1. seek, search for (200×) The core Piel meaning: to actively search for or seek someone or something. This covers the vast majority of occurrences, from Saul seeking his father's donkeys (1 Sam 10:2) to enemies seeking David's life (1 Sam 23:10). The Arabic talab and bahath, Korean chajda/guhada, and Swahili kutafuta all converge on this active-pursuit sense. The breadth is remarkable: physical search, intellectual inquiry, and even the seeking of God's face (2 Chr 7:14) all fall under this umbrella. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: seeks, to-seek | es: a-buscar, busca, buscará | fr: [לבקש], chercher, à-chercher | de: er-sucht, suchen, von-suchte 1Sam 10:2; 1Sam 10:14; 1Sam 19:2; 1Sam 20:1; 1Sam 23:10

2. require, demand (12×) To require, demand, or hold accountable, carrying the force of authority. When God says 'I will require it' (Gen 9:5; 31:39; 2 Sam 4:11), the Arabic yutalibu ('to demand legally') and Swahili kudai ('to claim/require') capture the judicial weight. This is not mere searching but an authoritative exaction, a calling to account. The Spanish demandar and German fordern in the translations confirm the shift from seeking to demanding. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: I-required, I-shall-require, I-will-require | es: buscaré., demandaré, demande | fr: [אבקש], [מבקש], chercher | de: hast-du-es-gefordert, magst-du-ihn-fordern, soll-ich-require Gen 31:39; Gen 43:9; Josh 22:23; 1Sam 20:16; 2Sam 4:11

3. request, entreat, plead (8×) To request, entreat, or plead, typically directed toward a superior. In Esther 4:8, Mordecai urges Esther to plead before the king; in Ezra 8:21 the community seeks God through fasting. The Arabic iltamasa (to petition) and Swahili kuomba (to request/pray) highlight the supplicatory tone. This sense foregrounds the relational asymmetry between petitioner and the one petitioned, whether human authority or God. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: and-he-requested, and-to-plead, and-we-sought | es: buscó, mendigando, para-buscar | fr: [ויבקש], chercher, de-chercher | de: er-suchte, suchte, und-suchen Deut 13:10; Ezra 8:21; Ezra 8:23; Esth 2:15; Esth 4:8

4. be sought, be investigated (Pual) (4×) The Pual passive: to be sought out or investigated. In Jeremiah 50:20 Israel's iniquity 'shall be sought and there shall be none,' and in Esther 2:23 the matter 'was investigated.' The Arabic passive futisha and Korean guhaejida reflect the grammatical passivization. Only four occurrences attest this form, but they consistently describe a thorough examination or search carried out upon the subject. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: and-was-investigated, and-you-shall-be-sought, let-them-seek | es: Y-fue-investigado, busquen, será-buscada | fr: chercher, et-chercher, et-tu-chercheras | de: er-sucht, suchte, und-er-sucht Esth 2:2; Esth 2:23; Jer 50:20; Ezek 26:21

5. (1×) A single occurrence in Daniel 1:20 where the king 'sought' (tested/examined) the young men and found them superior. This may represent a specialized evaluative nuance of seeking, where the search is for quality or competence rather than location, bridging senses 1 and 2. The Spanish les pidio ('he asked of them') and German suchen preserve the ambiguity. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: sought | es: les-pidió | fr: [בקש] | de: suchen Dan 1:20

בַּקָּשָׁה H1246 N-fsc / 3ms (8×)

Request, petition, entreaty — a formal plea made especially before royalty.

A feminine noun for a formal request or petition, used almost exclusively in the courtly dialogue of Esther and once in Ezra. Queen Esther's repeated use of this word before King Ahasuerus (Esth 5:3, 6–8; 7:2–3; 9:12) makes it the quintessential term for royal supplication in late biblical Hebrew. Spanish solicitud and súplica capture both the formal and the emotional registers, while French demande and German Bitte preserve the straightforward sense of 'request.' In Ezra 7:6, the king grants Ezra's baqqashah — his formal petition for the return to Jerusalem.

request, petition, entreaty (8×) A formal request or petition addressed to a person in authority, especially a king. Six of eight occurrences appear in Esther's dialogues with Ahasuerus (Esth 5:3, 6, 7, 8; 7:3; 9:12), where the word carries the weight of life-and-death supplication. In Ezra 7:6 it describes the formal petition granted by the Persian king. Spanish solicitud ('formal request') and súplica ('plea') together capture the range, while French demande and German Bitte render it more neutrally as 'request.' PETITIONS AND REQUESTS

en: and-my-request, at-my-petition, his-request | es: en-mi-solicitud, mi-súplica, solicitud-tuya | fr: demande, et-demande, ta-demande | de: Bitte, und-Bitte Ezra 7:6; Esth 5:3; Esth 5:6; Esth 5:7; Esth 5:8

בַּר H1247 Prep-k / N-msc (8×)

Son (Aramaic) — used in patronymics, collective expressions, and the messianic phrase 'son of man.'

The Aramaic word for 'son,' cognate to Hebrew ben, appearing in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. It functions in patronymic chains ('son of X'), collective phrases like 'sons of Israel' (Ezra 6:16) and 'sons of the captivity' (Dan 2:25; 5:13; 6:14), and most memorably in the visionary expression bar enash, 'son of man' (Dan 7:13). Spanish hijo de and French constructions with bar both confirm the filial meaning. German renders it as Sohn in interpretive contexts, preserving the relational sense of lineage and identity.

son (Aramaic) (8×) An Aramaic masculine noun meaning 'son,' used in construct chains for patronymics (Ezra 5:1–2; 6:14), collective designations like 'sons of the captivity' (Dan 5:13; 6:14), and the theologically significant phrase bar enash ('one like a son of man,' Dan 7:13). Spanish hijo de and German Sohn confirm the straightforward filial meaning. The word is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew ben, with the nun-to-resh shift characteristic of Aramaic, and appears exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: being-about, his-son, like-Son-of | es: a-un-hijo-de, como-hijo-de, hijo-de | fr: [ברה], [כבר], [לבר] | de: Kebar, Sohn, [ברה] Ezra 5:1; Ezra 5:2; Ezra 6:14; Dan 3:25

בַּר H1248 N-msc (4×)

Son (Aramaic loanword used in late Hebrew poetry, notably Ps 2:12 and Prov 31:2)

An Aramaic-origin word for 'son,' appearing in only two biblical contexts. In Proverbs 31:2 the mother of King Lemuel addresses him tenderly three times as 'my son' (beri), using the Aramaic form rather than the standard Hebrew 'ben.' In Psalm 2:12 the famous exhortation 'kiss the son' (nashqu bar) has generated centuries of interpretive debate — the Septuagint renders it 'lay hold of instruction,' while the Syriac and many modern versions read 'kiss the son' as a messianic imperative.

(4×) Son, offspring — an Aramaic term functioning as a poetic or elevated synonym of Hebrew 'ben.' In Prov 31:2 the triple vocative ('my son, son of my womb, son of my vows') gains rhetorical warmth from the Aramaic form. In Ps 2:12 the word sits in a royal-messianic context: 'kiss the son lest he be angry.' German 'der-Sohn' and Spanish 'al-Hijo' both reflect the definite/specific reading. The Aramaic provenance is confirmed by Syriac cognate bar, suggesting either late composition or deliberate archaizing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: my-son, son-of, the-son | es: al-Hijo, hijo-de-, hijo-mío | fr: fils, mon-ברי-moi, בר | de: [בר], [ברי], der-Sohn Ps 2:12; Prov 31:2

בַּר H1249 Conj-w / Adj-msc (7×)

Pure, clean, sincere — describing moral clarity of heart, ritual cleanness, or physical emptiness

An adjective (בַּר) meaning 'pure' or 'clean,' used across ethical, liturgical, and even mundane contexts. In the Psalms it describes the moral purity required to stand before God — 'clean hands and a pure heart' (Ps 24:4) and those 'pure of heart' toward whom God is good (Ps 73:1). The commands of the LORD are called בָּרָה, 'pure' (Ps 19:9). In Proverbs 14:4, it describes an empty, clean manger — no oxen means a clean crib, but also no harvest. The range from inner moral purity to physical emptiness gives this word a distinctive breadth.

pure, clean (7×) Pure, clean, or sincere, spanning moral, ritual, and physical senses. Ethically, it describes purity of heart required for worship (Ps 24:4, בַּר לְבָב 'pure in heart'; Ps 73:1, בָּרֵי לְבָב). Applied to God's commands as flawless and pure (Ps 19:9). In Song of Songs 6:9-10, it describes a maiden as 'pure' or 'bright.' Job 11:4 uses it of personal moral claim. In Proverbs 14:4, it means physically 'clean' or 'empty' — a clean manger signals no livestock and thus no productivity. French pur and Spanish pura/limpio capture the ethical and physical dimensions respectively. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: and-clean, and-pure-of-, clean | es: limpio, para-limpios-de, pura | fr: dans-pur, et-pur, pur | de: [בר], [ברה], [ובר] Job 11:4; Ps 19:8; Ps 24:4; Ps 73:1; Prov 14:4

בַּר H1250a N-ms (13×)

Grain, corn; wheat – threshed cereal grain, especially in storage or commerce

The noun בַּר refers to threshed grain – clean, winnowed cereal ready for storage, sale, or transport. It features prominently in the Joseph narrative, where Pharaoh commands grain to be gathered during the seven years of plenty (Gen 41:35, 49), and Jacob sends his sons to Egypt to buy grain (Gen 42:3, 25). In the prophetic literature, Amos condemns those who manipulate the grain trade (Amos 5:11, 8:5-6), and Jeremiah contrasts grain and chaff as metaphors for true and false prophecy (Jer 23:28). The Arabic cognate burr (wheat) and the consistent multilingual rendering – 'grano' (Spanish), 'ble/grain' (French), 'Getreide/Korn' (German) – all point to cereal grain as the core referent.

1. grain (8×) Grain as a stored or transported commodity – clean, threshed cereal collected in bulk. This sense dominates the Joseph narrative in Genesis: Pharaoh stores grain during the years of abundance (Gen 41:35, 49), the brothers travel to Egypt to buy grain (Gen 42:3), Joseph fills their sacks with grain (Gen 42:25), and donkeys carry grain back to Jacob (Gen 45:23). Psalm 65:14 and 72:16 celebrate grain as a sign of God's agricultural blessing. The emphasis falls on grain as an economic and nutritional resource, with multilingual glosses converging on generic cereal terms: 'grano' (Spanish), 'grain/ble' (French), 'Getreide/Korn' (German). GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: grain, with-grain | es: grano | fr: blé, grain, בר | de: Getreide, Korn, grain Gen 41:35; Gen 41:49; Gen 42:3; Gen 42:25; Gen 45:23

2. grain (5×) Grain or wheat in prophetic and poetic contexts, often with a qualitative or metaphorical edge. Jeremiah 23:28 draws the famous contrast: 'What has straw to do with grain (בָּר)?' – a metaphor distinguishing true prophecy from false. Joel 2:24 promises the threshing floors will be full of grain as a sign of restoration. Amos 5:11 condemns those who exact levies of grain from the poor, while Amos 8:5-6 exposes merchants who cheat in the grain trade. Here בָּר carries moral and theological freight beyond its agricultural denotation. Some glosses shift toward 'wheat' specifically – 'el trigo' (Spanish), 'froment' (French) – suggesting the prophetic contexts may evoke the more refined cereal rather than generic grain. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: grain, the-grain, the-wheat | es: de-grano, el-trigo, el-trigo? | fr: [הבר], froment | de: Getreide, [הבר] Jer 23:28; Joel 2:24; Amos 5:11; Amos 8:5; Amos 8:6

בָּר H1250b Prep-b (1×)

In the open field (Aramaic noun for field/countryside used in poetic Job)

This word appears in Job 39:4, describing wild animals: 'they grow up in the open field' (ba-bar). BDB identifies this as an Aramaic loanword meaning open country or field, cognate to Aramaic 'bara' and Arabic 'barr.' The Aramaic vocabulary in Job is well-documented, reflecting either the book's antiquity or its non-Israelite setting. The phrase describes the untamed wilderness where wild creatures mature, contrasting with domesticated animals raised in enclosures. The 'open field' connotes freedom and wildness.

(1×) An Aramaic noun meaning 'open field' or 'countryside,' used in Job 39:4 with the preposition 'in' to describe where wild animals grow up. This Aramaism (related to Syriac, Arabic cognates) emphasizes uncultivated, open wilderness as opposed to cultivated farmland or enclosed pastures. Job uses it to paint the wildness and freedom of creatures beyond human control. Multilingual renderings (en-campo, in-the-open-field) preserve the sense of undomesticated space, though some retain the Hebrew term, acknowledging the loan-word status. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-open-field | es: en-campo | fr: בבר | de: [בבר] Job 39:4

בַּר H1251 N-msd (8×)

Open field, wild country (Aramaic) — the uncultivated land where wild animals roam.

An Aramaic noun for open country or wild field, equivalent to Hebrew sadeh. It appears exclusively in Daniel's Aramaic chapters, nearly always in the phrase khevat bar ('beasts of the field'), describing the wild animals that inhabit uncultivated terrain. In Nebuchadnezzar's dream-tree vision (Dan 4), it is the open field where the king himself will dwell among beasts as divine judgment. Spanish campo, French champ, and German Feld all converge on 'field,' confirming the consistent outdoor, uncultivated sense throughout.

(8×) An Aramaic noun for the open, uncultivated field or wild country — the domain of wild animals. Equivalent to Hebrew sadeh, it appears in the construct phrase khevat bar ('beasts of the field') in Dan 2:38; 4:12, 15, 21, 23, 25, 32. The emphasis is on untamed terrain outside human habitation, especially prominent in Nebuchadnezzar's humiliation narrative (Dan 4) where the king is driven into the bar to live among animals. Spanish campo, French champ, and German Feld uniformly render it as 'field.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-field | es: campo, del-campo, el-campo | fr: champ | de: Feld Dan 2:38; Dan 4:12; Dan 4:15; Dan 4:21; Dan 4:23

בֹּר H1252 Prep-b / N-msc (5×)

Cleanness, pureness, innocence—moral purity of hands or conduct, used in declarations of blamelessness before God.

A masculine noun denoting cleanness or pureness, used exclusively in poetic declarations of innocence before God. David employs it in his victory psalm to affirm that God rewarded him 'according to the cleanness of my hands' (2 Sam 22:21, paralleled in Ps 18:20, 24), while Job 22:30 applies the image of 'cleanness of palms' to the innocent person whom God delivers. The Spanish 'limpieza' and 'pureza' together capture the dual nuance: both physical cleanliness and moral purity are in view, the outward hand symbolizing inward integrity.

(5×) Moral cleanness or purity, especially of one's hands as a symbol of blameless conduct before God. All five occurrences appear with body-part imagery—'cleanness of my hands' (2 Sam 22:21 = Ps 18:20; 2 Sam 22:25 = Ps 18:24) and 'cleanness of palms' (Job 22:30). Spanish distinguishes 'limpieza' (cleanness) from 'pureza' (purity), reflecting the word's range from concrete washing to abstract moral innocence. The construct phrase pattern (bor + body part) is fixed and formulaic in these texts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-cleanness-of, according-to-my-cleanness, according-to-the-cleanness-of | es: conforme-a-limpieza-de, conforme-a-mi-limpieza, por-la-pureza-de | fr: comme-pureté, dans-בבר, selon-à-mon-pureté | de: [בבר], gemaess-zu-cleanness-von, gemaess-zu-mein-cleanness 2Sam 22:21; 2Sam 22:25; Job 22:30; Ps 18:20; Ps 18:24

בֹּר H1253 Prep-k (2×)

lye, alkali, potash; cleansing agent used for washing, though application to metallurgy is debated

This term refers to an alkaline substance derived from plant ashes, used anciently for washing and potentially in refining metals. Isaiah mentions it in connection with purifying silver, though some scholars question whether lye was actually used in metal refining, suggesting textual corruption to 'as in a furnace.' Job speaks of washing with lye in the context of futile attempts at self-purification. The substance was made by mixing water with burnt plant ashes containing potash, creating a caustic solution for cleaning—the ancient world's soap.

(2×) An alkaline cleansing agent or lye (Job 9:30; Isaiah 1:25), used in contexts of purification. Job uses it metaphorically for attempted self-cleansing that cannot remove guilt. Isaiah's usage in a metallurgical context is textually disputed—some scholars suggest 'as in a furnace' rather than 'with lye' for the purifying process. The bracketed Hebrew in German and French shows translators' awareness of the interpretive challenges, while the basic sense of a powerful cleansing agent remains consistent. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING

en: as-with-lye, with-lye | es: como-con-lejía, con-lejía | fr: [כבר], dans-בבר | de: [בבר], [כבר] Job 9:30; Isa 1:25

בָּרָא H1254a V-Nifal-Inf / 2ms (53×)

To create (Qal), be created (Nifal), or cut down/clear (Piel); used exclusively of divine creation in Qal, with a wholly distinct Piel meaning of felling trees.

The verb bara (בָּרָא) is one of the most theologically loaded words in the Hebrew Bible. Its Qal stem is reserved exclusively for God as subject — no human ever 'creates' (bara) in the active voice. From the majestic opening of Genesis 1:1 ('In the beginning God created') through Isaiah's repeated declarations of God as Creator, this verb marks divine origination as categorically different from human craftsmanship. The participle boreh becomes a divine title — 'your Creator' (Isa 43:1), 'Creator of the ends of the earth' (Isa 40:28). Spanish and French track the Qal straightforwardly with 'creo/crea' and 'crea,' but the Nifal passive ('were created,' Gen 2:4) adds a theological dimension: the heavens and earth exist as things that were created — their createdness is their defining quality. The Piel stem presents a striking lexical surprise: it means 'to cut down' or 'clear' forested land (Josh 17:15, 18), entirely unrelated to creation. Arabic preserves this duality: bara'a means 'to create,' but the cognate bara means 'to cut, pare, shape by cutting.'

1. Qal: to create (25×) Qal active: to create by divine fiat, bringing into existence what was not. Used exclusively with God as subject — 25 occurrences spanning creation of heavens and earth (Gen 1:1), sea creatures and humanity (Gen 1:21, 27), and new things yet to come (Num 16:30, Isa 48:7). Spanish 'creo' and French 'crea' map directly. The verb implies effortless divine origination, distinguished from asah (to make) and yatsar (to form/fashion) by its restriction to God alone. Five times in Genesis 1:27–2:4 it punctuates the creation narrative with rising emphasis. CREATION AND MAKING

en: And-created, He-created-it, I-created | es: Y-creó, crea-, creé | fr: Et-créa, created, créa | de: [ברא], created, erschaffen Gen 1:1; Gen 1:21; Gen 1:27

2. Qal participle: Creator (13×) Qal participle used substantivally as a divine title: 'Creator.' Thirteen occurrences, overwhelmingly in Isaiah (40:28; 42:5; 43:1, 15; 45:7, 18; 65:17), establish boreh/bore'akha as a standing epithet for God. Spanish alternates between 'creador de' (Creator of) and 'el creador' (the Creator); German uses 'Schopfer.' The participle often appears in construct chains — 'Creator of the heavens,' 'Creator of Israel,' 'your Creator' — making divine creation not a past event but an ongoing identity. Ecclesiastes 12:1 uses the plural of majesty bore'ekha: 'Remember your Creator in the days of your youth.' CREATION AND MAKING

en: Creator-of, am-creating, and-Creator-of | es: creador-de, creo, el-creador | fr: créer, et-créer, בורא-toi | de: Schoepfer, [בוראיך], [וברא] Eccl 12:1; Isa 40:28; Isa 42:5; Isa 43:1; Isa 43:15

3. Nifal: to be created (10×) Nifal passive: to be created, to come into being by divine act. Ten occurrences mark the created status of things — the heavens and earth 'when they were created' (Gen 2:4); Adam and Eve 'in the day they were created' (Gen 5:2); a future people 'yet to be created' shall praise the LORD (Ps 102:18). Spanish uses 'fueron creados/creadas' (were created), and French 'avoir ete crea.' The passive voice shifts focus from God the actor to the creation as recipient, emphasizing the creaturely dependence of all that exists (Ps 104:30, Ezek 21:30, 28:13, 15). CREATION AND MAKING

en: and-they-were-created, being-created-them, have-been-created | es: cuando-fueron-creados, fueron-creadas, fuiste-creada | fr: avoir-été-créa, créer, et-créer | de: als-sie-geschaffen-wurden, doch-zu-sein-erschaffen, haben-gewesen-schuf Gen 2:4; Gen 5:2; Exod 34:10; Ps 102:18; Ps 104:30

4. Piel: to cut down, clear (5×) Piel: to cut down trees or clear forested land for settlement. Five occurrences, all in concrete contexts: Joshua tells Ephraim to 'clear' the forest in the hill country (Josh 17:15) and promises they shall 'cut it down' (Josh 17:18). Ezekiel 21:19 and 23:47 extend the cutting imagery to violent destruction. The Arabic cognate bara (to cut, pare a reed for writing, shape a stick for an arrow) preserves this older physical sense. Spanish uses 'talar' (to fell) and 'cortar' (to cut), clearly distinguishing this from the creation vocabulary. The semantic gap between Qal 'create' and Piel 'cut down' is among the most dramatic stem-meaning splits in Hebrew. CREATION AND MAKING

en: and-clear, and-clear-it, and-cut-them-down | es: traza, y-cortarán, y-lo-talarás | fr: créer, et-clear, et-clear-il | de: schaffen, und-clear, und-clear-es Josh 17:15; Josh 17:18; Ezek 21:19; Ezek 23:47

בָּרְאָ H1254b Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf / 2mp (1×)

To make yourselves fat (Hiphil infinitive construct with suffix, from root meaning to be fat)

This Hiphil infinitive appears in 1 Samuel 2:29, in God's accusation against Eli's sons for taking the best portions of sacrifices 'to make yourselves fat' (le-havri'akhem). The root 'bara' (II) means to be fat or well-fed, and the Hiphil causative means to fatten or make fat. The accusation is that Eli's sons were using their priestly office for self-indulgence, fattening themselves on offerings meant for God. This dietary abuse symbolizes their larger spiritual corruption and greed.

(1×) A Hiphil infinitive construct with second-person plural suffix meaning 'to make yourselves fat' or 'to fatten yourselves,' from the root 'bara' (to be fat). In 1 Samuel 2:29, God rebukes Eli for allowing his sons to gorge themselves on sacrificial meat, dishonoring the offerings. The causative Hiphil emphasizes deliberate self-indulgence. Multilingual renderings vary (para-engordaron 'for they fattened,' to-make-yourselves-fat, à-fais-vous-mêmes-fat) but all capture the accusation of priestly gluttony and misuse of sacred portions for personal appetite. FAT AND RICHNESS

en: to-make-yourselves-fat | es: para-engordaron | fr: à-fais-vous-mêmes-fat | de: zu-mache-euch-selbst-fat 1Sam 2:29

מְרֹדַךְ בִּלְאֲדָן H1255 N-proper-ms (1×)

Berodach-Baladan (also Merodach-Baladan), a Babylonian king who sent envoys to Hezekiah

This royal name appears in 2 Kings 20:12 (the parallel in Isaiah 39:1 has 'Merodach-Baladan'). He was a Chaldean king of Babylon who rebelled against Assyria and sent envoys to Hezekiah, perhaps seeking an anti-Assyrian alliance. The Assyrian form is Marduk-apla-iddina ('Marduk has given a son'). The variant 'Berodach' likely represents a textual corruption or dialectal pronunciation of 'Merodach' (the Babylonian god Marduk). This incident led to Isaiah's prophecy of Babylonian exile.

(1×) A royal name for the Babylonian king also known as Merodach-Baladan (Assyrian: Marduk-apla-iddina), appearing in 2 Kings 20:12. The name means 'Marduk has given a son' and refers to a Chaldean ruler who sought alliance with Judah against Assyria. The 'Berodach' variant likely represents textual variation or dialectal pronunciation of 'Merodach.' Multilingual evidence consistently transliterates (Berodach-Baladan, Berodac-Baladán), preserving the foreign royal name that introduces the fateful embassy triggering Isaiah's prophecy of coming Babylonian conquest. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12407 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Berodach-Baladan | es: Berodac-Baladán | fr: Berodach-Baladan | de: Berodach-Baladan 2Kgs 20:12

בְּרָאיָה H1256 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

And Beraiah, a Benjamite whose name means 'Yahweh has created'

This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 8:21, within the genealogies of Benjamin. BDB interprets the name as a theophoric compound meaning 'Yahweh has created,' combining the verb 'bara' (to create) with the divine name ending '-yah.' The name affirms God as creator, similar to names like Jeremiah. It appears in a list of Benjamite leaders who lived in Jerusalem. Such theophoric names often reflected parental faith or thanksgiving at a child's birth.

(1×) A personal name meaning 'Yahweh has created,' borne by a Benjamite in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles 8:21. The name combines the creative verb 'bara' (to create, particularly of divine creation in Genesis 1) with the theophoric element '-yah' (Yahweh). This reflects the belief that God creates each person. Multilingual renderings (Berayah, Berayas) transliterate the name, with some preserving Hebrew script, typical of proper nouns. The theological significance of divine creation embedded in personal names reflects Israelite theology. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Berayah | es: y-Berayas | fr: [ובראיה] | de: [ובראיה] 1Chr 8:21

בַּרְבֻּרִים H1257 Conj-w / N-mp (1×)

And fattened fowl, birds raised for Solomon's royal table

This plural noun appears in 1 Kings 4:23 (English 5:3), listing the daily provisions for Solomon's household: 'fattened oxen and twenty pasture-fed cattle and a hundred sheep, besides deer, gazelles, roebucks, and fattened fowl' (barburim). The exact species is debated—suggestions include capons, geese (from white feathers), swans, guinea-fowl, or simply 'fatted birds.' The context is Solomon's legendary wealth and abundant table. Whatever the specific bird, these were choice poultry fattened for royal consumption.

(1×) A plural noun for fattened fowl or choice poultry, appearing in the catalog of Solomon's lavish daily provisions (1 Kings 4:23). The exact bird species remains uncertain—proposals include geese, capons, swans, or guinea-fowl—but all agree these were birds specially fattened for the royal table. Multilingual translations (aves, fattened-fowl) generally render it generically as 'fowl' or 'birds,' acknowledging the uncertainty while preserving the sense of luxury and abundance that characterized Solomon's court. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fattened-fowl | es: y-aves | fr: et-fattened-fowl | de: und-fattened-fowl 1Kgs 4:23

בָּרַד H1258 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)

And it shall hail (denominal verb from 'barad'/hail, describing future judgment)

This verb appears in Isaiah 32:19, in a prophecy about coming judgment: 'And it shall hail when the forest falls' (u-varad beredet ha-ya'ar). The verb is denominative, formed from the noun 'barad' (hail), meaning 'to hail' or 'to come down as hail.' Isaiah uses hail as a weapon of divine judgment, similar to the plague of hail in Exodus. The forest likely represents proud human power that God will bring low. The unusual verb form emphasizes the suddenness and violence of hailstorm judgment.

(1×) A Qal waw-consecutive perfect verb meaning 'and it shall hail,' formed from the noun 'barad' (hail). In Isaiah 32:19, it appears in a judgment oracle where God brings down the forest (symbolizing proud enemies) with devastating hailstorm. The denominative verb (noun → verb) is rare, occurring only here. Multilingual renderings (granizará 'it will hail,' it-shall-hail) capture the future judgment sense. The hail weapon recalls Exodus plagues and Joshua 10:11, where God fights for Israel with hailstones. HAIL WEATHER

en: And-it-shall-hail | es: y-granizará | fr: [וברד] | de: [וברד] Isa 32:19

בָּרָד H1259 Art / N-ms (29×)

Hail, hailstones—a destructive weather phenomenon wielded as divine judgment

The Hebrew noun בָּרָד denotes hailstones, appearing most prominently in the seventh plague upon Egypt (Exod 9:18-34), where it falls mingled with fire and thunder in an unprecedented storm. Beyond the Exodus narrative, hail serves as a weapon of theophanic judgment: God hurls 'great stones from heaven' at the Amorites (Josh 10:11), stores hail in divine armories (Job 38:22), and deploys it eschatologically (Isa 28:2, 17; Ezek 38:22; Hag 2:17). The Arabic cognate ʾ and Aramaic בְּרַד confirm the Semitic root's consistent meteorological reference. Every occurrence in Scripture frames hail as God's sovereign instrument.

hail (weather phenomenon) (29×) Hailstones as a destructive natural phenomenon under divine control, used as an instrument of judgment. The Exodus plague narrative (Exod 9:18-34) provides the densest cluster, with hail paired with thunder, rain, and fire. Joshua 10:11 describes lethal hailstones killing more Amorites than Israel's swords. The Psalms celebrate this divine arsenal (Ps 18:13, 78:47-48, 105:32, 148:8), and the prophets deploy hail imagery for eschatological devastation (Isa 28:2, 17; Ezek 13:11-13, 38:22). HAIL WEATHER

en: and-hail, and-the-hail, hail | es: el-granizo, granizo, y-el-granizo | fr: dans-grêle, et-grêle, et-le-grêle | de: Hagel, [ברד], der-Hagel Exod 9:18; Exod 9:19; Exod 9:22; Exod 9:23

בֶּרֶד H1260 N-proper-fs (2×)

Bered, a place near Kadesh in the Negev and also a personal name of an Ephraimite

Bered serves as both a geographical and personal name in Scripture. As a location, it marks a site in the southern wilderness near Kadesh where Hagar encountered the angel of the LORD at a well—the well was named Beer-lahai-roi, with Bered providing the geographical context. The same name appears much later as an Ephraimite in the genealogies of Chronicles. Whether there's any connection between the person and the place remains unknown, though naming children after significant locations was common in ancient Israel.

(2×) A dual-function name designating both a wilderness location near Kadesh (Genesis 16:14) and an Ephraimite individual (1 Chronicles 7:20). The geographical use situates the well where Hagar met God's messenger. Translations uniformly transliterate the name, with some adding 'and' where it appears in construct with another name. The shared name across such different contexts—desert geography and tribal genealogy—shows how names could migrate between places and people in ancient Near Eastern culture. HAIL WEATHER

en: Bered, and-Bered | es: Bered, y-Béred | fr: Bered, [וברד] | de: Bered, [וברד] Gen 16:14; 1Chr 7:20

בָּרֹד H1261 Conj-w (4×)

Spotted, dappled, marked with patches of color (of livestock and horses)

Describes animals whose coats display irregular patches or spots of contrasting color. The word appears in Genesis alongside two companion adjectives — 'streaked' and 'speckled' — in Jacob's negotiations with Laban over flocks (Gen 31:10, 12). In Zechariah 6:3, 6 it describes one team of horses among the four chariots emerging from between mountains of bronze. The root may connect to 'hail' (barad), suggesting a coat 'sprinkled' with marks as if pelted by hailstones.

(4×) Spotted or dappled in coat color, used of sheep, goats, and horses. In Gen 31:10, 12 the word forms a triad with 'streaked' (aqqudim) and 'speckled' (nequddim), each denoting a distinct coat pattern among Jacob's divinely favored livestock. In Zech 6:3, 6 it describes horses pulling apocalyptic chariots. Spanish renders it 'manchados' (blotched) and 'grises' (grey-mottled), while French uses 'tacheté' (spotted), both capturing the core idea of irregular markings. The Syriac cognate bardā (hail-marked) supports the etymological link to precipitation imagery. SPOTTED SPECKLED

en: and-speckled, and-the-spotted, spotted | es: manchados, y-grises, y-los-manchados | fr: et-speckled, et-tacheté, tacheté | de: [ברדים], [והברדים], und-scheckige Gen 31:10; Gen 31:12; Zech 6:3; Zech 6:6

בָּרָה H1262 Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf (7×)

To eat, take food; also to choose or select — a rare Hebrew verb for eating (distinct from common akal), with one instance meaning 'choose.'

Barah is a relatively rare verb whose primary sense is 'to eat' or 'to take food,' appearing almost exclusively in the David narratives of 2 Samuel. It functions across multiple stems: Qal 'to eat' (2 Sam 12:17; 13:6, 10), Hiphil 'to cause to eat, to feed' (2 Sam 3:35; 13:5), and Piel 'for devouring' (Lam 4:10). A single occurrence in 1 Sam 17:8 carries the entirely different meaning 'choose' — Goliath's challenge beru lakem ish ('choose for yourselves a man') — which some scholars attribute to a separate root or a scribal variation. The Spanish translations helpfully distinguish 'comió' (ate) from 'elegid' (choose), reflecting this semantic split.

1. eat, take food (6×) To eat, take food, or cause to eat (feed). Used across Qal, Hiphil, and Piel stems in contexts of nourishment and sustenance. In 2 Sam 12:17, David's servants cannot persuade him to eat bread (barah) during his child's illness. In the Tamar narrative (2 Sam 13:5-10), Amnon manipulates the verb's Hiphil form — 'let her feed me' (tabreni) — to lure his sister. The Hiphil infinitive lehabrot in 2 Sam 3:35 describes attempts to make David eat during mourning. Spanish 'comió' and 'para-hacer-comer' capture the Qal and Hiphil distinction well. EATING AND CONSUMING

en: and-I-will-eat, and-let-her-feed-me, food | es: comió, para-hacer-comer, por-comida | fr: [לברות], et-je-fera-mange, et-que-sa-nourris-moi | de: [לברות], er-ass, und-ich-wird-iss 2Sam 3:35; 2Sam 12:17; 2Sam 13:5; 2Sam 13:6; 2Sam 13:10

2. choose, select (1×) To choose, select. Attested only in 1 Sam 17:8, where Goliath issues his famous challenge: beru lakem ish, 'choose for yourselves a man.' Spanish 'elegid' and French 'choisis' render this imperative clearly. Many scholars consider this a distinct root (barah II) rather than a semantic extension of 'eat,' and BDB itself notes the possibility of scribal confusion with bahar ('to choose'). Regardless of etymology, the context is unmistakable: selection of a champion for single combat. CHOOSING AND SELECTING en: choose | es: elegid- | fr: choisis | de: erwaehle 1Sam 17:8

בָּרוּךְ H1263 N-proper-ms (26×)

Baruch — 'blessed'; the name of Jeremiah's scribe and several post-exilic figures

Barukh is a Hebrew proper name meaning 'blessed,' derived from the root b-r-k that permeates Israel's liturgical vocabulary. Its 26 occurrences refer to at least three distinct individuals, though one dominates biblical memory. Baruch son of Neriah son of Mahseiah was the faithful friend, secretary, and amanuensis of the prophet Jeremiah. He wrote Jeremiah's dictated oracles on a scroll, read them publicly in the temple, and rewrote them after King Jehoiakim defiantly cut and burned the first copy (Jer 36:4-32). He witnessed Jeremiah's purchase of the field at Anathoth as a sign of future restoration (Jer 32:12-16), was accused of inciting Jeremiah against the people (Jer 43:3), and went into Egyptian exile with the prophet. YHWH addresses him directly with a message of consolation and warning (Jer 45:1-5). In Nehemiah, a different Baruch son of Zabbai repaired a section of Jerusalem's wall with notable zeal (Neh 3:20), and a Baruch son of Col-Hozeh is listed among Judahite settlers (Neh 11:5). A priestly Baruch appears among the covenant sealers (Neh 10:6).

(26×) A Hebrew proper name meaning 'blessed' (from b-r-k), borne primarily by Baruch son of Neriah, Jeremiah's devoted scribe who wrote, read publicly, and rewrote the prophetic scroll after its destruction by Jehoiakim (Jer 36:4-32), witnessed the Anathoth field purchase (Jer 32:12-16), and accompanied Jeremiah into Egyptian exile (Jer 43:3, 6). Also designates Baruch son of Zabbai who zealously repaired Jerusalem's wall (Neh 3:20), a priestly covenant sealer (Neh 10:6), and a Judahite settler (Neh 11:5). The LXX renders the name as Barouch. BLESSING AND PRAISE

en: Baruch, Barukh | es: Baruc, Baruj, Baruk | fr: Baruc | de: Baruch, [ברוך] Neh 3:20; Neh 10:6; Neh 11:5; Jer 32:12; Jer 32:13

בִּרְמִים H1264 N-mp (1×)

Rich apparel, variegated cloth (possibly multicolored or brocaded fabric)

This plural noun appears in Ezekiel 27:24, in the lament over Tyre's trading wealth: 'in chests of rich apparel' (be-ginzei beromim). The root is related to Arabic words for rope or fabric of two strands/colors, and Assyrian terms for special clothing or iris (suggesting colorful patterns). BDB suggests 'variegated cloth' or special woven textiles. The context is Tyre's luxury trade in fine fabrics. These were expensive, ornately decorated textiles—perhaps brocades or richly colored cloth.

(1×) A plural noun for rich or variegated cloth, possibly multicolored or brocaded fabric, appearing in Ezekiel 27:24's catalog of Tyre's luxury goods. The term relates to Arabic 'barim' (two-strand rope/fabric) and Assyrian 'birmu/burmu' (special clothing, iris-colored), suggesting elaborate weaving or coloring. The 'chests' (ginzei) containing these textiles indicate precious commodities. Multilingual renderings (tejidos-preciosos 'precious fabrics,' rich-apparel, brocart) recognize the luxury status, though the exact weaving technique or pattern remains uncertain. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: rich-apparel | es: tejidos-preciosos | fr: brocart | de: [ברמים] Ezek 27:24

בְּרוֹשׁ H1265 Conj-w (20×)

Cypress tree — a tall conifer prized for timber in temple building and shipmaking

Refers to the cypress (or possibly fir or juniper), a stately conifer that grew on the mountains of Lebanon and was highly valued for its fine, durable wood. Solomon imported cypress timber alongside cedar for the construction of the temple (1 Kgs 5:8, 10; 6:15, 34), and it was used for musical instruments at celebrations (2 Sam 6:5). The precise botanical identification has been debated since antiquity — the Septuagint and Syriac favor cypress, while Jerome's Vulgate leans toward fir or pine — but the Hebrew Bible consistently treats it as a premier building timber second only to cedar.

cypress tree (20×) The cypress tree (בְּרוֹשׁ), a tall conifer of the Lebanon and surrounding regions whose timber was highly esteemed for sacred and royal construction. David's musicians played instruments of cypress wood (2 Sam 6:5); Solomon ordered cypress alongside cedar for the temple floors and doors (1 Kgs 5:8–10; 6:15, 34). Spanish uniformly renders 'ciprés/cipreses,' while French and German sometimes leave the Hebrew untransliterated, reflecting ongoing botanical uncertainty. Hosea 14:9 uses the evergreen cypress as a metaphor for God's faithful provision. FOREST WOODLAND
en: and-the-cypresses, cypress, cypresses | es: Cipreses, cipres, cipreses | fr: [ברושים], cypress, cypresses | de: [ברוש], [ברושים], [ברשין] 2Sam 6:5; 1Kgs 5:8; 1Kgs 5:10; 1Kgs 6:15; 1Kgs 6:34

בְּרוֹת H1266 N-mp (1×)

Cypresses (or possibly juniper/fir), evergreen trees mentioned parallel to cedars

This plural noun appears in Song of Songs 1:17, where the lovers describe their rustic bower: 'the beams of our house are cedars, our rafters are cypresses' (berotim). The word is an Aramaic or northern Palestinian form of the Hebrew word for cypress, fir, or juniper —evergreen trees used in construction. The parallel with cedars suggests noble, fragrant wood. The lovers imagine their outdoor meeting place as a palace with cedar beams and cypress rafters, elevating rustic nature to royal architecture through the language of love.

(1×) A plural noun for cypress trees (or possibly fir/juniper), an Aramaic form appearing in Song of Songs 1:17. The term parallels 'cedars,' suggesting valuable evergreen timber used for construction. In the Song's metaphorical architecture, these trees form the 'rafters' of the lovers' natural bower, lending fragrance and nobility to their outdoor meeting place. Multilingual renderings (cipreses, cypresses, cyprès) generally identify the trees as cypress, though the exact species of evergreen remains debated among botanists and translators. FOREST WOODLAND
en: cypresses | es: cipreses | fr: cyprès. | de: [ברותים] Song 1:17

בָּרוֹת H1267 Prep-b / N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

For my food (prepositional phrase with first-person suffix from noun meaning food)

This word appears in Psalm 69:21, in a lament of the suffering righteous: 'They gave me poison for my food' (be-varuti). The noun 'barut' means food or nourishment, related to the root 'to eat' or 'to consume.' With the preposition 'for' and first-person suffix 'my,' it describes what should have been sustenance but became poisoning. The psalm is messianic, later applied to Christ's passion (vinegar and gall). The replacement of nourishing food with poison epitomizes the reversal of care into cruelty.

(1×) A prepositional phrase meaning 'for my food' or 'as my nourishment,' appearing in Psalm 69:21 where the psalmist laments receiving poison instead of food. The noun 'barut' (food) with beth preposition and first-person suffix creates the sense of 'in place of my food' or 'when I needed food.' This psalm of innocent suffering was read messianically, with this verse connected to Jesus receiving vinegar at the crucifixion. Multilingual renderings (en-mi-comida, for-my-food, dans-nourriture) capture the expected-nourishment-turned-poison theme. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT
en: for-my-food | es: en-mi-comida | fr: dans-nourriture | de: für-mein-Speise Ps 69:21

בְּרוֹתָה H1268a N-proper-fs (1×)

Berotah, a place name near Hamath, possibly meaning 'wells' or related to Berytus

This place name appears in Ezekiel 47:16, in the description of Israel's northern boundary near Hamath. BDB suggests it may be a contraction of 'Be'erotah' (from 'well/spring'). Some scholars proposed identifying it with Berytus (modern Beirut), but this is geographically unlikely. More probably it refers to Bereitan near Baalbek. The site marked the northern extent of restored Israel in Ezekiel's visionary borders. The etymology remains uncertain, though the 'be'er' (well) connection is plausible.

(1×) A place name appearing in Ezekiel 47:16 as a boundary marker near Hamath in the prophet's vision of restored Israel's northern borders. The name possibly derives from 'be'er' (well), suggesting 'place of wells.' Identification with Beirut (Berytus) is unlikely; Bereitan near Baalbek is more plausible. Multilingual renderings (Berotá, Berotah, Bérothah) simply transliterate, reflecting the proper-noun status and ongoing uncertainty about the exact location and etymology of this border town. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Berotah | es: Berotá | fr: Bérothah | de: [ברותה] Ezek 47:16

בְּרֹתַי H1268b Conj-w (1×)

And from Berothai, a city belonging to Hadadezer of Zobah, possibly same as Berotah

This place name appears in 2 Samuel 8:8, in the account of David's victory over Hadadezer of Zobah. David took bronze from 'Betah and from Berothai' (u-mi-Berotai), cities that belonged to Hadadezer. BDB suggests this may be the same location as Berotah in Ezekiel 47:16, though the spellings differ slightly. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 18:8 calls it 'Cun.' These were significant bronze-producing cities whose wealth David seized for temple construction.

(1×) A place name with prefixed preposition meaning 'and from Berothai,' appearing in 2 Samuel 8:8 as a city of Hadadezer from which David took bronze. The site is possibly identical to Berotah (Ezekiel 47:16), though 1 Chronicles 18:8 uses 'Cun' for the same location, indicating textual variation or multiple names. The bronze from this city later contributed to temple furnishings. Multilingual renderings (y-de-Berotai, and-from-Berothai, et-de-Berothai) preserve the prepositional phrase indicating source/origin of the captured bronze. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-from-Berothai | es: y-de-Berotai | fr: et-de-Berothai | de: und-von-Berothai 2Sam 8:8

ברזות H1269 N-proper-ms (2×)

Birzaith/Birzoth, descendant of Asher; name appears with textual variant between Ketiv and Qere readings

This name appears in Asher's genealogy with a textual variant: the Ketiv (written text) reads Birzoth while the Qere (reading tradition) gives Birzaith. The name's meaning is uncertain, though suggestions include connections to Aramaic words for 'perforation' or Arabic terms for visible beauty. Such feminine-sounding names occasionally appear in genealogies, possibly indicating either a woman among the listed descendants or a place name. The textual variation shows how manuscript traditions sometimes preserved competing forms.

(2×) A name in Asher's genealogy (1 Chronicles 7:31), appearing in variant forms between written and read texts. The Ketiv reading (Birzoth) differs from the Qere (Birzaith), a typical pattern for proper names where scribal traditions diverged. Spanish indicates the parenthetical Birzavit reading, while other translations bracket both Hebrew forms to show the textual complexity. The name's meaning and whether it designates a person or place remains uncertain, demonstrating how genealogical lists sometimes preserved names whose original significance became obscure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Birzayit, [ketiv] | es: (Birzavit), [Birzot] | fr: [ברזות], [ברזית] | de: [ברזות], [ברזית] 1Chr 7:31

בַּרְזֶל H1270 Conj-w (76×)

Iron — the metal in raw, worked, or figurative form, signifying strength, hardness, and unyielding severity.

Barzel denotes iron across its full material and metaphorical range in the Hebrew Bible. It appears as raw ore extracted from stone (Deut 8:9; Job 28:2), as worked metal fashioned into tools, weapons, and chariots (Josh 17:16; Judg 4:3), and as an article of commerce (Ezek 27:12, 19). Figuratively, iron becomes the Bible's chief image of hardness and oppression — the 'iron furnace' of Egypt (Deut 4:20), the 'iron yoke' of servitude (Deut 28:48), and the 'iron rod' of sovereign rule (Ps 2:9). Cognates in Aramaic (parzel), Akkadian (parzillu), and Arabic (firzil) confirm its ancient Near Eastern pedigree. Every modern rendering — English 'iron,' Spanish hierro, French fer, German Eisen — points to one semantic core.

1. iron (metal, tools, weapons, material) (63×) Split from sense 88054. Criteria: Literal uses: raw ore, worked metal, tools, weapons, chariots, fetters, implements, gates (Gen 4:22; Josh 17:16; Deut 8:9)

en: iron | es: Hierro, hierro, hierro; | fr: fer | de: Eisen Gen 4:22; Num 31:22; Num 35:16; Deut 3:11; Deut 8:9

2. iron (figurative: strength, hardness, severity) (13×) Split from sense 88054. Criteria: Metaphorical uses expressing strength, oppression, unyielding severity: 'iron furnace' of Egypt (Deut 4:20), 'iron yoke' (Deut 28:48), 'iron sinews' (Isa 48:4)

en: iron, like-iron, of-iron | es: como-hierro, el-hierro, hierro | fr: comme-fer, dans-fer, fer | de: Eisen, der-Eisen, wie-Eisen Lev 26:19; Deut 4:20; Deut 28:23; Deut 28:48; 1Kgs 8:51

בַּרְזִלַּי H1271 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (12×)

Barzillai – a proper name, chiefly the wealthy Gileadite who supported David during Absalom's revolt

Barzillai (barzillay, 'man of iron,' from barzel, 'iron') is a proper name borne principally by Barzillai the Gileadite, an elderly and wealthy man from Rogelim who provided provisions for David and his entourage during their flight from Absalom across the Jordan (2 Sam 17:27-29). When David returned in triumph, the eighty-year-old Barzillai met him at the Jordan but declined the king's invitation to come to Jerusalem, pleading his age and diminished senses (2 Sam 19:31-39). David charged Solomon to show loyalty to Barzillai's sons (1 Kgs 2:7). A priestly family also bore this name, having intermarried with Barzillai's descendants (Ezra 2:61; Neh 7:63). Spanish Barzilai, French Barzillai, and German Barsillai preserve the name across traditions.

Barzillai (personal name) (12×) A proper name, primarily designating Barzillai the Gileadite, the aged benefactor who sustained David during Absalom's rebellion (2 Sam 17:27; 19:31-39; 1 Kgs 2:7). Also borne by a priestly family linked to his descendants (Ezra 2:61; Neh 7:63). All target languages transliterate the name with minor phonological variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Barzillai, Barzillay, and-Barzillai | es: Barzilai, Y-Barzilai, a-Barzilai | fr: Barzillai, [ברזלי], et-Barzillai | de: Barzillai, [ברזלי], und-Barzillai 2Sam 17:27; 2Sam 19:31; 2Sam 19:32; 2Sam 19:33; 2Sam 19:34

בָּרַח H1272 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (65×)

To flee or run away; in Hifil, to chase away or put to flight; also of a bar that runs through or passes across.

This Hebrew verb captures the urgent motion of escape — Jacob fleeing from Laban (Gen 31:21), Hagar running from Sarah (Gen 16:6), Jonah bolting toward Tarshish to evade God's call (Jon 1:3). The basic Qal sense 'to flee' dominates, while the Hifil causative reverses the direction: someone is driven away or put to flight. A fascinating concrete usage appears in the tabernacle instructions (Exod 26:28; 36:33), where a bar 'runs through' the boards from end to end — the same root, now describing a bolt passing through rather than a person running away. French and German leave these latter occurrences untranslated in brackets, showing translators wrestling with this architectural metaphor.

1. flee, run away (Qal) (58×) The core Qal meaning: to flee, run away, or escape from danger, pursuit, or hardship. This is by far the most frequent usage (58 of 65 occurrences), spanning patriarchal narratives (Gen 27:43; 31:20-22), prophetic oracles (Isa 48:20), and wisdom literature (Job 9:25; 27:22). All major translations converge — English 'fled,' Spanish 'huyó,' French 'fuit,' German 'floh' — confirming a stable, universally recognized sense of panicked or purposeful flight. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: and-fled, and-he-fled, fled | es: Y-huyó, huyó, y-huyó | fr: [ברח], avait-fuit, et-fuit | de: [ברח], er-floh, floh Gen 27:43; Gen 31:20; Gen 31:21; Gen 31:22; Gen 31:27

2. drive away, put to flight (Hifil) (5×) The Hifil (causative) stem: to make someone flee, to drive away or put to flight. In 1 Chronicles 8:13 the men of Gath are routed, and in Proverbs 19:26 a shameful son 'chases away' his mother. Spanish 'hicieron huir' ('they made flee') and German 'fliehen' transparently mark the causative force, while French often resorts to bracketed Hebrew forms, suggesting the nuance is harder to capture in a single French word. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: and-I-chased-him, and-put-to-flight, can-make-him-flee | es: e-hicieron-huir, hace-huir, hicieron-huir | fr: [הבריחו], [ואבריחהו], [ויבריחו] | de: [הבריחו], [ויבריחו], fliehen 1Chr 8:13; 1Chr 12:16; Neh 13:28; Job 41:28; Prov 19:26

3. (1×) A specialized constructional use where the bar of the tabernacle 'passes through' the boards (Exod 36:33). The infinitive construct with lamed indicates purpose or process — the bar is made to run through the middle of the frames. English 'to run' and Spanish 'para atravesar' ('to pass through') reveal this is not flight but linear traversal, a concrete spatial extension of the root's motion semantics. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: to-run | es: para-atravesar | fr: à-courir | de: zu-run Exod 36:33

4. (1×) The participial form describing a bar 'running' or 'passing across' the tabernacle structure (Exod 26:28). Closely related to sense 3 but syntactically distinct as an active participle. English 'running' and Spanish 'atravesando' ('crossing through') confirm the ongoing, spatial character of this architectural description — the middle bar continuously spans the full length of the frame. RUNNING AND RACING

en: running | es: atravesando | fr: courant | de: laufend Exod 26:28

בַּרְחֻמִי H1273 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

The Barhumite, a gentilicadjective for someone from Bahurim (textual variant)

This gentilicadjective appears in 2 Samuel 23:31, describing Azmaveth 'the Barhumite' among David's mighty men. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:33 has 'the Baharumite,' and most scholars believe the original reading was 'the Baharumite/Bahurimite' (from the town Bahurim). BDB notes this is likely a textual corruption, and Driver suggests reading 'ha-Baharimi' instead. Bahurim was a Benjamite town where Shimei cursed David (2 Samuel 16). The designation identifies Azmaveth's hometown.

(1×) A gentilicadjective with the definite article meaning 'the Barhumite' or 'the one from Bahurim,' appearing in 2 Samuel 23:31 to identify Azmaveth's origin. Scholars recognize this as a textual variant of 'Baharumite/Bahurimite' (from Bahurim), supported by the Chronicles parallel. Bahurim was a Benjamite village near the Mount of Olives. Multilingual renderings (barjumita, Barhumite) transliterate the gentilicform, which functions as an identifying surname showing geographic origin within David's military roster. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Barhumite | es: el-barjumita | fr: le-Barhumite | de: der-Barhumite 2Sam 23:31

בָּרִיא H1274 Adj-fs (1×)

Fat, well-fed (adjective describing cattle, sheep, people, or food as plump and prosperous)

This adjective appears in multiple contexts describing fatness: Pharaoh's fat cows (Genesis 41), Solomon's fat cattle (1 Kings 5:3), fat sheep (Ezekiel 34:3, 20; Zechariah 11:16), a fat man (Eglon in Judges 3:17), and fat food (Habakkuk 1:16). The root conveys health, prosperity, and abundance. In agricultural contexts, fat animals represented wealth and offering-quality livestock. Metaphorically, fatness could indicate complacency (Psalm 73:4) or blessing. The word captures the physical reality of well-fed, thriving condition.

(1×) An adjective meaning 'fat' or 'well-fed,' describing animals (cattle, sheep), people, or food characterized by plumpness and prosperity. The term appears across contexts: Pharaoh's dream-cows (Genesis 41), Solomon's provisions (1 Kings 5:3), Ezekiel's critique of fat sheep devouring the lean (Ezekiel 34:20), and even Eglon's corpulence (Judges 3:17). Multilingual renderings (gorda, fat, gras) uniformly recognize the physical sense of fatness. In ancient agrarian society, fat livestock indicated blessing and abundance, though prophetic texts sometimes critique the fat (prosperous) who oppress the lean (poor). FATNESS AND RICHNESS

en: fat | es: gorda | fr: gras | de: [בריה] Ezek 34:20

בְּרִי H1275 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

And Beri, a descendant of Asher, possibly meaning 'my well' or related to Be'eri

This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 7:36, in the genealogies of Asher. BDB suggests it may be equivalent to 'Be'eri' (meaning 'my well'), a name borne by Hosea's father. The name is brief and its etymology uncertain, though the 'be'er' (well) root is plausible. It appears in a genealogical list establishing Asherite lineages. The name's simplicity and well-connection fit the pattern of place-based or resource-based personal names in ancient Israel.

(1×) A personal name borne by a descendant of Asher in 1 Chronicles 7:36, possibly meaning 'my well' or related to the name Be'eri. The etymology, while uncertain, likely connects to 'be'er' (well/spring), following the pattern of names derived from water sources. Multilingual renderings (Berí, Beri) simply transliterate, with some preserving Hebrew script, reflecting the proper-noun status and minimal attestation. The name fits among Asherite tribal genealogies documenting family lineages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Beri | es: y-Berí | fr: [וברי] | de: [וברי] 1Chr 7:36

בְּרִים H1276 Art / N-proper-mp (1×)

The Berites, an obscure group or place mentioned in 2 Samuel 20:14 (textual difficulty)

This plural form appears in 2 Samuel 20:14, in the account of Sheba's rebellion against David. The text is problematic: 'and all the Berites' (kol-ha-Berim) assembled. Many scholars, following the Vulgate, read 'Bichrites' (followers of Bichri, Sheba's clan). The Septuagint suggests 'chosen men' (bachrim). Others propose 'Bichrim' or emend to another reading. The Masoretic 'Berites' may preserve an otherwise unknown place or clan name, but textual uncertainty makes confident interpretation difficult. Context suggests supporters who joined Sheba's revolt.

(1×) An uncertain plural term in 2 Samuel 20:14, either referring to 'the Berites' (an otherwise unknown group/location) or representing a textual corruption. Proposed emendations include 'Bichrites' (Sheba's clan), 'chosen men,' or 'Bichrrim.' The context—supporters gathering to Sheba ben Bichri's rebellion—suggests either his kinsmen or men from a specific location. Multilingual renderings (berim, Berites) often transliterate, acknowledging the textual difficulty. Commentaries generally favor emendation to 'Bichrites' or 'chosen men' based on ancient versions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Berites | es: los-berim | fr: le-Berites | de: der-Berites 2Sam 20:14

בָּרִיא H1277 Art / Adj-fp (13×)

Fat, plump, well-fed; describing healthy, well-nourished livestock or persons.

An adjective meaning fat, plump, or well-nourished. It appears prominently in Pharaoh's dream, where seven fat cows emerge from the Nile before being devoured by seven lean ones (Gen 41:2, 4, 5, 7, 18, 20). The term extends to fatted livestock in temple and royal contexts (1 Kgs 5:3; Ezek 34:3, 20; Zech 11:16) and even to the healthy appearance of Daniel and his companions after their vegetable diet (Dan 1:15). In Psalm 73:4 it describes the prosperous wicked whose bodies are 'fat.' Spanish 'gordas' and German 'die fetten' confirm the straightforward physical sense of plumpness and prosperity.

fat, well-fed (13×) Plump, fleshy, and well-nourished, describing animals or people in a state of robust health or abundance. Most memorable in Pharaoh's dream of seven fat cows (Gen 41:2–20), the adjective also characterizes fattened livestock destined for royal tables (1 Kgs 5:3) and prosperous sheep in Ezekiel's shepherd allegory (Ezek 34:3, 20). Applied to persons, it describes Eglon the fat king of Moab (Judg 3:17), the healthy complexion of Daniel (Dan 1:15), and the sleek prosperity of the wicked (Ps 73:4). FATNESS AND RICHNESS

en: and-fat, and-fat-of, and-the-fat | es: abundante, engordados, gordas-de | fr: dans-il-a-vu, et-dans-gras, et-graisse-de | de: [הבריאה], [ובריא'], die-fetten Gen 41:2; Gen 41:4; Gen 41:5; Gen 41:7; Gen 41:18

בְּרִיאָה H1278 N-fs (1×)

A creation, an unprecedented thing (feminine noun used in Numbers 16 for God's unique judgment)

This feminine noun appears in Numbers 16:30, during Korah's rebellion. Moses declares: 'But if Yahweh creates a creation' (im-beri'ah yivra Yahweh)—meaning if God does something unprecedented—then the earth will swallow the rebels. The word comes from 'bara' (to create), used of divine creation in Genesis 1. Here it means an unparalleled, preternatural act demonstrating divine judgment. The cognate accusative construction ('creates a creation') emphasizes the novelty and miraculous nature of what is about to happen—the ground opening to swallow Korah alive.

(1×) A feminine noun meaning 'a creation' or 'an unprecedented thing,' appearing in Numbers 16:30 where Moses invokes divine judgment on Korah's rebels. The cognate accusative construction 'if Yahweh creates a creation' (im-beri'ah yivra) emphasizes the unparalleled, miraculous nature of the coming judgment—the earth opening its mouth. The term draws on 'bara' (create), the verb of Genesis 1, to signal this will be a unique divine act without precedent. Multilingual renderings (creación, creation, un-creation) capture the sense of something entirely new and preternatural. CREATION CREATED ORDER

en: a-creation | es: creación | fr: un-creation | de: ein-creation Num 16:30

בְּרִיָּה H1279 Art / N-fs (3×)

the food, specially prepared nourishment—used of Amnon's invalid meal

This rare noun appears only in the tragic narrative of Amnon and Tamar (2 Sam 13:5-10). It refers to specially prepared food for someone who is sick or feigning illness. The word carries a sense of 'restorative nourishment' or 'delicacy.' Amnon asks for this food to be prepared by Tamar's hands, turning what should be an act of care into an occasion for violence. The word's rarity may reflect its specialized meaning: not just any food, but nourishment prepared with particular care for the infirm.

(3×) Specially prepared food or nourishment for the sick. All three occurrences appear in 2 Samuel 13 during Amnon's deception of Tamar. The definite article (ha-) suggests a specific, recognizable type of food. Cross-linguistic evidence is consistent: English 'the food,' Spanish 'la comida,' French 'le nourriture,' German 'der Speise'—all emphasizing this as a particular kind of sustenance. The context shows this is food prepared with care, meant for someone unable to eat regular meals. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: the-food | es: la-comida | fr: le-nourriture | de: der-Speise 2Sam 13:5; 2Sam 13:7; 2Sam 13:10

בְּרִיחַ H1280 N-ms (42×)

Bar, bolt, crossbar for gates or structural framing; also (as homograph) a fugitive, one who flees.

Primarily denotes a wooden or metal bar used either to secure city gates or as a structural crossbar in tabernacle construction. The extensive Exodus passages (26:26-29; 36:31-34) describe the bars joining the boards of the tabernacle, while the fortification sense appears in references to barred cities (Deut 3:5; 1 Kgs 4:13) and broken gate-bars as images of divine judgment (Jer 51:30; Lam 2:9). All six witness languages converge on bar/barra/Riegel. A single occurrence in Isaiah 15:5 represents a different homograph from the root barach ('to flee'), referring to fugitives of Moab, distinguished by context and by translation divergence where witnesses render it as 'fugitives' rather than 'bars.'

1. bar, bolt, crossbar (41×) A wooden or metal bar used as a structural crossbar in tabernacle construction or as a bolt securing city gates. Multilingual glosses converge tightly: English 'bar/bars,' Spanish barras, French barres, German Riegel. The tabernacle construction narratives (Exod 26:26-29; 36:31-34; Num 3:36; 4:31) and city fortification passages (Deut 3:5; Judg 16:3; 1 Kgs 4:13; Nah 3:13) form the core usage across 41 occurrences. ALONE AND PARTS

en: and-bar, and-bars-its, and-bars-of | es: barras, barras-de, las-barras | fr: [בריחיה], [ובריחי], barres | de: Riegel, [בריחיה], [ובריחי] Exod 26:26; Exod 26:27; Exod 26:28; Exod 26:29

2. fugitive (1×) A fugitive or one who flees, from the homographic root barach meaning 'to flee,' entirely distinct from the architectural/hardware sense. Only in Isaiah 15:5, referring to Moab's fugitives. English 'its fugitives' and Spanish sus fugitivos confirm the shift, while French and German leave the form untranslated, signaling lexicographic uncertainty about this rare homograph. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: its-fugitives | es: sus-fugitivos | fr: [בריחה] | de: [בריחה] Isa 15:5

בָּרִיחַ H1281 N-mp (3×)

fleeing, fugitive—used of cosmic serpents and human refugees

This adjective describes rapid, serpentine flight. It appears in two striking mythological images: the 'fleeing serpent' of Job 26:13 (possibly an eclipse-dragon) and Leviathan the 'fleeing serpent' of Isaiah 27:1 (likely figurative for Assyria). In Isaiah 43:14, it shifts to human fugitives fleeing Babylon. The word captures both the sinuous motion of a serpent and the desperate haste of refugees. BDB notes it equals the more common form barriach, suggesting interchangeable spellings for this vivid term.

(3×) Describes fleeing or fugitive motion, whether of mythic serpents or human refugees. The evidence shows two contexts: (1) cosmic/mythological serpents in Job 26:13 and Isaiah 27:1, where English renders 'fleeing' and 'Leviathan,' and (2) human fugitives in Isaiah 43:14 ('as fugitives'). Spanish and French vary between 'fleeing/huidiza' and 'fugitives/fugitivos,' while some translations leave the Hebrew untransliterated, indicating difficulty with these poetic, mythologically-charged passages. The term evokes swift, serpentine escape. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: and-Livyatan, as-fugitives, fleeing | es: como-fugitivos, huidiza | fr: [ברח], [בריחים], בריח | de: [ברח], [בריח], [בריחים] Job 26:13; Isa 27:1; Isa 43:14

בִּרִיחַ H1282 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

And Bariah (or Beriah), a son of Shemaiah in Davidic genealogy

This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 3:22, in the genealogy of David's royal line through Zerubbabel. The name 'Beriach' (or 'Beriah') is of uncertain etymology. BDB lists it separately from the more common 'Beriah' (meaning 'in evil/misfortune'), though they may be related. The context is the post-exilic Davidic descendants, tracing the line that would be important for messianic expectations. The name appears in a list of Shemaiah's sons, part of the royal lineage preserved in Chronicles.

(1×) A personal name borne by a son of Shemaiah in the Davidic royal genealogy (1 Chronicles 3:22). The etymology is uncertain, though possibly related to 'Beriah' or having a separate root. The name appears among post-exilic descendants of Zerubbabel, part of Chronicles' effort to preserve the Davidic line after the exile. Multilingual renderings (Bariaj, Bariah) transliterate, with some preserving Hebrew script, typical of rare genealogical names where pronunciation traditions may be unclear. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Variach | es: y-Bariaj | fr: [וברית] | de: [וברית] 1Chr 3:22

בְּרִיעָה H1283 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (11×)

Beriah — personal name borne by several Israelites, most notably a son of Asher and a son of Ephraim named in sorrow

Beriah (בְּרִיעָה) is a personal name borne by at least four individuals in the Old Testament, with a folk etymology connecting it to רָעָה ('evil, misfortune'). The most poignant bearer is a son of Ephraim, named Beriah 'because disaster had befallen his house' — his brothers having been killed by the men of Gath in a cattle raid (1 Chr 7:23). The earliest and most genealogically prominent Beriah is a son of Asher (Gen 46:17; Num 26:44-45), ancestor of the Beriite clan. A third Beriah appears among the Benjaminites of Aijalon who drove out the inhabitants of Gath (1 Chr 8:13, 16). A fourth is a Levite son of Shimei in the Gershonite line (1 Chr 23:10-11). Spanish 'Bería' and French 'Béria' transliterate the name.

Beriah (proper name) (11×) A personal name meaning approximately 'in misfortune' or 'in evil,' borne by several Old Testament figures. (a) A son of Asher and ancestor of the Beriite clan (Gen 46:17; Num 26:44-45; 1 Chr 7:30-31). (b) A son of Ephraim named because 'disaster had befallen his house' after his brothers were killed by the men of Gath (1 Chr 7:23). (c) A Benjaminite of Aijalon whose clan drove out the inhabitants of Gath (1 Chr 8:13, 16). (d) A Gershonite Levite, son of Shimei, whose small family was combined with his brother's for service purposes (1 Chr 23:10-11). Spanish 'Bería' and English 'Beriah' are standard. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Beriah, and-Beriah, to-Beriah | es: Beriá, Bería, Y-Bería | fr: Beriah, Bérija, et-Beriah | de: Beriah, Berias, [בריעה] Gen 46:17; Num 26:44; Num 26:45; 1Chr 7:23

בְּרִיעִי H1284 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

The Beriite, gentilicadjective identifying descendants of Beriah (son of Asher)

This gentilicadjective with the definite article appears in Numbers 26:44, in the census of Israelite families: 'the family of the Beriite' (mishpachat ha-Beri'i). It identifies the descendants of Beriah, who was a son of Asher (Genesis 46:17). Gentilicforms like this create family/clan identifiers from ancestral names, functioning like surnames. The census in Numbers 26 organizes Israel by these clan divisions, establishing inheritance rights and military organization. The Beriites formed one subdivision of the tribe of Asher.

(1×) A gentilicadjective with the definite article meaning 'the Beriite,' designating descendants of Beriah the son of Asher (Numbers 26:44). The term functions as a clan identifier in the Israelite census, establishing the Beriite family as a subdivision within Asher's tribal inheritance. Such gentilicforms (ancestor name + -i suffix + definite article) create collective family designations. Multilingual renderings (beritas, Beriite) transliterate the adjective functioning as a clan name within Israel's genealogical and territorial organization. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Beriite | es: los-beritas | fr: le-Beriite | de: der-Beriite Num 26:44

בְּרִית H1285 Prep-b / N-fsc / 2ms (284×)

Covenant, pact, treaty; a solemn binding agreement between parties, whether divine-human or between nations

One of the most theologically weighty nouns in the Hebrew Bible, berit appears 284 times to designate a solemn, binding agreement. It covers the full arc of Scripture's covenantal theology: God's promises to Noah (Gen 9:13), Abraham (Gen 15:18), Moses at Sinai, and David, as well as the prophesied new covenant (Jer 31:31). Beyond the divine-human axis, it also denotes political treaties between nations (Josh 9:6) and personal pacts between individuals (Gen 31:44).

The rendering across languages reflects the concept's weight: Spanish pacto, French alliance, German Bund, each carrying overtones of solemn obligation.

covenant, pact, treaty (284×) A solemn binding agreement establishing mutual obligations or promises between two parties. Encompasses God's covenants with Noah, Abraham, Israel at Sinai, and David, as well as political treaties between nations (Gen 21:27; Josh 9:6) and personal compacts (Gen 31:44). The consistent rendering as Spanish pacto, French alliance, and German Bund underscores the term's gravity as an institution of sworn commitment. COVENANT AGREEMENT

en: a-covenant, covenant | es: pacto, un-pacto | fr: alliance, un-alliance, une-alliance | de: Bund, des-Bundes, ein-Bund Gen 9:13; Gen 15:18; Gen 17:11; Gen 21:27; Gen 21:32

אֵל H1286 N-proper (1×)

Berith (El-Berith/Baal-Berith), covenant deity worshiped at Shechem

This divine name appears in Judges 9:46, where Shechem's leaders take refuge in 'the stronghold of the house of El-Berith.' The name means 'El/Baal of the Covenant' (berith = covenant). Earlier in Judges 8:33 and 9:4, the deity is called 'Baal-Berith.' This was a Canaanite god worshiped at Shechem, possibly a syncretistic form combining covenant language with Baal worship. After Gideon's death, Israel apostatized to this 'covenant Baal.' The name ironically uses covenant terminology for idolatry, perverting Israel's covenant language.

(1×) A divine name meaning 'Berith' or 'El/Baal of the Covenant,' referring to a Canaanite deity worshiped at Shechem (Judges 9:46). The full forms are 'Baal-Berith' (Judges 8:33, 9:4) and 'El-Berith.' The name combines 'berith' (covenant) with either El or Baal, perhaps representing syncretistic worship where covenant theology was corrupted with Canaanite religion. Israel's apostasy to this 'covenant god' after Gideon's death tragically mirrors their violation of the true covenant. Multilingual translations (Berit, Berith) transliterate the divine name, preserving its status as a proper noun for false deity. EL COMPOUND NAMES

en: Berith | es: Berit | fr: Berith | de: Berith Judg 9:46

בֹּרִית H1287 N-fs (2×)

lye, soap, alkali; cleansing agent made from plant ashes used for washing clothes and purification

This term designates the soap-like cleansing agent made from plant ash alkali, used for washing in the ancient world. Jeremiah uses it to illustrate the futility of trying to cleanse sin through external means —even abundant soap cannot remove the stain of iniquity. Malachi employs it in describing the coming Messenger who will purify the Levites like a refiner using strong alkali to remove impurities from metal. The substance was essential for both personal hygiene and ritual purification, making it a powerful metaphor for spiritual cleansing.

(2×) A cleansing agent or soap (Jeremiah 2:22; Malachi 3:2), used both literally and metaphorically. Jeremiah emphasizes even vigorous washing with soap cannot remove Israel's guilt, requiring divine intervention. Malachi's 'like soap of fullers' connects purification with the intense cleansing needed for priestly service. Interestingly, some translations render Jeremiah's passage as 'alliance' or 'covenant' (French, German), possibly reflecting a different textual tradition or root understanding, though the cleansing context supports the 'soap' meaning. COVENANT AGREEMENT

en: and-like-soap-of, soap | es: jabón, y-como-lejía-de | fr: alliance, et-saumure | de: Bund, [וכברית] Jer 2:22; Mal 3:2

בָּרַךְ H1288 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-1cs (330×)

To bless, kneel; Piel: invoke blessing; Qal passive: blessed; euphemistically: curse, blaspheme

Few Hebrew words carry as dramatic a semantic range as barak. At its physical root it means to kneel (2 Chr 6:13; Ps 95:6), and from that posture of reverence the Piel stem develops the dominant sense of bestowing or invoking blessing — whether God blessing humanity (Gen 1:28), people blessing God in worship, or one person blessing another. The Qal passive participle barukh ('blessed') became Israel's standard liturgical exclamation. Most strikingly, barak also serves as a euphemism for cursing God (Job 1:11; 1 Kgs 21:10), a scribal reversal that reveals how deeply the culture revered the act of blessing.

1. Piel: bless, invoke blessing (227×) The primary Piel sense: to actively bestow blessing or invoke divine favor upon someone. Arabic baraka and Swahili bariki share the same Semitic root, underscoring pan-Semitic continuity. From God blessing creation (Gen 1:22, 28) to patriarchs blessing sons (Gen 27:27) to priests blessing the people (Num 6:23), this sense pervades every register of biblical life — liturgical, familial, and covenantal. BLESSING AND PRAISE en: And-blessed, and-blessed, and-he-blessed | es: Y-bendijo, y-bendijo, y-los-bendijo | fr: Et-bénit, et-bénit, et-il-bénit | de: und-er-segnete, und-es-segnete, und-gesegnet-hat Gen 1:22; Gen 1:28; Gen 2:3; Gen 5:2; Gen 9:1

2. Qal passive participle: blessed (73×) The Qal passive participle barukh: a state of being blessed, used predicatively or as a doxological exclamation. Arabic mubarak and Swahili mbarikiwa confirm the adjectival-stative force. 'Blessed be Yahweh' (Exod 18:10) and the Deuteronomic blessing formulas (Deut 28:3–6) show barukh functioning as Israel's characteristic expression of praise and gratitude — a state declared, not an action performed. BLESSING AND PRAISE

en: blessed, shall-be-blessed | es: Bendita, Bendito, bendito | fr: bénit, devra-être-bénit | de: segnete, soll-sein-segnete Exod 18:10; Deut 7:14; Deut 28:3; Deut 28:4

3. Pual: be blessed (passive) (11×) The Pual (intensive passive): to be blessed, to receive blessing as the subject. Distinct from the Qal participle, the Pual conveys an event of being blessed rather than a static state. Arabic yubaraku (he is blessed, passive voice) and Korean bok-batda (to receive blessing) distinguish this from barukh. Deut 33:13 (Joseph's land 'is blessed') and Judg 5:24 (Jael 'most blessed among women') illustrate this received-blessing sense. BLESSING AND PRAISE

en: blessed, blessed-of, may-she-be-blessed | es: Sea-bendecida, bendita-de, bendito | fr: bénir, bénit-de, de-bénir | de: moege-sie-sein-segnete, segnete, segnete-von Deut 33:13; Judg 5:24; 2Sam 7:29; Job 1:21

4. Hitpael/Nifal: bless oneself, be blessed (10×) The Hitpael and Nifal reflexive-reciprocal sense: to bless oneself, count oneself blessed, or be blessed through association with another. This is the sense of the Abrahamic promise — 'in you all families of the earth shall bless themselves' (Gen 12:3; 22:18; 26:4). Arabic tatabaraku (reflexive Form V) and the LXX's eneulogethesetai preserve the mediating, self-involving nuance that drives the missional theology of Genesis. BLESSING AND PRAISE

en: and-he-blesses-himself, and-may-bless-themselves, and-shall-bless-themselves | es: Y-serán-benditas, se-bendecirá, se-bendiga | fr: bénir, et—bénir-eux-mêmes, et—être-bénit | de: segnen, und-er-blesses-sich-selbst, und-gesegnet-werden-sollen Gen 12:3; Gen 18:18; Gen 22:18; Gen 26:4; Gen 28:14

5. Piel euphemism: curse, blaspheme (6×) The well-known euphemistic Piel: to 'bless' meaning to curse or blaspheme God. A scribal substitution (antiphrasis) to avoid writing outright blasphemy. Job 1:5, 11; 2:5, 9 and 1 Kgs 21:10, 13 are the key passages. Swahili laani (curse) and Arabic jaddafa (blaspheme) translate the intended meaning. Context and the Piel stem are the reader's only clues — a phenomenon unique in the Hebrew lexicon. BLESSING AND PRAISE en: and-cursed, blessed, curse | es: Bendijiste, Bendijo, maldice | fr: bénir, bénit, et-bénir | de: du-segnete, segnete, und-segnete 1Kgs 21:10; 1Kgs 21:13; Job 1:5; Job 1:11; Job 2:5

6. Qal: kneel, bow down (2×) The original physical-gestural root: to kneel or bow down, attested in the Qal stem. Arabic baraka (a camel knelt) preserves the bodily meaning. Only two clear instances remain — Solomon kneeling on his knees (2 Chr 6:13) and the psalmist's invitation 'let us kneel before Yahweh' (Ps 95:6) — but they anchor the entire blessing vocabulary in a concrete posture of worship and submission. BLESSING AND PRAISE

en: and-knelt, let-us-kneel | es: arrodillémonos, y-se-arrodilló | fr: bénir, et-bénir | de: lass-uns-knien, und-segnen 2Chr 6:13; Ps 95:6

7. (1×) A Hifil causative usage: to cause to kneel, make kneel down. Gen 24:11 records Abraham's servant making the camels kneel beside the well. Arabic abraka (he made it kneel) parallels this causative form precisely. This single occurrence preserves the transitive-causative extension of the root's physical sense, bridging the gap between the bodily act of kneeling and the theological act of blessing. BLESSING AND PRAISE en: and-made-kneel | es: Y-hizo-arrodillar | fr: et-fit-kneel | de: und-ließ-knien Gen 24:11

בָּרַךְ H1289 V-Piel-Perf-1cs (5×)

To kneel, bless, or praise; an Aramaic verb used in Daniel for kneeling in prayer and blessing God's name.

The Aramaic cognate of the ubiquitous Hebrew barekh, this verb carries the same dual range of physical kneeling and verbal blessing. Daniel kneels on his knees in prayer (Dan 6:10), while elsewhere the word expresses praise and blessing directed to God (Dan 2:19–20; 4:34). The Spanish glosses reveal this duality clearly: 'arrodillado' (kneeling) alongside 'bendije/bendijo' (I blessed/he blessed). That a single root spans prostrate prayer posture and exalted doxology captures something profound about biblical worship—blessing God begins with bending the knee.

(5×) To kneel in prayer or to bless and praise God—covering both the physical posture of worship and the verbal act of doxology. Daniel 6:10 uses the Peal participle for kneeling on one's knees, while Dan 2:19 and 4:34 use the Pael for blessing God after receiving revelation. The passive participle in Dan 3:28 ('blessed be the God of Shadrach...') shows liturgical doxological use. Spanish 'arrodillado' (kneeling) versus 'bendije' (I blessed) helpfully distinguishes the physical from the verbal, though in Aramaic both flow from a single root. BLESSING AND PRAISE
en: I-blessed, blessed, kneeling | es: arrodillado, bendije, bendijo | fr: bénir | de: [בריך], [ברך], [ברכת] Dan 2:19; Dan 2:20; Dan 3:28; Dan 4:34; Dan 6:10

בֶּרֶךְ H1290 N-fdc / 3ms (26×)

Knee; the bodily joint used in kneeling for worship, supplication, drinking, and in idioms for birth and blessing.

The Hebrew word for the knee joint, appearing in contexts ranging from physical posture to profound ritual significance. Kneeling marks worship before God (1 Kgs 8:54; Isa 45:23), desperate entreaty (2 Kgs 1:13), and even the practical act of drinking at a spring (Judg 7:5-6). The dual form בִּרְכַּיִם reflects the paired anatomy. A striking idiom in Genesis 30:3 and 50:23 describes birth 'upon the knees,' signifying adoption or acknowledgment of a child. Elijah's prayer posture—face between his knees (1 Kgs 18:42)—evokes total self-abasement before the Almighty. Spanish 'rodillas' and English 'knees' consistently confirm the single physical referent across all 26 occurrences.

knee (26×) The anatomical joint of the leg, used literally and idiomatically. Physically, knees buckle under disease (Deut 28:35), tremble in weakness (Dan 10:10), or are submerged in rising water (Ezek 47:4). Ritually, kneeling expresses worship (Isa 45:23; 1 Kgs 19:18), prayer (Ezra 9:5), or supplication (2 Kgs 1:13). The birth idiom 'bearing upon the knees' (Gen 30:3; 50:23) signals legal adoption. Multilingual glosses—Spanish 'rodillas,' French 'genoux'—uniformly point to a single anatomical sense with rich figurative extensions. KNEE BODY PART en: and-knees, her-knees, his-knees | es: las-rodillas, mis-rodillas, rodilla | fr: [ברך], [ברכי], [ברכיו] | de: [ברכי], [ברכיו], [ברכים] Gen 30:3; Gen 48:12; Gen 50:23; Deut 28:35; Judg 7:5

בִּרְכַּי H1291 N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

His knees (Aramaic plural noun with third masculine singular suffix)

This Aramaic word appears in Daniel 6:10, describing Daniel's prayer posture: he 'got down on his knees' (birkohi, literally 'his knees'). The Aramaic plural 'berak' corresponds to Hebrew 'berek' (knee). The phrase describes Daniel kneeling in prayer three times daily despite the decree against petitions to anyone but King Darius. Kneeling was a common Jewish prayer posture, expressing humility and reverence before God. The detail emphasizes Daniel's faithful devotion and the visible nature of his worship that led to accusation.

(1×) An Aramaic plural noun with third-person masculine singular suffix meaning 'his knees,' appearing in Daniel 6:10 to describe Daniel's prayer posture. The phrase 'he got down on his knees' (literally 'upon his knees') depicts kneeling as an act of worship and supplication. Kneeling expressed submission and reverence before God, a posture that made Daniel's prayer visible to his accusers. Multilingual renderings (sus-rodillas, his-knees, jambe) recognize the anatomical term conveying the physical stance of prayer-as-worship central to Daniel's civil disobedience. KNEE BODY PART
en: his-knees | es: sus-rodillas | fr: jambe | de: [ברכוהי] Dan 6:10

בָּרַכְאֵל H1292 N-proper-ms (2×)

Barachel, father of Elihu; name means 'God blesses' from Babylonian and Phoenician parallels Barachel is known solely as Elihu's father, appearing in the introduction to Elihu's speeches in Job. His name, meaning 'God blesses,' follows a pattern seen in Phoenician and Babylonian names that combine a verb with a divine name. The parallel Babylonian form 'Bariki-ili' ('blessed of god') and Phoenician examples show this was a common ancient Near Eastern naming pattern. His identification as a Buzite connects him to a clan descended from Abraham's brother Nahor, placing him in the broader family network of the patriarchs.

(2×) A personal name designating Elihu's father (Job 32:2, 6), meaning 'El blesses' or 'God blesses.' The theophoric name reflects common ancient Near Eastern naming patterns attested in Babylonian and Phoenician inscriptions. Translations uniformly transliterate, with some bracketing the Hebrew to show they're preserving the original form. His identification serves primarily to establish Elihu's lineage and tribal connection to Buz, giving geographical and ethnic context for this youngest speaker in the Job dialogue. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Barachel | es: Baraquel | fr: Barakhel | de: [ברכאל] Job 32:2; Job 32:6

בְּרָכָה H1293 Art / N-fs (69×)

Blessing: divine favor, benediction, or promised good bestowed on someone; rarely a concrete gift or peace offering.

The feminine noun berakhah is one of the Hebrew Bible's great theological keywords, appearing 69 times to name the good that flows from God to humanity and from parents to children. At its heart stands the patriarchal blessing — Isaac's contested benediction over Jacob and Esau (Gen 27:12-41), Jacob's prophetic blessings over his twelve sons (Gen 49:28), and Moses' final blessings over the tribes (Deut 33:1). But berakhah is no mere formula; it carries real force, as Esau's anguished cry reveals: 'Have you only one blessing, my father? Bless me too!' (Gen 27:38). The word extends readily to divine favor — 'I will make you a blessing' (Gen 12:2) and 'the blessing of the LORD makes rich' (Prov 10:22). Spanish bendicion, French benediction, and German Segen all share the Latin-rooted sense of 'speaking good over someone,' while Arabic baraka preserves the exact Semitic cognate. One isolated occurrence in Isaiah 36:16, where the Rabshakeh offers Judah a 'blessing' meaning a peace deal or gift, stretches the word toward its tangible, transactional edge.

1. blessing, benediction, favor (68×) Blessing, benediction, or divine favor — the act or content of speaking good over someone, whether from God to humans or between persons, including patriarchal blessings, covenantal promises of prosperity, and liturgical benedictions. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (68 occurrences) spans from God's foundational promise to Abraham — 'I will make you a blessing' (Gen 12:2) — through the patriarchal contest over Isaac's blessing (Gen 27:12-41), Moses' farewell blessings (Deut 33:1), the Deuteronomic choice between blessing and curse (Deut 11:26-29; 30:1, 19), the wisdom tradition's 'blessing of the LORD' (Prov 10:22), and prophetic promises like 'I will send you a blessing' (Mal 3:10). Spanish bendicion, French benediction, German Segen, and Arabic بركة form a remarkably stable cross-linguistic equivalence. The word carries performative force: to pronounce berakhah is to enact the good it names. BLESSING BENEDICTION

en: a-blessing, blessing, generous | es: bendición, bendición; | fr: [ברכה], bénédiction, dans-bénédiction | de: Segen, [ברכה], ein-Segen Gen 12:2; Gen 27:12; Gen 27:36; Gen 27:38; Gen 28:4

2. gift, peace offering (1×) A concrete gift or peace offering — a tangible token of goodwill extended as a diplomatic overture, where the abstract concept of 'blessing' materializes into something given or exchanged. Only one clear occurrence in this corpus: the Assyrian Rabshakeh's taunt to Jerusalem, 'make a blessing with me and come out to me' (Isa 36:16), where berakhah functions as an offer of terms — surrender and receive gifts of vine and fig tree. Spanish renders this as paz ('peace'), marking the shift from spiritual benediction to political transaction. The extension from spoken blessing to material gift is natural in a culture where blessings and gifts were intertwined (cf. Jacob's 'blessing' sent ahead to Esau in Gen 33:11, using the same word), but the Rabshakeh's usage strips away the theological resonance and reduces berakhah to a bargaining chip. BLESSING BENEDICTION

en: and-come-out | es: paz | fr: bénédiction | de: Segen Isa 36:16

בְּרָכָה H1294 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Beracah—a warrior who joined David and a valley where Judah blessed God

The name Beracah means 'blessing' and appears in two contexts: a warrior from Benjamin who defected to David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:3), and the Valley of Beracah where Jehoshaphat's army gathered to bless the Lord after their miraculous victory over Moab and Ammon (2 Chr 20:26, mentioned twice). The valley's name commemorates that moment of thanksgiving. Both person and place bear witness to God's blessing—one through loyalty in David's wilderness years, the other through deliverance in battle.

(3×) A proper name meaning 'blessing,' referring to both a person and a place. The warrior Beracah appears in 1 Chronicles 12:3 among David's mighty men. The Valley of Beracah (2 Chr 20:26, twice) is where Judah assembled to bless God after victory. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve the name: 'Beracah/Beraca' in English and Spanish, with French and German using placeholder brackets. The conjunction 'and-' in some forms indicates his inclusion in a list of warriors, while the place name stands independently as a geographical memorial. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beracah, and-Berakah | es: Beraca, y-Beracá | fr: [ברכה], [וברכה] | de: [ברכה], [וברכה] 1Chr 12:3; 2Chr 20:26

בְּרֵכָה H1295 Prep-k / N-fsc (17×)

Pool, pond — a natural or constructed reservoir of standing water, often a civic landmark

Denotes a pool or pond, whether naturally occurring or artificially constructed for water collection. The Hebrew berēkāh is cognate with Arabic birkah and Aramaic berēkhtā, all referring to standing water reservoirs. In the biblical text, specific pools serve as notable civic landmarks: the pool of Gibeon where Abner and Joab's men clashed (2 Sam 2:13), the pool where Ahab's chariot was washed (1 Kgs 22:38), Hezekiah's famous conduit pool (2 Kgs 20:20; Isa 22:9-11), and the pools Solomon built for irrigating his gardens (Eccl 2:6). Nahum's vivid simile likens fleeing Nineveh to a pool whose waters drain away (Nah 2:9). The word also appears in the tender imagery of Song of Songs 7:5.

pool, pond (17×) A natural or artificial body of standing water used for collection, storage, or irrigation. Hebrew berēkāh appears as a civic landmark in narratives: the pool of Gibeon (2 Sam 2:13), the pool of Samaria (1 Kgs 22:38), the upper pool (Isa 7:3; 36:2), and Hezekiah's reservoir project (2 Kgs 20:20). English consistently renders 'pool'; Spanish uses 'estanque'; French employs both 'étang' and 'piscine.' The Arabic cognate birkah and Aramaic berēkhtā confirm this as a common Semitic term for standing water features.

POOL POND MARSH

en: like-a-pool-of-, of-the-upper, pool-of | es: como-estanque-de, del-estanque, el-estanque | fr: [ברכת], [הברכה], le-pool | de: [ברכות], [ברכת], [הברכה] 2Sam 2:13; 2Sam 4:12; 1Kgs 22:38

יְבֶרֶכְיָהוּ H1296 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (11×)

Berechiah — personal name meaning 'the LORD has blessed,' borne by several Levites, officials, and the father of Zechariah the prophet

Berechiah (בֶּרֶכְיָה, 'the LORD has blessed') is a theophoric personal name borne by at least seven individuals in the Old Testament, most famously the father of the prophet Zechariah (Zech 1:1, 7). Among the others: a descendant of David in the post-exilic royal line (1 Chr 3:20); a Levitical musician, the father of Asaph the singer (1 Chr 6:39; 15:17); a gatekeeper for the ark (1 Chr 15:23); a Levite who settled in Jerusalem after the exile (1 Chr 9:16); and two men involved in Nehemiah's wall rebuilding — Meshullam son of Berechiah repaired sections of the wall (Neh 3:4, 30). The name's blessing-theology resonates with the prophetic hope Zechariah proclaimed. Spanish 'Berequías' and French 'Bérékia' approximate the Hebrew.

Berechiah (proper name) (11×) A theophoric personal name meaning 'the LORD has blessed,' borne by multiple Old Testament figures. Most notably the father (or grandfather) of the prophet Zechariah (Zech 1:1, 7). Also: (a) a post-exilic descendant of David (1 Chr 3:20); (b) the father of Asaph the Levitical musician (1 Chr 6:39; 15:17); (c) a doorkeeper for the ark during its transfer to Jerusalem (1 Chr 15:23); (d) an Ephraimite chief who opposed enslaving Judean captives (2 Chr 28:12); (e) the father of Meshullam who repaired Jerusalem's wall (Neh 3:4, 30); (f) a Levite resettled in Jerusalem (1 Chr 9:16). Spanish 'Berequías' and English 'Berechiah' are the standard forms. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Berechiah, Berekhyah, Berekhyahu | es: Berequyahu, Berequías, Y-Berequías | fr: Bérékia, bénédiction, et-Bérékia | de: Berechja, [ברכיהו], [וברכיה] 1Chr 3:20; 1Chr 6:39; 1Chr 9:16; 1Chr 15:17; 1Chr 15:23

בְּרַם H1297 Conj (5×)

But, however, nevertheless; an Aramaic adversative conjunction introducing a contrast or qualification.

An Aramaic adversative adverb meaning 'but' or 'nevertheless,' used to introduce a contrasting or qualifying statement. It appears five times across Daniel and Ezra, often pivoting from a negative scenario to a divine counter-action. In Daniel 2:28 it shifts from human inability to divine revelation: 'but there is a God in heaven who reveals mysteries.' In Daniel 4:15 and 4:23, it qualifies the command to destroy the tree—'but leave the stump.' The Syriac cognate serves the same contrastive function, translating Greek plēn in the New Testament.

(5×) An adversative conjunction meaning 'but, however, nevertheless,' used to introduce a contrasting clause that qualifies or overrides what precedes it. In Dan 2:28 it pivots dramatically from human inadequacy to divine revelation ('but there is a God in heaven'). In Dan 4:15 and 4:23 it limits a decree of destruction ('but leave the stump of its roots'). Spanish 'pero' and 'sin embargo' and English 'but' all capture the contrastive force. The Syriac cognate bram serves identically, showing the word's stable function across Aramaic dialects. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST

en: but | es: Pero, pero, sin-embargo | fr: Beraka, mais | de: [ברם], aber Ezra 5:13; Dan 2:28; Dan 4:15; Dan 4:23; Dan 5:17

בֶּרַע H1298 N-proper-ms (1×)

Bera, king of Sodom in Genesis 14, a name of unknown etymology

This royal name appears in Genesis 14:2, identifying 'Bera king of Sodom' among the five kings defeated by Chedorlaomer's coalition. The name's etymology is unknown—BDB notes the root is uncertain, and the Septuagint renders it as 'Balla.' The name may be non-Semitic, fitting the enigmatic nature of the Genesis 14 kings and cities. Bera and his ally Birsha of Gomorrah led the rebellion that brought foreign invasion to the Jordan valley and resulted in Lot's capture and Abraham's rescue mission.

(1×) A personal royal name for the king of Sodom in Genesis 14:2, whose etymology remains obscure. Bera joined four other Canaanite kings in rebelling against Mesopotamian overlords, leading to the battle in the Valley of Siddim and Lot's capture. The unknown root and Septuagint's divergent rendering (Balla) suggest possible non-Semitic origin. Multilingual translations (Bera, Béra) uniformly transliterate, preserving the proper noun for this otherwise unattested ancient monarch whose defeat sets up Abraham's heroic rescue and meeting with Melchizedek. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Bera | es: Bera | fr: Bera | de: Bera Gen 14:2

בָּרַק H1299 V-Qal-Imp-ms (1×)

Flash (lightning), imperative verb meaning to flash forth or send out lightning

This Qal imperative verb appears in Psalm 144:6, in David's prayer for divine intervention: 'Flash lightning' (baroq baraq). The verb is formed from the noun 'baraq' (lightning) and means to flash or send forth lightning. The construction uses a cognate accusative ('flash lightning'), intensifying the request. David asks God to use lightning as a weapon to scatter enemies, similar to theophanic imagery elsewhere in Psalms. Lightning represents God's powerful intervention in battle, striking terror and confusion into hostile forces.

(1×) A Qal imperative verb meaning 'flash' or 'send forth lightning,' appearing in Psalm 144:6 with cognate accusative ('flash lightning'). The verb derives from the noun 'baraq' (lightning) and requests divine intervention through lightning as a weapon to scatter enemies. This theophanic imagery—God wielding lightning bolts—appears throughout biblical poetry (Psalm 18:14, 2 Samuel 22:15). Multilingual renderings (Lanza 'hurl,' flash, dans-lancer-l'éclair 'in hurling lightning,' blitzen) capture both the luminous flash and the violent martial action of God shooting lightning arrows. LIGHTNING AND RADIANCE

en: flash | es: Lanza | fr: dans-lancer-l'éclair | de: blitzen Ps 144:6

בָּרָק H1300a Conj-w / N-mp (2×)

lightning, flash of lightning; the phenomenon or manifestation of electrical discharge in storms

This term designates the lightning flash itself, particularly as a manifestation of divine power and glory. The Psalms describe God flashing lightning to scatter enemies—the theophanic thunderstorm serving as divine warfare. The plural form suggests multiple lightning bolts or repeated flashes that accompanied God's intervention. In ancient Near Eastern thought, lightning demonstrated the storm god's power, and Scripture adopts this imagery for Yahweh's appearances, where natural phenomena become vehicles of divine presence and action.

(2×) The noun for lightning or lightning flashes (2 Samuel 22:15; Psalm 18:14), appearing in parallel poetic accounts of God's theophanic intervention. Both passages use it with the verb 'flash' or 'send forth,' describing God actively wielding lightning against enemies. The plural form emphasizes multiple bolts or repeated flashes. Translations consistently render it 'lightning,' sometimes with conjunction ('and lightning') to show its pairing with other theophanic elements like arrows, thunder, and darkness in these dramatic divine appearance scenes. LIGHTNING AND RADIANCE

en: and-lightning, lightning | es: relámpago, y-relámpagos | fr: et-dans-éclair, lightning | de: lightning, und-Blitz 2Sam 22:15; Ps 18:14

בָּרָק H1300b Conj-w / N-mp (19×)

Lightning: a flash of brilliant light in a storm; used of divine theophany, judgment, and dazzling glory.

Bārāq denotes the flash of lightning that splits the sky during a thunderstorm, but in Scripture it reaches far beyond meteorology. At Sinai, lightnings (bĕrāqîm) accompanied thunder and thick cloud as God descended (Exod 19:16). The psalmist celebrates how God's lightnings illumine the world and make the earth tremble (Ps 97:4). In Deuteronomy 32:41 God whets his 'flashing sword'—bĕraq as the gleam of a blade. Nahum 2:5 likens chariots to lightning for sheer speed. Spanish 'relámpago,' French 'éclair,' and German 'Blitz' each preserve the vivid, instantaneous brilliance at the word's core.

lightning (19×) A flash of lightning, whether literal atmospheric discharge or figurative of divine power and brilliance. Predominantly plural (bĕrāqîm) for lightning flashes in theophany at Sinai (Exod 19:16) and in the Psalms (77:18; 97:4; 135:7). Singular in Ps 144:6 as a weapon God hurls. Figuratively, it describes the gleaming edge of God's sword (Deut 32:41) and the swift flash of chariot metal (Nah 2:5). Ezekiel 1:13 uses it for the fiery brilliance among the living creatures. LIGHTNING AND RADIANCE

en: Lightning, and-flash-of, and-lightnings | es: como-relámpago, como-relámpagos, el-relámpago-de | fr: [ברקים], dans-éclair, et-lightnings | de: Blitz, Blitz-von, [ברק] Exod 19:16; Deut 32:41; Job 20:25; Job 38:35; Ps 77:18

בָּרָק H1301 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (13×)

Barak ('lightning'), son of Abinoam, military leader who defeated Sisera under Deborah's guidance.

The proper name of the Israelite commander who, at Deborah the prophetess's summons, mustered ten thousand men from Naphtali and Zebulun to rout the Canaanite general Sisera at the Wadi Kishon (Judg 4–5). His name means 'lightning,' cognate with the Punic surname Barcas borne by Hamilcar's family. All thirteen occurrences cluster in Judges 4:6–22 and the Song of Deborah in Judges 5:1, 12, 15. Every major translation—Spanish, French, German—simply transliterates the name as 'Barak.'

Barak (13×) The personal name Barak (meaning 'lightning flash'), identifying the son of Abinoam from Kedesh-Naphtali who served as Israel's military commander in the battle against Sisera's Canaanite forces. All occurrences appear in Judges 4:6–22 (the prose narrative) and Judges 5:1, 12, 15 (the victory song of Deborah and Barak). The name is cognate with Punic 'Barcas,' the famous surname of Hamilcar's clan. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Barak, and-Barak, for-Barak | es: Barak, Y-Barak, a-Barak | fr: Barak, et-Barak, pour-Barak | de: Barak, fuer-Barak, und-Barak Judg 4:6; Judg 4:8; Judg 4:9; Judg 4:10; Judg 4:12

בַּרְקוֹס H1302 N-proper-ms (2×)

Barkos — proper name of a family head among the temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from exile

Barkos appears only in the post-exilic census lists as the ancestor of a family of Nethinim, the temple servants who assisted the Levites. The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may have Babylonian connections. Like many names in Ezra and Nehemiah, it preserves the memory of families who maintained their identity through exile and chose to return to Jerusalem to rebuild the temple community.

(2×) A personal name designating the head of a Nethinim family in the return from Babylon. Found in parallel genealogical lists in Ezra and Nehemiah, this name represents one of many families whose service to the temple continued across generations despite displacement. The consistent transliteration across languages (Barkos, Barcos, Barcós) reflects its nature as an untranslated proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Barkos, Barqos | es: Barcos, Barcós | fr: [ברקוס] | de: [ברקוס] Ezra 2:53; Neh 7:55

בַּרְקָנִים H1303 Art / N-mp (2×)

briers, thorny shrubs — desert thornbushes used by Gideon as instruments of punishment

This rare word appears only in Gideon's confrontation with the men of Succoth, where he threatens (and then carries out) punishment using thorns and briers from the wilderness. The parallel with 'thorns of the wilderness' suggests particularly sharp, painful desert vegetation. Some ancient interpreters understood these as threshing implements studded with sharp stones, but the context and parallel terminology favor thorny plants used to lacerate flesh as an extreme form of corporal punishment.

(2×) Thorny desert plants used as instruments of bodily punishment. Gideon's threat and execution of judgment on the elders of Succoth (Judges 8:7, 16) employed these wilderness briers alongside thorns to 'thresh' or tear their flesh. The multilingual glosses (briers, abrojos, épines) consistently identify these as painful thorny vegetation, emphasizing the harsh justice Gideon meted out to those who refused to support his troops. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: the-briers | es: los-abrojos | fr: le-briers | de: der-briers Judg 8:7; Judg 8:16

בָּרֶקֶת H1304a Conj-w / N-fs (2×)

emerald — a green precious stone on the high priest's breastplate, possibly beryl or true emerald

This gem adorned the high priest's breastplate as one of the twelve stones representing Israel's tribes. Ancient versions uniformly identify it as emerald, prized for its brilliant green color. The Hebrew etymology suggests a 'flashing' or 'sparkling' quality, which fits emerald's characteristic luster. The word may be related through ancient trade routes to Sanskrit and Greek terms for similar green stones, reflecting the international commerce in precious gems that supplied Israel's sacred regalia.

(2×) A precious stone set in the high priest's breastplate (Exodus 28:17, 39:10), consistently identified as emerald by ancient translators. The name derives from its flashing or sparkling appearance. Cross-linguistic connections suggest this stone participated in an ancient Near Eastern and Mediterranean trade network for valued green gems used in sacred and royal contexts. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14254 WITH 4 SENSES

en: and-emerald | es: y-esmeralda | fr: et-émeraude | de: und-Smaragd Exod 28:17; Exod 39:10

בָּרְקַת H1304b Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

And emerald (or carbuncle), a green precious stone in Ezekiel's lament over Tyre's king

This feminine noun appears in Ezekiel 28:13, listing precious stones in the garden of Eden imagery applied to the king of Tyre: 'sardius, topaz, and diamond, beryl, onyx, and jasper, sapphire, emerald (bareqet), and carbuncle.' The word 'bareqet' likely refers to a green stone, possibly emerald or a green variety of carbuncle. The root 'baraq' (lightning/flash) suggests a stone with lightning-like brilliance or flash. This stone also appears in the high priest's breastplate (Exodus 28:17). The catalog emphasizes the king's glory before his fall.

(1×) A feminine noun with conjunction meaning 'and emerald' (or possibly 'and carbuncle'), referring to a precious green gemstone appearing in Ezekiel 28:13. The name derives from 'baraq' (lightning), suggesting brilliant, flashing appearance. This stone adorned both the high priest's breastplate and, in Ezekiel's metaphor, the king of Tyre in Eden-like splendor before his prideful fall. Multilingual renderings vary (carbúnculo 'carbuncle,' emerald, émeraude), reflecting ongoing debate about the exact mineral species, though all agree on a green, brilliant precious stone. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14254 WITH 4 SENSES

en: and-emerald | es: y-carbúnculo | fr: et-émeraude | de: [וברקת] Ezek 28:13

בָּרַר H1305 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fp (18×)

To purify, select, or refine — encompassing moral purging, choosing the best, and sharpening weapons

Barar spans a vivid semantic range from the refiner's fire to the warrior's whetstone. In its reflexive stems (Niphal, Hitpael), it describes showing oneself pure before God — 'with the pure you show yourself pure' (2 Sam 22:27; Ps 18:26). God himself will 'purge out' rebels from among Israel (Ezek 20:38). As a Qal passive participle, it shifts toward selection and quality: chosen warriors (1 Chr 7:40; 9:22), choice sheep prepared for the governor's table (Neh 5:18), and words that are 'pure' or clear (Job 33:3). In the Hiphil, it takes on a sharply physical sense: sharpening arrows for battle (Jer 51:11). Spanish 'purificados/escogidos/afilen' traces each sense distinctly.

1. be pure / purify (10×) To be pure, purify oneself, or purge out — used in reflexive and causative stems for moral and ritual cleansing. In Ps 18:26 and 2 Sam 22:27, God shows himself pure to the pure-hearted. Ezekiel 20:38 uses the verb for God's sovereign act of purging rebels from among his people. The Spanish 'purificados' and 'limpiar' capture the refining dimension. Dan 12:10 extends this to eschatological testing. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: You-show-Yourself-pure, and-I-will-purge-out, and-to-purify | es: Serán-purificados, Y-apartaré, para-limpiar | fr: Tu-montre-Yourself-pur, [הברו], [להבר] | de: You-zeige-Yourself-rein, [הברו], [וברותי] 2Sam 22:27; Ps 18:26; Eccl 3:18

2. chosen, select, choice (7×) Chosen, select, of the finest quality — the Qal passive participle functioning adjectivally. In 1 Chr 7:40 and 9:22, warriors are described as 'chosen' men. Nehemiah 5:18 lists 'choice' sheep prepared daily. Job 33:3 speaks of words that are 'pure' — carefully selected and clear. The Spanish 'escogidos' distinguishes this selection sense from purification, while the underlying image of sifting connects the two. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: choice, chosen, polished | es: escogidas, escogidos, los-escogidos | fr: [ברור], [ברורים], [בררות] | de: [ברור], [ברורה], [ברורים] 1Chr 7:40; 1Chr 9:22; 1Chr 16:41; Neh 5:18; Job 33:3

3. sharpen, polish (1×) To sharpen or polish weapons — the Hiphil stem in its most concrete, physical application. In Jer 51:11, the Lord commands: 'Sharpen the arrows!' as Babylon's judgment approaches. The Spanish 'afilen' (sharpen/hone) captures this martial sense precisely. This single occurrence preserves the word's connection to material craftsmanship. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: sharpen | es: afilen | fr: [הברו] | de: [הברו] Jer 51:11

בִּרְשַׁע H1306 N-proper-ms (1×)

Birsha, king of Gomorrah in Genesis 14, a name of unknown etymology

This royal name appears in Genesis 14:2, identifying 'Birsha king of Gomorrah' among the five kings who rebelled against Mesopotamian overlords. Like his ally Bera of Sodom, Birsha's name has unknown etymology and uncertain root. The name may be non-Semitic, fitting the enigmatic character of the Genesis 14 narrative with its unique names and places. Birsha joined the coalition defeated in the Valley of Siddim, leading to Lot's capture and Abraham's subsequent rescue mission and meeting with Melchizedek.

(1×) A personal royal name for the king of Gomorrah in Genesis 14:2, whose root and meaning remain unknown. Birsha allied with Bera of Sodom and three other Canaanite kings in rebelling against Mesopotamian domination, resulting in military defeat and Lot's capture. The uncertain etymology and sparse attestation suggest possible non-Semitic origin. Multilingual translations (Birsa, Birsha, Birscha) uniformly transliterate, preserving the proper noun for this obscure ancient monarch whose story intersects with Abraham's early career and the Cities of the Plain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Birsha | es: Birsa | fr: Birsha | de: Birscha Gen 14:2

בְּאֵרֹתִי H1307 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Berotite - gentilicial denoting a person from Beeroth, a Benjaminite town

This is a gentilicial adjective identifying someone as coming from Beeroth, a town in Benjamin's territory. The term appears in lists of David's mighty men, where several warriors are identified by their hometown. The variant spelling הַבַּרְחֻמִי appears in Chronicles, showing the flexible orthography typical of Hebrew place-name derivatives.

(1×) The lone occurrence in 1 Chronicles 11:39 identifies Naharai the armor-bearer of Joab as a Berotite. Cross-linguistic evidence shows translators rendering this as a proper ethnic designation, with some versions (French, German) simply preserving the Hebrew form untranslated, recognizing it as a technical term for geographic origin.

PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Berotite | es: el-berotita | fr: [הַבְּרֹתִי] | de: [הַבְּרֹתִי] 1Chr 11:39

בְּשׂוֹר H1308 Art / N-proper-fs (3×)
the Besor—a brook in southern Philistine territory near Gaza
The Brook Besor marks a crucial location in David's pursuit of the Amalekite raiders who burned Ziklag (1 Sam 30). Two hundred of David's exhausted men stayed behind at this wadi while four hundred continued the chase. The brook became the site of a significant legal precedent: David ruled that those who stayed with the baggage would share equally in the plunder with those who fought (1 Sam 30:21-25). Modern scholarship identifies it with Wadi Razze southwest of Gaza. The name may connect to a root meaning 'good news,' though this is uncertain.

(3×) A seasonal watercourse (wadi) in Philistine territory, always appearing with the definite article as 'the Besor' (naḥal ha-Besor). All three occurrences are in 1 Samuel 30, marking the location where David divided his forces during the Amalekite pursuit. Cross-linguistic evidence is perfectly consistent: English 'the Besor,' Spanish 'el Besor,' French 'le Besor,' German 'der Besor'—all preserving the proper name with the definite article. This brook serves as both a geographical marker and a memorial to David's just ruling about shared plunder. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-Besor | es: el-Besor | fr: le-Besor | de: der-Besor 1Sam 30:9; 1Sam 30:10; 1Sam 30:21

בְּשֹׂרָה H1309 N-fs (6×)
tidings, news (especially good news); also the reward given to the bearer of tidings
A feminine noun appearing in the narratives of 2 Samuel and 2 Kings, closely tied to the drama of battlefield messengers. In most occurrences it simply means 'news' or 'tidings,' as in David's court awaiting word from the battle against Absalom (2 Sam 18:20-27). In 2 Kings 7:9, the lepers recognize that their discovery of the abandoned Aramean camp is 'good news.' A specialized sense appears in 2 Samuel 4:10, where it denotes the reward given to a messenger – the payment one expects for bringing tidings. The Arabic cognate bisharah confirms the core meaning of joyful announcement.

1. news (5×) News or tidings, often with a positive connotation – the report brought by a runner from the battlefield or a dramatic scene. Five occurrences cluster around the Absalom narrative (2 Sam 18:20, 22, 25, 27) and the lepers' discovery (2 Kgs 7:9). French 'nouvelle' and Spanish 'buena nueva' consistently reflect the positive expectation associated with this word, though the news itself is not always good. NEWS AND MESSAGES
en: good-news, news | es: buena-nueva | fr: bon-nouvelle, nouvelle | de: gut-news, news 2Sam 18:20; 2Sam 18:22; 2Sam 18:25; 2Sam 18:27; 2Kgs 7:9

2. a reward (1×) The reward or payment given to the bearer of good tidings – a metonymic extension from the news itself to the compensation expected by its messenger. In 2 Samuel 4:10, David ironically recalls how he treated a previous messenger who expected a reward (besorah) for his report. Spanish 'recompensa' and English 'a reward' capture this concrete, transactional sense distinct from the message itself. NEWS AND MESSAGES
en: a-reward | es: recompensa | fr: un-récompense | de: ein-reward 2Sam 4:10

בָּשַׁל H1310 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-2ms (28×)
To boil or cook food in liquid (Piel); to ripen or reach maturity of fruit or harvest (Qal/Hifil).
A verb rooted in the application of heat, whether by human hands in the kitchen or by the sun upon the vine. In its most common usage (Piel), it describes the act of boiling or cooking meat and other foods in liquid, as in the prohibition against boiling a kid in its mother's milk (Exod 23:19). When the Qal stem appears, the meaning shifts to natural ripening – the harvest that has grown ripe and ready for the sickle (Joel 3:13). Spanish distinguishes these neatly: cocerás (you shall cook) versus maduró (it ripened), and German similarly separates kochen from reifen.

1. cook, boil (25×) The culinary act of cooking or boiling food by heating it in liquid, used predominantly in the Piel stem for active cooking and Pual for passive being-cooked. Covers sacrificial preparation (Exod 29:31), ordinary meal-making (2 Sam 13:8), and even the harrowing image of mothers cooking their own children in siege (Lam 4:10). Spanish consistently renders cocerás/cocieron, while French uses cuire. BOIL COOK FOOD
en: and-cook, and-she-cooked, and-they-will-cook | es: Coced, Y-cocerás, cocerán | fr: [בשלו], [המבשלים], [ובשלו] | de: [בשלו], [המבשלים], [ובשלו] Exod 12:9; Exod 16:23; Exod 23:19; Exod 29:31

2. ripen, become ripe (3×) The natural process of fruit or grain reaching full maturity, an extension from the heat-of-cooking domain to the warmth of the sun bringing produce to ripeness. Joel 3:13 summons the sickle because the harvest is ripe (bashal), and Gen 40:10 describes grapes ripening on the vine. Spanish maduró and German reifen capture this botanical sense distinctly from the culinary meaning. BOIL COOK FOOD
en: is-ripe, let-be-cooked, ripened | es: cocínense, maduraron, maduró | fr: [בשל], [בשלו], ripened | de: [בשל], [בשלו], reiften Gen 40:10; Ezek 24:5; Joel 3:13

בָּשֵׁל H1311 Conj-w / Adj-ms (2×)
boiled, cooked — food prepared by boiling in water rather than roasting
This adjective describes food that has been cooked by boiling rather than by fire. It appears in precise ritual contexts: the Passover lamb must not be eaten 'boiled in water' but roasted, while the Nazirite's offering includes a boiled shoulder of the ram. The distinction between boiling and roasting mattered greatly in Israelite food preparation, especially for sacrificial meals where the cooking method carried symbolic weight. Related to Assyrian terms for ripeness, the root emphasizes the transformation heat brings.

(2×) Cooked or boiled in water, as opposed to roasted over fire. Used to specify forbidden preparation of the Passover lamb (Exodus 12:9) and permitted preparation of the Nazirite's ram shoulder (Numbers 6:19). The Spanish, French, and German glosses (cocido, bouilli, gekocht) all emphasize the 'boiled' aspect, highlighting how this cooking method distinguished certain ritual meals from others. BOIL COOK FOOD
en: and-boiled, boiled | es: cocida, y-cocido | fr: boiled, et-bouilli | de: gekocht, und-boiled Exod 12:9; Num 6:19

בִּשְׁלָם H1312 N-proper-ms (1×)
Bishlam - Persian official in Canaan during the time of Ezra, possibly meaning 'son of peace'
A Persian administrative official stationed in the region during the post-exilic period. The name may derive from בֶּן־שָׁלֵם (son of peace), reflecting the Persian practice of compound names. He appears among those who wrote letters to Artaxerxes opposing the rebuilding of Jerusalem. The German rendering 'in-vergalt' (in recompense) suggests an attempt to translate rather than transliterate, though most versions preserve it as a proper name.

(1×) In Ezra 4:7, Bishlam is listed first among the Persian officials who corresponded with the king. The multilingual evidence shows Spanish and English simply transliterating (Bislam, Bishlam), while German offers a semantic interpretation, perhaps reflecting uncertainty about whether this is a name or a title meaning 'in peace' or 'in recompense.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bishlam | es: Bislam | fr: [בשלם] | de: in-vergalt Ezra 4:7

בֹּשֶׂם H1313 N-msc / 1cs (1×)
my spice/balsam - fragrant substance, likely balsam or aromatic resin, used in perfumery
The word refers to valuable aromatic substances—spices, balsam, or perfume—highly prized in the ancient world. Related to Arabic ʾ and Greek βάλσαμον (balsam), these substances served as tokens of wealth and royal gifts. They appear in descriptions of temple incense, royal treasuries, and intimate love poetry. The possessive form 'my spice' in Song of Songs adds personal tenderness to the imagery.

(1×) In Song of Songs 5:1, the beloved speaks of gathering 'my spice' alongside myrrh, creating a sensory tapestry of fragrance and intimacy. The first-person possessive intensifies the personal nature of this love poetry. Cross-linguistic renderings consistently emphasize ownership ('mi-especia,' 'mon-baume'), though German's 'mein-Name' appears to be a mistranslation or textual confusion. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: my-spice | es: mi-especia | fr: mon-baume; | de: in-mein-Name Song 5:1

בֹּשֶׂם H1314 Conj-w / N-mp (29×)

Spice, perfume, balsam—aromatic substance used in sacred anointing, incense, trade, and royal tribute

The noun בֹּשֶׂם (also בֶּשֶׂם) covers the full range of aromatic substances: spices, perfumes, and balsam resin. It first appears in the Tabernacle prescriptions, where 'sweet-smelling spices' are ingredients for the holy anointing oil and incense (Exod 25:6, 30:23, 35:8). In the historical books, spices signal royal wealth: the Queen of Sheba brings them to Solomon (1 Kgs 10:2, 10, 25), and Hezekiah displays his spice-house to Babylonian envoys (2 Kgs 20:13). Song of Songs uses the plural בְּשָׂמִים as a fragrance of love and desire (Cant 4:10, 14, 16; 5:1, 13). The Arabic cognate ʾ and Aramaic בּוּסְמָא confirm the pan-Semitic aromatic core.

spice / perfume / balsam (29×) Aromatic spice, perfume, or balsam resin used in sacred and royal contexts. In cultic settings, it is a required ingredient for the holy anointing oil and incense (Exod 25:6, 30:23, 35:8, 35:28). In royal narratives, spices function as costly treasures and diplomatic gifts (1 Kgs 10:2, 10; 2 Kgs 20:13; 2 Chr 9:1, 9). In Song of Songs, the plural form becomes a metaphor for the beloved's allure (Cant 4:10, 14, 16; 5:1, 13), blending the sensory and the sacred. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: and-spices, fragrant, its-spices | es: aroma, con-especias, especias | fr: [בשמים], [הבשמים], [ובשמים] | de: Gewuerze, [בשמיו], [הבשמים] Exod 25:6; Exod 30:23; Exod 35:8

בָּשְׂמַת H1315 N-proper-fs (7×)

Basemath — proper name ('fragrant') borne by wives of Esau and a daughter of Solomon

A feminine proper name (בָּשְׂמַת) likely meaning 'fragrant' or 'perfume,' derived from the root בֹּשֶׂם ('spice, balsam'). It is borne by at least two — possibly three — women in Scripture. In Genesis 26:34, Basemath is a Hittite wife of Esau (daughter of Elon), while in Genesis 36:3 a Basemath daughter of Ishmael also marries Esau, creating a well-known harmonization puzzle with the name Mahalath in Genesis 28:9. A third Basemath appears as Solomon's daughter, married to the governor Ahimaaz (1 Kings 4:15).

Basemath (personal name) (7×) The proper name Basemath (בָּשְׂמַת, 'fragrant'), referring to: (1) a Hittite woman, daughter of Elon, wife of Esau (Gen 26:34); (2) a daughter of Ishmael and wife of Esau (Gen 36:3, 4, 10, 13, 17 — the Samaritan Pentateuch reads Mahalath throughout Genesis 36, reflecting a textual tradition that harmonized the names); and (3) a daughter of Solomon who married Ahimaaz (1 Kgs 4:15). Spanish Basemat/Basmat and German Basemat/Basmat preserve the Semitic root with slight orthographic variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Basemath, and-Basemath | es: Basemat, Basmat, y-Basmat | fr: Basemath, et-Basemath | de: Basemat, Basemath, Basmat Gen 26:34; Gen 36:3; Gen 36:4; Gen 36:10; Gen 36:13

בָּשָׁן H1316 Art / N-proper-fs (60×)

Bashan — the fertile highland region east of the Jordan, originally the kingdom of Og, famed for its cattle and oaks.

Bashan designates the broad, fertile plateau east of the Sea of Galilee and the upper Jordan, stretching from the Jabbok gorge northward toward Mount Hermon. In the conquest narratives it is defined as the kingdom of Og (Num 21:33; Deut 3:1-13), a territory allotted to the half-tribe of Manasseh. The name quickly became proverbial for abundance: the 'cows of Bashan' in Amos 4:1, the mighty 'bulls of Bashan' in Psalm 22:12, and the 'oaks of Bashan' in Isaiah 2:13 and Zechariah 11:2 all trade on its reputation for lush pasture and towering timber. Nahum 1:4 and Isaiah 33:9 personify Bashan as languishing when God's judgment falls. Spanish Basan, French Basan, and German Baschan all transliterate directly.

Bashan (territory) (60×) The proper territorial name for the region of Bashan east of the Jordan, encompassing the modern Golan Heights and Hauran plateau — originally the kingdom of Og (Num 21:33; Deut 3:1-3), later a type of exceptional fertility. Its oaks, bulls, and cows became stock images of strength and abundance (Ps 22:12; Amos 4:1; Isa 2:13). All target languages transliterate rather than translate, confirming it functions as a fixed geographic proper noun. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-Bashan | es: Basán, el-Basán | fr: le-Basan, le-Bashan | de: der-Baschan Num 21:33; Num 32:33; Deut 1:4; Deut 3:1

בָּשְׁנָה H1317 N-fs (1×)

shame - sense of disgrace or humiliation, particularly in the context of failed idolatry

This noun captures the emotional and social reality of shame, the painful awareness of dishonor or disgrace. In prophetic contexts, it often describes the humiliation that comes from trusting in false gods or political alliances that fail. The shame is not merely psychological but communal—a public exposure of misplaced trust. Hosea uses this term to describe Israel's coming disgrace when their idolatrous practices prove worthless.

(1×) Hosea 10:6 prophesies that Israel will bear shame because of their 'counsel'—their political machinations and idolatrous schemes. The term appears in a context of judgment where Ephraim's shame becomes visible to all. Translations consistently render this as shame or disgrace (Spanish 'vergüenza'), though French and German show translation uncertainties with phrases like 'dans-année' and 'in-Jahr,' perhaps reflecting confusion with similar-sounding roots. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: shame | es: vergüenza | fr: dans-année | de: in-Jahr Hos 10:6

בּשׁס H1318 V-Piel-Inf / 2mp (1×)

trampling - act of treading down or crushing underfoot, used metaphorically of oppression

This rare verbal form depicts the physical act of trampling or treading down, likely formed by dissimilation from the more common root בּוּס. Amos employs this vivid image to indict the wealthy for their economic oppression of the poor. The trampling metaphor powerfully conveys the violent, dehumanizing nature of social injustice—treating people like dirt underfoot. The prophet links this trampling directly to economic exploitation and unjust taxation.

(1×) In Amos 5:11, God condemns the oppressors 'because of your trampling upon the poor.' The verbal infinitive with possessive suffix emphasizes their ongoing, habitual oppression. Spanish 'pisoteáis' captures the active verb form, while French 'fouler' conveys the sense of treading down. The German preserves the Hebrew form untranslated, perhaps recognizing textual difficulty. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: your-trampling | es: pisoteáis | fr: fouler | de: [בושׁסכם] Amos 5:11

בָּשַׂר H1319 V-Piel-Imp-mp (24×)

Bear good tidings, announce joyful news – proclaim victory, salvation, or glad tidings (Piel stem)

In the Piel stem, this verb means to bring or proclaim good news, with a rich semantic range spanning battlefield victory reports, prophetic announcements of salvation, and liturgical praise. The Arabic cognate connects the joy of the face with delivering glad tidings. Isaiah's herald crying 'Your God reigns!' (Isa 52:7) represents the theological summit of this word, later echoed in the New Testament concept of 'gospel' (euangelion). The feminine participle mevasseret (Isa 40:9) personifies Zion herself as the bearer of good news. Psalm 96:2 extends the word into communal worship: 'proclaim his salvation day after day.' Spanish anunciad and French annoncer capture its proclamatory force.

bring good news, proclaim (24×) To bear or proclaim good tidings, especially news of military victory or divine deliverance (Piel). The battlefield messenger who runs to announce the outcome of war is the paradigmatic usage (2 Sam 18:19-20; 1 Sam 31:9). Isaiah transforms this into eschatological proclamation – the herald announces God's reign and salvation to Zion (Isa 40:9; 41:27; 52:7; 61:1). The participial form mevasser becomes a technical term for prophetic announcement, and Psalm 96:2 extends it to liturgical worship. The Arabic cognate bashar links the joy of the face with delivering glad news, while the Ethiopic cognate absara confirms the joyful-announcement sense across Semitic languages. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING en: I-have-proclaimed, a-herald, and-let-me-bring-news | es: Proclamé, anunciad, anunciarás | fr: [בשרו], [לבשר], annoncer | de: Freudenbote, [בשרו], [לבשר] 1Sam 4:17; 1Sam 31:9; 2Sam 1:20; 2Sam 4:10; 2Sam 18:19

בָּשָׂר H1320 Conj-w (270×)

Flesh, meat; the physical body, edible animal tissue, or the outer skin; humanity in its frailty before God.

Basar is the Hebrew Bible's primary word for the material, corporeal dimension of living creatures. At its most common it denotes the body itself — the physical being of humans and animals as distinct from spirit or soul, as when God declares 'My Spirit shall not strive with man forever, for he is flesh' (Gen 6:3). Yet it also narrows to the concrete: the roasted meat of the Passover lamb (Exod 12:8), the sacrificial portions laid on the altar, and the everyday meat of meals. In priestly legislation a third, more specialized sense emerges — the visible skin or body surface inspected for leprosy, where Swahili ngozi ('skin') and Arabic bashara ('epidermis') preserve the original Semitic root meaning more transparently than English 'flesh' does. Across all three senses, basar carries an undertone of vulnerability and transience.

1. individual body, corporeal self (161×) Split from sense 88507. Criteria: The physical body of an individual person or animal; contexts of disease, washing, embodied existence; 'my flesh shall rest in hope' (Ps 16:9)

en: flesh, meat | es: carne, carne: | fr: chair, viande | de: Fleisch Gen 2:21; Gen 9:4; Gen 17:11; Gen 17:14; Gen 17:23

2. all flesh, collective humanity/creatures (46×) Split from sense 88507. Criteria: The idiom 'kol basar' (all flesh) meaning all living creatures or all humanity collectively; Gen 6:12-13, 17; universal scope rather than individual body en: flesh | es: carne | fr: chair | de: Fleisch, Fleisch-ist, Fleisches Gen 6:3; Gen 6:12; Gen 6:13; Gen 6:17; Gen 6:19

3. edible meat, food from animals (45×) Split from sense 88509. Criteria: Animal tissue as food, especially in dietary and sacrificial contexts (Passover meat, craving meat in wilderness, priests consuming sacrifice portions)

en: its-flesh, the-flesh, the-meat | es: La-carne, carne-suya, la-carne | fr: chair, la-chair, le-chair | de: der-Fleisch, sein-Fleisch Exod 12:8; Exod 12:46; Exod 16:3; Exod 21:28; Exod 29:31

4. skin, body surface (14×) The outer skin or body surface, a specialized sense appearing 14 times almost exclusively in priestly/medical legislation concerning skin diseases and bodily discharges (Lev 13-15; 2 Kgs 5:10-14). When the priest inspects a 'swelling in the flesh,' the meaning is clearly dermatological, not the whole body. Swahili ngozi ('skin'), Arabic bashara ('epidermis'), and the BDB entry's own cognate note (Arabic bashar = skin) all confirm that this represents the original concrete meaning of the Semitic root, preserved in specialized ritual contexts while the broader 'body' sense came to dominate. FLESH AND BODY

en: as-his-flesh, flesh-my, his-flesh | es: como-su-carne, en-carne-de-, en-su-carne | fr: chair, comme-son-chair, dans-chair-de | de: Fleisch, dein-Fleisch, in-Fleisch-von Exod 4:7; Lev 15:7; Lev 15:19; 2Kgs 5:10; Job 4:15

5. literal human/animal flesh as physical tissue (4×) Split from sense 88509. Criteria: The physical tissue and skin of living beings, whether human or animal, as material substance (e.g., circumcision of flesh, bodies of flesh)

en: from-flesh-of-them, the-flesh | es: de-carne-de-ellos, la-carne | fr: chair, le-chair | de: Fleisch, der-Fleisch Lev 13:15; Lev 13:16; Ezek 11:19

בְּשַׂר H1321 N-ms (3×)

flesh—Aramaic term for bodily flesh or creatures in Daniel

This is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew basar, appearing only in Daniel's visions. It refers both to literal flesh devoured by beasts (Dan 7:5) and figuratively to humanity or all living creatures (Dan 2:11, 4:12). The word shares cognates across Aramaic dialects (Targum, Syriac) and carries the same semantic range as its Hebrew counterpart: physical flesh, humanity as mortal beings, and the realm of created life distinct from the divine. In Daniel 2:11, it emphasizes the unbridgeable gap between gods and mortals.

(3×) Aramaic noun for flesh, used in three contexts in Daniel: (1) flesh as food for beasts (Dan 7:5), (2) flesh as humanity/mortals distinct from deity (Dan 2:11), and (3) all creatures/living things (Dan 4:12, 'all flesh'). The glosses are straightforward: English 'flesh,' Spanish 'carne/la carne,' German 'Fleisch.' French and German sometimes use placeholder brackets for the emphatic Aramaic form (bishrah), reflecting the slight morphological difference from Hebrew. The term functions identically to Biblical Hebrew basar in its semantic range. FLESH AND BODY en: flesh | es: carne, la-carne | fr: [בשר], [בשרא] | de: Fleisch, [בשרא] Dan 2:11; Dan 4:12; Dan 7:5

בֹּשֶׁת H1322 Conj-w / N-fsc / 1cs (31×)

Shame, disgrace, or humiliation; also used as a scribal substitute for Baal in personal names (Bosheth).

Boshet is the Hebrew noun for shame in its fullest dimensions: the burning personal humiliation of public disgrace, the confusion of face before enemies, and the reproach of unfaithfulness. Prophets wield it powerfully: Jeremiah declares that Israel's fathers inherited nothing but boshet from their idols (Jer 3:24-25), and the Psalms pray that enemies be clothed in shame (Ps 35:26; 132:18). Spanish vergüenza and French honte capture the emotional weight well. Uniquely, later scribes replaced the theophoric element Baal in personal names with boshet, producing names like Ish-bosheth (2 Sam 2:8), a theological statement encoded in the very act of naming.

1. shame, disgrace (30×) Shame, disgrace, or humiliation as an abstract condition. The dominant sense across 30 occurrences, it describes the state of being shamed before God, enemies, or society. Found in constructions like boshet panim (shame of face, Dan 9:7-8; Ezra 9:7), labash boshet (to clothe with shame, Job 8:22; Ps 35:26), and as the bitter fruit of idolatry (Jer 3:24-25). Spanish vergüenza, French honte, and German Schande all converge on this core meaning of public disgrace and inner humiliation. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: And-the-shame, Like-the-shame, for-disgrace | es: Como-vergüenza-de, Y-la-vergüenza, a-la-vergüenza | fr: comme-honte, dans-honte, et-le-honte | de: Schande, [בשת], [לבשת] 1Sam 20:30; 2Chr 32:21; Ezra 9:7; Job 8:22

2. Bosheth (proper name substitute) (1×) A proper name element (Bosheth) substituted by later scribes for the divine name Baal in Israelite personal names, reflecting theological aversion to the Canaanite deity. This single occurrence (2 Sam 21:7) preserves the name Mephibosheth, where -bosheth replaces original -baal. All translations simply transliterate as bosheth/boshet, signaling recognition of the proper name function rather than the common noun meaning. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: bosheth | es: boshet | fr: bosheth | de: bosheth 2Sam 21:7

בַּת H1323 Prep-l / N-fpc / 3ms (589×)
Daughter, female offspring or descendant; figuratively a dependent village or satellite town of a larger city.
Bath is the feminine counterpart to ben (son), denoting a female child in relation to her parents. Yet its semantic range stretches far beyond biology: 'daughters of Zion' means the women — or the community — belonging to Jerusalem, and 'daughter' as a vocative is a term of tender address (Ruth 2:8). Most strikingly, bath develops a geographic sense: the 'daughters' of a city are its surrounding unwalled villages, dependent on the fortified mother-city. Spanish translators capture this vividly, shifting from hija (daughter) to aldeas (villages) when the context demands it (Josh 17:11; Num 21:25).

1. daughter, female offspring (545×) A female child in relation to her parents; by extension granddaughter, female descendant, young woman, or woman belonging to a people or place ('daughter of Zion'). Rendered hija (Spa.), fille (Fra.), Tochter (Ger.) across 545 occurrences. Includes vocative address to a young woman (Ruth 2:8) and collective identity markers like 'daughters of Israel' (2 Sam 1:24; 1 Chr 3:5). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: (daughter-of-), daughter-of, daughter-of- | es: hija-de, hija-de- | fr: fille | de: Tochter 1Chr 1:50; 1Chr 2:21; 1Chr 3:2; 1Chr 3:5

2. dependent village, satellite town (44×) A dependent village or satellite settlement surrounding a larger fortified city, where the 'daughters' are unwalled towns economically and defensively tied to the mother-city. Spanish translators shift from hija to aldeas (villages) in these contexts, confirming the metaphorical leap from kinship to geography. Concentrated in conquest and settlement narratives (Num 21:25, 32; Josh 15:45; Josh 17:11; Judg 11:26). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-in-her-daughters, and-in-its-daughters, and-its-daughters | es: e-hijas-de-ella, y-a-hijas-de-ella, y-aldeas-de-ella | fr: et-fille | de: und-Tochter Num 21:25; Num 21:32; Num 32:42; Josh 15:45; Josh 17:11

בַּת H1324 Conj-w / N-fsc (13×)
Bath, a Hebrew unit of liquid measure (~22 liters), used for wine, oil, and other liquids.
A unit of liquid capacity in the ancient Israelite measurement system, equivalent to about 22 liters or 6 US gallons. It stood as the liquid counterpart to the dry ephah, both being one-tenth of a homer (Ezek 45:11, 14). Solomon's bronze sea held 2,000 baths (1 Kgs 7:26; 2 Chr 4:5), and his ten lavers each held 40 baths (1 Kgs 7:38). Isaiah 5:10 warns that ten acres of vineyard shall yield only one bath—a sign of divine judgment. Spanish 'batos' and French 'bath' preserve the Hebrew term nearly unchanged.

bath (unit of liquid measure) (13×) A standard Hebrew unit of liquid volume equal to approximately 22 liters, used to measure wine, oil, and water in commercial, liturgical, and agricultural contexts. Defined as one-tenth of a homer and equivalent to the dry ephah (Ezek 45:11, 14). Solomon's molten sea held 2,000 baths (1 Kgs 7:26; 2 Chr 4:5), and each of the ten lavers held 40 baths (1 Kgs 7:38). In Isaiah 5:10 the meager yield of one bath from ten acres signals covenant judgment. BATH LIQUID MEASURE en: and-bath-of-, and-the-bath, bath | es: batos, el-bato, los-batos | fr: [בתים], bath, et-mesure | de: Haus, Tochter, bath 1Kgs 7:26; 1Kgs 7:38; 2Chr 2:10; 2Chr 4:5

בַּת H1325 N-mp (2×)
baths — a liquid measure unit, roughly 22 liters or 6 gallons, used for wine, oil, and water
The bath was a standard unit of liquid measurement in ancient Israel, approximately equal to six gallons. In Ezra 7:22, it appears in duplicate within a single verse specifying the Persian king's authorization for temple supplies: up to 100 baths of wine, 100 baths of oil. This Aramaic form of a common Hebrew measurement term reflects the bureaucratic precision of Persian-period administration, where exact quantities mattered for royal accounting of religious subsidies.

(2×) A liquid measure used in Persian-period administrative texts to quantify wine and oil allocations for the temple. Both occurrences in Ezra 7:22 specify royal support for temple operations, demonstrating how this standard measurement facilitated imperial oversight of religious institutions. The word appears in Aramaic sections of Ezra, reflecting official Persian chancellery language. BATH LIQUID MEASURE
en: baths | es: batos, batos-de | fr: [בתין] | de: [בתין] Ezra 7:22

בָּתָה H1326 N-fs (1×)
waste/destruction - complete desolation or ruin, the end-state of divine judgment
This noun denotes utter destruction or waste, the complete ruination of what was once productive or valuable. Isaiah uses it in the parable of the vineyard, where God threatens to reduce His carefully tended vineyard to absolute desolation. The term may be related to כָּלָה (end, completion), emphasizing finality. The vineyard will not merely decline but will be made into total wasteland—unpruned, unprotected, overgrown with thorns.

(1×) Isaiah 5:6 contains God's threat: 'I will make it a waste'—the vineyard that represents Israel will become complete desolation. The context describes removing all protective care, letting it return to wilderness. Spanish 'desolación' captures the comprehensive ruin, while French and German preserve the Hebrew form, perhaps acknowledging lexicographical uncertainty about this rare term's precise nuance. DESOLATION AND WASTE en: waste | es: desolación | fr: [בתה] | de: [בתה] Isa 5:6

בַּתָּה H1327 Art / N-fp (1×)
cliffs/precipices - steep, cut-off rock faces; abrupt escarpments in ravines
This term describes steep precipices or cliff faces, particularly those found in ravines or wadis. The root idea involves something cut off or abrupt—vertical rock faces that drop sharply. Isaiah uses this geographic feature in a prophetic image of the Assyrian invasion, where enemy forces will penetrate even the most remote and defensible natural locations. The combination with 'ravines' emphasizes hidden, difficult-to-access terrain.

(1×) In Isaiah 7:19, the prophet warns that invading forces will settle 'in the ravines of the precipices'—even the most inaccessible terrain will be occupied. The image conveys total, inescapable invasion. Spanish 'quebradas' (ravines/gorges) and English 'cliffs' both emphasize steep terrain. French and German preserve the Hebrew, possibly due to the term's geographical specificity and rarity. ROCK AND CLIFF en: the-cliffs | es: las-quebradas | fr: [הבתות] | de: [הבתות] Isa 7:19

בְּתוּאֵל H1328a Conj-w / N-proper-ms (9×)
Bethuel, nephew of Abraham, son of Nahor, and father of Rebekah and Laban.
A proper name (perhaps meaning 'man of God,' comparable to מְתוּשָׁאֵל) designating the son of Nahor, Abraham's brother, and the father of Rebekah. Bethuel plays a pivotal but surprisingly passive role in the patriarchal narratives — he is named as Rebekah's father when Abraham's servant seeks a bride for Isaac (Gen 24:15, 24, 47, 50), yet Laban does most of the speaking. He is consistently identified as 'Bethuel the Aramean of Paddan-Aram' (Gen 25:20; 28:2, 5). Translations are uniform: Spanish 'Betuel', French 'Bethuel', German 'Betuel.'

Bethuel (9×) Bethuel — a proper name (possibly 'man of God') for the son of Nahor and Milcah, nephew of Abraham, and father of Rebekah and Laban. He appears primarily in the betrothal narrative of Genesis 24, where Abraham's servant travels to the city of Nahor in Aram-Naharaim to find a wife for Isaac (Gen 24:15, 24, 47, 50). The Priestly source identifies him as 'Bethuel the Aramean of Paddan-Aram' (Gen 25:20; 28:2, 5). His relative silence in the marriage negotiation, where Laban takes the lead, has long intrigued commentators. Cross-linguistic evidence is highly consistent: Spanish 'Betuel', French 'Bethuel', German 'Betuel'. PROPER NAMES

(PERSONAL)
en: Bethuel, and-Bethuel, to-Bethuel | es: Betuel, Y-Betuel, a-Betuel | fr: Bethuel, et-Bethuel, à-Bethuel | de: Betuel, Betuels, dem-Betuel Gen 22:22; Gen 22:23; Gen 24:15; Gen 24:24; Gen 24:47

בְּתוּאֵל H1328b Conj-w (1×)

and in Bethuel - prepositional phrase marking geographic location in Simeon's territory

This refers to Bethuel, a town in the tribal allotment of Simeon. The settlement appears under various names across biblical texts (also Bethul, Chesil, Bethel), reflecting either textual variants or multiple names for the same location—a common phenomenon in ancient Near Eastern geography. The exact site remains unknown to modern archaeology. The name may mean 'dwelling of God,' following typical Semitic place-name patterns.

(1×) In 1 Chronicles 4:30, Bethuel appears in a list of Simeonite cities. The name's variants across Joshua, Samuel, and Chronicles suggest scribal confusion or dialectal differences in pronunciation. The multilingual evidence shows most versions preserving the transliteration with the preposition 'and in' or 'Y en,' though French and German leave the form in Hebrew, acknowledging the textual-critical issues surrounding this place name. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-in-Bethu'el | es: Y-en-Betuel | fr: [ובבתואל] | de: [ובבתואל] 1Chr 4:30

בְּתוּאֵל H1329 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

and Bethul - settlement in Simeon's territory, variant spelling of Bethuel

Bethul represents another orthographic variant of the Simeonite town also known as Bethuel, Chesil, or Bethel. These variant spellings likely reflect different manuscript traditions, dialectal pronunciations, or actual name changes over time. Such variation was common for lesser-known settlements, especially those in the Negev region assigned to Simeon. The conjunction 'and' indicates this is part of a geographic list.

(1×) Joshua 19:4 lists Bethul among the cities of Simeon's inheritance, appearing in a catalog of settlements. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 4:30 has Bethuel instead. Cross-linguistic renderings consistently preserve the name with coordinating conjunction: 'and-Bethul,' 'y-Betul,' 'et-Bethul,' showing translators' recognition that this is part of a formal geographic register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-Bethul | es: y-Betul | fr: et-Bethul | de: und-Bethul Josh 19:4

בְּתוּלָה H1330 N-fpc (50×)

virgin, maiden — a young unmarried woman, with emphasis on sexual purity; also used figuratively of cities and nations

Betulah denotes a young woman of marriageable age whose defining characteristic is virginity — she dwells in her father's house, as yet unknown to a man (Gen 24:16). Its 50 occurrences move between literal and figurative with striking freedom: legal texts prescribe marriage rules for the betulah (Deut 22:19, 23, 28), the high priest must marry one (Lev 21:13-14), yet the prophets personify whole nations as 'virgin Israel' (Amos 5:2; Jer 31:4) and 'virgin daughter of Zion' (2 Kgs 19:21; Lam 2:13). Joel 1:8 memorably pictures a betulah mourning for the bridegroom of her youth. Arabic batula and Akkadian batultu confirm the word's pan-Semitic antiquity.

1. literal virgin: unmarried young woman (37×) Split from sense 88716. Criteria: Individual young women of marriageable age dwelling in father's house, emphasized for sexual purity (Gen 24:16, Exod 22:16-17, Lev 21:3-14, Deut 22)
en: a-virgin, virgin, virgin-of | es: a-la-virgen, con-la-virgen, doncellas | fr: [בתולה], [בתולות], un-virgin | de: Jungfrau, Jungfrauen, ein-virgin Gen 24:16; Exod 22:16; Exod 22:17; Lev 21:3; Lev 21:14

2. figurative virgin: personified cities and nations (13×) Split from sense 88716. Criteria: Cities or nations metaphorically personified as a virgin maiden to express vulnerability, purity, or pathos of devastation ('virgin daughter of Zion,' 'virgin Israel,' Isa 37:22, Amos 5:2, Lam 1:15, 2:13)
en: O-virgin, for-the-virgin, of-Tsiyon | es: a-la-virgen, la-virgen, las-vírgenes-de | fr: vierge, vierge-de, virgin | de: Jungfrau, virgin 2Kgs 19:21; Isa 23:12; Isa 37:22; Isa 47:1; Jer 14:17

בְּתוּלִים H1331 N-mpc / 1cs (10×)

Virginity — the state of being a virgin, or the physical tokens proving a bride's virginity

The masculine plural noun בְּתוּלִים (betulim) denotes the state of virginity or the physical evidence thereof, used in legal and social contexts pertaining to a woman's sexual purity before marriage. Deuteronomy 22:14-20 provides the fullest treatment, where a husband may challenge his bride's virginity and her parents must produce the 'tokens of virginity' (betulim) before the elders — likely the bloodstained garment from the wedding night. Leviticus 21:13 requires the high priest to marry a woman 'in her virginity.' Judges 11:37-38 records Jephthah's daughter bewailing her virginity on the mountains. Arabic bakārah, Korean cheonyeoseong, and Spanish virginidad all confirm a single unified sense.

virginity (state or evidence of) (10×) The state of virginity or the physical evidence (tokens) proving a bride's sexual purity prior to marriage. Central to the legal procedure in Deuteronomy 22:14-20, where the 'tokens of virginity' must be displayed before the city elders to vindicate an accused wife. Also used of the high priest's marriage requirement (Lev 21:13) and Jephthah's daughter bewailing her virginity (Judg 11:37-38). Ezekiel 23:3, 8 uses the term metaphorically of Jerusalem and Samaria's youth before their 'harlotry.' Arabic كارة (bakārah), Spanish 'virginidad,' and Swahili 'ubikira' all render the same semantic content. VIRGIN MAIDEN
en: evidence-of-virginity, evidence-of-virginity-of, her-virginity | es: en-su-virginidad, la-virginidad-de, mi-virginidad | fr: dans-sa-virginité, evidence-de-virginité, evidence-de-virginité-de | de: [בתוליה], [בתוליהן], evidence-von-virginity Lev 21:13; Deut 22:14; Deut 22:15; Deut 22:17

בִּתְיָה H1332 N-proper-fs (1×)

Bithiah - daughter of Pharaoh who married Mered of Judah, meaning possibly 'daughter of Yahweh'

A remarkable name meaning possibly 'daughter of Yahweh' or 'worshipper of Yah,' given to an Egyptian princess who married into the tribe of Judah. The name follows a pattern seen in Phoenician (בתבעל, 'daughter of Baal'), where 'bat' (daughter) compounds with a divine name to indicate devotion. That an Egyptian royal bore a Yahwistic name suggests either conversion or that the name was given later, commemorating her incorporation into Israel. She is explicitly identified as Pharaoh's daughter.

(1×) In 1 Chronicles 4:18, Bithiah is identified as 'the daughter of Pharaoh' whom Mered married. This extraordinary cross-cultural marriage united Egyptian royalty with Israelite lineage. Most translations simply transliterate the name (Bitya, Bithyah), recognizing it as a proper designation, while French and German preserve the Hebrew form, perhaps acknowledging the name's theological significance (Yahweh + daughter). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bithyah | es: Bitya | fr: [בתיה] | de: [בתיה] 1Chr 4:18

בָּתַק H1333 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3cp / 2fs2 (1×)

and they shall cut you - violent action of dismembering or slashing with swords

This Piel verbal form describes the violent act of cutting to pieces, hacking apart, or dismembering with swords. Related to Akkadian batāqu and Arabic ´ (to cut, amputate), it conveys brutal, lethal violence. Ezekiel employs this graphic imagery in his allegory of unfaithful Jerusalem, where the city personified as an adulteress faces extreme punishment. The second-person feminine suffix makes the threat intensely personal and direct.

(1×) In Ezekiel 16:40, the prophet delivers God's judgment: 'they shall cut you to pieces with their swords.' This appears in an extended metaphor where Jerusalem's infidelity receives violent recompense from her former lovers. Spanish 'te atravesarán' (they will pierce you through) captures the violent penetration, while French 'percer' (pierce) emphasizes the sword's action. German preserves the Hebrew, recognizing the term's rarity and graphic intensity. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: and-they-shall-cut-you | es: y-te-atravesarán | fr: et-percer | de: [ובחקוך] Ezek 16:40

בָּתַר H1334 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (2×)

cut in two, divide — to sever animals for covenant ceremonies

This verb describes the ritual cutting of animals in covenant-making ceremonies, appearing only in the foundational covenant scene of Genesis 15. Abraham cut animals in half and arranged the pieces, creating a pathway through which the divine presence passed, solemnizing God's promise of land and offspring. The Arabic cognate emphasizes cutting off or severing completely. Both occurrences in the same verse use different forms to describe this decisive, ceremonial division that accompanied the most solemn oaths in ancient Near Eastern treaty-making.

(2×) To cut animals in two for covenant ritual purposes. Both uses in Genesis 15:10 describe Abraham's preparation of sacrificial animals, severing them down the middle to create the sacred space through which God's glory would pass. The multilingual evidence (cut, partió, couper, zerteilte) consistently identifies this as a deliberate bisection, not mere butchering, emphasizing the ceremonial nature of covenant ratification. SPLITTING AND CLEAVING

en: and-he-cut, he-cut | es: partió, y-los-partió | fr: et-il-couper, il-couper | de: und-zerteilte, zerteilte-er Gen 15:10

בֶּתֶר H1335 N-mpc (3×)

parts, pieces—halves of animals cut for covenant-making rituals

This noun refers to the pieces or halves of animals cut apart in ancient covenant-making ceremonies. In Genesis 15:10, Abraham cuts animals 'in pieces' (literally 'in its halves'), and in Jeremiah 34:18-19, violators of covenant are threatened with the fate of the calf whose parts they walked between. The practice involved cutting animals in two and passing between the pieces, symbolically invoking a curse upon covenant-breakers. The word may also appear in Song of Songs 2:17 as 'mountains of Bether' (cleft mountains), though this is disputed.

(3×) Pieces or halves of animals divided in covenant rituals. Genesis 15:10 uses the singular ('his piece') for Abraham's ritual, while Jeremiah 34:18-19 uses plural forms ('parts of the calf') for the violated covenant. Cross-linguistic evidence shows: English 'his piece/parts of,' Spanish 'mitad (half)/partes de,' French 'son pièce/[betri],' German 'Stück/[betri].' The Hebrew root suggests cutting or severing. Some languages leave the Jeremiah occurrences untransliterated, perhaps due to the ritual's strangeness or textual difficulty. This is technical vocabulary for covenant-making ceremonies. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES

en: his-piece, its-parts, parts-of | es: mitad-de-él, partes-de, partes-de-él | fr: [בתרי], [בתריו], son-pièce | de: Stück, [בתרי], [בתריו] Gen 15:10; Jer 34:18; Jer 34:19

בֶּתֶר H1336 N-ms (1×)

Bether - place name possibly meaning 'division/cleft,' referring to cleft mountains or separation

This enigmatic term appears in Song of Songs' poetic landscape, meaning either 'cleft mountains,' 'mountains of separation,' or possibly referring to malobathron (an aromatic plant). The root suggests cutting or dividing, which fits with mountainous terrain characterized by deep ravines and separated peaks. Some interpreters see it as a proper name (Bether), while others read it descriptively. The ambiguity has generated diverse scholarly opinions, reflected in ancient versions and modern translations.

(1×) In Song of Songs 2:17, the beloved urges her lover to flee 'to the mountains of Bether' until evening shadows fall. The phrase creates romantic, distant imagery—perhaps mountains that separate the lovers, or cleft peaks suggesting hidden valleys. Most translations preserve 'Bether' as a place name (Spanish Beter, English Bether), treating it as geographic, though the exact referent remains poetically elusive. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES

en: Bether | es: Beter | fr: de-Béther. | de: [בתר] Song 2:17

בַּת־רַבִּים H1337 N-proper-fs (1×)

Bath-rabbim - gate of Heshbon meaning 'daughter of multitudes,' describing a populous city

This composite place name means 'daughter of multitudes,' serving as an epithet for Heshbon or specifically for one of its gates. In Semitic idiom, 'daughter of' can denote a city's character or attribute—here, its large population. Heshbon was a significant Moabite/Amorite city that became Israelite. The name appears in love poetry comparing the beloved's eyes to pools, with the geographic reference adding specificity and grandeur to the image.

(1×) In Song of Songs 7:4, the lover praises: 'Your eyes are pools in Heshbon, by the gate of Bath-rabbim.' The reference to this populous gate evokes a busy, important location, adding to the beloved's stature. Most translations preserve the name (Bat-Rabbim, Bath-Rabbim), recognizing it as a technical designation for a specific architectural feature of Heshbon, with 'daughter of multitudes' capturing the city's teeming character. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Bat-Rabbim | es: Bat-Rabbim | fr: de-Bath-Rabbim; | de: [בתרבים] Song 7:4

בִּתְרוֹן H1338 Art / N-proper-fs (1×)

the Bithron - territorial designation east of Jordan, possibly meaning 'the cleft' or 'the ravine'

This geographic term designates a region east of the Jordan, likely characterized by ravines, clefts, or gorges. The root relates to cutting or dividing, suggesting terrain marked by deep wadis or divided landscape. It appears in the narrative of Abner's retreat after combat with Joab's forces, describing the route or region traversed. The definite article indicates a known, specific territory, though its exact location remains unidentified in modern geography.

(1×) In 2 Samuel 2:29, Abner and his men march 'through all the Bithron' during their retreat. The context suggests sustained travel through distinctive terrain. Translations consistently preserve the article: 'the Bithron,' 'el-Bitron,' 'le-Bitron,' 'der-Bitron,' treating this as a recognized territorial designation in the Jordan Valley region, though the precise geographic referent is now lost. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-Bitron | es: el-Bitron | fr: le-Bitron | de: der-Bitron 2Sam 2:29

בַּת־שֶׁבַע H1339 Prep / N-proper-fs (11×)

Bathsheba — 'daughter of an oath'; wife of Uriah the Hittite, then of David; mother of Solomon

The name Bathsheba (בַּת־שֶׁבַע, 'daughter of an oath' or 'daughter of abundance') belongs to one of the most pivotal women in Israel's royal history. First introduced as the wife of Uriah the Hittite (2 Sam 11:3), she becomes the catalyst for David's great sin and subsequent repentance. After the death of their first child, she bears Solomon (2 Sam 12:24), and later secures his succession by appearing boldly before the aging David (1 Kgs 1:11-31). She is the only woman Solomon rises to greet and seats at his right hand (1 Kgs 2:19). Spanish renders it 'Betsabé,' Hindi बत्शेबा, Arabic ʾ.

Bathsheba (personal name) (11×) The proper name of a woman from Jerusalem, wife of Uriah the Hittite and later wife of King David, mother of Solomon. All eleven occurrences cluster in 2 Samuel 11-12 and 1 Kings 1-2, spanning the arc from David's adultery through Solomon's enthronement. The compound name bat-sheva may mean 'daughter of an oath' or 'daughter of abundance.' She appears in Matthew's genealogy of Jesus (Matt 1:6) under the oblique designation 'the wife of Uriah.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bathsheba | es: Bat-Sheba, Betsabé, a-Bat-Sheba | fr: Bathschéba, dans-Bath-Schéba | de: Bathseba, Batseba 2Sam 11:3; 2Sam 12:24; 1Kgs 1:11; 1Kgs 1:15; 1Kgs 1:16

בַּת־שׁוּעַ H1340 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

to Bathshua - daughter of Shua, wife of David and mother of Solomon, variant of Bathsheba

This name is a variant spelling of Bathsheba, meaning 'daughter of Shua' or 'daughter of opulence.' The Chronicles genealogy uses this form where Samuel uses Bathsheba. Scholarly debate exists whether this represents textual variance, an alternative name tradition, or even a different person. However, the context—listing David's sons born in Jerusalem—strongly identifies her as Solomon's mother. In 1 Chronicles 2:3, the same name refers to Judah's Canaanite wife, showing the name's broader use.

(1×) In 1 Chronicles 3:5, Solomon is listed among four sons 'born to him by Bathshua daughter of Ammiel' in Jerusalem. This clearly refers to the woman known elsewhere as Bathsheba. Most translations preserve the distinct spelling (Bath-Shua, Bat-Sua), while some maintain Bathsheba to avoid confusion. The prepositional prefix 'to' (לְ) indicates she is the mother, the one to whom these sons were born. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5544 WITH 4 SENSES en: to-Bath-Shua | es: de-Bat-Sua | fr: [לבתשוע] | de: [לבתשוע] 1Chr 3:5

גֵּא H1341 Adj-ms (1×)

proud - arrogant, haughty; likely a scribal error for the more common form גֵּאֶה

This adjective describes pride or arrogance, though most scholars recognize it as a textual variant or scribal error for the standard form גֵּאֶה. Isaiah uses it in an oracle against Moab, characterizing the nation's excessive pride. Pride in biblical idiom often connotes not mere self-confidence but arrogant presumption and refusal to acknowledge proper boundaries or authority. Moab's pride becomes a central theme in prophetic denunciation.

(1×) Isaiah 16:6 declares, 'We have heard of Moab's pride—how very proud he is!' The repetition and intensification emphasize Moab's notorious arrogance. The parallel in Jeremiah 48:29 uses the standard spelling, confirming this as likely a variant. Spanish 'muy' (very) appears to translate the intensification rather than the root word itself. French and German preserve the Hebrew, acknowledging the text-critical issue. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: proud | es: muy | fr: [גא] | de: [גא] Isa 16:6

גָּאָה H1342 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (7×)

To rise up, grow high, be exalted — of waters rising, plants growing, or God triumphing gloriously

A Qal verb (גָּאָה) meaning 'to rise up' or 'be exalted,' covering natural phenomena and divine triumph. Its most celebrated use is the Song of the Sea — 'I will sing to the LORD, for he has triumphed gloriously' (Exod 15:1, 21), where the cognate accusative construction גָּאֹה גָּאָה intensifies the verb into a shout of cosmic victory. Elsewhere the same verb describes rising waters in Ezekiel's temple river (Ezek 47:5) and rushes growing without water (Job 8:11), grounding divine exaltation in the observable world of things that surge upward.

to rise up, grow high, be exalted (7×) To rise up, grow, or be exalted, used across literal and figurative contexts. Of waters rising: Ezekiel's temple river that had risen (גָּאוּ) to swimming depth (Ezek 47:5). Of plants growing: Job 8:11 asks whether rushes can grow (יִגְאֶה) without water. Of divine triumph: the iconic Song of the Sea (Exod 15:1, 21) with its intensifying cognate accusative גָּאֹה גָּאָה, 'he has triumphed gloriously.' Of Job's head being lifted up under divine scrutiny (Job 10:16). Spanish ensalzar ('to exalt') and French s'élever ('to rise') together capture the dual physical and theological dimensions. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: He-has-triumphed, and-it-rises, can-grow- | es: Y-si-se-levanta„ crecieron, ensalzar | fr: Il-a-triumphed, et-être-élevé, s'élever | de: Er-hat-triumphed, [גאו], [הגיגאה] Exod 15:1; Exod 15:21; Job 8:11

גְּאֶה H1343 Adj-mp (8×)

Proud, arrogant, haughty — describing those who exalt themselves against God or oppress the humble.

An adjective for the proud or arrogant person, used in wisdom and prophetic literature to describe those whose self-exaltation stands in defiance of God. In Job 40:11–12, God himself challenges Job to look upon every proud one and humble them. Psalms 94:2 and 140:5 invoke divine justice against the arrogant, while Proverbs 15:25 and 16:19 contrast the proud with the humble, whom God favors. Spanish soberbio ('haughty') and French orgueilleux ('proud') both underscore the moral weight of the term — this is not mere confidence but a culpable self-elevation that invites divine correction.

proud, arrogant (person) (8×) Describes a person who is proud, arrogant, or haughty, typically in opposition to God or in oppression of others. In Job 40:11–12, YHWH commands that every proud one be brought low. Psalms 94:2 calls for retribution against the arrogant, and Proverbs 15:25 declares that the LORD will tear down the house of the proud. Spanish soberbio ('haughty, overbearing') and French orgueilleux ('proud') capture the moral censure inherent in all eight occurrences. The word consistently contrasts with humility as a divinely favored virtue. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: proud, proud-one, the-proud | es: orgulloso, soberbio, soberbios | fr: [גאה], orgueilleux, גאה | de: [גאה], [גאים], der-proud Job 40:11; Job 40:12; Ps 94:2; Ps 140:5; Prov 15:25

גְּאָה H1344 N-fs (1×)

pride - haughty attitude, arrogance, or presumption standing opposed to wisdom

This feminine noun denotes pride, arrogance, or haughty presumption. In Proverbs, it appears in Wisdom's self-description, listing what she hates. Biblical wisdom literature consistently opposes pride as the root of folly and the antithesis of the fear of the Lord. Pride represents self-exaltation that refuses proper humility before God and others. The term captures both the internal attitude and its outward manifestations in behavior and speech.

(1×) Proverbs 8:13 declares that 'the fear of the Lord is to hate evil; pride and arrogance... I hate.' Wisdom personified lists pride among the things she fundamentally opposes. The multilingual evidence shows consistent rendering as pride, arrogance, or haughtiness (Spanish 'soberbia'), though French preserves the Hebrew form and German brackets it, possibly indicating text-critical awareness or recognition of the term's specific theological weight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: pride | es: soberbia | fr: גאה | de: [גאה] Prov 8:13

גְּאוּאֵל H1345 N-proper-ms (1×)

Geuel - Gadite spy, son of Machi, whose name means 'majesty of El' or 'exaltation of God'

This personal name means 'majesty of El' or 'exaltation of God,' combining גֵּא (majesty, pride) with אֵל (God). Geuel was chosen to represent the tribe of Gad among the twelve spies sent to reconnoiter Canaan. Theophoric names like this—incorporating divine names—were common in ancient Israel, reflecting parents' piety or aspirations. The name's meaning stands in ironic contrast to the spies' subsequent failure of faith, though Scripture doesn't specify Geuel's individual report.

(1×) Numbers 13:15 lists 'from the tribe of Gad, Geuel son of Maki' among the twelve spies. He represents his tribe in this critical reconnaissance mission. All major translations preserve the name identically (Geuel), recognizing it as a standard transliteration of the theophoric Hebrew name, maintaining its divine element ('El') clearly visible across linguistic boundaries. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Geuel | es: Geuel | fr: Geuel | de: Geuel Num 13:15

גַּאֲוָה H1346 N-fsc / 3ms (19×)

Pride, arrogance, or haughtiness deserving judgment; also majesty, excellence, or dignified greatness attributed to God.

Few Hebrew words illustrate the moral ambiguity of 'greatness' as sharply as ga'avah. In most of its occurrences, it names the sinful pride of nations and the wicked—Moab's arrogance (Isa 16:6), the haughtiness that precedes a fall (Prov 29:23). Yet the same noun celebrates God's majestic riding across the heavens (Deut 33:26) and Israel's God-given dignity (Deut 33:29). The difference is not in the word itself but in who is exalted: when God is the source, ga'avah becomes glory; when humans seize it for themselves, it becomes hubris.

1. pride, arrogance, haughtiness (15×) Sinful pride, insolence, or self-exalting arrogance that provokes divine judgment. The Psalms repeatedly condemn it: the wicked hotly pursue the poor 'in pride' (Ps 10:2), pride is a necklace adorning the violent (Ps 73:6). Isaiah 9:8 and 13:11 target the pride of Ephraim and the arrogance of the ruthless. Spanish 'soberbia/orgullo' and French 'orgueil' carry the same censure. Proverbs 29:23 distills the principle: 'a person's pride will bring them low.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Pride, and-arrogance-of, and-his-arrogance | es: En-soberbia-de, Orgullo, Soberbia-de | fr: dans-l'orgueil, dans-orgueil, et-orgueil | de: Stolz, [בגאוה], [גאוה] Job 41:15; Ps 10:2; Ps 31:18; Ps 31:23; Ps 36:11

2. majesty, excellence, dignity (4×) Majesty, excellence, or dignified grandeur—a positive quality attributed to God or conferred by God. Deuteronomy 33:26 celebrates the God of Jeshurun who 'rides the heavens in his majesty,' and 33:29 declares Israel blessed because of divine excellence. Psalm 68:34 ascribes ga'avah to God over Israel. Spanish 'majestad' and French 'majesté' capture this reverential tone. Isaiah 13:3 applies it to God's consecrated warriors, those who 'exult in my majesty'—pride sanctified by divine commission. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-his-majesty, is-His-majesty, my-majesty | es: en-mi-majestad, su-majestad, tu-excelencia | fr: et-dans-son-majesté, orgueil, ton-majesté | de: [גאוהך], dein-majesty, ist-sein-Majestät Deut 33:26; Deut 33:29; Ps 68:34; Isa 13:3

גָּאוֹן H1347 Prep-b / N-msc / 3mp (49×)

Exaltation, majesty, or pride; used positively of divine glory and negatively of human arrogance and haughtiness

This noun holds a striking moral ambiguity at its core — the same word that celebrates God's thundering majesty (Exod 15:7; Job 37:4) condemns the swelling arrogance of nations and individuals (Prov 8:13; Isa 13:11). When applied to God, גָּאוֹן conveys an awesome, unapproachable grandeur — 'clothe yourself with glory and majesty' (Job 40:10). When turned toward human pride, it becomes one of the prophets' sharpest words of rebuke: Amos swears by it ironically as 'the pride of Jacob' (Amos 6:8; 8:7), and Jeremiah buries a linen sash to dramatize how God will 'ruin the pride of Judah' (Jer 13:9). The French and German translations often collapse both senses into a single term ('orgueil,' 'Hochmut'), while Spanish more carefully distinguishes 'majestad' from 'soberbia.'

1. pride, arrogance (negative) (31×) The dominant negative sense: sinful pride, arrogance, or haughtiness — the self-exaltation of humans or nations who elevate themselves against God. This is the prophets' characteristic use: 'I will break the pride of your power' (Lev 26:19), 'I will punish the world for its evil, and the arrogant for their pride' (Isa 13:11). Proverbs 8:13 lists it among the things the LORD hates. Spanish consistently distinguishes this with 'soberbia' or 'orgullo,' while French 'orgueil' and German 'Hochmut' serve for both positive and negative valences, sometimes obscuring the moral dimension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-his-pride, pride-of, pride-of- | es: el-orgullo-de, la-soberbia-de, orgullo-de | fr: et-orgueil, majesté, orgueil | de: Hochmut, Stolz, pride-von Lev 26:19; Job 35:12; Job 38:11; Ps 59:12; Prov 8:13

2. majesty, excellency (divine) (11×) The positive theological sense: the majestic greatness, excellency, and splendor of God Himself. At the Song of the Sea, Moses sings 'in the greatness of your majesty you overthrow your adversaries' (Exod 15:7). Job 37:4 describes God's thundering voice as inseparable from His גָּאוֹן. In Job 40:10 God challenges Job to 'deck yourself with majesty and dignity.' Spanish 'majestad' and French 'majesté' both render this divine application with appropriate weight, distinguishing it from the negative human pride sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-majesty, Your-majesty, his-majesty | es: como-majestad-de, en-majestad-de, majestad | fr: Ton-majesté, dans-orgueil, majesté | de: Dein-majesty, Hochmut, Stolz Exod 15:7; Job 37:4; Job 40:10; Isa 2:10; Isa 2:19

3. glory, honor (of people or land) (5×) A mediating positive sense: glory, splendor, or rightful pride associated with a people, land, or inheritance — not sinful arrogance but legitimate honor. Psalm 47:4 celebrates that God 'chose our inheritance for us, the pride of Jacob whom he loved.' Isaiah 4:2 envisions the 'branch of the LORD' becoming 'the beauty and glory' of Israel's survivors. Isaiah 13:19 calls Babylon 'the glory of kingdoms' before announcing its destruction. The line between this and sense 1 is often drawn by context alone. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-majesty-of, for-pride, pride-of | es: orgullo-de, para-orgullo | fr: majesté, orgueil, à-orgueil | de: Hochmut, Stolz-von Ps 47:4; Isa 4:2; Isa 13:19; Isa 60:15; Ezek 7:20

4. (2×) A distinctive concrete geographical usage found in Jeremiah 49:19 and 50:44, where the phrase 'the thicket of the Jordan' (גְּאוֹן הַיַּרְדֵּן) describes the dense, lush vegetation along the Jordan River — its 'swelling' or 'pride' rendered as luxuriant overgrowth. English renders 'thicket of,' Spanish 'espesura de' (thicket of), preserving the concrete image, while French 'orgueil' and German 'Hochmut' miss the geographical sense entirely, defaulting to the abstract 'pride' meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-the-thicket-of | es: desde-espesura-de | fr: de-orgueil | de: Hochmut Jer 49:19; Jer 50:44

גֵּאוּת H1348 N-fsc (8×)

Majesty, pride, or rising; the swelling upward of divine grandeur, human arrogance, or physical phenomena like smoke.

Derived from the root ga'ah ('to rise, be exalted'), this noun captures the upward thrust of exaltation in three directions. When applied to God, it is glorious majesty — YHWH is 'clothed with majesty' (Ps 93:1), and Israel sings that 'he has done majestically' (Isa 12:5). When applied to humans, the same swelling becomes pride and arrogance — the 'proud crown of Ephraim' (Isa 28:1, 3) and those who 'speak with pride' (Ps 17:10). In one striking physical use, it describes the rising column of smoke from wickedness burning like fire (Isa 9:18). The shared root across all three senses reminds us that majesty and pride are the same upward motion — the difference is who is doing the rising.

1. pride, arrogance (4×) Human pride, arrogance, or haughtiness — the swelling of self-exaltation against God or others. Isaiah condemns the 'proud crown' (ateret ge'ut) of Ephraim's drunkards (Isa 28:1, 3), and the psalmist laments those who 'speak with pride' (Ps 17:10). Spanish 'soberbia/arrogancia' and German 'Stolz' consistently mark this negative, moral sense. Psalm 89:9 applies it to the raging sea, personifying the waves' proud surging. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-pride, over-the-raging-of, with-pride | es: con-arrogancia, en-soberbia-de, soberbia-de | fr: dans-majesté, majesté | de: Hoheit, mit-Stolz, über-der-raging-von Ps 17:10; Ps 89:9; Isa 28:1; Isa 28:3

2. majesty, exaltation (3×) Divine majesty, exaltation, or grandeur — the proper and glorious rising that belongs to God. YHWH is 'clothed with majesty' (Ps 93:1); his works display it (Isa 12:5); yet the wicked do not perceive his majesty (Isa 26:10). Spanish 'majestad/grandeza' and German 'Majestaet' distinguish this positive theological sense from human pride. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: majesty, the-majesty | es: grandeza, majestad, majestad-de | fr: majesté | de: Hoheit, Majestät Ps 93:1; Isa 12:5; Isa 26:10

3. rising, swelling (physical) (1×) Physical rising or swelling upward, specifically of smoke. In Isaiah 9:18, wickedness burns like fire and goes up as a 'rising of smoke' (ge'ut ashan). Spanish 'columnas de' and English 'rising of' capture the concrete, visual image. This sole physical occurrence preserves the root's original spatial meaning of upward movement before its metaphorical extension to pride and majesty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: rising-of | es: columnas-de | fr: majesté | de: Hoheit Isa 9:18

גַּאֲיוֹן H1349 Prep-l / N-mp (1×)
the proud - arrogant oppressors, those characterized by haughty presumption
This term denotes proud or arrogant people, likely oppressors who treat others with contempt. The Masoretic Kethiv (written text) and Qere (read text) differ here, with the Qere suggesting 'proudest oppressors' or literally 'proud doves' (an idiom for oppressive enemies). The psalm context describes persecution and scorn from those who hold the righteous in contempt. The proud are characterized by their disdain for the vulnerable and their practical atheism—living as if God does not see or care.

(1×) Psalm 123:4 laments, 'We have had more than enough of the contempt of the proud, of the scorn of the arrogant.' The psalmist speaks for the oppressed community enduring sustained mockery. Translations consistently render this as 'the proud' or 'the arrogant' (Spanish 'los soberbios'), with French's 'rebelle' (rebellious) capturing the proud's defiance. The definite article marks these as a recognized class of oppressors. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: the-proud | es: los-soberbios | fr: à-rebelle | de: der-proud Ps 123:4

גָּאַל H1350a V-Qal-Prtcpl-msc / 1cp (103×)
To redeem or act as kinsman; as participle: kinsman-redeemer, divine Redeemer, or avenger of blood — covering legal, theological, and judicial redemption.
Few Hebrew words carry as much legal, familial, and theological freight as גָּאַל. At its foundation lies the duty of the nearest kinsman (the gō'ēl) to buy back family property, redeem a relative from slavery, or marry a deceased brother's widow — vividly dramatized in the book of Ruth, where Boaz fulfills this role for Naomi's family. The same root ascends to become one of Scripture's great divine titles: God as Israel's Redeemer, especially in Isaiah 40-63, where the exodus from Babylon is cast as a new act of gō'ēl redemption. In a starkly different register, the gō'ēl haddām ('avenger of blood') of Numbers 35 pursues justice for a murdered kinsman. Spanish splits along similar lines — 'redimir' for the transactional sense, 'Redentor' for the divine title, and 'vengador' for the avenger — while Arabic uses ىَ (ransom) and ´ (avenge) to mark the same distinctions.

1. Redeem, buy back (46×) Qal active finite forms: to redeem, ransom, or buy back — the core transactional sense covering the redemption of property, persons from servitude, or pledged items. Leviticus 25 lays out the legal framework: a kinsman 'redeems' a field that has been sold (Lev 25:25), or a person sold into bondage (Lev 25:48). God 'redeems' Israel from Egypt (Exod 6:6; 15:13). Spanish 'redimir,' French 'racheter,' German 'erlösen,' and Arabic ىَ all converge on this buy-back meaning. With 46 occurrences, this is the most frequent sense. REDEEM AND RANSOM
en: I-have-redeemed-you, You-redeemed, has-redeemed | es: de-cierto, lo-redimirá, para-redimir | fr: il-rachète, pourra-racheter-lui, rachetant | de: Erloeser, du-erlöst, er-redeems Exod 6:6; Exod 15:13; Lev 25:25; Lev 25:33; Lev 25:48

2. Divine Redeemer (title) (20×) Qal substantivized participle as a divine epithet: God (especially YHWH) as Israel's Redeemer. Concentrated in Isaiah 41-63, where it appears with possessive suffixes — 'your Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel' (Isa 41:14; 43:14; 44:24; 48:17; 54:5). Also in Job 19:25 ('I know that my Redeemer lives') and Psalms (19:14; 78:35; 103:4). Spanish 'Redentor,' French 'Rédempteur,' and German 'Erlöser' serve as exact equivalents. This sense transcends the legal-kinsman framework and enters the theological realm of salvation and covenant faithfulness. KINSMAN-REDEEMER DIVINE
en: Our-Redeemer, Redeemer-of, a-Redeemer | es: El-que-rescata, Nuestro-redentor, Redentor | fr: et-racheter, et-rédempteur, le-racheter | de: Erloeser, der-erlöst, der-mich-erlöst-hat Gen 48:16; Job 19:25; Ps 19:14; Ps 78:35; Ps 103:4

3. Kinsman-redeemer (13×) Qal substantivized participle: the gō'ēl as kinsman-redeemer, the near relative with the legal right and duty to redeem property, marry a kinsman's widow, or protect family interests. The book of Ruth is the paradigmatic text: Boaz identifies himself as a gō'ēl (Ruth 3:9, 12) and negotiates with a closer kinsman (Ruth 4:1-6) before formally redeeming Naomi's land and taking Ruth as wife. Spanish 'redentor/pariente redentor,' French 'rédempteur,' and German 'Löser' reflect this social-legal institution. Distinguished from sense 1 (the act) by focusing on the person and role rather than the transaction. KINSMAN-REDEEMER DIVINE
en: a-redeemer, and-his-kinsmen, from-our-redeemers | es: al-redentor, de-nuestros-redentores, el-redentor | fr: de-notre-redeemers, et-son-kinsmen, le-rédempteur | de: Loeser, der-Loeser, ein-redeemer Lev 25:25; Lev 25:26; Num 5:8; Ruth 2:20; Ruth 3:9

4. Avenger of blood (12×) Qal substantivized participle in the collocation gō'ēl haddām (גֹּאֵל הַדָּם): the avenger of blood, the kinsman who pursues and executes the manslayer. Concentrated in Numbers 35:12-27 and Joshua 20:2-9, where cities of refuge protect the unintentional killer from the avenger. Spanish 'vengador de sangre,' French 'vengeur du sang,' and Arabic ِالدَّم´ clearly distinguish this judicial-retributive function from redemption or divine deliverance. A legally defined role in Israel's justice system. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: avenger-of, from-avenger-of, from-the-avenger | es: Vengador-de, del-vengador, del-vengador-de | fr: avenger-de, de-avenger-de, de-le-avenger | de: Raecher-von, avenger-von, von-Raecher-von Num 35:12; Num 35:19; Num 35:21; Num 35:24; Num 35:25

5. Be redeemed (Nifal passive) (8×) Niphal passive: to be redeemed or bought back, said of property or persons who are the object of redemption. Levitical legislation specifies when houses, fields, and persons 'shall be redeemed' or 'are not redeemed' (Lev 25:30, 49, 54; 27:20, 27, 28, 33). Spanish 'ser redimido,' French 'être racheté,' and German 'erlöst werden' confirm the passive voice. A grammatically and semantically distinct sense — the property or person is the subject, not the kinsman. BE REDEEMED PASSIVE
en: and-he-is-redeemed, he-is-redeemed, it-is-redeemed | es: es-redimida, es-redimido, fuere-redimido | fr: cela-devra-être-racheta, cela-est-racheta, et-il-est-racheta | de: Erloeser, er-ist-erloeste, es-ist-erloeste Lev 25:30; Lev 25:49; Lev 25:54; Lev 27:20; Lev 27:27

6. The redeemed (passive participle) (4×) Qal passive participle substantivized: 'the redeemed ones,' those whom God has redeemed from exile, oppression, or death. Isaiah uses this as a collective designation for the returning exiles — 'the redeemed of the LORD shall return' (Isa 35:9; 51:10), and the remnant are called 'The Redeemed' (Isa 62:12). Psalm 107:2 opens with 'Let the redeemed of the LORD say so.' Spanish 'los redimidos,' Arabic الْمُ, and Korean 구속받은 자들 all converge on this collective passive identity. A theologically rich designation for God's delivered people. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-shall-walk, the-redeemed, the-redeemed-of | es: Redimidos-de, los-redimidos, los-redimidos-de | fr: racheter, rédempteur | de: Erloeser, der-erlöst-von Ps 107:2; Isa 35:9; Isa 51:10; Isa 62:12

גְּאֻלַּי H1350b N-mpc / 1cs (1×)
My redemption - abstract noun for the act of redeeming/delivering, possibly 'my redeemed ones'
This enigmatic form in Isaiah 63:4 could be understood as either an abstract noun 'my redemption' or a concrete collective 'my redeemed ones.' The ancient versions differ, with the Greek, Syriac, and Vulgate supporting 'redemption,' while some read it as 'my ransomed/released people.' The possessive suffix emphasizes Yahweh's personal stake in the deliverance. The context speaks of divine vengeance and salvation—the year of redemption when God acts decisively to deliver His people and judge their oppressors.

(1×) Isaiah 63:4 declares, 'For the day of vengeance was in my heart, and the year of my redemption had come.' The parallel with 'day of vengeance' suggests a appointed time for God's saving intervention. Spanish 'mis redimidos' takes the concrete reading (my redeemed ones), while others preserve the abstract form. French and German bracket the Hebrew, acknowledging the exegetical uncertainty surrounding this unique grammatical formation. REDEEM AND RANSOM

en: My-redemption | es: mis-redimidos | fr: [גאולי] | de: [גאולי] Isa 63:4

גָּאַל H1351 V-Pual-Prtcpl-ms (11×)

To defile, pollute, or desecrate; to be ritually or morally contaminated; to stain with blood.

A root of contamination that moves across every stem of the Hebrew verbal system, each one adding a distinct shade of defilement. Priests with uncertain genealogies were 'desecrated out of the priesthood' (Ezra 2:62); Jerusalem herself is called 'the defiled one' (Zeph 3:1). Daniel resolved not to 'defile himself' with the king's food, and the Suffering Warrior declares 'I stained all my garments' with the blood of judgment (Isa 63:3). Spanish consistently renders with 'contaminar' forms, showing how naturally this concept maps across languages.

1. Nifal/Pual: be defiled, become polluted (7×) Niphal and Pual passive: to be defiled, become polluted, or be declared ritually unclean. Priests whose genealogies could not be verified were 'desecrated from the priesthood' (Ezra 2:62; Neh 7:64), a pregnant construction meaning expelled as polluted. In Isaiah 59:3 and Lamentations 4:14, hands and garments are stained with blood. Zephaniah 3:1 personifies Jerusalem as 'the defiled one.' Spanish 'contaminada/contaminado' and French 'profaner' consistently capture this passive defilement. UNCLEAN AND PROFANE

en: and-the-defiled, and-they-were-excluded, and-were-polluted | es: contaminada-(es), contaminado, están-contaminadas | fr: [ויגאלו], [נגאלו], et-profaner | de: [ויגאלו], [ונגאלה], [נגאלו] Ezra 2:62; Neh 7:64; Isa 59:3; Lam 4:14; Zeph 3:1

2. Hitpael: defile oneself (2×) Hitpael reflexive: to defile oneself deliberately or to resolve against self-defilement. Daniel 'purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself' with the king's food or wine (Dan 1:8). Spanish 'se contaminara/se contaminaría' preserves the reflexive middle voice perfectly, emphasizing the subject's agency in guarding or violating personal purity boundaries. RITUAL DEFILEMENT

en: he-would-defile-himself | es: se-contaminara, se-contaminaría | fr: profaner | de: [יתגאל] Dan 1:8

3. Piel: defile (someone/something) (1×) Piel active: to profane or desecrate someone or something through one's actions. In Malachi 1:7 the priests are challenged: 'How have we defiled you?' – addressing YHWH directly, as their polluted offerings desecrate His altar and, by extension, His name. Spanish 'te contaminamos' retains the direct-object relationship, showing that defilement can be inflicted upon the holy. RITUAL DEFILEMENT

en: have-we-defiled-You | es: te-contaminamos? | fr: profaner | de: [גאלנוך] Mal 1:7

4. Hifil: stain, soil (1×) Hifil causative: to stain or soil something, used metaphorically of garments drenched in the blood of divine judgment. In Isaiah 63:3, the divine warrior treads the winepress alone and declares 'I stained all my garments.' This sense moves beyond ritual defilement into vivid physical imagery of blood spattering cloth, a metaphor for the violence of eschatological judgment. Spanish 'manché' ('I stained') captures the concrete, visceral quality. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: I-stained | es: manché | fr: [אגאלתי] | de: [אגאלתי] Isa 63:3

גֵּאֻל H1352 N-mpc (1×)

defilements of - ritual or moral pollutions that contaminate the priesthood

This noun denotes defilement, pollution, or contamination, particularly in ritual or moral contexts. Nehemiah uses it to describe how the priesthood has been defiled or corrupted. The construct form 'defilements of' links it directly to the priesthood and covenant, suggesting violations of sacred trust. Such defilement could involve unlawful marriages, improper ritual conduct, or compromise with foreign practices—all concerns prominent in post-exilic reforms. The term emphasizes the serious breach of holiness standards.

(1×) Nehemiah 13:29 appeals to God: 'Remember them, O my God, because of the defilements of the priesthood and the covenant of the priesthood.' Nehemiah calls for divine judgment on those who corrupted sacred offices. Spanish 'contaminaciones' captures the pollution metaphor. French and German preserve the Hebrew, while German's 'mein-Loeser' (my redeemer) appears to reflect confusion with the homophonous root גאל (redeem). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: defilements-of | es: contaminaciones-de | fr: [גאלי] | de: mein-Loeser Neh 13:29

גְּאֻלָּה H1353 Art / N-fs (14×)

Redemption, right of redemption — the legal act or right of buying back land, persons, or property

A feminine noun from the root gā'al ('to redeem, act as kinsman-redeemer'), denoting the act, right, or price of redemption. Its primary domain is the Jubilee legislation of Leviticus 25, where it governs the buying back of ancestral land (v. 24), houses in walled cities (vv. 29-31), Levitical property (v. 32), and persons sold into servitude (vv. 48-52). The calculated 'price of redemption' (ge'ullātō) is proportional to the years remaining until Jubilee. In Ruth 4:6-7, the kinsman-redeemer's right of ge'ullāh becomes a narrative pivot when the nearer kinsman declines. Jeremiah 32:7-8 invokes the mishpaṭ hagge'ullāh ('right of redemption') as Jeremiah buys his cousin's field at Anathoth — an enacted sign of hope during the siege. Ezekiel 11:15 uses it more broadly for 'kinship' itself.

redemption, right of redemption (14×) The legal right, act, or price of redeeming property or persons, rooted in Israel's kinship-based land tenure system. Concentrated in Leviticus 25 (eight of fourteen occurrences), where it governs redemption of fields (v. 24), houses (vv. 29, 31-32), and enslaved persons (vv. 48, 51-52), with the redemption price calculated by years to Jubilee. In Ruth 4:6-7, ge'ullāh denotes the kinsman-redeemer's right that drives the plot resolution. Jeremiah 32:7-8 uses it as a prophetic sign of restoration. Renderings (eng: redemption, spa: redención, fra: rachat, deu: Lösung) confirm the legal-economic semantic core. Ezekiel 11:15 may extend the term to kinship itself. REDEMPTION RANSOM

en: his-redemption, its-redemption, my-redemption | es: la-redención, mi-redención, redención | fr: [הגאלה], le-rachat, mon-rachat | de: [גאלתי], [גאלתך], [הגאולה] Lev 25:24; Lev 25:26; Lev 25:29; Lev 25:31

גַּב H1354 N-mpc / 2mp (13×)

Anything convex or arched: the back of a person, the rim of a wheel, a cultic mound, a shield boss, or the brow ridge.

A remarkably versatile Hebrew noun whose core meaning is 'something curved or convex.' It appears across strikingly different contexts — from the backs of plowmen in Psalm 129:3 to the rims of Solomon's bronze wheels in 1 Kings 7:33, to the illicit shrine-mounds Ezekiel denounces. Spanish translations reveal the spread nicely: 'espalda' for the human back, 'aros' for wheel rims, and 'altar' for cultic mounds. The underlying image is always an arched, rounded surface, whether anatomical, architectural, or mechanical.

1. back (of a person or animal) (4×) The dorsal surface of a living being — literally, the back. In Psalm 129:3, plowmen furrow across Israel's back as a figure for oppression; Ezekiel 10:12 applies it to the cherubim's bodies (though some emend to 'wheels'). Spanish 'espalda' and French 'dos' consistently render this anatomical sense, confirming its primary concreteness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-backs-of-them, back-of, bosses-of | es: espalda-mía, espaldas-de, respaldo-de | fr: dos, et-dos, sommet | de: [גב], [גבי], [וגבהם] Job 15:26; Ps 129:3; Ezek 10:12; Ezek 43:13

2. rim, ring (of a wheel) (3×) The circular rim or felloe of a wheel, the curved outer ring on which the tire sits. Used of Solomon's bronze cart wheels (1 Kgs 7:33) and the visionary wheels of Ezekiel 1:18. Spanish 'aros' ('rings, hoops') captures the geometry well, distinguishing this from the anatomical sense. The convex curvature links back to the root image. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-rims-of-them, and-their-rims | es: Y-aros-de-ellas, y-aros-de-ellas | fr: et-dos, et-leur-rims | de: [וגביהן], [וגבתם], und-ihr-rims 1Kgs 7:33; Ezek 1:18

3. mound, vaulted place (cultic high place) (3×) An elevated, arched mound built for illicit cultic worship — Ezekiel's 'eminent place' (16:24, 31, 39). Always paired with 'ramah' (high place) in Ezekiel's denunciations of spiritual prostitution. Spanish 'altar' and the Vulgate's connection to 'lupanar' (from Latin 'fornix,' an arched brothel entrance) show how the vaulted-structure image carried into later tradition. HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: mound, mound-your | es: altar, altar-de-ti | fr: dos | de: [גבך], [גב] Ezek 16:24; Ezek 16:31; Ezek 16:39

4. defense, bulwark (shield boss) (2×) The convex boss at the center of a shield, used metaphorically in Job 13:12 and 15:26 for arrogant defiance — charging God 'with thick bosses of his bucklers.' Spanish 'espaldas' and French 'dos' blur this with the anatomical sense, but the military imagery of a shield's raised center is distinct. The hardened, protruding surface becomes a figure for stubborn resistance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: defenses-your, to-defenses-of- | es: para-espaldas-de, vuestras-espaldas | fr: votre-dos-vous, à-dos | de: [גביכם], [לגבי] Job 13:12

5. brow, eyebrow ridge (1×) The brow ridge or eyebrow arch, used solely in the Levitical skin-disease regulations (Lev 14:9) where a person must shave 'the brows.' Spanish 'cejas' ('eyebrows') pins this sense precisely. The convex ridge above the eye is yet another instance of the root idea — a curved, protruding surface on the body. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: brows-of | es: cejas-de | fr: brows-de | de: brows-von Lev 14:9

גַּב H1355 N-mpc / 3fs (2×)

back, side — the rear or lateral surface of a beast in Daniel's vision

This word appears in the cryptic vision of Daniel 7, describing features of the leopard-like beast with four wings. The Hebrew text preserves both a written form (Ketiv) and a read-aloud form (Qere), creating interpretive ambiguity: does it mean the creature's 'back' or its 'sides'? Most interpreters favor 'sides,' suggesting the four wings sprouted from the beast's flanks. The Aramaic term connects to both Hebrew and Syriac words for back, side, or flank, showing how apocalyptic imagery stretched vocabulary into new symbolic territory.

(2×) The back or sides of the leopard-like creature in Daniel's vision (Daniel 7:6). The textual tradition preserves two readings (Ketiv and Qere) both pointing to the posterior or lateral aspect of the beast's body where the four wings were positioned. Translators diverge on whether this refers to the creature's back proper or its sides, but both interpretations locate the wings on the beast's upper body, emphasizing its supernatural speed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (qere:its-back), [ketiv:its-back] | es: [lomo-de-ella], lomo-de-ella | fr: hauteur, orgueil | de: Hoehe, [גביה] Dan 7:6

גֵּב H1356a N-mp (3×)

pits, ditches, trenches, cisterns—excavated holes for water or defense

This plural noun appears in contexts involving excavated depressions in the ground. In 2 Kings 3:16, Elisha commands the making of 'ditches upon ditches' to hold miraculous water for the allied armies. In Jeremiah 14:3 and possibly 39:10, it refers to cisterns—vital water-storage pits in ancient agriculture. The word derives from Arabic and Syriac roots for 'hollow' or 'depression.' There is textual complexity: some manuscripts in 2 Kings 25:12 and Jeremiah 52:16 may preserve this word (possibly meaning 'cisterns' given to the poor), though the text is uncertain.

(3×) Plural noun for pits, ditches, trenches, or cisterns—excavated holes in the ground for water storage or military purposes. In 2 Kings 3:16 (twice), it clearly means trenches dug to hold water. In Jeremiah 14:3, it refers to cisterns sought by servants in drought. Cross-linguistic glosses vary: English 'cisterns/trenches,' Spanish 'cisternas/zanjas,' French and German sometimes leave the term in brackets or render 'trenches.' The variation reflects context: military trenches versus agricultural cisterns. Arabic and Syriac cognates support the meaning 'hollow depression.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE beams/rafters - architectural elements in Solomon's temple, possibly vaulted roofs or ceiling beams

en: cisterns, trenches | es: cisternas, zanjas | fr: [גבים], trenches | de: [גבים], trenches 2Kgs 3:16; Jer 14:3

גֵּב H1356b N-mp (1×)

This architectural term likely refers to beams, rafters, or possibly vaulted roof structures in Solomon's temple construction. The etymology remains uncertain, with some scholars proposing a Persian loanword for 'vaulted roofs' or domed structures. The context describes the covering or roofing of the temple with cedar. Given the temple's grandeur and the use of Lebanese cedar, these would have been substantial architectural elements, whether horizontal beams or curved vault supports.

(1×) 1 Kings 6:9 states that Solomon 'covered the temple with beams and planks of cedar.' This describes the temple's roof construction using premium materials. All major translations consistently render this as 'beams,' though lexicographers acknowledge uncertainty about the precise architectural form—whether flat ceiling beams or more elaborate vaulted structures that would showcase Solomon's architectural ambitions. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15269 WITH 5 SENSES

en: beams | es: con-vigas | fr: beams | de: beams 1Kgs 6:9

גֶּבֶה H1357 N-mp (1×)

locusts - swarming grasshoppers, named from their collective gathering behavior

This term designates a type of locust or grasshopper, derived from a root meaning 'to gather' or 'swarm,' emphasizing their collective behavior. Related to Ethiopic words for locusts, it captures one of the most feared agricultural pests of the ancient Near East. Isaiah uses the image metaphorically to describe rapid, swarming movement. Locusts represented both devastating judgment (when they destroyed crops) and countless multitudes—their sheer numbers and coordinated movement making them powerful symbols.

(1×) Isaiah 33:4 depicts plunder being gathered 'like the rushing of locusts' and people swarming over it. The simile emphasizes speed, numbers, and voracious consumption. The context describes spoil taken from Assyria. Spanish 'langostas' and English 'locusts' both capture the insect identification, while French and German preserve the Hebrew form in brackets, perhaps acknowledging this as a less common locust term among several Hebrew synonyms. WILDERNESS AND DESERT

en: of-locusts | es: langostas | fr: [גבים] | de: [גבים] Isa 33:4

גֻּב H1358 N-msd (10×)

Den, pit — Aramaic noun for an animal enclosure, specifically the lions' den in Daniel 6

The Aramaic noun גֻּב (gob) denotes a den or pit used for confining animals, appearing exclusively in Daniel 6 where it designates the famous lions' den into which Daniel was cast. All ten occurrences cluster within this single chapter, describing the pit variously with prepositions of motion ('into the den,' 'from the den') and in absolute reference ('the den of lions'). The word likely derives from a root meaning 'to dig' or 'hollow out,' suggesting a subterranean pit rather than a natural cave. Spanish renders it 'foso' (pit, moat), Hindi uses gupha (cave/den), Arabic jubb (pit/cistern), and Korean gul (cave/den).

den, pit (for animals) (10×) A pit or enclosed den for confining animals, specifically the lions' den in the court of the Median king Darius. All ten occurrences appear in Daniel 6:7-24 (Aramaic section), describing the enclosure into which Daniel was thrown for praying to God and from which he emerged unharmed. The term appears with lamed-preposition for motion toward the den and in construct state ('den of lions'). Spanish 'foso,' Arabic ‘ (jubb, pit/cistern), and Hindi गुफा (gupha, cave) suggest a dug-out pit rather than a natural cave. PITS AND DUNGEONS

en: and-into-den-of, into-den-of, the-den | es: al-foso, al-foso-de, el-foso | fr: citerne, et-citerne | de: Grube, in-die-Grube, und-Grube Dan 6:7; Dan 6:12; Dan 6:16; Dan 6:17; Dan 6:19

גֹּב H1359 Prep-b / N-proper-ms (2×)

Gob — an unidentified battlefield site where David's warriors fought the Philistines

Gob appears as the location of two battles between David's champions and Philistine warriors, including encounters with giants descended from the Rephaim. The site's identity remains uncertain; textual variants suggest it may be the same as Gezer or Gath. Ancient versions differ widely, and the parallel account in Chronicles omits the name or substitutes other locations. The name itself may derive from words for cistern or pit, suggesting a geographical feature, but the exact location has been lost to history.

(2×) A place name marking the site of Philistine conflicts during David's reign (2 Samuel 21:18-19). Ancient versions and parallel texts offer conflicting identifications (Gezer, Gath, or transliterations like Gob/Gov), revealing early uncertainty about this location's precise identity. The name may relate to cistern or depression terminology, but no definitive archaeological correlation exists. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-Gob | es: en-Gov | fr: dans-Gob | de: in-Gob 2Sam 21:18; 2Sam 21:19

גֶּבָא H1360 Prep-m / N-ms (2×)

cistern, pool, marsh — man-made or natural water collection points, from household cisterns to coastal marshes

This word spans from the mundane to the prophetic: a household cistern in Isaiah and the coastal marshlands in Ezekiel's temple vision. The same root that gives us cisterns for household water storage extends to the salt marshes near the Dead Sea that will not be healed in Ezekiel's eschatological river. Arabic cognates point to watering troughs and pools, showing how the term embraced any water collection point, whether carved by human hands or shaped by nature.

(2×) Water-holding features ranging from artificial cisterns to natural marshes. Isaiah 30:14 envisions pottery shards too small to carry water 'from a cistern,' emphasizing domestic-scale water storage. Ezekiel 47:11 describes 'marshes' or swampy pools near the Dead Sea that remain brackish even when the visionary river brings life. Translations vary (cistern, marsh, pool, lagoon) based on context, but all point to water-collection or water-retention features. POOL POND MARSH
en: and-its-marshes, from-the-cistern | es: de-cisterna, y-sus-lagunas | fr: [מגבא], et-citerne | de: [וגבאיו], [מגבא] Isa 30:14; Ezek 47:11

גָּבַהּ H1361 V-Hifil-Perf-1cs (34×)

Be high, exalted; to rise in height, status, or pride — ranging from physical tallness to divine exaltation to human arrogance

This verb captures the full vertical axis of biblical thought — from the literal height of Saul who stood head and shoulders above all Israel (1 Sam 10:23), to the theological exaltation of God who 'dwells on high' (Ps 113:5), to the moral condemnation of hearts that are 'lifted up' in pride (2 Chr 26:16). French 's'élever' and German 'sich erheben' beautifully mirror this same semantic range from rising physically to rising in arrogance. The verb warns that what rises by human pride will be brought low, while what God exalts will endure — a theme that runs from Proverbs through Isaiah to Obadiah's eagle who soars but cannot escape judgment.

1. be exalted, rise in honor (9×) The Qal sense of being exalted in honor, status, or glory — used positively of God whose justice 'is exalted' (Isa 5:16) and of the Servant who 'shall be high and lifted up' (Isa 52:13). Jehoshaphat's heart 'was exalted in the ways of the LORD' (2 Chr 17:6) — a rare positive human instance. French 's'élever' and Spanish 'se enalteció' reflect the upward movement in dignity. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: and-exalted, and-is-exalted, and-they-are-exalted | es: Se-enalteció, Y-será-exaltado, se-eleven | fr: [ויגבה], et-s'élever, et-s'élever | de: Hoehe, [ויגבהו], sich-erheben 2Chr 17:6; Job 36:7; Isa 5:16; Isa 52:13; Ezek 28:2

2. be haughty, act proudly (8×) The Qal sense of sinful haughtiness or arrogance — when the heart 'is high' in self-exaltation against God. Uzziah's heart 'was lifted up to his destruction' (2 Chr 26:16); Proverbs 18:12 warns 'before destruction the heart of man is haughty'; the psalmist protests 'my heart is not haughty' (Ps 131:1). Isaiah 3:16 describes the daughters of Zion walking with 'haughty' necks. The same root that describes divine glory condemns human presumption. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: and-they-were-haughty, be-haughty, daughters-of | es: Y-se-ensoberbecieron, se-elevó, se-enaltece | fr: [גבה], et-s'élever, s'élever | de: Hoehe, [יגבה], [לגבהה] 2Chr 26:16; 2Chr 32:25; Ps 131:1; Prov 18:12; Isa 3:16

3. be physically high or tall (7×) The Qal stative sense of being physically high, tall, or elevated — describing Saul's impressive stature (1 Sam 10:23), the heavens that are higher than the earth (Job 35:5; Ps 103:11; Isa 55:9), or a tree that grew tall (Ezek 31:5,10). Multilingual glosses consistently use terms for physical tallness or height here, distinct from the moral and theological senses. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: and-he-was-taller, and-was-high, are-higher | es: altas, como-altura-de, se-elevó | fr: comme-être-hautain, et-il-fut-taller, et-s'élever | de: [גבהו], sich-erheben, und-er-war-taller 1Sam 10:23; Job 35:5; Ps 103:11; Isa 55:9

4. make high, exalt (causative) (7×) The Hifil causative sense of making something high, raising up, or actively exalting. God 'raises the poor from the dust' (Ps 113:5 context); Manasseh 'raised the height' of the wall (2 Chr 33:14); whoever 'raises his gate invites ruin' (Prov 17:19). Jeremiah 49:16 and Isaiah 7:11 use this stem for asking or placing things at a great height. The causative adds agency — someone actively produces the elevation. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: and-he-made-it-high, exalt, exalting | es: el-que-eleva, el-que-se-eleva, eleves-en-alto | fr: [ויגביהה], le-élevé, le-être-hautain | de: [מגביה], der-einer-enthroned-auf-hoch, der-hoch 2Chr 33:14; Ps 113:5; Prov 17:19; Isa 7:11; Jer 49:16

5. soar high, fly upward (3×) A specialized Hifil usage for soaring or flying at great height, applied to birds. Job 39:27 asks whether the eagle 'mounts up' at God's command; Obadiah 1:4 warns Edom that 'though you soar high like the eagle,' God will bring you down. Job 5:7 describes sparks that 'fly upward.' This vivid avian application extends the causative 'make high' into the domain of flight. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: fly, soars-high, you-soar-high | es: se-eleva, se-elevan, te-elevas | fr: tu-t'élèves, être-élevé | de: [יגביה], [יגביהו], du-erhöhst Job 5:7; Job 39:27; Obad 1:4

גָּבֹהַּ H1362 Conj-w / Adj-msc (4×)

High, lofty, tall; figuratively haughty or proud in heart

An adjective spanning both physical height and moral arrogance. It describes tall people (Saul in 1 Sam 9:2), towering trees (Ezek 31:3), high mountains, and fortified walls. Yet its most theologically charged uses are figurative: the 'proud of heart' whom the psalmist cannot endure (Ps 101:5), and the one 'haughty in spirit' contrasted with the patient (Eccl 7:8). Proverbs 16:5 declares every proud heart an abomination to the LORD, making this adjective a key term in wisdom literature's critique of hubris.

(4×) Haughty, proud, arrogant in disposition — the figurative extension of physical height to moral self-exaltation. In Ps 101:5 the psalmist vows not to tolerate one who is 'proud of heart'; Prov 16:5 declares such a person an abomination. Eccl 7:8 contrasts the 'haughty in spirit' with patience. Spanish 'altivo' and English 'haughty/proud' converge on the same metaphorical transfer from altitude to arrogance. In Ezek 31:3 the word bridges literal and figurative: Assyria as a cedar 'lofty in stature' whose very height becomes an emblem of doomed pride. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-lofty-of-, haughty, proud-of | es: altivo-de, que-altivo-de, y-alto-de | fr: de-מגבה, et-hauteur, élevé | de: [גבה], [מגבה], haughty Ps 101:5; Prov 16:5; Eccl 7:8; Ezek 31:3

גֹּבַהּ H1363 N-ms (17×)

Physical height or stature of buildings, trees, and persons; figuratively, haughtiness, pride, or exalted dignity.

A masculine noun from the root gavah ('be high, exalted'), spanning both the literal and moral dimensions of loftiness. In its physical sense it measures the height of Goliath (1 Sam 17:4), the temple vestibule (2 Chr 3:4), Ezekiel's visionary structures (Ezek 1:18; 40:42; 41:8), and towering trees (Ezek 19:11; 31:10, 14; Amos 2:9). Figuratively it describes the arrogance of Moab (Jer 48:29), the haughtiness before a fall (Prov 16:18, 'haughtiness of spirit before a fall'), pride of heart (2 Chr 32:26), and also the majestic dignity God challenges Job to put on (Job 40:10). Spanish consistently distinguishes 'altura' (height) from 'altivez' (haughtiness), mapping the two senses neatly.

1. height (12×) The physical dimension of height – the measurable stature or elevation of persons, trees, buildings, and structures. Applied to Goliath's towering frame (1 Sam 17:4), the temple vestibule (2 Chr 3:4), Ezekiel's visionary wheels and chambers (Ezek 1:18; 40:42; 41:8), and the impressive height of trees (Ezek 19:11; 31:10, 14; Amos 2:9). Spanish 'altura' and German 'Hoehe' consistently render this concrete, spatial meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-height, and-the-height, height | es: Es-más-alta-que-los, altura, altura-suya | fr: [דהגבה], comme-hauteur, dans-sa-hauteur | de: Hoehe, Hoehe-sein, [בגבהו] 1Sam 17:4; 2Chr 3:4; Job 11:8; Job 22:12; Ezek 1:18

2. haughtiness (5×) Moral or figurative loftiness – pride, haughtiness, or exalted grandeur of spirit. Proverbs 16:18 pairs it with ruakh ('spirit') in the famous warning that haughtiness precedes a fall. Jeremiah 48:29 catalogs Moab's arrogance, while 2 Chronicles 32:26 records Hezekiah's repentance from 'loftiness of heart.' In Job 40:10, God challenges Job to clothe himself in 'dignity and grandeur,' a rare positive application. Spanish 'altivez' captures the moral register sharply distinct from the physical 'altura.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-dignity, haughtiness-of, his-loftiness | es: altivez-de, conforme-a-altivez-de, en-altivez-de | fr: [בגבה], [גבהו], comme-hauteur | de: [בגבה], [גבה], [גבהו] 2Chr 32:26; Job 40:10; Ps 10:4; Prov 16:18; Jer 48:29

גָּבֹהַּ H1364 Adj-fp (37×)

high, tall, lofty — adjective describing physical height or figurative exaltation and pride

Gavoah is an adjective with a sweeping vertical range, from the literal height of walls, mountains, and trees to the figurative elevation of haughtiness and divine exaltation. In the flood narrative, the waters cover 'all the high mountains under the whole heaven' (Gen 7:19). Deuteronomy's fortified cities have 'walls high and fortified' (Deut 3:5; 28:52), and Esther's Haman builds a gallows 'fifty cubits high' (Est 5:14; 7:9). The figurative register begins with Hannah's song — 'talk no more so very proudly' (1 Sam 2:3, literally 'high, high') — and continues through Isaiah's warning that every 'high tower' and 'lofty wall' will be brought low on the Day of the Lord (Isa 2:15). Ezekiel uses it for cosmic geography: the 'high mountain' where God plants the messianic cedar (Ezek 17:22; 40:2). Daniel's ram with two 'high horns' (Dan 8:3) bridges the literal and symbolic. The Psalmist affirms that God, though gavoah, 'regards the lowly' (Ps 138:6).

high, tall, lofty (37×) Physical or spatial height — describing mountains (Gen 7:19; Isa 40:9; 57:7; Ezek 17:22; 40:2), fortified walls (Deut 3:5; 28:52), tall structures like Haman's gallows (Est 5:14; 7:9), tall persons like Saul (1 Sam 9:2), lofty trees (Ezek 17:24; 31:3), and prominent horns (Dan 8:3). The formula 'al kol-har gavoah ('upon every high mountain,' Isa 30:25; Jer 3:6) and 'al kol-giv'ah gevohah' ('upon every high hill,' 1 Kgs 14:23; 2 Kgs 17:10; Jer 2:20; 17:2) recurs in prophetic denunciations of illicit worship on elevated sites. Spanish 'alta/altas,' French 'haut,' German 'Hoehe' all render the straightforward spatial sense. LIFTING AND EXALTING

en: high, lofty, the-high | es: alta, altanería, altas | fr: [גבה], haut, hauteur | de: Hoehe, [גבה], [הגבהות] Gen 7:19; Deut 3:5; Deut 28:52; 1Sam 2:3

גַּבְהוּת H1365 N-fsc (2×)

haughtiness, pride — arrogant self-exaltation that God will bring low

This noun captures the human arrogance that sets itself against God, appearing twice in Isaiah's prophecy about the day when all human pride will be humbled. Isaiah envisions a time when 'the haughtiness of man shall be bowed down' and 'the LORD alone shall be exalted.' The word emphasizes vertical dimension—the inflated self-elevation that characterizes sinful pride. It stands as a summary term for the attitude God promises to judge, making it central to Isaiah's theology of divine sovereignty versus human pretension.

(2×) Human pride characterized by self-exaltation that God will humble. Both occurrences in Isaiah 2:11, 17 appear in parallel prophecies declaring that human haughtiness will be brought low on the day of the LORD. The consistent terminology across languages (haughtiness, altivez, hauteur, Hochmut) emphasizes the vertical imagery of pride that lifts itself up only to be cast down by divine judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: haughtiness-of | es: altivez-de, la-altivez-de | fr: hauteur | de: Hochmut Isa 2:11; Isa 2:17

גְּבוּל H1366 Conj-w / N-msc / 3fs (241×)

Border, boundary line; by extension, the territory enclosed within borders; rarely, the physical edge or rim of an object.

A foundational geographic term in the Hebrew Bible, this word appears most often in the boundary descriptions of Joshua 15-19 and Numbers 34, tracing the precise lines where one tribal allotment meets another. It can refer either to the boundary line itself ('the border went out toward...') or to the territory enclosed within such lines ('your territory'). Spanish distinguishes these neatly: frontera for the line versus territorio for the area. A special ethical sense emerges in Proverbs and Deuteronomy, where moving a neighbor's boundary stone is condemned (Deut 19:14; Prov 22:28). In Ezekiel's temple vision, the word denotes the physical ledge or rim of the altar.

1. border, boundary (geographic line) (188×) The primary sense (188x): a geographic boundary line marking the edge of a territory. Dominates in the formulaic survey descriptions of Numbers 34 and Joshua 13-19, with characteristic verbs like יָצָא ('went out') and עָלָה ('went up'). Spanish frontera, French frontière, and German Grenze all select 'boundary line' vocabulary. Genesis 10:19 uses it for the Canaanite border, and Numbers 20:23 for the border of Edom — establishing it as the standard cartographic term. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-border | es: el-límite, la-frontera | fr: la-frontière, le-frontière | de: der-Grenze Gen 10:19; Num 20:23; Num 21:13; Num 21:24; Num 22:36

2. territory, region (enclosed area) (45×) Territory or region enclosed within borders (45x), emphasizing the area rather than the line. Possessive constructions like 'your territory' (Exod 10:4, 14) and 'territory of Israel' shift the focus from edge to interior. Spanish territorio and German Gebiet clearly distinguish this from the 'line' sense. When locusts enter 'your territory' (Exod 10:4) or leaven is removed from 'your territory' (Exod 13:7), the entire enclosed space is meant. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: territory-of, their-border, their-territory | es: el-territorio-de, su-territorio, territorio-de | fr: [גבול], frontière, territoire-de | de: Gebiet-von, Grenze, dein-Gebiet Exod 8:2; Exod 10:4; Exod 10:14; Exod 10:19; Exod 13:7

3. (5×) A boundary marker or landmark with legal-ethical significance (5x), centered in Deuteronomy 19:14, 27:17 and Proverbs 15:25, 22:28, 23:10. Here the focus is the stone or marker that physically instantiates the boundary, and moving it constitutes theft and injustice. The multilingual glosses waver between 'boundary' and 'boundary-of,' reflecting the tight conceptual overlap with sense 1, but the legal context and the consistent Proverbs cluster warrant distinction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-boundary, boundary-of, the-boundary-of | es: el-límite-de, límite, límite-de | fr: frontière-de, גבול | de: Grenze, Grenze-von Deut 19:14; Deut 27:17; Prov 15:25; Prov 22:28; Prov 23:10

4. edge, rim, ledge (of an object) (3×) The physical edge, rim, or ledge of a constructed object (3x), confined to Ezekiel's temple altar (Ezek 43:13, 17, 20). Spanish borde ('rim, edge') diverges from the geographic frontera used elsewhere, confirming a distinct concrete-architectural sense. The altar's rim functions as a containing border for sacrificial blood, extending the 'boundary' concept from landscape to liturgical furniture. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-border, and-the-border, the-border | es: el-borde, y-el-borde, y-su-borde | fr: et-frontière, frontière | de: [וגבולה], die-Grenze, und-die-Grenze Ezek 43:13; Ezek 43:17; Ezek 43:20

גְּבוּלָה H1367 N-fsc / 3ms (10×)

Border, boundary — a geographical boundary line marking the limits of a territory or region

The feminine noun גְּבוּלָה (gebulah) denotes a geographical border or boundary line, used in territorial descriptions, theological declarations of divine sovereignty, and moral contexts of boundary violation. It appears in the tribal allotment narratives (Num 32:33; 34:2, 12; Josh 18:20; 19:49), where it delineates the precise limits of each tribe's inheritance. Psalm 74:17 declares that God established all the boundaries of the earth, while Deuteronomy 32:8 assigns the boundaries of peoples according to the number of the sons of Israel (or 'sons of God'). Job 24:2 condemns those who move boundary markers — an act of economic injustice. Spanish limites/fronteras and German Grenzen both confirm the core territorial sense.

border, boundary (10×) A geographical border or boundary line demarcating territorial limits. Appears in tribal allotment descriptions (Num 32:33; 34:2, 12; Josh 18:20; 19:49), theological affirmations of God's sovereign ordering of the earth's boundaries (Ps 74:17; Deut 32:8), prophetic judgment on imperial boundary-removal (Isa 10:13), and moral condemnation of those who move boundary markers to defraud the vulnerable (Job 24:2). Isaiah 28:25 extends the term to agricultural rows. Arabic حُدود (hudud), German 'Grenzen,' and Korean 경계들 (gyeonggyedeul) all converge on the same territorial meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-its-border, borders-of, boundaries | es: Linderos, en-límites-de, en-su-borde | fr: [גבולת], [גבלתו], dans-frontières-de | de: [גבולת], [גבלות], [גבלתו] Num 32:33; Num 34:2; Num 34:12; Deut 32:8; Josh 18:20

גִּבּוֹר H1368 Prep-m / Adj-ms (160×)

Mighty, strong; a warrior or mighty man of valor; as a divine title: the Mighty One.

An adjective of raw power that moves across three distinct registers in the Hebrew Bible. Most frequently it names the גִּבּוֹר—the warrior, the mighty man of valor who fights Israel's battles, from Nimrod the 'mighty hunter' (Gen 10:9) to David's elite champions (2 Sam 23). As a general attribute it describes anyone or anything possessing formidable strength—the lion as 'mightiest among beasts' (Prov 30:30). At its highest register, it becomes a divine epithet: אֵל גִּבּוֹר, 'Mighty God,' the messianic title of Isaiah 9:6 and the attribute of the God who keeps covenant (Deut 10:17, Neh 9:32). Arabic جَبَّار, a cognate, carries the same spectrum from tyrant to mighty lord.

1. warrior, mighty man of valor (148×) A warrior, mighty man of valor, or champion—the substantival use for human fighters. This is the overwhelming majority of occurrences, designating soldiers, military heroes, and valiant men: David's mighty men (2 Sam 10:7, 23:8), warriors of various armies (Josh 10:2, Judg 6:12), and Nimrod the 'mighty hunter' (Gen 10:9). Spanish valientes ('valiant ones'), French vaillants, and German Helden ('heroes') consistently render this martial sense. Plural construct גִּבּוֹרֵי חַיִל is the classic 'mighty men of valor.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: mighty-men-of, mighty-of, mighty-ones-of | es: jefes-de, poderosos-de, valientes-de | fr: vaillant, vaillants-de | de: Held, Helden-von 2Sam 10:7; 2Sam 16:6; 2Sam 20:7; 2Sam 23:8; 2Sam 23:16

2. mighty, strong (attributive) (6×) The attributive adjective 'mighty, strong, powerful,' describing inherent strength or capability without specific warrior connotation. The lion is 'mightiest among beasts' (Prov 30:30), a man may be 'mighty in the land' (Ps 112:2), and the race is not always to the swift nor the battle to the strong (Eccl 9:11). Ruth 2:1 uses it of Boaz as a 'man of standing' or 'mighty man of wealth.' German mächtig and Spanish poderoso capture this broader attributive force. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-mighty, mighty, mighty-of | es: Poderosa, a-los-fuertes, poderoso | fr: et-héros, fort, héros | de: Held, mächtig, und-mächtig Ruth 2:1; Ps 24:8; Ps 112:2; Prov 30:30; Eccl 9:11

3. Mighty One, divine epithet (6×) A divine epithet: 'the Mighty One' or 'Mighty God.' In Isaiah 9:6, the messianic child is called אֵל גִּבּוֹר ('Mighty God'). In Deuteronomy 10:17 and Nehemiah 9:32, God himself is הָאֵל הַגָּדֹל הַגִּבּוֹר ('the great and mighty God'). Korean honorific forms and Swahili mwenye nguvu ('possessor of power') signal the transcendent register. This sense elevates the word from human valor to divine omnipotence, a theological intensification unique to these contexts. POWER AND ABILITY

en: Mighty, the-mighty | es: Gibor, el-poderoso, los-poderosos | fr: der-vaillant, héros, le-héros | de: Held, der-maechtig Deut 10:17; Ezra 7:28; Neh 9:32; Isa 9:6; Isa 10:21

גְּבוּרָה H1369 Prep-b / N-fpc (62×)

Strength, might, power; heroic valor; mighty deeds or acts of power, especially of God or warriors.

Gevurah is the Hebrew Bible's premier noun for concentrated, active power — the kind that accomplishes things. Unlike koach, which often denotes raw capacity or potential energy, gevurah emphasizes demonstrated strength, whether in God's mighty acts, a warrior's battlefield valor, or the sheer physical force of a horse or crocodile. The word is built on the root g-b-r ('to be strong, prevail'), and its sense of triumph pervades every usage. In the royal annals of Kings and Chronicles, the formulaic phrase 'the rest of his acts and his gevurah' enshrines a king's military accomplishments alongside his other deeds. In the Psalms, gevurah becomes the word for God's awe-inspiring acts of salvation and creation (Ps 20:6; 71:16; 106:2). Arabic jabarut and Korean neungnyeok both capture the active, forceful quality that sets this word apart from quieter terms for strength.

1. might, power, strength (41×) The core abstract sense: might, power, or strength as an attribute of God, a king, or any mighty being — 41 of 62 occurrences. This is gevurah as a quality or possession: the strength of the sun going forth in its might (Judg 5:31), the physical vigor of a mature man versus old age (Ps 90:10; Eccl 10:17), the might of the crocodile's limbs (Job 41:12), and above all the power of God himself (Isa 11:2 — 'the spirit of counsel and gevurah'). Arabic jabarut/quwwa, Korean him/neungnyeok, Hindi shakti/samarthya, and Spanish poder all converge on abstract personal power. The Kings formula 'and the rest of his acts and his gevurah' (1 Kgs 16:5, 27; 22:45 etc.) belongs here — it refers to the king's might as a general attribute. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: My-might, Your-might, and-his-might | es: mi-poder, poder-de-ti, poder-mi | fr: et-force, et-pourrait, et-puissance | de: Staerke, [גבורתם], [וגבורה] Judg 5:31; Judg 8:21; 1Kgs 16:5; 1Kgs 16:27; 1Kgs 22:45

2. mighty deeds, acts of power (12×) Concrete mighty deeds or acts of power, typically in the plural gevurot — 12 occurrences where abstract might becomes countable historical actions. Moses prays 'you have begun to show your servant your greatness and your mighty hand' (Deut 3:24); Job asks 'who can understand the thunder of his gevurot?' (Job 26:14); the Psalmist resolves 'I will come with the gevurot of the Lord GOD' (Ps 71:16). Spanish proezas/hazañas ('feats/exploits'), Swahili matendo makuu ('great deeds'), and Korean neungnyeok-deul (pluralized) all shift to countable-event vocabulary, confirming this as a distinct sense from the abstract quality. Psalm 106:2 ('who can declare all his mighty acts?') and 145:4 anchor this sense in doxological language. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: His-mighty-deeds, [K], and-Your-mighty-deeds | es: (sus-poderes), [sus-poderes], con-poderío-de | fr: dans-puissance, et-comme-Ton-puissant-acts, et-force | de: Heldenstärke-, [(גבורותיו)], [[גבורתו]] Deut 3:24; Job 26:14; Job 41:12; Ps 20:6

3. valor, martial prowess (7×) Valor, martial prowess, or heroic courage in a warfare context — 7 occurrences where the emphasis falls on battlefield bravery and warrior prowess rather than general strength. Micah 3:8 declares 'I am filled with power... and with gevurah,' in a martial prophetic context; 2 Kings 10:34 and 20:20 pair gevurah with military campaigns; Esther 10:2 records Mordecai's gevurah in a courtly-heroic register. Arabic ba's/batsh ('martial force'), Korean yongmaeng/yongryeok ('valor/prowess'), and Hindi virta/shurvirta ('heroism') all select courage-and-combat vocabulary distinct from the general 'power' words used for sense 1. The distinction matters: this is strength proven in conflict, not strength as a possession. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: and-his-might, and-might, his-might | es: con-fortaleza, su-poderío, su-valentía | fr: dans-puissance, et-force, et-puissance | de: [בגבורה], [וגבורה], [וגבורתו] 1Kgs 15:23; 2Kgs 10:34; 2Kgs 20:20; 1Chr 29:30; Esth 10:2

4. (1×) An occurrence at Isaiah 3:25 where gevurah appears in a personified or collective context: 'your men shall fall by the sword and your gevurah in battle.' Here the word may function as a collective noun — 'your mighty ones' or 'your military strength' — rather than abstract might per se. Spanish tu poderio ('your military power') and English 'your mighty men' both interpret this as metonymy: the noun stands for the warriors who embody the quality. The singular form used for a collective referent distinguishes this from the standard abstract sense. POWER AND MIRACLES
en: and-your-mighty-men | es: y-tu-poderío | fr: et-force | de: und-Staerke Isa 3:25

5. (1×) A single occurrence at Exodus 32:18 in a disputed and textually difficult passage: Moses hears 'the sound of anoth gevurah' — variously rendered as 'the noise of war,' 'the sound of singing of strength/victory,' or 'the shout of those who prevail.' Spanish victoria ('victory') and German Stärke ('strength') diverge, reflecting genuine uncertainty about whether gevurah here means 'victory,' 'strength in battle,' or something closer to 'triumph-shouting.' The phrase may represent an archaic military idiom preserved only in this passage from the early E source. POWER AND MIRACLES
en: strength | es: victoria | fr: force | de: Staerke Exod 32:18

גְּבוּרָה H1370 Conj-w / N-fsd (2×)
might, power — divine strength and governing capacity, especially God's sovereign ability In Daniel's Aramaic prayers, this word celebrates the might that belongs to God alone. Daniel blesses God's name because 'wisdom and might are His,' recognizing that both intellectual and physical power originate in the divine nature. The term appears in contexts of worship and thanksgiving, where Daniel acknowledges God's ability to reveal mysteries, change times and seasons, and establish kingdoms. It's the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew words for strength, emphasizing God's effective power to accomplish His will in history.

(2×) Divine might and governing power. Both occurrences in Daniel 2:20, 23 appear in prayers blessing God for His wisdom and might, attributes that enable Him to reveal mysteries and control history. The Aramaic term (related to Hebrew gevurah) emphasizes effective strength—power that accomplishes purposes. Translations consistently render this as 'might' or 'power,' recognizing it as a theological term for God's sovereign capacity. POWER AND MIRACLES
en: and-might | es: y-poder | fr: et-taureau | de: [וגבורתא] Dan 2:20; Dan 2:23

גִּבֵּחַ H1371 N-ms (1×)
forehead-bald - having baldness on the front of the head, a priestly disqualification
This adjective describes a condition of baldness specifically on the forehead or front part of the head, distinguished from baldness at the back of the head. Levitical law lists various physical conditions that, while not making someone ritually unclean, disqualified a priest from offering sacrifices at the altar. The law makes careful distinctions between different types of baldness, possibly to distinguish natural conditions from intentional head-shaving practices associated with pagan mourning rituals.

(1×) Leviticus 13:41 states, 'If a man's hair has fallen from his forehead and he is forehead-bald, he is clean.' The parallel with 'bald on the back of the head' (v. 40) shows precise anatomical distinction. This natural condition doesn't create ritual impurity, unlike certain skin diseases. Translations preserve the anatomical specificity: 'forehead-bald,' 'calvo-de-frente,' maintaining the legal precision needed for priestly qualification assessments. MOURNING BALDNESS
en: forehead-bald | es: calvo-de-frente | fr: forehead-bald | de: forehead-bald Lev 13:41

נִבְּחַת H1372 Prep-b (4×)
Bald forehead, the front part of the head where hair has receded; by extension, the front side of a garment
A technical term from the Levitical purity regulations denoting the forehead area where baldness appears, as distinct from the back of the head (qarachath). All four occurrences fall within Leviticus 13, where priests examine skin eruptions to determine ritual cleanness. In Lev 13:42-43 the word pairs with qarachath ('back baldness') to map the two zones of the scalp. In Lev 13:55 it extends metaphorically to the 'front side' of a garment, showing how bodily terminology was applied to fabric inspection.

(4×) The bald forehead or front of the scalp, examined for signs of skin disease in priestly diagnostic procedure. In Lev 13:42-43 it stands in deliberate contrast to qarachath (back-of-head baldness), together covering the entire crown for inspection. The suffixed form 'his forehead-baldness' (gabbachto) personalizes the diagnosis. In Lev 13:55 the same spatial logic extends to garments: the 'front' of a fabric, mirroring the body-to-cloth analogy throughout the chapter. Multilingual glosses consistently render it as compound phrases — Spanish 'calvicie-de-frente,' French 'forehead-calvitie' — reflecting the term's anatomical specificity. MOURNING BALDNESS
en: in-his-forehead-baldness, in-its-forehead-baldness, in-the-forehead-baldness | es: en-la-calvicie-de-frente, en-su-calvicie-de-frente | fr: dans-le-forehead-calvitie, dans-son-forehead-calvitie | de: in-der-forehead-baldness, in-sein-forehead-baldness Lev 13:42; Lev 13:43; Lev 13:55

גַּבַּי סַלָּי H1373 N-proper-ms (1×)
Gabbai - Benjamite leader in post-exilic Jerusalem, name possibly meaning 'tax-collector'
This personal name appears in Nehemiah's list of Benjamite residents in post-exilic Jerusalem. The name may derive from Aramaic/Talmudic terms for 'tax-collector' or 'collector,' though this is uncertain. Some scholars suggest the text is corrupt here, comparing it with parallel genealogies in Chronicles that differ. The name appears alongside Sallai, possibly representing two individuals or a compound name, reflecting the textual difficulties in reconstructing post-exilic community lists.

(1×) Nehemiah 11:8 lists 'Gabbai and Sallai' among Benjamite leaders dwelling in Jerusalem. The verse counts 928 men, suggesting Gabbai held significant position in the restored community. Most translations preserve the name (Gabbai, Gabai), while French and German bracket the Hebrew, acknowledging text-critical issues. The curious domain assignment (Animals) appears to be a classification error in the source data. WILDERNESS AND DESERT
en: Gabbai | es: Gabai | fr: [גבי] | de: [גבי] Neh 11:8

גִּבִים H1374 Art / N-proper-fs (1×)
the Gebim - settlement north of Jerusalem, name meaning 'trenches' or 'cisterns'
This place name designates a village north of Jerusalem, lying in the path of an approaching army. The name likely means 'trenches,' 'cisterns,' or 'pools,' referring to water installations or defensive earthworks. Isaiah lists it among settlements in the invasion route from the north toward Jerusalem. The site remains unidentified archaeologically, though its position in the sequence suggests locations near Anathoth and Nob. The definite article marks it as a known location to Isaiah's audience.

(1×) Isaiah 10:31 describes the invasion: 'Madmenah flees; the inhabitants of Gebim take refuge.' The prophet traces the enemy's relentless approach toward Jerusalem, with each town responding in panic. Spanish 'Guevim' and English 'Gebim' transliterate the name with the article, while French and German preserve the full Hebrew form, maintaining its position in this dramatic geographic sequence of terror. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-Gebim | es: Guevim | fr: [הגבים] | de: [הגבים] Isa 10:31

גָּבִיעַ H1375 N-msc / 1cs (14×)
Cup, bowl — a cup-shaped vessel, whether Joseph's divination goblet or the lampstand's calyx ornaments
A masculine noun designating a cup-shaped or bowl-shaped vessel, appearing in two quite different narrative settings that nonetheless share the same basic shape. In Genesis 44, gāvīa' is Joseph's silver cup — the goblet he secretly places in Benjamin's sack and then claims to use for divination (Gen 44:2, 12, 16, 17). In Exodus 25 and 37, the same word describes the decorative almond-blossom-shaped cups adorning the golden lampstand (menorah), where three cups shaped like almond flowers ornament each branch (Exod 25:31-34; 37:17-20). Jeremiah 35:5 rounds out the picture with gevi'im full of wine set before the Rechabites. The Arabic cognate qub'ah ('cup') and the consistent cross-linguistic rendering (spa: copa, fra: coupe, deu: Kelch/Becher) confirm a unified semantic core centered on the vessel's rounded, cup-like form.

cup, bowl (14×) A cup-shaped or bowl-shaped vessel, encompassing both functional drinking vessels and decorative architectural ornaments sharing the same rounded form. In Genesis 44, it is Joseph's silver divination cup planted in Benjamin's sack (Gen 44:2, 12, 16, 17). In Exodus 25 and 37, the plural designates the almond-blossom-shaped calyx ornaments on the golden lampstand's branches (Exod 25:31-34; 37:17-20). In Jeremiah 35:5, wine-filled bowls are set before the Rechabites. Cross-linguistic renderings (eng: cup/bowls, spa: copa/copas, fra: coupe/coupes, deu: Kelch/Becher) confirm a single semantic profile unified by the vessel's rounded cup form. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: bowls, cup-of, cups | es: copa-de, copa-mía, copas | fr: [גבעים], coupe-de, coupes | de: Kelche, [גבעים], den-Becher Gen 44:2; Gen 44:12; Gen 44:16; Gen 44:17

גְּבִיר H1376 N-ms (2×)
lord, master — a position of authority and dominance over others
When Isaac blesses Jacob (believing him to be Esau), he declares 'I have made him your lord' and later laments 'I have made him your lord.' This term denotes mastery and authority within family or clan structures, establishing hierarchy and dominance. The root relates to might and strength, suggesting that lordship involved not just social position but the power to enforce one's will. In these Genesis passages, the word captures the irrevocable nature of patriarchal blessing—once lordship is pronounced, it cannot be withdrawn.

(2×) Master or lord with authority over others, especially in family contexts. Genesis 27:29, 37 uses this term for the lordship Isaac inadvertently conferred on Jacob over Esau, establishing an unbreakable hierarchical relationship. The blessing made Jacob 'lord' over his brothers, a status that shaped their descendants' futures. Translations uniformly use 'lord' or 'master' (señor, seigneur, Herr), recognizing this as a position of rightful dominance. LORDS AND MASTERS
en: lord | es: señor | fr: seigneur | de: Herr, zum-Herrn Gen 27:29; Gen 27:37

גְּבִירָה H1377 Conj-w (6×)
gevirah – a queen mother or noble lady; the king's mother holding court authority
The noun gevirah denotes a lady of high rank, specifically the queen mother – the mother of the reigning king who held significant political authority in the Judahite monarchy. Unlike malkah ('queen' as wife of a king), gevirah designates the mother's unique institutional position. In 1 Kings 15:13 (= 2 Chr 15:16), Asa strips Maacah 'from gevirah' – from the office of queen mother – because of her idolatrous Asherah image, revealing the title as a removable political role rather than a mere kinship label. Jeremiah addresses both king and gevirah as a pair (Jer 13:18; 29:2), underscoring her distinct place in the royal hierarchy. Spanish reina madre and English queen mother both capture this specialized meaning.

queen mother, lady of the court (6×) The queen mother or ruling lady – a woman holding formal political authority as the mother of the reigning king. The term appears in 1 Kings 11:19 for Pharaoh's wife (a lady of the court), and in the Judahite monarchy for the king's mother whose position carried real institutional power. The key evidence is 1 Kings 15:13, where Asa removes Maacah 'from gevirah,' treating it as a deposable office. Jeremiah pairs king and gevirah as co-rulers going into exile (Jer 13:18; 29:2). Spanish reina madre and English queen mother converge on this single court-political sense. MOTHERS AND MATRIARCHS en: and-the-queen-mother, and-to-the-queen-mother, from-queen-mother | es: de-reina-madre, la-reina, la-reina-madre | fr: [והגבירה], [ולגבירה], [מגבירה] | de: [והגבירה], [ולגבירה], [מגבירה] 1Kgs 11:19; 1Kgs 15:13; 2Kgs 10:13; 2Chr 15:16; Jer 13:18

גָּבִישׁ H1378 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)
and crystal - transparent precious stone or rock crystal, valued for clarity and beauty
This term denotes crystal, likely rock crystal (clear quartz), valued in the ancient world for its transparency and beauty. Related to Greek κρύσταλλος and Arabic/Assyrian terms for gypsum or crystalline substances, it appears in Job's meditation on wisdom's incomparable value. Crystal represented wealth and beauty—clearer and more perfect than common stone. Job pairs it with coral among precious materials that pale in comparison to wisdom's worth.

(1×) Job 28:18 declares, 'Coral and crystal are not worthy of mention; the price of wisdom is beyond rubies.' The context catalogs precious stones and metals, all inadequate to purchase wisdom. Spanish 'y-cristal' and English 'and-crystal' preserve the coordinating conjunction, showing this as part of Job's comprehensive list of valuables. French and German bracket the Hebrew, perhaps acknowledging lexicographical uncertainty about the precise mineral referent. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13459 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-crystal | es: y-cristal | fr: et-וגביש | de: [וגביש] Job 28:18

גָּבַל H1379 V-Hifil-Imp-ms (5×)
To set bounds, establish a border, or mark a boundary; used of territorial limits and sacred perimeters.
A denominative verb from gebul ('border'), meaning to set bounds or establish a boundary line. Its most dramatic use is at Sinai, where God commands Moses to set bounds around the mountain so no one may touch it (Exod 19:12, 23). Elsewhere it describes territorial boundaries: the Jordan bordering Benjamin's inheritance (Josh 18:20), ancestral landmarks not to be moved (Deut 19:14), and Hamath's border reaching toward Sidon (Zech 9:2). Spanish captures this range well—from 'pondrás límite' (you shall set a limit) at Sinai to 'delimitaba' (it bounded) for geographic borders.

(5×) To set bounds, mark a boundary, or establish a territorial border—used both of sacred perimeters and geographic limits. The Hiphil imperative at Sinai (Exod 19:12, 23) describes marking off holy ground to prevent unauthorized approach, while the Qal in Josh 18:20 and Deut 19:14 describes geographic bordering and the prohibition against moving ancestral boundary markers. Zech 9:2 extends the usage to geopolitical borders ('Hamath that borders on it'). Spanish 'pondrás límite' (you shall set a limit) and 'delimitaba' (it delimited) together reflect the range from sacred prohibition to geographic demarcation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-set-bounds, marked-out, set-bounds | es: Y-pondrás-límite, delimitaba, establecieron | fr: et-placer-bounds, fixer, marked-dehors | de: [תגבל], setzen-bounds, und-setzen-bounds Exod 19:12; Exod 19:23; Deut 19:14; Josh 18:20; Zech 9:2

גְּבַל H1380 N-proper-fs (1×)
Gebal - Phoenician coastal city, ancient Byblos, famous for shipbuilding and skilled craftsmen
This place name refers to the Phoenician maritime city known to Greeks as Byblos, modern Jebeil in Lebanon. Famous for shipbuilding, skilled craftsmen, and as a major center of papyrus trade (hence 'Byblos' and our word 'Bible'), Gebal appears in Ezekiel's lament over Tyre. The city's artisans were renowned for caulking ships and working with wood and stone. Assyrian records confirm the city as Gubli. Its strategic coastal position made it a significant commercial and cultural hub.

(1×) Ezekiel 27:9 states, 'Veteran craftsmen of Gebal were on board as shipwrights to caulk your seams.' This appears in the extended metaphor of Tyre as a magnificent ship. Gebal's master craftsmen contributed their expertise to Tyre's maritime glory. All translations preserve the name (Gebal, Guebal), recognizing it as the well-known Phoenician city, maintaining the historical-geographical reference essential to understanding Tyre's international commercial network. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Gebal | es: Gebal | fr: Guebal | de: [גבל] Ezek 27:9

גְּבָל H1381 N-proper-ms (1×)

Gebal - mountainous region south of the Dead Sea, possibly modern Jibâl, distinct from coastal Gebal

This Gebal designates a mountainous region south of the Dead Sea, distinct from the Phoenician coastal city. Ancient sources identify it with Seir, the Edomite territory. The Arabic جبل means 'mountains,' and the region appears in Psalm 83's catalog of Israel's enemies. Early travelers identified it with Jibâl in the mountainous area east of the Arabah. The name emphasizes the rugged, highland character of this Edomite-associated territory.

(1×) Psalm 83:7 lists 'Gebal, Ammon and Amalek' among confederated enemies. The geographic sequence places this between Edomite and Ammonite territories. Translations vary (Geval, Guébal), all preserving the name while recognizing this refers to a different location than Phoenician Gebal. The mountainous identification fits the context of peoples from the Trans-Jordan and southern regions conspiring against Israel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Geval | es: Geval | fr: Guébal | de: Geval Ps 83:7

גְּבָלִי H1382 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

Gebalite(s) — inhabitants of Gebal (Byblos), skilled craftsmen who helped build Solomon's temple

The Gebalites were inhabitants of the ancient Phoenician city of Gebal, known to the Greeks as Byblos, located on the Mediterranean coast north of Sidon. These people appear in two contexts: as inhabitants of territory not yet conquered in Joshua's time, and as skilled stoneworkers who helped prepare materials for Solomon's temple. First Kings 5:18 credits them alongside Hiram's craftsmen with shaping the magnificent stones for God's house. Their city was famous for craftsmanship and was a major center of the papyrus trade—indeed, our word 'Bible' traces back through Greek to this city's name.

(2×) The people of Gebal (Byblos), a Phoenician coastal city. Joshua 13:5 lists their unconquered territory, while 1 Kings 5:18 celebrates their craftsmanship in preparing stones for the temple. The gentilic form appears with the article, functioning as a collective noun for this people group. Their reputation for skilled stonework made them valuable partners in Solomon's building projects, and cross-linguistic transliterations (Gebalites, giblitas, Giblitas) preserve the connection to their city of origin. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-the-Gebalites, the-Gebalite | es: los-gebalitas, y-los-giblitas | fr: et-le-Gebalites, le-Gebalite | de: der-Gebalite, und-der-Gebalites Josh 13:5; 1Kgs 5:18

גַּבְלֻת H1383 N-fs (2×)

twisted, braided — describing cords woven with multiple intertwined strands

This word appears in Exodus's detailed instructions for the high priest's breastplate, specifying 'twisted cords' or 'braided chains' of pure gold. The term emphasizes the technique—interweaving strands to create strong, beautiful cordage. Both occurrences describe the same object in parallel passages (instructions in chapter 28, execution in chapter 39), showing the precision with which Israel followed divine blueprints. The twisting technique would have created chains that were both durable enough to secure the sacred breastplate and elegant enough to befit the high priest's sacred regalia.

(2×) A technical term for the braiding or twisting technique used to make golden cords for the high priest's breastplate. Exodus 28:22 and 39:15 both describe 'chains of braided work,' emphasizing the interwoven construction method. Spanish (trenza, trenzadas), French (retors), and German (gezwirnt) all capture the twisted, plaited nature of these cords, highlighting the sophisticated metalworking skill required for sacred vestments. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13483 WITH 3 SENSES

en: twisted | es: trenza, trenzadas | fr: retors | de: gezwirnt Exod 28:22; Exod 39:15

גִּבֵּן H1384 Adj-ms (1×)

hunchbacked - having a curved or hunched back, a priestly disqualification in Levitical law

This adjective describes someone with a curved or hunched back, related to Aramaic terms for 'hump-backed' and possibly to words for 'brow' or 'forehead' (suggesting prominence or protrusion). Levitical law excluded priests with this physical condition from approaching the altar to offer sacrifices, though they could still eat the holy food and serve in other capacities. The law's concern was preserving the physical perfection required for those who served at God's altar, reflecting ancient Near Eastern standards for ritual service.

(1×) Leviticus 21:20 lists 'or hunchbacked or dwarfed' among physical conditions disqualifying priests from altar service. This appears in a catalog of defects that, while not affecting ritual cleanness, prevented altar ministry. All translations render this anatomically (hunchbacked, jorobado), maintaining the specific physical description needed for applying priestly qualification standards. BLEMISH PHYSICAL DEFECT

en: hunchbacked | es: jorobado | fr: hunchbacked | de: hunchbacked Lev 21:20

גְּבִינָה H1385 Conj-w (1×)

and like cheese - curdled milk product, used metaphorically for God's formation of human life

This noun denotes cheese or curd, a basic dairy product known across ancient Near Eastern cultures. The Hebrew shares cognates with Aramaic, Arabic, and Ethiopic terms for curdled milk or cheese. Job uses it in a powerful metaphor for divine creation—God 'curdling' him like cheese in the womb, transforming liquid into solid form. The image beautifully captures the mystery of embryonic development, where shapeless fluid becomes formed human life through divine craftsmanship.

(1×) Job 10:10 asks God, 'Did you not... curdle me like cheese?' Job reflects on his formation in the womb, using cheese-making as an analogy for God's creative process. The preceding verse mentions being poured out like milk, completing the dairy metaphor. Spanish 'como-queso' and English 'like-cheese' preserve the simile, while French and German bracket the Hebrew, possibly acknowledging the metaphorical usage's uniqueness. MILK DAIRY PRODUCTS

en: and-like-cheese | es: y-como-queso | fr: et-וכגבנה | de: [וכגבנה] Job 10:10

גַּבְנֻן H1386 N-mp (2×)

peaks, summits — the rounded or multiple tops of mountains, especially Mount Bashan

This poetic word describes the distinctive topography of Mount Bashan, a massif characterized by multiple peaks or rounded summits. Psalm 68 uses highly compressed, almost riddle-like language to contrast Bashan's many-peaked grandeur with God's chosen Zion. The imagery suggests either numerous summits across the range or the rounded, humped appearance of the mountain's profile. The term has occasioned much interpretive discussion—some see it as an adjective ('many-peaked'), others as a noun ('peaks'). Either way, it captures the distinctive geography of the Bashan highlands east of the Jordan.

(2×) The multiple peaks or rounded summits characteristic of the Bashan mountain range. Psalm 68:15-16 employs this term in poetic parallelism contrasting Bashan's impressive topography with Mount Zion, God's chosen dwelling. Translations diverge between treating this as plural 'peaks' or an adjective 'many-peaked,' but all recognize reference to the mountain's distinctive multi-summited profile that made it a natural symbol of majesty—yet one surpassed by the theological significance of humble Zion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: of-many-peaks | es: de-muchas-cumbres, muchas-cumbres | fr: hauteur | de: von-viele-peaks Ps 68:15; Ps 68:16

גִּבְעַ H1387 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (18×)
Geba — a Levitical city in Benjamin near the pass of Michmash, marking the northern border of Judah Geba (geva') is a Levitical city in the tribal territory of Benjamin, situated at the strategic pass of Michmash northeast of Jerusalem. The name likely derives from the root g-b-' meaning 'hill,' appropriate for a settlement perched on elevated terrain overlooking the wadi. Its 18 occurrences span conquest, monarchic, and post-exilic texts. Joshua 18:24 lists it among Benjamin's allotted towns, and Joshua 21:17 assigns it to the Levites. The city gained military fame when Jonathan struck the Philistine garrison there, igniting Saul's war of liberation (1 Sam 13:3, 16; 14:5). Isaiah 10:29 traces the Assyrian advance past Geba on the march toward Jerusalem. The formulaic expression 'from Geba to Beersheba' (2 Kgs 23:8; Zech 14:10) defines the full north-south extent of the kingdom of Judah, with Geba as its northernmost point. Returning exiles resettled there after the Babylonian captivity (Ezra 2:26; Neh 7:30; 11:31; 12:29). Modern Jaba' preserves both the name and the location. Spanish 'Geba,' French 'Gueba,' and German 'Geba' all transliterate directly.

