ultimate agent. Daniel 2:21 declares God 'removes kings'; Daniel 5:20 recounts how Belshazzar's glory 'was taken away'; and Daniel 7:12, 26 describe dominion being stripped from beastly kingdoms. Spanish 'le quitaron' (they took from him) and Arabic 'nuzica' (was removed) highlight the forceful, authoritative nature of this removal. DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: removes, their-dominion-was-taken-away, they-took | es: fue-quitado, le-quitaron, quita | fr: passer | de: vergehen Dan 2:21; Dan 5:20; Dan 7:12; Dan 7:26

עָדָה H5710a V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

to pass on, advance, remove (proceed forward or take away)

This verb means to pass by, advance, or move forward—sometimes with the sense of removing something. In Job 28:8, the proud beasts have not 'advanced upon' the hidden path to wisdom, emphasizing wisdom's inaccessibility. Proverbs 25:20 speaks of 'removing a garment' on a cold day as a metaphor for inappropriate cheerfulness to a suffering person. The verb captures forward motion or the act of taking something away, with contexts determining whether emphasis falls on progression or removal.

(2×) To pass on, advance, or remove. Job 28:8 uses it for advancing or passing over (the lion has not 'advanced upon' wisdom's path), while Proverbs 25:20 employs it for removing a garment. The semantic range spans motion forward and action of taking away. Cross-linguistic glosses show both senses: 'passed' and 'one who removes.' DEPARTING AND PASSING

en: one-who-removes, passed | es: El-que-quita, pasó | fr: parer | de: [מעדה], [עדה] Job 28:8; Prov 25:20

עָדָה H5710b V-Qal-Imp-ms (8×)

To adorn or deck oneself with ornaments and finery; used literally of women and figuratively of Israel as a bride.

A Qal verb meaning to ornament or deck oneself, typically with jewelry and fine clothing. In prophetic literature it carries powerful metaphorical force: Israel is depicted as a bride adorning herself for lovers other than God (Hos 2:13, Ezek 16:11-13, 23:40), while restoration passages envision joyful self-adornment as a sign of divine favor (Jer 31:4, Isa 61:10). Job 40:10 uses the imperative dramatically as God challenges Job to clothe himself in divine majesty. Spanish 'adornate' and English 'adorn yourself' consistently capture the reflexive sense across translations.

adorn, deck oneself (8×) To ornament or deck oneself with jewelry, finery, or decorative garments. The reflexive action of self-adornment pervades all eight occurrences, whether literal bridal preparation (Isa 61:10, where the bride decks herself with jewels) or figurative portrayals of Israel's infidelity (Hos 2:13, Ezek 23:40). In Job 40:10, God's ironic challenge to Job – 'adorn yourself with majesty and splendor' – extends the physical image into the realm of divine attributes. Spanish 'adornate' and English 'adorn yourself' consistently reflect this reflexive sense. ADORN DECORATE PREPARE

en: adorn-yourself, adorns-herself, and-I-adorned-you | es: Adórnate, Y-te-adornaste, Y-te-adorné | fr: [ואעדך], [ועדית], [ותעדי] | de: [ואעדך], [ועדית], [ותעד] Job 40:10; Isa 61:10; Jer 4:30; Jer 31:4; Ezek 16:11

עָדָה H5711 N-proper-fs (8×)

Adah, a feminine personal name meaning 'ornament' or 'morning,' borne by wives of Lamech and Esau.

A proper feminine name appearing in two distinct genealogical contexts. The first Adah is the wife of Lamech in the antediluvian line (Gen 4:19-23), mother of Jabal and Jubal. The second is one of Esau's wives, daughter of Elon the Hittite (Gen 36:2-16). The name likely derives from the root meaning 'to adorn' (cf. H5710b), though BDB also notes an Arabic cognate suggesting 'morning.' The Septuagint renders it as Adda, and all major modern translations – English, Spanish, French, German – uniformly transliterate it as Adah or Ada.

(8×) A feminine personal name borne by two women in Genesis: the wife of Lamech in the pre-flood genealogy (Gen 4:19, 20, 23) and one of Esau's Hittite wives (Gen 36:2, 4, 10, 12, 16). The name's etymology from the root 'to adorn' fits its bearer as an 'ornament,' though BDB also connects it to Arabic 'morning.' The Septuagint Adda and consistent transliteration across languages (Spanish 'Ada,' English 'Adah') confirm its stable transmission. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Adah | es: Adah, Adá | fr: Adah | de: Ada, Adas Gen 4:19; Gen 4:20; Gen 4:23; Gen 36:2; Gen 36:4

עֵדָה H5712 N-fsc / 2ms (149×)

Congregation, assembly (esp. of Israel); a company or band of people; a swarm of animals

The primary term for Israel's assembled community in the Pentateuch, edah appears 149 times with its center of gravity in Numbers, Leviticus, and Joshua. Unlike qahal, which emphasizes the act of assembling, edah denotes the community as an established body — 'the congregation of Israel' (adat yisra'el) or 'the congregation of the sons of Israel' (adat bene yisra'el) functioning almost as a constitutional term for the covenant people in their cultic and civic capacity. The word's etymology (from ya'ad, 'to appoint, designate') suggests a company assembled by appointment rather than spontaneously gathered. In the Psalms, the same word narrows to describe hostile bands — 'a company of evildoers' (Ps 22:16) or 'an assembly of the violent' (Ps 86:14). Most surprisingly, Judges 14:8 applies it to a swarm of bees in Samson's lion carcass, extending the concept of a gathered group to the animal kingdom. Arabic jama'ah and Spanish congregacion track the religious-assembly core, while Swahili kundi accommodates the broader 'group' sense.

1. congregation, assembly of Israel (142×) The formal congregation or assembly of Israel — the covenant community gathered in its cultic, legal, and national capacity — covering 142 of 149 occurrences. Nearly always in construct with 'Israel' or 'the sons of Israel' (adat yisra'el, adat bene yisra'el), functioning as a quasi-technical term in Priestly legislation for the people addressed by divine commands (Lev 4:15; 8:3-4; Num 1:2; 14:1-5; 16:2-3; 20:1-2; 27:14; Josh 9:18-21; 18:1; 22:12). The congregation murmurs against Moses (Num 14:1-2; 16:41), receives atonement as a body (Num 15:25-26), and inherits the land collectively (Josh 18:1). Spanish congregacion, French assemblee, and Korean hoejung all render this formal communal sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-congregation | es: la-congregación | fr: le-assemblée, le-congregation | de: der-Gemeinde Exod 16:22; Exod 38:25; Lev 4:15; Lev 8:3; Lev 8:4

2. company, band, group (5×) A smaller company, band, or faction of people — often with hostile or conspiratorial overtones — in 5 occurrences within poetic and wisdom literature. 'A company of evildoers has enclosed me' (Ps 22:16); 'an assembly of violent men has sought my life' (Ps 86:14); 'the company of the godless is barren' (Job 15:34). Korah's company (adat Qorach, Num 26:9; 27:3) bridges senses 1 and 2 — a faction within the larger congregation, swallowed by the earth in Numbers 16. Spanish cuadrilla ('gang, band') and German Rotte ('band, gang') shift to indicate a smaller, potentially threatening group. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-company-of, and-a-band-of, in-their-company | es: cuadrilla-de, en-su-congregación, la-congregación-de | fr: assemblée, dans-assemblée, et-assemblée | de: [עדתי], der-Gemeinde-, ein-Gemeinde- Job 16:7; Ps 22:16; Ps 86:14; Ps 106:17; Ps 106:18

3. swarm (of bees/animals) (2×) A swarm of animals, specifically bees — a transferred usage applying the concept of a gathered collective to creatures rather than people, in 2 occurrences. Judges 14:8 describes Samson finding 'a swarm (adat) of bees' in the lion's carcass, while Psalm 68:30 may refer to a 'herd of bulls' (adat abbirim). Spanish enjambre ('swarm') and German Schwarm confirm the zoological extension. The underlying semantic thread — a gathered group acting in concert — holds across human congregations and insect colonies alike. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: swarm-of, the-herd-of | es: manada-de, un-enjambre-de | fr: assemblée, swarm-de | de: Schwarm-von, der-Gemeinde- Judg 14:8; Ps 68:30

עֵדָה H5713a Conj-w / N-fs (4×)
witness, testimony; an object or agreement serving as legal evidence
This feminine noun denotes testimony or witness, specifically referring to inanimate objects that serve as evidence. Genesis 21:30 records Abraham's gift of seven ewe lambs to Abimelech "as a witness" of his well-digging rights. Genesis 31:52 establishes a heap of stones as "witness" between Jacob and Laban. Joshua 24:27 twice declares a great stone set up as "witness" to Israel's covenant with God. The E source prefers this feminine form for things, while J uses the masculine עֵד.

(4×) Denotes an object serving as testimony or legal witness. The term appears exclusively in E-source or E-influenced texts (Genesis 21:30, 31:52, Joshua 24:27 twice), referring to tangible objects —ewe lambs, stone heaps, memorial stones—that testify to agreements, covenants, or boundary claims. Multilingual glosses render as "witness/testimony/testigo/témoin/Zeuge." Some include prepositional phrases ("as a witness," "for witness"). The term is fundamentally juridical, transforming physical objects into legal evidence through declarative speech-acts establishing their testimonial role. WITNESSES AND TESTIMONY
en: and-witness, as-a-witness, for-witness | es: por-testigo, por-testimonio, y-testiga | fr: comme-un-témoin, et-témoin, pour-témoin | de: fuer-Zeuge, und-Zeugin-ist, zum-Zeugnis Gen 21:30; Gen 31:52; Josh 24:27

עֵדָה H5713b N-fpc / 2ms (22×)
testimonies, decrees – God's covenant stipulations viewed as solemn divine charges to his people
The feminine plural of edah, used exclusively for God's laws understood as his personal attestations or solemn charges to Israel. Distinguished from torah (instruction) and mishpat (ordinance), the term 'testimonies' emphasizes that God's commands are his own witness about his character and will. The word dominates Psalm 119, where the psalmist professes love for God's testimonies in nearly every stanza (119:2, 22, 24, 46, 59, 79, 95, 119, 125, 138, 146, 152, 167, 168). It also appears in Deuteronomic summaries of covenant obligation (Deut 4:45; 6:17, 20) and in the divine promise at Zion (Ps 132:12).

testimonies, decrees (of God) (22×) The plural 'testimonies' or 'decrees,' denoting God's covenant commands regarded as divine attestations binding upon Israel. Occurs overwhelmingly in Psalm 119 (16 of 22 instances) and in Deuteronomic summaries (Deut 4:45; 6:17, 20). Distinguished from other Torah-vocabulary by its emphasis on God's personal witness. Psalm 99:7 and 132:12 tie obedience to these testimonies to ongoing covenant blessing. French temoignage and German Zeugnisse preserve the witness dimension clearly. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS
en: His-testimonies, Your-testimonies, and-his-testimonies | es: Tus-testimonios, de-testimonios-de-ti, son-los-testimonios | fr: dans-témoignage, de-témoignage, et-son-témoignages | de: dein-Zeugnisse, der-testimonies, sein-Zeugnisse Deut 4:45; Deut 6:17; Deut 6:20; Ps 25:10; Ps 78:56

עִדּוֹ H5714 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (11×)
Iddo — prophet and chronicler; also several other OT figures bearing this name
The name עִדּוֹ (Iddo) belongs to several Old Testament figures, most prominently a prophet-chronicler whose writings are cited as sources for the reigns of Solomon, Rehoboam, and Abijah (2 Chr 9:29; 12:15; 13:22). This prophetic Iddo composed 'visions' (חָזוֹת) concerning Jeroboam and is called a 'seer' (חֹזֶה). The same or a related Iddo appears as the grandfather of the prophet Zechariah (Zech 1:1, 7; Ezra 5:1; 6:14). Other bearers include a district governor under Solomon (1 Kgs 4:14), a Levite descended from Gershom (1 Chr 6:21), and a priestly leader among the returning exiles (Neh 12:4, 16).

Iddo (personal name) (11×) A prophet and chronicler whose works — 'the visions of Iddo the seer' and 'the midrash of the prophet Iddo' — served as historical sources for the Chronicler's account of Solomon, Rehoboam, and Abijah (2 Chr 9:29; 12:15; 13:22). Likely the same figure as the grandfather of the prophet Zechariah (Zech 1:1, 7; Ezra 5:1; 6:14). Additional persons named Iddo include a Solomonic governor (1 Kgs 4:14), a Gershonite Levite (1 Chr 6:21), and a priestly family head in the post-exilic community (Neh 12:4, 16). Spanish 'Iddo' and English 'Iddo' preserve the Hebrew form unchanged. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Iddo, [to-Adya], and-Iddo | es: (de-Ido), Iddo, Ido | fr: Iddo, et-Iddo | de: Iddo, [(לעדוא)], [[לעדיא]] 1Kgs 4:14; 1Chr 6:21; 2Chr 12:15; 2Chr 13:22; Ezra 5:1

עֵדוּת H5715 Prep-l (59×)
Testimony or covenant document, especially the tablets of the Law and the Ark/Tabernacle housing them; in the plural, God's decrees and ordinances.
The noun עֵדוּת carries a weighty covenantal sense throughout the Old Testament. In its singular form, it most often refers to the testimony inscribed on the stone tablets – the covenant stipulations that define Israel's relationship with God – and by extension to the sacred furniture that houses them: the Ark of the Testimony (Exod 25:22) and the Tabernacle of the Testimony. In its plural form, especially prominent in Psalm 119, it broadens to encompass God's commandments, ordinances, and covenant requirements as objects of delight, study, and obedience. Spanish 'el testimonio' and German 'das Zeugnis' capture the singular well, though the plural sense often challenges translators.

1. testimony, covenant document (44×) The testimony as a singular covenantal entity: the tablets of the Law containing the Ten Words, or by metonymy the Ark and Tabernacle that house them. Across 44 occurrences, this is predominantly Priestly vocabulary. Spanish 'el testimonio,' French 'le témoignage,' and German 'das Zeugnis' render it consistently. Key constructions include 'the tablets of the testimony' (Exod 31:18; 32:15), 'the Ark of the testimony' (Exod 25:22; Num 7:89), and 'the Tabernacle of the testimony' (Num 1:50, 53), all pointing to the physical embodiment of covenant. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS
en: the-testimony | es: el-testimonio | fr: le-témoignage | de: das-Zeugnis, der-Zeugnis Exod 16:34; Exod 25:16; Exod 25:21; Exod 25:22; Exod 26:33

2. testimonies, divine decrees (15×) The plural testimonies or stipulations of God – His commandments, ordinances, and covenant requirements viewed as binding directives to be obeyed and cherished. This covers 15 occurrences, concentrated in the Psalms (especially Ps 119) and the Deuteronomistic History. French and German translations sometimes leave the Hebrew untranslated in brackets, suggesting the difficulty of finding a single equivalent. Walking in God's testimonies (1 Kgs 2:3; 2 Kgs 23:3) and delighting in them (Ps 119:14) express the lived, responsive dimension of covenant faithfulness. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS
en: Your-testimonies, and-His-testimonies, and-his-testimonies | es: a-testimonios-de-ti, de-testimonios-de-ti, sus-testimonios | fr: [ובעדותיו], [ולעדותיך], [ועדותיו] | de: [ובעדותיו], [ולעדותיך], [ועדותיו] 1Kgs 2:3; 2Kgs 17:15; 2Kgs 23:3; 1Chr 29:19; 2Chr 34:31

עֶדְיִ H5716 Prep-b / N-msc (14×)
Ornament, jewelry, finery; collectively, the decorative adornments worn on the body; also, one's prime or full beauty.
A collective noun for personal ornaments and finery — rings, bracelets, and gold adornments that signify beauty, status, and celebration. In 2 Samuel 1:24, the daughters of Israel are called to weep over Saul who clothed them in scarlet with ornaments of gold. Ezekiel 16:11 and 23:40 use the word in extended metaphors where Jerusalem is adorned like a bride, making ornament a symbol of divine favor. The word also appears in a disputed reading at Psalm 103:5, where some manuscripts suggest 'your prime' or 'your full beauty' rather than physical jewelry — the Greek Septuagint renders it as 'your desire,' hinting at an abstract sense of life's flourishing.

1. ornament, jewelry (13×) Physical ornaments, jewelry, and finery worn on the body. This primary sense covers gold adornments (2 Sam 1:24, 'ornaments of gold'), bridal jewelry in prophetic allegory (Ezek 16:11; 23:40), and even the ornaments Israel stripped off at Horeb in grief (Exod 33:4–6). Spanish 'adorno' and French renderings consistently point to decorative personal items. Jeremiah 2:32 asks rhetorically whether a bride could forget her ornaments — underlining how integral they are to identity and celebration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: her-ornaments, his-ornaments, in-ornament-of | es: a-ornamento-de, adorno, adorno-de | fr: [עדי], [עדי], [עדיה] | de: [בעדי], [כעדי], [עדי] Exod 33:4; Exod 33:5; Exod 33:6; 2Sam 1:24; Ps 32:9

2. prime, full beauty (1×) An abstract or figurative sense: one's prime, full beauty, or the flourishing of life. At Psalm 103:5, the Hebrew text has been read as 'your ornament' but the Septuagint translates with 'your desire' (ten epithymian sou), suggesting the underlying meaning may be 'your prime years' or 'your vitality' rather than literal jewelry. Some lexicographers connect this to the root meaning of 'adornment' extended metaphorically to the peak of one's life — the season when one is most 'adorned' by vigor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: your-ornaments | es: tu-adorno | fr: ornement | de: dein-ornaments Ps 103:5

עֲדִיאֵל H5717 N-proper-ms (3×)

Personal name meaning 'ornament is El'; a Simeonite, a priest, and a Davidic officer's father

Adiel, meaning 'ornament/finery of God,' appears as the name of three individuals in Chronicles. The theophoric element 'El' combined with a root suggesting adornment or beauty creates a name affirming that God Himself is the wearer's true glory. One Adiel was a Simeonite leader, another served as a priest, and a third was the father of one of David's officers. Sabean parallels show similar theophoric constructions were common across ancient Near Eastern cultures. The Septuagint transliterations vary slightly, reflecting the challenges of rendering Hebrew proper names into Greek.

