Ῥοῦφος G4504 N-GMS (2×)
Rufus, a personal name meaning 'red' in Latin
A Latin name (meaning 'red-haired' or 'ruddy'). In Mark 15:21, Rufus is mentioned as the son of Simon of Cyrene (who carried Jesus' cross), evidently known to Mark's Roman audience. In Romans 16:13, Paul greets Rufus as 'chosen in the Lord' and affectionately mentions his mother. The identification of these two Rufuses is debated, but both passages show the name belonged to early Christians connected to pivotal gospel events.

(2×) The glosses transliterate the Latin ('Rufus'). Mark 15:21 identifies Rufus as Simon the Cyrenian's son, implying he was known to early readers—perhaps part of the Roman church. Romans 16:13 greets a Rufus (possibly the same man) as elect and honors his mother. Both references suggest Rufus was a respected figure in the first-generation church. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Rhouphos, Rouphos | es: a-Rhoûphon, de-Rhûphos | fr: Rufus | de: Rufus Mark 15:21; Rom 16:13

ῥύμ-η G4505 N-AFS (4×)
A narrow street, lane, or alleyway in a town or city.
While the classical Greek word carries meanings of 'rush' or 'force,' in the New Testament and later Koine usage it refers specifically to a narrow lane or alleyway within a city, distinct from the broader 'plateia' (wide street) or 'hodos' (road). Jesus contrasts secret prayer with public display 'in the streets' (Matt 6:2), and the master sends servants into the 'lanes' to gather the marginalized (Luke 14:21). In Acts, it names the specific street called 'Straight' in Damascus (Acts 9:11) and the lane Peter walked after his miraculous release from prison (Acts 12:10).

(4×) A narrow urban lane or alleyway, typically smaller than a main thoroughfare. The multilingual evidence distinguishes this term carefully: English uses 'lane' and 'street,' Spanish 'calle,' and French 'ruelle' (a diminutive implying a small street), suggesting a passage narrower than a major avenue. In Matt 6:2, it is the setting for ostentatious almsgiving; in Luke 14:21, the master commands servants to go into the 'lanes and alleys' to find the poor and disabled. Acts uses it as a concrete toponym–the street called Straight in Damascus (Acts 9:11)–and as the lane Peter traversed upon escaping prison (Acts 12:10), lending the word a vivid narrative specificity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: lanes, street, streets | es: calle, calles | fr: ruelle | de: ῥύμαις, ῥύμας, ῥύμην Matt 6:2; Luke 14:21; Acts 9:11; Acts 12:10

ῥύομαι G4506 V-ASP-1P (18×)

To rescue, deliver, or drag to safety; as a substantive, 'the Deliverer' — a title for God or the Messiah.

The middle-voice verb rhyomai carries the vivid image of snatching someone out of danger, related to the older verb eryō ('to drag, pull'). It appears in contexts ranging from the Lord's Prayer petition to be delivered from evil (Matt 6:13) to Paul's testimony of rescue from mortal peril (2 Cor 1:10). Spanish captures the breadth with 'librar' and 'libertar,' while French uses 'délivrer' and German 'erretten.' Two occurrences stand apart: the substantivized participle ho rhyomenos, 'the Deliverer,' applied to the coming Redeemer from Zion (Rom 11:26) and to Jesus who rescues from the coming wrath (1 Thess 1:10).

1. rescue or deliver from danger (16×) To rescue, save, or deliver someone from danger, enemies, evil, or distress. This dominant sense covers sixteen of eighteen occurrences and spans every tense and voice. Jesus teaches his disciples to pray 'deliver us from evil' (Matt 6:13; Luke 11:4); Paul recounts being rescued from deadly peril (2 Cor 1:10); the Psalmist's words are quoted mockingly at the cross — 'let Him deliver him' (Matt 27:43). Spanish 'librar/libertar' and French 'délivrer' both foreground the idea of setting free from bondage or threat. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: He-will-deliver, I-might-be-delivered, I-was-rescued | es: fui-librado, habiendo-sido-librados, librará | fr: délivrer, libérateur | de: Erretter, ῥυσάσθω, ῥυσθέντας Matt 6:13; Matt 27:43; Luke 1:74; Luke 11:4; Rom 7:24

2. Deliverer as title (2×) The substantivized present participle ho rhyomenos used as a messianic or divine title meaning 'the Deliverer.' In Romans 11:26 Paul quotes Isaiah 59:20 — 'the Deliverer will come from Zion' — and in 1 Thessalonians 1:10 Jesus is 'the one who delivers us from the wrath to come.' Spanish 'Libertador' and German 'Erretter' both capitalize the term as a proper title, marking the shift from verbal action to personal designation. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: Deliverer, delivering | es: Libertador, que-rescata | fr: délivrer, libérateur | de: Erretter Rom 11:26; 1Thess 1:10

ῥῠπᾰρ-ία G4507 N-AFS (1×)

Moral filth, defilement, or corruption

James 1:21 urges believers to 'put away all filthiness and rampant wickedness' in order to receive God's word. While the Greek term can denote physical dirt, here it clearly refers to moral impurity and corruption. The image is of soiled garments that must be removed before one can properly receive divine truth. The metaphor emphasizes that moral defilement hinders spiritual receptivity.

(1×) Moral filthiness or corruption that must be removed in James 1:21. The term's physical sense of dirt or grime becomes a powerful metaphor for moral defilement. The cross-linguistic glosses (filthiness, inmundicia, Schmutz) maintain both the visceral disgust and the ethical dimension. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8220 WITH 3 SENSES

en: filthiness | es: inmundicia | fr: ῥυπαρίαν | de: Schmutz Jas 1:21

ῥῠπᾰρός G4508 Adj-NMS (2×)

filthy, dirty, morally sordid or defiled

An adjective describing physical or moral filth. In James 2:2, it describes shabby, dirty clothing worn by a poor person entering the assembly—contrasted with fine apparel. In Revelation 22:11, it appears in a solemn pronouncement: let the filthy still be filthy (parallel to 'let the righteous still do right'). One use is socioeconomic (dirty garments signaling poverty), the other eschatological (moral defilement becoming fixed). Both involve visible manifestation of condition.

(2×) The glosses ('filthy,' 'sucio,' 'schmutzig') uniformly denote dirtiness. James 2:2 uses it literally for soiled clothes, exposing favoritism toward the well-dressed. Revelation 22:11 uses it figuratively for moral corruption becoming permanent at the end. Both passages involve external markers—literal grime or moral stain—that reveal deeper realities about dignity or character. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8231 WITH 3 SENSES

en: filthy | es: inmundo,, sucio | fr: schmutzig | de: schmutzig Jas 2:2; Rev 22:11

ῥύπος G4509 N-GMS (1×)

Dirt, filth, or impurity

In 1 Peter 3:21, Peter clarifies that Christian baptism is 'not a removal of dirt from the body but an appeal to God for a good conscience.' The Greek noun denotes physical dirt or grime. Peter uses it to distinguish between mere external washing and the inward reality baptism signifies. The contrast underscores that salvation is not about physical cleansing but spiritual renewal through Christ's resurrection.

(1×) Physical dirt or bodily filth, used in 1 Peter 3:21 to clarify what baptism is not. Peter emphasizes that the water ceremony doesn't function as ordinary bathing to remove grime but rather symbolizes the appeal to God for cleansing of conscience through Jesus' resurrection. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8220 WITH 3 SENSES

en: of-dirt | es: de-suciedad | fr: ῥύπου | de: Schmutz 1Pet 3:21

ῥῠπό-ω G4510 V-AMP-3S (1×)

To become or remain filthy, to be defiled

Revelation 22:11 issues a stark pronouncement: 'Let the evildoer still do evil, and the filthy still be filthy.' The verb denotes becoming or remaining in a state of moral defilement. In the context of Revelation's closing vision, it marks the finality of human choices—when Christ returns, the time for repentance is past, and each person is fixed in their chosen moral state.

(1×) To be or become morally filthy, used in Revelation 22:11's declaration of fixed moral states at the end. The imperative form doesn't command sin but acknowledges that at Christ's return, the opportunity for change has ended—those who chose defilement remain in it. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: let-him-be-filthy | es: ensúciese | fr: schmutzig-werden | de: schmutzig-werden Rev 22:11

ῥύσις G4511 N-NFS (3×)

a flow, discharge; the flowing or issuing forth of liquid

This noun denotes a flow or discharge, particularly of bodily fluids. Classical usage included river currents, tides, oil yields, and medical conditions involving abnormal discharges. The New Testament uses it exclusively for a woman's chronic hemorrhage—a medical and ritual purity issue that the Gospels treat with compassion. The term is clinical and descriptive.

(3×) Describes a chronic flow of blood as a medical condition. Mark 5:25 introduces 'a woman who had a flow of blood for twelve years.' Luke 8:43 repeats this: 'a woman having a flow of blood for twelve years.' Luke 8:44 describes her healing: 'she touched the fringe of his garment, and immediately her flow of blood stopped.' The Spanish 'flujo' and French 'flux' are straightforward medical terms. This condition rendered her ritually unclean and socially isolated for twelve years. Jesus' healing not only cured the medical problem but restored her to community and worship—addressing both physical suffering and social exclusion. FLOWING WATER

en: a-flow, flow | es: flujo | fr: flux | de: ῥύσει, ῥύσις Mark 5:25; Luke 8:43; Luke 8:44

ῥυτίς G4512 N-AFS (1×)

A wrinkle, crease, or blemish on the skin

Ephesians 5:27 describes Christ's purpose for the church: to present her 'without spot or wrinkle or any such thing.' The Greek noun denotes the creases and wrinkles that come with age or imperfection. Paul uses it alongside 'spot' to emphasize the church's complete beauty and perfection in Christ. The image is of a bride made flawless through Christ's sanctifying work.

(1×) A wrinkle or crease, used metaphorically in Ephesians 5:27 for any imperfection in the church. Combined with 'spot,' it emphasizes the church's complete beauty and purity as Christ's bride—not aged or blemished but radiant and holy through his cleansing love. OLD AGE

en: wrinkle | es: arruga | fr: ῥυτίδα | de: Runzel Eph 5:27

Ῥωμᾰ-ϊκός G4513 Adj-DNP (1×)

Roman, pertaining to Rome

Luke 23:38 notes that the inscription above Jesus' cross was written 'in letters of Greek, Latin, and Hebrew.' The adjective 'Roman' (Latin) identifies the language of the empire. This trilingual notice reflects Jerusalem's cosmopolitan character and ensures that Jesus' identity as King of the Jews is proclaimed to all—Jews, Greeks, and Romans alike.

(1×) Pertaining to Rome or its language (Latin), used in Luke 23:38 to identify one of the three languages on Jesus' cross inscription. The multilingual notice broadcasts Jesus' kingship to the entire known world—Jewish, Greek-speaking, and Roman audiences all see his title. ROMAN CITIZEN

en: Roman | es: Romanas | fr: en-latin | de: Ρωμαϊκοῖς Luke 23:38

Ῥωμ-αῖος G4514 Adj-AMS (12×)

Rhōmaios – Roman; a citizen or subject of Rome, used as adjective and substantive

The adjective Rhōmaios ('Roman'), almost always substantivized, designates a person holding Roman citizenship or belonging to the Roman political order. It appears in two dramatic registers. Politically, the Jewish leaders fear that Jesus' movement will provoke Rome: 'the Romans will come and take away both our place and our nation' (John 11:48). Legally, Paul twice invokes his Roman citizenship to halt illegal punishment (Acts 16:37-38; 22:25-29), and the Roman tribune Lysias claims he purchased his citizenship for a large sum (Acts 22:28). The word also names the audience of Paul's letter in Acts 2:10, visitors from Rome among the Pentecost crowd. Spanish romano, French Romain, and German Roemer render it as a single ethnic-legal designation throughout.

Roman, a Roman citizen (12×) A Roman citizen or member of the Roman political order, used of individuals asserting legal citizenship (Paul in Acts 16:37; 22:25-29), collective political entities feared by Jewish leaders (John 11:48), and Roman legal customs (Acts 25:16). Spanish romano, French Romain, and German Roemer confirm one undifferentiated ethno-political designation. ROMAN CITIZEN

en: Rhōmaioi, Romans, a-Roman | es: Rhōmaîoi, de-romanos, romano | fr: Romain | de: Roemer, Römer John 11:48; Acts 2:10; Acts 16:21; Acts 16:37; Acts 16:38

Ῥωμᾰ-ϊστί G4515 Adv (1×)

In Latin, in the Roman language

John 19:20 records that the title on Jesus' cross was written 'in Hebrew, in Latin, and in Greek.' The adverb specifies the Roman imperial language. This trilingual inscription ensured that Jesus' identity as King of the Jews was readable to all major linguistic groups in first-century Jerusalem. Latin represents Rome's political authority, making the proclamation of Jesus' kingship a public, official declaration.

(1×) In the Latin language, one of three languages used for Jesus' cross inscription in John 19:20. The use of Rome's official language alongside Hebrew and Greek makes Jesus' kingship proclamation comprehensive, addressing Jewish, Hellenistic, and Roman audiences gathered at Passover. ROMAN CITIZEN

en: in-Latin | es: en-latín | fr: en-latin | de: roemisch John 19:20

Ῥώμη G4516 N-AFS (8×)

Rome: the capital city of the Roman Empire, center of imperial power and early Christian community.

The proper noun Rome (Rhome) appears eight times in the NT, always designating the imperial capital. It functions as both geographical destination and theological symbol. Acts traces Paul's divinely ordained journey toward Rome (Acts 19:21; 23:11 — 'you must testify also in Rome'), culminating in his arrival and house arrest (Acts 28:14-16). Romans 1:7 addresses the saints 'in Rome,' and Acts 18:2 notes Aquila and Priscilla's expulsion from the city under Claudius. Across languages — Spanish 'Roma,' French 'Rome,' German 'Rom' — the name requires virtually no translation, testifying to the city's enduring cultural imprint.

Rome (proper noun, the city) (8×) The capital city of the Roman Empire, seat of imperial government and site of an early Christian community. Every NT occurrence treats Rome as a concrete geographical location rather than a symbolic entity (unlike Revelation's 'Babylon'). Paul's journey to Rome forms the narrative arc of Acts' second half: the Lord himself declares 'you must testify in Rome' (Acts 23:11). The near-universal preservation of the name across languages — Spanish 'Roma,' French 'Rome,' German 'Rom' — reflects Rome's unmatched cultural prominence in the ancient world. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Rhōmē, Rome | es: Rhṓmē, Roma | fr: Rom, Rome | de: Rom Acts 18:2; Acts 19:21; Acts 23:11; Acts 28:14; Acts 28:16

ῥώννῡμι G4517 V-RMM/P-2P (1×)

Farewell, be strong, stay well (conventional closing)

Acts 15:29 concludes the apostolic letter to Gentile believers with 'Farewell'—a conventional Greek closing formula. The underlying verb means 'be strong' or 'be well,' but in letter-writing contexts it functions as a polite sign-off. The Jerusalem council's use of this standard greeting gives their momentous decision about Gentile inclusion a tone of pastoral warmth despite the weighty theological matters addressed.

(1×) A farewell greeting meaning 'be strong' or 'be well,' used as the closing of the apostolic letter in Acts 15:29. While the verb root conveys strength or health, in epistolary contexts it functions as a conventional sign-off, wishing recipients well as the letter concludes. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: Farewell | es: Pasadlo-bien | fr: se-bien-porter | de: Ἔρρωσθε Acts 15:29

G4518 V-AIA-2S (2×)

sabachthani, Aramaic for 'you have forsaken me' from Psalm 22:1

An Aramaic verb form (from Hebrew עָזַב) meaning 'you have forsaken/abandoned me.' Both uses are in Jesus' cry from the cross, quoting Psalm 22:1. Matthew 27:46 and Mark 15:34 preserve the Aramaic words: 'Eli, Eli, lema sabachthani?' / 'Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani?'—'My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?' The evangelists retain the original language, underlining the raw anguish of Jesus' God-forsakenness as he bears sin's penalty.

(2×) The glosses transliterate the Aramaic ('sabachthani'). Matthew 27:46 and Mark 15:34 both record Jesus' desolate cry, quoting Psalm 22:1. The retention of Aramaic (alongside translation) emphasizes the moment's gravity—Jesus experiences the abandonment that sinners deserve, crying out in the language of his people. The verb captures the climax of atoning suffering. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: sabachthani | es: sabachthani, sabachthaní | fr: sabachthani | de: Sabachthani, σαβαχθάνι Matt 27:46; Mark 15:34

G4519 N-GMP (2×)
Hebrew word 'Sabaoth' (armies, hosts) transliterated into Greek, referring to God as Lord of heavenly armies
This is a direct transliteration of the Hebrew צָבָא (tsaba), meaning 'armies' or 'hosts.' It appears exclusively in the title 'Lord of Sabaoth' (Κύριος Σαβαώθ), preserving the Hebrew phrase 'LORD of hosts' that emphasizes God's sovereignty over the heavenly armies. The term carries the weight of divine power and cosmic authority, evoking God's command over both celestial beings and earthly forces. Paul and James both use this solemn title when speaking of God's judgment and deliverance.

(2×) The transliterated Hebrew word appears only in quotations or allusions to Old Testament passages (Romans 9:29 cites Isaiah 1:9; James 5:4 echoes prophetic language about divine judgment). The preservation of the Hebrew rather than translation into Greek στρατιά (army) or δύναμις (power) maintains the liturgical and covenantal resonance of the original. LORD OF HOSTS
en: Sabaoth, Sabaōth | es: Sabaòth, Sabaóth | fr: Sabaoth, Zebaoth | de: Zebaoth Rom 9:29; Jas 5:4

Σαββᾰτ-ισμός G4520 N-NMS (1×)
A Sabbath rest, the observance of sacred rest
Hebrews 4:9 promises that 'there remains a Sabbath rest for the people of God.' This rare noun (appearing only here in the New Testament) emphasizes not just rest but Sabbath-keeping—the sacred, covenant rest that Israel's weekly Sabbath foreshadowed. The author argues that Joshua's conquest didn't exhaust God's rest promise; a greater, eschatological Sabbath remains for believers who enter God's rest through faith.

(1×) A keeping of Sabbath rest, the eschatological rest promised in Hebrews 4:9. The term intensifies beyond mere rest to emphasize sacred, covenantal rest-keeping. The cross-linguistic glosses (sabbath-rest, reposo-sabático, Sabbatruhe) preserve the Sabbath dimension that links the promise to Israel's weekly observance. SABBATH AND WEEK
en: sabbath-rest | es: reposo-sabático | fr: Sabbatruhe | de: Sabbatruhe Heb 4:9

Σάββᾰτ-ον G4521 N-GNS (68×)
The Sabbath, the seventh day of rest and worship; by extension, the week as a unit of seven days measured from Sabbath to Sabbath.
Borrowed from Hebrew shabbat into Greek as sabbaton, this term saturates the Gospel narratives with controversy over proper Sabbath observance. Jesus heals on the Sabbath (Matt 12:10), his disciples pluck grain (Matt 12:1-2), and the day itself becomes a battleground for interpreting Torah. In a secondary usage, sabbaton extends to mean the entire week — 'the first day of the sabbaton' (Mark 16:2; Luke 24:1; John 20:1) refers to Sunday, the day after the Sabbath. Spanish distinguishes 'sabado' (the day) from 'semana' (the week), making the semantic shift especially visible.

1. Sabbath day of rest (60×) The Sabbath — the seventh day of the week consecrated for rest and worship, central to Jewish observance and to Jesus' controversies with religious authorities. Both singular and plural forms (sabbaton, sabbata) denote the same single day. The Synoptic Gospels concentrate usage around Sabbath healing disputes (Matt 12:1-12; Mark 2:23-3:6; Luke 6:1-11). French 'sabbat,' German 'Sabbat,' and Spanish 'sabado' all transliterate or derive directly from the Hebrew, reflecting the institution's universal recognition. SABBATH AND WEEK
en: Sabbath, a-Sabbath, on-Sabbath | es: en-sábado, sábado | fr: sabbat | de: Sabbat, σάββατον, σαββάτου Matt 12:1; Matt 12:2; Matt 12:5; Matt 12:10; Matt 12:11

2. week period of seven days (8×) The week as a seven-day period reckoned from Sabbath to Sabbath, appearing in temporal expressions like 'the first day of the week' (mia ton sabbaton). The resurrection narratives uniformly use this sense — Mark 16:2, Luke 24:1, John 20:1, and Acts 20:7 all mark the first day after the Sabbath. The Pharisee's boast 'I fast twice a week' (dis tou sabbatou, Luke 18:12) also employs this meaning. Spanish 'de semana' versus 'sabado' makes the distinction especially transparent. SABBATH AND WEEK
en: of-sabbath, of-week, sabbaths | es: de-semana, de-sábados, del-sábado | fr: sabbat | de: Sabbat, σαββάτου, σαββάτων Mark 16:2; Mark 16:9; Luke 18:12; Luke 24:1; John 20:1

σᾰγήν-η G4522 N-DFS (1×)
A dragnet or seine, a large fishing net
Matthew 13:47 opens Jesus' parable with the image: 'The kingdom of heaven is like a net that was thrown into the sea.' The Greek term denotes a large dragnet or seine—a net weighted at the bottom and floated at the top, drawn through the water to catch everything in its path. This indiscriminate gathering illustrates how the kingdom's message reaches all kinds of people; the sorting comes later, at the judgment.

(1×) A large dragnet used for fishing, the central image in Jesus' parable of the net in Matthew 13:47. This type of net catches everything indiscriminately, making it an apt metaphor for the kingdom's wide reach and the eventual separation of good and bad at the end of the age. NETS AND SNARES
en: to-a-dragnet | es: a-red | fr: filet | de: σαγήνῃ Matt 13:47

Σαδδουκαῖος G4523 N-GMP (14×)
Sadducee — a member of the Jewish priestly-aristocratic sect that denied resurrection and angelic spirits Designates a member of the Sadducees, the Jewish religious-political party associated with the priestly aristocracy and the temple establishment. The name derives from Hebrew Tsadoq, the Davidic-era high priest whose descendants controlled the Jerusalem priesthood. Matthew pairs them with the Pharisees as adversaries who test Jesus (Matt 16:1; 22:23), while Acts reveals their distinctive theology: they denied the resurrection of the dead, the existence of angels, and the reality of spirits (Acts 23:8). Their 14 New Testament occurrences cluster in confrontation narratives — the baptism of John (Matt 3:7), the Leaven discourse (Matt 16:6-12), the resurrection debate (Matt 22:23-34; Mark 12:18; Luke 20:27), and the early church's conflicts with the temple authorities (Acts 4:1; 5:17; 23:6-8).

Sadducee (member of the priestly aristocratic sect) (14×)
A member of the Sadducees, the priestly-aristocratic Jewish party centered on the Jerusalem temple who rejected belief in resurrection, angels, and spirits (Acts 23:8). Their confrontations with Jesus focus on the resurrection question (Matt 22:23-34; Mark 12:18; Luke 20:27), and in Acts they emerge as persecutors of the early church (Acts 4:1; 5:17). Transliteration traditions are stable across languages (eng: Sadducees, spa: Saduceos, fra: Sadducéens, deu: Sadduzäer), reflecting the proper-noun character of the designation. All 14 occurrences refer to this single party without semantic variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Saddoukaioi, Sadducees, of-Sadducees | es: Saddoukaíous, Saddoukaîoi, Saddoukáioi | fr: Sadducéen | de: Sadduzaeer, Sadduzäer Matt 3:7; Matt 16:1; Matt 16:6; Matt 16:11; Matt 16:12

Σαδώκ G4524 N-AMS (2×)
Sadok (Zadok), a priestly ancestor in Jesus' genealogy; named after the Hebrew priest meaning 'righteous' Σαδώκ is the Greek rendering of the Hebrew name צָדוֹק (Tsadok), meaning 'righteous.' This name appears in Matthew's genealogy of Jesus, referring to one of the post-exilic ancestors in the line from David to Christ. The name Zadok was famous in Israel's history —the high priest who remained loyal to David and Solomon—and continued to be used among Jewish families as a marker of priestly heritage and righteousness. Matthew's inclusion emphasizes Jesus' legitimate descent through Israel's honored lineages.

(2×) Matthew 1:14 lists Sadok twice in quick succession as part of the genealogical chain. The uniform transliteration across European languages (Sadok, Zadok) reflects the name's stability as a proper noun. This ancestor lived during the obscure period between the Babylonian exile and the Maccabean era, a time when few biblical records survive. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sadōk | es: Sadók | fr: Sadok | de: Zadok Matt 1:14

σαίνω G4525 V-PNM/P (1×)

To be shaken, disturbed, or unsettled

In 1 Thessalonians 3:3, Paul expresses his concern 'that no one be moved by these afflictions.' The Greek verb originally described dogs wagging their tails but came to mean being disturbed, shaken, or unsettled. Paul's pastoral concern is that persecution might unsettle the Thessalonians' faith—he wants them to remain firm despite suffering, understanding that trials are part of the Christian calling.

(1×) To be disturbed, unsettled, or shaken from one's position, particularly by affliction (1 Thessalonians 3:3). Paul's concern is that persecution might destabilize believers' faith. The verb conveys not violent destruction but subtle unsettling that could lead to abandoning Christian commitment under pressure. SHAKING TREMBLING en: to-be-disturbed | es: sea-perturbado | fr: σαίνεσθαι | de: erschuettern 1Thess 3:3

σάκκος G4526 N-DMS (4×)

Sackcloth; a coarse fabric of goat hair worn as a sign of mourning, repentance, or grief.

A loanword from Hebrew/Aramaic (saq), this term denotes the rough, dark fabric woven from goat or camel hair that became the universal biblical symbol of grief, mourning, and penitence. Jesus invokes it in his woe against Chorazin and Bethsaida, declaring that Tyre and Sidon would have repented long ago 'in sackcloth and ashes' (Matt 11:21; Luke 10:13). In Revelation, the sun turns 'black as sackcloth' at the opening of the sixth seal (Rev 6:12), and God's two witnesses prophesy clothed in sackcloth (Rev 11:3). The Spanish 'cilicio' adds the connotation of penitential garment, while French 'sac' and German 'Sack' preserve the etymological link to the original Semitic word.

(4×) Coarse cloth made from dark goat or camel hair, or a garment made from such cloth, worn to express mourning, repentance, or deep grief. The word is a Semitic loanword that passed through Greek virtually unchanged, and the cross-linguistic evidence reflects this: Spanish 'cilicio' (hairshirt) emphasizes the penitential function, while 'saco,' French 'sac,' and German 'Sack' retain the original form. Jesus' hypothetical about Tyre and Sidon repenting in sackcloth and ashes (Matt 11:21; Luke 10:13) draws on the established Old Testament pairing of sackcloth with ash as the visible posture of contrition (cf. Jonah 3:6; Dan 9:3). Revelation extends the imagery apocalyptically: the darkened sun resembles sackcloth (Rev 6:12), and the two witnesses wear it as a prophetic uniform of urgent warning (Rev 11:3). SACKCLOTH MOURNING

en: in-sackcloth, sackcloth | es: cilicio, saco | fr: sac | de: Sack, σάκκῳ Matt 11:21; Luke 10:13; Rev 6:12; Rev 11:3

Σαλά G4527 N-GMS (2×)

Sala (Shelah), an ancestor in Jesus' genealogy descended from Shem through Arpachshad

Σαλά transliterates the Hebrew שֶׁלַח (Shelah), who appears in Genesis 10-11 as a descendant of Shem and ancestor of Abraham. Luke traces Jesus' genealogy all the way back to Adam, and Sala appears in this ancient line connecting Christ to the patriarchs who lived after the flood. The name may mean 'sprout' or 'sent forth,' though its etymology is debated. Luke's genealogy highlights the universal scope of Jesus' significance, rooting him not just in Jewish royalty but in humanity's deepest origins.

(2×) Luke 3:32 and 3:35 both reference Sala, though textual variants exist (some manuscripts read Salmon in 3:32). The ancestral line from Sala leads through Eber, the ancestor of the Hebrews, down to Abraham. French and Spanish preserve the accented form (Salá) while German and English use simplified versions, reflecting differing transliteration traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sala | es: Salá | fr: Sala | de: Σαλὰ Luke 3:32; Luke 3:35

Σαλαθιήλ G4528 N-NMS (3×)

Salathiel (Hebrew: 'I asked God'); father of Zerubbabel in Jesus' genealogy

Salathiel is the Greek form of the Hebrew name meaning 'I asked God.' He appears in Jesus' genealogies as the father of Zerubbabel, the post-exilic governor who led the return from Babylon and the rebuilding of the temple. The name connects Jesus' lineage to the restoration period after the exile.

(3×) Identifies Salathiel in the genealogies of Jesus. Matthew 1:12 traces the line through the exile: 'After the exile to Babylon, Jechoniah fathered Salathiel, and Salathiel fathered Zerubbabel.' Luke 3:27 includes him in the ascending genealogy: 'the son of Zerubbabel, the son of Salathiel.' The consistent cross-linguistic rendering shows this is a proper name tied to Israel's restoration history. Salathiel's inclusion in Jesus' genealogy links the Messiah to the promise of restoration after judgment—Jesus is the ultimate fulfillment of Israel's hope for return and renewal. SHEALTIEL PERSONAL NAME

en: Salathiēl | es: Salathiél | fr: Salathiel | de: Salathiel Matt 1:12; Luke 3:27

Σᾰλᾰμίς G4529 N-DFS (1×)

Salamis, a city on the eastern coast of Cyprus

Salamis was an important port city on Cyprus's eastern shore. Acts 13:5 records that Paul, Barnabas, and John Mark 'proclaimed the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews' there during the first missionary journey. As Cyprus was Barnabas's homeland, Salamis became the natural starting point for their mission work, illustrating how the gospel spread through both personal connections and strategic urban centers.

(1×) A major city on Cyprus where Paul and Barnabas began their first missionary journey in Acts 13:5. The name's consistent preservation across translations marks it as a specific geographical location where the gospel first reached Cyprus through the apostolic mission. ISLAND COASTLAND

en: Salamis | es: Salamîna | fr: Salamine | de: Σαλαμῖνι Acts 13:5

Σαλείμ G4530 N-GNS (1×)

Salim, a location near where John baptized

John 3:23 locates John the Baptist's ministry 'at Aenon near Salim, because water was plentiful there.' The exact location is uncertain, but the detail about abundant water explains why John chose this spot for baptizing. Salim's mention provides geographical concreteness to the narrative while highlighting the practical needs of John's baptizing ministry—he needed a place with sufficient water to immerse many people.

(1×) A place near Aenon where John the Baptist conducted his ministry according to John 3:23. The geographical reference's preservation across translations maintains the narrative's historical specificity, even though the precise location remains uncertain to modern readers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Saleim | es: -Saleím | fr: Salim | de: Salim John 3:23

σαλ-εύω G4531 V-ANA (15×)

To shake, agitate, or cause to totter; used of earthquakes, cosmic upheaval, stirring up crowds, and inner disturbance of mind.

This verb covers the full spectrum of shaking—from the literal trembling of heaven and earth to the figurative unsettling of a person's composure. Jesus asks the crowds what they went out to see: 'A reed shaken by the wind?' (Matt 11:7; Luke 7:24), and the apocalyptic discourses warn that 'the powers of the heavens will be shaken' (Matt 24:29; Mark 13:25). Paul uses it of inner stability when he urges the Thessalonians not to be 'shaken in mind' (2 Thess 2:2). One delightful concrete use describes grain being 'shaken together' to settle a generous measure (Luke 6:38). Spanish distinguishes sacudir (physical shaking) from ser movido (being mentally moved), mirroring the Greek semantic range precisely.

1. be physically shaken (9×) Physical shaking of objects, structures, or cosmic bodies. This dominant sense (9 occurrences) includes the eschatological shaking of heavenly powers (Matt 24:29; Mark 13:25; Luke 21:26) and the image of a reed swaying in the wind (Matt 11:7; Luke 7:24). German erschüttert and Spanish sacudido both convey violent, involuntary trembling caused by an external force. SHAKING TREMBLING en: being-shaken, to-be-shaken, was-shaken | es: fue-sacudido, sacudida, sacudidas | fr: ébranler | de: erschuettern, erschüttert Matt 11:7; Matt 24:29; Mark 13:25; Luke 7:24; Luke 21:26

2. shake or agitate actively (3×) Active shaking or agitation —someone or something as the agent. A flood shakes a house but cannot topple it (Luke 6:48); troublemakers 'stir up' crowds in Thessalonica (Acts 17:13); God's voice will 'shake not only earth but also heaven' (Heb 12:26). Spanish agitando for the crowd-stirring nicely captures the social dimension alongside the physical. SHAKING TREMBLING

en: shook, stirring-up, to-shake | es: agitando, sacudir, sacudió | fr: ébranler | de: erschuettern, erschüttert Luke 6:48; Acts 17:13; Heb 12:26

3. be inwardly disturbed (2×) Metaphorical inner disturbance —being shaken in one's composure or convictions. David declares 'I shall not be shaken' (Acts 2:25, quoting Ps 16:8), and Paul warns the Thessalonians not to be 'shaken in mind' by false reports of the Lord's return (2 Thess 2:2). Spanish ser movido ('to be moved') and the shift from physical to psychological register show how Greek naturally extends seismic language to the soul. SHAKING TREMBLING en: I-be-shaken, to-be-shaken | es: sea-movido, ser-sacudidos | fr: ébranler | de: erschuettern, erschüttert Acts 2:25; 2Thess 2:2

4. shake together to compact (1×) Shaking a container so its contents compress and settle—a single vivid occurrence in Luke 6:38 where a 'good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over' describes God's generosity. Spanish sacudida and German erschüttert apply the same physical verb, but the context transforms it into a homely image of grain compacting in a measuring vessel. SHAKING TREMBLING en: shaken-together | es: sacudida | fr: ébranler | de: erschüttert Luke 6:38

Σαλήμ G4532 N-GFS (2×)

Salem, the city of Melchizedek (likely early Jerusalem), symbolizing peace and righteousness

Σαλήμ represents the Hebrew שָׁלֵם (Shalem), the city where Melchizedek was king and priest (Genesis 14:18). Traditionally identified with early Jerusalem, Salem means 'peace' and became symbolic in biblical theology. Hebrews 7 uses this reference to argue for Christ's superior priesthood—Jesus as a priest forever in the order of Melchizedek, whose very city-name signifies peace. The dual role of Melchizedek as king of Salem (peace) and king of righteousness makes him a typological precursor to Christ.

(2×) Hebrews 7:1-2 unpacks the symbolic meaning of Salem in conjunction with Melchizedek's name, creating a theological argument from the very etymology. The genitive form 'of Salem' emphasizes Melchizedek's royal-priestly identity. All major translations preserve Salem as a proper noun, recognizing its theological weight in Christian typology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-Salēm | es: de-Salḗm | fr: Salem | de: Salem Heb 7:1; Heb 7:2

Σαλμών G4533 N-AMS (2×)

Salmon, ancestor of Boaz in Jesus' genealogy; father through his marriage to Rahab

Σαλμών is the Greek form of the Hebrew שַׂלְמוֹן (Salmon), who appears in Ruth's family line as the husband of Rahab and father of Boaz. This makes Salmon a crucial link in the messianic genealogy, connecting the conquest generation (Rahab the Canaanite) to the time of the judges (Ruth the Moabite) and eventually to King David. Matthew highlights these unlikely foreign women in Jesus' ancestry, showing God's grace operating through unexpected people. The name possibly means 'clothing' or 'garment,' though its meaning is less significant than the genealogical connection.

(2×) Matthew 1:4-5 mentions Salmon in the context of this remarkable lineage. Some manuscripts of Luke 3:32 also include Salmon, though there's textual variation with Sala. The multilingual consistency (Salmon, Salmón) shows this as an established biblical name, though German retains the identical form. Salmon represents God's redemptive inclusion of Gentiles into the covenant people. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8524 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Salmōn | es: Salmón | fr: Salmon | de: Salmon Matt 1:4; Matt 1:5

Σαλμώνη G4534 N-AFS (1×)

Salmone, a promontory on the northeast coast of Crete

Salmone was a cape on the eastern end of Crete. Acts 27:7 describes Paul's storm-tossed voyage to Rome: after many days they 'sailed under the lee of Crete off Salmone.' The ship was fighting contrary winds, making even this short stretch difficult. The geographical marker helps readers trace Paul's perilous journey and sets the stage for the dramatic shipwreck narrative that follows.

(1×) A promontory on Crete's northeastern coast, mentioned in Acts 27:7 during Paul's voyage to Rome. The name marks a specific point in the storm-threatened journey, showing how Paul's ship struggled even to round Crete before eventually wrecking on Malta. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Salmōnē | es: Salmónē | fr: Salmone | de: Σαλμώνην Acts 27:7

σάλος G4535 N-GMS (1×)

The rolling swell or surge of the sea

Luke 21:25 describes end-times distress: 'people fainting with fear and with foreboding of what is coming on the world. For the powers of the heavens will be shaken.' Included in these signs is 'the roaring of the sea and the waves.' The Greek noun denotes the rolling, tossing motion of heavy seas—not merely waves but the heaving swell that signals storm and danger. It's a cosmic image of instability and terror.

(1×) The rolling swell or surge of the sea, part of the apocalyptic signs in Luke 21:25. The term conveys not just surface waves but the deep, heaving motion of storm-tossed waters—an image of cosmic instability that will cause widespread fear as the end approaches. WAVE BILLOW SEA

en: of-waves | es: de-oleaje | fr: houle | de: σάλου Luke 21:25

σάλπ-ιγξ G4536 N-AFP (11×)

Trumpet — a metal wind instrument used for military signals, worship assembly, and eschatological announcement

The noun σάλπιγξ (salpinx) denotes the trumpet as both instrument and sound. In eschatological contexts it heralds the final gathering: angels will gather the elect 'with a great sound of a trumpet' (Matt 24:31), the dead in Christ will rise at the 'last trumpet' (1 Cor 15:52), and the Lord will descend 'with the trumpet of God' (1 Thess 4:16). Revelation opens with John hearing a voice 'like a trumpet' (Rev 1:10) and unfolds the seven trumpet judgments (Rev 8–11). Paul also uses it practically: 'If the trumpet gives an uncertain sound, who will prepare for battle?' (1 Cor 14:8). Spanish 'trompeta' and Swahili 'tarumbeta/baragumu' confirm a single unified concept across all occurrences.

trumpet (the instrument or its sound) (11×) A trumpet — a metal wind instrument (or its blast) used for signaling, worship, and eschatological announcement. In the Gospels, angels gather the elect with a great trumpet blast (Matt 24:31). Paul employs it both practically for clear communication (1 Cor 14:8, 'if the trumpet gives an uncertain sound') and eschatologically for the resurrection (1 Cor 15:52, 'the last trumpet'; 1 Thess 4:16, 'the trumpet of God'). In Revelation it introduces John's commission (Rev 1:10) and the seven trumpet judgments. Hebrews 12:19 recalls the Sinai theophany trumpet. Spanish 'trompeta,' Arabic 'buq,' and Korean 'napal' all map to a single referent. HORNS AND TRUMPETS

en: a-trumpet, of-trumpet, trumpet | es: de-trompeta, trompeta, trompetas | fr: trompette | de: Posaune, σάλπιγγος Matt 24:31; 1Cor 14:8; 1Cor 15:52; 1Thess 4:16; Heb 12:19

σαλπ-ίζω G4537 V-AIA-3S (12×)

salpizō – to sound a trumpet, to blow a blast; apocalyptic, liturgical, and figurative trumpet-blowing

The verb salpizō ('sound a trumpet') denotes the act of blowing a trumpet or horn. Its New Testament usage is dominated by Revelation's seven angels, each of whom 'sounds' a trumpet to inaugurate successive judgments upon the earth (Rev 8:6-13; 9:1, 13; 10:7; 11:15). Paul uses the verb eschatologically for the last trumpet that signals the resurrection: 'the trumpet will sound, and the dead will be raised imperishable' (1 Cor 15:52). Jesus employs it with biting irony in the Sermon on the Mount, warning hypocrites not to 'sound a trumpet before you' when giving to the needy (Matt 6:2). Whether apocalyptic, eschatological, or satirical, the underlying action is the same. Spanish tocar la trompeta, French sonner de la trompette, and German posaunen converge on a single sense.

sound a trumpet, blow (12×) To blow or sound a trumpet, covering apocalyptic judgment blasts (Rev 8:7-13; 9:1; 11:15), the eschatological last trumpet (1 Cor 15:52), and Jesus' figurative use for ostentatious charity (Matt 6:2). Spanish tocar-trompeta, French sonner-de-la-trompette, and German posaunen treat all occurrences as one undivided action. HORNS AND TRUMPETS

en: it-will-sound, sound-trumpet, they-might-trumpet | es: sonará, tocar, tocar-trompeta | fr: sonner-de-la-trompette | de: posaunen, σαλπίσῃς Matt 6:2; 1Cor 15:52; Rev 8:6; Rev 8:7; Rev 8:8

σαλπ-ιγκτής G4538 N-GMP (1×)

Trumpeters, those who blow trumpets

Revelation 18:22 laments Babylon's fall: 'The sound of harpists and musicians, of flute players and trumpeters, will be heard in you no more.' Trumpeters represent the celebratory and ceremonial music that accompanied the city's commercial glory. Their silencing symbolizes the complete cessation of festivity, trade, and culture—judgment has reduced the vibrant city to desolate silence.

(1×) Musicians who play trumpets, mentioned in Revelation 18:22 among those whose sounds will cease in fallen Babylon. The term appears in a catalog of silenced artisans and musicians, emphasizing that all celebration and cultural life will end when God's judgment falls. HORNS AND TRUMPETS

en: of-trumpeters | es: de-trompetistas | fr: joueurs-de-trompette | de: Posaunenblaesern Rev 18:22

Σαλώμη G4539 N-NFS (2×)

Salome, a female follower of Jesus who witnessed the crucifixion and visited the tomb

Σαλώμη derives from the Hebrew שָׁלוֹם (shalom), meaning 'peace.' This Salome was one of the faithful women who followed Jesus in Galilee, witnessed his crucifixion from a distance, and came to the tomb on Easter morning with spices to anoint his body. Mark identifies her alongside Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of James as among Jesus' most devoted disciples. She represents the women who remained faithful when many male disciples fled, and who became the first witnesses to the empty tomb. Traditional identification links her to the mother of James and John, though this is debated.

(2×) Mark 15:40 introduces Salome among the women at the cross, and Mark 16:1 lists her among those bringing burial spices to Jesus' tomb. The English gloss 'spices' in one instance reflects contextual merging with the purpose of their visit rather than the name itself. European languages uniformly transliterate the name (Salomé, Salome), recognizing its Hebrew peace-etymology while honoring this faithful disciple. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Salōmē, spices | es: Salṓmē | fr: Salomé | de: Salome Mark 15:40; Mark 16:1

Σαμάρεια G4540 N-AFS (11×)

Samaria — the region and chief city in central Palestine between Judea and Galilee, homeland of the Samaritans

The proper noun Σαμάρεια (Samareia) designates both the ancient city and the broader region of central Palestine between Judea and Galilee. In John 4:4-7, Jesus passes 'through Samaria' and encounters the Samaritan woman at Jacob's well. Luke 17:11 places Jesus 'between Samaria and Galilee.' The risen Christ commissions the disciples as witnesses 'in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and to the end of the earth' (Acts 1:8), and Acts records the gospel's spread into Samaria through Philip's preaching (Acts 8:1-14) and the church's peace 'throughout Judea, Galilee, and Samaria' (Acts 9:31). Spanish 'Samaria' preserves the name unchanged.

Samaria (proper noun, the region/city) (11×) Samaria, the proper noun for the region (and its chief city) in central Palestine between Judea and Galilee, homeland of the Samaritans. Theologically significant as the first expansion zone of the gospel beyond Jerusalem: Jesus' encounter with the Samaritan woman at the well (John 4:4-7), the risen Lord's commission 'in all Judea and Samaria' (Acts 1:8), Philip's mission sparking revival there (Acts 8:1-14), and the early church's peace 'throughout Judea, Galilee, and Samaria' (Acts 9:31; 15:3). Luke 17:11 locates Jesus' journey 'between Samaria and Galilee.' Spanish 'Samaria,' Hindi 'Samariya,' and Korean 'Samaria' all transliterate uniformly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Samareia, of-Samaria | es: Samaria, Samaréia, Samáreia | fr: Samarie | de: Samaria, Samarien Luke 17:11; John 4:4; John 4:5; John 4:7; Acts 1:8

εἶτις, ιδος G4541 N-NMS (9×)

A Samaritan; a person from the region of Samaria, viewed by Jews as ethnically and religiously distinct.

Identifies a person from Samaria, the region between Judea and Galilee whose inhabitants were regarded by Jews as religiously compromised and ethnically mixed due to the Assyrian resettlement centuries earlier. Jesus' interactions with Samaritans are among the most boundary-breaking moments in the Gospels: the parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10:33), the grateful Samaritan leper (Luke 17:16), and the extended conversation at Jacob's well (John 4:9, 39, 40). The word carries heavy social freight — 'Jews have no dealings with Samaritans' (John 4:9) — making every positive mention a deliberate challenge to ethnic and religious exclusion.

Samaritan (person from Samaria) (9×) A person from Samaria, the central Palestinian region whose inhabitants were considered by mainstream Judaism to be ethnically and religiously impure — a gentilic noun loaded with social and theological significance. Jesus' command not to enter Samaritan towns (Matt 10:5) reflects the standard Jewish posture, but his subsequent actions subvert it: the Good Samaritan becomes the model of neighborly love (Luke 10:33), a Samaritan leper alone returns to give thanks (Luke 17:16), and a Samaritan woman becomes the first evangelist to her village (John 4:9, 39). Spanish 'Samaritanos,' French 'Samaritain,' and German 'Samariter' all transliterate rather than translate, preserving the ethnic-geographic specificity that makes the word's boundary-crossing NT usage so powerful. SAMARITAN PERSON

en: Samaritai, Samaritans, Samaritēs | es: -Samarítai, -a-Samarítai, Samaritanos | fr: Samaritain | de: Samariter, Σαμαρίτης, Σαμαριτῶν Matt 10:5; Luke 9:52; Luke 10:33; Luke 17:16; John 4:9

Σαμαρεῖτις G4542 N-NFS (2×)

A Samaritan woman (feminine form); member of the ethnically-mixed people despised by first-century Jews

Σαμαρεῖτις is the feminine form referring to a woman from Samaria, the region between Judea and Galilee inhabited by people of mixed Israelite and Gentile ancestry. Samaritans and Jews had centuries of bitter hostility stemming from the Assyrian conquest and resettlement. John's Gospel famously records Jesus' conversation with a Samaritan woman at Jacob's well, breaking multiple social taboos by speaking to both a woman and a Samaritan. The dialogue becomes one of Scripture's most profound theological exchanges about worship, revelation, and messianic identity.

(2×) John 4:9 twice emphasizes the shocking nature of Jesus' request for water—the Samaritan woman herself expresses surprise that a Jewish man would speak to her. The repetition underscores the cultural barrier Jesus deliberately crossed. French (Samaritaine) and German (Samariterin) use the feminine forms while Spanish and English transliterate more directly, but all convey the ethnic-religious identity central to the narrative. SAMARITAN PERSON

en: Samaritis | es: Samarítis | fr: Samaritaine | de: Samariterin John 4:9

Σᾰμοθρᾴκη G4543 N-AFS (1×)

Samothrace, a Greek island in the northern Aegean

Samothrace was a mountainous island in the northern Aegean, famous in antiquity for its mystery cult of the Cabiri. Acts 16:11 records Paul's brief stop there on his voyage from Troas to Philippi during the second missionary journey. The island's strategic location made it a natural overnight anchorage for ships crossing from Asia to Macedonia, marking a key stage in the gospel's spread into Europe.

(1×) An island in the northern Aegean where Paul stopped on his journey to Macedonia in Acts 16:11. The geographical name's preservation marks this as a waypoint in the momentous westward expansion of Christianity from Asia into Europe following Paul's vision. ISLAND COASTLAND

en: Samothrakē | es: Samothrákē | fr: Samothrace | de: Σαμοθρᾴκην Acts 16:11

Σάμος G4544 N-AFS (1×)

Samos, a Greek island off the coast of Asia Minor

Samos was a large, prosperous island near Ephesus, known in classical times for its maritime power and the birthplace of Pythagoras. Acts 20:15 notes that Paul's ship 'touched at Samos' on his return journey to Jerusalem. The brief mention places Paul's travels within the well-known geography of the eastern Mediterranean, showing how the apostolic mission used established sea routes.

(1×) A prominent Greek island near Ephesus, mentioned in Acts 20:15 as a stop on Paul's return to Jerusalem. The island's name remains consistent across translations, marking a specific point in Paul's final journey before his arrest and eventual voyage to Rome. ISLAND COASTLAND

en: Samos | es: Samos | fr: Samos | de: Samos Acts 20:15

Σαμουήλ G4545 N-GMS (3×)

Samuel (Hebrew: 'heard by God'); prophet and judge who anointed Israel's first kings

Samuel is the Greek form of the Hebrew name meaning 'heard by God' or 'name of God.' He was the last judge of Israel and the prophet who anointed both Saul and David as kings. The New Testament references him as a key prophetic figure who spoke of the Messianic age and exemplified faith.

(3×) Identifies the prophet Samuel in apostolic preaching and the roll call of faith. Acts 3:24 states 'all the prophets from Samuel and those who followed, as many as have spoken, also proclaimed these days.' Acts 13:20 recounts Israel's history: 'after these things, he gave them judges until Samuel the prophet.' Hebrews 11:32 lists him among the heroes of faith: 'what more shall I say? For time would fail me to tell of Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah, of David and Samuel and the prophets.' The cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent identification with occasional spelling variation. Samuel represents the transition from judges to kings and the prophetic announcement of messianic hope. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Samouel, Samouēl | es: Samouél, Samoúēl | fr: Samuel | de: Samaria, Samuel Acts 3:24; Acts 13:20; Heb 11:32

Σαμψών G4546 N-GMS (1×)

Samson, the judge known for his strength

Samson appears in Hebrews 11:32 among the heroes of faith who 'conquered kingdoms, enforced justice, obtained promises.' Though his life was marked by moral failure and flawed judgment, his faith-enabled exploits against Israel's enemies earn him a place in the catalog of faithful witnesses. His inclusion reminds us that God works through imperfect people whose trust in Him accomplishes mighty deeds despite their weaknesses.

(1×) The judge of Israel known for supernatural strength, listed in Hebrews 11:32 as a man of faith. Despite his moral failures, Samson's Spirit-empowered victories over the Philistines demonstrate faith's power. The Hebrew name's preservation honors his place in salvation history. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Sampsōn | es: Sampsón | fr: Simson | de: Simson Heb 11:32

σανδάλ-ιον G4547 N-ANP (2×)

Sandals, the simple leather foot-coverings worn in biblical times, strapped to the foot

Σανδάλιον refers to the basic footwear of the ancient world—leather soles secured to the foot with straps. These simple sandals were essential for travel and daily life in the dusty, rocky terrain of Palestine. In Mark 6, Jesus instructs his disciples to wear sandals on their mission, providing practical protection while maintaining simplicity. In Acts 12, the angel commands Peter to put on his sandals during the miraculous prison escape. Sandals appear throughout Scripture as markers of journey, mission, and humble readiness (contrasted with elaborate footwear of the wealthy).

(2×) The two New Testament occurrences show sandals in practical contexts—missionary instruction and urgent escape. The Greek diminutive form suggests these were simple, unremarkable items. LSJ notes the term from the 5th century BC onward, also used for horseshoes and surgical bandages, but the biblical usage is clearly the common footwear. Multilingual translations uniformly recognize the basic shoe referent. SANDALS FOOTWEAR

en: sandals | es: con-sandalias, sandalias | fr: sandale | de: Sandalen, σανδάλιά Mark 6:9; Acts 12:8

σᾰνίς G4548 N-DFP (1×)

Wooden planks or boards

Acts 27:44 describes the shipwreck survivors reaching shore: 'some on planks and some on pieces of the ship.' The Greek noun denotes boards or wooden planks—in this context, parts of the ship's structure that floated after the vessel broke apart. Luke's detailed account shows God's providence in saving all 276 people, some swimming, others clinging to debris, fulfilling Paul's prophetic assurance that all would reach land safely.

(1×) Wooden planks or boards, specifically pieces of the wrecked ship in Acts 27:44 that survivors used to reach shore. The detail illustrates how God's promise of complete preservation was fulfilled—even those who couldn't swim made it to land by clinging to floating wreckage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: planks | es: tablas | fr: planche | de: σανίσιν Acts 27:44

σαῦλος G4549 N-AMS (9×)

Saul; Hebrew name (Sha'ul, 'asked [of God]') used of King Saul and of Paul's pre-conversion identity.

A Greek transliteration of the Hebrew name Sha'ul, meaning 'asked' or 'requested,' reflecting the prayer of the one who sought a child from God. In the New Testament it refers both to King Saul of Israel (Acts 13:21) and, more prominently, to Saul of Tarsus before his conversion to the apostle Paul. The risen Christ addresses him with this name twice on the Damascus road: 'Saoul, Saoul, why do you persecute me?' (Acts 9:4; 22:7). The Spanish and French renderings (Saul/Saoul) preserve the Septuagintal spelling, while German occasionally conflates it with other proper nouns in the same manuscript tradition.

(9×) The proper name Saul, a Hellenized form of Hebrew sha'ul ('asked, requested'). In the NT it designates two figures: Israel's first king, whom God gave the people when they demanded a monarch (Acts 13:21), and the Pharisee from Tarsus whom the risen Jesus confronts by this very name on the road to Damascus (Acts 9:4, 17; 22:7). The multilingual glosses (spa Saul, fra Saul, deu Felix/Samothrake notwithstanding) uniformly recognize this as a personal name carried over from the Hebrew Bible into the Greek text. SAUL PERSONAL NAME

en: Saoul | es: Saoúl, Saúl | fr: Saul | de: Samothrake Acts 9:4; Acts 9:17; Acts 13:21; Acts 22:7

σαπρός G4550 Adj-AMS (8×)

Rotten, bad, worthless: describing something decayed in quality or unfit for use.

Originally describing physical putrefaction — rotten fruit, stale fish, decayed wood — sapros takes on a moral and qualitative sense in Jesus's teaching. In the tree-and-fruit metaphor (Matt 7:17-18; 12:33), a 'bad' tree cannot produce good fruit. In the parable of the dragnet (Matt 13:48), 'rotten' fish are sorted out and thrown away. Ephesians 4:29 applies the term to speech: no 'rotten' word should come from your mouth. The physical-to-moral trajectory is strikingly consistent. French 'pourri' and German 'faul' both preserve the concrete decay imagery that underlies the metaphorical extension.

bad, rotten, worthless (8×) Rotten, decayed, bad, or worthless — originally of physical decomposition (putrid fruit, stale fish, crumbling wood) and extended in the NT to moral and qualitative worthlessness. Jesus employs it in the tree-fruit analogy: 'a bad (sapros) tree bears bad fruit' (Matt 7:17-18; 12:33), where the physical image of rot becomes a diagnosis of inner corruption. The dragnet parable (Matt 13:48) uses it for inedible fish discarded at sorting. French 'pourri' (rotten) and German 'faul' (rotten/lazy) capture the visceral imagery, while Spanish 'malo' generalizes toward 'bad.' Eph 4:29 extends the metaphor to speech — 'no rotten word' — completing the physical-to-ethical arc. BAD ROTTEN WORTHLESS

en: bad, rotten | es: corrompida, malo, malos | fr: pourri | de: faul, schlecht Matt 7:17; Matt 7:18; Matt 12:33; Matt 13:48

Σαπφείρα G4551 N-DFS (1×)

Sapphira, wife of Ananias who conspired in deception

Sapphira appears in Acts 5:1 alongside her husband Ananias in the sobering account of their conspiracy to lie to the Holy Spirit about the proceeds from selling property. Her separate interrogation by Peter, three hours after Ananias's death, gave her opportunity to tell the truth—but she maintained the deception and suffered the same fatal judgment. Their story marks the early church's holiness and God's seriousness about truth.

(1×) The personal name of Ananias's wife in Acts 5:1, who joined her husband in lying about their gift to the church. Her name (related to 'sapphire') is preserved across translations, marking her as a warning about the deadly consequences of hypocrisy in the community of faith. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sapphirē | es: Sapphírē | fr: Sapphira | de: Σαπφίρη Acts 5:1

σάπφειρ-ος G4552 N-NFS (1×)

Sapphire, a precious blue stone

Revelation 21:19 describes the foundations of the New Jerusalem adorned with precious stones, the second being sapphire. In antiquity, 'sapphire' likely referred to lapis lazuli, a deep blue stone prized for its beauty. The gem contributes to the vision's overwhelming splendor, symbolizing the incomparable glory and worth of God's eternal dwelling with his people. Each stone reflects divine beauty beyond earthly comparison.

(1×) A precious blue stone (likely lapis lazuli in antiquity) adorning the second foundation of the New Jerusalem in Revelation 21:19. The gem's inclusion among the foundation stones emphasizes the city's surpassing beauty and the eternal glory of God's dwelling with redeemed humanity. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: sapphire | es: zafiro; | fr: Saphir | de: Saphir Rev 21:19

σαργάν-η G4553 N-DFS (1×)

A basket woven from rope or twigs

In 2 Corinthians 11:33, Paul recounts his humiliating escape from Damascus: 'I was let down in a basket through a window in the wall and escaped his hands.' The Greek term denotes a large woven basket or hamper. Paul includes this inglorious detail in his catalog of sufferings—the great apostle smuggled out of the city like cargo. It's a powerful reminder that Christian ministry often lacks dignity and involves humiliation.

(1×) A large woven basket used for Paul's escape from Damascus in 2 Corinthians 11:33. The detail emphasizes the humiliating circumstances—rather than a dramatic rescue, Paul was lowered like freight through a window, beginning his apostolic ministry with an undignified flight from persecution. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: basket | es: canasta | fr: σαργάνη | de: Korb 2Cor 11:33

Σάρδεις G4554 N-AFP (3×)

Sardis; ancient wealthy city in Asia Minor, site of one of the seven churches

Sardis was the ancient capital of Lydia in western Asia Minor, famous for its wealth, its fortress acropolis, and its eventual decline. By New Testament times it was past its glory but still significant. It was one of the seven churches addressed in Revelation, rebuked for being spiritually dead despite its reputation.

(3×) Identifies the city of Sardis and its church. Revelation 1:11 includes Sardis in the list of seven cities to receive John's message. Revelation 3:1 addresses 'the angel of the church in Sardis: These things says he who has the seven spirits of God and the seven stars: I know your works, that you have a name that you are alive, but you are dead.' Revelation 3:4 offers hope: 'you have a few names even in Sardis who have not defiled their garments.' The consistent cross-linguistic identification shows this is the historical city whose past glory contrasted sharply with its spiritual deadness—a warning about resting on reputation rather than reality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Sardeis | es: Sardis | fr: Sardes | de: Sardes Rev 1:11; Rev 3:1; Rev 3:4

σάρδιον G4555

sardius, sardian stone; a reddish-brown or red gemstone, carnelian or sardine variety

This word refers to the Sardian stone, a gemstone named after Sardis in Asia Minor. Ancient sources distinguished two varieties: the transparent red 'female' stone (our carnelian) and the transparent brown 'male' stone (our sardine). Greeks and Romans prized these stones for seals and ornaments. The stone appears in biblical descriptions of priestly garments and apocalyptic visions, where its deep red color carried symbolic weight. Later Greek writers used various forms like σάρδιος, σάρδινος, and σαρδόνιον to refer to this prized material, which decorated both sacred and secular objects throughout antiquity.

σάρδιον G4556 N-NNS (2×)

Carnelian (sardius), a reddish-brown or red precious stone used in jewelry and symbolic of divine glory

Σάρδιον refers to the Sardian stone, named after Sardis in Asia Minor where it was found. Ancient sources distinguish two varieties: the transparent red (female) carnelian and the transparent brown (male) sardine. In Revelation's apocalyptic visions, this stone appears in descriptions of overwhelming divine glory. The throne of God has the appearance of jasper and carnelian (Revelation 4:3), and carnelian is listed among the foundation stones of the New Jerusalem (Revelation 21:20). The reddish hues likely symbolize fire, blood, divine judgment, and royal splendor.

(2×) Both Revelation occurrences use carnelian in contexts of transcendent beauty and divine presence. The stone appears in lists of precious materials that earthly language can barely approximate when describing heavenly realities. Ancient writers like Theophrastus documented the two varieties, and the term persisted into Byzantine Greek. Modern translations use 'carnelian' or 'sardius' to identify this blood-red stone. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: carnelian | es: de-sardio, sardio; | fr: Sardion | de: Sardion Rev 4:3; Rev 21:20

σαρδόνυξ G4557 N-NMS (1×)

Sardonyx, a layered gemstone combining colors

Revelation 21:20 lists sardonyx as the fifth foundation stone of the New Jerusalem. This gemstone features layers of different colors—white alternating with red or brown, creating striking bands. Ancient writers distinguished it from simple onyx by these colorful layers. In the vision of the holy city, sardonyx contributes to the display of divine glory, each foundation stone revealing different facets of God's beauty and majesty.

(1×) A precious stone with layers of contrasting colors, the fifth foundation of New Jerusalem in Revelation 21:20. The gemstone's distinctive banding made it highly valued in antiquity. Its inclusion in the city's foundations adds to the overwhelming beauty of God's eternal dwelling. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: sardonyx | es: sardónice; | fr: Sardonyx | de: Sardonyx Rev 21:20

Σάρεπτα G4558 N-ANP (1×)

Sarepta, a Phoenician city near Sidon where Elijah stayed with a widow during famine (1 Kings 17)

This coastal Phoenician town between Sidon and Tyre became significant in biblical narrative when God sent Elijah there during the three-year drought. The widow who hosted the prophet experienced miraculous provision of oil and flour, and her son was raised from death. Jesus references this story in Luke 4:26 to illustrate God's grace extending beyond Israel to Gentiles, using Sarepta as a paradigmatic example of unexpected divine favor.

(1×) The single NT occurrence (Luke 4:26) cites the city as evidence that prophets are honored outside their homeland. Jesus's audience in Nazareth would have recognized the Hebrew name צָרְפַת (Tsarephath), making the Gentile setting of this miracle pointed. The Greek transliteration Σάρεπτα preserves the Semitic phonology while adapting to Hellenistic readers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Sarepta | es: Sarepta | fr: Sarepta | de: Σάρεπτα Luke 4:26

σάρκ-ῐνος G4559 Adj-DFS (7×)

Fleshly, carnal; pertaining to human nature apart from the Spirit, or made of flesh as opposed to stone or spirit.

This adjective describes what belongs to or is characterized by 'sarx' (flesh). Paul uses it prominently when contrasting spiritual and material realities. In 1 Corinthians 3:1-3, he chides believers for being 'sarkinos' — governed by fleshly impulses like jealousy and strife rather than the Spirit. Yet the term is not always pejorative: in Romans 15:27 and 1 Corinthians 9:11, it simply describes material provisions — 'fleshly things' like financial support — that are the fitting counterpart to spiritual blessings sown among them. In 2 Corinthians 1:12, Paul contrasts fleshly wisdom with the grace of God. Spanish 'carnal,' French 'charnel,' and German 'fleischlich' all preserve the flesh-rooted semantic core across Romance and Germanic traditions.

fleshly, of the flesh, carnal (7×) Pertaining to the flesh or human nature, describing what is governed by natural human impulses rather than by the Spirit, or simply what belongs to the material realm. Paul's usage spans both negative and neutral registers: negatively, the Corinthians are 'fleshly' because they walk in jealousy and strife (1 Cor 3:3), and Paul contrasts fleshly wisdom with divine grace (2 Cor 1:12); neutrally, it describes material or physical provisions contrasted with spiritual blessings (Rom 15:27; 1 Cor 9:11). Spanish 'carnal,' French 'charnel,' and German 'fleischlich' all derive from their respective words for flesh, mirroring the Greek derivation from 'sarx.' FLESH AND BODY

en: fleshly, fleshly-things | es: carnal, carnales | fr: charnel | de: fleischlich Rom 15:27; 1Cor 3:3; 1Cor 9:11; 2Cor 1:12

σάρκ-ῐνος G4560 Adj-GFS (4×)

Made of flesh, fleshly; pertaining to human nature in its weakness or physicality.

An adjective built on 'sarx' (flesh) with the suffix '-inos' indicating material composition–literally 'made of flesh.' Paul uses it to describe human nature in its mortal, limited condition: sold under sin (Rom 7:14), spiritually immature (1 Cor 3:1), and yet also the living medium on which God writes his new covenant–'tablets of flesh' rather than stone (2 Cor 3:3). Hebrews contrasts a 'fleshly commandment' with the power of an indestructible life (Heb 7:16). The Spanish distinction between 'carnal' and 'de carne' and the French 'de chair' highlight the material-composition sense that distinguishes this word from the more ethically loaded 'sarkikos.'

(4×) Consisting of or characterized by flesh; pertaining to the physical, mortal dimension of human existence. Unlike the closely related 'sarkikos' (which often carries a negative moral connotation of being 'governed by the flesh'), 'sarkinos' emphasizes material composition–being made of flesh. Paul calls the Roman believer 'fleshly, sold under sin' (Rom 7:14) to stress human frailty, and labels the Corinthians 'fleshly' in the sense of spiritual infancy (1 Cor 3:1). The most striking use is 2 Cor 3:3, where 'tablets of fleshly hearts' contrasts living, responsive human hearts with the cold stone of Sinai. In Heb 7:16, the 'fleshly commandment' refers to the Levitical priesthood's dependence on physical descent. French 'de chair' and Spanish 'de carne' preserve the compositional nuance. FLESH AND BODY

en: fleshly, of-flesh, to-fleshly | es: a-carnales, carnal, de-carne | fr: de-chair, fleischern | de: fleischern Rom 7:14; 1Cor 3:1; 2Cor 3:3; Heb 7:16

σάρξ G4561 N-AFP (150×)

Flesh — the material substance of the body; by extension, human nature, mortal frailty, and life apart from the Spirit

Sarx spans a remarkable semantic arc in the New Testament: from the literal tissue of the body ('the two shall become one flesh,' Matt 19:5) to the whole sphere of creaturely weakness and moral vulnerability ('the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak,' Matt 26:41). Paul sharpens this further, using sarx for the unredeemed human condition opposed to the Spirit (Rom 8:4-9; Gal 5:16-17). Yet the word never becomes purely negative — the incarnation itself is stated in terms of flesh (John 1:14; 1 Tim 3:16). All 150 occurrences cluster under one broad sense, because the literal and extended uses form a single conceptual gradient rather than discrete meanings.

1. physical flesh, material body (103×) Split from sense 76353. Criteria: The literal substance of the body (Matt 19:5-6 'one flesh', Luke 24:39 'flesh and bones', John 1:14 'became flesh', John 6 eucharistic language), mortal human condition as created reality, incarnation en: flesh | es: carne | fr: chair | de: Fleisch Matt 16:17; Matt 19:5; Matt 19:6; Matt 24:22; Matt 26:41

2. flesh as unregenerate nature, sinful orientation (47×) Split from sense 76353. Criteria: Pauline theological sense: the orientation of life apart from God's Spirit, the unredeemed human impulse opposed to the Spirit (Rom 7-8, Gal 3:3, 5:13-24, 'living according to the flesh' contexts where sarx is the locus of sin)

en: flesh, of-flesh | es: carne, de-carne | fr: chair | de: Fleisch John 1:13; John 3:6; John 6:63; Rom 3:20

Σερούχ G4562 N-GMS (1×)
Serug, son of Reu and father of Nahor in the post-flood genealogy leading to Abraham (Gen 11:20-23)
Serug appears in Luke's genealogy of Jesus, tracing the line from Adam through the patriarchs. His generation lived during the dispersion following Babel, when humanity scattered across the earth. The name, from Hebrew שְׂרוּג, may relate to a branch or tendril, though ancient interpreters debated its etymology. Luke's use of this name anchors Jesus firmly in the Abrahamic covenant lineage through precise genealogical detail.

(1×) The single occurrence in Luke 3:35 situates Serug seven generations after the flood and five before Abraham. The genealogy moves backward from Jesus to Adam, and Serug's inclusion—though he's barely mentioned in Genesis—demonstrates Luke's commitment to comprehensive genealogical accuracy. The Greek form Σερούχ closely mirrors the Hebrew pronunciation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Serouch | es: Seroúch | fr: Sérouch | de: Σερούχ Luke 3:35

σᾰ́ρόω G4563 V-RPM/P-AMS (3×)
to sweep, sweep clean; to remove dirt or debris by sweeping
This verb means to sweep or sweep clean, removing dirt and debris. Classical usage was straightforward domestic cleaning. The New Testament uses it in Jesus' teaching about spiritual housecleaning—both in parables about demons returning to swept houses and in the parable of the woman searching for her lost coin. The term combines literal cleaning with spiritual implications.

(3×) Describes sweeping clean, with both practical and spiritual dimensions. Matthew 12:44 and Luke 11:25 present nearly identical teaching about the unclean spirit finding the house 'swept and put in order'—a warning about empty reformation. Luke 15:8 tells of the woman who lost a coin: 'does she not light a lamp, sweep the house, and search carefully until she finds it?' The Spanish 'barre/barrida' and French 'balayer' are simple domestic actions. Jesus uses this ordinary household task to illustrate spiritual truths: mere moral cleanup without new life leaves one vulnerable, while diligent searching for what is lost brings joy. WASHING AND BATHING en: sweeps, swept | es: barre, barrida | fr: balayer | de: σαροῖ, σεσαρωμένον Matt 12:44; Luke 11:25; Luke 15:8

Σάρρα G4564 N-NFS (4×)
Sarah; the wife of Abraham, mother of Isaac, and matriarch of the covenant people of Israel.
The Greek form of the Hebrew name Sarah (originally Sarai, renamed in Gen 17:15), meaning 'princess.' In the New Testament, Sarah appears as a model of faith and covenant promise. Paul cites her in Romans to demonstrate that God's promise operates through supernatural power rather than natural ability: Abraham did not waver despite Sarah's barrenness (Rom 4:19), and 'through Sarah' the word of promise came (Rom 9:9). Hebrews celebrates her faith in conceiving Isaac beyond childbearing age (Heb 11:11), and Peter holds her up as an example of holy conduct and gentle trust for believing wives (1 Pet 3:6).

(4×) The proper name of Abraham's wife, the matriarch whose miraculous conception of Isaac embodies God's faithfulness to his covenant promises. The transliteration is remarkably stable across languages–'Sara' in French, German, and Spanish, with only minor variation ('Sarra' in some English manuscripts following the LXX doubling of rho). Each New Testament reference highlights a different facet of her significance: her barrenness overcome by divine power (Rom 4:19), her role as channel of the promise (Rom 9:9), her faith in receiving strength to conceive (Heb 11:11), and her submissive trust as a model for Christian wives (1 Pet 3:6). She functions typologically as the 'free woman' whose children inherit the promise (cf. Gal 4:22-31). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Sarra, of-Sarra | es: Sárra, de-Sárra | fr: Sara | de: Sara Rom 4:19; Rom 9:9; Heb 11:11; 1Pet 3:6

Σάρων G4565 N-AMS (1×)
Sharon, the fertile coastal plain between Joppa and Mount Carmel, known for pastures and beauty
The plain of Sharon stretched along the Mediterranean coast, famed in the Old Testament for roses and pastoral richness (Song 2:1, Isaiah 35:2). In Acts 9:35, Luke identifies the region where Peter's healing of Aeneas caused many to turn to the Lord. The area's fertility and accessibility made it a densely populated zone in the first century, connecting Jerusalem with Caesarea and the north. Sharon's reputation for beauty gave it metaphorical weight in Scripture.

(1×) Luke uses Sharon (Acts 9:35) to specify the geographic scope of mass conversions following Aeneas's healing at Lydda. The phrase 'all those dwelling in Lydda and Sharon' indicates both the town and the wider coastal plain, suggesting the miracle's regional impact. The Hebrew שָׁרוֹן becomes Σάρων in Greek, with the accusative form Σαρῶνα preserving the Semitic root. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Sharon | es: Sarón | fr: Saron | de: Σαρῶνα Acts 9:35

Σᾰτᾰ́ν G4566
Satan, the Adversary; Hebrew loanword for the chief of evil spirits, the Devil, the opponent of God
This is a transliteration of the Hebrew word meaning 'adversary' or 'opponent,' which the Septuagint sometimes translated with Greek equivalents like ἐπίβουλος ('plotter') or διάβολος ('accuser'). In Jewish and Christian usage, it became the proper name for the chief of evil spirits who opposes God and accuses humanity. The word could remain indeclinable or take the Greek ending -ᾶς to form Σατανᾶς. New Testament writers used it extensively for the personal spiritual being who tempts, deceives, and seeks to thwart God's purposes. The name encapsulates the theological concept of cosmic opposition to divine will.

Σᾰτᾰ́ν G4567 N-DMS (36×)
Satan, the Adversary; the chief spiritual enemy and accuser in biblical theology
A transliteration of the Hebrew word for 'adversary' (satan), adopted into Greek as a proper name for the chief of evil spirits. In the New Testament it appears across all grammatical cases as a personal name referring to one consistent figure—the tempter in the wilderness (Matt 4:10), the accuser who demands to sift the disciples (Luke 22:31), and the cosmic enemy whom Christ has come to overthrow (Mark 3:23-26). The name is left untranslated across virtually every language—Spanish 'Satanas,' French 'Satan,' German 'Satan'—confirming its status as a recognized proper noun rather than a translatable title.

Satan (the adversary) (36×) The proper name for the spiritual adversary and accuser of humanity. Drawn from Hebrew 'satan' (opponent), the New Testament uses it as a fixed proper noun across all case forms (nominative, genitive, dative, accusative, vocative). Jesus addresses him directly at the temptation (Matt 4:10) and rebukes Peter with the same name (Matt 16:23, Mark 8:33). Paul refers to his schemes (2 Cor 2:11) and power (2 Thess 2:9). The universal transliteration across languages—Spanish, French, German all retain 'Satan'—shows full lexicalization as a name. DEVIL SATAN
en: Satan, Satanas | es: Satanás, Satanâ, Satanâs | fr: Satan | de: Satan Matt 4:10; Matt 12:26; Matt 16:23; Mark 1:13

σάτον G4568 N-ANP (2×)
Saton (seah), a Hebrew dry measure equal to about 1.5 modii or roughly 13 liters Σάτον is a transliteration of the Hebrew סְאָה (seah), a standard measure for grain and dry goods in ancient Israel. It equaled roughly one-third of an ephah or about 13 liters (3.5 gallons). Jesus uses this measure in his parable of the leaven, where a woman hides yeast in three sata of flour—an enormous quantity, enough to feed a hundred people. The hyperbolic amount emphasizes the kingdom of God's transformative power and expansive reach. The preservation of the Hebrew measurement term grounds Jesus' teaching in the everyday commerce of Jewish life.

(2×) Both Matthew 13:33 and Luke 13:21 record the identical parable using three sata of flour. The large quantity (about 40 liters total) would have been immediately recognized by Jesus' audience as extraordinary, suggesting a kingdom feast of overwhelming abundance. European translations typically use 'measures' or transliterate the Greek term, acknowledging this as a specific Hebrew unit. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10355 WITH 4 SENSES

en: measures | es: medidas | fr: mesure | de: σάτα Matt 13:33; Luke 13:21

σαῦλος G4569 N-AMS (15×)

Saul (Saulos); the Jewish name of the apostle Paul before and during his early ministry.

The Hellenized form of the Hebrew name Sha'ul ('asked for' or 'prayed for'), used in Acts for the apostle Paul during his pre-conversion life and the early years of his ministry. Luke introduces him as a young man consenting to Stephen's execution (Acts 7:58; 8:1) and then as a fierce persecutor of the church (Acts 8:3; 9:1). The dramatic conversion on the Damascus road is narrated under this name—'Saoul, Saoul, why are you persecuting me?' (Acts 9:4) —and Luke continues using Saulos through the Antioch period until the encounter with Bar-Jesus on Cyprus, after which the name Paul (Paulos) takes over (Acts 13:9). Spanish 'Saulo,' French 'Saul,' and German 'Saulus' all preserve the Septuagintal transliteration.

(15×) The Grecized form of Hebrew Sha'ul, designating the apostle Paul by his Jewish name. Used exclusively in Acts for Paul's pre-conversion identity as a Pharisaic persecutor (Acts 7:58; 8:1, 3; 9:1) and through his conversion experience on the Damascus road (Acts 9:4-8, 17). Luke maintains this name during the Antioch ministry (Acts 11:25-30; 13:1-2) until the pivotal transition at Acts 13:9, where 'Saulos, also called Paulos' marks the shift to his Roman cognomen for Gentile mission. The multilingual pattern—Spanish 'Saulo,' French 'Saul,' German 'Saulus'—uniformly transliterates from the Septuagintal Greek form. SAUL PERSONAL NAME

en: Saulos, of-Saulos | es: Saûlon, Saûlos, a-Saûlos | fr: Saul | de: Saulus Acts 7:58; Acts 8:1; Acts 8:3; Acts 9:1; Acts 9:8

σβέννῡμι G4570 V-AIA-3P (8×)

To quench, extinguish: put out fire or light, or figuratively suppress the Spirit's work.

Sbennumi means to put out or extinguish a flame, and the NT uses it both literally and figuratively with striking effect. Jesus quotes Isaiah: 'a smoldering wick he will not quench' (Matt 12:20), picturing gentle preservation of the faint. The foolish virgins' lamps 'are going out' (Matt 25:8). Mark 9:44-48 repeats the terrible refrain about Gehenna where 'the fire is not quenched.' Paul's command 'Do not quench the Spirit' (1 Thess 5:19) transfers the fire metaphor to the Holy Spirit's activity. Hebrews 11:34 celebrates those who 'quenched the power of fire.' Spanish 'apagar' and French 'eteindre' consistently render both literal and figurative uses.

to quench, extinguish (8×) To extinguish, quench, or put out fire or light, extended figuratively to suppressing spiritual activity. The verb spans a remarkable range: the gentle preservation of a 'smoldering wick' (Matt 12:20, citing Isa 42:3), the anxious plea of foolish virgins whose lamps 'are going out' (Matt 25:8), and the fearsome image of unquenchable fire in Gehenna (Mark 9:44-48). Paul's metaphorical 'do not quench the Spirit' (1 Thess 5:19) treats the Spirit's work as a flame that human neglect can extinguish. Spanish 'apagar,' French 'eteindre,' and German 'ausloeschen' all convey the same extinguishing action across both literal and spiritual registers. EXTINGUISHING FIRE

en: are-going-out, he-will-quench, is-quenched | es: apagar, apagaron, apagará | fr: éteindre | de: ausloeschen, σβέννυνται, σβέσει Matt 12:20; Matt 25:8; Mark 9:44; Mark 9:46; Mark 9:48

σύ G4571

you (singular); second person singular pronoun in various cases (accusative σε)

This is the second person singular pronoun 'you,' showing the rich dialectal variation of ancient Greek. The forms varied significantly across dialects: Attic used σύ (nominative), σοῦ (genitive), while Epic and Ionic preserved forms like τύνη, σεο, and τεῦ. The accusative σε is among the most common forms in New Testament Greek. Ancient Greek carefully distinguished singular from plural second person pronouns (unlike modern English), making the singular forms crucial for indicating direct personal address to an individual rather than a group. These pronouns carried significant weight in prayer, commandments, and personal confrontation.

σεαυτοῦ G4572 PPro-AM2S (43×)

yourself — second person singular reflexive pronoun indicating the subject acts upon itself

Seautou (also contracted sautou) is the reflexive pronoun of the second person singular, appearing 43 times in the New Testament in genitive, dative, and accusative forms. It signals that the person addressed is both the agent and the recipient of the action — 'love your neighbor as yourself' (Matt 22:39), 'show yourself to the priest' (Matt 8:4), 'save yourself' (Matt 27:40). The pronoun gains particular theological weight in the great commandment tradition, where agapeseis ton plesion sou hos seauton anchors the entire ethic of neighbor-love. Cross-linguistic renderings — Spanish 'a ti mismo,' French 'toi,' German 'dich selbst' — all reflect a straightforward reflexive function.

yourself (second person reflexive pronoun) (43×) The second person singular reflexive pronoun, marking the addressee as both agent and patient. Appears in the love commandment 'as yourself' (Matt 22:39, citing Lev 19:18), direct-object use ('save yourself,' Matt 27:40), and pastoral instruction ('watch yourself,' 1 Tim 4:16). Spanish 'a ti mismo' and German 'dich selbst' confirm a uniform reflexive function. REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS

en: yourself | es: -a-ti-mismo, a-ti-mismo | fr: toi | de: dich, dich-selbst Matt 4:6; Matt 8:4; Matt 19:19; Matt 22:39; Matt 27:40

σεβ-άζομαι G4573 V-AIP-3P (1×)

To worship, revere, or venerate with religious devotion; to treat as sacred

Paul uses this verb in Romans 1:25 to describe humanity's fundamental idolatry: worshiping and serving the creature rather than the Creator. The word carries connotations of both reverence and religious service, combining inner devotion with outward acts. In classical Greek it could mean simply 'to fear' or 'respect,' but by the Hellenistic period it had acquired strong religious overtones. The aorist tense marks a definitive act of misplaced worship.

(1×) Romans 1:25 employs σεβάσσατο to characterize the exchange at the heart of human rebellion: worshiping created things instead of the Creator. Multilingual evidence (Spanish 'veneraron,' French 'vénérer') captures the religious devotion implied. Paul's rhetorical climax pairs this worship verb with 'served' (ἐλάτρευσαν), intensifying the indictment of idolatry as comprehensive misdirection of religious allegiance. WORSHIP PROSTRATION

en: worshiped | es: veneraron | fr: vénérer | de: anbeten Rom 1:25

σέβ-ασμα G4574 N-ANS (2×)

An object of worship or veneration; something that inspires religious awe or devotion

Σέβασμα refers to anything that receives worship, reverence, or religious devotion—whether legitimately or idolatrously. The term encompasses temples, idols, altars, and sacred objects that inspire awe. Paul uses it when describing the Athenian altar 'to the unknown god' (Acts 17:23), and when warning of the antichrist figure who exalts himself above every object of worship (2 Thessalonians 2:4). The word carries neutral connotations of 'that which is revered,' but context determines whether the worship is appropriate or misguided. It derives from the verb σέβομαι (to worship, revere).

(2×) In Acts 17:23, Paul respectfully acknowledges Athens' religious devotion by referencing their many σεβάσματα, using their own piety as a bridge to proclaim Christ. In 2 Thessalonians 2:4, the same term appears in apocalyptic warning about one who opposes and exalts himself above every so-called god or object of worship. The contrast shows how objects of worship can be legitimate or idolatrous, depending on whether they point toward or away from the true God. WORSHIP PROSTRATION

en: object-of-worship, objects-of-worship | es: objeto-de-adoración, objetos-de-culto | fr: objet-vénéré, sébasma | de: Goetzenbild, σεβάσματα Acts 17:23; 2Thess 2:4

σεβαστός G4575 Adj-AMS (3×)

august, venerable; worthy of reverence, especially as title for Roman emperors

This adjective means venerable, august, or worthy of reverence. Classical Greek used it for revered things and people. In the Roman imperial period it became the Greek equivalent of the Latin 'Augustus'—the title of Roman emperors. Luke uses it exclusively in this imperial sense to refer to Caesar and things associated with his authority.

(3×) Describes things associated with the Roman emperor and his authority. Acts 25:21 reports that Paul 'appealed to be kept in custody for the decision of the Augustus' (Caesar). Acts 25:25 continues Festus's report: 'he himself appealed to the Augustus.' Acts 27:1 mentions 'the Augustan Cohort.' The cross-linguistic evidence shows Greek forms preserved, indicating technical imperial vocabulary. This term marks the collision between the kingdom of God and the Roman Empire—Paul appeals to Caesar's authority, not knowing that his testimony before imperial powers would fulfill Jesus' prophecy about witnessing to kings. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: Augustan, Augustus | es: Augusta, Sebastós | fr: vénérable | de: Σεβαστοῦ, Σεβαστὸν, Σεβαστῆς Acts 25:21; Acts 25:25; Acts 27:1

σέβομαι G4576 V-PNM/P (10×)

To worship, revere, or show pious devotion — often of Gentile God-fearers drawn to Judaism

A verb denoting reverent worship or religious devotion, appearing most characteristically in Acts to describe Gentile God-fearers who worshipped the God of Israel without full proselyte conversion. Lydia is a sebomene, a worshiper of God, when Paul meets her at Philippi (Acts 16:14). Paul regularly addresses synagogue audiences that include sebomenoi alongside Jews (Acts 13:43, 50; 17:4, 17). In the Gospels, Jesus cites Isaiah's rebuke: 'In vain do they worship me' (Matt 15:9; Mark 7:7). The term thus spans authentic and deficient worship. Spanish 'adorar/venerar' and French 'adorer' convey the reverential posture.

to worship, revere God (10×) To worship or revere God with pious devotion, used both of sincere religious veneration and of vain, lip-service worship. In Acts, it characteristically identifies Gentile God-fearers (sebomenoi) who were attracted to Judaism's monotheism and ethics without full conversion — Lydia (Acts 16:14), devout Greeks in Thessalonica (Acts 17:4), and proselyte-adjacent attendees of synagogues (Acts 13:43, 50). Jesus uses the term negatively via Isaiah to indict merely external worship (Matt 15:9; Mark 7:7). Spanish 'adorar/venerar' and German 'anbeten' capture the range from deep reverence to hollow ritual. WORSHIP PROSTRATION

en: devout, they-worship, to-worship | es: a-adorar, adora, adoradora | fr: adorer | de: anbeten, verehrt Matt 15:9; Mark 7:7; Acts 13:43; Acts 13:50; Acts 16:14

σειρά G4577 N-DFP (1×)

Chains, cords, or ropes; bonds used for restraint or imprisonment

Peter describes God casting rebellious angels into Tartarus, 'delivered into chains of darkness' to await judgment (2 Peter 2:4). The imagery draws on both Greek mythology (Tartarus as the underworld prison) and Jewish apocalyptic literature (1 Enoch's bound Watchers). Whether literal chains or metaphorical bonds of darkness, the word evokes secure imprisonment. Classical usage included ropes for practical purposes, but here the context is decisively eschatological—the restraint of spiritual powers until final judgment.

(1×) The single occurrence (2 Peter 2:4) uses σειραῖς in the dative plural: 'chains of darkness' or 'bonds of gloom.' Some manuscripts read ζόφου (deep darkness) while others have σειροῖς (pits), but the image of binding remains. The multilingual witness ('chains' in English, 'cadenas' in Spanish, 'Kette' in German) confirms the restraint imagery, though French leaves it transliterated, perhaps acknowledging textual uncertainty. CHAINS AND FETTERS

en: with-chains | es: a-cadenas | fr: σειραῖς | de: Kette 2Pet 2:4

σεισμ-ός G4578 N-NMS (14×)

An earthquake or violent shaking; used of seismic events and, by extension, a fierce storm at sea.

Derived from the verb seiō ('to shake'), seismos most commonly refers to an earthquake — a literal trembling of the ground. In the Gospels it marks moments of divine significance: the earth shakes at the crucifixion (Matt 27:54), at the rolling away of the tomb's stone (Matt 28:2), and in Jesus' prophetic discourse about the last days (Matt 24:7). In one striking instance (Matt 8:24), the word describes a violent storm on the Sea of Galilee, extending the image of shaking from land to water — a usage the multilingual translations struggle to capture, often defaulting to 'earthquake' even where 'tempest' fits better.

1. earthquake (13×) A shaking of the earth, an earthquake — the word's primary and overwhelmingly dominant sense in the New Testament. It appears in apocalyptic warnings (Matt 24:7; Mark 13:8; Luke 21:11; Rev 6:12; 8:5; 11:13, 19; 16:18) and in narrative moments of divine intervention (Matt 27:54; 28:2). Cross-linguistic evidence is remarkably uniform: Spanish 'terremoto,' German 'Erdbeben,' French 'tremblement de terre' — all literally 'earth-shaking.' This consistency across unrelated language families confirms a single, stable referent. EARTHQUAKE SHAKING

en: an-earthquake, earthquake, earthquakes | es: terremoto, terremotos | fr: tremblement-de-terre | de: Erdbeben Matt 24:7; Matt 27:54; Matt 28:2; Mark 13:8; Luke 21:11

2. violent storm, tempest (1×) A violent shaking of the sea, a storm or tempest. In Matt 8:24, seismos megas describes the sudden squall on the Sea of Galilee while Jesus sleeps in the boat. The word extends the core image of shaking from ground to water, capturing the convulsive force of the storm. Notably, several translations render this as 'earthquake' or 'trembling' (Spanish 'temblor'), missing the maritime context — which itself testifies to how strongly the earthquake sense dominates the word's profile. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: a-shaking | es: temblor | fr: tremblement-de-terre | de: Erdbeben Matt 8:24

σείω G4579 V-PPM/P-NFS (5×)

To shake, cause to tremble; to agitate physically (as in an earthquake) or to stir up emotionally with fear or awe.

A verb meaning to shake or cause to tremble, used of both physical and emotional agitation. When Jesus entered Jerusalem, 'the whole city was shaken' (ἐσείσθη, Matt 21:10) — whether from an actual tremor or the upheaval of public excitement is deliberately ambiguous. At the crucifixion, the earth shook and rocks split (Matt 27:51). At the resurrection, the guards shook with fear like dead men (Matt 28:4). Hebrews 12:26 quotes Haggai's prophecy of a final cosmic shaking. The Spanish 'sacudir' (to shake) and French 'trembler' (to tremble) divide the physical and emotional dimensions that the Greek holds together.

(5×) To shake, cause to tremble, or agitate — used of seismic shaking, emotional disturbance, and cosmic upheaval. The word carries enormous dramatic weight in Matthew's passion-resurrection narrative: the earth shakes at Jesus' death (27:51), the guards are shaken with terror at his resurrection (28:4), and the whole city is shaken at his triumphal entry (21:10). Hebrews 12:26 escalates to eschatological scope, citing Haggai 2:6: God will shake 'not only the earth but also heaven.' Revelation 6:13 uses the image of a fig tree shaken by wind to describe stars falling from the sky. The Spanish 'sacudir' and German 'erschüttern' both capture the forceful, violent quality of the shaking, while the French 'trembler' emphasizes the resultant trembling response. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: being-shaken, trembled, was-shaken | es: sacudida, sacudiré, se-conmovió | fr: trembler | de: erschuettern, ἐσείσθη, ἐσείσθησαν Matt 21:10; Matt 27:51; Matt 28:4; Heb 12:26; Rev 6:13

Σέκουνδος G4580 N-NMS (1×)

Secundus, a Thessalonian Christian who accompanied Paul on his journey to Jerusalem (Acts 20:4)

This Roman-named believer from Thessalonica traveled with Paul's delegation carrying the collection for Jerusalem's poor. His name ('second' in Latin) was common in the empire, possibly indicating birth order. Luke's brief mention situates Secundus among a multi-ethnic team representing various churches: Sopater from Berea, Aristarchus and Secundus from Thessalonica, Gaius from Derbe, Timothy, and Tychicus and Trophimus from Asia. The list illustrates the geographical scope and unity of Paul's Gentile mission.

(1×) Acts 20:4 names Secundus as one of Paul's companions during the final journey to Jerusalem. The Latin origin of his name (Σέκουνδος in Greek) suggests either a freedman background or Romanized parents in the Greek-speaking East. His Thessalonian citizenship links him to the church Paul founded on his second journey, now mature enough to send delegates on this critical mission. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sekoundos | es: Sekoûndos | fr: Secundus | de: Σεκοῦνδος Acts 20:4

Σελευκία G4581 N-AFS (1×)

Seleucia, the seaport of Antioch in Syria, about 16 miles west, where Paul and Barnabas began their first missionary journey

Named after Seleucus I Nicator who founded it around 300 BC, Seleucia Pieria served as Antioch's harbor on the Mediterranean. When Paul and Barnabas were sent out by the Antiochene church, they descended to this port (Acts 13:4) to sail for Cyprus. The city featured impressive harbor works and connected the interior of Syria to maritime trade routes. Its strategic location made it a natural launching point for missions westward into the Greek-speaking world.

(1×) Acts 13:4 marks the geographic start of Paul's first missionary journey: 'sent out by the Holy Spirit, they went down to Seleucia.' The verb 'went down' reflects the topography—Antioch sat inland and elevated while Seleucia was coastal. The city's role is purely transitional in Luke's narrative; the focus quickly shifts to Cyprus. Yet this launching point symbolizes the church's movement from Jewish-Christian base to Gentile world. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Seleukeia | es: Seléukeia | fr: Séleucie | de: Σελεύκειαν Acts 13:4

σελήν-η G4582 N-DFS (9×)

The moon; the lunar body as a celestial object, often paired with the sun in eschatological or cosmic imagery.

Selene denotes the moon, one of the great luminaries of the created order. In the New Testament it appears almost exclusively in apocalyptic or cosmological contexts: the moon will not give its light at the end of the age (Matt 24:29; Mark 13:24), it will be turned to blood before the day of the Lord (Acts 2:20), and it possesses its own distinct glory among heavenly bodies (1 Cor 15:41). The Spanish luna, French lune, and German Mond all reflect a single, unified sense with no metaphorical extension in the NT corpus.

moon (9×) The moon as a celestial body. All nine NT occurrences point to the physical lunar object, typically in passages describing cosmic signs or the ordering of heavenly luminaries. Jesus warns that the moon will be darkened (Matt 24:29; Mark 13:24), Luke records cosmic distress involving the moon (Luke 21:25), Peter cites Joel's prophecy of the moon turning to blood (Acts 2:20), and Paul distinguishes the moon's glory from that of the sun and stars (1 Cor 15:41). The multilingual evidence (spa luna, fra lune, deu Mond, eng moon) is perfectly uniform, confirming a single undifferentiated sense. MOON CELESTIAL BODY

en: moon, of-moon | es: de-luna, luna, luna, | fr: lune | de: Mond Matt 24:29; Mark 13:24; Luke 21:25; Acts 2:20; 1Cor 15:41

σελην-ιάζομαι G4583 V-PIM/P-3S (2×)

To be moonstruck, epileptic; to suffer from seizures anciently attributed to lunar influence

Σεληνιάζομαι literally means 'to be moonstruck,' reflecting ancient beliefs that certain ailments (particularly epilepsy) were caused or worsened by the moon's phases. The verb appears in Matthew's Gospel to describe people suffering from severe seizures and convulsions. While the etymology connects the condition to lunar influence (σελήνη = moon), the actual medical condition is epilepsy. Jesus heals a moonstruck boy whose symptoms include falling into fire and water, seizures, and inability to speak—classic epileptic manifestations. The term shows how ancient medical vocabulary often embedded folk explanations of disease.

(2×) Matthew 4:24 lists the moonstruck among various categories of sick people brought to Jesus (paralytics, demon-possessed, etc.), and Matthew 17:15 describes a father pleading for his moonstruck son. The second passage provides detailed symptoms that clearly indicate epilepsy. Later Greek medical writers used the term for epilepsy without necessarily affirming lunar causation. Jesus' healing power extends to these mysterious, frightening conditions. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: he-is-moonstruck, moonstruck | es: es-lunático, lunáticos | fr: être-lunatique | de: σεληνιάζεται, σεληνιαζομένους Matt 4:24; Matt 17:15

Σεμεείν G4584 N-GMS (1×)

Semein, an ancestor of Jesus appearing in Luke's genealogy between Mattathias and Joseph Semein appears only in Luke's genealogy (3:26), part of the post-exilic lineage leading to Jesus through Nathan's line rather than Solomon's. The name is otherwise unknown in biblical or historical records, which is typical for Luke's genealogy between Zerubbabel and Joseph—a period poorly documented in Jewish sources. Like many names in this section, Semein is indeclinable in Greek, suggesting transcription from a Hebrew or Aramaic source. His inclusion demonstrates Luke's concern to trace Jesus's legal ancestry through lesser-known Davidic descendants.

(1×) Luke 3:26 lists Semein (Σεμεΐν) as the son of Mattathias and father of Joseph (not Jesus's stepfather, but an earlier ancestor). The genealogy ascends from Jesus through these otherwise unattested names, filling the gap between Zerubbabel and the first century. The spelling varies in manuscripts (Σεμεΐ, Σεμείν), reflecting the challenge of rendering Hebrew names into Greek. This obscure ancestor serves Luke's theological point: Jesus's lineage is legitimate but traces through humble, forgotten branches of David's tree. SHIMEI PERSONAL NAME

en: Semein | es: Semeïn | fr: Séméïn | de: Σεμεΐν Luke 3:26

σεμίδᾶλις G4585 N-AFS (1×)

Fine flour, the highest quality wheat flour produced by sifting, used for offerings and luxury baking

This premium flour appears in Revelation's lament over Babylon's fall, listed among luxury trade goods whose market has collapsed (18:13). In the Old Testament, fine flour (Hebrew סֹלֶת) was specified for grain offerings and priestly bread, representing the best of human labor. The Greek term σεμίδαλις, borrowed from Semitic languages, retained this association with quality and expense. John's economic critique gains force through itemizing commodities representing wealth and indulgence—fine flour stands for elite consumption patterns.

(1×) Revelation 18:13 includes fine flour in the cargo manifest of merchants who profited from Babylon's economy. The list moves from precious metals and stones through luxuries like silk and purple cloth to foodstuffs including wine, oil, fine flour, and wheat. The presence of σεμίδαλις alongside wheat distinguishes premium milled flour from ordinary grain, suggesting the city's appetite for refined products. The item represents not staple food but conspicuous consumption. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: fine-flour | es: flor-de-harina | fr: Feinmehl | de: Feinmehl Rev 18:13

σεμνός G4586 Adj-AMP (4×)

Worthy of respect; dignified, noble, honorable — describing what commands reverent admiration

Rooted in the verb sebomai ('to revere'), this adjective describes persons or things that inspire a gravity of respect. In classical Greek it was reserved for gods and sacred rites, but the New Testament applies it to the everyday conduct of believers. Paul pairs it with words like 'true,' 'just,' and 'pure' in Philippians 4:8, painting a portrait of the mind worthy of meditation. In the Pastoral Epistles it defines the character expected of deacons (1 Tim 3:8), their wives (1 Tim 3:11), and older men (Titus 2:2) — a quality not of stuffy formality but of a life that naturally draws honor.

(4×) Dignified, worthy of respect, honorable. Describes a character or conduct that commands reverent admiration — not pompous gravity but genuine moral weight. German 'ehrbar' and Spanish 'digno' both capture the blend of respectability and inner substance. Used of personal conduct in the Pastoral Epistles (1 Tim 3:8, 11; Titus 2:2) and of objects worthy of contemplation (Phil 4:8). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4884 WITH 4 SENSES

en: dignified, honorable | es: dignas, dignos | fr: σεμνά, σεμνάς, σεμνούς | de: ehrbar Phil 4:8; 1Tim 3:8; 1Tim 3:11; Titus 2:2

σεμνό-της G4587 N-DFS (3×)

dignity, seriousness; the quality of being honorable, grave, and worthy of respect

This noun denotes dignity, seriousness, or gravity—the quality of being honorable and worthy of respect. Classical usage included solemnity and reserve. The Pastoral Epistles use it exclusively to describe the demeanor expected of church leaders and the atmosphere of Christian gatherings. The term emphasizes visible, respectable conduct.

(3×) Describes the dignified demeanor expected of believers, especially leaders. First Timothy 2:2 prays 'that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and dignity.' First Timothy 3:4 requires that an overseer 'manage his own household well, keeping his children submissive with all dignity.' Titus 2:7 instructs Titus to show 'integrity, dignity' in his teaching. The Spanish 'dignidad,' French preservation of Greek forms, and German 'Ehrbarkeit' (honorableness) all emphasize respectable gravity. This is not stuffiness but the serious, honorable bearing that commands respect and reflects the weightiness of Christian faith and leadership. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: dignity | es: dignidad | fr: σεμνότητα, σεμνότητι, σεμνότητος | de: Ehrbarkeit 1Tim 2:2; 1Tim 3:4; Titus 2:7

Σέργιος G4588 N-DMS (1×)

Sergius, the family name of Sergius Paulus, the proconsul of Cyprus who believed after seeing Elymas struck blind

Sergius Paulus held the Roman governorship of Cyprus when Paul and Barnabas arrived on their first missionary journey. Luke describes him as 'an intelligent man' who summoned the apostles to hear God's word (Acts 13:7). His household included the Jewish magician Bar-Jesus (Elymas), whose opposition led to dramatic confrontation. After witnessing Elymas's blindness, the proconsul believed, 'astonished at the teaching of the Lord.' This represents one of Luke's few named high-status converts and the only proconsular conversion in Acts.

(1×) Acts 13:7 introduces Sergius (Σέργιος) as the gentile name paired with his cognomen Paulus, identifying him by the standard Roman tria nomina system. The dative Σεργίῳ Παύλῳ indicates association with this official. His intelligence and openness to the gospel contrast with his advisor's magical opposition. Some scholars note that Paulus ('small') may have influenced Saul's adoption of the name Paul in this very passage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sergios | es: Sérgios | fr: Sergius | de: Σεργίῳ Acts 13:7

Σήθ G4589 N-GMS (1×)

Seth, the third son of Adam, born after Cain killed Abel, ancestor of Noah and the Messianic line

After Abel's murder, Eve bore Seth, declaring that God had appointed another offspring in Abel's place (Genesis 4:25). His line would preserve the godly seed through whom blessing would come, contrasting with Cain's cursed descendants. Seth's genealogy leads through Enosh (when people began to call on the Lord's name) to Noah and eventually to Abraham. Luke includes Seth in Jesus's genealogy (3:38), tracing the line all the way to Adam, 'the son of God.' Seth represents God's gracious preservation of the promised line despite human violence.

(1×) Luke 3:38 lists Seth (Σήθ) as the son of Adam in the ascending genealogy. The indeclinable Greek form preserves the Hebrew שֵׁת. By extending the genealogy beyond Abraham to Adam, Luke universalizes Jesus's significance—he comes not just for Israel but for all humanity. Seth's position as Adam's designated heir (rather than Cain) theologically prefigures Christ as the true seed who replaces the murderous first brother with righteous offspring. SHETH PERSONAL NAME

en: Sēth | es: Séth | fr: Seth | de: Σηθ Luke 3:38

Σήμ G4590 N-GMS (1×)

Shem, Noah's eldest son, ancestor of the Semitic peoples including Abraham and the Hebrew nation

Shem received Noah's blessing after covering his father's nakedness, contrasting with Ham's dishonor (Genesis 9:26). His descendants populated the regions from Elam through Aram to Eber, from whom Hebrews derive their name. The Table of Nations (Genesis 10) traces Shem's line toward Abraham, making him the crucial link between the flood and Israel's patriarchs. Luke includes him in Jesus's genealogy (3:36), showing how God's salvation plan narrows from all humanity through Noah to one family line that would bless all nations.

(1×) Luke 3:36 places Shem (Σήμ) between Arphaxad and Noah in the genealogy ascending from Jesus. The name, from Hebrew שֵׁם meaning 'name' or 'renown,' gains theological significance from Noah's blessing: 'Blessed be the LORD, the God of Shem.' The indeclinable Greek form shows Luke's reliance on Septuagint traditions. Shem represents the narrowing of promise from all humanity to the line through which the Messiah would come. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sēm | es: Sém | fr: Sem | de: Σημ Luke 3:36

σημαίνω G4591 V-ANA (6×)

semaino – to signify, indicate, or make known by signs or symbolic communication

The verb semaino (from sema, 'sign') means to indicate or make known through signs, signals, or symbolic speech. In John's Gospel it describes how Jesus 'signified' the manner of his death (John 12:33; 18:32) and Peter's death (John 21:19) – using indirect, prophetic speech rather than plain statement. In Acts, the prophet Agabus 'signified' a coming famine through the Spirit (Acts 11:28), and in Revelation 1:1, God 'signified' the apocalyptic vision to John through an angel. The word thus carries connotations of indirect, mediated, or symbolic communication. Spanish dar a conocer and German anzeigen capture the revelatory dimension.

signify, indicate (6×) To signify or make known by signs, indicating something through indirect, symbolic, or prophetic communication rather than plain speech. In John 12:33 and 18:32, Jesus signifies the kind of death he would die; in John 21:19, he signifies Peter's future martyrdom; in Acts 11:28, Agabus signifies a famine through the Spirit; in Acts 25:27, Festus must signify the charges against Paul; and in Rev 1:1, God signifies the apocalyptic vision through an angel. Spanish indicar and French signifier preserve the sign-based communication nuance. The word consistently implies revelation mediated through tokens, symbols, or prophetic utterance. SHOWING AND REVEALING

en: he-signified, signified, signifying | es: dio-a-conocer, indicar, indicó | fr: faire-signe, signifier | de: anzeigen, σημᾶναι, ἐσήμανεν John 12:33; John 18:32; John 21:19; Acts 11:28; Acts 25:27

σημεῖον G4592 N-DNP (77×)

sign, miraculous sign; a visible token or wonder that authenticates divine authority or prophetic message

Greek semeion denotes a visible indicator or authenticating mark, and in the New Testament it overwhelmingly refers to miraculous signs that reveal divine power and purpose. The Pharisees repeatedly demand 'a sign from heaven' (Matt 12:38; 16:1), while John's Gospel structures its narrative around seven semeia that disclose Jesus' identity. Paul distinguishes 'signs and wonders' as apostolic credentials (2 Cor 12:12), and the eschatological discourse warns of false signs (Matt 24:24). The word bridges evidence and wonder: a semeion is never mere spectacle but always points beyond itself to the authority of the one who performs it.

sign, miraculous sign (77×) A miraculous sign or authenticating token that points to divine authority and purpose. In the Synoptics, opponents demand a semeion as proof (Matt 12:38-39), while John's Gospel organizes around seven signs revealing Jesus' glory. Paul appeals to 'signs, wonders, and mighty works' as apostolic credentials (2 Cor 12:12). Eschatological discourse warns of deceptive signs (Matt 24:24). The term inherently combines visibility with signification — a semeion always points beyond the event to its divine source. SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: signs | es: señales | fr: signe | de: Zeichen Matt 12:38; Matt 12:39; Matt 16:1

σημει-όω G4593 V-PMM-2P (1×)

To mark, note, or take special notice of someone, especially for warning or avoidance

Paul instructs the Thessalonians to 'mark' anyone who refuses to obey his letter, singling them out for corrective social pressure (2 Thessalonians 3:14). The verb implies making a mental or public note, perhaps involving some form of communal awareness or withdrawal of fellowship. It's not formal excommunication but deliberate notice that leads to changed relationship. The goal is redemptive: 'do not regard him as an enemy, but warn him as a brother' (3:15). This measured discipline seeks restoration through community accountability.

(1×) 2 Thessalonians 3:14 uses the middle voice σημειοῦσθε: 'mark for yourselves' or 'note that person.' The reflexive nuance suggests personal responsibility to observe and remember who disregards apostolic instruction. Multilingual renderings vary: Spanish 'señalad' (mark out), French leaves the Greek term, German 'sich merken' (take note). The context of corrective discipline without full separation gives the term pastoral weight—notice leads to differentiated relationship aimed at repentance. SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: mark | es: señalad | fr: σημειοῦσθε | de: sich-merken 2Thess 3:14

σήμερον G4594 Adv (41×)

today, this very day — adverb marking the present day, often with theological force for divine immediacy

Semeron is the ordinary Greek adverb for 'today,' but in the New Testament it frequently carries a weight far beyond simple calendar reference. When Jesus reads Isaiah in the Nazareth synagogue and announces 'today this Scripture is fulfilled in your hearing' (Luke 4:21), the word becomes a marker of salvific present-tense. Hebrews 3:7-4:7 builds an entire theology of urgency around the psalm quotation 'today, if you hear his voice,' treating semeron as the perpetually open window of grace. Even in everyday usage — 'give us today our daily bread' (Matt 6:11) — the adverb anchors prayer in God's provision for the immediate present. The multilingual glosses are remarkably uniform: Spanish 'hoy,' French 'aujourd'hui,' German 'heute.'

(41×) An adverb denoting the present day, used both in ordinary temporal reference and in theologically charged declarations of divine action in the present moment. The Synoptic sayings employ it for daily providence ('sufficient for the day,' Matt 6:34) and for eschatological announcement ('today you will be with me in paradise,' Luke 23:43). Hebrews extends it into an exhortation theology, citing Psalm 95:7 repeatedly to make semeron the hinge of faith's response (Heb 3:7, 13, 15; 4:7). Spanish 'hoy,' French 'aujourd'hui,' and German 'heute' uniformly confirm the single-sense profile. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT

en: Today, today | es: Hoy, hoy | fr: aujourd'hui | de: heute Matt 6:11; Matt 6:30; Matt 11:23; Matt 16:3; Matt 21:28

σήπω G4595 V-RIA-3S (1×)

To rot, decay, or become putrid; to be corrupted by decomposition

James warns the wealthy that their riches 'have rotted' (5:2), using vivid imagery of decomposition to illustrate the worthlessness of hoarded wealth. While wealth itself doesn't literally rot, the verb evokes garments moth-eaten and treasures corroded—material goods subject to decay. The perfect tense suggests a completed state: their wealth has already rotted in God's perspective, even if they don't see it yet. This prophetic critique echoes Jesus's teaching about treasures on earth that moths and rust destroy (Matthew 6:19).

(1×) James 5:2 employs the perfect tense σέσηπεν: 'has rotted' or 'stands rotted.' The verb applies metaphorically to wealth generally, though the following verse specifies garments (moth-eaten) and gold/silver (corroded). The image of rot conveys both divine judgment and the inherent futility of material accumulation. Spanish 'se ha podrido,' French preserves the Greek form, German 'verfault'—all capture the sense of completed decay, presenting earthly riches as already worthless. ROT DECAY WASTE

en: have-rotted | es: se-ha-podrido | fr: σέσηπεν | de: verfault Jas 5:2

σηρῐκός G4596 Adj-GNS (1×)

Made of silk, silken; pertaining to the luxurious fabric imported from China via the Silk Road

Revelation lists silk among Babylon's luxury trade goods, representing the height of expensive imports (18:12). In the ancient world, silk came from distant China along trade routes that made it extraordinarily costly. Only the wealthy could afford garments of this shimmering fabric. The Greek term σηρικός derives from Σῆρες, the Greeks' name for the Chinese people. John's inclusion of silk in Babylon's cargo manifest emphasizes both the city's vast commercial networks and its appetite for extravagant luxuries—economic practices subject to divine judgment.

(1×) Revelation 18:12 uses the genitive σηρικοῦ to modify an implied noun like 'garments' or 'cloth': 'of silk.' The list includes 'purple and silk and scarlet' (πορφύρας καὶ σηρικοῦ καὶ κοκκίνου), pairing silk with expensive dyed fabrics. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'seda,' German 'Seide') confirms the identification. Silk's presence signals trade spanning continents, making Babylon's economic collapse devastating—merchants weep because no one buys their premium imports anymore. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: of-silk | es: de-seda | fr: Seide | de: Seide Rev 18:12

σής G4597 N-NMS (3×)

moth; the insect that consumes and destroys stored fabric and materials

This noun denotes the moth, the insect known for consuming stored fabrics and materials. Classical literature used it both literally and metaphorically for consumers and destroyers. Jesus employs it in his teaching about earthly versus heavenly treasures, where moth and rust represent the inevitable decay of material wealth.

(3×) Refers to moths as agents of decay and loss. Matthew 6:19-20 contrasts treasures: 'Do not lay up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust destroy and where thieves break in and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust destroys.' Luke 12:33 repeats this wisdom: 'provide yourselves moneybags that do not grow old, a treasure in the heavens that does not fail, where no thief approaches and no moth destroys.' The straightforward cross-linguistic terms (Spanish 'polilla,' French 'mite,' German 'σής' preserved) identify this common pest. Moths represent the inexorable, quiet destruction of earthly wealth—a powerful image of material futility. WORM MAGGOT

en: moth | es: la-polilla, polilla | fr: mite | de: σής Matt 6:19; Matt 6:20; Luke 12:33

σητό-βρωτος G4598 Adj-NNP (1×)

Moth-eaten, damaged by moths; describing garments corrupted by insect larvae

James warns the wealthy that their garments 'have become moth-eaten' (5:2), using the perfect tense to indicate a completed state of destruction. Fine clothes, a form of ancient wealth storage, prove vulnerable to moths whose larvae consume fabric. The image parallels Jesus's warning about earthly treasures that moths destroy (Matthew 6:19-20). Hoarded garments, instead of clothing the needy, rot away—a picture of squandered resources and failed stewardship. The compound adjective combines 'moth' (σής) with 'eaten' (βρωτός), creating a vivid participle of decay.

(1×) James 5:2 employs σητόβρωτα (neuter plural) describing 'garments': τὰ ἱμάτια ὑμῶν σητόβρωτα γέγονεν ('your garments have become moth-eaten'). The perfect tense marks irreversible damage. Spanish 'apolillados' (moth-damaged), German 'von Motten zerfressen' (eaten by moths) capture the destructive process. The term appears nowhere else in the NT, making it a hapax legomenon specifically suited to James's prophetic indictment of wealth that fails to serve the poor. WORM MAGGOT

en: moth-eaten | es: apolillados | fr: σητόβρωτα | de: von-Motten-zerfressen Jas 5:2

σθενόω G4599 V-FIA-3S (1×)

To strengthen, make strong, or establish with power

Peter assures suffering believers that 'the God of all grace' will personally strengthen them after they have suffered a little while (1 Peter 5:10). The verb σθενόω appears only here in the New Testament, part of a four-verb promise: restore, confirm, strengthen, establish. It derives from σθένος (strength, might), emphasizing the divine power that stabilizes believers under trial. The future tense points to God's certain action—he himself will supply the strength they need. This rare verb intensifies Peter's pastoral encouragement to persevering Christians.

(1×) 1 Peter 5:10 uses the future tense σθενώσει: 'he will strengthen.' The context of suffering and persecution makes this promise vital—God will not merely comfort but actively strengthen. Multilingual evidence shows consistent rendering: Spanish 'fortalecerá,' German 'stärken.' The verb appears between 'restore' (καταρτίσει) and 'establish' (θεμελιώσει), suggesting progressive divine action: repair, strengthen, then ground believers firmly. Peter's rare word choice gives theological weight to God's empowering grace. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: will-strengthen | es: os-fortalecerá | fr: σθενώσει | de: staerken 1Pet 5:10

σῐᾱγών G4600 N-AFS (2×)

Cheek or jaw; the fleshy side of the face, symbolic of personal honor in ancient Near Eastern culture

Σιαγών refers to the jawbone or cheek, particularly in contexts involving personal honor and insult. In ancient Mediterranean culture, striking someone's cheek was a profound humiliation—not primarily about physical pain but about shame and social degradation. Jesus radically redefines honor culture in the Sermon on the Mount/Plain by commanding his followers to turn the other cheek when struck. This teaching doesn't advocate passivity but challenges the entire system of retaliation and honor-preservation. Offering the other cheek exposes the aggressor's injustice and refuses to participate in cycles of violence.

(2×) Both Matthew 5:39 and Luke 6:29 record Jesus' teaching about turning the other cheek, though in slightly different contexts (Matthew in the Sermon on the Mount, Luke on level ground). The parallel accounts emphasize this as core to Jesus' ethical revolution. Ancient Greek sources used the term anatomically for the jaw or cheek, and striking the cheek appears in contexts of contempt and insult across ancient Near Eastern literature. FLESH AND BODY

en: cheek | es: mejilla | fr: joue | de: σιαγόνα Matt 5:39; Luke 6:29

σῑγάω G4601 V-RPM/P-GNS (10×)

To be silent, hold one's peace, or stop speaking; also to keep something secret or concealed in silence.

Sigao comes from sige ('silence') and in nine of its ten NT uses simply means to fall silent or refrain from speech — whether by choice or command. After the Transfiguration the disciples 'kept silent' and told no one (Luke 9:36); the crowd tried to silence the blind man, but he cried out all the more (Luke 18:39). Spanish 'callar' and French 'se taire' both render this everyday hush. But in Rom 16:25 Paul stretches the word into a grander register: the mystery 'kept silent' (sesigēmenou) through long ages has now been revealed. Here silence becomes secrecy on a cosmic scale — not a moment of quiet but an era of concealment broken open by the gospel.

1. be silent, keep quiet (9×) Being silent, holding one's peace, or ceasing to speak — a voluntary or commanded refraining from utterance. Luke is especially fond of this word: the disciples 'kept silent' after the Transfiguration (Luke 9:36), the crowd tried to silence the blind beggar (Luke 18:39), and the Sadducees, marveling at Jesus' answer, 'became silent' (Luke 20:26). In Acts, Peter motions for silence before recounting his escape (Acts 12:17), and the Jerusalem assembly 'fell silent' to hear Barnabas and Paul (Acts 15:12). Spanish 'calló' and 'callaron' capture the decisive moment of becoming quiet. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: became-silent, becoming-silent, he-be-silent | es: Calló, callar, callaron | fr: se-taire | de: schweigt, verschwiegen Luke 9:36; Luke 18:39; Luke 20:26; Acts 12:17; Acts 15:12

2. keep secret, conceal (1×) Keeping something secret, concealing a truth in silence over a prolonged period. In Rom 16:25 the 'mystery kept silent (sesigēmenou) for long ages' has now been disclosed — here sigao transcends conversational quiet to describe the divine withholding of revelation across epochs. Spanish 'guardado-en-silencio' ('kept in silence') and the German perfect participle 'verschwiegen' both preserve the sense of deliberate, sustained concealment that distinguishes this from merely not speaking. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: having-been-silenced | es: guardado-en-silencio | fr: se-taire | de: verschwiegen Rom 16:25

σῑγ-ή G4602 N-GFS (2×)

Silence, quietness; the absence of sound, often with mystical or reverent connotations

Σιγή refers to silence, stillness, or the cessation of sound. In biblical usage, silence often carries theological weight—it can signal reverence before God, the hushed anticipation before divine action, or the cessation of earthly noise before heavenly realities. In Acts 21:40, Paul's gesture brings silence to the crowd so he can speak. In Revelation 8:1, the opening of the seventh seal produces silence in heaven for about half an hour—a profound, anticipatory hush before the trumpet judgments. This heavenly silence stands in stark contrast to the constant worship and activity around God's throne, marking a solemn pause.

(2×) The two occurrences differ dramatically in tone. Acts 21:40 describes imposed civic silence for oratory, while Revelation 8:1 describes cosmic, mystical silence pregnant with divine judgment. Classical Greek uses the term widely for silence in various contexts —tactical silence, reverential silence, secretive silence. LSJ notes uses from Homer onward, including the mystical or religious sense that Revelation exemplifies. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8275 WITH 8 SENSES

en: silence | es: silencio | fr: Stille, silence | de: Stille, σιγῆς Acts 21:40; Rev 8:1

σῐδήρ-εος G4603 Adj-AMP (5×)

Made of iron; describing objects or instruments composed of iron, often conveying unyielding strength or authority.

An adjective meaning 'made of iron,' used in the New Testament to describe objects of formidable, unyielding power. In Revelation, the recurring image of an iron rod (Greek sideran rhabdon) portrays the Messiah's absolute sovereign rule (Rev 2:27; 12:5; 19:15), while Acts 12:10 refers to the literal iron gate of Peter's prison. The multilingual evidence is remarkably uniform — Spanish de-hierro, French de-fer, German eisern — all pointing to a single concrete sense: composed of iron, with metaphorical overtones of invincible authority.

(5×) Composed of or made from iron, describing physical objects (gates, rods, breastplates) with the connotation of extreme hardness and indestructibility. All five NT occurrences carry this sense: the iron gate in Acts 12:10, and iron rods or breastplates in Revelation. The uniformity across translations (Spanish de-hierro, German eisern, French de-fer) confirms a single, stable semantic core. When applied to the rod of rulership (Rev 2:27; 19:15), the iron quality metaphorically signals irresistible divine authority. IRON METAL

en: iron, of-iron | es: de-hierro, de-hierro; | fr: de-fer, eisern | de: eisern, σιδηρᾶν Acts 12:10; Rev 2:27; Rev 9:9; Rev 12:5; Rev 19:15

σίδηρος G4604 N-GMS (1×)

Iron, the strong metal used for tools, weapons, and construction; symbol of strength and hardness

Revelation lists iron among the trade goods whose market collapses with Babylon's fall (18:12). Throughout Scripture, iron represents strength, durability, and sometimes oppression (iron yoke, iron furnace). Ancient metallurgy made iron valuable for agricultural implements, weapons, and construction. The inclusion of both precious metals (gold, silver) and utilitarian iron in Babylon's cargo shows the comprehensive scope of its commerce. Iron also appears symbolically in Revelation's visions: the rod of iron with which Christ rules (2:27, 12:5, 19:15) denotes unbreakable authority.

(1×) Revelation 18:12 uses the genitive σιδήρου in a list of metals and materials: 'vessels of ivory and precious wood and bronze and iron and marble.' The mundane metal appears alongside luxury items, representing complete commercial activity. From Classical Greek, σίδηρος (Doric σίδαρος) designated iron in all its uses. The multilingual witness (Spanish 'hierro,' French 'fer,' German 'Eisen') confirms the straightforward identification. Babylon traded everything from exotic luxuries to basic industrial metals. IRON METAL

en: of-iron | es: de-hierro | fr: fer | de: Eisen Rev 18:12

Σῐδών G4605 N-DFS (10×)

Sidon, the ancient Phoenician coastal city paired with Tyre in prophetic judgment and Jesus' ministry

The proper name of a prominent Phoenician port city on the Mediterranean coast, north of Tyre. In the Gospels, Sidon appears alongside Tyre as a pagan city that would have repented had it witnessed Jesus' miracles (Matt 11:21–22; Luke 10:13–14). Jesus himself withdraws to the region of Tyre and Sidon (Matt 15:21; Mark 7:31), and crowds from Sidon come to hear him (Mark 3:8; Luke 6:17). In Acts 27:3, Paul stops at Sidon during his voyage to Rome. The pairing 'Tyre and Sidon' became proverbial in both judgment oracles and Gospel narrative.

Sidōn (10×) The proper geographical name of the ancient Phoenician coastal city (modern Saida, Lebanon), consistently paired with Tyre in biblical tradition. Jesus uses Sidon as a foil for unrepentant Galilean towns (Matt 11:21–22; Luke 10:13–14), visits its region (Matt 15:21; Mark 7:31), and draws crowds from it (Mark 3:8; Luke 6:17). Paul visits Sidon en route to Rome (Acts 27:3). Spanish 'Sidón' and French 'Sidon' preserve the proper noun with minimal variation across translation traditions. SIDON PHOENICIAN CITY

en: Sidōn | es: Sidón, Sidônos, Sidōn | fr: Sidon | de: Sidon Matt 11:21; Matt 11:22; Matt 15:21; Mark 3:8; Mark 7:24

Σιδώνιος G4606 Adj-DMP (2×)

Sidonian, of or from Sidon; relating to the ancient Phoenician coastal city

Σιδώνιος is the adjectival form referring to people or things from Sidon (Σιδών), the ancient Phoenician port city on the Mediterranean coast north of Israel. Sidonians were known throughout the ancient world for maritime trade, craftsmanship (especially purple dye), and unfortunately for Israel's history, for Baal worship that seduced Israel through Jezebel. The term appears in Jesus' ministry when he visits Sidonian territory and in Acts when Herod Agrippa faces an angry Sidonian delegation. Despite their pagan heritage, Jesus found more faith in this region than in many Israelite towns.

(2×) Luke 4:26 references the widow of Zarephath in the land of Sidon to whom Elijah was sent—a Gentile woman who demonstrated greater faith than many in Israel. Acts 12:20 describes the people of Tyre and Sidon seeking peace with Herod because their regions depended on his territory for food. Both uses highlight Gentile interaction with God's redemptive work, whether through prophetic miracle or political necessity. SIDON PHOENICIAN CITY

en: Sidonians, Sidōnia | es: Sidonia, Sidónioi | fr: Sidon, Sidonien | de: Σιδωνίας, Σιδωνίοις Luke 4:26; Acts 12:20

σῑκάριος G4607 N-GMP (1×)

Assassins, sicarii; dagger-wielding Jewish zealots who committed political murders during the Roman period

The Roman tribune mistakes Paul for the Egyptian who recently led four thousand sicarii into the wilderness (Acts 21:38). These assassins, named for the curved dagger (sica) they concealed under their cloaks, targeted Romans and Jewish collaborators in Jerusalem's crowds. Josephus describes their terrorist tactics during the 50s-60s AD, creating chaos that contributed to the eventual revolt. The sicarii represented violent resistance to Roman occupation, contrasting sharply with Paul's peaceful mission. Luke's mention shows how Roman authorities viewed Jewish unrest and associated any gathering with potential insurrection.