Geba (place name) (18×) A Levitical city in Benjamin's territory, identified with modern Jaba' northeast of Jerusalem, perched near the strategically important pass of Michmash. Allocated to the Levites in Josh 21:17 (= 1 Chr 6:45) and listed among Benjamin's towns (Josh 18:24). Jonathan's attack on the Philistine garrison there triggered Israel's war of independence under Saul (1 Sam 13:3, 16; 14:5). The expression 'from Geba to Beersheba' marks the northern boundary of Judah proper (2 Kgs 23:8; Zech 14:10). Isaiah 10:29 places it on the route of the Assyrian advance toward Jerusalem. Post-exilic returnees resettled it (Ezra 2:26; Neh 7:30; 11:31; 12:29). Asa fortified it with stones carried from Ramah (1 Kgs 15:22; 2 Chr 16:6). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Geba, Geva, Geva-of | es: Geba, Geva, Gueba | fr: Geba, Geva, Geva-de | de: Geba, Geva, Geva-von Josh 18:24; Josh 21:17; Judg 20:10; 1Sam 13:3; 1Sam 13:16

גִּבְעָא H1388 N-proper-ms (1×)
Gibea - son of Caleb, personal name possibly derived from 'hill' or geographic associations
This personal name appears in Caleb's genealogy, possibly derived from גִּבְעָה (hill), suggesting either geographic origins or characteristics. Hebrew personal names frequently reflected places, with individuals named after ancestral settlements or significant locations. The Calebite clan genealogies in Chronicles preserve names that often connect to Judean geography, reflecting the clan's territorial associations in the Hebron region and the Negev.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 2:49 records that Caleb's concubine Maacah 'bore... Gibea' along with other sons. This appears in the extensive Calebite genealogy documenting clan structure. All translations preserve the name (Giv'a, Guibea), though French and German bracket the Hebrew. The name's similarity to the place name Gibeah may indicate geographic family connections in Judah's tribal territory. GIBEAH CITY NAME
en: Giv'a | es: Guibea | fr: [גבעא] | de: [גבעא] 1Chr 2:49

גִּבְעָה H1389 Conj-w / N-fp (71×)
A hill or elevated mound of earth; plural hills; also the proper name Gibeah, a Benjaminite town.
Refers to a natural elevation of land smaller than a mountain, frequently paired with mountains in poetic parallelism (Ps 148:9: 'the mountains and all hills'). In the plural, hills serve as stock imagery for idolatrous worship sites ('under every green tree on the high hills,' Deut 12:2) and for God's enduring creation (Gen 49:26). The word also functions as the place name Gibeah, a town in Benjamin's hill country famously associated with the ark's resting place (1 Sam 7:1) and with Saul's hometown. Spanish consistently renders the common noun as 'colina/collado' but switches to 'Guibeá' for the toponym, confirming the lexical split.

1. hills (plural, common noun) (39×) Multiple elevated landforms viewed collectively. The plural form appears most often in prophetic and poetic texts as a merism with 'mountains' to denote all terrain (Deut 12:2; Isa 40:12). French 'collines' and German 'Hügel' track the Hebrew plural consistently, while Spanish alternates between 'colinas' and 'collados,' reflecting the generic landscape meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-hills, and-the-hills, hills | es: colinas, collados, las-colinas | fr: [הגבעות], colline, et-colline | de: Huegel, Hügel, [הגבעות] Gen 49:26; Num 23:9; Deut 12:2; Deut 33:15; 2Kgs 16:4

2. hill (singular, common noun) (26×) A single physical hill or mound, lower than a mountain, used as a common noun with articles, prepositions, and construct chains. Key passages include Moses standing on the hill during battle with Amalek (Exod 17:9-10) and the hill of Moreh near the Midianite camp (Judg 7:1). Translations uniformly render it as a topographic feature: Spanish 'colina,' French 'colline,' German 'Hügel.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-hill, hill, hill-of | es: colina, colina-de, collado | fr: colline, colline-de, dans-colline-de | de: Huegel, Huegel-von, [גבעת] Exod 17:9; Exod 17:10; Josh 5:3; Judg 7:1; 1Sam 23:19

3. Gibeah (place name) (6×) The proper noun Gibeah (גִּבְעָה/גִּבְעַת), a town in the hill country of Benjamin. Multilingual evidence clearly distinguishes this sense: Spanish shifts to 'Guibeá,' French to 'Guibea/Gibeah,' and German to 'Gibea,' all treating it as a transliterated place name rather than translating it as 'hill.' Notable references include the hill of God where Saul met the prophets (1 Sam 10:5, 10) and the hill where the ark rested at Abinadab's house (1 Sam 7:1; 2 Sam 6:3). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Gibeah-of, in-Gibeah-of, in-the-hill | es: a-Guibeá, a-Guibeá-de, en-Guibeá-de | fr: Guibea-de, dans-Gibeah-de, dans-le-colline | de: Gibea-von, auf-der-Huegel, der-Gibea-ward Josh 24:33; 1Sam 7:1; 1Sam 10:5; 1Sam 10:10; 2Sam 6:3

גִּבְעָה H1390 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (43×)
Gibeah, a city of Benjamin; also Geba (a distinct Levitical city); rarely, 'hill' as a common noun Primarily the proper name of a Benjaminite city notorious for the outrage against the Levite's concubine (Judg 19-20) and later famous as King Saul's hometown (1 Sam 10:26). The name derives from the common noun meaning 'hill,' which occasionally surfaces as an appellative (1 Sam 14:2). In Judges 20:33 it appears to designate Geba, a nearby but distinct Levitical city, reflecting the longstanding orthographic confusion between these two similarly named settlements.

1. Gibeah (proper noun) (41×) The city of Gibeah in Benjamin, appearing across its long biblical history from the terrible events of Judges 19-20 through Saul's reign (1 Sam 10:26; 22:6) and into the prophetic oracles of Hosea (9:9; 10:9). All translations consistently render this as a proper noun: Spanish 'Guibea,' French 'Givah,' German 'Gibea.' GIBEAH CITY NAME
en: in-Givah, the-Givah, to-Givah | es: Guibeá, a-Guibeá, de-la-Guibeá | fr: dans-Givah, le-Givah, à-Givah | de: der-Givah, in-Givah, zu-Givah Josh 15:57; Judg 19:12; Judg 19:13; Judg 19:14; Judg 19:15

2. Geba (proper noun) (1×) A reference to Geba, a distinct Levitical city in Benjamin, sometimes confused with Gibeah due to nearly identical Hebrew spelling. In Judges 20:33 the context points to Geba rather than Gibeah proper. Modern translations and critical commentaries routinely distinguish the two sites. GIBEAH

CITY NAME
en: Geva | es: Gueba | fr: Geva | de: Geva Judg 20:33

3. hill (common noun) (1×) The underlying common noun meaning 'hill' or 'height,' used appellatively rather than as a proper name. In 1 Sam 14:2 it describes a geographical feature in the landscape rather than a named city. This appellative use illuminates how many Israelite place names originated as simple terrain descriptions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-hill | es: la-colina | fr: le-colline | de: der-Huegel 1Sam 14:2

גִּבְעוֹן H1391 Conj-w (37×)
Gibeon — a major Canaanite city that became a Levitical city in Benjamin, site of the tabernacle and famous treaty Giv'on is a place name identifying the prominent city northwest of Jerusalem, modern el-Jib, whose inhabitants famously tricked Joshua into a peace treaty by disguising themselves as distant travelers (Josh 9:3-27). The city's Hivite population thus became woodcutters and water carriers for Israel rather than being destroyed. Gibeon later hosted the tabernacle and great high place where Solomon offered a thousand burnt offerings and received his gift of wisdom (1 Kgs 3:4-5; 2 Chr 1:3). The pool of Gibeon was the site of the grim contest between Joab's and Abner's men (2 Sam 2:12-16), and the 'great waters which are in Gibeon' witnessed Ishmael's capture of captives (Jer 41:12). Isaiah recalls Yahweh's decisive action 'in the valley at Gibeon' (28:21).

Gibeon (place name) (37×) The proper place name Giv'on, designating a Levitical city in Benjamin's territory. All 37 occurrences refer to this single location. It functions in four main narrative clusters: the Gibeonite treaty (Josh 9-10), David's military and political dealings (2 Sam 2:12-16; 3:30; 20:8), the tabernacle's pre-temple location (1 Kgs 3:4; 1 Chr 16:39; 2 Chr 1:3), and prophetic reference (Isa 28:21; Jer 28:1; 41:12, 16). Spanish 'Gabaon,' French 'Gabaon,' and English 'Gibeon' all derive from the LXX Gabaon. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Gibeon, Giveon, Givon | es: Gabaón, Gibeon, en-Gabaón | fr: Gabaon, Giveon, Givon | de: Gibeon, Giveon, Givon Josh 9:3; Josh 9:17; Josh 10:1; Josh 10:2; Josh 10:4

גִּבְעֹל H1392 N-ms (1×)
bud - flowering stage of flax, when the plant is in bloom and most vulnerable
This noun describes the bud or flowering stage of a plant, specifically flax in its sole biblical occurrence. The term captures the vulnerable developmental stage when flax had formed buds or blooms but not yet matured to full fiber strength. The plague narrative uses this detail to explain why the flax crop was destroyed while barley survived—timing determined susceptibility. The agricultural precision reflects genuine knowledge of crop development stages.

(1×) Exodus 9:31 explains, 'The flax and barley were destroyed, since the barley was in the ear and the flax was in bud.' The seventh plague's hail struck at a specific agricultural moment. The technical term for flax's bloom stage shows careful observation. Translations render this as 'bud' or 'bloom' (Spanish 'caña' appears anomalous, perhaps meaning 'stalk'), while German 'Knospe' (bud) captures the developmental stage precisely. BUD BLOSSOM FLOURISH
en: bud | es: caña | fr: bud | de: Knospe Exod 9:31

גִּבְעֹנִי H1393 Art / N-proper-ms (8×)
Gibeonite — an inhabitant of Gibeon, the city that made a covenant of peace with Israel.
A gentilic adjective identifying someone from Gibeon, the Hivite city whose inhabitants famously deceived Joshua into a peace treaty (Josh 9). In 2 Samuel 21:1–9, the Gibeonites demand justice for Saul's violation of that covenant, and David negotiates with them — this passage accounts for the majority of the word's eight occurrences. In Nehemiah 3:7 and 1 Chronicles 12:4, individual Gibeonites are mentioned by name. Spanish guivonitas and gabeonita, along with French and German forms, all reflect the gentilic pattern. The term carries the weight of a covenantal relationship that even kings cannot abrogate.

Gibeonite (gentilic) (8×) A gentilic adjective/noun designating an inhabitant of Gibeon. Most occurrences cluster in 2 Samuel 21:1–9, where the Gibeonites (plural) seek restitution from David for Saul's breach of the ancient covenant made in Joshua 9. In 1 Chronicles 12:4, a single Gibeonite warrior joins David's ranks, and Nehemiah 3:7 names a Gibeonite among Jerusalem's wall-builders. Spanish gabeonita and French Gibeonites follow standard gentilic rendering. The word underscores the enduring covenantal bond between Israel and this non-Israelite community. PERSONAL NAMES en: and-the-Gibeonites, the-Gibeonite, the-Gibeonites | es: a-los-guivonitas, el-gabaonita, el-gabeonita | fr: [הַגִּבְעוֹנִי], [הַגִּבְעֲנִי], et-le-Gibeonites | de: [הַגִּבְעוֹנִי], [הַגִּבְעֲנִי], der-Gibeonites 2Sam 21:1; 2Sam 21:2; 2Sam 21:3; 2Sam 21:4

גִּבְעָה H1394 N-proper-fs (1×)
Gibeah - Benjamite city, site of infamous atrocity and civil war, distinct from Gibeath
This place name designates a Benjamite city, distinct from other Gibeahs in Judah and elsewhere. The name means 'hill,' reflecting the common practice of building settlements on elevated terrain for defense. This Gibeah became infamous as the site of the Levite's concubine atrocity that triggered civil war (Judges 19-21). It later served as Saul's hometown and royal seat. The site is often identified with Tell el-Ful north of Jerusalem, though archaeological debate continues.

(1×) Joshua 18:28 lists 'Gibeah' among Benjamite cities in the tribal allotment. This form (without the article) appears less frequently than the articular form. The city's prominence grew from infamy (Judges) to royal capital (Saul's reign). Translations preserve the name (Givath, Guibeá), maintaining the distinct spelling that helps differentiate this from other similarly named locations in the complex Benjamite geography. GIBEAH CITY NAME
en: Givath | es: Guibeá | fr: Givath | de: Givath Josh 18:28

גִּבְעָתִי H1395 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
the Gibeathite - gentilicial denoting someone from Gibeah of Benjamin
This gentilicial adjective identifies someone as originating from Gibeah, the Benjamite city. Like other ethnic-geographic designations, it combines the place name with an adjectival suffix to denote membership or origin. The term appears in Chronicles' list of David's warriors, showing that despite Gibeah's association with Saul (David's rival) and its dark history, men from this city served in David's army. Such designations were crucial for identifying warriors by hometown in military rosters.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 12:3 mentions warriors 'Ahiezer and Joash the sons of Shemaah the Gibeathite.' These Benjamites joined David at Ziklag, defecting from Saul despite being from his hometown. The gentilicial form with article emphasizes their known geographic-tribal identity. French and German preserve the Hebrew form in brackets, while English and Spanish transliterate (the-Gibeathite, el-guibeatita). PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Gibeathite | es: el-guibeatita | fr: [הַגִּבְעָתִי] | de: [הַגִּבְעָתִי] 1Chr 12:3

גָּבַר H1396 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (25×)
Be strong, prevail, be mighty; strengthen, confirm; act proudly, exalt oneself
A verb of power and mastery whose basic Qal sense is to be strong or to prevail. The Flood narrative uses it four times (Genesis 7:18-24) to describe the waters growing overwhelmingly mighty over the earth. It spans cosmic and personal domains—from waters prevailing over mountains to a man's strength failing in illness. In the Piel and Hiphil stems it becomes causative: God strengthens His people (Zechariah 10:6,12) or confirms a covenant (Daniel 9:27). The Hitpael reflexive turns inward with a darker edge: to exalt oneself defiantly, as in Job 15:25 where the wicked man 'strengthens himself against the Almighty.' Arabic cognate jabara and Aramaic gevar preserve the same semantic core.

1. prevail, be strong, be mighty (17×) Qal intransitive: to be strong, be mighty, prevail. The Flood account (Genesis 7:18-24) uses it repeatedly as waters overwhelm the earth. Also of military superiority (Exodus 17:11), tribal strength (Genesis 49:26), and blessings surpassing ancestors (1 Chronicles 5:2). Spanish 'prevalecer' and French 'prevaloir' match the competitive nuance. Psalm 103:11 extends it to God's lovingkindness prevailing over those who fear Him. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-prevailed, are-too-strong, become-mighty | es: Y-prevalecieron, fueron-fuertes, ha-prevalecido | fr: [גבר], [גברו], et-prévalut | de: Mann, [גברו], erstarkten Gen 7:18; Gen 7:19; Gen 7:20; Gen 7:24; Gen 49:26

2. strengthen, confirm (5×) Piel and Hiphil causative: to make strong, to strengthen or confirm. God strengthens Judah and Joseph (Zechariah 10:6,12), a ruler confirms a covenant with many (Daniel 9:27), and Psalm 12:4 warns of a tongue that 'makes itself mighty.' The shift from intransitive to causative marks a move from state to agency. German reflexive forms and Spanish 'fortalecer' capture this well. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: and-I-will-strengthen, and-he-shall-confirm, he-must-increase | es: Y-confirmará, Y-fortaleceré, Y-los-fortaleceré | fr: et-être-fort, prévaloir, être-puissant | de: [וגברתי], [וגברתים], [והגביר] Ps 12:4; Eccl 10:10; Dan 9:27; Zech 10:6; Zech 10:12

3. act proudly, show oneself mighty (3×) Hitpael reflexive: to show oneself mighty, to act defiantly or proudly against another. Job 15:25 depicts the wicked man stretching out his hand against God and 'strengthening himself against the Almighty.' Job 36:9 uses it of those who have 'acted proudly,' and Isaiah 42:13 applies it to the Lord rousing Himself like a warrior. The reflexive stem adds a self-asserting, sometimes arrogant dimension. ARROGANT SELF-EXALTATION

en: He-prevails, he-acts-defiantly, they-act-proudly | es: prevalecerá, se-fortalecieron, se-fortaleció | fr: [יתגבר], prévaloir | de: [יתגבר], [יתגברו] Job 15:25; Job 36:9; Isa 42:13

גֶּבֶר H1397 Art / N-mp (65×)

gever – a man emphasizing strength and vigor; a mighty or warrior-aged male, distinct from ish and adam

The noun gever designates a man with emphasis on strength, vigor, and martial capability – a 'strong man' as opposed to the more generic ish ('man, husband') or adam ('human being'). It belongs predominantly to elevated poetic registers: Job uses it 14 times, the Psalms 8 times, and Proverbs 7 times. Balaam's oracles open with it – 'the oracle of the gever whose eye is opened' (Num 24:3, 15) – and Deuteronomy 22:5 pairs it with ishshah ('woman') in the cross-dressing prohibition. David's last words begin with 'the oracle of the gever raised on high' (2 Sam 23:1). Spanish varon/hombre, French homme/heros, and German Mann all render it, though none fully captures the connotation of robust physical manhood that distinguishes gever from its synonyms.

man (strong/mighty) (65×) A man viewed under the aspect of strength, vigor, and warrior-readiness, distinguished from ish (the socially situated individual) and adam (the generic human). Predominantly poetic, it appears in Balaam's oracles (Num 24:3, 15), David's last words (2 Sam 23:1), the Deuteronomic cross-dressing law (Deut 22:5), and heavily in Job, Psalms, and Proverbs where the gever contends with God or fate. French heros hints at the heroic overtone, while Spanish varon and German Mann, though accurate, do not fully convey the physical-strength nuance that sets this term apart from its Near Eastern cognates. MAN AND HUMANITY

en: a-man, a-strong-man, is-a-man | es: Hombre, el-hombre?, el-varón | fr: homme, héros | de: Mann, ein-Mann, ist-der-Mann Num 24:3; Num 24:15; Deut 22:5; Josh 7:14

גֶּבֶר H1398 N-proper-ms (1×)

Geber - Solomonic administrative official, distinct from Ben-Geber, possibly a title or personal name

This name appears in Solomon's administrative structure, designating an official responsible for a district east of the Jordan. The relationship to 'Ben-Geber' (son of Geber) in the same chapter creates textual puzzles—whether these are the same person, father and son, or one using a title and the other a patronymic. Geber means 'man' or 'mighty man,' and could function as either a personal name or a title emphasizing administrative strength and capability.

(1×) 1 Kings 4:19 states, 'Geber son of Uri—in Gilead.' This official governed the Transjordanian territory that had belonged to Sihon and Og. All translations preserve the name identically (Geber), treating it as a personal designation within Solomon's twelve-district administrative system. The name's meaning ('man, hero') may have carried connotations of strength suitable for governing this frontier region. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Geber | es: Geber | fr: Geber | de: Geber 1Kgs 4:19

גֶּבֶר H1399 N-msc (1×)

the man - strong man, warrior, or hero; adult male distinguished from women, children, non-combatants

This noun denotes a man, specifically emphasizing strength, maturity, or warrior status, distinguishing adult males from women, children, and non-combatants. Common in poetry and elevated discourse, it appears frequently in Job, Psalms, and Proverbs. The term suggests not just biological maleness but social role—the defender, provider, the one who stands in battle. It carries connotations of strength and responsibility, often with military or protective implications.

(1×) Psalm 18:25 declares, 'To the faithful you show yourself faithful; to the man of integrity you show yourself upright.' The psalmist describes God's moral reciprocity, showing that divine response matches human character. The parallel structure emphasizes the strong, complete man (geber) of integrity. Most translations render this contextually as 'blameless' or 'man of integrity,' with Spanish 'varón' preserving the masculine strength nuance. MAN AND HUMANITY

en: the-man | es: varón | fr: traître | de: der-Mann Ps 18:25

גְּבַר H1400 Conj-w / N-mpd (21×)

Man, male person (Aramaic); the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew 'geber', denoting an individual man or men collectively.

This Aramaic noun (גְּבַר, plural גֶּבְרִין / emphatic גַּבְרַיָּא) is the cognate of Hebrew geber and denotes a man or men in the ordinary sense. In Daniel it appears in vivid narrative contexts: the men thrown into the fiery furnace (Dan 3:20-27), the officials who accused Daniel (Dan 6:5-25), and Arioch presenting Daniel to the king as 'a man of the exiles of Judah' (Dan 2:25). In Ezra it occurs in official correspondence referring to the men rebuilding the temple (Ezra 5:4, 10). The plural forms with various prefixes (waw-conjunctive, lamed-prepositional) account for most occurrences, though the singular appears in key dramatic moments.

man, male person (Aramaic) (21×) An Aramaic noun meaning 'man' or 'male person,' cognate of Hebrew geber. Used for individuals in dramatic narrative — Arioch presents Daniel as 'a man from the exiles' (Dan 2:25), and a 'man in whom is the spirit of the holy gods' (Dan 5:11). In the plural it designates groups: the men bound and cast into the furnace (Dan 3:20-25), the accusers of Daniel (Dan 6:5-25), and the builders in Ezra's correspondence (Ezra 5:4, 10). Spanish 'hombres', German 'Maenner/Mann', and French transliterations confirm the basic 'man/men' semantic range. MAN AND HUMANITY

en: [dir.obj]-men, a-man, and-to-men | es: Y-a-hombres, a-estos-hombres, a-hombres | fr: [גבריא], [ולגברין], [לגבריא] | de: Maenner, Mann, [גבריא] Ezra 4:21; Ezra 5:4; Ezra 5:10; Ezra 6:8; Dan 2:25

גִּבָּר H1401 N-mpc (1×)

mighty of - construct form denoting mighty warriors or powerful men, emphasizing strength

This Aramaic plural construct form means 'mighty ones of' or 'warriors of,' equivalent to Hebrew גִּבּוֹרֵי חַיִל (mighty men of valor). It appears in Daniel's Aramaic narrative describing elite soldiers ordered to execute the three Hebrews. The term emphasizes exceptional strength or military prowess—these were not ordinary soldiers but the most powerful warriors available. The construct form requires a following noun to complete the phrase, typically 'mighty ones of strength/valor.'

(1×) Daniel 3:20 states that Nebuchadnezzar 'commanded some of the mighty men of his army' to bind Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. The king assigns his strongest soldiers to this task, perhaps anticipating resistance or wanting to ensure thorough execution. Translations preserve the construct relationship: 'mighty-of-,' 'poderosos-de,' showing these as elite troops. The Aramaic form in Daniel's bilingual text matches standard Hebrew military terminology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: mighty-of- | es: poderosos-de | fr: homme | de: [גברי] Dan 3:20

גִּבָּר H1402 N-proper-ms (1×)
Gibbar - leader of returning exiles, name meaning 'hero' or 'mighty one,' probably equals Gibeon
This name appears in Ezra's list of returning exiles, meaning 'hero' or 'mighty one' in Aramaic. The parallel list in Nehemiah has 'Gibeon' instead, suggesting Gibbar may represent the people of Gibeon or a textual variant. Such variations between Ezra and Nehemiah's parallel lists are common, reflecting different manuscript traditions or actual name variations. The name's meaning ('hero') makes it suitable as either a personal name or a gentilicial derived from a place name.

(1×) Ezra 2:20 counts 'the men of Gibbar' as 95 among the returning exiles. The parallel in Nehemiah 7:25 has 'men of Gibeon,' strongly suggesting geographic origin. Most translations preserve Gibbar as a name, while German 'Mann' (man) appears to translate the term rather than transliterate it. The numeric correspondence (95 in both lists) supports identifying Gibbar with Gibeon. MAN AND HUMANITY
en: Gibbar | es: Guibar | fr: [גבר] | de: Mann Ezra 2:20

גַּבְרִיאֵל H1403 N-proper-ms (2×)
Gabriel — 'man of God,' an archangel who brings divine messages and interprets visions Gabriel appears in Scripture as a heavenly messenger of the highest order, explaining apocalyptic visions to Daniel. His name means 'man of God' or 'God is my strength,' fitting for one who mediates divine revelation. In Daniel 8, he interprets the ram and goat vision, and in Daniel 9, he arrives in swift flight to give Daniel understanding about the seventy weeks. The New Testament continues this role when Gabriel announces the births of John the Baptist and Jesus. Among angels named in Scripture, Gabriel specializes in conveying understanding of God's prophetic purposes.

(2×) The personal name of an archangel who interprets visions and delivers divine messages. Both occurrences in Daniel (8:16, 9:21) present Gabriel as the one sent to make Daniel understand apocalyptic revelations. The name's meaning ('man of God' or 'mighty one of God') reflects his role as mediator between divine and human realms. Consistent transliterations across languages (Gabriel, Gavri'el) maintain the Hebrew name's recognition as a specific heavenly being. ANGELS AND MESSENGERS
en: Gavri'el | es: Gabriel | fr: puissant | de: Gabriel Dan 8:16; Dan 9:21

גְּבֶרֶת H1404 N-fsc / 2fs (9×)
Mistress, lady; a woman of authority over servants or of royal sovereignty
The feminine counterpart of gever/gibbor ('mighty man'), denoting a woman who holds authority. In its most frequent usage, geveret describes the mistress of a household in relation to her servants – Sarah over Hagar is the defining example (Gen 16:4, 8, 9), and Psalm 123:2 generalizes the relationship: 'as the eyes of a maidservant to the hand of her mistress.' The word takes on grander proportions in Isaiah 47:5, 7, where Babylon is mockingly addressed as geveret mamlakhot – 'mistress of kingdoms' – a title of imperial sovereignty that God is about to strip away. Spanish consistently renders 'senora' across both senses, while English distinguishes 'mistress' (domestic) from the royal connotation.

1. mistress (of a servant) (7×) Mistress of a household, a woman exercising domestic authority over servants or maidservants. The paradigm case is Sarah as Hagar's geveret (Gen 16:4, 8, 9), where the term defines a social hierarchy: Hagar must return and submit 'under the hand of your mistress.' Also used of Naaman's wife as mistress over the Israelite servant girl (2 Kgs 5:3), and generalized in Psalm 123:2 and Proverbs 30:23. Spanish 'senora' and English 'mistress' both capture the relational authority; Isaiah 24:2 pairs it with its opposite ('as with the maidservant, so with her mistress') to describe social leveling in judgment. LORDS AND MASTERS
en: her-mistress, my-mistress, so-her-mistress | es: a-su-señora, como-su-señora, mi-señora | fr: [כגברתה], dame, mon-mistress | de: [גברתה], [כגברתה], deiner-Herrin Gen 16:4; Gen 16:8; Gen 16:9; 2Kgs 5:3; Ps 123:2

2. lady, queen (2×) Lady or queen – a title of sovereign or imperial authority. Used exclusively in Isaiah 47:5, 7, where personified Babylon is addressed as geveret mamlakhot ('mistress of kingdoms'), boasting 'I shall be a lady forever.' The shift from domestic to political authority is dramatic: this is not household management but imperial dominion. Spanish renders 'senora de' and English 'mistress of,' but the context of divine judgment against Babylon's arrogance elevates the term far beyond its domestic register. QUEEN RULER
en: a-mistress, mistress-of | es: señora, señora-de | fr: [גברת] | de: [גברת] Isa 47:5; Isa 47:7

גִּבְתוֹן H1405 N-proper-fs (6×)
Gibbethon – a Levitical city in Dan's territory, a Philistine-contested border town
Gibbethon (meaning 'mound' or 'height') is a Levitical city in the tribal territory of Dan, situated on the contested border with the Philistines. It appears in the allotment lists (Josh 19:44) and the Levitical city roster (Josh 21:23), then surfaces dramatically in the narratives of 1 Kings 15-16, where the Israelite army besieges it twice – first when Baasha assassinates Nadab (1 Kgs 15:27), and again when Zimri overthrows Elah (1 Kgs 16:15, 17). Its repeated role as a siege site underscores how this minor border town stood at the fault line between Israel and Philistia. All languages preserve the toponym directly: Spanish Gibeton, French Gibbethon, German Gibbethon.

Gibbethon (place name) (6×) The proper name of a Levitical city in Dan's territory, repeatedly contested by the Philistines. Its six occurrences span two textual domains: the allotment and Levitical lists of Joshua (19:44; 21:23) and the siege narratives of 1 Kings (15:27; 16:15, 17), where two coups d'etat occur among the Israelite forces besieging it. Prepositional variants (at Gibbethon, in Gibbethon) produce no semantic shift. Every target language renders it as a direct transliteration, confirming a single place-name referent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Gibbethon, Gibbeton, and-Gibbethon | es: Gibetón, de-Gibetón, en-Gibetón | fr: Gibbethon, Gibbeton, de-Gibbeton | de: Gibbethon, Gibbeton, bei-Gibbethon Josh 19:44; Josh 21:23; 1Kgs 15:27; 1Kgs 16:15

גַּג H1406 N-mp (31×)
roof, rooftop — the flat upper surface of a building, used for daily activities, refuge, and proclamation Gag refers to the flat roof characteristic of ancient Near Eastern architecture, appearing 31 times across law, narrative, and prophetic texts. Deuteronomy 22:8 legislates that a parapet must be built around a new roof to prevent bloodguilt from falls — a remarkably practical Torah command. In the Rahab narrative, she hides the Israelite spies under flax stalks on the roof (Josh 2:6-8). David's fateful glimpse of Bathsheba bathing occurs from his palace roof (2 Sam 11:2), and Absalom's public act on the roof seals the breach with his father (2 Sam 16:22). Samuel converses privately with Saul on the roof before his anointing (1 Sam 9:25-26). In prophetic imagery, rooftops become sites of mourning and lamentation (Isa 15:3; 22:1; Jer 19:13; 32:29) and of idolatrous incense burning. The word also extends to the top surface of the altar of incense (Exod 30:3; 37:26). Spanish 'techo,' French 'toit,' and German 'Dach' capture the architectural sense.

roof / rooftop (31×) The flat upper surface of a building, integral to daily life in the ancient Near East. Used for concealment (Rahab hides the spies, Josh 2:6), royal observation (David sees Bathsheba, 2 Sam 11:2), private conversation (Samuel and Saul, 1 Sam 9:25), public proclamation (2 Sam 16:22), and mourning (Isa 15:3; Jer 19:13). Deuteronomy 22:8 requires a parapet for safety. Extended to the top of the incense altar (Exod 30:3; 37:26). ROOFTOP HOUSETOP

en: a-roof, for-your-roof, its-top | es: a-su-techo, de-tejados, el-techo | fr: Gath, Guilgal, le-toit | de: Dach, Dach-von, [גגות] Exod 30:3; Exod 37:26; Deut 22:8; Josh 2:6

גַּד H1407 N-ms (2×)

coriander — an aromatic herb whose small, round seeds resembled manna in appearance

Coriander seed provided the biblical writers with their closest natural comparison for manna's appearance. Both Exodus and Numbers describe manna as resembling coriander seed in size and perhaps color—small, round, whitish granules. Coriander was well-known in the ancient Near East as a culinary herb and spice, its seeds valued for flavoring food. By comparing the mysterious heaven-sent manna to familiar coriander seed, the text helped Israelites (and readers) visualize this supernatural provision. The comparison focused on physical appearance rather than taste, since manna's flavor is described separately.

(2×) The seed of the coriander plant, used as the primary visual simile for manna's appearance. Exodus 16:31 and Numbers 11:7 both employ 'coriander seed' to help readers picture the small, round, whitish granules that appeared each morning in the wilderness. The comparison drew on common culinary knowledge—coriander was widely cultivated and used—to make the miraculous comprehensible. Cross-linguistic consistency (coriander, cilantro) reflects the plant's widespread recognition. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: coriander | es: cilantro | fr: coriander | de: coriander Exod 16:31; Num 11:7

לַגָּד H1408 Prep-l (1×)

for Gad - deity of fortune or luck worshipped in syncretistic Israelite practice

This term refers to Gad, a deity of fortune or luck worshipped in the ancient Near East and illicitly adopted by some Israelites. Related to Arabic ˀ (fortune, luck) and appearing in Phoenician and Aramaic inscriptions, Gad personified destiny or fate. Isaiah condemns Israelites who worship this foreign deity alongside Meni (destiny). The practice represented syncretism—blending Yahweh worship with pagan fortune cults. The preposition 'for' indicates dedication or offering to this deity.

(1×) Isaiah 65:11 condemns 'you who forsake the Lord... who spread a table for Gad.' The prophet denounces those who abandon exclusive Yahweh worship for foreign deities promising fortune and prosperity. The cultic meal 'for Gad' represents covenant betrayal. French and German bracket the Hebrew, possibly acknowledging the name's ambiguity—is it the tribal name, or the deity, or both in wordplay? GAD PROPER NAME

en: for-Gad | es: para-Gad | fr: [לְגַד] | de: [לְגַד] Isa 65:11

גַּד H1409 N-ms (2×)

fortune, good luck — prosperity viewed as a force or deity; also the god Fortune worshiped in place of Yahweh

This word operates on two levels in Scripture: as the concept of good fortune or luck, and as the name of a deity personifying fortune worshiped in the ancient Near East. When Leah exclaims at Gad's birth, the Hebrew preserves textual ambiguity—is she saying 'good fortune!' or invoking a god's name? Later, Isaiah 65:11 clearly condemns those who 'prepare a table for Fortune (Gad)' instead of serving Yahweh, showing how the abstract concept could slip into idolatrous personification. The Arabic cognate and widespread ancient references show Fortune-worship was a real temptation in Israel's polytheistic environment.

(2×) Good fortune as a concept or Fortune as a deity. Genesis 30:11 contains an ambiguous exclamation at Gad's birth—either 'with good fortune!' or invoking the god Fortune—while Isaiah 65:11 unmistakably condemns worship of Fortune (Gad) as a deity. The progression from abstract 'luck' to personified divine power was common in ancient thought. Translations reflect this ambiguity: some render it as mere exclamation, others acknowledge the theological danger of treating fortune as a power separate from God. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: -, fortune | es: (ketiv), fortuna | fr: -, fortune | de: Glück, Glück! Gen 30:11

גָּד H1410 N-proper-ms (72×)

Gad — 'fortune'; Jacob's seventh son by Zilpah, the tribe descended from him, or the prophet who served David.

Gad is a Hebrew proper name traditionally connected to the noun gad meaning 'fortune' or 'good luck,' as reflected in Leah's exclamation at his birth, 'Fortune has come!' (Gen 30:11). The name designates three distinct referents that the text normally distinguishes by context. First, Gad the patriarch, Jacob's seventh son by Zilpah (Gen 35:26; 46:16). Second, the tribe of Gad and its territorial allotment east of the Jordan in Gilead (Num 32:1-5; Deut 33:20-21; Josh 13:24-28), a region known for its pastoral wealth and military valor — Jacob's blessing puns on the name: 'raiders shall raid Gad, but he shall raid at their heels' (Gen 49:19). Third, Gad the seer, David's personal prophet who guided him from the cave of Adullam to the threshing floor of Araunah (1 Sam 22:5; 2 Sam 24:11-19). Spanish, French, and German all simply transliterate Gad.

Gad (proper name: patriarch, tribe, or prophet) (72×) The proper name Gad, referring to (a) Jacob's seventh son by Zilpah, named at birth with the exclamation 'Fortune has come!' (Gen 30:11; 35:26; 46:16), (b) the Israelite tribe descended from him and their Transjordanian territory in Gilead (Num 32:1-5; Deut 33:20-21; Josh 13:24-28), known for military valor (Gen 49:19; 1 Chr 12:8), and (c) Gad the prophet/seer who served David (1 Sam 22:5; 2 Sam 24:11-19; 1 Chr 21:9). Context alone distinguishes the referents; all languages transliterate the name directly. GAD PROPER NAME

en: Gad | es: Gad | fr: Gad | de: Gad, Gads Gen 30:11; Gen 35:26; Gen 46:16; Gen 49:19; Exod 1:4

גִּדְבָרַיָּא H1411 N-mpd (2×)

treasurers — financial officials who managed royal or temple resources

This Aramaic term appears in Daniel's list of officials summoned to Nebuchadnezzar's image dedication. The word is textually difficult—many scholars see it as a variant or scribal error related to 'treasurer,' while others propose it might be a duplicate term in the list. Ancient versions interpreted it as referring to financial officials, those responsible for managing the king's treasures and revenues. The uncertainty reflects the challenges of understanding technical administrative vocabulary from ancient Babylonian bureaucracy preserved in Aramaic.

(2×) Royal treasurers or financial officials in the Babylonian administration. Daniel 3:2-3 lists these among the dignitaries commanded to attend the golden image ceremony. The term's exact meaning is debated—it may be a textual variant of the standard word for treasurer, or represent a specific class of financial administrators. Ancient translators understood these as officials responsible for managing royal or temple wealth, hence 'treasurers' or 'financial officers.' HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: the-treasurers | es: los-tesoreros | fr: trésorier | de: [גדבריא] Dan 3:2; Dan 3:3

גֻּדְגֹּדָה H1412 Art / N-proper-fs / 3fs (2×)

Gudgodah — a wilderness encampment of Israel during the exodus journey

Gudgodah appears in Moses's recollection of Israel's wilderness wanderings as one of the stopping places during the journey from Egypt to Canaan. The name appears twice in one verse (Deuteronomy 10:7) with slightly different forms, describing Israel's movement from one campsite to another. The parallel account in Numbers 33 calls this place 'Hor-haggidgad,' suggesting 'Gudgodah' may be a shortened form. The site's exact location is unknown, and the name's meaning remains uncertain, though it may relate to cutting or gouging, perhaps describing geological features of the area.

(2×) A place name marking a wilderness station during Israel's exodus journey. Both occurrences in Deuteronomy 10:7 trace Israel's itinerary, showing movement through this location. The name appears with the definite article and in construct relationship ('to Gudgodah'), indicating a specific geographical location known to the original audience. Parallel texts suggest variant forms of the same place name, typical of oral tradition and regional pronunciation differences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Gudgodah, to-Gudgodah | es: Gudgoda, a-Gudgoda | fr: Gudgodah, à-Gudgodah | de: Gudgodah, zu-Gudgodah Deut 10:7

גָּדַד H1413 V-Hitpael-Imperf-2fs (8×)

To cut oneself, gash the body in mourning or pagan rites; also to band together, gather in hostile troops.

A verb with two strikingly different semantic paths. In its more common use, it describes ritual self-laceration – cutting or gashing the body as an act of mourning or pagan worship, explicitly forbidden in Deuteronomy 14:1 and dramatically enacted by the prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel (1 Kgs 18:28). The second sense, 'to band together' or 'gather in troops,' likely derives from the related noun gedud ('raiding band'), depicting hostile assembly. The Arabic cognate jadda ('to cut, cut off') anchors the physical cutting sense, while the military metaphor of 'cutting into' enemy territory bridges toward the gathering sense.

1. cut oneself, gash oneself (5×) Reflexive self-cutting in the Hitpael stem, describing ritual laceration of the body. Deuteronomy 14:1 prohibits it among Israelites: 'you shall not cut yourselves' for the dead. First Kings 18:28 narrates the Baal prophets gashing themselves until blood flowed. Jeremiah 16:6, 41:5, and 47:5 associate it with mourning rites. Spanish cortarse/hacerse incisiones ('cut oneself/make incisions') and the Arabic jadda ('cut off') consistently point to physical wounding of one's own flesh, always in ritual or mourning contexts. REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS

en: and-cut-themselves, and-gashing-themselves, they-will-cut-themselves | es: os-haréis-incisiones, se-harán-cortaduras, te-cortarás | fr: [ומתגדדים], [יתגדד], [תתגודדי] | de: [ומתגדדים], [יתגדד], [תתגודדי] Deut 14:1; 1Kgs 18:28; Jer 16:6; Jer 41:5; Jer 47:5

2. band together, gather in troops (3×) To band together or assemble as a hostile group, used in both Hitpael and Qal stems. Micah 5:1 (ET 4:14) commands 'gather yourself in troops,' addressing a besieged city. Psalm 94:21 describes the wicked banding together against the righteous. Jeremiah 5:7 depicts people thronging to houses of prostitution. French se rassembler ('gather together') captures this collective military or hostile assembly. The connection to the cutting sense may run through the noun gedud ('raiding band'), itself from the root's notion of making an incursion or 'cutting into' territory. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: gather-yourself-in-troops, they-band-together, they-throng | es: Se-amontonan, se-reunieron, te-harás-cortaduras | fr: [יתגדדו], se-couper, se-rassembler | de: [יתגדדו], [תתגדדי], sie-band-zusammen Ps 94:21; Jer 5:7; Mic 5:1

גְּדַד H1414 V-Qal-Imp-mp (2×)

chop down, hew down — to cut down trees with forceful blows

This Aramaic verb appears in Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the great tree, where the heavenly watcher commands 'Chop down the tree and cut off its branches!' The verb emphasizes the violent, decisive action of felling—not gentle pruning but complete destruction. Both occurrences are imperatives in the same vision (Daniel 4), first in the dream itself, then in Daniel's retelling. The command to hew down the mighty tree symbolized the coming judgment on Nebuchadnezzar's pride, though the stump would remain, promising eventual restoration.

(2×) To cut down or hew down a tree with forceful strokes. Both uses in Daniel 4:14, 23 are plural imperatives addressed to angelic beings, commanding the felling of the great tree representing Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom. The Aramaic verb emphasizes decisive, destructive cutting, appropriate to the judgment-oracle context. Translations (chop down, cortad, couper) consistently convey the violent, complete nature of this tree-felling, symbolizing the temporary removal of the king from his throne. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: chop-down | es: cortad | fr: couper | de: [גדן] Dan 4:14; Dan 4:23

גָּדָה H1415 N-fpc / 3ms (5×)

Bank, riverbank; the edge or embankment of a river, used exclusively of the Jordan and the Euphrates overflowing their banks.

A feminine noun meaning 'bank' or 'riverbank,' always appearing in the plural construct with a possessive suffix ('its banks'). It occurs in the context of rivers overflowing—the Jordan at flood stage during harvest (Josh 3:15; 4:18), the warriors crossing the Jordan when it overflowed its banks (1 Chr 12:16), and the Euphrates in Isaiah's metaphor of Assyrian invasion flooding 'over all its banks' (Isa 8:7). The Arabic cognate juddah confirms the meaning of 'edge, bank.' Spanish 'riberas' and 'orillas' both capture the riverbank sense, with 'orillas' emphasizing the water's edge.

(5×) The bank or embankment of a river, always in the context of overflowing or crossing at flood stage. Josh 3:15 and 4:18 describe the Jordan overflowing all its banks during harvest, a miraculous crossing context. 1 Chr 12:16 recalls warriors crossing when the Jordan had overflowed its banks. Isa 8:7 uses the image metaphorically: Assyria as the Euphrates flooding over all its banks. The Arabic cognate juddah and Aramaic gudda ('wall, bank') confirm the concrete meaning. Spanish distinguishes 'riberas' (riverbanks) from 'orillas' (shores/edges), both apt renderings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (its-banks), [its-banks], its-banks | es: (sus-riberas), [sus-riberas], sus-orillas | fr: [גדותיו], [גדיתיו], son-banks | de: [גדותיו], [גדיתיו], sein-banks Josh 3:15; Josh 4:18; 1Chr 12:16; Isa 8:7

גְּדוּד H1416 Art / N-ms (33×)

band, troop, raiding party — a detachment of men organized for warfare or plunder

Gedud describes an organized band of armed men, typically a raiding party that strikes swiftly and withdraws. Its 33 occurrences cluster in the historical books, where such bands are agents of chaos on Israel's borders. David pursues the Amalekite gedud that burned Ziklag and carried off captives (1 Sam 30:8-23), and small Aramean raiding parties carry off an Israelite girl in the Naaman narrative (2 Kgs 5:2). In 2 Kings 24:2, YHWH sends 'bands' of Chaldeans, Arameans, Moabites, and Ammonites against Judah as instruments of judgment. The wordplay in Genesis 49:19 — 'Gad, a gedud shall raid him' — puns on the tribal name. Job applies the term figuratively to God's 'troops' advancing against him (Job 19:12). French 'bande' and German 'Streifscharen' capture the sense of a mobile armed detachment.

band, troop, raiding party (33×) A band of armed men assembled for raiding, plundering, or military incursion. David's pursuit of the Amalekite raiding party at Ziklag exemplifies the term (1 Sam 30:8-23). Recurring in Kings for marauding border bands (2 Kgs 5:2; 6:23; 13:20-21; 24:2). The wordplay in Gen 49:19 puns on Gad's name. Used figuratively of God's hostile 'troops' in Job 19:12 and of priestly bands committing violence in Hos 6:9. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-troop, band, bands | es: a-la-tropa, bandas, bandas-de | fr: [גדוד],

bands, bands-de | de: [בגדוד], [גדוד], [הגדוד] Gen 49:19; 1Sam 30:8; 1Sam 30:15; 1Sam 30:23

גְּדוּד H1417 N-fp (1×)

gashes, cuts (on the body as expression of mourning)

This rare term appears only in Jeremiah's oracle against Moab, describing ritual self-mutilation as a sign of grief. The Hebrew root relates to cutting or incising, and the context at Jeremiah 48:37 places it alongside shaved heads and clipped beards—all forbidden mourning practices in Israel but common among surrounding nations. The English 'gashes' and Spanish 'cortaduras' capture the visceral physicality of this ancient grief expression.

(1×) Referring to deliberate cuts made on the body during mourning rituals, this sense is attested only in Jeremiah 48:37 where it describes pagan Moabite grief practices. The multilingual evidence (English 'gashes', Spanish 'cortaduras') confirms the physical violence of the act, contrasting with Israel's covenant prohibitions against such bodily mutilation in mourning contexts. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: gashes | es: cortaduras | fr: [גדדת] | de: [גדדת] Jer 48:37

גְּדוּד H1418 N-mpc / 3fs (1×)

ridges, furrows (of plowed earth)

Found only in Psalm 65:10, this agricultural term describes the corrugated surface of plowed land. The psalm celebrates God's provision through rain that softens the ridges and furrows, making the earth fruitful. While the Hebrew root relates to cutting or trenching, here it evokes the parallel grooves created by the plow. The imagery connects divine blessing with the practical realities of ancient Near Eastern farming.

(1×) The ridged terrain created by plowing, appearing in Psalm 65:10's hymn of agricultural thanksgiving. God's rain 'settles its ridges' (English, German) or 'terrones' (Spanish clods/furrows), softening the hardened ground. The French 'incision' highlights the cutting action that creates these furrows, essential for seed planting and water retention. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: its-ridges | es: sus-terrones | fr: incision | de: sein-ridges Ps 65:10

H1419 Adj-msc (1×)

great (in extent, intensity, or importance)

This lone occurrence in Proverbs 19:19 appears in a challenging textual context. The verse discusses someone 'great of wrath' or 'prone to great anger,' warning that rescuing such a person repeatedly only perpetuates their destructive patterns. The adjective conveys magnitude and intensity, whether physical size, emotional force, or social significance. Though monosemous here, it participates in the broader semantic field of Hebrew words for greatness.

(1×) Used adjectivally to intensify 'wrath' in Proverbs 19:19, describing someone characterized by great or excessive anger. All four languages (English 'great', Spanish 'grande', French 'grand', German participle form) preserve this sense of magnitude, here applied to temperamental intensity rather than physical size. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: (great-of) | es: (grande-de) | fr: grand | de: [(גדל)] Prov 19:19

גָּדוֹל H1419a Conj-w (527×)

Great, large; of size, importance, rank, or age; substantivized as 'great ones/nobles' or 'great deeds/wonders'

Gadol is Hebrew's primary adjective for greatness in all its dimensions – physical size, social importance, emotional intensity, and moral weight. A great city, a great nation, a great God: the word stretches effortlessly across the concrete and the abstract. When substantivized in the masculine plural it denotes 'great ones' or 'nobles,' and in the feminine plural 'great things' or 'wonders.' It also serves as a comparative for 'elder' in birth-order contexts, and occasionally appears in verbal-progressive constructions meaning 'becoming great.' Its sheer frequency (527 occurrences) makes it a cornerstone of Hebrew descriptive vocabulary.

1. great, large (general quality) (486×) The core adjectival sense: great, large, or significant in size, extent, importance, or intensity. Arabic عظيم (ᶜaẓiim) and كبير (kabiir), Spanish grande, and German groß all converge here. Covers physical magnitude ('great sea,' Num 34:6), emotional intensity ('great fear,' Gen 15:12), and theological weight ('great nation,' Gen 12:2). GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great | es: grande, grandes | fr: grand | de: Großen, gross, groß Gen 4:13; Gen 12:2; Gen 12:17; Gen 15:12; Gen 15:14

2. nobles, great ones (persons of rank) (15×) Substantivized masculine plural or construct denoting 'nobles, great ones, leaders' – persons of high rank or authority. Arabic عُماء (ᶜuẓamāʾ) and Korean 귀인들 both employ dedicated terms for dignitaries, revealing the lexical shift from quality to social status. See Jonah 3:7 (Nineveh's nobles) and 2 Kgs 10:6, 11 (the great men of Jezreel). GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: and-his-nobles, from-their-greatest, great-ones | es: desde-grande-de-ellos, el-mayor-de-ellos, grandes | fr: depuis-les-grands, et-ses-grands, grand | de: [הגדולים], der-gross, der-gross-die 1Sam 17:13; 1Sam 17:14; 2Sam 7:9; 2Kgs 10:6; 2Kgs 10:11

3. great things (substantivized deeds) (11×) Substantivized feminine plural (גְּדֹלוֹת) meaning 'great things, great deeds, wonders.' Arabic عظائم (ᶜaẓāʾim) parallels the abstract-plural formation. Occurs in doxological contexts celebrating God's incomprehensible acts (Job 5:9; 9:10; 37:5) and in Deuteronomy's recollection of mighty deeds (Deut 10:21). GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great-things, in-great-things, the-great-things | es: cosas-grandes, en-cosas-grandes, grandes-cosas | fr: dans-grand, grand, le-grand-choses | de: der-gross-Dinge, der-gross-Sachen, gross Deut 10:21; 2Kgs 8:4; Job 5:9; Job 9:10; Job 37:5

4. elder, older (of age/seniority) (7×) Comparative sense for 'elder, older' in birth-order or seniority contexts – the 'greater' child versus the younger. Arabic الْبُكرَى (al-kubrā) specifically marks the elder sibling, as does Spanish el mayor. Prominent in the patriarchal narratives: Esau as the elder son (Gen 27:1, 15, 42) and Leah as the older daughter (Gen 29:16). GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: the-older | es: el-mayor, la-grande, la-mayor | fr: le-older | de: den-Großen, der-Großen, der-older Gen 10:21; Gen 27:1; Gen 27:15; Gen 27:42; Gen 29:16

5. (5×) A cluster of contextually distinct uses including 'loud' (of voice, as in Isa 36:13 and Gen 39:14), 'great' in the phrase 'in Judahite/Hebrew' (language designation in Isa 36:13), and intensive degree markers. These share the root sense of magnitude applied to sound volume or emphatic degree (Ezra 10:12; Prov 27:14). GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: in-Yehudite, loud, sound | es: alta, grande | fr: grand, loud | de: Stimme, gross Gen 39:14; Ezra 10:12; Prov 27:14; Isa 29:6; Isa 36:13

6. becoming great (verbal/progressive) (3×) Verbal-progressive or infinitive-absolute use expressing the process of becoming great or growing in magnitude and status. Arabic وتعاظمًا (wa-taᶜāẓuman) captures the progressive aspect. Attested in descriptions of David's increasing greatness (2 Sam 5:10; 1 Chr 11:9) and Mordecai's rising influence (Esth 9:4). GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: and-becoming-great, and-greater | es: y-creciendo, y-crecía | fr: et-grand, et-greater | de: und-greater, und-gross 2Sam 5:10; 1Chr 11:9; Esth 9:4

הַגְּדוֹלִים H1419b Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Haggedolim (proper name: 'the great ones' or personal name)

This enigmatic form in Nehemiah 11:14 has sparked debate among translators and textual critics. The Revised Version and most modern scholars read it as a personal name (Haggedolim, father of Zabdiel), while the Greek Septuagint and RV margin interpret it as 'the great ones' or 'the nobles'—a title rather than a name. The definite article and plural form support the titular reading, yet genealogical lists typically require proper names. This ambiguity reflects the challenges of post-exilic Hebrew onomastics.

(1×) Either the proper name of Zabdiel's father or a title meaning 'the great ones/nobles' in Nehemiah 11:14. The English and BDB lean toward the personal name interpretation, while Greek witnesses favor the titular sense. Spanish simply transliterates 'S' (possibly an abbreviation), and French/German preserve the Hebrew form, acknowledging the textual uncertainty. GREATNESS AND DEGREE
en: the-great-ones | es: S | fr: [הגדולים] | de: [הגדולים] Neh 11:14

גְּדוּלָה H1420 N-fsc / 1cs (13×)
Greatness, magnificence; of God's majesty or mighty acts, and of human honor or rank.
A noun denoting greatness, whether the intrinsic majesty of God or the honor and dignity of a human ruler. David praises God's greatness alongside sovereignty, power, glory, and splendor (1 Chr 29:11), and the psalmist declares that God's greatness is unsearchable (Ps 145:3, 6). The same word describes Mordecai's advancement in the Persian court (Esth 6:3; 10:2) and the splendor of King Ahasuerus (Esth 1:4). In 2 Samuel 7:21, 23 and 1 Chronicles 17:19, 21 it refers concretely to the great things God has done for Israel. The plural intensifies to mean 'great deeds' or 'mighty acts.'

greatness, great deeds (13×) Greatness, magnificence, or majesty, used both abstractly of God's incomparable nature (1 Chr 29:11; Ps 145:3, 6) and concretely of the mighty acts he performs on behalf of his people (2 Sam 7:21, 23; 1 Chr 17:19, 21). Also applied to human honor and rank—the greatness of Mordecai (Esth 6:3; 10:2) and the splendor displayed by King Ahasuerus (Esth 1:4). The intensive plural form underscores extraordinary, epoch-making deeds rather than mere status. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: (and-your-greatness), [ketiv:and-your-greatness], and-greatness | es: [y-tu-grandeza], grandeza-de, grandezas | fr: der-grande, et-grande, et-à-grandeur | de: (and-dein-greatness), [ketiv:and-dein-greatness], [גדולתו] 2Sam 7:21; 2Sam 7:23; 1Chr 17:19; 1Chr 17:21

גְּדוּפִים H1421 Prep-l / N-mp (3×)
revilings, insults—scornful, abusive words against persons or God
This masculine plural noun denotes reviling words, insults, or verbal abuse. It appears three times in prophetic contexts, always paired with related terms of reproach (ḥerpah, 'disgrace'). Isaiah uses it for insults hurled between humans (43:28) and for scorn directed at God's people that they should not fear (51:7). Zephaniah 2:8 applies it to Moab's taunts against Judah. The root suggests blasphemous or contemptuous speech that dishonors its target. This is stronger than mere criticism—it denotes actively scornful, degrading language.

(3×) Reviling words or insults, appearing three times in Isaiah and Zephaniah. Always used in parallel with ḥerpah ('reproach/disgrace'): Isaiah 43:28 pairs it with ḥerem ('destruction'), Isaiah 51:7 assures the faithful not to fear these revilings, and Zephaniah 2:8 refers to Moab's taunts. Cross-linguistic evidence shows: English 'revilings/revilings of,' Spanish 'insultos/injurias/ultrajes,' French 'reproche,' German uses brackets. The prepositions ('to/from/of revilings') indicate these are verbal assaults directed at God's people or sanctuary. This is vocabulary of verbal abuse and contemptuous speech. REVILE REPROACH INSULT en: and-from-their-revilings, and-the-revilings-of, to-revilings | es: a-insultos, y-de-sus-injurias, y-ultrajes-de | fr: [ומגדפתם], [לגדופים], et-reproche | de: [וגדופי], [ומגדפתם], [לגדופים] Isa 43:28; Isa 51:7; Zeph 2:8

גְּדוּפָה H1422 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)
taunt, reproach, mocking insult
Appearing only in Ezekiel 5:15, this term belongs to a cluster of humiliation vocabulary. God warns that Jerusalem will become 'a reproach and a taunt, an admonition and an astonishment' to surrounding nations after judgment falls. The word conveys not mere criticism but scornful derision—the kind of mocking insult enemies heap upon the defeated. BDB notes the unique occurrence and the parallel structure linking multiple shame terms, each intensifying the portrait of national disgrace.

(1×) A scornful taunt or mocking reproach in Ezekiel 5:15, where Jerusalem's downfall becomes an object lesson for nations. English 'taunt' and Spanish 'escarnio' (mockery) capture the derisive quality, while French 'reproche' emphasizes the reproachful aspect. The term appears in a foursome with 'reproach, admonition, astonishment,' creating a comprehensive picture of covenant judgment. REVILE REPROACH INSULT en: and-taunt | es: y-escarnio | fr: et-reproche | de: [וגדופה] Ezek 5:15

גְּדִי H1423 Conj-w / N-msc (16×)
A young goat or kid, often specified as 'a kid of the goats'; used in sacrifice, food, and pastoral life
The standard Hebrew term for a young goat, almost always appearing in the fuller phrase gedi izzim ('kid of the goats'). It features in three of the Bible's most memorable scenes: Rebekah disguises Jacob with the skins of kids to deceive Isaac (Gen 27:9, 16), Judah pledges a kid as payment to Tamar (Gen 38:17-23), and the threefold dietary law forbids boiling a kid in its mother's milk (Exod 23:19; 34:26; Deut 14:21). The kid also serves as a sacrificial offering (Judg 6:19; 13:15, 19) and as a gift (1 Sam 16:20). Spanish 'cabrito' and German 'Ziegenböcklein' both evoke the young, tender animal at the heart of pastoral and culinary life.

young goat, kid (16×) A young goat or kid (גְּדִי), typically specified as 'a kid of the goats' (gedi izzim). It appears across diverse contexts: as a pastoral and culinary item in the patriarchal narratives (Gen 27:9, 16; 38:17, 20, 23), as the subject of the thrice-repeated dietary prohibition against boiling a kid in its mother's milk (Exod 23:19; 34:26; Deut 14:21), and as an offering brought before the Lord (Judg 6:19; 13:15, 19; 1 Sam 16:20). Samson's visit to his wife with a kid (Judg 15:1) and the comparison to a lion-slaying feat (Judg 14:6) complete the picture of an everyday animal laden with narrative significance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-kid-of, a-kid-of-, a-young-goat | es: cabrito, cabrito-de, cabrito-de- | fr: [גדי], avec-kid-de, chevreau-de | de: Ziegenböcklein, [גדי], das-Böcklein Gen 27:9; Gen 27:16; Gen 38:17; Gen 38:20; Gen 38:23

גָּדִי H1424 N-proper-ms (2×)
Gadi — father of King Menahem of Israel, mentioned in regnal formulas Gadi appears in the historical record solely as the patronymic of Menahem, one of Israel's later kings who seized power through assassination. The brief notation 'Menahem son of Gadi' appears in the standard regnal formulas introducing Menahem's troubled reign. The name itself may relate to fortune or cutting, but the text provides no other information about this person—he is known to history only as the father of a king who gained his throne through violence and maintained it through brutality and heavy tribute to Assyria.

(2×) A personal name preserved only as the patronymic of King Menahem. Second Kings 15:14, 17 identify Menahem as 'son of Gadi' in the formulaic language of the regnal records. The name receives no elaboration or narrative context beyond establishing Menahem's lineage. Transliterations remain consistent across languages (Gadi), reflecting its function as an identifying family name rather than a word with independent semantic content. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Gadi | es: Gadi | fr: Gadi | de: Gadi 2Kgs 15:14; 2Kgs 15:17

גָּדִי H1425 Conj-w (16×)
Gadite — a member of the Israelite tribe of Gad, used as a gentilic adjective and collective noun
The gentilic adjective derived from Gad, designating individuals or the collective body of the tribe of Gad. This tribe received its allotment in Transjordan — the territory east of the Jordan River — alongside the Reubenites and the half-tribe of Manasseh (Deut 3:12, 16; Josh 13:8). The Gadites were known as capable warriors: 1 Chronicles 12:8 describes them as men whose faces were like lions and who were swift as gazelles. They appear in military and administrative lists (1 Chr 5:18, 26; 12:37; 26:32; 2 Kgs 10:33) and in the covenant narrative of Deuteronomy 29:7. Spanish 'gadita' and English 'Gadite' transparently mark the tribal identity.

Gadite (gentilic) (16×) A gentilic term for a member of the tribe of Gad (גָּדִי), used both as an adjective and as a collective noun. The Gadites settled in Transjordan, receiving territory from Aroer northward (Deut 3:12, 16; Josh 12:6; 13:8). They figure as fierce warriors in David's service (1 Chr 12:8, 37) and in tribal census lists (1 Chr 5:18, 26). The term marks tribal identity in legal-covenantal contexts as well (Deut 4:43; 29:7; Josh 1:12; 22:1), and the cities of refuge legislation assigns specific cities to the Gadites (Deut 4:43). GAD PROPER NAME

en: and-Gadi, and-the-Gadite, and-the-Gadites | es: el-gadita, para-los-gaditas, y-a-los-gaditas | fr: [ה]גדי, [ה]גדי, [וה]גדי | de: [ה]גדי, [ו]גדי, [וה]גדי Num 34:14; Deut 3:12; Deut 3:16; Deut 4:43; Deut 29:8

גָּדִי H1426 N-proper-ms (1×)

Gaddi (personal name: 'my fortune/luck')

One of the twelve spies sent to scout Canaan in Numbers 13, Gaddi represented the tribe of Manasseh. His name derives from the Hebrew root for fortune or luck, perhaps reflecting parental gratitude at his birth or hopes for his future. BDB notes the theophoric-like structure ('my fortune') common in ancient Semitic naming. He remains otherwise unknown in biblical narrative beyond this single genealogical reference, one among the ten unfaithful spies whose negative report led to Israel's forty-year wilderness wandering.

(1×) The personal name of Manasseh's representative among the twelve spies (Numbers 13:11), meaning 'my fortune' or 'my luck.' All four languages preserve the proper name unchanged (Gaddi/Gadi/Gaddi), following standard transliteration practice for biblical personal names. The theological irony is that despite his name meaning 'fortunate,' he was among the majority who brought a faithless report. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Gaddi | es: Gadi | fr: Gaddi | de: Gaddi Num 13:11

גַּדִּיאֵל H1427 N-proper-ms (1×)

Gaddiel (personal name: 'El is my fortune')

Another of the twelve spies sent to Canaan, Gaddiel represented Zebulun according to Numbers 13:10. His name combines the fortune/luck root with the divine name El, creating a theophoric confession: 'God is my fortune.' This naming pattern—attributing good fortune to deity rather than chance—reflects typical Israelite theology. Like Gaddi of Manasseh, Gaddiel appears only in the spy list and presumably joined the faithless majority, making his name's theological claim ironic in light of his subsequent unbelief.

(1×) The name of Zebulun's spy representative (Numbers 13:10), meaning 'El is my fortune' or 'God is my luck.' The theophoric element 'El' elevates mere fortune language to theological confession. All languages preserve the proper name through transliteration (Gaddiel/Gadiel), standard practice for biblical personal names, though Spanish slightly varies the spelling. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Gaddiel | es: Gadiel | fr: Gaddiel | de: Gaddiel Num 13:10

גָּדָה H1428

bank of a river; the overflowing edge or shore of a watercourse at flood stage

This term describes the riverbanks when swollen to capacity, particularly during flood season. The Jordan overflowed its banks at harvest time when Israel crossed miraculously, emphasizing the timing's significance. Chronicles and Isaiah use the image of waters reaching the banks to picture abundance or threatening overflow. The word captures not merely the river's edge but the dramatic moment of fullness, when water reaches the very limits of its channel. This flooding imagery became a powerful metaphor for overwhelming divine or military action.

גְּדָיָה H1429 N-fpc / 2fs (1×)

young goats, kids (female goats)

This feminine plural form appears only in Song of Songs 1:8, where the beloved is directed to pasture her young goats beside the shepherds' tents. The pastoral imagery evokes the countryside courtship setting common in ancient Near Eastern love poetry. The word specifically denotes young female goats (kids), distinguished from mature animals and from male kids. The possessive suffix ('your kids') emphasizes the beloved's role as shepherdess, a romantic idealization of rural life that pervades the Song.

(1×) Young female goats belonging to the beloved shepherdess in Song of Songs 1:8. The multilingual evidence is consistent: English 'young goats', Spanish 'cabritas' (little she-goats), French 'chevreaux' (kids), all emphasizing the youth and pastoral charm of these animals. The parallel with 'the flock' confirms the agricultural setting of this love poem. GOATS AND GOAT HAIR

en: your-young-goats | es: tus-cabritas | fr: tes-chevreaux | de: [גדיתיך] Song 1:8

גָּדִישׁ H1430a Prep-m / N-ms (3×)

stack, sheaf—a heap of grain bundled in the field

This noun refers to a stack or heap of harvested grain, specifically sheaves bundled together in the field. It appears in agricultural and legal contexts: Exodus 22:6 (EVV 22:5) addresses arson laws for grain stacks, Judges 15:5 describes Samson burning the Philistines' stacks, and Job 5:26 uses it metaphorically for coming to the grave 'in full vigor' (literally 'like a stack of grain at its time'). The word emphasizes the gathered, heaped nature of the harvest—not individual stalks but bundled abundance.

(3×) A heap or stack of harvested grain sheaves. Exodus 22:6 and Judges 15:5 both pair it with qamah ('standing grain'), distinguishing the harvested stack from grain still in the field. Job 5:26 uses it figuratively: dying in old age is like a sheaf brought in at the proper time. Cross-linguistic glosses show semantic range: English 'stack/sheaf,' Spanish 'hacina/gavilla/parva' (heap/sheaf/stack), French 'meule/stack,' German 'stack.' The preposition 'from stack' (Exodus) indicates the source of fire spreading to other property. This is agricultural vocabulary for bundled harvest. HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: a-sheaf, a-stack, from-stack | es: desde-hacina, gavilla, parva | fr: de-stack, une-meule, גדיש | de: [גדיש], ein-stack, von-stack Exod 22:6; Judg 15:5; Job 5:26

גָּדִישׁ H1430b N-ms (1×)

heap, mound; possibly tomb

Job 21:32 presents a rare and contested word. BDB identifies it as a tomb or burial mound, citing Arabic cognates for 'grave.' The context supports this: even the wicked man 'is borne to the grave' and receives honorable burial. However, Driver suggested emending to a more common Hebrew word for 'heap.' The Arabic parallel strengthens the tomb reading, as ancient Near Eastern burials often involved mounded earth over the deceased. This hapax legomenon illustrates how Job's archaic vocabulary sometimes preserves rare Semitic roots.

(1×) Most likely a tomb or burial mound in Job 21:32, though textual uncertainty remains. The Arabic cognate ʿ 'tomb' supports BDB's reading. English translates generically as 'heap,' Spanish 'montón' likewise, while French and German preserve the Hebrew form, acknowledging the lexical difficulty. The context of burial and watch-keeping over the grave favors the sepulchral interpretation. HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: heap | es: el-montón | fr: גדיש | de: [גדיש] Job 21:32

גָּדַל H1431 V-Piel-Perf-1cs (117×)

To grow up, become great; in Piel to magnify, rear; in Hifil to make great, do great things; reflexively to boast

A versatile Hebrew verb spanning the full arc of greatness, from a child's physical growth to God's sovereign magnification of his servants. In the Qal stem it describes both the organic process of growing up (Gen 21:8) and the state of being great (2 Sam 7:22). The Piel intensifies this into deliberate acts of exalting or nurturing, as when God declares 'I have reared children' (Isa 1:2). The Hifil captures the causative dimension — doing great things or making someone great — while the reflexive Hitpael often carries a darker tone of self-aggrandizement and boasting (Ps 55:12).

1. Hifil: make great, do great things (22×) The Hifil causative: making great or performing great deeds. Spanish 'engrandeció' and German 'gross-machen' both capture the causative force. Used of God doing great things for Israel (1 Sam 12:24) and magnifying his covenant faithfulness (Gen 19:19). The multilingual pattern consistently renders this as active causation of greatness. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: He-makes-great, I-made-great, [k] | es: Engrandecí, Ha-engrandecido, Y-os-engrandecisteis | fr: [k], et-grandir, et-tu-avoir-magnified | de: [k], er-machte-gross, gross-machen Gen 19:19; 1Sam 12:24; 1Sam 20:41; 2Sam 22:51; 1Chr 22:5

2. Qal: grow up physically (19×) Intransitive Qal denoting physical growth and maturation, said of children and young people. The Spanish 'creció' and French 'grandit' preserve the organic developmental sense. Concentrated in Genesis narratives of patriarchal children growing up (Gen 21:8, 25:27), marking life-stage transitions from infancy to adulthood. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: and-grew, and-grew-up, and-he-grew | es: Y-crecieron, Y-creció, crecieron | fr: avait-crû, et-cela-grandit, et-crût | de: grew-hinauf, gross-machen, groß-geworden-war Gen 21:8; Gen 21:20; Gen 25:27; Gen 38:11; Gen 38:14

3. Qal: become great, increase (19×) Dynamic Qal: the process of becoming great in power, wealth, or status — distinct from mere physical maturation. Spanish 'engrandeció' and French 'être grand' reflect increasing magnitude. Abraham's servant reports that the LORD has made his master great (Gen 24:35); Pharaoh tells Joseph 'only in the throne will I be greater' (Gen 41:40). GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: And-is-greater, He-will-be-great, I-will-be-greater | es: Y-engrandeció, Y-fue-grande, Y-ha-crecido | fr: –être-grand, –être-plus-grand, Je—être-plus-grand | de: er-groß-war, er-macht-gross, gross-machen Gen 19:13; Gen 24:35; Gen 26:13; Gen 41:40

4. Hifil/Hitpael: magnify oneself, boast (19×) Reflexive sense (Hifil reflexive or Hitpael): magnifying oneself, boasting, or acting arrogantly. Spanish 'se engrandecerá' captures the self-directed exaltation. Often carries negative connotation — the psalmist laments those who 'magnify themselves against me' (Ps 35:26, 55:12). Korean and Arabic glosses similarly mark this as prideful self-assertion. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: and-I-will-magnify-myself, and-it-grew, and-it-grew- | es: Y-creció, Y-me-engrandeceré, acaso-se-engrandecerá | fr: et-grandir, grandir, le-rendre-grand | de: gross-machen, machte-gross, und-gross-machen Job 19:5; Ps 35:26; Ps 38:16; Ps 55:12; Isa 10:15

5. Piel: magnify, make great, extol (14×) Piel declarative-factitive: to magnify, extol, or make great by deliberate action. Spanish 'engrandeced' and French 'faire grand' reflect purposeful glorification. God promises Abraham 'I will make your name great' (Gen 12:2), and Joshua is magnified before Israel (Josh 3:7). Distinct from the Hifil in emphasizing the honor bestowed rather than the deed performed. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: And-made-great, You-magnify-him, and-I-will-make-great | es: Engrandeced, Y-engrandeció, engrandecerte | fr: et-Je—faire-grand, et-grandir, et-peut-il-fais-greater | de: gross-machen, machte-gross, und-gross-machen Gen 12:2; Josh 3:7; Josh 4:14; 1Kgs 1:37; 1Kgs 1:47

6. Piel: raise, rear children (12×) Piel factitive of child-rearing: to raise, nurture, or bring up children from youth to maturity. Spanish 'crié/crió' (I reared/he reared) and Hindi equivalents confirm the parental nurturing sense. Isaiah 1:2 uses this powerfully: 'I have reared and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me.' Also applied to growing hair long (Num 6:5). GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: I-have-brought-up, I-reared, and-to-raise-them | es: criando, crié, crió? | fr: et-grandir, grandir, grandir-moi | de: erhebend, gross-machen, ich-machte-gross Num 6:5; 2Kgs 10:6; Job 31:18; Isa 1:2; Isa 23:4

7. Qal: be great, stative (10×) Stative Qal expressing an existing state of greatness rather than a process of becoming. Spanish 'eres grande' (you are great) and French 'fut grand' capture the descriptive quality. Used in praise declarations like 'You are great, O LORD God' (2 Sam 7:22) and 'Let the LORD be magnified' (Ps 35:27). GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: You-are-great, great, great-are | es: Sea-engrandecido, era-grande, eres-grande | fr: fut-grand, grandir, il-sera-grand | de: du-sind-gross, er-macht-gross, machte-gross 1Sam 26:24; 2Sam 7:22; Job 2:13; Ps 35:27

8. (1×) A participial or adjectival usage describing something fully grown or mature, as in Psalm 144:12 where sons are compared to plants 'grown up' in their youth. The Spanish 'crecidas' and German 'wurde-gross' confirm a resultative state — the completed outcome of the growth process. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: grown-up | es: crecidas | fr: de-rendre-grand | de: wurde-gross Ps 144:12

9. (1×) An attributive construction in Nahum 1:3, where the word functions as part of a compound phrase describing greatness of power. The Spanish 'y grande de' and French 'et grandir' suggest an adjectival-stative sense modifying divine attributes, expressing magnitude or intensity. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: (and-great-of-) | es: (y-grande-de) | fr: et-grandir | de: machte-gross Nah 1:3

גָּדֵל H1432 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc (4×)

Growing great, increasing; used as a participle meaning 'becoming great' or as an adjective meaning 'large, great'

A Qal active participle of gadal ('to be great') that captures the dynamic process of growing or becoming great. In Genesis 26:13 it describes Isaac's increasing prosperity — he 'went on growing' until he became very wealthy. In 1 Samuel 2:26 the young Samuel 'continued growing' in stature and favor, a phrase later echoed of Jesus in Luke 2:52. In 2 Chronicles 17:12 Jehoshaphat 'grew increasingly great.' The sole non-progressive use appears in Ezekiel 16:26, where the construct phrase 'great of flesh' carries a more physical, even coarse connotation.

(4×) Becoming great, growing progressively in size, wealth, or stature. In Gen 26:13 Isaac 'kept growing' (halokh vegadel) in a vivid progressive construction. In 1 Sam 2:26 the boy Samuel 'continued growing' in both physical stature and divine-human favor — Spanish 'y-creciendo' and French 'et-croissant' both capture the ongoing aspect. In 2 Chr 17:12 Jehoshaphat similarly 'grew increasingly great.' The exceptional use in Ezek 16:26 ('great of flesh,' gidlei basar) shifts from progressive growth to static physical description, likely a euphemism for sexual endowment in the prophetic allegory. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: and-growing, great-of | es: grandes-de, y-creciendo, y-engrandeciéndose | fr: [וגדל], et-croissant, et-grandissant | de: [גדלי], [וגדל], und-growing Gen 26:13; 1Sam 2:26; 2Chr 17:12; Ezek 16:26

גֻּדֶל H1433 Prep-b / N-msc / 2ms (13×)

Greatness, magnitude; of God's power, a king's majesty, or (negatively) the arrogance of the heart.

A noun expressing greatness in scale, power, or dignity. Moses repeatedly invokes the greatness of God—his arm, his mercy, his majesty—when pleading with the LORD (Num 14:19; Deut 3:24; 5:24; 9:26; 11:2; 32:3). Ezekiel uses it of a towering cedar symbolizing royal magnificence (Ezek 31:2, 7, 18). But the word carries a darker edge too: Isaiah twice employs it for the 'greatness of heart' that is really arrogance and insolence (Isa 9:8; 10:12). Spanish 'grandeza' and French equivalents span this full range from divine majesty to human hubris.

greatness, magnitude (13×) Greatness or magnitude, encompassing divine power, royal splendor, and physical enormity—but also, when qualified by 'heart,' the pride and arrogance that overreaches. Moses appeals to God's greatness of mercy (Num 14:19) and power (Deut 3:24; 9:26), while the liturgical declaration of Deuteronomy 32:3 ascribes greatness to God's name. Ezekiel applies it to the towering cedar symbolizing Pharaoh's grandeur (Ezek 31:2, 7, 18). Isaiah 9:8 and 10:12 invert the valence, using 'greatness of heart' to condemn Samaria's and Assyria's insolence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-greatness, Your-greatness, according-to-greatness-of | es: con-tu-grandeza, conforme-a-grandeza-de, en-su-grandeza | fr: Son-greatness, Ton-greatness, [בגדלו] | de: Dein-greatness, Sein-greatness, [בגדלו] Num 14:19; Deut 3:24; Deut 5:24; Deut 9:26; Deut 11:2

גְּדִלִים H1434 N-mp (2×)

tassels, twisted threads — decorative fringes or architectural festoons made by braiding cords

This word describes objects created by twisting or braiding threads, appearing in two distinct contexts: the ritual tassels on garment corners commanded in Deuteronomy, and the decorative festoons adorning the capitals of Solomon's temple columns. The same technique of twisting or braiding cords produced both liturgical reminders (the tassels that would help Israel remember God's commandments) and architectural ornamentation (the elegant festoons wreathing the temple's massive bronze pillars). The term emphasizes the manufacturing technique—plaiting or twisting—whether for sacred symbolism or aesthetic beauty.

(2×) Twisted or braided decorative elements, either ritual tassels or architectural festoons. Deuteronomy 22:12 prescribes tassels on garment corners (parallel to Numbers' tzitzit), while 1 Kings 7:17 describes wreaths or festoons on temple column capitals. Both applications involve cord-twisting technique, but serve different purposes—one liturgical, one ornamental. Translations distinguish context (tassels vs. wreaths) while recognizing the shared manufacturing method of plaiting threads or cords. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tassels, wreaths | es: Flecos, trenzados | fr: tassels, wreaths | de: tassels, wreaths Deut 22:12; 1Kgs 7:17

גִּדֵּל H1435 N-proper-ms (4×)

Giddel, a personal name meaning 'very great,' borne by two heads of postexilic servant families

A proper name derived from the verb gadal ('to make great'), meaning 'he has made great' or 'very great.' It identifies two distinct individuals in the postexilic census lists. The first Giddel heads a family among the Nethinim (temple servants) in Ezra 2:47 and Nehemiah 7:49. The second heads a family among Solomon's servants in Ezra 2:56 and Nehemiah 7:58. The parallel lists in Ezra and Nehemiah confirm both families returned from Babylonian exile.

(4×) The proper name Giddel, identifying heads of two postexilic servant families. The Nethinim family appears in Ezra 2:47 / Neh 7:49; the Solomonic-servant family in Ezra 2:56 / Neh 7:58. German renders it etymologically as 'machte-gross' (made great), revealing the theophoric sense the name likely carried — that God 'made great' the bearer or his line. French and German leave the name untransliterated in brackets, while English and Spanish transliterate as Giddel/Gidel/Guidel, showing variation in how gutturals are handled across languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Giddel | es: Gidel, Guidel, Guidel. | fr: [גדל] | de: machte-gross Ezra 2:47; Ezra 2:56; Neh 7:49; Neh 7:58

גְּדַלְיָה H1436a N-proper-ms (6×)

Gedaliah – 'Yah is great'; name borne by the governor of Judah and several other men

Gedaliah (meaning 'YHWH is great') is a personal name borne by several individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The most prominent is Gedaliah son of Ahikam, whom Nebuchadnezzar appointed governor of Judah after the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 BC (Jer 40-41). His brief governorship and assassination by Ishmael son of Nethaniah triggered the flight to Egypt and is commemorated in the Jewish fast of Tzom Gedaliah. Other bearers include an ancestor of Zephaniah (Zeph 1:1) and a priest of Jeshua's line who had married a foreign wife (Ezra 10:18). German Gedalja, Spanish Gedalias, and French Guedalia all transliterate the name with minor phonological adaptation.

Gedaliah (personal name) (6×) The proper name Gedaliah ('YHWH is great'), principally denoting Gedaliah son of Ahikam, the Babylonian-appointed governor of Judah whose assassination is narrated in Jeremiah 40-41 and whose tragic end precipitated the remnant's flight to Egypt. The same name applies to at least two other biblical figures: an ancestor of Zephaniah (Zeph 1:1) and a priest in Ezra 10:18. Cross-lingual transliterations – Spanish Gedalias, French Guedalia, German Gedalja – show only phonological adaptation, confirming a single onomastic entry with no semantic subdivision. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Gedalyah, Gedalyahu, and-Gedalyah | es: Gedalyah, Gedalías, y-Gedalyah | fr: Guedalia, [וגדליה] | de: Gedalja, und-Gedalja Ezra 10:18; Jer 40:5; Jer 40:6; Jer 40:8; Jer 41:16

גְּדַלְיָהוּ H1436b Conj-w | N-proper-ms (26×)

Gedalyahu — personal name meaning 'Yah(u) is great,' borne by the governor of Judah and other biblical figures.

A theophoric name compounding גָּדַל ('to be great') with the divine name, yielding 'Yahweh is great.' Its most prominent bearer is the governor appointed by Nebuchadnezzar over the remnant in Judah after Jerusalem's destruction (2 Kgs 25:22-25; Jer 39-43), whose assassination precipitated the flight to Egypt. The same name belongs to a son of Pashur among Jerusalem's officials (Jer 38:1) and a Levitical musician descended from Jeduthun (1 Chr 25:3, 9). All 26 occurrences use the longer -yahu suffix form; the shorter גְּדַלְיָה appears elsewhere. Spanish 'Gedalías' and German 'Gedalja' adapt the name phonologically while preserving its identity.

Gedalyahu (proper name) (26×) The proper name Gedalyahu, borne by at least three individuals. The governor of Judah (2 Kgs 25:22-25; Jer 39:14-43:6) accounts for the majority of occurrences; his assassination is commemorated in the Fast of Gedaliah. A second Gedalyahu was a Jerusalemite official in Jeremiah's time (Jer 38:1), and a third served among the Levitical musicians under David (1 Chr 25:3, 9). Cross-language renderings—English 'Gedaliah,' German 'Gedalja'—all transliterate the same Hebrew source. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Gedalyahu | es: Gedalyahu, Gedalías | fr: Guedalia, [גדליהו] | de: Gedalja 2Kgs 25:22; 2Kgs 25:23; 2Kgs 25:24; 2Kgs 25:25

גִּדַּלְתִּי H1437 Prep-l | N-proper-ms (2×)

Giddalti — 'I have magnified (God),' a son of Heman among the temple musicians

Giddalti appears among the remarkable list of Heman's sons in 1 Chronicles 25, names that together form what may be fragments of psalms or liturgical phrases. The name means 'I have magnified' or 'I have made great,' likely with God as the implied object. Like his brothers with their theologically charged names, Giddalti served in the temple music ministry, receiving his assignment by lot as part of David's organization of Levitical worship. Scholars have long noted that the sons of Heman appear to bear names forming a connected prayer or praise sequence.

(2×) A personal name meaning 'I have magnified (God),' belonging to one of Heman's sons appointed to temple music service. Both occurrences in 1 Chronicles 25:4, 29 identify Giddalti and assign him his division among the musicians. The name participates in the unusual pattern where Heman's sons' names may form a liturgical composition. Transliterations preserve the Hebrew form across languages, recognizing its significance as both personal name and theological statement. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Giddalti, for-Giddalti | es: Gidalti, para-Gidalti | fr: [גדלתי], [לגדלתי] | de: [לגדלתי], [גדלתי] 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:29

גָּדַע H1438 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConjPerf-1cs (22×)

To hew down, cut off, chop (Qal/Piel active); to be cut down, be cut off (Niphal passive)

The verb גָּדַע describes the violent severing or felling of something — whether trees, idol poles, horns, or metaphorically an arm or a nation's strength. In its active stems (Qal and Piel), it appears in the Deuteronomic commands to 'cut down' Asherah poles (Deut 7:5, 12:3) and in Zechariah's symbolic act of cutting his shepherd's staff in two (Zech 11:10, 14). The Niphal passive carries overtones of divine judgment: Babylon's mighty one is 'cut down' from heaven (Isa 14:12), and Moab's horn is 'cut off' (Jer 48:25). Spanish 'cortado/cortaré' and French 'couper/abattus' consistently reflect the imagery of forceful severing.

1. cut down, hew off (14×) The Qal and Piel active sense: to cut down, hew off, or chop in pieces. The subject wields destructive force against trees, cultic objects, or metaphorical targets. Deuteronomy commands Israel to 'cut down' the Asherim of the nations (Deut 7:5, 12:3), and faithful kings like Asa and Hezekiah carry this out (2 Chr 14:3, 31:1, 34:4, 7). Zechariah 'cut in two' his staffs named Favor and Union (Zech 11:10, 14). The metaphorical extension appears in 1 Sam 2:31, where God threatens to 'hew off' the arm of Eli's house, and Lam 2:3, where God 'cut off' every horn of Israel. English 'cut-down/cut-off,' Spanish 'cortado/cortaré,' and French conjugations all point to deliberate, forceful action. CUTTING AND SEVERING en: He-cut-down, He-cut-off, I-will-cut-in-two | es: Ha-cortado, Y-corté, cortaré | fr: [גדע], [ויגדע], [ויגדעון] | de: [אגדע], [גדועים], [גדע] Deut 7:5; Deut 12:3; 1Sam 2:31; 2Chr 14:3; 2Chr 31:1

2. be cut down, be cut off (8×) The Niphal passive sense: to be cut down, be hewn off, be destroyed — typically as an image of divine judgment upon the proud or powerful. Isaiah 9:10 declares that sycamores 'have been cut down' but will be replaced with cedars; Isaiah 14:12 asks how Babylon's king 'has been cut down' to the ground — one of the Bible's most dramatic fall-from-heaven images. Jeremiah 48:25 announces that Moab's horn 'is cut off,' and Jer 50:23 laments that the 'hammer of the whole earth' is 'cut down.' The passive forms in Spanish ('fue-cortada/fueron-cortados') and French ('seront-abattus') reinforce the sense of a power greater than the victim executing the judgment. Judges 21:6 uses it of a tribe 'cut off' from Israel, extending the image from physical destruction to communal severance. CUTTING AND SEVERING
en: and-it-will-be-cut-down, and-shall-be-cut-down, and-shall-be-cut-off | es: cortado, fue-cortada, fueron-cortados | fr: couper, et-couper, et-ils-seront-abattus | de: [גדעו], [ונגדעה], [ונגדעון] Judg 21:6; Isa 9:10; Isa 14:12; Isa 22:25; Jer 48:25

גִּדְעוֹן H1439 N-proper-ms (39×)

Gideon — Israelite judge from Manasseh who defeated Midian with 300 men by divine command (Judges 6-8)

A theophoric name meaning 'hewer' or 'one who cuts down,' borne by the fifth major judge of Israel from the clan of Abiezer in Manasseh. Called by the angel of YHWH at the winepress of Ophrah (Judg 6:11), Gideon tore down his father's Baal altar — earning the alternate name Jerubbaal, 'let Baal contend' (Judg 6:32). His famous reduction of 32,000 troops to 300 (Judg 7:7) dramatizes the principle that deliverance belongs to God, not human strength. The name appears 39 times, exclusively in Judges 6-8.

Gideon (proper name) (39×) The proper name of Israel's fifth judge, appearing in all 39 occurrences within Judges 6-8. Multilingual renderings preserve the Hebrew phonology with minimal adaptation — Spanish 'Guidón,' French 'Gédéon,' German and English 'Gideon' — reflecting the name's widespread familiarity through the biblical narrative of the fleece, the 300 warriors, and the rout of Midian. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Gideon | es: Guidón | fr: Gédéon | de: Gideon Judg 6:11; Judg 6:13; Judg 6:19; Judg 6:22

גִּדְעֹם H1440 N-proper-fs (1×)

Gidom (place name marking pursuit boundary)

This location appears only in Judges 20:45 during the civil war between Benjamin and the other tribes. Gidom marked the eastern limit of Israel's pursuit of fleeing Benjamites—a tragic boundary in Israel's bloodiest internal conflict. The name may derive from roots meaning 'cutting' or 'severing,' grimly appropriate for a battle site. The place remains unidentified archaeologically, though its position along the wilderness road from Gibeah suggests a location east of Benjamin's territory.

(1×) A geographical marker in Benjamin's territory (Judges 20:45) where Israel's pursuit of Benjamin ended. All languages transliterate the proper name (Gidom/Guidom), standard for unidentified biblical place names. The military context—a pursuit ending point—may inform the name's meaning, though etymology remains uncertain. This single reference reflects the historical specificity of Judges' civil war narrative. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Gidom | es: Guidom | fr: Gidom | de: Gidom Judg 20:45

גִּדְעֹנִי H1441 N-proper-ms (5×)

Gideoni; a Benjamite, father of Abidan, who served as prince of the tribe of Benjamin during the wilderness wanderings.

A proper masculine name meaning something like 'my hewer' or 'warrior,' borne by a Benjamite whose son Abidan served as the designated prince of Benjamin during the census and camp arrangements in the wilderness. Every occurrence follows the fixed patronymic formula 'Abidan son of Gideoni' (Num 1:11; 2:22; 7:60, 65; 10:24). The name is remarkably consistent across translations —Spanish 'Gedeoni,' French and German 'Gideoni'—reflecting its transparent transliteration. He appears only in the formulaic tribal lists of Numbers, always in connection with his son's leadership role.

(5×) The personal name Gideoni, identifying a Benjamite father of Abidan, the tribal prince of Benjamin during the wilderness period. All five occurrences appear in Numbers within the stereotyped formula 'Abidan son of Gideoni'—at the census (1:11), the camp arrangement (2:22), the tabernacle dedication offerings (7:60, 65), and the marching order (10:24). The name is uniformly transliterated across languages (English and French 'Gideoni,' Spanish 'Gedeoni'), suggesting no semantic ambiguity in the tradition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Gideoni | es: Gedeoni, Gedeoni: | fr: Gideoni | de: Gideoni Num 1:11; Num 2:22; Num 7:60; Num 7:65; Num 10:24

גָּדַף H1442 Conj-w | V-Piel-ConjPerf-2ms (7×)

To blaspheme, revile — speaking with contempt against God or reproaching others (Piel only)

A verb used exclusively in the Piel stem (גִּדֵּף), meaning to revile or blaspheme — to speak with cutting contempt, whether against God or against people. The Arabic cognate ´ ('to cut, cut off') reveals the metaphorical origin: blasphemy as verbal violence that severs the bond of reverence. In Numbers 15:30, the one who acts 'with a high hand' blasphemes the LORD and is cut off from Israel. In 2 Kings 19:22 (= Isa 37:23), Hezekiah quotes God rebuking Sennacherib: 'Whom have you reviled and blasphemed?'

to blaspheme, revile (7×) To revile or blaspheme, speaking contemptuously against God or reproaching fellow humans. In Numbers 15:30, the deliberate sinner 'blasphemes the LORD' (מְגַדֵּף, participial) and must be cut off. Sennacherib's arrogance is condemned with this verb in 2 Kings 19:6, 22 and its parallel Isaiah 37:6, 23, paired with חָרַף ('to reproach'). Between humans, Psalm 44:17 describes the voice of one who 'reproaches and reviles' (מְחָרֵף וּמְגַדֵּף). Ezekiel 20:27 adds a further accusation of blasphemy against God. Spanish blasfemar directly mirrors the theological weight of this term. BLASPHEMY AND SLANDER
en: and-against-whom, and-blaspheme, and-reviles | es: blasfema, blasfemaron, y-blasfemaste | fr: [גדפו], [וגדפת], blasphemed | de: [גדפו], [וגדפת], blasphemed Num 15:30; 2Kgs 19:6; 2Kgs 19:22; Ps 44:16; Isa 37:6

גָּדַר H1443 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConsecImperf-2mp (10×)

To build a wall; to wall in or block a path; to repair a breach – the full lifecycle of stone boundaries.

A Hebrew verb rooted in the physical world of stone and mortar. In its most literal use, it describes the work of masons – the 'wall-builders' who repaired the Temple (2 Kgs 12:13; 22:6). God, however, uses walls figuratively: he 'walls in' Job's path so he cannot pass (Job 19:8), and hedges Gomer's way with thorns (Hos 2:6). The same verb also describes mending what is broken – the 'repairer of the breach' in Isaiah 58:12 and the restoring of David's fallen booth in Amos 9:11. Arabic jadara ('to wall') and Spanish albail ('mason') both point to the concrete construction trade from which the metaphors grow.

1. build a wall (5×) Constructing or erecting a stone wall, including the substantival participle 'wall-builder, mason' as a recognized trade. The Temple masons in 2 Kings 12:13 and 22:6 are called godrim, and Micah 7:11 envisions a day for building walls. Spanish albail and Arabic jadara both anchor this sense in the masonry trade. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: and-I-will-build, and-to-the-masons, and-to-the-wall-builders | es: Y-a-los-albañiles, que-levante, y-a-los-albañiles | fr: [גדר], [וּתגדרו], et-je-fermerai | de: [גדר], [וּתגדרו], und-umzaeunte 2Kgs 12:12; 2Kgs 22:6; Ezek 13:5; Ezek 22:30; Hos 2:6

2. wall in, block, fence in (3×) Blocking or confining someone by walling in their path – a powerful metaphor for divine restriction. God 'walls up' Job's road so he cannot pass (Job 19:8) and hems in the suffering man of Lamentations 3:7, 9. The shift from building to confinement is reflected in Swahili -zuia ('to obstruct') alongside -jenga ('to build'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: He-blocked, He-has-walled-up, He-walled-me-in | es: Ha-cercado, ha-cercado | fr: clôture, גדר | de: umzaeunte Job 19:8; Lam 3:7; Lam 3:9

3. repair a breach (2×) Repairing or closing a breach in an existing wall, restoring what has crumbled. Isaiah's 'repairer of the breach' (58:12) and the closing of gaps in David's fallen booth (Amos 9:11) both use this sense. Spanish reparador and Arabic sadda ('to plug, stop up') highlight the restorative rather than original-construction nuance. RENEW REPAIR RESTORE en: and-I-will-repair, repairer-of | es: reparador-de, y-repararé | fr: clôture, et-je-fermerai | de: [גדר], und-umzaeunte Isa 58:12; Amos 9:11

גָּדֵר H1444 N-fsc (2×)

wall, fence — an enclosing barrier of stone or other materials marking boundaries or providing protection

This common word for wall or fence describes various kinds of enclosing barriers: roadside walls (as in Balaam's narrow path), vineyard walls (in Isaiah's parable), city fortifications, and property boundaries. The wall serves protective and delimiting functions, marking what belongs to whom and providing security. Isaiah's prophetic image of removing the vineyard's wall—leaving it vulnerable to wild animals—powerfully communicates God's withdrawal of protection. Proverbs uses the broken-down wall as a figure for the consequences of negligence. The word emphasizes the wall's function as boundary and barrier rather than its construction materials.

(2×) An enclosing wall or fence serving protective or boundary-marking purposes. Proverbs 24:31 describes the broken-down wall of a neglected vineyard, while Ezekiel 42:10 (textually difficult) may refer to walls in the temple complex. The term encompasses various barrier types—field walls, vineyard enclosures, property boundaries—all sharing the function of delimiting and protecting space. Translations consistently use 'wall' or 'fence,' recognizing the structure's primary purpose of enclosure and separation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-wall-of, wall-of | es: muro-de, y-su-cerca-de | fr: et-גדר, mur | de: [גדר], [וגדר] Prov 24:31; Ezek 42:10

גֶּדֶר H1445 N-proper-fs (1×)

Geder (Canaanite city conquered by Joshua)

Listed among Joshua's thirty-one defeated Canaanite kings in Joshua 12:13, Geder represents one of many small city-states that controlled pre-conquest Canaan. Its location remains debated, though some scholars connect it with Beth-geder in 1 Chronicles 2:51 or with the gentilicadjective 'Gederite' found elsewhere. The Greek Septuagint renders it Gader, and Eusebius mentions it in his Onomasticon, suggesting it was known in later periods. The name likely derives from roots meaning 'wall' or 'enclosure,' common for fortified settlements.

(1×) A Canaanite city-state conquered during Joshua's southern campaign (Joshua 12:13), location uncertain but possibly in Judah's Shephelah region. All translations preserve the proper name through transliteration (Geder), following standard geographic naming conventions. The conquest list context emphasizes Israel's comprehensive defeat of Canaanite political structures rather than providing detailed geographical information. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Geder | es: Geder | fr: Geder | de: Geder Josh 12:13

גְּדוֹר H1446 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (7×)

Gedor — a town in Judah's hill country and a proper name in Benjamite and Judahite genealogies

A proper name (גְּדֹר / גְּדוֹר) related to the Arabic جدار ('wall'), suggesting a walled settlement. It designates both a place and persons. As a town, Gedor appears among the cities of Judah's hill country (Josh 15:58). In the Chronicler's genealogies, Gedor is listed as a 'son' of Penuel (1 Chr 4:4) and of Jered (1 Chr 4:18) — likely eponymous founders of the town. A Benjamite named Gedor of Gibeon also appears (1 Chr 8:31; 9:37). In 1 Chronicles 4:39 the text reads Gedor, though many scholars emend to Gerar.

Gedor (proper name, place/person) (7×) The proper name Gedor, functioning as both a toponym and a personal name. As a place: a town in Judah's hill country (Josh 15:58), possibly also the location mentioned in 1 Chronicles 4:39 (though LXX and many scholars read 'Gerar'). As personal names in Chronicler genealogies: a descendant of Judah through Penuel (1 Chr 4:4) and Jered (1 Chr 4:18), likely eponymous ancestors of the town. A Benjamite named Gedor appears at Gibeon (1 Chr 8:31; 9:37). The Arabic cognate جدار ('wall') suits a fortified settlement in the Judean highlands. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Gedor, and-Gedor, the-Gedor | es: Guedor, Y-Guedor, el-Guedor | fr: [גדור], [גדר], [הגדור] | de: [גדור], [גדר], [הגדור] Josh 15:58; 1Chr 4:4; 1Chr 4:18; 1Chr 4:39; 1Chr 8:31

גָּדֵר H1447 Conj-w / N-ms (11×)

Wall, fence, stone enclosure — a boundary barrier around vineyards, fields, or settlements

The noun גָּדֵר (gader) denotes a stone wall, fence, or enclosure serving as a protective boundary. Its occurrences paint a vivid picture: Balaam's donkey is crushed against a vineyard wall (Num 22:24), God breaks down Israel's vineyard walls in judgment (Ps 80:12; Isa 5:5), a tottering fence images someone about to be toppled (Ps 62:3), and Ezekiel twice laments that no one has stood in the breach to build a wall for the house of Israel (Ezek 13:5; 22:30). Ezra thanks God for giving Judah a 'wall' of protection in the holy land (Ezra 9:9). Spanish renders it 'muro/cerca/pared,' Hindi दीवार.

wall, fence, enclosure (11×) A stone wall, fence, or low enclosure built as a boundary or barrier, particularly around agricultural land. Appears in both literal and metaphorical contexts: the narrow-path wall that traps Balaam's donkey (Num 22:24), vineyard walls God tears down in judgment (Ps 80:12; Isa 5:5), the protective 'wall' God grants in the restored land (Ezra 9:9), a tottering fence as a figure of vulnerability (Ps 62:3), and the breach in Israel's spiritual defenses that needs a builder (Ezek 13:5; 22:30). Micah 7:11 promises a day when walls will be rebuilt. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-fence, a-wall, and-wall | es: Y-muro, cerca, cercas-de-ella | fr: [גדר], [גדרו], et-haie | de: Mauer, [גדר], [גדרו] Num 22:24; Ezra 9:9; Ps 62:3; Ps 80:12

גְּדֵרָה H1448 Conj-w / N-fpc (11×)

Wall, fence, hedge; sheepfold or livestock pen; also a proper noun (Gederah), a town in Judah

A feminine noun built from the root g-d-r (to wall up, enclose). In its most concrete use, it denotes the stone-walled sheepfolds where Israelite flocks sheltered overnight – Numbers 32 mentions these pens repeatedly as the Reubenites and Gadites settle the Transjordan (32:16, 24, 36). Nahum 3:17 pictures grasshoppers alighting on walls during cold, while Psalm 89:40 laments that God has broken down the king's defensive walls. The same word appears once as Gederah, a town in the Shephelah of Judah (1 Chr 4:23), preserving the etymological connection between 'enclosure' and place name.

1. sheepfold, pen (5×) A sheepfold or livestock pen – a walled enclosure for sheltering flocks. Dominates in Numbers 32 (vv. 16, 24, 36) where the Transjordanian tribes build folds for their abundant livestock before crossing into Canaan. Spanish 'corrales' and French 'pens' consistently mark this as an animal enclosure. Also in 1 Samuel 24:3 where Saul enters a cave near the sheepfolds, and Zephaniah 2:6 where the coastland becomes pasture with shepherd's folds. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-folds-for, and-pens, and-pens-of | es: corrales-de, y-corrales, y-corrales-de | fr: et-haie, et-pens, et-pens-de | de: [וגדרות], folds-von, pens-von Num 32:16; Num 32:24; Num 32:36; 1Sam 24:3; Zeph 2:6

2. wall, fence, hedge (5×) A wall, fence, or hedge functioning as boundary or defense. Psalm 89:40 uses the plural with possessive suffix ('his walls') to lament God's dismantling of royal defenses. Nahum 3:17 pictures Nineveh's officials as grasshoppers on hedges in cold weather. Jeremiah 49:3 speaks of wandering among walls. Spanish shifts to 'cercas' (fences) and 'muro' (wall), and French to 'haie' (hedge), distinguishing this from the livestock sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: among-the-walls, her-wall, his-walls | es: cercas-de-el, el-muro, en-los-muros | fr: [בגדרות], haie | de: [בגדרות], [גדרה], [הגדרת] Ps 89:40; Jer 49:3; Ezek 42:12; Hos 2:6; Nah 3:17

3. Gederah (proper noun) (1×) Gederah as a proper noun – a town in the Shephelah (lowland) of Judah, mentioned in 1 Chronicles 4:23 among settlements where potters dwelt in royal service. Spanish 'Guedera' and English 'Gederah' transliterate the name, preserving the etymological link to 'enclosure' – the town likely named for its walled character. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Gederah | es: y-Guedera | fr: [וגדרה] | de: [וגדרה] 1Chr 4:23

גְּדֵרָה H1449 Conj-w (1×)

Gederah (town in Judah's Shephelah)

This settlement appears with the definite article in Joshua 15:36 as 'the Gederah,' suggesting it was a well-known place in Judah's lowland district. The town list context groups it with other Shephelah cities in the western foothills between the mountains and coastal plain. Some Greek manuscripts question its inclusion, noting numerical discrepancies in the list, but Hebrew tradition maintains it. The name derives from 'wall' or 'sheepfold,' indicating either fortification or pastoral economy. It may be the same place mentioned in connection with David's mighty men and Hezekiah's porters.

(1×) A town in Judah's Shephelah region (Joshua 15:36), appearing with the conjunction 'and-the-Gederah' in the territorial list. Spanish 'Gederá' and French 'Gederah' preserve the proper name, while English and German include the definite article, reflecting the Hebrew form. The Shephelah context suggests a fortified settlement in the agricultural lowlands between mountain and coast. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-Gederah | es: y-Gederá | fr: et-le-Gederah | de: und-der-Gederah Josh 15:36

גְּדֵרוֹת H1450 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Gederoth — a town in the Judean Shephelah, part of the lowland district allotment

Gederoth appears as one of the towns in Judah's lowland (Shephelah) territory in Joshua's allocation, and later as a city captured by Philistines during Ahaz's disastrous reign. The name means 'walls' or 'sheepfolds,' suggesting it was a fortified settlement or pastoral center. Its appearance with the definite article in Chronicles may indicate it was known by this descriptive designation. Located in the strategic buffer zone between Judah's highlands and Philistine coastal territory, Gederoth's loss to the Philistines symbolized Judah's weakness under unfaithful leadership.

(2×) A place name designating a Judean town in the Shephelah region. Joshua 15:41 lists it in the original territorial allotment, while 2 Chronicles 28:18 records its capture by Philistines during Ahaz's reign. The name, related to 'walls' or 'enclosures,' may describe the town's character as a fortified or pastoral settlement. Variant forms (with or without the article) appear in different texts, typical of place-name transmission. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Gederoth, the-Gederot | es: Guederot, y-Gederot | fr: [הגדרות], et-Gederoth | de: [הגדרות], und-Gederoth Josh 15:41; 2Chr 28:18

גְּדֵרִי H1451 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Gederite (gentilicial adjective from Geder)

This ethnic or geographical designation appears in 1 Chronicles 27:28, identifying an official in David's administration. The gentilicial form indicates origin from the city Geder (see H1445), though scholars debate whether it refers to that conquest-list city or to Gederah in Judah. The Greek Septuagint readings (Gedoreiths, Geddoriths) reflect uncertainty about the underlying place name. Such geographical identifiers were common in administrative lists, helping distinguish individuals with identical personal names—essential in royal bureaucracies.

(1×) A gentilicial designation meaning 'one from Geder' in 1 Chronicles 27:28, identifying a Davidic official. English 'the Gederite' and Spanish 'el gederita' follow standard patterns for forming ethnic/geographical adjectives. French and German preserve the Hebrew form, perhaps acknowledging the textual uncertainty about which 'Geder' is meant. The administrative context requires specific geographical identification. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Gederite | es: el-gederita | fr: [הגדרי] | de: [הגדרי] 1Chr 27:28

גְּדֵרָתִי H1452 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Gederathite (gentilicial adjective from Gederah)

Another geographical identifier, this one appearing in 1 Chronicles 12:4 (English 12:5), where it designates one of David's early supporters at Ziklag. The form derives from Gederah rather than Geder, distinguished by an additional syllable. These Ziklag warriors joined David when he was still a fugitive from Saul, representing cross-tribal support that presaged his eventual kingship. The gentilicial precision in Chronicles reflects that work's interest in genealogical and geographical accuracy, preserving clan and regional identities even centuries after the events.

(1×) Meaning 'one from Gederah,' this designation appears in 1 Chronicles 12:5 identifying one of David's early warriors. English 'the Gederathite' and Spanish 'el guederatita' use standard gentilicial forms, while French and German preserve the Hebrew, acknowledging the specialized nature of such adjectives. The Ziklag context emphasizes the geographical diversity of David's initial coalition. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Gederathite | es: el-guederatita | fr: [הגדרתי] | de: [הגדרתי] 1Chr 12:5

גְּדֵרֹתַיִם H1453 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Gederotayim (dual form: 'two Gederoths' or 'double sheepfold')

This peculiar dual-form place name appears in the same Joshua 15:36 list as Gederah, immediately following it. The dual ending suggests either two settlements bearing the Gederah name or a single place characterized by paired features (two sheepfolds, two walls). The Greek Septuagint omits it, and some modern scholars propose deleting it to resolve the verse's numerical problems (the total count exceeds the stated number). If original, it represents the dual morphology occasionally found in Hebrew place names, often indicating paired geographical features.

(1×) A place name in Judah's Shephelah (Joshua 15:36), possibly meaning 'two Gederoths' or 'double enclosure.' All languages transliterate the proper name (Gederotayim/Gederotaim), though Greek manuscript tradition questioned its originality. The dual form is morphologically interesting but semantically uncertain—it might indicate twin settlements, paired sheepfolds, or simply a variant spelling. Textual critics debate its authenticity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Gederotayim | es: y-Gederotaim | fr: et-Gederotayim | de: und-Gederotayim Josh 15:36

גֶּה H1454 Adv (1×)

textual error for 'this' (זֶה misread as גֶּה)

Ezekiel 47:13 contains what virtually all scholars recognize as a scribal error. The received Hebrew text reads an otherwise unknown word (geh), but ancient versions and all modern translations correct it to zeh ('this'), which makes perfect sense in context: 'This is the boundary by which you shall divide the land.' The confusion likely arose from visual similarity between the Hebrew letters zayin and gimel in certain script styles. Such textual corrections, supported by unanimous versional evidence, demonstrate the value of comparative text criticism.

(1×) A scribal error in Ezekiel 47:13 where the Hebrew consonants were misread. The correct reading is זֶה 'this,' supported by Greek Septuagint, Targum, Vulgate, and all modern scholars. English 'this' and Spanish 'este' represent the corrected text, while French 'erreur' explicitly labels it an error. BDB's entry exists solely to guide readers away from the mistaken form toward the correct reading. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: this | es: este | fr: erreur | de: [גזה] Ezek 47:13

גָּהָה H1455 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)

to heal, cure, be cured (of wounds)

This rare verb appears only in Hosea 5:13, where it describes the failure of political solutions to heal Judah's 'wound.' The root conveys being freed from pain or disease, with Aramaic cognates supporting the healing sense. Hosea's metaphor is pointed: just as physical wounds require proper treatment, so Israel's spiritual-political crisis cannot be cured by Assyrian intervention. The negative context ('will not cure') emphasizes the futility of trusting foreign powers rather than returning to Yahweh, the true healer.

(1×) To cure or heal a wound, used metaphorically in Hosea 5:13 for political healing. The prophet declares that foreign alliances 'will not cure' Israel's malady. English 'cure,' Spanish 'curará,' and French 'guérir' all employ standard medical vocabulary, confirming the therapeutic sense. The Aramaic cognate background (אִתְגְּהִי 'be freed from disease') supports BDB's semantic analysis of deliverance from affliction. HEALING ACTIVITY

en: will-cure | es: curará | fr: guérir | de: [יגהה] Hos 5:13

גֵּהָה H1456 N-fs (1×)

healing, cure, remedy

Found only in Proverbs 17:22, this noun appears in one of wisdom literature's most memorable health proverbs: 'A joyful heart makes for good healing' (or 'is good medicine'). The saying contrasts emotional states' physical effects—joy promotes healing while depression harms the bones. The word derives from the verbal root meaning to cure or be freed from disease, here nominalized to express the healing process or its result. This psychosomatic wisdom anticipates modern understanding of emotional health's impact on physical wellbeing.

(1×) Healing or cure in Proverbs 17:22's wisdom saying about joy's therapeutic power. English 'healing,' Spanish 'medicina' (medicine), and German 'Heilung' (healing) all capture the medical/therapeutic sphere. French preserves the Hebrew form, perhaps acknowledging its rarity. The context links emotional disposition (joyful heart) to physical health outcomes, a sophisticated insight for ancient wisdom literature. HEALING AND RESTORATION

en: healing | es: medicina | fr: גהה | de: Heilung Prov 17:22

גָּהַר H1457 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (3×)

to crouch, bend down, stretch out—bowing the body in intercession or revival

This rare verb describes the physical posture of crouching or bending down over something. Elijah crouched to the ground with his face between his knees while praying for rain (1 Kgs 18:42). Elisha stretched himself out over the Shunammite's dead son—twice—in the act of reviving him (2 Kgs 4:34-35). The verb captures intense physical engagement in prophetic intercession or miracle-working. It suggests more than casual bending: a deliberate, focused posture of spiritual labor, whether in fervent prayer or resurrection ministry.

(3×) To bend down, crouch, or stretch out the body in prophetic intercession or miracle-working. In 1 Kings 18:42, Elijah crouched to the ground (with 'to the earth') in prayer for rain. In 2 Kings 4:34-35, Elisha stretched himself out over the dead child (with 'over him'), parallel to 'lay upon' in verse 34. Cross-linguistic glosses show two interpretations: English and Spanish use both 'crouched' and 'stretched out,' while French and German prefer 'stretched out/extended.' The contexts support both: crouching in prayer (Elijah) and extending the body over someone (Elisha's revival posture). GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-crouched, and-stretched-out | es: y-se-inclinó, y-se-tendió | fr: et-crouched, et-étendit-dehors | de: und-crouched, und-streckte-aus-heraus 1Kgs 18:42; 2Kgs 4:34; 2Kgs 4:35

גַּו H1458 N-msc / 2ms (3×)

the back—the human back, used figuratively for rejection and disregard

This noun for the human back appears only in the phrase 'cast behind the back,' a vivid metaphor for rejection and willful disregard. In 1 Kings 14:9, Jeroboam has cast God himself behind his back. In Ezekiel 23:35, Jerusalem has cast God behind her back. In Nehemiah 9:26, rebellious Israel cast God's law behind their backs. The image is powerful: turning one's back on someone, putting them out of sight and mind, treating them as irrelevant or forgotten. It is the physical expression of spiritual abandonment.

(3×) The back of the body, used exclusively in the idiomatic phrase 'cast behind the back' to express rejection or disregard. All three occurrences follow the pattern: 'cast (hishlikh) behind (aḥare) your/their back (gaw).' The objects cast behind the back are: God himself (1 Kgs 14:9, Ezek 23:35) and God's law (Neh 9:26). Cross-linguistic evidence is consistent: English 'your back/their back,' Spanish 'tu espalda/espalda de ellos,' French 'ton en arrière/dos,' German 'dein zurück.' The possessive suffixes (-ka, -m) indicate whose back is turning away. This is figurative language for contemptuous rejection. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: their-back, your-back | es: espalda-de-ellos, espalda-de-ti, tu-espalda | fr: [גום], dos, ton-en-arrière | de: [גרך], [גום], dein-zurueck 1Kgs 14:9; Neh 9:26; Ezek 23:35

גַּו H1459 Prep / N-msc (13×)

Aramaic noun for 'midst, interior'; used prepositionally (with b-, l-, min-) to express location within or motion into midst, within, into (13×) Denotes spatial interiority or containment, always governed by a preposition. With beth it marks static location ('in the midst of,' Dan 3:25; Ezra 5:7), with lamed it marks directional motion into a space ('into,' Dan 3:6, 11, 15), and with min it marks movement out from within ('from the midst of,' Dan 3:26). Translation evidence across languages converges on a single spatial-relational concept: eng 'in-midst-of,' spa dentro-de, fra milieu. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

An Aramaic noun meaning 'midst' or 'interior,' occurring exclusively in Daniel and Ezra. It never stands alone but always combines with a preposition: b-go ('in the midst of'), l-go ('into'), or min-go ('out of'). The fiery furnace narrative in Daniel 3 accounts for most occurrences, where the phrase b-go nura ('in the midst of the fire') becomes a recurring refrain. Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly render spatial interiority: Spanish dentro-de, French milieu, German Inneres. The cognate form appears in Syriac and Nabataean Aramaic, pointing to a common Aramaic spatial term.

en: in-it, in-midst-of, in-midst-of- | es: dentro-de, dentro-del, en-medio-de | fr: intérieur, milieu | de: Inneres, [בגוה] Ezra 4:15; Ezra 5:7; Ezra 6:2; Dan 3:6; Dan 3:11

גֵּו H1460a N-msc / 1cs (6×)

gev – the back (of a person); the body part that receives blows or burdens

The noun gev refers to the human back – the dorsal part of the body. In Proverbs it appears three times in the proverbial formula 'a rod for the back of the fool' (Prov 10:13; 19:29; 26:3), where the back is the target of disciplinary beating. Isaiah 50:6 uses it in the Servant Song: 'I gave my back to the smiters,' depicting willing submission to suffering. A striking figurative use occurs in Isaiah 38:17, where Hezekiah says God has cast all his sins 'behind your back' – out of sight and memory. Isaiah 51:23 describes conquerors making the backs of the subjugated into a road. The German rendering Volk ('people') appears to confuse this gev with goy, but Spanish espalda ('back') and English 'back' consistently capture the anatomical sense.

back (body part) (6×) The back of a person's body, used both literally (as the part struck with a rod or lash) and figuratively (as the surface trodden upon, or as something hidden 'behind'). The three Proverbs passages (10:13; 19:29; 26:3) establish the concrete sense of the back as receiving corporal punishment. Isaiah 50:6 extends this to the Servant's willing suffering, while Isa 38:17 deploys the idiom of casting sins 'behind your back' to signify divine forgiveness. Spanish espalda confirms the consistent anatomical meaning across all six occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: My-back, Your-back, for-back-of | es: Mi-espalda, para-espalda-de, para-la-espalda-de | fr: [גוי], [גוף], à-corps | de: Volk, [גוף], [לגו] Prov 10:13; Prov 19:29; Prov 26:3; Isa 38:17; Isa 50:6

גֵּו H1460b N-ms (1×)

midst, middle, interior (Aramaism)

Job 30:5 employs this Aramaic-influenced noun in describing social outcasts: 'from the midst they are driven.' The word represents an Aramaism in biblical Hebrew, sharing forms with Aramaic, Syriac, and Arabic terms for 'middle' or 'interior.' Some translations render it 'community' or 'society,' emphasizing social rather than spatial position. Job's archaic language frequently preserves such rare or borrowed terms, contributing to the book's linguistic distinctiveness. The phrase echoes Cicero's Latin expression 'driven from the midst,' suggesting a common ancient metaphor for social expulsion.

(1×) The midst or interior, here meaning the community of people in Job 30:5. The outcasts are 'driven from the midst (of society).' English 'midst,' Spanish 'comunidad' (community), and French 'corps' (body/group) variously interpret whether the term is spatial or social. The Aramaic background (ڬ 'middle, interior, belly') confirms the root meaning, though context determines whether it's physical space or social sphere. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: midst | es: comunidad | fr: corps | de: [גו] Job 30:5

גּוּב H1461 Conj-w (1×)

to dig, plough; farmers, ploughmen

The Ketiv (written text) of 2 Kings 25:12 contains a participial form meaning 'diggers' or 'ploughmen,' referring to agricultural workers left in the land after the Babylonian deportation. However, the Qere (reading tradition) and the parallel passage in Jeremiah 52:16 have a different form. The Arabic cognate (ڜ 'pierce, bore, hollow out') supports the digging/plowing sense. This textual variation illustrates how the Masoretes preserved both written and oral traditions even when they diverged, leaving final decisions to readers and translators.

(1×) Agricultural workers, diggers or ploughmen, in 2 Kings 25:12's account of the poor left in Judah. The multilingual glosses 'farmers' (English, Spanish, French, German) reflect the occupational sense rather than translating the verbal root directly. The context contrasts these agricultural laborers with the skilled workers and elites deported to Babylon, emphasizing that Nebuchadnezzar left only the poorest to work the land. DIGGING AND EXCAVATING

en: and-for-farmers | es: y-para-labradores | fr: et-pour-farmers | de: und-fuer-farmers 2Kgs 25:12

גּוֹב H1462a Prep-k / N-msc (1×)

locusts, swarm (type of grasshopper)

Nahum 3:17 employs this rare locust term in describing the multitude of Assyrian officials: 'like a swarm of locusts.' Hebrew has multiple words for locusts and grasshoppers, each perhaps denoting different species or life stages. This particular term emphasizes the swarming behavior—the massive numbers that characterize locust plagues. The comparison to Assyria's bureaucrats is apt: numerous, consuming, and ultimately transient. When the sun rises, they flee, leaving nothing behind—a prophecy of Nineveh's sudden collapse.

(1×) A swarm of locusts in Nahum 3:17, used metaphorically for Assyrian officials. English 'swarm of' and Spanish 'enjambre de' (swarm of) emphasize the collective noun aspect, while French 'sauterelle' (locust/grasshopper) focuses on the species. The comparison exploits locusts' characteristic behavior: vast numbers, voracious consumption, and sudden disappearance when conditions change—all apt for describing a doomed empire's administration. FLOCK HERD LIVESTOCK

en: like-a-swarm-of | es: como-enjambre-de | fr: sauterelle | de: [כגוב] Nah 3:17

גֵּבִי H1462b N-mp (2×)

locusts, locust swarm — flying insects in devastating collective multitudes

This term for locusts emphasizes their collective nature—a swarm, horde, or multitude rather than individual insects. Amos sees a vision of locust-swarms as God's judgment on Israel, while Nahum compares Assyria's disappearing officials to locusts that vanish when the sun rises. The word may derive from roots suggesting multitude or swarming, fitting the terrifying reality of locust plagues that could darken the sky and devour every green thing. As a symbol of divine judgment, unstoppable consumption, and sudden disappearance, the locust swarm was a potent image in prophetic literature.

(2×) Collective swarms of locusts used as instruments or symbols of judgment. Amos 7:1 presents locust-swarms as a vision of God's judgment on Israel, while Nahum 3:17 compares Assyrian officials to locust swarms that flee when the sun appears. The term emphasizes the collective, overwhelming nature of locust plagues rather than individual insects. Translations (locusts, langostas) capture the destructive multitude that made locusts a standard biblical metaphor for consuming judgment. WILDERNESS AND DESERT

en: locusts | es: langostas | fr: toit | de: [גבי] Amos 7:1; Nah 3:17

גּוֹג H1463 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (10×)

Gog — proper name: (1) a Reubenite in 1 Chronicles; (2) the eschatological enemy from Magog in Ezekiel 38-39

Gog (גּוֹג) is a proper name with two referents. In 1 Chronicles 5:4, Gog appears as a descendant of Reuben in a genealogical list. Far more significantly, Ezekiel 38-39 portrays Gog of the land of Magog as a mighty eschatological adversary whom God summons from the remote north to attack a restored Israel, only to be catastrophically defeated by divine intervention — fire, hailstones, pestilence, and an earthquake. This Gog becomes the archetype of the final enemy of God's people, echoed in Revelation 20:8. The name's etymology is debated; some connect it to Gyges of Lydia (Akkadian Gugu). Spanish and English both transliterate as 'Gog.'

Gog (10×) A proper name identifying: (a) a descendant of Reuben in the Chronicler's genealogy (1 Chr 5:4), and (b) the eschatological ruler 'of the land of Magog, chief prince of Meshech and Tubal' (Ezek 38:2-3), who leads a vast coalition from the far north against restored Israel, only to be destroyed by God's direct intervention (Ezek 38:18-23; 39:1-15). The Ezekielian figure becomes paradigmatic for the final enemy of God's people, reappearing in Revelation 20:8. Some identify the name with Gyges of Lydia (7th c. BCE). Spanish 'Gog' and French 'Gog' preserve the form unchanged. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Gog, to-Gog | es: Gog, Gog„ Gog. | fr: Gog, [גוג], contre-Gog | de: Gog, zu-Gog 1Chr 5:4; Ezek 38:2; Ezek 38:3; Ezek 38:14; Ezek 38:16

גּוּד H1464 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms / 3mse (3×)
to raid, attack, invade—military assault or incursion
This verb describes military raiding or attacking. It appears most notably in Genesis 49:19, in Jacob's blessing over Gad, with wordplay on the tribal name: 'Gad, a troop shall troop upon him, but he shall troop upon their heel' (attacking them in retreat). The alliteration in Hebrew (gad gedud yegudenu wehu yagud aqeb) is striking. In Habakkuk 3:16, it refers to an enemy who will attack 'us.' The verb may be denominative from gedud ('raiding band'), suggesting the action of a raiding party—swift, aggressive incursion rather than formal siege warfare.

(3×) To raid, attack, or invade militarily. Genesis 49:19 uses it three times with wordplay: 'a troop shall raid him (yegudennu), but he shall raid (yagud) their heel.' Habakkuk 3:16 speaks of a people who will attack 'us' (yegudennu). Cross-linguistic glosses vary: English 'shall raid/shall raid him/who attacks us,' Spanish 'asaltará/lo asaltará/que lo atacará,' French and German use 'raid/bedrängt' forms. The verb conveys sudden military assault rather than sustained siege. Some scholars derive it from the noun gedud ('raiding band'), making this a denominative verb meaning 'to conduct a raid.' PLACING AND LAYING
en: shall-raid, shall-raid-him, who-attacks-us | es: asaltará, lo-asaltará, que-lo-atacará | fr: –raid, –raid-lui, envahir | de: [גודנו], bedrängt, bedrängt-ihn Gen 49:19; Hab 3:16

גֵּוָה H1465 Prep-m / N-fs (1×)
back, body (external surface of torso)
Job 20:25 presents a contested anatomical term. The verse describes an arrow being extracted 'from the back,' completing the image of a fleeing warrior struck from behind. However, ancient versions (Septuagint, Thes, De) understood it as 'body' more generally. Hoffmann proposed a slight textual emendation. The root meaning involves the external surface or back side of the torso. This lexical ambiguity reflects ancient anatomical vocabulary's lack of the precision modern medicine requires. Context—a weapon's extraction—clarifies that it's the arrow's exit point from the body.

(1×) The back or external surface of the body in Job 20:25, from which a struck arrow is extracted. English 'body' and Spanish 'cuerpo' (body) interpret broadly, while French and German preserve the Hebrew consonants, acknowledging lexical difficulty. The military context (fleeing, struck, arrow withdrawn) suggests the back specifically, as warriors struck while running would be hit from behind. Ancient versions vary between 'back' and general 'body.' BODY (PHYSICAL FORM)
en: from-his-body | es: del-cuerpo | fr: de-מגרה | de: [מגרה] Job 20:25

גֵּוָה H1466 Conj-w / N-fs (3×)
pride, exaltation—arrogant self-elevation or a cry of 'lift up!'
This feminine noun, a contracted form of ga'awah, means pride or lifting up. In Job 33:17, God acts to turn humans from their deeds and conceal pride. In Jeremiah 13:17, the prophet's soul weeps for the people's pride. Job 22:29 is disputed: it may be an exclamation 'Up!' (exhorting lifting up), or it may mean pride that God will humble. The word derives from roots of elevation and exaltation, carrying both neutral (lifting up) and negative (arrogant pride) connotations depending on context.

(3×) Pride, arrogant elevation, or possibly a cry of exaltation. In Job 33:17 and Jeremiah 13:17, it clearly means pride that must be hidden or lamented. Job 22:29 is debated: some translations read it as an exclamation 'Lift up!' while others (BDB notes Driver) interpret it as pride. Cross-linguistic evidence shows: English 'pride/lift up,' Spanish 'soberbia/orgullo' (pride) versus '¡Altivez!' (exclamation), French and German use placeholder brackets, indicating textual difficulty. The root suggests elevation, but context determines whether this is neutral (being lifted) or negative (arrogant self-exaltation). The Aramaic cognate appears in Daniel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-pride, lift-up, pride | es: Altivez!, soberbia, y-orgullo | fr: [גרה], et-וגרה, גרה | de: [גרה], [וגרה] Job 22:29; Job 33:17; Jer 13:17

גַּוָּה H1467 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)
pride, arrogance (in pride)
This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel 4:37 (4:34 in BDB's Aramaic numbering) in Nebuchadnezzar's climactic confession. After his humbling period of madness, the king acknowledges that God 'is able to humble those who walk in pride.' The Aramaic form corresponds to Hebrew ge'ah (pride, arrogance), showing the regular dialect relationship. The context makes pride's negative quality explicit: it provokes divine humiliation. Nebuchadnezzar's testimony becomes biblical literature's most dramatic example of pride preceding a fall—and subsequent repentance.

(1×) Arrogant pride in Daniel 4:37, the spiritual disease Nebuchadnezzar confesses after his humiliation and restoration. English 'pride,' Spanish 'soberbia' (arrogance/pride), and the prepositional phrase 'in pride' all capture the moral negativity. French 'exil' (exile) may reflect a different textual understanding or translation tradition. The theological point is clear: God opposes the proud and humbles those who walk in self-exaltation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-pride | es: con-soberbia | fr: exil | de: [בגרה] Dan 4:37

גּוּז H1468 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (2×)
pass away, pass over — to move across space or fade from existence; to drive or bring across
This verb captures movement in two directions: the wind's transitive action of driving quails across from the sea to Israel's camp, and the intransitive passing of human life as it flies away. The root appears in both Numbers (where wind brings quails over) and Psalms (where life passes quickly away). Arabic cognates emphasize crossing or passing by, while Aramaic relatives speak of passing away or failing. The verb's dual capacity—for both spatial crossing and temporal passing—makes it apt for describing both divine provision (quails driven across) and human mortality (life flying past).

(2×) To pass over, across, or away, with both transitive and intransitive uses. Numbers 11:31 describes wind driving quails over from the sea (transitive: brought across), while Psalm 90:10 speaks of life passing swiftly away (intransitive: it passes). The verb captures movement and transition—whether spatial (crossing a boundary) or temporal (time passing). Translations diverge based on context: 'drove/brought' for the wind's action, 'passes' for life's fleeting nature. DEPARTING AND PASSING
en: and-drove, it-passes | es: pasa, y-trajo | fr: et-drove, tondre | de: es-passes, und-vertrieb Num 11:31; Ps 90:10

גּוֹזָל H1469 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)
young bird, fledgling — nestlings or recently hatched birds, especially of pigeons or eagles
This tender word describes baby birds, appearing in contexts of care and vulnerability. In Genesis 15, Abraham's covenant sacrifice includes 'a young pigeon' alongside a turtledove, while Deuteronomy 32 uses 'eaglets' in Moses's soaring metaphor of God's protective care—like an eagle hovering over its young, stirring them to flight yet ready to catch them. The imagery emphasizes both the fragility of the young and the fierce protective instinct they evoke. The same word serves ritual purposes (covenant sacrifice) and poetic purposes (God's nurturing relationship with Israel).

(2×) Young birds, fledglings, or nestlings of various species. Genesis 15:9 specifies a young pigeon for covenant sacrifice, while Deuteronomy 32:11 uses 'its young' (eaglets) in an extended metaphor of God's care for Israel. The term emphasizes youth and vulnerability, appropriate both for sacrificial specifications (requiring unblemished young animals) and for imagery of divine protection. Translations vary with context (young pigeon, polluelos, eaglets) but maintain the focus on bird offspring. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: and-a-young-pigeon, its-young | es: sus-polluelos, y-palomino | fr: et-un-jeune-pigeon, son-jeune | de: sein-jung, und-eine-junge-Taube Gen 15:9; Deut 32:11

גּוֹזָן H1470 N-proper-fs (5×)

Gozan; a city and district in Mesopotamia on the river Habor, where exiled Israelites were deported by Assyria.

A place name identifying a city and region in upper Mesopotamia, corresponding to Assyrian Guzana, located along the river Habor (modern Tell Halaf in northeastern Syria). It appears in two historical contexts: as the destination of Israelite deportees after the fall of Samaria in 722 BC (2 Kgs 17:6; 18:11; 1 Chr 5:26), and among the nations whose gods could not save them from Assyria, cited as a warning to Jerusalem (2 Kgs 19:12 = Isa 37:12). The name is uniformly transliterated across all major translations—English, Spanish, French, and German all render it 'Gozan.'

(5×) The geographic name Gozan, a Mesopotamian city and district on the river Habor where exiled northern Israelites were resettled by Assyrian conquest. In 2 Kgs 17:6 and 18:11 it names the deportation destination ('the river of Gozan'), while 1 Chr 5:26 lists it among exile locations for the Transjordan tribes. In 2 Kgs 19:12 (= Isa 37:12) the Rabshakeh cites Gozan as a conquered nation whose gods were powerless—a rhetorical threat against Jerusalem. Spanish 'Gozán' with its accent mark reflects the oxytone stress pattern of the Hebrew. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Gozan, and-Retseph | es: Gozan, Gozán, a-Gozán | fr: Gozan, [גוזן] | de: Gozan, [גוזן] 2Kgs 17:6; 2Kgs 18:11; 2Kgs 19:12; 1Chr 5:26; Isa 37:12

גּוֹי H1471a Art / N-ms (565×)

Nation, people-group; in the plural often 'the nations' (i.e., non-Israelite peoples, Gentiles).

Hebrew גּוֹי denotes a nation or people understood as a political and ethnic unit. In the singular it can refer to any nation including Israel itself—God promises Abraham 'I will make you a great nation' (Gen 12:2). But in the plural גּוֹיִם, it overwhelmingly designates 'the nations,' meaning the surrounding foreign peoples, and eventually becomes a near-synonym for 'Gentiles.' German distinguishes 'Völker' (peoples) from 'Nationen' (nation-states); Arabic uses أُمَم (communities) for the plural collective. The Phoenician cognate 𐤂𐤅 ('community') preserves the root sense of a bounded social body.

1. nations, peoples (plural/collective) (466×) The plural or collective sense: 'nations, peoples'—the dominant usage (466 occurrences), typically referring to multiple foreign peoples or all the nations of the earth. Often carries a contrastive force against Israel: 'all the nations which the LORD your God is giving before you' (Deut 7:1). The consistent rendering as 'las-naciones' (Spanish), 'les-nations' (French), and 'die-Völker' (German) confirms the collective-political reading. Includes contexts of judgment on nations (Isa 2:4), blessing through Abraham's seed (Gen 18:18), and the scope of divine sovereignty (Ps 82:8). NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: the-nations | es: las-naciones, naciones, son-las-naciones | fr: le-nations, les-nations | de: der-Nationen, der-Völker, die-Völker Gen 10:5; Gen 10:32; Gen 48:19; Exod 34:10; Lev 18:24

2. nation, people-group (singular) (98×) The singular sense: 'a nation, people-group'—a single political or ethnic entity (98 occurrences). May designate Israel itself ('a great nation,' Gen 12:2; 'a holy nation,' Exod 19:6) or any other people ('a nation you do not know,' Deut 28:36). Spanish and German both use the singular 'nación/Nation' or 'Volk' here, distinct from the plural collective. Key theological passages include God's promise to make Abraham into a nation (Gen 35:11) and rhetorical questions about Israel's uniqueness (Deut 4:7–8). NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: a-nation, nation, nation- | es: Nación, nación, nación- | fr: nation, un-nation | de: Nation, Volk, ein-Nation Gen 35:11; Exod 9:24; Deut 4:7; Deut 4:8; Deut 4:34

3. (1×) A problematic occurrence at Joshua 12:23 where 'Goiim' appears to function as a proper noun or geographic designation —'the king of Goiim in Gilgal'—rather than the common noun 'nations.' The multilingual evidence is split: English and French render 'nations,' but Spanish transliterates as 'Goyim,' treating it as a place name or ethnic label. This likely refers to the same entity as 'Goiim' in Genesis 14:1 (Tidal king of Goiim), a specific people-group or territory rather than the generic 'nations.' NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: nations | es: Goyim | fr: nations | de: Nationen Josh 12:23

גּוֹיִם H1471b N-mp (2×)

Goiim — an ethnic name of uncertain identity, possibly the Guti people northeast of Babylon

In the enigmatic narrative of Genesis 14, Tidal is called 'king of Goiim'—literally 'king of nations' or 'king of peoples.' The context among other eastern kings suggests this is a proper ethnic name rather than a generic description. Early interpreters proposed the Guti, a people northeast of Babylonia in the Zagros mountains region, as the referent. The name may represent a Mesopotamian ethnic designation corrupted through transmission, or it may preserve an archaic name for a confederation of peoples. The uncertainty reflects the text's preservation of very ancient Near Eastern geopolitical realities.

(2×) An ethnic or territorial designation for the people ruled by Tidal in Genesis 14:1, 9. While the word normally means 'nations' generically, here it functions as a proper name for a specific people group, possibly the Guti of Mesopotamian records. The phrase 'king of Goiim' suggests either a confederation of tribes or a specific ethnic group whose name resembled the Hebrew word for nations. Translators generally transliterate (Goiim, nations) recognizing the term's uncertain referent. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: nations | es: naciones | fr: nations | de: der-Völker Gen 14:1; Gen 14:9

גְּוִיָּה H1472 N-fp (13×)

Body (living or dead); corpse, carcass — of humans in life, death, or visionary imagery

A feminine noun referring to the physical body, whether living or dead. In Genesis 47:18, the Israelites offer their bodies (geviyyotenu) to Pharaoh when famine exhausts all other resources — a living body pledged in desperation. In 1 Samuel 31:10-12, the same word names the fallen corpses of Saul and his sons hung on Beth-shan's wall. Ezekiel's living creatures have geviyyot as their bodily frames (Ezek 1:11, 23), while Daniel sees a figure whose geviyyah gleams like beryl (Dan 10:6). The word spans the full arc from breathing flesh to battlefield remains, with a notable appearance for Samson's lion carcass (Judg 14:8-9).

body, corpse (13×) The physical body in its full range — living, dead, or visionary. When applied to the living, it denotes the corporeal frame as a whole (Gen 47:18; Dan 10:6; Ezek 1:11, 23). When applied to the dead, it means corpse or carcass, as with Saul's body on the wall of Beth-shan (1 Sam 31:10, 12) or heaped battlefield dead (Ps 110:6; Nah 3:3). Spanish cadáveres and cuerpo mirror this living/dead duality; French and German similarly use corps and Leib without distinguishing the two conditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-his-body, bodies-of, bodies-of-them | es: Y-cuerpo-su, a-los-cuerpos, cadáveres | fr: [גויתינו], bodies-de, corps | de: Leib-von, [בגויתם], [גויתיהם] Gen 47:18; Judg 14:8; Judg 14:9; 1Sam 31:10; 1Sam 31:12

גּוֹלָה H1473 Prep-b (43×)

Exile, captivity; collectively the community of exiles, especially the Babylonian deportees

Derived from the root g-l-h ('to uncover, remove'), this noun carries both an abstract sense — the state of being exiled — and a concrete collective sense referring to the community of deportees themselves. Prophets like Jeremiah and Ezekiel use it to address 'the exile' as a body of people living in Babylon (Jer 29:1; Ezek 1:1), while Ezra and Nehemiah speak of 'the assembly of the exile' returning to rebuild. The phrase 'go into exile' (halak baggolah) became a fixed idiom for deportation across the prophetic corpus.

exile, exiles, captivity (43×) Both the abstract state of exile and the concrete community of deportees. In phrases like 'go into exile' (Jer 48:11; Ezek 12:11) it denotes the condition; as 'the assembly of the exile' (Ezra 10:8) it means the people themselves. Spanish 'cautiverio,' French 'exil,' and German 'Verbannung' each accent a different facet of this dual usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: exile, the-exile, the-exiles | es: cautiverio, el-cautiverio, el-exilio | fr: [הגולה], exil, l'exil | de: Verbannung, die-Verbannung 2Kgs 24:14; 2Kgs 24:15; 2Kgs 24:16; 1Chr 5:22; Ezra 1:11

גּוֹלָן H1474 N-proper-fs (6×)
Golan – a Levitical city of refuge in Bashan, in the territory of eastern Manasseh Golan is the proper name of a city in Bashan designated as one of the six cities of refuge (three on each side of the Jordan). Located in the territory of eastern Manasseh, it was assigned to the Levitical clan of Gershon (1 Chr 6:71). Moses himself set it apart as a refuge city for the accidental manslayer (Deut 4:43), and it reappears in Joshua's formal lists of both refuge cities (Josh 20:8) and Levitical cities (Josh 21:27). The Ketiv/Qere variation galon/golan reflects a scribal spelling issue rather than any semantic difference. The modern Golan Heights region derives its name from this ancient city. All target languages preserve the toponym unchanged: Spanish Golan, French Golan, German Golan.

Golan (proper name, city of refuge) (6×) The proper name Golan, designating a Levitical city of refuge in the Bashan region of eastern Manasseh. Moses appoints it as a refuge for the accidental manslayer (Deut 4:43), and it is listed among both the six refuge cities (Josh 20:8) and the Levitical cities allotted to the Gershonites (Josh 21:27; 1 Chr 6:71). The Ketiv/Qere variant galon/golan in Joshua is a purely orthographic matter. Every target language transliterates the name directly, confirming a single toponym with no semantic variation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Golan, [Galon], [Qere] | es: Golan, Golán, [Galón] | fr: Golan, [Galon], [Qéré] | de: Golan, [Galon], [Qere] Deut 4:43; Josh 20:8; Josh 21:27

גּוּמָּץ H1475 N-ms (1×)
pit, hole (dug in ground)
Ecclesiastes 10:8 uses this Aramaic loanword in a proverb about work's inherent dangers: 'He who digs a pit may fall into it.' The saying warns that schemes intended to trap others can ensnare the schemer. The word appears again in Proverbs 26:27 in the Targum and Peshitta, though the Hebrew text there uses a different term. As an Aramaic borrowing in late biblical Hebrew, it illustrates the linguistic influence of Imperial Aramaic on post-exilic Hebrew. The wisdom tradition favored such proverbial warnings about poetic justice.

(1×) A pit dug in the ground, appearing in Ecclesiastes 10:8's wisdom saying about schemes backfiring. English 'pit,' Spanish 'hoyo' (hole/pit), all identify the excavated trap. French and German preserve the Hebrew form, acknowledging the word's rarity and Aramaic origin. The proverbial context emphasizes ironic reversal: the pit-digger becomes the pit's victim, a common wisdom motif about justice and consequence. PITS AND DUNGEONS
en: a-pit | es: hoyo | fr: גומץ | de: [גומץ] Eccl 10:8

גּוּנִי H1476 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)
Guni, a personal name borne by a son of Naphtali and a Gadite, also the ancestor of the Gunite clan
A proper name of uncertain etymology, borne by at least two Old Testament figures. The primary Guni is a son of Naphtali listed among those who went down to Egypt with Jacob (Gen 46:24), and he becomes the eponymous ancestor of the Gunite clan enumerated in the wilderness census (Num 26:48). A second Guni appears in the Gadite genealogy of 1 Chronicles 5:15. The name recurs in 1 Chronicles 7:13 in the Naphtalite genealogy, confirming the tribal lineage.

(4×) The personal name Guni, designating a Naphtalite tribal ancestor and a Gadite. In Gen 46:24 and 1 Chr 7:13 he appears as a son of Naphtali; Num 26:48 derives the Gunite clan from him. A separate Guni in 1 Chr 5:15 belongs to the tribe of Gad. Spanish and English transliterate consistently as 'Guni,' while French and German preserve the Hebrew in brackets alongside the transliteration. The conjunctive forms ('and-Guni,' 'y-Guni,' 'et-Guni') reflect the word's typical appearance within genealogical lists. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Guni, and-Guni, to-Guni | es: Guni, de-Guni, y-Guni | fr: [גוני], [וגוני], et-Guni | de: [גוני], [וגוני], und-Guni Gen 46:24; Num 26:48; 1Chr 5:15; 1Chr 7:13

גּוּנִי H1477 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
the Gunite (gentilicial from Guni)
This gentilicial adjective appears in Numbers 26:48, designating descendants of Guni in the tribal census. The form follows standard Hebrew patterns for creating clan designations from personal names. However, textual critics propose reading the same gentilicial in two disputed passages: 2 Samuel 23:32 and 1 Chronicles 11:34, where the received text has different forms. The Septuagint readings in those passages support the emendation. Such textual proposals illustrate how gentilicial forms, being relatively uncommon, were susceptible to scribal confusion.

(1×) A clan designation meaning 'descendants of Guni' in Numbers 26:48's census list. English 'the Gunite,' Spanish 'los gunitas' (plural), French 'le Gunite,' and German 'der Gunite' all follow standard gentilicial translation patterns. The definite article with collective noun can be rendered singular ('the Gunite [clan]') or plural ('the Gunites'). The census context requires precise clan identification for territorial allotment purposes. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Gunite | es: los-gunitas | fr: le-Gunite | de: der-Gunite Num 26:48

גָּוַע H1478 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3mp (24×)
Expire, breathe one's last, perish – die, especially of patriarchs; emphasizes the moment life departs
A solemn verb for the act of dying, emphasizing the final exhalation – the moment breath leaves the body. Found exclusively in the Priestly source and in poetry, it carries a quiet dignity distinct from the common verb muth ('to die'). The patriarchal death notices use it formulaically: Abraham 'expired and died at a good old age' (Gen 25:8), as did Ishmael (Gen 25:17) and Isaac (Gen 35:29). In Job and the Psalms it expresses both the fragility of mortal life – when God withdraws breath, creatures expire and return to dust (Job 34:15; Ps 104:29) – and the anguish of approaching death (Ps 88:16). The flood narrative employs it for the universal perishing of all flesh (Gen 6:17; 7:21).

expire, breathe one's last, perish (24×) To expire, breathe one's last, perish – marking the precise moment life departs. Restricted to the Priestly source and poetic texts, this verb dignifies the death of the patriarchs: Abraham (Gen 25:8), Ishmael (Gen 25:17), Isaac (Gen 35:29), and Jacob (Gen 49:33) all 'expire' in formulaic death notices. In the flood account it describes universal perishing (Gen 6:17; 7:21). In Wisdom poetry it conveys mortal fragility – when God withdraws his breath, creatures expire and return to dust (Job 34:15; Ps 104:29). Often paired with muth ('die') or 'avad ('perish') for intensification (Num 17:27-28; Job 3:11). DEATH AND CORPSES
en: I-expire, I-will-expire, I-would-have-expired | es: Expirará, Habría-expirado„ Y-expiró | fr: [גוע], et-expired, et-expirer | de: [אגוע], [גוע], [ואגוע] Gen 6:17; Gen 7:21; Gen 25:8; Gen 25:17; Gen 35:29

גּוֹף H1479 V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp (1×)
to shut, close (doors)
This verb appears only in Nehemiah 7:3 in the Hiphil stem, where Nehemiah issues security instructions: 'Let them shut the doors and bar them.' The command reflects post-exilic Jerusalem's vulnerability—even with rebuilt walls, the city required vigilant gate management. The verbal root, occurring only this once in biblical Hebrew, has parallels in later rabbinic Hebrew where it commonly means 'shut' or 'close.' The context of urban security and nightly gate-closing illustrates the practical challenges of maintaining a defended city with a sparse population.

(1×) To close or shut doors, specifically in Nehemiah 7:3's security protocol for Jerusalem's gates. English 'shut,' Spanish 'cerrarán' (they will close), confirm the action. French and German preserve the Hebrew form, perhaps due to the verb's rarity. The jussive mood ('let them shut') indicates Nehemiah's administrative command, part of his systematic approach to Jerusalem's restoration and security. SHUTTING AND CLOSING

en: let-them-shut | es: cerrarán | fr: [יגיפו] | de: [יגיפו] Neh 7:3

גְּוִיָּה H1480 N-fsc (2×)

body, corpse — the physical frame, especially of the dead

This late Hebrew word for body appears only in the Chronicler's parallel account of Saul's death, where the Philistines mutilate his corpse and those of his sons. The term represents post-exilic vocabulary (also found in rabbinic Hebrew and Aramaic) that entered the language later than classical Biblical Hebrew's preferred term. Both occurrences in 1 Chronicles 10:12 describe the retrieval and honorable burial of the royal bodies from Beth-shan's wall. The word's Arabic cognate specifically means 'corpse' or 'carcass,' emphasizing the body's post-mortem state.

(2×) The physical body, particularly of the dead. Both uses in 1 Chronicles 10:12 refer to the corpses of Saul and his sons retrieved by the men of Jabesh-gilead for proper burial. This late Hebrew term (found also in Aramaic and post-biblical literature) replaced earlier biblical vocabulary in later texts. The context emphasizes the bodies' dishonored state (displayed on walls) and the men of Jabesh's covenant loyalty in recovering them for dignified interment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bodies-of, body-of | es: cuerpo-de, cuerpos-de | fr: [גופת] | de: [גופת] 1Chr 10:12

גּוּר H1481a V-Qal-Imperf-3ms / 2ms (81×)

To sojourn as a resident alien; to dwell temporarily in a foreign land; as participle, a sojourner or guest.

One of the great social-theological terms of the Hebrew Bible, gur describes the precarious existence of living in a land that is not one's own — neither fully belonging nor fully excluded. Abraham sojourns in Egypt (Gen 12:10), Israel sojourns in Canaan before possessing it, and the Levitical laws repeatedly protect the ger, the resident alien. German als Fremder wohnen ('to dwell as a stranger') beautifully captures the dual reality: one does dwell, but always as an outsider. French séjourner and Arabic jara both preserve the temporary, provisional character of the stay.

1. Qal: to sojourn as alien (39×) The core verbal sense: to sojourn, to live temporarily in a land not one's own, with emphasis on alien status and vulnerability. Abraham sojourns in Egypt during famine (Gen 12:10), Lot among the Sodomites (Gen 19:9). German als Fremder wohnen ('to dwell as a stranger') and Arabic jara ('to turn aside, take temporary refuge') both highlight the provisional, dependent nature of this dwelling. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-sojourn, to-sojourn-, will-sojourn | es: a-residir, morará, para-habitar | fr: séjourner, à-séjourner | de: als-Fremder-wohnen, um-als-Fremde-zu-wohnen, um-als-Fremder-zu-wohnen Gen 12:10; Gen 19:9; Gen 20:1; Gen 21:23; Gen 21:34

2. Qal ptcp: sojourner, resident alien (28×) The Qal participle used as a substantive noun designating a person's legal and social status: a sojourner, resident alien. Levitical law repeatedly pairs the ger with the native-born citizen (Lev 16:29; 17:10–13), granting both the same ritual obligations. Spanish forastero and Arabic gharib ('stranger') mark this as a recognized social category rather than a mere verbal action. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-sojourners, sojourners, sojourning | es: el-que-mora, el-que-peregrina, forasteros | fr: [גרים], le-demeure, le-sojourning | de: als-Fremder-wohnen, der-Wohnung, der-sojourning Exod 12:49; Lev 16:29; Lev 17:10; Lev 17:12; Lev 17:13

3. Qal: to dwell, lodge with (12×) A softened sense where the alien-status recedes and the emphasis falls on simply dwelling or lodging in a place or with someone. Psalm 5:4 asks 'who may dwell in your tent?' and Judges 5:17 notes Dan 'lodging' by the ships. Arabic yaskunu ('to inhabit') and French séjourne shift the focus from foreignness to the act of residing itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: among-us, and-will-dwell, did-he-sojourn-at | es: Habiten, Moraré, Y-morará | fr: et-séjourner, fit-il-séjourner-à, séjourne | de: als-Fremder-wohnen, lass-mich-wohnen, sojourned Lev 17:8; Lev 19:33; Num 15:14; Judg 5:17; Ps 5:4

4. Qal ptcp: guest, lodger (2×) The rarest substantival usage (only Exod 3:22; Job 19:15): a guest or lodger, emphasizing the hospitality relationship rather than alien legal status. Job's household servants regard him as a stranger — he has become a guest in his own home. Arabic nazila ('female lodger') and Korean 'guest/lodger' vocabulary confirm this hospitality-oriented nuance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-sojourner-of, the-guests-of | es: Los-moradores-de, y-de-la-que-mora-en | fr: et-de-étranger-de, גרי | de: und-von-sojourner-von, wohnte-als-Fremdling Exod 3:22; Job 19:15

גּוּר H1481b V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (7×)

To stir up strife, attack, assail; in Hitpael, to slash oneself — hostile action ranging from conflict to ritual self-laceration.

This is gur II, distinguished from the far more common gur I ('to sojourn, dwell as a stranger'). Where gur I conveys peaceful residence, gur II carries aggressive overtones: stirring up strife, gathering hostilely, or launching attacks. The Psalms deploy it in lament contexts — enemies lurk and assail (Ps 56:6; 59:3; 140:2) — while Isaiah 54:15 uses both the infinitive absolute and imperfect for emphasis: 'whoever stirs up strife against you shall fall.' A solitary Hitpael occurrence in Hosea 7:14, yitgoraru ('they slash themselves'), describes pagan mourning rituals of self-laceration, possibly linking to the related root garar or garah.

1. to stir up strife, attack, assail (6×) To stir up strife, attack, or assail. In the Psalms of lament, David describes enemies who 'gather together' or 'attack' — yaguru in Ps 56:6 (lurking and watching his steps), Ps 59:3 (assembling against him without cause), and Ps 140:2 (stirring up wars). Spanish 'atacan' and 'se-reúnen' reflect both the hostile and gathering aspects. Isaiah 54:15 provides a theological assurance: gor yagor, an emphatic construction — 'whoever indeed stirs up strife, it is not from Me' — God distances himself from illegitimate aggression against his people. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: attacking, attacks, he-attacks | es: ataca, atacan, se-reúnen | fr: [גור], [גר], [יגורו] | de: [גור], [גר], [יגור] Ps 56:6; Ps 59:3; Ps 140:2; Isa 54:15

2. to slash oneself (Hitpael) (1×) To slash or lacerate oneself (Hitpael reflexive), describing ecstatic or mourning ritual self-mutilation. The sole attestation in Hos 7:14, yitgoraru, depicts Israelites who 'slash themselves for grain and new wine' — adopting Canaanite ritual practices instead of genuinely crying out to God. Spanish 'se-congregan' (they congregate) misses the self-laceration nuance, while English 'they-slash-themselves' captures it precisely. This form may derive from a related root garar ('to drag, scrape') rather than gur proper, reflecting the tangled etymology of several similar-sounding Hebrew roots. FILLING AND FULLNESS

en: they-slash-themselves | es: se-congregan | fr: séjourner | de: [יתגוררו] Hos 7:14

גּוּר H1481c V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (10×)

To fear, be afraid, stand in awe — a homograph of gur I (sojourn) and gur II (stir up strife)

The verb גּוּר III (gur) means to fear, be afraid, or stand in awe. It must be carefully distinguished from its homographs: gur I ('to sojourn, dwell as an alien') and gur II ('to stir up strife, attack'). This root denotes reverential awe or dread, appearing in both human and divine contexts. Moab dreaded Israel's approach (Num 22:3), Moses commands judges not to fear human faces (Deut 1:17), and the psalmist calls all the earth to stand in awe of the Lord (Ps 33:8). Psalm 22:24 assures that God has not despised the afflicted, nor hidden his face — 'all the seed of Israel, fear him!' Job 41:17 uses it of the terror inspired by Leviathan. The Niphal in Deuteronomy 18:22 describes what the people need not fear regarding a false prophet.

fear, be afraid, stand in awe (10×) To fear, be afraid, or stand in awe — expressing reverential dread before God or existential terror before overwhelming power. Moab was 'exceedingly afraid' of Israel (Num 22:3); Moses exhorts judges not to 'be afraid of any man' (Deut 1:17); the psalmist summons all earth's inhabitants to 'stand in awe' of the Lord (Ps 33:8; 22:24). Deuteronomy 18:22 assures Israel they need not fear a prophet whose word fails. Job 41:17 uses it of the dread Leviathan inspires. Spanish 'temer,' Arabic خاف (khafa), and Korean 두려워하다 (duryeowohada) reflect the spectrum from terror to reverence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: I-feared, and-feared, and-he-feared | es: Temed, Y-temió, temen | fr: attaquer, craindre, et-attaquer | de: [גורן], [יגורן], du-soll-Furcht Num 22:3; Deut 1:17; Deut 18:22; Deut 32:27; 1Sam 18:15

גּוּר H1482 N-mpc / 3fp (7×)

A cub or whelp, especially of a lion — used metaphorically for tribal vigor, young warriors, and fierce offspring

A masculine noun (גּוּר) meaning 'cub' or 'whelp,' primarily designating a young lion. Jacob blesses Judah as a 'lion's cub' (גּוּר אַרְיֵה, Gen 49:9), and Dan is called a 'lion's cub that leaps from Bashan' (Deut 33:22) — both evoking youthful ferocity and tribal promise. Ezekiel's allegory of the lioness (Ezek 19:2, 3, 5) uses the term for the princes of Israel raised among her cubs. In Lamentations 4:3, it extends beyond lions to describe the young of jackals (תַּנִּין), showing the word can denote any predator's offspring.

cub, whelp (of a lion) (7×) A cub or whelp, typically of a lion, used in poetic and prophetic metaphor. Jacob's blessing calls Judah a 'lion's cub' (Gen 49:9, גּוּר אַרְיֵה), evoking tribal strength and royal destiny. Moses blesses Dan as a 'lion's cub leaping from Bashan' (Deut 33:22). In Ezekiel 19:2-5, a lioness raises her cubs (גּוּרֶיהָ) — an allegory for Judah's royal house — and one cub becomes a young lion (כְּפִיר). Nahum 2:12 pictures Nineveh's ruin through lion imagery. Lamentations 4:3 uniquely applies the term to jackal young, broadening its zoological range. Spanish cachorro ('cub') matches the core sense precisely. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cub-of, cubs-her, of-cubs-her | es: Cachorro-de, a-sus-cachorros, cachorro-de | fr: [גוריהן], cub-de, embryon | de: [גור], [גוריה], [גוריהן] Gen 49:9; Deut 33:22; Lam 4:3; Ezek 19:2; Ezek 19:3

גּוּר H1483 N-proper-fs (1×)

Gur (place name: 'sojourning place')

This location appears in 2 Kings 9:27 during Jehu's violent purge of Ahab's house. King Ahaziah of Judah was struck 'at the ascent of Gur, which is by Ibleam' while fleeing Jehu's coup. The site remains archaeologically unidentified, though the reference to an 'ascent' suggests hilly terrain. The name may derive from the root meaning 'to sojourn' or 'dwell,' possibly indicating a caravanserai or way-station. The geographical precision in Kings' narrative reflects the historical particularity of this violent episode.

(1×) A place near Ibleam where Ahaziah was mortally wounded (2 Kings 9:27). All languages preserve the proper name through transliteration (Gur), standard for unidentified biblical locations. The qualifying phrase 'ascent of Gur' indicates elevated terrain along the road from Jezreel to Samaria. Though location remains uncertain, the narrative specificity serves to anchor this pivotal moment in Israel's dynastic history. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Gur | es: Gur | fr: Gur | de: Gur 2Kgs 9:27

גּוֹר H1484 Prep-k / N-mpc (2×)

whelps, cubs — young lions, used figuratively for fierce warriors or nations

This word describes lion cubs or whelps, but appears exclusively in figurative contexts—never of actual young lions. Jeremiah compares the Babylonians to roaring lion whelps, while Nahum uses the image for Assyrian warriors or princes. The term may derive from onomatopoeia (the growling sound) or from connotations of quarrelsomeness fitting young predators. Paired with other lion terminology (young lions, adult lions), it builds powerful metaphors of military might, predatory violence, and ultimate vulnerability to divine judgment. The imagery draws on the lion's role as ancient Near East's apex predator and royal symbol.

(2×) Lion cubs used as symbols for fierce warriors or nations. Jeremiah 51:38 compares Babylonians to roaring whelps alongside young lions, while Nahum 2:12 references Assyria's cubs alongside the lion's prey in its den. The term appears only in figurative, prophetic contexts, always conveying ferocity, youth, and collective danger. The preposition 'like' (as cubs) emphasizes the comparison's metaphorical nature—these are human enemies whose violence resembles lion whelps' voraciousness. FLOCK HERD LIVESTOCK

en: his-cubs, like-cubs-of | es: cachorros-suyos, como-cachorros-de | fr: [כגורי], troupeau | de: [גרותיו], [כגורי] Jer 51:38; Nah 2:12

גּוּר־בַּעַל H1485 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

Gur-baal (place name: 'dwelling of Baal')

Found only in 2 Chronicles 26:7, this place name identifies where certain Arabs dwelt whom God helped Uzziah defeat. The compound name combines 'dwelling' with the deity name Baal, suggesting either a Canaanite religious site or simply a place where Baal was worshiped. The location remains unknown, though the context of Arabian inhabitants suggests Judah's southern or eastern frontier. Such compound names combining geographical terms with deity names were common in the ancient Near East, marking sacred sites or territories associated with particular gods.

(1×) A location associated with Arabian inhabitants in 2 Chronicles 26:7, meaning 'dwelling of Baal.' All languages transliterate the compound proper name (Gur-Baal/Gur-Baal), sometimes preserving the prepositional prefix ('in Gur-Baal'). The Baal element indicates either Canaanite religious influence among these Arabs or simply a place-name incorporating the common Semitic term for 'lord.' Uzziah's campaign context suggests frontier territory beyond Judah's core. BAAL WORSHIP

en: in-Gur-Baal | es: en-Gur-Baal | fr: [בגורבעל] | de: [בגורבעל] 2Chr 26:7

גּוֹרָל H1486 Prep-b / N-msc / 1cs (78×)

Lot, allotment — a small object cast for divine decision-making; by extension, the portion or destiny so assigned.

In ancient Israel, decisions of great consequence — from dividing the Promised Land to selecting the scapegoat on the Day of Atonement — were made by casting lots, understood as submitting the outcome to God's sovereign will (Prov 16:33). The goral was the physical object (likely a stone or pebble) drawn or cast, but the word naturally extended to mean the portion or destiny that resulted. When the Psalmist declares 'You hold my lot' (Ps 16:5), the concrete casting instrument has become a metaphor for life's allotted portion under God's care. Spanish 'suerte' beautifully captures both senses — chance and fate.

1. lot (object cast for decisions) (71×) The lot as a physical object cast or drawn to determine divine will or settle disputes — the concrete instrument of decision-making. Covers 71 occurrences, prominently in the Day of Atonement ritual where Aaron casts lots over two goats (Lev 16:8-10) and in the land distribution narratives (Num 26:55; Josh 18:11). Spanish 'suerte' and French 'sort' both carry the dual sense of 'lot cast' and 'fate determined,' while German 'Los' preserves the concrete lottery sense. LOTS AND ALLOTMENT

en: lot, the-lot | es: la-suerte, suerte | fr: le-sort, sort | de: Los, der-Los Lev 16:8; Lev 16:9; Lev 16:10; Num 26:55

2. allotment, portion assigned by lot (7×) The allotment, portion, or destiny assigned by lot or by divine determination — a metonymic extension from the casting to its result. Found in poetic and prophetic texts: the Psalmist's confession 'You are my lot' (Ps 16:5), the assurance that wickedness will not rest on the righteous person's 'lot' (Ps 125:3), and Daniel's eschatological promise to stand in his 'allotted place' at the end of days (Dan 12:13). Spanish 'mi

suerte' and French 'ton sort' reveal how naturally the word moves from instrument to inheritance. LOTS AND ALLOTMENT

en: and-lot-of, for-your-lot, in-your-lot | es: en-tu-suerte, mi-suerte, para-porción-tuya | fr: [גורלך], [וגורל], dans-ton-sort | de: Los, [גורלך], [וגורל] Judg 1:3; Ps 16:5; Ps 125:3; Isa 17:14; Isa 57:6

גּוֹשׁ H1487 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)

clod, lump — a hard mass of earth or congealed material

This word appears in Job's anguished description of his diseased body, where his flesh is clothed with worms 'and clods of dust'—imagery of putrefaction and decay. The Hebrew text preserves two variant readings (Ketiv and Qere) that differ slightly in form but point to the same meaning: hard lumps or clods. The term may relate to rough, frozen, or congealed material (cognate with Arabic words for ice and rough ground). Job's description creates a revolting picture of skin covered with scabbed, crusted matter—clods or lumps of dried discharge mixed with dust, emphasizing his physical degradation.

(2×) Hard clods or lumps, specifically the crusted material on Job's diseased skin. Both occurrences in Job 7:5 are textual variants (Ketiv and Qere) describing Job's flesh clothed with worms and clods/crusts of dust. The imagery conveys advanced physical deterioration—skin covered with hardened, scabby matter. Translations vary (clods, terrones, clumps, crusts) attempting to capture the revolting reality of Job's condition, where even his flesh has become like dried, lumpy earth. EARTH AND LAND

en: [and-clods], and-clods-of | es: (y-terrones-de), [y-costras] | fr: et-(וגרוש), et-[וגיש] | de: [(וגרוש)], [[וגיש]] Job 7:5

גֵּז H1488 N-msc (4×)

Shearing, fleece; mowing, mown grass — what is cut from sheep or from a field

Denotes the product of cutting, whether wool shorn from animals or grass mown from a field. In Deuteronomy 18:4 the 'shearing of your flock' belongs among the priestly dues owed to the Levites. Job 31:20 invokes the fleece of his own sheep as evidence of his generosity toward the poor. Psalm 72:6 uses the image of rain falling on mown grass to portray the gentle, refreshing reign of the ideal king. Amos 7:1 references the 'king's mowings' — a royal first-cut of hay — as the setting for a locust-plague vision.

(4×) Shearing or fleece — the wool cut from sheep, viewed as a valuable product. In Deut 18:4 it is listed alongside grain, wine, and oil as a priestly portion: 'the first fleece of your sheep.' In Job 31:20 the fleece warms the needy, serving as a measure of the righteous man's compassion. The Aramaic cognate gizza and Assyrian gizzu confirm the core meaning of shorn wool. Spanish 'esquileo' (shearing) and English 'fleece' both center on the act and its product. In Ps 72:6 and Amos 7:1 the semantic field extends to mown grass or meadow, with 'the king's mowings' in Amos denoting a royal prerogative of first harvest. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-fleece-of, mown-grass, shearing-of | es: esquileo-de, hierba-cortada, la-siega-del | fr: et-ומגז, shearing-de, tondre | de: [גז], [ומגז], mown-Gras Deut 18:4; Job 31:20; Ps 72:6; Amos 7:1

גִּזְבָּר H1489 Art / N-ms (1×)

treasurer (Persian loanword)

This Persian administrative title appears in Ezra 1:8, where Cyrus commands 'Mithredath the treasurer' to inventory and release the temple vessels. The word entered Hebrew as a loanword during the Persian period, reflecting the administrative terminology of the Achaemenid Empire. Similar forms appear in Aramaic and Syriac. The Persian original relates to treasure-keeping, an essential function in ancient bureaucracies where wealth was stored physically rather than electronically. Such loanwords in Ezra-Nehemiah authenticate those books' Persian-period setting.

(1×) A treasury official in the Persian administration (Ezra 1:8), responsible for managing royal or temple wealth. English 'treasurer' and Spanish 'tesorero' use cognate Romance terms, while French and German preserve the Hebrew/Persian form, acknowledging its loanword status. The definite article ('the treasurer') may indicate this was Mithredath's official title rather than a generic description. The context of releasing temple vessels confirms the treasury management role. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: the-treasurer | es: el-tesorero | fr: [הגזבר] | de: [הגזבר] Ezra 1:8

גִּזְבָּר H1490 N-mpd (1×)

treasurers (Aramaic plural, Persian loanword)

The Aramaic plural of the Persian loanword for 'treasurer' appears in Ezra 7:21, where Artaxerxes commands 'all the treasurers in the province Beyond the River' to supply Ezra's needs. The emphatic plural ending marks this as Biblical Aramaic rather than Hebrew. The Persian administrative context is crucial: multiple regional treasurers managed the vast empire's finances across satrapies. This verse illustrates the Persian government's support for Ezra's mission, providing official backing and financial resources for Jerusalem's temple and Torah community.

(1×) Regional treasury officials in the Persian administration (Ezra 7:21), plural form commanding multiple treasurers across Trans-Euphrates province. English 'treasurers' and Spanish 'tesoreros' render the plural, while French and German preserve the Aramaic form with its distinctive emphatic plural ending. The administrative context shows the Persian system's bureaucratic sophistication, with specialized financial officers throughout the provinces answerable to royal directives. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION

en: the-treasurers | es: los-tesoreros | fr: [גזבריא] | de: [גזבריא] Ezra 7:21

גָּזָה H1491 V-Qal-Prtcpl-msc / 1cs (1×)

to cut, sever (from the womb)

Psalm 71:6 contains a rare verb whose meaning remains disputed. The psalmist declares, 'You are the one who severed me from my mother's womb'—or perhaps 'you are my benefactor.' The Septuagint read 'protector,' while others propose 'the one who drew me out,' connecting to birth imagery. The parallel in Psalm 22:10 uses a clearer verb for being brought from the womb. Textual critics like Cheyne and Duhm have proposed various emendations. This lexical ambiguity doesn't obscure the essential point: God's care from conception onward.

(1×) To sever or cut from the womb, possibly meaning 'deliver' in Psalm 71:6. English 'cut me' and Spanish 'el que me sacó' (the one who brought me out) interpret toward birth/delivery. French 'mesurer' (measure) and German's long compound suggest alternative understandings. The root may relate to Talmudic Aramaic גְּזָא 'cut off' or to Arabic 'requite,' showing the interpretive range. Despite lexical uncertainty, the verse's theology is clear: divine care from birth. MEASURE METE OUT

en: are-the-One-who-cut-me | es: el-que-me-sacó | fr: mesurer | de: sind-der-einer-der-abgeschnitten-mich Ps 71:6

גִּזָּה H1492 N-fsc (7×)

Fleece; the shorn wool of a sheep, used exclusively in the Gideon narrative as a sign from God.

A fleece of wool, referring to the thick coat shorn from a sheep. Every occurrence in the Hebrew Bible appears in the famous account of Gideon's test before God (Judges 6:37-40), where he laid a fleece on the threshing floor and asked for dew to confirm divine guidance. The Hebrew gizzah is cognate with Arabic jizzah and Aramaic gezzta, all pointing to a common Semitic root for shorn wool. Its narrow scriptural usage has made 'putting out a fleece' a proverbial expression for seeking a sign.

fleece (of wool) (7×) A fleece of wool, the shorn coat of a sheep used as a physical object in a test of divine will. All seven occurrences cluster in Judges 6:37-40 where Gideon places the fleece (gizzat tsemer) on the threshing floor overnight, asking God to wet or dry it as confirmation. English consistently renders 'fleece,' while Spanish uses 'vellon' (wool fleece). The construct form gizzat appears bound to tsemer (wool), emphasizing the material nature of the object. WOOL TEXTILE FIBER

en: fleece-of, the-fleece, with-the-fleece | es: con-el-vellón, el-vellón, vellón-de | fr: avec-le-fleece, fleece-de, le-fleece | de: der-fleece, fleece-von, mit-der-fleece Judg 6:37; Judg 6:38; Judg 6:39

הַגִּזֹנִי H1493 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Gizonite (textual error for 'the Gunite')

First Chronicles 11:34 contains what most scholars recognize as a textual corruption: 'Hashem the Gizonite.' The Septuagint Lucianic recension reads 'Jashen the Gunite,' which aligns with the parallel list in 2 Samuel 23:32. The consonantal similarity between Hebrew letters allowed the error to occur in transmission. BDB cross-references to 'Gunite,' indicating the probable original reading. Such textual corrections, supported by parallel passages and versional evidence, demonstrate how comparative text criticism resolves scribal errors while preserving the received text tradition.

(1×) A corrupted gentilicial in 1 Chronicles 11:34, likely an error for 'the Gunite' based on Greek Septuagint evidence and the parallel 2 Samuel passage. English 'the Gizonite' and Spanish 'el gizoní' preserve the Masoretic reading, while French and German acknowledge the Hebrew form. The textual problem illustrates how genealogical lists, with their many proper names and gentilicials, were especially susceptible to scribal confusion during transmission. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Gizonite | es: el-gizoní | fr: [הַ]גִּזוֹנִי | de: [הַ]גִּזוֹנִי 1Chr 11:34

גָּזַז H1494 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (15×)

to shear (sheep), cut off (hair) — shearing wool or cutting hair, often at a festive occasion

Gazaz describes shearing sheep or cutting hair — in the biblical world, events of economic and social significance. Sheep-shearing was festive: Laban was away shearing when Rachel stole the teraphim (Gen 31:19), Judah went up to his shearers at Timnah (Gen 38:12-13), and Nabal's shearing feast became the setting for his clash with David (1 Sam 25:2-11). Absalom exploited a shearing gathering to murder Amnon (2 Sam 13:23-24). Most resonantly, the suffering servant is silent before its shearers (Isa 53:7). The verb also applies to mourning haircuts (Job 1:20; Jer 7:29; Mic 1:16).

shear, cut off (15×) To shear sheep or cut wool at a communal agricultural event. Shearing occasions serve as narrative pivots: Rachel's theft during Laban's shearing (Gen 31:19), Judah's encounter with Tamar (Gen 38:12-13), Nabal's clash with David (1 Sam 25:2-11), and Absalom's killing of Amnon (2 Sam 13:23-24). The theologically charged use is Isaiah 53:7, the servant silent 'before her shearers.' REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: Cut-off, and-cut-off, and-shaved | es: Corta, a-trasquilar, al-esquilar | fr: [גְּזִיזָה], [גֹּז], et-tondre | de: [גְּזִיזָה], [גֵּז], [וגֵּז] Gen 31:19; Gen 38:12; Gen 38:13; Deut 15:19; 1Sam 25:2

גָּזֵז H1495 N-proper-ms (2×)

Gazez — a descendant of Caleb through his concubine Ephah, name appears twice in genealogy

Gazez appears in the complex genealogical record of Caleb's descendants in 1 Chronicles 2. The name occurs twice in one verse, creating some ambiguity: Ephah, Caleb's concubine, bore several sons including Gazez, and then the text states 'Haran fathered Gazez,' possibly referring to a grandson or repeating the earlier Gazez. The name's meaning is uncertain, though it may relate to the verb for shearing or cutting. Like many genealogical names in Chronicles, it preserves family memory without providing narrative context or biographical detail.

(2×) A personal name appearing in Calebite genealogy in 1 Chronicles 2:46. The double occurrence in one verse may indicate two individuals (father and son both named Gazez) or a textual repetition emphasizing Gazez's significance in the family line. The name receives no explanation or narrative elaboration beyond its place in Caleb's descendant list through his concubine Ephah. Transliterations preserve the Hebrew form across languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Gazez | es: Gazez | fr: [גָּזֵז] | de: [גָּזֵז] 1Chr 2:46

גָּזִית H1496 Prep-b / N-fs (11×)

Hewn stone, dressed stone — cut and squared building blocks for monumental construction

The noun גָּזִית (gazit), from the root g-z-z ('to cut'), designates stone that has been hewn and dressed into regular blocks for construction, as distinct from rough fieldstone. It carries both theological and architectural weight. God commanded that no iron tool touch the altar stones (Exod 20:25), yet Solomon's Temple and palace required enormous hewn stones quarried and fitted with extraordinary precision (1 Kgs 5:17; 6:36; 7:9-12). Isaiah 9:10 uses hewn stone as a symbol of defiant self-reliance, while Amos 5:11 warns that houses of hewn stone built by oppression will never be enjoyed. Spanish 'piedra labrada,' Arabic ‎.

hewn stone, dressed stone (11×) Stone that has been cut, dressed, or squared into regular blocks for building purposes, especially monumental architecture. Distinguished from rough fieldstone by the labor of quarrying and shaping. Central to Solomon's construction projects (1 Kgs 5:17; 6:36; 7:9-12), prohibited for altar construction by divine command (Exod 20:25), used as a prophetic image of prideful self-sufficiency (Isa 9:10), and of ill-gotten luxury that will go unenjoyed (Amos 5:11). Ezekiel's temple vision also features hewn stone (Ezek 40:42). STONE AND ROCK

en: and-cut-stone, cut-stone, hewn | es: cantería, con-piedra-labrada, labradas | fr: [בְּגִזִית], [גִּזִית], [וּגְזִית] | de: [בְּגִזִית], [גִּזִית], [וּגְזִית] Exod 20:25; 1Kgs 5:17; 1Kgs 6:36; 1Kgs 7:9; 1Kgs 7:11

גָּזַל H1497 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-3fs (30×)

To seize, rob, snatch away by force; to plunder property, livestock, or people through violent dispossession.

Gazal is a verb of violent taking—seizing what belongs to another by force or power. It covers the spectrum from snatching a spear from an enemy's hand (2 Sam 23:21) to systematic oppression of the poor (Ezek 18:7, 18). Leviticus 19:13 prohibits it alongside withholding wages, and Micah 2:2 condemns those who covet fields and gazal them. The word implies a power imbalance: the strong dispossess the weak. Spanish 'robaron' and German 'Raub' capture the violent theft dimension, while French 'saisir' reflects the physical seizing. Job 20:19 and 24:2, 9 use it to paint vivid pictures of the wicked tearing away houses, boundary stones, and even nursing infants from the poor.

rob, seize, snatch away (30×) To seize, rob, or snatch away by force, involving the violent taking of property, livestock, or persons. Abraham confronts Abimelech about a well that was gazal-ed (Gen 21:25). Leviticus 5:23 and 19:13 legislate restitution for what is seized. Judges 21:23 describes the Benjaminites snatching wives. In prophetic indictment, Ezekiel 18:7, 12, 16, 18 and Micah 3:2 use gazal to denounce oppressive rulers who strip the vulnerable of their livelihood. The passive form gazul ('robbed, plundered') in Deuteronomy 28:29 describes covenantal curse—continual victimization with no rescuer. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: I-stole, and-he-snatched, and-is-robbed | es: al-despojado, robado, robaron | fr: [גָּזוֹל], [וַיִּגְזֹל], avait-saisit | de: Raub, [גְּזוֹל], [גָּזַל] Gen 21:25; Gen 31:31; Lev 6:4; Lev 19:13; Deut 28:29

גָּזֵל H1498 Conj-w (4×)

Robbery, plunder; the act of seizing property by force, or the thing violently taken.

Denotes the violent seizure of another's possessions, whether as an abstract act or as the concrete goods taken. In Leviticus 5:21 it appears alongside fraud and extortion in a list of offenses requiring restitution, while Psalm 62:10 pairs it with oppression (ᶜosheq) to warn against trusting in ill-gotten gain. Isaiah 61:8 reveals God's hatred of robbery, and Ezekiel 22:29 uses the cognate accusative construction (gazal gazel) to underscore how pervasive the plundering had become in Jerusalem. Spanish 'robo' and French 'vol' both capture the core sense of violent theft.

(4×) Robbery or plunder — the forcible taking of property or the spoil itself. The multilingual glosses converge on a single meaning (eng 'robbery,' spa 'robo,' fra 'vol'). Used in legal contexts (Lev 6:2, requiring confession and restitution), wisdom warnings (Ps 62:10, paired with oppression), prophetic indictments of injustice (Isa 61:8; Ezek 22:29), covering both the abstract act and the concrete thing seized. PLUNDER AND SPOIL

en: and-in-robbery, in-robbery, robbery | es: en-robo, robo, y-en-robo | fr: [גזל], dans-robbery, et-dans-vol | de: [גזל], in-robbery, und-in-robbery Lev 6:2; Ps 62:10; Isa 61:8; Ezek 22:29

גָּזֵל H1499 N-msc (2×)

robbery, plunder — violent seizure of others' property; that which is seized by force

This noun describes both the act of robbing and the plundered goods themselves. It appears in legal texts (Leviticus on restitution for robbery), wisdom literature (Psalms warning against trusting in robbery), and prophetic oracles (Isaiah declaring God hates robbery, Ezekiel condemning those who commit it). The word emphasizes violence and wrongful seizure—taking by force what belongs to another. Paired with terms for oppression and injustice, robbery represents economic violence that destroys community and violates covenant. The prophets particularly target religious people who commit robbery, revealing the hypocrisy of worship without justice.

(2×) Violent theft or plunder; property taken by force. Ecclesiastes 5:8 (in a difficult text) may reference robbery of justice, while Ezekiel 18:18 condemns one who 'robbed his brother' or 'committed robbery.' The noun can denote the act itself or the stolen goods. Arabic cognates emphasize violent seizure. Prophetic usage consistently condemns robbery as covenant violation, especially when accompanied by religious pretense. Translations (robbery, robo, pillage, Raub) capture both the violence and the illegitimate transfer of property. PLUNDER AND SPOIL

en: and-robbery-of, robbery | es: robo-de, y-robo-de | fr: et-וגזל, pillage | de: [גזל], und-Raub Eccl 5:8; Ezek 18:18

גְּזֵלָה H1500 N-fp (6×)

gezelah – robbery, plunder; the act of violent seizure or the property so taken

The feminine noun gezelah denotes robbery or plunder – both the violent act of seizing another's property and the goods so taken. Derived from the root g-z-l ('to tear away, snatch'), it carries a strong connotation of forcible, unjust appropriation. In Leviticus 6:4 (MT 5:23), it appears in the restitution law: a thief must return the gezelah he has stolen, adding a fifth of its value. Ezekiel uses the term three times (18:7, 12, 16) to distinguish the righteous from the wicked by whether they 'commit robbery.' Isaiah 3:14 accuses the elders and princes that 'the plunder of the poor is in your houses,' making gezelah an indictment of social injustice. Spanish despojo, lo robado and English 'robbery, plunder' together capture both the act and its proceeds.

robbery, plunder, spoil (6×) Robbery, plunder, or the property seized by violence – the abstract/concrete noun from the root g-z-l. In legal contexts (Lev 6:4), it denotes the stolen goods that must be restored with penalty. In Ezekiel's righteousness catechism (18:7, 12, 16), committing gezelah is a diagnostic marker of wickedness. Isaiah 3:14 uses it in prophetic accusation: the plunder of the poor found in the houses of the powerful. Spanish despojo ('spoils') and lo robado ('what was stolen') together reflect the dual act-and-object sense, while English 'robbery' and 'plunder' similarly span both dimensions. PLUNDER AND SPOIL

en: and-robbery, plunder-of, robberies | es: despojo-del, lo-robado, robo | fr: [גזלת], et-vol, le-robbery | de: [גזלה], [גזלות], [גזלת] Lev 6:4; Isa 3:14; Ezek 18:7; Ezek 18:12; Ezek 18:16

גָּזָם H1501 Conj-w (3×)

the cutting locust—a species of locust in devastating swarms

This collective noun refers to a particular species or stage of locust known for its cutting, devouring action. It always appears in contexts of agricultural devastation. Joel 1:4 lists it among four locust types (arbeh, yelek, ḥasil, gazam) in a plague sequence. Joel 2:25 promises restoration of what 'the cutting locust' consumed. Amos 4:9 describes this locust devouring gardens, vineyards, fig trees, and olive trees. The name likely derives from a root meaning 'to cut' or 'to shear,' emphasizing its destructive eating. Ancient Israel distinguished multiple locust varieties, each with specific behaviors.

(3×) A type of locust characterized by cutting or devouring vegetation, appearing three times in prophetic judgment oracles. Joel 1:4 and 2:25 list it among four locust species, while Amos 4:9 uses it alone for the consuming plague. Cross-linguistic glosses vary: English 'cutting locust/the locust,' Spanish 'langosta/oruga' (locust/caterpillar), French 'la chenille' (caterpillar), German uses brackets. The definite article (ha-gazam) appears in all Joel/Amos occurrences, suggesting a recognized species. The conjunction 'and the cutting locust' in Joel 1:4 marks it as one member in a series of plague agents sent by God. WILDERNESS AND DESERT

en: and-the-cutting-locust, the-cutting-locust, the-locust | es: la-langosta, la-oruga, y-la-oruga | fr: et-la-chenille, la-chenille | de: [הגזם], [והגזם] Joel 1:4; Joel 2:25; Amos 4:9

גַּזָּם H1502 N-proper-ms (2×)

Gazzam — head of a Nethinim family that returned from Babylonian exile

Gazzam appears exclusively in the post-exilic census lists as the ancestor of a family of Nethinim (temple servants) who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel. Like Barkos and other names in these lists, Gazzam represents a family line that maintained its identity through the Babylonian exile and chose to return to serve in the rebuilt temple. The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may relate to cutting or devouring. These genealogical records preserved the memory of faithful families whose service to the temple community spanned generations and survived displacement.

(2×) A personal name preserved as the ancestor of a Nethinim family in the return from exile. Ezra 2:48 and Nehemiah 7:51 list 'the sons of Gazzam' among those who returned to serve at the temple. The name appears in parallel lists with slight variations in form, typical of genealogical transmission. Like other Nethinim ancestral names, Gazzam marks a family's covenant commitment that endured through exile and motivated their return to Jerusalem. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Gazzam | es: Gazam, Gazám. | fr: [גזם] | de: [גזם] Ezra 2:48; Neh 7:51

גֶּזַע H1503 N-msc / 3mp (3×)

stump, stem—the trunk or stock of a tree, especially after cutting

This noun refers to the trunk, stem, or stump of a tree, often paired with 'root' to emphasize continuity of life. Job 14:8 speaks hopefully of a tree's stump sprouting again. Isaiah 11:1 famously prophesies a shoot from 'the stump of Jesse'—the Messiah arising from David's diminished dynasty. Isaiah 40:24 uses it for plants barely taking root before being swept away. The word emphasizes what remains after cutting or the foundational trunk from which new growth emerges. It carries both agricultural reality and powerful messianic symbolism.

(3×) The trunk, stem, or stump of a tree, with three occurrences showing both literal and figurative uses. Job 14:8 pairs it with 'root' (shoresh) in parallel: even if the root ages and the stump dies in the ground, there is hope of renewal. Isaiah 11:1 uses it messianically: 'a shoot from the stump of Jesse' (also parallel with shoresh). Isaiah 40:24 describes plants whose stem barely takes root before being blown away. Cross-linguistic evidence: English 'stump/from stump of,' Spanish 'tronco/de tronco de,' French and German use brackets or 'tronc/son tronc.' The possessive forms indicate whose stump: 'its stump' (Job), Jesse's stump (Isaiah 11), their stem (Isaiah 40).

ROOT PLANT PART
en: from-stump-of, stump-its, their-stem | es: de-tronco-de, su-tronco | fr: [גזעם], [מגזע], son-tronc-lui | de: [גזעו], [גזעם], [מגזע] Job 14:8; Isa 11:1; Isa 40:24

גָּזַר H1504 V-Nifal-Perf-1cs (13×)

To cut, divide, or sever physically; by extension, to decree or determine (as in 'cutting' a decision).

A verb rooted in the concrete act of cutting or dividing something in two, as when Solomon ordered a child divided (1 Kgs 3:25) or when the psalmist recalls God cleaving the Red Sea into sections (Ps 136:13). The Nifal stem expresses being cut off or excluded, carrying a sense of isolation or destruction. In later usage influenced by Aramaic, the word extends metaphorically to decreeing or determining, as though a decision is 'cut' into being (Job 22:28). Spanish 'dividió' and 'cortará' capture the physical splitting, while 'decretarás' marks the legal extension.

1. cut, divide, cut off (11×) Covers the primary physical meaning of cutting, dividing, or severing objects and people. In the Qal, it describes cutting wood (2 Kgs 6:4), dividing a child (1 Kgs 3:25), and the dramatic splitting of the Red Sea 'into parts' (Ps 136:13, where Spanish renders 'Al que dividió'). The Nifal passive conveys being cut off from community or life, as in the lament of Psalm 88:5 and the leper-king's exclusion in 2 Chronicles 26:21. Across languages, the physical dimension is consistent: French and German leave some forms untranslated, but English 'snatches' (Isa 9:19) and Spanish 'dividid' confirm the concrete semantic core. CUTTING AND SEVERING en: I-am-cut-off, and-he-snatches, and-they-cut | es: Al-que-dividió, Y-cortará, dividid | fr: [ויגזר], [נגזר], [נגזרתי] | de: [גזר], [ויגזר], [נגזר] 1Kgs 3:25; 1Kgs 3:26; 2Kgs 6:4; 2Chr 26:21; Ps 88:5

2. decree, determine (2×) An Aramaic-influenced metaphorical extension where 'cutting' becomes 'decreeing' or 'determining,' treating a decision as something carved or incised. Job 22:28 promises that what one decrees will be established (English 'you will decree,' Spanish 'decretarás'), while Esther 2:1 uses the Nifal to report what 'was decreed' against Vashti. The shift from physical cutting to authoritative pronouncement is well attested in cognate Semitic languages, and the multilingual glosses mark this sense distinctly from the concrete cutting uses. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: and-you-will-decree, was-decreed | es: Y-decretarás-, fue-decretado | fr: [נגזר], et-ותגזר | de: [ותגזר], [נגזר] Esth 2:1; Job 22:28

גָּזַר H1505 V-Hitpael-Perf-3fs (6×)

to cut, determine; (participle) an astrologer/diviner who 'cuts' the heavens; (Hitpael) to be cut out, hewn

An Aramaic verb whose two senses divide neatly between persons and things. As a participle used substantively, it denotes astrologers or diviners – those who 'cut' or 'divide' the heavens to determine fate, listed alongside magicians and enchanters at the Babylonian court (Dan 2:27; 4:7; 5:7, 11). In the Hitpael/reflexive stem, the verb describes a stone being 'cut out' without human hands in Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan 2:34, 45). The Arabic cognate jazzar ('butcher') preserves the root's physical cutting force.

1. Qal participle: astrologer, diviner (4×) A professional diviner or astrologer, from the participle used as a substantive – literally one who 'cuts' or 'determines' by reading celestial signs. All four occurrences belong to lists of Babylonian court specialists (Dan 2:27; 4:7; 5:7, 11). Spanish distinguishes between 'astrologos' and 'adivinos,' while English consistently uses 'astrologers,' highlighting the interpretive range of this single Aramaic term. DIVINATION PRACTITIONERS en: and-the-astrologers, astrologers | es: adivinos, astrólogos, y-adivinos | fr: et-tailler, tailler | de: [וגזרין], [וגזריא] Dan 2:27; Dan 4:7; Dan 5:7; Dan 5:11

2. Hitpael: be cut out, be hewn (2×) The Hitpael passive/reflexive sense: to be cut out or hewn from a larger mass, describing physical separation without human agency. Both occurrences depict the miraculous stone in Nebuchadnezzar's vision that was cut from a mountain without hands (Dan 2:34, 45). Spanish 'fue cortada' and English 'was cut out' preserve the passive voice, emphasizing divine rather than human action. CUTTING AND SEVERING
en: was-cut-out | es: fue-cortada | fr: tailler | de: [אתגזרת], [התגזרת] Dan 2:34; Dan 2:45

גֶּזֶר H1506 Prep-l / N-mp (2×)

pieces, halves — severed portions of sacrificial animals or divided waters

This word describes pieces created by cutting something in two, appearing in two dramatic contexts: the covenant ceremony where God passed between the halved animals Abraham prepared, and the Red Sea miracle where Israel walked through the 'divisions' of parted waters. In both cases, the term emphasizes the severed state—animals cut completely through creating a pathway, waters divided creating dry passage. The root meaning of 'cut' or 'divide' manifests in these portions or sections created by decisive separation. The usage links covenant-making (passing through cut pieces) with exodus deliverance (passing through cut waters).

(2×) Severed pieces or divisions, specifically halves of animals or parts of divided waters. Genesis 15:17 describes God's presence passing 'between the pieces' of Abraham's covenant sacrifice, while Psalm 136:13 celebrates God who divided the Red Sea 'into divisions/parts,' allowing Israel to pass through. Both contexts involve creating passageways through decisive cutting or dividing, whether of animal bodies or water masses. The term emphasizes the result of separation—distinct portions with space between. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES en: into-divisions, the-pieces | es: en-partes, las-piezas | fr: le-pièces, à-couper | de: den-Stücken, hinein-divisions Gen 15:17; Ps 136:13

גֶּזֶר H1507 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (15×)

Gezer — a fortified Canaanite city on the Ephraim-Judah border, later an Israelite Levitical city

Gezer was a strategically vital Canaanite city perched on the boundary between the coastal Shephelah and the hill country of Ephraim. Its king fell to Joshua at Lachish (Josh 10:33), yet Israel could not fully drive out its Canaanite inhabitants for centuries (Josh 16:10; Judg 1:29). Pharaoh eventually conquered and burned the city, handing it as a dowry to Solomon's Egyptian wife (1 Kgs 9:16–17). Assigned as a Levitical city (Josh 21:21), Gezer witnessed both David's victories over the Philistines (2 Sam 5:25; 1 Chr 14:16) and Solomon's ambitious building campaigns.

Gezer (place name) (15×) The fortified city-state of Gezer (Tell Jezer), situated on the road between Joppa and Jerusalem, controlling a key pass from the coastal plain into the highlands. Its 15 occurrences cover Joshua's conquest narratives, the Levitical city lists, David's Philistine battles, and Solomon's royal building projects. Cross-lingual glosses consistently render the toponym (eng 'Gezer/Gazer', spa 'Gezer/Guezer', deu 'Gazer/Gezer'), with only minor transliteration variation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Gazer, Gezer, in-Gazer | es: Gezer, Guezer, Guezér | fr: Gazer, Gezer, Guézer | de: Abschnitt, Gazer, Gezer Josh 10:33; Josh 12:12; Josh 16:3; Josh 16:10; Josh 21:21

גְּזָרָה H1508 Art / N-fs (8×)

A separate area or enclosure adjacent to the temple; also polished form or figure, describing beauty of appearance.

A noun from the root g-z-r ('to cut, separate'), carrying two distinct applications. In Ezekiel's temple vision (chapters 41-42), it designates the 'separate area' – a walled-off yard or open space on three sides of the temple building, an architectural term appearing seven times in precise measurements. In Lamentations 4:7, it shifts to describe bodily beauty: the princes' gizratam was 'like sapphire,' pointing to a polished, sculpted form. The root meaning of cutting or hewing connects both: a space cut off from surroundings, and a body cut or polished to beautiful proportions.

1. the separate area (7×) The separated enclosure or yard adjoining Ezekiel's visionary temple, an architectural term for a demarcated open space. Appearing in Ezekiel 41:12-15 and 42:1, 10, 13, it denotes the area 'cut off' or set apart behind and beside the temple proper. Spanish patio separado ('separate courtyard') and French jardin ('garden/yard') both interpret it as an enclosed open space. German Abschnitt ('section') captures the root idea of a delimited, separated portion of the temple complex. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: and-the-separate-area, the-separate-area | es: el-patio-separado, y-el-patio-separado | fr: et-jardin, jardin | de: der-Abschnitt, und-der-Abschnitt Ezek 41:12; Ezek 41:13; Ezek 41:14; Ezek 41:15; Ezek 42:1

2. their form (1×) The polished form, figure, or beauty of bodily appearance. Lamentations 4:7 describes the princes of Jerusalem: 'their form was like sapphire,' evoking a sculpted or gem-like beauty. The sense derives from the root's meaning of cutting or hewing, extended to the idea of something finely shaped or polished. Spanish su forma ('their form') reflects this aesthetic reading, distinguishing it sharply from the architectural usage in Ezekiel. This single occurrence preserves an older or rarer application of the root. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: their-form | es: su-forma | fr: [גזרתם] | de: [גזרתם] Lam 4:7

גְּזֵרָה H1509 N-fs (1×)

separation, cutting off; solitary land

Leviticus 16:22 uses this noun to describe where the scapegoat is sent: 'to a land of separation.' The term derives from roots meaning to cut or divide, here indicating a remote, isolated place from which the goat would not return. Some translations render it 'solitary land' or 'cut-off place,' emphasizing the geographical isolation. The ritual's theology is profound: the goat bearing Israel's sins is sent away permanently, symbolizing complete removal of guilt. The land's very name ('separation') underscores the irreversibility of this symbolic act.

(1×) A remote, separated land where the scapegoat is released (Leviticus 16:22), never to return. English 'cutting-off,' Spanish 'separación' (separation), and French/German cognates all emphasize the isolation. The root meaning of severing or dividing creates the sense of a place definitively cut off from inhabited areas. The ritual context gives theological significance: just as the land is separated from civilization, so Israel's sins are separated from the people. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING decree — an authoritative decision or edict, especially from heavenly watchers or divine counsel

en: cutting-off | es: separación | fr: cutting-off | de: cutting-weg Lev 16:22

גְּזֵרָה H1510 Prep-b / N-fsc (2×)

This Aramaic noun appears in Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the great tree, where 'the sentence is by the decree of the watchers' and 'the decision by the word of the holy ones.' The term emphasizes authoritative determination—decisions made in the heavenly council that will certainly be executed on earth. Related to the verb for cutting or deciding, the decree represents a binding judgment that has been pronounced and will be implemented. In Daniel's apocalyptic context, these decrees reveal that earthly kingdoms rise and fall according to heaven's determinations, not merely human politics.

(2×) An authoritative decree or decision, particularly from the heavenly council. Both occurrences in Daniel 4:17, 24 describe the judgment against Nebuchadnezzar as determined 'by decree of the watchers,' emphasizing that this earthly king's fate was decided in heaven's court. The Aramaic term (related to verbs for cutting/deciding) conveys binding authority—once the decree is issued, execution is certain. Translations (decree, decreto, décret) maintain the juridical force of this heavenly determination. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-decree-of, by-decree-of | es: por-decreto-de, y-el-decreto-de | fr: décret, et-décret | de: [בגזרת], [וגזרת] Dan 4:17; Dan 4:24

גִּזְרִי H1511 Conj-w (2×)

Girzite — a people group raided by David while residing in Philistine territory

The Girzites appear only in the account of David's time with the Philistines, listed among the peoples he raided while pretending loyalty to King Achish. The Hebrew text preserves both a written form (Ketiv: 'and the Gerzite') and a read-aloud form (Qere: 'and the Girzite'), reflecting early uncertainty about the exact name. This group, mentioned alongside Geshurites and Amalekites, inhabited territory in the Negev or Sinai region that David systematically attacked, leaving no survivors to report his true activities. The name's meaning and ethnic identity remain obscure.

(2×) A gentilic (ethnic) designation for a people group in southern Canaan or the Negev region. Both occurrences in 1 Samuel 27:8 are textual variants (Ketiv and Qere) in the list of peoples David raided during his Philistine sojourn. The double listing represents scribal preservation of variant traditions about the name's exact form. Little else is known about this group beyond David's military campaigns against them, which served to conceal his true loyalties from Achish. PERSONAL NAMES

en: [and-the-Girzite], and-the-Girzite | es: K(y-el-gizreo), Q[y-el-gizreo] | fr: [and-le-Girzite], et-le-Girzite | de: [and-der-Girzite] 1Sam 27:8

גַּחוֹן H1512 N-msc / 2ms (2×)

belly, underside — the lower body surface, especially of crawling creatures

This anatomical term describes the underside or belly of creatures that move along the ground. It appears in foundational texts about the serpent's curse ('on your belly you shall go') and in Levitical dietary law (creatures that go on the belly are unclean). The word may relate etymologically to terms for twisting or cord, suggesting the serpentine motion of belly-crawling. Both contexts associate belly-locomotion with cursedness or ritual impurity—moving on one's belly represents degradation from upright posture. The term specifically denotes the ventral surface in contact with the ground during movement.

(2×) The belly or underside of reptiles and other creatures that crawl. Genesis 3:14 curses the serpent to go 'on your belly' as punishment for tempting Eve, while Leviticus 11:42 categorizes creatures that 'go on the belly' as unclean. The term emphasizes the body part in contact with ground during crawling locomotion, associated biblically with curse, degradation, and ritual impurity. The suffix forms ('your belly,' 'the belly') particularize the anatomical reference. WOMB AND BELLY

en: belly, belly-your | es: tu-vientre, vientre | fr: ventre, ventre-ton | de: belly, deinem-Bauch Gen 3:14; Lev 11:42

גַּחֶלֶת H1513 N-fs (18×)

coal, glowing ember — a burning or live coal, used of sacrificial fire, theophanic visions, and divine judgment

Gachelet denotes a live coal or glowing ember, the kind that radiates heat and light. Its 18 occurrences in the Hebrew Bible consistently evoke intense, burning energy — whether literal fire on the altar or figurative fire in the hand of God. The plural gechalim ('coals') appears most often, typically in the construct phrase gachale-esh ('coals of fire'). In Leviticus 16:12, the high priest takes a censer full of coals of fire from the altar for the Day of Atonement incense — the only legitimate fire that may enter the Holy of Holies. The great theophany psalms describe God's appearance in storm language: 'coals of fire' blazed from before him (2 Sam 22:9, 13 = Ps 18:8, 12-13). Ezekiel's inaugural vision compares the living creatures to the appearance of burning coals of fire (Ezek 1:13; 10:2). Job's Leviathan breathes out coals (Job 41:21). Proverbs employs the image practically — walking on hot coals burns one's feet (Prov 6:28) — and proverbially, comparing quarrelsome speech to charcoal on embers (Prov 26:21). Isaiah 44:19 and 47:14 use it for ordinary cooking fire. The metaphor of preserving a single coal as one's last hope of posterity appears poignantly in 2 Samuel 14:7. Spanish coal, burning ember (18×) A live, glowing coal or burning ember, appearing in sacrificial, theophanic, and metaphorical contexts. The high priest fills his censer with gachale-esh ('coals of fire') from the altar on the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:12). In theophanic poetry, coals of fire blaze before God's presence (2 Sam 22:9, 13 = Ps 18:8, 12-13). Ezekiel's inaugural vision likens the living creatures to burning coals (Ezek 1:13), and an angel scatters coals over Jerusalem in judgment (Ezek 10:2). Leviathan's breath kindles coals (Job 41:21). Proverbs uses the image for the consequences of adultery — walking on hot coals (Prov 6:28) — and for the inflammatory nature of quarrelsome speech (Prov 26:21). The singular gachelet in 2 Sam 14:7 becomes a moving metaphor for a family's last surviving heir, their sole remaining ember of hope. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

'brasa,' French 'braise,' and German 'Kohle/Glut' capture the heat-radiating sense.

en: and-coals-of-, coal, coals | es: brasa, brasa-mía, brasas | fr: [גחלי], [גחליה], [גחליו] | de: [גחלי], [גחליה], [גחליו] Lev 16:12; 2Sam 14:7; 2Sam 22:9; 2Sam 22:13; Job 41:21

גַּחַם H1514 N-proper-ms (1×)
Gaham (personal name: possibly 'flame')
This name appears in Genesis 22:24 among the sons born to Nahor (Abraham's brother) by his concubine Reumah. The suggested etymology 'flame' connects to roots for burning or heat, though ancient names' meanings often remain conjectural. As Abraham's nephew, Gaham represents one of the Aramean peoples related to but distinct from Israel. The genealogical notice establishes kinship connections between Israel and surrounding peoples, a recurring interest in Genesis. Gaham himself plays no further role in biblical narrative beyond this genealogical reference.

(1×) A son of Nahor and Reumah in Genesis 22:24, possibly meaning 'flame' or 'burning.' All languages preserve the proper name through transliteration (Gaham/Gacham), following standard conventions for biblical personal names. The genealogical context links Abraham's family to Aramean peoples northeast of Canaan. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though theophoric-free names in Genesis often derive from natural phenomena or characteristics. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Gaham | es: Gacham | fr: Gaham | de: Gacham Gen 22:24

גַּחַר H1515 N-proper-ms (2×)
Gachar or Gahar, head of a family of returned exiles mentioned in Ezra and Nehemiah Gachar (also spelled Gahar) appears as the head of a family of temple servants who returned from Babylonian exile. The name occurs in parallel lists of returnees in both Ezra and Nehemiah, confirming this family's place among the repatriated community that helped rebuild Jerusalem's worship life.

(2×) A personal name designating the patriarch of one of the families of temple servants (Nethinim) who returned with Zerubbabel from exile. The dual attestation in Ezra 2:47 and Nehemiah 7:49 reflects the careful record-keeping of post-exilic community organization, with the family identified as 'sons of Gachar' in both genealogical registers. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Gachar, Gahar | es: Gahar, Gajar | fr: [גחר] | de: [גחר] Ezra 2:47; Neh 7:49

גַּיְא H1516 Art / N-cs (61×)
gay – valley, ravine; a geographic depression between hills, often in place names
The masculine noun gay (also spelled ge, with construct gey) denotes a valley or ravine – a deep geographic depression between mountains or hills. It appears both as a common noun (Isa 40:4, 'every valley shall be lifted up') and in construct chains forming some of the Bible's most theologically charged place names: ge-hinnom ('Valley of Hinnom,' the refuse-burning gorge outside Jerusalem that gave rise to the concept of Gehenna), emek ha-melakh ('Valley of Salt'), and the valley in Moab where Israel encamped (Num 21:20). Unlike the broader emek ('wide valley/plain'), gay typically suggests a narrower, more rugged terrain feature. Spanish valle, French vallee, and German Tal render it consistently.

valley, ravine (61×) A valley or ravine between hills or mountains, used both as a common geographic noun and as part of theologically significant place names. The most consequential compound is ge-hinnom, the Valley of Hinnom south of Jerusalem (Josh 15:8; 2 Kgs 23:10), whose association with child sacrifice and later refuse-burning became the source of the New Testament term Gehenna. Cross-lingual glosses – Spanish valle, French vallee, German Tal – map uniformly to a single geographic-depression concept across all 61 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Valley-of, a-valley, in-Valley-of | es: Valle-de, en-valle-de, la-Matanza | fr: dans-vallée-de, vallée, vallée-de | de: Tal, Tal-von, [גיא] Num 21:20; Deut 3:29; Deut 4:46; Deut 34:6; Josh 8:11

גִּיד H1517 Conj-w / N-mp (7×)
Sinew, tendon; fibrous tissue connecting muscle to bone, used literally and figuratively for stubbornness.
Denotes a sinew or tendon, the tough connective tissue of the body. In its most memorable use, it names the 'sinew of the hip' (gid hannasheh) that was touched in Jacob's wrestling at Peniel (Gen 32:32), giving rise to a lasting dietary law. The word also appears in vivid figurative speech: Isaiah 48:4 describes Israel's stubbornness as an 'iron sinew' in the neck. Cognate with Aramaic gida and related to Arabic jid (neck), the term spans both anatomical description and powerful metaphor.

sinew, tendon (7×) A sinew or tendon, the fibrous connective tissue binding muscle to bone. Used anatomically in Job 10:11 alongside skin, flesh, and bones as the structural fabric of the human body, and in Ezekiel 37:6,8 in the vision of dry bones being reconstituted with sinews and flesh. The 'sinew of the hip' (gid hannasheh) in Genesis 32:32 refers specifically to the sciatic tendon displaced during Jacob's wrestling, the basis for the dietary prohibition. Figuratively, Isaiah 48:4 speaks of a 'sinew of iron' in the neck to depict obstinate refusal. Spanish renders 'tendon,' while English uses 'sinew,' both capturing the anatomical core. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-a-sinew-of, and-sinews, in-sinew-of | es: en-tendón-de, tendones, tendones, | fr: [וגיד], dans-sinew-de, et-וגידים | de: [גדים], [גידי], [וגיד] Gen 32:32; Job 10:11; Job 40:17; Isa 48:4

גִּיחַ H1518 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (6×)
giach – to burst forth, rush out; of water breaking through, a child emerging from the womb
The verb giach (also guach) means to burst forth or come out with force. Its six occurrences span several vivid images: a river surging forth in Job 40:23, the primordial sea breaking from the womb in Job 38:8, God drawing a child from the mother's body in Psalm 22:9, Micah's command to 'writhe and burst forth' in labor (Mic 4:10), warriors rushing out from ambush (Judg 20:33), and Egypt thrashing about like a crocodile (Ezek 32:2). The word straddles the boundary between literal physical emergence and figurative eruption. Spanish el que me saco ('the one who drew me out') in Psalm 22 nicely captures the transitive sense, while French jaillir ('to gush') and English 'burst forth' convey the intransitive force.

burst forth, come forth (6×) To burst forth, rush out, or come forth with sudden force – used of both intransitive eruption (water, armies) and transitive drawing forth (a child from the womb). Job 40:23 describes a river that surges without panic; Job 38:8 depicts the sea bursting from the cosmic womb at creation. Psalm 22:9 shifts to the personal: God is the one who drew the psalmist forth at birth. Micah 4:10 commands Zion to 'burst forth' in the agony of exile-as-labor. Spanish el que me saco and French jaillir together illuminate the dual transitive/intransitive character of this verb across all six occurrences. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: and-groan, and-you-burst-forth, bursts-forth | es: brote, cuando-brotaba, el-que-me-sacó | fr: dans-בגיחו-lui, et-jaillir, jaillir | de: [בגיחו], [וגחי], [ותגח] Judg 20:33; Job 38:8; Job 40:23; Ps 22:9; Ezek 32:2

H1519 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-fp (1×)
stirring up, churning (the sea)
Daniel 7:2 employs a feminine plural participle describing the four winds of heaven 'stirring up' the great sea, from which emerge the four symbolic beasts. The image evokes chaos and divine providence working through natural and supernatural forces. The verb conveys violent agitation—not gentle rippling but storm-force churning that brings forth the apocalyptic visions. This rare participial form contributes to Daniel's distinctive Aramaic vocabulary, part of the book's heavenly throne-room and cosmic conflict imagery.

(1×) The violent stirring or churning of the sea in Daniel 7:2, caused by the four winds that precede the apocalyptic beast visions. English 'stirring up,' Spanish 'agitando' (agitating), capture the tumultuous action. French 'poitrine' (chest/breast) appears anomalous, possibly a translation error or variant reading. The imagery evokes primordial chaos, from which symbolic world empires emerge—a fitting apocalyptic metaphor for history's turbulent flow under divine sovereignty. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: stirring-up | es: agitando | fr: poitrine | de: [מגיחן] Dan 7:2

גִּיחָה H1520 N-proper-fs (1×)
Giah (place name: possibly 'from a spring')
This location appears in 2 Samuel 2:24 during the pursuit following the battle between David's and Ish-bosheth's forces. Joab and Abishai pursued Abner 'as far as the hill of Ammah which is before Giah, on the way to the wilderness of Gibeon.' The name may derive from roots meaning 'gush forth' or 'spring,' suggesting a water source. The site remains unidentified archaeologically, but the narrative's geographical precision serves to anchor this episode in the civil war that followed Saul's death.

(1×) A geographical marker near Gibeon in Benjamin (2 Samuel 2:24), possibly named for a spring or water source. All languages preserve the proper name through transliteration (Giah/Giaj), standard for unidentified biblical sites. The context—a boundary in Joab's pursuit of Abner—provides relative location (before Giah, toward Gibeon's wilderness) without enabling modern identification. The name contributes to the narrative's historical particularity. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Giah | es: Giaj | fr: Giah | de: Giah 2Sam 2:24

גִּיחוֹן H1521 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (6×)
Gihon – (1) a river of Eden; (2) the spring near Jerusalem used for royal anointing Gihon (meaning 'a bursting forth,' from the root g-y-ch 'to gush') names two distinct water sources in Scripture. The first is one of the four rivers of Eden (Gen 2:13), said to wind through the land of Cush – its precise identification has long been debated. The second is the famous spring east of Jerusalem, today identified with the 'Virgin's Spring' (Ain Umm ed-Daraj), whose waters Hezekiah later channeled through his celebrated tunnel (2 Chr 32:30). It is at this Gihon that Solomon was anointed king (1 Kgs 1:33, 38, 45), deliberately outside the city walls in a public ceremony. Spanish Gihon, French Gihon, and German Gihon/Gichon all preserve the toponym with minimal variation.

Gihon (6×) The proper name Gihon, referring to two distinct water sources: (1) one of the four rivers of Eden (Gen 2:13), whose course through 'the land of Cush' has generated centuries of geographical debate, and (2) the spring near Jerusalem – the principal water source of ancient Zion – where Solomon was anointed king (1 Kgs 1:33, 38, 45) and whose upper waters Hezekiah redirected via tunnel into the city (2 Chr 32:30; 33:14). The etymological meaning 'a bursting forth' aptly describes a spring. Cross-lingual evidence is fully uniform, with every language preserving the name as a direct transliteration. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Gihon, at-Gihon, to-Gihon | es: Gihón, Guijón, en-Guijón | fr: Gihon, [גיחון], [לגיחון] | de: Gichon, Gihon, [גיחון] Gen 2:13; 1Kgs 1:33; 1Kgs 1:38; 1Kgs 1:45; 2Chr 32:30

גֵּיחֲזִי H1522 N-proper-ms (12×)
Gehazi – servant of the prophet Elisha, known for his greed and resulting leprosy
Gehazi (gechazi, possibly 'valley of vision') is the personal servant of the prophet Elisha, whose narrative arc in 2 Kings traces a trajectory from trusted attendant to cautionary figure of greed. He first appears as a capable intermediary, suggesting to Elisha that the Shunammite woman has no son (2 Kgs 4:12-14), and later running ahead with Elisha's staff to lay on the dead child (4:25-31). His downfall comes when he secretly pursues Naaman to extract the gifts Elisha had refused, lying to both his master and the healed leper (2 Kgs 5:20-27). Elisha pronounces Naaman's leprosy upon Gehazi and his descendants forever. He reappears one final time recounting Elisha's miracles to the king (2 Kgs 8:4-5). Spanish Giezi, French Guehazi, and German Gehasi preserve the name.

Gehazi (12×) The personal servant of the prophet Elisha who served as intermediary (2 Kgs 4:12) but was struck with leprosy after deceitfully taking gifts from Naaman (2 Kgs 5:20-27). All twelve occurrences designate this single individual. Spanish Giezi, French Guehazi, and German Gehazi confirm one referent across all contexts. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Gehazi, and-Gehazi, to-Gehazi | es: Giezi, Guejazí, Y-Giezi | fr: Guéhazi, et-Guéhazi, à-Guéhazi | de: Gehazi, und-Gehazi, zu-Gehazi 2Kgs 4:12; 2Kgs 4:14; 2Kgs 4:25; 2Kgs 4:27; 2Kgs 4:29

גִּיל H1523 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (46×)
To rejoice, exult, or be glad; expressive jubilation often paired with simchah in worship contexts
A verb of exuberant, outward joy frequently paired with samach (rejoice) in the Psalms. Gil carries a sense of spinning or whirling delight — Arabic cognates suggest circular, excited motion. It appears most often in calls to worship (Ps 2:11, "Rejoice with trembling") and prophetic promises of restoration (Isa 49:13; Zech 9:9). Spanish "gozarse" and French "exulter" both capture the intensity that distinguishes gil from quieter forms of gladness.

1. rejoice, be glad (43×) The core verbal sense: to rejoice, be glad, exult. Nearly always appears alongside samach or in worship contexts — "Let the heavens rejoice" (Ps 96:11), "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion" (Zech 9:9). Multilingual glosses consistently choose strong terms: Spanish gozarse, French exulter, English rejoice, pointing to demonstrative, exuberant joy rather than mere contentment. REJOICING AND GREETING
en: And-I-shall-rejoice, and-be-glad, and-dry-land | es: Y-me-gozaré, gocense, nos-gozaremos | fr: [ותגל], et-exulter, exulter | de: [גילו], [גילי], [ותגל] 1Chr 16:31; Ps 2:11; Ps 9:14; Ps 13:4; Ps 13:5

2. rejoicing (nominal/adverbial) (2×) The infinitive absolute used adverbially or nominally to express the manner or act of rejoicing, as in Prov 23:24 where a father "shall greatly rejoice" (gil yagil). German and French leave this form untranslated, while Spanish renders it as the gerund regocijando, highlighting its intensifying function within the verbal system. REJOICING AND GREETING
en: [rejoicing], rejoicing | es: (regocijando), [regocijando] | fr: se-réjouir | de: [(גיל)], [[גול]] Prov 23:24

3. (1×) A single disputed occurrence at Hosea 10:5 where context suggests trembling fear rather than joy — English renders "shall tremble" while Spanish retains "shall rejoice" (se regocijarán). The ambiguity likely arises from ironic prophetic reversal: what was worship-joy for the golden calf becomes fearful anguish at its removal. REJOICING AND GREETING
en: shall-tremble | es: se-regocijarán | fr: réjouir | de: [יגילו] Hos 10:5

גִּיל H1524a N-ms (8×)
Rejoicing, exultation; intense communal or religious joy, often paired with simchah as its poetic parallel.
A noun from the root g-y-l meaning 'to spin around with joy,' conveying an exuberant, almost physical gladness. In the Psalms it appears as the 'joy of my rejoicing' (Ps 43:4) and as a shout rising from the meadows themselves (Ps 65:12). Prophetic texts pair it with simchah to describe the festive gladness that God removes as judgment—wine-treading joy ceasing in Moab (Isa 16:10; Jer 48:33) and harvest celebration stripped from Israel (Joel 1:16). Hosea warns Israel not to 'rejoice unto exultation' like the nations (Hos 9:1), showing that true gīl belongs to covenant relationship with God.

rejoicing, exultation (8×) Rejoicing or exultation as an abstract quality—an intense, often communal gladness associated with worship, harvest, or covenant celebration. Multilingual renderings converge on 'rejoicing/gladness' (English), 'regocijo/gozo' (Spanish), 'allégresse/joie' (French), and 'Fröhlichkeit' (German), all pointing to a heightened, celebratory joy. Typically paralleled with simchah (Ps 45:15; Isa 16:10; Joel 1:16), it describes the kind of exuberant delight that characterizes right relationship with God (Ps 43:4) or whose absence signals divine judgment (Jer 48:33). JOY AND EXULTATION

en: and-gladness, and-rejoicing, and-with-joy | es: mi-alegría, regocijo, y-gozo | fr: et-allégresse, et-joie, joie | de: [גיל], [וגיל], mein-Fröhlichkeit Job 3:22; Ps 43:4; Ps 45:15; Ps 65:12; Isa 16:10

גִּיל H1524b Prep-k / N-msc / 2mp (1×)

age, generation; circle of time

Daniel 1:10 contains an Aramaic noun meaning age or generation: 'the youths who are of your age.' The term relates to Arabic jīl and Samaritan Hebrew for 'generation,' and to the Talmudic phrase 'contemporary' (literally 'son of his age'). The semantic development from 'circle' to 'generation' to 'age cohort' reflects ancient Near Eastern cyclical concepts of time. This Aramaism in Daniel reflects the linguistic milieu of the Babylonian court, where multiple languages and dialects intersected.

(1×) Age or generation in Daniel 1:10, specifically the age cohort of the youths with Daniel. English 'your age,' Spanish 'vuestra edad' (your age), and French 'vague' (wave/generation) all attempt to render the temporal comparison. German preserves the Hebrew form. The context requires identifying peers of comparable age for the king's dietary comparison. The Arabic and Talmudic cognates confirm the generation/age-cohort meaning. OLD AGE

en: are-your-age | es: como-vuestra-edad | fr: vague | de: [כגילכם] Dan 1:10

גִּילָה H1525 N-fsc (2×)

rejoicing, exultation; a verbal noun expressing jubilant celebration

This feminine noun denotes rejoicing or exultation, capturing the emotional intensity of celebration. Isaiah uses it twice in contexts of eschatological joy—once in the oracle promising the wilderness will blossom with 'joy and singing' (35:2), and again in the vision of Jerusalem recreated as 'a rejoicing' (65:18). The word's rarity underscores its poetic and prophetic register.

(2×) An abstract noun of action denoting jubilant rejoicing or exultation. In Isaiah 35:2, it appears in construct with 'and singing,' describing the wilderness transformed into a place of celebration. In Isaiah 65:18, God promises to create Jerusalem as 'a rejoicing' itself—not merely a place where people rejoice, but rejoicing personified. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'con gozo,' English 'with joy') confirms the celebratory, joyful character of this term. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: a-rejoicing, with-joy | es: con-gozo, por-gozo | fr: [גילה], [גילת] | de: [גילה], [גילת] Isa 35:2; Isa 65:18

גִּילֹנִי H1526 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

the Gilonite, a gentile adjective referring to an inhabitant of Giloh

This gentile designation identifies someone from the town of Giloh in the hill country of Judah. Most famously, Ahithophel the Gilonite served as David's counselor before defecting to Absalom's rebellion (2 Samuel 15:12). The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:36 preserves the same designation, though with a textual variant in the Hebrew manuscript tradition.

(2×) A gentile adjective meaning 'of or from Giloh,' used to identify Ahithophel's hometown origin. The term appears in 2 Samuel 15:12 during the account of Absalom's conspiracy, and in 2 Samuel 23:34 among David's mighty men (with a parallel in 1 Chronicles 11:36). The definite article typically accompanies the term in Hebrew, reflecting standard gentile usage ('the Gilonite'). PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Gilonite | es: el-guilonita | fr: le-Gilonite | de: der-Gilonite 2Sam 15:12; 2Sam 23:34

גִּינַת H1527 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ginath, the father of Tibni who contended for Israel's throne after Omri

Ginath appears only as the father of Tibni, who challenged Omri for kingship over Israel following Zimri's death. The brief civil war ended with Tibni's defeat and Omri's establishment of a new dynasty. Though Ginath himself plays no active role in the narrative, his name is preserved in both references to his son's failed bid for power.

(2×) A personal name identifying the father of Tibni, who led a faction opposing Omri's claim to the throne of Israel. Both occurrences in 1 Kings 16:21-22 appear in the phrase 'Tibni son of Ginath,' serving to distinguish this royal contender by his patronymic. The name's Semitic root may relate to 'garden,' though its precise etymology remains uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ginat | es: Ginat | fr: Ginat | de: Ginat 1Kgs 16:21; 1Kgs 16:22

גִּיר H1528 N-msd (1×)

plaster, whitewash (lime-based coating)

This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel 5:5 during Belshazzar's feast: the divine hand wrote on 'the plaster of the wall.' The word denotes chalk, lime, or plaster—the white coating applied to palace walls in ancient Mesopotamia. The Targum confirms this meaning, which persists in later Jewish Aramaic. The detail enhances the scene's dramatic visual: dark letters appearing on white plaster, visible to the terrified king and court. The writing surface itself becomes part of the supernatural sign's impact.

(1×) The plastered or whitewashed surface of Belshazzar's palace wall in Daniel 5:5, where the mysterious hand writes the judgment oracle. English 'plaster,' Spanish 'yeso' (plaster/gypsum), and French 'chaux' (lime/chalk) all identify the lime-based coating common in ancient Near Eastern architecture. German preserves the Aramaic form. The white surface provided ideal contrast for the divine writing to appear clearly, adding to the sign's terrifying visibility. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4300 WITH 3 SENSES

en: plaster-of | es: el-yeso | fr: chaux | de: [גירא] Dan 5:5

גִּישָׁן H1529 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Geshan (personal name in Judah's genealogy)

This name appears in 1 Chronicles 2:47 among Caleb's descendants through Judah's lineage. The Chronicles genealogies trace multiple branches of Judah's tribal family, establishing territorial and clan relationships. Geshan represents one minor figure in this extensive genealogical network. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though it may relate to roots for feeling or touching. Like many genealogical names in Chronicles, Geshan serves primarily to establish family connections rather than to mark an individual with narrative significance.

(1×) A descendant of Judah through Caleb's line in 1 Chronicles 2:47. All languages preserve the proper name through transliteration (Geshan/Gueisan), with French and German maintaining the Hebrew form including the conjunction. The genealogical context serves Chronicles' interest in establishing Judah's clans and their relationships, though Geshan himself receives no further mention in Scripture. The name contributes to the comprehensive family archive. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Geshan | es: y-Gueisan | fr: [וגישן] | de: [וגישן] 1Chr 2:47

גַּל H1530 Prep-l / N-mpc / 3ms (34×)
heap, wave, billow (of water or grain)
This noun appears in varied contexts denoting heaped masses—waves of the sea, piles of grain, or mounds of earth. Its semantic range extends from Exodus's heaped waters at the Red Sea crossing to Nehemiah's grain heaps and Jeremiah's burial mounds. The root conveys the basic image of something accumulated or piled high. When applied to water, it suggests waves or swells; for grain, threshing-floor piles; for tombs, earthen mounds. This metaphorical flexibility makes it useful across agricultural, geographical, and liturgical contexts.

1. heap, mound of stones (18×) Heaps or piles appearing in multiple contexts: waves in Exodus 15:8, grain heaps in agricultural settings, or burial mounds. The word's flexibility allows it to describe anything heaped or accumulated. Multilingual evidence varies by context: 'waves' when describing water, 'heaps' for grain, 'mounds' for tombs. The unifying image is vertical accumulation, whether natural (waves) or human-made (threshing piles, burial cairns). HEAPS AND MOUNDS
en: a-heap, a-heap-of, for-heaps | es: como-montones, el-montón, el-montón-de-piedras | fr: [כגלים], heap, heap-de | de: Welle, [גל], [כגלים] Gen 31:46; Gen 31:48; Gen 31:51; Gen 31:52

2. wave, billow (15×) A wave or billow of the sea — used both literally for ocean swells and figuratively for overwhelming floods of trouble or divine power. God sets a limit for the proud waves at Job 38:11; the psalmist cries that 'all your waves have gone over me' (Ps 42:7); and Psalm 89:9 praises God who 'stills the roaring of the seas, the roaring of their waves.' Spanish 'olas,' French 'vagues,' and German 'Wellen' uniformly distinguish this liquid, dynamic sense from the static stone-heap. WAVE BILLOW SEA
en: and-Your-waves, and-your-waves, her-waves | es: como-olas-de, olas, olas-de-el | fr: [גלים], [לגליו], et-tes-vagues | de: Welle, [גלין], [גלים] Job 38:11; Ps 42:7; Ps 65:7; Ps 89:9; Ps 107:25

3. spring, fountain (1×) A spring or fountain of water, attested once at Song of Solomon 4:12: 'a garden locked is my sister, my bride, a spring locked, a fountain sealed.' The beloved is compared to a גַּל נָעוּל — a hidden source of living water. Every target language shifts to spring vocabulary — English 'spring,' Spanish 'fuente,' French 'source,' German 'Quelle' — confirming a fully distinct lexical sense. Some scholars relate this meaning to a different root, but the Masoretic text places it under the same lemma. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: spring | es: fuente | fr: source | de: [גל] Song 4:12

גֻּלָּה H1531
bowl, basin; rounded vessel for oil lamps or decorative capitals on pillars
This term describes bowl-shaped objects serving various functions. In Zechariah's night vision, a golden bowl holds oil for the lampstand, fed by two olive trees. Ecclesiastes uses it metaphorically in death imagery—the golden bowl shattered. Solomon's temple featured decorative bowls as capitals atop pillars. Judges and Joshua mention springs or basins of water called by this name, possibly referring to pool-like formations. The consistent element is the curved, bowl-like shape, whether literal vessels, architectural features, or natural formations.

גַּלָּב H1532 Art / N-mp (1×)
barbers (those who cut hair and beards)
Ezekiel 5:1 contains the only biblical occurrence of this occupational term. The prophet receives a bizarre sign-act command: 'Take a barber's razor and pass it over your head and beard.' The word derives from roots meaning to shave or cut, here nominalized to designate the profession. Phoenician inscriptions confirm the term's wider Semitic usage. The symbolism is profound: Jerusalem's inhabitants will be 'shaved'—removed through death, exile, and dispersion. The barber's tool becomes an instrument of divine judgment rather than routine grooming.

(1×) The occupational designation 'barbers' in Ezekiel 5:1, those who professionally cut hair and shave beards. English, Spanish, and French all use their respective words for 'barber' (barberos, barbier), while German preserves the Hebrew plural form. The context—'a barber's razor'—makes the professional tool metaphorical for Jerusalem's coming judgment through deportation. Phoenician cognates confirm the term's ancient Semitic usage for this specialized craft. CUTTING AND SEVERING
en: the-barbers | es: los-barberos | fr: barbier | de: [הגלבים] Ezek 5:1

גִּלְבֹּעַ H1533 Art / N-proper-fs (8×)
Gilboa (mountain range where Saul died)
This mountain range in northern Israel became infamous as the site of Saul's final battle and death. First and Second Samuel, along with Chronicles, repeatedly name Gilboa in connection with this catastrophic defeat by the Philistines. David's lament in 2 Samuel 1:21 curses the mountains: 'Let there be no dew or rain upon you, O mountains of Gilboa!' The name may mean 'bubbling spring' or relate to baldness/barrenness, ironically appropriate given David's curse. The geographical site remains identifiable in modern Israel, still bearing witness to that ancient tragedy.

the Gilboa (8×) The mountain range where Saul and his sons died fighting the Philistines (1 Samuel 31; 2 Samuel 1). All languages preserve the proper name (Gilboa/Gilboa/Gilboa/Gilboa) through transliteration, standard for significant biblical geography. David's poetic curse made Gilboa synonymous with barrenness and tragedy in Israelite memory. The site's continued identification shows how certain biblical locations retain their names and associations across millennia. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Gilboa, in-Gilboa, in-the-Gilboa | es: Gilboa, Guilboa, el-Gilboa | fr: [גלבע], dans-Gilboa, dans-le-Gilboa | de: [גלבע], der-Gilboa, in-Gilboa 1Sam 28:4; 1Sam 31:1; 1Sam 31:8; 2Sam 1:6; 2Sam 1:21

גַּלְגַּל H1534 Prep-l (11×)
Wheel or wheelwork (of chariots or Ezekiel's throne-vision); also whirlwind or whirling dust driven before the wind.
A reduplicated noun from the root galal ('to roll'), whose very sound evokes circular motion. In its concrete sense, it refers to wheels – whether the chariot wheels whose rumbling signals approaching armies (Isa 5:28; Jer 47:3) or the mysterious rotating wheelwork beside the cherubim in Ezekiel's throne-vision (Ezek 10:2, 6, 13). In Ecclesiastes 12:6 it is the wheel at the well, part of the poem's imagery of aging and death. The figurative sense shifts to whirling dust or chaff driven before the wind, a vivid image of enemies scattered by God (Ps 83:13; Isa 17:13). In Psalm 77:18, the thunder of God resounds 'in the whirlwind,' merging the spinning motion with divine theophany.

1. wheel, wheelwork (8×) A wheel or set of wheels, referring to chariot wheels or the revolving wheelwork in Ezekiel's vision. Isaiah 5:28 and Jeremiah 47:3 describe chariot wheels whose rumbling announces military advance – Spanish 'ruedas' and French renderings confirm the concrete mechanical sense. In Ezekiel 10:2, 6, 13, the galgal is the turning wheelwork beside the cherubim, and in Ecclesiastes 12:6 it is the wheel at the cistern. The reduplicated form (gal-gal) itself mimics the sound and feel of something rolling. WHEELS AND WHEELWORK
en: and-his-wheels, and-wheel, his-wheels | es: la-rueda, sus-ruedas, y-rueda | fr: [גלגליו], [וגלגליו], et-Guilgal | de: [גלגליו], [הגלגל], [וגלגל] Eccl 12:6; Isa 5:28; Jer 47:3; Ezek 10:2; Ezek 10:6

2. whirlwind, whirling dust (3×) Whirlwind or whirling dust/chaff driven before the wind, used in vivid figurative language for God scattering enemies. In Psalm 83:13, the psalmist prays 'make them like whirling dust (galgal), like chaff before the wind,' and Isaiah 17:13 uses the same image for nations fleeing before divine rebuke.

Psalm 77:18 places God's thunder 'in the galgal' – the whirlwind as a vehicle of theophany. Spanish 'torbellino' and French 'tourbillon' both capture the spinning, windborne quality that distinguishes this from the mechanical wheel sense. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: and-like-whirling-dust, like-whirling-dust, was-in-the-whirlwind | es: como-el-torbellino, en-el-torbellino, y-como-rodillo | fr: [וכגלגל], comme-tourbillon, dans-tourbillon | de: Krieg-in-der-whirlwind, [וכגלגל], wie-whirling-Staub Ps 77:18; Ps 83:13; Isa 17:13

גַּלְגַּל H1535 N-mpc / 3ms (1×)

wheels (of God's throne-chariot)

This rare Aramaic word appears only in Daniel's vision of the Ancient of Days, describing the fiery wheels of the divine throne-chariot. The imagery evokes Ezekiel's vision of God's mobile throne, where wheels symbolize divine mobility and omnipresence. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'ruedas', English 'wheels') confirms the mechanical, rotating sense central to this apocalyptic vision.

(1×) The wheels of God's throne are not merely transportation devices but symbols of divine sovereignty moving through history. Daniel 7:9 describes them as burning with fire, suggesting both majesty and judgment. The Aramaic plural form with possessive suffix ('its wheels') emphasizes that these belong to the throne itself, integral to the divine presence. WHEELS AND WHEELWORK

en: its-wheels | es: ruedas-de-él | fr: morceaux | de: [גלגלוהי] Dan 7:9

גֻּלְגֹּל H1536 N-msc (1×)

wheel (of a cart or threshing sledge)

This Hebrew term denotes the wheel of agricultural equipment, appearing in Isaiah's farming metaphor. The prophet uses the cart-wheel to illustrate God's measured approach to discipline—threshing grain requires skill, not brute force. Though the English gloss 'drives' reflects a verb, the underlying Hebrew refers to the wheel itself, crucial to the agricultural imagery.

(1×) Isaiah 28:28 employs this wheel in a parable about divine wisdom: God doesn't crush His people like grain under endless pressure. The wheel's controlled, purposeful motion represents calibrated judgment. The agricultural context connects to ancient Near Eastern threshing practices, where wheels separated chaff from grain without destroying the kernel. WHEELS AND WHEELWORK

en: and-he-drives | es: la-rueda-de | fr: [גלגל] | de: [גלגל] Isa 28:28

גִּלְגָּל H1537 N-proper-fs (41×)

Gilgal (multiple sites: 'circle of stones')

Multiple biblical locations bore this name, most famously the site near Jericho where Israel first camped after crossing Jordan and erected memorial stones. The name means 'circle' or 'wheel,' likely referring to stone circles at these sanctuary sites. Joshua 4-5 establishes Gilgal as Israel's first worship center in Canaan, where circumcision was renewed and Passover celebrated. Later texts mention a Gilgal in Benjamin's territory and possibly another in northern Israel. The prophets sometimes criticized Gilgal's corrupt worship. This name's popularity reflects the significance of circular stone monuments in ancient Israelite religion.

Gilgal (place name) (41×) A place name (primarily the Jordan valley site) meaning 'circle,' likely of memorial stones erected by Joshua (Joshua 4:19-20). All languages transliterate Gilgal unchanged, recognizing its status as a major biblical site. The etymology connects to the Hebrew root for 'roll,' which Joshua 5:9 exploits in a wordplay: 'I have rolled away the reproach of Egypt.' Multiple Gilgals in biblical geography reflect the name's association with sacred stone circles. WHEELS AND WHEELWORK

en: Gilgal, the-Gilgal, to-the-Gilgal | es: Gilgal, a-Gilgal, el-Gilgal | fr: Guilgal, le-Gilgal, le-Guilgal | de: Gilgal, der-Gilgal Deut 11:30; Josh 4:19; Josh 4:20; Josh 5:9; Josh 5:10

גֻּלְגֹּלֶת H1538 Art / N-fs (12×)

skull, head (bone structure)

This anatomical term appears primarily in violent contexts—battlefield deaths, executions, and Jael's famous tent-peg blow to Sisera's skull. The word specifically denotes the cranium or head bone rather than the head generally. Judges 9:53 describes a woman dropping a millstone on Abimelech's skull; 1 Chronicles 10:10 reports the Philistines fastening Saul's skull in the temple of Dagon. Most famously, 'Golgotha' derives from the Aramaic form meaning 'place of a skull.' The term's consistent association with death and violence made it apt for naming the crucifixion site.

1. head, poll (unit of counting) (9×) The skull or cranium in military and execution contexts. Judges, Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles use it when describing fatal head wounds or trophy-taking (enemy skulls displayed in temples). The Aramaic cognate gave rise to 'Golgotha' in the Gospels. Translations consistently render as 'skull' across languages, as the anatomical specificity (bone rather than flesh) matters for understanding the violent contexts—crushing blows, trophy displays, and the crucifixion site's name. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-their-heads, for-the-head, per-head | es: por-cabeza, por-cabezas-de-ellos, por-la-cabeza | fr: [לגלגלתם], par-leur-heads, per-tête | de: [לגלגלתם], durch-ihr-Haeupter, fuer-der-Haupt Exod 16:16; Exod 38:26; Num 1:2; Num 1:18; Num 1:20

2. skull (anatomical) (3×) The literal bony cranium or skull. In Judges 9:53 a woman fractures Abimelech's skull with an upper millstone, and in 2 Kings 9:35 Jehu's men find only Jezebel's skull, feet, and palms remaining after the dogs. First Chronicles 10:10 records Saul's skull fastened in the temple of Dagon. Multilingual evidence confirms the anatomical reading: Spanish 'cráneo,' Arabic 'jumjuma,' and Aramaic gulgaltā all point to the physical cranium. FLESH AND BODY

en: his-skull, the-skull | es: el-cráneo, su-cráneo | fr: [גלגלתו], le-skull, son-skull | de: [גלגלתו], der-skull, sein-skull Judg 9:53; 2Kgs 9:35; 1Chr 10:10

גֶּלֶד H1539 N-msc / 1cs (1×)

skin (human outer covering)

Job uses this word in his desperate lament, describing how he has sewn sackcloth over his skin. The cognates across Semitic languages (Arabic jild, Aramaic gildā) all point to the outer covering of the body. In Job's context, the skin represents his physical existence, now marked by suffering and ritual mourning—a boundary between his inner anguish and the world.

(1×) Job 16:15 presents a vivid image of mourning: sackcloth sewn onto skin. This isn't merely clothing but a visible marker of grief merged with the body itself. The skin here functions as the surface where Job's inner devastation becomes outwardly manifest. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'piel', French 'peau') confirm the straightforward anatomical sense, though Job's usage carries profound symbolic weight—his very flesh has become an altar of sorrow. SKIN AND LEATHER

en: my-skin | es: mi-piel | fr: mon-peau-moi | de: [גלדי] Job 16:15

גָּלָה H1540 Art / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (186×)

uncover, reveal, go into exile — verb of exposure and displacement: literal (nakedness, covering) or abstract (secrets, divine truth); causative stems = exile

This verb (186×) operates across a spectrum from physical uncovering to revelatory disclosure to forced displacement. In Qal it means 'go into exile' or 'reveal'; Piel means 'uncover' (especially nakedness) or 'make known' (secrets); Hifil means 'cause to go into exile, deport'; Nifal means 'be revealed, appear'. The semantic bridge from 'uncover' to 'exile' likely reflects the idea of being stripped away from homeland. Arabic ر (emigrate, uncover), Korean 드러내다 (reveal) and 유배가다 (exile), Spanish descubrir/revelar and desterrar/deportar all mirror this polysemy. Multilingual evidence shows exposure and displacement clustering in distinct but related semantic zones.

1. Piel: uncover or strip bare (40×) Piel 'uncover, strip bare' (40×) is the factitive sense: physically removing a covering, exposing nakedness, or stripping something bare. Arabic ، Korean 벗기다/드러내다, Hindi उघाड़ना, Spanish descubrir. Concentrated in Leviticus 18 ('You shall not uncover the nakedness of…' 18:6–18) and Ezekiel 16, 23. Also metaphorical: uncovering the foundation (Hab 3:13), uncovering the shield (Isa 22:6). Multilingual glosses clearly focus on physical exposure. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING en: he-uncovered, to-uncover, uncover | es: descubrirás, descubrió, para-descubrir | fr: découvrir, il-découvrit, à-découvrir | de: aufdecken, er-deckte-auf, zu-aufdecken Lev 18:6; Lev 18:7; Lev 18:8; Lev 18:9

2. Hifil: exile or deport (38×) Hifil 'exile, deport' (38×) is causative: forcibly sending into captivity or removing a population. Arabic ى/ي, Korean 사로잡아 갔다/추방했다, Swahili kupeleka uhamishoni, Spanish deportar/desterrar. Assyrian and Babylonian deportations dominate: 2 Kgs 15:29, 17:6, 17:11, 24:14–15, 25:11; Jer 52:15; Amos 5:27. The semantic link to 'uncover' may be 'strip away from homeland', though some see two homonyms. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING
en: I-exiled, and-he-exiled, exiled | es: Y-deporto, Y-deportó, deportaron | fr: et-il-exila, exila, ils-exila | de: der-offenbarte, er-fuehrte-ins-Exil, offenbaren 2Kgs 15:29; 2Kgs 16:9; 2Kgs 17:6; 2Kgs 17:11; 2Kgs 17:26

3. Nifal: be revealed or appear (33×) Nifal 'be revealed, appear' (33×) is reflexive-passive: being uncovered, manifested, or disclosed—often of divine self-revelation. Arabic ـَّ, Korean 드러나다/나타나다, Spanish ser-revelado/manifestarse. God 'revealed Himself' to Abraham (Gen 35:7), to Samuel (1 Sam 3:21), 'the LORD's arm is revealed' (Isa 53:1). Also human shame 'being uncovered' (Isa 47:3) or secrets 'being exposed' (Jer 11:20). REVEALING AND DISCLOSING
en: I-revealed-Myself, Will-be-uncovered, and-shall-be-exposed | es: Será-descubierta, Y-fue-revelado, Y-se-descubrieron | fr: comme-découvrant-de, découvrant-de, découvrir | de: ich-offenbarte-Myself, offenbaren, offenbarte Gen 35:7; Exod 20:26; Deut 29:29; 1Sam 2:27

4. Qal: go into exile (22×) Qal 'go into exile' (22×) is intransitive: departing into captivity. Arabic ـُ, Korean 유배가다/포로로 갔다, Spanish ir-al-exilio. Participle גּוֹלָה means 'exile, one in exile' (Isa 49:21, 2 Kgs 24:14, Jer 28:6). Judg 18:30 marks the beginning of Dan's exile; 2 Kgs 17:23 Israel's exile; Isa 5:13 'my people go into exile for lack of knowledge'. Multilingual glosses distinguish this intransitive sense from Hifil causative (sense 2). REVEALING AND DISCLOSING
en: She-has-gone-into-exile, an-exile, and-he-exiled | es: Ha-ido-al-exilio, ciertamente, desterrada | fr: et-fut-exila, et-il-exila, et-révéler | de: ein-verbanne, er-offenbart, exile-von Judg 18:30; 2Sam 15:19; 2Kgs 17:23; 2Kgs 25:21; Isa 5:13

5. Piel: reveal or make known (16×) Piel 'reveal, make known' (16×) extends the uncovering metaphor to abstract disclosure: revealing secrets, making divine truths known. Arabic ـّ (abstract), Korean 드러내다/밝히다, Spanish revelar. Job 12:22 'He reveals deep things', Ps 98:2 'the LORD has made known His salvation', Prov 11:13 'a talebearer reveals secrets', Dan 2:22, 28, 29, 47 (Aramaic cognate). Clearly differentiated by abstract objects: חָכְמָה, סוֹד, צְדָקָה. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING
en: He-will-uncover, I-have-revealed, I-have-uncovered | es: El-que-descubre, Revelarán, Y-descubriré | fr: découvrir, et-révéler, révéler | de: Rolle, offenbaren, offenbarte Job 12:22; Job 20:27; Ps 98:2; Prov 11:13; Prov 25:9

6. Qal: reveal or disclose (15×) Qal 'reveal, disclose' (15×) is transitive Qal with abstract object: uncovering information, secrets, or divine will. Arabic ، Korean 드러내다, Swahili kufunua, Spanish revelar. Classic instances: 'If the LORD does not reveal to me' (1 Sam 20:12–13), 'the LORD revealed it to me' (1 Sam 9:15, 2 Sam 7:27), Ruth 4:4 'I will uncover your ear'. Multilingual evidence shows this overlaps with Piel sense 5 but remains Qal stem. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING
en: He-opens, I-will-uncover, and-I-will-reveal | es: El-que-revela-, Y-abre, descubrirá | fr: découvrir, découvrit, et-découvrir | de: Verbannung, eins-offenbarend, er-offenbart Ruth 4:4; 1Sam 9:15; 1Sam 20:2; 1Sam 20:12; 1Sam 20:13

7. Hofal: be exiled or deported (7×) Hofal 'be exiled, be deported' (7×) is passive of Hifil: being forcibly carried into exile by an external agent. Arabic ـُ passive, Korean 잡혀갔다/유배당한. All occurrences involve the Babylonian exile: 1 Chr 9:1, Esth 2:6 (Mordecai's ancestors), Jer 13:19 (Judah 'wholly carried into exile'). Multilingual glosses sometimes merge this with sense 2, but the passive stem is distinct. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING
en: is-exiled, the-ones-being-exiled, was-exiled | es: fue-deportada, fue-desterrado, fueron-deportados | fr: révéler | de: der-offenbarte, offenbaren, offenbarte 1Chr 9:1; Esth 2:6; Jer 13:19

8. Qal passive participle: open, uncovered (7×) Qal passive participle 'open, uncovered' (7×) describes a state of openness or exposure—adjectival. Arabic ـُوف, Korean 열린/드러난, Swahili wazi, Spanish abierto. Balaam's oracle: 'whose eyes are opened' (Num 24:4, 16), Esther's edict 'copy of the writing was to be openly published' (Esth 3:14, 8:13), Prov 27:5 'open rebuke is better than hidden love'. Distinct from active senses by stative quality. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING
en: and-uncovered, open, the-open | es: abierta, el-abierto, revelada | fr: découvrir, et-découvrit, révéler | de: Rolle, offenbaren, offenbarte Num 24:4; Num 24:16; Esth 3:14; Esth 8:13; Prov 27:5

9. Qal: depart or vanish (6×) Qal 'depart, vanish' (6×) is intransitive Qal meaning to go away, disappear, or be removed—not exile proper but general departure. Arabic ـَ/ـُ, Korean 떠나다/사라지다, Spanish partió/se-fue. Ichabod: 'the glory has departed' (1 Sam 4:21–22), Job 20:28 'the increase of his house will depart', Prov 27:25 'the hay is removed', Isa 24:11 'all joy has vanished'. Clearly distinct from exile by context. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING
en: departed, departs, is-carried-away | es: Se-irá, Se-va, partió | fr: découvrir, partit, révéler | de: departed, offenbarte 1Sam 4:21; 1Sam 4:22; Job 20:28; Prov 27:25; Isa 24:11

10. Hitpael: uncover oneself (2×) Hitpael 'uncover oneself' (2×) is reflexive: exposing or uncovering oneself, often shamefully. Arabic ـّ reflexive, Korean 벗겨졌다, Spanish se-descubrió. Gen 9:21: Noah 'uncovered himself within his tent'; Prov 18:2: a fool 'delights in uncovering his own heart' (or 'exposing his own mind'). Multilingual evidence confirms reflexive semantics. Very rare. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING en: and-uncovered-himself, in-revealing | es: en-descubrir, y-se-descubrió | fr: dans-découvrir, et-découvrit-lui-même | de: offenbarte, und-entblößte-sich Gen 9:21; Prov 18:2

גָּלָא H1541 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (9×)

exile, captivity (state of being uncovered/removed)

The noun form of 'uncover,' this term specifically denotes exile or captivity—the state of being removed from one's land. It appears frequently in prophetic literature announcing or describing the Babylonian deportation. Ezekiel uses it extensively; Amos speaks of Israel going 'into exile beyond Damascus.' The word captures exile's essence: Israel 'uncovered' or 'exposed,' stripped from the land that clothed their covenant identity. Later Jewish usage made it a technical term for diaspora existence, maintaining the image of displacement and exposure even centuries after the return.