(3×) Three distinct individuals bearing this name appear exclusively in Chronicles' genealogical and administrative records. The multilingual evidence shows standard proper name treatment: transliteration in English and Spanish, with French and German sometimes preserving the Hebrew form in brackets. The name appears in Simeonite genealogies, priestly lists, and Davidic administrative records, reflecting the diverse contexts where genealogical precision mattered to the Chronicler. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Adiel, and-Adi'el | es: Adiel, y-Adiel | fr: [ועדיאל], [עדיאל] | de: [ועדיאל], [עדיאל] 1Chr 4:36; 1Chr 9:12; 1Chr 27:25

עֲדָיָה H5718 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (9×)

Adaiah, a proper masculine name meaning 'Yahweh has adorned himself,' borne by several individuals in the Hebrew Bible.

A Hebrew personal name (עֲדָיָה / עֲדָיָהוּ) meaning 'Yahweh has adorned himself' or 'adorned by Yah.' It appears across a wide span of biblical history, from the grandfather of King Josiah (2 Kgs 22:1) to post-exilic priests and laypeople who had taken foreign wives (Ezra 10:29, 39). The name reflects the theophoric naming pattern common in ancient Israel, combining a verb of beauty or adornment with the divine name. Greek transliterations vary considerably across manuscripts, from Αδαια to Εδεινα, suggesting the name was challenging for Septuagint scribes to render consistently.

Adaiah (proper noun) (9×) The proper name Adaiah, borne by at least seven distinct individuals: (1) father of a Judean captain under Jehoiada (2 Chr 23:1); (2) maternal grandfather of King Josiah (2 Kgs 22:1); (3) a Levite ancestor in the line of Asaph (1 Chr 6:41); (4) a Benjaminite (1 Chr 8:21); (5) a priest in post-exilic Jerusalem (1 Chr 9:12; Neh 11:12); (6) two men who had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:29, 39); and (7) a Judahite in Nehemiah's Jerusalem (Neh 11:5). The multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration across Spanish ('Adaya'), French ('Adaja'), and English ('Adaiah'). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Adayah, Adayahu, and-Adayah | es: Adaya, Adaías, Jeroham | fr: Adaja, Adayah, et-Adaja | de: Adayah, [ועדיה], [עדיה] 2Kgs 22:1; 1Chr 6:41; 1Chr 8:21; 1Chr 9:12; 2Chr 23:1

עָדִין H5719 Adj-fs (1×)

voluptuous, luxury-loving (feminine adjective)

A feminine adjective meaning voluptuous or pleasure-seeking, used as a noun to personify Babylon in Isaiah's taunt. The prophet addresses Babylon as 'O voluptuous one, dwelling securely,' mocking her self-indulgent confidence before announcing her sudden downfall. The term evokes luxury, sensuality, and false security.

(1×) Babylon personified as a voluptuous woman in Isaiah 47:8, addressed in the prophet's taunt oracle. 'Now hear this, O voluptuous one, who sits securely'—the feminine adjective becomes a mocking title, emphasizing Babylon's self-indulgent complacency. The context contrasts her luxurious ease with the humiliation about to come: stripped, exposed, bereaved, enslaved. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT

en: luxurious-one | es: voluptuosa | fr: [עדינה] | de: [עדינה] Isa 47:8

עָדִין H5720 N-proper-ms (4×)

Adin; name of a family head among the returning exiles and a post-exilic leader

Adin is the name of at least two individuals in the post-exilic period. First, he was the head of a family that returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:15//Nehemiah 7:20), with additional family members returning later with Ezra (Ezra 8:6). Second, an Adin appears as one of the chiefs who sealed Nehemiah's covenant (Nehemiah 10:16). The name may mean "delicate" or "pleasure." Greek versions render it as Αδ(δ)ιν or Ηδ(ε)ιν.

(4×) A personal and family name in the post-exilic community. The "sons of Adin" appear in parallel census lists (Ezra 2:15//Nehemiah 7:20), with additional returnees under Ezra (Ezra 8:6). A leader named Adin sealed the covenant in Nehemiah 10:16 (English v. 17). Transliterations are consistent: Adin/Adín, with some bracketing [עדין]. The repetition across Ezra-Nehemiah indicates a significant family group in the restoration community, though whether the Nehemiah 10 Adin is the family head or another individual is unclear. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Adin | es: Adin, Adín | fr: [עדין] | de: [עדין] Ezra 2:15; Ezra 8:6; Neh 7:20; Neh 10:16

עֲדִינָא H5721 N-proper-ms (1×)

Adina (personal name: 'delicate, refined')

The name of a Reubenite warrior, one of David's mighty men according to 1 Chronicles. Adina son of Shiza was a chief of the Reubenites with thirty men under his command. The name likely derives from the root meaning 'delicate' or 'refined,' ironic for a battle-hardened captain. Greek versions render it as Adina or Adeina.

(1×) Adina son of Shiza the Reubenite, listed in 1 Chronicles 11:42 among David's elite warriors. He was not only one of the mighty men but also a leader over thirty Reubenites. The name, meaning something like 'delicate' or 'refined,' provides an interesting contrast to his military role—perhaps bestowed in childhood or reflecting a family heritage. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Adina | es: Adina | fr: [עדינא] | de: [עדינא] 1Chr 11:42

עָדִין H5722 N-proper-ms (1×)
Adino (personal name, possibly textual corruption)
A name appearing in 2 Samuel's list of David's mighty men, though most scholars believe the text is corrupt and should be read differently based on the parallel in 1 Chronicles. The phrase 'Adino the Eznite' likely represents a scribal error for 'he wielded his spear,' as suggested by the Chronicles parallel. If original, the name would derive from the root for 'delicate' or 'voluptuous.'

(1×) The problematic 'Adino' in 2 Samuel 23:8, where the text reads 'Adino the Eznite' but parallel passages suggest corruption. BDB and most commentators recommend reading 'he wielded his spear' based on 1 Chronicles 11:11, which clarifies the original sense: the warrior lifted his spear against eight hundred slain at one time. The Greek and other versions show early confusion, supporting the textual emendation. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Adino | es: Adino | fr: Adino | de: Adino 2Sam 23:8

עֲדִיתַיִם H5723 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Aditayim (place name: dual form, 'two Aditas'?)
A town in the Shephelah lowlands of Judah, listed among the settlements in Joshua's territorial allotment. The name appears to be a dual form, possibly meaning 'two Aditas' or indicating a twin settlement. The precise location is unknown. Greek manuscripts offer variant transliterations, reflecting uncertainty about the name's pronunciation and meaning.

(1×) Aditayim, a town assigned to Judah in Joshua 15:36 within the Shephelah district. The dual ending suggests either a double settlement or a place name with dual morphology for unclear reasons. Greek versions render it Adiathaeim, Ageththaim, or similar forms. The site has not been identified with any modern location. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Aditayim | es: y-Aditaim | fr: et-Aditayim | de: und-Aditayim Josh 15:36

עַדְלָי H5724 N-proper-ms (1×)
Adlai (personal name: possibly 'justice of Yah')
A personal name borne by the father of one of David's officers. Shaphat son of Adlai was overseer of David's herds in the valleys. The name may mean 'justice of Yah' or 'my justice,' incorporating a theophoric element, though the etymology is uncertain. Greek versions transliterate it as Adai or Adli.

(1×) Adlai the father of Shaphat, mentioned in 1 Chronicles 27:29 among David's administrative officials. Shaphat son of Adlai supervised the royal herds that grazed in the valleys. The name likely contains a divine element, possibly meaning 'my justice' or 'Yah's justice,' though its exact derivation remains unclear. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Adlai | es: Adlai | fr: [עדלי] | de: [עדלי] 1Chr 27:29

עֲדֻלָּם H5725 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (8×)
Adullam, an ancient Canaanite city in Judah's Shephelah, famous as David's refuge cave.
A place name designating the old Canaanite royal city of Adullam, situated in the lowland hills (Shephelah) of Judah about thirteen miles west-southwest of Bethlehem. Its most celebrated association is the cave of Adullam where David gathered his band of outcasts while fleeing Saul (1 Sam 22:1, 2 Sam 23:13). The city appears in Joshua's conquest list (Josh 12:15), was fortified by Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:7), and is mentioned again in the post-exilic resettlement (Neh 11:30). Micah 1:15 evokes it in prophetic oracle. French and German leave several forms untransliterated, while English and Spanish consistently render it 'Adullam/Adulam.'

Adullam (proper noun) (8×) The proper noun designating the Canaanite city of Adullam in the Shephelah of Judah. Its primary biblical significance centers on David's flight from Saul to the cave of Adullam (1 Sam 22:1), where he gathered four hundred men – a scene so iconic that 'Adullam' became shorthand for a place of refuge and loyal resistance. The city also appears in Joshua's conquest list (Josh 12:15), Rehoboam's fortification program (2 Chr 11:7), Micah's lament (Mic 1:15), and Nehemiah's resettlement roster (Neh 11:30). Multilingual evidence shows stable transliteration: English 'Adullam,' Spanish 'Adulam,' Greek Odollam. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Adullam, and-Adullam | es: Adulam, y-Adulán | fr: Adullam, [עדלם], et-Adullam | de: Adullam, [עדלם], [עדלם] Josh 12:15; Josh 15:35; 1Sam 22:1; 2Sam 23:13; 1Chr 11:15

עֲדֻלָּמִי H5726 Art / N-proper-ms (3×)
Adullamite; a gentilić denoting someone from the city of Adullam
This adjective identifies someone from Adullam, the city that would later be famous as the site of David's cave refuge. In Genesis 38, it describes Hirah, Judah's companion who becomes entangled in the Tamar narrative. The term appears both with the article ('the Adullamite,' referring to Hirah) and without it ('an Adullamite man'). Adullam itself was a Canaanite city in the Shephelah, the lowland region between the coastal plain and the hill country of Judah. The gentilić form follows standard Hebrew patterns for creating ethnic or geographic identifiers.

(3×) All three occurrences refer to Hirah, Judah's friend in the Tamar story. The multilingual evidence shows straightforward gentilić treatment: Spanish 'adulamita,' French 'Adullamite,' German 'Adullamiter,' all following their respective language patterns for forming ethnic designations. The Genesis narrative uses both definite and indefinite forms, first introducing 'an Adullamite man' and then referring to 'the Adullamite' once the character is established. PERSONAL NAMES
en: an-Adullamite, the-Adullamite | es: adulamita, el-adulamita | fr: le-Adullamite, un-Adullamite | de: der-Adullamiter, des-Adullamiters, einem-Adullamiter Gen 38:1; Gen 38:12; Gen 38:20

עָדַן H5727 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-3mp (1×)
luxuriate, delight oneself (in abundance)
A Hitpael verb meaning to luxuriate or take exquisite pleasure in something, used in Nehemiah's confession to describe Israel's indulgence in God's goodness during the conquest era. The people 'ate, were filled, grew fat, and luxuriated in your great goodness.' The verb implies sensory delight and self-indulgent pleasure, here directed toward God's abundant provision.

(1×) Israel's luxuriating in divine bounty during the conquest, described in Nehemiah 9:25. After listing the good things Israel received—fortified cities, fertile land, cisterns, vineyards, olive groves—Nehemiah says, 'they ate, were satisfied, grew fat, and luxuriated in your great goodness.' The verb climaxes the sequence, picturing Israel delighting themselves in lavish abundance before the eventual rebellion. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT
en: and-they-delighted-themselves | es: y-se-deleitaron | fr: [ויתעדנו] | de: [ויתעדנו] Neh 9:25

עֲדָנָה H5728 Adv / 3fs (2×)
still, yet, hitherto (temporal adverb indicating continuance up to present)
This adverb means 'still,' 'yet,' or 'hitherto'—a temporal marker indicating something continues up to the present moment or hasn't happened yet. Both occurrences are in Ecclesiastes 4, where Qohelet reflects on the superiority of the dead and unborn. Verse 2 praises those 'already dead' over the living, while verse 3 declares those 'not yet born' most fortunate. The adverb marks temporal boundaries in Qohelet's pessimistic assessment of life under the sun, contrasting past, present, and 未-yet-realized states.

(2×) A temporal adverb meaning 'still,' 'yet,' or 'hitherto.' Ecclesiastes 4:2 uses it for those 'already/still dead,' while 4:3 applies it to those 'yet/not yet born.' Cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish 'aún,' 'todavía'; English 'still,' 'yet') confirm the temporal continuance sense. The word derives from 'ad (until) + hennah (here), thus 'until now.' CONTINUITY AND STILL en: still, yet | es: aún, todavía | fr: jusqu'à-maintenant, jusqu'à-maintenant-elle | de: [עַדַן], [עֲדָנָה] Eccl 4:2; Eccl 4:3

עֵדֶן H5729 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (3×)
Eden; a territory conquered by Assyria, probably identical with Beth-eden, located on the Middle Euphrates
This Eden (distinct from the garden of Genesis 2-3) refers to an Aramean territory conquered by the Assyrian empire. The phrase 'children of Eden' appears in accounts of Assyrian conquests, placing them in Telassar. Ezekiel 27:23 lists Eden among trading partners of Tyre, alongside Haran and Canneh. Scholars identify this Eden with the Aramean state of Bit-Adini on the Middle Euphrates, a region known from Assyrian inscriptions. The Hebrew pointing differentiates it from the primordial garden, using 'Eden' rather than 'Eden' to distinguish the two. The Septuagint transliterates it as Edem, maintaining the geographic reference.

(3×) Three occurrences all refer to this Aramean territory in contexts of Assyrian conquest and international trade. The multilingual glosses consistently transliterate 'Eden,' though German and French sometimes bracket the Hebrew form. The prophetic texts use Eden as an example of a conquered territory, part of the Assyrian empire's boasting about nations it had subjugated. Ezekiel's commercial context shows Eden as a trading partner before its conquest, suggesting its economic significance in the ancient Near Eastern network. EDEN GARDEN PLACE
en: Eden, and-Eden | es: Edén, y-Edén | fr: Eden, [עַדַן], et-temps | de: Eden, [עַדַן], und-Eden 2Kgs 19:12; Isa 37:12; Ezek 27:23

עֵדֶן H5730a N-mpc / 2ms (3×)
Luxury, dainty, delight; pleasurable abundance, whether material finery or spiritual joy
This noun captures the idea of luxurious delights and exquisite pleasures. In 2 Samuel 1:24 (if the text is correct), it describes the luxurious garments Saul provided for Israel's daughters. Jeremiah 51:34 uses it metaphorically: Nebuchadnezzar has filled his belly with Judah's 'dainties,' plundering the nation's treasures. Most beautifully, Psalm 36:8 speaks of the 'river of your delights,' a parallel to the 'richness of your house,' describing the abundant joys of worshiping Yahweh. The root suggests refined pleasure, the kind of delight that comes from abundance and beauty.

(3×) The three occurrences span from material luxury to spiritual delight. The Psalm passage is particularly striking, using 'delights' to describe the intangible but profound pleasures of God's presence. The multilingual evidence shows consistent translation of the core idea: Spanish 'delicias,' French 'plaisir,' conveying both the sensory and spiritual dimensions. Jeremiah's use is caustic—the delicacies of Judah become the spoil that fills Babylon's belly, a vivid reversal of fortune. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: Your-delights, delights, with-my-delicacies | es: de-mis-delicias, delicias, tus-delicias | fr: [מֵעֲדָנַי], delights, plaisir | de: [מֵעֲדָנַי], dein-delights, delights 2Sam 1:24; Ps 36:8; Jer 51:34

עֲדָנָה H5730b N-fs (2×)
delight, pleasure (especially sensual/sexual)
This feminine noun denotes delight or pleasure, particularly with sensual or sexual overtones. Genesis 18:12 records Sarah's incredulous inward laugh: shall I have 'pleasure' (conjugal relations and childbearing) when I am old? Amos 1:5 mentions 'Beth-eden' (house of delight/pleasure), a location associated with Damascus. The word shares consonants with 'Eden,' the garden of delight, and carries connotations of enjoyment, luxury, and physical pleasure.

(2×) Delight or pleasure with sensual overtones. Genesis 18:12 uses it for Sarah's anticipated pleasure in childbearing/conjugal relations despite old age. Amos 1:5 references 'Beth-eden' (possibly a place name meaning 'house of delight'). German 'Wonne' (bliss/delight) and Spanish 'placer' capture the pleasurable sense, which can be physical/sexual or more general enjoyment. EDEN GARDEN PLACE
en: Eden, pleasure | es: Edén, placer | fr: pleasure, temps | de: Wonne, [עַדַן] Gen 18:12; Amos 1:5

עֵדֵן H5731a Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Eden (personal name); Levite who served during Hezekiah's reforms
This personal name identifies a Levite active during Hezekiah's religious reforms. 2 Chronicles 29:12 lists Eden among Levites who sanctified themselves to cleanse the temple, while 31:15 names him as one who faithfully distributed offerings in the priestly cities. The name means 'delight' or 'pleasure,' sharing consonants with the garden of Eden. The Levite Eden represents faithful service during a time of covenant renewal and temple restoration.