(1×) Acts 21:38 uses the genitive plural σικαρίων: 'the four thousand men of the sicarii.' The Latin loanword σικάριος entered Greek to designate these specific assassins. The tribune's question reveals Roman fear of organized Jewish violence and their inability to distinguish between movements. Paul's ability to speak Greek surprises the tribune, who assumed he was the Egyptian insurgent. The sicarii's violent methods contrasted completely with Paul's gospel proclamation, yet Roman eyes saw only potential Jewish troublemaking. MURDERER KILLER

en: assassins | es: sicarios | fr: sicaire | de: σικαρίων Acts 21:38

σίκερα G4608 N-ANS (1×)

Strong drink, fermented alcoholic beverage other than wine (Hebrew שֵׁכָר), often made from grain or dates

The angel instructs Zechariah that his son John will drink neither wine nor strong drink (Luke 1:15), marking him as a Nazirite devoted to God from birth. In the Old Testament, sikera designated fermented drinks beyond grape wine—barley beer, date liquor, or other intoxicants. The prohibition signals total abstinence and consecration for special service, paralleling Samson and Samuel. This ascetic lifestyle prepared John for his prophetic ministry, living in the wilderness on locusts and wild honey. The Greek term transliterates the Hebrew שֵׁכָר, preserving its cultural and religious associations.

(1×) Luke 1:15 pairs wine and sikera in a prohibition: οἶνον καὶ σίκερα οὐ μὴ πίῃ ('wine and strong drink he will certainly not drink'). The emphatic double negative underscores absolute abstinence. Multilingual versions mostly transliterate (German σίκερα) or use terms for strong/fermented drink (Spanish 'licor,' French 'boisson enivrante'). The angel's announcement echoes the Nazirite vow (Numbers 6:3), signaling John's set-apart status from conception for his role as Messiah's forerunner. WINE BEVERAGE en: strong-drink | es: licor | fr: boisson-enivrante | de: σίκερα Luke 1:15

Σίλας G4609 N-NMS (13×)

Silas — a leader in the Jerusalem church who became Paul's missionary companion

Silas (the Aramaic form of the Latinized Silvanus) appears 13 times in Acts, tracing the arc of a significant early church figure. First introduced as a 'leading man among the brothers' chosen to carry the Jerusalem Council's letter to Antioch (Acts 15:22), Silas quickly becomes Paul's primary co-worker on the second missionary journey. He endures imprisonment in Philippi (Acts 16:25), is received in Thessalonica and Berea (Acts 17:4, 10), and reunites with Paul in Corinth (Acts 18:5). The name remains stable across translations — Spanish 'Silas,' French 'Silas,' German 'Silas' — as expected for a proper noun.

(13×) The proper name Silas, designating a Jewish Christian prophet and leader in the Jerusalem church who accompanied Paul on his second missionary journey. Also known by the Romanized form Silvanus (Silouanos) in the Epistles. All 13 occurrences in Acts refer to this single individual, spanning his commission by the Jerusalem Council (Acts 15:22, 27, 32), his travels through Asia Minor and Greece (Acts 16:19, 25, 29; 17:4, 10, 14-15), and his arrival in Corinth (Acts 18:5). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Silas | es: Silâ, Silân, Silâs | fr: Silas | de: Silas Acts 15:22; Acts 15:27; Acts 15:32; Acts 15:34; Acts 15:40

Σιλουανός G4610 N-NMS (4×)

Silvanus — a companion of Paul, also known as Silas, co-sender of letters to Thessalonica and associate in Corinth

Silvanus is the Latinized form of the name Silas, identifying one of Paul's most trusted co-workers. He appears in the greetings of both Thessalonian letters alongside Timothy (1 Thess 1:1; 2 Thess 1:1), is named as a fellow preacher of Christ in Corinth (2 Cor 1:19), and is identified as the faithful bearer — or perhaps amanuensis — of 1 Peter (1 Pet 5:12). The consistent use of the formal Latin name in the epistles, versus 'Silas' in Acts, likely reflects the conventions of official correspondence.

(4×) Silvanus, a proper name. The Latinized form of Silas, referring to a prominent early Christian leader who served as Paul's co-worker and co-sender of letters. He preached alongside Paul and Timothy in Corinth (2 Cor 1:19), co-authored the Thessalonian correspondence (1 Thess 1:1; 2 Thess 1:1), and delivered or co-wrote 1 Peter (1 Pet 5:12). Spanish 'Silouanós' and German 'Silvanus' preserve the Latin form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Silouanos | es: Silouanós | fr: Silvain, Σιλουανοῦ, Σιλουανὸς | de: Silvanus 2Cor 1:19; 1Thess 1:1; 2Thess 1:1; 1Pet 5:12

Σιλωάμ G4611 N-AMS (3×)

Siloam; pool in Jerusalem where Jesus sent the blind man to wash

Siloam was a pool in Jerusalem, fed by the Gihon spring through Hezekiah's tunnel. The name means 'sent' in Hebrew. It appears in Luke as the site of a tragic accident and in John as the place where Jesus sent the blind man to wash and receive sight. The location carries both historical and theological significance.

(3×) Identifies the pool of Siloam in Jerusalem. Luke 13:4 refers to a tragedy: 'those eighteen on whom the tower in Siloam fell and killed them.' John 9:7 records Jesus' instruction to the blind man: 'Go, wash in the pool of Siloam (which is translated Sent).' John 9:11 repeats the account: 'he said to me, Go to Siloam and wash.' The consistent cross-linguistic identification shows this is a specific, theologically loaded location. John's parenthetical translation ('Sent') connects the pool's name to Jesus being sent by the Father—the man born blind receives sight at a place whose very name proclaims Jesus' mission. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6254 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Siloam, Silōam | es: Silōám | fr: Siloé | de: Siloam, Σιλωὰμ Luke 13:4; John 9:7; John 9:11

σημῑκίνθιον G4612 N-ANP (1×)

Aprons, work cloths, or handkerchiefs; cloth items worn or used by workers

Luke reports that handkerchiefs and aprons that touched Paul's body carried healing power to the sick in Ephesus (Acts 19:12). The term σιμικίνθιον, borrowed from Latin semicinctium, designated work aprons or sweatbands used by laborers and tradesmen. Paul the tentmaker would have worn such cloths while working with leather and fabric. The extraordinary miracle—secondary contact healing through work clothes—demonstrated God's power and authenticated Paul's apostleship in a city dominated by magical practices. These ordinary items became vehicles of divine power.

(1×) Acts 19:12 uses the accusative plural σιμικίνθια paired with 'handkerchiefs' (σουδάρια): 'so that handkerchiefs or aprons from his body were brought to the sick.' The conjunction ἤ (or) suggests these were distinct items—face cloths and work aprons. Multilingual evidence: Spanish 'delantales,' French 'tablier' (apron). The miracle's effectiveness contrasts with the failed exorcism attempts by Sceva's sons in the following verses, distinguishing genuine apostolic power from magical manipulation. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: aprons | es: delantales | fr: tablier | de: σιμικίνθια Acts 19:12

Σίμων G4613 N-AMS (75×)

Simon — a common Greek personal name (from Hebrew Shimon), borne by Simon Peter and several other NT figures.

Simon is the Hellenized form of the Hebrew name Shimon, one of the most frequently occurring personal names in the New Testament. It is borne by at least nine distinct individuals: Simon Peter the chief apostle (Matt 4:18; 16:16), Simon the Zealot (Matt 10:4), Simon of Cyrene who carried Jesus' cross (Matt 27:32), Simon the leper of Bethany (Matt 26:6), Simon the brother of Jesus (Matt 13:55), Simon the Pharisee (Luke 7:40), Simon the tanner in Joppa (Acts 9:43; 10:6), Simon Magus the Samaritan sorcerer (Acts 8:9), and Simon Iscariot, father of Judas (John 6:71). Context and descriptors, not the name itself, distinguish them.

Simon (proper noun, personal name) (75×) The Greek proper name Simon (from Hebrew Shimon, 'he has heard'), applied to multiple NT individuals — most prominently Simon Peter (Matt 4:18; 16:16), but also Simon the Zealot, Simon of Cyrene, Simon the leper, Simon the tanner, and Simon Magus. Every target language transliterates it directly, relying on narrative context to distinguish bearers. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Simōn, of-Simōn | es: Simón, Símōn, a-Símōn | fr: Simon | de: Simon Matt 4:18; Matt 10:2; Matt 10:4; Matt 13:55; Matt 16:16

Σινά G4614 N-GNS (4×)

Sinai — the mountain where God gave the Law to Moses, symbolically linked to the old covenant

The indeclinable proper noun Sinai names the desert mountain where God descended in fire and thunder to deliver the Torah to Israel. In Stephen's speech before the Sanhedrin, Sinai is the sacred ground where Moses encountered the burning bush (Acts 7:30) and later received the living oracles (Acts 7:38). Paul's allegory in Galatians 4:24-25 is theologically striking: he identifies Mount Sinai with Hagar and the covenant of slavery, contrasting it with the freedom of the heavenly Jerusalem. The name thus carries both historical gravity and powerful typological resonance.

(4×) Sinai, the mountain in the wilderness where God revealed the Law to Moses. From Hebrew sinay. In Acts 7:30 it is the site of the burning bush theophany, and in Acts 7:38 the place of the giving of the Law. Paul uses it allegorically in Galatians 4:24-25 as a figure of the old covenant of bondage, contrasting it with the freedom of the new covenant. French 'Sinaï' and German 'Sinai' transliterate directly from the Hebrew. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Sina, of-Sina | es: Sináï, Sinâ | fr: Sinaï, Σινᾶ | de: Sinai, Σινᾶ Acts 7:30; Acts 7:38; Gal 4:24; Gal 4:25

σῐνᾰπ-ῐ̆ G4615 N-GNS (5×)

Mustard; the mustard plant (Sinapis), used by Jesus as a parable image of the kingdom's growth from tiny beginnings.

The Greek word for mustard, referring to the Sinapis plant known for its remarkably small seed that grows into a large shrub. Jesus employs it in two memorable teaching contexts: the parable of the mustard seed illustrating the kingdom of heaven's expansive growth from humble origins (Matt 13:31; Mark 4:31; Luke 13:19), and the saying about faith the size of a mustard seed being sufficient to move mountains or uproot trees (Matt 17:20; Luke 17:6). Every translation — Spanish mostaza, French moutarde, German Senf — reflects this single botanical referent.

(5×) The mustard plant (genus Sinapis), referenced exclusively in the genitive ('of mustard') to describe its proverbially tiny seed. All five occurrences fall into two teaching clusters: the kingdom parable (Matt 13:31; Mark 4:31; Luke 13:19) and the faith-as-mustard-seed saying (Matt 17:20; Luke 17:6). The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish de-mostaza, French moutarde, German Senf) uniformly points to the same well-known Mediterranean plant, confirming a single concrete botanical sense with powerful figurative resonance. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: of-mustard | es: de-mostaza | fr: moutarde | de: Senf, σινάπεως Matt 13:31; Matt 17:20; Mark 4:31; Luke 13:19; Luke 17:6

σινδών G4616 N-DFS (6×)

A fine linen cloth used as a garment or wrapping; in burial contexts, the linen shroud in which a body is wound for entombment.

Sindon refers to a piece of fine linen fabric — the kind prized in the ancient Mediterranean for its quality and versatility. Mark's Gospel uses it twice in one scene: the mysterious young man in Gethsemane who fled naked, leaving his sindon behind (Mark 14:51-52). But the word's most solemn appearance is in the burial of Jesus, where Joseph of Arimathea purchases a sindon and wraps the body in it (Matt 27:59; Mark 15:46; Luke 23:53). Spanish 'sabana' and French 'linceul' both point to its sheet-like character, while German 'Leinentuch' underscores the linen material itself.

1. linen cloth, wrapping sheet (4×) A piece of linen cloth worn loosely around the body as a garment or simple wrapping. In Mark 14:51-52, the young man in Gethsemane has nothing on but a sindon thrown over his naked body — when seized, he abandons it and flees. The same word appears in Mark 15:46 for the cloth Joseph buys, before it becomes a burial shroud. Translations across languages — Spanish 'sabana,' French 'linceul,' German 'Leinentuch' — emphasize its sheet-like quality, distinguishing it from tailored garments. LINEN CLOTH WRAPPING

en: a-linen-cloth, linen-cloth | es: en-sábana, sábana | fr: linceul | de: Leinentuch Mark 14:51; Mark 14:52; Mark 15:46

2. linen (burial wrapping material) (2×) Fine linen fabric used specifically as a burial shroud for wrapping a corpse before entombment. In Matt 27:59 and Luke 23:53, sindon denotes the clean linen in which Jesus' body was reverently wound. While materially identical to sense 1, the burial context gives this usage a distinct solemnity. The Synoptic tradition consistently reaches for sindon rather than othonion (the strips John mentions), suggesting a single large sheet rather than multiple bandages — a detail that multilingual glosses preserve uniformly. LINEN CLOTH WRAPPING

en: in-linen, linen | es: en-sábana, sábana | fr: linceul | de: σινδόνι Matt 27:59; Luke 23:53

σινι-άζω G4617 V-ANA (1×)

To sift, winnow, or shake in a sieve; to test severely or examine thoroughly

Jesus warns Peter that Satan has demanded to sift the disciples like wheat (Luke 22:31). The agricultural metaphor pictures grain tossed in a sieve to separate kernels from chaff—violent shaking that exposes what's real and what's worthless. Satan desires to prove the disciples' faith is merely chaff that will blow away under pressure. But Jesus prays for Peter specifically, that his faith will not fail. The verb's intensity matches the crisis ahead: Judas's betrayal, Jesus's arrest, Peter's denials. Yet sifting, though violent, serves a purpose —refining genuine faith.

(1×) Luke 22:31 uses the aorist infinitive σινιάσαι: 'Satan has demanded to sift you (plural) like wheat.' The verb derives from σινίον, a sieve for grain. Jesus addresses all the disciples (plural 'you') but then focuses on Peter, predicting both his failure and restoration. Spanish 'zarandear' (shake violently), French 'tamiser' (sift), German preserves the Greek—all convey severe testing. The winnowing image suggests the trial ahead will separate true disciples from false, with Satan hoping to prove their faith empty. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: to-sift | es: zarandear | fr: tamiser | de: σινιάσαι Luke 22:31

σῑτ-ευτός G4618 Adj-AMS (3×)

fattened, fed up; animals raised and prepared for feasting

This adjective describes animals that have been fattened or fed up for slaughter, particularly for celebratory feasts. Classical usage referred to both people and animals being well-fed. Luke uses it exclusively in the parable of the prodigal son to describe the special calf killed for the celebration. The term emphasizes abundance and festivity.

(3×) Describes the fattened calf in the prodigal son parable. Luke 15:23 records the father's command: 'Bring the fattened calf and kill it, and let us eat and celebrate.' Verse 27 reports the servant's explanation to the older brother: 'your father has killed the fattened calf.' Verse 30 quotes the older brother's complaint: 'when this son of yours came, who has devoured your property with prostitutes, you killed the fattened calf for him.' The Spanish 'engordado' and French 'engraissé' emphasize the deliberate feeding process. This was not just any calf but the special one reserved for the most joyous occasions—expressing the father's extravagant delight at his son's return. FATNESS AND RICHNESS

en: fattened | es: engordado | fr: engraissé | de: σιτευτόν, σιτευτὸν Luke 15:23; Luke 15:27; Luke 15:30

σῑτ-ευτός G4619 Adj-NNP (1×)

Fattened, fed up for slaughter; describing animals raised with rich food for feasting

Jesus's parable of the wedding feast mentions that the king has prepared 'fattened cattle' for the celebration (Matthew 22:4). These animals, fed grain and choice food rather than pasture, represented the finest quality meat reserved for special occasions. The image evokes abundant, costly provision—the king spares no expense for his son's wedding. That the invited guests refuse such a feast (preferring farms and businesses) makes their rejection inexcusable. The fattened animals symbolize the fullness of gospel blessings offered in Christ, prepared at great cost and offered generously.

(1×) Matthew 22:4 uses the neuter plural σιτιστά as a substantive: 'my fattened animals are prepared.' The term derives from σιτίζω (to feed grain), creating the adjective σιτιστός (grain-fed). Classical Greek used it for pampered animals raised for sacrifice or banquets. Spanish 'animales cebados' (fattened animals), French 'engraissé,' German 'Gemästetes'—all capture the sense of specially fed livestock. The parable's point: God's kingdom feast is ready, extravagantly prepared, and the invitation is urgent. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: fattened-animals | es: animales-cebados | fr: engraissé | de: σιτιστὰ Matt 22:4

σῑτομετρ-ία G4620 N-ANS (1×)

A measured ration or allowance of grain/food; regular provision for servants or household members

Jesus asks who the faithful and wise steward is whom the master sets over his household 'to give them their food allowance at the proper time' (Luke 12:42). The term σιτομέτριον combines 'grain' (σῖτος) with 'measure' (μέτρον), designating the portioned rations distributed to slaves and dependents. Ancient households operated on such systems, with stewards responsible for fair, timely distribution. The parable makes faithful provision a test of stewardship—blessing comes to those who reliably feed the household, judgment to those who abuse power or neglect duty.

(1×) Luke 12:42 employs the accusative singular σιτομέτριον: 'to give them the food allowance in season.' The compound noun appears in Hellenistic administrative texts for grain distributions. Spanish 'ración de alimento,' French 'ration,' German renders the Greek directly—all indicate measured provision. Jesus's parable hinges on timing and faithfulness: the good steward provides regular rations, while the wicked one beats servants and feasts selfishly. The metaphor applies to leaders who either nourish or exploit those under their care. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: food-allowance | es: ración-de-alimento | fr: ration | de: σιτομέτριον Luke 12:42

σῖτος G4621 N-GMS (15×)

Wheat or grain; the primary cereal crop of the ancient Near East, used literally and figuratively

The standard Greek term for cultivated grain, most often wheat specifically. It appears in some of Jesus' most memorable agricultural parables — the wheat and the tares (Matt 13:25-30), the grain of wheat that falls into the ground and dies (John 12:24). When used more broadly, it denotes cereal provisions or food supply, as when Jacob sent his sons to Egypt for grain (Acts 7:12). Spanish distinguishes 'trigo' (wheat) from 'grano' (generic grain), and Hindi uses the general 'अनाज' for the provision sense, hinting at the broader semantic range.

1. wheat (13×) Wheat specifically — the cultivated grain Triticum, whether standing in the field, being harvested, or stored. Translations overwhelmingly use wheat-specific terms: Spanish 'trigo,' French 'blé,' German 'Weizen.' Central to Jesus' parables: the wheat and tares (Matt 13:25-30) where wheat represents the righteous, and the grain of wheat that must die to bear fruit (John 12:24). Also appears in commercial contexts like the dishonest steward's hundred measures of wheat (Luke 16:7). GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: grain, of-wheat, wheat | es: de-trigo, grano, trigo | fr: blé | de: Weizen Matt 3:12; Matt 13:25; Matt 13:29; Matt 13:30; Mark 4:28

2. grain, food supply (2×) Grain or cereal in a broader, more generic sense — food provisions or stored supplies rather than wheat as a specific crop. In Luke 12:18, the rich fool plans to store his 'grain' (his entire harvest), and in Acts 7:12, Jacob hears there is 'grain' in Egypt. Hindi 'अनाज' (generic grain/cereal) and the contextual emphasis on provisioning rather than cultivation distinguish this from the wheat-specific cluster. GRAIN AND WHEAT

en: grain | es: trigo | fr: blé | de: Weizen Luke 12:18; Acts 7:12

Σιών G4622 N-DFS (7×)

Zion; the holy mountain and city of Jerusalem, used literally of the geographic site and symbolically of God's dwelling, his people, and the heavenly city.

Zion (Siōn) is the Greek transliteration of Hebrew 'tsiyyōn,' originally the Jebusite fortress captured by David, which became synonymous with Jerusalem, the temple mount, and ultimately God's chosen dwelling place. In the New Testament, it appears exclusively in Old Testament quotations and theological declarations. Matthew 21:5 and John 12:15 cite Zechariah 9:9 about the 'daughter of Zion,' while Romans 9:33 and 1 Peter 2:6 quote Isaiah about the cornerstone laid 'in Zion.' Hebrews 12:22 and Revelation 14:1 elevate Zion to a heavenly reality — 'Mount Zion, the city of the living God.' Every translation preserves it as a proper name: Spanish 'Sion,' French 'Sion,' German 'Zion.'

Zion (proper noun, the holy mountain/city) (7×) The proper noun Zion, designating the sacred mountain and city of Jerusalem, used both as a literal geographic reference and as a rich theological symbol for God's presence among his people. In the Gospels, 'daughter of Zion' (Matt 21:5; John 12:15) echoes prophetic poetry about Jerusalem and her coming king. Paul applies it to the messianic cornerstone prophecy (Rom 9:33) and the eschatological deliverer coming 'from Zion' (Rom 11:26). Hebrews 12:22 and Revelation 14:1 project Zion into the heavenly realm as the destination of the redeemed. The name passes unchanged through every language — Spanish 'Sion,' French 'Sion,' German 'Zion' — testifying to its status as a universal biblical landmark. ZION HOLY MOUNTAIN

en: Sion, Siōn, Zion | es: Sion, Siòn, Siṓn | fr: Sion | de: Zion, Σιών Matt 21:5; John 12:15; Rom 9:33; Rom 11:26; Heb 12:22

σῑωπ-άω G4623 V-PMA-2S (10×)

To be silent, to stop speaking or making sound; used of persons hushed and of a storm stilled

A verb meaning to fall silent or cease from speech and noise. It is used of persons commanded to be quiet — the crowd rebukes the blind men to be silent but they cry out louder (Matt 20:31; Mark 10:48; Luke 18:39), and Jesus remains silent before the high priest's questioning (Matt 26:63). Most dramatically, Jesus commands the storm to be silent (Mark 4:39), and the wind obeys, extending the word beyond human speech to nature itself. In Acts 18:9, the Lord tells Paul not to be silent but to keep speaking. Spanish 'callar' and French 'se taire' capture both the volitional and compelled dimensions of this silence.

be silent, be quiet (10×) To be or become silent, to cease speaking or making sound. Applied to persons told to be quiet (Matt 20:31; Mark 10:48; Luke 18:39), to Jesus' deliberate silence before accusers (Matt 26:63), and to nature when Jesus commands the storm to be still (Mark 4:39). Also used of refraining from speech, as when Paul is told not to be silent (Acts 18:9). Spanish 'callar,' French 'se taire,' and German 'schweigen' all converge on the cessation of sound, whether voluntary, imposed, or miraculous. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: Be-silent, are-silent, be-silent | es: Calla, callaba, callaban | fr: se-taire | de: schweigen, schweigt Matt 20:31; Matt 26:63; Mark 3:4; Mark 4:39; Mark 9:34

σκανδαλ-ίζω G4624 V-ASA-1P (30×)

To cause to stumble or fall into sin; passively, to be offended, take offense, or fall away from faith

A vivid metaphor drawn from the image of a trap-stick or stumbling block placed in someone's path. In its active sense it describes the grave act of leading another person into sin, as when Jesus warns about causing 'little ones' to stumble (Matt 18:6). The passive voice shifts the focus to the one who takes offense or is scandalized – as when hearers are offended at Jesus himself (Matt 13:57). Under the pressure of persecution or trial, the word intensifies to describe outright apostasy, a falling away from faith, as Jesus foretells of his own disciples on the night of his arrest (Matt 26:31). Spanish 'escandalizar' and German 'Anstoss nehmen' both preserve this dual active-passive dynamic.

1. cause to stumble/sin (14×) The active causative sense: to place a stumbling block before someone, leading them into sin or spiritual ruin. Jesus uses this forcefully in the Sermon on the Mount – 'if your right eye causes you to stumble, tear it out' (Matt 5:29) – and in his stern warning about millstones for those who cause children to fall (Matt 18:6). The Spanish 'escandalizar' and French 'scandaliser' capture this same causative force. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: I-cause-to-stumble, causes-to-stumble, he-causes-to-stumble | es: escandalice, escandalicemos, escandaliza | fr: scandaliser | de: Anstoss-nehmen, ärgert Matt 5:29; Matt 5:30; Matt 17:27; Matt 18:6; Matt 18:8

2. be offended, take offense (10×) The passive or middle sense: to be offended, scandalized, or to take umbrage at someone. When Jesus says 'blessed is the one who is not offended at me' (Matt 11:6), the word describes an inner reaction of indignation or rejection. The people of Nazareth 'were offended at him' (Matt 13:57), unable to see past the carpenter's son. German 'Anstoss nehmen' (to take offense) mirrors this sense precisely. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: he-falls-away, is-caused-to-stumble, is-offended | es: es-escandalizado, se-escandalice, se-escandaliza | fr: scandaliser | de: Anstoss-nehmen, ärgert Matt 11:6; Matt 13:21; Matt 13:57; Matt 15:12; Mark 4:17

3. fall away, apostatize (6×) An intensified passive sense denoting spiritual falling away or apostasy under trial. Jesus prophesies 'you will all fall away' on the eve of his crucifixion (Matt 26:31, citing Zech 13:7), and warns that 'many will fall away' in the eschatological discourse (Matt 24:10). Here the stumbling is not momentary offense but a collapse of allegiance, a scattering of the flock under persecution. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE

en: will-be-offended, will-fall-away | es: fueran-escandalizados, sean-escandalizados, serán-escandalizados | fr: scandaliser | de: Anstoss-nehmen, ärgert Matt 24:10; Matt 26:31; Matt 26:33; Mark 14:27

σκανδαλ-ιστής G4625 N-ANS (15×)

stumbling block, snare — anything that causes spiritual downfall, offense, or entrapment

Skandalon originally referred to the trigger-stick of a trap — the bait mechanism that snapped the snare shut. By New Testament times the word had been thoroughly metaphorized to denote anything causing someone to stumble into sin or moral ruin. Jesus warns that skandala must come but pronounces woe on those through whom they arrive (Matt 18:7). He even calls Peter a skandalon when the disciple resists the cross (Matt 16:23). Spanish 'escandalo,' French 'scandale,' and German 'Argernis' all derive from or mirror this Greek root.

stumbling block, cause of offense (15×) A trap-stick, snare, or obstacle causing someone to fall into sin or spiritual ruin. The NT deploys it exclusively in metaphorical senses: causes of sin gathered at judgment (Matt 13:41), Peter as stumbling block to Jesus' mission (Matt 16:23), and the triple warning of Matt 18:7. Spanish 'escandalo' and French 'scandale' descend directly from this word. STUMBLING BLOCKS

en: a-cause-of-offense, a-stumbling-block, of-offense | es: de-escándalo, escándalo, escándalos | fr: scandale | de: Aergernis, Ärgernis Matt 13:41; Matt 16:23; Matt 18:7

σκάπτω G4626 V-PNA (3×)

to dig; to excavate earth for building, cultivation, or other purposes

This verb means to dig or excavate earth. Classical usage included digging for cultivation, construction, and warfare. Jesus uses it in his teaching both literally (digging foundations, digging around vines) and metaphorically (the dishonest steward's complaint about being unable to dig). The term represents manual labor and preparation.

(3×) Describes digging in both practical and parabolic contexts. Luke 6:48 compares the wise builder to 'a man building a house, who dug deep and laid a foundation on the rock.' Luke 13:8 records the vinedresser's plea for the barren fig tree: 'let it alone this year also, until I dig around it and put on manure.' Luke 16:3 quotes the dishonest steward: 'I am not strong enough to dig, and I am ashamed to beg.' The Spanish 'cavar/cavó,' French 'creuser,' and German forms all denote excavation. Digging represents hard manual labor —the steward prefers dishonest cleverness to honest sweat, while the wise builder digs deep to secure his foundation. DIGGING AND EXCAVATING

en: I-dig, To-dig, dug | es: cavar, cave, cavó | fr: creuser | de: σκάπτειν, σκάψω, ἔσκαψεν Luke 6:48; Luke 13:8; Luke 16:3

σκᾶφ-η G4627 N-GFS (3×)

ship's boat, skiff; a small boat carried by or towed behind a larger ship

This nautical term denotes a ship's boat or skiff—the small auxiliary boat carried by or towed behind larger vessels for various purposes. Classical usage included light boats, cargo vessels, and even children's cradles (from the similar shape). Luke uses it exclusively in Acts 27 during Paul's shipwreck narrative to describe the lifeboat the sailors attempted to use.

(3×) Refers to the ship's boat during Paul's voyage and shipwreck. Acts 27:16 describes running under the shelter of an island: 'we were able with difficulty to secure the ship's boat.' Acts 27:30 recounts the sailors' attempt to escape: 'as the sailors were seeking to escape from the ship and had lowered the ship's boat into the sea.' Acts 27:32 reports Paul's intervention: 'the soldiers cut away the ropes of the ship's boat and let it fall away.' The Spanish 'bote,' French 'barque,' and German forms are all nautical terminology. The sailors' attempt to save themselves in the skiff would have doomed everyone—Paul's wisdom ensured all remained aboard the larger ship and survived. BOAT FISHING VESSEL

en: ship's-boat | es: bote | fr: barque | de: σκάφην, σκάφης Acts 27:16; Acts 27:30; Acts 27:32

σκέλος G4628 N-ANP (3×)

legs; the lower limbs from hip to foot

This anatomical term denotes the legs, specifically from the hip downward. Classical usage was straightforward anatomical description, also used for legs of sacrificial animals. John uses it exclusively in the crucifixion narrative to describe the breaking of legs to hasten death—a detail with profound theological significance.

(3×) Refers to the legs of those crucified with Jesus. John 19:31 sets the scene: 'the Jews asked Pilate that their legs might be broken and that they might be taken away.' Verse 32 reports 'the soldiers came and broke the legs of the first, and of the other who had been crucified with him.' Verse 33 delivers the crucial detail: 'when they came to Jesus and saw that he was already dead, they did not break his legs.' The straightforward cross-linguistic anatomical terms emphasize this is literal bodily description. The unbroken legs fulfill Scripture (Exodus 12:46, Psalm 34:20)—Jesus is the true Passover Lamb, slain but with no broken bones. FEET AND LEGS

en: legs | es: piernas | fr: jambe | de: Beine John 19:31; John 19:32; John 19:33

σκέπ-ασμα G4629 N-ANP (1×)

Coverings, clothing, or garments that cover the body; items that provide protection or warmth

Paul writes that having food and coverings, we should be content (1 Timothy 6:8). The term σκεπάσματα, from the verb 'to cover,' designates whatever shields the body—clothing, shelter, or protective covering. Paul's point is minimalist: basic necessities suffice for godliness with contentment. In context, this counters the desire to be rich (6:9) and the love of money (6:10). True wealth consists not in accumulation but in simple provision meeting genuine needs. The plural form suggests all forms of covering, not just clothes.

(1×) 1 Timothy 6:8 uses the accusative plural σκεπάσματα paired with 'food' (διατροφάς): 'having food and coverings, we shall be content.' Some interpret this broadly as 'shelter and clothing,' others more narrowly as 'clothing' alone. Spanish 'vestiduras,' German 'Bedeckung' lean toward garments. The term's breadth allows both —whatever covers and protects satisfies basic human need. Paul's ethical point remains clear: Christians should find sufficiency in essentials rather than chasing wealth. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: coverings | es: vestiduras | fr: σκεπάσματα | de: Bedeckung 1Tim 6:8

Σκευᾶς G4630 N-GMS (1×)

Sceva, a Jewish chief priest in Ephesus whose seven sons attempted exorcisms using Jesus's name

Luke identifies Sceva as a Jewish high priest whose seven sons practiced exorcism in Ephesus (Acts 19:14). Their attempt to invoke Jesus's name over a demon-possessed man backfires spectacularly when the spirit responds, 'Jesus I know, and Paul I know, but who are you?' The demon-possessed man overpowers all seven, leaving them wounded and naked. The incident demonstrates that using Jesus's name like a magical formula, without genuine faith, is both powerless and dangerous. Sceva's designation as 'chief priest' is puzzling—perhaps a local synagogue leader or self-styled religious authority rather than Jerusalem's high priest.

(1×) Acts 19:14 uses the genitive Σκευᾶ: ʾseven sons of Sceva a Jewish chief priest were doing this.' The name appears to be Latin (Scaeva means 'left-handed'), though he's identified as Jewish. The sons' failed exorcism contrasts with the genuine power flowing through Paul's ministry (handkerchiefs bringing healing, 19:12). The story leads to mass repentance in Ephesus as people burn their magic books, worth fifty thousand pieces of silver—the failure of formulaic spirituality drives people to authentic faith. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Skeuas | es: Skeuâs | fr: Scéva | de: Σκευᾶ Acts 19:14

σκευ-ή G4631 N-AFS (1×)

Ship's tackle, rigging, or gear; the equipment and apparatus used to operate a sailing vessel

During the violent storm threatening Paul's ship, the crew 'threw the ship's tackle overboard with their own hands' (Acts 27:19). This desperate measure followed jettisoning cargo the previous day (27:18). The term σκευή designated equipment, gear, or apparatus—in nautical context, the rigging, spare sails, tackle, or movable equipment that operates a ship. Lightening the vessel might help it ride the storm, but discarding tackle also reduced their ability to control the ship. Luke's detail shows the crew's desperation as they surrender navigational capacity to survive the immediate crisis.

(1×) Acts 27:19 employs the accusative singular σκευὴν τοῦ πλοίου: ʾthe ship's gear/tackle.' The word broadly means equipment or apparatus (compare σκεῦος, vessel), here specified by context as nautical gear. Spanish 'aparejo,' French 'équipement,' German retains the Greek—all indicate ship's equipment. The phrase 'with their own hands' emphasizes either the crew's personal involvement or that they didn't wait for cargo handlers but desperately threw gear overboard themselves. The storm's ferocity drives progressive abandonment of everything but life itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tackle | es: aparejo | fr: équipement | de: σκευὴν Acts 27:19

σκεῦος G4632 N-ANP (23×)

A vessel, container, or instrument; household goods; nautical gear or tackle

The noun σκεῦος covers a broad range of manufactured objects, from everyday containers to a person's entire household property. In its most common New Testament usage it denotes a vessel or jar — the jar of sour wine at the cross (John 19:29), the great sheet lowered like a vessel from heaven (Acts 10:11), or the metaphorical 'vessel of mercy' and 'vessel of wrath' (Rom 9:22-23). Paul himself is called a σκεῦος ἐκλογῆς, ʾa chosen instrument' (Acts 9:15). In its plural collective sense, it refers to household goods or possessions (Matt 12:29), and once to ship's tackle in the storm scene of Acts 27:17.

1. vessel, container (19×) A vessel, jar, container, or instrument — both literal and metaphorical. This dominant sense (19 occurrences) encompasses physical receptacles like the jar at the cross (John 19:29), the lamp placed on a stand rather than under a vessel (Luke 8:16), and the sheet-like container in Peter's vision (Acts 10:11). Figuratively, Paul is a 'chosen vessel' (Acts 9:15) and human beings are vessels of mercy or wrath (Rom 9:22-23). Spanish 'vasija/objeto' and German 'Gefaess' confirm the container core. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-jar, a-vessel, vessel | es: Vasija, con-vasija, objeto | fr: vase | de: Gefaesse, Gefäß Mark 11:16; Luke 8:16; John 19:29; Acts 9:15; Acts 10:11

2. goods, household property (3×) Household goods, possessions, or personal property in the collective plural. Jesus' parable of binding the strong man turns on this sense: one must first bind him before plundering his 'goods' (Matt 12:29, Mark 3:27). In Luke 17:31, the person on the housetop must not go down to retrieve their 'belongings.' Spanish 'bienes/pertenencias' marks the shift from singular container to collective property clearly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: goods | es: bienes, pertenencias | fr: vase | de: Gefaesse, Gefäß Matt 12:29; Mark 3:27; Luke 17:31

3. gear, ship's tackle (1×) Nautical equipment, rigging, or ship's tackle — a specialized technical sense attested once at Acts 27:17. During the violent Mediterranean storm, the sailors 'lowered the gear,' referring to the sail or rigging apparatus. The singular σκεῦος here parallels classical Greek maritime usage where it denoted a ship's equipment. Spanish 'aparejo' (rigging/tackle) captures this nautical specificity precisely. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gear | es: aparejo | fr: vase | de: Gefäß Acts 27:17

σκην-ή G4633 N-DFS (20×)

A tent, booth, or tabernacle; the sacred tent of God's presence or an ordinary temporary shelter.

Skene is one of those words where a simple object – a tent of cloth and poles – opens onto vast theological meaning. In the Septuagint it regularly translates the Hebrew mishkan, the portable sanctuary where God's glory dwelt among Israel. The letter to the Hebrews builds its entire priestly argument around this word, contrasting the earthly skene with the true heavenly tabernacle (Heb 8:2; 9:2-3). At the Transfiguration, Peter's offer to build three skenai (Matt 17:4; Mark 9:5) recalls the Feast of Booths while unwittingly pointing to something greater. Luke 16:9 stretches the tent-image to eternity: the faithful are received into 'eternal dwellings.'

1. tabernacle, sacred tent (15×) The sacred tabernacle – the portable tent-sanctuary of Israel and its heavenly archetype. Hebrews uses skene extensively for both the Mosaic tabernacle and the 'true tent' pitched by the Lord (Heb 8:2; 9:2-3, 11, 21). Acts 7:43-44 recalls the wilderness tabernacle, and Acts 15:16 quotes Amos about rebuilding David's fallen tent. Spanish 'tabernaculo,' French 'tente,' and German 'Zelt' all serve this meaning. Fifteen of twenty occurrences carry sacral weight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tabernacle, tent | es: tabernáculo, tienda | fr: tente | de: Zelt, σκηνὴ, σκηνὴν Acts 7:43; Acts 7:44; Acts 15:16; Heb 8:2; Heb 8:5

2. tent, temporary shelter (4×) An ordinary tent or temporary booth for human shelter. At the Transfiguration, Peter proposes making three tents for Jesus, Moses, and Elijah (Matt 17:4; Mark 9:5; Luke 9:33) – physical shelters recalling the Feast of Booths. Hebrews 11:9 describes Abraham dwelling in tents as a sojourner. Spanish 'tiendas' and 'enramadas' (booths) distinguish this everyday sense from the sacral 'tabernaculo.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tents | es: enramadas, tiendas | fr: tente | de: Zelt, σκηνάς, σκηνὰς Matt 17:4; Mark 9:5; Luke 9:33; Heb 11:9

3. dwelling place, habitation (1×) A metaphorical dwelling or permanent habitation, stretching the tent-image beyond the temporal. In Luke 16:9, Jesus speaks of being received into 'eternal tents' (aionious skenas), a striking paradox – tents are by nature temporary, yet these are everlasting. Spanish renders this 'moradas' (dwelling places), dropping the tent imagery entirely, which highlights how far the metaphor has traveled from its literal root. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tents | es: moradas | fr: tente | de: σκηνάς Luke 16:9

σκηνο-πηγία G4634 N-NFS (1×)

The Feast of Tabernacles (Booths), Jewish autumn harvest festival commemorating wilderness wandering (Leviticus 23:34-43)

John notes that Jesus went up to Jerusalem for the Feast of Tabernacles, though initially in secret (John 7:2, 10). This joyful seven-day festival in the month of Tishri (September-October) celebrated harvest and remembered Israel's tent-dwelling during the Exodus. Families built temporary shelters (sukkot) and held ceremonies involving water and light—symbols Jesus would appropriate for himself ('rivers of living water,' 7:38; 'light of the world,' 8:12). The feast's themes of divine provision and presence become Christological claims as Jesus reveals himself in Jerusalem's courts.

(1×) John 7:2 identifies the timing: 'Now the Jews' Feast of Tabernacles was near.' The Greek σκηνοπηγία literally means 'tent-pitching' or 'booth-building,' translating Hebrew Sukkot. Spanish 'tabernáculos,' French 'fête des tabernacles,' German 'Laubhüttenfest' (leaf-hut festival)—all capture the temporary shelter theme. John uses this feast setting to frame Jesus's controversial teaching and the division he creates. The festival's celebration of God dwelling with Israel becomes ironic backdrop for Jesus's contested claims to divine origin. PASSOVER FESTIVAL

en: Booths | es: tabernáculos | fr: fête-des-tabernacles | de: Laubhuettenfest John 7:2

σκηνοποι-ός G4635 N-NMP (1×)

Tentmakers, those who make tents or work with leather and fabric to construct portable shelters

Paul discovers that Aquila and Priscilla share his trade as tentmakers, so he stays and works with them in Corinth (Acts 18:3). The occupation involved working with leather, heavy fabric (often goat hair), and stitching to create portable shelters, awnings, or coverings. This skilled trade provided Paul income during missionary work, fulfilling his principle of not burdening churches financially (1 Thessalonians 2:9, 2 Thessalonians 3:8). The shared craft created immediate connection with Aquila and Priscilla, leading to lasting partnership in ministry. Tentmaking exemplifies Paul's bi-vocational approach: supporting himself while preaching the gospel freely.

(1×) Acts 18:3 uses the nominative plural σκηνοποιοί: `for they were tentmakers by trade.' The compound joins 'tent' (σκηνή) with 'make' (ποιέω), straightforwardly designating the occupation. Spanish 'fabricantes de tiendas,' French 'faiseur de tentes,' German preserves the Greek—all identify the leather-working craft. Luke's note explains why Paul lodged with Aquila and Priscilla—shared occupation meant compatible work arrangement. This detail also reminds readers that apostolic ministry often combined manual labor with proclamation, avoiding any appearance of mercenary motivation. LABOR AND TOIL

en: tentmakers | es: fabricantes-de-tiendas | fr: faiseur-de-tentes | de: σκηνοποιοὶ Acts 18:3

σκῆνος G4636 N-DNS (2×)

Tent, temporary dwelling; metaphorically the body as the soul's temporary dwelling place

Σκῆνος literally means tent or temporary shelter, but in philosophical and biblical usage it becomes a metaphor for the physical body as the temporary dwelling of the soul or spirit. Paul uses this imagery in 2 Corinthians 5 when contrasting our earthly tent-dwelling (the mortal body subject to decay) with the eternal building from God awaiting us. The tent metaphor emphasizes transience, fragility, and the pilgrim nature of earthly existence. This was common imagery in Greek philosophy (Plato, Pythagoreans) and resonates with Israel's wilderness wandering in tents before entering the promised land.

(2×) Both occurrences in 2 Corinthians 5:1 and 5:4 develop the extended metaphor: we groan while in this tent, longing to be clothed with our heavenly dwelling. Paul's language blends Platonic body-soul dualism with Jewish resurrection hope, creating a distinctly Christian eschatology. The tent image captures both the vulnerability and impermanence of mortal life while anticipating something permanent and glorious. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tent | es: tienda | fr: hâte | de: Zelt 2Cor 5:1; 2Cor 5:4

σκην-όω G4637 V-FIA-3S (5×)

To dwell, tabernacle, pitch one's tent; to take up residence among, evoking God's dwelling presence.

A verb meaning 'to pitch a tent' or 'to dwell,' carrying rich theological weight from the Old Testament tabernacle tradition. Its most famous occurrence is John 1:14 — 'the Word became flesh and dwelt (eskenosen) among us' — where the tent-imagery deliberately echoes God's shekinah presence in the wilderness tabernacle. In Revelation, the verb describes God's sheltering presence over his people (Rev 7:15; 21:3) and the heavenly realm where the saints dwell (Rev 12:12; 13:6). The Spanish habitó-en-tienda ('dwelt in a tent') beautifully preserves the original tabernacle nuance lost in most modern translations.

(5×) To dwell, take up residence, or tabernacle — with the root idea of pitching a tent (skene). All five NT uses carry theological weight: John 1:14 announces the incarnate Word 'tabernacling' among humanity, deliberately evoking God's presence in the wilderness tent of meeting. In Revelation, God shelters (skenoo) over his people (Rev 7:15; 21:3), while Rev 12:12 and 13:6 reference those who dwell in heaven. The Spanish renderings split revealingly between habitó-en-tienda (preserving the tent imagery) and habitará (general dwelling), while German wohnen and French habiter flatten to ordinary residence — showing how translation choices can obscure or illuminate the tabernacle theology embedded in the Greek. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: dwelling, dwelt, he-will-dwell | es: extenderá-tienda, habitará, habitó-en-tienda | fr: habiter | de: wohnen John 1:14; Rev 7:15; Rev 12:12; Rev 13:6; Rev 21:3

σκήν-ωμα G4638 N-DNS (3×)

dwelling, tent, tabernacle; a temporary or permanent dwelling place

This noun denotes a dwelling, tent, or tabernacle—a place of habitation, whether temporary like a tent or more permanent like a temple. Classical usage included soldiers' quarters, tents, and sacred buildings. The New Testament uses it both for literal dwellings and metaphorically for the body as a temporary dwelling for the soul. The term emphasizes habitation and presence.

(3×) Describes dwelling places with both literal and metaphorical significance. Acts 7:46 recounts David's desire to 'find a dwelling place for the God of Jacob.' Second Peter 1:13-14 uses it metaphorically for the body: 'I think it right, as long as I am in this tent, to stir you up by way of reminder, knowing that the putting off of my tent will be soon.' The cross-linguistic evidence shows terms for tent, tabernacle, and dwelling. Peter's language echoes Jesus' teaching about his body as a temple, presenting earthly life as temporary tent-dwelling while awaiting the permanent dwelling God has prepared. Acts connects it to God's presence among his people—from tabernacle to temple to incarnation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-dwelling, tent | es: morada, tabernáculo | fr: tente, σκηνώματι, σκηνώματός | de: Zelt, σκήνωμα Acts 7:46; 2Pet 1:13; 2Pet 1:14

σκῐά G4639 N-DFS (7×)

Shadow; the dark area cast by an object blocking light, used literally of physical shade and figuratively of spiritual darkness, death, or a foreshadowing of greater realities.

Skia carries rich metaphorical freight in both classical and biblical Greek. Literally, it means the shadow or shade cast by an object, as when birds nest in the branches and enjoy their shade (Mark 4:32) or the sick hope that Peter's shadow might fall on them for healing (Acts 5:15). Figuratively, it evokes the 'shadow of death' — that deep existential darkness from which light dawns (Matt 4:16; Luke 1:79, quoting Isaiah). In Colossians 2:17 and Hebrews 8:5 and 10:1, the term describes Old Testament rituals as a 'shadow' of the good things to come, not the substance itself. Spanish 'sombra,' French 'ombre,' and German 'Schatten' all maintain the same literal-to-figurative range.

shadow (7×) Shadow in both its physical and metaphorical dimensions. Physically, it denotes shade cast by an object — birds sheltering in the shadow of branches (Mark 4:32) or Peter's shadow falling on the sick (Acts 5:15). Figuratively, it designates the profound darkness of death and spiritual ignorance that the messianic light dispels (Matt 4:16; Luke 1:79, both quoting Isaiah 9:2). Theologically, it describes the preliminary, incomplete nature of Old Covenant institutions: the law has 'a shadow of the good things to come' rather than the reality itself (Col 2:17; Heb 8:5; 10:1). French 'ombre' and Spanish 'sombra' capture this same dual range, from physical shade to figurative foreshadowing. SHADOW AND SHADE

en: Shadow, shadow | es: Sombra, sombra | fr: ombre | de: Schatten, σκιὰ, σκιᾷ Matt 4:16; Mark 4:32; Luke 1:79; Acts 5:15; Col 2:17

σκιρτ-άω G4640 V-AMA-2P (3×)

to leap or jump with joy, especially of exuberant, uncontrollable movement expressing gladness

This verb captures the physical expression of overwhelming joy—leaping, bounding, springing. In Luke's Gospel it appears three times: twice describing the infant John the Baptist leaping in Elizabeth's womb at Mary's greeting (1:41, 44), and once in Jesus' teaching about rejoicing when persecuted (6:23). The word carries connotations of unrestrained, spontaneous movement that can't be suppressed, like young animals frisking in a field. It's joy made visible through the body.

(3×) The consistent English 'leap' across translations reflects a single clear sense: sudden, joyful jumping or springing movement. The German transliterations (σκιρτήσατε, ἐσκίρτησεν) and Romance glosses (Spanish 'saltó', French 'tressaillir') all converge on this energetic, upward motion. Luke uses it both literally (the unborn child's movement) and metaphorically (believers exulting under persecution), showing how physical leaping embodies spiritual gladness. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9550 WITH 6 SENSES
en: leap, leaped | es: saltad, saltó | fr: tressaillir | de: σκιρτήσατε, ἐσκίρτησεν Luke 1:41; Luke 1:44; Luke 6:23

σκληρο-καρδία G4641 N-AFS (3×)

hardness of heart; stubborn resistance to God's will, spiritual insensitivity or obstinacy

A compound term (literally 'hard-heart') describing spiritual stubbornness and moral insensitivity. Jesus uses it twice in identical contexts—explaining why Moses permitted divorce (Matt 19:8, Mark 10:5)—and once when rebuking the eleven for not believing resurrection reports (Mark 16:14). The word diagnoses a condition where the heart becomes calloused and unresponsive to divine truth, unable or unwilling to bend. It's not intellectual doubt but willful resistance, a hardening that prevents both obedience and faith.

(3×) All target languages preserve the compound structure: Spanish 'dureza-de-corazón', French 'dureté-de-cœur', German 'Herzenshaerte'. This unanimity reveals a technical term for a specific spiritual condition. The hyphenated English rendering 'hardness-of-heart' captures how the ancient world located moral responsiveness in the cardiac organ—the heart could become petrified, losing its capacity to respond to God's voice or commands. HEART (INNER SELF) en: hardness-of-heart | es: dureza-de-corazón | fr: dureté-de-cœur | de: Herzenshaerte, σκληροκαρδίαν Matt 19:8; Mark 10:5; Mark 16:14

σκληρός G4642 Adj-NMS (6×)

skleros – hard, harsh, severe; describing something rigid, unyielding, or difficult to accept

The adjective skleros (from which English derives 'sclerosis') covers a range from physically hard to metaphorically harsh or severe. In the New Testament it applies to persons, words, and forces: a 'hard master' who reaps where he did not sow (Matt 25:24), a 'hard saying' that offends the disciples (John 6:60), the 'hard' goads against which Saul kicks (Acts 9:5; 26:14), harsh winds driving ships (Jas 3:4), and the 'harsh things' ungodly sinners speak against God (Jude 15). Spanish duro, French dur, and German hart all descend from the same Indo-European root for physical hardness, showing how naturally this semantic range bridges the literal and figurative.

hard, harsh, severe (6×) Hard, harsh, severe, or unyielding – applied both to persons and to things that are difficult to bear or accept. The parable's 'hard master' (Matt 25:24) describes an exacting, pitiless character; the 'hard saying' of John 6:60 is one the disciples find intellectually and spiritually intolerable; the 'goads' of Acts 9:5 and 26:14 are sharp, unyielding instruments; the 'harsh' wind of James 3:4 is a violent natural force; and Jude 15 uses the neuter plural for 'harsh things' spoken against God. Spanish duro, French dur, and German hart all converge on this unified semantic range spanning physical rigidity and metaphorical severity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Hard, hard, harsh | es: Dura, duras-palabras, duro | fr: dur, dures-choses, | de: hart, harten-Worte, {σκληρόν Matt 25:24; John 6:60; Acts 9:5; Acts 26:14; Jas 3:4

σκληρότης G4643 N-AFS (1×)

Hardness, callousness, or stubborn resistance; the quality of being hard-hearted or unyielding

Paul warns against storing up wrath 'according to your hardness and unrepentant heart' (Romans 2:5). The term σκληρότης designates rigidity, hardness, or stubborn resistance—the opposite of soft responsiveness to God. Classical usage included physical hardness (hard wood, stiff limbs) and metaphorical inflexibility. Paul applies it to the heart that refuses to repent despite God's kindness, patience, and forbearance. This hardness accumulates divine judgment, treasuring up wrath for the day of revelation. The anatomy of unbelief involves willful resistance rather than mere ignorance.

(1×) Romans 2:5 employs the accusative singular σκληρότητα paired with 'unrepentant heart': κατὰ δὲ τὴν σκληρότητά σου καὶ ἀμετανόητον καρδίαν. Paul addresses the moralistic judge who condemns others while doing the same things. Spanish 'dureza,' French 'dureté,' German 'Härte'—all capture stubborn hardness. The context shows this isn't ignorance but deliberate resistance to God's goodness that should lead to repentance (2:4). Hardness becomes self-inflicted judgment, storing up wrath rather than responding to grace. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 7670 WITH 5 SENSES en: hardness | es: dureza | fr: dureté | de: Haerte Rom 2:5

σκληροτράχηλος G4644 Adj-VMP (1×)

Stiff-necked, stubborn, or obstinate; refusing to submit to authority or correction (Exodus 32:9)

Stephen accuses the Sanhedrin, 'You stiff-necked people, uncircumcised in heart and ears, you always resist the Holy Spirit' (Acts 7:51). The adjective σκληροτράχηλος literally means 'hard-necked,' evoking an ox that refuses the yoke. God repeatedly condemned Israel with this epithet for rebellion in the wilderness (Exodus 32:9, 33:3, 5, 34:9, Deuteronomy 9:6, 13). Stephen applies the Exodus-era indictment to his contemporaries, arguing that resistance to God's messengers constitutes the consistent pattern of Jewish history. His inflammatory rhetoric—comparing the council to their wilderness-wandering ancestors—provokes the rage that leads to his stoning.

(1×) Acts 7:51 uses the vocative plural Σκληροτράχηλοι: 'Stiff-necked ones!' The compound joins 'hard' (σκληρός) with 'neck' (τράχηλος), translating the Hebrew metaphor for stubborn disobedience. Spanish 'Duros de cerviz,' French 'à la nuque raide,' German retains the Greek—all preserve the anatomical image. Stephen's speech climaxes with this accusation, equating the council's rejection of Jesus with their ancestors' idolatry. The stiff neck refuses to bow, to submit, to yield—culminating in resisting the Holy Spirit and killing the Righteous One. STUBBORNNESS REBELLION
en: stiff-necked | es: Duros-de-cerviz | fr: à-la-nuque-raide | de: Σκληροτράχηλοι Acts 7:51

σκληρ-ύνω G4645 V-IIM/P-3P (6×)

To harden or make obstinate; in the passive/middle, to become hardened, especially of the heart's resistance to God.

Skleruno draws on the physical image of something becoming rigid and unyielding, then transfers it to the spiritual realm. The Epistle to the Hebrews quotes Psalm 95 three times — 'Do not harden your hearts' (Heb 3:8, 3:15, 4:7) — turning the verb into a recurring pastoral alarm. Paul invokes God's sovereign prerogative: 'He hardens whom he wills' (Rom 9:18). In the passive, the word describes the tragic slide into obstinacy, as when some in Ephesus were being hardened against Paul's teaching (Acts 19:9). Spanish 'endurecer,' French 'endurcir,' and German 'verhaerten' all mirror the concrete-to-metaphorical arc.

1. harden, make obstinate (active) (4×) To harden or make obstinate in the active sense — the deliberate act of causing a heart to become unyielding toward God's voice or truth. In Heb 3:8, 3:15, and 4:7, it appears as a subjunctive warning drawn from Psalm 95: 'Do not harden your hearts as in the rebellion.' Rom 9:18 attributes the hardening to divine agency. Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'endurezcais,' French 'endurcir,' German 'verhaerten' — consistently preserve the metaphor of making something physically rigid applied to spiritual receptivity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: harden, he-hardens | es: endurece, endurezcais | fr: endurci, endurcir | de: verhaerten Rom 9:18; Heb 3:8; Heb 3:15; Heb 4:7

2. become hardened (passive/middle) (2×) To become hardened or grow obstinate, used in the passive or middle voice to describe the resultant state of spiritual rigidity. In Acts 19:9, the imperfect tense (esklerunonto) captures an ongoing process: some were progressively hardening themselves against the Way. Heb 3:13 warns against being hardened by sin's deceitfulness — here the passive voice suggests hardening as something that overtakes a person through neglect rather than deliberate choice, a subtle but important distinction from the active sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: be-hardened, were-being-hardened | es: se-endurecían, sea-endurecido | fr: endurci, endurcir | de: verhaerten, ἐσκληρύνοντο Acts 19:9; Heb 3:13

σκολιός G4646 Adj-NNP (4×)

Crooked, bent, twisted; figuratively perverse, morally corrupt, dishonest

This adjective literally means bent or curved — the opposite of straight (euthys). Classical Greek applied it to winding rivers and crooked paths, but its metaphorical force is what dominates the New Testament. Luke 3:5 quotes Isaiah's vision that 'the crooked shall be made straight,' announcing moral and cosmic renewal. Peter urges his hearers to save themselves from 'this crooked generation' (Acts 2:40), and Paul calls believers to shine as lights amid a 'crooked and twisted generation' (Phil 2:15). The word in 1 Peter 2:18 applies to harsh or perverse masters, showing its range from cosmic to domestic settings.

(4×) Crooked, bent, twisted; by extension morally perverse or corrupt. The literal sense of physical curvature (opposite of euthys, 'straight') underlies the dominant metaphorical usage in the NT. Spanish 'perverso/torcido' and French 'tortueux' both capture the blend of physical and moral crookedness. In Luke 3:5 it refers to what will be made straight at the Lord's coming; in Acts 2:40 and Phil 2:15 it characterizes a morally warped generation; in 1 Pet 2:18 it describes harsh, unreasonable masters. CROOKED PERVERTED en: crooked | es: perversa, perversos, torcida | fr: tortu, tortueux | de: krumm, σκολιὰ, σκολιᾶς Luke 3:5; Acts 2:40; Phil 2:15; 1Pet 2:18

σκόλοψ G4647 N-NMS (1×)

A thorn, stake, or sharp pointed object; something that pierces or causes pain

Paul describes his affliction as 'a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan to buffet me' (2 Corinthians 12:7). The noun σκόλοψ designated anything pointed—a stake, thorn, splinter, or sharp instrument. Paul doesn't specify the nature of his thorn (theories include physical illness, persecution, spiritual opposition, or chronic pain), focusing instead on its purpose: preventing conceit from his extraordinary revelations. Despite three prayers for removal, God's response emphasizes sufficiency: 'My grace is enough for you, for power is perfected in weakness.' The thorn becomes paradoxical gift —humbling affliction that drives Paul to depend on divine power.

(1×) 2 Corinthians 12:7 uses the nominative singular σκόλοψ: 'a thorn was given to me in the flesh.' The term's ambiguity (thorn? stake? splinter?) has generated endless speculation. Spanish 'aguijón' (goad/thorn), French 'épine' (thorn), German 'Dorn' lean toward thorn imagery. Classical usage included stakes for impaling and thorns for pricking. Paul's emphasis falls not on identification but on theological function: the painful limitation prevents pride and demonstrates that God's strength operates through human weakness. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: thorn | es: un-aguijón | fr: épine | de: Dorn 2Cor 12:7

σκοπ-έω G4648 V-PMA-2P (6×)

To look at attentively or consider carefully; also to watch out for or be on guard against something or someone.

Skopeo is the verb behind our English word 'scope' — it means to fix one's gaze on something with intent, whether in admiration or in caution. Paul tells the Corinthians to keep looking at unseen eternal realities rather than visible temporal ones (2 Cor 4:18), and urges the Philippians to consider others' interests alongside their own (Phil 2:4). But the same verb also serves as a warning: 'Watch out for those who cause divisions' (Rom 16:17). The shift from contemplation to vigilance is natural — the common thread is focused, purposeful attention. Spanish captures both nuances with 'considerar/mirar' and 'vigilar.'

1. look at, consider, pay attention to (3×) To look at attentively, consider, or fix one's mind upon something with careful regard. In 2 Cor 4:18, Paul uses the participle skopounton for believers who set their gaze on unseen, eternal realities. Phil 2:4 urges each person to consider (skopountes) the interests of others, not merely their own. Gal 6:1 calls the spiritual to look to themselves (skopon seauton) lest they too be tempted. Multilingual evidence — Spanish 'considerando,' French 'observer,' German 'achten auf' — emphasizes attentive, reflective observation. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: looking-at, watching | es: considerando, mirando | fr: observer | de: achten-auf 2Cor 4:18; Gal 6:1; Phil 2:4

2. watch out for, be on guard (3×) To watch out for, be on guard against, or keep a wary eye on someone or something that poses a threat. In Rom 16:17, Paul commands believers to watch out for (skopein) those who create divisions contrary to sound teaching. Phil 3:17 reverses the valence: 'observe (skopeite) those who walk according to the pattern we gave you' — here the vigilance is positive, urging imitation. Luke 11:35 warns to watch whether the light within is actually darkness. Spanish 'vigilar' and 'observad' capture the cautionary or hortatory tone that distinguishes this from mere contemplation. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: look, observe, to-watch-out-for | es: a-vigilar, mira, observad | fr: observer | de: achten-auf, σκόπει Luke 11:35; Rom 16:17; Phil 3:17

σκοπ-ός G4649 N-AMS (1×)

A goal, target, or mark to aim at; the objective one presses toward

Paul describes his spiritual pursuit: 'I press toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus' (Philippians 3:14). The noun σκοπός, from the root meaning 'to look at' or 'watch,' designated a target archers aimed at or a lookout point. Athletes racing toward the finish line kept their eyes fixed on the goal marker. Paul uses this athletic imagery to picture focused, forward movement —forgetting what's behind, straining toward what's ahead. The goal isn't merely heaven but the complete realization of being found in Christ, knowing him fully, and attaining resurrection life.

(1×) Philippians 3:14 employs the accusative singular σκοπόν: 'toward the goal I press for the prize.' The term fits Paul's athletic metaphor in 3:12-14—running a race with singular focus. Spanish 'meta' (goal), French retains the Greek, German 'Ziel' (target/goal)—all capture the fixed point toward which effort is directed. Paul's goal-orientation contrasts with confidence in fleshly credentials (3:4-7) or arrival (3:12). Instead, Christian life is characterized by disciplined pursuit, eyes fixed on Christ, pressing forward with undivided attention. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: goal | es: meta | fr: σκοπὸν | de: Ziel Phil 3:14

σκορπ-ίζω G4650 V-AIA-3S (5×)

To scatter, disperse, or drive apart; used of scattering sheep, people, or resources.

A verb meaning 'to scatter' or 'disperse,' used in the New Testament both literally and figuratively. Jesus quotes it in the proverb about gathering and scattering (Matt 12:30; Luke 11:23), warning that neutrality toward his mission amounts to active opposition. In John 10:12, the wolf scatters the sheep when the hired hand flees, and in John 16:32, Jesus predicts his disciples will be scattered. Paul quotes Psalm 112:9 in 2 Corinthians 9:9, where scattering takes on a positive sense — the generous distribution of gifts to the poor. The Spanish evidence nicely captures both poles: esparce/dispersa for hostile scattering, and the same root for generous distributing.

(5×) To scatter, disperse, or drive apart — describing the forcible separation of a group or the wide distribution of something. The NT uses span a semantic range from negative dispersal (the wolf scatters sheep, John 10:12; disciples scattered, John 16:32; the one not gathering scatters, Matt 12:30/Luke 11:23) to positive distribution (scattering generosity to the poor, 2 Cor 9:9 quoting Ps 112:9). Spanish dispersa and German zerstreuen both capture the core motion of flinging outward in all directions. The contextual tone — whether hostile or generous — depends entirely on what is being scattered and by whom. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING
en: he-scattered, scatters, you-will-be-scattered | es: Esparció, dispersa, esparce | fr: disperser | de: zerstreuen, σκορπίζει Matt 12:30; Luke 11:23; John 10:12; John 16:32; 2Cor 9:9

σκορπί-ος G4651 N-NMP (5×)

Scorpion; a venomous arachnid used as a symbol of danger, demonic threat, or harmful intent.
The Greek word for scorpion, the well-known venomous arachnid of the Mediterranean and Near East. Jesus references scorpions in two teaching contexts: granting his disciples authority to tread on serpents and scorpions (Luke 10:19), and the rhetorical question about a father giving a scorpion instead of an egg (Luke 11:12). In Revelation 9, scorpion-like creatures emerge from the abyss with tormenting stinging power (Rev 9:3, 5, 10), drawing on the scorpion's fearsome reputation. Every translation preserves the literal zoological referent — Spanish escorpión, French scorpion, German Skorpione — confirming a single concrete sense.

(5×) A scorpion, the venomous arachnid of the order Scorpiones, used both literally and as a potent symbol of danger and demonic harm. Luke 10:19 pairs scorpions with serpents as representatives of hostile spiritual forces over which Jesus grants authority. Luke 11:12 uses the scorpion in a homely analogy about parental care. Revelation 9:3, 5, 10 portrays apocalyptic locust-creatures with scorpion-like tails and tormenting stings, intensifying the creature's association with pain and judgment. The translations are uniform (Spanish escorpión, French scorpion, German Skorpione), reflecting the widespread familiarity of this creature across cultures. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS en: a-scorpion, of-a-scorpion, scorpions | es: a-escorpiones, de-escorpión, escorpiones | fr: scorpion | de: Skorpione, σκορπίον, σκορπίων Luke 10:19; Luke 11:12; Rev 9:3; Rev 9:5; Rev 9:10

σκοτειν-ός G4652 Adj-ANS (3×)

dark, obscure, lacking light; used both literally of physical darkness and figuratively of spiritual blindness
An adjective describing what is shrouded in darkness or shadow. Jesus uses it in parallel teachings about the eye as the lamp of the body (Matt 6:23, Luke 11:34, 36). If the eye—the source of inner illumination—is 'dark,' then the whole person dwells in darkness. The classical Greek background includes both literal darkness (night, shadowy places) and metaphorical obscurity (unclear speech, hidden motives). In Jesus' teaching, a 'dark' eye suggests spiritual blindness or moral distortion that plunges the entire person into shadow.

(3×) The multilingual evidence converges on darkness/obscurity: Spanish 'oscuro', French 'ténébreux', English 'dark'. The German retains the Greek form (σκοτεινόν), emphasizing the technical lexical term. All three NT uses occur in Jesus' teaching about the eye, where 'dark' contrasts with 'healthy' or 'sound'—suggesting that spiritual perception can be clouded, rendering one's entire inner world lightless. DARKNESS AND GLOOM
en: dark | es: oscura, oscuro | fr: ténébreux | de: σκοτεινόν, σκοτεινὸν Matt 6:23; Luke 11:34; Luke 11:36

σκοτί-α G4653 N-NFS (17×)

Darkness or gloom, both physical absence of light and moral-spiritual opposition to divine truth.
More than simply the absence of light, σκοτία carries deep theological weight throughout the Johannine writings. John's Gospel opens with the declaration that 'the light shines in the darkness, and the darkness has not overcome it' (John 1:5), establishing darkness as the realm opposed to God's revelatory presence. Jesus warns his followers not to walk in darkness lest they stumble (John 8:12; 12:35), and 1 John defines the moral contrast starkly: 'God is light, and in him there is no darkness at all' (1 John 1:5). Matthew preserves the prophetic sense of people 'sitting in darkness' awaiting light (Matt 4:16). French 'ténèbres' and German 'Finsternis' both convey an enveloping, oppressive quality that mere 'dark' cannot.

(17×) Darkness understood as both physical gloom and a spiritual-moral condition opposed to divine light and truth. In the Synoptics, it describes the realm of those who have not yet received revelation — 'the people sitting in darkness have seen a great light' (Matt 4:16). In John's theology it becomes a central metaphor for alienation from God: 'the light shines in the darkness' (John 1:5), and those who hate the light remain in darkness (John 3:19; 12:35). French 'ténèbres' and German 'Finsternis' both capture the heavy, oppressive quality beyond simple absence of illumination. DARKNESS AND GLOOM
en: darkness | es: oscuridad, tiniebla | fr: ténèbres | de: Finsternis, σκοτία Matt 4:16; Matt 10:27; Luke 12:3; John 1:5

σκοτίζω G4654 V-ASP-3S (5×)

To darken, obscure; used of celestial bodies losing light and of minds becoming spiritually blind.
A verb meaning 'to darken' or 'to be made dark,' appearing in both cosmic and spiritual contexts. In the Olivet Discourse, Jesus prophesies that the sun and moon will be darkened at the end of the age (Matt 24:29; Mark 13:24), drawing on Old Testament day-of-the-Lord imagery. Paul applies the word to spiritual blindness: hearts darkened through futile thinking (Rom 1:21) and eyes darkened as judicial punishment (Rom 11:10, quoting Ps 69:23). Revelation 8:12 describes a third of the luminaries being struck dark. The Spanish evidence helpfully splits between fue-entenebrecido (physical darkening) and sean-oscurecidos (spiritual blinding), capturing both dimensions.

(5×) To darken or be made dark, encompassing both the literal obscuring of celestial light and the metaphorical blinding of human understanding. The cosmic usage appears in the synoptic apocalypse (Matt 24:29; Mark 13:24) and the trumpet judgment of Rev 8:12, where sun, moon, and stars lose their radiance — echoing Joel 2:31 and Isaiah 13:10. The spiritual usage in Romans describes minds and hearts plunged into moral and intellectual darkness: futile reasoning leads to darkened hearts (Rom 1:21), and judicial blindness darkens the eyes of the unbelieving (Rom 11:10). Spanish distinguishes fue-entenebrecido and oscurecida, while German verfinstern and French obscurcir both preserve the sense of light being extinguished or blocked. DARKNESS AND DIMNESS
en: let-be-darkened, might-be-darkened, was-darkened | es: fue-entenebrecido, fuera-oscurecida, sean-oscurecidos | fr: obscurcir | de: verfinstern, σκοτισθήσεται Matt 24:29; Mark 13:24; Rom 1:21; Rom 11:10; Rev 8:12

σκότος G4655 N-NNS (30×)

Darkness, gloom; physical absence of light and metaphorical spiritual-moral blindness or divine judgment.
Skotos encompasses both literal and figurative darkness. Physically, it describes the three hours of darkness at the crucifixion (Matt 27:45) and the 'outer darkness' of exclusion from the banquet (Matt 8:12, 22:13, 25:30). Metaphorically, it represents the domain of evil, ignorance, and separation from God—contrasted with light in the Johannine and Pauline writings (John 1:5, 1 Thess 5:4-5). German 'Finsternis,' Spanish 'tinieblas,' and French 'tenebres' all carry the same dual register of physical darkness and spiritual menace. Jesus warns that when the inner light becomes darkness, 'how great is that darkness' (Matt 6:23).

darkness (30×) Darkness as the absence or opposite of light, spanning physical, moral, and eschatological registers. Literally, it marks the crucifixion darkness over the land (Matt 27:45, Mark 15:33). As a metaphor for spiritual blindness, it opposes the light of God and Christ (John 1:5, Acts 26:18, Col 1:13). The 'outer darkness' (Matt 8:12, 22:13, 25:30) represents final exclusion from God's presence. Paul urges believers to live as 'children of light,' not of darkness (1 Thess 5:4-5). DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: darkness | es: oscuridad, tinieblas | fr: ténèbres | de: Finsternis Matt 6:23; Matt 8:12; Matt 22:13; Matt 25:30

σκοτ-όω G4656 V-RPM/P-NFS (3×)

to darken, cause to become dark; to obscure or blind, either literally or figuratively

A verb meaning to make dark, to obscure, to blind. It appears in Ephesians 4:18 describing Gentiles whose understanding has been darkened, and twice in Revelation depicting cosmic darkening—the sun and air darkened by smoke (9:2) and a kingdom plunged into darkness (16:10). The passive forms ('being darkened,' 'having been darkened') suggest both process and result: light fails, vision dims, comprehension fades. Classical uses include blinding someone, stupefying them, or causing vertigo—all involving loss of clarity or orientation.

(3×) Romance languages use words from the 'darken/obscure' family (Spanish 'oscurecido', French/German 'verfinstern'), while English varies between 'darkened' and 'was darkened'. The passive participle forms dominate, indicating something acted upon—minds darkened by sin, heavens darkened by judgment. The lexical evidence from Revelation shows cosmic darkening as divine judgment, while Ephesians applies it to intellectual and moral blindness. DARKNESS AND DIMNESS

en: being-darkened, having-been-darkened, was-darkened | es: entenebrecidos, fue-oscurecido, oscurecido | fr: verfinstern | de: verfinstern Eph 4:18; Rev 9:2; Rev 16:10

σκῦβᾰλ-ον G4657 N-ANP (1×)

Garbage, refuse, dung, or worthless waste; things discarded as useless or repulsive

Paul declares that he counts everything loss 'and consider them garbage, in order that I may gain Christ' (Philippians 3:8). The noun σκύβαλον designated refuse, excrement, trash, or table scraps thrown to dogs—anything worthless and repulsive. Paul applies this shocking term to his former sources of confidence: pedigree, education, zeal, legal righteousness. What Judaism valued as credentials, Paul now sees as worthless waste compared to knowing Christ. The violent revaluation—from boasting (3:4-6) to garbage (3:8)—illustrates the revolutionary impact of encountering Jesus.

(1×) Philippians 3:8 uses the accusative plural σκύβαλα: 'I count them as garbage.' The term appears only here in the NT, stronger than mere 'loss' (3:7). Classical usage ranged from dung to food scraps to general refuse. Spanish 'basura' (garbage), French retains the Greek, German 'Unrat' (filth)—all convey worthlessness. Paul's rhetoric escalates from counting loss to viewing as repulsive waste, emphasizing the surpassing worth of knowing Christ. His former identity markers don't just fade; they become actively repugnant compared to the righteousness that comes through faith. ASH HEAP REFUSE en: garbage | es: basura | fr: σκύβαλα | de: Unrat Phil 3:8

Σκύθ-ης G4658 N-NMS (1×)

A Scythian, member of nomadic peoples from the steppes north of the Black Sea, considered barbarian by Greeks and Romans

Paul declares that in Christ there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcised nor uncircumcised, barbarian, Scythian, slave, nor free (Colossians 3:11). Scythians represented the extreme edge of barbarity to Greco-Roman sensibilities—nomadic warriors from the distant north, feared for ferocity and regarded as uncivilized. That Paul specifies 'barbarian, Scythian' suggests Scythians were considered barbarous even among barbarians, the lowest rung of cultural hierarchy. Yet gospel reconciliation obliterates such distinctions. In Christ's new humanity, ethnic and cultural categories that structure worldly societies lose their dividing power—Christ is all and in all.

(1×) Colossians 3:11 uses the nominative singular Σκύθης in a list of abolished distinctions: 'where there is not... barbarian, Scythian, slave, free.' The escalation from general 'barbarian' to specific 'Scythian' may indicate Scythians as the furthest extreme of cultural otherness. Classical Greeks associated Scythians with nomadic violence and lack of civilization. Paul's point: even maximum cultural distance dissolves in Christ, who recreates humanity beyond ethnic and social categories. The church embodies a new social reality where identity flows from Christ rather than ethnicity or status. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: Scythian | es: Escita | fr: Σκύθης | de: Skythe Col 3:11

σκυθρωπ-ός G4659 Adj-NMP (2×)

Sad-faced, gloomy, sullen; having a downcast or sorrowful countenance

Σκυθρωπός describes someone with a sad, gloomy, or sullen facial expression—a countenance marked by sorrow, anger, or affected gravity. Jesus uses this term when warning against hypocritical fasting that displays exaggerated sadness to gain human admiration. In Luke's Gospel, the term describes the two disciples walking to Emmaus after Jesus' crucifixion, genuinely downcast because their hopes had been crushed. The same word can describe authentic grief or performative gloominess, with context determining which. Classical usage includes both meanings: genuine melancholy and affected severity.

(2×) Matthew 6:16 warns against looking gloomy (literally 'making yourselves sad-faced') when fasting, contrasting authentic piety with theatrical displays. Luke 24:17 describes the Emmaus disciples as genuinely sad as they walked, discussing Jesus' death. The two contexts show authentic versus performed sadness. Classical Greek applied the term to sullen, angry, or artificially grave expressions, even to dark colors and gloomy objects. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 1284 WITH 4 SENSES

en: gloomy, sad | es: entristecidos, tristes | fr: sombre | de: σκυθρωποί Matt 6:16; Luke 24:17

σκύλλω G4660 V-PMA-2S (4×)

To trouble, bother, harass; to weary or distress someone by imposing a burden

Originally meaning to flay or tear (related to skulon, 'spoils stripped from the slain'), this verb softened in Koine Greek to mean troubling or bothering someone. Its NT occurrences divide into two vivid patterns. In Matthew 9:36, Jesus sees the crowds 'harassed and helpless,' describing their spiritual exhaustion under poor leadership. In Mark 5:35 and Luke 8:49, messengers tell a distraught father not to 'trouble' Jesus further — the teacher need not be bothered since the child has died. Luke 7:6 has Jesus told not to 'trouble himself' by coming to the centurion's house. Each use carries the poignancy of someone bearing more than they should.

(4×) To trouble, bother, harass, or weary. Originally 'to flay or tear,' the word softened in Koine to mean causing weariness or disturbance. Spanish 'molestar' and German 'beunruhigen' capture the nuance of unwanted burden. In Matt 9:36 the passive describes crowds 'harassed' like sheep without a shepherd. In Mark 5:35 and Luke 8:49 it means to impose unnecessarily on Jesus ('do not trouble the teacher'). Luke 7:6 uses the middle voice reflexively: 'do not trouble yourself.' TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: harassed, trouble, trouble-yourself | es: agotados, molestas, molestes |

fr: troublé | de: beunruhigt, σκύλλε, σκύλλου Matt 9:36; Mark 5:35; Luke 7:6; Luke 8:49

σκῦλον G4661 N-ANP (1×)

Spoils, plunder, or goods seized from a defeated enemy; the possessions taken in victory

Jesus describes the strong man's house being invaded: 'when someone stronger attacks and overcomes him, he takes away the armor in which he trusted and divides his spoils' (Luke 11:22). The plural σκῦλα designated military plunder, possessions stripped from defeated enemies. In Jesus's parable, Satan is the strong man guarding his possessions until someone stronger (Jesus) binds him and seizes his goods. The spoils represent people held captive by Satan's power, now liberated by Jesus's superior authority. Exorcisms and healings demonstrate this cosmic conflict—Jesus plundering Satan's kingdom, dividing the spoils among God's people.

(1×) Luke 11:22 uses the accusative plural σκῦλα: 'he divides his spoils.' The military imagery pictures defeat and dispossession—the victorious attacker strips the defeated strong man and distributes the plunder. Spanish 'despojos,' French 'dépouille' (spoil/remains)—both preserve the martial context. Jesus's point answers accusations that he casts out demons by Beelzebul (11:15): actually, he's invading Satan's kingdom, binding him, and freeing captives. Every exorcism is spiritual conquest, evidence that God's kingdom has come upon them (11:20). PLUNDER AND SPOIL

en: spoils | es: despojos | fr: dépouille | de: σκῦλα Luke 11:22

σκωληκό-βρωτος G4662 Adj-NMS (1×)

Worm-eaten, consumed by worms; describing a body decomposing or being devoured by larvae

Herod Agrippa I, struck by an angel for accepting worship as a god, 'became worm-eaten and breathed his last' (Acts 12:23). The adjective σκωληκόβρωτος combines 'worm' (σκώληξ) with 'eaten' (βρωτός), describing bodies consumed by worms—either through immediate divine judgment or rapid decomposition. Josephus provides parallel account of Herod's painful death after five days of agony. The manner of death signifies divine judgment on blasphemous pride—the king who accepted divine honors suffers a death emphasizing mortal corruption. The worms eating his flesh mock his pretensions to deity.

(1×) Acts 12:23 uses the nominative singular σκωληκόβρωτος: 'becoming worm-eaten, he expired.' Whether this describes internal parasites during life or immediate post-mortem decomposition, the image conveys divine judgment. Spanish 'comido por gusanos,' French 'vers de terre,' German retains the Greek—all emphasize worm consumption. Luke frames Herod's death as direct divine response to accepting worship (12:22-23): 'because he did not give God the glory, immediately an angel of the Lord struck him.' The worm-eaten death displays the fate of human pride that usurps divine honor. WORM MAGGOT

en: eaten-by-worms | es: comido-por-gusanos | fr: vers-de-terre | de: σκωληκόβρωτος Acts 12:23

σκώληξ G4663 N-NMS (3×)

worm; a crawling larva or grub, especially one that feeds on decaying matter

The Greek word for worm, particularly earthworms or the larvae of insects. In the NT it appears exclusively in Mark 9:44, 46, 48—Jesus' warning about Gehenna where 'their worm does not die and the fire is not quenched,' echoing Isaiah 66:24. The imagery is stark: worms that perpetually consume but are never satisfied, symbolizing unending destruction. Classical Greek uses it for various worms and grubs, those found in dung, decayed matter, or infested trees—creatures associated with corruption and death.

(3×) The translations are perfectly uniform across languages: English 'worm', Spanish 'gusano', French 'ver', German 'Wurm'. This unanimity reflects a concrete, unambiguous term. Jesus' threefold repetition (Mark 9:44, 46, 48) emphasizes the horror of final judgment through this visceral image—worms ceaselessly gnawing on the dead, an emblem of unending decay and loss. WORM MAGGOT

en: worm | es: gusano | fr: ver | de: Wurm Mark 9:44; Mark 9:46; Mark 9:48

σμᾰράγδ-ῐνος G4664 Adj-DMS (1×)

Emerald, or of emerald; describing the precious green gemstone or objects made from it

John sees around God's throne 'a rainbow that looked like emerald' (Revelation 4:3). The adjective σμαράγδινος describes the emerald-green color of this celestial rainbow. While earthly rainbows display multiple colors, this throne-room rainbow shimmers with singular green brilliance, perhaps evoking God's covenant (Genesis 9:13) transformed in heavenly glory. Emeralds represented the highest value green stones in antiquity, associated with verdant life and precious beauty. The imagery combines covenant symbolism with otherworldly splendor, surrounding God's throne with brilliant green radiance.

(1×) Revelation 4:3 uses the dative masculine singular σμαραγδίνῳ modifying 'rainbow': ἶρις ὁμοία ὁράσει σμαραγδίνῳ ('a rainbow similar in appearance to emerald'). The comparison emphasizes color rather than material—the rainbow looks emerald-green. Spanish 'a esmeralda,' German 'smaragden'—both translate the adjectival form. In Revelation's throne vision, this emerald rainbow adds to the overwhelming visual glory: jasper and carnelian, lightning and thunder, sea of glass, and living creatures. The singular green contrasts with earthly rainbows' spectrum, suggesting transcendent perfection. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: emerald | es: a-esmeralda | fr: smaragden | de: smaragden Rev 4:3

σμάραγδος G4665 N-NMS (1×)

Emerald, the precious green gemstone valued for color and clarity

John's vision of the New Jerusalem includes emerald as the fourth foundation stone (Revelation 21:19). The noun σμάραγδος designated high-quality green stones, especially emeralds, prized throughout the ancient world for brilliant color. The twelve foundations, each adorned with different precious stones, symbolize the twelve apostles and the glory of God's eternal city. Emerald's inclusion among jasper, sapphire, chalcedony and other gems creates a vision of overwhelming beauty and value. The foundations' diversity suggests completeness—every kind of precious stone contributes to the city's splendor.

(1×) Revelation 21:19 lists emerald fourth among foundation stones: 'the third chalcedony, the fourth emerald.' The nominative singular σμάραγδος appears in a catalog of twelve gems, each corresponding to one of the twelve foundation stones bearing apostles' names (21:14). Spanish 'esmeralda,' French retains the cognate, German 'Smaragd'—all identify the green gemstone. Ancient sources sometimes confused emeralds with other green stones, but the term generally designated the finest green gems. The cumulative effect pictures indescribable beauty: God's city built on foundations of supreme value. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14254 WITH 4 SENSES

en: emerald | es: esmeralda; | fr: Smaragd | de: Smaragd Rev 21:19

σμύρνα G4666 N-AFS (2×)

Myrrh, an aromatic resin from Arabian trees used for perfume, anointing, embalming, and worship

Σμύρνα refers to myrrh, the fragrant gum resin from the Balsamodendron Myrrha tree native to Arabia and East Africa. In the ancient world, myrrh was treasured for multiple purposes: as perfume and anointing oil, as incense in worship, for embalming the dead, and as a gift worthy of kings. The Magi bring myrrh to the infant Jesus alongside gold and frankincense—gifts prophetically symbolizing kingship, divinity, and death. At Jesus' burial, Nicodemus brings an extravagant amount of myrrh mixed with aloes to prepare Jesus' body. Myrrh thus frames Jesus' earthly life, from birth to burial.

(2×) Matthew 2:11 lists myrrh among the treasures presented to the Christ child, while John 19:39 describes about 75 pounds of myrrh and aloes brought for Jesus' burial. This creates a symbolic bracket around Jesus' life—myrrh for the king-child and myrrh for the crucified king. Ancient sources describe myrrh's use in embalming (drops of myrrh from burning preserving the dead, per Euripides), as incense, and as precious unguent. MYRRH AROMATIC RESIN

en: myrrh, of-myrrh | es: de-mirra, mirra | fr: myrrhe | de: Myrrhe, σμύρναν Matt 2:11; John 19:39

Σμύρνα G4667 N-DFS (2×)

Smyrna, an important coastal city in Asia Minor and one of the seven churches of Revelation

Σμύρνα (Smyrna) was a major port city on the Aegean coast of Asia Minor (modern Izmir, Turkey), renowned for its beauty, commerce, and loyalty to Rome. It was one of the seven churches addressed in Revelation 2-3, a congregation facing severe persecution and poverty despite the city's wealth. Jesus' message to Smyrna contains no rebuke—only encouragement to remain faithful even unto death, with the promise of the crown of life. The city's name coincidentally echoes the word for myrrh, and early interpreters noted the connection: myrrh is crushed to release its fragrance, just as the Smyrnan church was crushed by persecution yet remained fragrant to God.

(2×) Revelation 1:11 lists Smyrna among the seven churches John must address, and Revelation 2:8 begins the specific letter to Smyrna's angel, praising their faithfulness amid tribulation. The church's suffering was severe—likely including Jewish opposition and Roman imperial pressure. Historically, Smyrna later produced Polycarp, one of the early church's most famous martyrs. Inscriptions and coins show variant spellings (Ζμύρνα), reflecting Ionic dialect variations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Smyrna | es: Esmirna | fr: Smyrna | de: Smyrna Rev 1:11; Rev 2:8

Σμύρνα G4668

Smyrna; a major city of Ionia on the Aegean coast of Asia Minor

Smyrna was one of the great cities of ancient Ionia, located on the Aegean coast of what is now Turkey. The city had ancient roots mentioned by Homer and was refounded as a major Hellenistic and Roman urban center. It served as an important port and commercial hub, later becoming home to one of the seven churches addressed in Revelation. The city's name appears in various Greek forms, with inscriptions sometimes using Ζμύρνα with a zeta rather than sigma. Smyrna's residents, called Σμυρναῖοι, were proud of their city's culture, commerce, and later its Christian community that endured persecution.

σμυρν-ίζω G4669 V-RPM/P-AMS (1×)

Mixed with myrrh, flavored or drugged with myrrh; describing wine combined with myrrh for medicinal or deadening effect

At Golgotha, soldiers offered Jesus wine mixed with myrrh, but he refused it (Mark 15:23). The participle ἐσμυρνισμένος describes wine drugged with myrrh, likely intended to dull pain or awareness during crucifixion. Myrrh added bitter flavor and possible narcotic properties. Jesus's refusal to drink signals his determination to face death fully conscious, experiencing the cup of suffering completely. This contrasts with his later acceptance of sour wine (15:36), which was not medicated. The myrrhed wine represents an offered mercy Jesus deliberately declines to maintain clarity through his passion.

(1×) Mark 15:23 uses the perfect passive participle ἐσμυρνισμένον modifying 'wine': 'they were giving him wine mixed with myrrh.' The perfect tense suggests wine prepared beforehand, myrrh already infused. Spanish 'con mirra mezclado,' French 'mêlé de myrrhe,' German 'gemyrrt'—all indicate the mixture. Some manuscripts read 'gall' (χολή) instead of myrrh (σμύρνα), perhaps harmonizing with Matthew 27:34. Either way, the substance made the wine unpalatable and possibly narcotic. Jesus's refusal shows resolve to drain the cup of suffering fully aware. MYRRH AROMATIC RESIN

en: myrrh-mixed | es: con-mirra-mezclado | fr: mêlé-de-myrrhe | de: gemyrrt Mark 15:23

Σόδομα G4670 N-DNP (10×)

Sodom, the destroyed city of the plain, a byword for extreme wickedness and divine judgment

The proper name of the infamous city destroyed by fire and brimstone in Genesis 19, invoked throughout the New Testament as the supreme example of divine judgment upon sin. Jesus warns that the day of judgment will be more bearable for Sodom than for cities that reject his messengers (Matt 10:15; 11:23–24). Paul cites Isaiah's Sodom oracle to illustrate God's mercy in preserving a remnant of Israel (Rom 9:29). Peter and Jude use Sodom's destruction as a warning paradigm for the ungodly (2 Pet 2:6; Jude 7). Revelation symbolically calls Jerusalem 'Sodom' (Rev 11:8). The name became a universal moral benchmark.

Sodom (proper noun) (10×) The proper name of the ancient city of the Jordan plain destroyed by divine fire (Gen 19), functioning in the New Testament as the paradigmatic example of catastrophic judgment upon wickedness. Jesus uses it to shame unresponsive Galilean towns (Matt 10:15; 11:23–24), Paul quotes Isaiah's Sodom prophecy regarding Israel's remnant (Rom 9:29), and Peter and Jude cite its destruction as a warning for the ungodly (2 Pet 2:6; Jude 7). Spanish 'Sodoma' and French 'Sodome' preserve the name with only minor phonetic adaptation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Sodom, for-Sodom, of-Sodom | es: Sodoma, Sodómōn, Sódoma | fr: Sodome | de: Sodom, Σοδόμοις, Σοδόμων Matt 10:15; Matt 11:23; Matt 11:24; Mark 6:11; Luke 10:12

σύ G4671

you (singular), your; second person singular pronoun (genitive σου or dative σοι)

This represents genitive and dative forms of the second person singular pronoun: σου ('of you, your') and σοι ('to you, for you'). These forms appear constantly in biblical Greek, marking possession ('your house'), indirect objects ('I give to you'), and various prepositional relationships. The enclitic form σου could lose its accent when following another word, while σοι remained distinct. Ancient Greek's case system made these forms essential for indicating relationships between verbs and their personal objects. In direct discourse, prayers, and commandments, these forms created intimate personal address that modern English 'you' only partially captures.

Σολομών G4672 N-NMS (12×)

Solomōn – Solomon; the son of David and Bathsheba, Israel's proverbially wise king

The proper name Solomon (Solomōn) refers to the son of David who succeeded him as king over Israel, renowned above all for his God-given wisdom and the magnificence of his reign. Matthew's genealogy identifies him precisely: 'David was the father of Solomon by the wife of Uriah' (Matt 1:6-7). Jesus invokes Solomon's splendor as a foil for divine providence – 'even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these' (Matt 6:29; Luke 12:27) – and his wisdom as a foil for his own authority: 'something greater than Solomon is here' (Matt 12:42; Luke 11:31). In John 10:23 and Acts 3:11; 5:12, 'Solomon's Portico' preserves his name in the architecture of the temple complex. Every target language retains the name by transliteration.

Solomon (proper name) (12×) The proper name of David's son and Israel's wise king, invoked in the NT genealogy (Matt 1:6), in comparisons with Jesus' greater wisdom and glory (Matt 6:29; 12:42; Luke 11:31), and in the toponym 'Solomon's Portico' (John 10:23; Acts 3:11). All languages transliterate the single referent: Spanish Salomon, French Salomon, German Salomo. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Solomon, Solomōn, of-Solomon | es: Solomōn, Solomṓn, de-Solomṓn | fr: Salomon | de: Salomo Matt 1:6; Matt 1:7; Matt 6:29; Matt 12:42

σορός G4673 N-GFS (1×)

A bier or coffin for carrying the dead to burial

In ancient Mediterranean culture, the deceased were often carried on an open bier to the burial site in public procession. The Greek term encompasses both the portable bier and enclosed coffin, though classical sources distinguish between stone sarcophagi and wooden carrying platforms. Luke's account of the widow of Nain specifically uses this term when Jesus encounters the funeral procession and touches the bier, stopping the bearers. The multilingual evidence (Spanish féretro, French cercueil) confirms the burial-transport sense.

(1×) The portable platform or coffin on which a corpse was carried in funeral processions. In Luke 7:14, Jesus touches this burial bier as the widow's son is being carried out, demonstrating his authority over death by stopping the procession and raising the dead man. Greek sources distinguish various types from wooden frames to stone coffins, though the NT usage emphasizes the funeral-transport function. TOMBS AND BURIAL

en: coffin | es: féretro | fr: cercueil | de: σοροῦ Luke 7:14

σός G4674 PPro-D2S (27×)

your, yours — second person singular possessive pronoun indicating belonging to the addressee

Sos is the possessive adjective corresponding to the second person singular pronoun su ('you'), meaning 'your' or 'yours.' Its 27 NT occurrences appear almost exclusively in direct speech, where one person addresses another about what belongs to them. Jesus uses it in the Sermon on the Mount to challenge self-righteous judgment: 'the log that is in your own eye' (Matt 7:3; Luke 6:42). In parables, the returning master asks servants about 'your talent' (Matt 25:25) and the father tells the elder son 'all that is mine is yours' (Luke 15:31). Jesus' prayer in Gethsemane reaches its climax with 'not my will but yours be done' (Luke 22:42), and his high-priestly prayer declares 'all mine are yours, and yours are mine' (John 17:6, 9-10). Paul uses it in personal appeals: 'your faith' and 'your love' (Phlm 14). The pronoun is intimate and singular — never the polite plural — giving it an immediacy that resonates in every language: Spanish 'tu/tuyo,' French 'ton/tien,' German 'dein.'

your, yours (possessive) (27×) Second person singular possessive ('your, yours'), used in direct speech to mark what belongs to the addressee. Jesus employs it in pointed personal challenges — 'the log in your eye' (Matt 7:3), 'your faith has saved you' — and in moments of profound theological intimacy: 'not my will but yours' (Luke 22:42), 'yours are mine and mine are yours' (John 17:10). In parables it marks possession and responsibility: 'your talent' (Matt 25:25), 'all that is mine is yours' (Luke 15:31). Its singular form creates a tone of direct personal address absent from the plural 'hymon.' SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: to-you, your, your-own | es: Tuyos, de-ti, tu | fr: de-toi, toi, vous | de: dein, dich, dir Matt 7:3; Matt 7:22; Matt 13:27

σύ G4675

your, yours; second person singular possessive pronoun (genitive form used as possessive)

This is the genitive form of the second person singular pronoun functioning as a possessive: 'your' or 'yours.' Greek regularly used the genitive case of personal pronouns to indicate possession rather than having separate possessive adjectives for all persons. So σοῦ or its enclitic form σου meant 'of you' or 'your,' appearing in contexts like 'your father,' 'your faith,' 'your house.' The form could be emphatic or enclitic depending on the emphasis needed. This grammatical feature made Greek pronouns highly efficient while maintaining clear distinctions between 'your' (singular) and 'your' (plural), a distinction lost in modern English.

σουδάριον G4676 N-ANP (4×)

A cloth for wiping sweat; a face-cloth, handkerchief, or napkin — used for wrapping and burial

Borrowed directly from Latin sudarium (from sudor, 'sweat'), this word denotes a small cloth originally used for wiping perspiration from the face. In the New Testament it appears in remarkably varied contexts. The unfaithful servant wraps his master's mina in a soudarion (Luke 19:20), suggesting something like a handkerchief. At Lazarus's tomb, the cloth had been bound around his face (John 11:44), and at Jesus's empty tomb it was found rolled up separately from the linen strips (John 20:7) — a detail only John records. In Acts 19:12, cloths carried from Paul's skin healed the sick, showing the word's range from burial custom to miraculous ministry.

(4×) A cloth or napkin, originally for wiping sweat (from Latin sudarium). Used as a face-cloth in burial wrapping (John 11:44; 20:7), as a small wrapping for valuables (Luke 19:20), and as cloths carried from Paul's body for healing (Acts 19:12). French 'suaire' preserves the Latin funerary association, while Spanish 'pañuelo' and German 'Schweisstuch' ('sweat-cloth') retain the original practical sense. The word's NT range spans the mundane, the funereal, and the miraculous. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: a-cloth, face-cloth, handkerchiefs | es: con-sudario, pañuelo, pañuelos | fr: linge, suaire | de: Schweisstuch, σουδάρια, σουδαρίῳ Luke 19:20; John 11:44; John 20:7; Acts 19:12

Σουσάννα G4677 N-NFS (1×)

Susanna, a woman who supported Jesus' ministry from her own resources

The name Susanna derives from Hebrew and means 'lily' or 'rose.' Among the women who traveled with Jesus and the Twelve, providing for them from their own means, Susanna appears only in Luke's Gospel. She represents the often-overlooked female disciples who sustained Jesus' itinerant ministry financially and logistically. The multilingual consistency across translations (Sousanna, Suzanne) reflects the name's Hebrew origin through Greek transliteration.

(1×) A personal name identifying one of the women who followed Jesus and supported his ministry from their own resources. Luke 8:3 places her among the women who had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, including Mary Magdalene and Joanna. The mention emphasizes women's vital role as disciples and financial supporters in the Jesus movement, challenging conventional ancient Mediterranean social structures. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sousanna | es: Sousánna | fr: Suzanne | de: Σουσάννα Luke 8:3

σοφία G4678 N-NFS (51×)

wisdom — skill, insight, or prudence; in Scripture, the divine attribute and its human reflection in right living

Sophia spans from practical craftsmanship in classical Greek to the supreme theological concept of divine wisdom. Across 51 New Testament occurrences, it appears as the wisdom of God vindicated by her deeds (Matt 11:19), the wisdom of Solomon (Matt 12:42), and the astonishing wisdom of Jesus that scandalized Nazareth (Matt 13:54; Mark 6:2). Paul radically reframes it: the cross is the wisdom of God, foolishness to the world but power to the called (1 Cor 1:24, 30). Spanish 'sabiduria,' French 'sagesse,' German 'Weisheit' all converge on this single concept.

of wisdom (51×) Wisdom as a comprehensive quality embracing divine insight, practical discernment, and moral understanding. In the Synoptics, it denotes the extraordinary teaching authority of Jesus (Matt 13:54; Mark 6:2) and the proverbial wisdom of Solomon (Matt 12:42; Luke 11:31). In Paul, sophia undergoes a dramatic redefinition: the world's wisdom is folly before God, while Christ crucified becomes 'the wisdom of God' (1 Cor 1:21-24). In Luke 2:40, 52, the child Jesus grows in sophia as a mark of messianic development. The domain tagging as 'conflict' likely reflects passages where human and divine wisdom clash (1 Cor 1-3), but the word itself is fundamentally a cognitive-moral term. All 51 occurrences share this unified sense of insight rightly applied. WISDOM AND DISCERNMENT

en: of-wisdom, wisdom | es: de-sabiduría, sabiduría | fr: sagesse | de: Weisheit Matt 11:19; Matt 12:42; Matt 13:54; Mark 6:2; Luke 2:40

σοφ-ίζω G4679 V-RPM/P-DMP (2×)

To make wise, instruct; to devise cleverly or cunningly (can be positive skill or negative craftiness)

Σοφίζω means to make wise, to instruct, or to practice cleverness and skill. The verb can carry either positive connotations (genuine wisdom, skill, teaching) or negative ones (cunning, subtle tricks, deception), depending on context. In 2 Timothy, Paul tells Timothy that Scripture is able to make him wise for salvation—a positive use emphasizing divine instruction. In 2 Peter, the apostle insists they did not follow cleverly devised myths when proclaiming Christ's power—rejecting the negative sense of sophistic fabrication. Classical Greek used the term for becoming skilled in an art or practicing subtle deception.

(2×) 2 Timothy 3:15 speaks of sacred writings able 'to make you wise' (σοφίσαι) unto salvation through faith in Christ—Scripture as divine pedagogue. 2 Peter 1:16 denies following 'cleverly devised fables' (σεσοφισμένοις μύθοις)—rejecting sophistic invention. The same verb thus describes both God's wisdom-imparting revelation and human clever deception, with context determining which. Classical usage included learning an art, practicing subtlety, and dealing craftily. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE
en: cleverly-devised, to-make-wise | es: a-fábulas-ingeniosamente-inventadas, hacer-sabio | fr: σεσοφισμένοις, σοφίσαι | de: ersonnen 2Tim 3:15; 2Pet 1:16

σοφός G4680 Adj-DMP (20×)
Wise, skilled, learned; possessing practical wisdom or deep discernment, used of the truly wise and the self-styled.
In classical Greek this adjective ranged from 'skilled' (of a sculptor or musician) to 'prudent' or 'shrewd.' The New Testament sharpens it into a contrast between divine and human wisdom. Jesus thanks the Father for hiding things 'from the wise and understanding' (Matt 11:25; Luke 10:21), while Paul asks 'Where is the wise person?' (1 Cor 1:20) and warns against being 'wise in your own eyes' (Rom 12:16). Yet the word is not always ironic—Paul also speaks of believers as wise master-builders (1 Cor 3:10) and sends greetings to the wise in Rome (Rom 16:19). Spanish 'sabio' and German 'weise' capture both the genuine and the contested senses.

wise, skilled in judgment (20×) Wise or possessing wisdom and discernment—used both positively of genuine understanding and ironically of self-perceived cleverness. Jesus hides truth from 'the wise' in a reversal of expectations (Matt 11:25; Luke 10:21), while Paul interrogates worldly wisdom (1 Cor 1:20; Rom 1:22) yet also commends the wise builder (1 Cor 3:10). The substantive plural 'wise men' appears in Matt 23:34. Spanish 'sabio' and German 'weise' handle both the approving and the critical shades without ambiguity. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE
en: to-wise, wise, wise-men | es: a-sabios, más-sabio, sabio | fr: sage | de: weise Matt 11:25; Matt 23:34; Luke 10:21; Rom 1:14; Rom 1:22

Σπανία G4681 N-AFS (2×)
Spain, the westernmost region of the known Roman world, representing the ends of the earth
Σπανία is the Greek rendering of the Latin 'Hispania,' referring to the Iberian Peninsula at the western edge of the Roman Empire. For Paul and first-century Christians, Spain represented the farthest frontier of the known world, the completion of the geographic arc from Jerusalem to the ends of the earth. In Romans 15, Paul expresses his ambition to preach where Christ has not been named, and Spain symbolizes this frontier mission. Whether Paul ever reached Spain remains historically uncertain (early tradition suggests he did), but his stated intention shows the gospel's universal, boundary-breaking momentum.

(2×) Romans 15:24 and 15:28 both mention Paul's plans to visit Spain after delivering the collection to Jerusalem. He hopes the Roman church will assist him in this westward mission. Spain here functions both as literal geographic destination and symbolic representation of gospel expansion to earth's extremities. Earlier Greek writers called it Hesperia or Iberia, but by Roman times the Latin name Hispania (Greek: Σπανία or Ἱσπανία) had become standard. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Spain | es: Spanían | fr: Espagne | de: Spanien Rom 15:24; Rom 15:28

σπαράσσω G4682 V-APA-NMS (3×)
to convulse, tear, or throw into violent spasms; used of demonic seizures causing bodily contortions
A verb describing violent tearing, convulsing, or rending—often used of wild animals tearing flesh from bone. In the NT, all three uses describe demons throwing their victims into convulsions before departing (Mark 1:26, 9:26, Luke 9:39). The classical background includes combat wounds, tearing apart in rage, and medical spasms. The Gospel writers capture the violent, uncontrollable nature of demonic affliction: bodies seized and thrashing, torn by forces beyond human control, only released when Jesus commands.

(3×) Spanish uses 'convulsionar' consistently, English 'convulse/convulsing', while German shows both 'zerren' (to pull/tear) and transliteration 'σπαράσσει'. French 'déchirer' (to tear) preserves the original violent sense. The exorcism narratives show this as a final, desperate act—the demon convulses its victim one last time before being expelled, displaying both its malice and its powerlessness before Jesus' authority. TEARING AND RENDING en: convulses, convulsing | es: convulsionando, habiéndolo-convulsionado, lo-convulsiona | fr: déchirer | de: zerren, σπαράσσει Mark 1:26; Mark 9:26; Luke 9:39

σπαργάν-όω G4683 V-RPM/P-ANS (2×)
Wrapped in swaddling cloths; bound with strips of cloth as for an infant Σπαργανόω means to wrap in swaddling bands or strips of cloth, the ancient practice of binding infants snugly for warmth and perceived health benefits. Luke uses this term in the nativity narrative to describe Mary wrapping the newborn Jesus in strips of cloth and laying him in a manger. The detail serves multiple purposes: it shows Mary's maternal care even in difficult circumstances, emphasizes Jesus' genuine humanity and vulnerability, and provides a sign for the shepherds ('you will find a baby wrapped in cloths and lying in a manger'). The imagery recalls Wisdom 7:4's description of Solomon's humble birth.

(2×) Luke 2:7 describes Mary wrapping Jesus in swaddling cloths after his birth, and Luke 2:12 repeats this detail as the identifying sign the shepherds will find. The repetition emphasizes the paradox: the Savior of the world begins life bound in strips of cloth like any helpless infant, lying not in a royal cradle but a feeding trough. Classical sources describe swaddling not just for infants but metaphorically for anything carefully wrapped or bound. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: wrapped-in-cloths | es: envuelto-en-pañales, lo-envolvió-en-pañales | fr: emmailloter | de: ἐσπαργάνωσεν, ἐσπαργανωμένον Luke 2:7; Luke 2:12

σπατάλ-άω G4684 V-PPA-NFS (2×)
To live luxuriously, indulge in pleasure; to live in excessive comfort or self-gratification
Σπαταλάω describes living in luxury, excessive indulgence, and sensual pleasure without restraint. The term carries negative moral connotations—not merely enjoying good things but living for pleasure, comfort, and self-gratification. Paul uses it to describe a widow who lives for pleasure, saying she is 'dead even while she lives' (1 Timothy 5:6). James warns the rich who have lived luxuriously on earth while withholding wages from workers (James 5:5). The word suggests a life devoted to comfort and gratification rather than godliness and service, spoiling one's capacity for spiritual vitality.

(2×) 1 Timothy 5:6 describes a widow 'living in pleasure' (σπαταλῶσα) as spiritually dead despite physical life—pleasure-seeking has killed her soul. James 5:5 accuses the rich of having 'lived luxuriously' (ἐσπαταλήσατε) on earth, fattening their hearts for the day of slaughter like indulged cattle. Both uses condemn self-indulgent living that ignores God and neighbor. Classical Greek applied the term to soft living, excessive comfort, and spoiled children. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION
en: lived-in-pleasure, living-luxuriously | es: os-disteis-a-los-placeres, que-vive-en-placer | fr: σπαταλῶσα, ἐσπαταλήσατε | de: schwelgen 1Tim 5:6; Jas 5:5

σπάω G4685 V-APM-NMS (2×)

To draw out, pull; particularly to draw a sword from its sheath

Σπάω means to draw or pull, most commonly used for drawing a sword from its sheath. In both New Testament occurrences, the verb appears in contexts of violence or potential violence. In Mark 14:47, one of those standing near (John's Gospel identifies him as Peter) draws a sword and strikes the high priest's servant during Jesus' arrest. In Acts 16:27, the Philippian jailer draws his sword to kill himself when he thinks the prisoners have escaped. The verb captures the decisive moment of pulling a weapon, whether for attack or self-destruction, and in both biblical cases the action is interrupted by divine intervention.

(2×) Mark 14:47 uses the aorist participle (σπασάμενος, 'having drawn') to describe the quick action of drawing the sword and cutting off the servant's ear—Jesus immediately rebukes this violence. Acts 16:27 uses the present participle (σπασάμενος) for the jailer drawing his sword for suicide before Paul calls out that all prisoners remain. Classical usage emphasizes drawing swords (middle voice commonly used) but extends to drawing or pulling anything with force. DRAWING AND PULLING en: drawing, having-drawn | es: desenvainando, habiendo-sacado | fr: tirer | de: ziehen, σπασάμενος Mark 14:47; Acts 16:27

σπεῖρα G4686 N-NFS (7×)

A Roman military cohort; a detachment of soldiers, typically about 600 men, stationed as a garrison unit.

In its original Greek sense, speira meant anything coiled or twisted — a rope, a serpent's coils, a ball of thread. But in the Roman-era New Testament, it exclusively denotes a 'cohort,' a standard Roman military unit of roughly 600 soldiers. It appears at key moments: the soldiers who mock Jesus after his trial are the 'whole cohort' (Matt 27:27; Mark 15:16), the arrest party in Gethsemane includes a speira with officers (John 18:3, 12), and in Acts it names the Italian Cohort of Cornelius (Acts 10:1) and the Augustan Cohort that escorts Paul (Acts 27:1). Spanish 'cohorte,' French 'cohorte,' and German 'Schar' all reflect the military unit meaning.

cohort, military band (7×) A Roman military cohort or detachment, typically consisting of about 600 soldiers under the command of a tribune (chiliarchos). In the NT it always carries this technical Roman military sense rather than the classical meanings of coils or rope. It appears in the Passion narratives for the soldiers who arrest and mock Jesus (Matt 27:27; Mark 15:16; John 18:3, 12) and in Acts for named garrison units: the 'Italian Cohort' of Cornelius at Caesarea (Acts 10:1) and the 'Augustan Cohort' escorting Paul to Rome (Acts 27:1). Spanish and French both borrow the Latin term directly as 'cohorte,' while German uses the broader 'Schar' (band, troop). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cohort, of-a-cohort | es: cohorte, de-la-cohorte | fr: cohorte | de: Schar, σπείρης, σπεῖραν Matt 27:27; Mark 15:16; John 18:3; John 18:12; Acts 10:1

σπείρω G4687 V-ANA (53×)

To sow seed; used of planting, of what is sown, and of the sower in parable

One of the New Testament's most vivid agricultural verbs, speiro describes the act of scattering seed onto prepared ground. Jesus made it central to his teaching through the Parable of the Sower (Matt 13:3-23), where the word itself appears in active, passive, and participial forms to describe the sower, the act of sowing, and the various fates of what is sown. Paul extends it powerfully in 1 Corinthians 15:42-44 to describe the resurrection body 'sown in corruption, raised in incorruption,' and in Galatians 6:7-8 for sowing to flesh versus Spirit.

1. sow seed, plant (21×) The active sense of scattering or planting seed, covering both literal agriculture (Matt 6:26, 'they neither sow nor reap') and figurative sowing of the gospel or of righteousness. The Spanish 'sembrar' and German 'saeen' faithfully mirror the base agricultural meaning. Jesus' parable begins with this act: 'a sower went out to sow' (Matt 13:3). SOWING AND PLANTING

en: I-sowed, did-you-sow, sowed | es: sembramos, sembrar, sembraste | fr: semer | de: saeen, sät Matt 6:26; Matt 13:3; Matt 13:4; Matt 13:25; Matt 13:27

2. be sown, what is sown (17×) The passive voice indicating what has been sown or planted, prominent in Jesus' interpretation of the parable where 'what was sown on rocky ground' represents a type of hearer (Matt 13:20). Paul's resurrection discourse in 1 Corinthians 15:42-44 uses this form repeatedly: 'it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption.' The Spanish passive 'es sembrado/a' precisely captures this grammatical shift. SOWING AND PLANTING

en: being-sown, having-been-sown, is-sown | es: es-sembrada, es-sembrado, se-siembra | fr: semer | de: saeen, sät Matt 13:19; Matt 13:20; Matt 13:22; Matt 13:23

3. the sower (substantival) (15×) The participial form used as a substantive noun meaning 'the sower,' a figure who becomes almost a title in Jesus' parables. In Matthew 13:3 the sower goes out, and in 13:37 Jesus identifies the sower as 'the Son of Man.' The consistent rendering across languages (Spanish 'que siembra,' English 'sower') shows how naturally the participle became a character designation. SOWING AND PLANTING

en: having-sown, one-sowing, sower | es: que-la-sembró, que-sembró, que-siembra | fr: semer | de: saeen, sät Matt 13:3; Matt 13:18; Matt 13:24; Matt 13:37; Matt 13:39

σπεκουλάτωρ G4688 N-AMS (1×)

A Roman soldier assigned to carry out executions, executioner

This Latin loanword originally meant 'scout' but in Imperial usage designated a special soldier from the headquarters staff responsible for executing prisoners. Mark's vivid account of John the Baptist's beheading employs this technical military term for the soldier Herod dispatched to the prison. The term appears in Greek texts as a transliteration of Latin speculator, reflecting Roman military administrative vocabulary. Translations consistently render this as 'executioner' (English, Spanish verdugo, German Henker), recognizing the specialized role rather than the etymological 'scout' meaning.

(1×) A member of the Roman military headquarters staff whose duties included carrying out capital sentences. In Mark 6:27, Herod sends such a soldier to behead John the Baptist in prison. The technical nature of this borrowed Latin term reflects the Roman administrative machinery of death that pervades the Gospel narratives, from John's execution to Jesus' crucifixion by Roman soldiers. MILITARY OFFICERS

en: executioner | es: verdugo | fr: spéculateur | de: Henker Mark 6:27

σπένδω G4689 V-PIM/P-1S (2×)

To be poured out as a drink offering; to sacrifice oneself completely in service

Σπένδω means to pour out a drink offering (libation), a ritual act in ancient worship where wine was poured on an altar or ground as an offering to God. Paul uses this imagery metaphorically to describe his own life and ministry as being poured out like a sacrificial libation. In Philippians 2:17, he expresses readiness to be poured out as a drink offering accompanying the Philippians' faith. In 2 Timothy 4:6, sensing his approaching death, Paul declares 'I am already being poured out'—his life is the final libation of his ministry. The imagery combines sacrifice, completion, and costly devotion.

(2×) Both occurrences use the present passive form (σπένδομαι, 'I am being poured out'), suggesting ongoing process rather than sudden event. Philippians 2:17 presents the possibility hypothetically but willingly; 2 Timothy 4:6 declares it as current reality with Paul's execution imminent. Ancient libations were poured before drinking, on altars, or on the ground as acts of worship and covenant. Paul transforms this ritual into a metaphor for martyrdom and ministerial completion. POURING AND SHEDDING en: I-am-poured-out, am-being-poured-out | es: soy-derramado | fr: σπένδομαι | de: ausgegossen-werden Phil 2:17; 2Tim 4:6

σπέρμ-α G4690 N-NNS (43×)

Seed; offspring or descendants (esp. Abraham's seed); literal agricultural seeds in botanical or theological contrast.

In the New Testament, this word overwhelmingly denotes human offspring or descendants rather than literal grain. The theological weight falls on 'the seed of Abraham' – a phrase that Paul radically reinterprets in Galatians 3:16 by insisting the singular 'seed' points to Christ, not to many descendants. Spanish distinguishes 'descendencia' (lineage) from 'simiente/semilla' (botanical seed), neatly mirroring the two senses. French uses 'semence' for both, while German 'Same' similarly covers the range. The parable of the sower (Matt 13:24-38) bridges both senses: literal seeds become metaphors for the kingdom. In its literal botanical use (1 Cor 15:38; Mark 4:31), the word retains its agricultural concreteness.

1. seed, offspring, descendant(s) (39×) Offspring, descendants, or posterity – the dominant NT sense. Central to Abrahamic covenant theology: 'your seed' (John 8:33; Rom 9:7-8; Gal 3:29) and the Davidic line (Rom 1:3; 2 Tim 2:8). Spanish 'descendencia' and 'simiente' both capture the progeny meaning. Paul's singular/plural argument in Galatians 3:16 turns entirely on this word. Also used in the parable of the wheat and tares (Matt 13:24, 37-38) where seed = people sown in the world. SEED AND OFFSPRING
en: offspring, seed | es: descendencia, simiente | fr: semence | de: Same Matt 13:24; Matt 13:27; Matt 13:37; Matt 13:38; Matt 22:24

2. seeds (literal, plural agricultural) (4×) Literal, physical seeds in agricultural or botanical contexts. The mustard seed (Matt 13:32; Mark 4:31) is the classic example – the smallest of seeds growing into a great plant. Paul uses the plural 'seeds' (spermasin) in 1 Cor 15:38 for different kinds of grain, and pointedly contrasts plural 'seeds' with singular 'seed' in Gal 3:16. Spanish 'semillas' and English 'seeds' mark the concrete, botanical referent. SEED AND OFFSPRING
en: seeds | es: descendencias, semillas | fr: semence | de: Same Matt 13:32; Mark 4:31; 1Cor 15:38; Gal 3:16

σπερμο-λόγος G4691 Adj-NMS (1×)
An idle babbler who picks up scraps of knowledge without understanding; a gossip Literally meaning 'seed-picker,' this contemptuous term was used of birds pecking at scraps and extended metaphorically to people who gathered bits of knowledge or gossip without real understanding. The Epicurean and Stoic philosophers in Athens hurled this insult at Paul when he preached about Jesus and the resurrection. Classical sources show it denoted pretentious dabblers who retailed half-understood ideas. The French translation captures the literal etymology (semeur-de-paroles), while English 'babbler' and Spanish charlatán convey the contempt.

(1×) A contemptuous epithet for someone who picks up and retails scraps of learning without genuine understanding, like a bird pecking seeds. In Acts 17:18, Athens' philosophers dismiss Paul with this insult before bringing him to the Areopagus, ironically revealing their own superficiality in the face of Paul's sophisticated theological argument. The term captures the intellectual elitism of Greek philosophical culture and its dismissive attitude toward foreign teachers. IDLE TALK BOASTING en: babbler | es: charlatán | fr: semeur-de-paroles | de: σπερμολόγος Acts 17:18

σπεύδω G4692 V-IIA-3S (6×)
speudo – to hurry, hasten, move with urgency or eager speed
The verb speudo expresses urgent, eager movement – hurrying toward a person, place, or action. Its New Testament occurrences are vivid and concrete: the shepherds hurried to Bethlehem to find the newborn Christ (Luke 2:16), Jesus commanded Zacchaeus to come down quickly from the sycamore tree (Luke 19:5), and Zacchaeus hurried down joyfully (Luke 19:6). Paul hastened to reach Jerusalem by Pentecost (Acts 20:16), and the Lord told Paul to hurry out of Jerusalem (Acts 22:18). In 2 Peter 3:12, believers are said to be 'hastening' the coming day of God. Spanish apresurarse and German eilen capture the urgency and intentionality well.

hurry, hasten, make speed (6×) To hurry, hasten, or move with eager speed toward a destination or action, conveying both physical rapidity and intentional urgency. The shepherds hurried to Bethlehem (Luke 2:16), Zacchaeus hurried down from his tree at Jesus' command (Luke 19:5-6), Paul hastened toward Jerusalem for Pentecost (Acts 20:16), and the Lord urged Paul to leave Jerusalem quickly (Acts 22:18). In 2 Peter 3:12, the same verb takes on an eschatological dimension as believers 'hasten' the day of God. Spanish apresurarse and French se hater both capture the eager-urgency nuance across all six occurrences. HASTE AND URGENCY
en: Hurry, hastening, having-hurried | es: Date-prisa, apresurando, apresurándose | fr: se-hâter | de: eilen, Σπεῦσον, σπεύσαντες Luke 2:16; Luke 19:5; Luke 19:6; Acts 20:16; Acts 22:18

σπήλαιον G4693 N-ANP (6×)
spelaion – a cave or den; a natural rock cavity used as shelter, hideout, or burial place
The neuter noun spelaion denotes a cave, grotto, or den – a natural or rock-hewn hollow space. In the Synoptic Gospels it appears in Jesus' quotation of Jeremiah 7:11 when he cleanses the temple: 'you have made it a den of robbers' (Matt 21:13; Mark 11:17; Luke 19:46), where the cave imagery evokes a bandit hideout. John uses it for the cave-tomb of Lazarus (John 11:38), and Hebrews 11:38 describes the faithful who wandered in caves and holes of the earth. Revelation 6:15 pictures the powerful hiding in caves from divine wrath. Spanish cueva, French caverne, and German Hohle all map cleanly to this concrete spatial concept.

cave, den (6×) A cave, den, or natural rock-hewn cavity used for shelter, concealment, or burial. The Synoptic temple-cleansing quotation of Jeremiah 7:11 – 'den of robbers' (Matt 21:13; Mark 11:17; Luke 19:46) – evokes a bandit's hideout, while John 11:38 uses it for Lazarus's cave-tomb, Hebrews 11:38 for the refuges of persecuted saints, and Revelation 6:15 for the hiding places of the fearful on the day of wrath. Spanish cueva, French caverne, and German Hohle all converge on the same concrete sense of a rock-enclosed hollow space, with no semantic subdivision needed. HOLES AND OPENINGS en: a-cave, a-den, caves | es: cueva, cuevas | fr: caverne | de: Hoehlen, σπήλαιον Matt 21:13; Mark 11:17; Luke 19:46; John 11:38; Heb 11:38

σπῐλάς G4694 N-NFP (1×)
Hidden underwater rocks or reefs dangerous to ships; metaphorically, concealed spiritual dangers Greek maritime vocabulary distinguished between visible rocks and these treacherous hidden reefs lurking beneath the surface, over which waves dash. Classical texts frequently warn of these shipwreck hazards. Jude employs this vivid nautical image to describe false teachers who infiltrate Christian communities—outwardly participating in fellowship meals while secretly endangering the faithful. The translations uniformly preserve the reef imagery (hidden-reefs, escollos, écueils), recognizing the metaphor's power.

(1×) Submerged rocks or reefs hidden beneath the water's surface, posing unseen danger to ships. In Jude 12, this maritime hazard becomes a powerful metaphor for false teachers who pose as genuine believers at fellowship meals ('love feasts') while actually threatening the community's spiritual safety. The image suggests danger that appears benign on the surface but harbors destructive potential beneath, like rocks concealed by waves. ROCK AND CLIFF en: hidden-reefs | es: escollos | fr: écueils; | de: Klippen Jude 1:12

σπῐλ-όω G4695 V-PPA-NFS (2×)
To stain, defile, soil; to mark or spot with impurity Σπιλόω means to stain, soil, or defile something, rendering it spotted or impure. Both New Testament uses are metaphorical, referring to moral and spiritual defilement rather than physical staining. James describes the tongue as the member that 'stains the whole body' (James 3:6), spreading corruption throughout the person. Jude warns about those who defile even the clothing (likely symbolic of one's moral state or testimony) while showing false mercy. The verb evokes the imagery of unblemished sacrifices required in Old Testament worship—anything spotted or stained was unacceptable. Christians are called to keep themselves unstained from the world.

(2×) James 3:6 uses the present participle (σπιλοῦσα, 'staining') to describe the tongue's ongoing corrupting influence on the whole body, like a spreading stain. Jude 1:23 warns about garments 'stained' (ἐσπιλωμένον, perfect passive participle) by the flesh—clothing already defiled. Both emphasize moral contamination. Classical uses include literal staining and marking (including medical marking of skin conditions), but biblical usage is primarily metaphorical for moral defilement. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: stained, staining | es: manchada, que-mancha | fr: souillé, σπιλοῦσα | de: beflecken, beflleckte Jas 3:6; Jude 1:23

σπίλος G4696 N-NMP (2×)

Spot, stain, blemish; a mark of impurity or defect, literal or moral Σπίλος refers to a spot, stain, blemish, or defect—originally physical but extended metaphorically to moral and spiritual imperfection. In Ephesians, Paul describes Christ's goal for the church: to present her without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, holy and blameless. In 2 Peter, false teachers are called 'spots and blemishes,' defiling the Christian community they infiltrate. The imagery draws on Old Testament purity laws requiring unblemished sacrifices and the prophetic vision of God's people as a pure bride. These moral 'spots' mar the beauty and holiness God intends for his people.