1. to reveal, disclose (Aramaic) (7×) The condition of exile or captivity, especially the Babylonian deportation but also Assyrian and later dispersions. Prophetic texts employ it to warn of coming judgment (Amos 1:5) or lament its fulfillment (Lamentations). The root meaning 'uncovering' adds theological depth: exile strips away the land-covenant security, leaving Israel exposed among nations. Post-biblical Hebrew made it the standard term for diaspora existence, preserving the biblical metaphor. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING en: and-Revealer-of, and-the-Revealer-of, revealing | es: fue-revelado, me-fue-revelado, que-revela | fr: et-révéler, révéler | de: [גלא], [גלי], [וגלא] Dan 2:19; Dan 2:22; Dan 2:28; Dan 2:29; Dan 2:30

2. to exile, carry into captivity (Hifil) (2×) To exile or carry into captivity – Haphel (Aramaic causative) perfect form hagli, attested in Ezra 4:10 and 5:12. Refers to the Babylonian deportation: Nebuchadnezzar 'exiled' the people of Judah to Babylon. English renders 'exiled,' Spanish 'desterro' (banished). Though sharing the root galah ('to uncover') with the revelatory sense, this meaning develops from the idea of 'uncovering' a land – stripping it of its inhabitants. The domain shift from cognition (revealing) to forced movement (deportation) is one of the more dramatic semantic splits in biblical Aramaic. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING

en: exiled | es: desterró | fr: [הגלי] | de: [הגלי] Ezra 4:10; Ezra 5:12

גִּלֹה H1542 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)
Giloh (David's hometown in Judah)
This town in Judah's hill country appears in Joshua 15:51's territorial list and gains tragic prominence as Ahithophel's hometown. Second Samuel 15:12 identifies Ahithophel as 'the Gilohite,' and his betrayal of David—joining Absalom's revolt—carries geographical irony since both he and David came from Judahite towns. The name may derive from roots meaning 'exile' or 'uncovering,' though such etymologies remain speculative. The site's exact location remains debated, though proposed identifications place it in the Hebron highlands near David's early power base.

(2×) A town in Judah's hill country (Joshua 15:51), most notable as Ahithophel's hometown (2 Samuel 15:12). All languages preserve the proper name (Giloh/Guilo) through transliteration. The geographical detail gains narrative significance through the Ahithophel connection: David's trusted counselor who betrayed him came from David's own tribal territory, deepening the treachery. Archaeological identification remains uncertain despite proposals in the Hebron region. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Giloh, from-Giloh | es: de-Guiló, y-Guiló | fr: de-Giloh, et-Giloh | de: und-Giloh, von-Giloh Josh 15:51; 2Sam 15:12

גָּלָה H1543 Conj-w / N-fs (15×)
Bowl, basin (rounded vessel); spring, water source — a concave receptacle whether crafted or natural
The noun גָּלָה refers to a rounded, concave vessel or receptacle, branching into two environments: crafted bowls and natural springs. In Solomon's temple, the גְּלֹת are the bowl-shaped capitals crowning the bronze pillars Jachin and Boaz (1 Kgs 7:41-42), and in Zechariah's lampstand vision, the גָּלָה is the oil reservoir feeding the seven lamps (Zech 4:2-3). The golden bowl of Ecclesiastes 12:6 is part of a haunting death allegory. The other branch denotes natural springs: when Achsah asks Caleb for a blessing, she receives the 'upper and lower springs' — the גֻּלֹת of Josh 15:19 and Judg 1:15.

1. bowl, basin (9×) A bowl, basin, or rounded vessel — an artificial receptacle used in temple architecture, lampstands, and symbolic imagery. In 1 Kgs 7:41-42 (paralleled in 2 Chr 4:12-13), the two bowl-shaped capitals (גְּלֹת) surmount the pillars before the temple, covered with pomegranate nets. In Zech 4:2-3, the golden גָּלָה sits atop the menorah as its oil reservoir, feeding the lamps — multilingual glosses render this as 'bowl,' 'depósito,' and 'copa.' The golden bowl of Eccl 12:6 (גֻּלַּת הַזָּהָב) shatters in a famous metaphor for death. The root connection to גלל ('to roll') suggests the rounded, globular shape common to all these vessels. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-bowls-of, and-its-bowl, and-the-bowls | es: copa-de, el-depósito, esferas-de | fr: [גלות], [והגלות], bowls-de | de: [גלות], [גלת], [וגלה] 1Kgs 7:41; 1Kgs 7:42; 2Chr 4:12

2. spring, water source (6×) A spring, fountain, or natural water source. In Josh 15:19 and the parallel Judg 1:15, Achsah asks her father Caleb for land and receives 'upper springs and lower springs' (גֻּלֹת עִלְּיוֹת and גֻּלֹת תַּחְתִּיּוֹת). These are natural water sources in the Negev, essential for survival in arid territory. Spanish 'fuentes' and 'manantiales,' French 'sources,' and German 'Quellen' all confirm a distinct spring-meaning, well separated from the architectural bowl sense. The common thread is the idea of a basin-shaped depression — whether carved by human hands or hollowed by water. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: -the-springs-of, springs-of | es: fuentes, fuentes-de, manantiales | fr: -les-sources-de, sources-de | de: -der-Quellen-von, Quellen-von Josh 15:19; Judg 1:15

גִּלּוּל H1544 N-mpc (48×)
idols — a contemptuous term for false gods, from a root suggesting dung or shapeless blocks Gillulim is the Hebrew Bible's most disdainful word for idols, carrying an etymological sting: the root is likely related to gelel ('dung'), making these objects literally 'dung-things' or 'filthy blocks.' Of its 48 occurrences, a remarkable 39 appear in Ezekiel, where the prophet wields the term like a rhetorical weapon against Israel's persistent idolatry (Ezek 6:4-6, 9, 13; 8:10; 14:3-7; 20:7-39). Outside Ezekiel, it appears in the Holiness Code's warning (Lev 26:30), the narrator's verdict on Jeroboam's and Manasseh's reigns (1 Kgs 15:12; 21:26; 2 Kgs 17:12; 21:11, 21), and Jeremiah's oracle against Babylon's 'idols' (Jer 50:2). The choice of gillulim over other idol-words (like pesel or atsav) is always polemical — it does not describe what idols look like but declares what they are worth. Spanish 'idolos,' French 'idoles,' and German 'Gotzen' translate the referent but inevitably lose the scatological contempt embedded in the Hebrew.

idols (contemptuous) (48×) A polemical, contemptuous designation for false gods and their images, etymologically evoking dung (gelel) or shapeless logs to express visceral disgust. Overwhelmingly an Ezekielian term (39 of 48 occurrences), wielded as the prophet's characteristic weapon against Israel's idolatry — from the initial command to destroy the gillulim on the high places (Ezek 6:4-6) through the vision of abominations in the temple (Ezek 8:10) to the retrospective indictment of the wilderness generation (Ezek 20:7-31). Outside Ezekiel, it marks Levitical curses (Lev 26:30), editorial judgments on apostate kings (1 Kgs 15:12; 2 Kgs 21:11, 21; 23:24), and Jeremiah's taunt against Babylon (Jer 50:2). All 48 occurrences serve this single contemptuous-polemical sense. IDOLS AND IMAGES
en: idols-of, idols-of-them, idols-their | es: los-ídolos, sus-ídolos, ídolos-de | fr: idoles-de, le-idoles, leurs-idoles | de: Goetze, der-Goetzen, ihre-Goetzen Lev 26:30; Deut 29:17; 1Kgs 15:12; 1Kgs 21:26; 2Kgs 17:12

גְּלוֹם H1545 Prep-b / N-mpc (1×)
wrapping, luxurious garment or mantle
This Persian loanword denotes expensive woven garments, appearing in Ezekiel's catalog of Tyre's luxury trade. The 'garments of blue' were prized commodities in ancient Mediterranean commerce. The word's Persian origin (through Aramaic) reflects the international nature of Tyre's mercantile empire, where exotic textiles from across the Near East changed hands.

(1×) Ezekiel 27:24 lists these blue mantles among Tyre's treasures—bound cords and cedar chests filled with textile wealth. The Persian loanword signals these weren't local products but imported luxury goods. The multilingual evidence shows translators grappling with this rare term: some render it generically as 'garments' or 'clothing', while the Hebrew emphasizes the wrapping or enfolding quality of these valuable textiles. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: with-garments-of- | es: en-mantos-de | fr: vêtement | de: [בגלומי] Ezek 27:24

גָּלוּת H1546 Conj-w / N-fsc (15×)
Exile, captivity; collectively, the community of deportees carried away from their homeland
A feminine noun capturing both the bitter condition of forced displacement and the people who endure it. In its abstract sense it marks the onset of captivity — Ezekiel dates his visions by 'the year of our exile' (Ezek 1:2; 33:21; 40:1), and Jeconiah's release is reckoned from his exile year (2 Kgs 25:27). In its collective sense it names the exiled community itself: 'the exiles of Judah' whom God promises to restore (Jer 24:5; 28:4; 29:22), or 'my exiles' whom the LORD declares free through Cyrus (Isa 45:13). Amos indicts Philistia and Tyre for trafficking entire exile-communities (Amos 1:6, 9).

exile, captivity, exiled community (15×) The state or condition of exile and captivity, and by metonymic extension the collective body of deportees. Used absolutely for the experience of banishment (2 Kgs 25:27; Ezek 1:2; 33:21), in construct chains for specific exiled groups ('exiles of Judah,' Jer 24:5; 'exiles of Cush,' Isa 20:4), and with divine suffixes for Yahweh's own displaced people (Isa 45:13).

All six target languages converge on a single meaning: exile/captivity (spa 'cautividad', fra 'exil', deu 'Verbannung'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: an-exile, and-My-exiles, and-exiles-of | es: Y-los-cautivos-de, cautiverio-de, cautividad | fr: Et-l'exil, de-exile-de, et-exil | de: Und-die-Verbannung, Verbannung, [לגלות] 2Kgs 25:27; Isa 20:4; Isa 45:13; Jer 24:5; Jer 28:4

גְּלִי H1547 N-fsd (4×)
Exile, captivity (Aramaic); the state of being deported or the community of exiles.
An Aramaic noun found exclusively in the later biblical books, referring to the condition of exile or the exiled community itself. In Ezra 6:16 the 'sons of the exile' (bene galuta) celebrate the temple dedication, marking their identity as a restored deportee community. Daniel uses the term to identify Daniel himself as one brought from Judah's exile (Dan 2:25; 5:13; 6:13). It is the Aramaic cognate of the Hebrew golah, and the Spanish rendering 'cautiverio/exilio' and English 'exile' preserve the dual nuance of both the state and the people.

(4×) Exile or captivity — the condition of forced displacement, or collectively the community of deportees. Appears only in Aramaic portions of Scripture (Ezra 6:16; Dan 2:25; 5:13; 6:13). The emphatic form galuta parallels Hebrew golah. English 'exile' and Spanish 'cautiverio' both reflect the term's range from abstract state to concrete group identity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-exile | es: el-cautiverio, el-exilio-de | fr: [גלותא] | de: [גלותא] Ezra 6:16; Dan 2:25; Dan 5:13; Dan 6:13

גָּלַח H1548 Conj-w | V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (23×)
To shave (hair, beard, head); to be shaved (passive); to shave oneself (reflexive)
The verb גָּלַח encompasses the act of shaving in all its ritual and narrative dimensions across the Hebrew Bible. Levitical law prescribes elaborate shaving protocols for purification after skin disease (Lev 14:8-9) and for the Nazirite vow's completion (Num 6:9-18). It appears in dramatic narrative moments too — Joseph shaved before appearing before Pharaoh (Gen 41:14), and Delilah had Samson's locks shaved off (Judg 16:19). The three stems (Piel active, Pual passive, Hitpael reflexive) neatly distinguish who performs the shaving and upon whom.

1. shave (active, Piel) (18×) Active shaving in the Piel stem: to shave someone's hair, beard, or body hair. This is the primary sense (18 occurrences), covering ritual purification (Lev 14:8-9, the leper's cleansing), Nazirite regulations (Num 6:9, 18), and narrative events like Joseph's preparation before Pharaoh (Gen 41:14) and the humiliation of David's envoys (2 Sam 10:4). Spanish 'rasurar/afeitar/rapar' and English 'shave/shaved' consistently render straightforward active shaving. CUTTING AND SEVERING en: and-he-shall-shave, and-he-shaved, and-he-shaved-it | es: afeitará, cortaba, lo-rasurará | fr: [ויגלחם], [יגלח], et-devra-shave | de: [ויגלחם], [יגלח], [ויגלחו] Gen 41:14; Lev 13:33; Lev 14:8; Lev 14:9

2. be shaved (passive, Pual) (3×) Passive being-shaved in the Pual stem: to have one's hair removed by another's agency. Three occurrences capture this voice: Samson confesses 'if I am shaved, my strength will leave me' (Judg 16:17), the notice that his head 'had been shaved' (Judg 16:22), and the mourners at Mizpah with 'shaven beards' (Jer 41:5). Arabic ـَّ (passive) and Spanish 'fue rapado' confirm the passive morphology across translations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: I-am-shaved, it-was-shaved, shaven-of | es: afeitados, fue-rapado, fuera-rapado | fr: [מגלחז], il-était-rasa, je-suis-rasa | de: [מגלחז], es-war-shaved, ich-bin-shaved Judg 16:17; Judg 16:22; Jer 41:5

3. shave oneself (reflexive, Hitpael) (2×) Reflexive shaving in the Hitpael stem: to shave oneself, without another's agency. Two occurrences mark this voice: the law of the quarantined person who 'shall shave himself' (Lev 13:33 in certain constructions) and the Nazirite's own shaving after the peace offering (Num 6:19). Spanish 'se afeitara/rasurarse el' with reflexive pronouns and Swahili's mediopassive '-tanyolewa' confirm the self-directed action. CUTTING AND SEVERING
en: and-he-shall-shave-himself, his-shaving | es: Y-se-afeitará, rasurarse-él | fr: et-il-devra-shave-lui-même, son-shaving | de: sein-shaving, und-er-soll-shave-sich-selbst Lev 13:33; Num 6:19

גְּלָיוֹן H1549 Conj-w (2×)
tablet, mirror; possibly polished metal surfaces or fine gauze garments
This rare noun appears in two distinct contexts with possible meanings. In Isaiah 8:1, God instructs the prophet to 'take a large tablet' for writing a prophetic inscription. In Isaiah 3:23, it occurs in a list of luxury items worn by wealthy women, interpreted either as polished metal mirrors or as translucent, gauze-like garments. Ancient versions diverged on the meaning, reflecting genuine interpretive uncertainty.

(2×) A term denoting either a writing surface or a reflective/transparent object. As a tablet (Isaiah 8:1), it serves as a medium for public prophetic inscription, described as 'large' (gadol). In the context of feminine adornment (Isaiah 3:23), it may refer to polished metal mirrors (so Targum and Vulgate) or fine, see-through fabrics (so Septuagint). The Hebrew root may relate to revealing or uncovering, which could support either interpretation depending on context. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE en: and-the-mirrors, tablet | es: Y-los-espejos, tablilla | fr: [גליון], [והגלינים] | de: [גליון], [והגלינים] Isa 3:23; Isa 8:1

גָּלִיל H1550a N-mp (2×)
folding, turning; describing hinged door leaves
This adjective describes the folding or turning mechanism of door leaves in Solomon's temple. The term appears twice in the description of the inner sanctuary's cypress doors, each with two leaves that could fold or turn. The word captures the architectural innovation of hinged, bi-folding doors in the temple's construction.

(2×) An adjective meaning 'folding' or 'turning,' used to describe the movable leaves (panels) of doors. Both occurrences in 1 Kings 6:34 refer to the same architectural feature: 'two leaves of the one door were folding, and two leaves of the other door were folding.' The root relates to rolling or revolving motion, suggesting doors that could pivot or fold back upon themselves, rather than swinging on simple hinges. WHEELS AND WHEELWORK
en: folding | es: plegables | fr: pliant | de: folding 1Kgs 6:34

גָּלִיל H1550b N-mpc (2×)
cylinder, rod; cylindrical supports or ornamental posts
This noun denotes cylindrical objects, appearing in two poetic contexts. In Esther 1:6, it describes silver rods or posts supporting the rich hangings of Ahasuerus's palace courtyard. In Song of Songs 5:14, it's used metaphorically of the beloved's hands, likened to 'cylinders of gold set with topaz'—possibly referring to fingers adorned with rings or the cylindrical form of the hands themselves.

(2×) A noun meaning cylinder, rod, or cylindrical post. The term appears in construct forms describing ornamental or structural elements. In Esther 1:6, 'rods of silver' (alongside marble pillars) support expensive fabrics in a royal setting. In Song 5:14, 'cylinders of gold filled with topaz' provides a luxurious simile for the beloved's hands, suggesting either finger rings on cylindrical fingers or hands shaped like decorated rods. The root relates to rolling or circular motion, emphasizing the round, tubular shape. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: rods-of | es: cilindros-de | fr: [גלילי], des-cylindres | de: [גלילי] Esth 1:6; Song 5:14

גָּלִיל H1551 Prep-b (6×)
Galilee; the northern district of Israel, a region associated with the nations and the tribes of Naphtali and Zebulun

A geographical term derived from the Hebrew root meaning 'circuit' or 'district,' used exclusively as a proper name for the northern region of Israel known as Galilee. The area was home to a mixed population, earning the epithet 'Galilee of the nations' (Isa 9:1). All six occurrences refer to the same territory, appearing with the preposition 'in' and the definite article in formulaic phrases such as 'Kedesh in Galilee' (Josh 20:7; 1 Chr 6:76) and 'the land of Galilee' (1 Kgs 9:11).

Galilee (region) (6×) The proper geographical name for the northern district of Israel, centered in the tribal territory of Naphtali. The Hebrew גָּלִיל literally means 'circuit' or 'ring,' reflecting the region's bounded, rolling terrain. All six biblical occurrences use prepositional forms ('in the Galilee'), as reflected in the multilingual glosses: Spanish 'en-Galilea,' English 'in-the-Galilee.' Key passages include the designation of Kedesh as a city of refuge 'in Galilee' (Josh 20:7) and Solomon's cession of twenty cities in 'the land of Galilee' to Hiram (1 Kgs 9:11). GALILEE REGION NAME
en: Galilee-of, in-the-Galil, in-the-Galilee | es: Galil-de, en-Galilea, en-el-Galil | fr: [בגליל], [גליל], dans-le-Galil | de: [בגליל], [גליל], der-Galil Josh 20:7; Josh 21:32; 1Kgs 9:11; 2Kgs 15:29; 1Chr 6:76

גְּלִילָה H1552 N-fpc (5×)
Region, district, circuit; a territory or bounded area, often used of the regions belonging to the Philistines or along the Jordan.
A feminine noun meaning 'region,' 'district,' or 'circuit,' derived from the root galal ('to roll, turn'). It designates a bounded territory or administrative district. In Josh 13:2 and Joel 3:4 (Hebrew 4:4), 'all the regions of the Philistines' marks territory yet to be conquered. Josh 22:10–11 uses it for the region along the Jordan where the eastern tribes built their controversial altar. Ezek 47:8 refers to 'the eastern region' in the visionary geography. Notably, the related form galil gives us the name 'Galilee'—the 'circuit' of the nations—showing how a common noun became a famous proper name.

(5×) A district, region, or bounded territory, often in the plural construct to designate the territories belonging to a people or bordering a geographic feature. Josh 13:2 and Joel 3:4 speak of 'all the regions of the Philistines' as unconquered territory. Josh 22:10–11 identifies the 'regions of the Jordan' where the altar dispute occurred. Ezek 47:8 uses the singular with the article for 'the eastern region' in eschatological geography. Spanish 'distritos' and 'regiones' together capture the administrative and geographic senses. The related form galil became the proper name Galilee (2 Kgs 15:29), illustrating how 'circuit/region' became a famous toponym. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: regions-of, the-region | es: distritos-de, la-región, regiones-del | fr: [גלילות], [הגלילה], regions-de | de: [גלילות], [הגלילה], regions-von Josh 13:2; Josh 22:10; Josh 22:11; Ezek 47:8; Joel 3:4

גְּלִילוֹת H1553 N-proper-fs (1×)
Geliloth (place on Benjamin-Judah border)
This place name means 'circles' or 'stone circles', marking a boundary point between Benjamin and Judah. The name likely refers to ancient stone markers, perhaps megalithic circles that served as territorial landmarks. The site's exact location is lost, though it appears related to Gilgal, another circle-stone location. Ancient border markers often used visible stone formations that lasted generations.

(1×) Joshua 18:17 places Geliloth on the tribal boundary, its name suggesting a visible landmark—circles of stones that travelers would recognize. The multilingual consistency (English/Spanish/French all transliterate) reflects that this is a proper noun, a specific geographic marker. The Hebrew plural form indicates multiple circles or a circular arrangement, typical of Bronze Age boundary stones that established territorial claims in the Promised Land. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Geliloth | es: Gelilot | fr: Geliloth | de: Geliloth Josh 18:17

גַּלִּים H1554 N-proper-fs (2×)
Gallim, a place north of Jerusalem, home of Palti and mentioned in Isaiah's oracle Gallim (meaning 'heaps') was a town located north of Jerusalem, somewhere along the invasion route described in Isaiah's oracle against Assyria. It appears as the hometown of Palti, to whom Saul gave his daughter Michal after David fled. Isaiah personifies the town as 'daughter of Gallim,' urging her to cry out as the enemy approaches.

(2×) A place name designating a town in Benjamin's territory north of Jerusalem. First Samuel 25:44 identifies it as Palti's hometown (Michal was given to 'Palti from Gallim'), while Isaiah 10:30 includes it in the prophetic invasion route approaching Jerusalem, with the city personified as 'daughter of Gallim' called to raise her voice in alarm. The name means 'heaps' or 'ruins,' possibly referring to topographical features. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Gallim, from-Gallim | es: Galim, de-Galim | fr: [גלים], de-Gallim | de: [גלים], von-Gallim 1Sam 25:44; Isa 10:30

גָּלְיָת H1555 N-proper-ms (6×)
Goliath; the Philistine giant of Gath, champion defeated by David
The personal name of the famous Philistine warrior from Gath who stood as champion against Israel's army. Goliath is described as a giant whose height and armor made him a fearsome opponent. David's defeat of Goliath with a sling and stone (1 Sam 17) became one of the most iconic narratives in Scripture. An intriguing textual note arises from 2 Samuel 21:19, which attributes the slaying of Goliath to Elhanan, while 1 Chronicles 20:5 harmonizes by stating Elhanan killed Goliath's brother Lahmi.

Goliath (6×) The proper name of the Philistine giant from Gath, the foremost champion of the Philistine army. The name may derive from a root meaning 'conspicuous' or 'exile.' Multilingual renderings are remarkably consistent (Spanish 'Goliat,' French and German 'Goliath'), reflecting the name's wide familiarity. All six occurrences cluster around the David narratives (1 Sam 17:4, 23; 21:10; 22:10) and the parallel accounts of David's warriors (2 Sam 21:19; 1 Chr 20:5). PERSONAL NAMES
en: Goliath, Golyat | es: Goliat, Golyat | fr: Goliath, [גלית] | de: Goliath, [גלית] 1Sam 17:4; 1Sam 17:23; 1Sam 21:10; 1Sam 22:10; 2Sam 21:19

גָּלַל H1556 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-3cp (18×)
To roll, roll away; reflexively, to wallow; idiomatically, to commit or entrust one's way to God; to roll up or fold together.
Galal is a wonderfully physical verb — the heavy thud of a stone being rolled from a well-mouth or across a cave entrance is its home territory (Gen 29:3, 8, 10; Josh 10:18). But Hebrew presses this concrete image into surprising service. The psalmist 'rolls' his way upon the LORD (Ps 37:5; Prov 16:3), using the weight-transfer of stone-rolling as a metaphor for entrusting burdens to God. Warriors wallow in blood (2 Sam 20:12), the heavens are 'rolled up' like a scroll (Isa 34:4), and justice 'rolls down' like waters (Amos 5:24). The multilingual evidence maps these extensions beautifully: Spanish shifts from rodar ('roll') to encomendar ('commit/entrust') to enrollar ('roll up'), Korean from 굴리다 ('roll a stone') to 말리다 ('wind/fold up'), and Arabic from dahraj ('roll') to tawa ('fold'). Each language treats these as distinct senses, confirming what the Hebrew already shows through its stem variations.

1. roll physically (8×) Qal and Piel of physical rolling: the basic act of rolling an object, especially a stone — the largest cluster at 8 occurrences. Jacob's shepherds roll the stone from the well (Gen 29:3, 8, 10); Joshua commands rolling stones against the cave mouth (Josh 10:18); the reproach of Egypt is 'rolled away' at Gilgal (Josh 5:9, with the place-name punning on the verb); whoever rolls a stone, it will come back on him (Prov 26:27). Spanish rodar, Hindi lurhkana, Arabic dahraj, Korean 굴리다, and Swahili viringisha all consistently select concrete stone-rolling vocabulary, confirming this as the core physical sense from which all extensions derive. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-have-rolled-away, and-I-will-roll-you-down, and-one-who-rolls | es: Rodad-, quité, rodad | fr: [וגלגלתיך], et-roll, et-rolled | de: [וגלגלתיך], [וגלל], ich-haben-rolled-weg Gen 29:3; Gen 29:8; Gen 29:10; Josh 5:9; Josh 10:18

2. wallow, roll oneself (4×) Hitpael and Pual reflexive: to wallow or roll oneself, typically in dust, ashes, or blood — the self-directed physical extension. Amasa 'wallowed in blood' in the road (2 Sam 20:12); the garments of war are 'rolled in blood' (Isa 9:5); Job's companions 'roll upon' him in successive waves of accusation (Job 30:14). Spanish revolcarse ('to wallow'), Arabic mutamarrig ('wallowing'), and Hindi lot raha tha ('was rolling about') all select dedicated reflexive-rolling vocabulary distinct from transitive stone-rolling. The Hitpael and Pual stems grammatically mark the reflexive action, and the translations confirm the semantic distinction. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: rolled, rolling, they-roll-on | es: para-revolcarse, revolcado, revolcándose | fr: [מגוללה], rolling, rouler | de: [התגלגלו], [מגוללה], rolling Gen 43:18; 2Sam 20:12; Job 30:14; Isa 9:5

3. commit, entrust (3×) Qal imperative in idiomatic metaphor: to commit or entrust one's way, works, or burden to God — rolling the weight of one's concerns onto the LORD. 'Commit your way to the LORD' (Ps 37:5); 'commit your works to the LORD' (Prov 16:3); the taunt at the cross 'He committed himself to the LORD' (Ps 22:8, reading with the versions). The metaphorical leap is enormous but grounded in the physicality of transferring a heavy load. Spanish encomendar/confiar ('entrust'), Hindi samarpit kar/saump ('dedicate/hand over'), and Arabic tawakkal ('trust/rely on') all abandon rolling vocabulary entirely in favor of commitment/trust language, confirming that this is a fully lexicalized idiomatic sense, not a contextual extension. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: commit | es: Encomienda, confía | fr: rouler | de: [גל], wälzte Ps 22:8; Ps 37:5; Prov 16:3

4. roll up, fold (1×) Niphal passive: to be rolled up or folded together, said of the heavens. A single occurrence in Isa 34:4: 'all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll.' Spanish enrollar ('to roll up/wind'), Arabic tawa ('fold'), and Korean 말리다 ('wind up') all select wrapping/folding vocabulary rather than stone-rolling terms. The Niphal passive stem indicates the heavens undergo rolling rather than performing it. This apocalyptic image became foundational for later eschatology (cf. Rev 6:14), and the cross-lingual divergence from sense 1 confirms a distinct semantic specialization. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-shall-be-rolled-up | es: y-se-enrollarán | fr: [ונגלו] | de: [ונגלו] Isa 34:4

5. flow, roll forth (1×) Niphal with liquid metaphor: to roll forth or flow, describing the rushing movement of justice/righteousness as a torrent. The single occurrence in Amos 5:24 — 'let justice roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream' — is one of the most quoted verses in prophetic literature. The rolling here is not of a solid object but of a liquid mass. Hindi bahna ('flow'), Arabic yajri ('run/flow'), Korean 흐르게 하라 ('let flow'), and Swahili itirike ('let it pour/flow') all shift to water-movement vocabulary, confirming that the 'rolling' has been entirely reinterpreted as flowing. The Niphal form suggests a natural, unstoppable outpouring rather than deliberate human action. FLOWING WATER

en: and-let-roll | es: Y-que-ruede | fr: et-rouler | de: [ויגל] Amos 5:24

6. remove, roll away (1×) Qal imperative as removing or taking away: rolling away reproach, shame, or burden in an act of deliverance. Ps 119:22: 'Remove from me reproach and contempt.' English 'remove,' Spanish quitar ('take off'), Arabic irfa' ('lift/remove'), and Korean 벗기소서 ('take off/strip away') all abandon rolling imagery for straightforward removal language. Though etymologically connected to 'rolling away' (as in Josh 5:9, sense 1), the target-language evidence consistently treats this as a distinct idiomatic sense where the physical rolling is fully bleached and the meaning is simply 'take away.' The single occurrence makes it a marginal but real sense boundary. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY en: remove | es: Quita | fr: rouler | de: wälzte Ps 119:22

גֶּלֶל H1557 Art / N-ms (1×)

dung, excrement (as contemptible matter)

This stark word appears in prophetic judgment, where God promises to sweep away Jeroboam's dynasty like refuse. The term carries associations of worthlessness and disgust, used to express divine contempt for idolatrous rulers. In ancient Near Eastern culture, comparing something to dung was among the strongest expressions of rejection and humiliation—matter utterly without value.

(1×) 1 Kings 14:10 uses this term in a vivid threat: God will burn away Jeroboam's house 'as one burns dung, completely.' The image conveys total eradication without remainder—dung was burned for fuel, leaving nothing. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'estiércol', English/French 'dung') confirm the crude, contemptuous sense. This isn't polite language but prophetic shock rhetoric, reducing a royal dynasty to waste matter. ASH HEAP REFUSE

en: the-dung | es: el-estiércol | fr: le-dung | de: der-dung 1Kgs 14:10

בְּגַלַּל H1558 Conj-w (10×)

On account of, because of, for the sake of — causal preposition expressing reason or cause.

Formed from the noun galal ('a weighty matter,' cf. Arabic jalal) with the prefixed preposition beth, this word functions as a causal connector meaning 'on account of' or 'for the sake of.' It appears in pivotal moments of blessing and judgment: God blessed Potiphar's house 'on account of Joseph' (Gen 39:5), and Moses was barred from the land 'because of you' (Deut 1:37). The multilingual evidence is remarkably uniform — English 'because-of,' Spanish 'por-causa-de,' French 'parce-que-de' — confirming a single, stable causal sense across all ten occurrences.

because of, on account of (10×) A causal preposition meaning 'because of, on account of, for the sake of,' always formed as biglal (beth + galal). It introduces the reason or person responsible for a situation, whether positive — Laban recognizes blessing 'on account of' Jacob (Gen 30:27) — or negative — Israel will suffer 'because of' Manasseh's sins (Jer 15:4). All major translations converge on straightforward causal glosses, with no semantic variation across the ten attestations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-because-of, because-of, because-of-you | es: por-causa-de, por-causa-de-vosotros, por-causa-tuya | fr: [בגלל], et-parce-que-de, parce-que-de | de: [בגלל], [בגללכם], deinetwegen Gen 12:13; Gen 30:27; Gen 39:5; Deut 1:37; Deut 15:10

גָּלָל H1559 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Galal—a Levite name meaning 'dung' or 'roll,' appearing in post-exilic lists

Galal is the name of two Levites in post-exilic genealogies (1 Chr 9:15-16, Neh 11:17). The name likely derives from a root meaning 'to roll' (possibly 'dung' in a derogatory sense, or simply 'roller'). Despite its potentially humble meaning, these Levites served in the restored temple community. The repetition of the name suggests it was not uncommon among Levitical families. Like many biblical names, it may have commemorated circumstances of birth or expressed a parent's theology, though the exact significance is lost to us.

(3×) A Levite personal name appearing in post-exilic genealogical lists, referring to two different individuals. One appears in 1 Chronicles 9:15, another in 1 Chronicles 9:16 and Nehemiah 11:17 (possibly the same person in the parallel lists). Cross-linguistic evidence preserves the name: English 'Galal/and Galal,' Spanish 'Galal/y Galal,' while French and German use placeholder brackets, indicating uncertainty about transliteration. The conjunction 'and Galal' shows his inclusion in longer Levitical rosters. The domain assignment to 'Degree' seems erroneous; this should be in Names of Persons and Places. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: Galal, and-Galal | es: Galal, y-Galal | fr: [גלל], [וגלל] | de: [גלל], [וגלל] 1Chr 9:15; 1Chr 9:16; Neh 11:17

גֻּלָּל H1560 N-ms (2×)

rolling, great; describing large, rolled stones too heavy to carry

This noun describes stones characterized by their rolling quality —massive stones that had to be rolled rather than carried. Both biblical occurrences appear in Aramaic sections of Ezra, describing the construction of the Second Temple with 'stones of rolling' or 'great stones.' The term emphasizes the stones' size and the method required to move them.

(2×) A noun meaning 'rolling' used attributively to describe large building stones. In Ezra 5:8 and 6:4, the phrase 'stones of rolling' (eben gelal) refers to massive hewn stones used in temple construction, so heavy they could only be moved by rolling them into place. The term derives from the root גלל meaning 'to roll,' and the multilingual evidence ('great,' 'grande') captures the implication of size that necessitates rolling rather than lifting. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: great, rolled | es: grande | fr: [גלל] | de: [גלל] Ezra 5:8; Ezra 6:4

גֵּל H1561 N-mpc (4×)

Dung, excrement; dried animal or human waste, especially as fuel.

Refers to dung or excrement, with the distinctive nuance of dung shaped into rounded cakes — the Arabic cognate jilla specifically denotes camel dung formed into balls. Ezekiel 4:12 and 4:15 provide the most vivid usage, where God commands the prophet to bake bread over human dung as a sign of Israel's defilement, then relents to allow cow dung instead. In Job 20:7 the wicked perish 'like their own dung,' a graphic image of utter worthlessness. Zephaniah 1:17 extends this to blood poured out like dust and flesh like dung.

(4×) Dung or excrement — waste matter, particularly shaped or dried dung used as fuel or as a metaphor for worthlessness. The Arabic cognate (jilla) points to rounded dung cakes from livestock. In Ezek 4:12, 15 human dung serves as defiling fuel for bread-baking; Job 20:7 uses it figuratively for the fate of the wicked; Zeph 1:17 pairs it with poured-out blood as an image of total destruction. Spanish 'estiércol' and French 'excréments' confirm the consistent semantic range. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: dung-of, like-his-dung, like-the-dung | es: Como-su-estiércol, como-estiércol, con-excremento-de | fr: [בגללי], [גללי], comme-des-excréments | de: [בגללי], [גללי], [כגללו] Job 20:7; Ezek 4:12; Ezek 4:15; Zeph 1:17

גִּלְלַי H1562 N-proper-ms (1×)

Gilalai (Levitical musician at wall dedication)

This name appears only in Nehemiah's account of Jerusalem's wall dedication, where Gilalai played a musical role in the great celebration. The name may derive from a root meaning 'circle' or 'roll', possibly connected to the cyclic nature of liturgical service. Like many Levitical musicians, he remains otherwise unknown—one participant in a grand communal act of worship.

(1×) Nehemiah 12:36 lists Gilalai among the priests and Levites who processed along Jerusalem's newly restored walls with musical instruments. The transliteration across languages shows this is a proper name, not a common noun. He represents the many faithful servants whose names appear once in Scripture's record, contributing their gifts to moments of national significance before fading from history's page. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gilalai | es: Gilalai | fr: [גללי] | de: [גללי] Neh 12:36

גָּלַם H1563 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

wrap up, fold, roll together (cloth or garment)

This verb captures the moment when Elijah rolled up his mantle before striking the Jordan. The action suggests careful, deliberate folding—not crumpling but purposefully gathering fabric. The Aramaic and Mishnaic Hebrew cognates confirm the sense of wrapping or bundling. Elijah's rolled mantle becomes an instrument of power, concentrating the prophetic presence into a focused gesture.

(1×) 2 Kings 2:8 describes Elijah taking his cloak and rolling it up before striking the waters. The folding transforms the garment from clothing into tool—a concentrated expression of prophetic authority. The multilingual glosses ('rolled it up', 'enrolló') capture this bundling action. The gesture recalls Moses parting the Red Sea, but here performed with a rolled garment rather than a staff, showing how God's power works through ordinary objects prepared by faith. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-rolled-it-up | es: y-lo-enrolló | fr: et-rolled-cela-en-haut | de: und-rolled-es-hinauf 2Kgs 2:8

גֹּלֶם H1564 N-msc / 1cs (1×)

embryo, unformed substance (of fetal development)

This remarkable word appears in Psalm 139's meditation on divine foreknowledge, where the psalmist marvels that God saw his 'unformed substance' before birth. The term evokes the earliest stage of human development, before limbs and features take shape. The rabbinic tradition connected this word to the 'golem' of later Jewish mysticism—formless matter waiting to receive form through divine creative power.

(1×) Psalm 139:16 uses this term to express wonder at God's prenatal knowledge: 'Your eyes saw my unformed substance.' The word suggests not just an embryo but the very beginning of human formation, when the future person exists only as potential. Across languages, translators reach for medical terms (Spanish 'embrión') or descriptive phrases ('unformed substance'). The Aramaic cognate referred to unfinished vessels, capturing the sense of something begun but not yet complete—perfectly describing fetal development as the psalmist understands God's loving attention from the very start. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: my-unformed-substance | es: Mi-embrión | fr: embryon | de: mein-unformed-substance Ps 139:16

גַּלְמוּד H1565 Conj-w / Adj-fs (4×)

Barren, desolate, hard; describing what is unproductive, lonely, or gaunt.

An adjective evoking stark, unyielding barrenness — whether of a night wished to be joyless (Job 3:7), the congregation of the godless described as unfruitful (Job 15:34), or figures gaunt from famine (Job 30:3). Isaiah 49:21 applies it to exiled Zion personified as a bereaved, childless woman who is astonished to discover new children. The Arabic cognate jalmad ('rock, stony ground') grounds the word in the image of hard, unyielding terrain, while the Aramaic galmuda reinforces the sense of desolate isolation. Spanish captures the range nicely with both 'estéril' (barren) and 'desolada' (desolate).

(4×) Barren, desolate, hard — describes what is unproductive or stripped of life, used both literally and figuratively. The Arabic cognate jalmad ('rock, stony land') underlies the imagery of unyielding hardness. Applied to a joyless night (Job 3:7), the unfruitful company of the wicked (Job 15:34), famine-gaunt wanderers (Job 30:3), and exiled Zion as a bereaved woman (Isa 49:21). Spanish 'estéril' and 'desolada' together capture the spectrum from physical barrenness to emotional desolation. BARREN INFERTILE

en: and-barren, barren | es: desolada, estéril, estériles | fr: [וגלמודה], solitude | de: [גלמוד], [וגלמודה] Job 3:7; Job 15:34; Job 30:3; Isa 49:21

גָּלַע H1566 V-Hitpael-Imperf-3ms (3×)

to break out, quarrel, disclose oneself—initiating strife or conflict

This Hithpael verb appears three times in Proverbs, describing the outbreak or initiation of quarreling. Proverbs 17:14 warns that beginning strife is like releasing water—before the quarrel 'breaks out,' abandon it. Proverbs 18:1 describes a fool who 'breaks out' against all sound judgment. Proverbs 20:3 teaches that avoiding strife is honorable, while every fool 'quarrels' (literally 'discloses himself' in conflict). The verb may derive from roots meaning 'to expose' or 'to bare,' suggesting the idea of conflict erupting into the open.

(3×) To break out in quarreling, to initiate strife, or to disclose oneself in conflict. All three occurrences are in Proverbs wisdom literature: 17:14 warns against letting a quarrel break out, 18:1 describes a fool who breaks out against wisdom, and 20:3 notes that every fool quarrels. Cross-linguistic glosses show: English 'breaks out/quarrels,' Spanish 'estallar/se enreda/se enoja' (to burst out/get tangled/get angry), French and German use placeholder brackets. The Hithpael stem suggests reflexive or intensive action: actively engaging in quarrel or displaying oneself in strife. This is wisdom vocabulary for conflict initiation. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING

en: breaks-out, quarrels | es: estallar, se-enoja, se-enreda | fr: יתגלע ,התגלע | de: [יתגלע], [התגלע] Prov 17:14; Prov 18:1; Prov 20:3

גַּלְעֵד H1567 N-proper-fs (2×)

Galeed, the name Jacob gave to the witness-heap covenant with Laban

Galeed (meaning 'witness-heap') is the name Jacob gave to the pile of stones erected as a covenant witness between himself and Laban. While Laban called it by the Aramaic equivalent Jegar-sahadutha, Jacob used this Hebrew name. The site marked both a covenant boundary and a memorial, later associated with the region of Gilead.

(2×) A place name meaning 'heap of witness' or 'witness-pile,' given by Jacob to commemorate his covenant with Laban at the stone cairn they erected together. Genesis 31:47-48 records both the Aramaic name (Jegar-sahadutha, used by Laban) and the Hebrew name (Galeed, used by Jacob) for the same location. The name combines 'gal' (heap) and 'ed' (witness), and the biblical narrative explicitly connects it etymologically to the later name Gilead. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Galeed | es: Galed | fr: Galeed | de: Gal-Ed Gen 31:47; Gen 31:48

גִּלְעָד H1568 N-proper-fs / 3fs (134×)

Gilead — proper noun for a trans-Jordanian highland region and the ancestral figure (grandson of Manasseh) after whom it is named

Gil'ad designates both a person and a place east of the Jordan, appearing 134 times across the Pentateuch, Former Prophets, and poetic literature. As a personal name it refers to the son of Machir and grandson of Manasseh (Num 26:29-30; 27:1). As a geographic term it denotes the hilly territory between the Arnon and the Yarmuk rivers — fertile pastureland famous for its balm (Jer 8:22; 46:11) and flocks (Num 32:1; Song 4:1). Jacob and Laban made their covenant at Gilead (Gen 31:21-25), and it served as a major theater of tribal conflict (Judg 10-12). The Septuagint renders it Galaad, which Spanish and French follow.

Gilead (proper noun) (134×) The proper noun Gil'ad, referring to the grandson of Manasseh through Machir (Num 26:29-30) and, more commonly, to the trans-Jordanian highland territory bearing his name — a broad upland east of the Jordan between the Arnon and the Yarmuk. The region was prized for its rich pastureland (Num 32:1; Song 6:5), its famed medicinal balm (Jer 8:22; 46:11), and its strategic importance in inter-tribal and international conflicts (Judg 10:17-18; 2 Kgs 15:29). Spanish and French render it 'Galaad' following the Septuagint, while German preserves the Hebrew-based form 'Gilead.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gilead | es: Galaad | fr: Galaad | de: Gilead Num 26:29; Num 26:30; Num 27:1; Num 32:1; Num 36:1

גִּלְעָדִי H1569 Art / N-proper-ms (11×)

Gileadite — a person from Gilead, the Transjordanian highland east of the Jordan River

The gentilic adjective גִּלְעָדִי (Gileadi) identifies a person from Gilead, the forested highland region east of the Jordan known for its balm, pastures, and fiercely independent warriors. The most famous Gileadite is Jephthah, the outcast judge who defeated Ammon and made a tragic vow (Judg 11:1, 40; 12:7). The aged Barzillai the Gileadite loyally supplied David during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 17:27; 19:31-32), earning a lasting place in royal memory (1 Kgs 2:7). The shibboleth incident at the Jordan fords (Judg 12:4-6) further etched the Gileadites into Israel's collective consciousness. Spanish 'galaadita,' Arabic ٱ.

Gileadite (gentilic adjective) (11×) A gentilic adjective denoting a native or resident of Gilead, the Transjordanian territory east of the Jordan River. Applied to notable individuals such as Jephthah the judge (Judg 11:1, 40; 12:7), Barzillai the loyal elder (2 Sam 17:27; 19:31; 1 Kgs 2:7; Ezra 2:61; Neh 7:63), and Jair the judge (Judg 10:3). Both singular and plural forms (Gileadite/Gileadites) share the same gentilic sense, identifying people with the distinctive culture and geography of the Gilead highlands. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gileadites, the-Giladite, the-Gileadite | es: el-Galaadita, el-galaadita, el-guiladita | fr: Gileadites, [הגלעדי], le-Gileadite | de: Gileadites, [הגלעדי], der-Gileadite Num 26:29; Judg 10:3; Judg 11:1; Judg 11:40; Judg 12:7

גָּלַשׁ H1570 Pro-r / V-Qal-Perf-3cp (2×)

descend, sit; possibly describing flocks moving down a mountainside

This rare verb appears only in Song of Songs, used twice in identical poetic imagery comparing a woman's hair to 'flocks of goats that descend from Mount Gilead.' The verb's precise meaning remains uncertain—it may mean descend, sit up, or recline. The construction and sense are somewhat awkward, leading to various interpretive proposals.

(2×) A verb of uncertain meaning, possibly 'descend' or 'sit/recline,' used in a simile comparing hair to goats on a mountainside. Both occurrences (Song 4:1, 6:5) appear in the identical phrase 'that descend/sit from Mount Gilead,' describing the visual effect of dark goats moving down a terraced hillside, their undulating motion evoking flowing hair. The root may be related to Arabic 'sit up,' though 'descend' fits the context more naturally. The multilingual glosses favor 'descend' (Spanish 'descienden,' French 'descendent'). DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: that-descend | es: que-descienden | fr: qui-descendent | de: [שגלשו] Song 4:1; Song 6:5

גַּם H1571 Conj-w / Adv (769×)

Also, too; even; both…and; indeed; neither/nor; because also — a versatile additive-scalar particle

This small but mighty Hebrew particle (gam) is the language's primary tool for addition, emphasis, and scalar assertion. At its simplest it means 'also' or 'too,' but context can push it toward the concessive 'even,' the correlative 'both...and,' the emphatic 'indeed,' or in negative environments 'neither/nor.' Its 769 occurrences touch nearly every genre and register of biblical prose. Multilingual evidence is especially revealing: where gam means 'even,' Swahili shifts from pia to hata, Korean from 또한 to 심지어, and Arabic from ايضا to حتى—scalar distinctions invisible in English but crisp in other languages.

1. also, too (693×) The default additive sense: 'also, too, in addition.' Eve 'gave also to her husband' (Gen 3:6); Abel 'also brought' an offering (Gen 4:4). With 693 occurrences this is the overwhelming majority use. Cross-linguistically uniform—Spanish también, Hindi भी, Arabic ايضا, Swahili pia, Korean 또한—confirming a simple inclusive-addition reading. ADDITIVE PARTICLES

en: also, also-, both | es: también, también- | fr: aussi, aussi-, même | de: auch, auch- Gen 3:6; Gen 3:22; Gen 4:4; Gen 4:22; Gen 4:26

2. even, so far as (39×) Scalar or concessive 'even, so far as,' marking an unexpected or extreme case on a scale of likelihood. Multilingual evidence is diagnostic: Swahili shifts to hata (not pia), Korean to 심지어 (not 또한), Arabic occasionally to حتى, and Spanish to aun (not también). This scalar force appears prominently in Lev 26:44 ('and even for all that') and Deut 12:31. ADDITIVE PARTICLES

en: Even, Even-, also | es: Aun, Aun-, También | fr: aussi, même | de: auch, sogar Lev 26:24; Lev 26:44; Deut 12:31; Deut 23:2; Deut 23:3

3. both...and (correlative) (15×) The correlative paired construction 'both...and' (gam...gam), linking two parallel elements. Spanish tanto...como, Swahili wote, and Hindi चाहे mark it distinctly from simple addition. Deut 32:25 uses the pair to encompass 'both the young man and the virgin,' while 1 Sam 2:26 applies it to favor with 'both the LORD and men.' ADDITIVE PARTICLES

en: and, and-, and-also | es: como, como-, también | fr: aussi, both, both- | de: auch, beide, beide- Deut 32:25; Judg 8:22; 1Sam 2:26

4. rhetorical-interrogative also/even (8×) Rhetorical or genuine interrogative 'also?/even?' within questions, expressing surprise or incredulity. Identified by question particles across languages: Hindi क्या, Arabic هل, Spanish ¿acaso también? The famous 'Is Saul also among the prophets?' (1 Sam 10:11–12; 19:24) and Hagar's astonished 'Have I also here seen?' (Gen 16:13) are paradigmatic. ADDITIVE PARTICLES

en: also, also-, have-also | es: acaso-también, también, ¿Acaso-también- | fr: aussi, aussi-, avoir-aussi | de: auch, auch-, der-auch Gen 16:13; 1Sam 10:11; 1Sam 10:12; 1Sam 19:24; 1Kgs 17:20

5. neither, nor (negative) (7×) Negative-polarity use meaning 'neither, nor' when occurring in negative contexts. Sharply distinguished cross-linguistically: Swahili wala, Spanish ni, Hindi न तो —all dedicated negative-conjunction forms rather than additive ones. Found in passages like 1 Sam 28:6 where the LORD answered Saul 'neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets.' ADDITIVE PARTICLES

en: also, neither | es: ni, ni- | fr: aussi, ni | de: auch, neither Num 23:25; 1Sam 28:6

6. indeed, yea (emphatic) (6×) Emphatic affirmative 'indeed, yea, truly,' expressing strong assertion rather than mere addition. Cross-linguistic evidence is revealing: Hindi हाँ (yes), Swahili Naam (yes), Korean 참으로 (truly), Arabic بل (rather/indeed). In Ps 19:11–13 the psalmist uses gam to underscore the surpassing worth of God's ordinances. ADDITIVE PARTICLES

en: Indeed, also, also- | es: También, también | fr: aussi | de: auch, auch- Ps 19:11; Ps 19:13; Ps 25:3; Eccl 9:13; Isa 43:13

7. because also (causal) (1×) The rare causal compound בְּשַׁגַּם (beshagam) meaning 'because also, inasmuch as,' attested only in Gen 6:3 where God limits human lifespan. Spanish porque también, Hindi क्योंकि, Arabic بما, and Swahili kwa sababu pia all converge on a causal reading, confirming this as a unique grammaticalized fusion of preposition, relative particle, and gam. ADDITIVE PARTICLES

en: in-that-also | es: porque-también | fr: dans-ce-aussi | de: da-auch Gen 6:3

גָּמָא H1572 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (2×)

swallow, drink, devour; taking in liquids or consuming eagerly

This verb denotes swallowing or drinking, appearing in two quite different contexts. In Genesis 24, Abraham's servant asks Rebekah to let him 'sip' or 'drink' a little water. In Job 39, the same root describes a warhorse that 'swallows' the ground in its furious gallop —a vivid metaphor for speed and eagerness. The verb captures both literal drinking and figurative consuming.

(2×) A verb meaning to swallow, sip, or drink in liquid. In the Hiphil stem (Genesis 24:17), it means 'cause to drink' or 'let drink'—the servant asks Rebekah to 'let me sip a little water.' In the Piel stem (Job 39:24), it intensifies to 'swallow' or 'devour,' used metaphorically of a horse that 'swallows the ground' in its charging gallop. The multilingual evidence captures both the gentle drinking (Spanish 'sorber,' German 'schlürfen') and the vigorous consuming (Spanish 'devora'). DRINKING AND WATERING

en: give-me-to-sip, it-swallows- | es: devora-, hazme-sorber | fr: donner-moi-à-sip, יגמא | de: [יגמא], lass-mich-schlürfen Gen 24:17; Job 39:24

גֹּמֶא H1573 Conj-w / N-ms (4×)

Papyrus, bulrush; an aquatic reed plant used for making vessels and containers.

The papyrus plant (Cyperus papyrus), a tall aquatic reed that once flourished along the Nile and in marshy regions. Its most famous appearance is in Exodus 2:3, where Moses' mother fashions a tevat gome — a papyrus basket — to float the infant on the river, and translators across languages consistently identify it as 'papyrus' (spa 'papiro,' fra 'papyrus,' deu 'Papyrus'). Isaiah 18:2 references 'vessels of papyrus' sent along the waters, while Job 8:11 asks rhetorically whether papyrus can grow without water. Isaiah 35:7 envisions a messianic restoration where parched ground becomes a marsh of reeds and papyrus.

(4×) Papyrus or bulrush — the tall aquatic reed (Cyperus papyrus) native to marshy riverbanks, used as a material for baskets and boats. The name may derive from the root meaning 'to swallow/absorb water.' Moses' basket is a tevat gome (Exod 2:3); Isaiah 18:2 mentions papyrus vessels; Job 8:11 pairs it with marshgrass (achu); Isa 35:7 envisions it flourishing in restored wasteland. Remarkable cross-linguistic unanimity — eng 'papyrus,' spa 'papiro,' fra 'papyrus,' deu 'Papyrus' — reflects the plant's well-known identity. REEDS RUSHES VEGETATION

en: and-rushes, papyrus | es: el-papiro, junco, papiro | fr: [גמא], [וגמא], papyrus | de: Papyrus, [גמא], [וגמא] Exod 2:3; Job 8:11; Isa 18:2; Isa 35:7

גֹּמֶד H1574 N-ms (1×)

short cubit, gomed (from elbow to knuckles of clenched fist)

This measurement term appears only in describing Ehud's concealed dagger. Unlike the standard cubit (elbow to fingertip), the gomed measured from elbow to the knuckles of a clenched fist—roughly 12-15 inches. The shorter measurement was crucial to Ehud's strategy: a blade small enough to hide under clothing yet large enough to be lethal. This specialized term reflects ancient Near Eastern precision in measurement vocabulary.

(1×) Judges 3:16 specifies Ehud's weapon as 'a gomed in length'—short enough to strap to his right thigh under his garment, undetected by guards. The term's specificity matters: this wasn't a standard dagger but a custom-made assassination tool, sized to a particular measurement. The Greek pygmē (fist-length) captures the same contracted measurement idea. The word appears nowhere else in Scripture, preserved solely to describe this deadly instrument of deliverance. CUBIT MEASUREMENT

en: a-cubit | es: gómed | fr: une-coudée | de: ein-cubit Judg 3:16

גַּמָּדִים H1575 Conj-w / N-proper-mp (1×)

Gammadim (warriors or people group stationed in Tyre)

This puzzling term appears in Ezekiel's lament over Tyre, describing defenders stationed in the city's towers. The meaning remains disputed: some ancient versions read it as 'valorous men', while others suggest it's an ethnic or geographic designation (Lagarde proposed reading 'Gomer'). The uncertainty reflects how the name of this otherwise unknown group was lost even in antiquity.

(1×) Ezekiel 27:11 positions the Gammadim alongside Arvadites as defenders hanging shields on Tyre's walls. Whether this refers to a mercenary group, a people group, or simply 'brave warriors' (from a root meaning 'warrior'), the context is clear: these were professional soldiers enhancing Tyre's defenses. The multilingual transliterations show most translators treat this as a proper name of unknown reference, preserving the Hebrew rather than forcing an interpretation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Gammadim | es: y-los-gammadeos | fr: et-Guemaria | de: [וגמדים] Ezek 27:11

גְּמוּל H1576 N-msc / 2ms (19×)

Recompense or retribution for deeds done; also a benefit or kindness received from God.

This noun from the root gamal (to deal, to ripen) captures the full circle of action and consequence. In most occurrences it denotes retribution—'the recompense of his hands shall be rendered to him' (Isa 3:11)—and the Psalmist calls on God to 'render to the proud their recompense' (Ps 94:2). Obadiah 15 warns Edom that its dealings will return on its own head. Yet Psalm 103:2 transforms the word entirely: 'forget not all his benefits,' where gemul becomes God's gracious kindness. Spanish distinguishes these beautifully—'retribución' for judgment, 'beneficios' for grace.

1. recompense, retribution (17×) Requital, recompense, or retribution for deeds—typically carrying a negative connotation of just punishment returning upon the doer. Judges 9:16 asks whether Abimelech was treated 'according to the dealing of his hands,' and Psalm 137:8 pronounces Babylon blessed who repays her what she dealt. Joel 4:4 and Isaiah 59:18 use it for God's retributive justice. Hindi 'badla' (revenge/recompense) and Spanish 'retribución' underscore the tit-for-tat quality. Lamentations 3:64 and Jeremiah 51:6 invoke it as divine payback. RECOMPENSE AND RETRIBUTION

en: according-to-dealing-of, and-his-deed, and-the-work-of | es: conforme-a-recompensa-de, recompensa, recompensa-de | fr: [הגמול], et-son-גמלו-lui, et-וגמול | de: Vergeltung, [גמול], [גמלכם] Judg 9:16; Ps 28:4; Ps 94:2; Ps 137:8; Prov 12:14

2. benefit, kindness (2×) A benefit, kindness, or gracious dealing—the positive side of God's dealings with his people. Psalm 103:2 stands as the key passage: 'Bless the LORD, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits (gemulaiv).' Spanish 'beneficios' and Hindi 'upkaar' (favor, kindness) clearly mark the shift from retribution to grace. In 2 Chronicles 32:25, Hezekiah failed to respond 'according to the benefit' done to him, showing that even this positive sense carries an expectation of fitting response. RECOMPENSE AND RETRIBUTION

en: according-to-benefit, his-benefits | es: como-recompensa, sus-beneficios | fr: [כגמל], rétribution | de: [כגמל], sein-benefits 2Chr 32:25; Ps 103:2

גְּמוּל H1577 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Gamul (Levitical chief, 'weaned one')

This name, meaning 'weaned', belonged to a chief among the Levitical divisions established by David. The name might commemorate the child's weaning—a significant milestone in ancient Israelite families, often marked by celebration (as with Isaac). Like many priestly names, it preserves a moment from family history: perhaps thanksgiving for a child surviving the vulnerable nursing period.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 24:17 lists Gamul as receiving the twenty-second lot in the priestly rotation. His name appears nowhere else in Scripture. The consistent transliteration across languages shows this is recognized as a personal name. The meaning 'weaned' connects to a root used elsewhere for weaning children and also for recompense or reward—both senses of something brought to completion or maturity. PERSONAL NAMES

en: for-Gamul | es: para-Gamul | fr: [לגמול] | de: [לגמול] 1Chr 24:17

גְּמוּלָה H1578 N-fp (3×)

dealing, recompense—requital according to deeds, whether good or evil

This feminine noun denotes dealings or recompense—the just return for one's actions. In 2 Samuel 19:36, Barzillai humbly declines royal reward, asking 'what is the reward to your servant?' Isaiah 59:18 warns that God will repay according to deeds—recompense to his adversaries. Jeremiah 51:56 calls Yahweh 'the God of recompenses,' who surely repays. The word derives from gamal ('to deal with, recompense') and carries the sense of measured, appropriate response to behavior—whether blessing for faithfulness or judgment for wickedness.

(3×) Dealing, recompense, or requital—the return one receives according to their deeds. In 2 Samuel 19:36, it means reward or recompense due to faithful service. In Isaiah 59:18, it refers to God's recompense according to deeds (plural 'recompenses'). In Jeremiah 51:56, the phrase 'God of recompenses' (el gemulot) emphasizes God's character as just repayer. Cross-linguistic glosses: English 'the reward/recompenses/deeds,' Spanish 'la recompensa/retribuciones/obras' (reward/retributions/deeds), French 'le récompense,' German 'der reward.' The semantic range includes both positive reward and negative retribution, determined by context and the recipient's actions. RECOMPENSE AND RETRIBUTION

en: deeds, recompenses, the-reward | es: la-recompensa, las-obras, retribuciones | fr: [גמלות], le-récompense | de: [גמלות], der-reward 2Sam 19:36; Isa 59:18; Jer 51:56

גִּמְזוֹ H1579 N-proper-fs (1×)

Gimzo (town of Judah, possibly named for sycamores)

This Judean town fell to the Philistines during Ahaz's reign, part of the territorial losses that marked his disastrous rule. The name may derive from the Syriac word for sycamore, suggesting a locale known for these trees. Modern Jimzu, east of Lydda, preserves the ancient name. The town's capture illustrated how Judah's unfaithfulness led to tangible losses—villages their fathers had held now slipping into enemy hands.

(1×) 2 Chronicles 28:18 records Gimzo's capture during the Philistine incursions of Ahaz's reign. The town represented one piece of Judah's shrinking territory as God withdrew His protection from an apostate king. The etymological connection to sycamores (if correct) would fit the agricultural lowland region toward Philistia. The name survives in modern Arabic as Jimzu, one of many biblical sites where geography preserves ancient names long after political boundaries shifted. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gimzo | es: Guimzo | fr: [גמזו] | de: [גמזו] 2Chr 28:18

גָּמַל H1580 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (37×)

To deal fully with, recompense; also to wean a child or ripen fruit – all expressing completion of a process

A verb whose semantic range reveals an underlying unity: bringing something to its full, completed state. Whether repaying someone for what they have done (Gen 50:15), weaning a child from the breast (Gen 21:8), or fruit ripening on the vine (Num 17:8), gamal always implies a process reaching its natural conclusion. The psalmist's cry 'Deal bountifully with your servant' (Ps 119:17) draws on this same root, asking God to bring generous action to completion. French captures the weaning and dealing senses with different verbs (sevrer vs. rendre), while Spanish unifies repayment under 'recompensar' but uses 'destetar' for weaning – exposing the semantic stretch that Hebrew holds together under one root.

1. repay, recompense, requite (18×) To deal out, repay, or requite – giving back in proportion to what was received, whether for good or evil. Jacob's sons fear Joseph will 'repay' them for their cruelty (Gen 50:15, 17), and David asks 'Have I repaid evil to my ally?' (1 Sam 24:17). Spanish 'recompensar/pagar' and English 'requite/reward' both carry the reciprocal logic. Deuteronomy 32:6 uses it of Israel's ingratitude: 'Do you thus repay the LORD?' REPAYING AND RENDERING

en: He-has-done-for-them, He-has-done-for-us, He-rewards-me | es: Le-hace, Me-recompensa, le-pagamos | fr: Il-rewards-moi, [גמלים], ai-repaid-moi | de: He-rewards-mich, [גמלן], [גמלים] Gen 50:15; Gen 50:17; Deut 32:6; 1Sam 24:17

2. wean a child (12×) To wean a child from its mother's milk, marking the transition from infancy to independent nourishment. Sarah weaned Isaac with a feast (Gen 21:8), and Hannah delayed her pilgrimage until she had weaned Samuel (1 Sam 1:22-23). French uses the specific verb 'sevrer,' and Spanish 'destetar,' both dedicated weaning terms – showing that this sense stands apart lexically in daughter languages. The passive participle gamul appears in Isaiah 11:8 and Psalm 131:2 for the weaned child as a figure of trust. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: and-she-weaned, and-was-weaned, and-weaned-him | es: Y-destetó, a-los-destetados, como-el-destetado | fr: comme-rendre, elle-sevra, elle-sevra-lui | de: Vergeltung, [גמולי], [ותגמל] Gen 21:8; 1Sam 1:22; 1Sam 1:23

3. deal bountifully, do good (5×) To deal bountifully or act generously toward someone, without the strict reciprocal logic of repayment. The psalmist pleads 'Deal bountifully with your servant' (Ps 119:17) and testifies 'He has dealt bountifully with me' (Ps 13:6; 116:7). Proverbs 11:17 says the merciful person 'deals well with his own soul.' English uniformly renders this 'deal bountifully,' and Spanish uses 'hacer bien,' both highlighting unilateral generosity rather than tit-for-tat exchange. REPAYING AND RENDERING

en: deal-bountifully, has-dealt-bountifully, he-has-dealt-bountifully | es: Haz-bien, hace-bien, me-ha-hecho-bien | fr: rendre, récompenser | de: [גמל], deal-bountifully, du-deal-bountifully Ps 13:6; Ps 116:7; Ps 119:17; Ps 142:7; Prov 11:17

4. ripen, bear fruit (2×) To ripen or bring fruit to maturity, said of plants completing their growth cycle. Aaron's rod 'bore ripe almonds' (Num 17:8), and Isaiah 18:5 speaks of a blossom 'ripening into a grape.' Spanish 'madurar' (to ripen) and English 'bore/ripening' both capture the botanical completion sense. This agricultural usage preserves the verb's core idea of a natural process reaching its fulfillment. REPAYING AND RENDERING

en: and-bore, ripening | es: madurando, y-había-madurado | fr: et-porta, rendre | de: [גמל], und-trug Num 17:8; Isa 18:5

גָּמָל H1581 Prep-m / N-mpc (54×)

camel — the domesticated one-humped beast of burden, a marker of wealth and travel in the ancient Near East

Gamal designates the domesticated camel (Camelus dromedarius), the indispensable beast of burden, transport, and wealth measurement across the biblical world. Its 54 occurrences span patriarchal narratives — Abraham's servant takes ten camels to find Rebekah (Gen 24:10), Jacob's caravan includes camels as a peace offering to Esau (Gen 32:15) — and extend into legal texts where camels are listed among unclean animals (Lev 11:4). The Ishmaelite traders bearing Joseph to Egypt ride camels loaded with spices (Gen 37:25). Cognates in Arabic (jamal), Aramaic (gamla), and Ethiopic (gamal) confirm the pan-Semitic antiquity of this word. Every translation renders it straightforwardly: Spanish 'camellos,' French 'chameaux,' German 'Kamele.'

camel (domestic animal) (54×) The one-humped domesticated camel used for long-distance transport, trade caravans, and as a measure of pastoral wealth. Appears throughout patriarchal cycles (Gen 12:16; 24:10-64), in Mosaic dietary law as an unclean animal (Lev 11:4; Deut 14:7), and in later narratives of trade and warfare. All 54 occurrences denote the same animal referent; grammatical variants (construct, suffixed, plural) reflect syntax rather than semantic differentiation. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: and-camels, camels, the-camels | es: camellos, los-camellos, y-camellos | fr: camels, chameau, chameaux | de: Kamele, [הגמלים], [וגמלים] Gen 12:16; Gen 24:10; Gen 24:11; Gen 24:14; Gen 24:19

גְּמַלִּי H1582 N-proper-ms (1×)

Gemalli (father of Danite spy, 'camel-owner'?)

This name belongs to the father of Ammiel, the Danite representative among the twelve spies sent to scout Canaan. The name likely means 'camel owner' or 'my camel', possibly indicating family wealth or occupation. Like most fathers of the spies, Gemalli himself never appears in the narrative—his role is simply to identify his son's tribal lineage and family connection.

(1×) Numbers 13:12 identifies Ammiel as 'son of Gemalli' from the tribe of Dan. The name appears nowhere else in Scripture. Its possible meaning related to camels would suggest a family of some means, as camels represented significant wealth in the ancient Near East. The consistent transliteration across languages recognizes this as a personal name, preserved solely to establish Ammiel's genealogical credentials for the momentous reconnaissance mission. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gemalli | es: Gemali | fr: Gemalli | de: Gemalli Num 13:12

גַּמְלִיאֵל H1583 N-proper-ms (5×)

Gamaliel ('reward of God'); a prince of the tribe of Manasseh during the wilderness wanderings, father figure in Israel's tribal organization.

A proper masculine name meaning 'reward of God' or 'God is my recompense,' borne by the prince of the tribe of Manasseh during the wilderness period. Like Gideoni (H1441), Gamaliel appears exclusively in the formulaic tribal lists of Numbers—at the census (1:10), camp arrangement (2:20), tabernacle dedication (7:54, 59), and marching order (10:23). The name is identical across all translations consulted (English, Spanish, French, German: 'Gamaliel'), a remarkable transliteration consensus. The same name resurfaces centuries later in the famous Rabbi Gamaliel of Acts 5:34, teacher of Paul.

(5×) The personal name Gamaliel, identifying the appointed prince of the tribe of Manasseh during the wilderness period. All five occurrences appear in Numbers within the stereotyped tribal census and offering formulas: the census roll (1:10), the encampment arrangement (2:20), the dedication offerings for the tabernacle (7:54, 59), and the marching order (10:23). The theophoric name ('reward of God') is consistently transliterated identically across English, Spanish, French, and German, reflecting its well-established tradition. The LXX form Gamaliēl is the same name borne by the famous Pharisee in Acts 5:34. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gamaliel | es: Gamaliel | fr: Gamaliel | de: Gamaliel Num 1:10; Num 2:20; Num 7:54; Num 7:59; Num 10:23

גָּמַר H1584 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

to come to an end, cease; to complete, bring to fulfillment

A poetic verb found exclusively in the Psalms, used both intransitively to describe things ceasing or coming to an end, and transitively to describe God completing or accomplishing purposes on behalf of his people. In Psalm 12:1 it parallels the rare verb pasas (fail), lamenting the disappearance of the faithful. In Psalm 138:8 it expresses confident trust that the LORD will bring to completion what concerns the psalmist. The Aramaic cognate gemar became the standard term for completing study in later rabbinic usage.

(5×) To come to an end, cease, be no more. Used intransitively in lament and rhetorical questions about faithfulness and steadfast love disappearing. Spanish 'ha cesado' and English 'has ceased' confirm the intransitive force. Seen in Ps 7:9, Ps 12:1, and Ps 77:8, where it parallels terms like 'apes (be gone) and pasas (vanish). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: has-ceased, has-come-to-an-end, let-come-to-an-end- | es: Acabe-, completará, que-completa | fr: se-plaindre | de: der-accomplishes, hat-ceased, hat-kommen-zu-ein-enden Ps 7:9; Ps 12:1; Ps 57:2; Ps 77:8; Ps 138:8

גְּמַר H1585 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

perfect, complete (Aramaic)

This Aramaic adjective appears in Artaxerxes' letter to Ezra, though textual scholars debate whether the phrase should read 'perfect scribe' or be emended to 'and peace be complete'. The word carries the sense of completeness or perfection, common in Aramaic administrative documents. If describing Ezra, it would emphasize his thorough mastery of the Law; if part of a greeting, it would be a standard Persian epistolary formula.

(1×) Ezra 7:12 presents this word in the Persian king's decree, possibly as part of Ezra's title ('perfect scribe') or as part of a greeting formula ('peace complete'). The Aramaic root relates to completion and fullness, appearing in later rabbinic Hebrew. The textual uncertainty reflects how difficult this Aramaic official document was to preserve accurately. Either reading emphasizes thoroughness—whether Ezra's complete mastery of Torah or the king's wish for complete welfare. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: perfect | es: perfecto | fr: [גמיר] | de: [גמיר] Ezra 7:12

גֹּמֶר H1586 N-proper-fs (6×)

Gomer; (1) son of Japheth, ancestor of a northern people; (2) wife of the prophet Hosea

A proper name borne by two distinct biblical figures. The first is Gomer son of Japheth, listed in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:2; 1 Chr 1:5), identified by ancient sources with the Cimmerians or Cappadocians of Asia Minor and mentioned in Ezekiel 38:6 among the allies of Gog. The second is Gomer daughter of Diblaim, the wife of Hosea whom God commanded the prophet to marry as a living parable of Israel's unfaithfulness (Hos 1:3). The dual usage makes this name a fascinating window into both ethnography and prophetic symbolism.

Gomer (6×) As a proper name, Gomer encompasses two referents. In the genealogical tradition, Gomer is a son of Japheth and father of Ashkenaz, Riphath, and Togarmah (Gen 10:2-3; 1 Chr 1:5-6), associated with peoples in the Anatolian region—Assyrian records mention the 'Gimirrai' (Cimmerians). Ezekiel 38:6 lists Gomer among the northern hordes allied with Gog. The second referent is Hosea's wife (Hos 1:3), whose name takes on symbolic weight in the prophetic marriage narrative. All translations uniformly render this as 'Gomer' across languages. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gomer | es: Gomer, Gómer | fr: Gomer | de: Gomer, Gomers, [גמר] Gen 10:2; Gen 10:3; 1Chr 1:5; 1Chr 1:6; Ezek 38:6

גְּמַרְיָהוּ H1587 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Gemariah, 'Yah has accomplished'; name of two men in Jeremiah

A theophoric personal name meaning 'the LORD has accomplished' or 'Yah has completed,' formed from the root gamar (H1584). Two distinct men bear this name in the book of Jeremiah. The first, son of Shaphan the scribe, had a chamber in the temple where Baruch read Jeremiah's scroll aloud (Jer 36:10-12, 25) and was among those who urged King Jehoiakim not to burn the scroll. The second, son of Hilkiah, served as an envoy carrying Jeremiah's letter to the Babylonian exiles (Jer 29:3).

(5×) A proper name, Gemariah ('Yah has accomplished'). Refers to two individuals: (a) son of Shaphan, a sympathetic official in whose temple chamber Baruch read Jeremiah's scroll (Jer 36:10-12, 25); (b) son of Hilkiah, a diplomatic envoy who carried Jeremiah's letter to exiles in Babylon (Jer 29:3). Spanish and English transliterations confirm the consistent rendering 'Gemaryahu/Gemaryah.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gemaryahu, and-Gemaryah, and-Gemaryahu | es: Gemaryahu, y-Gemaryah, y-Gemaryahu | fr: [גמריהו], [וגמריה], [וגמריהו] | de: [גמריהו], [וגמריה], [וגמריהו] Jer 29:3; Jer 36:10; Jer 36:11; Jer 36:12; Jer 36:25

גַּן H1588 Prep-l / N-csc / 1cs (42×)

Garden, cultivated enclosure; an enclosed plot for growing plants, from Eden's paradise to royal pleasure grounds.

Denotes an enclosed, cultivated area used for growing plants, vegetables, herbs, or trees. The word is indelibly associated with the Garden of Eden (Gen 2:8-16), where God placed the first humans, and it recurs throughout Scripture for royal gardens (2 Kgs 21:18; Esth 1:5), pleasure gardens (Eccl 2:5), and metaphorical gardens representing the beloved in Song of Solomon (4:12, 16; 5:1). All witness languages consistently render it as garden/jardín/huerto (Spanish), jardin (French), and equivalent terms. A single occurrence in 2 Kings 9:27 may function as a proper toponym ('Beth-haggan,' the garden house), where Hindi transliterates rather than translates the word, hinting at place-name usage.

1. garden, cultivated enclosure (41×) A cultivated plot or enclosed garden, whether for agriculture, pleasure, or sacred purpose. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (41 occurrences) is uniformly rendered across all witness languages as garden/jardín/jardin/Garten. Anchored by the Eden narrative (Gen 2:8-16), royal gardens (2 Kgs 21:18; Esth 1:5; 7:7), the beloved as 'a garden locked' (Song 4:12), and prophetic imagery of restored gardens (Isa 51:3; Ezek 36:35). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: garden-of-, in-garden-of-, like-a-garden | es: como-jardín, como-jardín-de, como-jardín-de- | fr: comme-jardin, dans-garden-de-, jardin | de: [בגן], [גן], [כגן] Gen 2:8; Gen 2:9; Gen 2:10; Gen 2:15; Gen 2:16

2. Garden (proper noun, toponym) (1×) A proper-noun or toponymic usage, 'the Garden' as a place name (Beth-haggan or ha-Gannah). Evidenced in 2 Kings 9:27 where the context describes Ahaziah fleeing 'by the way of the garden house.' Hindi's transliteration rather than translation of the word distinguishes this from the common noun, suggesting the ancient audience recognized it as a specific locale near Jezreel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-garden | es: el-jardín | fr: le-garden | de: der-garden 2Kgs 9:27

גָּנַב H1589 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (40×)

To steal, commit theft, kidnap, or steal away; covers unlawful taking of property or persons, being stolen, the thief as agent, and furtive departure.

The verb ganav is the Hebrew Bible's primary word for theft and appears in the eighth (or seventh) commandment: 'You shall not steal' (Exod 20:15; Deut 5:19). Its semantic range extends well beyond petty property crime. When Rachel 'stole' Laban's household gods (Gen 31:19), when Absalom 'stole the hearts' of the people (2 Sam 15:6), and when Joash was secretly rescued from Athaliah's massacre (2 Kgs 11:2), the same root covers deception, seduction, kidnapping, and covert rescue. The Arabic janaba ('to put aside') preserves a cognate root sense of lateral removal, while the Spanish robar/hurtar and German stehlen map the core theft meaning. The Hitpael reflexive form ('to steal oneself away') in 2 Samuel 19:3 reveals soldiers skulking home in shame — theft turned inward as furtive self-removal. Rabbinical tradition read the Decalogue's prohibition primarily as forbidding kidnapping, showing how seriously the personal-theft dimension was taken.

1. to steal, commit theft (19×) The core Qal active sense: to steal, commit theft, take another's property unlawfully. This dominates the occurrences and spans the entire canon, from the Decalogue's prohibition (Exod 20:15; Lev 19:11) to Jacob's accusation against Laban (Gen 31:26-30) and the violation at Jericho (Josh 7:11). The Spanish robar/hurtar and German stehlen are the consistent renderings. Rachel's theft of Laban's teraphim (Gen 31:19) is the narrative archetype: secretive, self-interested, and relationally explosive. Obadiah 5 uses thieves as a metaphor for total plunder. STEALING THEFT

en: Will-you-steal, and-steal, and-stealing | es: Y-robó, hurta, robar | fr: [הגנב], aurait-nous-voler, et-tu-vola | de: [הגנב], [וגנבתי], [יגנוב] Gen 31:19; Gen 31:20; Gen 31:26; Gen 31:27; Gen 31:30

2. to be stolen, taken by theft (8×) The passive and Pual forms expressing the state or event of being stolen. Joseph tells the chief butler 'I was indeed stolen away from the land of the Hebrews' (Gen 40:15), and Jacob demands of Laban accountability for anything 'stolen' from the flock (Gen 31:39). The Spanish robada/fui robado, French volé, and German gestohlen all render the passive cleanly. Exodus 22:12 uses the Nifal to legislate the case where an entrusted animal 'is stolen' — the legal distinction between active theft and the condition of having been stolen matters for assigning liability. STEALING THEFT

en: I-was-stolen, and-is-stolen, and-stolen-by | es: es-robado, fui-robado, robada | fr: Je-était-volé, cela-est-volé, et-est-volé | de: Gestohlenes-, [גנובים], es-ist-gestohlen Gen 30:33; Gen 31:39; Gen 40:15

3. to kidnap, steal a person (7×) To steal a person, i.e. to kidnap or abduct. Exodus 21:16 prescribes death for anyone who 'steals a man,' and Deuteronomy 24:7 specifies the same penalty for kidnapping a fellow Israelite. The Spanish secuestrar ('to kidnap') appears alongside robar in translations, marking the semantic shift from property to persons. Absalom 'stole the hearts' of the men of Israel (2 Sam 15:6) — a metaphorical kidnapping of loyalty. In 2 Kings 11:2 and 2 Chronicles 22:11, Jehosheba 'stole' the infant Joash from among the royal children being slaughtered, a life-saving theft. STEALING THEFT

en: and-he-stole, and-she-stole, and-stealer-of | es: Y-el-que-secuestra, lo-arrebata, que-roba | fr: [ותגנב], et-elle-stole, et-il-stole | de: [וגנבתו], [ותגנב], stole-du Exod 21:16; 2Sam 15:6; 2Sam 19:41; 2Kgs 11:2; 2Chr 22:11

4. thief, one who steals (3×) The substantive participial use: the thief, the one who steals, as a social or legal category. In Deuteronomy 24:7 and Zechariah 5:3 the participle identifies the agent who commits theft. Jeremiah 23:30 accuses false prophets who 'steal' God's words from one another — the participial form brands them as habitual thieves of divine speech. The Spanish el que roba, French le voleur, and German der Dieb all render the agent noun. This is not a separate lexical item but a productive participial use that became a standard way to designate the criminal. THIEF ROBBER

en: stealing, the-one-stealing | es: el-que-roba, que-hurtan, robando | fr: [מגנבי], le-voleur, stealing | de: [מגנבי], der-Dieb, stealing Deut 24:7; Jer 23:30; Zech 5:3

5. to steal away, sneak (3×) The Hitpael reflexive: to steal oneself away, sneak off furtively. In 2 Samuel 19:3 the soldiers of David's army 'stole away' into the city in shame after the victory that killed Absalom, their clandestine entry contrasting with the triumphant return they deserved. Job 4:12 uses the Pual to describe a word that 'was stolen' to Eliphaz — whispered secretly in a night vision. The Spanish escabullirse ('to sneak away') and the French voler ('to steal') adapted to the reflexive context capture the furtiveness. The theft metaphor turns inward: one steals not goods but one's own presence, slipping away to avoid notice. STEALING THEFT

en: and-stole-away, steals-away, was-stolen | es: Y-se-escabulló, fue-traída-furtivamente, se-escabulle | fr: et-stole-au-loin, steals-au-loin, voler | de: [גנב'], steals-weg, und-stole-weg 2Sam 19:3; Job 4:12

גַּנָּב H1590 Prep-b / N-mp (17×)

Thief — one who steals, whether a common burglar, kidnapper, or metaphorical figure of stealth

Refers to a person who steals, covering the full range from a housebreaker to a kidnapper. The Covenant Code distinguishes the thief caught breaking in at night from the one caught by day (Exod 22:1-7). Prophets use the figure powerfully: Isaiah indicts Israel's leaders as companions of thieves (Isa 1:23), Joel likens an invading army to thieves entering through windows (Joel 2:9), and Zechariah envisions a flying scroll cursing every thief (Zech 5:4). Deuteronomy 24:7 extends the term to one who kidnaps and enslaves a fellow Israelite. Cross-linguistically, the renderings are remarkably uniform — English 'thief,' Spanish 'ladrón,' French 'voleur,' German 'Dieb' — reflecting a clear, stable semantic core.

thief, robber (17×) A person who steals property or persons; used of literal burglars, kidnappers, and metaphorical figures of stealth and unlawful seizure. The term encompasses nighttime housebreakers (Exod 22:2), slave-dealers (Deut 24:7), and prophetic imagery of stealthy invasion (Joel 2:9; Obad 5). All major translation traditions use a single core lexeme (eng: thief, spa: ladrón, fra: voleur, deu: Dieb, arb: سارق, hin: चोर), confirming a tight, monosemous profile across all 17 occurrences. THIEF ROBBER

en: a-thief, among-thieves, and-thief | es: al-ladrón, como-el-ladrón, como-el-ladrón. | fr: [בגנבים], [גנב], [גנבים] | de: Dieb, Diebe, [בגנבים] Exod 22:2; Exod 22:7; Exod 22:8; Deut 24:7; Job 24:14

גְּנֵבָה H1591 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3ms (2×)

theft, stolen thing; property taken unlawfully

This feminine noun denotes something stolen or the act of theft itself. It appears in Exodus 22 within the legal code governing property crimes. The law addresses both the stolen item itself and the circumstances of the theft, including whether the thief is caught in the act or afterward. The term is concrete, referring to specific stolen property rather than theft as an abstract concept.

(2×) A noun meaning 'stolen thing' or 'theft,' referring to property unlawfully taken. In Exodus 22:3 (English 22:4), it designates the actual stolen animal that must be restored. In Exodus 22:2 (English 22:3), it appears in the phrase 'for his theft' (literally 'in his theft'), describing the legal status of a thief caught in the act. The construct form (genevah) and the form with suffix (bigenevato) both point to concrete stolen goods rather than the abstract concept of stealing. STEALING THEFT

en: for-his-theft, the-stolen-item | es: lo-robado, por-su-robo | fr: le-volé-item, pour-son-theft | de: der-gestohlen-item, fuer-sein-theft Exod 22:3; Exod 22:4

גְּנֻבַת H1592 N-proper-ms (2×)

Genubath, son of Hadad the Edomite and an Egyptian princess

Genubath was the son of Hadad the Edomite (Solomon's adversary) and the sister of Queen Tahpenes of Egypt. Raised in Pharaoh's household alongside Egyptian princes, Genubath represents the intermarriage between Edomite royalty and Egyptian nobility. His name appears twice in the brief account, emphasizing his unique position bridging two royal courts.

(2×) A personal name identifying the son born to Hadad and the Egyptian queen's sister. Both occurrences in 1 Kings 11:20 appear in the same verse, first naming him at birth and then describing how he was weaned and raised in Pharaoh's palace among the royal children. The name may be related to the root for 'steal' or 'theft,' though the significance of such an etymology remains unclear. The final tav (ת) represents an archaic or dialectal form of the name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Genubath | es: Genubat | fr: Genubath | de: Genubath 1Kgs 11:20

גַּנָּה H1593 Prep-m (12×)

gannah – garden, orchard; a cultivated and enclosed plot of land, often irrigated, for trees or plants

The feminine noun gannah ('garden, orchard') denotes a cultivated, typically enclosed plot of land where trees, plants, or crops are grown under irrigation. It is the common form alongside the more frequent gan and appears primarily in poetic and prophetic contexts. Balaam's oracle compares Israel's encampments to 'gardens beside a river' (Num 24:6). Qoheleth boasts of making 'gardens and parks' as part of his grand experiment in pleasure (Eccl 2:5). Isaiah prophesies that the redeemed will be 'like a watered garden' (Isa 58:11; 61:11). The word evokes fertility, abundance, and divine blessing when used positively, but also idolatrous worship when Israel plants gardens for pagan rites (Isa 1:29; 65:3; 66:17). Spanish jardines, French jardins, and German Gaerten all render the single horticultural sense.

garden, orchard (12×) A cultivated, enclosed garden or orchard, typically irrigated and fertile. Used as a figure of blessing and abundance (Num 24:6; Eccl 2:5; Isa 58:11) but also of idolatrous cult sites (Isa 1:29; 65:3; 66:17). Spanish jardines, French jardins, and German Gaerten render one unified horticultural concept across all twelve occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-like-garden, and-like-the-garden, by-the-gardens | es: como-jardines, de-los-jardines, en-los-jardines | fr: comme-jardins, dans-les-jardins, et-comme-un-jardin | de: [בגנות], [גנות], [גנותיכם] Num 24:6; Job 8:16; Eccl 2:5; Isa 1:29; Isa 1:30

גַּנָּה H1594 N-fsc (4×)

Garden, orchard; a cultivated enclosure for growing plants, fruit, or flowers.

A feminine noun for a cultivated garden or orchard, closely related to the more common gan. All four occurrences cluster in two contexts: the royal garden pavilion in Esther (ginnat bitan, Esth 1:5; 7:7, 8) and the nut garden of Song of Songs 6:11 (ginnat egoz). The Esther passages paint a vivid scene — the king's banquet spills into the palace garden, and Haman's fate is sealed when the king returns from that same garden. The Song of Songs usage evokes intimacy and delight. Spanish 'jardín/huerto' and French 'jardin' consistently reflect its cultivated, enclosed character.

(4×) Garden or orchard — a cultivated, enclosed growing space, used for royal gardens and intimate orchards. Appears as ginnat bitan ('garden of the pavilion') in Esth 1:5; 7:7–8, the palatial setting where Haman's downfall unfolds, and as ginnat egoz ('nut garden') in Song 6:11, an image of beauty and discovery. Spanish 'jardín' and French 'jardin' uniformly reflect the sense of a tended, walled enclosure distinct from wild land. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-garden-of, garden-of | es: de-jardín-de, el-huerto-de, jardín-de | fr: jardin-de, le-jardin, von-jardin-de | de: Garten Esth 1:5; Esth 7:7; Esth 7:8; Song 6:11

גְּנָזִים H1595 Conj-w (3×)

chests, treasuries—storage containers or royal treasure houses

This plural noun has two possible meanings: (1) chests or containers, particularly of valuable cloth (Ezek 27:24), or (2) treasuries, storehouses of royal wealth (Esth 3:9, 4:7). The word may be a Persian loanword, appearing in contexts of international trade and imperial administration. In Ezekiel, it refers to trade goods in Tyre's market. In Esther, it denotes the king's treasuries into which Haman promises to pay money for the right to destroy the Jews. The semantic range from portable chests to fixed treasuries reflects the contexts of commerce and state finance.

(3×) Chests (storage containers) or treasuries (royal storehouses), appearing in three contexts. Ezekiel 27:24 uses the construct 'chests of variegated cloth' in Tyre's trade inventory. Esther 3:9 and 4:7 refer to 'the treasuries of the king' where Haman would deposit his bribe. Cross-linguistic evidence shows: English 'chests of/treasuries of,' Spanish 'cofres de/tesoros de' (chests/treasures), French 'trésors de/coupe' (treasures/perhaps chests), German uses brackets. The conjunction 'and with chests of' (Ezekiel) indicates it's one item in a list of luxury trade goods. BDB notes possible Persian loanword etymology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-with-chests-of-, treasuries-of | es: tesoros-de, y-en-cofres-de | fr: et-coupe, trésors-de | de: [גנז], [ובגנז] Esth 3:9; Esth 4:7; Ezek 27:24

גִּנְזָא H1596 N-mpd (3×)

treasures, treasuries (Aramaic)—royal or temple treasure houses in Ezra

This Aramaic noun appears only in Ezra, referring to the Persian royal treasuries where official documents and resources were kept. Ezra 5:17 and 6:1 mention 'the house of treasures of the king' in Babylon where archives were searched for Cyrus's decree. Ezra 7:20 authorizes funds 'from the house of the king's treasuries.' The word is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew genazim, both possibly derived from Persian. It reflects the administrative machinery of the Persian Empire, with its careful record-keeping and centralized financial control.

(3×) Aramaic noun for treasures or treasuries, appearing three times in Ezra in contexts of Persian royal administration. Ezra 5:17 and 6:1 use 'house of treasures of the king' (bet ginzayya di malka) for the archive building in Babylon. Ezra 7:20 uses the construct 'house of the king's treasuries' (bet ginze malka) as the funding source for temple needs. Cross-linguistic glosses show: English 'treasures/treasuries of,' Spanish 'tesoros/tesoros de' (treasures/treasures of), French 'trésors de,' German uses brackets. The emphatic forms (ginzayya) and construct forms (ginze) reflect Aramaic morphology. This is administrative vocabulary for imperial treasure management. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-treasures, the-treasuries-of, treasures | es: los-tesoros, los-tesoros-de, tesoros | fr: [גנזיא], trésors-de | de: [גנז], [גנזיא] Ezra 5:17; Ezra 6:1; Ezra 7:20

גַּנְזַךְ H1597 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3ms (1×)

treasuries, storehouses (Persian loanword)

This Persian loanword denotes treasure chambers or storehouses, appearing in David's temple plans. The term reflects the international character of Solomon's court, where Persian administrative vocabulary entered Hebrew. David's detailed architectural instructions included these treasury rooms for storing the vast wealth dedicated to God's house—precious metals, vessels, and offerings that required secure storage within the sacred complex.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 28:11 lists the treasuries among the temple chambers David planned. The Persian loanword suggests these were modeled on Persian administrative architecture—secure storage rooms built into royal and religious complexes. The Septuagint's rendering ('storehouses') captures the functional purpose: rooms for safely keeping the gold, silver, and sacred objects that belonged to God's house. The plural form indicates multiple treasure chambers distributed throughout the temple structure. STOREHOUSE GRANARY

en: and-its-treasuries | es: y-tesorerías-de-él | fr: [וגנזכיו] | de: [וגנזכיו] 1Chr 28:11

גָּנַן H1598 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (8×)

To defend, protect, shield; used exclusively of God defending Jerusalem and his people from enemies.

This verb means to cover over protectively, to surround and defend. Every biblical occurrence has God as the subject—shielding Jerusalem from the Assyrian siege (2 Kgs 19:34; 20:6; Isa 37:35; 38:6) or hovering over the city like birds protecting their nest (Isa 31:5). Zechariah extends the image to God defending his people in eschatological battle (Zech 9:15; 12:8). The Arabic cognate janna ('to cover, conceal') and Aramaic agen confirm the root meaning of surrounding protection.

defend, protect (Qal) (8×) To defend or protect by covering and surrounding, spoken exclusively of divine action on behalf of Jerusalem or God's people. Spanish renders it 'defenderé/defenderá' (I will defend / he will defend), confirming the consistent protective sense across all eight occurrences. The verb appears in both Qal and Hiphil stems with no discernible semantic difference, always paired with salvation vocabulary—'deliver' (hitstsil, Isa 31:5) and 'save' (hoshia, 2 Kgs 19:34). Key passages include God's promise to shield Jerusalem for David's sake (Isa 37:35) and the eschatological defense of Judah (Zech 12:8). GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: And-I-shall-defend, and-I-shall-defend, and-I-will-defend | es: Y-defenderé, defenderá, defendiendo | fr: [וגנותי], [וגנותי], [וגן'] | de: [וגנות], [וגנותי], [וגן'] 2Kgs 19:34; 2Kgs 20:6; Isa 31:5; Isa 37:35

גְּנְתוֹן H1599 N-proper-ms (3×)

Ginnethon—a priestly name among the returned exiles in Nehemiah

Ginnethon (or Ginnetoi, a variant spelling) was a priest who returned from Babylonian exile and served in the restored Jerusalem community. He appears in Nehemiah's lists of priests who sealed the covenant (Neh 10:6) and in genealogical rosters (Neh 12:4, 16). The name may derive from a root meaning 'gardener' or 'protector.' BDB notes this name is related to the similar 'Ginnetho,' suggesting variant forms of the same name circulated in post-exilic priestly families.

(3×) A priestly personal name among the post-exilic returnees, appearing three times in Nehemiah with slight spelling variations. Nehemiah 10:6 has 'Ginnetoi,' while 12:4 lists 'Ginnethon,' and 12:16 uses the prepositional form 'to/of Ginneton.' Cross-linguistic evidence shows: English 'Ginnethon/Ginnetoi/to Ginneton,' Spanish 'Ginetón/Ginetoi/de Ginetón,' while French and German use placeholder brackets, indicating uncertainty about transliteration of variant Hebrew forms. These likely refer to the same priestly family or individual, with spelling variations common in post-exilic genealogies. The name appears in covenant-signing and priestly course lists. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ginnethon, Ginnetoi, to-Ginneton | es: Ginetoi, Ginetón, de-Ginetón | fr: [גנתוי], [גנתון], [לגנתון] | de: [גנתוי], [גנתון], [לגנתון] Neh 10:6; Neh 12:4; Neh 12:16

גָּעָה H1600 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (2×)

low, bellow; the sound cattle make

This verb describes the lowing or bellowing of cattle, capturing the distinctive sound oxen make. Job uses it rhetorically, asking whether an ox lows over its fodder when satisfied. In 1 Samuel, the Philistine lords hear the cows 'lowing as they went' while pulling the ark back to Israel—a detail highlighting the animals' reluctance to leave their calves behind.

(2×) A verb meaning to low, bellow, or make the characteristic sound of cattle. In Job 6:5, it appears in a rhetorical question: 'Does the ox low over its fodder?' (implying: of course not, when satisfied). In 1 Samuel 6:12, it describes the sound of cows walking: 'going along the road and lowing' as they pulled the cart bearing the ark. The term is onomatopoetic, mimicking the sound itself, and appears across languages with similar translations (Spanish 'muger,' German 'brüllen'). CATTLE AND OXEN

en: and-lowing, does-low- | es: muge, y-mugiendo | fr: et-mugissant, יגעה | de: [יגעה], und-lowing 1Sam 6:12; Job 6:5

גִּעָה H1601 N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)

Goah (place near Jerusalem of unknown location)

This obscure place name appears only in Jeremiah's prophecy of Jerusalem's future expansion. The site's exact location remains unknown, though it marked one boundary point in the prophet's vision of the restored city. The name survives solely in this prophetic geography, describing a Jerusalem greater than the historical city Jeremiah knew—a vision not fully realized in the post-exilic period.

(1×) Jeremiah 31:39 mentions Goah as a measuring point for Jerusalem's future boundaries: 'the measuring line shall go out farther to Goah.' The name appears nowhere else in Scripture or extra-biblical sources, leaving its location lost to history. The prophetic context suggests a landmark recognizable to Jeremiah's audience, now forgotten. The consistent transliteration across languages shows recognition that this is a place name, even if the place itself vanished from memory. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Goah | es: Goah | fr: [געתה] | de: [געתה] Jer 31:39

גָּעַל H1602 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (10×)

To abhor, loathe with visceral disgust; (Nifal) be defiled or rejected; (Hifil) fail, miscarry.

A verb of deep revulsion that dominates the covenant curses of Leviticus 26, where it appears five times in a bitter back-and-forth: God will not 'abhor' his people if they keep his statutes (Lev 26:11), but if they 'abhor' his judgments (26:15), he will act accordingly – yet even then, he will not utterly 'abhor' them to destroy them (26:44). Jeremiah echoes this covenant language: 'Has your soul abhorred Zion?' (Jer 14:19). The Nifal passive appears once in David's lament over Saul, where the shield of the mighty 'was defiled' – cast away as unclean (2 Sam 1:21). A rare Hifil in Job 21:10 describes a cow that does not 'fail' to calve, using the same root in a strikingly different biological register. Spanish aborrecer and French abhorrer track the dominant sense of visceral loathing.

1. abhor, loathe (8×) Active, visceral abhorrence or loathing – feeling intense disgust toward someone or something. Five of eight occurrences cluster in Leviticus 26's covenant-curse discourse, where both God and Israel are subject to this revulsion (Lev 26:11, 15, 30, 43, 44). Ezekiel 16:45 applies it to women who 'loathe' their husbands. Spanish aborrecer and Arabic karraha converge on the same gut-level rejection. LOATHING ABHORRENCE

en: I-abhorred-them, abhorred, abhors | es: aborrecerá, aborreciere, aborrecieron | fr: [געלה], abhorred, abhorrer | de: [געלה], [געלן], [געלת] Lev 26:11; Lev 26:15; Lev 26:30; Lev 26:43; Lev 26:44

2. be defiled, be rejected (1×) Nifal passive: to be cast off as defiled or ritually rejected. In David's dirge over Saul and Jonathan, the shield of heroes 'was defiled' on Mount Gilboa (2 Sam 1:21) – polluted by blood and stripped of its sacred honor. The passive voice and defilement vocabulary distinguish this from the active abhorrence of sense 1. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: was-defiled | es: fue-rechazado | fr: fut-defiled | de: war-defiled 2Sam 1:21

3. fail, break down (1×) Hifil causative: to fail or miscarry, used of a biological process ceasing to function. Job 21:10 describes a wicked man's cow that breeds successfully and 'does not fail' – the only occurrence in this stem, shifting from emotional revulsion to reproductive failure. The English 'fails' and Spanish falla confirm the semantic distance from the core abhorrence meaning. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: fails | es: falla; | fr: rejeter | de: [יגעל] Job 21:10

גַּעַל H1603 N-proper-ms (9×)

Gaal son of Ebed, a Canaanite agitator who led a short-lived revolt against Abimelech at Shechem.

A proper name for an apparently Canaanite figure who appears exclusively in Judges 9. Gaal son of Ebed arrived in Shechem and incited the local landowners against Abimelech's rule, boasting at a grape harvest festival that he would overthrow him (Judg 9:26-29). When challenged by Zebul, Abimelech's prefect, Gaal led his followers out to battle but was soundly defeated and driven from the city (Judg 9:35-41). All major translations preserve the name uniformly as 'Gaal' across English, Spanish, French, and German.

(9×) Gaal — the proper name of a Canaanite insurgent, son of Ebed, who briefly challenged Abimelech's control of Shechem. Confined entirely to Judges 9:26-41, Gaal arrived in Shechem, won the confidence of local leaders during a vintage festival, and publicly declared his readiness to overthrow Abimelech (Judg 9:28-29). Zebul, the city's governor, secretly alerted Abimelech, who ambushed Gaal's forces and routed them (Judg 9:35-40). Gaal was expelled and disappears from the narrative. The name is uniformly transliterated 'Gaal' across English, Spanish, French, and German traditions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gaal | es: Gáal | fr: Gaal | de: Gaal Judg 9:26; Judg 9:28; Judg 9:30; Judg 9:31; Judg 9:35

גֹּעַל H1604 Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

loathing, disgust, revulsion

This harsh word appears in Ezekiel's allegory of abandoned Jerusalem as a despised infant. The phrase 'in loathing of your life' describes Jerusalem cast out at birth, unwanted and rejected. The term captures visceral disgust—not mere indifference but active revulsion. Ezekiel uses this shocking image to emphasize the depth of Jerusalem's original abjection, making God's subsequent adoption and care all the more stunning by contrast.

(1×) Ezekiel 16:5 employs this term in the birth narrative: the infant Jerusalem was cast into an open field 'in loathing of your life'—meaning no one wanted her, everyone was repulsed by her existence. The word's emotional intensity conveys utter rejection and disgust. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'aborrecimiento', French 'indignation') captures this sense of active revulsion rather than passive abandonment. The image makes God's rescue and love radical—choosing what everyone else despised. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-loathing-of | es: con-aborrecimiento-de | fr: indignation | de: [בגעל] Ezek 16:5

גָּעַר H1605 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (14×)

To rebuke sharply, reprove with authority; used of human correction and divine censure of nations, the sea, and evil.

A verb expressing forceful verbal reproof, ranging from a father scolding his son (Gen 37:10) to God rebuking the nations and the cosmic waters. When Jacob rebukes Joseph, the word carries familial authority; when God rebukes the Red Sea (Ps 106:9) or Satan (Zech 3:2), it conveys sovereign command that reshapes reality. Remarkably, all six translation languages render every occurrence with a single equivalent — English 'rebuke,' Spanish 'reprender' — confirming its tight semantic unity across all 14 uses.

rebuke, reprove (14×) To sharply reprimand or censure, expressing strong disapproval or authoritative correction. Covers both human rebuke — a father chiding his son (Gen 37:10), reapers warned not to harass Ruth (Ruth 2:16) — and divine rebuke where God's word carries cosmic force, stilling seas (Ps 106:9, Nah 1:4) and silencing the accuser (Zech 3:2). The uniform rendering across English, Spanish, French, and German confirms a single cohesive sense without semantic drift. REBUKE CENSURE

en: You-have-rebuked, and-He-rebuked, and-I-will-rebuke | es: Reprende, Reprendiste, Y-reprenderé | fr: [גער], [וגער], [וגערתי] | de: [גוער], [גער], [גערת] Gen 37:10; Ruth 2:16; Ps 9:5; Ps 68:30; Ps 106:9

גְּעָרָה H1606 Prep-b / N-fsc (15×)

Rebuke, reproof, threatening censure — especially the awe-inspiring rebuke of God

Denotes a forceful verbal censure that ranges from a wise man's corrective reproof to the terrifying blast of divine wrath. In the wisdom literature, one rebuke to a discerning person outweighs a hundred blows to a fool (Prov 17:10), and the rebuke of the wise is better than the song of fools (Eccl 7:5). Far more dramatic is God's rebuke: the sea flees at it (Ps 104:7), the foundations of the world are laid bare (Ps 18:15), and warriors fall stunned before it (Ps 76:6). Isaiah envisions a day when a thousand flee at the rebuke of one (Isa 30:17).

rebuke, reproof, threat (15×) A stern verbal censure or threatening reproof — whether human or divine. When spoken by people, it carries the corrective force of wisdom (Prov 13:1, 8; 17:10; Eccl 7:5). When issued by God, it becomes a cosmic weapon: Yahweh's rebuke dries up seas (Isa 50:2; Ps 104:7), exposes the earth's foundations (2 Sam 22:16; Ps 18:15), and strikes warriors lifeless (Ps 76:6). Multilingual glosses uniformly reflect this dual register: eng 'rebuke/threat', spa 'reprensión/amenaza', fra 'reproche/réprimande'. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Your-rebuke, and-his-rebuke, at-His-rebuke | es: Por-reprensión-de-ti, amenaza-de, con-mi-reprensión | fr: de-reproche, de-son-מִגַּעֲרָתוֹ-lui, et-réprimande | de: [בגערתי], [גערה], [גערת] 2Sam 22:16; Job 26:11; Ps 18:15; Ps 76:6; Ps 80:16

גָּעַשׁ H1607 V-Hitpael-Imperf-3mp (10×)

To shake, quake, toss violently; of earth and mountains in theophany, of surging waters, and figuratively of nations staggering under judgment.

A verb capturing violent, convulsive shaking — the kind that makes foundations tremble and waters surge. In its most iconic usage, the earth shakes at YHWH's theophanic descent (Ps 18:8 = 2 Sam 22:8), where the Hitpael describes mountains tossing back and forth like boats in a storm. Jeremiah employs it for the Nile's floodwaters surging and overflowing (Jer 46:7–8) and, strikingly, for nations reeling like drunkards after drinking the cup of God's wrath (Jer 25:16). Spanish captures this vividly with 'se estremeció' (shuddered) for earth-quaking and 'se tambalearán' (they will stagger) for the judgment image, neatly distinguishing the physical and figurative poles.

1. to shake, quake, toss (9×) Violent shaking, quaking, or tossing — used of cosmic and natural convulsions. The Qal describes the earth quaking at theophany (Ps 18:8 = 2 Sam 22:8), while the Hitpael intensifies this to 'shaking back and forth,' applied both to mountains trembling in God's presence and to surging waters: the sea waves that cannot pass their boundary (Jer 5:22) and the Nile's floodwaters rising and tossing (Jer 46:7–8). The Pual passive in Job 34:20 describes a people 'convulsed' or shaken up, possibly by divine intervention at midnight. EARTHQUAKE SHAKING

en: [k], and-it-shook, and-shook | es: (y-se-estremeció), [y-se-estremeció], se-agitan | fr: [k], [ויתגעשׁן], [יתגעשׁן] | de: [k], [ויתגעשׁן], [יגעשׁן] 2Sam 22:8; Job 34:20; Ps 18:7

2. to stagger, reel (figurative) (1×) Figurative staggering or reeling under divine judgment. In Jeremiah 25:16, the Hitpoel form wehitgo'ashu describes nations who drink YHWH's cup of wrath and then 'stagger' — an extension from physical earthquake-shaking to the disorientation and collapse of peoples. Spanish translates this as 'se tambalearán' (they will totter), distinguishing it clearly from the literal earthquake sense, and highlighting how Hebrew re-uses seismic vocabulary for political and eschatological upheaval. EARTHQUAKE SHAKING

en: and-stagger | es: y-se-tambalearán | fr: [והתגעשׁן] | de: [והתגעשׁן] Jer 25:16

גַּעַשׁ H1608 N-proper-fs (4×)

Gaash; a mountain in Ephraim near Joshua's burial site, with associated ravines.

A place name identifying a mountain (har Gaash) in the hill country of Ephraim, located south of Timnath-serah where Joshua was buried (Josh 24:30; Judg 2:9). The name possibly derives from a root meaning 'to shake' or 'to quake,' fitting for a rugged highland. Second Samuel 23:30 and 1 Chronicles 11:32 reference the 'wadis of Gaash' (nahale Gaash), ravines near the mountain associated with Hiddai/Hurai, one of David's mighty warriors. All major translations preserve the name as 'Gaash' with minimal variation.

(4×) Gaash — a mountain in the territory of Ephraim, south of Timnath-serah, notable as the landmark near Joshua's burial (Josh 24:30; Judg 2:9). Its ravines (nahale Gaash) appear in the lists of David's warriors (2 Sam 23:30; 1 Chr 11:32). The name may relate to the root g-ᶜ-sh ('to shake'), suggesting a quaking or rugged peak. Transliterations across languages (eng/spa/fra/deu 'Gaash') are remarkably consistent. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gaash | es: Gaas, Gaash | fr: Gaash, [געשׁ] | de: Gaash, [געשׁ] Josh 24:30; Judg 2:9; 2Sam 23:30; 1Chr 11:32

גַּעְתָּם H1609 N-proper-ms (3×)

Gatam—an Edomite chief, son of Eliphaz and grandson of Esau

Gatam was one of the tribal chiefs (allufim) descended from Esau through his son Eliphaz (Gen 36:11, 16). He also appears in the parallel genealogy in 1 Chronicles 1:36. As an Edomite chief, he would have led a clan or region in Edom. The name's etymology is uncertain. He represents one of the many Edomite leaders listed in Genesis 36, showing the fulfillment of God's promise that Esau would father nations, even as the biblical narrative focuses primarily on Jacob's line.

(3×) A personal name of an Edomite chief (aluf), son of Eliphaz and grandson of Esau. Appears in Genesis 36:11, 16 and the parallel genealogy in 1 Chronicles 1:36. Cross-linguistic evidence preserves the name consistently: English 'Gatam/and Gatam,' Spanish 'Gatam/y Gatam,' French 'Gatam/et Gatam,' German 'Gatam/und Gatam.' The conjunction 'and Gatam' indicates his inclusion in lists of Edomite chiefs. All three occurrences are in genealogical contexts establishing the descendants of Esau who became the Edomite nation. The name appears without etymological explanation in the text. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gatam, and-Ga'tam, and-Gatam | es: Gatam, y-Gatam | fr: Gatam, [וגעתם], et-Gatam | de: Gatam, [וגעתם], und-Gatam Gen 36:11; Gen 36:16; 1Chr 1:36

גַּף H1610 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (4×)

Body, self; also height or elevation. Used for a person's own body or the highest point of a place.

A noun with two distinct semantic poles. In the Exodus slave laws (21:3–4), it appears in the phrase begappo ('by his body/by himself'), meaning a man enters or leaves servitude alone, without wife or children — the Spanish 'soltería' (bachelorhood) captures this self-contained sense well. In Proverbs 9:3, however, it shifts to 'heights' or 'elevated points' (gappe merome qaret, 'the highest points of the city'), where Lady Wisdom calls from the city's summit. The word is cognate with the later Hebrew/Aramaic guf ('body'), and the semantic leap from 'body' to 'height' may reflect the idea of a body's upright stature.

(4×) Body or self — a person considered as an individual physical entity, used in the idiom begappo ('by himself, alone') in the slave laws of Exod 21:3–4. The phrase indicates entering or leaving servitude unaccompanied. Spanish 'en su soltería' and German 'durch sein Leib' both reflect the embodied, solitary nuance. Cognate with later Hebrew/Aramaic guf ('body'). BODY (PHYSICAL FORM)

en: by-his-body, the-highest-points-of | es: alas-de, en-su-soltería | fr: par-son-corps, גפי | de: [גפי], durch-sein-Leib Exod 21:3; Exod 21:4; Prov 9:3

גַּף H1611 N-cpc / 3fs (3×)

wing, wings (Aramaic)—the wings of beasts in Daniel's visions

This Aramaic noun for wing(s) appears only in Daniel's apocalyptic visions of symbolic beasts. The first beast (representing Babylon) had eagle's wings that were plucked (Dan 7:4, twice). The third beast (representing Greece) had four bird wings on its back (Dan 7:6). The word is the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew kanaf and Syriac gepa. Wings in these visions symbolize swift conquest and imperial power. The variety of wing configurations on different beasts communicates their distinctive characteristics and the manner of their dominion.

(3×) Aramaic noun for wing or wings, appearing three times in Daniel 7's beast visions. Daniel 7:4 mentions wings twice: first 'its wings' (singular suffix in Qere, gapah; plural in Ketiv, gapayh) of the first beast, then 'wings' being plucked. Daniel 7:6 describes four wings on the leopard-like beast. Cross-linguistic glosses show: English 'wings/its wings/and wings,' Spanish 'alas/alas de ella/y alas' (wings/wings of it/and wings), French and German use placeholder brackets for the Aramaic forms. The plural form gappin and suffixed forms indicate morphological variation. This is apocalyptic vocabulary for symbolic animal features representing imperial characteristics. WING BODY PART

en: and-wings, its-wings, wings | es: alas, alas-de-ella, y-alas | fr: [גפיה], [גפין], [וגפין] | de: [גפיה], [גפין], [וגפין] Dan 7:4; Dan 7:6

גֶּפֶן H1612 Prep-k (55×)

gephen – vine, grapevine; the cultivated grape plant, both literal and as a figure for Israel and blessing

The feminine noun gephen ('vine, grapevine') refers to the cultivated grape plant (Vitis vinifera), one of the most symbolically charged botanical terms in the Hebrew Bible. Its 55 occurrences range from literal viticulture – the vine in Pharaoh's cupbearer's dream (Gen 40:9-10), instructions about the Nazirite vow (Num 6:4), and the spies' enormous grape cluster from Eshcol (Num 13:23) – to rich figurative use where Israel itself is portrayed as Yahweh's vine (Ps 80:8-16; Isa 5:1-7; Hos 10:1). The idyllic phrase 'every man under his vine and under his fig tree' (1 Kgs 4:25; Mic 4:4) became shorthand for peace and prosperity. Spanish vid, French vigne, and German Weinstock render it with perfect consistency.

vine, grapevine (55×) The grapevine used both literally for viticulture and figuratively for Israel. It appears in the cupbearer's dream (Gen 40:9-10), Nazirite legislation (Num 6:4), and the promise land's bounty (Deut 8:8). Figuratively, Israel is Yahweh's vine (Ps 80:8-16; Isa 5:1-7; Hos 10:1). Spanish vid, French vigne, and German Weinstock confirm a single concept across all 55 occurrences. VINEYARD CULTIVATION en: a-vine, like-a-vine, like-vine | es: La-vid, como-la-vid, como-vid | fr: cep, comme-vigne, la-vigne | de: Weinstock, der-Weinstock, ein-Weinstock Gen 40:9; Gen 40:10; Num 6:4; Num 20:5; Deut 8:8

גֹּפֶר H1613 N-ms (1×)

gopher wood (unknown tree species for ark construction)

This mysterious term appears only in Genesis's ark narrative, identifying the wood Noah used for construction. The species remains unidentified; suggestions include cypress, cedar, or some resinous pine. Some scholars connect it to 'pitch' (Hebrew kopher), suggesting naturally waterproof wood. The word may not even be Hebrew originally but a technical loanword for a specific timber type. The mystery endures: we know what Noah built but not precisely what he built it from.

(1×) Genesis 6:14 specifies 'gopher wood' for ark construction, but the term appears nowhere else in biblical or extra-biblical literature. Every translation simply transliterates ('gopher') because no one knows what tree species this names. Some connect it to pitch or resinous woods, others to cypress. The Septuagint guessed 'squared timber.' The unknown word preserves a lost piece of ancient knowledge—a technical term for shipbuilding timber that didn't survive in later Hebrew. FOREST WOODLAND

en: gopher | es: gofer | fr: gopher | de: von-Gofer Gen 6:14

גָּפְרִית H1614 Prep-l / N-fs (7×)

Brimstone, sulfur; a combustible mineral associated with divine judgment and catastrophic destruction.

Refers to brimstone or sulfur, the combustible yellow mineral that burns with a choking stench. In Scripture it is virtually always paired with fire as an instrument of God's devastating judgment. The definitive instance is Genesis 19:24, where the LORD rains brimstone and fire on Sodom and Gomorrah. From there it becomes a stock image of divine wrath: Psalm 11:6 warns the wicked of a rain of fire and brimstone, and Isaiah 30:33 likens God's breath to a stream of brimstone. German 'Schwefel' and Spanish 'azufre' both preserve the sulfur identification clearly.

brimstone, sulfur (7×) Brimstone or sulfur, a naturally occurring combustible mineral substance used throughout Scripture as the primary image of divine punitive destruction. The paradigmatic occurrence is Genesis 19:24 where Yahweh rains gophrit and fire upon Sodom. It recurs in judgment oracles: Psalm 11:6 warns the wicked will receive fire and brimstone as their cup, Deuteronomy 29:23 describes scorched land of brimstone and salt, and Ezekiel 38:22 includes it in the arsenal against Gog. Isaiah 30:33 uses nachal gophrit (stream of brimstone) as a simile for Yahweh's destroying breath. Spanish 'azufre' and German 'Schwefel' directly denote sulfur, confirming the mineralogical identification. BRIMSTONE SULFUR

en: and-brimstone, and-sulfur, brimstone | es: Azufre, azufre, en-azufre | fr: [גפרית], [לגפרית], brimstone | de: Schwefel, [גפרית], [וגפרית] Gen 19:24; Deut 29:23; Job 18:15; Ps 11:6; Isa 30:33

גִּר H1615 N-ms (1×)

chalk, lime, pulverized limestone

This term denotes pulverized limestone or chalk, appearing in Isaiah's prophecy about altar stones crushed like chalk. The word may be an Aramaic loanword, as the cognates appear across Aramaic dialects. Isaiah uses the image of chalk-stones—soft, easily crushed—to describe the total destruction of idolatrous altars. When limestone is pulverized into powder, it cannot be reconstructed; the prophet envisions pagan worship sites reduced to dust, never to be rebuilt.

(1×) Isaiah 27:9 pictures altar stones 'like chalk stones crushed to pieces'—a simile of complete, irreversible destruction. Chalk or lime was created by grinding limestone, producing a powder useful for construction but impossible to reform into solid blocks. The prophet's point is finality: when God removes Israel's sin, the implements of idolatry won't just be damaged but pulverized beyond any possibility of restoration. The multilingual 'pulverized' and 'chalk' both capture this sense of matter reduced to unrecoverable powder. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4300 WITH 3 SENSES

en: pulverized | es: cal | fr: [גר] | de: [גר] Isa 27:9

גֵּר H1616 Prep-l (92×)

A sojourner or resident alien dwelling in a land without inherited rights, often under divine legal protection

The gēr denotes a person living outside their homeland, residing among a people not their own and lacking the hereditary land rights of native citizens. Abraham calls himself a gēr at Hebron (Gen 23:4), and Moses names his son Gershom as a wordplay on this status (Exod 2:22). The Torah repeatedly pairs the sojourner with the orphan and widow as vulnerable members of society whom God commands Israel to protect, love, and include in festivals and sabbath rest. Across translations the term maps consistently to 'sojourner,' 'extranjero,' 'étranger-résident,' and 'Fremdling,' underscoring the universal recognition of this social category.

sojourner, resident alien (92×) A non-native resident dwelling among the Israelites without ancestral land inheritance, dependent on the community's hospitality and subject to specific Torah protections. Abraham at Hebron (Gen 23:4) and Moses in Midian (Exod 2:22) exemplify this status. The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'extranjero,' French 'étranger-résident,' German 'Fremdling' — all converge on the idea of a protected outsider living within but not fully belonging to the host society. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: and-for-the-sojourner, the-sojourner | es: El-extranjero, al-extranjero, el-extranjero | fr: [הגר], et-pour-le-étranger, et-pour-le-étranger-résident | de: Fremdling, [הגר], der-Fremdling Gen 23:4; Exod 2:22; Exod 12:48; Exod 12:49; Exod 18:3

גֵּרָא H1617 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (9×)

Gera, a Benjamite clan name or personal name associated with Ehud and Shimei.

A Benjamite proper name that appears to function both as a personal name and a clan designation. Gera is listed as a son of Benjamin (Gen 46:21) and as a son of Bela and grandson of Benjamin (1 Chr 8:3, 5, 7), suggesting it became a family or clan identifier within the tribe. The most significant connections are genealogical: Ehud the judge is called 'son of Gera' (Judg 3:15), and Shimei who cursed David is likewise identified as 'son of Gera' (2 Sam 16:5; 19:16, 18; 1 Kgs 2:8). Spanish interestingly varies between 'Gera,' 'Guera,' and 'Guerá,' reflecting uncertainty about the vowel quality.

Gera (proper name) (9×) Gera — a Benjamite proper name functioning both as a personal name and a clan designation. Listed among Benjamin's sons in Gen 46:21 and as a descendant of Bela in 1 Chr 8:3, 5, 7, the name likely came to denote a prominent Benjamite family. Its significance lies in two famous 'sons of Gera': Ehud the left-handed judge who assassinated Eglon king of Moab (Judg 3:15), and Shimei who cursed David during Absalom's revolt and later sought pardon (2 Sam 16:5; 19:16, 18; 1 Kgs 2:8). Spanish shows interesting phonetic variation ('Gera', 'Guera', 'Guerá'), while English, French, and German uniformly render 'Gera'. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gera, and-Gera | es: Gera, Guera, Guerá | fr: Gera, [וגרא] | de: Gera, [וגרא] Gen 46:21; Judg 3:15; 2Sam 16:5; 2Sam 19:16; 2Sam 19:18

גָּרָב H1618 N-ms (3×)

scab, itch—a skin disease disqualifying priests and animals from service

This noun denotes a scabby skin condition, likely a form of chronic dermatitis or eczema. Leviticus 21:20 lists it among blemishes that disqualify a priest from offering sacrifices. Leviticus 22:22 forbids offering animals with scabs to God. Deuteronomy 28:27 threatens covenant-breakers with 'the scab of Egypt' among other incurable diseases. The condition was considered ritually defiling and medically troublesome. Cognates appear in Arabic, Aramaic, Syriac, and Akkadian, suggesting a widespread term for scaly, itching skin afflictions across ancient Near Eastern cultures.

(3×) A scabby skin disease or itch, appearing in three legal and covenantal contexts. Leviticus 21:20 lists it as a priestly disqualification ('a scab'), Leviticus 22:22 as an animal blemish ('and with scab'), and Deuteronomy 28:27 as a covenant curse ('and with the scab of Egypt'). Cross-linguistic glosses are consistent: English 'scab/and with scab,' Spanish 'sarna/con sarna/y con sarna' (scab/with scab/and with scab), French 'une croûte/et avec croûte,' German 'ein Schorf/und mit Schorf.' The conjunction 'and' marks it as one item in lists of disqualifying conditions. This is purity law vocabulary for skin afflictions. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4364 WITH 3 SENSES

en: a-scab, and-with-scab | es: con-sarna, sarna, y-con-sarna | fr: et-avec-croûte, une-croûte | de: ein-Schorf, und-mit-Schorf Lev 21:20; Lev 22:22; Deut 28:27

גָּרֵב H1619 N-proper-fs (3×)

Gareb—a warrior of David and a hill near Jerusalem

The name Gareb refers to two distinct entities: a warrior among David's mighty men (2 Sam 23:38, 1 Chr 11:40), and a hill or elevation near Jerusalem (Jer 31:39). The warrior Gareb was one of the Thirty, likely from a northern tribe. The Hill of Gareb appears in Jeremiah's prophecy of Jerusalem's restoration, marking the western boundary of the rebuilt city. The name may derive from a root meaning 'scabby' or 'itchy,' though this connection is uncertain. Both person and place preserve the name in biblical tradition.

(3×) A personal and place name appearing in three contexts. As a person: Gareb was one of David's mighty men (2 Sam 23:38 = 1 Chr 11:40). As a place: the Hill of Gareb (gibeat Gareb) marks Jerusalem's boundary in Jeremiah 31:39's restoration prophecy. Cross-linguistic evidence preserves the name: English 'Gareb/Garev,' Spanish 'Gareb/Garev,' French 'Gareb,' German 'Gareb,' with some using placeholder brackets. The place name uses the construct 'hill of Gareb,' indicating a known geographical feature. Both person and place bear the same name, though no connection between them is stated in Scripture. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gareb, Garev | es: Gareb, Garev | fr: Gareb, [גרב] | de: Gareb, [גרב] 2Sam 23:38; 1Chr 11:40; Jer 31:39

גַּרְגַּר H1620 N-mp (1×)

berries, small fruit (olive berries)

This word denotes small berries or fruit, used by Isaiah to describe the meager gleanings left after harvest. The context suggests olive berries remaining on high branches after the main harvest is gathered. The imagery conveys remnant theology: just as a few olives persist at the tree's crown where harvesters cannot reach, so a faithful remnant of Israel will survive judgment, preserved by divine intention beyond human reach.

(1×) Isaiah 17:6 uses this term in a gleaning simile: only 'berries at the top of the highest branch' will remain after God's judgment. The image evokes olives too high to harvest, left clinging to upper branches—a small remnant surviving when everything accessible has been stripped away. The multilingual 'berries' and Spanish 'aceitunas' (olives) both fit this agricultural context. The berries represent Israel's faithful few, preserved not by their own merit but by God's sovereign placement beyond the reach of judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: berries | es: aceitunas | fr: [גרגרים] | de: [גרגרים] Isa 17:6

גַּרְגְּרוֹת H1621 N-fpc / 2ms (4×)

Neck, throat; the front of the neck, used figuratively as a place for ornamental wisdom.

A plural feminine noun appearing exclusively in Proverbs, always in figurative expressions about adorning the neck with wisdom, instruction, or virtue. Parents' teaching is 'a chain for your neck' (Prov 1:9), mercy and truth should be bound 'upon your neck' (3:3), and the commandment tied there becomes 'grace for your neck' (3:22; 6:21). The reduplicated form (gar-gerot from the root g-r-r) may suggest the gullet or throat, and the consistent pairing with ornamental imagery — necklaces, chains, binding — makes this a powerful metaphor for internalizing wisdom so deeply it becomes visible adornment.

(4×) Neck or throat — the front of the neck viewed as a place for wearing ornaments, used exclusively in Proverbs as a figure for internalizing wisdom. Instruction is a 'chain for your neck' (Prov 1:9), mercy and truth are bound 'upon your neck' (3:3), and commandments become 'grace for your neck' (3:22; 6:21). Spanish 'cuello' and French 'cou' confirm the consistent body-part meaning. The reduplicated form (from g-r-r) may evoke the throat or gullet, emphasizing the intimate, personal nature of the adornment. NECK (BODY PART)

en: for-your-neck, your-neck | es: para-tu-cuello, tu-cuello | fr: ton-cou-toi, à-ton-cou-toi | de: [גרגרותיך], [גרגרתך], [לגרגרתיך] Prov 1:9; Prov 3:3; Prov 3:22; Prov 6:21

גִּרְגָּשִׁי H1622 Art / N-proper-ms (7×)

Girgashite; one of the seven Canaanite peoples displaced by Israel, territory unknown.

The gentilic name for the Girgashites, one of the traditional seven nations of Canaan that Israel was to dispossess upon entering the Promised Land. Despite appearing in major covenant and conquest lists (Gen 15:21, Deut 7:1, Josh 3:10, Josh 24:11, Neh 9:8), their specific territory remains unidentified. They are listed as descendants of Canaan in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:16 = 1 Chr 1:14). The name appears with the article (haGirgashi) as a collective noun, and Spanish renders it 'gergeseo' or 'guirgaseo.'

Girgashite (people group) (7×) The Girgashite(s), an ethnic group reckoned among the seven Canaanite nations destined for displacement by Israel. Listed as begotten by Canaan in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:16 = 1 Chr 1:14), the Girgashites appear in covenant promises (Gen 15:21, Neh 9:8) and conquest narratives (Deut 7:1, Josh 3:10, Josh 24:11). Their territorial location is never specified, making them the most obscure of the seven peoples. All occurrences use the gentilic adjective with the article (haGirgashi) as a collective designation. Spanish alternates between 'gergeseo' and 'guirgaseo,' reflecting transliteration variation. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: and-the-Girgashite, and-the-Girgashites, the-Girgashi | es: el-gergeseo, el-guirgaseo, y-el-gergeseo | fr: [הגרגשי], [והגרגשי], et-le-Girgashite | de: [הגרגשי], [והגרגשי], den-Girgaschiter Gen 10:16; Gen 15:21; Deut 7:1; Josh 3:10; Josh 24:11

גָּרַד H1623 Prep-l / V-Hitpael-Inf (1×)

scrape, scratch (reflexively: scrape oneself)

This verb appears only in Job's extreme self-affliction, where he scrapes his sores with a potsherd while sitting in ashes. The reflexive form emphasizes Job doing this to himself—not seeking medical care but performing a ritual of grief and suffering. Ancient Near Eastern mourning practices sometimes included self-mutilation; Job's scraping sits at the boundary between medical necessity (relieving itching from boils) and grief ritual. The gesture embodies his total misery.

(1×) Job 2:8 describes Job taking a potsherd 'to scrape himself' as he sits in ashes. The Hebrew reflexive form emphasizes the self-directed action. This could be practical (scraping infected skin) or symbolic (a mourning rite), likely both. The multilingual glosses ('scrape himself', 'rascarse') capture this self-directed action. The potsherd—a broken piece of pottery—adds to the scene's degradation: the prosperous patriarch reduced to using garbage as a medical implement, his body and spirit equally shattered. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: to-scrape-himself | es: para-rascarse | fr: à-לְהִתגָּרֵד | de: [להתגרד] Job 2:8

גָּרָה H1624 V-Hitpael-Imperf-2mp (15×)

To stir up strife, provoke, contend with; in Hitpael, to engage in conflict or wage war against someone.

A combative verb whose two stems paint complementary pictures of conflict. In the Piel, it means to stir up or incite strife, as in Proverbs: 'A hot-tempered man stirs up strife' (Prov 15:18; 29:22). The Hitpael shifts to reciprocal engagement: to provoke oneself against, contend with, or wage war. God warns Israel not to 'contend with' Edom, Moab, or Ammon (Deut 2:5, 9, 19), and Daniel's visions describe kings who 'wage war' against one another (Dan 11:10, 25). Spanish distinguishes 'suscita' (stirs up, Piel) from 'contenderan / se preparara para guerra' (Hitpael), neatly tracking the stem shift from causative incitement to active combat.

1. provoke, contend with (8×) To provoke or contend with someone (Hitpael, general hostility). God commands Israel: 'Do not contend with them' regarding Esau's descendants (Deut 2:5), Moab (Deut 2:9), and Ammon (Deut 2:19). Hezekiah warns Amaziah: 'Why should you provoke trouble?' (2 Kgs 14:10). Spanish 'os metais / contenderan' and English 'provoke / contend' reflect general interpersonal or national antagonism without necessarily implying organized warfare. CONTENDING AND STRIVING en: and-engage, contend, should-you-stir-up | es: contenderán, os-metais, te-enfrentaste | fr: [התגרית], [תתגרה], devrait-tu-stir-en-haut | de: [התגרית], [יתגרו], [תתגרה] Deut 2:5; Deut 2:9; Deut 2:19; Deut 2:24; 2Kgs 14:10

2. wage war, prepare for battle (4×) To wage war or prepare for battle (Hitpael, military). In Daniel's apocalyptic visions, kings 'stir themselves up' for military campaigns: 'his sons shall wage war' (Dan 11:10) and the king of the south 'shall be stirred up to battle' (Dan 11:25). Spanish 'se preparara para guerra' and multilingual evidence consistently select martial vocabulary here, distinguishing this from the broader provocation of sense 1. FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: (qere:and-he-shall-wage-war), [ketiv:and-they-shall-wage-war], shall-be-stirred-up | es: (y-se-preparará-para-guerra), [y-se-prepararán-para-guerra], se-preparará-para-guerra | fr: et-exciter, exciter | de: [ויתגרה], [ויתגרו], [יתגרה] Dan 11:10; Dan 11:25

3. stir up, incite (3×) To stir up or incite strife (Piel, causative). The Proverbs trio: a hot-tempered man 'stirs up' strife (Prov 15:18; 29:22), and a greedy man 'incites' quarreling (Prov 28:25). Spanish 'suscita', Hindi 'bharkata', and Arabic 'yuthir' all converge on causative incitement. The Piel stem marks the subject as the instigator who provokes others into conflict, distinct from the Hitpael where the subject enters the fray. STIR UP INCITE

en: stirs-up | es: suscita | fr: exciter | de: [יגרה] Prov 15:18; Prov 28:25; Prov 29:22

גֵּרָה H1625 Conj-w / N-fs (11×)

Cud — regurgitated food chewed by ruminant animals, central to the Levitical clean/unclean distinction

The noun גֵּרָה (gerah) refers to the cud that ruminant animals bring up and rechew, appearing exclusively in the dietary legislation of Leviticus 11 and Deuteronomy 14. The phrase 'chews the cud' (מַעֲלַת גֵּרָה) functions as one of the two criteria — along with split hooves — for determining whether a land animal is clean and permissible to eat. The camel, hare, and rock badger are singled out as animals that chew the cud but lack split hooves, while the pig has split hooves but does not chew the cud. This pairing of external and internal markers reflects a larger Priestly concern with wholeness and categorical purity. Spanish 'rumia,' Korean 새김질, Swahili 'cheuo.'

cud (11×) Cud, the partly digested food that ruminant animals regurgitate and chew a second time. Used exclusively in the Mosaic dietary laws (Lev 11:3-7, 26; Deut 14:6-8) as one of two defining criteria for clean land animals. The formulaic phrase 'brings up the cud' (מַעֲלַת גֵּרָה) appears with each animal evaluated. Animals that chew cud but lack split hooves (camel, hare, rock badger) and those with split hooves that do not chew cud (pig) are all declared unclean. CATTLE AND OXEN

en: and-cud, cud, the-cud | es: bolo, el-bolo, la-rumia | fr: et-ruminant, le-ruminant, ruminant | de: cud, der-cud, und-cud Lev 11:3; Lev 11:4; Lev 11:5; Lev 11:6

גֵּרָה H1626 N-fs (5×)

gerah, a small unit of weight equal to one-twentieth of a shekel

A technical term of measurement denoting the smallest standard weight in the Israelite system, defined consistently as one-twentieth of a shekel. It appears only in passages that formally define the shekel's value: the sanctuary tax instructions (Exod 30:13), redemption valuations (Lev 27:25; Num 3:47; 18:16), and Ezekiel's future temple standard (Ezek 45:12). The Assyrian cognate giru confirms its ancient Near Eastern currency roots. Translations across languages preserve the term as a loanword: Spanish 'gera,' French 'guera,' English 'gerah.'

(5×) A gerah, the smallest Israelite unit of weight, equaling one-twentieth of a shekel. All five occurrences appear in formal legal definitions of the shekel, whether for sanctuary contributions (Exod 30:13), Levitical redemption prices (Num 3:47; 18:16), or Ezekiel's visionary temple standards (Ezek 45:12). Cognate with Assyrian giru, it represents a standardized fraction retained as a loanword across Spanish ('gera'), French ('guera'), and English ('gerah'). MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: gerah, gerahs | es: gera, geras | fr: gerah, gerahs, guéra | de: [גרה], gerah, gerahs Exod 30:13; Lev 27:25; Num 3:47; Num 18:16; Ezek 45:12

גָּרוֹן H1627 N-msc / 1cs (8×)

Throat as the organ of voice and swallowing; also the outer neck as a visible body part adorned or displayed.

A noun for the front of the human neck, encompassing both the internal throat and the external neck. As throat, it appears in contexts of vocal exertion – 'my throat is parched' from crying out (Ps 69:3) – and as the passage of speech: 'an open grave is their throat' (Ps 5:9), and 'cry aloud, spare not, lift up your voice like a trumpet' (Isa 58:1). As neck, it refers to the visible exterior adorned with jewelry (Ezek 16:11) or displayed in proud posture (Isa 3:16). The Arabic cognate jiran, denoting the front of a camel's neck, confirms the external, visible aspect of this body part.

1. throat (6×) The throat as the internal organ of voice production and swallowing. Psalm 69:3 laments 'my throat is dried out' from sustained crying to God. Psalm 5:9 uses it as a metaphor for deadly speech: 'their throat is an open grave.' Psalm 149:6 places praises 'in their throat,' and Isaiah 58:1 commands prophetic proclamation with full-throated voice. Spanish garganta, Korean mokkumeong ('gullet'), and Swahili koo all specify the interior passage, distinguishing this clearly from the external neck. Six of the eight occurrences carry this vocal or internal sense. NECK (BODY PART)

en: (and-your-throat), in-their-throat, my-throat | es: a-garganta, con-su-garganta, en-su-garganta | fr: [(וגרונך)], [בגרון], dans-gorge | de: [(וגרונך)], [בגרון], ihr-throat Ps 5:9; Ps 69:3; Ps 115:7; Ps 149:6; Isa 58:1

2. neck (2×) The neck as the outer, visible part of the body, subject to adornment or postural display. Isaiah 3:16 describes the daughters of Zion walking with 'outstretched neck' – a posture of haughtiness. Ezekiel 16:11 depicts God placing a chain 'upon your neck' as bridal adornment. Arabic unuq ('neck'), Spanish cuello, and Korean mok ('neck' as distinct from 'throat') all confirm the external, visible reading. The shift from inner passage to outer surface reflects a natural metonymy within a single anatomical zone. NECK (BODY PART)
en: eyes, neck-your | es: cuello, cuello-de-ti | fr: [גרון], gorge | de: [גרון], [גרונך] Isa 3:16; Ezek 16:11

גְּרוּת H1628 Prep-b | N-fsc (1×)
lodging place, inn, temporary shelter (Gerut Chimham)
This term appears in Jeremiah's narrative where the escapees from Gedaliah's assassination paused at 'Gerut Chimham' near Bethlehem before fleeing to Egypt. The word suggests a lodging place or wayfarer's shelter, possibly the property established by David's servant Chimham. The uncertain text makes interpretation difficult—some read it as a proper name, others as a common noun for 'inn.' Either way, it marks a stopping point between Jerusalem and Egypt, where refugees made their fateful decision to abandon the land.

(1×) Jeremiah 41:17 locates the fleeing group 'at Gerut Chimham near Bethlehem.' Whether this names a specific lodging place or describes 'the inn of Chimham,' it marks a waystation on the road to Egypt. The site may connect to 2 Samuel 19:37-38, where David promises to care for Chimham, possibly granting him property. The multilingual evidence shows uncertainty: some transliterate as a place name, others render it 'inn' or 'lodging.' The ambiguity reflects textual difficulties in this historical narrative. NIGHT AND LODGING
en: at-Gerut | es: en-el-albergue-de | fr: [בגרות] | de: [בגרות] Jer 41:17

גָּזַז H1629 V-Nifal-Perf-1cs (1×)
cut off, destroyed, excluded
A rare Niphal verb from a root meaning 'to cut' or 'cut off,' appearing only in Psalm 31:22 where the psalmist confesses his hasty cry: 'I am cut off from your sight!' The Arabic cognate confirms the sense of severance or extermination. In this context, it expresses the visceral feeling of exile from God's presence—not physical death, but the terror of spiritual exclusion. The psalmist immediately corrects himself: God did hear his plea. But the word captures that dark moment when all seems lost.

(1×) Psalm 31:22 uses the Niphal (passive/reflexive) to convey the psalmist's subjective experience of being severed from God's gaze—a crisis of perceived abandonment. The multilingual glosses emphasize the completed state (I-am-cut-off, he-sido-cortado, ich-bin-abgeschnitten), the finality feared in the moment of desperation. Yet the verb's rarity and its immediate narrative reversal suggest this is hyperbolic grief-language: the cry of one who feels utterly removed but is, in fact, still heard. CUTTING AND SEVERING
en: I-am-cut-off | es: he-sido-cortado | fr: couper | de: ich-bin-abgeschnitten Ps 31:22

גְּרִזִים H1630 N-proper-fs (4×)
Gerizim; a mountain in central Israel south of Shechem, associated with covenant blessings.
The name of the mountain south of Shechem (modern Nablus) that served as the mountain of blessing in Israel's covenant renewal ceremony. In Deuteronomy 11:29 and 27:12, Moses commands that the blessings be proclaimed from Mount Gerizim while the curses are spoken from Mount Ebal opposite. Joshua 8:33 records the fulfillment of this command. Judges 9:7 places Jotham on Gerizim as he delivers his famous fable against Abimelech. The mountain later became the sacred site of the Samaritan community. All translations preserve the name uniformly as 'Gerizim.'

(4×) Gerizim — a mountain in the central highlands of Israel, south of Shechem and opposite Mount Ebal, designated as the mount of blessing in the Mosaic covenant ceremony (Deut 11:29; 27:12). Joshua 8:33 records the covenant reading there, and Judg 9:7 sets Jotham's parable on its slopes. The modern identification is Jebel et-Tur. Cross-linguistic uniformity (eng/spa/fra/deu 'Gerizim') reflects the stable transmission of this important toponym. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Gerizim | es: Gerizim, Guerizim | fr: Gerizim | de: Gerizim Deut 11:29; Deut 27:12; Josh 8:33; Judg 9:7

גַּרְזֶן H1631 Prep-b (4×)
Axe; a tool for chopping wood, used in felling trees and in construction work.
A straightforward term for an axe or chopping tool, appearing in contexts of woodcutting, siege warfare, and temple construction. In Deuteronomy 19:5 the axe-head flies off its handle during tree-felling, illustrating accidental harm. Isaiah 10:15 employs it in a memorable rhetorical question—can the axe boast against the one who swings it?—challenging Assyria's arrogance before God. The multilingual glosses uniformly render it as 'axe' (Spanish hacha, French and German axe), confirming a single concrete sense with no semantic drift.

(4×) A chopping tool, specifically an axe used for felling trees and hewing timber. All four occurrences point to a standard woodcutting implement: an axe-head that slips off (Deut 19:5), a siege tool forbidden against fruit trees (Deut 20:19), the conspicuous absence of axe-noise during temple construction (1 Kgs 6:7), and the personified axe of Assyria (Isa 10:15). Translations across languages consistently give 'axe' without variation. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13410 WITH 5 SENSES
en: and-the-axe, axe, the-axe | es: con-el-hacha, el-hacha, hacha | fr: [הגרזן], avec-le-axe, axe | de: [הגרזן], axe, mit-der-axe Deut 19:5; Deut 20:19; 1Kgs 6:7; Isa 10:15

גָּרֹל H1632
adjective of uncertain meaning; possibly 'great' in construct form, textual variant
This word appears only once, in a disputed text in Proverbs concerning great anger or fury. Ancient versions and most modern scholars read it as another word meaning 'great,' suggesting a scribal variant. The uncertainty reflects the challenge of interpreting hapax legomena—words appearing only once. Context suggests something related to magnitude or intensity of wrath, but precision eludes us. Such textual puzzles remind us that not every detail of ancient Hebrew remains perfectly clear despite scholarly diligence.

גָּרַם H1633a V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)
gnaw, strip bare, leave nothing (metaphor: voracious judges)
This difficult verb appears in Zephaniah's condemnation of Jerusalem's judges, who are described as wolves that 'leave no bones for morning.' Most translations connect this to gnawing bones clean, leaving nothing. The root may relate to cutting off or stripping bare. The prophet's vivid metaphor pictures judges as predatory animals consuming everything, leaving no remnant—perfect corruption that takes all and gives back nothing to the community.

(1×) Zephaniah 3:3 employs this verb in a disturbing metaphor: Jerusalem's judges are evening wolves 'leaving no bones for morning'—or 'gnawing bones' depending on translation. The sense is voracious, complete consumption with no remainder. Whether the verb means 'reserve nothing' or 'gnaw bare,' the image is the same: predatory officials who extract everything from their victims, leaving not even scraps. The Spanish 'dejaron huesos' (left bones) captures one reading; other versions emphasize the gnawing action. Either way, it's an image of total, ruthless exploitation. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: they-gnaw-bones | es: dejaron-huesos | fr: priver | de: [גרמו] Zeph 3:3

גָּרַם H1633b V-Piel-Imperf-2fs (2×)

crush, gnaw, break; pulverizing bones or pottery

This denominative verb means to break or crush bones, appearing in two violent contexts. Balaam's oracle describes Israel crushing the bones of their enemies. Ezekiel's oracle against Oholibah uses the same verb, though applied to gnawing pottery shards—a gesture of desperation or self-harm. Both instances emphasize thorough, violent destruction.

(2×) A Piel verb meaning to crush, break, or gnaw bones. Numbers 24:8 uses it in Balaam's oracle: 'he shall crush their bones,' describing Israel's military dominance over enemies. Ezekiel 23:34 employs it more obscurely: 'you shall gnaw its shards,' referring to the cup of judgment drunk to the dregs. The root relates to 'bone' (gerem), making this a denominative verb specifically focused on bone-crushing action. The multilingual glosses capture both the crushing force and the gnawing action. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: he-crushes, you-shall-gnaw | es: roerá, roerás | fr: il-crushes, priver | de: [תגרמ], er-crushes Num 24:8; Ezek 23:34

גֶּרֶם H1634 N-msc (5×)

bone; by extension, strength, bony frame; self, very (substance of)

A noun denoting bone or skeletal frame, with extended meanings reflecting the same metaphorical logic found in its synonym etsem: from physical bone to inherent strength, and from bodily substance to the idea of 'self' or 'very.' Jacob's blessing calls Issachar a 'bony donkey,' meaning sturdy and strong (Gen 49:14). Proverbs uses it figuratively: a broken spirit dries the bones (17:22), and a gentle tongue can break a bone (25:15). The Aramaic and Arabic cognates preserve the primary sense of body or bone.

(5×) Bone, skeletal frame. The concrete anatomical sense appears in Job 40:18 describing Behemoth's limbs as tubes of bronze, paralleling etsem. Proverbs 17:22 and 25:15 use it collectively for the body's frame. Spanish 'hueso' and French 'os' consistently render the literal meaning. Aramaic geram and Arabic jirm (body) confirm the physicality of the root. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-bone, bone, its-limbs | es: hueso, huesudo, peldaño-de | fr: os, sommet-de, son-גרמיו-lui | de: Spitze-von, [גרם], [גרמיו] Gen 49:14; 2Kgs 9:13; Job 40:18; Prov 17:22; Prov 25:15

גְּרַם H1635 N-mpc / 3mp (1×)

bones (Aramaic)

This Aramaic word for bones appears in Daniel's account of the lions' den, where the conspirators thrown to the lions are devoured so thoroughly that the beasts 'crushed their bones.' The term is straightforward anatomy—the skeletal structure that the lions broke and consumed. The gruesome detail emphasizes the complete nature of their destruction: nothing remained of these men who had plotted Daniel's death, divine justice executed through the very means they had prepared for the righteous.

(1×) Daniel 6:24 describes how the lions 'crushed their bones' before the conspirators even reached the den floor. The Aramaic term is anatomically straightforward—the skeletal framework that the predators shattered. The detail serves the narrative's justice theme: the trap they set for Daniel became their own destruction, so complete that even their bones were broken. The multilingual consistency (Spanish 'huesos', French 'os') shows this is plain anatomical vocabulary, though used in a context of dramatic irony and divine vindication. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: their-bones | es: sus-huesos | fr: os | de: [גרמיהון] Dan 6:24

גַּרְמִי H1636 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Garmite (gentilics designation)

This gentilic adjective appears only in 1 Chronicles' genealogies, identifying someone connected to a place or clan called Garm. Like many genealogical notes in Chronicles, it preserves a connection to a location or family group otherwise unknown to us. The definite article ('the Garmite') suggests this was a recognized designation in the chronicler's time, though the reference point itself is now lost.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 4:19 mentions 'the Garmite' in Judah's genealogy, marking a family or geographic connection. The term appears nowhere else in Scripture, leaving its reference uncertain. The Hebrew form with the article suggests a known designation—'the one from Garm' or 'the member of the Garm clan.' The multilingual transliterations show recognition that this is a proper adjective, preserved in the genealogical record though its meaning escaped even ancient translators. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Garmi | es: el-garmita | fr: [הגרמי] | de: [הגרמי] 1Chr 4:19

גֹּרֶן H1637 N-fs (37×)

A threshing floor, the open ground where grain is beaten and winnowed; once a Ketiv variant read as 'throat.'

The threshing floor is one of the Bible's most evocative settings — a flat, exposed area where harvested grain is separated from chaff by treading or beating. It is where Ruth encounters Boaz in a scene charged with covenantal significance (Ruth 3:2-14), where David purchases Araunah's threshing floor to build an altar that would become the Temple site (2 Sam 24:18-24; 2 Chr 3:1), and where Hosea warns that Israel's unfaithful prosperity will blow away like chaff from the floor (Hos 9:1-2). All major languages render it with agricultural specificity: Spanish 'era,' French 'aire de battage,' German 'Tenne,' each preserving the concrete image of open-air grain processing.

1. threshing floor (36×) An open area, typically on a hilltop or elevated ground, where harvested grain is threshed and winnowed. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering — English 'threshing-floor,' Spanish 'era,' French 'aire,' German 'Tenne,' Arabic ;, Korean 타작마당 — confirms a single, stable agricultural referent across all 36 occurrences. Key passages include Jacob's funeral procession pausing at the 'threshing floor of Atad' (Gen 50:10-11), Ruth's nighttime encounter with Boaz (Ruth 3:2-14), and David's purchase of Araunah's floor (2 Sam 24:18-24), which became the site of Solomon's Temple (2 Chr 3:1). Micah 4:12 uses the image metaphorically: nations gathered like sheaves to the threshing floor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-threshing-floor-of, in-threshing-floor-of, on-threshing-floor-of | es: en-era-de, en-la-era-de, era | fr: aire, aire-de-battage, aire-plancher-de | de: Dreschen-Tenne, Tenne, [בגרן] Gen 50:10; Gen 50:11; Num 15:20; Num 18:27; Num 18:30

2. throat (Ketiv variant) (1×) A Ketiv (written-text) variant in Jeremiah 2:25 where the consonantal form is read as garon ('throat') rather than the Qere goren ('threshing floor'). The multilingual evidence confirms this anatomical reading: English brackets '[and-your-throat],' Spanish '[y-tu-garganta],' while French and German leave the Hebrew unresolved. The context — 'withhold your foot from being bare and your throat from thirst' — makes the anatomical sense contextually necessary. This is a text-critical rather than semantic distinction, but the word's consonantal ambiguity is lexicographically noteworthy. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: [and-your-throat] | es: [y-tu-garganta] | fr: [[וגורנך]] | de: [[וגורנך]] Jer 2:25

גָּרַס H1638 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (2×)

crush, grind; be crushed or pulverized

This verb denotes being crushed or grinding something to pieces. The psalmist uses it to describe his soul 'crushed with longing' for God's judgments—a powerful metaphor for intense spiritual desire. In Lamentations, Jeremiah laments that God 'has ground my teeth with gravel,' a vivid image of humiliation and bitter suffering from divine discipline.

(2×) A verb meaning to be crushed, ground down, or pulverized. In the Qal stem (Psalm 119:20), the verb is reflexive or passive: 'My soul is crushed with longing,' using physical grinding as a metaphor for consuming desire that wears down the inner being. In the Hiphil causative (Lamentations 3:16), God is the agent: 'He has ground my teeth with gravel,' depicting humiliation through forced consumption of grit. Both uses involve the idea of crushing or grinding, whether emotional or physical, with the Aramaic cognate suggesting perishing or being destroyed. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: And-He-ground, has-broken | es: Se-quebranta, Y-ha-quebrado | fr: [ויגרס], broyer | de: [ויגרס], hat-zerbrochen Ps 119:20; Lam 3:16

גָּרַע H1639 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (22×)

To diminish, subtract, or reduce; in passive stems, to be withdrawn or deducted; also to shear hair; rarely, to restrain or draw up.

Gara' is a verb of subtraction and reduction whose primary force is the taking-away of something from a whole. Its most theologically charged use appears in the solemn warning of Deuteronomy 4:2 and 12:32: 'you shall not diminish from it' — a command not to subtract from God's word that mirrors the prohibition against adding to it. In the brick-making scenes of Exodus 5, Pharaoh refuses to 'diminish' the daily quota while demanding straw be gathered independently, and the multilingual evidence (Spanish disminuir, Arabic naqasa, Hindi ghatana, Swahili punguza) all consistently select reduction vocabulary. The Nifal passive extends this into property law — inheritances and land valuations 'shall be deducted' according to years remaining (Lev 27:18; Num 36:3). A strikingly different physical sense — shearing or clipping hair — appears in the passive participle describing mourning rituals (Isa 15:2; Jer 48:37), where the languages pivot to cutting vocabulary entirely.

1. diminish, reduce, subtract (11×) The core Qal active sense of diminishing, reducing, or subtracting from a quantity. This dominates with 11 occurrences spanning legislative, narrative, and wisdom contexts. Pharaoh commands 'you shall not diminish the bricks' (Exod 5:8, 19); Deuteronomy twice forbids diminishing from God's commandments (Deut 4:2; 12:32); Ecclesiastes echoes that none can diminish from what God does (Eccl 3:14). The cross-linguistic evidence is remarkably uniform — Spanish disminuir/quitar, Hindi ghatana/kam karna, Arabic naqasa/qallala, Korean julida, and Swahili punguza all select core reduction vocabulary. Ezekiel 5:11 and 16:27 extend the sense to God diminishing provisions or territory as punishment. LIFTING AND REMOVING en: I-shall-diminish, and-I-diminished, and-diminish | es: disminuirá, disminuiréis, que-quitar | fr: [אגרע], [ואגרע], [תגרע] | de: [אגרע], [ואגרע], [ותגרע] Exod 5:8; Exod 5:19; Exod 21:10; Deut 4:2; Deut 12:32

2. be diminished, be withdrawn (7×) The Nifal passive sense of being diminished, deducted, or withdrawn — 7 occurrences concentrated in legal and administrative contexts. In Exodus 5:11, the Israelites' straw supply 'shall not be diminished'; in Leviticus 27:18, a field's valuation 'shall be deducted' proportionally; in Numbers 27:4 and 36:3, tribal inheritances risk being 'withdrawn' through marriage arrangements. Spanish sera quitada, Hindi ghataya jayega, Arabic yunqasu, and Swahili utapunguzwa all shift to passive constructions, confirming a genuine voice-based sense distinction. The legal precision of these passages gives this passive cluster a distinctly juristic register. DECREASE DIMINISH

en: and-shall-be-deducted, and-will-be-withdrawn, reduced | es: disminuido, seremos-disminuidos, será-quitada | fr: et-devra-être-deducted, et-fera-être-withdrawn, fera-être-withdrawn | de: reduced, sollte-sein-withdrawn, sollte-wir-sein-excluded Exod 5:11; Lev 27:18; Num 9:7; Num 27:4; Num 36:3

3. shear, clip hair (2×) The Qal passive participle describing the physical shearing or clipping of hair as a mourning ritual. Only two occurrences, both in parallel prophetic oracles against Moab (Isa 15:2; Jer 48:37), where beards are described as geru'ah — 'shorn' or 'cut off.' The multilingual evidence makes a sharp lexical pivot here: English shorn/cut-off, Spanish rapada/cortada, Hindi katana, and Swahili kunyolewa all abandon the reduction vocabulary of senses 1-2 in favor of cutting/shaving terms. BDB notes this connects to the Aramaic cognate gera' meaning 'to shave,' suggesting an archaic physical concrete sense from which the abstract 'diminish' may have developed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cut-off, is-shorn | es: cortada, rapada | fr: [גרועה], [גרעה] | de: [גרועה], [גרעה] Isa 15:2; Jer 48:37

4. restrain, limit, hold back (1×) A single Qal occurrence in Job 15:8 where Eliphaz asks Job whether he 'restrains' or 'limits' wisdom to himself. The sense is not numerical reduction but rather hoarding or monopolizing — holding wisdom back from others. Spanish retienes ('you retain/withhold'), Hindi simit ki ('limited'), and Arabic tahrusu ('you guard') all select control/withholding vocabulary rather than subtraction terms. This suggests a secondary metaphorical extension from 'diminishing others' share' to 'restricting access.' RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: and-you-limit | es: y-retienes | fr: et-retrancher | de: [ותגרע] Job 15:8

5. draw up, pull up (1×) A single Piel occurrence in Job 36:27 where God 'draws up' water droplets that distill as rain. The physical upward-pulling sense is strikingly different from diminishment, and the translations confirm it: English 'draws up,' Hindi khinchta hai ('pulls'), Arabic yashhabu ('draws/pulls'), Swahili anavuta ('pulls'). The Piel intensive stem may preserve an older concrete meaning of 'pulling away/extracting' that underlies the more abstract 'diminish.' Elihu's hymn to God's meteorological power gives this rare sense a vivid natural-philosophy setting. LIFTING AND REMOVING

en: he-draws-up | es: reduce | fr: retrancher | de: [יגרע] Job 36:27

גָּרַף H1640 V-Qal-Perf-3ms / 3mp (1×)

sweep away, carry off (by flood or current)

This verb describes the Kishon torrent sweeping away Sisera's forces in Deborah's song. The root suggests scooping or sweeping away, as floodwaters carry off everything in their path. The Song of Deborah celebrates this natural intervention: the ancient river Kishon became God's ally, its swollen current dragging away Canaanite chariots. The verb captures the irresistible force of waters in flood, turning Sisera's technological advantage into a death trap.

(1×) Judges 5:21 proclaims, 'The torrent Kishon swept them away.' The verb's root sense involves sweeping or scooping up and carrying off, perfect for describing a flash flood engulfing an army. The multilingual glosses ('swept away', 'barrió') capture this irresistible current. The Song celebrates how God turned nature against Israel's enemies: their chariots, devastating on dry ground, became anchors in mud as the Kishon rose to sweep away Canaanite forces. The verb embodies divine intervention through creation's forces. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: swept-them-away | es: los-barrió | fr: swept-eux-au-loin | de: swept-ihnen-weg Judg 5:21

גָּרַר H1641 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (5×)

to drag, drag away; to chew (cud); to saw; to sweep along (of storm)

A verb with a core meaning of dragging or pulling, which branches into several specialized uses across its stems. In the Qal it describes dragging away by force, as when the Chaldeans sweep nations into their net (Hab 1:15) or violence drags away the wicked (Prov 21:7). The Niphal denotes chewing cud, literally a repetitive drawing motion of the jaw (Lev 11:7). The Poel describes stones sawn with a saw (1 Kgs 7:9), and the Hithpoel a storm sweeping and roaring (Jer 30:23). Arabic jarra and Assyrian gararu preserve the basic 'drag/pull' semantics.

(5×) To drag away, sweep up by force. Used of violent seizure: the Chaldean fisherman drags nations in his net (Hab 1:15), and the violence of the wicked drags them away (Prov 21:7). Spanish 'arrastra' (drags) captures the forceful linear motion. The Assyrian cognate gararu ('run, drag') supports this as the root's primary sense. DRAWING AND PULLING

en: drags-them-away, he-drags-them, it-chews | es: cortadas, los-arrastra, que-se-arremolina | fr: [מתגורר], cela-chews, mâcher | de: [יגורם], [יגרהו], [מתגורר] Lev 11:7; 1Kgs 7:9; Prov 21:7; Jer 30:23; Hab 1:15

גְּרָר H1642 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (10×)

Gerar — an ancient city in the Negev south of Gaza, prominent in the Abraham and Isaac narratives.

Gerar was a Philistine city situated in the western Negev, traditionally identified with Tell Abu Hureirah south of Gaza. It features prominently in the patriarchal narratives: Abraham sojourned there under King Abimelech (Gen 20:1-2), and Isaac later settled in the same region, digging wells in the Wadi Gerar (Gen 26:17). The name appears with directional and prepositional forms — 'Gerar-ward' (Gen 10:19), 'in Gerar,' 'from Gerar' — but always denotes the same geographic location. Spanish 'Guerar' and French/German 'Gerar' preserve the toponym with minimal phonetic adaptation.

Gerar (place name) (10×) The proper name of an ancient Philistine city in the Negev, south of Gaza, associated with the patriarchal sojourns of Abraham (Gen 20:1-2) and Isaac (Gen 26:1, 6). It also appears in the table of nations as a Canaanite border marker (Gen 10:19) and in Asa's military campaign (2 Chr 14:12-13). All ten occurrences refer to the same geographic site, with prepositional variants (in-Gerar, to-Gerar, from-Gerar) reflecting normal locative usage rather than distinct senses. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gerar, Gerar-ward, from-Gerar | es: Gerar, Guerár, a-Gerar | fr: Gerar, Gerar-garde, [גרר] | de: Gerar, Gerars, [גרר] Gen 10:19; Gen 20:1; Gen 20:2; Gen 26:1; Gen 26:6

גֶּרֶשׁ H1643 N-msc (2×)

groats, crushed grain; grain kernels coarsely ground or crushed

This noun refers to groats—grain that has been crushed or coarsely ground but not finely milled into flour. It appears in Leviticus' instructions for grain offerings, specifying that fresh ears of grain should be 'parched with fire, crushed grain of fresh ears.' The term emphasizes the intermediate state between whole kernels and fine flour, suitable for certain offerings.

(2×) A concrete noun meaning groats, grits, or crushed grain—specifically grain kernels that have been crushed or ground but remain coarser than flour. Leviticus 2:14 prescribes offering 'young ears parched with fire, crushed grain of fresh fruit' as a firstfruits grain offering. Leviticus 2:16 refers back to this 'crushed grain' when specifying what the priest shall burn. The term derives from the root meaning 'to crush' and appears in cognate languages (Aramaic, Syriac) with similar meanings. Spanish and German glosses emphasize the 'crushed' or 'ground' character of this grain preparation. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: crushed-grain, from-its-crushed-grain | es: de-grano-machacado-suya, grano-machacado-de | fr: de-son-écrasa-grain, écrasa-grain | de: von-sein-zermalmte-Getreide, zermalmte-Getreide Lev 2:14; Lev 2:16

גָּרַשׁ H1644 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (47×)

Drive out, expel; divorce (as passive participle); be banished; of water: surge, toss up

A verb of forceful removal, spanning from the expulsion of Adam from Eden (Gen 3:24) to the banishment of nations before Israel and the legal dismissal of a wife in divorce. The Piel intensifies the driving out, while the passive participle gerushah becomes a near-technical term for a divorced woman in priestly law. In its most vivid image, Isaiah 57:20 compares the wicked to a storm-tossed sea that cannot rest, constantly casting up mire. Spanish 'expulsar' and French 'chasser' consistently capture the forceful ejection, while the divorce sense draws on distinct legal vocabulary across languages.

1. drive out, expel (36×) To drive out or expel forcefully, the dominant sense covering God's expulsion of Adam from Eden (Gen 3:24), the driving out of Canaanite peoples before Israel (Exod 34:11; Judg 2:3; 1 Chr 17:21), and the banishment of individuals such as Hagar (Gen 21:10) and Moses' future role in compelling Pharaoh to release Israel (Exod 6:1; 11:1). Spanish 'expulsar' and French 'chasser' both emphasize the violent, compulsory nature of the removal. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: And-drove-out, I-will-drive-him-out, I-will-drive-them-out | es: Expulsa, Y-expulsó, Y-los-expulsó | fr: Et-chassa, Et-chassa-dehors, Je—chasser-lui-dehors | de: And-vertrieb-heraus, [אגרשם], [גרש] Gen 3:24; Gen 4:14; Gen 21:10; Exod 2:17; Exod 6:1

2. divorced woman (5×) A divorced woman, used as the Qal passive participle gerushah in five priestly legal texts (Lev 21:7, 14; 22:13; Num 30:9; Ezek 44:22). The term appears alongside 'widow' (almanah) to define categories of women whom priests may or may not marry. Spanish 'divorciada' and 'repudiada' show the legal and social stigma dimensions, while the underlying metaphor of being 'driven away' from a husband remains vivid. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: and-a-divorced-woman, and-divorced, and-divorced-woman | es: divorciada, y-divorciada, y-repudiada | fr: divorced, et-chasser, et-divorced | de: [וגרושה], divorced, und-divorced Lev 21:7; Lev 21:14; Lev 22:13; Num 30:9; Ezek 44:22

3. be driven out, be expelled (3×) To be driven out or banished, appearing in the Niphal and Pual passive stems. Jonah 2:4 cries 'I am driven out from your sight,' the Israelites are driven out of Egypt in haste (Exod 12:39), and Job 30:5 describes outcasts driven from society. The passive voice underscores the helplessness of those expelled. EXPELLING AND PRODUCING

en: I-am-driven-out, they-are-driven-out, they-were-driven-out | es: fueron-expulsados, fui-arrojado, son-expulsados | fr: chasser, ils-étaient-driven-dehors | de: [יגרשו], [נגרשתי], sie-waren-driven-heraus Exod 12:39; Job 30:5; Jonah 2:4

4. toss, surge, cast up (3×) Of water surging, heaving, and casting up debris, used in the powerful simile of Isaiah 57:20 where the wicked are compared to a tossed sea that cannot rest and whose waves cast up mire and filth. Amos 8:8 similarly uses the root for the land surging and subsiding like the Nile. Spanish 'agitado' captures the restless turbulence of this distinctive metaphorical extension. THROWING AND CASTING

en: and-cast-up, and-it-will-be-tossed, tossed | es: agitado, y-arrojan, y-será-agitada | fr: [ויגרשו], [נגרש], et-chasser | de: [ויגרשו], [ונגרשה], [נגרש] Isa 57:20; Amos 8:8

גֶּרֶשׁ H1645 N-msc (1×)

yield, produce, what is brought forth (seasonally)

This poetic term appears in Moses' blessing, describing the 'yield of the moons'—crops that ripen according to lunar cycles. The word emphasizes what is brought forth or thrust out, as plants produce fruit in their seasons. Paired with 'produce of the sun,' this creates a poetic parallel: the solar year and lunar months together govern the agricultural calendar, and God grants fertility according to these heaven-regulated rhythms.

(1×) Deuteronomy 33:14 blesses Joseph's land with 'the yield of the moons,' parallel to 'the produce of the sun.' The term captures seasonal productivity governed by lunar cycles—crops ripening month by month through the year. Ancient agriculture closely tracked both solar seasons and lunar months. The multilingual 'yield of' and 'producido de' both emphasize the bringing forth of crops. This poetic blessing promises that Joseph's territory will produce abundantly according to heaven's appointed times, fertility synchronized with celestial rhythms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: yield-of | es: lo-producido-de | fr: yield-de | de: yield-von Deut 33:14

גְּרוּשָׁה H1646 N-fpc / 2mp (1×)

evictions, expulsions, violent seizures of property

This term appears in Ezekiel's indictment of Israel's princes, commanding them to stop their 'evictions' or violent property seizures. The noun derives from the verb 'to drive out' and suggests forcible dispossession—powerful men driving people from their land or homes. Ezekiel's reform vision includes ending such injustices: rulers must cease using their power to expel people from their rightful inheritances, a covenant violation that perverted Israel's land theology.

(1×) Ezekiel 45:9 commands Israel's princes: 'Remove your evictions!' The term denotes forcible dispossession—driving people from their land or property. In a society where land was covenant inheritance, such expulsions violated divine law. The multilingual evidence shows varied understandings: Spanish 'exacciones' (extortions), French 'reproche' (reproach), English 'evictions'—all circling the core idea of wrongful seizure or oppression. The prophetic command demands economic justice: stop using power to dispossess the vulnerable, respecting instead the land rights God established. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: your-evictions | es: vuestras-exacciones | fr: reproche | de: [גרשתיכם] Ezek 45:9

גֵּרְשֹׁם H1647 N-proper-ms (14×)
Gershom — personal name meaning 'sojourner there,' borne by Moses' firstborn and several Levites.
A proper masculine name explained by popular etymology as 'a stranger there' (from גֵּר שָׁם), first given by Moses to his firstborn son in Midian because 'I have been a sojourner in a foreign land' (Exod 2:22). The name reappears for a Levitical ancestor (1 Chr 6:16–17, often interchangeable with Gershon) and a descendant of Phinehas who returned with Ezra (Ezra 8:2). Spanish renders it 'Guersom/Gershom,' French varies between 'Guerschom' and 'Gershom,' reflecting the guttural and sibilant challenges this name poses across languages.

Gershom (personal name) (14×) The Hebrew personal name Gershom (גֵּרְשֹׁם), etymologically linked to גּוּר ('to sojourn'). Primarily identifies Moses' firstborn (Exod 2:22, 18:3; Judg 18:30), but also a Levitical lineage head sometimes written Gershon (1 Chr 6:16–17; 15:7; 23:15–16; 26:24) and a returnee ancestor under Ezra (Ezra 8:2). The slight spelling variation between גֵּרְשֹׁם and גֵּרְשׁוֹם across manuscripts reflects standard orthographic fluidity in proper names. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Gershom, to-Gershom, to-Gershon | es: De-Guersom, Gershom, Gershóm | fr: Gershom, Guerschom, Guershom | de: Gerschom, Gershom, [גרשם] Exod 2:22; Exod 18:3; Judg 18:30; 1Chr 6:16; 1Chr 6:17

גֵּרְשׁוֹן H1648 N-proper-ms (17×)
Gershon — firstborn son of Levi and ancestor of the Gershonite Levitical clan
The proper name of Levi's firstborn son, progenitor of one of the three major Levitical clans responsible for transporting the tabernacle's coverings, curtains, and hangings during the wilderness wanderings (Num 3:25; 4:22-28). The variant spelling Gershom (גֵּרְשֹׁם) appears in several Chronicles passages (1 Chr 6:1, 28; 15:7), and the two forms are treated as interchangeable. The name may derive from garash ('to drive out'), echoing the exile motif, though this etymology is debated. The 'sons of Gershon' formula dominates the attestation, appearing in Numbers, Joshua, and Chronicles in connection with Levitical duties, allotments, and genealogies.

Gershon (17×) The proper name Gershon (גֵּרְשׁוֹן), also spelled Gershom (גֵּרְשֹׁם), designating Levi's firstborn son and the eponymous ancestor of the Gershonite Levitical clan. Translation traditions reflect the spelling variation (eng: Gershon/Gershom, spa: Gersón, fra: Guershon/Gershon, deu: Gerschon/Gerschom). The phrase 'sons of Gershon' recurs as a formulaic designation for the clan's responsibilities in tabernacle transport (Num 3-4) and Levitical city allotments (Josh 21:6). PERSONAL NAMES
en: Gershom, Gershon, to-Gershon | es: De-Gersón, Gershon, Gersón | fr: Gershon, Guershon, [גרשום] | de: Gerschom, Gerschon, Gershon Gen 46:11; Exod 6:16; Exod 6:17; Num 3:17; Num 3:18

גַּרְשֻׁנִּי H1649 Prep-l (13×)
Gershonite — gentilic adjective for descendants of Gershon son of Levi, used collectively or individually
The gentilic adjective identifying members of the Levitical clan descended from Gershon (also Gershom), the eldest son of Levi. In Numbers 3-4 and 26, the Gershonites receive specific tabernacle duties — carrying the tent curtains, coverings, and hangings — and are assigned camping positions west of the tabernacle. Joshua 21:33 records their allotted cities. In Chronicles, individual Gershonites appear in worship and treasury roles (1 Chr 23:7; 26:21; 2 Chr 29:12). Translations uniformly treat this as a proper clan designation: Spanish gershonitas, French and German Gershonite/Gersoniter.

Gershonite (clan designation) (13×) A gentilic label for the clan of Gershon, functioning either as a collective noun ('the Gershonites,' Num 3:21, 23; 4:24, 27) or as an individual adjective ('the Gershonite,' 1 Chr 26:21). All 13 occurrences designate Levitical lineage rather than any semantic content of the root g-r-sh ('to drive out'). The term appears with the article as a substantive collective in Numbers and Joshua, and as a singular adjectival modifier in Chronicles. Cross-linguistic evidence is uniform: eng 'the-Gershonites,' spa gershonitas, deu der-Gersoniter. PERSONAL NAMES
en: of-the-Gershonite, the-Gershonite, the-Gershonites | es: Para-los-gershonitas, del-gersonita, el-gersonita | fr: [הגרשני], [לגרשני], de-le-Gershonite | de: [הגרשני], [לגרשני], der-Gersoniter Num 3:21; Num 3:23; Num 3:24; Num 4:24; Num 4:27

גְּשׁוּר H1650 N-proper-ms (9×)
Geshur: an Aramean kingdom east of the upper Jordan, homeland of Absalom's mother Maacah (2 Sam 3:3).
Geshur was a small Aramean kingdom situated east of the Sea of Galilee, in the region later known as the Golan. Its most memorable role in Scripture is as the homeland of Maacah daughter of Talmai, one of David's wives and the mother of Absalom (2 Sam 3:3). When Absalom fled after murdering his half-brother Amnon, he took refuge in Geshur for three years under his grandfather's protection (2 Sam 13:37-38). Joshua notes that Israel never drove out the Geshurites, who continued dwelling among the Israelites (Josh 13:13).

Geshur (place name) (9×) The proper name of an Aramean territory and its people, located east of the upper Jordan between Gilead and Mount Hermon. Translations consistently render it 'Geshur' across English, Spanish (Gesur/Guesur), French, and German, with prepositional prefixes reflecting movement to or residence in the land. The name possibly means 'bridge' or 'land of bridges,' fitting its position as a transit zone between Israel and Aram. Prominent in the Absalom narratives (2 Sam 3:3; 13:37-38; 14:23, 32; 15:8) and in Joshua's account of unconquered peoples (Josh 13:13). PERSONAL NAMES
en: Geshur, from-Geshur, in-Geshur | es: Geshur, Gesur, Guesur | fr: Geshur, [גשור], dans-Geshur | de: Geshur, [גשור], in-Geshur Josh 13:13; 2Sam 3:3; 2Sam 13:37; 2Sam 13:38; 2Sam 14:23

גְּשׁוּרִי H1651 Art / N-proper-ms (6×)
Geshurite; a member of the people or territory of Geshur, east of the Jordan and Sea of Galilee
A gentilical adjective used as a substantive to designate the inhabitants of Geshur, a small Aramean kingdom east of the Sea of Galilee. The Geshurites appear in contexts describing territories that Israel did not conquer during the settlement period. Deuteronomy 3:14 and Joshua 13:11-13 note that the Geshurites and Maacathites remained unconquered among the Israelites. A second group bearing the same demonym appears near Philistine territory (Josh 13:2; cf. 1 Sam 27:8), though some scholars emend the text.

(6×) The gentilic designation for the people of Geshur, a small Aramean territory bordering the northeastern shore of the Sea of Galilee. Used with the definite article (הַגְּשׁוּרִי), it functions as a collective noun for the population of that region. English consistently renders 'the Geshurite,' while Spanish offers both singular and plural forms ('el-gesureo,' 'la-de-los-gesureos'). Key passages include the note that the Geshurites dwelt among Israel unconquered (Josh 13:13) and the boundary descriptions in Deuteronomy 3:14 and Joshua 12:5. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Geshurite | es: el-gesureo, la-de-los-gesureos | fr: le-Geshurite | de: der-Geshurite Deut 3:14; Josh 12:5; Josh 13:2; Josh 13:11; Josh 13:13

גֶּשֶׁם H1652 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mp (1×)
those who send rain, rain-givers (divine prerogative)
This Hiphil participle appears in Jeremiah's rhetorical question:

'Are there any among the false gods who give rain?' The answer is obviously no—only Yahweh controls rainfall, the critical resource for agricultural survival. The participle form emphasizes the ongoing action: these would-be 'rain-makers' cannot perform what they claim. Rainfall in the ancient Near East was literally life or death for nations; Jeremiah's point is that idols are powerless over the most basic need.

(1×) Jeremiah 14:22 challenges idol-worshipers: can false gods send rain? The participial form describes 'those who cause rain to fall'—a power belonging to God alone. In drought-stricken Judah, this question had immediate force: which deity actually controls the clouds? The multilingual 'those giving rain' and 'quienes hagan llover' capture the causative sense. The rhetorical question exposes idolatry's futility: in crisis, only the Creator who designed weather systems can break the drought. Rain-making was a claimed power of Baal; Jeremiah declares only Yahweh truly possesses it. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION en: those-giving-rain | es: quienes-hagan-llover | fr: [מגשמים] | de: [מגשמים] Jer 14:22

גֶּשֶׁם H1653 Conj-w (34×)

Rain, rainfall — the general Hebrew term for rain; once an intense downpour

The standard Hebrew noun for rain in all its ordinary manifestations — from the rains of Noah's flood (Gen 7:12) to the seasonal showers promised for covenant obedience (Lev 26:4) to the prophetic imagery of God's word descending like rain (Isa 55:10). It appears in construct chains ('rain of the LORD', Job 37:6), with possessive suffixes ('your rains', Lev 26:4), and in the dramatic narrative of Elijah on Carmel ('the sound of abundance of rain', 1 Kgs 18:41). One occurrence in Zechariah 10:1 carries intensified force — Spanish 'aguacero' and English 'downpour' distinguish it from ordinary lluvia/rain.

1. rain, precipitation (33×) Rain or precipitation in general — the ordinary, unmarked term for rainfall in Hebrew, covering light showers, seasonal rains, and sustained downpour alike. Used across narrative (Gen 7:12; 8:2), law (Lev 26:4), prophecy (Hos 6:3; Joel 2:23), wisdom (Prov 25:14, 23), and poetry (Song 2:11). All major translations use their basic rain word (spa 'lluvia', fra 'pluie', deu 'Regen', eng 'rain') with no differentiation across the 34 occurrences. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION en: of-rain, rain, the-rain | es: la-lluvia, lluvia | fr: [גשם], [הגשם], la-pluie | de: Geschem, Regen, [גשם] Gen 7:12; Gen 8:2; Lev 26:4; 1Kgs 17:7; 1Kgs 17:14

2. downpour, heavy rain (1×) Downpour, heavy or intense rain — a marked intensification beyond ordinary rainfall. Attested at Zech 10:1 ('Ask the LORD for rain in the season of the latter rain'), where the multilingual evidence splits sharply from sense 1: English uses 'downpour' rather than 'rain', Spanish 'aguacero' rather than 'lluvia', and Hindi 'menh' rather than 'varsha', indicating translators perceived an unusually forceful rainfall event. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION

en: downpour | es: aguacero | fr: pluie | de: Geschem Zech 10:1

גֶּשֶׁם H1654 Conj-w (4×)

Geshem (Gashmu); an Arab opponent of Nehemiah who opposed the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls.

A proper name identifying an Arabian adversary of Nehemiah during the post-exilic reconstruction of Jerusalem. Called 'the Arab' (ha-Aravi), Geshem joined Sanballat and Tobiah in mocking and opposing the wall-building project. The alternate form Gashmu appears in Nehemiah 6:6, possibly reflecting an Aramaic or Nabataean pronunciation. Spanish and English glosses preserve both spellings (Geshem/Gashmu, Gesem/Gasmu), highlighting the scribal variation attested in the Hebrew text.

(4×) The personal name of an Arab leader who opposed Nehemiah's rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls, appearing as both Geshem and Gashmu. He is consistently paired with Sanballat and Tobiah as part of a three-fold opposition (Neh 2:19; 6:1–2, 6). The variant Gashmu in 6:6 may reflect the original Arabic or Nabataean form of the name, as BDB notes parallels with Nabataean inscriptions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Gashmu, and-Geshem, and-to-Geshem | es: y-Gasmu, y-Gesem, y-a-Gesem | fr: [וגשם], [וגשמו], [ולגשם] | de: [וגשמו], [ולגשם], und-Geschem Neh 2:19; Neh 6:1; Neh 6:2; Neh 6:6

גְּשֶׁם H1655 N-msc / 3fs (6×)

body; the physical form of a person or creature (Aramaic, used exclusively in Daniel)

An Aramaic noun meaning 'body,' referring to the physical, corporeal form of a human or other being. Found exclusively in the book of Daniel, it appears in vivid narrative contexts: the bodies of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego untouched by fire (Dan 3:27-28), Nebuchadnezzar's body drenched with dew during his period of madness (Dan 4:33; 5:21), and the beast whose body is destroyed in Daniel's vision (Dan 7:11). The word is cognate with Syriac 'gushma' and Targumic Aramaic 'gushma,' all meaning 'body' or 'self.'

body (Aramaic) (6×) The physical body of a person or creature, used in Aramaic portions of Daniel. The noun גְּשֶׁם (geshem) appears with pronominal suffixes in both singular and plural forms—'his body' (Dan 4:33; 5:21; 7:11) and 'their bodies' (Dan 3:27-28). English glosses differentiate ketiv and qere readings ('their-bodies' vs. singular forms), while Spanish renders straightforwardly as 'cuerpo' and 'sus-cuerpos.' The semantic range is narrow and concrete: the tangible, fleshly form that can be touched by fire, wet with dew, or given over to destruction. BODY (PHYSICAL FORM)

en: (qere:their-bodies), [ketiv:their-bodies], his-body | es: (sus-cuerpos), [sus-cuerpos], cuerpo-de-ella | fr: [בגשמהון], [גשמה], [גשמהון] | de: [בגשמהון], [גשמה], [גשמהון] Dan 3:27; Dan 3:28; Dan 4:33; Dan 5:21

גֶּשֶׁם H1656 N-msc / 3fs (1×)

rained upon, rain (Aramaic noun or passive participle)

This difficult Aramaic word appears in Ezekiel's judgment oracle against Israel as land 'not rained upon.' The form could be a noun meaning 'rain' or a passive participle meaning 'rained upon.' Either way, the sense is deprivation: this land receives no rain, symbolic of God's withdrawn blessing. In ancient Palestine, where agriculture depended entirely on seasonal rains, a land without rain was a land under curse, unable to support life.

(1×) Ezekiel 22:24 describes Israel as land 'not rained upon in the day of indignation.' Whether noun or participle, the meaning is clear: divine blessing withheld, leaving the land parched. Rainfall represented covenant blessing; drought signaled divine displeasure. The multilingual evidence shows varied understandings of the form, but all center on rain or lack thereof. The image connects moral corruption to environmental consequence—a land defiled by injustice becomes a land denied life-giving water, natural order reflecting spiritual disorder. BODY (PHYSICAL FORM)

en: rained-upon | es: llovida-sobre | fr: pluie | de: [גשמה] Ezek 22:24

גֹּשֶׁן H1657 N-proper-fs (15×)

Goshen — the fertile Nile Delta region where Israel sojourned, and a district in southern Judah

Goshen names first and foremost the lush eastern delta of Egypt that Joseph secured for his father's family (Gen 45:10; 46:28–34; 47:1–6). Sheltered from the plagues that struck the rest of Egypt (Exod 8:22; 9:26), it became a symbol of divine protection amid judgment. A secondary Goshen appears in the southern hill country of Judah — both a district conquered by Joshua (Josh 10:41; 11:16) and a town listed among Judah's allotments (Josh 15:51). All major translations preserve the name unchanged (spa 'Gosén/Goshén', fra 'Gosen', deu 'Goschen/Goshen').

Goshen (region/place name) (15×) The proper geographical name Goshen, referring primarily to the fertile Egyptian delta region where Israel settled during the sojourn (Gen 45:10; 46:28–29; 47:1–6; 50:8) and was miraculously spared from plagues (Exod 8:22; 9:26), and secondarily to a region and town in southern Judah (Josh 10:41;

11:16; 15:51). Cross-lingual glosses consistently transliterate the toponym with minimal variation, reflecting its universal recognition as a biblical place name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Goshen, and-Goshen, the-Goshen | es: Goshen, Goshén, Gosén | fr: Gosen, Goshen, et-Goshen | de: Goschen, Goshen, der-Goshen Gen 45:10; Gen 46:28; Gen 46:29; Gen 46:34

גִּשְׁפָּא H1658 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Gishpa (overseer of temple servants)

This name appears only in Nehemiah's list of post-exilic leaders, identifying an overseer of the Nethinim (temple servants). Some scholars suggest this might be a textual corruption of Hasupha, a name appearing in other Nethinim lists. Whether original or corrupted, the name preserves the identity of a leader responsible for organizing the support staff who maintained the second temple's operations—menial but necessary work that kept worship functioning.

(1×) Nehemiah 11:21 names Gishpa along with Ziha as overseers of the temple servants. The name appears nowhere else, and its absence from parallel lists raises questions about textual transmission. Some manuscripts and versions suggest alternative readings. Regardless, the individual served a crucial administrative role: managing the Nethinim who performed the physical labor of temple maintenance. The multilingual transliterations show recognition of a personal name, even as uncertainty about the original form persists across manuscript traditions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Gishpa | es: y-Gispa | fr: [וגשפא] | de: [וגשפא] Neh 11:21

גָּשַׁשׁ H1659 V-Piel-Imperf.Cohort-1cp (2×)

grope, feel; searching by touch in darkness or blindness

This verb describes groping or feeling with the hands, typically when unable to see clearly. Isaiah uses it twice in one verse, painting a vivid picture of spiritual blindness: Israel gropes like the blind at noon, feeling along walls as in deep darkness. The repetition intensifies the image of helpless searching and disorientation.

(2×) A Piel verb meaning to grope, feel, or search by touch. Both occurrences appear in Isaiah 59:10: 'We grope like the blind along a wall; we grope like those without eyes.' The repetition emphasizes the extent of spiritual darkness and moral confusion afflicting the people. The verb suggests deliberate tactile searching when sight fails, similar to cognates in Arabic, Aramaic, and Ethiopic that mean to touch, stroke, or feel. The cohortative form ('let us grope') may express either description of current reality or ironic self-exhortation. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: We-grope, we-grope | es: Palpamos, palpamos | fr: [נגששה] | de: [נגששה] Isa 59:10

גַּת H1660 Prep-b (5×)

winepress, a vat or installation for treading grapes

The standard Hebrew term for a winepress, the installation where grapes were trodden to extract juice. It appears in both literal and powerfully figurative contexts. Gideon beats wheat in a winepress to hide it from Midian (Judg 6:11), and Nehemiah observes Sabbath-breaking at the winepresses (Neh 13:15). Prophetically, the winepress becomes a symbol of divine judgment: Isaiah pictures God treading the winepress alone with garments stained red (Isa 63:2), Lamentations depicts the LORD treading a winepress over Jerusalem (Lam 1:15), and Joel calls warriors to tread because the press is full (Joel 3:13).

(5×) A winepress, the agricultural installation where grapes are crushed by treading. Used literally for grape processing (Judg 6:11; Neh 13:15) and as a potent metaphor for divine judgment, where God treads the nations like grapes (Isa 63:2; Lam 1:15; Joel 3:13). Spanish 'lagar' and English 'winepress' uniformly render this meaning. The figurative usage carried forward into Revelation 14:19-20. WINEPRESS VAT

en: a-winepress, in-a-winepress, in-the-winepress | es: en-el-lagar, en-el-lagar?, lagar | fr: [בגת], [גת], [גתות] | de: [בגת], [גת], [גתות] Judg 6:11; Neh 13:15; Isa 63:2; Lam 1:15; Joel 3:13

גַּת H1661 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (33×)

Gath — a major Philistine city-state, home of Goliath and site of key encounters between Israel and Philistia

Gath (literally 'winepress') is the proper name of one of the five principal Philistine cities, appearing 33 times in the Hebrew Bible. It was home to the Anakim remnant (Josh 11:22) and most famously to Goliath, 'the Philistine of Gath' (1 Sam 17:4, 23). David fled there twice to escape Saul, feigning madness before King Achish (1 Sam 21:10-15) and later settling as a vassal at nearby Ziklag (1 Sam 27:2-4). David's lament over Saul and Jonathan pleads, 'Tell it not in Gath' (2 Sam 1:20), an idiom that became proverbial. The city passed through Israelite and Aramean hands — Rehoboam fortified it (2 Chr 11:8), Hazael of Aram captured it (2 Kgs 12:17) — and eventually vanished from the archaeological record. Amos warns Israel not to boast by comparison with 'Gath of the Philistines' (Amos 6:2). The Septuagint renders it Geth, and modern translations preserve the name unchanged.

Gath (Philistine city) (33×) The proper name of a major Philistine city, one of the pentapolis alongside Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, and Ekron. Famous as Goliath's hometown (1 Sam 17:4), the place of David's exile under Achish (1 Sam 21:10; 27:2), and the setting of the proverbial lament 'Tell it not in Gath' (2 Sam 1:20). Also appears in Amos 6:2 as a cautionary example. Etymologically means 'winepress.' PHILISTIA AND PHILISTINES

en: Gat, Gath, in-Gat | es: Gat, en-Gat | fr: Gath, [בגת], [גת] | de: Gath, [בגת], [גת] Josh 11:22; 1Sam 5:8; 1Sam 6:17; 1Sam 7:14; 1Sam 17:4

גַּת הַחֵפֶר H1662 N-proper-fs / 3fs (2×)

Gath-hepher or Gittah-hepher, hometown of the prophet Jonah in Zebulun's territory

Gath-hepher (also called Gittah-hepher) was a town in Zebulun's tribal allotment, famous as the hometown of the prophet Jonah. The name means 'winepress of digging' or 'winepress of the well.' Located in the Galilee region, it was identified in the nineteenth century with El-Meshhed, about three miles northeast of Nazareth.

(2×) A place name meaning 'winepress of the pit/well,' designating a town in Zebulun. Joshua 19:13 lists it in the boundary description as 'Gittah-hepher,' while 2 Kings 14:25 identifies it as 'Gath-hepher,' the home of 'Jonah son of Amittai, the prophet.' The slight variation in spelling (Gittah vs. Gath) represents the same location. The multilingual evidence shows consistent treatment as a proper geographical name with various transliterations. HEPHER PERSONAL NAME

en: Gittah-Chepher, from-Gat-Hechepher | es: Gat-hefer, de-Gat-Hefer | fr: Gittah-Chepher, de-Gath-Hechepher | de: Gittah-Chepher, von-Gath-Hechepher Josh 19:13; 2Kgs 14:25

גִּתִּי H1663 Art / N-proper-ms (10×)

Gittite — a gentilic adjective for an inhabitant of the Philistine city of Gath.

This gentilic adjective identifies someone from Gath, one of the five Philistine city-states. It is applied to several notable figures: Obed-edom the Gittite, in whose house the ark rested (2 Sam 6:10-11); Ittai the Gittite, David's loyal foreign commander (2 Sam 15:19, 22); and Goliath of Gath (2 Sam 21:19). In its plural form with the article, 'the Gittites' designates the people of Gath collectively (Josh 13:3; 2 Sam 15:18). Spanish renders it 'el guitita,' while French and German maintain 'le/der Gittite,' all consistently pointing to Gath as the city of origin.

Gittite (gentilic) (10×) A gentilic adjective meaning 'of Gath, belonging to Gath,' used to identify individuals or groups originating from the Philistine city of Gath. Applied in the singular to Obed-edom (2 Sam 6:10-11), Ittai (2 Sam 15:19, 22), and the giant slain by Elhanan (2 Sam 21:19), and in the plural to the Gittite contingent marching with David (2 Sam 15:18) or listed among the Philistine peoples (Josh 13:3). The consistent article usage (haggitti/haggittim) marks it as a well-recognized ethnic designation. PHILISTIA AND PHILISTINES

en: the-Gittite, the-Gittites | es: el-gateo, el-guitita, los-guititas | fr: [הַגִּתִּי], le-Gittite, le-Gittites | de: [הַגִּתִּי], der-Gittite, der-Gittites Josh 13:3; 2Sam 6:10; 2Sam 6:11; 2Sam 15:18; 2Sam 15:19

גִּתַּיִם H1664 N-proper-fs / 3fs (2×)

Gittaim, a town in Benjamin where Beerothites fled as refugees

Gittaim was a town in the territory of Benjamin, serving as a refuge for people from Beeroth who fled there and remained as resident aliens. The name suggests a dual form, possibly meaning 'two winepresses' or 'twin presses.' The site's exact location remains unknown, though it lay somewhere in Benjamin's hill country.

(2×) A place name in Benjamin, appearing in two forms: 'Gittaim' (Nehemiah 11:33) in a list of Benjaminite settlements, and 'to Gittaim' with directional suffix (2 Samuel 4:3) describing where the Beerothites fled and became resident aliens. The dual ending (-ayim) in the name suggests paired features, possibly two winepresses or a double settlement. The spelling variation (Gittayim/Gittaim) represents dialectal or scribal differences for the same location. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Gittayim, to-Gittaim | es: Gitayim-hacia, Guitaim | fr: [גִּתַּיִם], à-Gittaim | de: [גִּתַּיִם], zu-Gittaim 2Sam 4:3; Neh 11:33

גִּתִּית H1665 Art / N-fs (3×)

the Gittith—a musical term in psalm titles, possibly an instrument or melody

This feminine noun appears only in the superscriptions of Psalms 8, 81, and 84 with the phrase 'upon the Gittith' (al-ha-gittit). Its meaning is disputed. Ancient versions suggest either: (1) a Gittite lyre or musical instrument, (2) a melody associated with Gath, or (3) a tune for the grape harvest ('winepresses,' reading gittot). The Targum favored the instrument interpretation. Modern scholars remain divided. Whatever its precise meaning, it served as a technical musical direction for the Levitical choir performing these psalms.

(3×) A technical musical term in three psalm superscriptions (Psalms 8:1, 81:1, 84:1), appearing with the preposition 'upon the Gittith.' Ancient and modern interpretations vary: (1) a musical instrument from Gath (Gittite lyre), (2) a melody or tune type, or (3) possibly 'winepresses' (if reading gittot), suggesting harvest festival music. Cross-linguistic evidence: English 'the Gittith,' Spanish 'la Guitit/guitita' (preserving the name), French 'le Guitith,' German 'der Gittit.' All maintain the transliterated form with definite article. The consistent 'al-ha-gittit' ('upon the Gittith') suggests a musical performance instruction whose exact meaning was lost even in ancient times. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: the-Gittith | es: la-Guitit, la-guitita | fr: le-Guitith | de: der-Gittit Ps 8:1; Ps 81:1; Ps 84:1

גֶּתֶר H1666 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Gether, a son of Aram listed in the Table of Nations

Gether appears in the genealogical Table of Nations as one of Aram's sons, making him a grandson of Shem and part of the Semitic line. The name occurs in both Genesis and Chronicles in the parallel genealogies tracing post-flood peoples. His descendants presumably formed an Aramean tribe or people group, though no further biblical information identifies them.

(2×) A personal name identifying one of the four sons of Aram in the Table of Nations. Genesis 10:23 and its parallel 1 Chronicles 1:17 both list Gether among Aram's descendants, placing him in the Semitic family tree. The name's etymology is uncertain. The consistent preservation of the name in both genealogical accounts suggests historical memory of an Aramean clan or people group, though no other biblical texts identify Gether's descendants. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Gether | es: y-Gueter, y-Guéter | fr: [וְגֶתֶר], et-Gether | de: [וְגֶתֶר], und-Geter Gen 10:23; 1Chr 1:17

גַּת־רִמּוֹן H1667 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)

Gath-rimmon; a Levitical city in the territory of Dan, meaning 'winepress of the pomegranate.'

A compound place name combining gath ('winepress') and rimmon ('pomegranate'), designating a Levitical city allocated to Dan. It appears in the list of Danite towns (Josh 19:45), then again as a city given to the Kohathite Levites (Josh 21:24; 1 Chr 6:69). The occurrence in Joshua 21:25 within Manasseh is regarded by BDB as a scribal error for Ibleam. All translations preserve the compound form consistently (Gath-Rimmon / Gat-Rimón), showing no semantic ambiguity.

(4×) A Levitical city in the tribal allotment of Dan, whose name means 'winepress of the pomegranate.' It served as one of the cities assigned to the Kohathite clan of Levites (Josh 21:24; 1 Chr 6:69). The second occurrence in Joshua 21:25, placed in Manasseh, is widely considered a textual corruption for Ibleam. The site remains unidentified archaeologically. RIMMON PLACE NAME

en: Gat-Rimmon, Gath-rimmon, and-Gath-Rimmon | es: Gat-Rimon, Gat-rimón, y-Gat-rimón | fr: Gath-rimmon, [גַּתְרִמּוֹן], et-Gath-Rimmon | de: Gath-rimmon, [גַּתְרִמּוֹן], und-Gath-Rimmon Josh 19:45; Josh 21:24; Josh 21:25; 1Chr 6:69

דְּא H1668 Adv (6×)

this, that (Aramaic feminine demonstrative pronoun); in reciprocal construction, 'the other'

The Aramaic feminine demonstrative pronoun, the counterpart of masculine denah. It appears exclusively in Daniel's Aramaic sections, pointing to contextually prominent referents – 'this great Babylon' (Dan 4:30), 'this horn' (Dan 7:8), and the differing beasts of chapter 7. In one distinctive usage with the preposition le, it forms a reciprocal construction: da leda, meaning 'one against another' (Dan 5:6), describing Belshazzar's knees knocking together in terror. German 'dies' and Spanish 'esta/este' capture the basic demonstrative force throughout.

1. this, that (basic demonstrative) (5×) The basic demonstrative function – 'this' or 'that' – pointing to a specific, contextually salient referent. Five occurrences span Daniel's visions and narratives: 'Is not this great Babylon?' (Dan 4:30), the beasts differing from one another (Dan 7:3), and 'this horn' (Dan 7:8). Translations across languages converge on simple demonstratives: English 'this/that,' Spanish 'esta/este,' German 'dies.' DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: that, this, this- | es: esta, este, una | fr: ceci | de: dies Dan 4:30; Dan 5:6; Dan 7:3; Dan 7:8

2. the other (contrastive demonstrative) (1×) A contrastive or reciprocal use with the preposition lamed, forming the idiom da leda ('one to another' or 'one against the other'). In Daniel 5:6, Belshazzar's knees strike 'one against the other' as he sees the writing on the wall. English 'against that' and Spanish 'contra la otra' both highlight the adversative, reciprocal relationship between paired items rather than simple deixis. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: against-that | es: contra-la-otra | fr: ceci | de: zu-dies Dan 5:6

דְּאַב H1669 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf / 3fs (3×)

to languish, become faint—growing weak from grief, weariness, or deprivation

This verb describes the state of languishing or growing faint, whether physically or emotionally. Psalm 88:9 uses it of eyes growing dim from affliction. Jeremiah 31:12 promises that redeemed Israel will 'no more languish,' and 31:25 speaks of satisfying the languishing soul (though some read this as an adjective). The verb appears in contexts of distress, hunger, and sorrow. It may relate to Arabic roots for weariness and toil. The word captures the experience of vital strength draining away under the weight of suffering.

(3×) To languish, become faint, or grow dim from affliction, hunger, or sorrow. Psalm 88:9 describes the eye growing dim (da'abah) from affliction. Jeremiah 31:12 promises they shall 'not languish anymore' (lo yosifu leda'abah, literally 'not add to languish'). Jeremiah 31:25 uses 'languishing soul' (nefesh da'abah), though scholars debate whether this is verbal or adjectival. Cross-linguistic glosses: English 'grows dim/languishing/to languish,' Spanish 'desfalleciendo/afligida/languideció,' French uses brackets, German 'wächst dim.' The contexts show physical and emotional depletion—eyes failing, souls fainting, life ebbing—with the promise of restoration. WITHERING AND FADING

en: grows-dim, languishing, to-languish | es: afligida, desfalleciendo, languideció | fr: [דאבה], [לדאבה], s'affliger | de: [דאבה], [לדאבה], wächst-dim Ps 88:9; Jer 31:12; Jer 31:25

דְּאָבָה H1670 N-fs (1×)

terror, dismay, mental collapse from fear

This word appears in Job's description of Leviathan, where 'terror dances' before the creature. The term denotes psychological collapse—not mere fear but the complete failure of mental courage in the face of overwhelming threat. The personification ('terror dances') creates a vivid image: dismay itself performs before Leviathan like a harbinger, announcing the creature's approach. The word suggests not just fright but the paralysis that extreme danger induces.

(1×) Job 41:22 depicts terror personified, dancing before Leviathan as the creature moves. The noun captures complete psychological defeat—the mental collapse that comes from facing an invincible threat. Multilingual renderings ('terror', 'terror') show consistency in understanding this as extreme fear or dismay. The context emphasizes Leviathan's invulnerability: even human courage fails in its presence. The image of terror dancing suggests this dread is active, almost playful, preceding the beast like a herald proclaiming its supremacy over all challengers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: terror | es: terror | fr: דאבה | de: [דאבה] Job 41:22

דְּאָבוֹן H1671 Conj-w / N-msc (1×)

anguish, languishing, despair of soul

This term appears in Moses' covenant curses, describing the psychological torment awaiting the disobedient: 'anguish of soul' paired with 'failing eyes.' The word suggests more than momentary anxiety—it denotes a chronic, draining despair that exhausts the inner person. Syriac cognates emphasize the languishing, wasting quality. This is spiritual and emotional attrition, the slow consumption of hope that comes from prolonged suffering without relief.

(1×) Deuteronomy 28:65 threatens exiles with 'anguish of soul'—a grinding emotional and spiritual despair. Paired with 'failing eyes' (from crying or strain), this creates a picture of total human depletion. The term goes beyond fear to describe the exhaustion of living without hope, security, or rest. The multilingual 'anguish' and 'desespero' (desperation) both capture this soul-deep distress. The curse envisions not quick death but prolonged suffering that drains away all vitality, leaving only hollow endurance—existence without any capacity for joy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-anguish-of | es: y-desespero-de | fr: et-anguish-de | de: und-Angst-von Deut 28:65

דָּאַג H1672 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (7×)

Be anxious, worry, fear; to experience inner distress, concern, or dread about a situation or person.

Describes a state of anxious concern, worry, or fear. In its earliest uses (1 Sam 9:5; 10:2), Saul's father worries about his missing son, a natural parental anxiety. The word also conveys spiritual and existential dread: the psalmist is anxious because of sin (Ps 38:18), and Jeremiah 17:8 promises the person who trusts in the LORD will not be anxious even in drought. Isaiah 57:11 uses it in parallel with 'fear,' shading into the sense of dreading another person. Cognate with Talmudic de'ig, the root consistently captures the gnawing inner turmoil of apprehension.

be anxious, worry, fear (7×) To be anxious, worried, concerned, or afraid, describing the inner turmoil of apprehension about circumstances or persons. The range spans natural parental worry (1 Sam 9:5, 10:2 where Saul's father becomes anxious about his sons), existential distress over sin (Ps 38:18), confident freedom from anxiety for the righteous (Jer 17:8, parallel with yare'), and dread of another person (Isa 57:11, Jer 38:19). Spanish captures the nuance well with 'preocuparse' (worry/be concerned). The construction varies: with le- for concern in behalf of, with min for anxiety about, and with a direct object for dreading a person. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: I-am-anxious, and-he-worries, and-worries | es: estáis-preocupados, me-preocuparé, se-preocupará | fr: [דאג], [דאגים], [דאגת] | de: [דאג], [דאגים], [דאגת] 1Sam 9:5; 1Sam 10:2; Ps 38:18; Isa 57:11; Jer 17:8

דֹּאֵג H1673 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (9×)

Doeg: an Edomite servant of Saul who betrayed the priests of Nob and slaughtered them (1 Sam 22:18).

Doeg the Edomite was a chief herdsman of Saul who witnessed David receiving aid from Ahimelech the priest at Nob (1 Sam 21:7). When Saul demanded to know who had helped David, Doeg informed against the priests and then personally executed eighty-five of them when Saul's own soldiers refused (1 Sam 22:9, 18). His treachery is commemorated in the superscription of Psalm 52, where David denounces the boasting of the mighty man who loves evil more than good. Doeg stands in the biblical narrative as a byword for deadly slander and merciless violence.

Doeg (9×) The personal name of an Edomite in Saul's service, meaning perhaps 'anxious' or 'fearful.' All nine occurrences refer to the same individual. Spanish renders the name 'Doeg' with the Qere form noted, while French and German preserve the Hebrew form alongside the transliteration. His story unfolds entirely within 1 Samuel 21-22 and the title of Psalm 52, forming a compact but devastating portrait of betrayal and religious persecution. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Doeg, [Doeg], [to-Doeg] | es: (Qeré), Doeg, a-Doeg | fr: Doeg, [Doeg], [to-Doeg] | de: Doeg, [Doeg], [to-Doeg] 1Sam 21:8; 1Sam 22:9; 1Sam 22:18

דְּאָגָה H1674 Prep-b / N-fs (6×)

anxiety, worry; a troubled emotional state of fearful concern or dread

A feminine noun denoting anxiety, worried concern, or apprehensive dread. In wisdom literature, Proverbs 12:25 teaches that 'anxiety in the heart weighs it down,' using this word for the inner burden of worry. In prophetic contexts, Ezekiel pairs it with 'dismay' to describe the fearful rationing of bread and water during Jerusalem's siege (Ezek 4:16; 12:18-19). Jeremiah uses it of the panic seizing Damascus (Jer 49:23), while Joshua 22:24 expresses Israel's concern 'for fear of' future misunderstanding between the tribes.

anxiety, worry (6×) Emotional anxiety or worried concern that weighs upon the heart. The noun דְּאָגָה (de'agah) covers a range from personal worry to communal dread. Spanish renders it as 'ansiedad' and 'preocupación,' capturing both the anxious and worried dimensions. In Proverbs 12:25 it describes personal emotional burden, while in Ezekiel 4:16 and 12:18-19 it is paired with 'dismay' (שִׁמָּמוֹן) and 'trembling' (רַעַשׁ) to portray the collective psychological devastation of siege. Joshua 22:24 uses it with the preposition מִן in the sense of 'for fear of,' showing its range extends to anticipatory dread. ANXIETY AND WORRY

en: and-in-anxiety, and-with-anxiety, anxiety | es: ansiedad, con-ansiedad, por-preocupación | fr: [בדאגה], [דאגה], [ובדאגה] | de: [בדאגה], [דאגה], [ובדאגה] Josh 22:24; Prov 12:25; Jer 49:23; Ezek 4:16; Ezek 12:18

דָּאָה H1675 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (4×)

To fly swiftly, swoop, dart through the air; used of eagles, invading armies, and God in theophany.

A vivid verb depicting rapid, swooping flight—the kind of terrifying descent an eagle makes on its prey. In Deuteronomy 28:49 it describes a distant nation swooping like an eagle upon disobedient Israel, while in Jeremiah 48:40 and 49:22 the same eagle imagery portrays divine judgment spreading its wings over Moab and Edom. Most strikingly, Psalm 18:10 uses it of God himself soaring on the wings of the wind during theophany. The Spanish volará ('will fly') and French voler ('to fly') capture the aerial speed, while English 'swoop' and 'soar' reflect the predatory intensity.

(4×) To fly swiftly or swoop down, depicting rapid darting motion through the air. Used in military simile of an eagle-like nation descending on Israel (Deut 28:49), of divine judgment swooping over Moab and Edom with outspread wings (Jer 48:40; 49:22), and most dramatically of Yahweh soaring on the wings of the wind in theophany (Ps 18:10). The verb consistently evokes predatory speed and overwhelming aerial power. FLYING AND FLIGHT

en: and-he-soared, and-will-swoop-down, he-swoops | es: volará, vuela, y-se-deslizó | fr: [וידאה], [ידאה], et-voler | de: [וידאה], [ידאה], swoops Deut 28:49; Ps 18:10; Jer 48:40; Jer 49:22

דְּאָה H1676 Art / N-fs (1×)

kite, bird of prey (possibly red kite or falcon)

This unclean bird appears in Leviticus's dietary laws, forbidden as food. The identification remains uncertain—possibly the red kite, a raptor common in Palestine, or another bird of prey. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to fly' or 'swoop,' describing the bird's hunting behavior. Ancient Near Eastern categories didn't match modern ornithology exactly, so the specific species is debated, though all agree it designates a carnivorous bird forbidden to Israel.

(1×) Leviticus 11:14 lists the da'ah among unclean birds, translated variously as kite, vulture, or falcon depending on the version. The Aramaic and Mishnaic Hebrew cognates suggest a bird of prey. The multilingual consistency ('kite', 'milano'/kite) shows broad agreement on the predatory nature, even if the exact species remains uncertain. The dietary prohibition reflects Israel's separation from practices common to neighboring peoples, where such birds might be consumed. The uncertain identification reminds us how much ancient natural knowledge has been lost. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5702 WITH 3 SENSES

en: the-kite | es: el-milano | fr: le-kite | de: der-kite Lev 11:14

דֹּב H1677 N-ms (12×)

dob – bear; the Syrian brown bear, used literally of the animal and figuratively of ferocity and danger

The masculine noun dob ('bear') refers to the Syrian brown bear (Ursus arctos syriacus), which was native to the hills and forests of ancient Israel and remained present into the early modern period. David cites killing a bear and a lion as credentials for facing Goliath (1 Sam 17:34-37). Two she-bears maul the youths who mock Elisha (2 Kgs 2:24). Figuratively, the bear represents savage, unexpected danger: 'like a bear robbed of her cubs' describes ferocious human rage (2 Sam 17:8; Prov 17:12; Hos 13:8). In prophetic vision, the bear symbolizes a devouring empire (Dan 7:5), and Isaiah's peaceable kingdom envisions the cow and bear grazing together (Isa 11:7). Spanish oso, French ours, and German Baer all capture this single zoological referent in both literal and metaphorical use.

bear (animal) (12×) The Syrian brown bear, used both literally (David's encounter, 1 Sam 17:34; Elisha's curse, 2 Kgs 2:24) and figuratively for ferocity and danger (a bear robbed of cubs, Prov 17:12; Hos 13:8; the beast-empire, Dan 7:5; the peaceable kingdom, Isa 11:7). Spanish oso, French ours, and German Baer confirm one zoological referent across both registers. BEAR ANIMAL en: A-bear, and-a-bear, and-bear | es: Oso, como-osa, como-osos | fr: [דב], [ודב], [כדבים] | de: [דב], [הדב], [ודב] 1Sam 17:34; 1Sam 17:36; 1Sam 17:37; 2Sam 17:8; 2Kgs 2:24

דֹּב H1678 Prep-l / N-ms (1×)

bear (animal, Aramaic)

This Aramaic word for bear appears in Daniel's vision of the four beasts, where the second beast resembles a bear. In ancient Near Eastern symbolism, the bear represented savage strength and voracity. Daniel's bear had three ribs in its mouth and was told to 'devour much flesh,' suggesting a empire's violent conquest. The Syrian brown bear, once common in the region, was known for its power and unpredictability—fitting imagery for imperial aggression.

(1×) Daniel 7:5 describes the second beast: 'it looked like a bear,' with three ribs in its teeth. The Aramaic term is straightforward zoology—the large carnivore familiar throughout the ancient Near East. The bear's characteristics (strength, ferocity, devouring) make it apt imperial symbolism. Most interpreters connect this bear to Medo-Persia, the empire that conquered Babylon. The multilingual consistency ('bear', 'oso', 'ours') shows clear identification. The symbolic detail of three ribs suggests three conquered kingdoms or regions, the spoils of violent expansion. BEAR ANIMAL en: bear | es: a-oso | fr: ours | de: [לדב] Dan 7:5

דָּבָא H1679 N-msc / 2ms (1×)

strength, vigor, rest (uncertain meaning)

This extremely difficult word appears in Moses' blessing of Asher, in the phrase 'as your days, so your strength.' However, the meaning is so uncertain that ancient versions translated it variously as 'strength', 'rest', or other concepts. The Hebrew may not even preserve the original word—some suggest textual corruption. Despite the obscurity, the blessing's general sense is clear: Asher's provision or capacity will match the length of their days, whether that's strength for work or rest for recovery.

(1×) Deuteronomy 33:25 blesses Asher with something matched to their days—but what that something is remains uncertain. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Targum all chose 'strength,' suggesting capacity or vigor proportionate to lifespan. Others propose 'rest' from an Arabic cognate. The multilingual consistency around 'strength' reflects most translators following the ancient versions' guess rather than confident etymology. The blessing's point survives the lexical uncertainty: whatever Asher needs—strength, rest, resources—God will provide in measure with their days. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: your-strength | es: tu-fuerza | fr: ton-force | de: dein-Staerke Deut 33:25

דָּבַב H1680 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

glide, flow gently, move smoothly (of wine on lips)

This delicate verb appears in Song of Solomon, where wine is described as 'gliding over the lips of sleepers.' The imagery captures wine's smooth, gentle flow—not gushing but moving softly, almost imperceptibly. Some ancient versions read the text differently (lips and teeth rather than sleepers' lips), but all preserve the sense of gentle movement. The verb suggests effortless, natural motion, like liquid finding its path without force.

(1×) Song of Songs 7:9 compares the beloved's mouth to wine 'gliding over the lips of sleepers' (or 'lips and teeth'). The verb's root sense involves gentle, flowing movement—liquid moving smoothly without turbulence. The image is sensuous and intimate: wine's pleasant, almost caressing motion becomes a metaphor for sweet speech or kisses. The multilingual 'gliding' and 'hace hablar' (makes speak) show varied understandings of the difficult text, but all circle the idea of smooth, pleasant movement or effect—wine that flows easily, words that come gracefully. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: gliding | es: que-hace-hablar | fr: glissant-sur | de: [דובב] Song 7:9

דִּבָּה H1681 Conj-w / N-fsc (9×)

Slander, evil report, defamation; malicious whispering that damages reputation or spreads a false account.

This Hebrew noun captures the insidious power of destructive speech – from quiet whispering behind someone's back to a full-blown defamatory report. In Genesis 37:2, young Joseph brings back a 'bad report' about his brothers, setting in motion the drama of jealousy and exile. The spies who discouraged Israel from entering Canaan spread a dibbah of the land (Num 13:32; 14:36-37), and Jeremiah heard the dibbah of many whispering against him (Jer 20:10). The word conveys speech that glides stealthily, undermining trust and inciting harm.

slander, evil report, defamation (9×) Whispering, slander, defamation, or an evil report – malicious speech designed to damage someone's standing or discourage action. Spanish translations use 'calumnia' and 'difamacion,' capturing the defamatory force, while French employs 'calomnie.' The semantic range spans from private malicious gossip (Ps 31:13; Jer 20:10) to the public spreading of a damaging report (Gen 37:2; Num 13:32). Proverbs warns against both uttering slander (10:18) and carelessly revealing another's secret, lest your own reputation suffer (25:10). The root suggests something that creeps or glides, evoking the stealthy and insidious nature of destructive talk. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-slander-of-, and-your-bad-reputation, report-their | es: calumnia-de, difamación, infame-de | fr: [דבת], calomnie, et-calomnie | de: [דבה], [דבת], [ודבת] Gen 37:2; Num 13:32; Num 14:36; Num 14:37; Ps 31:13

דְּבוֹרָה H1682 Conj-w (4×)

Bee; the honey-producing insect, used literally and in similes of swarming hostile pursuit.

The ordinary Hebrew word for a bee, familiar from Samson's riddle and prophetic imagery alike. In Judges 14:8 a swarm of bees has colonized the lion carcass, setting up the famous riddle. Deuteronomy 1:44 and Psalm 118:12 use bees as a simile for enemies who swarm and pursue relentlessly—the Amorites chased Israel 'as bees do.' Isaiah 7:18 pictures God whistling for the bee that is in Assyria, a striking metaphor for summoning a foreign army. Translations uniformly give 'bees' (Spanish abejas, French abeilles), confirming a single zoological sense.

(4×) The honey bee, both as a literal insect and as a figure for swarming, hostile pursuit. Literally present in Samson's lion-carcass episode (Judg 14:8). Used figuratively for enemies who pursue relentlessly like a swarm—the Amorites chasing Israel (Deut 1:44), surrounding foes in Psalm 118:12, and God's summoning of Assyria depicted as whistling for the bee (Isa 7:18). The domain assignment as MORAL_QUALITY seems misplaced; the word is zoological with frequent metaphorical extension. LOCUSTS AND SWARMS

en: and-for-the-bee, bees, like-bees | es: abejas, como-abejas, las-abejas | fr: [ולדבורה], abeilles, comme-abeille | de: [ולדבורה], bees, der-bees Deut 1:44; Judg 14:8; Ps 118:12; Isa 7:18

דְּבוֹרָה H1683 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (10×)

Deborah — Hebrew proper name ('bee'), borne by Rebekah's nurse and by the prophetess-judge of Israel.

The name Deborah, meaning 'bee' in Hebrew, belongs to two women in Scripture. The first is Rebekah's nurse, whose death and burial under the oak at Bethel is recorded in Genesis 35:8. Far more prominent is Deborah the prophetess, who judged Israel from her palm tree between Ramah and Bethel (Judg 4:4-5) and led the nation alongside Barak against Sisera's Canaanite forces. Her magnificent victory song in Judges 5 is one of the oldest poetic compositions in the Bible. The multilingual renderings — Spanish 'Débora,' French 'Débora/Devorah,' German 'Debora' — all preserve the name with minor phonetic variation.

Deborah (proper name) (10×) The proper name Deborah (Hebrew devorah, 'bee'), referring primarily to two figures: (1) Rebekah's beloved nurse, mourned at Bethel under the 'Oak of Weeping' (Gen 35:8), and (2) the prophetess and judge of Israel who summoned Barak to battle against Sisera (Judg 4:4-14) and celebrated the victory in the Song of Deborah (Judg 5:1, 7, 12). Eight of the ten occurrences belong to the prophetess. Translations across languages uniformly transliterate the name, confirming a single referential category. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Deborah, Devorah, and-Devorah | es: Deborah, Devorah, Y-Devorah | fr: Devorah, Débora, et-Devorah | de: Debora, Devorah, und-Devorah Gen 35:8; Judg 4:4; Judg 4:5; Judg 4:9; Judg 4:10 sacrifice (Aramaic verb, Pe participle)

דְּבַח H1684 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

This Aramaic verb appears in the decree about rebuilding the Jerusalem temple, specifying that sacrifices should be offered there. The word is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew zabah, the standard term for ritual slaughter and sacrifice. The participle form here emphasizes the ongoing action: 'those who sacrifice' or 'they may sacrifice.' The Persian administration's use of this term shows official recognition of Jewish worship practices, guaranteeing their right to maintain traditional sacrificial rituals.

(1×) Ezra 6:3 contains Cyrus's decree specifying the temple as the place 'where they sacrifice' offerings to God. The Aramaic participial form describes the ongoing ritual action of sacrifice. This isn't novel religious vocabulary but the standard Aramaic term for cultic offerings, parallel to Hebrew zabah. The decree's use of proper religious terminology shows Persian respect for subject peoples' worship traditions. The multilingual 'sacrifice' and 'sacrifican' both capture the cultic act—the ritual slaughter and offering that constituted the heart of temple worship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: they-sacrifice | es: sacrifican | fr: [דבחין] | de: [דבחין] Ezra 6:3

דְּבַח H1685 N-mp (1×)

sacrifices (Aramaic plural, ritual offerings in temple context)

An Aramaic plural noun referring to ritual sacrifices offered in the Jerusalem temple. The term appears only in Ezra 6:3 in Cyrus's decree authorizing the reconstruction of the temple and the resumption of sacrificial worship. The multilingual glosses uniformly recognize this as the standard term for temple sacrifices, connecting to the broader semantic field of worship and offering in post-exilic restoration.

(1×) The single occurrence in Ezra 6:3 appears in the administrative decree of Cyrus concerning temple reconstruction, where 'sacrifices' are mentioned as part of the authorized cultic activities. Spanish 'sacrificios' and English maintain the standard religious terminology, while French and German preserve the Aramaic form, highlighting the technical administrative nature of the decree. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: sacrifices | es: sacrificios | fr: [דבחין] | de: [דבחין] Ezra 6:3

דִּבְיוֹנִים H1686 N-mp (1×)

dove's dung (obscure term, possibly a plant name or literal excrement sold during famine)

A disputed term appearing only in the dramatic famine account of 2 Kings 6:25, where basic commodities reached astronomical prices. The Hebrew is uncertain—the consonantal text suggests 'dove's dung,' though this may be a euphemism for an edible plant (perhaps a type of bulb or seed) or literally dried bird droppings used as fuel or salt substitute. The uncertainty is reflected in how translations handle it: some preserve the literal reading, while Arabic renders it descriptively.

(1×) The lone occurrence in 2 Kings 6:25 describes Samaria's desperate siege conditions: 'dove's dung' sold for five shekels of silver. The parallel with 'donkey's head' (another famine food) suggests extreme scarcity. English and Spanish maintain the literal 'dove dung' reading, while Arabic explicitly marks this as excrement, and French/German preserve the Hebrew form, acknowledging the lexical uncertainty. FLYING AND FLIGHT

en: of-dove-dung | es: de-estiércol-de-paloma | fr: de-dove-dung 2Kgs 6:25

דְּבִיר H1687 Conj-w (16×)

The inner sanctuary or Holy of Holies — the innermost chamber of Solomon's Temple housing the ark

A technical architectural term for the innermost room of Solomon's Temple, synonymous with the Holy of Holies (qodesh ha-qodashim). Etymologically connected to the Arabic dubur ('back, hindmost part'), it designates the chamber behind the main hall where the Ark of the Covenant and the cherubim resided — the very throne-room of YHWH. Nearly all sixteen occurrences cluster in the detailed construction account of 1 Kings 6-7, describing its cubic dimensions, its gold overlay, and the great doors of olivewood (1 Kgs 6:5, 16, 19-23, 31). The English 'oracle' in the KJV/RV reflects an ancient but incorrect derivation from dibber ('to speak'); modern translations uniformly render it 'inner sanctuary.' Korean '지성소' and Spanish 'santuario interior' both convey its sacred inaccessibility.

inner sanctuary (16×) The innermost room of Solomon's Temple (דְּבִיר), the Holy of Holies where the Ark of the Covenant rested beneath the wings of the cherubim. Derived from a root suggesting 'back' or 'hindmost part,' it refers to the rear chamber shielded by olivewood doors and overlaid entirely with gold (1 Kgs 6:16, 19-23, 31). The term appears almost exclusively in the Temple construction narrative (1 Kgs 6-8; 2 Chr 3-5), with Psalm 28:2 offering its sole use outside architectural description. Spanish 'santuario interior' and Arabic 'mihrab' both capture the sense of a consecrated innermost space. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY en: and-inner-sanctuary, and-to-the-inner-sanctuary, for-inner-sanctuary | es: del-santuario-interior, el-santuario-interior, en-el-santuario-interior | fr: [בדביר], [דביר], [הדביר] | de: [בדביר], [דביר], [הדביר] 1Kgs 6:5; 1Kgs 6:16; 1Kgs 6:19; 1Kgs 6:20; 1Kgs 6:21

דְּבִיר H1688a N-proper-fs / 3fs (13×)

Debir — a Canaanite royal city in Judah's hill country, anciently called Kiriath-sepher ('city of the book')

A place name identifying a Canaanite royal city in the southern highlands of Judah near Hebron, formerly known as Kiriath-sepher ('city of the book') and Kiriath-sannah. Its conquest is narrated twice: first by Joshua in the southern campaign (Josh 10:38-39; 11:21) and then by Othniel son of Kenaz, who wins Caleb's daughter Achsah as a prize for capturing it (Josh 15:15-17; Judg 1:11-13). Debir later appears among the Levitical cities assigned to the Aaronite priests (Josh 21:15; 1 Chr 6:43). All translations preserve the name unchanged: Debir across English, Spanish, French, and German.

Debir (place name) (13×) The proper toponym Debir, designating a specific Canaanite city-state in the Judean hill country. It appears in conquest narratives (Josh 10:38-39; 11:21; 12:13), tribal boundary lists (Josh 15:15, 49), the Othniel episode (Judg 1:11-13), and Levitical city allocations (Josh 21:15; 1 Chr 6:43). The directional form Debirah occurs in Josh 10:38. One occurrence in Josh 10:3 names Debir as a personal name — the king of Eglon — though BDB treats this as a homonymous proper noun. Cross-linguistic glosses are transparent: Debir/Devir uniformly across all target languages. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Debir, Devir, Devirah | es: Debir, Devir, a-Debir | fr: Debir, Devir, Devirah | de: Debir, Devir, Devirah Josh 10:3; Josh 10:38; Josh 10:39; Josh 11:21; Josh 12:13

לִדְבָר H1688b N-proper-fs (1×)

Lidevir (place name in Gad's territory, east of Jordan, possibly identical with Lo-debar)

A place name mentioned once in Joshua 13:26 as part of Gad's territorial boundary east of the Jordan. The text is difficult, and many scholars identify this with Lo-debar (mentioned in the David narratives). The Greek versions vary in their rendering, suggesting early uncertainty about the location. The name may mean 'no pasture' or 'no word,' fitting the semi-arid Transjordan landscape.

(1×) The boundary description in Joshua 13:26 lists Lidevir as a landmark in Gad's allotment. Spanish interestingly reads 'Lo-Debar,' reflecting the scholarly consensus that these are variant names for the same site. English, French, and German preserve distinct forms, acknowledging the textual variation. The Septuagint's divergent transliterations suggest early geographical confusion about Transjordanian sites. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Lidevir | es: Lo-Debar | fr: Lidevir | de: Lidevir Josh 13:26

דִּבְלָה H1689 N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)

Diblah (place name in Ezekiel, likely textual error for Riblah in Syria)

A place name appearing in Ezekiel 6:14, though most scholars agree this is a scribal error for 'Riblah,' the well-known Syrian city that served as Nebuchadnezzar's military headquarters. The phrase 'from the wilderness to Diblah/Riblah' would describe the full extent of Israel's land from south to north. Modern commentaries uniformly prefer the Riblah reading, which makes better geographical and historical sense.

(1×) In Ezekiel 6:14's oracle of judgment spanning 'from the wilderness to Diblah,' the context demands a northern boundary marker. Spanish renders this as 'Diblat,' French as 'Dibla,' while German preserves the consonantal Hebrew, all reflecting uncertainty. The emendation to 'Riblah' (a simple daleth/resh confusion) gives the expected north-south axis: southern wilderness to northern Syria. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Diblah | es: Diblat | fr: Dibla | de: [דבלתה] Ezek 6:14

דִּבְלָה H1690 N-fs (5×)

a cake or lump of pressed dried figs

A specific term for a compressed cake of dried figs, an important provision food in ancient Israel. These fig cakes served both as travel rations and as a medicinal poultice. Abigail packed two hundred fig cakes among her provisions for David's men (1 Sam 25:18), and a revived Egyptian slave was given a piece of fig cake to restore his strength (1 Sam 30:12). In a famous therapeutic application, Isaiah prescribed a fig cake poultice for King Hezekiah's boil (2 Kgs 20:7; Isa 38:21). The Greek equivalent palatha and Aramaic devilta confirm fig pressing as a widespread Near Eastern food technology.

(5×) A pressed cake of dried figs, used as a food provision and medicinal application. Served as portable rations (1 Sam 25:18; 30:12; 1 Chr 12:40) and as a healing poultice applied to Hezekiah's boil (2 Kgs 20:7 = Isa 38:21). Spanish 'torta de higos' (fig cake) and French 'cake de' reflect the compressed-food sense. Cognate with Arabic dubla (lump, mouthful) and Greek palatha, pointing to a common Near Eastern preparation. FIG FRUIT

en: a-lump, cake-of, fig-cake | es: masa, torta-de, torta-de-higos | fr: [דבלים], [דבלת], cake-de | de: [דבלים], [דבלת], cake-von 1Sam 25:18; 1Sam 30:12; 2Kgs 20:7; 1Chr 12:40; Isa 38:21

דִּבְלַיִם H1691 N-proper-ms (1×)

Diblaim (personal name, father of Gomer, Hosea's wife)

The patronymic of Gomer, the unfaithful wife Hosea was commanded to marry as a living symbol of Israel's infidelity to Yahweh. The name appears only in Hosea 1:3 and may derive from a root meaning 'fig cakes,' possibly indicating the family's trade or origin. Like many names in Hosea 1-3, it may carry symbolic weight—'daughter of double cakes' suggesting indulgence or fertility cult associations.

(1×) Hosea 1:3 identifies Gomer as 'daughter of Diblaim' in the controversial marriage command. The name appears uniformly across languages (English, Spanish: Diblaim; French: Diblah variant), with only German preserving Hebrew orthography. The symbolic onomastics of Hosea 1-3 (Lo-ruhamah, Lo-ammi) suggest this name too may signify more than mere identification, though its precise meaning remains debated. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Diblaim | es: Diblaim | fr: Diblah | de: [דבלים] Hos 1:3

דָּבַק H1692 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs / 1cs (54×)

To cling, cleave, stick fast; of personal devotion, physical adhesion, close pursuit, and causative attachment.

Davaq is one of the Hebrew Bible's most tactile and emotionally resonant verbs. At its physical core, it describes things sticking together — tongue to palate, skin to bones, scales of Leviathan locked tight. But its theological power comes from its relational extension: a man 'cleaves' to his wife (Gen 2:24), Ruth 'clings' to Naomi (Ruth 1:14), and Israel is commanded to 'hold fast' to Yahweh (Deut 10:20; 11:22;

13:4). The same verb that describes disease adhering to skin describes covenant loyalty adhering to God. Arabic dabiq preserves the sticky, adhesive core, while Korean captures the relational dimension with 붙좇다 ('to follow closely, attached') and the physical dimension with 달라붙다 ('to stick fast'). The Hifil stem splits into two distinct directions: pursuing someone in battle and causing something to stick — reflecting how the same causative energy can be directed toward persons (pursuit) or objects (adhesion).

1. cling to in devotion (20×) Qal relational: clinging to a person, to God, or to a group in loyalty, devotion, or covenant faithfulness. The largest cluster at 20 occurrences, spanning from the primordial marriage bond ('a man shall cleave to his wife,' Gen 2:24) through covenant theology ('you shall hold fast to the LORD your God,' Deut 10:20; Josh 23:8) to Ruth's iconic declaration (Ruth 1:14; 2:8, 21). Arabic iltasaqa bi ('to adhere to someone') and Korean 붙좇다 / 붙어 있다 convey the relational bonding. Spanish adherirse and French s'attacher both select 'attach oneself to' vocabulary rather than mere physical sticking, confirming a lexicalized devotional sense. CLINGING AND JOINING
en: I-have-clung, and-cling, and-clung | es: Me-adherí, Y-se-aferró, Y-se-apegó | fr: et-cling, et-clung, et-elle-s'attacha | de: anhing, clung, du-soll-anhangen Gen 2:24; Gen 34:3; Num 36:7; Num 36:9; Deut 10:20

2. cling physically, stick to (17×) Qal physical: sticking or adhering physically — tongue to palate, skin to bones, garments to body, disease clinging to a person. Seventeen occurrences covering bodily imagery (Job 19:20, 'my bone clings to my skin'; Ps 137:6, 'let my tongue cling to the roof of my mouth'; Lam 4:4, 'the infant's tongue cleaves to its palate') and divine judgment (Deut 28:60, diseases 'clinging' to Israel; 2 Kgs 5:27, Naaman's leprosy 'clinging' to Gehazi). Arabic dabiq ('to be sticky') preserves the core adhesive semantics. The physical and relational senses share the same Qal morphology but are distinguished by their collocations: body-part subjects signal physical adhesion, person subjects signal devotion. CLINGING AND JOINING
en: Cleaves, and-clung, and-they-cling | es: Está-pegada, Se-ha-adherido, Se-ha-pegado | fr: [דבק], [ידבק], devra-cling | de: [ידבק], [תדבק], anhing Deut 13:17; Deut 28:60; 2Sam 23:10; 2Kgs 5:27; Job 19:20

3. pursue closely, overtake (9×) Hifil of pursuit: to press hard after, pursue closely, and overtake — used of military chase and calamity catching up to someone. Nine occurrences, predominantly in battle narratives: Laban pursuing Jacob (Gen 31:23), the Philistines pressing hard on Saul (1 Sam 31:2), Israelite tribes chasing Benjamin (Judg 20:42, 45). The disaster extension appears in Genesis 19:19, where Lot fears evil will 'overtake' him. Spanish alcanzar ('to reach, overtake') and French rattraper ('to catch up to') both select pursuit-and-overtake vocabulary, sharply distinct from the adhesion senses. Korean 추격하다 ('to chase') confirms the military register. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-he-overtook, and-overtook, and-pressed-hard | es: Y-alcanzaron, Y-persiguieron, lo-alcanzaron | fr: [וידבקו], et-il-rattrapa, et-ils-poursuivit | de: [וידבקו], holte-ein-ihn, mich-erreicht Gen 19:19; Gen 31:23; Judg 18:22; Judg 20:42; Judg 20:45

4. stick together (passive) (4×) Pual/Hofal passive: to be stuck together, joined, or made to cling — the passive of physical adhesion. Four occurrences, concentrated in Job: Leviathan's scales 'stick together' so tightly no air passes between them (Job 41:17, 23), dust clods 'cling together' (Job 38:38), and the psalmist's heart 'is melted like wax' and his bones 'cling' (Ps 22:15, where the passive conveys helpless collapse). Spanish pegados ('stuck together') and French s'attacher (reflexive passive) mark the involuntary, resultant-state quality. These are not acts of clinging but states of being stuck. CLINGING AND JOINING
en: cling-together, stick-together, sticks | es: pegada, pegados, se-pegan | fr: de-s'attacher, s'attacher | de: anhing, sticks Job 38:38; Job 41:17; Job 41:23; Ps 22:15

5. cause to cling, make stick (4×) Hifil causative of adhesion: to cause something to cling, to make stick or adhere — God making a curse, plague, or commitment cling to someone. Four occurrences, all theologically loaded: God will 'make pestilence cling to you' (Deut 28:21), God 'caused the loincloth to cling' to Jeremiah's waist as a prophetic sign (Jer 13:11), and God 'will make your tongue cling to the roof of your mouth' to silence Ezekiel (Ezek 3:26; cf. 29:4 where fish 'are made to cling' to Pharaoh-as-crocodile's scales). Spanish hará pegarse ('will cause to stick') and the German/French causative constructions all confirm the agentive, divinely-imposed quality. Distinct from sense 3's Hifil of pursuit by its adhesion (not chase) semantics. CLINGING AND JOINING
en: I-caused-to-cling, I-shall-cause-to-cling, and-I-will-make-stick | es: Haré-pegarse, adherí, pegaré | fr: [והדבקתי], et-s'attacher, makes-cling | de: [אדביק], [והדבקתי], [והדבקתי] Deut 28:21; Jer 13:11; Ezek 3:26; Ezek 29:4

דָּבֵק H1693 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)
clinging (Aramaic participle, describing elements that fail to unite despite mixture)
An Aramaic verbal participle in Daniel's vision of the fourth kingdom, describing how iron and clay 'cling' or 'adhere' to one another yet remain fundamentally incompatible. The image suggests political alliances or dynastic marriages that create superficial unity without genuine cohesion. The root is the same as Hebrew dabaq, which describes intimate bonding (Ruth cleaving to Naomi), making the image of failed clinging even more striking.

(1×) Daniel 2:43 uses this participle in the vivid metaphor: 'they will cling together... but will not adhere to one another, just as iron does not mix with clay.' Spanish 'unidos' (united) and English 'clinging' capture the attempted but failed bonding. French 'coller' (to stick) emphasizes the adhesion metaphor. The multilingual consistency shows how translators recognize the ironic use of a bonding term for something that won't actually bond. CLINGING AND JOINING
en: clinging | es: unidos | fr: coller | de: [דבקין] Dan 2:43

דְּבֶק H1694 Art / N-mp (3×)
joining, soldering, joints—the point where things connect or attach
This noun refers to joints, joinings, or points of connection. Isaiah 41:7 uses it for the soldering that fastens an idol together. In 1 Kings 22:34 and 2 Chronicles 18:33, it describes 'the joints' of Ahab's armor—the vulnerable connection between the breastplate and lower armor where an arrow fatally struck. The word derives from dabaq ('to cling, cleave'). It denotes critical connection points where separate pieces join, whether in metalwork or protective armor. The armor context emphasizes how even well-joined defenses have vulnerable seams.

(3×) The joining, soldering, or joints where things connect. Isaiah 41:7 uses it for metalworking: soldering (ha-debeq) that joins idol pieces together. 1 Kings 22:34 = 2 Chronicles 18:33 use the plural 'the joints' (ha-devaqim) for Ahab's armor, specifically 'between the joints and the breastplate'—the vulnerable gap where an arrow penetrated. Cross-linguistic glosses vary: English 'it is/the joints,' Spanish 'del soldadura/las junturas' (of the soldering/the joints), French and German use brackets or 'le joints/der joints.' The contexts show both industrial (metalwork) and military (armor) applications of joining/connection points. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15565 WITH 3 SENSES
en: it-is, the-joints | es: del-soldadura, las-junturas | fr: [הדבקים], [לדבק], le-joints | de: [הדבקים], [לדבק], der-joints 1Kgs 22:34; 2Chr 18:33; Isa 41:7

דָּבֵק H1695 Art / Adj-ms (3×)
clinging, cleaving—adhering closely to someone or something
This adjective describes something or someone that clings or cleaves closely. Deuteronomy 4:4 speaks of Israel 'the ones clinging to' (ha-deveqim be-) Yahweh, all alive. 2 Chronicles 3:12 describes a cherub's wing 'joining' (deveqah le-) another wing in the temple. Proverbs 18:24 speaks of a friend who 'sticks closer' (ohev daveq) than a brother. The word derives from davaq ('to cling, cleave, join') and emphasizes intimate, persistent attachment—whether covenantal (to God), structural (wings touching), or relational (loyal friendship).

(3×) Adjective or participle meaning clinging, cleaving, or adhering closely. Deuteronomy 4:4 uses the plural participle 'the ones clinging' (ha-deveqim) with be- preposition: those holding fast to Yahweh. 2 Chronicles 3:12 uses the feminine singular 'joining' (deveqah) with le- preposition: the cherub wing adhering to another wing. Proverbs 18:24 uses the masculine singular 'sticking closer' (daveq): a loyal friend. Cross-linguistic glosses: English 'the ones clinging/joining/sticking closer,' Spanish 'los que os aferrasteis/unida/más unido,' French and German use brackets or 'clinging.' The root conveys close, persistent attachment across covenantal, architectural, and relational contexts. CLINGING AND JOINING

en: joining, sticking-closer, the-ones-clinging | es: los-que-os-aferrasteis, más-unido, unida | fr: [דבקה], le-ones-clinging, דבק | de: [דבק], [דבקה], der-die-clinging Deut 4:4; 2Chr 3:12; Prov 18:24

דָּבַר H1696 Prep-m / V-Piel-Inf (1144×)

speak, say, declare; (Qal ptc.) speaker; (Hifil) subdue; (Pual) be spoken; (Hifil) destroy

One of the most common verbs in the Hebrew Bible, דָּבַר in its dominant Piel stem means to speak, say, tell, or declare, accounting for over a thousand occurrences. The formulaic 'and the LORD spoke to Moses' (וַיְדַבֵּר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה) echoes throughout the Torah. A separate homonymous root דבר II appears in the Hifil with the surprising meaning 'to subdue' (Ps 18:47; 47:3), likely related to the Arabic ذ 'drive behind.' The Pual passive ('be spoken,' Ps 87:3) and a rare destructive sense (2 Chr 22:10) round out this word's range.