(2×) A proper name for a Levite during Hezekiah's reign, mentioned in temple cleansing (2 Chronicles 29:12) and distribution of offerings (31:15). The name means 'delight,' etymologically related to the garden of Eden. Greek versions (Iōadan, Odom, Iadan) show uncertainty in transliteration, but the Hebrew is consistent across both occurrences. EDEN GARDEN PLACE
en: Eden, and-Eden | es: Edén, y-Edén | fr: [וְעֵדֶן], [עֵדֶן] | de: Eden, und-Eden 2Chr 29:12; 2Chr 31:15

עֵדֶן H5731b Prep-b / N-proper-fs (14×)
Eden; the primordial garden-region of God where Adam and Eve dwelt, archetype of divine blessing and fertility.
The proper name of the territory in which God planted a garden for humanity's first dwelling (Gen 2:8). Probably associated with the Hebrew 'eden meaning 'delight' or 'luxury,' the name evokes a place of abundant, unearned provision – a river flows out of Eden to water the garden and then divides into four branches (Gen 2:10). After the expulsion, cherubim and a flaming sword guard the way back to the tree of life (Gen 3:24). Later prophets invoke Eden as the ultimate simile for restored fertility: 'the LORD will make her wilderness like Eden' (Isa 51:3; cf. Ezek 36:35; Joel 2:3). Ezekiel 28 and 31 further develop it as 'the garden of God,' rich with precious stones and towering trees. The Septuagint renders it variously as Eden and he tryphe ('the delight').

Eden (proper noun, garden/region) (14×) The proper name of the primordial region where God planted the garden for Adam and Eve. Introduced in Genesis 2:8, 10, 15 and referenced through the expulsion narrative (Gen 3:23-24) and the Cain episode (Gen 4:16). Prophets use it as a simile for paradisiacal fertility and divine blessing restored (Isa 51:3; Ezek 36:35; Joel 2:3). Ezekiel expands the imagery: Eden as 'the garden of God' adorned with precious stones (Ezek 28:13) and towering cedars (Ezek 31:9, 16, 18), representing the highest conceivable splendor. EDEN GARDEN PLACE
en: Eden, from-Eden, in-Eden | es: Edén, Edén;, Edén? | fr: [כְּעֵדֶן], dans-temps, dans-Éden | de: Eden, [כְּעֵדֶן], [עֵדֶן] Gen 2:8; Gen 2:10; Gen 2:15; Gen 3:23; Gen 3:24

עִדָּן H5732 Conj-w / N-ms (13×)
Time, period, season; an Aramaic noun in Daniel for general duration or prophetic year-units.
This Aramaic noun iddan appears exclusively in the book of Daniel, where it serves as the primary term for 'time' in both general and prophetic senses. In ordinary usage it denotes a period or season (Dan 2:8–9, 21; 3:5, 15; 7:12). In its prophetic application it functions as a technical unit equivalent to a year, as in 'seven times' (Dan 4:13, 20, 22, 29) referring to Nebuchadnezzar's seven years of madness, and the cryptic formula 'a time, times, and half a time' (Dan 7:25) representing three and a half years. The term likely derives from Akkadian adannu ('appointed time'), entering Aramaic as a loanword.

time, period, season (Aramaic) (13×) A general or specific temporal period — time, season, or appointed duration. In ordinary Aramaic usage within Daniel it means 'time' as an indefinite span

(Dan 2:8 'you are trying to gain time'; 2:21 'he changes times and seasons'; 7:12 'for a season and a time'). In prophetic-apocalyptic contexts it functions as a year-unit: 'seven times' = seven years of Nebuchadnezzar's bestial madness (Dan 4:13, 20, 22, 29), and the enigmatic 'time, times, and half a time' = three and a half years (Dan 7:25). Spanish 'el tiempo' and English 'time/season' reflect the word's broad semantic range. TIME AND SEASONS

en: and-season, and-times, at-time | es: En-el-tiempo, el-tiempo, en-el-tiempo | fr: [בעדנא], [עדנא], [עדניא] | de: Eden, Zeit, und-Eden Dan 2:8; Dan 2:9; Dan 2:21; Dan 3:5; Dan 3:15

עַדְנָא H5733 N-proper-ms (2×)

Adna (personal name); identifies two post-exilic men

This personal name appears in two post-exilic contexts, identifying different individuals. Ezra 10:30 lists Adna among those who had married foreign wives during the exile and were required to divorce them. Nehemiah 12:15 names an Adna as head of a priestly family in the generation after the return. The name likely means 'delight' or 'pleasure,' from the same root as Eden. Both occurrences reflect the reconstituted community's attention to genealogical and covenantal purity.

(2×) A proper name for two post-exilic individuals: (1) a man who married a foreign wife (Ezra 10:30), and (2) a priestly family head (Nehemiah 12:15). The name means 'delight' or 'pleasure.' Cross-linguistic glosses preserve the name consistently, with Greek versions attempting transliteration (Aidaine, Edna, Adanas). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Adna | es: Adna | fr: [עדנא] | de: [עדנא] Ezra 10:30; Neh 12:15

עַדְנָה H5734 N-proper-ms (2×)

Adnah (personal name); identifies a Judahite prince and a Manassite warrior

This personal name identifies two military figures in Chronicles. 2 Chronicles 17:14 lists Adnah as a commander of Judah under Jehoshaphat, leading 300,000 mighty warriors. 1 Chronicles 12:21 names Adnah among the Manassite warriors who defected to David at Ziklag, becoming chiefs in his army. The name means 'delight' or 'pleasure,' likely theophoric. Both men exemplify military leadership and courage in supporting godly kings.

(2×) A proper name for two military leaders: (1) a Manassite who joined David (1 Chronicles 12:21), and (2) a Judahite commander under Jehoshaphat (2 Chronicles 17:14). The name means 'delight,' related to Eden. Textual variants exist (Adnah/Adnach), and Greek versions show transliteration uncertainty (Edna, Adnas). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Adnach, Adnah | es: Adnah, Adnaj | fr: [עדנה], [עדנח] | de: [עדנה], [עדנח] 1Chr 12:21; 2Chr 17:14

עַדְעָר H5735 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Adadah (place name, possibly textual corruption for Aroer)

A place name in southern Judah's town list, though some scholars propose reading 'Aroer' instead based on other geographical references. If original, Adadah is otherwise unknown. The site appears in Joshua's allocation to Judah among the southernmost settlements toward the Edomite border. The name's similarity to other variants has led to ongoing debate about the correct reading.

(1×) Adadah listed among the towns of southern Judah in Joshua 15:22, though textual critics suggest emending to 'Aroer' (or 'Ararah') based on the Septuagint and parallel town lists. BDB notes that the form may be a corruption of the better-known Aroer in southern Judah mentioned in 1 Samuel 30:28. The uncertainty reflects the challenges of reconstructing ancient toponymy from variant manuscript traditions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Adadah | es: y-Adadá | fr: et-Adadah | de: und-Adadah Josh 15:22

עָדַף H5736 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (9×)

To remain over, be in excess; the surplus or remainder (used of curtains, food, money, and persons)

A verb used almost entirely as a participle functioning as a substantive – 'the remainder,' 'the surplus,' 'what is left over.' It appears prominently in the tabernacle instructions, where the excess curtain material must be accounted for (Exod 26:12-13), and in the manna narrative, where gathered food must not have leftover (Exod 16:18, 23). Spanish 'el sobrante' (the leftover) and French 'le surplus' directly mirror the Hebrew participial usage. The single Hiphil occurrence in Exodus 16:18 shifts from description to action: 'he who gathered much had no excess,' marking the miracle of perfectly proportioned provision.

1. remain over, be in excess (Qal ptcp.) (8×) Qal participle used substantively for what remains over or is in excess. Covers the surplus curtain fabric in the tabernacle (Exod 26:12-13), leftover food from the manna (Exod 16:23), the excess in a field's redemption price (Lev 25:27), and the surplus firstborn of Israel beyond the Levites (Num 3:46, 48-49). Spanish 'el sobrante/la sobrante' and English 'the excess/the remainder' consistently render the participial sense of 'that which is left over.' ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: in-the-excess, the-excess, the-remainder | es: el-sobrante, en-lo-que-sobra, la-sobrante | fr: dans-le-excess, le-excess, le-remainder | de: der-Rest, der-excess, der-surplus Exod 16:23; Exod 26:12; Exod 26:13; Lev 25:27

2. have excess (Hiphil) (1×) A single Hiphil perfect in Exodus 16:18 meaning 'to have a surplus, to have gathered in excess.' Unlike the participial descriptions of surplus as a static state, this form captures the active result of gathering – 'the one who gathered much did not have excess (he'edif).' It stands in deliberate contrast to its antonym hechsir ('had too little'), underscoring the miraculous equalization of the manna. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: had-excess | es: sobró | fr: avait-excess | de: hatte-excess Exod 16:18

עָדַר H5737a Conj-w (1×)

help, assist (Aramaic loanword, possible textual variant)

An Aramaic loanword meaning to help, appearing in a textually uncertain passage of 1 Chronicles. The phrase 'to help' in 12:34 likely represents a scribal variant for the more common Hebrew root meaning 'to arrange' or 'set in order,' used elsewhere in the chapter for arranging battle lines. Syriac and rabbinic sources use this Aramaic root as equivalent to Hebrew 'to help.'

(1×) The infinitive 'to help' in 1 Chronicles 12:34 (or v. 33 in some versifications), though many scholars emend to 'to arrange [for battle]' based on parallel verses and context. If the Aramaic reading is original, it means 'to assist' or 'help,' borrowed from Syriac/Targumic usage. The phrase describes warriors who came 'to help' or 'to array for battle,' with Greek and other versions supporting the emendation to the common root for military formation. HELP AND ASSISTANCE

en: and-to-help | es: y-para-alinear | fr: [ולעדר] | de: [ולעדר] 1Chr 12:34

עָדַר H5737b V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (2×)

to be hoed, to hoe (cultivate with a hoe or mattock)

This verb in the Niphal (passive) stem refers to the agricultural practice of hoeing—breaking up soil with a hoe or mattock for cultivation. Both occurrences are in Isaiah's vineyard oracles. Isaiah 5:6 threatens that the rebellious vineyard 'will not be hoed' (nor pruned), allowing it to go wild. Isaiah 7:25 describes hills 'which used to be hoed with the hoe,' now abandoned to thorns due to invasion. The imagery emphasizes agricultural care and its absence as divine judgment.

(2×) To be hoed or cultivated with a hoe/mattock, used passively in both occurrences. Isaiah 5:6 threatens cessation of hoeing as judgment on Israel-the-vineyard, while 7:25 speaks of hills formerly hoed now overrun by briers. The contexts link agricultural care to covenant blessing, and neglect to judgment. Cross-linguistic glosses render this as 'hoed' or 'cultivated.' DIGGING AND EXCAVATING

en: are-hoed, it-will-be-hoed | es: se-cavaban, será-cavada | fr: [יֵעָדֵר], [יֵעָדְרוּן] | de: [יֵעָדֵר], [יֵעָדְרוּן] Isa 5:6; Isa 7:25

עָדַר H5737c V-Nifal-Perf-3fs (7×)

Be lacking, be missing, fail (Niphal/Piel); to be absent from where one should be, always used with negation.

A verb in Niphal and Piel stems meaning 'to be lacking, missing, or absent,' remarkably almost always occurring with a negative particle (lo'). This creates an emphatic affirmation of completeness: in 1 Samuel 30:19, nothing was 'missing' from what the Amalekites had taken; in 2 Samuel 17:22, not one person was lacking who had not crossed the Jordan. Isaiah 40:26 applies it cosmically – God calls the stars by name and 'not one is missing.' Zephaniah 3:5 uses it of God Himself: morning by morning He renders justice and 'does not fail.'

be lacking, be missing, fail (Nifal/Piel) (7×) To be lacking, missing, or absent, typically negated to emphasize completeness or unfailing presence. In 1 Sam 30:19 David recovers everything and 'nothing was missing' (lo ne'dar) – the Spanish 'faltaban' ('were missing') and French constructions preserve this sense of absence. 2 Sam 17:22 reports that by morning 'not one was lacking' who had not crossed the Jordan. Isaiah 34:16 assures that no wild creature 'is missing' from God's appointed judgment. Isaiah 40:26 applies it to the stars: God calls each by name and 'not one fails.' Isaiah 59:15 laments that truth 'has become lacking.' Zephaniah 3:5 declares that the righteous LORD 'does not fail' in administering justice. 1 Kgs 4:27 (Piel) states the governors 'let nothing be lacking.' LACK AND DEFICIENCY en: is-missing, it-fails, lacking | es: ausente, falta, faltaban | fr: [נֶעְדָּר], [נֶעְדָּרָה], [נֶעְדָּרוֹת] | de: [נֶעְדָּר], [נֶעְדָּרָה], [נֶעְדָּרוֹת] 1Sam 30:19; 2Sam 17:22; 1Kgs 4:27; Isa 34:16; Isa 40:26

עֵדֶר H5738 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Eder (personal name: 'flock, herd')

A Benjamite personal name meaning 'flock' or 'herd,' appearing in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles. Eder was one of the sons listed in the family of Benjamin. The name uses a common noun for a herd of animals as a personal designation, possibly reflecting pastoral heritage. Greek versions offer various transliterations.

(1×) Eder the Benjamite listed in 1 Chronicles 8:15 among the genealogies of Benjamin. The name, identical to the common word for 'flock,' may reflect the family's pastoral background or simply a naming tradition using animal husbandry terms. Greek manuscripts transliterate it as Oded, Oder, or Adar. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4023 WITH 4 SENSES

en: and-Eder | es: y-Ader | fr: [וְעֶדֶר] | de: [וְעֶדֶר] 1Chr 8:15

עֵדֶר H5739 Prep-l / N-mp (38×)

flock, herd — a group of livestock (sheep, goats, or cattle) tended together, often used in pastoral imagery

Eder is a masculine noun for a flock or herd of domestic animals, appearing 38 times from Genesis through Malachi. It enters Scripture at the well where Jacob meets Rachel: 'three flocks of sheep were lying beside it' (Gen 29:2). The word's pastoral warmth is distilled in Isaiah 40:11, where the Lord 'will tend his flock like a shepherd.' Yet eder also carries economic weight — it represents wealth (Gen 32:17; 2 Chr 32:28) and covenantal obligation (Mal 1:14, condemning those who vow from the flock but sacrifice a blemished animal). The prophets use flocks as a figure for desolation: Isaiah envisions abandoned cities where 'flocks shall lie down' (Isa 17:2; 32:14). Song of Songs draws on the pastoral image differently, comparing the beloved's hair to 'a flock of goats descending from Gilead' (4:1; 6:6).

flock or herd of livestock (38×) A group of domesticated animals — primarily sheep and goats, occasionally cattle — kept and tended together. Used literally for pastoral livelihood (Gen 29:2-3, 8; 30:40; 1 Sam 17:34; Prov 27:23) and in figurative speech comparing people to flocks under a shepherd's care (Isa 40:11; Ezek 34:12; Mic 5:7). Frequently appears in construct: eder tso'n ('flock of sheep,' Gen 29:2; Joel 1:18), eder harehelim ('flock of ewes,' Song 6:6). The word conveys both vulnerability and abundance. Spanish 'rebano,' French 'troupeau,' German 'Herde' all render a unified pastoral sense with no semantic splitting needed. FLOCK HERD LIVESTOCK

en: His-flock, flock, flock-of | es: como-rebaño-de, el-rebaño, los-rebaños | fr: comme-un-troupeau, le-troupeaux, troupeau | de: Herde, Herden, Herden- Gen 29:2; Gen 29:3; Gen 29:8; Gen 30:40

עֶדֶר H5740a Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Eder (personal name); Levite in the genealogy of Merari

This personal name identifies a Levite of the Merarite clan in the genealogical lists of 1 Chronicles. Both occurrences (23:23 and 24:30) place Eder within the descendants of Mushi, son of Merari. The name means 'flock' or 'herd,' common in Hebrew nomenclature. The parallel references confirm Eder's place in the Levitical structure, preserving tribal memory and organizational roles for temple service.

(2×) A proper name for a Levite of Merari's line, appearing in parallel genealogical lists (1 Chronicles 23:23, 24:30). The name means 'flock,' fitting pastoral naming patterns. Both occurrences include the conjunction 'and Eder,' marking him in a series of Levitical descendants. Greek versions show transliteration variants (Aidath, Ēla, Eder). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4023 WITH 4 SENSES

en: and-Eder | es: y-Eder | fr: [וְעֶדֶר] | de: [וְעֶדֶר] 1Chr 23:23; 1Chr 24:30

עֶדֶר H5740b Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Eder (place name in southern Judah)

A town in the far south of Judah, listed among the settlements toward the Edomite border. Eder appears in Joshua's catalogue of Judahite towns but its precise location is unknown. The name means 'flock' or 'herd,' perhaps indicating a pastoral settlement or watering place for livestock. Greek versions show considerable variation in transliteration.

(1×) The town of Eder in extreme southern Judah, mentioned in Joshua 15:21 near the border with Edom. The name, meaning 'flock,' may suggest a grazing area or shepherding settlement. The site has not been identified with certainty. Greek versions render it as Ara, Edrai, or Eber, showing early uncertainty about the vocalization. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4023 WITH 4 SENSES

en: and-Eder | es: y-Eder | fr: et-Eder | de: und-Eder Josh 15:21

עַדְרִיאֵל H5741 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Adriel (personal name); son-in-law of Saul, married to Merab

This personal name identifies Saul's son-in-law, who married Merab, Saul's daughter originally promised to David. 1 Samuel 18:19 records Merab being given to Adriel the Meholathite instead of David. 2 Samuel 21:8 mentions Adriel again in the tragic narrative of Saul's descendants being executed to end a famine. The name likely means 'my help is God' (an Aramaic equivalent to Hebrew Azriel), suggesting Aramaic cultural connections. Adriel's marriage and his sons' deaths reflect the political and covenantal complexities of Saul's reign.

(2×) A proper name for Saul's son-in-law who married Merab (1 Samuel 18:19; 2 Samuel 21:8). The name means 'my help is God,' with Aramaic linguistic features. Both occurrences mark pivotal moments: the broken marriage promise to David and the execution of Adriel's sons. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve the name with appropriate prepositions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: to-Adriel | es: a-Adriel | fr: à-Adriel | de: zu-Adriel 1Sam 18:19; 2Sam 21:8

עֲדָשָׁה H5742 Conj-w / N-mp (4×)

lentils; a legume used for food, especially in stews and bread

Lentils are a common legume in the ancient Near East, used both as a field crop and as a staple food. Genesis 25:34 records Esau selling his birthright for "pottage of lentils." 2 Samuel 17:28 lists lentils among provisions brought to David, while 2 Samuel 23:11 recounts a battle fought in a lentil field. Ezekiel 4:9 includes lentils in the prophet's symbolic bread recipe. Lentils provided protein and were a key component of the peasant diet.