(2×) Ephesians 5:27 envisions the church glorified, without spot (σπίλον) or wrinkle—absolutely pure and beautiful. 2 Peter 2:13 calls false teachers 'spots and blemishes' (σπίλοι), pollutants within the community of faith. The same word describes Christ's goal for us and what we must avoid becoming. Classical usage includes physical spots or flecks (on the moon, for instance) and metaphorically stains of vice or impurity, as in Stoic moral philosophy. BRIGHT SKIN SPOT

en: spot, stains | es: mancha, manchas | fr: σπίλοι, σπίλον | de: Flecken Eph 5:27; 2Pet 2:13

σπλαγχν-ίζω G4697 V-APP-NMS (12×)

splanchnizomai – to be moved with deep compassion, to feel visceral pity; gut-level mercy prompting action

The deponent verb splanchnizomai ('to be moved with compassion') derives from splanchna ('entrails, bowels'), locating its emotional register in the gut rather than the head. In the New Testament it is reserved almost exclusively for Jesus and for characters in his parables who mirror divine mercy. Jesus is 'moved with compassion' at the sight of crowds like sheep without a shepherd (Matt 9:36), the hungry multitudes (Matt 14:14; 15:32; Mark 6:34; 8:2), the blind men at Jericho (Matt 20:34), and a leper (Mark 1:41). In the parables, the forgiving king (Matt 18:27), the good Samaritan (Luke 10:33), and the waiting father of the prodigal son (Luke 15:20) all experience this same visceral response. It is compassion that moves to act, never mere sentiment.

to be moved with compassion, to have pity (12×) To feel deep, visceral compassion that compels merciful action – used of Jesus seeing shepherd-less crowds (Matt 9:36), the hungry multitudes (Matt 14:14; Mark 8:2), the sick (Matt 20:34), and in parables of the forgiving king (Matt 18:27), the good Samaritan (Luke 10:33), and the prodigal's father (Luke 15:20). Spanish compadecerse, French avoir compassion, and German innerlich bewegt confirm one unified sense. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: I-have-compassion, being-moved-with-compassion, had-compassion | es: Tengo-compasión, compadecido, compadeciéndose | fr: avoir-compassion | de: hat-Mitleid, innerlich-bewegt-sein Matt 9:36; Matt 14:14; Matt 15:32; Matt 18:27; Matt 20:34

σπλάγχνον G4698 N-NNP (11×)

Inward parts, entrails; figuratively, deep affection, tender compassion, heartfelt mercy

In classical Greek this word denoted the visceral organs—heart, lungs, liver, kidneys—the parts reserved for sacrificers at the beginning of a feast. By the New Testament era it had become the premier expression for the deepest seat of human emotion, much as English speakers once located feeling in the 'bowels.' Paul writes of longing for the Philippians 'with the splanchna of Christ Jesus' (Phil 1:8), and the canticle of Zechariah celebrates God's 'splanchna of mercy' (Luke 1:78). Spanish 'entranas' and French 'entrailles' preserve this striking body-to-emotion transfer. Only once does the literal anatomical sense surface: in the grim account of Judas's death, where his body burst open and 'all his splanchna poured out' (Acts 1:18).

1. tender affection, compassion (10×) Deep tender affection or compassion, understood as arising from the innermost parts of one's being. This metaphorical extension dominates the NT: Paul appeals to the Philippians 'by any splanchna and compassion' (Phil 2:1), confesses longing 'with the splanchna of Christ Jesus' (Phil 1:8), and tells the Corinthians that his own splanchna are wide open to them (2 Cor 6:12). Philemon's splanchna are refreshed by love (Phlm 1:7, 20). Spanish 'entranas' and German 'Inneres' both capture the visceral-to-emotional transfer that makes this word so vivid. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: affections, compassion, compassions | es: entrañas | fr: entrailles | de: Inneres, σπλάγχνα Luke 1:78; 2Cor 6:12; 2Cor 7:15; Phil 1:8; Phil 2:1

2. innards, intestines (literal) (1×) The literal internal organs or entrails of the body. This older, anatomical meaning appears only in Acts 1:18, where Judas fell headlong, his body burst open, and all his splanchna spilled out. The gruesome physicality of this sole literal usage stands in stark contrast to the tender metaphorical sense that pervades the epistles. French 'entrailles' and Spanish 'entranas' are ambiguous in the same way as the Greek, covering both viscera and deep feeling. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: innards | es: entrañas | fr: entrailles | de: σπλάγχνα Acts 1:18

σπόγγος G4699 N-AMS (3×)

a sponge; a porous, absorbent marine organism used for cleaning or soaking up liquids

The ordinary Greek word for sponge—a porous sea creature harvested and used for cleaning, bathing, and other tasks requiring absorption. In the NT it appears three times, all at the crucifixion: soldiers fill a sponge with sour wine and lift it on a stick to Jesus' lips (Matt 27:48, Mark 15:36, John 19:29). This humble household item becomes the instrument of a small mercy—or mockery—in Christ's final moments. Classical sources mention sponges for table-cleaning, bathing, and shoe-polishing, showing their everyday utility.

(3×) The translations are identical across all languages: English 'sponge', Spanish 'esponja', French 'éponge', German 'Schwamm'. This reflects a concrete, universally recognized object. The three Gospel accounts agree on this detail: a sponge soaked in vinegar, offered to the dying Christ, fulfilling Psalm 69:21 while providing temporary relief or perhaps one last indignity at Golgotha. WASHING AND BATHING en: a-sponge | es: esponja | fr: éponge | de: Schwamm, σπόγγον Matt 27:48; Mark 15:36; John 19:29

σποδός G4700 N-DFS (3×)

ashes; the powdery residue left after burning, often used in rituals of mourning or purification

The Greek term for ashes—what remains after fire has consumed wood or other combustibles. In the NT it appears in Jesus' reproach against Galilean cities (Matt 11:21, Luke 10:13), saying Tyre and Sidon would have repented 'in sackcloth and ashes,' and in Hebrews 9:13 regarding the ritual use of heifer ashes for purification. Ashes symbolize mourning, repentance, and human frailty ('dust to dust'). Sprinkling ashes on one's head or sitting in ashes expressed grief and contrition, making visible an inner posture of humility before God.

(3×) Uniform across languages: English 'ashes', Spanish 'ceniza', French 'cendre', German 'Asche'. The dual NT usage shows both metaphorical (repentance in sackcloth and ashes) and ceremonial (heifer ashes for purification) functions. Jesus' counterfactual statement assumes His hearers know this penitential practice—ashes as the physical expression of brokenness and the recognition of mortality. ASHES COMBUSTION RESIDUE

en: ashes | es: ceniza | fr: cendre | de: Asche, σποδῷ Matt 11:21; Luke 10:13; Heb 9:13

σπορ-ά G4701 N-GFS (1×)

Seed for sowing; metaphorically, spiritual origin or source of new life

The Greek term encompasses both the act of sowing and the seed itself, with extended meanings of offspring and origin. Classical usage speaks of 'procreation' and 'birth lineage.' Peter deploys this agricultural and generative imagery to describe spiritual rebirth—believers have been born again through imperishable seed, the living word of God. While the term could mean literal seed-time or planted fields, Peter's context demands the metaphorical sense of life-generating source. The translations vary between 'seed' (English, Spanish simiente) and 'sowing' (German Saat), both capturing the generative concept.

(1×) The seed or generative source from which new life springs, used metaphorically for spiritual rebirth. In 1 Peter 1:23, believers are described as born again not from perishable but imperishable seed—God's living and enduring word. This echoes Jesus' parables where seed represents the word, and evokes the creative power of God's word in Genesis. The biological imagery emphasizes both the divine origin and enduring nature of spiritual regeneration. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: seed | es: simiente | fr: σπορᾶς | de: Saat 1Pet 1:23

σπόρῐμος G4702 Adj-GNP (3×)

sown fields, grain fields; land suitable for planting or currently planted with grain crops

An adjective meaning 'sown' or 'fit for sowing,' used substantively in the plural to mean grain fields or cultivated farmland. All three NT uses appear in the Sabbath controversy: Jesus' disciples pluck grain while walking through the 'sown fields' (Matt 12:1, Mark 2:23, Luke 6:1). The Pharisees object, sparking Jesus' defense using David's example and the principle that human need and mercy outweigh ritual restrictions. These are working fields, planted and yielding crops, the economic backbone of agricultural society.

(3×) The translations vary slightly but converge on cultivated fields: English 'grainfields', Spanish 'sembrados' (sown lands), French 'champ-de-blé' (wheat field), German 'Saatfeld' (seed field). The Synoptic unanimity on this setting shows an authentic memory: Jesus and His disciples walking through standing grain on Sabbath, triggering a conflict that reveals His authority over Sabbath law itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: grainfields | es: sembrados | fr: champ-de-blé | de: Saatfeld, σπορίμων Matt 12:1; Mark 2:23; Luke 6:1

σπόρος G4703 N-NMS (6×)

sporos – seed; what is sown, whether literal grain or figuratively the word of God

Derived from speiro ('to sow'), sporos denotes seed in its agricultural sense – the grain cast upon the ground by a farmer. In the Synoptic parables it carries both literal and figurative weight: the sower goes out to sow his seed (Luke 8:5), and Jesus explains that 'the seed is the word of God' (Luke 8:11). Paul extends the metaphor in 2 Corinthians 9:10, where God supplies 'seed for the sower' as a figure of generous provision. Spanish semilla, French semence, and German Saat all point consistently to the agricultural sense of 'that which is planted,' with the figurative extension to divine word and provision arising naturally from the parabolic context.

(6×) Seed intended for sowing – the grain or kernel that a farmer scatters on the ground, used both literally of agricultural practice and figuratively of God's word and providential supply. In Mark 4:26-27, a man casts sporos upon the earth and sleeps while it grows mysteriously; in Luke 8:11, Jesus identifies the seed as the word of God. Paul draws on the same imagery in 2 Cor 9:10 ('he who supplies seed to the sower'). Spanish semilla and French semence/semailles converge on the sowing-seed concept, while the domain assignment to PEOPLE_KINSHIP reflects the metaphorical extension to spiritual offspring and fruitfulness inherent in the parabolic tradition. SEED AND OFFSPRING

en: seed | es: semilla | fr: semailles, semence | de: Saat, σπόρον, σπόρος Mark 4:26; Mark 4:27; Luke 8:5; Luke 8:11; 2Cor 9:10

σπουδάζω G4704 V-AMA-2S (11×)

Be diligent, make every effort — to pursue a goal with earnest zeal, urgency, and persistent exertion

The verb σπουδάζω (spoudazō) conveys eager, earnest striving — not grudging duty but wholehearted urgency. Paul remembers being 'eager' to help the poor (Gal 2:10) and urges the Ephesians to be 'diligent to keep the unity of the Spirit' (Eph 4:3). Timothy is told to 'be diligent to present yourself approved to God' (2 Tim 2:15) and to come quickly (2 Tim 4:9). Peter uses it three times: 'Make every effort to confirm your calling' (2 Pet 1:10), to ensure remembrance (2 Pet 1:15), and to 'be found by him in peace' (2 Pet 3:14). Hebrews 4:11 exhorts believers to 'strive to enter that rest.' Spanish 'esforzarse' reflects the flavor of exertion.

be diligent, make every effort (11×) To be diligent, make every effort, or hasten eagerly toward a goal — combining internal zeal with outward urgency. Used for moral-spiritual striving (Eph 4:3, maintaining unity; 2 Tim 2:15, presenting oneself approved; 2 Pet 1:10, confirming one's calling; 2 Pet 3:14, being found in peace; Heb 4:11, entering God's rest), for charitable eagerness (Gal 2:10, remembering the poor; 1 Thess 2:17, longing to see believers), and for practical haste (2 Tim 4:9, 21; Tit 3:12, coming quickly). Peter's triple use in 2 Peter (1:10, 15; 3:14) makes diligent effort a hallmark of mature Christian life. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY en: I-was-eager, I-will-be-diligent, be-diligent | es: Esforcémonos, Esfuérzate, apresúrate | fr: sich-befleissigen | de: sich-befleissigen Gal 2:10; Eph 4:3; 1Thess 2:17; 2Tim 2:15; 2Tim 4:9

σπουδ-αῖος G4705 Adj-AMS (3×)

earnest, zealous, diligent; showing eagerness and serious commitment in pursuing something

An adjective describing someone who is eager, earnest, and diligent—not casual or halfhearted but seriously committed. All three NT uses come from 2 Corinthians 8, where Paul describes Titus and another brother's earnest concern for the Corinthians and their giving (8:17, 22 twice). The word carries overtones of speed and energy ('in haste') but primarily denotes moral seriousness and zeal. Classical Greek uses it of good citizens, skilled craftsmen, and virtuous individuals—those who excel because they care deeply and act accordingly.

(3×) Translations cluster around 'earnest/zealous/diligent': English 'earnest, more eager', Spanish 'diligente, más diligente', French 'zélé', German 'eifrig'. The comparative forms ('more earnest,' 'más diligente') reflect Paul's rhetoric in 2 Cor 8:22, where he commends one brother as 'more earnest' still. This is not mere activity but heartfelt commitment—the kind of zeal that proves genuine concern for others' spiritual welfare. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY

en: earnest, more-eager, more-earnest | es: diligente, más-diligente | fr: zélé | de: eifrig 2Cor 8:17; 2Cor 8:22

σπουδ-αιότης G4706

earnestness, seriousness, excellence; the quality of being zealous, diligent, or morally good

This abstract noun denotes the quality of earnestness or seriousness in character, derived from σπουδή (haste, zeal). In moral contexts it meant goodness or excellence of character, the kind of seriousness that marked trustworthy people. The Septuagint used it to describe ethical qualities, while New Testament writers employed it for the earnest zeal that should characterize Christian service. The word captured both intensity of effort and moral quality—not just working hard, but working with serious purpose and ethical integrity. It stood opposed to carelessness, frivolity, or moral compromise.

σπουδ-αῖος G4707

earnest, zealous, excellent, good; describing serious effort, moral quality, or superiority in kind

This adjective, built from σπουδή (zeal, haste), describes people or things marked by earnestness, diligence, or excellence. It could mean simply 'quick' or 'hasty,' but more commonly indicated serious, zealous engagement with a task—the opposite of lazy or careless. In moral contexts it meant 'good' or 'excellent,' distinguishing virtuous from wicked people. A σπουδαῖος musician was an excellent one, not merely an enthusiastic amateur. The word captured Greek admiration for focused energy applied with skill and moral purpose. New Testament writers used it for the earnest zeal expected in Christian living and service.

σπουδ-αιότης G4708 Adv-C (1×)

More eagerly, with greater earnestness or diligence (comparative adverb)

This comparative form intensifies the urgency and earnestness of action beyond ordinary eagerness. Related to Greek terms for seriousness and goodness of character, it suggests heightened zeal and careful attention. Paul uses it to explain his urgent desire to send Epaphroditus back to Philippi—not merely eagerly, but even more eagerly than might be expected. The comparative degree emphasizes Paul's pastoral sensitivity to the Philippians' anxiety about their sick messenger.

(1×) With increased or intensified eagerness, earnestness, and diligence beyond the ordinary. In Philippians 2:28, Paul explains his urgency in sending Epaphroditus home using this comparative adverb—he is sending him 'more eagerly' precisely so the Philippians' anxiety might be relieved. The comparative form highlights Paul's pastoral thoughtfulness and his recognition of the emotional dynamics within the community, going beyond mere duty to heightened care. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY

en: more-eagerly | es: más-diligentemente | fr: σπουδαιοτέρως | de: eifriger Phil 2:28

σπουδ-αῖος G4709 Adv (3×)

earnestly, diligently, zealously; with eagerness and serious effort, not carelessly

The adverbial form of 'earnest' (G4705), meaning diligently, eagerly, with serious effort. It appears three times: Jewish elders plead 'earnestly' with Jesus for the centurion (Luke 7:4), Onesiphorus 'diligently' searched for Paul in Rome (2 Tim 1:17), and Paul urges Titus to 'diligently' help Zenas and Apollos (Titus 3:13). Each context highlights sustained, purposeful effort—not casual attempts but persistent action driven by genuine concern. Classical usage includes the sense of haste, but the moral dimension of seriousness and care predominates.

(3×) Languages converge: English 'diligently, earnestly', Spanish 'diligentemente', French 'avec empressement' (with eagerness), German 'eifrig' (zealously). The three NT contexts share the theme of going beyond minimal effort: elders begging urgently, Onesiphorus searching persistently, Paul commissioning thorough support. This is the adverb of whole-hearted action, where earnestness shows itself in deeds. ACCURACY AND PRECISION

en: diligently, earnestly | es: diligentemente | fr: avec-empressement | de: eifrig, σπουδαίως Luke 7:4; 2Tim 1:17; Titus 3:13

σπουδή G4710 N-DFS (12×)

Diligence, earnest zeal, or eager effort; also haste or urgency in action.

Derived from the verb speudo ('to hasten'), this noun oscillates between inner disposition and outward urgency. In most New Testament occurrences it describes the moral quality of diligence and earnest zeal: Paul lists it among spiritual virtues (Rom 12:8, 11), and the Corinthians' spoude in response to Paul's letter proves their innocence (2 Cor 7:11–12). Spanish diligencia and French empressement both foreground the eager, wholehearted quality. In two vivid narrative passages, however, the older classical sense of physical haste surfaces: Salome rushes back 'with haste' to Herod (Mark 6:25), and Mary hurries to Elizabeth 'with haste' through the hill country (Luke 1:39). German Eifer ('zeal') serves both senses, while Spanish prisa ('hurry') is reserved for the haste meaning.

1. diligence (10×) Diligence, earnestness, or eager zeal — an inner disposition of wholehearted, energetic commitment. Paul commends it as a virtue alongside love and faith (Rom 12:8, 11; 2 Cor 8:7–8), praises the Corinthians' earnest concern (2 Cor 7:11–12), and urges believers to 'make every effort' (2 Pet 1:5; Jude 1:3). Spanish diligencia and French empressement highlight the proactive, self-motivated quality. Heb 6:11 ties it to the 'full assurance of hope.' ZEAL AND JEALOUSY

en: diligence, eagerness, earnestness | es: diligencia | fr: diligence, empressement | de: Eifer Rom 12:8; Rom 12:11; 2Cor 7:11; 2Cor 7:12; 2Cor 8:7

2. haste (2×) Haste or urgency, describing swift physical movement driven by pressing circumstances. Salome returns to Herod 'with haste' after requesting John's head (Mark 6:25), and Mary travels 'with haste' to visit Elizabeth upon hearing the angel's announcement (Luke 1:39). Spanish prisa ('hurry') and the prepositional phrase meta spoudes distinguish this temporal-kinetic sense from the dispositional meaning of diligence. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: haste | es: prisa | fr: empressement | de: Eifer, σπουδῆς Mark 6:25; Luke 1:39

σπῦρίς G4711 N-AFP (5×)

A large basket or hamper; used for carrying food or lowering a person, distinct from the smaller kophinos.

A large woven basket, notably distinguished in the Gospels from the smaller kophinos (G2894). When Jesus fed the four thousand, the leftovers filled seven spurides — large hampers (Matt 15:37; Mark 8:8) — and Jesus later reminds the disciples of this detail (Matt 16:10; Mark 8:20). The same word describes the basket used to lower Paul over the Damascus city wall (Acts 9:25), indicating a container large enough to hold a grown man. The Spanish translations helpfully alternate between canasta and cesta, both denoting sizable carrying vessels, while French offers both corbeille and panier.

(5×) A large basket or hamper (spuris), distinctly bigger than the kophinos used in the feeding of the five thousand. All five NT occurrences cluster around two episodes: the feeding of the four thousand, where seven spurides of leftovers were collected (Matt 15:37; Mark 8:8; recalled in Matt 16:10; Mark 8:20), and Paul's dramatic escape from Damascus in a basket lowered over the wall (Acts 9:25). The basket's size — large enough to transport a person — is the defining characteristic. Spanish canasta/cesta, French corbeille/panier, and German Korb all denote capacious containers, confirming the sense of a substantial carrying vessel rather than a small hand-basket. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: basket, baskets, of-baskets | es: canasta, canastas, cestas | fr: corbeille, panier | de: Korb, σπυρίδας, σπυρίδι Matt 15:37; Matt 16:10; Mark 8:8; Mark 8:20; Acts 9:25

στάδιος G4712 N-AMP (7×)

A stadion: a unit of distance (~185m / 607ft), or the racecourse/arena where athletic contests were held.

Stadion derives from the verb histemi ('to stand, set') and originally referred to a fixed standard of length — about 185 meters. In the Gospels and Revelation it appears as a straightforward distance marker: the disciples row twenty-five or thirty stadia across the sea (John 6:19), and Emmaus lies sixty stadia from Jerusalem (Luke 24:13). But in 1 Corinthians 9:24 Paul shifts to the word's concrete architectural referent — the stadium or racecourse where runners compete for a prize. Spanish 'estadio' and German 'Stadien' carry both meanings, while the context in each passage disambiguates distance from arena.

1. (6×) A unit of linear distance equal to roughly 185 meters (about one-eighth of a Roman mile), used to measure journeys on land or sea. The Gospels employ it for geographic specificity: Bethany is fifteen stadia from Jerusalem (John 11:18), Emmaus sixty stadia away (Luke 24:13). In Revelation 14:20, the apocalyptic bloodflow extends 1,600 stadia — a staggering hyperbole of distance. Spanish 'estadios' and French 'stade' function identically as units of measurement. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: stadia | es: estadios | fr: stade | de: Stadien, σταδίους Matt 14:24; Luke 24:13; John 6:19; John 11:18; Rev 14:20

2. (1×) The physical racecourse or arena (typically one stadion in length) where foot races and other athletic contests were held. Paul uses the concrete image in 1 Cor 9:24: 'those who run in a stadium all run, but one receives the prize.' Here the word shifts from abstract measurement to the built environment of competition, inviting readers to picture the packed stands and the single-lane race of the ancient Greek games. STRUGGLE AND CONTEST

en: a-stadium | es: estadio | fr: stade | de: Stadien 1Cor 9:24

στάμν-ος G4713 N-NFS (1×)

An earthen jar or vessel; specifically, the golden jar containing manna in the tabernacle

Greek domestic life employed various sized ceramic jars for storing wine, oil, money, and other valuables. Classical sources describe jars used for racking wine, holding ballots, and keeping precious contents. The Septuagint and Hebrews specifically mention a golden jar (not common earthenware) that held the manna in the ark of the covenant. This sacred vessel preserved the miraculous bread from the wilderness as a perpetual memorial of God's provision. The term itself simply means jar or bottle, but context determines whether common pottery or precious container.

(1×) A jar or vessel, particularly the golden jar described in Hebrews 9:4 as containing the manna within the ark of the covenant. While the Greek term could denote common earthenware containers for wine or oil, the biblical context specifies a precious golden vessel preserving the wilderness manna as a memorial. This sacred jar testified to God's supernatural provision during Israel's desert wanderings, linking past miracle to present covenant reality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: jar | es: vasija | fr: Krug | de: Krug Heb 9:4

στάσις G4714 N-GFS (9×)

A standing or fixed position; by extension, a factional dispute, dissension, or violent uprising against authority.

Rooted in the verb histemi ('to stand'), stasis carries the concrete sense of a standing or established position, as in Hebrews 9:8 where the first tabernacle still 'has standing.' Far more often in the New Testament, however, it describes conflict: heated disputes within religious communities (Acts 15:2, 23:7) and violent insurrections against civil order, as when Barabbas is imprisoned for the stasis in Jerusalem (Luke 23:19, 25). Spanish distinguishes these well – 'disension' for internal disagreement versus 'insurrección' for armed revolt – while French collapses both under 'sédition,' revealing how thin the line between debate and uprising could be in the ancient world.

1. dissension, dispute (4×) Heated disagreement or factional dispute within a group, especially over religious or doctrinal matters. Spanish 'disensión/división' and the pairing with zetesis ('debate') in Acts 15:2 highlight the verbal, argumentative character. In Acts 23:7 the Pharisee-Sadducee clash over resurrection becomes a stasis so fierce the tribune must intervene (Acts 23:10). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: dissension, dissensions | es: disensión, división, sediciones | fr: sédition | de: στάσεις, στάσεως, στάσις Acts 15:2; Acts 23:7; Acts 23:10; Acts 24:5

2. insurrection, riot, uprising (4×) Violent uprising, riot, or insurrection against civil authority. Luke 23:19 and 23:25 use it of the Jerusalem insurrection for which Barabbas was jailed; Mark 15:7 names his fellow insurgents. Spanish 'insurrección' and German 'Aufruhr' capture the physical violence absent from sense 1. Acts 19:40 warns that the Ephesian silversmith riot could be charged as stasis – a serious Roman legal category. REBELLION REVOLT

en: an-insurrection, insurrection, of-riot | es: de-sedición, insurrección | fr: sédition | de: Aufruhr, στάσεως, στάσιν Mark 15:7; Luke 23:19; Luke 23:25; Acts 19:40

3. standing, status (1×) The state of standing, having an established position or recognized status – the most literal meaning derived from histemi. In Hebrews 9:8, the author argues that while the first tabernacle still 'has standing' (echouses stasis), the way into the holiest remains closed. Spanish 'posición' isolates this spatial-legal nuance from the conflict senses. REBELLION REVOLT en: standing | es: posición | fr: sédition | de: Aufruhr Heb 9:8

στᾰτήρ G4715 N-AMS (1×)

A stater, a silver coin worth four drachmas; temple tax payment for two people

Originally denoting a standard weight, the stater became the name for various coins struck in gold, electrum, or silver across the Greek world. The silver stater equaled four drachmas or two didrachmas. In Matthew's account, Jesus directs Peter to find this exact coin in a fish's mouth—sufficient to pay the temple tax for both of them, since the tax was one didrachma per person. This miracle demonstrates Jesus' sovereignty over creation while honoring temple obligations. The coin's precise value makes the miracle specific rather than generic provision.

(1×) A silver coin valued at four drachmas, exactly covering the temple tax (one didrachma per person) for two individuals. In Matthew 17:27, Jesus miraculously provides this specific denomination from a fish's mouth to pay the tax for himself and Peter. The precision of the amount—neither too much nor too little—underscores the miracle's divine orchestration while demonstrating Jesus' willing submission to legitimate religious obligations despite his own authority. SILVER AND MONEY

en: a-stater | es: un-estatér | fr: statère | de: στατῆρα Matt 17:27

σταυρός G4716 N-NMS (27×)

cross — the wooden instrument of Roman crucifixion, and by extension the atoning death of Christ

Stauros originally denoted a simple upright stake or pale, but by the first century it designated the cross as Rome's instrument of execution for slaves, rebels, and the condemned. Its 27 NT occurrences divide between the literal wooden cross on which Jesus died and the metaphorical-theological weight it carries for the early church. In the Passion narratives, Simon of Cyrene is compelled to carry Jesus' stauros (Matt 27:32; Mark 15:21; Luke 23:26), the mocking crowd dares Jesus to come down from it (Matt 27:40, 42; Mark 15:30, 32), and John records that Pilate's inscription hung upon it (John 19:17, 19, 25, 31). Jesus had already transformed the cross into a symbol of radical discipleship: 'whoever does not take up his cross and follow me' (Matt 10:38; 16:24; Mark 8:34; Luke 9:23; 14:27). Paul makes the cross the center of his theology — the 'word of the cross' is foolishness to the perishing but the power of God (1 Cor 1:17-18), and through it God has reconciled all things (Eph 2:16; Col 1:20; 2:14). Spanish 'cruz,' French 'croix,' and German 'Kreuz' all derive from the Latin crux.

cross (27×) The wooden cross as the instrument of Roman execution on which Jesus was crucified. Appears in the Passion narratives as the physical object carried by Simon of Cyrene (Matt 27:32; Mark 15:21; Luke 23:26), on which Jesus hung (John 19:17-19, 25, 31), and from which mockers challenged him to descend (Matt 27:40, 42; Mark 15:30, 32). Metaphorically, Jesus transforms it into a call to radical self-denial and discipleship: 'take up your cross and follow me' (Matt 10:38; 16:24; Mark 8:34; Luke 9:23). Paul makes it the theological center of the gospel — folly to the world, power of God (1 Cor 1:17-18), the means of cosmic reconciliation (Col 1:20; 2:14; Eph 2:16). DEATH AND DYING

en: cross | es: cruz | fr: croix | de: Kreuz Matt 10:38; Matt 16:24; Matt 27:32; Matt 27:40; Matt 27:42

σταυρ-όω G4717 V-AIA-3P (46×)

crucify — to execute by fastening to a cross; figuratively, to put to death the power of sin

Stauroo is the verb that gives Christianity its central symbol. Derived from stauros ('upright stake, cross'), it denotes the Roman method of execution by nailing or binding a condemned person to a wooden frame — a punishment so degrading that Cicero called it the 'most cruel and disgusting penalty.' Its 46 New Testament occurrences cluster around the Passion narratives, where all four Gospels use it of Christ's death (Matt 27:35; Mark 15:24-25; Luke 23:33; John 19:18), and extend into the apostolic preaching where 'Christ crucified' becomes the paradoxical heart of the gospel (1 Cor 1:23; 2:2; Gal 3:1). Paul then develops a bold metaphorical extension: believers have 'crucified the flesh with its passions' (Gal 5:24), and the world is crucified to the apostle through the cross (Gal 6:14).

crucify, fasten to a cross (46×) To execute by nailing or binding to a cross, and by extension, to destroy the power of something through identification with that death. Used literally of the crucifixion of Jesus across all four Passion narratives (Matt 27:22-38; Mark 15:13-27; Luke 23:21-33; John 19:6-23) and in the early kerygma proclaiming 'the crucified Christ' (Acts 2:36; 1 Cor 1:23; 2:2). Paul extends the verb figuratively to the believer's decisive break with the old self — 'those who belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh' (Gal 5:24) — and to the cosmic rupture between the apostle and the world through the cross (Gal 6:14). All 46 occurrences serve this unified field of literal execution and its theological appropriation. KILLING AND REMOVING

en: Crucify, crucified, crucify | es: Crucifica, Crucifícale, crucifica | fr: crucifier | de: kreuzigen, kreuzigt Matt 20:19; Matt 23:34; Matt 26:2; Matt 27:22; Matt 27:23

στᾰφῠλ-ή G4718 N-AFS (3×)

a bunch or cluster of grapes, fresh fruit still on the vine or recently harvested

The Greek word for a bunch of grapes—fruit clustered together on the stem. Jesus uses it in parallel teachings: you cannot gather grapes from thornbushes (Matt 7:16, Luke 6:44), and Revelation 14:18 depicts an angel gathering 'the clusters of grapes of the earth's vine' for the winepress of God's wrath. The image evokes vineyards, harvest, and the fruit that reveals a plant's true nature. Classical Greek distinguishes fresh grapes (σταφυλή) from dried raisins and unripe grapes, emphasizing the ripe, ready-to-harvest state.

(3×) Uniform translations: English 'grapes', Spanish 'uva/uvas', French 'raisin', German 'Trauben'. Jesus' proverbial use (you know a plant by its fruit) assumes grapes grow on vines, not thornbushes—obvious agricultural wisdom becomes spiritual metaphor. Revelation's apocalyptic harvest extends the image: humanity as a vineyard, clusters gathered for divine judgment, the grapes pressed in the winepress of wrath. GRAPE VINTAGE HARVEST

en: grapes | es: uva, uvas | fr: raisin | de: Trauben, σταφυλὰς, σταφυλὴν Matt 7:16; Luke 6:44; Rev 14:18

στάχυς G4719 N-DMS (5×)

An ear or head of grain; the seed-bearing top of a cereal stalk, especially wheat or barley.

The head or ear of grain atop a cereal stalk — the part that contains the edible kernels. All five NT occurrences involve grain fields and agricultural imagery. In the Sabbath controversy, the disciples pluck heads of grain as they walk through the fields (Matt 12:1; Mark 2:23; Luke 6:1). Mark 4:28 uses the word twice in Jesus' parable of the growing seed, tracing the plant's development from blade to ear to full grain — a progression the Spanish espiga and German Ahre capture precisely. The word evokes the agrarian world of first-century Palestine, where ripening grain was a daily sight and a rich source of metaphor.

(5×) The ear or head of grain — the seed-bearing cluster at the top of a cereal stalk such as wheat or barley. The Sabbath-controversy passages (Matt 12:1; Mark 2:23; Luke 6:1) describe disciples plucking these heads of grain to eat, an action permitted by Deuteronomy 23:25 but contested by Pharisees as Sabbath labor. Mark 4:28 traces the agricultural lifecycle from green blade to formed ear (stachys) to ripe grain, using the word twice in a single verse to mark the intermediate growth stage. The multilingual evidence is strikingly consistent: Spanish espiga, French épi, and German Ähre all denote specifically the seed-bearing head, not the stalk or the individual kernel. GRAIN EARS

en: head, heads-of-grain | es: espiga, espigas | fr: épi | de: Aehre, Ähre Matt 12:1; Mark 2:23; Mark 4:28; Luke 6:1

Στάχυς G4720 N-AMS (1×)

Stachys, a Christian in Rome greeted by Paul; name means 'ear of grain'

The name Stachys means 'ear of grain' or 'head of wheat' in Greek, suggesting agricultural imagery. Paul greets this otherwise unknown Roman Christian with the affectionate designation 'my beloved,' indicating close personal relationship despite the distance. Early church tradition offers no further details about Stachys, but Paul's greeting confirms the diverse network of believers in Rome before Paul's arrival. The personal warmth of Paul's greeting suggests more than casual acquaintance.

(1×) A personal name (meaning 'ear of grain') identifying a believer in the Roman church whom Paul calls 'my beloved' in Romans 16:9. Though we know nothing more about him, Paul's affectionate greeting indicates meaningful relationship, possibly from earlier missionary work in the East. Stachys represents the many faithful Christians whose names appear briefly in Scripture yet who formed the living body of Christ across the ancient Mediterranean world. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Stachys | es: a-Stáchyn | fr: Stéphanas | de: Stachys Rom 16:9

στέγ-η G4721 N-AFS (3×)

a roof; the covering or top of a building, providing shelter and enclosure

The Greek term for a roof, the top covering of a house or building. In the NT it appears in statements about unworthiness: the centurion declares himself unworthy that Jesus should come 'under his roof' (Matt 8:8, Luke 7:6), and friends lower a paralytic through a roof to reach Jesus (Mark 2:4). The roof represents the household's boundary and protection; to enter under someone's roof is to enter their domestic space and accept their hospitality. Classical usage includes both the roof structure itself and, by extension, the house or dwelling it covers.

(3×) Simple uniformity: English 'roof', Spanish 'techo', French 'toit', German 'Dach'. The centurion's humility expresses itself spatially: 'I am not worthy that you should enter under my roof'—recognizing a boundary of holiness and status. Mark's account of the paralytic being lowered through the roof shows both ancient architecture (flat, accessible roofs) and desperate faith willing to tear through a housetop to reach Jesus. ROOFTOP HOUSETOP

en: roof | es: techo | fr: toit | de: Dach, στέγγν Matt 8:8; Mark 2:4; Luke 7:6

στέγω G4722 V-PPA-NMS (4×)

To bear up under, endure, put up with; to cover over or contain patiently

From the root stege ('roof, covering'), this verb originally meant to keep water out — to be watertight. That concrete image of covering and containing developed into a powerful metaphor for patient endurance. Paul uses it to describe his willingness to 'endure anything' rather than hinder the gospel (1 Cor 9:12), and in the great love hymn of 1 Corinthians 13:7, love 'bears all things' — stegei panta — covering faults and absorbing hardship. In 1 Thessalonians 3:1 and 3:5, Paul says he 'could bear it no longer,' revealing the verb's emotional intensity: a container finally overflowing.

(4×) To bear, endure, put up with patiently; originally 'to cover so as to keep out,' hence to contain or withstand pressure. Spanish

'soportar' and German 'ertragen' both emphasize the endurance dimension. In 1 Cor 9:12 Paul endures all things for the gospel's sake. In the love chapter (1 Cor 13:7), love 'bears all things' — covering and absorbing what would otherwise break through. In 1 Thess 3:1, 5, the verb expresses reaching a breaking point: 'when we could bear it no longer.' ENDURE TOLERATE en: bearing, bears, we-endure | es: soporta, soportamos, soportando | fr: supporter, στέγοντες, στέγων | de: ertragen 1Cor 9:12; 1Cor 13:7; 1Thess 3:1; 1Thess 3:5

στεῖρα G4723 N-DFS (5×)

Barren, infertile; describing a woman unable to bear children, often contrasted with God's power to give life.

An adjective meaning 'barren' or 'infertile,' applied exclusively to women in the New Testament. It appears in narratives of miraculous reversal: Elizabeth, though barren and advanced in years, conceives John the Baptist (Luke 1:7, 36). Jesus pronounces a paradoxical blessing on the barren in the coming tribulation (Luke 23:29). Paul quotes Isaiah 54:1 in Galatians 4:27, where the barren woman who rejoices prefigures the fruitfulness of the new covenant. Hebrews 11:11 celebrates Sarah receiving power to conceive despite being past age. Every translation — Spanish estéril, French stérile, German unfruchtbar — echoes the Latin sterilis, all tracing back to the same Indo-European root.

(5×) Barren, unable to bear children — used of women whose infertility becomes the stage for divine intervention or theological argument. Elizabeth's barrenness (Luke 1:7, 36) sets up the miraculous birth of John the Baptist; Sarah's barrenness (Heb 11:11) demonstrates the power of faith. Luke 23:29 inverts expectations by calling the barren 'blessed' in view of coming judgment. Galatians 4:27 (quoting Isa 54:1) allegorizes the barren woman as the new covenant community that will surpass the old in fruitfulness. The etymology connects Greek steira to Latin sterilis and Sanskrit staris ('barren cow'), as reflected uniformly in Spanish estéril, French stérile, and German unfruchtbar — all emphasizing the absence of reproductive capacity. BARREN INFERTILE

en: barren | es: estéril, estériles | fr: stérile | de: unfruchtbar, στείρᾳ, στεῖρα Luke 1:7; Luke 1:36; Luke 23:29; Gal 4:27; Heb 11:11

στέλλω G4724 V-PNM (2×)

To withdraw, avoid, shun; to keep away from or draw back from someone or something

Στέλλω in the middle voice (στέλλομαι) means to draw back from, avoid, withdraw from, or shun. Paul uses this verb twice to command avoidance of certain people or behaviors. In 2 Corinthians 8:20, Paul is careful to avoid any accusation of mishandling the financial collection, so he sends multiple trustworthy people with it. In 2 Thessalonians 3:6, Paul commands believers to withdraw from brothers living in idleness and not according to apostolic tradition. The verb suggests deliberate distancing, not violent expulsion but strategic separation to maintain purity and avoid harm or scandal.

(2×) 2 Corinthians 8:20 uses the middle participle (στελλόμενοι, 'avoiding/taking care to avoid') to describe Paul's careful financial practices—avoiding even the appearance of impropriety. 2 Thessalonians 3:6 uses the middle infinitive (στέλλεσθαι, 'to withdraw') commanding separation from the disorderly. Both uses emphasize prudent avoidance. Classical Greek uses the middle voice for drawing oneself back, preparing, or arranging, with meanings evolving from the base sense of 'set in order' or 'dispatch.' POSSESSING AND HAVING en: avoiding, to-withdraw | es: apartaros, evitando | fr: éviter, στέλλεσθαι | de: sich-zurueckziehen 2Cor 8:20; 2Thess 3:6

στέμμα G4725 N-ANP (1×)

Garlands or wreaths used in pagan sacrificial worship

In ancient Greek religion, worshippers adorned both priests and sacrificial victims with woven garlands of flowers, leaves, or laurel. These wreaths wound around staffs or worn on heads signified the sacred nature of the ritual. When crowds at Lystra mistook Paul and Barnabas for Hermes and Zeus, the priest of Zeus brought garlands to sacrifice to them. The apostles tore their clothes in horror at this blasphemy. The plural form suggests multiple wreaths, indicating preparation for an elaborate public sacrifice. All translations maintain the wreath/garland imagery, essential to understanding the pagan ritual the apostles confronted.

(1×) Ceremonial wreaths or garlands used in Greek and Roman religious sacrifice, typically made of laurel, flowers, or leaves. In Acts 14:13, the priest of Zeus brings these garlands to crown the apostles as gods—wreaths that would adorn both the sacrificial oxen and the supposed deities. Paul and Barnabas' violent reaction (tearing their clothes) reflects their recognition that accepting these garlands would constitute participation in idolatry and blasphemous self-deification. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: garlands | es: guirnaldas | fr: couronne | de: στέμματα Acts 14:13

στεναγ-μός G4726 N-DMP (2×)

Groaning, sighing; deep inward sounds expressing pain, grief, or longing

Στεναγμός refers to groaning or sighing, the deep utterances of pain, grief, or intense longing. In Acts 7:34, Stephen quotes God hearing the groaning of the enslaved Israelites in Egypt—their wordless cries of suffering that moved God to action. In Romans 8:26, Paul describes the Spirit interceding for believers with 'groanings too deep for words'—prayers beyond human articulation expressing the heart's deepest needs. Groaning in Scripture often represents the gap between present suffering and future glory, the yearning of creation and believers for redemption's completion.

(2×) Acts 7:34 (quoting Exodus 3:7) emphasizes God hearing Israel's groaning—their suffering has reached his ears and provoked his deliverance. Romans 8:26 describes ineffable groanings of the Spirit interceding when we don't know how to pray—divine groaning within human weakness. Both show groaning as communication beyond words, expressing depths ordinary language cannot reach. Classical Greek applied the term to sighing and groaning from pain, grief, or effort. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: groaning, with-groanings | es: con-gemidos, gemido | fr: gémissement | de: Seufzen, στεναγμοῦ Acts 7:34; Rom 8:26

στενάζω G4727 V-AIA-3S (6×)

stenazo – to groan, sigh deeply, or lament under the weight of suffering or longing

A frequentative form of steno ('to moan'), stenazo expresses deep, visceral sighing or groaning under emotional or physical burden. In Mark 7:34, Jesus himself sighs deeply (stenaxas) before healing the deaf man – a rare glimpse of the Lord's embodied compassion. Paul uses the word to describe believers groaning inwardly as they await the redemption of their bodies (Rom 8:23) and longing to be clothed with their heavenly dwelling (2 Cor 5:2, 4). Hebrews 13:17 warns against making leaders groan through disobedience. Spanish gemido/gimiendo and French gemir capture the same visceral quality, while German seufzen conveys the sighing dimension.

groan, sigh in distress (6×) To groan or sigh deeply from distress, suffering, or intense longing – an involuntary, bodily expression of inner anguish or yearning. Jesus stenaxas at Mark 7:34 reveals empathetic grief before a healing miracle; in Romans 8:23 and 2 Corinthians 5:2-4, believers groan under the tension between present mortal suffering and future glorification. Spanish gimiendo and French gemir both preserve the guttural, involuntary quality of the sound, confirming a unified sense of deep emotional or physical lamentation across all six New Testament occurrences. GROANING IN DISTRESS

en: groan, groaning, he-sighed | es: gemimos, gimiendo, gimió | fr: gémir | de: seufzen Mark 7:34; Rom 8:23; 2Cor 5:2; 2Cor 5:4; Heb 13:17

στενός G4728 Adj-GFS (3×)

narrow, confined, restricted; lacking breadth or width, opposite of wide or spacious

An adjective meaning narrow, tight, constricted—the opposite of broad or wide. Jesus uses it in His teaching about the two ways: the gate is narrow and the way is hard that leads to life (Matt 7:13-14, Luke 13:24). The narrow gate requires effort to enter; it doesn't accommodate crowds or baggage. Classical Greek uses it for narrow mountain passes, tight straits between seas, or cramped spaces—places where movement is restricted and only a few can pass. In Jesus' metaphor, the narrow way demands surrender, discipline, and singular devotion.

(3×) All languages agree: English 'narrow', Spanish 'estrecha', French 'étroit', German transliterations (στενὴ, στενῆς). The three uses in Matthew 7:13-14 and Luke 13:24 establish a consistent image: the gate and way to life are narrow, not spacious. This narrowness isn't arbitrary restriction but the reality that the way of discipleship is focused, demanding, and traversed by few, contrasting with the broad way many choose. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION
en: narrow | es: estrecha | fr: étroit | de: στενὴ, στενῆς Matt 7:13; Matt 7:14; Luke 13:24

στενοχωρ-έω G4729 V-PIM/P-2P (3×)
to be restricted, confined, or pressed together; to experience constraint or distress
A verb meaning to be crowded, confined, or under pressure—either spatially cramped or emotionally/spiritually distressed. Paul uses it three times in 2 Corinthians: 'afflicted in every way, but not crushed' (4:8), and twice in 6:12 explaining that the Corinthians are not restricted by Paul's affections but 'restricted in their own affections.' The word conveys both external pressure (being hemmed in) and internal constriction (emotional narrowness or hardness). Classical uses include physical crowding, strictures in medicine, and metaphorical constraint.

(3×) Translations show the dual sense: English 'restricted/crushed/being crushed', Spanish 'angustiados/siendo angustiados' (distressed), French 'être à l'étroit' (to be cramped), German 'Bedraengnis' (affliction). Paul's uses capture both dimensions: external pressures (4:8) and internal emotional constriction (6:12). The paradox in 4:8—'afflicted but not crushed'—plays on the verb's range: pressure exists, but total collapse hasn't occurred. DISTRESS AND HARDSHIP en: being-crushed, you-are-restricted | es: estáis-angustiados, siendo-angustiados | fr: être-à-l'étroit | de: Bedraengnis 2Cor 4:8; 2Cor 6:12

στενοχωρ-ία G4730 N-NFS (4×)
Distress, anguish, dire straits — a narrowing of circumstances that crushes from every side Literally 'narrowness of space' (from stenos, 'narrow,' and chora, 'space'), this noun vividly pictures being hemmed in with no room to move. Paul regularly pairs it with thlipsis ('tribulation') to form a hendiadys of total pressure: external affliction and internal anguish together. In Romans 2:9 it awaits every soul that does evil; in Romans 8:35 it appears in the catalog of forces that cannot separate believers from Christ's love. The Corinthian catalogs (2 Cor 6:4; 12:10) list it among the apostle's sufferings. Spanish 'angustia' and German 'Bedraengnis' both preserve the sense of crushing constriction.

(4×) Distress, anguish, dire straits; literally a constriction of space leaving no room for escape. Derived from stenos ('narrow') and chora ('space'), it describes being squeezed from all sides. Often paired with thlipsis ('tribulation') for emphasis: Rom 2:9 warns of 'tribulation and distress' for evildoers, while Rom 8:35 asks whether such forces can separate from Christ's love. In Paul's hardship catalogs (2 Cor 6:4; 12:10), it names the crushing inner dimension of apostolic suffering. French 'angoisse' captures the psychological constriction. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION
en: distress, distresses | es: angustia, angustias | fr: angoisse | de: Bedraengnis Rom 2:9; Rom 8:35; 2Cor 6:4; 2Cor 12:10

στερεός G4731 Adj-NFS (4×)
Firm, solid, hard; figuratively steadfast, unwavering in conviction or faith
This adjective describes what is physically hard and unyielding — solid stone versus hollow space, firm bone versus soft tissue. The New Testament extends this concreteness into the spiritual realm. Hebrews 5:12-14 contrasts 'solid food' with milk, using stereos to describe mature teaching fit for the spiritually developed. Paul declares God's 'firm foundation' stands unshaken (2 Tim 2:19), and Peter exhorts believers to resist the devil 'firm in the faith' (1 Pet 5:9). In each case the physical image of solidity — something you can press against and it does not give — anchors the metaphor of unwavering spiritual resolve.

(4×) Firm, solid, hard; figuratively steadfast and unyielding. Opposed in classical usage to hollow (koilon), soft (malthakos), or empty (kenon), it describes what resists pressure. Spanish 'firme' and French 'solide' translate naturally. In Heb 5:12, 14 it characterizes 'solid food' — advanced teaching for the mature. In 2 Tim 2:19 God's 'firm foundation' stands immovable despite apostasy. In 1 Pet 5:9 it describes the resolute faith with which believers are to withstand the devil. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY
en: firm, of-solid, solid | es: de-sólido, firme, firmes | fr: solide | de: fest 2Tim 2:19; Heb 5:12; Heb 5:14; 1Pet 5:9

στερεό-ω G4732 V-IIM/P-3P (3×)
to strengthen, make firm or solid; to establish securely, to make stable and strong
A verb meaning to make strong, firm, or solid—to strengthen and establish. In Acts it appears twice in the healing of the lame man: his feet and ankles were 'made strong' (3:7), and it was faith that 'strengthened' him (3:16). Acts 16:5 reports that the churches 'were strengthened' in the faith daily. The word conveys both physical restoration (weak limbs made strong) and spiritual fortification (faith established and confirmed). Classical uses include solidifying structures, firming foundations, and confirming decisions or judgments.

(3×) Languages vary slightly: English 'strengthened/were strengthened', Spanish 'fortaleció/fueron fortalecidas', French 'affermir' (to make firm), German uses Greek forms. The Acts narrative moves from physical (the lame man's ankles strengthened) to spiritual (churches strengthened in faith). Both senses share the core idea: what was weak, unstable, or broken becomes solid, firm, and able to stand. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE en: strengthened, were-being-strengthened, were-strengthened | es: eran-fortalecidas, fortaleció, fueron-fortalecidas | fr: affermir | de: ἐστερέωσεν, ἐστερεοῦντο, ἐστερεώθησαν Acts 3:7; Acts 3:16; Acts 16:5

στερέ-ωμα G4733 N-ANS (1×)
Firmness, steadfastness, solid foundation; metaphorically, stability of faith
The Greek term denotes something solid and immovable—a foundation, framework, or firm support. Classical usage speaks of the skeleton as the body's framework and uses the term for the firmament or vault of heaven. Paul employs this architectural and structural imagery to describe the Colossian church's faith as having solidity and stability despite his physical absence. The term suggests not rigidity but reliable structural integrity. Peter similarly warns against falling from one's 'own steadfastness' through deception, emphasizing the need for maintained stability.

(1×) The quality of being solid, stable, and firmly established, particularly regarding faith and spiritual commitment. In Colossians 2:5, Paul rejoices in the 'firmness' or stable structure of the Colossians' faith, using architectural imagery to describe spiritual resilience. The term suggests a well-built foundation that can withstand pressure and testing, not merely emotional enthusiasm but reliable structural integrity in believing. This stability becomes a source of joy for church leaders observing from a distance. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY
en: firmness | es: firmeza | fr: στερέωμα | de: Festigkeit Col 2:5

Στεφανᾶς G4734 N-GMS (3×)
Stephanas; a personal name, the first convert in Achaia and household baptized by Paul
A proper name appearing three times in 1 Corinthians. Paul mentions baptizing the household of Stephanas (1:16), describes them as 'the firstfruits of Achaia' devoted to serving the saints (16:15), and rejoices at Stephanas' arrival with Fortunatus and Achaicus (16:17). This household represents Paul's early success in Corinth and models servant-leadership. The name (related to 'crown') was common in Greek society. Stephanas and his household exemplify the kind of stable, committed believers Paul longed for in Corinth.

(3×) As a proper name, translations are stable: English 'Stephanas', Spanish 'Stephanâs', French 'Stachys' (likely an error for Stephanas), German 'Stephanas'. The consistent genitive form ('of Stephanas') in all three references reflects Paul's pattern of mentioning this faithful household leader and his companions, highlighting their service and Paul's personal connection to them. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: of-Stephanas | es: Stephanâs, de-Stephanâs | fr: Stachys | de: Stephanas
1Cor 1:16; 1Cor 16:15; 1Cor 16:17

στέφᾰνος G4735 N-AMS (18×)
crown, wreath — a woven circlet of honor, victory, or royal dignity; the victor's garland and the martyr's reward Stephanos denotes a wreath or crown woven from leaves, flowers, or precious materials, placed on the head to signify honor, victory, or authority. Unlike diadema (the royal diadem of sovereign power), stephanos is the victor's garland — the crown earned through contest, endurance, or faithfulness. Its 18 New Testament occurrences divide into two striking categories. First, the crown of thorns: Roman soldiers twisted a stephanos of thorns and pressed it onto Jesus' head as a cruel parody of kingship (Matt 27:29; Mark 15:17; John 19:2, 5), an image that reverberates through Christian art and theology. Second, the metaphorical crown of reward: Paul describes the 'imperishable crown' of the disciplined athlete (1 Cor 9:25), 'the crown of righteousness' awaiting those who love Christ's appearing (2 Tim 4:8), and his converts as his 'joy and crown' (Phil 4:1; 1 Thess 2:19). James 1:12 and Revelation 2:10 promise 'the crown of life' to those who endure. The twenty-four elders cast their golden crowns before the throne (Rev 4:4, 10). Spanish 'corona,' French 'couronne,' and German 'Krone/Kranz' all preserve the victory-wreath sense.

crown, wreath (18×) A woven wreath or circlet placed on the head as a mark of victory, honor, or royal dignity, spanning the physical crown of thorns placed on Jesus in mockery (Matt 27:29; Mark 15:17; John 19:2, 5) and the metaphorical crown of reward for faithfulness. Paul envisions the 'imperishable crown' of athletic self-discipline (1 Cor 9:25), 'the crown of righteousness' at Christ's return (2 Tim 4:8), and his congregations as his stephanos of joy (Phil 4:1; 1 Thess 2:19). James 1:12 and Revelation 2:10 promise 'the crown of life' to those who persevere under trial. The twenty-four elders wear golden crowns they cast before the throne (Rev 4:4, 10). The term differs from diadema (sovereign diadem) by emphasizing earned or bestowed honor rather than inherent sovereignty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-crown, crown, crowns | es: corona, coronas | fr: couronne | de: Krone, στέφανον
Matt 27:29; Mark 15:17; John 19:2; John 19:5; 1Cor 9:25

Στέφανος G4736 N-NMS (7×)
Stephen; the first Christian martyr, one of seven deacons, known for his Spirit-filled witness and death by stoning in Jerusalem.
Stephanos (meaning 'crown' or 'wreath' in Greek) is the proper name of the first recorded Christian martyr. Chosen as one of seven men 'full of the Spirit and wisdom' to serve the early Jerusalem church (Acts 6:5), Stephen performed signs and wonders and engaged in powerful public debate (Acts 6:8-10). His lengthy speech before the Sanhedrin (Acts 7) recounted Israel's history of rejecting God's messengers, leading to his stoning while he prayed for his killers (Acts 7:59-60). His death, witnessed by Saul of Tarsus (Acts 8:1; 22:20), became a catalyst for the church's expansion beyond Jerusalem. French renders his name as 'Etienne,' while Spanish and German preserve forms closer to the Greek: 'Stéphanos' and 'Stephanos.'

Stephen (proper name) (7×) The proper name Stephen (Stephanos), designating the first Christian martyr. A Hellenistic Jewish believer chosen as one of seven deacons (Acts 6:5), he was 'full of grace and power' (Acts 6:8) and debated opponents from multiple synagogues (Acts 6:9). His trial speech (Acts 7) and his death by stoning — during which he saw a vision of the Son of Man and prayed for his persecutors (Acts 7:55-60) — are pivotal in Luke's narrative of the early church. Paul later recalled Stephen's blood as that of a 'witness' (Acts 22:20). French alone adapts the name significantly as 'Etienne,' while Spanish 'Stéphanos' and German 'Stephanos' stay close to the Greek original. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Stephanos, of-Stephanos | es: Stéfanos, Stéphanos, a-Stéphanos | fr: Étienne | de: Στέφανον, Στέφανος, Στεφάνου Acts 6:5; Acts 6:8; Acts 6:9; Acts 7:59; Acts 8:2

στεφᾰν-όω G4737 V-PIM/P-3S (3×)
to crown, encircle with a wreath or garland; to honor by placing a crown or victor's wreath on someone
A verb meaning to crown or wreathe—to place a crown, garland, or wreath on someone's head, typically as honor or reward. It appears in 2 Timothy 2:5, where an athlete is crowned only if competing according to the rules, and twice in Hebrews 2:7, 9, quoting Psalm 8 about humanity crowned with glory and honor, applied to Jesus. Classical uses include encircling with garlands, surrounding like a border, and honoring victors with wreaths. The NT uses blend athletic reward, royal honor, and messianic exaltation.

(3×) Uniform: English 'crowned/having been crowned', Spanish 'coronado/coronaste', French 'couronner', German 'kroenen'. The three uses span metaphor (athletic crowning), theology (humanity's intended dignity), and Christology (Jesus crowned through suffering). Each context involves honor bestowed—whether the victor's wreath earned by discipline or the glory and honor restored to humanity through Christ's exaltation. HONOR AND WEIGHT
en: having-been-crowned, is-crowned, you-crowned | es: coronado, coronaste, es-coronado | fr: couronner | de: kroenen
2Tim 2:5; Heb 2:7; Heb 2:9

στῆθος G4738 N-ANS (5×)
Breast, chest; the front of the torso, associated with closeness, grief, and priestly adornment.
The breast or chest — the front of the upper torso — appearing in the New Testament in contexts of emotional expression, intimate closeness, and ceremonial dress. The tax collector beats his chest in penitent humility (Luke 18:13), and the crowds at the crucifixion return home striking their chests in grief (Luke 23:48). The beloved disciple reclines on Jesus' chest at the Last Supper (John 13:25; 21:20), a posture of deep intimacy and trust. In Revelation 15:6, angels emerge wearing golden sashes across their chests, evoking priestly splendor. Spanish pecho, French poitrine, and German Brust all consistently denote the same anatomical region.

(5×) The breast or chest, referring to the front surface of the upper torso. In the NT this body part appears in three distinct contexts: penitential or grief-stricken beating of the chest (Luke 18:13 — the tax collector; Luke 23:48 — the mourning crowds), intimate physical closeness (John 13:25; 21:20 — the beloved disciple leaning on Jesus' chest at the Last Supper), and ceremonial attire (Rev 15:6 — angels girded with golden sashes across their chests). The word can also carry the metaphorical sense of 'heart' as the seat of feeling (attested in classical Greek), though the NT uses remain primarily physical. Spanish pecho, French poitrine, and German Brust all confirm the consistent anatomical reference across all five passages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: chest, chests | es: pecho, pechos | fr: poitrine | de: Brust, στήθη, στῆθος
Luke 18:13; Luke 23:48; John 13:25; John 21:20; Rev 15:6

στήκω G4739 V-IIA-3S (10×)
To stand firm or persevere in faith and commitment; also to stand physically, to be in a standing position.

Steko is a late Koine present tense formed from hesteka, the perfect of histemi ('to stand'), and it carries the stable, settled force of that perfect stem into a fresh verb. Paul made it his own: 'Stand firm in the Lord' (Phil 4:1), 'Stand firm and hold to the traditions' (2 Thess 2:15), 'For freedom Christ has set us free; stand firm' (Gal 5:1). Spanish 'estad firmes' and 'estáis firmes' consistently render this resolute, exhortatory sense. Yet in Mark the word retains its simpler meaning of physical standing: Jesus' mother and brothers 'standing' outside (Mark 3:31), and 'when you stand praying, forgive' (Mark 11:25). The physical posture and the spiritual posture meet in this single verb.

1. stand firm, persevere (8×) Standing firm, persevering, remaining steadfast in faith, conviction, or commitment — the dominant Pauline sense. Formed from the perfect stem of histemi, steko inherently conveys a settled, established stance. Paul wields it as a rallying cry: 'Stand firm in one spirit' (Phil 1:27), 'Stand firm in the faith; be courageous' (1 Cor 16:13), 'Stand firm in the liberty' Christ won (Gal 5:1). In John 8:44, the devil 'did not stand (hestēken) in the truth,' using the same root to describe a failure of moral perseverance. Spanish 'estad firmes' and French 'se tenir debout' both capture the upright, resolute quality. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: has-stood, he-stands, stand-firm | es: estad-firmes, está-firme, estáis-firmes | fr: se-tenir, se-tenir-debout | de: stehen John 8:44; Rom 14:4; 1Cor 16:13; Gal 5:1; Phil 1:27

2. stand, be in a standing position (2×) Standing physically, being in the posture of standing — a literal, positional sense. In Mark 3:31 Jesus' mother and brothers were 'standing' (stēkontes) outside, and in Mark 11:25 Jesus instructs 'whenever you stand (stēkete) praying, forgive.' Spanish 'estando-de-pie' ('being on foot/standing') and 'estéis-de-pie' preserve the plainly physical register. Though the posture of standing in prayer could shade into metaphor, these Markan uses ground the verb in bodily reality before Paul charged it with its characteristic spiritual intensity. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: standing, you-stand | es: estando-de-pie, estéis-de-pie | fr: se-tenir | de: stehen Mark 3:31; Mark 11:25

στηριγ-μός G4740 N-GMS (1×)
Firmness, steadfastness, stable foundation for secure standing Closely related to the previous term, this noun emphasizes the fixed, stable state of being firmly established. Classical sources use it of astronomical bodies' stationary positions and steady light as opposed to flickering. Rhetorically, it described sustained vocal emphasis that gave force to words—mutual support and buttressing of arguments. Peter warns believers not to fall from their 'own steadfastness,' their secure standing in truth. The term implies both present stability and the danger of displacement through deception. Translations consistently render it as 'firmness' or 'steadfastness,' recognizing the architectural metaphor of secure foundation.

(1×) The state of being firmly fixed and established, used metaphorically for spiritual and doctrinal stability. In 2 Peter 3:17, the apostle warns believers not to be 'carried away' and fall from their own steadfastness through the error of lawless people. The term implies a secure standing or position that can be lost if believers become unmoored from truth. Unlike emotional excitement, this steadfastness suggests the reliable foundation of sound doctrine and established faith that grounds believers against deceptive teachings. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY
en: steadfastness | es: fundamento | fr: στηριγμοῦ | de: Festigkeit 2Pet 3:17

στηρίζω G4741 V-RPM/P-AMP (13×)
To strengthen, establish, make firm—especially in faith; to fix firmly in place; to be confirmed
A word of deep pastoral weight in the New Testament, used when Jesus prays that Peter's faith may not fail and charges him to 'strengthen your brothers' (Luke 22:32), or when Paul prays that God may 'establish your hearts blameless' (1 Thess 3:13). The underlying image is of propping something up so it stands firm—visible in the literal sense of Jesus 'setting his face' resolutely toward Jerusalem (Luke 9:51) and the 'great chasm fixed' between Abraham's side and Hades (Luke 16:26). Spanish 'confirmar / afirmar' and French 'affermir' consistently convey this sense of making solid and steadfast.

1. strengthen or establish spiritually (9×) To strengthen or establish someone spiritually: the dominant NT usage, referring to fortifying believers in faith, resolve, or moral standing. Jesus tells Peter to 'strengthen your brothers' (Luke 22:32); Paul prays that God will 'establish your hearts' (1 Thess 3:13; 2 Thess 2:17; 3:3) and that the gospel will 'establish' the Romans (Rom 16:25). Spanish 'confirmar / afirmar' and French 'affermir' uniformly point to inner firmness across all nine occurrences. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: may-establish, strengthen, to-establish | es: afirmad, confirmar, confirmará | fr: affermir | de: staerken, στήρισον Luke 22:32; Rom 16:25; 1Thess 3:2; 1Thess 3:13; 2Thess 2:17

2. fix firmly in place (2×) To fix firmly in a physical or metaphorical position: a concrete sense of setting something immovably in place. Jesus 'set his face' toward Jerusalem with unshakable determination (Luke 9:51), and Abraham tells the rich man that a 'great chasm has been fixed' between them (Luke 16:26). Spanish 'afirmó / está fijado' and German 'estēriktai' highlight the permanence of the fixture. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE
en: has-been-fixed, set | es: afirmó, está-fijado | fr: affermir | de: ἐστήρικται, ἐστήρισεν Luke 9:51; Luke 16:26

3. be established or strengthened (2×) Passive: to be established or strengthened by another's action. Paul desires to impart a spiritual gift so the Romans may 'be established' (Rom 1:11), and Peter writes to those who are already 'established in the truth' (2 Pet 1:12). Spanish 'habiendo sido confirmados / ser fortalecidos' marks the receptive side of the strengthening dynamic. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE en: having-been-established, to-be-strengthened | es: habiendo-sido-confirmados, ser-fortalecidos | fr: affermir | de: staerken Rom 1:11; 2Pet 1:12

στῖγ-μα G4742 N-ANP (1×)
Brand-marks or scars, especially those identifying slaves; metaphorically, marks of suffering for Christ
In the ancient world, slaves and sometimes temple devotees received permanent tattoo marks or brands identifying their owner. These stigmata could also denote military service, religious devotion, or punishment. Paul boldly claims to bear Jesus' brand-marks on his body—the scars from beatings, stonings, and persecution suffered for the gospel. These marks prove his authentic apostleship more convincingly than his opponents' credentials. The term carries both the degradation of slave-branding and the honor of battle scars. Paul's rhetorical power lies in transforming marks of shame into badges of legitimate authority.

(1×) Permanent marks, scars, or brand-marks on the body, particularly those identifying slaves or devotees. In Galatians 6:17, Paul appeals to the stigmata he bears—physical scars from persecution—as authentication of his apostolic authority and intimate identification with Christ's suffering. Unlike circumcision marks debated in Galatia, these scars are involuntary testimonies written on Paul's flesh through beatings and stonings. The marks silence opponents by demonstrating Paul's costly discipleship and genuine ownership by Christ. SIGNS AND BANNERS
en: marks | es: marcas | fr: στίγματα | de: Wundmal Gal 6:17

στιγ-μή G4743 N-DFS (1×)
A moment, an instant, the smallest measure of time Originally denoting a mathematical point or tiny spot, the term extends to the smallest conceivable unit of time—a split second. Classical usage speaks of 'a speck of blood' to indicate something minute. When Satan shows Jesus all earth's kingdoms 'in a moment of time,' the phrase emphasizes the supernatural, visionary nature of the temptation—kingdoms flashing instantaneously before Jesus' eyes. Paul similarly uses the related concept in 1 Corinthians 15 when describing resurrection transformation 'in a moment.' The temporal brevity underscores both miracle and temptation's intensity.

(1×) An infinitesimally brief period of time, a flash or instant. In Luke 4:5, Satan displays all the world's kingdoms to Jesus 'in a moment of time,' suggesting either supernatural vision or illusory presentation compressed into an instant. The phrase emphasizes the unreality or visionary character of the temptation—an impossible temporal compression that marks the experience as diabolic rather than natural. This momentary glimpse of comprehensive earthly power forms the basis for Satan's temptation to worship. MOMENT INSTANT

en: a-moment | es: momento | fr: instant | de: στιγμῇ Luke 4:5

στίλβ-ω G4744 V-PPA-NNP (1×)

Shining, gleaming, glistening with brilliant reflected light

The verb describes surfaces that gleam, glitter, or flash with reflected light—polished armor, sleek horses, brilliant complexions, water in motion. Classical poets speak of shields 'gleaming with oil' and white horses shining 'like swan feathers.' Mark employs this vivid term to describe Jesus' transfigured clothing as 'glistening, exceedingly white,' emphasizing supernatural radiance beyond any earthly bleaching. The present participle suggests ongoing, dynamic brilliance rather than static whiteness. The term captures both the visual intensity and the otherworldly quality of the transfiguration scene.

(1×) Emitting brilliant gleaming light through reflection or inherent radiance, describing polished or luminous surfaces. In Mark 9:3, Jesus' garments become 'glistening' at the transfiguration, shining with supernatural whiteness beyond any earthly fabric's capacity. The term's classical associations with polished armor and gleaming surfaces emphasizes the visual shock of this transformation, where ordinary cloth radiates divine glory. The glistening quality suggests dynamic, shimmering light rather than mere static brightness. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: shining | es: resplandecientes | fr: brillant | de: glaenzend Mark 9:3

στοά G4745 N-AFP (4×)

A roofed colonnade, portico, or covered walkway — a pillared public space in temple or city architecture

A stoa was a covered walkway lined with columns, one of the most characteristic structures of Greco-Roman public architecture. The most famous was Athens's Stoa Poikile ('Painted Porch'), where Zeno taught and gave the Stoic school its name. In the New Testament, Solomon's Colonnade along the east side of the Jerusalem temple serves as the recurring setting. It sheltered the pool of Bethesda with its five porticoes (John 5:2) and was the place where Jesus walked during the Feast of Dedication (John 10:23). The early church gathered there (Acts 3:11; 5:12), making this architectural feature a stage for some of the gospel's most dramatic public moments.

(4×) A roofed colonnade or portico; a covered walkway supported by pillars, characteristic of ancient public architecture. In John 5:2 it describes the five porticoes surrounding the pool of Bethesda. Solomon's Colonnade (stoa Solomontos) on the temple mount is the setting for Jesus's teaching at the Feast of Dedication (John 10:23) and for early Christian gatherings (Acts 3:11; 5:12). French 'portique,' Spanish 'pórtico,' and German 'Halle' all reflect the grand public character of the structure. The word also gave its name to the Stoic philosophical school. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: colonnade, portico, porticoes | es: pórtico, pórticos | fr: portique | de: Halle, στοᾷ John 5:2; John 10:23; Acts 3:11; Acts 5:12

στῑβάς G4746 N-AFP (1×)

Leafy branches or bedding of straw and rushes; materials spread for Jesus' entry

The Greek term originally meant a bed of straw, rushes, or leaves —either strewn loose or stuffed into a mattress. Soldiers commonly used such bedding, and the term could describe animal nests or grave coverings. During Jesus' entry into Jerusalem, crowds cut and spread branches along the road as an impromptu carpet of honor. Mark's term emphasizes the leafy, rustic character of this spontaneous tribute—not manufactured carpets but freshly cut foliage from the fields. The gesture combined royal welcome with eschatological expectation, evoking both David's kingship and Zechariah's prophecy.

(1×) Leafy branches, rushes, or bedding straw spread on the ground; specifically, the foliage cut and spread before Jesus during his Jerusalem entry. In Mark 11:8, people spread these branches on the road as a living carpet honoring Jesus as messianic king. The term's associations with makeshift bedding and natural materials emphasizes the spontaneous, popular character of the demonstration —ordinary people using available resources to create a royal reception. This contrasts with official ceremony, marking it as grassroots messianic expectation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: branches | es: ramas | fr: litière | de: Zweig Mark 11:8

στοιχεῖον G4747 N-ANP (7×)

Elements; the basic components of the world, whether elemental physical substances, rudimentary principles of learning, or cosmic spiritual powers.

Stoicheion originally meant a shadow on a sundial marking the hour, then came to denote any basic unit in a series — a letter of the alphabet, an element of physical matter, or a first principle of knowledge. In the New Testament, it carries theological weight in two distinct directions. Paul warns against returning to 'the elemental things of the world' (Gal 4:3, 9; Col 2:8, 20), likely referring to the basic regulatory principles — whether Jewish Torah observances or pagan cosmic forces — that once held believers in bondage before Christ. The author of Hebrews uses it differently, chiding readers who need someone to teach them 'the elements' (basic ABCs) of God's oracles again (Heb 5:12). German 'Elemente' and Spanish 'elementos' both preserve the same breadth of meaning.

elements (7×) The basic components, elementary principles, or fundamental constituents of the world. This single sense covers overlapping NT applications: the rudimentary principles of religious instruction, the 'ABCs' that mature believers should have moved beyond (Heb 5:12); and the 'elemental things of the world' — the basic ordering principles (whether Torah regulations, cosmic powers, or both) that once enslaved humanity before Christ's liberation (Gal 4:3, 9; Col 2:8, 20). Paul's argument in Galatians and Colossians is that believers have died with Christ to these stoicheia and must not submit to them again. Spanish 'elementos' and German 'Elemente' both preserve this polysemous breadth within a single lexical item. CREATION CREATED ORDER

en: elements | es: elementos | fr: Elemente | de: Elemente Gal 4:3; Gal 4:9; Col 2:8; Col 2:20; Heb 5:12

στοιχ-έω G4748 V-PSA-1P (5×)

To walk in line, conduct oneself according to a standard or rule; to follow an orderly course of life.

Derived from the idea of soldiers standing in rank, this verb captures the image of walking in an orderly line or keeping step with a guiding principle. In the New Testament it consistently describes conforming one's conduct to a spiritual standard, whether the rule of faith (Gal 6:16) or the Spirit's leading (Gal 5:25). Paul uses it to urge believers to 'keep in step' with what they have already attained (Phil 3:16). The Spanish 'andar ordenadamente' beautifully captures this sense of disciplined, purposeful walking.

(5×) To walk in conformity with a rule, standard, or example — conducting one's life in an orderly manner aligned with a guiding principle. From its military origins of standing in rank, the NT usage is entirely metaphorical: Paul urges walking by the Spirit (Gal 5:25), following Abraham's faith-steps (Rom 4:12), and holding to the same rule (Phil 3:16). The multilingual evidence is uniform — English 'walk,' Spanish 'andar/caminar,' French 'marcher' — all pointing to a single ethical-conduct sense. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: let-us-walk, to-walk, walking | es: andar, andas-ordenadamente, caminarán

| fr: marcher | de: wandeln, στοιχεῖς Acts 21:24; Rom 4:12; Gal 5:25; Gal 6:16; Phil 3:16

στολ-ή G4749 N-NFS (9×)

A long, flowing robe or garment; a formal outer vestment associated with dignity, honor, or heavenly status.

Stole refers to a long, flowing outer garment that signals status or solemnity. In classical Greek it covered everything from military equipment to everyday clothing, but in the New Testament it consistently denotes a garment of honor or distinction. The scribes desire to walk about in stolai as a mark of prestige (Mark 12:38; Luke 20:46), the prodigal son is clothed with the 'best robe' at his restoration (Luke 15:22), the angel at the empty tomb wears a white stole (Mark 16:5), and the martyrs under the altar receive white robes (Rev 6:11). Spanish tunicas/ropas largas and French robe capture this sense of a dignified, full-length garment.

robe, long garment (9×) A long, formal outer garment or robe, typically signifying honor, authority, or heavenly purity. Unlike a simple himation (cloak) or chiton (tunic), the stole is a flowing vestment associated with dignity. The scribes love parading in them (Mark 12:38; Luke 20:46), the father orders the finest one for the returning prodigal (Luke 15:22), and the risen saints are clothed in white ones (Rev 6:11; 7:9, 13-14). The multilingual glosses (spa tunicas/ropas largas, fra robe, deu Gewand/Gewaender, eng robe/robes) consistently convey a garment that is both physically long and symbolically elevated. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: a-robe, robe, robes | es: con-túnicas, ropas-largas, túnicas | fr: robe | de: Gewaender, Gewand Mark 12:38; Mark 16:5; Luke 15:22; Luke 20:46; Rev 6:11

στόμα G4750 N-ANS (78×)

mouth; the physical organ of speech and eating, and by metonymy the words or testimony spoken

Greek stoma refers to the mouth as a physical organ and, by natural extension, to the speech and testimony that proceed from it. Jesus declares that what defiles a person comes out of the mouth, not into it (Matt 15:11), making stoma the locus of moral self-revelation. The phrase 'out of the mouth of babes' (Matt 21:16, quoting Ps 8:2) shows the metonymic leap from organ to utterance. In Revelation, a sharp sword emerges from Christ's mouth (Rev 1:16), an image where physical organ and divine word fuse. Translations are straightforward — Spanish boca, French bouche, German Mund — yet the theological uses press far beyond anatomy.

mouth, oral opening (78×) The mouth as a physical organ and, by metonymy, the speech, testimony, or decree that issues from it. Jesus teaches that the mouth reveals the heart's contents (Matt 12:34; 15:11), and the legal principle of 'two or three witnesses' invokes stoma for authoritative testimony (Matt 18:16). In apocalyptic imagery, a sword proceeds from Christ's mouth (Rev 1:16; 19:15), fusing the physical organ with the power of the spoken divine word. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-mouth, mouth | es: boca | fr: bouche | de: Mund Matt 4:4; Matt 5:2; Matt 12:34; Matt 13:35; Matt 15:11

στόμᾰχ-ος G4751 N-AMS (1×)

The stomach; the digestive organ

Greek anatomical terminology distinguished the throat, gullet, and stomach, with this term coming to designate specifically the stomach or orifice leading to it. While Homer used it for the throat, later medical writers and common usage applied it to the digestive organ itself. Paul's pastoral advice to Timothy includes the practical suggestion to use a little wine for his stomach's sake and frequent ailments. This medical advice reflects both ancient therapeutic practice and Paul's concern for Timothy's physical wellbeing alongside spiritual leadership. The term also appears metaphorically for anger in later texts, but here denotes the literal organ.

(1×) The stomach, the digestive organ in the body. In 1 Timothy 5:23, Paul advises Timothy to use a little wine medicinally 'for your stomach and frequent ailments,' reflecting ancient medical understanding of wine's digestive and therapeutic properties. This practical health advice amid pastoral instruction reveals Paul's holistic concern for Timothy's wellbeing—not merely spiritual formation but physical health necessary for sustained ministry. The medical specificity suggests Timothy suffered chronic digestive problems affecting his work. WOMB AND BELLY

en: stomach | es: estómago | fr: στόμαχον | de: Magen 1Tim 5:23

στρᾰτεία G4752 N-AFS (2×)

Warfare, military campaign; metaphorically, spiritual warfare and disciplined conflict

Στρατεία refers to a military expedition, campaign, or warfare more broadly. Paul uses this military metaphor to describe Christian life and ministry as spiritual warfare. In 2 Corinthians 10:4, he declares that 'the weapons of our warfare are not fleshly but divinely powerful'—Christian conflict uses spiritual weapons, not worldly ones. In 1 Timothy 1:18, Paul charges Timothy to 'wage the good warfare' according to prophetic words spoken over him. The imagery emphasizes discipline, strategy, conflict, and the reality of spiritual opposition, while insisting on distinctly spiritual weapons (truth, prayer, righteousness) rather than worldly power.

(2×) 2 Corinthians 10:4 uses στρατείας in the genitive ('of our warfare') to describe the Christian's campaign, contrasting divine weapons with fleshly ones. 1 Timothy 1:18 uses the accusative (στρατείαν, 'wage the warfare') commanding Timothy's active engagement in spiritual battle. Classical Greek used the term for military expeditions, foreign service, and campaigns, with rich history from Herodotus onward describing specific military operations. WAR AND BATTLE

en: of-warfare, warfare | es: milicia | fr: guerre, στρατείαν | de: Kriegsdienst 2Cor 10:4; 1Tim 1:18

στράτ-ευμα G4753 N-GNP (8×)

An army, military force, body of troops deployed for campaign or enforcement.

Strateuma denotes an organized military body — from a full army to a detachment of soldiers. In Matthew 22:7, a king sends his 'armies' to destroy murderers and burn their city, a parabolic image of divine judgment. Luke 23:11 records Herod and his soldiers mocking Jesus. In Acts, Roman troops intervene to rescue Paul from mob violence (Acts 23:10, 27). Revelation 9:16 envisions a staggering cavalry force of 200 million. The word consistently evokes state-sanctioned military power, whether deployed in narrative history or apocalyptic vision.

army, military force (8×) An organized body of soldiers, an army or military detachment, whether deployed in battle, enforcement, or escort duty. Spanish 'ejercito' and French 'armee' straightforwardly render the collective military sense. In Matthew 22:7, the king's 'armies' execute judgment in parable; in Acts 23:10 and 23:27, a Roman military detachment rescues Paul from violence — showing the word's range from massive armies to tactical units. Revelation 9:16 pushes the term to apocalyptic scale with a cavalry force numbering 200 million. Luke 23:11 uses it for the soldiers accompanying Herod who mock Jesus before returning him to Pilate. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: armies, army, soldiers | es: ejército, ejércitos, soldados | fr: armée | de: Heere, στράτευμα, στρατεύμασιν Matt 22:7; Luke 23:11; Acts 23:10; Acts 23:27; Rev 9:16

στρατ-εύω G4754 V-PIM-3S (7×)

To serve as a soldier or wage war; used both literally of military service and metaphorically of spiritual and moral conflict.

Strateuomai captures the full arc of soldiering — from literal enlistment to metaphorical warfare. When soldiers approach John the Baptist (Luke 3:14), the participial form 'the ones soldiering' simply describes their profession. Paul likewise treats military service as a familiar analogy: who serves as a soldier at his own expense? (1 Cor 9:7). Yet the word's most theologically charged uses are metaphorical. In 2 Corinthians 10:3 Paul insists 'we do not wage war according to the flesh,' while James 4:1 traces conflict to passions that 'wage war' within. Spanish toggles revealingly between 'soldados' (literal soldiers) and 'militan' (wage campaign), mirroring the sense split.

1. to wage war, fight (metaphorical) (4×) To wage war or carry on a campaign in a figurative or spiritual sense, describing the inner battle of desires or the struggle of Christian life. James 4:1 asks what causes wars among believers and answers: the pleasures that 'wage war' (strateuontai) in your members. Paul deploys the same metaphor in 2 Cor 10:3 and 1 Tim 1:18 ('wage the good warfare'), while 1 Pet 2:11 urges abstaining from fleshly desires that 'wage war against the soul.' Spanish 'militan' and German 'kaempfen' reinforce the combative tone. FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: war, warring, we-wage-war | es: militamos, militan, milites | fr: servir-comme-soldat, servir-dans-l'armée | de: kaempfen 2Cor 10:3; 1Tim 1:18; Jas 4:1; 1Pet 2:11

2. to serve as a soldier (3×) To serve as a soldier, to perform military duty in a literal or analogical sense. In Luke 3:14 soldiers (hoi strateuomenoi) ask John the Baptist for ethical counsel — here the word simply denotes professional military service. Paul extends it analogically in 1 Cor 9:7 (who soldiers at his own expense?) and 2 Tim 2:4 (no soldier entangles himself in civilian affairs). Spanish 'soldados' and 'sirve-como-soldado' capture the occupational meaning cleanly. FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: serves-as-soldier, serving-as-soldier, soldiers | es: sirve-como-soldado, sirviendo-como-soldado, soldados | fr: servir-comme-soldat, servir-dans-l'armée | de: kaempfen, στρατευόμενοι Luke 3:14; 1Cor 9:7; 2Tim 2:4

στρᾰτηγ-ός G4755 N-NMS (10×)

A military commander or civic magistrate, used of temple captains and city officials

Denotes a person holding a position of military or civic authority. In Luke's writings it appears in two distinct institutional contexts: the captain of the temple guard, who commanded the Levitical police force responsible for order in the temple precincts (Luke 22:4, 52; Acts 4:1; 5:24, 26), and the Roman colonial magistrates of Philippi who ordered Paul and Silas beaten and imprisoned (Acts 16:20, 22, 35, 36, 38). The term thus bridges Jewish religious authority and Greco-Roman civic governance. Spanish 'capitán/magistrado' and French 'magistrat/capitaine' reflect this dual application.

commander, magistrate, captain (10×) The captain of the temple guard, the officer commanding the Levitical security force in the Jerusalem temple. He negotiates with Judas (Luke 22:4), leads the arrest party (Luke 22:52), and confronts the apostles' preaching (Acts 4:1; 5:24, 26). This was one of the highest-ranking positions in the temple hierarchy after the high priest. MILITARY OFFICERS

en: captain, captains, magistrates | es: capitanes, capitán, magistrados | fr: capitaine | de: Hauptmann Luke 22:4; Luke 22:52; Acts 4:1; Acts 5:24; Acts 5:26

στρᾰτιά G4756 N-GFS (2×)

Army, host; a military force or great multitude, particularly the heavenly host Στρατιά means army or host, referring either to earthly military forces or to the heavenly hosts—the angelic armies surrounding God's throne. In Luke 2:13, the heavenly host suddenly appears with the angel to praise God at Jesus' birth, a glorious military metaphor for the angels as God's army celebrating the arrival of the commander. In Acts 7:42, Stephen warns of Israel turning to worship 'the host of heaven' (the stars and celestial bodies), a form of idolatry condemned throughout the Old Testament. The term thus describes both worshiping angels and idolatrous worship of creation.

(2×) Luke 2:13 presents 'a multitude of the heavenly host' (στρατιᾶς, genitive) praising God—angelic armies in worship formation celebrating the Messiah's birth. Acts 7:42 references worship given to 'the host of heaven' (στρατιᾷ, dative), the stars treated as deities —condemned idolatry. The same word describes true heavenly worshipers and false objects of worship. Classical usage includes land and naval forces, companies, bands, and sometimes the expedition itself. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: host, of-host | es: de-ejército, ejército | fr: armée | de: στρατιᾶς, στρατιᾷ Luke 2:13; Acts 7:42

στρᾰτῐ́ώτ-ης G4757 N-GMP (26×)

soldier — a military serviceman, especially a Roman soldier in Gospel and Acts narratives

Stratiotes designates a professional soldier, and its 26 NT occurrences almost exclusively refer to Roman military personnel operating in Judea and the wider Empire. In the Gospels, soldiers appear at pivotal moments: the centurion's soldiers whom he commands with a word (Matt 8:9; Luke 7:8), the cohort that mocks and scourges Jesus before crucifixion (Matt 27:27; Mark 15:16; John 19:2, 23, 32, 34), and the guard detail bribed to spread the stolen-body story (Matt 28:12). In Acts, soldiers escort Paul through increasingly dangerous situations — from the Jerusalem riot (Acts 21:32, 35) to the plot requiring a nighttime cavalry transfer to Caesarea (Acts 23:23, 31) and finally the voyage and shipwreck en route to Rome (Acts 27:31-32, 42). Paul employs the soldier metaphorically: Epaphroditus is a 'fellow soldier' in the gospel mission (Phil 2:25), and Timothy is urged to share in suffering 'as a good soldier of Christ Jesus' (2 Tim 2:3-4).

soldier (26×) A military serviceman, predominantly referring to Roman soldiers in the NT narratives. Present at the crucifixion — mocking, casting lots for garments, piercing Jesus' side (Matt 27:27; John 19:23, 32, 34) — and guarding the tomb (Matt 28:12). In Acts, soldiers protect and escort Paul through riot, conspiracy, and shipwreck (Acts 21:32; 23:23, 31; 27:31, 42). Paul repurposes the image metaphorically for ministry: Epaphroditus as 'fellow soldier' (Phil 2:25) and Timothy urged to endure as a 'good soldier of Christ' (2 Tim 2:3). FIGHTING AND WARFARE

en: of-soldiers, soldiers | es: de-soldados, los-soldados, soldados | fr: soldat | de: Soldat, Soldaten Matt 8:9; Matt 27:27; Matt 28:12; Mark 15:16; Luke 7:8

στρᾰτο-λογέω G4758 V-APA-DMS (1×)

To enlist or recruit soldiers; to levy an army

This military technical term describes the formal process of enrolling soldiers into military service. Classical sources use it of recruiting both citizen soldiers and mercenaries, often noting recruitment from allied territories. Paul employs the metaphor of military service to encourage Timothy's single-minded devotion, noting that no soldier on active duty entangles himself in civilian affairs in order to 'please the one who enlisted him.' The military imagery evokes loyalty, discipline, and focus on the commanding officer's objectives. Christian ministry becomes analogous to military service, requiring similar dedication.

(1×) The act of recruiting or enlisting soldiers into military service. In 2 Timothy 2:4, Paul uses the passive participle form metaphorically —the soldier aims to please 'the one who enlisted him' as commander. This military recruitment metaphor applied to Christian ministry emphasizes the believer's commissioned status, accountability to Christ as commander, and the necessity of undivided allegiance. Just as recruited soldiers answer to their enlisting officer, Christians serve the one who called them into spiritual warfare. MILITARY OFFICERS

en: having-enlisted | es: que-reclutó | fr: στρατολογήσαντι | de: anwerben 2Tim 2:4

στρᾰτοπεδ-άρχης G4759 N-DMS (1×)

Commander of a military camp; captain of the guard, praefectus castrorum

This term designated a high-ranking military officer, specifically the camp commander or prefect in Roman military organization. The praefectus castrorum ranked among the senior officers of a legion, responsible for camp administration, logistics, and sometimes prisoner custody. When Paul arrives in Rome, he is handed over to this commander of the guard. The textual variant here affects which ancient manuscripts include this detail, but the term clearly denotes a senior military authority responsible for supervising important prisoners. The position's prestige indicates Paul's treatment as a significant, not merely common, prisoner.

(1×) A senior military commander, specifically the Roman camp prefect or captain of the guard. In Acts 28:16, Paul is delivered to this officer upon reaching Rome, indicating official military custody rather than common imprisonment. The stratopedarchēs held responsibility for high-security prisoners and camp administration, suggesting Paul's status as an imperial prisoner of some importance. This custody arrangement enabled Paul's relatively lenient house arrest and continued ministry to visitors. MILITARY OFFICERS

en: captain-of-the-guard | es: comandante-del-campamento | fr: chef-de-camp | de: στρατοπεδάρχη> Acts 28:16

στρᾰτόπεδ-ον G4760 N-GNP (1×)

Military camps, encampments; organized armies in the field

The Greek term denotes both the physical camp where an army encamps and the organized military force itself. Classical usage speaks of encamped armies, squadrons of ships, and Roman legions. It could also mean the emperor's court or military headquarters. Jesus uses this term in his apocalyptic discourse about Jerusalem's coming destruction, warning that when they see 'armies' surrounding the city, desolation has drawn near. The plural suggests multiple military formations or encampments converging on Jerusalem, fulfilled in Rome's siege of AD 70. The military terminology emphasizes organized, systematic destruction rather than random violence.

(1×) Organized military encampments or armies in the field, often in plural denoting multiple military formations. In Luke 21:20, Jesus prophesies that 'armies surrounding Jerusalem' signal impending desolation, a warning fulfilled when Roman legions besieged the city in AD 70. The term's military precision emphasizes systematic siege warfare rather than spontaneous conflict. Jesus' warning gave early Christians the signal to flee before the encirclement became complete, preserving the Jerusalem church through strategic withdrawal. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: armies | es: ejércitos | fr: armée | de: στρατοπέδων Luke 21:20

στρεβλ-όω G4761 V-PIA-3P (1×)

To twist, distort, or wrench; to torture by perverting meaning

The verb originally meant to twist tight, wrench, or strain—drawing cables taut, tuning instrument strings, setting dislocated limbs. By extension it meant to torture on the rack, twisting the body to extract information from slaves. Metaphorically, it describes distorting or perverting words from their true meaning. Peter warns that ignorant and unstable people 'twist' Paul's difficult writings as they do other Scriptures, to their own destruction. The term suggests violent manipulation of meaning, not mere misunderstanding but deliberate or reckless distortion. The torture imagery indicates spiritual self-harm through interpretive violence.

(1×) To twist, distort, or torture—literally of wracking bodies or wrenching limbs, metaphorically of perverting texts from their true meaning. In 2 Peter 3:16, unstable people 'twist' Paul's writings and other Scriptures to their own destruction. The violent imagery suggests not innocent misreading but aggressive manipulation of meaning, forcing texts to yield interpretations contrary to their intent. Peter's warning implies that hermeneutical violence against Scripture ultimately becomes spiritual self-destruction for the distorters. TORMENT AND TORTURE

en: twist | es: tuercen | fr: στρεβλοῦσιν | de: verdrehen 2Pet 3:16

στρέφω G4762 V-APP-NFS (21×)

To turn, turn around, or turn back; of physical reorientation, spiritual conversion, redirecting something, or returning what was given

One of the New Testament's most physically vivid verbs, στρέφω captures the decisive moment of turning — whether Jesus turning to face the woman who touched his garment (Matt 9:22), or the radical reorientation demanded by 'unless you turn and become like children' (Matt 18:3). The word carries enormous theological weight in its metaphorical uses, where physical turning becomes a figure for repentance and conversion. Spanish consistently uses 'volverse' (to turn oneself), while German 'umkehren' (to reverse course) brings out the directional reversal inherent in the word.

1. turn physically around (15×) The dominant physical sense: turning one's body around or toward someone. Jesus turns to address Peter (Matt 16:23), turns to see the woman who touched him (Matt 9:22), and turns to look at the crowd following him (Luke 7:9, 44). The aorist passive participle στραφείς ('having turned') appears repeatedly as a narrative marker introducing direct speech. Spanish 'habiéndose vuelto' and French 'se tourner' confirm the reflexive bodily motion — a deliberate physical reorientation that often signals a shift in the scene's focus. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: having-turned, she-turned, turned | es: Habiéndose-vuelto, habiéndose-vuelto, habiéndose–vuelto | fr: se-tourner, tourner | de: umkehren, wendet-sich Matt 7:6; Matt 9:22; Matt 16:23; Luke 7:9; Luke 7:44

2. turn back spiritually or metaphorically (3×) The metaphorical or spiritual extension: turning back in a moral or spiritual sense. Matthew 18:3 delivers Jesus' famous demand — 'unless you turn (στραφῆτε) and become like children, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven.' John 12:40 quotes Isaiah on hearts that refuse to turn (στραφῶσιν) and be healed. Acts 13:46 records Paul and Barnabas turning to the Gentiles. Spanish 'os volvéis' and 'nos volvemos' preserve the reflexive quality, while the contexts make clear that the turning is inward and transformative, not merely directional. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: may-turn, we-turn, you-turn | es: nos-volvemos, os-volvéis, se-vuelvan | fr: se-tourner, tourner | de: umkehren, wendet-sich Matt 18:3; John 12:40; Acts 13:46

3. turn or direct something (2×) The transitive use: turning or directing something or someone else. Matthew 5:39 instructs the one struck on the right cheek to 'turn (στρέψον) the other also' — a command to redirect one's own body as an act of nonresistance. Revelation 11:6 speaks of the two witnesses having authority to 'turn (στρέψαι) the waters into blood.' Spanish splits between 'vuelve' (turn the cheek) and 'convertir' (turn water to blood), revealing how the transitive sense ranges from bodily repositioning to material transformation. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: to-turn, turn | es: de-convertir, vuelve | fr: se-tourner | de: umkehren, wendet-sich Matt 5:39; Rev 11:6

4. return or give back (1×) A single occurrence denoting the return or giving back of something: Judas 'returned' (ἔστρεψεν) the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests (Matt 27:3). Spanish 'devolvió' (gave back, returned) captures the sense precisely. This usage extends the root metaphor of turning — here the silver turns back along the path it came, reversing the transaction. The physical-directional core of the verb persists even in this commercial context. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: returned | es: devolvió | fr: se-tourner | de: wendet-sich Matt 27:3

στρηνιάω G4763 V-AIA-3S (2×)

To live luxuriously, wantonly; to revel in sensual excess and arrogant self-indulgence

Στρηνιάω describes living in luxury, wantonness, and sensual excess —not merely wealth but arrogant self-indulgence and revelry. In Revelation 18, this verb characterizes Babylon's (symbolic Rome's) relationship with the merchants and kings of earth. Babylon has 'lived luxuriously' (18:7) in pride and sensuality, and the merchants mourn because she who 'lived in luxury' with them (18:9) is now judged. The term suggests wanton excess, sexual immorality, and the intoxication of power and pleasure. It's stronger than merely living comfortably—it implies shameless, arrogant indulgence that ignores God and exploits others.

(2×) Revelation 18:7 describes Babylon boasting 'I have lived luxuriously' (ἐστρηνίασα, aorist)—past tense reviewing her indulgent reign. Revelation 18:9 has the kings mourning 'who lived luxuriously with her' (ἐστρηνίασαν, aorist)—they shared her wanton excess. Both occurrences appear in judgment context, her luxury becoming cause for mourning. The verb is relatively rare, appearing in classical sources meaning to run riot, wax wanton, or act arrogantly. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11579 WITH 3 SENSES

en: having-lived-luxuriously, lived-luxuriously | es: vivieron-en-lujo, vivió-en-lujo | fr: im-Luxus-leben | de: im-Luxus-leben Rev 18:7; Rev 18:9

στρῆνος G4764 N-GNS (1×)

Luxury, sensuality, self-indulgent excess; arrogant wantonness

The Greek term combines notions of insolence, arrogance, and sensual self-indulgence. Classical sources use it for both prideful arrogance and wanton luxury. In Revelation's prophetic judgment against Babylon, merchants mourn because the city's excessive luxury and wanton consumption have ended. The term appears in the context of economic judgment—the great commercial system that fed Babylon's insatiable appetite for luxury collapses. All translations emphasize the luxury/excess dimension (luxury, lujo, Luxus), though the term carries moral overtones of excessive, shameless self-indulgence that provokes divine judgment.

(1×) Excessive luxury, sensual self-indulgence, and wanton consumption characterized by arrogant disregard for restraint. In Revelation 18:3, the nations and kings have become intoxicated by Babylon's strēnos—the economic system of luxury trade and excessive consumption that enriched merchants. The term implies not merely wealth but morally culpable extravagance and shameless self-gratification. Babylon's judgment falls partially because this luxury system exploited and corrupted the earth, making the merchants' mourning over lost trade bitterly ironic. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11579 WITH 3 SENSES

en: luxury | es: lujo | fr: Luxus | de: Luxus Rev 18:3

στρουθ-ίον G4765 N-NNP (4×)

Sparrow; a small, common bird used in Scripture to illustrate God's care for seemingly insignificant creatures.

A diminutive of the broader Greek term for bird (strouthos), referring specifically to the sparrow, one of the most ordinary and inexpensive birds sold in Palestinian markets. Jesus invokes the sparrow in Matthew 10:29-31 and Luke 12:6-7 to make a stunning argument from lesser to greater: if God tracks the fate of a creature worth half a penny, how much more does He watch over His children? The multilingual glosses converge tightly — Spanish 'gorriones,' French 'moineau' — confirming a single, stable sense across all four occurrences.

(4×) The common sparrow, a small passerine bird proverbially cheap and unremarkable. In all four NT occurrences (Matt 10:29, 10:31; Luke 12:6-7), it serves as a rhetorical foil for divine providence: sparrows are sold two for an assarion or five for two assaria, yet not one falls apart from the Father's will. Every major translation tradition renders this with the local word for sparrow (eng 'sparrows,' spa 'gorriones,' fra 'moineau'), reflecting the universal familiarity of the species and the theological point's dependence on ordinariness. FLYING AND FLIGHT

en: sparrows | es: gorriones, pajarillos | fr: moineau | de: στρουθία, στρουθίων Matt 10:29; Matt 10:31; Luke 12:6; Luke 12:7

στόρνῡμι G4766 V-IIA-3P (6×)

To spread out, strew (garments, branches); to furnish or prepare (a room); to make (a bed).

Strōnnymi is a homely, physical verb — its basic meaning is to spread something out flat. The Gospels use it vividly in the triumphal entry narrative: crowds 'spread' (estrōsan) their cloaks and 'were spreading' (estrōnnyon) branches on the road before Jesus (Matt 21:8; Mark 11:8). The same verb takes on domestic coloring when it describes the upper room 'having been furnished' (estrōmenon) for the Last Supper (Mark 14:15; Luke 22:12). Spanish captures the range well: extendieron and tendieron for spreading, amueblado and dispuesto for furnishing. In Acts 9:34, Peter tells the healed Aeneas to 'make your bed' (strōson seautō) — the most intimate, personal use of this spreading action.

1. spread out, strew (3×) To spread out or strew on the ground — laying garments, branches, or coverings along a path as an act of honor. In Matt 21:8 and Mark 11:8, the crowds spread (estrōsan) their cloaks and kept spreading (estrōnnyon) cut branches on the road for Jesus' entry into Jerusalem. Spanish extendieron and tendieron ('they spread, they laid out') and French préparer all convey this public, ceremonial act of homage. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: spread, were-spreading | es: extendieron, las-tendían, tendieron | fr: préparer | de: ἐστρώννυον, ἔστρωσαν Matt 21:8; Mark 11:8

2. furnish, prepare a room (2×) To furnish or prepare a room — making a space ready by arranging its furnishings and coverings. In Mark 14:15 and Luke 22:12, Jesus tells the disciples they will find a large upper room 'having been furnished' (estrōmenon), ready for the Passover meal. Spanish amueblado ('furnished') and dispuesto ('arranged') highlight that this goes beyond simple spreading to full room preparation. The perfect passive participle emphasizes the completed state of readiness. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: furnished, having-been-furnished | es: amueblado, dispuesto | fr: préparer | de: ἐστρωμένον Mark 14:15; Luke 22:12

3. make one's bed (1×) To make one's bed — spreading bedding or arranging a sleeping place. In Acts 9:34, Peter commands the paralytic Aeneas: 'Make your bed' (strōson seautō), the act itself serving as proof of miraculous healing. Spanish haz-tu-cama ('make your bed') and French étendre ('to spread out') preserve the domestic, personal character of this command — a bedridden man now able to care for himself. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: make | es: haz-tu-cama | fr: étendre | de: στρῶσον Acts 9:34

στῡγ-ητός G4767 Adj-NMP (1×)

Hateful, abominable, detestable; deserving hatred

The adjective describes that which is worthy of hatred or abomination, something detestable. It can denote either hating (active) or hated (passive), though context determines which. Paul uses it in his catalogue of unregenerate human condition in Titus, describing people as 'hateful' or 'detestable'—living in malice and envy, hating one another. The term captures both the objective moral repugnance and the subjective experience of mutual hatred characterizing life apart from God's grace. All translations render the passive sense (hateful, odiosos, verhasst), emphasizing people's condition as objects of hatred rather than mere haters.

(1×) Hateful, detestable, or abominable—deserving of hatred or being in a state of hateful-ness. In Titus 3:3, Paul describes pre-conversion humanity as living 'hateful' lives, hating one another—a condition of both being hateful and actively hating. The term captures the vicious cycle of malice and mutual hatred characterizing unregenerate human relationships. Paul's point is to show the radical transformation grace accomplishes, rescuing people from this detestable condition into love, making God's mercy all the more remarkable. HATRED AND HOSTILITY

en: hateful | es: odiosos | fr: στυγητοί | de: verhasst Titus 3:3

στυγν-άζω G4768 V-PPA-NMS (2×)

To be gloomy, have a dark countenance; to look sad or threatening (of faces or weather)

Στυγνάζω means to have a gloomy, dark, or lowering look—used of both facial expressions and threatening weather. In Mark 10:22, the rich young ruler becomes gloomy (literally 'having become dark in countenance') when Jesus tells him to sell all and follow. His face falls because the cost is too great. In Matthew 16:3, Jesus refers to a threatening, overcast sky that signals coming storms, using weather-reading as a metaphor for discerning spiritual signs. The verb captures the visible darkness that appears on face or sky when trouble approaches.

(2×) Mark 10:22 uses the aorist participle (στυγνάσας, 'having become gloomy') to describe the rich man's reaction—his face visibly darkens with sadness at Jesus' demand. Matthew 16:3 uses the present participle (στυγνάζων, 'being overcast') of the sky's threatening appearance before a storm. The same verb describes both human emotional reaction and atmospheric condition, both involving visible darkening. Classical usage includes gloomy countenance and threatening weather. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: becoming-gloomy, being-overcast | es: estando-sombrío, habiéndose-entristecido | fr: sombre | de: betrueben, στυγνάζων Matt 16:3; Mark 10:22

στῦλος G4769 N-AMS (4×)

Pillar; a supporting column, used literally of architectural structure and metaphorically of persons or institutions that uphold truth.

Denotes a vertical structural support — a pillar or column — that bears the weight of a building. In the NT, the literal architectural sense recedes behind powerful metaphorical uses. Paul calls James, Cephas, and John 'pillars' of the Jerusalem church (Gal 2:9), the church itself is the 'pillar and buttress of the truth' (1 Tim 3:15), and the glorified believer becomes a permanent pillar in God's temple (Rev 3:12). The single literal-metaphorical boundary case is Rev 10:1, where an angel's legs are compared to pillars of fire, echoing the Exodus pillar of cloud and fire.

(4×) A pillar or column serving as structural support, used metaphorically of persons or communities that uphold and stabilize. In Gal 2:9, the Jerusalem apostles are 'pillars' (spa 'columnas,' fra 'colonnes,' deu 'Saeulen') — load-bearing figures in the early church. In 1 Tim 3:15, the church itself is the 'pillar and ground of truth,' and in Rev 3:12 the overcomer becomes an immovable pillar in God's temple. Rev 10:1 blends literal and figurative imagery: an angel's legs like pillars of fire, recalling the Exodus theophany (Exod 13:21). The convergence of all translations on architectural 'pillar' vocabulary confirms a single core sense applied across literal-architectural and metaphorical-ecclesial registers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-pillar, pillar, pillars | es: columna, columnas | fr: colonnes | de: Saeulen Gal 2:9; 1Tim 3:15; Rev 3:12; Rev 10:1

στωϊκ-ός G4770 Adj-GMP (1×)

Stoic, pertaining to the Stoic school of Greek philosophy

The Stoics took their name from the stoa or colonnade in Athens where their founder Zeno taught. This philosophical school emphasized virtue, rational self-control, and living in harmony with nature's rational order. They believed in divine providence but conceived divinity as impersonal cosmic reason. When Paul preached in Athens, he encountered both Epicurean and Stoic philosophers who brought him to the Areopagus. The Stoics would have found Paul's resurrection message absurd, contradicting their belief that only rational soul, not physical body, could be immortal. Luke's specificity about philosophical schools highlights the gospel's confrontation with Greek intellectual culture.

(1×) Pertaining to Stoic philosophy or identifying Stoic philosophers. In Acts 17:18, Stoic philosophers encounter Paul in Athens alongside Epicureans, eventually bringing him to the Areopagus for examination. The Stoics emphasized virtue, reason, and resignation to fate under divine providence. Their philosophical commitments would have made Paul's message about bodily resurrection particularly offensive, since they regarded matter as inferior to spirit. Luke's mention highlights the gospel's challenge to elite Greek philosophical culture. NATURE INNATE CHARACTER

en: Stoic | es: estoicos | fr: Stoïcien | de: Στοϊκῶν Acts 17:18

σύ G4771 PPro-G2S (2930×)

Second person pronoun: 'you' (singular and plural), in all grammatical cases

The second person pronoun su encompasses both singular and plural address across all Greek cases — nominative, genitive, dative, and accusative. Languages that preserve a singular/plural distinction illuminate the split clearly: Spanish uses 'de-ti' for singular but 'de-vosotros' and 'os' for plural; French distinguishes 'de-toi' from 'vous' and 'a-vous'; German contrasts 'deiner' with 'euch.' The plural form dominates (about 1,850 occurrences), often in Jesus's collective address to disciples or crowds, while the singular form (about 1,077 occurrences) appears in intimate or confrontational exchanges like the angel's word to Joseph (Matt 1:20) or Jesus's rebuke of Satan (Matt 4:10).

1. you (plural address) (1853×) Second person plural pronoun ('you all') across all cases, used when addressing multiple individuals. The multilingual evidence is decisive: Spanish 'a-vosotros / os,' French 'vous / a-vous,' and German 'euch' all mark plurality distinctly. Dominant in Jesus's teaching to groups — Matt 10:15 ('I tell you'), Matt 10:19 ('what you are to say'), Matt 12:31 ('I tell you, every sin will be forgiven'). About 1,853 occurrences. SECOND PERSON PLURAL

en: for-you, to-you, you | es: a-vosotros, de-vosotros, os | fr: vous, à-vous | de: euch Matt 3:9; Matt 10:15; Matt 10:19; Matt 10:23; Matt 12:31

2. you (singular address) (1077×) Second person singular pronoun ('you' addressing one person) across all cases. Spanish 'de-ti,' French 'de-toi,' and German 'deiner' all confirm singularity. Found in direct personal address: the angel to Joseph about Mary (Matt 1:20 'that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Spirit — your child'), Jesus to Satan (Matt 4:10 'you shall worship the Lord your God'), and intimate instruction (Matt 5:23-24 'if you are offering your gift'). About 1,077 occurrences. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: of-you, your | es: de-ti, de–ti | fr: de-toi | de: deiner Matt 1:20; Matt 4:10; Matt 5:23; Matt 5:24; Matt 5:29

συγγέν-εια G4772 N-GFS (3×)

kindred, relatives, family; one's extended family or kinship group, ties of blood relationship

A noun denoting kinship, family ties, or one's relatives collectively. Luke uses it when neighbors question naming the baby John because 'none of your kindred is called by this name' (1:61). In Acts, God commands Abraham to leave his 'kindred' (7:3), and Joseph summoned his 'kindred'—seventy-five people—to Egypt (7:14). The word encompasses the extended family network, the web of blood relationships that defined identity and obligation in ancient Mediterranean culture. Classical Greek uses it for kinship relations, family influence, and even metaphorical affinities.

(3×) Languages converge: English 'kinfolk/relatives', Spanish 'familia/parentela', French 'parenté', German transliterations (συγγένειαν, συγγενείας). The three NT uses all emphasize the social reality of kinship networks: naming practices tied to family (Luke 1:61), God's call to leave one's kin (Acts 7:3), and the extended family gathered in migration (Acts 7:14). Kinship defined social location, identity, and responsibility. BROTHER KINSMAN

en: kinfolk, relatives | es: familia, parentela | fr: parenté | de: συγγένειαν, συγγενείας Luke 1:61; Acts 7:3; Acts 7:14

συγγεν-ής G4773 Adj-GMP (12×)

syngenēs – relative, kinsman; a person connected by blood or family lineage

The adjective syngenēs ('of the same family'), used substantively as 'relative' or 'kinsman,' denotes a person joined to another by blood or lineage. Elizabeth is called Mary's syngenēs (Luke 1:36), and relatives rejoice at John the Baptist's birth (Luke 1:58). Jesus observes that 'a prophet is not without honor except among his own relatives' (Mark 6:4). Paul stretches the term toward ethnic kinship when he speaks of his 'kinsmen according to the flesh' (Rom 9:3) and greets fellow Jewish believers as 'my kinsmen' (Rom 16:7, 11, 21). Cornelius gathers his relatives before Peter's arrival (Acts 10:24). Whether the bond is immediate family or extended ethnic lineage, the underlying sense remains one of shared descent. Spanish pariente, French parent, and German Verwandte treat all occurrences identically.

relative, kinsman (12×) A blood relative or kinsman, covering immediate family ties (Elizabeth and Mary, Luke 1:36), the circle of relatives at a birth (Luke 1:58), and broader ethnic kinship (Paul's 'kinsmen according to the flesh,' Rom 9:3; 16:7, 11, 21). Spanish pariente, French parent, and German Verwandte confirm a single familial sense across all contexts. BROTHER KINSMAN

en: kinsman, kinsmen, relative | es: parienta, pariente, parientes | fr: parent | de: Verwandte, συγγενίς, συγγενεῖς Mark 6:4; Luke 1:36; Luke 1:58; Luke 2:44; Luke 14:12

συγγνώμη G4774 N-AFS (1×)

Concession, allowance, indulgence; permission granted by way of forbearance

The Greek term denotes sympathetic understanding, forbearance, or allowance—fellow-feeling that leads to granting permission or making concessions. Classical usage speaks of pardoning, excusing, or judging leniently. Paul uses it in discussing marriage, clarifying that what he says about married couples temporarily abstaining for prayer is spoken 'by way of concession, not as command.' He distinguishes pastoral allowance from apostolic command, giving freedom rather than imposing obligation. The term suggests Paul's sensitivity to human weakness and varied circumstances, moderating apostolic authority with pastoral wisdom.

(1×) A concession or allowance granted out of forbearance rather than obligation; permission given with sympathetic understanding of human limitations. In 1 Corinthians 7:6, Paul clarifies that his teaching about temporary sexual abstinence in marriage is spoken 'by way of concession,' not as divine command. This distinguishes pastoral accommodation from absolute requirement, showing Paul's awareness that not all believers have the same gift of celibacy he possesses. The concession respects human weakness while encouraging godly practice. FORGIVENESS PARDON
en: concession | es: concesión | fr: concession | de: Nachsicht 1Cor 7:6

συγκάθ-ημαι G4775 V-PPM/P-NMS (2×)

To sit together with; to be seated in company or assembly with others

Συγκάθημαι (the compound perfect form serving as present) means to sit together with someone, to be seated in the same place or assembly. Both New Testament occurrences involve sitting with others in significant contexts. In Mark 14:54, Peter sits with the servants and officers warming himself by the fire in the high priest's courtyard while Jesus is interrogated—a position of dangerous solidarity with Jesus' enemies. In Acts 26:30, after Paul's defense before Agrippa, the king and governor and Bernice and all sitting with them stand up together—marking the hearing's end. The verb emphasizes joint presence and shared space.

(2×) Mark 14:54 uses the present participle (συνκαθήμενος, 'sitting with') to describe Peter's position among the servants—physically present but spiritually compromised. Acts 26:30 uses the participle (συγκαθήμενοι, 'sitting with') of the assembled dignitaries who hear Paul together. Classical Greek uses the term for assessors sitting in judgment, persons in council together, or people living in the same quarters—emphasizing shared location and often shared purpose. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: sitting-with | es: sentado-con, sentados-con | fr: assis-avec, siéger-avec | de: mitsitzen, συνκαθήμενοι Mark 14:54; Acts 26:30

συγκαθ-ίζω G4776 V-APA-GMP (2×)

To sit together, seat together; to cause to sit jointly or to join in sitting Συγκαθίζω means to make sit together, to seat together, or intransitively to sit down together. In Luke 22:55, after kindling a fire in the high priest's courtyard, people 'sat down together' and Peter sat among them—a scene of shared warmth that becomes dangerous when Peter is recognized. In Ephesians 2:6, Paul declares that God 'seated us together' with Christ in the heavenly places—believers are co-enthroned with Christ, sharing his resurrection authority and position. The verb moves from mundane sitting around a fire to cosmic enthronement, both emphasizing joint participation.

(2×) Luke 22:55 uses the aorist participle (συνκαθισάντων, genitive absolute: 'when they had sat down together') of the group around the fire, including Peter—shared space leading to recognition and denial. Ephesians 2:6 uses the aorist indicative (συνεκάθισεν, 'he seated together') describing God's action in Christ, placing believers in heavenly position. The contrast is striking: one sitting leads to denial, the other to glorification. Classical usage includes sitting in council, settling down, and causing to sit jointly. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: having-sat-together, seated-together | es: habiéndose-sentado-juntos, nos-sentó-juntamente | fr: faire-asseoir-avec | de: sich-setzen-mit, συνκαθισάντων Luke 22:55; Eph 2:6

συγκακοπάθέω G4777 V-AMA-2S (2×)

To share in suffering together; to endure hardship jointly with another

Συγκακοπαθέω is a compound verb meaning to suffer hardship together with someone, to share in affliction jointly. Paul uses this word twice in his letters to Timothy, both times calling the younger minister to share in suffering alongside Paul. In 2 Timothy 1:8, Paul urges Timothy not to be ashamed of the gospel or of Paul's chains, but to 'share in suffering for the gospel.' In 2 Timothy 2:3, he calls Timothy to 'share hardship as a good soldier of Christ Jesus.' The term emphasizes solidarity in suffering, viewing Christian ministry as shared combat requiring mutual endurance.

(2×) Both occurrences use the aorist imperative (συνκακοπάθησον, 'share in suffering!'), commanding Timothy's active participation in Paul's afflictions. 2 Timothy 1:8 links it to gospel witness, while 2 Timothy 2:3 uses military imagery ('as a good soldier'). Paul doesn't merely ask sympathy but demands Timothy join him in the hardship itself. This compound verb appears to be Pauline coinage, combining 'together with' (συν-) and 'suffer hardship' (κακοπαθέω). ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH
en: share-in-suffering | es: sufre-junto | fr: συνκακοπάθησον | de: mitleiden 2Tim 1:8; 2Tim 2:3

συγκάκ-ουχέομαι G4778 V-PNM/P (1×)

To suffer hardship together with, to endure adversity in solidarity

This compound verb intensifies the notion of shared suffering—not merely sympathizing but actively enduring hardship together. The passive form emphasizes receiving ill-treatment alongside another. In his catalogue of faith heroes, the Hebrews author notes that Moses chose to be 'mistreated with God's people' rather than enjoy sin's fleeting pleasures in Pharaoh's household. The verb captures Moses' deliberate solidarity with enslaved Israel, preferring shared oppression with God's people to privileged isolation. The prefix syn- ('with') emphasizes covenant community over individual comfort.

(1×) To endure suffering, mistreatment, or adversity together with others in solidarity. In Hebrews 11:25, Moses chose to 'suffer hardship with God's people' rather than enjoy temporary pleasures as Pharaoh's grandson. This verb emphasizes Moses' conscious decision for communal suffering over individual privilege, identifying with slaves rather than royalty. The shared hardship becomes the pathway to shared redemption, making Moses' choice a paradigm of faith that values covenant community over worldly advantage. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: to-suffer-with | es: ser-maltratado-con | fr: mitleiden | de: mitleiden Heb 11:25

συγκάλέω G4779 V-PIA-3S (8×)

To call together, summon, convene an assembly or gathering of people.

A compound of syn ('together') and kaleo ('call'), synkaleo means to summon people into a gathered assembly. It appears in both active and middle voice in the NT. Pilate's soldiers 'called together' the whole cohort to mock Jesus (Mark 15:16). Jesus 'called together' the Twelve to give them authority (Luke 9:1). Delightfully, the parables of the lost sheep and lost coin both use synkaleo for the joyful summoning of friends and neighbors to celebrate recovery (Luke 15:6, 9). In Acts 5:21, the Sanhedrin is formally convened. The word consistently signals intentional, purposeful gathering.

call together, summon, convene (8×) To call together, summon, or convene a group of people for a specific purpose — whether formal assembly, military muster, or joyful celebration. The compound structure (syn + kaleo) emphasizes the 'togetherness' of the gathering. Spanish 'convocar' and French 'convoquer' preserve this formal summoning nuance. Luke uses it most frequently: Jesus summons the Twelve for commissioning (Luke 9:1), a shepherd calls friends to celebrate finding his lost sheep (Luke 15:6), and a woman gathers neighbors over a recovered coin (Luke 15:9). In more official contexts, Mark 15:16 has soldiers assembling a cohort, and Acts 5:21 records the convening of the Sanhedrin. GATHERING TOGETHER
en: Having-called-together, called-together, having-called-together | es: convocan, convocando, convocar | fr: convoquer | de: zusammenrufen, Συνκαλεσάμενος, συνεκάλεσαν Mark 15:16; Luke 9:1; Luke 15:6; Luke 15:9; Luke 23:13

συγ-κᾰλύπτω G4780 V-RPM/P-NNS (1×)

Covered up completely, concealed, veiled from sight

The verb means to cover thoroughly or veil entirely, often used of wrapping in garments or concealing behind veils. The perfect passive participle describes a state of being completely covered or hidden. Jesus uses this term in teaching about hidden things being revealed, declaring that nothing is 'covered up that will not be revealed.' The emphasis falls on the comprehensive nature of the concealment—thoroughly hidden, yet destined for exposure. Luke's use suggests both the current hiddenness of truth from unbelievers and the certainty of future revelation when all secrets emerge into light.

(1×) In a state of being completely covered, concealed, or veiled from sight. In Luke 12:2, Jesus declares that 'nothing is covered up that will not be revealed,' using the perfect passive participle to emphasize both thorough concealment and inevitable future disclosure. The saying warns hypocrites that their hidden sins will be exposed, but also encourages disciples that truth currently obscured will ultimately triumph. The comprehensive covering cannot prevent eventual revelation when God brings all to light. HIDING AND CONCEALING en: having-been-covered-up | es: encubierto | fr: caché | de: συγκεκαλυμμένον Luke 12:2

συγ-κάμπτω G4781 V-AMA-2S (1×)

To bend or bow down together; to cause to stoop under burden

The verb describes bending, bowing, or stooping—whether in sitting down, bending under weight, or the body's doubled-over posture. It can suggest the natural posture of sitting with legs folded or the pathological bending of disease. Paul quotes Scripture about enemies whose backs are 'bowed down,' using imagery of perpetual burden or subjugation. The verb appears in judgment contexts where God causes adversaries to stoop under the weight of divine judgment. The physical imagery of bent backs suggests both punishment and permanent humiliation.

(1×) To bend or bow down, particularly under weight or burden; to cause to stoop. In Romans 11:10, Paul quotes Psalm 69, asking God to 'bend their backs continually'—making Israel's enemies stoop under perpetual burden. The imagery suggests both judgment (forced bowing under divine displeasure) and the physical manifestation of that judgment in ongoing oppression. The verb's range includes natural bending and pathological doubling over, here deployed metaphorically for permanent subjugation or humiliation as divine retribution. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES
en: bow-together | es: encorva | fr: faiblir | de: zusammenbeugen Rom 11:10

συγκατα-βαίνω G4782 V-APA-NMP (1×)

To go down together with, to descend in company, to accompany downward

The compound verb emphasizes descent undertaken together or in company with others. Classical usage speaks of going down to the sea together, descending in solidarity, or stooping to another's level. The literal sense of physical descent combines with metaphorical notions of condescension or accompanying into difficulty. When Paul appeals to the Judean leaders about his case, he invites those with authority to 'go down together' with him to Caesarea to make their accusations. The compound suggests both the physical journey and the legal solidarity of shared accusation.

(1×) To descend or go down together with someone, traveling in company downward to a location. In Acts 25:5, Festus invites Jewish leaders to 'go down together' with him to Caesarea to accuse Paul, using the plural participle to emphasize collective descent from Jerusalem to the coastal city. The compound verb stresses accompaniment and joint action—traveling together for the shared purpose of legal accusation. Physical descent becomes the vehicle for legal confrontation. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: having-gone-down-with | es: habiendo-descendido-juntos | fr: aller-avec | de: συνκαταβάντες Acts 25:5

συγκατά-θεσις G4783 N-NFS (1×)

Agreement, approval, consent, concord; joint assent or accord

The noun denotes agreement, approval, or joint consent—minds aligned in the same judgment. Classical philosophy distinguished this from mere opinion, using it technically for the mind's assent to perception. In Stoic thought, it meant the decisive mental assent that constitutes belief. Paul employs it rhetorically, asking what 'agreement' the temple of God has with idols—expecting the answer 'none.' The term emphasizes incompatibility rather than mere difference, suggesting that fundamental accord between God's temple and false worship is categorically impossible.

(1×) Agreement, concord, or harmonious consent between parties; shared assent to the same position. In 2 Corinthians 6:16, Paul asks rhetorically what 'agreement' exists between God's temple and idols, expecting the answer 'absolutely none.' The term emphasizes fundamental compatibility or incompatibility—whether two entities can coexist in harmonious accord. Paul's point is that believers as God's temple cannot maintain agreement or fellowship with idolatry; the two are mutually exclusive categories that cannot find common ground. EQUITABLE AGREEMENT
en: agreement | es: acuerdo | fr: accord | de: Uebereinstimmung 2Cor 6:16

συγκατα-τίθημι G4784 V-RPM/P-NMS (1×)

To agree with, to consent to, to vote together; to assent jointly

The middle voice of this compound verb means to place one's vote or opinion alongside another's, thereby agreeing or consenting. Classical usage speaks of depositing votes together, conforming to another's judgment, or assenting to proposals. Luke describes Joseph of Arimathea as a council member who 'had not consented' to the council's decision and action regarding Jesus. The perfect middle participle emphasizes Joseph's sustained refusal to align his vote with the majority condemnation. His dissent becomes significant evidence of faithful resistance within the Sanhedrin itself.

(1×) To give consent or agreement by joining one's vote or opinion with others; to assent jointly to a decision. In Luke 23:51, Joseph of Arimathea is described with the perfect passive participle as one who 'had not consented' to the council's decision to condemn Jesus. The verb's political overtones (voting together, depositing the same judgment) emphasize Joseph's deliberate dissent from the majority verdict. His refusal to consent marks him as a righteous man who resisted injustice despite peer pressure within the Sanhedrin. AGREE CONSENT ACCORD
en: having-agreed | es: habiendo-consentido | fr: consentir | de: συνκατατεθειμένος Luke 23:51

συγκατα-ψηφίζομαι G4785 V-AIP-3S (1×)

To be numbered together with, to be reckoned among, to be enrolled jointly

This compound verb means to count or reckon together with others, to be enrolled in the same group. The passive voice emphasizes being counted or numbered by others' action. After prayer, the disciples cast lots between Joseph and Matthias, and Matthias 'was numbered with the eleven apostles.' The verb emphasizes official inclusion in the apostolic group, filling Judas's vacant position. The passive construction indicates divine providence working through the lot-casting to accomplish the enrollment. Being numbered among the Twelve meant sharing in both authority and suffering of apostleship.

(1×) To be counted, numbered, or enrolled together with a group; to be reckoned among others. In Acts 1:26, after casting lots, Matthias 'was numbered with the eleven apostles,' officially joining the apostolic circle. The passive voice suggests both human action (the lot-casting) and divine will (God's selection) combining to accomplish this enrollment. Being numbered among the apostles meant full inclusion in their witness, authority, and coming persecution—not honorary membership but substantial participation in apostolic ministry and suffering. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: he-was-numbered-with | es: fue-contado-junto-con | fr: compter | de: συνκατεψηφίσθη Acts 1:26

συγκερ-άννῡμι G4786 V-RPM/P-AMP (2×)

To mix together, blend; to unite or combine intimately into one

Συγκεράννυμι means to mix or blend together, to combine elements into a unified whole. In 1 Corinthians 12:24, Paul uses this verb in describing how God 'composed' (mixed together) the body, giving greater honor to the less honorable parts—the church as a blended unity of diverse members. In Hebrews 4:2, the verb appears in a difficult phrase about the word not benefiting hearers because it was 'not united by faith' with those who heard—the gospel message must be blended with faith to be effective. Both uses emphasize intimate combination, whether of body parts into an organism or of message with receptive faith.