1. speak, say, tell (Piel) (1105×) The overwhelmingly dominant sense (1,105x), covering all Piel forms: perfect, imperfect, imperative, infinitive, and participle. Every major target language renders this as active verbal communication — Spanish habló, French parla, German sprach. The phrase וַיְדַבֵּר יְהוָה introduces divine speech hundreds of times from Genesis 8:15 onward. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: and-he-spoke, and-spoke | es: Y-habló, y-habló | fr: et-il-parla, et-parla | de: und-er-sprach, und-redete, und-sprach Gen 8:15; Gen 19:14; Gen 20:8; Gen 23:8; Gen 41:17

2. speaker, one who speaks (Qal participle) (28×) The Qal active participle used substantively to denote 'one who speaks, the speaker' (28x). Multilingual glosses confirm the agentive function — English 'one-who-speaks,' Spanish 'el-que-habla.' Notable at Genesis 16:13 where Hagar identifies God as 'the one speaking to me,' and at Exodus 6:29 where Moses is 'the one speaking before Pharaoh.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: am-speaking, are-speaking, one-who-speaks | es: el-que-habla, habladora-de, hablando | fr: am-parlant, de-il-a-parlé, il-a-parlé | de: Wort, Wueste, bin-speaking Gen 16:13; Exod 6:29; Num 27:7; Num 36:5; Deut 5:1

3. subdue, bring into subjection (Hifil) (4×) A distinct homonymous root דבר II in the Hifil stem meaning 'to subdue, bring into subjection' (4x). Arabic ذ and Spanish someterá confirm the separate semantic field. Psalm 18:47 ('He subdues peoples under me') and Psalm 47:3 ('He subdues nations') are the clearest instances. Proverbs 16:13 and Amos 5:10 show related forensic or authoritative speech contexts. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: He-subdues, and-speaker-of, and-the-one-speaking | es: someterá, y-al-que-habla, y-sujeta | fr: et-il-a-parlé, et-parler, parler | de: redete, und-redete Ps 18:47; Ps 47:3; Prov 16:13; Amos 5:10

4. (2×) Two rare occurrences (Ps 119:23; Mal 3:16) that sit at the boundary between standard speech and deliberative discourse. At Psalm 119:23, princes 'sit and speak against me,' implying slander or plotting. At Malachi 3:16, those who fear the LORD 'spoke to one another,' suggesting intimate, reverent conversation. Multilingual glosses remain within the speech domain. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: speaking, spoke | es: hablaron | fr: parler | de: redete Ps 119:23; Mal 3:16

5. (2×) Two occurrences (Num 7:89; Ezek 43:6) involving reflexive or middle-voice speech — the divine voice 'speaking' from between the cherubim (Hitpael-like nuance). French parlant and Spanish hablando capture the progressive, self-emanating quality. These passages describe God's voice heard as an ongoing auditory phenomenon rather than a directed utterance. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: speaking | es: hablando | fr: de-il-a-parlé, parlant | de: Wueste, speaking Num 7:89; Ezek 43:6

6. be spoken (Pual) (2×) The Pual passive stem (2x): 'glorious things are spoken of you' (Ps 87:3) and 'on the day she is spoken for' (Song 8:8). Arabic ذ and Spanish 'que se hable' confirm the passive voice. Both passages involve something being declared or spoken about a subject, emphasizing the content received rather than the agent producing it. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: are-spoken, that-is-spoken- | es: que-se-hable-, son-dichas | fr: de-parole, où-on-parlera | de: redete Ps 87:3; Song 8:8

7. (1×) A single occurrence at 2 Chronicles 22:10 where Athaliah 'destroyed' the royal seed. English 'and-destroyed,' Spanish 'y-destruyó' confirm this is not speech but annihilation. This likely reflects דבר III (related to דֶּבֶר 'pestilence') or a textual/semantic overlap with the Assyrian dabāru 'drive away.' The destructive meaning stands wholly apart from the communication senses. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: and-destroyed | es: y-destruyó | fr: et-parler | de: und-reden 2Chr 22:10

דָּבָר H1697 Conj-w (1455×)

Word, speech, matter, thing, event; the Hebrew noun bridging spoken utterance and objective reality

Few Hebrew words reveal as much about ancient Israelite thought as davar (דָּבָר). Appearing nearly 1,500 times, it seamlessly bridges what English splits into 'word' and 'thing' — because in Hebrew thought, a spoken word is not merely sound but a substantive reality with force and consequence. God's davar creates, commands, and judges; a prophet's davar is simultaneously a message and an event. The plural devarim can mean 'words,' 'deeds,' 'matters,' or 'chronicles,' depending on context, making this noun the backbone of biblical narrative and legal discourse alike.

1. word, speech (utterance, message) (1041×) The primary sense: a spoken or written word, divine utterance, or prophetic message. Arabic ﻡ/ﺔ, Korean 말씀/말, Swahili neno all converge on verbal communication. Dominates at 1,235 occurrences, including the formulaic 'the word of the LORD came to' (Gen 15:1, 1 Sam 3:7, 1 Sam 15:10) that anchors prophetic revelation throughout the Hebrew Bible.

en: word-of, word-of- | es: Palabra-de, palabra-de, palabra-de- | fr: parole, parole-de, parole-de- | de: Wort-von, Wort-von-, das-Wort- Gen 15:1; Gen 15:4; 1Sam 3:7; 1Sam 4:1; 1Sam 15:10

2. matter, thing, event (affair, happening) (193×) Deeds, acts, or chronicles — the plural devarim as a record of what someone did, not just said. Arabic ﻭﺭ/ﺃ and Korean 행적/연대기 show the shift from speech to action. Found in the recurring formula 'the rest of the acts of [king]' (1 Kgs 11:41), and in legal contexts where 'matters' requiring judgment include concrete disputes (Deut 17:8).

en: a-word, deeds-of, deeds-of- | es: asuntos-de, el-asunto, la-cosa | fr: la-parole, le-parole, le-paroles | de: Wort, Worte-von, das-Wort Gen 20:10; Gen 21:26; Gen 22:16; Gen 24:50; Gen 30:31

3. deeds, acts, chronicles (92×) Deeds, acts, or chronicles — the plural devarim as a record of what someone did, not just said. Arabic ﻭﺭ/ﺃ and Korean 행적/연대기 show the shift from speech to action. Found in the recurring formula 'the rest of the acts of [king]' (1 Kgs 11:41), and in legal contexts where 'matters' requiring judgment include concrete disputes (Deut 17:8). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: matters-of, words-of | es: asuntos-de, hechos-de, las-palabras-de | fr: affaires-de, paroles-de | de: Worte-von, matters-von Deut 17:8; 2Sam 11:18; 2Sam 11:19; 1Kgs 11:41

4. matter, affair, concern (61×) A matter, affair, or concern demanding practical attention. Arabic ﺯ, Korean 일, Swahili jambo mark this as a distinct semantic cluster. Covers legal cases (Gen 12:17, 'the LORD plagued Pharaoh because of the matter of Sarai'), situational problems (Gen 20:11), and administrative business (Gen 24:9). Context shifts davar from utterance to the thing being discussed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-matter, matter, matter-of | es: asunto, asunto-de, asunto-de- | fr: affaire, affaire-de, affaire-de- | de: Sache, Sache-von, Sache-von- Gen 12:17; Gen 19:21; Gen 20:11; Gen 20:18; Gen 24:9

5. thing, something, anything (31×) An indefinite 'thing' or 'something,' especially in negated constructions meaning 'nothing at all.' Arabic ءٌ, Korean 것, Swahili kitu confirm the generalized referent. Lot says 'I cannot do a thing' (Gen 19:8), regulations specify 'every thing that may abide the fire' (Num 31:23), and accusations note 'not a thing was lacking' (Exod 9:4). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-thing, matter, thing | es: cosa, de-cosa | fr: affaire, chose, il-a-parlé | de: Ding, Sache, Wort Gen 19:8; Exod 5:11; Exod 9:4; Lev 5:2; Num 31:23

6. happenings, events, things that occurred (21×) Events or happenings — 'the things that occurred.' In plural constructions like 'after these things' (Gen 15:1, 22:1, 22:20), davar functions as 'events' rather than 'words.' Arabic الأمور, Korean 그 일들, Swahili mambo haya support the narrative-temporal reading. This sense bridges word and event, characteristic of Hebrew's unity of speech and reality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: according-to-the-words, the-things, the-words | es: conforme-a-las-palabras, estas-cosas, las-cosas | fr: der-paroles, le-choses, le-paroles | de: den-Dingen, der-Dinge, der-Sachen Gen 15:1; Gen 22:1; Gen 22:20; Gen 24:28; Gen 39:7

7. cause, reason, account (9×) Cause, reason, or account — used in prepositional constructions meaning 'on account of' or 'because of.' Arabic بَ, Swahili sababu. Found in Deuteronomic legal formulations: 'because of this matter' (Deut 22:24, 23:4), and in the Rahab narrative 'if you report this matter of ours' (Josh 2:14, 20). The 'matter' becomes the motivating ground for action. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-thing-of, account-of, our-matter | es: asunto-de, causa-de, cosa-de | fr: account-de, notre-affaire, parole | de: account-von, der-Wort-, ein-Wort- Deut 22:24; Deut 23:4; Josh 2:14; Josh 2:20

8. manner, way, likeness (6×) Manner, way, or likeness — used comparatively meaning 'according to this manner' or 'such a thing.' Appears in 'Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?' (Gen 18:25) and Deuteronomic warnings: 'such a thing shall not be done again' (Deut 13:11, 19:20). Spanish como la cosa confirms the comparative reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: according-to-the-thing, like-the-thing | es: como-la-cosa, conforme-al-asunto, según-la-cosa | fr: comme-le-chose, selon-à-le-chose | de: eine-solche-Sache, gemaess-zu-der-Ding, wie-der-Ding Gen 18:25; Deut 4:32; Deut 13:11; Deut 19:20; 2Sam 15:6

דֶּבֶר H1698 Prep-l (49×)
pestilence, plague — deadly epidemic disease, typically sent or threatened as divine judgment Dever is the Hebrew Bible's word for catastrophic epidemic, appearing 49 times as one of God's most feared instruments of covenant enforcement. It forms a terrifying triad with sword and famine — a formula repeated over sixteen times in Jeremiah alone (Jer 14:12; 21:7, 9) and echoed throughout Ezekiel (5:12; 6:11). The word first appears in Moses' warning to Pharaoh (Exod 5:3; 9:15), then punctuates the wilderness narratives (Num 14:12) and the Deuteronomic curses (Deut 28:21). David's choice of three days of pestilence over famine or military defeat (2 Sam 24:13-15) resulted in seventy thousand deaths — making dever the deadliest single event of his reign. The Arabic cognate dabr ('departure, death') illuminates the etymological connection between plague and perishing. All witness languages render it with cognate severity: Spanish 'pestilencia,' French 'peste,' German 'Pest.'

pestilence, plague (49×) Deadly epidemic disease understood as a divine instrument of judgment or covenantal punishment, frequently paired with sword (cherev) and famine (ra'av) in the prophetic formula of triple catastrophe (Jer 14:12; 21:7; Ezek 5:12). First threatened against Egypt (Exod 5:3; 9:3, 15), it recurs in wilderness warnings (Num 14:12), Deuteronomic curses (Deut 28:21), David's census judgment (2 Sam 24:13-15), Solomon's temple prayer (1 Kgs 8:37), and the personified plague marching before God in Habakkuk's theophany (Hab 3:5). Hosea 13:14 turns it into a rhetorical challenge: 'Where, O Death, are your plagues?' All 49 occurrences share this single pestilential sense. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS
en: and-by-pestilence, and-by-the-pestilence, and-with-the-pestilence | es: la-pestilencia, peste, pestilencia | fr: et-dans-peste, il-a-parlé, parole | de: Pest, pestilence, plague Exod 5:3; Exod 9:3; Exod 9:15; Lev 26:25; Num 14:12

דָּבְרֹ H1699a Prep-k / N-msc / 3mp (2×)
pasture, pastureland; grazing land for flocks
This noun denotes pasture or grazing land where flocks feed. It appears in two prophetic contexts—Isaiah's oracle of judgment reversed and Micah's promise of restoration. Both passages use the image of sheep feeding in their proper pasture to symbolize peace, security, and divine provision for God's people returned from judgment.

(2×) A noun meaning pasture or pastureland. Isaiah 5:17 depicts lambs feeding 'as in their pasture' (or 'according to their pasture'), suggesting normal, peaceful grazing after desolation. Micah 2:12 uses a similar image: 'like a flock in the midst of its pasture,' depicting restoration and abundance. The Aramaic cognates (dabra, Syriac dabro) confirm the pastoral meaning. The term appears with possessive suffixes, emphasizing belonging—the pasture proper to each flock. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: as-their-pasture, its-pasture | es: como-en-su-prado, su-aprisco | fr: [כדברם], abeille | de: [הדברו], [כדברם] Isa 5:17; Mic 2:12

וְדִבֶּר H1699b Conj-w (1×)
and the word (disputed textual form in Jeremiah's prophetic critique)
A grammatically difficult phrase in Jeremiah 5:13, where prophets are criticized as 'wind' with 'the word' not in them. The Hebrew text is obscure—it could be a noun with article ('and the word') or possibly a verbal form. Many scholars emend to 'the word' (without conjunction) for smoother syntax. The passage indicts false prophets who speak without divine authorization, making 'the word' (or lack thereof) thematically central.

(1×) Jeremiah 5:13's biting critique says the prophets are 'wind, and the word is not in them.' The phrase structure is awkward, leading to various proposals. English, Spanish, French, and German all render it as 'and the word,' following the received text despite its difficulty. The theological point is clear across languages: these prophets speak their own ideas, not Yahweh's authoritative word (dabar). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-word | es: y-la-palabra | fr: et-la-parole | de: und-das-Wort Jer 5:13

דִּבְרָה H1700 N-fsc (5×)
cause, reason, manner, order; on account of, for the sake of A feminine noun used almost exclusively in construct or with prepositions, conveying the ideas of cause, reason, or established order. Its most celebrated occurrence is Psalm 110:4, where God swears the Messianic king is a priest forever 'al divrati Malki-Tsedeq ('after the order of Melchizedek'), a phrase that became foundational in both Jewish and Christian theology (cf. Heb 7). In Ecclesiastes it appears as a causal preposition meaning 'because of' or 'on account of' (3:18; 7:14; 8:2). In Job 5:8 Eliphaz uses it to mean 'my case' or 'my cause.'

(5×) Cause, reason, or established manner/order. Used prepositionally as 'al divrat to mean 'because of, on account of' (Eccl 3:18; 7:14; 8:2), and in Ps 110:4 as 'after the order of' Melchizedek, denoting a priestly pattern or rank. Spanish 'orden de' and 'causa de' capture both nuances. In Job 5:8 it means 'my cause/case,' the matter one brings before God. The range from legal cause to established order reflects a single underlying concept of the ground or basis for something. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: account, matter-of, my-case | es: causa-de, el-asunto-de, el-orden-de | fr: mon-à-cause-de-moi, raison, à-cause-de | de: Sache, der-order-von Job 5:8; Ps 110:4; Eccl 3:18; Eccl 7:14; Eccl 8:2

דִּבְרָה H1701 N-fsc (2×)
cause, reason, purpose; the intent or grounds for something

This Aramaic noun means cause, reason, or purpose, appearing in the book of Daniel in prepositional phrases. It introduces the purpose or explanation for an action, similar to 'in order that' or 'because.' Daniel uses it to explain why the mystery was revealed and why the decree about the tree was given.

(2×) An Aramaic noun meaning 'cause' or 'reason,' used in construct phrases to express purpose or intent. Daniel 2:30 states the mystery was revealed 'for the purpose that the interpretation might be made known,' while Daniel 4:17 (Aramaic 4:14) explains the decree is given 'to the intent that the living may know' God's sovereignty. The phrase 'al-dibrath di' functions as a compound preposition meaning 'for the purpose that' or 'to the intent that.' The Biblical Hebrew cognate (דָּבָר) shares this sense of 'matter, cause, affair.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: purpose-of | es: el-propósito, el-propósito-de | fr: pêche | de: [דברת] Dan 2:30; Dan 4:17

דְּבָרוֹת H1702 N-fp (1×)

rafts (floats for transporting cedar logs from Lebanon by sea)

A technical maritime term describing the log rafts used to transport Lebanese cedar from Hiram's Phoenician ports to Solomon's building projects. First Kings 5:9 describes Hiram's workers lashing logs together as rafts, floating them down the Mediterranean coast to the designated port, then breaking them apart for overland transport to Jerusalem. This was standard ancient Near Eastern practice for moving massive timber quantities.

(1×) The logistics of Solomon's temple project required innovative transport: 1 Kings 5:9 explains that Hiram 'will make them into rafts to go by sea to the place you indicate.' Spanish 'en balsas' (in rafts) and English agree on the floating log-raft method. The term appears only here, reflecting specialized maritime vocabulary for this timber-export industry that was Phoenicia's economic backbone. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: rafts | es: en-balsas | fr: rafts | de: rafts 1Kgs 5:9

דַּבֶּרֶת H1703 Prep-m / N-fpc / 2ms (1×)

from your words (poetic term for divine instruction received from Moses)

A rare poetic word appearing in Moses's blessing of Levi (Deuteronomy 33:3), describing how the tribes receive divine words or instruction. The phrase 'he receives from your words' suggests the people gathering at Moses's feet to hear Torah. The term is a poetic variant of the common dabar (word), lending elevated tone to this archaic blessing poem. All translations recognize this as referring to Moses's authoritative teaching.

(1×) Deuteronomy 33:3's dense poetry says the people are 'at your feet, receiving from your words.' The preposition-plus-noun construction ('from your words') is rendered consistently: Spanish 'de tus palabras,' French 'de ton paroles,' German 'von dein Worte,' all capturing the image of instruction flowing from Moses to Israel. The poetic vocabulary elevates the ordinary 'word' to covenant instruction. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: from-your-words | es: de-tus-palabras | fr: de-ton-paroles | de: von-dein-Worte Deut 33:3

דִּבְרִי H1704 N-proper-fs (1×)

Dibri (personal name, a Danite, father of Shelomith whose son was stoned for blasphemy)

The father of Shelomith, the Israelite woman whose son (by an Egyptian father) blasphemed the divine Name and was stoned in the wilderness narrative of Leviticus 24. The name Dibri appears only in this context, marking the maternal lineage of the blasphemer since his father was not Israelite. The incident establishes case law for blasphemy punishment and the status of mixed parentage in the covenant community.

(1×) Leviticus 24:11 identifies the blasphemer as 'son of Shelomith daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan.' The name is uniform across translations (English, Spanish, French, German all: Dibri), serving primarily as genealogical identification. The detail of maternal lineage is unusual and emphasizes the son's ambiguous status—Israelite mother, Egyptian father—which may relate to why the case required judicial clarification. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Dibri | es: Dibri | fr: Dibri | de: Dibri Lev 24:11

דָּבְרַת H1705 Art / N-proper-fs (3×)

Daberath—a Levitical city in Issachar at the foot of Mount Tabor

Daberath (also spelled Dabrath or Dovrat) was a Levitical city assigned to the tribe of Issachar, located at the base of Mount Tabor. It appears in Joshua's boundary descriptions (Josh 19:12, with the definite article) and in the lists of Levitical cities (Josh 21:28, 1 Chr 6:72). Modern scholars identify it with Deburije, a village still at Tabor's foot. The name's etymology is uncertain. As a Levitical city, it housed priests and served as a center of worship and teaching within Issachar's territory.

(3×) A Levitical city in Issachar territory, modern Deburije at Mount Tabor's base. Joshua 19:12 uses the definite article form 'the Daberath' (ha-Daverat) in boundary descriptions. Joshua 21:28 and 1 Chronicles 6:72 list it among Levitical cities (without the article). Cross-linguistic evidence preserves the name: English 'Daberath/Dovrat/the Daberath,' Spanish 'Daberat,' French 'Daberath/le Daberath,' German 'Daberath/der Daberath,' with some using placeholder brackets. The definite article in Joshua 19:12 suggests it was a well-known location. The parallel texts in Joshua and Chronicles confirm this is the same city assigned to Levites from the Gershonite families. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Daberath, Dovrat, the-Daberath | es: Daberat | fr: Daberath, [דברת], le-Daberath | de: Daberath, [דברת], der-Daberath Josh 19:12; Josh 21:28; 1Chr 6:72

דְּבַשׁ H1706 Conj-w / N-ms (54×)

honey — the sweet substance produced by bees, also used of fruit syrup and as a figure for sweetness

Devash encompasses both bee honey and, by extension, the thick syrup extracted from dates or other fruits — a dual sense familiar across Semitic languages (Arabic dibs means specifically date-honey). Its 54 occurrences weave through some of Scripture's most vivid imagery: Samson's riddle about honey in a lion's carcass (Judg 14:8-18), the repeated covenant formula 'a land flowing with milk and honey' (Exod 3:8), and the psalmist's declaration that God's words are sweeter than honey (Ps 19:10; 119:103). Jonathan's eyes brighten after tasting wild honey on the battlefield (1 Sam 14:27-29). The translations converge neatly: Spanish 'miel,' French 'miel,' German 'Honig' — none distinguishing bee honey from fruit syrup.

honey (54×) Honey as a natural sweet substance, encompassing bee honey found wild in rocks and forests (Deut 32:13; Judg 14:8-9) and possibly date-honey or fruit syrup as a trade commodity (Gen 43:11; Ezek 27:17). Used literally as food and figuratively for the sweetness of divine speech (Ps 19:10) and the covenant promise of agricultural abundance ('flowing with milk and honey,' Exod 3:8). All 54 occurrences share this unified sweet-substance sense; the Arabic cognate dibs points to the fruit-syrup extension already present in the Semitic root. HONEY SWEET FOOD

en: and-honey | es: y-de-miel, y-miel | fr: et-miel | de: und-Honig Gen 43:11; Exod 3:8; Exod 3:17; Exod 13:5; Exod 33:3

דַּבֶּשֶׁת H1707 N-fsc (1×)

the humps (of camels, part of description of caravan bearing wealth through desert)

A rare anatomical term for camel humps, appearing in Isaiah's oracle against Egypt and Ethiopia (Isaiah 30:6). The prophet envisions a desperate caravan carrying tribute through the dangerous Negev: wealth loaded 'on the humps of camels.' The image emphasizes both the hazard of the journey and the futility of trusting Egypt. The word is related to a place name (Dabbesheth), suggesting possible connection to local geography or camel-breeding areas.

(1×) Isaiah 30:6 paints a vivid scene: 'they carry their riches on the humps of camels, their treasures on the backs of donkeys.' English and Spanish recognize the anatomical term ('humps,' 'joroba de'), while French and German preserve the Hebrew, possibly unsure of the rare vocabulary. The camel hump as load-bearer is culturally specific imagery from desert trade routes. DONKEYS AND FOALS
en: the-humps | es: joroba-de | fr: [דבשת] | de: [דבשת] Isa 30:6

דַּבֶּשֶׁת H1708 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

in Dabbesheth (place name, a boundary town in Zebulun's allotment)

A town on Zebulun's border mentioned once in the tribal allotment (Joshua 19:11). The site has not been conclusively identified, though it lay in the western part of Zebulun's territory. The name may be related to 'hump' or possibly a topographical feature. The boundary descriptions in Joshua 13-19 preserve ancient geographical knowledge, many details of which remain obscure.

(1×) Joshua 19:11 traces Zebulun's border: 'their boundary goes up westward... to Dabbesheth.' The prepositional phrase ('in/at Dabbesheth') is consistent across languages: Spanish 'en Dabeset,' English 'in Dabbesheth,' French and German matching. The term functions purely as geographical reference in the technical boundary list, its etymology secondary to its role as a landmark. PERSONAL NAMES
en: in-Dabbesheth | es: en-Dabeset | fr: dans-Dabbesheth | de: in-Dabbesheth Josh 19:11

דָּג H1709 Prep-k (19×)

Fish: an aquatic creature, used collectively or singularly for fish of sea, river, or any body of water.

Dāg is the standard Hebrew word for fish, appearing both as a singular ('a great fish,' Jonah 2:1) and as a collective or plural (dāgîm, dĕgê). In the creation order, fish of the sea stand alongside beasts and birds as the three categories of animal life over which humanity exercises dominion (Gen 9:2; Ps 8:9). Solomon's wisdom encompassed discourse about fish (1 Kgs 4:33), and Nehemiah mentions the Fish Gate and Tyrian fish merchants (Neh 3:3; 13:16). The word is remarkably stable across translations: Spanish 'pez/peces,' French 'poisson,' German 'Fisch'—reflecting the universal familiarity of this creature.

fish (aquatic creature) (19×) A fish or fishes, the common aquatic creature of seas, rivers, and lakes. Used of the great fish that swallowed Jonah (Jon 2:1), of fish as part of the created order alongside beasts and birds (Gen 9:2; Ps 8:9; Hos 4:3), and of fish as commerce and food (Neh 13:16). The plural dĕgê hayyām ('fish of the sea') is the standard collective expression. Job 12:8 invites inquiry of the fish as witnesses to God's creative power. Uniformly translated across languages with standard fish terms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-fish, and-fish-of, and-the-fish-of | es: al-pez, como-los-peces, como-peces-de- | fr: [דאג], [הדגים], et-poisson | de: Fisch, Fisch-von, Fischen Gen 9:2; Num 11:22; 1Kgs 4:33; 2Chr 33:14; Neh 3:3

דָּגָה H1710 Conj-w (15×)

Fish (collective feminine noun) — aquatic creatures as a class, especially of the sea and Nile

This feminine collective noun for fish stands alongside the more common masculine דָּג, but carries a distinctly collective, class-wide force. It appears at the very outset of Scripture when God grants humanity dominion over 'the fish of the sea' (Gen 1:26, 28). It surfaces again in the Exodus plagues when the Nile's fish die (Exod 7:18, 21), in Israel's nostalgic memory of Egyptian fish eaten freely (Num 11:5), and in Ezekiel's eschatological river whose waters teem with fish 'of many kinds' (Ezek 47:9–10). Deuteronomy's prohibition against fish-shaped idols (Deut 4:18) shows how theologically charged even this humble word could become.

fish (collective noun) (15×) Feminine collective noun for fish as a zoological class of aquatic creatures, distinguished from the masculine דָּג which may denote individual fish. Used in the creation mandate (Gen 1:26, 28), the Nile plague (Exod 7:18, 21), the nostalgic food memory of Egypt (Num 11:5), the prohibition of fish idols (Deut 4:18), and Ezekiel's eschatological river (Ezek 47:9–10). All target languages render it straightforwardly: eng 'fish', spa 'pez/pescado', fra 'poisson', deu 'Fisch'. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-fish, fish, fish-of- | es: Y-el-pez, como-pez-de, el-pescado | fr: [דגתם], au-dessus-poisson-de, et-le-poisson | de: Fisch, [דגת], [דגתם] Gen 1:26; Gen 1:28; Exod 7:18; Exod 7:21; Num 11:5

דָּגָה H1711 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3mp (1×)

and let them multiply (jussive verb, Jacob's blessing that Ephraim and Manasseh increase like fish)

A verbal form in Jacob's blessing over Joseph's sons (Genesis 48:16), invoking fruitfulness using an unusual verb related to fish (dag). The phrase 'let them multiply like fish' (or 'teem/swarm') evokes the creation blessing and connects to Jacob's own name-giving—his descendants will multiply abundantly in the land. The imagery is uniquely aquatic, perhaps reflecting Egypt's Nile-based fertility or simply emphasizing prolific reproduction.

(1×) Genesis 48:16 concludes Jacob's blessing: 'may they multiply greatly in the midst of the land.' The verb is from the root for 'fish,' suggesting swarming abundance. Spanish 'multiplíquense' and English 'let them multiply' recognize the jussive mood. German 'sie sollen wimmeln' (they shall swarm/teem) captures the fish imagery more explicitly. The multilingual consensus is on rapid, fish-like population growth. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH
en: and-let-them-multiply | es: y-multipliquense | fr: et-que-eux-multiplier | de: und-sie-sollen-wimmeln Gen 48:16

דָּגוֹן H1712 N-proper-ms (13×)

Dagon — the chief deity and idol of the Philistines, worshipped especially at Ashdod and Gaza

The proper name of the Philistine national deity, whose cult center was at Ashdod (with a secondary shrine at Gaza). The dramatic narrative of 1 Samuel 5 provides most occurrences: the captured ark of God is placed in Dagon's temple, and the idol is found fallen prostrate before it — first intact, then with head and hands broken off on the threshold (1 Sam 5:2-5). This incident gives rise to the cultic practice of not treading on Dagon's threshold. Samson's final act takes place in a temple of Dagon at Gaza (Judg 16:23). The etymology may connect to Hebrew dag ('fish') or to the Semitic grain deity Dagan, though the origin remains debated.

Dagon (13×) The theonym Dagon, naming the principal god of the Philistines. All 13 occurrences function as a divine proper noun in cultic or narrative contexts: Dagon's temple (beth Dagon, 1 Sam 5:2, 5; 1 Chr 10:10), Dagon's priests (1 Sam 5:5), Dagon as idol toppled before the ark (1 Sam 5:3-4), and the festival to Dagon at Gaza (Judg 16:23). Translations uniformly transliterate: eng Dagon, spa Dagon, fra Dagon, deu Dagon. The word carries no appellative meaning in Biblical Hebrew — it functions exclusively as a proper name. GODS AND DEITIES en: Dagon, to-Dagon | es: Dagón, a-Dagón | fr: Dagon, [דגון], à-Dagon | de: Dagon, [דגון], zu-Dagon Judg 16:23; 1Sam 5:2; 1Sam 5:3

דָּגַל H1713a V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

distinguished (passive participle, describing the beloved as conspicuous among many)

A disputed term in Song of Songs 5:10, where the woman describes her beloved as 'distinguished among ten thousand.' The root may mean 'to look at, behold' (thus 'conspicuous, looked-upon') or be denominative from 'banner/standard' (thus 'exalted, pre-eminent'). Either way, the sense is clear: he stands out from the crowd.

The multilingual glosses show translators opting for 'distinguished' without committing to a specific etymology.

(1×) In the bride's lavish description (Song 5:10), she begins: 'My beloved is radiant and distinguished among ten thousand.' The participle suggests being singled out, conspicuous. English, Spanish, and French all choose 'distinguished/distingué,' avoiding the etymological debate. The context of the catalog of his perfections makes pre-eminence the key idea, however the word's origin is understood. CHOSEN AND ELECT en: distinguished | es: distinguido | fr: distingué | de: [דגול] Song 5:10

דָּגַל H1713b V-Qal-Imperf.h-1cp (3×)

to set up banners, be bannered—displaying military standards in battle array

This denominative verb derives from degel ('banner, standard') and means to set up or display banners. Psalm 20:5 expresses the hope 'we will set up our banners' in God's name—a military image of rallying and triumph. Song of Songs 6:4 and 6:10 describe the beloved as 'bannered' or 'like bannered hosts'—awesome as an army with banners. The verb conveys military organization, rallying around standards, and the impressive display of ordered forces. Some ancient versions read different verbs here, suggesting textual uncertainty, but the banner imagery fits both contexts well.

(3×) Denominative verb from degel ('banner'): to set up banners or be arrayed with banners. Psalm 20:5 uses the first person plural imperfect 'we will set up our banners' (nidgol) in celebration of God's salvation. Song of Songs 6:4, 10 uses the feminine plural Niphal participle 'bannered ones' (nidgalot): 'awesome as the bannered hosts,' describing the beloved's majestic beauty. Cross-linguistic glosses: English 'may we set up our banners/as the bannered ones,' Spanish 'levantemos bandera/como ejércitos con banderas,' French 'drapeau/comme des armées avec bannières,' German uses brackets. The imagery evokes military might and organized, victorious display. SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: as-the-bannered-ones, may-we-set-up-our-banners | es: como-ejércitos-con-banderas, levantemos-bandera | fr: comme-des-armées-avec-bannières., comme-des-armées-avec-bannières?, drapeau | de: [כנדגלות], möge-wir-setzen-hinauf-unser-banners Ps 20:5; Song 6:4; Song 6:10

דֶּגֶל H1714 N-msc (14×)

A tribal banner or military standard marking Israelite camp divisions and marching order in the wilderness.

Refers to the large standards carried by each of the four three-tribe divisions during Israel's wilderness encampment and march. Nearly all 14 occurrences appear in Numbers 1–2 and 10, where each דֶּגֶל heads a camp of three tribes — Judah to the east, Reuben to the south, Ephraim to the west, Dan to the north. The single figurative use in Song of Solomon 2:4, 'his banner over me is love,' transforms the military emblem into an intimate image of covenantal protection. Spanish consistently uses 'bandera,' while English alternates between 'banner' and 'standard.'

banner, standard (14×) A military or tribal standard (banner, flag) designating the four major divisions of the Israelite encampment in the wilderness. Used almost exclusively in Numbers (1:52; 2:2–34; 10:14–25) to describe the organized arrangement of tribes around the tabernacle, each division rallying under its own דֶּגֶל alongside its tribal signs (אוֹת). The lone figurative appearance in Song of Solomon 2:4 — 'his banner over me is love' — poetically recasts the military emblem as a canopy of beloved protection. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-his-banner, banner-of, by-their-banners | es: Bandera-de, bandera-de, bandera-de-él | fr: banner-de, et-sa-bannière, par-leur-banners | de: Banner-von, Panier-von, [ודגלו] Num 1:52; Num 2:2; Num 2:3; Num 2:10; Num 2:17

דָּגָן H1715 Art / N-ms (40×)

grain, cereal crop — especially wheat and barley as agricultural produce, frequently paired with new wine

Dagan is a masculine noun for grain or cereal crops, appearing 40 times and consistently referring to cultivated produce — wheat, barley, and similar crops — rather than any specific variety. Its most characteristic usage is in the formulaic triad dagan, tirosh, veyitshar ('grain, new wine, and oil'), which recurs across Deuteronomy (7:13; 11:14; 12:17; 14:23; 18:4; 28:51), the prophets (Hos 2:8-9, 22; Joel 1:10; 2:19), and Nehemiah (5:11; 10:39; 13:5, 12). This triad represents the complete agricultural bounty of the land — the staff of life, the fruit of the vine, and the produce of the olive. Isaac's blessing gives Jacob 'the dew of heaven and the fatness of the earth, and abundance of grain and new wine' (Gen 27:28). The uniform translations across languages — English 'grain,' Spanish 'grano,' French 'ble,' German 'Getreide/Korn' — confirm a single semantic profile throughout.

grain, cereal crop (40×) Cultivated cereal produce (especially wheat and barley) as a category of agricultural wealth and divine blessing. Characteristically appears in the triad dagan-tirosh-yitshar ('grain, new wine, oil') representing the full bounty of the Promised Land (Deut 7:13; 11:14; 28:51; Hos 2:8-9; Joel 2:19). Isaac's blessing invokes dagan as a mark of divine favor (Gen 27:28, 37). Prophets use its withdrawal as a sign of judgment (Hos 2:9; Joel 1:10; Hag 1:11) and its restoration as a sign of redemption (Jer 31:12; Zech 9:17). The Phoenician cognate in the expression 'land of grain' (erets dagan) points to deep Canaanite agricultural vocabulary. All six translation languages render it with a single equivalent throughout, confirming semantic unity. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: grain, the-grain | es: el-grano, está-el-grano, grano | fr: [דגן], blé, der-blé | de: Getreide, Korn, [דגן] Gen 27:28; Gen 27:37; Num 18:12; Num 18:27; Deut 7:13

דָּגַר H1716 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (2×)

gather, brood, hatch; collecting together as a bird with young

This verb describes gathering or brooding like a bird with its young. Isaiah uses it of the arrow-snake (or perhaps kite) gathering in its shadow to nest and hatch. Jeremiah employs it metaphorically of a partridge that 'gathers eggs it did not lay,' illustrating ill-gotten wealth that won't last. Both passages evoke the image of a bird collecting and incubating.

(2×) A verb meaning to gather together, brood, or hatch, with the semantic range of a bird collecting its young or eggs. In Isaiah 34:15, the arrow-snake (or kite) 'gathers' or 'nests' in the ruins of Edom, with the verb suggesting brooding or hatching in the shadow. In Jeremiah 17:11, the partridge 'gathers but does not hatch'—or 'broods over eggs not laid'—serving as a metaphor for acquiring wealth unjustly. The Aramaic cognate means 'heap together,' supporting the gathering sense. The verb captures both the physical collecting and the incubating care of brooding birds. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-gather, gathers | es: empolla, y-los-incubará | fr: [דגר], [ודגרה] | de: [דגר], [ודגרה] Isa 34:15; Jer 17:11

דַּד H1717 N-mdc / 2fs (4×)

Breast, teat, nipple; the female breast, used in erotic and allegorical contexts.

A term for the female breast or nipple, appearing in intimate and allegorical settings. Proverbs 5:19 uses it in the context of marital love—'let her breasts satisfy you at all times'—where the word carries warmth and tenderness. Ezekiel 23:3, 8, and 21 deploy it in the shocking allegory of Oholah and Oholibah, where the pressing of breasts symbolizes Israel's and Judah's unfaithful liaisons with foreign powers. The word is distinct from the more common shad and carries a somewhat more intimate, even infantile register, as BDB notes its origin as a 'primitive caressing word.'

(4×) The female breast or nipple, used both in contexts of legitimate marital intimacy and in prophetic allegory for spiritual unfaithfulness. In Proverbs 5:19 it describes the beloved wife's breasts as a source of continual delight. In Ezekiel 23:3, 8, 21 it appears in the graphic allegory of Oholah (Samaria) and Oholibah (Jerusalem), where the fondling of breasts represents illicit political and religious alliances with Egypt and Assyria. BDB identifies it as a primitive

caressing word, suggesting an intimate, almost nursery register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: her-breasts, nipples-of-, your-nipples | es: pezones-de, pezones-de-ti, suspechos | fr: [דד], [דדיך], sa-דדיה-elle | de: [דד], [דדיה], [דדיך] Prov 5:19; Ezek 23:3; Ezek 23:8; Ezek 23:21

דָּדָה H1718 V-Hitpael-Imperf-1cs (2×)

walk slowly, move deliberately; walking in procession or with measured pace

This verb denotes slow, deliberate movement—walking at an easy pace or moving in solemn procession. The psalmist recalls leading the festival procession slowly and deliberately to the house of God. Hezekiah, after his illness, laments that he must 'walk softly' or carefully all his years because of his affliction. The verb suggests measured, intentional movement rather than rushed haste.

(2×) A verb meaning to move slowly, walk deliberately, or proceed at a measured pace. In Psalm 42:4, the Piel stem may mean 'lead slowly' in procession (though MT has Hithpael 'walk slowly'), describing the solemn movement of worshipers to the temple. In Isaiah 38:15, the Hithpael means 'I will walk softly' or 'go carefully'—Hezekiah's response to affliction, suggesting cautious, deliberate living. The New Hebrew and Aramaic cognates support the sense of leading or walking slowly, possibly in ceremonial contexts. The root contrasts with rapid movement, emphasizing controlled, intentional pacing. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-shall-walk-slowly, leading-them | es: Andaré-lentamente, los-guíaba | fr: [אדדה], conduire | de: [אדדה], leading-ihnen Ps 42:4; Isa 38:15

דְּדָן H1719a Conj-w / N-proper-fs / 3fs (10×)

Dedan — a people and trading region in Arabia, descended from Cush (or Abraham through Keturah).

Dedan appears in two genealogical lines: as a grandson of Cush through Raamah (Gen 10:7; 1 Chr 1:9) and as a grandson of Abraham through Keturah and Jokshan (Gen 25:3; 1 Chr 1:32). In the prophetic literature, Dedan is a prosperous Arabian trading community engaged in commerce with Tyre (Ezek 27:15, 20) and warned of coming judgment (Ezek 25:13; 38:13). The location is generally placed in northwestern Arabia along major caravan routes. Spanish 'Dedan,' French 'Dedan,' and German 'Dedan' all preserve the name identically, reflecting its stable identity as a geographic and ethnic designation.

Dedan (10×) The proper name Dedan, denoting both a people and their territory in Arabia, traced genealogically to Cush via Raamah (Gen 10:7) and to Abraham via Keturah (Gen 25:3). Ezekiel portrays Dedan as a merchant power trading with Tyre in saddlecloths and precious goods (Ezek 27:15, 20), while also pronouncing judgment upon the region (Ezek 25:13). The pairing with Sheba (Ezek 38:13) places Dedan squarely within the Arabian commercial network. All ten occurrences refer to the same ethno-geographic entity. DEDAN PLACE PERSON

en: Dedan, and-Dedan | es: Dedan, Dedán, y-Dedan | fr: Dedan, [דדן], [ודדן] | de: Dedan, Dedans, [דדן] Gen 10:7; Gen 25:3; 1Chr 1:9; 1Chr 1:32

דֹּדָן H1719b N-proper-ms (1×)

Dedan (place/people name, Arabian trading group, likely a textual variant for Rhodes in Ezekiel 27)

A name occurring in Ezekiel 27:15's catalog of Tyre's trading partners, though many scholars believe this is a scribal error for 'Rhodes' (Hebrew consonants are similar). If the traditional reading 'Dedan' is retained, it refers to the Arabian trading people mentioned elsewhere as dealing in saddle blankets and other goods. The uncertainty reflects how Ezekiel 27's trade list preserves ancient commercial geography that sometimes challenges later scribes.

(1×) Ezekiel 27:15 lists Tyre's clients: 'The men of Dedan traded with you.' All four languages preserve 'Dedan,' though modern commentaries often read 'Rhodes' based on Greek versions. The confusion is understandable: both were maritime traders, and the consonantal Hebrew differs by only one letter. The multilingual uniformity reflects the traditional Masoretic text rather than the emendation. DEDAN PLACE PERSON

en: Dedan | es: Dedán | fr: Dedan | de: [דדן] Ezek 27:15

דְּדָנִי H1720 N-proper-mp (1×)

Dedanites (gentilic plural, Arabian trading caravans addressed in Isaiah's oracle)

The plural demonym for people of Dedan, an Arabian trading group, mentioned in Isaiah 21:13. The oracle addresses 'caravans of Dedanites' camping in the desert thickets, warning them of coming disaster. Dedan was a significant north Arabian trading center, and its merchants trafficked in luxury goods along the incense route. Isaiah's reference captures the disruption of normal commerce during times of military upheaval.

(1×) Isaiah 21:13 directly addresses 'O caravans of Dedanites' (literally 'traveling companies of Dedanites'), warning them to bring water to the fugitives. English and Spanish recognize the ethnic designation, while French and German preserve the Hebrew form. The context is Arabian trading networks disrupted by war, with Dedan representing the merchant caravans that would normally traverse these routes. DEDAN PLACE PERSON

en: Dedanites | es: Dedan | fr: [דדנים] | de: [דדנים] Isa 21:13

רוֹדָנִים H1721 Conj-w / N-proper-mp (2×)

Dodanim or Rodanim, descendants of Javan, possibly referring to Rhodians or people of Rhodes

This gentile plural designates descendants of Javan (Greeks) in the Table of Nations, likely referring to inhabitants of Rhodes or the surrounding islands. Genesis reads 'Dodanim' while the parallel 1 Chronicles text has 'Rodanim,' with most scholars preferring the latter as original (reflected in Septuagint's 'Rhodians'). The confusion between Hebrew letters dalet and resh explains the variant.

(2×) A gentile plural name identifying a people group descended from Javan (Ionian Greeks) in the Table of Nations. Genesis 10:4 has 'Dodanim' while 1 Chronicles 1:7 reads 'Rodanim,' with the latter likely original—referring to Rhodes or Rhodians, as supported by the Septuagint rendering. The names are graphically similar in Hebrew (ד/ר confusion), explaining the textual variation. These descendants represent one of the Aegean or Mediterranean island peoples in the Japhetic genealogy. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: and-Dodanim, and-Rodanim | es: y-Dodaním, y-Rodanim | fr: et-Dodanim, et-Rodanim | de: [ורודנים], und-Dodanim Gen 10:4; 1Chr 1:7

דָּהָב H1722 Conj-w / N-ms (23×)

Gold (Aramaic); the precious metal, used in Daniel and Ezra for golden vessels, statues, and royal ornamentation.

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew zāhāb, this noun appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. Nebuchadnezzar's statue has a head of gold (Dan 2:32), his golden image towers on the plain of Dura (Dan 3:1), and Belshazzar drinks from the golden vessels plundered from Jerusalem's temple (Dan 5:2-3). In Ezra, the word marks the gold items Cyrus restores to Israel (Ezra 5:14; 6:5) and the silver and gold donated for the rebuilt temple (Ezra 7:15-18). Across every target language — Spanish 'oro,' French 'or,' German 'Gold' — the rendering is identical to the Hebrew equivalent.

gold (Aramaic) (23×) Gold as a precious metal in Aramaic, covering royal statues (Dan 2:32; 3:1), temple vessels seized and restored (Dan 5:2-3; Ezra 5:14; 6:5), and treasure for rebuilding (Ezra 7:15-18). Both emphatic dahabā and absolute dehab denote the same substance. Spanish 'oro,' German 'Gold' confirm a single undivided sense. GOLD (PRECIOUS METAL)

en: and-gold, and-the-gold, gold | es: oro, y-el-oro, y-oro | fr: [דהב], [דהבה], [ודהב] | de: Gold, [דהבה], [ודהב] Ezra 5:14; Ezra 6:5; Ezra 7:15; Ezra 7:16; Ezra 7:18

דְּהוָא H1723 N-proper-ms (1×)
Dehaye (uncertain ethnic/place name in Ezra's list of Persian officials, possibly meaning 'that is')
An obscure term in Ezra 4:9's list of Persian officials who opposed Jerusalem's reconstruction. The text is uncertain—it may be an ethnic designation, a title, or even the Aramaic phrase 'that is' serving as a clarifying particle. The Greek renders it as 'who are,' supporting the explanatory reading. This illustrates the textual and historical difficulties in Ezra's administrative correspondence, which preserves Persian-period terminology often opaque to later readers.

(1×) Ezra 4:9 catalogues the opponents: 'the judges, the officials, the Dehaye...' Spanish renders this interpretively as '(los dehitas)' (the Dehaites), treating it as an ethnic group. English 'Dehaye' and German preserve the uncertain term. The Greek's 'who are' suggests this may not be a people-group at all but an Aramaic connector. The multilingual variation reveals the text's resistance to clear interpretation. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Dehaye | es: (los-dehitas) | fr: [דהיא] | de: [(דהיא)] Ezra 4:9

דָּהַם H1724 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)
bewildered (niphal participle, describing a warrior too stunned to act)
A participial form in Jeremiah 14:9 comparing Yahweh's apparent inaction to 'a man bewildered, a warrior unable to save.' The root conveys being stunned, confused, or paralyzed with astonishment. The prophet uses it in his anguished prayer during drought, questioning why God seems helpless. The image is deliberately shocking—Yahweh compared to a dazed, incapacitated soldier—reflecting the prayer's raw emotion.

(1×) Jeremiah 14:9's bold simile asks, 'Why should you be like a man bewildered, like a warrior who cannot save?' Spanish 'aturdido' (stunned, dazed) captures the sense well. The context is God's apparent passivity during national crisis. The root suggests being struck dumb with shock. French and German preserve the Hebrew, possibly uncertain of this rare vocabulary, while English and Spanish grasp the paralysis imagery. AMAZEMENT AND ASTONISHMENT
en: bewildered | es: aturdido | fr: [נדהם] | de: [נדהם] Jer 14:9

דָּהַר H1725 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)
galloping (participle, describing the rushing of warhorses in battle)
An onomatopoetic participle capturing the sound and motion of charging cavalry in Nahum's vision of Nineveh's fall (Nahum 3:2). The word conveys the thundering rush of horses at full gallop, contributing to the passage's vivid soundscape of battle: cracking whips, rumbling wheels, galloping horses. The term appears only here, its sound (doher) suggesting the drumbeat of hooves. Ancient readers likely heard the word's sonic force.

(1×) Nahum 3:2 piles up battle sounds: 'The crack of whip! The rumble of wheel! Galloping horse!' Spanish adds an exclamation point ('galopando!'), matching the staccato Hebrew. French 'galoper' and English 'galloping' capture the rushing motion. The participial form suggests continuous action—this is the chaotic soundscape of urban warfare, with cavalry pounding through streets in Nineveh's final hours. RUNNING AND RACING
en: galloping | es: galopando! | fr: galoper | de: [דהר] Nah 3:2

דַּהֲרָה H1726 N-fpc (2×)
galloping, dashing; the sound or action of horses charging at full speed
This feminine plural noun captures the galloping or dashing of horses, specifically cavalry charges. It appears only in Deborah's song, where the repetition 'galloping, galloping' intensifies the image of pounding hoofbeats as enemy horsemen flee in panic. The doubling creates an onomatopoetic effect, echoing the rhythmic thunder of horses at full gallop.

(2×) A noun (plural construct) meaning gallopings, dashings, or charges, specifically referring to the pounding movement of horses at full speed. Judges 5:22 uses intensive repetition: 'from the galloping, galloping of his steeds'—the doubled noun creates a drumbeat effect mimicking the sound of hoofbeats. The term derives from a root meaning 'rush' or 'dash,' and the context is Sisera's fleeing cavalry. The multilingual evidence ('galopar,' 'galloping') consistently captures the rapid, rhythmic motion of charging horses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: -the-galloping-of, from-the-galloping | es: del-galopar, galopar-de | fr: -le-galloping-de, de-le-galloping | de: -der-galloping-von, von-der-galloping Judg 5:22

דּוּב H1727 Conj-w | V-Hifil-Prtcpl-fp (1×)
and causing soul to pine (hiphil participle, diseases that waste away the life force)
A participial phrase in the Levitical curses (Leviticus 26:16) describing diseases that cause the soul or life to waste away. The imagery is of consumption, wasting illness that drains vitality. The hiphil causative form emphasizes that these afflictions actively produce the wasting effect—they're not mere sickness but life-destroying plagues. The covenant curses use visceral, physical imagery to depict covenant breakdown's consequences.

(1×) Leviticus 26:16 threatens disobedient Israel: 'I will bring upon you... diseases causing the soul to pine away.' Spanish 'hacen languidecer' (they make languish/waste) captures the causative sense well. The phrase combines 'soul' (nephesh, life-force) with wasting verbs, suggesting consumptive diseases. English, French, and German all preserve the 'soul/life pining away' imagery, recognizing this as terminal illness, not mere discomfort. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS
en: and-causing-soul-to-pine | es: y-hacen-languidecer | fr: et-causing-âme-à-pine | de: und-causing-Seele-zu-pine Lev 26:16

דַּוָּג H1728 Prep-l | N-mp (2×)
fishermen, fishers; those who catch fish for livelihood
This plural noun designates fishermen or those engaged in fishing. Isaiah's oracle against Egypt laments that 'the fishermen will mourn' when the Nile fails. Jeremiah's judgment oracle declares God will send for 'many fishermen' to catch the people of Judah. Ezekiel envisions fishermen standing along the shores of the healed Dead Sea. The term consistently refers to the occupation of fishing.

(2×) A masculine plural noun meaning fishermen or fishers—those who fish for a living. The term appears with variant spellings: Isaiah 19:8 and Ezekiel 47:10 have 'dayagim' (Qere), while Jeremiah 16:16 shows both Ketiv ('davagim' or 'dawagim') and Qere ('dayagim') forms. All refer to professional fishermen affected by or participating in divine judgment and restoration scenarios. The root relates to 'fish' (dag), making this a clear occupational designation. Translations consistently render it as 'fishermen' or 'fishers.' AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12467 WITH 7 SENSES
en: [K], fishermen | es: [para-pescadores], pescadores | fr: [[לדוגים]], pêcheur | de: [[לדוגים]], [דוגים] Jer 16:16; Ezek 47:10

דּוּגָה H1729 N-fs (1×)
of fish (construct noun in phrase 'boats of fishing,' describing fish transport vessels)
A term in Amos 4:2's metaphor for Israel's coming captivity, where Yahweh promises to take them away 'in boats of fishing' (or 'fish boats,' 'fishing vessels'). The imagery is of fish being hauled off in fishermen's boats, a humiliating comparison for captured people. The parallel line mentions 'hooks,' completing the fishing metaphor. The phrase appears only here, making its precise nuance uncertain—is it boats used for fishing, or boats for transporting fish?

(1×) Amos 4:2 warns Samaria's elite women: 'They will take you away... in boats of fishing.' Spanish 'pesca' (fishing) recognizes the maritime imagery. The context suggests fish-transport rather than fishing boats per se—the people themselves are the catch being hauled away. French 'pêche' and English 'of fish' maintain the construct relationship. The metaphor reduces proud nobles to dead fish in fishmongers' boats. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-fish | es: pesca | fr: pêche | de: [דוגה] Amos 4:2

דּוֹד H1730 N-msc / 2ms (61×)
Beloved or lover (especially in Song of Solomon); a paternal uncle; love or caresses as an abstract noun.
Dod is one of those Hebrew words whose semantic range spans the deeply intimate and the solidly familial. In the Song of Solomon it is the woman's signature word for her lover – 'my beloved' (dodi) – recurring over twenty-five times with an intensity that finds echoes in Arabic habib and Hindi preetam. Yet the same root designates a father's brother in legal texts like Leviticus, where Hindi renders it chacha and Swahili mjomba, kinship terms with no romantic overtone at all. In its third sense, the plural dodim becomes an abstract noun for love or caresses, as in Proverbs 7:18 and Song 1:2.

1. beloved, lover (35×) A beloved person, romantic lover, or darling. This is the dominant sense, concentrated almost entirely in Song of Solomon, where the woman addresses her partner as dodi ('my beloved') in passages like Song 1:13-14, 2:3, and 2:8-10. Cross-linguistic evidence confirms the romantic register: Spanish renders it 'amado,' Hindi uses 'प्रीतम' (preetam, a poetic term for a lover), Arabic 'حَبِيب' (habib), Korean '사랑하는 자,' and Swahili 'mpenzi.' The consistency across these unrelated language families underscores that the romantic connotation is unmistakable in context. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS
en: my-beloved, to-my-beloved | es: Mi-amado, a-mi-amado, amado-mío | fr: Mon-bien-aimé, de-mon-bien-aimé!, mon-bien-aimé | de: mein-Geliebter, zu-mein-Geliebter Song 1:13; Song 1:14; Song 1:16; Song 2:3; Song 2:8

2. uncle, father's brother (18×) A paternal uncle or close male kinsman. This sense appears in legal and narrative material: Leviticus 10:4 (Uzziel the uncle of Aaron), Leviticus 20:20 and 25:49 (laws about a kinsman's obligations), and 1 Samuel 10:14-16 (Saul's uncle questioning him). The multilingual evidence draws a sharp line from the romantic sense: Spanish gives 'tío,' Hindi 'चाचा' (chacha, specifically a father's brother), Arabic ʿ (paternal uncle), and Swahili 'mjomba' or 'baba mdogo' – all precise kinship terms that leave no romantic ambiguity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: his-uncle, my-uncle, the-uncle-of | es: mi-tío, su-pariente, su-tío | fr: David, [דד], [דדן] | de: David, Geliebter, [דדי] Lev 10:4; Lev 20:20; Lev 25:49; Num 36:11

3. love, lovemaking (8×) Love, caresses, or lovemaking as an abstract noun, typically in the plural form dodim. Proverbs 7:18 invites 'let us take our fill of love (dodim),' while Song 1:2 declares 'your love (dodekha) is better than wine.' Spanish distinguishes this with the plural 'amores,' Hindi with 'प्रेम' (prem, the concept of love), and Swahili with 'upendo' (love as a state). The shift from a concrete person (sense 1) to an abstract quality is marked both by the plural morphology and by the translators' consistent choice of abstract nouns rather than personal epithets. LOVE (ABSTRACT NOUN)
en: love, my-loves, your-loves | es: amores, mis-amores, tus-amores | fr: [דדים], mes-amours, tes-amours | de: Geliebter, [דדים] Prov 7:18; Song 1:2; Song 1:4; Song 4:10

דּוּד H1731 Prep-b (7×)
A pot or kettle for cooking, or a basket for carrying produce such as figs; context determines which vessel is meant.
Depending on context, this noun refers either to a cooking pot or to a carrying basket. As a cooking vessel, it appears alongside synonyms like parur and qallachath in the account of priestly sacrificial practice at Shiloh (1 Sam 2:14) and the Passover preparations under Josiah (2 Chr 35:13). As a basket, it features prominently in Jeremiah's vision of two baskets of figs set before the temple (Jer 24:1-2), and in the grim detail of severed heads carried in baskets (2 Kgs 10:7). The Spanish and English traditions consistently distinguish these two senses, translating 'caldero/kettle' versus 'cesta/basket.'

1. basket (4×) A basket or open container used for transporting goods. In Jeremiah 24:1-2, two baskets (dudim) of figs—one good, one rotten—serve as a prophetic sign. In 2 Kings 10:7, the same word describes the baskets into which the heads of Ahab's seventy sons are placed. The multilingual evidence converges strongly: English 'basket,' Spanish 'cesta/canasta,' and Arabic equivalents all point to a carrying vessel rather than a cooking one. Psalm 81:7 (Eng. 81:6) may refer to clay-brick baskets borne during Egyptian servitude. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: The-basket, and-the-basket, from-the-basket | es: La-cesta, de-cesta, en-las-canastas | fr: [הדוד], [והדוד], dans-baskets | de: [הדוד], [והדוד], in-baskets 2Kgs 10:7; Ps 81:6; Jer 24:2

2. pot, caldron, kettle (3×) A cooking pot, caldron, or kettle used for boiling food. In 1 Samuel 2:14, the priest's servant thrusts a flesh-fork into the pot (baddud) to claim the offering meat, listed alongside parur, qallachath, and kiyyor as cooking vessels. In 2 Chronicles 35:13, the Passover offerings are boiled in dudim alongside pots and pans. Job 41:20 uses the image of a boiling pot to describe Leviathan's breath. Spanish 'caldero' and English 'kettle/caldron' confirm the cooking-vessel sense. COOKING POT CALDRON
en: and-in-the-kettles, into-the-caldron, like-a-pot | es: como-olla, en-el-caldero, y-en-los-calderos | fr: [ובדודים], comme-כדוד, dans-le-caldron | de: [ובדודים], [כדוד], hinein-der-caldron 1Sam 2:14; 2Chr 35:13; Job 41:20

דָּוִד H1732 Prep-b / N-proper-ms (1075×)
David – Israel's second and greatest king, son of Jesse, ancestor of the Messiah
David (dawid) is the proper name of Israel's paradigmatic king, the shepherd-boy from Bethlehem anointed by Samuel (1 Sam 16:13) who united the tribes, captured Jerusalem, and received the dynastic promise of an everlasting throne (2 Sam 7:12-16). Possibly meaning 'beloved one,' the name occurs 1,075 times across Ruth, Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, Psalms, and the Prophets – testimony to David's outsized role in biblical theology. The spelling alternates between dawid (earlier books) and dawid (later books, Chronicles), but no semantic distinction exists. Every target language preserves the name unchanged: David in English, Spanish, French, and German alike.

David (proper name) (1075×) The proper name of Israel's second king, son of Jesse, anointed at Bethlehem (1 Sam 16:13), conqueror of Jerusalem, recipient of the eternal dynastic covenant (2 Sam 7), and traditional author of the Psalms. The name's 1,075 occurrences are split across variant spellings (dawid / dawid) and prepositional prefixes, but cross-lingual evidence is unanimous – every language renders it simply as 'David' – confirming a single undifferentiated proper-noun sense with no polysemy. PERSONAL NAMES
en: David | es: David | fr: David | de: David, Geliebter Ruth 4:17; 1Sam 16:13; 1Sam 16:20; 1Sam 16:22; 1Sam 17:20

דֹּדָה H1733 N-fsc / 2ms (3×)
aunt—the father's sister or father's brother's wife
This feminine noun denotes an aunt, specifically within the father's family line. Exodus 6:20 records that Amram married his aunt Jochebed (his father's sister), the mother of Moses and Aaron. Leviticus 18:14 and 20:20 prohibit sexual relations with one's aunt (the father's brother's wife). The word derives from dod ('uncle, beloved') and marks female relatives in the paternal line. These laws reflect Israel's incest prohibitions, defining the degrees of kinship within which marriage and sexual relations were forbidden.

(3×) Aunt, specifically the father's sister or the father's brother's wife. Exodus 6:20 identifies Jochebed as Amram's aunt (dodato, 'his aunt'), whom he married (before the Levitical law). Leviticus 18:14 prohibits approaching 'your aunt' (dodat-ka), the father's brother's wife. Leviticus 20:20 forbids lying with 'his aunt' (dodato). Cross-linguistic glosses are consistent: English 'his aunt/your aunt/aunt,' Spanish 'su tía/tu tía,' French 'son tante/aunt-ton/aunt-son,' German 'sein aunt/dein aunt.' The possessive suffixes (-o, -ka) indicate whose aunt. This is kinship terminology for purity and marriage law. WOMAN AND WIFE

en: aunt-his, aunt-your, his-aunt | es: su-tía, tu-tía | fr: aunt-son, aunt-ton, son-tante | de: aunt-dein, aunt-sein, sein-aunt Exod 6:20; Lev 18:14; Lev 20:20

דּוֹדוֹ H1734 N-proper-ms (6×)

Dodo; a Hebrew personal name meaning 'his beloved,' borne by several men in the period of the judges and David

A personal name meaning 'his beloved' or possibly connected to a divine epithet. It is borne by at least three individuals: the grandfather of the judge Tola from the tribe of Issachar (Judg 10:1); the father of Eleazar, one of David's three mighty warriors (2 Sam 23:9; 1 Chr 11:12); and the father of Elhanan, another of David's warriors (2 Sam 23:24; 1 Chr 11:26). The ketiv-qere variation between דֹּדִי and דּוֹדוֹ in 2 Samuel 23:9 reflects scribal transmission of this name.

Dodo (proper name) (6×) A proper masculine name (דּוֹדוֹ, Dodo) meaning 'his beloved,' possibly with theophoric overtones connecting to a divine name 'Dod' attested in Moabite inscriptions. Spanish renders it as 'Dodo' or 'Dodó' (with accent), while English, French, and German all use 'Dodo.' The name is associated with the military-heroic milieu of the judges and David's mighty men. The ketiv reading דֹּדִי at 2 Samuel 23:9 versus qere דּוֹדוֹ (paralleled in 1 Chr 27:4 as דּוֹדַי) shows the fluid orthography typical of proper names in transmission. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Dodo, [k] | es: (Dodo), Dodo, Dodó | fr: Dodo, [k], [דודו] | de: Dodo, [k], [דודו] Judg 10:1; 2Sam 23:9; 2Sam 23:24; 1Chr 11:12

דּוֹדָוָהוּ H1735 N-proper-ms (1×)

Dodavahu (personal name meaning 'beloved of Yahweh,' father of the prophet Eliezer)

A theophoric personal name appearing once (2 Chronicles 20:37), identifying the father of Eliezer who prophesied against Jehoshaphat's ill-fated alliance with Ahaziah. The name means 'beloved of Yahweh' or 'Yahweh loves,' a common onomastic pattern. The Septuagint variants show uncertainty about the exact form, but the theophoric element is clear. The prophet's message proved true when the joint naval venture shipwrecked.

(1×) Second Chronicles 20:37 introduces the prophet: 'Eliezer son of Dodavahu of Mareshah.' Spanish shortens to 'Dodava,' while French and German preserve the fuller Hebrew orthography. The name's meaning ('Yah's beloved') is ironic given that his son prophesies against the king's policy. Across languages, the name functions as pure identification, its etymology secondary to its role in validating Eliezer's credentials. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Dodavahu | es: Dodava | fr: [דדוהו] | de: [דדוהו] 2Chr 20:37

דּוּדָאִים H1736 Art / N-mp (7×)

Mandrakes—the aromatic fruit of Mandragora officinarum, believed to promote fertility and desire; once used for 'baskets' in Jer 24:1.

Almost always referring to the mandrake plant (Mandragora officinarum), whose fragrant, fleshy fruit was prized in the ancient Near East as an aphrodisiac and fertility aid. The word enters the biblical narrative memorably in Genesis 30:14-16, where Reuben finds mandrakes in the wheat harvest and Rachel bargains with Leah for them, hoping they will help her conceive. Song of Songs 7:14 celebrates their intoxicating fragrance. German 'Liebesapfel' (love-apple) beautifully captures the folk belief embedded in the Hebrew. One occurrence in Jeremiah 24:1 appears to be a homographic form meaning 'baskets,' likely from a separate root.

1. mandrakes, love-apples (6×) The mandrake plant or its fruit, associated with love and fertility. In Genesis 30:14-16, Reuben gathers mandrakes during the wheat harvest and Rachel negotiates with Leah for them—an episode rich with the ancient belief that mandrakes promote conception. Song of Songs 7:14 invokes their scent as an image of romantic desire. The multilingual evidence is remarkably consistent: Spanish 'mandragoras,' French 'mandragores,' and German 'Liebesapfel' (love-apple) all preserve the plant identification and its erotic connotation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-mandrakes-of, mandrakes, mandrakes-of | es: Las-mandrágoras, con-mandrágoras-de, de-mandrágoras-de | fr: Les-mandragores, avec-mandragores-de, de-mandragores-de | de: Liebesäpfel, [הדודאים], die-Liebesäpfel Gen 30:14; Gen 30:15; Gen 30:16

2. baskets (homographic or contextual variant) (1×) A rare homographic form appearing only in Jeremiah 24:1, where the consonantal spelling dudaey is used in the construct 'baskets of figs' rather than 'mandrakes.' English 'baskets-of,' Spanish 'cestas-de,' and Arabic cognates converge on a container meaning here. BDB treats this as a form related to dud (H1731, pot/basket) rather than the mandrake word, and the context—a prophetic vision of fig baskets before the temple—confirms the container sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: baskets-of | es: cestas-de | fr: [דודא] | de: [דודא] Jer 24:1

דֹּדַי H1737 N-proper-ms (1×)

Dodai (personal name, variant of Dodo, an officer in David's administration)

A variant form of the name Dodo, appearing in 1 Chronicles 27:4 to identify one of David's military division commanders. The name means 'his beloved' or perhaps 'beloved one.' This is the same person called Dodo in other lists of David's mighty men, showing the fluidity of Hebrew spelling in proper names. The Chronicler's administrative lists preserve this variant form.

(1×) First Chronicles 27:4 lists 'Dodai the Ahohite' as one of the twelve monthly division commanders. The name appears uniformly in most languages (English, Spanish: Dodai), with French and German preserving Hebrew spelling. The context is bureaucratic—monthly roster of 24,000-man divisions. The name's root meaning ('beloved') is common in Hebrew onomastics, marking family affection rather than theological claim. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Dodai | es: Dodai | fr: [דודי] | de: [דודי] 1Chr 27:4

דָּוָה H1738 V-Qal-Inf / 3fs (1×)

her sickness (construct infinitive, referring to menstrual impurity period)

An infinitive construct in Leviticus 12:2, part of the purity laws concerning childbirth. The phrase 'in the days of her sickness of her impurity' refers to the menstrual period, using 'sickness' (davah) as a euphemism for the monthly flow considered ritually unclean. The text establishes that a woman after childbirth has similar impurity status to her menstrual period. The terminology is clinical, using standard priestly vocabulary for ritual states.

(1×) Leviticus 12:2 sets the baseline: 'she shall be unclean as in the days of her sickness of her impurity.' Spanish 'su enfermedad' (her sickness), French 'sa maladie,' and German 'ihr Krankheit' all preserve the euphemistic 'sickness' terminology for menstruation. The consistency across languages shows how translators recognize the priestly idiom for ritual impurity, not actual illness. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: her-sickness | es: su-enfermedad | fr: sa-maladie | de: ihr-Krankheit Lev 12:2

דָּוֶה H1739 Conj-w (5×)

faint, sick, unwell; menstruous, in a state of menstrual impurity

An adjective describing a state of physical weakness, illness, or ritual impurity from menstruation. In Lamentations it conveys deep emotional and spiritual faintness: Jerusalem's heart is faint (1:13), and Zion's eyes grow dim (5:17). In the Levitical purity laws, the feminine form describes a woman during menstruation (Lev 15:33; 20:18). Isaiah 30:22 uses it metaphorically, comparing the rejection of idols to casting away something unclean. The convergence of physical debility and ritual impurity in a single term reflects the Hebrew holistic view of bodily and spiritual wholeness.

(5×) Faint, sick, languishing. Used of emotional or spiritual exhaustion, as in Lam 1:13 where Jerusalem is left desolate and faint, and

Lam 5:17 where the heart is sick with grief. Spanish 'enfermo' (sick) and French 'malade' confirm the general illness sense. The parallelism with shomemah (desolate) in Lam 1:13 underscores the totality of debilitation. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: and-the-faint, faint, menstruating | es: enferma, enfermo, inmundicia | fr: et-le-faint, malade, menstruating | de: [דוה], krank, menstruating Lev 15:33; Lev 20:18; Isa 30:22; Lam 1:13; Lam 5:17

הוּחַ H1740 V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp (5×)

to rinse, wash off, cleanse by rinsing; figuratively, to wash away guilt

A verb in the Hiphil stem meaning to rinse or cleanse by washing, used both for ritual purification and figurative moral cleansing. In the temple context, sacrificial victims were rinsed at the lavers before offering (Ezek 40:38; 2 Chr 4:6). Isaiah 4:4 elevates the image to describe God washing away the filth and bloodstains of Jerusalem's daughters by a spirit of judgment and burning. The Aramaic Aphel cognate confirms the causative 'cause to be washed' meaning. Note that in Jer 51:34 the Qere reading redirects to nadah (drive away), a separate root.

(5×) To rinse, wash clean, cleanse by rinsing water. Used literally for rinsing sacrificial animals at temple lavers (Ezek 40:38; 2 Chr 4:6) and figuratively for divine cleansing of guilt and moral impurity (Isa 4:4). Spanish 'enjuagaban' (they rinsed) captures the ritual washing sense. The Aramaic Aphel and Assyrian diku confirm the causative rinsing meaning. Jer 51:34 is textually disputed, with the Qere redirecting to nadah (expel). WASHING AND BATHING

en: (he-expelled-me), [ketiv:he-expelled-me], they-rinse | es: [kethiv], enjuagaban, haya-limpiado | fr: [(הדיחני)], [[הדיחנו]], [ידיח] | de: [(הדיחני)], [[הדיחנו]], [ידיח] 2Chr 4:6; Isa 4:4; Jer 51:34; Ezek 40:38

דַּוַי H1741 N-ms (2×)

illness, languishing, sickness; the state of being sick or weakened by disease

This noun denotes illness, sickness, or languishing—the state of being physically weakened or diseased. The psalmist speaks of God sustaining him on his 'bed of illness.' Job uses it metaphorically, comparing his sufferings to disease in his food—something loathsome and repulsive. The term emphasizes the debilitating, weakening aspect of sickness.

(2×) A noun meaning illness, sickness, or languishing condition. Psalm 41:3 (English 41:4) uses it in construct: 'bed of languishing/illness,' describing physical sickness that confines one to bed. Job 6:7 employs it more obscurely: 'they are like disease in my food' (or 'loathsome as my food'), using illness as a metaphor for repulsive suffering. The term derives from a root suggesting weakness or faintness, and emphasizes the debilitating nature of disease rather than specific symptoms. The Syriac cognate confirms the sense of sickness or weakness. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: are-like-loathsome-food, illness | es: como-enfermedad-de, enfermedad | fr: comme-כדוי, langueur | de: [כדוי], illness Job 6:7; Ps 41:3

דַּוַי H1742 Adj-ms (3×)

faint—describing the heart sick with grief, sorrow, or distress

This adjective describes a heart that has become faint or sick from distress. Isaiah 1:5 asks why Israel continues in rebellion when the whole heart is 'faint' (davvay). Jeremiah 8:18 laments 'my heart is faint (davvay) within me' over the people's calamity. Lamentations 1:22 speaks of sighing with a faint heart. The word appears only with 'heart' (lev), indicating emotional and spiritual exhaustion rather than mere physical weakness. It captures the heavy, sick feeling of a heart overwhelmed by prolonged grief or the weight of sin.

(3×) Adjective meaning faint or sick, used exclusively with 'heart' (lev) to describe emotional/spiritual exhaustion. Isaiah 1:5 uses it in rebuke: 'the whole heart is faint' (kal-levav davvay), parallel to 'the whole head is sick.' Jeremiah 8:18 and Lamentations 1:22 both express personal anguish: 'my heart is faint within me' (alai libi davvay). Cross-linguistic glosses: English 'faint/is faint,' Spanish 'enfermo/desfalleciente' (sick/fainting), French and German use placeholder brackets. The word always modifies 'heart,' emphasizing the inner collapse of strength under sorrow, affliction, or the burden of sin. This is vocabulary of deep emotional distress. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: faint, is-faint | es: desfalleciente, está-enfermo | fr: [דוי] | de: [דוי] Isa 1:5; Jer 8:18; Lam 1:22

דּוֹךְ H1743 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

beat (qal perfect, pounding grain in a mortar)

A verb describing the processing of manna in the wilderness (Numbers 11:8). The people would gather it, then either grind it with millstones or pound it in a mortar before cooking. The term denotes the percussive action of pestle against mortar, crushing the grain-like substance. This parallels ancient food preparation techniques still used for spices and grains. The mundane detail grounds the miraculous manna in actual culinary practice.

(1×) Numbers 11:8 describes manna preparation: 'The people... ground it in mills or beat it in a mortar.' The verb appears in parallel with 'grind,' differentiating two processing methods. Spanish 'machacaron' (they pounded/crushed) captures the percussive action. English 'beat' and the uniform verb across languages suggests everyone recognized this as mortar-and-pestle work, turning the flaky manna into flour or paste for baking. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: beat | es: machacaron | fr: beat | de: beat Num 11:8

דּוּכִיפַת H1744 Art / N-fs (2×)

hoopoe, a crested bird listed among unclean birds in Levitical law

This noun designates the hoopoe, a distinctive crested bird with a long curved beak, listed among unclean birds in the dietary laws. The hoopoe (Upupa epops) is native to the Middle East and known for its striking crown of feathers. Both Leviticus and Deuteronomy include it in the catalog of birds Israelites were forbidden to eat.

(2×) A feminine noun identifying the hoopoe, a specific bird species classified as ritually unclean. Leviticus 11:19 and Deuteronomy 14:18 both list it among prohibited birds, typically appearing with the definite article ('the hoopoe'). The bird is likely Upupa epops, recognized by ancient versions (Septuagint, Vulgate, Saadia) as the hoopoe. Some scholars suggest the name may be of Egyptian origin. The hoopoe's distinctive appearance and habits made it easily identifiable in the ancient world, and it remains common in Israel today. FLYING AND FLIGHT

en: and-the-hoopoe, the-hoopoe | es: la-abubilla, y-la-abubilla | fr: et-le-hoopoe, le-hoopoe | de: der-hoopoe, und-der-hoopoe Lev 11:19; Deut 14:18

דּוּמָה H1745 N-fs (2×)

silence, the realm of the dead; the stillness of Sheol

This feminine noun means silence, specifically the silence of death or the grave. The psalmist contrasts the living who praise God with the dead who 'go down to silence.' Another psalm warns that without God's help, he would dwell 'in silence'—a poetic term for Sheol. The word evokes the eternal stillness of the grave, where no voice rises in praise.

(2×) A noun meaning silence, used as a poetic designation for Sheol or the realm of the dead. Psalm 94:17 states 'my soul would soon dwell in silence,' using silence as a synonym for death or Sheol. Psalm 115:17 declares 'the dead do not praise the LORD, nor any who go down to silence,' contrasting living worshipers with silent corpses. The term emphasizes the cessation of speech, praise, and all vocal activity in death. Some scholars also see it in Isaiah 21:11 ('oracle of silence'), though that may refer to Dumah as a place name. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8275 WITH 8 SENSES

en: in-silence, silence | es: silencio | fr: silence | de: in-silence, silence Ps 94:17; Ps 115:17

דּוּמָה H1746 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)
Dumah; a son of Ishmael, a Judahite city, and a cryptic name for Edom meaning 'silence.'
A proper name with three distinct referents woven together by the thread of silence and desolation. First, Dumah is a son of Ishmael (Gen 25:14; 1 Chr 1:30), likely connected to the oasis Dumat al-Jandal in northern Arabia. Second, it names a city in the hill country of Judah (Josh 15:52), identified with modern Daume southwest of Hebron. Third and most evocatively, Isaiah 21:11 uses Dumah as a cryptic designation for Edom, playing on the Hebrew meaning 'silence'—a prophetic pun suggesting the deathly stillness awaiting that nation.

(4×) As a personal name, a son of Ishmael listed in the Table of Nations (Gen 25:14; 1 Chr 1:30), probably associated with the important Arabian oasis Dumat al-Jandal in the region of al-Jawf. The name may also underlie the geographical and symbolic uses, as Ishmaelite tribal names often became place names across the Arabian desert routes. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Dumah, and-Dumah, and-Rumah | es: Duma, y-Duma, y-Dumah | fr: [דומה], [ודומה], et-Dumah | de: [דומה], [ודומה], und-Duma Gen 25:14; Josh 15:52; 1Chr 1:30; Isa 21:11

דּוּמִיָּה H1747 N-fs (4×)
Silence, quiet waiting, stillness; a contemplative repose of the soul before God.
A deeply devotional term describing the soul's silent, trusting stillness before God. In Psalm 62:1 the psalmist declares 'my soul waits in silence for God alone'—a posture of radical trust. Psalm 65:1 pairs silence with praise, suggesting that sometimes the most fitting worship is reverent quiet. Psalm 39:2 captures a different shade, where silence becomes painful restraint in the face of the wicked. And Psalm 22:2 uses it for the anguished absence of rest. German Ruhe ('repose') and the universal 'silence/silencio' across translations highlight the contemplative core of this word.

(4×) Silent, trusting waiting before God; a contemplative stillness of the soul expressing resignation and faith. In Psalm 62:1 it denotes the soul's quiet resting in God alone, while Psalm 65:1 pairs this silence with praise as a form of worship. Psalm 39:2 uses it for deliberate restraint—holding one's tongue even when provoked—and Psalm 22:2 describes the absence of rest or respite from grief. The word carries both the serenity of trust and the tension of endurance. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8275 WITH 8 SENSES
en: in-silence-waits, rest, silence | es: silencio | fr: silence | de: Ruhe, in-silence-wartet, mit-silence Ps 22:2; Ps 39:2; Ps 62:1; Ps 65:1

דֻּמָּם H1748 Conj-w / Adv (3×)
silence, silently—remaining quiet, either in submission or speechless awe
This noun and adverb denote silence or the state of being silent. Isaiah 47:5 commands Babylon to sit 'in silence' (dumam) in humiliation. Lamentations 3:26 affirms it is good to wait 'silently' (ve-dumam) for God's salvation. Habakkuk 2:19 mocks an idol as a 'stone of silence' (even dumam)—utterly dumb, unable to speak. The word derives from damam ('to be silent, still') and can indicate enforced silence (Babylon's shame), patient waiting (faithful endurance), or the essential muteness of lifeless objects (idol's impotence).

(3×) Silence or the adverbial 'silently,' appearing in three prophetic contexts. Isaiah 47:5 commands Babylon: 'sit in silence' (shevi dumam). Lamentations 3:26 uses it with conjunction: 'and (wait) silently' (ve-dumam) for salvation. Habakkuk 2:19 describes 'a stone of silence' (even dumam)—a mute, speechless idol. Cross-linguistic glosses: English 'in silence/silent/and be silent,' Spanish 'en silencio/muda/y guardar silencio,' French and German use 'silence' with brackets. The contexts range from commanded silence in judgment (Babylon), patient silent waiting (Lamentations), to the inherent muteness of idols (Habakkuk). This is vocabulary of quietness, whether in submission, faith, or impotence. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8275 WITH 8 SENSES
en: and-be-silent, in-silence, silent | es: en-silencio, muda, y-guardar-silencio | fr: [דומם], [ודומם], silence | de: [דומם], [ודומם] Isa 47:5; Lam 3:26; Hab 2:19

דּוֹנַג H1749 Prep-k (4×)
Wax; a soft, meltable substance used exclusively in similes of melting before God's power or fire.
Every occurrence of this word appears in a simile of melting, making it one of the most consistently figurative nouns in the Hebrew Bible. Mountains melt like wax at God's presence (Ps 97:5), the wicked perish as wax before fire (Ps 68:2), hills flow like wax at theophany (Mic 1:4), and the psalmist's heart melts like wax in anguish (Ps 22:14). Spanish cera and French cire confirm a stable, single referent. The word never appears in a literal, non-figurative context—it exists in Scripture solely as the quintessential image of what dissolves before overwhelming power.

(4×) Wax as a meltable substance, used exclusively in similes depicting dissolution before divine power or fire. Mountains melt like wax at theophany (Ps 97:5; Mic 1:4), the wicked perish as wax before flame (Ps 68:2), and the sufferer's heart turns to wax inside him (Ps 22:14). The consistent pairing with melting makes this word a stock image for helplessness and transience before God's overwhelming presence. MELT DISSOLVE
en: like-wax, wax | es: cera, como-cera, como-la-cera | fr: cire, comme-cire | de: [כדונג], wax, wie-wax Ps 22:14; Ps 68:2; Ps 97:5; Mic 1:4

דּוּץ H1750 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (1×)
leaps (qal imperfect, describing anguish dancing or skipping before the fearsome creature)
A verb in Job's description of Leviathan (Job 41:22), where even terror or anguish 'dances' or 'leaps' before this fearsome creature. The image is striking: not that terror flees, but that it cavorts or gambles before Leviathan, perhaps suggesting that even fear itself becomes playful or frantic in his presence. The root suggests rhythmic movement—dancing, leaping, perhaps trembling. This is part of Job 41's sustained portrait of Leviathan's overwhelming power.

(1×) Job 41:22 (English 41:14) says 'before him dances anguish.' Spanish 'salta' (leaps/jumps) and English 'leaps' capture the kinetic energy. The verb conveys sudden, erratic movement—terror doesn't just exist near Leviathan but performs a kind of frenzied dance. French and German preserve the Hebrew, possibly uncertain of this rare poetic vocabulary. The image contributes to the passage's hyperbolic depiction of the chaos creature. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8396 WITH 3 SENSES
en: leaps | es: salta | fr: תדוץ | de: [תדוץ] Job 41:22

דְּקַק H1751
be crushed, shattered, fall to pieces; Aramaic verb describing violent destruction
This Aramaic verb appears in Daniel's visions, describing kingdoms crushed by stones or beasts trampling everything underfoot. The vocabulary fits apocalyptic imagery—empires shattered completely, reduced to fragments. Both passive forms (being crushed) and active causative forms (crushing others) appear, painting pictures of total destruction. Daniel's statue of human history gets pulverized by a divine stone; successive beasts devour and break in pieces. The term's violence underscores the comprehensive nature of divine judgment against earthly powers.

דּוּר H1752 Prep-m / V-Qal-Inf (1×)
rather than dwell (qal infinitive in comparative construction, choosing temple service over wickedness)
An infinitive in Psalm 84:10, expressing the psalmist's preference: 'I would rather stand at the threshold of God's house than dwell in the tents of wickedness.' The verb is from the root for 'dwell, sojourn,' here in a comparative construction. The statement prioritizes even lowly temple service (doorkeeping) over comfortable residence among the wicked. The sentiment reflects the psalm's broader theme: longing for God's presence exceeds all other values.

(1×) Psalm 84:10 makes the famous declaration: 'I would rather be a doorkeeper... than dwell in the tents of wickedness.' Spanish 'que morar' (than to dwell) and French 'de séjourner' both preserve the dwelling/sojourning sense. The infinitival form in a comparison clause appears consistently across languages. The theological point—proximity to God trumps worldly comfort—resonates across the translations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: rather-than-dwell | es: que-morar | fr: de-séjourner | de: rather-als-wohnen Ps 84:10

דּוּר H1753 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (13×)

Aramaic verb meaning 'to dwell, reside'; also used as a substantival participle, 'dwellers, inhabitants'

An Aramaic verb meaning 'to dwell' or 'to live (in a place),' found exclusively in Daniel. It appears in finite forms describing animals dwelling in a great tree's shade (Dan 4:9, 18) and as a substantival participle meaning 'dwellers' or 'inhabitants,' typically in the majestic phrase 'all dwellers of the earth' (Dan 4:32). The Ketiv-Qere variation between darin and dayrin reflects Aramaic dialectal spelling differences but carries no semantic distinction. Translation evidence is remarkably uniform: Spanish habitan/habitantes, French habiter, German wohnen — all pointing to a single residential concept.

dwell, reside (13×) To dwell or reside in a place, encompassing both finite verbal uses ('dwell, dwelt') and the substantival participle ('dwellers, inhabitants'). In Dan 4:9 and 4:18, beasts of the field and birds of heaven dwell (tedur, yedurun) in and upon a cosmic tree. In Dan 2:38, 3:31, 4:32, and 6:26, the participial form darey/darin appears in the phrase 'all dwellers of the earth,' expressing universal habitation. Cross-linguistic glosses converge without exception: spa habitan/moraban, fra habiter, deu wohnen — confirming a single undifferentiated sense of residential dwelling. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (qere:and-dwellers-of), (qere:dwell), (qere:dwellers-of) | es: (habitan), (los-habitantes-de), (moraban) | fr: et-habiter, habiter | de: und-wohnen, wohnen Dan 2:38; Dan 4:1; Dan 4:12

דּוּר H1754a V-Qal-Imp-ms (2×)

circle, ball; a round shape or circular formation

This noun denotes something circular or round—either a circle or a ball. Isaiah uses it metaphorically when God threatens to whirl someone away 'like a ball' into a distant land—an image of judgment and exile. The term also appears in a disputed text where God camps 'in a circle' around Jerusalem, though textual variants and interpretations differ. The basic sense involves roundness or circular shape.

(2×) A noun meaning circle, ball, or round object. In Isaiah 22:18, God will 'whirl you around and around and throw you like a ball into a wide land'—a vivid image of being cast away in judgment. Isaiah 29:3 is textually uncertain, possibly meaning 'I will camp in a circle around you' (though some read 'like David'). Ezekiel 24:5 may use it for 'pile' or 'heap' (of bones under a pot), though this is disputed. The root suggests circular motion or shape, and Talmudic usage confirms the meaning 'ball.' HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: in-a-circle, pile-of- | es: como-círculo, pila-de | fr: [כדור], cercle | de: [דור], [כדור] Isa 29:3; Ezek 24:5

כַּדּוּר H1754b Prep (1×)

like the ball (simile marker + noun, describing exile as being hurled like a ball into distance)

A prepositional phrase in Isaiah 22:18, where Yahweh promises to hurl Shebna 'like a ball' into a broad land. The image is of violent, spinning ejection—Shebna will be thrown away like a child's toy or athletic implement, tumbling helplessly into foreign exile. The simile captures both the violence and the contemptuous dismissal. The word may also mean 'circle' or 'sphere,' but the context supports the ball imagery.

(1×) Isaiah 22:18 pronounces judgment on the steward Shebna: 'He will surely wind you round and round, and throw you like a ball into a wide land.' Spanish 'como pelota' (like a ball) and English preserve the simile. The Hebrew's brevity ('like-the-ball') is maintained across languages, emphasizing the ignominious image of being hurled away like a plaything. HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: like-the-ball | es: como-pelota | fr: [כדור] | de: [כדור] Isa 22:18

דּוֹר H1755 Prep / N-ms (168×)

A generation or age: the people living in a given period, successive posterity, or the formula 'from generation to generation' expressing perpetuity.

One of Hebrew's most rhythmically powerful words, dor carries both the concreteness of a living cohort and the abstraction of endless time. When Moses condemns 'this crooked and perverse generation' (Deut 32:5), dor means the actual people standing before him. But in the cultic formula ledorotekhem ('throughout your generations,' Gen 17:9; Exod 12:14), it stretches forward into perpetuity — every future cohort inheriting the covenant obligation. The distributive formula midor ledor ('from generation to generation,' Ps 33:11) compresses this into poetry. Spanish mirrors the spread beautifully: 'generacion' for the living cohort, 'generaciones vuestras' for posterity, and 'de generacion en generacion' for the perpetuity formula. The Arabic cognate dawr ('cycle, revolution') hints at the circular conception of time underlying the word.

1. generation, contemporaries (96×) A generation as a group of contemporaries — the people alive at the same time, characterized as a moral or spiritual cohort. 'This generation' may be righteous (Gen 7:1, where Noah stands alone in his generation) or wicked (Deut 32:5, 20; Ps 12:7). Often preceded by the article or a demonstrative, it functions almost like a collective noun. Spanish 'generacion' and German 'Geschlecht' consistently render this. The 96 occurrences make this the primary sense — dor as the people who share a historical moment. GENERATION AND LINEAGE

en: after-generation, and-generation, upon-generation | es: a-generación, en-generación, y-generación | fr: et-génération | de: auf-Geschlecht, nach-Geschlecht, und-Generation Exod 3:15; Exod 17:16; Deut 23:2; Deut 23:3; Deut 23:8

2. generations, posterity (50×) Successive generations, posterity — used in the plural with possessive suffixes in covenant and cultic legislation to express an obligation binding on all descendants. The formula ledorotam/ledorotekem ('throughout their/your generations') pervades Pentateuchal law: circumcision (Gen 17:7, 12), Passover (Exod 12:14), Sabbath (Exod 31:13), and priestly statutes. Spanish 'para vuestras generaciones' and German 'für ihre Geschlechter' preserve the distributive force. This sense shifts from a single living cohort to a chain of future ones. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-their-generations, for-your-generations | es: para-generaciones-vuestras, para-vuestras-generaciones, para-vuestras-generaciones: | fr: pour-leur-générations, pour-ton-générations | de: fuer-dein-Geschlechter, für-ihre-Geschlechter Gen 6:9; Gen 9:12; Gen 17:7; Gen 17:9; Gen 17:12

3. perpetuity, age after age (21×) Perpetuity, age after age — the distributive formula midor ledor or ledor vador ('from generation to generation'), expressing endless duration or the everlasting quality of God's faithfulness (Ps 100:5), his name (Exod 3:15), or his throne (Lam 5:19). Korean daedaero and Arabic min jilin ila jilin convey the same iterative pattern. This is not a demographic term but a temporal one — dor as a unit of measured eternity, each generation a beat in God's unending rhythm. GENERATION AND LINEAGE

en: for-a-generation, for-generation, from-generation | es: a-generación, de-generación, en-generación | fr: dans-génération, de-génération, et-génération | de: Generation, Geschlecht, Geschlecht- Exod 17:16; Deut 7:9; 1Chr 16:15; Ps 10:6; Ps 49:11

4. (1×) A dwelling or habitation — a rare, possibly distinct homonym appearing in Isaiah 38:12, where Hezekiah laments 'my dwelling is plucked up and removed from me like a shepherd's tent.' The English gloss 'My dwelling' stands apart from the generational senses. BDB connects this to a different root (dwr, 'to dwell, encircle'), and some scholars treat it as a separate lexeme entirely. The singular occurrence and anomalous semantics suggest either a genuine homonym or a highly metaphorical extension of the 'life-span' concept. GENERATION AND LINEAGE

en: My-dwelling | es: Mi-generación | fr: génération | de: Geschlecht Isa 38:12

דֹּאר H1756 N-proper-fs (7×)

Dor; a Canaanite coastal city in Manasseh's territory, south of Mount Carmel on the Mediterranean.

The name of an ancient Canaanite port city located on the Mediterranean coast south of Mount Carmel, within the tribal allotment of Manasseh. Known in cuneiform sources as Du'ru, Dor appears in conquest lists (Josh 11:2; 12:23) and in the record of Manasseh's failure to drive out its inhabitants (Judg 1:27). The phrase 'Naphath-Dor' (heights/coast of Dor) designates its broader district. Under Solomon, it served as one of the twelve administrative districts (1 Kgs 4:11). The modern site is identified with Tantura on the Israeli coast.

(7×) Dor, a Canaanite coastal city on the Mediterranean south of Mount Carmel, assigned to Manasseh but never fully conquered (Judg 1:27; 1 Chr 7:29). Listed among the kings defeated by Joshua (Josh 12:23) and mentioned in the northern coalition narrative (Josh 11:2). The compound Naphath-Dor or Naphoth-Dor (Josh 11:2; 12:23; 1 Kgs 4:11) refers to the surrounding district or coast-heights. Under Solomon it became an administrative center (1 Kgs 4:11). All translations consistently render 'Dor,' and the site is identified with modern Tantura along the Israeli Mediterranean coast. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7605 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Dor | es: Dor | fr: Dor, [דור] | de: Dor, [דור] Josh 11:2; Josh 12:23; Josh 17:11; Judg 1:27

דּוּרָא H1757 N-proper-fs (1×)

Dura (place name, plain near Babylon where Nebuchadnezzar erected the golden image)

A place name in Daniel 3:1, identifying the location where Nebuchadnezzar set up the massive golden image for forced worship. The 'plain of Dura' was somewhere in the Babylonian province, though the exact site is unknown. Several places in Mesopotamia bore similar names (related to 'wall' or 'enclosure' in Akkadian). The narrative emphasizes the public, accessible location—a plain where all officials could assemble.

(1×) Daniel 3:1 sets the scene: 'Nebuchadnezzar... set up the image on the plain of Dura in the province of Babylon.' English, Spanish, and most languages preserve 'Dura' uniformly. The Septuagint's 'of the enclosure' may reflect etymological interpretation. The narrative function is clear: this is a grand public space for the coerced worship ceremony that will test the three Jewish youths. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Dura | es: Dura | fr: Dodanites | de: [דורא] Dan 3:1

דּוּשׁ H1758 Conj-w / V-Qal-Imp-fs (14×)

To thresh grain; by extension, to trample or tread upon people or nations in judgment

An agricultural verb at its core, describing the physical act of threshing – separating grain from chaff by treading or beating. Cognates appear across Semitic languages (Arabic dāsa, Akkadian dāšu, Aramaic dūsh), all rooted in the same treading motion. The prophets seize this vivid farm imagery and wield it as metaphor: nations are threshed under God's judgment (Isa 25:10; Hab 3:12), and Zion herself is called to 'thresh' her oppressors (Mic 4:13). The literal and figurative senses are tightly linked, since ancient threshing literally involved trampling.

1. thresh grain (10×) The agricultural process of threshing grain, separating kernels from husks by treading or using a threshing sledge. Translations are remarkably consistent: English 'thresh,' Spanish 'trillar,' Hindi 'दाँवना,' Arabic 'دَوْس.' Deuteronomy 25:4 ('you shall not muzzle an ox while it threshes') and the scene of Ornan threshing wheat (1 Chr 21:20) anchor this literal usage. The imagery of Isaiah 28:27-28 details the careful calibration of threshing technique to the type of grain. GRASS AND VEGETATION en: and-I-will-thresh, and-thresh, for-threshing | es: en-su-trillar, estaba-trillando, lo-trilla | fr: [דש], [ירושנו], [יודש] | de: [דושם], [דש], [ודושי] Deut 25:4; Judg 8:7; 2Kgs 13:7; 1Chr 21:20; Isa 28:27

2. trample, tread upon (4×) Metaphorical trampling or treading upon, typically in contexts of divine or military judgment against people or nations. Multilingual evidence distinguishes this sense: Spanish shifts from 'trillar' to 'pisotear' (to stomp), signaling a recognized semantic distinction. Moab is trodden down 'as straw is trampled' in the mire (Isa 25:10), Habakkuk envisions God trampling nations in wrath (Hab 3:12), and even a careless ostrich may 'trample' her own eggs (Job 39:15). GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: and-shall-be-trampled, as-is-trampled, may-trample-it | es: como-se-trilla, los-pisoteará, trillas | fr: [ונדוש], [כהדוש], battre | de: [ונדוש], [כהדוש], [תדוש] Job 39:15; Isa 25:10; Hab 3:12

דּוֹשׁ H1759 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3fs / 3fse (1×)

and tread it down (Aramaic qal consecutive imperfect with suffix, beast trampling the earth)

An Aramaic verbal form in Daniel's vision of the fourth beast (Daniel 7:23), describing how it will 'tread down' or 'trample' the whole earth. The verb conveys violent crushing underfoot, fitting the beast's destructive character. The feminine suffix refers to 'the earth,' making this a picture of global domination through brutal force. The imagery of trampling echoes ancient Near Eastern conquest metaphors.

(1×) Daniel 7:23 interprets the vision: 'The fourth beast... shall devour the whole earth, tread it down, and break it in pieces.' Spanish 'la trillará' (will thresh/trample it) and French 'fouler' (to trample) capture the agricultural trampling imagery. The suffix 'it' (the earth) is consistent across languages. The verb's violence matches the beast's iron teeth and bronze claws—total, crushing domination. TRAMPLING AND TREADING en: and-tread-it-down | es: y-la-trillará | fr: et-fouler | de: [ותדושנה] Dan 7:23

דָּחָה H1760a V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (10×)

To push, thrust, drive away by force; (Nifal ptc.) outcast, banished one; (passive) be toppled, thrust down.

A verb of forceful physical impact – pushing, shoving, driving someone off their feet. In Psalm 118:13, the psalmist cries 'You pushed me hard so that I was falling,' using the infinitive absolute for emphasis. The Nifal participle becomes a poignant noun: the 'outcasts' of Israel whom God promises to gather (Isa 11:12; 56:8; Ps 147:2). In its passive forms, the verb describes being toppled or overthrown – the wicked 'thrust down' in their calamity (Prov 14:32), or a tottering wall about to collapse (Ps 62:4). Arabic daha ('to throw, propel') preserves the root's kinetic energy, while Korean 'chochyeonan ja' (the expelled one) captures the exilic overtone of the Nifal participle.

1. Qal: push, thrust, drive away (4×) Active pushing, thrusting, or driving away a person by physical force. Psalm 118:13 uses the doubled infinitive absolute for violent shoving ('you pushed me hard, to make me fall'), and Psalm 140:5 describes schemes 'to push aside my feet.' Arabic daha ('to throw, propel') and Spanish empujar both preserve the raw kinetic force of this sense. THROWING AND CASTING en: driving-away, pushing, to-push-aside | es: Empujando, empujándoles, me-empujaste | fr: [דוחה], [דחה], [דחיתני] | de: driving-weg, du-pushed-mich, pushing Ps 35:5; Ps 118:13; Ps 140:4

2. Nifal: outcast, banished one (3×) Nifal participle used as a substantive: an outcast or banished person, one who has been driven into exile. Isaiah 11:12 and 56:8 promise that God will gather 'the outcasts of Israel,' and Psalm 147:2 celebrates the same ingathering. Spanish desterrados ('exiled ones') and Korean 쫓겨난 자 ('expelled ones') both highlight the settled state of displacement rather than the act of pushing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: outcasts-of | es: a-los-desterrados-de, a-los-dispersos-de, dispersos-de | fr: [נדחי] | de: [נדחי], outcasts-of Ps 147:2; Isa 11:12; Isa 56:8

3. Nifal/Pual: be thrust down, be toppled (3×) Passive forms indicating being forcefully knocked down, overthrown, or made to totter. The wicked are 'thrust down' in their calamity (Prov 14:32), evildoers fall and 'are thrust down' unable to rise (Ps 36:12), and a leaning wall is likened to something about to be 'toppled' (Ps 62:4). Arabic yutrahu ('he is thrown down') and Spanish derribados ('knocked down') confirm the downward trajectory. THRUST DOWN TOPPLED

en: is-thrust-down, they-are-thrust-down, tottering | es: es-derribado, fueron-derribados, la-empujada | fr: [דחו], [הדחויה], ידחה | de: [ידחה], sie-sind-thrust-hinab, tottering Ps 36:12; Ps 62:3; Prov 14:32

דְּחֹח H1760b V-Nifal-Imperf-3mp (1×)

they will be driven (niphal imperfect, the wicked thrust down in darkness)

A niphal imperfect verb in Jeremiah 23:12, describing how the wicked's path will become slippery darkness and 'they will be driven' or 'thrust down' into it. The passive form suggests divine judgment—they don't merely slip but are pushed. The text may be emended from this rare root to the more common dachah (drive out), but the sense remains: forcible removal into danger and darkness as punishment for false prophecy.

(1×) Jeremiah 23:12 threatens false prophets: 'Their way shall be to them like slippery paths in the darkness; they will be driven on and fall in it.' Spanish 'serán empujados' (they will be pushed/driven) captures the forcible propulsion. The passive voice appears uniformly—these prophets won't accidentally slip but will be thrust down. French and German preserve the Hebrew, acknowledging textual uncertainty while maintaining the judgment imagery. FALLING AND FAILING

en: they-will-be-driven | es: serán-empujados | fr: [ידחו] | de: [ידחו] Jer 23:12

דַּחֲוָה H1761 Conj-w / N-fp (1×)

and entertainment (Aramaic plural noun, uncertain meaning, possibly music, dancing, or concubines)

An obscure Aramaic plural noun in Daniel 6:18, describing something King Darius rejected during his anxious night while Daniel was in the lions' den. Ancient and modern interpreters disagree: musical instruments? Dancing girls? Concubines? Food and entertainment generally? The Septuagint and other versions guessed variously. The context suggests diversions or comforts the king refused in his distress, but the precise meaning remains elusive.

(1×) Daniel 6:18 says Darius 'spent the night fasting; no entertainment was brought before him, and sleep fled from him.' Spanish 'diversiones' (entertainments) and English 'entertainment' take the broadest interpretive path. French retains 'fouler' (trample—likely a database error), while German preserves the Hebrew, acknowledging lexical uncertainty. The narrative point is clear: Darius rejected all comfort in solidarity with Daniel's peril. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: and-entertainment | es: y-diversiones | fr: et-fouler | de: [ודחון] Dan 6:18

דְּחִי H1762 Prep-m / N-ms (2×)

stumbling, being pushed down; the state or danger of falling

This noun denotes stumbling or being pushed down, appearing in two nearly identical psalms. The psalmist praises God for delivering his feet 'from stumbling'—preventing his fall into death or destruction. The term captures both the physical danger of tripping and the spiritual or mortal peril it represents.

(2×) A noun meaning stumbling or the state of being pushed/thrust down. Psalm 56:13 and 116:8 contain identical phrases: 'You have delivered... my feet from stumbling,' thanking God for preventing the psalmist from falling (whether literally or into death/disaster). The term derives from a root meaning 'thrust' or 'push,' suggesting being forcibly knocked down rather than merely losing one's footing. The preposition 'from' (min) indicates rescue or prevention from this fate. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: from-stumbling | es: de-tropiezo | fr: de-pousser | de: von-stumbling Ps 56:13; Ps 116:8

דְּחַל H1763 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (6×)

To fear, be terrified; in passive, terrifying or dreadful (Aramaic verb used in Daniel).

An Aramaic verb found exclusively in Daniel, dechal covers the full spectrum of dread in Nebuchadnezzar's court. Its passive participle describes the terrifying fourth beast (Dan 7:7, 19) and the fearsome statue of Daniel 2:31, while its active participle captures the trembling of nations before a king or before God (Dan 5:19; 6:26). In the Pael stem, a dream 'frightens' the king himself (Dan 4:5). Spanish atemorizó and terrible mirror these two directions of fear: terror inflicted and terror experienced.

1. terrifying (3×) Terrifying, dreadful (passive participle): describing something that inspires fear by its very appearance. Used of the great statue (Dan 2:31) and the fourth beast with iron teeth (Dan 7:7, 19). Spanish terrible and the terrifying quality conveyed across translations confirm a consistent sense of monstrous, awe-inducing dread. TERROR AND AWE

en: terrifying | es: era-terrible, terrible | fr: [דחיל], [דחילה] | de: [דחיל], [דחילה] Dan 2:31; Dan 7:7; Dan 7:19

2. and fearing (2×) Fearing, trembling (active participle with minqodam): the experience of dread before a powerful figure. In Dan 5:19 all peoples feared before Nebuchadnezzar; in Dan 6:26 Darius decrees trembling before Daniel's God. Spanish y temiendo ('and fearing') captures the posture of reverent or cowering fear directed toward an authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fearing | es: y-temiendo | fr: [ודחלין] | de: [ודחלין] Dan 5:19; Dan 6:26

3. and frightened me (1×) To frighten, cause fear (Pael causative): the dream actively terrified the king. Dan 4:5 uses the Pael imperfect with pronominal suffix: 'it frightened me.' Spanish y me atemorizó ('and it terrified me') preserves the causative force, marking this as the only occurrence where the verb takes an agent (the dream) acting upon the subject. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: and-it-frightened-me | es: y-me-atemorizó | fr: [וידחלנני] | de: [וידחלנני] Dan 4:5

דֻּחַן H1764 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

and millet (grain type in Ezekiel's symbolic bread recipe during siege)

A grain type mentioned in Ezekiel 4:9's list of ingredients for the prophet's siege bread. Millet was a common ancient Near Eastern grain, drought-resistant and nutritious but considered inferior to wheat. The mix of wheat, barley, beans, lentils, millet, and spelt represents scavenging whatever grains were available during food scarcity—normally, these wouldn't be combined. The recipe symbolizes the desperation of Jerusalem's coming siege.

(1×) Ezekiel 4:9 commands: 'Take wheat, barley, beans, lentils, millet, and spelt; put them into one vessel and make bread of them.' Spanish 'mijo,' French 'mil,' and English 'millet' all identify this grain uniformly. The context is famine food—mixing diverse grains that would normally be kept separate. Millet's inclusion shows the extremity: even less desirable grains must be used to survive the siege. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: and-millet | es: y-mijo | fr: et-mil | de: [ודחן] Ezek 4:9

דָּחַף H1765 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (4×)

To drive, hasten, hurry; a late Hebrew verb for being pressed or rushed along urgently.

A late Hebrew verb conveying urgent, compelled haste—the kind of rush that leaves no room for delay. In Esther 3:15 and 8:14 the royal couriers are 'driven' or 'pressed' to deliver the king's decrees with utmost speed, where the passive participle suggests they were propelled by royal authority rather than their own initiative. Esther 6:12 describes Haman hurrying home in shame after honoring Mordecai, and 2 Chronicles 26:20 depicts King Uzziah being hustled out of the temple after his leprous transgression. Spanish apresurados ('hurried') captures the urgency, while the Aramaic cognate confirms the late, imperial-period flavor of this vocabulary.

(4×) To be driven or pressed along with urgency, to hurry under compulsion. The passive participle in Esther 3:15 and 8:14 describes royal couriers dispatched in haste, propelled by decree. In Esther 6:12 Haman rushes home in humiliation, and in 2 Chronicles 26:20 the leprous Uzziah is hustled from the temple. The verb consistently implies external pressure or shame driving the movement, not voluntary speed. Its Aramaic cognate and late attestation mark it as post-exilic vocabulary. HASTE AND URGENCY

en: and-pressed, hurried, was-hurried | es: apresurados, fue-empujado, se-apresuró | fr: [דחופים], [ודחופים], [נדחף] | de: [דחופים], [ודחופים], [נדחף] 2Chr 26:20; Esth 3:15; Esth 6:12; Esth 8:14

דְּחַק H1766 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 3mp (2×)

thrust, crowd, oppress; pushing forcefully or crushing by pressure

This verb means to thrust, crowd, or press together, often with hostile intent. Joel describes the disciplined advance of locusts who don't 'jostle' each other despite their vast numbers. The book of Judges uses it of enemies who 'maltreated and oppressed' Israel, combining physical and social violence. The verb conveys forceful pushing or crushing pressure.

(2×) A verb meaning to thrust, crowd, press, or oppress. Joel 2:8 describes locusts in formation: 'they do not jostle one another,' emphasizing their orderly advance despite crowding. Judges 2:18 uses a participial form: 'their oppressors and those who crushed them,' referring to enemies who physically and politically pressed Israel. The root appears in Aramaic with similar meanings (to press, crowd, oppress), and the Arabic cognate means 'drive away' or 'remove.' The verb emphasizes forceful pressing or hostile crowding. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-their-crushers, they-crowd | es: empujan, y-sus-hostigadores | fr: et-leur-crushers, presser | de: [ודחקון], und-ihr-crushers Judg 2:18; Joel 2:8

דַּי H1767 Conj-w (39×)

Sufficiency, enough; in prepositional idioms: 'as often as, whenever' (מִדֵּי); 'according to, proportionate to' (כְּדֵי); 'like, as.'

The Hebrew noun day (דַּי) begins simply enough — 'sufficiency, enough' — but its prepositional partnerships unlock a surprising range of meaning. With the preposition מִן it becomes מִדֵּי, a temporal idiom meaning 'as often as, whenever,' seen in the annual pilgrimages of Hannah (1 Sam 1:7) and Samuel's circuit-riding (1 Sam 7:16). With כְּ it becomes כְּדֵי, 'according to, in proportion to' (Deut 25:2) or even 'like, as' (Judg 6:5). Malachi 3:10 captures the pure sense magnificently: God will pour out blessing 'until there is not enough' — that is, until his inexhaustible abundance overwhelms every measure. German genug and Spanish suficiente track the core meaning, while French assez and Hindi काफ़ी confirm the universal clarity of the concept.

1. sufficiency, enough (22×) The core nominal sense: sufficiency, enough, what is adequate for a need. Appears across diverse constructions — absolute (Mal 3:10, 'until there is no more sufficiency,' i.e., endlessly), with pronominal suffixes (דַּיָּם 'enough for them'), and with genitive complements (Exod 36:7, 'more than enough for the work'). German genug, Spanish suficiente/baste, and French assez all converge on this basic meaning. Leviticus uses it repeatedly for what the offerer 'can afford' (Lev 5:7, 12:8, 25:26). SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: and-enough, are-enough, enough | es: Y-suficiente, baste, en-vano | fr: [בדי], [וכדי], assez | de: genug, genug-fuer, genug-fuer-ihnen Exod 36:5; Exod 36:7; Lev 5:7; Lev 12:8; Lev 25:26

2. as often as, whenever (14×) The temporal-frequentative idiom מִדֵּי: 'as often as, whenever, each time.' A genuine semantic extension where the notion of sufficiency becomes iterative recurrence — 'at every sufficient interval.' English 'as often as' and Spanish cada vez que ('each time that') mark this as distinctly temporal, not quantitative. First Samuel 1:7 ('as often as she went up to the house of the LORD') and 1 Kings 14:28 ('as often as the king went into the house of the LORD') establish the pattern. French and German translations sometimes render this with the geographic name Médie/Medien, a homographic confusion with מָדַי (Media), which underscores the importance of context. TIMES AND OCCASIONS

en: As-often-as, and-from-, as-often-as | es: Cada-vez-que, cada, cada-vez-que | fr: Madaï, Médie, [מדי] | de: Medien, genug, und-genug 1Sam 1:7; 1Sam 7:16; 1Sam 18:30; 1Kgs 14:28; 2Kgs 4:8

3. according to, proportionate to (2×) The proportional prepositional idiom כְּדֵי: 'according to, in proportion to, as much as is fitting.' Deuteronomy 25:2 prescribes lashes 'according to his guilt' (כְּדֵי רִשְׁעָתוֹ), and Nehemiah 5:8 speaks of redeeming 'as much as was in us.' Spanish conforme a and German gemäss zu both carry the proportional-conformity nuance. This sense bridges sufficiency and standard — not just 'enough' but 'enough measured against a norm.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to, as-much-as | es: conforme-a | fr: [כדי], selon | de: gemaess-zu, genug Deut 25:2; Neh 5:8

4. like, as (1×) The comparative use of כְּדֵי meaning 'like, as, similar to' — attested only once, in Judges 6:5, where the Midianites came 'like locusts for multitude.' Spanish como, French comme, and Hindi जैसे all render straightforward comparison. This is the furthest semantic stretch from the root notion of sufficiency, arriving at simple similitude — perhaps via the bridge of proportionality ('to the degree of'). COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: like- | es: como | fr: comme- | de: wie- Judg 6:5

דִּי H1768 Prep-k / Pro-r (347×)

Aramaic relative/conjunction particle: who, which, that; of (genitive); because; when; where.

The Aramaic particle דִּי is the workhorse of Biblical Aramaic syntax, functioning as relative pronoun, conjunction, genitive marker, and more — all packed into two consonants. Cognate with Hebrew אֲשֶׁר and Ethiopic ዘ (za), it descends from a demonstrative root meaning 'that one,' which grammaticalized into a general subordinator. In Daniel and Ezra, דִּי stitches nearly every complex sentence together, and its versatility challenges translators: the same particle rendered 'who' in one clause becomes 'of' in the next and 'because' in the third. Spanish que and French qui capture the relative uses but require different words (de, porque, cuando) for genitive, causal, and temporal functions that דִּי handles alone.

1. relative pronoun (who/which/that) (203×) The basic relative pronoun: 'who, which, that' — introducing relative clauses that modify a preceding noun (203 occurrences). This is the primary and most frequent function, directly parallel to Hebrew אֲשֶׁר. Arabic الَّذِي/الَّتِي, Spanish que/el cual, and French qui/que all employ dedicated relative pronouns here. In Ezra 4:10-12 alone, דִּי appears repeatedly chaining relative clauses in official Aramaic correspondence. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: of, that, when | es: de, que, que-en- | fr: qui | de: welcher Ezra 4:10; Ezra 4:11; Ezra 4:12; Ezra 4:15

2. complementizer (that/so-that) (75×) The complementizer: 'that, so that' — introducing content clauses after verbs of saying, knowing, or commanding, and purpose clauses (75 occurrences). Distinguished from sense 1 because it does not modify a noun but subordinates a full clause. Arabic أَنَّ (not الَّذِي), Hindi कि, Spanish que (conjunction, not pronoun), and French que (conjonction) all use formally or functionally distinct items. Ezra 4:13-16 illustrates the causal-purpose chain: 'let it be known that... so that...' CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST

en: so-that, that | es: para-que, que | fr: de, qui | de: welcher Ezra 4:12; Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:16; Ezra 4:19

3. genitive marker (of/belonging to) (52×) The genitive marker: 'of, belonging to' — functioning like Hebrew construct state to express possession, attribution, or material relationship (52 occurrences). 'The God of heaven' (אֱלָהּ שְׁמַיָּא ...דִּי), 'the vessels of the house.' English 'of,' French de, Spanish de, and Hindi का/के/की all employ dedicated genitive particles, confirming this as a distinct syntactic function. Concentrated in Daniel 2, where divine attributes and royal possessions are described. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of, of-, that | es: de | fr: de | de: welcher Dan 2:14; Dan 2:15; Dan 2:19; Dan 2:20

4. causal conjunction (because/for) (10×) The causal conjunction: 'because, for' — introducing reason clauses that explain why something happened or is true (10 occurrences). Arabic ʾ, Hindi क्योंकि, Spanish porque, and Swahili kwa sababu all deploy specialized causal vocabulary here, clearly distinguishing this from the relative or complementizer uses. Dan 2:47 ('because you were able to reveal this mystery') is a clear example. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: because, for, for- | es: a-quien, porque, puesto-que | fr: de | de: welcher Dan 2:20; Dan 2:23; Dan 2:37; Dan 2:47; Dan 4:9

5. temporal conjunction (when/as) (5×) The temporal conjunction: 'when, as' — typically in the compound כְּדִי (ke-di, 'when, as'), introducing temporal clauses (5 occurrences). Arabic ʿ, Hindi जब, Spanish cuando, and Swahili wakati — all temporal-specific items — confirm this as a genuinely distinct usage. Dan 3:7 ('when all the peoples heard the sound of the horn') and Dan 6:10 ('when Daniel knew that the document had been signed') are representative. TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS
en: and-when, as, when | es: como, cuando, y-cuando | fr: comme-de, et-qui | de: damit, und-damit Dan 2:43; Dan 3:7; Dan 5:20; Dan 6:10; Dan 6:14

6. locative relative (where) (2×) The locative relative: 'where' — introducing place clauses (2 occurrences). In Ezra 6:1 and 6:3, דִּי means 'where' (the storehouse where treasures were deposited). Hindi जहाँ, Swahili ambapo (locative relative), and Spanish donde all employ specialized locative vocabulary, distinguishing this from the general relative sense. Though marginal in frequency, it completes the paradigm of דִּי as a universal subordinator. RELATIVE PRONOUNS
en: where | es: donde, que | fr: qui | de: welcher Ezra 6:1; Ezra 6:3

דִּיבֹן H1769 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (11×)
Dibon — a Moabite city on the King's Highway, allotted to Gad and Reuben, target of prophetic oracles Dibon (דִּיבוֹן) was a city in the tableland of Moab, about three miles north of the Arnon River on the ancient King's Highway. Israel captured it from Sihon (Num 21:30), and it was assigned to Gad and Reuben (Num 32:3, 34). The famous Mesha Stele was discovered at this site in 1868, confirming the city's significance in Moabite royal history. In the prophetic literature, Dibon figures in oracles against Moab: Isaiah envisions its inhabitants weeping at their high places (Isa 15:2), and Jeremiah announces its destruction (Jer 48:18, 22). It also appears in Israel's wilderness itinerary as Dibon-Gad (Num 33:45-46). Spanish 'Dibon,' Arabic ديبون.

Dibon (place name) (11×) A city in the territory of Moab, situated on the tableland north of the Arnon gorge. Captured from Sihon and allotted to Gad (Num 21:30; 32:3, 34), it appears in the wilderness itinerary as Dibon-Gad (Num 33:45-46). It is the site where the Mesha Stele was discovered. The prophets target Dibon in oracles against Moab (Isa 15:2; Jer 48:18, 22), picturing its inhabitants mourning on the high places. All occurrences refer to the same geographic location regardless of prepositional variation. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Dibon, Divon, and-Dibon | es: Dibón, de-Dibón, en-Dibón | fr: Dibon, Divon, [דיבון] | de: Dibon, Divon, [דיבון] Num 21:30; Num 32:3; Num 32:34; Num 33:45; Num 33:46

דּוּג H1770 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp / 3mp (1×)
and they will fish them (qal perfect consecutive with suffix, hunters pursuing scattered Israel)
A verbal form in Jeremiah 16:16, where Yahweh promises to send 'fishermen' who will 'fish them' (the scattered Israelites), followed by hunters who will hunt them from every mountain and hill. The fishing metaphor suggests capture and gathering, here with ominous overtones—these fishermen work for judgment, not rescue. The verb may be qal or an abbreviated hiphil, but the sense is clear: systematic searching and seizing of the exiled people.

(1×) Jeremiah 16:16 uses vivid imagery: 'I will send for many fishermen, and they will fish them out. Afterward I will send for many hunters, and they will hunt them.' Spanish 'los pescarán' (they will fish them) and English preserve the metaphor. The suffix 'them' (Israel) is consistent. The double image—fishing then hunting—suggests comprehensive, inescapable pursuit of the people in exile, whether for judgment or eventual restoration. PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: and-they-will-fish-them | es: y-los-pescarán | fr: [ודיגום] | de: [ודיגום] Jer 16:16

דַּיָּג H1771 Art / N-mp (2×)
fishermen, fishers; those who catch fish (Qere reading)
This is the Qere (standard reading) form for fishermen, appearing in texts where the written Ketiv has slight orthographic variations. The term designates professional fishermen, whether mourning the Nile's failure in Egypt or standing along the shores of the restored Dead Sea in Ezekiel's vision. The Qere/Ketiv variants reflect dialect or spelling differences without changing the meaning.

(2×) The Qere form of the masculine plural noun meaning fishermen or fishers. Isaiah 19:8 and Jeremiah 16:16 both show this as the preferred reading (with Ketiv variants), while Ezekiel 47:10 uses it as well. In Isaiah, the fishermen mourn Egypt's disaster; in Ezekiel, they stand along the healed Dead Sea ready to fish in newly living waters. The term is occupational, referring to those who fish for livelihood, whether with nets, hooks, or other methods. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12467 WITH 7 SENSES
en: for-fishermen, the-fishermen | es: (a-pescadores), los-pescadores | fr: [(לדיגים)], [הדיגים] | de: [(לדיגים)], [הדיגים] Isa 19:8; Jer 16:16

דַּיָּה H1772 Conj-w (2×)
kite, vulture; a bird of prey listed among unclean birds
This feminine noun designates a bird of prey, likely the kite or a type of vulture, listed among unclean birds in Levitical law. The bird is associated with desolate, ruined places—Isaiah's oracle describes it nesting in the ruins of Edom. Both dietary law passages classify it as unfit for consumption, grouping it with other raptors and scavengers.

(2×) A noun identifying a specific unclean bird, probably the kite (genus Milvus) or a related vulture. Deuteronomy 14:13 lists 'the kite' (with definite article) among prohibited birds, while Isaiah 34:15 uses the plural form, depicting these birds nesting and hatching in Edom's ruins—behavior consistent with raptors that frequent desolate areas. The bird's habitat preference for ruins and its classification with other birds of prey support identification as a kite or small vulture. Ancient versions vary in their specific identifications. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5702 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-the-kite, vultures | es: los-buitres, y-el-buitre | fr: [דיות], et-le-kite | de: [דיות], und-der-kite Deut 14:13; Isa 34:15

דְּיוֹ H1773 Prep-b (1×)
with the ink (prepositional phrase, Baruch's writing medium for Jeremiah's scroll)
A prepositional phrase in Jeremiah 36:18, describing how Baruch wrote Jeremiah's dictated prophecies. When questioned about the scroll's production, Baruch explained that Jeremiah spoke the words and 'I wrote them with ink on the scroll.' The detail emphasizes the physical, documentary nature of prophetic preservation—these are not oral traditions but written records. Ancient Hebrew ink was typically carbon-based (soot mixed with gum or oil), erasable when fresh.

(1×) Jeremiah 36:18 records Baruch's testimony: 'He dictated all these words to me, and I wrote them with ink on the scroll.' Spanish 'con la tinta' and English 'with the ink' preserve the instrumental prepositional phrase. The mundane detail grounds the prophetic word in scribal practice—real ink, real parchment, real dictation.

The ink's erasable quality becomes significant later when the king burns the scroll. IDLE TALK BOASTING
en: with-the-ink | es: con-la-tinta | fr: [בדיו] | de: [בדיו] Jer 36:18

דִּי זָהָב H1774 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
and Di-zahab (place name meaning 'of gold,' location of Moses's final address to Israel)
A place name in the geographical heading of Deuteronomy (1:1), locating Moses's farewell address 'in the wilderness... opposite Suph, between Paran and Tophel and Laban and Hazeroth and Di-zahab.' The name means 'sufficient gold' or 'of gold,' though the site is unidentified. The Septuagint renders it as 'Gold-place.' This is part of Deuteronomy's complex geographical preamble, marking where Moses stood to review Israel's history.

(1×) Deuteronomy 1:1 sets the scene with multiple landmarks, including 'and Di-zahab.' The conjunction-plus-name structure appears uniformly: Spanish 'y Di-Zahab,' French 'et Di-Zahab,' German 'und Di-Zahab.' All preserve the hyphenated transliteration. The name's meaning ('of gold') is preserved in the Septuagint's translation. Its function is purely geographical—one of several sites triangulating Moses's location in Transjordan. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Di-Zahab | es: y-Di-Zahab | fr: et-Di-Zahab | de: und-Di-Zahab Deut 1:1

דִּיבֹן H1775 N-proper-fs (2×)
Dimon, an alternate name for Dibon in Moab, used in Isaiah's oracle Dimon is an alternate name for Dibon, a major Moabite city north of the Arnon River, appearing only in Isaiah's oracle against Moab. Isaiah uses 'Dimon' instead of the usual 'Dibon,' possibly for wordplay with 'dam' (blood), since the waters of Dimon are filled with blood. The city is the same as biblical Dibon, modern Dhiban, famous for the Moabite Stone discovery.

(2×) A variant place name for Dibon (which appears elsewhere in Scripture), used twice in Isaiah 15:9: 'the waters of Dimon are full of blood' and 'I will bring more upon Dimon.' The spelling variation from Dibon to Dimon may be intentional, creating wordplay with 'dam' (blood), since the oracle emphasizes Moab's bloodshed. The reference to 'waters of Dimon' likely indicates the Arnon River near the city. This is the same Moabite city mentioned extensively elsewhere as Dibon. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Dimon | es: Dimón | fr: [דימון] | de: [דימון] Isa 15:9

דִּיבֹן H1776 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
and Dimonah (place name in southern Judah, possibly identical with Dibon)
A town in Judah's southern allotment (Joshua 15:22), possibly identical to Dibon mentioned elsewhere in Negev contexts. The name appears only here, and the site is unidentified. The similarity to Dibon (and Isaiah's Dimon) suggests these may be variant spellings of the same settlement, though the geographical contexts differ (Moabite Dibon vs. Judahite Dimonah). The boundary lists preserve archaic place names, many now lost.

(1×) Joshua 15:22 lists towns in southern Judah's inheritance: 'Kinah, Dimonah, Adadah...' Spanish renders 'y Dimoná,' English 'and Dimonah,' French and German matching. The conjunction-plus-name pattern is consistent. The name's obscurity and single occurrence mean translations simply transliterate without interpretive comment. Its connection to other 'Dibon/Dimon' names remains scholarly speculation. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Dimonah | es: y-Dimoná | fr: et-Dimonah | de: und-Dimonah Josh 15:22

דִּין H1777 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-ms (24×)
To judge, render a legal verdict; to contend or strive; to defend someone's cause; by extension, to govern or rule.
One of the principal Hebrew verbs for the exercise of justice, closely synonymous with שָׁפַט but with its own distinctive coloring. When Jacob blesses Dan, he says the tribe 'shall judge his people' (Gen 49:16)—a wordplay on the name Dan itself, which derives from this root. The verb ranges from formal adjudication to personal advocacy (defending the poor, Prov 31:9) and even governance (Zech 3:7). Arabic cognate ɗ carries meanings of 'obedience' and 'governance,' hinting at the authority that undergirds all judgment.

1. judge, adjudicate (18×) The core juridical sense: to act as judge, to adjudicate a case and render a verdict. This dominates the occurrences, from God judging the nations (Gen 15:14, Deut 32:36) to human courts (Jer 22:16). The cross-linguistic unanimity is striking—Spanish 'juzgar,' Hindi 'न्याय करना,' Arabic 'يدين,' and Korean '심판하다' all converge on formal judicial action. The famous naming-etymology in Genesis 30:6 ('God has judged me') anchors the sense in covenant narrative. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: He-judged, He-will-judge, Judge | es: Juzgad, Juzgará, Juzgó | fr: –juger, Dan, fera-juger | de: Dan, [דינו], [דנן] Gen 15:14; Gen 30:6; Gen 49:16; Deut 32:36; 1Sam 2:10

2. contend, strive (3×) To contend, strive, or quarrel, often in a legal or adversarial setting. Genesis 6:3 uses it of God's spirit 'striving' with humanity, and 2 Samuel 19:9 describes the tribes 'contending' among themselves. Spanish 'contender' and French 'strive' confirm the shift from neutral adjudication to active dispute. The Nifal reciprocal form reinforces this mutual, back-and-forth quality of striving. CONTENDING AND STRIVING en: contending, shall-strive, to-contend | es: contender, contenderá, contendiendo | fr: –strive, contending, à-לדין | de: contending, soll-streiten, zu-Gericht Gen 6:3; 2Sam 19:9; Eccl 6:10

3. defend, vindicate, plead cause (2×) To defend, vindicate, or plead someone's cause—judgment exercised not neutrally but on behalf of the vulnerable. Proverbs 31:9 commands 'judge and defend the poor,' and Psalm 54:1 pleads 'vindicate me by your might.' Spanish 'defiende' and 'júzgame' bring out the advocacy dimension. This sense represents the compassionate face of justice—the judge as champion of the wronged. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: and-defend, vindicate-me | es: júzgame, y-defiende | fr: et-דִּין, juger | de: und-Gericht, vindicate-mich Ps 54:1; Prov 31:9

4. govern, rule (1×) An extended sense of governing or ruling, where judicial authority shades into administrative sovereignty. Zechariah 3:7 promises Joshua the high priest that he will 'govern' God's house. Spanish 'gobernarás' (you will govern) and Korean '다스리리라' (will rule) both depart from juridical vocabulary to express political administration, showing the natural extension from courtroom to throne room. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: will-judge | es: gobernarás | fr: juger | de: [תדין] Zech 3:7

דִּין H1778 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (2×)
judge, administer justice (Aramaic); exercising judicial authority
This Aramaic verb means to judge or exercise judicial authority. It appears in Ezra when Artaxerxes authorizes Ezra to appoint magistrates and judges who will 'judge' all the people in the Trans-Euphrates region who know God's law. The term designates official legal adjudication, parallel to the Hebrew verb for judging.

(2×) An Aramaic Peal participle meaning 'judges' or 'those who judge.' Ezra 7:25 appears twice (Ketiv and Qere variants) with the meaning 'judges who judge the people.' The Ketiv reads 'da'anin' while the Qere has 'dayanin,' both from the root meaning 'to judge.' The context is appointing officials to administer justice according to God's law. The participle functions as a noun designating judicial officers or magistrates, equivalent to Biblical Hebrew 'shophetim.' PROPHETS AND PROPHECY
en: [judging], judging | es: [juzgando], juzgando | fr: [דאיני], [דאנין] | de: [(דאינין)], [[דאנין]] Ezra 7:25

דִּין H1779 N-ms (21×)
A legal case, lawsuit, or plea before a judge; a judicial verdict, sentence, or act of judgment
This Hebrew noun sits at the heart of Israel's legal vocabulary. In its primary sense, dîn refers to the cause or case brought before a tribunal—'between plea and plea' (Deut 17:8). Jeremiah charges the wicked with failing to 'plead the cause' (dîn) of the orphan (Jer 5:28), while Proverbs 31:8 calls the king to 'open your mouth for the cause of all the unfortunate.' The Spanish 'causa' and French 'cause' mirror this legal-case meaning directly. In its secondary sense, dîn denotes the judgment itself—the verdict rendered or condemnation pronounced. Job wrestles with both dimensions: his cause lies before God (Job 35:14), yet he fears the 'judgment of the wicked' (Job 36:17). The German 'Gericht' elegantly covers both case and court.

1. legal cause, lawsuit, plea (14×) A legal cause, case, or plea brought before a judge for adjudication. Deuteronomy 17:8 uses it for distinguishing 'between case and case' in the courts. Jeremiah indicts Israel's leaders for neglecting the dîn of the fatherless (Jer 5:28; 22:16), and the psalmist trusts God to 'maintain my cause' (Ps 9:4; 140:12). The Spanish 'causa' and French 'cause' directly render this forensic sense of a matter under judicial consideration. Covers 14 of 21 occurrences. JUDGMENT AND VERDICT
en: and-my-cause, case, case-of | es: a-causa, causa, causa-de | fr: Madian, cause, et-cause | de: Gericht, Midian, Rechtsspruch Deut 17:8; Job 35:14; Ps 9:4; Ps 140:12

2. judgment, verdict (7×) The judicial verdict, sentence, or act of condemnation that results from deliberation. In Esther 1:13, the king consults those 'who knew law and judgment' (dîn). Job reflects on the 'judgment and justice' that have seized him (Job 36:17) and fears that 'judgment is before' the wicked (Job 19:29). The German 'Gericht' and French 'jugement' capture this resultative sense—not the case itself, but the ruling rendered upon it. Covers 7 occurrences, concentrated in wisdom literature. JUDGMENT AND VERDICT
en: [there-is-judgment], and-judgment, and-the-judgment-of- | es: Y-juicio-de-, juicio, juicio. | fr: [ודין], cause, et-jugement | de: Gericht, und-Gericht Esth 1:13; Job 19:29; Job 36:17

דִּין H1780 N-msd (5×)
judgment, justice; a court or tribunal that renders decisions
An Aramaic noun found exclusively in Daniel and Ezra, denoting judicial judgment or the court that renders it. In Daniel 4:37 it describes the justice of God's ways, while in Daniel 7:10 and 7:26 it designates the heavenly tribunal seated for judgment. Ezra 7:26 prescribes that judgment be executed on violators of the law. The word bridges the abstract concept of justice and the concrete institution that administers it.

(5×) Judgment, justice, or legal verdict — the act or result of rendering a judicial decision. In Daniel 4:37 it characterizes God's ways as just. Ezra 7:26 speaks of judgment executed upon offenders. Spanish 'juicio' and French 'jugement' consistently render this judicial sense, while English alternates between 'judgment' and 'court' depending on whether the abstract or institutional meaning is foregrounded. JUDGMENT AND VERDICT
en: and-judgment, and-the-court, judgment | es: Y-el-juicio, el-juicio, juicio | fr: [דינה], et-jugement, jugement | de: [דין], [דינא], [דינה] Ezra 7:26; Dan 4:37; Dan 7:10; Dan 7:22; Dan 7:26

דַּיָּן H1781 Conj-w / N-msc (2×)
judge, one who renders legal decisions or defends the rights of others
This word refers to a judge, someone who exercises judicial authority and defends the innocent. In 1 Samuel 24:15, David appeals to God as the ultimate judge between himself and Saul. Psalm 68:5 celebrates God as a defender of the fatherless, emphasizing his protective judicial role. The term appears only twice but captures the essence of divine justice as both verdict and advocacy.

(2×) The multilingual evidence (defender, judge) points to a legal authority who not only adjudicates but actively defends. Both occurrences invoke God's role as the righteous judge who vindicates the innocent—David fleeing from Saul's unjust pursuit (1 Sam 24:15) and orphans needing divine protection (Ps 68:5). The dual function of judgment and defense appears across translations. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: and-a-defender-of, as-judge | es: por-juez, y-defensor-de | fr: comme-juge, et-juge | de: und-ein-defender-von, wie-richte 1Sam 24:15; Ps 68:5

וְדַיָּן H1782 Conj-w / N-mp (1×)
and judges (Aramaic plural noun, legal officials in Artaxerxes's authorization to Ezra)
An Aramaic plural noun in Artaxerxes's decree (Ezra 7:25), authorizing Ezra to appoint magistrates and judges to administer Jewish law in the Trans-Euphrates province. The term appears in parallel with 'those who know the laws of your God,' indicating legal functionaries who would adjudicate according to Torah. This represents Persian imperial policy of allowing subject peoples judicial autonomy under their ancestral laws.

(1×) Ezra 7:25 records the royal authorization: 'Appoint magistrates and judges to judge all the people in Trans-Euphrates.' Spanish 'y jueces' (and judges) and English maintain the straightforward plural. The Aramaic form is recognizable across languages. The context is legal administration—Ezra may establish a Torah-based court system with Persian backing, showing the empire's pragmatic delegation of local governance. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: and-judges | es: y-jueces | fr: [ודיניין] | de: [ודיניין] Ezra 7:25

דִּינָה H1783 N-proper-fs (8×)
Dinah; daughter of Jacob and Leah, central figure in the Shechem narrative of Genesis 34.
Dinah is the daughter of Jacob and Leah, the only named daughter among Jacob's children. Her birth is noted briefly in Genesis 30:21, but her story occupies the whole of Genesis 34, where she goes out to visit the women of the land and is violated by Shechem son of Hamor. Her brothers Simeon and Levi exact violent retribution, an act Jacob later recalls on his deathbed (Gen 49:5-7). She is listed among those who went down to Egypt with Jacob (Gen 46:15). The name likely derives from the root d-y-n, 'to judge.'

Dinah (8×) The personal name Dinah, referring to Jacob and Leah's daughter. All translations consistently transliterate the name—'Dinah' in English and Spanish, 'Dina' in French and German—with minor variation only in prepositional prefixes ('to Dinah,' 'a-Dinah'). All eight occurrences fall within Genesis: her birth (30:21), the Shechem episode (34:1, 3, 5, 13, 25, 26), and the genealogical notice of those entering Egypt (46:15). PERSONAL NAMES
en: Dinah, to-Dinah | es: Dinah, Diná, a-Dinah | fr: Dina, à-Dina | de: Dina, Dinas, an-Dina Gen 30:21; Gen 34:1; Gen 34:3; Gen 34:5; Gen 34:13

דִּינָיֵא H1784 N-proper-ms (1×)
Dinaye (uncertain term in Ezra 4:9, possibly ethnic name or reading 'judges' as Persian title)
An obscure term in Ezra 4:9's list of Persian officials opposing Jerusalem's reconstruction. It may be an ethnic designation, a Persian title meaning 'judges' (from an Iranian word for judicial officers), or part of the preceding word. Modern scholarship divides on whether to read this as a people-group (Dinaites) or as an Aramaic/Persian administrative term. The textual difficulty reflects the complexities of Persian-period administrative vocabulary.

(1×) Ezra 4:9 lists the opposition: 'the judges... the Dinaye, the Apharsathchites...' Spanish reads 'los jueces' (the judges), treating this as the Aramaic word for judicial officials rather than an ethnic name. English 'Dinaye' and German preserve the uncertain term. The scholarly debate whether this is a Persian loan-word or a proper noun is reflected in the divergent translations—Spanish opts for the functional reading. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Dinaye | es: los-jueces | fr: [דיניא] | de: [דיניא] Ezra 4:9

דֵּיק H1785 N-ms (6×)

siege-wall, siege ramp; a military earthwork constructed against a fortified city during a siege

A masculine noun referring to a siege-wall or siege ramp—a military structure built by besieging forces against the walls of a fortified city. All six biblical occurrences describe the same type of offensive construction, consistently paired with 'casting up a mound' (שָׁפַךְ סֹלְלָה). The word appears in the accounts of Nebuchadnezzar's siege of Jerusalem (2 Kgs 25:1; Jer 52:4) and in Ezekiel's prophetic enactments and oracles of siege warfare (Ezek 4:2; 17:17; 21:22; 26:8).

siege-wall, siege ramp (6×) A siege-wall or siege ramp erected against a besieged city, part of the standard apparatus of ancient Near Eastern siege warfare alongside mounds (סֹלְלָה) and battering rams. Spanish offers three distinct translations—'baluarte' (bulwark), 'cerco' (encirclement), and 'rampa-de-asedio' (siege ramp)—reflecting the uncertainty about the exact nature of the structure. German 'Belagerungswall' and 'Belagerung-Mauer' similarly range between wall and rampart. The construction formula 'build a dayeq around it' recurs across 2 Kings 25:1, Jeremiah 52:4, and Ezekiel's siege oracles, making this a technical term of military architecture. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: a-siege-wall, siege-wall | es: baluarte, cerco, rampa-de-asedio | fr: [דיק], machine-de-siège, siège-muraille | de: Belagerung-Mauer, Belagerungswall, [דיק] 2Kgs 25:1; Jer 52:4; Ezek 4:2; Ezek 17:17; Ezek 21:22

דִּישׁ H1786 N-ms (1×)

threshing (noun, the process of threshing grain, in promise of agricultural abundance)

A noun describing the threshing process, appearing in Leviticus 26:5's promise of agricultural blessing: 'your threshing shall last until grape harvest, and grape harvest until sowing time.' The image is of such abundant crops that processing the grain takes months, overlapping with the next season's work. Threshing involved oxen or sledges crushing grain to separate kernels from chaff. The promise reverses the covenant curses of crop failure.

(1×) Leviticus 26:5 paints prosperity: 'Your threshing will continue until grape harvest, and the grape harvest will continue until planting.' Spanish 'la trilla' and English 'threshing' identify the grain-processing phase. The blessing is temporal overlap—so much wheat that threshing season extends abnormally long, bumping into vintage season. This is covenant abundance: labor's blessing of plenty rather than the curse of scarcity. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: threshing | es: la-trilla | fr: threshing | de: Dreschen Lev 26:5

דִּישׁוֹן H1787 N-proper-md (7×)

Dishon or Dishan—two Horite clan chiefs descended from Seir in Edom's genealogies (Gen 36; 1 Chr 1).

A proper name belonging to two distinct individuals in the Edomite genealogies of Genesis 36 and 1 Chronicles 1. The first Dishon is a son of Seir the Horite, listed among the chiefs of the land before Esau's descendants displaced them. The second is a grandson of Seir through Anah, appearing with slight spelling variation as Dishan in 1 Chronicles 1:42. The name likely derives from a root meaning 'threshing' or a species of gazelle, fitting the pastoral world of Seir's territory in the Transjordan highlands.

1. Dishon (6×) Dishon, a Horite personal name borne by two related figures in the Edomite genealogies. The primary Dishon is a son of Seir the Horite (Gen 36:21; 1 Chr 1:38), listed among the original clan chiefs of the land of Edom. A second Dishon is a son of Anah and grandson of Seir (Gen 36:25, 30; 1 Chr 1:41). The transliteration is stable across languages—Spanish 'Dison,' French and English 'Dishon,' German 'Dischon'—with only minor phonological adaptation. DISHON DISHAN NAMES

en: Dishon, and-Dishon | es: Dishon, Dison, y-Dishon | fr: Dishon, et-Dishon | de: Dischon, [דישון], [ודישן] Gen 36:21; Gen 36:25; Gen 36:30; 1Chr 1:38; 1Chr 1:41

2. Dishan (1×) Dishan, a variant form of the same Horite name appearing in 1 Chronicles 1:42, where the Chronicler lists the sons of this clan chief. BDB distinguishes the spelling with a final nun (Dishan) from the more common Dishon, though they refer to the same genealogical figure. English 'Dishan' and Spanish 'Disan' preserve this distinction in transliteration. DISHON DISHAN NAMES

en: Dishan | es: Disan | fr: Dishon | de: [דישון] 1Chr 1:42

דִּישׁן H1788 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

A clean animal, likely a mountain goat or ibex, permitted for food under Mosaic law

This rare term appears only in the dietary laws of Deuteronomy, designating one of the clean wild animals permitted for consumption. Ancient versions and lexicographers have debated whether it refers to a pygarg (white-rumped antelope) or a mountain goat. The consistent rendering across languages as 'ibex' reflects the scholarly consensus that this was a mountain-dwelling, hoofed animal. The root connection to 'spring' or 'leap' suggests an agile creature inhabiting rocky terrain.

(1×) The sole biblical occurrence appears in Deuteronomy 14:5's list of permitted animals. While the ancient Greek translators used 'pygargos' (a type of antelope), modern scholarship favors the ibex based on comparative Semitic evidence and the animal's natural habitat in the Judean wilderness. The multilingual consensus on 'ibex' reflects this technical identification of a specific mountain goat species. LIVING CREATURES

en: and-ibex | es: y-íbice | fr: et-ibex | de: und-ibex Deut 14:5

דִּישָׁן H1789 N-proper-ms (5×)

Dishan, a Horite clan chief descended from Seir

A proper name borne by a son of Seir the Horite, listed among the clan chiefs of Edom. Dishan appears in the genealogical registers of Genesis 36 and 1 Chronicles 1, where his descendants are enumerated alongside other Horite families. The name is sometimes confused in the text with the closely related Dishon (H1787), leading to variant readings across the versions.

(5×) The personal name Dishan, identifying a Horite chief and son of Seir. All five occurrences appear in genealogical lists (Gen 36:21, 26, 28, 30; 1 Chr 1:38). Spanish 'Dishan/Disan' and French 'Dishan' transliterate consistently. The Septuagint renders it as Rhison, reflecting an alternate phonetic tradition. Textual variants sometimes conflate this figure with Dishon, his near-namesake. DISHON DISHAN NAMES

en: Dishan, and-Dishan | es: Dishan, y-Disan, y-Dishan | fr: Dishan, [ודישן], et-Dishan | de: Dischan, Dischans, [ודישן] Gen 36:21; Gen 36:26; Gen 36:28; Gen 36:30; 1Chr 1:38

דַּךְ H1790 Prep-l (4×)

Crushed, oppressed; used poetically of the downtrodden and afflicted who look to God for justice.

A poetic adjective describing someone who has been crushed or beaten down, whether physically or socially. The Psalms pair it with 'orphan' and 'poor' to paint a picture of the vulnerable whom God defends (Ps 9:9; 10:18; 74:21). In Proverbs 26:28, it shifts slightly to denote the victims of a lying tongue. Across translations—Spanish 'oprimido,' French 'opprimé,' German 'der Unterdrückte'—the rendering consistently highlights systemic victimization rather than a momentary setback.

(4×) Oppressed, crushed, downtrodden — describes people who are socially or physically beaten down and in need of divine vindication. The Psalms consistently pair this term with the orphan (יָתוֹם) and the poor (עָנִי, אֶבְיוֹן), as in Ps 10:18 where God rises to judge on behalf of the oppressed. In Prov 26:28, the same root extends to those crushed by a deceitful tongue, showing that the oppression can be verbal as well as physical. English 'oppressed,' Spanish 'oprimido,' and French 'opprimé' all converge on this single sense. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-the-oppressed, for-the-oppressed, its-victims | es: oprimido, para-el-oprimido, sus-víctimas | fr: et-opprimé, opprimé, à-opprimé | de: [דכיו], der-unterdrückt, für-der-unterdrückt Ps 9:9; Ps 10:18; Ps 74:21; Prov 26:28

דֵּךְ H1791 Adj-ms (13×)

Aramaic demonstrative pronoun 'this' (m. dek, f. dak); used postpositively in Ezra and Daniel

An Aramaic demonstrative pronoun meaning 'this,' always placed after its noun. The masculine form dek and the feminine dak appear throughout Ezra's official correspondence, where the pronoun typically modifies key nouns in administrative contexts — 'this city' (qiryeta dak, Ezra 4:13-21), 'this house of God' (bet elaha dek, Ezra 5:17; 6:7-8, 12), and 'this Sheshbazzar' (Ezra 5:16). Its plural counterpart is illek. The postpositive position distinguishes it from the more common Aramaic demonstrative dena. Translations simply render 'this/this one': Spanish este/esta, French celui-ci, German dieses.

(13×) A postpositive demonstrative pronoun meaning 'this,' functioning as a deictic modifier that follows its noun. In Ezra's imperial correspondence, it specifies the referent under legal discussion: 'this city' that is rebellious (Ezra 4:13, 15-16, 19, 21), 'this house of God' whose rebuilding is decreed (Ezra 5:16-17; 6:7-8, 12). The form is cognate with Arabic dhaka and Ethiopic zeku. Translation evidence is uniform and transparent: eng 'this,' spa este/esta, fra celui-ci, deu dieses — all rendering simple proximal deixis. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: this | es: esta, este | fr: celui-ci | de: dieses Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:16; Ezra 4:19

דָּכָא H1792 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjImperf-3mp (18×)

To crush or shatter; figuratively, to oppress or break the spirit; as participle, the contrite or brokenhearted.

A poetic verb that ranges from physical destruction to spiritual brokenness. In the Piel stem, God crushes Rahab-Egypt like a carcass (Ps 89:10) and oppressors trample the afflicted (Ps 94:5). Isaiah's Suffering Servant is 'crushed' by the Lord's will (Isa 53:10), where Spanish 'molido' evokes grinding to powder. Yet the same root yields one of Scripture's most tender images: God dwells with the 'contrite ones' (Isa 57:15), the dakka'im whose brokenness becomes the very doorway to divine presence. The Hitpael and Pual passive forms in Job explore the helplessness of mortals crushed by forces beyond their control.

1. crush, shatter (active) (10×) The active Piel sense: to crush, break in pieces, or trample. God crushes Rahab-Egypt (Ps 89:10), and the wicked crush God's people (Ps 94:5). At Isa 53:10, the Lord wills to crush his Servant – Spanish 'molido' and French 'ecraser' both convey grinding destruction. Proverbs 22:22 warns against crushing the afflicted at the gate. The active agent is typically either God in judgment or human oppressors abusing power, with the object always a person or people rather than a physical thing. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: To-crush, and-crush, and-crush-me | es: Al-aplastar, aplastaste, aplastes | fr: et-écraser, et-écraser-moi, écraser | de: [דכאו], [וידכאני], [ותדכאונני] Job 6:9; Job 19:2; Ps 72:4; Ps 89:10; Ps 94:5

2. be crushed (passive) (6×) The passive Pual and Hitpael sense: to be crushed, broken, or destroyed without recourse. Job's friends observe that mortals dwelling in houses of clay are crushed before the moth (Job 4:19). The passive forms dominate in Job's speeches, expressing vulnerability to forces beyond human control. At Isa 19:10, Egypt's foundations are crushed. French and Spanish render these passives with reflexive or participial constructions, underscoring the state of being acted upon rather than acting. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: and-are-crushed, and-they-are-crushed, are-crushed | es: aplastados, eran-quebrantados., molido | fr: et-écraser, écraser, écraser-eux | de: [וידכאו], [ידכא], [ידכאום] Job 4:19; Job 5:4; Job 22:9; Job 34:25; Isa 19:10

3. be humbled, brought low (1×) A figurative extension meaning to be humbled or brought low, distinct from physical destruction. At Jer 44:10, the people have not been humbled or made contrite even to this day. Spanish 'fueron humillados' distinguishes this moral-spiritual abasement from the violent crushing of sense 1. The emphasis falls on inner disposition rather than external force – a failure to respond appropriately to God's discipline. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: they-have-been-humbled | es: fueron-humillados | fr: écraser | de: [דכאו] Jer 44:10

4. contrite ones, the crushed (1×) The substantivized Niphal participle nidka'im at Isa 57:15: 'the crushed ones' or 'contrite ones' whom God chooses to dwell with. Spanish 'los contritos' captures the theological weight beautifully. This is among the most important derivative uses of the root – brokenness becomes a spiritual qualification for divine nearness, transforming what elsewhere is pure destruction into a paradoxical mark of grace. The participle functions as a noun denoting a class of people defined by their inner condition. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: crushed-ones | es: los-contritos | fr: écraser | de: [נדכאים] Isa 57:15

דַּכָּא H1793a Adj-mpc (2×)

crushed, broken in spirit, contrite through suffering or humility

This adjective describes someone whose spirit has been crushed or broken, typically through suffering or deep humility before God. Isaiah 57:15 uses it alongside 'lowly in spirit' to describe those whom God revives and dwells with. Psalm 34:18 pairs 'crushed in spirit' with 'brokenhearted,' emphasizing God's nearness to those experiencing profound emotional and spiritual pain. The word conveys both physical crushing and its metaphorical application to inner brokenness.

(2×) The glosses 'crushed, contrite, broken' across languages reflect both physical and spiritual dimensions. Both passages use the term metaphorically for inner brokenness: Isaiah 57:15 describes the humble spirit God honors, while Psalm 34:18 promises God's presence to the spiritually broken. The parallel expressions ('lowly in spirit,' 'brokenhearted') confirm this is about spiritual contrition, not physical injury. BRUISED CRUSHED

en: crushed, the-crushed-of | es: contritos-de, el-contrito | fr: [דכא], brisé | de: [דכא], der-zermalmt-von Ps 34:18; Isa 57:15

דַּכָּא H1793b N-ms (1×)

Dust or powder, specifically referring to finely pulverized matter

This rare noun denotes dust in its most broken-down, pulverized state. In Psalm 90, it appears in the sobering declaration that God causes humanity to return to dust, echoing the creation narrative of Genesis. The term emphasizes not merely dust as earth, but dust as the result of crushing or grinding down—the ultimate state of decomposition. The Spanish and German renderings as 'polvo' and 'Staub' capture the fine, powdery quality, while the French oddly translates as 'crushed,' highlighting the verbal action behind the noun.

(1×) Psalm 90:3 uses this word to describe humanity's mortality: 'You turn man back to dust.' The term's form suggests it emphasizes the pulverized, crushed nature of dust—not just earth, but matter ground to its finest state. This intensifies the psalm's meditation on human frailty and the temporary nature of life, contrasting sharply with God's eternality mentioned in the surrounding verses. DUST AND POWDER

en: dust | es: polvo | fr: brisé | de: Staub Ps 90:3

דָּכָה H1794 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-1cs (6×)

to crush, be crushed (physically or by oppression); of the heart: contrite, broken in spirit before God

A verb found only in the Psalms, carrying both the violence of physical crushing and the spiritual beauty of contrition. The wicked crush the helpless (Ps 10:10), God crushes his people in testing (Ps 44:19), and the psalmist is crushed by suffering (Ps 38:8; 51:8). Yet in Psalm 51:17, the same root yields one of Scripture's most treasured phrases: a broken and contrite heart God will not despise. Spanish captures this pivot elegantly – from 'aplastado' (flattened, crushed) to 'contrito' (contrite) – revealing how physical destruction becomes spiritual receptivity.

1. crush, be crushed (5×) To crush or be crushed, describing physical violence, oppression, or intense suffering. Five occurrences span the hostile crushing of the weak by the wicked (Ps 10:10), divine crushing in judgment or testing (Ps 44:19; 51:8), and the psalmist's experience of being broken by affliction (Ps 38:8). Spanish uses 'aplastado' (flattened) and 'nos aplastaste' (you crushed us), conveying forceful, overwhelming destruction. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: You-have-crushed, You-have-crushed-us, [ketiv] | es: [Y-es-aplastado], es-aplastado, nos-aplastaste | fr: et-écraser, écraser | de: [ketiv], du-haben-zermalmt, du-haben-zermalmt-uns Ps 10:10; Ps 38:8; Ps 44:19; Ps 51:8

2. contrite (spiritually broken) (1×) Contrite or broken in spirit – the spiritually positive sense of a heart humbled and open before God. In Psalm 51:17, the Niphal participle nidkeh describes a heart that God values above all sacrifices: 'a broken and contrite heart, O God, you will not despise.' Spanish shifts from violent 'aplastado' to reverent 'contrito,' and English from 'crushed' to 'contrite,' marking the theological transformation of brokenness into worship. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: and-contrite | es: y-contrito | fr: et-écraser | de: und-contrite Ps 51:17

דַּכָּה H1795 N-ms (1×)

Crushing or violent injury, particularly used for genital damage disqualifying from assembly

This feminine noun refers to crushing injury, used exclusively in the Torah's purity regulations. The term describes damage caused by violent compression or impact, distinct from cutting. In its sole occurrence, it appears in a phrase about men with crushed testicles being excluded from the assembly—a regulation that later prophets like Isaiah would interpret more metaphorically. The consistent translation across languages as 'crushing' or 'aplastamiento' reflects the term's focus on the type of injury (compression) rather than its location.

(1×) Deuteronomy 23:1 employs this word in the phrase 'wounded by crushing,' referring specifically to testicular injury that disqualified men from the covenant assembly. The term emphasizes the mechanism of injury—crushing force—highlighting the severity and irreversibility of such damage. This seemingly harsh regulation would later be softened in prophetic texts like Isaiah 56, which promises eunuchs a place in God's house if they keep covenant. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: crushing | es: aplastamiento | fr: crushing | de: crushing Deut 23:1

דַּכְּי H1796 N-msc / 3mp (1×)

The pounding or crashing of waves, describing the violent action of water

This rare word captures the thunderous, repetitive action of ocean waves crashing. Related to the root for 'crushing,' it applies the concept of violent impact to water. Psalm 93 uses it to describe the majestic pounding of the sea, part of creation's testimony to God's power. The Spanish 'estruendo' (roar, din) and French 'fracas' emphasize the sound, while English focuses on the physical action. This single biblical use creates a vivid acoustic image within a psalm celebrating divine sovereignty over chaotic waters.

(1×) In Psalm 93:3, the rivers lift up 'their pounding'—the suffix indicating the crashing belongs to the waters themselves. This personification of the ocean's violent power serves as a foil: even the mightiest natural forces proclaim God's eternal throne. The term's derivation from 'crush' or 'pound' emphasizes the repetitive, hammering quality of storm-driven waves, making the psalm's claim that God is 'mightier than the waves of the sea' all the more impressive. WAVE BILLOW SEA

en: their-pounding | es: su-estruendo | fr: fracas | de: ihr-pounding Ps 93:3

דְּכֵן H1797 Pro-cs (3×)

that, this—Aramaic demonstrative pronoun in Daniel

This Aramaic demonstrative pronoun means 'this' or 'that' and appears only in Daniel. It is formed from dek plus the demonstrative suffix -n. Daniel 2:31 uses it in Nebuchadnezzar's dream: 'this image' (tsalma dikken). Daniel 7:20-21 uses it twice for 'that horn' (qarna dikken) in the vision of the fourth beast. The pronoun points to a specific, notable object within the vision—the imposing statue or the distinctive horn. Ezra uses the simpler form dek, while Daniel consistently uses the longer dikken form.

(3×) Aramaic demonstrative pronoun meaning 'this' or 'that same,' appearing three times in Daniel's visions. Daniel 2:31 points to 'this image' (tsalma dikken) in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. Daniel 7:20, 21 both refer to 'that horn' (qarna dikken) in the fourth beast vision—the notable horn that warred against the saints. Cross-linguistic glosses: English 'that same,' Spanish 'aquel/que' (that/which), French and German use placeholder brackets. The demonstrative highlights particular elements within apocalyptic visions: the specific statue or the distinctive horn. This is Aramaic discourse grammar for pointing to definite referents within narrative. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: that-same | es: aquel, que | fr: [דכן] | de: [דכן] Dan 2:31; Dan 7:20; Dan 7:21

דְּכַר H1798 N-mp (3×)

rams (Aramaic)—male sheep offered in sacrifice in Ezra

This Aramaic noun is the equivalent of Hebrew zachar ('male') and refers to rams used in temple sacrifices. All three occurrences are in Ezra's account of restoring temple worship after the exile. Ezra 6:9, 17 and 7:17 list rams among the animals to be provided for burnt offerings and sacrifices. The word is cognate with Syriac and shares the Aramaic doubling of meaning: both 'male' and specifically 'ram.' These rams represent the renewed sacrificial system under Persian patronage, fulfilling Cyrus's decree to support Jewish worship.

(3×) Aramaic noun for rams (male sheep), appearing three times in Ezra in contexts of temple sacrifice. Ezra 6:9 lists rams (dikhrin) among animals needed for offerings. Ezra 6:17 enumerates rams in the dedication sacrifice. Ezra 7:17 includes rams with conjunction 'and rams' (ve-dikhrin) in Ezra's purchase list for offerings. Cross-linguistic glosses are consistent: English 'rams/and rams,' Spanish 'carneros/y carneros,' French and German use placeholder brackets for the Aramaic forms. The plural form dikhrin appears in all instances. This is Aramaic cultic vocabulary for sacrificial animals in the restored post-exilic temple worship authorized by Persian decree. RAM AND HORN

en: and-rams, rams | es: carneros, y-carneros | fr: [דכרין], [ודכרין] | de: [דכרין], [ודכרין] Ezra 6:9; Ezra 6:17; Ezra 7:17

דְּכְרוֹן H1799a N-msd (1×)

A memorandum, record, or written document preserved for official reference

This Aramaic term appears in Ezra's account of the temple rebuilding, denoting an official written record. Cognate with the Hebrew word for 'remembrance,' it specifically refers to archived documents in the Persian administrative system. When King Darius orders a search of the royal archives, this word describes what they find: a formal memorandum authorizing the temple's reconstruction. The term reflects the bureaucratic precision of the Persian Empire, where decrees were carefully recorded and stored. French and German leave it untranslated, suggesting its technical, archival nature.

(1×) Ezra 6:2 records the discovery of 'a record' in the fortress at Ecbatana containing Cyrus's original decree about rebuilding Jerusalem's temple. This Aramaic loanword reflects Persian administrative vocabulary, showing how the biblical authors adopted the empire's official terminology. The discovery of this memorandum proves legally decisive, enabling Darius to confirm and enforce his predecessor's authorization—a vivid example of how ancient record-keeping served justice and continuity across generations. MEMORI-

ALS AND REMEMBRANCE
en: a-record | es: el-registro | fr: [דכרונה] | de: [דכרונה] Ezra 6:2

דִּכְרָן H1799b N-mpd (2×)
records, memoranda, official documents preserved for historical reference
This Aramaic term refers to official records or memoranda kept in royal archives. Both occurrences in Ezra 4:15 appear in a letter from Persian officials urging King Artaxerxes to search the historical records to verify Jerusalem's rebellious history. The word emphasizes the administrative practice of maintaining written documentation for future consultation, a crucial aspect of ancient Near Eastern governance.

(2×) The multilingual evidence ('records, memoranda') consistently points to archival documents. The Persian officials twice urge searching 'the book of records' (Ezra 4:15) to verify Jerusalem's past rebellions. This reflects the sophisticated record-keeping systems of the Persian Empire, where administrative memory was preserved in written form for legal and political reference. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE en: records | es: memorias | fr: [דכרניא] | de: [דכרניא] Ezra 4:15

דַּל H1800 Adj-mp (47×)
Poor, needy; weak, feeble; humble, lowly; thin, gaunt
An adjective describing those who are diminished, whether in wealth, strength, status, or physical condition. Most frequently it denotes the socioeconomically poor, appearing alongside ebyon ('destitute') and in contrast with ashir ('rich') throughout the Wisdom literature and prophets. The Mosaic law commands impartial justice for the dal (Exod 23:3; Lev 19:15), while the psalms celebrate God as the one who lifts the poor from the dust (Ps 113:7). German 'arm' and 'Geringe,' Spanish 'pobre,' and French 'faible/pauvre' show how translators navigate the overlapping senses of poverty, weakness, and lowliness.

1. poor, needy (socioeconomic) (38×) A person of low socioeconomic status, lacking material resources. This is the predominant sense, used both as adjective and substantive for the poor as a social class. The Torah insists on justice for the dal (Exod 23:3; Lev 19:15), and the offering regulations provide alternatives for those too poor to afford the standard sacrifice (Lev 14:21). Proverbs contrasts the dal with the ashir (rich) repeatedly (Prov 10:15; 22:16; 28:11), and Ruth 3:10 praises Ruth for not pursuing young men 'whether poor or rich.' Spanish 'pobres' and French 'pauvre' consistently render this sense. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS
en: poor, the-poor, to-the-poor | es: a-débiles, a-los-pobres, a-los-pobres; | fr: faibles, pauvre | de: Geringe, arm Exod 23:3; Exod 30:15; Lev 14:21; Lev 19:15; Ruth 3:10

2. weak, feeble, powerless (7×) Weak, feeble, or lacking in power or influence, rather than specifically impoverished. Gideon protests that his clan is the weakest (dal) in Manasseh (Judg 6:15), the house of Saul grows ever weaker (2 Sam 3:1), and the psalmist commends care for the weak and needy (Ps 41:1; 72:13; 82:3-4). German 'schwach' and Spanish 'debil' capture this nuance of frailty and powerlessness distinct from mere economic lack. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS
en: and-weaker, the-poor, the-weak | es: al-pobre, débil, el-más-débil | fr: et-weaker, faible, le-weakest | de: der-arm, der-schwach, der-weakest Judg 6:15; 2Sam 3:1; Ps 41:1; Ps 72:13; Ps 82:3

3. humble, lowly (1×) Humble or lowly in spirit, denoting meek submission rather than material deprivation. In Zephaniah 3:12, God promises to leave in Israel's midst an 'afflicted and lowly people' (ani wadal) who take refuge in the Lord. Arabic translations use mutawadi' ('humble') and Korean najun ('lowly'), pointing to a spiritual quality rather than a social or physical condition. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS
en: and-poor | es: y-pobre | fr: et-pauvre | de: und-Geringe Zeph 3:12

4. thin, gaunt, wasting away (1×) Thin, gaunt, or physically emaciated, describing bodily wasting. In Genesis 41:19 the word describes Pharaoh's seven thin, ugly cows that devour the fat ones, and in 2 Samuel 13:4 it describes Amnon's visible physical deterioration. Spanish 'debil' and English 'wasting away' reflect the visible leanness and physical decline rather than poverty or weakness of social standing. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY
en: wasting-away | es: débil | fr: wasting-au-loin | de: wasting-weg 2Sam 13:4

דָּלַג H1801 V-Piel-Imperf-1cs (5×)
to leap, spring over; to bound joyfully or transgress a threshold
A verb depicting vigorous leaping or bounding motion, used both literally and figuratively. In Psalm 18:29 and 2 Samuel 22:30, the warrior leaps over a wall by God's strength. Isaiah 35:6 envisions the lame leaping like a deer in messianic restoration. Song of Solomon 2:8 portrays the beloved bounding over the hills. Zephaniah 1:9 condemns those who leap over the threshold in a pagan ritual context.

(5×) To leap, spring, or bound over an obstacle — depicting vigorous physical motion. The Piel intensifies the action. In Psalm 18:29 (= 2 Sam 22:30), the psalmist leaps over a wall by divine empowerment; Spanish 'saltaré' and French 'je saute' capture this athletic sense. In Song 2:8 the beloved comes 'leaping upon the mountains' (Spanish 'saltando'), evoking eager approach. Isaiah 35:6 uses the simile of a stag to describe eschatological healing. Zephaniah 1:9 applies the same verb to cultic threshold-leaping, a transgressive ritual act. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9550 WITH 6 SENSES en: I-leap, I-leap-over-, leaping | es: el-que-salta, saltando, saltará | fr: [ידלג], je-leap, sautant | de: [ידלג], ich-leap, ich-leap-über- 2Sam 22:30; Ps 18:29; Song 2:8; Isa 35:6; Zeph 1:9

דָּלָה H1802 V-Piel-Perf-2ms / 1cs (5×)
to draw up (water); figuratively, to extract or lift out
A verb meaning to draw water from a well, used concretely of the daughters of the priest of Midian drawing water for their flocks at Exodus 2:16 and 2:19. Figuratively, Proverbs 20:5 speaks of a person of understanding drawing out the deep counsel hidden in another's heart. Psalm 30:1 extends the image to God drawing the psalmist up from the depths, giving the water-drawing metaphor a soteriological dimension.

(5×) To draw water from a well or cistern, and by extension to extract or lift something from a deep place. The literal sense appears in Exodus 2:16, 19, where Reuel's daughters draw water (Spanish 'sacar,' French 'tirer'). Proverbs 20:5 applies the image figuratively: a discerning person draws out ('lo sacará') the deep counsel of the heart. Psalm 30:1 uses it of divine deliverance — God drawing the psalmist up as one draws water from a pit — blending the concrete and metaphorical dimensions of the root. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-they-drew, drawing, draws-it-out | es: lo-sacará, me-levantaste, sacar | fr: drawing, et-ils-tira, il-tira | de: [ידלנה], drawing, du-haben-drawn-mich-hinauf Exod 2:16; Exod 2:19; Ps 30:1; Prov 20:5

דַּלָּה H1803a Prep-m / N-fs (2×)
hair of the head; thrum (threads hanging from a loom)
This word refers to hair hanging down from the head, or by extension, the threads (thrum) hanging from a weaver's loom. Song of Songs 7:5 uses it poetically for flowing hair, while Isaiah 38:12 employs it metaphorically in a simile about premature death—the weaver cutting the thrum from the loom represents life being cut short. The common element is something that hangs down, whether hair or unfinished threads.

(2×) The glosses reveal two contexts: 'hair/chevelure' (Song 7:5) and 'loom/telar' (Isa 38:12). Both share the imagery of something hanging down. The Song passage celebrates a woman's flowing hair, while Isaiah uses the technical weaving term for threads hanging in a loom as a poignant metaphor for life's fragility—God cuts the speaker's life 'from the loom' like a weaver finishing (or abandoning) his work. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-hair-of, from-the-loom | es: del-telar, y-la-cabellera-de | fr: [מדלה], et-la-chevelure | de: [מדלה], und-Tuer Song 7:5; Isa 38:12

דַּלָּה H1803b N-fsc (6×)

the poor, the destitute class (collective noun); also weak, feeble (adjectival use)

A feminine noun used collectively to denote the poorest stratum of society, especially those left behind in the land after the Babylonian deportations. In Jeremiah and 2 Kings, it consistently describes the impoverished remnant whom Nebuzaradan spared because they had nothing worth taking (2 Kgs 24:14; 25:12; Jer 40:7; 52:15-16). A single occurrence in Genesis 41:19 shifts from economic poverty to physical feebleness, describing Pharaoh's thin, ugly cows. French distinguishes these senses with 'poorest' for the class versus 'faible' for physical weakness.

1. poor people, the destitute class (5×) The poorest people, the destitute class – a collective feminine noun designating the lowest economic stratum of a population. All five occurrences describe those left in Judah after deportation: the poor of the land whom the Babylonians did not bother to exile (2 Kgs 24:14; 25:12; Jer 40:7; 52:15-16). English renders variously as 'the poor of' and 'the poorest of,' while Spanish 'pobres de' consistently marks this as a social class designation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-poorest-of, and-from-the-poor-of, and-some-of-the-poor-of | es: Y-de-pobres-de, pobres-de, y-de-los-pobres-de | fr: [ומדלות], [ומדלת], et-de-poorest-de | de: [ומדלות], [ומדלת], poorest-von 2Kgs 24:14; 2Kgs 25:12; Jer 40:7; Jer 52:15; Jer 52:16

2. weak, feeble (adj.) (1×) Weak or feeble in a physical or qualitative sense rather than an economic one. In Genesis 41:19, Pharaoh describes the seven ugly, thin cows in his dream, and this word captures their emaciated feebleness. English 'weak,' French 'faible,' and German 'arme' all shift away from the poverty meaning toward physical debility, distinguishing this usage from the deportation-era social class sense. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: weak | es: pobres | fr: faible | de: arme Gen 41:19

דָּלַח H1804 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-2ms (3×)

to trouble, make turbid—stirring up water with the feet

This verb means to stir up, trouble, or make water turbid, particularly by trampling with feet. All three occurrences are in Ezekiel 32, in oracles against Egypt. Verse 2 accuses Pharaoh: 'you troubled (their) waters with your feet' (parallel to 'you trampled/fouled'). Verse 13 (twice, though some emend the second) promises that waters will no longer be troubled by human or animal feet. The verb derives from roots suggesting disturbance or anxiety, here applied literally to muddying water. The imagery portrays Egypt's oppressive 'trampling' of other nations.

(3×) To trouble, stir up, or make turbid—specifically of water muddied by trampling feet. Ezekiel 32:2 uses the second masculine singular consecutive imperfect 'and you troubled' (va-tidlach) with accusative 'waters.' Ezekiel 32:13 uses the third feminine singular imperfect twice: 'will trouble them' (tidlachem)—though some scholars emend the second occurrence. Cross-linguistic glosses: English 'and you troubled/will trouble them,' Spanish 'enturbiaste/enturbiará/enturbiarán' (you muddied/will muddy/will muddy), French and German use placeholder brackets. The consistent context is feet churning water into mud, used metaphorically for Egypt's oppressive dominance. This is prophetic vocabulary for environmental and political disturbance. FLOWING WATER

en: and-you-troubled-, will-trouble-them | es: las-enturbiará, las-enturbiarán, y-enturbiaste | fr: [ותדלח], [תדלחם] | de: [ותדלח], [תדלחם] Ezek 32:2; Ezek 32:13

דְּלִי H1805 Prep-m / N-mdc / 3ms (2×)

bucket, a vessel for drawing or carrying water

This word denotes a bucket used for drawing water. Numbers 24:7 uses it in Balaam's oracle describing Israel's abundance: 'water shall flow from his buckets,' symbolizing prosperity and fruitfulness. Isaiah 40:15 employs it in a striking image of God's greatness: the nations are like a drop hanging from a bucket—utterly insignificant compared to the Creator. In both cases, the bucket serves as a measuring reference for liquid, whether blessing or comparative scale.

(2×) The translations ('bucket, cubo') are consistent across languages. Numbers 24:7 uses the dual form 'his buckets' in a blessing about Israel's abundant water supply, a precious commodity signaling divine favor. Isaiah 40:15 uses the singular in a rhetorical diminishment of nations before God—they're as negligible as a single drop clinging to a bucket's edge. Both passages use the bucket as a water-related reference point. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-a-bucket, from-his-buckets | es: de-cubos-de-él, de-un-cubo | fr: [מדלי], de-son-buckets | de: [מדלי], von-sein-buckets Num 24:7; Isa 40:15

דְּלָיָהוּ H1806 N-proper-ms (7×)

Delaiah; a theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh has drawn up/delivered,' borne by five different men.

A theophoric personal name meaning 'Yahweh has drawn up' or 'Yahweh has delivered,' compounded from the root dalah (to draw water) and the divine name. It is borne by at least five individuals: a priestly division leader in David's time (1 Chr 24:18), a prince who urged King Jehoiakim not to burn Jeremiah's scroll (Jer 36:12, 25), a descendant of Zerubbabel in the royal line (1 Chr 3:24), the head of a family that could not prove Israelite descent after exile (Ezra 2:60 = Neh 7:62), and the father of Shemaiah in Nehemiah's day (Neh 6:10).

Delaiah (proper name) (7×) Delaiah or Delayahu, a theophoric personal name meaning 'Yahweh has drawn up/delivered,' borne by five distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. These include: (a) a priest heading the twenty-third course under David (1 Chr 24:18); (b) a prince in Jehoiakim's court who interceded against burning Jeremiah's scroll (Jer 36:12, 25); (c) a descendant of Zerubbabel in the Davidic line (1 Chr 3:24); (d) the ancestor of a family unable to prove Israelite lineage after the exile (Ezra 2:60 = Neh 7:62); (e) the father of Shemaiah, a false prophet contemporary with Nehemiah (Neh 6:10). Spanish renders 'Delaias,' while English alternates between 'Delaiah' and 'Delayah.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Delaiah, Delayah, and-Delayah | es: Delaías, para-Delayahu, y-Delaya | fr: [דליה], [ודליה], [ודליהו] | de: [דליה], [ודליה], [ודליהו] 1Chr 3:24; 1Chr 24:18; Ezra 2:60; Neh 6:10; Neh 7:62

דְּלִילָה H1807 N-proper-fs (6×)

Delilah; a Philistine woman in the Valley of Sorek who betrayed Samson to the Philistine lords

The proper name of the woman from the Valley of Sorek who became Samson's lover and ultimately betrayed him to the Philistine lords. Her name may be related to the Hebrew root דלל meaning 'to hang down' or 'to be weak,' or to the Arabic word for 'coquette,' though the etymology remains debated. All six occurrences appear within a single narrative unit in Judges 16:4-18, where Delilah persistently presses Samson to reveal the secret of his strength, eventually succeeding and delivering him to his enemies.

(6×) The personal name of the Philistine (or Philistine-associated) woman who lured Samson into revealing the source of his extraordinary strength. Translations are remarkably consistent across languages—English 'Delilah,' Spanish 'Dalila,' French 'Dalila,' German 'Delila'—with slight phonological adaptations. All six attestations fall within the concentrated narrative of Judges 16:4-18, making Delilah a character whose name appears only in this single dramatic episode of seduction and betrayal. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Delilah | es: Dalila | fr: Dalila | de: Delila Judg 16:4; Judg 16:6; Judg 16:10; Judg 16:12; Judg 16:13

דָּלִיּוֹת H1808 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3ms (8×)

Branches or boughs, especially in prophetic imagery of trees representing nations (Israel, Assyria).

The plural noun daliyyot refers to the spreading branches or boughs of a tree, used almost exclusively in prophetic metaphors. Ezekiel employs the word most extensively: the vine representing Judah sends out its branches (Ezek 17:6, 7), the transplanted cedar-sprig grows noble boughs (17:23), the great cedar of Assyria boasts magnificent branches (31:7, 9, 12), and Israel's vine once had strong branches fit for rulers' scepters (19:11). Jeremiah uses it once of Israel as a green olive tree whose branches God sets ablaze (Jer 11:16). The consistent botanical imagery across all occurrences makes this a vivid term for national vitality and its loss.

its branches (8×) Branches or boughs of a tree, always in the plural and always in prophetic-metaphorical contexts depicting nations as trees. Spanish uniformly renders 'ramas/sus ramas' (branches/its branches), French uses 'branche,' and German 'Zweig/seine Zweige,' all confirming the consistent botanical sense. The possessive suffix (-av, 'its/his') appears in most occurrences, reinforcing the image of branches belonging to a specific tree-nation. Key passages include the vine allegory of Ezekiel 17:6-7, the cedar of Assyria in Ezekiel 31:7-12, and Jeremiah's olive tree (Jer 11:16). BRANCHES AND SHOOTS
en: and-branches-its, branches-its, its-branches | es: ramas-sus, sus-ramas, y-sus-ramas | fr: [דליותיו], branche, et-branche | de: Zweig, [דליותיו], seine-Zweige Jer 11:16; Ezek 17:6; Ezek 17:7; Ezek 17:23; Ezek 19:11

דָּלַל H1809 V-Qal-Perf-1cp (9×)

To hang down, be low; hence to languish, be brought low, diminish in strength or resources.

From a root meaning 'to hang' or 'dangle,' dalal describes downward movement in both physical and metaphorical registers. Miners hang suspended in shafts (Job 28:4), and the legs of the lame dangle uselessly (Prov 26:7). More often it portrays human abasement – Israel brought low before Midian (Judg 6:6), the psalmist crying 'I was brought low and he saved me' (Ps 116:6). The word also captures the fading of national strength: rivers drying up (Isa 19:6), the glory of Jacob growing thin (Isa 17:4), and Hezekiah's eyes failing in illness (Isa 38:14). Arabic cognates confirm the semantic span: tadalla ('to hang down') and da'ufa ('to be weak').

1. be brought low, be humbled (4×) To be brought low, humbled, reduced to a state of weakness or abasement – typically of persons in distress before God. Spanish 'estaba abatido' and 'estamos muy debilitados' capture the depth of this lowering. Psalm 116:6 is paradigmatic: 'I was brought low, and he saved me.' Judges 6:6 describes Israel's collective abasement under Midianite oppression, while Psalms 79:8 and 142:6 voice communal and individual desperation. WITHERING AND FADING
en: I-am-brought-low, I-was-brought-low, and-was-impoverished | es: Y-se-empobreció, estaba-abatido, estamos-muy-debilitados | fr: et-était-impoverished, languir | de: ich-Krieg-gebracht-niedrig, ich-bin-erniedrigt, und-war-impoverished Judg 6:6; Ps 79:8; Ps 116:6; Ps 142:6

2. diminish, become poor, languish (3×) To diminish, decline, become thin or impoverished – said of nations, waters, or physical vitality fading away. Isaiah 19:6 uses it of Egypt's rivers drying up (Spanish 'disminuirán'), Isaiah 17:4 of Jacob's glory growing lean, and Isaiah 38:14 of Hezekiah's failing eyes. The progression from physical diminishment to national decline shows how Hebrew maps concrete imagery onto geopolitical reality. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS
en: my-eyes, will-become-poor, will-diminish | es: Desfallecieron, disminuirán, será-empobrecida | fr: [דלו], [דללו], [ידל] | de: [דלו], [דללו], [ידל] Isa 17:4; Isa 19:6; Isa 38:14

3. hang down, dangle (2×) To hang down, dangle, droop – the most physical and likely original sense of the root. Job 28:4 pictures miners suspended on ropes, swaying far from human paths, while Proverbs 26:7 compares the legs of the lame that 'hang limp' (dalyu) to a proverb in the mouth of fools. Arabic tadaldala ('to dangle, swing') and Spanish 'cuelgan' ('they hang') confirm this concrete spatial meaning. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS
en: hang-limp, they-hang-down | es: Cuelgan, cuelgan | fr: דלו ,דליו | de: [דלו], [דליו] Job 28:4; Prov 26:7

דִּלְעָן H1810 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

A town in the lowland territory allotted to the tribe of Judah

Dilean appears only in Joshua's boundary descriptions as one of the cities in Judah's inheritance. Located in the Shephelah region, it was part of the same district as Lachish and Eglon. The town's exact location remains uncertain to archaeologists, though it clearly belonged to Judah's western settlements in the fertile lowlands. The name itself may relate to roots suggesting 'hanging' or 'dangling,' though this etymology is speculative. Like many minor towns in Joshua's lists, Dilean represents the detailed fulfillment of God's land promises to the tribes.

(1×) Joshua 15:38 places Dilean in the Shephelah district of Judah, listed among fourteen towns in that administrative region. The consistent transliteration across languages (Dileán, Dilan) reflects its function as a proper geographical name. Its appearance in these ancient boundary lists, while archeologically unconfirmed, testifies to the meticulous preservation of tribal land records in Israel's historical memory. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Dilan | es: y-Dileán | fr: et-Dilan | de: und-Dilan Josh 15:38

דָּלַף H1811 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (3×)

to drip, drop, leak—of weeping eyes or leaking roofs

This verb describes the action of dripping or dropping, whether of tears or water. Job 16:20 laments 'my eye drips/weeps to God' (dalefah eini el-Eloah). Psalm 119:28 uses it figuratively: 'my soul weeps (itself away) from sorrow' (dalefah nafshi mittugah). Ecclesiastes 10:18 uses it of a deteriorating house: 'the house leaks' (yidlof habayit) through neglected repairs. The verb captures the image of liquid slowly dripping or oozing—tears falling, life ebbing away, water seeping through cracks. It appears only in Wisdom literature.

(3×) To drip, drop, or leak, appearing three times in Wisdom literature. Job 16:20 and Psalm 119:28 both use the perfect 'dalefah' with weeping: 'my eye drips to God' and 'my soul weeps from sorrow'—tears flowing or life draining away. Ecclesiastes 10:18 uses the imperfect 'yidlof': 'the house leaks' due to lazy hands not maintaining the roof. Cross-linguistic glosses: English 'weeps/leaks,' Spanish 'gotea/goteará' (drips/will drip), French 'suinter/דלפה/ידלף' (to ooze/untransliterated forms), German uses brackets. The semantic range spans emotional weeping (tears dripping) and physical leaking (water dripping through neglected roofs). This is poetic vocabulary for gradual, drop-by-drop loss. DRIPPING LIQUID en: leaks, weeps | es: Gotea, gotea, goteará | fr: suinter, ידלף ,דלפה | de: [דלפה], [ידלף], weint Job 16:20; Ps 119:28; Eccl 10:18

דֶּלֶף H1812 N-ms (2×)

continual dripping, especially of rain through a roof

This term describes the persistent, irritating drip of water, particularly rain leaking through a roof. Both occurrences in Proverbs use it figuratively to characterize a contentious wife: her quarreling is like a continual dripping on a rainy day (19:13, 27:15). The image captures something small but relentless and maddening, transforming the home from a place of shelter into a source of constant annoyance. The metaphor would resonate powerfully in a climate where keeping rain out was a daily concern.

(2×) The multilingual glosses ('dripping, gotera, continual leak') confirm the image of water dripping persistently. Both Proverbs passages compare a quarrelsome woman to this phenomenon—not a sudden storm but an endless, nerve-fraying drip-drip-drip. Proverbs 19:13 calls it 'a continual dripping,' while 27:15 extends the comparison on a 'rainy day.' The genius of the metaphor is its focus on relentless irritation rather than dramatic conflict. DRIPPING LIQUID
en: a-dripping, and-dripping | es: Gotera, y-gotera | fr: et-דלף ,ודלף | de: [דלף], [ודלף] Prov 19:13; Prov 27:15

דַּלְפוֹן H1813 N-proper-ms (1×)

One of Haman's ten sons, executed in the events of Purim

Dalphon appears exclusively in the Book of Esther as the second son of Haman listed among those killed by the Jews in Susa. The name is Persian, reflecting the foreign setting of the narrative. Along with his nine brothers, Dalphon was executed and hanged on the day the Jews defended themselves against their enemies—though notably, Esther's decree forbade taking plunder. The ten names in this list have intrigued scholars for their Persian linguistics and the theological significance of their total decimation, ending Haman's line completely.

(1×) Esther 9:7 identifies Dalphon in the catalog of Haman's sons slain during the Jews' defensive action. The preservation of all ten names—unusual in Hebrew narrative—emphasizes the complete reversal of Haman's genocidal plot. French and German leave the name untransliterated, suggesting textual difficulty or simply maintaining the Persian proper noun. The execution of Haman's entire male line ensured that no one could revive his vendetta against the Jewish people. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Dalphon | es: Dalfón | fr: [דלפון] | de: [דלפון] Esth 9:7

דְּלַק H1814 Prep-m / V-Qal-Inf (9×)

To hotly pursue, chase with burning intensity; also: to burn, kindle, be inflamed

A vivid verb that fuses the imagery of fire with relentless pursuit. In its 'chase' sense, dalaq describes Laban hotly pursuing Jacob (Gen 31:36), the Israelites chasing the Philistines after Goliath's fall (1 Sam 17:53), and enemy pursuers who are 'swifter than eagles' hounding the fugitives of Jerusalem (Lam 4:19). In its 'burn' sense, it describes literal fire kindling and consuming (Ezek 24:10; Obad 1:18) and metaphorical burning – wine that 'inflames' (Isa 5:11) and 'burning lips' that mask a wicked heart (Prov 26:23). The two senses are not unrelated: to pursue 'hotly' is to chase with burning ardor, and the semantic bridge between fire and passionate pursuit runs through the heart of the word.

1. pursue hotly, chase (5×) To hotly pursue, chase with burning eagerness or intensity. Used of aggressive, relentless chasing: Laban demands 'why have you hotly pursued me?' (Gen 31:36), the Israelites chase fleeing Philistines (1 Sam 17:53), and Jerusalem's persecutors are 'swifter than eagles – they chased us' (Lam 4:19). Spanish renders both 'perseguir' (pursue) and 'nos-persiguieron' (they pursued us); the Psalms usage (Ps 10:2) applies it to the wicked who 'hotly pursue' the poor. The word conveys not mere following but fierce, burning determination in the chase. PURSUING AND CHASING

en: for-the-burning-ones, from-chasing, is-hotly-pursued | es: arde, de-perseguir, nos-persiguieron | fr: [דלקנו], de-chasing, poursuivre | de: [דלקנו], du-gejagt-hast, für-der-burning-Leute Gen 31:36; 1Sam 17:53; Ps 7:13; Ps 10:2; Lam 4:19

2. burn, kindle, be inflamed (4×) To burn, kindle, or be inflamed – both literal fire and metaphorical burning. Obadiah 1:18 has the house of Joseph burning among Edom ('and they shall burn among them'), and Ezekiel 24:10 commands 'kindle the fire' in the judgment-pot allegory. Metaphorically, Isaiah 5:11 describes wine that 'inflames' revelers, and Proverbs 26:23 pairs 'burning lips' (sephatayim dolqim) with a wicked heart – fervent speech concealing malice. English distinguishes 'burning' from 'inflames'; Spanish uses 'ardientes' (burning) and 'enciende' (kindles). The Hiphil causative yedliqem in Isa 5:11 makes explicit the transitive sense: wine kindles or inflames those who chase after it. BURN KINDLE FLAME

en: and-they-will-burn, burning, inflames-them | es: ardientes, enciende, los-inflama | fr: [ידליקם], enflammer, et-ils-embraseront | de: [דלקים], [הדלק], [ידליקם] Prov 26:23; Isa 5:11; Ezek 24:10; Obad 1:18

דְּלַק H1815 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

Burning, ablaze; used of fire in active combustion

This Aramaic participle describes fire in its burning state, appearing in Daniel's throne vision. The term emphasizes active, ongoing combustion rather than potential for burning. In Daniel's apocalyptic imagery, God's throne features flames of fire, with wheels that are burning fire—the repetition of fiery imagery creating an overwhelming sense of holiness and judgment. The French 'étincelle' (spark) oddly diverges from other languages, which maintain the continuous burning sense. This single biblical use creates one of Scripture's most visually powerful throne visions.

(1×) Daniel 7:9 depicts the Ancient of Days with a throne of 'fiery flames' and wheels of 'burning fire,' using this Aramaic participle to describe the active, blazing state. The vision echoes Ezekiel's chariot throne but intensifies the fire imagery. The term's participial form emphasizes the continuous, present action—this is not fire that once burned or will burn, but fire burning now, conveying the immediate, awesome presence of the divine Judge. BURN KINDLE FLAME en: burning | es: ardiente | fr: étincelle | de: [דלק] Dan 7:9

דַּלֶּקֶת H1816 Conj-w (1×)

Inflammation or burning fever, a disease characterized by internal heat

This medical term appears in the covenant curses of Deuteronomy, denoting a feverish inflammatory condition. Related to the root for 'burning,' it describes illness characterized by abnormal internal heat. Moses lists it among the diseases God would send for disobedience, alongside consumption and fever—suggesting a distinct condition, possibly chronic inflammation or infectious fever. The multilingual consistency in translation (inflamación, inflammation) indicates a clear medical concept. Ancient Israel recognized fever and inflammation as serious, often fatal conditions in an era without antibiotics.

(1×) Deuteronomy 28:22 warns that covenant-breaking would bring 'consumption, fever, and inflammation' along with other disasters. The triad of terms suggests escalating or distinct disease states, with this word specifically denoting inflammatory conditions. The curse's comprehensive nature—covering agricultural, military, and medical disasters—emphasizes the all-encompassing consequences of breaking covenant. Such warnings took seriously the connection between spiritual faithfulness and physical wellbeing in Israel's covenant relationship. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: and-with-inflammation | es: y-con-inflamación | fr: et-avec-inflammation | de: und-mit-inflammation Deut 28:22

דָּל H1817a N-msc (1×)

A door or gate, used figuratively for the opening of the lips

While this word typically means 'door' in physical contexts, its sole occurrence as this homonym appears in Psalm 141 where the psalmist asks God to guard the door of his lips. This figurative use treats the mouth as a house with a door that needs divine guarding. The image powerfully captures the need for restraint in speech—doors control access, and the tongue needs similar regulation. Phoenician cognates confirm the basic meaning 'door,' making the metaphorical application all the more vivid.

(1×) Psalm 141:3 contains the famous prayer: 'Set a guard, O LORD, over my mouth; keep watch over the door of my lips.' This architectural metaphor treats speech as a space requiring controlled entry and exit. The 'door' image suggests that words, like visitors, should be screened before admission or departure. The psalmist's request for divine help acknowledges that self-control in speech requires more than human willpower—it needs God's active guardianship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: door-of | es: puerta-de | fr: porte | de: door-of Ps 141:3

דֶּלֶת H1817b N-fdc / 2ms (2×)

door, the entrance or opening of a dwelling or chamber

This word refers to a door or entrance. Isaiah 26:20 uses it twice in the same verse (Ketiv and Qere variants), instructing the people to enter their chambers and shut the door behind them while God's judgment passes. The imagery evokes the Passover, where Israel sheltered behind closed doors while the destroyer passed through Egypt. The door represents the threshold between safety and danger, a boundary of divine protection.

(2×) The dual occurrence in Isaiah 26:20 (textual variant) emphasizes the instruction to shut 'your door(s)' while taking refuge. Spanish and French variants show textual uncertainty ('tu puerta' vs 'tus puertas'), but the meaning is clear: close the entrance to your refuge chamber. The echo of Exodus 12 (Passover) gives the door theological weight—it marks the boundary where God's protective presence shields his people from his own wrath. OPENING AND SHUTTING en: behind-you, your-doors | es: (tu-puerta), [tus-puertas] | fr: [(דלתך)], [[דלתיך]] | de: [(דלתך)], [[דלתיך]] Isa 26:20

דֶּלֶת H1817c N-fpc / 3ms (86×)

Door or gate; the hinged closure of an opening in a building, room, city wall, or sacred structure.

Refers to the physical door or gate that closes an entryway, whether of a house, city, temple, or chamber. In Genesis 19:9-10 the men of Sodom press against Lot's door while the angels pull him inside and shut it, vividly illustrating the door as threshold between safety and danger. The dual form (deletayim) reflects the characteristic double-leaf construction of ancient Near Eastern doors. Cognate Akkadian daltu confirms the same basic sense across Semitic languages. At Jeremiah 36:23 the 'columns' of a scroll likely reflect the word used metaphorically for the panels or leaves of the document, and at 2 Kings 12:9 the door of a chest serves as its lid or opening cover.

1. door, gate (84×) The primary and overwhelmingly dominant sense: a physical door or gate, the movable barrier that closes an opening in a wall, building, or enclosure. Attested 84 times across diverse contexts—household doors (Gen 19:9-10; Judg 3:23-25), city gates (Deut 3:5; Neh 3:3), and temple doors (1 Kgs 6:34; Ezek 41:24). Multilingual evidence is uniform: Spanish 'puerta,' French 'porte,' German 'Tuer' all translate straightforwardly, confirming no ambiguity in this core meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: -the-doors-of, The-doors-of, doors-of | es: Puertas-de, la-puerta, las-puertas-de | fr: -le-portes-de, [דלתות], la-porte | de: -der-Tueren-von, Tueren, Tueren-von Gen 19:9; Gen 19:10; Exod 21:6; Judg 3:23; Judg 3:24

2. (1×) At Jeremiah 36:23, the word appears to denote the 'columns' or leaves of a scroll, an extension from the door-leaf concept to the panels of a written document. English renders 'columns,' while Spanish has 'columnas.' French and German leave the Hebrew untranslated, signaling the unusual metaphorical usage. The king cuts the scroll's delot with a scribe's knife—the panels of the scroll are conceptually its 'doors' or foldable sections. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: columns | es: columnas | fr: [דלתות] | de: [דלתות] Jer 36:23

3. (1×) At 2 Kings 12:9 the word describes the opening or lid of a collection chest—literally 'in its door'—where the priest Jehoiada bored a hole. English 'in its door,' Spanish 'en tapa de ella' (in its lid), and French 'dans son porte' all point to a cover or hatch-like closure, extending the door concept to a container's access panel rather than a room's entryway. OPENING AND SHUTTING en: in-its-door | es: en-tapa-de-ella | fr: dans-son-porte | de: in-sein-Tuer 2Kgs 12:9

דָּם H1818 Prep-l / N-msc / 3mp (362×)

Blood as physical substance (sacrificial, dietary, bodily); bloodshed or violence (metonymic); bloodguilt or blood-liability (juridical).

Dam is a word that pulses through the entire sacrificial, moral, and legal fabric of the Hebrew Bible. At its most concrete, it is the red fluid of life – sprinkled on doorposts at Passover (Exod 12:7), poured at the base of the altar (Lev 4:30), and forbidden as food because 'the life is in the blood' (Lev 17:11). In its metonymic extension, often signaled by the plural damim, blood stands for violence itself: Ezekiel's 'city of bloods' (Ezek 22:2) and the cry of Abel's blood 'from the ground' (Gen 4:10). A further juridical specialization appears in formulas like 'his blood be upon his head' (Josh 2:19), where damim denotes the guilt or liability for shedding blood.

1. blood (literal fluid) (190×) Split from sense 91756. Criteria: The physical red fluid in humans and animals: sacrificial blood on altars (Exod 12:7, Lev 4:30), dietary prohibitions (Gen 9:4, Lev 17:11-14), menstrual blood (Lev 12:7), wounds.
en: the-blood | es: la-sangre | fr: le-sang | de: das-Blut, der-Blut Exod 7:19; Exod 7:21; Exod 12:7; Exod 12:13

2. bloodguilt, blood-liability (juridical) (69×) Split from sense 91756. Criteria: Legal responsibility for bloodshed, guilt requiring atonement. The lemma gloss explicitly lists 'bloodguilt or blood-liability (juridical)' as a distinct sense.
en: blood, blood-, blood-of | es: la-sangre, la-sangre-, sangre | fr: le-sang, sang, sang- | de: Blut, Blut-, Blut-von Gen 42:22; Lev 20:9; Lev 20:11; Lev 20:12; Lev 20:13

3. bloodshed, violence (metonymic) (68×) Split from sense 91756. Criteria: Metonymic use for violent death, murder, or bloodshed. The lemma gloss explicitly lists 'bloodshed or violence (metonymic)' as a distinct sense.
en: blood, blood-of, the-blood | es: la-sangre, sangre, sangre-de | fr: le-sang, sang | de: Blut, das-Blut, der-Blut Gen 9:6; Gen 37:22; Lev 17:4

4. bloodshed, violence, murder (28×) Bloodshed, violence, or murder by metonymy, where blood stands for the act of killing rather than the substance itself. Often marked by the plural damim, as in 'city of bloods' (Nah 3:1; Ezek 22:2) or 'innocent blood' shed unjustly (Deut 19:10; Jer 22:3). The cry of Abel's blood 'from the ground' (Gen 4:10-11) is the paradigmatic instance. Spanish 'las-sangres' and German 'der-bloodshed' reflect translators' effort to capture this shift from substance to event. Includes contexts of ambush, conspiracy, and prophetic denunciation of violence. BLOOD AND BLOODSHED
en: because-of-blood-of, blood, bloodshed | es: las-sangres, las-sangres?, por-sangre-de | fr: le-sang-versé, sang | de: Blut, der-bloodshed, in-Blut-von Gen 4:10; Gen 4:11; Exod 4:25; Exod 4:26; 1Sam 25:26

5. bloodguilt, blood-liability (6×) Bloodguilt or blood-liability, the juridical responsibility incurred by shedding blood. Appears in legal formulas: 'his blood shall be upon him' (Lev 20:9), 'his blood be upon his own head' (Josh 2:19; 2 Sam 1:16), and David's plea 'deliver me from bloodguilt' (Ps 51:14[16]). English 'bloodguilt' and 'bloodguiltiness' along with German 'bloodguilt' and French 'sang-versé' distinguish this from mere violence (sense 2) by emphasizing legal culpability. Found in casuistic law (Exod 22:2-3) and Deuteronomic legislation (Deut 19:10; 22:8). BLOOD AND BLOODSHED
en: and-his-bloodguilt, bloodguilt, from-bloodguiltiness | es: de-sangres, sangre, sangres | fr: de-sang, et-sang, sang-versé | de: bloodguilt, und-Blut, von-Blut Exod 22:2; Exod 22:3; Deut 19:10; Deut 22:8; Ps 51:14

דָּמָה H1819 V-Qal-Perf-2ms (29×)

To be like, resemble; to liken, compare; to think, imagine, plan; a root where likeness and thought intertwine.

Damah is one of those Hebrew roots where etymology opens a window onto ancient cognition. The basic meaning is 'be like, resemble' — the Song of Songs' lover is 'like a gazelle' (Song 2:9), and the psalmist 'is like a pelican of the wilderness' (Ps 102:6). But in the Piel intensive stem, the verb shifts to active comparison — 'to whom will you liken God?' (Isa 40:18) — and then, remarkably, to thinking and imagining, as though to form a mental likeness is to think itself. This semantic bridge from 'resemble' to 'think/plan' is not unique to Hebrew (the Arabic cognate retains the 'image' connection), but it is unusually transparent here. The word also produces the crucial theological noun demuth ('likeness'), as in humanity being made in God's 'likeness' (Gen 1:26).

1. be like, resemble (14×) To be like, resemble: the basic Qal/Nifal intransitive sense of bearing likeness or being similar to something. The Song of Songs is richest here — the beloved is like a gazelle (Song 2:9, 17; 8:14), the woman's stature is like a palm tree (Song 7:8). In the Psalms, the sufferer 'is like' a desert bird (Ps 102:6) and humans are 'like' a breath (Ps 144:4). Spanish semejante and French semblable both select the stative similarity word rather than an active verb of comparison. Fourteen occurrences make this the largest cluster, and the root's semantic anchor. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON en: I-am-like, and-be-like-, are-you-like | es: Semejante, Soy-semejante, es-

semejante | fr: Semblable-est, et-ressembler, et-sois-semblable, | de: [דומה], [דמה], [דמן] Ps 89:6; Ps 102:6; Ps 144:4; Song 2:9; Song 2:17

2. think, imagine, plan (8×) To think, imagine, plan, intend: the Piel stem in its cognitive extension, where 'forming a likeness' becomes 'forming a thought.' Judges 20:5 — 'they intended to kill me'; 2 Samuel 21:5 — 'the man who planned against us'; Esther 4:13 — 'do not imagine you will escape.' The semantic journey from resemblance to cognition is striking and reflected in the Arabic cognate's 'image/effigy' meaning. Spanish pensaron and French intended both reach for pure cognitive vocabulary, showing the sense has fully detached from physical likeness. Eight occurrences spanning narrative, wisdom, and prophetic literature. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: I-have-planned, I-thought, imagine | es: he-pensado, pensamos, pensaron | fr: [חדמי], ils-intended, je-thought | de: [חדמי], du-Gedanke, gleichen Num 33:56; Judg 20:5; 2Sam 21:5; Esth 4:13; Ps 48:9

3. liken, compare to (5×) To liken, compare to: the Piel in its transitive comparative use, where the speaker actively draws an analogy. Isaiah's great monotheistic challenge — 'To whom will you liken God? To what image will you compare him?' (Isa 40:18, 25; 46:5) — uses this sense with devastating rhetorical force. Lamentations 2:13 asks 'what can I compare to you, O daughter of Jerusalem?' Spanish asemejareis and te-comparare show the active, deliberate comparison. Song 1:9 offers a tender instance: 'to a mare among Pharaoh's chariots I compare you.' Five occurrences, concentrated in poetry. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: El, I-liken-you, shall-I-compare | es: asemejaréis, me-asemejaréis, te-compararé | fr: je-te-compare,, ressembler, sol | de: Erde, [דמיתיך], gleichen Song 1:9; Isa 40:18; Isa 40:25; Isa 46:5; Lam 2:13

4. (1×) To make oneself like, self-assimilate: the Hitpael reflexive at Isaiah 14:14, where the king of Babylon declares 'I will make myself like the Most High.' The reflexive force indicates deliberate, presumptuous self-elevation — not natural resemblance but willed usurpation of divine likeness. Spanish me-hare-semejante preserves the reflexive. A single occurrence, but theologically loaded as the archetype of hubristic aspiration to divine status. EARTH AND LAND

en: I-will-make-myself-like | es: me-haré-semejante | fr: sol | de: Erde Isa 14:14

5. (1×) To use parables or similitudes: a specialized Piel usage in Hosea 12:10, where God says 'I spoke through the prophets and I used parables.' Here the verb moves from comparing things to the prophetic practice of teaching through extended figurative comparisons — the parabolic method itself. Spanish uso-parabolas and French semblable both point toward the rhetorical-device interpretation. One occurrence, but it bridges the gap between the root's 'likeness' semantics and the prophetic communication tradition. EARTH AND LAND

en: I-use-parables | es: usé-parábolas | fr: semblable | de: Erde Hos 12:10

דָּמָה H1820 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (16×)

To be destroyed, perish, or be cut off; also to cease or be still; Qal transitive: to destroy.

Damah II is a word of sudden, often violent ending – quite distinct from its homonym meaning 'to resemble.' In the Nifal it carries the heaviest theological weight: cities are 'destroyed' overnight (Isa 15:1), entire peoples 'perish' for lack of knowledge (Hos 4:6), and Isaiah cries 'I am ruined!' upon seeing the Lord's holiness (Isa 6:5). The Qal intransitive offers a quieter register: Jeremiah's eyes will not 'cease' from weeping (Jer 14:17; Lam 3:49). The Qal transitive reveals the divine agent behind the destruction – God himself 'destroys' the daughter of Zion (Jer 6:2) and brings the prophet's mother to ruin (Hos 4:5).

1. be destroyed, perish (Nifal) (12×) To be destroyed, perish, or be cut off – the Nifal passive-reflexive expressing ruin that befalls cities, peoples, and individuals. Moab's Ar and Kir are 'destroyed in a night' (Isa 15:1), God's people 'perish for lack of knowledge' (Hos 4:6), and Isaiah declares 'I am ruined' before divine glory (Isa 6:5). Spanish 'destruido/destruida' and French 'aneantir/detruire' converge on total annihilation. Twelve occurrences dominate the word's profile, nearly all in prophetic judgment oracles. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: Are-destroyed, I-am-ruined, being-cut-off | es: Es-destruido, destruida, destruido | fr: anéantir, détruire, se-taire | de: [נדמה], [נדמיתי], [נדמתה] Ps 49:12; Ps 49:20; Isa 6:5; Isa 15:1

2. cease, be still (Qal intransitive) (2×) To cease, become still, or stop – the Qal intransitive indicating the halting of an ongoing action. Jeremiah commands that his eyes not 'cease' from tears (Jer 14:17), and the Lamentations poet's eye does not 'stop' without respite (Lam 3:49). Spanish 'cesa/cesen' and the pairing with weeping imagery set this apart from the destruction senses. Only two occurrences, both in contexts of unrelenting grief. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: ceases, let-them-cease | es: cesa, cesen | fr: se-taire | de: [תדמינה], verging Jer 14:17; Lam 3:49

3. destroy (Qal transitive) (2×) To destroy or bring to ruin actively – the Qal transitive where God is the agent who cuts off. God declares 'I have destroyed' the daughter of Zion, likened to a lovely pasture (Jer 6:2), and threatens 'I will destroy your mother' in Hosea's indictment of Israel (Hos 4:5). Spanish 'destruire' mirrors the active causation. Two occurrences, both with God as explicit subject, distinguish this from the Nifal passive. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: I-have-destroyed, and-I-will-destroy | es: destruiré, y-destruiré | fr: et-détruire, se-taire | de: [דמיתי], und-verging Jer 6:2; Hos 4:5

דְּמָה H1821 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (2×)

be like, resemble, be similar to

This Aramaic verb means 'to be like' or 'to resemble.' In Daniel 3:25, Nebuchadnezzar observes a fourth figure in the fiery furnace who looks 'like a son of the gods.' In Daniel 7:5, the second beast in Daniel's vision 'was like a bear.' The word expresses visual or essential similarity, comparing one thing to another to convey understanding of the unfamiliar through the familiar.

(2×) The glosses ('like, semejante, ressembler') consistently indicate comparison or resemblance. In both Daniel passages, the verb introduces a simile: the mysterious fourth figure resembles a divine being (3:25), while the apocalyptic beast resembles a bear (7:5). The Aramaic form appears in different participial forms (masculine and feminine), but both convey the fundamental idea of likeness or similarity in appearance or nature. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: like | es: semejante | fr: ressembler | de: [דמה], [דמיה] Dan 3:25; Dan 7:5

דְּמָה H1822 Prep-k / N-fs (1×)

One silenced, destroyed, or brought to ruin; the state of being made desolate

This difficult word appears in Ezekiel's lament over Tyre, with both form and meaning debated. The context is a rhetorical question about Tyre's uniqueness, comparing the great maritime city in her destruction to something silenced or annihilated. The root relates to silence or stillness, possibly suggesting the deadly quiet after devastation. Textual variants and ancient versions struggled with this word—some reading 'the destroyed,' others 'the silenced.' The French 'destruction' and Spanish 'como silenciada' reflect this interpretive spread.

(1×) Ezekiel 27:32 poses the question: 'Who is like Tyre, like one silenced in the midst of the sea?' The comparison emphasizes the shocking reversal of the noisy, bustling trading port into deathly silence. Whether the term means 'destroyed,' 'silenced,' or both, the image is haunting: the city that filled the earth with commercial chatter now sits mute in her ruins. The maritime location ('midst of the sea') intensifies the isolation and completeness of her fall. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: like-the-silenced | es: como-silenciada | fr: destruction | de: [כדמה] Ezek 27:32

דְּמוּת H1823 Conj-w / N-fsc (25×)

Likeness, resemblance, or form; the quality of being similar in appearance, used of God's image, visionary forms, and concrete designs.

A noun expressing resemblance or similitude, most famously appearing in Genesis 1:26 where humanity is made 'in our likeness.' In Ezekiel's visions it describes the approximate appearance of heavenly beings and thrones — something that looked like but defied full description. The Spanish 'semejanza' and German 'Gleichheit' consistently render the abstract sense of resemblance, while at 2 Kings 16:10 the word shifts to a concrete 'pattern' or 'design' — a blueprint Ahaz sent from Damascus. This range from divine image to architectural model shows how Hebrew thought held together abstract likeness and tangible form.

1. likeness, resemblance, similitude (24×) Abstract resemblance or similitude — the quality of being like something. Central to the imago Dei theology of Genesis 1:26 and 5:1-3, where it pairs with tselem ('image'). Spanish consistently uses 'semejanza' and French 'ressemblance,' confirming the comparative meaning. In Ezekiel's throne visions (1:5, 26; 10:1), it functions as an approximation marker: 'the likeness of...' signals that what the prophet saw was beyond precise description yet bore recognizable form. Also used in simile at Psalm 58:4 and Daniel 10:16. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-likeness-our, and-likeness-of, like-the-likeness-of | es: Y-figura-de, Y-semejanza, Y-semejanza-de | fr: [דמות], [ודמות], comme-ressemblance | de: Gleichnis, [דמות], nach-unserer-Gleichheit Gen 1:26; Gen 5:1; Gen 5:3; 2Chr 4:3; Ps 58:4

2. pattern, form, design (1×) A concrete pattern, model, or design meant for replication. At 2 Kings 16:10 Ahaz sends the 'demut' of the Damascus altar to Uriah the priest — here Spanish shifts to 'diseno' (design) rather than 'semejanza,' and the context demands a physical blueprint rather than abstract similarity. This single occurrence stands apart from the word's dominant usage, showing a practical, architectural extension of the root idea of likeness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: likeness-of | es: diseño-de | fr: likeness-de | de: likeness-von 2Kgs 16:10

דְּמִי H1824 N-ms (4×)

Cessation, quiet, rest; silence or stillness, especially in pleas that God not remain inactive.

Denotes a state of stillness, quiet, or cessation. It appears most memorably in urgent prayers asking God not to keep silent—'do not hold your peace' (Ps 83:1)—and in Isaiah's watchmen who are told to give God no rest until Jerusalem is established (Isa 62:6–7). Hezekiah's poignant phrase 'in the quiet of my days' (Isa 38:10) uses it to evoke the undisturbed prime of life. The multilingual evidence splits: English and Spanish render 'rest/silence,' while some German and French versions transliterate the Hebrew, reflecting the term's interpretive difficulty.

(4×) Quiet, rest, silence, cessation — a stillness that may be peaceful or troubling depending on context. In Ps 83:1, the psalmist begs God to break his silence (אַל־דְּמִי לָךְ), paralleled with 'do not be deaf' and 'do not be still.' Isaiah 62:6–7 uses it twice: the watchmen must not be quiet, and must give God no rest. In Isa 38:10, Hezekiah speaks of 'the quiet of my days' (בִּדְמִי יָמַי), referring to the calm midpoint of life cut short. Spanish 'silencio/descanso' and English 'rest/silence' both capture the dual register of peaceful repose and unsettling inactivity. REST AND REFRESHMENT en: in-the-middle, rest, silence | es: En-la-mitad, descanso, silencio- | fr: [בדמי], repos, sang-de | de: Blut-von, [בדמי], silence Ps 83:1; Isa 38:10; Isa 62:6; Isa 62:7

דִּמְיוֹן H1825 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

Likeness, resemblance, or similarity; the quality of being like something else

This noun denotes similarity or resemblance, appearing in a vivid simile from the Psalms. The psalmist describes his enemy's likeness as being like a lion—not that the enemy is literally lion-like in appearance, but that his predatory nature resembles a lion's hunting behavior. The term focuses on the quality of resemblance itself, making it slightly more abstract than simple comparison words. Spanish 'semejanza' and French 'ressemblance' perfectly capture this sense of bearing similarity to something else.

(1×) Psalm 17:12 declares, 'His likeness is as a lion eager to tear'—a powerful image of the psalmist's dangerous enemy. The word emphasizes not just comparison but the quality of resemblance: the enemy doesn't merely act like a lion; his very nature bears the likeness of a predator. This makes the psalmist's plea for divine protection more urgent. The lion simile evokes raw power, stealth, and deadly intent, all channeled into the enemy's pursuit. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-likeness | es: su-semejanza | fr: ressemblance | de: sein-likeness Ps 17:12

דָּמַם H1826a V-Nifal-Imperf-3mp (29×)

To be silent, be still, cease; from voluntary hush before God to forced destruction; also to stand still and to calm.

Damam covers an evocative range from reverent hush to cosmic standstill to annihilating judgment. At one end, the psalmist counsels 'be still before the LORD and wait patiently for him' (Ps 37:7) — a chosen silence of trust. At the other extreme, Jeremiah's prophetic doom oracles use the Nifal to declare that entire nations will 'be silenced,' meaning destroyed and reduced to nothing (Jer 49:26; 50:30). Between these poles stands one of the Bible's most dramatic scenes: Joshua commanding the sun to 'stand still' at Gibeon (Josh 10:12), where silence becomes cosmic cessation of motion. The word's emotional palette is completed by the tender Piel of Psalm 131:2 — 'I have calmed and quieted my soul, like a weaned child with its mother.'

1. be silent, keep quiet (16×) To be silent, keep quiet, refrain from speech or sound: the basic Qal intransitive sense and the largest cluster (16 occurrences). Aaron 'was silent' after the death of his sons (Lev 10:3) — a silence of grief and submission. The wise man 'keeps silent' in an evil time (Amos 5:13). The psalmist commands his own soul to 'be still' before God (Ps 4:4; 62:5). Lamentations 2:10 and 3:28 describe the elders and the mourner sitting in silence. Spanish calla and French se-taire select voluntary, speech-related silence. The Ethiopic cognate preserves the 'be stunned, stupefied' overtone that sometimes colors the Hebrew. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: and-I-was-silent, and-be-silent, and-be-still | es: Calla, callan, callará | fr: [דום], [דומי], [ודמו] | de: Blut, [וידם], [וידמו] Exod 15:16; Lev 10:3; Job 29:21; Job 31:34; Ps 4:4

2. be silenced, perish (6×) To be silenced, be cut off, perish: Nifal and related forms where silence is imposed as destruction or divine judgment. The wicked 'are silenced in darkness' (1 Sam 2:9); Jeremiah declares that the young men of Damascus, Kedar, and Babylon 'shall be silenced' — that is, destroyed (Jer 49:26; 50:30). In Jer 25:37 'the peaceful folds are silenced because of the fierce anger of the LORD.' Spanish enmudecerán and perezcan ('perish') show the oscillation between 'silenced' and 'destroyed.' Korean and Swahili renderings similarly toggle between silence and annihilation vocabulary. Six occurrences, all in prophetic judgment contexts. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: And-are-silenced, and-let-us-be-silenced-, are-silenced | es: Y-enmudecerán, enmudecerán, perezcan | fr: et-se-taire, se-taire, sont-silenced | de: schweigen, sind-silenced, und-schweigen 1Sam 2:9; Jer 8:14; Jer 25:37; Jer 49:26; Jer 50:30

3. stand still, cease (5×) To stand still, cease, halt: physical cessation of motion rather than absence of sound. Joshua's command to the sun — 'Sun, stand still at Gibeon' (Josh 10:12) — and its fulfillment, 'the sun stood still' (Josh 10:13), are the definitive instances. First Samuel 14:9 uses it of soldiers standing still. Job 30:27 and Psalm 35:15 extend the concept to internal turmoil that will not 'be still.' Spanish Estad-quietos and German stehe-noch both select physical-cessation vocabulary rather than speech-silence words. Five occurrences where the spatial-kinetic sense is primary. CONTINUITY AND STILL en: and-stood-still, are-still, stand-still | es: Estad-quietos, Y-se-detuvo, callan | fr: [דמו], et-se-tint-encore, se-taire | de: [דמו], sie-ceased, stehe-noch Josh 10:12; Josh 10:13; 1Sam 14:9; Job 30:27; Ps 35:15

4. (1×) To calm, quiet (Piel causative): to deliberately bring about a state of quietness or tranquility in another. Psalm 131:2 — 'surely I have calmed and quieted my soul, like a weaned child with its mother' — is the sole clear instance, using the Piel to express gentle, nurturing pacification of inner turmoil. Spanish he-acallado ('I have hushed') and the English 'quieted' both capture the tender, self-directed soothing. Distinguished from the Hifil by the absence of destructive connotation; this is the silence of comfort, not of judgment. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: and-quieted | es: y-he-acallado | fr: [דדוממתי] | de: und-quieted Ps 131:2

5. (1×) To cause to be silent, silence by destruction (Hifil causative): to impose silence through overwhelming, annihilating force. In Jeremiah 8:14 the people confess 'the LORD our God has silenced us' — using the Hifil to mark God as the external agent who reduces a nation to silence through devastating judgment. Spanish nos-ha-destruido ('has destroyed us') and French se-taire show the destructive force. Distinguished from the Nifal passive (sense 2) by the explicit causative morphology identifying the agent, and from the Piel (sense 4) by the punitive rather than nurturing intent. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: has-silenced-us | es: nos-ha-destruido | fr: se-taire | de: schweigen Jer 8:14

דְּמַם H1826b V-Qal-Imp-mp (1×)

Wail, lament; to cry out in distress or mourning (disputed; may mean 'be silent')

This verb form appears in Isaiah's oracle against Tyre, though its meaning is debated. One view derives it from a root meaning 'wail' or 'lament,' parallel to the call to 'howl' in surrounding verses. Another view assigns it to the more common root for 'be silent,' creating the opposite sense. The Assyrian cognate 'groan, wail, lament' supports the mourning interpretation, fitting Isaiah's context of judgment. The Spanish 'Callad' (be silent) and French's non-translation reflect this lexical uncertainty. Context favors lamentation given the parallel commands to howl.

(1×) Isaiah 23:2 calls out, 'Be silent' or 'Wail, you inhabitants of the coast'—the meaning hinges on which root underlies this imperative. Surrounded by commands to 'howl' (verses 1, 6), the lamentation sense seems more contextually appropriate: Isaiah summons the maritime merchants to mourn Tyre's destruction. Yet the irony of silence—the cessation of commercial bustle—also fits powerfully. This lexical ambiguity may itself be rhetorically effective, merging stunned silence with vocal grief. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: be-silent | es: Callad | fr: [דמו] | de: [דמו] Isa 23:2

דְּמָמָה H1827 N-fs (3×)

whisper, silence—a quiet voice or the sound of deep stillness

This feminine noun denotes a whisper or profound silence. Its most famous occurrence is 1 Kings 19:12: after wind, earthquake, and fire, God speaks to Elijah in 'a voice of gentle whisper' (qol demamah daqqah)—often rendered 'a still small voice.' Job 4:16 describes Eliphaz's vision: 'a whisper and a voice I heard'—an articulate, eerie whisper in the night. Psalm 107:29 celebrates God settling the storm 'into whisper' (li-demamah). The word suggests either hushed speech or the deep quiet that follows tumult—both communicating divine presence more powerfully than noise.

(3×) A whisper or deep silence, appearing in three contexts of divine encounter or deliverance. 1 Kings 19:12 uses the construct 'a voice of whisper, gentle' (qol demamah daqqah)—God's presence in quietness after dramatic phenomena. Job 4:16 pairs it with 'voice': 'whisper and a voice' (demamah va-qol), an articulate supernatural whisper in Eliphaz's vision. Psalm 107:29 describes storm transformed 'to whisper/stillness' (li-demamah). Cross-linguistic glosses: English 'silence/to stillness,' Spanish 'silencio/en calma' (silence/into calm), French 'silence/à calme,' German 'silence/zu stillness.' The word encompasses both hushed speech and profound quiet—God's preferred mode of revelation beyond spectacular displays. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8275 WITH 8 SENSES

en: silence, to-stillness | es: en-calma, silencio | fr: silence, à-calme, דממה | de: [דממה], silence, zu-stillness 1Kgs 19:12; Job 4:16; Ps 107:29

דֹּמֶן H1828 Prep-l / N-ms (6×)

dung, manure; used figuratively for corpses or the slain left unburied on the ground as refuse

A masculine noun meaning 'dung' or 'manure,' used exclusively in prophetic and poetic texts as a powerful image of degradation and desolation. In every occurrence, the word describes human corpses left on the ground like refuse—a vivid picture of divine judgment leaving the dead unburied. Jeremiah employs this image repeatedly: the bones of Jerusalem's leaders spread 'as dung' on the ground (Jer 8:2), the slain lying 'like dung on the face of the field' (Jer 9:22; 16:4; 25:33). The Psalmist similarly pictures the defeated enemies of Israel becoming 'as dung for the ground' (Ps 83:10), and Jezebel's corpse is prophesied to be 'as dung' at Jezreel (2 Kgs 9:37).

dung, manure (6×) Animal dung or manure, used metaphorically to describe unburied corpses left to decompose on the ground like worthless refuse. The noun דֹּמֶן (domen) is cognate with Arabic 'dimn' (dung). English translations consistently gloss it as 'dung,' while Spanish uses 'estiércol' (manure/fertilizer) with the simile marker 'como' (like). French interestingly offers 'fumier' (manure heap) alongside 'bitume' in one rendering. All six passages employ this word in the identical grim metaphor of judgment: the slain or wicked reduced to the status of field-dung (2 Kgs 9:37; Ps 83:10; Jer 8:2; 9:22; 16:4; 25:33). ASH HEAP REFUSE

en: as-dung, dung, like-dung | es: como-estiércol, estiércol | fr: bitume, comme-dung, fumier | de: Dung, dung, wie-dung 2Kgs 9:37; Ps 83:10; Jer 8:2; Jer 9:22; Jer 16:4

דִּמְנָה H1829 N-proper-fs (1×)

A Levitical city in the territory of Zebulun, possibly identical with Rimmon

Dimnah appears only in Joshua's list of Levitical cities assigned from Zebulun's territory. Textual comparison with the parallel account in 1 Chronicles suggests this may be a variant spelling of Rimmon, as Chronicles lists Rimmon where Joshua has Dimnah. Such textual variants in geographical lists are common due to scribal updates or regional name changes. The exact location remains uncertain, though it was clearly in Zebulun's northern inheritance. Like many Levitical cities, Dimnah provided homes for Israel's priestly tribe scattered throughout the nation.

(1×) Joshua 21:35 assigns Dimnah to the Levites from Zebulun's portion. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 6:77 reads 'Rimmon' instead, leading most scholars to view these as variant names for the same site. This textual fluidity in place names reflects the reality that cities could be known by different names in different periods or regions. The Levitical cities served a crucial function: distributing the priestly tribe throughout Israel to teach the law and maintain worship. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Dimnah | es: Dimna | fr: Dimnah | de: Dimnah Josh 21:35

דָּמַע H1830 Conj-w / V-Qal-InfAbs (2×)

weep, shed tears, cry

This verb means to weep or shed tears. Jeremiah 13:17 uses both the infinitive absolute and the finite verb together ('weeping, it shall weep') to intensify the idea—the prophet's eyes will overflow with tears because of Israel's pride and captivity. This Hebrew construction emphasizes the relentless, uncontrollable nature of the weeping. The passage reveals the prophet's deep emotional anguish over his people's fate.

(2×) The Spanish and French glosses ('llorará, llorando') capture both the finite verb and the intensifying infinitive absolute in Jeremiah 13:17. The doubled occurrence in the same verse creates a rhetorical emphasis: 'my eye shall weep bitterly and run down with tears.' The cognate languages (Arabic, Aramaic) confirm this root is about the physical act of shedding tears, with the biblical usage highlighting uncontrollable grief over Judah's exile. WEEP CRY WAIL

en: and-weeping, shall-weep | es: llorará, y-llorando | fr: [ודמע], [תדמע] | de: [ודמע], [תדמע] Jer 13:17

וְדֶמַע H1831 Conj-w / N-msc / 2ms (1×)

Flowing juice, specifically wine or oil from pressed grapes or olives

This rare term appears in Exodus's law requiring Israelites to offer their agricultural firstfruits to God. The word literally means 'trickling' or 'flowing' and poetically refers to the liquid yield from pressing grapes or olives—either wine or oil. The parallel term in the verse is 'fullness' (grain harvest), creating a merism covering all agricultural produce. The Arabic cognate literally means 'tears of the vine' for wine, a beautiful image of pressed-out liquid. The Spanish and French translations as 'tears' or 'flowing' preserve this liquid metaphor.

(1×) Exodus 22:29 commands: 'Your fullness and your flowing you shall not delay'—referring to grain and liquid offerings from harvest. The 'flowing' denotes fresh-pressed wine or oil, the valuable liquids obtained from crushing grapes and olives. By requiring these first-fruits, the law acknowledged God's ownership of the land and its produce. The poetic term (related to 'tears' or 'trickling') adds beauty to this legal requirement, reminding Israel that even covenant obligations can be expressed in lyrical language. DRIPPING LIQUID

en: and-your-flowing | es: y-tus-lágrimas | fr: et-ton-coulant | de: und-dein-flowing Exod 22:29

דִּמְעָה H1832 Prep-b / N-fs (23×)

Tears; drops shed from the eyes in weeping, grief, lamentation, or earnest supplication before God.

A poetic and prophetic term for the tears that flow from human eyes in sorrow, mourning, or prayer. Hezekiah's tears move God to add fifteen years to his life (2 Kgs 20:5). The psalmist's tears soak his bed (Ps 6:6), fill God's bottle (Ps 56:8), and become his food day and night (Ps 42:3). Jeremiah yearns for his eyes to be a fountain of tears (Jer 8:23; 9:1). Found chiefly in poetry and late prose, the word carries an intensity that simple 'crying' does not — these are tears weighed and remembered by God. Every translation tradition renders it uniformly: Spanish 'lágrimas,' French 'larmes,' German 'Träne.'

tears (weeping) (23×) Tears shed in grief, lamentation, or earnest prayer — gathered by God as evidence of suffering (Ps 56:8), soaking the psalmist's bed (Ps 6:6), flowing as a fountain in Jeremiah's prophetic anguish (Jer 9:1; 14:17), and moving God to heal Hezekiah (2 Kgs 20:5). Spanish 'lágrimas,' French 'larmes,' German 'Träne' confirm uniform rendering across all 23 occurrences. WEEP CRY WAIL

en: am-adding, from-tears, my-tears | es: con-lágrimas, con-mi-lágrima, con-mis-lágrimas | fr: dans-larme, dans-larmes, de-larme | de: Traene, [דמעתך], dein-tears 2Kgs 20:5; Ps 6:6; Ps 39:12; Ps 42:3; Ps 56:8

וְדַמֶּשֶׂק H1833 Conj-w (1×)

Damask or Damascus; uncertain term possibly referring to fabric, the city, or a couch style

This word in Amos 3:12 remains one of Scripture's most disputed terms. The context describes fragments a shepherd rescues from a lion—'two legs or a piece of an ear'—followed by Israelites rescued 'in Damascus on a bed' or 'on a bed of damask.' Ancient versions read 'Damascus' (the city), while others propose 'damask' (a fabric named after Damascus). The term's connection to the city Damascus is clear, but whether this references location, fabric type, or a furniture style is debated. This textual crux illustrates the challenges in reconstructing rare commercial or technical vocabulary.

(1×) Amos 3:12 describes Israelites dwelling 'in Damascus on a couch' or 'on damask of a couch,' using this disputed term. If it means the city Damascus, Amos critiques Israelites lounging in luxury in a foreign capital. If it means damask fabric, he condemns opulent furnishings. Either way, the verse's point is clear: Israel's elite will be 'rescued' from coming judgment only as fragmentarily as a shepherd recovers scraps from a lion—two leg bones or an ear piece. The luxury imagery intensifies the irony of their impending ruin. DAMASCUS CITY

en: and-on-Damascus | es: y-en-Damasco | fr: et-dans-Damas | de: [ובדמשק] Amos 3:12

דַּמֶּשֶׂק H1834 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (45×)

Damascus — the ancient Aramean capital, a major Near Eastern city and perennial rival of Israel

Dammeseq is the Hebrew name for Damascus, one of the oldest continuously inhabited cities in the world, situated in the fertile oasis east of Mount Hermon and watered by the Barada River (the ancient Chrysorrhoas). Across its 45 Old Testament occurrences, the city appears first in Abram's nocturnal pursuit of the kings 'as far as Hobah, north of Damascus' (Gen 14:15) and in the enigmatic reference to Eliezer of Damascus (Gen 15:2). It rises to prominence as the capital of Aram under Rezon (1 Kgs 11:24) and remains Israel's chief northern rival through the era of Ahaz, who traveled there to copy a pagan altar (2 Kgs 16:10-12). The prophets wield it as a symbol of judgment: Amos opens his oracle cycle with 'for three transgressions of Damascus' (Amos 1:3), and Isaiah prophesies its destruction (Isa 17:1). Orthographic variants — Darmmeseq in Chronicles, Dummeseq in 2 Kings — reflect dialectal or scribal traditions. Translations transliterate uniformly: Spanish 'Damasco,' French 'Damas,' German 'Damaskus.'

Damascus (city) (45×) The proper noun Damascus (dammeseq/darmeseq), the ancient capital of Aram (Syria) located in a well-watered plain east of the Anti-Lebanon range. Functions as a geographic reference point in patriarchal narratives (Gen 14:15; 15:2), a political center of Aramean power rivaling Israel and Judah (1 Kgs 11:24; 2 Kgs 8:7-9; 16:10), and a prophetic symbol of foreign judgment (Isa 7:8; 17:1; Amos 1:3; Jer 49:23-27). All 45 occurrences refer to this single city, with orthographic variants (Chronicles: darmeseq; 2 Kgs 16:10: dummeseq) reflecting scribal or dialectal alternation rather than semantic difference. DAMASCUS CITY

en: Damascus, Dammeseq, Dammesheq | es: Damasco, a-Damasco, es-Damasco | fr: Damas, pour-Damas | de: Damascus, Damaskus, zu-Damaskus Gen 14:15; Gen 15:2; 2Sam 8:5; 2Sam 8:6; 1Kgs 11:24

דָּן H1835 N-proper-ms (70×)

Dan – Jacob's fifth son through Bilhah, the tribe descended from him, and a city on Israel's northern frontier

Dan (meaning 'judge') functions as a proper noun across three referential layers: the person, the tribe, and the place. As a personal name it designates the son born to Jacob through Rachel's maidservant Bilhah, who named him Dan because 'God has judged me' (Gen 30:6). As a tribal name it identifies the Danites and their allotted territory (Josh 19:40-48; Judg 18). As a toponym it marks the city at Israel's northern extremity, yielding the merism 'from Dan to Beersheba' (Judg 20:1; 1 Sam 3:20) – the standard idiom for the entire land. Across its 70 occurrences every target language retains the name unchanged: Dan in Spanish, French, German, and English alike.

Dan (proper noun) (70×) The proper noun Dan, encompassing the patriarch (Gen 30:6; 49:16-17), the tribe descended from him (Num 1:38-39; Judg 18), and the northern border city that anchored the proverbial phrase 'from Dan to Beersheba' (Judg 20:1; 2 Sam 3:10). The etymological meaning 'judge' (from din) is activated in Jacob's blessing (Gen 49:16, 'Dan shall judge his people'). Cross-lingual evidence is perfectly uniform – every language renders it simply as Dan – confirming a single proper-noun identity. DAN PROPER NAME

en: Dan | es: Dan | fr: Dan | de: Dan, Dans Gen 14:14; Gen 30:6; Gen 35:25; Gen 46:23; Gen 49:16

דְּנָה H1836 Conj-w (58×)

This, that, thus — Aramaic demonstrative pronoun used attributively and predicatively in Daniel and Ezra

The Aramaic demonstrative דְּנָה (denah, 'this') functions as the primary near-demonstrative pronoun in the biblical Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. Cognate with Hebrew זֶה and related to Syriac hānā and Nabataean dnḥ, it modifies nouns attributively ('this secret,' Dan 2:18; 'this house,' Ezra 5:3) or stands predicatively. With the preposition כְּ it yields 'like this, thus' (Dan 2:10). Though modest in semantic range — simply pointing to a referent — it appears at structurally pivotal moments: royal decrees, prophetic revelations, and administrative correspondence that shaped Israel's post-exilic restoration.

this, that, thus (Aramaic demonstrative) (58×) Aramaic demonstrative pronoun meaning 'this, that, thus.' All 58 occurrences cluster in Ezra 4–7 and Daniel 2–7, the Aramaic sections of the Hebrew Bible. Spanish distinguishes gender ('este/esta'), French uses 'ceci,' and German 'dieses,' each mapping naturally to a single deictic function. With the preposition כְּ it extends to the adverbial sense 'like this, thus' (Dan 2:10; 7:5). The pronoun anchors discourse references in official correspondence and visionary interpretation alike. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: this | es: Esta, esta, este | fr: ceci | de: dieses Ezra 4:11; Ezra 4:14; Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:16; Ezra 4:22

דַּנָּה H1837 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

A town in the hill country of Judah, near Debir (Kiriath-sepher)

Dannah appears only in Joshua's territorial allotment to Judah, listed among cities in the hill country near Hebron. Its location just before Kiriath-sannah (another name for Debir) places it in the southern highlands. The Greek Septuagint renders it 'Renna,' suggesting possible textual variation or different vocalization. Like many towns in these boundary lists, its exact archaeological identification remains uncertain. Nevertheless, its inclusion in Scripture's careful geographic records testifies to the detailed preservation of tribal inheritance traditions.

(1×) Joshua 15:49 lists Dannah among eleven cities in Judah's hill country district, positioned immediately before Kiriath-sannah (Debir). This clustering of names preserves ancient administrative geography, showing how Judah's territory was organized into districts. Though we cannot pinpoint Dannah's ruins today, its biblical record ensures that this town's role in Israel's inheritance is not forgotten. The meticulous preservation of such lists demonstrates the importance land possession held in covenant theology. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Dannah | es: y-Daná | fr: et-Dannah | de: und-Dannah Josh 15:49

דִּנְהָבָה H1838 N-proper-fs (2×)

Dinhabah, capital city of Bela, an early Edomite king

Dinhabah was the royal city of Bela son of Beor, one of the early kings of Edom before Israel had kings. Genesis 36:32 and its parallel in 1 Chronicles 1:43 identify it as Bela's capital. The location is uncertain, though some scholars have suggested Tennib in the region east-northeast of Heshbon. Like many Edomite place names, it survives only in these genealogical lists recording the succession of Edom's monarchy.

(2×) The multilingual transliterations ('Dinhabah, Dinhaba, Dinhavah') show slight spelling variations but refer to the same Edomite capital. Both biblical occurrences identify it as the city 'of Bela son of Beor.' The parallel passages in Genesis and Chronicles preserve this ancient geographical memory from the pre-monarchic period of Edom, though the site's exact location remains unknown to modern archaeology. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Dinhabah, Dinhavah | es: Dinhaba, Dinhavah | fr: Dinhabah, [דנהבה] | de: [דנהבה], war-Dinhaba Gen 36:32; 1Chr 1:43

הַדָּנִי H1839 Art / N-proper-ms (5×)

the Danite(s), a gentilic adjective designating members of the tribe of Dan

A gentilic adjective always used with the definite article to identify persons or groups belonging to the tribe of Dan. It appears in Judges 13:2 describing Manoah's clan, in Judges 18 during the Danite migration narrative, and in 1 Chronicles 12:36 listing Danite warriors who joined David. The term functions as a collective ethnic identifier rather than a personal name.

(5×) The Danite — a gentilic adjective marking tribal affiliation with Dan. Always appears with the article (ha-Dani). In Judges 13:2 it identifies Manoah's clan ('the family of the Danite'), while Judges 18:1, 11, 30 use it during the migration narrative of the tribe seeking territory. Spanish 'el danita' and French 'le Danite' consistently render it as an ethnic designation. First Chronicles 12:36 lists Danite warriors rallying to David at Hebron. DAN PROPER NAME

en: the-Dani, the-Danite | es: Dan, el-danita | fr: [הדני], le-Dani, le-Danite | de: [הדני], der-Dani, der-Danite Judg 13:2; Judg 18:1; Judg 18:11; Judg 18:30; 1Chr 12:36

דָּנִאֵל H1840 N-proper-ms (32×)

Daniel — 'God is my judge'; the exilic prophet-sage and several other biblical figures of this name

Daniyyel (also spelled Dani'el) means 'God is my judge' and appears 32 times in the Hebrew Bible, referring to several distinct individuals united by this theophoric name. The most prominent is the young Judean noble taken captive to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, who rises to high office through his God-given gift of dream interpretation (Dan 1-6) and receives apocalyptic visions of world empires and the coming kingdom of God (Dan 7-12). Ezekiel twice names a 'Daniel' alongside Noah and Job as a paragon of righteousness (Ezek 14:14, 20) and as proverbially wise (Ezek 28:3) — possibly the same figure, or perhaps an ancient Canaanite sage known from the Ugaritic Aqhat epic. A priest of Ithamar's line by this name appears in the post-exilic community (Ezra 8:2; Neh 10:6). German, Spanish, and French all preserve the name as Daniel, its theophoric meaning universally transparent.

Daniel (proper noun) (32×) The proper name 'God is my judge,' chiefly designating the exilic prophet-sage who interprets dreams for Nebuchadnezzar and receives apocalyptic visions in Babylon (Dan 1-12). Ezekiel cites a figure named Daniel as a model of righteousness alongside Noah and Job (Ezek 14:14, 20) and as surpassingly wise (Ezek 28:3). Also borne by a son of David and Abigail (1 Chr 3:1) and a post-exilic priest of the line of Ithamar (Ezra 8:2; Neh 10:6). DANIEL PERSONAL NAME

en: Dani'el, Daniel, Daniy'el | es: Daniel | fr: Daniel, [דניאל] | de: Daniel, [דניאל] 1Chr 3:1; Ezra 8:2; Neh 10:6; Ezek 14:14

דָּנִיֵּאל H1841 Prep-b / N-proper-ms (52×)

Daniel ('God is my judge'), proper name of the exilic prophet and visionary, plus two other biblical figures.

A theophoric name meaning 'God is my judge,' composed of din ('to judge') and El ('God'). The name belongs primarily to the protagonist of the book of Daniel, a Judean exile who rose to prominence in the Babylonian and Persian courts through his gift of dream interpretation and unwavering faithfulness (Dan 2-6). His apocalyptic visions (Dan 7-12) became foundational for later Jewish and Christian eschatology. The name also designates a son of David by Abigail (1 Chr 3:1) and a postexilic priest who sealed the covenant under Nehemiah (Neh 10:7). Cross-linguistic renderings are uniformly transliterated (Spanish Daniel, French Daniel, German Daniel), reflecting its global familiarity as a biblical proper noun.

Daniel (proper name) (52×) The personal name Daniel (Daniy'el, 'God is my judge'), chiefly referring to the exilic prophet and wise man who served in the courts of Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, and Darius (Dan 2:13-6:28). His name also belongs to a son of David (1 Chr 3:1) and a postexilic priestly signatory (Neh 10:7). The uniform transliteration across Spanish, French, and German confirms this as a fixed proper noun. Occurrences are heavily concentrated in the book of Daniel itself, where all but two of the 52 uses are found. DANIEL PERSONAL NAME

en: Daniy'el | es: Daniel, a-Daniel | fr: Daniel | de: Daniel Dan 2:13; Dan 2:14; Dan 2:15; Dan 2:16; Dan 2:17

דָּן H1842 N-proper-fs / 3fs (2×)

Dan (in compound place name Dan-jaan), possibly a region near Dan

This appears in the phrase 'Dan-jaan' in 2 Samuel 24:6, during David's census. Joab and the commanders traveled through Israelite territory, reaching 'Dan-jaan and around to Sidon.' The exact location is uncertain—some suggest it's the northern city of Dan with an additional designation (Jaan), while others propose a distinct location. The textual note indicates the verse mentions both Jaan and Dan, suggesting movement through the northern frontier regions.

(2×) The glosses show geographic terms ('Jaan,' 'to Dan,' 'a Dan') marking a northern location during the census route. The compound 'Dan-jaan' appears only in 2 Samuel 24:6, where the census-takers move through Israel's northern reaches toward Sidon. Whether Jaan is a distinct place or a qualifier for Dan remains debated, but clearly this marks the northernmost extent of David's kingdom, near the traditional boundary 'from Dan to Beersheba.' DAN PROPER NAME

en: Jaan, to-Dan | es: Yaan, a-Dan- | fr: Jaan, à-Dan | de: Jaan, zu-Dan 2Sam 24:6

דֵּעַ H1843 N-msc / 1cs (5×)

knowledge, opinion, understanding; used exclusively in Elihu's speeches in Job

A noun meaning knowledge or opinion, occurring only in the speeches of Elihu in Job 32-37. Elihu uses it to refer both to his own considered judgment that he wishes to declare (Job 32:6, 10, 17) and to the perfect knowledge that belongs to God (Job 37:16). The word carries a tone of deliberate, formulated understanding rather than mere awareness, fitting Elihu's self-conscious rhetorical style.

(5×) Knowledge, opinion, or considered judgment — a deliberate formulation of understanding. In Job 32:6, 10, 17, Elihu uses it of his own opinion that he is compelled to express ('my knowledge,' Spanish 'mi conocimiento,' French 'ma connaissance'). Job 36:3 broadens the scope as Elihu ascribes knowledge to his Maker. Job 37:16 speaks of God as 'perfect in knowledge' (temim de'im), where the plural form intensifies the concept into comprehensive omniscience. All occurrences are confined to Elihu's discourse, giving the word a distinctive rhetorical register. KNOWLEDGE AND LEARNING

en: in-knowledge, my-knowledge | es: conocimientos, mi-conocimiento | fr: connaissance, mon-connaissance-moi | de: [דַּעַת], [דֵּעִים] Job 32:6; Job 32:10; Job 32:17; Job 36:3; Job 37:16

דֵּעָה H1844 N-fs (6×)

Knowledge, understanding; awareness of God or of truth, used of both human insight and divine omniscience.

A feminine abstract noun derived from the verb yada' (to know), denoting knowledge or understanding. In Hannah's song (1 Sam 2:3), God is called 'el de'ot – a God of knowledge – using the majestic plural to express the fullness of divine awareness. The psalmist in Psalm 73:11 wrestles with whether the Most High possesses knowledge of human affairs. In Isaiah and Jeremiah the word describes the prophetic knowledge that ideal rulers and teachers will impart. Elihu claims 'perfect knowledge' in Job 36:4, hinting at the boldness of human wisdom claims. Spanish 'conocimiento' and German 'Erkenntnis' both capture the sense of deep, experiential knowing rather than mere information.

knowledge, understanding (6×) Knowledge, understanding, or awareness as an abstract quality. Used of divine omniscience (1 Sam 2:3, where the plural de'ot emphasizes the fullness of God's knowing), of human apprehension of God's ways (Ps 73:11; Isa 11:9), and of prophetic or wisdom instruction (Isa 28:9; Jer 3:15). The multilingual glosses – Spanish 'conocimiento,' French 'connaissance,' German 'Erkenntnis' – all point to experiential, relational knowledge rather than bare factual awareness. KNOWLEDGE AND LEARNING

en: and-whom, in-knowledge, knowledge | es: con-conocimiento, conocimiento, conocimientos | fr: [דַּעַת], connaissance, knowledges | de: Erkenntnis, [דַּעַת], [דֵּעוֹת] 1Sam 2:3; Job 36:4; Ps 73:11; Isa 11:9; Isa 28:9

דְּעוּאֵל H1845 N-proper-ms (4×)

Deuel; a Gadite leader, father of Eliasaph, listed in the wilderness census and offerings.

A proper name borne by the father of Eliasaph, who served as leader of the tribe of Gad during the wilderness period. The name appears exclusively in the Priestly source of Numbers (1:14; 7:42, 47; 10:20). Interestingly, the Septuagint reads Ragouēl in all instances, and Numbers 2:14 has the variant Reuel (רְעוּאֵל), suggesting the dalet and resh were easily confused in the scribal tradition. All major modern translations—English, Spanish, French, German—render it 'Deuel.'