(4×) A leguminous plant and its edible seeds, used for food. The most famous reference is Genesis 25:34, where Esau trades his birthright for lentil stew. 2 Samuel 17:28 and 23:11 attest to lentils as a field crop and food source, while Ezekiel 4:9 includes them in siege-bread. Multilingual glosses are uniform: "lentils/lentejas/lentilles/Linsen." Some bracket [וְעַדָשִׁים], possibly indicating conjunctive forms. The term is fundamentally agricultural and culinary, representing a basic, nutritious food of the ancient diet, though Genesis 25 imbues it with cultural meaning (despising the sacred for the mundane). FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-lentils, lentils | es: lentejas, y-lentejas | fr: et-lentils, et-pétrir, lentilles | de: Linsen, [וְעַדָשִׁים], lentils Gen 25:34; 2Sam 17:28; 2Sam 23:11; Ezek 4:9

עוּב H5743 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (1×)

becloud, cover with a cloud (divine judgment metaphor)

A Hiphil verb meaning to cover with a cloud or enshroud in darkness, used in Lamentations for God's judgment on Jerusalem. The prophet laments, 'How the Lord has clouded Daughter Zion in his anger!' The image is of divine wrath descending like a storm cloud, darkening and obscuring what was once glorious. The verb intensifies the sense of God's alienation and judgment.

(1×) The divine clouding of Jerusalem in judgment, expressed in Lamentations 2:1: 'How the Lord has beclouded Daughter Zion in his anger!' The verb pictures God's wrath as a dark cloud covering the city, hiding her glory and beauty. The cloud imagery suggests both divine presence (as at Sinai) now turned hostile, and the darkness of disaster obscuring former splendor. CLOUDS AND SKY

en: has-covered-with-a-cloud | es: ha-oscurecido | fr: [יְעִיב] | de: [יְעִיב] Lam 2:1

עוֹבֵד H5744 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (10×)

Obed ('worshipper'), a personal name; most notably the son of Boaz and Ruth and grandfather of King David.

A personal name meaning 'worshipper' or 'servant,' derived from the root ʿabad ('to serve'). The most prominent bearer is the son of Boaz and Ruth, whose birth the women of Bethlehem celebrated as a restorer of Naomi's line (Ruth 4:17). The genealogies of Ruth 4:21-22 and 1 Chronicles 2:12 position Obed as the link between Boaz and Jesse, making him David's grandfather and a key figure in the messianic lineage. Other bearers include a Judahite in 1 Chronicles 2:37-38, a mighty warrior of David (1 Chr 11:47), and a temple gatekeeper (1 Chr 26:7).

and Oved (10×) The proper name Obed (ʿOved), meaning 'worshipper' or 'one who serves,' applied to several individuals. The most theologically significant is the son of Boaz and Ruth, named by the neighborhood women (Ruth 4:17) and placed in the Davidic genealogy as Jesse's father (Ruth 4:21-22; 1 Chr 2:12). Other bearers include a descendant of Judah through Jerahmeel (1 Chr 2:37-38), one of David's mighty warriors (1 Chr 11:47), and a Levitical gatekeeper (1 Chr 26:7). Spanish 'Obed,' French 'Obed,' and German 'Obed' all uniformly transliterate the name, while the Septuagint renders it Ōbēd. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Obed, Oved, and-Obed | es: Obed, Y-Obed, y-Obed | fr: Obed, et-Obed | de: Obed, und-Knecht, und-Obed Ruth 4:17; Ruth 4:21; Ruth 4:22; 1Chr 2:12

עוֹבָל H5745 N-proper-ms (1×)

Obal (personal/tribal name: possible Arabian group)

A descendant of Joktan listed in the Table of Nations, representing an Arabian people group. Obal appears in Genesis 10 among the sons of Joktan, the ancestor of various South Arabian tribes. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles calls him Ebal, showing the interchange of 'o' and 'e' vowels in variant traditions. The specific location or people remains uncertain.

(1×) Obal, a descendant of Joktan in Genesis 10:28, representing one of the Joktanite Arabian tribes. The name also appears as Ebal in 1 Chronicles 1:22, reflecting variant vowel traditions. Early geographers attempted to locate Obal's descendants in South Arabia, but precise identification remains elusive. The name situates this group among the Arabian peoples tracing ancestry to Shem through Eber and Joktan. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Obal | es: Oval | fr: Obal | de: Obal Gen 10:28

עוּג H5746 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms / 3fse (1×)

bake (a bread-cake), make into a round loaf

A denominative verb meaning to bake a cake or form bread into a round loaf, appearing in Ezekiel's symbolic action. God commands the prophet to bake barley cakes over a fire fueled by human dung, symbolizing the defiled food Israel will eat in exile. The verb derives from the noun for a round bread-cake, emphasizing the shaping and baking process.

(1×) The baking of bread-cakes in Ezekiel 4:12, where God commands the prophet to perform a sign-act of coming exile: 'You shall bake it as a barley cake, and you shall bake it on human dung in their sight.' The verb, derived from the noun for 'round cake,' emphasizes the forming and cooking of the bread into its characteristic shape —here made ritually unclean to symbolize the defilement of exile. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: you-shall-bake-it | es: la-cocinarás | fr: cuire | de: [תְּעֻגֶנָּה] Ezek 4:12

עוֹג H5747 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (22×)

Og – the giant king of Bashan, defeated by Israel alongside Sihon as paradigmatic conquest victories

The king of Bashan renowned for his enormous size – his iron bedstead measured nine cubits long (Deut 3:11) – who was defeated by Israel at Edrei during the wilderness period (Num 21:33-35). Og is almost always paired with Sihon king of the Amorites as the two Transjordanian rulers whose defeat opened the way for Israel's settlement east of the Jordan. Their joint overthrow became a standard confession of God's power, recited in Deuteronomic history (Deut 1-4; 29; 31), Joshua narratives, Nehemiah's prayer (9:22), and the psalms of thanksgiving (Ps 135:11; 136:20).

and Og (22×) The proper name Og, identifying the giant king of Bashan defeated by Israel at Edrei (Num 21:33). Paired formulaically with Sihon in recollections of the Transjordanian conquest across Deuteronomy, Joshua, Psalms, and Nehemiah. His prodigious size is evidenced by his iron bedstead (Deut 3:11). Some scholars connect the name to an original divine epithet. The Septuagint renders it Og, and all modern translations preserve the name unchanged across languages. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Og, and-Og, and-to-Og | es: Og, Y-a-Og, y-a-Og | fr: Og, [עוֹג], et-à-Og | de: Og, [עוֹג], und-Og Num 21:33; Num 32:33; Deut 1:4; Deut 3:1; Deut 3:3

עוּגָב H5748 Conj-w / N-ms (4×)

pipe, flute; a wind instrument, possibly a reed-pipe, Pan's pipe, or bagpipe

This musical instrument appears in both ancient and poetic contexts. Genesis 4:21 credits Jubal as the father of all who play the harp and pipe (עוּגָב), linking it to humanity's earliest cultural achievements. Job uses it in contexts of joy (21:12) and lament (30:31), while Psalm 150:4 includes it in the grand orchestral praise of God. The identification is debated: Targum suggests a reed-pipe or flute, Vulgate a Pan's pipe, and some moderns propose a bagpipe or stringed instrument.

(4×) A musical instrument of uncertain identification, likely a wind instrument such as a flute, reed-pipe, or Pan's pipe. Genesis 4:21 pairs it with the כִּנּוֹר (lyre) in humanity's primordial music-making. Job 21:12 and 30:31 use it in contexts of celebration and mourning respectively, while Psalm 150:4 includes it in temple praise. Multilingual glosses favor wind instruments: "flute/pipe/flauta/flûte." German and French bracket forms like [וְעֻגָבִי] and [עֻגָב]. The term consistently appears in musical contexts, representing one pole of ancient instrumental sound (wind/reed versus strings/lyre). FLUTE PIPE INSTRUMENT

en: and-flute, and-my-flute, and-pipe | es: la-flauta., y-flauta, y-mi-flauta | fr: et-flute, et-flûte, et-mon-ועגבי-moi | de: ['ועגבי], [עוגב], und-Flöte Gen 4:21; Job 21:12; Job 30:31; Ps 150:4

עוד H5749a Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-1cp (4×)

to surround, encompass, testify; to stand upright or give solemn witness

This verb root carries related senses of surrounding, repeating, testifying, and standing upright, derived from ideas of return and restoration. The glosses provided show significant semantic range: Psalm 119:61 speaks of wicked bands surrounding the psalmist, while other references involve standing upright (Psalm 20:8), upholding (Psalm 146:9), or lifting up (Psalm 147:6). The root may connect to Arabic عود (return, repeat) and is related to the noun עֵדוּת (testimony), suggesting movement that circles back or reaffirms.

(4×) The semantic range is complex and possibly reflects multiple homographic roots or polysemous development. Glosses include "surrounded" (Psalm 119:61), "stood upright" (Psalm 20:8), "upholds" (Psalm 146:9), and "lifts up" (Psalm 147:6). Multilingual evidence shows significant variation: French includes "témoigner" (testify), suggesting juridical senses, while English and Spanish reflect physical actions (surrounding, standing, lifting). The verb may derive from a root meaning "return, repeat, go about," extended to mean "encircle" or "testify solemnly" (testimony as repeated, established witness). The scattered glosses suggest either broad polysemy or textual/interpretive challenges. TESTIMONY AND WARNING

en: and-stood-upright, have-surrounded-me, he-upholds | es: Levantando, me-rodearon, sostiene | fr: de-témoigner, et-témoigner, témoigner | de: er-upholds, haben-surrounded-mich, lifter-up-of Ps 20:8; Ps 119:61; Ps 146:9; Ps 147:6

עוד H5749b Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3mp (40×)

To testify, warn, or solemnly charge; also to call or summon as witness

Derived from the root for 'witness,' this Hiphil verb operates across a spectrum from solemn warning to formal testimony to the causative act of establishing witnesses. When God 'warned' Israel through the prophets (2 Kgs 17:13), the urgency is paramount; when Naboth's accusers 'testified against' him (1 Kgs 21:13), the juridical sense dominates. Moses 'calls heaven and earth to witness' (Deut 4:26; 30:19) in a third, causative use that invokes cosmic accountability. French often flattens all three into 'avertir,' while Spanish distinguishes 'advertir' (warn) from 'testificar' (testify).

1. warn, admonish, charge (21×) The most common use: solemn warning or admonishment, often with prophetic urgency. Genesis 43:3 has Joseph's stern charge, and Exodus 19:21, 23 records God commanding Moses to warn the people. Spanish 'advertir/amonestar' and French 'avertir' capture the admonitory force. The emphasis falls on preventing wrongdoing or disaster through authoritative speech. TESTIMONY AND WARNING

en: I-have-warned, I-warned, and-I-warned | es: Y-advertí, Y-advirtió, Y-amonestó | fr: avertir, avertissant, avertit | de: [הע֫ידו], [ואעיד], [ואעידה] Gen 43:3; Exod 19:21; Exod 19:23; Exod 21:29

2. testify, bear witness (12×) Formal testimony or witness-bearing, whether for or against someone. In 1 Kings 21:10, 13, false witnesses 'testify against' Naboth; in Job 29:11, the ear that heard Job 'testified in his favor.' Deuteronomy 8:19 combines warning with testimony: 'I testify against you today.' Spanish 'testificar' and the juridical framing in Kings highlight the courtroom register of this sense. TESTIMONY AND WARNING

en: I-testify, and-I-will-testify, and-let-them-testify-against-him | es: testificaré-de-ti?, testificaste, testifico | fr: avertir, et-avertir, et-avertissez! | de: [אעידך], [הע֫יד], [הע֫ידה] Deut 8:19; Deut 32:46; 1Kgs 21:10; 1Kgs 21:13; 2Kgs 17:15

3. call or summon as witness (7×) The causative act of summoning or establishing witnesses – making someone or something serve as testimony. Moses 'calls heaven and earth as witnesses' (Deut 4:26; 30:19; 31:28), and Jeremiah summons human witnesses to a deed (Jer 32:10). Spanish 'llamar por testigos' and 'tomar como testigos' clearly convey the causative Hiphil force of causing others to stand as witnesses. WITNESSES AND TESTIMONY

en: I-call-to-witness, and-I-called-as-witnesses, and-I-will-call-as-witness | es: Y-tomaré-como-testigos, e-hice-testificar, llamo-por-testigos | fr: et-je-fera-appeler-comme-témoin, et-le-jusqu'à, et-témoigner | de: ich-rufen-zu-Zeuge, und-bezeugen, und-der-bis Deut 4:26; Deut 30:19; Deut 31:28; Isa 8:2; Jer 32:10

עוֹד H5750 Adv / 1cs (488×)

still, yet, again, more, besides; continuance or repetition of action or state — also 'another, else' and temporal 'while yet'

A versatile adverb built on the idea of ongoing continuance, 'od functions as the Hebrew workhorse for expressing persistence ('still, yet'), recurrence ('again, once more'), and addition ('besides, further'). With pronominal suffixes it forms compact temporal clauses — 'while he was still speaking' — that English requires a full subordinate clause to render. Its range from temporal duration to the existential assertion 'there is no other' (Deut 4:35) reveals how Hebrew collapses time and identity into a single particle of continuation.

1. again, more, further (288×) Repetitive or additive adverb: 'again, once more, anymore, further.' Spanish otra-vez/más, French de-nouveau/plus, and German abermals/ferner all cluster around recurrence and augmentation. Genesis 8:21 (the LORD said, 'I will never again curse the ground') and Genesis 9:11 (never again shall all flesh be cut off) show the particle in oath-bound negation of future repetition. CONTINUITY AND STILL en: again, anymore | es: aún, más, otra-vez | fr: de-nouveau, plus | de: abermals, ferner, mehr Gen 4:25; Gen 8:12; Gen 8:21; Gen 9:11

2. still, yet (continuative) (166×) Continuative adverb: 'still, yet,' indicating an ongoing state. Spanish todavía, French encore, and German noch uniformly convey persistence through time. Genesis 7:4 ('in yet seven days') and Genesis 29:7 ('it is still high day') illustrate temporal continuation, while the suffixed forms (odennu, 'while he was still') create compact simultaneity clauses as in Genesis 18:22. CONTINUITY AND STILL en: still, still-, yet | es: aún, más, todavía | fr: encore, encore- | de: lange, noch Gen 7:4; Gen 8:10; Gen 8:12; Gen 19:12; Gen 29:7

3. while still (temporal with בְּ) (18×) Temporal adverb with the preposition be: 'while still, while yet,' forming a temporal subordinate clause. German als-noch and French pendant-que-cependant confirm the subordinating function. Genesis 25:6 (while Abraham was still living) and Genesis 48:7 (while there was still some distance to Ephrath) anchor this prepositional construction in narrative time-setting. CONTINUITY AND STILL en: In-yet, in-yet, it | es: Cuando-todavía, Dentro-de, En-aún | fr: dans-encore, encore, pendant-que-cependant | de: als-noch, in-noch, noch Gen 25:6; Gen 40:13; Gen 40:19; Gen 48:7; Deut 31:27

4. another, other, else (13×) Substantival or adjectival use meaning 'another, other, else,' especially in theological declarations of divine uniqueness. Deuteronomy 4:35 ('there is no other besides him') and Isaiah 45:5 ('besides me there is no God') use 'od to negate the existence of any rival deity. Spanish otro, French un-autre, and German ein-anderer confirm the pronominal shift from temporal to existential scope. CONTINUITY AND STILL en: another, else, other | es: aún, más, otro | fr: else, encore, un-autre | de: ein-anderer, else, noch Deut 4:35; Deut 4:39; 1Kgs 8:60; Isa 45:5; Isa 45:6

5. since one's existence (with מִן) (2×) With the preposition min, expressing 'since one's existence, from of old.' Only two occurrences — Genesis 48:15 (the God who has been my shepherd since my existence) and Numbers 22:30 (the donkey Balaam had ridden since his youth). The suffixed forms me'odi and me'odekha compress an entire biographical span into a single prepositional phrase. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-ever-my, from-ever-you-were | es: desde-siempre, desde-siempre-de-ti | fr: de-ever-mon, de-ever-tu-étaient | de: seit-meinem-Dasein, von-je-du-waren Gen 48:15; Num 22:30

6. (1×) A rare specialized sense, possibly 'continually' or 'evermore,' attested once in Psalm 84:4 where those who dwell in God's house are 'still praising' him. English 'continually,' Spanish aún, and French encore suggest unbroken duration rather than repetition — a liturgical intensification of the basic continuative meaning. CONTINUITY AND STILL en: continually | es: aún | fr: encore | de: noch Ps 84:4

עוֹד H5751 Adv (1×)
still, yet (Aramaic temporal adverb)
An Aramaic adverb meaning 'still' or 'yet,' indicating ongoing action or state. In Daniel, it describes how Nebuchadnezzar's boastful words were still in his mouth when divine judgment fell. The adverb emphasizes the immediacy of God's response: even before the king finished speaking, the sentence was executed. The word is common in biblical Aramaic and rabbinic literature.