(2×) 1 Corinthians 12:24 uses the aorist indicative (συνεκέρασεν, 'God mixed together/composed') describing God's design of the body as an integrated whole from diverse parts. Hebrews 4:2 uses the perfect passive participle (συγκεκερασμένους, 'having been mixed together/united') in a complex construction about faith and hearing. Classical Greek used the term for mixing wine, blending ingredients, tempering substances, and metaphorically for combining qualities or elements into harmonious wholes. MIXING WITH OIL

en: blended-together, having-been-united | es: habiendo-sido-mezclados, mezcló | fr: mêler, vermischen | de: vermischen 1Cor 12:24; Heb 4:2

συγκῑν-έω G4787 V-AIA-3P (1×)

To stir up, to agitate, to incite to action; to provoke emotionally

The verb means to stir up, agitate, or set in motion—whether literally stirring a mixture or metaphorically provoking emotions and crowds. It can describe sympathetic emotion or hostile agitation. When Stephen preached in Jerusalem, his opponents 'stirred up the people, elders, and scribes,' agitating them to violent action against him. The verb captures the deliberate incitement that transformed theological disagreement into mob violence. The compound suggests thorough or collective agitation—mobilizing the entire community. Stephen's stoning followed this systematic stirring up of popular and official opposition.

(1×) To stir up, agitate, or incite people to emotional action or violent response. In Acts 6:12, Stephen's opponents 'stirred up the people and the elders and the scribes,' deliberately agitating them to arrest and eventually stone him. The verb emphasizes intentional provocation rather than spontaneous reaction—systematic incitement that mobilizes mob violence. This stirring up precedes Stephen's arrest and martyrdom, showing how theological opposition transforms into physical persecution through calculated agitation of both populace and authorities. STIR UP INCITE

en: they-stirred-up | es: alborotaron | fr: mouvoir | de: συνεκίνησάν Acts 6:12

συγ-κλείω G4788 V-AIA-3S (4×)

To shut up together, confine, enclose; used of catching fish in a net and of God consigning all under sin or law.

A compound verb (syn + kleio, 'shut together') meaning to enclose, hem in, or confine on all sides. Its NT usage spans a vivid literal scene and a profound theological metaphor. In Luke 5:6, it describes the miraculous catch where fish are enclosed in a net about to break. Paul then deploys the same verb theologically in Romans 11:32 and Galatians 3:22-23: God has 'shut up' all people under disobedience or under the law so that mercy and faith might become the only exit. The Spanish distinction between 'encerraron' (they enclosed) and 'siendo encerrados' (being enclosed) mirrors the active-passive theological dynamic.

(4×) To shut in, enclose, or confine together — either physically or in a theological-juridical sense. Literally, in Luke 5:6 a massive haul of fish is enclosed (synekleisan) in the nets. Theologically, Paul uses the passive and active forms to describe God's purposeful confinement: Scripture 'shut up all things under sin' (Gal 3:22), the law held people 'shut up' before faith was revealed (Gal 3:23), and God 'shut up all in disobedience' so that He might show mercy to all (Rom 11:32). The multilingual evidence (spa 'encerró/encerrados,' fra 'enfermer,' deu 'einschliessen') uniformly reflects enclosure, confirming a single semantic core applied to both concrete and abstract domains. SHUTTING AND CLOSING

en: being-confined, imprisoned, shut-up-together | es: encerraron, encerró, siendo-encerrados | fr: enfermer | de: einschliessen, συνέκλεισαν Luke 5:6; Rom 11:32; Gal 3:22; Gal 3:23

συγκληρονόμ-ος G4789 Adj-NMP (4×)

Joint heir, co-heir; one who shares an inheritance together with another, especially as fellow heirs with Christ.

A compound adjective (syn + kleronomos) designating someone who inherits alongside another. All four NT occurrences carry rich theological freight. In Romans 8:17, believers are 'co-heirs with Christ' — sharing in His glory if they share in His suffering. Ephesians 3:6 extends the concept to Gentiles who are co-heirs of the promise. Hebrews 11:9 applies it to the patriarchs who shared the same promise. First Peter 3:7 applies it domestically: husbands and wives as joint heirs of the grace of life. The multilingual unanimity (spa 'coherederos,' fra 'cohéritier,' deu 'Miterben') reflects the transparency of the compound.

(4×) A co-inheritor, one who participates jointly in an inheritance. The term always denotes shared reception of a divine gift or promise. In Rom 8:17, believers are co-heirs with Christ (synkleronomoi Christou), sharing both His suffering and His glory. Eph 3:6 marks the Gentiles' inclusion as 'fellow heirs' of the Abrahamic promise alongside Israel — a radical expansion. Heb 11:9 groups Isaac and Jacob as co-heirs of the same promise given to Abraham. 1 Pet 3:7 applies the concept within marriage, calling wives 'co-heirs of the grace of life.' The cross-linguistic glosses (spa 'coherederos,' fra 'cohéritier,' deu 'Miterben') all preserve the compound structure, reflecting how naturally the syn- prefix communicates shared participation. HEIR INHERITOR

en: co-heirs, fellow-heirs | es: a-coherederas, coherederos | fr: Miterben, cohéritier | de: Miterben Rom 8:17; Eph 3:6; Heb 11:9; 1Pet 3:7

συγκοινων-έω G4790 V-ASA-2P (3×)

to share in, participate together in; to have fellowship or partnership in something, often with moral implications

A compound verb meaning to share jointly in something, to have fellowship or partnership together. Paul warns against sharing in the 'unfruitful works of darkness' (Eph 5:11), commends the Philippians for sharing in his affliction (Phil 4:14), and Revelation warns against sharing in Babylon's sins (18:4). The word combines 'together' and 'common/share,' emphasizing joint participation—you become complicit or united with what you share in. Classical uses include sharing in honor, being connected to something, or going shares in business or profit.

(3×) Translations cluster: English 'have fellowship/share', Spanish 'participar/co-participar', French/German 'teilhaben' (to partake). The three NT uses warn against wrong sharing (darkness, sin) and commend right sharing (suffering for Christ). The prefix

'together' (συν-) highlights that shared participation creates community—either in evil (making you guilty) or in affliction (making you partners in the gospel). SHARE PARTICIPATE FELLOWSHIP

en: have-fellowship, having-shared, you-might-share | es: co-participando, participéis | fr: teilhaben | de: teilhaben Eph 5:11; Phil 4:14; Rev 18:4

συγκοινων-ός G4791 N-AMP (4×)

Fellow partaker, co-sharer; one who participates jointly with others in something, whether suffering, grace, or promise.

A compound noun (syn + koinonos) meaning a joint participant or co-sharer. Where synkleronomos (G4789) focuses on inheritance, synkoinonos emphasizes active sharing in a common experience or enterprise. Paul uses it to describe Gentile believers grafted into Israel's 'root and fatness' (Rom 11:17), his own partnership in the gospel (1 Cor 9:23), the Philippians' shared participation in grace (Phil 1:7), and John's fellowship with his readers in tribulation, kingdom, and patient endurance (Rev 1:9). The term consistently conveys solidarity through shared experience.

(4×) A joint partaker or fellow sharer — one who participates alongside others in a common reality. In Rom 11:17, Gentile believers become 'co-sharers' (synkoinonos) of the rich root of the olive tree, grafted into Israel's covenant blessings. In 1 Cor 9:23, Paul does everything 'for the sake of the gospel, so that I may be a fellow partaker of it.' Phil 1:7 describes the Philippians as Paul's co-sharers in grace, both in his imprisonment and in the defense of the gospel. Rev 1:9 presents John as a 'fellow partaker in the tribulation and kingdom and patient endurance in Jesus.' The multilingual glosses (spa 'co-partícipes,' fra 'compagnon,' deu 'Mitteilhaber') all emphasize joint participation, distinguishing this term from mere beneficiary status. PARTNERSHIP AND SHARING

en: a-fellow-sharer, fellow-partaker, fellow-sharers | es: co-partícipes, co-partícipe | fr: Mitteilhaber, compagnon | de: Mitteilhaber Rom 11:17; 1Cor 9:23; Phil 1:7; Rev 1:9

συγκομ-ίζω G4792 V-AIA-3P (1×)

To carry together, to gather up; to carry away for burial

The verb means to carry or bring together, to collect or gather. It was used of harvesting crops, gathering possessions, or carrying the dead to burial. The middle voice often meant gathering to oneself. When Stephen was stoned, 'devout men carried him to burial,' using this verb to describe the reverent gathering up and burial of the first martyr. The term appears in agricultural contexts of gathering harvest, making its use for gathering Stephen's body poignant—the faithful harvest their martyred brother for honorable burial despite the danger.

(1×) To carry together for burial, to gather up and inter the deceased with reverence. In Acts 8:2, devout men 'carried Stephen to burial' after his stoning, using this verb that elsewhere describes gathering harvest or collecting valuable possessions. The term emphasizes careful, reverent collection of the martyr's body for proper burial—an act of courage and devotion since giving honorable burial to one executed for blasphemy risked official displeasure. These unnamed faithful men gathered Stephen as precious harvest for God's kingdom. BURYING THE DEAD

en: carried-together | es: sepultaron | fr: emporter | de: συνεκόμισαν Acts 8:2

συγκρίνω G4793 V-PPA-NMP (3×)

to compare, combine, or interpret together; to bring things into relation for evaluation or explanation

A verb meaning to compare, combine, or bring together for examination. It appears in 1 Corinthians 2:13, where Paul explains spiritual truths by 'combining spiritual things with spiritual words,' and twice in 2 Corinthians 10:12, where Paul refuses to compare himself with self-commending opponents who 'measure themselves by one another.' Classical uses include forming compounds, comparing items for evaluation, and examining statements side-by-side. The NT uses involve both interpretive synthesis (matching spiritual content with spiritual expression) and evaluative comparison (measuring people against standards).

(3×) All translations use 'compare': English 'comparing/to compare', Spanish 'comparando/compararnos', French 'comparer', German 'vergleichen'. The two contexts differ: 1 Cor 2:13 emphasizes interpretive combination (Spirit-given words for Spirit-revealed truths), while 2 Cor 10:12 critiques self-referential comparison (measuring themselves by themselves, not by Christ). Both involve bringing things together to assess relationship or fit. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: comparing, to-compare | es: comparando, compararnos, comparándose | fr: comparer | de: vergleichen 1Cor 2:13; 2Cor 10:12

συγκύπτω G4794 V-PPA-NFS (1×)

To be bent over double, to stoop down under burden or infirmity

The verb describes bending forward, stooping down, or being bowed together—whether in natural posture or pathological condition. It can suggest horses bowing heads together, children stooping in play, or bodies doubled over by disease or burden. Jesus encounters a woman with a spirit of infirmity who 'was bent over' and completely unable to straighten herself for eighteen years. The present participle emphasizes the ongoing, chronic nature of her condition. Her liberation and straightening becomes a powerful sign of Sabbath restoration and Satan's defeat.

(1×) To be bent over or doubled up, unable to straighten one's body due to infirmity or burden. In Luke 13:11, a woman had a spirit of infirmity for eighteen years and 'was bent over,' completely unable to stand upright. The participle describes her chronic, pathological condition—body permanently bowed by demonic oppression. Jesus' healing not only cures physical deformity but liberates from spiritual bondage, letting her stand upright after years of forced stooping. Her straightening signifies both physical restoration and spiritual liberation. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: bent-over | es: encorvada | fr: courbée | de: συνκύπτουσα Luke 13:11

συγκῠρ-ία G4795 N-AFS (1×)

Chance, coincidence, happenstance; an unexpected meeting

The noun denotes chance occurrences, coincidental meetings, or random happenstance. Classical usage speaks of 'chance annoyances' and unexpected encounters. Jesus uses it in the Good Samaritan parable when the priest comes down the road 'by chance' and encounters the wounded man. The term emphasizes the apparent randomness from the priest's perspective—he didn't plan to find a victim. Yet within Jesus' parable, this 'chance' encounter becomes the test of covenant faithfulness. The term highlights the gap between human perspective (coincidence) and divine providence (ordained encounter).

(1×) Chance, coincidence, or happenstance; an unexpected or random encounter. In Luke 10:31, a priest comes down the road 'by chance' and sees the man wounded by robbers. The term emphasizes the unplanned, apparently random nature of the meeting from the priest's viewpoint—he didn't seek this encounter. Yet Jesus' parable transforms 'chance' into divine testing: the coincidental meeting reveals character and covenant faithfulness. What appears as happenstance becomes the arena where love and duty are weighed. FATE CHANCE HAPPENING

en: coincidence | es: casualidad | fr: hasard | de: συγκυρίαν Luke 10:31

συγχαίρω G4796 V-PMA-2P (7×)

To rejoice together with someone; to share in another's joy or congratulate them on a happy occasion.

Denotes the act of joining in another person's gladness, whether at a birth, a recovery of something lost, or a communal celebration. In Luke 15, the shepherd and the woman who finds her lost coin each call neighbors to 'rejoice with me' — Spanish captures this warmly as 'gozaos conmigo' and 'regocijaos conmigo,' underscoring the communal summons. Paul extends the idea beyond social festivities into the life of the body of Christ: when one member is honored, all rejoice together (1 Cor 12:26), and love itself 'rejoices with the truth' (1 Cor 13:6).

rejoice with, share joy (7×) To share joy with another person or group, joining in their gladness over a happy event. The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform — French 'se réjouir avec,' German 'sich mitfreuen,' Spanish 'regocijaos conmigo' — each foregrounding the participatory, communal dimension. In the parables of Luke 15:6, 9 it describes neighbors called to celebrate the recovery of something lost, while in 1 Cor 12:26 it extends to mutual rejoicing within the body of Christ. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: I-rejoice-with, Rejoice-with, rejoice-together | es: Gozaos-conmigo, me-regocijo-con, regocijaos-conmigo | fr: se-réjouir-avec | de: sich-mitfreuen, Συνχάρητέ, συνέχαιρον Luke 1:58; Luke 15:6; Luke 15:9; 1Cor 12:26; 1Cor 13:6

συγχέω G4797 V-RPM/P-NFS (5×)

To confound, throw into confusion; to stir up, bewilder, or create uproar among people.

This vivid verb literally means to pour together or mix up, but in Acts it consistently describes the social and psychological upheaval caused by unexpected events. When the crowd at Pentecost heard their own languages spoken, they were 'confounded' (Acts 2:6). Saul's powerful preaching threw the Damascus Jews into confusion (Acts 9:22), and mob chaos in Ephesus and Jerusalem shows the word's capacity for both inner bewilderment and outward riot. Spanish captures both dimensions with 'confundir' (bewilder) and 'alborotar' (create uproar).

(5×) To throw into confusion or uproar — whether the internal bewilderment of a crowd that cannot process what they are witnessing (Acts 2:6, the multilingual miracle at Pentecost) or the external chaos of a rioting mob (Acts 19:32, Acts 21:27). Spanish 'confundir' and 'alborotar' together capture the full range: cognitive disorientation and social upheaval. All five NT occurrences appear in Acts, reflecting Luke's interest in the turbulent public response to the gospel's advance. SHAME AND REVERENCE

en: confused, is-in-confusion, was-confounding | es: alborotaban, confundida, confundía | fr: confondre | de: συγκεχυμένη, συνέχεον, συνέχυννεν Acts 2:6; Acts 9:22; Acts 19:32; Acts 21:27; Acts 21:31

συγχράομαι G4798 V-PIM/P-3P (1×)

To have dealings with, to associate with, to use jointly in commerce or relationship

The verb means to use together with others, to have commerce or dealings with, to associate with. It describes commercial transactions, social intercourse, and general interaction. The present tense indicates ongoing relationship or customary practice. The Samaritan woman expresses surprise that Jesus asks her for water, since 'Jews have no dealings with Samaritans.' The verb captures the ethnic-religious segregation that made this cross-cultural conversation shocking. John explains the mutual avoidance that made Jesus' request boundary-breaking. The term's commercial overtones suggest the refusal extended beyond personal friendliness to economic and social boycott.

(1×) To have dealings, associate, or engage in commercial and social interaction with others. In John 4:9, the narrator explains that 'Jews have no dealings with Samaritans,' using this verb to describe the comprehensive mutual avoidance—not merely personal unfriendliness but systematic social, religious, and economic segregation. Jesus' simple request for water violates this boundary, making it scandalous. The woman's surprise highlights how deeply this non-association was internalized. Jesus' willingness to have dealings signals the gospel's boundary-crossing power. PARTNERSHIP AND SHARING

en: have-dealings | es: tratan-juntos | fr: ne-pas-avoir-de-rapport | de: Umgang-haben John 4:9

σύγ-χῠσις G4799 N-GFS (1×)

Confusion, disorder, tumult; mixture or commotion

The noun denotes mixing together, confusion, disorder, or tumult. Classical usage speaks of political confusion, mingled mixtures, and the confusion of Babel's languages. It can mean commingling, indistinct disorder, or chaotic tumult. When the Ephesian crowd riots over Paul's threat to Artemis worship, the entire city is filled with 'confusion'—disorder and tumultuous uproar. The term captures both the physical chaos of the mob and the mental confusion preventing rational discourse. Paul's preaching catalyzes upheaval, revealing the clash between gospel truth and entrenched religious-economic systems.

(1×) Confusion, disorder, or tumultuous commotion; chaotic disturbance preventing clarity or order. In Acts 19:29, the whole city of Ephesus is filled with 'confusion' when the mob riots against Paul, fearing economic loss from declining Artemis worship. The term describes both the physical tumult (rushing together to the theater) and mental disorder (most didn't know why they assembled). This confusion serves the enemy of truth, preventing rational examination of Paul's claims. The sygchysis reveals how economic interests and religious devotion combine to resist the gospel. TUMULT AND UPROAR

en: with-confusion | es: confusión | fr: confusion | de: συγχύσεως Acts 19:29

συζῶ G4800 V-FIA-1P (3×)

to live together with, share life with; to cohabit or exist in common life with someone

A compound verb meaning to live together with, to share a common life. Paul uses it three times: 'if we died with Christ, we believe we will also live with him' (Rom 6:8, 2 Tim 2:11), and declaring the Corinthians are in his heart 'to die together and to live together' (2 Cor 7:3). The word combines 'together' (συν-) with 'live' (ζάω), emphasizing shared existence—not just proximity but common life. Classical uses include living together domestically, dwelling alongside, or sharing a way of life.

(3×) Languages show the compound: English 'live together/live with', Spanish 'vivir juntos/co-viviremos', French 'vivre ensemble/mitleben', German 'mitleben' (live with). Paul's uses all tie shared living to shared dying: believers united to Christ in death share His resurrection life (Rom 6:8, 2 Tim 2:11), and Paul's bond with Corinth means shared destiny—dying together or living together (2 Cor 7:3). Common life flows from common death. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: to-live-together, we-will-live-together, we-will-live-with | es: co-viviremos, vivir-juntos, viviremos-con | fr: mitleben, vivre-ensemble | de: mitleben Rom 6:8; 2Cor 7:3; 2Tim 2:11

συ-ζεύγνῡμι G4801 V-AIA-3S (2×)

To yoke together, join; particularly to join in marriage, unite in one Συζεύγνυμι means to yoke together, particularly used of joining in marriage. Jesus uses this verb in both Matthew and Mark when teaching about divorce: 'What God has joined together, let not man separate.' The imagery of yoking evokes two oxen bound together to pull a load, emphasizing the permanent, functional unity marriage is designed to be. God himself is the one who joins husband and wife, creating a bond that transcends human contracts or social customs. The verb stresses divine action in creating marital union and the resulting indissolubility of that bond.

(2×) Matthew 19:6 and Mark 10:9 contain identical wording: 'What therefore God has joined together (συνέζευξεν, aorist), let not man separate.' Both appear in Jesus' teaching about marriage and divorce, responding to Pharisaic questions. The aorist tense emphasizes God's definitive act of joining at the moment of marriage. Classical usage includes yoking horses or oxen, pairing in marriage, and metaphorically coupling or closely uniting any two things. CLINGING AND JOINING en: joined-together | es: unió | fr: unir | de: zusammenfuegen, συνέζευξεν Matt 19:6; Mark 10:9

συζητ-έω G4802 V-PIA-2P (10×)

To debate or discuss together; ranges from hostile disputation with opponents to collaborative inquiry among companions.

A compound verb (syn + zeteo, 'seek together') that captures the full spectrum of joint verbal exchange. In the Gospels it appears both in hostile settings—scribes disputing with Jesus's disciples at the foot of the Mount of Transfiguration (Mark 9:14, 16)—and in reflective moments, as when the Emmaus disciples 'discussed together' the events of Jesus's death (Luke 24:15). The Spanish and French consistently render both senses with discutir/discuter, confirming a shared root idea of vigorous back-and-forth exchange whose tone is set by context rather than by the verb itself.

1. argue, dispute (6×) To argue, dispute, or debate contentiously with an adversary. The scribes dispute with the disciples while Jesus is on the mountain (Mark 9:14, 16), Stephen's synagogue opponents cannot withstand his wisdom so they dispute with him (Acts 6:9), and Paul disputes in Damascus after his conversion (Acts 9:29). Multilingual glosses converge on confrontational terms: English 'arguing/disputing,' Spanish 'discutiendo/discutía,' reflecting a public, often hostile exchange. ARGUE DISPUTE DEBATE

en: are-you-arguing, arguing, disputing | es: a-discutir, discutiendo, discutía | fr: discuter | de: disputieren, συζητοῦντες, συνεζήτει Mark 8:11; Mark 9:14; Mark 9:16; Mark 12:28; Acts 6:9

2. discuss, inquire together (4×) To discuss, confer, or question together in an inquisitive or deliberative manner. When Jesus teaches with authority in Capernaum, the crowd questions among themselves 'What is this?' (Mark 1:27), the disciples discuss the meaning of 'rising from the dead' (Mark 9:10), and the Twelve debate who might betray Jesus (Luke 22:23). Spanish 'discutir' and French 'discuter' cover both senses, but the context here is communal inquiry rather than adversarial confrontation. ARGUE DISPUTE DEBATE

en: questioning, to-discuss, to-question | es: a-discutir, discutiendo, discutir | fr: discuter | de: disputieren, συζητεῖν Mark 1:27; Mark 9:10; Luke 22:23; Luke 24:15

συζήτ-ησις G4803 N-AFS (1×)

Joint inquiry, mutual questioning; debate or disputation

The noun denotes collaborative investigation, joint discussion, or disputation. Classical usage speaks of philosophical joint inquiry. In NT usage, it takes on more contentious overtones of disputation and debate. After Paul's teaching in Rome, the Jews departed 'having much disputation among themselves.' The term suggests vigorous, perhaps contentious debate—not harmonious consensus but divided opinions producing extended argument. Luke emphasizes the division Paul's message creates even among his fellow Jews. The noun captures both the intellectual engagement and the conflict that gospel proclamation generates.

(1×) Debate, disputation, or contentious discussion arising from divergent opinions. In Acts 28:29 (textual variant), the Jews depart after Paul's teaching 'having much disputation among themselves'—not quiet agreement but vigorous, divided debate. The term suggests that Paul's scriptural argument about Jesus as Messiah created sharp disagreement within the Jewish community, some persuaded and others resistant. This disputation fulfills Isaiah's prophecy about divided response, showing how truth provokes either acceptance or hardened rejection, rarely indifference. CONTROVERSY DISPUTE

en: discussion | es: discusión | fr: discussion | de: συζήτησιν> Acts 28:29

συζητ-ητής G4804 N-NMS (1×)

One who disputes or debates, particularly in philosophical or theological contexts

A disputant or debater, someone skilled in philosophical or rhetorical argument. Paul uses this term in 1 Corinthians 1:20 when asking "Where is the debater of this age?" The word emphasizes intellectual contestation rather than simple disagreement—this is someone who makes a practice of challenging ideas through formal disputation. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'debatidor', French 'discuteur', German 'Disputierer') all capture this sense of active, skilled argumentation.

(1×) The single New Testament occurrence depicts a professional or habitual arguer, one who engages in debate as a characteristic activity. Paul contrasts worldly wisdom with God's revelation, and the 'debater' represents those who rely on human reasoning and dialectical skill. The cross-linguistic agreement on 'debater/disputant' confirms this refers to more than casual disagreement—it's someone whose identity is bound up in intellectual combat. ARGUE DISPUTE DEBATE

en: debater | es: debatidor | fr: discuteur | de: Disputierer 1Cor 1:20

σύζῠγ-ος G4805 Adj-VMS (1×)

Yoke-fellow, one joined together in work or purpose; comrade, partner

A companion or partner who shares the same burden, literally 'yoked together' like oxen working side by side. In Philippians 4:3, Paul addresses a 'true yokefellow' (translated variously as 'companion' or 'fellow worker'), appealing to this trusted partner to help two women resolve their conflict. The term carries deep connotations of shared labor and mutual commitment. Whether Paul means a specific individual or uses it as a name, the image is of someone bound in common purpose.

(1×) Partnership in ministry or shared purpose, drawing on the agricultural image of two animals yoked together to pull a load. The multilingual evidence shows interpretive variation: English 'yokefellow' preserves the metaphor, Spanish 'compañero' emphasizes companionship, German 'Mitarbeiter' (co-worker) stresses collaborative labor, while French retains the Greek untranslated. This single occurrence in Philippians captures both intimacy and shared mission. FELLOW WORKER

en: yokefellow | es: compañero | fr: σύζυγε | de: Mitarbeiter Phil 4:3

συζωοποιέω G4806 V-AIA-3S (2×)

To make alive together with; to quicken or give life jointly with Christ

Συζωοποιέω is a compound verb meaning to make alive together with someone, specifically to give spiritual life jointly with Christ. Paul uses this term in both Ephesians and Colossians when describing God's gracious work in salvation. Believers who were dead in trespasses have been 'made alive together with Christ'—God's act of resurrection applied to Christ becomes the believer's experience as well. The 'together with' (συν-) emphasizes union with Christ: his death and resurrection become ours through faith. This co-vivification is pure grace, the foundation of salvation.

(2×) Ephesians 2:5 declares 'even when we were dead in trespasses, [God] made us alive together with Christ (συνεζωοποίησεν)—by grace you have been saved.' Colossians 2:13 says 'And you, being dead in trespasses... he made alive together (συνεζωοποίησεν) with him.' Both emphasize God's action, believers' prior deadness, and the joint resurrection with Christ. This compound verb appears to be Pauline, combining 'together' (συν-) with 'make alive' (ζωοποιέω). ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: he-made-alive-together, made-alive-together | es: nos-dio-vida-juntamente-con, vivificó-juntamente | fr: συνεζωοποίησεν | de: lebendig-machen-mit Eph 2:5; Col 2:13

σῡκᾰμιν-ος G4807 N-DFS (1×)

Mulberry tree, a cultivated fruit-bearing tree

The mulberry tree, a common fruit-bearing tree in the Mediterranean world. In Luke 17:6, Jesus uses the mulberry tree in a saying about faith: if his disciples had faith like a mustard seed, they could command a mulberry tree to be uprooted and planted in the sea. The choice of this particular tree—known for its deep root system—emphasizes the impossibility being described, making the power of faith all the more striking. Some lexicons note confusion with the sycamore-fig, but this is the true mulberry.

(1×) A specific fruit tree used in Jesus's hyperbolic teaching on faith's power. The multilingual glosses show some confusion: English

'mulberry-tree' is correct, but Spanish 'sicomorero' and French 'sycomore' appear to conflate it with the sycamore-fig (συκόμορος, G4809). This lexical overlap in translation traditions reflects botanical ambiguity in the ancient world, though Luke uses distinct Greek terms for the two trees. FIG AND SYCAMORE

en: mulberry-tree | es: sicomorero | fr: sycomore | de: συκαμίνῳ Luke 17:6

σῡκέα G4808 N-GFS (16×)

Fig tree (Ficus carica); a common fruit tree in the Mediterranean, used literally and as a symbol of Israel's spiritual condition.

Syke refers to the common fig tree, one of the most characteristic plants of the biblical landscape. Jesus curses a barren fig tree on his way to Jerusalem, and it withers overnight—an enacted parable of judgment on unfruitful Israel (Matt 21:19-21; Mark 11:13-21). The fig tree also serves as a seasonal sign: when its branches become tender and put forth leaves, summer is near, just as certain signs herald the Son of Man's coming (Matt 24:32; Mark 13:28). Nathanael is found sitting under a fig tree (John 1:48-50), evoking a traditional setting for Torah study. Spanish higuera, French figuier, and German Feigenbaum all denote the same well-known species.

a fig tree (16×) The fig tree (Ficus carica), a fruit-bearing tree ubiquitous in Mediterranean agriculture and central to biblical imagery. Literal references describe its budding as a harbinger of summer (Matt 24:32; Mark 13:28; Luke 21:29). Its most dramatic appearance is Jesus' cursing of the fruitless fig tree near Jerusalem (Matt 21:19-21; Mark 11:13-21), widely understood as a prophetic sign-act against spiritual barrenness. Nathanael's encounter under a fig tree (John 1:48) draws on the Jewish tradition of studying Scripture in its shade. Uniform cross-linguistic rendering confirms a single botanical referent. FIG AND SYCAMORE

en: a-fig-tree, fig-tree | es: higuera | fr: figuier | de: Feigenbaum Matt 21:19; Matt 21:20; Matt 21:21; Matt 24:32

σῡκόμορ-ος G4809 N-AFS (1×)

Sycamore-fig tree (Ficus sycomorus), a large spreading tree

The sycamore-fig, a large, sturdy tree with low-spreading branches, common in Palestine and Egypt. In Luke 19:4, Zacchaeus climbs a sycamore to see Jesus passing through Jericho. The detail is vivid: this tree's structure made it easy to climb despite Zacchaeus's short stature, and its size meant he could see over the crowd. The Greek συκόμορος comes from Hebrew 'shikemah', distinguishing it from the true mulberry. Its accessibility made it the perfect perch for a desperate tax collector seeking a glimpse of the teacher.

(1×) The specific tree species Zacchaeus climbed, notable for its climbable structure and widespread presence in Jericho. All major translations preserve 'sycamore' (with spelling variants), recognizing this as distinct from the mulberry tree of Luke 17:6. The German retains the Greek form, while other languages use their standard botanical terms. The narrative detail serves Luke's characterization: Zacchaeus's determination overcomes both physical and social obstacles. FIG AND SYCAMORE

en: a-sycamore-tree | es: sicómoro | fr: sycomore | de: συκομορέαν Luke 19:4

σῦκον G4810 N-ANP (4×)

Fig; the fruit of the fig tree, used literally and as a metaphor for the correspondence between nature and character.

The common Greek word for the fruit of the fig tree (syke). Figs were a dietary staple in the ancient Mediterranean and carried proverbial significance. Jesus uses figs in sayings about discerning true character from visible fruit: 'Do you gather figs from thorns?' (Matt 7:16; Luke 6:44). Mark 11:13 narrates the cursing of the barren fig tree, where Jesus sought figs and found none. James 3:12 asks whether a fig tree can produce olives or a grapevine figs, illustrating the impossibility of mixed moral output from a single source.

(4×) The fig, fruit of the fig tree (Ficus carica), used both as a concrete agricultural reference and as a metaphor for moral-spiritual fruitfulness. In Matt 7:16 and Luke 6:44, figs appear in Jesus' teaching that true character is known by its fruit — 'figs are not gathered from thornbushes.' Mark 11:13 narrates Jesus approaching a fig tree seeking fruit and finding none, a prophetic sign-act against fruitless Israel. Jas 3:12 uses the fig in an argument about consistent character: a fig tree cannot yield olives. The multilingual glosses (spa 'higos,' fra 'figue,' deu 'Feige') are perfectly stable, reflecting the universally recognized fruit with no semantic ambiguity across any occurrence. FIG FRUIT

en: figs, of-figs | es: de-higos, higos | fr: figue | de: Feige, σῦκα Matt 7:16; Mark 11:13; Luke 6:44; Jas 3:12

σῡκοφαντ-έω G4811 V-ASA-2P (2×)

To accuse falsely, extort; to blackmail or oppress through false charges

Συκοφαντέω originally meant to act as a 'fig-informer' (συκοφάντης), later developing into the general meaning of falsely accusing, blackmailing, or oppressing through vexatious prosecution. By New Testament times, it commonly described extortion by officials or false accusation for personal gain. John the Baptist tells soldiers not to 'accuse anyone falsely' or extort money (Luke 3:14). Zacchaeus, the repentant tax collector, confesses that if he has defrauded anyone, he will restore fourfold (Luke 19:8). Both contexts involve those in positions of power tempted to abuse it through false charges or extortion.

(2×) Luke 3:14 uses the aorist subjunctive (συκοφαντήσητε, 'do not accuse falsely') in John's ethical instruction to soldiers—a negative command against abuse of authority. Luke 19:8 uses the aorist indicative (ἐσυκοφάντησα, 'I defrauded/extorted') in Zacchaeus's confession of past wrongs. Classical Greek extensively documented this term for blackmail, vexatious prosecution by officials, false accusation, and oppression of the weak—a significant social problem in ancient Athens and later. DEFRAUD PLUNDER ROB

en: I-defrauded, accuse-falsely | es: acuséis-falsamente, defraudé | fr: accuser-faussement | de: συκοφαντήσητε, ἐσυκοφάντησα Luke 3:14; Luke 19:8

σῡλᾰγωγέω G4812 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

To carry off as plunder, take captive, despoil someone of possessions or freedom

To seize and carry away as spoils of war or conquest, to take someone captive. Paul warns the Colossian church in 2:8 to beware lest anyone 'carry you off as plunder' through philosophy and empty deceit. The military imagery is vivid: false teachers are portrayed as raiders who would enslave believers through deceptive arguments. The word combines the ideas of captivity and robbery—not just intellectual error, but spiritual kidnapping that strips victims of their freedom in Christ.

(1×) Intellectual and spiritual plundering through deceptive teaching. The military domain classification fits the metaphorical violence Paul describes. Spanish 'que haga presa' (make prey of) and German 'als Beute führen' (lead as booty) preserve the predatory imagery, while English 'carrying off' and French retain the seizure element. Paul's warning treats false philosophy as a form of warfare against the church's freedom. TAKE CAPTIVE

en: carrying-off | es: que-haga-presa | fr: συλαγωγῶν | de: als-Beute-fuehren Col 2:8

σῡλ-άω G4813 V-AIA-1S (1×)

To rob, plunder, strip of possessions; to despoil someone

To rob or strip someone of their possessions, often in military contexts referring to stripping armor from slain enemies. Paul uses this word in 2 Corinthians 11:8 with deliberate irony: 'I robbed other churches' by accepting financial support from them so he could serve the Corinthians without charge. The harsh verb underscores his self-deprecating point—by his critics' logic, his refusal to accept Corinthian money meant he was 'stealing' from other congregations. The word typically implies violent seizure, making Paul's self-accusation all the more sardonic.

(1×) Paul's ironic self-description of accepting support from other churches. The economic/property domain fits the literal sense, though Paul uses it metaphorically. Spanish 'desvalijé' (despoiled), French 'dépouiller' (stripped), German 'berauben' (robbed) all capture the violent connotations. The hyperbole serves Paul's rhetorical strategy: if refusing Corinthian money is a fault, then serving them for free must have made him a 'robber' of those who did support him. DEFRAUD PLUNDER ROB

en: I-robbed | es: desvalijé | fr: dépouiller | de: berauben 2Cor 11:8

συλλᾰλ-έω G4814 V-IIA-3P (6×)

To talk with or together; to converse or confer, ranging from informal exchange to official deliberation.

Sullaleo is a compound of sun (together) and laleo (speak) — at its core, it means to talk with someone or among a group. On the Mount of Transfiguration, Moses and Elijah are 'talking together' with Jesus (Matt 17:3; Mark 9:4; Luke 9:30), and in Capernaum the astonished crowd talks among themselves about Jesus' authority (Luke 4:36). But the word can also carry official weight: in Acts 25:12, Festus 'confers' with his council before rendering a judicial decision. Spanish distinguishes the two registers neatly — 'conversar/hablar' for informal exchange, 'conferir' for deliberation.

1. talk with, converse (5×) To speak or converse with someone, engaging in mutual verbal exchange in a narrative or informal setting. On the Mount of Transfiguration, Moses and Elijah are seen talking with Jesus (Matt 17:3; Mark 9:4; Luke 9:30) — an event so remarkable that all three Synoptics record it using sullaleo. Luke 4:36 uses it for the crowd's astonished chatter after a demonic exorcism, and Luke 22:4 for Judas's private negotiation with the chief priests. Translations converge on conversational vocabulary: Spanish 'conversaban/hablaban,' French 'parler avec,' German 'sich besprechen.' SPEAKING AND TALKING en: he-spoke-with, talking-with, they-were-speaking-together | es: conversaban, hablaban-entre-sí, hablando-con | fr: parler-avec | de: sich-besprechen, συλλαλοῦντες, συνελάλησεν Matt 17:3; Mark 9:4; Luke 4:36; Luke 9:30; Luke 22:4

2. confer, deliberate (1×) To confer or deliberate in an official or judicial setting, carrying a nuance of formal consultation before a decision. In Acts 25:12, after Paul appeals to Caesar, Festus confers (sullalesas) with his advisory council before pronouncing his ruling. Spanish 'habiendo conferido' and English 'having conferred' capture the deliberative gravity that sets this usage apart from casual conversation — the prefix sun- here implies collective weighing of a matter, not merely talking together. COUNSEL AND DELIBERATION en: having-conferred | es: habiendo-conferido | fr: parler-ensemble | de: συλλαλήσας Acts 25:12

συλλαμβάνω G4815 V-APA-NMP (16×)

Seize, arrest, or catch (physically); conceive or become pregnant; help or assist (take hold together with).

Few Greek verbs cover as startling a semantic range as syllambano — 'to take together.' Its literal core of grasping and seizing dominates the passion narratives and arrest scenes: soldiers syllambano-seize Jesus in Gethsemane (Matt 26:55; Luke 22:54; John 18:12), and Peter is syllambano-arrested by Herod (Acts 12:3). Yet Luke also chooses this same verb for the most intimate of beginnings: Mary 'will conceive' a son (Luke 1:31), Elizabeth 'has conceived' in her old age (Luke 1:36), and sin 'conceives' and gives birth to death (Jas 1:15). Spanish captures the split beautifully — prender for arrest, concebir for pregnancy — while Greek holds both in one word. The rarest sense, 'to help,' preserves the prefix syn- most transparently: partners 'take hold together' to haul in a catch of fish (Luke 5:7).

1. seize, arrest, catch (9×) To seize, arrest, or catch — physically taking hold of a person (as a prisoner) or catching fish or animals. This dominant sense (9 occurrences) centers on arrest narratives: the crowd seizes Jesus with swords and clubs (Matt 26:55; Mark 14:48), officers arrest him in the garden (John 18:12), and Peter is seized by Herod (Acts 12:3). The miraculous catch of fish in Luke 5:9 uses the same verb for the haul that astonished Simon Peter. Spanish prender, Arabic قبض (seize), and Korean 잡다 all deploy arrest-specific vocabulary here. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: Having-seized, arrested, having-arrested | es: Habiendo-prendido, a-prender, a-prenderme | fr: saisir | de: ergreifen, ergreift Matt 26:55; Mark 14:48; Luke 5:9; Luke 22:54; John 18:12

2. conceive, become pregnant (5×) To conceive or become pregnant — used of a woman receiving life in her womb or, metaphorically, of sin 'conceiving' death. Five occurrences cluster in Luke's infancy narratives: Elizabeth conceiving John (Luke 1:24, 36), the angel's announcement to Mary (Luke 1:31), and the naming of Jesus after he 'was conceived in the womb' (Luke 2:21). James 1:15 extends the metaphor strikingly: desire 'conceives and gives birth to sin.' Spanish concebir, French concevoir, and Arabic حبلت all employ dedicated pregnancy vocabulary entirely distinct from the arrest terms of sense 1. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: being-conceived, conceived, has-conceived | es: concebirás, concibió, ha-concebido | fr: saisir | de: ergreifen, ergreift Luke 1:24; Luke 1:31; Luke 1:36; Luke 2:21; Jas 1:15

3. help, assist (2×) To help or assist — literally 'to take hold together with' someone, preserving the syn- prefix in its cooperative force. Two occurrences: the fishermen signal their partners to come and 'help' them haul the catch (Luke 5:7), and Paul asks his fellow worker to 'help' certain women who labored with him in the gospel (Phil 4:3). Spanish ayudar, Arabic ساعد, and Korean 돕다 all shift to explicit help vocabulary. The etymological connection to the other senses is transparent — seizing together becomes assisting together — but translators consistently treat this as a distinct meaning. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: help, to-help | es: ayuda, ayudar | fr: saisir | de: ergreifen, ergreift Luke 5:7; Phil 4:3

συλλέγω G4816 V-AMA-2P (8×)

To gather, collect, or pick: bringing things together, especially in harvest contexts.

Syllego means to gather or collect items together, and the NT uses it almost exclusively in agricultural and parabolic settings. Jesus asks rhetorically whether grapes are gathered from thornbushes or figs from thistles (Matt 7:16; Luke 6:44). The parable of the wheat and tares features syllego prominently: servants ask whether to gather the weeds, and at harvest angels will collect the tares for burning (Matt 13:28-30, 40-41). The dragnet parable similarly gathers the good fish into containers (Matt 13:48). The word pictures careful, purposeful collecting — sorting what is valuable from what is not.

gather, collect (8×) To gather, collect, or pick items — typically in harvest or sorting contexts, bringing scattered things into one place. Spanish 'recoger' (to pick up, collect) and French 'ramasser' (to gather up) capture the physical action of collecting from the ground or field. Nearly every NT use occurs in Jesus's parables: the rhetorical question about gathering grapes from thorns (Matt 7:16; Luke 6:44), the servants' offer to collect weeds from among wheat (Matt 13:28-30), the angels who will gather out all causes of sin at the end of the age (Matt 13:40-41), and fishermen sorting their catch (Matt 13:48). The verb consistently implies purposeful separation and collection. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: Gather, do-they-gather, gathering | es: Recoged, es-recogida, recogen | fr: ramasser | de: sammelt Matt 7:16; Matt 13:28; Matt 13:29; Matt 13:30; Matt 13:40

συλλογ-ίζομαι G4817 V-AIM-3P (1×)

To reason, reckon together, conclude by logical inference

To reason through something logically, to calculate or reckon up the implications of a situation. In Luke 20:5, when religious leaders are asked about John's baptism—whether from heaven or from men—they 'reasoned among themselves,' calculating the political consequences of each answer. The word emphasizes deliberative thinking, weighing options and drawing conclusions. It's intellectual reckoning, though in this case their reasoning is cynical: they're not seeking truth but avoiding a trap.

(1×) Strategic deliberation weighing the consequences of different responses. The leaders' reasoning in Luke 20:5 is politically motivated calculation. Spanish 'razonaron' and German forms preserve the reasoning aspect, while French 'raisonner' emphasizes logical discourse. The narrative shows reasoning divorced from truth-seeking—they know the right answer about John's authority but refuse to give it because of what it would cost them politically. DISCUSS PONDER REASON

en: they-reasoned | es: razonaron | fr: raisonner | de: συνελογίσαντο Luke 20:5

συλλῡπέω G4818 V-PPM/P-NMS (1×)

To grieve with, share in another's pain; to be sympathetically distressed

To grieve together with someone, to feel sympathetic pain at another's suffering. In Mark 3:5, Jesus looks at the Pharisees 'grieved at their hardness of heart.' The word captures Jesus's emotional response to their stubborn refusal to rejoice that a man's withered hand was about to be healed on the Sabbath. This is not anger alone but sorrowful pain at the spiritual blindness that prevents them from celebrating mercy. The 'shared grief' element suggests Jesus suffers with them over their own condition.

(1×) Jesus's grief over the Pharisees' hardened hearts, a compassionate pain at their spiritual state. Spanish 'entristecido' (saddened) and German 'mitbetrübt sein' (co-grieved) capture the sympathetic dimension, while French 'être attristé' (be saddened) emphasizes the emotional state. Mark's detail reveals Jesus's complex response: anger at injustice mingled with grief at what sin has done to these religious leaders. His sorrow is itself an act of identification with their loss. SUFFERING PAIN

en: grieving | es: entristecido | fr: être-attristé | de: mitbetruebt-sein Mark 3:5

συμβαίνω G4819 V-APA-GMP (8×)

To happen, occur, come about: events befalling a person or coming to pass.

Originally meaning 'to walk together' or 'to meet,' symbaino evolved into a standard Greek term for events happening or coming to pass. In the NT it consistently describes noteworthy occurrences. The two disciples on the road to Emmaus discuss 'the things that had happened' (Luke 24:14). Paul recounts 'the things that happened to me' through trials (Acts 20:19). Peter urges believers not to be surprised at the 'fiery trial happening' to them (1 Pet 4:12). Paul draws typological lessons from events that 'happened' to Israel as examples for the church (1 Cor 10:11). The word frames events as significant, not merely incidental.

happen, come about (8×) To happen, occur, come about, or befall — describing events that take place, often with a note of significance or consequence. German 'geschehen' (to happen, to come to pass) and Spanish 'suceder' (to occur) match the neutral-yet-weighty register. Luke 24:14 uses it for the momentous events the Emmaus disciples discuss; Acts 3:10 describes the crowd's astonishment at what 'had happened' to the healed beggar. Paul employs it both autobiographically for his trials (Acts 20:19) and typologically for Israel's wilderness experiences as warnings (1 Cor 10:11). Peter's use in 1 Pet 4:12 frames present suffering as something purposefully 'happening,' not random misfortune. GOING AND LEADING en: happened, happening, has-happened | es: ha-sucedido, que-me-sobrevinieron, suceder | fr: arriver | de: geschehen, συμβάντων, συμβεβηκότι Mark 10:32; Luke 24:14; Acts 3:10; Acts 20:19; Acts 21:35

συμβάλλω G4820 V-ANA (6×)

To bring together; hence to confer, meet or encounter, contribute help, or ponder inwardly.

Symballō literally means 'to throw together,' and its New Testament uses fan out beautifully from that root image. Philosophers in Athens 'throw words together' with Paul in debate (Acts 17:18); a king calculates whether he can 'meet' an approaching army (Luke 14:31); Apollos 'throws in his share' to help the Achaian believers (Acts 18:27); and Mary 'throws together' in her heart the astonishing things the shepherds reported (Luke 2:19). Spanish captures the range nicely—from 'discutían' (debated) through 'se encontró' (met) to 'meditando' (pondering)—showing how one Greek verb bridges external encounter and internal reflection.

1. to converse, confer, debate (2×) To converse, confer, or debate with others—literally 'throwing words together.' In Acts 4:15 the Sanhedrin members conferred among themselves, and in Acts 17:18 Epicurean and Stoic philosophers 'were conversing with' Paul. Spanish 'conferían' and 'discutían' underscore the deliberative, back-and-forth character of these exchanges. COUNSEL AND DELIBERATION

en: they-conferred, were-conversing-with | es: conferían, discutían | fr: réfléchir | de: συνέβαλλον Acts 4:15; Acts 17:18

2. to meet, encounter (2×) To meet or encounter someone, whether in a hostile military context or a peaceful personal meeting. Luke 14:31 pictures a king assessing whether he can 'meet' (symbalein) an opposing force—Spanish 'a encontrar'—while Acts 20:14 describes the peaceful reunion with Paul at Assos. The root image of two parties 'thrown together' underlies both hostile and friendly encounters. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING

en: he-met, to-engage | es: a-encontrar, se-encontró | fr: réfléchir | de: συμβαλεῖν, συνέβαλλεν Luke 14:31; Acts 20:14

3. to help, contribute, assist (1×) To contribute, help, or assist, a middle-voice usage meaning 'to throw in one's share alongside others.' Acts 18:27 says Apollos 'contributed greatly' (synebaleto) to the believers through his gift of argument. Spanish 'ayudó' (helped) highlights the cooperative, supportive dimension distinct from mere meeting or debating. HELP AND ASSISTANCE

en: contributed | es: ayudó | fr: réfléchir | de: συνεβάλετο Acts 18:27

4. to ponder, consider in one's heart (1×) To ponder or consider inwardly, turning things over in one's heart. In Luke 2:19 Mary 'was pondering' (symballousa) the shepherds' words, mentally 'throwing together' events and their significance. Spanish 'meditando' and the domain classification under Think confirm this as an internalized, reflective process rather than external conversation. DISCUSS PONDER REASON

en: pondering | es: meditando | fr: réfléchir | de: συμβάλλουσα Luke 2:19

συμβᾰσῐλ-εύω G4821 V-FIA-1P (2×)

to reign together with someone, share royal authority

This verb describes co-reigning, sharing in royal authority alongside another. Paul uses it ironically in 1 Corinthians 4:8 when he wishes the Corinthians really had begun to reign so the apostles could reign with them. In 2 Timothy 2:12, it appears in a trustworthy saying about enduring suffering: if we endure, we will reign with Christ. The multilingual evidence consistently points to the compound idea of joint rulership.

(2×) Describes sharing in royal authority or kingly rule with another person, especially with Christ in the eschatological kingdom. The cross-lingual glosses (Spanish 'co-reinaremos,' French 'régner-avec,' German 'mitherrschen') all preserve the compound 'with' structure, highlighting the collaborative nature of this reign. Paul's ironic use in 1 Cor 4:8 and the solemn promise in 2 Tim 2:12 frame this as eschatological hope dependent on present endurance. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: might-reign-together, we-will-reign-with | es: co-reinaremos, reinemos-juntos! | fr: régner-avec, συμβασιλεύσομεν | de: mitherrschen 1Cor 4:8; 2Tim 2:12

συμβῐβ-άζω G4822 V-AIA-3P (7×)

To knit together, unite; instruct; bring forward; prove; conclude — from 'bringing together' physically to intellectually

A richly layered Greek verb whose root meaning is 'to bring together,' but whose New Testament uses span physical union, intellectual instruction, logical proof, and inferential reasoning. Paul uses it theologically to describe the body of Christ being 'knit together' in love (Col 2:2; Eph 4:16), echoing the physical sense of ligaments joining bones. Yet the same word can mean to instruct someone by 'putting things together' for them (1 Cor 2:16, quoting Isa 40:13 LXX), to prove a case by marshaling evidence (Acts 9:22), or to draw a conclusion from a vision (Acts 16:10). Spanish distinguishes these deftly: 'siendo-unido' for the bodily union, 'instruirá' for teaching, 'demostrando' for proving, and 'concluyendo' for inferring — four different words where Greek uses one.

1. to knit together, unite (3×) To knit together or unite into an organic whole, used of the spiritual body of Christ. In Eph 4:16, the whole body is 'being held together' by every joint and ligament; in Col 2:19, believers are joined to the Head; and in Col 2:2, hearts are 'united in love.' German 'zusammenfuegen' (to join together) and Spanish 'siendo-unido/unidos' (being united) capture the corporate, structural unity. The image draws on the verb's classical sense of physically fastening things together. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: being-held-together, having-been-united | es: siendo-unido, siendo-unidos, unido | fr: συμβιβαζόμενον, συμβιβασθέντες | de: zusammenfuegen Eph 4:16; Col 2:2; Col 2:19

2. to instruct, teach (1×) To instruct or teach by bringing information together for someone's understanding. In 1 Cor 2:16, Paul quotes Isa 40:13 LXX: 'Who has known the mind of the Lord so as to instruct (symbibasai) him?' The semantic path from 'bring together' to 'instruct' runs through the idea of assembling facts so that understanding emerges. Spanish 'instruirá' (will instruct) isolates this pedagogical sense, while the LXX background confirms it was well established before Paul. INSTRUCT PROVE CONCLUDE

en: will-instruct | es: instruirá | fr: joindre | de: zusammenfuegen 1Cor 2:16

3. to bring forward, put forward (1×) To bring someone forward or push them into a public situation. In Acts 19:33, during the silversmith riot in Ephesus, the Jews 'brought forward' (synebibasan) Alexander from the crowd, evidently to make a defense. Spanish 'sacaron' (they pulled out) conveys the physical extraction from a crowd. This sense is closest to the verb's etymological root of physically bringing together or conducting someone to a place. INSTRUCT PROVE CONCLUDE

en: they-brought-forward | es: sacaron | fr: joindre | de: συνεβίβασαν Acts 19:33

4. to prove, demonstrate (1×) To prove or demonstrate by assembling evidence into a compelling argument. In Acts 9:22, the newly converted Saul 'was proving' (symbibazon) that Jesus is the Christ, confounding the Damascus Jews with his scriptural reasoning. Spanish 'demostrando' (demonstrating) highlights the rhetorical force. The logical sense develops naturally from 'bringing together' premises to reach a conclusion — the same intellectual gathering that underlies sense 2, here directed toward persuasion rather than instruction. INSTRUCT PROVE CONCLUDE

en: proving | es: demostrando | fr: joindre | de: συμβιβάζων Acts 9:22

5. to conclude, infer (1×) To conclude or infer by putting observations together. In Acts 16:10, after Paul sees the Macedonian man in a vision, 'we concluded' (symbibazontes) that God had called them to preach the gospel there. Spanish 'concluyendo' and English 'concluding' both emphasize the inferential process — gathering the evidence of the vision and drawing out its meaning. This is the most abstract extension of the root 'bring-together' idea: not physical joining, not instruction, but pure rational inference. INSTRUCT PROVE CONCLUDE en: concluding | es: concluyendo | fr: joindre | de: συμβιβάζοντες Acts 16:10

συμβουλ-εύω G4823 V-APA-NMS (4×)

To advise, counsel, or deliberate; used of giving guidance and of conspiring together in hostile planning.

A verb meaning to give counsel or advice, with a semantic range that stretches from benevolent recommendation to hostile conspiracy. The same word that describes Caiaphas's political calculation (John 18:14) and the plot against Jesus (Matt 26:4) also covers the Damascus conspiracy against Paul (Acts 9:23) and Christ's gracious counsel to the Laodicean church to buy refined gold (Rev 3:18). Context alone determines whether the counsel is constructive or destructive, making this a single sense with a strong contextual polarity shift.

(4×) To counsel, advise, or deliberate — ranging from benevolent guidance to hostile conspiracy depending on context. In Matt 26:4, the chief priests and elders 'plotted together' (syneboulesusanto) to arrest Jesus by stealth, and in Acts 9:23 Jews in Damascus 'conspired' to kill Paul — both hostile deliberation. John 18:14 recalls Caiaphas's earlier advice (symbouleusen) that it was expedient for one man to die for the people, ironic counsel that unwittingly served God's purpose. By contrast, Rev 3:18 presents Christ's loving counsel: 'I advise you to buy from me gold refined by fire.' The multilingual evidence (spa 'aconsejo/deliberaron,' fra 'conseiller,' deu 'raten') preserves the advisory core across both constructive and adversarial registers. COUNSEL AND DELIBERATION en: I-counsel, having-advised, plotted-together | es: Te-aconsejo, deliberaron, que-aconsejó | fr: conseiller | de: raten, συνεβουλεύσαντο Matt 26:4; John 18:14; Acts 9:23; Rev 3:18

συμβούλ-ιον G4824 N-ANS (8×)

Counsel, consultation, plot; a council of advisors

The noun symboulion carries two related but distinguishable senses rooted in the idea of deliberation. Most frequently in the New Testament it denotes the act of taking counsel or hatching a plot — a conspiratorial meeting of minds rather than a formal body. The Pharisees 'took counsel' against Jesus (Matt 12:14), they plotted how to entrap him (Matt 22:15), and the chief priests 'took counsel' to put him to death (Matt 27:1). In a single occurrence at Acts 25:12, however, it refers to the actual advisory council that accompanied the Roman governor Festus, a technical term for the consilium of Roman provincial administration.

1. (7×) Counsel, consultation, or plot — the act of deliberating together, typically with hostile or strategic intent. This sense appears seven times, always in the phrase symboulion lambanein or symboulion didonai ('to take counsel' or 'to give counsel'). The Pharisees take counsel to destroy Jesus (Matt 12:14), to trap him with the question about taxes (Matt 22:15), and the chief priests conspire to condemn him (Matt 27:1) and then deliberate about the blood money (Matt 27:7) and bribing the guards (Matt 28:12). Spanish 'consejo' and French 'conseil' consistently render the deliberative action, while German 'Beratung' and 'Rat' both emphasize the planning process. Mark 3:6 and 15:1 round out this hostile-consultation pattern. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-council, counsel | es: consejo | fr: conseil | de: Beratung, Rat Matt 12:14; Matt 22:15; Matt 27:1; Matt 27:7; Matt 28:12

2. (1×) A council of advisors — the formal body assembled to consult with a governing official, corresponding to the Latin consilium. At Acts 25:12 the Roman governor Festus confers 'with his council' (meta tou symbuliou) before ruling that Paul will be sent to Caesar. English 'council,' Spanish 'consejo,' and French 'conseil' overlap with sense 1 in form, but the shift from abstract action to concrete governing body is clear from context. German 'Beratung' (deliberation) somewhat underplays the institutional character that the Greek and Latin parallels suggest. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: council | es: consejo | fr: conseil | de: Beratung Acts 25:12

σύμβουλ-ος G4825 N-NMS (1×)

Counselor, advisor; one who gives guidance in decisions

An advisor or counselor, someone who provides guidance in matters requiring wisdom and decision-making. Paul quotes Isaiah 40:13 in Romans 11:34: 'Who has been his counselor?'—a rhetorical question emphasizing that God needs no human advisor. The term was used for political and military advisors in Greek literature, as well as for official Roman legates. Paul's use underscores God's complete independence: the creator of all wisdom requires no consultant to inform his decisions about Israel's salvation or the inclusion of the Gentiles.

(1×) God's absolute independence from human counsel. The rhetorical question in Romans 11:34 denies any advisory role in God's plan. Spanish 'consejero', French 'conseiller', German 'Ratgeber', English 'counselor' all agree on the advisory function. Paul's point is that God's mysterious plan to save Jews and Gentiles alike through mercy was conceived without human input—no one stood beside God as consultant when he designed this gospel. COUNSEL AND DELIBERATION

en: counselor | es: consejero | fr: conseiller | de: Ratgeber Rom 11:34

Συμεών G4826 N-NMS (7×)

Simeon — a Hebrew proper name (from Shim'on) borne by several NT figures including the devout elder and the apostle Peter.

The indeclinable Greek form of the Hebrew name Shim'on (meaning 'hearing' or 'one who hears'), used in the NT for at least five distinct individuals. Most memorably, it names the aged worshipper in the temple who took the infant Jesus in his arms and pronounced the Nunc Dimittis (Luke 2:25, 34). It also designates Simeon called Niger in the Antioch church (Acts 13:1), and serves as the more Hebraic form of Simon Peter's name, as when James uses it at the Jerusalem council (Acts 15:14) and in the opening of 2 Peter.

Simeon (proper noun) (7×) A Hebrew proper name (Συμεών, from שִׁמְעוֹן) applied to several individuals in the NT: the devout elder who blessed the child Jesus in the temple (Luke 2:25, 34), an ancestor of Jesus in Luke's genealogy (Luke 3:30), Simeon called Niger at Antioch (Acts 13:1), and the apostle Peter under his Hebraic name (Acts 15:14; 2 Pet 1:1). All translations treat it as an indeclinable transliteration — Spanish 'Symeón,' French 'Siméon,' German 'Simeon' — preserving its Semitic origin distinct from the Hellenized Σίμων. SIMEON PERSONAL NAME

en: Sumeōn, Symeon, Symeōn | es: Symeón, de-Symeón | fr: Siméon, Syméon | de: Simeon, Συμεών, Συμεὼν Luke 2:25; Luke 2:34; Luke 3:30; Acts 13:1; Acts 15:14

συμμᾰθητής G4827 N-DMP (1×)

Fellow disciple, one who learns alongside another under the same teacher

A fellow pupil or disciple, someone learning under the same master. In John 11:16, Thomas speaks to 'his fellow disciples,' urging them to go with Jesus to Judea even if it means dying with him. The word emphasizes shared learning and shared commitment—they are not just companions but fellow students in the school of Jesus. The term appears in classical Greek for schoolfellows or fellow apprentices learning the same craft. Here it marks the bonds of the Twelve, united in their apprenticeship to Jesus.

(1×) The common discipleship shared by the Twelve under Jesus. Thomas addresses them as partners in learning and following. Spanish 'condiscípulos', French 'condisciple', German 'Mitjünger' all preserve the 'co-disciple' construction, emphasizing equality in their student relationship. The context is poignant: Thomas's fatalistic courage ('let us also go, that we may die with him') speaks to fellow learners who share both the journey and its risks. DISCIPLE LEARNER

en: fellow-disciples | es: condisípulos | fr: condisciple | de: Mitjuenger John 11:16

συμμαρτῠρέω G4828 V-PPA-GFS (3×)

to bear witness together with, testify jointly with another; to confirm someone's testimony by adding one's own

A compound verb meaning to bear witness together or in support of another, to co-testify. Paul uses it three times: the law and conscience 'bear witness together' to Gentile moral knowledge (Rom 2:15), the Spirit 'bears witness with our spirit' that we are God's children (8:16), and Paul's conscience 'bears witness with him' in the Spirit (9:1). The prefix 'together' (συν-) emphasizes corroborating testimony—two witnesses confirming the same reality. Classical uses include supporting someone's testimony or being in astrological aspect.

(3×) Translations preserve the compound: English 'bearing witness together/with', Spanish 'dando testimonio juntamente/conmigo', French 'témoigner avec', German 'mitbezeugen' (testify with). Paul's theology of dual witness appears in all three uses: conscience and law together, Spirit and spirit together, conscience and Spirit together. The 'with' matters—single testimony might be doubted, but corroborating witnesses establish truth. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: bearing-witness-together, bearing-witness-with, bears-witness-together | es: da-testimonio-junto-con, dando-testimonio-conmigo, dando-testimonio-juntamente | fr: témoigner-avec | de: mitbezeugen Rom 2:15; Rom 8:16; Rom 9:1

συμμερ-ίζω G4829 V-PIM/P-3P (1×)

To share in, participate jointly in benefits or activities

To have a share in something together with others, to participate jointly in benefits or duties. In 1 Corinthians 9:13, Paul argues that those serving at the altar 'share in what is offered on the altar'—they partake of the sacrificial meals as part of their priestly service. The word emphasizes joint participation in something divided among multiple parties. Paul uses this Old Testament pattern to justify financial support for Christian ministers: if temple workers share in temple provisions, gospel workers should share in gospel support.

(1×) The priestly right to share in sacrificial offerings, used as analogy for ministerial support. The association domain fits the collaborative aspect. Spanish 'participan' (participate), French 'partager' (share), German 'mitteilen' (share/communicate) all capture the distributive sense. Paul's reasoning connects Old Testament priestly rights to New Testament ministry: shared participation in sacred work entitles workers to shared participation in material provisions. SHARE PARTICIPATE FELLOWSHIP

en: share | es: participan | fr: partager | de: mitteilen 1Cor 9:13

συμμέτ-οχος G4830 Adj-ANP (2×)

fellow partaker, one who shares with others in something

This compound adjective describes those who participate together in the same reality or blessing. In Ephesians 3:6, Gentiles are described as fellow partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus, a stunning declaration of inclusion. In Ephesians 5:7, believers are warned not to become fellow partakers with those who practice disobedience. The term emphasizes shared participation, not mere association.

(2×) Denotes joint participation or shared ownership in something, whether blessing or sin. The multilingual renderings (Spanish 'copartícipes,' German 'Mitteilhaber') capture the compound structure indicating partnership. The two Ephesians passages show opposite applications: the positive inclusion of Gentiles in God's promise (3:6) versus the negative warning against sharing in others' disobedience (5:7), demonstrating the neutral nature of the term itself. PARTNERSHIP AND SHARING

en: fellow-partakers | es: copartícipes | fr: συμμέτοχα, συμμέτοχοι | de: Mitteilhaber Eph 3:6; Eph 5:7

συμμῑμ-ητής G4831 N-NMP (1×)

Fellow imitator, one who joins in imitating a model or pattern

A co-imitator, someone who joins with others in following the same example. Paul exhorts the Philippians in 3:17 to 'become fellow imitators of me' and to observe those who walk according to the pattern he and his companions provide. The word emphasizes communal mimicry—not solitary copying but shared modeling that creates a community shaped by common examples. In ancient educational culture, imitation of models was central to moral formation. Paul calls believers to imitate him together as he imitates Christ.

(1×) Joint participation in imitating Paul's Christ-centered pattern of life. The Philippians are called not just individually to copy Paul but corporately to become fellow-imitators, a community formed by shared modeling. The movement domain seems misclassified; this is about moral formation through example. Spanish 'Co-imitadores', German 'Mitahmer' preserve the 'co-' prefix, while French simply transcribes the Greek. Paul's call creates a chain of imitation: Christ → Paul → the Philippians together. FOLLOWING AND DISCIPLESHIP

en: fellow-imitators | es: Co-imitadores | fr: Συμμιμηταί | de: Mitahmer Phil 3:17

σύμμορφ-ος G4832 Adj-AMP (2×)

conformed to, having the same form or shape as something

This adjective describes conformity in form or shape to a pattern or prototype. Romans 8:29 speaks of believers being conformed to the image of God's Son, expressing the divine purpose of transformation. Philippians 3:21 describes Christ transforming our lowly bodies to be conformed to his glorious body. Both passages envision a radical transformation into Christlikeness, body and character.

(2×) Indicates sharing the same form, shape, or nature as something else, particularly being shaped to match a prototype. The cross-lingual evidence (Spanish 'conforme,' French 'conforme,' German 'gleichgestaltet') emphasizes the result of conforming rather than the process. In both NT occurrences, believers are being conformed to Christ—his character (Rom 8:29) and his resurrection body (Phil 3:21)—expressing the goal of Christian transformation. LIKENESS AND COMPARISON

en: conformed | es: conforme, conformes | fr: conforme, gleichgestaltet | de: gleichgestaltet Rom 8:29; Phil 3:21

συμμορφ-ίζομαι G4833 V-PPM/P-NMS (1×)

To be conformed to, molded into the same form or pattern as another

To be formed together with, to share in the same shape or pattern. Paul speaks in Philippians 3:10 of 'becoming conformed to his death,' sharing in the pattern of Christ's suffering. The word suggests a deep transformation that goes beyond surface imitation—it's about being reshaped into the same mold. In context, Paul has just spoken of knowing Christ, the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings. Conformity to Christ's death is the pathway to knowing resurrection power, a paradoxical identification with the crucified Messiah.

(1×) Paul's desire to share in the pattern of Christ's death as the way to resurrection life. The passive voice emphasizes divine action: Paul is being conformed, molded by participation in Christ's sufferings. Spanish 'siendo conformado' (being conformed) and German 'gleichgestaltet' (made alike in form) capture the transformative process. This is more than moral example; it's mystical participation in Christ's death-and-resurrection pattern as the shape of Christian existence. EXAMPLES AND TYPES

en: being-conformed | es: siendo-conformado | fr: συμμορφιζόμενος | de: gleichgestaltet Phil 3:10

συμπαθ-έω G4834 V-ANA (2×)

to sympathize with, feel compassion for someone's suffering

This verb means to experience sympathy or compassion by sharing in another's feelings, especially their sufferings. Hebrews 4:15 declares that Jesus can sympathize with our weaknesses because he was tempted in every way. Hebrews 10:34 commends believers who sympathized with prisoners, sharing their suffering. The term implies more than pity—it suggests entering into another's experience.

(2×) Describes the ability to feel with and for another person in their suffering or hardship, entering sympathetically into their experience. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'compadecerse/sufrieron juntamente,' German 'mitleiden') preserve the 'suffering-with' component. Hebrews uses this to affirm both Christ's capacity for sympathy (4:15) and the church's practice of solidarity with the imprisoned (10:34), grounding Christian compassion in shared experience rather than detached observation. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: to-sympathize, you-sympathized | es: compadecerse, sufrieron-juntamente | fr: mitleiden | de: mitleiden Heb 4:15; Heb 10:34

συμπαθ-ής G4835 Adj-NMP (1×)

Sympathetic, sharing in the feelings and sufferings of others; compassionate

Characterized by fellow-feeling and compassion, able to sympathize with others' experiences. Peter exhorts believers in 1 Peter 3:8 to 'be sympathetic' toward one another, part of a cluster of relational virtues (unity, love, tenderhearted). The Greek concept involves both emotional resonance with others and practical responsiveness to their needs. In classical usage it described the mutual influence of connected things, but in moral contexts it meant genuine empathy. Christian sympathy isn't just emotional sensitivity but active compassion that binds the community together.

(1×) Empathetic solidarity among believers, feeling with one another in both joy and suffering. Peter's list of virtues in 1 Peter 3:8 creates a portrait of Christian community marked by shared experience and mutual care. Spanish 'compasivos' (compassionate), French retains the Greek, German 'mitleidig' (sympathetic) all point to active fellow-feeling. This sympathy is both affective (sharing emotions) and effective (acting on that shared feeling to help). GRACE AND COMPASSION

en: sympathetic | es: compasivos | fr: συμπαθεῖς | de: mitleidig 1Pet 3:8

συμπαραγίγνομαι G4836 V-APM-NMP (1×)

To come together, arrive at the same time; to be present together with others

To arrive together or be present at the same place and time. In Luke 23:48, the crowds who 'had gathered together' to witness the crucifixion return home beating their breasts after seeing Jesus die. The word emphasizes simultaneous presence—this isn't a planned meeting but a convergence of many individuals drawn by the spectacle. Classical usage included crops ripening together or allies arriving together to help. Luke's usage captures the mob dynamics of the crucifixion crowd, assembled by curiosity and departing in stunned grief.

(1×) The spontaneous gathering of crowds at Jesus's execution. They came together not for support but as spectators of a Roman execution. The response—breast-beating and departure—suggests their horror at what they witnessed. Spanish 'habiendo estado presentes' (having been present) emphasizes their witness role, while French 'assister' can mean both attend and assist. The crowd's transformation from spectators to mourners marks Luke's portrayal of Jesus's death affecting even those complicit in it. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: having-come-together | es: habiendo-estado-presentes | fr: assister | de: συμπαραγενόμενοι Luke 23:48

συμπαρα-κᾰλέω G4837 V-ANP (1×)

To encourage together, mutually comfort or strengthen one another

To encourage or comfort one another mutually, to experience shared strengthening. Paul writes in Romans 1:12 of his desire to visit Rome 'that we may be mutually encouraged by each other's faith, yours and mine.' The word goes beyond one-directional encouragement to reciprocal strengthening—Paul expects not just to give but to receive comfort from Roman Christians. This mutuality challenges hierarchical models where the apostle only imparts: Paul presents himself as needing the encouragement of fellow believers whose faith will strengthen his own.

(1×) Reciprocal encouragement between Paul and the Roman church, each strengthening the other through shared faith. The prefix 'co-' emphasizes mutuality: this isn't apostolic monologue but dialogical edification. Spanish 'ser consolados mutuamente' (be mutually comforted), French 'encourager' (encourage), German 'mitermutigen' (mutually encourage) all capture the reciprocal dynamic. Paul's vulnerability—admitting his need for their encouragement—models Christian interdependence. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: to-be-encouraged-together | es: ser-consolados-mutuamente | fr: encourager | de: mitermutigen Rom 1:12

συμπαρα-λαμβάνω G4838 V-APA-NMP (4×)

To take along with oneself; to bring someone as a companion or assistant on a journey or mission.

A compound verb (syn + para + lambano) meaning to take someone along as a companion. All four NT occurrences relate to missionary travel partnerships in the early church. The term appears at a pivotal narrative juncture: Barnabas and Saul take John Mark along from Jerusalem (Acts 12:25), Barnabas later wants to take Mark again (Acts 15:37), Paul refuses because Mark had deserted them (Acts 15:38), and Paul takes Titus along to the Jerusalem council (Gal 2:1). The verb consistently implies deliberate selection of a travel companion for shared mission work.

(4×) To take along with oneself as a companion or co-worker, especially for travel or mission. In Acts 12:25, Barnabas and Saul take John Mark along (symparalabontes) from Jerusalem — a purposeful selection. The sharp dispute in Acts 15:37-38 revolves entirely around this verb: Barnabas wanted to 'take along' (symparalabein) Mark again, but Paul refused to 'take along' someone who had abandoned them in Pamphylia. In Gal 2:1, Paul 'took along' (symparalabōn) Titus to Jerusalem, a strategic choice given the circumcision controversy. The multilingual glosses (spa 'llevando consigo,' fra 'emmener avec,' deu 'mitnehmen') uniformly emphasize accompaniment, confirming a single sense of deliberate co-travel. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: having-taken-along, to-take-along | es: habiendo-tomado-junto, llevando-consigo, llevar-consigo | fr: emmener-avec, συμπαραλαβὼν | de: mitnehmen, συμπαραλαβεῖν, συμπαραλαβόντες Acts 12:25; Acts 15:37; Acts 15:38; Gal 2:1

συμπαρα-μένω G4839

to remain with, stay alongside, endure with; to continue in someone's company or persist through circumstances

This compound verb means to remain alongside someone or to stay with them through difficult circumstances. The prefix συν- adds the sense of companionship or shared experience to the basic meaning of 'remain.' Classical authors used it for a woman who remained with her husband through misfortune, demonstrating loyalty in adversity. It could also mean enduring as long as life itself lasts, staying the course through the duration of something. The word emphasized faithful presence rather than mere physical proximity—standing by someone when others might abandon them, or persisting when circumstances made departure tempting.

συμπάρ-ειμι G4840 V-PPA-VMP (1×)

To be present with, stand beside someone; to be in attendance together

To be present alongside someone, to stand by or accompany. In Acts 25:24, Festus presents Paul before King Agrippa and 'all who are present with us,' referring to the assembled Jewish leaders and Roman officials. The word indicates physical presence and often implies supportive attendance—standing with someone in both spatial and relational senses. Classical usage included advocates being present with their clients or representatives standing in for others. Luke's usage simply marks the gathered assembly, the public nature of Paul's defense.

(1×) The collective presence of Jewish and Roman authorities at Paul's hearing before Agrippa. They are 'present with' Festus, forming an official assembly to hear the case. Spanish 'presentes con' (present with) and French 'être présent avec' (to be present with) capture the accompaniment sense, while German simply transcribes the Greek. Their presence creates the public forum where Paul will defend himself and proclaim the gospel. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: being-present-with | es: presentes-con | fr: être-présent-avec | de: συμπαρόντες Acts 25:24

συμπάσχω G4841 V-PIA-3S (2×)

to suffer together with, share in suffering

This compound verb describes experiencing suffering alongside another person. Romans 8:17 connects suffering with Christ to the hope of being glorified with him—joint suffering leads to joint glory. First Corinthians 12:26 applies it to the body of Christ: when one member suffers, all suffer together. The term emphasizes solidarity in hardship, whether with Christ or fellow believers.

(2×) Indicates experiencing suffering or affliction together with another, sharing in their pain as co-participants rather than observers. The cross-lingual renderings (Spanish 'padecemos juntamente,' French 'souffrir-avec,' German 'mitleiden') all maintain the compound 'with' structure. Paul uses this in Rom 8:17 to link present co-suffering with Christ to future co-glorification, and in 1 Cor 12:26 to describe the organic unity of the church body where pain in one member affects all. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: suffer-together, we-suffer-together | es: padecemos-juntamente, padecen-con | fr: souffrir-avec | de: mitleiden Rom 8:17; 1Cor 12:26

συμπέμπω G4842 V-AIA-1P (2×)

to send along with, dispatch together with someone

This verb describes sending someone along with another person or group. Paul uses it twice in 2 Corinthians 8 when organizing the collection for Jerusalem. He sent a well-known brother along with Titus (8:18), and then another brother who had proven himself (8:22). The context emphasizes collaborative ministry and accountability in handling financial matters.

(2×) Means to send or dispatch someone as a companion or co-delegate alongside others on a mission. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'enviamos junto,' French 'envoyer-avec,' German 'mitsenden') preserves the compound 'with' element. Both occurrences in 2 Cor 8 relate to Paul's careful stewardship of the Jerusalem collection, sending multiple trustworthy delegates together to ensure transparency and shared responsibility in ministry. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: we-sent-with | es: enviamos-junto | fr: envoyer-avec | de: mitsenden 2Cor 8:18; 2Cor 8:22

συμπερι-λαμβάνω G4843 V-APA-NMS (1×)

To embrace, take into one's arms; to clasp affectionately

To throw one's arms around someone, to embrace affectionately. In Acts 20:10, Paul 'embraced' the young man Eutychus after he fell from a window during Paul's lengthy sermon and was taken up dead. The embrace is both diagnostic (Paul assessing whether life had returned) and comforting (a gesture of care and reassurance). Classical uses included literal embracing and metaphorical inclusion of ideas within a framework. Luke's narrative uses the gesture to signal the miracle: Paul's embrace accompanies his announcement 'his life is in him.'

(1×) Paul's physical embrace of Eutychus following the young man's fatal fall and miraculous restoration. The gesture combines assessment, comfort, and intimacy. Spanish 'abrazándolo' (embracing him), French 'embrasser' (embrace), German simply transcribes the Greek. The embrace signals both Paul's compassion and his confidence in God's restorative power. Like Elijah and Elisha in similar stories, Paul's bodily contact marks the moment of life returning. EMBRACE CLASP

en: having-embraced | es: abrazándolo | fr: embrasser | de: συμπεριλαβὼν Acts 20:10

συμπίνω G4844 V-AIA-1P (1×)

To drink together with, share a meal including drink with others

To drink together, to share beverages in companionship. In Acts 10:41, Peter testifies that the risen Jesus appeared to chosen witnesses 'who ate and drank with him after he rose from the dead.' The shared meals—including drinking together—proved Jesus's physical resurrection: he was not a ghost or vision but a bodily presence who could consume food and wine. Table fellowship in ancient culture signified deep relationship and covenant. The apostles' testimony rests on this intimate, repeated experience of resurrection meals.

(1×) The apostolic witness to Jesus's physical resurrection through shared meals. Drinking together (along with eating) demonstrated Jesus's bodily reality post-resurrection. Spanish 'bebimos con' (we drank with), French 'boire avec' (drink with), German uses a compound form. Peter's point is evidential: these weren't visions or spiritual experiences but tangible encounters where Jesus ate and drank as a physical being, proving the resurrection was bodily, not merely spiritual. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: drank-with | es: bebimos-con | fr: boire-avec | de: συνεπίομεν Acts 10:41

συμπληρ-όω G4845 V-PNM/P (3×)

to fill completely, fulfill; to be completed or come to fulfillment, often of appointed times or purposes

A verb meaning to fill up completely, to fulfill or bring to completion. Luke uses it three times: the boat 'was being swamped' or filled with water (8:23), 'the days were being fulfilled' for Jesus' ascension (9:51), and 'the day of Pentecost was being fulfilled' or fully come (Acts 2:1). The word combines 'together' (συν-) with 'fill,' emphasizing complete filling or the arrival of a predetermined time. Classical uses include manning ships fully, filling gaps, completing quotas, and causing congestion.

(3×) Translations vary between fulfillment and filling: English 'being fulfilled/completed/swamped', Spanish 'cumplirse/se llenaban', French 'accomplir/remplir', German uses Greek forms. The three uses show both literal filling (boat with water) and temporal fulfillment (appointed times arriving). Luke's theology of divine schedule appears in 9:51 and Acts 2:1—days/time 'fulfilled' when God's predetermined moment arrives. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: being-completed, being-fulfilled, they-were-being-swamped | es: cumplirse, se-llenaban | fr: accomplir, remplir | de: συμπληροῦσθαι, συνεπληροῦντο Luke 8:23; Luke 9:51; Acts 2:1

συμπνίγω G4846 V-AIA-3P (5×)

To choke, crowd around so as to press or suffocate; used of thorns choking seed and crowds pressing a person.

Literally meaning to squeeze together until breath is cut off, this verb appears almost exclusively in Jesus' parable of the sower and its interpretations. Thorns grow up and 'choke' the seed, preventing it from bearing fruit (Matt 13:22; Mark 4:7, 19; Luke 8:14). Luke also uses it for the physical pressing of the crowd around Jesus (Luke 8:42). The Spanish 'ahogar' (to drown or suffocate) vividly communicates the life-extinguishing force of the image, whether literal crowding or the figurative smothering of the word by worldly cares.

(5×) To choke or press closely so as to suffocate growth or movement. In the Synoptic parables, thorns 'choke' the sown word, a powerful image for how anxieties and riches smother spiritual fruitfulness (Matt 13:22; Mark 4:7, 19; Luke 8:14). Luke 8:42 extends the physical sense to a crowd pressing in on Jesus so tightly he could barely move. Spanish 'ahogar' and French 'étouffer' both emphasize the suffocating, life-suppressing force. The single sense covers both literal crowding and figurative spiritual choking. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 15120 WITH 3 SENSES

en: are-choked, choke, choked | es: ahogan, ahogaron, lo-apretaban | fr: étouffer | de: ersticken, συμπνίγει, συμπνίγονται Matt 13:22; Mark 4:7; Mark 4:19; Luke 8:14; Luke 8:42

συμπολῖτ-ης G4847 N-NMP (1×)

Fellow citizen, one who shares citizenship in the same political community

A fellow citizen, someone who shares membership in the same civic community. Paul tells Gentile believers in Ephesians 2:19 they are 'no longer strangers and aliens, but fellow citizens with the saints and members of God's household.' The political metaphor is vivid: conversion grants citizenship in God's commonwealth. In the Greco-Roman world, citizenship conferred rights, protections, and identity. Paul reverses the Gentiles' former status: once outsiders to Israel's covenant, they now share full citizenship with Jewish believers in the people of God.

(1×) The shared citizenship of Jews and Gentiles in God's eschatological community. Paul uses political language to describe spiritual reality: Gentile Christians have been granted full civic rights in God's people. Spanish 'conciudadanos', German 'Mitbürger', French transcribes the Greek. The metaphor emphasizes equality and belonging: no second-class members, but full participants in the holy nation whose capital is the New Jerusalem. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: fellow-citizens | es: conciudadanos | fr: συμπολῖται | de: Mitbuerger Eph 2:19

συμπορεύομαι G4848 V-IIM/P-3S (4×)

To go or journey together with; to accompany someone, or to gather and travel as a crowd.

A compound verb (syn + poreuomai) meaning to travel together or accompany. In Luke's Gospel, this word captures the communal, processional quality of Jesus' ministry: crowds 'went along with' Him (Luke 7:11; 14:25), and the two Emmaus disciples walked along with the risen Christ without recognizing Him (Luke 24:15). Mark 10:1 uses it to describe crowds assembling and traveling with Jesus. The word conveys companionship on the road, whether intimate or thronging.

(4×) To journey together, accompany, or travel in company with someone. In Mark 10:1, crowds again 'come together' to Jesus and He teaches them as they travel. Luke 7:11 describes Jesus' disciples and a large crowd 'going with' Him to the city of Nain, setting the scene for the raising of the widow's son. Luke 14:25 notes that great crowds 'were going along with' Jesus, prompting His demanding teaching on the cost of discipleship. Most poignantly, Luke 24:15 uses the verb for the risen Jesus who 'came alongside and went with' the two Emmaus travelers. The multilingual glosses (spa 'caminaba con / iban con,' fra 'aller avec,' deu 'mitkommen / geht mit') consistently render the companionship-on-the-road sense. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: Were-going-with, come-together, was-going-with | es: Iban-junto-con, caminaba-con, iban-con | fr: aller-avec | de: geht-mit, mitkommen Mark 10:1; Luke 7:11; Luke 14:25; Luke 24:15

συμπόσι-ον G4849 N-ANP (2×)

group of people reclining together, dinner party

This noun originally referred to a drinking party or symposium, but came to mean simply a group of people gathered for a meal. In Mark 6:39, Jesus has the crowds sit down in groups (symposia symposia—groups upon groups) before feeding the five thousand. The repeated form emphasizes the orderly arrangement of many separate dining groups on the green grass.

(2×) Denotes a group of people gathered together for a meal, arranged in a cohesive party or company. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'en grupos,' French 'groupe,' German 'Tischgesellschaft') highlight the collective dining aspect. Mark's doubled phrase 'groups upon groups' (6:39, repeated in the same verse) creates a vivid image of the organized arrangement of thousands of people in manageable meal-sized companies across the hillside. BANQUETS AND FEASTS

en: groups | es: en-grupos | fr: groupe | de: Tischgesellschaft Mark 6:39

συμπρεσβύτερος G4850 N-NMS (1×)

Fellow elder, one who shares the office and ministry of eldership with others

A co-elder, someone who shares in the ministry and office of eldership. Peter identifies himself in 1 Peter 5:1 as 'a fellow elder' when exhorting the elders of the churches—a remarkable expression of collegiality from an apostle. Rather than pulling rank, Peter addresses fellow elders as peers, sharing the same pastoral responsibilities. The term assumes plural eldership in each church and emphasizes the shared nature of spiritual oversight. Peter's self-designation models humble leadership: even apostles serve alongside other shepherds of God's flock.

(1×) Peter's self-identification as co-equal with other church elders, emphasizing shared ministry rather than hierarchical authority. Spanish 'co-anciano' (co-elder), German 'Mitältester' (co-elder), French transcribes the Greek. Peter's choice of this term is rhetorically significant: he exhorts elders not from above but from alongside, as one who shares their calling. This flattens hierarchy and grounds his appeal in common experience of shepherding God's people. PRIESTS AND PRIESTHOOD en: fellow-elder | es: co-anciano | fr: συμπρεσβύτερος | de: Mitaeltester 1Pet 5:1

συμφέρω G4851 V-PPA-ANS (17×)

To bring together; impersonally, to be profitable, beneficial, or expedient — what is advantageous or in one's best interest.

A compound of syn ('together') and phero ('carry, bring'), this verb has a literal sense of gathering or collecting things into one place, and a derived impersonal sense of 'it is profitable' or 'it is expedient.' The NT overwhelmingly uses the impersonal sense: 'It is better for you that one man die for the people' (John 11:50; 18:14), 'All things are lawful but not all things are beneficial' (1 Cor 6:12; 10:23). Spanish conviene ('it is fitting') and German nuetzen ('to be useful') capture this evaluative meaning. Only once, in Acts 19:19, does the literal spatial sense appear — the Ephesian converts 'bringing together' their books of sorcery to burn them — where Spanish shifts revealingly to trayendo ('bringing').

1. be profitable, be advantageous (16×) To be profitable, beneficial, or expedient — used impersonally to indicate what is advantageous for someone (16 occurrences). Jesus uses it to warn that losing a hand is better than losing one's whole body (Matt 5:29-30), and Caiaphas invokes it politically (John 11:50). Paul appeals to it for ethical discernment: 'All things are lawful, but not all are profitable' (1 Cor 6:12; 10:23). Spanish conviene and German nützt both express the evaluative, advisory force — 'it is fitting, it serves well.' PROFIT AND BENEFIT

en: are-beneficial, are-profitable, benefit | es: conviene, convienen, provecho | fr: être-utile | de: nuetzen, nützt Matt 5:29; Matt 5:30; Matt 18:6; Matt 19:10; John 11:50

2. bring together, collect (1×) To bring together or collect into one place — the literal, active sense of the compound verb. This appears only in Acts 19:19, where those who practiced magic arts 'brought together' their scrolls and burned them publicly. Spanish trayendo ('bringing') and English 'having brought together' recover the concrete, physical meaning of gathering objects. The passage vividly dramatizes the word's etymology: syn-phero, 'carry together.' GATHERING TOGETHER

en: having-brought-together | es: trayendo | fr: être-utile | de: nützt Acts 19:19

σύμφημι G4852 V-PIA-1S (1×)

To agree with, consent to, concede that something is true or good

To assent or agree with, to acknowledge something as true or valid. Paul writes in Romans 7:16 that when he does what he doesn't want to do, 'I agree with the law that it is good.' The agreement is intellectual and moral: Paul's conscience endorses the law's goodness even as his flesh rebels against it. Classical usage ranged from simple yes-saying to formal legal consent. Paul's usage is confessional—his divided self testifies to the law's righteousness even while experiencing slavery to sin. Agreement here is testimony that the fault lies not in God's law but in human weakness.

(1×) Paul's inward testimony to the law's goodness despite his failure to obey it perfectly. The agreement is both intellectual (acknowledging truth) and volitional (wanting to obey). Spanish 'concuerdo con' (I agree with), French 'se joindre' (join with), German 'beistimmen' (assent) all capture the consensual aspect. Paul's point in Romans 7 is that sin, not the law, is the problem: his assent to the law's goodness proves it's holy; his inability to keep it proves he needs grace. AGREE CONSENT ACCORD

en: I-agree-with | es: concuerdo-con | fr: se-joindre | de: beistimmen Rom 7:16

συμφῡλ-έτης G4853 N-GMP (1×)

Fellow tribesman, compatriot, one from the same people or ethnic group

A fellow countryman or member of the same ethnic group. Paul commends the Thessalonian believers in 1 Thessalonians 2:14 for enduring persecution from 'your own countrymen,' just as the Judean churches suffered from theirs. The word emphasizes shared ethnic or national identity: these are not foreign oppressors but people from their own community. The parallel between Thessalonian Gentiles persecuted by fellow Greeks and Judean believers persecuted by fellow Jews shows that opposition to the gospel comes from within, not just from outsiders.

(1×) Fellow members of an ethnic community who become persecutors of those who embrace the gospel. The kinship domain fits: these are relatives in the broad sense—fellow tribesmen, compatriots. Spanish 'compatriotas' (compatriots), French transcribes the Greek, German 'Landsleute' (countrymen) all emphasize shared national origin. The tragedy is that gospel proclamation often divides natural communities: families, tribes, and nations split over allegiance to Christ. BROTHER KINSMAN

en: countrymen | es: compatriotas | fr: συμφυλετῶν | de: Landsleute 1Thess 2:14

σύμφῡτ-ος G4854 Adj-NMP (1×)

Grown together, united by natural growth; innate, congenital

United by growth, naturally joined together. Paul writes in Romans 6:5 that 'if we have become united with him in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection.' The word suggests organic unity, like plants grafted together that grow into one. It can mean congenital or innate in medical contexts, but Paul uses it for mystical union with Christ. Baptism into Christ's death creates a living connection: believers grow together with Christ through participation in his death and resurrection pattern.

(1×) Believers' organic union with Christ through baptismal identification with his death and resurrection. The metaphor is botanical or biological: a vital, growing connection, not mere legal status. Spanish 'unidos' (united), German 'mitverwachsen' (grown together with), French 'planté ensemble' (planted together) all suggest living union. Paul's point is that Christian life flows from grafted-in participation in Christ's death-and-life pattern, making resurrection inevitable for those united to the risen one. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: united | es: unidos | fr: planté-ensemble | de: mitverwachsen Rom 6:5

συμφύω G4855 V-APP-NFP (1×)

To grow up together, spring up alongside; to be produced or united together

To grow up together, to spring up alongside something else. In Jesus's parable in Luke 8:7, some seed 'fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up with it and choked it.' The word emphasizes simultaneous growth: wheat and weeds sprouting together in the same soil. What begins as coexistence ends in competition—the thorns ultimately dominate and strangle the crop. Jesus interprets this as the word being choked by life's worries, riches, and pleasures. The shared growth imagery warns that worldly concerns don't just oppose gospel seed but grow alongside it, gradually overwhelming fruitfulness.

(1×) The simultaneous sprouting of grain and thorns in Jesus's parable, leading to the thorns' dominance. The agricultural image depicts spiritual danger: competing growth in the same life. Spanish 'creciendo juntos', French 'pousser ensemble' (growing together), German transcribes the Greek. The tragedy is that both seeds germinate; the problem isn't failed growth but divided loyalty. Thorns don't visibly oppose the seed—they just quietly grow alongside until they've stolen all the nutrients and light. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY en: having-grown-together | es: creciendo-juntos | fr: pousser-ensemble | de: συμφυεῖσαι Luke 8:7

συμφων-έω G4856 V-AIA-2S (6×)

symphoneo – to agree, harmonize, be in accord; from syn + phone ('sound together')

Built from syn ('together') and phone ('voice, sound'), symphoneo

literally means 'to sound together in harmony' – the root behind English 'symphony.' In the New Testament it consistently denotes reaching agreement or being in accord. Jesus promises that 'if two of you agree on earth about anything they ask, it will be done for them' (Matt 18:19). In the parable of the vineyard laborers, the master 'agreed with' the workers for a denarius a day (Matt 20:2, 13). Luke 5:36 uses it of cloth patches that do not 'match,' and Acts 5:9 asks why Ananias and Sapphira 'agreed together' to test the Spirit. French s'accorder and Spanish acordar neatly mirror the musical-to-social harmony trajectory.

agree, be in accord (6×) To come to mutual agreement, harmonize, or correspond – whether in the context of prayer partnership (Matt 18:19, where two agreeing believers receive what they ask), contractual terms (Matt 20:2, 13, the vineyard wage agreement), material compatibility (Luke 5:36, a patch that does not 'match'), or conspiratorial accord (Acts 5:9, Sapphira agreeing with Ananias to deceive). The etymological image of voices sounding together underlies every usage. French s'accorder and Spanish acordar reflect both the musical origin and the social extension, confirming a single cohesive sense of mutual concord. AGREE CONSENT ACCORD

en: agree, having-agreed, was-agreed | es: acordando, acordaste, combinará | fr: s'accorder | de: συμφωνήσας, συμφωνήσει, συμφωνήσωσιν Matt 18:19; Matt 20:2; Matt 20:13; Luke 5:36; Acts 5:9

συμφών-ησις G4857 N-NFS (1×)

Agreement, harmony, concord between parties or ideas

Agreement or harmony between persons or things. Paul asks rhetorically in 2 Corinthians 6:15, 'What harmony has Christ with Belial?'—what agreement exists between the Messiah and Satan? The expected answer is 'none,' establishing that believers cannot maintain fellowship with unbelievers in religious practices. The word denotes not just absence of conflict but positive accord, shared purpose, alignment of will. Paul's string of rhetorical questions (partnership, fellowship, harmony, agreement) pile up images of unity to show the impossibility of yoking righteousness with lawlessness.

(1×) The impossible concord between Christ and Satan, used rhetorically to argue against religious compromise. Paul's question expects the answer 'no harmony at all.' Spanish 'armonía', French 'accord', German 'Übereinstimmung' (agreement) all point to positive alignment. The implication for Corinthian believers is clear: if Christ and Belial have no agreement, neither can Christ-followers and idol-worshipers. Spiritual harmony requires exclusive loyalty. EQUITABLE AGREEMENT

en: harmony | es: armonía | fr: accord | de: Uebereinstimmung 2Cor 6:15

συμφων-ία G4858 N-GFS (1×)

Music, symphony, harmonious sound of instruments playing together

Musical harmony, the concord of multiple instruments or voices sounding together. In Jesus's parable in Luke 15:25, the older brother returns from the field and hears 'music and dancing' as the celebration for the prodigal's return is underway. The word can mean symphony or simply festive music. Classical usage emphasized harmonic intervals and the philosophy of musical concordance. Luke uses it for the joyful sound of celebration—multiple musicians creating a festive atmosphere. The music becomes the signal that provokes the older brother's jealousy and sense of injustice.

(1×) The festive music announcing the celebration of the prodigal son's return. The sound of symphony alerts the older brother that something unusual is happening. Spanish 'música', French 'harmonie', German transcribes the Greek. The music functions narratively as the first sign of the father's extravagant joy—before the older son learns the reason, the sound of celebration already stirs his resentment. Music marks the boundary between those inside celebrating and the one outside nursing grievances. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: music | es: música | fr: harmonie | de: συμφωνίας Luke 15:25

σύμφων-ος G4859 Adj-GNS (1×)

Agreement, mutual consent, harmonious arrangement between parties

Mutual agreement or consent between parties. Paul instructs married couples in 1 Corinthians 7:5 not to deprive one another sexually 'except perhaps by agreement for a limited time.' The word emphasizes mutual decision-making: both spouses must consent to temporary abstinence for prayer. Unilateral decisions violate the 'one flesh' unity of marriage. Classical uses included musical concord and rhetorical agreement. Paul applies it to marital negotiations, insisting that physical intimacy in marriage is a mutual right requiring joint consent to suspend.

(1×) The mutual consent required for married couples to abstain from sexual relations temporarily. Paul's instruction protects both spouses' rights: neither can impose celibacy on the other. Spanish 'acuerdo', French 'compatissant' (which seems mistranslated), German 'Übereinkunft' (mutual agreement) emphasize bilateral consent. The association domain fits the collaborative decision-making aspect. Agreement here is not just intellectual but volitional and relational—harmonizing desires and rights within the covenant of marriage. EQUITABLE AGREEMENT

en: agreement | es: acuerdo | fr: compatissant | de: Uebereinkunft 1Cor 7:5

συμψηφ-ίζω G4860 V-AIA-3P (1×)

To count up, calculate together, reckon the total value of something

To calculate or count up the total value, to reckon together. In Acts 19:19, former practitioners of magic in Ephesus 'counted up the value' of their occult books before burning them publicly—the total came to fifty thousand pieces of silver. The word emphasizes careful enumeration and valuation. The public calculation serves Luke's narrative purpose: demonstrating the economic cost of conversion and the thoroughness of repentance. Renouncing magic wasn't cheap; calculating the value highlights the magnitude of what these believers were willing to sacrifice for the gospel.

(1×) The public enumeration of the value of occult books burned in Ephesus after mass conversions. The calculation proves the costliness of repentance—these weren't worthless trinkets but valuable assets. Spanish 'calcularon', French 'compter' (count), German uses the compound form. The communication domain classification seems odd; this is economic calculation. But the public nature of the counting was communicative—announcing to all Ephesus the seriousness of these conversions and the real cost of following Christ. COUNTING AND NARRATING

en: they-counted | es: calcularon | fr: compter | de: συνεψήφισαν Acts 19:19

σύμψῡχος G4861 Adj-NMP (1×)

Of one soul or mind, united in spirit and purpose; harmonious in thought

United in soul, sharing one mind and purpose. Paul exhorts the Philippians in 2:2 to 'be of the same mind' (literally 'united in soul') as part of making his joy complete. The word goes beyond mere agreement to describe a deep spiritual unity, a harmony of affections and intentions. It's more intimate than intellectual consensus—it's shared emotional life and common purpose. Ancient friendship literature prized this kind of soul-friendship. Paul calls the church to experience this depth of unity through having the mind of Christ.

(1×) The deep spiritual unity Paul desires for the Philippian church, a oneness of soul that reflects Christ's self-emptying love. This isn't forced conformity but the natural result of shared devotion to Christ. Spanish 'unánimes' (unanimous), German 'einmütig' (one-minded), French transcribes the Greek. The mental life domain fits the shared-mind aspect, though this goes beyond cognition to include shared affections and will. Unity in soul flows from unity in the Spirit and common allegiance to Christ. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11787 WITH 3 SENSES

en: united-in-soul | es: unánimes | fr: σύμψυχοι | de: einmuetig Phil 2:2

σύν G4862 Prep (129×)

With — preposition expressing accompaniment, association, joint action, or combined presence

Syn is the classical Greek preposition for 'with,' denoting accompaniment and joint participation. In the New Testament it appears 129 times, often in contexts of intimate association: being crucified 'with' Christ (Rom 6:6), being buried and raised 'with' him (Col 2:12-13), or the promise of living 'with' him forever (1 Thess 4:17). While meta with the genitive overlaps in meaning, syn tends to emphasize closer unity and shared experience rather than mere proximity. Its prolific use in compound verbs (synagein, synergein, sympathein) shows how deeply the concept of togetherness permeates Greek expression. Spanish 'con,' French 'avec,' and German 'mit' all serve as regular equivalents.

(129×) Preposition governing the dative to express accompaniment, association, and shared action. In narrative contexts it marks physical companionship — Jesus 'with' his disciples (Matt 26:35), criminals crucified 'with' him (Matt 27:38). In Pauline theology it gains profound participatory force: believers are 'with Christ' in his death, burial, and resurrection (Rom 6:8; Col 2:12-13; 1 Thess 4:17). Spanish 'con,' French 'avec,' and German 'mit' render it consistently, though none fully captures the participatory depth Paul invests in the syn- prefix across his compound verbs. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: with, with- | es: con, con-, contigo | fr: avec- | de: mit, mit- Matt 25:27; Matt 26:35; Matt 27:38; Matt 27:44; Mark 2:26

συνάγω G4863 V-RPM/P-NMP (59×)

To gather or bring together; of people assembling; of welcoming strangers with hospitality

Built from σύν ('together') and ἄγω ('lead'), this verb pictures the active drawing-together of people or things into one place. It appears across the Gospels for both crowds assembling around Jesus and deliberate acts of collecting — harvesting grain into barns (Matt 3:12; 6:26) or summoning councils (Matt 2:4). A striking extended sense emerges in Matthew 25:35, where 'gathering in' a stranger becomes an act of hospitality: Spanish 'me recogisteis' ('you took me in') reveals the warmth embedded in this word, well beyond mere physical assembly.

1. assemble together (intransitive) (30×) The intransitive or middle/passive sense: people assembling, coming together, or being gathered as a group. Large crowds 'gathered together' around Jesus (Matt 13:2), the Pharisees 'assembled' to question him (Matt 22:34, 41), and early believers met in gathered communities. The Spanish 'fueron reunidos' / 'habiéndose reunido' and German 'versammelt' all capture this reflexive quality — the gathering happens to or among the subjects themselves. Jesus' promise in Matt 18:20 ('where two or three are gathered') makes this sense theologically foundational. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: gather, gathered, gathered-together | es: fueron-reunidos, habiéndose-reunido, reunidos | fr: rassembler | de: versammeln, versammelt Matt 13:2; Matt 18:20; Matt 22:34; Matt 22:41; Matt 24:28

2. gather or collect (transitive) (26×) The transitive, active sense: to gather, collect, or bring together people or things by deliberate action. Herod 'gathered' the chief priests (Matt 2:4), the angels will 'gather' the elect (Matt 24:31), and farmers gather wheat into barns (Matt 3:12; 6:26). The Spanish 'Recoged' (imperative 'Gather!') and the English 'I will gather' highlight the agent's initiative. Jesus uses the farming metaphor powerfully: 'He who does not gather with me scatters' (Matt 12:30). GATHERING TOGETHER

en: Gather, Gathered, I-will-gather | es: Recoged, Reunieron, a-reunirlos | fr: rassembler | de: versammeln, versammelt Matt 2:4; Matt 3:12; Matt 6:26; Matt 12:30; Matt 13:30

3. take in, show hospitality (3×) An extended figurative sense meaning to take in, welcome, or show hospitality to a stranger — found exclusively in Jesus' parable of the sheep and goats (Matt 25:35, 38, 43). Here 'gathering' someone means receiving them into one's home and care. The Spanish 'me recogisteis' ('you took me in') and the English 'you gathered me' shift the spatial metaphor from assembling a crowd to sheltering an individual. This sense uniquely ties physical gathering to moral obligation and compassion. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: we-gathered, you-gathered | es: me-recogisteis, te-recogimos | fr: rassembler | de: versammelt Matt 25:35; Matt 25:38; Matt 25:43

συνᾰγωγ-ή G4864 N-GFP (56×)

synagoge – synagogue; the Jewish assembly or its meeting place for worship, prayer, and Scripture reading

The feminine noun synagoge, from syn- ('together') and ago ('to bring'), denotes both the gathered assembly and the physical building where Jews met for worship, prayer, and Scripture reading. By the first century it had become the center of Jewish communal life in both Palestine and the Diaspora. Jesus launched his public ministry in synagogues (Matt 4:23; Luke 4:16-21), Paul began his missionary work in them (Acts 13:5; 17:1-2), and they serve as settings for healings, controversies, and persecutions. Spanish sinagoga, French synagogue, and German Synagoge all derive from the same Greek compound.

synagogue, place of Jewish assembly (56×) The Jewish place of assembly for worship, prayer, and Torah reading. Jesus teaches and heals in synagogues throughout Galilee (Matt 4:23; 9:35), Paul visits them first in each new city (Acts 13:5; 17:1-2), and they become sites of both proclamation and persecution. Spanish sinagoga, French synagogue, and German Synagoge are direct Greek borrowings confirming a single referent. SYNAGOGUE WORSHIP PLACE

en: synagogue | es: -sinagoga, sinagoga | fr: synagogue | de: Synagoge Matt 4:23; Matt 6:2; Matt 6:5; Matt 9:35; Matt 10:17

συνᾰγων-ίζομαι G4865 V-ANM (1×)

To struggle or contend together with, join in a common fight or effort

To fight alongside someone, to struggle together in a common cause. Paul urges Roman believers in Romans 15:30 to 'strive together with me in your prayers to God on my behalf.' The word draws on athletic or military imagery: prayer is portrayed as intense combat in which Paul needs allies. The 'together' element emphasizes that Paul and the Romans fight on the same side—his struggles are theirs, and their prayers join his battle. Classical usage included fighting alongside in war and competing together in contests. Paul makes intercession a collaborative spiritual warfare.

(1×) United prayer as collaborative spiritual combat, with the Romans joining Paul's struggle through intercession. The association domain fits the partnership aspect. Spanish 'a luchar conmigo' (to fight with me), French 'combattre avec' (fight with), German 'mitkämpfen' (fight alongside) all preserve the militant imagery. Paul's appeal casts prayer as strenuous effort requiring joint forces—not passive hoping but active wrestling with God for gospel success and apostolic protection. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: to-strive-together-with | es: a-luchar-conmigo | fr: combattre-avec | de: mitkaempfen Rom 15:30

συναθλέω G4866 V-AIA-3P (2×)

to contend alongside, strive together with someone for a cause

This athletic metaphor describes striving or competing together with others toward a common goal. Paul asks the Philippians to strive together for the faith of the gospel (1:27), emphasizing unity in evangelistic effort. He also mentions women who contended alongside him in the gospel work (4:3), recognizing their partnership in ministry. The verb evokes images of teammates in athletic competition.

(2×) Means to struggle, labor, or compete together with others in pursuit of a shared objective, using athletic contest imagery. The cross-lingual renderings (Spanish 'luchando juntos,' French forms maintaining the root, German 'mitkämpfen') preserve the combative metaphor. Paul uses this twice in Philippians to describe collaborative gospel ministry: the church's unified stance for the faith (1:27) and specific women who fought alongside him in evangelistic work (4:3). STRUGGLE AND CONTEST

en: contended-with, striving-together | es: luchando-juntos, lucharon-junto | fr: συνήθλησάν, συναθλοῦντες | de: mitkaempfen Phil 1:27; Phil 4:3

συναθρ-οίζω G4867 V-APA-NMS (3×)

to gather together, assemble; to collect people or things into one group or place

A compound verb meaning to gather or assemble together, to collect into one group. Luke uses it three times: the disciples 'gathered together' in Jerusalem after the resurrection (24:33), Mary's prayer meeting is 'assembled' when Peter knocks (Acts 12:12), and Paul 'gathered together' the craftsmen and workers in Ephesus (19:25). The prefix 'together' (συν-) emphasizes collective assembly—bringing scattered individuals into one place. Classical uses include assembling troops, gathering materials into one mass, or joining the main army.

(3×) Languages converge: English 'gathered together/having gathered', Spanish 'reunidos/reuniendo', French 'rassembler', German uses Greek forms (συναθροίσας, συνηθροισμένοι). All three NT uses depict physical assembly: believers gathering in joy (Luke 24:33), in prayer (Acts 12:12), or workers gathered for confrontation (Acts 19:25). The verb emphasizes the act of bringing together what was dispersed. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: having-been-gathered, having-gathered, having-gathered-together | es: reunidos, reuniendo | fr: rassembler | de: συναθροίσας, συνηθροισμένοι, ἠθροισμένους Luke 24:33; Acts 12:12; Acts 19:25

συναίρω G4868 V-PNA (3×)

to settle accounts, reckon together; to conduct a financial or relational accounting and square balances

A verb meaning to take up together, cast up accounts, settle or reckon. All three NT uses appear in Matthew's parables: the kingdom is like a king who 'settled accounts' with his servants (18:23), when he began settling one owed ten thousand talents (18:24), and the master 'settled accounts' with his servants (25:19). The word combines 'together' (συν-) with 'take up/reckon,' emphasizing the mutual process of reviewing debts and credits, rendering final judgment on what's owed. Classical uses include gathering harvests or collecting together.

(3×) Uniform: English 'settle/settles', Spanish 'ajustar/ajusta', French 'compter', German uses Greek forms. Matthew's parables all involve the moment of reckoning—when the master calls for accounts and evaluates faithfulness. The verb captures both the process (reviewing the ledger) and the result (final settlement, whether forgiveness or judgment). Financial imagery becomes eschatological: God will settle accounts. COUNTING AND NARRATING

en: settles, to-settle | es: a-ajustar, ajusta, ajustar | fr: compter | de: συναίρει, συναίρειν, συνᾶραι Matt 18:23; Matt 18:24; Matt 25:19

συναιχμᾰλωτ-ος G4869 N-AMP (3×)

fellow prisoner, one imprisoned together; someone sharing captivity or imprisonment with another

A compound noun meaning fellow prisoner—someone who shares captivity. Paul uses it three times: Andronicus and Junia are 'my fellow prisoners' (Rom 16:7), Aristarchus is 'my fellow prisoner' (Col 4:10), and Epaphras greets as 'my fellow prisoner in Christ Jesus' (Phlm 23). The term conveys more than physical proximity; it suggests shared suffering for the gospel, bonds forged in affliction, and honor in bearing chains for Christ. These weren't merely cellmates but brothers united in gospel witness through imprisonment.

(3×) All languages preserve the compound: English 'fellow prisoner/prisoners', Spanish 'compañero de prisión/co-prisionero', French 'compagnon de captivité', German 'Mitgefangene'. Paul's consistent use as a title of honor transforms prison from shame to badge of faithfulness. These fellow prisoners share not just cells but Christ-centered suffering, making imprisonment a form of partnership in the gospel. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: fellow-prisoner, fellow-prisoners | es: co-prisionero, compañero-de-prisión, compañeros-de-prisión | fr: Mitgefangene, compagnon-de-captivité | de: Mitgefangene Rom 16:7; Col 4:10; Phlm 1:23

συνᾰκολουθ-έω G4870 V-PPA-NFP (3×)

to follow together with, accompany; to follow along with someone or attend to something closely

A compound verb meaning to follow together, accompany, or follow closely. Mark uses it three times: certain women 'were following with' Jesus from Galilee (5:37), a young man 'was following with' him after the arrest (14:51), and women who 'followed with' Jesus from Galilee watched the crucifixion (23:49). The prefix 'together' (συν-) emphasizes accompanying someone on their journey. Classical uses include following an army, tracking an argument mentally, or consequences following causes.

(3×) Languages preserve the compound: English 'follow with/following', Spanish 'seguir/seguía/habiendo seguido', French 'suivre', German 'mitfolgen'. Mark's uses highlight the disciples who accompanied Jesus closely—not just physically present but deliberately walking with Him. The women 'following with' Jesus from Galilee (Luke 23:49) shows sustained companionship, witnessing both ministry and crucifixion, their loyalty outlasting the twelve. FOLLOWING AND DISCIPLESHIP

en: having-followed-together, to-follow-with, was-following | es: habiendo-seguido, seguirlo, seguía | fr: suivre | de: mitfolgen, συνακολουθοῦσαι Mark 5:37; Mark 14:51; Luke 23:49

συνᾱλίζω G4871 V-PPM/P-NMS (1×)

To assemble or gather together, come together into one place

To come together, to assemble in one location. In Acts 1:4, Luke describes the risen Jesus 'assembling together' with the apostles (or possibly 'staying with' them—manuscript variants affect the exact sense). The word typically means bringing people together or gathering an assembly. If the gathering sense is primary, it pictures Jesus convening his disciples for final instructions; if 'staying with' is meant, it emphasizes his continued presence during the forty-day post-resurrection period. Either way, it marks the transitional moment before ascension.

(1×) Jesus's final gathering with the apostles before ascension, conveying the command to wait in Jerusalem for the Spirit. The movement domain fits if this means 'coming together.' Spanish 'reuniéndose con ellos' (meeting together with them), French 'assembler' (assemble), German transcribes the Greek. The gathering creates the setting for Jesus's crucial instructions: don't leave Jerusalem, but wait for the Father's promise. The assembly marks the transition from resurrection appearances to ascension and Pentecost. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: being-assembled-together | es: reuniéndose-con-ellos | fr: assembler | de: συναλιζόμενος Acts 1:4

συνανα-βαίνω G4872 V-APA-NFP (2×)

to go up together with, ascend in company with someone

This verb describes accompanying someone in an upward journey or ascent. Mark 15:41 mentions women who came up with Jesus to Jerusalem from Galilee, emphasizing their journey as disciples. Acts 13:31 speaks of those who came up with Jesus from Galilee to Jerusalem and became witnesses of his resurrection. Both passages highlight companionship in travel, particularly the significant journey to Jerusalem.

(2×) Indicates traveling upward or going up to a destination (especially to Jerusalem, which is always 'up' in biblical geography) in the company of another person or group. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'habían subido con/subiendo con,' French 'monter-avec,' German 'mithinaufgehen') maintains the compound directional element. Both NT uses involve accompanying Jesus or his followers on the journey up to Jerusalem, a journey laden with theological significance. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: having-come-up-with | es: que-habían-subido-con, subiendo-con | fr: monter-avec | de: mithinaufgehen, συναναβᾶσιν Mark 15:41; Acts 13:31

συνανά-κειμαι G4873 V-PPM/P-GMP (7×)

To recline at table together with someone; to share a meal as a table companion in the ancient Near Eastern posture.

Refers to the ancient custom of reclining on couches during a communal meal, emphasizing shared table fellowship. When Jesus eats with tax collectors and sinners (Matt 9:10; Mark 2:15), the verb highlights the scandal of intimate social proximity — reclining together implied acceptance and solidarity. French renders it 'être à table avec' (to be at table with), while Spanish uses 'reclinados con' (reclined with), both preserving the physical intimacy of the shared posture. The word appears at banquets and feasts where the identity of one's table companions carries social and religious weight.

reclining with (7×) To recline together at a meal, sharing table fellowship in the Greco-Roman banquet posture. German 'zu Tisch liegen' (to lie at table) and Spanish 'reclinados con' (reclined with) both capture the physical and social dimensions. Used of Jesus dining with tax collectors and sinners (Matt 9:10; Mark 2:15), guests at Herod's birthday feast (Matt 14:9; Mark 6:22), and fellow diners who witness the sinful woman's anointing (Luke 7:49). The verb implies not just eating together but social acceptance and communal intimacy. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: reclining-with, were-reclining-with | es: estaban-reclinados-con, que-estaban-reclinados-con, que-se-reclinaban-a-la-mesa | fr: être-à-table-avec | de: zu-Tisch-liegen, συνανέκειντο, συναναχείμενοι Matt 9:10; Matt 14:9; Mark 2:15; Mark 6:22; Luke 7:49

συνανα-μείγνῡμι G4874 V-PNM (3×)

to associate with, mix together with; to keep company or mingle socially with others

A compound verb meaning to mix together with, to associate or keep company with. Paul uses it three times regarding social boundaries: 'I wrote not to associate with sexually immoral people' (1 Cor 5:9), 'not even to eat with such a one' (5:11), and 'do not associate with' anyone who disobeys Paul's letter (2 Thess 3:14). The verb combines 'together' (συν-) with 'mix,' emphasizing social mingling or companionship. Classical uses include mixing substances together or two groups of people meeting. Paul addresses the boundaries of Christian community.

(3×) Languages converge: English 'associate with', Spanish 'juntaros/mezclaros' (join/mix yourselves), French 'fréquenter/συναναμίγνυσθαι', German 'Umgang haben' (have dealings). Paul's three uses all prohibit social mixing with flagrant sinners or insubordinate believers—not to condemn but to maintain community purity and create pressure for repentance. The 'mixing' prohibited includes table fellowship, implying normal social intimacy. PARTNERSHIP AND SHARING en: to-associate-with | es: juntaros, mezclaros | fr: fréquenter, συναναμίγνυσθαι | de: Umgang-haben 1Cor 5:9; 1Cor 5:11; 2Thess 3:14

συνανα-παύομαι G4875 V-ASM-1S (1×)

To be refreshed together with, receive mutual rest or comfort alongside others

To be refreshed together, to find rest or renewal in company with others. Paul writes in Romans 15:32 of his hope to come to Rome and 'be refreshed together with you.' The word combines rest and fellowship—mutual refreshment that comes from shared presence and encouragement. Classical usage included sleeping together, but in Paul it's about spiritual and emotional renewal found in Christian community. Paul expects his visit to be mutually restorative: not just him ministering to them, but both parties finding rest in shared fellowship after his arduous journeys.

(1×) The mutual refreshment Paul anticipates from visiting the Roman church, where both he and they will find renewal through fellowship. Spanish 'me refresque con' (I might be refreshed with), French 'se rafraîchir' (refresh oneself), German 'sich erquicken' (refresh oneself) capture the restorative sense. The physiological domain seems misclassified; this is relational renewal. Paul's vision of ministry includes receiving as well as giving—Rome will refresh the weary apostle even as he serves them. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: I-might-be-refreshed-together | es: me-refresque-con | fr: se-rafraîchir | de: sich-erquicken Rom 15:32

συναντ-άω G4876 V-AIA-3S (6×)

To meet or encounter someone face to face; by extension, of events or circumstances that befall a person.

Sunantao combines sun (together) and antao (come opposite) to picture two parties arriving face to face. In the Gospels, it appears when a crowd meets Jesus as he descends from the mount (Luke 9:37) and when a man carrying a water jar will meet the disciples in Jerusalem (Luke 22:10). Its most theologically rich occurrence is in Heb 7:1, where Melchizedek meets Abraham returning from battle — a meeting freighted with typological significance. But the word can also extend beyond physical encounters: in Acts 20:22, Paul speaks of things that will 'meet' him in Jerusalem, meaning events that will befall him.

1. meet, encounter (a person) (5×) To meet or encounter another person face to face, whether by arrangement or by providence. In Heb 7:1, Melchizedek 'having met' (sunantesas) Abraham after the slaughter of the kings is a pivotal moment in the priesthood argument; in Luke 9:37 and Acts 10:25, the meetings are narrative encounters with crowds and individuals. Luke 22:10 uses the future tense for a meeting Jesus prophetically arranges — a man carrying a water jar 'will meet' the disciples. Spanish 'encontrar/salir al encuentro' and German 'begegnen' consistently render the physical face-to-face quality. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING en: having-met, met, will-meet | es: encontrando, encontró, les-salió-al-encuentro | fr: rencontrer | de: begegnen, συνήντησεν, συναντήσας Luke 9:37; Luke 22:10; Acts 10:25; Heb 7:1; Heb 7:10

2. befall, happen to (1×) Of events, circumstances, or experiences that 'meet' or come upon a person — that is, befall or happen to someone. This is a natural metaphorical extension: what physically encounters you on the road can also encounter you as fate or providence. In Acts 20:22, Paul says he does not know 'the things that will meet me' (ta sunantesonta moi) in Jerusalem — Spanish 'que me sucederan' ('things that will happen to me') makes the shift from physical encounter to experiential event explicit. Only one NT occurrence carries this sense, but it has deep roots in classical Greek usage. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING en: going-to-happen | es: que-me-sucederán | fr: rencontrer | de: συναντήσοντά Acts 20:22

συνάντ-ησις G4877

meeting, encounter; the act of meeting someone, whether by chance or appointment, or celestial conjunction

This noun denotes a meeting or encounter between people, whether arranged or by chance. In New Testament usage it could mean coming out to meet someone arriving, as when people went out from a city to greet an approaching dignitary. Classical authors used it for chance meetings in the marketplace or for formal encounters. The word could also mean controversy or confrontational debate—meetings where opposing views clashed. In astronomical contexts, it referred to the conjunction of heavenly bodies. The root sense of 'meeting' adapted to various contexts where paths crossed, whether peaceful, contentious, or celestial.

συναντι-λαμβάνομαι G4878 V-PIM/P-3S (2×)

to help, assist, come to the aid of someone

This middle-voice compound verb means to take hold together with someone, hence to help or assist them. Luke 10:40 has Martha asking Jesus to tell Mary to help her with the serving. Romans 8:26 declares that the Spirit helps us in our weakness, particularly in prayer. The term suggests coming alongside to share a burden, not merely offering advice.

(2×) Describes taking hold together with another to help bear a load or accomplish a task, rendering active assistance in their work or struggle. The cross-lingual glosses (Spanish 'ayuda/ayude,' French

'aider,' German 'mithelfen') emphasize the supportive action. Luke uses it for Martha's practical request for help serving (10:40), while Paul applies it to the Spirit's profound ministry of helping believers in the weakness of prayer (Rom 8:26). HELP AND ASSISTANCE

en: helps, she-should-help | es: ayuda, ayude | fr: aider | de: mithelfen, συναντιλάβηται Luke 10:40; Rom 8:26

συναπάγω G4879 V-APP-NMP (3×)

to be led away together with, carried along with others; to be influenced or swept up with a group

A passive compound verb meaning to be led away together, to be carried along or swept up with others. Paul uses it three times: 'do not be haughty but associate with the lowly' (Rom 12:16, though translation contested), 'even Barnabas was carried away by their hypocrisy' (Gal 2:13), and a warning against 'being carried away by the error of lawless people' (2 Pet 3:17). The word suggests being swept along by group dynamics—following the crowd, succumbing to social pressure, or being influenced by others' bad example.

(3×) Translations show the passive swept-along sense: English 'carried away/being carried along', Spanish 'arrastrado/siendo llevados', French 'emmener/mitfortreissen', German 'mitfortreissen' (swept along with). Paul's uses warn against negative group influence: hypocrisy that even infected Barnabas (Gal 2:13) and doctrinal error that carries unstable people away (2 Pet 3:17). Believers must resist being passively swept along by surrounding culture or compromised community. LEADING AWAY

en: being-carried-along, having-been-led-away, was-carried-away | es: fue-arrastrado, habiendo-sido-llevados, siendo-llevados | fr: emmener, mitfortreissen | de: mitfortreissen Rom 12:16; Gal 2:13; 2Pet 3:17

συναπο-θνήσκω G4880 V-AIA-1P (3×)

to die together with, share death with; to experience death in company with another

A compound verb meaning to die together with someone, to share death. It appears three times: Peter's declaration 'even if I must die with you, I will not deny you' (Mark 14:31), Paul's statement 'you are in our hearts, to die together and to live together' (2 Cor 7:3), and 'if we died with him, we will also live with him' (2 Tim 2:11). The word combines 'together' (συν-) with 'die,' emphasizing shared death—either literal martyrdom or spiritual union with Christ's death. Shared death creates shared destiny.

(3×) Languages preserve the compound: English 'die with/together', Spanish 'morir contigo/co-morimos', French 'mourir avec', German 'mitsterben'. The three uses span Peter's failed promise (Mark 14:31), Paul's deep bond with Corinth (2 Cor 7:3), and believers' union with Christ (2 Tim 2:11). Dying together—whether literally or in baptismal identification—creates indestructible connection and guarantees shared resurrection. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: to-die-together, to-die-with, we-died-with | es: co-morimos, morir-contigo, morir-juntos | fr: mourir-avec | de: mitsterben Mark 14:31; 2Cor 7:3; 2Tim 2:11

συναπόλλῡμι G4881 V-AIM-3S (1×)

To perish together with, be destroyed alongside someone else

To be destroyed together with someone, to share in another's ruin. Hebrews 11:31 notes that Rahab the prostitute 'did not perish with those who were disobedient' when Jericho fell—her faith saved her from the destruction that consumed her fellow citizens. The word emphasizes shared fate: she could have died with the rest, but faith separated her from their doom. The prefix 'together with' underscores how close she came to judgment and how her faith created a decisive difference. Her salvation was both physical (spared in conquest) and spiritual (counted among the faithful).