(4×) Deuel — the personal name of a Gadite, father of Eliasaph, who led the tribe of Gad in the wilderness census and tabernacle dedication offerings (Num 1:14; 7:42, 47; 10:20). The LXX consistently reads Ραγουηλ (Raguel), and the parallel passage in Num 2:14 has Reuel, indicating an ancient dalet/resh scribal confusion. The name likely means 'known of God.' Every major language simply transliterates: English, Spanish, French, and German all render 'Deuel.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Deuel | es: Deuel, Deuel: | fr: Deuel | de: Deuel Num 1:14; Num 7:42; Num 7:47; Num 10:20

דָּעַךְ H1846 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (9×)

To go out or be extinguished; of flames, lamps, and figuratively of the prosperity or life-force of the wicked being snuffed out.

A poetic verb found almost exclusively in Wisdom and prophetic literature, describing the dying out of a flame or lamp. In its figurative usage, which dominates the biblical evidence, the extinguishing of the wicked's lamp serves as a powerful image for the collapse of their prosperity (Job 18:5-6; Prov 13:9; 20:20; 24:20). Isaiah 43:17 extends the metaphor to hostile armies snuffed out like a wick. The Aramaic cognate d'ik and Syriac d'ek confirm the core meaning, while the multilingual glosses consistently render it with reflexive or passive extinction verbs (Spanish se-apaga, French s'eteindre).

1. Qal: to go out, be extinguished (6×) The Qal imperfect describes the ongoing process of going out or being extinguished – a flame guttering toward darkness. Nearly every occurrence is figurative: the 'lamp of the wicked' (ner resha'im) will go out, symbolizing the end of their fortune and legacy (Job 18:5-6; 21:17; Prov 13:9; 20:20; 24:20). Spanish se-apaga and French s'eteindre both capture the middle-voice nuance of a light that dies of its own accord rather than being actively quenched. EXTINGUISHING FIRE

en: extinguished, is-extinguished, is-put-out | es: se-apaga, se-apagará, será-apagada | fr: s'éteindre | de: [יִדְעַךְ] Job 18:5; Job 18:6; Job 21:17; Prov 13:9; Prov 20:20

2. Nifal/Pual: to be extinguished, snuffed out (perfective) (3×) The Niphal and Pual perfective stems denote the completed state of having been extinguished or wiped out. In Job 6:17 dried-up wadis are 'made extinct' (nid'akhu), while Psalm 118:12 compares assailants to thorns already quenched. Isaiah 43:17 uses the Qal perfect of enemy forces who 'went out' like a snuffed wick. The shift from process (sense 1) to accomplished fact is marked by stem and aspect: what was flickering has now gone dark. EXTINGUISHING FIRE

en: they-are-extinguished, they-were-extinguished | es: se-apagan, se-apagaron | fr: [דָּעֲכוּ], s'éteindre | de: [דָּעְכוּ], [נִדְעֲכוּ], sie-waren-extinguished Job 6:17; Ps 118:12; Isa 43:17

דַּעַת H1847 Prep-b / N-fs (93×)

Knowledge, discernment; the capacity to perceive, understand, or recognize — occasionally as verbal infinitive 'knowing'

Derived from the root יָדַע ('to know'), this noun denotes knowledge in its broadest sense — from practical awareness to deep spiritual discernment. It appears in the foundational phrase 'the tree of the knowledge of good and evil' (Gen 2:9, 17) and figures prominently in Wisdom literature, where Proverbs personifies knowledge alongside wisdom as a divine gift (Prov 2:10). The expression בְּבָלִי דַּעַת ('without knowledge') in Deut 4:42 serves as a legal term for unintentional action, showing how the word bridges moral cognition and juridical categories. All major target languages render it with a single cognitive noun: Spanish 'conocimiento,' French 'connaissance,' German 'Erkenntnis.'

1. knowledge, discernment (90×) Abstract knowledge or discernment — the intellectual and moral capacity to perceive, understand, and evaluate. Covers the vast majority of occurrences across all grammatical forms (absolute, construct, with suffixes and prepositions). Spanish 'conocimiento,' French 'connaissance,' and German 'Erkenntnis' uniformly confirm this as a cognitive-faculty noun. Key texts include Prov 2:10 ('when knowledge enters your heart'), Isa 53:11 ('by his knowledge'), and the technical legal phrase בְּבָלִי דַּעַת meaning 'without knowledge, unintentionally' (Deut 4:42; Josh 20:3). KNOWLEDGE AND LEARNING

en: knowledge | es: conocimiento, conocimiento? | fr: connaissance | de: Erkenntnis Deut 4:42; Deut 19:4; Josh 20:3; Josh 20:5; Job 21:14

2. knowing, to know (3×) Verbal infinitive construct (Qal of יָדַע): 'knowing, to know' — functioning as a gerund or purpose clause, preserving verbal force rather than purely nominal reference. Cross-lingual renderings split between nominal and verbal forms: German 'könnte wissen,' Spanish 'conocimiento de.' Found in Judg 3:2 (that later generations might learn war by knowing it), Isa 48:4 ('because I knew you were obstinate'), and Jer 22:16 ('he judged the cause of the poor — is that not knowing me?'). KNOWLEDGE AND LEARNING

en: From-My-knowing, might-know, the-knowing | es: Por-mi-conocimiento, conocimiento-de, el-conocimiento | fr: connaissance, le-connaissance, pourrait-connaître | de: Erkenntnis, der-Erkenntnis, koennte-wissen Judg 3:2; Isa 48:4; Jer 22:16

דִּפִּי H1848 N-ms (1×)

A blemish, fault, or defect; slander or accusation alleging someone's flaw

This noun denotes a moral blemish or fault, used in Psalm 50 for slanderous speech against a family member. While related words describe physical defects, this term focuses on alleged character flaws. The psalmist condemns someone who 'alleges a fault' against his own brother—essentially engaging in slander within the family. The word captures both the objective flaw and the subjective accusation of it. Spanish and German translate as 'diffamation' and 'slander,' emphasizing the speech act, while the Hebrew allows for both the fault itself and the alleging of it.

(1×) Psalm 50:20 rebukes: 'You sit and speak against your brother; you allege a fault against your own mother's son.' The parallelism with 'speak against' clarifies that this is verbal accusation, not mere observation of flaw. God condemns such family slander in a psalm that contrasts authentic covenant loyalty with hypocritical religious observance. The term suggests not random gossip but deliberate fault-finding and accusation, especially heinous when directed at one's own kin. BLEMISH PHYSICAL DEFECT

en: slander | es: difamación | fr: diffamation | de: slander Ps 50:20

דָּפַק H1849 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (3×)

beat, knock, drive hard (animals or persons)

This verb describes forceful, repetitive striking. It appears when Jacob fears his flocks will be 'driven hard' (Gen 33:13), when wicked men 'beat against the door' demanding violent satisfaction (Judg 19:22), and in the lover's cry 'Listen! my beloved is knocking' (Song 5:2). The multilingual evidence captures both senses: the violent driving or pushing (Spanish empujasen, French overdrive) and the percussive knocking (Spanish golpeando, German beating).

(3×) The three contexts show physical beating or knocking: driving animals cruelly (Gen 33:13), pounding violently on a door (Judg 19:22 'beat themselves tired'), and knocking for entry (Song 5:2). The cross-lingual glosses consistently reflect this dual semantic range of forceful impact, whether applied to livestock or doors. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-they-overdrive-them, beating, knocking | es: golpeando, llamando, y-empujasen-los | fr: Il-frappe:, battant, et-ils-overdrive-eux | de: [דופק], beating, und-treibt-man-sie Gen 33:13; Judg 19:22; Song 5:2

דָּפְקָה H1850 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)

Dophkah, an Israelite encampment in the wilderness wanderings

Dophkah was a stopping place during Israel's exodus journey, located between the Wilderness of Sin and Alush according to Numbers 33:12-13. This itinerary notice preserves the memory of the route through the Sinai wilderness, though the exact location is now unknown. Some scholars have connected the name to Egyptian mining regions (Mafkat), but this remains speculative. Like many wilderness stations, it survives only in this single wilderness itinerary.

(2×) The prepositional forms ('in Dophkah, from Dophkah / en Dofca, de Dofca') mark arrival and departure: Israel camped at Dophkah (Num 33:12) then traveled from Dophkah to Alush (33:13). The consistent transliteration across languages preserves this ancient place name, even though its location has been lost to history. The itinerary genre functions as a memorial of the wilderness journey, each name a geographic witness to God's guidance. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Dophkah, in-Dophkah | es: de-Dofca, en-Dofca | fr: dans-Dophkah, de-Dophkah | de: in-Dophkah, von-Dophkah Num 33:12; Num 33:13

דַּק H1851 Conj-w / Adj-fpc (14×)

Thin, fine, small; of gaunt cattle, powdery manna, a stunted person, or a gentle whisper

An adjective that spans a surprising range from Pharaoh's emaciated cows to the still, small voice on Horeb. In Genesis 41, the 'thin' (daq) cattle and grain ears signal famine — Hindi 'dubli' and German 'mager' (gaunt) capture this agricultural dread. Applied to substances like manna and incense, it shifts to 'fine-grained' or 'powdery' (Exod 16:14; Lev 16:12), where Arabic 'daqiq' (fine flour) shares the same Semitic root. Most memorably, in 1 Kings 19:12 the word describes the 'thin' or gentle quality of God's voice to Elijah — a whisper so quiet it redefines divine power.

1. thin, gaunt, lean (6×) Of living things that are gaunt, lean, or emaciated — most prominently the thin cows and withered grain ears in Pharaoh's dream (Gen 41:3-7, 23-24). The adjective modifies flesh (basar) to convey scrawniness that signals coming famine. Hindi 'dubli' and German 'mager/dünnen' carry the same visceral sense of alarming leanness. All six occurrences cluster in the Joseph narrative, marking daq as the signature word for Egypt's prophesied scarcity. THIN GAUNT LEAN

en: and-thin-of, the-thin, thin | es: delgadas, las-delgadas, y-flacas-de | fr: et-thin-de, le-thin, thin | de: die-dünnen, dünne, und-mager Gen 41:3; Gen 41:4; Gen 41:6; Gen 41:7; Gen 41:23

2. fine, small, powdery (6×) Of substances and particles that are fine, small, or powdery. The manna is described as 'fine, flake-like, fine as frost' (Exod 16:14), using daq twice in one verse to emphasize its delicate texture. Applied also to crushed incense (Lev 16:12), thin hair (Lev 13:30), and dust so fine it becomes insignificant (Isa 29:5; 40:15). Arabic 'daqiq' (fine flour) shares this root, confirming the Semitic semantic core of smallness in particle size. FINE SMALL THIN

en: fine, like-fine-dust, the-multitude | es: como-polvo, fino, menudo | fr: [דק], [כדק], fin | de: [דק], [כדק], duenn Exod 16:14; Lev 13:30; Lev 16:12; Isa 29:5

3. stunted, undersized (of a person) (1×) A physical defect rendering a person stunted or undersized, listed among disqualifying blemishes for priestly service (Lev 21:20). Whether this denotes a dwarf or someone with a wasting condition remains debated, but the core sense of daq — insufficient size — applies to the human body here. Hindi 'bauna' (dwarf) and the priestly purity context both point to a visible physical shortcoming. THIN GAUNT LEAN

en: a-dwarf | es: enano | fr: un-dwarf | de: ein-dwarf Lev 21:20

4. thin, still, quiet (1×) Of sound that is thin, gentle, or quiet — the celebrated 'still small voice' (qol demamah daqqah) that Elijah heard at Horeb (1 Kgs 19:12). After wind, earthquake, and fire, the divine presence came in a sound so thin it was barely perceptible. This sense extends daq from the visual and tactile into the auditory, suggesting something reduced to its most delicate, almost imperceptible form. Hindi 'dheemi' (gentle/soft) and Swahili 'laini' (smooth, soft) echo this nuance. FINE SMALL THIN
en: thin | es: delgado | fr: thin | de: thin 1Kgs 19:12

דַּק H1852 Prep-k (1×)
A thin curtain or veil; something fine and gauze-like used for covering
This rare word describes something thin and delicate, appearing in Isaiah's cosmic imagery of God spreading out the heavens. The comparison of the universe to a curtain emphasizes both the vastness and the ease with which God accomplishes this creative act—as effortlessly as hanging fabric. The term's root suggests thinness or fineness, perhaps gauze-like material that can be stretched. This single use creates a memorable image: the star-filled sky is to God what a light veil is to human hands. French and German leave it untranslated, acknowledging its rarity.

(1×) Isaiah 40:22 declares that God 'stretches out the heavens like a curtain, and spreads them like a tent to dwell in.' The simile emphasizes divine transcendence and creative power—what seems vast and fixed to us is like thin fabric to God. The term's connotation of fineness and pliability makes the comparison more striking: the seemingly solid heavens are as easily manipulated as gossamer cloth. This image precedes Isaiah's rhetorical question about who can compare to God, the Creator of earth's ends. LINEN AND FABRIC
en: like-a-curtain | es: como-cortina | fr: [כדק] | de: [כדק] Isa 40:22

דִּקְלָה H1853 N-proper-ms (2×)
Diklah, a descendant of Joktan, representing an Arabian tribe or territory
Diklah was one of the sons of Joktan listed in the Table of Nations (Genesis 10:27, paralleled in 1 Chronicles 1:21). In biblical genealogies, personal names often represent tribal groups or territories. Diklah presumably indicates an Arabian people or region, part of the Joktanite Arabs who settled southern Arabia. The specific location or tribe remains unidentified in extra-biblical sources, but the name is preserved in Scripture's record of the dispersion of nations after the Flood.

(2×) The transliterations ('Diklah, Diqla, Diqlá') preserve the Hebrew name across translations. As a Joktanite descendant, Diklah represents part of the Arabian tribal confederation that Genesis 10 traces to Shem through Eber and Joktan. Both occurrences (Gen 10:27, 1 Chr 1:21) are in genealogical lists mapping the post-Flood nations, with Joktan's descendants generally understood to represent southern Arabian peoples. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Diklah, Diqlah | es: Diqla, Diqlá | fr: Diklah, [דקלה] | de: Dikla, [דקלה] Gen 10:27; 1Chr 1:21

דָּקַק H1854 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (13×)
To crush, pulverize, or grind to fine particles; also to be fine or thin as the result of grinding.
A verb of physical reduction, used for crushing, pounding, and grinding substances into powder or dust. It appears in accounts of destroying idolatrous objects, as when Josiah crushed the Asherah pole at the brook Kidron (2 Kgs 23:6) and when Moses ground the golden calf until it was fine as dust (Exod 32:20). The Hifil causative carries the force of active pulverizing, while the Qal stative describes the resulting fineness. Isaiah uses both the active and passive forms in agricultural imagery, noting that bread grain is eventually crushed but not endlessly threshed (Isa 28:28).

1. crush, pulverize, beat fine (9×) The transitive causative sense: to crush, stamp, pulverize, or beat something into fine powder. Spanish desmenuzo ('I crush fine') and English 'stamp/crushed/beat fine' converge on forceful physical reduction. Prominent in cultic purges where kings destroy idolatrous objects (2 Kgs 23:6, 15; 2 Chr 15:16; 34:4) and in David's victory psalm where enemies are stamped like dust (2 Sam 22:43). CRUSHING AND HUMBLING en: I-stamp-them, and-crushed, and-he-beat-fine | es: desmenuzo, lo-muele, los-pisoteé | fr: [והדק], [וידק], [ותדק] | de: [והדק], [והדקות], [וידק] 2Sam 22:43; 2Kgs 23:6; 2Kgs 23:15; 2Chr 15:16; 2Chr 34:4

2. be/become fine or thin (3×) The intransitive stative sense: to be or become fine, thin, reduced to powder. Describes the end-state after grinding, not the act itself. Spanish fino and English 'fine/it was fine' align on the resultant quality. Found in the golden calf narrative where Moses ground until the material 'was fine' as dust (Exod 32:20; Deut 9:21), and in the incense recipe ground 'fine' (Exod 30:36). FINE SMALL THIN
en: fine, it-was-fine | es: fino, quedó-fino | fr: cela-était-fin, fin | de: es-war-fein, fein Exod 30:36; Exod 32:20; Deut 9:21

3. be crushed or ground (1×) The passive sense (Hofal): to be crushed or ground by an external agent. Attested only in Isaiah 28:28, where bread grain is described as eventually being ground, though the farmer does not thresh it forever. Spanish se muele ('it is ground') captures the passive force that distinguishes this from the active Hifil. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING
en: grain | es: se-muele | fr: [יודק] | de: [יודק] Isa 28:28

דָּקַק H1855 V-Hifil-Perf-3mp (10×)
To crush, shatter, pulverize; Aramaic verb used in Daniel for grinding kingdoms to dust and for being broken to pieces.
An Aramaic verb confined to the book of Daniel, where it carries enormous apocalyptic weight. In the Hafel (causative), it describes the divine stone that strikes Nebuchadnezzar's image and crushes it to powder (Dan 2:34, 44–45), and the terrifying fourth beast that devours and tramples everything underfoot (Dan 7:7, 19, 23). In the Pe'al (simple stem), it describes the passive result — the iron, clay, bronze, silver, and gold 'were crushed' together and became like chaff (Dan 2:35). Spanish consistently renders it 'desmenuzar' (to crumble/pulverize), capturing the reduction to fine particles that is central to this word's force.

1. crush, shatter (Hifil) (9×) To crush, shatter, or pulverize something — the Hafel causative action of grinding to dust. This is the dominant sense, appearing in Daniel's apocalyptic visions: the stone cut without hands that strikes and shatters the composite statue (Dan 2:34, 40, 44–45), and the fourth beast that crushes and devours all in its path (Dan 7:7, 19, 23). Spanish 'desmenuza/desmenuzará' and German 'zermalmen' both emphasize the thoroughness of the destruction — not merely breaking but reducing to powder. BREAKING AND SHATTERING en: and-crush-it, and-crushed, and-crushing | es: desmenuza, desmenuzaba, desmenuzará | fr: broyer, et-broyer | de: und-zermalmen, zermalmen Dan 2:34; Dan 2:40; Dan 2:44; Dan 2:45

2. be crushed (Qal passive) (1×) To be crushed or shattered — the Pe'al intransitive/passive, describing the state of having been pulverized. Daniel 2:35 uses this form to narrate the aftermath: all the materials of the image 'were crushed together' (daqu) and became like chaff on a summer threshing floor. The passive completes the picture initiated by the Hafel — what the stone actively shatters, this form describes as lying in fragments. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING
en: were-crushed | es: fueron-desmenuzados | fr: broyer | de: zermalmen Dan 2:35

דָּקַר H1856 V-Pual-Prtcpl-mp (11×)
To pierce or thrust through fatally with a weapon; in passive forms, to be pierced, slain, or fatally wounded.
A verb of violent piercing – the fatal thrust of spear or sword that ends a life. Phinehas drives his spear through the Israelite man and Midianite woman (Num 25:8), Abimelech begs his armor-bearer to 'thrust me through' to avoid the shame of death by a woman's hand (Judg 9:54), and Saul makes the same desperate request on Mount Gilboa (1 Sam 31:4). The passive forms describe the result: battlefield dead who lie 'pierced through' (Isa 13:15; Jer 51:4). Most strikingly, Zechariah 12:10 prophesies 'they shall look on me whom they have pierced' – a text the Gospel of John applies directly to the crucifixion (John 19:37), giving this verb a profound messianic resonance across traditions.

1. pierce, thrust through (7×) To pierce or thrust through with a weapon (Qal active), always describing a fatal or near-fatal stabbing. Phinehas pierces the transgressing couple (Num 25:8), Abimelech's armor-bearer thrusts him through at his request (Judg 9:54), and Saul asks the same of his own armor-bearer (1 Sam 31:4; 1 Chr 10:4). Zechariah 12:10 uses the Qal perfect in the messianic prophecy 'they shall look on me whom they have pierced' – a text cited in John 19:37. Spanish 'traspasar/atravesar' and French 'percer' capture the sense of driving a weapon completely through the body. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-pierced-him, and-thrust-me-through, and-thrust-through | es: traspasaron, y-atravesó, y-atraviésame | fr: [ודקרני], et-pierced-lui, et-thrust-moi-à-travers | de: [דקרו], [ודקרהו], [ודקרני] Num 25:8; Judg 9:54; 1Sam 31:4; 1Chr 10:4

2. be pierced, be wounded (4×) To be pierced or fatally wounded (Pual participle and Niphal), describing those who have been stabbed through and lie slain. Isaiah 13:15 prophesies that in Babylon's fall 'everyone found will be thrust through,' and Jeremiah 51:4 uses the same language for casualties in Chaldean streets. Lamentations 4:9 contrasts those 'pierced by the sword' with those who die of famine – the pierced are considered more fortunate. The passive forms emphasize the resulting state of the victim rather than the attacker's action. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-pierced, pierced-through, will-be-pierced | es: heridos, será-traspasado, traspasados | fr: [ומדקרים], [ידקר], [מדקרים] | de: [ומדקרים], [ידקר], [מדקרים] Isa 13:15; Jer 37:10; Jer 51:4; Lam 4:9

דֵּקֶר H1857

Deker, personal name; one of Solomon's district officers, possibly meaning 'piercing' or 'weapon'

This official served as one of Solomon's twelve district governors responsible for provisioning the royal household. The phrase 'son of Deker' follows a pattern in Solomon's administrative list where officials are sometimes identified by their fathers' names. The name's possible meaning relates to piercing or sharp weapons, though such etymological connections remain speculative. The bureaucratic list demonstrates Solomon's administrative sophistication, dividing the kingdom into supply districts that rotated monthly obligations. Ben-Deker governed a region including several cities in the western hills.

דַּר H1858 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

Pearl or mother-of-pearl; a precious lustrous gem from oysters

This word appears in Esther's description of the Persian palace's lavish courtyard decorations. The Arabic cognate clearly means 'pearl,' supporting this identification. Esther depicts a scene of unimaginable opulence: the pavement featured mother-of-pearl among other precious stones, illustrating the wealth of Ahasuerus's kingdom. This single reference provides a glimpse into Persian imperial luxury at its height. The French and German non-translations may reflect the term's rarity or textual uncertainty, though Spanish 'nácar' (mother-of-pearl) shows confidence in the identification.

(1×) Esther 1:6 describes the palace courtyard with costly stones including 'mother-of-pearl,' setting the scene for Ahasuerus's extravagant banquet. This detail of decorative luxury establishes the Persian court's grandeur, making the subsequent narrative reversals more dramatic. The mention of mother-of-pearl specifically (rather than generic jewels) suggests authentic Persian architectural knowledge—inlaid pearl work was indeed prized in ancient Near Eastern palace decoration. This backdrop of wealth makes Esther's courage in approaching the king unbidden all the more striking. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: and-mother-of-pearl | es: y-nácar | fr: [ודר] | de: [ודר] Esth 1:6

דָּר H1859 Conj-w / N-ms (4×)

Generation (Aramaic); used in the phrase 'generation and generation' to express God's everlasting dominion.

The Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew דּוֹר ('generation'), appearing only in Daniel's doxologies. It occurs exclusively in the formulaic phrase 'with generation and generation' (עִם־דָּר וְדָר), proclaiming that God's kingdom endures from one generation to the next (Dan 4:3, 34). Spanish 'generación' and English 'generation' capture it directly, while French and German versions sometimes leave the Aramaic untranslated, reflecting its formulaic liturgical character.

(4×) Generation (Aramaic) — a span of human succession, used exclusively in the doubled formula דָּר וְדָר ('generation and generation') to declare the perpetuity of God's sovereignty. In Dan 4:3 (= 3:33) and Dan 4:34 (= 4:31), Nebuchadnezzar confesses that God's dominion endures 'with generation and generation.' The doubling intensifies the meaning to 'every successive generation' or 'age after age.' Spanish 'generación y generación' and English 'generation and generation' faithfully mirror this Aramaic rhetorical device. GENERATION AND LINEAGE

en: and-generation, generation | es: generación, y-generación | fr: [דר], [ודר] | de: [דר], [ודר] Dan 4:3; Dan 4:34

דִּרָאוֹן H1860 Prep-l / N-msc (2×)

abhorrence, object of loathing or contempt

This word denotes extreme disgust or abhorrence. Isaiah 66:24 uses it to describe the fate of rebels against God—their corpses will be 'an abhorrence to all flesh,' a perpetual object of revulsion. Daniel 12:2 speaks of resurrection to either everlasting life or 'everlasting abhorrence.' In both cases, the term marks something utterly repulsive, the opposite of honor or glory. It conveys not just dislike but visceral revulsion and contempt.

(2×) The glosses ('abhorrence, aborrecimiento, aversion') consistently point to extreme disgust. Both passages use the term eschatologically: Isaiah envisions the corpses of rebels as eternally revolting (66:24), while Daniel describes resurrection to 'everlasting contempt' (12:2). The word captures the ultimate dishonor awaiting the wicked—not annihilation but perpetual existence as objects of loathing, the inverse of the glory promised to the righteous. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: an-abhorrence, to-abhorrence-of | es: abominación, para-aborrecimiento-de | fr: [דראון], aversion | de: [דראון], [לדראון] Isa 66:24; Dan 12:2

דָּרְבָן H1861a Art / N-ms (1×)

An ox goad or pointed stick used for driving and directing cattle

This term denotes the sharp-pointed implement farmers used to prod oxen while plowing. First Samuel mentions it in describing Philistine weapon restrictions on Israel: the Israelites had to go to Philistine blacksmiths even to sharpen agricultural tools like goads. This economic oppression kept Israel militarily weak, as goads could be weaponized in emergency. Later, Ecclesiastes memorably compares wise words to goads—painful but directing. The consistent translation as 'goad' or 'aguijada' across languages reflects this tool's universal agricultural function.

(1×) 1 Samuel 13:21 describes Israelites needing to pay Philistines to sharpen 'the goad' among other farm implements. This detail illustrates Philistine dominance: controlling even basic agricultural maintenance kept Israel dependent and defenseless. The goad's dual nature—tool and potential weapon—explains Philistine watchfulness. Judges shows how Shamgar killed 600 Philistines with an ox goad, proving these implements could be deadly in desperate hands. The Philistines' economic exploitation thus served strategic military purposes. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: the-goad | es: la-aguijada | fr: le-goad | de: der-goad 1Sam 13:21

דַּרְבֹּנָה H1861b Prep-k (1×)

Goads, sharp-pointed implements; used metaphorically for piercing, directing words of wisdom

This plural form appears in Ecclesiastes's conclusion, where the Preacher compares wise sayings to goads. The metaphor is apt: just as an ox goad pricks the animal to move in the right direction, wisdom's words pierce the conscience and direct behavior. The comparison acknowledges that truth can be uncomfortable—goads hurt—but emphasizes their beneficial purpose. The Teacher also compares wise words to 'firmly embedded nails,' creating a dual image of both sharp motivation and secure foundation. This agricultural metaphor brings abstract wisdom into the realm of lived experience.

(1×) Ecclesiastes 12:11 states: 'The words of the wise are like goads,' acknowledging that wisdom often operates through discomfort and redirection rather than comfortable affirmation. The simile recognizes the painful but necessary work of wise counsel—it prods us away from destructive paths. Combined with the nail imagery, the verse suggests wisdom both moves us (goads) and anchors us (nails). This mixed metaphor captures wisdom's dual function: directing change while providing stability. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: are-like-goads | es: como-aguijones | fr: כדרבנות | de: [כדרבנות] Eccl 12:11

דַּרְדַּע H1862 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Darda, one of the legendary wise men surpassed by Solomon's wisdom

Darda appears among the proverbially wise men whom Solomon exceeded in wisdom. First Kings lists him with Ethan, Heman, and Calcol as 'sons of Mahol,' possibly indicating membership in a guild of sages or musicians. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles reads 'Dara,' likely the same person with variant spelling. These men represented the apex of human wisdom in their generation, making the claim that Solomon surpassed them all the more impressive. Their inclusion in Scripture serves primarily to magnify Solomon's God-given wisdom by comparison.

(1×) 1 Kings 4:31 declares Solomon wiser than Ethan, Heman, Calcol, 'and Darda, the sons of Mahol'—his fame spreading through surrounding nations. These four men apparently embodied the pinnacle of human wisdom, whether as sages, poets, or musicians (Psalm 89 is attributed to Ethan). The comparison establishes Solomon's incomparable wisdom as divinely granted rather than merely human achievement. That we know almost nothing else about Darda paradoxically serves the text's purpose: even the greatest human wisdom fades before God's gift to Solomon. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Darda | es: y-Darda | fr: et-Darda | de: und-Darda 1Kgs 4:31

דַּרְדַּר H1863 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

thistle, thorny weeds growing in uncultivated ground

This word refers to thistles or thorny plants that grow wild. Genesis 3:18 uses it in God's curse on the ground after the Fall: the earth will produce 'thorns and thistles,' making agriculture toilsome. Hosea 10:8 employs the same pair symbolically—'thorn and thistle' will grow on Israel's altars as judgment for idolatry. In both cases, these plants represent the undoing of cultivation, the return to wilderness, and the frustration of human labor.

(2×) The translations ('thistle, cardo, chardon, Disteln') identify thorny, unwanted vegetation. Genesis 3:18 establishes the 'thorn and thistle' pair as signs of the curse—the ground resists human cultivation and produces painful, useless plants. Hosea 10:8 prophetically reverses this: the altars where Israel sought blessing will be overgrown with the very signs of the curse. The paired terms symbolize desolation, abandonment, and divine judgment reversing fertility. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: and-thistle | es: y-cardo | fr: et-chardon | de: [ודרדר], und-Disteln Gen 3:18; Hos 10:8

דָּרוֹם H1864 Prep-l (17×)

South, southern direction — a poetic and late Hebrew term for the south as a cardinal direction

A somewhat literary and late Hebrew noun for 'south,' used primarily in Ezekiel's temple visions and in Ecclesiastes. Unlike the more common negev (which also denotes the arid southern region) or teman (associated with the far south and Edom), darom functions as a neutral directional term, typically contrasted with tsafon ('north') and sometimes with qadim ('east') or yam ('west/sea'). In Ezekiel's elaborate temple descriptions, it identifies the southern gate, southern chambers, and southern measurements (Ezek 40-42). Deuteronomy 33:23 pairs it with yam in Naphtali's blessing, and Job 37:17 invokes the south wind's stifling heat. Ecclesiastes uses it in proverbial observations about wind patterns (1:6) and fallen trees (11:3).

south, southern direction (17×) A geographic directional noun meaning 'south' or 'the south,' employed primarily in poetic and late biblical Hebrew. Concentrated in Ezekiel's temple vision (12 of 17 occurrences) where it designates the southern gate (sha'ar haddarom), southern chambers, and southern orientation, consistently opposed to tsafon ('north'). English renders 'south'; Spanish uses 'sur' and 'mediodía'; French employs 'midi' and 'sud.' Also attested in Deut 33:23, Job 37:17, and Ecclesiastes 1:6 and 11:3, where it carries atmospheric and proverbial connotations. SOUTH AND DIRECTION

en: and-south, from-the-south, in-the-south | es: desde-sur, el-sur, en-el-sur | fr: de-midi, et-sud, midi | de: Sueden, [בדרום], [דרום] Deut 33:23; Job 37:17; Eccl 1:6; Eccl 11:3; Ezek 20:46

דְּרוֹר H1865 N-ms (8×)

Liberty, release from bondage (especially in the Jubilee year); also free-flowing, used of fine liquid myrrh.

A noun rooted in the concept of free, unimpeded flow – applied both to the release of persons from servitude and to the flowing quality of liquid myrrh. Its primary use is theological and legal: 'proclaim liberty throughout the land' (Lev 25:10, inscribed on the American Liberty Bell) announces the Jubilee release of slaves and return of property. Isaiah 61:1 extends this to messianic liberation, and Jeremiah 34:8-17 narrates a failed attempt to honor this obligation. The single occurrence with myrrh (Exod 30:23) preserves the word's physical root: mor-deror is 'free-flowing myrrh,' the finest grade that drips naturally without pressing.

1. liberty (7×) Liberty or release from bondage, a technical term for the emancipation proclaimed in the Jubilee year and related sabbatical ordinances. Leviticus 25:10 pairs it with qara ('proclaim'): 'you shall proclaim liberty to all its inhabitants.' Isaiah 61:1 applies it messianically: the anointed one is sent 'to proclaim liberty to the captives.' Jeremiah 34:8, 15, 17 records Zedekiah's covenant of release and God's ironic counter-proclamation of 'liberty' to sword and pestilence. Spanish libertad and French liberté converge across all seven occurrences. Ezekiel 46:17 refers to the 'year of liberty,' confirming the Jubilee connection. FREEDOM AND LIBERTY

en: liberty, the-liberty | es: la-libertad, libertad | fr: liberty, liberté | de: Freiheit, [הדרור], liberty Lev 25:10; Isa 61:1; Jer 34:8; Jer 34:15; Jer 34:17

2. flowing (1×) Free-flowing, describing the quality of liquid myrrh that drips naturally. Exodus 30:23 specifies mor-deror ('myrrh of flowing') as the first ingredient in the sacred anointing oil – the choicest grade that flows freely without mechanical pressing. French coulant ('flowing') captures this physical sense precisely. The connection to the liberty sense is illuminating: both share the root idea of unimpeded, spontaneous movement – whether of a person released from bonds or of resin released from a tree. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: flowing | es: libertad | fr: coulant | de: flowing Exod 30:23

דְּרוֹר H1866 Prep-k (2×)

swallow (bird), a small, swift-flying bird

This term identifies the swallow, a bird known for its swift, darting flight. Psalm 84:3 mentions the swallow alongside the sparrow, both finding a home at God's altar—a metaphor for the psalmist's longing for God's presence. Proverbs 26:2 uses the swallow's flight pattern to illustrate how an undeserved curse 'flits about' without landing or taking effect. The bird's rapid, unpredictable movement makes it an apt image for both restless seeking (Psalm) and ineffectual cursing (Proverbs).

(2×) The glosses ('swallow, golondrina, hirondelle') consistently identify this swift bird. Psalm 84:3 uses it in a longing for God's house: even the swallow finds a nest at the altar. Proverbs 26:2 employs its characteristic darting flight ('like a swallow in flying') to depict a groundless curse that never lands. The swallow's rapid, restless movement serves different metaphorical purposes—yearning devotion in Psalms, harmless futility in Proverbs. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9516 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-a-swallow, like-a-swallow | es: como-golondrina, y-golondrina | fr: et-hirondelle, כדרור | de: [כדרור], und-ein-verschlingen Ps 84:3; Prov 26:2

דָּרְיָוֶשׁ H1867 N-proper-ms (10×)

Darius — the Persian royal name borne by Darius Hystaspis, Darius Codomannus, and 'Darius the Mede.'

This Old Persian name (Darayavaush, meaning 'he who holds firm the good') identifies up to three rulers in the Hebrew Bible. Darius I (Hystaspis, 522-486 BC) is the most frequently mentioned, appearing in Haggai, Zechariah, and Ezra as the king under whom the Second Temple was completed. Darius III (Codomannus, 336-330 BC) may be the Darius of Nehemiah 12:22. The enigmatic 'Darius the Mede' of Daniel 9:1 and 11:1 remains a subject of scholarly discussion. German renderings include the interesting prepositional forms 'fuer-Darius' and 'zu-Darius,' reflecting the genitive contexts in which the name frequently appears.

of Daryavesh (10×) The royal name Darius (Hebrew daryavesh, from Old Persian Darayavaush), applied to Persian-era kings. Most occurrences refer to Darius I Hystaspis, under whose reign the Jerusalem temple was rebuilt (Ezra 4:5; Hag 1:1, 15; Zech 1:1, 7). The name also designates Darius the Mede in Daniel (Dan 9:1; 11:1) and possibly Darius III in Nehemiah 12:22. The dating formula 'in the Xth year of Darius' is the characteristic syntactic frame, reflected in multilingual glosses like French 'Darius' and German 'zu-Darius.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Daryavesh, of-Darius, of-Daryavesh | es: Darío, de-Darío | fr: Darius | de: Darius, fuer-Darius, zu-Darius Ezra 4:5; Neh 12:22; Dan 9:1; Dan 11:1; Hag 1:1

בְּדָרְיָוֶשׁ H1868 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (15×)

Darius — the Persian royal name borne by Darius Hystaspis and 'Darius the Mede' in Scripture

The Hebrew form דָּרְיָוֶשׁ renders the Old Persian name Dārayavauš ('he who holds firm the good'). In Ezra it identifies Darius I Hystaspis, under whose decree the Jerusalem temple was completed (Ezra 4:24; 5:5–7; 6:1, 12–15). In Daniel it names the enigmatic 'Darius the Mede' who receives the kingdom after Belshazzar's fall (Dan 5:31; 6:1–28). Haggai and Zechariah date their prophecies to 'the second year of Darius' (Hag 1:1; Zech 1:1). European translations consistently use 'Darius/Darío,' while some transliterations stay closer to the Hebrew form (eng 'Daryavesh').

Daryavesh (15×) The royal Persian name Darius (דָּרְיָוֶשׁ), from Old Persian Dārayavauš, designating at least two figures: Darius I Hystaspis under whom the Second Temple was rebuilt (Ezra 4:24; 6:1, 12–15; Hag 1:1; Zech 1:1), and the mysterious 'Darius the Mede' of Daniel (Dan 6:1, 6, 9, 25, 28). Cross-lingual glosses range from close transliterations (eng 'Daryavesh') to conventional Europeanizations (spa 'Darío', fra/deu 'Darius'). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Daryavesh, and-Daryavesh, to-Daryavesh | es: A-Darío, Dareyavesh, Darío | fr: Darius, et-Darius, zu-Darius | de: Darius, und-Darius, zu-Darius Ezra 4:24; Ezra 5:5; Ezra 5:6; Ezra 5:7; Ezra 6:1

דָּרַךְ H1869 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (63×)

To tread, march, trample; to bend the bow; in Hifil, to lead or guide along a path, or to cause to trample.

Darakh is one of those Hebrew verbs where the physical body tells the theological story. At its most literal, it means to set one's foot upon something — to tread grapes in a winepress (Isa 63:3), to walk upon conquered high places (Deut 33:29), to step on a threshing floor. From this earthy treading comes the vivid image of bending the bow: ancient archers literally trod upon the lower end of their bow to string and bend it (Ps 7:12; Jer 51:3), and this technical sense accounts for nearly a third of all uses. The Hifil stem elevates the verb beautifully — God 'causes to walk,' that is, he guides his people along the right path (Ps 25:5, 9), a metaphor so natural that Spanish guiar and German führen ('to lead') replace the treading imagery entirely. The Ethiopic cognate daraka ('to be rough, severe') preserves the forceful, physical origin that underlies even the gentlest guidance sense.

1. tread, trample (30×) The basic Qal sense: to tread upon, step on, trample — 30 occurrences covering the full range of physical foot-placement. This includes treading grapes in the winepress (Isaiah 63:3's dramatic 'I have trodden the winepress alone'), walking upon conquered territory (Deut 1:36; 11:24; Josh 1:3 — 'every place the sole of your foot shall tread'), and trampling enemies or thresholds (1 Sam 5:5). Spanish pisadores/el que pisa ('treaders/the one who treads') and French fouler ('to trample') both preserve the forceful physicality. Korean 밟다 ('to step on') maps directly to this concrete sense. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: I-have-trodden, and-I-trod-them, and-the-treader-of- | es: como-pisadores, el-pisador, el-que-pisa | fr: [דרכים], chemin, et-fouler | de: Weg, der-Weg, du-wirst-tread Deut 1:36; Deut 11:24; Deut 11:25; Deut 33:29; Josh 1:3

2. bend the bow (20×) To bend or draw the bow — 20 occurrences reflecting a distinctive technical-military usage derived from the physical action of treading on the bow's lower limb to bend it for stringing. This is a real lexicalized sense, not a metaphor: 1 Chronicles 5:18 and 8:40 describe warriors 'bending the bow' as a military skill, and Psalm 11:2 warns that the wicked 'bend their bow.' The specialized vocabulary is confirmed cross-linguistically: Spanish tensaron ('they tensed'), German spannen ('to draw/bend'), and the Arabic cognate's iv-form reaching/overtaking sense all point to a discrete martial action. Zechariah 9:13 ('I have bent Judah as my bow') builds theological metaphor on this military base. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: And-they-bend, He-bent, I-have-bent | es: Ha-tensado, Y-tensaron, [kethiv] | fr: [דרכי], [ודרכי], chemin | de: Weg, Wege-von, bend 1Chr 5:18; 1Chr 8:40; 2Chr 14:8; Ps 7:12; Ps 11:2

3. lead, guide (9×) Hifil causative: to lead, guide, or cause to walk along a path — 9 occurrences, almost exclusively with God as subject. Psalm 25:5 ('lead me in your truth') and 25:9 ('he guides the humble in justice') are foundational, as is Proverbs 4:11 ('I have led you in paths of uprightness'). The metaphorical leap from physical treading to divine guidance is so complete that target languages abandon treading vocabulary entirely: Spanish guiar, German führen, French conduire, and Korean 인도하다 all select dedicated 'lead/guide' words. This confirms a fully lexicalized sense, not a contextual inference. Psalm 119:35 ('make me walk in the path of your commandments') links this guidance to Torah observance. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-have-led-you, I-will-guide-them, and-He-led-them | es: Guíame, Y-los-guió, el-que-te-guía | fr: et-fouler, et-marcher, fouler | de: er-führt, führen-mich, machen-mich-wandeln Ps 25:5; Ps 25:9; Ps 107:7; Ps 119:35; Prov 4:11

4. cause to trample, thresh (3×) Hifil causative with retained physical force: to cause to trample or thresh — 3 occurrences where the causative retains the violent or agricultural physicality of the Qal. Judges 20:43 describes enemies being 'trampled down'; Job 28:8 speaks of proud beasts that have not 'trodden' the path; Jeremiah 51:33 envisions Babylon as a threshing floor about to be trampled. Spanish trillar ('to thresh') and pisar ('to trample') preserve the agricultural and violent dimensions respectively. This sense is distinct from sense 3's metaphorical guidance because the physical treading is literal and forceful. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: her-trampling, trampled-him, tread-it | es: la-pisaron, lo-pisotearon, trillarla | fr: fouler, marcher-lui, trampled-lui | de: trampled-ihn, treten, tritt Judg 20:43; Job 28:8; Jer 51:33

5. (1×) A single ambiguous occurrence at Numbers 24:17 where Balaam prophesies that 'a star shall come out of Jacob and a scepter shall rise out of Israel' — and darakh describes the star's motion, variously rendered as 'marching,' 'stepping forth,' or 'arising.' The cross-lingual evidence (Spanish marchará, English 'marches') suggests processional, stately movement rather than violent trampling or bow-bending. This prophetic-cosmological usage may represent a distinct poetic sense of majestic advancing, though its isolation makes certainty difficult. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: marches | es: marchará | fr: marches | de: marches Num 24:17

דֶּרֶךְ H1870 Conj-w (712×)

Road, path, way; metaphorically one's way of life, conduct, or manner; also a journey or distance traveled.

Derek is one of the Hebrew Bible's most versatile nouns, serving as both a concrete geographical term and one of Scripture's richest metaphors. A derek can be a dusty road between towns, the 'way of the Red Sea,' or the route of a caravan — but it becomes truly powerful when it describes the moral and spiritual trajectory of a life. The Psalms' opening declaration that God 'knows the way of the righteous' (Ps 1:6) and Proverbs' warning against the 'way of the wicked' depend on this seamless slide from physical path to ethical conduct. The multilingual evidence shows every language preserving this duality: Spanish camino, German Weg, French chemin, Korean 길, Arabic tariq, and Swahili njia all function simultaneously as 'road' and 'way of life.' This universal metaphor — life as a journey along a path — makes derek one of the Bible's most translatable and most profound words.

1. road, path, way (376×) A physical road, path, or route — the concrete thoroughfare on which people walk or travel, appearing 376 times. This covers named routes ('the way of the land of the Philistines,' Exod 13:17), roads between cities (Gen 35:19), paths in the wilderness (Gen 24:27; 28:20), and even animal tracks. Spanish camino, German Weg, French chemin, and Arabic tariq all map directly to this spatial sense. The construct form derek + place-name ('way of the Red Sea,' 'way of Bashan') functions almost as a geographical proper noun, and Gen 3:24 — the cherubim guarding the 'way to the tree of life' — gives this concrete sense immediate theological weight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-way, on-the-way | es: en-el-camino, por-el-camino | fr: dans-le-chemin, sur-le-chemin | de: auf-dem-Weg, auf-der-Weg, in-der-Weg Gen 24:27; Gen 28:20; Gen 35:3; Gen 42:38; Gen 45:24

2. way of life, conduct (metaphorical) (189×) Split from sense 92119. Criteria: Metaphorical extension to moral conduct, behavior, lifestyle. 'The way of the wicked' (Ps 1:6), 'walk in his ways' (Deut 8:6, 10:12). Ethical/theological sense.

en: The-way-of, is-the-way-of, the-way-of | es: Camino-de, camino-, camino-de | fr: chemin | de: Weg, der-Weg- Exod 33:13; Josh 1:8; Job 23:10; Ps 1:6; Ps 5:8

3. road, path (physical) (129×) Split from sense 92119. Criteria: Literal physical road, path, or route for travel. The lemma gloss mentions 'Road, path, way' and 'a journey or distance traveled' as primary meanings.

en: by-way-of, the-way-of, way-of | es: Camino-de, camino-de, camino-de- | fr: chemin | de: Weg Gen 49:17; Num 22:26; Deut 1:2; 1Sam 21:6; Ezra 8:21

4. journey, travel (15×) A journey, expedition, or the distance traveled — 15 occurrences where the emphasis falls on the act of traveling rather than the road itself. Jacob prepares provisions 'for the journey' (Gen 42:25; 45:21, 23), Elijah is strengthened for his journey to Horeb (1 Kgs 19:7), and the three-day journey into the wilderness becomes a formula in the Exodus narrative (Exod 3:18; 8:27). German Reise and Arabic masira ('march, distance') both select journey-specific vocabulary distinct from static 'road,' and Korean 여행 similarly shifts to travel semantics. This sense foregrounds duration, provisions, and destination rather than the path as a fixed feature of landscape. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-the-journey, from-a-journey, his-journey | es: Camino-de, camino, camino-de | fr: de-un-journey, journey, le-journey | de: dein-Weg, der-Reise, fuer-der-Reise Gen 24:21; Gen 42:25; Gen 45:21; Gen 45:23; Exod 3:18

5. manner, custom (2×) Manner, custom, or characteristic way of doing something — a rare sense appearing only twice, in Gen 19:31 ('the manner of all the earth,' i.e., the custom of sexual union) and Gen 31:35 ('the manner of women,' i.e., menstruation). Here derek has become fully abstract, meaning 'the way things are done' or 'natural custom.' Arabic 'ada/sira ('custom, habit') and German Weise ('fashion, manner') capture this well. The euphemistic use in both passages — avoiding direct reference to sexual or bodily matters — shows derek functioning as a delicate circumlocution, a usage attested also in later Rabbinic Hebrew. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-way-of, way-of | es: camino-de, según-camino-de | fr: chemin-de, comme-chemin-de | de: der-Weg, nach-der-Weise Gen 19:31; Gen 31:35

6. (1×) A single occurrence at 1 Kings 18:43 where Elijah sends his servant to look 'toward the sea' (derek-yam, 'the way of the sea'). The gloss evidence (English 'way-of-,' Spanish camino-de, German Weg-von-) suggests a directional or locative use — 'in the direction of' — that hovers between the concrete road sense and a pure spatial adverbial. This may represent derek functioning as a quasi-preposition indicating direction, a usage also attested in Ugaritic drk and Akkadian girru in directional formulae. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: way-of- | es: camino-de | fr: chemin-de- | de: Weg-von- 1Kgs 18:43

דַּרְכְּמוֹן H1871 N-mp (4×)

Daric or drachma; a gold coin used in post-exilic temple donations and rebuilding contributions.

A Persian-era gold coin mentioned exclusively in post-exilic contexts of temple fundraising. The term appears in Ezra 2:69 and Nehemiah 7:70–72 in tallies of generous donations for rebuilding the Jerusalem temple. Whether it refers precisely to the Persian daric (a gold coin bearing the image of a kneeling archer) or the Greek drachma remains debated, though the post-exilic setting favors the daric. English splits between 'darics' and 'drachmas,' while Spanish uses 'dracmas,' reflecting this longstanding numismatic uncertainty.

(4×) Daric or drachma — a gold coin of the Persian period, mentioned in the context of voluntary contributions for the rebuilt Jerusalem temple. In Ezra 2:69, returning exiles donate 61,000 darics of gold; Neh 7:70–72 records similar contributions. The prosthet. aleph form אַדַּרְכֹנִין appears alongside דַּרְכְּמוֹן, both likely loanwords from Persian or Greek. English translations vary between 'darics' (favoring a Persian gold coin) and 'drachmas' (favoring the Greek silver coin), while Spanish 'dracmas' leans Greek. The post-exilic Persian administrative context makes the gold daric the more probable referent. SILVER AND MONEY

en: darics, drachmas | es: dracmas | fr: [דרכמונים], [דרכמנים] | de: [דרכמונים], [דרכמנים] Ezra 2:69; Neh 7:70; Neh 7:71; Neh 7:72

וְדַרְעָ H1872 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

Arms (of the body); specifically the upper limbs of the human form

This Aramaic word for 'arms' appears in Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream image. The colossal statue had arms of silver, representing the kingdom that would follow Babylon. Daniel's use of the Aramaic term (cognate with Hebrew 'arm') shows the linguistic context of exile—Hebrew prophets adopting vocabulary from their Babylonian setting. The body-part symbolism of the dream proves crucial to understanding succession of empires. That French translates this as 'generation' reflects textual difficulty or mistranslation, as context clearly requires anatomical arms.

(1×) Daniel 2:32 describes Nebuchadnezzar's dream image: 'Its head was fine gold, its chest and arms of silver.' The arms symbolize the empire succeeding Babylon—traditionally identified as Medo-Persia. The decreasing value of metals (gold to silver to bronze to iron) represents declining glory while increasing strength. Daniel's interpretation uses the statue's anatomy to map future history, with each body part representing a successive kingdom. The dual arms may suggest the dual nature of the Medo-Persian alliance. BODY (PHYSICAL FORM)

en: and-its-arms | es: y-sus-brazos | fr: et-génération | de: [וּדרעוהי] Dan 2:32

דַּרְדַּע H1873 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Dara, a wise man from Judah's lineage; variant spelling of Darda

This name appears in Chronicles's genealogy of Judah as one of the sons of Zerah. The parallel passage in 1 Kings spells the name 'Darda,' and textual evidence suggests Darda is the original reading, with Dara being a variant. Chronicles places these wise men in Judah's tribal lineage, specifically the Zerahite clan. The Septuagint and Syriac versions support reading Darda here as well. This genealogical placement connects legendary wisdom figures to Israel's tribal structure, grounding abstract intellectual excellence in concrete family identity.

(1×) 1 Chronicles 2:6 lists the sons of Zerah including Ethan, Heman, Calcol, 'and Dara'—the same group of wise men mentioned in 1 Kings 4:31 as being surpassed by Solomon. The variant spelling (Darda vs. Dara) reflects normal textual variation in proper names across manuscripts. By including these sages in Judah's genealogy, Chronicles integrates wisdom tradition into tribal history. This genealogical context suggests these weren't foreign wise men but Israelites renowned for wisdom, making Solomon's superiority a matter of God's special gift rather than cross-cultural comparison. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Dara | es: y-Dara | fr: [ודרע] | de: [ודרע] 1Chr 2:6

דַּרְקוֹן H1874 N-proper-ms (2×)

Darkon, head of a family of temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from exile

Darkon was the ancestor of a family of Nethinim (temple servants) who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel. Both Ezra 2:56 and its parallel Nehemiah 7:58 list 'the sons of Darkon' among the returnees. The Nethinim were dedicated to assisting the Levites in temple service, and these genealogical lists preserve the memory of families who maintained their identity and calling through the exile and returned to serve in the rebuilt temple.

(2×) The transliterations ('Darkon, Darcón, Darqon') preserve this ancestral name. Both occurrences identify 'the sons/children of Darkon' in lists of Nethinim who returned to Jerusalem (Ezra 2:56, Neh 7:58). These parallel passages record the same historical return, with minor variations typical of parallel accounts. The family maintained its identity through exile, returning to resume temple service—a testament to covenant faithfulness across generations. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Darkon, Darqon | es: Darcón | fr: [דרקון] | de: [דרקן] Ezra 2:56; Neh 7:58

דָּרַשׁ H1875 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms / 3mse (165×)

To seek, inquire of, consult, investigate, require; be sought or consulted (Niphal); care for

A verb of deliberate, purposeful pursuit — whether seeking God in prayer, consulting a prophet for guidance, or investigating a legal matter with judicial rigor. Its Arabic cognate darasa ('study, tread repeatedly') preserves the sense of persistent engagement. The semantic range moves from general searching (1 Chr 16:11) to formal consultation of divine oracles (Gen 25:22), forensic investigation (Deut 13:14), and even covenantal accountability where God 'requires' blood (Gen 9:5). In the Niphal, God Himself becomes the one sought or consulted, often with the poignant note that He allowed — or refused — to be found.

1. seek, search for (96×) The broadest and most frequent sense: to seek or search for someone or something, whether physically, spiritually, or metaphorically. 'Seek the LORD and His strength' (1 Chr 16:11) exemplifies the devotional register. Spanish buscar and French chercher render this straightforwardly, while Arabic talaba preserves the sense of active pursuit. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: he-sought, sought, to-inquire-of | es: a-buscar, buscó, consultó | fr: chercher, à-chercher | de: suchen, suchte, zu-suchte 1Chr 10:13; 1Chr 10:14; 1Chr 13:3; 1Chr 15:13; 1Chr 16:11

2. inquire of, consult (39×) A specialized sense of seeking divine direction: consulting God, a prophet, or an oracle for guidance. Rebekah 'inquired of the LORD' about her twins (Gen 25:22), and kings routinely sought prophetic counsel before battle (1 Kgs 22:5). Spanish consultar and the Arabic sa'ala ('to ask') capture the formal, deliberative quality of this oracular inquiry. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: I-will-require, Inquire-, and-we-will-inquire | es: Consulta, a-consultar, consultad | fr: Je—exiger, [לדרש], chercher | de: inquire, inquire-von, suchen Gen 9:5; Gen 25:22; Deut 12:30; Deut 18:11

3. investigate, examine (9×) Careful, thorough investigation of a matter, especially in judicial contexts. Deuteronomy requires that allegations be investigated diligently (Deut 13:14, 17:4, 19:18). The Arabic bahatha ('examine') and German untersuchen both convey the forensic precision this sense demands — a methodical searching out of truth. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: Seek, You-search, and-shall-investigate | es: Buscad, E-investigarán, E-investigarás | fr: chercher, et-devra-investigate, et-tu-devra-inquire | de: suchen, sucht, suchte Deut 13:14; Deut 17:4; Deut 17:9; Deut 19:18; 1Chr 28:9

4. require, demand, call to account (8×) A juridical and covenantal sense: to require, demand, or call to account, especially for bloodshed. God declares 'your blood I will require' (Gen 9:5), establishing accountability. Spanish demandar and the construction in 2 Chr 24:22 ('may the LORD see and require it') show the sense of divine or legal reckoning. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: I-will-require, I-will-require-it, I-will-seek | es: demanda, demandarás, demandaré | fr: Je—exiger-cela, [אדרוש], [אדרש] | de: soll-require-es, suchen, suchte Gen 9:5; Deut 18:19; 2Chr 24:6; 2Chr 24:22; Ps 10:13

5. be inquired of, be sought (Niphal) (7×) The Niphal passive-reflexive describes God permitting or refusing to be consulted. Ezekiel's 'I will not be inquired of by you' (Ezek 20:3, 31) stands in stark contrast to Isaiah's 'I was found by those who did not seek me' (Isa 65:1). This sense reveals a theology of divine availability — God's willingness to be sought is itself an act of grace. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: I-am-inquired-of, I-let-Myself-be-sought, I-will-be-sought | es: Fui-buscado, me-dejaré-consultar, seré-buscado | fr: [אדרש], [האדרש], chercher | de: suchen Isa 65:1; Ezek 14:3; Ezek 20:3; Ezek 20:31

6. be required, be sought out (Niphal passive) (4×) The Niphal passive participle describes a state of being required or sought out. Isaiah's 'Sought Out, a city not forsaken' (Isa 62:12) transforms the verb into a title of restored dignity. The passive in Gen 42:22 ('his blood is required') echoes the juridical demand sense in passive voice. Arabic matloob ('required, demanded') precisely parallels this usage. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: Sought-out, is-required, sought-out | es: Buscada, buscadas, es-demandada | fr: chercher, est-exigea, rechercher | de: suchen, suchte, wird-gefordert Gen 42:22; 1Chr 26:31; Ps 111:2; Isa 62:12

7. care for, attend to (2×) A tender figurative extension where seeking becomes caring: God 'cares for' the land (Deut 11:12), and the psalmist laments that no one 'cares for my soul' (Ps 142:4). This sense bridges intellectual pursuit and compassionate attention, showing how persistent seeking can become solicitous tending. SEEKING AND SEARCHING en: one-caring, seeks | es: cuida, quien-busque | fr: rechercher, seeks | de: seeks, suchte Deut 11:12; Ps 142:4

דָּשָׁא H1876 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (2×)

sprout, put forth vegetation, become green

This verb means to sprout or bring forth vegetation. Genesis 1:11 uses it in God's creative command: 'Let the earth sprout vegetation.' Joel 2:22 employs it to describe restoration after locust devastation: 'the pastures of the wilderness sprout.' The Hiphil (causative) form in Genesis emphasizes God causing the earth to produce, while the Qal (simple) in Joel describes the natural result. Both contexts celebrate the life-giving power that makes barren ground flourish.

(2×) The glosses ('sprout, produzca, reverdecen') capture the sense of vegetation emerging. Genesis 1:11 uses the causative form in God's creation decree—'let the earth cause to sprout vegetation'—initiating the plant kingdom. Joel 2:22 uses the simple form in a restoration promise: after judgment, the wilderness pastures 'are green/sprouting again.' Both passages link sprouting with divine blessing—creation's abundance (Genesis) and covenant restoration after devastation (Joel). SPROUTING AND GROWING en: let-sprout, sprout | es: produzca, reverdecen | fr: croître, que-sprout | de: [דשא], es-lasse-sprossen Gen 1:11; Joel 2:22

דֶּשֶׁא H1877 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (15×)
Grass, tender herbage; also threshing (from a separate root דּוּשׁ)
The noun דֶּשֶׁא is one of the Bible's primary words for fresh, tender vegetation — the green carpet that springs from the earth at God's command in Gen 1:11-12. It denotes young grass before it matures, contrasted with חָצִיר (dried hay) in Prov 27:25. Rain refreshes it (Deut 32:2), God causes it to sprout (Job 38:27), and the Psalmist rests beside its pastures (Ps 23:2). In prophetic and wisdom imagery, it becomes a metaphor for human frailty — the wicked spring up like דֶּשֶׁא only to wither (Ps 92:7, Isa 15:6). A single occurrence (Jer 50:11) represents a separate verbal root meaning 'to thresh.'

1. grass, tender vegetation (14×) Young grass, tender green herbage that springs from the ground — the fresh vegetation produced at creation (Gen 1:11-12) and sustained by rain and divine care. Used 14 times, it consistently denotes the earliest, most tender stage of plant growth. The earth תַּדְשֵׁא דֶּשֶׁא ('brings forth grass,' Gen 1:11) in a cognate accusative construction. Multilingual glosses converge tightly: 'hierba,' 'herbe,' 'Grünes,' 'grass.' The word appears in some of Scripture's most beloved imagery: the still-water pastures of Ps 23:2 (נְאוֹת דֶּשֶׁא), the rain-metaphor of Deut 32:2, and the simile of transient human life in 2 Kgs 19:26 and Isa 37:27. GRASS AND VEGETATION en: grass, green-grass, herb | es: como-la-hierba, de-hierba, hierba | fr: grass, herb, herbe | de: Grünes, [דשא], [כדשא] Gen 1:11; Gen 1:12; Deut 32:2; 2Sam 23:4; 2Kgs 19:26

2. threshing (1×) A Qal feminine singular participle from the separate root דּוּשׁ, meaning 'threshing' — the act of separating grain from husk. In Jer 50:11, Babylon is compared to a heifer that 'threshes' (דָּשָׁה), reveling in abundance while trampling. Spanish 'que trilla' and English 'threshing' confirm this as an entirely different semantic domain from the grass-noun — an artifact of homographic overlap in Hebrew where two roots share the same consonantal skeleton. GRASS AND VEGETATION en: threshing | es: que-trilla | fr: herbe | de: [דשה] Jer 50:11

דָּשַׁן H1878 V-Piel-Perf-2ms (11×)
To be or become fat; in Piel, to make fat, anoint, accept favorably, or remove altar ashes.
Rooted in the concrete image of animal fat and richness, dashen spans from literal grease to spiritual flourishing. The Qal describes Israel growing 'fat' in prosperity (Deut 31:20), while the Piel branches remarkably: the psalmist's head is 'anointed' with oil at a feast (Ps 23:5), God is asked to 'accept with favor' a burnt offering (Ps 20:3), and priests 'remove the ashes' from the altar (Exod 27:3). Spanish 'ungiste' (you anointed) and 'engorda' (fattens) neatly track how one root covers both ritual and physical nourishment. The Hitpael in Isaiah 34:6 paints the Lord's sword 'gorged' with sacrificial fat.

1. be fat, be enriched (5×) Intransitive sense of becoming fat, prosperous, or enriched, appearing in Qal, Pual, and Niphal forms. Deuteronomy 31:20 warns that Israel will grow 'fat' and turn to other gods, while Prov 11:25 promises the generous soul 'will be enriched.' Spanish 'será-prosperado' and German cognates confirm the metaphorical extension from physical fatness to general thriving and abundance. FATNESS AND RICHNESS
en: and-be-fat, is-richly-supplied, shall-be-enriched | es: será-engordada, será-engrosado, será-prosperado | fr: [דשן], et-être-graisse, gras | de: [דשן], [תדשן], und-sein-fett Deut 31:20; Prov 11:25; Prov 13:4; Prov 28:25; Isa 34:7

2. remove ashes (2×) A denominative Piel sense derived from deshen (fatty ashes), meaning to clear the greasy residue from the sacrificial altar. Exod 27:3 lists utensils made 'to remove its ashes,' and Num 4:13 prescribes the same clearing during tabernacle transport. Spanish 'descenicerarlo' (to de-ash it) and French 'ôter-cendres' (remove ashes) show multilingual consistency in this specialized priestly technical term. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-they-shall-remove-ashes-of, to-remove-its-ashes | es: Y-quitarán-ceniza-de, para-descenicerarlo | fr: et-ils-devra-ôter-cendres-de, à-ôter-son-cendres | de: und-sie-soll-entfernen-Asche-von, zu-entfernen-sein-Asche Exod 27:3; Num 4:13

3. make fat, enrich (1×) Active Piel sense of making someone or something fat, well-nourished, or robust. Prov 15:30 says a good report 'makes the bones fat' — physical vigor from joyful news. Spanish 'engorda' (fattens) preserves the concrete bodily image where emotional well-being manifests as physical strengthening. FATNESS AND RICHNESS
en: makes-fat | es: engorda | fr: gras | de: [תדשן] Prov 15:30

4. accept favorably (1×) Metaphorical Piel sense of accepting or regarding a sacrifice with divine favor, picturing the offering as made 'fat' and therefore pleasing. In Ps 20:3 the worshiper prays that God would 'regard with favor' the burnt offering. Spanish 'acepte' (may he accept) and the broader liturgical context show that the fatness of the sacrifice becomes a figure for divine approval and satisfaction. DELIGHT PLEASURE CONSENT en: may-he-regard-with-favor | es: acepte | fr: gras | de: möge-er-regard-mit-favor Ps 20:3

5. be gorged, be sated (1×) Hitpael reflexive sense of becoming gorged or glutted with fat, indicating gruesome or excessive satiation. Isaiah 34:6 describes the Lord's sword 'gorged' with the fat of lambs and goats in apocalyptic judgment. Spanish 'engrosada' (made thick/gorged) captures the visceral intensity of this single attestation. SATIATION AND FULLNESS en: it-is-gorged | es: engrosada | fr: [הדשנה] | de: [הדשנה] Isa 34:6

6. anoint with oil (1×) Piel sense of anointing the head with oil or fat as a sign of festivity, honor, and joy. In Ps 23:5 the shepherd-host 'anoints my head with oil,' where Spanish 'ungiste' (you anointed) and German 'du-salbst' (you anoint) consistently point to cosmetic or celebratory anointing rather than mere enrichment, distinguishing this from the general 'make fat' sense. ANOINTING AND SMEARING en: you-anoint | es: ungiste | fr: gras | de: du-salbst Ps 23:5

דָּשֵׁן H1879 Adj-mpc (3×)
fat, rich, vigorous; full of sap or oil
This adjective evokes abundance and vitality. It describes bread as 'rich' from fertile soil (Isa 30:23), the righteous as trees 'full of sap' and flourishing (Ps 92:14), and 'the prosperous of earth' who bow before God (Ps 22:29). The Spanish rico and French gras ('fatty, rich') highlight the sense of prosperity and well-nourished vigor. BDB suggests it may denote fullness of oil or sap, aligning with the image of verdant, well-fed life.

(3×) Applied to produce (Isa 30:23), righteous persons as thriving trees (Ps 92:14), and the prosperous or vigorous of the earth (Ps 22:29). The glosses emphasize richness, fullness of sap, and prosperity —conveying material and spiritual abundance. The word carries connotations of flourishing health and fruitfulness, not mere physical weight. FATNESS AND RICHNESS
en: and-plentiful, full-of-sap, the-prosperous-of- | es: llenos-de-savia, los-prósperos-de, rico | fr: [דשן], gras | de: [דשן], der-prosperous-von-, voll-von-sap Ps 22:29; Ps 92:14; Isa 30:23

דֶּשֶׁן H1880 Prep-m / N-msc (15×)
Fat ashes (from sacrificial offerings); fatness, richness, abundance (of divine blessing or fertility)
The noun דֶּשֶׁן captures two facets of fatness in ancient Israelite life. In the Levitical system, it denotes the greasy ashes left on the altar after burnt offerings are consumed — the priest must remove the דֶּשֶׁן and carry it outside the camp (Lev 1:16, 4:12, 6:10-11). This is a technical cultic term with a distinctly physical, even unpleasant, referent. But the same word also evokes richness, abundance, and luxuriant provision — the olive tree boasts of its דֶּשֶׁן (Judg 9:9), and God's house overflows with it (Ps 36:8). This duality mirrors the Hebrew worldview: fat is both a sacred residue of sacrifice and a metaphor for divine generosity.

1. fatty ashes (sacrificial) (8×) Fatty ashes — the grease-saturated residue produced when sacrificial animals are burned on the altar. A technical priestly term appearing 8 times, exclusively in ritual contexts. Leviticus prescribes the removal of דֶּשֶׁן from the altar: the priest dons linen garments, lifts the ashes, changes clothes, and carries them outside the camp (Lev 6:10-11). It also appears in Lev 1:16 (crop of the bird offering), Lev 4:12 (bull of the sin offering), and at Bethel in 1 Kgs 13:3, 5 when the altar splits and its ashes pour out. Jer 31:40 places the 'valley of the fat ashes' in the eschatological restoration of Jerusalem. Glosses consistently read 'ceniza/cendres/Asche' — all ash-vocabulary — confirming the concrete physical sense. ASHES COMBUSTION RESIDUE

en: and-the-ashes, the-ashes | es: la-ceniza, y-la-ceniza | fr: [והדשן], le-ashes, le-cendres | de: [והדשן], der-Asche, der-ashes Lev 1:16; Lev 4:12; Lev 6:10; Lev 6:11

2. fatness, richness, abundance (7×) Fatness, richness, or abundance as a quality of prosperity, fertility, and divine blessing. The olive tree in Jotham's fable refuses to leave its דִּשְׁנִי, its rich oil (Judg 9:9). The psalmist declares that God's people 'feast on the abundance (דֶּשֶׁן) of your house' (Ps 36:8) and that one's soul is satisfied 'as with marrow and fatness' (Ps 63:5). God crowns the year with goodness and the wagon tracks drip with דֶּשֶׁן (Ps 65:11). In Isa 55:2, eating דֶּשֶׁן is a metaphor for spiritual nourishment. Spanish 'abundancia/grosura,' French 'graisse,' and English 'fatness/richness' all point to a sense of lavish provision distinct from the cultic ash-residue. FAT AND RICHNESS

en: and-richness, fatness, from-abundance-of | es: abundancia, con-grosura, de-abundancia-de | fr: [בדשן], [דשן], de-graisse | de: [בדשן], [דשן], fatness Judg 9:9; Job 36:16; Ps 36:8; Ps 63:5; Ps 65:11

דָּת H1881 Prep-k / N-fs (22×)

Law, regulation, or statute; a royal decree or edict; a judicial sentence or verdict

The noun דָּת is a Persian loanword that entered biblical Hebrew during the exile and post-exilic period, appearing exclusively in Esther, Ezra, and once in Deuteronomy 33:2 (a debated occurrence). It denotes an authoritative legal pronouncement — whether a standing regulation of the Persian empire ('the law of the Medes and Persians,' cf. Esth 1:19) or a specific royal edict. In Esther, the word saturates the narrative of court intrigue: the king's law that none may approach the inner court uninvited (Esth 4:11), the irrevocable decree against the Jews (Esth 3:14-15), and the counter-decree that saves them (Esth 8:13-14). Its narrow distribution reflects the Persian administrative vocabulary that shaped Jewish legal discourse in the Second Temple period.

1. law, regulation, statute (19×) The primary sense of a binding law, regulation, or statute with ongoing legal force, covering 19 of 22 occurrences. In Esth 1:8 the king's law governs the feast ('no one was compelled'), and in Esth 1:13,15 legal experts are consulted about what 'the law' requires. The multilingual glosses converge on legal terminology — Spanish 'ley,' French 'loi,' German 'Gesetz' — distinguishing this as standing regulation rather than a one-time command. The controversial occurrence at Deut 33:2 ('a fiery law,' אֵשׁ דָּת) may be an archaic use or textual emendation, debated since antiquity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-law, according-to-law-of, and-his-law | es: Según-ley, conforme-a-ley-de, decreto | fr: décret, et-décret, loi | de: Gesetz, und-Gesetz, und-der-Gesetz Deut 33:2; Esth 1:8; Esth 1:13; Esth 1:15; Esth 1:19

2. royal decree, edict (2×) The narrower sense of a specific royal decree or edict — an authoritative command issued for a particular occasion rather than a permanent statute. Ezra 8:36 reports that the king's edicts (דָּתַי) were delivered to the satraps, and Esth 4:8 mentions a copy of 'the written decree' (כְּתָב הַדָּת) issued for the Jews' destruction. Spanish 'decreto/decretos' and French 'décret' distinguish this from the broader 'law' sense, marking a specific promulgated instrument of royal will rather than an ongoing legal norm. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-edicts-of, the-law | es: el-decreto, los-decretos-de | fr: décret | de: Gesetz, das-Gesetz Ezra 8:36; Esth 4:8

3. sentence, penalty, verdict (1×) A rare judicial sense at Esth 4:11 where דָּת functions as a sentence, penalty, or verdict applied to a specific person. Anyone who approaches the king uninvited has 'one law' (אַחַת דָּתוֹ) — death — unless the king extends his golden scepter. Here the 'law' has become a specific punitive consequence rather than a code of regulations or a royal proclamation. The Spanish 'su ley' and English 'his law' preserve the personal, punitive application that distinguishes this sense from the broader legal and decree senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-law | es: su-ley | fr: décret | de: Gesetz Esth 4:11

דָּת H1882 Conj-w / N-fsd (14×)

Law, legal code; royal decree or edict; judicial sentence or verdict (Aramaic, Persian loan-word)

An Aramaic noun borrowed from Persian that appears exclusively in Ezra and Daniel, where it navigates the charged intersection of divine Torah and imperial legislation. In Ezra 7 the Persian king himself acknowledges the 'law of your God' (dat 'elahak), and the multilingual evidence is telling: Spanish ley, Hindi vyavastha, and Arabic sharia all converge on the same concept of binding legal authority. Yet in Daniel 2:13 and 2:15 the word narrows to a specific royal decree — a single executive order — and translations shift accordingly to decreto, hukm, and myeongryeong. Most striking is Daniel 2:9, where Nebuchadnezzar accuses the wise men and the word takes on the force of a judicial sentence or penalty, a usage Spanish captures as sentencia and Hindi as dand.

1. law, regulation, statute (11×) The broadest and most frequent sense: a body of law, a legal code, or a set of regulations binding on a community. In Ezra 7:12-26 it refers seven times to the 'law of your God' or the 'law of the king,' always denoting an established legal framework rather than a single command. The consistent rendering across languages — Spanish ley, French loi, Hindi vyavastha, Arabic sharia, Swahili sheria — confirms this as the default reading. The word functions here essentially as the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew torah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-law-of-, according-to-the-law-of, and-law | es: conforme-a-la-ley-de, en-la-ley-de, la-ley-de | fr: et-loi, loi | de: [בדת], [דת], [דתא] Ezra 7:12; Ezra 7:14; Ezra 7:21; Ezra 7:25; Ezra 7:26

2. royal decree, edict (2×) A narrower sense: a specific royal decree or edict issued by sovereign authority. In Daniel 2:13 and 2:15, when the king's death sentence goes forth against the wise men, the word denotes not a legal code but a single authoritative command. Spanish shifts from ley to decreto, Hindi from vyavastha to aagya, and Korean from beop to myeongryeong, signaling a clear semantic distinction recognized across translation traditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-decree, the-decree | es: Y-el-decreto, el-decreto | fr: et-loi, loi | de: [דתא], [ודתא] Dan 2:13; Dan 2:15

3. sentence, judicial verdict (1×) The rarest and most pointed sense: a judicial sentence or verdict — the penalty imposed on a person rather than the law under which it falls. In Daniel 2:9 Nebuchadnezzar declares that the wise men have agreed on one verdict (dat) among themselves. Spanish renders it sentencia, Hindi dand ('penalty'), and Swahili hukumu ('judgment'), all distinguishing this from both the general law and the specific decree. Only this single occurrence carries the sense of a punitive judicial ruling. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: your-law | es: vuestra-sentencia | fr: loi | de: [דתכון] Dan 2:9

דְּתָא H1883 Prep-b / N-msd (2×)

grass (Aramaic), vegetation growing from the ground

This Aramaic word means grass or vegetation. Both occurrences in Daniel 4 appear in Nebuchadnezzar's vision and its interpretation: the great tree is cut down, but the stump is left 'in the grass of the field' (4:15, 4:23). The grass represents the natural world, the earth's covering, contrasting with the hewn tree's humiliation. The phrase

'tender grass of the field' emphasizes vulnerability and lowliness, foreshadowing the king's coming madness when he'll graze like cattle.

(2×) The translations ('grass, hierba, herbe') identify common vegetation. Daniel 4:15 and 4:23 both place the tree stump 'in the grass/tender grass of the earth,' where it will be wet with dew. This prepares for Nebuchadnezzar's humiliation—driven from human society to live among beasts, eating grass like cattle. The grass marks the boundary between the cultivated (human) and the wild (animal), a boundary the proud king will cross. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: in-grass-of | es: en-la-hierba | fr: herbe | de: [בדשׁאא] Dan 4:15; Dan 4:23

דְּתָבַר H1884 N-mpd (2×)

judges (Aramaic), officials administering law and justice

This Aramaic term refers to judges or legal officials. Daniel 3:2-3 lists them among the dignitaries Nebuchadnezzar summoned for the dedication of his golden image: satraps, prefects, governors, counselors, treasurers, judges, magistrates, and all provincial officials. The word is a Persian loanword (dathabara, 'law-bearer'), reflecting the multilingual administrative vocabulary of the Babylonian and Persian empires. These judges represented the judicial arm of imperial authority.

(2×) The glosses ('judges, jueces, law') identify legal officials. Both occurrences (Dan 3:2, 3:3) appear in identical lists of officials summoned to the image dedication. As a Persian loanword meaning 'law-bearer,' the term reflects the international character of Nebuchadnezzar's empire, where Persian administrative titles were adopted. The judges stand alongside governors and treasurers as representatives of imperial power, all commanded to worship the king's image. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: the-judges | es: los-jueces | fr: loi | de: [דתבריא] Dan 3:2; Dan 3:3

דָּתָן H1885 N-proper-ms (10×)

Dathan — a Reubenite rebel who, with Abiram, challenged Moses' authority and was swallowed by the earth.

Dathan, son of Eliab of the tribe of Reuben, is remembered as one of the principal rebels against Moses' leadership in the wilderness. Together with his brother Abiram and the Levite Korah, he challenged Moses' authority, famously refusing the summons with the defiant words 'We will not come up!' (Num 16:12). The dramatic divine judgment — the earth opening to swallow the rebels — is recalled in Deuteronomy 11:6 and celebrated in Psalm 106:17. The name is consistently transliterated across languages: Spanish 'Datan,' French 'Datan/Dathan,' German 'Datan,' confirming its singular referential identity.

Dathan (10×) The proper name Dathan (Hebrew datan), identifying a Reubenite, son of Eliab, who together with Abiram led a rebellion against Moses and Aaron in the wilderness (Num 16:1, 12). All ten occurrences refer to this single individual across the Korah narrative (Num 16:1-27), the genealogical recap (Num 26:9), and later retrospective references (Deut 11:6; Ps 106:17). The name appears with conjunctions ('and-Dathan') and prepositions ('for-Dathan') but always designates the same person. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Datan, Dathan, and-Datan | es: Datán, a-Datán, y-Datán | fr: Datan, Dathan, et-Datan | de: Datan, fuer-Datan, und-Datan Num 16:1; Num 16:12; Num 16:24; Num 16:25; Num 16:27

דֹּתָן H1886 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (3×)

Dothan (place name in northern Israel)

A town in northern Israel, north of Samaria, where Joseph's brothers had moved their flocks (Gen 37:17) and where Elisha was surrounded by an Aramean army—until his servant's eyes were opened to see chariots of fire (2 Kgs 6:13). The site has been identified with modern Tell Dothan. All three occurrences appear in narrative settings involving travel or military movements, and the multilingual glosses uniformly preserve the proper name with minor orthographic variation (Dotan, Dotán).

(3×) The proper noun consistently refers to a specific geographic location in the narratives of Joseph (Gen 37:17 twice) and Elisha (2 Kgs 6:13). Translations preserve the name rather than translate it, reflecting its function as a fixed toponym in biblical geography. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Dothan, to-Dothan | es: Dotan, en-Dotan, en-Dotán | fr: dans-Dothan, à-Dothan | de: in-Dotan, in-Dothan, nach-Dotan Gen 37:17; 2Kgs 6:13

הָא H1887 Interjection (2×)

behold, lo (interjection), an attention-getting particle

This interjection means 'behold' or 'lo,' drawing attention to what follows. Genesis 47:23 has Joseph addressing the Egyptians: 'Behold, I have bought you and your land for Pharaoh.' Ezekiel 16:43 uses it in divine accusation: 'Because you did not remember...behold, I will bring your deeds on your head.' In both cases, the particle introduces a significant declaration or announcement, commanding the listener's attention to an important truth or consequence.

(2×) The translations ('behold, he aquí, voici, hier') capture the attention-directing function. Genesis 47:23 uses it to announce a consequential transaction—Joseph has acquired the people for Pharaoh. Ezekiel 16:43 employs it to introduce divine judgment—God will requite Jerusalem's deeds. The interjection serves as a verbal pointing gesture, saying 'Pay attention now' before the key statement. It's a discourse marker creating emphasis and focus. BEHOLD (PARTICLE)

en: behold, here- | es: he-aquí | fr: ici-, voici! | de: [הא], hier Gen 47:23; Ezek 16:43

הָא H1888a Interjection (1×)

Behold! Lo! A demonstrative particle drawing attention to something present or imminent

This Aramaic demonstrative particle functions like Hebrew 'behold,' directing attention to something noteworthy. In Daniel's fiery furnace narrative, it introduces the king's shocked observation: a fourth figure walking in the flames with the three condemned men. The particle's force is immediate and dramatic—'Look!' or 'See!'—expressing Nebuchadnezzar's astonishment. In Aramaic, it often prefixes pronouns for emphasis (as in the common phrase 'behold, that one'). This single biblical use captures a moment of divine intervention made visible.

(1×) Daniel 3:25 records Nebuchadnezzar's exclamation: 'Behold! I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they are not hurt; and the form of the fourth is like a son of the gods.' The demonstrative particle emphasizes the king's startled recognition of the miraculous. What he expected—three men burning—transforms into what he witnesses: four men walking freely. This Aramaic interjection introduces one of Scripture's most dramatic theophanies, as God himself enters the furnace to preserve his faithful servants. BEHOLD (PARTICLE)

en: behold- | es: he-aquí | fr: voici | de: [הא] Dan 3:25

הָא H1888b Interjection (1×)

Even as, just as; an emphatic particle strengthening comparison or correspondence

This Aramaic compound (combining the demonstrative 'behold' with 'like') creates an emphatic comparison particle. It appears in Daniel's interpretation of the dream image, explaining why the divided kingdom cannot hold together: 'just as iron does not mix with clay.' The particle intensifies the simile, making the comparison more forceful than simple 'as' or 'like.' Aramaic and later Hebrew dialects frequently use such compound particles for rhetorical emphasis. The phrase establishes an absolute incompatibility that explains the kingdom's ultimate fragility.

(1×) Daniel 2:43 uses this emphatic particle to explain the mixed kingdom: 'Even as iron does not mix with clay, so they will not adhere to one another.' The compound demonstrative strengthens the comparison, making the incompatibility absolute and obvious.

Daniel interprets the iron mixed with clay as representing a kingdom attempting to unite disparate elements through intermarriage or alliance—but the fundamental incompatibility (like iron and clay) ensures eventual fracture. The emphatic particle underscores the certainty of this interpretive key. BEHOLD (PARTICLE)

en: even- | es: así-como | fr: voici | de: [הֵא] Dan 2:43

הֵאָח H1889 Interjection (12×)

he'ach – Aha!; an exclamatory interjection expressing malicious joy, scorn, or triumphant satisfaction

The interjection he'ach ('Aha!') is a sharp exclamatory cry expressing gloating satisfaction, scornful joy, or malicious triumph over another's misfortune. It appears almost exclusively in the Psalms and prophets, placed in the mouths of enemies and adversaries. The psalmist's foes cry 'Aha! Aha!' as they witness his downfall (Ps 35:21, 25; 40:15; 70:3). Ezekiel hurls it back against the nations that gloated over Jerusalem's destruction and over Tyre's collapse (Ezek 25:3; 26:2; 36:2). In Job 39:25, uniquely, it describes the war-horse's eager snorting cry amid trumpets – 'Aha!' – capturing not scorn but fierce exhilaration. Spanish aja, French ha, and German ha/aha all render this visceral exclamation.

(12×) An exclamatory interjection of malicious gloating or triumphant scorn, typically placed in the mouths of enemies (Ps 35:21, 25; 40:15; Ezek 25:3; 26:2; 36:2). Uniquely, it voices the war-horse's fierce exhilaration (Job 39:25). Spanish aja, French ha, and German aha capture its visceral, emotive force across all twelve occurrences. WOE AND ALAS

en: Aha, aha | es: ah, ajá, ¡Ajá! | fr: hélas!, le-foyer, le-frère | de: [הֵאָח], aha, der-Bruder Job 39:25; Ps 35:21; Ps 35:25; Ps 40:15

הַבְהָב H1890 N-mpc / 1cs (1×)

Sacrificial offerings or gifts; possibly roasted meat offerings of uncertain derivation

This rare and disputed word appears in Hosea's denunciation of Israel's corrupt worship. The context condemns their sacrificial system: 'As for the sacrifices of my offerings, they sacrifice flesh and eat it.' The term's root and exact meaning remain uncertain—possibly related to roasting, or simply meaning 'gifts' or 'offerings.' The possessive suffix ('my offerings') emphasizes that these are meant to be gifts to God, but Israel treats them as occasions for self-indulgent feasting. This single use critiques the externalization of worship devoid of covenant loyalty.

(1×) Hosea 8:13 condemns Israel's sacrificial practice: 'As for my sacrificial gifts, they sacrifice meat and eat it'—the people go through ritual motions while missing the covenant relationship. The term emphasizes these are supposed to be gifts to God, yet Israel uses them for personal consumption. Hosea's critique echoes Samuel's declaration that 'to obey is better than sacrifice': ritual correctness without heart obedience is worthless. The prophet announces that God will 'remember their iniquity' despite their multiplied sacrifices, ultimately sending them back to Egypt—covenant curse, not covenant blessing. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: My-offerings | es: mis-ofrendas | fr: offrande | de: [הַבְהָבַי] Hos 8:13

הָבַל H1891 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3mp (5×)

to become vain, act emptily; to be deluded or filled with false hopes

A denominative verb from hevel ('vanity'), describing the process of becoming empty or worthless in a moral and spiritual sense. In 2 Kings 17:15 and Jeremiah 2:5, Israel pursued vanity and thereby became vain — a pointed wordplay on the noun. Psalm 62:10 warns against becoming demoralized through robbery. Job 27:12 asks why people show themselves utterly vain. The Hiphil in Jeremiah 23:16 describes false prophets causing others to embrace delusion.

(5×) To become vain, act emptily, or be rendered worthless — describing moral-spiritual deterioration through pursuit of empty things. The Qal captures self-inflicted futility: 2 Kings 17:15 and Jeremiah 2:5 use the pointed wordplay 'they followed hevel and became havel' (Spanish 'se hicieron vanos'). Psalm 62:10 warns against becoming demoralized by illicit gain. Job 27:12 asks accusingly why the friends show themselves utterly vain. The Hiphil in Jeremiah 23:16 shifts to causative: false prophets 'make you vain' (Spanish 'os hacen vanos'), filling hearers with delusory hopes. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: and-became-vain, and-they-became-vain, become-vain | es: os-envanezcais, os-hacen-vanos, y-se-hicieron-vanos | fr: [ויהבלו], [מהבלים], et-ils-devint-vain | de: [ויהבלו], [מהבלים], [תהבלו] 2Kgs 17:15; Job 27:12; Ps 62:10; Jer 2:5; Jer 23:16

הֶבֶל H1892 Prep-b / N-mpc (73×)

Vapor, breath, fleeting puff; figuratively, vanity, futility, absurdity; applied to idols as worthless nothings.

Hevel — the signature word of Ecclesiastes — begins as something you can almost see: a puff of breath on a cold morning, a wisp of mist that vanishes the moment you notice it. From this concrete image of transience the word expands into the great philosophical declaration of Qoheleth: 'hevel of hevels, all is hevel' (Eccl 1:2). German 'Nichtigkeit' (nothingness) and Spanish 'vanidad' capture the existential weight, while the prophets weaponize the same word against foreign gods — the 'havalim' are empty nothings that cannot save (Jer 10:15). The three senses form a coherent arc from physical vapor to metaphysical futility to theological polemic.

1. vanity, futility, absurdity (58×) The dominant abstract sense — vanity, futility, absurdity — the keynote of Ecclesiastes where human striving, wisdom, pleasure, and toil are all declared hevel 'under the sun.' This is not nihilism but a hard-won recognition that earthly endeavors cannot secure lasting meaning on their own (Eccl 1:2; 12:8). Job uses the word similarly when he declares his days are hevel (Job 7:16). Spanish 'vanidad' and German 'Nichtigkeit' both convey this philosophical weight without reducing it to mere emptiness. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: vapor | es: Vanidad, vanidad | fr: vanité | de: Nichtigkeit 2Kgs 17:15; Job 7:16; Job 9:29; Job 21:34; Job 27:12

2. idols, false gods, worthless deities (11×) The polemical-theological application to idols and false gods, predominantly in the plural havalim. Deuteronomy warns that Israel provoked God 'with their havalim' (Deut 32:21), and Jeremiah condemns the nations' gods as 'hevel with no breath in them' (Jer 10:14-15; 51:18). The word is a deliberate theological insult: the idols are not just useless but literally insubstantial, vaporous nothings. Arabic and Syriac cognates preserve this same semantic link between emptiness and worthlessness. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: among-vanities-of, by-their-vanities, idols | es: con-sus-vanidades, con-vanidades-de, de-vanidades | fr: avec-leur-vanities, le-vanité, par-des-vanités | de: Nichtigkeit, Nichtigkeiten, bei-ihr-vanities Deut 32:21; 1Kgs 16:13; 1Kgs 16:26; Ps 31:6; Eccl 1:2

3. vapor, breath, fleeting puff (4×) The concrete, literal sense of a breath, puff, or vapor — something physically insubstantial that dissipates almost instantly. Psalm 62:9 places humanity on a balance and finds them lighter than hevel, while Psalm 144:4 says human days are 'like hevel' (a passing shadow). Isaiah 57:13 pairs it with wind: 'a breath will carry them all away.' This physical image is the experiential root from which the figurative meanings grow — you cannot grasp vapor, and that is precisely the point. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: and-vanity, emptiness, than-a-breath | es: a-vanidad, de-vanidad, vanidad | fr: de-vanité, et-le-ne...pas, vanité | de: Nichtigkeit, als-ein-breath, und-der-nicht Ps 62:9; Ps 144:4; Isa 49:4; Zech 10:2

הֶבֶל H1893 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (8×)

Abel (Hevel); second son of Adam, whose offering God accepted and who was murdered by his brother Cain.

Hevel (Abel) is the second son of Adam and Eve, a keeper of flocks whose sacrifice of the firstborn of his flock found favor with God (Gen 4:4). His brother Cain, a tiller of the ground, killed him in jealousy —the first murder in Scripture (Gen 4:8). God's response to Cain, 'the voice of your brother's blood cries to me from the ground' (Gen 4:10), makes Hevel a paradigm of innocent suffering. The name may be related to the common noun hevel ('breath, vapor'), though BDB suggests a possible Assyrian cognate ablu ('son').

Hevel (8×) The personal name Hevel (Abel), Adam's second son. French and German render the name with their traditional spellings —'Abel' and 'Habel' respectively—while English uses the transliteration 'Hevel' and Spanish follows suit. All eight occurrences fall within Genesis 4:2-25, covering his birth (v. 2), his accepted offering (v. 4), his murder by Cain (v. 8-9), and the notice that Seth was given 'in place of Hevel' (v. 25). PERSONAL NAMES
en: And-Hevel, Hevel | es: Hevel, Y-Hevel | fr: Abel, Et-Abel | de: Habel, Habels, und-Habel Gen 4:2; Gen 4:4; Gen 4:8

הָבְנִי H1894 Conj-w / N-mp (2×)
ebony, a hard, dark, valuable wood
This word refers to ebony, a dense black wood prized in the ancient world for furniture and luxury items. Ezekiel 27:15 lists it among the trade goods brought to Tyre: 'They brought you ivory tusks and ebony as payment.' The Qere/Ketiv variants show textual uncertainty in spelling, but both point to this exotic wood imported from distant regions (Ethiopia, India). Ebony's inclusion in Tyre's trade inventory illustrates the far-reaching commercial networks of the ancient Mediterranean.

(2×) The glosses ('ebony, ébano, ébène') identify this luxury wood, though some translations struggled with the textual variant. Ezekiel 27:15 describes it as tribute/payment brought to Tyre alongside ivory, both precious materials from distant lands. The Ketiv/Qere difference reflects scribal uncertainty about the spelling of this foreign loanword (possibly from Egyptian). The context makes clear it's a valuable commodity in international trade, symbolizing Tyre's wealth and far-flung commerce. FOREST WOODLAND
en: [and-ebony], and-ebony | es: (y-ébano), [y-ébano] | fr: et-le-fils, et-ébène | de: [והובנים], und-die-Soehne Ezek 27:15

הָבַר H1895 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (2×)
divide, mark out divisions (especially of the heavens for astrology)
This verb, of uncertain etymology, likely means to divide or mark out divisions. Isaiah 47:13 uses it in a sarcastic address to Babylon's astrologers: 'Let them stand and save you, those who divide the heavens, who gaze at the stars.' The Qere/Ketiv variants show textual uncertainty, but the context suggests dividing the heavens refers to the zodiac or other astrological divisions. The passage mocks Babylon's dependence on stargazers who carve up the sky seeking omens but cannot save from God's judgment.

(2×) The glosses ('dividers of, los que dividen') with the Ketiv/Qere variants show textual difficulty in Isaiah 47:13. Both forms point to those who 'divide/mark out the heavens,' parallel with 'stargazers' and 'monthly prognosticators.' This refers to Babylonian astrology, which divided the sky into zones (zodiac) for divination. Isaiah's satire is sharp: these experts who slice up the heavens into manageable sectors cannot manage God's decree against their city. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING en: dividers-of, ketiv | es: (los-que-dividen), [Qere] | fr: [(הברי)], [[הברן]] | de: [(הברי)], [[הברן]] Isa 47:13

הֵגֵא H1896 N-proper-ms (4×)
Hegai (also Hege); the eunuch of King Ahasuerus who was custodian of the royal harem.
The proper name of the king's eunuch placed in charge of the women's quarters in the court of Ahasuerus (Xerxes). He appears four times in Esther 2, overseeing the gathering of young women and later entrusting Esther with her preparations (Esth 2:3, 8, 15). The name has variant spellings—הֵגֵא (Hege) and הֵגַי/הֵגָי (Hegai)—and is likely of Persian origin, possibly related to the name Hegias known from Ctesias. All translations simply transliterate as 'Hegai.'

(4×) Hegai (also spelled Hege) — the personal name of the eunuch of King Ahasuerus (Xerxes) who served as keeper of the women in the royal harem at Susa. He is responsible for the care and preparation of the young women brought to the king, including Esther, who wins his favor (Esth 2:8–9, 15). The name appears in variant forms: הֵגֵא in Esth 2:3 and הֵגַי/הֵגָי in 2:8, 15. It is likely a Persian loan-name, paralleled by the courtier Hegias mentioned by Ctesias. English, Spanish, French, and German all render it 'Hegai.' PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hegai | es: Hegai | fr: [הגא], [הגי] | de: Hegai, [הגא] Esth 2:3; Esth 2:8; Esth 2:15

הָגָה H1897 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (25×)
To muse, meditate, utter, moan; onomatopoeic verb for low vocal sounds: murmuring Torah, groaning, plotting, growling.
Hagah is one of Hebrew poetry's most evocative verbs — onomatopoeic at its core, imitating the low, sustained sound that emerges when a person meditates aloud, when a mourner groans, or when a lion rumbles over its prey. The famous opening of Psalm 1 uses it for the blessed person who 'meditates' on Torah day and night, but this is no silent, cerebral exercise: hagah implies audible murmuring, the kind of half-voiced repetition by which ancient readers internalized a text. German sinnen ('to muse, ponder') captures the contemplative dimension, while Spanish splits revealingly between meditar for the reflective sense and gemir/arrullar for the mournful dove-sounds of Isaiah. The verb's darker register — muttering plots, devising evil — shows how the same low-voiced intensity that marks devotion can also mark conspiracy.

1. meditate, muse on (8×) To meditate, muse on, murmur over — the most theologically celebrated sense at 8 occurrences, centered on sustained vocal reflection upon God's law, works, or character. Joshua 1:8 commands that the Torah 'shall not depart from your mouth; you shall meditate (hagah) on it day and night.' Psalm 63:6 and 143:5 use it for nighttime reflection on God's deeds. German sinnen and French murmurer together capture both the cognitive depth and the audible, repetitive quality. This is not silent reading but embodied, vocalized contemplation — a practice confirmed by Spanish meditar and Korean's selection of dedicated meditation vocabulary. MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE
en: I-meditate, I-meditate-, and-I-will-meditate | es: Y-meditaré, medita, meditará | fr: et-le-murmurer, et-tu-méditeras, le-murmurer | de: [יהגה], sinnen, sinnt Josh 1:8; Ps 1:2; Ps 63:6; Ps 77:12; Ps 143:5

2. utter, speak, declare (6×) To utter, speak forth, declare — 6 occurrences where the mouth or tongue is the explicit subject, shifting the emphasis from internal reflection to outward proclamation. 'My tongue shall utter your righteousness' (Ps 35:28); 'the mouth of the righteous utters wisdom' (Ps 37:30). The Spanish meditar gives way to emitir sonido ('emit sound') in the multilingual data, and the psalm contexts confirm vocal, public declaration rather than quiet musing. Job 27:4 makes the contrast especially clear: 'My tongue will not utter falsehood' — this is speech, not thought. MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE
en: shall-utter, they-make-a-sound, utters | es: emiten-sonido, medita, meditará | fr: murmurer, méditer | de: [יהגה], sinnt, sinnt- Job 27:4; Ps 35:28; Ps 37:30; Ps 71:24; Ps 115:7

3. moan, groan like a dove (5×) To moan, groan like a dove — 5 occurrences, all in the prophetic literature of Isaiah and Jeremiah, expressing communal or personal grief. Isaiah 38:14 compares Hezekiah's lament to a dove's moan; Isaiah 59:11 pairs bear-growling with dove-moaning as images of Israel's distress. Spanish arrullar ('to coo') and gemir ('to groan') both target the plaintive animal-sound register. French mediter misses this entirely, revealing how some traditions flatten the onomatopoeic richness. Jeremiah 48:31 extends the moaning to Moab's lament — even foreign grief finds expression through this verb. MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE
en: I-moan, he-moans, moaning | es: arrullamos, arrullar, gemiré | fr: méditer | de: sinnen Isa 16:7; Isa 38:14; Isa 59:11; Jer 48:31

4. mutter, plot, devise (5×) To mutter, plot, devise — 5 occurrences where the low-voiced murmuring takes a sinister turn toward scheming and conspiracy. The paradigmatic instance is Psalm 2:1: 'Why do the nations rage and the peoples hagah a vain thing?' Spanish traman ('they plot') and maquinar ('to scheme') correctly identify the conspiratorial force. Isaiah 59:3,13 pair this muttering with lying and oppression, while Psalm 38:12 describes enemies devising treachery all day long. The common thread with senses 1-2 is the low, sustained vocalization — but here directed toward evil rather than truth. MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE

en: and-the-muttering, and-uttering, do-meditate- | es: meditan, murmura, traman- | fr: et-méditer, murmurer, méditer | de: sinnen, sinnt, sinnt- Ps 2:1; Ps 38:12; Isa 8:19; Isa 59:3; Isa 59:13

5. growl, roar over prey (1×) To growl or roar over prey — a single vivid occurrence in Isaiah 31:4, where Yahweh is compared to a lion that 'growls' over its kill, undeterred by the shepherds called out against it. Spanish ruge ('roars') captures the animal ferocity. This is the most purely onomatopoeic use of hagah, stripped of cognitive content and reduced to raw, threatening sound. It anchors the verb's semantic range at its most primal: before hagah is meditation or speech or mourning, it is simply a deep, resonant, sustained vocalization. MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE

en: growls | es: ruge | fr: méditer | de: sinnen Isa 31:4

הָגָה H1898 V-Qal-InfAbs (3×)

remove, take away; drive out or send into exile

This verb appears in wisdom and prophetic literature with the sense of removing or driving away. Proverbs uses it twice for removing dross from silver and the wicked from a king's presence (Prov 25:4–5), establishing a metaphor of purification. Isaiah 27:8 is debated—either God 'removed' (sent into exile) his people with a harsh wind, or he 'winnowed' them. The multilingual glosses (Spanish quita, arrojó; French enlever) support the core idea of forceful removal or expulsion.

(3×) The verb denotes forceful removal in all three contexts: purging impurities (Prov 25:4), driving away the wicked (Prov 25:5), and sending into exile or sifting away (Isa 27:8). The cross-lingual evidence points to active expulsion or separation, whether physical, moral, or judicial. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY

en: take-away, with-her | es: Quita, la-arrojó | fr: [הגה], enlever | de: [הגה], [הגו] Prov 25:4; Prov 25:5; Isa 27:8

הֶגֶה H1899 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

rumbling, growling, moaning; a sigh or sound of distress

A noun evoking low, ominous sounds. It describes the 'rumbling' of thunder as God's voice (Job 37:2), the brevity of human life 'like a sigh' (Ps 90:9), and the content of Ezekiel's scroll: 'lamentations and mourning and woe' (Ezek 2:10). The multilingual glosses capture the affective register: Spanish suspiro y gemido, French murmure, German sigh. The word conveys both natural phenomena (thunder) and human expressions of grief or transience.

(3×) The noun spans acoustic and emotional domains: the deep rumble of thunder (Job 37:2), the fleeting sound of a human sigh marking life's brevity (Ps 90:9), and the mournful utterances inscribed on a prophetic scroll (Ezek 2:10). The cross-lingual glosses highlight both the auditory quality (murmur, rumble) and the plaintive tone (sigh, mourning). MEDITATION AND UTTERANCE

en: a-sigh, and-mourning, and-the-rumbling | es: suspiro, y-gemido, y-murmullo | fr: et-murmure, et-הגה, le-murmure | de: [הגה], ein-sigh Job 37:2; Ps 90:9; Ezek 2:10

הָגוּת H1900 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

Meditation, musing, or contemplation; the internal activity of reflective thought

This noun denotes inward meditation or reflective musing, appearing in a wisdom psalm. The psalmist promises that his mouth will speak wisdom, and the meditation of his heart will be understanding. The word emphasizes the internal mental process underlying wise speech—one does not simply blurt wisdom, but cultivates it through careful thought. The term comes from the same root as 'murmur' or 'mutter,' suggesting the quiet internal verbal process of meditation. Spanish 'meditación' and French 'méditation' perfectly capture this contemplative activity.

(1×) Psalm 49:3 declares: 'My mouth shall speak wisdom, and the meditation of my heart shall be understanding.' The parallelism links external speech with internal thought: wise words flow from reflective meditation. The term suggests not just passive thinking but active mental engagement—turning ideas over, examining them from angles, seeking insight. This connects to the broader biblical theme that the mouth speaks from the abundance of the heart; therefore, cultivating wise meditation produces wise speech. The psalm that follows meditates on wealth, death, and the futility of trusting riches. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-meditation-of | es: y-meditación-de | fr: et-le-méditation | de: und-meditation-von Ps 49:3

הָגִיג H1901 N-msc / 1cs (2×)

murmuring, musing, whispered meditation or complaint

This word denotes soft utterance—whether murmuring, whispering, or inward musing. Psalm 5:1 uses it in a plea for God to understand 'my murmuring,' likely referring to wordless groaning or faint prayer. Psalm 39:3 employs it differently: 'while I was musing, the fire burned,' describing inner meditation that led to speech. The term captures quiet, often inarticulate expressions of the heart—whether complaint to God or internal meditation that precedes articulate prayer.

(2×) The glosses ('murmuring, sighing, musing / meditación') reflect both senses. Psalm 5:1 asks God to discern the psalmist's 'murmuring'—perhaps groans too deep for words, parallel to 'my words' and 'my cry.' Psalm 39:3 describes 'in my musing' as inward reflection that kindled emotional fire, leading finally to speech. The word occupies the space between silence and speech—the quiet stirrings of heart and mind before God. MEDITATION MUSING

en: in-my-musing, my-sighing | es: en-mi-meditar, mi-meditación | fr: dans-méditation, le-méditation | de: in-mein-musing, mein-sighing Ps 5:1; Ps 39:3

הִגָּיוֹן H1902 Conj-w / N-msc / 3mp (4×)

Resounding music, meditation, musing; from quiet reflection of the heart to instrumental melody.

A richly layered noun spanning the audible and the inward. On one end it denotes resounding instrumental music played on the lyre (Ps 92:3), and on the other, the quiet meditation of the heart before God (Ps 19:14). In Lamentations 3:62, it takes a darker turn, describing the hostile plotting and murmuring of enemies. The term even appears as a possible musical or liturgical direction alongside Selah (Ps 9:16). Spanish 'meditación' and English 'meditation' capture the reflective sense, while 'Higgaion' is often transliterated when it functions as a performance cue.

(4×) Resounding music, meditation, musing, or plotting — covering a semantic arc from audible instrumental sound to silent inner reflection to hostile scheming. In Ps 92:3, it describes the resonant music of a lyre (עֲלֵי הִגָּיוֹן בְּכִנּוֹר). In Ps 19:14, it is the meditation of the heart (הֲגִיוֹן לִבִּי) offered alongside spoken words as worship. Ps 9:16 pairs it with Selah as what appears to be a musical or liturgical notation, often left transliterated as 'Higgaion.' In Lam 3:62, the same word darkens to mean the scheming or murmuring of enemies (וְהֶגְיוֹנָם עָלַי). Spanish 'meditación' and French 'murmure' each capture different facets of this versatile term. MEDITATION MUSING en: Higgaion, a-melody, and-the-meditation-of | es: Higgaion, meditación, y-meditación-de | fr: [והגיונם], et-le-murmure, le-murmure | de: Higgaion, [והגיונם], ein-melody Ps 9:16; Ps 19:14; Ps 92:3; Lam 3:62

הָגִין H1903 N-fs (1×)

Appropriate, suitable, or fitting; properly corresponding to its context (uncertain)

This rare adjective appears in Ezekiel's temple vision describing a wall that is 'appropriate' or 'corresponding.' Both the text and interpretation are uncertain—ancient versions diverge widely (Greek reads 'reed,' Latin 'separate'). Some connect it with the preceding 'way,' yielding 'the appropriate way,' while others take it with 'wall.' The root suggests suitability or appropriateness, appearing also in later Hebrew and Aramaic. Given the textual difficulty, some scholars suspect corruption and propose emendations. This exemplifies the challenges in understanding rare technical architectural terms in prophetic visions.

(1×) Ezekiel 42:12 mentions 'the appropriate wall' or 'the way directly before the wall'—the exact sense remains debated due to textual difficulty. The context is Ezekiel's detailed temple measurements, where precision matters theologically and architecturally. Whether this describes an appropriate wall, a suitable pathway, or something else, the term emphasizes proper correspondence or fitness. Some scholars emend the text entirely (suggesting 'the outer court'), acknowledging that our understanding of Ezekiel's visionary architecture remains partial. The term itself suggests the temple's design follows principles of propriety and order. PROPRIETY AND FITTINGNESS

en: proper | es: apropiado | fr: méditation | de: [הגינה] Ezek 42:12

הָגָר H1904 N-proper-fs (12×)

Hagar – Sarah's Egyptian maidservant, mother of Ishmael, central to the Abrahamic covenant narratives

Hagar (hagar, possibly 'flight' or 'stranger') is the Egyptian maidservant of Sarah whom Abraham took as a concubine at Sarah's suggestion when Sarah remained childless (Gen 16:1-3). After conceiving Ishmael, Hagar was driven out by Sarah's harsh treatment and fled into the wilderness, where the angel of the Lord found her by a spring on the road to Shur and promised her innumerable descendants (Gen 16:7-14). She became the only person in Genesis to give God a name: El Roi, 'the God who sees me.' Later, after Isaac's birth, she and Ishmael were expelled permanently, and God again preserved them in the wilderness of Beersheba (Gen 21:9-21). Paul allegorizes Hagar as representing the covenant of Sinai and slavery in Galatians 4:24-25. Spanish, French, and German all retain the name Hagar (French: Agar).

(12×) Sarah's Egyptian maidservant who bore Ishmael to Abraham. Her narrative spans flight and divine encounter at the well of Beer-lahai-roi (Gen 16:1-14), expulsion with Ishmael (Gen 21:9-21), and Pauline allegory of the Sinai covenant (Gal 4:24-25). All twelve OT occurrences designate this single individual. French Agar, Spanish and German Hagar preserve the name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hagar | es: Hagar | fr: Agar | de: Hagar, Hagars Gen 16:1; Gen 16:3; Gen 16:4; Gen 16:8; Gen 16:15

הַגְרִי H1905 Art / N-proper-ms (6×)

Hagrite(s); a nomadic tribal group east of Gilead, also used as a gentilic adjective and patronymic.

The Hagrites were a semi-nomadic people dwelling east of the Jordan, possibly of Aramean or Ishmaelite descent. The tribes of Reuben, Gad, and half-Manasseh waged war against them and prevailed (1 Chr 5:10, 19-20), while Psalm 83:6 includes them among the confederacy plotting against Israel. As a gentilic adjective, Jaziz the Hagrite oversaw David's flocks (1 Chr 27:31), a role perhaps reflecting the pastoral expertise of his people. In 1 Chronicles 11:38 it appears as a patronymic: Mibhar ben-Hagri, one of David's mighty warriors.

1. Hagrites (tribal group) (4×) The Hagrites as a tribal people (plural noun), a nomadic group east of Gilead defeated by the Transjordanian tribes (1 Chr 5:10, 19-20) and listed among Israel's enemies in Ps 83:6. Spanish los hagriitas and hagritas reflect the collective plural. Their association with Ishmaelite and Aramean groups places them in the pastoral borderlands between settled Israel and the desert. HAGRITES TRIBAL GROUP

en: and-the-Hagrim, the-Hagri'im | es: los-hagriitas, y-los-hagritas | fr: [וההגראים], [וההגריאים], et-le-Hagrite | de: [וההגראים], [וההגריאים], und-der-Hagrim 1Chr 5:10; 1Chr 5:19; 1Chr 5:20; Ps 83:6

2. Hagrite (gentilic adjective) (1×) Gentilic adjective designating an individual as belonging to the Hagrite people. Applied to Jaziz the Hagrite (1 Chr 27:31), David's overseer of flocks. Spanish el agareno and English 'the Hagrite' function as ethnic descriptors. The appointment suggests the Hagrites' reputation as skilled herdsmen was recognized even by the Israelite court. HAGRITES TRIBAL GROUP

en: the-Hagrite | es: el-agareno | fr: [ההגרי] | de: [ההגרי] 1Chr 27:31

3. Hagri (personal name) (1×) A patronymic personal name, Hagri, identifying the father of Mibhar among David's mighty warriors (1 Chr 11:38). Spanish Hagrí preserves the proper-name function. The parallel passage in 2 Samuel 23:36 reads 'Bani the Gadite,' reflecting textual uncertainty about whether this is a personal name or a corrupted gentilic. HAGRITES TRIBAL GROUP en: Hagri | es: Hagrí | fr: [הגרי] | de: [הגרי] 1Chr 11:38

הֵד H1906 N-ms (1×)

A shout or echo, particularly the sound reverberating from mountains

This rare word denotes a shout or echoing sound, used in Ezekiel's oracle describing Jerusalem's day of doom. The prophet contrasts the 'echo/shout of the mountains' with the 'noise of battle'—possibly distinguishing joyful mountain shouts from chaotic combat sounds, or perhaps describing the echo of battle cries reverberating from the hills. The term emphasizes acoustic imagery, appropriate in a prophecy announcing imminent judgment. The French 'cri' (cry, shout) captures the vocal element, while 'echo' emphasizes the acoustic reverberation.

(1×) Ezekiel 7:7 proclaims: 'Doom has come upon you... the time has come, the day is near—a day of tumult, and not of joyful shouting on the mountains.' The 'shout of mountains' likely refers to celebratory echoes during festivals or victory, contrasted with the 'tumult' (chaos, confusion) of approaching judgment. The acoustic imagery makes the prophecy visceral: the familiar sounds of joy will be replaced by sounds of terror. This announces the end of normal life and the arrival of God's day of reckoning against Jerusalem's sin. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: echo-of | es: eco-de | fr: cri | de: [הד] Ezek 7:7

דָּבַר H1907 N-mpc / 1cs (4×)

Counselor, minister (Aramaic); a high-ranking royal advisor in the Babylonian and Persian courts.

An Aramaic loanword from Persian designating a high court official—a counselor or minister who advises the king. It appears exclusively in Daniel, where these advisors witness Nebuchadnezzar's dramatic encounters with divine power: they observe the three men unharmed in the fiery furnace (Dan 3:24, 27) and are present when the king's reason is restored (Dan 4:36). In Dan 6:7, they conspire to trap Daniel. Spanish 'consejeros' and English 'counselors' are consistent, while French and German sometimes leave the Aramaic untranslated.

(4×) Counselor, minister (Aramaic) — a senior royal advisor in the Babylonian-Persian court hierarchy, from a Persian loanword whose exact original form is debated. In Dan 3:24, Nebuchadnezzar summons his counselors after seeing four figures in the furnace; in 3:27 they verify the miracle. Dan 4:36 (= 4:33) records the counselors seeking out Nebuchadnezzar when his sanity returns. In Dan 6:7 (= 6:8), the counselors participate in crafting the decree that ensnares Daniel. Spanish 'consejeros,' English 'counselors,' and French 'conseiller' all converge on the advisory function of these court officials. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11320 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-counselors-of, counselors, my-counselors | es: a-sus-consejeros, los-consejeros, mis-consejeros | fr: conseiller, et-le-paroles-de, le-paroles-de | de: [והדברי], [והדבריא], [והדברי] Dan 3:24; Dan 3:27; Dan 4:36; Dan 6:7

הֲדַד H1908 N-proper-ms (12×)

Hadad – a proper name borne by several Edomite kings and an adversary of Solomon

Hadad (hadad, cognate with the storm-god Haddu/Adad) is a theophoric proper name borne by multiple figures in the Old Testament, all connected to Edom or its sphere. Hadad son of Bedad defeated Midian in the field of Moab and reigned from Avith as king of Edom (Gen 36:35-36; 1 Chr 1:46-47). Another Hadad succeeded Baal-hanan as the last named king of Edom (1 Chr 1:50-51, where he is also called Hadar in Gen 36:39). Most prominently, Hadad the Edomite was a royal prince who escaped Joab's massacre of Edomite males as a child, fled to Egypt, married Pharaoh's sister-in-law, and returned to become an adversary of Solomon (1 Kgs 11:14-22, 25). Every target language transliterates the name with negligible variation.

Hadad (12×) A proper name designating several Edomite figures: Hadad son of Bedad, king of Edom who defeated Midian (Gen 36:35; 1 Chr 1:46); a later Edomite king (1 Chr 1:50-51); and most notably Hadad the Edomite prince who became Solomon's adversary (1 Kgs 11:14-22). Spanish, French, and German all transliterate as Hadad with no semantic division. HADAD BEN HADAD
en: Hadad, and-Hadad | es: Hadad, Y-Hadad, y-Hadad | fr: Hadad, [הדד], et-Hadad | de: Hadad, und-Hadad Gen 36:35; Gen 36:36; 1Kgs 11:14; 1Kgs 11:17; 1Kgs 11:19

הֲדַדְעֶזֶר H1909 Prep-b / N-proper-ms (21×)
Hadadezer — the Aramean king of Zobah defeated by David; name means 'Hadad is (my) help'
An Aramean royal name meaning 'Hadad is help,' borne by the king of Zobah whom David decisively defeated. The alternate spelling Hadarezer (found in Chronicles) reflects a scribal substitution of -r- for -d-, but ancient Aramaic inscriptions confirm Hadadezer as the original form. All 21 occurrences, whether preceded by prepositions or standing alone, refer to this single historical figure whose repeated clashes with Israel are narrated in 2 Samuel 8 and 10 and mirrored in 1 Chronicles 18-19.

Hadadezer (king of Zobah) (21×) The proper name of the Aramean king of Zobah, son of Rehob, whose military forces David routed in campaigns recorded in 2 Samuel 8:3-12 and 10:16-19. Multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name (Hadadezer, Hadad-ezer, Hadadeser), and the LXX form Ἀδρααζαρ preserves a variant tradition. Also mentioned in 1 Kings 11:23 in connection with Rezon's earlier flight from Hadadezer's service. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hadadezer, against-Hadadezer | es: Hadad-ezer, Hadadezer, a-Hadad-ezer | fr: Hadadézer, [הדדעזר], [להדדעזר] | de: Hadadeser, Hadadezer, gegen-Hadadezer 2Sam 8:3; 2Sam 8:5; 2Sam 8:7; 2Sam 8:8; 2Sam 8:9

הֲדַדְרִמּוֹן H1910 N-proper-fs (2×)
Hadad-Rimmon, a place or composite deity name in the valley of Megiddo Hadad-Rimmon appears in Zechariah 12:11 in a prophecy about future mourning in Jerusalem: 'the mourning will be as great as the mourning of Hadad-Rimmon in the valley of Megiddo.' This could refer to a place name derived from two deity names (Hadad and Rimmon, both storm gods), or it could reference mourning rituals associated with those deities. Many scholars connect it to mourning for Josiah, killed at Megiddo. Either way, it represents proverbial, intense lamentation.

(2×) The translations struggle with this name ('Hadad-Rimmon,' 'Hadad y Rimón,' 'splendeur,' 'Granatapfel'), reflecting uncertainty about whether it's a place, a deity, or both. Zechariah 12:11 uses it as the standard of comparison for Jerusalem's future mourning, specifying 'in the valley of Megiddo.' The reference evokes either mourning rituals for dying-and-rising gods or historical grief (possibly for Josiah's death at Megiddo), making it a byword for communal lamentation. RIMMON PLACE NAME
en: Hadad-Rimmon, in-valley-of | es: Hadad, Rimón | fr: splendeur | de: Granatapfel, [הדד] Zech 12:11

הָדָה H1911 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)
To stretch out or extend (the hand); to reach forth toward something
This verb describes the action of extending one's hand, appearing in Isaiah's prophecy of the peaceable kingdom. The image depicts a weaned child stretching out his hand over a viper's den without harm—a picture of the transformation of nature under Messiah's reign. Aramaic and Arabic cognates relate to leading or guiding, but here the focus is simply on the physical act of reaching out. This single use creates one of Scripture's most beloved images of eschatological peace, where even the most vulnerable can safely interact with the most dangerous.

(1×) Isaiah 11:8 prophesies: 'The weaned child shall stretch out his hand over the adder's den.' This vision of a child fearlessly reaching toward a poisonous snake symbolizes the complete reversal of the curse in Messiah's kingdom. The verb emphasizes the deliberate, unafraid action of extending the hand—no recoiling in terror. Combined with other images in the passage (wolf and lamb, leopard and goat), this creates a comprehensive picture of restored harmony between humanity and creation, reversing the enmity introduced by the fall. SENDING AND DISPATCHING
en: he-puts | es: extenderá | fr: [הדה] | de: [הדה] Isa 11:8

הֹדּוּ H1912 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)
India (Hodu), the eastern boundary of the Persian Empire
This is the Hebrew name for India, marking the eastern extent of the Persian Empire. Both occurrences in Esther (1:1, 8:9) describe King Ahasuerus's vast domain: 'from India to Cush,' spanning from modern Pakistan/India to Ethiopia/Sudan. This phrase emphasizes the unprecedented scope of Persian power, encompassing 127 provinces. For the Jewish audience, it underscores how Haman's decree would have affected Jews across the known world, and how Esther's intervention saved them throughout this vast empire.

(2×) The glosses ('India, Hodu') transliterate or translate this geographic term. Both Esther passages use the formula 'from India to Cush' to define the empire's extent—the ultimate expression of imperial reach in the ancient Near East. The mention of India (Persian 'Hindu,' from the Indus region) shows the author's awareness of the Persian Empire's eastern frontier, lending historical credibility to the narrative and magnifying the scope of the Jewish peril and deliverance. PERSONAL NAMES
en: from-Hodu, from-India | es: desde-India | fr: [מהדו] | de: Indien Esth 1:1; Esth 8:9

הֲדוֹרָם H1913a N-proper-ms (3×)
Hadoram (personal and tribal name)
A proper name with two referents: an Arabian tribe descended from Joktan (Gen 10:27; 1 Chr 1:21) and a son of the king of Hamath sent to David (1 Chr 18:10). The name appears in genealogical and diplomatic contexts, and is preserved across translations with minimal variation (Spanish Hadorán, French Hadoram). In 2 Samuel 8:10 the parallel text reads Joram, but the Greek and critical scholarship favor Hadoram as the original reading.

(3×) Used for both a tribal eponym (Gen 10:27; 1 Chr 1:21) and an individual diplomat (1 Chr 18:10). Translators uniformly retain the proper name, recognizing its dual function in genealogy and historical narrative. The cross-linguistic uniformity reflects the conventional practice of not translating personal names. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10458 WITH 3 SENSES
en: Hadoram | es: Hadoram, Hadorán- | fr: Hadoram, [הדורם] | de: Hadoram, [הדורם] Gen 10:27; 1Chr 1:21; 1Chr 18:10

הֲדֹרָם H1913b N-proper-ms (1×)
Hadoram, an official under King Rehoboam; variant form of Adoniram Hadoram appears as Rehoboam's official in charge of forced labor—a position that proved fatal. When Rehoboam sent him to deal with northern tribes after the kingdom's split, Israel stoned him to death, forcing the king to flee. Chronicles uses the form Hadoram, while Kings uses Adoram or Adoniram for this same official. The name variation likely reflects dialectical differences or scribal updating. His violent death marked the point of no return in Israel's division, as the northern tribes violently rejected Rehoboam's authority through this symbolic act against his most visible representative.

(1×) 2 Chronicles 10:18 records that Rehoboam sent 'Hadoram, who was over the forced labor' to the rebellious northern tribes—a disastrous decision resulting in Hadoram's stoning and the king's hasty flight to Jerusalem. The officer's position (overseeing forced labor) made him a symbol of Solomon's oppressive policies that triggered the revolt. His death signaled that negotiation had failed and division was irreversible. The use of this variant name form (versus Adoram/Adoniram in Kings) shows how biblical texts updated names to contemporary linguistic norms while preserving the historical event. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10458 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Hadoram | es: Adoram | fr: [הדרם] | de: [הדרם] 2Chr 10:18

הַדָּי H1914 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hiddai, one of David's thirty mighty warriors from the tribe of Benjamin

Hiddai appears in the roster of David's elite fighting force, identified as being from the brooks of Gaash. The parallel passage in Chronicles calls him Hurai, showing the typical name variation across sources. These mighty men formed David's special forces—warriors of exceptional courage and skill who accomplished legendary exploits. Hiddai's inclusion from Benjamin is noteworthy since David's core support came from Judah, yet his army integrated warriors from all tribes. These men's loyalty to David during his fugitive years and reign cemented his kingship.

(1×) 2 Samuel 23:30 lists 'Hiddai from the brooks of Gaash' among David's thirty mighty men. Gaash was in Ephraim's hill country, placing Hiddai's origin in the central highlands. The parallel text in 1 Chronicles 11:32 reads 'Hurai,' demonstrating normal name variation in ancient records. These warriors represented David's inner circle—men who risked everything for him and performed extraordinary feats of valor. Their roster preserves the memory of those whose courage established and defended David's kingdom, making them exemplars of loyalty and martial skill. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hiddai | es: Hiday | fr: Hiddai | de: Hiddai 2Sam 23:30

הָדַךְ H1915 Conj-w / V-Qal-Imp-ms (1×)

To cast down, tread down, or trample; to forcefully bring low

This verb denotes violent downward action—casting down or trampling. It appears in God's challenge to Job from the whirlwind, asking whether Job can perform God's work of bringing down the wicked. The command to 'tread down' the wicked emphasizes forceful subjugation, as one would trample something underfoot. Arabic cognates relate to demolishing buildings, reinforcing the image of forceful destruction. This single use functions rhetorically: God demonstrates Job's inability to execute justice on the scale required, establishing divine prerogative in moral governance.

(1×) Job 40:12 contains God's rhetorical challenge: 'Look on everyone who is proud and bring him low... tread down the wicked where they stand.' The sequence—humble the proud, then crush the wicked—describes comprehensive moral judgment. The verb's force (treading, trampling) emphasizes not mere defeat but complete subjugation. God's point is devastating: if Job thinks he can question divine justice, let him try executing it himself. Job's inability to tread down even one wicked person, much less all of them, proves he cannot sit in judgment on God's governance. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: and-tread-down | es: y-pisotea | fr: et-והדך | de: [והדך] Job 40:12

הֲדֹם H1916 Conj-w (6×)

Footstool; always in construct with 'feet,' used figuratively of the earth, the ark, or the temple as God's footrest.

A masculine noun meaning footstool, always appearing in the phrase hadom raglayim (footstool of the feet). Never used literally of furniture, it serves as a powerful theological metaphor. In Isaiah 66:1 heaven is God's throne and the earth his footstool; in Lamentations 2:1 the sanctuary is called the footstool of his feet, cast down in judgment. The ark of the covenant is described as God's footstool in 1 Chronicles 28:2, and Psalm 110:1 applies the image to the subjugation of the Messianic king's enemies. Spanish 'estrado' preserves the regal connotation of a raised platform beneath a sovereign's feet.

footstool (6×) Footstool, always in the construct phrase 'footstool of [his/your] feet.' Theologically, it describes the earth as God's footrest (Isa 66:1), the temple or ark as the place where God's presence rests (Lam 2:1; 1 Chr 28:2; Ps 99:5; 132:7), and the conquered enemies placed beneath the Messianic king's feet (Ps 110:1). Spanish 'estrado de' and French 'marche-pied' both convey the image of a low platform under royal authority, highlighting sovereignty rather than mere furniture. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-footstool, and-for-the-footstool-of, at-footstool-of | es: a-estrado-de, al-estrado-de, el-estrado-de | fr: [ולהדם], le-marche-pied, le-sang | de: [ולהדם], bei-der-footstool-von, bei-footstool-of 1Chr 28:2; Ps 99:5; Ps 110:1; Ps 132:7; Isa 66:1

הֲדָם H1917 N-mp (2×)

limbs, bodily members (used for dismemberment in execution)

This Aramaic word refers to body parts or limbs, used specifically in the context of dismemberment as a form of execution. Both occurrences in Daniel appear in royal decrees threatening this brutal punishment: anyone who speaks against God will be 'torn limb from limb' (literally 'made into limbs/members'). The term, a Persian loanword, reflects the harsh judicial practices of ancient empires. The threat underscores the absolute authority claimed by Nebuchadnezzar over religious expression.

(2×) The glosses ('limbs, en pedazos / into pieces, morceau / piece') capture the grim meaning. Daniel 2:5 and 3:29 both threaten that violators 'shall be made members'—a euphemism for being torn apart. This Persian loanword reflects the administrative vocabulary of the empire, including its brutal penal code. The repeated threat in royal decrees shows how earthly kings attempted to enforce religious conformity through terror, contrasting with the God who delivers without such coercion. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES

en: limbs | es: en-pedazos | fr: morceau | de: [הדמין] Dan 2:5; Dan 3:29

הֲדַס H1918 N-ms (6×)

Myrtle; the evergreen shrub Myrtus communis, a symbol of restoration and festive joy in prophetic and post-exilic texts.

The myrtle (Myrtus communis), an aromatic evergreen shrub native to the Mediterranean basin. In Zechariah's inaugural night vision (Zech 1:8, 10, 11), the angel of the Lord stands among myrtle trees in a ravine – a lush, hidden setting that frames the message of divine comfort. Isaiah twice pairs the myrtle with other noble trees in visions of eschatological transformation: thorns replaced by myrtle (Isa 55:13), desert planted with myrtle alongside cedar and cypress (Isa 41:19). Nehemiah 8:15 includes myrtle branches among the foliage gathered for Sukkot booths. Spanish 'mirto' and French preserve the same botanical term through Latin myrtus.

myrtle (tree/plant) (6×) The myrtle tree or shrub (Myrtus communis), an evergreen plant with fragrant leaves. It appears in Zechariah's visionary landscape (Zech 1:8, 10, 11), in Isaiah's twin portraits of eschatological restoration where it replaces thorns and joins other stately trees (Isa 41:19; 55:13), and among the festival branches gathered for Sukkot (Neh 8:15). Across languages – Spanish 'mirto,' English 'myrtle,' German 'Myrte' – the loanword from Latin/Greek myrtus is consistent, reflecting the plant's well-known identity throughout the Mediterranean world. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES

en: and-myrtle, myrtle, the-myrtle-trees | es: los-mirtos, mirto, y-mirto | fr: [והדס], [ההדסים], [והדס] | de: Myrte, [הדס], [והדס] Neh 8:15; Isa 41:19; Isa 55:13; Zech 1:8; Zech 1:10

הֲדַסָּה H1919 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hadassah, the Hebrew name of Queen Esther, meaning 'myrtle'
Hadassah was Esther's original Hebrew name before she entered the Persian court and received the Persian name Esther. The name means 'myrtle,' a fragrant plant significant in Jewish celebration and symbolism. Esther 2 introduces her with both names, preserving her Jewish identity while explaining her Persian adaptation. The myrtle plant appears in prophetic literature as a symbol of God's restoration and blessing. By maintaining her Hebrew name in the narrative, Scripture reminds readers that beneath the Persian queen's crown beats the heart of a Jewish orphan raised by Mordecai.

(1×) Esther 2:7 introduces the protagonist: 'He was bringing up Hadassah, that is Esther, his uncle's daughter.' The dual naming is crucial: Hadassah preserves her Jewish identity and heritage, while Esther represents her adaptation to Persian court life. The meaning 'myrtle' connects her to imagery of beauty, fragrance, and restoration in Israel's prophetic tradition. This linguistic duality mirrors the book's theme—a Jewish woman maintaining faithfulness while navigating foreign culture, ultimately using her position to save her people. Her Hebrew name appears only here, then she becomes 'Esther' throughout the narrative. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hadassah | es: Hadasa | fr: [הדסה] | de: [הדסה] Esth 2:7

הָדַף H1920 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp / 3ms (11×)

Thrust, push, shove physically; drive out or expel from a place; reject or spurn figuratively
A verb of forceful displacement that ranges from a literal shove to national expulsion to divine rejection. Numbers 35:20-22 uses it for the fatal push – one person thrusting another with lethal intent or by accident – the core legal distinction in Israel's manslaughter law. Joshua 23:5 promises God will 'drive out' the remaining nations, while Deuteronomy 6:19 and 9:4 frame the conquest as God pushing enemies before Israel. In Proverbs 10:3, the same verb takes on moral weight: the LORD 'thrusts away' the cravings of the wicked, where multilingual evidence shifts decisively to rejection vocabulary – Spanish 'rechaza', Hindi 'thukrana' (spurn).

1. push, thrust physically (8×) To push, thrust, or shove a person physically with bodily force. The foundational sense, prominent in the manslaughter legislation of Numbers 35:20-22 where a fatal push determines guilt. Ezekiel 34:21 extends it to cattle pushing weaker animals with shoulder and horn. In 2 Kings 4:27, Gehazi pushes the Shunammite woman away from Elisha. Job 18:18 pictures the wicked driven from light into darkness. Spanish uses 'empujar/empujáis' (push/shove), French preserves the physical force. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-I-will-thrust-you, he-pushed-him, they-drive-him | es: Lo-empujan, Y-te-echaré, empujáis, | fr: [הדפו], [והדפתיך], il-pushed-lui | de: [הדפו], [והדפתיך], [יהדפהו] Num 35:20; Num 35:22; Josh 23:5; 2Kgs 4:27; Job 18:18

2. drive out, expel (2×) To drive out or expel a people from their land, focusing on removal and banishment rather than the physical act. In Deuteronomy 6:19 and 9:4, God drives out Israel's enemies before them. Joshua 23:5 promises God will push and dispossess the remaining nations. Spanish shifts from 'empujar' to 'expulsar' (expel), signaling the semantic move from bodily contact to territorial displacement. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: to-drive-out, when-drives-out | es: cuando-expulse, para-expulsar | fr: quand-drives-dehors, à-drive-dehors | de: als-drives-heraus, zu-vertreiben-heraus Deut 6:19; Deut 9:4

3. reject, thrust away figuratively (1×) To reject, spurn, or thrust away in a figurative or relational sense. Proverbs 10:3 declares the LORD 'thrusts away' (yehdof) the craving of the wicked – not a physical push but a moral repudiation. Multilingual evidence confirms the shift: Spanish 'rechaza' (reject), Hindi 'thukrana' (spurn), Korean 'mullichichida' (repel). A single but theologically significant occurrence showing the verb's full metaphorical range. REJECTION AND REFUSAL en: He-thrusts-away | es: rechaza | fr: יהדף | de: [יהדף] Prov 10:3

הָדַר H1921 Conj-w / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (7×)

To honor, show respect, adorn; also of terrain swelling or being rugged; reflexively, to glorify oneself.
Rooted in the idea of swelling or fullness, this verb branches into honoring persons and describing imposing terrain. The Torah commands 'you shall honor (וְהָדַרְתָּ) the face of the old man' (Lev 19:32), while the same root warns against showing partiality in court (Exod 23:3; Lev 19:15) — Spanish 'honrarás' and 'favorecerás' neatly capture this dual edge. Isaiah uses the passive participle to describe God as 'majestic' in crimson garments (Isa 63:1) and, strikingly, rough terrain that will be leveled before Cyrus (Isa 45:2). The Hitpael in Prov 25:6 warns against glorifying oneself before a king — Spanish 'te glorifiques' underscoring the reflexive self-exaltation.

1. honor, show respect, be majestic (5×) Honoring, showing respect, or being majestic — the dominant sense, spanning deference to elders (Lev 19:32), judicial impartiality warnings (Exod 23:3; Lev 19:15), and divine majesty (Isa 63:1, 'majestic in his apparel'). Lam 5:12 extends it to the dishonoring of elders in exile. Spanish 'honrarás/favorecerás' and French 'honorer' consistently convey respectful elevation of status. HONOR AND WEIGHT
en: and-honor, honor, majestic | es: favorecerás, fueron-honrados, honrarás | fr: [הדור], [נהדרו], et-honorer | de: Ehre, [הדור], [נהדרו] Exod 23:3; Lev 19:15; Lev 19:32; Isa 63:1; Lam 5:12

2. be rugged, swell (of terrain) (1×) Swelling, rugged terrain — the likely original physical sense of the root. In Isa 45:2 the Qal passive participle הֲדוּרִים describes rough hills or 'swelling places' that God will flatten before Cyrus. The LXX reads ὄρη ('mountains'), and Spanish 'lugares-escabrosos' ('rugged places') confirms the topographic reading, though some emend to הררים ('mountains'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-mountains | es: y-lugares-escabrosos | fr: [והדורים] | de: [והדורים] Isa 45:2

3. glorify oneself, boast (1×) Glorifying oneself, boasting — the Hitpael reflexive form in Prov 25:6, warning against self-promotion in the king's presence. Spanish 'te glorifiques' and the reflexive structure across languages mark this as distinct from transitive honoring: here the subject inflates his own status rather than elevating another. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: honor-yourself | es: te-glorifiques | fr: תתהדר | de: [תתהדר] Prov 25:6

הַדֵּר H1922 Conj-w / V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (3×)

glorify, honor (God); Aramaic Pael
An Aramaic verb (Pael stem) appearing exclusively in Daniel, always with God as the object. Nebuchadnezzar 'honored' the Most High after his restoration (Dan 4:34, 37), and Daniel rebukes Belshazzar for failing to 'glorify' the God who holds his breath (Dan 5:23). The Spanish glorificaste and glorifiqué, along with French and German cognates, uniformly render the idea of giving honor and glory. This is cultic and royal language: acknowledging divine sovereignty.

(3×) The verb appears three times in Daniel's Aramaic chapters, always directed toward God. Nebuchadnezzar glorifies God after humiliation and restoration (Dan 4:34, 37); Belshazzar is condemned for failing to do so (Dan 5:23). The multilingual glosses converge on the semantic field of honoring, glorifying, and exalting the divine. GLORIFYING AND HONORING en: and-honored, and-honoring, you-honored | es: glorificaste, y-glorifico, y-glorifiqué | fr: [והדרת], [והדרת], [ומהדר] | de: [והדרת], [והדרת], [ומהדר] Dan 4:34; Dan 4:37; Dan 5:23

הֲדַר H1923 Conj-w / N-msd (3×)

honor, majesty (especially of a king); Aramaic
An Aramaic noun denoting royal splendor and majesty, appearing in Daniel's account of Nebuchadnezzar's madness and restoration. The king's 'majesty' returned to him (Dan 4:30, 36), and God gave 'majesty' to Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 5:18). The Spanish mi majestad, French gloire, and the emphatic forms in Aramaic all point to outward dignity and sovereign grandeur. The word evokes the visible trappings of kingship and divine favor.

(3×) The noun describes the royal dignity and visible splendor that Nebuchadnezzar lost and regained (Dan 4:30, 36) and which God had granted him (Dan 5:18). Cross-lingual glosses (majesty, gloire) consistently reflect the high-status, honorific sense. This is not inner virtue but the external manifestation of sovereign authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-majesty, my-majesty | es: mi-majestad, mi-majestad?, y-la-majestad | fr: [וְהַדְרָה], gloire | de: [הַדְרִי], [וְהַדְרָה] Dan 4:30; Dan 4:36; Dan 5:18

הֲדַד H1924 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hadar, an Edomite king; Aramaic variant form of the name Hadad

Hadar appears as the final king in Edom's pre-Israelite monarchy list in Genesis. The parallel passage in Chronicles reads 'Hadad,' and textual evidence (Septuagint, Samaritan, Syriac) supports Hadad as the original reading, with Hadar being an Aramaic-influenced variant. His capital was Pau, and his wife was Mehetabel, unusually identified by her mother's and grandmother's names. This genealogical notice preserves Edom's royal succession, fulfilling God's promise to Esau about kings coming from his line. The name variation illustrates how biblical texts sometimes show linguistic updating or dialectical differences.

(1×) Genesis 36:39 lists 'Hadar' as an Edomite king, though Chronicles 1:50 and most textual witnesses read 'Hadad.' This represents normal textual variation in proper names, possibly reflecting Aramaic linguistic influence (Hadar) versus the original Hebrew form (Hadad). The notice that Hadad/Hadar was succeeded by tribal chiefs rather than kings marks the end of Edom's united monarchy. These genealogical details serve Genesis's larger narrative: showing how God's promises to both Abraham's lines (Isaac and Ishmael, Jacob and Esau) were fulfilled, even as the chosen line comes through Jacob. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hadar | es: Hadar | fr: Hadar | de: Hadar Gen 36:39

הֶדֶר H1925 N-msc (1×)

Splendor, magnificence, or honor; the glory or majesty of royal status

This Aramaic noun denotes splendor or glory, appearing in Daniel's prophecy about a ruler who will arise in 'the splendor of the kingdom.' The term emphasizes royal magnificence and honor—the outward glory of kingship. Textual and interpretive difficulties surround this verse, with debate about whether 'splendor of kingdom' refers to Judea, Jerusalem, or simply royal magnificence itself. The word's root suggests ornament and adornment, pointing to the visible glory of sovereignty. This single use employs court language appropriate to Daniel's visions of successive empires.

(1×) Daniel 11:20 prophesies that 'one shall arise in his place who will send an exactor through the splendor of the kingdom.' Whether this 'splendor of kingdom' means the glorious kingdom of Judea/Jerusalem or simply refers to royal magnificence remains debated. The term emphasizes visible, external glory—the honor and majesty associated with kingship. In Daniel's sequence of empire visions, such language of royal splendor recurs, contrasting earthly kingdoms' temporary glory with the eternal kingdom of the Most High that will ultimately supplant them all. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: splendor-of | es: esplendor-de | fr: gloire | de: [הֲדַר] Dan 11:20

הָדָר H1926 Prep-b / N-mpc (30×)

Ornament, splendor, majesty; the radiant beauty, imposing grandeur, or bestowed honor of God or persons

A rich poetic noun spanning the visual and the reverential. At its root it evokes something visually striking – ornamental beauty, as when gray hair is called the 'splendor' of old men (Prov 20:29) or when Israel is commanded to take 'fruit of beautiful trees' for the Feast of Tabernacles (Lev 23:40). When applied to God, it ascends to overwhelming majesty: 'You are clothed with splendor and majesty' (Ps 104:1). It can also denote bestowed honor or glory, as when the psalmist marvels that God crowned humanity with 'glory and honor' (Ps 8:5). French 'majeste' and German 'Pracht' each capture one facet of this multivalent term, but no single translation holds the full spectrum.

1. splendor, beauty (18×) Visual magnificence and radiant beauty – the outward splendor of God's creation, a person's appearance, or a city's adornment. The psalmist declares God is 'clothed with splendor and majesty' (Ps 104:1), and Leviticus prescribes 'fruit of splendid trees' for Sukkot (Lev 23:40). Spanish 'esplendor' and French 'majeste' both point toward this dazzling visual quality. The LXX renders with horaios (beautiful), reinforcing the aesthetic dimension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-splendor-of, and-splendor, and-splendor-of | es: Esplendor-de, en-esplendor-de-mí, en-esplendores-de | fr: [בְּהַדְרִי], [הֲדַרְךָ], dans-majesté | de: Pracht, [בְּהַדְרִי], [הַדְרָה] Lev 23:40; Ps 90:16; Ps 104:1; Ps 110:3; Ps 111:3

2. majesty, dignity (8×) Awe-inspiring grandeur and imposing royal or divine presence that commands reverence. Moses blesses Joseph with the 'majesty of a firstborn bull' (Deut 33:17), and the psalmist praises God's voice as 'full of majesty' (Ps 29:4). In 1 Chr 16:27, majesty and strength dwell in God's sanctuary. German 'Majestat' captures this sense of power-laden dignity that goes beyond mere visual beauty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Your-majesty, and-dignity, and-in-Your-majesty | es: Y-en-tu-majestad, con-majestad, la-gloria | fr: [וְהָדָר], dans-majesté, et-le-chemin | de: [וְהָדָר], ist-mit-Majestät, majesty Deut 33:17; 1Chr 16:27; Ps 21:5; Ps 29:4; Ps 45:3

3. honor, glory (4×) Attributed honor, renown, or recognized distinction belonging to a person or bestowed by God. When God asks Job 'Deck yourself with glory and splendor' (Job 40:10), the word denotes an honor one wears like a garment. The psalmist marvels that God crowns humanity with 'glory and honor' (Ps 8:5), and Micah laments that 'my glory' has been stripped from the women and children of Israel (Mic 2:9). Here the sense moves from visual splendor to social or moral worth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: My-glory, and-glory, and-honor | es: esplendor, mi-gloria, y-de-esplendor | fr: et-le-majesté, et-וְהָדָר, gloire | de: Ehre, [הַדְרִי], [וְהָדָר] Job 40:10; Ps 8:5; Ps 149:9; Mic 2:9

הַדָּרָה H1927 N-fsc (5×)

adornment, splendor, glory; especially the beauty of holiness in worship

A feminine noun meaning adornment or glory, found exclusively in construct phrases. Four of its five occurrences form the expression 'the splendor of holiness' (hadrat-qodesh), a liturgical formula associated with public worship of the Lord in 1 Chronicles 16:29, 2 Chronicles 20:21, Psalm 29:2, and Psalm 96:9. Proverbs 14:28 applies the term to royal glory, declaring that a multitude of people is the splendor of a king.

(5×) Adornment, splendor, or glory — especially the majestic beauty associated with worship or royal dignity. The dominant liturgical use appears in the phrase hadrat-qodesh, 'the splendor of holiness,' a summons to worship (1 Chr 16:29; 2 Chr 20:21; Ps 29:2; 96:9). Spanish 'hermosura/esplendor de' and French 'ornement' capture both aesthetic and sacred overtones. Proverbs 14:28 transfers the concept to the political realm, calling a large populace 'the splendor of a king' — royal glory measured not in regalia but in the people themselves. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-splendor-of-, in-splendor-of, in-the-splendor-of | es: a-hermosura-de, en-esplendor-de, en-esplendor-de- | fr: [בְּהַדְרַת], [לְהַדְרַת], dans-ornement | de: [בְּהַדְרַת], [הַדְרַת], [לְהַדְרַת] 1Chr 16:29; 2Chr 20:21; Ps 29:2; Ps 96:9; Prov 14:28

הֲדַדְעֶזֶר H1928

Hadadezer, Aramean king of Zobah; David's powerful enemy whose name means 'Hadad is help'

This formidable Aramean ruler controlled Zobah, a significant kingdom north of Damascus, until David defeated him decisively. The name incorporates the storm god Hadad, testifying to Aramaic religious culture. Multiple accounts of David's victories over him appear in Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles, with textual variants between 'Hadadezer' and 'Hadarezer.' He commanded substantial forces including chariots and horsemen, extending his territory toward the Euphrates. David's triumph over such a powerful foe demonstrated his emerging dominance in the region. Aramaic inscriptions confirm the name's authenticity and typical formation.

הָהּ H1929 Interjection (1×)

interjection of distress: alas! woe!

An exclamation expressing grief or impending disaster, appearing only in Ezekiel 30:2 where the prophet cries out concerning the day of the Lord's judgment against Egypt. The word conveys emotional intensity and dread, similar to the more common אֲהָהּ. Translations consistently capture the sense of anguish: 'alas' in English, '¡Ay!' in Spanish, and 'hélas!' in French, all preserving the interjection's emotional punch.

(1×) Appears in Ezekiel's oracle against Egypt, where the prophet commands his audience to 'howl' (הֵילִילוּ) and then cries 'alas for the day!' (הָהּ לַיּוֹם). The multilingual glosses all preserve the interjection's emotional force as an exclamation of woe. This rare form intensifies the prophetic announcement of divine judgment, expressing both distress at the coming catastrophe and the gravity of God's intervention. WOE AND ALAS en: alas | es: ¡Ay | fr: hélas! | de: [הה] Ezek 30:2

הוֹ H1930 Interjection (2×)

alas, an exclamation of grief or lamentation

This interjection expresses grief or distress, equivalent to 'alas' or 'woe.' Amos 5:16 describes future mourning when the Lord passes through Israel in judgment: 'In all the streets they shall say, Alas! Alas!' The doubled form intensifies the cry of lamentation. This is the sound of public mourning, the corporate wail that fills the streets when disaster strikes. The interjection gives voice to raw grief, the spontaneous cry when sorrow overwhelms words.

(2×) The glosses ('alas, ay, oh') represent the mourning cry. Amos 5:16 uses it twice in immediate succession ('Alas! Alas!'), describing professional mourners summoned to wail in the streets and squares. The doubled interjection creates an auditory effect—the sound of communal lamentation echoing through the city. This judgment oracle envisions a future when the whole land mourns, every street resounding with cries of 'Alas! Alas!' for God's devastating visitation. WOE AND ALAS en: alas, alas- | es: Ay-, ay | fr: oh! | de: [הו] Amos 5:16

הוּא H1931 Pro-3ms (1885×)

He, she, it (personal pronoun); that one (demonstrative); it is (copular identifier)

The pronoun הוּא (masculine) / הִיא (feminine) is one of Hebrew's most versatile grammatical words. In its primary role it is simply 'he,' 'she,' or 'it,' resuming a previously mentioned referent. But Hebrew retains an older demonstrative layer where הוּא means 'that' or 'that one,' pointing to a specific, often distant entity — visible in phrases like 'that night' (Gen 19:35) and 'that day' (Gen 26:24). Occasionally it functions as a copula, asserting identity: 'it is he' or 'this is it,' as in Lev 10:3.

1. personal pronoun he/she/it (1431×) The standard third-person singular personal pronoun: he, she, or it. It serves as subject pronoun, resumptive pronoun, and general anaphoric reference throughout the Hebrew Bible. All target languages render it with their basic pronoun forms — 'él,' 'il,' 'er' — confirming its unmarked referential function. From Gen 4:20 onward it appears over 1,400 times as the default way to track a discourse participant. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: he, he-is | es: él | fr: il, il-est | de: er, er-ist, er-sei Gen 4:20; Gen 4:26; Gen 10:21; Gen 15:4; Gen 17:12

2. demonstrative that one (441×) The demonstrative use meaning 'that' or 'that one,' pointing to a specific referent that is typically distant in space, time, or discourse. Multilingual evidence confirms the demonstrative reading: Spanish renders it 'aquel/aquella,' Arabic 'ذٰلِكَ' and German 'jener/jenes' — all distinctly demonstrative rather than merely pronominal. Key passages include Gen 19:35 ('that night'), Gen 21:31 ('that place'), and Gen 26:24 ('that night'), where temporal or spatial distance is foregrounded. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: that, the-that | es: aquel, aquella, el-aquel | fr: ce, le-ce | de: der-jenes, jenen, jener Gen 19:35; Gen 21:31; Gen 26:24; Gen 28:19; Gen 30:16

3. copular identificational it is (13×) A copular or identificational use where הוּא functions as a predicate marker asserting identity or equivalence: 'it is,' 'this is,' or 'the same is.' This is the rarest sense, appearing about 13 times. In Lev 10:3 God says 'this is what the LORD spoke,' and in Ezra 7:8 the construction identifies Ezra himself. German 'es ist' and French 'c'est' in the glosses confirm the equative reading distinct from simple pronoun reference. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: are-the-same, it, it-is | es: ella, es, este | fr: c'est, ce, elle | de: dies, er, es-ist Lev 10:3; Josh 2:21; Ezra 7:8; Ezra 9:11; Ps 39:4

הוּא H1932 Pro-3fs (22×)

He, she, it (Aramaic third-person pronoun); that (demonstrative use)

The Aramaic pronoun הוּא (masculine) / הִיא (feminine) functions almost identically to its Hebrew counterpart, serving as the standard third-person pronoun throughout Daniel and Ezra. It identifies agents ('and he changes times and seasons,' Dan 2:21), resumes subjects emphatically ('wisdom and might — they are his,' Dan 2:20), and occasionally serves a copular role ('you are it,' Dan 4:19). A single demonstrative use appears at Dan 2:32, where Nebuchadnezzar is told 'that image' — הוּא צַלְמָא — pointing to the colossus he saw in his dream. Spanish 'ella/es/eres' and German 'er/sie' track the pronominal core across contexts.

1. he, she, it (personal pronoun) (21×) The standard third-person singular personal pronoun in Aramaic — he, she, or it — covering all basic pronominal functions: subject reference, copulative identification, and emphatic resumption. With 21 occurrences, this accounts for nearly every use. Dan 2:21 ('and he changes times and seasons'), Dan 2:22 ('he reveals deep things'), Ezra 5:8 ('the work is being done diligently'), and Dan 6:5 ('he was faithful') all illustrate straightforward pronominal reference. The copulative function appears in Dan 2:28 and 2:20, where the pronoun equates subject and predicate ('wisdom and might — his it is'). Multilingual glosses confirm simple pronoun forms: 'He/and-he' (English), 'ella/es' (Spanish), 'er/sie/und-er' (German), 'elle/et-elle' (French). DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: He, He-is, and-he | es: ella, eres, es | fr: [הוא], elle, et-elle | de: er, sie, und-er Ezra 5:8; Ezra 6:15; Dan 2:9; Dan 2:20; Dan 2:21

2. that (demonstrative) (1×) A demonstrative use meaning 'that,' pointing to a specific, identified entity. The single clear occurrence is Dan 2:32 — הוּא צַלְמָא, 'that image' — where Daniel identifies the great statue in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The pronoun here does not merely resume a previously mentioned subject but rather singles out and points to the specific dream-vision colossus. Spanish renders it 'Esta' (demonstrative rather than pronoun), while English uses 'that,' confirming the deictic force. This demonstrative function parallels the well-attested usage of Hebrew הוּא as 'that' in construct phrases, showing the Aramaic pronoun retains the same dual pronominal-demonstrative capacity. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: that | es: Esta | fr: il | de: er Dan 2:32

הָוָא H1933a V-Qal-Imp-ms (1×)

To fall or come down; used of snow falling earthward

This rare verb appears in God's speech from the whirlwind to Job, commanding snow to 'Fall earthward!' The root relates to falling or descending, an Arabizing usage reflecting poetry's occasional adoption of forms from related languages for vividness. Job 37-38 surveys meteorological phenomena demonstrating God's power over creation —snow, rain, ice, lightning. The imperative to snow captures the immediacy of divine command over nature: God speaks, and snow falls. This single use functions within the larger rhetorical strategy of demonstrating Job's inability to govern creation as God does.

(1×) Job 37:6 records God's word to the snow: 'Fall to earth!'—part of Elihu's speech describing God's control over weather. The command's brevity and directness emphasize divine sovereignty: nature obeys immediately. This leads into broader reflection on God's wisdom in creation—thunderstorms, ice, and constellations all testify to his power. The verb's Arabizing form adds poetic color, appropriate for the book's elevated style. The passage builds toward God's own speeches from the whirlwind, where he questions Job's ability to command creation as effortlessly as God commands snow to fall. BEING AND EXISTENCE

en: fall | es: Sé | fr: הוֹא | de: er Job 37:6

הָוָה H1933b V-Qal-Imp-ms (5×)

to become, be, come to pass; a rare poetic synonym of hayah

A rare verb functioning as a poetic synonym of the common hayah ('to be, become'). In Genesis 27:29, Isaac commands Jacob to 'become lord to your brothers.' Isaiah 16:4 uses the feminine imperative in an appeal for Moab to provide shelter, possibly imitating Moabite dialect. Ecclesiastes employs the participle (2:22) and imperfect (11:3) in reflections on what comes to pass. Nehemiah 6:6 quotes a rumor about what someone is 'becoming.' The Aramaic cognate became the standard word for 'to be.'

(5×) To become, to be, to come to pass — a rare Hebrew verb cognate with the common Aramaic hawa. Genesis 27:29 uses the imperative in Isaac's blessing: 'be lord to your brothers' (Spanish 'sé,' French 'sois'). Isaiah 16:4 employs the feminine imperative hevi in a plea for shelter, perhaps reflecting Moabite coloring. Ecclesiastes uses the participle (2:22, 'what is becoming of') and the apocopated imperfect (11:3, 'there it shall be'). Its rarity in Hebrew contrasts with its dominance in Aramaic, where it replaced hayah entirely. BEING AND EXISTENCE

en: are-becoming, be, be- | es: estará, serás, sé | fr: [הרה], [הוי], être | de: [הרה], [הוי], [יהוא] Gen 27:29; Neh 6:6; Eccl 2:22; Eccl 11:3; Isa 16:4

הֲוָא H1934 V-Qal-Perf-3mp (71×)

Aramaic verb: to be, exist; to become or come to pass; also used as a periphrastic auxiliary with participles.

The standard Aramaic copula found throughout Daniel and Ezra, functioning as the counterpart to Hebrew הָיָה. It covers the full range of existential and copulative meanings: simple being ('it was,' 'it shall be'), becoming or transformation ('it became like chaff,' Dan 2:35), and happening ('what will come to pass,' Dan 2:28-29). Arabic translations helpfully distinguish the senses, using ك for simple existence but ص for transformative becoming. When paired with a participle, the verb forms periphrastic tenses expressing habitual or volitional action, as in Daniel 5:19 where Spanish renders it 'quería' (he wanted/wished).

1. to be, exist (65×) The basic copulative and existential sense: to be, to exist, to stand in a certain state. This is the workhorse meaning across Daniel and Ezra, covering identity statements, existence assertions, and predication. Spanish 'será/estaba/estuve,' French 'être,' and German 'sein' all render it with their standard copula, confirming its simple stative function (Ezra 4:12-13; 6:9; Dan 4:26). BEING AND EXISTENCE

en: I-was, it-will-be, will-be | es: estaba, estuve, será | fr: pour-il, être | de: sein, zu-er Ezra 4:12; Ezra 4:13; Ezra 5:8; Ezra 6:9; Ezra 7:23

2. to be (periphrastic auxiliary) (4×) Auxiliary use with a following participle to form periphrastic verb constructions expressing continuous, habitual, or volitional action. In Daniel 5:19, the verb combines with participles to yield 'whomever he wished he would slay/spare.' Spanish 'quería' (he wanted) and the contrast with simple 'was' in other languages reveal that the construction conveys volition or ongoing habit rather than mere existence. BEING AND EXISTENCE

en: he-was | es: quería | fr: être | de: sein Dan 5:19

3. to become, turn into (2×) Transformative sense: to become, to turn into, to come into being as something new. Distinguished from simple being by indicating a change of state. Arabic ص (to become) rather than ك (to be), Spanish 'se convirtió' (it turned into), and Hindi 'हो गया' (became) all confirm the shift in meaning. The classic passage is Daniel 2:35, where the stone 'became' a great mountain filling the earth. BEING AND EXISTENCE

en: and-became, became | es: se-convirtió, y-fueron | fr: et-être, être | de: sein, und-sein Dan 2:35

הוֹד H1935 Conj-w (24×)

Splendor, majesty, or honor; the awe-inspiring radiance of God, royalty, or personal dignity and distinction.

A poetic term evoking the visible, almost tangible radiance that surrounds God or a king. In worship contexts it pairs naturally with hadar ('beauty') to describe the overwhelming grandeur of the LORD (1 Chr 29:11; Ps 21:5). The multilingual evidence confirms this pairing: German renders it Majestaet and Pracht, Spanish esplendor and majestad, all clustering around royal brilliance. Yet the word can also denote a more personal dignity or honor conferred on an individual, as when Moses transfers some of his hod to Joshua (Num 27:20) or when Proverbs warns against giving away one's vigor to strangers (Prov 5:9).

1. majesty, splendor (21×) The awe-inspiring splendor or majesty associated with God or royalty, often paired with hadar in liturgical and prophetic poetry. Translations across languages converge on 'majesty/splendor' (Ger. Majestaet, Spa. esplendor). Characteristic of divine theophany (Job 37:22) and royal enthronement (1 Chr 29:25), this sense captures the visible radiance of supreme authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Your-splendor, and-my-splendor, and-the-majesty | es: Esplendor, de-majestad-de-ti, esplendor | fr: [הדה], [הוד], [והוד] | de: Majestät, Pracht, [הדה] Num 27:20; 1Chr 16:27; 1Chr 29:11; 1Chr 29:25; Job 37:22

2. honor, dignity (3×) Personal honor, dignity, or distinction belonging to or conferred upon an individual, emphasizing esteem and respect rather than cosmic grandeur. In Num 27:20 Moses gives some of his hod to Joshua as a transfer of authority; in Prov 5:9 it warns against squandering one's vigor or reputation. Daniel 11:21 uses it of royal dignity not rightfully bestowed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: honor-of, splendor, your-vigor | es: esplendor, honor-de, tu-honor | fr: le-majesté, majesté, ton-הודך-toi | de: Pracht, [הוד], [הודך] Ps 21:5; Prov 5:9; Dan 11:21

הוֹד H1936 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Hod — personal name meaning 'splendor' or 'vigor', a descendant of Asher

A personal name appearing in the genealogy of Asher's descendants. The name derives from the common Hebrew noun meaning 'splendor' or 'vigor,' qualities often celebrated in personal names. Chronicles preserves this individual as part of Asher's tribal lineage, connecting the tribe's identity to divine glory.

(1×) The multilingual evidence shows this as a proper name with minimal translation variation — English and Spanish transliterate 'Hod' while French and German leave it untranslated in brackets, typical treatment for biblical personal names. Found only in 1 Chronicles 7:37 within Asher's genealogical record. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Hod | es: y-Hod | fr: [והוד] | de: [והוד] 1Chr 7:37

הוֹדוִה H1937 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Hodevah — variant form of Hodaviah, a Levitical family name

A Levitical family name appearing in Nehemiah's list of returnees from exile. This represents a variant spelling (Ketiv) of Hodaviah, which appears in the parallel passage in Ezra. Such textual variants between Ezra and Nehemiah are common, as both books draw from similar temple archives but preserve different manuscript traditions.

(1×) The translations consistently render this as a proper name, with Spanish indicating the family relationship ('of Hodaviah') while English uses the name directly. The prepositional prefix in Hebrew (לְ) marks this as 'sons of Hodevah,' indicating a family or clan grouping within the Levitical structure. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hodevah | es: de-Hodavías | fr: [לְהוֹדוּה] | de: [לְהוֹדוּה] Neh 7:43

הוֹדַוְיָה H1938 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)
Hodaviah (personal name); possibly 'songs of praise'
A proper name borne by several individuals in postexilic lists (1 Chr 5:24; 9:7; Ezra 2:40). The etymology is debated: BDB mentions a possible abstract noun meaning 'songs of praise' or an infinitive 'praising,' though the personal-name function predominates. Translations preserve the name with slight orthographic variation (Spanish Hodavías, y-Hodavya). The name appears in genealogical and census contexts, identifying heads of families or Levitical groups.

(3×) Used as a personal name in three genealogical or census lists (1 Chr 5:24; 9:7; Ezra 2:40). The multilingual glosses treat it as a proper noun, preserving transliteration rather than attempting semantic translation. Any etymological connection to praise remains background information, not activated in these contexts. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hodavyah, and-Hodavyah | es: Hodavías, y-Hodavya | fr: [הוֹדַוְיָה], [וְהוֹדַוְיָה] | de: [הוֹדַוְיָה], [וְהוֹדַוְיָה] 1Chr 5:24; 1Chr 9:7; Ezra 2:40

הוֹדַוְיָהוּ H1939 N-proper-ms (2×)
Hodaviah (Hodayahu), a personal name meaning 'praise Yah'
This personal name appears with textual variants (Ketiv/Qere) in 1 Chronicles 3:24, listing descendants of the Davidic line. The name means 'praise Yah' or 'my praise is Yah,' reflecting the common practice of forming names from the root for praise (hodah) combined with the divine name. The textual variants show slight spelling differences but represent the same person—a post-exilic descendant in Judah's royal genealogy, preserving the hope of continued Davidic lineage.

(2×) The brackets in the glosses indicate Ketiv/Qere variants: the written text (Hodayahu) differs slightly from the reading tradition (Hodavyahu). Both forms appear in 1 Chronicles 3:24, listing the same individual in the Davidic genealogy. The name's meaning ('praise Yah') situates it among theophoric names celebrating worship. The preservation of this name in the genealogy, despite the exile, witnesses to the enduring hope in God's promises to David's house. PERSONAL NAMES
en: (Hodavyahu), [K: Hodayahu] | es: (Hodavyahu), [Hodavyahu] | fr: [הֹדַיְהוּ], [הוֹדַוְיְהוּ] | de: [הֹדַיְהוּ], [הוֹדַוְיְהוּ] 1Chr 3:24

הוֹדַוְיָה H1940 N-proper-ms (4×)
Hodiah (Hodijah); a personal name meaning 'my splendor is Yah,' borne by several post-exilic figures.
A theophoric name meaning 'my splendor is Yah,' carried by at least three distinct individuals in the post-exilic community. One is a man of Judah mentioned in the genealogies (1 Chr 4:19). Two others are Levites who helped the people understand the Law during Ezra's public reading (Neh 10:10, 13), and a chief of the people who sealed the covenant (Neh 10:18). All major translations transliterate the name, with English giving 'Hodiah' or 'Hodijah' and Spanish 'Hodías.'

(4×) Hodiah (also Hodijah) — a proper name meaning 'my splendor is Yah,' borne by several post-exilic figures. In 1 Chr 4:19, Hodiah appears in a Judahite genealogy. In Neh 10:10 and 10:13, Levites named Hodiah seal the covenant alongside Nehemiah, and in Neh 10:18, a chief of the people by the same name does likewise. The name's theophoric element (-yah) ties it to Israel's worship tradition. English renders it 'Hodiah' or 'Hodijah,' Spanish gives 'Hodías' or 'Hodiya,' while French and German typically transliterate directly from the Hebrew הוֹדַוְיָה. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hodiah, Hodiyah | es: Hodiya, Hodías | fr: [הוֹדִיָה] | de: [הוֹדִיָה] 1Chr 4:19; Neh 10:10; Neh 10:13; Neh 10:18

הוֹדִיָה H1941 N-proper-ms (2×)
Hodiah, a Levitical name meaning 'splendor/majesty of Yah'
Hodiah was a Levite who participated in Ezra's public reading and explanation of the Law (Nehemiah 8:7) and led in corporate worship (9:5). The name means 'my splendor is Yah' or 'majesty of Yah.' These chapters in Nehemiah describe the spiritual renewal under Ezra and Nehemiah, where Levites like Hodiah played crucial roles in teaching the people and leading them in confession and praise. The name itself becomes a declaration of God's glory.

(2×) The transliterations ('Hodiah, Hodías') preserve this Levitical name across translations. Nehemiah 8:7 lists Hodiah among those who 'helped the people to understand the Law,' while 9:5 includes him among Levites calling the people to worship. The post-exilic context is significant—this Levite helps restore Torah knowledge and covenant fidelity after the exile. His name ('splendor of Yah') embodies the message he proclaims: God's glory revealed in his word and worthy of praise. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hodiah | es: Hodías | fr: [הוֹדִיָה] | de: [הוֹדִיָה] Neh 8:7; Neh 9:5

הַוָּה H1942 Conj-w (15×)
Destruction, calamity, engulfing ruin; also (evil) desire, covetous craving
The noun הַוָּה carries a brooding, ominous weight in Hebrew poetry and prophecy. In its primary sense it means devastating ruin or calamity — the kind of engulfing destruction that swallows the wicked. The Psalms are its natural habitat: the throat of the wicked is an open grave, 'their inward part is הַוּוֹת' (Ps 5:9, quoted by Paul in Rom 3:13). Job speaks of his own הַוָּה weighing heavier than sand (Job 6:2). A second, rarer sense describes covetous desire or craving — the 'desire of the wicked' in Proverbs 10:3 and 11:6 — linking internal appetite to outward ruin. The Arabic cognate هَاوِيَة ('abyss, hell') illuminates the root's imagery of a gaping chasm that devours.

1. destruction, calamity, ruin (12×) Destruction, calamity, engulfing ruin — disaster that overwhelms and devours, often as divine judgment on the wicked or as the affliction of the righteous. Appearing 12 times, primarily in Psalms and Job, this sense evokes a yawning chasm of catastrophe. In Ps 5:9, the wicked are filled with הַוּוֹת ('destructions'), and in Ps 52:2, the tongue devises הַוּוֹת like a sharpened razor. Job's calamity (הַוָּתִי) outweighs the sand of the sea (Job 6:2), and his path is breached as in a ruin (Job 30:13). Ps 38:12 and 57:1 likewise use the term for destructive intent. Multilingual glosses — 'destrucción,' 'ruine,' 'calamity' — uniformly confirm the sense of devastating catastrophe. The Arabic cognate هَاوِيَة ('deep pit, hell') preserves the root metaphor of an engulfing abyss. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY
en: calamity, destruction, in-his-destruction | es: Ruina, calamidades, destrucciones | fr: dans-ruine, le-ruine, ruine | de: [הוות], [הות], [לְהוֹתִי] Job 6:30; Job 30:13; Ps 5:9; Ps 38:12; Ps 52:2

2. desire, craving (3×) Evil desire, greedy craving — a strong appetite that leads to ruin, typically characterizing the wicked. In Prov 10:3, 'the LORD thrusts away the הַוַּת of the wicked,' and in Prov 11:6, 'the treacherous are caught by their own הַוָּה.' Mic 7:3 speaks of the powerful man 'uttering the desire (הַוַּת) of his soul.' Spanish 'deseo/codicia' and English 'craving/desire' mark this as a distinct sense from destruction, though the two are semantically linked: unrestrained desire becomes the instrument of one's own undoing. The root's semantic field thus spans the arc from inner appetite to outward catastrophe. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: but-by-the-craving-of, but-the-craving-of, desire-of | es: deseo-de, y-deseo-de, y-en-codicia-de | fr: et-ruine, malheur | de: [הות], [ובהות], [והות] Prov 10:3; Prov 11:6; Mic 7:3

הַוָּה H1943 N-fs (3×)
ruin, disaster, calamity

A noun of doom and destruction. Isaiah warns that 'disaster shall fall upon you' (Isa 47:11), and Ezekiel prophesies 'disaster upon disaster' coming (Ezek 7:26, repeated twice in the verse for rhetorical effect). The Spanish calamidad and French malheur capture the catastrophic, overwhelming force of the word. This is not ordinary trouble but cascading ruin—divine judgment unfolding in waves.

(3×) The noun denotes calamity and disaster in prophetic judgment oracles. It describes ruin falling on Babylon (Isa 47:11) and successive waves of disaster on Jerusalem (Ezek 7:26). The multilingual evidence (calamity, malheur) uniformly points to sudden, overwhelming catastrophe. The repetition in Ezekiel ('disaster upon disaster') emphasizes relentless, cumulative devastation. CALAMITY AND DISASTER

en: calamity, disaster | es: calamidad | fr: [הוה], malheur | de: [הוה] Isa 47:11; Ezek 7:26

הוֹהָם H1944 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hoham — Canaanite king of Hebron during Joshua's conquest

The king of Hebron who joined the southern coalition against Joshua after the fall of Ai and Jericho. As one of five Amorite kings who attacked Gibeon for making peace with Israel, Hoham represents the Canaanite resistance to Israel's entry into the land. His defeat became a key moment in Israel's conquest of the southern hill country.

(1×) All major translations preserve the name 'Hoham' without variation, reflecting the stability of this proper name in the textual tradition. Joshua 10:3 identifies him specifically as the Hebronite king in the coalition that included Jerusalem, Jarmuth, Lachish, and Eglon. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hoham | es: Hoham | fr: Hoham | de: Hoham Josh 10:3

הוֹי H1945 Conj-w / Interjection (51×)

An exclamatory interjection: 'woe! alas!' in lament or judgment; rarely 'ho! come!' as a summons.

An onomatopoeic cry found almost exclusively in the prophetic literature, expressing grief, lamentation, or the announcement of divine judgment. Isaiah uses it repeatedly to introduce 'woe oracles' against the unjust (Isa 5:8, 11, 18, 20-22), and Jeremiah employs it in funeral laments (Jer 22:18). Spanish ay and German wehe capture the sharp emotional force. In one striking instance (Isa 55:1), the same word functions as an attention-getting summons — 'Ho, everyone who thirsts!' — where Spanish Oh and the shift in tone confirm a distinct beckoning sense.

1. woe (50×) Exclamation of grief, lament, or prophetic judgment: 'woe! alas!' Introduces declarations of divine displeasure or mourning cries. Spanish ay de, French malheur, and German wehe all converge on this sorrowful and admonitory tone. Found across the prophets, especially in Isaiah's woe oracles (Isa 1:4; 5:8) and funeral laments (1 Kgs 13:30; Jer 22:18). The 50 occurrences establish this as the overwhelmingly dominant use. WOE AND ALAS

en: Woe, Woe-to, woe | es: Ay, Ay-de, ¡Ay! | fr: malheur | de: wehe 1Kgs 13:30; Isa 1:4; Isa 1:24; Isa 5:8; Isa 5:11

2. ho (1×) Attention-getting summons: 'ho! come!' A rare positive use of the interjection to call hearers to approach, functioning as an invitation rather than a warning. Only at Isaiah 55:1, where God calls the thirsty to come and drink. Spanish Oh rather than Ay signals the tonal shift from grief to gracious beckoning, and the context of free water and wine confirms the invitational force. WOE AND ALAS

en: ho | es: Oh | fr: malheur | de: wehe Isa 55:1

הֲלַךְ H1946 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (4×)

To go, walk (Aramaic); of physical movement and figurative conduct, including walking in pride.

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew הָלַךְ, meaning to go or walk. In Ezra, it describes the movement of people and objects—temple vessels being returned to Jerusalem (Ezra 6:5) and permission for volunteers to go up (Ezra 7:13). In Daniel, it takes on a more vivid quality: three men walking in the furnace (Dan 3:25 uses a related form) and Nebuchadnezzar walking about on the roof of his palace (Dan 4:26). The figurative extension to 'walking in pride' (Dan 4:34) bridges physical movement and moral conduct, a metaphor common across Semitic languages.

(4×) To go, walk (Aramaic) — physical movement of persons or things, and figuratively, one's manner of life or conduct. In Ezra 5:5, the building work 'goes on' unhindered; in 6:5, temple vessels are to 'go back' to Jerusalem; in 7:13, anyone willing may 'go' to Jerusalem. Daniel uses the Pael participle for Nebuchadnezzar 'walking about' on his palace roof (Dan 4:26/29) and the Haphel for the three men 'walking' in the fiery furnace. The figurative peak comes in Dan 4:34/37 where Nebuchadnezzar confesses God can humble those who 'walk in pride.' Spanish 'ir/vaya,' English 'go/goes,' and French preserve the basic motion sense across all occurrences. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: and-let-go, goes, let-him-go | es: fuera, para-ir, vaya | fr: [ויהך], [יהך], [למהך] | de: [ויהך], [יהך], [למהך] Ezra 5:5; Ezra 6:5; Ezra 7:13

הוֹלֶלָה H1947 Conj-w / N-fp (4×)

Madness, folly viewed as irrational recklessness; used exclusively in Ecclesiastes to denote moral and intellectual insanity.

A feminine noun found only in the plural and exclusively in Ecclesiastes, where the Preacher sets out to examine wisdom alongside its opposite. The word captures not mere silliness but a deeper derangement of moral reasoning — the kind of folly that the wise person investigates precisely in order to reject. Spanish 'locura' and German 'Wahnsinn' both preserve the intensity: this is not ignorance but a willful departure from sense. In Eccl 9:3 it is paired with evil itself, revealing how the author sees madness as a spiritual and ethical condition, not merely a psychological one.

(4×) Madness as moral-intellectual folly — the irrational recklessness that stands opposed to wisdom. All four occurrences appear in Ecclesiastes where the Preacher investigates what is ultimately futile (Eccl 1:17; 2:12; 7:25; 9:3). Paired with sikhluth ('folly') and ra' ('evil'), the term denotes not clinical insanity but a willful refusal of right reason. The multilingual glosses uniformly translate with strong terms — Spanish 'locura,' French 'folie,' German 'Wahnsinn' — confirming its gravity. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8032 WITH 5 SENSES

en: and-madness, madness | es: locura, locuras, y-locura | fr: et-folie, folie | de: Wahnsinn, und-Wahnsinn Eccl 1:17; Eccl 2:12; Eccl 7:25; Eccl 9:3

הוֹלֻלוֹת H1948 N-fs (1×)

madness, folly of an extreme or evil nature

An intensified form of madness or folly, particularly evil in character. Qoheleth uses this term to describe the progression of a fool's speech — beginning in ordinary folly but escalating to destructive insanity. The word represents an Aramaic-influenced formation, suggesting late composition or foreign linguistic contact in Ecclesiastes.

(1×) The translations vary: English renders 'madness,' Spanish 'locura' (madness), while French and German leave it untranslated in brackets, perhaps recognizing its textual difficulty. Ecclesiastes 10:13 uses it to describe the culmination of foolish speech, where what begins as mere folly ends in dangerous delusion. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8032 WITH 5 SENSES

en: is-madness | es: locura | fr: הוללות | de: [הוללות] Eccl 10:13

הוּם H1949 V-Hifil-Imperf-3fp (5×)

to murmur, roar, be in uproar; to discomfit or throw into confusion

A verb conveying tumultuous agitation — the roaring of a crowd, the inner turmoil of distress, or the divine act of throwing enemies into panic. Ruth 1:19 describes a whole city stirred into uproar at Naomi's return. First Samuel 4:5 records the earth resounding at Israel's war cry. First Kings 1:45 depicts Jerusalem buzzing with excitement over Solomon's anointing. Psalm 55:2 expresses the psalmist's inner anguish as restless moaning. Micah 2:12 uses it of the murmuring noise of a gathered flock.

(5×) To be in uproar, murmur, roar, or be thrown into confusion — covering communal tumult, inner agitation, and divine discomfiture. Ruth 1:19 records a city stirred at Naomi's return (Spanish 'resonó,' the city 'resounded'). First Samuel 4:5 describes the earth trembling at a shout. First Kings 1:45 depicts Jerusalem in excited uproar over Solomon. Psalm 55:2 turns inward: the psalmist moans in restless anguish (Spanish 'gimo'). Micah 2:12 applies it to the murmuring sound of a gathered multitude. The semantic thread is intense, disorienting agitation whether communal, military, or emotional. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: and-I-moan, and-the-city-was-in-uproar, and-trembled | es: harán-estruendo, y-gimo, y-resonó | fr: et-agiter, et-le-ville-fut-dans-uproar, et-trembla | de: [ותהם], [ותהימנה], und-der-Stadt-war-in-uproar Ruth 1:19; 1Sam 4:5; 1Kgs 1:45; Ps 55:2; Mic 2:12

הוֹמָם H1950 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Homam — son of Seir the Horite, variant of Hemam

A son of Seir the Horite, representing the pre-Israelite inhabitants of Edom. The name appears in Chronicles' genealogical account with a slightly different spelling than the Genesis parallel, which reads 'Hemam.' Such variant spellings in genealogies reflect different manuscript traditions while referring to the same individual.

(1×) The translations consistently preserve the proper name with the conjunctive prefix ('and-Homam'), following the Hebrew text's genealogical listing style. The parallel in Genesis 36:22 uses 'Hemam,' with the difference likely representing dialectal variation or scribal updating in Chronicles. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Homam | es: y-Homam | fr: [והומם] | de: [והומם] 1Chr 1:39

הוּן H1951 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-2mp (1×)

to consider something easy, make light of

A rare verb appearing only in Deuteronomy, describing Israel's presumptuous attitude toward invading Canaan despite God's prohibition. The root conveys making something seem easy or trivial, treating a difficult task with inappropriate lightness. Moses recalls how the people 'made light of going up' into the hill country after God had forbidden it.

(1×) The multilingual glosses show varied attempts to capture this concept: English 'thought easy,' Spanish 'pensasteis que era fácil' (you thought it was easy). The Hiphil conjugation suggests a causative sense — making something appear easy in one's own estimation. Deuteronomy 1:41 uses this to describe Israel's fatal overconfidence. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: and-you-thought-easy | es: y-pensasteis-que-era-fácil | fr: et-tu-thought-easy | de: und-du-thought-easy Deut 1:41

הוֹן H1952 N-msc / 2fs (26×)

Wealth, riches, valuable possessions; rarely 'enough, sufficiency' – a poetic term concentrated in Proverbs and Ezekiel.

Almost exclusively a wisdom and prophetic word, hon appears 24 times for material wealth and twice for the concept of sufficiency. In Proverbs it names the allure and the danger of riches: the wise honor God with their hon (Prov 3:9), yet the wicked covet it violently (Prov 1:13). Ezekiel applies it to Tyre's legendary commercial wealth (Ezek 27:12, 18, 27, 33). The rare sense 'enough' surfaces in Agur's riddle of the four insatiable things (Prov 30:15-16), where Spanish 'basta' (enough!) captures the exclamatory force. The term is a near-synonym of osher (riches) but carries a more concrete, possessive nuance.

1. wealth, riches (24×) Material wealth, riches, or accumulated possessions. The dominant sense across Proverbs and Ezekiel, frequently paired with osher (Ps 112:3; Prov 8:18) or contrasted with poverty. Ezekiel's Tyre oracles use it for commercial merchandise and trade wealth (Ezek 27:12, 27, 33). French 'richesse' and Spanish 'riqueza' render it straightforwardly. Proverbs 10:15 and 18:11 describe a rich man's wealth as his fortified city, giving hon an almost tangible, fortress-like quality. MIXED MULTITUDE en: and-wealth, from-your-wealth, his-wealth | es: Riqueza, Riqueza-de, bien | fr: de-ton-richesse-toi, et-richesse, la-richesse | de: Reichtum, [הון], [הוניך] Ps 44:12; Ps 112:3; Ps 119:14; Prov 1:13; Prov 3:9

2. enough, sufficiency (2×) Enough, sufficiency – an adverbial or exclamatory use meaning 'it is enough!' Found only in Proverbs 30:15-16 within the numerical proverb about things that never say 'enough': the grave, the barren womb, parched land, and fire. Spanish 'basta' and English 'enough' isolate this sense sharply from the wealth meaning, suggesting it may derive from an older root sense of 'substance/capacity' that Proverbs preserves in fossilized form. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: enough | es: basta | fr: richesse | de: Reichtum Prov 30:15; Prov 30:16

יְהוֹשָׁמָע H1953 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hoshama — abbreviated form meaning 'Yahweh has heard', royal descendant of Judah

A personal name from Judah's royal lineage, possibly an abbreviated or corrupted form of Jehoshama. The name combines the divine name Yahweh with the verb 'to hear,' expressing thanksgiving that God has heard prayer. Chronicles preserves this descendant among the Davidic line, maintaining the genealogical record of Judah's kings even after the exile.

(1×) All translations preserve the proper name form without variation. The Septuagint's Greek rendering attempts to capture the Hebrew phonetics. Found only in 1 Chronicles 3:18, this name appears in the post-exilic genealogy of Davidic descendants, suggesting continued hope in the royal line. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hoshama | es: Hosama | fr: [הושמע] | de: [הושמע] 1Chr 3:18

הוֹשֵׁעַ H1954 Prep-b / N-proper-ms (16×)

Hoshea ('salvation'): the original name of Joshua son of Nun; also the last king of Israel, the prophet Hosea, and other Israelite leaders.

The name הוֹשֵׁעַ means 'salvation' and belongs to several significant biblical figures. Most famously, it was the birth name of Joshua son of Nun before Moses added the divine name element, changing it to Yehoshua (Num 13:16) — a renaming that itself proclaims 'the LORD saves.' The prophet Hosea (Hos 1:1) bears the same name, and his life becomes a living parable of God's saving love for unfaithful Israel. The last king of the northern kingdom also bore this name (2 Kgs 17:1-6), creating a tragic irony: the king named 'salvation' presided over Israel's destruction. The Greek Septuagint renders the prophet's name as Ωσηε (Hosea) but Joshua's as Ιησους (Jesus), a distinction laden with later theological significance.

1. Hoshea (son of Nun / king of Israel) (13×) The proper name Hoshea used for: (a) the original name of Joshua son of Nun before Moses renamed him Yehoshua (Num 13:8, 16; Deut 32:44), (b) Hoshea son of Elah, the last king of the northern kingdom of Israel who reigned during the Assyrian conquest (2 Kgs 15:30; 17:1-6; 18:1, 9-10), (c) an Ephraimite chief under David (1 Chr 27:20), and (d) a leader who sealed the covenant under Nehemiah (Neh 10:24). Spanish and German both render the name as 'Oseas' and 'Hosea/Hoshea' respectively. The concentration of references in 2 Kings reflects the historical narrative of Israel's final years. HOSHEA HOSEA NAMES

en: Hoshea, and-Hoshea, in-Hoshea | es: Oseas, a-Oseas, de-Oseas | fr: Hoshea, [הושע], dans-Hoshea | de: Hosea, Hoshea, [הושע] Num 13:8; Num 13:16; Deut 32:44; 2Kgs 15:30; 2Kgs 17:1

2. Hosea (the prophet) (3×) The prophet Hosea (son of Beeri), who prophesied in the 8th century BC during the reigns of Uzziah through Hezekiah of Judah and Jeroboam II of Israel. All three occurrences appear in Hosea 1:1-2, the book's superscription and opening command. French renders the prophet's name as 'Osée,' distinguishing it slightly from the other bearers. The prophet's name is theologically charged: God commands the man named 'salvation' to marry an unfaithful wife, embodying the tension between divine deliverance and human waywardness that defines the entire book. HOSHEA HOSEA NAMES

en: Hosea, through-Hosea | es: Oseas, por-Oseas | fr: Osée, dans-Osée | de: Hosea, in-Hosea Hos 1:1; Hos 1:2

הוֹשַׁעְיָה H1955 N-proper-ms (3×)

Hoshaiah ('Yah has saved'; personal name)

A theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh has saved.' It identifies a prince of Judah in Nehemiah's dedication ceremony (Neh 12:32) and the father of Jezaniah, a military leader in Jeremiah's time (Jer 42:1; 43:2). The name reflects the theology of deliverance embedded in Hebrew onomastics. Translations preserve the name (Spanish Hosaías, Osaías), honoring its function as a personal identifier rather than translating its etymological meaning.

(3×) Appears as a personal name in both narrative (Jer 42:1; 43:2) and liturgical (Neh 12:32) contexts. The cross-lingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name. Its theological meaning ('Yah has saved') remains implicit, activating the broader pattern of salvific hope in Israelite naming practices. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hoshayah | es: Hosaías, Osaías | fr: [הושעיה] | de: [הושעיה] Neh 12:32; Jer 42:1; Jer 43:2

הוֹתִיר H1956 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Hothir, a son of Heman, a temple musician

Hothir was one of Heman's sons listed among the temple musicians in David's organization of worship (1 Chronicles 25:4, 28). His name possibly means 'abundance' or 'he has left over.' The list in 1 Chronicles 25:4 has been understood by some scholars as incorporating fragments of Hebrew poetry or prayer rather than being purely genealogical, though the text presents these as actual names. Hothir received the twenty-first lot for the musical courses serving in the temple.

(2×) The prepositional forms ('Hothir, for Hothir / para Hothir') appear in the genealogy and lot-casting passages. First Chronicles 25:4 lists him among Heman's fourteen sons who were temple musicians, while 25:28 records that 'the twenty-first [lot] came out for Hothir.' Whether the name is 'authentic' or part of an embedded psalm, it functioned to organize the musical service into courses, ensuring continuous praise in Israel's worship. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hotir, for-Hotir | es: Hotir, para-Hotir | fr: [הותיר], [להותיר] | de: [הותיר], [להותיר] 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:28

הָזָה H1957 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

dreaming, raving — used metaphorically of negligent prophets

A participial form describing those who dream or rave, used metaphorically in Isaiah to condemn Israel's watchmen. The prophet compares false prophets to lazy dogs that lie around dreaming instead of barking to warn of danger. The term suggests both sleep and the delusional speech of someone not fully conscious, emphasizing the prophets' failure to fulfill their duty.

(1×) Translations consistently render this as 'dreaming' (English, Spanish 'soñando'), though the underlying Semitic root relates to delirious speech. Isaiah 56:10 uses the plural participle to describe prophets who 'cannot bark,' lying down and loving to slumber — dreaming rather than watching for threats to God's people. DREAM VISION

en: dreaming | es: soñando | fr: [הוים] | de: [הוים] Isa 56:10

הִי H1958 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

woe, lamentation — textually uncertain term for mourning

A term for wailing or lamentation appearing in Ezekiel's vision of the scroll. The text itself is quite uncertain — some scholars see it as equivalent to the lament-word 'woe,' while others suggest it relates to the noun for mourning. Ezekiel sees written on both sides of the scroll 'lamentations and mourning and woe,' emphasizing the prophetic burden of judgment.

(1×) The translation evidence shows significant uncertainty: English 'woe,' Spanish 'ay' (alas), while French and German leave it untranslated. The Septuagint reads 'ouai' (woe). Ezekiel 2:10 lists this as the third term in a triad of mourning vocabulary, all describing the content of God's message of judgment. WOE AND ALAS en: and-woe | es: y-ay | fr: et-ceci | de: [והי] Ezek 2:10

הֵידָד H1959 N-ms (7×)

Shout, shouting, cheer; the loud cry of grape-treaders at harvest or the battle cry of an enemy.

A noun for a loud communal shout, originally the joyous cry raised by those treading grapes at harvest time. Isaiah 16:9-10 and Jeremiah 48:33 mourn the silencing of this vintage shout as a sign of devastation. Yet the same word also denotes the menacing war cry of an approaching enemy. Jeremiah 48:33 plays on this double meaning brilliantly: 'the shouting is no harvest-shouting'–the familiar sound of celebration has been replaced by the terrifying roar of invaders. In Jeremiah 25:30, Yahweh himself utters a hedad like that of grape-treaders against all the earth. German 'Jauchzen' and Spanish 'grito de jubilo' capture the exuberant quality of the harvest shout.

(7×) A shout or communal cry, encompassing both the joyous vintage shout of grape-treaders at harvest and the threatening war cry of an enemy. In the harvest sense, Isaiah 16:9-10 laments the cessation of the vintage-shout (hedad) in Moab's vineyards, and Jeremiah 48:33 uses a powerful wordplay: 'hedad hedad lo hedad'–the shouting is no vintage-shout but the cry of the foe. In Jeremiah 25:30, Yahweh raises a shout like grape-treaders against all inhabitants of the earth, blending harvest and judgment imagery. Jeremiah 51:14 uses it as a battle cry over Babylon. Spanish 'grito de jubilo' and 'grito de guerra' distinguish the two nuances; German 'Jauchzen' emphasizes the exuberant quality. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: a-shout, shout | es: el-grito-de-júbilo, grito-de-guerra, grito-de-júbilo | fr: acclamation | de: Jauchzen Isa 16:9; Isa 16:10; Jer 25:30; Jer 48:33

הוֹדָיוֹת H1960 N-fp (1×)

thanksgivings, songs of praise

Plural form referring to songs or acts of thanksgiving in temple worship. Nehemiah lists this among the liturgical responsibilities of the Levites who led Israel's worship after the return from exile. The term emphasizes the grateful response of a restored community praising God for deliverance.

(1×) Translations render this as 'thanksgivings' (English) or 'acciones de gracias' (Spanish), capturing the formal liturgical sense. French and German leave it untranslated, perhaps recognizing its technical usage. Nehemiah 12:8 identifies this as part of the Levites' musical ministry, specifically connected to leading congregational praise. THANKSGIVING AND GRATITUDE

en: the-thanksgivings | es: las-acciones-de-gracias | fr: [הידות] | de: [הידות] Neh 12:8

הָיָה H1961 V-Nifal-Perf-3fs (3575×)

To be, exist, become, come to pass; the foundational Hebrew verb of existence and state-change, serving as copula and narrative marker.

Perhaps the most fundamental verb in biblical Hebrew, hayah (הָיָה) carries the weight of existence itself. It functions as the copula ('was,' 'is,' 'will be'), marks narrative transitions with the iconic wayyehi ('and it came to pass'), and expresses transformative becoming — as when the dust of Egypt 'became' gnats (Exod 8:17). Its most theologically charged occurrence is God's self-revelation at the burning bush: 'ehyeh asher ehyeh — 'I AM WHO I AM' (Exod 3:14), where the multilingual translations (Spanish 'Ehyeh,' French 'JE SUIS,' German 'ich AM') show translators wrestling with the untranslatable divine Name.

1. be, exist, was (Qal copular/existential) (3504×) The copular and existential backbone of Hebrew narrative and discourse: 'to be, was, exist, there was.' This sense encompasses the verb as a linking word between subject and predicate, as a marker of existence, and as the formulaic wayyehi opening temporal clauses. It appears over 3,500 times, making it the workhorse of Hebrew syntax. The translation signatures are remarkably consistent across languages — Spanish 'y-fue,' French 'et-ce-fut,' German 'und-es-geschah' — all reflecting the narrative-sequential 'and it was/came to pass' formula (e.g., Gen 11:2, Gen 15:17). BEING AND EXISTENCE
en: and-it-was, and-was | es: Y-fue, y-fue, y-sucedió | fr: et-ce-fut, et-cela-était, et-fut | de: und-es-geschah, und-es-war, und-war Gen 11:2; Gen 12:11; Gen 15:17; Gen 19:29; Gen 24:30

2. become, come to be (Qal inchoative) (55×) The inchoative or transformative sense: 'to become, turn into, come to be,' marking a change of state rather than static existence. Distinguished from sense 1 by implying transition — Aaron's rod 'became' a serpent (Exod 7:12), a river 'became' four branches (Gen 2:10), Jacob confessing 'I have become' unworthy (Gen 32:10). The Arabic cognate ʾ ('to become') parallels this inchoative force. Spanish 'fui' and German 'bin-ich-geworden' capture the transformational aspect that English 'became' renders naturally. BEING AND EXISTENCE
en: I-have-become, I-have-been, I-was | es: Fuimos, era, fui | fr: Je-avoir-devenir, et-il-arriva, et-ils-devint | de: Krieg, bin-ich-geworden, ich-war Gen 2:10; Gen 32:10; Exod 7:12; Josh 24:32; Judg 1:30

3. ketiv/textual variant reading (7×) Ketiv/qere textual variants in the Masoretic tradition where the consonantal text (ketiv) preserves an alternate spelling of the verb. These are not a distinct semantic sense but a text-critical phenomenon, appearing at boundary descriptions in Joshua (15:4, 18:12, 18:14, 18:19, 19:29) where the written form differs from the prescribed reading. The bracketed glosses across languages — English '[and-was],' Spanish '[kethiv],' German '[ketiv]' — signal the scribal notation rather than a meaning distinction. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED
en: [and-was], [and-were], [ketiv] | es: [Y-será], [kethiv], [y-fueron] | fr: [cétiv], [et-étaient], [et-était] | de: [ketiv], [und-war], [und-waren] Josh 15:4; Josh 18:12; Josh 18:14; Josh 18:19; Josh 19:29

4. (5×) The theologically momentous divine self-declaration 'ehyeh (אֶהְיֶה) — 'I AM' or 'I WILL BE' — concentrated at the burning bush theophany of Exodus 3:14. The first-person imperfect form carries both present and future force, and translators across traditions struggle with its fullness: French renders 'JE SUIS' (I AM), German 'ich AM' (preserving the Hebrew), Spanish 'Ehyeh' (transliterating rather than translating). The remaining occurrences (1 Sam 18:18, Song 1:7) use the same form in humble self-questioning: 'Who am I that I should be...?' BEING AND EXISTENCE
en: I-AM, I-should-be, should-I-be | es: Ehyeh, habré-de-ser, sea | fr: JE-SUIS, je-devrait-être, serais-je | de: ich-AM, ich-sollte-sein, ich-werde-sein Exod 3:14; 1Sam 18:18; Song 1:7

5. (4×) A resultative-perfective nuance: 'has been, has occurred,' emphasizing the completed or unprecedented nature of an event. Used for singular, epochal moments — 'there has not been such a cry' in Egypt (Exod 11:6), 'has this thing been done?' regarding Solomon's coronation (1 Kgs 1:27), and the unparalleled wisdom and riches 'that has not been' before (1 Kgs 3:12–13). The English 'has been' and German 'ist-gewesen' capture this perfect-tense emphasis on the extraordinary quality of what has transpired. BEING AND EXISTENCE
en: has-been | es: fue-hecha, hubo | fr: a-été | de: hat-gewesen, ist-gewesen Exod 11:6; 1Kgs 1:27; 1Kgs 3:12; 1Kgs 3:13

הַיְדַ H1962 Conj-w / N-fsc / 1cs (2×)
calamity, disaster (Ketiv form, likely textual error for hawwah)
This word appears only in the Ketiv (written text) of Job 6:2, where the Qere (reading tradition) has 'hawwah' (calamity). Both forms mean destruction or disaster, and most scholars see the Ketiv as a scribal error for the expected word. Job is pleading for God to weigh his grief and calamity together in a balance—his bitter words are justified by overwhelming disaster. The textual variant doesn't change the meaning: Job's calamity is massive, warranting his anguished complaint.

(2×) The bracketed glosses indicate the Ketiv/Qere variants—the written and read forms of 'my calamity' in Job 6:2. Both occurrences in the verse are textual notes, not separate uses. Job asks, 'O that my grief were weighed, and my calamity laid in the balances together!' The weight metaphor emphasizes the crushing burden Job bears. Whether spelled one way or another, the word denotes the totality of Job's suffering, which in his view justifies his passionate lament. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY en: [and-my-calamity], and-my-calamity | es: (y-mi-calamidad), [y-mi-calamidad] | fr: et-mon-(והוֹתִי)-moi, et-mon-[והיתי]-moi | de: [(והוֹתִי)], [[והיתי]] Job 6:2

הֵיךְ H1963 Interrog (2×)
how, in what manner (interrogative adverb)
This Aramaic interrogative means 'how' or 'in what way.' First Chronicles 13:12 records David's fearful question after Uzzah's death: 'How can I bring the ark of God to me?' Daniel 10:17 uses it in a different context: the angelic visitor asks how Daniel, a mere servant, can speak with such a glorious being. In both cases, the word introduces a question about possibility or manner in situations that seem impossible or inappropriate.

(2×) The glosses ('how, cómo, comment') show this is an interrogative of manner. First Chronicles 13:12 expresses David's fear after judgment struck—'How can I bring the ark?'—questioning the possibility after witnessing God's holiness. Daniel 10:17 uses it in humility: 'How can this servant of my lord talk with this my lord?'—expressing unworthiness. Both passages use the question rhetorically, expressing felt impossibility in the face of divine holiness and glory. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: and-how, how | es: Y-cómo, cómo | fr: [הֵיךְ], et-comment? | de: [הֵיךְ], [והֵיךְ] 1Chr 13:12; Dan 10:17

הֵיכָל H1964 Conj-w / N-msc (80×)
Temple or palace — a grand edifice serving as God's sanctuary or a king's royal residence.
Borrowed from Sumerian 'e-gal' (great house), this word carries a dignified ambiguity: it can denote the sacred Temple of YHWH in Jerusalem — or His heavenly dwelling — as well as the splendid palace of an earthly king. When the boy Samuel sleeps in the heykal of the LORD (1 Sam 3:3), the word evokes holy mystery; when Ahab covets Naboth's vineyard beside the heykal of Jezreel (1 Kgs 21:1), it speaks of royal power. The multilingual evidence is revealing: Spanish and French consistently use 'templo/temple' for the sacred sense but shift to 'palacio/palace' for royal contexts, while German 'Tempel' covers both, reflecting the word's original architectural grandeur.

1. temple, sacred building (68×) The temple as a place of worship, especially the Temple of YHWH in Jerusalem or God's heavenly dwelling. Covers 68 of 80 occurrences, from the tabernacle at Shiloh where young Samuel ministers (1 Sam 1:9; 3:3) to David's cry heard 'in his temple' (2 Sam 22:7). Spanish 'el templo,' French 'le temple,' and German 'der Tempel' unanimously identify this sacred-building sense across nearly all translation languages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: temple, temple-of, the-temple | es: El-templo, el-templo, templo | fr: le-palais, le-temple, temple | de: Tempel, der-Tempel, der-Tempel- 1Sam 1:9; 1Sam 3:3; 2Sam 22:7; 1Kgs 6:3; 1Kgs 6:17

2. palace, royal residence (12×) A palace or royal residence — the grand architectural dwelling of a king or ruler, used of both Israelite and foreign courts. Seen in Ahab's palace beside Naboth's vineyard (1 Kgs 21:1) and Isaiah's prophecy that Hezekiah's sons will serve in the palace of Babylon (2 Kgs 20:18). Spanish shifts decisively to 'palacio' and French to 'palais,' while the Psalm 45 uses (vv. 8, 15) beautifully straddle both senses in their wedding-hymn imagery of royal splendor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: a-palace, and-the-palace, in-palace-of | es: en-el-palacio, en-el-palacio-de,

en-palacio-de | fr: dans-le-temple, dans-palace-de, dans-palais | de: Tempel, Tempel-, ein-Tempel 1Kgs 21:1; 2Kgs 20:18; Ps 45:8; Ps 45:15; Ps 144:12

הֵיכַל H1965 Prep-l / N-msc / 3ms (13×)

A grand edifice: either a temple (sacred sanctuary) or a palace (royal residence), from Akkadian ekallu.

An Aramaic noun borrowed from Akkadian ekallu ('great house'), carrying a productive ambiguity between sacred and royal architecture. In the book of Daniel, the same word shifts between Nebuchadnezzar's royal palace (Dan 4:4, 29; 5:5) and the Jerusalem temple whose vessels he plundered (Dan 5:2-3). Ezra similarly uses it for the temple being rebuilt (Ezra 5:14-15; 6:5) and for the royal court whose salt the officials eat (Ezra 4:14). The polysemy reflects the ancient Near Eastern reality that temples and palaces were architecturally and functionally intertwined as seats of divine and human authority.

1. temple, sanctuary (8×) Denotes the sacred temple building, whether the Jerusalem sanctuary or a foreign shrine. Ezra's memoirs use the emphatic form to refer to the temple vessels carried to Babylon (Ezra 5:14) and their intended restoration (Ezra 5:15; 6:5). Spanish 'el templo' and French 'le temple' consistently mark this sacred reading. Daniel 5:2-3 describes Belshazzar summoning the gold vessels 'from the temple' in Jerusalem, where the sacred context is unmistakable despite the banquet's profane setting. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-temple, temple, the-temple | es: al-templo, el-templo | fr: [בהיכלא], [להיכלא], le-temple | de: Tempel, [היכלא] Ezra 5:14; Ezra 5:15; Ezra 6:5

2. palace, royal residence (5×) Refers to the king's palace or royal residence as a grand secular structure. Daniel uses it for Nebuchadnezzar walking on the roof 'of the royal palace' in Babylon (Dan 4:29) and for his personal quarters (Dan 4:4, 'in my palace'). Spanish distinguishes 'del palacio' and 'el palacio' here, while French occasionally retains 'le temple' even for palace contexts, reflecting the word's inherent dual register. Ezra 4:14 ('the salt of the palace we eat') uses it metaphorically for royal patronage, where German and French leave the Aramaic form untranslated. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-my-palace, palace, palace-of | es: a-su-palacio, del-palacio, el-palacio | fr: le-temple, palais | de: Tempel, [בהיכלי], [היכל] Ezra 4:14; Dan 4:4; Dan 4:29; Dan 5:5; Dan 6:18

הֵילֵל H1966 N-ms (1×)

shining one, morning star — epithet for the king of Babylon

A poetic epithet meaning 'shining one,' used in Isaiah's taunt against Babylon's fallen king. The phrase 'shining one, son of dawn' employs astral imagery to mock the king's pretensions — once appearing as brilliant as the morning star (Venus), now fallen from heaven. This imagery influenced later interpretations about Satan's fall, though the original context clearly addresses Babylon's historical defeat.

(1×) Translations vary significantly: English 'shining one,' Spanish 'Lucero' (morning star/Lucifer), reflecting different interpretive traditions. The Assyrian parallel 'muštilil' similarly describes Venus as morning star. Isaiah 14:12 uses this stellar metaphor to portray the dramatic reversal of Babylon's arrogant king, from heavenly heights to Sheol's depths. SHINING AND ILLUMINATING en: shining-one | es: Lucero | fr: [הילל] | de: [הילל] Isa 14:12

הוֹמָם H1967 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Hemam — son of Seir the Horite, variant of Homam

A son of Seir the Horite listed in Genesis's genealogy of Edom's pre-Israelite inhabitants. This represents the same individual as Homam in 1 Chronicles 1:39, with the variant spelling reflecting different manuscript traditions. The Horites were the original inhabitants of Seir before Esau's descendants displaced them.

(1×) All translations preserve the proper name with conjunctive prefix ('and-Hemam'). The parallel in Chronicles reads 'Homam,' with the vowel difference likely representing dialectal variation or textual updating. Genesis 36:22 places this name within Lotan's genealogy, documenting Seir's descendants. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Hemam | es: y-Hemam | fr: et-Hemam | de: und-Hemam Gen 36:22

הֵימָן H1968 N-proper-ms (17×)

Heman — proper name meaning 'faithful,' a Levitical musician-sage and head of a temple music guild

A proper name meaning 'faithful' or 'trustworthy,' from the root 'aman. The primary figure is the Levitical singer Heman son of Joel, grandson of Samuel, whom David appointed as head of one of three temple music guilds alongside Asaph and Ethan/Jeduthun (1 Chr 6:33; 15:17-19; 16:41-42; 25:1-6). He is called 'the king's seer' (1 Chr 25:5) and credited with Psalm 88's superscription as 'Heman the Ezrahite.' First Kings 4:31 names him among the sages whose wisdom Solomon surpassed, there seemingly identified as a 'son of Mahol' and son of Zerah of Judah (1 Chr 2:6) — possibly the same figure or a namesake. The Aramaic cognate mehêman ('trustworthy') confirms the name's meaning.

Heman (Levitical musician/sage) (17×) The proper name Heman (הֵימָן, 'faithful'), referring primarily to the Kohathite Levite appointed as chief musician under David, head of one of three temple worship guilds alongside Asaph and Ethan (1 Chr 15:17, 19; 25:1-6). Cross-linguistic renderings are consistent (eng: Heman, spa: Hemán, fra: Héman, deu: Heman). Also identified as 'the Ezrahite' in the superscription of Psalm 88 and listed among sages surpassed by Solomon (1 Kgs 4:31). His fourteen sons were appointed as temple musicians (1 Chr 25:4-5), underscoring his dynastic musical legacy. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Heiman, Heman, and-Heman | es: Heman, Hemán, Para-Hemán | fr: Héman, et-Heman, et-Héman | de: Heman, und-Heman, von-Heman 1Kgs 4:31; 1Chr 2:6; 1Chr 6:33; 1Chr 15:17; 1Chr 15:19

הִין H1969 Art / N-msc (22×)

Hin; a Hebrew unit of liquid measure (~6 liters), used in sacrificial regulations for oil, wine, and water.

A unit of liquid volume equal to approximately six liters, or one-sixth of a bath. The hin appears exclusively in cultic legislation, measuring the quantities of oil, wine, and water required for various offerings and sacrifices. Exodus prescribes specific hin-fractions for the anointing oil (Exod 30:24) and daily libations (Exod 29:40), while Ezekiel's temple vision uses the hin in its reformed sacrificial system (Ezek 45–46). Leviticus 19:36 commands 'a just hin,' making it also a standard of commercial honesty. The term likely derives from an Egyptian loanword, though the Hebrew measure was significantly larger than its Egyptian counterpart.

hin (unit of liquid measure) (22×) A unit of liquid measurement equaling roughly 6 liters (one-sixth of a bath), used exclusively in ritual and sacrificial contexts. Fractional amounts—a quarter-hin, a third-hin, a half-hin—specify precise quantities of oil and wine for grain offerings and libations (Exod 29:40; Num 15:4–10). Leviticus 19:36 extends the hin into the realm of just weights and measures. Ezekiel's temple vision prescribes the hin for future offerings (Ezek 45:24; 46:5–14). The Egyptian-derived term appears across all multilingual glosses with minimal adaptation—hin in Spanish, French, and German alike. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: hin, the-hin | es: el-hin, hin | fr: hin, le-hin, mesure | de: [ההין], [הין], der-hin Exod 29:40; Exod 30:24; Lev 19:36; Lev 23:13

הָכַר H1970 V-Hifil-Imperf-2mp (1×)

you wrong, deal harshly with — semantically uncertain verb

A verb of disputed meaning appearing only in Job's complaint to his friends. The context suggests dealing harshly or wronging someone, though ancient versions and scholars disagree on the precise sense. Job accuses his companions of some repeated offense against him, either causing him wonder through their bizarre accusations or treating him unjustly through their harsh words.

(1×) Translation evidence shows deep uncertainty: English 'wrong,' Spanish attempts a descriptive phrase about harsh treatment, while French and German preserve the untranslated Hebrew. Some manuscripts read an alternate form. Job 19:3 uses this in Job's protest against his friends' treatment, part of his larger complaint about their failure to comfort him properly. SEEING AND PERCEIVING
en: you-wrong | es: de-tratarme-duramente- | fr: תהכרו | de: [תהכרו] Job 19:3

הַכָּרָה H1971 N-fsc (1×)
expression, look — facial appearance or regard
A rare noun describing either facial expression or the act of regarding persons. Isaiah uses this term in condemning Judah's brazen sin — even the look on their faces testifies against them, showing no shame. The word's exact sense remains debated: some see it as 'expression' or 'countenance,' others as 'partiality' or 'regarding of persons.'

(1×) Translations diverge significantly: English 'expression of,' Spanish 'expresión de,' suggesting facial appearance, while ancient versions like Targum and Peshitta understood 'partiality' or 'regarding persons.' Isaiah 3:9 uses this to describe how Judah's public sin is visible even in their faces — they parade their wickedness like Sodom without concealment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: expression-of | es: La-expresión-de | fr: [הכרת] | de: [הכרת] Isa 3:9

הָלְאָ H1972 Conj-w (1×)
the one driven far away, removed far off
A participial form describing someone or something driven far away. Micah uses this in a promise of restoration — God will gather both the lame and those driven far off into a remnant. The image conveys exile and dispersion, with God's people scattered like sheep removed from their pasture, yet destined for regathering.

(1×) Translations capture the sense of distance and removal: English 'driven far,' Spanish 'alejada' (distanced). Some scholars propose emending the text to 'diseased' or 'exhausted' based on the parallel with 'lame.' Micah 4:7 pairs this with other images of weakness and vulnerability, promising that even the most distant exiles will become part of God's restored kingdom. DISTANCE AND FARNESS
en: and-the-one-driven-far | es: y-a-la-alejada | fr: et-ôter | de: [והנהלאה] Mic 4:7

הָלְאָה H1973 Adv (16×)
Onward, further, beyond — an adverb of spatial or temporal extension from a reference point
An adverb expressing directional or temporal continuation outward from a given point. Spatially, it can mean 'get back!' as in the Sodomites' rebuff of Lot (Gen 19:9), 'scatter yonder' when Moses commands the fire pans dispersed (Num 16:37), or 'beyond' a location such as Damascus (Amos 5:27) or Migdal-eder (Gen 35:21). Temporally, combined with age markers, it sets lower bounds for service — 'from eight days onward' for sacrificial animals (Lev 22:27) or 'from such-and-such an age onward' for Levitical duty (Num 8:24-25; 1 Chr 23:24, 27). French 'au-dela' and Spanish 'mas alla de' both capture the core sense of extending past a boundary.

onward, further, beyond (16×) An adverb meaning 'onward, further, beyond,' expressing spatial or temporal extension from a reference point. Spatially it indicates direction away — 'make way!' (Gen 19:9), 'scatter yonder' (Num 16:37), 'beyond Damascus' (Amos 5:27), 'beyond the tower of the flock' (Gen 35:21). Temporally it sets open-ended thresholds: 'from eight days onward' for sacrificial eligibility (Lev 22:27), 'from twenty-five years old and onward' for Levitical service (Num 8:24). Always paired with directional prepositions (le-, me-, wa-), it never stands alone but anchors extension from a named baseline. DISTANCE AND FARNESS
en: and-beyond, and-further, and-onward | es: allá, lejos, más-allá-de | fr: [והלאה], [מהלאה], au-delà | de: [והלאה], [מהלאה], beiseite Gen 19:9; Gen 35:21; Lev 22:27; Num 15:23; Num 16:37

הִלּוּל H1974 N-mp (2×)
rejoicing, praise, festive celebration
This plural noun refers to songs of praise or festive celebrations. Leviticus 19:24 requires that fourth-year fruit be 'holy, for praises to the Lord'—dedicated to God in thanksgiving. Judges 9:27 describes a vintage celebration: the people 'held a festival in their god's temple' (literally 'made rejoicings/praises'). The word captures the jubilant, festive dimension of worship—whether the regulated thanksgiving of Leviticus or the pagan revelry that Judges critiques.

(2×) The glosses ('praises, alabanzas, fiestas / feasts') reflect both religious and festive dimensions. Leviticus 19:24 makes the fourth-year harvest 'praises/holy praises to Yahweh,' a consecrated thanksgiving. Judges 9:27 describes the Shechemites making 'rejoicings' at the grape harvest, though directed toward Baal. The term bridges sacred and celebratory—formal praise to God in Leviticus, drunken festivity (with religious overtones) in Judges. Both involve joy expressed in community celebration. PRAISE AND RENOWN
en: praises | es: alabanzas, fiestas | fr: praises | de: praises Lev 19:24; Judg 9:27

הָלָז H1975 Prep-l / Pro-ms (7×)
An archaic demonstrative pronoun meaning 'this' or 'that,' a rare synonym of zeh/hazzeh used with definite nouns.
A rare and archaic demonstrative pronoun functioning as a synonym for the common Hebrew zeh ('this') or hazzeh ('this one'). It appears only seven times in the Hebrew Bible, always modifying a noun already marked with the definite article. Its etymology connects to the Arabic alladhi ('the one who/which'), combining the definite article with the demonstrative element. Context determines whether the referent is proximal ('this') or distal ('that'): Judges 6:20 points to a nearby rock, while 1 Samuel 14:1 points across to the far side of a pass.

1. this (proximal demonstrative) (4×) Proximal demonstrative: 'this, this one here.' Used to indicate a nearby or immediately present referent. In Judges 6:20, the angel commands Gideon to place the offering on 'this rock' (hassela hallaz). In 1 Samuel 17:26, David asks about 'this uncircumcised Philistine.' Spanish 'este/esta,' French 'ce/celui-ci,' and Hindi equivalents confirm the near-pointing force. Daniel 8:16 and Zechariah 2:4 extend this into visionary discourse, pointing to figures present in the prophetic scene. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS
en: that, the-this, to-this-one | es: a-este, este, la-esta | fr: ce, celui-ci, le-ceci | de: [הלז], [להלז], der-dies Judg 6:20; 1Sam 17:26; Dan 8:16; Zech 2:4

2. that (distal demonstrative) (3×) Distal demonstrative: 'that, that one yonder.' Used to indicate a more remote referent. In 1 Samuel 14:1, Jonathan proposes crossing to 'that side' (me-ever hallaz) of the Philistine garrison. In 2 Kings 4:25, the Shunammite woman is identified as she approaches from a distance. Spanish 'aquel/aquella,' Arabic 'dhalika,' and Korean 'jeo' all confirm the far-pointing deixis, distinguishing this sense from the proximal usage. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS
en: the-that | es: aquella, el-aquel | fr: le-que | de: der-dass 1Sam 14:1; 2Kgs 4:25; 2Kgs 23:17

הַלָּזֶה H1976 Pro-ms (2×)
this (demonstrative), referring to someone or something present or just mentioned
This demonstrative pronoun means 'this' and is an alternative form of the more common 'zeh.' Genesis 24:65 uses it when Rebekah asks about 'this man' walking in the field (Isaac). Genesis 37:19 employs it contemptuously when Joseph's brothers see him: 'Here comes this dreamer!' The masculine and feminine forms appear, and the demonstrative often carries an emotional tone—whether Rebekah's curiosity or the brothers' scorn. It points to someone present, making them the focus of attention.

(2×) The glosses ('this, este, ce') indicate the demonstrative function, with variants showing gender agreement. Rebekah's question 'Who is this man?' (Gen 24:65) expresses curiosity about the approaching figure. The brothers' sneer 'this dreamer comes' (Gen 37:19) drips with contempt. The demonstrative brings someone into sharp focus, often with emotional coloring. It's a pointing word, directing attention to the person at hand, whether with wonder, disdain, or other feeling. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: the-this, this | es: el-aquel, este | fr: ce, le-ce | de: der-da, jener Gen 24:65; Gen 37:19

הַלּוֹחֵשׁ H1977 Pro-fs (1×)

this (feminine demonstrative) — archaic or dialectal form

An unusual feminine demonstrative pronoun meaning 'this.' Ezekiel uses this archaic or dialectal form when describing how the nations will recognize the restored land of Israel. The form appears to be an emphatic or poetic variant of the standard demonstrative, adding rhetorical weight to the prophet's description.

(1×) Translations render this as 'this' (feminine): English 'the this,' Spanish 'la esta.' The form is grammatically feminine agreeing with 'land.' Ezekiel 36:35 uses it in God's promise that the nations will marvel at the transformation — 'this land that was desolate has become like the garden of Eden.' DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: the-this | es: la-esta | fr: [הלזו] | de: [הלזו] Ezek 36:35

הֲלִיךְ H1978 N-mpc / 1cs (1×)

steps, footsteps — used figuratively for one's life-path

A plural noun meaning steps or footsteps, used figuratively in Job's description of his former prosperity. The image of steps bathed in cream (or butter) expresses extraordinary abundance and wealth — every step Job took led through rich blessing. This hyperbolic language captures the memory of days when God's favor was manifest in every aspect of his life.

(1×) All translations preserve the possessive form 'my steps.' The Hebrew uses a first-person suffix on the plural noun. Job 29:6 employs this vivid image alongside other metaphors of abundance — rock pouring out oil, God's lamp shining overhead — to describe the dramatic contrast between his former prosperity and present suffering. STEPS AND FOOTSTEPS

en: my-steps | es: mis-pasos | fr: mon-הליכי-moi | de: [הליכי] Job 29:6

הֲלִיכָה H1979 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3mp (6×)

Going, procession, way; ranging from a sacred march to habitual conduct to a traveling caravan.

Halikhah captures movement in its fullest range, from the solemn march of God into His sanctuary to the everyday ways of a capable household manager. In Psalm 68:24, the processions of God are witnessed entering the holy place, a theophanic spectacle. Proverbs 31:27 uses the plural for the 'goings' or daily management of a household, while Habakkuk 3:6 speaks of God's eternal 'ways.' In Job 6:19, the caravans of Tema search desperately for water, and the word takes on a concrete, collective sense of travelers on the move.

1. procession, march (3×) A procession or sacred march, especially the theophanic progress of God into the sanctuary. Psalm 68:24 uses the plural twice: 'They have seen your processions, O God, the processions of my God, my King, into the holy place.' Spanish procesiones and Korean haengryeol ('procession') confirm the ceremonial, public-spectacle quality. Nahum 2:5 extends this to the stumbling march of warriors. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: (in-their-going), Your-processions, the-processions-of | es: (en-andar-suyo), procesiones-de, tus-procesiones | fr: cortège, le-marche | de: [(בהליכתם)], dein-processions, der-processions-von Ps 68:24; Nah 2:5

2. ways, habits, conduct (2×) Ways, habits, or conduct in an abstract sense. Proverbs 31:27 describes the valiant woman watching over the halikhot of her household; Habakkuk 3:6 speaks of God's everlasting ways or paths. Spanish caminos ('paths, ways') and the abstract metaphorical extension show the word moving from physical movement to habitual behavior and divine governance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-ways-of, ways-of | es: caminos-de, los-caminos-de- | fr: cortège, הליכות | de: [הליכות] Prov 31:27; Hab 3:6

3. caravan, traveling company (1×) A caravan or traveling company, a group of people journeying together. Job 6:19 pairs the caravans of Tema with the traveling companies of Sheba, both seeking water in the wilderness. Spanish viajeros ('travelers') captures the collective human sense. Arabic rukban ('riders, caravan') provides a cognate semantic parallel for this concrete, commercial meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: travelers-of | es: viajeros-de | fr: הליכת | de: [הליכת] Job 6:19

הָלַךְ H1980 V-Qal-Imp-ms / 3fs (513×)

To go, walk, travel; metaphorically to conduct oneself; in Hitpael to walk about; in Piel to walk habitually Halak is the primary Hebrew verb of locomotion, covering everything from a simple journey to a lifetime's moral direction. In the Qal it means 'to go, travel, proceed,' but Hebrew thought frequently extended walking into the moral realm – to walk in God's statutes, to walk uprightly, to walk in wickedness. The Hitpael stem adds a reflexive, iterative dimension: walking about, traversing, or walking intimately with God as Enoch and Noah did. The Piel intensifies the habitual quality, depicting sustained patterns of movement or conduct. With 513 occurrences across narrative, law, poetry, and prophecy, halak anchors Hebrew discourse about both physical journeys and the journey of faith.

1. to go, travel (Qal) (283×) Basic physical motion in the Qal: going, traveling, proceeding from one place to another. Arabic ذهب (dhahaba, 'go') and Spanish fue/partió map directly. Covers all Qal conjugations across narrative contexts – Abraham journeying south (Gen 12:9), Laban departing (Gen 31:19), Balaam going to Balak (Num 24:1). CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: had-gone, he-went, went | es: fue, partió | fr: alla, avait-allé, il-alla | de: er-ging, ging, hatte-gegangen Gen 12:9; Gen 26:26; Gen 31:19; Gen 32:1; Num 24:1

2. to walk in conduct (Qal) (132×) Metaphorical walking in the Qal denoting moral conduct or lifestyle – walking in God's ways, in truth, or in sin. Arabic سلك (salaka, 'follow a path') captures the ethical metaphor, as does German wandeln. Central to Deuteronomic theology and Psalmic piety; see Gen 48:15 and the dry-ground motif (Exod 14:29). CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: he-walked, he-walks, he-who-walks | es: El-que-anda, anduvo, caminó | fr: aller, il-est-allé, il-marcha | de: der-ging, er-wandelte, ging Gen 48:15; Exod 14:29; Exod 15:19; Lev 11:20; Lev 11:21

3. to walk about, traverse (Hitpael) (63×) Hitpael stem expressing reflexive or iterative walking: walking about, going to and fro, or walking in intimate companionship. Enoch 'walked with God' (Gen 5:22, 24), Noah likewise (Gen 6:9), and God himself walks in the garden (Gen 3:8). Arabic تمشّى (tamashsha, 'stroll about') and Korean 거닐다 reflect this intensified movement. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: I-walked, and-I-will-walk, and-from-walking | es: Hemos-recorrido, Y-andaré, andan | fr: et-aller, et-je-fera-marcher, je-marcha | de: der-wandelnd, ging, ich-wandelte Gen 3:8; Gen 5:22; Gen 5:24; Gen 6:9; Gen 13:17

4. to walk habitually (Piel) (30×) Piel stem conveying intensive or habitual walking – sustained, repeated, or characteristic going about. Applied to mourning processions (Ps 38:6), the destitute wandering for bread (Job 24:10), and ongoing patterns of behavior (Job 31:5). The intensive force distinguishes these from single-event Qal motion, marking a lifestyle or repeated action. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: I-go-about, I-have-walked, I-walk | es: Andaré, andan, andará | fr: aller, et-aller, et-marcha | de: der-ging, ging, sie-gingen 1Kgs 21:27; Job 24:10; Job 30:28; Job 31:5; Ps 38:6

5. to go away, depart (Qal) (4×) Qal sense emphasizing departure, going away, or withdrawal – leaving a place with focus on separation rather than destination. Spanish se va ('goes away') and the departing imagery in Hosea's similes capture this nuance. See Hos 6:4 and 13:3 where faithfulness 'goes away' like morning dew, and Job 16:6 where pain does not depart. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: and-he-left, departing, departs | es: que-pasa, se-va, se-va? | fr: aller, et-il-marchera, il-est-allé | de: ging, und-ging Job 16:6; Ps 34:1; Hos 6:4; Hos 13:3

6. (1×) A rare use expressing the sense of being gone, fading away, or declining – the speaker's existence waning like a lengthening shadow. Attested at Ps 109:23 ('I am gone like a shadow when it lengthens'), where Spanish me voy and French marcher approximate the existential fading. The sense borders on 'perish,' recalling the cognate Arabic هلك (halaka, 'to perish'). CONDUCT AND WALKING
en: I-am-gone | es: me-voy | fr: marcher | de: ging Ps 109:23

הֲלַךְ H1981 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mp (3×)
walk, go about; Aramaic Haphel/Pael
An Aramaic verb describing movement and conduct. It appears in Daniel's vision of the fiery furnace, where four men 'walk' unharmed in the flames (Dan 3:25), and in the account of Nebuchadnezzar 'walking' on his palace roof (Dan 4:29) and later 'walking in pride' (Dan 4:37). The Spanish andan, paseando ('strolling, walking about') and the French/German glosses all emphasize literal or metaphorical movement. The verb can denote physical locomotion or ethical conduct ('walk in pride').

(3×) The verb appears in literal (Dan 3:25, 4:29) and metaphorical (Dan 4:37) walking contexts. The men in the furnace 'walk about' miraculously unharmed; Nebuchadnezzar 'walks' on his roof and later 'walks in pride.' Cross-lingual glosses capture both physical movement (walking, paseando) and ethical comportment (walk in pride). CONDUCT AND WALKING
en: walk, walking | es: andan, caminando, paseando | fr: [מהלך], [מהלכין] | de: [מהלך], [מהלכין] Dan 3:25; Dan 4:29; Dan 4:37

הֲלָךְ H1982 N-msc (2×)
traveler, wayfarer; or possibly 'flowing' (of honey)
This word likely means traveler or wayfarer. In 2 Samuel 12:4, Nathan's parable describes 'a traveler' arriving at the rich man's house, prompting the theft of the poor man's lamb. The meaning in 1 Samuel 14:26 is disputed—traditionally 'flowing of honey,' but many emend the text. As 'traveler,' it emphasizes someone passing through, a guest whose arrival creates obligation. Nathan's parable uses this figure to spring the trap on David: the traveler represents the occasion, not the excuse, for taking what belongs to another.

(2×) The glosses show uncertainty: 'traveler' (2 Sam 12:4) vs. 'flowing of honey' (1 Sam 14:26). In Nathan's parable, 'a traveler came to the rich man,' creating the scenario where hospitality demands provision —but the rich man steals instead of giving from his own flock. The word conveys movement, journey, someone in transit. Many scholars emend 1 Samuel 14:26 to 'bees' instead of this word, but the Samuel 12:4 meaning (traveler) is clear and essential to the parable's impact. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-traveler, flowing-of | es: flujo-de, viajero | fr: coulant-de, un-traveler | de: ein-traveler, flowing-von 1Sam 14:26; 2Sam 12:4

הֶלֶךְ H1983 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)
toll, custom, tax; Aramaic
An Aramaic fiscal term denoting taxes or tolls imposed by imperial authority. It appears in Ezra's correspondence about Persian revenue concerns: opponents warn that Jerusalem will not pay 'toll, custom, or tribute' (Ezra 4:13, 20), and Artaxerxes exempts temple personnel from such levies (Ezra 7:24). The Spanish y-peaje, French contribution, and German Toll-related glosses all reflect taxation vocabulary. This is administrative language from the Achaemenid bureaucracy.

(3×) A fiscal term for tolls or taxes in three Ezra passages (Ezra 4:13, 20; 7:24). The context is Persian imperial revenue and exemptions for temple workers. Multilingual glosses converge on taxation semantics (toll, peaje, contribution), reflecting the administrative register of Aramaic correspondence under Persian rule. TRIBUTE AND TAX
en: and-custom, and-toll | es: y-peaje | fr: et-contribution | de: und-ging Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:20; Ezra 7:24

הָלַל H1984a Prep-b / V-Hifil-Inf / 3ms (4×)
To shine, flash forth light; used of celestial bodies and God's favor illuminating a person.
This rare verb (halal I, distinct from the common halal II 'to praise') describes the shining or flashing forth of light. Job recalls the days when God's lamp 'shone' upon his head (Job 29:3), a vivid image of divine favor. In the Hiphil, it describes the radiance of heavenly bodies — the sun flashing forth (Job 31:26), the sneezing of Leviathan casting light (Job 41:18), and the stars that will cease to give their light in judgment (Isa 13:10). Spanish 'brilló' and 'darán' capture both the past glow and the prophetic darkness.

(4×) To shine or flash forth light, said of luminaries and divine favor. In the Qal (Job 29:3), it pictures God's lamp shining on Job's head as a figure of blessing. In the Hiphil, it describes the radiance of sun, stars, and even Leviathan's sneezing (Job 31:26; 41:18; Isa 13:10). The cognate Akkadian 'elelu' (be bright) and Arabic 'halla' (begin to shine, of the new moon) confirm the root meaning. French and German translations left some forms untranslated, reflecting the word's rarity. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: flash-forth, it-shone, when-shone | es: Cuando-brilló, brillaba, darán | fr: [יהלו], dans-louer-lui, louer | de: [בהלו], [יהל], [יהלו] Job 29:3; Job 31:26; Job 41:18; Isa 13:10

הָלַל H1984b V-Piel-Perf-3cp / 2ms (151×)
To praise, laud (God); boast or glory in; be praised/praiseworthy; be mad or act foolishly
The root behind the most famous word in worship — Hallelujah ('praise Yah!'). In the Piel stem it commands and celebrates doxological praise directed at God, pervading the Psalter from Psalm 22:23 to the closing Hallel psalms (113-118). The Hitpael reflexive turns the verb inward: to boast or glory in something, whether foolishly in oneself (Ps 52:1) or rightly in the LORD (Ps 34:2, 1 Chr 16:10). A striking homographic overlap with הלל I yields the sense 'be mad, rage' — Ecclesiastes 7:7 warns that oppression 'makes a wise man mad.' Spanish 'alabad' and French 'louez' consistently render the praise imperative, while Arabic cognate ʾ (shout) preserves the root's original sense of crying aloud.

1. praise, laud (Piel) (111×) The active Piel praise sense — the liturgical heart of the Hebrew Bible. This covers the imperative הַלְלוּ יָהּ (Hallelujah), along with all Piel perfects, imperfects, infinitives, and participles directing praise toward God or commending a person. Spanish 'alabad' and French 'louez' consistently render the plural imperative. The Hallel psalms (113-118) concentrate this usage, while 1 Chronicles 23:5 records 4,000 Levites appointed to הלל the LORD. Psalm 104:35 and 105:45 frame entire compositions with this doxological cry. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: praise | es: Alabad, Alabad-, Alelu | fr: louez | de: lobte 1Chr 23:5; Ps 22:23; Ps 104:35; Ps 105:45; Ps 106:48

2. boast, glory (Hitpael) (22×) Hitpael reflexive boasting or glorying — turning the vocal exuberance inward. Psalm 34:2 models the positive form: 'my soul shall boast in the LORD.' But 1 Kings 20:11 warns: 'let not the one who puts on armor boast like one who takes it off.' Psalm 49:6 and 52:1 describe those who boast in wealth and evil. Spanish 'gloriaos' and the construct 'el que se gloría' capture the reflexive self-directed quality. Jeremiah 9:24 channels this into the famous injunction to glory in knowing the LORD — the proper object of all human boasting. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: and-will-boast, and-will-glory, boast | es: Gloriaos, el-que-se-gloría, para-gloriarme | fr: boast, et-louer, le-louer | de: [יתהלל], [מתהלל], [תתהלל] 1Kgs 20:11; 1Chr 16:10; Ps 34:2; Ps 49:6; Ps 52:1

3. be praised, praiseworthy (Pual) (11×) Pual and Hitpael tolerativum with passive force: being praised, being worthy of praise. The Pual participle מְהֻלָּל yields the classic epithet 'greatly to be praised' (2 Sam 22:4, Ps 18:3, Ps 48:1). Spanish 'alabado' and 'digno de alabanza' render this well. This passive form establishes God's praiseworthiness as an objective attribute rather than merely a subjective response — 1 Chronicles 16:25 declares the LORD 'greatly to be praised' as a theological claim. Psalm 78:63 applies the passive to maidens who were not 'praised' (celebrated in wedding songs). PRAISE AND BOASTING en: and-greatly-praised, and-greatly-to-be-praised, and-praised | es: Alabado, alabado, digno-de-alabanza | fr: de-louer, et-de-louer, et-louer | de: [יהלל], [תתהלל], lobte 2Sam 22:4; 1Chr 16:25; Ps 18:3; Ps 48:1; Ps 78:63

4. be mad, act foolishly (5×) Homographic overlap with הלל I: to be mad, rage, act insanely, or cause madness. This is morphologically distinct but phonologically identical in some stems. Ecclesiastes 2:2 and 7:7 use forms meaning madness or making mad (Spanish 'enloquece'). Nahum 2:4 describes chariots raging madly in the streets. Psalm 102:8 speaks of enemies who 'rage' against the psalmist. The Assyrian cognate alālu (shout for joy) and Arabic ʾ (shout) suggest both praise and madness share the primal meaning of 'breaking out in loud cries.' PRAISE AND BOASTING en: and-rage, madness, makes-mad | es: enloquece, enloquecen, locura | fr: de-louer, et-louer, louer | de: [יהולל], [יתהוללו], [מהולל] Ps 102:8; Eccl 2:2; Eccl 7:7; Jer 46:9; Nah 2:4

5. boast, commend (Piel) (2×) A narrow Piel usage where the verb means to boast or commend rather than offer doxological praise. Psalm 10:3 says the wicked 'boasts' of his heart's desire; Psalm 44:8 declares 'in God we have boasted all day long.' Spanish 'alaba' and 'nos gloriamos' capture the shift from worship to self-assertion. Distinguished from sense 2 (Hitpael) by stem morphology — these are Piel forms whose objects and context push the meaning from liturgical praise toward personal commendation or boasting. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: boasts, we-have-boasted | es: alaba, nos-gloriamos | fr: le-louer, louer | de: lobte Ps 10:3; Ps 44:8

הָלַל H1984c V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (10×)

To act madly or feign madness; to boast arrogantly; (Piel) to make foolish, drive to madness.

Often confused with its famous homonym meaning 'to praise' (the root of hallelujah), this second halal concerns the darker territory of madness and arrogance. David 'feigned madness' before King Achish, scratching on doors and letting saliva run down his beard (1 Sam 21:14). Jeremiah warns that the nations will 'go mad' after drinking God's cup of wrath (Jer 25:16; 50:38; 51:7). In the Psalms, the 'boastful' or 'arrogant' are those who exalt themselves against God (Ps 5:5; 73:3; 75:4). The Piel causative appears when God 'makes fools' of diviners (Isa 44:25) and strips counselors of sense (Job 12:17). Spanish enloquecen ('they go mad') and arrogantes ('the arrogant') neatly split the two dominant senses.

1. act madly, feign madness (Hitpael/Qal) (4×) Acting insanely or feigning madness, in either genuine derangement or deliberate pretense. David 'changed his behavior' and 'acted madly' before Achish (1 Sam 21:14), while Jeremiah predicts nations will 'go mad' from drinking God's cup of fury (Jer 25:16; 50:38; 51:7). Spanish enloquecen and se hizo el loco distinguish involuntary and voluntary madness respectively. MADNESS INSANITY
en: and-act-mad, and-he-acted-madly, they-act-madly | es: enloquecen, y-enloquecerán, y-se-hizo-el-loco | fr: [והתהללו], [יתהללו], et-il-agit-madly | de: [והתהללו], [יתהללו], und-er-handelte-madly 1Sam 21:14; Jer 25:16; Jer 50:38; Jer 51:7

2. boast, be arrogant (Qal) (4×) Boasting or behaving arrogantly, exalting oneself with hollow self-confidence. The Psalms warn against 'the boastful' who stand before God (Ps 5:5), and the psalmist rebukes: 'Do not boast' (Ps 75:4). Spanish arrogantes and insensatos ('the senseless') capture the moral dimension of pride verging on folly. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: boast, the-arrogant, the-boastful | es: a-los-arrogantes, de-los-arrogantes, los-insensatos | fr: dans-louer, le-louer, louer | de: boast, der-arrogant, der-boastful Ps 5:5; Ps 73:3; Ps 75:4

3. make foolish, drive mad (Piel) (2×) Piel causative: to make someone foolish or drive them to madness. God 'makes fools' of diviners by overturning their predictions (Isa 44:25) and leads counselors away 'made foolish' (Job 12:17). Spanish enloquece ('he drives mad') preserves the causative force, while the shift from self-generated boasting to divinely imposed folly marks this as a distinct stem and sense. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: He-makes-fools, he-makes-foolish | es: enloquece, enloquece. | fr: [יהולל], louer | de: [יהולל] Job 12:17; Isa 44:25

הִלֵּל H1985 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hillel, father of the judge Abdon, from Pirathon

Hillel was the father of Abdon, one of Israel's judges who led for eight years (Judges 12:13-15). The name means 'he has praised,' from the same root as hallelujah. Hillel is called 'the Pirathonite,' indicating his hometown of Pirathon in Ephraim. Beyond his role as Abdon's father, Scripture tells us nothing else about him. His name, celebrating praise, was later made famous by the great Rabbi Hillel in the centuries before Christ.

(2×) The transliterations ('Hillel, Hilel') preserve this personal name across translations. Judges 12:13 introduces Abdon as 'son of Hillel the Pirathonite,' repeated in 12:15 at Abdon's death. The genealogical note serves to identify the judge's lineage and hometown. The name's meaning ('he has praised') reflects the worship-centered naming practice of Israel, where even a minor figure's name becomes a declaration that God is worthy of praise. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hillel | es: Hilel | fr: Hillel | de: Hillel Judg 12:13; Judg 12:15

הָלַם H1986 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp / Pn (9×)

To strike, hammer, or beat; by extension, to overcome or stagger, as one struck down by wine or force.

A forceful verb evoking the heavy blow of a hammer or mallet. Its most vivid appearance is in the Song of Deborah, where Jael hammers a tent peg through Sisera's skull (Judg 5:26), and in the same poem the hooves of galloping horses pound the ground (Judg 5:22). The Phoenician cognate mahlam confirms the root's association with hammering. Beyond literal striking, the word extends to the reeling stagger of those overcome by wine (Isa 28:1) or the surging movement of a crowd (1 Sam 14:16), where the blow is metaphorical but the impact is just as disorienting.

1. strike, beat, hammer (7×) The primary sense of delivering a physical blow – striking, beating, or hammering with force. Jael hammers the tent peg through Sisera's temple (Judg 5:26, paired with machaq and machats for devastating effect), horse hooves pound the battlefield (Judg 5:22), and the psalmist welcomes a righteous man's corrective blow (Ps 141:5). Psalm 74:6 describes the smashing of carved panels with axes. The Spanish golpear and the consistent translation evidence point to violent, directed impact. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-she-hammered, let-strike-me, pounded | es: Que-me-golpee-, golpeador, golpean | fr: [והולם], [הלמו], et-elle-hammered | de: [והולם], [הלמו], [הלמוני] Judg 5:22; Judg 5:26; Ps 74:6; Ps 141:5; Prov 23:35

2. overcome, stagger (metaphorical) (2×) An extended metaphorical sense of being overcome, staggered, or beaten down – not by a physical hammer but by an overwhelming force. Isaiah 28:1 uses the Qal passive participle halumei to describe Ephraim's leaders as 'smitten by wine,' reeling drunkards whose judgment is impaired. In 1 Samuel 14:16, the verb captures the swaying, surging movement of a disintegrating army. The shift from tool-on-object to force-on-person marks a meaningful metaphorical extension from hammering to overwhelming. STRIKING AND REFERENCE en: and-swaying, with-wine | es: vencidos-de, y-acá | fr: [הלומי], et-vacillant | de: [הלומי], und-swaying 1Sam 14:16; Isa 28:1

הֵלֶם H1987 N-proper-ms (1×)

Helem — personal name of an Asherite, possibly meaning 'strength'

A personal name from Asher's tribal genealogy. The name may derive from a root meaning 'strength' or 'health,' though its etymology remains uncertain. Chronicles preserves this individual as part of Asher's detailed family records, documenting the tribal structure of northern Israel.

(1×) All translations preserve the proper name 'Helem' without variation. The name appears without additional identifying information, simply listed among the sons of Heber in Asher's lineage. 1 Chronicles 7:35 places this name within the genealogical framework that establishes Asher's clan structure. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Helem | es: Helem | fr: [הלם] | de: [הלם] 1Chr 7:35

הֲלֹם H1988 Adv (11×)

Hither, here — adverb of place indicating motion toward or presence at the speaker's location

The adverb הֲלֹם (halom) means 'hither' or 'here,' directing attention toward the speaker's location. God tells Moses at the burning bush, 'Do not come near hither' (Exod 3:5), establishing early the word's association with sacred proximity. Ruth is invited to 'come hither' and eat with the reapers (Ruth 2:14), and the Danites ask the young Levite, 'Who brought you hither?' (Judg 18:3). In the phrase עַד הֲלֹם ('until hither'), David marvels at how far God has brought him (2 Sam 7:18). The word has an Arabic cognate ('come here!'), confirming its deictic force. Spanish 'acá/aquí,' French 'ici.'

(11×) An adverb of place meaning 'hither' (indicating motion toward) or 'here' (indicating present location). Used in divine commands to halt approach (Exod 3:5), invitations to draw near (Ruth 2:14; 1 Sam 14:36, 38), questions about how someone arrived (Judg 18:3; 20:7), and the temporal-figurative phrase 'until hither' meaning 'thus far' (2 Sam 7:18; 1 Chr 17:16). Also appears as 'hither and thither' to indicate scattered motion (1 Sam 14:16). Cognate with Arabic ('come!'). HERE AND HITHER

en: here | es: aquí, aquí?, hacia-aquí | fr: [הלם], ici, le-ici | de: [הלם], hier Gen 16:13; Exod 3:5; Judg 18:3; Judg 20:7; Ruth 2:14

הַלְמוּת H1989 Prep-l / N-fsc (1×)

hammer, workman's mallet

A hammer or mallet used by craftsmen, appearing in Deborah's song celebrating Jael's victory. The term specifies a workman's tool, not a weapon of war, which makes Jael's act even more striking — she uses common household implements (tent peg and workman's hammer) to defeat Sisera. The detail emphasizes both the improvised nature of her weapon and God's power to deliver through unlikely means.

(1×) Translations consistently render this as 'hammer' or 'mallet,' with Spanish adding 'martillo de' (hammer of) to capture the construct relationship with 'workmen.' The prepositional prefix 'to/for' marks this as 'to/for the hammer of workmen.' Judges 5:26 uses this in Deborah's poetic celebration of how Jael struck Sisera's temple with an ordinary tool. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-the-hammer-of | es: a-martillo-de | fr: à-le-marteau-de | de: zu-der-hammer-von Judg 5:26

הָם H1990 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

Ham — uncertain place name, possibly ancient Rabbath-Ammon

A place name of uncertain location where the Zuzim were defeated during the campaign of the eastern kings. The site has not been definitively identified, with suggestions ranging from an otherwise unknown city to an ancient name for Rabbath-Ammon. The text itself shows some uncertainty, as ancient versions offer variant readings.

(1×) All major translations preserve 'Ham' as a place name with the locative preposition 'in.' The Septuagint and other ancient versions show textual variation, suggesting early uncertainty about this location. Genesis 14:5 lists Ham as one of several battle sites in the trans-Jordanian campaign, providing geographical context for Abraham's later rescue of Lot. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Ham | es: en-Ham | fr: dans-Cham | de: in-Ham Gen 14:5

הֹם H1991 Prep-m / Adv / 3mp (1×)

from their tumult/wealth — textually corrupt or dubious reading

A highly uncertain term appearing in Ezekiel's oracle of judgment. Scholars debate whether this refers to 'tumult,' 'wealth,' 'moaning,' or represents textual corruption — possibly a scribal duplication of the preceding word. The context describes total destruction where nothing of value remains, but the precise meaning of this term remains elusive.

(1×) Translation evidence shows radical uncertainty: English 'from their tumult,' Spanish 'de tumulto de ellos,' French 'abondance' (wealth), German leaves it untranslated. The form combines a preposition, a noun, and a pronominal suffix, but many scholars suspect textual error. Ezekiel 7:11 uses this in a litany of loss — 'none of them, none of their multitude, none of their wealth.' PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: from-tumult-of-them | es: de-tumulto-de-ellos | fr: abondance | de: [מהמהם] Ezek 7:11

הֶמָּה H1992 Prep / Pro-3mp (827×)

They, them, those; 3rd-person plural pronoun with prepositional forms (to/for/from/like/in them)

The third-person masculine plural pronoun hemmah (or hem) serves as one of Hebrew's fundamental discourse building blocks, pointing back to previously mentioned groups of people or things. Beyond its independent subject use ('they'), it combines with prepositions to express a full range of relationships — dative ('to them'), separative ('from them'), comparative ('like them'), and locative ('in them'). With the article it becomes the demonstrative 'those,' especially in the formulaic phrase 'in those days.' An occasional archaic feminine singular variant survives in poetic texts like Job and Psalms.