(1×) The immediacy marker 'still' in Daniel 4:31, where the text says, 'While the word was still in the king's mouth, a voice fell from heaven.' Nebuchadnezzar was boasting about his achievements when, mid-sentence, divine judgment struck. The Aramaic adverb emphasizes the overlap: his prideful words were not yet complete when God's response came, underscoring the swiftness of divine retribution. CONTINUITY AND STILL en: still | es: aún | fr: encore | de: noch Dan 4:31

עִדֵּד H5752 N-proper-ms (3×)
Personal name meaning 'restorer'; a prophet in Chronicles and father of the prophet Azariah Oded, meaning 'restorer' or 'one who restores,' is the name of two prophetic figures in Chronicles. One Oded was the father of Azariah the prophet who encouraged King Asa's reforms. The text of 2 Chronicles 15:8 is sometimes emended to read 'Azariah son of Oded the prophet' rather than 'Oded the prophet' alone, though manuscript evidence varies. A second Oded was a prophet in the northern kingdom who confronted the victorious Israelite army, demanding they release Judean captives taken in battle. The name suggests a theological affirmation that God restores His people, fitting for prophetic figures who called for covenant renewal.

(3×) Two individuals in Chronicles, both associated with prophetic ministry. The multilingual evidence shows standard transliteration practices, with some versions bracketing the Hebrew form. Both Odeds appear in contexts of religious reform and covenant fidelity: one inspiring Asa's reforms, the other demanding mercy for war captives. The Septuagint varies in its rendering, showing the textual complexity of these Chronicles genealogies. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Oded | es: Oded | fr: [עדד], [עודד] | de: [עדד], [עודד] 2Chr 15:1; 2Chr 15:8; 2Chr 28:9

עָוָה H5753a Conj-w | V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (7×)
To bend, twist, or pervert; in Nifal, to be bowed down, distorted, or morally crooked
A verb built on the image of twisting or bending what should be straight. In the Hifil and Piel stems, it describes active moral or physical distortion: Elihu confesses 'what was right I have perverted' (Job 33:27), Jeremiah accuses Israel of having 'twisted their way' (Jer 3:21), and Isaiah warns that God will 'distort the surface' of the earth (Isa 24:1). In the Nifal, it expresses the resultant state of being bent or warped: the psalmist cries 'I am bowed down' (Ps 38:6), and Proverbs warns against the person 'twisted of heart' (Prov 12:8). The Arabic cognate 'awā ('to bend, twist') confirms the core physical image underlying both moral and physical senses.

1. pervert, make crooked (Hifil/Piel causative) (4×) Causative stems (Hifil and Piel) denoting the active perversion, distortion, or twisting of what is straight, whether paths, surfaces, or moral standards. In Job 33:27 Elihu confesses 'the right I have perverted' (he'evêtî); in Jer 3:21 Israel 'twisted their way' (he'evû); Isa 24:1 uses the Piel to describe God distorting the earth's surface; Lam 3:9 says 'my paths he has made crooked.' Spanish torcieron/torci ('twisted'), Hindi tedha kiya ('made crooked') consistently render the active, causative distortion. CROOKED PERVERTED
en: He-made-crooked, I-have-perverted, it | es: ha-torcido, torci, torcieron | fr: [העוו], [ועוה], [עוה] | de: [העוו], [העויתי], [ועוה] Job 33:27; Isa 24:1; Jer 3:21; Lam 3:9

2. be bent over, twisted (Nifal passive/stative) (3×) Nifal (passive/stative) forms expressing the state of being bent over, bowed down, or morally twisted. In Ps 38:6 the psalmist laments 'I am bent over, utterly bowed down' (na'avêtî, parallel to shaḥ, 'bowed'); Prov 12:8 warns that one 'na'aveh lev' (twisted of heart) will be despised; Isa 21:3 describes being so convulsed with anguish as to be 'bent over.' Spanish estoy encorvado ('I am hunched'), German ich bin gebeugt ('I am bowed'), and French être perverti ('to be perverted') all reflect the passive, resultative state rather than active agency. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: I-am-bent-over, but-he-who-is-twisted-of | es: Estoy-encorvado, fui-torcido, y-perverso-de | fr: [נעויתי], et-ונעוה, être-perverti | de: [ונעוה], [נעויתי], ich-bin-gebeugt Ps 38:6; Prov 12:8; Isa 21:3

עָוָה H5753b V-Hifil-Perf-1cs (10×)
To commit iniquity, act perversely, do wrong; denominative from 'avon (iniquity), spanning Qal, Hifil, and Nifal stems.
Derived from the noun 'avon (iniquity/guilt), this verb appears in confessional and judicial contexts where moral failure is being acknowledged or described. Solomon's great prayer includes it in a triad with 'sinned' and 'acted wickedly' (1 Kgs 8:47), a formula echoed in Daniel 9:5 and Psalm 106:6. David uses the Hifil after the census disaster – 'I have done very wickedly' (2 Sam 24:17) – while the sole Nifal participle in 1 Samuel 20:30 describes a state of perversion. Spanish consistently renders it with 'iniquidad' and 'perversamente,' preserving the moral weight.

1. act perversely (Hifil) (7×) The Hifil factitive sense of deliberately acting perversely or committing iniquity, the most frequent form. The causative stem conveys willful moral distortion – choosing to twist what is right. Found in David's confession after the census (2 Sam 24:17), God's conditional warning about Solomon's heir (2 Sam 7:14), David's plea to Shimei (2 Sam 19:19), and the great confessional formulas of 1 Kgs 8:47 (= 2 Chr 6:37) and Ps 106:6. Spanish 'hice perversamente' and 'cometimos iniquidad' faithfully render the deliberate moral agency. WICKEDNESS INIQUITY
en: I-have-done-wrong, and-we-acted-perversely, did-wrong | es: cometimos-iniquidad, cuando-haga-mal, hice-perversamente | fr: [העוה], [העוינו], dans-son-faisant-tort | de: [העוה], [העוינו], ich-habe-getan-Unrecht 2Sam 7:14; 2Sam 19:19; 2Sam 24:17; 1Kgs 8:47; 2Chr 6:37

2. commit iniquity (Qal) (2×) The Qal basic sense of doing wrong or committing an offense. Esther 1:16 applies it to Queen Vashti's refusal – 'she has wronged' the king and princes – while Daniel 9:5 places it in the classic penitential triad alongside 'sinned' and 'acted wickedly.' Spanish 'ofendio' for Vashti's case captures the interpersonal offense, while 'cometimos iniquidad' in Daniel preserves the confessional weight. WICKEDNESS INIQUITY
en: and-done-iniquity, wronged | es: ofendió, y-cometimos-iniquidad | fr: [עותה], et-pervertir | de: [ועוינו], [עותה] Esth 1:16; Dan 9:5

3. be perverted (Nifal) (1×) The Nifal participial sense of being in a state of perversion or moral crookedness. Attested solely in Saul's bitter outburst against Jonathan – 'son of a perverse, rebellious woman' (1 Sam 20:30). French and Spanish both render 'perverse,' reflecting a settled condition of moral distortion rather than a discrete act of wrongdoing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: perverse | es: perversa-de | fr: perverse | de: perverse 1Sam 20:30

עַוָּה H5754 N-fs (3×)
Distortion, ruin; twisted destruction, often triple-repeated for emphasis
This noun denotes distortion and ruin, something twisted out of its proper shape. The word appears famously in Ezekiel 21:27 in a striking triple repetition: 'A ruin, ruin, ruin I will make it.' The threefold hammering of the word creates an incantatory effect, emphasizing the totality of the coming destruction. The root verb means to twist or pervert, and the noun captures the result: something warped beyond recognition, utterly ruined. Ezekiel uses it to describe the coming overthrow of Jerusalem and its monarchy, a destruction so complete it requires three declarations to convey its finality.

(3×) All three occurrences are the same triple repetition in Ezekiel 21:27, an emphatic prophetic declaration of Jerusalem's coming ruin. The multilingual evidence shows translators handling this repetition in different ways—some preserving all three instances, others condensing. Spanish maintains the triple 'ruina,' capturing the Hebrew's rhetorical force. The textual reference to the Piel verb form of the root in Isaiah 24:1 shows the semantic connection: the verb 'to twist/pervert' produces the noun 'twisting/distortion,' hence 'ruin.' DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: ruin | es: Ruina, ruina | fr: [עוה] | de: [עוה] Ezek 21:27

עַוָּה H5755 Conj-w (4×)

Ivvah (also Avva); a city conquered by the Assyrians, located in northern Syria

Ivvah was a city conquered by the Assyrian empire, mentioned in Assyrian boasts recorded in 2 Kings and Isaiah. The Rabshakeh taunts Hezekiah by listing cities whose gods could not save them, including Ivvah (2 Kings 18:34, 19:13//Isaiah 37:13). 2 Kings 17:24 mentions people from Avva being resettled in Samaria. The site is likely in northern Syria, possibly modern ᶜImm between Antioch and Aleppo, though identifications vary.

(4×) A geographic proper name designating a city conquered by Assyria. The name appears in Assyrian propaganda speeches (2 Kings 18:34, 19:13//Isaiah 37:13) and in the account of foreign resettlement in Samaria (2 Kings 17:24, where the form is Avva). Transliterations vary slightly: Ivvah/Iva/Ivá/Avva, with some bracketing [ועוה]. Greek renderings include Αια(ν), Ανα, Ουδου. The site is uncertain but likely in northern Syria. The city serves rhetorically as evidence of Assyrian invincibility and divine impotence of local gods. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Ivvah, and-from-Avva | es: e-Iva?, e-Ivá, y-de-Ava | fr: [ועוה], et-Ivvah, et-de-Avva | de: [ועוה], und-Ivvah, und-von-Avva 2Kgs 17:24; 2Kgs 18:34; 2Kgs 19:13; Isa 37:13

עוז H5756 V-Hifil-Imp-ms (4×)

to take refuge, seek safety, flee for protection; to bring into safety

This verb describes seeking refuge or bringing others to safety in times of danger. The Qal infinitive appears in Isaiah 30:2, condemning those who "take refuge in Pharaoh's protection." The Hiphil imperative commands flight to safety: "Flee!" (Jeremiah 4:6, 6:1), "Take refuge!" (Isaiah 10:31), or "Bring to safety!" (Exodus 9:19, warning to shelter livestock from hail). The root is cognate with Arabic ʿ (take refuge, seek protection) and emphasizes protective movement away from danger.

(4×) To seek or provide refuge and safety. The Qal (Isaiah 30:2) means "take refuge," while the Hiphil means "bring to safety" (Exodus 9:19) or "flee/take refuge" (Isaiah 10:31, Jeremiah 4:6, 6:1). Multilingual glosses render as "flee/take refuge/bring to safety" (refugiar, apporter à sécurité, bringen zu Sicherheit). Several translations bracket forms like [העזו] and [העיזו]. The verb is fundamentally about protective movement in contexts of threat—hail, invasion, divine judgment—whether self-initiated (Qal) or commanded/caused (Hiphil). It overlaps semantically with חסה (take refuge). REFUGE AND SHELTER

en: bring-to-safety, flee, take-refuge | es: haz-refugiar, se-refugian, ¡Huid | fr: [העזו], [העיזו], apporter-à-safety | de: [העזו], [העיזו], bringen-zu-safety Exod 9:19; Isa 10:31; Jer 4:6; Jer 6:1

עַוִּי H5757 Conj-w (2×)

Avvim, Avvites (gentlic/ethnic designation); people group in Canaan/Syria

This gentlic adjective (used as a substantive) designates an ethnic group, the Avvites. Joshua 13:3 lists them among Canaanite peoples in Philistine territory whom Israel did not dispossess. 2 Kings 17:31 identifies Avvites among the foreign groups resettled in Samaria by Assyria, who brought their gods (Nibhaz and Tartak) with them. The term marks a distinct people group, though their exact identity and origins remain somewhat obscure. They represent the incomplete conquest and later syncretistic threats to Israel's covenant purity.

(2×) A gentlic designation for the Avvites, a people group mentioned in conquest (Joshua 13:3) and Assyrian resettlement contexts (2 Kings 17:31). Both occurrences include the definite article ('the Avvites'), identifying them as a recognized ethnic entity. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve the ethnic name with appropriate articles. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-the-Avvim, and-the-Avvite | es: Y-los-aveos, y-los-aveos | fr: et-le-Avvim, et-le-Avvite | de: und-der-Avvim, und-der-Avvite Josh 13:3; 2Kgs 17:31

עֲוָיָה H5758 Conj-w / N-fpc / 2ms (1×)

iniquities (Aramaic plural with suffix)

An Aramaic plural noun meaning iniquities or sins, appearing with a pronominal suffix in Daniel. The word occurs in Daniel's interpretation when he urges Nebuchadnezzar to 'break off your iniquities by righteousness.' The Aramaic form corresponds to the Hebrew root for 'perversity' or 'iniquity,' referring to moral crookedness and rebellion against God.

(1×) Nebuchadnezzar's iniquities in Daniel 4:27, where Daniel counsels the king: 'Break off your sins by righteousness, and your iniquities by showing mercy to the oppressed.' The Aramaic plural with suffix ('your iniquities') parallels 'your sins' in the previous clause, emphasizing the accumulated moral guilt that demands repentance. Daniel offers a path to avert judgment through justice and compassion. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS

en: and-your-iniquities | es: y-tus-iniquidades | fr: et-morceau | de: [ועויתך] Dan 4:27

עֲוִיל H5759 N-mpc / 3mp (2×)

young boys, little children (masculine plural)

This masculine plural noun refers to young boys or small children, likely pre-adolescent. Both occurrences are in Job, where social relationships have inverted painfully. Job 19:18 laments that 'even young children despise me,' marking his social humiliation. Job 21:11 describes the prosperity of the wicked, whose 'little ones' go forth dancing. The word emphasizes youth and vulnerability, making the contexts more poignant—either mocking an outcast elder or symbolizing blessing and joy in family life.

(2×) Young boys or small children, used in Job to depict social reversal (19:18) and familial blessing (21:11). Job 19:18 shows children mocking the sufferer—an inversion of respect. Job 21:11 portrays the wicked's children playing freely—a sign of prosperity. The term emphasizes childhood and the social meanings attached to children's treatment of adults. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: their-little-ones, young-children | es: a-sus-niños, los-niños | fr: leur-עוילים-eux, עוילים | de: [עוילים], [עוילים] Job 19:18; Job 21:11

עָוִיל H5760 N-ms (1×)

unjust one, wicked person (as noun)

A masculine noun denoting an unjust or wicked person, appearing in Job's complaint. Job laments that God has handed him over to 'the unjust' or 'the wicked one.' The term emphasizes moral perversity and injustice rather than general sinfulness. It may refer to specific enemies or use the singular collectively for the wicked as a class.

(1×) The unjust person or wicked one to whom Job feels delivered in Job 16:11: 'God has delivered me to the unjust and cast me into the hands of the wicked.' The noun emphasizes moral crookedness and injustice—Job perceives himself as handed over to those who pervert righteousness. The term may be singular representing a class or refer to specific adversaries Job sees as agents of his suffering. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4333 WITH 3 SENSES

en: the-unjust | es: perverso | fr: עויל | de: [עויל] Job 16:11

עַוִּים H5761 Conj-w (2×)
Avvim (place and people name); coastal people and a Benjamite city
This name appears in two distinct contexts. Deuteronomy 2:23 describes the Avvim as a people living in villages near Gaza, destroyed by the Caphtorim (Philistines) who displaced them—a note on pre-Israelite population changes. Joshua 18:23 lists Avvim as a city in Benjamin's tribal allotment, possibly the same ethnic group settled as a town or a different location with similar name. The dual usage (ethnic and geographic) reflects the fluidity of ancient Near Eastern peoples and places.

(2×) A name with both ethnic and geographic reference: (1) a people group near the Mediterranean coast displaced by Philistines (Deuteronomy 2:23), and (2) a Benjamite city (Joshua 18:23). Both occurrences use the definite article ('the Avvim'). The relationship between the coastal people and the Benjamite town is uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-ha-Avvim, and-the-Avvim | es: y-Avim, y-los-aveos | fr: et-ha-Avvim, et-le-Avvim | de: und-der-Avvim, und-ha-Avvim Deut 2:23; Josh 18:23

עֲוִית H5762 N-proper-fs (3×)
Avith; a city in Edom, capital of King Hadad
Avith was a city in Edom that served as the royal seat of Hadad, one of the early Edomite kings listed in Genesis 36. The city appears in the genealogical record of Edomite rulers who reigned 'before any king reigned over the Israelites,' part of the Table of Nations material. The location of Avith is unknown today, lost among the shifting settlements of ancient Edom. The parallel passage in Chronicles preserves a variant spelling (Ketiv: Ayoth), showing textual variation in the transmission of this obscure place name. The Septuagint's varied transliterations reflect ancient uncertainty about the precise vocalization.

(3×) Three occurrences, all referring to this Edomite royal city. Genesis 36 provides the primary reference, with 1 Chronicles preserving it in parallel with textual variation between Ketiv and Qere readings. The multilingual evidence shows the challenges of rendering an obscure place name: some versions transliterate, others show textual uncertainty in brackets. The city serves in Scripture's genealogical framework to establish Edom's monarchical history before Israel's. PERSONAL NAMES
en: (Avith), Avith, [K: Ayoth] | es: (Avit), Avit, [Avit] | fr: Avith, [עוית], [עיות] | de: [עוית], [עיות], war-Awit Gen 36:35; 1Chr 1:46

עול H5763 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fp (5×)
to give suck, nurse; of ewes, cows, or figuratively of God tenderly leading his people
This verb describes the act of suckling or nursing young, applied to livestock — cows (1 Sam 6:7, 10) and ewes (Ps 78:71) — and extended figuratively to God's tender care for his people. In Isaiah 40:11 the nursing ewes become a metaphor for returning exiles whom the Lord gently leads. Genesis 33:13 uses it of Jacob's concern for his nursing flocks. The Arabic cognate ghala confirms the core meaning of giving suck while pregnant.