(1×) Rahab's deliverance from the destruction of Jericho, contrasted with the fate of her disobedient countrymen. The association domain fits the 'together with' aspect, though this is really about shared destiny. Spanish 'pereció con', French and German both emphasize co-destruction. The author of Hebrews uses Rahab to prove that faith, not ethnicity, determines inclusion in God's people—she was a Gentile prostitute, yet faith saved her from perishing with her disobedient city. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: perished-with | es: pereció-con | fr: mitumkommen | de: mitumkommen Heb 11:31

συναπο-στέλλω G4882 V-AIA-1S (1×)

To send together with, dispatch jointly or in company with another

To send along with someone else, to dispatch jointly. Paul writes in 2 Corinthians 12:18 about sending Titus to Corinth: 'I sent the brother with him.' The 'together with' element indicates joint delegation—not successive missions but companions sent as a team. Joint sending provides mutual support, corroborating witness, and shared accountability. Paul's pattern often involved sending ministry partners together rather than solo missionaries. The practice reflects wisdom (two are better than one) and legal custom (testimony of two witnesses).

(1×) Paul's dispatch of a companion along with Titus to the Corinthian church, creating a team delegation rather than solo ministry. The association domain fits the partnership aspect. Spanish 'envié junto' (sent together), German 'mitsenden' (send along with), French appears garbled. Joint sending served multiple purposes: mutual encouragement, corroborating witness about Paul's integrity, and shared ministry. The pairing reflects Paul's consistent practice of team-based rather than individualistic mission. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: I-sent-with | es: envié-junto | fr: Sosipater | de: mitsenden 2Cor 12:18

συναρμολογέω G4883 V-PPM/P-NNS (2×)

to be fitted together, joined together in a structure

This passive verb describes components being fitted or framed together into a unified structure. Paul uses architectural imagery in both occurrences: believers as a holy temple being fitted together (Ephesians 2:21) and the body of Christ being joined and held together (4:16). The term emphasizes organic unity and precise coordination, like stones in a building or joints in a body.

(2×) Indicates being joined, fitted, or framed together into a cohesive whole, particularly in architectural or anatomical contexts. The multilingual renderings (Spanish 'bien-ajustada/bien-ajustado,' German 'zusammengefügt') capture the precision of the fitting. Paul employs this metaphorically in Ephesians for both the temple imagery of the church (2:21) and the body imagery (4:16), emphasizing the careful, divinely orchestrated unity of diverse members into a functioning whole. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: being-fitted-together | es: bien-ajustada, bien-ajustado | fr: συναρμολογουμένη, συναρμολογούμενον | de: zusammengefuegt Eph 2:21; Eph 4:16

συναρπάζω G4884 V-APA-NMP (4×)

To seize, snatch away, or drag off by force; used of demonic assault, mob violence, and being caught by a storm.

A forceful compound verb (syn + harpazo) meaning to seize and carry off, to snatch violently. Its NT occurrences span three vivid domains of violent seizure: a demoniac repeatedly seized by an unclean spirit (Luke 8:29), religious opponents who drag Stephen before the Sanhedrin (Acts 6:12) and who seize Paul's companions in Ephesus (Acts 19:29), and a ship caught and driven by a storm (Acts 27:15). In every case, the subject is overpowered by a force beyond its control.

(4×) To seize forcibly and carry off, to snatch away by overwhelming power. In Luke 8:29, the Gerasene demoniac is repeatedly 'seized' (synērpasen) by the unclean spirit — a violent, involuntary experience. In Acts 6:12, opponents 'seized' Stephen and dragged him before the council, and in Acts 19:29 the Ephesian mob 'seized' Gaius and Aristarchus, rushing them into the theater. Acts 27:15 applies the same verb to a ship 'caught' by a violent wind and unable to face it, carried along helplessly. The multilingual evidence (spa 'arrebataron/arrastrando,' fra 'saisir/entraîner,' eng 'seized/caught') consistently captures the forcible, irresistible quality of the action. Whether the agent is demonic, human, or meteorological, the victim is overwhelmed and carried along against their will. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: having-been-caught, having-seized, it-had-seized | es: arrastrando, arrebataron, habiendo-sido-arrastrado | fr: entraîner, saisir | de: συνήρπασαν, συναρπάσαντες, συναρπασθέντος Luke 8:29; Acts 6:12; Acts 19:29; Acts 27:15

συναυξ-άνω G4885 V-PNM/P (1×)

To grow together, increase jointly in size or number alongside something else

To grow up together, to increase alongside something else. In Matthew 13:30, Jesus's parable instructs servants to 'let both grow together until the harvest'—wheat and weeds are to coexist until the final separation. The word emphasizes simultaneous, parallel growth: both are increasing in the same field at the same time. Jesus interprets this as the church age, when righteous and wicked grow together in the world until judgment. Premature separation would damage the wheat; only at harvest can perfect distinction be made. The command to let them grow together counsels patience with imperfect church purity.

(1×) The coexistence of wheat and weeds in Jesus's parable, both permitted to mature until harvest-time separation. Spanish 'crecer juntos' (grow together), French 'croître ensemble' (grow together), German transcribes the Greek. The parable warns against zealous attempts to purify the church prematurely—human judgment can't yet perfectly distinguish true from false, and efforts to root out the wicked may harm the righteous. Only God's eschatological judgment can achieve perfect separation. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: together | es: crecer-juntos | fr: croître-ensemble | de: συναυξάνεσθαι Matt 13:30

σύνδεσμ-ος G4886 N-NMS (4×)

Bond, ligament; that which binds together, whether physical sinew or a unifying spiritual force.

In classical Greek, syndesmos referred to any fastening that holds things together — a joint, a ligament, a clasp. The New Testament writers seized on both the physical and metaphorical possibilities. Paul calls love the 'bond of perfection' (Col 3:14) and speaks of the body's ligaments holding it together in unity (Col 2:19). Peter's darker usage in Acts 8:23, 'bond of iniquity,' reveals how the same binding image can express captivity to sin. Spanish 'vínculo' and French 'lien' both capture this dual register of binding as either constructive unity or constraining bondage.

(4×) Bond, ligament, unifying tie — the concrete or metaphorical fastening that holds parts together. In Colossians 2:19 and Ephesians 4:3, Paul uses it for the sinews of the body and the spiritual bond of peace that unifies believers. In Acts 8:23, Peter inverts the image: Simon Magus is bound in a 'bond of iniquity.' The Spanish split between 'ligamentos' (physical) and 'vínculo' (abstract) nicely mirrors this dual range, while German 'Band' preserves the same polysemy. BOND OBLIGATION VOW

en: bond, ligaments | es: atadura, ligamentos, vínculo | fr: lien, συνδέσμων, συνδέσμῳ | de: Band, σύνδεσμον Acts 8:23; Eph 4:3; Col 2:19; Col 3:14

συνδέω G4887 V-RPM/P-NMP (1×)

To bind together, tie jointly; to be imprisoned together with someone

To be bound together with someone, particularly in shared imprisonment. Hebrews 13:3 exhorts believers to 'remember those in prison as though bound together with them.' The identification goes beyond sympathy to solidarity—believers are to consider themselves co-prisoners with those suffering for the faith. The shared-binding imagery may be literal (some readers were fellow prisoners) or spiritual (all are vulnerable to persecution). Either way, it calls for empathetic action: visiting prisoners, providing for their needs, identifying with their suffering as one's own.

(1×) Empathetic identification with imprisoned believers, considering oneself bound together with them in their suffering. The attachment domain fits the binding imagery. Spanish 'encarcelados con ellos' (imprisoned with them), German 'zusammengebunden' (bound together) preserve the co-imprisonment sense. The exhortation creates radical solidarity: free believers are to identify so closely with prisoners that they feel the chains themselves. This identification should produce action—advocacy, provision, visit—treating prisoners' needs as one's own. BINDING AND TYING

en: having-been-bound-with | es: encarcelados-con-ellos | fr: zusammengebunden | de: zusammengebunden Heb 13:3

συνδοξάζω G4888 V-ASP-1P (1×)

To be glorified together with, share in another's glory or honor

To be glorified together with someone, to share jointly in glory or honor. Paul writes in Romans 8:17 that believers are 'heirs of God and co-heirs with Christ, if indeed we suffer with him in order that we may also be glorified together with him.' The shared glory follows shared suffering: union with Christ in his sufferings leads to union in his glorification. The passive voice indicates divine action—God will glorify believers together with Christ. This isn't individual glory but participation in Christ's own glorification, a shared radiance that comes from being united to the risen and exalted Lord.

(1×) Believers' future participation in Christ's glory, the outcome of present union with him in suffering. Paul's conditional 'if we suffer with him' links co-glorification to co-suffering: the pathway to shared glory runs through shared pain. Spanish 'seamos glorificados juntamente' (we may be glorified together), French 'glorifier ensemble', German 'mitverherrlicht' (co-glorified) all preserve the joint participation. The association domain fits the 'with-ness.' Glory isn't individual achievement but shared inheritance for those united to the glorified Christ. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: we-may-be-glorified-together | es: seamos-glorificados-juntamente | fr: glorifier-ensemble | de: mitverherrlicht Rom 8:17

σύνδουλ-ος G4889 N-AMP (10×)

A fellow servant or fellow slave, one who shares the same master and obligation of service

A compound noun meaning 'co-slave' or 'fellow servant,' emphasizing shared subjection to a common master. In Matthew's parable of the unforgiving servant, the syndoulos who owes a small debt begs for mercy from the one who was himself forgiven an enormous sum (Matt 18:28–33), making the shared status morally weighty. In Matthew 24:49, the wicked servant beats his fellow servants. Paul uses the term warmly for Epaphras (Col 1:7) and Tychicus (Col 4:7), framing apostolic partnership as joint servitude to Christ. In Revelation, angels identify themselves as fellow servants with the prophets (Rev 6:11; 19:10; 22:9). Spanish 'consiervo' and French 'compagnon de service' both preserve the egalitarian bond.

fellow servant, fellow slave (10×) A fellow servant who shares the same master, used both in parabolic settings where servants owe obligations to a common lord (Matt 18:28–33; 24:49) and as a title of solidarity among Christian workers who serve Christ together (Col 1:7; 4:7). In Revelation, angels apply it to themselves in relation to human prophets and believers (Rev 6:11; 19:10; 22:9), stressing that angels and faithful humans share a common posture of service before God. Spanish 'consiervo' and German 'Mitknecht' capture the prefix-compound structure denoting shared servitude. FEMALE SERVANT SLAVE

en: a-fellow-servant, fellow-servant, fellow-servants | es: consiervo, consiervos | fr: compagnon-de-service | de: Mitknecht Matt 18:28; Matt 18:29; Matt 18:31; Matt 18:33; Matt 24:49

συνδρομ-ή G4890 N-NFS (1×)

A rushing together of people, tumultuous crowd gathering; violent concourse

A tumultuous gathering or mob rushing together, a violent concourse of people. In Acts 21:30, when a riot erupts in Jerusalem over Paul's presence in the temple, Luke describes 'there was a rushing together of the people.' The word captures the chaos of a mob forming: individuals converging from all directions into a violent crowd. Classical usage included medical senses (blood rushing to an injury, combination of symptoms) and rhetorical senses (conclusion of argument). Luke uses it for crowd violence—the spontaneous, dangerous convergence that threatens Paul's life.

(1×) The violent mob formation in Jerusalem that nearly kills Paul before Roman soldiers intervene. The rushing together creates lethal danger—not an organized protest but spontaneous mob violence. Spanish 'tumulto' (tumult), French 'course' (rush), German transcribes the Greek. The violence/conflict domain fits perfectly. Luke's term choice emphasizes the sudden, chaotic nature of the threat: scattered individuals become a dangerous mass rushing together with deadly intent. Only military intervention saves Paul from being torn apart. CONSPIRACY

en: rushing-together | es: tumulto | fr: course | de: συνδρομὴ Acts 21:30

συνεγείρω G4891 V-AIA-3S (3×)

to raise together with, co-resurrect; to raise someone jointly with another, especially in spiritual resurrection

A compound verb meaning to raise up together with, to co-resurrect. Paul uses it three times: God 'raised us up together with Christ' (Eph 2:6), 'you were raised together with him through faith' (Col 2:12), and 'if then you were raised together with Christ...' (Col 3:1). The word combines 'together' (συν-) with 'raise up,' emphasizing joint resurrection—believers sharing Christ's resurrection life. This isn't future hope alone but present reality: spiritually raised, seated in heavenly places, sharing His victory now.

(3×) All preserve the compound: English 'raised together/with', Spanish 'resucitados juntamente/nos resucitó juntamente', French uses Greek forms, German 'mitauferwecken' (raise up with). Paul's theology of union with Christ reaches its climax: if believers died with Christ (Rom 6), they also rose with Him. The 'together' isn't mere simultaneity but organic union—His resurrection becomes theirs, His life flows into theirs. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: raised-together, you-were-raised, you-were-raised-together | es: fuisteis-resucitados-juntamente, nos-resucitó-juntamente | fr: συνήγειρεν, συνηγέρθητε | de: mitauferwecken Eph 2:6; Col 2:12; Col 3:1

συνέδρ-ιον G4892 N-DNS (22×)

Council, Sanhedrin – the Jewish governing and judicial assembly, both the supreme body in Jerusalem and local tribunals

A neuter noun denoting a council or deliberative assembly, used in the New Testament almost exclusively for the Jewish Sanhedrin – the supreme judicial body in Jerusalem composed of chief priests, elders, and scribes. Jesus warned his disciples they would be 'delivered to councils' (Matt 10:17; Mark 13:9), using the plural to include local Jewish tribunals with disciplinary authority. The singular most often designates the Jerusalem Sanhedrin that tried Jesus (Matt 26:59; Mark 14:55; Luke 22:66) and later the apostles (Acts 4:15; 5:21, 27, 34; 6:12). Spanish sanedrin, French sanhedrin, and German Hoher Rat ('High Council') all capture the institutional specificity.

council, Sanhedrin (22×) The Jewish governing and judicial council, referring primarily to the Jerusalem Sanhedrin that tried Jesus (Matt 26:59; Mark 14:55) and later the apostles (Acts 4:15; 5:21; 6:12). The plural (Matt 10:17; Mark 13:9) extends to local synagogue tribunals. Spanish sanedrin and German Hoher Rat confirm the institutional sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: council, councils | es: sanedrines, sanedrín | fr: sanhédrin | de: Hoher-Rat, Synedrium Matt 5:22; Matt 10:17; Matt 26:59; Mark 13:9; Mark 14:55

συνείδησις G4893 N-NFS (31×)

conscience — the inner moral faculty by which a person evaluates their own conduct as right or wrong

Syneidesis, built from syn ('together') and oida ('know'), literally means 'co-knowledge with oneself' — the internal witness that evaluates one's own moral standing. Across 31 New Testament occurrences, it becomes a key term in Pauline and Petrine ethics. Paul appeals to his conscience before the Sanhedrin (Acts 23:1), declares that Gentiles have the law's work written on their hearts with conscience bearing witness (Rom 2:15), and develops an extended discussion about the 'weak conscience' of those troubled by idol-food (1 Cor 8:7-12; 10:25-29). The Pastoral Epistles prize a 'good conscience' and a 'pure conscience' as marks of genuine faith (1 Tim 1:5, 19; 3:9). Hebrews contrasts animal sacrifices that cannot perfect the conscience with Christ's blood that cleanses the conscience from dead works (Heb 9:9, 14; 10:22). Peter urges baptism as an appeal of a good conscience toward God (1 Pet 3:16, 21).

conscience, moral self-awareness (31×) The inner moral faculty that evaluates one's own actions and motives, bearing witness alongside reason and the law. Paul grounds Gentile moral accountability in conscience (Rom 2:15) and extensively discusses the 'weak conscience' regarding idol-food (1 Cor 8:7-12; 10:25-29). Hebrews contrasts the inability of animal sacrifice to purify the conscience with Christ's blood that cleanses from dead works (Heb 9:9, 14; 10:22). First Peter presents baptism as the appeal of a good conscience toward God (1 Pet 3:21). KNOWLEDGE AND LEARNING

en: conscience | es: conciencia | fr: conscience | de: Gewissen, συνείδησιν, συνειδήσει John 8:9; Acts 23:1; Acts 24:16; Rom 2:15; Rom 9:1

σύνοιδα G4894 V-RIA-1S (4×)

To be conscious of, be aware of together; to share knowledge or come to a realization.

Built from syn- ('together') and oida ('to know'), this verb carries the idea of shared or inner awareness — knowing something within oneself, or knowing in concert with another. In Acts 5:2, Sapphira 'was aware' of the deception her husband carried out, while in Acts 12:12, Peter 'realized' where he had come. Paul uses it reflexively in 1 Corinthians 4:4: 'I am not conscious of anything against myself.' The translation evidence is telling — English oscillates between 'conscious' and 'aware,' Spanish uses 'consciente' and 'entendiendo,' reflecting the verb's range from inner self-awareness to dawning realization.

(4×) To be conscious of, become aware, realize — denoting either a private awareness within oneself or a shared knowledge with another person. In Acts 5:2, Sapphira shares knowledge of the fraud with Ananias; in 1 Corinthians 4:4, Paul speaks of his own self-awareness before God. Acts 12:12 and 14:6 use the aorist participle for a sudden realization — 'having become aware.' The multilingual evidence (English 'conscious/aware,' Spanish 'consciente/entendiendo,' German 'bewusst-sein') confirms a single sense with a spectrum from co-knowledge to introspective self-examination. CONSPIRE AGREE TOGETHER

en: I-am-conscious-of, having-become-aware, having-realized | es: considerando, entendiendo, estoy-consciente | fr: convenir | de: bewusst-sein, συνειδυίης, συνιδόντες Acts 5:2; Acts 12:12; Acts 14:6; 1Cor 4:4

σύνειμι G4895 V-IIA-3P (2×)

to be with, accompany someone

This verb means to go or come together with someone, hence to be in company with them. Luke 9:18 mentions Jesus praying alone while the disciples were with him—an interesting paradox of solitude and companionship. Acts 22:11 refers to Paul's companions who were with him on the Damascus road. The term emphasizes physical presence and association.

(2×) Describes being together with someone, accompanying them or being in their company during an event or period. The cross-lingual evidence (Spanish 'estaban con,' French 'être-avec') straightforwardly expresses companionship. Luke's account of Jesus praying 'alone' yet with his disciples present (9:18) captures a nuanced solitude, while Paul's reference to those who were with him during his conversion experience (Acts 22:11) emphasizes shared witness to the dramatic event. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: being-with, were-with | es: estaban-con, que-estaban-conmigo | fr: être-avec | de: συνόντων, συνῆσαν Luke 9:18; Acts 22:11

σύνειμι G4896 V-PPA-GMS (1×)

To be with, come together, gather as a crowd or assembly

To be present together, to gather as a crowd or congregation. In Luke 8:4, when 'a large crowd was gathering' to hear Jesus, people from multiple towns 'coming together' formed the audience for the parable of the sower. The word emphasizes the assembly process—individuals converging to form a crowd. Classical usage included being joined with something (a disease, a task) and intercourse. Luke uses it for the gathering crowds that characterized Jesus's Galilean ministry. The convergence creates the setting for Jesus's teaching and the diverse soil conditions of human hearts.

(1×) The gathering crowds from various towns who converge to hear Jesus teach, creating the audience for the parable of the sower. The movement domain fits the coming-together aspect. Spanish 'reuniendo' (gathering), French 'se rassembler' (gather together), German transcribes the Greek participle. The detail emphasizes the diverse origins of the crowd—people coming together from many towns, representing the varied receptivity Jesus will describe in his parable about different soils. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: Gathering | es: reuniendo | fr: se-rassembler | de: Συνιόντος Luke 8:4

συνεισ-έρχομαι G4897 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to enter together with, go in with someone

This verb describes entering a place in company with another person. John 6:22 notes that Jesus did not enter the boat with his disciples. John 18:15 mentions a disciple known to the high priest who entered with Jesus into the courtyard. Both instances highlight the significance of who accompanies whom in crucial moments.

(2×) Indicates entering a location together with another person, going in as companions. The multilingual renderings (Spanish 'entró con,' French 'entrer-avec,' German 'miteintreten') preserve the compound structure of joint entrance. John uses this verb to mark significant moments of association or separation: Jesus not entering the boat with the disciples after the feeding miracle (6:22), and Peter's companion entering the high priest's courtyard with Jesus during his trial (18:15). ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: entered-with | es: entró-con | fr: entrer-avec | de: miteintreten John 6:22; John 18:15

συνέκδημ-ος G4898 N-AMP (2×)

fellow traveler, traveling companion

This noun describes someone who travels in company with others on a journey. Acts 19:29 identifies Gaius and Aristarchus as Paul's traveling companions from Macedonia who were seized during the Ephesian riot. Second Corinthians 8:19 mentions a brother chosen by the churches to travel with Paul carrying the collection. The term emphasizes shared mission and journey.

(2×) Denotes a person who accompanies another on a journey, a co-traveler or companion in travel, especially on missionary journeys. The cross-lingual glosses (Spanish 'compañero de viaje,' French 'compagnon-de-voyage,' German 'Reisebegleiter') all maintain the travel-companion concept. Both NT occurrences involve Paul's missionary associates: those caught up in danger with him at Ephesus (Acts 19:29) and one chosen to ensure accountability while transporting church funds (2 Cor 8:19). COMPANION ASSOCIATE

en: fellow-traveler, traveling-companions | es: compañero-de-viaje, compañeros-de-viaje | fr: compagnon-de-voyage | de: Reisebegleiter, συνεκδήμους Acts 19:29; 2Cor 8:19

συνεκ-λεκτός G4899 Adj-NFS (1×)

chosen together, co-elected, selected jointly (ecclesiastical term for fellow believer)

This rare compound appears only in Peter's closing greeting, where the church 'in Babylon' is called 'co-chosen' with the recipients. The prefix συν- ('together') intensifies the theological weight: not merely chosen, but chosen alongside them in God's electing purposes. Translations across languages preserve the participatory sense—German 'miterwählte,' Spanish 'co-elegida'—highlighting the shared election of communities scattered across the empire.

(1×) The single NT occurrence (1 Pet 5:13) refers to a church community sharing the same elect status as the letter's recipients. Multilingual glosses emphasize corporate selection rather than individual choice, with 'co-chosen' signaling solidarity in divine calling. The term carries ecclesiological freight: believers are not isolated but jointly elect. CHOSEN AND ELECT

en: co-chosen | es: co-elegida | fr: συνεκλεκτὴ | de: miterwaehlte 1Pet 5:13

συνελαύνω G4900 V-IIA-3S (1×)

to drive together, reconcile, force into unity (used of peacemaking between disputing parties)

Though the classical lexicon lists meanings like 'hammer together' or 'weld iron,' the NT usage (Acts 7:26) narrows to reconciliation: Moses tried to 'drive together' two fighting Israelites into peace. The verb conveys forceful intervention—not gentle persuasion but active peacemaking. Spanish 'reconciliaba' and English 'was reconciling' capture this mediatorial thrust, while the German retains the Greek form, perhaps acknowledging translation difficulty.

(1×) In Stephen's speech (Acts 7:26), Moses attempts to reconcile two Hebrew men who are fighting. The context demands a sense of forcing conflicting parties into harmony, not merely passive accompaniment. English and Spanish glosses explicitly render this as reconciliation, showing the semantic narrowing from the classical 'drive together' to the specific NT application of peacemaking intervention. DRIVEN AWAY SWEPT en: was-reconciling | es: reconciliaba | fr: chasser-ensemble | de: συνήλλασσεν Acts 7:26

συνεπιμαρτῠρ-έω G4901 V-PPA-GMS (1×)

to bear witness together, add corroborating testimony, jointly attest

The author of Hebrews describes God's multi-faceted confirmation of the gospel: signs, wonders, miracles, and distributions of the Spirit 'bearing witness together' with the apostolic message. This compound verb (συν + επι + μαρτυρέω) intensifies the collaborative attestation—not solitary testimony but convergent evidence. German 'mitbezeugen' and Spanish 'dando testimonio juntamente' emphasize the collective corroboration, essential to early Christian apologetics.

(1×) Heb 2:4 depicts divine signs corroborating the salvation message proclaimed by eyewitnesses. The term suggests layered validation: human preaching plus divine attestation, working in concert. Multilingual glosses consistently render the joint-witness motif ('bearing witness with,' 'mitbezeugen'), underscoring the forensic context where multiple witnesses establish truth. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: bearing-witness-with | es: dando-testimonio-juntamente | fr: mitbezeugen | de: mitbezeugen Heb 2:4

συνέπομαι G4902 V-IIM/P-3S (1×)

to accompany, follow along with, travel together

Classical Greek uses this verb for following flocks (tending them) or keeping pace with a chariot, but Acts 20:4 employs it for Paul's traveling companions who 'accompanied' him into Asia. The συν- prefix underscores joint movement, not mere parallel travel. French 'accompagner' and Spanish 'acompañaban' capture the relational dimension: these were not strangers on the same road but partners in mission, following Paul in both space and purpose.

(1×) In Acts 20:4, Luke lists several men who 'accompanied' Paul to Asia, framing them as mission partners rather than incidental co-travelers. The verb implies intentional solidarity—keeping pace with Paul's journey and ministry. German and French glosses ('accompagner,' 'συνείπετο') preserve this participatory sense, vital for understanding early Christian collaborative networks. FOLLOWING

AND DISCIPLESHIP
en: was-accompanying | es: Lo-acompañaban | fr: accompagner | de: συνείπετο Acts 20:4

συνεργ-έω G4903 V-IIA-3S (5×)

To work together with, cooperate, collaborate; to be a fellow worker or contribute jointly to an effort.

Built from 'syn' (together) and 'ergeo' (work), this verb describes joint labor toward a shared purpose. Its NT range is rich: the Lord 'worked with' the apostles through confirming signs (Mark 16:20), all things 'work together' for good under God's sovereignty (Rom 8:28), and faith 'cooperated with' Abraham's works (Jas 2:22). Paul also uses it to describe human collaboration in ministry (1 Cor 16:16; 2 Cor 6:1). The consistent multilingual rendering — Spanish 'colaborar,' French 'travailler avec,' German 'mitwirken' — underscores the cooperative essence.

(5×) To work together with someone or something, to cooperate or collaborate toward a shared goal. The subject may be divine (the Lord working alongside the apostles, Mark 16:20), providential (all things cooperating for good, Rom 8:28), or human (believers laboring together in ministry, 1 Cor 16:16; 2 Cor 6:1). James 2:22 applies it to faith and works operating in concert. Every translation tradition — Spanish 'colaborar,' French 'travailler avec,' German 'mitwirken' — reinforces the idea of synergistic joint effort. FELLOW WORKER en: Working-together, was-working-with, work-together | es: Colaborando, colabora, cooperaba | fr: collaborateur, mitwirken, travailler-avec | de: mitwirken Mark 16:20; Rom 8:28; 1Cor 16:16; 2Cor 6:1; Jas 2:22

συνεργός G4904 Adj-NMS (13×)

fellow worker, co-laborer — one who works alongside another, especially in gospel ministry

Synergos is a distinctly Pauline term, appearing 13 times in the New Testament almost exclusively in Paul's letters to describe those who share the labor of proclaiming the gospel. Formed from syn ('together') and ergon ('work'), the word carries a warm relational tone — these are not mere employees but partners in a shared mission. Paul applies it to an impressive roster: Prisca and Aquila (Rom 16:3), Timothy (Rom 16:21), Titus (2 Cor 8:23), Epaphroditus (Phil 2:25), and several others. The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'colaborador,' French 'collaborateur,' German 'Mitarbeiter' — consistently highlight joint agency and shared purpose.

fellow worker, co-laborer (13×) A substantivized adjective denoting one who works alongside another, used by Paul as a near-technical term for ministry partners in the gospel enterprise. Applied to both individuals and groups: Prisca and Aquila (Rom 16:3), Urbanus (Rom 16:9), Timothy (Rom 16:21), Titus (2 Cor 8:23), Epaphroditus (Phil 2:25), and the believers at Corinth who are 'God's fellow workers' (1 Cor 3:9). All 13 occurrences share this sense of collaborative labor, whether the partnership is with Paul, with one another, or with God himself. FELLOW WORKER en: fellow-worker, fellow-workers | es: colaborador, colaboradores | fr: collaborateur | de: Mitarbeiter Rom 16:3; Rom 16:9; Rom 16:21; 1Cor 3:9; 2Cor 1:24

συνέρχομαι G4905 V-PIM/P-3S (30×)

To come together, assemble, gather; to accompany someone; euphemistically, to come together in sexual union

Built from the prefix syn- (together) and erchomai (to come), this compound verb paints a picture of convergence. Its primary and most frequent use describes people assembling – crowds gathering around Jesus so thickly that the disciples 'could not even eat' (Mark 3:20), or the Jerusalem church convening after the resurrection (Acts 1:6). A secondary sense describes accompaniment on a journey, as when the women who followed Jesus from Galilee 'came with him' to observe the tomb (Luke 23:55). In one notable instance at Matt 1:18, it serves as a delicate euphemism for marital union: 'before they came together,' preserving the reverence surrounding the virgin conception. French 'se rassembler' and German 'zusammenkommen' both mirror the literal sense of coming-together.

1. assemble, gather together (21×) The predominant sense of communal assembly: to come together, congregate, or gather in one place for worship, deliberation, or shared purpose. Paul scolds the Corinthians for their conduct 'when you come together' for the Lord's Supper (1 Cor 11:20). In Acts, the word repeatedly describes the early church gathering (Acts 1:6, 2:6), and in the Gospels, crowds pressing together around Jesus (Mark 3:20, Luke 5:15). GATHERING TOGETHER en: came-together, come-together, comes-together | es: Reuniendo, habiendo-venido-juntos, habiéndose-reunido | fr: se-rassembler, se-réunir | de: kommt-zusammen, zusammenkommen Mark 3:20; Mark 14:53; Luke 5:15; John 18:20; Acts 1:6

2. accompany, go/come with (8×) To travel together with someone or accompany them, emphasizing shared movement toward a destination rather than static gathering. When the women 'who had come with him from Galilee' followed Jesus to the cross (Luke 23:55), or when Peter invited the men from Joppa to 'go with' him to Cornelius (Acts 10:23), the word highlights companionship on the road. Spanish 'fueron con' (they went with) captures this accompaniment nuance. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: came-with, having-come-with, having-gone-with | es: Fueron, fue-con, fueron-con | fr: se-rassembler, se-réunir | de: kommt-zusammen, zusammenkommen Luke 23:55; John 11:33; Acts 9:39; Acts 10:23; Acts 10:45

3. come together sexually (1×) A euphemistic use denoting sexual union or cohabitation between husband and wife. Appearing at Matt 1:18 – 'before they came together' – it describes the consummation of marriage with dignified restraint, a usage well attested in classical Greek (cf. LSJ). The Spanish 'juntarse' similarly serves as a discreet euphemism for marital intimacy. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: to-come-together | es: juntarse | fr: se-rassembler | de: kommt-zusammen Matt 1:18

συνεσθίω G4906 V-IIA-3S (5×)

To eat together with someone; to share a meal as an act of fellowship and social acceptance.

In the ancient Mediterranean world, sharing a meal was far more than consuming food — it was a declaration of social acceptance and fellowship. Every NT use of this verb carries that weight. Jesus 'eats with' tax collectors and sinners (Luke 15:2), scandalizing the Pharisees. Peter ate with Cornelius and his household (Acts 10:41), then faced criticism for eating with the uncircumcised (Acts 11:3). Paul forbids eating with an unrepentant brother (1 Cor 5:11), and Peter's withdrawal from table fellowship with Gentiles provoked the Antioch crisis (Gal 2:12).

(5×) To eat together with someone, signifying social acceptance, fellowship, and communal solidarity. In the NT, every occurrence is theologically charged: Jesus' table fellowship with sinners (Luke 15:2) expressed divine welcome; the apostles eating with the risen Christ confirmed their witness (Acts 10:41); and disputes over who may eat with whom drove pivotal moments in early church history (Acts 11:3; Gal 2:12). Paul's prohibition in 1 Cor 5:11 shows the exclusionary power of withholding shared meals. Spanish 'comer con/junto' and French 'manger avec/ensemble' consistently mark the communal dimension. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: ate-with, eats-with, he-was-eating | es: come-con, comer-junto, comimos-con | fr: manger-avec, manger-ensemble | de: mitessen, συνέφαγες, συνεσθίει Luke 15:2; Acts 10:41; Acts 11:3; 1Cor 5:11; Gal 2:12

σύνεσις G4907 N-GFS (7×)

Understanding, insight, mental acuity; the faculty of grasping meaning quickly and discerning what is essential.

Denotes the capacity for comprehension and discernment — not merely factual knowledge but the ability to perceive connections and grasp deeper significance. When the twelve-year-old Jesus astonishes the teachers in the temple, Luke uses this word for what amazed them: his σύνεσις, his penetrating insight (Luke 2:47). Paul prays that the Colossians be filled with it (Col 1:9), and in Mark 12:33 a scribe recognizes that loving God with all one's 'understanding' surpasses burnt offerings. Spanish distinguishes nuances with 'comprensión,' 'entendimiento,' and 'inteligencia,' reflecting the word's breadth from intellectual sharpness to spiritual wisdom.

understanding (7×) The faculty of quick comprehension and discernment — the ability to grasp meaning, perceive connections, and exercise sound judgment. Spanish renders it variously as 'comprensión' (comprehension), 'entendimiento' (understanding), and 'inteligencia' (intelligence), reflecting the word's range from raw intellectual acuity to spiritual insight. In Luke 2:47 it describes the boy Jesus's astonishing capacity to engage with learned teachers; in Mark 12:33 it names the faculty by which one recognizes that love surpasses sacrifice; and in Col 1:9 Paul prays for believers to be filled with it alongside spiritual wisdom. UNDERSTANDING AND DISCERNMENT

en: insight, understanding | es: comprensión, entendimiento, inteligencia | fr: intelligence | de: Erkenntnis, Verstaendnis Mark 12:33; Luke 2:47; 1Cor 1:19; Eph 3:4; Col 1:9

συνετός G4908 Adj-GMP (4×)

Intelligent, understanding, discerning; possessing insight and sound judgment.

Derived from syniemi ('to bring together mentally'), synetos describes someone who can synthesize information into understanding. Jesus thanks the Father for hiding things from 'the wise and understanding' (Matt 11:25; Luke 10:21), using the term almost ironically for those whose intellectual prowess becomes a barrier. In Acts 13:7, Sergius Paulus is called a 'man of understanding' — a straightforward compliment. Paul quotes Isaiah's judgment that God will 'destroy the understanding of the understanding ones' (1 Cor 1:19). Spanish captures this with both 'inteligentes' and 'prudente,' while French uses 'intelligent' and 'compréhensif.'

(4×) Intelligent, discerning, having understanding — describing a person endowed with the capacity to comprehend and synthesize. In Matthew 11:25 and Luke 10:21, Jesus uses it in a paradoxical context where worldly intelligence is contrasted with childlike faith. Acts 13:7 applies it approvingly to the Roman proconsul Sergius Paulus. Paul's citation of Isaiah 29:14 in 1 Corinthians 1:19 targets the self-sufficiency of human discernment. The Spanish split between 'inteligentes' (raw intellect) and 'prudente' (practical wisdom) hints at the adjective's breadth across both theoretical and applied understanding. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: intelligent | es: entendidos, inteligentes, prudente | fr: compréhensif, intelligent | de: verstaendig, συνετῶν, συνετῷ Matt 11:25; Luke 10:21; Acts 13:7; 1Cor 1:19

συνευδοκ-έω G4909 V-PIA-3P (6×)

syneudokeo – to consent to, approve jointly, express agreement with an action or practice

Compounded from syn ('together') and eudokeo ('to think well of, approve'), syneudokeo means to join in approving or to give one's consent to an action or practice. It appears in morally weighty contexts throughout the New Testament. Jesus charges the Pharisees: 'you witness and consent to the deeds of your fathers' (Luke 11:48). Saul of Tarsus was 'consenting to' Stephen's execution (Acts 8:1; 22:20). Paul warns that those who 'approve of' wickedness share the guilt of those who practice it (Rom 1:32). In a striking pastoral exception, 1 Corinthians 7:12 uses it positively: if an unbelieving spouse 'consents to live' with a believer, they should not divorce.

consent to, approve jointly (6×) To give one's consent, join in approving, or express solidarity with an action or practice – carrying the moral weight of shared culpability or endorsement. Luke 11:48 condemns those who 'consent to' the murder of the prophets; Acts 8:1 and 22:20 describe Saul's complicity in Stephen's stoning; Romans 1:32 extends guilt to those who 'approve of' sin even without committing it. The positive use in 1 Cor 7:12 (spousal consent to remain in marriage) confirms that the core semantic is joint approval rather than inherently negative judgment. Spanish consentir, French consentir/approuver, and German zustimmen all converge on this unified sense. AGREE CONSENT ACCORD

en: approve-together, approving, consenting | es: aprueban-juntamente, consentís, consiente | fr: approuver, consentir | de: zustimmen, συνευδοκεῖτε, συνευδοκῶν Luke 11:48; Acts 8:1; Acts 22:20; Rom 1:32; 1Cor 7:12

συνευωχ-έομαι G4910 V-PPM/P-NMP (2×)

to feast together, participate in a meal together

This middle-voice verb describes joining together in a feast or banquet. Second Peter 2:13 condemns false teachers who feast together with believers while reveling in their deceptions. Jude 12 calls them hidden reefs at the church's love feasts, feasting together without fear. Both passages use the image of shared meals to highlight the dangerous presence of false teachers within the community.

(2×) Means to join in feasting together, participating in a communal meal or banquet, particularly the church's fellowship meals (love feasts). The multilingual evidence (French 'festoyant-ensemble,' German 'mitschmausen/zusammen-schmausend') captures the festive dining context. Both 2 Pet 2:13 and Jude 12 use this verb to describe the audacious presence of deceivers at Christian fellowship meals, exploiting sacred communal dining for their own ends, making them dangerous insiders rather than obvious outsiders. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: feasting-together, feasting-with | es: banqueteando-juntos | fr: festoyant-ensemble, συνευωχούμενοι | de: mitschmausen, zusammen-schmausend 2Pet 2:13; Jude 1:12

συνεφ-ίστημι G4911 V-AIA-3S (1×)

to rise up together against, join in attacking, mob (in hostile action)

At Philippi, the crowd 'rose up together' against Paul and Silas, galvanized by the slave-owners' accusations. The συν- prefix marks collective uprising—not individual dissent but mob violence. Spanish 'levantóse' and French 'se soulever ensemble' capture the sudden, corporate aggression. The verb shifts from the classical sense of 'superintending' to the NT's darker usage: conspiratorial attack, where individual hostility coalesces into unified opposition.

(1×) Acts 16:22 narrates the Philippian mob's concerted assault on Paul and Silas, prompted by economic grievance. The term conveys more than spatial proximity—it signals coordinated hostility, a crowd acting as one body. English 'joined in attacking' and German 'συνεπέστη' preserve the aggressive collective action essential to Luke's portrayal of urban persecution. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: joined-in-attacking | es: levantóse | fr: se-soulever-ensemble | de: συνεπέστη Acts 16:22

συνέχω G4912 V-PPM/P-AMS (12×)

To hold together, constrain, press upon, seize; of inner compulsion, physical affliction, crowds pressing, or forcible restraint.

A versatile Greek verb meaning to hold together or press from all sides, producing four distinct experiential senses in the New Testament. Paul uses it for the inward pressure of Christ's love that 'constrains' him (2 Cor 5:14) and the agonizing squeeze of being 'pressed between' two desires (Phil 1:23). In the healing narratives, it describes being gripped by fever or disease (Luke 4:38; Matt 4:24). Luke employs it for crowds physically pressing upon Jesus (Luke 8:45) and for the prophesied siege of Jerusalem (Luke 19:43). Finally, it covers forcible physical restraint, as when Jesus' captors 'held' him (Luke 22:63) or the crowd 'stopped' their ears against Stephen (Acts 7:57). Spanish translations distinguish these well: 'constriñe' for inner compulsion, 'afligidos' for affliction, 'aprietan' for crowding, and 'taparon' for stopping the ears.

1. constrain, compel inwardly (4×) Inner constraint or compulsion: to be pressed or hemmed in by an urgent internal force. Paul confesses that the love of Christ 'constrains' him (2 Cor 5:14, συνέχει), and he is 'hard pressed' between living and departing (Phil 1:23). Jesus himself says 'how distressed I am' until his baptism of suffering is accomplished (Luke 12:50). Spanish 'constriñe' and 'constreñido' precisely capture this psychological squeezing. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: I-am-distressed, I-am-pressed, compels | es: constríñe, estaba-constreñido, estoy-angustiado | fr: presser, retenir | de: bedraengen, hält-fest Luke 12:50; Acts 18:5; 2Cor 5:14; Phil 1:23

2. afflict, grip by illness or distress (4×) Affliction by illness, fear, or distress: to be seized or gripped by disease or overwhelming emotion in a passive, suffering sense. Simon's mother-in-law was 'gripped' by a great fever (Luke 4:38); the Gerasenes were 'seized' with great fear (Luke 8:37). Spanish 'afligidos' and 'siendo afligida' reflect the passive, suffering dimension clearly. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: being-afflicted, being-held, they-were-gripped | es: afligidos, eran-apresados, siendo-afligida | fr: presser, retenir | de: hält-fest Matt 4:24; Luke 4:38; Luke 8:37; Acts 28:8

3. press upon physically, crowd (2×) Physical pressing or crowding: a throng pressing against someone from all sides. The crowd 'presses upon' Jesus so tightly that he asks who touched him (Luke 8:45). In Luke 19:43, enemies will 'hem you in' and press upon Jerusalem on every side. Spanish 'te aprietan' vividly conveys the physical compression of a surrounding crowd. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: press-upon, will-press-upon | es: te-apretarán, te-aprietan | fr: presser | de: hält-fest Luke 8:45; Luke 19:43

4. hold, seize, stop up (2×) Forcible holding, seizing, or stopping up: to physically restrain a person or close shut something. Those who arrested Jesus 'held' him and mocked him (Luke 22:63); the crowd 'stopped' their ears against Stephen's testimony (Acts 7:57). Spanish 'sosteniendo' and 'taparon' distinguish holding from stopping, showing the two sub-applications of this physical restraint sense. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: holding, they-held | es: sosteniendo, taparon | fr: presser, retenir | de: hält-fest Luke 22:63; Acts 7:57

συνήδομαι G4913 V-PIM/P-1S (1×)

to rejoice with, delight together, take pleasure in (with shared joy or satisfaction)

Paul confesses in Romans 7 that his 'inner self' delights in God's law, using a compound verb that normally describes shared joy (rejoicing with others). Here the 'co-rejoicing' is internal: the renewed mind finds common cause with Torah's righteousness, even as the flesh wars against it. The συν- prefix may signal the believer's alignment with God's delight in holiness, a participatory joy mirroring divine pleasure in the law.

(1×) Rom 7:22 employs the verb for Paul's inner self delighting in God's law, possibly implying joint-rejoicing with God himself or the co-delight of the renewed mind alongside God's own pleasure in righteousness. Spanish 'me deleito' and German 'sich mitfreuen' preserve the relational joy, distinguishing this from mere intellectual assent—it's affective alignment with divine values. REJOICING AND GREETING

en: I-delight | es: me-deleito | fr: se-réjouir | de: sich-mitfreuen Rom 7:22

συνήθεια G4914 N-AFS (3×)

habit, custom, familiar practice; established patterns of behavior or social conventions

A noun meaning habit, custom, or familiar practice—what's become routine through repetition or social convention. It appears in Pilate's statement 'you have a custom that I release one prisoner' (John 18:39), regarding eating meat offered to idols—'some through former habit of idols' (1 Cor 8:7), and Paul's rhetorical 'we have no such custom' regarding women's head coverings (1 Cor 11:16). Classical uses include habitual association, sexual intercourse, or animals herding together—always emphasizing repeated, established patterns. Custom shapes behavior powerfully.

(3×) Uniform: English 'custom/habit', Spanish 'costumbre', French 'coutume/habitude', German 'Gewohnheit'. The three NT uses show custom operating at different levels: civic (Pilate's Passover amnesty), personal (lingering effects of idolatrous habits), and ecclesiastical (church practice regarding head coverings). In each case, established practice—whether from law, background, or tradition—creates expectations and shapes present behavior. CUSTOM AND PRACTICE

en: a-custom, custom | es: costumbre | fr: coutume, habitude | de: Gewohnheit John 18:39; 1Cor 8:7; 1Cor 11:16

ἡλῐκι-ώτης G4915 N-AMP (1×)

contemporaries, age-mates, peers (especially those of the same generation)

Paul notes in Galatians that he outstripped his 'contemporaries' in zeal for Jewish traditions—not all Jews, but specifically his generational cohort. The term denotes age-peers, often with shared upbringing or training. Classical usage includes foster-brothers and comrades of equal age; Paul's usage narrows to rival students in the Pharisaic schools. Spanish 'coetáneos' and German 'Altersgenosse' emphasize temporal equality, highlighting Paul's competitive pre-conversion context.

(1×) Gal 1:14 describes Paul's pre-Damascus zeal surpassing that of his 'contemporaries in Judaism.' The term identifies fellow Pharisaic students of his generation, against whom Paul measured himself. Multilingual glosses ('contemporaries,' 'coetáneos') stress generational identity rather than mere chronological age, situating Paul within a competitive scribal milieu where peer comparison drove religious fervor. YOUNG MEN AND YOUTH

en: contemporaries | es: coetáneos | fr: συνηλικιώτας | de: Altersgenosse Gal 1:14

συνθάπτω G4916 V-AIP-1P (2×)

to be buried together with, share in burial

This passive verb describes being buried together with another person, particularly used metaphorically for baptism. Romans 6:4 declares believers were buried with Christ through baptism into death, so they might walk in newness of life. Colossians 2:12 similarly speaks of being buried with him in baptism and raised with him through faith. The imagery connects Christian initiation with Christ's death and resurrection.

(2×) Indicates being buried together with another, used metaphorically in the NT for baptism as participation in Christ's burial. The cross-lingual renderings (Spanish 'fuimos sepultados juntamente,' French 'ensevelir-avec,' German 'mitbegraben') preserve the compound 'with' structure. Paul employs this twice to explain baptism as sacramental identification with Christ's death and burial (Rom 6:4, Col 2:12), making baptism the decisive break with the old life and entry into resurrection newness. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: having-been-buried-with, we-were-buried-together | es: Fuimos-sepultados-juntamente, sepultados-juntamente | fr: ensevelir-avec, mitbegraben | de: mitbegraben Rom 6:4; Col 2:12

συν-θλάω G4917 V-FIP-3S (2×)

to be shattered, crushed completely

This passive verb means to be crushed or shattered thoroughly. Jesus warns in Matthew 21:44 and Luke 20:18 that whoever falls on the rejected stone will be broken, but on whomever it falls, it will shatter him completely. The image comes from Daniel 2 where the stone crushes the kingdoms. The verb emphasizes total destruction.

(2×) Describes being crushed, shattered, or broken into pieces, indicating complete destruction. The cross-lingual evidence (Spanish 'será quebrantado,' French 'écraser') emphasizes the thorough crushing. Jesus uses this in parallel passages (Matt 21:44, Luke 20:18) to warn of the catastrophic consequences of rejecting him as the cornerstone—the stone that crushes empires in Daniel's vision will utterly shatter those who oppose God's chosen one. CRUSHING AND HUMBLING

en: will-be-shattered | es: será-quebrantado | fr: écraser | de: συνθλασθήσεται Matt 21:44; Luke 20:18

συνθλίβω G4918 V-IIA-3P (2×)

to press together, crowd against someone

This verb describes pressing together or crowding around someone in a throng. Mark 5:24 says crowds were pressing against Jesus as he went to heal Jairus's daughter. When Jesus asked who touched him, the disciples responded (5:31) that crowds were pressing him on all sides. The term captures the physical pressure of a dense, pushing crowd.

(2×) Indicates being pressed together or compressed by a crowd, experiencing the physical pressure of many people crowding closely. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'apretando/lo apretaban,' French 'presser,' German 'zusammendrängen') capture the crushing pressure. Mark uses this to describe the intense crowding around Jesus that made the disciples' question about who touched him seem absurd (5:24, 31)—yet Jesus distinguished the faith-filled touch of one woman from the mindless pressing of the multitude. AFFLICTION DISTRESS

en: pressing, were-pressing | es: apretando, lo-apretaban | fr: presser | de: zusammendraengen Mark 5:24; Mark 5:31

συνθρύπτω G4919 V-PPA-NMP (1×)

to break in pieces, crush, shatter (especially the heart or spirit)

Paul rebukes the Ephesian disciples for 'crushing his heart' with their weeping farewells, using a verb that means to break into fragments. The imagery is violent—not gentle sadness but heartrending anguish that shatters resolve. Spanish 'quebrantándome' (breaking me) and French 'briser' (to break) preserve the visceral force. Classical usage includes literal crushing; the NT metaphorizes it to emotional devastation, where others' grief fractures one's own composure.

(1×) Acts 21:13 records Paul's protest that the Ephesians' weeping is 'breaking his heart,' using imagery of physical shattering applied to emotional pain. The verb conveys intense, destructive grief—not mere sadness but anguish that threatens to fragment Paul's missionary resolve. English 'breaking' and German 'συνθρύπτοντές' underscore the aggressive emotional impact, where compassionate sorrow becomes unbearable burden. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: breaking | es: quebrantándome | fr: briser | de: συνθρύπτοντές Acts 21:13

συνίημι G4920 V-PPA-NMS (26×)

to understand, comprehend, perceive — to grasp meaning or significance through mental and spiritual insight

Suniemi means to bring things together in the mind — to comprehend, understand, or perceive the deeper significance of something. Its 26 NT occurrences cluster overwhelmingly in the Synoptic Gospels, where the verb becomes a diagnostic for whether hearers truly receive the word of God. In the Parable of the Sower, the seed on good soil represents one who 'hears the word and understands it' (Matt 13:23), while the purpose of parables is stated in Isaianic terms: 'hearing they may hear and not understand' (Matt 13:13-15, quoting Isa 6:9-10). Jesus repeatedly tests his disciples: 'Do you not yet understand?' (Matt 15:16; 16:9, 11; Mark 8:17, 21). Luke adds a resurrection-day moment when Jesus 'opened their minds to understand the Scriptures' (Luke 24:45). Paul quotes Isaiah 52:15 to affirm that Gentiles will understand what they were never told (Rom 15:21). The compound structure (sun- + hiemi, 'send/put together') reveals its core meaning: assembling discrete pieces into coherent insight.

understand, comprehend, perceive (26×) To grasp the meaning or significance of something through mental and spiritual perception, literally 'to put together' in the mind. Central to the Synoptic parables discourse: the good-soil hearer 'hears and understands' (Matt 13:23) while Isaiah's prophecy warns of hearing without understanding (Matt 13:13-15; Acts 28:26-27). Jesus tests the disciples' comprehension (Matt 15:16; 16:9; Mark 8:17, 21), and after the resurrection 'opens their minds to understand the Scriptures' (Luke 24:45). Paul extends the concept to Gentile insight (Rom 15:21). UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT

en: comprehend, do-they-understand, they-may-understand | es: comprender, comprendéis, entended | fr: comprendre | de: verstehen, versteht Matt 13:13; Matt 13:14; Matt 13:15; Matt 13:19; Matt 13:23

συνίστημι G4921 V-PNM/P (16×)

Commend or recommend (a person); demonstrate or prove (a quality); hold together or consist (as a unified whole).

The Greek verb synistemi — literally 'to stand together' or 'to set together' — unfolds into three beautifully distinct meanings in the New Testament. Paul uses it most often for commending or recommending people: 'I commend to you our sister Phoebe' (Rom 16:1), and he pushes back against those who 'commend themselves' with letters of recommendation (2 Cor 3:1). But synistemi also means to demonstrate or prove: God 'demonstrates his own love' toward us in that Christ died for us (Rom 5:8) — a passage where Spanish demuestra, French prouve, and German erweist all reach for proof-language rather than recommendation-language. The grandest sense appears in Colossians 1:17, where Paul declares that in Christ 'all things hold together' — the cosmic sustaining force that keeps creation from flying apart. Korean 유지되다, Hindi स्थिर रहना, and Arabic يقوم all shift to language of cohesion and subsistence.

1. commend or recommend (9×) To commend, recommend, or present someone favorably — introducing a person or cause with approval and endorsement. This most frequent sense (9 occurrences) appears in Paul's commendation of Phoebe to the Romans (Rom 16:1), his refusal to 'commend ourselves' like false apostles who carry letters of recommendation (2 Cor 3:1; 5:12), and his declaration that the apostles commend themselves 'in everything as servants of God' (2 Cor 6:4). Spanish recomendar, French recommander, and German empfehlen all converge on formal endorsement vocabulary, confirming this as a recognized social-epistolary function. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING

en: I-commend, commending, commends | es: os-recomiendo, que-recomienda, que-recomiendan | fr: recommander | de: empfehlen Rom 16:1; 2Cor 3:1; 2Cor 4:2; 2Cor 5:12; 2Cor 6:4

2. demonstrate or prove (4×) To demonstrate, prove, or make evident — showing a quality or truth by concrete evidence or action. Four occurrences carry this evidential force: God 'demonstrates' his love in Christ's death for sinners (Rom 5:8), human unrighteousness 'proves' God's righteousness (Rom 3:5), the Corinthians 'demonstrated' their innocence in handling a crisis (2 Cor 7:11), and rebuilding what was torn down 'proves' oneself a transgressor (Gal 2:18). Spanish demuestra, French prouve, and German erweist all shift from recommendation to proof vocabulary, marking a clear semantic boundary. TESTING AND PROVING

en: I-prove, demonstrates, you-demonstrated | es: demostrasteis, demuestra, demuestro | fr: recommander, se-tenir-avec | de: empfehlen Rom 3:5; Rom 5:8; 2Cor 7:11; Gal 2:18

3. hold together or consist (3×) To hold together, cohere, or subsist as a unified whole — the intransitive or stative sense of 'standing together.' Three occurrences carry this cosmic and physical weight: in Christ 'all things hold together' (Col 1:17), the heavens 'existed long ago' held together by God's word (2 Pet 3:5), and Peter and his companions 'stood with' Jesus at the Transfiguration, fully awake (Luke 9:32). Spanish subsisten, Korean 유지되다, and Arabic يقوم all employ language of sustained existence. Colossians 1:17 in particular makes this a christological claim of the highest order — Christ as the cohesive force of all creation. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: consisting, hold-together, standing-with | es: que-estaban-con, subsisten, subsistiendo | fr: se-tenir-avec | de: empfehlen, empfiehlt Luke 9:32; Col 1:17; 2Pet 3:5

συνοδ-εύω G4922 V-PPA-NMP (1×)

to travel together, journey in company (as companions or fellow travelers)

The men who 'traveled with' Saul to Damascus stood speechless after his vision, witnesses to the light but not the voice. The verb emphasizes shared journey, not mere coincidence of route. Classical parallels include astrological conjunction ('being in conjunction'); the NT narrows to literal companionship on the road. French 'voyager avec' and Spanish 'viajando con' capture the relational dimension—these were Saul's party, bound together by mission and now by shock.

(1×) Acts 9:7 identifies Saul's Damascus companions as those 'traveling with' him, witnesses to the supernatural light who stood speechless. The term implies intentional co-travel, likely a retinue accompanying Saul on his persecution mission. English and Spanish glosses ('traveling with,' 'viajando con') preserve the participatory sense, distinguishing these from random co-travelers—they were Saul's associates, implicated in his mission and his conversion drama. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: traveling-with | es: viajando-con | fr: voyager-avec | de: συνοδεύοντες Acts 9:7

συνοδ-ία G4923 N-DFS (1×)

caravan, traveling party, company of pilgrims or merchants journeying together

Mary and Joseph assumed the twelve-year-old Jesus was 'in the caravan' returning from Jerusalem, a natural expectation for pilgrims traveling in large family groups. The term denotes organized traveling parties—merchants, diplomats, or festival-goers—moving together for safety and companionship. Classical usage includes official envoys; Luke's usage is pastoral, depicting the extended-family networks that made Passover pilgrimage feasible for Galileans. Spanish 'caravana' and French 'caravane' preserve the communal travel context essential to the Lucan narrative.

(1×) Luke 2:44 describes Joseph and Mary's assumption that Jesus was 'in the caravan' of Passover pilgrims returning to Nazareth. The term evokes the large, multigenerational traveling parties common to ancient pilgrimage, where children might wander among relatives. Multilingual glosses ('caravan,' 'caravana') emphasize the corporate, protective nature of such travel, contextualizing Mary's initial non-alarm and later panic. COMPANION ASSOCIATE

en: caravan | es: caravana | fr: caravane | de: συνοδίᾳ Luke 2:44

συνοικ-έω G4924 V-PPA-NMP (1×)

to dwell together, live together (especially in marriage or cohabitation)

Peter instructs husbands to 'dwell together' with their wives 'according to knowledge,' using a verb that can mean cohabitation, marriage, or metaphorically 'dwelling with' emotions. Classical usage includes living in wedlock and forming communities; Peter's usage is explicitly marital, framing shared life as a sphere for honoring the wife. German 'zusammenwohnen' and French retain the Greek form, perhaps signaling translation challenges in rendering the relational-spatial blend.

(1×) 1 Pet 3:7 commands husbands to 'dwell together' with wives in an understanding way, treating them as co-heirs. The verb encompasses physical cohabitation and relational attentiveness—not merely sharing space but sharing life. Spanish 'conviviendo' (living together) and German 'zusammenwohnen' stress the intimate, sustained partnership marriage entails, reframing domestic life as theological calling. SITTING AND DWELLING

en: living-together | es: conviviendo | fr: συνοικοῦντες | de: zusammenwohnen 1Pet 3:7

συνοικο-δομέω G4925 V-PIM/P-2P (1×)

to be built together, co-constructed (especially of spiritual edifice or community)

Ephesians declares that believers 'are being built together' into a dwelling for God by the Spirit, using architectural imagery for ecclesial unity. The passive verb emphasizes divine agency—God is the builder, constructing a corporate temple from diverse living stones. Spanish 'sois edificados juntamente' and German 'miterbaut werden' preserve the corporate passive sense: this is not self-construction but Spirit-wrought assembly, where individual believers become a unified habitation.

(1×) Eph 2:22 culminates Paul's temple metaphor with believers 'being built together' into God's dwelling. The term signals both process (ongoing construction) and unity (co-building, not isolation). Multilingual glosses emphasize the passive corporate dimension—God assembles the structure, and believers are materials joined into one edifice. The spiritual architecture depends on joint incorporation, not solitary piety. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: are-being-built-together | es: sois-edificados-juntamente | fr: συνοικοδομεῖσθε | de: miterbaut-werden Eph 2:22

συνομῑλ-έω G4926 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

to converse with, talk together, engage in dialogue (mutual exchange)

Peter 'conversed with' Cornelius as he entered the centurion's house, using a verb that emphasizes reciprocal dialogue rather than monologue. Classical usage denotes mutual discourse; Luke's usage is social, depicting the relational bridge-building essential to cross-cultural gospel proclamation. Spanish 'conversando' and French 'parler avec' capture the bidirectional exchange, distinguishing this from mere preaching—Peter engaged Cornelius as a conversation partner, not merely an audience.

(1×) Acts 10:27 narrates Peter 'talking with' Cornelius upon entering his home, a conversational posture preceding the Spirit's dramatic interruption. The verb implies mutual exchange, not hierarchical address. English 'talking with' and German 'συνομιλῶν' emphasize the relational parity Peter affords the Gentile centurion, modeling the inclusive dialogue the Spirit was orchestrating. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: talking-with | es: conversando | fr: parler-avec | de: συνομιλῶν Acts 10:27

συνομορέω G4927 V-PPA-NFS (1×)

to border on, adjoin, be next to (spatially contiguous)

The house where Paul lodged in Corinth 'adjoined' the synagogue, a geographical detail with narrative import—proximity to the Jewish assembly even after Paul's break with it. The verb denotes spatial contiguity, used rarely in the NT but common in geographical descriptions. Spanish 'contigua' and French 'confiner' preserve the boundary-touching sense, highlighting how Paul's Gentile mission remained physically adjacent to Jewish centers, symbolizing the gospel's continuity with Israel.

(1×) Acts 18:7 places the house of Titius Justus 'next to the synagogue,' a strategic location for Paul's ministry pivot from Jewish to Gentile outreach. The spatial adjacency is theologically charged—Paul left the synagogue but not the neighborhood, signaling continuity. Multilingual glosses ('adjoining,' 'contigua') preserve the boundary-language, vital for Luke's portrayal of Paul's mission geography. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: adjoining | es: contigua | fr: confiner | de: συνομοροῦσα Acts 18:7

συνοχ-ή G4928 N-NFS (2×)

distress, anguish, constraint

This noun describes a state of being held together or compressed, hence distress, anguish, or dire straits. Luke 21:25 prophesies distress of nations in perplexity at the end times, with roaring seas and confusion. Second Corinthians 2:4 mentions Paul writing out of great distress and anguish of heart. The term conveys the feeling of being hemmed in or constricted by circumstances.

(2×) Denotes a state of distress, anguish, or being in dire straits, often with a sense of constraint or being hemmed in by overwhelming circumstances. The cross-lingual renderings (Spanish 'angustia,' French 'angoisse/détresse,' German 'Angst') emphasize the emotional intensity. Luke uses it for apocalyptic international distress and perplexity (21:25), while Paul applies it to his personal anguish when writing a painful letter to the Corinthians (2 Cor 2:4), showing both cosmic and personal dimensions of distress. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: anguish, distress | es: angustia | fr: angoisse, détresse | de: Angst, συνοχὴ Luke 21:25; 2Cor 2:4

συντάσσω G4929 V-AIA-3S (3×)

to order, command, or arrange; to give instructions or directives, often with authority

A verb meaning to order, arrange, or command—to put in order or give instructions. Matthew uses it three times: Jesus 'directed' the disciples regarding the donkey (21:6), 'ordered' them to prepare the Passover (26:19), and Judas 'directed' the field purchase (27:10). Classical uses include drawing up armies in formation, arranging elements systematically, or issuing commands. In Matthew, Jesus exercises authority through ordering and arranging—commanding preparation, giving strategic instructions, fulfilling prophetic patterns even through Judas's betrayal-price.

(3×) Languages converge: English 'commanded/directed', Spanish 'ordenó/les ordenó', French 'ordonner', German uses Greek forms (συνέταξεν). All three Matthew uses show authoritative direction: Jesus commanding His disciples' actions (21:6, 26:19) and even Judas's betrayal money fulfilling what prophets 'ordered' (27:10). The verb carries both military precision (arranging in order) and hierarchical authority (commanding obedience). COMMANDING AND ORDERING

en: commanded, directed | es: les-ordenó, ordenó, ordenó-a | fr: ordonner | de: συνέταξέν, συνέταξεν Matt 21:6; Matt 26:19; Matt 27:10

συντέλεια G4930 N-GFS (6×)

synteleia – completion, consummation; especially the eschatological end of the present age

Derived from synteleo ('to bring to completion'), synteleia denotes the final consummation or wrapping-up of a period. In the New Testament it appears almost exclusively in the eschatological phrase synteleia tou aionos ('the consummation of the age'), concentrated in Matthew's Gospel. The disciples ask Jesus on the Mount of Olives, 'What will be the sign of your coming and the synteleia of the age?' (Matt 24:3). The harvest parables of Matthew 13 explain that the angels will sort wheat from tares 'at the synteleia of the age' (Matt 13:39-40, 49). The risen Christ's final promise seals the theme: 'I am with you always, to the synteleia of the age' (Matt 28:20). Spanish consumacion, French fin, and German Vollendung each capture the note of purposeful culmination.

completion, consummation of an age (6×) The consummation or final completion of a period, used in the New Testament almost exclusively for the eschatological end of the present age (synteleia tou aionos). Matthew alone accounts for five of six occurrences: the parabolic harvests of Matt 13:39-40, 49, the Olivet Discourse question of Matt 24:3, and the Great Commission's closing assurance in Matt 28:20. Hebrews 9:26 rounds out the usage with Christ appearing 'at the consummation of the ages.' Spanish consumacion and German Vollendung both emphasize purposeful culmination rather than mere cessation, aligning with the theological freight of a divinely orchestrated conclusion to history. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: completion, consummation, of-completion | es: consumación, de-la-consumación | fr: fin | de: Vollendung Matt 13:39; Matt 13:40; Matt 13:49; Matt 24:3; Matt 28:20

συντελ-έω G4931 V-FIA-1S (6×)

To bring to completion, finish; to be fulfilled or reach appointed conclusion; to accomplish or establish (a covenant).

Synteleō combines syn- ('together') with teleō ('to complete'), yielding the idea of bringing all parts together to their intended end. Luke uses it twice in the temptation narrative: the devil departed 'having completed' (syntelesas) every temptation (Luke 4:13), and the forty days 'having been completed' (syntelesthesisōn) signaled the onset of hunger (Luke 4:2). Spanish habiendo-completado and habiendo-terminado track this active finishing sense precisely. The prophetic-fulfillment use appears in Mark 13:4, where the disciples ask when all these things are 'to be fulfilled' (synteleisthai). Most theologically weighty is Heb 8:8, where God declares 'I will accomplish' (syntelesō) a new covenant — not merely finishing a task, but bringing to fruition the ultimate divine promise.

1. bring to completion, finish (3×) To bring to completion, to finish — actively completing a task, period, or sequence of actions. In Luke 4:13, the devil departs 'having completed' (syntelesas) every temptation, and in Luke 4:2 the forty days of fasting are 'having been completed' (syntelesthesisōn). Rom 9:28 uses it of the Lord carrying out and 'completing' (syntelōn) his word on earth. Spanish habiendo-completado and habiendo-terminado both capture this sense of bringing a defined process to its end. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: completing, having-been-completed, having-completed | es: habiendo-completado, habiendo-terminado, terminando | fr: achever | de: vollenden, συντελέσας, συντελεσθεισῶν Luke 4:2; Luke 4:13; Rom 9:28

2. be fulfilled, reach completion (2×) To be fulfilled, to reach divinely appointed completion — used in passive or middle voice for prophetic events or ritual periods reaching their destined conclusion. In Mark 13:4, the disciples ask when all the eschatological signs are 'to be fulfilled' (synteleisthai); in Acts 21:27, the seven days of purification were 'about to be completed' (syntelesthēsan). Spanish de-cumplirse ('to be fulfilled') and French achever ('to bring to conclusion') both convey the sense of destiny reaching its appointed moment. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: to-be-completed, to-be-fulfilled | es: de-cumplirse | fr: achever | de: vollenden, συντελεῖσθαι Mark 13:4; Acts 21:27

3. accomplish, establish (covenant) (1×) To accomplish or establish a covenant — specifically of God's act of bringing a solemn agreement into effect. In Heb 8:8 (quoting Jer 31:31), the Lord declares 'I will accomplish (syntelesō) a new covenant with the house of Israel.' Spanish consumaré ('I will consummate') beautifully captures the weightiness of this covenantal use — not merely finishing something, but bringing to full realization God's ultimate redemptive promise. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: I-will-accomplish | es: consumaré | fr: achever | de: vollenden Heb 8:8

συντέμνω G4932 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

to cut short, abbreviate, bring to swift conclusion (especially divine judgment)

Paul quotes Isaiah's prophecy that the Lord will 'cut short' his word on earth, executing swift and decisive judgment. Classical usage includes cutting expenses or abridging speeches; the prophetic citation retains the violent truncation sense—God's reckoning won't linger but will conclude swiftly. Spanish 'abreviando' and German 'verkürzen' preserve the temporal compression, framing divine action as both merciful (not drawn-out suffering) and terrifying (unavoidable speed).

(1×) Rom 9:28 (quoting Isa 10:22-23) warns that God will 'cut short' his word, bringing swift completion to judgment. The term conveys both abbreviation (shortened time) and decisiveness (no delay). English 'cutting short' and French 'abréger' emphasize the temporal curtailment, essential to Paul's argument about God's sovereign pruning of Israel and swift execution of righteousness. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: cutting-short | es: abreviando | fr: abréger | de: verkuerzen Rom 9:28

συντηρ-έω G4933 V-PIM/P-3P (3×)

to keep safe, preserve, guard carefully; to protect and maintain something or someone with care

A compound verb meaning to keep or preserve carefully, to guard closely or treasure. It appears in Herod's protective custody of John the Baptist (Mark 6:20), Mary 'treasuring' Jesus' words in her heart (Luke 2:19), and the parable statement 'both are preserved' regarding wine and wineskins (Matt 9:17). The prefix 'together' (συν-) intensifies the preservation—holding carefully, watching over, protecting from loss or harm. Classical uses include maintaining privileges, observing laws strictly, watching for opportunities, and protecting property.

(3×) Languages vary: English 'preserved/protecting/treasuring', Spanish 'guardaba/se conservan', French 'garder', German 'bewahren'. The three uses span protective custody (Herod keeping John safe despite wanting him dead—Mark 6:20), contemplative preservation (Mary treasuring and pondering—Luke 2:19), and practical preservation (new wineskins preserve new wine—Matt 9:17). Each involves careful guarding against loss or damage. GUARDING AND KEEPING en: are-preserved, was-protecting, was-treasuring | es: guardaba, se-conservan | fr: garder | de: bewahren, συνετήρει, συντηροῦνται Matt 9:17; Mark 6:20; Luke 2:19

συντίθημι G4934 V-LIM-3P (4×)

To agree together, arrange jointly; in middle voice, to reach a mutual decision or compact.

This compound verb (syn + tithemi, 'place together') means to arrange or agree upon something jointly. In the New Testament, the middle voice dominates, giving it the force of 'they agreed among themselves.' The chief priests 'agreed' to pay Judas (Luke 22:5); the Jewish leaders 'had agreed' to expel anyone confessing Christ (John 9:22). In Acts 23:20 the plotters 'agreed' on an assassination plan, while Acts 24:9 uses a related compound for joining in an attack. Spanish 'acordaron' and French 'convenir' both zero in on the sense of collective decision-making, underscoring the conspiratorial coloring these passages share.

(4×) To agree together, make a compact, conspire — describing a mutual arrangement reached between parties, often with overtones of secrecy or hostile intent. In Luke 22:5, the chief priests agree on the price for betrayal; in John 9:22, the authorities have already agreed on excommunication for confessing Jesus. Acts 23:20 describes a conspiracy to ambush Paul, and Acts 24:9 records opponents joining an accusation. The translations consistently reach for words of agreement and collusion (Spanish 'acordaron,' French 'convenir,' German 'vereinbaren'), confirming a single sense of coordinated, deliberate joint action. CONSPIRE AGREE TOGETHER

en: agreed, had-agreed, joined-in-the-attack | es: acordaron, habían-acordado, se-unieron-al-ataque | fr: convenir | de: vereinbaren, συνέθεντο, συνεπέθεντο Luke 22:5; John 9:22; Acts 23:20; Acts 24:9

σύντομ-ος G4935 Adv (2×)

briefly, concisely, in a short time

This adverb means briefly, concisely, or in short order—either in terms of brevity of expression or quickness of time. The longer ending of Mark (16:20) says the disciples proclaimed the message briefly everywhere. Acts 24:4 has Tertullus asking Felix to hear them briefly, requesting conciseness. The term emphasizes economy of words or swiftness of action.

(2×) Indicates doing something briefly, concisely, or quickly, whether in speech (brevity of expression) or action (shortness of time). The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'brevemente,' French 'brièvement,' German 'in Kürze') captures both nuances. Mark 16:20 applies it to the rapid, widespread proclamation of the gospel message, while Acts 24:4 uses it as a rhetorical request for patient, brief attention—though Tertullus's subsequent speech is hardly concise. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: briefly | es: brevemente | fr: brièvement | de: in-Kuerze, συντόμως Mark 16:20; Acts 24:4

συντρέχω G4936 V-AIA-3P (3×)

to run together, converge; to rush together as a crowd or assemble quickly in one place

A compound verb meaning to run together, to rush to the same place simultaneously. Mark describes crowds 'running together' ahead to meet Jesus (6:33), people 'running together' to Peter and John after the healing (Acts 3:11), and Peter marveling that Gentiles 'don't run with' believers into reckless dissipation (1 Pet 4:4). Classical uses include meeting in battle, assembling for rescue, and crowds gathering. The 'together' (συν-) emphasizes convergence—multiple people rushing from different directions toward a common point.

(3×) All preserve the compound: English 'ran together/running with', Spanish 'corrieron juntos/corriendo juntamente', French 'accourir/courir avec', German 'zusammenlaufen'. The three uses show both literal convergence (crowds rushing to Jesus, people running to the apostles) and metaphorical shared course (Gentiles expecting believers to 'run with' them into sin). The verb captures both the motion and the collective nature of the action. RUNNING AND RACING

en: ran-together, running-with | es: corriendo-juntamente, corrieron-juntos, corrió-junto | fr: accourir, courir-avec | de: zusammenlaufen, συνέδραμεν Mark 6:33; Acts 3:11; 1Pet 4:4

συντρίβω G4937 V-RNM/P (8×)

To break, crush, shatter; to bruise — of physical objects destroyed or persons oppressed and broken

The verb syntribo conveys the forceful breaking or crushing of something, whether a physical object, a human body, or a person's spirit. It ranges from the shattering of pottery in Rev 2:27 and the breaking of an alabaster jar of perfume in Mark 14:3 to the spiritual liberation of the brokenhearted in Luke 4:18, where Jesus reads from Isaiah in the Nazareth synagogue. Paul's promise that 'the God of peace will crush Satan under your feet' (Rom 16:20) draws on the Genesis 3:15 protoevangelium, giving this common physical verb an eschatological weight that resonates across the whole biblical narrative.

1. be broken, be crushed (passive/resultative) (5×) To be broken, crushed, or shattered in a passive or resultative sense, describing the state of something already broken or the experience of being crushed. Matt 12:20 quotes Isaiah 42:3: 'a bruised reed he will not break,' where the participle syntetrimmenon describes something already damaged. Mark 5:4 tells of chains that had been 'smashed' by the Gerasene demoniac. Luke 4:18 extends the image to human brokenness: Jesus is sent 'to set free the crushed' (tous tethrausmenous, with syntribo in some textual traditions). John 19:36 preserves the Passover command that no bone shall be broken. Rev 2:27 pictures iron-rod rule under which pottery vessels 'are shattered.' Spanish shifts between 'quebrada' (bruised), 'destrozados' (shattered), and 'quebrantados' (crushed), tracking the passive-resultative framing across different referents. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: are-shattered, broken, bruised | es: haber-sido-destrozados, quebrada, quebrantados | fr: briser | de: zerbrechen, zerbricht Matt 12:20; Mark 5:4; Luke 4:18; John 19:36; Rev 2:27

2. break, crush, shatter (active) (3×) To break, crush, or shatter something by active physical force — the agent-focused, transitive sense. In Mark 14:3 a woman breaks an alabaster flask to pour ointment on Jesus' head, an intimate act of worship through deliberate destruction. Luke 9:39 describes a demon seizing and convulsing a boy, 'shattering' or bruising him. Romans 16:20 lifts the verb to cosmic scale: 'the God of peace will crush Satan under your feet shortly,' echoing the serpent-crushing promise of Gen 3:15. Spanish distinguishes the active voice clearly — 'habiendo quebrado' (having broken), 'destrozandolo' (shattering him), 'aplastara' (will crush) — while French maintains 'briser' for both voices. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: breaking, shattering, will-crush | es: aplastará, destrozándolo, habiendo-quebrado | fr: briser | de: zerbrechen, zerbricht Mark 14:3; Luke 9:39; Rom 16:20

σύν-τριμμα G4938 N-NNS (1×)

fracture, ruin, destruction (physical breaking or calamitous collapse)

Paul chains Isaiah passages to depict humanity's moral devastation, culminating in 'ruin' on their paths—the wreckage left by violence. The noun denotes fracture or shattering, used in LXX for calamity. Spanish 'destrucción' and French 'brisé' (broken) capture the aftermath imagery: not the violence itself but the broken landscape it leaves. The term shifts from medical (fracture) to moral (devastation), mapping physical ruin onto ethical chaos.

(1×) Rom 3:16 lists 'ruin and misery' as marks of humanity's path, quoting Isa 59:7. The term denotes the aftermath of violence—the shattered lives, broken communities, and wreckage sin leaves behind. English 'ruin' and Spanish 'destrucción' preserve the calamity sense, distinguishing destruction's result from its cause, essential to Paul's indictment of universal sin. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: ruin | es: destrucción | fr: brisé | de: Zerbruch Rom 3:16

σύντροφ-ος G4939 Adj-NMS (1×)
foster-brother, one brought up together, close companion from childhood Luke identifies Manaen as the 'foster-brother of Herod the tetrarch,' a status denoting shared upbringing in royal households. Classical usage includes animals raised with humans and children educated together; Luke's usage is aristocratic, signaling Manaen's elite background and his remarkable turn to the Christian prophets and teachers. Spanish 'hermano de crianza' and German retain the Greek, perhaps acknowledging the culture-specific institution of royal foster-siblings, who shared childhood but not blood.

(1×) Acts 13:1 lists Manaen among Antioch's prophets and teachers, noting he was 'brought up with' Herod Antipas. The term implies childhood intimacy and shared aristocratic education, making Manaen's Christian commitment a striking social reversal. Multilingual glosses ('foster-brother,' 'hermano de crianza') stress the relational bond transcending kinship, highlighting the gospel's power to reorient even elite loyalties. COMPANION ASSOCIATE en: foster-brother | es: hermano-de-crianza | fr: nourri-avec | de: σύντροφος Acts 13:1

συντυγχάνω G4940 V-ANA (1×)
to meet, encounter, come together (often of chance or significant meetings) When Jesus' family sought to 'meet' him but couldn't reach him through the crowd, the verb suggests purposeful approach, not random encounter. Classical usage includes falling in with someone or arriving at a place; Luke's usage is relational, depicting the attempted rendezvous that Jesus reframes as spiritual kinship. Spanish 'llegar' (to arrive) and French 'rencontrer' (to meet) preserve the approach-and-contact sense, essential to Jesus' redefinition of family around discipleship.

(1×) Luke 8:19 narrates Jesus' mother and brothers seeking to 'meet' him, thwarted by the crowd. The verb implies intended encounter, distinguishing purposeful approach from accidental collision. English 'to meet' and German 'συντυχεῖν' frame the family's effort as relational quest, which Jesus redirects to define true kinship as hearing and doing God's word. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING en: to-meet | es: llegar | fr: rencontrer | de: συντυχεῖν Luke 8:19

Συντύχη G4941 N-AFS (1×)
Syntyche (personal name: 'fortunate encounter' or 'success')
Paul urges Euodia and Syntyche to 'agree in the Lord,' naming two Philippian women whose dispute threatened church unity. The name Syntyche means 'fortunate encounter' or 'success,' common in Greek-speaking communities. Paul's public appeal suggests these were influential leaders whose conflict mattered congregationally. The name's irony is poignant—'fortunate encounter' struggling to encounter her sister in Christ. Multilingual glosses transliterate the name, respecting its proper-noun status while preserving Paul's pastoral urgency.

(1×) Phil 4:2 names Syntyche alongside Euodia as recipients of Paul's plea for unity. As a personal name meaning 'good fortune,' it carried positive connotations, making the conflict more tragic. Translations universally transliterate ('Syntyche,' 'Syntýchē'), preserving the individual's identity while embedding her in Paul's narrative of reconciliation essential to Philippian flourishing. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Syntychē | es: a-Syntýchē | fr: Συντύχην | de: Syntyche Phil 4:2

συνυπο-κρίνομαι G4942 V-AIP-3P (1×)
to act hypocritically with, join in pretense, participate in deception together
Paul accuses the other Jewish Christians of 'acting hypocritically with' Peter at Antioch, withdrawing from Gentile table fellowship when James' emissaries arrived. The verb intensifies 'hypocrisy' with the συν- prefix—not isolated pretense but collective performance, a conspiracy of cowardice. Spanish 'disimularon con' (dissimulated with) and German 'mitheucheln' (co-hypocrisy) capture the corporate deception, where peer pressure multiplied individual failure into communal betrayal of gospel truth.

(1×) Gal 2:13 indicts the Jewish Christians who 'joined in Peter's hypocrisy,' withdrawing from Gentile fellowship to appease the circumcision faction. The term signals coordinated pretense—not individual lapses but collective performance of ethnic separation contradicting gospel unity. Multilingual glosses emphasize the participatory dimension ('acted hypocritically with,' 'disimularon con'), essential to Paul's rebuke of communal cowardice. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: acted-hypocritically-with | es: disimularon-con | fr: συνυπεκρίθησαν | de: mitheucheln Gal 2:13

συνυπουργέω G4943 V-PPA-GMP (1×)
to join in helping, cooperate in service, work together in support
Paul thanks the Corinthians for 'joining in helping' through their prayers, framing intercession as collaborative labor. The verb combines 'together' (συν) with 'work/serve' (υπουργέω), depicting prayer as active cooperation in ministry, not passive support. Spanish 'cooperando' and German 'mithelfen' preserve the participatory work sense, reframing prayer as joint-effort rather than solitary piety. Paul's theology here is corporate—ministry succeeds through networked partnership.

(1×) 2 Cor 1:11 credits the Corinthians' prayers as 'joining in helping' Paul, viewing intercession as co-labor in apostolic mission. The term elevates prayer from private devotion to collaborative ministry—the church prays, Paul serves, God acts, all together. English 'joining in helping' and Spanish 'cooperando' stress the partnership dimension, essential to Paul's vision of interdependent body life. SERVING AND MINISTRY
en: joining-in-helping | es: cooperando | fr: aider | de: mithelfen 2Cor 1:11

συνωδίνω G4944 V-PIA-3S (1×)
to labor together in birth pangs, suffer travail jointly (shared anguish or struggle)
Paul personifies creation as 'laboring together in birth pangs' until now, awaiting redemption. The verb merges shared suffering (συν) with childbirth agony (ὠδίνω), depicting cosmic groaning as collective travail toward new birth. Spanish 'sufre dolores de parto juntamente' and German 'mitseufzen' preserve the participatory anguish, framing creation's pain not as isolated but as shared labor—earth, humanity, Spirit, all groaning together toward eschatological delivery.

(1×) Rom 8:22 describes creation 'groaning together in labor pains' until the present, awaiting liberation from futility. The verb conveys both collective anguish (all creation shares the pain) and purposeful travail (pain toward birth, not mere suffering). Multilingual glosses emphasize the joint-labor dimension ('labors together,' 'sufre dolores de parto juntamente'), essential to Paul's eschatological hope grounded in corporate groaning. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY
en: labors-together | es: sufre-dolores-de-parto-juntamente | fr: souffrir-ensemble | de: mitseufzen Rom 8:22

συνωμ-οσία G4945 N-AFS (1×)
conspiracy, secret alliance sworn by oath, plot (for hostile or political purposes)
More than forty Jews formed a 'conspiracy' against Paul, binding themselves under oath to neither eat nor drink until they killed him. Classical usage denotes political clubs or confederacies sworn by oath; Luke's usage is sinister, framing the plot as organized religious terrorism. Spanish 'conjuración' and French 'conspiration' preserve the oath-bound alliance sense, distinguishing this from casual hostility—this was premeditated, corporate violence, ritualized by vow.

(1×) Acts 23:13 details the 'conspiracy' of over forty men who vowed to kill Paul, a plot requiring coordination and fanatical commitment. The term emphasizes the oath-bound nature of the alliance—not mere agreement but sacred pledge. English 'conspiracy' and Spanish 'conjuración' capture the secretive, ritualized dimension, essential to Luke's portrayal of organized Jewish opposition requiring Roman intervention. CONSPIRACY

en: conspiracy | es: conjuración | fr: conspiration | de: συνωμοσίαν Acts 23:13

Συράκουσαι G4946 N-ANP (1×)

Syracuse (Syracusae), major Greek city on Sicily's eastern coast

Paul's ship stopped at Syracuse for three days on the final leg to Rome, a natural harbor for vessels coasting Sicily. Founded by Corinthians in the 8th century BC, Syracuse was the preeminent Greek city of the West, rivaling Athens in wealth and culture. Luke's geographical precision roots Paul's journey in real Mediterranean trade routes. Multilingual glosses transliterate the name variously (Surakousai, Syracuse), respecting the proper-noun status while anchoring Acts in historical geography.

(1×) Acts 28:12 records Paul's three-day stopover in Syracuse en route to Rome, a detail situating the journey in known shipping lanes. As a major port and cultural center, Syracuse represents the Hellenistic world through which the gospel moved westward. Translations universally transliterate ('Syracuse,' 'Syrákousai'), preserving the city's identity while embedding Paul's mission in the Roman Mediterranean's urban network. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Surakousai | es: Syrákousai | fr: Syracuse | de: Συρακούσας Acts 28:12

γῆ G4947 N-AFS (8×)

Syria; the Roman province north of Palestine, encompassing Antioch and Damascus, a major hub of early Christianity.

A proper geographical name designating the large Roman province stretching north of Palestine, with Antioch as its capital. In the Gospels, Syria marks the farthest reach of Jesus' early fame (Matt 4:24), while in Acts it becomes the cradle of Gentile Christianity, the base from which Paul launched his missionary journeys. Luke carefully notes that Quirinius governed Syria when Jesus was born (Luke 2:2), anchoring the narrative in Roman imperial history. The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name—Spanish 'Siria,' French 'Syrie,' German 'Syrien'—reflecting its status as a universally recognized ancient toponym.

Syria (proper noun, geographic region) (8×) The Roman province of Syria, the broad territory north of Palestine whose capital Antioch became the first major center of Gentile Christianity. Jesus' fame spread throughout Syria early in his ministry (Matt 4:24), and the Jerusalem council addressed its letter to believers in Antioch and Syria (Acts 15:23). Luke's reference to the Syrian governor Quirinius (Luke 2:2) anchors the nativity in datable Roman administration. All eight occurrences point to the same geographic-political entity. EVENING AND TWILIGHT

en: Suria, Syria | es: Siria, Syr ía, Syría | fr: Syrie | de: Syrien Matt 4:24; Luke 2:2; Acts 15:23; Acts 15:41; Acts 18:18

Σύρος G4948 N-NMS (1×)

Syrian (ethnic or geographical designation for inhabitants of Syria)

Jesus notes that only Naaman 'the Syrian' was cleansed among many lepers in Elisha's day, using the ethnic designation to emphasize Gentile inclusion in Israel's prophetic history. Classical usage applies 'Syrian' to Arameans, Assyrians, and Levantine peoples; Luke's usage is theological, framing Naaman's healing as precedent for Gentile reception of Israel's blessings. Spanish 'sirio' and German 'Σύρος' preserve the ethnic label, essential to Jesus' provocative sermon linking prophetic ministry to Gentile faith.

(1×) Luke 4:27 recalls Naaman 'the Syrian' as the sole leper cleansed in Elisha's time, despite Israel's many unhealed. The ethnic marker underscores the scandal—God's power flowed to a foreigner while bypassing covenant people. Multilingual glosses ('Syrian,' 'sirio') retain the ethnic specificity, vital to Jesus' Nazareth sermon foreshadowing Gentile mission and Israel's rejection. ARAM REGION PERSON

en: Syrian | es: sirio | fr: Syrien | de: Σύρος Luke 4:27

Συροφοινίκισσα G4949 N-NFS (1×)

Syrophoenician (ethnic designation: Phoenician from the Syrian province)

Mark identifies the woman who begged Jesus to heal her daughter as 'Syrophoenician,' distinguishing her from Libyan Phoenicians. The compound ethnic label situates her in the Phoenician coastal region under Syrian administration. Her persistence despite Jesus' initial resistance becomes a model of Gentile faith breaking through ethnic boundaries. Multilingual glosses transliterate the term, respecting the specific regional-ethnic identity essential to Mark's narrative of gospel expansion beyond Israel.

(1×) Mark 7:26 describes the woman as 'Syrophoenician by race,' an ethnic marker highlighting her Gentile status and regional origin. The term distinguishes coastal Phoenicians in the Syrian province from those in North Africa, grounding the encounter in specific geography. Translations universally transliterate ('Syrophoenician,' 'Syro-phénicienne'), preserving the ethnic complexity essential to Mark's portrayal of Jesus' reluctant-then-generous response to Gentile faith. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Syrophoenician | es: Syrophoníkissa | fr: Syro-phénicienne | de: Syrophoenikerin Mark 7:26

Σύρτις G4950 N-AFS (1×)

Syrtis (geographical name: treacherous sandbanks off North African coast)

Fearing they would run aground on 'the Syrtis,' Paul's ship crew lowered the sea anchor and drifted. The Syrtis (two large gulfs off Libya) were notorious deathtraps for ships—shallow, shifting sands that stranded vessels. Classical writers use the name metaphorically for 'destruction.' Luke's nautical precision roots Acts in real maritime dangers. Multilingual glosses transliterate the name, respecting the geographical specificity essential to the shipwreck narrative's historical plausibility.

(1×) Acts 27:17 narrates the crew's fear of 'the Syrtis,' the treacherous sandbanks that destroyed many Mediterranean ships. The geographical reference grounds Paul's voyage in real navigational hazards, lending historical credibility to Luke's detailed shipwreck account. Translations universally transliterate ('Syrtis,' 'sable mouvant'), preserving the proper-noun status while anchoring the narrative in known maritime geography. SEA LARGE WATER

en: Surtis | es: Syrtis | fr: sable-mouvant | de: Σύρτιν Acts 27:17

σύρω G4951 V-IIA-3P (5×)

To drag, pull forcibly along the ground; to haul away by force, whether persons, objects, or figuratively.

This verb conveys raw physical force — the act of hauling or dragging something or someone along. Its NT uses paint vivid pictures: disciples dragging a net heavy with fish to shore (John 21:8), Saul violently dragging believers out of their homes for imprisonment (Acts 8:3), a mob dragging Paul out of a city after stoning him (Acts 14:19), and Jason being dragged before the authorities (Acts 17:6). Revelation 12:4 uses it cosmically, with the dragon's tail sweeping a third of the stars from heaven. German 'schleppen' captures the labored, forcible nature of the action.

(5×) To drag or haul forcibly, pulling something or someone along the ground or through space. The word carries connotations of violence or great physical effort. In John 21:8, disciples drag a net full of fish; in Acts, it describes the brutal dragging of persons — Saul hauling believers to prison (8:3), Paul dragged out of Lystra after stoning (14:19), Jason dragged before city rulers (17:6). Revelation 12:4 extends it to cosmic imagery: the dragon's tail sweeping stars from the sky. Spanish 'arrastrar' and German 'schleppen' both emphasize the forceful, ground-level pulling. DRAWING AND PULLING

en: dragging, drags, they-dragged | es: arrastra, arrastraban, arrastrando | fr: tirer, traîner | de: schleppen, σύρων, ἔσυρον John 21:8; Acts 8:3; Acts 14:19; Acts 17:6; Rev 12:4

συσπᾰράσσω G4952 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to convulse violently, throw into convulsions

This verb means to tear violently or throw into convulsions, used of demonic attacks in the Gospels. Mark 9:20 describes a spirit convulsing a boy violently when brought to Jesus. Luke 9:42 similarly recounts the demon convulsing the boy as he was coming to Jesus. Both passages emphasize the violent physical manifestation of spiritual oppression.

(2×) Describes throwing someone into violent convulsions or spasms, tearing them physically, particularly used of demonic attacks in exorcism narratives. The cross-lingual glosses (Spanish 'lo convulsionó,' French 'déchirer,' German 'zerren') emphasize the violent, wrenching action. Both Mark 9:20 and Luke 9:42 use this to depict the demon's final violent manifestation as the possessed boy approaches Jesus for deliverance, showing evil's desperate resistance before liberation. TEARING AND RENDING

en: convulsed, convulsed-violently | es: lo-convulsionó | fr: déchirer | de: zerren, συνεσπάραξεν Mark 9:20; Luke 9:42

σύσσημ-ον G4953 N-ANS (1×)

signal, agreed sign, prearranged token (for coordinated action or recognition)

Judas gave the arresting party 'a signal'—whomever he kissed was the one to seize. Classical usage includes military signals and tokens of recognition; Mark's usage is sinister, framing the kiss as betrayal's coordinating mechanism. The sign enabled identification in darkness and crowds. Spanish 'señal' and French 'signe convenu' (agreed sign) preserve the prearranged dimension, essential to understanding Judas' active orchestration of Jesus' arrest, not mere passive identification.

(1×) Mark 14:44 reveals Judas 'had given them a signal,' agreeing that his kiss would mark Jesus for arrest. The term emphasizes premeditation—not spontaneous betrayal but coordinated conspiracy requiring a recognition token. English 'signal' and Spanish 'señal' capture the communicative coordination, essential to Mark's portrayal of Judas' calculated treachery and the authorities' nighttime operation. SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: a-signal | es: señal | fr: signe-convenu | de: Zeichen Mark 14:44

σύσσωμ-ος G4954 Adj-ANP (1×)

fellow body members, united in one body (corporate solidarity)

Paul proclaims that Gentiles are 'fellow body members' with Jews in Christ, using a rare compound adjective to stress corporate unity. The term appears only in Ephesians 3:6, intensifying the body metaphor—not merely included but organically joined. Spanish 'miembros del mismo cuerpo' and German 'Mitleib' (co-body) preserve the anatomical imagery, essential to Paul's vision of the church as a single organism transcending ethnic division, where Gentiles are not grafted onto a Jewish body but co-constitutive members of Christ's body.

(1×) Eph 3:6 reveals the mystery that Gentiles are 'members of the same body' as Jews, co-heirs and co-sharers in Christ. The term's anatomical force resists hierarchical inclusion—Gentiles aren't appendages but integral members. Multilingual glosses ('fellow body,' 'miembros del mismo cuerpo') stress the organic equality, central to Paul's Ephesian ecclesiology of radical unity in the one body of Christ. FLESH AND BODY

en: fellow-body | es: miembros-del-mismo-cuerpo | fr: σύσσωμα | de: Mitleib Eph 3:6

συστᾰσ-ιαστής G4955 N-GMP (1×)

fellow rioters, co-insurrectionists, partners in rebellion (political or civil unrest)

Barabbas had been imprisoned with 'the rebels' who committed murder during an insurrection, a detail situating him among violent anti-Roman activists. The compound noun identifies those who rioted together, bound by shared political violence. Mark's usage is politically charged—Barabbas wasn't a lone criminal but part of an organized uprising. Spanish 'rebeldes' and German 'Aufruhrer' preserve the insurrectionary context, essential to the irony of the crowd choosing a violent revolutionary over the peaceful Messiah.

(1×) Mark 15:7 describes Barabbas as imprisoned with 'the rebels' who had committed murder in an uprising, identifying him with organized resistance to Rome. The term denotes co-participants in civil unrest, not isolated criminals. English 'rebels' and Spanish 'rebeldes' capture the political dimension, vital to Mark's narrative irony where the crowd demands release of a violent insurrectionist while condemning Jesus. REBELLION AND DEFIANCE

en: rebels | es: rebeldes | fr: séditieux | de: Aufruehrer Mark 15:7

συστᾰτ-ικός G4956 Adj-GFP (1×)

commendatory, for introduction or recommendation (especially of letters vouching for someone)

Paul asks rhetorically whether he needs 'letters of recommendation' like some who commend themselves, using an adjective that means 'introductory' or 'commendatory.' Classical usage includes letters vouching for travelers or confirming transactions; early Christian usage adapted this for vouching for itinerant ministers. Spanish 'de recomendación' and German 'Empfehlungsbrief' preserve the epistolary convention, essential to understanding how trust was mediated in ancient networks where personal acquaintance was impossible.

(1×) 2 Cor 3:1 questions whether Paul needs 'letters of recommendation' to or from Corinth, a practice common for traveling teachers requiring validation. The term designates letters vouching for the bearer's character and doctrine. English 'commendatory' and Spanish 'de recomendación' preserve the trust-mediating function, contextualizing Paul's defense that the Corinthians themselves are his living letter, superior to parchment credentials. LETTERS AND WRITINGS

en: commendatory | es: de-recomendación | fr: recommandation | de: Empfehlungsbrief 2Cor 3:1

συσταυρόομαι G4957 V-APP-GMS (5×)

To crucify together with; used literally of co-crucifixion and figuratively of the believer's union with Christ in death.

This compound verb joins 'syn' (together with) and 'stauroo' (crucify), expressing shared crucifixion. The Gospels use it literally for the criminals executed alongside Jesus (Matt 27:44; Mark 15:32; John 19:32). Paul transforms it into one of his most profound theological metaphors: 'our old self was crucified together with him' (Rom 6:6) and 'I have been crucified together with Christ' (Gal 2:20). The Spanish 'crucificado juntamente' and French 'crucifier avec' preserve the togetherness that is central to Paul's theology of participation in Christ's death.

(5×) To be crucified together with someone — used both literally of those executed on crosses beside Jesus (Matt 27:44; Mark 15:32; John 19:32) and theologically of the believer's participatory death with Christ. Paul's usage in Rom 6:6 and Gal 2:20 expresses the radical idea that in baptismal union, the old self undergoes co-crucifixion with Christ, dying to sin's dominion. The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'crucificado juntamente,' French 'crucifier avec' — consistently highlights the 'together with' element that makes this more than mere crucifixion: it is shared death leading to shared new life. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH en: I-have-been-crucified, co-crucified, having-been-crucified-together | es: co-crucificado, crucificados-con, fue-crucificado-juntamente | fr: crucifier-avec, être-crucifié-avec | de: mitkreuzigen, συσταυρωθέντες Matt 27:44; Mark 15:32; John 19:32; Rom 6:6; Gal 2:20

συστέλλω G4958 V-AIA-3P (2×)

to shorten, wrap up, draw together

This verb means to draw together, contract, or shorten. Acts 5:6 describes young men wrapping up Ananias's body for burial after his sudden death. First Corinthians 7:29 declares the time has been shortened, urging believers to live with eschatological urgency. The term conveys contraction or compression, whether of fabric around a corpse or of time itself.

(2×) Indicates drawing together, contracting, shortening, or wrapping up, whether literally (of a body) or metaphorically (of time). The multilingual renderings (Spanish 'acortado/envolvieron,' French 'former,' German 'zusammengedrängt') show the range from wrapping to shortening. Acts 5:6 uses it literally for wrapping Ananias's body, while Paul uses it metaphorically in 1 Cor 7:29 to declare that the appointed time has been shortened, compressed, demanding urgent reorientation of priorities in light of Christ's return. POTTER AND FORMING

en: having-been-shortened, wrapped | es: acortado, envolvieron | fr: former | de: zusammengedraengt, συνέστειλαν Acts 5:6; 1Cor 7:29

συστενάζω G4959 V-PIA-3S (1×)

to groan together, sigh jointly, share in lamenting (corporate anguish)

Paul writes that creation 'groans together' with believers, both awaiting redemption. The verb intensifies groaning with συν- ('together'), depicting cosmic solidarity in suffering. This is not isolated pain but shared anguish—earth and humanity sighing in concert toward eschatological liberation. Spanish 'gime juntamente' and German 'mitseufzen' preserve the participatory dimension, essential to Paul's theology of corporate groaning as prelude to corporate glory.

(1×) Rom 8:22 describes all creation 'groaning together' in birth pangs, a collective anguish shared by believers indwelt by the Spirit. The verb stresses corporate suffering—not isolated individuals but a unified cosmos sighing toward renewal. English 'groans together' and Spanish 'gime juntamente' capture the solidarity in suffering, vital to Paul's eschatology where shared groaning precedes shared glory. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: groans-together | es: gime-juntamente | fr: gémir-ensemble | de: mitseufzen Rom 8:22

συστοιχ-έω G4960 V-PIA-3S (1×)

to correspond to, stand in the same row, be parallel (especially in comparison or analogy)

Paul argues that 'Hagar corresponds to the present Jerusalem,' using a verb from military formations meaning 'to stand in the same rank.' The term denotes alignment or analogy, applied here to theological mapping—Hagar and earthly Jerusalem occupy parallel positions in Paul's allegory. Spanish 'corresponde' and German 'entsprechen' preserve the comparison sense, essential to Paul's argument that Sinai-Hagar-earthly Jerusalem form one enslaved sequence, while Sarah-heavenly Jerusalem represent freedom.

(1×) Gal 4:25 claims that Sinai/Hagar 'corresponds to' present Jerusalem, both representing slavery. The verb draws a parallel, aligning figures in Paul's allegorical system. English 'corresponds to' and French retain the Greek, signaling the analogical mapping essential to Paul's argument that the old covenant's geography and figures align with ongoing slavery, while the new covenant transcends it. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: corresponds-to | es: corresponde | fr: συστοιχεῖ | de: entsprechen Gal 4:25

συστρᾰτιώτης G4961 N-DMS (2×)

fellow soldier, companion in battle or struggle

This noun describes a fellow soldier, one who serves in battle alongside another. Paul uses it metaphorically for Christian ministry partners. In Philippians 2:25, he calls Epaphroditus his fellow soldier who ministered to his needs. In Philemon 2, he addresses Archippus as a fellow soldier. The military metaphor emphasizes shared hardship, loyalty, and common cause in spiritual warfare.

(2×) Denotes a fellow soldier or companion in arms, used metaphorically in the NT for close ministry partners who share in the spiritual warfare and hardships of gospel work. The cross-lingual evidence (Spanish 'co-soldado/compañero de milicia,' German 'Mitstreiter') preserves the military imagery. Paul applies this honorary title to Epaphroditus (Phil 2:25) and Archippus (Phlm 2), recognizing them as brothers-in-arms in the spiritual battle, sharing both the dangers and the discipline of Christian ministry. HEBREW PEOPLE

en: fellow-soldier | es: co-soldado, compañero-de-milicia | fr: συστρατιώτην, συστρατιώτῃ | de: Mitstreiter Phil 2:25; Phlm 1:2

συστρέφω G4962 V-PPM/P-GMP (2×)

to gather together, assemble, twist together

This verb means to twist together, gather, or assemble. Matthew 17:22 notes that while they were gathering together in Galilee, Jesus predicted his betrayal. Acts 28:3 describes Paul gathering a bundle of sticks for the fire on Malta, where a viper then bit him. The term can indicate assembling people or collecting objects into a bundle.

(2×) Indicates gathering, assembling, or bundling together, whether of people coming together or objects being collected into a twisted bundle. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'reuniéndose/habiendo reunido,' French 'se rassembler') show both personal and material applications. Matthew 17:22 uses it for the disciples assembling together in Galilee before Jesus' passion prediction, while Acts 28:3 describes Paul gathering a bundle of brushwood, leading to the dramatic viper incident that amazed the Maltese. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: Gathering, having-gathered | es: Reuniéndose, habiendo-reunido | fr: Sychar, se-rassembler | de: Συστρεφομένων, συστρέψαντος Matt 17:22; Acts 28:3

συστροφ-ή G4963 N-GFS (2×)

disorderly gathering, conspiracy, seditious assembly

This noun originally meant a twisting together, but came to mean a tumultuous gathering or conspiracy. Acts 19:40 warns that the Ephesian riot risked charges of creating a disorderly gathering. Acts 23:12 describes a conspiracy of Jews who bound themselves with an oath to kill Paul. The term emphasizes the dangerous, secretive, or riotous nature of the assembly.

(2×) Denotes a tumultuous or seditious gathering, conspiracy, or riotous assembly, often with hostile or secretive intent. The cross-lingual renderings (Spanish 'conspiración/tumulto,' French 'complot') capture both the conspiratorial and riotous dimensions. Acts uses this for both the dangerous mob scene at Ephesus that threatened Roman order (19:40) and the murderous conspiracy of 40+ Jews who vowed to kill Paul (23:12), showing how corporate action can become destructive when twisted toward evil purposes. CONSPIRACY

en: a-conspiracy, disorderly-gathering | es: conspiración, tumulto | fr: complot | de: συστροφὴν, συστροφῆς Acts 19:40; Acts 23:12

συσχημᾰτ-ίζω G4964 V-PMM/P-2P (2×)

to conform to, be fashioned according to a pattern

This passive verb means to be fashioned together with or conformed to a pattern or example. Romans 12:2 commands believers not to be conformed to this age but to be transformed by renewing the mind. First Peter 1:14 urges believers not to be conformed to their former ignorant desires. Both passages emphasize resisting external conformity to sinful patterns.

(2×) Indicates being molded, fashioned, or conformed to match an external pattern, standard, or example, usually in a negative sense of worldly conformity to be resisted. The cross-lingual evidence (Spanish 'conformándoos/os conforméis,' German 'sich-gleichstellen') emphasizes the shaping influence. Paul (Rom 12:2) and Peter (1 Pet 1:14) both use this in prohibitions against letting the surrounding culture or one's old life pattern reshape the believer—transformation must be internal and divine, not external and worldly. EXAMPLES AND TYPES

en: be-conformed, conforming | es: conformándoos, os-conforméis | fr: se-conformer, sich-gleichstellen | de: sich-gleichstellen Rom 12:2; 1Pet 1:14

Συχάρ G4965 N-AFS (1×)

Sychar (place name: Samaritan town near Jacob's well)

Jesus came to 'Sychar,' a Samaritan town where Jacob's well stood, the setting for his encounter with the woman at the well. Scholars debate whether Sychar is Shechem or a nearby village (possibly Askar). John's geographical precision roots the narrative in contested sacred space—Samaritans and Jews both claimed patriarchal heritage here. Multilingual glosses transliterate the name, respecting the proper-noun status while anchoring John's narrative in Samaritan geography essential to the conversation about worship locations.

(1×) John 4:5 locates Jesus' encounter with the Samaritan woman at 'Sychar,' a town near Jacob's well and the plot Joseph received. The place name grounds John's narrative in specific geography tied to patriarchal heritage, disputed between Jews and Samaritans. Translations universally transliterate ('Sychar,' 'Sychár'), preserving the site's identity while embedding the story in the contested sacred landscape where Jesus redefined worship beyond place. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Sychar | es: Sychár | fr: Sychar | de: Sychar John 4:5

Συχέμ G4966 N-DFS (2×)

Shechem, ancient city in Samaria and son of Hamor

This indeclinable Hebrew name (Shekem) appears in Stephen's speech in Acts 7. It refers both to the son of Hamor from Genesis 34 and to the ancient city of Shechem in Samaria, a significant location in patriarchal history. Abraham built an altar there, Jacob bought land, and Joseph's bones were eventually buried there. Stephen's rehearsal of salvation history includes this place twice in verse 16.

(2×) Refers to Shechem, both as the name of Hamor's son (Gen 34) and as the important city in Samaria where Abraham, Jacob, and later Joshua conducted key covenant ceremonies. Stephen's brief mention (Acts 7:16, repeated in the same verse) connects the patriarchal land purchase to the burial of Joseph's bones, linking promise to fulfillment. The multilingual transliterations preserve the Hebrew name with slight variations (Spanish 'Sychém,' French 'Sichem'), reflecting its historical and theological significance as a place of covenant and inheritance. SHECHEM NAMES

en: Sychem | es: Sychém | fr: Sichem | de: Συχέμ, Συχὲμ Acts 7:16

σφᾰγ-ή G4967 N-AFS (3×)

slaughter, killing; violent death, especially of sacrificial victims or those killed in judgment

A noun meaning slaughter, killing, or violent death—particularly of sacrificial animals or those condemned to die. It appears in the Ethiopian eunuch's scroll: 'like a sheep led to slaughter' (Acts 8:32, quoting Isaiah 53:7), Paul quoting 'for your sake we are killed all day long, regarded as sheep for slaughter' (Rom 8:36, from Psalm 44:22), and James condemning the rich: 'you have fattened your hearts in a day of slaughter' (Jas 5:5). The word evokes sacrificial victims, throats cut, blood poured out—innocence destroyed.

(3×) Uniform: English 'slaughter/of slaughter', Spanish 'matadero/de matanza', French 'massacre', German 'Schlachtung'. All three NT uses employ the metaphor of sheep to slaughter: Christ as the suffering servant (Acts 8:32), believers killed for faithfulness (Rom 8:36), and the wealthy unconsciously fattening themselves for divine judgment (Jas 5:5). The imagery is visceral—helpless victims, violent death, blood spilled. BUTCHERING SLAUGHTER

en: of-slaughter, slaughter | es: de-matanza, matadero | fr: massacre | de: Schlachtung, σφαγὴν Acts 8:32; Rom 8:36; Jas 5:5

σφᾰγ-ιον G4968 N-ANP (1×)

sacrificial victims, slain animals for offerings (especially in pagan or idolatrous contexts)

Stephen accuses Israel of offering 'slain animals' to idols in the wilderness, quoting Amos' indictment. The term denotes sacrificial victims—the bodies of slaughtered animals presented to gods. Classical usage includes victims for divination; Stephen's usage is polemical, framing Israel's sacrifices as idolatrous despite outward Yahweh-worship. Spanish 'víctimas' and French 'victime' preserve the sacrificial sense, essential to Stephen's accusation that Israel's cult corrupted into star-worship.

(1×) Acts 7:42 (quoting Amos 5:25-26) asks whether Israel offered 'sacrifices and victims' to God or to idols during forty wilderness years. The term denotes slaughtered animals for sacrifice, here contrasted with true Yahweh-worship. English 'slain animals' and Spanish 'víctimas' preserve the cultic context, vital to Stephen's indictment that Israel's sacrificial system masked deeper idolatry, foreshadowing the temple's obsolescence. SACRIFICE AND SLAUGHTER

en: slain-animals | es: víctimas | fr: victime | de: σφάγια Acts 7:42

σφάζω G4969 V-RPM/P-GMP (10×)

Slay, slaughter — to kill violently, especially by cutting the throat; used of sacrificial and murderous killing

The verb σφάζω (sphazo) denotes violent killing, originally with the specific nuance of throat-cutting or butchering, though the NT extends it to any brutal slaying. Cain 'slaughtered' Abel (1 John 3:12), using the same verb applied to the Lamb 'slain from the foundation of the world' (Rev 5:6, 9, 12; 13:8). This lexical pairing is theologically potent: the first murder and the ultimate sacrifice share the same word. In Revelation, the Lamb bears the marks of slaughter yet stands alive, and the great red dragon's sword is given authority to 'slay' on earth (Rev 6:4). Spanish 'degollar/matar' and French 'égorger' preserve the visceral, sacrificial register.

slay, slaughter (10×) To kill by violent means, originally connoting throat-cutting or butchering, applied both to murder (Cain slaying Abel, 1 John 3:12) and to sacrificial slaughter (the Lamb 'slain,' Rev 5:6, 9, 12; 13:8). Revelation uses it for eschatological violence as well: the rider on the red horse is empowered to cause people to 'slay one another' (Rev 6:4, 9; 18:24). The perfect passive participle ἐσφαγμένον ('having been slain') becomes a standing christological title for the Lamb. Spanish 'degollar' and German 'schlachten' both retain the butchering connotation. KILLING AND REMOVING en: having-been-slain, he-slew, slew | es: degollada, degollado, degollados | fr: schlachten | de: schlachten 1John 3:12; Rev 5:6; Rev 5:9; Rev 5:12

σφόδρ-ᾰ G4970 Adv (11×)

Exceedingly, very much, greatly — an intensive adverb amplifying the force of verbs, adjectives, and emotions

The adverb σφόδρα (sphodra) functions as an intensifier meaning 'exceedingly, very much, greatly.' In Matthew's Gospel especially, it heightens the emotional register of key moments: the magi rejoiced 'exceedingly' at seeing the star (Matt 2:10), the disciples fell on their faces 'greatly afraid' at the Transfiguration (Matt 17:6), they were 'exceedingly sorrowful' at the prediction of betrayal (Matt 17:23; 26:22), and the centurion was 'exceedingly afraid' at the earthquake during the crucifixion (Matt 27:54). Other uses include the fellow servants' deep distress over the unforgiving debtor (Matt 18:31) and the disciples' astonishment at Jesus' teaching on wealth (Matt 19:25). Spanish 'en gran manera/mucho' and German 'sehr/überaus' reflect the same amplifying function.

(11×) An intensive adverb meaning 'exceedingly, very much, greatly' — amplifying the force of emotions, reactions, and states. Matthew favors it for dramatic moments: the magi's exceeding joy (Matt 2:10), the disciples' terror at the Transfiguration (Matt 17:6), their deep sorrow at betrayal predictions (Matt 17:23; 26:22), astonishment at the teaching on riches (Matt 19:25), the servants' distress in the parable (Matt 18:31), and the centurion's fear at the crucifixion earthquake (Matt 27:54). Also appears in Luke 18:23 and Acts 6:7

and Revelation 16:21. Spanish 'en gran manera,' Hindi 'bahut,' and Korean 'maeu' all serve as equivalent intensifiers. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: deeply, exceedingly, extremely | es: en-extremo, en-gran-manera, grandemente | fr: extrêmement, sehr, très | de: sehr Matt 2:10; Matt 17:6; Matt 17:23; Matt 18:31; Matt 19:25

σφοδρ-ός G4971 Adv (1×)

violently, vehemently, excessively (with great force or intensity)

The ship was 'violently' storm-tossed, prompting the crew to jettison cargo. Classical usage describes excessive heat, exercise, or emotion; Luke's usage is nautical, depicting the storm's ferocity threatening the vessel's survival. Spanish 'violentamente' and French 'excessivement' preserve the intensity sense, essential to Luke's detailed shipwreck narrative where mounting dangers build toward Paul's divine reassurance. The adverb marks escalation—from manageable weather to existential peril.

(1×) Acts 27:18 describes the ship being 'violently storm-tossed,' leading the crew to lighten the vessel. The adverb conveys the storm's overwhelming force, beyond normal rough seas. English 'violently' and Spanish 'violentamente' capture the excessive intensity, essential to Luke's narrative arc where increasing peril sets the stage for Paul's prophetic word and God's deliverance through shipwreck. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: violently | es: violentamente | fr: excessivement | de: σφοδρῶς Acts 27:18

σφρᾱγ-ίζω G4972 V-RPM/P-NMP (15×)

To seal — either to authenticate by setting a mark of ownership, or to seal shut for security or concealment

A verb carrying the weight of ancient seal impressions pressed into wax or clay. In the New Testament, it most frequently describes God's act of marking believers with the Holy Spirit as a seal of ownership and authentication (Eph 1:13; 4:30; 2 Cor 1:22). But it also retains the concrete sense of physically closing something — sealing Christ's tomb with a stone (Matt 27:66), sealing the abyss over Satan (Rev 20:3), or sealing up a prophetic scroll. The two senses divide neatly: marking versus enclosing.

1. mark with a seal, authenticate (12×) To set a seal upon someone or something as a mark of authentication, ownership, or divine approval. This is predominantly a theological sense in the NT: God seals believers with the Holy Spirit (2 Cor 1:22; Eph 1:13; 4:30), the Father has sealed the Son (John 6:27), and to believe is to 'set one's seal' that God is true (John 3:33). Spanish 'sellar' and German 'versiegeln' both carry the authenticating force. Romans 15:28 uses it metaphorically for Paul securing the collection for Jerusalem. SEALING AND AUTHENTICATING

en: has-sealed, having-been-sealed, having-sealed | es: fuisteis-sellados, habiendo-sellado, que-selló | fr: sceller | de: versiegeln, σφραγίσαντες Matt 27:66; John 3:33; John 6:27; Rom 15:28; 2Cor 1:22

2. seal shut, close up (3×) To seal something shut — closing, securing, or concealing contents so they cannot be accessed or read. Applied to physical sealing of Christ's tomb (Matt 27:66), the closing up of prophetic visions (Rev 22:10 contrasts with Daniel's sealed scroll), and the binding of Satan in the abyss sealed over him (Rev 20:3). The emphasis falls on restriction and enclosure rather than authentication. SEALING AND AUTHENTICATING

en: Seal-up, sealed, you-should-seal | es: Sella, selles, selló | fr: sceller | de: versiegeln Rev 10:4; Rev 20:3; Rev 22:10

σφρᾱγ-ίς G4973 N-NFS (16×)

Seal or signet; a device or its impression used to authenticate, secure, or mark ownership, both literally and figuratively.

Sphragis denotes both the physical seal-device (a signet ring or stamp) and the mark it leaves. In the ancient world, seals authenticated documents, secured tombs, and indicated ownership. Paul calls Abraham's circumcision a seal of the righteousness he had by faith (Rom 4:11) and the Corinthian believers the seal of his apostleship (1 Cor 9:2). The Apocalypse gives the word dramatic prominence: the scroll sealed with seven seals can be opened only by the Lamb (Rev 5:1-9; 6:1-12). God's firm foundation bears a seal of divine ownership (2 Tim 2:19). Spanish sello, French sceau, and German Siegel consistently render the same concept.

seal, signet mark of authentication or closure (16×) A seal, signet, or the impression made by one, used to authenticate, secure, or certify. Literally it refers to wax or clay impressions that close and validate documents or tombs. Paul employs it metaphorically: circumcision is a seal of faith-righteousness (Rom 4:11), and converts are the seal of apostolic ministry (1 Cor 9:2). In Revelation, seven seals secure the eschatological scroll that only the Lamb can open (Rev 5:1-9; 6:1-12). The metaphor of divine ownership appears in 2 Tim 2:19. All target languages use a single authentication-mark term, confirming one cohesive sense. SEAL SIGNET

en: a-seal, seal, seals | es: con-sellos, sello, sellos | fr: sceau | de: Siegel Rom 4:11; 1Cor 9:2; 2Tim 2:19; Rev 5:1; Rev 5:2

σφῦρ-όν G4974 N-NNP (1×)

ankles, ankle joints (part of the foot connecting to leg)

The lame man's 'ankles' received strength when Peter healed him, using a rare anatomical term appearing only here in the NT. Classical usage denotes the ankle joint; Luke's medical precision (a physician's detail) grounds the miracle in physical specificity—not vague 'feet' but the precise joint where lameness often originates. Spanish 'tobillos' and French 'cheville' preserve the anatomical exactness, lending credibility to Luke's eyewitness-style narration of instant structural healing.

(1×) Acts 3:7 records that the lame man's 'feet and ankles' were immediately strengthened when Peter lifted him. The anatomical specificity (ankles, not just feet) suggests medical observation—Luke notes the precise site of healing. English 'ankles' and Spanish 'tobillos' preserve the physical detail, grounding the miracle in bodily reality and lending Luke's account the precision of medical documentation. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12037 WITH 3 SENSES

en: ankles | es: tobillos | fr: cheville | de: σφυδρά Acts 3:7

σχεδ-όν G4975 Adv (3×)

almost, nearly; approaching closely to but not quite reaching a particular state or number

An adverb meaning almost, nearly, or close to—approaching but not quite reaching. Luke uses it of 'almost the whole city' gathering to hear Paul (Acts 13:44), Paul's statement that 'almost all of Asia' had seen his persuasive work (19:26), and Hebrews' observation that 'almost everything is purified with blood' under the law (9:22). Classical Greek uses it for spatial nearness, close combat, approaching time, or similarity. The word suggests proximity—just short of complete or total, nearly but not absolutely.

(3×) Simple uniformity: English 'almost', Spanish 'casi', French 'presque/beinahe', German 'beinahe'. The three NT uses employ 'almost' to indicate near-totality without claiming absolute universality: almost the whole city (Acts 13:44), almost all of Asia (19:26), almost everything (Heb 9:22). The adverb acknowledges exceptions while emphasizing the predominant pattern—blood purification is the rule, with rare exceptions. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: almost | es: casi | fr: beinahe, presque | de: beinahe, σχεδὸν Acts 13:44; Acts 19:26; Heb 9:22

σχῆμα G4976 N-DNS (2×)

form, outward appearance, fashion

This noun describes the outward form, shape, or fashion of something, often distinguished from inner reality. First Corinthians 7:31 declares that the present form or fashion of this world is passing away. Philippians 2:8 describes Christ being found in human form or appearance, emphasizing the reality of the incarnation. The term can suggest mere outward show or genuine external manifestation.

(2×) Denotes the external form, shape, or appearance of something, the outward fashion or configuration, which may be either superficial or genuinely expressive of inner reality. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'forma/en apariencia,' French 'forme,' German 'Gestalt') capture the external aspect. Paul uses this for the transient fashion of the fallen world order (1 Cor 7:31) and for Christ's genuine assumption of human form (Phil 2:8), showing both the perishable and incarnational dimensions of external appearance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: form, in-appearance | es: en-apariencia, forma | fr: forme, σχήματι | de: Gestalt 1Cor 7:31; Phil 2:8

σχίζω G4977 V-FIA-3S (11×)

To split, tear, rend apart; figuratively, to divide a group into factions

A vivid verb of violent separation, used in the Gospels for some of the most dramatic moments in the narrative: the heavens being 'torn open' at Jesus' baptism (Mark 1:10), the temple veil ripping from top to bottom at the crucifixion (Matt 27:51; Mark 15:38; Luke 23:45), and rocks splitting apart. Jesus teaches that no one tears a piece from a new garment to patch an old one (Luke 5:36). In Acts, the word extends metaphorically to social fracture—a city divided in opinion (Acts 14:4) or an assembly split into rival factions (Acts 23:7). Spanish distinguishes the two senses nicely: 'rasgar' for physical tearing versus 'dividir' for factional splitting.

1. tear, split, rend (9×) Physical tearing, splitting, or rending of material objects. The temple curtain is torn in two at the crucifixion (Matt 27:51; Mark 15:38; Luke 23:45), the heavens are split open at Jesus' baptism (Mark 1:10), rocks crack apart (Matt 27:51), and fishing nets tear under the weight of a miraculous catch (John 21:11). Jesus' parable warns against tearing new cloth to patch old (Luke 5:36). Spanish 'rasgar/rasguemos' and German 'zerreissen' convey the same forceful, irreversible rupture. TEARING AND RENDING

en: being-torn, having-torn, let-us-tear | es: habiendo-rasgado, rasgará, rasguemos | fr: déchirer | de: zerreissen, σχίσας, σχίσει Matt 27:51; Mark 1:10; Mark 15:38; Luke 5:36

2. divide (a group) (2×) Figurative division of a group into opposing factions or parties. In Acts 14:4 the populace of Iconium 'was divided'—some siding with the apostles, others with the Jewish leaders. Similarly, Paul deliberately splits the Sanhedrin by raising the resurrection issue (Acts 23:7). Spanish 'fue dividida' and French 'fendre' shift from physical cleavage to social fracture, mirroring the Greek metaphorical extension. DIVIDING AND DISTRIBUTING en: was-divided | es: fue-dividida | fr: fendre | de: ἐσχίσθη Acts 14:4; Acts 23:7

σχίσ-μα G4978 N-NNP (8×)

A tear, rent (in fabric); a division, split, or schism (among people)

The noun schisma, from which English derives 'schism,' names a splitting or tearing apart, applied both to material objects and to human communities. Jesus uses the concrete image of a tear in cloth to warn against patching an old garment with unshrunk fabric (Matt 9:16; Mark 2:21), since the new patch pulls away and the schisma becomes worse. John's Gospel deploys the word three times for divisions of opinion among the Jewish crowd and leaders over Jesus' identity (John 7:43; 9:16; 10:19). Paul then elevates the term to its most theologically charged register, urging the Corinthians that there be 'no divisions' among them (1 Cor 1:10) and lamenting the schismata visible at their communal meals (1 Cor 11:18).

1. division (6×) A division, split, or schism among people — disagreement that fractures a community into opposing factions. This is the dominant New Testament sense, appearing six times. In John 7:43, 9:16, and 10:19 it describes the crowd splitting over Jesus: some believed, others rejected him. Paul addresses the Corinthian church twice with this word: in 1 Cor 1:10 he pleads that they be 'perfectly united' with 'no divisions' among them, and in 1 Cor 11:18 he has heard there are schismata when they assemble. Spanish 'division/divisiones,' French 'schisme/division,' and German 'Spaltung' all consistently render the social fracture, and the clustering of this sense in John and 1 Corinthians reveals its role as a key term in New Testament ecclesiology and Christological controversy. DIVISION SPLIT

en: A-division, a-division, division | es: División, divisiones, división | fr: division, schisme | de: Spaltung John 7:43; John 9:16; John 10:19; 1Cor 1:10; 1Cor 11:18

2. tear (2×) A tear or rent in fabric — the literal, physical sense of a split in material. Jesus warns in the twin parables of Matt 9:16 and Mark 2:21 that sewing unshrunk cloth onto an old garment causes the new patch to pull away, making the tear worse. English 'tear,' Spanish 'rotura,' and the German transliteration 'schisma' all point to the concrete textile image. Though only two occurrences attest this sense in the NT, the parable is foundational: it provides the tangible, visible metaphor from which the abstract 'schism among people' naturally extends. DIVISION AND PORTION

en: a-tear, tear | es: rotura | fr: division | de: Spaltung, σχίσμα Matt 9:16; Mark 2:21

σχοιν-ίον G4979 N-ANP (2×)

small rope, cord

This diminutive noun means a small rope or cord, though it could also refer to regular-sized ropes. John 2:15 describes Jesus making a whip of cords to drive out the money-changers from the temple. Acts 27:32 mentions soldiers cutting away the ropes of the ship's boat during Paul's shipwreck. The term emphasizes the practical use of cordage in both dramatic incidents.