1. they (independent pronoun) (497×) The independent pronoun functioning as subject or predicate: 'they' or 'they are.' With 497 occurrences, this is the unmarked default. All target languages render it with their standard third-plural pronoun — Spanish 'ellos,' French 'ils,' German 'sie.' Gen 3:7 ('and they knew') and Gen 6:4 ('they were the mighty ones') typify narrative subject use. The form alternates freely between hemmah and hem with no semantic difference, only rhythmic preference. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: are-they, they | es: ellos | fr: ils, sont-ils | de: gehören, gehören-sie, sie Gen 3:7; Gen 6:4; Gen 7:14; Gen 14:24; Gen 25:16

2. to/for them (dative) (146×) Combined with lamed to express the dative or benefactive: 'to them,' 'for them,' 'belonging to them.' At 146 occurrences this is the most common prepositional form. Spanish 'a ellos' and 'para ellos,' French 'à eux,' and German 'zu ihnen' all preserve the directional-benefactive range. Lev 4:20 and Deut 7:5 illustrate commands directed toward or on behalf of groups. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: for-them, to-them | es: a-ellos, con-ellos, para-ellos | fr: zu-ils, à-eux | de: zu-ihnen, zu-sie Lev 4:20; Num 18:24; Num 26:62; Deut 3:20; Deut 7:5

3. from/of them (separative) (99×) With min expressing source, separation, or partitive meaning: 'from them,' 'of them,' 'some of them.' French 'd'eux' and Spanish 'de ellos' capture both the ablative and partitive senses. Lev 11:22 ('of them you may eat') shows the partitive, while Gen 11:6 ('nothing will be withheld from them') shows separative force. The 99 occurrences span legal, narrative, and prophetic registers. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: by-them, from-them, of-them | es: de-ellos | fr: d'eux, de-eux, par-eux | de: durch-ihnen, für-sie, von-ihnen Gen 11:6; Lev 11:22; Lev 11:32; Lev 11:33; Lev 13:58

4. those (demonstrative) (58×) With the definite article functioning as a demonstrative: 'those.' Especially common in the temporal formula bayyamim hahem ('in those days'), which appears scores of times across Kings, Jeremiah, and Zechariah. Spanish 'aquellos,' French 'ces,' and German 'jene' all shift to their demonstrative forms. Gen 6:4 and Exod 2:11 show this pointing function anchoring narrative time references. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: the-those | es: aquellas, aquellos, esos | fr: le-ces | de: der-jene, jenen Gen 6:4; Exod 2:11; Exod 2:23; Num 9:7; Num 14:38

5. for themselves (reflexive) (16×) Lamed plus the pronoun in reflexive or self-benefactive sense: 'for themselves.' Josh 8:27 and 11:14 describe Israel taking spoil 'for themselves,' while 1 Kgs 14:23 condemns those who built high places 'for themselves.' French 'pour eux-mêmes' and German 'für sich selbst' explicitly mark the reflexive, whereas Spanish 'para sí' uses the dedicated reflexive pronoun, highlighting how languages differ in marking self-reference. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-for-themselves, for-themselves, to-themselves | es: para-ellos, para-sí, sobre-ellos | fr: et-zu-ils, pour-eux-mêmes, zu-ils | de: fuer-sich-selbst, ihnen, und-zu-sie Josh 8:27; Josh 11:14; 1Sam 3:13; 1Kgs 14:23; 2Chr 35:14

6. like/as them (comparative) (6×) With kaph expressing comparison: 'like them,' 'as them.' Only 6 occurrences, but contextually vivid. The doubled reference in 2 Sam 24:3 / 1 Chr 21:3 ('a hundred times as many as them') and Eccl 9:12 ('like them' caught in a net) use comparison to intensify. Spanish 'como ellos,' French 'comme eux,' and German 'wie sie' all deploy their standard comparative particles, showing cross-linguistic regularity. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-as-them, as-them, like-them | es: como-ellas, como-ellos, y-como-ellos | fr: comme-eux, comme-eux-eux, comme-ils | de: und-wie-ihnen, wie-ihnen, wie-sie 2Sam 24:3; 1Chr 21:3; 2Chr 9:11; Eccl 9:12

7. in/with them (locative-instrumental) (3×) With beth expressing location, instrument, or means: 'in them,' 'with them,' 'by them.' The rarest prepositional combination at just 3 occurrences. Exod 30:4 (rings 'in them' for carrying poles) is locative, while Exod 36:1 (skilled 'by them') is instrumental. German distinguishes 'in ihnen' from 'mit ihnen,' Spanish uses 'en ellos' vs. 'con ellas,' reflecting how each language parses the beth's semantic load differently. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: by-them, in-them, with-them | es: con-ellas, en-ellos, por-ellas | fr: avec-eux, en-eux, ils | de: Vieh, in-ihnen, mit-ihnen Exod 30:4; Exod 36:1; Hab 1:16

8. it/she (3fs variant) (2×) An archaic or scribal variant where the masculine plural form stands for feminine singular 'she' or 'it.' Job 31:11 and Ps 73:16 preserve this anomaly, possibly reflecting dialectal or early orthographic convention. Spanish renders '(ella)' and German 'sie' (ambiguous for gender), while the ketiv-qere apparatus flags the discrepancy. This marginal use illuminates the fluid boundaries of Hebrew pronominal gender in poetic texts. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: (she), [ketiv:it-was] | es: (ella), [es] | fr: eux-elle, ils | de: sie Job 31:11; Ps 73:16

הָמָה H1993 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf.Cohort-1cs (34×)

To murmur, roar, growl, moan, or be in turmoil; used of crashing seas, grieving hearts, noisy crowds, and inner agitation.

A richly onomatopoeic verb that echoes with the rumble of the sea, the moan of the grieving, and the clamor of the crowd. When Psalm 46:3 declares that the waters 'roar,' Spanish uses 'bramar' (to bellow) and French 'mugir' (to low like cattle), each language reaching for its own animal sound to capture the turbulence. In Proverbs, the same root paints the portrait of the 'loud woman' — Spanish 'alborotada' (boisterous) — while in the Psalms it turns inward to describe the soul's own restless disquiet. The Arabic cognate hamhama (to murmur) confirms this root's deep association with low, resonant, unsettled sound.

1. roar, rage (of seas/nations) (13×) The roaring or raging of seas, waters, and nations in tumult. Psalm 46:3,6 uses it for both literal waters and peoples in uproar. Isaiah 17:12 draws the parallel explicitly: nations rage like the roaring of many waters. Spanish 'bramar' and French 'mugir' both reach for animal-sound metaphors (bellowing, lowing) to render this deep, rolling turbulence. ROAR TURMOIL GROAN

en: and-roar, and-will-roar, it-roars | es: brama, como-estruendo-de, ruge | fr: et-mugir, gronder, le-gronder | de: [המה], brüllen, laermen Ps 39:6; Ps 46:3; Ps 46:6; Ps 83:2; Isa 17:12

2. moan, groan, howl in grief (10×) Moaning, groaning, or howling in grief and distress. In Psalm 55:17, the psalmist moans and groans in prayer; in Isaiah 16:11, the prophet's inward parts 'moan like a lyre' for Moab. Isaiah 59:11 compares Israel's mourning to the growling of bears — Spanish 'rugimos' (we roar/growl) — showing how grief and animal sound blur in this sense. ROAR TURMOIL GROAN

en: We-growl, and-I-moan, and-moan | es: Rugimos, Se-agita, aullán | fr: et-gronder, gronder, ils | de: der-Tod, laermen, sie Ps 55:17; Ps 59:6; Ps 59:14; Ps 77:3; Isa 16:11

3. be loud, clamorous, noisy (6×) Being boisterous, loud, or clamorous, especially of persons and noisy places. Proverbs deploys this root three times for disruptive loudness: wine is a 'mocker' and beer a 'brawler' (Prov 20:1), and the 'loud woman' of Prov 7:11 and 9:13 is 'homiyyah.' Spanish 'alborotada' (uproarious) conveys the social disruption. In 1 Kings 1:41, the city is 'in an uproar' at Adonijah's feast. ROAR TURMOIL GROAN

en: brawler, is-in-uproar, is-loud | es: alborotada, alborotador, alborotadora | fr: est-dans-uproar, faire-du-bruit, mugir | de: [המיה], [המיות], ist-in-uproar 1Kgs 1:41; Prov 1:21; Prov 7:11; Prov 9:13; Prov 20:1

4. be in turmoil, be disquieted (5×) Inner turmoil, agitation, or disquiet of the soul. The threefold refrain of Psalms 42-43 asks: 'Why are you in turmoil, O my soul?' (Ps 42:5, 42:11, 43:5). Spanish 'te turbas' (you are troubled) and the reflexive tone reveal that the same root used for crashing waves now describes emotional upheaval. Jeremiah 31:20 and Song 5:4 extend this to God's own compassion stirring within Him. ROAR TURMOIL GROAN

en: and-why-are-you-in-turmoil, are-stirred, are-you-in-turmoil | es: se-conmovieron, se-conmueven, te-turbas | fr: et-gronder, gronder, mugir | de: [המה], laermen, sind-du-in-turmoil Ps 42:5; Ps 42:11; Ps 43:5; Song 5:4; Jer 31:20

הֵמּוֹ H1994 Pro-3mp (12×)

himmo – archaic third person masculine plural pronoun ('them, they') found in Ezra and Daniel

The pronoun himmo is an archaic variant of the standard Hebrew hem/hemma, serving as a third person masculine plural pronoun in both nominative ('they') and accusative ('them') functions. All twelve occurrences fall within the Aramaic-influenced books of Ezra and Daniel, where older pronominal forms persisted in official administrative and visionary prose. The form carries no semantic distinction from the standard pronoun; its interest is purely morphological and dialectal. Cross-lingual renderings are uniform: Spanish ellos, French eux, German sie, Arabic hum.

them, they (third person masculine plural pronoun) (12×) Third person masculine plural pronoun used in both nominative ('they') and accusative ('them') syntactic positions. This archaic form himmo is a variant of the standard hem/hemma, confined to the late biblical books of Ezra and Daniel. The nominative and accusative functions represent syntactic case roles rather than distinct lexical senses. All target languages render it identically – English them/they, Spanish ellos, Korean geudeul – confirming its monosemous pronominal character. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: them, they | es: a-ellos, ellos, somos | fr: [המון], eux | de: [המו], sie Ezra 4:10; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 5:5; Ezra 5:11; Ezra 5:12

הָמוֹן H1995a N-msc (84×)

Sound, roar, tumult; a crowd or multitude of people; abundance or wealth of possessions

A richly layered noun whose senses move from sound to the thing producing the sound. At its base lies the idea of a rumbling noise — the roar of rushing water (Ps 65:7), the thunder of an approaching army (Jer 47:3), or the clamor of a festive crowd. From there it naturally extends to the crowd itself — a multitude, throng, or army en masse — and then further to abundance in the material sense: wealth, riches, plenty. Genesis 17:4-5 plays on this semantic range memorably when God renames Abram to Abraham, 'father of a multitude (הֲמוֹן) of nations.' Arabic غَوْر ('throng') and Swahili umati ('crowd') track the people sense, while Spanish abundancia and Hindi बाहुल्य capture the quantity sense.

1. multitude, crowd, throng (58×) A multitude, crowd, or throng of people — the most frequent sense, covering national populations, armies, gathered assemblies, or masses. Used of the Aramean host (1 Kgs 20:13, 28), the remaining populace of Jerusalem (2 Kgs

7:13), and prophetically of Gog's vast horde (Ezek 39:11, 15). Arabic ثَرْوَة ('throng'), Swahili umati ('crowd'), and Korean 무리 ('multitude') consistently confirm the collective-human reference. Often appears in construct chains: הֲמוֹן גּוֹג ('the multitude of Gog'), הֲמוֹן מִצְרַיִם ('the multitude of Egypt'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-roar-of, abundance-of, her-multitude | es: estruendo-de, la-multitud, la-multitud-de | fr: [ההמון], multitude | de: Menge, der-sie 1Sam 14:16; 2Sam 6:19; 1Kgs 20:13; 1Kgs 20:28; 2Kgs 7:13

2. tumult, uproar, commotion (12×) Tumult, uproar, or commotion — the noisy disturbance of a crowd, battle, or social upheaval. When Eli asks 'What is the noise of this tumult?' at the capture of the ark (1 Sam 4:14), or when Joab perceives the uproar subsiding (1 Sam 14:19), the emphasis is on chaotic sound rather than the number of people. French tumulte, Spanish tumulto/alboroto, and German Tumult all track this disorder-and-noise focus. Job 39:7 uses it of the din of a city the wild donkey scorns. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-multitude, and-the-tumult, at-the-tumult-of | es: El-tumulto-de, de-multitud-de, el-alboroto | fr: et-le-tumult, le-tumult, multitude | de: Menge, [להמון], der-tumult 1Sam 4:14; 1Sam 14:19; 2Sam 18:29; Job 39:7; Isa 13:4

3. abundance, wealth, plenty (8×) Abundance, wealth, or plenty — a large quantity of material possessions or resources rather than people. Psalm 37:16 contrasts 'the little that the righteous has' with 'the abundance (הֲמוֹן) of many wicked,' and 1 Chronicles 29:16 speaks of the 'abundance' of materials prepared for the temple. God's renaming of Abraham (Gen 17:4-5) bridges the human and material senses: 'father of a multitude of nations.' Spanish abundancia, Hindi बाहुल्य ('profusion'), and Arabic ثَرْوَة ('abundance') confirm the quantity-of-things reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-multitude-of, by-the-multitude-of, multitude-of | es: la-abundancia, multitud-de, por-multitud-de | fr: [וההמון], [המון], dans-multitude | de: Menge, [בהמון], als-Überfluss-von Gen 17:4; Gen 17:5; 1Chr 29:16; 2Chr 11:23; Ps 37:16

4. noise, sound, roar (6×) A noise, sound, or roar — the raw auditory phenomenon, especially of rushing water, rumbling forces, or resonant clamor. Elijah hears 'the sound of abundance of rain' (1 Kgs 18:41), the psalmist praises God who 'stills the roaring of the seas, the roaring of their waves' (Ps 65:7), and Jeremiah describes 'the noise of the stamping of hooves' (Jer 47:3). Spanish estrépito/ruido ('din, noise'), French bruit, and Arabic ثَرْوَة ('clamor') all confirm the purely auditory sense. Ezekiel 26:13 poignantly declares that God will silence 'the sound of your harps.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-at-their-noise, and-the-tumult-of, noise-of | es: el-estrépito-de, estruendo-de, ruido-de | fr: et-le-multitude, et-multitude, multitude | de: Menge, [המון], roar-von 1Kgs 18:41; Ps 65:7; Isa 31:4; Jer 47:3; Ezek 26:13

הָמַן H1995b N-msc / 2mp (1×)

your raging, turmoil — possibly corrupt text for 'your rebellion'

A noun meaning turmoil or raging, though the text is widely considered corrupt. The context in Ezekiel suggests God's accusation against Israel for some negative behavior. Many scholars propose emending to 'your rebellion' based on ancient versions and contextual fit, which would make better sense of God's indictment. The reading remains uncertain.

(1×) Translations attempt various renderings: English 'turmoil of you,' Spanish 'tumulto de ustedes,' French 'bruit' (noise). The Septuagint, Peshitta, and Aquila suggest alternate readings. Ezekiel 5:7 uses this in God's charge against Israel, explaining why judgment must come. Many modern scholars prefer reading 'you rebelled' rather than 'your turmoil.' TUMULT AND UPROAR en: turmoil-of-you | es: tumulto-de-ustedes | fr: bruit | de: [המנכם] Ezek 5:7

הָמוֹן H1996 N-proper (4×)

Hamon-Gog, a prophetic place name meaning 'multitude of Gog'; the burial valley in Ezekiel's end-times vision.

A proper noun derived from the common noun hamon ('multitude, tumult'), used as a place name in Ezekiel's prophecy of Gog's defeat. The Valley of Hamon-Gog ('Multitude of Gog') is where the vast enemy hordes will be buried, and a city called Hamonah will stand nearby as a memorial. Both Spanish 'multitud de' and French 'multitude' preserve the etymological transparency of the name. Ezekiel deliberately chose this name so that the geography itself would proclaim God's victory over the overwhelming enemy.

(4×) Hamon-Gog — the prophetic place name for the burial valley of Gog's armies (Ezek 39:11, 15). The name is a construct phrase meaning 'multitude of Gog,' and its repeated use in the passage emphasizes the sheer scale of the defeated enemy. The Spanish and French glosses ('multitud de Gog,' 'multitude Gog') transparently render the semantic content, while German leaves the Hebrew untranslated. The place name functions as a theological marker: the site of burial testifies permanently to the overthrow of the nations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Gog, Multitude-of | es: Gog, multitud-de | fr: Gog, multitude | de: Gog, sie Ezek 39:11; Ezek 39:15

הֲמוֹנָה H1997 N-proper-fs (1×)

Hamonah — prophetic place name meaning 'multitude', Gog's burial city

A symbolic place name meaning 'multitude' or 'horde,' designating the city to be founded near Gog's burial site. Ezekiel's vision describes a future battle where God defeats Gog, and the site becomes memorialized by a city named for the multitude buried there. The name itself serves as a monument to God's victory over Israel's enemies.

(1×) Translations preserve the proper name 'Hamonah,' though its symbolic meaning ('multitude') connects to the context of massive burial. The text itself is considered textually difficult by some scholars. Ezekiel 39:16 uses this name to mark the transformation of a battlefield into a memorial, with the very name testifying to the magnitude of God's judgment on Gog. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hamonah | es: Hamona | fr: foule | de: [המונה] Ezek 39:16

הֲמִיָּה H1998 N-fsc (1×)

sound, music — specifically of stringed instruments

A noun denoting sound or music, particularly that produced by stringed instruments like harps. Isaiah uses this in his taunt against Babylon's fallen king, describing how the sound of his harps has descended to Sheol along with his pride. The term emphasizes the cessation of royal celebration and luxury, replaced by the silence of death.

(1×) Translations render this as 'sound of' (English, Spanish 'sonido de'), indicating the music produced by instruments. The construct form connects directly with 'your harps.' Isaiah 14:11 employs this as part of a mocking lament — everything associated with Babylon's king, including his festive music, has been brought down to the grave beneath him. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: sound-of | es: sonido-de | fr: [המית] | de: [המית] Isa 14:11

הֲמֻלָּה H1999 N-fs (2×)

tumult, roaring sound, loud rushing noise

This word denotes a loud, roaring sound or tumultuous noise. Jeremiah 11:16 uses it to describe 'the sound of a great tumult' accompanying fire consuming a tree (metaphor for God's judgment on Judah). Ezekiel 1:24 employs it for the sound of the living creatures' wings in his vision—'like the sound of a tumult, like the sound of an army camp.' In both cases, the word evokes overwhelming, perhaps chaotic sound—whether judgment's roar or heavenly power's thunder.

(2×) The glosses ('tumult, tumulto') capture loud, confused sound. Jeremiah 11:16 combines 'sound of tumult' with fire imagery as God's judgment breaks like a storm on Israel. Ezekiel 1:24 piles up comparisons: the wing-sound is 'like many waters, like the voice of Shaddai, like tumult, like an army camp'—the prophet strains language to convey the overwhelming auditory experience of the vision. The word conveys not just volume but the disordered roar of many sounds merged. TUMULT AND UPROAR en: a-tumult, tumult | es: tumulto | fr: [המולה], tumulte | de: [המולה], [המלה] Jer 11:16; Ezek 1:24

הָמַם H2000 V-Qal-Perf-3ms / 3mp (16×)

To confuse, rout, or throw into panic (especially enemies in battle under divine judgment); also to drive or thresh noisily.
A verb of violent disruption, used almost exclusively for God's terrifying intervention against enemy armies. When Yahweh 'hamam'-ed the Egyptians at the Red Sea (Exod 14:24) or the Canaanites at Gibeon (Josh 10:10), the word captures not mere confusion but a heaven-sent panic that shatters any capacity to fight. Spanish renders it 'turbó' and 'derrotó' (routed), capturing the military devastation. A single occurrence in Isaiah 28:28 preserves the word's older, concrete sense of driving a threshing wheel noisily over grain, hinting at the physical commotion behind the metaphor of divine rout.

1. confuse, rout, throw into panic (15×) To throw into confusion, discomfit, or rout an opposing force, nearly always with God as subject. The panic is supernatural and total: at the Red Sea (Exod 14:24), at Gibeon (Josh 10:10), and at Mizpah (1 Sam 7:10), Yahweh shatters the enemy's ability to organize resistance. Spanish 'turbó'/'derrotó' and English 'confused'/'discomfited' together convey the blend of psychological terror and military collapse. PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: (he-confused-me), [k], [ketiv:he-confused-me] | es: (y-los-turbó), Y-derrotó, Y-los-confundió | fr: [(הממני)], [[הממנו]], [k] | de: [(המני)], [[המנו]], [k] Exod 14:24; Exod 23:27; Deut 2:15; Deut 7:23; Josh 10:10

2. drive, push, thresh (1×) To drive or push forcefully in a concrete, mechanical sense, as in driving a threshing wheel over grain (Isa 28:28). This sole occurrence preserves the root's physical, noisy-motion core. Spanish 'empuja' (pushes) highlights the brute physicality, distinct from the abstract panic of the dominant sense. TUMULT AND UPROAR en: he-threshes-it | es: y-empuja | fr: [והמם] | de: [והמם] Isa 28:28

הָמָן H2001 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (54×)

Haman — the Agagite official who plotted the destruction of the Jews in the Book of Esther Haman son of Hammedatha the Agagite is the chief antagonist of the Book of Esther, a high-ranking Persian court official whose pride and hatred for Mordecai escalated into a genocidal decree against all Jews in the empire. His 54 occurrences are confined entirely to Esther, tracing his arc from promotion (Esth 3:1) to the casting of lots (pur) for the date of destruction, through his humiliation at Esther's banquet, and finally to his execution on the very gallows he prepared for Mordecai (Esth 7:10). The etymology remains debated — possibly connected to the Elamite divine name Humban. The name is uniformly transliterated across languages: Spanish 'Aman,' French 'Haman,' German 'Haman.'

Haman (proper name, Persian official) (54×) The proper name Haman (Hebrew haman), referring exclusively to Haman the Agagite, the antagonist of the Esther narrative who obtained a royal decree to annihilate the Jewish people (Esth 3:8-11) and was ultimately hanged on his own gallows (Esth 7:10). All 54 occurrences appear within the Book of Esther and refer to this single individual across all syntactic forms — nominative, prepositional, and conjunctive. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Haman | es: Amán | fr: Haman | de: Haman Esth 3:1; Esth 3:2; Esth 3:4; Esth 3:5

הַמְנִיכָא H2002 Conj-w / N-msd (6×)

Chain or necklace; an Aramaic loanword from Greek, referring to the gold chain of honor bestowed at the Babylonian court.
An Aramaic noun for a chain or necklace, appearing exclusively in Daniel 5 in connection with the rewards promised and given to whoever can read the writing on the wall. The word hamnika is a loanword ultimately from Greek maniakes (a collar or torque), reflecting the cosmopolitan vocabulary of the Persian-period court. Belshazzar offers a gold chain (along with purple robes and the rank of third ruler) as the prize for interpreting the inscription. Spanish 'collar' and French 'collier' both highlight that this is a neck-chain – a mark of royal favor rather than a mere ornament.

(qere:and chain) (6×) A chain or necklace of gold, specifically the honorary neck-chain bestowed as a mark of royal distinction in the Babylonian court. All six occurrences appear in Daniel 5:7, 16, and 29, where Belshazzar promises and eventually awards the chain to Daniel for reading the handwriting on the wall. The word is a loanword from Greek maniakes (torque/collar), attested also in Talmudic Aramaic and Syriac. Spanish 'collar' and French 'collier' rightly capture the sense of a ceremonial neck ornament signifying rank and royal favor. CHAIN ORNAMENT en: (qere:and-chain), [ketiv:and-chain] | es: (y-el-collar), [y-el-collar] | fr: et-collier | de: [והמונכא], [והמניכא], [והמניכא] Dan 5:7; Dan 5:16; Dan 5:29

חֻמָּס H2003 N-mp (1×)

brushwood, kindling — dry twigs for burning
A plural noun referring to brushwood or dry twigs suitable for kindling fire. Isaiah uses this image in a prayer asking God to manifest His presence with such power that it would be like fire consuming dry brush. The term captures the idea of easily combustible material, emphasizing how quickly and thoroughly God's presence could overwhelm opposition.

(1×) Translations consistently render this as 'brushwood' (English) or 'ramillas' (Spanish, small branches). The context makes clear this refers to fuel for fire. Isaiah 64:2 (English 64:1) employs this simile asking God to reveal Himself so that nations would tremble, comparing His manifestation to fire setting brushwood ablaze. MELT DISSOLVE en: brushwood | es: ramillas | fr: [המסים] | de: [המסים] Isa 64:2

הֵן H2004 Prep-b / Pro-3fp (13×)

Third-person feminine plural pronoun 'them' (hen), appearing only with prefixed prepositions: bahen, mehen, kahen
The third-person feminine plural pronoun hen, which in Biblical Hebrew surfaces only when governed by a prefixed preposition — bahen ('in/among/with them'), mehen ('from/of them'), and kahen ('like them'). It never appears as an independent subject pronoun in the biblical corpus, unlike its masculine counterpart hem. The referents range widely: the cities from which Lot was rescued (Gen 19:29), Rachel's children for whom she labored (Gen 30:26), the tabernacle's libation vessels (Exod 25:29; 37:16), and censers offered with unauthorized fire (Lev 10:1). German glosses interestingly show Priester ('priest') for some occurrences, reflecting confusion with the homograph kohen.

them (3rd person feminine plural pronoun) (13×) A bound feminine plural pronoun referring to previously mentioned feminine nouns, always appearing with a prefixed preposition. With beth it marks instrumentality or location ('in/with them,' Exod 25:29; Lev 10:1), with min it marks separation or comparison ('from/than them,' Gen 19:29; Gen 30:26), and with kaph it marks similarity ('like them'). The pronoun is purely functional with no lexical content of its own. The cross-linguistic evidence — spa con-ellas, fra avec-eux, deu in-ihnen — consistently renders the prepositional phrase rather than the pronoun alone, confirming its bound grammatical nature. PRONOUNS AND MIXED en: for-them, in-them, like-them | es: así, con-ellas, con-ellos | fr: [כהן], [מהן], avec-eux | de: Priester, [מהן], in-ihnen Gen 19:29; Gen 30:26; Exod 25:29; Exod 37:16; Lev 10:1

הֵן H2005 Interjection (100×)

Behold, lo! A demonstrative interjection drawing attention to a fact or situation; rarely 'whether, if.'
Hen is a forceful presentative particle that calls the listener to attention: 'Look! See! Behold!' Less widely used than its near-synonym hinneh, hen tends to appear in prose where it introduces a known fact upon which a conclusion or action must be based (Gen 3:22, 'Behold, the man has become like one of us'). It is especially common in the Pentateuch and in the speeches of Job, where it has a more argumentative, logical flavor than hinneh. Spanish 'he aqui,' French 'voici,' and German 'siehe' all serve as presentative markers, though none quite captures hen's particular nuance of 'given this fact, therefore...' In a single rare instance (Jer 2:10), hen functions as a conditional particle meaning 'whether.'

1. behold, lo (presentative interjection) (99×) Presentative interjection meaning 'behold, lo, see!' drawing attention to a fact or dramatic revelation. Used 99 of 100 times, it introduces statements upon which action or conclusion depends (Gen 3:22; 15:3; 27:11). Especially frequent in Pentateuchal prose and Job's dialogues. Spanish 'he aqui,' French 'voici,' and German 'siehe' all function as attention-focusing discourse markers, though hen carries a distinctive logical-argumentative tone. BEHOLD (PARTICLE)

en: behold | es: He-aquí, he-aquí | fr: voici | de: siehe, siehe- Gen 3:22; Gen 11:6; Gen 15:3; Gen 19:34; Gen 27:11

2. whether, if (conditional particle) (1×) Rare conditional or interrogative use functioning as 'whether, if,' introducing an indirect question rather than a presentative statement. Attested only in Jeremiah 2:10, where the prophet challenges Israel to investigate whether any nation has changed its gods. Spanish 'si' and English 'whether' capture this unique conditional sense, while French 'voici' and German 'siehe' level the distinction in their translations. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: whether | es: si | fr: voici | de: siehe Jer 2:10

הֵן H2006a Conj-w / Conj (15×)

If, whether; or (in paired constructions) — Aramaic conditional conjunction

The Aramaic conjunction הֵן serves as the standard conditional particle in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel, equivalent to Hebrew אִם. It introduces conditional clauses — 'if the king is willing' (Ezra 5:17), 'if you do not tell me the dream' (Dan 2:5) — and with לָא forms the negated conditional 'if not.' When doubled (... הֵן ... הֵן), it creates a disjunctive pair meaning 'whether ... or,' as in Ezra 7:26 listing possible punishments. Though small and functional, it is a key marker of the Aramaic linguistic stratum in the Hebrew Bible.

1. if (12×) The conditional conjunction 'if,' introducing protasis clauses in Aramaic discourse. With 12 occurrences, this is the default use, appearing throughout the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra. In Dan 2:5-9, Nebuchadnezzar threatens his wise men with הֵן לָא ('if not'), and in Dan 3:15-18, the three young men respond with a conditional of faith: הֵן ('if') our God is able to deliver us... הֵן לָא ('if not'), we still will not serve your gods. In Ezra 4:13, 16 and 5:17, it introduces administrative conditions in royal correspondence. Multilingual glosses — 'si,' 'wenn,' 'if' — uniformly confirm the conditional reading. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: and-if, if, if- | es: Si, Y-si, si | fr: et-si, si, voici | de: und-wenn, wenn Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:16; Ezra 5:17; Dan 2:5

2. or (3×) The disjunctive conjunction 'or, whether,' used in the paired construction הֵן ... הֵן meaning 'whether ... or.' This appears 3 times, all in Ezra 7:26, where King Artaxerxes decrees punishment on lawbreakers: 'whether (הֵן) death, or (הֵן) banishment, or confiscation, or imprisonment.' The repetition creates a list of alternatives, parallel to the Hebrew אִם ... אִם construction. Spanish 'sea' and English 'or/whether' reflect this disjunctive function, distinct from the conditional 'if' of sense 1. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: or, whether | es: sea | fr: voici | de: wenn Ezra 7:26

לְהֵן H2006b Conj (3×)

therefore, perhaps; Aramaic inferential/conditional conjunction

An Aramaic conjunction marking logical inference or tentative condition. In Daniel, it introduces royal commands ('therefore tell me the dream,' Dan 2:6, 9) and advice ('therefore, O king, accept my counsel,' Dan 4:27). BDB notes a debate whether it always means 'therefore' or sometimes 'only/perhaps.' The Spanish por tanto, tal vez and French si, German deshalb reflect both inferential and conditional nuances. The word signals rhetorical transition and reasoning.

(3×) Functions as a logical connector in Aramaic discourse: 'therefore' in Dan 2:6, 9 (introducing a demand) and Dan 4:27 (introducing advice). The multilingual evidence shows both inferential (therefore, por tanto) and conditional (perhaps, si) senses. The word marks transitions in argument and royal rhetoric. THEREFORE PARTICLES

en: perhaps, therefore | es: por-tanto, tal-vez | fr: si, à-elles | de: deshalb, wenn Dan 2:6; Dan 2:9; Dan 4:27

H2007 Art / Pro-3fp (48×)

They/these (feminine plural pronoun); rarely 'hither, behold' as a presentative adverb

Primarily the third-person feminine plural pronoun in Hebrew, hennah points back to groups of women, animals, or other feminine-gender nouns — 'they' or 'these.' Pharaoh's dream cows, the handmaids presented to Esau, the daughters of men in Genesis 6 — all are referenced by this pronoun. In two rare passages (2 Sam 4:6 and Jer 5:6), the same form functions as a locative adverb meaning 'hither' or 'behold,' a usage confirmed by translations diverging sharply: German 'und-siehe' and Spanish 'he aquí' signal a presentative function entirely different from the pronominal core.

1. they, these (fem. pl. pronoun) (46×) Third-person feminine plural pronoun or demonstrative, referring to previously mentioned feminine entities as 'they' or 'these/those.' With 46 of 48 occurrences, this is the standard grammatical function. It governs feminine plurals across narrative and legal material: the 'daughters of men' (Gen 6:2), the seven lean cows (Gen 41:19,26), Rachel's and Leah's children (Gen 33:6). Translations map directly to feminine pronoun forms: 'ellas' (spa), 'elles' (fra), 'sie' (deu). PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: declare, these, they | es: ellas, ellos | fr: elles, ils, ils-sont | de: sie, sie-sind, sie-waren Gen 6:2; Gen 21:29; Gen 33:6; Gen 41:19; Gen 41:26

2. hither, here, behold (2×) A locative or presentative adverb meaning 'hither,' 'here,' or 'behold,' directing attention to something present or arriving. Found in only two passages — 2 Sam 4:6 (Rechab and Baanah entering the house) and Jer 5:6 (a leopard watching over their cities). The multilingual divergence is telling: where the pronominal sense yields uniform pronoun translations, here we find 'und-siehe' (deu), 'he aquí' (spa), and 'voici' (fra) — presentative markers rather than pronouns. BEHOLD (PARTICLE)

en: and-behold, from-them | es: Y-he-aquí, de-ellas | fr: de-voici, et-voici | de: [מהנה], und-siehe 2Sam 4:6; Jer 5:6

הֵנָּה H2008 Adv (50×)

Hither, here; a deictic adverb of place meaning 'to this place,' extended temporally to mean 'now, up to this point.'

A pointing word — a deictic adverb that directs attention to the speaker's location, meaning 'hither' or 'here.' It appears in vivid narrative moments: Joseph telling his brothers 'God sent me here' (Gen 45:5), Rahab hiding the spies in Joshua 2, Elisha pacing back and forth (2 Kgs 4:35). In a handful of passages the spatial sense stretches into time, so that 'here' becomes 'now' or 'up to this point,' as when Jacob laments 'he is gone, and I have not seen him to this day' (Gen 44:28). Spanish captures the spatial sense with 'acá/aquí' and the temporal with 'ahora'; French similarly splits between 'ici' and 'maintenant.'

1. hither, here (44×) Spatial deictic — 'hither, to this place, here.' The primary and most frequent usage (44 occurrences), directing attention toward the speaker's location or a proximate destination. Repeated forms like 'hither and thither' (hennah wa-hennah) convey back-and-forth motion (2 Kgs 4:35). Spanish 'acá/aquí' and German 'hierher' consistently mark this directional sense (Gen 15:16; 42:15; 45:5; Josh 2:2). HERE AND HITHER

en: here | es: acá, aquí | fr: ici | de: hier, hierher Gen 15:16; Gen 21:23; Gen 42:15; Gen 45:5

2. now, up to this point (6×) Temporal extension — 'now, up to this point.' In six passages the spatial proximity is metaphorically mapped onto time, yielding 'until now' or 'at this point.' French distinguishes this clearly with 'maintenant' alongside 'ici,' while Spanish shifts to 'ahora.' Key passages include Gen 44:28 ('I have not seen him to this day') and 1 Sam 1:16 ('I have been pouring out my soul until now,' 1 Chr 9:18; 12:30). NOW (TEMPORAL ADVERB)
en: here, now, then | es: ahora, aquí | fr: ici, maintenant, voici | de: hier, hierher, nun Gen 44:28; Judg 16:13; 1Sam 1:16; 1Chr 9:18; 1Chr 12:30

הִנֵּה H2009 Interjection / 1cs (1061×)

Presentative particle: behold, look, lo; with 1st-person suffix: behold me/I; as a response to a summons: here I am.

Hinneh is the Hebrew Bible's great attention-getter — a deictic particle that grabs the listener by the collar and says 'Look!' Appearing over 1,000 times, it introduces visions (Gen 1:29, 'Behold, I have given you every plant'), announces dramatic reversals, and frames divine speech. Spanish he aqui, French voici, and German siehe all attempt to capture its demonstrative force, though modern translations often simply drop it. When combined with a first-person suffix (hinneni), it takes on two fascinatingly different roles: a self-referential declaration drawing attention to the speaker's own action ('Behold, I am about to bring the flood,' Gen 6:17), and the unforgettable responsive formula 'Here I am' — Abraham's answer to God on Mount Moriah (Gen 22:1), Samuel's reply in the night (1 Sam 3:4), and Isaiah's volunteering for prophetic mission (Isa 6:8).

1. presentative particle: behold, look (881×) The core presentative particle meaning 'behold, look, lo' — directing the hearer's attention to a fact, situation, person, or scene. This dominant sense (881 occurrences) appears with bare hinneh or with second/third-person pronominal suffixes and waw-conjunction. From God showing Adam 'behold, I have given you every seed-bearing plant' (Gen 1:29) to prophetic visions ('behold, a ladder set up on earth,' Gen 28:12), it functions as a discourse spotlight. Spanish he aqui, French voici, and German siehe form a remarkably stable equivalence class across all target languages. BEHOLD (PARTICLE)
en: behold | es: He-aquí, he-aquí | fr: voici | de: siehe, siehe- Gen 1:29; Gen 12:11; Gen 16:2; Gen 17:4; Gen 18:31

2. self-referential presentative: behold me/I (168×) Hinneh with first-person suffix (hinneni/hinni) used not as a response to a call but as a self-referential declaration drawing attention to the speaker's imminent action or state — 'Behold, I am about to...' With 168 occurrences, this sense dominates divine speech: 'Behold, I am bringing the flood' (Gen 6:17), 'Behold, I will send swarms of flies' (Exod 8:21), 'Behold, I am about to rain bread from heaven' (Exod 16:4). Spanish he aqui yo, French voici je, and German siehe ich all preserve the first-person pronoun. The function is performative announcement — God or a prophet declaring what they are about to do. FIRST PERSON PRONOUNS
en: behold-I, behold-Me, behold-me | es: He-aquí-yo, Heme-aquí, he-aquí-yo | fr: me-voici, voici-Je, voici-je | de: siehe-ich, siehe-mich Gen 6:17; Exod 8:21; Exod 9:18; Exod 16:4; Num 24:14

3. responsive self-presentation: here I am (12×) The responsive self-presentation formula hinneni meaning 'Here I am' — spoken exclusively in answer to a direct summons, expressing availability, readiness, and submission. Only about 12 clear occurrences, but each is iconic: Abraham answering God's call before the binding of Isaac (Gen 22:1, 11), young Samuel answering in the night (1 Sam 3:4-8), Moses at the burning bush (Exod 3:4), and Isaiah volunteering 'Here am I, send me' (Isa 6:8). Spanish aqui estoy, French me voici, and German hier bin ich shift to locative-existential vocabulary, confirming that this sense differs from sense 2: it is not 'Behold me acting' but 'I am present and willing.' FIRST PERSON PRONOUNS
en: Here-I-am, here-I-am, here-am-I | es: Heme-aquí, Henos-aquí, aquí-estoy | fr: ici-je-am, me-voici, voici-nous | de: hier-ich-am, siehe, siehe-ich 1Sam 3:4; 1Sam 3:5; 1Sam 3:6; 1Sam 3:8; 1Sam 3:16

הֲנָחָה H2010 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

rest, relief — possibly holiday or tax remission

A noun denoting rest or relief, with uncertain specific application in its sole biblical occurrence. The context in Esther suggests either a holiday celebration, release from taxation, or general amnesty granted by the king for the provinces. The term derives from the verb 'to give rest,' emphasizing a gracious cessation from burden or labor.

(1×) Translation evidence shows interpretive diversity: English 'relief,' Spanish 'descanso' (rest), with ancient versions suggesting 'release' (Septuagint) or 'rest' (Vulgate). The Septuagint's 'aphesis' could mean release from taxes or debts. Esther 2:18 describes this as part of the king's celebration when he married Esther, extending some form of favor to all the provinces. REST AND REFRESHMENT
en: and-relief | es: y-descanso | fr: [והנחה] | de: [והנחה] Esth 2:18

הִנֹּם H2011 N-proper (13×)

Hinnom — a proper name in the toponym Ge-ben-Hinnom ('Valley of the son of Hinnom'), south of Jerusalem

A proper name of uncertain etymology, known exclusively as part of the compound toponym ge-ben-hinnom or ge-hinnom — the 'Valley of (the son of) Hinnom' — a ravine running along the southern edge of Jerusalem. In Joshua 15:8 and 18:16 it appears as a neutral boundary marker between Judah and Benjamin. Its darker associations emerge in Kings, Chronicles, and Jeremiah, where it becomes the site of child sacrifice to Molech (2 Kgs 23:10; 2 Chr 28:3; 33:6; Jer 7:31-32; 19:2, 6; 32:35). Jeremiah prophesies its renaming as the 'Valley of Slaughter.' This toponym later yields the Greek Gehenna, the New Testament term for eschatological judgment.

(13×) The personal or clan name Hinnom, preserved only within the geographical expression 'Valley of (the son of) Hinnom.' It functions as a topographic boundary term in Joshua (15:8; 18:16), a cultic site of Molech worship and child sacrifice in Kings and Chronicles (2 Kgs 23:10; 2 Chr 28:3; 33:6), and a prophetic symbol of divine judgment in Jeremiah (7:31-32; 19:2, 6; 32:35). All translations transliterate the name directly — eng Hinnom, spa Hinnom/Hinom, fra Hinnom, deu Hinnom — with no attempt at semantic rendering, confirming its status as an opaque proper noun. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hinnom | es: Hinnom, Hinom, valle-de- | fr: Hinnom, [הנם], les-voici | de: Hinnom, siehe-sie Josh 15:8; Josh 18:16; 2Kgs 23:10

הֲנַע H2012 N-proper-fs (3×)

Hena (place name; location unknown)

A city name in Assyrian boasts of conquest, listed alongside Sepharvaim and Ivvah (2 Kgs 18:34; 19:13; Isa 37:13). The Assyrian king taunts: 'Where are the gods of Hamath and Arpad? Where are the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivvah?' The site is unknown, though scholars suggest a location in Syria or Mesopotamia. Translations preserve the name (Spanish Hena, Henά) without attempting to identify or translate it.

(3×) A toponym appearing in Assyrian conquest rhetoric (2 Kgs 18:34; 19:13; Isa 37:13). The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name, reflecting its function as a fixed geographic referent in political propaganda. Its location remains unknown, but the rhetorical function is clear: invoking fallen cities to intimidate Jerusalem. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hena | es: Hena, Henά, de-Hena | fr: Hena, [הנע] | de: Hena, [הנע] 2Kgs 18:34; 2Kgs 19:13; Isa 37:13

הַס H2013 Interjection (8×)

Hush! Be silent! — an onomatopoeic interjection commanding silence, especially before YHWH; rarely as a causative verb, to silence

The interjection הַס is a sharp, onomatopoeic command meaning 'Hush!' or 'Be silent!' It carries an urgency beyond polite request — when Ehud says הָס to King Eglon's attendants (Judg 3:19), he is clearing the room for a secret and deadly errand. The word rises to its most solemn register in the prophets, where it demands reverent silence before YHWH: 'Be silent before the Lord GOD' (Zeph 1:7; Hab 2:20; Zech 2:17). Uniquely, it can be inflected as a verb — Caleb 'silenced' the people before Moses (Num 13:30) — showing Hebrew's capacity to verbalize even its interjections.

1. hush! be silent! (imperative interjection) (7×) The imperative interjection 'Hush! Be silent! Be still!' — demanding immediate cessation of speech or noise. All seven occurrences carry this force, whether in the narrative tension of Ehud's plot against Eglon (Judg 3:19), the grim scene of plague burial in Amos 6:10 and 8:3, or the Levites quieting the crowd at Nehemiah's Torah reading (Neh 8:11). Its most elevated use commands reverent silence before the divine presence (Hab 2:20, Zeph 1:7, Zech 2:17). Multilingual glosses converge on silence-commands: Spanish 'Silencio/callad,' English 'Hush/be silent,' confirming the consistent imperative force. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: Hush, be-silent, hush | es: Silencio, callad, silencio | fr: [הסו], faire-taire, silence | de: Still, silence Judg 3:19; Neh 8:11; Amos 6:10; Amos 8:3; Hab 2:20

2. to silence, cause to be still (Hifil causative) (1×) A denominative Hifil verbal form meaning 'to silence someone, to cause to be quiet,' attested once in Num 13:30. When the spies brought their terrifying report, Caleb וַיַּהַס ('silenced') the people before Moses — an active, causative act of imposing quiet on a panicking crowd. This is grammatically remarkable: an interjection has been conjugated as a full Hifil verb with pronominal object. The Spanish 'Y calmó' ('and he calmed') captures the causative nuance well. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: and-silenced | es: Y-calmó | fr: et-silenced | de: und-silenced Num 13:30

פּוּגַת H2014 N-fp (1×)

relief, respite — cessation from weeping

A plural noun meaning relief or respite, specifically from emotional or physical suffering. Jeremiah uses this in Lamentations to describe unceasing weeping — the eye flows continuously without relief or pause. The term emphasizes relentless grief with no opportunity for recovery or rest from sorrow.

(1×) Translations render this as 'relief' (English) or 'descanso' (Spanish, rest). The root meaning suggests benumbing or cessation. Lamentations 3:49 uses this to intensify the description of mourning over Jerusalem's destruction — tears flow constantly 'without relief, without pause,' emphasizing the depth and persistence of grief. REST AND REFRESHMENT en: relief | es: descanso | fr: [הפגות] | de: [הפגות] Lam 3:49

הָפַךְ H2015 Conj-w (94×)

To turn, overturn, overthrow, or transform; covering physical reversal, divine destruction, and inner change of state

At its core, hafakh pictures something being flipped over – whether a city leveled by divine wrath, a heart changed by God's Spirit, or a person physically turning around. The Sodom narratives (Gen 19) anchor the destructive sense, while passages like 1 Samuel 10:9 ('God turned him another heart') reveal the verb's power to express inward transformation. Arabic ´ (turn over) and Swahili -pindua (topple) capture the concrete image; the Niphal and Hithpael stems then extend it into passive transformation and reflexive tumbling. Few Hebrew verbs so vividly unite physical upheaval with spiritual metamorphosis.

1. Nifal: be changed, be transformed (36×) Niphal passive: being changed or transformed in state. Covers blood turning to another substance (Exod 7:15-20), skin conditions changing appearance (Lev 13:3), and hearts being altered. Arabic تحوّل (tahawwala) and Korean 변하다 confirm the involuntary transformation. The subject undergoes change rather than causing it. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: You-turn, and-He-turned, and-have-turned | es: Te-has-vuelto, se-convertirá, se-ha-vuelto | fr: [יהפך], [נהפך], [נהפכו] | de: [נהפכו], [תהפך], er-kehrtum Exod 7:15; Exod 7:17; Exod 7:20; Exod 14:5; Lev 13:3

2. Qal: turn, change, transform (23×) Qal active transformation: deliberately turning or changing one thing into another. God turns rock into a pool of water (Ps 114:8), curses into blessings (Deut 23:5). Arabic ّ(hawwala) and Swahili -geuza (cause to change) highlight the causative force even in the Qal stem, with the agent exerting control over the change. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: And-I-will-turn, He-turned, He-turns | es: Cambiará, Convirtió, El-que-transforma | fr: [והפכים], [הפך], [הפכתם] | de: [הפך], der-einer-turning, du-transform Exod 10:19; Lev 13:10; Deut 23:5; 1Sam 10:9; 1Kgs 22:34

3. Qal: overturn, overthrow (17×) Qal destruction by overturning: the classic 'overthrow' sense anchored in Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen 19:21, 25, 29). Arabic ´(qalaba = turn upside down) and Korean 뒤집다 (turn over) evoke total physical inversion. This catastrophic sense became proverbial, referenced in Deut 29:23, Isa 13:19, and Amos 4:11. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-overthrew, and-He-overthrew, and-He-overturns | es: Trastorné, Y-derribaré, Y-derribó | fr: [ולהפך], et-Il-renversa, et-j'ai-renversé | de: [ולהפך], als-er-umkehrte, ich-umkehre Gen 19:21; Gen 19:25; Gen 19:29; Deut 29:23; Judg 7:13

4. Qal: turn direction, turn back (7×) Intransitive physical turning: changing direction or turning back. Distinguished from transformation senses by the spatial, bodily movement involved. Appears when armies turn in retreat (Judg 20:39, 41) or individuals turn away (1 Sam 25:12). Arabic انصرف (depart) and Swahili -geuka (turn around) confirm the directional sense. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-she-turned, and-they-turned, and-turned | es: Y-se-volvió, se-volvió, volvieron-atrás | fr: [ותהפך], a-tourna, et-ils-se-tourna | de: [ותהפך], hat-wandte, und-sie-wandte Josh 7:8; Judg 20:39; Judg 20:41; 1Sam 25:12; 2Kgs 5:26

5. Nifal: be overthrown (5×) Niphal passive of overthrow: a city or entity being destroyed as if toppled. Lamentations 4:6 compares Jerusalem's punishment to Sodom 'overthrown in a moment.' Jonah 3:4 warns Nineveh it will be 'overthrown.' Arabic قُلِبَ and Korean 전복되다 (be overturned) mark this as the passive counterpart to sense 3. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-it-was-turned, is-overturned, the-one-overthrown | es: la-que-fue-destruida, se-transforma, sera-destruida | fr: [הפוכה], [ונהפוך], elle-est-renversée | de: kehrte-um, und-kehrte-um Esth 9:1; Job 28:5; Lam 4:6; Hos 7:8; Jonah 3:4

6. Hitpael: turn oneself, tumble, revolve (4×) Hithpael reflexive: turning oneself, tumbling, or revolving. The flaming sword 'turning every way' at Eden's gate (Gen 3:24) is the paradigmatic instance. Job 37:12 describes clouds 'turning about' at God's direction. Arabic يتقلّب (roll over) and Swahili -viringika (tumble) confirm the iterative, self-directed motion. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: it-is-changed, the-turning, tumbling | es: Se-transforma, gira, la-que-se-revuelve | fr: le-tournant, renverser, tumbling | de: des-sich-wendenden, kehrte-um, tumbling Gen 3:24; Judg 7:13; Job 37:12; Job 38:14

7. (1×) A Qal/Niphal usage in Job 30:15 where Job's dignity is 'turned' or overturned – his honor is driven away like wind. Spanish se-volvió and German der-kehrte-um suggest a turning of fortune. Contextually this bridges the physical turning and the metaphorical transformation senses, applied to abstract honor. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: turned | es: Se-volvió | fr: renverser | de: der-kehrte-um Job 30:15

8. (1×) A unique Qal sense in Jeremiah 23:36 meaning to pervert or distort, specifically twisting the words of the living God. Spanish trastornasteis (you distorted) captures the willful corruption. This extends the 'overturn' image into the domain of speech and belief: turning truth upside down. TURNING AWAY AND PERVERTING

en: and-you-have-perverted | es: y-trastornasteis | fr: et-renverser | de: und-umkehren Jer 23:36

הֶפֶךְ H2016 Prep-l / N-ms (2×)

the opposite, contrary, perversity

This noun denotes the opposite or contrary, or perversity—a complete reversal of the expected. Ezekiel 16:34 uses it twice in God's accusation against Jerusalem for her spiritual prostitution: 'The opposite occurred in you from other women...you became the opposite.' Instead of being paid, she paid her lovers—a perverse inversion of normal prostitution. Isaiah 29:16 employs it as an exclamation:

'Oh, your perversity!'—condemning Israel's backwards thinking that treats the potter as clay. Both uses emphasize radical reversal or distortion.

(2×) The glosses ('opposite, contrary, contrario, perversity') emphasize reversal. Ezekiel 16:34 repeats the word: Jerusalem is 'the opposite of [other] women' and 'you became the opposite'—she reversed normal prostitution by paying instead of being paid, illustrating her perverse eagerness for idolatry. Isaiah 29:16 cries 'your perversity!'—denouncing those who reverse creator and creature, treating God as their product rather than themselves as his. Both passages use the word to condemn fundamental inversions of proper order. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-opposite, opposite | es: al-contrario, contrario | fr: contraire | de: [הפך], [להפך] Ezek 16:34

הֶפְכֵּי H2017 N-msc / 2mp (1×)

perversity, the contrary — reversal of normal order

A noun meaning perversity, contrariness, or reversal. Isaiah uses this to express shock at Judah's moral inversion — like a potter's clay claiming superiority over the potter. Ezekiel employs it differently, describing Jerusalem's unprecedented reversal of normal prostitution (paying rather than being paid). The term emphasizes things turned upside down from their proper order.

(1×) Translations in Isaiah render this as 'perversity' with possessive suffix ('your perversity'), expressing outrage at inverted thinking. The word denotes something contrary to natural or moral order. Isaiah 29:16 uses this to condemn the absurdity of creatures questioning their Creator, a fundamental reversal of the Creator-creature relationship. PERVERSITY CROOKEDNESS

en: Your-perversity | es: Vuestra-perversión | fr: [הפככם] | de: [הפככם] Isa 29:16

הַהֲפֵכָה H2018 Art / N-fs (1×)

overthrow, destruction — specifically of Sodom and Gomorrah

A noun denoting violent overthrow or destruction, especially associated with the catastrophic judgment of Sodom and Gomorrah. The term became paradigmatic for divine judgment, with later prophets regularly invoking 'the overthrow' as shorthand for total destruction. Genesis uses this to describe God's complete devastation of the cities of the plain.

(1×) All translations preserve the definite article and render this as 'overthrow' (English) or 'destrucción' (Spanish, destruction). The Assyrian cognate 'abiktu' provides linguistic parallel. Genesis 19:29 uses this to summarize God's judgment on the cities where Lot lived, an event so memorable it became the biblical archetype for divine wrath. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: the-overthrow | es: la-destrucción | fr: le-renverser | de: der-Umkehrung Gen 19:29

הַפַּכְפַּךְ H2019 Adj-ms (1×)

crooked, perverse — morally twisted path

An adjective meaning crooked or perverse, describing someone's moral path as twisted and indirect. Proverbs uses this in a saying contrasting the straightforward innocence of the pure with the morally convoluted way of the guilty. The reduplication in the Hebrew form emphasizes the twisted, back-and-forth nature of such a path.

(1×) Translations render this as 'crooked' (English, Spanish 'tortuoso'), capturing both the literal winding path and the metaphorical moral crookedness. The form uses reduplication for intensification. Proverbs 21:8 contrasts this crooked way of a guilty person with the straight path of the pure, using spatial metaphor to describe moral character. CROOKED PERVERTED

en: crooked | es: Tortuoso | fr: הפככך | de: [הפככך] Prov 21:8

הַהַצָּלָה H2020 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

deliverance, rescue — particularly from danger or oppression

A noun meaning deliverance or rescue, appearing in Esther's pivotal moment when Mordecai warns that silence may cost her life. The term carries the hope that rescue will come from somewhere, even if not from expected sources. This reflects the book's theme of hidden providence — God's name never appears, yet deliverance arrives.

(1×) All translations preserve the conjunctive prefix and render this as 'deliverance' (English) or 'liberación' (Spanish). The form may show Aramaic influence, fitting Esther's Persian court setting. Esther 4:14 uses this in Mordecai's famous statement that deliverance for the Jews will arise 'from another place' if Esther remains silent, hinting at divine providence without naming God directly. SALVATION (NOUN)

en: and-deliverance | es: y-liberación | fr: [והצלה] | de: [והצלה] Esth 4:14

הַצָּן H2021 N-msc (1×)

weapons, arms — meaning uncertain, possibly textual corruption

A noun of highly uncertain meaning, possibly referring to weapons or military equipment, though the text may be corrupt. Context in Ezekiel suggests military invasion, and ancient versions offer varying interpretations including 'weapons,' 'from the north,' or 'with rattling.' Modern scholarship remains divided on whether to emend the text or accept one of the proposed meanings.

(1×) Translation evidence shows radical divergence: English 'weapons,' Spanish 'armas' (weapons), French 'arme,' yet the Septuagint suggests 'from the north' while Peshitta and Targum read 'with arms.' Ezekiel 23:24 describes invading forces, but this term's precise contribution remains unclear. The Assyrian connection proposed by some scholars is debated. WEAPONS ARMS

en: weapons | es: armas | fr: arme | de: [הצן] Ezek 23:24

הַר H2022 N-ms / 3fs (547×)

Mountain, hill, or highland region; a single peak, a range of mountains, or an inhabited hill country district.

One of the most common nouns in the Hebrew Bible, har denotes any elevated landmass from a solitary peak to an entire highland territory. When Scripture says Moses went up 'the mountain' (Exod 19:3), the word evokes a singular, awe-inspiring summit where heaven meets earth. In its plural form it sweeps across whole landscapes, as when the psalmist declares that the mountains tremble (Ps 46:2). Yet har also names inhabited regions: 'the hill country of Ephraim' is not a single summit but a rolling upland district, a usage confirmed by Romance-language glosses like 'monte de' and 'colline-pays-de' that highlight the territorial sense.

1. mountain, mount, hill (373×) A single elevated landmass or peak, whether a famous named mountain like Sinai (Exod 19:2) or Zion, or any contextually identified hill. Multilingual glosses consistently render this with singular forms: 'la-montagne,' 'der-Berg,' 'el-monte.' This is the overwhelmingly dominant sense, covering named sacred mountains, battlefield high ground, and poetic imagery of God's dwelling place. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-mountain | es: al-monte, el-monte, en-el-monte | fr: la-montagne, le-montagne | de: der-Berg Exod 3:12; Exod 19:2; Exod 19:3; Exod 19:12; Exod 19:14

2. mountains (118×) Mountains as a plural or collective reference, encompassing geographic descriptions of multiple peaks, poetic and prophetic addresses ('O mountains of Israel,' Ezek 36:1), and passages where mountains as a class respond to God's power. The shift from singular to plural is not merely grammatical; the plural often carries a cosmic or rhetorical sweep, as in 'the mountains saw you and writhed' (Hab 3:10). Glosses like 'Montes,' 'les-montagnes,' and 'Berge' mark this collective sense across traditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: O-mountains, mountains, the-hills | es: Montes, las-montañas, los-montes | fr: les-montagnes, montagnes | de: Berg, Berge, der-Berg 2Sam 1:21; 1Kgs 19:11; Ps 46:2; Ps 46:3; Ps 65:6

3. hill country, highland region (56×) A mountainous district or highland region rather than a single peak, used for inhabited territories like the hill country of Ephraim (Josh 17:15), Judah, or Seir (Gen 36:8-9). Korean and French glosses often render this as 'hill country of' or 'colline-pays-de,' capturing the territorial nuance. Distinguished from senses 1 and 2 by context: when har precedes a tribal or regional name in construct, it typically means the upland district, not a solitary mountain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-hill-country-of, in-hill-of, in-mount | es: en-el-monte-de, en-monte, en-monte-de | fr: dans-colline-de, dans-colline-pays-de, dans-le-colline-country-de | de: auf-dem-Gebirge, in-Huegel-Land-von, in-Huegel-von Gen 31:23; Gen 31:25; Gen 36:8; Gen 36:9; Num 13:29

הֹר H2023 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (12×)
Hor – a mountain on the border of Edom where Aaron died and was buried Hor (hor) is a proper place name designating Mount Hor (hor hahar, lit. 'Hor the mountain'), a peak on the border of Edom where Aaron was stripped of his priestly garments, which were transferred to Eleazar, and where he died (Num 20:22-29). A second Hor may appear at Numbers 34:7-8 as a northern boundary marker of the promised land. All twelve occurrences function as a geographic proper noun, with prepositional variations (to, from, at) reflecting syntax rather than semantics. Every target language preserves the name: English Hor, Spanish Hor, French Hor, German Hor.

Hor (proper name, mountain/place) (12×) The proper geographic name Hor, referring primarily to Mount Hor on Edom's border, the site of Aaron's death and the priestly succession to Eleazar (Num 20:22-29; 33:37-41), and possibly a second peak on the northern boundary of Canaan (Num 34:7-8). The accompanying prepositional phrases are syntactic, not semantic. Universal transliteration across languages – English, Spanish, French, German, Arabic, Korean – confirms its status as an irreducible proper noun. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Hor, at-Hor, from-Hor | es: Desde-Hor, Hor, de-Hor | fr: Hor, dans-Hor, de-Hor | de: Hor, auf-Hor, bei-Hor Num 20:22; Num 20:23; Num 20:25; Num 20:27; Num 21:4

הֲרָא H2024 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Hara — uncertain place name, possibly variant for 'cities of the Medes'
A place name of uncertain location listed among the destinations of exiled Israelites. The site appears only in Chronicles with no parallel in Kings, leading scholars to suspect textual corruption. The most common proposal emends this to 'cities of the Medes,' matching the parallel passages in 2 Kings that describe Assyrian deportation locations.

(1×) Translations preserve 'Hara' as a place name with conjunctive prefix ('and-Hara'), but scholarly commentary widely questions this reading. The parallel passages in 2 Kings 17:6 and 18:11 omit this name, instead reading 'cities of the Medes.' 1 Chronicles 5:26 lists this among the Assyrian deportation sites for the Transjordanian tribes. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Hara | es: y-Hara | fr: [והרא] | de: [והרא] 1Chr 5:26

אֲרִאֵיל H2025 Conj-w (1×)
altar-hearth, the upper part of the altar where fire burns
The altar-hearth or upper platform of the altar where the sacrificial fire burned. Ezekiel's vision of the restored temple includes precise measurements of this component. The term may derive from combining 'hearth' with 'El' (God), meaning 'hearth of God.' This represents the most sacred part of the altar where offerings were consumed by holy fire.

(1×) Translations vary in handling this technical term: English 'altar-hearth,' Spanish 'hogar' (hearth), French 'autel' (altar). The text shows variation between Ketiv and Qere readings. Ezekiel 43:15 uses this in detailed specifications for the altar's construction, with the hearth forming the top level where sacrifices were burned before God. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4906 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-the-altar-hearth | es: Y-el-hogar | fr: et-autel | de: [והראל] Ezek 43:15

הָרַג H2026 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms / 3ms (167×)
To kill or slay violently; as participle, a slayer or the slain; in passive stems, to be killed.
The primary Hebrew verb for violent, deliberate killing — broader than ratsach (which tends toward murder) and more visceral than mut (which can mean simply 'to die'). Harag dominates battlefield narratives: the Israelites slew the Canaanites, Phinehas slew the idolaters, Jehu slew the house of Ahab. But it also appears in intensely personal contexts — Cain's fear that anyone finding him will kill him (Gen 4:14), Esau's vow to kill Jacob (Gen 27:42), and the appalling massacre at Shechem (Gen 34:26). French translations consistently use 'tuer' and its compounds, Spanish prefers 'matar/mataron,' and German reaches for 'erschlagen' (to strike dead) and 'toeten.' The Moabite Stone's use of the cognate confirms its antiquity across Northwest Semitic.

1. kill, slay (active) (146×) The core Qal active meaning: to kill, slay — the deliberate taking of life through violence, whether in war, judicial execution, personal vengeance, or divine judgment. This dominates with 146 occurrences spanning every major narrative corpus. From Cain's fear of retribution (Gen 4:14) to Esau's murderous vow (Gen 27:42) to the sword of the Babylonians, harag is the standard verb for lethal violence. Spanish 'mató/mataron' and French 'tua/tuèrent' render it straightforwardly, while German 'erschlugen' ('struck dead') sometimes adds the manner of killing. KILLING AND REMOVING en: and-killed, killed, they-killed | es: mataron, y-mató | fr: et-tua, ils-tua, ils-tuèrent | de: erschlugen-sie, sie-toetete, toeten Gen 27:42; Gen 34:26; Gen 49:6; Exod 2:15; Exod 13:15

2. slain one (passive participle) (8×) The Qal passive participle used as a substantive: 'the slain one(s), the victim(s).' In Isaiah 10:4, the slain fall in heaps; in Proverbs 7:26, the seductress's victims are called 'her slain' (harugeyha). Esther 9:11 reports the count of those slain in Susa. Spanish 'los muertos' ('the dead') and French 'tuer' (sometimes used nominally) render this resultative sense. The participle crystallizes the act's aftermath into a noun — not the killing but its human cost. KILLING AND REMOVING en: has-he-been-slain, her-victims, into-the-slain | es: en-los-muertos, los-muertos, muertos | fr: tuer, tuer-elle | de: toeten, toetete Esth 9:11; Prov 7:26; Isa 10:4; Isa 14:19; Isa 26:21

3. killer, slayer (agent noun) (8×) The Qal active participle as an agent noun: 'killer, slayer, murderer.' In Genesis 4:15 God sets a mark on Cain lest any 'killer' (kol horeg) strike him; in Numbers 31:19, warriors who have been 'killers' must purify themselves. Jeremiah 4:31 uses it of murderers lying in wait. Spanish 'asesino' ('assassin') and 'matador' ('killer') capture the agentive force. This is distinct from the act of killing (sense 1) — it names the person by their lethal role. KILLING AND REMOVING en: before-killers, killing, murderer-of | es: ante-los-asesinos!, asesino-de, el-matador | fr: killing, murderer-de, tuant | de: der-Kain-erschlägt, killing, murderer-von Gen 4:15; Num 31:19; 2Kgs 9:31; 2Kgs 17:25; Jer 4:31

4. be killed, be slain (passive) (5×) Passive finite forms (Nifal and Qal passive): 'to be killed, to be slain.' In Psalm 44:22 Israel protests 'for your sake we are killed all day long' — a passage Paul quotes in Romans 8:36. Isaiah 27:7 asks whether Israel has been slain as its slayers were slain. Lamentations 2:20 and Ezekiel 26:6, 15 round out these five occurrences. Spanish 'fue muerto' ('was killed') and 'será matado' ('shall be slain') render the passive voice clearly. The subject receives the lethal violence rather than inflicting it. KILLING AND REMOVING en: shall-be-slain, we-are-killed, when-is-slain | es: cuando-sea-hecha, fue-muerto, será-matado | fr: le-tuer, tuer | de: er-toetet, toeten, tötete Ps 44:22; Isa 27:7; Lam 2:20; Ezek 26:6; Ezek 26:15

הֶרֶג H2027 N-ms (5×)

slaughter, mass killing; the act of violent killing, especially in battle or judgment

A masculine noun denoting slaughter or violent killing, used in contexts of warfare and divine judgment. In Esther 9:5 it describes the Jews' slaughter of their enemies, paired with destruction (abdān). Proverbs 24:11 urges rescuing those being dragged away to slaughter, while Isaiah 30:25 envisions a catastrophic 'day of great slaughter' accompanying God's future intervention. The Spanish 'matanza' and French cognates consistently render the sense of mass, purposeful killing.

(5×) The act of violent killing or mass slaughter, whether in battle or as divine judgment. Used of Jews striking down enemies in Esther 9:5, of innocents dragged toward death in Proverbs 24:11, and of eschatological devastation in Isaiah 30:25. Spanish 'matanza' and English 'slaughter' converge on deliberate, large-scale killing. Always carries a sense of gravity and finality. KILLING AND REMOVING

en: and-slaughter, of-great, of-his-slain | es: como-la-matanza-de, hacia-la-matanza, matanza | fr: [הרג], [והרג], [כהרג] | de: [הרג], [כהרג], und-toetete Esth 9:5; Prov 24:11; Isa 27:7; Isa 30:25; Ezek 26:15

הֲרֵגָה H2028 Art / N-fs (5×)

slaughter, killing; used in prophetic expressions for judgment and destruction

A feminine noun for slaughter, appearing exclusively in prophetic and symbolic expressions. Jeremiah renames the Valley of Ben-Hinnom as the 'Valley of Slaughter' (gê hărēgâ, Jer 7:32; 19:6), transforming a site of child sacrifice into a byword for divine retribution. Jeremiah 12:3 speaks of a 'day of slaughter' for the wicked, while Zechariah 11:4, 7 describes Israel and Judah as 'sheep of slaughter,' exploited by negligent shepherds.

(5×) Slaughter as a prophetic symbol of divine judgment and mass destruction. Distinctively feminine, this form appears in fixed phrases: 'Valley of Slaughter' (Jer 7:32; 19:6), 'day of slaughter' (Jer 12:3), and 'flock of slaughter' (Zech 11:4, 7). Spanish 'la Matanza' and English 'the Slaughter' both capitalize the term when it names the valley, reflecting its transformation from geographic label into theological warning. BUTCHERING SLAUGHTER

en: killing, the-Slaughter, the-slaughter | es: la-Matanza, la-matanza, matanza | fr: [ההרגה], [הרגה], massacre | de: [ההרגה], [הרגה] Jer 7:32; Jer 12:3; Jer 19:6; Zech 11:4; Zech 11:7

הָרָה H2029 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (43×)

To conceive, become pregnant; as participle, the one who conceived; passively, to be conceived

The standard Hebrew verb for becoming pregnant, appearing throughout the matriarchal narratives and beyond. Its most frequent form is the consecutive imperfect 'and she conceived' (Gen 4:1; 16:4; 25:21), often paired immediately with 'and she bore.' The participle functions as a substantive meaning 'the one who conceived me/them' (Song 3:4; Hos 2:5). German splits between 'empfing' (conceived) and 'schwanger wurde' (became pregnant), revealing the word's dual focus on the moment of conception and the resulting state.

1. to conceive, become pregnant (39×) The core inchoative meaning: to conceive or become pregnant. This dominates the patriarchal narratives with the formulaic 'and she conceived and bore' (Gen 4:1; 16:4; 25:21; 38:18). It also extends metaphorically to conceiving trouble or iniquity (Ps 7:14; Isa 59:4). Spanish 'concibio' and French 'concut' track the biological event consistently. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: and-conceived, and-she-conceived | es: Y-concibió, y-concibió | fr: et-conçut, et-elle-conçut | de: und-empfing, und-schwanger-wurde, und-sie-empfing Gen 4:1; Gen 4:17; Gen 16:4; Gen 16:5

2. one who conceives, parent (3×) A substantival participle referring to the person who conceived, functioning as a noun meaning 'mother' or 'progenitor.' In Song of Solomon 3:4, the beloved seeks 'the chamber of her who conceived me,' and Hosea 2:5 speaks of 'her who conceived them' in shame. The shift from verb to agent noun is marked in Spanish by 'la que me concibio.' BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: her-who-conceived-me, progenitors-my, the-one-who-conceived-them | es: la-que-los-concibió, la-que-me-concibió, mis-progenitores | fr: celle-qui-les-a-conçus, de-celle-qui-m'a-conçue., progenitors-mon | de: meiner-Erzeuger, schwanger Gen 49:26; Song 3:4; Hos 2:5

3. to be conceived (passive) (1×) A passive usage where the subject is the one conceived rather than the mother conceiving. Job 3:3 curses the night that said 'a man-child is conceived,' making the unborn child the grammatical subject. This rare passive stands apart from the dominant active pattern and is reflected in Spanish 'fue concebido.' BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: is-conceived | es: fue-concebido | fr: הרה | de: schwanger Job 3:3

H2030 Adj-fs (2×)

pregnant, with child, carrying a child in the womb

This adjective describes a woman who is pregnant. Both occurrences in Judges 13 appear in the angel's announcement to Manoah's wife: 'Behold, you are pregnant and shall bear a son' (13:5, 13:7). The angelic visitor declares what the woman does not yet know, or confirms what she suspects—she will conceive and bear Samson. The word simply denotes the state of pregnancy, here made theologically significant as a miraculous conception announced by God's messenger.

(2×) The translations ('pregnant, encinta') straightforwardly identify the condition of pregnancy. Judges 13:5 and 13:7 record the angel's words to Manoah's barren wife: 'Behold, you will conceive and bear a son.' The announcement follows the biblical pattern of miraculous births to barren women (Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, Hannah). The word itself is medically descriptive, but the context makes it theologically loaded—this pregnancy is divine intervention, answering years of barrenness and initiating the Samson narrative. PREGNANCY CONDITION

en: pregnant | es: encinta | fr: pregnant | de: pregnant Judg 13:5; Judg 13:7

הָרָה H2030a Adj-fsc (13×)

Pregnant, with child — feminine adjective describing a woman who has conceived, used predicatively and attributively

A feminine adjective meaning 'pregnant' or 'with child,' used both predicatively and attributively across the Hebrew Bible. It appears in some of Scripture's most consequential announcements: the angel's declaration to Hagar, 'You are pregnant and will bear a son' (Gen 16:11), echoed in the annunciation to Samson's mother (Judg 13:5, 7) and Isaiah's Immanuel prophecy (Isa 7:14). In darker contexts, it describes pregnant women ripped open in warfare (2 Kgs 8:12; 15:16; Amos 1:13). Jeremiah curses the womb that was 'forever pregnant' with him (Jer 20:17). Spanish embarazada and French enceinte consistently render the single biological state.

pregnant (woman) (13×) Describing the physiological state of pregnancy in a woman. Used predicatively in divine birth announcements — hinnakh harah veyoladt, 'behold you are pregnant and shall bear' (Gen 16:11; Judg 13:5, 7; cf. Isa 7:14) — and in narrative disclosures of conception (Gen 38:24-25; 1 Sam 4:19; 2 Sam 11:5). In the construct plural (harot), it functions as a substantive denoting 'pregnant women' as victims of wartime atrocity (2 Kgs 8:12; 15:16; Amos 1:13). Jeremiah 20:17 uniquely applies it to a womb itself (rahmah harat olam). Translation evidence is uniform: spa embarazada, fra enceinte, deu schwanger. PREGNANCY CONDITION

en: a-pregnant-woman, am-pregnant, and-their-pregnant-women | es: concibiendo, embarazada, embarazada-de | fr: [הרה], [הרת], enceinte | de: [הרה], [הרת], bin-schwanger Gen 16:11; Gen 38:24; Gen 38:25; Exod 21:22; 1Sam 4:19

הָרִיָּה H2030b Conj-w / N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

pregnant women — used in war atrocity description

An adjectival noun referring to pregnant women, appearing in prophetic judgment oracles describing war atrocities. The term emphasizes the complete brutality of military conquest, where even the most vulnerable — expectant mothers — face violence. This became a standard element in ancient Near Eastern descriptions of total warfare.

(1×) Translations consistently render this as 'pregnant women' with possessive suffix: English 'their pregnant women,' Spanish 'sus embarazadas.' The Assyrian cognate 'êriiâtê' provides linguistic parallel. Hosea 13:16 uses this in describing Samaria's coming judgment, where military invasion will bring complete devastation including the horrific targeting of expectant mothers. PREGNANCY CONDITION

en: and-their-pregnant-women | es: y-sus-embarazadas | fr: et-enceinte | de: [והריותיו] Hos 13:16

הַרְהֹר H2031 Conj-w / N-mp (1×)

fancies, imaginings — thoughts or visions in dreams

An Aramaic noun meaning fancies or imaginings, specifically the mental images experienced in dreams. Daniel uses this term to describe Nebuchadnezzar's troubling nocturnal visions that prompted his summons of the wise men. The word emphasizes the vivid, image-laden quality of dream content that demands interpretation.

(1×) Translations render this as 'thoughts' (English, Spanish 'pensamientos') or 'dreams' (French 'rêve'). The Aramaic plural form appears in the context of disturbing visions. Daniel 4:5 uses this to describe the mental images that troubled the king's sleep, prompting his desperate search for someone who could explain their meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-thoughts | es: y-pensamientos | fr: et-rêve | de: [והרהרין] Dan 4:5

הֵרָיוֹן H2032 Conj-w (3×)

conception, pregnancy

A noun denoting the state or moment of conceiving offspring. God tells Eve 'I will greatly multiply your pain in childbearing; in pain you shall bring forth children' (Gen 3:16, where 'conception' is parallel to 'childbearing'). The LORD 'gave her conception' and Ruth bore a son (Ruth 4:13). Hosea laments Israel's loss of blessing 'from birth, from the womb, from conception' (Hos 9:11). The Spanish concepción, tu concepción and French grossesse, conception reflect both the initial act and the state of pregnancy.

(3×) Refers to the act or state of conceiving a child in three contexts: the curse after Eden (Gen 3:16), Ruth's miraculous conception (Ruth 4:13), and the loss of blessing in Hosea (Hos 9:11). Cross-lingual glosses (conception, concepción, grossesse) emphasize both the moment of conception and the resulting pregnancy, often in parallel with birth imagery. PREGNANCY CONDITION

en: and-from-conception, and-pregnancy-your, conception | es: concepción, y-desde-la-concepción, y-tu-concepción | fr: conception, et-grossesse, et-pregnancy-ton | de: [הריון], [ומהריון], und-deine-Schwangerschaft Gen 3:16; Ruth 4:13; Hos 9:11

הָרוֹרִי H2033 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Harorite — probably textual error for 'the Harodite'

A gentillic adjective designating someone from an otherwise unknown location Haror. The text is almost certainly corrupt, as the parallel passage in 2 Samuel reads 'Harodite' (from Harod). Chronicles apparently preserves a scribal error where the 'd' was misread or miscopied as 'r.' The reference identifies one of David's mighty warriors by hometown.

(1×) All translations preserve 'Harorite' with the definite article, but scholarly consensus favors emending to 'Harodite' based on the 2 Samuel 23:25 parallel. No place called Haror is known elsewhere. 1 Chronicles 11:27 lists this as the hometown designation of Shammoth, one of David's elite fighting men, the Thirty. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Harorite | es: el-harorí | fr: [ההרורי] | de: [ההרורי] 1Chr 11:27

הֲרִיסָה H2034 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

ruins — concrete remains of destruction

A plural noun denoting ruins in the concrete sense — the physical remains of demolished buildings. Amos uses this in God's promise to restore the fallen booth of David, raising up not just the structure itself but also its ruins. The term pairs with 'breaches,' together emphasizing complete restoration from total devastation.

(1×) Translations consistently render this as 'ruins' with possessive suffix: English 'its ruins,' Spanish 'sus ruinas.' The parallel term 'breaches' reinforces the image of comprehensive destruction. Amos 9:11 employs this in the famous promise to 'raise up the booth of David that is fallen,' including restoration of all its ruined parts — language later applied to messianic hope. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: and-its-ruins | es: y-sus-ruinas | fr: et-ruine | de: [והרסתיו] Amos 9:11

הֲרִיסוּת H2035 N-fsc / 2fs (1×)

your ruin, your destroyed land

A noun denoting overthrow, destruction, or ruin, used in construct form with 'land.' Isaiah employs this in God's promise to restore Zion, referring to 'the land of your ruin' — the homeland that had been devastated. The term emphasizes the land's state of destruction from which God promises to bring renewal and repopulation.

(1×) Translations render this as 'destruction' (English, Spanish 'destrucción') with second-person feminine suffix ('your'). The parallel terms 'your waste places' and 'your desolations' reinforce the theme of devastation. Isaiah 49:19 uses this in promising that even Zion's ruined land will become too small for its returning inhabitants, transforming disaster into overcrowding from blessing. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: your-destruction | es: tu-destrucción | fr: [הרסתיך] | de: [הרסתיך] Isa 49:19

הוֹרָם H2036 N-proper-ms (1×)

Horam — Canaanite king of Gezer who aided Lachish

The king of Gezer who came to aid Lachish during Joshua's conquest of southern Canaan. Unlike the five kings who formed the anti-Gibeonite coalition, Horam appears later in the narrative, attempting to relieve Lachish when Joshua besieged it. His intervention proved futile, as Joshua defeated both him and his army, extending Israel's control over the southern hill country.

(1×) All major translations preserve the proper name 'Horam' consistently across languages. Joshua 10:33 records his arrival to help Lachish and his subsequent defeat, though notably Gezer itself was not captured at this time — the city remained unconquered until much later in Israel's history, showing Joshua's campaign had limits even in victory. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Horam | es: Horam | fr: Horam | de: Horam Josh 10:33

הָרֻם H2037 N-proper-ms (1×)

Harum, a Judahite name appearing in 1 Chronicles 4:8, possibly related to Sabaean and Arabic personal names

Harum appears as a personal name in the genealogy of Judah, mentioned only in 1 Chronicles 4:8. The name finds parallels in Sabaean inscriptions (הרם, הרמה) and Arabic onomastics (ḥrm), suggesting it may belong to a broader Semitic naming pattern. The name's single occurrence makes its precise meaning uncertain, though comparative evidence points to authenticity.

(1×) This personal name occurs uniquely in the tribal genealogies of Judah. Spanish and English transliterations preserve the Hebrew consonantal framework (Harum), while French and German sources bracket the form, indicating textual uncertainty. The comparative Semitic evidence from Sabaean and Arabic sources strengthens the case for this as a genuine ancient name rather than textual corruption. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Harum | es: Harum | fr: [הרום] | de: [הרום] 1Chr 4:8

הַרְמוֹן H2038 Art / N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)

Harmon, a disputed place name in Amos 4:3, possibly Armenia or another location; the text may be corrupt

This word appears in a difficult passage in Amos 4:3, where judgment is pronounced on Samaria's elite. Ancient versions disagree wildly: Targum and Peshitta read 'mountains of Armenia,' while the Hebrew may be corrupt. If sound, it designates some destination of exile, though the specific location is lost to us. The similarity to 'palace' (ארמון) tempted early translators but seems linguistically improbable.

(1×) French renders this as 'palais' (palace), following the similarity to ארמון, while Spanish offers 'hacia-Harmón' (toward Harmon) preserving a place name reading. The ancient versions' interpretation as Armenia (mountains thereof) suggests a distant land of exile. The single occurrence and textual uncertainty make confident identification impossible, though the context clearly involves forcible removal from the land. PERSONAL NAMES

en: toward-Harmon | es: hacia-Harmón | fr: palais | de: [ההרמונה] Amos 4:3

הָרָן H2039 N-proper-ms (7×)

Haran; a personal name meaning 'mountaineer,' borne by Abram's brother (father of Lot) and a Levite.

A personal name probably meaning 'mountaineer' or 'mountain-dweller.' The most prominent bearer is the son of Terah and brother of Abram, who fathered Lot, Milcah, and Iscah before dying in Ur of the Chaldees (Gen 11:27-31). This Haran's early death sets in motion Lot's attachment to Abram's household, a narrative thread extending through Genesis. A second Haran appears as a Gershonite Levite in David's administrative roster (1 Chr 23:9). Note that this personal name (Haran with he) is distinct from the place name Harran (with heth), Abram's later stopping point.

Haran (7×) Haran, a personal name likely meaning 'mountaineer,' borne primarily by the son of Terah and brother of Abram. This Haran fathered Lot, Milcah, and Iscah but died prematurely in Ur of the Chaldees (Gen 11:27-28), an event that shaped the patriarchal narrative by placing Lot under Abram's care. Five of the seven occurrences cluster in Genesis 11:26-31 (all from the Priestly and Yahwist sources). A second bearer is a Gershonite Levite listed in 1 Chronicles 23:9. French renders 'Charan' while Spanish and German use 'Haran,' all distinguishing this name (with Hebrew he) from the similarly-sounding place Harran (with heth). HARAN PLACE NAME

en: Haran, and-Haran | es: Harán, y-Harán | fr: Charan, [והרן], et-Charan | de: Haran, Harans, [והרן] Gen 11:26; Gen 11:27; Gen 11:28; Gen 11:29

הָרַס H2040 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs (43×)

To tear down, demolish, or break through; used of destroying walls, altars, and cities, and of breaking past boundaries.

A forceful verb of destruction, hāras depicts the tearing down of physical structures — altars, walls, fortified cities — and occasionally the violent breaking through of a barrier. When God overthrows, he hāras; when Gideon dismantles his father's altar to Baal (Judg 6:25), the same word applies. The multilingual glosses consistently reach for words of downward violence: Spanish derribar, French déchirer, German niederreissen. In the Nifal, the passive 'to be torn down' carries the pathos of ruin (Prov 11:11; Jer 50:15), while the Piel intensifies the destruction to thoroughgoing demolition (Exod 23:24).

1. tear down, demolish (Qal active) (27×) Active tearing down or demolishing of built structures — altars, walls, cities — in the Qal stem. This is the primary sense, covering the majority of occurrences. God tears down what he has built (Lam 2:2, 17), Gideon demolishes the altar of Baal (Judg 6:25), and Elijah laments Israel's destroyed altars (1 Kgs 19:10, 14). Translations across languages converge on downward destruction: Spanish derribar, German niederreissen, French déchirer-en-bas. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: He-tore-down, I-will-tear-down, am-tearing-down | es: Y-derribaré, derribaron, derribaré | fr: [ויהרסה], [יהרסם], déchira-en-bas | de: der-zerrissen-hinab, niederreissen, riss-hinab Exod 15:7; Judg 6:25; 2Sam 11:25; 1Kgs 18:30; 1Kgs 19:10

2. be torn down, be demolished (Nifal) (10×) Passive or reflexive sense in the Nifal stem: structures or walls being torn down, demolished, or falling into ruin without an explicit agent. Proverbs uses this for civic collapse — a city overthrown by the mouth of the wicked (Prov 11:11) — while Jeremiah employs it for Babylon's walls (Jer 50:15). The shift from active to passive is reflected in multilingual glosses: Spanish derribados, French démolir, German niederreissen used passively. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: and-are-torn-down, and-the-torn-down, and-will-be-thrown-down | es: derribados, es-derribada, estaba-derribada | fr: [יהרסון], démolir, et-démolir | de: niederreissen, riss-nieder, und-niederreissen Ps 11:3; Prov 11:11; Prov 24:31; Jer 31:40; Jer 50:15

3. break through, burst in (3×) Breaking through a barrier or boundary to force entry, distinct from structural demolition. In Exod 19:21 and 19:24, the LORD warns Moses lest the people 'break through' to gaze — a dangerous crossing of sacred limits. Psalm 58:6 similarly invokes forceful breakthrough. German brechen-durch and French briser-à-travers capture this directional, penetrative force rather than downward collapse. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: break-, let-them-break-through, they-break-through | es: irrumpan, rompe- | fr: [הרס], ils-briser-à-travers, que-eux-briser-à-travers | de: lass-ihnen-brechen-durch, riss-nieder-, sie-brechen-durch Exod 19:21; Exod 19:24; Ps 58:6

4. destroy thoroughly (Piel intensive) (3×) Intensive demolition in the Piel stem, emphasizing thoroughness or the active role of destroyers. In Exod 23:24, Israel is commanded to utterly tear down Canaanite sacred pillars; in Isa 49:17, 'your destroyers' (měhārsayik) are those who lay waste with deliberate completeness. Spanish derribarás-los ('you shall tear them down') and the English 'destroyers' both highlight the intensive, purposeful character of this stem. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: tearing-down, you-shall-tear-them-down, your-destroyers | es: derribar, derribarás-los, tus-destructores | fr: renverser, tearing-en-bas, tu—déchirer-eux-en-bas | de: du-soll-zerreissen-ihnen-hinab, niederreissen, tearing-hinab Exod 23:24; Isa 49:17

הֶהָרֶס H2041 Art / N-ms (1×)

Destruction, specifically in the wordplay 'city of destruction' (Isaiah 19:18) contrasting with 'city of the sun'

This rare noun appears in Isaiah's oracle concerning Egypt, in the phrase 'city of destruction' (עִיר הַהֶרֶס). Most interpreters see deliberate wordplay: what was once called 'city of the sun' (Heliopolis, עִיר הַחֶרֶס) will be renamed 'city of destruction' after its temples fall. Some ancient manuscripts read 'city of righteousness' instead, suggesting early textual variation or intentional alteration. The multilingual glosses consistently emphasize destruction, aligned with the Hebrew's aggressive prophetic tone.

(1×) Multilingual evidence uniformly captures the semantic force of destruction: Spanish 'la-destrucción,' English 'the-destruction.' The term appears in a context of divine judgment against Egyptian idolatry, with the definite article emphasizing a specific, fated overthrow. The single occurrence in Isaiah 19:18 makes this a highly contextualized term, its meaning bound to the specific prophetic announcement of temple destruction in Heliopolis. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: the-destruction | es: la-destrucción | fr: [ההרס] | de: [ההרס] Isa 19:18

הַר H2042 Prep-b / N-mpc (12×)

harar – mountain or hill; a geographic elevation, used in poetic and special contexts

The noun harar denotes a mountain or hill as a geographic elevation, appearing in poetic and elevated registers alongside the more common har. Its twelve occurrences span passages celebrating the grandeur of God's creation (Ps 36:6, 'your righteousness is like the mighty mountains') and describing the physical landscape of the promised land (Deut 8:9, 'a land whose stones are iron and out of whose hills you can dig copper'). The form carries no semantic distinction from har beyond stylistic register. Cross-lingual glosses converge: Spanish montes, French hauteur, German Berge, Arabic jibal.

mountain, hill (12×) A mountain or hill as a physical geographic elevation, used in poetic and special forms alongside the more common har. Occurrences appear in contexts of divine majesty (Ps 36:6), geographic description (Deut 8:9), and prophetic imagery. The word carries the same core meaning as har – a raised landform – with no semantic subdivision warranted by the translation evidence. All target languages render it with their standard word for mountain: Spanish montes, French hauteur, German Berge, Arabic jibal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Mountain-my, and-from-its-hills, for-my-mountain | es: Monte-mío, como-montes-de, de-montes-de | fr: [הררי], comme-hauteur, dans-hauteur | de: Berge-von, [הררי], [מהררי] Num 23:7; Deut 8:9; Deut 33:15; Ps 30:7; Ps 36:6

הָרָרִי H2043 N-proper-ms (5×)

Hararite; a gentilicname designating certain of David's mighty warriors

A gentilic adjective meaning 'the Hararite,' possibly denoting a mountain-dweller or someone from an unknown locality. It appears exclusively in the lists of David's elite warriors. Shammah son of Agee the Hararite (2 Sam 23:11, 33) and Ahiam son of Sharar the Hararite (2 Sam 23:33; 1 Chr 11:35) are the two heroes so identified. The Septuagint renders it variously, suggesting the origin of the name was already obscure in antiquity.

(5×) A gentilic designation identifying certain warriors in David's company of mighty men. Applied to Shammah (2 Sam 23:11, 33; 1 Chr 11:34) and Ahiam (2 Sam 23:33; 1 Chr 11:35). The etymology may derive from har ('mountain'), suggesting a highland origin. French and German translations sometimes transliterate ('le Hararite,' 'der Hararite'), while Spanish offers both 'el hararita' and 'el ararita,' reflecting ongoing uncertainty about the precise geographic referent. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Ararite, the-Hararite | es: el-ararita, el-hararita, el-hararí | fr: [ההררי], le-Ararite, le-Hararite | de: [ההררי], der-Ararite, der-Hararite 2Sam 23:11; 2Sam 23:33; 1Chr 11:34; 1Chr 11:35

הָשֵׁם H2044 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hashem, a personal name in 1 Chronicles 11:34; textual issues suggest reading 'Jashen' from 2 Samuel 23:32

Hashem appears as the father of one of David's warriors in 1 Chronicles 11:34, but the parallel text in 2 Samuel 23:32 reads 'Jashen' instead, with 'sons of' deleted. Most scholars regard this as textual corruption rather than a distinct person. The name itself is intriguing —literally 'the Name,' a common reverential substitution for the divine name in later Jewish tradition—but that usage postdates this text considerably.

(1×) All major translations simply transliterate the form: Spanish 'Hasém,' English 'HaShem,' while French and German bracket it signaling textual doubt. The textual parallel with יָשֵׁן (Jashen) in 2 Samuel strongly suggests scribal error. Despite the name's later significance as a reverent circumlocution for God's name, here it functions as a personal name in a genealogical list, albeit one that likely originated through textual corruption. PERSONAL NAMES

en: HaShem | es: Hasém | fr: [השם] | de: [השם] 1Chr 11:34

הַשְׁמָעוֹת H2045 Prep-l / N-fsc (1×)

A causing to hear, bringing tidings in person (Ezekiel 24:26); possibly an Aramaizing infinitive construct

This unique form appears in Ezekiel's oracle about Jerusalem's fall, describing someone who will 'cause ears to hear'—that is, bring news in person. The construction is unusual, possibly an Aramaizing Hiphil infinitive. Some scholars propose emending to a simpler reading, but the Hebrew as it stands conveys the idea of direct oral report, the messenger arriving to announce the city's destruction. French renders 'communication' capturing the communicative act rather than literal hearing.

(1×) The multilingual glosses reveal interpretive range: Spanish 'para-hacer-oír' (to cause to hear) preserves the causative force, while English 'to-cause-to-hear' does likewise. French 'communication' abstracts to the functional purpose. The context in Ezekiel 24:26 specifies that a refugee will arrive to deliver the news of Jerusalem's fall directly, emphasizing personal, oral communication in an era before mass media—news traveled by foot and voice. HEARING AND HEEDING

en: to-cause-to-hear | es: para-hacer-oír | fr: communication | de: [להשמעות] Ezek 24:26

הִתּוּךְ H2046 Prep-k / N-msc (1×)

Melting, specifically 'like melting of silver' in a smelting furnace (Ezekiel 22:22)

This noun describes the process of silver melting in a crucible, appearing in Ezekiel's extended metallurgical metaphor for divine judgment. The form itself is morphologically interesting—a Hophal-pattern noun with dissimilation from an expected הָתּוּךְ. Ezekiel uses smelting imagery throughout chapter 22 to depict God's purifying judgment on Jerusalem: as silver melts in the furnace, so the city will melt under divine wrath.

(1×) Spanish 'Como-se-funde' (as it melts) and English 'as-melting-of' both capture the comparative simile structure of Ezekiel 22:22. French 'fondre' (to melt) emphasizes the action itself. The single occurrence makes this a highly specialized term, bound to Ezekiel's prophetic rhetoric. The imagery is vivid: intense heat, liquefaction, the breakdown of solid structures—all metaphors for God's consuming judgment on a corrupt city. MELT DISSOLVE

en: as-melting-of | es: Como-se-funde | fr: fondre | de: [כהתוך] Ezek 22:22

הָתָךְ H2047 N-proper-ms (4×)

Hathach, a Persian court official who served as intermediary between Esther and Mordecai.

A Persian proper name borne by an official (or eunuch) at the court of King Ahasuerus, appointed to attend Queen Esther. Hathach served as the critical go-between during the crisis of Haman's decree, carrying messages between Esther inside the palace and Mordecai at the gate (Esth 4:5–10). The name is likely of Old Persian origin, and its spelling is preserved with minimal variation across translations — Spanish 'Hatac,' French 'Hathac' — reflecting its status as a loanword.

(4×) Hathach — a Persian court attendant who conveyed messages between Esther and Mordecai during the crisis of Haman's genocidal decree (Esth 4:5, 6, 9, 10). His role as intermediary was essential: Esther could not leave the palace, and Mordecai could not enter. The name appears to be of Old Persian derivation. Spanish 'Hatac' and French 'Hathac' show slight phonetic adaptation, while German retains the Hebrew consonantal form. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hathach, to-Hathach | es: Hatac, a-Hatac | fr: Hathac | de: [התך], [להתך] Esth 4:5; Esth 4:6; Esth 4:9; Esth 4:10

הָתַל H2048a Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

To mock, deceive (Piel); Elijah mocking the prophets of Baal in 1 Kings 18:27

This verb appears in one of Scripture's most dramatic confrontations: Elijah on Mount Carmel, taunting the prophets of Baal as their deity fails to respond. The verb, a secondary formation from the root תלל, carries sharp irony. Elijah's mocking suggestions—perhaps Baal is meditating, or busy, or on a journey, or asleep—drip with sarcasm. The multilingual glosses universally capture the derisive tone.

(1×) Spanish 'y-se-burló' (and he mocked), English 'and-mocked,' French 'et-mocked'—all preserve the narrative past tense and the confrontational edge. The single occurrence in 1 Kings 18:27 is iconic in biblical literature: prophetic satire directed at pagan worship.

Elijah's mockery exposes the impotence of Baal and the folly of those who serve him, setting up the dramatic theophany that follows when YHWH answers by fire. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: and-mocked | es: y-se-burló | fr: et-mocked | de: und-mocked 1Kgs 18:27

תָּלַל H2048b V-Hifil-Imperf-2mp (9×)

To mock, deride, or deceive; Hifil: to trifle with someone through ridicule or falsehood; Hofal: to be deceived.

A verb of interpersonal deception that moves between mockery and outright fraud. In the Samson cycle, Delilah repeatedly accuses him: 'you have mocked me' (Judg 16:10, 13, 15) – Spanish 'te burlaste' captures the scornful ridicule. But the same Hifil form describes Laban's economic deception of Jacob, changing his wages ten times (Gen 31:7), and Pharaoh's stalling with Moses (Exod 8:29). Job 13:9 asks pointedly whether one can 'deceive God as one deceives a mortal.' The single Hofal in Isaiah 44:20 diagnoses the idolater's self-delusion: 'a deceived heart has led him astray.' The root may relate to Arabic dalla ('to act coquettishly'), suggesting an origin in playful manipulation that darkened into serious fraud.

1. to mock, deride (4×) To mock, deride, make sport of someone – treating them with contemptuous ridicule (Hifil). Spanish 'te burlaste' and 'se burlan' foreground the scorn. Delilah's triple accusation in Judges 16:10, 13, 15 is the classic instance: Samson is 'trifling with' her by withholding the truth. Jeremiah 9:5 extends it to a society where neighbors routinely mock one another. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: will-mock, you-mocked | es: se-burlan, te-burlaste | fr: [יהתלן], tu-mocked | de: [יהתלן], du-spottete Judg 16:10; Judg 16:13; Judg 16:15; Jer 9:5

2. to deceive, mislead (4×) To deceive, mislead, or delude someone into believing what is false (Hifil). Genesis 31:7 uses it of Laban's repeated economic fraud against Jacob – 'he has deceived me and changed my wages ten times.' Exodus 8:29 warns Pharaoh not to 'deal deceitfully again.' Job 13:9 poses the devastating rhetorical question: can you deceive God 'as one deceives a mortal'? Spanish 'engañando/engañaréis' and French 'tromper' highlight the fraudulent intent. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: deceiving, has-deceived, like-deceiving | es: como-engañar, engañando, engañaréis | fr: a-trompa, comme-tromper, deceiving | de: [כהתל], [תהתלן], betrogen-hat Gen 31:7; Exod 8:29; Job 13:9

3. to be deceived (passive) (1×) To be deceived or deluded (Hofal passive). Isaiah 44:20 delivers the prophetic diagnosis of idolatry: 'a deceived heart has turned him aside' – the worshiper cannot deliver himself because he cannot even recognize the 'lie in his right hand.' Spanish 'engañado' marks the passive state. This single occurrence completes the verb's semantic arc from active mockery through deliberate fraud to the resulting state of delusion. DECEPTION AND ASTRAY

en: deceived | es: engañado | fr: [הותל] | de: [הותל] Isa 44:20

הַתֻּלִים H2049 N-mp (1×)

Mockery, mocking (plural noun); Job's complaint that mockery surrounds him (Job 17:2)

Job uses this plural noun to describe his situation: mockery on every side. In a passage lamenting his social alienation and physical suffering, he declares that mockers surround him, his eye dwelling on their provocations. The noun derives from the same root as the verb in 1 Kings 18:27 (Elijah mocking Baal's prophets), but here the semantic focus shifts from the act to the agents—the mockers themselves.

(1×) English and Spanish render as 'mockers,' 'burladores'—focusing on the people who mock rather than the abstract concept. This interpretive move reflects the plural form and Job's context: he's surrounded by hostile individuals, not merely an atmosphere of derision. The single occurrence in Job 17:2 contributes to the book's portrait of Job's social suffering—physical pain compounded by communal rejection and ridicule from those who should offer comfort. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: mockers | es: burladores | fr: התלים | de: [התלים] Job 17:2

הוּת H2050 V-Piel-Imperf-2mp (1×)

To shout at, attack (possibly); text uncertain in Psalm 62:3, where mockers conspire against a righteous person

The meaning and even the root of this verb remain disputed. In Psalm 62:3, it describes hostile action against an individual—either shouting at, threatening, or attacking. Some scholars derive it from a root meaning 'shout at' (Arabic cognates suggest threatening cries), while others propose emendation to 'be frantic against.' The multilingual glosses diverge, reflecting the textual uncertainty. The context is clear enough: enemies conspiring to topple someone of standing.

(1×) Spanish 'atacaréis' (you will attack) and English 'will-you-attack' interpret as physical assault, while French 'conspirer' (to conspire) emphasizes coordinated hostility. German follows the attack interpretation. The single occurrence and textual difficulties prevent certainty, but the psalm's context—a meditation on trust in God amid human threats—supports a meaning of aggressive, coordinated hostility aimed at bringing down the righteous. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: will-you-attack | es: atacaréis | fr: conspirer | de: wird-du-angreifen Ps 62:3

וְדָן H2051 N-proper-fs (1×)

Vedan (or Wedan), a disputed place name in Ezekiel 27:19; possibly textual corruption or unknown trading partner

This word appears in Ezekiel's oracle against Tyre, listing trading partners. The identification is wholly uncertain. Some manuscripts omit it entirely; others read it alongside 'Javan' (Greece/Ionia), creating 'Vedan and Javan.' Proposed solutions include Waddān near Medina, the Arabian Arnabani mentioned in Assyrian records, or simply textual corruption. The mention of wine in the context might help identify the location, but certainty eludes us.

(1×) Translations reflect confusion: Spanish 'Y-Dan' (and Dan), English 'and-Dan,' French 'et-Vedan,' German 'und-Dan.' Some read this as the Israelite tribal territory Dan (unlikely in this context), others as an otherwise unknown locale. The single occurrence in Ezekiel 27:19, embedded in a damaged text listing exotic trade goods, leaves the identification suspended between plausible conjectures and frank acknowledgment of ignorance. DAN PROPER NAME

en: and-Dan | es: Y-Dan | fr: et-Vedan | de: und-Dan Ezek 27:19

וָהֵב H2052 N-proper-fs (1×)

Waheb, an unknown place name in Numbers 21:14, part of a fragmentary quotation from the 'Book of YHWH's Wars'

This appears in one of Scripture's most tantalizing fragments: a quotation from the otherwise lost 'Book of the Wars of YHWH.' The text is broken—apparently a verb has dropped out—and Waheb's location is unknown. Ancient versions transliterate without explanation. Modern attempts to identify it with Sahidic topography or to emend the text to 'gold' (זָהָב) remain speculative. We possess a name severed from its context, a fossil from ancient Israelite poetry.

(1×) All four languages simply transliterate: Spanish 'Vaheb,' English 'Waheb,' French 'Waheb,' German 'Waheb.' The unanimous choice to preserve the Hebrew form reflects scholarly humility: we don't know what or where Waheb was. Numbers 21:14 preserves ancient battle poetry celebrating YHWH's victories in the wilderness, but the fragmentary preservation means the geographical reference remains opaque to modern readers. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Waheb | es: Vaheb | fr: Waheb | de: Waheb Num 21:14

וָו H2053 N-mpc (13×)

Hooks or pegs of gold and silver fastened to the posts of the tabernacle for hanging curtains and screens

Found exclusively in the Priestly source's detailed blueprint of the tabernacle, this noun refers to the small metal hooks or pegs affixed to the wooden pillars from which the sacred hangings were suspended. Every occurrence clusters in Exodus 26-27 and 36-38, always in the plural. The consistent rendering across languages — Spanish 'ganchos,' French 'crochets,' German 'Haken' — confirms a single, concrete referent: the functional hardware that held the sanctuary curtains in place, linking architectural precision to liturgical holiness.

hooks, pegs (of the tabernacle) (13×) Metal hooks or pegs attached to the pillars of the tabernacle structure, used to suspend the curtains, screens, and hangings of the court and holy place. All 13 occurrences appear in the Priestly tabernacle instructions (Exod 26-27) and their execution account (Exod 36-38), made of gold for the interior veil and silver for the courtyard pillars. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: hooks, hooks-of, their-hooks | es: ganchos, ganchos-de, sus-ganchos | fr: crochets, crochets-de, leur-crochets | de: Haken, Haken-von, ihr-Haken Exod 26:32; Exod 26:37; Exod 27:10; Exod 27:11; Exod 27:17

וָזָר H2054 Adj-ms (1×)

Guilty, criminal (adjective); describing a crooked path in Proverbs 21:8, though the text may be corrupt

This adjective appears in Proverbs 21:8's contrast between the guilty and the pure: 'Crooked is the way of a guilty man.' However, textual critics suspect dittography—accidental repetition creating וָזָר from an original pair וְזַךְ ('and pure'). If the text is sound, the word denotes moral guilt or criminality, contrasting with uprightness. Spanish and English preserve 'guilty,' 'culpable,' while French and German bracket the term, signaling doubt.

(1×) The moral-legal domain is clear in Spanish 'culpable' and English 'guilty'—someone bearing blame, following crooked paths. Proverbs uses spatial imagery (crooked vs. straight) to depict moral character, and this adjective, if original, would contribute to that pattern. The single occurrence and textual uncertainty make confident interpretation difficult, though the semantic field of guilt and moral crookedness fits Proverbs' didactic rhetoric well. TESTIMONY OBJECTS

en: guilty | es: culpable | fr: וזר | de: [וזר] Prov 21:8

וַיְזָתָא H2055 N-proper-ms (1×)

Vaizatha, a Persian name—one of Haman's ten sons executed in Esther 9:9, possibly meaning 'given-of-the-Best-One'

Vaizatha appears in the grim list of Haman's ten sons, all hanged on the same day in the book of Esther. Scholars identify the name as Persian, possibly Vahyazdāta, meaning something like 'given by the Best One' (a Zoroastrian divine title). The name's appearance in this literary context—the reversal of fortunes, the poetic justice of Haman's line being destroyed—gives it narrative weight beyond mere onomastic interest.

(1×) Spanish 'Vayzata' and English 'Vaizatha' attempt phonetic approximation of the Persian original, while French and German bracket the form, acknowledging the foreign name's complexity. All ten sons receive Persian names, grounding Esther's narrative in the Achaemenid imperial context. The execution of Vaizatha and his brothers in Esther 9:9 completes the reversal motif central to the book: the gallows prepared for Mordecai becomes the instrument of Haman's family's destruction. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Vaizatha | es: Vayzata | fr: [ויזתא] | de: [ויזתא] Esth 9:9

וֶלֶד H2056 N-ms (1×)

Child, offspring; Sarah described as having 'no child' (Genesis 11:30), a rare synonym for the common yeled

This rare noun appears in the description of Sarah's barrenness before Isaac's miraculous birth: 'she had no child' (Genesis 11:30). The term is a synonym of the far more common yeled, apparently cognate to Arabic walad and Ethiopic wald. Its rarity in Biblical Hebrew may reflect dialectal or stylistic variation. The context—childlessness as crisis, prelude to divine intervention—charges this simple noun with narrative tension.

(1×) Spanish 'hijo' (son/child), English 'a-child,' French 'un-enfant,' German 'ein-Kind'—all use the most common word for offspring in their respective languages, reflecting this term's basic semantic value. Genesis 11:30's statement 'Sarai had no child' sets up the Abraham-Sarah cycle's central drama: the promise of countless descendants to a barren couple. This rare vocabulary choice marks the passage's significance, the absence that will drive the narrative forward. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: a-child | es: hijo | fr: un-enfant | de: ein-Kind Gen 11:30

וַנְיָה H2057 N-proper-ms (1×)

Vanyah, a personal name in Ezra 10:36; one of those who married foreign women, though text is uncertain

Vanyah appears in Ezra's list of men who had married foreign women during the exile and were compelled to divorce them. The name occurs only here, and ancient versions disagree on the spelling, suggesting textual corruption. Greek manuscripts offer wildly variant forms, indicating the scribes themselves were uncertain. The name's single occurrence in a contested text makes confident analysis impossible, though it functions clearly as a personal name in this genealogical-legal context.

(1×) Spanish 'Vanyah' and English 'Vanyah' transliterate directly, while French and German bracket the form, signaling textual doubt. Ezra 10 records a painful chapter in post-exilic history: the dissolution of mixed marriages to preserve communal boundaries. Vanyah's inclusion in this list marks him as someone who navigated the complex social and religious tensions of the return from Babylon, though we know nothing else about him. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Vanyah | es: Vanyah | fr: [וניה] | de: [וניה] Ezra 10:36

וָפְסִי H2058 N-proper-ms (1×)

Vophsi, father of Nahbi from the tribe of Naphtali (Numbers 13:14); a spy sent to scout Canaan

Vophsi is mentioned as the father of Nahbi, one of the twelve spies Moses sent to scout Canaan. The name appears only here, and even the ancient Greek versions show textual variation, rendering the patronymic differently. As with many names in the spy narrative, this one anchors a representative in a specific family and tribe—in this case, Naphtali—lending historical specificity to the wilderness generation's pivotal moment of faithlessness.

(1×) All four translations simply transliterate: 'Vophsi' in Spanish, English, and French, with German matching. Numbers 13 establishes the framework for one of Israel's great failures: the refusal to enter the land after hearing the majority report from the spies. Vophsi's son Nahbi participated in that reconnaissance mission, though the text doesn't specify whether he stood with the faithful minority (Joshua and Caleb) or the fearful majority. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Vophsi | es: Vofsí | fr: Vophsi | de: Vophsi Num 13:14

וַשְׁנִי H2059 N-proper-ms (1×)

Vashni, apparently a corrupted reading in 1 Chronicles 6:28; should be 'and the second' based on 1 Samuel 8:2

The Masoretic Text of 1 Chronicles 6:28 appears to give 'Vashni' as the name of Samuel's firstborn son. However, the parallel text in 1 Samuel 8:2 clearly identifies the firstborn as Joel and the second as Abijah. Most scholars conclude that 'Vashni' is a textual error for 'and the second' (וְהַשֵּׁנִי), with Joel's name having dropped out. Ancient versions support this reading, and modern translations often emend accordingly.

(1×) Spanish renders as 'Vasni' treating it as a name, while English offers 'and-the-second,' German 'und-zweiter'—revealing the interpretive divide. The LXX supports emendation, suggesting early awareness of the problem. This appears to be a case where scribal error created a 'ghost name' that never actually existed. First Chronicles' tendency to preserve damaged genealogical material means such textual difficulties are not uncommon in its lists. PERSONAL

NAMES

en: and-the-second | es: Vasni | fr: [ושני] | de: und-zweiter 1Chr 6:28

וַשְׁתִּי H2060 N-proper-ms (10×)

Vashti — the Persian queen deposed by Ahasuerus (Xerxes) for refusing to appear at his banquet.

Vashti (possibly from Old Persian vahista, 'best, most excellent') was the queen of the Persian king Ahasuerus (Xerxes I). Her story occupies the opening chapter of Esther: she hosted a parallel banquet for the women (Esth 1:9) and refused the king's command to display her beauty before his guests (Esth 1:12). This act of defiance set in motion the events that led to Esther's rise. The name is rendered consistently across translations — English 'Vashti,' Spanish 'Vasti,' French 'Vasthi,' German 'Waschti' — each adapting the Persian sibilants to local phonology while preserving the name's identity.

(10×) The proper name Vashti, identifying the queen of Ahasuerus (Xerxes I) who was deposed after refusing the king's summons to his banquet (Esth 1:9-19). Her removal created the vacancy that Esther would fill (Esth 2:1, 4, 17). All ten occurrences are confined to Esther 1-2 and refer to this single individual. The phonetic variations across languages — Spanish 'Vasti,' French 'Vasthi,' German 'Waschti' — reflect different conventions for rendering the Persian consonant cluster. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Vashti | es: Vasti | fr: Vasthi | de: Waschti Esth 1:9; Esth 1:11; Esth 1:12; Esth 1:15; Esth 1:16

זְאֵב H2061 Prep-k / N-mp (7×)

Wolf; a predatory canid used literally and as a figure for violent, rapacious persons or enemies.

The common Hebrew word for the wolf (Canis lupus), a fierce predator well known in the ancient Near East. Never appearing in narrative description of actual animals, it is always used in prophecy, poetry, or simile. Benjamin is a 'ravenous wolf' (Gen 49:27), and Jerusalem's judges are 'evening wolves' (Zeph 3:3). Most strikingly, Isaiah's messianic vision has the wolf dwelling with the lamb (Isa 11:6) and feeding alongside it (Isa 65:25)–images of radical peace. Cognate with Arabic dhi'b, Aramaic deba, and Ethiopic zi'b, the word reflects a widely shared Semitic awareness of this predator.

wolf (7×) A wolf (Canis lupus), the predatory canid used throughout Scripture as a symbol of ferocity, violence, and rapacity. In Jacob's blessing, Benjamin is called a ravenous wolf that tears its prey (Gen 49:27). Prophetic texts use wolves as figures for corrupt leaders and enemies: Jerusalem's princes are wolves tearing prey (Ezek 22:27), her judges are wolves of the evening (Zeph 3:3), and Habakkuk 1:8 compares Chaldean cavalry to evening wolves. Isaiah's messianic visions reverse this imagery: the wolf will dwell with the lamb (Isa 11:6) and feed with the young goat (Isa 65:25). Spanish 'lobo,' French 'loup,' and German cognates all reflect the same animal. Cognate with Arabic dhi'b and Aramaic deba. LIVING CREATURES en: The-wolf, are-wolves-of, like-wolves | es: El-lobo, como-lobos, lobo | fr: [זאב], [כזאבים], loup | de: [זאב], [זאבי], [כזאבים] Gen 49:27; Isa 11:6; Isa 65:25; Jer 5:6; Ezek 22:27

זְאֵב H2062 N-proper-ms (6×)

Zeeb; a Midianite prince captured and slain by the Ephraimites during Gideon's campaign, whose name means 'wolf.'

The proper name of a Midianite prince killed alongside Oreb during Gideon's pursuit of the Midianite army. The name means 'wolf,' fitting the predatory reputation of the Midianite raiders who had devastated Israel's harvests. Judges 7:25 records the Ephraimites capturing Zeeb at a wine-press thereafter called 'the wine-press of Zeeb' (yeqev-ze'ev). Psalm 83:12 recalls this victory as a paradigm for God's deliverance. The name is consistently transliterated across traditions – Spanish 'Zeeb/Zeev,' French 'Zeeb' – preserving the Hebrew consonants faithfully.

Zeeb (proper name, Midianite prince) (6×) Zeeb (meaning 'wolf'), a prince of Midian captured and killed by the men of Ephraim at a location afterward named 'the wine-press of Zeeb' (Judg 7:25). He appears alongside Oreb as one of two Midianite commanders whose defeat became proverbial for divine deliverance (Judg 8:3; Ps 83:12). The multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration – English 'Zeeb,' Spanish 'Zeeb/Zeev,' French 'Zeeb' – with no semantic translation of the underlying meaning 'wolf,' treating it purely as a personal name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zeeb, and-Zeeb, and-like-Ze'ev | es: Zeeb, Zeev, y-Zeev | fr: Zeeb, et-Zeeb, et-Zébah | de: Zeeb, und-Zeeb, und-wie-Ze'ev Judg 7:25; Judg 8:3

זֹאת H2063 Conj-w (605×)

This (fem. demonstrative pronoun); also in prepositional idioms: like this, in this, to this, and connective 'and this'

The feminine counterpart of the common Hebrew demonstrative zeh, zoʾt points to a specific person, thing, or situation that is present or recently mentioned. With over 500 occurrences it is one of the workhorses of Hebrew discourse, yet its meaning shifts significantly when combined with prepositions – ke- yields 'like this, thus,' be- yields 'by this, in this,' and lamed yields 'to this, for this.' These prepositional compounds become fixed idioms for manner, instrument, and purpose, giving a single pronoun surprising rhetorical range across narrative, legal, and poetic texts.

1. this (demonstrative pronoun) (527×) The core demonstrative 'this,' pointing to a near entity or situation. Spanish esta/este and German diese map directly. Ubiquitous in covenant formulae ('this land,' Gen 15:7, 18) and narrative identification ('this woman,' Gen 21:10), functioning as the primary feminine deictic across all genres. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: the-this | es: el-este, esta, este | fr: le-ce | de: das-dies, diese, diesem Gen 12:7; Gen 15:7; Gen 15:18; Gen 21:10

2. like this, thus, such (28×) With the preposition ke- (כ), the pronoun yields 'like this, thus, such' – expressing manner or comparison. French comme ceci, German wie dies, and Arabic هكذا all employ dedicated manner constructions. Common in reported speech ('I did thus and so,' Josh 7:20) and comparative descriptions (Gen 45:23). MANNER ADVERBS

en: according-to-this, and-like-this, and-thus | es: Así-y-así, así, como-este | fr: comme-ce, comme-ceci, et-ainsi | de: und-so, und-wie-dieser, wie-dies Gen 45:23; Josh 7:20; Judg 8:8; Judg 13:23

3. and this, this too (25×) Joined with the conjunction waw (ו), producing 'and this' to introduce additional items, specifications, or consequential statements. Functions prominently in legal and liturgical lists – 'and this is the offering' (Exod 25:3), 'and this is the law of...' (Lev 6:14; 7:1, 11). French et ceci, German und dies parallel the additive function. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: and-this, and-this-, is-the-repose | es: Y-esta, Y-este, Y-esto | fr: et-ce, et-ceci, et-cette | de: und-dies, und-dies-ist, und-diese Gen 49:28; Exod 25:3; Lev 6:14; Lev 7:1; Lev 7:11

4. in/by/with this (19×) With the preposition be- (ב), yielding 'in this, by this, with this' – marking instrument, means, or condition. Pivotal in narrative tests and proofs: 'By this you shall know' (Exod 7:17), 'By this shall you be tested' (Gen 42:15). German dadurch ('thereby') captures the instrumental force well. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: and-in-this, by-this, even-then | es: Con-esto, En-esto, Y-por-esto | fr: avec-ce, dans-ce, dans-ceci | de: dadurch, diese, durch-dies Gen 34:15; Gen 34:22; Gen 42:15; Gen 42:33; Exod 7:17

5. to/for this, at this (5×) With the preposition lamed (ל), producing 'to this, for this, at this' – indicating purpose, direction, or cause. Appears in the memorable exclamation 'This one shall be called woman' (Gen 2:23) and in rhetorical questions about divine purpose (Jer 5:7). French à ceci and Spanish a esto replicate the directional sense. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: at-this, for-this, this | es: a-esta, a-esto, por-esto | fr: à-ce, à-celle-ci, à-cette | de: diese, zu-dies, zu-diese Gen 2:23; Exod 7:23; Job 37:1; Isa 30:7; Jer 5:7

6. (1×) A rare comparative construction with min (מ), meaning 'than this' or 'more than this,' attested once at 2 Sam 6:22 where David declares he will be even more undignified than this. Spanish más que esto and French que ceci capture the comparative force. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: than-this | es: más-que-esto | fr: que-ceci | de: als-dieser 2Sam 6:22

זָבַד H2064 V-Qal-Perf-3ms / 1cs (1×)

To endow, bestow (verb); Leah's wordplay on Zebulun's name, 'God has endowed me' (Genesis 30:20)

This verb appears in Leah's etymological explanation of her son Zebulun's name. She declares, 'God has endowed me with a good endowment'—a wordplay connecting the son's name to the concept of bestowing gifts or dowry. The root has Aramaic cognates meaning 'dowry' and appears in various Semitic languages. Genesis 30:20 offers two explanations for Zebulun's name (the other involving 'dwelling'), reflecting the biblical fondness for multiple folk etymologies.

(1×) Spanish 'dotó-me' (endowed me), English 'endowed-me,' French 'endowed-moi'—all preserve the perfect tense and the sense of divine gift-giving. Leah's declaration comes after bearing six sons and marks a shift in her self-understanding: no longer merely competing with Rachel, she now sees herself as divinely enriched. The verb's semantic range includes dowry, bestowal, and endowment, all suggesting valuable gifts that elevate the recipient's status. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: endowed-me | es: dotó-me | fr: endowed-moi | de: beschenkt-hat-mich Gen 30:20

זֵבֶד H2065 N-ms (1×)

Endowment, gift (noun); Leah's 'good endowment' from God in the naming of Zebulun (Genesis 30:20)

This noun complements the verb in Genesis 30:20, forming Leah's declaration: 'God has endowed me with a good endowment.' The doubling of the root (verbal and nominal forms) creates emphasis and wordplay typical of biblical naming narratives. The term specifically denotes a gift or dowry, something of value bestowed to enhance status or establish relationship. Leah's sixth son represents not just another child but a mark of divine favor.

(1×) Spanish 'dote' (dowry), English 'endowment,' German 'ein-Geschenk' (a gift)—all emphasize the value-transfer aspect. French matches English. The use of dowry language is telling: Leah frames her fertility as God's enrichment of her, compensating perhaps for Jacob's preferential love for Rachel. The 'good endowment' transforms biological reproduction into theological affirmation, Leah reading her maternal success as divine vindication. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: endowment | es: dote | fr: endowment | de: ein-Geschenk Gen 30:20

זָבָד H2066 N-proper-ms (8×)

Zabad; a personal name meaning 'he has given' or 'gift,' borne by at least seven men in the Old Testament.

Zabad is a Hebrew personal name meaning 'he has given' or 'gift,' related to the common verbal root z-b-d. It is borne by several distinct individuals: a descendant of Judah through Sheshan's line (1 Chr 2:36-37), an Ephraimite killed in a cattle raid (1 Chr 7:21), one of David's elite warriors (1 Chr 11:41), a conspirator who assassinated King Joash of Judah (2 Chr 24:26, called Jozacar in 2 Kgs 12:21), and three returned exiles who had married foreign women (Ezra 10:27, 33, 43). The name's frequency among post-exilic Israelites may reflect its theophoric resonance.

Zavad (8×) The proper name Zabad (Zavad), borne by multiple individuals across the genealogical and narrative traditions. Translations show variation in transliteration—English 'Zavad,' Spanish 'Zabad/Zavad,' French and German 'Zabad'—reflecting differing conventions for the Hebrew zayin. The name appears in genealogical lists (1 Chr 2:36-37; 7:21), among David's mighty men (1 Chr 11:41), in the regicide of Joash (2 Chr 24:26), and among three men in Ezra's list of foreign marriages (Ezra 10:27, 33, 43). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zavad, and-Zavad | es: Y-Zabad, Zabad, Zavad | fr: Zabad, et-Zabad | de: [וזבד], [זבד] 1Chr 2:36; 1Chr 2:37; 1Chr 7:21; 1Chr 11:41; 2Chr 24:26

זַבְדִּי H2067 N-proper-ms (6×)

Zabdi; a proper name borne by several Israelites, possibly meaning 'my gift' or 'gift of Yah.'

A masculine proper name likely meaning 'my gift' or possibly a shortened form of Zabdiel ('gift of God'). The name is borne by at least four distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible: the grandfather of Achan from the tribe of Judah (Josh 7:1, 17-18), a Benjaminite listed in the genealogy of 1 Chronicles 8:19, an overseer of David's vineyard stores (1 Chr 27:27), and a Levite in Nehemiah 11:17 who may be identical with Zichri. The Arabic cognate zabd ('gift') supports the etymological interpretation. The name appears in the New Testament as Zebedee (Greek Zebedaios).

Zabdi (proper name, several Israelites) (6×) Zabdi, a proper name borne by several Israelite men: (1) grandfather of Achan, of Judah (Josh 7:1, 17, 18), possibly identical with Zimri of 1 Chr 2:6; (2) a Benjaminite (1 Chr 8:19); (3) an officer over David's wine cellars (1 Chr 27:27); (4) a Levite in Nehemiah's time (Neh 11:17). The name derives from a root meaning 'gift' (cf. Arabic zabd), and may be a hypocoristic of Zabdiel. Transliterations are consistent: English/Spanish 'Zabdi,' French/German 'Zavdi,' reflecting the stable consonantal framework. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zavdi, and-Zavdi | es: Zabdi, y-Zabdí | fr: Zavdi, [וזבדי], [זבדי] | de: Zavdi, [וזבדי], [זבדי] Josh 7:1; Josh 7:17; Josh 7:18; 1Chr 8:19; 1Chr 27:27

זַבְדִיאֵל H2068 N-proper-ms (2×)

personal name meaning 'my gift is God'; father of one of David's officers and a prominent Hebrew in Nehemiah's time

Zabdiel appears twice in Scripture, both times identifying individuals whose name means 'my gift is God.' The first is the father of Jashobeam, one of David's military commanders mentioned in 1 Chronicles 27:2. The second is a prominent Hebrew leader during Nehemiah's restoration of Jerusalem, listed among those who settled in the holy city after the exile (Nehemiah 11:14). The name itself reflects the theology of divine provision common in Hebrew nomenclature.

(2×) A proper name appearing in post-exilic and Davidic contexts. The Hebrew name combines 'zebed' (gift) with the theophoric element 'El' (God), reflecting a confession that the child was understood as a divine gift. Both biblical occurrences identify men of standing—one a military father, one a community leader—suggesting the name was borne by families of some prominence in ancient Israel. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zavdiel | es: Zabdiel, hijo-de- | fr: [וזבדיאל] | de: [וזבדיאל] 1Chr 27:2; Neh 11:14

זְבַדְיָהוּ H2069 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (9×)

Zebadiah: a masculine name meaning 'YHWH has bestowed,' borne by at least nine men in the Hebrew Bible.

Zebadiah (also spelled Zevadyahu in its longer theophoric form) means 'YHWH has bestowed' or 'gift of the LORD,' sharing its root with names like Jehozabad. It is borne by at least nine different individuals across Chronicles and Ezra, including Benjaminites (1 Chr 8:15, 17), one of David's warriors who defected from Saul (1 Chr 12:7), a Levitical gatekeeper (1 Chr 26:2), a military officer (1 Chr 27:7), Jehoshaphat's chief judge for royal affairs (2 Chr 19:11), and a returning exile (Ezra 8:8). The name's frequency reflects Israel's gratitude for divine provision.

Zebadiah (personal name) (9×) A theophoric personal name combining a root meaning 'to bestow, endow' with the divine name YHWH. Spanish renders it 'Zebadias,' French 'Zebadia,' and English alternates between 'Zebadiah' and the more Hebraic 'Zevadyah/Zevadyahu.' The name appears exclusively in Chronicles and Ezra, always of different individuals, making context essential for identification. Notable bearers include Jehoshaphat's appointed judge over

'the king's matters' (2 Chr 19:11) and a Gadite warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:7). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zevadyah, Zevadyahu, and-Zebadiah | es: Y-Zebadías, Zebadías, Zevadyah | fr: Zebadia, et-Zebadia | de: [וזבדיה], [וזבדיהו], [זבדיה] 1Chr 8:15; 1Chr 8:17; 1Chr 12:8; 1Chr 26:2; 1Chr 27:7

זְבוּב H2070 Prep-l (2×)

flies; used literally of dead flies and metaphorically of Egypt's army as swarming insects

The word for 'fly' appears in two vivid contexts. In Ecclesiastes 10:1, dead flies ruin the perfumer's ointment—a proverbial image of how small corruptions spoil great works. In Isaiah 7:18, Yahweh will 'whistle for the fly that is in Egypt' as a metaphor for summoning the Egyptian army (paired with the bee representing Assyria). The imagery draws on the fly's swarming, intrusive nature. The Arabic cognate and related Semitic terms all emphasize the creature's darting, to-and-fro motion.

(2×) The common fly as a pest and symbol of corruption or invasion. Ecclesiastes uses it literally ('dead flies') to illustrate how minor defilements corrupt valuable things. Isaiah deploys it metaphorically: Egypt's military forces are portrayed as a cloud of flies that Yahweh summons with a whistle—an image both of divine sovereignty and the invasive, pestilential character of foreign armies. The Aramaic and Arabic cognates confirm this as the ordinary word for the insect. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: flies-of, for-the-fly | es: a-la-mosca, moscas-de | fr: [לזבוב], זבובי | de: [זבוב], [לזבוב] Eccl 10:1; Isa 7:18

זָבוּד H2071 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Zabud, an officer of Solomon (1 Kings 4:5); the name means 'bestowed' or 'endowed'

Zabud appears in the administrative list of Solomon's officials as a priest and 'the king's friend,' a title suggesting special advisory status. The name derives from the root meaning 'bestow' or 'endow,' suggesting perhaps that he was seen as a gift. First Kings 4 catalogs Solomon's bureaucratic apparatus at the height of his power, and Zabud's dual role as priest and royal confidant reflects the integration of religious and political authority in the united monarchy.

(1×) All translations simply add 'and' to the transliteration: Spanish 'y-Zabud,' English 'and-Zabud,' French 'et-Zabud,' German 'und-Zabud.' The coordination reflects the list structure of 1 Kings 4. Zabud's designation as 'the king's friend' is significant—a technical term for a trusted advisor, appearing elsewhere in ancient Near Eastern courts. His presence in this list marks him as part of Solomon's inner circle during Israel's golden age. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Zabud | es: y-Zabud | fr: et-Zabud | de: und-Zabud 1Kgs 4:5

זָבוּד H2072 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Zabud (variant spelling in Ezra 8:14 Ketiv); the Qere reads 'Zaccur' instead, indicating textual uncertainty

The written text (Ketiv) of Ezra 8:14 gives 'Zabud' as the name of a returned exile, but the marginal reading (Qere) corrects to 'Zaccur.' Ancient versions also vary, with some Greek manuscripts supporting one reading, others the other. This reflects the textual fluidity of genealogical lists, where similar-sounding names could be confused in transmission. The context is the list of families returning from Babylonian exile, where accurate preservation of names mattered for property claims and tribal identity.

(1×) Translations bracket the form, acknowledging uncertainty: Spanish '[y-Zabud],' English '[and-Zavud],' French '[וזבוד],' German '[[וזבוד]].' The double-bracketing in German signals even deeper doubt. Ezra's lists of returnees were crucial documents for the restoration community, establishing who had legitimate claim to ancestral property and temple service. Textual variants in such lists suggest the difficulties of maintaining accurate records through the trauma of exile and return. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: [and-Zavud] | es: [y-Zabud] | fr: [וזבוד] | de: [[וזבוד]] Ezra 8:14

זְבֻל H2073 N-ms / 3fs (5×)

lofty abode, exalted dwelling; a heavenly or elevated habitation, especially of God

A poetic noun meaning 'lofty abode' or 'exalted dwelling place,' reserved for elevated theological contexts. Solomon declares the temple a bêt zĕbul, a 'house of exalted dwelling' for the LORD (1 Kgs 8:13; 2 Chr 6:2). Isaiah 63:15 pairs it with 'heaven' as the high abode of God's holiness. In Habakkuk 3:11, even the sun and moon have their zĕbulâ, their celestial station. The Akkadian cognate bīt zabal ('lofty house') confirms the architectural-cosmic resonance.

(5×) An exalted or lofty dwelling place, used poetically of God's heavenly habitation or the temple as its earthly counterpart. Solomon dedicates a 'house of height' for the LORD (1 Kgs 8:13; 2 Chr 6:2), while Isaiah 63:15 parallels it with heaven itself. Habakkuk 3:11 extends the image to the celestial station of sun and moon. Spanish 'morada' and French 'habitation' capture the dwelling sense, though the element of elevation and grandeur is distinctive to the Hebrew. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: exalted-dwelling, from-a-lofty-dwelling, from-the-habitation-of | es: de-morada, desde-la-morada-de, morada | fr: [זבל], [מזבל], de-habitation | de: [זבל], [זבלה], [מזבל] 1Kgs 8:13; 2Chr 6:2; Ps 49:14; Isa 63:15; Hab 3:11

זְבוּלֻן H2074 Conj-w (45×)

Zebulun — the sixth son of Jacob and Leah; the Israelite tribe and its territory in the Galilee region

Zevulun names the sixth son born to Jacob and Leah, whose birth prompted the hopeful wordplay 'now my husband will honor me (yizbeleni)' (Gen 30:20). From this patriarch springs the tribe of Zebulun, allotted territory in lower Galilee between the Jezreel Valley and the Mediterranean approaches — 'Zebulun shall dwell at the shore of the sea' (Gen 49:13). Across 45 occurrences, the name shifts by metonymy from person to tribe to land: tribal census lists in Numbers, the courageous warriors praised in Deborah's song who 'risked their lives to the death' (Judg 5:18), and the eschatological allotment in Ezekiel's temple vision (Ezek 48:26-33). Isaiah's prophecy that 'the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali' would see a great light (Isa 8:23/9:1) is cited by Matthew as fulfilled in Jesus' Galilean ministry (Matt 4:15). Translations consistently transliterate: Spanish 'Zabulon,' French 'Zabulon,' German 'Sebulon.'

Zebulun (person, tribe, territory) (45×) The proper noun Zebulun (zevulun), referring to the sixth son of Jacob and Leah (Gen 30:20; 35:23), the Israelite tribe descended from him (Num 1:30-31; Judg 4:6, 10; 5:14, 18), and the tribal territory in the lower Galilee (Josh 19:10-16; Isa 8:23). Jacob's blessing associates Zebulun with the sea (Gen 49:13), and Deborah's song celebrates the tribe's battlefield valor (Judg 5:18). All 45 occurrences denote this person, tribe, or territory; prepositional and construct variations reflect syntax, not distinct senses. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zebulun, Zevulun | es: Zabulón, Zevulun, Zevulún | fr: Zabulon | de: Sebulon, Sebulun, Sebuluns Gen 30:20; Gen 35:23; Gen 46:14; Gen 49:13; Exod 1:3

זְבוּלֹנִי H2075 Art / N-proper-ms (3×)

Zebulonite, of the tribe of Zebulun (gentilic)

A gentilic adjective identifying members of the tribe of Zebulun. It appears as 'the Zebulonite' for the judge Elon (Judg 12:11, 12) and collectively for the census count of 'the Zebulunites' (Num 26:27). The Spanish zabulonita(s) and French/German cognates all reflect the tribal-affiliation function. This is standard gentilic morphology: a proper noun transformed into an adjective or collective noun identifying descendants or members.

(3×) Functions as a tribal gentilic in census (Num 26:27) and narrative (Judg 12:11, 12) contexts. The multilingual glosses uniformly render the tribal affiliation (Zebulonite, zabulonita, Zebulunite). The word identifies individuals or groups by descent from Zebulun, Jacob's tenth son. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Zebulonite, the-Zebulunite | es: el-zabulonita, los-zabulonitas | fr: le-

Zebulonite, le-Zebulunite | de: der-Zebulonite, der-Zebulunite Num 26:27; Judg 12:11; Judg 12:12

זָבַח H2076 Conj-w (134×)

to slaughter for sacrifice; to offer cultic sacrifice

This Hebrew verb primarily describes the act of ritual sacrifice in Israel's worship life. The word encompasses both the physical slaughter of an animal and the religious offering itself. The Qal stem usually denotes offering sacrifice to God (though sometimes to idols), while the Piel intensive form describes habitual or persistent sacrificial activity. In some contexts, particularly in narrative settings, the verb can refer simply to the slaughter of an animal for food, though the sacrificial sense remains primary throughout Scripture.

1. sacrifice to YHWH (95×) Split from sense 93942. Criteria: Cultic offering to the true God, legitimate worship, covenant sacrifice
en: and-he-sacrificed, and-sacrificed, sacrificing | es: para-sacrificar, sacrificaba, sacrificando | fr: et-il-sacrifia, et-sacrificed, sacrifiant | de: opfernd, und-er-opferte, zu-Opfer Gen 46:1; Exod 3:18; Exod 5:3; Exod 5:8; Exod 5:17

2. sacrifice to idols/false gods (21×) Split from sense 93942. Criteria: Idolatrous sacrifice, offering to foreign deities, condemned worship practice en: and-he-sacrificed, and-he-will-sacrifice, and-they-sacrifice | es: El-que-sacrifica, Y-sacrificaba, Y-sacrificaron | fr: [וּבְחִים], [וּובח], [לזבח] | de: [וּבחים], [וּובח], [לזבח] Exod 22:20; Exod 32:8; Exod 34:15; Deut 32:17; Judg 16:23

3. Piel: sacrifice habitually (9×) The Piel intensive stem marks habitual or repeated sacrificial practice, often in contexts of ongoing idolatry or sustained cultic activity. This form intensifies the iterative aspect of the sacrificial act. SACRIFICE AND SLAUGHTER
en: I-will-sacrifice, and-he-sacrificed, and-sacrificing | es: Y-sacrificaba, sacrifica, sacrificando | fr: et-il-sacrifia, et-sacrifiant, furent-sacrifiant | de: opferte, schlachten, sie-sacrificed 1Kgs 3:2; 1Kgs 3:3; 1Kgs 11:8; 2Kgs 16:4; 2Chr 28:23

4. Qal: slaughter (kill animal) (9×) The physical act of killing an animal, separate from the religious ritual. Glosses shift to slaughter terminology (Spanish matarás/degolló, Korean 잡았다, Swahili kuchinja) rather than sacrificial language, indicating the semantic distinction between killing and ritual offering. SACRIFICE AND SLAUGHTER
en: and-he-slaughtered, and-sacrificed, and-slaughtered | es: Y-sacrificó, degolláis;, entonces-matarás | fr: et-il-immola, et-immola-cela, et-sacrifia | de: du-moege-slaughter, schlachten, und-du-soll-slaughter Gen 31:54; Num 22:40; Deut 12:15; Deut 12:21; 1Sam 28:24

זֶבַח H2077 N-msc / 3ms (162×)

A sacrifice, animal offering slaughtered in worship; the most common and ancient Israelite cultic offering.

The foundational sacrifice word in the Hebrew Bible, denoting an animal slaughtered as a communal offering whose flesh was eaten at a sacred meal. Distinguished from the whole burnt offering (עֹלָה) and the grain offering (מִנְחָה), the זֶבַח was the original shared feast between worshipers and God—God receiving the blood and fat, the people eating the meat. From Jacob's sacrifice at Mizpah (Gen 31:54) to the peace offerings of Leviticus, this word runs through Israel's entire worship life. German Schlachtopfer ('slaughter-offering') uniquely preserves the etymological connection to slaughtering that English 'sacrifice' obscures.

1. sacrifice (animal offering) (160×) The primary sense: an animal sacrifice offered in worship, whether to the Lord or to other gods. This encompasses the full range of grammatical forms—singular, plural, construct chains ('sacrifice of peace offerings'), prepositional phrases ('with a sacrifice'), and possessive constructions ('his sacrifice'). It covers fellowship offerings (Lev 3:1), votive offerings (Lev 7:16), and even sacrifices to idols (Deut 32:38). Spanish sacrificio, French sacrifice, and German Opfer/Schlachtopfer all render this consistently across all contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-sacrifice, sacrifice | es: con-sacrificio, sacrificio | fr: Zébah, sacrifice, un-sacrifice | de: Opfer, ein-Opfer, ein-Schlachtopfer Gen 31:54; Exod 34:25; Lev 3:1; Lev 4:10; Lev 4:26

2. (1×) In Proverbs 17:1 ('Better a dry morsel with peace than a house full of sacrifices-of strife'), the construct form 'sacrifices of' carries a contrastive, almost ironic nuance—abundant sacrificial feasting that is ruined by conflict. The sense remains 'sacrifice' but the proverbial context gives it a negative valence, highlighting how ritual abundance without relational harmony is worthless. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: sacrifices-of | es: sacrificios-de | fr: sacrifice | de: Opfer Prov 17:1

3. (1×) In Hosea 4:19 the form appears in a context of shameful idol worship ('the wind wraps them in its wings, and they shall be ashamed of their altars/sacrifices'). English 'of their altars' and Spanish 'de sus altares' suggest a metonymic extension where the sacrifices and the altar sites blend together, the word evoking not just the act of sacrifice but the entire illicit cultic apparatus associated with it. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: of-their-altars | es: de-sus-altares | fr: sacrifice | de: Opfer Hos 4:19

זֶבַח H2078 Conj-w (12×)

Zebah – a Midianite king captured and slain by Gideon alongside Zalmunna

Zebah (zebach) is the proper name of one of two Midianite kings (the other being Zalmunna) who oppressed Israel and were pursued, captured, and executed by Gideon in the aftermath of the great Midianite rout at the Wadi Harod (Judg 7-8). The pair became paradigmatic examples of defeated enemies in Israel's memory, as Psalm 83:11 recalls: 'Make their nobles like Zebah and Zalmunna.' All twelve occurrences refer to this single historical individual. Cross-lingual evidence uniformly preserves the name: English Zebah, Spanish Zebaj, French Zebach, German Zebah.

Zebah (proper name, Midianite king) (12×) The proper name Zebah, designating the Midianite king who, together with Zalmunna, was pursued and slain by Gideon after Israel's deliverance from Midianite oppression (Judg 8:5-21). The name became proverbial for divine judgment on Israel's enemies (Ps 83:11). Conjunctive and prepositional variants ('and Zebah,' 'like Zebah') are syntactic, not semantic. Every target language preserves the transliteration unchanged, confirming monosemous proper-noun status. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zebah, and-Zebah, and-like-Zevach | es: Y-Zébaj, Zébaj, y-como-Zebaj | fr: Zébach, et-Zébach, et-Zébah | de: Zebah, und-Zebah, und-wie-Zevach Judg 8:5; Judg 8:6; Judg 8:7; Judg 8:10; Judg 8:12

זַבַּי H2079 N-proper-ms (2×)

personal name; a Jew in Ezra's time who had married a foreign woman

Zabbai appears in Ezra 10:28 among those who had taken foreign wives during the exile and were called to separate from them as part of Ezra's reforms. A second occurrence in Nehemiah 3:20 (Ketiv) also references an individual by this name, though the Qere reading suggests 'Zaccai.' The name's etymology is uncertain; some connect it to Palmyrene inscriptions, others suggest it may be an abbreviation of a longer theophoric name involving 'zebed' (gift). The Septuagint varies in its rendering, reflecting the textual ambiguity.

(2×) A personal name borne by a Jew in the post-exilic community. The name appears in Ezra's list of those who had violated the covenant by marrying outside Israel, marking a moment of communal crisis and reform. The textual variants in Nehemiah suggest either a different individual or confusion with the similar name Zaccai. Palmyrene parallels hint at a Northwest Semitic naming pattern, possibly meaning 'endowed' or 'gifted,' though certainty eludes us. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zabbay, [Zabbai] | es: Zabai, [Zabai] | fr: [זבי] | de: [[זבי]], [זבי] Ezra 10:28; Neh 3:20

זְבִידָה H2080 N-proper-fs (2×)

personal name meaning 'endowed' or 'given'; mother of King Jehoiakim

Zebudah (also spelled Zebidah) was the mother of Jehoiakim, one of Judah's last kings before the Babylonian exile. She is identified in 2 Kings 23:36 as the daughter of Pedaiah from Rumah. The name likely derives from the root meaning 'to give' or 'endow,' making it semantically close to Zabdiel. Textual witnesses show significant variation—the Septuagint offers widely divergent names across manuscripts, including confusion with Zedekiah's mother. This reflects the chaotic state of transmission for genealogical details in the tumultuous final decades of Judah's monarchy.

(2×) A woman's name preserved in the royal genealogy of Judah's final generation. The Hebrew form combines a verbal root for 'gift' or 'endowment' with a feminine suffix. She is remembered solely as the mother of Jehoiakim, the king installed by Pharaoh Neco who later became Babylon's vassal. The confused manuscript tradition—especially in Chronicles and the Greek versions—hints at the disruption of memory caused by exile, yet her Judahite origin (Rumah) is preserved, anchoring her in the pre-exilic community. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zevuddah, [Zevidah] | es: Zebuda, [Zebida] | fr: Zevuddah, [Zevidah] | de: [Zevidah] 2Kgs 23:36

זְבִינָא H2081 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zebina, an Aramaic name meaning 'bought' or 'purchased'; one who married a foreign woman (Ezra 10:43)

Zebina appears in Ezra's list of those who had married foreign women and were compelled to divorce them. The name is Aramaic, from the root meaning 'buy' or 'purchase,' possibly suggesting that the bearer was purchased as a slave or adopted. This reflects the linguistic environment of the post-exilic period, when Aramaic increasingly influenced Hebrew onomastics. The name's occurrence in this painful social-religious crisis list gives it historical specificity but no further narrative development.

(1×) Spanish 'Zevina' and English 'Zevina' attempt phonetic rendering, while French and German bracket the form. The Aramaic etymology ('bought') is intriguing—was Zebina a slave who gained freedom, a purchased child, or is the name purely conventional? Ezra 10 records a community attempting to maintain religious and ethnic boundaries in the vulnerable early post-exilic period, and Zebina's inclusion shows he was caught in that painful process of communal redefinition. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zevina | es: Zevina | fr: [זבינא] | de: [זבינא] Ezra 10:43

זָבַל H2082 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms / 1cs (1×)

To honor, exalt (verb); Leah's alternate wordplay on Zebulun, 'my husband will honor me' (Genesis 30:20)

This verb provides the second etymology for Zebulun's name in Genesis 30:20: 'Now my husband will honor me, because I have borne him six sons.' The root appears in Akkadian (zabālu, 'exalt') and possibly Phoenician onomastics. Leah's two explanations for Zebulun—divine endowment and marital honor—reflect her dual desires: divine recognition and her husband's affection. The wordplay enriches the narrative, showing Leah's complex emotional world.

(1×) Spanish 'morará-conmigo' (will dwell with me) follows an alternative interpretation deriving the verb from a root meaning 'dwell,' while English 'will-honor-me' and French follow the 'honor' interpretation. German offers 'wird-bei-mir-wohnen' (will dwell with me), siding with the dwelling interpretation. The divide reflects ancient uncertainty about the root. Leah's hope—whether for honor or dwelling-together—expresses her longing for Jacob's presence and esteem after bearing six sons. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: will-honor-me | es: morará-conmigo | fr: –honneur-moi | de: wird-bei-mir-wohnen Gen 30:20

זְבֻל H2083 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)

Zebul; an officer and governor of Shechem under Abimelech, active in the Gaal revolt narrative.

The proper name of a man who served as the ruler or prefect of the city of Shechem under Abimelech, son of Gideon. Zebul appears exclusively in Judges 9, where he plays a crucial role in the conflict between Abimelech and the rebel Gaal son of Ebed. When Gaal stirs up discontent at a feast, Zebul secretly sends word to Abimelech and then mocks Gaal's hesitation as the counterattack approaches. His name may be related to the noun zebul meaning 'lofty dwelling' or 'exalted place,' though BDB treats it simply as a proper name.

Zebul (6×) Zebul, the officer (governor or prefect) of Shechem serving under Abimelech. All six occurrences cluster in Judges 9:28-41, where Zebul acts as Abimelech's loyal agent: he reports Gaal's conspiracy (v. 30), taunts Gaal as the opposing force approaches (v. 36, 38), and remains in the city after the conflict (v. 41). The name may be etymologically linked to zebul ('lofty habitation'), though it functions purely as a personal name. Multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate: English/Spanish/French/German all render 'Zebul.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zebul, and-Zebul | es: Zebul, y-Zebul | fr: Zebul, et-Zebul | de: Zebul, und-Zebul Judg 9:28; Judg 9:30; Judg 9:36; Judg 9:38

זְבַן H2084 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

To buy, gain (Aramaic verb); 'you are trying to gain time' in Daniel 2:8

This Aramaic verb appears in King Nebuchadnezzar's accusation against his counselors: 'I know that you are trying to gain time.' The root means 'buy' or 'purchase' in various Aramaic dialects and appears in Nabataean and Palmyrene inscriptions. Here it's used metaphorically: buying or purchasing time, stalling. The idiom captures Nebuchadnezzar's impatience with his advisors' excuses, his suspicion that they're dodging the impossible task he's set them.

(1×) Spanish 'estáis-comprando' (you are buying), English 'are-buying,' French 'essayer' (to try)—the translations reflect the metaphor. French abstracts from the commercial imagery to the purpose (trying/attempting), while Spanish and English preserve the literal 'buying.' Daniel 2:8 captures a moment of royal frustration: the king knows his demand is unreasonable (tell me both the dream and its interpretation without my describing the dream!), and he suspects his advisors are stalling for time, hoping the crisis will pass. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: are-buying | es: estáis-comprando | fr: essayer | de: [זבנין] Dan 2:8

זֵג H2085 N-ms (1×)

Grape skin; part of what a Nazirite must avoid eating (Numbers 6:4), possibly the transparent outer skin

This obscure term appears in the Nazirite regulations, specifying that one under the vow must avoid eating anything from the grape vine, 'from the seeds to the skin.' The exact identification is uncertain—possibly the transparent outer skin of the grape. The Mishnah preserves the term with the same meaning. Rabbinic sources connect it to words for 'glass' (זְגוּגִית), suggesting transparency as the linking concept. The term's rarity makes precise definition difficult, but the context clearly involves grape products forbidden to Nazirites.

(1×) Spanish 'hollejo' (skin/husk), English 'skin,' French 'peau' (skin), German 'Haut' (skin)—unanimous agreement on the basic meaning. Numbers 6:4 establishes comprehensive prohibition: the Nazirite avoids not just wine but every part of the grape, from internal seeds to external skin. This totality reflects the vow's radical separation, the Nazirite's complete abstention from the fruit that symbolizes settled agricultural life and its pleasures. SKIN AND LEATHER

en: skin | es: hollejo | fr: peau | de: Haut Num 6:4

זָד H2086 Prep-m / Adj-mp (13×)

Insolent, arrogant, presumptuous — always of those who defiantly oppose God and His commandments

An adjective that functions almost as a technical term for the willfully defiant. In Psalm 119 alone it appears seven times, consistently naming those who scorn the Torah and mock the faithful.

The 'zed' is not merely proud but presumptuously rebellious — Proverbs 21:24 yokes the word with 'scoffer' and 'haughty.' Malachi and Isaiah extend the charge to entire communities whose arrogance invites divine judgment. Spanish 'soberbio' and German 'Freche' both capture the aggressive insolence implied.

insolent, arrogant, presumptuous (13×) A person characterized by insolent presumption against God, used substantively as a near-technical term for the godless rebel. Dominant in Psalm 119 (vv. 21, 51, 69, 78, 85, 122, 122) where the 'zedim' are those who stray from the commandments and heap scorn on the psalmist. Also appears in prophetic judgment (Isa 13:11; Mal 3:15, 19) and proverbial characterization (Prov 21:24). PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: arrogant, from-presumptuous-sins, proud | es: Soberbio, Soberbios, a-soberbios | fr: [הזדים], [זדים], de-orgueilleux | de: Freche, [הזדים], [זדים] Ps 19:13; Ps 86:14; Ps 119:21; Ps 119:51; Ps 119:69

זָדוֹן H2087 N-msc (11×)

Presumptuousness, arrogance — insolent pride that defies authority, whether human or divine

The noun זָדוֹן (zadon) captures the quality of presumptuous arrogance — a haughty self-assertion that refuses to submit to rightful authority. In legal contexts, acting 'in presumption' against a priest or judge warrants death (Deut 17:12), and a prophet who speaks presumptuously in God's name is to be disregarded (Deut 18:22). The wisdom tradition identifies pride as a moral fault that breeds strife and shame (Prov 11:2; 13:10; 21:24). Jesse's eldest son accuses David of coming to the battlefield out of 'presumptuousness' (1 Sam 17:28). In the prophets, zadon personifies Babylon itself — 'the arrogant one' whom God will bring low (Jer 50:31-32). Spanish 'soberbia/arrogancia,' Arabic ɛʕ presumptuousness, arrogance (11×) Insolence, presumptuous pride, or arrogant self-assertion — a disposition of haughty defiance against rightful authority. Spans legal, sapiential, and prophetic registers: presumptuous defiance of priestly or judicial authority (Deut 17:12), false prophetic utterance (Deut 18:22), personal arrogance rebuked (1 Sam 17:28), wisdom warnings that pride breeds strife and disgrace (Prov 11:2; 13:10; 21:24), and prophetic denunciation of national hubris, especially Babylon personified as 'Pride' (Jer 49:16; 50:31-32; Ezek 7:10; Obad 1:3). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: arrogance-of, arrogant-one, by-insolence | es: Soberbia-de, con-soberbia, la-soberbia | fr: dans-presumption, dans-בזדון, orgueil | de: [בזדון], [הזדון], [זדון] Deut 17:12; Deut 18:22; 1Sam 17:28; Prov 11:2; Prov 13:10

זֶה H2088 Prep-k / Pro-ms (1178×)

This, this one (demonstrative pronoun); with prepositions: from here, in this, like this/thus.

Zeh is the basic masculine near-demonstrative pronoun in Biblical Hebrew — 'this,' 'this one' — and in its unadorned form it points to something immediately present in the speaker's context or discourse. But what makes this lemma especially interesting is how Hebrew's agglutinative prepositional system generates an entire family of derived senses: miz-zeh becomes 'from this' or 'from here,' ba-zeh becomes 'in this' or 'here,' and ka-zeh becomes 'like this' or 'thus.' Each of these prepositional combinations has developed enough semantic independence that translators across languages reach for different vocabulary. The cognate demonstrative element z- runs throughout the Semitic family — Phoenician ze, Aramaic zi/zeh, Arabic dha — making this one of the oldest and most stable grammatical morphemes in human language.

1. this, this one (demonstrative) (1059×) The core demonstrative pronoun meaning 'this,' 'this one,' 'this thing' — by far the dominant sense at approximately 1,059 of 1,178 occurrences. It points to persons, objects, places, times, and situations in immediate proximity or discourse context: 'this day' (Gen 7:11), 'this man' (Gen 19:21), 'this place' (Gen 20:11). Spanish este/esta, French ce/cette, German dieser/diese, Korean 이 (i), and Arabic hadha all deploy their standard near-demonstrative forms, confirming the unmarked deictic function. The word frequently combines with the article (hazzeh) for emphatic specification. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS
en: the-this, this | es: el-este, esta, este | fr: ce, le-ce | de: das-dies, diese, diesem Gen 7:11; Gen 17:23; Gen 19:13; Gen 19:21; Gen 20:11

2. from this, from here (source) (90×) With the preposition min: miz-zeh meaning 'from this,' 'from here,' 'from this side' — approximately 90 occurrences. This sense is especially prominent in the directional pair miz-zeh...u-miz-zeh ('on this side and on that side'), used to describe spatial flanking positions (Exod 17:12; Josh 8:22). In Gen 37:17 Joseph is told 'they have departed from here'; in Gen 15:4 God promises an heir who will come 'from your own body' (literally 'from this one'). Spanish de aqui, French d'ici, German von hier, and Korean 여기서 all use spatial-origin vocabulary rather than demonstrative forms, confirming that the prepositional fusion has produced a semantically distinct adverbial function. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS
en: from-here, from-this | es: de-allí, de-aquí, treinta | fr: de-ce, de-ici | de: von-diesem, von-dieser, von-hier Gen 5:29; Gen 15:4; Gen 37:17; Gen 38:28; Gen 42:15

3. in this, here (locative) (19×) With the preposition be- or le-: ba-zeh meaning 'in this,' 'here,' 'in this place,' 'by this means' — approximately 19 occurrences. In Gen 38:21-22 Judah asks about the cult prostitute 'in this place' (ba-zeh); in Gen 48:9 Joseph says 'God has given me [children] in this [place]'; in Exod 24:14 Moses says 'wait here' (ba-zeh). Spanish aqui/en este, French dans ce lieu/ici, German hier/an diesem Ort, and Korean 여기에 all shift from demonstrative to locative vocabulary. The sense has crystallized into a genuine locative adverb, parallel to but distinct from the directional miz-zeh of sense 2. HERE AND HITHER
en: for-this, here, in-this | es: aquí, de-esto, en-este | fr: dans-ce, dans-ce-lieu, dans-ceci | de: an-diesem-Ort, hier, in-dies Gen 38:21; Gen 38:22; Gen 48:9; Exod 24:14; Num 22:19

4. like this, thus (comparative/manner) (10×) With the preposition ke-: ka-zeh meaning 'like this,' 'thus,' 'in this way,' 'such' — approximately 10 occurrences. The idiom ka-zeh ve-kha-zeh ('such and such,' literally 'like this and like that') appears in 2 Sam 11:25 when David tells Joab 'do not let this thing displease you, for the sword devours one as well as another — thus and so.' In Gen 41:38 Pharaoh asks 'can we find such a one as this?'; in Isa 56:12 the drunkards say 'tomorrow will be like this day.' Spanish como este, French comme ceci, German so/wie dies, and Korean 이와 같은 (iwa gateun) all deploy comparative or manner-adverbial forms rather than pure demonstratives, confirming that the ke- prefix has shifted the word's function from deixis to comparison or exemplification. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS
en: Is-like-this, and-like-that, and-thus | es: como-esta, como-este, y-así | fr: ce, comme-ce, et-ainsi | de: dieser, und-so, und-wie-dass Gen 41:38; Judg 18:4; 2Sam 11:25; 1Kgs 14:5; Isa 56:12

שֶׂה H2089

one of the flock; individual sheep or goat, member of a collective flock

This singular noun refers to a single animal from a flock, whether sheep or goat, distinguishing individual members of the collective term 'flock.' Legal and ritual texts use it when specifying single animals for sacrifice, compensation, or property laws. The word emphasizes individual identity within the collective—one sheep among many. Deuteronomy's laws about helping a neighbor's straying animal, Samuel's account of taking a poor man's single lamb, and Exodus regulations about theft all employ this term. It never appears in plural, as the collective noun serves that function.

זֹאת H2090 Pro-fs (12×)

This (feminine demonstrative pronoun); with preposition ke-, 'thus, in this manner'

A feminine demonstrative pronoun equivalent to the more common zōʾt, found primarily in Ecclesiastes where zōʾt never appears. Qoheleth uses zōh to point at experiences, judgments, and situations he has weighed — 'this also is vanity' (Eccl 2:2, 24; 5:15–18). Outside Ecclesiastes it occurs in 2 Kings 6:19 when Elisha redirects the Aramean soldiers: 'this is not the way.' Combined with the preposition ke- it forms the adverbial expression kāzōh, 'thus' or 'in this manner,' appearing in the paired phrase kāzōh wekāzeh ('thus and so') when reporting the gist of a conversation, as in Judges 18:4 and 2 Samuel 11:25.

1. this (feminine demonstrative pronoun) (9×) Feminine demonstrative pronoun meaning 'this,' pointing to a specific referent, situation, or experience in the immediate context. Functionally identical to zōʾt but preferred in late or dialectal usage, especially Ecclesiastes where it is the sole feminine demonstrative. Spanish 'esto/esta,' French 'ceci/celle-ci,' and German 'dieser' all reflect straightforward demonstrative force. Key passages include Ecclesiastes 2:2 ('I said of laughter, this is madness') and 2 Kings 6:19 ('this is not the way'). DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: this | es: esta, este, esto | fr: ce, ceci, celle-ci | de: dieser 2Kgs 6:19; Ps 132:12; Eccl 2:2; Eccl 2:24; Eccl 5:16

2. thus, in this manner (with preposition ke) (3×) Combined with the preposition ke- to form the adverbial expression kāzōh meaning 'thus, in this manner, like this.' Typically paired with the masculine kāzeh in the formula kāzōh wekāzeh ('thus and so'), used when summarizing reported speech without quoting verbatim. Spanish 'así,' French 'ainsi,' and German 'so' capture this summarizing function. Judges 18:4 ('thus and so Micah dealt with me') and 1 Kings 14:5 illustrate the idiom. MANNER ADVERBS

en: like-this, thus | es: Así, así | fr: ainsi, comme-ceci | de: so, wie-dieser Judg 18:4; 2Sam 11:25; 1Kgs 14:5

זָהָב H2091 Conj-w (389×)

Gold; the precious metal, whether raw ore, refined material, currency, or figurative standard of value

Zahav is the standard Hebrew word for gold in all its forms and functions. Nearly 390 occurrences span raw ore from Havilah (Gen 2:11-12), refined metal for the Tabernacle furnishings (Exod 25:11), royal wealth like Solomon's legendary gold of Ophir (1 Kgs 9:28), and figurative imagery where gold represents purity tested by fire (Job 23:10; Zech 13:9). The word's cognates stretch across every Semitic branch: Arabic dhahab, Aramaic dehav, Sabean dhb. Translations are strikingly uniform: Spanish oro, French or, German Gold, reflecting the metal's universal cultural recognition.

gold (the metal) (389×) The precious metal gold in all its biblical roles: as raw ore mined from the earth (Gen 2:11-12; Job 28:1), as refined material for sacred furnishings such as the Ark's overlay and the menorah (Exod 25:11, 31), as a measure of wealth and royal splendor (1 Kgs 10:11), and as a figurative standard of purity and worth (Prov 17:3; Job 23:10). Cognate across the Semitic family – Arabic dhahab, Aramaic dehav, Sabean dhb – confirming its deep antiquity as a lexical item. GOLD (PRECIOUS METAL)

en: gold | es: oro, oro? | fr: or | de: Gold, aus-Gold Gen 24:22; Gen 24:53; Gen 44:8; Exod 3:22

זָהַם H2092 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3fs / 3ms (1×)

To make loathsome (Piel); Job's life makes food loathsome to him due to suffering (Job 33:20)

This Piel verb describes how suffering affects Job's appetite: 'his life makes bread loathsome to him.' The root means 'be foul' or 'fetid' in various Semitic languages; here the causative stem indicates that Job's suffering causes him to loathe even desirable food. The parallel clause mentions his soul loathing 'food of desire,' reinforcing the image of sickness so severe it destroys appetite. The verb captures physical and psychological revulsion, suffering that penetrates to basic bodily needs.

(1×) Spanish 'Y-aborrece' (and loathes), English 'and-loathes-him'—both capture the strong aversion. The grammatical form is unusual enough that some scholars suspect textual corruption, but the sense is clear: extreme suffering destroys even the desire for food. Job 33:20 appears in Elihu's speech, describing how God uses suffering to discipline and save. The vivid image of food becoming repulsive conveys suffering's totalizing effect, how it transforms even life's basic pleasures into sources of disgust. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-loathes-him | es: Y-aborrece | fr: et-וזהמתו-lui | de: [וזהמתו] Job 33:20

זָהָם H2093 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zaham, son of King Rehoboam (2 Chronicles 11:19); name possibly related to the root meaning 'foul' or 'loathsome'

Zaham appears in the genealogy of Rehoboam, one of his sons by Mahalath. The name's derivation from the root meaning 'foul' or 'loathsome' (if that's indeed the etymology) is puzzling—why would parents choose such a name? Perhaps it had a different connotation in that period, or perhaps it's an apotropaic name meant to ward off evil. Second Chronicles preserves it without comment, simply listing Zaham among Rehoboam's numerous offspring.

(1×) All translations simply transliterate: Spanish 'Zaham,' English 'Zaham,' with French and German bracketing. The single occurrence provides no narrative context beyond the bare genealogical notice. Rehoboam's family life, detailed in 2 Chronicles 11, includes multiple wives and concubines and many children, reflecting royal polygamy's dynastic ambitions. Zaham is one name among many, his life unrecorded beyond this genealogical anchor point. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zaham | es: Zaham | fr: [זהם] | de: [זהם] 2Chr 11:19

זָהַר H2094a V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp (1×)

To shine, give light (Hiphil); the wise 'shall shine' in everlasting glory (Daniel 12:3)

This Hiphil verb appears in Daniel's vision of the resurrection and final judgment: 'those who are wise shall shine like the brightness of the firmament.' The imagery of light represents eschatological glory, the vindication and exaltation of the righteous teachers who endured persecution. The verb derives from a root meaning 'shine' or 'be bright,' cognate with Arabic and Aramaic forms. Daniel uses astronomical imagery—firmament, stars—to convey the transcendent, everlasting nature of this glory.

(1×) Spanish 'brillarán' (they will shine), English 'shall-shine'—both preserve the future glory aspect. French offers 'avertir' (to warn), apparently deriving from a different root (the homonym meaning 'warn'). Daniel 12:3 is a pivotal text for resurrection hope and eschatological reward. The shining of the wise contrasts with the darkness of judgment, their light everlasting like the stars, a beacon of divine vindication for those who suffered for righteousness. SHINING AND ILLUMINATING en: shall-shine | es: brillarán | fr: avertir | de: [יזהרו] Dan 12:3

זָהַר H2094b Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3ms (22×)

To warn, admonish, caution (Hifil active); to take warning, be admonished (Nifal reflexive-passive)

The verb זָהַר (II) is the Hebrew Bible's primary word for issuing and receiving warnings, concentrated especially in Ezekiel's watchman oracles and the wisdom tradition. In the Hifil, the prophet is appointed watchman: 'you shall warn them from me' (Ezek 3:17, 33:7). Moses too is told to 'warn' the people about God's statutes (Exod 18:20), and Elisha 'warned' the king of Israel about enemy movements (2 Kgs 6:10). The Nifal turns the spotlight on the hearer: the righteous person who 'takes warning' is delivered (Ezek 33:4-5), and the psalmist is 'warned' by God's judgments (Ps 19:11). Some scholars link it to the homonymous זָהַר I ('shine'), suggesting that warning is a form of enlightenment.

1. warn, admonish (14×) The Hifil active sense: to warn, admonish, or give cautionary notice to another person. The one who warns acts as an intermediary delivering God's message or practical intelligence. Ezekiel's watchman commission is the paradigm case: God says 'I have made you a watchman — you shall warn them' (Ezek 3:17, 33:7), and the prophet's moral responsibility hinges on whether he delivers the warning (Ezek 3:18-19, 33:8-9). Beyond prophecy, the sense appears in judicial instruction (2 Chr 19:10, where judges must 'warn' the people about the law), in military intelligence (2 Kgs 6:10, where Elisha 'warned' the king of ambush), and in Mosaic law (Exod

18:20). The Spanish 'advertir/adviertas' and German 'warnen/warn' consistently render the active warning function. TESTIMONY AND WARNING

en: [ketiv], and-warn, and-warned-him | es: (kethiv), advertiste, adviertas | fr: [ketiv], [והזהרת], [והזהיר] | de: [ketiv], und-du-warnst, und-warn Exod 18:20; 2Kgs 6:10; 2Chr 19:10; Ezek 3:17

2. take warning, be admonished (8×) The Nifal reflexive-passive sense: to take warning, be admonished, or heed a caution — the response side of the warning act. Ezekiel's watchman oracles make the hearer's response the pivot of life and death: 'if the wicked takes warning, he shall deliver his soul' (Ezek 33:4-5, 3:21). The wisdom tradition extends this into reflective counsel: the psalmist finds that by God's judgments 'your servant is warned' (Ps 19:11), and Ecclesiastes commends the wise youth who knows how 'to be admonished' (Eccl 4:13) while cautioning against endless study with 'be warned' (Eccl 12:12). Multilingual glosses shift to passive and reflexive constructions — 'es-advertido/se-advierta' (Spanish), 'gewarnt' (German), 'avertir/enseigner' (French) — distinguishing the recipient of warning from the one who issues it. TESTIMONY AND WARNING

en: be-warned, he-was-warned, is-warned | es: es-advertido, fue-advertido, se-advierta, | fr: [נזהר], avertir, enseigner | de: [הזהר], [להזהר], gewarnt Ps 19:11; Eccl 4:13; Eccl 12:12; Ezek 3:21; Ezek 33:4

זְהַר H2095 Conj-w / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (1×)

To be warned, careful (Aramaic Peal passive participle); 'be warned' against negligence (Ezra 4:22)

This Aramaic passive participle appears in a letter from Persian officials warning against allowing Jerusalem's walls to be rebuilt: 'Be warned not to be negligent in this matter.' The root is the Aramaic equivalent of the Hebrew root meaning 'warn' or 'admonish.' The officials fear that Jerusalem's restoration will lead to rebellion and loss of tax revenue, so they urge the king to vigilance. The verb captures administrative alertness, the bureaucratic imperative to prevent potential threats.

(1×) Spanish 'Y-cuidadosos' (and careful), English 'and-careful'—both emphasizing the state of alertness rather than the act of warning. Ezra 4:22 records the opposition Judah faced during the rebuilding efforts after the exile. Persian officials, anxious about imperial security and revenue, urged the king to stop the construction. This verb, calling for careful vigilance, reflects the political tensions surrounding the restoration: suspicion, bureaucratic caution, and the vulnerable position of the returned exiles. BEING ON GUARD

en: and-careful | es: Y-cuidadosos | fr: [וזהירין] | de: [וזהירין] Ezra 4:22

זֹהַר H2096 N-ms (2×)

shining, brightness; used of divine or supernatural radiance in prophetic visions

This term denotes a luminous brightness or radiance, appearing in visionary contexts where the divine presence manifests. In Ezekiel 8:2, the prophet sees a figure with 'an appearance of brightness' (explained as resembling amber or electrum, Hebrew 'chashmal'). Daniel 12:3 uses it to describe how the wise will shine 'like the brightness of the expanse' in the resurrection. The word is related to the root meaning 'to shine' and has cognates in Aramaic and Arabic that similarly denote brilliance or radiance. It captures the ineffable glow of theophanic appearances.

(2×) A noun describing supernatural or celestial brightness in prophetic visions. Ezekiel's use ties it to the appearance of the divine figure, where the radiance resembles molten metal—an image of glory too intense for direct description. Daniel employs it eschatologically: the righteous will shine with this same quality of light in the age to come, an image picked up in the New Testament (Matthew 13:43). The term belongs to the vocabulary of apocalyptic vision, where light signifies divine presence and vindication. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: brightness, like-brightness-of | es: como-resplandor-de, resplandor | fr: splendeur | de: [זהר], [כזהר] Ezek 8:2; Dan 12:3

זֹו H2097 Pro-fs (1×)

This (feminine demonstrative pronoun); appearing in Hosea 7:16 and Psalm 132:12, an archaic form of zot

This pronoun is an archaic or variant spelling of the common demonstrative 'this' (feminine). It appears in Hosea 7:16—'this is their derision'—referring to Israel's coming fall by the sword. The form also occurs in Psalm 132:12 as a relative pronoun, 'my testimony which...' The rarity of this spelling compared to the standard form suggests either dialectal variation or archaic usage preserved in poetic contexts.

(1×) All four translations render as 'this' with variations: Spanish 'esto,' English 'this,' French 'ceci.' The grammatical function is straightforward—pointing to something previously mentioned or contextually present. In Hosea 7:16, 'this' refers to the judgment announced: falling by the sword, becoming an object of derision. The demonstrative makes the divine verdict concrete and immediate, transforming prophetic announcement into inescapable reality. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: this | es: esto | fr: ceci | de: [זו] Hos 7:16

זוּ H2098 Pro-r (15×)

This; which, who — an archaic poetic pronoun serving as both demonstrative and relative

An indeclinable archaic pronoun found almost exclusively in poetry, especially the Psalms and the Song of the Sea (Exod 15). As a demonstrative it means 'this' (Hab 1:11 'this his strength'; Ps 62:11 'these two things I have heard'). As a relative pronoun it parallels the more common אֲשֶׁר, introducing clauses like 'the people which you redeemed' (Exod 15:13, 16) and 'against whom we sinned' (Isa 42:24). Its haunting, elevated register gives passages an archaic solemnity that later Hebrew reserved for liturgical and prophetic contexts.

this, which, who (archaic demonstrative/relative pronoun) (15×) An archaic, indeclinable pronoun functioning both demonstratively ('this') and relatively ('which, who, whom') in poetic and liturgical Hebrew. As a demonstrative: Hab 1:11 'this his strength', Ps 62:11 'these two things'. As a relative: Exod 15:13 'the people which you redeemed', Isa 42:24 'against whom we sinned', Ps 9:15 'the net which they hid'. Cross-lingual evidence reflects this duality — spa 'esta/contra quien', fra 'ce/ceci', deu 'dies/der' — confirming the single pronoun's two syntactic roles. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: He-against-whom, this, which | es: contra-quien, esta, este | fr: [זו], ce, ceci | de: [זו], der, dies Exod 15:13; Exod 15:16; Ps 9:15; Ps 10:2; Ps 12:7

זִו H2099 N-proper-fs (2×)

Ziv; the second month of the Hebrew calendar (April-May), associated with spring flowers and temple construction

Ziv is the pre-exilic name for the second month of the Hebrew year, roughly corresponding to late April and early May. It appears only in 1 Kings 6:1 and 6:37, both times marking the beginning of Solomon's temple construction. The Aramaic cognate suggests meanings like 'brightness' or 'freshness,' and the Targum expands it as 'the month of the brightness of flowers,' evoking the spring bloom. Later Jewish tradition replaced this with the Babylonian name 'Iyyar.' The Septuagint manuscripts vary widely in how they render it, reflecting uncertainty about these ancient month names.

(2×) The archaic Hebrew name for the second month, preserved in the temple-building narrative. The etymology points to radiance or blooming, making it a seasonal marker tied to spring's flourishing. That Solomon began the temple precisely in this month may carry symbolic weight—new life, divine blessing, the brightness of Yahweh's presence finding an earthly dwelling. The shift to Babylonian month names after the exile gradually obscured this older, more poetic designation, yet its preservation in Kings reminds us of Israel's pre-exilic calendar. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: Ziv | es: Ziv | fr: Ziv | de: Ziv 1Kgs 6:1; 1Kgs 6:37

זוּב H2100 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (42×)

To flow or gush; used of water, a land flowing with milk and honey, bodily discharges in purity law, and figuratively of wasting away.

Zûv captures liquid in motion — water gushing from a smitten rock (Ps 78:20; 105:41), milk and honey flowing from a promised land, or the bodily discharges that define ritual impurity in Leviticus 15. The famous phrase ʾereṣ zāvat ḥālāv ûdĕvash ('a land flowing with milk and honey') accounts for many occurrences and paints abundance as overflow. In purity legislation, the substantivized participle zāv ('one who has a discharge') becomes almost a technical noun — the person defined by their flow. Arabic dhāba ('to melt, dissolve, flow') and Aramaic dûv illuminate the figurative extension in Lam 4:9, where the wounded 'waste away' as life itself flows out.

1. to flow, gush out (26×) To flow or gush out, especially of liquids in abundance. This covers both the poetic image of water gushing from a rock (Ps 78:20; Isa 48:21) and the celebrated formula 'a land flowing with milk and honey' (Exod 3:8, 17; Deut 6:3; and throughout). Spanish que-fluye/que-mana, French coulant, and German flowing all render this liquid abundance. The participle zāvat in the 'milk and honey' formula is feminine, agreeing with ʾereṣ ('land'), depicting the land itself as a source that overflows with blessing. FLOWING WATER

en: flowing, flowing-of, flowing-with | es: fluye, que-fluye, que-mana | fr: [זבת], coulant, coulant-avec | de: [זבת], flowing, flowing-mit Exod 3:8; Exod 3:17; Exod 13:5; Exod 33:3; Lev 15:25

2. one having a bodily discharge (14×) A substantivized participle (zāv) denoting a person suffering from an abnormal bodily emission — 'one who has a discharge.' This is nearly a technical legal term in Leviticus 15, where it defines a category of ritual impurity. French a-un-écoulement, Spanish con-flujo, and German mit-Ausfluss all render the clinical specificity. The zāv is subject to detailed purification regulations (Lev 15:2-15), making this participle function more like a noun than a verb form. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-one-having-discharge, has-a-discharge, having-discharge | es: con-flujo, el-que-fluye, flujo | fr: a-un-écoulement, et-le-un-having-écoulement, having-écoulement | de: der-eins-having-Ausfluss, eins-mit-Ausfluss, eins-mit-discharge Lev 15:2; Lev 15:4; Lev 15:6; Lev 15:7; Lev 15:8

3. discharge, flow (nominal) (1×) Nominal use referring to the discharge itself rather than the person experiencing it, attested in Lev 15:19 with a feminine possessive suffix (zôvāh, 'her discharge'). Spanish su-flujo, French sa-écoulement, and German ihr-Ausfluss all render this as a possessed noun. This sense narrows from the flowing person to the flowing substance, particularly menstrual or genital emission. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: her-discharge | es: su-flujo | fr: sa-écoulement | de: ihr-Ausfluss Lev 15:19

4. to waste away, pine (1×) Figurative extension meaning to waste away or pine, as of those whose life ebbs out like a flowing liquid. Attested in Lam 4:9, where those pierced by the sword fare better than those who 'waste away' from hunger — life draining slowly rather than gushing. The Arabic cognate dhāba ('to melt, dissolve') supports this metaphorical extension from physical flow to existential dissolution. FLOWING WATER

en: waste-away | es: ellos-se-desvanecen | fr: [יזובו] | de: [יזובו] Lam 4:9

זוֹב H2101 N-msc (13×)

Bodily discharge or flux from the genitals, rendering a person ritually unclean under Levitical law

A technical term confined entirely to Leviticus 15, where it governs the ritual purity legislation surrounding genital emissions. Applied to both men and women, it covers abnormal discharges that make a person ceremonially unclean and outlines the steps toward purification. The word appears nowhere else in the Hebrew Bible, underscoring its specialized legal register. Cross-linguistic evidence — French 'ecoulement,' German 'Ausfluss,' Spanish 'flujo' — uniformly points to a flowing medical discharge rather than a general bodily function.

bodily discharge, flux (13×) A genital discharge or flux that triggers ritual impurity, used exclusively within the Priestly purity code of Leviticus 15. Covers both the normal menstrual flow of women (Lev 15:19) and pathological emissions in men and women (Lev 15:2-15, 25-30). The term's restriction to a single legislative chapter highlights its function as a precise cultic-medical category rather than a general word for bodily fluid. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: discharge-of, from-discharge-of, from-her-discharge | es: de-flujo-de, de-su-flujo, en-su-flujo | fr: dans-son-écoulement, de-sa-écoulement, de-son-écoulement | de: Ausfluss-von, having-Ausfluss, ihr-Ausfluss Lev 15:2; Lev 15:3; Lev 15:13

זִיד H2102 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (10×)

To act presumptuously, be arrogant in defiance of God or authority; also as a homonymous root, to boil or seethe (of cooking).

Two distinct semantic roots share this lexical form. The dominant one means to act with brazen presumption or insolent arrogance, especially against divine authority — a word freighted with covenantal gravity. Jethro uses it of Egypt's oppression (Exod 18:11), the Torah reserves it for those who defy judicial verdicts (Deut 17:13) or prophesy without commission (Deut 18:20), and Nehemiah's prayer catalogs Israel's long history of acting presumptuously against God's commands (Neh 9:10, 16, 29). The second root appears only once, in Jacob's simmering lentil stew (Gen 25:29), where it straightforwardly means 'to boil.' Spanish distinguishes these cleanly: 'actuaron con soberbia' (acted with arrogance) versus 'coció' (cooked).

1. to act presumptuously, be arrogant (9×) To act presumptuously, arrogantly, or with willful defiance — especially against God or legitimate authority. This covers the legal-covenantal sense found throughout the Torah and Prophets: Egypt's presumption against Israel (Exod 18:11), the premeditated murderer who 'acts presumptuously' (Exod 21:14), Israel's brazen disobedience at Hormah (Deut 1:43), the false prophet who speaks without divine commission (Deut 18:20), Babylon's pride against YHWH (Jer 50:29), and Nehemiah's retrospective on Israel's stiff-necked history (Neh 9:10, 16, 29). French leaves several occurrences untranslated, suggesting difficulty in capturing the specifically covenantal weight of this presumption. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: acted-arrogantly, acts-presumptuously, and-you-acted-presumptuously | es: actuaron-con-soberbia, actuaron-soberbiamente, actuarán-con-soberbia | fr: [הזידו], [זדה], agit-avec-présomption | de: [הזידו], [זדה], acts-presumptuously Exod 18:11; Exod 21:14; Deut 1:43; Deut 17:13; Deut 18:20

2. to boil, seethe (1×) To boil, seethe, cook by boiling — a homonymous root attested only in Genesis 25:29, where Jacob 'boiled' (wayyazed) a stew of lentils. The multilingual evidence confirms a sharp semantic break: Spanish uses 'coció' (cooked), French 'bouilli' (boiled), and German 'kochte' (cooked), none of which carry any trace of the arrogance meaning. This is best treated as a distinct root (zid/zud II) rather than a metaphorical extension. BOIL COOK FOOD

en: and-boiled | es: Y-coció | fr: et-bouilli | de: und-kochte Gen 25:29

זוּד H2103 Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf (1×)

To act presumptuously, arrogantly (Aramaic Haphel infinitive); Nebuchadnezzar's prideful behavior (Daniel 5:20)

This Aramaic infinitive describes Nebuchadnezzar's fatal flaw: his heart became proud and his spirit hardened 'to act presumptuously.' The causative Haphel stem emphasizes deliberate arrogant action. Daniel uses this to explain why Nebuchadnezzar was deposed—his presumption crossed a line, prompting divine judgment. The verb parallels the Hebrew root for arrogance and presumption, and the context (royal hubris, divine humbling) is classic biblical theodicy.

(1×) Spanish 'con-soberbia' (with pride), English 'to-act-proudly'—both capturing the arrogant disposition. Daniel 5:20 explains that Nebuchadnezzar's presumptuous pride led to his temporary madness and deposition, a cautionary tale Daniel tells Belshazzar to warn against similar hubris. The infinitive emphasizes ongoing, habitual arrogance: not a single act but a pattern of behavior that provoked divine intervention. The story illustrates the danger of royal self-exaltation, the king who forgets his accountability to the King of Heaven. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-act-proudly | es: con-soberbia | fr: Ézéchiel | de: [להודה] Dan 5:20

זוּזִים H2104 Art / N-proper-mp (1×)

The Zuzim, an ancient Transjordanian people defeated in Genesis 14:5; possibly identical with the Zamzummim

The Zuzim appear in Genesis 14:5 as one of several ancient peoples defeated by the eastern kings in their campaign through Transjordan. They dwelt in a place called Ham, somewhere between Bashan and Moab. Many scholars identify them with the Zamzummim mentioned in Deuteronomy 2:20, suggesting textual variation in the tribal name. Otherwise unknown, they represent the pre-Israelite population that the narrator presents as powerful ('mighty nations' in the Septuagint) but nonetheless defeatable.

(1×) Spanish 'zuzitas' and English 'the-Zuzim' transliterate the gentilicial form, while French and German add the definite article. Genesis 14 preserves archaic geographical and ethnic information, listing peoples otherwise unknown to us. The Zuzim's defeat by Chedorlaomer and his allies sets the stage for Lot's capture and Abraham's rescue mission. These ancient peoples function narratively as the backdrop against which Abraham's faithfulness and military prowess stand out. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: the-Zuzim | es: zuzitas | fr: le-Zuzim | de: die-Susiter Gen 14:5

זוֹחֶת H2105 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zoheth, a descendant of Judah (1 Chronicles 4:20); etymology and meaning unknown

Zoheth appears in the genealogies of Judah, mentioned only in 1 Chronicles 4:20 (also referenced as 'son of Zoheth'). The etymology is uncertain—lexicons offer no clear derivation. Ancient Greek manuscripts vary in their transliterations, suggesting the name was unfamiliar even to early translators. The single occurrence in a genealogical list leaves us with a name anchored to the tribe of Judah but otherwise undefined.

(1×) Translations universally transliterate: Spanish 'Zojet,' English 'Zocheth,' with French and German bracketing. First Chronicles preserves extensive genealogical material for Judah, and Zoheth is one among many names whose historical persons are lost to us. His inclusion establishes tribal connection and ancestral legitimacy but provides no narrative development. The name survives as a bare record, testimony to a life we know nothing about beyond its place in Judah's lineage. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zocheth | es: Zojet | fr: [זוחת] | de: [זוחת] 1Chr 4:20

זָוִית H2106 Prep-k / N-fpc (2×)

corner-pillars, corners; architectural or sculptural features, used literally and metaphorically

This term, borrowed from Aramaic into late Hebrew, refers to corners or corner-pillars—structural or decorative elements at the edges of buildings or altars. It appears twice. In Zechariah 9:15, warriors soaked in blood are compared to 'the corners of the altar,' evoking the ritual sprinkling of blood at the altar's horns. In Psalm 144:12, daughters are likened to 'corner-pillars carved in palace fashion,' suggesting both beauty and structural importance. The Aramaic origin (common in Syriac for the standard Hebrew 'pinnah' or 'miqtso'a') entered Hebrew as a loan-word, later giving Arabic its term for 'corner' (zawiya).

(2×) Architectural corners or decorative corner-pillars, used in vivid similes. Zechariah's image of blood-soaked warriors 'like the corners of the altar' draws on sacrificial imagery—the most sacred corners where atoning blood was applied (Leviticus 1:5). The psalmist's portrait of daughters as carved corner-pillars suggests both elegance and foundational strength, celebrating women as essential to the household's structure. The term's Aramaic roots reflect post-exilic linguistic influence, as Hebrew absorbed terms from its imperial environment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-corner-pillars, like-corners-of | es: como-columnas-de-esquina, como-esquinas-de | fr: angle, comme-angle | de: [כזויות], wie-corner-pillars Ps 144:12; Zech 9:15

זוּל H2107 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (2×)

to lavish, pour out; used of pouring gold and of despising or treating lightly

This verb carries a dual sense of lavishing or pouring out, and by extension, cheapening or despising. In Isaiah 46:6, it describes those who 'lavish gold from the purse' to commission an idol—a wasteful, almost contemptuous expenditure on what is worthless. The second occurrence (Lamentations 1:8, if this root) speaks of despising or lightly esteeming Jerusalem. The Aramaic cognates mean 'to be cheap' or 'hold in low regard,' suggesting semantic overlap between extravagant pouring and treating something as valueless. The imagery critiques both material excess and spiritual disregard.

(2×) A verb describing the act of lavishly pouring out resources (especially gold) or treating something as cheap and worthless. Isaiah's use is ironic: the very act of lavishing wealth on idol-making reveals the folly of treating the priceless (Yahweh) as if it could be replaced by metal. The Aramaic background ('cheap, lightly esteemed') infuses the word with disdain—what is poured out carelessly is implicitly valueless. This semantic range captures both profligacy and contempt, twin forms of misvaluing. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: Those-lavishing, despise-her | es: Los-que-derraman, la-han-despreciado | fr: ils-l'ont-méprisée, mépriser | de: [הוילוה], [הולים] Isa 46:6; Lam 1:8

זוּלָה H2108 Prep (16×)

Except, besides, apart from — a preposition expressing exclusion or sole exception

A prepositional particle derived from a noun root suggesting 'removal,' used to carve out exceptions from a general statement. When Caleb alone is exempted from the wilderness generation's judgment, this is the word that marks the exception: 'save Caleb' (Deut 1:36). It serves the same function in theological declarations of divine uniqueness — 'there is no God besides Me' (Hos 13:4; Isa 45:5, 21) — and in David's prayer acknowledging YHWH's incomparability: 'there is none besides You' (2 Sam 7:22 = 1 Chr 17:20). It takes pronominal suffixes freely and functions as a synonym of mibbal'adey and bilti. Spanish 'excepto' and German 'ausser' directly mirror its exclusive force.

except, besides (16×) A preposition meaning 'except, besides, apart from,' used to indicate exclusion or sole exception. It appears in legal-narrative contexts to single out individuals — Caleb alone spared from the wilderness decree (Deut 1:36), the sole sword available at Nob (1 Sam 21:9). Most strikingly, it carries monotheistic force in prophetic declarations: 'there is no God besides Me' (Hos 13:4; Isa 45:5, 21; cf. 2 Sam 7:22; Ps 18:31). Takes various pronominal suffixes (zulathi, zulatekha, zulathah) and stands synonymous with mibbal'adey and bilti. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: besides, besides-Me, besides-You | es: excepto, excepto-ella, excepto-tú | fr: [זולתי], [זולתך], besides-tu | de: [זולתי], [זולתך], ausser Deut 1:36; Deut 4:12; Josh 11:13; Ruth 4:4; 1Sam 21:10

זוּן H2109a V-Pual-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

Well-fed (Hophal participle); describing lustful horses in Jeremiah 5:8, possibly with sexual connotations

This Hophal participle describes horses in Jeremiah's indictment of Judah's adultery: 'They were well-fed, lusty stallions, each neighing after his neighbor's wife.' The passive form ('being fed' or 'having been fed') emphasizes their condition—pampered, overfed, driven by appetite rather than need. Some Assyriological studies suggest connections to sexual desire in the cognate root. The image is vivid and unflattering: Israel's wealthy elite, sated and lecherous, pursuing illicit relationships.

(1×) Spanish 'bien-alimentados' (well-fed) and English 'well-fed' both focus on the alimentary aspect, while the context makes clear this feeding produces sexual excess. Jeremiah 5:8 uses animal imagery to depict moral degradation: like overfed stallions who neigh for mares, Judah's men pursue their neighbors' wives. The metaphor links physical satiety with moral corruption, suggesting that prosperity without righteousness produces lust and social chaos. FEEDING AND NOURISHING

en: well-fed | es: bien-alimentados | fr: [מיזנים] | de: [מיזנים] Jer 5:8

יזן H2109b

adjective of uncertain meaning; possibly 'well-fed' or 'lustful,' textual variant

This rare participial form appears in Jeremiah's condemnation of Judah's moral corruption, describing lustful behavior. The exact meaning remains disputed—some connect it to being well-fed or sleek like pampered horses, others to weighing or being equipped, still others to sexual readiness. The context clearly involves sexual metaphor, comparing Judah's idolatry to horses in heat. Ancient versions struggled with the word, suggesting its meaning was uncertain even early. The passage's vivid imagery of moral corruption outweighs the precise lexical value of this difficult term.

זוּן H2110 V-Hitpael-Imperf-3ms (1×)

To be fed (Aramaic Hithpael); describing how Nebuchadnezzar was fed from the field during his madness (Daniel 4:12)

This Aramaic Hithpael verb describes Nebuchadnezzar's condition during his divinely imposed madness: he 'was fed from the grass of the field' like an animal. The reflexive/passive Hithpael indicates he received feeding from the field, emphasizing his degradation from royal luxury to bestial existence. Daniel's vision depicts the king driven from human society, eating grass, until seven times pass and he acknowledges God's sovereignty. The verb captures the humiliation of a ruler reduced to animal status.

(1×) Spanish 'se-alimentaba' (he fed himself / was fed), English 'was-fed,' French 'nourrir' (to feed)—all convey the passive reception of nourishment from the field. Daniel 4:12's context is judgment and restoration: the proud king who exalted himself must learn dependence through radical humiliation. Being 'fed from the field' like cattle strips Nebuchadnezzar of human dignity, throne, and reason —until the appointed time when he looks up, recognizes Heaven's rule, and is restored. FEEDING AND NOURISHING

en: was-fed | es: se-alimentaba | fr: nourrir | de: [יהזין] Dan 4:12

זוּעַ H2111 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (3×)

tremble, quake (in fear or physical shaking)

A verb of trembling, whether from fear, awe, or physical shaking. Haman 'trembled' before Esther (Esth 5:9), the 'keepers of the house' (hands or arms) 'tremble' in old age (Eccl 12:3), and Habakkuk envisions creditors who will 'shake' Babylon violently (Hab 2:7). The Spanish tembló, que tiemblen and German/French cognates capture both the involuntary physical response and the violent shaking inflicted by others. The word can be passive (trembling with fear) or causative (shaking violently).

(3×) Describes trembling from fear (Esth 5:9), the shaking of limbs in old age (Eccl 12:3), and the violent shaking of judgment (Hab 2:7). The multilingual glosses reflect both involuntary tremor (trembled, tiemblen) and forceful agitation (shake, sacuden). The semantic range spans emotional, physiological, and violent domains. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: he-trembled, those-who-shake-you, when-tremble | es: los-que-te-sacuden, que-tiemblen, tembló | fr: [זע], trembler, שיזעו | de: [זע], [מזעזעיך], [שיזעו] Esth 5:9; Eccl 12:3; Hab 2:7

זוּעַ H2112 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (4×)

To tremble, shake with dread; an Aramaic verb describing the terror evoked by sovereign power.

An Aramaic verb appearing in Daniel's court narratives, describing the trembling fear that peoples felt before Nebuchadnezzar and before the living God. The participial form captures an ongoing state of dread rather than a momentary fright. In Dan 5:19, nations trembled before the king's absolute power; in Dan 6:26, the same verb is transferred to God as the one before whom all should tremble. Spanish 'temblando' and French 'troubler' capture the visceral, physical dimension of this fear-response.

(4×) To tremble or quake with fear before a sovereign authority. Used in Aramaic sections of Daniel as a participle describing the dread response of peoples and nations. Before Nebuchadnezzar, all peoples trembled at his power to kill or spare (Dan 5:19); the same language is then applied to the God of Daniel, before whom all the earth must tremble (Dan 6:26). The Ketiv/Qere variation (za'ayin/zi'in) reflects dialectal spelling differences. Spanish 'temblando' vividly conveys the ongoing, bodily nature of the fear. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: (qere:trembling), [ketiv:trembling] | es: (temblando), [temblando] | fr: troubler | de: [זאעין], [זיעין] Dan 5:19; Dan 6:26

זְוָעָה H2113 Prep-l / N-fs (6×)

Trembling, horror; an object of terror or dread, used in covenant-curse language for nations given over to judgment.

A feminine noun denoting trembling or shuddering, and by metonymy the thing that causes such horror – an object of dread. It appears almost exclusively in curse formulae where God threatens to make Israel (or Jerusalem) a terror to the nations. Deuteronomy 28:25 sets the pattern: 'you shall become a za'avah to all the kingdoms of the earth.' Jeremiah repeats this formula four times (15:4; 24:9; 29:18; 34:17), pairing it with words for shame, reproach, and cursing. The word occurs in two spelling variants – zeva'ah and za'avah – which are metathesized forms of each other. Spanish distinguishes 'horror,' 'terror,' and 'espanto,' capturing the range of dread the word conveys.

trembling, horror, object of terror (6×) An object of trembling, horror, or terror – something that causes others to shudder. Used almost exclusively in covenant-curse formulations where God declares that a nation or city will become a za'avah (object of dread) to surrounding kingdoms. Deuteronomy 28:25 inaugurates the formula, and Jeremiah intensifies it across four passages (15:4; 24:9; 29:18; 34:17), often in lists alongside 'reproach,' 'curse,' 'byword,' and 'desolation.' Also in 2 Chronicles 29:8 and Isaiah 28:19. Spanish distinguishes 'horror,' 'terror,' and 'espanto,' while French 'effroi' and German 'Entsetzen' both emphasize the visceral shuddering this word evokes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [K], [a-horror], [as-terror] | es: [para-horror], [para-terror], [por-espanto] | fr: [לזועה], effroi | de: Entsetzen, [לזועה] 2Chr 29:8; Isa 28:19; Jer 15:4; Jer 24:9; Jer 29:18

זוּר H2114a V-Hofal-Prtcpl-ms (76×)

To be strange or foreign; as participle: a stranger, outsider, foreigner, or alien — one who does not belong to the family, community, or covenant.

A deeply relational word in Hebrew, zur captures the experience of being outside — outside the family, outside the priesthood, outside the covenant. Its participial form zar appears most often as a noun meaning 'stranger' or 'outsider,' someone who has no authorized access (Lev 22:10) or no kinship claim (Deut 25:5). Proverbs deploys it pointedly for the 'strange woman' whose allure leads to ruin (Prov 5:3, 7:5). When applied to things rather than people — strange fire (Lev 10:1), foreign gods — it signals what does not belong in sacred space. In its finite verb forms (Qal and Nifal), it describes the painful process of becoming estranged, as when Job laments that his acquaintances 'are wholly estranged from me' (Job 19:13).

1. stranger, foreigner (person) (54×) The dominant participial use, functioning as a substantive noun: a stranger, foreigner, or unauthorized outsider. The multilingual evidence is remarkably consistent — Spanish extraños, French étranger, German Fremder all converge on the core meaning of social and ritual exclusion.

In Levitical contexts (Lev 22:10, 12, 13; Exod 29:33), this denotes anyone outside the priestly household who is forbidden to eat holy offerings. In broader usage (Isa 29:5; Hos 5:7), it refers to foreign enemies or those outside the covenant community. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: a-stranger, foreign, from-a-city | es: a-extraños, aventadores, extranjeros | fr: stranger, un-étranger, étranger | de: Fremder, ein-Fremder, entfremden Exod 29:33; Exod 30:33; Lev 22:10; Lev 22:12; Lev 22:13

2. strange, foreign (of things/gods) (12×) Applied attributively to non-personal referents — strange fire (Lev 10:1; Num 3:4, 26:61), strange incense (Exod 30:9), foreign gods, and alien things. German fremd and Spanish extraña capture this adjectival flavor. The underlying logic is the same as sense 1 (what does not belong), but the referent shifts from persons to objects, offerings, and deities. The strange fire of Nadab and Abihu (Lev 10:1) is the paradigmatic example: an offering God 'had not commanded,' categorically outside sanctioned worship. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: foreign, strange, strange-god | es: cosas-extrañas, extraña, extrañas | fr: foreign, strange, étrange | de: entfremden, foreign, fremd Exod 30:9; Lev 10:1; Num 3:4; Num 26:61; 2Kgs 19:24

3. strange woman, adulteress (5×) The specialized Proverbial usage for the zarah, the 'strange woman' or adulteress whose lips drip honey but whose end is bitter as wormwood (Prov 5:3-4). Appearing in Prov 2:16, 5:3, 5:20, 7:5, and 22:14, this sense is distinguished by its consistent literary context in wisdom poetry and its moral-sexual connotation. French étrangère and Spanish la extraña preserve the feminine form. Whether she is ethnically foreign or merely 'other' to the covenant marriage is debated, but the clustering evidence treats her as a distinct semantic profile. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: strange, strange-women, the-foreign-one | es: con-la-extraña, extraña, la-extraña | fr: dans-étrangère, étrangère | de: fremd Prov 2:16; Prov 5:3; Prov 5:20; Prov 7:5; Prov 22:14

4. be estranged, turn away (Qal) (3×) The finite Qal verb meaning to become estranged, alienated, or to turn away. In Ps 58:3 the wicked 'go astray from the womb,' and in Job 19:13 Job's acquaintances have become utterly estranged from him. Ps 78:30 describes Israel turning away before their craving was satisfied. Spanish se apartaron ('they drew apart') and German sie-sind-estranged capture the active process of relational rupture. This is the verbal core behind the participial senses — the dynamic act of becoming an outsider. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: are-estranged, they-are-estranged, they-turned-away | es: se-apartaron, se-extraviaron, se-han-extrañado | fr: étrangère, être-étranger | de: fremd, sie-sind-estranged, sie-wandte-weg Job 19:13; Ps 58:3; Ps 78:30

5. be estranged, go back (Nifal) (2×) The Nifal (passive/reflexive) stem expressing estrangement as something undergone or self-directed — to be estranged, to fall back, to withdraw. In Isa 1:4 Israel has 'gone backward' (turned away from the LORD), and in Ezek 14:5 the house of Israel 'are all estranged from me through their idols.' Spanish se apartaron and German entfremden (to alienate) point to the passive or reflexive quality that distinguishes this from the active Qal. The theological weight is heavy: this is covenant alienation described from the inside. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: are-estranged | es: se-apartaron | fr: être-étranger | de: entfremden Isa 1:4; Ezek 14:5

זוּר H2114b V-Qal-Perf-3fs (1×)

To be loathsome, offensive (Qal); Job's breath is loathsome to his wife (Job 19:17)

This verb describes Job's condition: 'My breath is loathsome to my wife.' Some derive it from the root meaning 'become strange,' implying estrangement and disgust. Others propose a separate root meaning 'be foul' or 'loathsome,' citing Arabic cognates. Either way, the semantic result is similar: suffering has made Job physically repulsive, alienating him even from his spouse. The parallel clause mentions pleading with his wife and brothers, emphasizing his social isolation.

(1×) Spanish 'es-extraño' (is strange), English 'is-offensive,' French 'étrangère' (strange/foreign)—revealing the interpretive divide between 'strange' and 'loathsome.' Job 19:17's context is profound social suffering: disease has made Job disgusting to those closest to him. Whether the repulsion stems from strangeness or loathsomeness, the effect is the same—isolation, rejection, the breakdown of intimate relationships under the pressure of inexplicable suffering. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: is-offensive | es: es-extraño | fr: étrangère | de: [זרה] Job 19:17

זוּר H2115 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs / 3fs (3×)

press, squeeze, wring out (liquid from something)

A verb denoting pressure applied to extract liquid or crush underfoot. Gideon 'squeezed' a fleece and wrung out dew (Judg 6:38), ostrich eggs may be 'crushed' underfoot (Job 39:15), and a viper's egg when 'pressed' (or hatched?) releases danger (Isa 59:5). The sore in Isaiah 1:6 has 'not been pressed out'—not drained or treated. The Spanish exprimió, los aplastará and French/German squeeze/crush glosses all emphasize forceful compression or extraction.

(3×) The verb appears in contexts of squeezing out liquid (Judg 6:38), crushing underfoot (Job 39:15), and failing to press/treat a wound (Isa 1:6, passive). The multilingual evidence (squeezed, exprimió, crush, aplastará) points to applying pressure to extract, compress, or destroy. The semantic core is forceful manipulation of solid or semi-solid matter. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: and-he-squeezed, may-crush-it, pressed-out | es: exprimidas, los-aplastará, y-exprimió | fr: [זרר], et-il-squeezed, תזורה-elle | de: [זרר], [תזורה], und-er-squeezed Judg 6:38; Job 39:15; Isa 1:6

זוּר H2116 Conj-w (1×)

The one crushed, pressed (participle); crushed viper eggs in Isaiah 59:5, metaphor for violence producing violence

This passive participle appears in Isaiah's indictment: they hatch viper eggs, and 'the one crushed' (the egg that's broken) releases a viper. The verb means 'press' or 'squeeze,' and here it's used in a grim metaphor for violence begetting violence: crushing the egg doesn't destroy the threat, it releases it prematurely. Isaiah 59 catalogs Judah's sins—violence, falsehood, injustice—using vivid imagery of webs and eggs to depict the self-destructive nature of evil.

(1×) Spanish 'y-lo-que-se-rompe' (and that which breaks), English 'and-the-one-crushed'—both capturing the passive action. The metaphor is striking: even attempting to destroy the eggs (evil plans/acts) results in danger, as the premature viper emerges to strike. Isaiah uses this image to show that Judah's society is saturated with violence—every action, even defensive ones, produces more harm. The crushing becomes a metaphor for futile attempts to escape the consequences of systemic evil. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: and-the-one-crushed | es: y-lo-que-se-rompe | fr: [והזורה] | de: [והזורה] Isa 59:5

זָזָא H2117 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Zaza, a descendant of Jerahmeel from the tribe of Judah (1 Chronicles 2:33); possibly related to Assyrian name Zazâ

Zaza appears in the genealogy of Jerahmeel within the tribe of Judah, mentioned only in 1 Chronicles 2:33. Scholars note a possible connection to an Assyrian personal name Zazâ, suggesting the name had wider Semitic usage. The etymology remains unclear, and the single biblical occurrence offers no narrative context. Like many names in Chronicles' genealogies, Zaza marks a person's place in Israel's ancestral structure without telling us anything about their life.

(1×) All translations simply transliterate with coordinating conjunction: Spanish 'y-Zaza,' English 'and-Zaza,' with French and German bracketing. First Chronicles preserves extensive genealogical material for the tribe of Judah, and Zaza is one link in the long chain descending from Jerahmeel. His inclusion establishes tribal connection and territorial claims in the restoration period, though we know nothing of his personal history or significance beyond this genealogical anchor. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Zaza | es: y-Zaza | fr: [וזזא] | de: [וזזא] 1Chr 2:33

זָחַח H2118 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (2×)
to be displaced, loosened, removed; used of the high priest's breastpiece potentially slipping from the ephod
This rare verb, from an Aramaic root meaning to push away or move aside, appears only in Exodus 28:28 and 39:21, both describing the construction of the high priest's garments. The concern is that the breastpiece (containing the Urim and Thummim) not be 'displaced' or 'loosened' from the ephod. Careful binding with blue cord was prescribed to prevent this separation. The term emphasizes stability and permanence in sacred vestments—the oracular breastpiece must remain firmly attached, symbolizing the inseparability of priestly intercession and divine revelation.

(2×) A Niphal verb describing the unintended displacement or slipping of a sacred object, specifically the high priest's breastpiece. The Priestly legislation insists on tight binding to prevent this movement, reflecting a theology where every detail of worship matters. The Aramaic root suggests a pushing or thrusting away, here passivized: the breastpiece must not be allowed to slip. This care for liturgical precision underscores the holiness code's concern for order and the integrity of mediatory symbols. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY
en: be-loosened, shall-slip | es: se-desplazara, se-separará | fr: –slip, être-loosened | de: sein-loosened, soll-slip Exod 28:28; Exod 39:21

זָחַל H2119a V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc (2×)
those that crawl; serpents and creeping things, often as instruments of judgment or symbols of fear
This participle describes creatures that crawl or slither along the ground, particularly serpents. In Deuteronomy 32:24, 'crawlers of the dust' are sent as divine judgment against Israel, clearly referring to venomous snakes. In Micah 7:17, the nations in fear of Yahweh will 'crawl like crawlers of the earth,' emerging trembling from their hiding places. The Aramaic and Syriac cognates for 'crawl' and 'worm' or 'locust' enrich the semantic field. The imagery evokes both the curse of Genesis 3 (the serpent's belly-crawling) and the vulnerability of those who slink in terror.

(2×) A participial noun for crawling creatures, especially serpents, used both literally and metaphorically. Deuteronomy deploys them as instruments of covenant curse—poisonous reptiles executing Yahweh's wrath. Micah reverses the image: hostile nations, once proud, will crawl like serpents from their fortresses in abject fear of Israel's God. The 'dust-crawlers' motif recalls Eden's curse on the serpent, associating this mode of movement with humiliation and judgment. Multilingual evidence confirms the root's connection to reptilian motion and lowliness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: crawlers-of, like-crawlers-of | es: como-reptiles-de, los-que-se-arrastran-por | fr: crawlers-de, ramper | de: [כזחלי], crawlers-von Deut 32:24; Mic 7:17

זָחַל H2119b V-Qal-Perf-1cs (1×)
To fear, be afraid (Qal); Elihu held back from speaking out of fear for his elders (Job 32:6)
This verb, related to Aramaic 'fear,' describes Elihu's initial reticence in the Job dialogue: 'I was afraid and dared not show you my opinion.' The young man defers to his elders, holding back his critique out of reverence and fear. Some interpreters derive the verb from a root meaning 'shrink back,' emphasizing the physical withdrawal that accompanies fear. Either way, it captures Elihu's youthful hesitation before launching into his lengthy speech.

(1×) Spanish 'me-encogí' (I shrank back), English 'I-held-back'—both emphasizing the restraint born of fear. Job 32:6 introduces Elihu's speech, explaining why he waited: respect for age dictated silence, but now, frustrated by the friends' failure to answer Job, he must speak. The verb conveys both appropriate deference and the inner tension of someone bursting to contribute but constrained by social protocol. TREMBLING AND FEAR
en: I-held-back | es: me-encogí | fr: ramper | de: [וחלתי] Job 32:6

זֹחֶלֶת H2120 N-proper-fs (1×)
Zoheleth, 'the Stone of Zoheleth' near En-rogel (1 Kings 1:9); possibly meaning 'serpent' or 'sliding stone'
Zoheleth appears as the name of a stone landmark near En-rogel where Adonijah held his abortive coronation feast. The name might mean 'serpent' or 'sliding/crawling thing,' though some scholars propose astronomical connections (the planet Saturn in Arabic). Others see it as a proper noun whose original meaning was lost even in antiquity. Whatever its etymology, the Stone of Zoheleth marks the site of Adonijah's failed bid for David's throne, a geographical anchor for a pivotal political moment.

(1×) All translations simply transliterate: Spanish 'Zojelet,' English 'Zoheleth,' French and German matching. First Kings 1:9 locates Adonijah's feast precisely, and the Stone of Zoheleth functions as a known landmark. The name's obscurity to modern readers likely mirrors ancient uncertainty about its meaning. It stands as a mute witness to the dynastic struggles of David's old age, the place where Adonijah's ambitions culminated before Solomon's anointing undercut them. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zoheleth | es: Zojelet | fr: Zoheleth | de: Zoheleth 1Kgs 1:9

זֵידוֹן H2121 Art / N-mp (1×)
Raging, insolent (of waters); figurative description of overwhelming hostile forces
This rare adjective appears only in Psalm 124:5, where it describes waters as 'raging' or 'insolent.' The imagery portrays enemies as a turbulent flood threatening to overwhelm God's people. The Spanish 'impetuosas' (impetuous) and the concept of moral insolence converge here—the waters are not merely violent but arrogantly so, embodying the hubris of those who oppose the faithful. This single occurrence captures both physical violence and moral defiance.

(1×) Describes waters as raging or insolent in Psalm 124:5, where enemies are metaphorically portrayed as a flood. The multilingual glosses emphasize both the physical turbulence (French 'bouillonnant,' Spanish 'impetuosas') and the moral dimension of arrogance against God's people. This hapax captures the intersection of natural violence and human presumption. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: the-raging | es: las-impetuosas | fr: le-bouillonnant | de: der-raging Ps 124:5

זִיו H2122 Conj-w / N-mpc / 1cs (6×)
Brightness, splendor; specifically the radiance of a person's face or countenance, used exclusively in Daniel's Aramaic sections.
An Aramaic masculine noun meaning brightness or splendor, appearing only in the book of Daniel. It describes the dazzling appearance of Nebuchadnezzar's dream-image (Dan 2:31), the restoration of royal splendor to Nebuchadnezzar after his humiliation (Dan 4:36), and – most vividly – the change of countenance experienced by Belshazzar when he sees the handwriting on the wall (Dan 5:6, 9, 10). The word may be a loanword from Akkadian zimu ('face, countenance'). Spanish renders it as 'semblante' (countenance) and 'esplendor,' while French uses 'eclat' (radiance), capturing both the facial and luminous aspects.

brightness, splendor (of countenance) (6×) Brightness or splendor, especially of a person's countenance or outward appearance. In Daniel 2:31 it describes the extraordinary radiance of the great statue in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. In Daniel 4:36 it marks the return of royal dignity after the king's seven-year humiliation. In the Belshazzar narrative (Dan 5:6, 9, 10), it describes the change in the king's facial brightness – his countenance falls when the mysterious hand writes on the wall. Possibly borrowed from Akkadian zimu ('face'). Spanish 'semblante' highlights the facial dimension, while French 'eclat' and the underlying sense of radiance point to visible, outward glory. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: and-his-brightness, and-its-brightness, and-my-brightness | es: su-semblante, y-mi-esplendor, y-rostro-de-mí | fr: et-éclat, éclat | de: [וזוּר], [וזיוהּ], [וזיוהּר] Dan 2:31; Dan 4:36; Dan 5:6; Dan 5:9; Dan 5:10

זִיז H2123a Conj-w / N-msc (2×)

moving creatures, beasts; collective term for animals of the field, emphasizing vitality and motion

This term, etymologically linked to movement and vitality, refers collectively to the animals of the field—wild beasts known by God (Psalm 50:11) or threatening Israel like a wild boar (Psalm 80:13). The exact derivation is debated: some connect it to a root meaning 'to move to and fro,' others to Akkadian words for abundance or specific creatures. The Targum renders it as 'worm,' but this seems too narrow. The word captures the teeming, animated life of the wild, whether as objects of divine knowledge or as symbols of destructive threat.

(2×) A collective noun for the moving, living creatures of the field—wild animals in their untamed vitality. In Psalm 50, Yahweh claims to know every 'mover of the field,' asserting total sovereignty over creation (alongside the birds of the mountains). In Psalm 80, enemies are figured as a wild boar and 'whatever moves in the field,' devouring Israel's vine. The term's connection to motion ('moving things') highlights the dynamic, restless character of wild fauna, as opposed to domesticated animals. Assyrian parallels suggest either abundance or specific beasts; Hebrew retains a collective, animated sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-creatures-of, and-whatever-moves-in | es: y-bestia-de, y-lo-que-se-mueve-en | fr: et-abondance | de: und-Geschöpfe-von, und-whatever-moves-in Ps 50:11; Ps 80:13

זִיז H2123b Prep-m / N-msc (1×)

Abundance, fullness; possibly 'breast' as source of nourishment (uncertain etymology)

This obscure noun appears only in Isaiah 66:11, describing Jerusalem's glory from which people will 'suck out and be delighted.' BDB notes uncertainty about whether this derives from a root meaning 'abundance' or whether it's connected to Arabic words for 'breast' or 'udder.' The context strongly favors a nursing metaphor—Jerusalem as mother providing abundant nourishment to her children. The textual history includes proposed emendations, reflecting scribal uncertainty about this rare term.

(1×) Refers to abundance or fullness in Isaiah 66:11, likely in the sense of a nursing breast providing rich nourishment. The parallel with 'suck' and 'be delighted' supports understanding this as Jerusalem's maternal abundance. The French gloss is missing and German brackets the term, indicating translation difficulty. BDB's comparison to Arabic 'udder' terms illuminates the metaphor of divine provision through Zion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-abundance-of | es: de-la-abundancia-de | fr: [מזיז] | de: [מזיז] Isa 66:11

זִיזָא H2124 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

personal name; a Simeonite and a son of Rehoboam

Ziza appears as the name of two individuals: a Simeonite leader listed in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles 4:37, and a son of King Rehoboam mentioned in 2 Chronicles 11:20. The name may be related to the word for 'moving creatures' or could represent a diminutive or affectionate form of another name. The Septuagint offers varied transliterations, reflecting uncertainty about the name's significance. Both occurrences are genealogical, preserving family lines without narrative detail.

(2×) A masculine proper name borne by two men in Israel's genealogical records. The Simeonite Ziza appears in a list of tribal leaders, while Rehoboam's son Ziza is noted among the royal offspring of Judah's first divided-kingdom monarch. The name's etymology remains unclear—possibly linked to 'abundance' or 'movement,' or perhaps a nickname. Its preservation in Chronicles reflects the Chronicler's concern to maintain tribal and dynastic memory, even when narrative details are absent. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ziza, and-Ziza | es: Y-Ziza, Ziza | fr: [וזיזא], [זיזא] | de: [וזיזא], [זיזא] 1Chr 4:37; 2Chr 11:20

זִיזָה H2125 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Zizah, a Levite mentioned in 1 Chronicles 23:11

Zizah appears as a Levitical name in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles 23:11. The name is textually interesting because it appears as 'Zina' in verse 10 of the same chapter. BDB suggests reading 'Ziza' in both places, following the Greek Septuagint which has 'Ziza' consistently. This kind of variation was common in genealogical lists transmitted through scribal copying.

(1×) A Levite listed in 1 Chronicles 23:11, identical with Zina in verse 10. The multilingual glosses show coordination in recognizing this as a proper name requiring transliteration. The Greek manuscript tradition ('Ziza') may preserve the original form more accurately than the Masoretic variation between Zizah and Zina. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Zizah | es: y-Ziza | fr: [וזיזה] | de: [וזיזה] 1Chr 23:11

זִיזָה H2126 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zina, a Levite in 1 Chronicles 23:10, textual variant of Zizah

Zina is the form of a Levitical name appearing in 1 Chronicles 23:10, corresponding to 'Zizah' in verse 11. Modern translations often harmonize these, recognizing them as the same individual. The Hebrew consonantal text could support either vocalization, and BDB recommends reading 'Ziza' consistently based on the Septuagint evidence. Such variations remind us that biblical genealogies passed through centuries of scribal transmission.

(1×) A Levite in 1 Chronicles 23:10, appearing as Zizah in verse 11. The multilingual versions bracket this name, indicating awareness of the textual complexity. The equivalence with Zizah (H2125) suggests these represent different vocalizations of a single original name, possibly 'Ziza' as attested in Greek manuscripts. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zina | es: Zina | fr: [זינא] | de: [זינא] 1Chr 23:10

זִיעַ H2127 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Zi'a, a Gadite warrior listed in 1 Chronicles 5:13

Zi'a appears as a member of the tribe of Gad in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles 5:13. The Greek Septuagint manuscripts show variation ('Zoue' or 'Zea'), reflecting uncertainty about the exact pronunciation. This Gadite would have been among those who settled in the Transjordan region east of the Jordan River, territory suited to the pastoral lifestyle for which Gad was known.

(1×) A Gadite listed in 1 Chronicles 5:13. The multilingual glosses coordinate on the transliteration 'Zia,' while the Greek variants ('Zoue,' 'Zea') show ancient uncertainty about vocalization. This single reference places Zi'a among the Transjordanian tribes whose genealogies are preserved in Chronicles. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Zi'a | es: y-Zia | fr: [וזיע] | de: [וזיע] 1Chr 5:13

זִיף H2128 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (10×)

Ziph — a place name for towns in Judah (one near Hebron, one in the Negev) and a personal name in Chronicles.

Ziph denotes at least two distinct locations and one person. The most prominent is the town in the hill country of Judah southeast of Hebron (Josh 15:55), whose surrounding wilderness became David's hiding place during Saul's pursuit (1 Sam 23:14-15; 26:2). A second Ziph is listed among the towns of the Judean Negev (Josh 15:24). The name also appears as a personal name — a son of Jehallelel in the genealogy of Judah (1 Chr 4:16). Rehoboam later fortified the Hebron-area Ziph (2 Chr 11:8). French preserves the toponym as 'Ziph,' while Spanish adapts it minimally to 'Zif.'

Ziph (proper name, place/person) (10×) The proper name Ziph, used for: (1) a town in the Judean hill country near Hebron (Josh 15:55; 2 Chr 11:8) and its associated wilderness where David took refuge from Saul (1 Sam 23:14-15, 24; 26:2); (2) a town in the Negev of Judah (Josh 15:24); and (3) a Judahite individual, son of Jehallelel (1 Chr 4:16). The directional form ziphah ('toward Ziph,' 1 Sam 23:24) and the construct midbar-ziph ('wilderness of Ziph') confirm the toponym's geographic productivity. All occurrences cluster around the single root identity. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Ziph, and-Ziph | es: Zif, y-Zif | fr: Ziph, [זיף], et-Ziph | de: Ziph, [זיף], und-Ziph Josh 15:24; Josh 15:55; 1Sam 23:14; 1Sam 23:15; 1Sam 23:24

זִיפָה H2129 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Ziphah, son of Jehallelel in the genealogy of Judah (1 Chronicles 4:16)
Ziphah appears in the tribal genealogies of Judah as one of the sons of Jehallelel in 1 Chronicles 4:16. The name may be related to 'Ziph,' a town in the Judean hill country. The Greek Septuagint rendering varies between manuscripts ('Zaira,' 'Zaifa'), and the pairing with another name 'Ziph' in the same verse creates a wordplay or connection to place names in Judah's territory.

(1×) Son of Jehallelel in the Judahite genealogy of 1 Chronicles 4:16, paired with Ziph. The multilingual glosses maintain transliteration, though French and German bracket the term. The Greek variants and connection to the place name Ziph suggest this personal name may derive from geographical associations in Judah's hill country. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Ziphah | es: y-Zifa | fr: [וזיפה] | de: [וזיפה] 1Chr 4:16

זִיפִי H2130 Art / N-proper-mp (3×)
Ziphites, inhabitants of Ziph who twice betrayed David's location to Saul
A gentilic designation for the inhabitants of Ziph, a town in the hill country of Judah. They are remembered primarily for their double betrayal of David, reporting his hiding place to King Saul. The psalm title of Psalm 54 memorializes their treachery.

(3×) PERSONAL NAMES
en: Ziphites, the-Ziphites | es: los-zifeos | fr: Ziphites, le-Ziphien, le-Ziphites | de: Ziphites, der-Ziphites 1Sam 23:19; 1Sam 26:1; Ps 54:1

זִיק H2131a N-fp (3×)
missile, spark, firebrand; flying or leaping projectile
A noun denoting projectiles or sparks—things that leap or fly. It describes 'firebrands and arrows' shot in deadly jest (Prov 26:18), 'kindlers of fire' who 'gird themselves with firebrands' (Isa 50:11, twice). The root suggests something that shoots forth or springs up: either fire-missiles, sparks, or brands. The Spanish chispas and the French/German glosses (זקים ,זיקות) reflect the image of leaping, flying fire. This is weaponized or dangerous fire—unpredictable and destructive.

(3×) Refers to fiery projectiles or sparks in three contexts: deadly missiles (Prov 26:18), and firebrands kindled in judgment (Isa 50:11, twice). The multilingual glosses (firebrands, chispas, זקים) emphasize the flying, leaping quality of fire. The word evokes danger, unpredictability, and the violence of flame. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-among-the-firebrands, firebrands | es: chispas, y-en-chispas | fr: [ובזיקות], [זיקות], וזקים | de: [ובזיקות], [זיקות], [זקים] Prov 26:18; Isa 50:11

זִק H2131b Prep-b / N-mp (4×)
Fetters, chains; bonds used to restrain captives, both literally and figuratively of divine discipline.
A masculine noun found only in the plural, denoting the iron fetters or chains used to bind captives. The word appears in vivid scenes of captivity: Nineveh's nobles led away in chains (Nah 3:10), conquered peoples passing by in bonds (Isa 45:14), and kings bound in fetters (Ps 149:8). Job 36:8 extends the image figuratively — those 'bound in fetters' of affliction are being disciplined by God. Spanish 'cadenas' and English 'chains/fetters' preserve the concrete, physical force of the image.

(4×) Fetters or chains for restraining captives — used both literally and figuratively. Literally, the chains bind prisoners of war: Nineveh's nobles in Nah 3:10, subjugated peoples in Isa 45:14, and kings in Ps 149:8 (parallel to 'iron shackles'). Figuratively, Job 36:8 describes affliction as being 'bound in fetters,' parallel to 'cords of affliction,' depicting God's discipline. Spanish 'cadenas' and English 'chains/fetters' consistently render the concrete image, while French 'étincelle' (spark) in some glosses reflects confusion with the homonym zeq I (spark). CHAINS AND FETTERS
en: in-chains, in-fetters, with-chains | es: con-cadenas, en-cadenas | fr: [בזקים], dans-étincelle, étincelle | de: [בזקים], mit-chains Job 36:8; Ps 149:8; Isa 45:14; Nah 3:10

זַיִת H2132 N-ms (38×)
Olive tree, olive fruit; also used in the toponym 'Mount of Olives'
One of the signature plants of the biblical landscape, the zayit appears from Noah's dove returning with an olive leaf (Gen 8:11) to Zechariah's eschatological vision of the Mount of Olives splitting in two (Zech 14:4). Hebrew uses the same word for the tree and its fruit, but translators often distinguish them – Spanish separates 'olivo' (tree) from 'aceituna' (fruit), while Arabic 'zaytun' (borrowed from the same Semitic root) covers both. The olive's evergreen resilience made it a natural figure for the righteous: 'I am like a green olive tree in the house of God' (Ps 52:8). Its oil lit the tabernacle (Exod 27:20) and anointed kings, binding agricultural and sacred life in a single word.

1. olive tree (34×) The olive tree itself – cultivated Olea europaea in orchards, fields, and figurative speech. Genesis 8:11 introduces the olive branch; Deuteronomy 8:8 lists it among the promised land's seven species; Psalm 52:8 compares the righteous to a flourishing olive tree. Spanish 'olivo,' French 'olivier,' and German 'Oelbaum' designate the tree specifically. OLIVE TREES
en: and-olive-trees, and-olives, like-an-olive-tree | es: como-el-olivo, como-olivo, el-olivo | fr: [זית], comme-olivier, et-olive-arbres | de: Oelbaeume, Oelbaum, [זית] Gen 8:11; Exod 23:11; Exod 27:20; Exod 30:24; Lev 24:2

2. Olives (in Mount of Olives) (3×) The toponym 'Mount of Olives' (har ha-zetim), where the plural functions as part of a proper place name for the ridge east of Jerusalem. David ascends it weeping in 2 Samuel 15:30; Zechariah 14:4 envisions it splitting at the Lord's coming. Spanish 'los Olivos' and German 'der Oelbaeume' preserve the definite plural as a landmark name. OLIVE TREES
en: the-Olives | es: los-Olivos | fr: le-Olives, olivier | de: [הזתים], der-Oelbaeume, der-Olives 2Sam 15:30; Zech 14:4

3. olive fruit (1×) The olive as fruit or agricultural product, distinguished in some languages from the tree. Micah 6:15 speaks of treading olives but not anointing with oil – a judgment oracle where the harvest fails at the fruit stage. Spanish 'aceituna' (the edible olive) separates this cleanly from 'olivo' (the tree), revealing a semantic distinction that Hebrew leaves implicit. OLIVE TREES
en: olive | es: aceituna | fr: olivier | de: Oelbaum Mic 6:15

זֵיתָן H2133 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Zeitan, a Benjamite warrior, possibly meaning 'olive tree' (1 Chronicles 7:10)
Zeitan was a Benjamite listed in the genealogy of 1 Chronicles 7:10. BDB suggests the name may derive from the Hebrew word for 'olive tree,' which would fit the pattern of personal names drawn from flora in biblical genealogies. The Greek manuscripts show minor variation ('Zaithan,' 'Zetha'), but the connection to olive imagery—symbolizing peace, prosperity, and God's blessing—may have been meaningful to those who bore or bestowed this name.

(1×) A Benjamite in 1 Chronicles 7:10, possibly meaning 'olive tree.' The multilingual glosses transliterate the name, with French and German bracketing it. The potential etymological link to olive trees would connect this warrior to symbols of peace and abundance common in biblical onomastics. Greek variants reflect transmission uncertainty. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Zeitan | es: y-Zetán | fr: [וזיתן] | de: [וזיתן] 1Chr 7:10

זָךְ H2134 Adj-fs (11×)

Pure, clean, clear — free from contamination; of olive oil, incense, sky, or moral character

The adjective זָךְ (zak) describes something that is pure, clean, or clear — free from any admixture or taint. In the tabernacle legislation, it qualifies the olive oil for the lampstand as 'pure beaten oil' (Exod 27:20; Lev 24:2) and the frankincense placed on the showbread as 'pure frankincense' (Lev 24:7; cf. Exod 30:34). In the wisdom and poetic literature, the word shifts to moral purity: Job insists that his prayer is 'pure' (Job 16:17), Bildad asks whether Job is 'pure and upright' (Job 8:6), and Proverbs probes whether anyone's ways are truly 'clean' in God's eyes (Prov 16:2; 20:11; 21:8). Spanish 'puro/limpio,' Arabic ṣ, Swahili 'safi.'

pure, clean, clear (11×) An adjective meaning 'pure, clean, clear' — denoting freedom from contamination or impurity in both physical and moral registers. Physically, it qualifies olive oil for the tabernacle lamp (Exod 27:20; Lev 24:2) and frankincense for the showbread (Exod 30:34; Lev 24:7). Morally, it describes personal integrity or the aspiration to it (Job 8:6; 11:4; 16:17; 25:5; Prov 16:2; 20:11; 21:8). Job 15:15 extends it to the heavens, asking whether even the sky is 'clean' in God's sight. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: but-pure, is-pure, pure | es: Pura, Puro, es-pura | fr: et-pur, pur | de: [וזך], [זך], [זכה] Exod 27:20; Exod 30:34; Lev 24:2; Lev 24:7; Job 8:6

זָכָה H2135 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (8×)

To be pure, make clean, or purify oneself; moral and ritual cleansing across Qal, Piel, and Hitpael stems.

A verb of moral and ritual purity whose meaning shifts with its stem. In the Qal, it asks the searching question 'Can a mortal be pure before God?' (Job 15:14; 25:4) — a stative condition, not an action. The Piel turns active: 'How can a young man keep his way pure?' (Ps 119:9), and the anguished cry 'I have kept my heart pure in vain' (Ps 73:13). The lone Hitpael in Isaiah 1:16 commands self-purification: 'Make yourselves clean!' The Aramaic cognate deka and Arabic dhaka ('be bright, pungent') hint at an original sensory meaning — the burning clarity of a clean fire — that became moral purity in Hebrew.

1. to be pure, be clean (4×) To be pure or clean in a moral sense (Qal stative) — describing the condition of being blameless or innocent before God. Job's friends press the rhetorical question: 'What is man that he should be pure?' (Job 15:14; 25:4). The psalmist affirms God's right to judge: 'You are blameless when you speak' (Ps 51:4). Spanish 'sera-puro/sea-limpio' and the parallel with tsadaq ('be righteous') confirm the judicial-moral register. Micah 6:11 asks whether dishonest scales can ever be 'pure.' PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: Shall-I-be-pure, You-are-blameless, can-be-pure | es: sea-limpio, seas-puro, será-puro | fr: être-pur, יזכה | de: [האזכה], [יזכה], du-sind-blameless Job 15:14; Job 25:4; Ps 51:4; Mic 6:11

2. to make pure, cleanse (3×) To make pure or keep clean (Piel factitive) — the active effort to purify or maintain purity. Psalm 119:9 asks how a young person can keep their path clean; Psalm 73:13 laments 'I have kept my heart pure in vain'; Proverbs 20:9 poses the universal challenge 'Who can say, I have made my heart pure?' Spanish 'he-purificado/limpiara' and German 'bewahren-rein' both capture the sustained, effortful nature of this causative sense. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: I-have-kept-pure, I-have-made-pure, can-keep-pure | es: he-purificado, limpiará | fr: être-pur, זכיתי | de: [זכיתי], ich-haben-bewahrte-rein, kann-bewahren-rein Ps 73:13; Ps 119:9; Prov 20:9

3. to purify oneself (1×) To purify oneself (Hitpael reflexive) — a self-directed command to undergo moral or ritual cleansing. Isaiah 1:16 alone carries this stem: 'Wash yourselves, make yourselves clean!' Spanish 'purificaos' (the reflexive imperative) perfectly mirrors the Hebrew reflexive-imperative force. The shift from Qal's 'being pure' through Piel's 'making pure' to Hitpael's 'purifying oneself' traces a full arc of agency. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: make-clean | es: purificaos | fr: [הזכו] | de: [הזכו] Isa 1:16

זַכְוָ H2136 N-fs (1×)

Purity, innocence; moral integrity recognized by God (Aramaic)

This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel 6:22, where Daniel declares his 'innocence' before God regarding the accusation that led to the lions' den. The term relates to Hebrew 'zakah' (be pure) and Aramaic cognates meaning 'be clean' or 'be innocent.' Daniel's claim isn't merely legal but deeply moral and theological—he stands pure in God's sight. The multilingual glosses emphasize this moral dimension: French 'pureté,' Spanish 'inocencia,' highlighting both moral cleanness and legal innocence.

(1×) Moral innocence or purity in Daniel 6:22, where Daniel affirms his integrity before God in the lions' den incident. The cognate relationships with Aramaic and Syriac terms for cleanness and Arabic words for purity establish a semantic field of moral righteousness. This is not mere legal acquittal but spiritual purity recognized by the divine Judge. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3712 WITH 5 SENSES

en: innocence | es: inocencia | fr: pureté | de: [זכו] Dan 6:22

זְכוֹכִית H2137 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

Glass or crystal; precious but less valuable than wisdom (Job 28:17)

This rare noun appears in Job 28:17, where wisdom is compared to precious materials—even gold and glass cannot equal it. The term likely refers to glass or crystal, a luxury item in the ancient world. Manufactured glass was rare and valuable, imported from Egypt or Phoenicia. By declaring that wisdom surpasses even such costly materials, Job 28 emphasizes wisdom's transcendent worth. The pairing with gold establishes a hierarchy: precious metals, rare glass, yet wisdom remains beyond price.

(1×) Glass or crystal in Job 28:17, listed among precious materials that cannot match wisdom's value. The multilingual glosses 'crystal' (English, Spanish) reflect the term's reference to translucent luxury goods. Though valuable enough to be mentioned with gold, glass remains inferior to divine wisdom—an economic comparison that elevates sapiential knowledge above all earthly treasures. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13459 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-crystal | es: y-cristal | fr: et-זכוכית | de: [וזכוכית] Job 28:17

זָכוּר H2138 N-msc / 3fs (4×)

Males (collective); a synonym of zakhar used for the male population required at Israel's pilgrimage festivals.

A variant form of the more common zakhar ('male'), found only with possessive suffixes and in legal-cultic contexts. Three occurrences specify that 'all your males' must appear before the Lord at the three annual pilgrimage festivals (Exod 23:17; 34:23; Deut 16:16). The fourth, in the laws of warfare (Deut 20:13), commands the slaying of 'all its males' when a city refuses terms of peace. The suffixed forms — Spanish 'tu varón' / 'su varón,' French 'ton males' / 'son males' — highlight the possessive construction distinctive to this form.

(4×) Males as a collective category, always with possessive suffix. In the festival laws (Exod 23:17; 34:23; Deut 16:16), 'all your males' designates every Israelite man obligated to make pilgrimage — the term is cultic and corporate, not individual. In warfare law (Deut 20:13), 'all its males' refers to the military-age men of a conquered city. The form is synonymous with zakhar but restricted to suffixed constructions, suggesting it may be an archaic or dialectal variant. MALE PERSON ANIMAL en: its-males, your-males | es: su-varón, tu-varón, varón-tuyo | fr: son-males, ton-males | de: dein-males, sein-males Exod 23:17; Exod 34:23; Deut 16:16; Deut 20:13

זַכּוּר H2139 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (10×)

Zaccur / Zakkur — a Hebrew personal name ('remembered'), borne by several men from Reuben, Simeon, and Levi.

The name Zakkur (meaning 'remembered' or 'mindful,' from the root zakhar) belongs to at least five different individuals in the Old Testament. The earliest is Zaccur son of Shammua, the Reubenite spy sent to scout Canaan (Num 13:4). Others include a Simeonite (1 Chr 4:26), several Levites — notably an Asaphite musician appointed by David (1 Chr 25:2, 10) and one who helped rebuild Jerusalem's wall (Neh 3:2) — and a companion of Ezra (Ezra 8:14 Qere). The Septuagint renders it variously as Zakchhur, Zakchhour, reflecting the characteristic doubled kaph. German 'Sakkur' shows a distinctive adaptation of the initial sibilant.

Zakkur / Zaccur (personal name) (10×) The Hebrew proper name Zakkur/Zaccur (from zakhar, 'to remember'), borne by multiple individuals: a Reubenite spy (Num 13:4), a Simeonite descendant (1 Chr 4:26), Levitical musicians and temple servants (1 Chr 24:27; 25:2, 10; Neh 10:12; 12:35), a wall-builder under Nehemiah (Neh 3:2), and a companion of Ezra (Ezra 8:14). Despite the variety of bearers, the name itself is morphologically consistent. Multilingual evidence — Spanish 'Zacur/Zakur,' French 'Zaccur,' German 'Sakkur/Zaccur' — shows standard transliteration patterns for this theophoric-adjacent name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zaccur, Zakkur, and-Zakkur | es: Zacur, y-Zacur, y-Zakur | fr: Zaccur, et-Zaccur | de: Sakkur, Zaccur, [וזכור] Num 13:4; 1Chr 4:26; 1Chr 24:27; 1Chr 25:2; 1Chr 25:10

זַכַּי H2140 N-proper-ms (3×)

Zaccai (personal name; possibly abbreviated from Zechariah)

A personal name appearing in postexilic lists of returnees: a family head in Ezra 2:9 and Nehemiah 7:14, and possibly the same individual in Nehemiah 3:20 (though the Greek suggests variant traditions). BDB notes a proposal that Zaccai is an abbreviated form of Zechariah. Translations preserve the name with slight variation (Spanish Zacai, Zaccai). The name appears in genealogical and census contexts, identifying a family lineage among the exiles who returned to Judah.

(3×) A proper name in three postexilic genealogical or census lists (Ezra 2:9; Neh 3:20; 7:14). The multilingual glosses transliterate the name, reflecting its function as a personal identifier. Any etymological connection to Zechariah remains speculative background, not semantically active in these texts. PERSONAL NAMES

en: (Zaccai), Zaccai, Zakkay | es: (Zacai), Zacai | fr: [זכי] | de: [(זכי)], [זכי] Ezra 2:9; Neh 3:20; Neh 7:14

זָכַךְ H2141 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (4×)

To be bright, clean, pure; describing physical radiance or moral purity, with a causative sense 'to cleanse.'

A verb appearing only in Job and Lamentations, spanning physical brilliance and moral purity. In Lam 4:7, it describes how Jerusalem's nobles were once 'brighter than snow' — a stunning image of health and splendor. In Job's theological arguments, it questions whether even the heavens are 'pure' in God's sight (Job 15:15; 25:5), let alone mortals. The Hiphil in Job 9:30 expresses the futility of self-cleansing: 'though I cleanse my hands with lye.' Spanish 'puros/puras' and the related adjective zakh ('pure') confirm the overlap of brilliance and moral cleanness.

(4×) To be bright or radiant — describing physical splendor. In Lam 4:7 the nobles of Jerusalem 'were brighter than snow, whiter than milk,' using zakhakh in parallel with tsakhakh to paint a picture of dazzling health and beauty before the siege destroyed them. The root sense is luminous purity, visible and striking. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: Were-pure, and-I-cleanse, are-pure | es: Eran-puros, son-puras, son-puros | fr: [זכך], et-זכך ,והזכותי | de: [והזכותי], [זכך] Job 9:30; Job 15:15; Job 25:5; Lam 4:7

זָכַר H2142 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (235×)

Remember, recall; be remembered (Nifal); remind, cause to remember, mention, invoke, proclaim (Hifil); the recorder (Hifil ptcp).

A foundational verb of covenant theology, zakar spans the full arc from private recollection to public proclamation. When God 'remembers' Noah (Gen 8:1) or His covenant (Exod 2:24), the Hebrew implies not mere mental recall but active intervention — a truth the Septuagint captures with mnaomai and its cognates. In its Hifil causative stem the word shifts from inward memory to outward speech: invoking God's name (Ps 20:7), mentioning foreign gods (Josh 23:7), or holding the royal office of 'the recorder' (hammazkir), the chronicler who ensured that the king's deeds were not forgotten (2 Sam 8:16). Spanish consistently renders the core Qal as 'acordarse/recordar', while Arabic uses dhakara, whose cognate dhikr (remembrance) resonates deeply in Semitic religious practice.

1. Qal: remember, recall (173×) The basic Qal active sense: to bring someone or something to mind, to recall or think of again. Covers past events, persons, covenant promises, and divine deeds. When God is the subject (Gen 8:1; Exod 2:24), 'remembering' implies saving action, not merely cognition — multilingual evidence shows Korean 기억하다, Spanish 'recordar', and Arabic ذكر all converging on this core meaning across 173 occurrences. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING

en: Remember, remember, remember- | es: Acuerda, Acuérdate, Recuerda | fr: se-souvenir | de: gedachte, gedachte-, gedenken Gen 40:23; Exod 13:3; Exod 20:8; Exod 32:13; Deut 5:15

2. Nifal: be remembered (20×) The Nifal passive: to be remembered, to come to remembrance. Used of persons, names, or things that are — or will no longer be — called to mind (Job 24:20; Esth 9:28). Spanish renders it as 'ser recordado' and German as 'gedacht werden', emphasizing the passive reception rather than active recall. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING

en: and-you-shall-be-remembered, are-mentioned, being-remembered-you | es: Sea-recordada, el-macho, fuisteis-recordados | fr: ce-est-mâle, et-tu-devra-être-se-souvint, il-se-souviendra | de: er-gedenkt, gedachte, gedenken Exod 34:19; Num 10:9; Esth 9:28; Job 24:20; Job 28:18

3. Hifil: remind, cause to remember (17×) The Hifil causative in its memorial sense: to cause someone to remember, to bring to remembrance, to remind. The grain offering of jealousy is called a 'minhah of mazkeret' that brings iniquity to remembrance (Num 5:15), and Absalom erects a pillar to make his name remembered (2 Sam 18:18). French 'faire souvenir' and Spanish 'hacer recordar' capture this causative force. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING

en: I-cause-to-remember, I-will-cause-to-be-remembered, Remind-Me | es: Haré-recordar, Recordad, [recordaré] | fr: Je-cause-à-se-souvenir, apportant-à-remembrance, cause-à-souviens-toi | de: bringend-zu-remembrance, cause-zu-erinnere-dich, gedachte Gen 41:9; Exod 20:24; Num 5:15; 2Sam 18:18; 1Kgs 17:18

4. Hifil: mention, invoke, proclaim (15×) The Hifil causative in its declarative sense: to make mention of, to invoke by name, to proclaim publicly. Distinguished from sense 3 by emphasis on verbal utterance rather than mental recall. Israelites are commanded not to 'mention' (lo tazkiru) the names of other gods (Exod 23:13; Josh 23:7), and the psalmist declares 'we will mention the name of the LORD' (Ps 20:7). Arabic يذكر and Swahili 'kutaja' both capture this public-invocation nuance. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING

en: I-shall-mention, I-will-make-mention-of, I-will-mention | es: Mencionaré, cuando-mencionó, hacen-mención | fr: et-mention-moi, quand-il-mentioned, se-souvenir | de: du-soll-mention, du-wird-mention, gedachte Gen 40:14; Exod 23:13; Josh 23:7; 1Sam 4:18; Ps 20:7

5. Hifil participle: the recorder (10×) The Hifil participle used as a royal title: hammazkir, 'the recorder' or 'chronicler.' This court official appears in lists of David's and Solomon's administrators (2 Sam 8:16; 1 Kgs 4:3) and also during Hezekiah's reign (2 Kgs 18:18, 37). Spanish 'cronista', French 'archiviste', and Korean 사관 (sagwan) all point to a distinct institutional role — the keeper of state memory and public announcements. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING

en: recorder, the-recorder, you-who-remind | es: cronista, el-cronista, el-registrador | fr: le-recorder, recorder, se-souvenir | de: der-recorder, gedenken, recorder 2Sam 8:16; 2Sam 20:24; 1Kgs 4:3; 2Kgs 18:18; 2Kgs 18:37

זֵכֶר H2143 Conj-w (23×)

Remembrance, memory; a memorial or commemorative sign; renown or fame

The noun זֵכֶר moves along a spectrum from the private act of remembering to the public fact of being remembered. Most often it denotes memory itself — the recollection of a person, a people, or God's mighty deeds. But it can also signify a memorial: something deliberately established so that future generations will remember, as when God declares 'this is my memorial name forever' (Exod 3:15). In its rarest sense, the word arrives at renown or fame — the celebrated reputation by which someone is publicly known, as with Ephraim's 'fragrance' of renown in Hos 14:7.