(5×) To give suck, to nurse young — used of cows bearing the ark (1 Sam 6:7, 10) and ewes tended by David (Ps 78:71). French 'allaitant/allaiter' and Spanish 'lactando/las que crían' both capture the nursing sense precisely. In Genesis 33:13 Jacob worries that overdriving the nursing animals will kill them. Isaiah 40:11 extends the image figuratively: God will gently lead those that give suck, a tender portrait of divine care for vulnerable exiles. WET-NURSE CAREGIVER
en: nursing, nursing-ewes | es: a-las-que-crían, lactando, ovejas-que-crían | fr: [עלות], allaitant, allaiter | de: [עלות], nursing, nursing-ewes Gen 33:13; 1Sam 6:7; 1Sam 6:10; Ps 78:71; Isa 40:11

עוֹל H5764 Conj-w / Prep (3×)
Suckling child, nursing infant; one still at the breast
This noun denotes a nursing infant, a child still dependent on mother's milk. Isaiah 49:15 uses it in a tender rhetorical question: 'Can a woman forget her nursing child?' The parallel term 'son of her womb' reinforces the intimacy of the relationship. In Isaiah 65:20, it appears in the phrase 'a suckling of days,' meaning an infant just a few days old, part of a vision where even such young children will live long lives in the restored creation. Job 24:9 speaks darkly of the wicked snatching the nursing child from the breast, an image of violent exploitation and social breakdown.

(3×) Three occurrences depicting the youngest, most vulnerable human life. Isaiah twice uses the image positively—maternal love and eschatological blessing—while Job uses it to indict the wicked. The multilingual evidence shows some confusion in the glossing: German and French sometimes show 'and-on' or prepositional forms, suggesting the entry may have captured instances where the preposition 'al' (על) was part of the phrase. Spanish and English more consistently render the nursing child imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: an-infant-of, and-on, her-nursing-child | es: a-su-niño-de-pecho, niño, y-sobre- | fr: [עול], [עולה], et-ועל | de: [עול], [עולה], und-ueber Job 24:9; Isa 49:15; Isa 65:20

עָוַל H5765 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (2×)
to act unjustly, to deal wrongfully (Piel intensive)
This verb in the Piel (intensive) stem means to act with injustice or perversity—to deal wrongfully, oppressively. Isaiah 26:10 warns that even when the wicked receive favor, 'he acts unjustly' and does not learn righteousness. Psalm 71:4 prays for deliverance from 'the hand of the unjust,' parallel to 'the wicked' and 'the ruthless.' The Piel formation intensifies the moral failure, emphasizing willful, persistent wrongdoing rather than accidental error.

(2×) To act unjustly or deal wrongfully (Piel stem). Isaiah 26:10 describes the wicked who persist in injustice despite divine favor, while Psalm 71:4 names 'the unjust one' as the psalmist's oppressor (parallel to 'wicked' and 'ruthless'). The Piel intensifies deliberate moral perversity. Cross-linguistic glosses recognize both verbal ('acts unjustly') and nominal ('the unjust') uses. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4333 WITH 3 SENSES
en: he-deals-unjustly, the-unjust | es: actúa-perversamente, el-que-actúa-perversamente | fr: [יעול], de-iniquité | de: [יעול], der-Og Ps 71:4; Isa 26:10

עָוֶל H5766a N-fs (22×)
Injustice, unrighteousness; moral wrong or deviation from what is fair, often opposed to tzedaqah (righteousness).
The standard Hebrew noun for injustice as a moral quality, 'avel stands as the direct opposite of tzedaqah (righteousness). Leviticus 19 uses it twice in laws against crooked judgment and false measures (vv. 15, 35), grounding it in the concrete sphere of courts and commerce. Ezekiel employs it more than any other biblical author, repeatedly warning that the righteous person who turns to 'avel will die (3:20; 18:24, 26; 33:13, 15, 18). Deuteronomy 32:4 makes the theological foundation explicit: God has no 'avel in Him — faithfulness and justice are His nature. Spanish 'injusticia' and German 'Unrecht' mirror the word's core meaning with precision.

1. injustice, unrighteousness (21×) The abstract moral quality of injustice or unrighteousness — deviation from what is right, fair, and just. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (21 of 22 occurrences) appears in legal contexts like Lev 19:15 ('do no injustice in judgment') and Lev 19:35 ('do no injustice in measurement'), in Ezekiel's repeated warnings about righteous persons turning to do 'avel (3:20; 18:24, 26; 33:13–18), and in the confession of God's perfect justice: 'there is no 'avel' in Him (Deut 32:4; Job 34:10). The opposition to tzedaqah and parallelism with terms like tô'evah (abomination) reinforce its character as a settled moral disposition rather than a single act. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS

en: and-in-his-injustice, by-unrighteousness-of-, from-iniquity | es: de-injusticia, iniquidad, injusticia | fr: de-iniquité, et-iniquité, iniquité | de: Missetat, Unrecht, [מעול] Lev 19:15; Lev 19:35; Deut 25:16; Deut 32:4; Job 34:10

2. wickedness, iniquitous deed (1×) A single occurrence in Ps 7:3 where the context suggests a concrete act of wickedness or iniquitous deed rather than the abstract quality. The psalmist protests: 'if there is 'avel in my hands' — meaning a specific wrongful act he can be accused of. Multilingual glosses shift noticeably here: Spanish 'maldad' (wickedness/evil), German 'Schuld' (guilt/fault), and French 'injustice' each color the word toward the tangible and personal rather than the systemic, reflecting the forensic self-defense context of this individual lament psalm. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS

en: iniquity | es: maldad | fr: injustice | de: Schuld Ps 7:3

עַוְלָה H5766b N-fs (32×)

Injustice, unrighteousness, or moral perversity; wrongdoing that violates what is right, whether in social dealings or in character.

A feminine noun capturing the concept of crookedness in human conduct — what deviates from the straight path of justice. In most occurrences it denotes relational injustice: the violation of fairness in legal, social, or covenantal settings, as when Zephaniah declares that God 'does no injustice' (Zeph 3:5) or Job insists there is 'no wickedness on my tongue' (Job 6:30). A smaller cluster emphasizes moral perversity or depravity of character, as in the 'sons of wickedness' who oppress God's people (2 Sam 7:10; Ps 89:22). Spanish translations helpfully distinguish 'iniquidad' for the broader legal sense from 'maldad' and 'perversidad' for the deeper moral corruption.

1. injustice, unrighteousness (28×) Wrongdoing understood as a violation of justice or righteousness in legal, social, or covenantal contexts. This dominant sense (28 occurrences) appears in declarations like 'no injustice is in him' (Ps 92:15) and in exhortations to put away wrongdoing (Job 11:14; 2 Chr 19:7). French 'injustice' and Spanish 'iniquidad' converge on the relational, judicial dimension — the failure to deal fairly with others or before God. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS

en: injustice, injustices, wickedness | es: con-iniquidad, con-iniquidad!, iniquidad | fr: [עולה], iniquité, injustice | de: Bosheit, Brandopfer, [עולה] 2Chr 19:7; Job 5:16; Job 6:29; Job 6:30; Job 11:14

2. wickedness, moral perversity (4×) Moral evil or depravity emphasizing the twisted character of the wrongdoer rather than a specific act of unfairness. The phrase 'sons of wickedness' (2 Sam 3:34; 7:10; 1 Chr 17:9; Ps 89:22) points to people defined by their corrupt nature. Spanish shifts to 'maldad' and 'perversidad,' Hindi to 'दुष्टता,' revealing a semantic nuance closer to innate moral crookedness than to situational injustice. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: wickedness | es: iniquidad, maldad, perversidad | fr: [עולה], injustice, méchanceté | de: Bosheit, [עולה] 2Sam 3:34; 2Sam 7:10; 1Chr 17:9; Ps 89:22

עָוֶל H5767 N-ms (5×)

unjust person, unrighteous one; an oppressor who perverts justice

A substantive adjective denoting a person characterized by injustice and moral perversion, often parallel to rasha ('wicked'). In Job it describes the fate awaiting the unrighteous (18:21; 27:7; 31:3) and the oppressor whose jaw Job broke (29:17). Zephaniah 3:5 contrasts God, who does no injustice, with the shameless unjust ruler. The word carries a strong ethical charge of deliberate violation of right order.

(5×) An unjust or unrighteous person, especially an oppressive figure who perverts justice — frequently parallel to rasha in Job (27:7; 31:3). French renders it variously as 'méchant' and 'pervers,' while Spanish uses both 'injusto' and 'inicuo,' reflecting the semantic range from general wickedness to specific injustice. In Zephaniah 3:5 the term characterizes a ruler who knows no shame, set against God's unfailing righteousness each morning. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4333 WITH 3 SENSES

en: as-unjust, for-the-unjust, the-unjust | es: como-injusto, el-injusto, inicuo | fr: comme-méchant, méchant, pervers | de: [כעול], [לעול], [עול] Job 18:21; Job 27:7; Job 29:17; Job 31:3; Zeph 3:5

עוֹלֵל H5768 N-mpc / 3mp (20×)

An infant or very young child, often appearing in contexts of vulnerability, warfare, and collective judgment.

Refers to the youngest and most vulnerable members of a community — nursing infants and small children. This word appears frequently in some of Scripture's most harrowing passages: the massacre at Nob (1 Sam 22:19), Elisha's prophecy of Hazael's brutality (2 Kgs 8:12), and the searing cry of Psalm 137:9. Paired often with 'nursing infant' (yoneq), it intensifies the totality of destruction or suffering. Yet it also appears in contexts of divine care — 'from the mouths of infants you have established strength' (Ps 8:2). Lamentations uses it repeatedly to depict the agony of Jerusalem's siege.

infant, young child (20×) A very young child or infant, designating babies and small children who are utterly dependent and vulnerable. Frequently paired with yoneq ('nursing infant') in contexts of total warfare and collective judgment — the slaughter at Nob (1 Sam 22:19), Hazael's atrocities (2 Kgs 8:12), the fall of Samaria (Hos 14:1), Nineveh's destruction (Nah 3:10), and the raw grief of Psalm 137:9. Also used positively of divine attention to the weak (Ps 8:2) and poignantly in Lamentations of starving children in besieged Jerusalem (Lam 2:11, 19; 4:4). English renders it 'infant' or 'child,' Spanish 'niños,' German 'Kind.' CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: and-their-infants, child, children | es: Y-sus-niños, a-sus-niños, como-niños | fr: comme-כעללים, de-enfant, de-infant | de: Kind, [כעללים], [עולל] 1Sam 15:3; 1Sam 22:19; 2Kgs 8:12; Job 3:16; Ps 8:2

עוֹלָם H5769 N-mp (438×)

Long duration; eternity, forever; antiquity, ancient times; everlasting (attributive); age(s) or era(s).

Olam is one of the most theologically consequential nouns in the Hebrew Bible, yet its meaning is not simply 'eternity' in the philosophical sense. At its core, olam points to duration that stretches beyond ordinary sight — whether forward into an unlimited future ('forever'), backward into the mists of antiquity ('of old'), or qualitatively as a permanent attribute of covenants, statutes, and divine promises. The refrain le'olam chasdo ('his steadfast love endures forever') rings through Psalm 136 twenty-six times, yet the same word describes the 'ancient paths' of Jeremiah 6:16 and the 'men of old' in Genesis 6:4. Languages handle this range very differently: Arabic splits it between al-abad (prospective eternity) and al-qidam (antiquity), Korean between yeongwonhi (forever) and yennal (olden days), while Swahili milele covers the timeless dimension and zamani covers the ancient past. The word's genius is its refusal to collapse time into a single direction.

1. forever, to eternity (280×) Prospective perpetuity: 'forever,' 'to eternity,' 'for all time.' The largest sense at 280 occurrences, most often in the prepositional phrase le'olam ('to/for eternity'). This is the olam of God's everlasting reign (Exod 15:18), of Israel's perpetual relationship with Yahweh (Exod 3:15), and of the solemn oath 'you are a priest forever' (Ps 110:4). Arabic ila al-abad, Spanish para siempre, Korean yeongwonhi, and Swahili milele all converge on unlimited future duration here, though none captures the Hebrew word's characteristic ambiguity about whether 'forever' means literally infinite or simply 'as far as the eye can see.' ETERNITY AND AGES

en: forever | es: para-perpetuidad, para-siempre | fr: pour-toujours, à-jamais, éternité | de: auf-ewig, ewig, fuer-immer Gen 3:22; Gen 6:3; Exod 3:15; Exod 15:18; Exod 19:9

2. everlasting (of divine covenants and ordinances) (56×) Split from sense 122799. Criteria: Modifying berit (covenant), chuqqah (statute), achuzzah (possession) in contexts of God's binding promises to his people; theologically loaded permanence en: everlasting, forever, of-forever | es: eternidad, eterno, perpetuidad | fr: à-

jamais, éternité | de: Besitz, Ewigkeit, auf-ewig Gen 9:16; Gen 17:7; Gen 17:8; Gen 17:13; Gen 17:19

3. perpetual, enduring (general attributive) (42×) Split from sense 122799. Criteria: General attributive use denoting long duration or permanence without covenant-theological weight; may modify non-theological nouns en: burnings, eternity, everlasting | es: de-eternidad, eterna, eternidad | fr: éternité | de: Ewigkeit Gen 49:26; Deut 33:15; Deut 33:27; Josh 8:28; Job 41:4

4. ancient times, of old (35×) Bounded past antiquity: 'ancient times,' 'of old,' 'long ago.' Found 35 times, referring not to infinite past eternity but to historical ancientness within human memory or national tradition. The 'days of old' (yemei olam, Isa 63:9; Amos 9:11), 'ancient paths' (netivot olam, Jer 6:16), 'ancient gates' (pitchei olam, Ps 24:7), and the 'men of old' (anshei olam, Gen 6:4) all point to a remote but bounded past. Arabic al-qidami ('of antiquity') and Korean yennal ('olden times') select dedicated antiquity vocabulary distinct from their eternity words, confirming a real sense boundary. Micah 5:1 uses olam for the Messiah's origins 'from of old,' hovering suggestively between finite antiquity and something deeper. ETERNITY AND AGES
en: ancient-times, antiquity, eternity | es: antigua, antiguas, antiguo | fr: de-éternité, éternité | de: Ewigkeit, von-Ewigkeit Gen 6:4; Josh 24:2; 1Sam 27:8; Job 22:15; Ps 119:52

5. from everlasting (past eternity) (17×) Past-directed eternity: 'from everlasting,' pre-eternity. Found 17 times with the preposition min ('from'), typically describing God's eternal self-existence reaching back without beginning. The doxological formula 'from everlasting to everlasting' (min ha'olam ve'ad ha'olam, 1 Chr 16:36; Ps 90:2) frames God's being as unbounded in both temporal directions. Arabic min al-azal specifically selects pre-eternity vocabulary, and Swahili tangu milele ('since forever') captures the backward-looking infinite duration. Abraham plants a tamarisk at Beersheba and calls on the name of Yahweh el olam, 'the Everlasting God' (Gen 21:33), one of the most ancient divine epithets in Scripture. ETERNITY AND AGES
en: Everlasting, and-from-everlasting, from-everlasting | es: Olam, desde-eternidad, desde-la-eternidad | fr: de-éternité, et-de-éternité, le-éternité | de: Ewigkeit, der-Ewigkeit, und-von-Ewigkeit Gen 21:33; 1Chr 16:36; 1Chr 17:14; 1Chr 29:10

6. age(s), long era(s) (8×) Discrete ages, eras, or long periods — a bounded but extended temporal span, often in the plural olamim. Found 8 times, these occurrences foreground the idea of successive generations or epochs rather than undifferentiated eternity. Deut 32:7 exhorts 'remember the days of old, consider the years of generation and generation (shenot dor vador)' — where olam parallels 'generations' rather than 'eternity.' Isa 26:4 calls God 'the Rock of Ages' (tsur olamim), and Ps 145:13 declares his kingdom endures 'throughout all ages' (le-khol-olamim). Arabic ad-duhur ('epochs') and Korean sedaedeul ('generations') both select era-based vocabulary, while Swahili vizazi ('generations') confirms the periodized, countable quality of this usage. ETERNITY AND AGES
en: ages, ages-of, eternity | es: antigüedad, en-los-siglos, eternidades | fr: à-éternité, éternité | de: Ewigkeit, eternity Deut 32:7; Ps 77:5; Ps 145:13; Eccl 1:10; Isa 26:4

H5769b N-proper-ms (1×)
Olam (personal name, possibly 'eternity' or 'youth')
A personal name appearing among those who married foreign wives during the post-exilic period. Olam is listed in Ezra 10 among the Israelites who had intermarried and were called to separate. The name is identical to the common word meaning 'eternity' or 'long duration,' though here it functions as a personal designation. The context is the religious reform under Ezra.

(1×) Olam, one of the Israelites who had married foreign women according to Ezra 10:2 (following the context). The name, identical to the word for 'eternity' or 'everlasting,' was apparently used as a personal name in the post-exilic community. He was among those identified during Ezra's reform requiring separation from foreign wives to preserve covenant purity. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY
en: [Olam] | es: [Olam] | fr: [עוֹלָם] | de: [[עוֹלָם]] Ezra 10:2

עִין H5770 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)
eye (enviously), look at with jealousy
A denominative verb from 'eye,' meaning to look at someone with envy or suspicion. The word appears in 1 Samuel describing Saul's attitude toward David after the women's song praising David's victories. 'Saul eyed David from that day forward'—a continuous, jealous watching. The verb captures the idea of keeping a suspicious, envious eye on someone perceived as a rival.

(1×) Saul's jealous watching of David in 1 Samuel 18:9, after hearing the women sing, 'Saul has slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands.' The text says Saul 'eyed David from that day onward'—the denominative verb pictures the king's suspicious, envious gaze fixed on his rival. The Qere/Ketiv variation shows textual uncertainty, but all traditions preserve the sense of hostile scrutiny driven by jealousy. GAZING AND LOOKING en: (eyeing) | es: mirando-con-recelo | fr: (eyeing) 1Sam 18:9

עָוֹן H5771 N-csc / 1cp (233×)
Iniquity, sin, wrongdoing; guilt, liability for sin; punishment or consequence of sin.
The Hebrew noun avon captures the entire lifecycle of sin: the crooked act itself, the guilt that clings to the offender, and the punishment that follows. When Cain cries 'my avon is greater than I can bear' (Gen 4:13), the word deliberately fuses all three meanings — his crime, his guilt, and his sentence all compressed into a single term. Arabic إثم (ithm) and Swahili uovu cover the wrongdoing sense, while Korean 벌 (beol) and Swahili adhabu surface only for the punishment sense, confirming that these are genuinely distinct semantic layers. The theological weight is immense: avon is what the servant bears vicariously in Isaiah 53:6 and what God 'passes over' in the great confession of Micah 7:18.