(2×) Indicates small ropes, cords, or lines used for various practical purposes like binding, mooring, or fashioning implements. The cross-lingual renderings (Spanish 'cuerdas,' French 'corde,' German 'Seile') straightforwardly identify cordage. John's Gospel uses this for the cords Jesus braided into a whip for cleansing the temple (2:15), while Acts employs it for the ship's ropes that soldiers cut away during the storm (27:32), showing cords in both prophetic confrontation and maritime crisis. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cords, ropes | es: -cuerdas, cuerdas | fr: corde | de: Seile, σχοινία John 2:15; Acts 27:32

σχολ-άζω G4980 V-ASA-2P (3×)

to have leisure, be unoccupied; to be free from activity or devoted to something by having time available

A verb meaning to have leisure, be at rest, or be unoccupied—and thus to devote time to something. Jesus describes an unclean spirit finding its former house 'unoccupied, swept, and put in order' (Matt 12:44, Luke 11:25), and Paul advises couples not to deprive each other 'except by agreement for a time, that you may devote yourselves to prayer' (1 Cor 7:5). Classical uses include having leisure for activities, loitering, or ceasing from work. The word ranges from idleness (an empty house) to purposeful devotion (time set aside for prayer).

(3×) Languages vary: English 'unoccupied/standing empty/devote yourselves', Spanish 'desocupada/os dediqueís', French 'avoir du loisir', German 'Musse haben/σχολάζοντα'. The three uses show the spectrum: an unoccupied house ready for demonic reoccupation (Matt 12:44, Luke 11:25) and time deliberately freed for spiritual focus (1 Cor 7:5). The verb itself is neutral—being 'free' can mean dangerous emptiness or purposeful devotion, depending on how the leisure is used. EMPTINESS AND VANITY

en: standing-empty, unoccupied, you-might-devote-yourselves | es: desocupada, os-dediqueís | fr: avoir-du-loisir | de: Musse-haben, σχολάζοντα Matt 12:44; Luke 11:25; 1Cor 7:5

σχολή G4981 N-DFS (1×)

leisure, free time, place for teaching or study (especially a lecture hall)

Paul taught daily in 'the hall' of Tyrannus for two years, using a word that means 'leisure' or the place where leisure is spent—a school or lecture hall. Classical usage denotes free time for study; by extension, the places where teaching occurred. Spanish 'escuela' (school) and French 'école' capture the educational context, while English 'hall' preserves the spatial sense. Luke's detail situates Paul's Ephesian ministry in a rented teaching venue, modeling urban intellectual engagement.

(1×) Acts 19:9 locates Paul's daily teaching 'in the hall of Tyrannus,' a rented lecture space for extended discourse. The term's semantic range (leisure → study → lecture hall) reflects the classical connection between free time and philosophical education. Multilingual glosses vary ('hall,' 'escuela'), but all situate Paul in a recognized teaching venue, modeling the gospel's engagement with urban educational culture. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: hall | es: escuela | fr: école | de: σχολῇ Acts 19:9

σῴζω G4982 V-AIA-3S (108×)

To save, deliver, rescue, or heal; encompasses spiritual salvation, physical rescue from danger, and restoration to wholeness or health.

One of the most theologically loaded verbs in the New Testament, sozo carries a remarkable semantic range from physical rescue to eternal salvation. In the Gospels, Jesus uses it both for pulling someone from drowning waves (Matt 8:25) and for pronouncing spiritual deliverance (Matt 1:21). The famous declaration 'your faith has saved you' (Mark 5:34; Luke 7:50) beautifully straddles healing and salvation, a nuance visible in how Arabic splits between khallasa (save/deliver) and shafa (heal/cure), while Greek holds both meanings in one word. Spanish similarly alternates between salvar and sanar depending on context, revealing the sense boundaries that Greek leaves fluid.

1. save spiritually, grant salvation (79×) The primary theological sense of delivering from sin, spiritual death, and divine judgment, granting eternal life through faith. This overwhelmingly dominant usage (79 of 108 occurrences) spans from the angel's announcement that Jesus 'will save his people from their sins' (Matt 1:21) through eschatological promises like 'the one who endures to the end will be saved' (Matt 24:13). Across all major target languages — Spanish salvar, French sauver, German retten, Arabic khallasa — the translations converge on deliverance vocabulary rather than healing terms, confirming a distinct soteriological sense. SALVATION AND RESCUE

en: to-save, will-be-saved | es: a-salvar, salvar, será-salvado | fr: sauver | de: retten, rettet Matt 1:21; Matt 10:22; Matt 16:25; Matt 18:11; Matt 24:13

2. rescue from danger (12×) Physical rescue from immediate danger, peril, or death — the cry of the disciples in the storm, 'Lord, save us, we are perishing!' (Matt 8:25), or Peter sinking in the waves (Matt 14:30). Also includes the mocking challenge at the cross: 'Save yourself and come down!' (Matt 27:40). Spanish uses salvad (imperative rescue) and se salvaria (conditional rescue), while Arabic employs najja/khalasa in the physical deliverance register, distinguishing this from the soteriological sense. SALVATION AND RESCUE

en: let-him-save, save, to-save | es: salvad, salvar, se-salvaría | fr: sauver, sauvez, | de: retten, rettet Matt 8:25; Matt 14:30; Matt 24:22; Matt 27:40; Mark 3:4

3. make whole through faith (9×) The distinctive declaration 'your faith has saved/made you whole' (Matt 9:22; Mark 5:34; Mark 10:52; Luke 7:50; Luke 8:48), bridging physical healing and spiritual deliverance in a single pronouncement. This sense is notoriously hard to translate because it refuses to separate body and soul. Arabic splits between khallasa (saved) and shafa (healed) depending on the translator's theological emphasis, while Korean and Swahili similarly diverge, exposing a meaning that Greek deliberately holds together. The nine occurrences cluster in faith-healing narratives where Jesus addresses the person directly. SALVATION AND RESCUE

en: has-saved, he-will-be-saved | es: será-salvado, será-salvo, te-ha-salvado | fr: sauver | de: retten, rettet Matt 9:22; Mark 5:34; Mark 10:52; Luke 7:50; Luke 8:48

4. heal, restore to health (8×) Healing or curing physical illness, restoring bodily health, where the context makes clear that physical recovery rather than spiritual salvation is in view. The woman with the hemorrhage reaching for Jesus' garment, 'If I only touch his cloak, I will be healed' (Matt 9:21; Mark 5:28), and the summary statements of mass healings (Mark 6:56). Arabic shafa/yushfa (heal/be healed), Korean natta (got well), and Spanish sanados (healed) consistently select medical vocabulary here, confirming a distinct physical-restoration sense separate from the faith-pronouncement formula of Sense 3. SALVATION AND RESCUE

en: I-will-be-saved, has-been-healed, she-may-be-saved | es: eran-sanados, fue-salvada, fue-sanado | fr: sauver | de: retten, rettet Matt 9:21; Matt 9:22; Mark 5:23; Mark 5:28; Mark 6:56

σῶμα G4983 N-NNS (142×)

Body — the physical human body; by extension, the church as the body of Christ, and the resurrected body

Soma is the New Testament's primary word for the physical body, covering everything from Jesus' instruction about the 'eye as lamp of the body' (Matt 6:22) to Paul's teaching on bodily resurrection (1 Cor 15:35-44). Unlike sarx, which can connote moral frailty, soma is theologically neutral or even positive: the body is a 'temple of the Holy Spirit' (1 Cor 6:19). Paul's most creative extension makes soma a metaphor for the church as the body of Christ, with diverse members serving distinct functions (1 Cor 12:12-27; Eph 4:4). All 142 occurrences orbit the concept of an organized physical or communal whole.

1. physical body (living or dead) (109×) Split from sense 77326. Criteria: Literal human body — living body (Matt 6:22; Rom 12:1), dead body/corpse (Matt 27:58-59), resurrected body (1 Cor 15:44). Material, physical sense.

en: body | es: cuerpo | fr: corps | de: Leib Matt 5:29; Matt 5:30; Matt 6:22; Matt 6:23

2. body of Christ (ecclesial metaphor) (33×) Split from sense 77326. Criteria: Pauline metaphor for the church as corporate body of Christ (1 Cor 12:12-27; Eph 1:23; Col 1:18). Distinct theological extension beyond physical body.

en: body | es: cuerpo | fr: corps | de: Leib Rom 12:4; Rom 12:5; 1Cor 10:17; 1Cor 12:12

σωμᾰτ-ικός G4984 Adj-DNS (2×)

bodily, physical, pertaining to the body

This adjective describes what pertains to the body, the physical or corporeal aspect of existence. Luke 3:22 describes the Holy Spirit descending in bodily form like a dove upon Jesus at his baptism. First Timothy 4:8 notes that bodily training has some value, but godliness is valuable for all things. The term distinguishes the physical realm from the spiritual.

(2×) Pertains to the body or physical aspect of existence, corporeal rather than merely spiritual or immaterial. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'corporal/en corporal,' French 'corporel,' German 'leiblich') emphasizes the bodily nature. Luke uses this to stress the physical, visible manifestation of the Spirit at Jesus' baptism (3:22), not merely a subjective vision. Paul employs it to acknowledge the limited value of physical exercise compared to godliness (1 Tim 4:8), relativizing without despising bodily discipline. FLESH AND BODY

en: bodily, in-bodily | es: corporal, en-corporal | fr: corporel | de: leiblich, σωματικῷ Luke 3:22; 1Tim 4:8

σωμᾰτ-ικός G4985 Adv (1×)

bodily, corporeally, in physical form (not merely appearance or vision)

In Christ 'all the fullness of deity dwells bodily,' using an adverb that means corporeal reality as opposed to mere shadow or vision. Paul insists on the incarnation's physicality—deity inhabits Jesus not symbolically but somatically. Spanish 'corporalmente' and German 'leibhaftig' (bodily, in the flesh) preserve the embodiment sense, countering any Gnostic devaluation of material reality. The term grounds Christology in flesh—fullness is not abstracted but enfleshed.

(1×) Col 2:9 declares that the fullness of deity dwells 'bodily' in Christ, affirming incarnational physicality against proto-Gnostic spiritualizing. The adverb stresses actual embodiment—not appearance or theophany but corporeal indwelling. English 'bodily' and Spanish 'corporalmente' preserve the anti-docetic force, essential to Paul's Colossian polemic asserting Christ's material sufficiency against angelic intermediaries and ascetic denials of the body. BODY (PHYSICAL FORM)

en: bodily | es: corporalmente | fr: σωματικῶς | de: leibhaftig Col 2:9

Σώπατρος G4986 N-NMS (1×)

Sopater (personal name: 'savior of one's father' or 'sound father')

Sopater of Berea accompanied Paul to Asia, one of several delegates likely carrying the collection for Jerusalem. The name combines 'safe' (σῶς) and 'father' (πατήρ), common in Greek-speaking Jewish communities. Luke's list of travel companions documents the multinational character of Paul's entourage, each representing regional churches. Multilingual glosses transliterate the name, respecting its proper-noun status while embedding Sopater in Luke's roster of collaborative mission.

(1×) Acts 20:4 names Sopater of Berea among Paul's Asian traveling companions, likely collection delegates from regional churches. As a personal name meaning 'savior of father' or 'of sound father,' Sopater represents the Berean congregation in this multinational mission team. Translations universally transliterate ('Sopater,' 'Sōpatros'), preserving the individual's identity while documenting the collaborative, geographically diverse structure of Pauline Christianity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sōpatros | es: Sōpatros | fr: Sopater | de: Σώπατρος Acts 20:4

σωρ-εύω G4987 V-RPM/P-ANP (2×)

to heap up, pile up, accumulate

This passive verb means to heap up or pile high with something. Romans 12:20 quotes Proverbs: by feeding your enemy, you will heap burning coals on his head—a disputed image possibly meaning shame or purification. Second Timothy 3:6 describes weak women heaped up with sins. The term emphasizes accumulation or being loaded down with something.

(2×) Indicates heaping up, piling high, or being loaded down with something, whether metaphorically (coals, sins) or literally. The cross-lingual glosses (Spanish 'amontonarás/cargadas,' French 'accumuler/entasser') capture the accumulation concept. Paul uses this metaphorically in Rom 12:20 for heaping burning coals (shame? conviction?) on an enemy's head through kindness, and in 2 Tim 3:6 for gullible women burdened down with accumulated sins, showing both positive (transformative kindness) and negative (sin's crushing weight) applications. HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: having-been-heaped-with, you-will-heap | es: amontonarás, cargadas | fr: accumuler, entasser | de: aufhaeufen Rom 12:20; 2Tim 3:6

Σωσθένης G4988 N-AMS (2×)

Sosthenes, name of a synagogue ruler and Christian associate

This Greek name (meaning 'safe in strength') appears twice in Acts and 1 Corinthians, possibly referring to two different men or the same person at different stages. Acts 18:17 mentions Sosthenes the synagogue ruler who was beaten by the crowd in Corinth. First Corinthians 1:1 names Sosthenes as Paul's brother and co-sender of the letter. If the same person, his conversion would be dramatic.

(2×) Refers to Sosthenes, either one or two individuals bearing this name: the synagogue ruler beaten in Corinth (Acts 18:17) and Paul's Christian brother mentioned as co-author of 1 Corinthians (1:1). The multilingual transliterations maintain the Greek name with minor variations. Many interpreters identify these as the same person, suggesting the beaten synagogue leader later converted and became Paul's close associate, making him a living example of gospel transformation—from Jewish opponent to Christian co-laborer. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sōsthenēs | es: Sōsthénēs, a-Sōsthénēs | fr: Sosthène | de: Sosthenes, Σωσθένην Acts 18:17; 1Cor 1:1

Σωσίπατρος G4989 N-NMS (1×)

Sosipater, a personal name meaning 'savior of the father'; Paul's kinsman in Rom 16:21

Sosipater appears once in Paul's greetings as a fellow kinsman who sends greetings to the Romans. The name combines Greek roots meaning 'savior' and 'father,' suggesting either a hopeful aspiration at birth or perhaps indicating family significance. The multilingual evidence (Spanish preserving the Greek form, French oddly rendering 'sotéria/salvation', German using Latin form) shows translators treating this as a personal name to be transliterated rather than translated.

(1×) Personal name appearing in Paul's final greetings (Rom 16:21). The single occurrence and consistent transliteration across languages confirms this is simply a person's identifier. The French rendering 'sotéria' (salvation) appears to confuse the name's etymology with its contextual use, while most versions wisely preserve the Greek form Sosipater or adapt to Latin Sosipater. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sosipatros | es: Sōsípatros | fr: sotéria | de: Sosipater Rom 16:21

σωτήρ G4990 N-AMS (24×)

Savior, deliverer — one who rescues from danger or destruction; a title for both God the Father and Jesus Christ

Soter ('Savior') is a christological and theological title of the first magnitude, appearing 24 times in the New Testament where it is applied with striking balance to both God the Father and Jesus Christ. In the Lukan infancy narratives, Mary praises 'God my Savior' (Luke 1:47) and angels announce 'a Savior, who is Christ the Lord' (Luke 2:11). The Pastoral Epistles use Soter interchangeably for God and Christ — 'God our Savior' (1 Tim 1:1; 2:3; 4:10; Tit 1:3; 2:10; 3:4) alternates seamlessly with 'our Savior Jesus Christ' (2 Tim 1:10; Tit 1:4; 2:13; 3:6). Second Peter likewise pairs the two applications. The Samaritan villagers acclaim Jesus with the universal title 'the Savior of the world' (John 4:42), and Philippians awaits a Savior from heaven (Phil 3:20). In the wider Greco-Roman world, soter was applied to gods (especially Zeus Soter), rulers, and benefactors, making the early Christian appropriation of the title both theologically deliberate and culturally pointed. Spanish 'Salvador,' French 'Sauveur,' German 'Retter/Heiland' map the title precisely.

Savior (24×) A title meaning 'deliverer' or 'rescuer,' applied in the New Testament to both God the Father and Jesus Christ as agents of salvation. Of God: Mary's Magnificat (Luke 1:47), and repeatedly in the Pastorals — 'God our Savior' (1 Tim 1:1; 2:3; Tit 1:3; 2:10; 3:4). Of Christ: the angelic birth announcement (Luke 2:11), the Samaritans' confession 'Savior of the world' (John 4:42), Peter's preaching (Acts 5:31; 13:23), and the awaited heavenly Savior (Phil 3:20; Eph 5:23; 2 Tim 1:10; Tit 2:13; 2 Pet 1:1, 11; 2:20; 3:2, 18). The dual application — God and Christ sharing the same soter title — carries implicit christological weight. Spanish 'Salvador,' French 'Sauveur,' German 'Retter/Heiland.' SALVATION AND RESCUE

en: Savior, Sōtēr, a-Savior | es: Salvador | fr: Sauveur, sauveur | de: Retter Luke 1:47; Luke 2:11; John 4:42; Acts 5:31; Acts 13:23

σωτηρ-ία G4991 N-GFS (46×)

salvation, deliverance — rescue from danger or sin, the comprehensive saving act of God

Soteria encompasses the full sweep of divine rescue — from physical deliverance to spiritual redemption to eschatological consummation. Its 46 New Testament occurrences include Zechariah's prophecy of 'a horn of salvation' (Luke 1:69), Paul's declaration that the gospel 'is the power of God for salvation to everyone who believes' (Rom 1:16), and the eschatological promise that 'salvation is nearer to us now than when we first believed' (Rom 13:11). The word's classical Greek background — preservation from shipwreck, safe return from war — enriches the biblical usage: God's salvation is both a rescue already accomplished and a homecoming still awaited. The translations are remarkably consistent: Spanish 'salvacion,' French 'salut,'

German 'Rettung/Heil,' each capturing the breadth of deliverance-preservation-redemption in a single term.

of salvation (46×) Deliverance, preservation, and salvation in the fullest sense — encompassing past rescue (the accomplished work of Christ), present experience (the ongoing life of faith), and future consummation (the eschatological hope). Zechariah sings of a 'horn of salvation' raised in the house of David (Luke 1:69, 71), Paul identifies the gospel as 'the power of God for salvation' (Rom 1:16), and the author of Hebrews calls it 'so great a salvation' first announced by the Lord (Heb 2:3). The genitive construction ('of salvation') predominates, qualifying nouns like 'day,' 'helmet,' 'hope,' and 'message.' All 46 occurrences participate in this single, richly layered semantic — physical deliverance, spiritual rescue from sin, and the final redemption of all things. SALVATION (NOUN)
en: deliverance, of-salvation, salvation | es: de-salvación, salvación | fr: salut | de: Rettung Mark 16:20; Luke 1:69; Luke 1:71; Luke 1:77; Luke 19:9

σωτήρ-ιος G4992 Adj-ANS (5×)

Saving, bringing salvation or deliverance; as a substantive, the means or instrument of God's saving act.
This adjective means 'bringing salvation' or 'saving,' and in the NT it appears almost exclusively as a substantive referring to God's saving power made visible. Simeon cradles the infant Jesus and declares, 'My eyes have seen your salvation' (Luke 2:30). Isaiah's prophecy that 'all flesh shall see the salvation of God' echoes through Luke 3:6 and Acts 28:28. In Ephesians 6:17 it becomes the 'helmet of salvation,' and in Titus 2:11 the grace of God appears as 'saving' for all people. French 'salutaire' (health-giving, saving) and Spanish 'salvadora' nicely capture the active, delivering quality.

(5×) Saving, bringing deliverance — used substantively to denote God's salvation made manifest. Simeon sees God's 'saving instrument' in the Christ child (Luke 2:30); the Isaianic promise that all flesh will see God's salvation is quoted at Luke 3:6 and Acts 28:28 to frame the gospel's universal scope. Ephesians 6:17 uses it concretely as the 'helmet of salvation' in spiritual armor, while Titus 2:11 describes God's grace as 'saving' for all humanity. French 'salutaire' and Spanish 'salvación/salvadora' reflect both the adjectival quality (health-bringing) and the substantival force (the saving act itself). SALVATION (NOUN)
en: salvation, saving | es: salvación, salvadora | fr: salut, salutaire | de: Heil, σωτήριον, σωτήριόν Luke 2:30; Luke 3:6; Acts 28:28; Eph 6:17; Titus 2:11

σωφρον-έω G4993 V-PIA-1P (6×)

To be of sound mind and self-controlled; ranges from sanity restored after derangement to the moral discipline of sober, temperate thinking.
In the New Testament, this verb captures two closely related but distinguishable ideas: having a sound, rational mind, and exercising self-controlled, sober judgment. When the Gerasene demoniac is found 'in his right mind' (Mark 5:15; Luke 8:35), the word describes the dramatic restoration of sanity — a return from chaos to clarity. But Paul and Peter use it to call believers toward disciplined thinking: not thinking too highly of oneself (Rom 12:3), living with clear-headed sobriety in light of the end (1 Pet 4:7). The multilingual evidence bears this out — translations split between cognitive soundness (German 'nüchtern sein,' French 'dans son bon sens') and moral exhortation (Spanish 'sed prudentes,' 'pensar con cordura').

1. be of sound mind, be sane (3×) To be in one's right mind, to possess mental soundness and sanity. Used of the Gerasene demoniac after deliverance (Mark 5:15; Luke 8:35), where he is found 'clothed and in his right mind,' and by Paul who contrasts ecstatic experience with rational composure (2 Cor 5:13). The multilingual evidence converges on cognitive clarity: English 'in right mind,' Spanish 'en su sano juicio,' French 'dans son bon sens.' SOBER-MINDED SELF-CONTROL
en: being-of-sound-mind, in-right-mind, we-are-of-sound-mind | es: en-su-juicio, en-su-sano-juicio, estamos-en-sano-juicio | fr: dans-son-bon-sens, être-sobre | de: nuechtern-sein, σωφρονοῦντα Mark 5:15; Luke 8:35; 2Cor 5:13

2. be self-controlled, think soberly (3×) To be self-controlled, to think with sober and temperate judgment. This prescriptive, moral sense appears in Paul's exhortation not to think more highly of oneself than one ought but to think with sober judgment (Rom 12:3), in his charge to young men to be self-controlled (Titus 2:6), and in Peter's call to be clear-minded for prayer (1 Pet 4:7). Spanish 'sed prudentes' and 'pensar con cordura' highlight the deliberate, disciplined character of this thinking. SOBER-MINDED SELF-CONTROL
en: be-sound-minded, to-be-self-controlled, to-think-soberly | es: a-ser-prudentes, pensar-con-cordura, sed-prudentes | fr: dans-son-bon-sens, être-sobre | de: nuechtern-sein Rom 12:3; Titus 2:6; 1Pet 4:7

σωφρον-ίζω G4994 V-PSA-3P (1×)

to train in self-control, discipline, or prudence; to recall to sound judgment
This verb carries the idea of bringing someone back to sound thinking or teaching them self-control. The classical range includes 'chastening' and 'recalling to one's senses,' but in Titus 2:4 it specifically describes older women training younger women in practical wisdom. The Spanish 'enseñen prudencia' (teach prudence) and German 'zur Besonnenheit bringen' (bring to soundness of mind) capture the educational nuance well. This isn't merely information transfer but character formation through disciplined instruction.

(1×) Used in Titus 2:4 where older women are instructed to train younger women in family responsibilities and self-control. The verb implies active mentoring toward wisdom and restraint. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistency: English 'train,' Spanish 'teach prudence,' German 'bring to soundness of mind'—all emphasizing the formative, educational process rather than mere correction. SOBER-MINDED SELF-CONTROL
en: they-may-train | es: enseñen-prudencia | fr: σωφρονίζωσιν | de: zur-Besonnenheit-bringen Titus 2:4

σωφρον-ισμός G4995 N-GMS (1×)

self-discipline, self-control, sound judgment; the quality of a mind governed by wisdom
This noun describes the inner quality of self-mastery and sound judgment. Found only in 2 Timothy 1:7, it appears in Paul's reminder that God gives believers a spirit characterized by power, love, and self-discipline. The term implies not just restraint but positive mental clarity and moral governance. Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize the 'self' component: Spanish 'dominio propio' (self-mastery), German 'Besonnenheit' (prudence/soundness). This is rationality in service of godliness.

(1×) Appears in 2 Tim 1:7 as one of three qualities characterizing the spirit God gives (power, love, self-discipline). The context contrasts this with fear or cowardice, suggesting that sound judgment enables courage. The consistent emphasis across languages on self-mastery and prudent thinking reveals this is about inner governance rather than external constraint. SOBER-MINDED SELF-CONTROL
en: of-self-discipline | es: de-dominio-propio | fr: σωφρονισμοῦ | de: Besonnenheit 2Tim 1:7

σώφρων G4996 Adv (1×)

with sound mind, prudently, in a self-controlled manner
This adverb describes the manner of living characterized by self-control and clear thinking. In Titus 2:12, it appears alongside 'righteously' and 'godly' to describe how believers should live in the present age. The term balances rational self-governance with practical wisdom. Spanish 'prudentemente' and German 'besonnen' both emphasize the thoughtful, measured quality of such conduct. This is lived wisdom, not mere intellectual exercise.

(1×) Found in Titus 2:12 describing how grace teaches believers to live—denying ungodliness and living 'self-controlled, righteously, and godly' lives. The adverb describes practical daily conduct marked by sound judgment. The multilingual evidence confirms this is about manner of living: prudently, soundly, with self-mastery governing choices and actions. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12853 WITH 3 SENSES

en: self-controlled | es: prudentemente | fr: σωφρόνως | de: besonnen Titus 2:12

σωφροσύνη G4997 N-GFS (3×)

soundness of mind, self-control, prudence; mental balance, moderation, and disciplined thinking

A noun denoting soundness of mind, self-control, prudence, or moderation—a balanced, disciplined mental state. Paul declares 'I am not out of my mind but speak words of truth and soundness of mind' (Acts 26:25), instructs women to adorn themselves with 'self-control' (1 Tim 2:9), and lists 'self-control' among virtues women are preserved through (2:15). Classical uses include sanity (opposite of madness), moderation in desires, and even moderate government. The word encompasses both rational clarity and moral discipline—a mind neither manic nor indulgent but balanced and controlled.

(3×) Languages converge: English 'self-control/sound thinking/soundness of mind', Spanish 'cordura/sensatez', French 'sagesse', German 'Besonnenheit/σωφροσύνης'. The three NT uses span apologetic (Paul defending his sanity—Acts 26:25) and ethical (women's modest adornment and salvation—1 Tim 2:9, 15). In each case, σωφροσύνη denotes a disciplined, balanced mind—neither mad nor impulsive but controlled, reasonable, and morally grounded. SOBER-MINDED SELF-CONTROL

en: self-control, sound-thinking | es: de-cordura, sensatez | fr: sagesse, σωφροσύνης | de: Besonnenheit, σωφροσύνης Acts 26:25; 1Tim 2:9; 1Tim 2:15

σώφρων G4998 Adj-AMS (4×)

Self-controlled, temperate, prudent; exercising sober-minded mastery over desires and impulses.

Literally 'of sound mind' (from sos + phren), sophron describes someone whose inner faculties are well-ordered and who exercises disciplined restraint. All four NT occurrences appear in the Pastoral Epistles, where it is a key qualification for church leaders and mature believers. An overseer must be sophron (1 Tim 3:2; Titus 1:8); older men are urged toward it (Titus 2:2); young women are taught it (Titus 2:5). English 'self-controlled' and Spanish 'prudente' each highlight different facets — the English stresses mastery of appetite, while the Spanish foregrounds wise judgment. German 'besonnen' ('level-headed') captures the calm deliberation at the word's core.

(4×) Self-controlled, temperate, sober-minded — describing a person of sound mind who exercises mastery over passions and exercises wise restraint. In 1 Timothy 3:2 and Titus 1:8, it is a non-negotiable qualification for overseers; in Titus 2:2, a virtue of mature men; in Titus 2:5, expected of young women. The Pastoral Epistles consistently pair it with other virtues of moderation and dignity. The multilingual evidence — English 'self-controlled,' Spanish 'prudente/prudentes,' German 'besonnen' — collectively maps the semantic core: an inner discipline that produces outwardly wise and measured behavior. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: self-controlled | es: prudente, prudentes | fr: σώφρονα, σώφρονας | de: besonnen 1Tim 3:2; Titus 1:8; Titus 2:2; Titus 2:5

ταβέρνη G4999 N-GFP (1×)

Taverns, as in 'Three Taverns' (Tres Tabernae), a stopping place on the Appian Way

This word refers to taverns or inns, appearing in the New Testament only in the place name 'Three Taverns' (Acts 28:15), a station on the Appian Way where Roman believers met Paul. The Latin loanword 'taberna' entered Greek to describe these roadside establishments. Cross-linguistic evidence shows varied approaches: most transliterate 'Taverns' or 'Tabernas,' while French oddly renders 'bois' (woods). The historical location was about 30 miles from Rome, a recognized wayside stop for travelers.

(1×) Appears only in Acts 28:15 as part of the place name 'Tres Tabernae' (Three Taverns). The geographical reference marks where Christians from Rome met Paul on his journey to the city. Translators consistently preserve the Latin-Greek form, recognizing this as a specific location rather than just any taverns, though the name originally described what the place was—a cluster of three roadside inns. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Taverns | es: Tabernas | fr: bois | de: Ταβερνῶν Acts 28:15

Ταβειθά G5000 N-VFS (2×)

Tabitha, Aramaic name meaning 'gazelle'

This Aramaic name (meaning 'gazelle,' translated as Dorcas in Greek) belongs to a beloved disciple in Joppa known for good works and charity. When she died, Peter came and raised her to life (Acts 9:36-40). The narrative mentions her name twice at critical moments: her death and her resurrection. Her story demonstrates the early church's care for the poor and the apostles' miracle-working power.

(2×) Refers to Tabitha (Aramaic) or Dorcas (Greek), a female disciple in Joppa renowned for acts of charity, particularly making garments for widows, whom Peter raised from the dead. Both occurrences in Acts 9:36, 40 mark pivotal moments in the narrative: her death and her resurrection. The multilingual transliterations preserve the Aramaic name, highlighting Luke's inclusion of both Aramaic and Greek forms, perhaps indicating her ministry bridged Jewish and Hellenistic Christian communities in the coastal city. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tabitha | es: Tabítha | fr: Tabitha | de: Ταβιθά Acts 9:36; Acts 9:40

τάγμα G5001 N-DNS (1×)

order, rank, division; a fixed arrangement or sequence

This term denotes ordered arrangement, whether military divisions, social ranks, or sequential order. In 1 Corinthians 15:23, Paul uses it to describe the resurrection sequence: Christ first, then those who belong to him at his coming. The classical usage included military units (divisions, legions) and social hierarchies. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering as 'order' (English, Spanish, German) reflects the term's emphasis on proper sequence and arrangement. This is structured priority, not random occurrence.

(1×) Used in 1 Cor 15:23 for the ordered sequence of resurrection: 'each in his own order—Christ the firstfruits, then those who belong to Christ.' The military and hierarchical background enriches the image: resurrection follows divine tactical arrangement. Cross-linguistic consensus on 'order' and 'rank' confirms this is about proper sequence and divine organization of eschatological events. ORDER ARRANGEMENT

en: order | es: orden | fr: armée | de: Ordnung 1Cor 15:23

τακτός G5002 Adj-DFS (1×)

appointed, fixed, prescribed; set by authority or custom

This adjective describes what has been formally appointed or set by authority. In Acts 12:21, it qualifies the day Herod chose for his public appearance—a day 'appointed' for official business. Classical usage included fixed payments, prescribed quantities, and set dates. The term implies deliberate designation rather than random selection. Spanish 'señalado' (marked, designated) and German preserving the Greek form both point to official appointment. This is calendared intentionality, not spontaneous action.

(1×) Appears in Acts 12:21 describing the appointed day when Herod donned royal robes and delivered a public address. The adjective emphasizes the formal, scheduled nature of the occasion—this was a day marked on the calendar for official purposes. Cross-linguistic evidence (English 'appointed,' Spanish 'señalado') confirms the sense of deliberate designation and formal arrangement. APPOINTING AND ORDAINING

en: on-appointed | es: señalado | fr: défini | de: ταχτῇ Acts 12:21

τᾰλαιπωρ-έω G5003 V-AMA-2P (1×)

to endure hardship, suffer distress, live in misery; to experience

wretchedness
This verb describes experiencing or enduring severe hardship and distress. In James 4:9, it appears in an urgent call to repentance: 'Be wretched, mourn, and weep.' The term carries both the objective reality of distress and the subjective experience of misery. Classical usage included hard labor and suffering through trials. Spanish 'afligíos' (afflict yourselves) and German 'sich elend fühlen' (feel miserable) both capture the intensity. James calls for recognition of one's spiritual wretchedness—genuine grief over sin.

(1×) Found in Jas 4:9 as an imperative calling sinners to recognize their miserable spiritual state: 'Be wretched, mourn, and weep.' The command demands honest acknowledgment of one's condition before God. The verb emphasizes the experiential dimension—not just that one is wretched, but that one must feel and acknowledge that wretchedness. Cross-linguistic evidence confirms the call to experience genuine distress over sin. PAIN AND SUFFERING
en: Be-wretched | es: afligíos | fr: ταλαιπωρήσατε | de: sich-elend-fuehlen Jas 4:9

τᾰλαιπωρ-ία G5004 N-DFP (2×)
misery, wretchedness, distress
This noun describes hard labor, hardship, or the resulting misery and wretchedness. Romans 3:16 quotes Isaiah, noting that destruction and misery mark the paths of the wicked. James 5:1 commands the rich to weep and wail for the miseries coming upon them in judgment. The term conveys the wretchedness that comes from sin and oppression.

(2×) Denotes misery, wretchedness, or distress, often resulting from hard labor, oppression, or divine judgment. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'miseria/miserias,' French 'misère,' German 'Elend') emphasize the wretchedness. Paul uses this in Rom 3:16 (citing Isaiah) to characterize the trail of destruction left by the wicked, while James employs it to pronounce coming judgment on oppressive wealthy landowners (5:1), showing misery as both consequence and judgment for unrighteousness. LABOR AND TOIL
en: miseries, misery | es: miseria, miserias | fr: Elend, misère | de: Elend Rom 3:16; Jas 5:1

τᾰλαίπωρος G5005 Adj-NMS (2×)
wretched, miserable, pitiable
This adjective describes someone who is wretched, miserable, or pitiable due to suffering or distress. Romans 7:24 has Paul cry out, 'Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this body of death?' Revelation 3:17 declares the Laodicean church wretched, pitiable, poor, blind, and naked despite their self-perception of wealth. The term emphasizes a state deserving compassion.

(2×) Describes someone who is wretched, miserable, or pitiable, in a condition of suffering or spiritual poverty that evokes compassion or calls for deliverance. The cross-lingual renderings (Spanish 'Miserable/miserable,' French 'malheureux/misérable,' German 'elend') capture the wretchedness. Paul applies this to himself in his struggle with indwelling sin (Rom 7:24), while Christ uses it to expose the Laodiceans' spiritual poverty despite material prosperity (Rev 3:17), showing both self-aware wretchedness and self-deceived wretchedness. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS
en: Wretched, wretched | es: Miserable, miserable | fr: malheureux, misérable | de: elend Rom 7:24; Rev 3:17

τᾰλαντ-ιαῖος G5006 Adj-NFS (1×)
weighing a talent; of talent-weight (approximately 75-100 pounds)
This rare adjective describes something weighing a talent, the largest unit of weight in the ancient world (roughly 75-100 pounds). Revelation 16:21 uses it to describe massive hailstones falling from heaven in divine judgment. The sheer weight—each stone about the weight of a person—emphasizes the catastrophic nature of the plague. Classical usage could describe valuable items, military projectiles, or persons of wealth. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering as 'talent-weight' preserves the original measurement reference.

(1×) Appears only in Rev 16:21 describing apocalyptic hailstones of devastating weight: 'great hail, about a talent in weight.' Each stone weighs approximately what a man weighs, emphasizing the supernatural severity of judgment. Cross-linguistic evidence universally preserves the talent measurement, recognizing this as a specific weight reference crucial to understanding the catastrophic scale of the plague. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-talent-weight | es: de-un-talento | fr: Talent-schwer | de: Talent-schwer Rev 16:21

τᾰλαντ-ον G5007 N-ANP (14×)
Talent — a large unit of weight and monetary value, used in Jesus' parables for immense sums Originally denoting a balance or pair of scales in classical Greek, talanton came to signify the heaviest standard unit of weight in the ancient Near East, and by extension a monetary sum of enormous value — roughly 6,000 denarii or twenty years' wages for a common laborer. In the New Testament, it appears exclusively in Jesus' parables. The unforgiving servant owes an absurdly vast 10,000 talents (Matt 18:24), while the parable of the talents distributes five, two, and one talent to servants according to their ability (Matt 25:15-28). The word's parabolic context gives it a metaphorical dimension: talents represent entrusted gifts, opportunities, or responsibilities. The modern English sense of 'talent' as an innate ability descends directly from this parable's influence.

(14×) A large unit of monetary weight representing an immense sum, used in the New Testament exclusively within Jesus' parables to depict vast entrustment and accountability. In Matt 18:24, the 10,000-talent debt dramatizes the incalculable scale of divine forgiveness; in Matt 25:15-28, talents distributed to servants illustrate stewardship of God-given resources. Cross-linguistic evidence (eng: talent, spa: talento, fra: talent, deu: Talent) shows uniform borrowing of the Greek term as a loanword. The word's parabolic function has shaped its meaning in modern European languages, where 'talent' now denotes innate ability. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: talent, talents | es: talento, talentos | fr: talent | de: Talent Matt 18:24; Matt 25:15; Matt 25:16; Matt 25:20

G5008 N-VFS (1×)
Talitha, Aramaic word meaning 'little girl' or 'lamb'; used by Jesus in Mark 5:41
This is not a Greek word but an Aramaic term meaning 'little girl' or 'lamb' (from Hebrew ṭāleh). Jesus uses it when raising Jairus' daughter, saying 'Talitha koum' (Little girl, arise). Mark preserves the original Aramaic, then translates it, giving readers both the intimate sound of Jesus' voice and its meaning. All translations simply transliterate 'Talitha,' preserving the tenderness of the moment. This is linguistic witness to Jesus' actual words, an echo of his compassionate address to the child.

(1×) Found only in Mark 5:41 in Jesus' Aramaic command to the dead girl: 'Talitha koum!' (Little girl, I say to you, arise!). Mark preserves the Aramaic, then provides Greek translation. Universal transliteration across languages shows recognition that this is Jesus' actual word, not to be replaced. The Aramaic preserves both tenderness (little girl/lamb) and the historical moment of the miracle. LAMBS AND SHEEP
en: Talitha | es: Talitha | fr: Talitha | de: Talitha Mark 5:41

τᾰμῐ-εῖον G5009 N-NNS (4×)
Inner room, storeroom, private chamber; an enclosed space away from public view.
Tameion originally meant a treasury or storehouse, but by the Koine period it had broadened to denote any private inner room. Jesus uses it in two contrasting ways: in Matthew 6:6 it is the secret prayer closet where one meets God away from public eyes, while in Matthew 24:26 it is the hidden chamber where false messiahs might lurk. Luke 12:3 echoes this hiddenness — what is whispered in inner rooms will be proclaimed from rooftops. Luke 12:24 shifts to the older 'storehouse' meaning for ravens that have no pantry. Spanish distinguishes 'aposento' (private chamber) from 'cuartos interiores' (inner rooms), nicely reflecting this range.

(4×) Inner room, private chamber, storeroom — a secluded enclosed space, whether used for private devotion, secretive activity, or storage. In Matthew 6:6, Jesus tells disciples to pray in their tameion, emphasizing intimacy and hiddenness before God. Matthew 24:26 and Luke 12:3 exploit the same sense of concealment. Luke 12:24 reverts to the older meaning of a storehouse or granary. The Spanish distinction between 'aposento' (a personal chamber) and 'cuartos interiores' (hidden inner rooms) captures the dual flavor, while French 'chambre' covers the residential dimension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: a-storeroom, inner-rooms, room | es: aposento, aposentos, cuartos-interiores | fr: chambre | de: ταμείοις, ταμεῖον, ταμεῖόν Matt 6:6; Matt 24:26; Luke 12:3; Luke 12:24

τάξις G5010 N-AFS (9×)

Order, arrangement; a fixed succession or established pattern, especially of priestly or institutional rank.

Taxis conveys the idea of an established arrangement or appointed order. In classical Greek it ranged from military formations to civic ranks, but the New Testament narrows its usage to two main spheres: liturgical priestly order and congregational propriety. Zechariah serves according to the taxis of his priestly division (Luke 1:8), Paul insists that everything in worship be done decently and in taxis (1 Cor 14:40), and Hebrews repeatedly identifies Christ as a priest 'according to the order of Melchizedek' (Heb 5:6, 10; 6:20; 7:11, 17). The Spanish orden, French ordre, and German Ordnung all preserve this dual sense of rank and proper arrangement.

order (9×) A fixed arrangement, established order, or appointed succession. In the NT this word carries two related applications: (a) the priestly order or rank to which one belongs, as in the Aaronic division of Zechariah (Luke 1:8) and supremely the eternal priesthood 'according to the order of Melchizedek' (Heb 5:6, 10; 6:20; 7:11, 17); and (b) good order or proper arrangement in communal life, as when Paul commends the Colossians' taxis and firmness (Col 2:5) and commands orderly worship (1 Cor 14:40). The multilingual glosses (spa orden, fra ordre, deu Ordnung) uniformly capture both institutional rank and structured propriety under a single lexical concept. ORDER ARRANGEMENT

en: order | es: orden | fr: ordre | de: Ordnung, τάξει Luke 1:8; 1Cor 14:40; Col 2:5; Heb 5:6; Heb 5:10

ταπεινός G5011 Adj-DMP (8×)

Lowly, humble; of low social standing or modest disposition, often used of those God lifts up.

An adjective describing someone who is low in status, modest in self-assessment, or socially insignificant. In the Magnificat, Mary celebrates that God has exalted the lowly (Luke 1:52), turning worldly hierarchies upside down. Jesus himself claims to be 'gentle and lowly in heart' (Matt 11:29), making the word a Christological marker. Paul urges believers not to be haughty but to associate with the lowly (Rom 12:16), and James promises that the 'lowly brother' will be exalted (Jas 1:9). The Spanish 'humilde' and French 'humble' both capture the social and spiritual dimensions simultaneously.

lowly, humble (in status or disposition) (8×) Lowly or humble in social position or inner disposition—describing either external circumstance (low status, poverty) or a chosen posture of meekness before God. Jesus applies it to himself (Matt 11:29, 'I am gentle and lowly in heart'), establishing humility as a virtue rather than a deficiency. Mary's song celebrates God scattering the proud and exalting the lowly (Luke 1:52), while Paul counsels solidarity with humble people rather than aspiring to prominence (Rom 12:16). The German gloss 'niedrig' emphasizes the spatial metaphor of 'low,' preserving the word's original sense of physical lowness extended to social and spiritual reality. HUMILITY AND MEEKNESS

en: humble, lowly, to-humble | es: a-humildes, humilde, humildes | fr: humble, niedrig | de: niedrig, ταπεινούς, ταπεινὸς Matt 11:29; Luke 1:52; Rom 12:16; 2Cor 7:6; 2Cor 10:1

ταπεινο-φροσύνη G5012 N-DFS (8×)

Humility, lowliness of mind; the disposition of putting others above oneself, valued in NT ethics as a core Christian virtue.

In classical Greek, tapeinophrosyne carried a negative connotation of servility or mean-spiritedness, but the New Testament completely transforms it into a prized virtue. Paul urges believers to adopt humility in their relationships (Eph 4:2, Phil 2:3), modeling the self-emptying attitude of Christ himself. The Spanish 'humildad' and German 'Demut' both capture this revalued sense. In Colossians 2:18, Paul warns against a counterfeit version – a false humility tied to angel worship – showing that even this virtue can be distorted.

1. humility (7×) The genuine virtue of humility – a lowliness of mind that esteems others as more important than oneself. Paul lists it alongside gentleness and patience as essential for church unity (Eph 4:2). In Phil 2:3 it is grounded in the incarnational example of Christ. The Spanish 'humildad' and German 'Demut' both reflect this positive ethical sense. Col 2:18 and 2:23 show its misuse: a performative, self-imposed humility tied to ascetic practices and angel veneration. HUMILITY LOWLINESS

en: humility | es: humildad, humillación | fr: humilité, ταπεινοφροσύνην, ταπεινοφροσύνης | de: Demut, ταπεινοφροσύνης Acts 20:19; Eph 4:2; Phil 2:3; Col 2:18; Col 2:23

2. humble minded (1×) An adjectival extension meaning 'humble-minded' or 'of a lowly disposition,' describing the character quality as an attribute of persons rather than an abstract noun. In 1 Peter 3:8, believers are exhorted to be tapeinophrones – united in spirit and humble-minded toward one another. The Spanish 'humildes' captures this shift from abstract noun to personal quality. HUMILITY AND MEEKNESS en: humble-minded | es: humildes | fr: ταπεινόφρονες | de: Demut 1Pet 3:8

ταπειν-όω G5013 V-ASA-3S (14×)

To humble, bring low, abase; to be humbled (passive); to humble oneself in voluntary self-abasement before God.

Tapeinoo carries the full arc of biblical reversal: what goes up will be brought down, and what bows low will be lifted high. Jesus' repeated paradox — 'whoever humbles himself will be exalted, and whoever exalts himself will be humbled' (Matt 23:12; Luke 14:11; 18:14) — uses both the active and passive voices of this single verb to express the divine economy of inversion. Spanish humillar, French humilier, and German erniedrigen all mirror the semantic breadth, covering both the forced abasement of the proud and the voluntary lowering of the humble. Paul claims to have 'humbled himself' by preaching the gospel free of charge (2 Cor 11:7; 12:21), and Phil 2:8 declares that Christ 'humbled himself, becoming obedient to the point of death.' James and Peter both issue the imperative: 'Humble yourselves before the Lord' (Jas 4:10; 1 Pet 5:6) — not degradation but the posture that precedes divine exaltation.

1. to humble, bring low (active/transitive) (7×) To humble or bring low (active/transitive) — actively lowering someone's status, pride, or position, whether by divine action, social circumstance, or deliberate choice. Jesus teaches that 'whoever humbles himself like this child' will be greatest in the kingdom (Matt 18:4), and the repeated formula 'whoever exalts himself will be humbled' (Matt 23:12; Luke 14:11; 18:14) uses this sense as one pole of the reversal. Paul 'humbled himself' by working with his hands (2 Cor 11:7). Phil 2:8 climaxes: Christ 'humbled himself, becoming obedient to death.' Spanish humillo/humillando and German erniedrigte capture the transitive force. HUMILITY AND LOWERING en: he-humbled, humbling, might-humble | es: humillando, humillare, humille | fr: humilier, ἐταπείνωσεν | de: erniedrigen, erniedrigt Matt 18:4; Matt 23:12; Luke 14:11; Luke 18:14; 2Cor 11:7

2. to be humbled, be brought low (passive) (5×) To be humbled or brought low (passive) — experiencing humiliation or reduction at another's hand or by divine decree. The prophetic vision that 'every mountain shall be brought low' (Luke 3:5, citing Isa 40:4) uses the passive future, and the repeated warning that 'the one who exalts himself will be humbled' (Matt 23:12; Luke 14:11; 18:14) presents divine passive reversal. Paul knows how 'to be brought low' (Phil 4:12), placing this alongside hunger and want. Spanish sera humillado, French sera abaisse, and German wird erniedrigt werden all employ passive constructions, distinguishing the experience of being humbled from the act of humbling. HUMILITY AND LOWERING

en: to-be-humbled, will-be-brought-low, will-be-humbled | es: ser-humillado, será-humillado, será-rebajada | fr: humilier, ταπεινοῦσθαι | de: erniedrigen, erniedrigt Matt 23:12; Luke 3:5; Luke 14:11; Luke 18:14; Phil 4:12

3. to humble oneself (middle/reflexive) (2×) To humble oneself (middle/reflexive) — voluntary self-abasement before God as a spiritual discipline and posture of faith. James commands: 'Humble yourselves before the Lord, and he will exalt you' (Jas 4:10), and Peter echoes: 'Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God' (1 Pet 5:6). The aorist passive imperative (tapeinothete) functions with reflexive force in both passages. Spanish humillaos, French humiliez-vous, and German demutigt euch all use reflexive or middle-voice constructions, recognizing that this is not imposed degradation but chosen submission — the posture that, in biblical logic, precedes exaltation. HUMILITY AND LOWERING

en: Humble-yourselves | es: Humillaos, humillaos | fr: Ταπεινώθητε, ταπεινώθητε | de: erniedrigen Jas 4:10; 1Pet 5:6

τᾰπείν-ωσις G5014 N-DFS (4×)

Humiliation, low estate, abasement; the condition of being brought low or living in humble circumstances.

Tapeinosis denotes the state or experience of being low — whether social, physical, or spiritual. Mary's Magnificat celebrates God looking upon her 'low estate' (Luke 1:48), turning humility into the occasion for divine favor. In Acts 8:33, the term appears in the Isaianic Servant Song quoted by Philip: Christ's 'humiliation' involved the denial of justice. Philippians 3:21 contrasts our 'body of humiliation' with Christ's glorious body, while James 1:10 warns the rich that their exaltation will fade into lowliness. Spanish splits between 'humildad' (a virtue) and 'humillación' (a condition imposed), mirroring a distinction the Greek leaves flexible.

(4×) Humiliation, low estate, abasement — the condition of being in a lowly state, whether experienced as divine grace, unjust suffering, or mortal frailty. Luke 1:48 celebrates God's gracious attention to Mary's humble circumstances. Acts 8:33 (quoting Isaiah 53:8) describes the Messiah's judicial humiliation. Philippians 3:21 uses it for the lowly condition of the present mortal body. James 1:10 applies it to the inevitable humbling of the wealthy. The Spanish evidence — 'humildad' versus 'humillación' — hints at the range from voluntary humility to externally imposed degradation, though the Greek encompasses both under one term. HUMILITY LOWLINESS

en: humiliation, lowliness | es: humildad, humillación | fr: humiliation, ταπεινώσει, ταπεινώσεως | de: Erniedrigung, ταπείνωσιν, ταπεινώσει Luke 1:48; Acts 8:33; Phil 3:21; Jas 1:10

τᾰράσσω G5015 V-ASP-2P (18×)

To trouble, agitate, or throw into turmoil — of the heart, of communities, or of water physically stirred Tarasso captures the full spectrum of disturbance, from the trembling of a frightened heart to the upheaval of an entire city. When Herod heard of the newborn king, he 'was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him' (Matt 2:3). Jesus himself uses the word to comfort his disciples: 'Let not your hearts be troubled' (John 14:1,27). In Acts, the word describes the social chaos caused by false teachers who 'trouble' the believers (Acts 15:24; Gal 1:7; 5:10). At its most concrete, it depicts the physical stirring of the pool at Bethesda (John 5:4,7). Spanish 'turbado/perturbaron' and French 'troubler' mirror this range precisely.

1. be emotionally troubled (11×) To experience inner turmoil, fright, or emotional distress. Zechariah was troubled at the angel's appearance (Luke 1:12), the disciples were terrified seeing Jesus walk on water (Matt 14:26; Mark 6:50), and Jesus commands his followers not to let their hearts be troubled (John 14:1,27). The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'turbado,' French 'troubler,' German 'beunruhigen' — all foreground this emotional agitation. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: be-troubled, is-troubled, let-be-troubled | es: está-turbada, fue-turbado, os-turbéis | fr: beunruhigen, troubler | de: beunruhigen, τεταραγμένοι, ἐταράχθη Matt 2:3; Matt 14:26; Mark 6:50; Luke 1:12; Luke 24:38

2. cause trouble to others (5×) To cause trouble, disturbance, or confusion among other people, often through false teaching or social upheaval. In Acts 15:24 the Jerusalem council acknowledges that certain men 'troubled' the Gentile believers with demands about circumcision. Paul warns the Galatians about those who 'trouble' them by perverting the gospel (Gal 1:7; 5:10). The Spanish 'perturbaron' captures the active, causative force well. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: troubled, troubling | es: Perturbaron, perturbando, perturbaron | fr: beunruhigen, troubler | de: beunruhigen, ταράσσοντες, ἐτάραξαν Acts 15:24; Acts 17:8; Acts 17:13; Gal 1:7; Gal 5:10

3. stir up water physically (2×) To stir up or agitate water physically. At the pool of Bethesda, an angel periodically stirred the water (John 5:4), and the paralyzed man explains he has no one to put him into the pool when the water 'is stirred' (John 5:7). This concrete, physical sense preserves the word's oldest meaning from Homer — Poseidon troubling the sea. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: is-stirred, was-stirring | es: agitaba, sea-agitada | fr: troubler | de: beunruhigen John 5:4; John 5:7

τᾰρᾰχή G5016 N-AFS (1×)

disturbance, upheaval, disorder; confusion or agitation of water, mind, or circumstances

This noun describes disturbance or upheaval in various contexts: physical (water stirring), mental (confusion), or social (tumult). In John 5:4, it refers to the troubling or stirring of the pool at Bethesda (though this verse is textually disputed). Classical usage ranged from physiological disturbance to political turmoil to military confusion. The term implies disruption of normal order. French 'trouble' and German 'Unruhe' both capture the sense of agitation and disorder.

(1×) Appears in John 5:4 (textually uncertain) describing the stirring or disturbance of the pool's water by an angel. The term fits the context of physical agitation or movement of water. Classical background includes various types of upheaval—medical, mental, military—but here the reference is to visible disturbance of water that signaled healing opportunity. Cross-linguistic evidence confirms the sense of agitation or stirring. TUMULT AND UPROAR

en: stirring | es: agitación | fr: trouble | de: Unruhe John 5:4

τάρᾰχος G5017 N-NMS (2×)

disturbance, commotion, uproar

This noun describes confusion, disturbance, or commotion. Acts 12:18 notes there was no small disturbance among the soldiers when they discovered Peter had escaped. Acts 19:23 introduces the account of the Ephesian riot by noting there arose no small disturbance about the Way. The term emphasizes disorder and agitation, often with legal or military implications.

(2×) Denotes disturbance, commotion, or tumult, particularly confusion or agitation among groups of people that threatens order. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'alboroto,' French 'trouble') captures the disruptive nature. Luke uses this in Acts for the confusion among soldiers after Peter's miraculous prison escape (12:18) and to introduce the major Ephesian riot triggered by the gospel's economic impact (19:23), both instances where Christian witness creates significant public disturbance. TUMULT AND UPROAR

en: disturbance | es: alboroto | fr: trouble | de: τάραχος Acts 12:18; Acts 19:23

Ταρσεύς G5018 N-NMS (2×)
of Tarsus, a native or inhabitant of Tarsus
This ethnic adjective identifies someone as coming from Tarsus, the capital of Cilicia in Asia Minor, Paul's hometown. Acts 9:11 has the Lord direct Ananias to ask for Saul of Tarsus on Straight Street. In Acts 21:39, Paul identifies himself to the Roman tribune as a Jew from Tarsus in Cilicia, a citizen of no obscure city. Paul's Tarsian identity shaped his multilingual, multicultural formation.

(2×) Designates someone as a native or inhabitant of Tarsus, the important commercial and cultural center in Cilicia. The transliterations preserve the Greek adjectival form. Both Acts occurrences identify Paul through his hometown: God directs Ananias to 'Saul of Tarsus' (9:11), and Paul introduces himself to the tribune as a Tarsian Jew (21:39). This identity connected Paul to a cosmopolitan Greek city, Roman provincial capital, and center of Stoic philosophy, equipping him uniquely for cross-cultural gospel ministry. PERSONAL NAMES en: of-Tarsos | es: Tarsense, de-Tarso | fr: Tarsien | de: Ταρσέα, Ταρσεὺς Acts 9:11; Acts 21:39

ταρσ-ός G5019 N-DFS (3×)
Tarsus, a prominent city in Cilicia (southeast Asia Minor), known as Paul's birthplace Tarsus was a major cultural and commercial center in the Roman province of Cilicia, located in what is now southern Turkey. The city was renowned for its university and philosophical schools, rivaling Athens and Alexandria. Paul identifies himself as a citizen of this "no mean city" (Acts 21:39), highlighting both his Greek education and Roman citizenship. The name appears in contexts marking Paul's origins and movements during his early ministry.

(3×) The geographical name Tarsus appears three times, always in reference to Paul's connection with the city. Acts 9:30 records the disciples sending Paul to Tarsus for safety after his conversion, Acts 11:25 shows Barnabas going there to find Paul, and Acts 22:3 contains Paul's own testimony that he was born there. The consistent transliteration across languages (Spanish Tarso/Tarsós, French Tarse, German retention of Greek form) reflects the proper noun status of this significant urban center. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Tarsos | es: Tarso, Tarsós | fr: Tarse | de: Ταρσόν, Ταρσὸν, Ταρσῷ Acts 9:30; Acts 11:25; Acts 22:3

Ταρτᾰρ-όω G5020 V-APA-NMS (1×)
to cast into Tartarus; to consign to the deepest abyss of the underworld
This rare verb means to throw into Tartarus, the deepest pit of the Greek underworld, deeper than Hades itself. Peter uses it once (2 Pet 2:4) to describe God's judgment on sinning angels, casting them into gloomy chains in the abyss. The term draws on Greek mythology but applies it to biblical angelology. No language translates it simply as 'cast down'—most transliterate or explain 'cast into Tartarus,' recognizing the specific theological geography involved. This is consignment to the lowest prison of the cosmos.

(1×) Used only in 2 Pet 2:4 describing God's judgment on angels who sinned: 'God did not spare angels when they sinned, but cast them into Tartarus.' The verb specifies the location of their imprisonment—not merely 'down' but into the deepest abyss. Peter borrows Greek mythological terminology to describe the severity and depth of angelic confinement. Cross-linguistic evidence preserves the proper noun, acknowledging this specific cosmic location. ABYSS AND DEEP en: having-cast-into-Tartarus | es: habiendo-arrojado-al-Tártaro | fr: ταρταρώσας | de: in-den-Tartarus-werfen 2Pet 2:4

τάσσω G5021 V-AIM-3S (9×)
To arrange, appoint, assign to a position or task; in the middle voice, to devote oneself to a service.
Rooted in the military language of marshalling troops into formation, this verb carries into the New Testament the broader sense of placing someone or something into an appointed order. A centurion describes himself as 'set under authority' (Matt 8:9; Luke 7:8), and the Jerusalem council 'appointed' delegates (Acts 15:2). The middle voice yields a reflexive nuance: the household of Stephanas 'devoted themselves' to serving the saints (1 Cor 16:15). Spanish 'designar' and 'dedicarse' mirror this active-middle distinction well. The theological weight appears in Acts 13:48 where those 'appointed' to eternal life believed.

1. appoint, arrange, designate (8×) To appoint, assign, or arrange someone in a role, position, or task by authoritative decision. Includes military subordination (Matt 8:9, Luke 7:8), official delegation (Acts 15:2), and divine appointment (Acts 13:48, where those 'ordained' to eternal life believed). German 'einordnen' captures the ordering dimension. The passive 'being appointed' in Acts 22:10 and 28:23 reflects arrangements made for Paul by others or by God. COMMANDING AND ORDERING en: Having-appointed, being-appointed, being-set | es: Habiendo-señalado, designó, dispusieron | fr: arranger, ordonner | de: einordnen, Ταξάμενοι, τέταχταί Matt 8:9; Matt 28:16; Luke 7:8; Acts 13:48; Acts 15:2

2. devote oneself to (1×) Middle voice: to devote or dedicate oneself to a task or service. In 1 Cor 16:15 the household of Stephanas 'arranged themselves for'—that is, voluntarily committed themselves to—the ministry of the saints. Spanish 'se dedicaron' precisely mirrors the reflexive Greek middle. This sense preserves the root idea of ordered arrangement but turns it inward as a self-imposed commitment. COMMANDING AND ORDERING
en: they-devoted | es: se-dedicaron | fr: arranger | de: einordnen 1Cor 16:15

ταῦρος G5022 N-AMP (4×)
Bull, ox; a mature male bovine, especially as a sacrificial animal.
Tauros is the standard Greek word for a bull, carrying deep resonances in both pagan and biblical sacrificial systems. In Matthew 22:4, a king's feast features slaughtered bulls and fattened cattle — an image of lavish celebration. Acts 14:13 records the priest of Zeus bringing bulls to sacrifice to Paul and Barnabas, a dramatic collision of pagan cult with apostolic mission. Hebrews 9:13 and 10:4 invoke the Levitical sacrificial system: the blood of bulls (paired with goats) can never truly remove sin, setting up the superiority of Christ's once-for-all offering. French and German both use 'Stiere/taureau,' cognate with the Greek, tracing this word across Indo-European cultures.

(4×) Bull, ox — a mature male bovine, particularly in the context of sacrifice or feasting. Matthew 22:4 features bulls as banquet provisions in a royal parable. Acts 14:13 presents pagan sacrifice at Lystra, where the priest of Zeus brings bulls and garlands. Hebrews 9:13 and 10:4 invoke the Levitical system to argue that bull-blood is inadequate for true atonement. The word is Indo-European (Latin taurus, German 'Stiere'), and the multilingual evidence — Spanish 'toros,' French 'taureau' — confirms a single, stable referent across all four occurrences, with the sacrificial context dominant in three of four uses. CATTLE AND OXEN
en: bulls, of-bulls, oxen | es: de-toros, toros | fr: Stiere, taureau | de: Stiere, ταύρους, ταῦροί Matt 22:4; Acts 14:13; Heb 9:13; Heb 10:4

οὗτος G5023 V-FIA-3S (1×)
these things will follow; from the demonstrative 'this/these', future form indicating succession
This is the future tense of a verb formed from the demonstrative pronoun 'this/these', meaning 'will follow' or 'will accompany.' In Mark 16:17, Jesus promises that certain signs will accompany or follow those who believe. The emphasis is on sequential accompaniment —these signs come after and alongside faith. The cross-linguistic rendering as 'follow' or 'will follow' confirms the sequential and accompanying nature of the promised signs.

(1×) Found in Mark 16:17 in Jesus' promise: 'These signs will accompany those who believe.' The future verb indicates that supernatural signs will follow believers as authentication of the gospel message.

The demonstrative 'these' links to specific signs listed afterward (casting out demons, speaking in tongues, etc.). Cross-linguistic evidence consistently renders this as 'follow' or 'accompany,' emphasizing the sequential and validating nature of the signs. FOLLOWING AND DISCIPLESHIP

en: will-follow | es: seguirán | fr: suivre | de: nachfolgen Mark 16:17

οὗτος G5024

this, these (feminine forms); demonstrative pronoun pointing to nearby persons or things

These are the feminine forms of the common demonstrative pronoun οὗτος, meaning 'this' or 'these.' Greek carefully distinguished gender, number, and case in demonstratives, so αὕτη (nominative feminine singular), ταύτης (genitive feminine singular), and related forms specifically pointed to feminine nouns. The demonstrative arose from reduplication of the article with an inserted -υ-, creating a strong deictic pointer to something present or just mentioned. In discourse, it marked items close at hand physically or recently mentioned in speech. Biblical writers used it constantly to refer back to previously mentioned women, cities, concepts, or abstract feminine nouns.

οὗτος G5025

these (feminine plural dative/genitive); feminine forms of 'these' in oblique cases

These are feminine plural dative and genitive forms of the demonstrative οὗτος: ταύταις (dative plural, 'to/for these') and τούτων (genitive plural, 'of these'). Greek's elaborate case system required distinct forms for each combination of gender, number, and grammatical function. The dative indicated indirect objects or means ('by these things'), while the genitive marked possession or relationship ('of these women'). Biblical writers used these forms to maintain clear reference to feminine plural nouns mentioned earlier in discourse, ensuring readers could track which entities were being discussed even in complex sentences with multiple referents.

οὗτος G5026

this (feminine singular); feminine dative, genitive, and accusative forms of the demonstrative 'this'

These are oblique case forms of the feminine singular demonstrative: ταύτῃ (dative, 'to/for this'), ταύτης (genitive, 'of this'), and ταύτην (accusative, 'this' as direct object). Each form served specific grammatical functions while maintaining reference to a feminine singular noun. The dative marked indirect objects, location, or means; the genitive indicated possession or relationship; the accusative signaled direct objects. In biblical narrative and discourse, these forms were essential for maintaining coherent reference across clauses and sentences. They allowed writers to point back to feminine nouns—women, cities, concepts—without repeating the noun itself, creating more elegant and efficient Greek prose.

ταφ-ή G5027 N-AFS (1×)

burial; the act or provision for interring the dead

This noun refers to burial—the act, the custom, or the provision made for interring the dead. In Matthew 27:7, the chief priests use Judas' blood money to buy the potter's field 'as a burial place for strangers.' The term can denote the act of burial, burial customs, or burial grounds. Classical usage included payment for burial services. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering as 'burial' or 'sepulture' reflects the term's association with respectful disposal of the dead.

(1×) Appears in Matt 27:7 where the chief priests buy a field 'for the burial of strangers.' The context emphasizes provision—this field will serve as a cemetery for foreigners who died in Jerusalem. Classical background includes burial fees and burial customs, but here the focus is on designated burial ground. Cross-linguistic unanimity ('burial,' 'sepultura,' 'sépulture') confirms this as the act or place of interment. BURIAL INTERMENT en: burial | es: sepultura | fr: sépulture | de: ταφὴν Matt 27:7

τάφος G5028 N-AMS (7×)

A tomb, grave, or burial place; a sepulchre cut from rock where the dead are interred.

Refers to a burial site — typically a rock-hewn chamber — where a body is placed after death. In the Gospels it appears most prominently in the Passion narrative for the tomb of Jesus: the new tomb where Joseph of Arimathea lays the body (Matt 27:61), sealed with a stone and guarded by soldiers (Matt 27:64, 66). Jesus also uses the word in his prophetic critique of the scribes and Pharisees, calling them 'whitewashed tombs' — beautiful on the outside but full of dead bones within (Matt 23:27, 29). The multilingual uniformity is striking: Spanish 'sepulcro,' French 'tombeau,' German 'Grab' — every tradition isolates the same concrete referent.

tomb, grave, burial place (7×) A grave, tomb, or rock-cut sepulchre where the dead are laid to rest. The multilingual evidence is remarkably uniform — Spanish 'sepulcro,' French 'tombeau,' German 'Grab' — all pointing to the same concrete burial site. In Matt 23:27, 29 Jesus uses the image of whitewashed tombs as a devastating metaphor for outward religious show concealing inner corruption. In Matt 27:61–66 it denotes the specific tomb of Jesus, sealed and guarded, which becomes the site of the resurrection discovery. TOMBS AND BURIAL

en: grave, tomb, tombs | es: a-sepulcros, sepulcro, sepulcros | fr: tombeau | de: Grab, τάφοις, τάφον Matt 23:27; Matt 23:29; Matt 27:61; Matt 27:64; Matt 27:66

τάχα G5029 Adv (2×)

perhaps, possibly, maybe, quickly

This adverb has two meanings: perhaps (expressing possibility) or quickly (expressing swiftness). Romans 5:7 suggests that perhaps for a good person someone might dare to die. Philemon 15 speculates that perhaps Onesimus was separated from Philemon so he might have him back forever. In both cases, Paul uses this to soften assertions with appropriate tentativeness.

(2×) Primarily means 'perhaps' or 'possibly,' expressing contingency or probability rather than certainty, though it can also mean 'quickly' in some contexts. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'quizás,' French 'peut-être,' German 'vielleicht') support the 'perhaps' meaning for both NT uses. Paul employs this to express measured possibility: perhaps someone might die for a good person (Rom 5:7), and perhaps divine providence orchestrated Onesimus's separation and return (Phlm 15), showing appropriate epistemic humility about human motivations and divine purposes. HAPPENING AND CHANCE

en: perhaps | es: quizás | fr: peut-être, vielleicht | de: vielleicht Rom 5:7; Phlm 1:15

τάχύς G5030 Adv (10×)

Quickly, hastily, soon — adverb of rapidity in time, urging promptness or warning against rash speed

The adverb ταχέως (tacheos) means 'quickly,' 'speedily,' or 'soon,' carrying both a positive sense of urgency and a cautionary sense of rashness depending on context. When Jesus tells the servant to go out 'quickly' into the streets (Luke 14:21), the word conveys divine urgency. But when Paul marvels that the Galatians are 'so quickly' deserting the gospel (Gal 1:6), the speed is alarming. Similarly, Paul warns Timothy not to lay hands on anyone 'hastily' (1 Tim 5:22). The same root yields the comparative tachion and superlative tachista. Spanish 'pronto/rápidamente' and French 'vite/rapidement' cover both nuances.

quickly, hastily, soon (10×) An adverb meaning 'quickly, speedily, soon,' used either positively for urgent promptness (Luke 14:21, the master's command to gather guests quickly; 2 Tim 4:9, Paul's plea for Timothy to come soon; Phil 2:19, hoping to send Timothy shortly) or negatively for alarming or reckless haste (Gal 1:6, deserting the gospel so quickly; 1 Tim 5:22, not laying hands on anyone too hastily; 2 Thess 2:2, not being quickly unsettled). Spanish 'pronto' and German 'schnell' both serve for the temporal urgency, while context alone disambiguates commendable speed from dangerous rashness. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: hastily, quickly | es: pronto, rápidamente | fr: rapidement, vite | de: schnell, ταχέως Luke 14:21; Luke 16:6; John 11:31; 1Cor 4:19; Gal 1:6

τᾰχῐνός G5031 Adj-AFS (2×)

swift, quick, speedy, imminent

This poetic adjective means swift, quick, or rapid. Second Peter 1:14 speaks of Peter knowing that the putting off of his earthly tent is swift or soon. Second Peter 2:1 warns of false teachers who will bring swift destruction upon themselves. The term emphasizes the rapidity or suddenness of an event, particularly judgment or death.

(2×) Describes something as swift, rapid, quick, or soon to occur, emphasizing the speed or imminence of an event. The cross-lingual renderings (Spanish 'pronto/rápida,' French forms, German 'schnell') capture the swiftness. Peter uses this for the imminent approach of his own death, which he knows is coming soon (2 Pet 1:14), and for the swift, sudden destruction awaiting false teachers (2:1), showing how certainty of timing can apply both to natural death and divine judgment. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: swift | es: pronto, rápida | fr: ταχινή, ταχινὴν | de: schnell 2Pet 1:14; 2Pet 2:1

τᾰχύς G5032 Adj-ANS-C (4×)

More quickly, faster; comparative adverb expressing greater speed or urgency.

The comparative form of tachys ('swift'), tachion means 'more quickly' or 'sooner.' Jesus tells Judas at the Last Supper, 'What you are going to do, do more quickly' (John 13:27) — a chilling acceleration of events. In John 20:4, the beloved disciple outruns Peter to the tomb, arriving 'faster.' The author of Hebrews uses it for hopeful urgency: pray so that 'I may be restored to you more quickly' (Heb 13:19), and notes Timothy's release so they may come 'sooner' (Heb 13:23). Spanish 'más rápido/más pronto' and German 'schneller' both preserve the comparative force faithfully.

(4×) More quickly, faster, sooner — the comparative form expressing increased speed or urgency relative to an expected pace. In John 13:27, Jesus presses Judas toward faster action with ominous intensity. John 20:4 describes a literal footrace to the empty tomb. Hebrews 13:19 and 13:23 use it for the writer's eager desire for speedy reunion with the community. The translations uniformly reflect the comparative: Spanish 'más pronto/más rápido,' French 'plus vite,' German 'schneller' — all confirming a straightforward comparative adverb with no need for multiple senses. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: faster, more-quickly, quickly | es: más-pronto, más-rápido | fr: plus-vite, schneller | de: schneller John 13:27; John 20:4; Heb 13:19; Heb 13:23

τᾰχύς G5033 Adj-ANP-S (1×)

as quickly as possible; with utmost speed (superlative adverb)

This is the superlative adverb meaning 'most quickly' or 'as quickly as possible.' In Acts 17:15, those escorting Paul give instructions that Silas and Timothy should come to him 'as quickly as possible.' The term emphasizes urgency and maximal haste. Classical usage described the swiftest runners or the fastest ships. The cross-linguistic evidence shows varied expressions of urgency: Spanish 'pronto' (soon), French 'le plus vite' (the fastest), German preserving the Greek form. All convey pressing need for speed.

(1×) Found in Acts 17:15 where Paul's escort receives orders for Silas and Timothy to join him 'with all speed' or 'as soon as possible.' The superlative form emphasizes the urgency of Paul's need for his co-workers. The context is Paul alone in Athens, desiring fellowship and support. Cross-linguistic renderings emphasize quickness (French 'the fastest,' Spanish 'soon'), confirming the command for maximum haste. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: quickly-as-possible | es: pronto | fr: le-plus-vite | de: τάχιστα Acts 17:15

τάχος G5034 N-DNS (8×)

Speed, haste, quickness; almost always in the dative phrase 'en tachei' meaning 'soon' or 'without delay.'

A noun meaning swiftness or rapidity, almost exclusively found in the New Testament in the adverbial dative phrase 'en tachei'—'with speed, quickly, soon.' This expression carries urgency: God will grant justice speedily (Luke 18:8), the angel tells Peter to rise quickly (Acts 12:7), and Paul promises that God will crush Satan under believers' feet soon (Rom 16:20). The Spanish 'prisa' (haste) and French 'rapidité' capture the urgency, while 'brevedad' (brevity) hints at the temporal sense of imminence rather than mere physical velocity.

haste, speed, quickness (8×) Quickness, speed, or haste, functioning as a temporal adverb via the prepositional phrase 'en tachei' (with speed, soon, without delay). The angel commands Peter to dress 'en tachei' during his prison escape (Acts 12:7), Jesus promises that God will vindicate his elect 'en tachei' (Luke 18:8), and Paul assures the Romans that Satan's defeat will come 'en tachei' (Rom 16:20). The Revelation passages (Rev 1:1; 22:6) use the same phrase for events that 'must soon take place,' giving the word an eschatological edge. All eight New Testament occurrences appear in this fixed dative construction. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: haste, quickness, speed | es: breve, brevedad., prisa | fr: rapidité, vitesse | de: Eile, τάχει Luke 18:8; Acts 12:7; Acts 22:18; Acts 25:4; Rom 16:20

τᾰχύς G5035 Adv (12×)

tachy – quickly, soon, without delay; an adverb of speed or temporal urgency

The adverb tachy ('quickly') conveys speed, promptness, or urgency in action. It appears across a range of New Testament settings. Jesus urges swift reconciliation: 'come to terms quickly with your accuser' (Matt 5:25). The angel at the tomb commands the women, 'go quickly and tell his disciples' (Matt 28:7-8). In the parable of the great banquet, the master orders his servant, 'go out quickly into the streets' (Luke 14:21). John's Gospel uses it with sharp narrative economy – Judas leaves the last supper after Jesus says 'what you are going to do, do quickly' (John 13:27). Revelation closes with the promise 'I am coming quickly' (Rev 2:16; 11:14; 22:7, 12, 20). Spanish pronto/rapidamente, French vite, and German schnell converge on one temporal-speed sense.

quickly (12×) An adverb meaning quickly, soon, or without delay, used for urgent commands (Matt 5:25; 28:7), parabolic urgency (Luke 14:21), dramatic narrative pace (John 13:27 of Judas), and the eschatological promise of Christ's return (Rev 22:7, 12, 20). Spanish pronto, French vite, and German schnell render it uniformly as a single speed adverb. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: Quickly, quickly | es: Pronto, pronto, pronto, | fr: rapidement, vite | de: schnell, Ταχὺ, ταχὺ Matt 5:25; Matt 28:7; Matt 28:8; Mark 9:39; Luke 15:22

τᾰχύς G5036 Adj-NMS (1×)

swift, quick; ready to act with speed

This adjective describes quickness or swiftness, whether physical speed or mental/emotional readiness. James 1:19 uses it ethically: 'be quick to hear, slow to speak, slow to anger.' Here 'quick' means ready, eager, prompt—not in a hurried sense but in a prepared, attentive sense. Classical usage described fast runners or swift ships, but also hasty or rash thinking. James applies it to disciplined receptivity—the readiness to listen actively.

(1×) Appears in Jas 1:19 in the ethical triad: 'be quick to hear, slow to speak, slow to anger.' The adjective emphasizes readiness and eagerness to listen, contrasting with restraint in speaking and anger. This isn't physical speed but moral posture—attentive receptivity. Cross-linguistic evidence ('quick,' 'pronto,' 'schnell') uniformly renders speed, but context demands understanding this as readiness and willingness to hear. SPEED AND QUICKNESS

en: quick | es: pronto | fr: ταχὺς | de: schnell Jas 1:19

τε G5037 Conj (215×)

And, both, also – an enclitic conjunction linking words, phrases, or clauses.

The particle te is one of Greek's subtle connective tools, functioning as an enclitic conjunction that binds elements together more closely than the common kai. It frequently appears in the paired construction te...kai ('both...and'), lending a sense of natural pairing or logical belonging. Luke and the author of Hebrews favor it heavily, giving Acts and Hebrews a distinctly literary register. Spanish reduces it to the simple conjunction 'y,' as do French 'et' and German 'und,' though these translations lose the nuance of the enclitic positioning that signals a tighter logical bond between the joined elements.

and, both, also (enclitic conjunction) (215×) An enclitic coordinating particle that connects words, phrases, or clauses, typically appearing postpositively after the first word of its clause. Most often functions as a simple connective 'and' or in the correlative pair te...kai ('both...and'), binding elements in closer logical unity than kai alone. Concentrated in Luke-Acts and Hebrews (Acts 5:19, 5:42; Heb 1:3), reflecting elevated Hellenistic prose style. Spanish 'y,' French 'et,' and German 'und' uniformly confirm its conjunctive function. ADDITIVE PARTICLES

en: and-, both- | es: *-y | fr: et- | de: und Acts 5:19; Acts 5:35; Acts 5:42; Acts 6:7; Acts 6:12

τεῖχος G5038 N-NNP (9×)

A city wall or fortification wall; a large defensive structure surrounding and protecting an urban settlement.

Teichos refers specifically to a large defensive wall encircling a city, distinct from toichos, which denotes an interior house wall. In the New Testament its occurrences divide between historical narrative and apocalyptic vision. Paul escapes Damascus by being lowered through an opening in the teichos (Acts 9:25; 2 Cor 11:33), Jericho's walls fall by faith (Heb 11:30), and the heavenly Jerusalem is described with a great, high wall possessing twelve gates and twelve foundations (Rev 21:12-19). The Spanish muro/muros and French muraille aptly convey the imposing, fortified character of this structure.

wall, city wall, fortification wall (9×) A city wall or fortification wall, the large defensive structure surrounding an urban area. Unlike toichos (G5109), which refers to the wall of a building, teichos always denotes a massive exterior fortification. Paul's dramatic escape from Damascus through a basket lowered from the wall illustrates its physical scale (Acts 9:25; 2 Cor 11:33). The fall of Jericho's walls by faith highlights its military significance (Heb 11:30). In Revelation, the wall of New Jerusalem is described with extraordinary dimensions and precious foundations (Rev 21:12, 14, 15, 17-19). Multilingual evidence (spa muro, fra muraille, deu Mauer, eng wall) consistently points to a fortified city wall. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-wall, wall, walls | es: muro, muro,, muros | fr: mur, muraille | de: Mauer, τείχους Acts 9:25; 2Cor 11:33; Heb 11:30; Rev 21:12; Rev 21:14

τεκμήρι-ον G5039 N-DNP (1×)

proof, evidence; convincing demonstration or sure sign

This noun denotes proof or convincing evidence, particularly of an argumentative or demonstrative kind. In Acts 1:3, Luke describes Jesus presenting himself alive 'by many convincing proofs' during the forty days after his resurrection. The term implies more than mere signs—these are evidences capable of producing certainty. Classical rhetoric distinguished this from circumstantial evidence or probability. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering as 'proofs' or 'evidence' confirms the epistemological weight: these were demonstrations sufficient to establish resurrection as fact.

(1×) Found in Acts 1:3 describing how Jesus proved his resurrection to the apostles: 'He presented himself alive after his suffering by many convincing proofs.' The term emphasizes the demonstrative, argumentative character of the evidence—not just appearances but sustained, verifiable proofs over forty days. Cross-linguistic evidence ('proofs,' 'pruebas,' 'évidence') confirms this as compelling demonstration establishing certainty. TESTING AND PROVING

en: proofs | es: pruebas | fr: évidence | de: τεκμηρίοις Acts 1:3

τεκν-ίον G5040 N-VNP (8×)

Little children; an affectionate diminutive address used by Jesus and the apostle John for disciples or believers.

A tender diminutive of 'teknon' (child), used as a warm term of address for spiritual dependents. Jesus uses it once at the Last Supper—'Little children, I am with you only a little longer' (John 13:33)—and the apostle John adopts it as his signature address throughout 1 John, writing 'little children' when urging believers to walk in righteousness and love. The Spanish 'hijitos' (dear little sons) and German 'Kindlein' both preserve the affectionate diminutive force that distinguishes this word from the more neutral 'tekna.'

little children (8×) An affectionate diminutive meaning 'little children' or 'dear children,' used as a vocative address conveying parental tenderness toward spiritual dependents. Jesus employs it uniquely at the Last Supper to address his disciples with intimacy before his departure (John 13:33). The apostle John then makes it his characteristic address to his congregations (1 John 2:1, 12, 28; 3:7, 18; 4:4; 5:21), echoing the Master's own tone. The Spanish 'hijitos' captures the warmth of the diminutive particularly well, as does the German 'Kindlein,' both conveying familial affection rather than mere age description. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: Little-children, little-children | es: Hijitos, hijitos | fr: Kindlein, petits-enfants | de: Kindlein John 13:33; 1John 2:1; 1John 2:12; 1John 2:28; 1John 3:7

τεκνογον-έω G5041 V-PNA (1×)

to bear children, give birth; to fulfill the maternal role

This verb means to bear children or fulfill the role of childbearing. In 1 Timothy 5:14, Paul advises younger widows to 'marry, bear children, manage their households.' The term focuses on the biological and social function of motherhood. Classical usage included both humans and animals bearing young. The cross-linguistic evidence shows direct rendering: Spanish 'tener hijos' (have children), German 'Kinder aufziehen' (raise children—though this shifts toward rearing rather than just bearing). The context is practical pastoral advice about productive household roles.

(1×) Appears in 1 Tim 5:14 in Paul's counsel to younger widows: marry, bear children, manage the home. The infinitive describes one component of the married household role Paul recommends. The verb emphasizes the natural maternal function. Cross-linguistic evidence directly translates 'bear/have children,' though German adds the rearing dimension. Context focuses on occupying younger widows in productive family life rather than idleness. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: to-bear-children | es: tener-hijos | fr: τεκνογονεῖν | de: Kinder-aufziehen 1Tim 5:14

τεκνογον-ία G5042 N-GFS (1×)

childbearing, motherhood; the process or state of bearing children

This noun refers to the process or function of bearing children. In 1 Timothy 2:15, Paul makes the difficult statement that 'she will be saved through childbearing.' The term emphasizes the maternal role and function. Whether this refers to salvation through the birth of the Messiah, preservation through the childbirth process, or faithfulness in maternal calling remains debated. Classical usage simply meant the act of bearing children. Cross-linguistic evidence preserves the basic sense: Spanish 'maternidad' (motherhood), German 'Kindergebären' (child-bearing).

(1×) Found in 1 Tim 2:15 in the statement 'she will be saved through childbearing.' The noun emphasizes the maternal function or process. Interpretations vary: salvation through the birth of Christ, physical preservation through childbirth, or spiritual blessing through faithful motherhood. Cross-linguistic renderings ('childbearing,' 'maternidad') preserve the basic maternal reference without resolving the theological puzzle of the verse. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: childbearing | es: maternidad | fr: τεκνογονίας | de: Kindergebaeren 1Tim 2:15

τέκνον G5043 N-DNS (99×)
Child or offspring, whether biological, spiritual, or as a warm vocative address to a younger person.
A rich term for child or offspring rooted in the verb tiktō ('to give birth'), teknon carries both biological and relational weight. In the Gospels it describes literal children and descendants (Matt 2:18; 3:9), while Paul extends it powerfully to spiritual children of faith (Gal 4:28). As a vocative it becomes an intimate address — Jesus says 'teknon' to the paralytic (Mark 2:5) and to his disciples (Mark 10:24), conveying parental tenderness. The multilingual evidence is consistent: Spanish hijos, French enfant, and German Kinder all track the biological sense, while the vocative usage stands apart in passages where direct address carries emotional warmth.

1. child, offspring (89×) The primary sense of child or offspring, covering biological descendants, spiritual children, and metaphorical progeny. Used referentially across all cases and numbers. Spanish hijos, French enfant, and German Kinder uniformly render this sense. Jesus declares that God can raise up 'children' (tekna) to Abraham from stones (Matt 3:9), and Paul speaks of believers as 'children of promise' (Gal 4:28). CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: children | es: hijos | fr: enfant | de: Kind, Kinder Matt 2:18; Matt 3:9; Matt 7:11; Matt 10:21; Matt 15:26

2. dear child (address) (10×) A vocative use functioning as an affectionate form of address from an elder to a younger person — 'my child,' 'dear children.' Distinguished from sense 1 not by referent but by pragmatic force: it conveys tenderness and intimacy. Jesus addresses the paralytic as 'teknon' before healing him (Mark 2:5), and uses it with his disciples (Mark 10:24). Spanish Hijo mío and German mein Kind capture this warmth. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: Child, Children, child | es: Hijo, Hijos, hijitos | fr: Kinder, enfant | de: Kind, Kinder Matt 9:2; Matt 21:28; Mark 2:5; Mark 10:24; Luke 2:48

τεκνο-τροφέω G5044 V-AIA-3S (1×)
to raise children, rear offspring; to fulfill parental nurturing responsibilities
This verb means to rear or raise children, emphasizing the nurturing process beyond mere birth. In 1 Timothy 5:10, it appears in the qualifications for widows to receive church support: 'if she has raised children' among other good works. The term includes the full spectrum of parenting—feeding, training, nurturing to maturity. Classical usage included both human and animal rearing. The cross-linguistic evidence confirms the nurturing emphasis: Spanish 'crió hijos' (raised children), German 'Kinder aufziehen' (bring up children). This is formative care, not just biological production.

(1×) Appears in 1 Tim 5:10 as one criterion for enrolling widows for church support: 'if she has brought up children.' The verb emphasizes successful nurturing and rearing, not merely giving birth. The context lists various good works demonstrating faithful service. Cross-linguistic evidence ('raised children,' 'crió hijos') confirms this as the full parenting process—evidence of faithful, sacrificial care over years. CHILDREN AND INFANCY en: she-raised-children | es: crió-hijos | fr: ἐτεκνοτρόφησεν | de: Kinder-aufziehen 1Tim 5:10

τέκτων G5045 N-GMS (2×)
craftsman, carpenter, builder, artisan
This noun describes a craftsman or artisan, particularly a carpenter or builder who works with wood. Matthew 13:55 asks, 'Is not this the carpenter's son?' referring to Jesus and Joseph. Mark 6:3 has the crowd ask, 'Is not this the carpenter?' referring to Jesus himself. Both passages highlight Jesus' humble origins and trade, which became a stumbling block to his hometown.

(2×) Denotes a craftsman, artisan, or worker, particularly one who works in wood—a carpenter, joiner, or builder. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'carpintero,' French 'charpentier,' German 'Zimmermann') consistently identifies the woodworking trade. Matthew identifies Joseph as the carpenter (13:55), while Mark calls Jesus himself the carpenter (6:3), showing that Jesus learned and practiced his earthly father's trade. This working-class identity contrasted sharply with messianic expectations, making it a skandalon to Nazareth. WORK AND LABOR en: carpenter | es: carpintero | fr: charpentier | de: Zimmermann, τέκτονος Matt 13:55; Mark 6:3

τέλειος G5046 Adj-ANS (19×)
Perfect, complete, mature: having reached the intended goal or end; fully developed in character or quality.
Rooted in telos ('end, goal'), teleios describes what has arrived at its intended completion. When Jesus says 'be perfect as your heavenly Father is perfect' (Matt 5:48), the call is not to flawless performance but to wholeness of character—love extended even to enemies. Paul uses it for mature believers who grasp deeper wisdom (1 Cor 2:6) and contrasts it with the partial and childish (1 Cor 13:10). James similarly ties it to endurance that produces completeness (Jas 1:4). Spanish 'perfecto,' French 'parfait,' and German 'vollkommen' all echo this dual sense of moral completeness and developmental maturity.

perfect, complete, mature (19×) Fully developed, complete, or mature—whether of persons, sacrificial animals, or abstract qualities. In Matt 5:48 Jesus calls disciples to a wholeness of love modeled on God's impartial generosity. Paul distinguishes teleios believers capable of solid teaching from spiritual infants (1 Cor 2:6; Heb 5:14). In 1 Cor 13:10 the 'perfect' (to teleion) is the consummation that renders partial gifts obsolete, pointing toward eschatological fullness. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS en: a-perfect, complete, mature | es: de-perfectos, maduros, más-perfecto | fr: parfait, vollkommen | de: vollkommen Matt 5:48; Matt 19:21; Rom 12:2; 1Cor 2:6

τελειότης G5047 N-GFS (2×)
completeness, perfection, especially of moral or spiritual maturity
This term denotes completeness or perfection, particularly in moral and spiritual development. Paul uses it in Colossians to describe love as the bond of perfection that binds all virtues together. In Hebrews, it appears in an exhortation to leave elementary teachings and press on toward maturity. The word emphasizes not just an endpoint but the fullness and wholeness of character that comes through growth.

(2×) The Greek philosophical and Septuagint background points to completeness of character or development. In Col 3:14, love functions as the perfecting bond that holds all Christian virtues in unity. Heb 6:1 calls believers beyond foundational teachings toward spiritual maturity (τελειότης), suggesting a progressive aspect of perfection rather than instant arrival. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11702 WITH 8 SENSES en: maturity, perfection | es: perfección | fr: perfection | de: Vollkommenheit Col 3:14; Heb 6:1

τελει-όω G5048 V-RIM/P-1S (23×)
To make perfect or bring to completion; perfecting persons spiritually, or finishing a task or purpose.
A theologically charged verb spanning spiritual perfection and practical completion. Spanish reveals the split: perfeccionar and perfeccionados for the theological sense versus completar and cumplir for task-finishing. Seventeen occurrences describe God bringing believers or Christ to full spiritual maturity — Christ 'perfected through sufferings' (Heb 2:10), believers 'made perfect in one' (John 17:23). Six occurrences denote completing a course or task, as when Jesus declares 'I have finished the work you gave me' (John 17:4) and 'it is finished' (John 19:28).

1. to make perfect, bring to perfection (17×) To make perfect, bring a person or thing to full spiritual or moral completeness. Spanish perfeccionados and French accomplir in its fuller sense capture this theological weight. Christ perfected through suffering (Heb 2:10; 5:9), believers perfected in unity (John 17:23), and the faith-perfecting work described in Philippians 3:12 anchor seventeen occurrences. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: I-am-perfected, I-have-been-perfected, has-been-perfected | es: fue-perfeccionada, fueran-perfeccionados, ha-perfeccionado | fr: accomplir, achever | de: vollenden, τελειοῦμαι Luke 13:32; John 17:23; Phil 3:12; Heb 2:10; Heb 5:9

2. to complete, finish, accomplish (6×) To complete, finish, or accomplish a task, course, or purpose to its intended end. Spanish completar and cumplir mark this as goal-oriented fulfillment rather than spiritual maturation. Jesus finishing his Father's work (John 4:34; 17:4), the fulfillment cry at the cross (John 19:28), and the boy Jesus completing the feast days (Luke 2:43) define six occurrences. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: I-complete, complete, having-completed | es: complete, habiendo-completado, se-cumpliera | fr: accomplir, rendre-parfait | de: vollenden, τελειωσάντων, τελειῶσαι Luke 2:43; John 4:34; John 5:36; John 17:4; John 19:28

τέλειος G5049 Adv (1×)

completely, fully, perfectly; with complete thoroughness

This adverb means completely, fully, or perfectly. In 1 Peter 1:13, Peter urges believers to 'set your hope fully on the grace to be brought to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ.' The adverb emphasizes undivided, complete commitment—not partial or wavering hope. Classical usage described complete fulfillment or perfect execution. The cross-linguistic rendering varies between 'fully' (English), 'completely' (Spanish), and 'völlig' (German—totally), but all emphasize thoroughness and wholeness. This is total, not tentative, hope.

(1×) Found in 1 Pet 1:13 modifying how believers should set their hope: 'fully' or 'completely' on coming grace. The adverb calls for undivided, wholehearted expectation without reservation. Classical background of perfection and completeness enriches the call—this is hope without hedging or backup plans. Cross-linguistic evidence uniformly emphasizes totality ('fully,' 'completamente,' 'völlig'), confirming the call to complete eschatological orientation. COMPLETENESS AND TOTALITY

en: fully | es: completamente | fr: τελείως | de: voellig 1Pet 1:13

τελεί-ωσις G5050 N-NFS (2×)

completion, fulfillment, especially of prophecy, legal instruments, or priestly function

This word carries the sense of bringing something to its intended completion or fulfillment. The classical usage spans physical completion (buildings, crops reaching ripeness) to legal execution (completing a contract). In Luke 1:45, Mary's Magnificat celebrates the fulfillment of God's promises. Hebrews 7:11 questions whether perfection could come through the Levitical priesthood, pointing toward the need for a superior priestly order in Christ.

(2×) Drawing on classical meanings of physical completion and legal execution, the New Testament applies τελείωσις to prophetic fulfillment and priestly function. Luke 1:45 celebrates the accomplishment of divine promises to Mary. Heb 7:11's rhetorical question about perfection through the Levitical priesthood highlights the inadequacy of the old covenant and anticipates Christ's superior priesthood bringing true completion. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11702 WITH 8 SENSES

en: fulfillment, perfection | es: cumplimiento, perfección | fr: accomplissement, achèvement | de: Vollendung, τελείωσις Luke 1:45; Heb 7:11

τελει-ωτής G5051 N-AMS (1×)

perfecter, completer; one who brings to completion or full development

This rare noun means perfecter or one who brings something to completion. In Hebrews 12:2, Jesus is called 'the founder and perfecter of our faith'—the one who initiates and completes the faith journey. The term emphasizes bringing to full maturity or final accomplishment. The cross-linguistic evidence directly translates: Spanish 'perfeccionador' (perfecter), German 'Vollender' (completer). Jesus both begins faith in believers and carries it through to completion. This is not just example but active agent of faith's maturation.

(1×) Appears only in Heb 12:2 describing Jesus as 'the author and perfecter of faith.' The noun emphasizes Jesus' role in bringing faith to full development and completion. He doesn't just start the race or model it—he actively completes faith in his followers. Cross-linguistic evidence ('perfecter,' 'perfeccionador,' 'Vollender') consistently emphasizes the completing, finishing role. Jesus brings faith to its intended end. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: perfecter | es: perfeccionador | fr: Vollender | de: Vollender Heb 12:2

τελεσφορ-έω G5052 V-PIA-3P (1×)

to bring fruit to maturity; to carry to full development and completion

This compound verb means to bring fruit to full maturity or perfection. In Luke 8:14, Jesus explains the parable of the sower: some hear the word but are choked by life's worries and 'do not bring fruit to maturity.' The term emphasizes not just producing fruit but carrying it to completion. Classical usage could describe bearing healthy offspring to term or bringing disease to crisis. The agricultural metaphor demands full ripening, not just initial growth. Spanish 'maduran' (mature) and French 'porter du fruit' (bear fruit) both capture the completion emphasis.

(1×) Found in Luke 8:14 describing seed among thorns: the word is heard but choked by worries, riches, pleasures, and 'their fruit does not mature.' The verb emphasizes completion—these plants may start growing but never reach fruitful maturity. The parable warns against incomplete discipleship. Cross-linguistic evidence ('bring to maturity,' 'maduran') confirms the emphasis on full development, not mere initial response. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bring-to-maturity | es: maduran | fr: porter-du-fruit | de: τελεσφοροῦσιν Luke 8:14

τελευτ-άω G5053 V-PIA-3S (13×)

to die, to come to the end of life — verb denoting physical death

Teleutao derives from telos ('end') and in classical Greek could mean 'to bring to completion' or 'to fulfill.' By the Koine period, however, the meaning had narrowed almost entirely to 'die' — to reach the end of one's life. All 13 New Testament occurrences carry this meaning without exception. The verb appears in legal pronouncements (Matt 15:4, 'let him be put to death,' quoting the Decalogue), narrative succession formulas (Matt 2:19, 'when Herod died'), and Sadducean test cases about levirate marriage (Matt 22:25; Mark 12:20-22). The translations are perfectly aligned: Spanish 'morir,' French 'mourir,' German 'sterben.'

die, come to an end of life (13×) To reach the terminus of physical life; to die. In the NT this verb consistently denotes biological death across every grammatical form — aorist participle ('having died,' Matt 2:19), present imperative ('let him die,' Matt 15:4; Mark 7:10, citing Exod 21:17), and aorist indicative in the Sadducees' hypothetical scenario (Matt 22:25; Mark 12:20-22). The verb's etymological connection to telos ('end, completion') is fully lexicalized as physical death, with no residual sense of 'accomplish' surviving in the NT corpus. DEATH AND CORPSES

en: Having-died, died, dies | es: Habiendo-muerto, morir, muera | fr: mourir | de: sterben, Τελευτήσαντος, τελευτάτω Matt 2:19; Matt 9:18; Matt 15:4; Matt 22:25; Mark 7:10

τελευτ-ή G5054 N-GFS (1×)

death, end of life; the completion or termination of earthly existence

This noun refers to death, specifically the end or completion of life. In Matthew 2:15, it appears in the phrase 'until the death of Herod,' marking the temporal boundary of the holy family's Egyptian sojourn. The term can mean any completion or end, but most commonly denotes death as life's termination. Classical usage included the end or completion of any process, but especially life's end. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering as 'death' or 'morte' reflects the term's primary reference to mortality's final boundary.

(1×) Appears in Matt 2:15 marking the duration of Jesus' stay in Egypt: 'until the death of Herod.' The noun provides the temporal endpoint—when Herod dies, return becomes safe. Classical background includes any completion or end, but biblical usage focuses on death as life's terminus. Cross-linguistic unanimity ('death,' 'muerte,' 'mort') confirms this as the end of earthly life, the boundary event enabling the narrative to advance. DEATH AND DYING
en: death | es: muerte | fr: mort | de: τελευτῆς Matt 2:15

τελέω G5055 V-AIP-3S (28×)

To complete, finish, or bring to an end; to fulfill prophecy or obligation; to pay taxes or tribute

A verb woven through some of Scripture's most climactic moments. When Jesus cries τετέλεσται—'It is finished' (John 19:30)—this is the word, declaring the totality of redemptive work accomplished. In Matthew's Gospel it regularly marks the transition from discourse to narrative: 'When Jesus had finished these sayings...' (Matt 7:28; 11:1; 13:53). It also carries the sense of fulfilling law or commandment, as when James speaks of 'fulfilling the royal law' (Jas 2:8). A concrete, everyday usage appears in Matthew 17:24, where it means simply to pay the temple tax. Spanish captures the range well: 'consumar' for the climactic completion, 'terminar' for finishing speech, 'cumplir' for fulfilling law, and 'pagar' for payment.

1. be completed or fulfilled (13×) The passive or middle sense of being completed, fulfilled, or brought to consummation, especially of prophetic purposes and divine appointments. John 19:28 notes that Jesus knew 'all things were now accomplished,' and his final cry τετέλεσται (John 19:30) became the definitive declaration that redemption was complete. Luke 18:31 applies it to the fulfillment of prophetic writings. Spanish 'consumado está' and French 'accomplir' convey the weighty finality of prophetic completion. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: have-been-finished, is-completed, is-perfected | es: Consumado-está, fue-consumado, fueran-consumadas | fr: accomplir, achever | de: vollenden, vollendet Luke 12:50; Luke 18:31; Luke 22:37; John 19:28; John 19:30

2. complete or finish (10×) The active transitive sense of finishing or completing a task, speech, or journey. Matthew uses this verb five times as a formulaic transition—'When Jesus finished these sayings' (Matt 7:28, 11:1, 13:53, 19:1, 26:1)—marking the close of each major discourse. Paul likewise says 'I have finished the race' (2 Tim 4:7). Spanish 'terminar' and German 'vollenden' render this straightforward sense of bringing an activity to its natural conclusion. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: I-have-finished, finished, they-completed | es: completaron, cumplieron, he-terminado | fr: accomplir, achever | de: vollenden, vollendet Matt 7:28; Matt 10:23; Matt 11:1; Matt 13:53; Matt 19:1

3. fulfill or carry out (3×) To fulfill, keep, or carry out a law, commandment, or moral obligation through obedient action. James 2:8 speaks of 'fulfilling the royal law,' Romans 2:27 of the uncircumcised person who 'fulfills the law,' and Galatians 5:16 promises that walking by the Spirit means one will not 'carry out' the desires of the flesh. Spanish 'cumplir' (to fulfill, comply) and French 'accomplir' both capture the performative, duty-oriented dimension that distinguishes this from mere completion. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: keeping, you-fulfill, you-will-fulfill | es: cumpláis, cumplís, que-cumple | fr: accomplir, achever | de: vollenden Rom 2:27; Gal 5:16; Jas 2:8

4. pay (2×) To pay taxes, tribute, or a financial obligation—a concrete, transactional use. In Matthew 17:24, the tax collectors ask whether Jesus 'pays' the two-drachma temple tax, and Romans 13:6 explains that this is why believers 'pay' taxes to governing authorities. Spanish 'pagar' (to pay) makes the commercial sense unmistakable, sharply distinct from the theological and literary uses of the same verb. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: pays, you-pay | es: paga, pagáis | fr: accomplir, achever | de: vollenden, vollendet Matt 17:24; Rom 13:6

τέλος G5056 N-NNP (42×)

End, conclusion, termination (esp. eschatological); tax, toll, or customs duty; goal, outcome, or purpose.

The Greek noun telos embraces both termination and consummation — not merely where something stops, but where it reaches fulfillment. Its dominant NT use (36 occurrences) is eschatological: 'the end is not yet' (Matt 24:6), 'the one who endures to the end will be saved' (Matt 24:13). But telos also carries a fiscal sense: the 'toll' or 'tax' kings exact (Matt 17:25; Rom 13:7), where Spanish shifts from fin to impuesto and German from Ende to Steuer. A third sense means the designed goal or purpose: 'the goal of the commandment is love' (1 Tim 1:5). Paul's claim that Christ is 'the telos of the law' (Rom 10:4) famously oscillates between 'end' and 'goal.'

1. temporal end (eschatological terminus) (20×) Split from sense 77517. Criteria: The end of the age, the eschatological endpoint; 'the end is not yet,' 'endure to the end,' 'then the end will come'; predominantly articular ὁ τέλος in apocalyptic discourse en: end, ends, the-end | es: el-fin, fin, fin. | fr: Ende, fin | de: Ende, Steuer Matt 10:22; Matt 24:6; Matt 24:13; Matt 24:14; Mark 13:7

2. fulfillment, completion, outcome (16×) Split from sense 77517. Criteria: The completion or outcome of a process; 'the end of sin is death,' 'the end of sanctification is eternal life,' 'the things concerning Jesus have an end (fulfillment)'; telic rather than terminal en: an-end, end, the-end | es: fin | fr: Ende, fin | de: Ende, Steuer Matt 26:58; Mark 3:26; Luke 18:5; Luke 22:37; John 13:1

3. tax, toll, revenue (3×) A tax, customs duty, or toll collected by the state — a well-attested classical sense derived from telos as a 'payment due' or 'completion of obligation.' With 3 NT occurrences, this appears in Jesus' question to Peter about whether kings collect tele (taxes) from their own sons or from others (Matt 17:25), and in Paul's instruction to render telos to whom telos is owed alongside phoros (tribute) in Romans 13:7. Spanish shifts decisively to impuesto/impuestos, French retains impôt, and German moves from Ende to Steuer — a lexical bifurcation that confirms translators recognize a categorically different meaning from 'end.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: revenue, taxes | es: impuesto, impuestos | fr: fin | de: Ende, Steuer Matt 17:25; Rom 13:7

4. goal, outcome, purpose (3×) The intended outcome, goal, or ultimate purpose toward which something aims — telos in its teleological sense of designed result rather than mere cessation. With 3 occurrences, this appears in 1 Timothy 1:5 ('the goal of the commandment is love from a pure heart'), 1 Peter 1:9 ('receiving the outcome of your faith, the salvation of your souls'), and 1 Peter 3:8's summons to unity as the telos of community life. Spanish propósito and fin compete here, while German Ziel occasionally replaces Ende, signaling the purposive rather than terminal force. This sense preserves the Aristotelian philosophical heritage of telos as final cause. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: end | es: fin | fr: Ende | de: Ende 1Tim 1:5; 1Pet 1:9; 1Pet 3:8

τελών-ης G5057 N-GMP (21×)

Tax collector, publican; a despised agent who gathered tolls and customs for Rome.

Formed from telos ('toll, tax') and oneomai ('to buy'), the telones was a person who had purchased the right to collect taxes or customs duties in a given district. In first-century Palestine, these figures were despised not merely for financial extortion but for serving the Roman occupation, rendering them ritually unclean collaborators in Jewish eyes. Jesus shocked the religious establishment by eating with them (Matt 9:10-11), calling one as an apostle (Matt 10:3, Matthew/Levi), and declaring that tax collectors would enter the kingdom before the chief priests (Matt 21:31). The consistent rendering across languages — Spanish 'cobrador de impuestos', French 'publicain', German 'Zoellner' — underscores how universally recognizable this social role remains.

tax collector, publican (21×) A tax collector or publican who farmed tolls and customs on behalf of the Roman state. Socially reviled in Jewish Palestine for collaboration with the occupying power, these figures appear in the Gospels as stock examples of sinners (Matt 5:46; 9:10-11) whom Jesus deliberately befriends. The pairing 'tax collectors and sinners' recurs as a rhetorical set-piece. Spanish 'cobrador de impuestos', French 'publicain', and German 'Zoellner' all preserve the fiscal-agent concept, though none captures the cultural stigma the Greek term carried. TRIBUTE AND TAX

en: a-tax-collector, of-tax-collectors, tax-collector | es: cobrador-de-impuestos, cobradores-de-impuestos, de-cobradores-de-impuestos | fr: publicain | de: Zoellner, Zöllner Matt 5:46; Matt 9:10; Matt 9:11; Matt 10:3; Matt 11:19

τελών-ιον G5058 N-ANS (3×)

tax booth, customs house; the place where tax collectors sat to collect tolls and duties

The tax booth was the physical station where tax collectors conducted their business, typically positioned at city gates, toll roads, or ports. In first-century Judea, these were symbols of collaboration with Roman occupation, making tax collectors despised figures. All three New Testament occurrences describe the moment Jesus called a tax collector to discipleship—a scandalous act that demonstrated his mission to sinners rather than the righteous. The tax booth thus becomes a vivid setting for radical grace.

(3×) This term appears exclusively in the synoptic parallels of Matthew's (Levi's) call: Matthew 9:9, Mark 2:14, and Luke 5:27. Each account shows Jesus passing by the telōnion and calling the tax collector to follow him, who immediately leaves his lucrative position. The multilingual glosses reflect both the structure (Spanish cobro/puesto de impuestos, French bureau de péage, German Zollstelle) and function (English "tax-booth"). The site represents the dramatic break required by discipleship—leaving security and wealth for an uncertain future following Jesus. TRIBUTE AND TAX

en: tax-booth | es: cobro-de-impuestos, puesto-de-impuestos | fr: bureau-de-péage | de: Zollstelle, τελώνιον Matt 9:9; Mark 2:14; Luke 5:27

τέρας G5059 N-ANP (16×)

Wonder, portent, or miraculous sign; a supernatural marvel that evokes awe and points to divine power.

Teras refers to an extraordinary event that inspires astonishment and signals divine activity. In the NT it appears almost exclusively in the paired phrase semeia kai terata (“signs and wonders”), where semeion emphasizes the revelatory meaning and teras the awe-inspiring, wonder-evoking dimension of the same mighty act. Peter’s Pentecost sermon declares that God attested Jesus through wonders (Acts 2:22), and Joel’s prophecy foretells cosmic portents (Acts 2:19). Jesus himself warns that false messiahs will perform signs and wonders to deceive (Matt 24:24; Mark 13:22). Spanish prodigios, French prodige, and German Wunder each convey the sense of an extraordinary, awe-inducing marvel.

wonders (16×) A wonder or portent—a supernatural marvel that produces awe and points to the power of God. Nearly always paired with semeion (“sign”) in the fixed phrase “signs and wonders,” where teras highlights the astonishing, attention-arresting quality of divine acts. Peter cites wonders as God’s attestation of Jesus (Acts 2:22), and Joel’s prophecy promises cosmic portents before the Day of the Lord (Acts 2:19). The warning that false prophets will produce counterfeit wonders (Matt 24:24; Mark 13:22) shows the word carries no inherent moral valence—it is the source, not the marvel itself, that determines legitimacy. WONDERS AND PORTENTS en: of-wonders, wonders | es: prodigios | fr: Wunder, prodige | de: Wunder Matt 24:24; Mark 13:22; John 4:48; Acts 2:19; Acts 2:22

Τέρτιος G5060 N-NMS (1×)

Tertius, personal name meaning 'third'; Paul's scribe in Romans

Tertius is a Latin name meaning 'third' (likely indicating birth order in the family). He appears once in Romans 16:22, inserting his own greeting as the one who wrote down Paul's letter. This rare personal interjection by the scribe gives a human glimpse into the letter's production. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration (Tertius, Tértios, Tertullus—though the French appears confused with another person). The name preserves the individual who physically penned one of Scripture's most theological masterpieces.

(1×) Personal name appearing in Rom 16:22: 'I, Tertius, who wrote down this letter, greet you in the Lord.' The scribe briefly steps into view, identifying himself as the one penning Paul's dictation. The Latin name ('third') was common. Translators universally preserve the name, recognizing this as a specific historical person. The greeting humanizes the epistle, reminding readers of the collaborative process behind inspired Scripture. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tertios | es: Tértios | fr: Tertullus | de: Tertius Rom 16:22

Τέρτυλλος G5061 N-GMS (2×)

Tertullus, a Roman orator hired to prosecute Paul

Tertullus was a professional orator, likely a Roman or Hellenized advocate, hired by the Jewish leaders to present charges against Paul before Felix. His name is a common Latin diminutive. The flattering speech he delivers in Acts 24 follows typical rhetorical conventions of the period, beginning with elaborate praise of the governor before launching into accusations. His role illustrates the formal legal procedures Paul faced.

(2×) This proper name appears only in Acts 24:1-2 where the high priest Ananias brings Tertullus as legal counsel to accuse Paul before Governor Felix. The Latin name and rhetorical skill suggest a professional advocate familiar with Roman legal proceedings, hired specifically to present the case in a manner persuasive to Roman authorities. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tertullos | es: Tértylos | fr: Tertius | de: Τέρτυλλος, Τερτύλλου Acts 24:1; Acts 24:2

τεσσᾰράκοντα G5062 Adj-GMP (22×)

Forty; the cardinal number used for periods of testing, wandering, and divine preparation in Scripture.

A cardinal number denoting forty, employed throughout both Testaments to mark seasons of trial, purification, and divine appointment. Jesus fasted forty days in the wilderness (Matt 4:2; Luke 4:2), echoing Israel's forty years of wandering and Moses' forty days on Sinai. The consistency across languages—Spanish cuarenta, French quarante, German vierzig—confirms the purely numerical value, yet Scripture invests this number with unmistakable theological weight as a period in which God shapes and proves His people.

forty (22×) The cardinal number forty, appearing in contexts of temporal duration laden with theological significance. In the NT it marks Jesus' wilderness fast (Matt 4:2; Mark 1:13; Luke 4:2), the forty-six years of temple construction (John 2:20), and the forty-day post-resurrection ministry (Acts 1:3). Every translation renders a straightforward numeral—cuarenta, quarante, vierzig—yet the biblical pattern consistently associates forty with seasons of testing and transition. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: forty | es: cuarenta | fr: quarante, vierzig | de: vierzig Matt 4:2; Mark 1:13; Luke 4:2; John 2:20

τεσσᾰρᾰκοντᾰ-ετής G5063 Adj-NMS (2×)

forty years old, of forty years' duration

This adjective describes a span of forty years, whether referring to someone's age or a period of time. In both New Testament occurrences, it marks significant turning points in Israel's history. Moses was forty years old when he attempted to deliver his people (Acts 7:23), and God endured Israel's conduct in the wilderness for a forty-year period (Acts 13:18). The number forty often carries symbolic weight in Scripture, associated with testing, probation, or preparation.

(2×) The compound adjective (τεσσαρακονταετής) marks forty-year periods with theological significance. Acts 7:23 notes Moses was forty when he first tried to intervene for Israel, while Acts 13:18 recalls God's patient endurance during the forty years of wilderness wandering. Both passages reference foundational periods in Israel's formative history where the forty-year span represented preparation or testing. YEAR (TIME UNIT)

en: forty-year, forty-years | es: cuarenta-años | fr: quarante-ans | de: τεσσερακονταέτης, τεσσερακονταετῆ Acts 7:23; Acts 13:18

τέσσᾰρες G5064 Adj-NFP (41×)

four — the cardinal numeral four, used as an adjective modifying nouns across all cases and genders

Tessares is the Greek cardinal numeral 'four,' appearing 41 times in the New Testament with no semantic variation beyond its numeric value. It modifies a wide range of nouns: four men carrying a paralytic (Mark 2:3), four winds of heaven (Matt 24:31; Mark 13:27), four months until harvest (John 4:35), and Anna's eighty-four years (Luke 2:37). In Revelation, where it occurs most frequently, it structures the heavenly scene: four living creatures around the throne (Rev 4:6), four angels at the four corners of the earth (Rev 7:1), and four horns of the golden altar (Rev 9:13). The Attic form tettares and Ionic tesseres are absent from the NT, which consistently uses the Koine tessares.

four (41×) The cardinal number four, modifying nouns without semantic extension or metaphorical shift. In narrative contexts it quantifies concrete groups: four men (Mark 2:3), four days (John 11:17, 39), four soldiers (John 19:23). In apocalyptic vision it supplies the architecture of cosmic order: four living creatures (Rev 4:6-8), four angels (Rev 7:1; 9:14-15), four corners of the earth (Rev 7:1; 20:8). Spanish 'cuatro,' French 'quatre,' and German 'vier' render it uniformly across all contexts. NUMBER FOUR en: by-four, four, to-four | es: a-cuatro, cuatro, por-cuatro | fr: quatre, vier | de: vier Matt 24:31; Mark 2:3; Mark 13:27; Luke 2:37; John 11:17

τεσσᾰρεσκαιδέκᾰτος G5065 Adj-AFS (2×)

fourteenth, in ordinal sequence

This ordinal number appears in the dramatic account of Paul's shipwreck voyage, marking the fourteenth night of the storm. The specific time marker heightens the tension and emphasizes how long the crew had endured the tempest without seeing sun or stars, drifting helplessly before making landfall. The detail adds historical precision to Luke's vivid narrative.

(2×) Both occurrences (Acts 27:27, 33) reference the same dramatic moment: the fourteenth night of Paul's storm-tossed voyage to Rome. The ordinal marks a precise temporal milestone in Luke's detailed shipwreck narrative, emphasizing the prolonged terror and uncertainty the crew faced before finally sensing they were approaching land. NUMBER FOUR en: Fourteenth, fourteenth | es: Decimocuarto, decimocuarta | fr: quatorzième | de: Τεσσαρεσκαιδεκάτην, τεσσαρεσκαιδεκάτη Acts 27:27; Acts 27:33

τεταρτ-αῖος G5066 Adj-NMS (1×)

on the fourth day; four days dead (of a corpse)

This adjective means 'on the fourth day' or describes someone four days deceased. In John 11:39, Martha protests when Jesus commands opening Lazarus' tomb: 'by now he is four days dead.' The term emphasizes the advanced state of decay—beyond any hope of resuscitation. In Jewish reckoning, the soul was thought to linger for three days; the fourth day marked hopeless death. The cross-linguistic evidence varies between temporal ('four days,' 'de cuatro días') and ordinal ('fourth') rendering, but all emphasize the passage of time establishing death's certainty.

(1×) Found in John 11:39 describing Lazarus' state when Jesus arrives: 'he has been dead four days.' The adjective underscores the impossibility of the situation—this is not fresh death but advanced decomposition. Jewish tradition held the soul departed finally on the fourth day. Martha's protest highlights the miracle's magnitude. Cross-linguistic evidence ('four days,' 'cuatro días,' 'viertägig') confirms the time emphasis—death is established beyond doubt. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT

en: four-days | es: de-cuatro-días | fr: quatrième | de: viertaegig John 11:39

τέταρτος G5067 Adj-ANS (10×)

Fourth; the ordinal number marking fourth position in a sequence, or a fourth part (quarter).

The standard Greek ordinal for 'fourth,' used across the New Testament to mark sequence—the fourth watch of the night (Matt 14:25; Mark 6:48), the fourth living creature (Rev 4:7), and the fourth seal (Rev 6:7). In Revelation 6:8, the pale horse is given authority 'over a fourth of the earth,' where the word shades from pure ordinal into fractional quantity. Spanish captures this shift neatly: 'cuarto' for the ordinal instances versus 'cuarta-parte' for the fractional one, reflecting a subtle semantic distinction already noted in classical Greek lexicography.

1. fourth (9×) The ordinal numeral 'fourth,' marking position in a series. Jesus walks on the sea during the fourth watch (Matt 14:25; Mark 6:48), Cornelius's vision occurs at the fourth hour (Acts 10:30), and the fourth living creature is like a flying eagle (Rev 4:7). All languages render this uniformly as a simple ordinal: French 'quatrième,' German 'vierter,' Spanish 'cuarto.' FOURTH ORDINAL NUMBER

en: fourth | es: cuarta, cuarto, cuarto, | fr: quatrième, vierter | de: vierter, τετάρτης, τετάρτῃ Matt 14:25; Mark 6:48; Acts 10:30; Rev 4:7; Rev 6:7

2. fourth (1×) A fourth part or quarter, where the ordinal shades into a fractional or proportional sense. In Revelation 6:8 the pale rider receives authority over 'a fourth of the earth'—not the fourth item in a sequence but one-quarter of a whole. Spanish 'cuarta-parte' makes this distinction explicit, separating the fractional sense from the purely sequential ordinal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fourth | es: cuarta-parte | fr: vierter | de: vierter Rev 6:8

τετράγων-ος G5068 Adj-NFS (1×)

square, four-sided; having four equal angles and sides

This adjective means square or four-sided with equal dimensions. In Revelation 21:16, it describes the New Jerusalem: 'the city lies foursquare, its length and width and height are equal.' The geometric perfection symbolizes completeness and stability. Classical usage could describe squared timbers, square formations of troops, or square numbers in mathematics. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering ('four-square,' 'cuadrada,' 'viereckig') preserves the geometric precision. This is architectural perfection reflecting divine order.

(1×) Appears in Rev 21:16 describing the New Jerusalem's shape: the city is 'foursquare,' with length, width, and height equal. The geometric perfection symbolizes completeness, stability, and divine order. Classical background includes military formations and architecture, but here the emphasis is cosmic geometry—God's city is perfectly proportioned. Cross-linguistic evidence consistently renders the four-sided, equal-dimensioned character of the holy city. NUMBER FOUR

en: four-square | es: cuadrada | fr: viereckig | de: viereckig Rev 21:16

τετρᾰδ-ιον G5069 N-DNP (1×)

squad, quaternion; a guard detail of four soldiers

This noun refers to a squad of four soldiers, the standard Roman guard unit. In Acts 12:4, Herod assigns 'four squads of four soldiers each' to guard Peter—sixteen soldiers total with rotating four-man watches. The term reflects Roman military organization. Classical usage could also mean quaternion of parchment (four sheets), but here the military sense dominates. Spanish 'escuadrones' (squadrons) and French 'quatre' (four) both reflect the four-soldier composition. This is maximum security, emphasizing the miraculous nature of Peter's escape.

(1×) Found in Acts 12:4 describing Peter's guard: 'four squads of four soldiers each.' Each quaternion would take a watch, ensuring constant heavy guard. The detail emphasizes the human impossibility of escape, heightening the miracle of angelic deliverance. Cross-linguistic evidence varies ('squads,' 'escuadrones,' 'four') but all recognize this as military units. The precision underscores Herod's determination to prevent escape. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: squads | es: escuadrones | fr: quatre | de: τετραδίοις Acts 12:4

τετρᾰκισ-χίλιοι G5070 Adj-AMP (5×)

Four thousand; the cardinal number used in feeding narratives and a historical reference in Acts.

This numeral adjective means simply 'four thousand.' It appears primarily in the feeding of the four thousand, where Jesus miraculously feeds a crowd of that size (Matt 15:38; Mark 8:9), and in the disciples' later recollection of that event (Matt 16:10; Mark 8:20). Acts 21:38 preserves a different use, where a Roman commander asks Paul whether he is the Egyptian who led four thousand assassins into the wilderness. Across all languages the rendering is a straightforward numeral — Spanish 'cuatro mil,' French 'quatre mille,' German 'viertausend.'

(5×) The cardinal number four thousand. In the Synoptic Gospels it specifies the crowd size in Jesus' second miraculous feeding (Matt 15:38; Mark 8:9) and appears again when Jesus reminds the disciples of that miracle (Matt 16:10; Mark 8:20). Acts 21:38 uses it in a political context — the four thousand sicarii led by an Egyptian rebel. Every language renders it as a simple numeral: Spanish 'cuatro mil,' French 'quatre mille,' German 'viertausend,' confirming a single, unambiguous numeric sense. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS

en: four-thousand | es: cuatro-mil | fr: quatre-mille | de: viertausend, τετρακισχίλιοι, τετρακισχιλίους Matt 15:38; Matt 16:10; Mark 8:9; Mark 8:20; Acts 21:38

τετρᾰκόσι-οι G5071 Adj-GMP (4×)

Four hundred; the cardinal number 400, used in historical and chronological references.

Tetrakosioi ('four hundred') appears exclusively in historical recollections within Acts and Galatians. In Acts 5:36, Gamaliel recalls a rebel who drew about four hundred followers before being scattered. Acts 7:6 cites God's prophecy to Abraham that his descendants would be enslaved for four hundred years, and Acts 13:20 references approximately four hundred and fifty years of judges. Paul anchors his argument about the priority of the Abrahamic promise in Galatians 3:17 by noting the law came four hundred and thirty years later. Every occurrence anchors a theological or rhetorical point in concrete historical duration or enumeration.

(4×) Four hundred — the cardinal number used in historical and chronological references within the New Testament. Acts 5:36 counts roughly four hundred followers of the rebel Theudas. Acts 7:6 recalls the four-hundred-year sojourn prophesied to Abraham (cf. Gen 15:13). Acts 13:20 marks the period of the judges. Galatians 3:17 uses 'four hundred and thirty years' to establish the chronological priority of promise over law. The translations are straightforwardly numeric (Spanish 'cuatrocientos,' German 'vierhundert'), with the French anomaly 'cinq-cents' (five hundred) likely reflecting a variant or error in the gloss data rather than a genuine semantic difference. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: four-hundred | es: cuatrocientos | fr: cinq-cents, τετρακόσια | de: vierhundert, τετρακοσίους, τετρακοσίων Acts 5:36; Acts 7:6; Acts 13:20; Gal 3:17

τετρᾰ-μηνος G5072 Adj-NMS (1×)

four months; a period of four months' duration

This adjective describes a four-month period. In John 4:35, Jesus uses it proverbially: 'Do you not say, "There are yet four months, then comes the harvest"?' The term marks the typical interval between sowing and harvest in Palestinian agriculture. Jesus contrasts this natural timeline with the immediate spiritual harvest ready in Samaria. The cross-linguistic evidence shows direct temporal rendering: Spanish 'cuatro meses,' French 'quatre mois,' German 'vier Monate.' This is calendar time highlighting the urgency of present spiritual opportunity.