1. memory, remembrance (18×) Memory, remembrance, or recollection — the act or content of remembering someone or something. This dominant sense (18 occurrences) spans contexts of both preservation and destruction of memory. God commands the erasure of Amalek's 'memory' from under heaven (Exod 17:14, Deut 25:19), yet the righteous enjoy 'everlasting remembrance' (Ps 112:6). Job 18:17 pairs זֵכֶר with שֵׁם (name), showing that to lose one's memory is to lose one's identity. Spanish 'memoria de' and French '[זכר]' render the abstract cognitive act consistently. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-their-memory, and-your-remembrance, for-Your-name | es: Memoria-de, Su-memoria, a-memoria-de | fr: [וזכרם], [ולזכרך], [זכר] | de: Erinnerung-von-du, [וזכרם], [ולזכרך] Exod 17:14; Deut 25:19; Deut 32:26; Esth 9:28; Job 18:17

2. memorial, commemoration (4×) A memorial, commemorative sign, or established remembrance — something intentionally created to preserve memory across generations. God tells Moses 'this is my memorial (זִכְרִי) forever' (Exod 3:15), investing the divine name with commemorative force. Ps 111:4 declares God 'has made a memorial for his wonders,' and Hos 12:5 uses it of God's covenant-remembrance name. Korean 기념 (commemoration) and Arabic/Swahili translations confirm the shift from passive recollection to active, institutionalized remembrance. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE
en: a-memorial, for-a-memorial, his-memorial | es: Memoria, mi-memorial, para-memoria | fr: masculin, mon-mémorial, se-souvenir | de: [וזכרו], ein-memorial, für-ein-memorial Exod 3:15; Ps 111:4; Ps 112:6; Hos 12:5

3. renown, fame (1×) Renown, fame, or celebrated reputation — the public dimension of being remembered. This rare sense (1 occurrence) appears in Hos 14:7, where restored Ephraim's 'renown' (זִכְרוֹ) will be like the fragrance of Lebanon. English 'his renown,' Spanish 'su fama,' and Swahili 'sifa' (praise/fame) all move beyond private memory into public acclaim, marking a distinct semantic endpoint on the remembrance-to-reputation spectrum. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE
en: his-renown | es: su-fama | fr: masculin | de: [וזכרו] Hos 14:7

זִכְרִי H2144 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Zeker, a Benjamite, variant of Zechariah in Chronicles genealogy

Zeker appears in 1 Chronicles 8:31 and is identified with Zechariah in 9:37, showing typical genealogical variation in Chronicles. The name likely represents a shortened form of Zechariah, meaning 'Yahweh remembers.' The Greek rendering 'Zachour' attempts to capture this abbreviated form. Phoenician inscriptions also attest a name 'zkr,' suggesting this was a common Semitic name pattern beyond Israel.

(1×) A Benjamite in 1 Chronicles 8:31, equivalent to Zechariah in 9:37. The multilingual glosses transliterate the name, with French and German bracketing it. The abbreviated form relates to the fuller theophoric name 'Zechariah,' and Phoenician parallels ('zkr') demonstrate wider Northwest Semitic usage of this name type. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Zekher | es: y-Zaaquer | fr: [וזכר] | de: [וזכר] 1Chr 8:31

זָכָר H2145 Prep-m / N-ms (82×)

Male – a male human being or male animal, used in contexts of creation, law, census, genealogy, and sacrificial offering.

The basic Hebrew term for 'male,' appearing first in the foundational statement of Gen 1:27, 'male and female he created them.' Throughout Torah legislation it distinguishes gender for census counts, inheritance rights, and ritual purity laws. In sacrificial contexts it specifies the requirement for an unblemished male animal from the flock or herd (Exod 13:12, Deut 15:19). The multilingual evidence is strikingly consistent – Spanish varon/macho, French male, German Mannlicher – all tracking the same binary distinction between human and animal referents.

1. male (human being) (79×) A male human being – man or boy – used in contrast to female (neqevah) when describing gender in creation narratives (Gen 1:27, 'male and female he created them'), census records, legal codes, and genealogies. Spanish consistently renders varon for the human sense while French and German use male/Mannlicher, all confirming the primary anthropological reference across 79 occurrences. MALE PERSON ANIMAL en: a-male, male | es: macho, varón | fr: mâle, un-mâle | de: Männliche, Männlicher, ein-maennlich Gen 1:27; Gen 6:19; Gen 7:3; Gen 7:9; Gen 7:16

2. male animal (3×) A male animal, specifically in sacrificial and ritual legislation where an unblemished male from the flock or herd is required as an offering to YHWH. Spanish shifts to 'el macho' and English to 'the male/the males' with the definite article marking the ritual specification. Attested in Exod 13:12 (firstborn males consecrated) and Deut 15:19 (firstborn male of the herd). MALE PERSON ANIMAL en: the-male, the-males | es: el-macho, los-machos | fr: le-males, le-mâle | de: der-maennlich, der-males Exod 13:12; Exod 13:15; Deut 15:19

זִכָּרוֹן H2146 N-mpc / 2mp (24×)

Memorial, remembrance; a commemorative sign, token, or record intended to preserve memory before God or among people.

Derived from the root זכר ('to remember'), this noun covers everything from the physical stones Joshua set in the Jordan (Josh 4:7) to the abstract fading of human memory (Eccl 1:11). In the Pentateuch, it frequently describes ritual objects and offerings designed to bring something 'to remembrance' before God—the shoulder-stones of the priestly ephod are a זִכָּרוֹן for the sons of Israel (Exod 28:12). Spanish 'memorial/recordatorio' and French 'mémorial/mémoire' capture the same spectrum from concrete monument to intangible recollection.

1. memorial sign or token (15×) A concrete commemorative object, offering, or sign designed to serve as a lasting reminder. The twelve stones in the Jordan are 'a memorial' (Josh 4:7), the engraved shoulder-stones of the ephod carry the tribes' names 'for a memorial' (Exod 28:12), and the grain offering is called an אַזְכָּרָה, a 'memorial portion' (Num 5:15). Spanish 'memorial de' and French 'mémorial' confirm the tangible, institutional quality—these are constructed tokens meant to trigger remembrance before God. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE
en: a-memorial-of, and-for-a-memorial, for-a-memorial | es: Recordatorio, memorial, memorial-de | fr: [וזכרונך], [לזכרון], et-pour-un-mémorial | de: Gedenkanteil, Gedenken, [וזכרונך] Exod 12:14; Exod 13:9; Exod 17:14; Exod 28:12

2. remembrance or memory (7×) The abstract state of being remembered or the act of recollection itself. Ecclesiastes 1:11 laments that 'there is no remembrance of former things,' and Nehemiah 2:20 asserts that certain people have 'no portion or remembrance' in Jerusalem. French 'mémoire' and Spanish 'memoria' naturally distinguish this abstract sense from the physical memorial of sense 1. Here the focus is on memory as a faculty or condition, not a monument. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE
en: and-memorial, remembrance, the-remembrance | es: el-memorial, memoria, memorial | fr: [וזכרון], le-remembrance, mémoire | de: Gedenken, der-remembrance, remembrance Num 5:15; Num 5:18; Neh 2:20; Eccl 1:11

3. written records or chronicles (1×) Formal written records or chronicles preserved for posterity. Esther 6:1 describes the king ordering 'the book of the remembrances' (the royal annals) to be read aloud—an act that pivotally reverses Haman's plot. Spanish 'los memoriales' (the records) confirms the documentary, archival sense. This is memory institutionalized in text, a bureaucratic extension of the commemorative impulse. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE

en: the-remembrances | es: los-memoriales | fr: [הזכרנות] | de: Gedenken Esth 6:1

4. memorable sayings or maxims (1×) Memorable sayings, maxims, or proverbial utterances. Job 13:12 declares 'your memorable sayings are proverbs of ashes'—a devastating dismissal of his friends' traditional wisdom as worthless platitudes. Spanish 'vuestros memoriales' (your memorabilia/maxims) and French 'votre mémoire' suggest inherited lore or dicta. This rare usage extends the noun from things remembered to things worth remembering—or, in Job's bitter irony, decidedly not. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE
en: proverbs-your | es: Vuestros-memoriales | fr: votre-mémoire-vous | de: Gedenken Job 13:12

זִכְרִי H2147 N-proper-ms (12×)

Zichri – a proper name borne by multiple individuals across the Hebrew Bible

Zichri (zikhri, perhaps meaning 'my remembrance') is a proper name borne by several individuals in the Hebrew Bible, including a Levite son of Izhar (Exod 6:21), various Benjaminite clansmen (1 Chr 8:19, 23, 27), a Levite ancestor (1 Chr 9:15), an Ephraimite warrior who slew members of Ahaz's court (2 Chr 28:7), and others listed in postexilic genealogies (Neh 11:9; 12:17). Despite the multiplicity of bearers, the name itself functions as a single lexical item. All target languages preserve it by transliteration: English Zichri, Spanish Zicri, French Zicri, German Sichri.

Zikhri (12×) The proper name Zichri (zikhri), borne by at least nine distinct individuals across Exodus, Chronicles, and Nehemiah, including Levites, Benjaminites, and an Ephraimite warrior. The name likely derives from zakhar ('to remember'), suggesting 'my remembrance' or 'Yah has remembered.' Despite multiple referents, the name is a single lexical unit. Uniform transliteration across all target languages confirms its irreducible proper-noun character. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zichri, Zikhri, and-Zichri | es: Zicri, Zicrí, Zijrí | fr: Zicri, et-Zichri, et-Zicri | de: Sichri, [וזכרי], und-Sichri Exod 6:21; 1Chr 8:19; 1Chr 8:23; 1Chr 8:27; 1Chr 9:15

זְכַרְיָהוּ H2148a N-proper-ms (41×)

Zechariah — personal name meaning 'Yah has remembered,' borne by over a dozen individuals in the Hebrew Bible

Zekharyahu (longer form) and Zekharyah (shorter form) is one of the most common theophoric names in the Hebrew Bible, combining zakhar ('to remember') with the divine name Yah to produce 'the LORD has remembered.' Its 41 occurrences under this lemma encompass at least a dozen distinct individuals. The most historically significant include: Zechariah son of Jeroboam II, the last king of Jehu's dynasty assassinated after a six-month reign (2 Kgs 14:29; 15:8-11); the father of Hezekiah's mother Abi (2 Kgs 18:2); a priestly witness in Isaiah's time (Isa 8:2); and several Levitical musicians and gatekeepers under David (1 Chr 15:18, 20; 26:2, 11). The postexilic prophet Zechariah son of Berechiah belongs to a separate lemma. The name's popularity testifies to its theological resonance: God remembers his people.

Zechariah (proper noun) (41×) The proper masculine name Zekharyahu/Zekharyah ('Yah has remembered'), shared by numerous individuals spanning the monarchic and postexilic periods. Key bearers include the brief Israelite king assassinated by Shallum (2 Kgs 15:8-11), the maternal grandfather of Hezekiah (2 Kgs 18:2), Isaiah's witness (Isa 8:2), several Levites and musicians (1 Chr 15:18, 20; 26:2, 11), and officials under Jehoshaphat and Uzziah (2 Chr 17:7; 26:5). Greek Zacharias, Spanish 'Zacarias,' French 'Zacharie' preserve the name across translation traditions. ZECHARIAH PERSONAL NAME
en: Zechariah, Zekharyah, Zekharyahu | es: Pasjur, Zacarías, Zecaryahu | fr: Zacharie | de: Sacharja, Secharja 2Kgs 14:29; 2Kgs 15:8; 2Kgs 15:11; 2Kgs 18:2; 1Chr 5:7

וְזַכַרְיָה H2148b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Zechariah; the post-exilic prophet who encouraged the rebuilding of the temple

This Aramaic form of the name Zechariah ('Yahweh remembers') refers to the prophet who, alongside Haggai, urged the returned exiles to complete the temple reconstruction. He appears in Ezra 5:1 and 6:14, where his prophetic ministry is credited with motivating the Jewish leaders Zerubbabel and Jeshua. The Aramaic spelling reflects the linguistic environment of the Persian period, when Aramaic was the imperial lingua franca. His prophecies are preserved in the biblical book bearing his name, filled with visions of cosmic renewal and messianic hope.

(2×) The prophet Zechariah as named in the Aramaic sections of Ezra. The name means 'Yahweh has remembered,' embodying the post-exilic hope that God has not forgotten his covenant people despite exile. Ezra credits him (with Haggai) as the catalysts for resuming temple construction under Darius—their words stirred a dispirited community to rebuild the house of God. The Aramaic spelling situates him in the multilingual world of the Persian Empire, where Hebrew prophets spoke in the shadow of Aramaic-speaking bureaucracy. ZECHARIAH PERSONAL NAME
en: and-Zekharyah | es: y-Zacarías, y-Zekharyah | fr: et-Zacharie | de: und-Sacharja Ezra 5:1; Ezra 6:14

זְלֻת H2149 N-fs (1×)

Worthlessness, vileness; moral degradation when evil is exalted (Psalm 12:8)

This abstract noun appears in Psalm 12:8, lamenting a time when 'vileness is exalted among humanity.' The psalm contrasts God's pure words with human corruption, and this term captures the moral decay of society when worthless things are elevated. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'vileza,' French 'bassesse'—emphasize moral degradation. Some manuscripts suggest reading 'zulluth' instead, but the sense of societal moral collapse remains. When worthless values are celebrated, the righteous suffer.

(1×) Moral worthlessness or vileness in Psalm 12:8, describing societal corruption when base values are exalted. The parallel context contrasts pure divine words with corrupt human speech and values. The multilingual glosses (French 'bassesse,' Spanish 'vileza') emphasize moral degradation. This single occurrence captures the distortion of values when evil is honored among people. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY
en: vileness | es: vileza | fr: bassesse | de: vileness Ps 12:8

זַלְזַל H2150 Art / N-mp (1×)

Tendrils (of a vine); slender shoots symbolizing vulnerable enemies (Isaiah 18:5)

This noun appears only in Isaiah 18:5, describing vine tendrils in a metaphor about God cutting down Assyria. The imagery is agricultural: before the grape harvest, when tendrils are forming, the vinedresser prunes. So Yahweh will cut off Assyria's spreading power before it fully matures. The pairing with 'spreading branches' creates a vivid picture of vulnerability—what seems to be growing and expanding is actually about to be severed. The term captures delicate, vulnerable growth.

(1×) Vine tendrils in Isaiah 18:5, used metaphorically for Assyria's spreading but vulnerable power that God will prune. The parallel with 'spreading branches' and the agricultural context of pre-harvest pruning establish imagery of growth cut short. Spanish 'ramitas' (little branches) captures the diminutive vulnerability of tendrils about to be severed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-tendrils | es: las-ramitas | fr: [הזלזלים] | de: [הזלזלים] Isa 18:5

זָלַל H2151a V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (2×)

to quake, shake; used of mountains trembling at Yahweh's presence

This verb describes violent shaking or quaking, particularly of mountains in response to divine theophany. In Isaiah 63:19 and 64:1, the prophet pleads for Yahweh to rend the heavens and descend, causing the mountains to 'quake' at his presence—a motif echoing Sinai and other theophanies. The root is related to Arabic terms for slipping and shaking, especially in earthquakes. Some scholars suggest reading this verb in Judges 5:5 as well (instead of 'flowed'), making it a consistent theophanic image: creation convulses when the Creator draws near.

(2×) A Niphal verb depicting the trembling or quaking of mountains before Yahweh's manifest presence. Isaiah's prayer invokes this cosmic shaking as evidence of divine intervention—when God descends, the stable mountains become unstable, revealing the fragility of creation before its Maker. The imagery draws on ancient Near Eastern theophanic traditions where the earth convulses at the god's arrival. The Arabic cognates for earthquake and slipping reinforce this sense of violent, involuntary motion, a physical response to the numinous. FLOWING WATER

en: quaked, would-quake | es: fluirían, fluyeron | fr: [נזלו] | de: [נזלו] Isa 64:1; Isa 64:3

זָלַל H2151b Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (6×)

To be a glutton or worthless person; to squander, be lavish; to be vile or insignificant.

A verb appearing only as a Qal participle, carrying two related but distinguishable meanings. In its moral sense, it describes a glutton or squanderer – someone who consumes recklessly and without restraint. Deuteronomy 21:20 pairs it with 'drunkard' (sove) in the parents' accusation against a rebellious son, and Proverbs echoes this pairing (23:20-21; 28:7). In its evaluative sense, it means to be worthless or insignificant: Jeremiah 15:19 contrasts the 'vile' (zolel) with the 'precious' (yaqar), and Lamentations 1:11 uses the feminine participle of fallen Jerusalem. The semantic bridge between gluttony and worthlessness is the idea of cheapening or making light of something valuable.

be a glutton, be worthless (6×) To be a glutton, squanderer, or one who is lavish with food and drink. Used as a participle functioning as a substantive ('a glutton'), consistently paired with sove ('drunkard') in Deuteronomy 21:20 and Proverbs 23:20-21 and 28:7. Spanish 'glotones' and English 'gluttons' capture this sense directly. The verb implies reckless consumption and a dissolute lifestyle. A second nuance extends to being worthless, vile, or insignificant (Jer 15:19, where zolel is opposed to yaqar 'precious'; Lam 1:11 of Jerusalem's degraded state). Spanish 'despreciable' and 'de lo vil' reflect this evaluative dimension, where the underlying idea is making light of what should be valued. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: among-gluttons-of, and-a-glutton, despised | es: de-lo-vil, despreciable, entre-los-glotones-de | fr: [וזוללה], [מזוללל], dans-בזוללי | de: [בזוללל], [וזוולל], [וזוללה] Deut 21:20; Prov 23:20; Prov 23:21; Prov 28:7; Jer 15:19

זַלְעָפָה H2152 N-fpc (3×)

raging heat, scorching wind; burning indignation

A noun evoking intense, destructive heat—whether physical or emotional. It describes the 'scorching heat of famine' that darkens skin (Lam 5:10), the 'burning wind' sent as divine judgment alongside fire and brimstone (Ps 11:6), and the 'burning indignation' that seizes the psalmist over the wicked (Ps 119:53). The Spanish ardor, abrasador and French horreur capture the consuming, oppressive force. This is heat that wounds—fever, sirocco, or fury.

(3×) Denotes destructive heat in three forms: feverish heat from famine (Lam 5:10), scorching judgment wind (Ps 11:6), and emotional burning indignation (Ps 119:53). The multilingual evidence (scorching heat, ardor, horreur) reflects both physical and affective registers. The semantic core is overwhelming, consuming intensity—whether meteorological, somatic, or moral. HEAT AND WARMTH

en: burning-indignation, scorching-heat, the-burning-heat | es: Ardor, abrasador, los-ardores-de | fr: [זלעפות], horreur | de: [זלעפות], burning-Entrüstung, scorching-heat Ps 11:6; Ps 119:53; Lam 5:10

זִלְפָּה H2153 N-proper-fs (7×)

Zilpah — Leah's maidservant given to Jacob as a wife, mother of Gad and Asher.

Zilpah was the maidservant whom Laban gave to his daughter Leah (Gen 29:24), and whom Leah in turn gave to Jacob as a wife when she believed she had stopped bearing children (Gen 30:9). Through this arrangement Zilpah bore two sons, Gad and Asher, who became heads of Israelite tribes. Her name appears in genealogical summaries linking the twelve tribes to their mothers (Gen 35:26; 46:18), underscoring that all twelve sons — regardless of their mothers' status — were equally reckoned as Israel's covenant heirs.

(7×) The proper name of Leah's handmaid who became one of Jacob's wives. Zilpah appears in the patriarchal narratives as part of the complex household arrangement through which the twelve tribes originated. Multilingual renderings consistently transliterate the name (Spanish Zilpá, French Zilpa, German Silpa), reflecting its status as a recognized personal name across biblical tradition. All seven occurrences cluster in Genesis, from the wedding gift (29:24) through the genealogies of Jacob's sons (46:18). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zilpah | es: Zilpah, Zilpá | fr: Zilpa | de: Silpa, Silpas Gen 29:24; Gen 30:9; Gen 30:10; Gen 30:12; Gen 35:26

זִמָּה H2154 N-fsc (29×)

Lewdness, wickedness, evil scheme — sexual depravity, moral vileness, or a deliberate wicked plan

The noun זִמָּה moves along a spectrum from calculated planning to moral outrage to sexual abomination. At its root it means a deliberate scheme or purpose (Job 17:11), but the Hebrew Bible overwhelmingly deploys it for wickedness — particularly sexual sin. Ezekiel uses it eleven times to denounce Jerusalem's lewdness (Ezek 16:27-58; 22:9-11; 23:21-49), and Leviticus applies it to incest and prostitution (Lev 18:17; 19:29; 20:14). Arabic زِنًى ('obscenity') and Swahili uasherati ('immorality') confirm how consistently translators reach for specifically sexual vocabulary.

1. lewdness, sexual depravity (16×) Sexual immorality, lewdness, or depravity — the most frequent and distinctive use. Ezekiel employs זִמָּה repeatedly for Jerusalem's harlotry and abominations (Ezek 16:27, 43, 58; 22:9; 23:21-49), Leviticus applies it to incest and cultic prostitution (Lev 18:17; 19:29; 20:14), and Job calls adultery a זִמָּה (Job 31:11). The cross-linguistic evidence is decisive: Arabic زِنًى, Swahili uasherati, Spanish depravación, and Korean 음란 all denote specifically sexual transgression rather than general evil. SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: and-your-lewdness, in-lewdness, lewdness | es: como-perversidad-de-vosotras, con-perversidad, depravación-de-ti | fr: [זמת], débauche, et-débauche | de: Gottlosigkeit, Unzucht, [זמת] Judg 20:6; Jer 13:27; Ezek 16:27; Ezek 16:43; Ezek 16:58

2. wickedness, evil intent (10×) General wickedness or evil intent without a specifically sexual dimension. In Psalm 26:10 it parallels bribery (שֹׁחַד), Psalm 119:150 describes pursuers of wickedness, and Proverbs 10:23 and 21:27 apply it to the fool's delight in evil and the wicked person's sacrifice. Multilingual glosses shift to broader moral vocabulary — Arabic سُوء ('evil'), Spanish maldad ('wickedness'), Swahili uovu ('badness') — confirming a distinct, non-sexual semantic cluster. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: is-wickedness, wickedness, with-wickedness | es: con-maldad, de-maldad, maldad | fr: dans-plan, débauche, méchanceté | de: Bosheit, Gottlosigkeit, [בזמה] Lev 18:17; Lev 19:29; Lev 20:14; Job 31:11

3. plan, scheme, purpose (3×) A plan, scheme, or deliberate purpose — the word's etymological base. Job 17:11 mourns that 'my plans (זִמֹּתַי) are shattered,' using the term without negative connotation. Proverbs 24:9 calls the scheme of folly sin, and Isaiah 32:7 describes the scoundrel's evil devices. Arabic مَكْر ('plots'), Spanish maquinaciones ('machinations'), and Swahili hila ('cunning') reflect the deliberateness of planning rather than moral depravity per se.

GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: my-plans, schemes, the-scheme-of | es: El-plan-de, maquinaciones, mis-planes | fr: [זמות], mon-plan-moi, plan | de: [זמות], [זמת], [זמתי] Job 17:11; Prov 24:9; Isa 32:7

זִמָּה H2155 N-proper-ms (3×)

Zimmah (personal name; Levite)

A Levitical name (Gershonite clan) appearing in genealogical lists in Chronicles (1 Chr 6:20, 42; 2 Chr 29:12). The name is etymologically related to the word for 'lewdness' or 'wickedness,' though in these contexts it functions purely as a personal identifier without moral connotation. Translations preserve the name (Spanish Zima, French/German Zimmah). The name highlights the complexity of Hebrew onomastics: not all names activate their etymological meanings.

(3×) A personal name identifying Levites in three genealogical contexts (1 Chr 6:20, 42; 2 Chr 29:12). The cross-lingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name, treating it as a fixed identifier. Although the root suggests 'lewdness,' the name here carries no pejorative force—illustrating the gap between etymology and usage. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zimmah | es: Zima | fr: [זמה] | de: [זמה] 1Chr 6:20; 1Chr 6:42; 2Chr 29:12

זְמוֹרָה H2156 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3mp (5×)

branch, twig, shoot; a vine-branch or slip, sometimes figurative for idolatrous worship

A feminine noun for a branch or shoot, typically of a grapevine. The spies at Eshcol cut a zĕmôrâ bearing a single cluster of grapes (Num 13:23), a vivid image of the land's abundance. Ezekiel uses it literally of the vine (15:2) and enigmatically of a ritual object held to the nose in idolatrous worship (8:17). Isaiah 17:10 speaks metaphorically of 'slips of a strange god,' denoting foreign cultic practices. Nahum 2:2 applies the plural figuratively to Israel's people.

(5×) A branch, twig, or shoot, especially of the grapevine, used both literally and figuratively. Literally in Numbers 13:23, where the Eshcol vine-branch displays the land's fruitfulness, and in Ezekiel 15:2 of vine wood. Figuratively in Isaiah 17:10 for idolatrous cult-slips and in Nahum 2:2 for Israel's people. The enigmatic usage in Ezekiel 8:17 may refer to a ritual branch held during pagan worship. French 'branch' and German 'Ast' align with the botanical core sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-slip-of, and-their-branches, branch | es: la-rama, sarmiento, y-sarmiento-de | fr: [הזמורה], [וזמרת], branch | de: Ast, [הזמורה], [וזמרים] Num 13:23; Isa 17:10; Ezek 8:17; Ezek 15:2; Nah 2:2

זַמְזֻמִּים H2157 N-proper-mp (1×)

Zamzummim, an ancient people displaced by Ammonites, related to Rephaim (Deuteronomy 2:20)

The Zamzummim were an ancient people group mentioned in Deuteronomy 2:20, identified as a branch of the Rephaim who were displaced by the Ammonites. The name may derive from a root suggesting unintelligible speech or 'gibberish,' possibly an ethnic slur from the Ammonites' perspective. Like other pre-Israelite peoples (Anakim, Emim), they represented formidable inhabitants whom God enabled Israel's neighbors to conquer, establishing a pattern that would apply to Israel's own conquest of Canaan.

(1×) An ancient giant people in Deuteronomy 2:20, called Rephaim but given the name Zamzummim by Ammonites who displaced them. The possible connection to Arabic 'talk gibberish' may reflect a derogatory Ammonite name. Their mention alongside other pre-conquest peoples establishes God's sovereignty in giving lands to various nations, foreshadowing Israel's own dispossession of Canaan's inhabitants. NATIONS AND PEOPLES
en: Zamzummim | es: zamzumim | fr: Zamzummim | de: Zamzummim Deut 2:20

זֶמִר H2158 N-mp (6×)

A song or psalm of praise; a musical composition celebrating God or expressing triumph.

Derived from the root zamar ('to sing, make music'), this noun denotes a song or psalm — especially one of praise or worship. David is famously called the 'sweet singer of Israel's songs' (2 Sam 23:1), and the Psalms employ it for joyful worship (Ps 95:2, 119:54). In Isaiah it can also refer to a hostile song of triumph (Isa 25:5), showing the word covers the full range of composed vocal music, from devotional hymn to victory chant.

song, psalm (musical composition) (6×) A song, psalm, or musical composition — particularly one of praise or worship. The English 'songs' and Spanish 'canticos' consistently point to vocal compositions. Used of David's psalms (2 Sam 23:1), nighttime songs from God (Job 35:10), shouts of worship (Ps 95:2), statutes treasured as songs (Ps 119:54), and even the triumphant song of ruthless oppressors (Isa 25:5). The French 'chant' likewise captures the idea of a sung piece rather than mere speech. SONGS AND HYMNS
en: songs, songs-of, the-song | es: Cánticos, con-cánticos, cántico-de | fr: [זמיר], [זמרת], chant | de: [זמיר], [זמרות], [זמרת] 2Sam 23:1; Job 35:10; Ps 95:2; Ps 119:54; Isa 24:16

זָמִיר H2159 Art / N-ms (1×)

Singing or pruning season; time of renewal in springtime (Song of Solomon 2:12)

This pivotal word in Song of Solomon 2:12 can mean either 'singing' (from the root 'to sing') or 'pruning' (from 'to trim vines'). Traditional interpretation favors 'singing of birds,' creating a romantic springtime scene. But 'pruning season' fits agricultural realities—spring was when vinedressers trimmed vines. Either way, the term marks seasonal renewal: birds return and sing, or vines are prepared for fruitfulness. Most modern translations choose 'singing,' drawn by the poetic context.

(1×) Either the season of singing or the pruning season in Song of Solomon 2:12, marking springtime renewal. Most versions (English 'singing,' Spanish 'cantar,' French 'chant') favor bird song over viticulture, though BDB notes both possibilities. The ambiguity may be intentional—spring brings both the music of returning birds and the careful work of preparing vines for fruiting. SINGING AND MUSIC
en: the-singing | es: cantar | fr: du-chant | de: [הזמיר] Song 2:12

זִמְרָה H2160 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zemirah, a Benjamite listed in 1 Chronicles 7:8

Zemirah was a Benjamite appearing in the genealogical lists of 1 Chronicles 7:8. The name derives from the root for 'song' or 'music,' suggesting a family heritage connected to singing or instrumental music. The Greek manuscripts vary slightly ('Amarias,' 'Zamaria/s'), reflecting transmission variations. Names related to music were meaningful in Israelite culture, which valued song as central to worship, celebration, and cultural memory.

(1×) A Benjamite in 1 Chronicles 7:8, whose name derives from the root for 'song' or 'praise music.' The multilingual glosses transliterate the name, with French and German bracketing it. The Greek variants ('Amarias,' 'Zamaria') show transmission variation, but the musical etymology would have connected this individual to Israel's rich tradition of song in worship and life. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zemirah | es: Zemira | fr: [זמירה] | de: [זמירה] 1Chr 7:8

זָמַם H2161 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (13×)

To consider, purpose, or devise; ranges from neutral deliberation to malicious scheming.

A verb of mental intention that spans the spectrum from careful deliberation to determined purpose to malicious plotting. When God is the subject, it describes sovereign decree, as in Jeremiah's 'I have purposed and will not relent' (Jer 4:28) and Lamentations' somber 'The LORD has done what He purposed' (Lam 2:17). When evildoers are the subject, Spanish maquinar ('to scheme') and tramaron ('they plotted') highlight the sinister coloring the word takes on in contexts like Deuteronomy 19:19 and Psalm 31:13. The single occurrence in Proverbs 31:16, where the virtuous woman 'considers' a field before purchasing it, reveals the neutral evaluative core beneath the more dramatic uses.

1. to purpose or plan (8×) To purpose, determine, or resolve upon a course of action, used of deliberate planning by both God and humans without inherent negative force. Spanish ha determinado ('has determined') and English 'I have purposed' converge on firm resolve. Central to divine decree passages: God purposes and does not relent (Jer 4:28; Lam 2:17), and at Babel the people purpose what they will do (Gen 11:6). Psalm 17:3 may reflect the psalmist's tested intention. PURPOSE RESOLVE INTENT

en: He-purposed, I-have-purposed, I-purposed | es: ha-determinado, he-pensado, lo-determiné | fr: [זמם], [זממתי], [זממתי] | de: [זמם], [זממתי], [זממתי] Gen 11:6; Ps 17:3; Jer 4:28; Jer 51:12; Lam 2:17

2. to scheme or plot evil (4×) To scheme, plot, or devise evil against someone, carrying distinctly malicious connotation. Spanish maquinar/tramaron ('to scheme/they plotted') and German plant Böses ('plans evil') make the hostile intent explicit. The false witness 'devised' against his brother (Deut 19:19), enemies 'plotted' against the psalmist (Ps 31:13), and the wicked 'schemes' against the righteous (Ps 37:12). Proverbs 30:32 warns against this kind of scheming. CONTEMPLATE DEVISE PLOW

en: he-schemed, plots, they-plotted | es: Maquina, maquinaste, tramaron | fr: il-schemed, méditer, זמות | de: [זמות], er-schemed, plant-Böses Deut 19:19; Ps 31:13; Ps 37:12; Prov 30:32

3. to consider or contemplate (1×) To consider, contemplate, or evaluate carefully before acting, a neutral cognitive sense of weighing options. Found only in the portrait of the capable wife who 'considers' a field and then buys it (Prov 31:16). Spanish considera and English 'she considers' both capture the deliberative quality, distinguishing thoughtful evaluation from either firm resolve or malicious plotting. CONTEMPLATE DEVISE PLOW

en: she-considers | es: Considera | fr: זממה | de: [זממה] Prov 31:16

זִמָּם H2162 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

Plot, evil scheme; malicious intention that the psalmist asks God to thwart (Psalm 140:8)

This noun appears in Psalm 140:8, where the psalmist pleads with God not to grant the wicked their 'plot' or 'device.' Paired with 'the desires of the wicked,' it represents malicious planning—not random evil but calculated schemes. The multilingual glosses emphasize conspiracy: Spanish 'intriga,' English 'plot,' French 'plan.' This is evil with intention and forethought, the kind that requires divine intervention to foil. The psalmist recognizes human powerlessness against organized malice.

(1×) Evil plot or scheme in Psalm 140:8, parallel to 'the desires of the wicked.' The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'intriga,' French 'plan,' German 'plot') emphasize calculated malice rather than impulsive wrongdoing. The psalmist's plea for God to withhold success from this 'device' acknowledges that sophisticated evil requires divine intervention to thwart. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-plot | es: su-intriga | fr: plan | de: sein-plot Ps 140:8

זְמַן H2163 V-Pual-Prtcpl-mp (3×)

appointed, fixed (of times); Pual participle

A late Hebrew (Aramaic-influenced) verb appearing only as a Pual participle, describing times that are 'fixed' or 'appointed.' It appears in Ezra and Nehemiah's cultic and administrative reforms: 'at appointed times' for legal hearings (Ezra 10:14), for wood offerings (Neh 10:34), and for offerings at fixed festivals (Neh 13:31). The Spanish señalados and French/German cognates all reflect the idea of predetermined, scheduled times. This is liturgical and bureaucratic language: the ordering of time by decree.

(3×) Describes 'appointed times' in three postexilic administrative or cultic contexts (Ezra 10:14; Neh 10:34; 13:31). The multilingual glosses (appointed, señalados) uniformly reflect temporal fixity and scheduling. The word denotes times set by authority—whether for legal assemblies or ritual observances. APPOINTING AND ORDAINING

en: appointed | es: señalados | fr: [מזמנות], [מזמנים] | de: [מזמנות], [מזמנים] Ezra 10:14; Neh 10:34; Neh 13:31

זְמַן H2164 V-Hifil-Perf-2mp (2×)

to agree together, conspire; used of courtiers colluding to deceive the king

This Aramaic verb appears only in Daniel 2:9, where King Nebuchadnezzar accuses his wise men of having 'agreed together' to speak deceptive words before him until circumstances change. The term implies collusion or conspiracy—a coordinated effort to mislead. The Ketiv and Qere offer variant forms (Haphel vs. Hithpael), both denominative from the noun 'appointed time,' suggesting an agreement made in advance, a pre-arranged plan. The context is one of political intrigue: the king suspects his advisors of stalling with lies.

(2×) An Aramaic verb meaning to conspire or agree together with intent to deceive. Daniel's narrative uses it in Nebuchadnezzar's accusation: the magicians and enchanters have coordinated their story, buying time with falsehoods. The denominative origin from 'time' or 'appointed time' suggests a meeting or arrangement—they have 'set a time together' for their deception. The textual variants (Ketiv/Qere) reflect dialect differences in Aramaic verb conjugations but point to the same semantic core: coordinated, duplicitous agreement. AGREE CONSENT ACCORD

en: (qere:you-agreed), [ketiv:you-agreed] | es: (habéis-preparado), [habéis-preparado] | fr: comploter | de: [הזדמנתון], [הזמנתון] Dan 2:9

זְמָן H2165 N-ms (4×)

Appointed time, season; a late Hebrew term for a fixed or designated period, borrowed from Persian.

A late biblical Hebrew noun meaning 'appointed time' or 'season,' appearing in post-exilic books that show Persian cultural influence. In Neh 2:6, Nehemiah sets a 'time' for his return to the king — a specific, agreed-upon date. Ecclesiastes 3:1 famously declares that there is a 'time' for everything under heaven, using this word for the appointed season. In Esther 9:27, 31, it refers to the fixed times of Purim observance. Arabic 'zaman' and Ethiopic 'zemen' are cognates, and the word likely entered Hebrew through Old Persian, reflecting the administrative vocabulary of the exile.

(4×) An appointed or designated time — a fixed period set by arrangement or divine ordering. Nehemiah uses it for the deadline he negotiated with King Artaxerxes (Neh 2:6). Ecclesiastes 3:1 employs it for the divinely appointed 'season' for every human activity. Esther 9:27, 31 fixes the annual 'times' for celebrating Purim. The Arabic cognate 'zaman' and the Aramaic 'zeman' confirm the broad Semitic range, while the likely Old Persian origin reflects post-exilic linguistic borrowing. Spanish 'tiempo' and French translations preserve the straightforward temporal sense. TIME AND SEASONS

en: and-according-to-their-time, at-their-times, time | es: en-sus-tiempos, tiempo, y-conforme-a-su-tiempo | fr: [בזמניהם], [וכזמנם], [זמן] | de: [בזמניהם], [וכזמנם], [זמן] Neh 2:6; Esth 9:27; Esth 9:31; Eccl 3:1

זְמַן H2166 Conj-w / N-mp (11×)

Time, appointed time (Aramaic) — a defined season, occasion, or period; used in Daniel and Ezra

The Aramaic noun זְמַן (zeman) means 'time,' 'appointed time,' or 'season,' appearing exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. It likely entered Aramaic as a loanword from Old Persian (zrvan, 'time, age'). Daniel asks the king for time to interpret the dream (Dan 2:16), God is sovereign over 'times and seasons' (Dan 2:21), and the apocalyptic visions speak of 'a time, times, and half a time' (Dan 7:25) — a formula that echoes through later Jewish and Christian eschatology. In Ezra 5:3 it marks the temporal setting of the governor's inquiry. The word carries a strong sense of divinely ordered moments rather than mere chronological duration. Spanish 'tiempo,' Arabic ʿ.

time, appointed time (11×) An Aramaic noun denoting a defined time, appointed occasion, or season, used exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra. Covers specific occasions (Dan 3:7-8 'at the time when'; 4:36 'at that time'; Ezra 5:3), requested delays (Dan 2:16 'give him time'), divine sovereignty over temporal order (Dan 2:21 'He changes times and seasons'), scheduled religious practice (Dan 6:10, 13 'three times a day'), and apocalyptic periodization (Dan 7:12, 22, 25 'a time, times, and half a time'). Likely a Persian loanword. TIME AND SEASONS

en: and-seasons, and-the-time, and-times | es: tiempo, tiempos, y-el-tiempo | fr: [זמנא], et-prostitution, prostitution | de: Zeit, [זמנא], und-Zeit Ezra 5:3; Dan 2:16; Dan 2:21; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:8

זָמַר H2167 V-Piel-Imperf.h-1cs / 2ms (45×)

sing praises, make music — to celebrate God with song and instrumental melody (Piel of zamar)

Zamar in the Piel stem is the quintessential Hebrew verb of musical worship, appearing 45 times exclusively in poetic contexts — the Psalms, Judges 5, and 2 Samuel 22. Its semantic range embraces both vocal singing and instrumental playing, as confirmed by the related noun mizmor ('psalm, melody'). The psalmist's repeated imperatives — zamru ('sing praises!') — often specify the instrument: 'Sing praises with the lyre' (Ps 33:2; 98:5; 147:7). The first-person declarations 'I will sing praises to your name' (Ps 18:49; 57:9; 108:3) bind the worshiper personally to the act. Deborah's ancient war hymn marks the earliest attestation: 'I will sing to the LORD, I will make music (azammer) to the LORD, the God of Israel' (Judg 5:3). The translations faithfully render the musical-worship sense: Spanish 'cantad alabanzas,' French 'chanter,' German 'lobsingen.'

sing praises, make music (45×) To make music or sing praises in worship of God, encompassing vocal melody and instrumental accompaniment. Used exclusively in poetry, concentrated in the Psalms (over 40 of 45 occurrences), with the earliest instance in Deborah's victory song (Judg 5:3) and a parallel in David's thanksgiving (2 Sam 22:50). Governs both imperative calls to communal worship ('sing praises to the LORD,' Ps 9:11; 30:4; 47:6-7) and personal vows of praise ('I will sing praises to your name,' Ps 18:49; 61:8; 104:33). The cognate noun mizmor confirms the musical dimension. All 45 occurrences share this unified worship-music sense. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: I-will-make-music, I-will-sing-praise, I-will-sing-praises | es: Cantad, cantad, cantad-alabanzas | fr: chanter, je-chanterai | de: sang Judg 5:3; 2Sam 22:50; 1Chr 16:9; Ps 7:17; Ps 9:2

זַמֵּר H2168 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (3×)

prune, trim (a vineyard)

A verb specific to viticultural practice: pruning grapevines. It appears in the Sabbath-year legislation ('you shall prune your vineyard,' Lev 25:3) and its suspension during the Sabbath year ('you shall not prune,' Lev 25:4). Isaiah prophesies a vineyard that 'will not be pruned or hoed' (Isa 5:6), signaling abandonment. The Spanish podarás, French tu devra prune, and German du soll prune all preserve the agricultural specificity. This is skilled labor: the careful cutting that promotes fruitfulness.

(3×) Refers to the agricultural practice of pruning vines in three contexts: command (Lev 25:3), prohibition (Lev 25:4), and abandonment (Isa 5:6, passive). The multilingual glosses uniformly render the viticultural action (prune, podarás). The word evokes the rhythm of agricultural care and its cessation—whether by law (Sabbath) or judgment (Isaiah's vineyard). SOWING AND PLANTING

en: it-will-be-pruned, you-shall-prune | es: podarás, será-podada | fr: [זמר], tu-devra-prune | de: [זמר], du-soll-prune Lev 25:3; Lev 25:4; Isa 5:6

זָמֶר H2169 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

Mountain sheep or goat; a clean animal permitted for food (Deuteronomy 14:5)

This animal name appears in the list of clean animals in Deuteronomy 14:5. Though traditionally translated 'chamois,' that species isn't native to biblical lands. Most scholars now favor 'mountain sheep' or 'mountain goat,' animals indigenous to the highlands of the ancient Near East. The Syriac version suggests 'wild goat.' The inclusion in Deuteronomy's list establishes this as a legitimate food source for Israel, distinguishing permitted from forbidden game animals.

(1×) A mountain-dwelling animal (sheep or goat) listed among clean animals in Deuteronomy 14:5. The traditional 'chamois' is geographically impossible, so modern translations favor indigenous highland species. Spanish 'cabra salvaje' (wild goat), German 'Berg-Schaf' (mountain sheep) reflect scholarly consensus. The Syriac cognate supports a mountain goat identification. Its presence in the clean animals list permits its consumption. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: and-mountain-sheep | es: y-cabra-salvaje | fr: et-montagne-mouton | de: und-Berg-Schaf Deut 14:5

זְמָר H2170 N-msd (4×)

Music, instrumental song; an Aramaic term for the musical performance accompanying Nebuchadnezzar's golden image.

An Aramaic noun in the emphatic state (zemara), appearing exclusively in Daniel 3 within the repeated catalogue of instruments summoning worship of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image. The word is cognate with the well-known Hebrew zamar ('to make music, sing praise') and here denotes music in a general or collective sense — the combined sound of the orchestra. All four occurrences appear in the formulaic list: 'when you hear the sound of the horn, pipe, lyre... and every kind of music.' Spanish 'música,' English 'music,' and German 'Musik' all render it straightforwardly, while French 'sacrifice' appears to be a contextual mistranslation.

(4×) Music or instrumental song — the collective sound of an orchestra or ensemble. All four uses occur in the formulaic summons to worship Nebuchadnezzar's image (Dan 3:5, 7, 10, 15), where 'every kind of music' caps the list of individual instruments. The Aramaic emphatic form zemara corresponds to Hebrew zimrah and the well-known verb zamar ('to sing praise'). Spanish 'música,' English 'music,' and German 'Musik' all give a direct equivalent, while French 'sacrifice' likely reflects a confusion with a different context. The word's setting — coerced pagan worship — contrasts sharply with its Hebrew cognate's association with praise of the Lord. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: music | es: música | fr: sacrifice | de: Musik Dan 3:5; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:10; Dan 3:15

זַמָּר H2171 N-mpd (1×)

Singers (Aramaic); temple musicians exempt from taxation (Ezra 7:24)

This Aramaic plural noun appears in Ezra 7:24, where King Artaxerxes exempts temple singers from Persian taxation. Along with priests, Levites, and other temple servants, 'singers' were protected to ensure worship continuity in the restored Jerusalem temple. The term emphasizes their professional role—these weren't occasional worshipers but dedicated musicians whose service was valued enough to receive royal economic protection. Music was essential, not peripheral, to proper temple worship.

(1×) Professional temple singers in Ezra 7:24, exempted from Persian taxation by royal decree. Listed alongside priests and Levites, these musicians held official religious roles. The multilingual bracketing indicates technical religious terminology. Their tax exemption demonstrates Persian imperial support for maintaining authentic Judean worship, recognizing music as integral to temple function, not mere embellishment. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: singers | es: cantores | fr: [זמריא] | de: [זמריא] Ezra 7:24

זִמְרָה H2172 N-fs (4×)

Song, melody, or music offered in praise; instrumental or vocal celebration of God's greatness.

A term for song or melody, almost always directed toward the praise of God. In the triumphant Song of the Sea (Exod 15:2), it appears in the famous declaration 'The LORD is my strength and my song'—a line echoed verbatim in Isaiah 12:2 and Psalm 118:14, underscoring its liturgical staying power. The word covers both instrumental music (Amos 5:23, paired with the lyre) and vocal celebration (Isa 51:3). Multilingual renderings consistently point to musical praise: English 'melody,' Spanish 'cantico,' French 'cantique,' and German 'ein Lied.'

(4×) Song, melody, or music offered in worship and praise. The term embraces both instrumental performance—as in Amos 5:23, where it is paired with the sound of harps—and vocal or general musical celebration, as in Psalm 81:2 ('Raise a song and sound the timbrel'). The cross-lingual evidence converges on musical praise: Spanish 'cantico,' French 'cantique,' German 'ein Lied,' all pointing to joyful liturgical music. Its repeated use in the phrase 'my strength and my song' (Exod 15:2; Isa 12:2; Ps 118:14) ties it firmly to Yahweh-directed worship. SONGS AND HYMNS

en: a-song, and-music-of, melody | es: cántico, y-música-de | fr: [זמרה], cantique, et-chant | de: [וזמרת], [זמרה], ein-Lied Ps 81:2; Ps 98:5; Isa 51:3; Amos 5:23

זִמְרָה H2173 Prep-m / N-fsc (1×)

Choice produce, finest products of the land (Genesis 43:11)

This noun appears in Genesis 43:11, where Jacob instructs his sons to take 'the choice produce of the land' as a gift to the Egyptian official (unknowingly, Joseph). BDB notes uncertainty about the derivation—possibly from 'song/praise' (figuratively, 'what the land praises itself for') or from a root meaning 'choice products.' The context makes clear these are premium items: balm, honey, spices, myrrh, nuts, almonds. What sets a land apart, its distinctive excellence.

(1×) The finest produce or choice products of the land in Genesis 43:11, sent as gifts to Egypt. Whether derived from 'song' (what the land is praised for) or 'choice,' the term designates premium goods: spices, nuts, balm. Spanish 'lo mejor' (the best), French 'produce,' and the Greek 'fruits' all recognize these as distinctive, valuable products representing the land's excellence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-produce-of | es: de-lo-mejor-de | fr: de-produce-de | de: vom-Besten Gen 43:11

זִמְרִי H2174a Conj-w / N-proper-ms (14×)

Zimri — a Hebrew personal name borne by a Simeonite prince, a king of Israel, and Judahite and Benjamite figures.

A proper masculine name identifying at least four individuals in the Hebrew Bible. Most prominent is the Israelite king who assassinated Elah and reigned just seven days before Omri's siege drove him to self-immolation (1 Kgs 16:9–20); Jezebel's taunt 'Is it peace, Zimri?' (2 Kgs 9:31) preserves his infamy as a regicide. The name also belongs to the Simeonite prince slain by Phinehas at Baal-peor (Num 25:14), a grandson of Judah (1 Chr 2:6), and a Benjamite descendant of Saul (1 Chr 8:36; 9:42).

Zimri (14×) The proper name Zimri (זִמְרִי), borne by multiple Old Testament figures: (a) a Simeonite prince killed by Phinehas for bringing a Midianite woman into the Israelite camp (Num 25:14); (b) the fifth king of Israel's northern kingdom, who murdered Elah and reigned only seven days before burning the palace over himself (1 Kgs 16:9–18); (c) a grandson of Zerah of Judah (1 Chr 2:6); and (d) a Benjamite in Saul's genealogy (1 Chr 8:36; 9:42). The Septuagint renders it Ζαμβρί throughout. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zimri, and-Zimri | es: Zimri, Zimrí, y-Zimrí | fr: Zimri, et-Zimri | de: Zimri, [וזמרי], [זמרי] Num 25:14; 1Kgs 16:9; 1Kgs 16:10; 1Kgs 16:12; 1Kgs 16:15

זִמְרִי H2174b N-proper-fs (1×)

Zimri, an uncertain ethnic or geographical designation in Jeremiah 25:25

This enigmatic reference appears in Jeremiah 25:25 among 'the kings of Zimri,' listed alongside Elam and Media. The identification is uncertain—possibly an Ethiopian tribe (Sembrites) or another group. The Greek Septuagint omits it entirely, and some scholars consider it a textual interpolation. Its placement among distant nations in Jeremiah's oracle against foreign peoples suggests a remote, perhaps minor, kingdom or ethnic group beyond Israel's immediate neighbors.

(1×) An uncertain ethnic or geographical designation in Jeremiah 25:25, appearing as 'kings of Zimri' among Elam and Media. Some connect it to Ethiopian Sembrites, but the Greek omission and scholarly debate about interpolation suggest textual uncertainty. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate, unable to determine whether this represents a people, place, or textual corruption. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zimri | es: Zimri | fr: [זמרי] | de: [זמרי] Jer 25:25

זִמְרָן H2175 N-proper-ms (2×)

personal name; a son of Abraham and Keturah

Zimran is listed as the first son of Abraham by his wife Keturah in Genesis 25:2 and 1 Chronicles 1:32. The name may be linked to a geographical or tribal designation, though its exact reference is uncertain. Commentators have speculated about connections to Arabian tribes or regions, but no consensus exists. The Septuagint's varied renderings reflect this ambiguity. He appears only in genealogical lists, with no narrative details, marking him as an ancestor of peoples on the periphery of Israel's sacred history.

(2×) A masculine proper name designating Abraham's firstborn by Keturah. The name is preserved solely in genealogical contexts, establishing Abraham's connection to Arabian or eastern peoples. No stories are told of Zimran himself; he functions as an eponymous ancestor, a name anchoring a lineage. The genealogies in Genesis and Chronicles use such figures to map out Israel's kinship network across the Near East, locating the covenant family within a broader web of nations descended from the patriarch. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zimran | es: Zimran | fr: Zimran, [זמרן] | de: Simran, [זמרן] Gen 25:2; 1Chr 1:32

זִמְרָה H2176 Conj-w / N-fs (3×)

melody, song (especially in praise of Yahweh)

A noun denoting musical praise, whether instrumental or vocal. It appears in liturgical summons ('Take up a psalm; sound the tambourine, the sweet lyre with the harp,' Ps 81:2), in the threefold confession 'The LORD is my strength and my song' (Exod 15:2; Ps 118:14; Isa 12:2), and in the sound of harp and melody (Ps 98:5). The Spanish mi canción, y-mi-cántico and French chant reflect the devotional, celebratory register. This is music offered to God—joyful, public, and often accompanied by instruments.

(3×) Denotes musical praise in three thematic clusters: the LORD as 'my song' (Exod 15:2; Ps 118:14; Isa 12:2) and instrumental or vocal music in worship (Ps 81:2; 98:5; cf. Amos 5:23). The multilingual glosses (song, mi canción, chant) emphasize the celebratory and cultic function. The word evokes communal, joyous worship—not private lament. SONGS AND HYMNS

en: and-my-song, and-song | es: y-mi-canción, y-mi-cántico | fr: [וזמרת], et-chant | de: [וזמרת], und-mein-Lied, und-song Exod 15:2; Ps 118:14; Isa 12:2

זַן H2177 N-ms (3×)

kind, sort, variety (late Hebrew)

A late Hebrew noun denoting categories or types. It appears in Psalm 144:13 ('our garners full, providing all kinds of produce,' lit. 'from kind to kind') and in the account of Asa's burial with 'various kinds of spices' (2 Chr 16:14). The Spanish de especie a especie, y-variedades and French/German kind, von kind emphasize taxonomic diversity. This is the language of abundance and variety: not one type but all types, a fullness that spans categories.

(3×) Refers to varieties or kinds in two contexts: agricultural produce (Ps 144:13, 'from kind to kind' = all sorts) and spices (2 Chr 16:14). The multilingual glosses (kind, especie, variedades) uniformly reflect categorical diversity. The word conveys plenitude through enumeration of types—a fullness that transcends singular categories. GENERATION AND LINEAGE

en: and-kinds, from-kind, kind | es: de-especie, especie, y-variedades | fr: [וזנים], de-espèce, espèce | de: [וזנים], kind, von-kind 2Chr 16:14; Ps 144:13

זָן H2178 N-mpc (4×)

Kind, sort, type; used in Aramaic portions of Daniel for categories of musical instruments.

An Aramaic noun meaning 'kind' or 'sort,' appearing exclusively in Daniel 3 within the repeated formula describing Nebuchadnezzar's orchestra. Each of its four occurrences (Dan 3:5, 7, 10, 15) is part of the phrase 'all kinds of music,' listing the instruments that signal the moment to bow before the golden image. The multilingual glosses confirm its classificatory sense: English 'kinds of,' Spanish 'tipo de,' German 'Art.' Its restriction to this single Aramaic context makes it a narrow but vivid term for categorical sorting.

(4×) Kind, sort, or category—specifically of things grouped by type. All four biblical occurrences appear in the construct phrase 'kinds of music' (זְנֵי זְמָרָא) in Daniel 3:5, 7, 10, 15, each time enumerating the instrumental ensemble that commands prostration before the image. English renders it 'kinds of,' Spanish 'tipo de,' French 'multitude,' and German 'Art,' all converging on the notion of classification or variety. The word's Aramaic cognates in Syriac and Targumic literature carry the same taxonomic sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: kinds-of | es: tipo-de | fr: multitude | de: Art Dan 3:5; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:10; Dan 3:15

זָנַב H2179 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms (2×)

to attack the rear, strike the tail; used of military tactics targeting stragglers

This denominative verb, formed from the noun 'tail,' means to attack or strike from the rear, specifically targeting those lagging behind. In Deuteronomy 25:18, the Amalekites 'attacked your rear' when Israel was exhausted during the Exodus, striking the weak and weary. In Joshua 10:19, the Israelites are commanded to 'attack their rear' as they pursue fleeing enemies. The term vividly captures a particular military tactic—exploiting vulnerability by hitting the back of a column, where the feeble and slow are exposed.

(2×) A Piel verb describing a rear-guard attack in warfare. The imagery is visceral: to 'cut off the tail' is to assault those at the back of a formation—the exhausted, the elderly, the infirm. Deuteronomy memorializes Amalek's cowardly tactic against Israel's stragglers as a paradigmatic act of cruelty deserving perpetual enmity. Joshua reverses the image: Israel is commanded to do to its enemies what Amalek did to them. The metaphor extends the body part (tail) into a verb for tactical brutality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-attack-their-rear, and-attacked-rear-of | es: y-atacó-por-detrás, y-golpead-la-retaguardia-de | fr: et-attack-leur-rear, et-attacked-rear-de | de: und-attack-ihr-rear, und-attacked-rear-von Deut 25:18; Josh 10:19

זָנָב H2180 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (11×)

Tail — the hind extremity of an animal; figuratively the lowest, weakest, or most insignificant part

The noun זָנָב (zanav) denotes the tail of an animal, both literally and as a vivid figure for social and political insignificance. When God commands Moses to seize the serpent 'by the tail' (Exod 4:4), the physical sense is primary. But Deuteronomy 28:13, 44 transforms the image into a proverb of covenant status: obedience makes Israel 'the head,' disobedience makes her 'the tail.' Isaiah 9:14 explicitly glosses the metaphor — 'the elder and honored man is the head; the prophet who teaches lies is the tail.' Samson's foxes, tied tail to tail with torches (Judg 15:4), remain one of Scripture's most unforgettable images. Spanish 'cola' and French 'queue' serve for both literal and figurative uses.

tail; end, stump (11×) The literal tail of an animal — the physical hind appendage. Moses grasps the serpent by the tail (Exod 4:4), Samson ties foxes tail-to-tail with firebrands (Judg 15:4), and Isaiah describes the smoldering 'tails' (stumps) of two firebrands representing weakened kings (Isa 7:4). Spanish 'cola,' French 'queue,' and German 'Schwanz' all map directly. TAIL BODY PART

en: and-tail, by-its-tail, for-tail | es: cabos-de, cola, la-cola | fr: [והזנב], [וזנב], [זנבות] | de: [והזנב], [וזנב], [זנבו] Exod 4:4; Deut 28:13; Deut 28:44; Judg 15:4

זָנָה H2181 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3ms (93×)

Commit fornication, be a harlot; figuratively, be spiritually unfaithful to God; as noun, a prostitute; in Hifil, cause to prostitute.

One of the most theologically loaded verbs in the Hebrew Bible, zanah moves between the literal bedroom and the prophetic courtroom. In its concrete Qal usage, it denotes sexual immorality — Tamar is accused of 'playing the harlot' (Gen 38:24), and Levitical law forbids degrading a daughter to prostitution (Lev 19:29). But the prophets seized this word as their supreme metaphor for Israel's covenant unfaithfulness: 'whoring after' foreign gods (Exod 34:15-16, Hosea, Ezekiel 16 and 23). The feminine participle zonah crystallized into a noun meaning 'prostitute,' from Rahab in Jericho (Josh 2:1) to the 'strange woman' of Proverbs. German consistently uses 'Hure/huren,' while Spanish alternates between 'fornicar' and 'ramera,' and French between 'se prostituer' and 'prostituée.'

1. be spiritually unfaithful (Qal metaphorical) (41×) Qal metaphorical: to be spiritually unfaithful, 'play the harlot' after other gods. The dominant prophetic usage where Israel's idolatry is depicted as marital betrayal — 'whoring after' the Baals (Judg 2:17, 8:27), foreign alliances (Ezek 16:26, 28), or pagan practices (Lev 17:7, 20:5). Hosea's entire marriage narrative embodies this sense. The construction with 'acharê (after) or tachath (under, i.e., instead of) marks the metaphorical usage. French 'se prostituer' and German 'huren' carry the same double register of sexual and covenantal vocabulary. SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: and-played-the-harlot, and-prostitute, and-prostituted | es: Y-fornicaste, Y-fornicó, fornicaste | fr: [ויזנו], et-ils-prostitute, et-prostitute | de: der-hurte, huren, hurte Exod 34:15; Exod 34:16; Lev 17:7; Lev 20:5; Num 15:39

2. secular prostitute (zonah) (17×) Split from sense 94631. Criteria: A woman who sells sexual services for payment in ordinary social contexts; Rahab (Josh 2:1), the two women before Solomon (1 Kgs 3:16), Proverbs references

en: a-harlot, a-prostitute, for-a-prostitute | es: acaso-como-prostituta, es-la-ramera, la-prostituta | fr: comme-un-prostitute, harlot, le-prostitute | de: Hure, der-Hurerei, der-prostitute Gen 34:31; Gen 38:15; Lev 21:7; Lev 21:14; Deut 23:18

3. metaphorical harlot (spiritual unfaithfulness) (15×) Split from sense 94631. Criteria: Figurative use for Israel/Judah's spiritual adultery or covenant infidelity, if present in this cluster en: a-harlot, as-the-harlot, from-harlotry | es: como-la-ramera, de-ramera, en-ramera | fr: la-prostituée, prostitution, se-prostituer | de: Hure, Hurerei, die-Hure Isa 1:21; Isa 23:15; Isa 23:16; Jer 2:20; Jer 3:3

4. commit fornication, be a harlot (Qal literal) (12×) Qal literal: to commit fornication, engage in actual sexual immorality. Physical prostitution or marital unfaithfulness by a real person, attested in legal codes (Lev 19:29 — profaning a daughter; Lev 21:9 — a priest's daughter) and narrative (Gen 38:24 — Tamar accused; Judg 19:2 — the Levite's concubine). Korean 음행하다 and Swahili -zini both isolate the physical sexual act. Context distinguishes this from the metaphorical prophetic usage (sense 1). SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: and-was-unfaithful, has-played-the-prostitute, let-prostitute | es: Y-fornicó, a-fornicar, a-prostituirse | fr: a-played-le-prostitute, et-était-unfaithful, laisse-prostitute | de: gehurt-hat, huren, hurte Gen 38:24; Lev 19:29; Lev 20:5; Lev 20:6; Lev 21:9

5. cause to commit harlotry (Hifil) (7×) Hifil causative: to cause to commit harlotry, lead into prostitution. The agent leads or compels another into sexual immorality or idolatrous unfaithfulness. Jezebel's 'harlotries' lead Israel astray (2 Chr 21:11, 13); a father must not profane his daughter by making her a prostitute (Lev

19:29). The causative stem marks moral culpability for corrupting others, not just oneself. Spanish 'hacer fornicar' and the Hifil morphology both foreground the agent's responsibility. SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: and-caused-to-prostitute, and-they-cause-to-prostitute, like-prostitution-of | es: como-fornicó, e-hiciste-fornicar, e-hizo-fornicar | fr: [וירן], [ותזנה], [כהזנות] | de: huren, hurte, und-huren Exod 34:16; Lev 19:29; 2Chr 21:11; 2Chr 21:13

6. (1×) A single anomalous occurrence in Ezekiel 16:34 where the form describes Jerusalem's harlotry as inverted — she pays her lovers rather than being paid. English 'was harlotry' and Spanish 'fornicó' treat it as a standard Qal, but the context marks it as the culmination of Ezekiel's shocking reversal: 'you are the opposite of other women in your harlotry.' Best parsed as an intensified Qal usage emphasizing the perversity of Jerusalem's unfaithfulness. SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: was-harlotry | es: fornicó | fr: se-prostituer | de: huren Ezek 16:34

זָנוֹחַ H2182 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (5×)

Zanoah; a place name for two Judahite towns, one in the Shephelah, one in the hill country

A proper noun identifying two towns in the tribal allotment of Judah. The first Zanoah lies in the Shephelah lowlands southeast of Zorah (Josh 15:34), and its inhabitants helped rebuild the Valley Gate of Jerusalem under Nehemiah (Neh 3:13; 11:30). The second Zanoah sits in the hill country of Judah (Josh 15:56), possibly modern Zanuta southwest of Hebron. In 1 Chronicles 4:18 the name appears in a genealogical context as a settlement founded by a descendant of Judah.

(5×) A Judahite town in the Shephelah lowlands, southeast of Zorah. Listed in Joshua 15:34 among the cities of the valley district, its people rebuilt Jerusalem's Valley Gate (Neh 3:13) and resettled there after the exile (Neh 11:30). Also mentioned genealogically in 1 Chronicles 4:18. Spanish 'Zanoa/Zanoaj,' French 'Zanoach,' and German 'Zanoach' all transliterate the name with minor variation, reflecting the toponym's stability across traditions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zano'ach, Zanoach, Zanoah | es: Zanoa, Zanoaj, y-Zanoa | fr: [זנוח], [זנח], et-Zanoach | de: [זנוח], [זנח], und-Zanoach Josh 15:34; Josh 15:56; 1Chr 4:18; Neh 3:13; Neh 11:30

זְנוּנִים H2183 N-mpc / 3fs (12×)

zenunim – fornication or harlotries; sexual unfaithfulness used literally and as a metaphor for idolatry

The abstract plural noun zenunim (from the root zanah, 'to commit fornication') denotes harlotries or acts of sexual unfaithfulness, deployed both literally and as a powerful metaphor for Israel's spiritual infidelity to Yahweh. Hosea's marriage imagery is the theological epicenter: his wife Gomer is 'a wife of harlotries' (Hos 1:2), and Israel's covenant betrayal is described as insatiable promiscuity (Hos 2:2, 4; 4:12; 5:4). The term also appears in prophetic indictments of Jezebel (2 Kgs 9:22), the sister-cities Jerusalem and Samaria (Ezek 23:11, 29), Nineveh (Nah 3:4), and Tamar's literal case (Gen 38:24). The pluralis intensivus form conveys habitual, brazen unfaithfulness rather than a single act.

fornication, harlotries (12×) Fornication or harlotries as an abstract plural (pluralis intensivus) denoting habitual sexual unfaithfulness, used both literally (Gen 38:24, Tamar accused of prostitution) and metaphorically for Israel's idolatrous covenant betrayal (Hos 1:2, 'wife of harlotries'; 2 Kgs 9:22, 'harlotries of Jezebel'; Nah 3:4, Nineveh as seductress). Inflectional variants – absolute zenunim, construct zenune, and suffixed forms – represent morphology, not distinct senses. Multilingual glosses converge: Arabic zina, German Hurerei, Korean eumhaeng, Spanish fornicaciones. SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: by-her-harlotries, by-prostitution, harlotries-of | es: en-prostituciones-de-ella, fornicaciones-de-ti, más-que-fornicaciones-de | fr: harlotries-de, par-prostitution, prostitution | de: Hurerei, [זנוניך], [מזנוני] Gen 38:24; 2Kgs 9:22; Ezek 23:11; Ezek 23:29; Hos 1:2

זְנוּת H2184 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3mp (9×)

Fornication, harlotry, unfaithfulness; abstract noun for sexual or spiritual prostitution, especially Israel's idolatry.

This abstract feminine noun denotes fornication or harlotry, used both of literal sexual immorality and – more prominently – of Israel's spiritual unfaithfulness to YHWH. The prophets Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Hosea employ it as a devastating metaphor: Israel has played the harlot with foreign gods and foreign alliances. In Ezekiel 23:27, God promises to put an end to Jerusalem's zenut, while Hosea 4:11 warns that wine and new wine take away the understanding, leading to zenut. The lone Torah occurrence (Num 14:33) warns that the wilderness generation's children will bear the consequences of their fathers' spiritual prostitution.

fornication, harlotry, unfaithfulness (9×) Abstract noun for fornication, harlotry, or unfaithfulness – covering literal sexual immorality (Hos 4:11), political infidelity through foreign alliances (Ezek 23:27), and religious apostasy through idolatry (Jer 3:2, 9; 13:27; Num 14:33). Spanish translations use 'prostitucion' and 'prostituciones,' while English renders it 'prostitution' and 'harlotry.' The term appears almost exclusively in prophetic literature, where it functions as the central metaphor for covenant betrayal. Ezekiel 43:7, 9 extends the image to the defilement of God's temple itself by Israel's zenut. SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: Prostitution, of-her-harlotry, prostitution | es: Prostitución, con-su-prostitución, con-tus-prostituciones | fr: [בזנותיך], [זנותה], [זנותך] | de: Hurerei, [בזנותיך], [בזנותם] Num 14:33; Jer 3:2; Jer 3:9; Jer 13:27; Ezek 23:27

זָנָה H2185 Conj-w (2×)

prostitutes; women who engage in sexual immorality for payment

This term refers to women who practice prostitution, appearing in narrative contexts involving harlots. In 1 Kings 3:16, two 'prostitutes' come before Solomon for his famous judgment. In 1 Kings 22:38, the mention of 'the prostitutes' bathing in Ahab's blood-stained chariot water fulfills prophetic judgment. The root means 'to commit fornication' and is used both literally (for sexual immorality) and metaphorically (for Israel's spiritual adultery with other gods). Here the literal sense predominates, depicting social realities of ancient Israelite life.

(2×) The plural noun for women engaged in prostitution, used in historical narrative. Solomon's wisdom is demonstrated by adjudicating a dispute between two harlots over a child—their marginal social status makes the king's discernment all the more striking. The notice about Ahab's blood and the prostitutes washing adds a grim note to the fulfillment of Elijah's oracle, suggesting public shame. The term belongs to the vocabulary of sexual ethics and social stratification, marking women outside covenant family structures. SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: and-the-prostitutes, prostitutes | es: prostitutas, y-las-rameras | fr: et-le-prostitutes, prostitutes | de: prostitutes, und-der-prostitutes 1Kgs 3:16; 1Kgs 22:38

זָנַח H2186a V-Qal-Perf-1cs / 3mp (19×)

To reject or spurn; used of God casting off his people or of Israel rejecting what is good (Qal and Hifil).

A verb of painful divine distance, zanach describes the act of rejecting or spurning someone decisively. In most of its occurrences, God is the subject — the psalmists cry out in anguish, 'Why have you rejected us?' (Ps 44:9, 23; 60:1; 74:1). The word carries a weight of abandonment beyond mere disapproval: Spanish consistently renders it 'rechazar' (to push back, repel), while English translations alternate between 'rejected' and 'cast off,' capturing the sense of being actively thrust away. In Hosea 8:3, Israel itself becomes the subject, spurning what is good, provoking the very estrangement the psalmists lament.

1. reject, spurn (Qal) (16×) The core Qal meaning: to reject, refuse, or cast off, expressing decisive repudiation. Overwhelmingly used of God rejecting his people — the psalmists' most anguished complaint (Ps 43:2; 44:9, 23; 60:1; 74:1; 77:7; 88:14). Spanish 'ha rechazado' and English 'has rejected' both convey this active, painful dismissal. In Hosea 8:3 and 8:5, the subject shifts to Israel or

Samaria's calf, but the force is the same: a deliberate spurning of relationship. REJECTION AND REFUSAL

en: And-was-deprived, Has-rejected, You-have-rejected | es: Ha-rechazado, Y-ha-rechazado, desechará | fr: [ותזנח], [נזנח], [נזנחתים] | de: [ותזנח], [נזנח], [נזנחתים] Ps 43:2; Ps 44:9; Ps 44:23; Ps 60:1; Ps 60:10

2. cast away, remove (Hifil) (3×) The Hifil causative intensification: to cast aside or forcefully remove, emphasizing active displacement. Used in Chronicles for God expelling priests (2 Chr 11:14) and Hezekiah acknowledging vessels Ahaz had profaned and 'cast away' (2 Chr 29:19). Swahili translations render this with -tupa ('throw away') and -acha ('abandon'), highlighting the physical force implied by the Hifil stem. In 1 Chronicles 28:9, David warns Solomon that disobedience will cause God to 'reject you forever.' SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: He-will-reject-you, cast-aside, rejected-them | es: desechó, los-desechó, te-desechará | fr: [הזניח], [הזניחם], [יזניחך] | de: [הזניח], [הזניחם], [יזניחך] 1Chr 28:9; 2Chr 11:14; 2Chr 29:19

זָנַח H2186b Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3cp (1×)

Stink, emit foul odor (Hiphil); used of polluted rivers in judgment (Isaiah 19:6)

This verb appears in Isaiah 19:6 describing Egypt's rivers and canals stinking as they dry up during divine judgment. The imagery is vivid: stagnant, receding waters produce rotting vegetation and dead fish, filling the air with putrefaction. The term connects to Arabic roots for 'become rancid,' capturing the sensory reality of ecological collapse. When God withdraws blessing, even Egypt's life-giving Nile becomes a source of stench—a reversal of its nurturing role.

(1×) Emit a stench or become foul-smelling, used of Egypt's rivers in Isaiah 19:6 during judgment. The cognate Arabic 'become rancid' (of oil) establishes the semantic field of decomposition. Receding waters leave rotting organic matter, reversing the Nile's life-giving character into death and decay. This ecological judgment uses sensory imagery—smell—to depict divine withdrawal of blessing. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: and-will-stink | es: Y-apestarán | fr: [והאזניחו] | de: [והאזניחו] Isa 19:6

זָנַק H2187 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (1×)

Leap forth (Piel); energetic springing movement (Deuteronomy 33:22)

This verb appears in Moses' blessing over Dan in Deuteronomy 33:22: 'Dan is a lion's whelp who leaps forth from Bashan.' The imagery captures explosive energy—a young lion bursting from cover in a surprise attack. The Piel form intensifies the action: not merely moving but springing with force. Dan's northern territory included Bashan's highlands, and the blessing portrays the tribe as fierce, agile, and unpredictable in battle—qualities fitting a lion metaphor.

(1×) Leap forth or spring forward in Deuteronomy 33:22, describing Dan as a lion's whelp bursting from Bashan. The Aramaic cognates for 'throw' or 'shoot' suggest forceful, sudden movement. The multilingual glosses coordinate on 'leaping,' capturing the explosive energy of a young predator launching an attack. This single occurrence embodies Dan's fierce, unpredictable military character. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8396 WITH 3 SENSES

en: leaping | es: que-salta | fr: leaping | de: leaping Deut 33:22

זֵעָה H2188 Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)

Sweat, perspiration; toil's physical cost after the Fall (Genesis 3:19)

This noun appears in God's curse to Adam in Genesis 3:19: 'By the sweat of your face you shall eat bread.' Sweat symbolizes the toilsome labor now required to extract food from cursed ground. What should have been joyful cultivation becomes exhausting drudgery. The term captures the physical cost of post-Fall work—not work itself (Adam worked before the Fall) but its burdensome, frustrating character. Aramaic and Syriac cognates confirm the meaning: perspiration from strenuous effort.

(1×) Sweat or perspiration in Genesis 3:19, symbolizing toilsome labor after the Fall. The phrase 'by the sweat of your face' contrasts pre-Fall gardening with post-curse agricultural struggle. The multilingual coordination (French 'sueur,' Spanish 'sudor') emphasizes the physical cost of extracting sustenance from resistant earth. This isn't work per se but work's exhausting, frustrating burden—the price of disobedience. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: In-sweat-of | es: Con-sudor-de | fr: Dans-sueur-de | de: im-Schweiß Gen 3:19

זְוָעָה H2189 Prep-l / N-fs (7×)

Object of trembling or horror; a thing that causes terror, used in prophetic judgment curses.

This noun describes something so dreadful that it causes onlookers to tremble — an object of horror. It appears exclusively in covenant-curse and prophetic-judgment contexts where God threatens to make a disobedient people into a spectacle of terror before all nations. The classic formulation in Deuteronomy 28:25, 'you shall become a horror to all the kingdoms of the earth,' sets the pattern that Jeremiah echoes repeatedly (15:4; 24:9; 29:18; 34:17) in describing the fate of Judah and Jerusalem.

object of trembling, horror (7×) An object of trembling or horror — something whose terrible fate makes witnesses shudder. Every occurrence follows the formula of becoming (היה ל or נתן ל) 'a horror' to the nations, always in the context of divine judgment. Spanish renders it espanto or horror, French effroi, and German Entsetzen — each capturing the visceral, trembling dread the word conveys. It consistently appears alongside synonyms for curse, desolation, hissing, and reproach (Jer 29:18; 34:17), forming a devastating litany of covenant consequences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-horror, as-terror, for-horror | es: (para-espanto), (para-horror), (por-espanto) | fr: [לזעוה], effroi, pour-horror | de: Entsetzen, [לזעוה], fuer-horror Deut 28:25; 2Chr 29:8; Jer 15:4; Jer 24:9; Jer 29:18

זַעֲוָן H2190 Conj-w / N-proper-md (2×)

personal name; a descendant of Seir the Horite

Zaavan appears in the genealogies of Genesis 36:27 and 1 Chronicles 1:42 as a descendant (or tribal branch) of Seir the Horite, the indigenous inhabitants of Edom before Esau's line displaced them. The name's etymology is uncertain; Samaritan and Septuagint variants suggest textual fluidity. The Horite clans are listed to establish the pre-Edomite population of the region, situating biblical history within a broader ethnic landscape of the southern Transjordan.

(2×) A proper name for a Horite clan or individual descended from Seir. The genealogies preserve this name as part of the indigenous population of Seir/Edom, a people eventually absorbed or displaced by Esau's descendants. The name itself remains obscure; manuscript variants indicate early uncertainty about its form. Chronicles' preservation of the list reflects the Chronicler's interest in comprehensive genealogical mapping, including non-Israelite peoples on the margins of covenant history. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Za'avan, and-Zaavan | es: y-Zaavan | fr: [וזעון], et-Zaavan | de: [וזעון], und-Saawan Gen 36:27; 1Chr 1:42

זְעִיר H2191 N-ms (5×)

a little, a small amount; used of quantity or brief duration

A diminutive noun meaning 'a little,' occurring in two distinctive contexts. In Isaiah 28:10, 13, it appears in the mocking refrain zĕʿêr šām zĕʿêr šām ('a little here, a little there'), paired with ṣaw and qaw, mimicking the drunkards' perception of prophetic instruction as tedious drip-feeding. In Job 36:2, Elihu asks for 'a little' patience before continuing his argument. The word's compact form suits its meaning: something small, whether in quantity or time.

(5×) A small quantity or brief measure, functioning adverbially. In Isaiah 28:10, 13, it conveys incremental smallness in the taunt-refrain 'a little here, a little there,' describing how divine instruction arrives in seemingly trivial fragments. Spanish 'poco' and French 'petit' both capture the diminutive force. In Job 36:2 it denotes a short span of time — 'wait for me a little.' The diminutive morphology mirrors the semantic content of smallness. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS

en: a-little | es: poco | fr: petit, ועיר | de: [זעיר], gering Job 36:2; Isa 28:10; Isa 28:13

זְעֵיר H2192 Adj-fs (1×)
Little, small (Aramaic); modest in size or importance (Daniel 7:8)
This Aramaic adjective describes the 'little horn' in Daniel's apocalyptic vision (7:8). Though small initially, this horn uproots three others and speaks arrogantly, symbolizing a ruler who rises from obscurity to dominate. The adjective contrasts size with significance: physically small but disproportionately influential and destructive. This pattern recurs in biblical symbolism—what appears insignificant often proves pivotal. The 'little horn' becomes the vision's focal point, embodying presumptuous power.

(1×) Small or little in Daniel 7:8, describing the notorious 'little horn' in apocalyptic vision. The adjective emphasizes initial insignificance contrasted with eventual dominating influence. Though modest in appearance, this horn uproots three others and speaks blasphemies —size doesn't correlate with impact. The multilingual glosses maintain the diminutive sense (French 'petit,' Spanish 'pequeño'), underscoring the ironic disproportion between appearance and effect. SMALLNESS AND LEAST en: little | es: pequeño | fr: petit | de: [זעירה] Dan 7:8

זְעַךְ H2193 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (1×)
Be extinguished (Niphal); flame or life snuffed out (Job 17:1)
This verb appears in Job's lament in 17:1: 'My days are extinguished.' The imagery is of a lamp or fire being snuffed out—life's flame dying. Elsewhere the Bible uses 'da'ak' for this concept, and some scholars think this is a scribal error for that verb. The parallel phrase 'my spirit is broken' reinforces the sense of vitality ebbing away. Job sees himself as a dying flame, his life-force consumed by suffering and approaching death.

(1×) Be extinguished or snuffed out in Job 17:1, describing Job's days and life ebbing away. The imagery draws on lamps or fires being quenched—life's flame dying. Some consider this a scribal variant of 'da'ak' (the more common term for 'extinguish'), but the sense is clear: Job perceives himself as a fading light approaching darkness. The parallel 'my spirit is broken' intensifies the image of expiring vitality. EXTINGUISHING FIRE
en: are-extinguished | es: se-extinguen | fr: נזעכו | de: [נזעכו] Job 17:1

זָעַם H2194 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs (12×)
To be indignant, denounce, or curse; expressing fierce divine or human anger, often as formal prophetic condemnation.
A verb of fierce displeasure, za'am captures both the smoldering indignation of God and the formal act of cursing or denouncing. When Balak summoned Balaam to denounce Israel (Num 23:7-8), the word carries the force of an official, prophetic malediction. Yet in Psalm 7:11, it describes God as 'indignant every day'—a constant moral outrage against wickedness. The passive participle (Prov 22:14, Mic 6:10) marks persons or things as standing under the weight of that divine displeasure, accursed and condemned.

1. be indignant, enraged (6×) To burn with indignation or fierce anger, typically of God's settled wrath. Spanish 'indignados' and French 'être indigné' both capture the emotional intensity. Psalm 7:11 portrays God as an 'indignant' judge daily, while Daniel 11:30 extends it to a hostile king enraged against the holy covenant (Isa 66:14, Zech 1:12). ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: and-be-enraged, and-indignation, indignant | es: indignados, maldijo, que-se-indigna | fr: et-indignation, et-être-indigné, être-indigné | de: [וזעם], [זעם], [זעמתה] Ps 7:11; Prov 25:23; Isa 66:14; Dan 11:30; Zech 1:12

2. denounce, curse openly (4×) To denounce or curse formally, especially in prophetic or judicial speech. Balaam's commission to 'denounce' Israel (Num 23:7-8) uses this word for an official malediction backed by spiritual authority. Spanish 'denuncia/denunciaré' and English 'denounce' reflect the public, declarative nature. Proverbs 24:24 applies it to those who pronounce the wicked innocent —they will themselves be denounced by the peoples. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: can-I-denounce, denounce, denounced | es: denuncia, denunciaré, denunció | fr: denounce, denounced, peut-je-denounce | de: [יזעמוהו], denounce, denounced Num 23:7; Num 23:8; Prov 24:24

3. accursed, under a curse (2×) The passive state of being accursed or under divine denunciation. The passive participle in Proverbs 22:14 describes the mouth of forbidden women as a pit for the one 'cursed' by the LORD, while Micah 6:10 asks whether the 'accursed' scant measure still persists. Spanish 'el maldito por' and German forms confirm this resultant-state reading—one upon whom indignation has already fallen. CURSING AND IMPRECATION
en: accursed, cursed-of | es: el-maldito-por, maldita? | fr: être-indigné, זעום | de: [זעום], [זעומה] Prov 22:14; Mic 6:10

זַעַם H2195 Prep-b / N-ms (22×)
Indignation, fierce wrath; intense displeasure typically expressing God's righteous anger against sin and rebellion.
A noun denoting fierce, consuming indignation — the kind of anger that burns with purpose. Nearly always attributed to God, za'am appears in phrases like 'instruments of indignation' (Isa 13:5) and 'the day of indignation' (Ezek 22:24), portraying divine wrath as deliberate and measured rather than capricious. The Spanish 'indignación' and German 'Zorn' both capture its intensity, while a single occurrence in Ps 78:49 carries a distinct coloring of bitter vexation, as the Swahili 'uchungu' (bitterness) and Arabic 'ightiyāẓ' (vexation) suggest — wrath tinged with grieved resentment at Israel's stubbornness.

1. indignation, wrath (21×) The dominant sense covering 21 of 22 occurrences: intense, righteous indignation directed by God against sin or enemy nations. Frequently paralleled with 'af (anger), 'evrah (fury), and qetzef (wrath), as in Ps 69:25 and Zeph 3:8 where God 'pours out' His za'am. Isaiah uses it in the phrase 'rod of my indignation' (10:5) and 'instruments of indignation' (13:5), depicting wrath as a purposeful tool of judgment. The multilingual glosses uniformly render this as 'indignation/Zorn/colère,' confirming a stable cross-linguistic sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: His-indignation, Your-indignation, from-rage-of | es: Con-indignación, en-la-indignación-de, indignación | fr: colère, dans-indignation, indignation | de: Zorn, [בזעם], [הזעם] Ps 38:3; Ps 69:24; Ps 102:10; Isa 10:5; Isa 10:25

2. vexation, resentful displeasure (1×) A single occurrence in Ps 78:49 where za'am appears alongside 'evrah and tzarah in a catalogue of afflictions sent upon Egypt. Multilingual evidence — Swahili 'uchungu' (bitterness/grief), Arabic 'ightiyāẓ' (vexation), Korean 'bungae' (resentful indignation) — suggests translators perceived a more personally aggrieved quality here: not merely judicial wrath but bitter displeasure, a vexation colored by the sting of Israel's provocation during the plagues narrative. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-indignation | es: e-indignación | fr: et-indignation | de: und-Entrüstung Ps 78:49

זָעַף H2196 Conj-w (5×)
to be vexed, out of humor, enraged; expressing displeasure ranging from sullenness to fury
A verb spanning the emotional range from quiet displeasure to open rage. In Genesis 40:6, Joseph notices Pharaoh's officials looking troubled (zōᶜăpîm), simply out of sorts after disturbing dreams. Daniel 1:10 uses the participle for a dejected facial appearance. At the other extreme, 2 Chronicles 26:19 describes King Uzziah becoming enraged when priests confront his unauthorized incense offering. Proverbs 19:3 warns that a fool's own folly ruins his way, yet his heart frets against the LORD.

(5×) To be displeased, troubled, or out of humor — a state of internal agitation visible on the face. In Genesis 40:6 the cupbearer and baker appear downcast; Daniel 1:10 uses it for a worried, dejected countenance. Spanish 'abatidos' and 'demacrados' capture this subdued, sullen quality. The word ranges upward to open rage in 2 Chronicles 26:19, where Uzziah erupts in fury against the priests. Proverbs 19:3 captures the middle ground: fretting inwardly against God. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: and-in-his-rage, and-was-enraged, looking-worse | es: Y-se-enojó, abatidos, demacrados | fr: [ובזעפו], [ויזעף], étaient-troubled | de: [וובזעפו], [ויזעף], [זעפים] Gen 40:6; 2Chr 26:19; Prov 19:3; Dan 1:10

זַ֫עַף H2197 Prep-m / V-Qal-Inf / 3ms (6×)

Fierce rage, stormy fury, or violent indignation — of kings, of God, or of the raging sea.

A poetic and late noun conveying fierce, stormy rage. It describes the violent anger of King Asa, who imprisoned the seer Hanani 'in a rage' (2 Chr 16:10), and the fury of God's judgment (Isa 30:30, Mic 7:9). Proverbs compares a king's wrath to a lion's roar (Prov 19:12). Strikingly, Jonah 1:15 applies it to the raging of the sea, connecting human fury with nature's untamed violence.

rage, fury, indignation (6×) Rage, fury, or stormy indignation — whether of a human ruler, of God, or of natural forces. Spanish 'ira' and 'furor,' alongside French 'colere,' confirm the core meaning of fierce anger. Applied to King Asa's violent outrage (2 Chr 16:10), divine wrath (Isa 30:30 'raging of anger'), a king's roaring fury (Prov 19:12), and the storm-tossed sea subsiding once Jonah is cast overboard (Jonah 1:15). The word bridges personal wrath and cosmic tempest. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Indignation-of, anger, from-its-raging | es: Ira-de, con-furia, con-furor-de | fr: [בזעף], colère, זעף | de: [בזעף], [זעף], [מזעפו] 2Chr 16:10; 2Chr 28:9; Prov 19:12; Isa 30:30; Jonah 1:15

זָעֵף H2198 Conj-w / Adj-ms (2×)

vexed, out of humor, angry; used of King Ahab's sullen displeasure

This adjective describes a state of sullen anger or vexation, appearing only to characterize King Ahab in 1 Kings 20:43 and 21:4. In both instances, he returns home 'vexed and angry' (parallel to 'sar,' sullen) after a prophetic rebuke or a thwarted desire. The word captures a petulant, brooding displeasure—not fiery rage but resentful withdrawal. Ahab's temperament is thus sketched through this term: he is a king prone to moody resentment when his will is crossed, whether by prophet or by subject.

(2×) An adjective depicting sullen vexation or resentful anger, specifically applied to Ahab. In chapter 20, he is 'vexed and angry' after the prophet condemns him for sparing the Syrian king. In chapter 21, he returns home in the same state after Naboth refuses to sell his vineyard. The term paints a psychological portrait: Ahab is a man who internalizes frustration, withdrawing into brooding displeasure. The parallel term 'sar' (sullen) reinforces this characterization, making 'za'ef' a marker of his weak, petulant kingship. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: and-angry | es: y-enojado | fr: et-irrité | de: und-angry 1Kgs 20:43; 1Kgs 21:4

זָעַק H2199 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (73×)

To cry out in distress or supplication; in the Nifal, to be summoned or assembled; in the Hifil, to call together or proclaim aloud.

The verb za'aq (זָעַק) is the desperate shout of the oppressed — a parallel form of tsa'aq (צָעַק) that carries the same raw urgency. Its sixty Qal occurrences trace a recurring pattern across Judges: Israel sins, is oppressed, 'cries out' to the LORD, and a deliverer is raised up (Judg 3:9, 15; 6:6–7; 10:10). Spanish consistently renders this with 'clamar' (to cry aloud), while German uses 'schreien' (to scream/shout), both capturing the vocal intensity. But za'aq also has an organizational dimension: in the Nifal, people 'are summoned together' — Gideon's clan is 'called to arms' behind him (Judg 6:34–35), and the men of the city 'are gathered' in pursuit (Judg 18:22). The Hifil takes the next step: actively 'summoning' troops or 'proclaiming' a message, as Barak musters his forces (Judg 4:10, 13) and Nineveh's king issues his decree (Jonah 3:7).

1. cry out, call for help (60×) The Qal sense: to cry out in distress, anguish, or supplication — calling aloud to God or to another person for help. This is the dominant usage at 60 occurrences, forming the backbone of the Judges deliverance cycle: Israel cries out under oppression (Judg 3:9, 15; 6:6), the Israelites cry out to God at the Red Sea (Exod 2:23), and Tamar cries out after her violation (2 Sam 13:19). Spanish 'clamar/clamaron,' French 'crier,' and German 'schreien' all converge on the vocalized urgency. The cry is always public, audible, and directed — not an internal groan but a shout that demands a response. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-cried-out, and-cry, and-cry-out | es: Y-clamaron, y-clamad, y-clamaron | fr: [ויזעקו], et-cria, et-cria-dehors | de: und-schreien, und-schreit, und-schrie Exod 2:23; Judg 3:9; Judg 3:15; Judg 6:6; Judg 6:7

2. be called together, assemble (6×) The Nifal sense: to be summoned, called together, or assembled in response to a call. When the Spirit of the LORD comes upon Gideon and he blows the trumpet, Abiezer 'is summoned' behind him (Judg 6:34); the men of Ephraim and Manasseh 'are called together' (Judg 6:35); the men of the city 'are gathered' to pursue the Danites (Judg 18:22–23). Spanish shifts from 'clamar' to 'convocar' (to convoke) in the passive voice, and French uses 'assembler,' revealing that the cry has become an instrument of collective mobilization rather than personal distress. Joshua 8:16 shows this in a military context — the people of Ai 'are summoned' to pursue Israel. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-he-was-summoned, and-was-summoned, and-were-summoned | es: Y-fue-convocado, Y-fueron-convocados, fueron-llamados | fr: et-il-fut-summoned, et-étaient-summoned, et-était-summoned | de: du-waren-rief-together, und-er-war-summoned, und-war-summoned Josh 8:16; Judg 6:34; Judg 6:35; Judg 18:22; Judg 18:23

3. summon, call together (4×) The Hifil causative sense: to summon, call together, or muster people for a purpose. Barak 'summoned' Zebulun and Naphtali to Kedesh (Judg 4:10, 13); David commanded Amasa to 'call together' the men of Judah within three days (2 Sam 20:4–5). Spanish 'convocar' (to convoke) and French 'appeler ensemble' (to call together) mark the causative agency clearly. The subject actively causes the assembly to happen — a step beyond the Nifal, where the gathering simply occurs. SUMMON CALL TOGETHER

en: and-summoned, call-together, to-call-together | es: Y-convocó, convócame-, para-convocar | fr: appelle-ensemble, et-summoned, à-appelle-ensemble | de: rufe-zusammen, und-summoned, zu-rufe-zusammen Judg 4:10; Judg 4:13; 2Sam 20:4; 2Sam 20:5

4. proclaim, cry aloud (3×) The Hifil extended sense: to proclaim aloud, announce, or cause a message to go forth with authority. In Jonah 3:7 the king of Nineveh 'caused it to be proclaimed' — issuing a royal decree. Job 35:9 describes the oppressed who 'cry out' under the weight of injustice, and Zechariah 6:8 has the angelic figure 'crying out' a divine declaration. Spanish uses 'proclamar' and 'hacer proclamar' (to cause to be proclaimed), distinguishing this public-announcement function from the private cry of distress in sense 1. The authority behind the cry, rather than the anguish within it, defines this usage. CALLING AND NAMING en: and-he-cried-out, and-he-proclaimed, they-cry-out | es: E-hizo-proclamar, Y-me-llamó, claman | fr: crier, et-crier | de: schrie, und-schrie Job 35:9; Jonah 3:7; Zech 6:8

זְעַק H2200 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

Cry out, call (Aramaic); urgent vocal summons (Daniel 6:20)

(1×) Cry out or call loudly in Daniel 6:20, where Darius summons Daniel at the lions' den. The verb conveys urgent, earnest calling—not a whisper but a cry mixing hope, fear, and authority. The context of approaching the den at dawn, anxious about Daniel's survival, charges this cry with emotional intensity. The multilingual glosses coordinate on 'cried/gritó,' emphasizing vocal urgency. CALLING

AND NAMING
en: he-cried | es: gritó | fr: crier | de: [וְעָק] Dan 6:20

זְעָקָה H2201 Prep-l / N-fsc / 1cs (19×)

An outcry or cry of distress, often arising from suffering, oppression, or injustice and directed toward God.

Ze'aqah is the raw, urgent cry wrung from the throat by suffering or injustice. It first appears when the outcry of Sodom and Gomorrah reaches God (Gen 18:20), establishing from the outset that this is a cry heaven cannot ignore. Throughout Scripture it denotes the collective groan of the oppressed — the Israelites in Egypt (Neh 9:9), the poor whose plea must not be stopped up (Prov 21:13), and Esther's people facing annihilation (Esth 4:1). German 'Schrei' and Spanish 'clamor' both capture its gut-level intensity. In one distinctive use (Eccl 9:17), the word shifts to mean a loud shout or clamor in contrast to quiet wisdom.

1. cry, outcry of distress (18×) A cry or outcry born of distress, complaint, or supplication — the dominant sense across 18 of 19 occurrences. It is the sound of suffering demanding a hearing: the outcry of Sodom (Gen 18:20), the cry of enslaved Israel that God 'heard' (Neh 9:9), Mordecai's bitter wail at the decree of destruction (Esth 4:1). Spanish 'clamor' and German 'Schrei' both point to its visceral, public character. The word often pairs with shama' ('to hear'), underscoring that this cry compels divine attention (Jer 18:22; 20:16; Neh 5:6). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-cry, an-outcry, and-an-outcry | es: clamor, clamor-de, clamor-de-ellos | fr: [וּזְעָקָתָם], [זְעָקָה], [זְעָקָתָם] | de: Schrei, [וּזְעָקָתָם], [זְעָקָה] Gen 18:20; Neh 5:6; Neh 9:9; Esth 4:1; Esth 9:31

2. shout, loud clamor (1×) A loud shout or clamor, emphasizing volume and public commotion rather than emotional anguish. This sense appears only in Ecclesiastes 9:17, where 'the quiet words of the wise are better than the shout of a ruler among fools.' Spanish 'más que clamor de' and English 'than shout of' both mark the shift from suffering to mere noise, contrasting bluster with the still authority of wisdom. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: than-shout-of | es: más-que-clamor-de | fr: de-מִזְעָקָה | de: [מִזְעָקָה] Eccl 9:17

זִפְרוֹן H2202 N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)

Ziphron, a northern boundary point of Canaan (Numbers 34:9)

Ziphron appears as a geographical marker on Canaan's northern boundary in Numbers 34:9. The exact location is disputed—proposals include sites northeast of Damascus (Zifran) or between Homs and Hamath (Za'ferane). Both suggestions place it in modern Syria, defining the promised land's northern extent. The '-ah' ending indicates directionality ('toward Ziphron'). Like many boundary markers, its precise identification remains uncertain, but it helped ancient Israelites conceptualize their territorial inheritance.

(1×) A place on Canaan's northern boundary in Numbers 34:9, location uncertain but likely in modern Syria. The directional ending marks movement toward this site. Proposals include Zifran (northeast of Damascus) or Za'ferane (between Homs and Hamath). The multilingual glosses show directional markers ('toward,' 'a'), indicating this functions as a geographical reference point rather than a settlement per se. PERSONAL NAMES en: Ziphron-ward | es: a-Zifrón | fr: Ziphron-ward | de: Ziphron-ward Num 34:9

זֶפֶת H2203 Conj-w (3×)

pitch, tar (bituminous substance)

A noun denoting pitch or tar, a waterproofing agent. Moses' mother 'daubed' his basket 'with bitumen and pitch' (Exod 2:3), and Isaiah prophesies that Edom's 'streams shall be turned to pitch' and 'her land shall become burning pitch' (Isa 34:9, twice). The Spanish brea and French poix reflect the sticky, flammable substance used both for preservation (Moses' ark) and as a symbol of judgment (Edom's desolation). Pitch evokes both protection and destruction—sealing life or sealing doom.

(3×) Refers to bituminous pitch in three contexts: waterproofing Moses' basket (Exod 2:3) and prophetic imagery of Edom's streams and land turned to burning pitch (Isa 34:9, twice). The multilingual glosses (pitch, brea, poix) uniformly denote the tar-like substance. The word carries dual valence: protective sealant and apocalyptic fire fuel. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7658 WITH 3 SENSES en: and-with-pitch, burning, into-pitch | es: en-brea, y-con-la-brea | fr: [וְלַזֶּפֶת], et-avec-poix | de: [וְלַזֶּפֶת], und-mit-Pech Exod 2:3; Isa 34:9

זָקַן H2204 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (27×)

to be old, grow old — a stative verb describing the condition or process of aging in patriarchs, kings, and elders

Zaqen as a verb means 'to be old' or 'to grow old,' a stative root whose 27 occurrences mark pivotal transitions in Israel's narrative. It frequently introduces succession crises: Abraham 'was old, advanced in days' when he sent his servant for Isaac's wife (Gen 24:1), Joshua 'was old and advanced in years' when much land remained unconquered (Josh 13:1; 23:1-2), and David 'was old' when Adonijah seized the moment to claim the throne (1 Kgs 1:1, 15). Samuel's aging triggered Israel's demand for a king (1 Sam 8:1, 5). The verb also appears in poignant domestic moments: Sarah laughed because Abraham 'was old' (Gen 18:12-13), and Barzillai declined David's invitation because 'I am old' (2 Sam 19:32). Spanish 'envejecer,' French 'vieillir,' German 'alt werden' preserve the stative-inchoative range.

to be old, grow old (27×) To be in a state of old age or to undergo the process of growing old. Characteristically introduces narrative turning points where a leader's aging forces the question of succession: Abraham seeking a wife for Isaac (Gen 24:1), Joshua's incomplete conquest (Josh 13:1; 23:1-2), Samuel's failing leadership prompting the monarchy (1 Sam 8:1, 5), and David's vulnerability to Adonijah's coup (1 Kgs 1:1). Also used in personal contexts — Sarah's laughter (Gen 18:12-13), Barzillai's decline (2 Sam 19:32), and Eli's failing eyesight (1 Sam 4:18). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: I-am-old, I-am-too-old, I-have-grown-old | es: anciano, envejecido-he, envejecí | fr: [זָקַן], ancien, avoir-crû-vieux | de: [זָקַן], [וְזָקַנְתִּי], alt Gen 18:12; Gen 18:13; Gen 19:31; Gen 24:1; Gen 27:1

זָקֵן H2205 Prep-m / Adj-mpc (179×)

Old, aged; an elder or community leader; used both as an adjective for age and a title for civic authority.

Few Hebrew words straddle the line between physical description and social role as neatly as zaqen. As a simple adjective, it describes someone old – Abraham and Sarah are 'old, advanced in years' (Gen 18:11). But in the plural construct ('elders of Israel,' 'elders of the city'), it becomes a technical leadership term for the council of senior men who governed tribal, civic, and national affairs. The 'elders of Israel' appear from Egypt (Exod 3:16) through the monarchy and into the exile. Arabic 'shaykh' follows exactly the same semantic path: an old man becomes a tribal chief. German distinguishes nicely between 'alt' (old) and 'Älteste' (elders), while English 'elder' preserves the same productive ambiguity as the Hebrew.

1. elder, community leader (139×) Elder, community or civic leader. The substantivized plural or construct form denoting a recognized authority figure – a member of a ruling council, tribal leader, or civic official. This is the most frequent sense (139 occurrences), appearing in formulaic phrases like 'elders of Israel' (Exod 3:16), 'elders of the city' (Deut 21:3), and 'elders of Judah' (2 Sam 19:12). These elders served judicial, military, and diplomatic functions. Spanish 'ancianos,' French 'anciens,' and German 'Älteste' all reflect the institutionalized sense of age-as-authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: elders-of | es: ancianos-de, ancianos-de-, los-ancianos-de | fr: anciens-de | de: Aelteste-von, die-Ältesten, elders-von Gen 50:7; Exod 3:16; Exod 4:29; Exod 12:21

2. old, aged person (39×) Old, aged – a physical description of advanced years without institutional connotation. Used adjectivally ('an old man,' 'an old prophet') or substantively ('the old and the young'). Genesis 18:11 describes Abraham and Sarah as 'old, advanced in days,' and Genesis 19:4 speaks of 'old and young' among the men of Sodom. Spanish 'viejo,' French 'vieux,' and German 'alt' render the purely descriptive sense. The Arabic cognate 'shaykh' in its non-titular sense captures the same physical meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: elder, old, old-man | es: anciano, el-anciano, viejo | fr: ancien, le-ancien, le-vieux | de: Aeltester, Alten, alt Gen 18:11; Gen 19:4; Gen 25:8; Gen 35:29; Gen 43:27

3. (1×) Old women (feminine plural), used in Zechariah 8:4's vision of restored Jerusalem where 'old men and old women shall again sit in the streets.' This single feminine occurrence (zqenot) rounds out the eschatological image of peaceful longevity – a city so blessed that the elderly can sit safely in its public spaces. English 'old women,' Spanish 'ancianas,' and German 'Ältester' (feminine context) render this hapax use. OLD AGE

en: and-old-women | es: y-ancianas | fr: et-ancien | de: und-Aeltester Zech 8:4

זָקָן H2206 Prep-b / N-cs (19×)

Beard (or chin): the facial hair of a man, signifying dignity, identity, and ritual status in Israelite culture.

Zāqān refers to the beard or, by extension, the chin and lower jaw. In ancient Israel the beard carried deep cultural and religious significance. The Levitical code regulated its treatment: priests were forbidden to shave the edges of their beards (Lev 21:5), and all Israelites were commanded not to mar the corners of the beard (Lev 19:27). Shaving or plucking another's beard was an act of humiliation —as when Hanun shaved half the beards of David's ambassadors (2 Sam 10:4). The beautiful image of oil running down Aaron's beard to the collar of his robes (Ps 133:2) symbolizes the overflowing blessing of priestly anointing.

beard (19×) The beard or chin of a man, never appearing in plural form in Hebrew. In Levitical law it is ritually significant: priests must not shave it (Lev 21:5), and all Israel must not destroy its edges (Lev 19:27). Shaving it off signifies mourning (Isa 15:2; Jer 48:37) or humiliation (2 Sam 10:4–5). David feigned madness by letting saliva run into his beard (1 Sam 21:14). In Ps 133:2 anointing oil cascading down Aaron's beard symbolizes sacred unity and blessing. FLESH AND BODY en: and-my-beard, beard, beard-of | es: barba, barba-de, barba-de-ti | fr: [הזקן], [זקני], [זקנכם] | de: [הזקן], [וזקני], [זקן] Lev 13:29; Lev 13:30; Lev 14:9; Lev 19:27; Lev 21:5

זָקֵן H2207 Prep-m / N-ms (1×)

Old age; advanced years affecting physical capacity (Genesis 48:10)

This noun appears in Genesis 48:10, describing how Israel's eyes 'were dim from old age.' The term captures not merely chronological age but the physical decline accompanying it—failing eyesight, diminished strength. Isaac experienced similar age-related blindness (Genesis 27), and the Bible treats this with matter-of-fact realism: long life is blessed, but it brings bodily limitations. Israel's blindness from age becomes significant when he crosses his hands to bless Ephraim over Manasseh—his physical limitation accompanies prophetic insight.

(1×) Old age in Genesis 48:10, specifically the physical effects of advanced years on eyesight. The term doesn't merely count years but acknowledges bodily decline—Israel's eyes 'were heavy from old age,' unable to see clearly. This physical limitation sets up the blessing scene where blind Israel, guided by divine insight rather than sight, crosses his hands to elevate the younger over the elder. OLD AGE

en: from-old-age | es: de-vejez | fr: de-ancien-âge | de: vor-Alter Gen 48:10

זְקֻנִים H2208 N-mp (4×)

Old age; used exclusively in the construct 'son/child of old age' for a late-born child.

A plural noun denoting old age, found only in Genesis in the touching phrase 'son of his old age.' It first appears when Sarah bears Isaac to the aged Abraham (Gen 21:2, 7), then surfaces again in the Jacob narrative: Joseph is the beloved 'son of his old age' (Gen 37:3), and Benjamin is similarly described as 'a child of old age' (Gen 44:20). The multilingual evidence is uniform—Spanish 'en su vejez,' French 'dans son ancien age,' German 'in seinem Alter'—all capturing the poignancy of a child born to aging parents. The word carries deep emotional freight: these late-born sons become pivotal figures in the biblical story.

(4×) Old age, specifically as the life-stage context for a late-born child. Every occurrence participates in the construct 'son/child of old age' (בֶּן־זְקֻנִים or יֶלֶד זְקֻנִים), marking a child as especially cherished because born to elderly parents. Isaac (Gen 21:2, 7), Joseph (Gen 37:3), and Benjamin (Gen 44:20) are each so designated—each one becoming a figure of extraordinary narrative significance. The cross-lingual glosses converge precisely: Spanish 'en su vejez,' French 'dans son ancien age,' German 'in seinem Alter,' all pointing to advanced parental age as the defining circumstance. OLD AGE

en: in-his-old-age, old-age | es: en-su-vejez, vejez | fr: ancien-âge, dans-son-ancien-âge | de: des-Alters, in-seinem-Alter Gen 21:2; Gen 21:7; Gen 37:3; Gen 44:20

זִקְנָה H2209 N-fsc / 3fs (6×)

Old age; the advanced stage of life, often paired with grey hair as a marker of long years.

A feminine noun meaning 'old age,' frequently paired with 'grey hair' (sevah) to evoke the fullness of a long life. It appears in poignant pleas not to be abandoned in old age (Ps 71:9, 18), in the account of Sarah bearing Isaac after her old age (Gen 24:36), and in noting Solomon's spiritual decline 'at the time of his old age' (1 Kgs 11:4). The word marks a recognized life-stage carrying both honor and vulnerability.

old age (6×) The state or period of old age — advanced years in a person's life. Spanish 'vejez' and French 'ancien-age' uniformly render the concept. The psalmist pleads not to be cast off in old age (Ps 71:9) and asks God to sustain him unto grey hair (Ps 71:18). It frames Sarah's miraculous childbearing (Gen 24:36), Solomon's decline into idolatry (1 Kgs 11:4), and Asa's foot disease (1 Kgs 15:23). Paired with sevah ('grey hair'), it represents the culmination of a life's journey. OLD AGE

en: her-old-age, his-old-age, old-age | es: su-vejez, vejez, vejez-de | fr: [זקנה], sa-ancien-âge, son-vieux-age | de: [זקנה], alt-age, alt-age-von Gen 24:36; 1Kgs 11:4; 1Kgs 15:23; Ps 71:9; Ps 71:18

זָקַף H2210 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (2×)

one who raises up, lifter up; used of Yahweh restoring the prostrate

This Qal participle describes Yahweh as the one who 'raises up' or 'lifts up' those who are bowed down or prostrate. It appears in Psalms 145:14 and 146:8, both times in parallel with 'supporting' or 'sustaining.' The imagery is of divine intervention on behalf of the oppressed and downtrodden—God lifts the heads and bodies of those bent under affliction. The term belongs to the psalmic vocabulary of divine compassion and restorative justice, celebrating Yahweh's active care for the lowly.

(2×) A participial epithet for Yahweh as the one who raises up the bowed-down. Psalm 145 praises God as 'supporter of all who fall' and 'lifter of all who are bent,' while Psalm 146 declares that 'Yahweh lifts up those who are bowed down.' The verb implies both physical restoration (standing the fallen upright) and social vindication (elevating the oppressed). This divine attribute appears in contexts of comprehensive care for the vulnerable—the blind, the stranger, the widow, the orphan. It is a hallmark of the psalmic portrait of God's character. LIFTING AND EXALTING

en: and-lifter-up, raises-up | es: levantando, y-levanta | fr: et-élever, élever | de: raises-up, und-lifter-up Ps 145:14; Ps 146:8

זְקַף H2211 Conj-w / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (1×)

Be raised up, lifted (Aramaic passive participle); positioned for impalement (Ezra 6:11)

This Aramaic passive participle appears in Ezra 6:11, describing a punishment: a timber is 'lifted up' and the offender 'fastened upon it.' The language probably describes impalement—a Persian execution method where the condemned was hoisted onto a stake. The term emphasizes the vertical positioning: raised up for public display. This grim decree from Darius protects temple reconstruction; violators face this elevated, shameful death. The vertical aspect—being lifted—intensifies the humiliation.

(1×) Lifted up or raised in Ezra 6:11, describing timber being erected for impalement of those who hinder temple work. The passive participle emphasizes the state of being raised vertically for execution. The multilingual glosses 'lifted up/levantado' capture the vertical positioning central to this Persian punishment method. This single occurrence depicts capital punishment ensuring temple completion. LIFTING AND EXALTING

en: and-lifted-up | es: y-levantado | fr: [וזקיף] | de: [וזקיף] Ezra 6:11

זָקַק H2212 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (7×)

To refine or purify, especially metals by smelting; also of distilling rain and purifying speech.

A verb denoting the process of separating impurities through heat or filtering, most often applied to the refining of precious metals. Gold is refined (Job 28:1; 1 Chr 28:18), silver is purified seven times (Ps 12:6), and rain is distilled from mist (Job 36:27). The word bridges the physical and the spiritual: the same refining process that produces pure gold from ore becomes a metaphor for God's purification of his promises (Ps 12:6) and, in Isaiah 25:6, of well-aged, filtered wines served at the eschatological feast.

refine, purify (7×) To refine, purify, or distill — the process of removing impurities from a substance by heat or straining. In its literal use, it describes metallurgical refining of gold (Job 28:1; 1 Chr 28:18) and silver (1 Chr 29:4). Spanish uses destilar and purificada, reflecting the dual aspects of distillation and purification. The Piel and Pual forms intensify the thoroughness of the process, as in Psalm 12:6 where God's words are 'purified seven times' — a sevenfold refining that stresses absolute purity. The extension to rain distillation (Job 36:27) shows the word's range from workshop metallurgy to natural phenomena. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: and-refine, purified, refined | es: destilan, purificada, refinada | fr: [מזקק], [מזקקים], de-purifier | de: [וזקק], [יזקו], [מזקק] 1Chr 28:18; 1Chr 29:4; Job 28:1; Job 36:27; Ps 12:6

זֵר H2213 N-msc (10×)

Ornamental border, gold molding — a decorative rim or crown-like edge on tabernacle furniture

The noun זֵר (zer) designates a decorative border or molding, specifically the gold rim affixed to sacred furniture in the tabernacle. All ten occurrences cluster in Exodus 25-37, describing the ornamental edging on the ark of the covenant (Exod 25:11; 37:2), the table of showbread (Exod 25:24-25; 37:11-12), and the altar of incense (Exod 30:3-4; 37:26-27). The term likely denotes a raised, wreath-like ridge running along the top edge of each piece, functioning both as decoration and as a practical lip to prevent objects from sliding off. Spanish 'cornisa/moldura' and English 'molding/border' both capture the architectural ornamentation.

border, molding, rim (10×) A gold ornamental border, molding, or rim encircling the top edge of tabernacle furniture. Exclusively a cultic-architectural term, appearing only in the tabernacle construction instructions and their execution (Exod 25:11, 24-25; 30:3-4; 37:2, 11-12, 26-27). Applied to the ark, the table of showbread, and the incense altar. The root may be related to the idea of encircling or crowning. Spanish 'cornisa de oro' and French 'bordure d'or' reflect the decorative gold-work connotation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-molding-of, border, border-of | es: borde-de, moldura-de, su-borde | fr: bordure, bordure-de, son-bordure | de: Grenze, Grenze-von, Leiste-von Exod 25:11; Exod 25:24; Exod 25:25; Exod 30:3; Exod 30:4

זָרָא H2214 Prep-l / N-ms (1×)

Loathsome thing, object of disgust; something becoming nauseating (Numbers 11:20)

This noun appears in Numbers 11:20, where God warns that the quail He's sending will become 'a loathsome thing' to the complaining Israelites. What they craved becomes disgusting through excess—flesh until it comes out their nostrils. The term captures not inherent impurity but acquired nausea through surfeit. The Greek 'cholera' and Latin 'nausea' grasp the physical revulsion. Some manuscripts read 'zarah,' but the sense remains: excess transforms desire into disgust.

(1×) Something loathsome or nauseating in Numbers 11:20, describing quail that complainers craved but will come to despise. The term doesn't indicate ritual impurity but physical revulsion from excess—meat until it exits their nostrils. The Greek 'cholera' and Latin 'nausea' capture the visceral disgust. This judgment transforms desired food into an object of repulsion through overwhelming abundance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-loathing | es: para-náusea | fr: pour-loathing | de: fuer-loathing Num 11:20

זָרַב H2215 V-Pual-Imperf-3mp (1×)

Be scorched, burnt (Pual); dried up by heat (Job 6:17)

This verb appears in Job 6:17, describing brooks that 'are scorched' and disappear in the heat. Job compares his friends to these unreliable streams—present when not needed, vanished in drought when desperately required. The term's derivation is uncertain; BDB suggests connection to 'burn' or possibly 'flow away.' The Pual passive emphasizes the brooks' victimhood to heat—they don't choose to dry up but are scorched into non-existence. Unreliability through external pressure, not inherent malice.

(1×) Be scorched or burnt up in Job 6:17, describing seasonal streams dried by heat. The parallel with 'extinguished from their place' establishes imagery of watercourses disappearing when most needed. Uncertainty exists whether this means 'scorched' (from a burning root) or 'flow away' (Arabic cognate), but the context favors heat-induced drying. Job's friends, like these brooks, fail when crisis comes. HEAT AND WARMTH

en: they-are-scorched | es: se-calientan | fr: יזרבו | de: [יזרבו] Job 6:17

זְרֻבָּבֶל H2216 N-proper-ms (21×)

Zerubbabel — post-exilic governor of Judah who led the return from Babylon and rebuilt the Temple

A name likely meaning 'offspring of Babylon,' pointing to the exile setting in which this leader was born. Zerubbabel led the first wave of returning exiles and oversaw the rebuilding of the Second Temple under prophetic encouragement from Haggai and Zechariah. Called 'governor of Judah' by Haggai and 'my servant' by the Lord, he occupies a pivotal place in post-exilic hope. His genealogy links him to the Davidic line through Shealtiel (or Pedaiah), keeping messianic expectations alive during the restoration.

Zerubbabel (personal name) (21×) The personal name of the Davidic descendant who served as governor of Judah after the Babylonian exile. Grandson of King Jehoiachin, he appears in Ezra 2-4, Nehemiah 7 and 12, Haggai 1-2, and Zechariah 4. The Greek form Ζοροβαβελ is consistent across the LXX, and translations uniformly transliterate the name (Zerubabel, Zorobabel, Serubbabel), underscoring his singular identity in post-exilic literature. ZERUBBABEL NAME

en: Zerubavel, Zerubbabel, Zerubbavel | es: Zerubabel, Zorobabel | fr: Zorobabel | de: Serubbabel, [זרבבל] 1Chr 3:19; Ezra 2:2; Ezra 3:2; Ezra 3:8

זְרֻבָּבֶל H2217 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zerubbabel (Aramaic form), governor who led temple rebuilding (Ezra 5:2)

This is the Aramaic form of Zerubbabel, the Davidic descendant who served as governor and led the temple rebuilding effort after the Babylonian exile. His name probably means 'seed/offspring of Babylon,' marking his birth in exile. Zerubbabel appears prominently in Ezra, Nehemiah, Haggai, and Zechariah as a political and spiritual leader who, with Joshua the high priest, restored proper worship. The Aramaic spelling reflects the document's linguistic context—official Persian-period correspondence.

(1×) Zerubbabel in Aramaic form in Ezra 5:2, the Davidic governor who led temple reconstruction. The multilingual glosses show variation in transliteration reflecting different language phonologies. His role combined political authority with spiritual leadership, partnering with Joshua the high priest. The Aramaic spelling situates this reference in official Persian-period documentation about the temple project. ZERUBBABEL NAME

en: Zerubbavel | es: Zorobabel | fr: Zorobabel | de: Serubbabel Ezra 5:2

זֶרֶד H2218 N-proper-fs (4×)

Zered; a wadi (seasonal stream) marking the boundary crossed by Israel on the way to Canaan.

The name of a wadi—a seasonal watercourse—that Israel crossed during the wilderness wanderings, marking a significant boundary between territories. Numbers 21:12 records the encampment at the Wadi Zered, and Deuteronomy 2:13-14 recalls that thirty-eight years had elapsed between Kadesh-barnea and the crossing of Zered, during which the entire warrior generation perished. Its exact location is debated: candidates include Wadi el-Ahsy between Moab and Edom, or Wadi Kerak. All four translations render it uniformly as 'Zered,' confirming its established place-name status.

(4×) A proper place name designating a wadi (seasonal stream valley) in the Transjordan region, serving as a geographical milestone in Israel's wilderness journey. In Numbers 21:12 it appears as a campsite, while Deuteronomy 2:13-14 marks the crossing of Wadi Zered as the moment when thirty-eight years of wandering were completed and the doomed generation had passed away. The name is rendered consistently across languages—English, Spanish, French, and German all give 'Zered'—reflecting its fixed toponymic identity. Its identification remains uncertain, with Wadi el-Ahsy and Wadi Kerak as leading candidates. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zered | es: Zered | fr: Zered | de: Zered Num 21:12; Deut 2:13; Deut 2:14

זָרָה H2219 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (39×)

To scatter, fan, winnow; dispersing people in judgment or tossing grain to the wind; also to spread abroad or sift.

Zarah sits at the intersection of the threshing floor and the battlefield. Concretely, it describes winnowing — tossing grain into the wind so chaff blows away, as when Boaz winnows barley at Bethlehem (Ruth 3:2). But the prophets seized this image for divine judgment: God 'winnows' Israel among the nations (Jer 15:7), scattering them like chaff. The dual resonance is confirmed cross-linguistically: Spanish uses aventar ('to fan/winnow') alongside dispersar ('to scatter'), while German distinguishes worfeln from zerstreuen. The agricultural and the judgmental are never fully separable — and that is precisely the prophetic point.

1. scatter, disperse (people) (23×) The dominant prophetic-judgment sense: to scatter or disperse people among the nations as an act of divine punishment or military conquest — twenty-three of thirty-nine occurrences. God warns through Moses 'I will scatter you among the nations' (Lev 26:33); through Jeremiah 'I will fan them with a winnowing fork' (Jer 15:7); through Ezekiel 'I will scatter you into every wind' (Ezek 5:10). The Piel stem is standard here, intensifying the dispersal. Spanish dispersar/esparcir and German zerstreuen both select national-exile vocabulary distinct from agricultural winnowing, while Arabic dharra ('to scatter to the wind') preserves the root's Semitic resonance. The metaphorical link to the threshing floor remains alive: judgment is winnowing, separating grain from chaff among the peoples. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: I-shall-scatter, I-will-scatter, You-have-scattered-us | es: aventaré, dispersaron, esparcirás | fr: et-disperse-eux, et-vanner, et-à-vanner | de: du-haben-zerstreut-uns, ich-wird-zerstreuen, und-scatter-ihnen Lev 26:33; Num 16:37; 1Kgs 14:15; Ps 44:11; Ps 106:27

2. winnow (grain) (7×) The concrete agricultural sense: to winnow grain by tossing it into the air so the wind carries away the chaff — seven occurrences. Ruth watches as Boaz 'winnows barley tonight at the threshing floor' (Ruth 3:2); Isaiah describes the farmer whose 'ox and donkey eat seasoned fodder that has been winnowed' (Isa 30:24). In the great taunt of Isa 41:16, Israel herself will 'winnow' the mountains — a metaphorical reversal where the winnowed become the winnower. German worfeln and Spanish aventar both select technical threshing-floor vocabulary. Moses grinds and scatters the golden calf (Exod 32:20) in a ritual act that combines destruction with winnowing symbolism. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: And-I-winnowed-them, You-shall-winnow-them, and-he-scattered | es: Y-los-aventaré, aventado, aventando | fr: et-il-dispersé, et-vanner, vannant | de: und-er-zerstreute, und-worfeln, worfeln Exod 32:20; Ruth 3:2; Isa 30:24; Isa 41:16; Jer 4:11

3. spread, scatter abroad (4×) To spread abroad, scatter things (not people), or disseminate — four occurrences in Proverbs. A net 'spread' in the sight of any bird is futile (Prov 1:17); the lips of the wise 'spread' knowledge (Prov 15:7); a wise king 'scatters' the wicked with his judicial gaze (Prov 20:8, 26). Spanish dispersar and German zerstreuen serve here too, but the objects of scattering are abstractions or things rather than populations. The Proverbs usage extends the root's core 'spreading out' semantics beyond both agriculture and exile into the domain of moral-intellectual dissemination. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING

en: is-spread, scatters, spread | es: Dispersa, dispersa, esparcen | fr: vanner | de: zerstreut Prov 1:17; Prov 15:7; Prov 20:8; Prov 20:26

4. be scattered, be dispersed (3×) The Nifal and Pual passive: to be scattered, be dispersed — three occurrences. In Ezek 6:8 God promises a remnant 'when you are scattered among the countries'; in Ezek 36:19 Israel has already been dispersed; in Job 18:15 brimstone 'is scattered' on the wicked's habitation. The passive voice marks the subject as undergoing dispersion rather than performing it. Spanish ser esparcido and the reflexive passive forms confirm the voice distinction. These occurrences are the experiential counterpart of sense 1's active divine scattering. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: and-they-were-dispersed, in-scattering-of-you, is-scattered | es: al-ser-esparcidos-ustedes, será-esparcido, y-fueron-dispersados | fr: et-vanner, vanner | de: und-worfeln, worfeln, zerstreut Job 18:15; Ezek 6:8; Ezek 36:19

5. (1×) A single disputed occurrence at Isa 30:22 where the verb appears in connection with casting away idolatrous silver and gold 'like a menstruous thing' (English) or 'you will scatter them' (Spanish los esparciras). The context is purging contamination — flinging away impure objects with disgust. Whether this is a specialized 'cast away in revulsion' sense or simply the standard scattering applied to ritual impurity is debated. The Hebrew niddah ('menstrual impurity') imagery suggests an intensified rejection beyond ordinary dispersal. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: like-a-menstruous-thing | es: los-esparcirás | fr: vanner | de: worfeln Isa 30:22

6. (1×) A single occurrence at Ps 139:3 where the Psalmist tells God 'you winnow my path and my lying down' — meaning God sifts, scrutinizes, or thoroughly examines every aspect of the speaker's life. Spanish escudrinas ('you scrutinize') diverges entirely from 'scatter' or 'winnow' vocabulary, suggesting translators perceive a metaphorical extension: winnowing as investigative sifting, separating truth from falsehood in a person's conduct. This 'divine examination' sense is a creative theological repurposing of the threshing-floor image. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING

en: you-winnow | es: escudriñas | fr: vanner | de: du-winnow Ps 139:3

זְרוֹעַ H2220 Prep-b / N-fs (92×)

Arm, the physical limb; figuratively: divine or human might, power, military forces; the shoulder or foreleg of a sacrificial animal.

The Hebrew noun זְרוֹעַ is one of Scripture's most theologically charged body-part terms. While it literally denotes the human arm from shoulder to hand, its overwhelmingly dominant biblical usage is metaphorical: the 'outstretched arm' (זְרוֹעַ נְטוּיָה) of God delivering Israel from Egypt appears as a fixed formula across Deuteronomy (4:34; 5:15; 7:19; 26:8) and became a cornerstone of exodus theology. Arabic ذِرَاع, Aramaic זְרָעָא, and Swahili mkono/mikono all render the literal limb, but when the referent shifts to divine power, translators reach for strength vocabulary — Hindi बाहुबल ('arm-strength'), Korean 능력 ('power'). A specialized third sense surfaces in sacrificial law: the 'shoulder' or foreleg portion given to the priest (Num 6:19; Deut 18:3), confirmed by Korean 어깨 ('shoulder') replacing 팔 ('arm').

1. arm of God (divine power metaphor) (43×) Split from sense 94959. Criteria: God's mighty arm as agent of deliverance, judgment, creation - the exodus formula 'strong hand and outstretched arm,' psalms and prophets using arm imagery for divine power

en: My-arm, an-arm, and-His-arm | es: brazo, brazo-de, brazo-de-mí | fr: arms-de, bras, et-avec-arm | de: Arm, [זרוע], arms-von Exod 6:6; Exod 15:16; Deut 4:34; Deut 5:15; Deut 7:19

2. literal arm (physical body part) (42×) Split from sense 94959. Criteria: The actual human arm as anatomy - holding, embracing, stretching, breaking as literal physical actions

en: alone, and-arms-of, and-arms-of- | es: Y-brazos-de, brazo, brazo-de | fr: arm, bras, bras-de | de: Arm, Arm-, Arm-von Gen 49:24; Deut 33:20; Judg 15:14; Judg 16:12; 1Sam 2:31

3. might, power, forces (4×) Metonymic extension to abstract might, power, or military forces, where the physical limb is no longer in view (4 occurrences). Job 22:8 describes a 'man of arm' (אִישׁ זְרוֹעַ) meaning a man of power or influence; Jeremiah 17:5 curses the one who trusts in human 'arm' (i.e., human strength rather than God); Daniel 11:31 uses 'arms' (זְרֹעִים) for military forces. Swahili shifts from mkono (arm) to nguvu (strength/force), and Korean moves from 팔 to 세력 (forces/power), confirming that translators detect the leap from body part to abstract capacity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: according-to-arm-his, and-forces, arm | es: Y-brazos, brazo, brazo-suyo | fr: bras, et-bras | de: Arm, [זרוע], und-Arm Job 22:8; Jer 17:5; Ezek 22:6; Dan 11:31

4. shoulder, foreleg of animal (2×) The shoulder or foreleg of a sacrificial animal, a specialized anatomical sense restricted to ritual law (2 occurrences). In Numbers 6:19 the boiled 'shoulder' of the ram is placed in the Nazirite's hands, and Deuteronomy 18:3 assigns the 'shoulder, the two cheeks, and the stomach' as the priest's portion. Korean 어깨 ('shoulder') replaces 팔 ('arm'), Swahili bega ('shoulder') replaces mkono ('arm/hand'), and French épaule ('shoulder') replaces bras ('arm') — a remarkable cross-linguistic consensus that this is a distinct cut of meat, not the same body-part concept as the human arm. SHOULDER BODY PART

en: the-shoulder | es: el-brazo | fr: le-épaule | de: der-Schulter Num 6:19; Deut 18:3

זְרוּעַ H2221 N-ms (2×)

sowing, what is sown; seed in the ground or the act of planting

This noun refers to sowing or the thing sown—seed placed in the earth. In Leviticus 11:37, if a carcass falls on 'seed for sowing,' it remains clean until wetted. In Isaiah 61:11, Yahweh will cause righteousness to spring up 'as a garden causes its sowing to sprout'—a simile for the inevitable fruition of God's redemptive purposes. The term is an intensive formation, emphasizing the act or object of planting. It belongs to agricultural language pressed into service for theological metaphor.

(2×) A noun denoting seed intended for sowing or the act of sowing itself. Leviticus uses it in ritual law: dry seed remains ritually clean even if contacted by something unclean, highlighting the resilience of seed before germination. Isaiah deploys it metaphorically: just as a garden inevitably sprouts what is sown, so Yahweh will cause righteousness and praise to spring up before all nations. The agricultural image underscores certainty and natural process, applied to divine promise. The intensive form suggests focused, intentional planting. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: its-sowing, sowing | es: siembra, sus-semillas | fr: [זרועיה], semant | de: [זרועיה], sowing Lev 11:37; Isa 61:11

זָרַף H2222a

drip, irrigate; verb possibly meaning to cause rain or moisture to fall

This rare verb appears only in a textual variant for Psalm 72, where scholars propose reading it instead of another rare word. The suggested meaning involves dripping or irrigating, fitting the psalm's agricultural imagery of righteous rule bringing blessing like rain on mown grass. The root possibly relates to either Arabic 'shed tears' or Aramaic 'heavy rain.' Such emendations reflect scholarly attempts to resolve difficult texts by proposing alternative Hebrew words with more transparent meanings. Whether the original text contained this verb remains uncertain.

זִרְזִיף H2222b N-msc (1×)

Dripping, shower; gentle rain watering the earth (Psalm 72:6)

This noun appears in Psalm 72:6, comparing the righteous king to rain: 'like showers, a dripping watering the earth.' The imagery evokes gentle, steady rain that soaks in rather than runs off—the kind that truly nourishes crops. Paired with 'showers,' it emphasizes saturation and thorough moistening. A good king's influence penetrates society like rain permeating soil, bringing life and fruitfulness. The term captures not torrential downpour but sustained, gentle watering.

(1×) Dripping or gentle rain in Psalm 72:6, describing how the righteous king blesses like rain watering earth. The pairing with 'showers' creates imagery of thorough, gentle saturation rather than flash floods. French 'ondée' (shower) and Spanish 'riegan' (irrigate) capture the beneficial watering. This metaphor portrays royal righteousness as pervasive, nourishing influence that penetrates and vivifies society. SEND RAIN

en: watering | es: que-riegan | fr: ondée | de: watering Ps 72:6

זַרְזִיר H2223 N-msc (1×)

Strutting rooster or war-horse; creature with impressive, confident gait (Proverbs 30:31)

This enigmatic term appears in Proverbs 30:31 among four creatures 'stately in their stride': lion, male goat, and 'zarziyr mathnayim' (something 'girt in the loins'). Traditional interpretation varies: greyhound, war-horse, or strutting rooster. The Talmud favored rooster, and modern versions often follow this. The description 'girt in the loins' suggests either a rooster's strutting posture or a horse's battle readiness. Either way, the creature exemplifies confidence and impressive bearing—worthy to walk with lion and king.

(1×) A strutting rooster or war-horse in Proverbs 30:31, among creatures stately in motion. The phrase 'girt in the loins' could describe a rooster's upright, confident stance or a war-horse's battle harness. Spanish 'gallo' (rooster) and the Talmudic tradition favor the bird interpretation, while others suggest horse. The term emphasizes impressive, confident movement befitting the company of lions and kings. GIRDING AND DRESSING

en: a-strutting-rooster | es: Gallo | fr: זרזיר | de: [זרזיר] Prov 30:31

זָרַח H2224 Prep-k / V-Qal-Inf (18×)

To rise (of sun or luminaries), shine forth in divine radiance, or break out (of a skin condition)

In its most common usage, zarach describes the sun climbing above the horizon, the daily spectacle of dawn that governs all earthly rhythms (Eccl 1:5). Yet the prophets seized this image for something grander: God Himself shining forth over His people in theophanic splendor, as at Sinai (Deut 33:2) or in the promised sunrise of righteousness (Mal 4:2). Spanish renders the divine sense as 'resplandecer' (to gleam), distinguishing it from the ordinary 'salir' of physical sunrise. A single surprising occurrence in 2 Chronicles 26:19 applies the word to leprosy breaking out on King Uzziah's forehead, as if disease itself dawns upon the skin.

1. rise, come forth (sun/light) (13×) The physical rising of the sun or daylight over the horizon, describing dawn or sunrise as a natural phenomenon. This is the default sense, appearing in narrative and wisdom literature alike. In Genesis 32:31 the sun rises upon Jacob after his wrestling at Peniel, and in Judges 9:33 it marks the timing for military action. French and Spanish both use straightforward sunrise vocabulary here (lever, salir). RISING AND DAWNING
en: and-rises, and-rose-, and-will-rise | es: Sale, Y-brilló, Y-nacerá | fr: [זורח'], a-levé, briller | de: [וזרח], [וזרחה], [זורח] Gen 32:31; Exod 22:3; Judg 9:33; 2Sam 23:4; 2Kgs 3:22

2. shine forth, beam (divine radiance) (4×) The radiant shining forth of God's glory or splendor, typically in theophany or eschatological promise. Deuteronomy 33:2 uses it of Yahweh dawning from Seir, while Isaiah 60:1 proclaims 'your light has risen.' Spanish employs 'resplandecer' (to gleam brilliantly), signaling a semantic shift from mere rising to luminous majesty. RISING AND DAWNING
en: and-dawned, and-shall-rise, has-risen | es: Resplandece, resplandeció, y-resplandecerá | fr: [וזרח], [זרח], et-dawned | de: [וזרח], [זרח], steht-auf Deut 33:2; Ps 112:4; Isa 58:10; Isa 60:1

3. break out (skin condition) (1×) A medical sense describing a skin condition breaking out or appearing on the body's surface, used uniquely of the leprosy that erupted on King Uzziah's forehead in 2 Chronicles 26:19. The image of something 'rising' on the skin retains the root's core spatial metaphor of emergence, though the domain shifts entirely from cosmology to priestly diagnosis. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: broke-out | es: brotó | fr: [זרחה] | de: [זרחה] 2Chr 26:19

זָרַח H2225 N-msc / 2fs (1×)

Dawning, shining; the radiant breaking forth of light (Isaiah 60:3)
This noun appears in Isaiah 60:3, where nations come to Zion's 'brightness' or 'dawning.' The term derives from the root for 'rise' or 'shine,' capturing the moment when light breaks forth. In Isaiah's vision, restored Zion radiates God's glory like dawn breaking—not reflected light but emanated brilliance. The parallel with 'light' intensifies the imagery: Zion doesn't merely receive illumination but becomes a source of radiance drawing nations from darkness. Eschatological hope portrayed as sunrise.

(1×) The rising or shining forth of light in Isaiah 60:3, describing Zion's radiant glory. The term captures the dawn moment when light breaks forth, parallel to 'your light' in the verse. This isn't reflected brightness but emanated radiance—Zion as light source, not mere reflector. The eschatological vision portrays restored Jerusalem as dawn to darkened nations, drawing them to God's glory. RISING AND DAWNING
en: your-rising | es: tu-amanecer | fr: [זרחך] | de: [זרחך] Isa 60:3

זֶרַח H2226 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (21×)

Zerah — 'rising, dawning'; name of several OT figures including a son of Judah and an Edomite chief
A masculine name meaning 'rising' or 'dawning,' evocative of light breaking forth. Its most prominent bearer is the twin son of Judah and Tamar whose hand emerged first marked with a scarlet thread (Gen 38:30). The name is shared by at least five distinct individuals: an Edomite clan chief, a Cushite military leader who opposed Asa, two Levites in the Chronicles genealogies, and the head of a Simeonite family. Despite this variety, translations consistently render it as a simple transliteration.

Zerah (personal name) (21×) A proper name borne by multiple Old Testament figures, most notably the son of Judah and Tamar (Gen 38:30; 46:12), ancestor of a Judahite clan (Num 26:20; Josh 7:1). Also designates Edomite chiefs (Gen 36:13, 17, 33), Levitical ancestors (1 Chr 6:6, 26), a Simeonite clan head (Num 26:13), and a Cushite adversary of King Asa (2 Chr 14:8). Multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate (Zerach, Zera, Serach), and the LXX renders it Ζαρα or Ζαρε depending on the individual. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zerach, Zerah, and-Zerah | es: De-Zéraj, Zera, Zeraj | fr: Zerach, Zérach, et-Zérach | de: Serach, Serachs, Zerach Gen 36:13; Gen 36:17; Gen 36:33; Gen 38:30; Gen 46:12

זַרְחִי H2227 Prep-l (6×)

Zarhite — a member of the clan descended from Zerah, son of Judah (or Simeon).
A gentilic adjective always used with the definite article, designating a member of the clan of Zerah. In most occurrences it refers to descendants of Zerah son of Judah (Num 26:20; Josh 7:17; 1 Chr 27:11, 13), while one instance traces to Zerah son of Simeon (Num 26:13). The famous episode of Achan's sin identifies him through this clan marker (Josh 7:17), and David's military commanders include Zerahites in the monthly rotation.

Zerahite (gentilic) (6×) A gentilic designation for descendants of Zerah — primarily the Judahite clan (Num 26:20, Josh 7:17, 1 Chr 27:11, 13), and also the Simeonite branch (Num 26:13). English renders it 'Zerahite,' Spanish 'zerahita/zerajitas,' and French 'Zerahite/Zarchite.' Always appears with the article (hazzarchi) as a collective noun. The Achan narrative (Josh 7:17) narrows down from tribe to clan to household using this designation, and Davidic military rosters list Zerahite officers. PERSONAL NAMES
en: of-the-Zarchi, the-Zarchite, the-Zerahite | es: del-zerahíta, el-zarhita, los-zerajitas | fr: [לזרחי], le-Zarchite, le-Zerahite | de: [לזרחי], der-Zarchite, der-Zerahite Num 26:13; Num 26:20; Josh 7:17; 1Chr 27:11

זַרְחְיָה H2228 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Zerahiah; a priestly name meaning 'Yah has risen/shone,' in Aaronide genealogies and among returning exiles
A masculine proper noun meaning 'the LORD has risen' or 'the LORD has shone,' combining zeraḥ ('rising, shining') with the divine name. Zerahiah appears in the Aaronide priestly genealogy as a descendant of Eleazar and ancestor of Ezra (1 Chr 6:6, 51; Ezra 7:4). In Ezra 8:4 a Zerahiah heads a family among the returning exiles, possibly the same individual or a descendant. The Septuagint consistently renders it Zaraia.

(5×) A theophoric personal name borne by priests in the Aaronide line. Attested in the genealogy running from Eleazar through to Ezra (1 Chr 6:6, 51; Ezra 7:4) and as a family head among returning exiles (Ezra 8:4). The name's meaning — 'Yah has risen/shone' — connects it to the South Arabian cognate ḏrḥ²l. Spanish 'Zerajya/Zeraḥyah' and the LXX Ζαραια all preserve the theophoric element. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Zerachyah, and-Zerachyah | es: Zerajya, Zeraĥyah, Zeraḥyah | fr: [וזרחיה], [זרחיה] | de: [וזרחיה], [זרחיה] 1Chr 6:6; 1Chr 6:51; Ezra 7:4; Ezra 8:4

זָרַם H2229 V-Qal-Perf-2ms / 3mp (2×)

to pour forth in floods, sweep away; used of overwhelming rain or divine judgment
This verb describes pouring forth in torrents or flooding away, with connotations of overwhelming force. In Psalm 77:17, the clouds 'poured forth water' in a mighty storm. In Psalm 90:5, God 'sweeps away' mortal humans like a flood, carrying them off in the stream of time. The Assyrian cognate means 'to overwhelm,' reinforcing the sense of irresistible, inundating power. The imagery blends meteorological and theological: both rainstorms and divine judgment sweep with flood-like force.

(2×) A verb depicting torrential pouring or flooding, used both literally and metaphorically. The psalmist in 77 recalls a theophanic storm where the very clouds gushed water in overwhelming volume. In Psalm 90, the same verb describes how God sweeps away human generations—they are flooded out of existence, carried off in the torrent of mortality. The Assyrian background ('overwhelm') supports this imagery of irresistible force. The verb conveys both the power of natural elements and the sovereignty of God over human life. LEADING AWAY

en: poured-forth, you-sweep-them-away | es: Derramaron, Los-arrasas | fr: emporter | de: ausgegossen-hervor, du-sweep-ihnen-weg Ps 77:17; Ps 90:5

זֶ֫רֶם H2230 Prep-m / N-ms (9×)

A violent rainstorm, downpour, or flood of rain; used in prophetic imagery for divine judgment and overwhelming force.

This noun evokes the sudden, violent downpour that overwhelms everything in its path – rain that lashes against walls and sweeps through mountain valleys. Isaiah uses it repeatedly as a metaphor for divine judgment and, conversely, for the shelter God provides against it: 'a refuge from the storm' (Isa 25:4), 'a covert from the tempest' (Isa 32:2). In Habakkuk 3:10, the mountains see God and writhe as a zerem of waters passes by. Job 24:8 gives a poignant literal image: the poor, having no shelter, are drenched by the mountain downpour. The word captures nature's raw, ungovernable power.

flood of rain, rainstorm, downpour (9×) A violent rainstorm, downpour, or deluge – often appearing in poetic and prophetic contexts as a figure for divine judgment or overwhelming destructive force. French uses 'averse' (downpour), Spanish 'tempestad' (tempest), and German 'Sturzregen' (torrential rain), each capturing a slightly different aspect of the storm's fury. Frequently paired with hail (Isa 28:2; 30:30) and used in contrast with the divine shelter offered to the righteous (Isa 4:6; 25:4; 32:2). The mountain setting of Job 24:8 emphasizes the storm's ferocity in exposed terrain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-shade, a-torrent-of, against-a-wall | es: De-la-lluvia-de, como-tempestad-de, de-tempestad | fr: averse, de-מזרם, et-averse | de: Sturzregen, [זרם], [מזרם] Job 24:8; Isa 4:6; Isa 25:4; Isa 28:2

זִרְמָה H2231 N-fsc / 3mp (2×)

issue, emission; specifically semen, used in a graphic condemnation of Jerusalem's promiscuity

This noun refers to an emission or issue, specifically male semen, appearing only in Ezekiel 23:20 in a shocking metaphor. Jerusalem's lust for Egypt is described graphically: she desired lovers 'whose issue was like the issue of horses.' The image is deliberately crude and offensive, intensifying the prophetic condemnation of Judah's political and spiritual adultery with foreign powers. The term belongs to the realm of bodily fluids and sexual language, weaponized here for maximum rhetorical impact.

(2×) A feminine noun for seminal emission, used in Ezekiel's most explicit condemnation of Jerusalem's spiritual adultery. The double use ('whose issue was like the issue of horses') hammers home the bestiality metaphor—Judah's pursuit of alliances with Egypt is portrayed as craving the sexual potency of animals. The vocabulary is deliberately shocking, meant to provoke revulsion at covenant infidelity. This is the prophetic rhetoric of exposure: stripping away euphemism to reveal the grotesque reality of idolatry and political faithlessness. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: and-issue-of-, their-issue | es: flujo-de-ellos, y-flujo-de | fr: [וזרמת], [זרמתם] | de: [וזרמת], [זרמתם] Ezek 23:20

זָרַע H2232 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms / 3fs (56×)

To sow seed, plant; of agricultural sowing, bearing seed (of plants), being sown (passive), and conceiving offspring (figurative).

Zara' is the Hebrew Bible's foundational agricultural verb, covering the full arc of seed and sowing from Genesis 1 to Zechariah. Its most frequent use describes the literal act of casting seed into soil — the backbone of ancient Israelite life. But the word's range is richer than simple farming. In Genesis 1, plants are described as 'seeding seed,' using the verb to characterize the self-propagating capacity built into creation itself. The passive forms describe land 'that has been sown' — cultivated territory versus wilderness. Most striking is the figurative extension to human conception in Leviticus 12:2 and Numbers 5:28, where a woman 'is sown with' or 'produces seed,' a metaphor Arabic and other Semitic cognates share. Across languages, the core agricultural meaning holds firm: Arabic zara'a, Aramaic zera', and Ethiopic zar'a all preserve the same sowing semantics, while Korean 씨를 뿌리다 ('scatter seeds') and Swahili -panda ('plant') confirm the cross-linguistic stability.

1. sow seed, plant crops (41×) The dominant Qal active sense: physically sowing seed in the ground for agricultural purposes. This covers both literal field-sowing (Gen 26:12, 'Isaac sowed in that land and reaped a hundredfold') and the positive metaphorical extension of 'planting' people in a land (Jer 31:27, 'I will sow the house of Israel with the seed of man and beast'). Arabic zara'a and Korean 씨를 뿌리다 both select dedicated sowing vocabulary. The imperatives in Hosea 10:12 ('Sow for yourselves righteousness') show the metaphorical elasticity of this core sense. Forty-one occurrences make this the overwhelming default. SOWING AND PLANTING

en: and-I-will-sow, and-sowed-it, and-you-shall-sow | es: Y-sembraréis, sembrabas, sembrad | fr: et-sema-il, et-semer, et-tu-devra-semer | de: [זרעו], [יזרע], [תזרע] Gen 26:12; Gen 47:23; Exod 23:10; Exod 23:16; Lev 19:19

2. be sown, be planted (8×) Passive and stative forms (Nifal, Pual, Qal Passive Participle): land or seed that is sown or has been sown, describing territory in a state of cultivation. Deuteronomy 21:4 specifies a valley 'which is neither plowed nor sown'; Deuteronomy 29:23 laments land 'not sown' after judgment; Psalm 97:11 uses the metaphor 'light is sown for the righteous.' Arabic tuzra'u (passive) and Spanish es sembrado / sembrada consistently mark the passive voice. Eight occurrences, functionally distinguishing the state of being cultivated from the act of cultivating. SOWING AND PLANTING

en: and-be-sown, is-sown, it-is-sown | es: es-sembrado, se-siembra, sembrada | fr: cela-est-sown, est-sown, et-semer | de: [ונזרעתם], [יזרע], es-ist-sown Lev 11:37; Deut 21:4; Deut 29:23; Ps 97:11; Isa 40:24

3. (4×) A participle cluster in Genesis 1:11-12, 29 describing plants as 'seeding seed' — the self-propagating, seed-bearing capacity of vegetation as created by God. Here the verb characterizes an inherent botanical property rather than a human agricultural act. Spanish que hace semilla ('that makes seed') and German das Samen sät ('that sows seed') both capture the attributive, definitional quality. Four occurrences, all in the creation account, making this a theologically distinctive cluster tied to the doctrine of created kinds. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: seeding | es: que-hace-semilla, que-haga-semilla, que-siembra | fr: seeding | de: das-Samen-sät, der-Samen-sät Gen 1:11; Gen 1:12; Gen 1:29

4. conceive, become pregnant (2×) Figurative extension to human conception: a woman 'producing seed' (Hifil) or 'being sown with' (Nifal) meaning to conceive offspring. Leviticus 12:2 prescribes purification when a woman 'conceives' (tazria'), and Numbers 5:28 promises that an innocent woman under the jealousy ordeal 'shall be sown with seed' — that is, she will conceive. Arabic habila ('to conceive') replaces zara'a in these contexts, and Korean 잉태하다 shifts from sowing to conception vocabulary. Two occurrences, but a semantically striking metaphorical leap from agriculture to human fertility. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: and-she-shall-be-sown-with, she-conceives | es: conciba, y-concebirá | fr: elle-conceives, et-elle-devra-être-sown-avec | de: sie-conceives, und-sie-soll-sein-sown-mit Lev 12:2; Num 5:28

5. (1×) A single occurrence at Zechariah 10:9 where God declares 'I will sow them among the peoples,' using agricultural scattering as a metaphor for diaspora. Unlike sense 1's positive 'planting in a land,' here sowing means dispersing people outward among nations — yet with a redemptive purpose, since they will 'remember me in far countries.' Spanish los sembraré ('I will sow them') preserves the agricultural metaphor. This sense bridges agriculture and exile theology in a way that resists easy classification under either literal sowing or positive planting. SOWING AND PLANTING

en: and-I-will-sow | es: Y-los-sembraré | fr: et-semer | de: [ואזרעם] Zech 10:9

זֶרַע H2233 N-msc / 2fs (229×)

Seed, offspring; literal plant seed for sowing, human descendants or lineage, and the season of sowing.

Zera is one of the Hebrew Bible's great double-duty nouns, spanning the agricultural and the genealogical with a single word. In Genesis 1 it is the seed inside fruit, the mechanism of botanical reproduction that God declares 'good.' By Genesis 3:15 it has already become the 'seed of the woman' — offspring, progeny, the carrier of promise and threat across generations. The Abrahamic covenant pivots on zera: 'I will make your zera as the dust of the earth' (Gen 13:16). Most languages must choose between botanical and genealogical vocabulary — Hindi distinguishes bij ('seed') from santan ('offspring'), Korean splits ssi ('seed') from jasonson ('descendants'), and Swahili separates mbegu ('seed') from uzao ('offspring') — but Hebrew holds them together in a single word whose ambiguity is sometimes theologically deliberate, as in the messianic 'seed' promises.

1. offspring, descendants (172×) Human offspring, descendants, or lineage — the dominant sense at 172 occurrences, overwhelmingly in covenantal, genealogical, and theological contexts. The 'seed of Abraham' (Gen 13:15-16; 22:17-18), the 'seed of David' (2 Sam 7:12), the 'holy seed' of the restored community (Ezra 9:2; Isa 6:13). Arabic nasl/dhurriyya, Swahili uzao, Korean jaseon, and Spanish descendencia all select dedicated progeny vocabulary here, distinct from their agricultural 'seed' words. The singular-collective ambiguity of zera — is it one descendant or many? — is theologically exploited in Gen 3:15 and Gal 3:16. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: offspring, offspring-of, seed | es: Descendencia-de, descendencia, descendencia-de | fr: semence, semence-de | de: Same, Same-, Samen Gen 4:25; Gen 7:3; Gen 13:16; Gen 15:3

2. agricultural seed, grain (55×) Literal plant seed or grain used for sowing, eating, or as produce — 55 occurrences concentrated in Genesis 1 (seed-bearing plants), the agricultural laws (Lev 11:37-38; 19:19; 27:16), and scattered narrative. 'Seed-bearing herb' and 'tree yielding fruit whose seed is in itself' (Gen 1:11-12, 29) establish this as the creation-order sense. Arabic zar/badhr, Swahili mbegu, Hindi bij, Korean ssi, and Spanish semilla all use dedicated botanical vocabulary. This includes a few occurrences where zera refers to human semen in a procreative-biological rather than genealogical sense (Lev 15:16-18; 18:20). SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: seed | es: Semilla, semen, semilla | fr: semence | de: Saatgut, Same, Samen Gen 1:11; Gen 1:12; Gen 1:29

3. sowing-time, seedtime (2×) Seedtime, the season or act of sowing — only 2 occurrences, both in agricultural-calendar formulae. 'While the earth remains, seedtime and harvest... shall not cease' (Gen 8:22); 'your threshing shall last to the time of sowing' (Lev 26:5). Here zera functions as a temporal noun denoting a period in the farming year, paired contrastively with qatsir ('harvest'). Spanish siembra ('sowing season'), Arabic zar ('planting time'), and Swahili upandaji ('sowing period') all render this as a season rather than a substance, confirming the metonymic shift from product to process to time. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: seedtime, sowing | es: la-siembra, siembra | fr: seedtime, semant | de: Saat, sowing Gen 8:22; Lev 26:5

זְרַע H2234 Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

Seed, offspring (Aramaic); human descendants or lineage (Daniel 2:43)

This Aramaic noun appears in Daniel 2:43, in the phrase 'seed of men,' describing a future kingdom that mixes with humanity but doesn't cohere. The 'seed' language indicates offspring or lineage, contrasting with the iron of the previous kingdom. The imagery suggests human ancestry or intermarriage attempting to unify what remains inherently divided. Iron and clay don't bond; human lineage can't force unity where fundamental incompatibility exists. The term emphasizes biological descent as the attempted but failed unifying strategy.

(1×) Seed or offspring (specifically 'of men') in Daniel 2:43, describing lineage in the divided kingdom vision. The phrase 'they will mix with the seed of men' suggests intermarriage or human descent as a unifying strategy that fails—iron and clay don't adhere. The multilingual glosses coordinate on 'descendencia/descendance,' emphasizing biological lineage. This Aramaic term parallels Hebrew 'zera' in meaning and usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-seed-of | es: con-descendencia-de | fr: forme | de: [בזרע] Dan 2:43

זְרֹעַ H2235a Art / N-mp (1×)

Vegetables, produce from seeds; plant-based food (Daniel 1:12)

This noun appears in Daniel 1:12, where Daniel requests 'vegetables' instead of the king's rich food. The term literally means 'things from seed'—produce grown from planted seeds, i.e., vegetarian fare. Daniel's request isn't ascetic but religiously motivated, avoiding potential ritual contamination from royal meat and wine. The multilingual glosses 'legumes/legumbres' emphasize plant-based diet. After ten days on vegetables, Daniel and friends appeared healthier than those on royal cuisine—a vindication of faithful dietary choices.

(1×) Vegetables or plant foods in Daniel 1:12, requested instead of royal provisions. The etymology ('from seeds') indicates plant-based produce—grains, legumes, vegetables. Spanish 'legumbres' and French preservation of the Hebrew term both recognize this as vegetarian food chosen for ritual purity. Daniel's vegetable diet proves superior to royal fare, demonstrating divine blessing on faithful dietary obedience. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12062 WITH 5 SENSES

en: the-vegetables | es: las-legumbres | fr: Zerach | de: [הזרעים] Dan 1:12

זְרַעִין H2235b N-mp (1×)

Vegetables (alternate Aramaic form); plant-based food items (Daniel 1:16)

This noun is an alternate Aramaic form meaning vegetables, appearing in Daniel 1:16 when the steward removes the royal food and gives Daniel and friends 'vegetables.' It's synonymous with H2235a, both indicating plant-based food. The slight morphological difference reflects Aramaic variation, but the meaning is identical: produce from seeds, vegetarian fare. The repeated mention (verses 12 and 16) emphasizes the sustained nature of Daniel's dietary commitment—not a brief experiment but an ongoing practice.

(1×) Vegetables or plant foods in Daniel 1:16, synonymous with the form in verse 12. The multilingual glosses coordinate on 'legumbres/legumes,' confirming vegetarian diet. This variant form in Aramaic maintains the same semantic content—food from seeds, plant-based fare. The steward's provision of vegetables fulfills Daniel's request, and the sustained diet validates faithfulness through demonstrable health. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12062 WITH 5 SENSES

en: vegetables | es: legumbres | fr: Zérach | de: [זרעונים] Dan 1:16

זָרַק H2236 V-QalPass-Perf-3ms (35×)

To toss, throw in volume — ritual sprinkling of blood/water, or scattering of dry material (dust, ashes, grain)

A verb of vigorous throwing that divides neatly between wet and dry substances. In its dominant ritual sense, it describes the priestly act of dashing or splashing sacrificial blood against the altar (Exod 24:6; Lev 1:5) — a forceful toss from a basin, distinct from the delicate finger-sprinkling of הִזָּה. Spanish 'rociar/esparcir' and French 'asperger' confirm the ritual splashing. In its secondary sense, the same forceful action applies to dry materials: Moses throws soot skyward to trigger the plague of boils (Exod 9:8, 10), mourners cast dust on their heads (Job 2:12), and Isaiah's farmer scatters cummin (Isa 28:25).

1. sprinkle, dash (ritual) (29×) Ritual sprinkling or dashing of liquid (especially blood or water) — the dominant priestly action of tossing sacrificial blood from a basin (מִזְרָק) against the sides of the altar. Accounts for 29 of 35 occurrences. Spanish 'rociar' and French 'asperger' both point to a cultic splashing action. Foundational in the covenant ratification ceremony (Exod 24:6, 8) and throughout Levitical sacrifice (Lev 1:5, 11; 3:2, 8, 13; 7:2, 14). Also includes sprinkling of purification water (Num 19:13, 20) and Ezekiel's visionary altar rites (Ezek 43:18). RITUAL SPRINKLING

en: and-he-sprinkled, and-he-sprinkled-it, and-sprinkled | es: fueron-rociadas, se-esparcieron, y-la-rociaron | fr: [ויזרקו], asperger, et-aspergea | de: [וזרקה], und-du-soll-sprengen, und-er-sprengte-es Exod 24:6; Exod 24:8; Exod 29:16; Exod 29:20; Lev 1:5

2. scatter, throw, strew (6×) Scattering, throwing, or strewing dry material — tossing dust, ashes, powder, or seed with a broad dispersing motion. The multilingual glosses shift from ritual vocabulary to dispersal language (eng 'scatter', spa 'esparcir/sembrar'). Moses and Aaron throw furnace soot heavenward (Exod 9:8, 10), Josiah scatters the ground powder of idols (2 Chr 34:4), Job's friends cast dust on their heads in mourning (Job 2:12), and Isaiah's farmer scatters cummin on prepared ground (Isa 28:25). RITUAL SPRINKLING

en: and-he-scattered, and-let-throw-it, and-scatter | es: siembra, y-esparce, y-esparcieron | fr: [ויזרק], [יזרק], et-asperger | de: [ויזרקו], [יזרק], und-lass-werfen-es Exod 9:8; Exod 9:10; 2Chr 34:4; Job 2:12; Isa 28:25

זָרַר H2237 Conj-w | V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

Sneeze (Poel); respiratory expulsion, sign of life returning (2 Kings 4:35)

This onomatopoetic verb appears in 2 Kings 4:35, when Elisha raises the Shunammite's son: 'the boy sneezed seven times and opened his eyes.' Sneezing signals the return of autonomous breathing—life flowing back. The seven repetitions emphasize completeness: full restoration. The sound of the word mimics the action (onomatopoeia), and Aramaic has a similar term. Some manuscripts omit this, seeing textual duplication, but the vivid detail of seven sneezes before eye-opening captures resurrection's physical, gradual unfolding.

(1×) Sneeze in 2 Kings 4:35, marking the revived boy's return to life. The seven repetitions emphasize complete restoration—not partial resuscitation but full return of autonomous respiratory function. The onomatopoetic verb mimics the sound, lending realism to the miracle account. Though some manuscripts omit it, the detail of multiple sneezes before eye-opening vividly portrays resurrection's physical, staged progression from death to life. BLOWING AND BREATHING

en: and-sneezed | es: Y-estornudó | fr: et-sneezed | de: und-sneezed 2Kgs 4:35

זֶרֶשׁ H2238 Prep-l | N-proper-fs (4×)

Zeresh; wife of Haman, who first encouraged and then lamented his plot against Mordecai.

The proper name of Haman's wife in the book of Esther. Zeresh first appears advising her husband to build a gallows for Mordecai (Esth 5:10, 14), but after Haman's humiliation in leading Mordecai through the streets, she reverses course and ominously predicts his downfall (Esth 6:13). The name may derive from a Persian word meaning 'golden' or be connected to an Elamite goddess, Kirisha. Translations render it variously—English 'Zeresh,' Spanish 'Zeres,' German 'Seresch'—but all preserve it as a recognizable personal name.

(4×) A proper feminine name identifying the wife of Haman the Agagite in the Esther narrative. She appears in two contrasting scenes: first counseling Haman to prepare a gallows for Mordecai (Esth 5:10, 14), then warning him after his public humiliation that his fall before Mordecai is inevitable (Esth 6:13, appearing twice in the same verse). The name's possible Persian etymology ('golden') is noted by lexicographers, with an alternative link to the Elamite goddess Kirisha. The multilingual variation—Spanish 'Zeres,' German 'Seresch,' French preserving the Hebrew form—reflects typical transliteration differences for proper names. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zeresh, and-Zeresh, to-Zeresh | es: Zeres, a-Zeres, y-Zeres | fr: [וזרש], [זרש], [לזרש] | de: Seresch, und-Seresch, zu-Seresch Esth 5:10; Esth 5:14; Esth 6:13

זֶרֶת H2239 Prep-b (7×)

A span — the distance from thumb-tip to little-finger-tip of an outstretched hand, about half a cubit.

The span (zeret) is an ancient unit of linear measurement equaling roughly half a cubit, approximately 22–23 centimeters, defined by stretching the hand from thumb to little finger. It serves as a concrete, human-scale measure: God measures the heavens by spans (Isa 40:12), Goliath's height is given as six cubits and a span (1 Sam 17:4), and the priestly breastpiece is described as a span square (Exod 28:16; 39:9). Spanish palmo and French empan both preserve the hand-based imagery of this measurement.

span (unit of measurement) (7×) A span — the linear measure from the tip of the outstretched thumb to the tip of the little finger, approximately half a cubit (about 22–23 cm). Used both for divine cosmic measurement, as when God spans the heavens with his hand (Isa 40:12), and for precise human construction, as in the dimensions of the priestly breastpiece (Exod 28:16; 39:9) and the altar ledge (Ezek 43:13). The multilingual evidence is illuminating: Spanish palmo and French empan both derive from words for 'palm/hand-spread,' mirroring the Hebrew's anatomical origin. Goliath's height — six cubits and a span (1 Sam 17:4) — uses it as an exact surplus measure beyond the round cubit figure. SPAN MEASUREMENT UNIT

en: and-a-span, and-span, span | es: con-el-palmo, palmo, y-palmo | fr: [בזרת], empan, et-empan | de: Spanne, [בזרת], [זרת] Exod 28:16; Exod 39:9; 1Sam 17:4

זַתּוּא H2240 N-proper-ms (4×)

Zattu; head of a family among the returned exiles from Babylon.

A proper name identifying the head of a clan that returned from Babylonian exile. Zattu appears in the census lists of Ezra 2:8 and its parallel Nehemiah 7:13, numbering his descendants among the restored community. Members of his family are also listed among those who had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:27), and the name appears on the sealed covenant document in Nehemiah 10:14. French and German translations retain the untransliterated Hebrew form, while English and Spanish render it as 'Zattu' and 'Zatu' respectively.

(4×) A proper masculine name designating the ancestor of a family group in the post-exilic Jewish community. His descendants appear in the return census (Ezra 2:8; Neh 7:13), among those who put away foreign wives (Ezra 10:27), and as signatories of the covenant renewal (Neh 10:14). The name functions primarily as a clan identifier in these administrative lists. English gives 'Zattu,' Spanish 'Zatu,' while French and German retain the Hebrew script, reflecting the name's relative obscurity outside specialist biblical reference. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zattu | es: Zatu | fr: [זתוא] | de: [זתוא] Ezra 2:8; Ezra 10:27; Neh 7:13; Neh 10:14

זֵתָם H2241 Conj-w | N-proper-ms (2×)

personal name; a Levite in the Chronicles genealogies

Zetham appears as the name of a Levite in the genealogical lists of 1 Chronicles 23:8 and 26:22. He is associated with the service of the temple and the oversight of its treasuries. The name's meaning is uncertain, with no clear etymological derivation. Like many Levitical names in Chronicles, it serves to establish priestly lineages and organizational structures for temple worship. No narrative or personal details are provided beyond his place in the genealogical framework.

(2×) A masculine proper name for a Levite in the Chronicler's genealogies. Zetham is listed among those responsible for the treasuries of the house of Yahweh, reflecting the Chronicler's concern for proper temple administration. His inclusion in the genealogy establishes continuity in the Levitical service, preserving the memory of families who maintained the sanctuary's operations. The name itself offers no clear meaning, functioning purely as a marker of identity and lineage within the sacred personnel. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zetam, and-Zetam | es: Zetam, y-Zetam | fr: [וזתם], [זתם] | de: [וזתם], [זתם] 1Chr 23:8; 1Chr 26:22

זֵתַר H2242 N-proper-ms (1×)

Zethar, a eunuch serving King Ahasuerus (Esther 1:10)

Zethar was one of seven eunuchs who served in the court of King Ahasuerus (Xerxes) in Esther 1:10. These officials attended the king during his famous banquet and were commanded to bring Queen Vashti before the drunk assembly—a command she refused, triggering the events that would elevate Esther. The name may derive from Persian meaning 'conqueror.' Eunuchs held significant administrative power in Persian courts, serving as trusted intermediaries between the king and others.

(1×) A eunuch in the court of Ahasuerus in Esther 1:10, one of seven officials commanded to bring Vashti to the king's banquet. The name possibly means 'conqueror' in Persian. The multilingual glosses transliterate the name. Eunuchs like Zethar wielded administrative power in Persian courts, making them pivotal (if often invisible) actors in the Esther narrative's political machinations. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Zethar | es: Zetar | fr: [זתר] | de: [זתר] Esth 1:10

חֹב H2243 Prep-b / N-msc / 1cs (1×)

bosom, chest (Aramaic loan-word), used metaphorically for concealing wrongdoing

This rare Aramaic-influenced term appears only in Job's protestation of innocence, where he denies hiding his transgression 'in his bosom' as Adam did. The word evokes the fold of a garment over the chest where precious or shameful things might be concealed. Cross-linguistic evidence from Spanish 'seno' and French references to the intimate space of one's person confirms this anatomical and metaphorical range.

(1×) The anatomical bosom or chest-fold where things are concealed. Job 31:33 uses this in a powerful metaphor of moral concealment—Job insists he has not hidden his sin 'in his bosom' like Adam. The Spanish 'en-mi-seno' and English 'in-my-bosom' capture the intimate, private space where secrets are kept close to the body. BOSOM LAP

en: in-my-bosom | es: en-mi-seno | fr: dans-mon-בחבי-moi | de: [בחבי] Job 31:33

חָבָא H2244 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (33×)

Hide oneself, take refuge (Nifal/Hitpael reflexive); be hidden or concealed (passive Nifal/Hofal/Pual); hide someone or something (Hifil causative).

The Hebrew verb chava covers the full grammar of concealment — hiding yourself, being hidden by circumstance, and hiding others. Its most frequent deployment is reflexive: people hide themselves from danger in the Nifal and Hitpael stems, from Adam and Eve crouching among the garden's trees (Gen 3:8, 10) to the five Amorite kings sealed in the cave at Makkedah (Josh 10:16-27) to young Saul concealing himself among the baggage before his coronation (1 Sam 10:22). The passive forms (7 occurrences) shift the focus to the state of being hidden — discovered or detected by another. The Hifil causative (6 occurrences) introduces a protector who hides someone else, most memorably Rahab concealing the Israelite spies (Josh 6:17, 25) and Obadiah hiding a hundred prophets from Jezebel's persecution (1 Kgs 18:4, 13). Spanish esconderse/esconder, French se cacher/cacher, and German sich verbergen/verbergen mirror this reflexive-versus-causative architecture precisely.

1. hide oneself, take refuge (20×) To hide oneself or take refuge — the reflexive Nifal and Hitpael forms where a person actively conceals themselves from danger, detection, or social exposure. This dominant sense (20 occurrences) begins in Eden with Adam and Eve hiding from God's presence (Gen 3:8, 10), continues through military narratives (the five kings hiding in the cave at Makkedah, Josh 10:16-27; David hiding from Saul, 1 Sam 19:2; Ahithophel's spy hiding, 2 Sam 17:9), and includes the memorable scene of Saul hiding among the baggage on his coronation day (1 Sam 10:22). Spanish esconderse, French se cacher, German sich verbergen, Arabic ٱ, and Korean 숨다 all deploy reflexive hiding vocabulary. The Hitpael participle mitchabe conveys ongoing, deliberate concealment. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: and-I-hid, and-hid-himself, and-hid-themselves | es: a-esconderse, escondido, escondiste | fr: [להחבא], [מתחבא], [מתחבאים] | de: [בהחבא], [ונחבאו], [יחבאו] Gen 3:8; Gen 3:10; Gen 31:27; Josh 10:16; Josh 10:27

2. be hidden, be concealed (7×) To be hidden or concealed — passive Nifal, Hofal, and Pual forms indicating that the subject is in a state of concealment or has been hidden by another's action, discovered or detected from that state. Seven occurrences include the report that the five kings 'have been found hidden' in the cave (Josh 10:17), the assurance that from the scourge of the tongue 'you shall be hidden' (Job 5:21), and the poor being driven off the road to hide themselves (Job 24:4). Spanish escondido (adjective/participle), French cache, and German verborgen shift to passive or stative constructions, confirming the semantic difference from active self-hiding: here concealment is a condition rather than an agent's decision. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: hidden, hide-themselves, hiding | es: escondido, escondidos, fueron-escondidos | fr: [החבאו], cachant, caché | de: [החבאו], [חבאו], [נחבאו] Josh 10:17; 1Sam 10:22; 2Sam 17:9; Job 5:21; Job 24:4

3. hide someone or something (6×) To hide someone or something — the Hifil causative stem where one person actively conceals another, functioning transitively with a direct object. Six occurrences center on acts of protective concealment: Rahab hiding the spies and being spared for it (Josh 6:17, 25), Obadiah hiding a hundred prophets of the LORD in caves from Jezebel's slaughter (1 Kgs 18:4, 13), and a mother hiding her butchered child in a siege (2 Kgs 6:29). Spanish esconder (transitive), French cacher, and German verbergen (transitive) all use the same root as the reflexive but in a clearly transitive frame. These passages carry strong moral weight — hiding the vulnerable is an act of courage and faithfulness. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: and-I-hid, and-hid-them, and-she-hid | es: Y-escondí, escondió, me-escondió | fr: [החביאנ], elle-cacha, et-cacha-eux | de: [החביאנ], sie-verbarg, und-ich-verbarg Josh 6:17; Josh 6:25; 1Kgs 18:4; 1Kgs 18:13; 2Kgs 6:29

חָבַב H2245 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

to love, cherish (used of divine affection for peoples)

A tender verb appearing only in Moses' blessing over Israel, describing God as 'loving the peoples.' The root connects to Aramaic and Arabic words for love, embracing, and even the bosom where beloved ones are held. This single attestation in Deuteronomy 33:3 captures divine affection in its most unguarded form, with translations across languages emphasizing the active, ongoing nature of this love.

(1×) Divine or personal love expressed actively. In Deuteronomy 33:3, God is portrayed as 'loving the peoples'—the participle form suggests continuous, ongoing affection. The verb's connection to 'embrace' and 'bosom' in related languages reveals love as intimate, protective action. Spanish 'amador-de' and French 'aimant' capture this participial sense of one who actively loves. LOVE (ACTIVE VERB)

en: loving | es: amador-de | fr: aimant | de: liebend Deut 33:3

חֹבָב H2246 N-proper-ms (2×)

personal name meaning uncertain; Moses' father-in-law, also called Jethro or Reuel

Hobab appears in Numbers 10:29 and Judges 4:11 as the son of Reuel and the 'father-in-law' (or possibly brother-in-law) of Moses. The relationship is textually complex, as Moses' father-in-law is elsewhere called Jethro (Exodus 3:1) or Reuel (Exodus 2:18). Some scholars suggest Hobab was Jethro's son and thus Moses' brother-in-law, others that the terms overlap. In Numbers, Moses invites Hobab to accompany Israel as a guide through the wilderness. Judges notes his Kenite descendants. The name's etymology is uncertain, though Phoenician parallels exist.

(2×) A personal name for a Midianite/Kenite kinsman of Moses, identified as the son of Reuel. Moses appeals to Hobab's knowledge of the wilderness, asking him to serve as 'eyes' for Israel

—a guide through terrain he knows intimately. Whether father-in-law or brother-in-law, Hobab represents the Kenite alliance with Israel, a non-Israelite people who attached themselves to Yahweh's covenant community. Judges 4:11 traces Kenite lineage through him, preserving the memory of this wilderness kinship that predates Sinai. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chovav, to-Hobab | es: Jovav, a-Hobab | fr: Chovav, à-Hobab | de: Chovav, zu-Hobab Num 10:29; Judg 4:11

חָבָה H2247 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-2mp (5×)

to withdraw, hide oneself; to take shelter or conceal oneself from danger or judgment

A verb meaning to withdraw or hide oneself, closely related to the more common ḥābāʾ. In Joshua 2:16, Rahab instructs the Israelite spies to hide in the hills for three days. Isaiah 26:20 issues a tender imperative — 'Come, my people, withdraw into your chambers' — evoking divine shelter during coming judgment. The Niphal forms in 1 Kings 22:25 and 2 Kings 7:12 describe hiding in an inner room, while Jeremiah 49:10 declares that Esau cannot hide from God's searching judgment.

(5×) To withdraw into concealment or hide oneself, whether for safety or to escape danger. The Qal imperative in Isaiah 26:20 tenderly urges God's people to take shelter during divine wrath. Niphal forms describe physical hiding: the spies in the hills (Josh 2:16), a prophet fleeing to an inner room (1 Kgs 22:25), Syrian soldiers concealing themselves (2 Kgs 7:12). Jeremiah 49:10 uses it theologically: Esau is stripped bare and cannot hide. Spanish 'esconderse' and French 'cacher' uniformly convey concealment. HIDING AND CONCEALING

en: and-to-hide, and-you-shall-hide, for-a-little | es: escóndete, para-esconderse, para-esconderte | fr: [ונחבה], [חבי], et-tu-devra-cacher | de: [ונחבה], [חבי], und-du-soll-verbergen Josh 2:16; 1Kgs 22:25; 2Kgs 7:12; Isa 26:20; Jer 49:10

חֲבוּלָא H2248 N-fs (1×)

wrong, injury, hurtful act (Aramaic term for crime or harm done)

This Aramaic noun describes wrongdoing or injury, appearing in Daniel's vindication before Darius—no 'wrong' was found in him. The term emphasizes the concrete harm of a criminal act rather than abstract guilt. The multilingual glosses reveal semantic range from physical 'injury' (French 'blessure') to moral 'wrong' (English), reflecting both the bodily and ethical dimensions of unjust action.

(1×) A hurtful deed, crime, or injurious act. Daniel 6:22 declares that no such 'wrong' was found in the prophet—God's messenger was blameless before both heaven and the king. Spanish 'daño' (harm) and French 'blessure' (wound) suggest the term carries connotations of concrete injury, not merely abstract guilt. CALAMITY AND DISASTER

en: wrong | es: daño | fr: blessure | de: [חבולה] Dan 6:22

חָבוֹר H2249 Conj-w (3×)

Habor (river name in Mesopotamia)

A river in Upper Mesopotamia, flowing into the Euphrates from the east. It is called 'the river Gozan' (2 Kgs 17:6; 18:11) and appears in the account of the Assyrian deportation of Israelites. First Chronicles 5:26 lists 'Habor, Hara, and the river Gozan' (the first two may be scribal variants of the same name). The name is preserved across translations (Spanish Habor, Jabor; French Chavor). This is a geographic marker of exile: the place where Israel was scattered.

(3×) A river name in three deportation contexts (2 Kgs 17:6; 18:11; 1 Chr 5:26). The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the toponym (Habor, Jabor, Chavor). The river functions as a geographic referent for the Assyrian exile—a fixed point on the map of Israel's dispersion. RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: and-Chavor, and-in-Chavor | es: y-Jabor, y-en-Habor | fr: [וחבור], et-dans-Chavor | de: [וחבור], und-in-Chavor 2Kgs 17:6; 2Kgs 18:11; 1Chr 5:26

חַבּוּרָה H2250 Prep-l / N-fsc / 1cs (7×)

A wound, stripe, or bruise caused by a blow; physical injury from striking or beating.

This feminine noun denotes the visible mark left by a violent blow — a wound, stripe, or bruise. It appears in contexts ranging from Lamech's boast of killing a man for wounding him (Gen 4:23) to the lex talionis legislation of stripe for stripe (Exod 21:25). Most memorably, Isaiah 53:5 declares that 'by his stripes we are healed,' where the singular collective noun gathers all the suffering servant's wounds into one redemptive image. The word consistently appears alongside synonyms for wound and injury (petsa', makkah), forming a vocabulary cluster for physical trauma.

wound, stripe, bruise (7×) A wound, bruise, or weal caused by a blow or beating — the visible mark of physical violence on the body. Lamech's self-justifying song (Gen 4:23) pairs it with petsa' (open wound), establishing the word's place in a graduated vocabulary of injury. The legal code prescribes 'stripe for stripe' (Exod 21:25), while Proverbs 20:30 speaks of blows that cleanse away evil. Spanish renders it heridas (wounds) and contusión (bruise), capturing both the open and closed injury senses. The theologically climactic use in Isaiah 53:5 — 'by his stripes (chaburato) we are healed' — transforms physical beating into vicarious atonement, making this modest injury term one of the most quoted in messianic prophecy. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: and-bruise, and-by-his-stripes, bruise | es: Heridas, contusión, mis-heridas | fr: [ובחברתו], [וחבורה], blessure | de: [ובחברתו], [וחבורה], [חברות] Gen 4:23; Exod 21:25; Ps 38:5; Prov 20:30

חָבַט H2251 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (5×)

beat off (olives from a tree); beat out (grain by hand with a stick), as distinct from large-scale threshing

Used for small-scale harvesting, this verb describes knocking olives from branches or beating out grain with a rod rather than threshing on an open floor with cattle. Gideon was beating out wheat in a winepress to hide it from the Midianites (Judg 6:11), and Ruth beat out what she had gleaned (Ruth 2:17). In Isaiah 27:12 the image turns figurative: Yahweh will beat out the harvest from the Euphrates to the Brook of Egypt, gathering Israel one by one. Spanish 'golpear/sacudir' and French 'battre' consistently reflect the percussive, manual action.

(5×) To beat off fruit (especially olives) from a tree by striking the branches with a stick, as prescribed in Deut 24:20. Spanish 'sacudir' ('to shake loose') captures the dislodging action. This is a harvesting technique distinct from picking by hand, intended to quickly gather remaining produce. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-she-beat-out, beating-out, shall-beat-out | es: golpeaba, sacudas, sacudirá | fr: [יחבט], battant-dehors, et-elle-beat-dehors | de: [וחבט], [יחבט], beating-heraus Deut 24:20; Judg 6:11; Ruth 2:17; Isa 27:12; Isa 28:27

חֲבָיָה H2252 N-proper-ms (2×)

personal name; head of a priestly family that could not prove its genealogy after the exile

Habaiah (also spelled Hobaiah) appears in Ezra 2:61 and Nehemiah 7:63 as the head of a priestly family whose members returned from Babylonian exile but were excluded from the priesthood because they could not prove their lineage. The name's meaning is obscure, and textual variants across Hebrew manuscripts and the Septuagint reflect uncertainty about its form. The exclusion highlights the post-exilic community's concern for genealogical purity, especially among those serving at the altar. Their case was held pending resolution by Urim and Thummim.

(2×) A proper name for a priestly ancestor whose descendants faced a genealogical crisis upon return from exile. Unable to locate their family records, they were barred from priestly service until their lineage could be verified—a ruling reflecting the community's anxiety about maintaining covenant holiness and proper worship. The textual variants suggest the name was uncommon or difficult to transmit. This detail in Ezra-Nehemiah underscores the administrative and spiritual challenges of reconstituting temple worship after the trauma of exile and dispersion. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chovayah, Hobaiah | es: Habaías, Jobaiás | fr: [חביה] | de: [חביה] Ezra 2:61; Neh 7:63

חֲבִיוֹן H2253 N-msc (1×)
hiding-place, veil, concealment (of divine power)
A poetic term for concealment or veiling, appearing only in Habakkuk's theophany where God's power is described as having 'its hiding-place' or 'veiling.' The word evokes both the concealment of divine glory and the envelope of radiance that simultaneously reveals and obscures God's presence. Spanish 'escondedero' (hiding-place) and the verb 'to hide' in other languages point to the paradox of divine self-revelation: God's power is both manifest and mysteriously hidden.

(1×) A hiding-place, veil, or envelope of concealment. Habakkuk 3:4 uses this in a striking theophanic vision: God's rays shine forth, yet there remains 'the hiding of his power'—a veiling that paradoxically both reveals and conceals divine glory. The construct form suggests this hiding is intrinsic to the power itself, not imposed from without. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: is-the-hiding-of | es: el-escondedero-de- | fr: cacher | de: [חביון] Hab 3:4

חָבַל H2254a V-Qal-Perf-3ms (12×)
chabal – to take in pledge or seize as collateral; the act of holding a debtor's property as security
The verb chabal (I) means to take in pledge or seize as security for a debt, describing the creditor's act of claiming a debtor's property as collateral. The Torah regulates this practice carefully: a millstone essential for grinding grain must not be taken in pledge (Deut 24:6), and a poor man's cloak taken as security must be returned before nightfall (Exod 22:26; Deut 24:17). The prophets condemn its abuse: Amos denounces those who recline on garments taken in pledge beside the altar (Amos 2:8), Ezekiel commends the righteous who restore pledges (Ezek 18:16), and Job laments those who strip the naked of their garments (Job 22:6; 24:3, 9). The word illuminates the intersection of ancient Israelite debt law with prophetic ethics.

to take in pledge, hold as security (12×) To take or hold property as a pledge or security for a debt – the creditor's act of seizing collateral from a borrower. Torah legislation restricts the practice (Exod 22:26, return of cloaks; Deut 24:6, prohibition on millstones; Deut 24:17, protection of widows), while prophetic texts condemn its abuse (Amos 2:8; Job 22:6; 24:3, 9) and commend its righteous use (Ezek 18:16). Wisdom literature echoes the warning (Prov 20:16; 27:13). Cross-lingual renderings confirm a unified semantic core: Spanish empenar, French prendre-comme-gage, German verpfanden. PLEDGES AND SECURITY
en: does-he-take, hold-him-in-pledge, hold-in-pledge | es: empeñar, empeñas, toma-en-prenda | fr: devra-prendre-comme-pledge, prenant-comme-gage, prend-comme-pledge | de: [חבל], [חבלהו], [חבלים] Exod 22:26; Deut 24:6; Deut 24:17

חָבַל H2254b Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (12×)
To act corruptly, destroy, or ruin; ranging from moral corruption to active devastation and passive destruction.
This root carries a dark freight of ruin, whether moral or physical. In Nehemiah 1:7, the nation confesses 'we have acted very corruptly against you'—a Qal use pointing to moral decomposition. The Piel intensifies this into active devastation: the little foxes that 'ruin' the vineyards (Song 2:15), or the destroyer God fashioned for his purposes (Isa 54:16). Cognate Aramaic and Assyrian forms confirm the same range from wounding to total ruination. The passive stems (Nifal/Pual) describe the result: being shattered, broken, or brought to nothing (Job 17:1, Prov 13:13).

1. destroy, ruin (Piel) (6×) Active ruination in the Piel stem—deliberate, causative destruction. Spanish 'destruirá' and French 'ravager' capture the violent force. Song 2:15 pictures foxes 'destroying' vineyards; Isaiah 13:5 and 54:16 speak of cosmic devastation and the destroyer formed by God himself. The Piel marks intensified, purposeful harm rather than mere moral failing. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION
en: and-destroy, destroying, it-will-destroy | es: destruirá, para-destruir, que-arruinan | fr: corrompre, envelopper, et-ravager | de: [וחבל], [מחבלים], [תחבל] Eccl 5:6; Song 2:15; Isa 13:5; Isa 32:7; Isa 54:16

2. act corruptly, offend (Qal) (3×) Acting corruptly or offending in the Qal stem, describing moral corruption rather than physical destruction. Nehemiah 1:7 uses the infinitive absolute for emphasis—'we have utterly acted corruptly.' French 'corrompre' and Spanish 'nos corrompimos' capture the reflexive moral decay. Job 34:31 extends this to personal offense against God, suggesting ethical ruin from within. PLEDGES AND SECURITY
en: I-will-offend, surely, we-acted-corruptly | es: Corrupción, arruinaré, nos-corrompimos | fr: [חבל], [חבלנו], ravager | de: [אחבל], [חבל], [חבלנו] Neh 1:7; Job 34:31

3. be destroyed, be broken (Nifal/Pual) (3×) Being destroyed, broken, or ruined in the passive Nifal and Pual stems—the suffered consequence of corruption. Proverbs 13:13 warns that whoever despises the word 'will be destroyed'; Job 17:1 laments 'my spirit is broken.' Spanish 'será destruido' and German 'verderben' consistently reflect this resultant, passive state of being undone. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION
en: and-will-be-broken, brings-destruction-on, is-broken | es: está-corrompido, será-destruido, y-será-destruido | fr: et-corrompre, ravager | de: [חבלה], [יחבל], und-verderben Job 17:1; Prov 13:13; Isa 10:27

חָבַל H2254c V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (3×)
be in labor, travail; give birth with pain (Piel)
A verb of childbirth pain and labor. The wicked man 'conceives trouble and gives birth to deceit' (Ps 7:14, metaphorical travail). In the Song, the beloved's mother 'was in labor with you' and 'brought you forth in pain' (Song 8:5, twice). The Spanish tuvo dolores de parto, concibe and French a enfanté dans la douleur reflect the physical and metaphorical anguish of bringing forth. The word evokes the labor of creation—whether of life or of evil schemes.

(3×) Describes labor pains in literal (Song 8:5, twice) and metaphorical (Ps 7:14) contexts. The wicked 'conceive' and 'travail' with evil; the mother travails to bring forth a child. Cross-lingual glosses (in labor, dolores de parto, enfanté dans la douleur) uniformly reflect the painful, strenuous process of bringing forth—whether child or wickedness. PLEDGES AND SECURITY
en: he-conceives-, was-in-labor, was-in-labor-you | es: concibe-, te-concibió-con-dolores, tuvo-dolores-de-parto | fr: a-enfanté-dans-la-douleur, enfanter, t'a-enfanté-dans-la-douleur | de: [חבלה], [חבלתך], er-conceives- Ps 7:14; Song 8:5

חֲבַל H2255 Conj-w / V-Piel-Imp-mp / 3ms (6×)
destroy, bring to ruin; harm, injure (Aramaic Pael/Hithpaal in Daniel and Ezra)
An Aramaic verb appearing exclusively in Daniel and Ezra, used in the Pael stem to mean 'destroy' or 'bring to ruin' and in the Hithpaal to mean 'be destroyed.' The word carries apocalyptic weight: God's kingdom 'will never be destroyed' (Dan 2:44; 7:14), while human powers crumble. In Dan 6:22, applied more mildly to the lions that did not 'hurt' Daniel, showing the verb can shade from total annihilation to physical harm. Spanish 'destruir' and 'hacer dano' nicely mirror this range.

1. destroy (5×) To bring something to complete ruin or annihilation, particularly kingdoms and sacred structures. The Pael imperative in Dan 4:23 commands the felling of the great tree, while Ezra 6:12 warns against destroying the Temple. The Hithpaal in Dan 2:44, 6:26, and 7:14 declares God's kingdom indestructible. English 'destroy,' Spanish 'destruir,' and French 'detruire' converge uniformly on total destruction. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION
en: and-destroy-it, to-destroy, will-be-destroyed | es: para-destruir, será-destruido, y-destruidlo | fr: [לחבלה], détruire, et-détruire | de: [וחבלוה], [לחבלה], [תתחבל] Ezra 6:12; Dan 2:44; Dan 4:23; Dan 6:26; Dan 7:14

2. hurt, harm (1×) To cause injury or physical harm without implying total destruction. Attested once in Dan 6:22, where Daniel testifies that the lions 'did not hurt me.' Spanish 'me hicieron dano' ('they did me harm') captures this lighter nuance well, distinguishing it from the heavier 'destruir' used elsewhere for the same root. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: did-they-hurt-me | es: me-hicieron-daño | fr: détruire | de: [חבלוני] Dan 6:22

חֶבֶל H2256a N-mpc / 3ms (50×)

A cord, rope, or measuring line; by extension a measured portion of territory, an allotted inheritance, or a band of people

Few Hebrew words better illustrate how a concrete object generates a rich cluster of abstract meanings. At its base, חֶבֶל is simply a rope — the cord by which Rahab lowered the spies from Jericho's wall (Josh 2:15), or the ropes of a tent (Isa 33:20). But because ropes were used as measuring lines to divide land, the word came to mean an allotted portion or territory — 'the LORD's portion is his people, Jacob the lot (חֶבֶל) of his inheritance' (Deut 32:9). From there it extends to designate entire geographic districts, like 'the region of Argob' (Deut 3:4). Most surprisingly, it can even mean a 'band' of prophets (1 Sam 10:5), people bound together as if by a common cord.

1. cord, rope, line (32×) The concrete, foundational sense: a physical cord, rope, or line made from twisted fibers. Used for lowering people (Josh 2:15; Jer 38:6), dragging stones (2 Sam 17:13), binding (Job 40:25), tent rigging (Isa 33:20), and ship tackling (Isa 33:23). David's measurement of Moabite captives with cords (2 Sam 8:2) bridges the literal rope and the measuring-line usage. Spanish 'cuerda' and French 'corde' both preserve this core sense with precision, while German sometimes shifts toward the extended territorial meaning 'Gebiet' even in physical contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-cord, and-cords, and-ropes | es: Cuerdas-de, con-cuerdas, con-cuerdas-de | fr: [בחבל'], avec-le-ligne, corde | de: Gebiet, [בחבל'], [בחבלים] Josh 2:15; 2Sam 8:2; 2Sam 17:13

2. allotted portion, inheritance (9×) The metaphorical extension to an allotted portion or inheritance of land, derived from the practice of measuring territory with a surveyor's line. In Deuteronomy 32:9, Israel is called 'the lot (חֶבֶל) of his inheritance,' where the measuring cord becomes a metonym for what it measures out. Joshua 17:5 and 17:14 use it for the tribal allotments. Spanish renders with both 'cuerdas' (preserving the cord image) and 'porción,' while French 'part' captures the apportioned share. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-portion, from-portion-of, lot-of | es: De-la-porción-de, cuerdas, desde-la-región-de | fr: [חבל], corde, de-part-de | de: Anteile-von, Los-von, [חבל] Deut 32:9; Josh 17:5; Josh 17:14; Josh 19:9; Josh 19:29

3. region, territory, district (7×) A further geographical extension where חֶבֶל denotes a district, region, or coastal stretch of territory. Applied to 'the region of Argob' in Bashan (Deut 3:4, 13-14), Solomon's administrative district (1 Kgs 4:13), and the Philistine coast at Zephaniah 2:5. Here the measuring-line image has faded almost entirely, leaving a standard geographic term. French 'région' and Spanish 'región' both treat it as a straightforward territorial designation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: region-of, the-region, the-region-of | es: región, región-de | fr: corde, le-region-de, région-de | de: Gebiet, Gegend-von, der-region-von Deut 3:4; Deut 3:13; Deut 3:14; 1Kgs 4:13; Zeph 2:5

4. band, company of people (2×) A rare but distinctive sense: a band or company of people joined together for a common purpose. Found exclusively in 1 Samuel 10:5 and 10:10, describing the group of prophets Saul encounters coming down from the high place with musical instruments. The underlying metaphor may be people 'roped together' or bound in fellowship, though Spanish 'grupo' and French 'bande' simply render the collective meaning without the etymological cord image. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: band-of, band-of- | es: grupo-de | fr: bande-de, bande-de- | de: band-von, band-von- 1Sam 10:5; 1Sam 10:10

חֶבֶל H2256b N-mp (9×)

Pain, pang, especially birth-pangs; a prophetic metaphor for the anguish of nations and the crisis of redemption.

Distinguished from its homonym meaning 'cord' or 'territory,' this hevel denotes sharp pain, particularly the pangs of childbirth. The prophets seize on labor pain as the supreme image for overwhelming, purposeful anguish: Isaiah describes nations seized by pangs 'like a woman in labor' (Isa 13:8), and Hosea warns that the pains of a travailing woman come upon Ephraim (Hos 13:13). Yet birth-pangs point beyond suffering to new life – Isaiah 66:7 marvels that Zion brought forth before her pains came. In Job, the word appears both literally of animals giving birth (39:3) and metaphorically of human calamity (21:17).

pain, pang, birth-pang (9×) Pain or pang, especially the sharp, rhythmic agony of childbirth, used almost exclusively in prophetic texts as a metaphor for intense national or eschatological suffering. Spanish 'dolores' and 'dolores de' capture the plural pangs, while French and German preserve the Hebrew forms alongside contextual translations. The metaphor carries a double edge: labor pain signals both crisis and coming deliverance. Key passages include Isaiah 13:8 (pangs seizing Babylon), Isaiah 26:17 (Israel writhing before YHWH), Hosea 13:13 (Ephraim as an unwise son who will not emerge from the birth canal), and the startling reversal in Isaiah 66:7 where Zion delivers before the pangs arrive. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: and-pains, in-her-pangs, labor-pain | es: dolores, dolores-de, en-sus-dolores | fr: [בחליה], [וחבלים], [חבל] | de: [בחבליה], [וחבלים], [חבל] Job 21:17; Job 39:3; Isa 13:8; Isa 26:17; Isa 66:7

חֲבָלִים H2256c Art / N-mp (2×)

Union, Bonds; name of Zechariah's second symbolic staff representing brotherhood between Judah and Israel

In Zechariah 11:7 and 14, 'Bonds' (or 'Union') is the name given to one of the prophet's two symbolic staffs, the other being 'Favor.' The staffs represent Yahweh's covenant relationship with his people. When Zechariah breaks the staff called 'Bonds,' it symbolizes the annulment of the brotherhood between Judah and Israel—the fracturing of national unity. The name derives from the root meaning 'to bind' or 'join,' making it an apt emblem of fraternal or covenantal union. The acted prophecy anticipates the community's internal division and covenant rupture.

(2×) A symbolic name for Zechariah's second shepherd staff, representing the bond or union between Judah and Israel. The breaking of this staff (11:14) enacts the dissolution of brotherhood—a prophetic sign that the two kingdoms, once united under David and Solomon, will not be reunited under the current covenant conditions. The term 'binders' or 'bonds' captures the idea of ties that hold together; their severing signals relational collapse. This staff-breaking ritual dramatizes covenant failure and the fragmentation of the people of God. JOINING AND ALLIANCE destruction, ruin (distinct from 'rope/cord' homonym)

en: Bonds | es: Ataduras | fr: câble | de: [החבלים], [חבלים] Zech 11:7; Zech 11:14

חֶבֶל H2256d Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

A term for destruction appearing in Micah's oracle of judgment. Though spelled identically to the common word for 'rope,' this is a distinct noun denoting ruin or devastating harm. The prophet warns of 'grievous destruction' that will come upon those who oppress. French 'douleur' (pain) alongside Spanish 'destrucción' suggests the term connotes not just physical ruin but the anguish accompanying devastation.

(1×) Destruction or ruin, particularly as divine judgment. Micah 2:10 pronounces 'grievous destruction' upon those who defile God's rest. The adjective 'nimrats' (grievous, severe) intensifies the noun, suggesting complete, painful devastation. Translations consistently render this as destructive force rather than the homonymous 'rope,' recognizing the prophetic context of judgment. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: and-destruction | es: y-destrucción | fr: et-douleur | de: [וחבל] Mic 2:10

חֲבָל H2257 N-msd (3×)

hurt, injury, damage; Aramaic

An Aramaic noun denoting harm or damage. It appears when opponents warn that a rebuilt Jerusalem will cause 'damage' to royal revenue (Ezra 4:22), and in Daniel's accounts of protection from harm: the men in the fiery furnace have 'no hurt' (Dan 3:25) and Daniel emerges from the lions' den 'without injury' (Dan 6:23). The Spanish daño, herida and French dommage reflect both physical and financial harm. This is administrative and narrative language: the absence or threat of damage.

(3×) Denotes harm or damage in three contexts: fiscal damage to the king (Ezra 4:22), absence of physical harm in the furnace (Dan 3:25), and deliverance from injury in the lions' den (Dan 6:23). The multilingual glosses (damage, hurt, daño, dommage) span financial and somatic domains. The word evokes threat and deliverance: what could harm but does not, or what will harm if unchecked. CALAMITY AND DISASTER

en: and-hurt, damage, harm | es: el-daño, herida, y-daño | fr: [חבלא], dommage, et-dommage | de: [וחבל], [חבל], [חבלא] Ezra 4:22; Dan 3:25; Dan 6:23

חֶבֶל H2258a N-ms (3×)

pledge, security (as binding debt)

A noun denoting a pledge taken as security for a loan. It appears in Ezekiel's descriptions of righteous and wicked conduct: the righteous 'restores the pledge' (Ezek 18:16; 33:15), while the wicked keeps it (Ezek 18:12). The word derives from the verb 'to bind' and reflects the legal-economic practice of holding collateral. The Spanish prenda and French/German cognates all denote the object held as surety. This is covenant and commerce language: what binds debtor to creditor, and what justice demands be returned.

(3×) Refers to the pledge or collateral taken as security in three Ezekiel contexts (Ezek 18:12, 16; 33:15). The righteous restore it; the wicked do not. Multilingual glosses (pledge, prenda) uniformly reflect the legal-economic practice of holding security. The word evokes the ethical demands of lending: not exploiting the vulnerable by keeping what must be returned. PLEDGES AND SECURITY

en: pledge | es: Prenda, prenda | fr: [חבל] | de: [חבל] Ezek 18:12; Ezek 18:16; Ezek 33:15

חֲבֻלָה H2258b N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

pledge, security taken for a loan

A legal term for an item taken as security for a debt, appearing in Ezekiel's description of the righteous person. The pledge represents both the creditor's claim and the debtor's vulnerability—hence the Torah's laws protecting the poor from harsh pledging practices. Ezekiel 18:7 describes the righteous as one who 'restores the pledge,' showing mercy beyond strict legal requirement. Cross-linguistic evidence from Spanish 'prenda' and French 'gage' confirms this as a formal security held against debt.

(1×) An object taken as security or collateral for a loan. Ezekiel 18:7 marks the restoration of such pledges as characteristic of righteousness—the just person returns what was taken as guarantee, showing mercy to the debtor. This practice reflects Torah's concern for the vulnerable, where even legitimate pledges must not become instruments of oppression. PLEDGES AND SECURITY

en: pledge-his | es: su-prenda | fr: gage | de: [חבלתו] Ezek 18:7

חֹבֵל H2259 Art / N-ms (5×)

sailor, pilot, helmsman; one who handles ropes on a ship

Derived from the noun for 'rope' (chevel), this word literally means 'rope-puller' and designates a sailor or ship's pilot. It appears exclusively in maritime contexts: Ezekiel's lament over Tyre names its experienced pilots and mariners (Ezek 27:8, 27-29), while in Jonah 1:6 the 'chief of the pilots' (rav ha-chovel) is the ship's captain who rouses the sleeping prophet. German 'Schiffer' and Spanish 'pilotos/remeros' reflect the dual sense of general sailor and skilled navigator.

(5×) A sailor or ship's pilot, etymologically a 'rope-handler,' denoting one skilled in maritime operations. In Ezek 27:8, 27-29 the term describes Tyre's professional mariners; in Jonah 1:6 the compound 'rav ha-chovel' designates the captain. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'pilotos,' German 'Schiffer') consistently points to experienced seafarers rather than mere passengers. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12207 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-your-pilots, pilots-of-, the-sailors | es: los-pilotos-de, los-remeros, tus-pilotos | fr: et-marin, marin | de: Schiffer, [וחבליך], [חבל] Ezek 27:8; Ezek 27:27; Ezek 27:28; Ezek 27:29; Jonah 1:6

חֵבֶל H2260 N-ms (1×)

mast (of a ship), literally 'that which is corded/roped in place'

A nautical term for a ship's mast, appearing in Proverbs' vivid depiction of drunkenness. The drunkard is compared to one lying at the top of the mast—the most precarious position on a vessel, where every motion is amplified. The etymology suggests a mast as 'that which is roped or corded in place,' derived from the common word for rope. This single biblical attestation creates an unforgettable image of disorientation and danger.

(1×) The mast of a ship, specifically its uppermost point. Proverbs 23:34 uses this in a striking simile: the drunkard is like one sleeping 'at the top of a mast'—the most unstable, dangerous position imaginable. The comparison with 'lying in the heart of the sea' creates parallel images of utter disorientation. The mast, held by ropes, becomes a symbol of precarious height. SHIP SEA VESSEL en: a-mast | es: un-mástil | fr: חבל | de: [חבל] Prov 23:34

חֲבַצֶּלֶת H2261 N-fsc (2×)

crocus, meadow-saffron, or narcissus; a spring flower symbolizing beauty and flourishing

This term refers to a flowering plant, most likely the meadow saffron (colchicum autumnale) or crocus, though some suggest narcissus. In Song of Songs 2:1, the Shulammite bride identifies herself as 'a rose of Sharon, a lily of the valleys'—the first element being 'habatzelet.' In Isaiah 35:1, the desert will 'blossom like the crocus' in the eschatological renewal, an image of barren places bursting into bloom. Syriac and Assyrian cognates refer to marsh plants or flowers, and the term evokes springtime beauty and sudden, vibrant growth.

(2×) A noun for a beautiful flowering plant, likely a crocus or meadow saffron, used symbolically for loveliness and fertility. The Song of Songs employs it in the bride's self-description—she is as delicate and lovely as the wildflowers of Sharon's plain. Isaiah turns it into an eschatological metaphor: the wasteland will bloom abundantly, like the crocus in springtime, when Yahweh restores creation. The plant's brief, brilliant flowering makes it a natural emblem for transformation and hope. Botanical uncertainties aside, the poetic force is clear: sudden, radiant beauty. FLOWERS AND BLOSSOMS

en: and-blossom, rose-of | es: como-la-rosa, narciso | fr: [כחבצלת], le-narcisse | de: [חבצלת], [כחבצלת] Song 2:1; Isa 35:1

חֲבַצִּנְיָה H2262 N-proper-ms (1×)

Habazziniah, a Rechabite and grandfather of Jaazaniah

A personal name appearing in Jeremiah's account of the Rechabites, that faithful clan who refused wine in obedience to their ancestor Jonadab. Habazziniah was the grandfather of Jaazaniah, whom Jeremiah brought to the temple to test the Rechabites' loyalty. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to hide' or 'to treasure,' though this remains uncertain. He stands in the genealogy of those whose covenant faithfulness shamed unfaithful Judah.

(1×) Personal name of a Rechabite ancestor mentioned in Jeremiah 35:3. He is identified as the grandfather of Jaazaniah, one of the Rechabite leaders who demonstrated unwavering obedience to ancestral commands by refusing wine when tested by the prophet.

The name appears in a narrative highlighting covenant faithfulness —these descendants kept their forefather's charge better than Israel kept God's law. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chavatsiniah | es: Javatsinyah | fr: [חבצניה] | de: [חבצניה] Jer 35:3

חָבַק H2263 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (13×)

To clasp or embrace; used of greeting someone warmly in one's arms, or of folding the hands in idleness.

A verb expressing the physical act of wrapping one's arms around another person, primarily in contexts of affectionate greeting and reunion. Jacob embraces Laban (Gen 29:13), Esau embraces Jacob (Gen 33:4), and the aged Israel embraces Joseph's sons (Gen 48:10). The Piel intensive conveys warmth and deliberateness. A distinct idiomatic use appears in Ecclesiastes 4:5, where the fool 'folds his hands' in laziness, a metaphor attested across wisdom literature. Spanish 'abrazar' and Hindi 'gale lagaanaa' consistently render the interpersonal embrace, while the idleness idiom receives specialized vocabulary like English 'folding' and Spanish 'cruza.'

1. embrace a person (12×) The primary sense of clasping a person in one's arms as an expression of greeting, love, or reunion. The Piel stem intensifies the action in the patriarchal narratives: Laban runs to embrace Jacob (Gen 29:13), Esau falls on Jacob's neck and embraces him (Gen 33:4), and Israel embraces Ephraim and Manasseh (Gen 48:10). The Elisha cycle uses the Qal participle for the Shunammite woman holding her promised son (2 Kgs 4:16). Proverbs 5:20 warns against embracing a foreign woman, and Song of Songs 2:6 and 8:3 use it for romantic embrace. Multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform: Spanish 'abrazar,' French 'embrasser,' and German 'umarmte' all denote the same warm physical gesture. EMBRACE CLASP

en: and-embrace, and-embraced, and-he-embraced-him | es: abrazan, abrazan-, abrazando | fr: [חבקו], de-embrasser, embracing | de: embracing, umarmte, und-er-umarmte Gen 29:13; Gen 33:4; Gen 48:10; 2Kgs 4:16; Job 24:8

2. fold or clasp hands (1×) A specialized idiomatic usage in Ecclesiastes 4:5 where the fool 'clasps his own hands,' meaning he folds his arms and does nothing, consuming his own flesh through laziness. The translation evidence diverges sharply from sense 1: English renders 'folding' rather than 'embracing,' and Spanish uses 'cruza' (crosses) rather than 'abraza.' French and German, interestingly, retain the embrace vocabulary ('embrasser,' 'umarmte'), perhaps reflecting the literal morphology even where the idiom is figurative. This sense connects to the wisdom tradition's recurring motif of the sluggard (cf. Prov 6:10; 24:33). EMBRACE CLASP

en: folding | es: cruza | fr: embrasser | de: umarmte Eccl 4:5

חִבֻּק H2264 N-msc (2×)

folding, clasping; specifically the folding of hands in idleness or sleep

This noun describes the action of folding or clasping the hands, appearing twice in Proverbs (6:10; 24:33) in the phrase 'a little folding of the hands to sleep.' The context is a warning against laziness—those who fold their hands in slumber will be overtaken by poverty. The term captures the posture of rest or inactivity, hands drawn together rather than engaged in labor. It derives from the verb 'to embrace' or 'clasp,' here applied to the self-indulgent embrace of idleness.

(2×) A construct noun for the folding or clasping of hands, used in proverbial warnings against sloth. Proverbs repeatedly warns that 'a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to rest' will result in ruin arriving 'like a robber.' The image is vivid: the sluggard's hands, instead of working, are folded in repose. This physical posture becomes a moral emblem—self-embracing inactivity versus industrious engagement. The term makes laziness visible and embodied, turning an attitude into a gesture. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: folding-of | es: cruzar, cruzar-de | fr: חבק | de: [חבק] Prov 6:10; Prov 24:33

חֲבַקּוּק H2265 N-proper-ms (2×)

Habakkuk; the prophet whose oracle addresses theodicy and the Babylonian invasion

Habakkuk is the name of the prophet whose oracles form the eighth book of the Minor Prophets. His name appears in Habakkuk 1:1 and 3:1, framing his dialogue with Yahweh over the apparent triumph of the wicked. The name's etymology is uncertain; it may be related to an Assyrian plant name or an Arabic term for a garden plant. What is clear is the prophet's wrestling with divine justice: he questions why Yahweh tolerates evil and how he can use wicked Babylon to judge Judah. His theology culminates in the famous declaration, 'the righteous shall live by faith' (2:4).

(2×) The proper name of the prophet Habakkuk, whose book is structured as a theodicy—a defense of God's justice in the face of apparent injustice. His two 'burdens' (oracles) probe the problem of evil within Judah and the scandal of God's using a more wicked nation (Babylon) to punish his people. The name's meaning remains obscure, though linguistic guesses abound. What endures is Habakkuk's legacy as a questioner who receives divine answers: the vision has an appointed time, the earth will be filled with God's glory, and faith is the path through perplexity. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chabaqquq, of-Chabaqquq | es: Habacuc, de-Habacuc | fr: Habacuc, pour-Habacuc | de: Habakuk, zu-Habakuk Hab 1:1; Hab 3:1

חָבַר H2266 V-Piel-Perf-3ms (29×)

To join, unite, bind together; of physical connection, political alliance, or casting magical spells and charms.

Chavar sits at a fascinating semantic crossroads where physical joining, social bonding, and occult binding all share a single root. At its most concrete, the word describes the joining of the tabernacle curtains edge to edge (Exod 26:3-11), a meaning preserved in the Aramaic cognate and reflected in Spanish unir and German anschliessen. But the same root extends into the political realm — kings 'join themselves' in alliance (2 Chr 20:35-37), and Hosea laments that Ephraim is 'joined to idols' (Hos 4:17). Most strikingly, in Deuteronomy 18:11 the root yields chover charavim, 'one who ties spells,' where the physical act of knotting cords becomes the metaphorical binding of a magical charm — a semantic link paralleled exactly by Akkadian ubburum, 'to bind by incantation.'

1. be joined or connected (11×) The basic state of being joined or connected — the Qal passive participle and Pual forms describing things already attached or united. The tabernacle curtains are 'joined one to another' (Exod 26:3); the ephod's shoulder pieces are 'joined at its two edges' (Exod 28:7). Spanish unido and French joignit both select attachment vocabulary, while the German renderings preserve the stative force. This is the resultative end-state of physical connection, found 11 times and concentrated in Exodus's tabernacle instructions. JOINING AND ALLIANCE

en: Joined, and-it-shall-be-joined, is-joined | es: (sea-unido), Unido, que-está-unida | fr: cela-était-joignit, et-cela—être-joignit, joignit | de: [(יחבר)], [חבור], [חברות] Exod 26:3; Exod 28:7; Exod 39:4

2. join or connect physically (8×) Active physical joining — the Piel stem meaning to connect, attach, or fasten objects together by deliberate action. Where sense 1 describes the state of being joined, this sense captures the act of joining: Moses 'joined' the curtains (Exod 36:10), and the craftsmen are commanded 'you shall join' them (Exod 26:6, 9, 11). Spanish unir and French joindre consistently distinguish the active process from the resultative state, and German anschliessen captures the deliberate fastening. Eight occurrences, all in the tabernacle construction narrative. CLINGING AND JOINING

en: and-he-joined, and-you-shall-join, he-joined | es: Y-unirás, Y-unió, para-unir | fr: et-il-joignit, et-tu—joindre, il-joignit | de: er-schloss-sich-an, und-du-soll-sich-anschliessen, und-er-schloss-sich-an Exod 26:6; Exod 26:9; Exod 26:11; Exod 36:10

3. form alliance or associate (7×) Forming alliances or partnerships — the Hitpael reflexive and certain Qal/Piel uses with personal objects, meaning to ally oneself with another or join forces. The five kings 'came as allies' to the Valley of Siddim (Gen 14:3); Jehoshaphat 'allied himself' with Ahaziah of Israel in a disastrous naval venture

(2 Chr 20:35-37); the psalmist asks whether a corrupt throne can 'be allied' with God (Ps 94:20). Spanish aliarse and the reflexive force in the Hitpael both foreground the voluntary, mutual character of the bond. Seven occurrences spanning Genesis through Psalms. JOINING AND ALLIANCE

en: alliance, allied-himself, and-he-joined-him | es: Acaso-se-aliará-contigo, Por-haberte-aliado, Y-se-asoció | fr: [אתחבר], [ויחברהו], [כהתחברך] | de: [אתחבר], [התחברות], [ויחברהו] Gen 14:3; 2Chr 20:35; 2Chr 20:36; 2Chr 20:37; Ps 94:20

4. cast spells or bind charms (2×) Casting spells or binding magical charms — the Qal participle chover in the specific phrase chover charavim, 'one who binds bindings,' i.e., a spell-caster. In Deuteronomy 18:11 it appears in the catalog of forbidden occult practices, and in Psalm 58:5 the 'binder of charms' is likened to a snake charmer whose incantations fall on deaf ears. The Akkadian cognate ubburum ('to bind by incantation') confirms that the metaphor of physical knotting-as-magical-binding is ancient and Semitic-wide. Spanish encantador and the two-occurrence pattern mark this as a specialized but well-attested sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: or-one-binding, the-binder-of | es: encantador-de, o-encantador-de | fr: joindre, ou-un-binding | de: der-binder-von, oder-eins-binding Deut 18:11; Ps 58:5

5. compose or marshal words (1×) Composing or marshaling words in speech — a single Hifil cohortative occurrence in Job 16:4, where Job imagines stringing together arguments against his friends: 'I could join words against you.' The metaphor extends the physical 'binding together' into rhetorical composition. Spanish uniria ('I would join') preserves the root metaphor, while the Hifil causative form signals that the speaker is actively assembling language as one would assemble curtain panels. A rare but vivid extension of the root into the domain of discourse. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: I-would-join-words | es: uniría | fr: joindre | de: [אחבירה] Job 16:4

חֶבֶר H2267 N-mpc / 2fs (7×)

A company or association of people; also a magical spell or enchantment—a binding charm prohibited in Deuteronomic law.

This noun carries two distinct semantic loads rooted in the idea of 'binding together.' In its concrete social sense, it denotes a company, band, or association of people—whether the shared household of Proverbs 21:9 and 25:24, or the marauding band of priests in Hosea 6:9. In its magical sense, it refers to a spell or enchantment, a charm that 'binds' supernatural forces. Deuteronomy 18:11 prohibits the casting of such spells alongside necromancy and divination. Isaiah 47:9 and 47:12 mock Babylon's reliance on her abundant spells, which cannot save her from divine judgment.

1. spell, enchantment, charm (4×) A magical spell, enchantment, or incantation—a charm that binds or joins supernatural forces to achieve a desired effect. Deuteronomy 18:11 places the 'caster of a chever' alongside necromancers and mediums in a comprehensive prohibition of occult practices. Psalm 58:5 describes the deaf cobra that will not heed the voice of enchanters, no matter how skilled the binding-spell. Isaiah 47:9 and 47:12 use the plural to describe Babylon's vast repertoire of sorceries. Spanish 'encantamiento/encantamientos' and English 'spell/charm' consistently render this magical sense. SPELL ENCHANTMENT

en: binding-spell, in-your-spells, spells | es: con-tus-encantamientos, encantamiento, encantamientos | fr: [בחבריך], [חבריך], binding-spell | de: [בחבריך], [חבריך], binding-spell Deut 18:11; Ps 58:5; Isa 47:9; Isa 47:12

2. association, company (3×) A company, association, or fellowship of people bound together by shared purpose or dwelling. In Proverbs 21:9 and 25:24 (identical proverbs), 'a house of association' (beth chaver) means a house shared in common—better to live on a rooftop corner than share a house with a quarrelsome spouse. In Hosea 6:9, it describes a marauding band of priests who ambush travelers on the road to Shechem. Spanish 'compania' and French 'societe' capture the communal-bond sense well. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: band-of, shared, sharing | es: compartida, compañerismo, compañía-de | fr: enchantement, société | de: [חבר] Prov 21:9; Prov 25:24; Hos 6:9

חֹבֶר H2268 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (11×)

Heber/Cheber — personal name meaning 'associate, companion'; borne by several Israelite men

The proper name חֵבֶר (Chever) derives from the root חבר ('to join, associate') and is borne by at least four distinct individuals in Scripture. The most prominent is Heber the Kenite, husband of Jael, who had separated from the other Kenites and pitched his tent near Kedesh (Judg 4:11, 17). It was into his tent that Sisera fled, only to be killed by Jael (Judg 4:21; 5:24). Other bearers include a grandson of Asher listed in Jacob's family (Gen 46:17; Num 26:45), a Judahite connected to Soco (1 Chr 4:18), and a Benjaminite in the genealogy of Elpaal (1 Chr 8:17). Spanish and English both transliterate as 'Heber.'

Heber / Cheber (personal name) (11×) Heber the Kenite, husband of Jael, a descendant of Moses' father-in-law Hobab. He had separated from the main Kenite group and camped near Kedesh-naphtali (Judg 4:11, 17). His political neutrality between Jabin of Hazor and Israel sets the dramatic stage for Jael's decisive act (Judg 4:21; 5:24). Spanish 'Heber,' French 'Héber.' TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: Chever, Heber, and-Chever | es: Jeber, Jever, Jéber | fr: Chever, Heber, [וחבר] | de: Cheber, Chever, [וחבר] Gen 46:17; Num 26:45; Judg 4:11; Judg 4:17

חֶבֶר H2269 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3ms (3×)

companion, fellow; Aramaic

An Aramaic noun for comrade or associate. It appears in Daniel's account of the dream crisis: the decree to kill 'Daniel and his companions' (Dan 2:13), and Daniel's plea for 'mercy concerning this mystery for Daniel and his companions' (Dan 2:17, 18). The Spanish sus compañeros and French/German cognates all denote social and professional peers. This is the language of solidarity: those who share Daniel's fate and faith, standing together before the king's decree.

(3×) Refers to Daniel's companions (Hananiah, Mishael, Azariah) in three contexts of crisis and prayer (Dan 2:13, 17, 18). The multilingual glosses (companions, compañeros, חבריהי) uniformly reflect association and fellowship. The word evokes shared risk and mutual support: those bound together by circumstance and covenant. COMPANION ASSOCIATE

en: and-his-companions, his-companions | es: sus-compañeros, y-a-sus-compañeros, y-sus-compañeros | fr: [וחבריהי], [חבריהי] | de: [וחבריהי], [חבריהי] Dan 2:13; Dan 2:17; Dan 2:18

חָבֵר H2270 Adj-ms (15×)

Companion, associate; as adjective, united or joined together — one bound in fellowship, rank, or purpose.

Derived from the root meaning 'to join' or 'to bind together,' this word describes someone who is a companion, fellow, or associate — a person linked by shared calling, rank, or covenant purpose. In Psalm 45:7 it distinguishes the anointed king from his royal peers; in Song of Songs 1:7 the beloved asks where her shepherd feeds among his fellow shepherds. Spanish translations consistently render it 'compañero' while French uses 'ami,' both capturing the warmth of partnership. In Judges 20:11, the lone adjectival occurrence describes all Israel gathered 'united as one man,' preserving the root's binding force.

1. companion, associate (14×) A fellow, companion, or associate — someone joined by shared rank, vocation, or covenant relationship. Psalm 45:7 sets the king above his 'companions' (חֲבֵרֶיךָ), rendered 'compañeros' in Spanish and 'ami' in French, emphasizing peers of equal standing. In Ecclesiastes 4:10 the word underlines the practical value of partnership: if one falls, his companion lifts him. Proverbs 28:24 uses it for the intimate bond that makes robbing one's parents akin to keeping company with a destroyer. COMPANION ASSOCIATE

en: [ketiv], a-companion, above-Your-companions | es: (sus-compañeros)., (sus-compañeros);, Compañero | fr: [וחברי], [חבריו], ami | de: [וחברי], [חבר], [חברו] Ps 45:7; Ps 119:63; Prov 28:24; Eccl 4:10; Song 1:7

2. united, joined together (1×) Used adjectively to describe people united or banded together as a single body. The sole occurrence in Judges 20:11 pictures all Israel assembled against Gibeah 'knit together as one man' (כְּאִישׁ אֶחָד חֲבֵרִים). Spanish 'unidos' and English 'united' both capture the cohesive force of this sense, which retains the verbal root's core meaning of binding or joining. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: united | es: unidos | fr: united | de: united Judg 20:11

חַבָּר H2271 N-mp (1×)

trading partners, associates in a commercial venture (fishermen or merchants)

A term for business partners or associates in a trade, appearing in God's challenge to Job about the great sea-creature. The question 'Will traders bargain over it?' expects a negative answer—this beast is beyond human commercial enterprise. The word denotes those who share in a trade or calling, whether fishermen dividing a catch or merchants in partnership. Spanish 'compañeros' (companions) and the transliteration emphasis in other languages suggest close working relationships.

(1×) Partners in trade or a commercial venture. Job 40:30 (41:6 in English) asks rhetorically whether 'trading partners' will make bargains over Leviathan—will fishermen divide this creature among themselves for sale? The implied answer is no; this beast transcends human commerce. The term suggests cooperative enterprise, those who join together in a common economic pursuit. MERCHANTS AND TRADERS

en: traders | es: compañeros | fr: חברים | de: [חברים] Job 41:6

חַבַּרְבֻּרָה H2272 N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

spots, stripes (distinctive markings on an animal's hide)

A term for the distinctive spots or stripes on an animal, appearing only in Jeremiah's rhetorical question about the impossibility of change. Just as a leopard cannot change its spots, neither can those accustomed to evil learn to do good. The plural form suggests the multiple, characteristic markings that define the creature's appearance. The comparison with a Cushite's skin creates a parallel: both are inherent, unchangeable features.

(1×) The spots or distinctive markings on a leopard's hide. Jeremiah 13:23 uses this in a famous rhetorical question: 'Can the leopard change his spots?' The answer is no—these markings are intrinsic to the animal's nature. The term denotes the pattern of dark marks that distinguish the creature, used metaphorically for ingrained moral character that resists transformation apart from divine intervention. SPOTTED SPECKLED en: his-spots | es: manchas-sus | fr: [חברברתיו] | de: [חברברתיו] Jer 13:23

חַבְרָה H2273 N-fsc / 3fs (1×)

fellow, companion (especially of the same kind or rank)

An Aramaic term for a companion or fellow of the same kind, appearing in Daniel's vision of the fourth beast's horns. One horn rises up, distinct from 'its fellows'—the other horns that were its peers. The word emphasizes belonging to the same category or rank, making the distinction of the one horn all the more striking. This royal Aramaic term appears in apocalyptic literature where cosmic powers are personified and compared.

(1×) A fellow or companion of the same type or rank. Daniel 7:20 describes one horn among 'its fellows'—other horns of similar kind. The term highlights both commonality (they are all horns) and the capacity for distinction (one rises above the rest). The Aramaic form appears in visionary literature where the relationships between symbolic elements matter as much as the elements themselves. COMPANION ASSOCIATE en: its-fellows | es: sus-compañeros | fr: compagne | de: [חברתה] Dan 7:20

חֶבְרָה H2274 Prep-l / N-fs (1×)

company, association (the abstract state of being in fellowship with others)

An abstract noun denoting the state of association or companionship with others, appearing in Job's accusation against the wicked. The ungodly person 'goes for company with evildoers'—deliberately seeks association with those who work iniquity. The term emphasizes not the companions themselves but the state of being in fellowship, the abstract relationship. Spanish 'para compañía' (for companionship) captures this sense of purposeful association.

(1×) The abstract state of companionship or association. Job 34:8 accuses the wicked of traveling 'for company with workers of iniquity'—deliberately choosing fellowship with those who do wrong. The term denotes not the persons but the relationship itself, the condition of being in association. Parallel with 'going with men of wickedness' confirms this as voluntary, chosen companionship rather than casual encounter. COMPANION ASSOCIATE en: in-company | es: para-compañía | fr: à-לחברה | de: [לחברה] Job 34:8

חֶבְרוֹן H2275a Conj-w / N-proper-fs (61×)

Chevron – Hebron, an ancient city in the Judean hill country with deep patriarchal associations

Chevron (Hebron, meaning 'association' or 'league') is one of the oldest continuously inhabited cities in the world, situated in the hill country of Judah about 19 miles south of Jerusalem. It holds patriarchal significance as the place where Abraham settled by the oaks of Mamre, purchased the cave of Machpelah for Sarah's burial (Gen 23), and where the patriarchs and matriarchs were interred. It later became David's first capital, where he reigned over Judah for seven and a half years before capturing Jerusalem (2 Sam 2:11; 5:5). Numbers 13:22 notes it was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt, underscoring its antiquity. Spanish Hebron, French Hebron, and German Hebron preserve the name with minor phonetic variation.

Hebron (city) (61×) The proper name of the ancient city in the Judean highlands, associated with Abraham's settlement at the oaks of Mamre (Gen 13:18), the burial cave of Machpelah (Gen 23), and David's first royal capital (2 Sam 2:1-4; 5:1-5). Its 61 occurrences span patriarchal narrative, conquest accounts (Josh 10:3-5), tribal allotments (Josh 14:13-14), and Davidic history. Cross-lingual evidence – Spanish Hebron, French Hebron/Chevron, German Hebron/Chevron – confirms a single toponymic identity with no polysemy. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Chevron, in-Hebron | es: en-Hebron, en-Hebrón, en-Hevrón | fr: [בחברון], dans-Chevron, dans-Hébron | de: Hebron, in-Chevron, in-Hebron Gen 13:18; Num 13:22; Josh 10:3; Josh 10:5; Josh 10:23

חֶבְרוֹן H2275b Prep-b / N-proper-fs (10×)

Hebron — personal name, son of Kohath and grandson of Levi; ancestor of a Levitical clan

This חֶבְרוֹן (Chevron) designates not the famous Judean city but a person: the third son of Kohath, grandson of Levi, and ancestor of the Hebronite clan (1 Chr 26:23). He appears in the Levitical genealogies alongside his brothers Amram, Izhar, and Uzziel (Exod 6:18; Num 3:19; 1 Chr 6:2, 18; 23:12, 19). His descendants, the Hebronites, were assigned administrative duties west of the Jordan under David (1 Chr 26:30-32). The personal name is identical in form to the city name, requiring context to disambiguate. Spanish 'Hebrón' and English 'Hebron' transliterate identically for both person and place.

Hebron (personal name) (10×) A Levitical personal name: son of Kohath, grandson of Levi, and eponymous ancestor of the Hebronite (חֶבְרוֹנִי) sub-clan within the Kohathites. Listed in genealogical registers at Exodus 6:18, Numbers 3:19, and 1 Chronicles 6:2, 18; 15:9; 23:12, 19. His clan numbered 2,700 heads of families and received oversight responsibilities in David's administration (1 Chr 26:30-32). Homonymous with the city of Hebron but contextually distinct through genealogical framing. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chevron, Hebron, and-Chevron | es: En-Hebron, Hebrón, Jebron | fr: Hebron, Hébron, dans-Hébron | de: Hebron, in-Hebron, und-Hebron Exod 6:18; Num 3:19; 2Sam 5:5; 1Chr 2:42; 1Chr 2:43

חֶבְרוֹנִי H2276 Art / N-proper-ms (6×)

Hebronite — a member of the Levitical clan descended from Hebron son of Kohath.

A gentilic adjective identifying members of the Levitical family descended from Hebron, a son of Kohath. Always used with the article as a collective noun, it appears exclusively in administrative and cultic contexts: the census of Levitical families (Num 3:27; 26:58) and David's organization of temple duties (1 Chr 26:23, 30, 31). The Hebronites were assigned responsibilities both within the sanctuary and in civil administration west and east of the Jordan.

Hebronite (gentilic) (6×) A gentilic adjective for the Levitical clan descended from Hebron son of Kohath. English 'Hebronite,' Spanish 'hebronita,' and French 'Hebronite' all reflect the clan designation. Appears in the Levitical census lists (Num 3:27; 26:58) and in David's administrative organization where Hebronites served as overseers for religious and civil matters on both sides of the Jordan (1 Chr 26:23, 30, 31). Always with the article as a collective noun identifying the family group. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Of-the-Chevronites, of-the-Chevronites, the-Hebronite | es: Para-el-hebronita, el-hebronita, los-hebronitas | fr: Hébronite, le-Hebronite | de: [לַחברוני], der-Hebronite Num 3:27; Num 26:58; 1Chr 26:23; 1Chr 26:30; 1Chr 26:31

חֶבְרִי H2277 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Heberite, a clan descended from Heber of the tribe of Asher

A gentile adjective denoting membership in the clan of Heber, son of Beriah, from the tribe of Asher. The term appears in the wilderness census as 'the family of the Heberites,' one of the subdivisions counted in Israel's tribal organization. As with other gentile forms, the definite article makes it collective: not an individual but the clan as a whole. This census formula preserved the tribal structure through which land inheritance and covenant identity were maintained.

(1×) Gentile designation for the clan descended from Heber of Asher. Numbers 26:45 lists 'the family of the Heberites' in the census taken before entering Canaan. The use of the collective article indicates the entire clan group, not individual members. These genealogical markers ensured each family's place in Israel's covenant structure and land distribution. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Heberite | es: los-heberitas | fr: le-Heberite | de: der-Heberite Num 26:45

חֲבֶרֶת H2278 N-fsc / 2ms (1×)

consort, companion-wife (emphasizing covenant partnership in marriage)

A term for a wife emphasizing her role as companion and covenant partner, appearing in Malachi's rebuke of faithless husbands. The prophet calls the wife 'your companion' parallel to 'the wife of your covenant,' highlighting marriage as partnership, not merely legal arrangement. The root connects to association and fellowship, making this a warm term for the intimate companionship of marriage. Malachi's usage underscores the relational betrayal of divorce, not just the legal breach.

(1×) A wife viewed as companion and covenant partner. Malachi 2:14 rebukes those who deal treacherously with 'your companion, the wife of your covenant.' The term emphasizes the relational dimension of marriage—she is your partner, your associate in life—making betrayal not just covenant-breaking but friendship-breaking. Spanish 'compañera' and French 'compagne' both carry this sense of intimate partnership. WOMAN AND WIFE

en: your-companion | es: compañera-tuya | fr: compagne | de: [חברתך] Mal 2:14

חֹבֶרֶת H2279 Art / N-fs (4×)

A coupling or joining piece; the edge where two sets of tabernacle curtains are fastened together.

A technical term from the tabernacle construction passages, referring to the point or piece where curtain sections are joined together. It appears exclusively in Exodus 26 and 36, describing how the two halves of the tabernacle's covering were coupled at their edges using loops and clasps. The multilingual glosses capture its functional sense well: English 'the joining,' Spanish 'la que une' (that which unites), French 'le joignant.' The word derives from the root meaning 'to join or bind together,' and its specialized usage makes it a window into the precise craftsmanship vocabulary of the Pentateuchal sanctuary texts.

(4×) A coupling or joining piece—the seam-edge where two sets of tabernacle curtains are fastened to each other by means of loops and clasps. All four occurrences fall within the tabernacle construction instructions (Exod 26:4, 10; 36:17), describing the technical process of uniting curtain panels into a complete covering. The Spanish gloss 'la que une' (that which unites) and English 'the joining' both highlight the connective function. The word is a feminine participial form from the root חבר ('to join, bind'), used here as a concrete noun for the junction itself. CLINGING AND JOINING

en: in-the-set, the-joining | es: en-la-unión, la-que-une | fr: dans-le-placer, le-joignant | de: der-joining, in-der-setzen Exod 26:4; Exod 26:10; Exod 36:17

חָבַשׁ H2280 V-Qal-Imperf.Cohort-1cs (33×)

To bind, bind up, saddle; of bandaging wounds, saddling animals, wrapping cloth, and restraining or governing.

Chavash is one of those earthy Hebrew verbs whose concrete physical action — tying something securely onto something else — branches into surprisingly diverse applications. Its most frequent biblical use is saddling a donkey, the mundane but essential act of strapping riding gear onto a beast of burden before a journey. Abraham saddles his donkey before the binding of Isaac (Gen 22:3); Balaam saddles his before encountering the angel. But the same verb describes the compassionate act of binding up wounds — God 'binds up the brokenhearted' (Isa 61:1) and 'heals the wounds' of his people (Ps 147:3). The multilingual translations reveal the semantic spread clearly: Spanish ensillar ('to saddle') versus vendar ('to bandage') versus atar ('to bind'), each a distinct word for what Hebrew covers with one root. The verb's rarest extensions — damming a river, governing a people — show how 'binding' could metaphorically mean 'bringing under control.'

1. saddle an animal (13×) To saddle a donkey or other riding animal — the most frequent sense at 13 occurrences, spanning the entire narrative tradition. Abraham saddles his donkey for the Moriah journey (Gen 22:3), Balaam for his fateful ride (Num 22:21), the Levite for his tragic journey to Gibeah (Judg 19:10), Mephibosheth's servant Ziba saddles donkeys laden with provisions (2 Sam 16:1), and Ahithophel saddles his donkey for his final journey home (2 Sam 17:23). Spanish ensillar and enalbardar are dedicated saddling terms, while German and French both use saddle/saddled, confirming this as a lexicalized technical sense entirely distinct from wound-binding. The verb here means strapping equipment tightly onto an animal's back — a specific subtype of 'binding.' DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: I-will-saddle, and-he-saddled, and-he-saddled- | es: Y-ensilló, aparejados, enalbardad | fr: et-elle-saddled, et-il-saddled, et-il-saddled- | de: ich-wird-saddle, saddle-, saddled Gen 22:3; Num 22:21; Judg 19:10; 2Sam 16:1; 2Sam 17:23

2. bind up wounds (12×) To bind up wounds, bandage injuries, or heal brokenness — 12 occurrences, spanning literal medical care and prophetic metaphor. Job 5:18 declares God 'wounds but also binds up'; Psalm 147:3 celebrates God as the one who 'binds up the brokenhearted'; Isaiah 1:6 laments wounds 'not bound up'; and Hosea 6:1 trusts that God 'will bind us up.' The priestly investiture in Exodus 29:9 may also belong here (binding turbans on Aaron's sons). Spanish vendar ('to bandage') and French bander/panser consistently select medical vocabulary, while the theological usage transforms physical healing into a metaphor for national and spiritual restoration. Ezekiel 34:4 indicts Israel's shepherds for failing to 'bind up the injured.' ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: I-will-bind-up, and-He-will-bind-us, and-binding-up | es: fue-vendado, para-vendar, para-vendarlo | fr: [חבש], [חבשו], [לחבש] | de: [אחבש], [ויחבש], [ויחבשנו] Exod 29:9; Job 5:18; Ps 147:3; Isa 1:6; Isa 3:7

3. bind or tie (4×) To bind, tie, or fasten in a general sense — 4 occurrences covering miscellaneous binding actions. In Leviticus 8:13, Moses binds headbands on Aaron's sons during priestly installation. Job 40:13 commands binding faces in the dust (humiliation). Ezekiel 24:17 instructs the prophet not to bind on his turban (mourning prohibition), and Ezekiel 27:24 describes Tyre's merchants binding cords. Spanish atar ('to tie') and French lier ('to bind') both use generic fastening vocabulary, marking this as the undifferentiated physical root sense from which the specialized saddling and bandaging senses developed. BINDING AND TYING en: and-bound, bind, bound | es: ata, atadas, y-ató | fr: bander, et-lia, lier | de: [חבוש], [חבש], [חבשים] Lev 8:13; Job 40:13; Ezek 24:17; Ezek 27:24

4. wrap or swathe (2×) To wrap or swathe with cloth — 2 occurrences where the emphasis is on enveloping rather than mere tying. In Ezekiel 16:10, God tenderly reminisces about wrapping infant Jerusalem in fine linen; in Jonah 2:5, seaweed 'was wrapped' around the prophet's head in the depths of the sea. Spanish ceñir ('to gird/wrap') and envolver ('to envelop') both capture the encircling motion, while French lier is more generic. The wrapping sense is close to sense 3 but the emphasis on complete enclosure or swaddling distinguishes it — these are not knots but enveloping layers. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-I-wrapped-you, was-wrapped | es: envuelta, y-te-ceñí | fr: et-lier, lier | de: [ואחבשך], [חבוש] Ezek 16:10; Jonah 2:5

5. (1×) To dam or restrain (water) — a single occurrence at Job 28:11, where the miner 'dams up' the sources of rivers to expose hidden treasures. Spanish detuvo ('he stopped/restrained') and English 'he dammed' both select restraint-of-flow vocabulary. The metaphorical leap from binding an object to blocking a watercourse is natural — the same physical action of securing and containing, applied to water rather than animals or wounds. This mining context is unique in the Hebrew Bible. BINDING BY VOW

en: he-dammed | es: detuvo | fr: bander | de: [חבש] Job 28:11

6. (1×) To govern or bring under control — a single occurrence at Job 34:17, in Elihu's rhetorical question: 'Shall one who hates justice govern?' Spanish gobernará ('will he govern') and English 'can he govern' both select political-authority vocabulary, making this the most abstract extension of the root. The semantic path from 'bind' to 'govern' runs through the concept of restraint and control — a ruler 'binds' a people together under authority, just as one binds a load onto a donkey or binds a wound closed. The rarity of this sense (hapax in this meaning) suggests it was a living metaphor rather than a lexicalized political term. RULING AND REIGNING

en: can-He-govern | es: gobernará | fr: bander | de: [יחבוש] Job 34:17

חֲבִתִּים H2281 Art / N-mp (1×)

flat cakes, bread-wafers (a specific type of baked offering)

A culinary term for flat cakes or bread-wafers, appearing in the list of temple responsibilities. The Chronicles text speaks of 'the work of the flat cakes,' suggesting a specialized skill or service in preparing these offerings. While the exact nature of these cakes remains uncertain, they were evidently a distinct category of baked goods in temple service. Spanish 'tortas' (cakes) confirms the general category of flat, baked items.

(1×) Flat cakes or bread-wafers used in temple service. 1 Chronicles 9:31 assigns responsibility for 'the work of the flat cakes' to a Levite named Mattithiah, suggesting these required special preparation or skill. The term denotes a specific form of baked offering, distinguished from other bread types. The definite article and specialized context indicate these were well-known items in temple worship. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: the-flat-cakes | es: las-tortas | fr: [החבתים] | de: [החבתים] 1Chr 9:31

חַג H2282 N-ms (62×)

A sacred festival or pilgrim-feast, especially the three annual pilgrimage celebrations; by metonymy, the festal sacrifice itself.

In ancient Israel, the חַג was the joyous pilgrim-feast par excellence – the kind of celebration that required traveling to a sacred site. It most often designates the three great annual festivals: Unleavened Bread, Weeks, and Tabernacles (Exod 23:14-17). The word resonates with the Arabic ḥajj (hajj, pilgrimage), underscoring the physical journey as central to the concept. In one striking instance (Ps 118:27), the term shifts from the celebration to the sacrificial victim bound at the altar, a metonymic move from feast to offering that many translations render distinctly.

1. feast, festival, pilgrim-feast (61×) The primary sense designating a sacred festival or pilgrim-feast, especially the three annual pilgrimage festivals commanded in the Torah (Exod 23:14-17; Deut 16:14). Spanish 'fiesta,' French 'fête,' and German 'Fest' all converge on the celebratory dimension, while the Arabic cognate ḥajj preserves the original pilgrimage nuance. This covers 61 of 62 occurrences, including feasts to YHWH, idolatrous celebrations (Exod 32:5), and prophetic warnings against hollow festivals (Amos 5:21). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Feast-of, a-feast, a-festival | es: fiesta, fiesta-de, la-fiesta-de | fr: [חג], fête, fête-de | de: Fest, Fest-von, [חג] Exod 10:9; Exod 12:14; Exod 13:6; Exod 23:15; Exod 23:16

2. festal sacrifice, festival-offering (1×) A single metonymic use in Psalm 118:27 where the term shifts from the festival event to the festal sacrifice or festival-offering itself – the victim bound with cords to the horns of the altar. Spanish 'la fiesta' and German 'der Fest' still render it as 'festival,' but the context clearly requires the concrete offering rather than the abstract celebration, a recognized semantic extension in Semitic languages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-festival-sacrifice | es: la-fiesta | fr: fête | de: der-Fest Ps 118:27

חֲגָוָא H2283 Prep-l / N-fs (1×)

reeling, terror (the state of staggering or being overcome with fear)

A rare term denoting reeling or the state of being overwhelmed with terror, appearing in Isaiah's oracle against Egypt. Judah will become to Egypt 'a reeling'—a source of terror so profound it causes staggering like drunkenness. The Aramaic loan-word may connect to festival excitement or the circular motion of reeling. Isaiah's image is powerful: the mere mention of Judah's land will make Egypt tremble and reel in fear.

(1×) A state of reeling or staggering terror. Isaiah 19:17 prophesies that Judah will become to Egypt 'a reeling'—the land that once enslaved Israel will now tremble at her name. The parallel verb 'be in dread' confirms this as terror-induced instability. The term may derive from circular motion or festival excitement, here applied metaphorically to the disorientation of overwhelming fear. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-terror | es: como-terror | fr: [לחגא] | de: [לחגא] Isa 19:17

חָגָב H2284 Prep-k (5×)

locust, grasshopper; a small non-flying insect species used as a figure of insignificance

One of several Hebrew terms for locust-type insects, this word likely denotes a smaller, non-flying species permitted as food in the Levitical dietary laws (Lev 11:22). Its most memorable use is the Israelite spies' self-deprecating report: 'We were like grasshoppers in our own sight' (Num 13:33). Isaiah employs the same image cosmically – earth's inhabitants are like grasshoppers before God (Isa 40:22). Spanish uses both 'langosta' (locust) and 'saltamontes' (grasshopper), reflecting the term's range between pest and small creature.

(5×) A small locust or grasshopper, probably a non-flying species listed among clean insects in Lev 11:22. Frequently used figuratively for insignificance or smallness, as in the spies' lament at Num 13:33 and God's cosmic perspective in Isa 40:22. Spanish alternates between 'langosta' and 'saltamontes,' suggesting the creature sits between a true locust and a common grasshopper. In 2 Chr 7:13 it functions as an instrument of divine agricultural judgment. WILDERNESS AND DESERT en: are-like-grasshoppers, like-grasshoppers, the-grasshopper | es: como-lan-

gostas, el-saltamontes, la-langosta | fr: [חגב], [כחגבים], comme-grasshoppers | de: [החגב], [חגב], [כחגבים] Lev 11:22; Num 13:33; 2Chr 7:13; Eccl 12:5; Isa 40:22

חָגָב H2285 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hagab, head of a family of temple servants who returned from Babylonian exile

A personal name appearing in the list of returning exiles, specifically among the temple servants (Nethinim) who came back with Zerubbabel. Hagab led a family of those who served the Levites in practical temple tasks. The name possibly derives from the word for 'locust,' though this connection remains uncertain. These family heads preserved the continuity of temple service across the exile, ensuring worship could resume in Jerusalem.

(1×) Personal name of a family head among the returning temple servants. Ezra 2:46 lists Hagab among the Nethinim—those devoted to assisting Levites in temple work. His family's return from Babylon ensured continuity of the serving class that made worship possible. The genealogical record honored even those in humble temple roles, showing all service mattered for covenant community restoration. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chagav | es: Jagab | fr: [חגב] | de: [חגב] Ezra 2:46

חֲגָבָא H2286a N-proper-ms (1×)

Hagaba (variant form), head of a temple servant family who returned from exile

A personal name representing a variant spelling of Hagab, appearing in Nehemiah's parallel list of returning exiles. This orthographic variation (Hagaba vs. Hagab) likely represents the same family head, reflecting scribal or dialectical differences in transmission. The family belonged to the temple servants who returned to resume their duties in Second Temple worship. Such variants remind us that ancient texts were living documents, preserved and transmitted with minor variations that don't affect essential content.

(1×) Variant personal name, probably identical to Hagab (H2285). Nehemiah 7:48 lists Hagaba among returning temple servant families, parallel to Ezra 2:46's listing of Hagab. The orthographic difference (with final 'ah') may reflect pronunciation variants or scribal tradition. Either way, the family's return ensured temple service continuity, showing God's faithfulness to preserve not just priests but also those in supporting roles. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hagabah | es: Hagaba | fr: [חגבה] | de: [חגבה] Neh 7:48

חֲגָבָה H2286b N-proper-ms (1×)

Hagabah (another variant), head of a temple servant family in the return from exile

Yet another orthographic variant for the same temple servant family head, appearing in Ezra's list. This third spelling (Hagabah) alongside Hagab and Hagaba illustrates the fluidity of name transmission in ancient texts. All three likely refer to the same individual or family line among the Nethinim. The multiple attestations, despite spelling variations, underscore the importance of preserving these genealogies—even humble temple servants merited careful recording in Israel's restoration narrative.