1. iniquity, sin, wrongdoing (222×) The wrongful act itself: moral perversity, crookedness, transgression against God's standard. By far the dominant sense (222 occurrences), spanning every genre from Torah to Wisdom. In Exod 20:5 God 'visits the avon of the fathers upon the children,' and in Isa 53:6 the LORD 'laid on him the avon of us all.' Arabic إثم, Spanish 'iniquidad,' and German 'Missetat/Schuld' converge here. The root idea is something bent or twisted away from the straight path. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS en: iniquity-of, the-iniquity-of, when-iniquity-of | es: iniquidad-de, iniquidad-de-, la-iniquidad-de | fr: iniquité, iniquité-de, le-iniquité-de | de: Missetat-von, Schuld, Schuld- Gen 15:16; Gen 44:16; Exod 20:5; Exod 28:38; Exod 28:43

2. punishment, consequence of sin (5×) The punishment or penalty that falls upon the sinner as a consequence of avon. Cain's cry in Gen 4:13 — 'my avon is too great to bear' — is classically read as 'my punishment is too great,' and the context of 2 Kgs 7:9 ('avon will find us') points to retribution rather than the act itself. Korean 벌, Swahili adhabu ('punishment'), and Spanish castigo mark this sense distinctly from the wrongdoing itself. LOCUSTS AND SWARMS
en: brings-the-punishments-of, iniquity-my, punishment | es: castigo, de-las-iniquidades, iniquidad | fr: iniquité, iniquité-mon, punishment | de: Schuld, Schuld-mein, meine-Schuld Gen 4:13; 1Sam 20:1; 1Sam 28:10; 2Kgs 7:9; Job 19:29

3. guilt, liability for sin (4×) The state of objective guilt or culpability before God — the liability that attaches to the sinner. In 2 Sam 14:9 the wise woman says 'let the avon be on me and on my father's house,' meaning the guilt or legal liability, not the act or the punishment. Swahili hatia ('guilt'), French culpabilité, and contexts of guilt-transfer (1 Sam 25:24; 2 Sam 14:32) support this as a distinct semantic layer. GUILT OFFERINGS
en: guilt, the-guilt, their-guilt | es: iniquidad, la-iniquidad, su-culpa | fr: culpabilité, le-culpabilité, leur-iniquité | de: der-guilt, guilt, ihr-Schuld 1Sam 25:24; 2Sam 14:9; 2Sam 14:32; Ps 69:27

4. (1×) A text-critical question mark: in 1 Sam 18:9 the Masoretic text has Saul 'eyeing' (עוֹן) David, but this is almost certainly a different root (עִין, 'to eye') rather than avon ('iniquity'). English glosses '[eyeing]' and Spanish 'mirando con recelo' confirm the semantic mismatch. This occurrence is best treated as a homographic collision rather than a true sense of avon. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS en: [eyeing] | es: mirando-con-recelo | fr: [eyeing] | de: [eyeing] 1Sam 18:9

5. (1×) Another text-critical case: in 2 Sam 16:12, many manuscripts read be'onyi ('my affliction') from a different root (עָנָה/עָנִי), not avon. The Qere and several ancient versions support 'affliction' rather than 'iniquity' here. English '[my affliction]' and Spanish '[aflicción mía]' reflect this reading. Like sense 4, this is a scribal or homographic issue rather than a genuine semantic extension of avon. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS en: [my-affliction] | es: [aflicción-mía] | fr: [my-affliction] | de: [my-affliction] 2Sam 16:12

עֹנָה H5772 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3fs (1×)

marital rights, conjugal duty (especially the wife's right to cohabitation within marriage)

This term refers to the marital rights owed within the covenant of marriage, particularly the physical intimacy that is part of the marriage bond. The Hebrew root likely connects to ideas of response or correspondence between husband and wife. In Exodus 21, it appears in a list of three basic rights a wife retains even if her husband takes an additional wife: food, clothing, and marital relations. The term underscores that physical intimacy is not merely optional but a covenant obligation, protecting the dignity and rights of the wife within the marriage relationship.

(1×) Appears in Exodus 21:10 within the Covenant Code's regulations on treatment of a female slave who becomes a wife. The multilingual glosses consistently interpret this as 'marital rights' or 'conjugal rights,' reflecting the understanding that this is a protected entitlement within the marriage covenant, not a mere preference. The context places it alongside food and clothing as non-negotiable provisions. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY
en: and-her-marital-rights | es: y-su-derecho-conyugal | fr: et-sa-marital-rights | de: und-ihr-marital-rights Exod 21:10

עִוְעִים H5773 N-mp (1×)

distortion, perversion, warped judgment (abstract noun describing twisted or crooked reasoning)

This rare abstract plural noun describes a state of mental or moral distortion, a twisting of perception that leads to warped judgment. The root suggests something bent out of shape or turned aside from straightness. In Isaiah 19, it characterizes the 'spirit of confusion' that YHWH will pour out on Egypt, causing their counselors to give foolish advice and their princes to lead the nation astray. The term captures not just error but systematic distortion, as if the very faculty of judgment has been bent and twisted, making straight thinking impossible.

(1×) Found in Isaiah 19:14 describing the spiritual confusion that will afflict Egypt's leadership. The Spanish 'perversidad' (perversity) and English 'confusion' both capture the sense of distorted judgment. The context suggests divine judgment that causes leaders to make disastrous decisions, as though their mental compass has been deliberately skewed. CROOKED PERVERTED en: confusion | es: perversidad | fr: [עוע״ם] | de: [עוע״ם] Isa 19:14

עוּף H5774a Prep-b / V-Piel-Inf / 1cs (31×)

Fly, soar; to move swiftly through the air; also to grow faint or exhausted; to brandish

Primarily denoting flight through the air, this verb describes the swift movement of birds (Gen 1:20), seraphim (Isa 6:2), and God himself riding on the wind (2 Sam 22:11). Metaphorically, riches 'fly away' like an eagle (Prov 23:5) and life vanishes like a dream that 'flies off' (Job 20:8). A second, homonymous root surfaces in Judges and Samuel with the meaning 'grow faint' or 'become exhausted,' as when Sisera's host or Jonathan's soldiers flagged in battle. The Piel and Hifil stems intensify and causativize the flight imagery, while one striking occurrence in Ezekiel describes the brandishing of a sword.

1. to fly (Qal) (19×) Basic Qal flight: physical movement through the air by birds, winged creatures, or metaphorical subjects. The flying scroll of Zech 5:1 and the sparrow's aimless flight in Prov 26:2 exemplify literal usage. Spanish 'voló/volarán' and French cognates consistently render aerial motion. Ps 18:10 pictures God soaring on cherub-wings, extending the image to theophany. FLYING AND FLIGHT
en: I-would-fly-away, [and-flies], and-He-flew | es: (volará), Y-volarán, Y-voló | fr: [אעופה], [ויעף], [ונעפה] | de: [ויעף], [ועפו], [עפות] Deut 4:17; 2Sam 22:11; Job 5:7; Job 20:8; Ps 18:10

2. to grow faint, become exhausted (Qal) (4×) A distinct homonymous root meaning to grow faint or become exhausted, appearing in battle narratives. Judg 4:21 describes Sisera in deep exhaustion; 1 Sam 14:28, 31 show Jonathan's troops fainting from hunger. Spanish 'agotado' ('exhausted') and 'se cansó' ('grew tired') confirm this is physical depletion, not flight. The semantic gulf from sense 1 suggests a separate etymological origin. WEARINESS AND EXHAUSTION
en: and-exhausted, and-he-grew-weary, and-they-grew-faint | es: y-agotado, y-estaba-débil, y-se-cansó | fr: et-exhausted, et-il-grandit-weary, et-ils-grandit-faint | de: und-er-grew-weary, und-exhausted, und-sie-grew-faint Judg 4:21; 1Sam 14:28; 1Sam 14:31; 2Sam 21:15

3. (2×) The 'flying serpent' (saraph me'opheph) of Isa 14:29 and 30:6 — a mythological or zoological creature of the Negev wilderness. Spanish 'volador' ('flying one') and the English 'fiery serpent' point to a winged venomous creature. These two occurrences combine flight imagery with the dangerous serpent motif unique to Isaiah's oracles against Philistia and Egypt. FLYING AND FLIGHT
en: fiery-serpent, serpent | es: volador | fr: voler | de: [מעופף] Isa 14:29; Isa 30:6

4. to cause to fly (Hifil) (2×) Hifil causative: to cause one's eyes to 'fly' toward riches (Prov 23:5), meaning to fix eager attention on wealth that will sprout wings and vanish. Spanish '¿harás volar?' ('will you make fly?') captures the causative force. Both occurrences appear in the same verse, creating a wordplay between setting eyes and watching wealth take flight. FLYING AND FLIGHT
en: [do-you-set], do-you-set | es: (¿harás-volar), [harás-volar] | fr: voler | de: fliegen Prov 23:5

5. to fly about, dart (Piel) (2×) Piel intensive: sustained or repeated flying, as the swarming creatures that fly across the firmament (Gen 1:20) and the seraphim hovering above the divine throne (Isa 6:2). Spanish 'volaba' and 'vuele' reflect continuous aerial activity. The Piel intensification suggests darting, fluttering flight rather than a single trajectory. FLYING AND FLIGHT
en: he-flies, let-fly | es: volaba, vuele | fr: que-mouche, voler | de: [יעופף], sollen-fliegen Gen 1:20; Isa 6:2

6. (1×) A unique Polel usage at Ezek 32:10: 'when I brandish my sword before them.' The root's aerial motion is transferred to the arc of a swinging blade. Spanish 'cuando yo blanda' ('when I brandish') and the Hebrew infinitive construct be'ophephi show the flight metaphor applied to weaponry, a hapax semantic extension. FLYING AND FLIGHT
en: when-I-brandish | es: cuando-yo-blanda | fr: [בעופפי] | de: [בעופפי] Ezek 32:10

7. (1×) Hitpolel at Hos 9:11: Ephraim's glory 'shall fly away' like a bird — a metaphor for the swift, irreversible departure of national honor. Spanish 'volará' and English 'shall fly away' both convey sudden vanishing. The reflexive-intensive stem underscores the totality of the loss, distinguishing this from simple Qal flight. FLYING AND FLIGHT
en: shall-fly-away | es: volará | fr: [יתעופף] | de: fliegen Hos 9:11

תְּעֻפָּה H5774b V-Qal-Imperf.Cohort-3fs (1×)

darkness, gloom (likely a textual variant in Job 11:17, contrasted with morning light)

This term appears in a textually difficult passage in Job and likely refers to darkness or deep gloom. BDB suggests reading it as a noun meaning 'darkness' in Job 11:17, where Zophar promises Job that his life will be brighter than noonday, and even what seems like darkness will become like morning. The French gloss 'voler' (to fly) may reflect an alternate interpretation connecting it to a verbal root, but the context strongly supports the meaning 'darkness' as the opposite of morning light. The passage offers hope that Job's dark circumstances will give way to brightness.

(1×) Job 11:17 contrasts the brightness of restored life (like noonday) with this term, which appears to mean 'darkness' or 'gloom' in parallel with 'morning.' Spanish and English versions translate as 'darkness,' suggesting a time of obscurity that will be transformed into dawn. The textual uncertainty doesn't obscure the basic contrast: from darkness to light, from despair to hope. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: darkness | es: la-oscuridad | fr: voler | de: [תעפה] Job 11:17

עוֹף H5775 Prep-m (71×)

Flying creatures collectively: birds, fowl (of sky, prey, sacrifice); rarely winged insects in Levitical clean/unclean lists.

The Hebrew collective noun of denotes everything with wings and the capacity for flight, though its 71 occurrences fall overwhelmingly into the category of birds. From the creation narrative where God says 'let birds fly above the earth' (Gen 1:20) to the carrion fowl that Goliath threatens David with (1 Sam 17:44), of hashammayim ('birds of the sky') is one of Scripture's most formulaic phrases, appearing 38 times. German distinguishes neatly between Vogel (bird) and Vögel (birds), while Spanish ave and French oiseau track the collective singular faithfully. A small but theologically interesting subset in Leviticus broadens the scope beyond ornithology: the 'flying creature' (of) that walks on all fours (Lev 11:20-23) clearly encompasses winged insects, a distinction the dietary laws require readers to notice.

1. bird, fowl (67×) Birds or fowl as a zoological class — the collective designation for avian creatures of every kind, including sky-birds in the creation framework (Gen 1:20-22, 26, 28), carrion birds that consume the dead (1 Sam 17:44; 1 Kgs 14:11), birds of the mountains (Ps 50:11), migratory or wandering birds (Isa 16:2), birds as food (Lev 7:26; 17:13), and birds for sacrifice (Gen 8:20; Lev 1:14). With 67 occurrences, this sense covers the characteristic phrase of hashammayim ('birds of the sky'). Spanish ave/aves, French oiseau, German Vogel/Vögel, and English 'bird/fowl' all converge on a standard ornithological term. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-bird-of, bird-of, birds-of | es: ave-de, aves-de, el-ave | fr: le-oiseau, oiseau, oiseau-de | de: Vogel, Vogel-von, Vögel Gen 1:20; Gen 1:21; Gen 1:22; Gen 1:26; Gen 1:28

2. flying creature, winged thing (4×) A flying creature in the broadest sense, extending beyond birds to encompass winged insects — creatures that fly but 'go on all fours.' Restricted to just 4 occurrences in the Levitical dietary legislation (Lev 11:20, 21, 23; Deut 14:19), this sense is the wider zoological category that the clean/unclean laws require: 'every flying creature (of) that creeps, going on all fours, is detestable to you' — except those with jointed legs for leaping, like locusts. The multilingual glosses reveal translator difficulty: English and French resort to 'flying creature/créature,' while Spanish retains ave and German der fliegende, all struggling with a Hebrew term that here transcends the bird/insect boundary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-flying, the-flying-creature | es: el-ave | fr: le-flying, le-flying-créature | de: der-flying, der-flying-creature Lev 11:20; Lev 11:21; Lev 11:23; Deut 14:19

עוֹף H5776 N-ms (2×)

bird, fowl (Aramaic; collective or individual)

This Aramaic noun denotes a bird or fowl, used in Daniel's apocalyptic visions. Daniel 2:38 interprets Nebuchadnezzar's dream, declaring God has given him dominion over 'the birds of the sky' (along with beasts and humans). Daniel 7:6 describes the third beast with 'four wings of a fowl,' symbolizing swift conquest. The word is collective (birds in general) or singular (a bird), with context determining number. The imagery reinforces divine sovereignty over all creation and prophetic symbolism of earthly kingdoms.

(2×) Bird or fowl in Aramaic, appearing in Daniel's visions. Daniel 2:38 lists 'birds of the sky' among creatures under Nebuchadnezzar's dominion; 7:6 describes a beast with 'wings of a fowl.' The term functions both collectively (birds) and individually (bird/fowl), emphasizing either divine sovereignty or symbolic representation of kingdoms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-birds-of-, bird | es: ave, y-las-aves-de | fr: et-oiseau, oiseau | de: [ועוף], [עוף] Dan 2:38; Dan 7:6

עֹפֶרֶת H5777 Prep-k (9×)

Lead, the heavy bluish-gray metal, mentioned in contexts of metallurgy, permanent inscription, and trade goods.

Denotes the heavy metal lead (עֹפֶרֶת), probably a loanword of uncertain origin. It appears in inventories of metals alongside tin, iron, and bronze (Num 31:22; Ezek 22:18, 20), and as a trade commodity from Tarshish (Ezek 27:12). Perhaps its most memorable occurrence is Job 19:24, where Job wishes his words were inscribed with an iron stylus and filled with lead for permanence. The Song of the Sea uses it in a striking simile: the Egyptians 'sank like lead in the mighty waters' (Exod 15:10). Spanish 'plomo' and French 'plomb' both descend from Latin plumbum, yet the Hebrew term may trace to Aramaic roots entirely distinct from the Indo-European family.

lead (metal) (9×) The metal lead, valued in antiquity for its weight, malleability, and low melting point. Used literally in lists of smelted metals (Num 31:22; Ezek 22:18, 20), as a Tarshish trade good (Ezek 27:12), and as material for filling engraved inscriptions (Job 19:24). Zechariah's vision employs a lead disc as a cover for the ephah basket (Zech 5:7-8). The most vivid figurative use is in Exodus 15:10, where Pharaoh's forces sink 'like lead' in the sea. Jeremiah 6:29 may reference lead as a flux in the refining process. TIN LEAD METALS

en: and-lead, lead, like-the-lead | es: como-plomo, plomo, y-plomo | fr: [עפרת], comme-le-conduire, et-plomb | de: [העפרת], [ועופרת], [ועפרת] Exod 15:10; Num 31:22; Job 19:24; Jer 6:29; Ezek 22:18

עוֹפַי H5778 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ephai (personal name; ketiv: Ophai); a Netophathite leader post-fall of Jerusalem

This personal name identifies a Netophathite (from Netophah near Bethlehem) who appears in Jeremiah 40:8 among the military leaders who came to Gedaliah after Jerusalem's fall in 586 BC. The Masoretic text preserves two readings: the ketiv (written text) has 'Ophai' while the qere (read aloud) has 'Ephai.' This reflects scribal tradition and pronunciation variants. Ephai represents the Judean remnant seeking guidance in the chaotic aftermath of Babylonian conquest.