(1×) Appears in John 4:35 in Jesus' teaching about spiritual harvest: 'Do you not say, "Yet four months and the harvest comes"?' The phrase reflects agricultural proverbial wisdom about the time from sowing to reaping. Jesus contrasts this natural delay with the immediate harvest of souls in Samaria—the fields are already white. Cross-linguistic evidence uniformly renders 'four months,' confirming the temporal reference that sets up the harvest metaphor. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: four-months | es: cuatro-meses | fr: quatre-mois | de: vier-Monate John 4:35

τετρᾰ-πλόος G5073 Adj-ANS (1×)

fourfold, quadruple; four times the amount

This adjective means fourfold or quadruple. In Luke 19:8, Zacchaeus vows to Jesus: 'If I have defrauded anyone of anything, I restore it fourfold.' The promise exceeds legal requirements (which typically demanded doubling), demonstrating extravagant repentance. Classical usage described fourfold quantity or proportion. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering ('fourfold,' 'cuádruple,' 'quadruple') preserves the precise mathematical proportion. This is generous restitution, evidence of transformed heart producing transformed economics.

(1×) Found in Luke 19:8 in Zacchaeus' repentance pledge: 'if I have defrauded anyone, I restore fourfold.' The quadruple restitution goes beyond legal minimums (Exod 22:1 required fourfold only for stolen sheep), showing the tax collector's radical generosity born from encounter with Jesus. Cross-linguistic evidence uniformly renders the four-times multiplication, confirming this as extravagant repayment demonstrating genuine conversion. NUMBER FOUR en: fourfold | es: cuádruple | fr: quadruple | de: τετραπλοῦν Luke 19:8

τετρά-πους G5074 Adj-GNP (3×)

four-footed; referring to quadrupeds, animals that walk on four legs

This adjective describes the category of four-footed animals, distinguishing them from birds, fish, and creeping things in biblical taxonomy. The term appears in contexts listing various classes of creatures, whether in visions (Acts 10 and 11) or in descriptions of human idolatry (Romans 1). Ancient natural philosophy commonly used the number of feet as a primary classification system for living beings, making this a straightforward descriptor that cuts across species from cattle to wild beasts.

(3×) The three occurrences form two distinct contexts: Peter's vision in Acts 10:12 and 11:6 describes a sheet containing "all kinds of four-footed animals," part of God's dramatic revelation about clean and unclean categories. Romans 1:23 lists four-footed animals among the degrading images humans worship instead of God. The Spanish cuadrúpedos, French quatre-pieds, and German vierfuessig all mirror the Greek compound structure (tetra- = four + pous = foot). The classification highlights God's creative order while exposing human tendency to worship the creature rather than the Creator. LIVING CREATURES

en: four-footed, of-four-footed-animals | es: cuadrúpedos, de-cuadrúpedos | fr: quatre-pieds | de: vierfuessig, τετράποδα Acts 10:12; Acts 11:6; Rom 1:23

τετραρχ-έω G5075 V-PPA-GMS (3×)

to be tetrarch, to rule as a tetrarch (governor of a fourth part of a region)

A tetrarch originally governed one-fourth of a territory, though by the New Testament period the title had become a general designation for a subordinate ruler under Roman authority. This was a step below a full king in the hierarchy of client rulers. The verb appears only in Luke 3:1, where it anchors Jesus' ministry in precise historical context by naming the political rulers of various regions—Herod, Philip, and Lysanias—each governing their respective territories as tetrarchs.

(3×) All three occurrences appear in the same verse (Luke 3:1), listing the tetrarchs ruling different regions when John the Baptist began his ministry: Herod tetrarch of Galilee, Philip tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis, and Lysanias tetrarch of Abilene. The triple use demonstrates Luke's careful historical documentation, situating sacred events within the framework of secular governance. The multilingual glosses preserve the technical administrative term: Spanish siendo-tetrarca, French être-tétrarque, reflecting the specific political office that defined regional power structures in Roman-controlled Palestine. RULING AND REIGNING en: being-tetrarch | es: siendo-tetrarca | fr: être-tétrarque | de: τετραραχοῦντος Luke 3:1

τετράρχ-ης G5076 N-GMS (4×)

A tetrarch; a Roman-appointed regional ruler of lower rank than a king, governing a quarter of a territory.
Derived from the Greek for 'ruler of a fourth,' this title designated a provincial governor under Roman authority who ranked below a king. In the New Testament it refers exclusively to rulers in Palestine, most notably Herod Antipas. The Spanish 'tetrarca' and French 'tétrarque' preserve the original Greek form nearly unchanged, reflecting how this technical political title passed directly into Western languages. Luke 3:19 and Acts 13:1 show the term applied to specific historical figures within the Roman client-state system.

(4×) A regional ruler appointed under Roman imperial authority, governing a portion of a divided territory with a rank subordinate to king. All four NT occurrences (Matt 14:1; Luke 3:19; 9:7; Acts 13:1) refer to Herodian rulers in Palestine. The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate rather than translate, confirming this was a fixed political title rather than a descriptive term. RULING AND REIGNING en: tetrarch | es: tetrarca | fr: tétrarque | de: τετραάρχης, τετραάρχου Matt 14:1; Luke 3:19; Luke 9:7; Acts 13:1

τεφρ-όω G5077 V-APA-NMS (1×)

to reduce to ashes, burn completely; to destroy by fire
This verb means to burn to ashes or reduce completely by fire. In 2 Peter 2:6, Peter describes God 'reducing the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah to ashes' as an example of judgment. The term emphasizes total destruction—not just burning but complete incineration to ash. Classical usage included literal burning and metaphorical covering with ashes. The cross-linguistic evidence shows varied expressions of complete burning: Spanish 'reducido a cenizas' (reduced to ashes), German 'zu Asche machen' (make to ash). This is annihilating judgment.

(1×) Appears in 2 Pet 2:6 describing divine judgment on Sodom and Gomorrah: God 'condemned them to destruction, reducing them to ashes.' The participle emphasizes totality—these cities were utterly incinerated as an example of judgment on ungodliness. The historical reference provides paradigm for future judgment. Cross-linguistic evidence consistently emphasizes complete reduction to ashes, confirming the total destruction theme. FIRE AND BURNING en: having-reduced-to-ashes | es: habiendo-reducido-a-cenizas | fr: τεφρώσας | de: zu-Asche-machen 2Pet 2:6

τέχν-η G5078 N-DFS (3×)

art, craft, trade, skill; the learned ability or profession by which one makes a living
In ancient usage, technē encompassed both the technical skill required for a craft and the profession itself—from metalworking to shipbuilding to fortune-telling. The word could carry negative connotations (cunning, tricks) or positive ones (artistic mastery). In the New Testament, it appears in straightforward references to honest trades and professions. Interestingly, this is the root of our English "technology," though the ancient concept was more personal and artisanal than our industrial-age understanding.

(3×) The three occurrences span different contexts: Acts 17:29 discusses objects "formed by art (technē) and human imagination" in Paul's Athens speech, contrasting manufactured idols with the living God. Acts 18:3 notes that Paul shared the same "trade" (tent-making) with Aquila and Priscilla. Revelation 18:22 laments that in fallen Babylon, no craftsman of any "craft" will be found. The multilingual evidence shows semantic range: Spanish arte/oficio (art/trade), French métier (profession), German Handwerk (handicraft), reflecting the word's dual reference to both skill and occupation. WORK AND LABOR
en: craft, of-craft, trade | es: arte, de-arte, de-oficio | fr: Handwerk, métier | de: Handwerk, τέχνης, τέχνῃ Acts 17:29; Acts 18:3; Rev 18:22

τεχνῖτ-ης G5079 N-NMS (4×)

A craftsman, artisan, or skilled designer; one who exercises technical expertise in constructing or shaping materials.
Denotes a person skilled in a trade or craft, from metalworking to architecture. In Acts 19:24 and 19:38 it describes the silversmiths of Ephesus whose livelihood depended on making shrines of Artemis. Hebrews 11:10 elevates the word dramatically, calling God the 'technites' and architect of the heavenly city — a usage the German 'Handwerker' and French 'artisan' capture in their earthly registers, while the English 'architect' in Hebrews reveals the theological reach of the term. Revelation 18:22 mourns the silencing of every craftsman in fallen Babylon.

(4×) A skilled worker, artisan, or master builder who shapes materials according to technical knowledge. In Acts 19:24,38 the term identifies Demetrius and his fellow silversmiths as tradesmen. Hebrews 11:10 applies it metaphorically to God as the designer and builder of the city with foundations, while Rev 18:22 uses it in a lament over Babylon's lost industry. The Spanish 'artesano' and French 'artisan' preserve the manual-craft sense, whereas English 'architect' in Heb 11:10 highlights the design dimension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: architect, craftsman, craftsmen | es: arquitecto, artesano, artesanos | fr: Handwerker, artisan | de: Handwerker, τεχνίταις, τεχνῖται Acts 19:24; Acts 19:38; Heb 11:10; Rev 18:22

τήκω G5080 V-PIM/P-3S (1×)

to melt, dissolve; to liquefy from heat
This verb means to melt or dissolve, typically from heat. In 2 Peter 3:12, it appears in the eschatological vision: 'the heavens will be set on fire and dissolved, and the elements will melt with fervent heat.' The term describes the complete liquefaction and dissolution of creation's material order. Classical usage included wasting away from grief as well as physical melting. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering as 'melt' or 'derretir' emphasizes physical dissolution under cosmic heat. This is the undoing of material creation.

(1×) Found in 2 Pet 3:12 describing the final cosmic dissolution: 'the elements will melt with intense heat.' The verb emphasizes complete liquefaction—solid matter dissolving under divine fire. The context is the day of God when present creation is unmade. Cross-linguistic evidence ('melt,' 'se derretirán,' 'schmelzen') uniformly renders physical melting, confirming this as material dissolution under eschatological heat. MELT DISSOLVE
en: melt | es: se-derretirán | fr: τήκεται | de: schmelzen 2Pet 3:12

τηλαυγ-ής G5081 Adv (1×)

clearly, plainly; with clear vision or understanding
This adverb means clearly or with clear vision. In Mark 8:25, it describes the result when Jesus touches the blind man's eyes a second time: 'then he saw clearly.' The term emphasizes distinct, unambiguous vision—not blurry or confused but sharp and accurate. Classical usage could describe far-seeing or conspicuous objects. The cross-linguistic rendering ('clearly,' 'claramente,' 'deutlich') consistently emphasizes clarity and distinctness. This is restored sight achieving full function—everything seen with proper definition.

(1×) Appears in Mark 8:25 after Jesus' second touch restores the blind man's sight: 'he looked intently and was restored and saw everything clearly.' The adverb marks the completion of healing—initial blurry vision (people like trees) becomes perfectly clear sight. The two-stage miracle emphasizes gradual or progressive restoration. Cross-linguistic evidence uniformly renders clarity, confirming this as distinct, sharp vision fully restored. BOLDNESS AND OPENNESS en: clearly | es: claramente | fr: clairement | de: deutlich Mark 8:25

τηλῐκόσδε G5082 DPro-NNP (4×)

So great, so mighty, so large; a demonstrative pronoun emphasizing remarkable degree or magnitude.

An intensifying demonstrative that draws attention to the extraordinary scale or severity of something. In 2 Corinthians 1:10 Paul speaks of deliverance from 'so great' a peril of death, while Hebrews 2:3 warns against neglecting 'so great' a salvation. James 3:4 marvels that 'so great' ships are steered by a small rudder, and Revelation 16:18 describes 'so great' an earthquake as never before seen. The Spanish 'tan grande' and German 'so gross' both capture the emphatic scalar force that distinguishes this word from ordinary adjectives of size.

(4×) An emphatic demonstrative indicating extraordinary degree or magnitude — 'so great,' 'so mighty.' Each NT occurrence (2 Cor 1:10; Heb 2:3; Jas 3:4; Rev 16:18) intensifies whatever noun it modifies, whether a threat, a salvation, a ship, or an earthquake. The consistent cross-lingual rendering — Spanish 'tan grande,' French 'si grand,' German 'so gross' — shows translators uniformly read it as a scalar intensifier rather than a simple size adjective. GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: so-great | es: de-tan-grande, tan-grande, tan-grandes | fr: celui-ci, si-grand | de: so-gross 2Cor 1:10; Heb 2:3; Jas 3:4; Rev 16:18

τηρ-έω G5083 V-PPA-NMP (72×)

To watch over, guard, keep, or observe; ranging from obeying commands to protecting persons to reserving things for the future.

In the New Testament, τηρέω carries a rich range of meaning anchored in the idea of vigilant attention. Most often it describes the faithful observance of commandments and teachings — when Jesus says "if you love me, keep my commandments" (John 14:15), the word conveys not grudging compliance but attentive devotion. Hindi मानना ('to obey') and Arabic حفظ ('to preserve, observe') both capture this sense well. The word also extends to guarding persons from danger, as when Jesus prays that the Father would "keep" his disciples (John 17:11). In a handful of passages, especially in the Petrine epistles, it describes something reserved or preserved for a future purpose — an inheritance "kept in heaven" (1 Pet 1:4). Korean 예비되다 ('be reserved') and 보존된 ('preserved') neatly distinguish this third sense from the more active first two.

1. observe or obey commands (41×) The most frequent NT sense: to observe, obey, or keep commandments, teachings, words, or the law with faithful attentiveness. Hindi मानना ('to obey') and Arabic حفظ (in the sense of religious observance) confirm the core notion of careful adherence. Exemplified in Matt 28:20 ('teaching them to observe all I commanded you') and John 8:51 ('if anyone keeps my word, he shall never see death'). The emphasis falls less on mere compliance and more on vigilant, loving fidelity to what has been entrusted. GUARDING AND KEEPING en: keeping, keeps, to-keep | es: guarda, guardamos, guardando | fr: garder, préserver | de: bewahren, bewahrt Matt 23:3; Matt 28:20; Mark 7:9; John 2:10; John 8:51

2. guard or protect someone (23×) To guard, watch over, or protect a person or thing from harm, loss, or escape. This is the classical Greek core — Aristophanes and Thucydides use it of guarding walls and watching prisoners. In the NT, Jesus declares he has 'kept' his disciples in the Father's name (John 17:12), and soldiers are set to 'guard' the tomb (Matt 27:36). Hindi पहरा देना ('keep watch') and Swahili -linda ('guard, protect') capture the watchful protective aspect well. The sense shades from physical custody (Acts 12:5, Peter kept in prison) to spiritual preservation. GUARDING AND KEEPING en: I-have-kept, I-kept, I-will-keep | es: custodiaban, guarda, guardaba | fr: garder, gardez„ il-a-gardés; | de: bewahren, bewahret, bewahrt Matt 19:17; Matt 27:36; Matt 27:54; Matt 28:4; John 15:10

3. reserve or preserve for future (7×) To reserve or preserve something for a future time or purpose, typically appearing in passive constructions. Peter speaks of an inheritance 'kept in heaven for you' (1 Pet 1:4) and of the heavens and earth 'reserved for fire' (2 Pet 3:7). Korean 예비되다 ('be reserved') and Arabic محفوظ ('preserved, kept in store') isolate this sense from active guarding. The emphasis is on something being held in a state of readiness for a coming moment — whether of blessing or judgment. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: being-kept, has-been-kept, has-been-reserved | es: está-reservada, guardados, ha-sido-reservada. | fr: est-réservée., gardés, préserver | de: Bewahrten, bewahren, bewahrt-ist 1Thess 5:23; 1Pet 1:4; 2Pet 2:4; 2Pet 2:17; 2Pet 3:7

4. (1×) A single occurrence in Acts 12:5 where Peter 'was being kept' in prison — the imperfective passive highlighting the ongoing, continuous nature of his custody. While closely related to the guarding sense (sense 2), the multilingual evidence (Spanish era-custodiado, German bewahrt) shows translators treating this as a sustained state rather than a punctual act. It may represent a marginal overlap between the 'guard' and 'reserve' senses, describing someone held under watch for an impending event (his scheduled trial). GUARDING AND KEEPING en: was-being-kept | es: era-custodiado | fr: garder | de: bewahrt Acts 12:5

τήρ-ησις G5084 N-AFS (3×)

custody, keeping, imprisonment; a place or state of being guarded or held

The term carries both concrete and abstract senses: physical custody (a secure place like prison) and the act of keeping or guarding something. In secular Greek, it could mean safe-keeping of possessions, preservation of health, or observance of laws. The New Testament uses it primarily for literal imprisonment, though 1 Corinthians 7:19 extends it to the keeping or observance of God's commandments, showing how physical restraint and spiritual discipline share the same semantic root.

(3×) Two occurrences describe physical imprisonment: Acts 4:3 and 5:18 record the apostles being put in "custody" by the religious authorities in Jerusalem, temporary detention designed to intimidate and control. In striking contrast, 1 Corinthians 7:19 uses the term for "keeping" God's commandments—not imprisonment but devoted observance. The Spanish glosses (guardar, prisión), French prison, and German Bewahrung capture both the custodial location and the act of keeping. The semantic bridge between physical restraint and spiritual obedience reveals the flexibility of this custody/keeping terminology. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: custody, keeping | es: guardar, prisión | fr: prison | de: Bewahrung, τήρησιν, τηρήσει Acts 4:3; Acts 5:18; 1Cor 7:19

Τιβεριάς G5085 N-GFS (3×)

Tiberias, a city on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee, named after Emperor Tiberius

Founded around AD 20 by Herod Antipas and named to honor the Roman emperor, Tiberias became one of the major cities on the Sea of Galilee. Built over a cemetery, it was considered unclean by observant Jews, which may explain why Jesus apparently never visited it despite his extensive Galilean ministry. The lake itself came to be called the Sea of Tiberias (John 6:1, 21:1), reflecting the city's prominence. Today it remains an important city in northern Israel.

(3×) All three occurrences appear in John's Gospel. John 6:1 identifies the Sea of Galilee as "the Sea of Tiberias," providing a geographic marker for Gentile readers. John 6:23 mentions boats from Tiberias coming to the site of the feeding of the five thousand. John 21:1 again uses "Sea of Tiberias" to locate the resurrection appearance where Jesus reinstates Peter. The genitive form (of Tiberias) links the famous lake to this Roman-era city. The multilingual glosses maintain the transliteration with minor phonetic variations: Spanish Tiberiás/Tiberiádos, French Tibériade, showing the name's stability across languages. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Tiberias, of-Tiberias | es: -Tiberiás, Tiberiádos, de-Tiberiás | fr: Tibériade | de: Tiberias John 6:1; John 6:23; John 21:1

Τιβέριος G5086 N-GMS (1×)

Tiberius, Roman emperor (14-37 AD); personal name

Tiberius was the second Roman emperor, reigning from 14-37 AD

during Jesus' ministry and crucifixion. He appears in Luke 3:1, which carefully dates the beginning of John the Baptist's ministry: 'in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar.' This chronological anchor places the gospel narrative in verifiable history. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration or Latin adaptation (Tiberius, Tibérios, Tibère), recognizing this as the historical emperor. The dating ties salvation history to world history.

(1×) Personal name appearing in Luke 3:1 to date John the Baptist's ministry: 'in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Caesar's reign.' This places John's emergence around 28-29 AD, anchoring the gospel in documented Roman history. Tiberius succeeded Augustus, reigning during all of Jesus' adult life. Translators universally preserve the name, recognizing the chronological precision linking redemptive history to secular timeline. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: of-Tiberios | es: de-Tibérios | fr: Tibère | de: Τιβερίου Luke 3:1

τίθημι G5087 V-ASA-1S (100×)

To place, put, or lay something down; by extension, to appoint to a role, lay down one's life sacrificially, or resolve in one's heart.

At its core, τίθημι means to place or put something in a position — a lamp on a stand, a body in a tomb, enemies under one's feet. Yet this physical action branches into rich metaphorical territory. When God 'places' someone in a role, the word becomes 'appoint' or 'establish' (Acts 20:28; 1 Tim 1:12). Arabic shifts from waḍaᶜa (to place) to jaᶜala (to make/appoint), showing the semantic leap. Most strikingly, Jesus uses τίθημι τὴν ψυχήν — literally 'I place my life' — for the voluntary laying down of his life (John 10:11–18), a phrase so distinctive that Korean switches from the ordinary 놓다 to 내놓다 (to put out, release), capturing the sacrificial nuance.

1. place, put, lay (79×) The core physical meaning: to place, put, or lay an object or person in a location. Arabic consistently renders this with waḍaᶜa (to place), Korean with 놓다/두다 (to put/place), and Swahili with -weka (to place). This covers setting a lamp on a stand (Mark 4:21), laying a body in a tomb (Matt 27:60), and placing enemies under one's feet (Matt 22:44). The physicality is always concrete — something moves to a new position. PLACING AND LAYING

en: I-place, I-put, appointed | es: habiendo-puesto, ponga, poniendo | fr: legen, mettre, poser | de: legen, legt Matt 22:44; Matt 24:51; Matt 27:60; Mark 4:21

2. appoint, establish, set (10×) Metaphorical extension to appointment or establishment in a role or position of authority. Arabic shifts from waḍaᶜa to jaᶜala (to make/appoint) or aqāma (to raise up/establish), signaling a clear semantic departure from physical placement. Jesus tells the disciples 'I have appointed you' to bear fruit (John 15:16); God 'set' Paul as a light to the Gentiles (Acts 13:47); the Holy Spirit 'made' the Ephesian elders overseers (Acts 20:28). PLACING AND LAYING

en: I-have-made, I-have-set, appointed | es: Te-he-puesto, fueron-puestos, fui-puesto | fr: legen, mettre, poser | de: legen, legt John 15:16; Acts 13:47; Acts 20:28; Rom 4:17; 1Tim 1:12

3. lay down one's life (9×) A specialized idiomatic expression, τίθημι τὴν ψυχήν ('to place/lay down one's life'), denoting voluntary sacrificial death. Nearly all nine occurrences cluster in John 10:11–18 and 1 John 3:16. Korean distinguishes this from ordinary placement by using 내놓다 (to put out, release) rather than 놓다; Swahili shifts from -weka to -toa (to give out). The idiom is Johannine and christological, centering on the Good Shepherd's willing self-giving. PLACING AND LAYING

en: I-lay-down, I-may-offer, I-will-lay-down | es: pondrás, pondré, pone | fr: mettre, poser | de: legen John 10:11; John 10:15; John 10:17; John 10:18

4. decide, purpose, resolve (2×) An idiom of mental resolve: to set something in one's heart or to purpose a course of action (τίθημι ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ or τίθημι βουλήν). Paul 'purposed in the Spirit' to go to Jerusalem (Acts 19:21); the sailors 'decided' to run the ship aground (Acts 27:12). Arabic uses ᶜazama (to resolve/determine), showing that the physical 'placing' has become entirely internalized — one places a decision within oneself. PLACING AND LAYING

en: decided, purposed | es: propuso, pusieron | fr: mettre | de: legt Acts 19:21; Acts 27:12

τίκ-τω G5088 V-ANA (18×)

To give birth, bear a child; passively, to be born; by extension, to produce or bring forth fruit

Tikto is the fundamental Greek verb for the act of childbearing. It appears at the most pivotal moments of the New Testament narrative: the angel tells Joseph that Mary 'will bear a son' (Matt 1:21), Elisabeth gives birth to John (Luke 1:57), and the heavenly woman of Revelation brings forth a child who will rule the nations (Rev 12:2,4). In its passive form it marks the birth of Jesus as the one 'born King of the Jews' (Matt 2:2) and the Savior announced to the shepherds (Luke 2:11). Hebrews 6:7 extends the image to the earth producing vegetation. Spanish 'dar a luz' — literally 'to give to light' — beautifully captures the sense of bringing forth into visibility.

1. give birth, bear offspring (15×) To give birth, to bring forth a child from the womb. This is the dominant sense, covering the births of Jesus (Matt 1:21,25; Luke 2:7), John the Baptist (Luke 1:57), and the apocalyptic child of Revelation 12. Spanish 'dar a luz' and French 'enfanter' both emphasize the maternal act. The word carries weight and tenderness — it is the verb chosen for the Incarnation itself. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: bearing, bore, gives-birth-to | es: da-a-luz, dando-a-luz, dar-a-luz | fr: enfanter | de: gebaeren, gebiert Matt 1:21; Matt 1:23; Matt 1:25; Luke 1:31; Luke 1:57

2. be born (2×) To be born — the passive perspective on the same event. In Matt 2:2 the Magi ask 'Where is he who has been born King of the Jews?' and in Luke 2:11 the angel announces 'unto you is born this day a Savior.' The shift from active to passive highlights the child's arrival into the world rather than the mother's labor. Spanish 'nació' and German 'gebiert' mark this distinction. BIRTH BEING BORN

en: having-been-born, was-born | es: nacido, nació | fr: enfanter | de: gebiert Matt 2:2; Luke 2:11

3. produce, bring forth fruit (1×) To produce or bring forth fruit, crops, or vegetation — a metaphorical or botanical extension. In Heb 6:7, land that drinks in the rain and 'produces' a crop useful to those who farm it receives God's blessing. The Spanish 'que produce' translates this agricultural sense directly. This single occurrence shows how the birth metaphor can extend naturally from womb to earth. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: producing | es: que-produce | fr: enfanter | de: gebaeren Heb 6:7

τίλλω G5089 V-PNA (3×)

to pluck, pull out; specifically to pluck grain heads or pull out hair

The verb describes the action of pulling or plucking out, whether hair (in grief or distress) or grain heads (for eating). The New Testament uses it exclusively for the disciples' action of plucking grain on the Sabbath, an act that sparked controversy about Sabbath observance. Rabbinic law counted this as a form of harvesting, forbidden on the Sabbath, though the disciples likely saw it as permissible casual eating. The incident became a test case for Jesus' teaching on the Sabbath being made for humanity, not the reverse.

(3×) All three instances describe the same controversy across the synoptic Gospels: Matthew 12:1, Mark 2:23, and Luke 6:1 each narrate the disciples plucking (tillō) heads of grain as they walked through fields on the Sabbath. The Pharisees challenged this as unlawful Sabbath work, prompting Jesus' response about David eating the showbread and his declaration that "the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath." The multilingual glosses consistently focus on the pulling/plucking action: Spanish arrancar, French arracher, German abreissen. The specific agricultural context (grain heads) distinguishes this from general plucking. BREAKING AND UPROOTING

en: plucking, to-pluck, were-plucking | es: a-arrancar, arrancaban, arrancando | fr: arracher | de: abreissen, τίλλειν, ἔτιλλον Matt 12:1; Mark 2:23; Luke 6:1

Τιμαῖος G5090 N-GMS (1×)

Timaeus, personal name; father of blind Bartimaeus

Timaeus is the father of the blind beggar Bartimaeus ('son of Timaeus') healed by Jesus in Mark 10:46. The Aramaic name likely derives from the Hebrew root for 'unclean' or 'polluted,' though this is uncertain. Mark preserves both the Aramaic patronymic and its Greek translation, giving readers the actual name used in the community. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration (Timaeus, Timaîou, Timée, Timaeos), recognizing this as a personal identifier. The detail humanizes the miracle—this beggar had a name, a father, an identity.

(1×) Personal name in Mark 10:46 identifying blind Bartimaeus as 'son of Timaeus.' The patronymic grounds the miracle in specific history—this was a known individual in the Jericho community. Mark's inclusion of both Aramaic and Greek forms preserves local oral tradition. Translators universally preserve the name, honoring the historical particularity. The beggar is not anonymous but someone's son, known by name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: of-Timaios | es: de-Timaîou | fr: Timée | de: Timaeos Mark 10:46

τῑμάω G5091 V-AMA-2P (21×)

To honor, esteem, or show respect to a person; to set a monetary price or value on something

Timaō spans from deep personal reverence to cold commercial valuation. In most of its New Testament occurrences, it commands the honor owed to God and to parents—'Honor your father and mother' (Matt 15:4; 19:19) and 'that all may honor the Son' (John 5:23). The Spanish 'honra/honrad' and German 'ehren' underscore this relational dignity. Yet in Matthew 27:9, the same verb takes a chilling turn: the 'priced one' (ton tetimēmenon) is the Messiah, valued at thirty pieces of silver. The Spanish 'valoraron' ('they appraised') brings out this commercial sense. The juxtaposition is theologically jarring—the one who deserves infinite honor is given a slave's price.

1. honor, show respect (19×) To honor, esteem, or show reverence to a person, especially God or parents. Jesus cites the Decalogue command 'Honor your father and mother' (Matt 15:4; Mark 7:10) and condemns those who 'honor me with their lips' while their hearts are far away (Matt 15:8; Mark 7:6). The French 'honorer' and German 'ehren' both carry this sense of recognizing someone's inherent worth and dignity. Covers 19 of 21 occurrences. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: Honor, I-honor, he-will-honor | es: Honra, honra, honrad | fr: ehren, honorer | de: ehren, ehrt Matt 15:4; Matt 15:6; Matt 15:8; Matt 19:19; Mark 7:6

2. set a price, value (2×) To set a price or assign monetary value to someone or something. Appears only in Matthew 27:9, where the prophet's words are fulfilled regarding the 'price of the one on whom a price had been set' (tēn timēn tou tetimēmenou). The Spanish 'valoraron' ('they appraised') highlights the commercial transaction—Israel's leaders reducing the Messiah's worth to thirty silver coins. A rare but theologically loaded usage. HONOR AND WEIGHT

en: priced-one, they-priced | es: valorado, valoraron | fr: honorer | de: ehrt Matt 27:9

τῑμ-ή G5092 N-AFS (42×)

Honor, esteem, respect; also price or monetary value in commercial contexts.

Carries a primary sense of honor, worth, and social esteem ascribed to persons, offices, or things. Paul employs it to describe the honor God bestows (Rom 2:7, 10) and the differing honor of vessels (Rom 9:21; 2 Tim 2:20). Peter speaks of the 'honor' due to Christ as living stone (1 Pet 2:7). A clearly distinct secondary sense denotes monetary price or commercial value, as in the blood money returned for Jesus (Matt 27:6, 9) and the proceeds from property sales in the early church (Acts 4:34; 5:2-3). Spanish precio versus honor and English 'price' versus 'honor' make this split unmistakable across the witness languages.

1. honor, esteem, respect (33×) Honor, esteem, worth, or respect ascribed to a person, office, or thing. The primary and most frequent sense (33 occurrences). Multilingual evidence uniformly renders this as honor/honra (Spanish), honneur (French), Ehre (German). Used of honor due to God and Christ (1 Tim 1:17; Rev 4:9), the honor believers seek (Rom 2:7), honor within the body of Christ (1 Cor 12:23-24), and the prophet without honor (John 4:44). HONOR AND PRICE

en: honor | es: honor, honra | fr: honneur | de: Ehre John 4:44; Acts 28:10; Rom 2:7; Rom 2:10; Rom 9:21

2. price, monetary value, proceeds (9×) Monetary price, commercial value, or purchase proceeds. Clearly distinguished from the honor sense by multilingual signatures: Spanish precio, English 'price/for a price,' while French and German sometimes retain the 'honor' rendering, revealing a translational ambiguity. The blood money for Jesus' betrayal (Matt 27:6, 9), the proceeds laid at the apostles' feet (Acts 4:34; 5:2-3), and Paul's exhortation that believers were 'bought with a price' (1 Cor 6:20; 7:23) anchor this commercial usage. HONOR AND PRICE

en: for-a-price, price, prices | es: Por-precio, por-precio, precio | fr: honneur | de: Ehre Matt 27:6; Matt 27:9; Acts 4:34; Acts 5:2; Acts 5:3

τίμι-ος G5093 Adj-GMS (13×)

Precious, costly, of great value; honored, esteemed, held in high regard

The adjective τίμιος spans the distance between material worth and personal honor. Most often it describes things of intrinsic or monetary value – precious stones and gold (1 Cor 3:12, Rev 18:12), the precious blood of Christ (1 Pet 1:19), and the 'precious and very great promises' of God (2 Pet 1:4). But in two notable passages it shifts to describe persons held in social or moral esteem: Gamaliel as 'honored by all the people' (Acts 5:34) and marriage as 'held in honor among all' (Heb 13:4). The multilingual evidence neatly tracks this fork – Arabic, for instance, uses mukarram ('honored') for the personal sense but thamin ('valuable') for the material one.

1. precious, costly (11×) Precious, costly, or of great value in a material or intrinsic sense – describing objects, substances, or realities that command high worth. This covers the bulk of the NT occurrences: precious stones and gold (1 Cor 3:12, Rev 17:4, 18:12, 21:11), the 'precious blood' of Christ as of a lamb without blemish (1 Pet 1:19), God's 'precious and very great promises' (2 Pet 1:4), and the precious fruit of the earth for which the farmer waits (Jas 5:7). Acts 20:24 may also belong here, where Paul counts his life not 'precious' (valuable) to himself. Across languages the glosses cluster around words of monetary or intrinsic worth: 'preciosa/preciosas' (Spanish), 'precieux' (French), 'kostbar' (German). BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: most-precious, precious, with-precious | es: con-preciosa, preciosa, preciosas | fr: précieux | de: kostbar, τιμίαν Acts 20:24; 1Cor 3:12; Jas 5:7; 1Pet 1:19; 2Pet 1:4

2. honored, esteemed (2×) Honored, esteemed, or held in high regard – describing persons or institutions worthy of respect and social standing. In Acts 5:34 Gamaliel is called τίμιος, 'honored by all the people,' designating his reputation and authority rather than any material value. Heb 13:4 declares marriage τίμιος 'among all,' pointing to moral dignity and communal esteem. The multilingual glosses shift decisively from value-vocabulary to honor-vocabulary: 'Honroso/honrado' (Spanish), 'Honorable/honored' (English), and Arabic mukarram ('honored') – a clear semantic boundary from the 'precious/costly' sense. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: Honorable, honored | es: Honroso, honrado | fr: précieux | de: kostbar, τίμιος Acts 5:34; Heb 13:4

τιμι-ότης G5094 N-GFS (1×)

costliness, magnificence, luxury; the quality of being precious or expensive

This noun refers to costliness or magnificent luxury. In Revelation 18:19, it appears in the lament over Babylon's fall: 'all who had ships on the sea grew rich by her wealth/costliness.' The term emphasizes the precious, expensive quality of goods and the luxury they represented. Classical usage included dignity and honor as well as material costliness. Spanish 'opulencia' (opulence) and German

'Kostbarkeit' (preciousness) both capture the luxury and value dimension. This is wealth manifested in precious commodities.

(1×) Found in Rev 18:19 describing the source of maritime wealth: 'all who had ships grew rich by her costliness/wealth.' The noun emphasizes the precious, expensive nature of Babylon's trade goods. The lament mourns lost luxury and profit. Classical background of both material costliness and social dignity enriches the economic critique. Cross-linguistic evidence ('costliness,' 'opulencia,' 'Kostbarkeit') confirms the emphasis on expensive magnificence. HONOR AND PRICE

en: costliness | es: opulencia | fr: magnificence | de: Kostbarkeit Rev 18:19

Τιμόθεος G5095 N-GMS (24×)

Timothy — Paul's most trusted co-worker and spiritual son, recipient of two pastoral epistles

Timotheos (Timothy, 'one who honors God') is Paul's closest and most frequently mentioned ministry partner, appearing 24 times by name in the New Testament. A native of Lystra with a Jewish mother (Eunice) and a Greek father, Timothy was personally recruited by Paul during the second missionary journey and circumcised to remove a barrier to Jewish ministry (Acts 16:1-3). From that point he became Paul's constant representative, sent on sensitive missions to Thessalonica (1 Thess 3:2, 6), Corinth (1 Cor 4:17; 16:10), Philippi (Phil 2:19-23), and Ephesus (1 Tim 1:3). Paul calls him 'my beloved and faithful child in the Lord' (1 Cor 4:17) and 'my true child in the faith' (1 Tim 1:2). Timothy is named as co-sender in six Pauline letters (2 Corinthians, Philippians, Colossians, 1-2 Thessalonians, Philemon), and two epistles — 1 and 2 Timothy — are addressed directly to him with instructions for church leadership. Hebrews 13:23 notes his release from imprisonment. Spanish 'Timoteo,' French 'Timothee,' and German 'Timotheus' preserve the Greek form.

Timotheos (24×) The proper name of Paul's most trusted co-worker and delegate, from Greek Timotheos ('honoring God'). Recruited at Lystra as a young disciple of mixed Jewish-Greek parentage (Acts 16:1-3), he became Paul's foremost emissary to troubled churches (1 Thess 3:2; 1 Cor 4:17; Phil 2:19-23). Co-sender of six Pauline letters (2 Cor 1:1; Phil 1:1; Col 1:1; 1 Thess 1:1; 2 Thess 1:1; Phlm 1:1), addressee of two Pastoral Epistles (1 Tim 1:2; 2 Tim 1:2), and mentioned in Hebrews 13:23 regarding his release. Paul's affection — 'my beloved child' (1 Cor 4:17), 'like a son with a father' (Phil 2:22) — is unmatched among his associates. Spanish 'Timoteo,' French 'Timothee.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Timotheos | es: Timóthee, Timótheon, Timótheos | fr: Timothée | de: Timotheus, Τιμόθεον, Τιμόθεος Acts 16:1; Acts 17:14; Acts 17:15; Acts 18:5; Acts 19:22

Τίμων G5096 N-AMS (1×)

Timon, personal name; one of the seven deacons in Acts 6

Timon was one of the seven men chosen in Acts 6:5 to serve the Jerusalem church by overseeing the daily distribution to widows. The Greek name means 'honorable' or 'worthy.' He appears only in this list of the seven, showing the early church's care to preserve the names of those who first formalized servant leadership. Cross-linguistic evidence consistently transliterates the name (Timon, Tímōn, Timon), recognizing this as a specific historical person. These names aren't incidental—they honor the Spirit-filled servants who helped resolve the church's first crisis.

(1×) Personal name appearing in Acts 6:5 as one of seven men chosen for serving widows: 'Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicolas.' These Hellenistic Jewish believers were selected for their good reputation, Spirit-fullness, and wisdom. Timon represents the early church's commitment to organized, faithful service. Translators preserve the name, honoring this otherwise unknown servant whose faithful service merited inclusion in Scripture's record. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Timōn | es: a-Tímōn | fr: Timon | de: Τίμωνα Acts 6:5

τῑμωρ-έω G5097 V-PPA-NMS (2×)

to punish, avenge, exact retribution

This verb carries the sense of exacting punishment or vengeance, particularly as an official act of retribution. In classical usage it could describe avenging a slain relative or friend. Paul uses it twice in his defense speeches to describe his former persecution of Christians—he sought to punish them or make them worthy of punishment. The word emphasizes the active pursuit of retribution rather than passive judgment.

(2×) Drawing from classical usage where τιμωρέω meant to exact vengeance or punishment (often for blood relatives), Paul twice describes his pre-conversion zeal in punishing Christians. In Acts 22:5 and 26:11, the verb captures his active role as a persecutor seeking to bring believers to punishment, not merely approving of their execution but zealously pursuing their condemnation. PUNISH PENALIZE en: punishing, they-might-be-punished | es: castigando, fueran-castigados | fr: punir | de: τιμωρηθῶσιν, τιμωρῶν Acts 22:5; Acts 26:11

τῑμωρ-ία G5098 N-GFS (1×)

punishment, vengeance; retributive justice or penalty

This noun means punishment or vengeance, emphasizing retributive justice rather than corrective discipline. In Hebrews 10:29, it appears in the warning: 'How much worse punishment do you think will be deserved by those who have trampled the Son of God?' The term stresses the severity of judgment for those who despise grace. Classical usage distinguished this from corrective punishment—this is penalty exacted for wrong done. Spanish 'castigo' and French 'châtiment' both convey punitive justice. This is deserved retribution, not rehabilitative discipline.

(1×) Found in Heb 10:29 describing the severe punishment awaiting those who reject Christ: 'How much worse punishment will be deserved by one who has trampled the Son of God?' The rhetorical question emphasizes the proportionate severity—if Mosaic lawbreakers died, how much greater the punishment for spurning the greater covenant? Cross-linguistic evidence ('punishment,' 'castigo,' 'châtiment') confirms the retributive, judicial character of coming judgment. LOCUSTS AND SWARMS

en: punishment | es: castigo | fr: châtiment | de: Strafe Heb 10:29

τίνω G5099 V-FIA-3P (1×)

to pay penalty, suffer punishment; to undergo retribution for wrongdoing

This verb means to pay penalty or undergo punishment for wrong. In 2 Thessalonians 1:9, Paul describes the fate of those who reject the gospel: 'They will pay the penalty of eternal destruction.' The verb emphasizes the judicial nature of eschatological judgment—this is debt paid, penalty exacted. Classical usage included paying fines or suffering consequences. The cross-linguistic rendering shows consistent judicial emphasis: Spanish 'pagarán' (they will pay), French preserving Greek form, German 'büssen' (atone/pay). This is justice satisfied through penalty.

(1×) Appears in 2 Thess 1:9 describing the judgment awaiting those who don't know God and don't obey the gospel: 'They will pay the penalty of eternal destruction.' The verb emphasizes the judicial, retributive character—this is consequence owed and exacted. Classical background of legal payment and penalty enriches the forensic imagery. Cross-linguistic evidence ('pay,' 'pagarán,' 'büssen') confirms this as judicial penalty for rejecting the gospel. PUNISH PENALIZE en: will-pay | es: pagarán | fr: τίσουσιν | de: buessen 2Thess 1:9

τις G5100 IPro-AMP (528×)

Indefinite pronoun: someone, anyone, something, anything; as adjective, 'a certain, some'; in plural, 'some, certain ones.'

The Greek indefinite pronoun tis/ti is one of the most frequent and grammatically flexible words in the New Testament, quietly doing essential work in nearly every chapter. As an enclitic (unstressed) form, it contrasts with the accented interrogative tis ('who?'), and this stress distinction carries real semantic weight. In its substantive use it creates the anonymous figures who populate the Gospels — 'a certain man,' 'someone in the crowd,' 'a certain woman' — giving narrative texture without requiring names. The multilingual evidence shows how differently languages handle indefiniteness: Spanish alguien/algo, German jemand/etwas, Korean 어떤 사람/무엇, and Arabic ahadun/shay'an all split the person/thing distinction that Greek tis leaves grammatically ambiguous, resolved only by gender and context. Luke especially favors tis as a storytelling device, introducing parable characters with 'a certain man had...' (Luke 15:11; 16:1, 19).

1. someone, anyone (person) (217×) Substantive indefinite pronoun referring to an unspecified person: 'someone, anyone, a certain one' — 217 occurrences. This is the core pronominal use where tis stands alone as subject or object meaning 'somebody.' In Matt 16:24 'if anyone wishes to come after me,' the indefiniteness creates an open invitation; in Matt 12:29 'how can anyone enter a strong man's house,' it poses a rhetorical challenge. Spanish alguien/alguno, German jemand, Korean 누군가/어떤 사람, Arabic ahadun, and Swahili mtu yeyote all converge on person-referring indefinite pronouns. The negative context ei tis ('if anyone... not') is especially common in Johannine and Pauline discourse. INDEFINITE PRONOUN

en: anyone | es: alguien, alguno, nadie | fr: quelqu'un | de: jemand Matt 8:28; Matt 11:27; Matt 12:19; Matt 12:29; Matt 16:24

2. some, certain ones (plural) (122×) Plural indefinite pronoun: 'some, certain ones, some of them' — 122 occurrences where tines refers to an unspecified subgroup within a larger set. In Matt 9:3 'some of the scribes said,' Matt 16:28 'some standing here,' and Matt 28:11 'some of the guard' — the word picks out a subset without identifying individuals. Spanish algunos, German einige, Korean 어떤 이들, and Arabic ba'duhum all select dedicated plural-indefinite forms. This sense is particularly important in Acts and the Epistles for describing factions and dissenting groups ('some from James,' Gal 2:12; 'some were persuaded,' Acts 28:24). INDEFINITE PRONOUN

en: some | es: algunos | fr: quelqu'un | de: jemand Matt 9:3; Matt 12:38; Matt 16:28; Matt 27:47; Matt 28:11

3. a certain, some (modifier) (99×) Adjectival or determiner use modifying a noun: 'a certain, some' — 99 occurrences where tis functions not as a standalone pronoun but as an adjective introducing a specific-but-unnamed referent. Luke's parabolic introductions are the classic examples: 'a certain priest' (Luke 10:31), 'a certain man' (Luke 15:11), 'a certain rich man' (Luke 16:1). German ein gewisser, Spanish cierto, Korean 어떤, and Arabic wahidun/ma all function as indefinite articles or adjectives here. This use is particularly Lukan — nearly half of all instances occur in Luke-Acts, where tis + noun creates the characteristic 'once upon a time' opening of the parables. INDEFINITE PRONOUN

en: a-certain, a-certain-one, certain | es: cierta, cierto, de-cierto | fr: quelqu'un | de: jemand Mark 14:51; Luke 1:5; Luke 7:2; Luke 7:36; Luke 7:41

4. something, anything (thing) (89×) Substantive indefinite pronoun referring to an unspecified thing: 'something, anything' — 89 occurrences where the neuter ti means 'some thing' rather than 'some person.' In Matt 5:23 'if you... remember that your brother has something against you,' and Mark 8:23 Jesus asks the blind man 'do you see anything?' Spanish algo, German etwas, Korean 무엇/어떤 것, and Arabic shay'an all select dedicated thing-referring indefinites distinct from person-referring forms. The grammatical ambiguity of Greek tis (where only context distinguishes 'someone' from 'something') is resolved differently in each target language, making this cross-linguistically one of the clearest sense boundaries. INDEFINITE PRONOUN

en: any, anything, something | es: algo | fr: quelqu'un | de: jemand Matt 5:23; Matt 18:28; Matt 20:20; Matt 21:3; Mark 8:23

5. (1×) A single occurrence at Luke 8:45 where Jesus asks 'Who touched me?' — here the manuscript tradition and context suggest tis may function at the boundary between indefinite ('someone touched me') and interrogative ('who touched me?'). The gloss evidence (English 'Who,' Spanish quien) treats it as interrogative, but the enclitic form suggests Peter's response is paraphrasing Jesus' statement that 'someone' touched him. This textual and functional ambiguity at the indefinite-interrogative boundary represents a real edge case in Greek pronoun semantics, where stress (written accent) carries the entire semantic distinction. INTERROGATIVE WHO

en: Who | es: quién | fr: quelqu'un | de: jemand Luke 8:45

τίς G5101 IPro-GNS (570×)

Interrogative pronoun: what, which, who, whom, why; rarely indefinite 'someone, something.'

The Greek interrogative pronoun τίς is the New Testament's all-purpose question word, covering persons ('who?'), things ('what?'), and reasons ('why?'). Its flexibility comes from Greek's case system — the same root word shifts meaning with prepositions and grammatical context. When Jesus asks τί μεριμνᾶτε ('why are you anxious?', Matt 6:28), the accusative neuter functions causally. Spanish carefully distinguishes 'quién' (who) from 'qué' (what) and 'por qué' (why), revealing three distinct semantic slots that Greek bundles into one versatile pronoun. A handful of occurrences shade into indefinite meaning — 'someone' or 'anything' — blurring the line between question and assertion.

1. what / which (interrogative, things) (327×) Interrogative pronoun asking about the identity, nature, or selection of a thing, event, or concept: 'what?', 'which?', 'what kind?' This is the most frequent use (327 occurrences). Jesus asks τί ποιήσει ὁ κύριος ('what will the master do?') and τί ὑμῖν δοκεῖ ('what do you think?'). Spanish 'qué' and German 'was' consistently render this thing-oriented interrogation, while French 'qui' sometimes conflates person and thing senses. INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

en: -, what | es: qué | fr: qui | de: was Matt 5:13; Matt 5:47; Matt 6:3; Matt 6:25

2. who (interrogative, persons) (170×) Interrogative pronoun asking about the identity of a person: 'who?', 'whom?', 'whose?' (170 occurrences). In Matt 3:7, τίς ὑπέδειξεν ὑμῖν — 'who warned you to flee?' Spanish 'quién' and German 'wer' clearly mark the person-directed question, a distinction the Greek form carries through case inflection rather than a separate lexeme. INTERROGATIVE WHO

en: What, Who, Whom | es: Quién, cuál, quién | fr: qui | de: was, wer Matt 3:7; Matt 6:27; Matt 7:9; Matt 10:11; Matt 12:11

3. why (interrogative, causal) (69×) Causal interrogative meaning 'why?', 'for what reason?', 'to what purpose?' (69 occurrences), typically appearing as τί or διὰ τί in prepositional phrases. In Matt 8:26, Jesus asks the disciples τί δειλοί ἐστε — 'why are you fearful?' Spanish splits this into 'por qué' (cause) and 'para qué' (purpose), revealing a distinction that the Greek leaves ambiguous. Found frequently in Jesus' rebukes and challenges. INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

en: Why, why | es: Por-qué, para-qué, por-qué | fr: qui | de: was Matt 6:28; Matt 7:3; Matt 8:26; Matt 16:8; Matt 17:10

4. someone or something (indefinite) (4×) Rare indefinite pronoun meaning 'someone,' 'something,' 'anything,' 'a certain one' (4 occurrences). In Mark 4:22, οὐ γάρ ἐστίν τι κρυπτόν — 'for there is not anything hidden.' Spanish '(algo)' and 'alguno' and French 'quoi' capture the shift from interrogative to indefinite force. This usage is more common in classical Greek but surfaces occasionally in the New Testament when context removes the question-mark expectation. INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

en: anything, certain, one | es: (algo), alguno, algunos | fr: qui, quoi | de: was Mark 4:22; Mark 6:36; Acts 24:18; Rom 8:24

τίτλ-ος G5102 N-AMS (2×)

a title, inscription, placard (Latin titulus)

This Latin loanword refers to an inscription or placard, particularly the type posted above a crucified person to declare the charge against them. John uses it twice to describe the notice Pilate had written and fastened to Jesus' cross: 'Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews.' The inscription was multilingual (Hebrew, Latin, Greek) so all could read it, and its placement over Jesus ironically proclaimed a truth Pilate didn't fully grasp.

(2×) Borrowed from Latin titulus, this term designates the official inscription posted above a crucifixion victim. Both occurrences (John 19:19-20) refer to the placard Pilate ordered placed on Jesus' cross. The trilingual inscription declared Jesus' identity as King of the Jews, readable by all in the cosmopolitan environment of Jerusalem—an unintended proclamation of truth by a skeptical governor. SCRIPTURE AND WRITING

en: a-title, title | es: título | fr: inscription | de: Aufschrift John 19:19; John 19:20

Τίτος G5103 N-GMS (14×)

Titus — a proper name referring primarily to Paul's Gentile co-worker and, in one textual variant, to Titius Justus.

Titos is the Greek form of the Latin name Titus, most prominently designating Paul's trusted companion and apostolic delegate. Though absent from Acts' narrative of Paul's journeys, Titus appears frequently in the Corinthian correspondence as Paul's envoy to that troubled church (2 Cor 2:13; 7:6, 13; 8:6, 16, 23) and as the recipient of a pastoral letter concerning his work in Crete (Titus 1:4). A single occurrence in Acts 18:7 reflects a textual variant where some manuscripts read 'Titius Justus' rather than 'Justus,' possibly indicating a distinct individual — a God-fearing Roman whose house adjoined the Corinthian synagogue.

1. Titus (companion of Paul) (13×) The proper name Titus (Greek Τίτος), Paul's Gentile co-worker whom he calls 'my true child in a common faith' (Titus 1:4). Titus served as Paul's delegate to Corinth during the collection crisis (2 Cor 8:6, 16, 23) and later oversaw the churches of Crete. The name is consistently transliterated across languages — Spanish 'Títos,' Hindi 'titos,' Arabic 'tīṭus' — confirming a stable proper-noun referent with no semantic drift across the 13 occurrences. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Titos, of-Titos, to-Titos | es: Títos, a-Títos, de-Títos | fr: Tite, Τίτον, Τίτος | de: Titius 2Cor 2:13; 2Cor 7:6; 2Cor 7:13; 2Cor 7:14; 2Cor 8:6

2. Titius (variant personal name) (1×) A variant proper name Titius (Greek Τίτιος), appearing only at Acts 18:7 in certain manuscript traditions. This refers to Titius Justus, a God-fearer in Corinth whose house was next to the synagogue. The textual variation is reflected in translation diversity: some languages render it identically to sense 1, while others (e.g., Spanish 'Títios,' German 'Τιτίου') preserve the distinct spelling, suggesting early scribal awareness that this may be a different individual from Paul's companion. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Titios | es: Títios | fr: Tite | de: Τιτίου Acts 18:7

τοί G5104

the (plural nominative); epic and poetic forms of the definite article or demonstrative pronoun

These forms (τοί, ταί) served as epic and poetic equivalents of the standard Attic article forms οἱ and αἱ (nominative plural). Homer used them freely, while they rarely appeared in Ionic prose or tragedy but were standard in Doric and certain other dialects. In some dialects they functioned as the regular definite article, as when Syracusan Greek said 'Hieron and the Syracusans' using τοί. The forms represent the ancient dialectal diversity of Greek before Attic became the dominant literary standard. They remind us that biblical Greek stood at the end of a long tradition where different communities spoke recognizably distinct varieties of the language.

τοιγάρ G5105 Conj (2×)

therefore, accordingly, for that very reason

This strengthened inferential particle draws a conclusion from what precedes. It's more emphatic than simple 'therefore,' carrying the sense of 'for that very reason' or 'well then.' Paul uses it in 1 Thessalonians to connect the Holy Spirit's indwelling with the serious consequences of rejecting sexual purity. Hebrews employs it to draw the conclusion that since we're surrounded by witnesses, we should run our race with endurance.

(2×) The emphatic particle τοιγαροῦν (a strengthened form of τοιγάρ) appears in 1 Thess 4:8 drawing the weighty conclusion that rejecting moral instruction means rejecting God who gives the Spirit, and in Heb 12:1 inferring from the cloud of witnesses that believers should run with perseverance. Both contexts use the particle to mark a significant logical consequence. THEREFORE PARTICLES

en: Therefore, therefore | es: Por-tanto, por-tanto | fr: deshalb | de: deshalb 1Thess 4:8; Heb 12:1

τοίνυν G5106 Conj (3×)

therefore, then, accordingly; an inferential particle drawing a logical conclusion

This conjunction marks logical consequence or introduces a conclusion based on what precedes. Slightly more emphatic than the common oun (therefore), toinun appears rarely in the New Testament but was frequent in classical dialogue and philosophical discourse. It often introduces a practical application or response to an argument. The particle combines toi (an emphatic marker) with nun (now), creating a sense of "well then" or "so then" that moves from premise to conclusion with some rhetorical force.

(3×) The three occurrences show varied rhetorical functions: Luke 20:25 concludes Jesus' teaching on the tribute question: "Render therefore (toinun) to Caesar the things that are Caesar's." First Corinthians 9:26 applies Paul's athletic metaphor: "Therefore (toinun) I run not as uncertainly." Hebrews 13:13 draws a consequence: "Let us therefore (toinun) go to him outside the camp." The Spanish glosses (Entonces, pues), French donc, and German daher all convey logical inference. While less common than oun, toinun adds a measured, somewhat formal tone to the conclusion being drawn. THEREFORE PARTICLES

en: Then-, so-then, therefore | es: Entonces, pues | fr: daher, donc | de: daher, Τοίνυν Luke 20:25; 1Cor 9:26; Heb 13:13

τοιόσδε G5107 DPro-GFS (1×)

such, of such a kind; demonstrative pronoun indicating quality or character

This demonstrative pronoun means 'such' or 'of such a kind,' pointing to quality or character. In 2 Peter 1:17, it describes the voice from heaven at the transfiguration: 'when such a voice was borne to him by the Majestic Glory.' The term emphasizes the distinctive quality of the divine voice—nothing ordinary but transcendent communication. Classical usage indicated 'such as this' with evaluative implications. Cross-linguistic rendering varies (Spanish 'tal,' French 'celui-ci,' German 'solch'), but all point to the distinctive character or quality of what's referenced.

(1×) Found in 2 Pet 1:17 describing the voice at Jesus' transfiguration: 'when such a voice came to him from the Majestic Glory: This is my beloved Son.' The demonstrative emphasizes the quality and character of the divine voice—majestic, authoritative, unmistakable. Peter appeals to this eyewitness experience as validation. Cross-linguistic evidence ('such,' 'tal,' 'solch') consistently emphasizes the qualitative, distinctive nature of God's voice. SUCH (KIND/TYPE)

en: such | es: tal | fr: celui-ci | de: solch 2Pet 1:17

τοιοῦτος G5108 DPro-DMP (59×)

Such, of such a kind; referring to persons, qualities, or things of a described character

A demonstrative pronoun that points to the quality or character of something already described or implied — 'such a one,' 'of this kind,' 'such things.' In the Gospels, Jesus uses it to identify the kind of person who belongs to the kingdom ('of such is the kingdom of God,' Matt 19:14; Mark 9:37). Paul employs it to characterize types of conduct or people (Rom 1:32; 2:2). German 'solch/solches' and Spanish 'tal/tales' consistently mirror this qualitative pointing, directing attention not to a specific individual but to a type or character.

1. such a person, such ones (33×) Substantive use referring to a person or persons of a certain described character — 'such a one,' 'such people.' Jesus declares that the kingdom belongs to 'such as these' (Matt 19:14; Mark 9:37), pointing to a category of person defined by childlike qualities. Paul similarly refers to 'such ones' who practice certain behaviors (Gal 6:1; 2 Thess 3:12). The Spanish 'tal/tales' and German 'solch' both capture this substantivized force: it is the person-as-type that matters, not a named individual. SUCH (KIND/TYPE) en: such, such-a-one, such-one | es: tal, tales | fr: tel | de: solch, solches Matt 19:14; Mark 6:2; Mark 7:8; Mark 7:13; Mark 9:37

2. of such a kind, such (16×) Adjectival or qualifying use describing the nature, kind, or quality of something — 'such power,' 'such a thing.' When crowds see Jesus' healings, they marvel that 'such authority' was given to men (Matt 9:8). Mark uses it to describe afflictions 'such as' have not been since creation (Mark 13:19). The Spanish 'con tales' ('with such') and French 'tel' highlight the qualifying, characterizing function: the word modifies a noun to specify its remarkable or noteworthy kind. SUCH (KIND/TYPE)
en: such, such-, with-such | es: Tal, con-tales, tal | fr: celui-ci, tel | de: solch, solches Matt 9:8; Matt 18:5; Mark 4:33; Mark 13:19; Acts 16:24

3. such things, such matters (10×) Substantive use referring to things, matters, or abstract realities of a certain kind — 'such things,' 'such matters.' Paul employs this sense in moral argumentation: those who practice 'such things' deserve judgment (Rom 1:32; 2:2–3). Luke uses it when Herod wonders about 'such things' he hears concerning Jesus (Luke 9:9). The Spanish 'tales cosas' ('such things') and German 'solches' point to the neuter, abstract quality — these are not persons but deeds, reports, or realities of a described character. SUCH (KIND/TYPE) en: such, such-things | es: tales, tales-cosas | fr: celui-ci, tel | de: solch, solches Luke 9:9; Acts 19:25; Rom 1:32; Rom 2:2; Rom 2:3

τοῖχος G5109 N-VMS (1×)

wall of a building or enclosure

In Acts 23:3, Paul uses this term in his sharp rebuke to the high priest Ananias, calling him a 'whitewashed wall'—a vivid metaphor for hypocrisy, something that appears clean and proper on the outside but conceals corruption within. The word typically refers to the wall of a house, temple, or courtyard, a solid structure meant to protect or enclose. Paul's choice of imagery draws on the prophetic tradition of denouncing false appearances.

(1×) The single New Testament occurrence appears in Paul's confrontation before the Sanhedrin, where the physical reality of a wall becomes a powerful metaphor for religious pretense. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'pared', French 'tel', German retaining the Greek) all point to a structural wall, though the context demands understanding the metaphorical force of Paul's accusation—comparing a supposedly righteous judge to a façade that conceals what it truly is. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: wall | es: pared | fr: tel | de: τοῖχε Acts 23:3

τόκος G5110 N-DMS (2×)

interest, profit from loaned money

Though the Greek word originally meant childbirth or offspring, by the Hellenistic period it had developed the financial meaning of interest on money. The metaphorical connection lies in the idea of money 'giving birth' to more money. Both Gospel uses appear in the parable of the talents (or minas), where the master rebukes the fearful servant who didn't even deposit the money with bankers to earn interest.

(2×) The semantic shift from 'offspring' (classical τόκος) to 'interest' (financial return) reflects the metaphor of money 'bearing' or 'producing' gain. In the parallel passages Matt 25:27 and Luke 19:23, the master chides the unproductive servant who should have at least earned interest (τόκος) by banking the entrusted funds, making the parable's point about minimal expected stewardship. INTEREST USURY
en: interest | es: interés | fr: intérêt | de: jemand Matt 25:27; Luke 19:23

τολμ-άω G5111 V-PSA-3S (16×)

To dare, venture boldly; to summon courage for an action others would shrink from, or to exhibit boldness as a disposition.

Rooted in the ancient Greek τολμάω, this verb captures the moment when hesitation gives way to action. In the Gospels it often marks a turning point: after the crucifixion, Joseph of Arimathea 'dared' to ask Pilate for the body of Jesus (Mark 15:43), and the religious leaders no longer 'dared' to question Jesus (Matt 22:46; Luke 20:40). Paul uses it to speak of apostolic boldness, contrasting timidity with the courage that faith demands (2 Cor 11:21). The multilingual evidence is telling — Spanish 'atreverse' and French 'oser' both carry the sense of overcoming inner reluctance, while German 'wagen' emphasizes the risk involved.

1. dare to do something (13×) To venture or presume to do a specific action, implying that the deed requires boldness because others might hesitate or refuse. The construction typically takes an infinitive complement: the Pharisees 'no longer dared to ask him anything' (Matt 22:46; Luke 20:40), and the disciples 'did not dare to ask' the risen Lord who he was (John 21:12). Spanish 'atreverse' and French 'oser' consistently capture the sense of overcoming reluctance before a particular deed. DARE BE BOLD
en: I-will-dare, dared, dares | es: atreverme, atreverse, me-atreveré | fr: oser, pas | de: wagen, wagte-er, ἐτόλμα Matt 22:46; Mark 12:34; Luke 20:40; John 21:12; Acts 5:13

2. be bold or courageous (3×) To exhibit boldness or courage as an inner disposition rather than toward a specific action. Joseph of Arimathea 'having taken courage' (τολμήσας) went to Pilate (Mark 15:43), where the participle describes his state of heart. Paul's use in 2 Cor 11:21 similarly frames daring as a quality of character. The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'habiendo osado,' German 'wagen' — highlight the dispositional, state-like quality distinct from a targeted venture. DARE BE BOLD en: I-am-bold, having-courage, is-bold | es: habiendo-osado, me-atrevo, se-atreva | fr: oser | de: wagen Mark 15:43; 2Cor 11:21

τολμ-ηρός G5112 Adv (1×)

more boldly, with greater daring or confidence

Paul uses this comparative adverb in Romans 15:15 to characterize how he has written to the Roman church—with a certain boldness or freedom of speech. The term derives from the vocabulary of courage and daring, suggesting a confidence that goes beyond mere politeness. Paul acknowledges that his letter may seem quite direct or frank, yet this boldness serves his apostolic calling to remind them of essential truths. The word captures the balance between respectful communication and prophetic forthrightness.

(1×) This comparative form emphasizes a heightened degree of boldness. In Romans 15:15, Paul admits to writing 'more boldly' as he addresses foundational issues with a church he did not found. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'más atrevidamente', French 'hardiment', German 'kühner'—all convey the sense of increased daring or confidence, appropriate for an apostle who must speak truth even when it might seem presumptuous. DARE BE BOLD en: more-boldly | es: más-atrevidamente | fr: hardiment | de: kuehner Rom 15:15

τολμ-ητής G5113 N-NMP (1×)

daring, bold, or audacious persons

In 2 Peter 2:10, this noun describes false teachers characterized by their audacity and presumption. The word denotes those who are bold in a negative sense—not the courage of faith, but the arrogance of self-will. These individuals are unafraid to speak against divine authority and angelic powers, exhibiting a recklessness that reveals their spiritual danger. The term stands in stark contrast to the humility and reverence expected of God's people.

(1×) Peter uses this term to label the false teachers who infiltrate the church with their presumptuous teachings. The Greek root conveys boldness that crosses into recklessness—these are people who dare to blaspheme and disregard sacred boundaries. The multilingual glosses —Spanish 'atrevidos', French and German retaining the Greek root —capture this sense of audacious defiance that characterizes those who reject proper authority and reverence. DARE BE BOLD en: daring | es: atrevidos | fr: τολμηταὶ | de: verwegen 2Pet 2:10

τόμος G5114 Adj-NMS-C (1×)
sharper, more cutting or penetrating
Hebrews 4:12 famously declares that the word of God is sharper than any two-edged sword. This comparative adjective emphasizes the superior penetrating power of Scripture—it cuts through human pretense, dividing soul and spirit, joints and marrow, discerning the thoughts and intentions of the heart. The image is both surgical and judicial, suggesting precision and authority. No human weapon or word can match the discerning edge of God's living word.

(1×) The author of Hebrews employs this comparative to establish the supremacy of God's word over all other instruments of discernment. The multilingual renderings—Spanish 'más cortante', French 'plus tranchant', German 'schärfer'—all emphasize the intensified cutting power. This isn't merely about physical sharpness but about the spiritual capacity to expose and judge the innermost realities of human existence, penetrating where nothing else can reach. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS en: sharper | es: más-cortante | fr: plus-tranchant | de: schaerfer Heb 4:12

τόξον G5115 N-ANS (1×)
bow, the weapon used for shooting arrows
In Revelation 6:2, the rider on the white horse carries a bow, part of John's apocalyptic vision of conquest and judgment. The bow was an ancient weapon associated with warfare, hunting, and power—particularly characteristic of eastern armies like the Persians and Parthians. In classical literature, the bow often symbolized distant, penetrating force, the ability to strike from afar. John's vision draws on this rich symbolism to depict divine sovereignty over the forces of history.

(1×) The single New Testament occurrence appears in the opening of the seven seals, where the first horseman emerges bearing this weapon. The multilingual agreement—Spanish 'arco', French and German 'Bogen'—confirms the military instrument. In the ancient Mediterranean world, the bow carried associations of both conquest (eastern empires were famous for their archers) and divine judgment, as Apollo was often depicted with bow in hand. Revelation's imagery taps into these layers of meaning. BOW WEAPON RAINBOW en: a-bow | es: arco | fr: Bogen | de: Bogen Rev 6:2

τόπαζος G5116 N-NNS (1×)
topaz, a green or yellow precious gemstone
Among the foundations of the New Jerusalem described in Revelation 21:20, topaz appears as one of the precious stones adorning the eternal city. Ancient topaz was likely what we now call chrysolite or peridot, a stone of greenish-golden hue prized for its beauty and rarity. The prophetic vision employs these gems to communicate the incomparable splendor and value of God's final dwelling with humanity. Each stone contributes to a picture of glory beyond earthly imagination.

(1×) John's description of the heavenly city includes topaz among twelve foundation stones, each representing transcendent beauty and worth. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'topacio', French and German 'Topas'—preserve the gemstone's name across languages, though ancient identification of specific stones sometimes differs from modern taxonomy. The green hue traditionally associated with this stone would contribute to the kaleidoscope of colors symbolizing the diverse glory of God's kingdom. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH
en: topaz | es: topacio; | fr: Topas | de: Topas Rev 21:20

τόπος G5117 N-GMS (94×)
Place — a physical location, region, or designated spot; sometimes a position, opportunity, or space in a figurative sense Topos is the standard Greek word for 'place' in both its literal and extended senses. In the Gospels it designates specific geographic locations — the 'deserted place' where Jesus feeds the multitude (Matt 14:13, 15), Golgotha 'the place called the Skull' (Matt 27:33), and the 'holy place' of Daniel's prophecy (Matt 24:15). Acts and the Epistles occasionally extend it toward 'opportunity' or 'position' ('give place to wrath,' Rom 12:19; 'give no place to the devil,' Eph 4:27). Revelation deploys it cosmically: the places of heaven and earth (Rev 6:14; 12:8; 20:11). Spanish 'lugar,' French 'lieu,' and German 'Ort' parallel this range from concrete geography to abstract opportunity.

place, location, position (94×) A physical location, spot, region, or designated area, covering the full range from specific named sites to general spaces. In the Gospels topos identifies particular locations in the narrative landscape — deserted places (Matt 14:13), holy places (Matt 24:15), and named localities (Matt 27:33). Epistolary usage extends toward abstract 'room' or 'opportunity' — giving no place to the devil (Eph 4:27). Spanish 'lugar,' French 'lieu,' and German 'Ort' all preserve this literal-to-figurative gradient across the word's 94 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Place, a-place, place | es: lugar | fr: lieu | de: Ort Matt 14:13; Matt 14:15; Matt 14:35; Matt 24:15; Matt 26:52

τοσοῦτος G5118 DPro-AMP (20×)
So much, so many, so great; a demonstrative of quantity, number, or degree.
Tosoutos is a correlative demonstrative pronoun that points emphatically at quantity or degree – 'this many,' 'this much,' 'this great.' It often carries a note of wonder or rebuke: how could so many signs not produce faith (John 12:37)? Have you been with me so long and still not known me (John 14:9)? The author of Hebrews uses it in comparisons – Christ is 'by so much' superior to angels (Heb 1:4) – and the great cloud of witnesses is 'so great' (Heb 12:1). Its emotional coloring makes it more than a mere number word; it registers astonishment.

1. so many, such a number (8×) So many – referring to a countable plurality whose impressive number is being highlighted. Jesus marvels that so many loaves cannot feed the crowd (Matt 15:33); the elder son protests he served so many years (Luke 15:29); despite so many signs, the crowd did not believe (John 12:37). Spanish 'tantos/tantas' and French 'tant' both capture the emphatic count. Eight occurrences carry this discrete-quantity force. GREATNESS AND DEGREE
en: So-long, So-many, so-many | es: -tantos, Tantas, Tanto | fr: autant, celui-ci, tant | de: so-gross, τοσαῦτα, τοσοῦτοι Matt 15:33; Luke 15:29; John 6:9; John 12:37; John 14:9

2. so much, to such degree (7×) So much, to such a degree – quantifying something uncountable or abstract, often in correlative constructions. Ananias sells land 'for so much' (Acts 5:8); Christ is superior 'by so much' as his name surpasses the angels (Heb 1:4; 7:22). Spanish 'tanto mas' and the repeated comparative structures mark degree rather than count. Seven occurrences emphasize this scalar, non-discrete usage. GREATNESS AND DEGREE
en: and-, by-so-much, for-so-much | es: por-tanto, tanto, tanto-más | fr: autant, celui-ci | de: so-gross, τοσούτου Acts 5:8; Heb 1:4; Heb 4:7; Heb 7:22

3. so great, such magnitude (5×) So great, of such magnitude – emphasizing the impressive size or quality of something. The centurion's faith is 'so great' that Jesus marvels (Matt 8:10; cf. Luke 7:9); the cloud of witnesses is 'so great' (Heb 12:1); Babylon's riches are destroyed in one hour – 'so great' wealth laid waste (Rev 18:17). Spanish 'tan grande' and German 'so gross' show the qualitative-magnitude dimension. Five occurrences carry this sense.

GREATNESS AND DEGREE

en: so-great, such | es: tan-grande, tan-grande?, tanta | fr: celui-ci, tant | de: so-gross, τοσαύτην, τοσοῦτον Matt 8:10; Matt 15:33; Luke 7:9; Heb 12:1; Rev 18:17

τότε G5119 Adv (160×)

Then; at that time, marking temporal sequence or logical consequence in narrative

Tote is Matthew's signature narrative connector, appearing far more frequently in his Gospel than in any other New Testament book. It marks the next beat in a sequence of events — 'then Jesus was led into the wilderness' (Matt 4:1), 'then Herod secretly called the Magi' (Matt 2:7). While sometimes purely temporal, it often carries a sense of consequential flow: because this happened, then that followed. Its consistent rendering across languages — 'entonces' (Spanish), 'alors' (French), 'dann' (German) — confirms a stable adverbial function with no ambiguity.

then (160×) A temporal adverb meaning 'at that time' or 'then,' used 160 times to mark sequential progression in narrative or to introduce the next event in a chain. Especially prominent in Matthew's Gospel as a structural connective (Matt 2:7, 3:13, 4:1), tote links episodes and signals logical consequence. Every surveyed language renders it with a straightforward temporal adverb — Spanish 'entonces,' French 'alors,' German 'dann' — with no semantic divergence across the translation corpus. THEN (TEMPORAL ADVERB)

en: Then, then | es: Entonces, entonces | fr: alors | de: dann Matt 2:7; Matt 2:16; Matt 2:17; Matt 3:5; Matt 3:13

τό G5120

the; definite article or demonstrative/relative pronoun with complex dialectal history

This entry covers ὁ, ἡ, τό in its multiple overlapping functions across Greek dialects and historical periods. In Attic prose it served primarily as the definite article ('the'), a relatively late development in Greek. In Homer it could still function as a demonstrative ('this, that') or even as a relative pronoun ('who, which'). The forms show bewildering dialectal variation: different dialects preserved different case forms, particularly in dual and less common cases. Modern grammarians debate whether nominative forms were originally oxytone or unaccented. This word represents one of the most fundamental elements of Greek syntax, evolving from demonstrative origins to grammatical article, while retaining traces of older functions in poetry.

ἐναντίος G5121 Adv-C (3×)

on the contrary, contrariwise; a strong adversative marker indicating opposition to what was expected

This adverb introduces a sharp contrast, marking something as the opposite of what might be expected or what was just mentioned. It's a contracted form (tounantion from to enantion) that intensifies the reversal. All three New Testament uses appear in Paul and Peter, introducing surprising reversals: forgiving instead of punishing, accepting rather than rejecting, blessing rather than cursing. The phrase signals that God's ways often run counter to human instinct and social convention.

(3×) Each occurrence marks a dramatic reversal: 2 Corinthians 2:7 urges the Corinthians to forgive and comfort the repentant sinner, "on the contrary" to excluding him—grace instead of punishment. Galatians 2:7 shows Peter and the Jerusalem leaders recognizing that Paul was entrusted with the gospel to the uncircumcised, "on the contrary" to needing their authorization—unexpected apostolic equality. First Peter 3:9 commands blessing those who curse you, "on the contrary" to retaliating—the ethic of enemy love. The multilingual glosses (Spanish al contrario, French au contraire, German im Gegenteil) uniformly capture the strong adversative force of this kingdom-reversing particle. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES en: on-the-contrary | es: al-contrario, por-el-contrario | fr: au-contraire, τοὐναντίον | de: im-Gegenteil 2Cor 2:7; Gal 2:7; 1Pet 3:9

ὀνομάζω G5122 Adv-C (1×)

by name, namely (adverbial form)

In Matthew 27:57, this adverbial form introduces Joseph of Arimathea by name. The expression serves as a literary device to specify or highlight a particular individual, drawing attention to their identity. It's the evangelist's way of saying 'namely' or 'specifically'—Joseph, who would play a crucial role in Jesus' burial, is brought into focus. The term reflects careful narrative technique, ensuring readers know precisely who this important figure was.

(1×) Matthew uses this construction to identify Joseph of Arimathea at a pivotal moment in the passion narrative. The multilingual evidence shows various strategies for handling this adverbial phrase—Spanish 'de nombre', French 'appelé', German retaining the Greek—all attempting to capture the sense of formal naming or specification. This grammatical marker signals that what follows is not just any disciple, but one whose name and identity matter for the unfolding story of Jesus' death and burial. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: name | es: de-nombre | fr: appelé | de: τοὔνομα Matt 27:57

τουτέστι G5123

that is (to say); explanatory formula introducing clarification or restatement

This is a contracted form of τοῦτ᾽ ἔστι, literally 'this is,' used as an explanatory or clarifying formula meaning 'that is (to say)' or 'in other words.' It functioned like modern parenthetical clarifications, allowing writers to restate something in different terms or provide additional specificity. New Testament authors used it when defining terms, explaining concepts, or ensuring readers understood the significance of what was just stated. The contraction into a single word made it a standard discourse marker, smoothly introducing explanatory material without disrupting narrative or argument flow. It helped bridge the gap between technical or foreign terms and Greek readers' understanding.

οὗτος G5124

this (neuter singular); neuter nominative and accusative forms of the demonstrative 'this'

This is τοῦτο, the neuter singular nominative and accusative form of the demonstrative pronoun οὗτος, meaning 'this thing' or 'this.' In Greek, where abstract concepts and neuter nouns abounded, this form saw constant use. It could refer to statements ('this saying'), events ('this thing that happened'), or abstract ideas ('this truth'). The neuter form was particularly important for referring back to entire clauses or propositions—'this that was just said.' Biblical writers used it to mark significant statements, point to miraculous signs, or indicate divine purposes. The accusative function made it essential for expressing 'I do this' or 'seeing this' in Greek syntax.

οὗτος G5125

these (neuter plural dative); dative plural form of 'these things' or 'by these means'

This is τούτοις, the neuter plural dative form of the demonstrative, meaning 'to/for these things,' 'by these means,' or 'in these matters.' The neuter plural was crucial in Greek for referring to abstract collections, multiple facts, or classes of things. The dative case indicated indirect objects, means, or location ('in these things'). Biblical writers used it for phrases like 'by these means,' 'to these matters,' or 'in these circumstances.' It allowed compact reference to multiple items or complex situations without repetition. The form was especially common in theological and ethical discourse where writers needed to refer to sets of principles, teachings, or conditions previously mentioned.

οὗτος G5126

this (masculine/neuter singular oblique); genitive and dative forms of 'this' for masculine/neuter reference

This covers τούτου (genitive singular masculine/neuter, 'of this') and τούτῳ (dative singular masculine/neuter, 'to/for this'). The genitive marked possession ('of this man'), source ('from this'), or relationship, while the dative indicated indirect objects, means, or location ('in this'). Since Greek distinguished masculine from neuter only in nominative and accusative singular forms, these oblique cases served both genders. Biblical texts used these forms constantly to maintain reference to previously mentioned masculine or neuter nouns—persons, concepts, times, or places—across complex sentence structures without tedious repetition. The forms were syntactic glue holding discourse together.

οὗτος G5127

of this, by this; genitive singular neuter of the demonstrative, marking source or means

This is τούτου in its specific neuter singular genitive function, meaning 'of this thing' or 'from this.' While the form was identical to the masculine genitive, context determined whether it referred to masculine persons or neuter concepts. In neuter usage it often appeared in phrases indicating source ('from this'), cause ('because of this'), or partitive relationships ('part of this'). Biblical writers used it in theological statements about the source of grace, the reason for judgment, or the nature of spiritual realities. The neuter genitive was particularly important for abstract reasoning and explanatory statements that characterized New Testament epistles.

οὗτος G5128

these (neuter plural accusative); accusative plural form pointing to multiple things or facts

This is ταῦτα, the neuter plural accusative form meaning 'these things' as direct objects. It was among the most frequently used forms in Greek prose and biblical texts, allowing writers to refer back to multiple items, teachings, events, or abstract concepts. In discourse, 'hearing these things' or 'seeing these things' or 'doing these things' constantly structured narrative and argument. The neuter plural captured collections of facts, teachings, or circumstances without specifying gender or counting discrete items. Jesus's sayings often concluded with 'he who has ears to hear these things,' while apostolic letters urged readers to 'remember these things' or 'practice these things.'

οὗτος G5129

by this, in this way; dative singular neuter indicating means, manner, or location

This is τούτῳ in its neuter dative function, meaning 'by this,' 'in this way,' or 'for this reason.' While identical in form to the masculine dative, its neuter usage indicated means, manner, or cause rather than persons. Phrases like 'by this we know' or 'in this way it was fulfilled' structured biblical theological argument. The dative of means was particularly important in explaining how divine purposes were accomplished or how spiritual realities could be recognized. Biblical writers used it to connect abstract principles with concrete outcomes, showing the mechanism or indicator by which truths could be understood or verified.

οὗτος G5130

these (masculine/feminine plural); plural demonstrative forms pointing to persons or things

This covers τούτων (genitive plural, 'of these'), τούτοις (dative plural, 'to/for these'), and τούτους/ταύτας (accusative plural, 'these' as direct objects). These forms served all three genders in oblique plural cases, though the accusative distinguished masculine (τούτους) from feminine (ταύτας). They enabled reference to groups of people, collections of things, or sets of concepts without repetition. Biblical narratives used these forms to track disciples, authorities, teachings, or events across complex passages. In apostolic instruction, phrases like 'to these' or 'of these' connected ethical commands with specific groups or categories of believers, while 'these things' gathered clusters of theological truths into manageable units.

τράγος G5131 N-GMP (4×)

A male goat, he-goat; used in the NT exclusively for sacrificial animals in cultic contexts.

Refers specifically to a male goat, distinguished in Greek from the generic 'aix' (she-goat). All four New Testament occurrences appear in Hebrews, where the author contrasts the blood of goats and bulls with the once-for-all sacrifice of Christ. The French 'boucs' and Spanish 'machos cabrios' both specify the male gender of the animal, underscoring that these were not just any goats but the particular victims prescribed for Levitical atonement rituals. The rhetorical force in Heb 10:4 — 'it is impossible for the blood of bulls and goats to take away sins' — depends on recognizing these as the most solemn offerings available.

(4×) A male goat designated for sacrificial use, especially in Day of Atonement rituals. All four NT occurrences (Heb 9:12,13,19; 10:4) contrast the blood of goats with the superior sacrifice of Christ. The French 'boucs' and Spanish 'machos cabríos' both explicitly mark the masculine gender, reflecting the Levitical requirement for male animals. The word evokes the entire Old Covenant sacrificial system that Hebrews argues has been superseded. GOATS AND GOAT HAIR

en: goats, of-goats | es: de-machos-cabríos, machos-cabríos | fr: boucs | de: Boecke Heb 9:12; Heb 9:13; Heb 9:19; Heb 10:4

τράπεζ-α G5132 N-NFS (15×)

A table — primarily for dining and fellowship, but also a money-changer's counter or bank

The ordinary Greek word for a table, appearing across the New Testament in scenes of eating, hospitality, and sacred meals. The Syrophoenician woman's plea about crumbs falling from the master's table (Matt 15:27; Mark 7:28) and the rich man's table from which Lazarus longed for scraps (Luke 16:21) both use trapeza for the dining surface. Paul employs it theologically for the Lord's table versus the table of demons (1 Cor 10:21). In one specialized instance (Luke 19:23), it refers to a money-changer's counter — a 'bank' — as Spanish 'banco' makes strikingly clear.

1. table (for eating/serving) (14×) A table used for meals, banquets, or ceremonial dining — the surface around which hospitality, fellowship, and sacred eating take place. Covers the Lord's table (1 Cor 10:21), the tables Jesus overturned in the temple (Matt 21:12; Mark 11:15 — these were commercial tables, but grouped with the dining cluster by usage pattern), and the domestic tables in parables. Translations are remarkably uniform: Spanish 'mesa,' French 'table,' German 'Tisch.' The apostles' declaration in Acts 6:2 that they should not neglect the word to 'serve tables' uses this sense for daily food distribution. TABLE FURNITURE

en: of-table, table, tables | es: de-mesa, mesa, mesas | fr: Tisch, table | de: Tisch Matt 15:27; Matt 21:12; Mark 7:28; Mark 11:15; Luke 16:21

2. money-changer's table, bank (1×) A money-changer's table functioning as a financial counter or bank. In Luke 19:23, the master asks why the servant did not deposit his money 'at the bank' (literally 'upon the table'). Spanish uniquely shifts from 'mesa' to 'banco' here, directly revealing the specialized commercial sense. This usage reflects the ancient practice where bankers conducted transactions at public tables — the etymological ancestor of modern 'bank' (from Italian 'banca,' a bench or counter). TABLE FURNITURE

en: a-table | es: banco | fr: table | de: Tisch Luke 19:23

τραπεζῖτ-ης G5133 N-DMP (1×)

bankers, money changers, financial professionals

In the parable of the talents (Matthew 25:27), Jesus refers to bankers or money changers—those who could receive deposits and pay interest. These financial professionals operated in the ancient marketplace, providing services like currency exchange and investment opportunities. The servant's excuse for burying his talent is exposed as inadequate precisely because even the minimal effort of depositing money with bankers would have yielded some return. The reference assumes a functioning financial system familiar to Jesus' audience.

(1×) The parable employs this term to highlight the accountability expected of those entrusted with the Master's resources. Even the most cautious course—depositing with bankers rather than risking investment—would have been better than doing nothing. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'banqueros', French 'banquier', German preserving the Greek—all point to financial intermediaries. The term grounds Jesus' parabolic teaching in the economic realities of first-century Palestine, where banking operations were well established. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12789 WITH 3 SENSES

en: bankers | es: banqueros | fr: banquier | de: τραπεζίταις Matt 25:27

τραῦμα G5134 N-ANP (1×)

wounds, injuries inflicted on the body

The Good Samaritan story in Luke 10:34 uses this word to describe the injuries suffered by the man attacked by robbers. These are physical wounds requiring immediate care—bandaging, oil, and wine for cleansing and healing. The term carries the weight of suffering and vulnerability, highlighting the victim's desperate need for compassion. The Samaritan's response to these wounds becomes the paradigm for neighborly love, crossing ethnic and religious boundaries to meet urgent human need.

(1×) Luke's parable centers on wounds that demand mercy rather than religious excuses. The Samaritan sees the injuries and acts, while religious professionals pass by. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'heridas', French 'blessure', German retaining the Greek—consistently emphasizes physical trauma. These wounds serve both as literal medical emergencies within the story and as symbolic of humanity's broader brokenness, which only genuine compassion can address. The term grounds Jesus' ethical teaching in bodily reality. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: wounds | es: heridas | fr: blessure | de: τραύματα Luke 10:34

τραυμᾰτ-ίζω G5135 V-RPM/P-AMP (2×)

to wound, injure violently

This verb describes inflicting physical wounds or injuries. Luke uses it in the parable of the wicked tenants, where successive servants are wounded and thrown out, and again in the account of the seven sons of Sceva, where the demon-possessed man overpowers them and leaves them wounded and naked. Both contexts emphasize violent physical assault.

(2×) The verb τραυματίζω denotes violent wounding. In Luke 20:12 (the parable of the tenants), it's the third servant who is wounded and cast out, escalating the violence sequence. Acts 19:16 describes how the demonized man wounded the would-be exorcists (sons of Sceva), demonstrating supernatural strength that left them traumatized—a sobering warning about unauthorized spiritual combat. SLAIN WOUNDED

en: having-wounded, wounded | es: habiendo-herido, heridos | fr: blesser | de: τετραυματισμένους, τραυματίσαντες Luke 20:12; Acts 19:16

τρᾰχηλ-ίζω G5136 V-RPM/P-NNP (1×)

laid bare, exposed, disclosed completely

Hebrews 4:13 declares that all things are laid bare and exposed before God's eyes. This verb, used in wrestling contexts for gripping an opponent by the neck, here conveys total disclosure—nothing can hide from divine scrutiny. The imagery is vivid and almost uncomfortable: every creature stands naked and defenseless before the One to whom we must give account. The word captures the inescapable reality of God's omniscience, stripping away all pretense and concealment.

(1×) The author of Hebrews chooses this graphic term to emphasize humanity's complete vulnerability before God. While the word originally described a wrestling hold or the posture of a sacrificial victim with throat bared, here it becomes a powerful metaphor for absolute exposure. The multilingual renderings—Spanish 'expuestas', French 'dépouillé', German 'entblößt'—all capture the sense of being laid open or uncovered. Nothing remains hidden when we stand before the penetrating word and gaze of God. NECK (BODY PART)

en: laid-bare | es: expuestas | fr: dépouillé | de: entbloesst Heb 4:13

τράχηλος G5137 N-AMS (7×)

The neck or throat; the front and sides of the neck, used both literally and in figurative expressions of burden or affection.

Designates the neck as a physical body part, appearing in the NT in two vivid contexts. First, in the millstone sayings (Matt 18:6; Mark 9:42; Luke 17:2), a heavy stone is hung 'around the neck' before drowning — a grim image of judgment. Second, in the parable of the prodigal son (Luke 15:20), the father 'fell on his neck' in an embrace of welcome — the same body part now a site of tender reunion. In Acts 15:10, Peter speaks of placing a 'yoke upon the neck' of Gentile believers. Spanish 'cuello,' French 'cou,' and German 'Hals' all render it straightforwardly as the anatomical neck.

(7×) The neck or throat — the anatomical front and sides of the neck. Used literally but in highly figurative contexts: a millstone hung around the neck as an image of catastrophic judgment (Matt 18:6; Mark 9:42; Luke 17:2), the father falling on the prodigal's neck in joyful embrace (Luke 15:20), and the metaphorical yoke placed on the neck of Gentile converts (Acts 15:10). Spanish 'cuello,' French 'cou,' German 'Hals' all render it uniformly, confirming a single consistent referent across the tradition. NECK (BODY PART)

en: neck | es: cuello | fr: cou | de: Hals, τράχηλον Matt 18:6; Mark 9:42; Luke 15:20; Luke 17:2; Acts 15:10

τρᾱχ-ύς G5138 Adj-AMP (2×)

rough, rugged, rocky, jagged

This adjective describes terrain that is rough, jagged, or difficult to traverse. Luke uses it in quoting Isaiah's prophecy about preparing the Lord's way—rough places shall be made smooth. In Acts, it describes rocky places where the shipwrecked sailors feared being driven and destroyed. The word evokes both physical topography and metaphorical obstacles.

(2×) From classical usage describing jagged stones or rugged terrain, τραχύς appears in Luke 3:5 quoting Isaiah's highway-preparation prophecy where rough ways (τραχεῖαι) become smooth, symbolizing removing obstacles to God's coming. Acts 27:29 uses it literally for the rocky places (τραχεῖς τόπους) the storm-driven sailors feared would wreck them, adding geographical specificity to the shipwreck narrative. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: rocky, rough | es: escabrosas, rocosos | fr: Troas, raboteux | de: τραχεῖαι, τραχεῖς Luke 3:5; Acts 27:29

Τραχωνῖτις G5139 N-GFS (1×)

Trachonitis, a rough volcanic region south of Damascus

Luke 3:1 mentions Trachonitis as part of the tetrarchy ruled by Philip, helping to establish the historical setting for John the Baptist's ministry. The name derives from the Greek word for 'rough' or 'rocky,' aptly describing the volcanic terrain of this region. By specifying such geographical and political details, Luke demonstrates the historical precision of his gospel—these events didn't occur in mythical time but in the real world of Roman administration, under identifiable rulers governing specific territories.

(1×) Luke's genealogy of rulers establishes the historical coordinates for the gospel story, and Trachonitis forms part of that geographical framework. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name with slight variations in spelling. This rough, basaltic region south of Damascus was known for its difficult terrain and sometimes served as refuge for bandits. By naming it, Luke grounds the ministry of John—and by extension, Jesus—in concrete historical and geographical reality rather than vague religious legend. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Trachōnitis | es: Trachōnítis | fr: Trachonite | de: Τραχωνίτιδος Luke 3:1

τρεῖς G5140 Adj-NNP (70×)
treis – three; the cardinal number, often carrying symbolic weight in Scripture
The cardinal number treis ('three,' neuter tria) appears 70 times in the New Testament. From the earliest times three held special significance in Greek and Semitic cultures alike, and the New Testament intensifies this: three days in the heart of the earth (Matt 12:40), three measures of flour (Matt 13:33), Peter's three denials and three affirmations, the three witnesses of 1 John 5:8. The word declines across all three genders (treis masculine/feminine, tria neuter) and occurs in genitive (trion) and dative (trisin) forms, but none of these inflections creates a distinct sense. Spanish tres, French trois, and German drei map to it with perfect uniformity.

three (70×) The cardinal numeral three, used for literal counting and for theologically significant groupings throughout the New Testament – three days (Matt 12:40; 1 Cor 15:4), three witnesses (Matt 18:16; 2 Cor 13:1), three tabernacles at the Transfiguration (Matt 17:4). All grammatical forms (nominative, genitive, dative; masculine, feminine, neuter) converge in cross-lingual evidence: Spanish tres, French trois, German drei, confirming a single undifferentiated numeral sense. NUMBER THREE en: three | es: tres | fr: trois | de: drei Matt 12:40; Matt 13:33

τρέμω G5141 V-PPA-NFS (4×)
To tremble, quake, or shake with fear; to be physically overwhelmed by awe, dread, or reverence.
Describes an involuntary physical response of shaking or trembling, typically provoked by fear, awe, or the sudden awareness of divine presence. In Mark 5:33 the woman healed of bleeding comes 'trembling' before Jesus, and Luke 8:47 recounts the same scene. Acts 9:5 (in some manuscripts) shows Saul trembling on the Damascus road. Second Peter 2:10 speaks of celestial beings before whom others tremble. The Spanish 'temblando' and German 'zittern' both convey the visceral, bodily nature of the reaction — this is not mere mental anxiety but whole-body quaking.

(4×) To shake or quake involuntarily from fear, awe, or the overwhelming awareness of a powerful presence. Mark 5:33 and Luke 8:47 depict the hemorrhaging woman trembling as she confesses before Jesus, while Acts 9:5 captures Saul's terror at the risen Christ's voice. In 2 Pet 2:10 the word evokes the dread that angelic beings rightly inspire. The Spanish 'temblando' and German 'zittern' both emphasize the physical, bodily dimension of this fear-response, distinguishing it from purely cognitive anxiety. TERROR AND AGITATION en: they-tremble, trembling | es: temblando, tiemblan | fr: trembler, τρέμουσιν | de: zittern, {τρέμων, τρέμουσα Mark 5:33; Luke 8:47; Acts 9:5; 2Pet 2:10

τρέφω G5142 V-PSA-3P (9×)
To feed, nourish, nurse, fatten, or rear; covering physical sustenance, breastfeeding, self-indulgent excess, and long-term upbringing of a child.
A foundational verb of sustenance that stretches from God feeding the ravens (Luke 12:24) to the rich fattening themselves for judgment (Jas 5:5). At its core, tréphō means providing nourishment, but the New Testament deploys it across a remarkable range: divine provision for birds and humans, a region supplying food to a royal household (Acts 12:20), maternal nursing (Luke 23:29), and the long-term rearing of a child in a hometown (Luke 4:16). Arabic and Korean translations helpfully disambiguate the nursing and child-rearing senses that Greek leaves to context. The verb carries an undertone of dependence – those fed by tréphō rely on a provider greater than themselves.

1. feed, nourish, sustain (6×) To provide food or sustenance to a person or creature. This is the broadest and most frequent sense (6 occurrences), encompassing God's feeding of the birds (Matt 6:26, Luke 12:24), the righteous feeding the hungry (Matt 25:37), Tyre and Sidon depending on Herod's territory for food supply (Acts 12:20), and the woman nourished in the wilderness (Rev 12:6). Spanish alimenta and German nährt both capture the ongoing, habitual nature of the provision. The theological weight is clearest in Jesus' argument from lesser to greater: if God feeds the ravens, how much more his children. FEEDING AND NOURISHING en: feeds, she-is-nourished, they-might-nourish | es: alimenta, es-alimentada, la-alimenten | fr: nourrir | de: naehren, nährt Matt 6:26; Matt 25:37; Luke 12:24; Acts 12:20; Rev 12:6

2. nurse, suckle (1×) To nurse or suckle an infant at the breast. Used in Luke 23:29, where Jesus on the road to Calvary pronounces a blessing on breasts that never nursed. Arabic ‘ and Swahili kunyonyeza specifically denote suckling, confirming this specialized biological sense. Spanish criaron here carries the nursing connotation rather than general feeding, distinguishing it from the broader sustenance meaning. FEEDING AND NOURISHING
en: nursed | es: criaron | fr: nourrir | de: nährt Luke 23:29

3. fatten, indulge (1×) To fatten or indulge oneself through excess. James 5:5 denounces the wealthy who have 'fattened their hearts in a day of slaughter,' using tréphō metaphorically for self-indulgent luxury that stores up judgment. Spanish engordasteis ('you fattened yourselves') captures the reflexive, excessive quality. This sense inverts the positive connotations of nourishment, transforming provision into condemnation through surfeit. FEEDING AND NOURISHING en: you-fattened | es: engordasteis | fr: nourrir | de: naehren Jas 5:5

4. rear, bring up (1×) To rear or bring up a child over an extended period. Luke 4:16 describes Jesus as having been 'brought up' in Nazareth, referring to years of childhood nurture rather than a single meal. Arabic ڗ ('was raised') and Korean 양육된 ('was reared') both confirm the long-term developmental meaning. This sense emphasizes formation and environment rather than mere caloric intake, connecting physical place with personal identity. FEEDING AND NOURISHING en: having-been-brought-up | es: criado | fr: nourrir | de: nährt Luke 4:16

τρέχω G5143 V-PPA-NMP (20×)
To run; literally of swift movement on foot, figuratively of striving in the race of faith or of a message spreading.
Trecho is one of the most kinetic verbs in the New Testament. In the Gospels it captures raw physical urgency: the women run from the empty tomb (Matt 28:8), the father runs to embrace his prodigal son (Luke 15:20), Peter and the beloved disciple race to the grave (John 20:2-4). Paul then seizes the athletic image for the spiritual life, drawing on the Greek stadium: 'I have run the race' (Gal 2:2; Phil 2:16). Hebrews 12:1 urges believers to 'run with endurance.' In one striking extension, Paul prays that 'the word of the Lord may run' – may spread swiftly and unhindered (2 Thess 3:1).

1. run physically (14×) To run physically – swift bodily movement toward or away from something. A bystander runs to fill a sponge with vinegar (Matt 27:48; Mark 15:36); the women run from the tomb in trembling joy (Matt 28:8); a demoniac runs and bows before Jesus (Mark 5:6); the father of the prodigal runs to embrace him (Luke 15:20). Spanish 'correr' and German 'laufen' uniformly render this literal sense. Fourteen of twenty occurrences are plainly physical. RUNNING AND RACING
en: having-run, he-ran, one-running | es: Corre, Corrían, corred | fr: courir, laufen | de: laufen, läuft Matt 27:48; Matt 28:8; Mark 5:6; Mark 15:36; Luke 15:20

2. strive in a race (5×) To strive in a race – the metaphorical use drawn from Greek athletic competition. Paul asks the Galatians 'who hindered you from running well?' (Gal 5:7) and declares he did not 'run in vain' (Gal 2:2; Phil 2:16). Hebrews 12:1, with its stadium imagery of witnesses, urges 'let us run with endurance.' Spanish 'corramos' and the shared athletic metaphor across languages confirm the figurative extension. Five occurrences carry this agonistic sense. RUNNING AND RACING en: I-ran, I-run, let-us-run | es: Corríais, corra, corramos | fr: laufen | de: laufen Gal 2:2; Gal 5:7; Phil 2:16; Heb 12:1

3. spread rapidly (1×) To spread rapidly – said of a message advancing without hindrance. Second Thessalonians 3:1 asks prayer 'that the word of the Lord may run,' personifying the gospel as a runner. Spanish 'corra' retains the verb but the image shifts from legs to proclamation. This solitary occurrence shows the word's capacity for abstract extension. RUNNING AND RACING

en: may-run | es: corra | fr: laufen | de: laufen 2Thess 3:1

τριάκοντα G5144 Adj-ANP (11×)

Thirty — the cardinal number, appearing in agricultural yields, monetary amounts, and age/duration references

The indeclinable numeral τριάκοντα (triakonta) means 'thirty' and appears in theologically significant contexts. In the parable of the sower, some seed yields thirtyfold (Matt 13:8, 23; Mark 4:8, 20). Judas betrays Jesus for thirty pieces of silver (Matt 26:15), which he returns in remorse (Matt 27:3) and the priests use to buy the potter's field (Matt 27:9), echoing Zechariah 11:12-13. Jesus was 'about thirty years old' when he began his ministry (Luke 3:23). The Bethesda invalid had been ill thirty-eight years (John 5:5). Paul reckons 430 years from promise to law (Gal 3:17). Spanish 'treinta' and Arabic 'thalathin' map directly.

(11×) The cardinal number thirty, used for agricultural yield (Matt 13:8, 23; Mark 4:8, 20 — thirtyfold harvest), monetary sums (Matt 26:15; 27:3, 9 — the thirty silver coins of Judas' betrayal), age (Luke 3:23 — Jesus about thirty at his ministry's start), duration (John 5:5 — thirty-eight years of illness), and chronological reckoning (Gal 3:17 — four hundred and thirty years). The betrayal price of thirty silver pieces echoes Zechariah 11:12-13, linking it to the prophetic tradition of Israel's undervaluation of its shepherd. Spanish 'treinta,' Hindi 'tis,' and Korean 'samship' all render the numeral directly. NUMBER THIRTY

en: thirty | es: treinta | fr: dreissig, trente | de: dreissig, dreißig Matt 13:8; Matt 13:23; Matt 26:15; Matt 27:3; Matt 27:9

τριᾱκόσιοι G5145 Adj-GNP (2×)

three hundred (in number)

This simple numeral marks an amount in both Gospel accounts: the value in denarii of the precious ointment poured on Jesus. The indignant observers protested this 'waste,' calculating the perfume's worth at nearly a year's wages for a laborer. The specific amount heightens the sense of extravagance and provides historical economic detail.

(2×) The cardinal number τριακόσιοι appears in the parallel accounts (Mark 14:5, John 12:5) where onlookers value the precious ointment at more than three hundred denarii—representing nearly a full year's wages for a common worker. The precise figure emphasizes the extraordinary cost and the magnitude of the worshipful 'waste' Jesus defends against the critics' economic pragmatism. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: for-three-hundred, three-hundred | es: trescientos | fr: trois-cents | de: dreihundert Mark 14:5; John 12:5

τρίβολος G5146 N-GMP (2×)

thistles, thorny plants (especially Tribulus terrestris, caltrops)

This term designates various prickly, thorny plants, particularly the caltrop or puncture vine. In both uses, thistles represent worthless or harmful growth. Jesus uses them in the Sermon on the Mount as an example of bad fruit that reveals a corrupt tree. Hebrews employs them as the negative yield of land that receives God's blessing (rain) but produces thorns instead of crops—land in danger of being cursed.

(2×) Drawing from botanical terminology for prickly plants like Tribulus terrestris, τρίβολοι symbolize worthless or harmful produce. Matt 7:16 contrasts grapes with thorns and figs with thistles to illustrate how bad trees bear bad fruit. Heb 6:8 uses thistles and thorns as the cursed yield of land that receives rain but fails to produce useful crops—a metaphor for apostate hearts. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: thistles | es: abrojos | fr: Disteln, chardon | de: Disteln, τριβόλων Matt 7:16; Heb 6:8

τρίβος G5147 N-AFP (3×)

path, track, beaten way; a well-worn route or course of travel

A tribos is a worn path created by repeated use—a track beaten down by many feet. It differs from a formal road (hodos) in being more rustic and humble, though tribos can also metaphorically describe one's course of life or conduct. The New Testament uses it only in the synoptic quotation of Isaiah 40:3, where preparing the Lord's way involves making his "paths" straight. The image evokes both the ancient practice of preparing roads for royal visits and the spiritual preparation needed to receive the Messiah.

(3×) All three occurrences are the identical quotation from Isaiah 40:3 in Matthew 3:3, Mark 1:3, and Luke 3:4, introducing John the Baptist's ministry: "Make straight his paths (tribous)." The parallelism with "prepare the way of the Lord" shows tribos as synonymous with the route or course the Lord will travel. The Spanish sendas, French sentier, and German Pfad all denote paths or tracks, often smaller than main roads. The plural form emphasizes the multiple aspects of preparation needed—both physical (removing obstacles) and spiritual (repentance)—to ready the way for God's arrival. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: paths | es: sendas | fr: sentier | de: Pfad, τρίβους Matt 3:3; Mark 1:3; Luke 3:4

τρῐ̆ετ-ία G5148 N-AFS (1×)

period of three years, triennium

In Acts 20:31, Paul reminds the Ephesian elders of his three-year ministry among them, marked by tears and constant warning night and day. This substantial period demonstrates Paul's pastoral commitment—he didn't offer superficial teaching but invested deeply in the spiritual formation of the church. The three years allowed for thorough instruction, relationship building, and demonstration of Christian life. Paul's reference to this duration underscores the seriousness of his warning about threats facing the church after his departure.

(1×) Paul's farewell speech to the Ephesian elders emphasizes the duration and intensity of his pastoral care. Three years represents significant investment—long enough to establish doctrine, model Christian living, and build deep relationships. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'por tres años', French 'trois ans', German preserving the Greek—all specify this temporal extent. The length of Paul's ministry makes his tearful warnings about future false teachers all the more poignant; he has earned the right to speak, having poured himself into their spiritual wellbeing. YEAR (TIME UNIT)

en: for-three-years | es: por-tres-años | fr: trois-ans | de: τριετίαν Acts 20:31

τρίζω G5149 V-PIA-3S (1×)

to grind or gnash the teeth

In Mark 9:18, this verb describes one of the symptoms afflicting the demon-possessed boy—teeth grinding, often associated with seizures or extreme distress. The physical manifestation points to the spiritual bondage tormenting the child. The grinding of teeth appears elsewhere in Scripture as an expression of rage or anguish (as when people gnash their teeth at Stephen), but here it's part of a medical-spiritual crisis that Jesus' disciples cannot resolve. The term captures the violent, involuntary nature of the boy's suffering.

(1×) Mark's account of the demon-possessed boy includes this disturbing detail among other symptoms like foaming at the mouth and rigidity. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'rechina', French 'grincer', German 'knirschen'—all convey the harsh, grinding action. The verb emphasizes the destructive power of demonic affliction, manifesting in physical symptoms that terrify and incapacitate. Jesus' subsequent deliverance demonstrates divine power over both spiritual oppression and its bodily effects, restoring the boy to wholeness. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11871 WITH 3 SENSES

en: grinds | es: rechina | fr: grincer | de: knirschen Mark 9:18

τρῑμην-ος G5150 Adj-ANS (1×)

three months, a three-month period

Hebrews 11:23 mentions that Moses' parents hid him for three months after his birth, defying Pharaoh's decree to kill Hebrew male infants. This specific duration shows both parental love and faith—they saw something special in the child and dared to protect him despite the danger. Three months was as long as they could conceal an infant before the risk became too great, at which point they entrusted him to God through the ark of bulrushes. The timeframe highlights the parents' courage and the providence that preserved Israel's future deliverer.

(1×) The author of Hebrews celebrates the faith of Moses' parents, who hid him for this specific period despite royal threats. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'tres meses', French and German 'drei Monate'—consistently specifies the duration. Three months represents the limit of their ability to hide a growing, active baby in secret. Their faith sustained them through this dangerous period, and their courage in both hiding and then releasing Moses into God's care made possible the entire exodus narrative. The precise timeframe emphasizes the historical reality of their act of faith. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: three-months | es: tres-meses | fr: drei-Monate | de: drei-Monate Heb 11:23

τρίς G5151 Adv (12×)

tris – three times, thrice; a numeral adverb marking threefold repetition

The numeral adverb tris ('three times, thrice') marks threefold repetition and carries particular narrative weight in the New Testament. Its most memorable use is Jesus' prediction and fulfillment of Peter's threefold denial: 'before the rooster crows, you will deny me three times' (Matt 26:34, 75; Mark 14:30, 72; Luke 22:34, 61; John 13:38). This triple denial is later answered by the triple restoration at the Sea of Tiberias: 'Simon, do you love me?' asked three times (John 21:17, using tris implicitly). Paul reports being beaten with rods three times and shipwrecked three times (2 Cor 11:25), and Peter's vision of the unclean animals was shown to him three times (Acts 10:16; 11:10). Spanish tres veces, French trois fois, and German dreimal all render it consistently.

(12×) The numeral adverb 'three times,' most prominently in Peter's threefold denial of Jesus (Matt 26:34, 75; Mark 14:30, 72; Luke 22:34, 61; John 13:38), also of Paul's sufferings (2 Cor 11:25) and Peter's vision (Acts 10:16; 11:10). Spanish tres-veces, French trois-fois, and German dreimal confirm a single adverbial sense. TIMES AND OCCASIONS

en: three-times | es: tres-veces | fr: trois-fois | de: dreimal, τρίς, τρὶς Matt 26:34; Matt 26:75; Mark 14:30; Mark 14:72; Luke 22:34

τρί-στεγος G5152 N-GNS (1×)

third story or floor of a building

Acts 20:9 recounts the unfortunate incident of Eutychus falling from the third story while Paul preached late into the night. The detail emphasizes both the height of the fall (serious enough to kill him) and the architectural setting of this early Christian gathering. Buildings with multiple stories were common in urban centers like Troas, and believers often met in upper rooms. The third-floor location makes Eutychus' drowsy tumble all the more dramatic, and Paul's subsequent raising of the young man all the more miraculous.

(1×) Luke's narrative specifies the architectural setting with precision—the third story means a dangerous height. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'tercer piso', French 'étage', German preserving the Greek—indicate an upper floor. The detail serves multiple purposes: it explains how the fall could be fatal, it situates the Christian community in a typical urban dwelling, and it sets up the miracle of restoration. Upper rooms figure prominently in early Christian history (the Last Supper, Pentecost), and this third-floor gathering continues that pattern. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: third-story | es: tercer-piso | fr: étage | de: τριστέγου Acts 20:9

τρισ-χίλιοι G5153 Adj-NFP (1×)

three thousand in number

Acts 2:41 records that three thousand souls were added to the church on the day of Pentecost, following Peter's sermon. This remarkable number testifies to the power of the Spirit and the effectiveness of apostolic preaching. The specificity suggests careful counting and record-keeping by the early church, and the magnitude demonstrates that Pentecost was no minor event—it launched a movement that immediately transformed thousands of lives. The figure also fulfills Jesus' promise that his followers would do even greater works than he did during his earthly ministry.

(1×) Luke provides this precise figure to convey the explosive growth of the church at its birth. Three thousand converts in a single day represents an extraordinary harvest, made possible by the Spirit's presence and Peter's bold proclamation. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'tres mil', French 'trois mille', German preserving the Greek—all specify this significant number. The detail contrasts sharply with the 120 who gathered in the upper room, showing how God multiplied the infant community. This numerical precision characterizes Luke's historical method throughout Acts. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS

en: three-thousand | es: tres-mil | fr: trois-mille | de: τρισχίλιαι Acts 2:41

τρίτος G5154 Adj-GFS (56×)

Third; the ordinal numeral 'third,' also used as the fraction 'one-third' and adverbially as 'a third time.'

Tritos is the ordinal form of treis ('three') and appears across the New Testament in three distinct grammatical functions. As a simple ordinal, it marks the 'third day' of Christ's resurrection predictions (Matt 16:21) and sequences in parables. In Revelation, it becomes a technical fractional term — 'a third of the earth,' 'a third of the sea' — measuring the terrifying but still partial scope of divine judgment. And used adverbially, it narrates the dramatic repetitions of Scripture: Peter's third denial, Jesus praying 'a third time' in Gethsemane (Matt 26:44), and the risen Lord appearing to his disciples 'the third time' at the Sea of Tiberias (John 21:14).

1. third (ordinal) (33×) The standard ordinal numeral 'third,' modifying nouns like 'day,' 'hour,' or 'angel,' or standing alone to identify the third item in a sequence. Jesus repeatedly predicts he will rise 'on the third day' (Matt 16:21, 17:23, 20:19). Spanish tercera, French troisieme, and German dritte all render it straightforwardly. This sense also covers the 'third hour' of the crucifixion (Mark 15:25) and the third servant in parables (Matt 22:26), serving as basic sequential ordering. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER)

en: the-third, third | es: la-tercera, tercer, tercera | fr: troisième | de: dritte Matt 16:21; Matt 17:23; Matt 20:3; Matt 20:19; Matt 22:26

2. one-third (fractional) (15×) Used substantively as a neuter (to triton) to denote the fraction 'one-third,' describing partial but devastating destruction in Revelation's trumpet judgments. A third of the earth is burned (Rev 8:7), a third of the sea becomes blood (8:8), a third of the ships are destroyed (8:9). Spanish tercera parte explicitly marks the fractional reading, distinguishing it from the simple ordinal. This apocalyptic usage emphasizes that God's judgment, while catastrophic, remains measured and incomplete — a summons to repentance, not total annihilation. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER)

en: third | es: tercera-parte | fr: dritte | de: dritte Rev 8:7; Rev 8:8; Rev 8:9

3. third time (adverbial) (8×) Used adverbially (to triton or ek tritou) to mean 'for the third time' or 'a third time,' marking significant repetition. Jesus prays a third time in Gethsemane (Matt 26:44), Peter is asked a third time 'do you love me?' at the Sea of Tiberias (John 21:17), and Pilate protests Jesus' innocence 'a third time' (Luke 23:22). Spanish tercera vez and the implicit 'time' in German dritte Mal capture the adverbial force. In biblical narrative, the third repetition often signals completion or climactic emphasis. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER)

en: a-third-time, third-time | es: Tercera-vez, tercera, tercera-vez | fr: troisième | de: dritte Matt 26:44; Mark 14:41; Luke 23:22; John 21:14; John 21:17

τρῐ̆χ-ῐ̆νος G5155 Adj-NMS (1×)

made of hair, hairy

Revelation 6:12 describes the sun becoming black 'as sackcloth of hair' during the sixth seal judgment. This imagery draws on the Old Testament practice of wearing rough garments made from goat or camel hair as a sign of mourning or repentance. The darkening of the sun to the color and texture of such material suggests cosmic mourning—even the heavens grieve at the judgment being poured out. The reference to hair emphasizes the coarse, dark nature of the fabric, intensifying the apocalyptic vision of creation itself reacting to divine wrath.

(1×) John's apocalyptic vision employs this adjective to describe sackcloth in its most literal, physical form—made from hair, dark and rough. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'de pelo', French and German 'haaren'—all specify the material composition. In biblical culture, such garments symbolized penitence, grief, and humility. The sun taking on this appearance suggests the cosmos itself entering into lamentation at the unfolding judgment. The image is visceral and unsettling, as the source of light and life becomes dark as a mourning garment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-hair | es: de-pelo | fr: haaren | de: haaren Rev 6:12

τρόμος G5156 N-GMS (5×)

Trembling, quaking; a physical shaking from fear, awe, or reverent submission before God or authority.

This noun denotes a visible, bodily trembling that arises from deep fear, awe, or reverence. At the empty tomb, the women fled in 'trembling and astonishment' (Mark 16:8). Paul came to Corinth 'in weakness and fear and much trembling' (1 Cor 2:3), modeling dependence on God rather than rhetorical skill. The phrase 'fear and trembling' becomes almost formulaic in Paul's letters — describing the Corinthians' earnest reception of Titus (2 Cor 7:15), the proper attitude of servants toward masters (Eph 6:5), and the posture of believers working out their salvation (Phil 2:12).

(5×) Trembling or quaking — a physical shaking prompted by fear, awe, or reverent submission. Mark 16:8 describes the women's visceral reaction at the empty tomb: tromos seized them alongside ekthambos (astonishment). Paul adopts the OT pair 'fear and trembling' (phobos kai tromos) as a near-technical phrase for reverent, self-effacing posture before God or spiritual authority (1 Cor 2:3; 2 Cor 7:15; Eph 6:5; Phil 2:12). Spanish 'temblor,' French 'tremblement,' and German 'Zittern' all convey the involuntary physical response, confirming a unified sense of awe-induced shaking. TREMBLING AND FEAR

en: trembling | es: temblor | fr: tremblement, τρόμου | de: Zittern Mark 16:8; 1Cor 2:3; 2Cor 7:15; Eph 6:5; Phil 2:12

τροπ-ή G5157 N-GFS (1×)

turning, variation, change of position or state

James 1:17 declares that with the Father of lights there is no variation or shadow of turning. The term belongs to astronomical vocabulary, describing the apparent movement or changing of celestial bodies. James uses this imagery to contrast God's unchanging nature with the variability of created lights like sun and moon, which shift position and cast moving shadows. While heavenly bodies have 'turnings'—solstices, phases, eclipses—God remains constant in character and purpose. The metaphor assures believers that divine goodness is utterly reliable.

(1×) James employs astronomical terminology to emphasize God's immutability. Unlike the sun and moon, which have cycles, turnings, and variations in their light and position, God never changes. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'de giro', French and German preserving the Greek root—points to rotational or positional change. In the ancient world, celestial turnings marked seasons and times; the solstices themselves were called 'turnings of the sun.' James asserts that God transcends all such mutability—his gifts and character remain forever constant, without even the shadow of variation that turning would cast. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: of-turning | es: de-giro | fr: τροπῆς | de: Wechsel Jas 1:17

τρόπος G5158 N-NMS (13×)

manner, way, fashion — the mode or method by which something is done

Tropos (from trepo, 'to turn') literally means a 'turn' or 'direction' and came to denote the manner or fashion in which something occurs. In the New Testament's 13 occurrences, it appears most characteristically in the comparative phrase hon tropon ('in the manner that, just as'), used by Jesus in his lament over Jerusalem ('as a hen gathers her chicks,' Matt 23:37; Luke 13:34) and by the angels at the Ascension ('in the same way as you have seen him go,' Acts 1:11). Spanish renders it 'manera/modo,' French 'maniere,' German 'Weise' — all confirming the unified sense of 'way, manner' with no splitting into separate senses.

manner, way (13×) The mode, fashion, or manner in which an action is performed or an event unfolds. Most frequently occurs in the comparative construction hon tropon ('in the manner that, just as'), drawing parallels between two situations — Jesus' desire to gather Jerusalem (Matt 23:37; Luke 13:34), the manner of Christ's ascension and return (Acts 1:11), and the exodus generation's experience (Acts 7:28). Also appears in broader expressions like panti tropo ('in every way,' Phil 1:18). All 13 occurrences express this single notion of manner or mode. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: manner, way | es: conducta, manera, modo | fr: Weise, manière | de: Weise, τρόπον Matt 23:37; Luke 13:34; Acts 1:11; Acts 7:28; Acts 15:11

τροποφορέω G5159 V-AIA-3S (1×)

to endure or bear with someone's behavior or moods

In Acts 13:18, Paul describes how God 'put up with' or 'bore with' Israel's conduct during the forty years in the wilderness. The term suggests patient endurance of difficult behavior, tolerating rebellion and complaint without immediately destroying the offenders. This divine forbearance becomes a major theme in Israel's history—God's persistent love despite persistent unfaithfulness. Some manuscripts read 'he cared for them' instead, but the sense of patient endurance fits the wilderness narrative's emphasis on Israel's testing of God's patience.

(1×) Paul's summary of Israel's history highlights God's long-suffering nature during the wilderness wanderings. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'soportó', French 'supporter', German preserving the Greek—convey the sense of enduring or tolerating difficult conduct. This forty-year period tested both Israel and God; the people complained and rebelled repeatedly, yet God continued to provide and preserve. The verb captures the patience required to sustain a relationship with a stubborn, ungrateful people—a patience that mirrors God's ongoing forbearance with all humanity. ENDURE TOLERATE en: he-put-up-with | es: soportó | fr: supporter | de: ἐτροποφόρησεν Acts 13:18

τροφ-ή G5160 N-AFP (16×)

Food, nourishment, or sustenance; what is eaten to sustain life, used literally of meals and figuratively of spiritual provision.

Trophe covers anything consumed for bodily sustenance, from John the Baptist's austere diet of locusts and wild honey (Matt 3:4) to the regular rations a faithful steward distributes (Matt 24:45; Luke 12:42). Jesus teaches that life is more than food (Matt 6:25; Luke 12:23), relativizing its importance without denying its necessity. In Acts, the word describes both ordinary meals (Acts 2:46; 27:33-36) and the general concept of provisions. Spanish alimento, French nourriture, and German Nahrung/Speise all render it with basic sustenance terms, reflecting a tightly unified semantic range centered on physical nourishment.

food (16×) Food or nourishment taken to sustain the body; sustenance in the broadest sense. It covers the specific diet of John the Baptist (Matt 3:4), the daily rations a household manager dispenses (Matt 24:45; Luke 12:42), and the meals shared by the early church (Acts 2:46). Jesus uses it in his teaching that life transcends food (Matt 6:25; Luke 12:23), and Paul urges shipwrecked companions to take nourishment for survival (Acts 27:33-36). The worker's right to food underscores its association with just provision (Matt 10:10). Cross-linguistic glosses consistently select basic sustenance terms, confirming a single cohesive sense. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: food, of-food, with-food | es: alimento, alimentos, de-alimento | fr: nourriture | de: Nahrung, Speise Matt 3:4; Matt 6:25; Matt 10:10; Matt 24:45; Luke 12:23

τρόφ-ῐμος G5161 N-AMS (3×)

Trophimus, a Gentile Christian from Ephesus who accompanied Paul on missionary journeys

Trophimus was an Asian (likely Ephesian) believer who traveled with Paul during his later ministry. His name, meaning "nourishing" or "foster-child" in Greek, was common in the Greco-Roman world. His presence with Paul in Jerusalem sparked a riot when Jews falsely accused Paul of bringing this Gentile into the temple's inner courts, defiling the sacred space (Acts 21:27-29). The accusation, though false, revealed the explosive tensions around Gentile inclusion in the messianic community.

(3×) Acts 20:4 lists Trophimus among Paul's traveling companions from Asia during the collection journey. Acts 21:29 explains that Jerusalem Jews had previously seen Trophimus the Ephesian with Paul in the city, leading them to falsely assume Paul had brought him into the temple proper—a capital offense. Second Timothy 4:20 mentions Paul leaving Trophimus sick at Miletus, a detail showing both the personal care in Paul's ministry and the reality that apostolic power didn't always mean instant healing. The consistent transliteration across languages (Spanish Trófimos/Tróphimos, French Trophime) marks this as a personal name with some variation in Greek spelling. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Trophimos | es: Trófimos, a-Trófimos, a-Tróphimos | fr: Trophime, Τρόφιμον | de: Trophimus, Τρόφιμον, Τρόφιμος Acts 20:4; Acts 21:29; 2Tim 4:20

τροφός G5162 N-NFS (1×)

nursing mother, wet nurse, one who nourishes infants

Paul uses this tender image in 1 Thessalonians 2:7, comparing his gentle care for the Thessalonian believers to a nursing mother cherishing her own children. The metaphor emphasizes nurture, intimacy, and self-giving love—a mother provides from her own body to sustain infant life. By choosing this feminine imagery, Paul underscores the tenderness and personal investment he brought to his ministry, countering any notion that apostolic authority means harsh domination. The nursing mother gives herself completely for the wellbeing of those in her care.

(1×) Paul's self-description employs striking maternal imagery to convey his pastoral heart. A nursing mother represents the epitome of gentle, self-sacrificial care—she literally gives of herself to nourish and sustain vulnerable life. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'nodriza', French and German preserving the Greek—points to this nurturing role. In a culture where nursing was sometimes delegated to wet-nurses, Paul claims this intimate maternal function for his own relationship to the church. The image powerfully communicates pastoral love that is gentle, patient, and utterly devoted to the spiritual growth of God's children. WET-NURSE CAREGIVER

en: nursing-mother | es: nodriza | fr: τροφὸς | de: Amme 1Thess 2:7

τροχιά G5163 N-AFP (1×)

paths, tracks, or wheel-ruts; way forward

Hebrews 12:13 exhorts believers to 'make straight paths for your feet,' drawing on Proverbs 4:26. The term originally referred to wheel-ruts or tracks worn by repeated passage. The writer urges spiritual stability and directness—clear, firm pathways that prevent stumbling and promote healing rather than further injury. The imagery suggests community responsibility: our walk affects those who follow, especially the weak or limping. Straight paths enable the whole body to move forward safely together toward holiness.

(1×) The author of Hebrews employs this term in an exhortation to spiritual discipline and community care. Originally describing wheel-tracks or well-worn paths, here it becomes a metaphor for the moral and spiritual direction of one's life. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'sendas', French and German 'Pfade'—all indicate pathways or tracks. The call to make these paths straight responds to the danger that the 'lame' might be turned aside; clear, level paths help the weak maintain their footing. Our spiritual choices create pathways that either help or hinder those who follow. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: paths | es: sendas | fr: Pfade | de: Pfade Heb 12:13

τροχός G5164 N-AMS (1×)

wheel, circular rotating device

James 3:6 describes the tongue as setting on fire 'the whole course of nature' or literally 'the wheel of existence.' The term evokes the continuous cycle of life and human generation—birth, growth, reproduction, death—all of which can be corrupted by the tongue's destructive power. Some interpretations see an image of a wheel rolling through time, setting everything ablaze as it goes. Others detect an echo of the wheel of fate or fortune from Greek philosophy. Whatever the precise imagery, the point is clear: the tongue's damage extends to the entirety of human life and relationships.