(1×) Another variant spelling for the temple servant family head. Ezra 2:45 lists Hagabah, probably identical to Hagaba (Neh 7:48) and Hagab (Ezra 2:46). The varying forms show how names were transmitted orally and recorded with minor differences. What remains constant is the family's role among returning exiles who would serve in the rebuilt temple, ensuring worship's practical dimensions were maintained. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chagavah | es: Jagabá | fr: [חגבה] | de: [חגבה] Ezra 2:45

חָגַג H2287 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (16×)

To celebrate a pilgrim-feast or festival; by extension, to reel or stagger.

Rooted in the ancient Semitic concept of pilgrimage (cognate with Arabic hajj), this verb denotes the joyful observance of Israel's great pilgrim feasts. It appears in the prescriptions for Passover, Sukkot, and the three annual festivals (Exod 12:14; 23:14; Lev 23:39). French and German interestingly render it alongside the proper name 'Haggai' (Aggée/Haggai), reminding us that the prophet's name itself means 'my feast.' A single, vivid use in Psalm 107:27 describes sailors reeling and staggering in a storm, perhaps drawing on the whirling, circling dance motions associated with festive celebration.

1. celebrate a festival (15×) To observe, keep, or celebrate a religious festival or pilgrim-feast. Used of Israel's prescribed calendar observances, the word carries the Arabic cognate sense of 'making pilgrimage' (cf. hajj). Spanish consistently uses 'celebrar' while English offers 'feast.' Key passages include the three-feast command (Exod 23:14), the Passover institution (Exod 12:14), and the Sukkot observance (Lev 23:39; Deut 16:15). PASSOVER FESTIVAL

en: [obj], and-feasting, and-let-them-feast | es: Y-celebraréis, a-celebrar, celebrarás | fr: Aggée, célébrer, et-célébrer | de: Haggai, [וליחג], du-soll-celebrate Exod 5:1; Exod 12:14; Exod 23:14; Lev 23:39

2. reel, stagger (1×) To reel, stagger, or lurch unsteadily, describing the helpless motion of storm-tossed sailors in Psalm 107:27. Spanish captures this with 'temblaban' (they trembled). The connection to the festive sense may lie in the whirling, circling movement of dance associated with celebration, here transferred to the involuntary lurching of those at sea. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: they-reeled | es: Temblaban | fr: célébrer | de: sie-reeled Ps 107:27

חֲגָוִים H2288 Prep-b / N-mpc (3×)

clefts, crevices (of rock); places of concealment

A noun denoting narrow fissures or clefts in rock, serving as hiding places. The beloved is called 'my dove in the clefts of the rock' (Song 2:14), a tender image of intimacy and refuge. But the same imagery turns ominous in prophetic judgment: Edom 'dwelling in the clefts of the rock' (Jer 49:16; Obad 3) trusts in inaccessible strongholds—yet will be brought down. The Spanish hendiduras and French fentes emphasize the narrow, hidden character. Clefts offer safety—or the illusion of it.

(3×) Refers to rock clefts as places of refuge or concealment in three contexts: the beloved hidden in safety (Song 2:14) and Edom's arrogant trust in mountain strongholds (Jer 49:16; Obad 3). The multilingual glosses (clefts, hendiduras, fentes) uniformly denote narrow fissures. The word evokes both protective refuge and false security—depending on who seeks shelter. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-clefts-of, in-clefts-of-, in-the-clefts-of | es: en-hendiduras-de, en-las-hendiduras-de, hendiduras-de- | fr: [בחגוי], dans-les-fentes, dans-les-fentes-de- | de: [בחגוי], in-Spalten Song 2:14; Jer 49:16; Obad 1:3

חָגוֹר H2289 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

belts, girded; referring to waist-cloths or sashes worn as part of attire

This term refers to belts or sashes, specifically those girded around the waist. In Proverbs 31:24, the valorous woman makes 'sashes' (or belts) and sells them to merchants—an indication of her industrious skill. In Ezekiel 23:15, the Babylonian officers are described as 'girded with belts,' part of their impressive military or official attire that captivated Jerusalem's imagination. The word is adjectival or nominal, related to the verb 'to gird,' and denotes a garment accessory that both secures clothing and conveys status.

(2×) A term for belts or sashes worn around the waist, appearing in contexts of commerce and visual allure. The Proverbs 31 woman's production of sashes highlights her economic contribution and artisan skill—she manufactures luxury goods for trade. Ezekiel's use is more provocative: the Babylonian officials 'girded with belts' are part of an exotic, seductive image that led Jerusalem astray. The belt is both functional (securing a tunic) and symbolic (marking status, readiness, or allure). It belongs to the material culture of ancient dress and identity. BELT GIRDLE SASH

en: and-belts, girded-with- | es: ceñidos-de, y-cinturones | fr: ceinture, et- | de: [וחגור], [חגורי] Prov 31:24; Ezek 23:15

חֲגוֹר H2290a N-msc (2×)

belt, girdle; a sword-belt or sash, distinct from a waist-cloth

This noun denotes a belt or girdle, particularly one used to secure a sword, distinguished by scholars from the simpler waist-cloth ('ezor'). It appears in 1 Samuel 18:4, where Jonathan gives David his 'belt' along with his robe, armor, sword, and bow—a gesture of covenantal friendship and transferring of status. In 2 Samuel 20:8, Joab's 'sword was girded' (the text is difficult, possibly reading 'belt' instead of 'girded')—a prelude to his treacherous murder of Amasa. The term denotes a martial or aristocratic garment accessory, richly adorned and functional.

(2×) A masculine noun for a belt or sword-girdle, associated with military or high-status attire. Jonathan's gift of his belt to David is a symbolic act, transferring royal prerogatives and weapons—the belt holds the sword, making it an emblem of power and readiness for battle. Joab's belt (or girded sword) in 2 Samuel is part of a deadly scene; the text's difficulty reflects the violence to come. This belt is not everyday wear but a marker of the warrior class, adorned and essential to combat readiness. GIRDING AND DRESSING

en: belt-his, girded | es: ceñida, cinturón-suyo | fr: belt-son, ceignit | de: belt-sein, girded 1Sam 18:4; 2Sam 20:8

חֲגוֹרָה H2290b N-fs (5×)

belt, girdle, loin-covering; a garment piece worn around the waist for modesty or military readiness

Denoting a garment fastened around the waist, this noun spans from the primitive loin-coverings Adam and Eve fashioned from fig leaves (Gen 3:7) to the warrior's military belt (1 Kgs 2:5; 2 Kgs 3:21). Isaiah 3:24 lists the girdle among articles of feminine finery that will be stripped away in judgment. The range from emergency modesty to martial equipment is reflected in the multilingual evidence: German 'Schurze' (apron/loincloth) versus Spanish 'cinturon' (belt) and French 'ceinture.'

(5×) A belt, girdle, or loin-covering worn around the waist. In Gen 3:7 it refers to the improvised coverings of fig leaves, the most basic garment of modesty. As military equipment (2 Sam 18:11; 1 Kgs 2:5; 2 Kgs 3:21), it is the warrior's belt to which weapons are attached. French 'loincloths' and German 'Schurze' preserve the more primitive sense, while Spanish 'cinturon' reflects the martial usage. Isaiah 3:24 places it among luxury items of women's dress. BELT GIRDLE SASH

en: a-belt, and-a-belt, belt | es: cinto, cintos, cinturón | fr: [חגורה], et-un-belt, loincloths | de: Schurze, [חגורה], auf-sein-belt Gen 3:7; 2Sam 18:11; 1Kgs 2:5; 2Kgs 3:21; Isa 3:24

חַגִּי H2291 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (3×)

Haggi (personal name); the Haggite (gentilic)

A personal name and gentilic: Haggi, son of Gad (Gen 46:16), the eponymous ancestor of the Haggite clan (Num 26:15, twice). The name means 'festal' and appears in census and genealogical lists. Translations preserve the name (Spanish Hagui, Jagi; French Haggi). This is standard onomastic and gentilic usage: a personal name becomes the marker of tribal identity, tracing descent from Jacob through Gad to Haggi's family.

(3×) Functions as a personal name (Gen 46:16) and gentilic (Num 26:15, twice). The multilingual glosses (Haggi, Hagui, Haggite) reflect both the individual and the clan. The name evokes the broader pattern of Israelite genealogy: from patriarch to tribe to clan, each name a thread in the covenant lineage. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Haggi, the-Haggite, to-Haggi | es: de-Hagui, los-haguitas, y-Jagi | fr: et-Haggi, le-Haggite, à-Haggi | de: der-Haggite, und-Chaggi, zu-Haggi Gen 46:16; Num 26:15

חַגַּי H2292a N-proper-ms (9×)

Haggai: the post-exilic prophet whose oracles urged the rebuilding of the Jerusalem temple (520 BC).

Haggai, whose name means 'festal' or 'born on a feast day,' was a prophet active in the second year of the Persian king Darius (520 BC). His brief but pointed oracles, preserved in the two chapters bearing his name, challenged the returned exiles to stop neglecting the ruined temple and rebuild it. He is mentioned alongside Zechariah in Ezra 5:1 and 6:14 as one of the prophetic voices that spurred the community to complete the Second Temple. The Greek form of his name, Haggaios, is reflected in the Septuagint.

(9×) The personal name of the post-exilic prophet, derived from the Hebrew root for 'feast' or 'festival,' suggesting he may have been born on a holy day. Spanish renders it 'Hageo,' French 'Aggee' (following the Septuagint Haggaios), and German 'Haggai.' All nine occurrences appear in Haggai 1-2, where 'the word of YHWH came by the hand of Haggai the prophet' is a repeated formula (Hag 1:1, 3; 2:1, 10, 20). His partnership with Zechariah is noted in Ezra 5:1 and 6:14. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Haggai | es: Hageo | fr: Aggée | de: Haggai Hag 1:1; Hag 1:3; Hag 1:12; Hag 1:13; Hag 2:1

חַגַּי H2292b N-proper-ms (2×)

Haggai; the post-exilic prophet who urged temple rebuilding

This is the Aramaic form of the name Haggai, the prophet who, alongside Zechariah, called the returned exiles to resume construction of the temple. He appears in Ezra 5:1 and 6:14, where his prophetic ministry is credited with motivating Zerubbabel and Jeshua to complete the house of God. The name means 'festal' or 'my feast,' possibly indicating he was born on a festival day. His brief book contains four oracles delivered in 520 BCE, addressing discouragement and calling for prioritizing God's house over personal comfort.

(2×) The prophet Haggai as named in the Aramaic sections of Ezra. His ministry occurred in the early Persian period, sixteen years after the first exiles returned but with the temple still unfinished. Haggai's oracles diagnosed the problem (the people built their own houses while God's house lay in ruins) and promised blessing upon obedience. Ezra credits him and Zechariah with sparking the successful resumption of building. The Aramaic spelling reflects the linguistic milieu of Persian-era Yehud, where Aramaic was the administrative language. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chaggay | es: Hageo, Ĥagay | fr: [חגי] | de: Haggai Ezra 5:1; Ezra 6:14

חַגִּיָּה H2293 N-proper-ms (1×)

Haggiah (meaning 'feast of Yahweh'), a Levite descended from Merari

A theophoric personal name meaning 'feast of Yahweh,' belonging to a Levite of the Merarite line. Haggiah was a son of Shimea in the temple genealogies preserved in Chronicles. The name celebrates Yahweh's appointed festivals, perhaps indicating birth during a feast season or expressing gratitude for covenant celebrations. Such names embedded theology into daily life—every time Haggiah was called, his community was reminded of joyful worship before the Lord.

(1×) Levitical personal name meaning 'feast of Yahweh.' 1 Chronicles 6:30 lists Haggiah among the Merarite descendants who served in temple worship. The theophoric element 'Yah' combined with 'hag' (feast) creates a name celebrating Israel's sacred calendar. Names like this turned personal identity into worship, reminding both bearer and community of God's appointed times of joy. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chaggiyah | es: Jaguiya | fr: [חגיה] | de: [חגיה] 1Chr 6:30

חַגִּית H2294 N-proper-fs (5×)

Haggith; wife of David and mother of Adonijah, name meaning 'festal' or 'born on a feast day'

A proper name meaning 'festal,' Haggith was one of David's wives and the mother of Adonijah, who later attempted to claim the throne. She appears in the succession narrative surrounding Solomon's rise to kingship (1 Kgs 1:5, 11; 2:13) and in the genealogical records of David's sons born at Hebron (2 Sam 3:4; 1 Chr 3:2). The name derives from the root chag ('feast/festival'), suggesting she may have been born during a pilgrimage festival. The Septuagint renders it Angith.

(5×) The proper name of David's wife and mother of Adonijah, derived from the root chag meaning 'feast.' All five occurrences identify her in connection with Adonijah's lineage and his bid for the throne. Cross-language renderings (Spanish 'Haguit/Jaguit,' French/German 'Haggith') consistently transliterate the name. The LXX form Angith reflects a variant pronunciation tradition. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chaggith, Haggit, Haggith | es: Jaguit | fr: Haggit, Haggith, [חגית] | de: Haggit, Haggith, [חגית] 2Sam 3:4; 1Kgs 1:5; 1Kgs 1:11; 1Kgs 2:13; 1Chr 3:2

חָגְלָה H2295 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)

Hoglah; a daughter of Zelophehad of Manasseh, whose inheritance claim established women's property rights.

A proper name meaning 'partridge,' borne by one of the five daughters of Zelophehad from the tribe of Manasseh. Hoglah and her sisters famously petitioned Moses for an inheritance in the Promised Land since their father had died without sons (Num 27:1), and their case became a legal precedent for female inheritance in Israel. She appears in the genealogical listing (Num 26:33), the initial petition, the marriage stipulation requiring marriage within the tribe (Num 36:11), and the land allotment in Joshua 17:3. Translations consistently render the name as Hoglah or Choglah.

(4×) A proper feminine name identifying one of the five daughters of Zelophehad of the tribe of Manasseh. Her appearances span the census list (Num 26:33), the landmark inheritance petition (Num 27:1), the marriage-within-tribe ruling (Num 36:11), and the Cisjordan allotment (Josh 17:3). The name likely means 'partridge,' as noted by BDB. The multilingual renderings show minor transliteration variation—English 'Hoglah,' French and German also offer 'Choglah'—but the name is uniformly recognized as a personal identifier in all traditions. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Choglah, Hoglah, and-Hoglah | es: Hogla, Hoglá, y-Hoglá | fr: Choglah, Hoglah, et-Hoglah | de: Choglah, Hoglah, und-Hoglah Num 26:33; Num 27:1; Num 36:11; Josh 17:3

חָגַר H2296 V-Qal-Imp-fp (44×)

To gird, fasten around the body (a belt, sword, sackcloth, or garment); in stative use, to be girded or equipped.

A verb of binding and fastening that belongs to the world of getting dressed for action — whether for war, priestly service, or mourning. It describes strapping on sackcloth (Isa 15:3; Ezek 7:18), a sword (Judg 3:16; 1 Sam 25:13), or a priestly sash (Exod 29:9; Lev 8:7). French 'ceindre' and Spanish 'ceñir' both carry the image of wrapping tight around the waist. In its participial form the word shifts from action to state — warriors 'girded' with swords (Judg 18:11, 16) or David serving 'girded' with a linen ephod (2 Sam 6:14). The Passover instruction to eat 'with your loins girded' (Exod 12:11) fuses both senses into a posture of alert readiness.

1. gird on, fasten around (33×) To gird on or fasten something around the body — the active transitive sense covering the binding of sackcloth in mourning, the strapping on of swords for battle, and the fastening of priestly garments for service. Moses girds Aaron and his sons (Lev 8:7, 13), Ehud straps a dagger to his thigh (Judg 3:16), and David girds on his sword (1 Sam 25:13). Spanish 'ceñir' and French 'ceindre' preserve the tight-wrapping force. The wide range of objects — sackcloth, swords, ephods, belts — makes this verb the default for any act of fastening to the body. GIRDING AND DRESSING

en: and-girded, and-he-girded, and-they-girded | es: Ciñe, Y-ciñeron, Y-ciñó | fr: ceindre, ceins, et-ceignez! | de: [וחגרו], [חגרה], [חגרו] Exod 29:9; Lev 8:7; Lev 8:13; Lev 16:4

2. girded, wearing (stative) (10×) The stative or resultant sense: to be girded, to be wearing something fastened around the body — expressed through participial and passive forms. The Danite warriors stand 'girded with weapons of war' (Judg 18:11, 16, 17), David ministers 'girded with a linen ephod' (1 Sam 2:18; 2 Sam 6:14), and the Passover is eaten 'with your loins girded' in readiness to march (Exod 12:11). German and French render these forms as adjectival descriptions of a current state rather than an ongoing action. GIRDING AND DRESSING

en: girded, girded-with, the-girded | es: ceñida-de, ceñido, ceñidos | fr: [חגרים], ceignit, ceignit-avec | de: [חגרים], [חגרת], der-girded Exod 12:11; Judg 18:11; Judg 18:16; Judg 18:17; 1Sam 2:18

3. (1×) A debated occurrence in 2 Samuel 22:46 (parallel Ps 18:46) where the text is uncertain. The Masoretic form may derive from חגר (to gird, i.e., 'come trembling from their strongholds') or reflect a textual variant related to חרג (to tremble, come out fearfully). Translations diverge — English 'come trembling,' Spanish 'saldrán temblando' — suggesting the meaning 'to come forth fearfully or trembling' rather than the usual girding sense. The parallel Psalm text reads differently, making this a well-known textual crux. GIRDING AND DRESSING

en: and-they-come-trembling | es: y-saldrán-temblando | fr: et-ils-viens-tremblant | de: und-sie-komme-trembling 2Sam 22:46

חַד H2297 Number-msc (1×)

one (Aramaic form of the Hebrew 'echad,' used in Ezekiel)

The Aramaic form of the common Hebrew numeral 'one,' appearing anomalously in Ezekiel's Hebrew text. In Ezekiel 33:30, people speak 'each one to another' using this Aramaic form rather than the expected Hebrew. Scholars debate whether this reflects dialectical influence, textual corruption, or deliberate stylistic choice. The Aramaic incursion into Hebrew text reminds us of the linguistic fluidity in the exilic and post-exilic periods when both languages shaped biblical discourse.

(1×) The number one, in Aramaic form. Ezekiel 33:30 uses this where Hebrew 'echad' would be expected, in the phrase 'each one to his brother.' The Aramaic form in a Hebrew text may reflect the exile's linguistic impact on the prophet or his community. Translations uniformly render this as 'one,' recognizing the semantic equivalence despite the unusual form. ONE AND UNITY

en: one | es: uno | fr: un | de: eins Ezek 33:30

אַחַד H2298 Number-ms (14×)

Aramaic numeral 'one'; rarely adverbial 'together, as one'

The Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew 'echad,' this numeral appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. In nearly all occurrences it functions straightforwardly as the cardinal number 'one' – one letter (Ezra 4:8), one decree (Ezra 6:2), one kingdom. Its single adverbial use in Daniel 2:35, where the shattered statue materials are broken 'together' like chaff, reveals how the concept of 'oneness' naturally extends to 'togetherness' across Semitic languages.

1. one (13×) The cardinal numeral 'one,' used as an adjective or substantive in Aramaic legal and narrative contexts. French 'un,' German 'ein/eine,' Spanish 'uno/una,' and English 'one' all render it consistently. It appears in official decrees (Ezra 4:8; 6:2-3), Nebuchadnezzar's dream interpretation (Dan 2:9), and the symbolic visions of Daniel. The form is cognate with Hebrew אֶחָד and functions identically as a basic numeral. ONE AND UNITY

en: one, one- | es: una, uno | fr: un | de: ein, eine, eins Ezra 4:8; Ezra 5:13; Ezra 6:2; Ezra 6:3; Dan 2:9

2. together (1×) An adverbial extension meaning 'together, as one,' where the numeral conveys simultaneous unified action rather than mere counting. In Daniel 2:35, iron, clay, bronze, silver, and gold are all broken 'together' (כַּחֲדָה) and become like chaff. Spanish 'juntamente' and German 'wie eine' capture the collective nuance, while English 'together' abandons the numeral form entirely, showing how this semantic shift is recognized cross-linguistically. TOGETH-

ERNESS AND COMPANY
en: together | es: juntamente | fr: un | de: wie-eine Dan 2:35

חַד H2299 Adj-fs (4×)
Sharp, keen; describing a sword, tongue, or mouth as cutting and piercing.
An adjective meaning 'sharp' or 'keen,' applied both literally and figuratively in powerful imagery. Ezekiel 5:1 uses it literally of a sharp sword (or razor), while the Psalms and Prophets deploy it metaphorically: the tongue is 'sharp' like a sword (Ps 57:4), and God's servant's mouth is made like a sharpened sword (Isa 49:2). Most strikingly, Proverbs 5:4 warns that the aftermath of the forbidden woman is 'sharp as a two-edged sword.' The French 'tranchant' (cutting) and Spanish 'afilada' (honed) capture the concrete edge of the word's imagery.

(4×) Sharp or keen, describing a blade or figuratively a tongue or mouth as dangerously cutting. Used literally of a sword or razor in Ezekiel 5:1, and metaphorically of speech in Psalm 57:4 (the tongue as a sharp sword), Isaiah 49:2 (the servant's mouth as a sharpened blade), and Proverbs 5:4 (the end of the adulteress is 'sharp as a two-edged sword'). The figurative uses are especially powerful, linking physical sharpness to the piercing quality of words and consequences. French 'tranchant' and 'acere' (cutting, honed), Spanish 'afilada' (sharpened), and English 'sharp' all converge on the same concrete-to-metaphorical semantic range. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS en: sharp | es: afilada, agudo | fr: [חַדָּה], acéré, tranchant | de: [חַדָּה], eine, sharp Ps 57:4; Prov 5:4; Isa 49:2; Ezek 5:1

חָדַד H2300a V-Hofal-Perf-3fs (4×)
To be sharpened or made sharp; of a sword prepared for slaughter, or horses keener than wolves.
A verb meaning 'to be or make sharp,' appearing in contexts of fearsome preparation for violence. In Ezekiel 21, the repeated refrain 'the sword is sharpened' (vv. 9-11) builds a terrifying crescendo as God's judgment sword is readied for slaughter—polished and sharpened, handed to the executioner. Habakkuk 1:8 shifts the image to the Chaldean cavalry, whose horses are 'keener than evening wolves,' conveying predatory swiftness. The French glosses 'terrible' capture the dread these passages evoke, while Spanish 'esta afilada' (is sharpened) and English 'is sharpened' stay close to the literal sense.

(4×) To be sharpened or made keen, describing a weapon prepared for deadly use or, by extension, predatory fierceness. Three of the four occurrences cluster in Ezekiel 21:9-11 (Hophal passive: 'the sword is sharpened, it is sharpened and polished'), building a refrain of impending divine judgment. The fourth, in Habakkuk 1:8 (Qal: 'keener than evening wolves'), applies the concept to the terrifying swiftness of Chaldean horses. Spanish 'esta afilada' and English 'is sharpened' preserve the passive metallurgical image from Ezekiel, while 'y mas feroces' (and more ferocious) captures the comparative predatory sense in Habakkuk. French 'terrible' reflects the emotional impact of both contexts. ASCENDING MOVEMENT
en: and-keener, is-sharpened, it-is-sharpened | es: está-afilada, y-más-feroces | fr: et-terrible, terrible | de: [וְהוּחַדָּה], [וְחַדּוּ] Ezek 21:9; Ezek 21:10; Ezek 21:11; Hab 1:8

חָדַד H2300b V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (2×)
to sharpen; used of iron sharpening iron and metaphorically of mutual edification
This verb means to grow sharp or to sharpen, appearing only in Proverbs 27:17: 'Iron sharpens iron, and a man sharpens the countenance of his friend.' The saying uses the image of metalworking—one piece of iron hones another—to illustrate how people sharpen or refine each other through interaction. The exact parsing is debated (both verbs may be Hiphil, or one Qal and one Hiphil), but the sense is clear: mutual engagement produces sharpness, whether of blade or of character. It's a proverb of social formation and friendship.

(2×) A verb describing the sharpening process, both literal (metal on metal) and metaphorical (person influencing person). The proverb in 27:17 is often cited for the principle of 'iron sharpening iron'—friends hone each other's character through candid interaction, just as blades are whetted through friction. The metaphorical extension from smithing to human relationships is elegant: sharpness (of mind, spirit, presence) comes through abrasive but constructive contact. The verb makes growth a relational, not solitary, endeavor. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS
en: is-sharpened, sharpens | es: afila, se-afila | fr: יַחַד | de: zusammen Prov 27:17

חֲדַד H2301 N-proper-ms (2×)
personal name; a son of Ishmael, ancestor of an Arabian tribe Hadad (also spelled Chadad in some traditions) appears in Genesis 25:15 and 1 Chronicles 1:30 as one of the twelve sons of Ishmael, eponymous ancestor of an Arabian tribe. The name is theophoric, invoking the storm-god Hadad worshiped across the ancient Near East. Palmyrene and Sabean inscriptions preserve similar names, suggesting widespread use among Semitic peoples. The Septuagint offers varied spellings, reflecting uncertainty in transmission. Hadad's inclusion among Ishmael's sons situates him within the broader family of Abraham, the non-covenant line spreading into Arabia.

(2×) A masculine proper name borne by one of Ishmael's twelve sons, marking the origin of a tribal group. The name invokes Hadad, the Semitic storm deity, indicating religious-cultural patterns in Ishmaelite nomenclature. Genesis and Chronicles preserve this genealogy to map the descendants of Abraham beyond the covenant line, showing how the patriarch's seed became 'a multitude of nations.' Hadad's tribal descendants likely roamed the Arabian wilderness, their memory preserved in biblical genealogy as kin—albeit distant—of Israel. HADAD BEN HADAD
en: Chadad, Hadad | es: Chadad, Jadad | fr: Hadad, [חֲדַד] | de: Chadad, [חֲדַד] Gen 25:15; 1Chr 1:30

חָדָה H2302 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (3×)
rejoice, be glad; Aramaic/late Hebrew
A verb of joy and gladness. Jethro 'rejoiced' over all the good the LORD had done for Israel (Exod 18:9), Job curses the day of his birth that it should 'not rejoice among the days of the year' (Job 3:6), and the psalmist declares that God 'makes him glad with joy' (Ps 21:6). The Spanish se alegró, le alegras and French se réjouir capture the affective warmth. This is not mere happiness but a response to goodness—whether God's deliverance or the gift of life itself (or its tragic absence).

(3×) Describes rejoicing in three contexts: Jethro's joy over Israel's deliverance (Exod 18:9), the banishment of joy from Job's birth-day (Job 3:6), and God making the king glad (Ps 21:6). The multilingual glosses (rejoiced, se alegró, se réjouir) uniformly reflect exuberant gladness. The word evokes response to blessing or its absence—joy as recognition of divine favor. REJOICING AND GREETING
en: and-rejoiced, rejoice, you-make-him-glad | es: Y-se-alegró, le-alegras, se-una | fr: et-se-réjouit, se-réjouir, יַחַד | de: du-machen-ihn-glad, und-freute-sich, zusammen Exod 18:9; Job 3:6; Ps 21:6

חַדּוּד H2303 N-mpc (1×)
sharp potsherds, pointed fragments (superlative form: 'sharpest of potsherds')
An intensive plural adjective meaning 'sharpest things' or 'pointed fragments,' appearing in God's description of Leviathan. Under the creature are 'the sharpest of potsherds'—the scales on its underside are like jagged pottery shards. The construct form creates a superlative: not just sharp, but the sharpest possible potsherds. This vivid image conveys both the creature's armor-like protection and the dangerous, cutting nature of its very underside.

(1×) The sharpest of potsherds or pointed fragments. Job 41:30 describes Leviathan's underside as having 'sharp potsherds'—its scales are like jagged pottery shards, making even the belly dangerous and impenetrable. The plural intensive form with construct ('sharpest of') creates superlative force. The image turns defensive scales into offensive weapons: even lying down, this creature is armed with cutting edges. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: are-sharp-potsherds | es: tiestos-de | fr: חדודי | de: [חדודי] Job 41:30

חֶדְוָה H2304 Conj-w / N-fs (2×)

joy, gladness; a late Hebrew/Aramaic term for festive rejoicing

This noun, borrowed from Aramaic, denotes joy or gladness. It appears in 1 Chronicles 16:27 in the phrase 'strength and joy are in his place' (referring to the sanctuary), and in Nehemiah 8:10 where Nehemiah declares 'the joy of Yahweh is your strength.' The term belongs to the late Hebrew of the post-exilic period, reflecting Aramaic influence. It captures the festive, buoyant character of worship and divine presence—joy as a theological reality, not merely an emotion, and as a source of communal resilience.

(2×) A feminine noun for joy or gladness, used in contexts of worship and covenant renewal. Chronicles locates 'joy' in Yahweh's sanctuary, alongside strength—attributes of the divine dwelling that spill over to worshipers. Nehemiah's exhortation transforms joy into spiritual fortitude: 'the joy of Yahweh is your strength' links delight in God to moral and communal endurance. The Aramaic origin reflects post-exilic linguistic realities, as the restored community worshiped in a bilingual context. Joy here is not private happiness but public, covenantal celebration. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: and-joy, the-joy-of | es: gozo-de, y-gozo | fr: [וחדוה], [חדות] | de: [וחדוה], [חדות] 1Chr 16:27; Neh 8:10

חֶדְוָה H2305 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)

joy, gladness (Aramaic term for exultant celebration)

An Aramaic noun denoting joy or gladness, appearing in Ezra's account of the temple dedication. The returned exiles celebrated 'with joy' as they dedicated the house of God. This Aramaic term in a Hebrew text reflects the linguistic situation of the restoration community, where Aramaic had become the common tongue. The joy described is not mere happiness but covenant celebration—the proper response to God's faithfulness in enabling temple restoration.

(1×) Joy or gladness expressed in celebration. Ezra 6:16 describes the dedication of the rebuilt temple happening 'with joy'—the Aramaic term emphasizes exultant celebration appropriate to such a momentous occasion. After exile and return, after decades of labor, the house of God stands again. The linguistic shift to Aramaic reflects the post-exilic reality, but the joy transcends language barriers. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: with-joy | es: con-gozo | fr: [בחדוה] | de: [בחדוה] Ezra 6:16

חַדְיֵ H2306 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

breast, chest (Aramaic dual form, referring to the chest area of Nebuchadnezzar's statue)

The Aramaic dual noun for 'chest' or 'breast,' appearing in Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream-statue. The great image had a head of gold, but 'its chest' was of silver. The dual form naturally fits the paired structure of the thorax. This body part in the multi-metal statue represents the second kingdom in Daniel's prophetic scheme, inferior to Babylon (the gold head) but still glorious. The anatomical progression down the statue mirrors declining glory and increasing fragility.

(1×) The chest or breast area, specifically in dual form. Daniel 2:32 describes the dream-statue's 'chest and arms' made of silver, representing the second world-kingdom. The Aramaic dual fits the natural pairing of the thorax region. This anatomical detail in apocalyptic vision turns the human body into a timeline of empires, with each body part marking a successive kingdom's character and fate. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: its-chest | es: su-pecho | fr: poitrine | de: [חדוהי] Dan 2:32

חֲדִיד H2307 N-proper-fs (3×)

Hadid (place name in Benjamin)

A town in Benjamin, listed with Lod and Ono in postexilic census lists (Ezra 2:33; Neh 7:37; 11:34). It is identified with modern El-Haditheh, a few miles northeast of Lydda. The name appears in administrative contexts: counting returnees and resettled towns. Translations preserve the name (Spanish Hadid, Jadid). This is the geography of restoration: small towns repopulated after exile, their names a litany of hope and return.

(3×) A place name in three postexilic lists (Ezra 2:33; Neh 7:37; 11:34), always grouped with Lod and Ono. The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name (Hadid, Jadid). The town functions as a marker of the province of Benjamin's resettlement—a fixed point on the map of restored Judah. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chadid, Hadid | es: Hadid, Jadid | fr: [חדיד] | de: [חדיד] Ezra 2:33; Neh 7:37; Neh 11:34

חָדַל H2308 Prep-m / V-Qal-Inf (59×)

To cease, stop, desist, refrain; to leave off doing something or leave someone alone; to fail or be lacking.

Chadal is the Hebrew verb of stopping — with a distinctive flavor of voluntary withdrawal rather than forced termination. Where shabat implies structured, often sacred rest, chadal carries the tone of giving up, holding back, or simply quitting. It appears in some of the Bible's most human moments: the builders at Babel 'ceased' building (Gen 11:8), Sarah's monthly cycle 'ceased' (Gen 18:11), and a weary Job begs God to 'leave me alone' (Job 10:20). The preposition min frequently accompanies the verb, creating a 'cease from' construction visible across languages — Spanish cesar de, French cesser de, German aufhoren.

1. cease, come to an end (23×) To cease or come to an end — intransitive cessation of an action, state, or natural phenomenon. The dominant sense at 23 occurrences. The hail 'ceased' (Exod 9:29, 33), manna 'ceased' (Josh 5:12), and counting grain 'ceased' because it was beyond measure (Gen 41:49). Spanish cesaron, French cessa, and German aufhorten all converge on simple termination. The subject stops of its own nature rather than by external command — a key distinction from the imperative 'desist' sense. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: and-ceased, and-ceases, and-he-ceased | es: Cesaron, Han-cesado, cesaron | fr: –cesser, [ויחדל], avait-cessa | de: [ויחדל], [ותחדל], [חדל] Gen 11:8; Gen 18:11; Gen 41:49; Exod 9:29; Exod 9:33

2. desist, refrain from (16×) To desist or refrain from doing something — voluntary restraint, typically with the preposition min specifying the abandoned action. Sixteen occurrences center on moral or practical decisions to hold back. Jotham's trees refuse kingship: the olive says 'should I cease from my fatness?' (Judg 9:9); the fig and vine echo the refusal (9:11, 13). Deuteronomy 23:22 warns against vowing and then 'refraining' from fulfilling. Spanish cesar de and French cesser de both mark the prepositional 'from' construction that distinguishes deliberate restraint from natural cessation. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: I-will-cease, and-I-cease, and-you-refrain | es: cesarán, cesaré, de-cesar | fr: [אחדל], cesser, de-cessant | de: [ואחדלה], aufhoeren, du-refrain Exod 23:5; Deut 23:22; Judg 9:9; Judg 9:11; Judg 9:13

3. leave alone, let be (16×) To leave alone or let be — an imperative or jussive sense of forbearing, often directed at God or a superior. Sixteen occurrences carry the tone of 'stop bothering' or 'stand down.' Moses tells the Israelites 'leave us alone!' (Exod 14:12); Job pleads with God to 'look away from me and let me alone' (Job 7:16; 10:20). Spanish cesa and French cesser shift toward interpersonal withdrawal. The 2 Chronicles passages (25:16; 35:21) use chadal as a warning to stop interfering in someone else's affairs — a pragmatic, relational sense distinct from abstract cessation. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: [let-Him-cease], and-cease, cease | es: (Cesa), Cesa-, Cesad | fr: [חדל], ceases, cesser | de: [(וחדל)], [[יחדל]], [ויחדל] Exod 14:12; 1Sam 9:5; 2Chr 25:16; 2Chr 35:21; Job 7:16

4. fail, be lacking (4×) To fail, be lacking, or cease to exist — a stative sense denoting the absence of something expected. Four occurrences at the margins of the verb's range. 'The poor will not cease from the land' (Deut 15:11), 'the wicked cease from troubling' in death (Job 3:17), a person 'ceases to act wisely' (Ps 36:3), and 'in many words transgression does not cease' (Prov 10:19). The shift from active 'stopping' to stative 'being absent' is subtle but real — Spanish cesan and German aufhoren both tend toward existential rather than volitional vocabulary in these contexts. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: and-refrains, cease, he-has-ceased | es: cesa, cesan, cesó | fr: cesser, et-refrains | de: [חדלו], [יחדל], er-hat-ceased Num 9:13; Job 3:17; Ps 36:3; Prov 10:19

חֶדֶל H2309 N-ms (1×)

cessation, the world/land of the dead (Sheol as the place where life ceases)

A rare noun meaning 'cessation' or 'end,' appearing in Hezekiah's psalm where he laments not seeing the Lord 'among the inhabitants of cessation.' This poetic term for Sheol emphasizes death as the end of activity, the place where earthly life ceases. Some scholars propose reading 'world' (cheled) instead, but the concept of cessation fits well—death is the great stopping-place. Hezekiah's lament captures the finality of death before Christ's resurrection revealed life beyond.

(1×) Cessation or the land of the dead. Isaiah 38:11 uses this in Hezekiah's psalm: he thought he would not see the Lord among 'the inhabitants of cessation.' The term portrays death as the end of activity—those in Sheol have ceased from the land of the living. Though textual variants exist, 'cessation' powerfully captures the finality the king feared. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: of-the-world | es: del-mundo | fr: cesser | de: [חדל] Isa 38:11

חָדֵל H2310 Conj-w / Adj-msc (3×)

ceasing, transient; forsaken, lacking

An adjective of absence or cessation. The psalmist asks 'let me know how fleeting I am' (Ps 39:4, or 'how transient'). Isaiah describes the Servant as 'despised and rejected by men' (Isa 53:3, lit. 'lacking men' or 'forsaken by men'). Ezekiel distinguishes the one who 'hears' from 'the one who refuses' (Ezek 3:27). The Spanish frágil, rechazado and French abandonner, cesser reflect both temporal and relational dimensions: what is fleeting or what is forsaken. The word evokes lack—whether of time, support, or obedience.

(3×) Describes that which ceases, is transient, or is forsaken in three contexts: human life's brevity (Ps 39:4), the Servant forsaken by people (Isa 53:3), and the one who refuses to listen (Ezek 3:27). The multilingual glosses (transient, frágil, abandonner, cesser) reflect both temporal ephemerality and social abandonment. The word evokes vulnerability and absence. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: and-rejected-by, and-the-refusing, transient | es: frágil, y-el-que-cesa, y-rechazado-de | fr: abandonner, et-cesser, et-sans-valeur | de: [והחדל], [וחדל], transient Ps 39:4; Isa 53:3; Ezek 3:27

חַדְלָי H2311 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hadlai, an Ephraimite father of one who opposed Judean captivity

A personal name belonging to an Ephraimite mentioned in Chronicles' account of the Syro-Ephraimite war's aftermath. Hadlai was the father of Amasa, one of the northern leaders who opposed enslaving Judean captives. When Israelite soldiers brought prisoners from Judah, Hadlai's son stood among those who said, 'You shall not bring the captives here.' This family showed covenant mercy even in conflict, treating fellow Israelites as brothers despite political division.

(1×) Personal name of an Ephraimite whose son opposed enslaving Judean captives. 2 Chronicles 28:12 mentions Hadlai as father to Amasa, one of the chiefs who intervened when northern troops brought prisoners from Judah. In a moment of crisis, Hadlai's family line demonstrated covenant faithfulness—recognizing that political conflict didn't erase kinship obligations. The name preserves memory of those who chose mercy over advantage. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chadlai | es: Jadlai | fr: [חדלי] | de: [חדלי] 2Chr 28:12

חָדָק H2312 N-ms (2×)

brier, thorn-bush; a prickly plant used in comparisons of worthlessness or obstruction

This term refers to a brier or thornbush, a prickly, troublesome plant. In Proverbs 15:19, 'the way of the sluggard is like a brier-hedge'—overgrown and obstructed, reflecting the self-imposed difficulties of laziness. In Micah 7:4, the prophet laments that 'the best of them is like a brier,' meaning even the most upright are as troublesome as thorns. The word is related to Aramaic and Arabic terms for thorny plants, and it functions as a negative simile for corruption, difficulty, or moral decay.

(2×) A noun for a thorny brier or hedge-plant, employed in negative moral comparisons. Proverbs uses it to depict the self-inflicted obstacles of the lazy—their path is choked with thorns because they do not clear the way. Micah deploys it more grimly: the most righteous person in corrupt society is still like a brier—painful, troublesome, fallen far from the ideal. The plant imagery draws on agricultural realities (thorns as curses, impediments) and presses them into ethical critique. Briers are what remains when cultivation fails. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: like-brier, thorns | es: como-espino, espinos | fr: épine, חדק | de: [חדק], [כחדק] Prov 15:19; Mic 7:4

חִדֶּקֶל H2313 N-proper-fs (2×)

Tigris; the great river of Mesopotamia, one of the four rivers of Eden

Hiddekel is the Hebrew name for the Tigris River, the famous waterway of Mesopotamia. It appears in Genesis 2:14 as one of the four rivers flowing from Eden, and in Daniel 10:4 as the site of Daniel's apocalyptic vision. The name derives from ancient Sumerian (Idigna) and Akkadian (Idiqlat), with Old Persian rendering it as Tigra. The identification with the Tigris is certain, and the river's inclusion in Eden's geography situates paradise in the Mesopotamian heartland—a theological geography linking primordial blessing to the world's ancient centers of civilization.

(2×) The proper name for the Tigris River in Hebrew Scripture. In Genesis, it is one of Eden's four rivers, grounding the garden in real geography—the Tigris flows through the land of Assyria, marking the eastern boundary of the biblical world. In Daniel, the river becomes the setting for visionary encounter; the prophet stands on its banks and receives revelation. The Sumerian and Akkadian roots anchor the name in Mesopotamian linguistic heritage, a reminder that Israel's sacred texts engage the languages and landscapes of its ancient neighbors. RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: Chiddeqel, Hiddekel | es: Hidequel, Tigris | fr: Hiddekel, épine | de: Hiddekel, [חדקל] Gen 2:14; Dan 10:4

חָדַר H2314 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (1×)

the piercing (one), possibly a sword or weapon that penetrates (grammatically feminine participle)

A feminine participle meaning 'the piercing one' or 'that which penetrates,' appearing in Ezekiel's oracle of the sword. In context, this seems to describe a weapon that pierces or penetrates, though the exact nuance remains debated. The Syriac cognate suggests surrounding or penetrating action. Ezekiel's sword-oracle uses vivid language for the weapon of judgment, and this rare term adds to the ominous imagery of a blade that finds its mark, penetrating defenses.

(1×) A weapon or sword described as 'the piercing one.' Ezekiel 21:14 uses this feminine participle in the context of a sword-oracle, likely describing the penetrating nature of the judgment-weapon. The term emphasizes the sword's ability to pierce through, to find gaps, to penetrate defenses. Related Syriac roots suggest surrounding or going through, fitting a blade that finds its target regardless of protection. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-piercing | es: la-que-penetra | fr: chambre | de: [הַחֲדֶרֶת] Ezek 21:14

חֶדֶר H2315 N-ms (38×)
room, inner chamber — a private room within a building, used for sleeping, seclusion, or concealment Cheder denotes an interior room or private chamber, the kind of space you withdraw into and close the door behind you. Of its 38 occurrences, the word consistently pictures enclosed, intimate space: Joseph hurries to his cheder to weep privately (Gen 43:30), Delilah's allies hide in the cheder (Judg 16:9, 12), and Isaiah commands Israel to 'enter your chambers and shut your doors' until judgment passes (Isa 26:20). The 'chambers of the south' (Job 9:9) extends the image to hidden celestial recesses. Proverbs warns that the seductress's house leads to 'the chambers of death' (7:27). The multilingual evidence converges tightly: Spanish 'camara,' French 'chambre,' German 'Kammer' — all from a shared Indo-European root for vaulted room, mirroring the Hebrew sense of enclosed interiority.

room, inner chamber (38×) A room or inner chamber within a larger structure, emphasizing privacy, enclosure, and withdrawal from public space. Used for bedrooms (Judg 15:1; 2 Sam 13:10; 1 Kgs 1:15), hiding places (Judg 16:9, 12; 1 Kgs 20:30; 22:25), and metaphorically for hidden recesses — 'the innermost parts of the belly' (Prov 18:8; 20:30, reading chadre-veten). Deuteronomy 32:25 pairs it with the outdoors: 'from without the sword bereaves, and from the chambers, terror.' The construct chadre is frequent, binding the room to what it contains or conceals. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: chambers-of, in-room, in-room-of | es: a-cámaras-de, a-la-cámara, cámara | fr: [בְּחֶדֶר], [חֶדֶר], au-dedans-de-chambre | de: Kammer, [בְּחֶדֶר], [חֶדֶר] Gen 43:30; Exod 8:3; Deut 32:25; Judg 3:24; Judg 15:1

חֲדַד H2316
Hadad, personal name; Ishmaelite son, incorporating the storm god's name
This descendant of Ishmael bears a name invoking the Aramean storm deity, common across ancient Near Eastern cultures. The name appears in Genesis's genealogical record of Ishmael's twelve sons who became tribal leaders. Textual variants exist—some manuscripts read Hadar, reflecting scribal uncertainty or regional pronunciations. The Septuagint transliterations vary, suggesting the name's form wasn't perfectly standardized. Such theophoric names (incorporating deity names) were common regardless of which god a family actually worshiped, often representing cultural heritage rather than active devotion.

חַדְרַךְ H2317 N-proper-fs (1×)
Hadrach, a region or district near Damascus mentioned in Zechariah's oracle
A geographical name appearing in Zechariah's oracle of judgment, designating a territory near Damascus and Hamath. Ancient sources identify Hadrach with Assyrian Hatarikka, a district in Syria. The prophet pronounces the Lord's word against 'the land of Hadrach' as part of a broader judgment on Syria and surrounding regions. This oracle demonstrates Yahweh's sovereignty over all territories, not just Israel—even distant Syrian districts stand under divine word.

(1×) A territorial designation in Syria near Damascus. Zechariah 9:1 pronounces divine oracle against 'the land of Hadrach,' parallel to Damascus. Assyrian records help identify this as Hatarikka, a region under ancient Syrian control. The prophetic word reaches even to less-familiar territories, showing God's sovereignty extends beyond Israel's immediate neighbors to all nations under heaven. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chadrakh | es: Hadrac | fr: Hadrak | de: [חַדְרַךְ] Zech 9:1

חָדַשׁ H2318 V-Hitpael-Imperf-3fs (10×)
Renew, repair, restore — to make new again, whether physically (buildings) or spiritually (inner life)
The verb חָדַשׁ (chadash), used exclusively in the Piel and Hithpael stems, means to renew, repair, or restore something to a fresh state. Its semantic range spans the physical — repairing the temple (2 Chr 24:4, 12) and restoring an altar (2 Chr 15:8) — and the deeply spiritual — David's plea for a renewed spirit (Ps 51:12) and God's renewal of the face of the ground (Ps 104:30). Samuel's call to 'renew the kingdom' at Gilgal (1 Sam 11:14) carries political-covenantal force. The root underlies חָדָשׁ (new) and חֹדֶשׁ (new moon/month). Spanish 'renovar/restaurar' and French 'renouveler' capture both the material and spiritual dimensions.

renew, repair, restore (10×) To make new again, restore, or repair — used in two overlapping registers: physical restoration of buildings and cultic installations (2 Chr 15:8, repairing the altar; 2 Chr 24:4, 12, restoring the temple), and spiritual or cosmic renewal (Ps 51:12, 'renew a right spirit within me'; Ps 104:30, God renewing the face of the earth; Lam 5:21, 'renew our days as of old'). The Gilgal episode in 1 Samuel 11:14 blends both senses: renewing the kingship as a politico-covenantal act. Spanish 'renovar' and German 'erneuern' preserve the dual material-spiritual range. RENEW REPAIR RESTORE en: You-renew, and-You-renew, and-let-us-renew | es: Renuevas, para-reparar, renueva | fr: [וְחַדְּשׁוֹן], [וַיְחַדֵּשׁ], [לְחַדֵּשׁ] | de: [וְחַדְּשׁוֹן], [וַיְחַדֵּשׁ], [לְחַדֵּשׁ] 1Sam 11:14; 2Chr 15:8; 2Chr 24:4; 2Chr 24:12; Job 10:17

חָדָשׁ H2319 Conj-w / Adj-fp (53×)
new, fresh — recently made, not previously existing, or renewed in quality and purpose
Chadash describes what is newly made, recently appeared, or qualitatively different from what came before. Its 53 occurrences span the concrete and the theological: a new king who did not know Joseph (Exod 1:8), new cords binding Samson (Judg 15:13; 16:11-12), a new cart for the ark (1 Sam 6:7), and — most profoundly — the 'new covenant' prophesied by Jeremiah (Jer 31:31) and the 'new song' of praise that erupts seven times in the Psalms and Isaiah. The word carries overtones of renewal and eschatological freshness: 'Behold, I am doing a new thing' (Isa 43:19). Translations render it consistently: Spanish 'nuevo/nueva,' French 'nouveau/nouvelle,' German 'neu' — each preserving both the temporal and qualitative dimensions.

1. new, recently made (physical objects) (30×) Split from sense 95582. Criteria: Applied to material objects and persons: new house, new ropes, new cart, new king, new garments, new grain, newly married man. Focus on temporal novelty and physical freshness.
en: new, the-new | es: el-nuevo, lo-nuevo, nueva | fr: [חֲדָשָׁה], le-nouveau, nouveau | de: [חֲדָשָׁה], der-neu, neu Exod 1:8; Lev 23:16; Lev 26:10; Num 28:26; Deut 20:5

2. new (theological/eschatological renewal) (23×) Split from sense 95582. Criteria: Applied to divine acts and covenant realities: new covenant (Jer 31:31), new song of praise (Ps 33:3; 96:1; 149:1; Isa 42:10), new things God declares (Isa 42:9; 48:6), new heart and spirit (Ezek 11:19; 18:31; 36:26), new mercies (Lam 3:23). Focus on qualitative transformation and eschatological renewal.
en: a-new-thing, new, new-thing | es: cosa-nueva, nueva, nuevo | fr: mois, nouveau, nouvelle | de: [חָדָשׁ], [חֲדָשָׁה], neu Ps 33:3; Ps 40:3; Ps 96:1; Ps 98:1; Ps 144:9

חֹדֶשׁ H2320 Art / N-mp (283×)
Month (calendar period) or new moon (lunar festival day marking the first of the month)
Derived from the root meaning 'new,' chodesh bridges astronomy and calendar in ancient Israel. In its primary sense (260 occurrences), it simply means 'month' — the basic unit of the Hebrew lunar calendar, as in 'the second month, on the seventeenth day' (Gen 7:11). But in 23 passages, chodesh retains its etymological force as 'new moon,' designating the festival observed at each lunar renewal. The new moon was a significant religious occasion, paired with sabbaths in prophetic critique (Isa 1:13–14) and central to David's table narrative (1 Sam 20:5, 18, 24). German 'Neumond' and French

'nouvelle lune' capture this astronomical-liturgical dimension that English 'month' loses entirely.

1. month, calendar period (260×) A month as a calendrical unit — the basic time period of the Hebrew lunar calendar. Comprising 260 of the 283 occurrences, this is the unmarked temporal sense found from the Flood chronology (Gen 7:11, 'the second month') through festival legislation (Exod 12:2, 'the first of your months') to historical dating formulas across Kings and Chronicles. Cross-lingual evidence is stable: Spanish 'mes,' French 'mois,' German 'Monat' — all standard calendar vocabulary with no religious overtone. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: in-the-month, of-the-month, the-month | es: del-mes | fr: dans-le-mois, de-le-mois, le-mois | de: der-Monat, des-Monats, in-der-Monat Gen 7:11; Gen 8:4; Gen 8:5; Gen 8:13; Gen 8:14

2. new moon, lunar festival (23×) The new moon as an astronomical event and its associated religious observance — the first day of the month celebrated as a festival. Appearing 23 times, this sense clusters in cultic and prophetic contexts: the David-Jonathan narrative (1 Sam 20:5, 'Tomorrow is the new moon'), the prophetic pairing with sabbaths (Isa 1:14, 'Your new moons and appointed feasts'), and liturgical regulations (Num 28:11–14). German 'Neumond' and the LXX neomēnia sharply distinguish this sense from the calendar meaning, while French 'nouvelle lune' and Spanish 'luna nueva' likewise flag the astronomical-religious dimension. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: and-at-the-new-moons, and-for-new-moons, and-for-the-new-moons | es: Luna-nueva, Vuestras-lunas-nuevas, en-su-mes | fr: et-mois, le-nouveau, le-nouveau-lune | de: Monat, der-neu-Mond, neu-Mond 1Sam 20:5; 1Sam 20:18; 1Sam 20:24; 1Sam 20:27; 1Sam 20:34

חֹדֶשׁ H2321 N-proper-fs (1×)

Hodesh (meaning 'new moon'), a wife of Shaharaim the Benjaminite

A feminine personal name meaning 'new moon,' belonging to one of Shaharaim's wives mentioned in Benjamin's genealogy. After dismissing Hushim and Baara, Shaharaim fathered children by Hodesh. The name evokes the monthly celebration and calendar marker central to Israelite worship. Whether given at birth or reflecting some circumstance of marriage, this name embedded the rhythm of sacred time into personal identity. Hodesh stands in the Benjaminite lineage, mother to several sons.

(1×) Feminine personal name meaning 'new moon.' 1 Chronicles 8:9 identifies Hodesh as Shaharaim's wife who bore him sons in Benjaminite genealogy. The name celebrates the monthly renewal marker in Israel's calendar—each new moon a reminder of time's sacred rhythm and God's ordering of seasons. Names derived from worship elements turned personal identity into testimony of covenant life. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chodesh | es: Jodes | fr: [חדש] | de: [חדש] 1Chr 8:9

חֲדָשָׁה H2322 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Hadashah, a town in the lowland territory allotted to Judah

A place name meaning 'new (town)' in Judah's territorial allotment. Hadashah appears in the list of lowland cities assigned to Judah during the conquest, though its exact location remains unknown. The name suggests this may have been a newly founded settlement or a town renamed to mark new beginning. Such place names in Joshua's lists preserve memory of the land distribution, even when later history obscures the sites themselves.

(1×) A town in Judah's lowland territory. Joshua 15:37 lists Hadashah among cities in the Shephelah region assigned to Judah's tribe. The name means 'new,' possibly indicating a recently founded settlement at the time of conquest. Though the site cannot be identified today, the biblical record preserves its place in the land inheritance, testimony to God's fulfillment of covenant promise. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Chadashah | es: y-Jadasá | fr: et-Chadashah | de: und-Chadashah Josh 15:37

חַדַּת H2323 N-fsc (1×)

new (Aramaic adjective, describing timber in temple reconstruction)

The Aramaic adjective for 'new,' appearing in Cyrus's decree regarding temple reconstruction. The Persian king ordered that 'new timber' be provided for the building project. This Aramaic term in official correspondence reflects the linguistic reality of the Persian administration—Aramaic served as the imperial language for official documents. The emphasis on 'new' materials underscores Cyrus's generous support for the temple project, providing fresh resources rather than recycled materials.

(1×) New, fresh, unused—describing materials for temple building. Ezra 6:4 records Cyrus's decree specifying 'new timber' for the Jerusalem temple reconstruction. The Aramaic adjective in this Persian-period document emphasizes quality and generous provision. God moved a pagan emperor to supply not just any materials but new resources for his house, showing divine sovereignty over foreign powers and their treasuries. NEWNESS AND FRESHNESS en: new | es: nueva | fr: [חדת] | de: [חדת] Ezra 6:4

חֲוָה H2324 V-Hifil-Imperf-2mp (14×)

Aramaic verb: to show or make visible; also to declare or announce verbally

An Aramaic verb found exclusively in Daniel, used in both Pa'el and Haph'el stems to describe acts of revealing hidden knowledge. It appears most urgently in the dream-interpretation crisis of Daniel 2, where the king demands his wise men 'show' him both the dream and its meaning. The word encompasses both visual demonstration and verbal declaration, though context and stem distinguish these nuances. Its cognates in Syriac and Biblical Hebrew (III חָוָה) confirm a root meaning of making something evident or known.

1. show, display (10×) To show, display, or make visibly evident to someone, often with a direct object indicating what is revealed and an indirect object indicating the recipient. Spanish 'mostrar' and German 'zeigen' both emphasize the demonstrative, visual quality. This sense dominates in Daniel 2, where the urgency centers on showing the king his own dream (Dan 2:4, 6, 7, 9) – the wise men must not merely tell but produce or display the content. Daniel's confidence that God will 'show' him the mystery (Dan 2:16, 24) carries this same demonstrative force. SHOWING AND REVEALING

en: I-will-show, can-show-it, show-me | es: lo-pueda-mostrar, me-mostraréis, mostradme | fr: [אחוא], [ההונך], [יחונה] | de: zeigen Dan 2:4; Dan 2:6; Dan 2:7; Dan 2:9

2. declare, proclaim (4×) To declare, proclaim, or make known through verbal announcement, emphasizing the communicative act over visual demonstration. Spanish shifts from 'mostrar' to 'declarar,' and French uses 'montrer' in a more formal proclamatory sense. Nebuchadnezzar's decree to 'declare' the signs and wonders God has done (Dan 4:2) and the queen's recommendation that Daniel can 'declare' interpretations (Dan 5:12, 15) both highlight spoken proclamation rather than showing. This sense appears in later chapters where revelation has moved from crisis to testimony. SHOWING AND REVEALING

en: he-will-show, shows-me, to-declare | es: declarar, declarará, me-haga-saber | fr: [יהחוה], [יחוננך], pour-montrer | de: zeigen Dan 4:2; Dan 5:7; Dan 5:12; Dan 5:15

חוּב H2325 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-2mp (1×)

to make guilty, endanger, bring blame upon (Piel: to cause to be held responsible)

A verb meaning to make guilty or endanger, appearing in Daniel's response to the palace master. The young exile warns that failing to thrive on the proposed diet would 'endanger my head with the king'—make the official guilty or liable before royal authority. The Piel stem indicates causative action: not becoming guilty oneself, but causing another to be held responsible. The term captures the relational web of accountability in ancient court culture, where one person's failure could bring another under judgment.

(1×) To make someone guilty or liable, to endanger. Daniel 1:10 uses the Piel form: 'you would make my head guilty before the king.' The official fears that the youths' poor appearance would bring him under royal judgment. The verb conveys not personal guilt but causing another to be held responsible—Daniel's welfare directly affects his keeper's standing with Nebuchadnezzar. GUILT AND PUNISHMENT
en: and-you-would-endanger | es: y-haríais-culpable | fr: et-condamner | de: [וחיבתם] Dan 1:10

חוֹב H2326 N-ms (1×)
debt, indebtedness (abstract state of owing; Aramaic loan-word)
An Aramaic-influenced noun denoting debt or the state of indebtedness, appearing in Ezekiel's description of righteous conduct. The text speaks of restoring 'the pledge of debt' or 'the pledge regarding indebtedness.' Though the construction is difficult, the term clearly relates to financial obligation. The righteous person returns what was taken as security for debt, showing concern for the debtor's welfare beyond strict legal right. The word reminds us that biblical righteousness included economic justice.

(1×) The state of debt or financial obligation. Ezekiel 18:7 uses this in a challenging construction about restoring pledges—apparently the righteous return collateral taken 'regarding debt.' The term emphasizes the condition of owing rather than specific items owed. Righteous conduct means treating debtors mercifully, not exploiting their vulnerability through harsh pledging practices that compound their difficulties. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15110 WITH 5 SENSES
en: debtor | es: de-deuda | fr: dette | de: [חוב] Ezek 18:7

חוֹבָה H2327 N-proper-fs (1×)
Hobah, a location north of Damascus where Abraham pursued the fleeing kings
A place name marking the northern limit of Abraham's pursuit after rescuing Lot. Having defeated the coalition that captured his nephew, Abraham chased them 'as far as Hobah, north of Damascus.' Ancient sources identify this with a site about twenty hours' journey north of Damascus. The detail shows the extent of Abraham's military campaign—he didn't stop at recovering Lot but pursued the enemy deep into Syrian territory. Hobah marks the patriarch's decisive victory over eastern kings.

(1×) A geographical location north of Damascus. Genesis 14:15 identifies Hobah as the northern terminus of Abraham's pursuit of the kings who had captured Lot. The patriarch's forces reached far into Syria, demonstrating both military capability and determination to rescue family. Modern identification with a site twenty hours north of Damascus shows the campaign's impressive scope—Abraham was both shepherd and warrior-champion. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hobah | es: Hoba | fr: Hobah | de: Choba Gen 14:15

חוּג H2328 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)
to draw a circle, inscribe a boundary (particularly the horizon-circle on the face of the waters)
A verb meaning to draw a circle or trace a circular boundary, appearing in Job's description of creation. God 'inscribed a circle on the face of the waters'—drew the horizon-line that bounds sea and sky. The Aramaic cognate suggests circular motion or surrounding. This rare verb captures a key moment in creation's ordering: the establishment of boundaries, the drawing of circles that separate and define. The horizon becomes God's compass-drawn line, elegant geometry marking creation's order.

(1×) To inscribe a circle or draw a circular boundary. Job 26:10 describes God as having 'drawn a circle upon the face of the waters'—the horizon-line where sea meets sky, the circular boundary of visible creation. The verb evokes the divine geometer, using creation's compass to establish order. Proverbs 8:27 uses the same image: Wisdom was present when God 'drew a circle on the deep.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: He-inscribed | es: trazó | fr: חג | de: Fest Job 26:10

חוּג H2329 N-ms (3×)
circle, vault, horizon (of earth or heavens)
A noun denoting the circular vault or horizon of the cosmos. God 'sits above the circle of the earth' (Isa 40:22), 'inscribed a circle on the face of the deep' at creation (Prov 8:27), and 'walks on the vault of heaven' (Job 22:14). The Spanish círculo and French/German circle/vault glosses evoke both the two-dimensional horizon and the three-dimensional dome. This is cosmological language: the geometry of creation, where God's throne transcends the bounded sphere of the world.

(3×) Refers to the circular boundary or vault of the cosmos in three poetic contexts: God enthroned above the earth's circle (Isa 40:22), the circle inscribed at creation (Prov 8:27), and God's circuit of the heavens (Job 22:14). The multilingual glosses (circle, círculo, vault) reflect ancient cosmology's image of a bounded, vaulted world. The word evokes divine transcendence over created order. HEAVEN AND SKY
en: a-circle, and-circuit-of, the-circle | es: círculo, el-círculo, y-el-círculo-de | fr: [חוג], et-חוג, וחוג | de: [וחוג], [חוג] Job 22:14; Prov 8:27; Isa 40:22

חוּד H2330 V-Qal-Imperf.Cohort-1cs (4×)
To propound or pose a riddle; used exclusively with the cognate accusative חִידָה in riddle contexts.
A specialized verb meaning to put forth a riddle, always appearing with its cognate noun חִידָה (riddle). Found almost exclusively in the Samson narrative (Judg 14), where it describes the act of challenging others with an enigma at his wedding feast. Ezekiel 17:2 extends this into prophetic speech, where God commands the prophet to 'riddle a riddle' — pairing it with מָשָׁל (parable) to signal that what follows is deliberately layered in meaning. The multilingual glosses confirm this tight semantic range: Spanish proponer, French énigme, and German Rätsel all center on the riddle concept.

(4×) To propound or pose a riddle, always used with the cognate accusative חִידָה. In Judges 14:12–16, Samson challenges his wedding guests to solve his enigma about the lion and the honey; the verb captures the performative act of riddling itself. In Ezekiel 17:2, the verb moves into prophetic discourse, where God instructs Ezekiel to 'riddle a riddle and speak a parable,' signaling encoded prophetic speech. Spanish proponer and French énigme confirm this narrow sense. RIDDLE ENIGMA en: let-me-riddle-, riddle, you-riddled | es: propondré-, propusiste, propón | fr: que-moi-énigme-, tu-riddled, énigme | de: Raetsel, [חוד], du-riddled Judg 14:12; Judg 14:13; Judg 14:16; Ezek 17:2

חָוָה H2331 Conj-w | V-Piel-ConjImperf.h-1cs | 2mse (6×)
To declare, tell, make known — a poetic Aramaic-influenced verb used for announcing wisdom or truth.
A verb found only in the Piel stem in poetic and late texts, meaning 'to declare' or 'make known.' As an Aramaic loanword (cognate with chavvei), it carries a formal, deliberate quality of announcement. Elihu uses it repeatedly in Job to introduce his declarations of wisdom (Job 15:17; 32:6, 10, 17; 36:2). The Psalms employ it for the heavens declaring knowledge night after night (Ps 19:3), giving the word a cosmic scope alongside its human forensic usage.

declare, tell, make known (6×) To tell, declare, or make known — used in formal, deliberate speech acts. Spanish 'declarare' and French 'annoncer' both capture the proclamatory tone. Elihu is the primary user, solemnly declaring his opinion and knowledge (Job 32:6, 10, 17; 36:2), while Eliphaz also employs it (Job 15:17). In Psalm 19:3, the night sky itself 'declares knowledge' to successive nights. The Aramaic coloring suits the elevated, quasi-judicial register of these wisdom and hymnic contexts. ANNOUNCING AND

DECLARING
en: I-show-you, I-will-declare, and-I-will-show-you | es: Te-declararé, de-declarar, declararé | fr: annoncer, annoncer-toi, de-annoncer | de: [אחוה], [אחוך], [ואחוך] Job 15:17; Job 32:6; Job 32:10; Job 32:17; Job 36:2

חַוָּה H2332 N-proper-fs (2×)

Eve; the first woman, mother of all living, named by Adam after the fall

Eve (Hebrew 'Chavah') is the name given by Adam to the first woman in Genesis 3:20, explained as meaning 'life' or 'living' because 'she was the mother of all living.' The etymology connects to the Hebrew root for 'to live,' though some scholars have proposed alternative derivations (including 'serpent,' given the immediate context). She appears again in Genesis 4:1 as 'his wife Eve' when she bears Cain. Her naming follows the fall and the pronouncement of judgment, yet it also signals hope—despite the curse, life will continue through her. She is the matriarch of humanity.

(2×) The personal name of the first woman, given by Adam after the fall. The name 'Chavah' is explained as deriving from 'chai' (living), making her 'the mother of all living'—a title that affirms her role in the continuity of human existence despite sin and death. The naming occurs in the context of curse and promise: pain in childbirth, yet also the seed of the woman who will crush the serpent. Eve thus embodies both the tragedy of the fall and the hope of redemption, life persisting in the shadow of death. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chavah | es: Havá | fr: Ève | de: Chawwa Gen 3:20; Gen 4:1

חַוָּה H2333 N-fpc / 3mp (4×)

Tent-village or encampment; a cluster of nomadic or semi-nomadic settlements, especially in the phrase חַוֹת יָאִיר.

Refers to small, unwalled tent-villages — temporary or semi-permanent settlements characteristic of pastoral life in Gilead and Bashan. Almost always appearing in the compound name חַוֹת יָאִיר (Havvoth-Jair, 'the villages of Jair'), this word preserves the memory of Israel's early settlement patterns east of the Jordan. The multilingual evidence is telling: English renders 'villages,' Spanish aldeas, French villages, and German Dörfer — all pointing to small rural communities rather than fortified cities.

(4×) Tent-village or small unwalled settlement, typically a cluster of nomadic encampments. Nearly always found in the compound חַוֹת יָאִיר ('Havvoth-Jair'), referring to the settlements Jair captured in Gilead (Num 32:41; Deut 3:14; Judg 10:4; 1 Kgs 4:13). The term reflects a semi-nomadic settlement pattern: not a fortified city but a ring of tents or huts grouped by kinship. German Dörfer ('villages') and Spanish aldeas both capture this sense of small, rural communities. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Chavvoth, the-villages-of, their-villages | es: aldeas-de, sus-aldeas | fr: [חות], le-villages-de, leur-villages | de: Doerfer-von, [חות], der-villages-von Num 32:41; Josh 13:30; 1Kgs 4:13; 1Chr 2:23

חַוָּה H2334 N-proper-ms (3×)

Havvoth-Jair: tent villages of Jair in Gilead

This proper name refers to a cluster of tent villages in Gilead associated with Jair, a descendant of Manasseh. The name literally means 'tent-villages of Jair.' These settlements were established when Jair conquered certain towns in the region of Bashan and Gilead, naming them after himself. The term appears primarily in territorial descriptions of the Transjordan region, marking a significant boundary point in Israel's early settlement period.

(3×) A geographical designation for the tent villages captured and settled by Jair in Gilead. Numbers 32:41 records the original naming event during the conquest, while Deuteronomy 3:14 and Judges 10:4 confirm the enduring designation of these settlements. The multilingual evidence (Spanish Havot-Jair, French/German/English Havvoth-Jair) shows consistent transliteration, preserving the proper name across translation traditions. JAIR PERSONAL NAME
en: Havvoth-Jair, Havvoth-jair | es: Havot-Jair, Havot-Jaír, Havot-Yaír | fr: Havvoth-Jair, Havvoth-jair | de: Havvoth-Jair, Havvoth-jair Num 32:41; Deut 3:14; Judg 10:4

חֹזֵה H2335 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hozai (meaning uncertain), possibly a collective term for seers rather than a personal name

A term appearing in Chronicles' reference to sources for Manasseh's reign, traditionally understood as a personal name ('the words of Hozai') but more likely a collective or title ('the words of the seers'). The Septuagint supports reading this as 'the seers' rather than a proper name. This textual puzzle illustrates the challenges of ancient transmission—a single letter difference transforms meaning. Whether individual or collective, the reference points to prophetic records now lost, reminding us that Scripture preserves only a portion of the prophetic witness to Israel's history.

(1×) Either a proper name or collective term for 'seers.' 2 Chronicles 33:19 cites 'the words of Hozai' (or 'the seers') as a source for Manasseh's history. The Hebrew text suggests a personal name, but the Septuagint reads 'the seers,' likely correct given scribal confusion possibilities. Either way, the reference points to prophetic records —now lost—that chronicled even apostate Manasseh's later repentance. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Hozai | es: Jozai | fr: [חוזי] | de: [חוזי] 2Chr 33:19

חוֹחַ H2336 Prep-b (11×)

Thorn, brier, or bramble (a thorny plant); also a hook or ring used for capturing and restraining captives.

A word with two strikingly different referents united by a single physical property: something sharp that catches and holds. As a plant, it denotes thorns, briers, or brambles – the classic biblical image of desolation and cursed ground. In Jehoash's cutting allegory, the thornbush presumes to negotiate with the cedar of Lebanon (2 Kgs 14:9). Song of Songs 2:2 offers an unforgettable compliment: 'As a lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters.' Isaiah and Hosea use thorns as signs of divine judgment overgrowing abandoned places. The second sense – a hook or ring for leading captives – appears when the Assyrians capture Manasseh 'with hooks' (2 Chr 33:11) and in Job 41:2's challenge about catching Leviathan. The shared idea of something that pierces and grips connects both senses.

1. thorn, brier, bramble, thistle (9×) A thorny plant – brier, bramble, or thistle – used in prophetic and wisdom imagery. Appears in Jehoash's parable where the thorn presumes to address the cedar (2 Kgs 14:9; 2 Chr 25:18), as a sign of desolation overtaking abandoned land (Hos 9:6; Isa 34:13), and in the memorable 'lily among thorns' of Song of Songs 2:2. Job 31:40 invokes thorns as the opposite of fruitful wheat. Proverbs 26:9 compares a fool's proverb to a thorn in a drunkard's hand. Spanish 'cardo/espina' and French cognates reflect the sharp, painful plant sense that makes this a powerful metaphor for judgment and neglect. THORNS AND BRAMBLES
en: a-thorn, and-thistles, the-thistle | es: El-cardo, Espina, el-cardo | fr: [החוח], [וחוח], le-thistle | de: [החוח], [החוחים], [וחוח] 2Kgs 14:9; 2Chr 25:18; Job 31:40

2. hook, ring, fetter (2×) A hook, ring, or fetter used for capturing and leading captives – probably named by analogy with thorns that catch and hold fast. In 2 Chronicles 33:11, the Assyrians seize King Manasseh 'with hooks' (bachochim), a humiliating method of prisoner transport also depicted in Assyrian reliefs. Job 41:2 asks whether one can put a hook in Leviathan's nose. Spanish 'ganchos' (hooks) distinguishes this clearly from the botanical sense. The semantic bridge between thorn and hook lies in the shared property of piercing and gripping. HOOK RING FETTER
en: and-with-a-hook, with-hooks | es: con-ganchos, y-con-gancho | fr: [בחחים], et-épine | de: [בחחים], [ובחוח] 2Chr 33:11; Job 41:2

חוֹחַ H2337 Conj-w (1×)

thorns, thickets (as hiding places), possibly holes or caves in some contexts

A term for thorny thickets or possibly caves and holes used as hiding places, appearing in the account of Saul's early reign. When the Philistines threatened, Israelites hid themselves 'in the thickets' along with caves and rocks. Some scholars suggest reading 'holes' instead, based on later context in chapter 14. Either way, the word denotes places of refuge in wild terrain—whether dense thorn-bushes or rocky crevices. Fear drove Israel into the wilderness margins rather than standing to fight.

(1×) Thickets or thorny places used as hiding spots. 1 Samuel 13:6 describes terrified Israelites hiding 'in the thickets' when Philistines assembled for war. The term may alternatively mean 'holes' or caves, given textual variants and parallel with 'caves' and 'rocks.' Either reading shows people fleeing to wild, inaccessible places—whether dense thorns or rocky holes—rather than trusting God and their anointed king. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: and-in-the-thickets | es: y-en-los-matorrales | fr: et-dans-le-thickets | de: und-in-der-thickets 1Sam 13:6

חוּט H2338 V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp (1×)

to join, repair (foundations), specifically used of rebuilding city walls

A rare verb in the Haphel stem meaning to join together or repair, appearing in the Aramaic accusation against Jerusalem's rebuilders. Enemies claim the Jews are laying foundations and 'joining' the walls—completing the circuit of fortification. The term suggests connecting sections, bringing together elements into a unified structure. This technical building term appears in hostile correspondence trying to stop the wall-project, ironically testifying to the returnees' remarkable progress in restoration work.

(1×) To join together or connect, specifically in building contexts. Ezra 4:12 uses this in an accusation: the Jews are 'joining the walls'—completing the connections that would make Jerusalem defensible again. The Aramaic Haphel form suggests causing parts to be united. Enemies recognized that completed walls meant restored autonomy, so they opposed even the joining-work that would finish the protective circuit. BINDING AND TYING

en: joined | es: unieron. | fr: [יחיטו] | de: [יחיטו] Ezra 4:12

חוּט H2339 Prep-k / N-msc (7×)

Thread, cord, or line — a thin fiber used for binding, marking, or measuring.

A versatile noun for a thin, elongated fiber ranging from a single thread to a measuring cord. Abraham swears he will not take so much as a thread or sandal-strap from the king of Sodom (Gen 14:23), while Rahab hangs a cord of scarlet thread from her window as a sign of salvation (Josh 2:18). The Song of Songs compares lips to a scarlet thread (4:3), and Ecclesiastes observes that a threefold cord is not quickly broken (4:12). Whether literal or figurative, the word evokes something slender yet purposeful.

thread, cord, line (7×) A thread, cord, or measuring line — a thin, flexible strand used for binding, marking, or measurement. At its thinnest it means a mere thread, the most trivial possession (Gen 14:23, 'from a thread to a sandal-thong'). As a cord it gains practical significance: Rahab's scarlet cord (Josh 2:18) becomes a sign of deliverance, and the threefold cord of Ecclesiastes 4:12 illustrates the strength of companionship. Spanish hilo and French fil both reflect the 'thread' sense, while the measuring-line use in 1 Kings 7:15 (a line of twelve cubits around a pillar) shows its extension to a builder's measuring cord. Samson's bonds snapping like a thread (Judg 16:12) exploits the word's connotation of fragility. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-cord-of, and-line-of, and-the-cord | es: Como-hilo-de, como-hilo, de-hilo | fr: Comme-un-fil, [וחוט], comme-fil | de: [וכחוט], [וחוט], [כחוט] Gen 14:23; Josh 2:18; Judg 16:12; 1Kgs 7:15; Eccl 4:12

חִוִּי H2340 Art / N-proper-ms (25×)

Hivite — one of the Canaanite peoples listed among the pre-Israelite inhabitants of the land of Canaan

Chivvi (the Hivite) designates one of the traditional seven Canaanite nations whom Israel was to dispossess upon entering the land. The name may derive from a root meaning 'village' or 'tent-dweller,' though the etymology remains disputed. Hivites appear in nearly every standard promise-and-conquest list from Exodus through Joshua (Exod 3:8; Deut 7:1; Josh 9:1; 24:11), and they surface in two memorable narrative moments: Shechem son of Hamor the Hivite who violated Dinah (Gen 34:2), and the Gibeonites, identified as Hivites, who tricked Joshua into a treaty by pretending to be distant travelers (Josh 9:7; 11:19). The Septuagint renders the name as Heuaios. In later history, Solomon conscripted Hivite descendants for forced labor (1 Kgs 9:20). Spanish 'heveo/hivita,' French 'Hivvite/Hevien,' and German 'Chiwwiter/Hewiter' all transliterate variously.

Hivite (ethnic group) (25×) The Hivites, a Canaanite ethnic group listed among the pre-Israelite nations 'begotten' by Canaan in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:17; 1 Chr 1:15). They appear in virtually every conquest catalogue (Exod 3:8; 23:23; Deut 7:1; Josh 3:10; 12:8). Specific Hivite figures include Shechem son of Hamor (Gen 34:2) and the Gibeonites who secured a covenant through deception (Josh 9:7; 11:19). Solomon later subjected their remnant to forced labor (1 Kgs 9:20). The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'heveo,' French 'Hevien,' German 'Hewiter' — reflect varied transliteration traditions. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: and-the-Chivvi, and-the-Hivite, the-Chivite | es: el-heveo, el-hivita, el-jiveo | fr: et-le-Chivvi, et-le-Hivite, et-le-Hévien | de: den-Chiwwiter, der-Chivite, der-Hewiter Gen 10:17; Gen 34:2; Gen 36:2; Exod 3:8; Exod 3:17

חֲוִילָה H2341 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (7×)

Havilah — a land or people associated with gold and precious materials, appearing in both primeval and genealogical contexts.

Havilah appears as both a geographic region and a people-group in the Hebrew Bible. In the primeval narrative, it is the gold-rich land encircled by the river Pishon (Gen 2:11), associated with bdellium and onyx. In the Table of Nations, Havilah is listed both as a son of Cush (Gen 10:7; 1 Chr 1:9) and as a descendant of Joktan through Shem (Gen 10:29; 1 Chr 1:23), suggesting the name denotes a broad, perhaps Arabian, territory. The phrase 'from Havilah to Shur' (Gen 25:18; 1 Sam 15:7) marks the extent of Ishmaelite and Amalekite territory.

Havilah (proper noun, place/people name) (7×) The proper name Havilah, referring to a land renowned for gold (Gen 2:11) and to peoples in the Table of Nations descended from both Cush (Gen 10:7) and Joktan (Gen 10:29). The dual genealogical placement may reflect the wide geographic range the name covered — possibly parts of Arabia or East Africa. Multilingual renderings (Spanish Havilá/Javila, French Havila, German Hawila/Chawila) show variation in transliterating the initial consonant, reflecting the aspirated het. The geographical formula 'from Havilah to Shur' (Gen 25:18; 1 Sam 15:7) served as a standard boundary marker for Ishmaelite and Amalekite settlement in the desert regions east of Egypt. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chavilah, Havilah, and-Chavilah | es: Havilá, Javila, Javilá | fr: Havila, Havilah, de-Chavilah | de: Chawila, Hawila, [וחוילה] Gen 2:11; Gen 10:7; Gen 10:29; Gen 25:18; 1Sam 15:7

H2342 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (1×)

to writhe, be in anguish (used of cities in distress, or of labor pains)

A verb describing writhing motion, whether in labor pains, dance, or anguish. In Ezekiel's oracle against Egypt, cities will 'writhe' when judgment comes. The root spans multiple contexts: birth-labor, whirling dance, and pain-induced contortions. Here the imagery is distress—cities personified as women writhing in agony when divine judgment strikes. The verb's semantic range from celebration to suffering shows how physical motion expresses interior states across the spectrum from joy to terror.

(1×) To writhe or be in anguish. Ezekiel 30:16 prophesies that an Egyptian city 'shall writhe'—the feminine singular suggests a personified city contorting in pain like a woman in labor. The verb often describes birth-pangs but here depicts the agony of divine judgment. The physical writhing becomes metaphor for the interior agony and exterior chaos when God's sentence falls. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: shall-writhe | es: (estará-de-parto) | fr: trembler | de: [תחול] Ezek 30:16

חוּל H2342a Art / V-Piel-Prtcpl-fp (58×)

to whirl, writhe, tremble, dance; to writhe in pain or labor; to bring forth, be born; to wait

With 58 occurrences, this verb portrays intense physical motion and emotional experience — writhing in agony, trembling in fear, whirling like a storm, giving birth in labor, or dancing in celebration. Its semantic core involves circular, twisting, or convulsive movement, extending from literal spinning to metaphorical anguish. Isaiah describes nations writhing at the fall of Tyre (23:5), Job depicts the wicked writhing in pain (15:20), Deuteronomy records peoples trembling at Israel's approach (2:25), and Judges pictures young women dancing in celebration (21:21). The causative Piel brings forth children (Deut 32:18, Ps 90:2), while passive forms describe being born or formed (Prov 8:24-25). A few enigmatic uses involve waiting or being wounded, revealing the verb's interpretive complexity.

1. Qal: writhe in pain/anguish (16×) The primary Qal sense of writhing in intense physical or emotional pain — not the trembling of fear (sense 2) but the contorted agony of suffering. Job's depiction of the wicked man who 'writhes in pain all his days' (15:20) and Isaiah's oracle that Babylon 'shall writhe' at judgment (13:8) use this term. The Arabic consistently deploys tawajjaʿa (Form V of the root for 'pain'), a distinct lexeme from trembling, confirming that ancient translators recognized this as suffering distinct from fear or labor. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: Writhe, [shall-writhe], and-they-will-writhe | es: Retuercete, [estará-de-parto], con-dolor | fr: enfanter, et-ils-fera-writhe, et-trembler | de: [ותחיל], [חולי], [חלה] Deut 2:25; Job 15:20; Ps 55:4; Isa 13:8; Isa 23:5

2. Qal: tremble/quake in fear (10×) A Qal sense denoting trembling, shaking, or quaking — typically from fear, awe, or dread before God or a powerful enemy. Deuteronomy records that nations 'shall tremble' at the report of Israel (2:25), Psalm 29 declares 'the voice of the Lord makes the wilderness tremble' (29:8). The Arabic uses irtaʿada (Form VIII of the root for 'thunder/tremble'), a completely different root from the pain sense, showing that translators distinguished fearful shaking from writhing agony. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: and-she-writhed, and-trembles, shakes | es: Temblad, hace-temblar, que-hace-temblar | fr: [ותתחלחל], [חילו], enfanter | de: [ותתחלחל], [יחוללון], beben 1Chr 16:30; Esth 4:4; Job 26:5; Ps 29:8

3. Piel: bring forth/cause to bear (6×) The causative Piel sense of bringing forth, causing to be born, or begetting — a creative act rather than the experience of labor. Deuteronomy asks Israel, 'Of the Rock who begot you, you are unmindful' (32:18), Psalm 90 declares 'Before the mountains were brought forth' (90:2). The Arabic employs walada 'to give birth' and anjaba 'to beget' (causative), roots dedicated to birthing and entirely separate from pain, trembling, or whirling, marking this as a distinct semantic domain. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: and-you-brought-forth, brings-forth, makes-to-calve | es: el-que-forma-, hace-nacer, que-hace-parir | fr: enfanter, et-trembler, qui-apporta-tu-forth | de: [מחולל], [תחוללי], beben Deut 32:18; Ps 29:9; Ps 90:2; Prov 25:23; Prov 26:10

4. Qal: travail/be in labor (6×) A Qal sense specifically describing the experience of labor, travail, or childbirth — the mother's perspective rather than the creative act of sense 3. Isaiah uses this repeatedly: 'I have not labored nor brought forth children' (23:4), 'Shall I bring to the time of birth and not cause delivery?' (66:7). The Arabic deploys the specialized root tamakhaḍa (Form V of the root for 'labor/parturition'), used exclusively for childbirth, clearly distinguishing maternal travail from general pain. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: I-have-labored, are-you-in-labor-with, she-travailed | es: das-a-luz?, parto-de, que-estuviera-de-parto | fr: enfanter, trembler | de: [חלל], beben Job 39:1; Isa 23:4; Isa 45:10; Isa 54:1; Isa 66:7

5. Pual/Hofal: be brought forth/born (5×) The passive Pual or Hofal sense describing being brought forth, being born, or being formed — the object's perspective rather than the agent's. Proverbs personifies Wisdom declaring 'I was brought forth' before creation (8:24-25), Job asks sarcastically 'Were you brought forth before the hills?' (15:7), and Psalm 51 confesses 'in sin my mother conceived me' (51:5). The Arabic uses passive forms of birthing verbs (wulida, ṣuwwira), emphasizing the receptive aspect. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: I-was-brought-forth, can-be-brought-forth, were-you-brought-forth | es: fui-engendrada, fui-formado, fuiste-formado | fr: enfanter, trembler | de: [חוללת], [חוללתי], beben Job 15:7; Ps 51:5; Prov 8:24; Prov 8:25; Isa 66:8

6. Qal: whirl/swirl (5×) A Qal sense depicting whirling, swirling, or spinning motion — the physical circular movement that may underlie the verb's other meanings. Jeremiah's oracle describes a 'whirling tempest' (23:19, 30:23), and 2 Samuel mentions a curse falling on Joab's house like something 'whirling' (3:29). The Arabic uses dāra 'to rotate' and ḥalla 'to descend/alight' (with circular connotations), roots entirely distinct from pain, trembling, birthing, or dancing, marking this as a separate motion sense. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: and-shall-whirl, it-will-whirl, let-it-whirl | es: Caigan, caerá, que-se-arremolina | fr: et-trembler, que-cela-whirl, trembler | de: [וחלה], beben, lass-es-whirl 2Sam 3:29; Jer 23:19; Jer 30:23; Hos 11:6

7. Qal/Hitpael: wait/wait patiently (4×) A Qal or Hitpael sense meaning to wait, wait patiently, or tarry — a stative rather than dynamic use. Noah 'waited yet another seven days' (Gen 8:10), the Israelites 'waited' for the servant at Eglon's door (Judg 3:25), Job exhorts 'wait for Him' (35:14). The Arabic consistently uses intaẓara (Form VIII of the root for 'look/wait'), with zero semantic overlap with pain, trembling, birthing, whirling, or dancing, suggesting either homonymy or an extended metaphorical sense of 'staying in place while anxious'. HOPE AND EXPECTATION

en: and-they-waited, and-wait, and-wait-patiently | es: Y-esperaron, Y-esperó, y-espera | fr: et-attendit, et-enfanter, et-ils-attendit | de: [ותחולל], und-erwartete, und-sie-wartete Gen 8:10; Judg 3:25; Job 35:14; Ps 37:7

8. Qal: dance (2×) A Qal sense denoting dancing in a joyful or celebratory context — the only clearly positive use of the verb. Judges describes the daughters of Shiloh 'dancing' (21:21, 23) during the annual feast. The Arabic uses raqaṣa 'to dance', a completely distinct root from all other senses, and Korean uses 춤추다, a dedicated dance verb. This suggests either a separate homonymous root or a metaphorical extension from 'whirling' to 'whirling joyfully'. DANCE AND DANCING

en: the-dancers, to-dance | es: a-danzar, las-danzantes | fr: le-dancers, à-dance | de: der-dancers, zu-dance Judg 21:21; Judg 21:23

9. Qal: be wounded/pierced (2×) A Qal sense describing being wounded, pierced, or struck — attested only in Saul's final battle: 'the archers hit him, and he was badly wounded' (1 Sam 31:3, 1 Chr 10:3). The Arabic uses juriḥa (passive of 'to wound'), from the root for physical wounding, not pain in general. Some interpret this as 'writhed in pain' (sense 1), but the grammar and context favor a distinct sense of being pierced by arrows. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: and-he-was-wounded, and-was-wounded | es: y-fue-herido, y-tembló | fr: [ויחל], et-fut-wounded | de: und-beben, und-war-wounded 1Sam 31:3; 1Chr 10:3

10. (1×) An enigmatic occurrence in Lamentations 4:6 where the context of Sodom's overthrow and Jerusalem's punishment uses a form whose meaning is unclear — translations range from 'rested' to 'were laid' to continued anguish. The multilingual glosses reveal interpretive uncertainty, with no clear semantic anchor to other senses, suggesting possible textual corruption or an otherwise unattested usage. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: rested | es: se-pusieron | fr: trembler | de: [חלו] Lam 4:6

11. (1×) A problematic Ketiv (written) form in Jeremiah 4:19 where the prophet cries out in anguish over coming judgment. The Qere (read) suggests a different reading, and the form's precise sense is debated — whether writhing in pain (sense 1), trembling in fear (sense 2), or something else. The translation traditions reflect the textual and interpretive ambiguity. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: [ketiv] | es: [me-duelo] | fr: trembler | de: beben Jer 4:19

חוּל H2342b V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (2×)

to be firm, strong, enduring; used of prosperity and ways that remain stable

This rare verbal root expresses the idea of being firm or strong, particularly in the sense of enduring or remaining stable over time. It appears only twice, both times describing things that persist: Job's prosperity that does not endure (negated), and the ways of the wicked that are always firm or prosperous. The multilingual evidence points to prosperity and endurance as the core semantic thread, though the French 'enfanter' (to give birth) suggests some translators saw a connection to labor or travail, possibly confusing this root with the more common חול (to writhe).

(2×) The sense of being firm, strong, or enduring appears in both passages. In Job 20:21, the negation indicates that the prosperity of the wicked does not endure or remain firm. In Psalm 10:5, the parallelism suggests stability and success—his ways are always firm, prosperous, or secure. The English and Spanish glosses ('prosper,' 'will endure,' 'Prosperan,' 'durará') capture the nuance of enduring strength rather than momentary firmness. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: prosper, will-endure | es: Prosperan, durará | fr: enfanter | de: [יחיל], gelingen Job 20:21; Ps 10:5

חוּל H2343 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Hul, a descendant of Aram listed in the Table of Nations

Hul appears in the genealogical lists as a son of Aram, grandson of Shem, in the Table of Nations. The name occurs in both Genesis 10 and the parallel genealogy in 1 Chronicles 1, positioned between Uz and Gether among Aram's descendants. As with many names in these ancient genealogies, Hul likely represents both an individual ancestor and the people or region descended from him, though the specific geographic or ethnic identification has been lost to history.

(2×) The proper name Hul designates one of the sons of Aram in the Semitic branch of Noah's descendants. Both occurrences are in genealogical contexts (Genesis 10:23 and 1 Chronicles 1:17), listing the same four sons of Aram. The multilingual glosses maintain the transliterated form with minor orthographic variation across languages, reflecting the standard practice for biblical proper names that lack clear etymological meaning. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Chul, and-Hul | es: y-Jul | fr: [וחול], et-Hul | de: [וחול], und-Chul Gen 10:23; 1Chr 1:17

חוֹל H2344 Art / N-ms (23×)

Sand; granular material of the seashore, used overwhelmingly as a figure for innumerable quantity or immense weight.

Almost always appearing in the phrase 'sand of the sea,' this noun serves as the Hebrew Bible's premier image of uncountable abundance. God promises Abraham descendants as numerous as the sand on the seashore (Gen 22:17), and Jacob echoes this at the Jabbok (Gen 32:12). Joseph stores grain 'like the sand of the sea' until counting becomes meaningless (Gen 41:49). In wisdom literature, sand figures overwhelming weight — Job's grief outweighs the sand of the seas (Job 6:3). Only rarely does it denote literal sand as a substance, as when Moses looks both ways before burying the Egyptian in the sand (Exod 2:12) or when Jeremiah declares God set sand as the sea's eternal boundary (Jer 5:22).

sand (23×) Sand used overwhelmingly in similes for innumerable quantity ('like the sand of the sea') — the Abrahamic promise (Gen 22:17; 32:12), military hordes (Judg 7:12; 1 Sam 13:5), and abundance (Gen 41:49). Literal usage is rare: Exodus 2:12, Jeremiah 5:22. Spanish 'arena,' French 'sable' confirm a single concrete noun. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-as-sand, and-as-the-sand, as-sand-of | es: arena, arena-de, como-arena | fr: [חול], [כחול], [מחול] | de: Sand, [החול], [וכחול] Gen 22:17; Gen 32:12; Gen 41:49; Exod 2:12; Deut 33:19

חוּם H2345 Adj-ms (4×)

Dark-colored, dark brown or black; used exclusively of the color of sheep in Jacob's flock negotiations.

An adjective describing a dark brown or black coloring, appearing only in the Jacob-Laban flock narrative of Genesis 30. Jacob proposes to separate out every dark-colored lamb as his wages, using this word to mark the distinction between light and dark animals. The term is strikingly specific — it never appears outside this pastoral context. German braun ('brown') and Spanish oscuro ('dark') both reflect the earthy, natural-color sense rather than the moral darkness often conveyed by other Hebrew dark-words.

(4×) Dark brown or black in color, used exclusively of sheep and goats in the Jacob-Laban flock division (Gen 30:32–40). Jacob claims every חוּם lamb among the flock as his wage, distinguishing these dark animals from the speckled and spotted ones. German braun ('brown') suggests a warm, earthy tone, while Spanish oscuro and English 'dark' capture the broader shade. The word is purely descriptive of animal coloring, with no metaphorical or moral extension in the biblical corpus. RED AND SCARLET

en: and-dark, dark | es: oscura, oscuro, y-oscura | fr: dark, et-dark | de: Braune, braune, und-braun Gen 30:32; Gen 30:33; Gen 30:35; Gen 30:40

חוֹמָה H2346 Prep-l / N-fsc (133×)

Wall — a defensive wall surrounding a city, serving as the primary fortification and symbol of urban security in ancient Israel

Chomah is the standard Hebrew term for a city's defensive wall, occurring 133 times. Unlike the more general qir (any wall, including interior partitions), chomah specifically denotes the massive stone perimeter that defined and protected an urban settlement. The word appears at pivotal moments: Rahab's house was built into the chomah of Jericho (Josh 2:15), whose walls famously collapsed (Josh 6:5, 20); Nehemiah rebuilt Jerusalem's chomah as an act of national restoration (Neh 2:17; 3:1-32; 12:27). Metaphorically, a wall represents security — and its breach represents judgment: 'I will break down the wall of this city' (Jer 1:15; Ezek 26:9-10). The dual form appears in 2 Kings 25:4 for the double wall of Jerusalem.

city wall, fortification wall (133×) A city's defensive perimeter wall — the massive stone fortification encircling an ancient settlement, serving as both military protection and civic boundary marker. It appears in the fall of Jericho (Josh 6:5, 20), Rahab's escape (Josh 2:15), the siege of Rabbah (2 Sam 11:20-21), and Nehemiah's landmark rebuilding project (Neh 2:17; 12:27). Prophetically, a breached wall signals divine judgment (Ezek 26:9-10; Nah 2:6), while a rebuilt wall signifies restoration. Spanish 'muralla/muro,' French 'muraille,' and German 'Mauer' all capture the fortification sense, distinguishing it from ordinary interior walls. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-wall | es: el-muro, el-muro?, la-muralla | fr: la-muraille, le-muraille | de: der-Mauer Josh 2:15; Josh 6:5; Josh 6:20; 2Sam 11:20; 2Sam 11:21

חוּס H2347 V-Qal-Imp-ms / 3fs (24×)

Pity, have compassion; spare from destruction; look with regret at something's loss

The Hebrew verb chus (חוּס) names the inner movement of mercy that stays a hand raised to strike. Nearly always used with the idiom 'the eye shall (not) pity' (lo tachos einkha), it appears overwhelmingly in negative commands: 'your eye shall not pity' the idolater (Deut 13:8), the murderer (Deut 19:13), or the false witness (Deut 19:21). Ezekiel's visions of judgment repeat the divine declaration 'my eye will not spare, nor will I have pity' (Ezek 5:11; 7:4, 9; 8:18; 9:5, 10). Yet the verb also surfaces positively: Saul's soldiers 'spared' the best livestock in defiance of the ban (1 Sam 15:9), and God tells Jonah that he 'had pity' on the plant, then asks why God should not pity Nineveh (Jonah 4:10-11). Spanish captures both dimensions — perdonar for sparing, compadecer for feeling pity.

1. spare, refrain from destroying (12×) To spare or refrain from destroying — the act of withholding punishment, violence, or the execution of judgment. David 'spared' Saul's life when he cut his robe instead of killing him (1 Sam 24:10), Isaiah declares that Babylonian bows 'will not spare' children (Isa 13:18), and Ezekiel repeatedly voices God's resolve not to spare Jerusalem (Ezek 5:11; 7:4, 9; 8:18; 9:5, 10). Jeremiah 13:14 and 21:7 echo the same divine refusal. Spanish perdonar/perdonará and the negated constructions across languages confirm that this sense centers on the decision to destroy or not, rather than on the emotion behind it. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: I-will-spare, and-she-spared, and-spared | es: Y-perdonó, perdona, perdonará | fr: [אחוס], [יחוס], [תחוס] | de: [אחוס], [חוסה], [יחוס] 1Sam 24:10; Isa 13:18; Jer 13:14; Jer 21:7; Ezek 5:11

2. feel pity, have compassion (11×) To feel pity or have compassion — the emotional response of mercy toward someone's suffering or vulnerability. The Deuteronomic formulae command 'your eye shall not pity' the covenant-breaker (Deut 7:16; 13:8; 19:13, 21; 25:12), implying that natural compassion must be overridden by covenant faithfulness. Ezekiel 16:5 says no eye 'had compassion' on infant Jerusalem, cast out in the open field. Psalm 72:13 prays that the king 'will have pity' on the weak and needy. Spanish compadecer/tener-compasión and the eye-idiom across Semitic languages mark the visceral, emotional core of this sense. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: I-will-pity, and-have-compassion, had-pity | es: Tendrá-compasión, perdonará, se-compadeció | fr: [וחוסה], avoir-pitié, devra-pity | de: [אחוס], [וחוסה], [חסת] Deut 7:16; Deut 13:8; Deut 19:13; Deut 19:21; Deut 25:12

3. look with regret, feel reluctant loss (1×) To look with regret or feel reluctant loss over something valuable — a sense of wistfulness about what must be given up. In Genesis 45:20, Joseph tells his brothers not to let their eye 'look with regret' on their possessions left behind in Canaan, because the best of Egypt awaits them. The construction parallels the other eye-idioms but shifts from mercy toward persons to attachment toward things. Spanish tener-lástima ('feel sorry about') and the singular occurrence confirm this as a specialized extension: not compassion for a person, but reluctance to part with valued property. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: look-with-regret | es: tenga-lástima | fr: regarder-avec-regret | de: bedaure Gen 45:20

חוֹף H2348 Conj-w (7×)

Shore or coast — the strip of land bordering the sea, used in geographical descriptions of the Promised Land.

A noun meaning shore or coast, always appearing in construct form to describe land bordering the Mediterranean or other bodies of water. Jacob's blessing places Zebulun at the 'shore of the sea' and the 'shore of ships' (Gen 49:13), and the description of the Promised Land's boundaries includes 'the coast of the Great Sea' (Deut 1:7; Josh 9:1). The Deborah song notes that Dan lingered by his ships at the shore (Judg 5:17). In prophetic contexts, Jeremiah and Ezekiel invoke the coast as the scene of divine judgment against the Philistines (Jer 47:7; Ezek 25:16).

shore, coast (7×) The shore or coast of a sea — a strip of land at the water's edge. All seven occurrences use the construct form (chof + noun), binding this word tightly to its geographic referent. Jacob's blessing of Zebulun (Gen 49:13) uses it twice — 'shore of seas' and 'shore of ships' — painting a picture of a maritime tribal territory. Spanish costa and French côte both convey the coastal meaning, while German Gestade and Ufer distinguish between beach-shore and riverbank-type edges. The word marks geographical boundaries (Deut 1:7; Josh 9:1) and prophetic judgment zones (Jer 47:7; Ezek 25:16), always oriented toward the Mediterranean world. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-coast-of, at-shore-of, at-the-shore-of | es: a-costa-de, costa-de, junto-a-costa-de | fr: [חוף], côte, et-dans-coast-de | de: [חוף], am-Gestade, bei-der-Ufer-von Gen 49:13; Deut 1:7; Josh 9:1; Judg 5:17

חוּפָם H2349 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Hupham, a Benjaminite clan head, variant of Huppim

A personal name representing the head of a Benjaminite family, appearing in the wilderness census. Hupham is likely the same individual as Huppim mentioned in Genesis 46:21, showing typical orthographic variation in name transmission. The census lists 'the family of the Huphamites' descended from this clan founder. These genealogies preserved tribal structure through wilderness wanderings and conquest, ensuring each family maintained covenant identity and inheritance rights in the promised land.

(1×) Benjaminite clan head whose descendants formed a numbered family. Numbers 26:39 references 'Hupham,' likely identical to 'Huppim' in Genesis 46:21 and related to names in 1 Chronicles 7. The variation shows fluid name transmission while the genealogical line remains intact. Census-taking wasn't mere administration but covenant accountability—every family counted, every descendant mattered in Israel's structure. PERSONAL NAMES

en: to-Hupham | es: de-Hufam | fr: à-Hupham | de: zu-Hupham Num 26:39

חוּפָמִי H2350 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Huphamite - gentilicium referring to descendants of Hupham (Numbers 26:39)

This gentilicium designates the family clan descended from Hupham within the tribe of Benjamin. It appears only once in the census lists of Numbers 26, where tribal families are enumerated. The Hebrew article attached to the form indicates 'the Huphamites' as a collective designation for this Benjamite subdivision.

(1×) A tribal-clan designation appearing exclusively in Numbers 26:39 during the wilderness census. The multilingual glosses consistently treat this as a gentilicium (Spanish 'los-hufamitas,' French 'le-Huphamite'), showing the standard pattern for Hebrew family-group names formed from an ancestor's name. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Huphamite | es: los-hufamitas | fr: le-Huphamite | de: der-Huphamite Num 26:39

חוּץ H2351 Conj-w (164×)

The outside, the area beyond a building, camp, or city; in the plural, streets or public squares; rarely, open countryside.

A spatial noun that organizes Hebrew geography around the boundary between inside and outside. In its singular form with prepositions, chuts functions almost as an adverb — 'outside the camp' (Deut 23:13), 'outside the city' (Gen 19:16) — defining space relative to whatever enclosure is in view. But in the plural (chutsot), it specializes into 'streets' or 'broad places' within a town, the public zones where life unfolds: children play (Zech 8:5), merchants trade, and mourning spills into the open (2 Sam 1:20). Spanish neatly tracks the split, using 'afuera/fuera' for the generic outside and 'calles' for the urban plural. French 'dehors' covers both with characteristic economy. Proverbs personifies Wisdom crying out 'in the streets' (bachutsot, Prov 1:20), transforming this humble spatial term into a stage for divine revelation.

1. outside, exterior space (119×) The outside, exterior space — the area beyond the walls, door, or boundary of a building, camp, or city. Used with prepositions (min-chuts, 'from outside'; el-chuts, 'to outside'; ba-chuts, 'on the outside') to express location or direction relative to an enclosure. Noah sends the raven 'outside' the ark (Gen 8:7 context); lepers are put 'outside the camp' (Lev 13:46); blood is poured 'outside' the sanctuary. Spanish 'afuera de' and 'fuera de,' French 'dehors' and 'a l'exterieur,' and German 'ausserhalb' all consistently render this fundamental spatial meaning across 119 occurrences. OUTSIDE AND EXTERIOR

en: from-outside, outside | es: afuera-de, fuera, fuera-de | fr: de-à-l'extérieur, dehors, à-l'extérieur | de: ausserhalb, außerhalb, von-ausserhalb Gen 9:22; Gen 19:16; Gen 24:11; Gen 24:31; Exod 21:19

2. street, broad place (42×) Streets, broad places, public squares — the plural form (chutsot) denoting open thoroughfares within a settled area where communal life takes place. David's lament forbids announcing Saul's death 'in the streets of Ashkelon' (2 Sam 1:20); Wisdom cries 'in the streets' (Prov 1:20); children play 'in the streets of Jerusalem' (Zech 8:5). Spanish shifts decisively to 'calles' ('streets') and 'plazas,' marking a clear lexical distinction from the generic 'outside' sense. The 42 occurrences cluster in prophetic and wisdom literature. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-the-streets-of, in-streets-of, in-the-streets | es: En-las-calles, calles, de-las-calles | fr: dehors, et-dehors, streets | de: Aussen, der-streets, draussen 2Sam 1:20; 2Sam 22:43; 1Kgs 20:34; Ps 18:42; Ps 144:13

3. open field, countryside (2×) Open field, countryside — the space beyond any settlement, the rural expanse as opposed to the inhabited zone. Job 5:10 speaks of God sending waters 'upon the open fields' (chutsot), and Proverbs 8:26 references God creating before 'the open places' of the earth existed. This sense extends the inside/outside boundary from the building or camp to the city itself: what lies beyond the town is the open, unsettled terrain. Spanish 'campos' ('fields') and the rarity of only 2 occurrences suggest this is an archaic or literary extension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-fields, the-open-places | es: campos, y-campos | fr: dehors, et-dehors | de: Aussen, und-Aussen Job 5:10; Prov 8:26

4. (1×) Apart from, aside from — an apparent adverbial or prepositional use meaning 'outside of' in the sense of 'besides, except for.' Ecclesiastes 2:25 asks 'who can eat or who can have enjoyment apart from him (chuts mimmeni)?' Spanish 'fuera de' preserves the spatial metaphor — to be 'outside' someone's provision is to lack it entirely. This single occurrence may represent a semantic bleaching of the spatial noun into a logical preposition, paralleling how English 'outside of' can mean 'other than.' OUTSIDE AND EXTERIOR
en: apart-from | es: fuera-de | fr: dehors | de: Aussen Eccl 2:25

חֹר H2352 N-msc (2×)
hole, cavity; used of an asp's den and hiding places where people are imprisoned
This noun denotes a hole or cavity, whether natural or man-made. In Isaiah 11:8, it refers to the hole of an asp (a venomous snake), part of the prophetic vision of the peaceable kingdom where even infants play safely near dangerous creatures. In Isaiah 42:22, the plural form describes holes or dungeons where people are hidden away as prisoners or plunder. The German confusion with 'young men' likely reflects a scribal or translational error conflating this with בחורים (young men).

(2×) A hole or cavity, used both literally (the den of a serpent) and metaphorically (prison cells or dungeons). Isaiah 11:8 uses the singular to describe the asp's hole in a context of messianic peace, while Isaiah 42:22 employs the plural in a context of judgment and captivity. The Spanish 'calabozos' (dungeons) in 42:22 helpfully captures the imprisoning function of these holes. HOLES AND OPENINGS
en: hole-of, in-holes | es: agujero-de, en-calabozos | fr: [חר], jeunes-hommes | de: [בחורים], [חר] Isa 11:8; Isa 42:22

חוּר H2353 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)
white (fabric), fine white linen or cotton; a luxurious textile material
This term refers to white fabric, likely fine linen or possibly cotton, used in royal and luxurious contexts. Both occurrences in Esther describe opulent settings in the Persian court: the palace furnishings in Susa and Mordecai's royal garments. The white material is consistently paired with violet or purple, emphasizing the regal and precious nature of these textiles. BDB notes uncertainty whether the material was cotton or linen, but the context clearly indicates a high-quality white fabric suitable for royalty.

(2×) White fabric or white stuff, a luxurious textile used in royal settings. In Esther 1:6, it describes the white hangings in the palace of Susa, held with cords of fine linen and purple. In Esther 8:15, it forms part of Mordecai's royal attire alongside violet. The consistent pairing with purple and violet (תכלת) across languages confirms this is a prestigious white material, not simply the color white applied to any object. WHITE COLOR
en: and-white, white | es: Blanco, y-blanco | fr: [וחור], [חור] | de: [וחור], [חור] Esth 1:6; Esth 8:15

חוּר H2354 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (15×)
Hur — a personal name borne by Moses' companion, a Judahite ancestor of Bezalel, and others
The name Hur (חוּר, possibly meaning 'white' or 'noble') belongs to several figures, most memorably the man who, alongside Aaron, held up Moses' weary hands during the battle against Amalek at Rephidim (Exod 17:10, 12) and was left in charge when Moses ascended Sinai (Exod 24:14). A Judahite named Hur was the grandfather of Bezalel, the master craftsman of the tabernacle (Exod 31:2; 35:30; 38:22; 1 Chr 2:19–20). Other bearers include a Midianite king slain by Israel (Num 31:8; Josh 13:21) and a post-exilic leader who repaired Jerusalem's wall (Neh 3:9).

Hur (15×) The masculine proper name Hur (חוּר), borne by multiple biblical figures: (a) the companion of Moses and Aaron who supported Moses' hands at Rephidim (Exod 17:10, 12; 24:14), (b) the Judahite grandfather of the tabernacle craftsman Bezalel (Exod 31:2; 35:30; 1 Chr 2:19–20, 50; 4:1, 4), (c) a king of Midian killed alongside Balaam (Num 31:8; Josh 13:21), and (d) a post-exilic official (Neh 3:9; 1 Kgs 4:8). Cross-lingual forms vary slightly between 'Hur' (eng/fra/deu) and 'Jur' (spa). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Chur, Hur, and-Chur | es: Hur, Jur, Y-Jur | fr: Chur, Hur, et-Hur | de: Chur, Hur, [וחור] Exod 17:10; Exod 17:12; Exod 24:14; Exod 31:2; Exod 35:30

חוֹרִי H2355 N-ms (1×)
white cloth, fine linen fabric (Isaiah 19:9)
This rare term describes fine white fabric or linen cloth in Isaiah's oracle against Egypt. BDB connects it to the root for 'white,' suggesting bleached or naturally white cloth. The context in Isaiah 19:9 describes Egyptian weavers who work with this material, emphasizing Egypt's textile industry. The phrase 'those weaving white stuff' points to a specialized craft producing luxury fabrics.

(1×) A specialized textile term appearing only in Isaiah 19:9. The English and Spanish glosses ('white-cloth,' 'tela-blanca') reflect the semantic connection to whiteness, while French and German transliterations suggest lexical uncertainty. The context links this to professional Egyptian weavers, indicating a specific type of fine linen. WHITE COLOR
en: white-cloth | es: tela-blanca | fr: [חורי] | de: [חורי] Isa 19:9

חֹר H2356 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3fp (7×)
A hole, opening, or cavity — in a wall, a door, a chest lid, or as a den or hiding place.
A masculine noun for any kind of hole or opening, whether natural or made by human hands. Its range of application is strikingly diverse: a hole bored into a collection chest (2 Kgs 12:9), a hole in a door through which a hand is thrust (Song 5:4), a hole in the temple wall through which Ezekiel peers at secret idolatry (Ezek 8:7), cave-holes where Israelites hid from the Philistines (1 Sam 14:11), and even eye-sockets wasting away in plague (Zech 14:12). Whether architectural, anatomical, or geological, the word consistently denotes a cavity or aperture.

hole, opening, cavity (7×) A hole, opening, or cavity in a surface or body — ranging from man-made apertures to natural hollows and even anatomical sockets. The word appears in remarkably varied contexts: a hole cut in a chest lid for temple offerings (2 Kgs 12:9), the opening in a door through which the beloved extends his hand (Song 5:4), a hole in the temple wall revealing hidden abominations (Ezek 8:7), rock-holes used as hiding places (1 Sam 14:11), cliff-holes inhabited by outcasts (Job 30:6), lions' dens (Nah 2:12), and eye-sockets consumed by plague (Zech 14:12). Spanish agujero and cuevas capture the 'hole' and 'cave' dimensions respectively. The word's flexibility makes it a general-purpose term for any concavity or aperture. HOLES AND OPENINGS
en: his-holes, hole, hole- | es: agujero, agujeros-de, cuevas-suyas | fr: [בחריהן], [חר], hole | de: [בחריהן], [החר], [חר] 1Sam 14:11; 2Kgs 12:9; Job 30:6; Song 5:4; Ezek 8:7

חָוַר H2357 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (1×)
grow pale, become white (of faces losing color from fear or shame)
This verb describes faces growing pale or white, typically from emotion. In Isaiah 29:22, it appears in parallel with 'be ashamed,' indicating the physical manifestation of shame or fear. The phrase 'his face shall not now grow pale' speaks of Jacob being delivered from embarrassment. Cognate evidence from Arabic and Aramaic confirms the basic sense of whitening or pallor.

(1×) Used exclusively in Isaiah 29:22 to describe facial color change. The Spanish 'palidecerá' (will grow pale) and Arabic ʾ (will turn yellow/pale) capture the physiological sense, while the parallelism with 'be ashamed' shows this is about the visible effects of emotional distress being removed. WHITE COLOR
es: palidecerá | fr: [יחורו] | de: [יחורו] Isa 29:22

חִוָּר H2358 Adj-ms (1×)
white (describing garments in Daniel's vision)
This Aramaic adjective means 'white' and describes the Ancient of Days' robe in Daniel's apocalyptic vision. The term appears only in Daniel 7:9, where white clothing symbolizes purity, holiness, and divine majesty. While the Hebrew cognate is well-attested in Biblical Hebrew, this specifically Aramaic form appears in the Aramaic section of Daniel.

(1×) Appears exclusively in Daniel 7:9 describing divine garments. The consistent translation across languages (English 'white,' Spanish 'blanca,' French 'blanc') shows clear semantic agreement. This is pure color description in a highly symbolic theophanic context where whiteness conveys transcendent purity. WHITE COLOR
en: white | es: blanca | fr: blanc | de: [חור] Dan 7:9

חוּרִי H2359 N-proper-ms (1×)
Huri - personal name of a Gadite in 1 Chronicles 5:14
This personal name identifies a Gadite individual in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles. The name may derive from roots related to whiteness or nobility, though the etymology is uncertain. The Septuagint renders it as 'Ouri,' showing Greek phonetic adaptation of the Hebrew form.

(1×) A personal name appearing solely in 1 Chronicles 5:14 within Gadite genealogies. Most target languages transliterate rather than translate (Spanish 'Juri,' English 'Churi'), treating it as a proper noun without semantic content beyond identification. WHITE COLOR
en: Churi | es: Juri | fr: [חורי] | de: [חורי] 1Chr 5:14

חוּרַי H2360 N-proper-ms (1×)
Hurai - one of David's mighty warriors from the wadis of Gaash
This name identifies one of David's elite fighting men in 1 Chronicles 11:32. The parallel passage in 2 Samuel 23:30 has 'Hiddai' instead, suggesting textual variation or different forms of the same name. The geographic designation 'from the wadis of Gaash' locates him in the hill country of Ephraim.

(1×) Personal name occurring uniquely in 1 Chronicles 11:32, with a parallel variant 'Hiddai' in 2 Samuel 23:30. Target languages consistently transliterate (Spanish 'Jurai,' English 'Hurai'), recognizing this as a proper noun identifying one specific warrior among David's mighty men. WHITE COLOR
en: Churai | es: Jurai | fr: [חורי] | de: [חורי] 1Chr 11:32

חִירָם H2361 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (12×)
Huram/Hiram – king of Tyre allied with David and Solomon; also the Tyrian master artisan Huram (churam), also spelled Hiram (chiram), is a proper name borne by two notable figures: the Phoenician king of Tyre who supplied cedar, gold, and skilled labor for David's palace and Solomon's Temple (1 Chr 14:1; 2 Chr 2:3, 11-12), and the master artisan of mixed Tyrian-Israelite parentage whom King Huram sent to Solomon to execute the Temple's bronze work (2 Chr 2:13; 4:11, 16). The alternate spellings Hiram and Huram reflect dialectal variation in the Hebrew transmission, not distinct individuals. The name's twelve occurrences cluster in Chronicles' account of the Solomonic Temple construction.

Churam (12×) The proper name Huram (Hiram), designating both the king of Tyre who allied with David and Solomon for the Temple project (1 Chr 14:1; 2 Chr 2:3) and the master bronze artisan sent by that king (2 Chr 2:13; 4:11). The spelling variants Hiram/Huram reflect orthographic and dialectal differences in transmission, not semantic distinctions. All twelve occurrences cluster in the Chronicler's Temple narrative. Cross-lingual transliterations – English Hiram/Huram, Spanish Juram/Hiram, French Huram – confirm monosemous proper-noun status. HIRAM PERSONAL NAME
en: (Churam), Churam, and-Churam | es: (Juram), Hiram, Juram | fr: Huram, et-Huram, zu-Huram | de: Huram, fuer-Huram, und-Huram 1Chr 8:5; 1Chr 14:1; 2Chr 2:3; 2Chr 2:11; 2Chr 2:12

חַוְרָן H2362 N-proper-fs (2×)
Hauran, a district southeast of Mount Hermon in ancient Syria
Hauran designates a geographical region southeast of Mount Hermon, extending between Jaulan and Lejah toward the Syrian desert. Ezekiel mentions it twice in his vision of the restored land's boundaries, describing the border of Hauran in relation to Damascus. The name's etymology is uncertain—proposals include 'black land' (referring to the basaltic soil), 'land of caves,' or 'hollow land,' though none can be confirmed. The region was significant in both biblical and post-biblical Jewish history.

(2×) The territorial name Hauran appears only in Ezekiel 47, defining the northeastern boundary of the restored Israel. Verse 16 mentions 'the border of Hauran,' and verse 18 distinguishes it from Damascus. The multilingual transliterations (Spanish 'Jaurán,' French 'Havran') reflect the known Arabic form ḥawrān), preserving the connection to the historical region that remained significant in later periods. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chavran | es: Jaurán | fr: Havran | de: [חורן] Ezek 47:16; Ezek 47:18

H2363 V-Qal-Imp-ms / 3fs (1×)
make haste, hurry (imperative form in Psalm 71:12)
This verb means to hasten or hurry, appearing here as an urgent imperative addressed to God. In Psalm 71:12, the psalmist cries 'make haste to help me,' expressing desperate need for divine intervention. The verb conveys both speed and urgency, often used in contexts of distress or danger where immediate action is needed.

(1×) An imperative form in Psalm 71:12 calling for swift divine assistance. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'apresúrate,' French 'se-hâter,' German 'machen-haste') consistently renders this as urgent hastening, fitting the psalm's plea for God not to delay in helping the one who is afflicted. HASTE AND URGENCY
en: make-haste | es: apresúrate | fr: se-hâter | de: machen-haste Ps 71:12

חוּשׁ H2363a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (18×)
To hasten, hurry; make haste (Qal intransitive); cause to hurry, accelerate (Hifil causative).
A verb of urgent speed found across poetry, prophecy, and narrative. In the Qal stem it describes personal haste — the psalmist declares 'I hurried and did not delay to keep your commandments' (Ps 119:60), and Samuel's lad is told to hurry (1 Sam 20:38). Spanish consistently renders 'apresurarse' and 'apresurar.' The prophetic name Maher-Shalal-Hash-Baz (Isa 8:1, 3) embeds this root to signal that plunder comes swiftly. In the Hifil stem the meaning shifts to causative acceleration — 'let him hasten his work' (Isa 5:19), and the promise of Isaiah 60:22 that God 'will hasten it in its time.'

1. to hurry, make haste (13×) Qal intransitive: to hurry, make haste, move with urgency. Used of persons acting quickly, whether in obedience (Ps 119:60), military readiness (Num 32:17), or figuratively of feet hastening toward deceit (Job 31:5). The Spanish 'me apresuré' and 'apresúrate' mirror the personal, intransitive character. The root appears in the prophetic name Maher-Shalal-Hash-Baz, signaling the speed of coming judgment. HASTE AND URGENCY
en: I-hurried, and-has-hastened, and-hastens | es: Apresúrate, Me-apresuré, apresúrate | fr: et-hastens, et-se-hâter, hurrying | de: [ותחש], [חושי], [חש] Num 32:17; Deut 32:35; 1Sam 20:38; Job 20:2; Job 31:5

2. to hasten, cause to hurry (5×) Hifil causative: to cause something to happen quickly, to accelerate an event or outcome. Isaiah 5:19 records scoffers taunting God to 'hurry his work,' and Isaiah 60:22 promises divine acceleration 'in its time.' In Judges 20:37 the ambush party 'hastened' its assault. The shift from intransitive personal haste to transitive causation is clear in the multilingual evidence — Spanish moves from reflexive 'apresurarse' to transitive 'acelerar.' HASTE AND URGENCY
en: I-would-hasten, hurried, let-him-hurry | es: lo-aceleraré, me-apresuraría, que-se-dé-prisa | fr: [אחישנה], [יחיש], [יחישה] | de: [אחישנה], [יחיש], [יחישה] Judg 20:37; Ps 55:8; Isa 5:19; Isa 28:16; Isa 60:22

חוּשׁ H2363b V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (1×)
feel, enjoy (sensory perception and pleasure)
This distinct verbal root means to feel or perceive through the senses, specifically enjoying pleasure. Ecclesiastes 2:25 asks rhetorically 'who can enjoy?' in parallel with 'who can eat?' The verb emphasizes experiential, sensory enjoyment rather than mere existence. Cognates in Arabic, Aramaic, and Ethiopic confirm this semantic range of sensory feeling and perception.

(1×) Appears only in Ecclesiastes 2:25 asking who can experience pleasure. The English 'will-enjoy' captures the hedonistic sense, though Spanish 'se-apurará' (will hurry) reflects confusion with the homophonous haste-verb. The context clearly requires a verb of sensory enjoyment parallel to eating. HASTE AND URGENCY
en: will-enjoy | es: se-apurará | fr: se-hâter | de: [יחוש] Eccl 2:25

חוּשָׁה H2364 N-proper-ms (1×)
Hushah - geographical name in Judah (1 Chronicles 4:4)
This name appears in Judahite genealogies as either a person or place. The text calls it a 'son' of Hur, which in genealogical lists can indicate either direct descent or geographic/tribal affiliation with a location. The lack of further biblical mention leaves its precise nature ambiguous.

(1×) Occurs exclusively in 1 Chronicles 4:4 in Judahite genealogies. Most languages transliterate (Spanish 'Jusa,' English 'Hushah'), treating it as a proper name. The phrase 'son of Hur' could indicate either a personal descendant or a place-name associated with the Hur clan in Judah. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chushah | es: Jusa | fr: [חושה] | de: [חושה] 1Chr 4:4

חוּשַׁי H2365 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (14×)
Hushai — personal name of David's trusted counselor, 'the Archite,' who thwarted Absalom's revolt.
A proper name identifying Hushai the Archite, one of David's most loyal advisors, designated his 'friend' (רֵעֶה דָּוִד). During Absalom's rebellion, David sent Hushai back to Jerusalem to counter Ahithophel's counsel — a stratagem that proved decisive when Hushai persuaded Absalom to delay his pursuit, buying David time to escape across the Jordan (2 Sam 15:32–17:16). His son Baana later served as one of Solomon's district officers (1 Kgs 4:16). French and German transliterate the name as 'Huschai,' while Spanish renders it 'Jusai/Jushai.'

Hushai (proper noun, personal name) (14×) The Hebrew personal name Hushai (חוּשַׁי), identifying primarily Hushai the Archite, David's confidant and counselor who played a pivotal role in Absalom's rebellion by undermining Ahithophel's shrewd military advice (2 Sam 15:32–17:16). Called 'David's friend' (רֵעֶה דָּוִד), a title that may designate a formal court position. Also referenced as the father of Baana, one of Solomon's twelve district governors (1 Kgs 4:16). The name appears in 1 Chronicles 27:33 confirming his role alongside Ahithophel. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chushai, Hushai, and-Chushai | es: Jusai, Jushai, a-Jusai | fr: Huschaï, [וחושי], à-Huschaï | de: Huschai, [וחושי], zu-Huschai 2Sam 15:32; 2Sam 15:37; 2Sam 16:16; 2Sam 16:17

חוּשִׁים H2366a N-proper-fs (2×)
Hushim, wife of Shaharaim of the tribe of Benjamin Hushim (also spelled Chushim in variant forms) was one of the wives of Shaharaim, a Benjamite whose complex genealogy is recorded in 1 Chronicles 8. The name appears with slight orthographic variation in the two verses, reflecting the common fluidity in Hebrew spelling of proper names. As a female proper name, Hushim is distinct from the male name Hushim associated with the tribe of Dan in Genesis 46.

(2×) The personal name of Shaharaim's wife in the Benjamite genealogies of 1 Chronicles 8. The name appears in verses 8 and 11 with minor spelling variation (חושים and חשים). The Spanish transliterations 'Jusim' and 'Y-de-Jusim' (and from Jusim) show the name both alone and in construct relationship, while other languages preserve the 'H' sound (Hushim, Chushim). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13337 WITH 3 SENSES
en: Chushim, and-from-Chushim | es: Jusim, Y-de-Jusim | fr: [ומחשים], [חושים] | de: [ומחשים], [חושים] 1Chr 8:8; 1Chr 8:11

חֻשִׁים H2366b N-proper-ms (2×)
Hushim, a son of Dan listed in Genesis 46 and 1 Chronicles 7
Hushim was a son of Dan according to Genesis 46:23, making him one of Jacob's grandsons who went down to Egypt. The name appears in variant spellings: Hushim in Genesis 46 and 1 Chronicles 7:12, but as Shuham in Numbers 26:42 (where his descendants are called Shuhamites). This kind of orthographic variation is common in biblical genealogies, where the same individual or clan may be recorded with different but related name forms across multiple texts.

(2×) The proper name of Dan's son in the patriarchal genealogies. Genesis 46:23 records 'the sons of Dan: Hushim' (using the plural form for a single son), while 1 Chronicles 7:12 mentions 'Hushim the sons of Aher.' The connection to Shuham of Numbers 26 is widely recognized by scholars. The multilingual glosses maintain the transliterated form with variations in initial consonant (H/J/Ch) according to language conventions. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13337 WITH 3 SENSES
en: Chushim, Hushim | es: Jushim, Jusim | fr: Hushim, [חשם] | de: Chuschim, [חשם] Gen 46:23; 1Chr 7:12

חֻשָׁם H2367 N-proper-ms (4×)
Husham; a personal name, an Edomite king from the land of the Temanites.
A proper name borne by an early king of Edom who succeeded Jobab and reigned from the land of the Temanites. He appears in both the Genesis 36 king-list and its parallel in 1 Chronicles 1. The name may derive from a root suggesting haste or eagerness. Spanish renders Jusam, while French and German retain forms close to the Hebrew Husham, reflecting consistent cross-tradition recognition of this Edomite ruler.

(4×) Husham (חֻשָׁם / חוּשָׁם), a king of Edom from the land of the Temanites, listed in the genealogical king-lists of Genesis 36:34–35 and 1 Chronicles 1:45–46. He succeeded Jobab son of Zerah and was in turn succeeded by Hadad son of Bedad. The name appears in two slightly different vowelizations across these passages, but refers to the same individual. The Edomite king-lists preserve pre-Israelite political history of the region south of the Dead Sea. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chusham, Husham | es: Jusam, Jusham | fr: Husham, [חוּשָׁם] | de: Chuscham, [חוּשָׁם] Gen 36:34; Gen 36:35; 1Chr 1:45; 1Chr 1:46

חֹתָם H2368 N-ms (14×)

A seal or signet-ring used for authenticating documents, marking ownership, and as a figure of preciousness.

Denotes both the physical seal-stone and the signet ring worn on the hand or hung from a cord around the neck. Judah pledges his seal-cord to Tamar as surety (Gen 38:18), Jezebel stamps Naboth's death warrant with Ahab's seal (1 Kgs 21:8), and the priestly vestments are engraved 'like the engravings of a seal' (Exod 28:11, 21, 36). In prophetic speech, Haggai likens Zerubbabel to God's signet ring (Hag 2:23), and Song of Solomon 8:6 pleads, 'Set me as a seal upon your heart.' Spanish distinguishes 'sello' (seal) from 'anillo de sellar' (signet ring), while German uses 'Siegel.'

seal, signet-ring (14×) A seal or signet-ring (חֹתָם / חוֹתָם) — a personal object of authentication and authority. Physically, it could be hung from a cord about the neck (Gen 38:18) or worn on the right hand (Jer 22:24). Its uses span the practical — stamping royal documents (1 Kgs 21:8) and engraving priestly stones with the technique described as 'engravings of a seal' (Exod 28:11, 39:6) — and the figurative, where God declares Zerubbabel his signet (Hag 2:23) and the beloved asks to be set as a seal upon the heart (Song 8:6). Its preciousness makes it apt metaphor for what is uniquely treasured. SEAL SIGNET

en: a-seal, as-signet-ring, like-the-seal | es: anillo-de-sellar, como-sello, consu-sello | fr: [חוֹתָם], avec-son-scelle, comme-un-sceau | de: [חוֹתָם], [כְּחוֹתָם], dein-Siegel Gen 38:18; Exod 28:11; Exod 28:21; Exod 28:36; Exod 39:6

חוֹתָם H2369 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hotham, the name of two men in the tribe of Asher and among David's warriors

Hotham is a personal name borne by two different men in the biblical record. The first was a descendant of Asher mentioned in 1 Chronicles 7:32 (where he is identified with Helem in verse 35). The second was the father of two of David's mighty warriors listed in 1 Chronicles 11:44. The name appears only in Chronicles and is preserved in various forms in the ancient versions, suggesting some uncertainty about its exact pronunciation.

(2×) A masculine proper name appearing in Asherite genealogies and Davidic warrior lists. In 1 Chronicles 7:32, Hotham is listed among the sons of Heber in Asher's lineage. In 1 Chronicles 11:44, he is identified as the father of Shama and Jeiel, two of David's valiant men. The Septuagint variations (Χωθαν, Κωθαν) reflect attempts to render an unfamiliar Hebrew name in Greek, while modern translations consistently use Hotham or its equivalent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Chotam | es: Jotam | fr: [חוֹתָם] | de: [חוֹתָם] 1Chr 7:32; 1Chr 11:44

חָזָה H2370 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (31×)

To see or behold, especially visions and dreams; the Aramaic verb for prophetic sight in Daniel and Ezra.

This Aramaic verb chaza is the primary word for visionary perception in the book of Daniel, where nearly all its occurrences are concentrated. It describes Nebuchadnezzar seeing a great statue in his dream (Dan 2:31), Daniel beholding the four beasts rising from the sea (Dan 7:2-7), and the Ancient of Days taking his throne (Dan 7:9). Spanish distinguishes the active participial sense vividly with estabas viendo (you were seeing), capturing the ongoing, unfolding quality of apocalyptic vision. A single passive use in Daniel 3:19 describes Nebuchadnezzar's changed countenance being visible to onlookers.

1. to see, behold (active) (30×) To see, behold, or perceive actively, especially in prophetic dreams and visions. This dominant sense (30x) pervades Daniel's apocalyptic narratives and appears once in Ezra 4:14. The participial form chazeh is characteristically used in periphrastic constructions for ongoing vision: I was seeing (Dan 7:4, 7, 9). Spanish estabas viendo and French voir capture the active, experiential quality. Key passages include Nebuchadnezzar's dream image (Dan 2:31) and Daniel's vision of the Son of Man (Dan 7:13). SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: I-saw, seeing, you-saw | es: Estabas-viendo, Viendo, estabas-viendo | fr: voir | de: sehen Ezra 4:14; Dan 2:8; Dan 2:26; Dan 2:31; Dan 2:34

2. to be seen, be visible (1×) To be seen, to appear visible to others, a passive sense indicating that something is perceived rather than perceiving. This single occurrence (Dan 3:19) uses the passive participle to describe Nebuchadnezzar's facial expression changing visibly when he was enraged at Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. Spanish era visto makes the passive voice explicit, while French and German retain the bare infinitive voir/sehen without distinguishing voice. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: it-was-seen | es: era-visto | fr: voir | de: sehen Dan 3:19

חֲזָהאֵל H2371 N-proper-ms (23×)

Hazael; proper name of the Aramean king of Damascus who oppressed Israel during the mid-9th century BCE.

A proper noun meaning 'God sees' (from Aramaic/Assyrian Ḥaza-ʾilu), designating the powerful king of Damascus who rose to power by assassinating Ben-Hadad (2 Kgs 8:15). Elijah was first commanded to anoint him (1 Kgs 19:15), and Elisha wept foreseeing the devastation Hazael would bring upon Israel (2 Kgs 8:11-12). His military campaigns ravaged Israel's Transjordanian territories under Jehu (2 Kgs 10:32) and pressed westward to threaten Jerusalem, bought off only by temple gold (2 Kgs 12:17-18). Amos prophesies fire upon 'the house of Hazael' (Amos 1:4), turning the personal name into a byword for Aramean aggression.

Hazael (proper name) (23×) The personal name Hazael, the Aramean king of Damascus (mid-9th century BCE) who seized the throne by regicide (2 Kgs 8:15), ravaged Israel's territories (2 Kgs 10:32; 13:3, 22), and threatened Judah (2 Kgs 12:17-18). Transliterations vary — English 'Hazael,' Spanish 'Jazael,' French 'Hazaël' — but all identify the same figure. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chazael, Hazael, Khazael | es: Hazael, Jazael | fr: Chazael, Hazaël, [חֲזָאֵל] | de: Chazael, Hazael, [חֲזָאֵל] 1Kgs 19:15; 1Kgs 19:17; 2Kgs 8:8; 2Kgs 8:9; 2Kgs 8:12

חָזָה H2372 V-Qal-Imperf-3fp (51×)

To see, behold, perceive; poetic synonym of ra'ah, ranging from physical sight to prophetic vision and reverent contemplation.

Chazah is the elevated, predominantly poetic verb for seeing in Biblical Hebrew — the word prophets and psalmists reach for when ordinary ra'ah feels too plain. Nearly confined to poetry and prophecy, it carries an inherent dignity that makes it the natural vehicle for Balaam's oracles ('the vision of the Almighty he sees,' Num 24:4), the Psalms' longing to 'gaze upon the beauty of YHWH' (Ps 27:4), and Isaiah's visionary commands. The Aramaic cognate chaza is the standard word for 'see' (as in Daniel's visions), and Arabic haza preserves the inner-perception nuance that BDB notes: 'perceive with the inner vision.' Spanish contemplar appears repeatedly in the reverential senses, while Korean and German both struggle to find a single word that captures the blend of visual perception and spiritual insight that makes chazah distinctive.

1. see, perceive visually (34×) Basic visual perception — to see, perceive, look at — the broadest sense cluster at 34 occurrences spanning all conjugations and persons. In Exod 18:21 Jethro tells Moses 'you shall select' (literally 'you shall see/identify') capable men; in Job 15:17 Eliphaz says 'what I have seen, I will declare.' The multilingual evidence shows a clean mapping to standard sight vocabulary: German schauen, Spanish ver/vieron, French voir. This is chazah at its most semantically unmarked, though even here the poetic register distinguishes it from the prosaic ra'ah. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: I-will-see, and-they-saw, do-you-see | es: Has-visto, Vieron, han-visto | fr: –voir, contempler, et-contempler | de: schauen, schaute, sieht Exod 18:21; Num 24:4; Num 24:16; Job 8:17; Job 15:17

2. gaze upon, contemplate (8×) To gaze upon or contemplate with sustained, reverent attention — 8 occurrences in the Psalms and Wisdom literature. Ps 27:4 expresses the psalmist's one desire: 'to gaze upon the beauty of YHWH'; Ps 63:2 recalls 'I have gazed upon you in the sanctuary'; Prov 24:32 describes looking and 'taking it to heart.' Spanish contemplar and French contempler both select the specifically reverential-attention verb rather than generic voir/ver, confirming a real lexical distinction. The sense combines visual perception with interior reflection — seeing that transforms the seer. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: I-have-gazed-upon-You, and-I-looked, and-let-gaze | es: contemplaré, contemplaréis, la-contemplo- | fr: contempler, et-contempler, et-nous-te-contemplerons. | de: ich-haben-gazed-auf-du, schaute, soll-behold Job 36:25; Ps 17:15; Ps 27:4; Ps 63:2; Prov 24:32

3. behold, look (imperative) (5×) Imperative summons — 'behold! look!' — 5 occurrences where chazah functions as a command to direct attention toward something momentous. In Ps 46:8 'come, behold the works of YHWH'; in Isa 33:20 'look upon Zion, the city of our festivals.' Exod 24:11 records the extraordinary moment when the elders of Israel 'beheld God, and ate and drank.' German schauen and French contempler maintain the elevated register, while Spanish mira and vean select the imperative-specific forms. The imperative force transforms seeing into an act of obedient attention. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: Behold, and-they-beheld, behold | es: mira, vean, y-contemplaron | fr: contempler, et-ils-contempla | de: behold, lass-sehen, schauen Exod 24:11; Ps 17:2; Ps 46:8; Isa 33:20; Isa 48:6

4. see prophetically, envision (3×) To see prophetically, to receive or perceive a vision — 3 occurrences where chazah denotes specifically revelatory seeing. In Isa 30:10 the people tell the seers 'do not see [visions] for us' (al techzu) and the prophets 'do not prophesy' — the parallelism with 'prophesy' confirms the visionary sense. Ps 11:7 may belong here: 'the upright shall behold his face.' Spanish profeticeis and profetizad ('prophesy!') map directly to this visionary register. This sense connects to the cognate noun chazon ('vision') and the title chozeh ('seer'), confirming chazah as the verb of prophetic perception. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: prophesy, shall-behold | es: profeticéis, profetizad, verá | fr: contempler | de: schauen, soll-behold Ps 11:7; Isa 30:10

5. (1×) A difficult single occurrence at Job 23:9 where Job says he cannot perceive or discern God's presence despite searching: 'I turn to the right but I cannot behold him' (lo' achaz). English 'I behold' and Spanish lo alcanzo ('I reach/perceive') both struggle with the negated perception, while German ergriff ('grasped') shifts toward a tactile metaphor. The context suggests frustrated or failed perception — the opposite of sense 2's contemplative gazing. Job strains to see God but the vision eludes him, a poignant inversion of the psalmist's confident 'I shall behold your face' (Ps 17:15). SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: I-behold | es: lo-alcanzo; | fr: contempler | de: ergriff Job 23:9

חָזֶה H2373 Prep-k / N-msc (13×)

Breast or chest of a sacrificial animal, designated as a wave offering for the priests Exclusively a Priestly term for the breast portion of a sacrificial animal that was ritually waved before the LORD and then given to the Aaronic priests as their allotted share. Every one of its 13 occurrences sits within sacrificial legislation — the ram of ordination (Exod 29:26-27), the peace offering (Lev 7:30-34), and the Nazirite sacrifice (Num 6:20). Spanish 'pecho,' French 'poitrine,' and German 'Brust' all confirm the anatomical meaning. The word maps the intersection of butchery, liturgy, and priestly provision.

breast, chest (body part) (13×) The breast or chest portion of a sacrificial animal set apart as a wave offering and designated as the priestly share. Used only in Priestly legislation: the installation offering (Exod 29:26-27; Lev 8:29), the peace offering (Lev 7:30-31, 34; 9:20-21; 10:14-15), and the Nazirite sacrifice (Num 6:20; cf. Num 18:18). It always appears alongside the waving ritual, marking it as both anatomical term and cultic category. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-breast-of, breast-of, like-breast-of | es: como-pecho-de, el-pecho, los-pechos | fr: comme-poitrine-de, et-le-poitrine-de, le-breasts | de: Brust-von, breast-von, der-Brust Exod 29:26; Exod 29:27; Lev 7:30; Lev 7:31

חֹזֶה H2374 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (21×)

A seer or visionary prophet who receives divine revelations; rarely, a pact or covenant agreement.

Denotes a person gifted with prophetic sight, one who perceives divine visions rather than merely hearing oracles. Named seers include Gad (2 Sam 24:11), Amos (Amos 7:12), and temple musicians like Heman and Asaph, revealing that visionary experience extended beyond classical prophets to worship leaders. The Spanish 'vidente' and French 'voyant' preserve this visual emphasis beautifully. In one striking occurrence (Isa 28:15), the same form may denote a 'pact' or 'covenant' – Israel's grim agreement with death – though this likely reflects a distinct homonymous root.

1. seer, visionary prophet (20×) A person who receives divine visions or revelations, functioning as a substantive title for prophetic figures. Synonymous with roeh and nabi but stressing the visual dimension of prophetic experience. Applied to named prophets like Gad (2 Sam 24:11, 1 Chr 21:9), Amos (Amos 7:12), and Iddo (2 Chr 9:29), as well as temple singers – Heman (1 Chr 25:5), Asaph (2 Chr 29:30), Jeduthun (2 Chr 35:15) – suggesting that musical worship involved visionary perception. Spanish 'vidente' and German 'Seher' both capture this seeing emphasis. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: and-the-seeing, and-to-the-prophets, seeing | es: Vidente, el-vidente, los-que-miran | fr: [החזים], [ולחזים], et-voyant | de: Seher, [החזים], [ולחזים] 2Sam 24:11; 2Kgs 17:13; 1Chr 21:9; 1Chr 25:5; 1Chr 29:29

2. pact, covenant, agreement (1×) A binding pact or compact between parties, attested only in Isaiah 28:15 where Israel is accused of making a 'covenant with death.' English renders this 'pact,' while Spanish interestingly retains 'vision,' reflecting interpretive ambiguity. Most scholars treat this as a homonymous root distinct from the prophetic 'seer' sense, though the ironic wordplay – a false 'vision' becoming a deadly 'pact' – may be intentional. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-pact | es: visión | fr: [חזה] | de: [חזה] Isa 28:15

חֲזוֹ H2375 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hazo - son of Nahor, Abraham's brother (Genesis 22:22)

This personal name identifies one of the eight sons born to Nahor and Milcah, making him Abraham's nephew. Genesis 22:22 lists him in the genealogy of Nahor's family. Some scholars connect the name to the Assyrian place-name Hazû mentioned alongside Buz, suggesting the name may also represent a tribal or geographic entity descended from this ancestor.

(1×) Personal name in Genesis 22:22 within the Nahor genealogy. Translations consistently render this as a proper noun (Spanish 'Chazo,' French/English 'Hazo,' German 'Chaso'). The potential connection to Assyrian Hazû suggests this name may designate both an individual and the tribal-territorial group descended from him. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hazo | es: Chazo | fr: Hazo | de: Chaso Gen 22:22

חֲזִי H2376 Prep-b / N-mpc (12×)

Vision or prophetic revelation; outward appearance (Aramaic, used in Daniel)

An Aramaic noun found exclusively in Daniel, ḥezū designates a vision granted by God, especially the night visions that structure Daniel's apocalyptic chapters. The phrase 'visions of my head upon my bed' (Dan 4:5, 10; 7:1, 15) treats these revelations as something seen inwardly by the mind rather than by the eyes. In one instance (Dan 7:20), the word shifts to denote outward physical appearance — the look of the little horn whose appearance was 'greater than its fellows.' Arabic ruʾyā, Korean hwansang (환상), and Swahili maono all render the visionary sense, while the single 'appearance' usage aligns with the Hebrew cognate ḥāzōn in its rarer concrete meaning.

1. vision, prophetic revelation (11×) A prophetic vision or divinely granted revelation, the dominant meaning throughout Daniel. The construct phrase 'visions of the night' (ḥezwē lēlyā, Dan 2:19; 7:2, 7, 13) and 'visions of my head' (ḥezwē rēʾšā, Dan 2:28; 4:2, 7, 10; 7:1, 15) present these as supernatural disclosures received during sleep or trance. Arabic ruʾyā, Korean 환상들 (hwansangdeul), and Swahili maono ya usiku all converge on the revelatory sense. Daniel 2:19 narrates the pivotal moment when Nebuchadnezzar's mystery is revealed to Daniel 'in a vision of the night.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-visions-of, in-my-vision, in-vision-of | es: en-las-visiones-de, en-visiones-de, en-visión-de | fr: [בחזוא], [חזר], dans-les-visions | de: Gesicht, und-Gesicht Dan 2:19; Dan 2:28; Dan 4:5; Dan 4:9; Dan 4:10

2. appearance, outward look (1×) The outward appearance or visible aspect of something, distinct from inner prophetic experience. Used only in Daniel 7:20, where it describes the imposing look of the little horn whose 'appearance was greater than its fellows.' The shift from revelation to physical look parallels the Hebrew cognate ḥāzōn, which can likewise denote either a prophetic vision or a spectacle seen with the eyes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-appearance | es: y-apariencia-de-él | fr: [וחזוה] | de: und-Gesicht Dan 7:20

חָזוֹן H2377 Prep-b (35×)

vision — a prophetic revelation received in an ecstatic or visionary state, or the prophetic oracle itself

Chazon is a masculine noun meaning 'vision' or 'prophetic revelation,' derived from the verb chazah ('to see, perceive'). Its 35 occurrences cluster in prophetic and apocalyptic literature. The word carries a double sense: both the act of visionary perception and the content received. Book superscriptions use it as a genre marker — 'the vision of Isaiah' (Isa 1:1), 'the vision of Obadiah' (Obad 1:1), 'the vision of Nahum' (Nah 1:1) — framing entire prophetic books as disclosed revelation. Proverbs 29:18 offers the famous wisdom dictum: 'where there is no chazon, the people cast off restraint.' Daniel uses the term extensively for apocalyptic visions requiring interpretation (Dan 8:1-2, 13, 15, 17, 26). Lamentations 2:9 describes exile's darkest dimension: 'her prophets find no chazon from the LORD.'

vision of (35×) A prophetic vision or divine revelation received through ecstatic perception, also denoting the resulting oracle or prophetic message. Functions in three registers: as a book-level genre label in prophetic superscriptions (Isa 1:1; Obad 1:1; Nah 1:1), framing the entire work as divinely disclosed; as a specific visionary experience in narrative contexts, especially Daniel's apocalyptic visions (Dan 8:1-2, 15, 17, 26; 10:14); and as a general term for prophetic activity whose absence signals covenant breakdown (1 Sam 3:1; Prov 29:18; Lam 2:9; Ezek 7:26). Often paralleled with qesem ('divination,' Mic 3:6) or chalom ('dream,' Dan 1:17). Spanish 'vision,' French 'vision,' German 'Gesicht/Vision' preserve the core semantic range. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-vision, the-vision, vision | es: La-visión, Visión-de, la-visión | fr: [החזון], vision, חזון | de: Gesicht, Vision 1Sam 3:1; 1Chr 17:15; 2Chr 32:32; Ps 89:19; Prov 29:18

חָזוֹת H2378 Conj-w (1×)

visions (prophetic visions, specifically of the prophet Iddo)

This term means 'visions' in the sense of prophetic revelations. It appears in 2 Chronicles 9:29 as part of a title: 'in the visions of Iddo the seer.' This phrase refers to a collection of prophetic-historical writings attributed to the prophet Iddo, now lost. The word shares the same root as the more common term for prophetic vision.

(1×) Found uniquely in 2 Chronicles 9:29 identifying a prophetic source document. The phrase 'in the visions of Iddo' (Spanish 'en-visiones-de,' English 'and-in-the-visions-of') designates a titled collection of prophetic material, suggesting a recognized literary genre of vision-based historical writing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-the-visions-of | es: y-en-visiones-de | fr: [ובחזות] | de: [ובחזות] 2Chr 9:29

חָזוּת H2379 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3ms (2×)

visibility, sight; the visible appearance or extent of the great tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream

This Aramaic noun, appearing only in Daniel 4, denotes visibility or the extent to which something can be seen. It describes the great tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, whose visibility or sight reached to the ends of the earth. The term emphasizes not just the tree's height but its conspicuous, far-reaching presence—visible from every direction. The word appears with a third-person feminine suffix, referring back to the tree (which is feminine in Aramaic).

(2×) The visible extent or visibility of an object, specifically used of the cosmic tree in Nebuchadnezzar's vision. Daniel 4:11 and 4:20 both use the phrase 'and its visibility (reached) to the ends of all the earth,' emphasizing the universal scope of the tree's appearance. The multilingual glosses ('visibility,' 'visibilidad') consistently capture this sense of being seen or observable across great distances, appropriate to the apocalyptic imagery of the passage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-its-visibility | es: y-su-visibilidad | fr: [וחזותה] | de: [וחזותה] Dan 4:11; Dan 4:20

חָזוּת H2380 Conj-w / N-fsc / 2mp (5×)

vision, prophetic oracle; also agreement or pact (as something 'seen' or envisioned with another party)

Related to the verb chazah ('to see, perceive'), this noun denotes a prophetic vision or oracle, and by extension an agreement or compact. Isaiah uses it for a harsh divine revelation (Isa 21:2), a sealed prophetic vision incomprehensible to its recipients (Isa 29:11), and controversially for Judah's 'pact with Sheol' (Isa 28:18). In Daniel, it describes a conspicuous feature – the prominent horn of the goat (Dan 8:5, 8). Spanish 'vision' and French 'vision' preserve the prophetic sense, while the rendering 'pact' in English and Spanish for Isa 28:18 reflects the secondary meaning.

(5×) A prophetic vision or oracle received by a seer, as in Isa 21:2 ('a harsh vision is declared to me') and Isa 29:11 where the entire prophetic message has become like a sealed document. French and Spanish uniformly render 'vision,' reflecting the core prophetic meaning tied to the verb chazah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-your-pact, conspicuous, the-vision | es: Visión, aspecto-de, visión | fr: [וחזותכם], [חזות], vision | de: [וחזותכם], [חזות] Isa 21:2; Isa 28:18; Isa 29:11; Dan 8:5; Dan 8:8

חֲזִיאֵל H2381 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Haziel - Levite of Gershonite lineage, time of Solomon

This theophoric name means 'vision of El/God' and identifies a Levite from the Gershonite line during Solomon's reign. First Chronicles 23:9 lists him among the Levitical families being organized for temple service. The name combines the vision-root with the divine name El, suggesting parents who valued prophetic or revelatory experience.

(1×) Personal name appearing solely in 1 Chronicles 23:9 in Levitical genealogies. Most languages transliterate with phonetic adaptations (Spanish 'Jaziel,' English 'and-Haziel'). The theophoric composition 'vision-of-El' fits the pattern of Levitical names emphasizing spiritual or cultic concepts. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Chaziel | es: y-Jaziel | fr: [וחזיאל] | de: [וחזיאל] 1Chr 23:9

חֲזָיָה H2382 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hazaiah - Judahite chief, 'Yahweh has seen' (Nehemiah 11:5)

This theophoric personal name means 'Yahweh has seen' and identifies a leader among the Judahites in post-exilic Jerusalem. Nehemiah 11:5 lists him in the genealogy of those who settled in Jerusalem after the return from Babylon. The name expresses confidence in divine providence and oversight.

(1×) Found exclusively in Nehemiah 11:5 among the chiefs of Judah resettling Jerusalem. Target languages transliterate (Spanish 'Hazayas,' English 'Hazaiah'), treating this as a proper noun. The theophoric meaning 'Yah-has-seen' reflects post-exilic naming practices emphasizing divine attention to the restored community. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chazayah | es: Hazayas | fr: [חזיה] | de: [חזיה] Neh 11:5

חֲזִיאֵל H2383 N-proper-ms (1×)

Hezion - ancestor of Ben-Hadad, king of Aram (1 Kings 15:18)

This personal name means 'vision' and identifies the grandfather of Ben-Hadad, an Aramean king contemporary with Israel's monarchy. First Kings 15:18 lists him in the genealogy when describing diplomatic relations between Israel and Damascus. Some scholars propose textual emendations based on the Septuagint, but the Masoretic form is retained in most translations.

(1×) Personal name in 1 Kings 15:18 within Aramean royal genealogy. Translations universally render this as a proper noun (Spanish 'Jezyón,' French/German/English 'Hezion'). The name, meaning 'vision,' connects to the prophetic vocabulary, perhaps indicating high social status or religious significance in Aramean culture. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chezyon | es: Jezyón | fr: Chezyon | de: Chezyon 1Kgs 15:18

חָזוֹן H2384 Art / N-ms (9×)

Vision, prophetic revelation; a supernatural sight received in ecstasy or in the night, conveying divine communication.

This noun denotes a vision or revelatory experience, often received at night or in a prophetic trance. It is closely related to the more common hazon but tends to emphasize the vivid, visionary quality of the experience. In 2 Samuel 7:17, Nathan reports God's promise to David 'according to all this vision.' Job uses the word for the terrifying night visions that haunt the sufferer (Job 4:13; 7:14; 33:15), while Joel 3:1 promises that the young will see visions in the messianic age. Zechariah 13:4 warns that false prophets will be ashamed of their visions when God purifies the land.

vision, revelation (9×) A vision or prophetic revelation – a supernatural sight conveying divine truth, received in ecstatic states or during the night. Spanish uses 'vision,' French 'vision,' and German preserves the Hebrew forms, reflecting the word's consistent meaning across traditions. The semantic range spans nighttime visionary experiences (Job 4:13; 20:8; 33:15, often paired with dreams), prophetic oracles (2 Sam 7:17; Joel 3:1), and the 'Valley of Vision' in Isaiah 22:1, 5, a striking geographical-prophetic title for Jerusalem. Zechariah 13:4 extends the term to visions that false prophets will disown in the coming day of purification. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-vision-of, and-from-visions, from-visions-of | es: como-visión-de, de-su-visión, de-visiones-de | fr: [חזיון], comme-vision, de-vision | de: [ומחזינות], [חזיון], [חזינות] 2Sam 7:17; Job 4:13; Job 7:14; Job 20:8; Job 33:15

חֲזִיז H2385 N-mp (3×)

lightning-bolt, thunderbolt, storm-flash

A poetic term for lightning or thunderbolts, emphasizing the brilliant flash that accompanies thunder. The word appears exclusively in poetic contexts describing God's control over weather phenomena. Job uses it twice when contemplating divine wisdom in governing the natural order, while Zechariah employs it in a prophetic oracle about God sending rain and storms. The term captures both the visual brilliance and the powerful energy of electrical discharge during storms.

(3×) Lightning-flash or thunderbolt as a meteorological phenomenon under divine control. Job 28:26 and 38:25 speak of God making 'a way for the thunderbolt,' highlighting divine sovereignty over storm systems. Zechariah 10:1 pairs it with rain-showers in parallel construction. Spanish and English translations (relámpago, thunderbolt) emphasize the flash aspect, while some maintain the Hebrew term untranslated, recognizing its specialized poetic register. LIGHTNING AND RADIANCE

en: for-the-thunderbolt, for-thunderbolt-of, storm-clouds | es: para-el-relámpago-de, para-relámpago-de, relámpagos | fr: à-לחזיז, éclair | de: [חזיזים], [לחזיז] Job 28:26; Job 38:25; Zech 10:1

חֲזִיר H2386 Art / N-ms (7×)

Swine or pig, the ritually unclean animal forbidden as food; also the wild boar that ravages the vineyard of Israel.

The standard Hebrew word for the domestic pig or swine, an animal that occupies a uniquely reviled place in Israelite law and prophetic rhetoric. Leviticus 11:7 and Deuteronomy 14:8 declare it unclean because, though it has a split hoof, it does not chew the cud. Isaiah deploys swine imagery to condemn apostasy: eating swine's flesh in secret gardens (65:4), offering pig's blood as sacrifice (66:3), and consuming pork alongside other abominations (66:17). Proverbs 11:22 offers the memorable simile of a gold ring in a pig's snout. One occurrence in Psalm 80:14 specifies the wild boar that ravages God's vine—a metaphor for Israel's enemies.

1. the pig (6×) The domestic pig or swine, ritually unclean under Mosaic law. Leviticus 11:7 and Deuteronomy 14:8 both identify it as forbidden food because it parts the hoof but does not ruminate. Isaiah's oracles against apostasy repeatedly invoke swine as a symbol of ritual defilement: eating swine's flesh (65:4), offering pig's blood (66:3). Proverbs 11:22 compares a beautiful woman without discretion to a gold ring in a pig's snout—an image that resonates across cultures. Spanish 'cerdo,' French 'porc/cochon,' and German 'Schwein' all consistently render this as the domestic animal. PIG SWINE

en: a-pig, swine, the-pig | es: cerdo, el-cerdo | fr: [החזיר], [חזיר], le-pig | de: [החזיר], [חזיר], der-pig Lev 11:7; Deut 14:8; Prov 11:22; Isa 65:4; Isa 66:3

2. the boar (1×) The wild boar, specifically the destructive animal that ravages cultivated land. Psalm 80:14 (Eng. 80:13) uses the phrase 'the boar from the forest' (chazir miyya'ar) as a vivid metaphor for the foreign enemies devastating Israel, depicted as God's transplanted vine from Egypt. Spanish 'jabali,' French 'sanglier,' and the English distinction between 'boar' and 'pig' all confirm that this occurrence refers to the feral, forest-dwelling variant rather than the barnyard animal. PIG SWINE

en: the-boar | es: jabalí | fr: sanglier | de: der-boar Ps 80:13

חֲזִיר H2387 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hezir, name of a priest and a leader who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah

Hezir appears as the name of two post-exilic figures. First, he was a priest who headed the seventeenth priestly course in the divisions established (according to Chronicles) in David's time. Second, he was one of the leaders who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah. The name's etymology is debated—it may be vocalized to avoid offense (avoiding the word for 'swine'), or it may derive from words for pomegranate or apple, as suggested by the Talmudic and Syriac cognates.

(2×) A masculine proper name of priestly and leadership associations in the post-exilic period. 1 Chronicles 24:15 lists Hezir as the head of the seventeenth priestly division, while Nehemiah 10:20 names him among those who set their seal to the covenant. The Septuagint variations (Ηζειρ, Χηζειρ) show the typical Greek attempts to render the Hebrew name, with both passages maintaining recognizable forms of the name across languages. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hezir, for-Chezir | es: Hezir, para-Jezir | fr: [חזיר], [לחזיר] | de: [חזיר], [לחזיר] 1Chr 24:15; Neh 10:20

חָזַק H2388 V-Qal-Perf-3ms / 3ms (290×)

to be strong, firm; to seize, grasp; to strengthen, encourage; to repair buildings; to harden (heart); to prevail

Appearing 290 times, this root anchors in firmness and strength but radiates outward into physical seizing, emotional fortification, structural repair, and moral hardening. The Qal stem covers inherent strength ('be strong!'), the Hifil adds intentional grasping ('he seized her hand'), the Piel intensifies into strengthening others or hardening Pharaoh's heart, and the Hitpael turns reflexive ('he strengthened himself'). What makes this verb fascinating is how languages split its semantic load: Arabic uses distinct roots for 'be strong' (ق و ي), 'seize' (م س ك), 'repair' (ر م م), and 'harden' (ق س و), while Hebrew unifies all under the single concept of firmness—whether of hands, hearts, walls, or wills.

1. Qal: be strong, be courageous (62×) The stative-intransitive Qal (62x) expresses inherent strength or courage, especially in Moses' exhortations: 'Be strong and courageous!' (Deut 31:6-7). Arabic uses تَشَدَّدَ (reflexive 'steel oneself'), Korean 강하다/용감하다 (be strong/be brave), Spanish ser fuerte/esforzarse (be strong). The sense is not competitive overpowering but inner fortitude—emotional, moral, or physical resilience. POWER AND ABILITY

en: Be-strong, and-be-strong, be-strong | es: Esfuerzate, Sé-fuerte, esfuerzate | fr: et-fort, fort, fortifier | de: Krieg-stark, sein-stark, staerkte Gen 41:57; Deut 11:8; Deut 12:23; Deut 31:6; Deut 31:7

2. Hifil: seize, grasp, take hold of (46×) The Hifil 'seize, grasp' (46x) marks deliberate physical taking hold. The angels 'seized Lot by the hand' (Gen 19:16), the man 'seized her' (Deut 22:25). Arabic shifts to أَمْسَكَ (amsaka, Form IV, a completely different root m-s-k meaning 'grasp, hold'), Korean 붙잡다 (seize), Spanish asir/agarrar (grasp). This causative Hifil transforms inner firmness into outward grip. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: and-I-have-grasped, and-he-grasped, and-he-seized | es: El-que-agarra, Y-agarró, Y-asió | fr: et-fortifier, et-il-saisit, et-saisit | de: staerkte, stark-sein, und-er-ergriff Gen 19:16; Gen 21:18; Exod 4:4; Deut 22:25; Deut 25:11

3. Hifil: repair (buildings, as agent noun) (36×) Hifil 'repair buildings' (36x) concentrates in Nehemiah's wall-rebuilding account, where participial forms dominate: 'the repairers of' (Neh 3:4ff). Arabic uses مُرَمِّمِي (murammimī, active participle of رَمَّمَ, 'to repair'—yet another distinct root), Korean 수리하다 (repair), Spanish reparar (repair). The connection to 'strengthen' is metaphorical: making walls firm again. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: repaired | es: repararon | fr: fortifier | de: er-hielt-fest, staerkte Neh 3:4; Neh 3:5; Neh 3:6

4. Piel: strengthen, encourage (transitive) (36×) Piel causative/factitive 'strengthen, encourage' (36x) means making someone else strong. 'Strengthen his hands for the work' (Ezra 6:22), God says 'I will strengthen him' (Isa 41:10). Arabic uses قَوَّى (qawwā, Form II causative of q-w-y, 'to strengthen') and شَجَّعَ (shajjaᶜa, 'to encourage'), Korean 강하게 하다 (make strong), Spanish fortalecer (fortify). The Piel adds transitive causation to the Qal's intransitive state. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: I-will-strengthen-him, Strengthen, and-I-will-strengthen | es: Fortaleced, Y-fortaleceré, Y-fortalecieron | fr: et-encourage-lui, et-fortifia, et-fortifier | de: Krieg-stark, seid-stark, staerken Deut 1:38; Deut 3:28; Judg 3:12; Judg 9:24; Judg 16:28

5. Hitpael: strengthen oneself, take courage (28×) Hitpael reflexive 'strengthen oneself, take courage' (28x) marks self-initiated fortification. David 'strengthened himself in the LORD' (1 Sam 30:6), 'the Israelites strengthened themselves for battle' (Judg 20:22). Arabic uses تَشَدَّدَ (tashaddada, Form V reflexive, 'steel oneself') and تَقَوَّى (taqawwā, Form V, 'grow strong'), Korean 스스로 강해지다 (self-strengthen), Spanish fortalecerse (strengthen oneself). The reflexive stem emphasizes self-initiated action. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: and-became-strong, and-he-strengthened-himself, and-strengthened-himself | es: Fortaleceos, Y-se-fortaleció, fortalécete | fr: et-fortifia-lui-même, et-fortifier, et-strengthened-lui-même | de: staerkte, stark-sein, strengthen-dich-selbst Gen 48:2; Num 13:20; Judg 20:22; 1Sam 4:9; 1Sam 30:6

6. Hifil: hold fast, cling to (ongoing) (25×) Hifil 'hold fast, cling to' (25x) describes sustained, ongoing grip—often metaphorical. 'If you refuse to let them go and hold them still' (Exod 9:2), 'he held fast to his deceit' (Jer 8:5). Arabic shifts to تَمَسَّكَ (tamassaka, Form V reflexive of m-s-k, 'cling to, adhere'), Korean 굳게 붙들다 (firmly hold), Spanish mantener/aferrarse (maintain/cling). This Hifil differs from #2's momentary seizure by adding duration and persistence. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: He-retains, I-held-fast, I-repaired | es: conteniendo, manteniendo, me-aferré | fr: et-de-forte, et-fortifier, fortifier | de: er-hielt-fest, holding, oder-eins-holding Exod 9:2; Judg 16:26; 2Sam 3:29; 1Kgs 9:9; 2Chr 4:5

7. Piel: repair, restore (buildings/walls) (19×) Piel 'repair, restore buildings' (19x) overlaps with #3 (Hifil repair) but uses Piel stem. Kings 'repaired the temple' (2 Kgs 12:5-8), Josiah 'repaired the house of the LORD' (2 Chr 34:8). Arabic consistently uses رَمَّمَ (rammama, 'to repair, renovate'—a completely distinct root from both قَوَّى 'strengthen' and قَسَّى 'harden'), Korean 수리하다 (repair), Spanish reparar (repair). The Piel may emphasize intensity or plurality of repairs. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: and-fortified-them, and-repaired, and-repaired-them | es: Y-repararon, para-fortalecer, para-reparar | fr: devra-fortifie, et-fortifier, et-ils-fortifie- | de: sie-strengthened, soll-strengthen, stark-sein 2Kgs 12:5; 2Kgs 12:6; 2Kgs 12:7; 2Kgs 12:8; 2Kgs 12:12

8. Piel: harden (heart, face) (11×) Piel 'harden (heart, face)' (11x) appears especially in Exodus Pharaoh narratives. 'I will harden his heart' (Exod 4:21, 9:12, 10:20, 10:27, 11:10, 14:4, 14:8, 14:17). Arabic uses قَسَّى (qassā, 'make hard/callous' from root q-s-w), categorically different from قَوَّى ('strengthen'), Korean 완고하게 하다 (make stubborn), Spanish endurecer (harden). Hebrew's metaphor connects firmness (strength) to obstinacy (hardness). STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: Have-been-strong, I-will-harden, and-I-will-harden | es: Endurecieron, Se-fortalecieron, Y-endureceré | fr: Je—endurcir, et-Je—endurcir, et-endurcit | de: hardening, ich-wird-verhaerten, seid-stark Exod 4:21; Exod 9:12; Exod 10:20; Exod 10:27; Exod 11:10

9. Qal: prevail, overpower (8×) Qal 'prevail, overpower' (8x) marks competitive superiority. 'David prevailed over the Philistine' (1 Sam 17:50), 'Amnon overpowered Tamar' (2 Sam 13:14). Arabic shifts to غَلَبَ (ghalaba, 'overcome, defeat'—a completely different root gh-l-b), Korean 이기다 (defeat), Spanish prevalecer/forzar (prevail/force). This Qal sense implies contest and victory, not mere strength. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: You-overpowered-me, and-he-overpowered, and-it-prevailed | es: Y-prevaleció, me-forzaste, y-fue-más-fuerte | fr: et-cela-prévalut, et-fortifier, et-il-overpowered | de: stark-sein, und-er-overpowered, und-es-prevailed 1Sam 17:50; 2Sam 13:14; 2Sam 24:4; 1Kgs 16:22; 2Chr 8:3

10. Qal: be severe, intensify (7×) Qal 'be severe, intensify' (7x) describes conditions, not persons. 'The famine was severe' (Gen 41:56), 'Pharaoh's heart was hardened' (Exod 7:13). Arabic uses اشْتَدَّ (ishtadda, Form VIII of sh-d-d, 'become intense/severe'), Korean 심하다 (be severe), Spanish endurecer (harden). The stative Qal describes worsening circumstances—famine, plague, battle—reaching critical intensity. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-grew-strong, and-was-severe, and-was-strong | es: Y-se-endureció, Y-se-fortaleció, y-prevaleció | fr: et-crût-fort, et-fortifier, et-fut-fort | de: und-er-ergriff, und-stärker-wurde, und-war-stark Gen 41:56; Exod 7:13; Exod 7:22; Exod 8:19; Exod 9:35

11. Piel: fasten, secure (objects) (4×) Piel 'fasten, secure objects' (4x) applies to physical fixtures. 'They fasten the idol so it will not move' (Isa 41:7, Jer 10:4), 'that the peg may not move' (Isa 33:23). Arabic uses ثَبَّتَ (thabbata, 'fix in place, fasten' from root th-b-t), distinct from both رَمَّمَ (repair) and قَوَّى (strengthen), Korean 고정하다 (fasten), Spanish asegurar (secure). The Piel makes objects firm/immovable. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: so-that-not, they-fasten-them, they-hold-firm | es: asegurarán, lo-afirman, para-fortalecer | fr: et-fortifier, fortifier, à-fortifie | de: stark-sein, und-stark-sein, zu-strengthen 2Kgs 15:19; Isa 33:23; Isa 41:7; Jer 10:4

12. Hifil: prevail, be victorious (2×) Hifil 'prevail, be victorious' (2x) adds resultative force beyond Qal #9. 'The snare prevails against him' (Job 18:9), 'those who know their God shall be strong and prevail' (Dan 11:32). Arabic uses ظَفَرَ (yaẓfaru, 'triumph') and تَقَوَّى (yataqawwā, 'grow powerful'), Korean 승리하다 (be victorious), Spanish prevalecer (prevail). The Hifil emphasizes achieving dominance. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: prevails, shall-be-strong | es: prevalece, se-fortalecerán | fr: fortifier | de: staerkte, stark-sein Job 18:9; Dan 11:32

13. (1×) The Egyptians 'urged the people' to leave quickly (Exod 12:33, 1x). Spanish apremiar (press, urge), Korean 재촉하다 (urge),

French urgent (urged). The single occurrence in the exodus narrative suggests pressing/compelling action. The connection to 'strengthen' may be intensifying pressure, though some lexicons question the root assignment. URGE PRESS INSIST

en: and-urged | es: Y-apremiaba | fr: et-urged | de: und-urged Exod 12:33

14. (1×) Hezekiah 'had recovered from his illness' (Isa 39:1, 1x). Spanish fortalecer (strengthen), Korean 회복하다 (recover), French fortifier (strengthen). The single occurrence describes regaining strength after sickness. The Qal perfect suggests completed recovery to a state of firmness/health. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: and-had-recovered | es: y-se-había-fortalecido | fr: et-fortifier | de: und-er-ergriff Isa 39:1

15. (1×) Tiglath-Pileser 'strengthened him' (2 Chr 28:20, 1x, ironically troubled rather than helped). Spanish fortalecer (strengthen), Korean 강하게 하다 (strengthen), French fortifier (strengthen). Context shows intended strengthening that backfired. Unique historical reference with ironic outcome. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: he-strengthened-him | es: lo-fortaleció | fr: fortifier | de: stark-sein 2Chr 28:20

16. (1×) Widow 'urged' Elisha to stay (2 Kgs 4:8, 1x). Spanish insistir (insist), Korean 재촉하다 (urge), French urgent (urged). Similar to #13 (Exod 12:33), the widow presses/compels the prophet to accept hospitality. The sense connects to applying firm pressure or persistent invitation. URGE PRESS INSIST

en: and-she-urged | es: Y-lo-insistió | fr: et-elle-urged | de: und-sie-urged 2Kgs 4:8

17. (1×) 'You shall strengthen the stranger and sojourner' (Lev 25:35, 1x). Spanish sostener (sustain), Korean 돕다 (help), French fortifier (strengthen). Command to support/sustain the vulnerable. The Hifil causative means causing the weak to become firm/stable, overlapping with #4 (Piel strengthen) but in Hifil stem. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: and-you-shall-strengthen | es: y-lo-sostendrás | fr: et-tu-devra-fortifier | de: und-du-soll-staerken Lev 25:35

18. (1×) Absalom's head 'caught fast in the oak' (2 Sam 18:9, 1x). Spanish atorar (get stuck), Korean 걸리다 (catch), French attraper (catch). Unique occurrence describing entanglement. The connection to 'firm' is being held fast/stuck, unable to move—an involuntary seizing. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: and-caught | es: y-se-atoró | fr: et-attrapa | de: und-caught 2Sam 18:9

חָזָק H2389 Adj-mpc (56×)

Strong, mighty, powerful; also severe or fierce in intensity; hard or unyielding in character; forcefully (adverbial).

An adjective describing strength, power, or firmness in various dimensions. Its most iconic pairing is with יָד ('hand') — the 'strong hand' (בְּיָד חֲזָקָה) by which God delivered Israel from Egypt, repeated across Exodus like a liturgical refrain (Exod 3:19; 6:1; 13:9). Spanish 'fuerte,' French 'fort,' and German 'stark' all consistently translate the core idea. Beyond raw power, the word also describes fierce intensity — the severity of battle (2 Sam 11:15) or famine (1 Kgs 18:2) — and the hard, unyielding stubbornness of Israel's forehead in Ezekiel's call narrative (Ezek 2:4; 3:7). Isaiah 40:10 uses it adverbially for the Lord coming 'with strength.'

1. strong, mighty, powerful (50×) The dominant sense (50x): possessing or exhibiting physical or figurative strength, power, or might. This covers the 'strong hand' of the Lord in the Exodus narratives (Exod 3:19; 6:1), mighty warriors (Num 13:18, 31), comparative uses ('stronger than,' Judg 18:26), and the strong arm of Pharaoh (Ezek 30:22). The translation evidence is strikingly uniform: Spanish 'fuerte,' French 'fort/puissant,' German 'stark/mächtig' — all core vocabulary for strength. Joshua 14:11 captures the personal dimension: Caleb declares himself still as 'strong' at eighty-five as when Moses first sent him out. POWER AND ABILITY

en: mighty, strong | es: fuerte, fuerte? | fr: fort, puissant | de: maechtig, stark Exod 3:19; Exod 6:1; Exod 10:19; Exod 13:9

2. severe, fierce, intense (3×) An intensification toward severity, fierceness, or harshness (3x). When describing battle conditions (2 Sam 11:15 — 'the fiercest part of the fighting'), disease (1 Kgs 17:17 — 'very severe' illness), or famine (1 Kgs 18:2), the focus shifts from personal might to the violent or extreme intensity of an event or condition. The semantic bridge is clear — strength pushed to its threatening extreme — but the collocations differ markedly from sense 1. POWER AND ABILITY

en: severe, the-fiercest | es: fuerte, la-fuerte | fr: le-fiercest, severe | de: der-fiercest, severe 2Sam 11:15; 1Kgs 17:17; 1Kgs 18:2

3. hard, firm, unyielding (2×) Hard, firm, or unyielding in material or character (2x). In Ezekiel's commissioning (Ezek 2:4; 3:7), Israel is described as 'hard of forehead' (חֲזֻקֵי מֵצַח) and 'hard of heart' — obstinate and impervious to prophetic warning. French 'fort' and German 'stark' do double duty here, but Spanish 'fuertes de' and the construct-chain syntax signal the shift toward obduracy rather than admirable power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-strong-of-, strong-of- | es: fuertes-de, y-fuertes-de | fr: et-fort, fort | de: stark, und-stark Ezek 2:4; Ezek 3:7

4. with strength, forcefully (1×) An adverbial use with a preposition meaning 'with strength, forcefully' (1x). In Isa 40:10 — 'Behold, the Lord GOD comes בְּחָזָק, with strength' — the adjective functions as a manner expression rather than an attribute. Spanish 'con poder' and the German bracketed transliteration '[בחזק]' both reflect the idiomatic, adverbial character of this construction. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: with-strength | es: con-poder | fr: fort | de: [בחזק] Isa 40:10

חָזֵק H2390 Conj-w / Adj-ms (2×)

strong, strengthening, growing stronger; Qal participle of חזק used adjectivally

This adjectival form of the common verb חזק (to be strong, to strengthen) appears in two distinct contexts. In Exodus 19:19, it describes the sound of the trumpet growing continually stronger at Mount Sinai during the theophany. In 2 Samuel 3:1, it characterizes David's house as growing stronger over time in contrast to Saul's weakening house. The participle form captures the dynamic, ongoing nature of the strengthening process rather than a static state.

(2×) The Qal active participle used as an adjective to describe ongoing or increasing strength. Exodus 19:19 uses it with the conjunction: 'the sound of the trumpet growing continually stronger.' 2 Samuel 3:1 employs it in a political context: David's house growing stronger while Saul's grows weaker. The multilingual evidence shows dynamic verb forms ('fortaleciéndose' - becoming strong, 'strengthening') rather than static adjectives, confirming the participial nature of the Hebrew. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-strengthening, and-stronger | es: y-fortaleciéndose | fr: et-strengthening, et-stronger | de: und-strengthening, und-stronger Exod 19:19; 2Sam 3:1

חָזְקִי H2391 N-msc / 1cs (1×)

my strength (with first-person suffix, Psalm 18:1)

This rare noun means 'strength' and appears only in Psalm 18:2 with a first-person suffix: 'my strength.' The parallel passage in 2 Samuel 22:2 omits this phrase, possibly due to scribal error. The term is closely related to the more common words for strength and might, emphasizing God as the source of the psalmist's power.

(1×) Occurs uniquely in Psalm 18:1 as 'my strength' (Spanish 'mi-fortaleza,' German 'mein-Stärke'). The absence of this phrase in the 2 Samuel 22:2 parallel, where the Septuagint adds 'my strength,' suggests textual complexity. The context praises Yahweh as the source of personal fortitude. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: my-strength | es: mi-fortaleza | fr: force | de: mein-Stärke Ps 18:1

חָזֻק H2392 Prep-b / N-msc (5×)

strength, might; used of divine power (God's strong hand) and of national military force

This noun denotes strength or might and appears in two distinct spheres. Three times in Exodus (13:3, 14, 16) it describes God's 'strength of hand' that brought Israel out of Egypt – a formulaic expression anchoring Israelite memory of the Exodus. In Amos 6:13 and Haggai 2:22, it refers to human military strength – Israel's misplaced boasting and the overthrow of kingdoms' war-chariots. French 'force' and German 'Starke' consistently convey raw power, while Spanish 'fuerza' covers both the divine and military applications.

(5×) Strength or might, especially as an attribute of God's delivering power. The Exodus formula 'by strength of hand' (Exod 13:3, 14, 16) commemorates divine intervention. French 'force' and Spanish 'fuerza de' uniformly capture this sense of overwhelming might. In Amos 6:13 and Hag 2:22, the same word shifts to national or military strength, with Israel boasting in its own power or God overthrowing the strength of foreign kingdoms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-our-strength, by-strength-of, strength-of | es: con-fuerza-de-, fuerza-de, por-nuestra-fuerza | fr: force, fort, par-force-de | de: [בחזקנו], durch-Staerke-von, staerkte Exod 13:3; Exod 13:14; Exod 13:16; Amos 6:13; Hag 2:22

חֲזָקָה H2393 Conj-w (4×)

Strength, force, power; the might associated with prophetic compulsion or royal authority becoming established.

A noun expressing forceful strength, derived from the verbal root חזק ('to be strong'). It carries two distinct flavors in Scripture: the overwhelming compulsion of God's hand upon a prophet, and the consolidating power of a king at the height of his reign. Isaiah 8:11 speaks of the LORD's hand gripping the prophet בְּחֲזָקַת הַיָּד — with forceful strength — warning him not to follow the people's fear. In Chronicles and Daniel, it describes the moment a king's power is fully established, often just before a fateful turn toward pride.

(4×) Strength or force, particularly as divine compulsion or royal power at its peak. In Isaiah 8:11, it denotes the forceful grip of God's hand upon the prophet, compelling him to prophetic speech (cf. Ezekiel 3:14 for a parallel experience). In 2 Chronicles 12:1 and 26:16, it marks the moment when a king's power is consolidated — Rehoboam and Uzziah each 'became strong,' and that strength became the prelude to unfaithfulness. Daniel 11:2 uses it of a king's consolidated might. Spanish fuerza and French force confirm the core sense of overwhelming power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-when-he-is-strong, and-when-he-was-strong, and-when-strong | es: Y-cuando-se-fortaleció, con-fuerza-de, y-como-fortaleza-suya | fr: [וכחזקתו], [כחזקת], et-force | de: [וכחזקתו], [כחזקת] 2Chr 12:1; 2Chr 26:16; Isa 8:11; Dan 11:2

חָזְקָה H2394 Prep-b / N-fs (6×)

strength, force, violence; (as infinitive) to strengthen, repair

A feminine noun meaning strength or force, almost always appearing in the fixed prepositional phrase be-chozqah, 'with force.' It describes the kind of power that coerces and oppresses: Jabin crushing Israel 'forcefully' (Judg 4:3), the priests seizing meat 'by force' (1 Sam 2:16), shepherds ruling 'with harshness' (Ezek 34:4). Yet in Jonah 3:8, the same phrase describes crying out to God 'mightily,' showing that raw intensity can serve either cruelty or repentance. One occurrence in 2 Kings 12:12 is actually an infinitive of the verb chazaq, meaning 'to repair' the Temple.

1. strength, force, violence (5×) Physical or coercive force exerted upon others, typically oppressive. The phrase be-chozqah appears in contexts of domination (Judg 4:3, Ezek 34:4), forcible seizure (1 Sam 2:16), and sharp rebuke (Judg 8:1). In Jonah 3:8 the same force is redirected toward urgent prayer. English 'by force,' Spanish 'con fuerza,' and French 'avec force' all render the same instrumental sense consistently across languages. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: and-with-harshness, by-force, mightily | es: con-fuerza, por-fuerza, y-con-fuerza | fr: avec-force, dans-forte, et-dans-forte | de: [בחזקה], [ובחזקה], bei-force Judg 4:3; Judg 8:1; 1Sam 2:16; Ezek 34:4; Jonah 3:8

2. to strengthen, repair (1×) A verbal infinitive construct (le-chozqah) from the root chazaq, meaning 'to strengthen' or 'to repair,' functioning as a purpose clause in 2 Kgs 12:12 regarding Temple restoration. English 'to strengthen it' and Spanish 'para reforzar' capture the constructive intent, standing in stark contrast to the coercive force of sense 1. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: to-strengthen-it | es: para-reforzar | fr: à-fortifie-cela | de: zu-strengthen-es 2Kgs 12:12

חִזְקִי H2395 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Hizki - Benjamite personal name (1 Chronicles 8:17)

This abbreviated theophoric name appears among Benjamite genealogies in 1 Chronicles 8:17. The name may be a shortened form related to strength or might, possibly derived from the root meaning 'to be strong.' The Septuagint renders it variously, showing uncertainty about the precise vocalization.

(1×) Personal name found solely in 1 Chronicles 8:17 in Benjamite lineages. Target languages transliterate (Spanish 'Jizquí,' English 'and-Hizki'), recognizing this as a proper noun. The form may be an abbreviated theophoric name, though the full original form and meaning remain uncertain. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Chizqi | es: y-Jizquí | fr: [וחזקי] | de: [וחזקי] 1Chr 8:17

חִזְקִיָּהוּ H2396 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (130×)

Hezekiah — personal name meaning 'YHWH has strengthened,' chiefly the righteous king of Judah (c. 715-686 BC)

Chizkiyahu (also spelled Chizkiyah, Yechizkiyahu) is a theophoric name built from chazaq ('be strong') and a divine suffix, yielding 'YHWH has strengthened.' Of its 130 occurrences, the vast majority designate the king of Judah who succeeded his idolatrous father Ahaz and instituted sweeping religious reforms (2 Kgs 18:3-6). His reign is remembered for the miraculous deliverance of Jerusalem from Sennacherib's siege (2 Kgs 19:35; Isa 37:36) and the sign of the sundial's shadow retreating during his illness (2 Kgs 20:11). Proverbs 25:1 attributes a scribal collection to 'the men of Hezekiah.' The Assyrian annals confirm him as Hazakiiahu, a rare case of biblical-cuneiform name alignment.

Hezekiah (personal name) (130×) The proper masculine name Hezekiah, a theophoric compound meaning 'YHWH has strengthened.' Its primary referent is the reforming king of Judah who purified worship, withstood Sennacherib's invasion (2 Kgs 18-19; Isa 36-37), and received a miraculous extension of life (2 Kgs 20:1-11). Secondary bearers include an ancestor in 1 Chr 3:23 and a post-exilic figure in Zephaniah 1:1. Assyrian records spell the name Hazakiiahu, and the Septuagint renders it Ezekias — giving rise to Spanish 'Ezequias,' French 'Ezechias,' and German 'Hiskia.' HEZEKIAH PERSONAL NAME

en: Chizkiyah, Chizkiyahu | es: Ezequías | fr: Ézéchias | de: Hiskia 2Kgs 16:20; 2Kgs 18:1; 2Kgs 18:9; 2Kgs 18:13; 2Kgs 18:14

חַח H2397 Prep-b (8×)

A hook or ring for restraining captives and animals; also a decorative brooch or clasp offered as tabernacle jewelry

The noun חַח denotes a metal ring or hook, but its meaning splits sharply between two very different worlds. In its dominant sense, it is an instrument of subjugation — a hook thrust into the nose or jaw of a captive to lead them like an animal. God warns Sennacherib 'I will put my hook in your nose' (2 Kgs 19:28; Isa 37:29), and Ezekiel portrays Judah's princes as young lions dragged away with hooks (Ezek 19:4, 9). In its single other occurrence, the same word names a delicate ornamental brooch brought as a freewill offering for the Tabernacle (Exod 35:22) — a striking reminder that ancient metalwork served both cruelty and beauty.

1. hook, ring (for captives or animals) (7×) A metal hook or ring used to restrain captives or control large animals, typically inserted through the nose or jaw. This is the instrument of imperial domination: YHWH threatens to put 'my hook in your nose' (2 Kgs 19:28 = Isa 37:29), echoing Assyrian practice of leading prisoners by nose-rings. Ezekiel extends the image to young lions caught with hooks (Ezek 19:4, 9) and to the crocodile figure of Pharaoh (Ezek 29:4). Spanish 'anzuelos/garfios' (fishhooks/grappling hooks) and English 'hooks' confirm the restraint function across all seven occurrences. HOOK RING FETTER

en: My-hook, [hooks], hooks | es: (anzuelos), [anzuelos], con-garfios | fr: [חחי], anneau, mon-hook | de: [בחחים], [חחי], [חחיים] 2Kgs 19:28; Isa 37:29; Ezek 19:4; Ezek 19:9; Ezek 29:4

2. brooch, clasp (ornamental) (1×) A decorative brooch, clasp, or ornamental pin — a piece of personal jewelry. Listed among the gold items offered for the Tabernacle construction in Exod 35:22, alongside bracelets, earrings, and signet rings. The multilingual glosses shift notably from the captive-hook vocabulary to ornamental terms: English and French both render it 'brooch,' and Spanish uses 'broches.' BDB notes the identification with a nose-ring or brooch remains debated, but the context among fine jewelry offerings clearly distinguishes this from the instrument of subjugation. BRACELET ARMLET

en: brooch | es: broches | fr: brooch | de: brooch Exod 35:22

חָטָא H2398 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (240×)

to sin, miss the mark, purify from sin; moral failure (Qal), causing sin (Hifil), ritual purification (Piel/Hitpael)

The verb chata' (240 occurrences) centers on the concept of missing a goal or standard, most commonly moral transgression. The Qal stem (165x) denotes committing sin against God or ethical law, while the Hifil causative (32x) means to lead another person into sin. The Piel (14x) and Hitpael (9x) flip the semantic polarity entirely, expressing ritual purification from sin—making a sin offering, cleansing the altar, or undergoing ceremonial cleansing. The Qal participle splits into substantival 'sinner' (9x) and verbal 'sinning' (8x) based on syntactic context. Arabic, Korean, and Swahili cognates preserve the moral sense in Qal/Hifil and the purification sense in Piel/Hitpael, confirming these as stable polysemous patterns within the Semitic verbal system.

1. Qal: to sin, commit sin (165×) The Qal finite verb and infinitive (165 passages) express active commission of sin or moral failure. All person/number/gender/tense forms share this core meaning. Cross-linguistic evidence shows dedicated sin vocabulary: pecado (Spanish), péché (French), gesündigt (German), confirming chata' as the standard Hebrew term for moral transgression. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: I-have-sinned, I-sin, I-sinned | es: He-pecado, Pequé, Si-he-pecado, | fr: Je-pécha, ai-je-pécha, avoir-Je-pécha | de: habe-ich-gesündigt, habe-ich-suendigte, haben-suendigte Gen 20:9; Exod 9:27; Exod 10:16; Lev 4:3; Lev 4:23

2. Hifil: to cause to sin (32×) The Hifil causative (32 occurrences) introduces a distinct argument structure: X causes Y to sin. Key passages include Exodus 23:33 (foreign gods causing Israel to sin), 1 Kings 14:16 (Jeroboam's sins leading the nation astray). Multilingual glosses preserve causative morphology: caused to sin, hizo pecar, causa à péché. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: caused-to-sin, he-caused-to-sin, to-cause-to-sin | es: hacer-pecar, hizo-pecar, para-hacer-pecar | fr: causa-à-péché, il-causa-à-péché, à-cause-à-péché | de: caused-zu-Suende, er-caused-zu-Suende, suendigte Exod 23:33; Deut 24:4; 1Kgs 14:16; 1Kgs 15:26; 1Kgs 15:30

3. Piel: to purify from sin (14×) The Piel stem (14 times) flips semantic polarity to purification: making a sin offering, cleansing the altar (Lev 8:15), purifying a house from mildew (Lev 14:49). This factitive/denominative use derives from the noun chatta't (sin offering). Arabic tahhara (to purify), Korean jeongyeolhage hada (to cleanse), confirm the ritual purity domain. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: and-made-sin-offering, and-offered-it-as-sin-offering, and-purified | es: Y-purificará, de-purificar, el-que-hace-expiación | fr: et-devra-purifier, et-offrit-cela-comme-péché-offrande, et-purifia | de: Sünde, der-offers-es-wie-Suende-Opfergabe, suendigen Exod 29:36; Lev 6:26; Lev 8:15; Lev 9:15; Lev 14:49

4. Hitpael: to purify oneself (9×) The Hitpael reflexive (9 passages) expresses self-purification or undergoing ritual cleansing, especially in Numbers 8:21, 19:12-20 (Levitical purification laws). The reflexive morphology corresponds to Arabic yatatahharu (to purify oneself), Korean jeongyeolhaejida (to become clean), showing a productive Semitic pattern. REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS

en: and-purified-themselves, he-purifies-himself, it-shall-be-purified | es: Y-se-purificaron, os-purificaréis, purificaréis | fr: cela-devra-être-purifia, devra-purifier-lui-même-, et-purifia-eux-mêmes | de: er-purifies-sich-selbst, es-soll-sein-reinigte, purifies-sich-selbst Num 8:21; Num 19:12; Num 19:13; Num 19:20

5. Qal participle: sinner (substantival) (9×) The Qal participle used substantively (9 times) denotes 'the sinner' as a noun class in Wisdom literature (Proverbs, Ecclesiastes). Arabic al-khaati' (the sinner), Korean joein (sinner), Swahili mwenye dhambi (one with sin), Hindi paapi (sinner) show consistent nominalization of the verbal root. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: and-sinner, and-the-sinner, and-to-the-sinner | es: como-el-pecador, pecador, y-al-pecador | fr: et-pécher, et-pécher-moi, pécher | de: suendigte, und-suendigen, und-suendigte Prov 8:36; Prov 11:31; Prov 13:22; Eccl 2:26; Eccl 7:26

6. Qal participle: sinning (verbal) (8×) The Qal participle used verbally (8 occurrences) describes ongoing sinful action in predicate position: 'he is sinning' (1 Sam 14:33), 'the one sinning against' (Prov 14:21, 19:2). Context distinguishes this from the substantival use; translations reflect verbal aspect: sinning, pecando, péchant. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: and-sinning-against, sinning, sins | es: la-que-peca, peca, peca-contra | fr: et-pécher, péchant, pécher | de: der-Suende, suendigend, suendigte 1Sam 14:33; Prov 14:21; Prov 19:2; Prov 20:2; Isa 1:4

7. (1×) A single uncertain occurrence at Judges 20:16, where Benjamin's slingers 'do not miss' (lo' yachti'), may preserve the original physical sense of missing a target. Translations diverge: miss, erraban (erred), confirming ambiguity about whether this is literal marksmanship or a figurative extension. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: miss | es: erraban | fr: miss | de: miss Judg 20:16

8. (1×) Genesis 31:39 presents a unique usage: Jacob 'bore the loss' (achatenah) of stolen sheep. The gloss 'bore loss of it' (expiaba la, enfanta loss de cela, musste es büßen) suggests a commercial or legal sense of bearing liability, possibly related to missing/lacking the stolen item. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: bore-loss-of-it | es: expiaba-la | fr: enfanta-loss-de-cela | de: musste-es-büßen Gen 31:39

9. (1×) Isaiah 29:21 uses a Hifil participle in an unusual construction: 'those making a man [an offender]' (machatiem adam). The context suggests causing someone to sin or treating them as guilty, but the syntactic frame is unique, and translations struggle: making a man, los que hacen pecar. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: Those-making-a-man | es: Los-que-hacen-pecar | fr: pécher | de: suendigen Isa 29:21

חֲטָאִים H2399 Prep-m / N-mpc / 1cs (35×)

Sin, transgression against God or man; rarely a sin offering or minor fault

The noun חֲטָאִים is one of Hebrew's primary words for sin, built from the root חטא meaning 'to miss the mark.' It denotes moral and religious transgression against God's revealed will — a concept so central that it appears from Genesis through Daniel in every literary genre. Isaiah 1:18 uses it in God's famous invitation: 'though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow.' Occasionally the word extends to interpersonal wrongs (Gen 41:9, where Pharaoh's cupbearer remembers 'my faults'), and in one instance (2 Kgs 12:16) it appears to designate the sin offering itself, the sacrificial remedy for the transgression it names.

1. sin, transgression (33×) The primary sense: sin or transgression against God's law and covenant. This covers 33 of 35 occurrences, spanning both singular and plural forms with various pronominal suffixes. Key passages include Leviticus 19:17 ('you shall not bear sin because of him'), Psalm 51:11 ('hide your face from my sins'), and Isaiah 1:18 ('though your sins be as scarlet'). Every target language renders it with its standard sin vocabulary — Spanish 'pecado,' French 'péché,' German 'Sünde' — confirming the unified theological core. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: a-sin, and-sins-of-, for-his-sin | es: en-pecado-de-él, pecado, pecado-de | fr: [בחטאו], [וחטא], [חטא] | de: Suende, Suende-von, [בחטאו] Gen 41:9; Lev 19:17; Lev 20:20; Lev 22:9; Lev 24:15

2. sin offering (1×) A cultic-technical extension: the sin offering, where חַטָּא refers not to the transgression but to the sacrifice prescribed to atone for it. At 2 Kings 12:16, the 'sin money' (כֶּסֶף חַטָּאת) was not brought into the temple treasury. This metonymic shift from offense to offering is well attested with the related noun חַטָּאת and appears once here with חַטָּא. The multilingual glosses show compound forms — 'sin-offerings' — distinguishing it from the abstract moral sense. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION
en: sin-offerings | es: pecados | fr: péché-offerings | de: Suende-offerings 2Kgs 12:16

3. offense, fault, error (1×) A lighter sense of fault, offense, or error — a wrong committed against another person rather than a grave theological transgression. Deuteronomy 19:15 stipulates that 'a single witness shall not suffice against a person for any offense' (חַטָּא), where the legal context concerns human wrongs adjudicated in court. Genesis 41:9, where the cupbearer recalls 'my faults today,' similarly points to interpersonal rather than divine-relational failure. TRANSGRESSION AND TRESPASS
en: offense | es: falta | fr: offense | de: offense Deut 19:15

חַטָּא H2400 Conj-w / Adj-mp (19×)

Sinful; sinners — those characterized by sin, used both as a substantive noun and as an attributive adjective.

Chatta' identifies people defined by their sin. In its most common use, it functions as a noun meaning 'sinners' — those who stand in opposition to the righteous, as in the opening of the Psalter: 'Blessed is the one who does not walk in the counsel of the wicked or stand in the way of sinners' (Ps 1:1). Spanish 'pecadores' and German 'Sünder' both treat the word as a class label, a settled identity rather than a momentary lapse. The term spans from Genesis 13:13, where the men of Sodom are 'sinners against the LORD exceedingly,' to Isaiah's oracles against sinners in Zion (Isa 1:28; 33:14). In a single striking use (Amos 9:8), it serves as a true adjective modifying 'kingdom' — the sinful kingdom destined for judgment.

1. sinners (substantive noun) (18×) Used as a substantive noun: sinners, persons characterized by habitual or defining sin. This is the dominant usage across 18 occurrences. The word designates a moral class — people who stand opposed to the tsaddiq (righteous). Spanish 'pecadores' and German 'Sünder' consistently treat it as a noun of identity. Key passages include Genesis 13:13 ('sinners against the LORD'), the moral geography of Psalm 1:1, 5, and Isaiah's prophetic warnings (Isa 1:28; 13:9; 33:14). In Numbers 16:38 it describes Korah's rebels; in Proverbs 1:10 and 23:17 it serves as a warning category for the young. SINNER SINFUL PERSON en: and-its-sinners, and-sinners, offenders | es: Pecadores, a-pecadores, de-los-pecadores | fr: [וחטאיה], [וחטאים], [חטאים] | de: Sünder, [בחטאים], [וחטאיה] Gen 13:13; Num 16:38; Num 32:14; 1Sam 15:18; 1Kgs 1:21

2. sinful (attributive adjective) (1×) Used as an attributive adjective: sinful, describing a noun as characterized by sin. This rare adjectival use appears only in Amos 9:8 — 'the sinful kingdom' (ham-mamlakah hachatta'ah) — where it modifies the nation itself rather than identifying individual persons. Spanish 'pecador' and French 'pécheur' here function as true adjectives, marking the shift from personal label to national characterization under divine judgment. SINNER SINFUL PERSON en: the-sinful | es: pecador | fr: pécheur | de: [החטאה] Amos 9:8

חֲטָאָה H2401 N-fs (8×)

Sin, transgression — a great moral offense before God; rarely, a sin-offering presented at the altar

The feminine noun חֲטָאָה is a variant form of the common חַטָּאת, denoting sin as a weighty moral reality. It appears almost exclusively in the phrase חֲטָאָה גְּדֹלָה ('great sin'), marking acts of extraordinary gravity — Abimelech's near-violation of Sarah (Gen 20:9), the golden calf (Exod 32:21, 30, 31), and Jeroboam's idolatry (2 Kgs 17:21). The Psalms add theological depth: sin can be 'covered' in forgiveness (Ps 32:1) or even a wicked man's prayer can 'become sin' (Ps 109:7). A single occurrence in Ps 40:6 may denote a sin-offering, linking moral failure to its ritual remedy.

1. (7×) Sin as moral transgression, especially grave offense before God. Six of seven occurrences carry this meaning, frequently in the powerful phrase חֲטָאָה גְּדֹלָה ('great sin'). Abimelech protests 'you have brought a great sin upon me' (Gen 20:9), Moses confronts Aaron about the golden calf with the same phrase (Exod 32:21, 30, 31), and Jeroboam 'caused Israel to sin with a great sin' (2 Kgs 17:21). The Psalms use it for sin as a spiritual condition: 'blessed is he whose sin is covered' (Ps 32:1) and the prayer of the wicked 'becomes sin' (Ps 109:7). Multilingual glosses uniformly render it with terms for sin — Spanish 'pecado,' French 'péché,' German 'Sünde.' SIN AND TRANSGRESSION
en: a-sin, for-sin, sin | es: para-pecado, pecado | fr: péché, un-péché, à-péché | de: Suende, Sünde, ein-suendigen Gen 20:9; Exod 32:21; Exod 32:30; Exod 32:31; 2Kgs 17:21

2. (1×) A sin-offering — the ritual sacrifice prescribed to address sin. In Ps 40:6, 'burnt offering and sin-offering (חֲטָאָה) you have not required,' the word appears alongside עוֹלָה in a context that most ancient versions and commentators read as sacrificial terminology. The multilingual evidence reflects this: English 'and sin-offering,' Spanish 'y ofrenda por pecado,' German 'und Sünde-Opfer.' This cultic sense parallels the far more common חַטָּאת in Leviticus, linking the moral weight of sin to its prescribed ritual resolution. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION en: and-sin-offering | es: y-ofrenda-por-pecado | fr: et-péché | de: und-Sünde-Opfer Ps 40:6

חַטָּיָא H2402

sin-offering (Aramaic cognate of Hebrew חַטָּאת)

This Aramaic term appears in Ezra 6:17 where the returned exiles offer sacrifices at the dedication of the rebuilt temple. The word is the Aramaic equivalent of the common Hebrew חַטָּאת (sin-offering), reflecting the bilingual nature of Ezra-Nehemiah. The Ketiv reads חַטָּיָא while the Qere offers חַטָּאָה, both functioning as loan-words from the sacrificial vocabulary that transcends linguistic boundaries in Second Temple worship contexts.

H2403 N-fs (2×)

sin, sin offering; a feminine noun denoting transgression or the sacrifice for it

This is a common feminine noun for sin, though these two particular occurrences involve textual variants. In Ezekiel 18:21, the Qere (traditional reading) has 'his sins' while the text appears different. In Daniel 9:24, the word refers to sins in the context of the seventy weeks prophecy. The term can denote both the act of sin and the offering made for sin, though in these contexts it refers to moral transgression. The feminine form distinguishes it from related masculine nouns for sin.

(2×) Sin or transgression as a moral offense. Ezekiel 18:21 speaks of turning away from sins (with a textual note about the Qere reading), while Daniel 9:24 includes 'to finish transgression and make an end of sins' in the prophetic program. The consistent glosses across languages ('sin,' 'pecado,' 'péché,' 'Sünde') confirm this is the standard word for sin, here in specific prophetic and moral contexts involving repentance and divine judgment. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION en: (qere:sin), sins-his | es: (sus-pecados), pecado | fr: péché | de: Suende, [חטאתיו] Ezek 18:21; Dan 9:24 sinful thing, sin; feminine noun emphasizing the concrete sinful act or condition

חַטָּאָה H2403a Conj-w / N-fs (2×)

This feminine form denotes sin as a concrete thing or condition, appearing in two significant texts about divine mercy and human wickedness. In Exodus 34:7, it occurs in the proclamation of God's name to Moses, where the LORD declares His forgiveness of iniquity, transgression, and sin. In Isaiah 5:18, it describes those who draw sin with cords as if hauling it along. The noun emphasizes sin as an objective reality or tangible burden.

(2×) A sinful thing or sin viewed as a concrete entity. Exodus 34:7 lists it among the offenses God forgives ('forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin'), while Isaiah 5:18 uses vivid imagery of people dragging sin with cords like a cart. The multilingual glosses uniformly render it as 'sin' or 'péché,' though the Hebrew feminine form (חטאה) carries slightly different nuance than the more common חטאת—BDB distinguishes this as 'sinful thing' to emphasize its concrete character. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: and-sin, sin | es: el-pecado, y-pecado | fr: [חטאה], et-péché | de: [חטאה], und-suendigen Exod 34:7; Isa 5:18

חַטָּאת H2403b N-fpc / 2mp (295×)

Sin or sin-offering — the act of missing the mark before God, and the sacrificial remedy prescribed to atone for it.

Perhaps the most theologically loaded noun in the Levitical vocabulary, chattat famously carries two intimately connected meanings: the sin itself and the offering that addresses it. This double duty is not accidental — it encodes the biblical logic that the remedy bears the name of the disease. The sin-offering sense dominates Leviticus and Numbers, where French 'offrande pour le peche' and German 'Sundopfer' make the sacrificial meaning explicit, while the sin sense pervades narrative and prophetic literature, where Spanish 'pecado' and French 'peche' stand alone without sacrificial qualifiers. The two senses share over 40 verses in Leviticus 4 alone, sometimes appearing in both meanings within a single verse.

1. sin, transgression (170×) Sin as act, condition, or offense — the fundamental sense of moral failure or transgression against God or neighbor. Covering 170 occurrences, this is the majority usage across narrative, prophetic, and wisdom literature. Genesis 4:7 ('sin is crouching at the door') personifies it; Leviticus 4:3 ('if the anointed priest sins') introduces the cultic context. All languages use their basic sin-word: English 'sin,' Spanish 'pecado,' French 'peche,' German 'Sunde.' Possessive suffixes are extremely common ('his sin,' 'your sins,' 'my sin'), reflecting the deeply personal nature of chattat in Hebrew theology. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: his-sin, sin-his, sin-of | es: pecado-suyo, pecados-de, su-pecado | fr: péché, péché-de, péché-son | de: Suende, Suende-sein, Suende-von Gen 4:7; Lev 4:3; Lev 4:14; Lev 4:23; Lev 4:28

2. sin-offering, sacrifice for sin (120×) The sin-offering — the specific sacrificial animal or ritual prescribed in the Priestly legislation to effect atonement. With 120 occurrences concentrated in Leviticus 4-5, Numbers 15, 28-29, and Ezekiel 40-46, this is a fully technical cultic term. The multilingual evidence is decisive: English adds 'offering' (sin-offering), Spanish expands to 'ofrenda por el pecado,' French to 'offrande pour le peche,' and German compounds it as 'Sundopfer' — all signaling that translators recognize a distinct referent (the sacrifice) rather than the abstract moral condition. Key passages include Leviticus 4:8 (the fat of the sin-offering) and Exodus 30:10 (annual sin-offering on the Day of Atonement). SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: for-a-sin-offering, for-sin-offering, for-the-sin-offering | es: para-la-ofrenda-por-el-pecado, para-ofrenda-por-el-pecado, para-ofrenda-por-pecado | fr: pour-le-offrande-pour-le-péché, pour-offrande-pour-le-péché, pour-un-offrande-pour-le-péché | de: fuer-Suendopfer, fuer-der-Suendopfer, fuer-ein-Suende-Opfergabe Lev 4:3; Lev 4:8; Lev 4:14; Lev 4:20; Lev 4:25

3. (3×) A small cluster (3x) where chattat appears in contexts blending sin with its punishment or consequence, making 'sin' and 'guilt/punishment' nearly interchangeable. Psalm 109:14 ('let the sin of his mother not be blotted out') and Daniel 9:20 ('confessing my sin and the sin of my people') show chattat in penitential contexts where the weight of consequence is foregrounded. German 'Sunde' and Spanish 'pecado' persist, but the contextual framing — alongside iniquity ('avon) and in prayers for divine remembrance — tilts toward the sin-as-burden reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-punishment-of, and-the-sin-of | es: y-castigo-de, y-el-pecado-de, y-pecado-de | fr: et-péché | de: und-Suende, und-der-Sünde-von Ps 109:14; Dan 9:20; Zech 14:19

4. (1×) A single occurrence in Proverbs 14:34 ('sin is a disgrace to any people') where chattat functions as a collective abstract — sin as a national condition or reproach. English renders 'peoples' in the gloss data (likely reflecting the object rather than chattat itself), while Spanish and French maintain 'pecado/peche.' The proverbial, wisdom-literature context gives this instance a gnomic, universalizing quality distinct from the narrative or cultic uses. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: peoples | es: pecado | fr: péché | de: Suende Prov 14:34

5. (1×) A unique occurrence in Numbers 8:7 where chattat appears in the context of Levitical purification ('sprinkle the water of purification upon them'). Spanish renders 'purificacion' rather than 'pecado' or 'ofrenda,' and German uses 'Sundopfer,' suggesting this lies at the boundary between sin-offering and purification ritual. The passage describes cleansing the Levites for service, and the chattat-water here functions more as a purifying agent than as a standard sin-offering, representing a specialized cultic extension of sense 2. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: sin-offering | es: purificación | fr: offrande-pour-le-péché | de: Suendopfer Num 8:7

חָטַב H2404 Prep-k / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc (9×)

To cut or gather wood, especially firewood; in the passive, to be hewn or carved into shape.

A practical verb rooted in the daily labor of woodcutting, appearing most often in the phrase 'hewers of wood and drawers of water' that defines menial service (Josh 9:21, 23, 27; Deut 29:11). The Arabic hatab (firewood) and Ethiopic hataba (to gather firewood) confirm the tight semantic link to fuel-gathering. Deuteronomy 19:5 provides the most concrete image: a man goes into the forest with his neighbor to cut wood, and the axe head flies off. A single Pual occurrence in Psalm 144:12 shifts the meaning entirely, describing daughters 'carved' like pillars – the same root applied not to rough fuel but to fine sculpture.

1. cut/hew wood (8×) The active Qal sense of cutting, chopping, or gathering wood – overwhelmingly firewood. The participial form khotevei etsim ('cutters of wood') is virtually a fixed phrase for menial labor assigned to the Gibeonites (Josh 9:21, 23, 27) and paired with water-drawing (Deut 29:11). Ezekiel 39:10 describes Israel gathering wood from the battlefield, and 2 Chronicles 2:9 lists woodcutters among Solomon's workforce. Arabic hatab and Ethiopic hataba both center on firewood, reinforcing the utilitarian focus. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-cutters-of, cutters-of, from-cutter-of | es: a-cortar, como-cortadores-de, cortadores-de | fr: [כחטב], [לחטבים], couper | de: [יחטבו], [כחטב], [לחטבים] Deut 19:5; Deut 29:11; Josh 9:21; Josh 9:23; Josh 9:27

2. carved/hewn (passive) (1×) The Pual passive participle in Psalm 144:12 – mechuttavot – shifts from rough woodcutting to fine craftsmanship: daughters 'carved' or 'sculpted' like corner pillars of a palace. The same root that elsewhere describes splitting logs for fuel here evokes the artisan's chisel shaping stone or wood into something beautiful. Spanish esculpidas captures this elegance. The semantic leap from fuel-gathering to sculptural carving marks a genuine second sense, not merely a different stem. HEWING AND CUTTING

en: carved | es: esculpidas | fr: de-couper | de: carved Ps 144:12

חֲטָבוֹת H2405 N-fp (1×)

dark-hued fabrics, colored Egyptian linens (Proverbs 7:16)

This rare plural noun describes richly colored or dark-hued fabric, specifically Egyptian yarn or linen. Proverbs 7:16 mentions these luxurious textiles in parallel with 'tapestries' as part of the seductress's decorated bed. The term appears to designate high-quality imported cloth, emphasizing wealth and sensuality.

(1×) Appears exclusively in Proverbs 7:16 describing luxurious bed-coverings. The English 'with-colored-linens' and Spanish 'telas-de' (fabrics-of) point to expensive textiles, while the context 'yarn of Egypt' specifies imported material. This rare term denotes dark or richly-dyed fabrics used for lavish decoration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-colored-linens | es: telas-de | fr: חטבות | de: [חטבות] Prov 7:16

חִטָּה H2406 Prep-b / N-fpc (30×)

wheat — the staple cereal grain of ancient Israel, cultivated as a primary food crop and trade commodity

Chittah is the standard Hebrew word for wheat, appearing 30 times across both poetic and narrative texts as one of the defining crops of the Promised Land. It is listed among the seven species that mark Canaan's abundance (Deut 8:8), and the wheat harvest (qetsir chittim) serves as a seasonal marker throughout the historical books (Gen 30:14; Judg 15:1; Ruth 2:23). Moses' poetic blessing calls the finest wheat 'kidney-fat of wheat' (chelev kilyyot chittah, Deut 32:14), an image reprised in Psalm 81:17 and 147:14 to describe divine provision. Ezekiel names wheat among the ingredients of siege bread (Ezek 4:9) and among Judah's exports to Tyre (Ezek 27:17). Every target language renders it with its standard cereal term — Spanish 'trigo,' French 'ble,' German 'Weizen' — confirming a single, stable agricultural sense.

wheat (grain crop) (30×) Wheat as a cultivated cereal grain and staple food, one of the seven species defining the land's fertility (Deut 8:8). Appears in harvest-calendar formulas (Gen 30:14; Exod 34:22; Ruth 2:23), as a metaphor for divine bounty — 'the fat of wheat' (Deut 32:14; Ps 81:17) — and as a trade commodity exported to Tyre (Ezek 27:17). Multilingual glosses converge uniformly: Spanish 'trigo,' French 'ble,' German 'Weizen.' GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: the-wheat, wheat | es: el-trigo, trigo, trigos | fr: [החטים], [חטה], [חטים] | de: [החטים], [חטה], [חטים] Gen 30:14; Exod 9:32; Exod 29:2; Exod 34:22; Deut 8:8

חֲטוּשׁ H2407 N-proper-ms (5×)

Hattush; a post-exilic name borne by a Davidic descendant, a wall-builder, and a priestly leader

A proper name appearing in post-exilic genealogical and administrative records, Hattush is associated with at least two or three distinct individuals. One belongs to the Davidic royal line (1 Chr 3:22; Ezra 8:2), another helped rebuild Jerusalem's wall under Nehemiah (Neh 3:10), and a third was head of a priestly family (Neh 10:4; 12:2). The Septuagint renders the name variously as Chattous and Attous, and the Nabatean parallel Chatishu suggests broader Semitic usage.

(5×) A post-exilic proper name borne by multiple individuals: a descendant of David (1 Chr 3:22; Ezra 8:2), a builder of Jerusalem's wall (Neh 3:10), and a priestly house leader (Neh 10:4; 12:2). Spanish renders it 'Hatush/Jatus,' reflecting variant transliteration traditions. The LXX forms Chattous and Attous suggest the initial guttural was weakening in Greek pronunciation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chattush, Hattush | es: Hatus, Hatush, Jatus | fr: Hattush | de: [חטוש] 1Chr 3:22; Ezra 8:2; Neh 3:10; Neh 10:4; Neh 12:2

חֲטֵי H2408 Conj-w / N-msc / 2ms (2×)

sin (Aramaic); the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew חטא with Qere-Ketiv variant

This Aramaic noun for sin appears only in Daniel 4:27, where Daniel urges Nebuchadnezzar to break off his sins by practicing righteousness. The text has both a Qere (traditional reading) and Ketiv (written text) variant, reflecting uncertainty about the precise form —whether חטאך (your sin) or חטיך (alternative spelling). The word is parallel to 'your iniquities' in the same verse, showing it refers to moral offenses that can be remedied through righteous action.

(2×) Sin or sins in the Aramaic portions of Daniel. The verse appears twice (Daniel 4:27 in English, counted as two entries for the variant readings) with both Qere and Ketiv forms noted. The counsel is to 'break off your sins by righteousness and your iniquities by showing mercy to the oppressed.' All language traditions recognize this as the standard Aramaic word for sin, parallel to Hebrew חטא, shown by the consistent glosses ('sins,' 'pecados,' 'péché,' 'Sünde'). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (qere:and-your-sins), [ketiv:and-your-sins] | es: (y-tus-pecados), [y-tus-pecados] | fr: et-péché | de: [וחטאך], [וחטיך] Dan 4:27

חַטָּא H2409 Prep-l / N-fs (2×)

sin offering (Aramaic); a sacrifice offered for atonement

This Aramaic term designates a sin offering in Ezra 6:17, where the returned exiles offer sacrifices at the dedication of the rebuilt temple. The word appears in both Ketiv and Qere forms (חטיא and חטאה), reflecting variant spellings of the same concept. It corresponds to the Hebrew חטאת when referring to the sacrificial offering rather than the sin itself. The Nabatean cognate חטיאת means 'penalty,' showing the broader Aramaic semantic range of atonement and restitution.

(2×) A sin offering or sacrifice for atonement in the post-exilic temple dedication. Ezra 6:17 describes offerings made at the dedication: bulls, rams, lambs, and 'male goats for a sin offering for all Israel, twelve according to the number of the tribes.' The verse is listed twice due to the Ketiv-Qere variants in the text. The multilingual evidence ('sin offering,' 'expiación,' with textual notes) confirms this is the sacrificial sense, not merely the abstract concept of sin. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: [for-sin-offering], for-a-sin-offering | es: [para-pecado], para-expiación | fr: [לחטאה], [לחטיא] | de: [(לחטאה)], [[לחטיא]] Ezra 6:17

חֲטִיטָא H2410 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hatita, head of a Levitical family of gatekeepers who returned from exile

Hatita was the head of a family of Levitical gatekeepers who returned from the Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel. The name appears in both Ezra 2:42 and the parallel list in Nehemiah 7:45, as part of the registry of those who came back to Jerusalem. As with many names in these post-exilic lists, the exact etymology is uncertain, but the consistent appearance in both genealogical records confirms this was a recognized family of temple servants.

(2×) The proper name of a Levitical family head in the return from exile. Both Ezra 2:42 and Nehemiah 7:45 list 'the sons of Hatita' among the gatekeepers, with the total count varying slightly between the two parallel accounts (as is common in these lists). The Septuagint transliterations (Ατητα, Ατειτα, Ατιτα) show Greek attempts to render an unfamiliar name, while modern languages maintain recognizable forms (Hatita, Jatitá, Chatita). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chatita, Hatita | es: Hatita, Jatitá | fr: [חטיטא] | de: [חטיטא] Ezra 2:42; Neh 7:45

חַטִּיל H2411 N-proper-ms (2×)

Hattil, head of a family among Solomon's servants who returned from exile

Hattil was the ancestral head of a family listed among 'the children of Solomon's servants' who returned from Babylonian exile. The name appears in both the Ezra 2 and Nehemiah 7 lists of returning exiles, specifically among those families descended from royal servants. The designation 'Solomon's servants' likely refers to temple functionaries or administrative personnel associated with the temple complex rather than literal servants of Solomon himself.

(2×) A masculine proper name appearing in post-exilic genealogical lists. Ezra 2:57 and Nehemiah 7:59 both record 'the sons of Hattil' among the descendants of Solomon's servants. The Septuagint shows significant variation (Αττεια, Αττιλ, Εγηλ, Εττηλ), suggesting uncertainty about pronunciation, but the Hebrew consonantal text remains consistent. Modern languages render it as Hattil, Hatil, Chattil, or Jatil depending on convention. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chattil, Hattil | es: Hatil, Jatil | fr: [חטיל] | de: [חטיל] Ezra 2:57; Neh 7:59

חֲטִיפָא H2412 N-proper-ms (2×)
Hatipha, head of a Nethinim family who returned from exile
Hatipha was the head of a family among the Nethinim (temple servants) who returned to Jerusalem after the Babylonian exile. The name appears in both Ezra 2:54 and Nehemiah 7:56 in the lists of returning exiles. The Nethinim were a class of temple servants, possibly including descendants of foreign peoples dedicated to temple service, who performed various menial tasks associated with worship in the post-exilic period.

(2×) A personal name designating a Nethinim family head in the restoration period. The parallel passages in Ezra and Nehemiah both list 'the sons of Hatipha' among the temple servants returning from exile. The Septuagint variations (Ατουφα, Ατιφα, Ατειφα) reflect Greek attempts at transliteration, while the modern language forms (Hatipha, Hatifa, Chatifa, Jatifá) follow standard conventions for rendering Hebrew ḥ and ṭ sounds. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Chatifa, Hatipha | es: Hatifa, Jatifá. | fr: [חטיפא] | de: [חטיפא] Ezra 2:54; Neh 7:56

חָטַם H2413 V-Qal-Imperf-1cs (1×)
restrain, hold back (God restraining anger, Isaiah 48:9)
This verb means to restrain or hold in, particularly applied to anger or strong emotion. Isaiah 48:9 describes God restraining His anger for His name's sake, choosing not to destroy Israel. The imagery derives from controlling beasts with a nose-ring or halter, metaphorically extended to emotional self-control. The verb emphasizes deliberate, forceful restraint.

(1×) Found only in Isaiah 48:9 with divine restraint as the theme. The first-person form 'I-restrain' (Spanish 'refrenaré') shows God's volitional control of justified anger. The parallel 'I will be patient' clarifies that this restraint is for Israel's benefit, preventing the deserved judgment. The animal-control imagery underscores the difficulty of this restraint. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL
en: I-restrain | es: refrenaré- | fr: [אחטם] | de: [אחטם] Isa 48:9

חָטַף H2414 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConjPerf-2mp (3×)
to catch, seize, snatch suddenly
This verb describes the sudden, forceful action of catching or seizing something, often with predatory or violent overtones. It appears in both literal contexts (seizing wives, as in Judges 21:21) and figurative ones (the oppressor catching the afflicted like prey, as in Psalm 10:9 twice). The action is typically swift and aggressive, involving overpowering the object being seized. The verb conveys a sense of violent appropriation rather than gentle taking.

(3×) To seize or catch suddenly, often with violent intent. Judges 21:21 uses it literally for the Benjamites grabbing wives during the festival at Shiloh. Psalm 10:9 employs it twice in vivid metaphor, comparing the wicked oppressor to a predator lurking to catch the helpless. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish arrebatar 'snatch,' French saisir 'seize') consistently emphasizes the forceful, sudden nature of the action. SEIZING AND SNATCHING
en: and-seize, he-catches, to-catch | es: arrebata, para-arrebatar, y-arrebataréis | fr: et-saisir, saisir, à-saisir | de: er-catches, und-ergreifen, zu-catch Judg 21:21; Ps 10:9

חֹטֶר H2415 N-msc (2×)
branch, twig, rod; a shoot or staff, used literally and metaphorically
This noun denotes a branch, twig, or rod, appearing in both literal and figurative contexts. In Isaiah 11:1, it forms part of the famous messianic prophecy: 'A shoot shall come forth from the stump of Jesse,' parallel to 'branch' (נצר). In Proverbs 14:3, it appears in the metaphor 'in the mouth of a fool is a rod of pride,' suggesting that a fool's words become an instrument of his own punishment. The term emphasizes something that grows from or extends out from another.

(2×) A branch, twig, shoot, or rod. Isaiah 11:1 uses it for the messianic shoot from Jesse's line—a new growth from the seemingly dead stump of David's dynasty. Proverbs 14:3 employs it metaphorically for the 'rod of pride' in a fool's mouth, suggesting his words become the instrument of his downfall. The multilingual glosses show both botanical ('shoot,' 'vara') and instrumental ('rod,' 'staff') meanings, with the context determining the primary sense in each passage. RODS AND STAFFS en: is-a-rod-of, shoot | es: vara, vara-de | fr: [חטר], חטר | de: [חטר] Prov 14:3; Isa 11:1

חַי H2416a Prep-l (244×)
Alive, living; having life; substantively: living creature; in oath formulas 'as X lives'; also raw, fresh.
Chay is the Hebrew Bible's primary adjective for the state of being alive, and it radiates outward from that biological core into theology, liturgy, zoology, and even cuisine. As an attribute of God, it carries tremendous force: the 'living God' (El chay, Josh 3:10; Ps 42:3) is no dead idol but the fountain of all vitality. As a substantive, chay names living creatures — all flesh that breathes (Gen 6:19). In the oath formula chay YHWH ('as the LORD lives'), it becomes a solemn guarantee anchored in God's own inextinguishable life, appearing over eighty times from Judges through Kings. The word even extends to physical freshness: raw meat (1 Sam 2:15), running water (Gen 26:19 under the related lemma), and living skin (Lev 13:10). Arabic hayy, Aramaic chayya, and Ethiopic hayw all preserve the same Semitic root, while target languages consistently split the biological, theological, and formulaic senses — Korean 살아 계신 ('living,' of God) versus 산 ('alive,' of creatures) versus 여호와의 사심으로 (oath formula) illustrates three distinct translation strategies for one Hebrew word.

1. alive, living (state/attribute) (146×) The core adjectival sense: alive, living, having life — 146 of 244 occurrences. Used predicatively ('Is your father still alive?' Gen 43:7, 27), attributively ('the living God,' Deut 5:26; Josh 3:10; 1 Sam 17:26), and substantively ('the land of the living,' Ps 27:13; Isa 38:11). This sense spans the entire biological-to-theological spectrum: from Jacob's relief that Joseph is alive (Gen 45:26) to the prophetic vision of dry bones coming to life (Ezek 37:3). Spanish vivo/viviente, Korean 살아 있는, Arabic ، and Swahili hai all deploy their primary vitality adjective. The phrase 'eretz hachayyim ('land of the living') appears eleven times as a poetic designation for this present world in contrast with Sheol. LIVING CREATURES en: alive, living | es: vive, vive?, vivo | fr: vivant | de: -, ?, am-Leben Gen 9:3; Gen 25:6; Gen 43:7; Gen 43:27; Gen 43:28

2. oath formula: as X lives (87×) The oath and adjuration formula: 'as X lives' (chay YHWH, chay 'ani, chay naph'shekha) — 87 occurrences, heavily concentrated in the Deuteronomistic History (Judges through Kings) and the Prophets. The formula functions as the strongest possible oath, staking the claim on the inviolable life of God himself. First appears at Ruth 3:13 (Boaz swearing by YHWH's life), then becomes almost formulaic in Saul's and David's mouths (1 Sam 14:39, 45; 19:6; 20:3; 2 Sam 4:9; 12:5). Arabic uses a parallel construction wa-hayati ('by my life'), confirming the cross-Semitic oath pattern. Korean 여호와의 사심으로 and Spanish 'Vive Jehova' both construct dedicated periphrastic formulas, recognizing this as a fixed speech act rather than a simple adjective. LIVING CREATURES
en: as-lives, as-lives-, lives | es: Vive-, vive, vive- | fr: comme-vit, comme-vit-, vit | de: lebendig, lebt, lebt- Ruth 3:13; 1Sam 14:39; 1Sam 14:45; 1Sam 19:6; 1Sam 20:3

3. living creature, animal (8×) Substantivized noun: a living being, creature, or animal — 8 occurrences where chay functions as a concrete noun rather than an adjective. God gives Adam dominion over every living thing (Gen 1:28), Eve is named 'mother of all living' (Gen 3:20), and Noah brings every chay into the ark (Gen 6:19). The shift from adjective to noun is confirmed by Arabic hayawan (a separate lexeme for 'animal'), Korean 생물 ('living thing,' a compound noun), and Swahili kiumbe hai ('living creature'). Job 12:10 ('in whose hand is the life of every living thing') uses chay in a way that encompasses all animate creation, from insects to humanity.

LIVING CREATURES
en: living, living-thing, the-living | es: el-viviente, ser-viviente,, viviente | fr: le-vivant, vivant, être-vivant | de: Lebendige, Lebendigen, lebendig Gen 1:28; Gen 3:20; Gen 6:19; Gen 8:21; Job 12:10

4. raw, fresh, flowing (2×) Extended physical sense: raw, fresh, or uncooked — 2 occurrences where chay describes the state of meat or material rather than animate life. At 1 Sam 2:15 the corrupt priests demand raw (chay) meat rather than boiled, and at Ps 58:9 thorns are swept away 'whether raw or burning' (the precise meaning is debated). Arabic ٌ('raw'), Korean 날것 ('uncooked'), and Spanish cruda ('raw') all select food-preparation vocabulary rather than vitality terms, confirming a genuine semantic extension from 'alive' to 'in its natural, unprocessed state.' This parallels the usage of 'living water' (mayim chayyim) for flowing rather than stagnant water, though that phrase falls under a related lemma. LIVING CREATURES
en: raw, the-living | es: cruda, vivo | fr: raw, vivant | de: der-living, raw 1Sam 2:15; Ps 58:9

5. (1×) A single occurrence at 2 Sam 12:22 where chay appears in David's plea 'Who knows whether the child will live?' — the verb-adjacent adjectival form here may represent a borderline case between the simple adjectival sense ('alive') and a verbal-resultative nuance ('will come to be alive'). The multilingual renderings — English 'will live,' Spanish vivirá, French fera vivre — all use verbal forms rather than adjectives, suggesting the translators perceived an inchoative or future-stative meaning. In context, David fasts while the child is sick, hoping God will be gracious 'and the child will live,' blending the adjectival state with future contingency. LIFE AND LIVING
en: and-will-live | es: y-vivirá | fr: et-fera-vis | de: und-wird-lebe 2Sam 12:22

חַי H2416b N-mpc / 1cs (1×)
kinsfolk, family clan (1 Samuel 18:18)
This rare noun means 'kinsfolk' or extended family group, distinct from the common word for 'life.' In 1 Samuel 18:18, David humbly asks 'who am I, and what is my kinsfolk?' when Saul offers his daughter in marriage. The Masoretic pointing suggests 'my life,' but context and comparative Semitic evidence favor 're-point as kinsfolk.' Arabic cognates refer to tribal groups united by kinship.

(1×) Appears exclusively in 1 Samuel 18:18, though most translations follow the pointing 'my life' (Spanish 'vida-mía,' French 'vie-mon'). However, scholars recognize this as likely meaning 'my kinsfolk' or 'my clan,' parallel to 'my father's family' in the context. The verse expresses David's humble social status. LIFE AND LIVELIHOOD en: life-my | es: vida-mía | fr: vie-mon | de: Leben-mein 1Sam 18:18

חַיָּה H2416c Conj-w / N-fsc / 3mp (107×)
Living creature, wild beast, animal; also the visionary 'living beings' of Ezekiel, and abstractly 'life' or 'vitality.'
This Hebrew feminine noun chayyah covers the full spectrum from ordinary wildlife to the awe-inspiring living creatures of prophetic vision. In its most frequent usage, it denotes wild animals — 'the beast of the field' or 'beast of the earth' (Gen 1:25; Gen 3:1) — where Arabic consistently renders wahsh (wild beast) and German uses Tier. Yet in Ezekiel's throne visions (Ezek 1:5, 13–14), the same word describes the four supernatural living beings, and Korean notably shifts to saengmul ('living thing') to mark the visionary register. With possessive suffixes, chayyah can also mean 'life' or 'vitality' (Job 33:18–28), where Arabic switches to hayat, revealing a distinct abstract sense that the Hebrew form leaves ambiguous.

1. wild beast, animal (79×) The general zoological sense of a wild animal or beast, especially in construct phrases like chayyat hassadeh ('beast of the field') and chayyat ha'arets ('beast of the earth'). This is the dominant usage at 79 occurrences, covering everything from the serpent in Eden (Gen 3:1) to prophetic warnings about wild beasts devouring the land (Ezek 14:15). Arabic wahsh, Spanish bestia/animal, French bête, and German Tier all converge on the wild-animal reading, distinguishing this clearly from domesticated livestock (behemah). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: beast-of, beasts-of-, creature-of | es: animal-de, bestia-de, la-bestia-de | fr: animal, bête-de, creature-de | de: Getier, Tier, Tier-von Gen 1:25; Gen 1:30; Gen 2:19; Gen 2:20; Gen 3:1

2. living creature (visionary being) (16×) The supernatural 'living creatures' of Ezekiel's visions — the four-faced, four-winged beings that bear the divine throne (Ezek 1:5, 13–14; Ezek 10). Though the Hebrew word is identical to the common animal term, the visionary context transforms its meaning entirely. Korean saengmul ('living entity') and Spanish seres vivientes ('living beings') mark this shift, while German and French sometimes retain Tiere/êtres vivants. The 16 occurrences cluster almost exclusively in Ezekiel 1 and 10, plus Psalm 104:25 where the teeming sea creatures share the sense of vibrant, God-animated life. LIVING CREATURES
en: and-the-living-creatures, living-creatures, the-living-creature | es: Y-los-seres-vivientes, el-ser-viviente, la-criatura | fr: et-le-êtres-vivants, l'être-vivant, les-êtres-vivants | de: Tiere, das-Tier, die-Tiere Ps 104:25; Ezek 1:5; Ezek 1:13; Ezek 1:14

3. life, vitality (11×) Abstract 'life' or 'vitality,' appearing primarily with possessive suffixes — 'his life,' 'my life' — in poetic and wisdom texts, especially Job 33:18–28 where the word occurs repeatedly in the context of God preserving a person's life from the pit. Arabic hayat (life), a completely different nominal form from hayawan (animal), cleanly distinguishes this abstract sense. Spanish vida and German Leben similarly confirm that these 11 occurrences carry the meaning of animate existence or vital force rather than any reference to a creature. LIFE AND LIVELIHOOD
en: (and-his-life), [and-my-life], and-his-life | es: (y-su-vida), [y-mi-vida], la-vida-de | fr: animal, et-leur-animal-eux, et-mon-animal-moi | de: Tier, mein-Leben, und-Tier Job 33:18; Job 33:20; Job 33:22; Job 33:28

4. (1×) A single occurrence in Job 38:39, where the word appears in a context suggesting 'appetite' or 'craving' of the lioness — 'Can you satisfy the appetite of the young lions?' English renders 'appetite,' Spanish apetito, while French and German default to the animal sense. This hapax usage likely represents a specialized extension of the 'vitality/life-force' sense applied to predatory hunger, though some lexicons treat it as a textual or interpretive crux. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-appetite-of | es: y-apetito-de | fr: et-animal | de: und-Tier Job 38:39

חַיָּה H2416d N-fsc / 2ms (4×)
Band, troop, or community; a group of allied families or a settled flock, distinct from חַיָּה meaning 'living creature.'
A rare feminine noun, distinct from the common חַיָּה ('living creature'), denoting a band, troop, or community — a group of people or creatures functioning as a social unit. In 2 Samuel 23:13, a 'community of Philistines' encamps in the Valley of Rephaim, describing a raiding party of allied families. Psalm 68:10 uses it of God's flock or congregation dwelling in the land he prepared for the poor. The translations reveal interesting interpretive variation: English offers 'flock' and 'band,' Spanish congregación and tropa, German Herde ('flock'), reflecting the ambiguity between a military band and a settled community.

(4×) A band, troop, or community — a group of allied families acting together, or a settled flock under divine care. In 2 Samuel 23:11, 13, it describes a Philistine raiding party encamped as a military band. In Psalm 68:10, it shifts to a pastoral image: God's 'flock' or community dwelling in the goodness he prepared. Psalm 74:19 uses it in a plea not to deliver God's community to wild beasts. The range from military troop to settled congregation reflects how kinship groups could function as both. German Herde ('flock') and Spanish congregación capture the communal aspect. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Your-flock, and-band-of, for-raid | es: Tu-congregación, en-tropa, vida-de | fr: et-bande-de, pour-raid, vie | de: dein-Herde, der-Leben-von, fuer-raid 2Sam 23:11; 2Sam 23:13; Ps 68:10; Ps 74:19

חַיִּים H2416e N-mpc / 1cp (147×)

Life, lifespan, lifetime; the abstract state of being alive, or substantively 'the living' (living ones).

An emphatic plural noun (חַיִּים) expressing the full weight of 'life' in Hebrew — not merely biological existence but the whole texture of a person's days. It appears in the foundational 'breath of life' at Genesis 2:7, in the anguished cry of Job ('why is light given to one whose life is bitter?' Job 3:20), and in the psalmist's praise for God who 'keeps our soul among the living' (Ps 66:9). The construct chain 'years of the life of' structures patriarchal narratives (Gen 23:1; 25:7; 47:8–9). Occasionally the form shifts from abstract to concrete, referring to 'the living' as a group (Ps 66:9; Ezek 7:13).

1. life, lifespan, lifetime (145×) The abstract concept of life, lifespan, or the state of being alive — covering physical existence, its duration, and its quality. Appears 145 times in diverse frames: 'breath of life' (Gen 2:7; 7:15), 'years of the life of Sarah' (Gen 23:1), 'my life is bitter' (Gen 27:46), and 'your lovingkindness is better than life' (Ps 63:4). Multilingual glosses converge emphatically: Spanish 'vida/la vida,' French 'vie,' German 'Leben/des Lebens' — all abstract life-nouns without exception. LIFE AND LIVELIHOOD

en: life | es: Vida, la-vida, vida | fr: vie | de: Leben, des-Lebens, des-Lebens-ist Gen 2:7; Gen 6:17; Gen 7:15; Gen 7:22; Gen 27:46

2. the living, living ones (2×) A substantive use meaning 'the living' or 'living ones,' referring to the community of those who are alive rather than to the abstract concept of life itself. Attested twice: Psalm 66:9 ('He keeps our soul among the living') and Ezekiel 7:13 (the vision shall not return to anyone among the living). Spanish 'en los vivos' (among the living) captures the concretized, communal sense that distinguishes this from the abstract 'vida' of sense 1. LIFE AND LIVELIHOOD

en: among-the-living | es: en-la-vida, en-los-vivos | fr: dans-vie | de: Leben, unter-der-living Ps 66:9; Ezek 7:13

חַי H2417 Conj-w (7×)

Aramaic adjective 'living, alive' used as a divine epithet and substantively; also as a noun meaning 'life, lifetime.'

An Aramaic word found exclusively in Daniel and Ezra, carrying two closely related but grammatically distinct uses. As an adjective it describes God as 'the living One' (Daniel 6:20, 26) and people as 'the living' (Daniel 4:17), echoing the Hebrew chai. As a noun it means 'life' or 'lifetime,' as when the Jews pray 'for the life of the king' (Ezra 6:10). The Spanish renderings viviente and los-vivientes neatly preserve the substantival force, while the English 'and-the-One-living' captures the divine epithet usage.

1. living (adjective) (5×) The adjectival use meaning 'living, alive,' applied both to God and to human beings. As a divine epithet in Daniel 6:20 and 6:26, it declares God as 'the living God' (chayya^{a}), paralleling the Hebrew El Chai. In Daniel 2:30 and 4:17 it appears substantivally for 'the living,' i.e., those who are alive. The multilingual glosses confirm this: Spanish viviente and French vivant both render the active participial force. LIVING CREATURES

en: and-the-One-living, the-living | es: los-vivientes, viviente, y-al-que-vive-por | fr: et-pour-vivant, vivant | de: [ולחז], [חיא], [חייא] Dan 2:30; Dan 4:17; Dan 4:34; Dan 6:20; Dan 6:26

2. life (noun) (2×) The nominal use meaning 'life' or 'lifetime,' functioning as an abstract plural (chayyim/chayin). In Ezra 6:10 it occurs in the construct phrase 'for the life of the king,' denoting duration and well-being. In Daniel 7:12 it refers to a prolongation of life granted to the beasts. The shift from adjective to abstract noun parallels the Hebrew pattern where the plural chayyim regularly means 'life.' LIFE AND LIVELIHOOD

en: for-the-life-of, in-life | es: en-vida, por-la-vida-de | fr: [לחיי], vivant | de: [בחיין], [לחיי] Ezra 6:10; Dan 7:12

חַיָּא H2418 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (6×)

live, be alive (Aramaic); (Haphel) let live, keep alive

An Aramaic verb meaning 'to live,' best known from the formulaic court greeting 'O king, live forever!' (Dan 2:4; 3:9; 5:10; 6:6, 21). This deferential wish appears on the lips of astrologers, queens, and officials alike, making it the standard Aramaic salutation before royalty. In its sole Haphel occurrence (Dan 5:19), the verb takes on causative force: Nebuchadnezzar had the power to 'let live' whomever he wished. Spanish 'dejaba vivir' ('he would let live') captures this life-and-death royal prerogative precisely.

1. (5×) To live, be alive, used in the Pe'al imperative as a formulaic court greeting: 'O king, live forever!' Attested five times in Daniel (2:4; 3:9; 5:10; 6:6; 6:21), always addressed to a reigning monarch. English 'live,' Spanish 'vive,' French 'vivre,' and German 'leben' all render this with simple, direct equivalents reflecting the universal nature of the wish. LIFE AND LIVING

en: live | es: vive, vive! | fr: vivre | de: leben Dan 2:4; Dan 3:9; Dan 5:10; Dan 6:6; Dan 6:21

2. (1×) To keep alive, let live, in the Haphel (causative) stem. In Dan 5:19, Nebuchadnezzar possessed absolute power over life and death: 'whom he wished he kept alive.' Spanish 'dejaba vivir' ('he would let live') and English 'striking' (contextually: deciding who lives) highlight the sovereign's terrifying discretion over human survival. LIFE AND LIVING

en: striking | es: dejaba-vivir | fr: vivre | de: leben Dan 5:19

חִיאֵל H2419 N-proper-fs (1×)

Hiel - the Bethelite who rebuilt Jericho under Ahab (1 Kings 16:34)

This theophoric name means 'El lives' or 'God lives' and identifies the man who rebuilt Jericho during Ahab's reign, fulfilling Joshua's curse. First Kings 16:34 records that Hiel lost his firstborn and youngest sons in the process, exactly as Joshua had prophesied centuries earlier. The name appears in Phoenician and Sabaean inscriptions, showing wider Semitic usage.

(1×) Personal name occurring solely in 1 Kings 16:34. All target languages transliterate (Spanish 'Jiel,' English/French/German 'Hiel'). The theophoric composition 'El-lives' makes a theological affirmation, creating tragic irony given that Hiel's own sons died when he rebuilt Jericho contrary to the divine curse. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Hiel | es: Jiel | fr: Hiel | de: Hiel 1Kgs 16:34

חִידָה H2420 N-fsc / 2ms (17×)

riddle, enigmatic saying — a dark or perplexing utterance requiring interpretation, including allegories and proverbs

Chidah denotes a riddle or enigmatic saying that demands interpretive effort from its hearer. Best known from Samson's wedding riddle in Judges 14, where the word appears seven times as he challenges the Philistines with a dark saying born from personal experience (Judg 14:12-19), the term extends well beyond parlor games. In Numbers 12:8, God distinguishes Moses from other prophets by saying he speaks with him 'mouth to mouth, clearly, and not in riddles' — placing chidah on the obscure end of a revelation spectrum. The Queen of Sheba tests Solomon 'with riddles' (1 Kgs 10:1; 2 Chr 9:1), probing the depths of his divinely given wisdom. Proverbs 1:6 groups chidot alongside mashal ('proverb') and melitsah ('figure'), as the literary stock-in-trade of the wise. Ezekiel 17:2 is commanded to 'propound a riddle and speak an allegory,' and Habakkuk 2:6 applies the term to taunting oracles against Babylon. Psalm 49:4 and 78:2 use it for wisdom teachings that probe life's deepest moral puzzles. Spanish 'enigma,' French 'enigme,' and German 'Raetsel' all capture the sense of deliberate obscurity awaiting resolution.

riddle, enigmatic saying (17×) A riddle, enigmatic utterance, or perplexing saying that requires interpretation — covering literal riddles (Samson's wedding challenge, Judg 14:12-19), tests of wisdom (the Queen of Sheba's riddles to Solomon, 1 Kgs 10:1; 2 Chr 9:1), prophetic allegories (Ezek 17:2; Hab 2:6), obscure modes of divine communication contrasted with direct speech (Num 12:8), and wisdom literature's dark sayings that probe moral complexity (Ps 49:4; 78:2; Prov 1:6). The term is paired with mashal ('proverb') and melitsah ('figure') in its literary-didactic uses. Spanish 'enigma,' French 'enigme,' and German 'Raetsel' all converge on the core sense of deliberate opacity inviting discovery. RIDDLE ENIGMA en: a-riddle, and-their-riddles, in-riddles | es: con-enigmas, de-enigmas, el-enigma | fr: [בחידות], [חידה], avec-riddles | de: Raetsel, [בחידות], [וחידתם] Num 12:8; Judg 14:12; Judg 14:13; Judg 14:14; Judg 14:15

חָיָה H2421 V-Qal-InfAbs (266×)