(2×) A proper name for a Netophathite leader who joined Gedaliah after Jerusalem's fall (Jeremiah 40:8). The name shows ketiv/qere variation (Ophai/Ephai), reflecting scribal pronunciation traditions. Both occurrences in the verse reflect this textual phenomenon. Greek versions (Iōphe, Ōphe, Ōphet) attempt to transliterate the uncertain pronunciation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Eyfai | es: (Efay), [Ofay] | fr: [(עיפי)], [[עופי]] | de: [(עיפי)], [[עופי]] Jer 40:8

עוּץ H5779 V-Qal-Imp-mp (2×)

to counsel, take counsel, plan together (rare variant of יָעַץ, appearing only in imperative forms)

This verb appears only twice in the Hebrew Bible, both times as a plural imperative urging hearers to 'take counsel' or 'plan together.' The BDB lexicon identifies it as an Aramaic-influenced variant of the more common יעץ (to counsel, advise). In Judges 19:30, the horrified Israelites are urged to deliberate about the Levite's concubine crisis; in Isaiah 8:10, the prophet challenges foreign nations to make their plans—which God will thwart. The Spanish and French glosses capture the deliberative aspect: 'trazad' (devise a plan), 'prendre conseil' (take counsel).

(2×) Used as an exhortation to convene and deliberate about a crisis or threat. Both occurrences deploy the imperative mood, calling a community to collective decision-making. The multilingual glosses reflect planning ('plan,' 'considerad,' 'prendre-conseil'), situating the word in contexts of urgent communal deliberation. CONSIDERING AND DISCERNING en: plan, take-counsel | es: Trazad, considerad | fr: [עצו], prendre-conseil | de: [עצו], nehmen-Rat Judg 19:30; Isa 8:10

עוּץ H5780 N-proper-fs (8×)

Uz, a personal name in Aramean/Edomite genealogies and a regional name for Job's homeland east of Israel.

A proper noun functioning both as a personal name and a geographic designation. As a personal name, Uz appears in three genealogical lines: a son of Aram and grandson of Shem (Gen 10:23, 1 Chr 1:17), the eldest son of Nahor (Gen 22:21), and an Edomite descendant of Seir (Gen 36:28, 1 Chr 1:42). As a place name, it denotes the eastern territory where Job dwelt (Job 1:1) and a region addressed in prophetic judgment (Jer 25:20, Lam 4:21). The convergence of Aramean, Nahorite, and Edomite traditions suggests a broad eastern frontier region. The Septuagint renders it as Aus/Os, while translations vary between 'Uz,' 'Uts,' and 'Utz.'

Uz (place/personal name) (8×) A proper noun used both for persons in patriarchal genealogies and for the eastern region associated with Job. Three genealogical figures bear the name: a son of Aram (Gen 10:23), a son of Nahor (Gen 22:21), and a Horite descendant (Gen 36:28), reflecting the convergence of Aramean, Abrahamic, and Edomite traditions in the transjordanian east. As a geographic term, 'the land of Uz' is Job's homeland (Job 1:1), later invoked in prophetic oracles (Jer 25:20, Lam 4:21). The Septuagint Ausitis and modern renderings – English 'Uz,' Spanish 'Uz,' German 'Uz' – all preserve the short, ancient toponym. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Uts, Utz, Uz | es: Uts, Utz, Uz | fr: Uts, Uz, [העוץ] | de: Uz, [העוץ], [עוץ] Gen 10:23; Gen 22:21; Gen 36:28; 1Chr 1:17; 1Chr 1:42

עוּק H5781 V-Hifil-Imperf-3fs (2×)

to press down, totter (Hiphil: cause to totter or press heavily; dubious root, possibly textual corruption)

This verb appears only in Amos 2:13, where the text is uncertain. The BDB suggests the Masoretic reading describes God pressing down on his people 'as a cart presses down when full of sheaves,' though many scholars (Wellhausen, Nowack, Driver) propose emending to a form of כוּק, 'to totter.' The multilingual evidence splits: English and Spanish retain the 'pressing' imagery ('am pressing,' 'aplasta'), while French adopts the emendation ('chanceler,' to totter). This textual uncertainty makes the lemma difficult to define with confidence.

(2×) The Masoretic tradition suggests pressing or crushing, while emendation proposals lean toward tottering or staggering. The double occurrence in Amos 2:13 (participle and imperfect) depicts divine judgment as a heavy weight or destabilizing force. Spanish and English glosses preserve the 'pressing' imagery, while French reflects the 'tottering' emendation, illustrating the textual debate. SHAKING AND TOTTERING

en: am-pressing, presses | es: aplasta, aplastando | fr: chanceler | de: [מעיק], [תעיק] Amos 2:13

עוּר H5782 V-Hifil-Imperf.Cohort-1cs (80×)

To rouse, awaken, stir up; in Qal, to wake from sleep; in Hifil, to cause awakening or incite action; in Piel, to rouse intensively.

Few Hebrew verbs carry as much dramatic energy as 'ur. At its most literal, it describes the simple act of waking from sleep — Deborah is called to 'awake, awake!' in her great victory song (Judg 5:12), and the beloved in the Song of Songs pleads that love not be stirred before its time. But the word scales from bedroom to battlefield to cosmic stage: God 'stirs up' the spirit of Cyrus to release Israel (2 Chr 36:22; Ezra 1:1), rouses nations against Babylon (Jer 50:41), and is himself urged by the psalmist to 'awake' on behalf of his people. The Hifil causative dominates, reflecting how often Scripture depicts awakening as something caused — by God, by circumstances, or by desperate human plea. Arabic 'ayqaza (to awaken) and Korean 깨우다 (to rouse someone) both confirm the causative as a lexicalized sense, not just a grammatical derivation.

1. Hifil: to awaken, stir up (causative) (38×) Hifil causative: to awaken someone, stir up, incite — the most frequent sense at 38 occurrences. God is the typical agent, stirring up the spirit of kings (2 Chr 36:22; Ezra 1:1), rousing nations for judgment (Jer 6:22; 50:41), or awakening a protective instinct like an eagle stirring its nest (Deut 32:11). Arabic yuqizu ('he awakens') and German erwecken both select dedicated causative vocabulary here, while Spanish despertar and Korean 깨우다 confirm the caused-awakening frame. The theological pattern is striking: human agents rarely 'stir up' well — it is God's prerogative to awaken history. AWAKENING AND VIGILANCE

en: He-awakens, I-will-awaken, am-stirring-up | es: Despierta, Despiértate, Y-despertó | fr: [ירעו], de-ville, la-ville | de: aufwachen, die-Stadt, erwecken Deut 32:11; 1Chr 5:26; 2Chr 21:16; 2Chr 36:22; Ezra 1:1

2. Qal: to awake, be awake (18×) Qal intransitive: to awake, be awake, arise from sleep — 18 occurrences centered on the subject's own transition from sleep or inactivity to alertness. Deborah's fourfold 'awake, awake!' (Judg 5:12) is the paradigm case, and the beloved's self-description 'I sleep, but my heart is awake' (Song 5:2) plays on the boundary between literal and figurative. Arabic istayqaza (intransitive self-awakening), Korean 깨어나다, and Swahili amka all select non-causative wake-up vocabulary, confirming this as genuinely distinct from the Hifil. The psalmist's imperative 'Awake!' directed to God (Ps 7:6; 44:23; 59:4) boldly applies human sleep-language to the divine. AWAKENING AND VIGILANCE

en: and-awake, arise, aroused | es: Despierta, Despiértate, Levántate | fr: et-éveiller, veillait., Éveille-toi, | de: erwachen, erwecken, erweckte Judg 5:12; Job 41:10

3. Piel: to rouse, stir up, awaken (11×) Piel intensive: to rouse, stir up, awaken with deliberate force — 11 occurrences where the action carries heightened intentionality or emotional charge. The adjuration in the Song of Songs 'do not stir up or awaken love until it pleases' (Song 2:7; 3:5; 8:4) uses this form to convey the dangerous volatility of premature arousal. Proverbs 10:12 warns that 'hatred stirs up strife,' and Job's friends are rebuked for trying to 'rouse' Leviathan (Job 3:8). Spanish excitar and Arabic yuthiru ('to incite') both capture the intensive, sometimes provocative, quality that distinguishes this from the neutral Hifil causative. AWAKENING AND VIGILANCE

en: I-awakened-you, and-I-will-rouse, and-will-rouse | es: Y-levantará, despierta, excitáis | fr: et-éveiller, exciteriez-vous, je-t'ai-éveillé; | de: erwecken, erweckte, stir-hinauf Job 3:8; Ps 80:2; Prov 10:12; Song 2:7; Song 3:5

4. Niphal: to be roused, be stirred up (7×) Niphal passive: to be roused, be stirred up by an external force — 7 occurrences emphasizing that the subject is the recipient rather than the agent of awakening. The dead 'will not awake' nor 'be roused from their sleep' (Job 14:12); a great nation 'is being stirred up from the remote parts of the earth' (Jer 6:22; 50:41). Arabic yunhadu (passive, 'to be raised up') and Swahili -amshwa (passive of amka) confirm genuine voice-driven distinction. Joel 3:12 inverts the pattern: the nations are told to 'be roused' for divine judgment — a passive that paradoxically demands obedience. AWAKENING AND VIGILANCE

en: are-roused, he-has-roused, is-awakened | es: Despiértense, es-despertado, se-despertará | fr: éveiller | de: erwecken, erweckte Job 14:12; Jer 6:22; Jer 25:32; Jer 50:41; Joel 3:12

5. (3×) A specialized martial sense: to wield or brandish a weapon — 3 occurrences exclusively in the warrior-hero lists of 2 Samuel 23:18 and 1 Chronicles 11:11, 20, describing mighty men who 'wielded' their spears. English 'wielded,' Spanish blandía, and the contextual action of raising a weapon all point to a distinct kinesthetic sense

— the physical act of lifting and brandishing — rather than mere metaphorical 'stirring.' This may represent an archaic usage preserved only in heroic formulae, related to the root sense of 'raising up' but specialized for weaponry. WAVE WIELD BRANDISH
en: wielded | es: blandiendo, blandía | fr: [עורר], wielded | de: erwecken, wielded 2Sam 23:18; 1Chr 11:11; 1Chr 11:20

6. Hitpael: to rouse oneself (3×) Hitpael reflexive: to rouse oneself, bestir oneself into action — 3 occurrences where the subject deliberately gathers inner resolve. In Isa 64:7 the prophet laments that no one 'stirs himself up' to take hold of God; Job 17:8 promises that the righteous will 'rouse himself' against the godless; Job 31:29 describes exulting when misfortune strikes. Arabic yataharraku ('to move oneself') and the reflexive morphology itself mark the volitional self-directed quality. Each occurrence carries moral weight — this is not passive awakening but a choice to engage. AWAKENING AND VIGILANCE
en: and-I-was-stirred-up, one-rousing-himself, stirs-himself | es: quien-se-despierte, se-levantará, y-me-exalté | fr: et-éveiller, éveiller | de: erwecken, erweckte, und-erweckte Job 17:8; Job 31:29; Isa 64:7

עוּר H5783 V-Nifal-Imperf-3fs (1×)

to be laid bare, exposed, made ready (of a bow being unsheathed and prepared for use)

This Niphal verb means to be exposed, laid bare, or made completely ready. It appears in Habakkuk's prophetic vision describing God's bow being made utterly ready for battle—'laid bare to nakedness,' meaning completely unsheathed and prepared to strike. The root connects to ideas of bareness and exposure, similar to the more common Hebrew word for nakedness. Some scholars propose textual emendations, but the image of a weapon being fully exposed and ready captures the intensity of divine judgment. The multilingual glosses reflect both the idea of being 'laid bare' and 'awakened' or 'aroused' for action.

(1×) Habakkuk 3:9 depicts YHWH's bow being completely exposed and ready for battle in theophanic imagery. The French 'mettre à nu' (to lay bare) and English 'is laid bare' capture the sense of total exposure. The Spanish 'se despierta' (is awakened) may reflect understanding the verb as 'aroused' or 'made ready.' The context is holy war: God's weapons are no longer sheathed but fully prepared to execute judgment. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING
en: is-laid-bare | es: se-despierta | fr: mettre-à-nu | de: [תעור] Hab 3:9

עוּר H5784 Prep-k / N-ms (1×)

chaff, dry husks (light refuse blown away when grain is threshed and winnowed)

This Aramaic noun refers to chaff, the light, dry husks and straw that are separated from grain during threshing and winnowing. In Daniel's vision of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, the great statue—representing successive kingdoms—is struck by a stone and breaks into pieces that become 'like chaff' from the summer threshing floors, blown away without a trace. The image emphasizes the utter disappearance and insignificance of these mighty empires before God's eternal kingdom. Related words in Aramaic and Arabic similarly refer to small particles or motes, underlining the sense of worthless fragments easily scattered by the wind.

(1×) Daniel 2:35 uses this term in a simile: the broken pieces of the statue 'became like chaff from the summer threshing floors,' emphasizing total obliteration. Spanish 'tamo' and English 'chaff' both denote the worthless byproduct of grain processing. The comparison underscores that earthly kingdoms, however impressive, will vanish like windblown refuse before the stone cut without hands. STUBBLE AND CHAFF
en: like-chaff | es: como-el-tamo | fr: peau | de: [כעור] Dan 2:35

עוֹר H5785 Prep-m / N-msc (99×)

Skin, hide, leather; the outer covering of a human body, an animal's hide, or processed leather used for articles and garments.

From Eden's first garments—'coats of skin' fashioned by God for Adam and Eve (Gen 3:21)—to the meticulous purity regulations of Leviticus, or functions as a concretely physical term spanning human vulnerability, animal sacrifice, and material culture. The word dominates Leviticus 13, where thirty-three occurrences detail the inspection of skin afflictions. Job's anguished cries ('my skin hangs on my bones,' Job 19:20) and Jeremiah's rhetorical question about the Ethiopian's skin (Jer 13:23) make it a word of embodied suffering. When processed into leather, it covers the tabernacle (Exod 26:14) and must be purified when contaminated (Lev 11:32). Spanish piel and cuero, German Haut and Fell, French peau and cuir all reflect this natural three-way split.

1. skin of a person (59×) The outer bodily covering of a human being, especially in contexts of disease, suffering, and physical description. Fifty-nine occurrences make this the dominant sense, with Leviticus 13 alone accounting for over half as the priest examines skin for signs of tsar'at (traditionally 'leprosy'). Job's tormented body (Job 7:5; 10:11; 19:20, 26) and Ezekiel's valley of dry bones receiving skin (Ezek 37:6, 8) show the word marking the boundary between life and death, wholeness and decay. The construct 'or basar ('skin of the flesh') in Levitical law became a technical diagnostic phrase. SKIN AND LEATHER
en: in-leather, in-the-leather, in-the-skin | es: en-cuero, en-el-cuero, en-la-piel | fr: dans-cuir, dans-le-cuir, dans-le-peau | de: der-Haut, der-verbergen, in-der-Haut Gen 3:21; Exod 29:14; Lev 8:17; Lev 9:11; Lev 13:2

2. animal hide or skin (27×) The skin or hide of an animal, either freshly removed during sacrifice or still on the living creature. Twenty-seven occurrences concentrate in sacrificial law: the 'skin of the bull' burned outside the camp (Exod 29:14; Lev 4:11), the priestly right to the skin of the burnt offering (Lev 7:8), and Jacob's stratagem with goatskins on his hands (Gen 27:16). The distinction between human skin and animal hide is not lexical but contextual —Hebrew uses the same word for both, while German distinguishes Haut from Fell and Spanish piel from cuero. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: skin-of, skins-of, the-skin-of | es: la-piel-de, piel-de, pieles-de | fr: le-peau-de, peau-de, peaux-de | de: Fell-von, Felle-von, Haut-von Gen 27:16; Exod 25:5; Exod 26:14

3. leather as processed material (13×) Animal skin processed into leather, used for manufactured articles such as garments, vessels, and tabernacle coverings. Thirteen occurrences appear primarily in purity regulations (Lev 11:32; 13:48-59; 15:17) and tabernacle construction (Exod 25:5; 26:14). The 'rams' skins dyed red' and 'tachash skins' covering the tabernacle show leather as a worked material distinct from raw hide. Leviticus 13:48-59 treats leather articles alongside woven fabric in mold-contamination law, treating or as an industrial product requiring its own purity protocol. SKIN AND LEATHER
en: leather, skin, the-leather | es: cuero, el-cuero, piel | fr: cuir, le-cuir, leather | de: Haut, der-leather, leather Lev 11:32; Lev 13:48; Lev 13:49; Lev 13:51; Lev 13:52

עָוַר H5786 V-Piel-Perf-3ms (5×)

to blind, put out the eyes (Piel); used literally of blinding captives and figuratively of bribes corrupting judgment

In the Piel stem, this verb means to make blind or to put out someone's eyes. Its literal use describes the brutal punishment inflicted on King Zedekiah by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kgs 25:7; Jer 39:7; 52:11). Figuratively, both Exodus 23:8 and Deuteronomy 16:19 warn that a bribe blinds the eyes of the wise or of those who see clearly. The Aramaic and Arabic cognates confirm the root meaning of impairing sight.

(5×) To make blind, to put out the eyes — literally of the Babylonian blinding of Zedekiah (2 Kgs 25:7; Jer 39:7; 52:11), and figuratively of bribes corrupting judicial discernment (Exod 23:8; Deut 16:19). Spanish 'cegó/ciega' and French 'aveugle' both reflect the consistent rendering across traditions. The literal and figurative uses share the image of sight destroyed: whether physical eyes gouged by an enemy or moral perception darkened by corruption. BLINDNESS PHYSICAL SPIRITUAL

en: blinds, he-blinded | es: cegó, ciega | fr: [עור], aveugle, blinds | de: [עור], blinds, er-blinded Exod 23:8; Deut 16:19; 2Kgs 25:7; Jer 39:7; Jer 52:11

עִוֵּר H5787 Adj-ms (26×)

Blind — unable to see, whether physically sightless or spiritually imperceptive; used of persons, animals, and nations.