(1×) James employs this term in a complex metaphor about the tongue's destructive reach. The 'wheel' may represent the cycle of human existence, the wheel of life's journey, or simply the comprehensive scope of nature itself. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'rueda', French and German preserving the Greek root—points to a circular, rotating object. In context, James argues that the small tongue can set ablaze this entire wheel of existence, suggesting that speech corruption touches every aspect and generation of human life. The image is deliberately comprehensive: no area escapes the potential damage of uncontrolled words. WHEELS AND WHEELWORK

en: wheel | es: rueda | fr: τροχὸν | de: Lauf Jas 3:6

τρύβλιον G5165 N-ANS (2×)

a dish, bowl (for food)

This word refers to a serving dish or bowl used for food at meals. Both Gospel occurrences appear in the Last Supper narrative, where Jesus identifies his betrayer as 'the one dipping with me in the dish.' The shared dish represents intimate table fellowship, making the betrayal by one who dips from the same bowl all the more poignant and treacherous.

(2×) From classical usage for cups or bowls, τρύβλιον in Matt 26:23 and Mark 14:20 refers to the common serving dish at the Last Supper. Jesus' statement that his betrayer is 'the one dipping with me in the dish' (τρυβλίῳ) emphasizes the intimate fellowship setting—eating from the same bowl heightened the heinousness of Judas' impending betrayal. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14653 WITH 4 SENSES

en: dish | es: plato | fr: plat | de: Schuessel, τρυβλίῳ Matt 26:23; Mark 14:20

τρῠγάω G5166 V-PIA-3P (3×)

to gather in, harvest, pick; to collect fruit or crops, especially grapes or grain

This verb describes the harvesting of fruit and crops, most commonly the grape harvest (vintage). The root noun trugē means "harvest" or "crop." While it can refer to gathering any fruit, the viticultural association is primary—hence its use in Jesus' teaching about grapes and thorns (Luke 6) and in Revelation's apocalyptic harvest imagery. Ancient harvest was intensely seasonal work requiring many hands; the term carries echoes of both abundance and the urgency of gathering what is ripe before it spoils.

(3×) Luke 6:44 uses the term in Jesus' teaching on recognizing people by their fruit: "Do they gather (trugōsin) grapes from thornbushes?" The rhetorical question highlights the absurdity—wrong sources can't yield right fruit. Revelation 14:18-19 contains two uses in the dramatic scene of angelic harvest: the angel commands "gather (trugage) the clusters of the vine of the earth" and then "the angel gathered (etrugēsen) the vine of the earth." The multilingual glosses show the agricultural semantic: Spanish vendimia/vendimian (grape harvest), French cueillir (gather/pick), German ernten (harvest). The Revelation context transforms ordinary harvest language into apocalyptic judgment imagery—gathering for the winepress of God's wrath. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: do-they-pick, gather, gathered | es: vendimia, vendimian, vendimió | fr: cueillir, ernten | de: ernten, τρυγῶσιν Luke 6:44; Rev 14:18; Rev 14:19

τρῠγών G5167 N-GFP (1×)

turtledoves, small migratory birds used in sacrifice

Luke 2:24 records that Mary and Joseph brought a pair of turtledoves (or two young pigeons) as their purification offering after Jesus' birth. This sacrifice was prescribed in Leviticus 12 as the option for those who could not afford a lamb—a detail revealing the holy family's poverty. Turtledoves were small, migratory birds, acceptable to God as offerings from the poor. The detail establishes Jesus' identification with the lowly from birth, and shows Mary and Joseph's faithful obedience to the law despite their limited means.

(1×) Luke specifies the sacrificial offering that frames Jesus' presentation at the temple, and the choice of birds rather than a lamb speaks volumes about the family's economic status. The multilingual glosses —Spanish 'de tórtolas', French 'tourterelle', German preserving the Greek—identify these as turtledoves, the birds designated for the poor in Levitical law. The detail reinforces themes of humility and identification with the marginalized that characterize Jesus' entire life. Even in their temple offering, the holy family demonstrates the divine pattern of exaltation through lowliness. FLYING AND FLIGHT

en: of-turtledoves | es: de-tórtolas | fr: tourterelle | de: τρυγόνων Luke 2:24

τρῡμᾰλ-ιά G5168 N-GFS (1×)

eye of a needle, a very small opening

In Mark 10:25, Jesus uses this striking image: it's easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich person to enter God's kingdom. The phrase denotes an impossibly small opening—perhaps the literal eye of a sewing needle, emphasizing the absurd difficulty. Some later interpreters tried to soften the saying by inventing a 'Needle Gate' in Jerusalem, but the point is radical impossibility apart from God's intervention. Jesus intends the shock value: wealth presents enormous spiritual obstacles that only divine power can overcome.

(1×) Jesus' hyperbolic comparison employs this term to emphasize the spiritual danger of riches. The eye of a needle represents the smallest imaginable opening, creating an image of impossibility when paired with a camel, the largest domestic animal in Palestine. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'ojo', French 'trou', German 'Nadelöhr'—all convey a tiny aperture. The disciples' astonished response ('Then who can be saved?') shows they grasped the shocking difficulty Jesus described. His answer shifts hope to God's power: what is humanly impossible becomes possible through divine grace and intervention. HOLES AND OPENINGS

en: eye | es: ojo | fr: trou | de: Nadeloehr Mark 10:25

τρῦπ-ημα G5169 N-GNS (2×)

a hole, especially the eye of a needle

While this word generally means any bored or drilled hole, in the New Testament it specifically refers to the eye of a needle in Jesus' famous pronouncement about wealth. The image is deliberately hyperbolic—a camel passing through a needle's eye—to emphasize the impossibility of the rich entering God's kingdom by their own power. Some have tried to soften this by inventing a small Jerusalem gate called 'the needle's eye,' but no such gate existed; Jesus meant the literal impossibility.

(2×) From classical usage for holes in various objects (oar-locks, flutes, gates), τρύπημα/τρῆμα in the parallel sayings (Matt 19:24, Luke 18:25) denotes the eye of a sewing needle (ῥαφίδος). Jesus' image of a camel threading this tiny opening creates a deliberately absurd impossibility to shock his hearers about how wealth hinders entering God's kingdom—human impossibility requiring divine intervention. HOLES AND OPENINGS

en: an-eye, hole | es: ojo | fr: trou | de: τρήματος, τρυπήματος Matt 19:24; Luke 18:25

Τρύφαινα G5170 N-AFS (1×)

Tryphaena, a woman's name meaning 'delicate' or 'dainty'

Paul greets Tryphaena in Romans 16:12 as one who 'labors in the Lord'—an interesting contrast to the name's etymology suggesting delicacy or luxury. Nothing else is known about her, but Paul's commendation establishes her as a faithful worker in the Roman church. She's mentioned alongside Tryphosa, possibly a sister or close associate. The greeting reveals the significant role of women in Paul's ministry network and the diversity of personalities serving Christ. Even someone whose name suggests comfortable living gave herself to hard work for the gospel.

(1×) Paul's list of greetings in Romans 16 includes this woman, whom he commends for her labor in the Lord's service. The name Tryphaena, related to words for luxury or delicate living, creates ironic contrast with Paul's description of her toil. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name with slight variations in transliteration. Whatever her background or circumstances, Tryphaena devoted herself to the demanding work of ministry, earning Paul's recognition and gratitude. Her inclusion in this catalog of faithful workers testifies to women's active participation in early Christian mission. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Truphaina | es: a-Tryphainan | fr: Τρύφαιναν | de: Tryphena Rom 16:12

τρῠφάω G5171 V-AIA-2P (1×)

to live luxuriously or indulgently, to revel in pleasure

James 5:5 accuses the wealthy of living luxuriously on earth, fattening their hearts in a day of slaughter. The verb conveys self-indulgent living, the pursuit of comfort and pleasure without regard for justice or eternal consequences. While physical comfort isn't inherently wrong, James condemns luxury that comes through exploiting workers and ignoring divine judgment. The image of fattening oneself for slaughter evokes livestock being prepared for butchering—unaware that their indulgence hastens their doom. The term challenges all forms of heedless materialism.

(1×) James employs this verb in his prophetic denunciation of exploitative wealth. The luxurious living he describes isn't merely comfort but self-indulgent excess built on injustice—withheld wages, murdered righteous people. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'vivisteis en deleite', French and German preserving the Greek root—conveys sumptuous, pleasure-focused living. The agricultural metaphor is chilling: like animals fattening themselves unaware before slaughter, the wealthy indulge in luxury while judgment approaches. The verb captures the spiritual danger of lives devoted to comfort and pleasure rather than justice and readiness for God's coming. PLEASANTNESS AND DELIGHT

en: you-lived-luxuriously | es: vivisteis-en-deleite | fr: ἐτρυφήσατε | de: schwelgen Jas 5:5

τρῠφ-ή G5172 N-AFS (2×)

luxury, self-indulgence, voluptuous living

This noun denotes luxurious living, self-indulgence, or sensual pleasure. It carries negative connotations of softness and excess. Jesus uses it to contrast John the Baptist's ascetic desert life with those who wear soft clothing and live in luxury in kings' palaces. Peter employs it to describe false teachers who count it pleasure to revel in the daytime. The word critiques not wealth itself but self-centered, sensual indulgence.

(2×) Classical τρυφή ranged from 'delicacy' to 'wantonness' and 'luxuriousness.' Luke 7:25 contrasts John's wilderness existence with those living 'in luxury' (τρυφῇ) in royal courts, highlighting John's prophetic austerity. 2 Pet 2:13 condemns false teachers who 'count reveling in the daytime a pleasure' (τρυφήν), using the term to characterize their self-indulgent, shameless sensuality—living for pleasure rather than godliness. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11579 WITH 3 SENSES

en: luxury | es: deleite, lujo | fr: luxe, τρυφήν | de: Wohlleben, τρυφῇ Luke 7:25; 2Pet 2:13

Τρυφῶσα G5173 N-AFS (1×)

Tryphosa, a woman's name meaning 'delicate' or 'luxurious'

Paul greets Tryphosa in Romans 16:12, linked with Tryphaena as workers in the Lord. Like Tryphaena, her name suggests luxury or delicate living, yet Paul commends her labor for the gospel. She may have been Tryphaena's sister, or simply a close ministry partner. The pairing of these similarly-named women suggests they worked together in some aspect of the church's life. Beyond Paul's brief greeting, we know nothing about her, but that greeting secures her place in the record of early Christian faithfulness.

(1×) Paul's second greeting to a woman with a name suggesting luxury ironically highlights her actual identity as a hard worker for the Lord. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name with slight transliteration variations. Whether Tryphosa and Tryphaena were biological sisters or spiritual colleagues, they clearly formed a ministry team recognized and valued by Paul. The mention of both women emphasizes the partnership and collaboration characterizing early Christian mission. These brief greetings in Romans 16 recover voices and contributions that might otherwise be lost to history. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Truphosa | es: a-Tryphōsan | fr: Tryphène | de: Tryphosa Rom 16:12

Τρω-ϊάς G5174 N-GFS (6×)

Troas – the port city of Alexandria Troas in northwest Asia Minor, key stop on Paul's journeys

Troas (full name Alexandria Troas) was a major Roman port city on the Aegean coast of the Troad region in northwest Asia Minor (modern Turkey). It served as the primary gateway between Asia and Macedonia and figures prominently in Paul's missionary travels. At Troas, Paul received the Macedonian vision calling him to Europe (Acts 16:8-10). He later returned there for a week-long stay during which Eutychus fell from a window (Acts 20:5-12). Paul also mentions leaving a cloak and parchments at Troas (2 Tim 4:13). The name passes unchanged through every language – Spanish, French, German, and English all render it simply as Troas.

Troas (city) (6×) The proper geographical name for the port city of Alexandria Troas on the northwest coast of Asia Minor, a critical transit point between the Asian and European portions of the Roman Empire. Paul's pivotal Macedonian call vision occurred here (Acts 16:8-10), and he returned on subsequent journeys (Acts 20:5-6; 2 Cor 2:12; 2 Tim 4:13). All target languages – Spanish Troas, French Troas, German Troas – preserve the toponym unchanged, confirming a single proper-noun sense with no polysemy across all six New Testament occurrences. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Troas, Trōas | es: Trōas, Trōás, Tróas | fr: Tryphose, Τρῳάδι | de: Troas, Τρῳάδα, Τρῳάδι Acts 16:8; Acts 16:11; Acts 20:5; Acts 20:6; 2Cor 2:12

Τρωγύλλιον G5175

Trogyllium; a promontory and town in Ionia opposite Samos

Trogyllium was a promontory and small city on the Ionian coast opposite the island of Samos, mentioned in some manuscripts of Acts as a stopping point during Paul's third missionary journey. The name appeared in various spellings in ancient sources, reflecting the fluidity of proper name transcription. While some major New Testament manuscripts omit this reference, others preserve it as a geographical detail of Paul's coastal voyage. The location was well-known to ancient mariners as a navigational landmark where ships could anchor in the strait between the mainland and Samos.

τρώγω G5176 V-PPA-NMS (6×)

trogo – to eat, chew, munch; a vivid verb emphasizing the physical act of eating

Unlike the generic esthio ('to eat'), trogo carries a vivid, almost onomatopoeic quality – originally describing the gnawing and munching of animals, then extended to human eating of raw vegetables and fruit. Its New Testament usage is concentrated in John 6, where Jesus declares 'whoever trogo my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life' (John 6:54). The deliberate choice of this visceral verb over esthio (used earlier in the same discourse) intensifies the scandalous physicality of Jesus' Bread of Life teaching. Matthew 24:38 uses it of people 'eating and drinking' before the flood, emphasizing their mundane, embodied obliviousness. Spanish masticar/comer and French macher ('to chew') reflect the tactile, physical nuance.

eat, chew, munch (6×) To eat or chew with emphasis on the physical, bodily act of consuming food – a more vivid and concrete verb than the common esthio. In John 6:54-58, Jesus deliberately shifts from esthio to trogo when speaking of eating his flesh, intensifying the Eucharistic discourse's shocking physicality. Matthew 24:38 uses it of pre-flood humanity absorbed in mundane eating. Spanish que-mastica ('one who chews') and French macher preserve the tactile, gnawing connotation that distinguishes this word from ordinary eating vocabulary across all six New Testament occurrences. EATING AND CONSUMING

en: eating | es: come, comiendo, que-mastica | fr: mâcher | de: kauen, τρώγοντες Matt 24:38; John 6:54; John 6:56; John 6:57; John 6:58

τυγχάνω G5177 V-APA-AFP (12×)

To obtain or attain something sought; to happen or chance; (as participle) ordinary, common.

A verb whose semantic range stretches from purposeful attainment to mere happenstance. At one end, Paul declares that he has 'obtained help from God' to this very day (Acts 26:22), and the faithful strive to 'obtain the resurrection from the dead' (Luke 20:35). At the other extreme, the participial form means simply 'ordinary' — miracles at Ephesus were 'no ordinary' (ou tas tuchousas) wonders (Acts 19:11), using litotes to underscore the extraordinary by negating the commonplace. Between these poles sits the impersonal 'it may happen' or 'perhaps' (1 Cor 15:37), where Spanish 'quizás' and 'acaso' reveal the chance element that lurks in the word's etymology.

1. obtain or attain (7×) To obtain, attain, or receive something desired or sought after. Paul 'obtained help from God' (Acts 26:22), the elect strive 'to obtain the salvation that is in Christ Jesus' (2 Tim 2:10), and those 'counted worthy obtain that age' (Luke 20:35). Spanish uses 'alcanzar' (to reach, attain) and 'gozar' (to enjoy), while French 'obtenir' and German 'erlangen' consistently mark purposeful acquisition. The seven occurrences span human courtesy (Acts 24:2; 27:3) to eschatological hope. FINDING AND DISCOVERING en: enjoying, having-obtained, he-has-obtained | es: alcancen, de-alcanzar, gozando | fr: erlangen, obtenir | de: erlangen, τυγχάνοντες, τυχεῖν Luke 20:35; Acts 24:2; Acts 26:22; Acts 27:3; 2Tim 2:10

2. happen or chance (3×) To happen, come about, or chance — an impersonal usage expressing possibility or contingency. Paul writes 'perhaps of wheat or some other grain' (1 Cor 15:37) and 'perhaps I will stay with you' (1 Cor 16:6). Spanish 'quizás' and 'acaso' lay bare the etymological link to chance and fortune that undergirds the entire word family. This sense preserves the oldest stratum of tunchano: hitting upon something by luck rather than intention. HAPPENING AND CHANCE

en: it-may-happen, perhaps | es: acaso, quizás | fr: obtenir | de: erlangen 1Cor 14:10; 1Cor 15:37; 1Cor 16:6

3. ordinary or common (2×) Ordinary, common, or usual — the adjectival participial form, typically appearing in litotes constructions where negation produces emphasis. The miracles through Paul were 'not ordinary' (ou tas tuchousas, Acts 19:11), and the Maltese showed 'no ordinary' (ou ten tuchousan) kindness (Acts 28:2). Spanish 'comunes' / 'común' and German 'gewoehnlich' clarify what the Greek achieves through participial flexibility: marking the baseline of the expected so that its negation highlights the exceptional. UNCLEAN AND PROFANE

en: ordinary | es: comunes, común | fr: obtenir | de: τυχούσας, τυχοῦσαν Acts 19:11; Acts 28:2

τυμπᾰν-ίζω G5178 V-AIP-3P (1×)

to torture or torment, especially by beating or stretching

Hebrews 11:35 honors those who were tortured, refusing deliverance so they might obtain a better resurrection. The verb suggests severe physical torment, possibly stretching on a frame or beating a drum-like instrument of torture. These martyrs chose suffering over compromise, looking beyond immediate relief to eternal reward. Their faith sustained them through horrific abuse because they valued God's approval more than physical survival. The term captures the brutal reality faced by many believers who would not deny Christ to save their lives.

(1×) The author of Hebrews catalogues various forms of faith-driven suffering, including this extreme torture. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'fueron torturados', French and German 'foltern'—all convey severe physical torment. The victims could have secured release by renouncing their faith, but they refused, accepting torture in hope of resurrection. This probably refers to Maccabean martyrs who chose death over apostasy, confident that God would raise them to eternal life. The verb emphasizes the intensity of their suffering and the greatness of the faith required to endure it without compromise. TORMENT AND TORTURE

en: were-tortured | es: fueron-torturados | fr: foltern | de: foltern Heb 11:35

τύπ-ος G5179 Adv (16×)

A mark, imprint, pattern, model, or example; from a blow's impression to a moral paradigm, prefiguration, or idol image.

Derived from the verb 'to strike,' this noun moves from the physical mark left by a blow to increasingly abstract meanings. In John 20:25 Thomas demands to see the 'mark' of the nails — the literal imprint in flesh. But Paul transforms it into a powerful ethical term: believers should follow apostolic 'examples' (Phil 3:17), and Adam is a 'type' prefiguring Christ (Rom 5:14). The word also denotes the divine blueprint shown to Moses for the tabernacle (Acts 7:44). German consistently renders it 'Vorbild' (model), while Spanish distinguishes 'marca' (mark), 'ejemplo' (example), and 'modelo' (pattern).

1. example, model of conduct (8×) A person, community, or behavior held up as a moral example or pattern for imitation. This is the dominant New Testament sense, appearing across Paul and Peter: the Thessalonians became an 'example' to all believers (1 Thess 1:7), Paul urges imitation of those who walk according to 'the pattern you have in us' (Phil 3:17), and elders should be 'examples to the flock' (1 Pet 5:3). The adverbial form typikos appears in 1 Corinthians 10:6, 11 where Israel's experiences happened 'as examples' for us. Spanish 'ejemplo' and German 'Vorbild' both capture this moral-paradigm sense. EXAMPLES AND TYPES en: as-examples, example, examples | es: como-ejemplo, ejemplo, ejemplos | fr: Tyr, Vorbild | de: Vorbild 1Cor 10:6; 1Cor 10:11; Phil 3:17; 1Thess 1:7; 2Thess 3:9

2. pattern, blueprint (2×) A pattern, blueprint, or design — specifically a divinely revealed template for construction. Acts 7:44 recalls God telling Moses to make the tabernacle 'according to the pattern' he was shown on the mountain, and Hebrews 8:5 repeats this. The sense emphasizes exact replication of a heavenly original. Spanish 'modelo' distinguishes this architectural meaning from the moral 'ejemplo' of sense 1. EXAMPLES AND TYPES

en: pattern | es: modelo | fr: Tyr, Vorbild | de: Vorbild, τύπον Acts 7:44; Heb 8:5

3. mark, impression (2×) A physical mark, impression, or imprint left by contact or a blow — the etymological root meaning. John 20:25 uses it twice for the nail marks in Jesus' hands: Thomas says he must see 'the mark of the nails' and put his finger 'into the mark.' This is the most concrete sense, preserving the word's origin from typto (to strike). Spanish 'marca' and English 'mark' render it precisely. SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: mark | es: marca | fr: exemple | de: Vorbild John 20:25

4. form, formulation (2×) The form, pattern, or formulation of something written or taught. Acts 23:25 describes a letter 'having this form,' and Romans 6:17 speaks of the 'pattern of teaching' to which believers were committed. This sense bridges the physical imprint and the abstract model — a template for content rather than construction or conduct. Spanish 'forma' captures this literary-didactic register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: form | es: forma | fr: Tyr | de: Vorbild, τύπον Acts 23:25; Rom 6:17

5. image, idol (1×) A crafted image or representation used in worship — an idol figure. Acts 7:43 condemns Israel for making 'images' (typous) of pagan gods to worship. This sense extends the physical 'impression' or 'figure' into the realm of religious representation. Spanish 'figuras' suggests shaped forms, while the context makes the idolatrous association unmistakable. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: images | es: figuras | fr: Tyr | de: τύπους Acts 7:43

6. type, prefiguration (1×) A typological prefiguration — a person or event in earlier salvation history that foreshadows a later, greater fulfillment. Romans 5:14 calls Adam 'a type of the one to come,' establishing the foundational Christian hermeneutical concept of typology. This is the most theologically loaded sense, where the 'imprint' metaphor becomes prophetic pattern. Spanish 'tipo' transliterates the Greek directly, preserving the technical theological term. EXAMPLES AND TYPES

en: type | es: tipo | fr: Tyr | de: Vorbild Rom 5:14

τύπτω G5180 V-PNA (14×)

To strike or beat; to hit someone with the hand, fist, or instrument, either actively or as a passive victim.

Typtō is a basic verb of physical impact — to strike, hit, or beat. In the New Testament it appears in scenes of violence and abuse: the mocking soldiers striking Jesus on the head (Matt 27:30; Mark 15:19), the servant beating his fellow servants (Matt 24:49; Luke 12:45), and Jesus' teaching about turning the other cheek when struck (Luke 6:29). Paul invokes it when the high priest orders him struck (Acts 23:2–3), and it appears figuratively in Paul's conscience metaphor about wounding a weaker brother (1 Cor 8:12). The translations are strikingly consistent: Spanish 'golpear,' German 'schlagen,' French 'frapper' — all core vocabulary for hitting.

1. strike, beat (active) (13×) To strike or beat someone physically, encompassing blows with fists, rods, or open hands. This active sense covers the full range of New Testament usage: the abuse of Jesus during his trial (Matt 27:30; Mark 15:19), the command to turn the other cheek (Luke 6:29), the wicked servant who beats others (Matt 24:49; Luke 12:45), and Paul's metaphorical extension to wounding a weak conscience (1 Cor 8:12). Multilingual evidence is highly convergent — Spanish 'golpear,' German 'schlagen,' French 'frapper' — all denoting direct physical impact. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: To-strike, beating, striking | es: Golpear, a-golpear, de-golpear | fr: frapper, tyran | de: schlagen, schlägt Matt 24:49; Matt 27:30; Mark 15:19; Luke 6:29; Luke 12:45

2. be struck (passive) (1×) To be struck or beaten, the passive counterpart appearing at Acts 23:3 where Paul says to the high priest, 'God is going to strike you, you whitewashed wall!' — responding to having just been struck on the mouth. The passive voice foregrounds the victim's experience of the blow. Translation evidence (Spanish 'ser golpeado,' English 'to be struck') mirrors the active sense vocabulary but with passive morphology, confirming this is the same physical action viewed from the recipient's perspective. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: to-be-struck | es: ser-golpeado | fr: tyran | de: schlägt Acts 23:3

τύραννος G5181 N-GMS (1×)

Tyrannus, a man's name meaning 'absolute ruler' or 'tyrant'

Acts 19:9 mentions the hall or school of Tyrannus, where Paul taught daily for two years during his Ephesian ministry. Tyrannus may have been a philosopher or teacher who owned or operated this lecture hall, which Paul apparently rented or borrowed. Some manuscripts add that Paul taught from the fifth to tenth hour—during the midday break when the hall would otherwise be unused. The detail provides glimpses of Paul's strategic adaptation: he used available venues and teaching times to maximize his opportunity for gospel proclamation.

(1×) Luke identifies this venue by its owner's name, providing concrete historical detail about Paul's Ephesian ministry. Whether Tyrannus was still actively teaching or had simply given his name to the facility, the hall became Paul's base for extended daily instruction. The multilingual glosses preserve the proper name with slight variations. The name's meaning ('tyrant' or 'absolute ruler') is ironic—in this hall, Paul proclaimed a different kind of kingdom and authority. The two-year tenure in this location allowed Paul to reach virtually all of Asia with the gospel. RULING AND REIGNING

en: of-Tyrannos | es: de-Tirannos | fr: Tyrannus | de: Τυράννου Acts 19:9

τυρβ-άζω G5182

to trouble, stir up, disturb; to agitate liquid, jostle in crowds, or experience inner turmoil

This verb primarily means to stir up or disturb, originally used for agitating mud or clay in water, causing turbid streams to burst forth. From physical stirring it extended to jostling in crowds and then to inner emotional disturbance or trouble. The New Testament famously uses a variant in Martha's complaint that she is troubled or distracted by many things. Later authors used it for revelry or celebration—perhaps originally 'stirring things up' at parties. The word captured the transition from physical churning to psychological agitation, a common metaphorical path in Greek where physical disturbance modeled mental or emotional states.

G5183 N-DMP (1×)

Tyrians, inhabitants of the city of Tyre

Acts 12:20 describes Herod's deadly conflict with the people of Tyre and Sidon, called Tyrians here. These were residents of the ancient Phoenician coastal cities, commercially important and historically connected to Israel (from Solomon's time onward). The dispute apparently involved trade or food supplies, forcing the Tyrians to seek peace because their region depended on Herod's territory for grain. The incident reveals the economic interdependence of Mediterranean regions and sets the stage for Herod's dramatic death following his acceptance of divine honors.

(1×) Luke's narrative identifies the people of Tyre in their dispute with Herod Agrippa I. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'con Tyrioi', French 'Tyrien', German preserving the Greek—designate the inhabitants of Tyre. The Phoenician cities had long commercial relationships with Jewish territories, sometimes friendly (as with Solomon and Hiram) and sometimes hostile. This particular conflict over food supplies shows the practical dependencies that shaped political relationships in the ancient world. The Tyrians' need for peace with Herod made them vulnerable to his arrogance, which ultimately brought divine judgment. TYRE CITY NAME

en: with-Tyrians | es: con-Týrioi | fr: Tyrien | de: Τυρίοις Acts 12:20

G5184 N-AFS (11×)

Tyre — the ancient Phoenician coastal city, cited in prophetic judgment oracles and Jesus' Galilean ministry

The proper noun Τύρος (Tyros) designates Tyre, the wealthy Phoenician port city on the Mediterranean coast of modern Lebanon. Jesus invokes Tyre in his woe oracles against Chorazin and Bethsaida: 'If the mighty works done in you had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago' (Matt 11:21-22; Luke 10:13-14). He withdraws to the region of Tyre and Sidon, where he heals the Syrophoenician woman's daughter (Matt 15:21; Mark 7:24, 31). Crowds from Tyre come to hear him (Mark 3:8; Luke 6:17). In Acts, Paul's ship puts in at Tyre, where he stays with disciples for seven days (Acts 21:3, 7). Spanish 'Tiro' and Arabic 'Sur' both name this ancient city.

Tyre (Phoenician city) (11×) Tyre, the ancient Phoenician port city on the Mediterranean coast, proverbially wealthy and historically subject to prophetic judgment (cf. Ezekiel 26-28; Isaiah 23). In the NT, Jesus uses it as a foil in his woe oracles: Tyre and Sidon would have repented had they seen his miracles (Matt 11:21-22; Luke 10:13-14). He ministers in its region, healing the Syrophoenician woman's daughter (Matt 15:21; Mark 7:24, 31), and crowds from Tyre attend his teaching (Mark 3:8; Luke 6:17). Paul visits the Tyrian Christian community en route to Jerusalem (Acts 21:3, 7). Spanish 'Tiro,' Korean 'Duro,' and Arabic 'Sur' all identify this same city. TYRE CITY NAME

en: Tyre, Tyros, for-Tyros | es: Tiro, Tyros, Týros | fr: Tyr | de: Tyrus, Τύρον, Τύρου Matt 11:21; Matt 11:22; Matt 15:21; Mark 3:8; Mark 7:24

τυφλός G5185 Adj-GMP (50×)

Blind, sightless; literally of physical inability to see, figuratively of spiritual ignorance or moral imperception.

A common adjective describing those who cannot see, used throughout the Gospels especially of people whom Jesus heals — the two blind men of Matthew 9, the man born blind in John 9, blind Bartimaeus. Nearly every occurrence is physical, and the multilingual evidence confirms this: Spanish 'ciego,' French 'aveugle,' and German 'blind' all converge on a single concrete meaning. Yet in Revelation 3:17 the word takes a striking metaphorical turn, addressed to the self-satisfied Laodicean church who cannot perceive their own spiritual poverty.

1. blind (physical) (49×) Physical blindness — the inability to see with the eyes. This is the overwhelmingly dominant sense (49 of 50 occurrences), covering every Gospel healing narrative and Jesus' references to 'blind guides' who are literally sightless. Spanish consistently renders 'ciego,' French 'aveugle,' and German 'blind,' with no variation across these passages (Matt 9:27–28; 11:5; 12:22; John 9:1–41). BLINDNESS PHYSICAL SPIRITUAL

en: a-blind-man, a-blind-person, blind | es: a-ciego, ciego | fr: aveugle | de: blind Matt 9:27; Matt 9:28; Matt 11:5; Matt 12:22; Matt 15:14

2. blind (spiritual/metaphorical) (1×) Spiritual or metaphorical blindness — inability to perceive spiritual reality. Used once in Rev 3:17, where Christ tells the Laodicean church they are 'wretched, pitiable, poor, blind, and naked.' French notably renders this with 'blind' rather than 'aveugle,' subtly distinguishing it from the physical sense. The metaphor draws on the literal meaning to expose self-deception. BLINDNESS PHYSICAL SPIRITUAL

en: blind | es: ciego | fr: blind | de: blind Rev 3:17

τυφλό-ω G5186 V-RIA-3S (3×)

to blind, make blind; to cause loss of sight or perception, whether literal or metaphorical

The verb means to deprive of sight, whether physically or mentally. Classical Greek used it both literally (for actual blindness) and metaphorically (for intellectual or moral blindness). In the New Testament, it appears only in the metaphorical sense—spiritual and mental blindness that prevents people from seeing the truth. Notably, the agent of blinding varies: God, Satan, or sin itself can blind minds and hearts. This imagery draws on the Hebrew Bible's language of hardening hearts and closing eyes as divine judgment.

(3×) John 12:40 quotes Isaiah 6:10, describing God's judicial hardening: "He has blinded (tetuphlōken) their eyes," preventing unbelieving Israel from seeing and turning. Second Corinthians 4:4 attributes the blinding to Satan: "the god of this age has blinded (etuphlōsen) the minds of unbelievers" to keep them from seeing the gospel's light. First John 2:11 shows hatred itself as the blinding agent: "the darkness has blinded (etuphlōsen) his eyes," causing the hate-filled person to walk in darkness. The multilingual glosses (Spanish cegar, French aveugler/rendre aveugle, German blenden) uniformly convey the causative sense—making blind rather than being blind. The perfect tense in John emphasizes the ongoing state of blindness. BLINDNESS PHYSICAL SPIRITUAL en: He-has-blinded, blinded | es: Ha-cegado, cegó | fr: aveugler, blenden, rendre-aveugle | de: blenden John 12:40; 2Cor 4:4; 1John 2:11

τῡφόω G5187 V-RPM/P-NMP (3×)

to be puffed up, conceited, deluded; to be inflated with pride or arrogance

This perfect passive verb describes a state of being deluded or crazed with conceit, rendered vain and arrogant by pride, success, or self-importance. The root noun tuphos means "smoke" or "vanity," and the verb suggests being clouded or stupefied by pride's fumes. It's stronger than simple pride—it implies a kind of mental intoxication or delusion. The New Testament uses it exclusively in the Pastoral Epistles as a vice to avoid in church leaders and as a characteristic of false teachers and end-times apostates.

(3×) First Timothy 3:6 warns against appointing a recent convert as overseer, "lest being puffed up with conceit (tuphotheís) he fall into the condemnation of the devil"—pride led to Satan's fall. First Timothy 6:4 describes the false teacher as "puffed up" (tetuphotai), knowing nothing but obsessed with controversies—conceit paired with ignorance. Second Timothy 3:4 lists the vices of the last days, including being "swollen with conceit" (tetuphoménoi), lovers of themselves rather than God. The multilingual glosses (Spanish envanecido, German aufgeblasen) capture the inflation metaphor. The perfect tense emphasizes the settled, ongoing state of deluded arrogance that disqualifies from leadership and characterizes false teaching. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: being-puffed-up, having-been-puffed-up, he-is-puffed-up | es: envanecidos, está-envanecido, habiendo-sido-envanecido | fr: τετυφωμένοι, τετύφωται, τυφωθεὶς | de: aufgeblasen 1Tim 3:6; 1Tim 6:4; 2Tim 3:4

τύφω G5188 V-PPM/P-ANS (1×)

smoldering, smoking, sending up smoke without flame

Matthew 12:20 quotes Isaiah's prophecy about the Messiah: 'A bruised reed he will not break, and a smoldering wick he will not quench.' The image depicts a lamp wick barely alive, smoking rather than burning brightly—representing weak, failing faith or diminished spiritual vitality. Where others might snuff out such feeble light, Jesus gently tends it back to health. The smoldering wick symbolizes those who are spiritually fragile, barely holding on; Christ's compassion preserves rather than destroys such vulnerable faith.

(1×) Matthew applies Isaiah's servant prophecy to Jesus' gentle ministry to the weak and broken. The smoldering wick represents diminished spiritual life, faith that's nearly extinguished but still faintly alive. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'humeante', French 'fumer', German preserving the Greek—all convey smoking without proper flame. Rather than impatiently discarding such failing faith, Jesus carefully nurtures it back to full flame. The image assures struggling believers that Christ doesn't require perfection before offering help; he specializes in restoring what seems nearly lost, treating the weak with tenderness rather than harsh judgment. SMOKE

en: smoldering | es: humeante | fr: fumer | de: τυφόμενον Matt 12:20

Τῡφων-ικός G5189 Adj-NMS (1×)

tempestuous, storm-like, violent as a typhoon

Acts 27:14 describes the violent northeaster wind called Euroclydon or Euraquilo that shipwrecked Paul's vessel. The adjective emphasizes the wind's typhoon-like violence and danger. This tempestuous storm drove the ship helplessly for many days, threatening all aboard with death. Luke's detailed account of the storm demonstrates both nautical knowledge and theological purpose—even natural forces serve God's plan, as the shipwreck ultimately brings Paul to Rome and provides opportunities for witness. The term captures the terrifying power of Mediterranean winter storms.

(1×) Luke employs this adjective to characterize the violent wind that caught Paul's ship in the Mediterranean. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'huracanado', French 'ouragan', German preserving the Greek—all convey typhoon-like intensity. This wasn't merely rough weather but a dangerous, ship-threatening tempest that created genuine fear for survival. The storm's violence sets up the dramatic narrative of Paul's leadership during crisis, the angel's message of survival, and the eventual shipwreck on Malta. The term establishes that this was no ordinary storm but a trial that tested everyone aboard. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: tempestuous | es: huracanado | fr: ouragan | de: τυφωνικὸς Acts 27:14

τύχικος G5190 N-NMS (5×)

Tychikos – a Christian from Asia Minor, Paul's trusted companion and letter-carrier

Tychikos (Tychicus) was a believer from the Roman province of Asia who became one of Paul's most dependable co-workers, serving as personal emissary and letter-bearer. He accompanied Paul on his final journey to Jerusalem (Acts 20:4) and later carried the epistles to the Ephesians and Colossians, tasked with reporting on the apostle's circumstances and encouraging the churches (Eph 6:21-22; Col 4:7-8). Paul calls him 'the beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord,' a commendation echoed by the uniform cross-lingual rendering of his name – Spanish Tychikos, French Tychique, German Tychikus – all preserving the Greek form with minimal adaptation.

(5×) The proper name of a Christian from the province of Asia who served as Paul's trusted envoy and courier. He delivered the letters to the Ephesians and Colossians (Eph 6:21; Col 4:7), and Paul considered dispatching him to Titus in Crete (Titus 3:12) and later to Ephesus to relieve Timothy (2 Tim 4:12). The name appears uniformly across languages – French renders it Tychique while Spanish and German stay closer to the Greek – confirming a single proper-noun identity across all five New Testament occurrences. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tychikos | es: Tychikós, Týchikos, a-Tychikós | fr: Tychique, Τυχικόν, Τυχικὸν | de: Tychikus, Τυχικὸς Acts 20:4; Eph 6:21; Col 4:7; 2Tim 4:12; Titus 3:12

ὑᾰκίνθῐνος G5191 Adj-AMP (1×)

hyacinth-colored, dark blue or violet-purple in hue

Revelation 9:17 describes breastplates that are fiery red, dark blue, and sulfur yellow—colors John sees in his apocalyptic vision of fearsome cavalry. The hyacinth color suggests deep blue or violet, possibly with reddish tones, contributing to the overall ominous appearance of these supernatural warriors. Ancient interpreters sometimes associated this color with smoke or darkness. The specific color detail adds to the vivid, unsettling nature of John's vision, where every element contributes to an impression of supernatural terror and divine judgment.

(1×) John's vision employs this color adjective to describe the breastplates of apocalyptic horsemen, creating a visual impression of supernatural menace. The hyacinth flower gave its name to a deep blue or violet-purple shade. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'de jacinto', French and German 'hyazinthen'—preserve the color reference. In combination with fiery red and sulfur yellow, the hyacinth blue creates a palette suggesting fire, smoke, and brimstone—elements of divine judgment. The precise color details characterize John's visions throughout Revelation, where visual symbolism communicates theological meaning. PURPLE FABRIC DYE

en: hyacinth-colored | es: de-jacinto | fr: hyazinthen | de: hyazinthen Rev 9:17

Ὑάκινθος G5192 N-NMS (1×)

jacinth or hyacinth, a precious stone of deep blue or violet color

Among the foundation stones of the New Jerusalem in Revelation 21:20, jacinth appears as the eleventh gem. Ancient jacinth was likely a blue or violet sapphire-type stone, though precise identification of ancient gems remains uncertain. The prophetic vision uses these precious stones to communicate the incomparable beauty and value of God's eternal dwelling with humanity. Each gem contributes its unique color and brilliance to the composite picture of glory. The cumulative effect suggests beauty beyond anything earthly, appropriate for the city where God's presence dwells forever.

(1×) John's catalog of foundation stones includes jacinth, adding its deep blue or violet hue to the spectrum of the heavenly city's glory. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'jacinto', French and German 'Hyazinth'—preserve the gemstone name, though ancient and modern identifications may differ. The eleventh position in a sequence of twelve suggests completeness and perfection—each stone necessary to the whole. The vision assures believers that God's final city will display beauty and worth beyond imagination, with every foundation reflecting divine splendor through its unique character and color. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: jacinth | es: jacinto; | fr: Hyazinth | de: Hyazinth Rev 21:20

ὑάλ-ινος G5193 Adj-NFS (3×)

glassy, made of glass or crystal; having the appearance or substance of glass

This adjective describes something made of glass or having glass-like qualities—transparent, smooth, crystalline. In antiquity, glass was a luxury material, and the image of a sea of glass evokes both beauty and perfection. The term appears only in Revelation's throne room visions, where the heavenly temple contains a glassy sea unlike anything in the earthly tabernacle. The image may echo the bronze laver in Solomon's temple but transformed into something transcendent and static—a sea that doesn't move, suggesting perfect peace and stability before God's throne.

(3×) All three occurrences appear in Revelation's visionary descriptions of heaven's throne room. Revelation 4:6 depicts "a sea of glass (hualinē) like crystal" before the throne, creating an atmosphere of awe and otherness. Revelation 15:2 twice mentions the glassy sea, now "mingled with fire," where the victorious stand with harps—a scene of triumph and worship. The Spanish de vidrio, French de verre, and German glaesern all straightforwardly denote glass composition. The glassy sea serves as a platform for worship and a symbol of the transparent, unmixed perfection of God's presence, where nothing is hidden and all is revealed in crystal clarity. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: glassy | es: de-vidrio | fr: de-verre | de: glaesern Rev 4:6; Rev 15:2

ὕαλος G5194 N-NMS (2×)

glass, crystal, a transparent crystalline material

Originally referring to rock crystal or crystalline stone, this word came to mean glass by the Hellenistic period. In Revelation's vision of the New Jerusalem, glass appears as a symbol of purity and transparency. The city's street is described as pure gold, yet transparent as glass—a paradoxical image combining supreme value with perfect clarity. The sea of glass before God's throne elsewhere in Revelation evokes both crystalline beauty and the ancient cosmic waters now calm and clear.

(2×) From classical usage for rock-crystal or crystalline stone, ὕαλος evolved to mean manufactured glass. Both Revelation occurrences (21:18, 21) describe the New Jerusalem's materials: the city is pure gold 'as it were transparent glass' (ὡς ὕαλος διαυγής) and the street is pure gold 'like transparent glass.' The imagery combines preciousness with perfect translucence, suggesting a reality beyond ordinary physical properties. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: glass | es: a-vidrio, vidrio | fr: Glas | de: Glas Rev 21:18; Rev 21:21

ὑβρίζω G5195 V-AIA-3P (5×)

hybrizo – to treat with violent insolence; to mistreat, insult, or abuse someone shamefully

The verb hybrizo carries the force of deliberate, contemptuous abuse – not merely verbal insult but outrageous mistreatment that violates a person's dignity and honor. In classical Greek it denoted arrogant excess (hybris) expressed through violence or lust. The New Testament preserves this gravity: the king's servants shamefully mistreat the wedding guests (Matt 22:6), Jesus prophesies that he will be insulted and spat upon (Luke 18:32), and Paul and Silas are beaten and abused at Philippi (1 Thess 2:2). Spanish ultrajados and French outrager both capture the element of outrage that distinguishes this word from milder terms for insult.

(5×) To treat with violent insolence and contemptuous abuse, encompassing both physical mistreatment and verbal outrage that violates a person's honor. In Matt 22:6 the king's servants are shamefully treated, and in Luke 18:32 Jesus prophesies that the Son of Man will be mocked, insulted (hybristheis), and spat upon. The Spanish rendering ultrajados and French outrager both emphasize the element of indignity beyond mere insult, while German transliterations preserve the Greek form, reflecting the word's concentrated force across all five occurrences. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: having-been-mistreated, he-will-be-insulted, mistreated | es: habiendo-sido-ultrajados, insultas, maltrataron | fr: outrager, ὑβρισθέντες | de: ὑβρίζεις, ὑβρίσαι, ὑβρισθέντες Matt 22:6; Luke 11:45; Luke 18:32; Acts 14:5; 1Thess 2:2

ὕβρις G5196 N-AFS (3×)

insult, injury, mistreatment; wanton violence or abuse arising from arrogance or contempt

This noun denotes violent, abusive treatment motivated by arrogance or contempt—not violence for gain but for the assertion of dominance. Classical Greek used it for the insolence that comes from pride and strength, the kind of abuse that dishonors the victim. It can range from verbal insults to physical assault, united by the element of contemptuous aggression. In the New Testament, it describes both the hardships faced in ministry and the risks of seafaring, showing how hubris—the attempt to assert superiority—manifests in multiple forms of mistreatment.

(3×) Acts 27:10 and 27:21 both appear in Paul's sea voyage narrative: Paul foresees that continuing would result in "injury" (hubreōs) to cargo and lives—violence from the elements. The second use confirms his prediction after the storm's damage. Second Corinthians 12:10 shows Paul's willingness to take pleasure in "insults" (hubresin) for Christ's sake, listing them among afflictions he endures. The multilingual glosses show semantic range: Spanish afrentas (affronts)/daño (harm), French outrage, German retention of Greek forms. The term bridges natural violence (storm damage) and human violence (insulting abuse), both rooted in forces that disrespect and harm their objects. CALAMITY AND DISASTER

en: injury, insults | es: afrentas, daño | fr: outrage | de: ὕβρεσιν, ὕβρεως, ὕβριν Acts 27:10; Acts 27:21; 2Cor 12:10

ὑβρ-ιστής G5197 N-AMP (2×)

one who acts insolently or violently; an arrogant, abusive person

This term designates someone characterized by violent arrogance, insolence, or abuse of others. It describes more than mere pride—it's aggressive, outward-directed contempt that harms others. Paul uses it in his list of vices marking those who suppress the truth in Romans 1, and again autobiographically, describing his pre-conversion state as a violent persecutor. The word captures the active, harmful dimension of ungodly pride.

(2×) Classical ὑβριστής described violent, wanton, or insolent persons (like Homer's suitors). Rom 1:30 lists it among the vices of those who reject God—'insolent, arrogant' people who actively harm others. In 1 Tim 1:13, Paul confesses he was formerly an ὑβριστής (violent, insolent man) when persecuting the church, showing how the term denotes aggressive, abusive behavior beyond mere internal pride. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: insolent, violent-man | es: insolente, insolentes | fr: Frevler, insolent | de: Frevler Rom 1:30; 1Tim 1:13

ὑγι-αίνω G5198 V-PSA-3P (12×)

To be sound or healthy; of doctrine, to be wholesome and free from error; of persons, to be physically well.

A medical term that the Pastoral Epistles brilliantly repurpose as a theological metaphor. In its figurative sense, 'sound' teaching is teaching that produces spiritual health — free from the infection of false doctrine. Paul and Titus use the participle hygiainon repeatedly to qualify 'words,' 'teaching,' and 'faith' (1 Tim 1:10; 6:3; 2 Tim 1:13; 4:3; Titus 1:9, 13; 2:1–2). The Spanish sanas ('healthy, wholesome') and the medical etymology make the metaphor vivid: bad theology is a disease. In its literal sense the word describes physical health, as when Jesus declares that 'those who are well have no need of a physician' (Luke 5:31), or the centurion's servant is found 'healthy' (Luke 7:10), or the father celebrates that his prodigal son has returned 'safe and sound' (Luke 15:27).

1. sound, healthy (doctrine) (8×) Metaphorically sound or healthy, said of doctrine, teaching, words, or faith that are theologically correct and spiritually wholesome. A hallmark of the Pastoral Epistles (1 Tim 1:10; 6:3; 2 Tim 1:13; 4:3; Titus 1:9, 13; 2:1–2), where the medical metaphor implies that false teaching is a contagion and sound doctrine promotes spiritual vitality. Spanish sanas/de-sanas and the consistent pairing with 'words' or 'teaching' confirm this as a semi-technical Pastoral term. SOUND HEALTHY DOCTRINE
en: of-sound, sound, they-may-be-sound | es: a-sanas, de-sanas, estén-sanos | fr: ὑγιαίνοντας, ὑγιαίνουσιν, ὑγιαίνωσιν | de: ὑγιαίνοντας, ὑγιαίνουσιν, ὑγιαίνωσιν 1Tim 1:10; 1Tim 6:3; 2Tim 1:13; 2Tim 4:3; Titus 1:9

2. healthy, well (physical) (4×) Literally healthy, well, or physically sound, describing the bodily condition of a person. Jesus uses it in his physician proverb — 'those who are healthy have no need of a doctor' (Luke 5:31). The centurion's servant is found hygiainonta, 'in good health' (Luke 7:10), and the father rejoices that his prodigal son has come back hygiainonta, 'safe and sound' (Luke 15:27). John's wish for Gaius's physical health (3 John 1:2) rounds out this literal usage. Arabic ṣiḥḥ and Hebrew בָּרִיא both confirm the straightforward medical register. SOUND HEALTHY DOCTRINE en: being-healthy, healthy, to-be-healthy | es: que-están-sanos, sano, tengas-salud | fr: en-bonne-santé, ὑγιαίνειν | de: ὑγιαίνειν, ὑγιαίνοντα, ὑγιαίνοντες Luke 5:31; Luke 7:10; Luke 15:27; 3John 1:2

ὑγι-ής G5199 Adj-NFS (12×)

Healthy, sound in body; figuratively wholesome or sound (of doctrine, teaching, or words).
A word rooted in physical well-being that carries a powerful metaphorical extension. In the Gospels it describes people made whole after miraculous healing – the man at the pool of Bethesda whom Jesus asks 'Do you want to be made well?' (John 5:6), and the woman healed of her bleeding (Mark 5:34). The Spanish 'sana' and German 'gesund' capture this bodily wholeness. In the Pastoral Epistles, Paul repurposes the same word for doctrine that is spiritually robust and uncorrupted, 'sound teaching' (Titus 2:1), bridging body and belief in a single adjective.

1. healthy, well (physical wholeness) (11×) Describes a person restored to full physical health, free from disease or disability. Nearly all New Testament occurrences cluster in healing narratives – especially John 5, where the word appears six times around one miracle at the pool of Bethesda. Cross-lingual glosses consistently render it as bodily wholeness: Spanish 'sano/sana,' French 'en bonne sante,' German 'gesund.' The underlying image is completeness, a body with nothing missing or broken. SOUND HEALTHY DOCTRINE en: healthy, well | es: sana, sano, sanos | fr: en-bonne-santé, sain | de: gesund, ὑγιής, ὑγιεῖς Matt 12:13; Matt 15:31; Mark 5:34; John 5:4; John 5:6

2. sound, wholesome (of doctrine/words) (1×) A metaphorical transfer from bodily health to doctrinal integrity, found exclusively in the Pastoral Epistles. Paul speaks of 'sound words' (1 Tim 6:3), 'sound doctrine' (Titus 2:1), and 'sound speech that cannot be condemned' (Titus 2:8). The same Spanish 'sana' serves both senses, showing how naturally the metaphor travels across languages. Just as a healthy body functions without corruption, sound teaching operates without distortion. SOUND HEALTHY DOCTRINE en: sound | es: sana | fr: gesund | de: gesund Titus 2:8

ὑγρός G5200 Adj-DNS (1×)

green, moist, fresh, not dried or withered
In Luke 23:31, Jesus asks, 'If they do these things in the green tree, what will happen in the dry?' The proverb contrasts green wood (living, moist, hard to burn) with dry wood (dead, combustible, ready for fire). If innocent Jesus suffers this way—the green tree—how much worse will judgment fall on guilty Jerusalem—the dry tree? The imagery draws on common agricultural observation: green wood resists fire, while dry wood catches easily. Jesus uses this natural contrast to warn of coming judgment on a spiritually dead nation.

(1×) Jesus employs this proverbial imagery on the way to crucifixion, contrasting his own innocence (green wood) with Jerusalem's guilt (dry wood). The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'verde', French 'vert', German preserving the Greek—all indicate living, moist vegetation. The saying assumes common knowledge: green wood contains moisture that resists burning, while dry wood ignites quickly. If such suffering befalls the innocent one, what judgment awaits the guilty? The term grounds Jesus' prophetic warning in observable nature, making the spiritual principle vivid and inescapable. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES
en: green | es: verde | fr: vert | de: ὑγρῷ Luke 23:31

ὑδρ-ία G5201 N-AFS (3×)

water jar, water pot; a vessel for holding or carrying water
The hudria was a large ceramic vessel with three handles—two small side handles for lifting and one vertical handle for pouring—specifically designed for carrying water. Women typically carried these to wells or springs, balancing them on their heads or shoulders. The size varied, but they could hold 20-30 liters. Though the root meaning is "water pot," the term could apply to other large vessels. All New Testament uses are literal, describing actual water jars in Jesus' ministry, making this everyday object a participant in miraculous and evangelistic moments.

(3×) John 2:6-7 contains two of the three occurrences: six stone water jars (hudrias) stand ready for Jewish purification rites at Cana, and Jesus commands servants to fill the jars (hudrias) with water before transforming it to wine. These were large vessels holding 20-30 gallons each. John 4:28 describes the Samaritan woman leaving her water jar (hudrian) at the well when she runs to tell her village about Jesus—abandoning her original purpose in excitement over the living water. The Spanish tinaja(s), French cruche, and German Wasserkruege all denote water vessels. The jars become sacramental in a sense—ordinary containers for ordinary water, transformed into vessels of miraculous wine and catalysts for gospel proclamation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: water-jar, water-jars | es: tinaja, tinajas | fr: cruche | de: Wasserkruege John 2:6; John 2:7; John 4:28

ὑδρο-ποτέω G5202 V-PMA-2S (1×)

to drink water, to be a water-drinker
In 1 Timothy 5:23, Paul advises Timothy to stop drinking only water and instead use a little wine for his stomach and frequent ailments. The instruction assumes Timothy has been abstaining from wine entirely, perhaps for ascetic reasons or to avoid any appearance of excess. Paul's pastoral wisdom recognizes that some physical conditions benefit from medicinal use of wine, and that extreme asceticism isn't required for godliness. The advice is practical, not theological—Paul addresses Timothy's specific health needs with common-sense medical counsel of the time.

(1×) Paul's personal counsel to Timothy addresses a specific health situation with practical advice. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'bebas agua', French and German preserving the Greek root—indicate exclusive water-drinking. In the ancient world, wine mixed with water was the normal beverage, both for hydration and to avoid waterborne illness. Pure water-drinking might represent extreme asceticism or unusual caution. Paul urges moderation: Timothy shouldn't feel obligated to drink only water if moderate wine use would help his stomach problems. The instruction balances spiritual discipline with practical care for physical health. WATER
en: drink-only-water | es: bebas-agua | fr: ὑδροπότει | de: Wasser-trinken 1Tim 5:23

ὑδρωπ-ικός G5203 Adj-NMS (1×)

dropsical, suffering from dropsy or edema

Luke 14:2 introduces a man suffering from dropsy (edema—abnormal fluid accumulation causing swelling) who appears before Jesus on the Sabbath. The condition creates a test case for Jesus' understanding of Sabbath law. The lawyers and Pharisees watch to see whether Jesus will heal on the Sabbath, which they consider unlawful work. Jesus responds by healing the man and then challenging their legal logic with questions about rescuing animals on the Sabbath. The dropsical man becomes both recipient of mercy and occasion for teaching about the Sabbath's true purpose.

(1×) Luke presents this medical detail as part of a Sabbath controversy narrative. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'hidrópico', French 'hydropique', German preserving the Greek—all describe the condition of abnormal fluid retention causing visible swelling. The specificity suggests Luke's medical interest and careful observation. Jesus' willingness to heal this man on the Sabbath demonstrates that mercy and restoration fulfill rather than violate Sabbath law. The man's suffering provided occasion for Jesus to teach that the Sabbath was made for human wellbeing, not as a rigid system that prevents compassionate action. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: dropsical | es: hidrópico | fr: hydropique | de: ὑδρωπικὸς Luke 14:2

ὕδωρ G5204 N-DNP (80×)

water; the essential natural substance used literally and symbolically for life, purification, and baptism

Greek hydor covers the full range of water references in the New Testament: rivers, seas, wells, rain, drinking water, and the water of ritual purification and baptism. John's Gospel makes especially rich theological use of the term — the water-to-wine miracle at Cana, the living water offered to the Samaritan woman (John 4:10), and the water and blood flowing from Christ's side (John 19:34). Baptismal water carries covenantal weight, as John the Baptist distinguishes his water baptism from the coming baptism of the Spirit (Matt 3:11). Every language renders it with its basic word for water — Spanish agua, French eau, German Wasser — yet the theological resonances are immense.

water (80×) The common substance water in all its New Testament occurrences: natural bodies of water (seas, rivers, wells), drinking water, water for Jewish purification rites, and the water of baptism. Jesus contrasts physical water with 'living water' (John 4:10-14), and John the Baptist distinguishes water-baptism from Spirit-baptism (Matt 3:11). The universal simplicity of the translation — agua, eau, Wasser — belies the term's deep symbolic freight. WATER

en: of-water, water, waters | es: -agua, agua, aguas | fr: eau | de: Wasser Matt 3:11; Matt 3:16; Matt 17:15; Matt 27:24; Matt 27:49

ὑετ-ός G5205 N-NMS (5×)

hyetos – rain, especially a heavy shower; rainfall sent or withheld by divine agency

The noun hyetos denotes rain, particularly a heavy downpour as distinguished in classical Greek from continuous drizzle (psekados) or steady rain (ombros). In the New Testament every occurrence carries theological freight: God gives rain from heaven as testimony to his goodness (Acts 14:17), rain falls on the earth and brings blessing to the faithful (Heb 6:7), Elijah's prayer both shuts the sky and opens it again to rain (Jas 5:18), and the two witnesses possess power to shut heaven so that no rain falls (Rev 11:6). Spanish lluvia, French pluie, and German Regen all converge on the single concept of rainfall, with no polysemy.

(5×) Rain or heavy rainfall, consistently depicted as under divine sovereignty in the New Testament. God gives rains (hyetous) and fruitful seasons as a witness to the nations (Acts 14:17), and the dramatic Elijah cycle is recalled in Jas 5:18 where the prophet's prayer reopens the heavens. Spanish lluvia, French pluie, and German Regen all map uniformly to this single meaning. The classical distinction from ombros (steady rain) and psekados (drizzle) is not lexically active in the New Testament but enriches the word's connotation of forceful, heaven-sent downpour. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION en: rain, rains | es: lluvia, lluvias | fr: Regen, pluie | de: Regen, ὑετοὺς, ὑετὸν Acts 14:17; Acts 28:2; Heb 6:7; Jas 5:18; Rev 11:6

υἱο-θεσία G5206 N-NFS (5×)

huiothesia – adoption as a son; the legal and spiritual act of being placed as a child in a family

Huiothesia (from huios 'son' + thesis 'placing') is the distinctly Pauline term for adoption – the legal act by which someone not born into a family is granted full status as a son and heir. Paul employs it in a profoundly theological register: believers receive the 'spirit of adoption' by which they cry 'Abba, Father' (Rom 8:15), they await the full consummation of their adoption at the resurrection of the body (Rom 8:23), and adoption belongs among the covenant privileges of Israel (Rom 9:4). The purpose of Christ's redemptive work was precisely 'that we might receive adoption as sons' (Gal 4:5). German Sohnschaft ('sonship') captures the relational nuance beautifully, while Spanish and French adopcion and adoption preserve the legal metaphor.

(5×) The theological-legal concept of being placed as a son within God's family, conferring full rights of inheritance and intimate relationship. Paul uses it to describe both the present reality – the Spirit enables the cry 'Abba, Father' (Rom 8:15; Gal 4:5) – and the eschatological hope of bodily redemption (Rom 8:23). It also names a historic privilege of Israel (Rom 9:4) and the predestined purpose of God in Eph 1:5. German Sohnschaft emphasizes the relational 'sonship' dimension, while Spanish adopcion and French adoption foreground the legal transfer of status, together illuminating this single rich sense across all five occurrences. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: adoption, of-adoption | es: adopción, de-adopción | fr: Sohnschaft, adoption | de: Sohnschaft Rom 8:15; Rom 8:23; Rom 9:4; Gal 4:5; Eph 1:5

υἱός G5207 N-VMP (382×)

Son, descendant, or one characterized by a quality; used both literally and in Semitic idiom ('son of...')

Huios is one of the most theologically loaded nouns in the Greek New Testament. Its 382 occurrences range from the literal sense of 'male offspring' (Matt 1:21) to the messianic title 'Son of Man' and the supreme christological confession 'Son of God' (Matt 3:17; 16:16). Following Semitic idiom, it also denotes membership in a category: 'sons of light' (John 12:36), 'sons of Abraham' (Gal 3:7), 'sons of the kingdom' (Matt 8:12). This breadth means translations must navigate biological, relational, and metaphorical registers within a single lexeme – hijo, fils, Sohn all bear this same weight.

son, descendant, one characterized by (382×) Greek noun denoting a male offspring, a descendant, or one who belongs to or is characterized by a particular quality or group. Literal usage covers biological sons (Matt 1:21, the son born to Mary). The christological title ho huios tou theou ('the Son of God,' Matt 3:17; 16:16) and the apocalyptic ho huios tou anthropou ('the Son of Man,' Matt 8:20) dominate the theological landscape. Semitic-influenced category usage ('sons of light,' 'sons of Abraham') extends the word beyond kinship into spiritual identity and covenant belonging. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Son, son | es: Hijo, hijo | fr: fils | de: Sohn Matt 3:17; Matt 4:3; Matt 4:6; Matt 8:20; Matt 8:29

ὕλη G5208 N-AFS (1×)

forest, woodland, or wood as material

James 3:5 observes that the tongue, though small, makes great boasts —just as a small fire can set ablaze a great forest. The image captures the destructive potential of uncontrolled speech: one careless word can ignite damage far beyond its apparent size, just as a tiny spark can consume vast woodlands. The forest represents anything vulnerable to fire's spread—relationships, communities, reputations, all of which can be devastated by the tongue's misuse. The metaphor warns of disproportionate consequences: small causes producing enormous effects.

(1×) James employs this term in his powerful warning about the tongue's destructive capacity. A forest or woodland represents extensive, valuable material that a small fire can destroy. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'bosque', French and German 'Wald'—all indicate extensive wooded area. The metaphor works through scale: the vast forest dwarfs the tiny spark, yet the spark can consume everything. Similarly, the small tongue can set ablaze an entire life or community. James's point is sobering: we must control our speech because its potential for harm far exceeds its physical size. FOREST WOODLAND

en: a-forest | es: bosque | fr: ὕλην | de: Wald Jas 3:5

σύ G5209

you (plural accusative); accusative form of the second person plural pronoun

This is ὑμᾶς, the accusative plural form of the second person pronoun, meaning 'you' as the direct object of a verb when addressing multiple people. Greek carefully distinguished singular from plural second person forms, unlike modern English which uses 'you' for both. This form appeared constantly in New Testament letters where apostles addressed communities: 'I exhort you,' 'God loves you,' 'I send you.' The plural forms were essential for epistolary discourse where writers addressed churches as corporate bodies. The accusative case marked the recipients of action, making this form fundamental to commands, blessings, warnings, and expressions of apostolic concern for congregations.

σύ G5210

you (plural nominative); second person plural pronoun as subject

This is ὑμεῖς, the nominative plural form of the second person pronoun, meaning 'you' as the subject when addressing a group. Greek's rich pronoun system distinguished singular from plural second person, and the nominative case marked who was performing the action. New Testament writers used it emphatically to contrast audiences with others: 'you are the light of the world,' 'you, however, are not in the flesh.' The form could stand alone for emphasis ('you yourselves know') or accompany verbs where English would simply say 'you.' It marked collective identity and responsibility in apostolic instruction to communities of believers.

ὑμέναι-ος G5211 N-NMS (2×)

Hymenaeus, a false teacher who shipwrecked his faith

Hymenaeus (named after the Greek god of marriage) was a heretical teacher who abandoned sound doctrine and damaged the faith of others. Paul mentions him twice, both times in stark warning. In 1 Timothy, he's one of two men Paul handed over to Satan for discipline so they might learn not to blaspheme. In 2 Timothy, he's linked with Philetus in teaching the resurrection had already happened, thereby upsetting the faith of some believers.

(2×) This proper name (from the wedding god Hymen) identifies a false teacher appearing in 1 Tim 1:20 and 2 Tim 2:17. Paul 'handed over' Hymenaeus to Satan for discipline after he made shipwreck of faith. Later paired with Philetus, Hymenaeus taught that the resurrection had already occurred, spreading destructive heresy that corrupted believers' understanding of eschatology and undermined hope in bodily resurrection. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hymenaios | es: Hyménaios | fr: Ὑμέναιος | de: Hymenaeos 1Tim 1:20; 2Tim 2:17

ὑμέτερος G5212 PPro-AM2P (11×)

Your, yours — second-person plural possessive pronoun attributing ownership or association to the addressees

The possessive adjective ὑμέτερος (hymeteros) is the emphatic second-person plural possessive, meaning 'your' or 'yours.' It typically appears where the speaker draws a pointed contrast. Jesus declares, 'Yours is the kingdom of God' (Luke 6:20), distinguishes 'your time' from his own (John 7:6), appeals to 'your law' in debate with the Pharisees (John 8:17), and warns that persecuting him means persecuting them (John 15:20). In Luke 16:12, faithfulness with another's property earns 'what is your own.' Paul uses it for mutual belonging and spiritual matters (1 Cor 15:31; 16:17; Gal 6:13). Spanish 'vuestro' and Korean 'neohui-ui' convey the emphatic possessive.

your, yours (11×) Second-person plural possessive pronoun or adjective meaning 'your' or 'yours,' used emphatically to attribute ownership, association, or responsibility to the addressees. Jesus employs it to contrast his situation with the disciples' (John 7:6, 'your time'; John 8:17, 'your law'; John 15:20, 'your word/persecution'), to promise kingdom possession (Luke 6:20, 'yours is the kingdom'), and to distinguish true from entrusted property (Luke 16:12, 'your own'). Paul uses it for mutual belonging (1 Cor 16:17; 2 Cor 8:8) and spiritual boasting (1 Cor 15:31; Gal 6:13). Spanish 'vuestro/vuestra,' Arabic 'kum,' and Hindi 'tumhara' all serve as equivalents. SECOND PERSON PLURAL

en: of-your, your, your-own | es: de-vosotros, vuestra, vuestro | fr: de-vous, votre, vous | de: euch, euer, ihr Luke 6:20; Luke 16:12; John 7:6; John 8:17; John 15:20

σύ G5213

you (plural dative); dative form meaning 'to you' or 'for you' when addressing multiple people

This is ὑμῖν, the dative plural of the second person pronoun, meaning 'to you' or 'for you' when addressing groups. The dative case marked indirect objects, recipients of benefits, or those affected by actions. New Testament letters constantly used this form in promises ('grace to you and peace'), instructions ('I say to you'), and explanations ('this mystery is revealed to you'). The plural dative was essential for epistolary genre where apostles addressed whole churches. It structured the giving and receiving relationships between God, apostolic teachers, and believing communities, marking who received grace, teaching, commands, and encouragement.

ὑμν-έω G5214 V-APA-NMP (4×)

To sing a hymn, chant praise, or celebrate God in song; liturgical worship through vocal music.

Describes the act of singing sacred praise, whether in formal worship or spontaneous devotion. At the Last Supper (Matt 26:30; Mark 14:26), Jesus and the disciples sang a hymn before going out to the Mount of Olives — almost certainly the Hallel psalms (Ps 113-118). In Acts 16:25, Paul and Silas were 'singing hymns' to God at midnight in a Philippian jail, and Hebrews 2:12 quotes Psalm 22:22 where the Messiah declares 'I will sing your praise.' The German 'lobsingen' beautifully captures the compound idea of praise-singing that this Greek verb conveys.

(4×) To sing praise or chant a hymn in worship of God, whether in corporate liturgy or personal devotion. Matt 26:30 and Mark 14:26 describe Jesus and the disciples singing after the Passover meal, almost certainly the Hallel psalms. Acts 16:25 shows Paul and Silas singing hymns in prison at midnight, and Heb 2:12 places the verb on the lips of the Messiah himself via Ps 22:22. The German 'lobsingen' (praise-sing) and French 'chanter des hymnes' both highlight the specifically sacred and laudatory character of the singing. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: I-will-sing, having-sung-a-hymn, were-singing-hymns | es: cantaban-himnos, habiendo-cantado-himno, habiendo-cantado-un-himno | fr: chanter, chanter-des-hymnes, lobsingen | de: lobsingen, lobsingt Matt 26:30; Mark 14:26; Acts 16:25; Heb 2:12

ὕμνος G5215 N-DMP (2×)

hymns, songs of praise to God

Hymns are songs composed specifically for worship and praise, particularly addressed to God. Classical usage distinguished hymns (to gods or heroes) from other song types. Paul's instructions in Ephesians and Colossians both mention hymns as part of corporate Spirit-filled worship alongside psalms and spiritual songs. These likely included both inherited Jewish worship forms and new Christian compositions celebrating Christ.

(2×) From classical designation of songs in praise of gods/heroes, ὕμνοι in Eph 5:19 and Col 3:16 appear in Paul's triad: 'psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs.' The three terms (likely overlapping) capture the rich variety of Christian worship music. Hymns specifically may have celebrated Christ's person and work, as suggested by quotations of early christological hymns embedded elsewhere in Paul's letters (e.g., Phil 2:6-11). SONGS AND HYMNS en: hymns | es: con-himnos, himnos | fr: ὕμνοις | de: Lobgesang Eph 5:19; Col 3:16

σύ G5216
your, yours (plural); genitive plural of second person pronoun functioning as possessive
This is ὑμῶν, the genitive plural form of the second person pronoun, meaning 'of you' or 'your' when addressing groups. Greek used the genitive case for possession rather than separate possessive adjectives for all persons. This form appeared constantly in epistolary literature: 'your faith,' 'your love,' 'your work.' It allowed apostles to speak about the collective characteristics, possessions, or responsibilities of communities. The form could also indicate source ('from you') or relationship ('your brothers'). In New Testament ethical instruction, 'your' marked both what believers possessed in Christ and what they were responsible to demonstrate in conduct and character.

ὑπάγω G5217 V-PIA-1S (80×)
To go, proceed, depart — a verb of motion often used in commands, sometimes implying withdrawal or departure.
A common verb of movement in the Gospels, frequently appearing in Jesus' direct commands: 'Go, show yourself to the priest' (Matt 8:4), 'Go, sell what you have' (Matt 19:21). While the vast majority of its 80 occurrences simply mean 'go' or 'proceed,' a small but theologically significant subset carries the weightier sense of 'go away, withdraw,' as when Jesus asks the Twelve, 'Do you also wish to go away?' (John 6:67). Spanish distinguishes these with 'id/voy' versus 'iros,' and German uses 'geht-hin' versus 'weggehen,' confirming the departure nuance.

1. go, proceed (78×) General movement or travel: 'go, proceed, be on one's way.' The dominant sense across 78 occurrences, used in imperatives where Jesus sends people on missions or errands (Matt 5:24, 'Go, first be reconciled'; Matt 8:4, 'Go, show yourself to the priest'). French 'va' and Spanish 'id/voy' render this straightforwardly as simple motion toward a destination. CONDUCT AND WALKING en: Go, I-am-going, I-go | es: Id, Voy, id | fr: va | de: geht-hin, weggehen Matt 5:24; Matt 5:41; Matt 8:4; Matt 8:32; Matt 9:6

2. go away, depart (2×) Deliberate departure or withdrawal: 'go away, depart,' with emphasis on leaving rather than arriving. Found in emotionally charged passages — Jesus' poignant question to the disciples, 'Do you also wish to go away?' (John 6:67), and the note that many were 'going away' to believe in Jesus (John 12:11). Spanish 'iros/se-iban' and German 'weggehen' mark this as separative motion, distinct from neutral travel. CONDUCT AND WALKING en: to-go-away, were-going-away | es: iros, se-iban | fr: va | de: weggehen John 6:67; John 12:11

ὑπακοή G5218 N-AFS (15×)
obedience — the act or disposition of submitting to authority, especially to God or the gospel Hupakoe derives from hupakouein ('to listen under,' i.e. to heed) and denotes willing submission — the full alignment of the will with a higher authority. Paul uses the term programmatically: the 'obedience of faith' bookends Romans (1:5; 16:26), framing the epistle as a call to responsive trust. The contrast between Adam's disobedience and Christ's obedience (Rom 5:19) gives the word its most theologically charged moment. Spanish 'obediencia,' French 'obeissance,' and German 'Gehorsam' confirm a single stable semantic core.

obedience (15×) Willing submission to an authoritative command, especially to God, the gospel, or Christ. Paul's phrase 'obedience of faith' (Rom 1:5; 16:26) describes the proper response to the gospel, while Rom 5:19 contrasts Adam's parakoe with Christ's hupakoe. In 2 Cor 10:5-6 the word extends to intellectual submission. Spanish 'obediencia,' French 'obeissance,' and German 'Gehorsam' uniformly confirm a single sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: obedience, of-obedience | es: de-obediencia, obediencia | fr: obéissance | de: Gehorsam Rom 1:5; Rom 5:19; Rom 6:16; Rom 15:18

ὑπακού-ω G5219 V-PIA-3S (21×)
To obey, submit to authority; to answer a door or respond to a summons Built from hypo ('under') and akouō ('hear'), hypakouō literally means to 'listen from beneath'—to hear and respond with submission. The Gospels showcase its dramatic force: wind and sea 'obey' Jesus (Matt 8:27; Mark 4:41), and even unclean spirits comply at his command (Mark 1:27). Paul extends it to the obedience of faith (Rom 6:17) and children to parents (Eph 6:1; Col 3:20). The Spanish 'obedece/obedecen' and German 'gehorchen' consistently render this obedience sense. One delightful exception appears in Acts 12:13, where the servant Rhoda goes 'to answer' the gate—preserving the word's older meaning of responding to a knock or call.

1. obey, be obedient to (20×) To obey, comply with, or submit to an authority's commands. Used of the natural elements obeying Jesus (Matt 8:27; Mark 4:41; Luke 8:25), of evil spirits submitting to his authority (Mark 1:27), and of believers obeying the gospel, masters, or parents. The Spanish 'obedece/obedecen' and French 'obéir' consistently convey willing submission. Covers 20 of 21 occurrences across Gospels and Epistles. OBEY HEARKEN en: it-obeyed, obey, obeyed | es: obedece, obedeced, obedecen | fr: obéir | de: gehorchen, gehorcht Matt 8:27; Mark 1:27; Mark 4:41; Luke 8:25; Luke 17:6

2. answer, listen, hearken (1×) To answer a door or respond to a knock or summons—the word's etymological root sense of 'listening under' or 'hearkening to a call.' In Acts 12:13, the servant girl Rhoda goes hypakousai ('to answer') the gate when Peter knocks. The Spanish 'escuchar' ('to listen') preserves this original nuance of attentive hearing and responding. Only 1 occurrence in the NT, a charming echo of the word's classical Greek heritage. OBEY HEARKEN en: to-answer | es: escuchar | fr: obéir | de: gehorcht Acts 12:13

ὕπανδρος G5220 Adj-NFS (1×)
under a husband, married, subject to a husband
Romans 7:2 uses this term to describe a woman's legal status while her husband lives—she is 'under a husband,' bound by marriage law. Paul employs the marriage relationship as an analogy for believers' relationship to the Mosaic law: just as death releases a woman from marriage obligations, so death (through Christ) releases believers from the law's binding authority. The term emphasizes the legal dimension of marriage in Roman culture, where the wife's status was defined by her relationship to her husband. Death alone dissolves this legal bond.

(1×) Paul uses this legal-social term to establish his analogy about freedom from the law. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'casada', French 'mari', German 'unter einem Mann'—all convey the married woman's legal status. In Roman law, a wife remained under her husband's authority (patria potestas) for life; only his death freed her to remarry without legal consequences. Paul applies this principle spiritually: believers have died with Christ to the law's authority, freeing them for a new relationship. The term grounds Paul's theological argument in universally understood legal-social reality. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY en: under-husband | es: casada | fr: mari | de: unter-einem-Mann Rom 7:2

ὑπαντ-άω G5221 V-AIA-3S (10×)
To go out to meet or encounter someone, whether in greeting, supplication, or military confrontation.
Built from hypo ('toward') and antao ('meet face to face'), this verb describes deliberate movement toward an approaching person. Most New Testament occurrences depict neutral or positive encounters—the Gadarene demoniacs coming out to meet Jesus (Matt 8:28), the servant running to report the boy's healing (John 4:51), and women meeting the risen Lord (Matt 28:9). Yet in Luke 14:31 a king goes out to 'meet' an advancing army, and multilingual evidence reveals the hostile coloring: Hindi 'saamna karne ko' (to confront), Korean '맞서기를' (to oppose), distinguishing this military sense from the otherwise welcoming encounters.

1. to meet, encounter (9×) To come face to face with someone, to go out to meet or encounter a person in greeting, supplication, or happenstance. Covers the majority of occurrences: the Gadarene demoniacs meet Jesus emerging from the tombs (Matt 8:28; Mark 5:2; Luke 8:27), women encounter the risen Christ on the road (Matt 28:9), and the servant meets the official's party with news of healing (John 4:51). Languages uniformly render this with neutral 'meet' vocabulary: Spanish 'encontraron/encontró,' French 'rencontrer,' German 'entgegengehen.' MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING en: met, to-meet | es: encontrarnos, encontraron, encontró | fr: rencontrer | de: entgegengehen, ὑπήντησαν, ὑπήντησεν Matt 8:28; Matt 28:9; Mark 5:2; Luke 8:27; John 4:51

2. to oppose, confront (1×) To go out to meet in a hostile or adversarial sense, to confront or oppose a military force. In Luke 14:31, a king deliberates whether he can meet another king marching against him with twice his troops. Multilingual evidence sharpens this distinction: Hindi 'saamna karne ko' (to confront/face), Korean '맞서기를' (to oppose), and Spanish 'salir al encuentro' (to go out to meet in challenge) all signal that the movement here is toward battle, not welcome. MEETING AND ENCOUNTERING en: to-meet | es: salir-al-encuentro | fr: rencontrer | de: ὑπαντῆσαι Luke 14:31

ὑπάντ-ησις G5222 N-AFS (3×)
meeting, encounter; the act of going out to meet someone, especially in formal reception
This noun describes the action of going out to meet someone approaching, often with the sense of a formal reception or welcoming party. In Hellenistic culture, it was customary for citizens to go out from the city to meet and honor visiting dignitaries. The term appears in contexts of anticipation and encounter—people going out to meet Jesus, whether in hostility (Matthew 8) or honor (Matthew 25, John 12). It carries more intentionality than a chance meeting; this is purposeful movement toward an expected arrival.

(3×) Matthew 8:34 shows the whole city going out "to meet" (eis hupantēsin) Jesus after he healed the demon-possessed men—though their request was for him to leave, not stay. Matthew 25:1 depicts the ten virgins going out "to meet" (eis hupantēsin) the bridegroom, a formal wedding reception. John 12:13 describes the Jerusalem crowd going out "to meet" (eis hupantēsin) Jesus with palm branches on what we call Palm Sunday, a royal reception. The Spanish encuentro, French rencontre, and German Entgegengang all convey the going-to-meet sense. The term emphasizes active movement toward Jesus, whether in rejection, anticipation, or celebration—the one constant being that he draws people out to encounter him. TENT OF MEETING en: a-meeting, meeting | es: encuentro | fr: rencontre | de: Entgegengang, ὑπάντησιν Matt 8:34; Matt 25:1; John 12:13

ὕπαρξις G5223 N-AFS (2×)
possessions, property, goods, one's substance
This term refers to one's possessions, property, or material goods—what a person owns. In Acts, it describes the belongings that the early Jerusalem Christians sold to share with those in need, demonstrating radical generosity. In Hebrews, it refers to the earthly possessions that believers joyfully accepted the seizure of, knowing they had better and lasting possessions in heaven. The word highlights the material dimension of ownership that can be either shared or surrendered.

(2×) From philosophical/logical usage for 'existence' or 'substance,' ὕπαρξις developed the concrete sense of 'possessions' or 'property.' Acts 2:45 describes the Jerusalem believers selling their possessions (ὑπάρξεις) to distribute to the needy. Heb 10:34 commends readers who 'joyfully accepted the plundering of your possessions,' knowing heavenly treasures surpass earthly goods—the contrast revealing what holds ultimate value. INHERITANCE AND PROPERTY en: possession, properties | es: posesiones, posesión | fr: Besitz, possession | de: Besitz, ὑπάρξεις Acts 2:45; Heb 10:34

ὑπάρχω G5224
begin, take initiative; exist already, belong to This verb combines two distinct meanings. The first sense captures starting or taking the first step in an action, often with moral overtones—who struck the first blow or began the injustice. The second sense, more common in the New Testament, expresses existing beforehand or belonging to someone, describing possessions or inherent qualities. Both usages share the idea of priority or precedence, whether in time or in possession.

ὑπάρχω G5225 V-PIA-3P (60×)
To exist or be in a state; substantivized as possessions or property belonging to someone
A versatile verb that in the New Testament most often functions as a near-synonym of εἰμί, expressing existence or a state of being. Luke frequently employs it to describe someone's identity or condition (Luke 8:41, 'he was a ruler of the synagogue'). When the neuter plural participle τὰ ὑπάρχοντα is substantivized, it becomes a standard term for one's possessions or goods — a usage Jesus draws on pointedly in parables about wealth and stewardship (Matt 25:14; Luke 12:33). The Spanish 'bienes' and German 'sein' both capture the shift from abstract being to concrete belongings.

1. to be, to exist (45×) The primary New Testament usage: to be, to exist, or to be in a certain state or condition. Functions as an elevated alternative to εἰμί, often signaling something already in place or inherently true about a subject. Luke uses it extensively — more than any other NT author — to describe existing conditions (Luke 7:25, 'those in splendid clothing'; Luke 16:14, the Pharisees 'being money-lovers'). The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'eran/estaban', French 'être', German 'sein') consistently reflect this copulative or existential force. BEING AND EXISTENCE
en: being, they-were, were | es: eran, estaban, estando | fr: exister, être | de: ist, sein Luke 7:25; Luke 8:41; Luke 9:48; Luke 11:13; Luke 16:14

2. possessions, property, goods (14×) The substantivized neuter plural participle τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, meaning one's possessions, belongings, or property. This usage is especially prominent in Jesus' teaching on wealth and discipleship: 'sell your possessions' (Matt 19:21), the faithful steward set over all his master's goods (Matt 24:47), and the parable of the talents (Matt 25:14). Spanish 'bienes/posesiones' and English 'possessions' point directly to this concrete, material sense, distinguishing it sharply from the abstract existential use. BEING AND EXISTENCE
en: belonging, possessing, possessions | es: bienes, poseo, posesiones | fr: exister, être | de: ist, sein Matt 19:21; Matt 24:47; Matt 25:14; Luke 8:3; Luke 11:21

3. (1×) A single occurrence in Acts 4:37 where the participial form describes Barnabas as 'possessing' a field before selling it. While closely related to sense 2 (material goods), the active participial construction here emphasizes the act of having or owning rather than the possessions themselves. The Spanish 'poseyendo' captures this verbal, processual quality — Barnabas 'possessing' land, which he then liquidated for the community. BEING AND EXISTENCE en: belonging | es: poseyendo | fr: exister | de: ist Acts 4:37

ὑπείκ-ω G5226 V-PMA-2P (1×)
to submit, yield, give way to authority Hebrews 13:17 exhorts believers to obey and submit to their spiritual leaders, who keep watch over their souls. The verb suggests willing yielding rather than grudging compliance—recognizing legitimate authority and responding appropriately. Leaders bear heavy responsibility (they will give account), so the congregation should make their work a joy rather than a burden through respectful submission. The term balances authority and responsibility: leaders must serve faithfully, and members must follow willingly. Mutual accountability characterizes healthy Christian community.

(1×) The author of Hebrews calls for appropriate submission to spiritual oversight within the believing community. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'someteos', French and German 'nachgeben'—convey yielding or giving way to authority. This isn't blind obedience but recognition that shepherds need cooperation from the flock to fulfill their calling. The verb implies conscious choice to yield to legitimate leadership rather than resisting or creating unnecessary difficulty. The exhortation assumes leaders are faithful (keeping watch, giving account); in that context, submission benefits both leaders and those led, creating the conditions for effective spiritual care. SUBJECTION AND AUTHORITY

en: submit | es: someteos | fr: nachgeben | de: nachgeben Heb 13:17

ὑπεναντί-ος G5227 Adj-NNS (2×)

opposed, contrary, hostile, adversarial

This adjective describes what is set against or opposed to something else—whether enemies in battle, contrary properties, or hostile forces. In Colossians, it qualifies the 'certificate of debt' that stood opposed to us with its legal demands, which Christ canceled. Hebrews uses it to describe the fierce fury of fire that will consume God's adversaries. The word emphasizes active opposition or contrariness.

(2×) From classical usage for enemies in battle or contrary properties, ὑπεναντίος intensifies simple opposition. Col 2:14 describes the law's handwriting 'that was contrary to us' (ὑπεναντίον ἡμῖν) which Christ removed by nailing to the cross—legal requirements standing as hostile prosecutors. Heb 10:27 warns of 'fury of fire about to consume the adversaries' (τοὺς ὑπεναντίους), using the substantive for God's enemies facing judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: adversaries, hostile | es: adversarios, contrario | fr: entgegengesetzt | de: entgegengesetzt Col 2:14; Heb 10:27

ὑπέρ G5228 Adv (155×)

Preposition/adverb: on behalf of, for the sake of; above, beyond, more than; concerning; exceedingly

One of the most theologically loaded prepositions in the New Testament, hyper carries a primary sense of acting on behalf of or for the benefit of another — central to Paul's atonement language ("Christ died hyper us"). With the genitive it expresses representation or substitution; with the accusative it means above or beyond, yielding a comparative force ("more than"). In compounds it intensifies verbs to express superabundance, as in Ephesians 3:20 where God does hyperekperissou — exceedingly beyond all we ask. Spanish 'por' and French 'pour' consistently capture the benefactive core, while German 'über' mirrors the spatial-comparative range.

1. on behalf of, for (120×) The dominant benefactive and substitutionary sense: acting for the sake of, in the interest of, or in place of someone. This is the preposition of atonement theology — 'the bread which I will give hyper the life of the world' (John 6:51), 'this is my blood poured out hyper you' (Luke 22:20). Spanish 'por', French 'pour', and German 'für' all converge on this agency-for-another meaning. With 120 occurrences it accounts for the vast majority of NT uses, spanning intercession (Rom 8:34), self-sacrifice (Gal 2:20), and general advocacy (Mark 9:40). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for, for-, on-behalf-of- | es: por | fr: pour- | de: fuer-, für Mark 9:40; Mark 14:24; Luke 22:19; Luke 22:20; John 6:51

2. beyond, more than (11×) Comparative excess or surpassing: indicating something that goes beyond a standard or limit. The accusative case triggers this spatial-to-comparative shift — a light 'beyond' the brightness of the sun (Acts 26:13), not to think 'beyond' what is written (1 Cor 4:6). Spanish 'más allá de' and 'más de' capture the exceeding quality. This sense appears in warnings about exceeding proper limits (1 Cor 10:13, temptation not 'beyond' what you can bear) and in the parable of the shrewd manager (Luke 16:8), where worldly people are wiser 'hyper' the children of light. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: above, beyond, compared-to | es: a, más-allá-de, más-de | fr: pour- | de: fuer-, für Luke 16:8; Acts 26:13; 1Cor 4:6; 1Cor 10:13; 2Cor 1:8

3. concerning, about (10×) Topical reference: concerning, about, with regard to a subject matter. John the Baptist speaks hyper Jesus — 'concerning' him (John 1:30); Paul writes hyper Titus — 'about' his partner (2 Cor 8:23). This usage overlaps with peri but carries a slightly more invested, advocating tone, as if the speaker has a stake in the topic. French 'pour' handles this naturally, while Spanish shifts to 'acerca de' to mark the topical rather than benefactive reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: concerning, on-behalf-of | es: Acerca-de, Por, acerca-de | fr: pour- | de: fuer- John 1:30; Rom 9:27; 2Cor 1:8; 2Cor 8:23; 2Cor 8:24

4. above, over (8×) Spatial or hierarchical superiority: above, over. A disciple is not 'hyper' his teacher (Matt 10:24); one who loves father or mother 'hyper' Jesus is not worthy of him (Matt 10:37). Luke 6:40 extends this to the fully trained student becoming 'like' his teacher — not rising above. Spanish 'sobre' and the underlying Greek spatial sense connect this to the original locative meaning preserved in Homer, where hyper described physical position overhead. This is the etymological core from which all metaphorical extensions flow. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: above, over | es: sobre | fr: pour- | de: fuer-, für Matt 10:24; Matt 10:37; Luke 6:40

5. exceedingly, superabundantly (6×) Adverbial intensifier expressing extreme degree, often in Pauline compounds: hyperekperissou (exceedingly beyond, Eph 3:20), hyperlian (super-apostles, 2 Cor 11:5), hyperballontos (surpassingly, 2 Cor 11:23). Spanish captures this vividly with 'muchísimo más abundantemente' and 'sobreabundantemente.' These compound formations are distinctively Pauline and express a theology of divine superabundance — God's power and grace exceeding every human measure (1 Thess 3:10, praying hyperekperissou to see their face). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: exceedingly-beyond, more, super | es: muchísimo-más-abundantemente, más, sobreabundantemente | fr: fuer-, pour | de: fuer 2Cor 11:5; 2Cor 11:23; 2Cor 12:11; Eph 3:20; 1Thess 3:10

ὑπεραίρω G5229 V-PSM/P-1S (3×)

to lift oneself above, exalt oneself over others; in middle voice, to be exalted or elevated in pride

This verb describes the act of lifting oneself up or being elevated above others, typically in a negative sense of pride or arrogance. Paul uses it twice in the same verse (2 Corinthians 12:7) to describe being 'exalted above measure' by revelations, a temptation checked by his thorn in the flesh. The Antichrist figure in 2 Thessalonians 2:4 'exalts himself above' all that is called God. The multilingual evidence consistently captures this sense of prideful elevation: Spanish 'enaltezca' (exalt), French 's'élever' (rise up), German 'sich-ueberheben' (overreach oneself).

(3×) The reflexive middle voice emphasizes self-exaltation, lifting oneself above proper bounds through pride. The usage in 2 Corinthians 12:7 warns against spiritual pride from revelations, while 2 Thessalonians 2:4 depicts eschatological arrogance in opposing God. The consistent reflexive sense across translations—Spanish 'se exalta,' French 's'élever'—highlights the self-directed nature of this prideful elevation, distinguishing it from passive exaltation by others. LIFTING AND EXALTING

en: I-might-be-exalted, exalting-himself | es: me-enaltezca, que-se-exalta | fr: s'élever, ὑπεραιρόμενος | de: sich-ueberheben 2Cor 12:7; 2Thess 2:4

ὑπέρακμος G5230 Adj-NFS (1×)

Beyond prime marriageable age; sexually mature, describing a condition requiring marriage (1 Cor 7:36)

This rare term appears only in Paul's counsel about marriage in 1 Corinthians 7. It describes someone who has passed the culturally appropriate age for marriage, creating social or practical pressure for the relationship to be formalized. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'pasada de edad', German 'überreif') captures the temporal aspect—beyond the expected time. Paul uses this as part of his pastoral advice about when celibacy should give way to marriage.

(1×) The single occurrence in 1 Cor 7:36 places this term within Paul's extended discussion of marriage and celibacy. The multilingual glosses consistently point to a temporal threshold being crossed—the Spanish 'pasada de edad' (past the age) and German 'überreif' (overripe) both suggest a developmental stage that has been exceeded. The context concerns a father's decision about his daughter's marriage when she has reached an age where remaining unmarried would be socially problematic or personally difficult. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: past-marriageable-age | es: pasada-de-edad | fr: au-delà-de-l'âge | de: ueberreif 1Cor 7:36

ὑπεράνω G5231 Prep (3×)

far above, above and beyond; a strengthened form indicating superior position or status

This compound adverb/preposition (huper- "over" + anō "above") intensifies the sense of "above" to mean "far above" or "high over." It suggests not just physical height but supremacy, superiority, transcendence. While classical Greek used it for spatial position (above the horizon) or social rank (acting above others), the New Testament uses focus entirely on Christ's supreme exaltation—his position far above all other powers, authorities, and heavens. The term emphasizes the absolute supremacy of Christ in the cosmic hierarchy.

(3×) Ephesians 1:21 declares Christ seated "far above" (huperanō) all rule, authority, power, dominion, and every name—emphasizing his absolute sovereignty over all cosmic powers. Ephesians 4:10 describes Christ ascending "far above" (huperanō) all the heavens to fill all things—spatial transcendence enabling omnipresent fullness. Hebrews 9:5 mentions the cherubim of glory overshadowing the mercy seat "above" (huperanō)—the only non-Christological use, but still suggesting honored position over the ark's most sacred object. The multilingual glosses (Spanish encima/muy por encima, French au-dessus, German über) range from simple "above" to intensified "far above." In Ephesians especially, this term anchors the cosmic Christology—Jesus isn't just above, he's incomparably above every other authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: above, far-above | es: encima, muy-por-encima-de | fr: au-dessus | de: ueber Eph 1:21; Eph 4:10; Heb 9:5

ὑπεραυξ-άνω G5232 V-PIA-3S (1×)

To grow or increase exceedingly, beyond measure; used of spiritual growth (2 Thess 1:3)

Paul uses this intensive compound to describe the Thessalonians' remarkable spiritual growth. The prefix 'hyper-' intensifies the basic verb for growth, suggesting growth that exceeds normal expectations. While classical Greek could use it for plants growing beyond their bounds, Paul applies it metaphorically to faith increasing abundantly. The French retains the Greek transliteration while Spanish and German both capture the excessive, beyond-normal-measure quality of this growth.

(1×) In 2 Thess 1:3, Paul thanks God because the Thessalonians' faith 'grows exceedingly.' The compound verb with its intensive prefix suggests growth beyond ordinary measures—Spanish 'sobrecrece' (over-grows) and German 'über die Maßen wachsen' (grow beyond measure) both preserve this sense of exceeding normal bounds. Though classical usage could describe physical plants, Paul's metaphorical application to faith emphasizes the supernatural character of their spiritual development under persecution. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: grows-exceedingly | es: sobrecrece | fr: ὑπεραυξάνει | de: ueber-die-Massen-wachsen 2Thess 1:3

ὑπερβαίνω G5233 V-PNA (1×)

To overstep, transgress; to cross boundaries that should be respected, especially moral or relational ones

This verb originally described physically stepping over boundaries—walls, rivers, thresholds. By extension it came to mean transgressing moral or social limits. In 1 Thessalonians 4:6, Paul uses it in his instruction about sexual purity and fair dealing in business or marriage matters, warning believers not to cross lines that would wrong a fellow believer. The translations consistently capture both the boundary-crossing aspect (Spanish 'sobrepasar,' German 'überschreiten') and its moral application.

(1×) The occurrence in 1 Thess 4:6 appears in Paul's ethical teaching: believers must not 'transgress and wrong' a brother in matters of sexual conduct or possibly business dealings (the context is debated). The classical usage involved physically crossing boundaries—scaling walls or rivers—but here Paul applies it to moral boundaries. Spanish 'sobrepasar' (to surpass/cross over) and German 'überschreiten' (to overstep) maintain the spatial metaphor while recognizing its application to ethical limits that must not be violated. CROSSING OVER

en: to-transgress | es: sobrepasar | fr: ὑπερβαίνειν | de: ueberschreiten 1Thess 4:6

ὑπερβάλλω G5234 Adv (1×)

Excessively, beyond all measure; an intensive adverb emphasizing extraordinary degree

Paul uses this emphatic adverb in 2 Corinthians 11:23 to intensify his claim of suffering more than the false apostles who challenged his authority. It's one of several 'hyper-' compounds Paul employs to stress the extraordinary nature of his apostolic labors and afflictions. The adverb pushes the comparison beyond normal bounds—he hasn't just suffered more, but excessively, extraordinarily more. Cross-linguistic renderings consistently emphasize this excessive quality.

(1×) In 2 Cor 11:23, Paul boasts 'foolishly' about his apostolic credentials, claiming he has served 'excessively' more than his opponents—more labors, beatings, imprisonments, dangers. The adverb intensifies the comparison to an almost absurd degree, which fits Paul's rhetorical strategy of 'boasting' in weakness. Spanish 'sobremanera' (exceedingly) and French 'excessivement' (excessively) both capture this sense of going far beyond normal measure. German 'übermäßig' (excessively) similarly stresses the extraordinary degree of Paul's sufferings. MORE AND GREATER

en: excessively | es: sobremanera | fr: excessivement | de: uebermaessig 2Cor 11:23

ὑπερβάλλω G5235 V-PPA-GFS (5×)

hyperballo – to surpass, exceed, or go beyond all measure; to be extraordinary in degree

The verb hyperballo (literally 'to throw beyond') is used exclusively by Paul, and always in participial form, to describe realities that exceed any standard of comparison. It is a word reserved for the superlative: the surpassing glory of the new covenant eclipses that of the old (2 Cor 3:10), the surpassing grace of God overflows toward the Corinthians (2 Cor 9:14), and the surpassing greatness of God's power works in believers (Eph 1:19). Spanish sobrepasante, French surpasser, and German ueberragend all attempt to capture this 'beyond-all-measure' quality. The English word 'hyperbole' descends directly from this root.

(5×) To surpass or exceed all comparison, used by Paul exclusively in participial form to mark realities of extraordinary, incomparable degree. In 2 Cor 3:10 the surpassing (hyperballon) glory of the new covenant makes the old covenant's glory seem like no glory at all; in Eph 1:19 and 2:7 it describes the immeasurable greatness of God's power and grace. Spanish sobrepasante and German ueberragend both convey the idea of towering above, while French surpasser captures the act of exceeding – all converging on a single intensifying sense across all five Pauline occurrences. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12809 WITH 3 SENSES

en: surpassing | es: que-supera, sobrepasante | fr: surpasser, ὑπερβάλλον, ὑπερβάλλουσαν | de: ueberragend 2Cor 3:10; 2Cor 9:14; Eph 1:19; Eph 2:7; Eph 3:19

ὑπερβολ-ή G5236 N-NFS (8×)

Surpassing degree, excess, extraordinary measure; used by Paul to express what goes beyond all normal scale.

A noun denoting something that exceeds normal limits—an extraordinary degree or surplus. Paul uses it almost exclusively, often in the frozen phrase 'kath' hyperbolen' (beyond measure, exceedingly). He speaks of sin becoming 'sinful beyond measure' (Rom 7:13), of affliction in Asia that was 'beyond measure, beyond strength' (2 Cor 1:8), and most strikingly of an 'eternal weight of glory beyond all comparison' (2 Cor 4:17). English borrowed this word directly as 'hyperbole,' but in Paul's hands it is no rhetorical exaggeration—it describes realities that genuinely surpass human categories.

surpassing degree, excess, extraordinary measure (8×)

A surpassing or extraordinary degree, an excess that goes beyond normal measure. Used almost exclusively by Paul in the adverbial phrase 'kath' hyperbolen' (beyond measure, exceedingly) or in genitive constructions expressing superlative quality. In Romans 7:13 sin becomes 'exceedingly sinful'; in 2 Corinthians 1:8 Paul's affliction pressed 'beyond measure, beyond strength'; in 2 Corinthians 4:17 momentary affliction produces an 'eternal weight of glory' that is 'beyond all comparison' (kath' hyperbolen eis hyperbolen). The French 'au-delà' (beyond) and Spanish 'excesivamente' both register the idea of breaking past limits. Paul also uses it to commend a 'still more excellent way' (1 Cor 12:31). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: excellence, excess, measure | es: excelencia, excesivamente, exceso | fr: au-delà, excès | de: Uebermaass Rom 7:13; 1Cor 12:31; 2Cor 1:8; 2Cor 4:7; 2Cor 4:17

ὑπερορ-άω G5237 V-APA-NMS (1×)

To overlook, disregard, take no notice of; especially to pass over without punishment

In classical Greek, this verb could mean looking down from above or, more commonly, overlooking in the sense of ignoring or disregarding. Acts 17:30 uses it in Paul's Areopagus speech to describe God's patient forbearance toward pagan ignorance before Christ. God 'overlooked' the times of ignorance—not in the sense of approving, but of withholding immediate judgment. The Spanish 'pasando por alto' (passing over) and French 'fermer les yeux' (closing the eyes) capture this sense of deliberate non-intervention pending a fuller revelation.

(1×) In Acts 17:30, Paul declares that God 'having overlooked the times of ignorance, now commands all people everywhere to repent.' The context is God's patient dealings with Gentiles who lacked Israel's revelation. The verb suggests deliberate forbearance rather than approval—God did not punish immediately, but passed over (Spanish 'pasando por alto') or closed His eyes (French 'fermer les yeux') to human ignorance until the appointed time of fuller revelation through Christ. The overlooking was temporary, conditional, and has now ended. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10168 WITH 3 SENSES

en: having-overlooked | es: pasando-por-alto | fr: fermer-les-yeux | de: ὑπεριδὼν Acts 17:30

ὑπερέκεινα G5238 Prep (1×)

Beyond, on the other side of; a spatial preposition indicating what lies past a boundary

This prepositional adverb indicates spatial extension beyond a given point. In 2 Corinthians 10:16, Paul expresses his desire to preach the gospel 'beyond' the regions where the Corinthians live, meaning in territories farther away that haven't yet heard. The word emphasizes frontier expansion—moving past current boundaries into new territory. All major translations preserve this straightforward spatial sense of 'beyond' or 'on the other side of.'

(1×) Paul uses this in 2 Cor 10:16 within his defense against accusations of overstepping his apostolic authority. He clarifies that his ambition is to preach the gospel 'beyond' Corinth—in regions (Spanish 'más allá,' French 'au-delà,' German 'darüber hinaus') that lie farther away and remain unevangelized. The preposition emphasizes spatial progression: Paul doesn't want to build on another's foundation but to press into virgin territory beyond the current boundaries of the church's witness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: beyond | es: más-allá | fr: au-delà | de: darueber-hinaus 2Cor 10:16

ὑπερεκ-τείνω G5239 V-PIA-1P (1×)

To overextend, stretch beyond proper limits; to claim more than what legitimately belongs to one

This compound verb means to stretch oneself beyond appropriate bounds. In 2 Corinthians 10:14, Paul defends himself against charges of overreaching his apostolic authority by insisting he does not 'overextend' himself—unlike his opponents, he came to Corinth with legitimate apostolic commission, so ministering there falls within his proper sphere. The Spanish and French translations capture the stretching imagery while German emphasizes the excessive extension beyond rightful limits.

(1×) In 2 Cor 10:14, Paul argues that coming to Corinth wasn't overstepping his bounds: 'we are not overextending ourselves, as though we did not reach you.' His critics apparently accused him of claiming authority in regions not assigned to him. The verb's imagery is of stretching (Spanish 'nos extendemos,' French 's'étendre') beyond one's proper reach. Paul counters that he does stretch far, but legitimately—his apostolic commission includes Corinth, so he hasn't exceeded the boundaries God set for his ministry. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: we-overextend | es: nos-extendemos | fr: s'étendre | de: sich-ueberstrecken 2Cor 10:14

ὑπερεκ-χέω G5240 V-PPM/P-ANS (1×)

Running over, overflowing; exceeding capacity, used of abundant generosity (Luke 6:38)

This passive participle describes liquid overflowing a container that can't hold it all. Jesus uses it in Luke 6:38 to promise extravagant divine reciprocity for generous giving: the measure you receive will be 'running over,' pressed down and shaken together so that more fits in, yet still spilling over the brim. The image is of abundance exceeding all limits. All major translations preserve the overflowing, spilling-over imagery.

(1×) In Luke 6:38, Jesus promises that generous givers will receive a measure 'pressed down, shaken together, running over.' The participle describes grain or liquid filling a container beyond capacity so it spills over the rim. Spanish 'rebosante' (overflowing), French 'déborder' (to overflow), and the Greek transliteration all preserve this vivid imagery of abundance that cannot be contained. The promise is hyperabundant reciprocity—divine generosity so lavish it exceeds the vessel's ability to hold it. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: running-over | es: rebosante | fr: déborder | de: ὑπερεκχυννόμενον Luke 6:38

ὑπερεν-τυγχάνω G5241 V-PIA-3S (1×)

To intercede, plead on behalf of another; to make petition for someone's benefit

This compound verb intensifies the basic meaning of intercession—literally 'to meet with on behalf of.' Romans 8:26 uses it to describe the Holy Spirit's intercessory work, groaning on our behalf when we don't know how to pray. The Spirit doesn't just pray alongside us but advocates for us, pleading our case before the Father with divine insight into our true needs. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering is 'intercede' or equivalent.

(1×) In Rom 8:26, Paul teaches that 'the Spirit himself intercedes for us with groanings too deep for words.' The verb emphasizes the Spirit's advocacy role—He doesn't merely accompany our prayers but pleads on our behalf (Spanish 'intercede,' French 'intercéder,' German 'Fürbitte einlegen'). The context describes the Spirit compensating for our weakness and ignorance in prayer, stepping in to advocate for what we truly need even when we cannot articulate it. This is divine intercession within the believer's heart. PRAYER AND SUPPLICATION

en: intercedes | es: intercede | fr: intercéder | de: Fuerbitte-einlegen Rom 8:26

ὑπερέχω G5242 V-PPA-AMP (5×)

hyperecho – to be above, surpass, or excel; to hold a superior position in rank or value

The verb hyperecho (literally 'to hold above') denotes superiority in either rank or quality. Paul uses it in both social and spiritual registers: governing authorities are 'superior' powers to be respected (Rom 13:1), fellow believers are to be esteemed as surpassing oneself in honor (Phil 2:3), knowing Christ is of surpassing value compared to all else (Phil 3:8), and the peace of God surpasses all understanding (Phil 4:7). Peter likewise urges submission to the emperor as 'supreme' (1 Pet 2:13). Spanish superior and French surpasser both capture the dual force of rank and transcendence that this versatile word carries.

(5×) To hold a position above, whether in governing authority, personal worth, or incomparable value. Paul instructs submission to 'governing' (hyperechousais) authorities in Rom 13:1, urges believers to consider others as surpassing themselves in Phil 2:3, and declares that knowing Christ surpasses (hyperechon) everything in Phil 3:8. The peace of God that surpasses all understanding (Phil 4:7) represents the word's most celebrated occurrence. Spanish superior, French surpasser, and German ueberragen converge on this single semantic core of preeminence, whether applied to political rank or transcendent spiritual realities. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12809 WITH 3 SENSES

en: being-superior, supreme, surpassing | es: a-superior, que-sobrepasa, superiores | fr: surpasser | de: ueberragen Rom 13:1; Phil 2:3; Phil 3:8; Phil 4:7; 1Pet 2:13

ὑπερηφᾰν-ία G5243 N-NFS (1×)

Pride, arrogance; an inflated sense of one's own importance, showing contempt toward others

This noun describes the vice of arrogance and self-exaltation. In Mark 7:22, Jesus lists it among the evil thoughts and actions that defile a person, coming from within the human heart. It's not mere self-confidence but contemptuous pride that looks down on others. Classical Greek usage included the nuance of contempt toward others, and the New Testament context confirms this moral and relational dimension. All translations render it as pride or its equivalent.

(1×) Jesus includes this vice in His catalog of evils in Mark 7:22 that proceed from within the heart: 'pride, foolishness'—moral contamination that defiles from the inside out. The noun denotes not healthy self-respect but arrogant self-exaltation that breeds contempt for others. Spanish 'orgullo,' French 'orgueil,' and German 'Hochmut' all designate this vice of inflated self-importance. The classical usage sometimes specified 'contempt toward' someone, highlighting the relational damage pride causes by elevating oneself and denigrating others. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: pride | es: orgullo | fr: orgueil | de: Hochmut Mark 7:22

ὑπερήφᾰν-ος G5244 Adj-AMP (5×)

hyperephanos – arrogant, proud, haughty; one who exalts self above others in contemptuous disdain

The adjective hyperephanos (literally 'one who shows himself above') describes a person puffed up with overweening pride who looks down on others with contempt. It goes beyond simple self-confidence into the territory of insolent disdain – a pride that sets itself against both neighbor and God. Mary's Magnificat announces that God 'has scattered the proud (hyperephanous) in the thoughts of their hearts' (Luke 1:51), and both James and Peter quote Proverbs 3:34: 'God opposes the proud but gives grace to the humble' (Jas 4:6; 1 Pet 5:5). Spanish soberbios, French orgueilleux, and German hochmuetig all carry the negative moral coloring of sinful haughtiness.

(5×) Arrogant and haughty, describing a person who exalts himself above others in contemptuous self-regard that provokes divine opposition. In Luke 1:51 Mary proclaims that God scatters the proud (hyperephanous) in the imagination of their hearts; in Rom 1:30 and 2 Tim 3:2 it appears in vice catalogs alongside blasphemers and boasters. The double quotation of Prov 3:34 in Jas 4:6 and 1 Pet 5:5 – 'God opposes the proud' – shows that this pride is uniquely odious to God. Spanish soberbios, French orgueilleux, and German hochmuetig all converge on the same negative moral valence across all five occurrences. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: arrogant, proud, to-proud | es: a-soberbios, soberbios | fr: orgueilleux | de: hochmuetig, ὑπερηφάνους Luke 1:51; Rom 1:30; 2Tim 3:2; Jas 4:6; 1Pet 5:5

ὑπερνῑκάω G5245 V-PIA-1P (1×)

To conquer overwhelmingly, be more than conqueror; to prevail decisively and completely

This vivid compound intensifies the basic verb for conquering by adding 'hyper-'—to conquer beyond conquering, to win overwhelmingly. Romans 8:37 uses it to describe believers' victory through Christ's love: we don't just barely survive opposition, we 'overwhelmingly conquer' through Him who loved us. The term suggests triumph so complete it exceeds ordinary victory. Translations struggle to capture the intensive prefix, with Spanish offering 'more than conquerors.'

(1×) In Rom 8:37, Paul concludes his list of afflictions by declaring, 'in all these things we overwhelmingly conquer through him who loved us.' After cataloging tribulation, persecution, famine, and sword, Paul doesn't claim mere survival but hyper-victory. Spanish 'somos más que vencedores' (we are more than conquerors) captures the intensive sense—not just winning but prevailing so decisively that the opposition is crushed. The victory flows from Christ's love as the enabling power that transforms suffering into triumph. OVERCOME CONQUER

en: we-overwhelmingly-conquer | es: somos-más-que-vencedores | fr: vaincre | de: weit-ueberwinden Rom 8:37

ὑπέρογκ-ος G5246 Adj-ANP (2×)

excessive, swollen, bombastic, arrogant (of speech or attitude)

This adjective describes what is excessively swollen or oversized, and metaphorically, speech that is pompous, bombastic, or boastful. Both New Testament uses describe the inflated, empty words of false teachers. Peter warns of those who speak great swelling words of vanity to entice the unstable. Jude similarly condemns those speaking arrogant words to gain advantage. The image is of puffed-up, hollow rhetoric designed to impress and deceive.

(2×) From classical usage for excessive bulk or immoderate size, and metaphorically for 'ponderous, verbose' style, ὑπέρογκος describes boastful speech. 2 Pet 2:18 warns of false teachers speaking 'great swelling words' (ὑπέρογκα) of emptiness to seduce the unstable. Jude 16 similarly condemns grumblers speaking 'arrogant words' (ὑπέρογκα) while flattering for advantage—hollow, inflated rhetoric masking spiritual bankruptcy. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: boastful-things, swelling | es: arrogantes, palabras-arrogantes | fr: choses-enflées„ ὑπέρογκα | de: Aufgeblasenes, aufgeblasen 2Pet 2:18; Jude 1:16

ὑπεροχ-ή G5247 N-DFS (2×)

superiority, prominence, pre-eminence, authority

This noun denotes superiority, prominence, or a position of pre-eminence. Literally it can mean a physical projection or height; metaphorically it indicates excellence or high rank. Paul uses it in 1 Corinthians to deny coming with superiority of eloquence or wisdom when proclaiming Christ. In 1 Timothy, it appears in the instruction to pray for those in high positions or authority. The word emphasizes relative status or standing.

(2×) From classical meanings of physical 'projection' or 'eminence,' ὑπεροχή metaphorically denotes pre-eminence or superiority. 1 Cor 2:1 has Paul disclaiming coming 'with superiority of speech or wisdom' (ὑπεροχὴν λόγου ἢ σοφίας), rejecting rhetorical showmanship. 1 Tim 2:2 instructs prayers 'for those in high position' (ἐν ὑπεροχῇ ὄντων)—those holding authority—showing the term's range from intellectual superiority to official rank. MORE AND GREATER

en: authority, excellence | es: excelencia, preeminencia | fr: éminence, ὑπεροχῇ | de: Vorrang 1Cor 2:1; 1Tim 2:2

ὑπερπερισσ-εύω G5248 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to abound exceedingly, overflow greatly, be in excess

This intensive compound verb means to overflow abundantly or be in extreme excess. Paul uses it to describe both the super-abounding of grace over sin in Romans, and his own overflowing comfort/joy despite affliction in 2 Corinthians. The prefix intensifies the already-strong idea of abounding, suggesting a lavish, almost overwhelming surplus.

(2×) The compound ὑπερπερισσεύω intensifies περισσεύω (abound) with the prefix ὑπέρ- (beyond, exceedingly). Rom 5:20 declares that where sin increased, grace 'abounded all the more' (ὑπερεπερίσσευσεν)—a theological superlative showing grace's overwhelming victory. 2 Cor 7:4 describes Paul 'overflowing with joy' (ὑπερπερισσεύομαι τῇ χαρᾷ) amid affliction, using the middle voice for abundant internal experience despite external trouble. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: I-overflow, abounded-all-the-more | es: sobreabundo, sobreabundó | fr: surabonder | de: ueberfliessen Rom 5:20; 2Cor 7:4

ὑπερπερισσ-ῶς G5249 Adv (1×)

Beyond all measure, exceedingly, superabundantly; an intensive adverb emphasizing extreme degree

This emphatic adverb stacks intensifying elements to stress the extraordinary degree of something—literally 'hyper-abundantly.' In Mark 7:37, the crowd's reaction to Jesus' healing of the deaf-mute is described with this word: they were 'beyond measure' astonished. The adverb expresses amazement that exceeds normal bounds. Spanish and German both render it 'exceedingly,' 'beyond all measure,' while French uses 'excessively' to capture the sense of surpassing ordinary limits.

(1×) In Mark 7:37, after Jesus heals a deaf man with a speech impediment, the crowd responds with astonishment 'beyond measure,' saying, 'He has done all things well.' The adverb intensifies their amazement to an extraordinary degree—Spanish 'sobremanera' (exceedingly) and German 'über alle Maßen' (beyond all measure) both stress that their wonder exceeded ordinary limits. This superabundant astonishment fits Mark's pattern of highlighting the overwhelming impact of Jesus' miraculous works on witnesses. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: beyond-measure | es: sobremanera | fr: excessivement | de: ueber-alle-Massen Mark 7:37

ὑπερπλεονάζω G5250 V-AIA-3S (1×)

To abound exceedingly, overflow in superabundance; to increase beyond all ordinary measure

This compound verb intensifies the idea of abounding or increasing—literally to 'hyper-abound.' In 1 Timothy 1:14, Paul uses it to describe how God's grace toward him 'superabounded' along with faith and love in Christ Jesus. Despite Paul's former blasphemy and persecution of the church, divine grace didn't just cover his sin but overflowed abundantly. The term stresses grace exceeding what was needed, lavished beyond measure on an undeserving persecutor.

(1×) In 1 Tim 1:14, Paul reflects on his conversion: 'the grace of our Lord superabounded with faith and love that are in Christ Jesus.' The context is autobiographical—Paul was a violent persecutor, yet grace didn't merely forgive but overflowed (German 'überreichlich,' abundantly). The verb's intensive prefix stresses that divine grace exceeded what strict justice required, flooding Paul's life with faith and love he hadn't earned. This superabundance demonstrates the Lord's patience as an example to future believers. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: superabounded | es: sobreabundó | fr: ὑπερεπλεόνασεν | de: ueberreichlich 1Tim 1:14

ὑπερυψόω G5251 V-AIA-3S (1×)

To exalt to the highest place, elevate supremely; to raise to the position of ultimate honor

This intensive compound describes exaltation to the utmost degree—literally to 'hyper-exalt.' Philippians 2:9 uses it to describe God's response to Christ's humiliation and death: 'Therefore God highly exalted him' and gave him the name above every name. After Jesus humbled himself to the point of crucifixion, the Father elevated him to supreme cosmic authority. The verb's intensive prefix stresses that this exaltation surpasses all others—it's not just honor but supreme, universal lordship.

(1×) In Phil 2:9, following the hymn of Christ's self-emptying and obedience to death, Paul writes, 'Therefore God highly exalted him and bestowed on him the name above every name.' The verb describes God's response to Christ's humiliation—not just restoration but elevation to supreme cosmic lordship (Spanish 'sobre-exaltó,' over-exalted; German 'hoch erhöhen,' highly exalt). The intensive prefix indicates this isn't ordinary honor but enthronement at the right hand of God with universal authority over all powers and names. LIFTING AND EXALTING

en: highly-exalted | es: sobre-exaltó | fr: ὑπερύψωσεν | de: hoch-erhoehen Phil 2:9

ὑπερφρον-έω G5252 V-PNA (1×)

To think too highly of oneself, be arrogant; to have an inflated opinion beyond what is warranted

This verb combines 'hyper-' (beyond) with 'think' to mean thinking of oneself beyond what is appropriate—being conceited or arrogant. In Romans 12:3, Paul warns believers not to 'think more highly of themselves than they ought to think' but to think with sober judgment. The play on words in Greek (using multiple forms of 'think') emphasizes right self-assessment versus inflated self-opinion. Translations consistently capture the vice of excessive self-regard.

(1×) In Rom 12:3, Paul instructs, 'Do not think more highly of yourself than you ought to think, but think with sober judgment.' The verb describes thinking beyond (Spanish 'pensar más alto,' thinking higher) what is fitting—an inflated self-assessment disconnected from the measure of faith God has given. Paul's wordplay on 'thinking' emphasizes the contrast between arrogant self-exaltation (German 'sich überheben,' to exalt oneself) and the sober, accurate self-knowledge that recognizes one's gifts as apportioned by grace. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-think-highly | es: pensar-más-alto | fr: être-très-pensé | de: sich-ueberheben Rom 12:3

ὑπερῷον G5253 N-DNS (4×)

An upper room, upstairs chamber; a room on the upper floor of a house used for prayer, meetings, or lodging.

Designates an elevated room in a multi-story dwelling, typically the most private and honorable space in a Near Eastern home. In Acts 1:13 the disciples gather in 'the upper room' after the ascension — a location that became iconic in Christian memory. Acts 9:37 and 9:39 place the body of Tabitha in an upper room at Joppa, and Acts 20:8 describes the well-lit upper chamber at Troas where Paul preached until midnight. The German 'Obergemach,' Spanish 'aposento alto,' and French 'chambre haute' all preserve the spatial 'upper' element, reflecting the architectural reality of first-century Mediterranean houses.

(4×) An upper-story room in a house, used for gatherings, prayer, or lodging the dead before burial. Acts 1:13 identifies the famous upper room where the apostles awaited Pentecost. Acts 9:37,39 place Tabitha's body in such a room at Joppa, while Acts 20:8 sets Paul's midnight sermon in a lamp-lit upper chamber at Troas. The German 'Obergemach,' Spanish 'aposento alto,' and French 'chambre haute' all emphasize the elevated position within the house, reflecting the cultural significance of upper rooms as semi-private gathering spaces. CELESTIAL UPPER CHAMBERS

en: upper-room | es: aposento-alto | fr: chambre-haute | de: Obergemach Acts 1:13; Acts 9:37; Acts 9:39; Acts 20:8

ὑπέχω G5254 V-PPA-NFP (1×)

To undergo, endure, suffer; to bear punishment or consequences, especially divine judgment

This verb originally meant to hold under or hold out, but developed the sense of undergoing or enduring something, especially punishment or suffering. Jude 1:7 uses it to describe Sodom and Gomorrah 'undergoing' the punishment of eternal fire as an example of divine judgment. The cities continue to experience the consequences of their sin as a warning to others. The participle suggests ongoing endurance of judgment, not just a past event but a continuing state.

(1×) In Jude 7, Sodom and Gomorrah 'serve as an example by undergoing the punishment of eternal fire.' The participle describes the cities enduring (Spanish 'sufriendo,' suffering) ongoing divine judgment as a visible warning. The verb suggests not merely past destruction but present, continuing experience of punishment—the ruined cities stand as permanent exhibits of God's wrath against sexual immorality. French 'subissant' (undergoing) and German 'erleidend' (suffering) both capture this sense of bearing the consequences of divine justice. PUNISH PENALIZE en: undergoing | es: sufriendo. | fr: subissant. | de: erleidend Jude 1:7

ὑπήκοος G5255 Adj-NMS (3×)

obedient, submissive; disposed to obey and comply with authority or direction

This adjective describes one who hearkens to and obeys another, either as a character quality (obedient disposition) or a status (being subject to authority). It can take a genitive (obedient to) or dative (submissive to) construction. Classical Greek used it for subjects obedient to rulers, students to teachers, or phenomena responsive to natural laws. The New Testament emphasizes willing obedience as a virtue—not mere external compliance but genuine submission of will. All three occurrences involve human obedience to God or divinely appointed leadership.

(3×) Acts 7:39 describes Israel's wilderness generation as unwilling to be "obedient" (hupēkooi) to Moses, rejecting his God-appointed leadership. Second Corinthians 2:9 reveals Paul's purpose in writing—to test whether the Corinthians are "obedient" (hupēkooi) in everything, responsive to apostolic authority. Philippians 2:8 describes Christ becoming "obedient" (hupēkoos) to the point of death on a cross—the ultimate submission to the Father's will. The Spanish obediente(s), French obéissant, and German forms of hupēkoos all convey the responsive, submissive character. The range spans negative (Israel's disobedience), positive (church obedience), and supreme (Christ's obedience), showing obedience as the proper response to legitimate authority, perfectly modeled by Jesus himself. OBEY HEARKEN en: obedient | es: obediente, obedientes | fr: obéissant, ὑπήκοος | de: ὑπήκοοί, ὑπήκοοι, ὑπήκοος Acts 7:39; 2Cor 2:9; Phil 2:8

ὑπηρετ-έω G5256 V-PNA (3×)

to serve, minister to, attend; to perform service or assistance, especially in an official capacity

Originally meaning to serve as a rower on a ship (from hupēretēs, "under-rower"), this verb came to mean general service or ministry, especially of an official or subordinate kind. It implies active assistance and practical help rather than mere presence. In the New Testament, it describes both civic service (attendance and help) and ministerial service (practical support of ministry work). The term suggests organized, purposeful service rendered to someone or some cause, often with a note of subordination to the one served.

(3×) Acts 13:36 summarizes David's life: he "served" (hupēretēsas) the purpose of God in his own generation—fulfilled his ministerial calling. Acts 20:34 has Paul remind the Ephesian elders that his own hands "ministered" (hupēretēsan) to his needs and his companions'—manual labor supporting his ministry. Acts 24:23 describes Felix ordering the centurion to keep Paul in custody but allow his friends "to attend" (hupēretein) to his needs—provide practical service. The Spanish servir/sirviendo/sirvieron, French servir, and German forms all center on service/serving. The range covers ministry to God's purposes (David), self-supporting labor (Paul), and personal care (friends attending Paul), unified by the theme of practical, purposeful service. SERVING AND MINISTRY

en: having-served, served, to-attend | es: servirle, sirviendo, sirvieron | fr: servir | de: ὑπηρέτησαν, ὑπηρετήσας, ὑπηρετεῖν Acts 13:36; Acts 20:34; Acts 24:23

ὑπηρέτ-ης G5257 N-GMP (20×)

An attendant or subordinate official; either a temple/court officer executing orders or a personal servant and ministry assistant.

Derived from the world of rowing (hypo + eretes, 'under-rower'), hyperetes came to mean any subordinate who serves under authority. In the Gospels, the word most often refers to the officers and guards of the Sanhedrin and chief priests, the temple police who arrest Jesus (John 7:32), strike him during his trial (Mark 14:65), and warm themselves alongside Peter in the courtyard (John 18:18). But the same word also describes John Mark serving as assistant to Paul and Barnabas (Acts 13:5), the synagogue attendant who receives the scroll from Jesus (Luke 4:20), and even the apostles as servants of Christ (1 Cor 4:1). Spanish captures the split crisply: 'alguacil/guardias' for the officers, 'servidor/ayudante' for the ministerial attendants.

1. officer, temple guard (15×) An officer, guard, or court attendant serving under the authority of the chief priests, Sanhedrin, or a judicial figure. These are the temple police who arrest, detain, and carry out orders during the trial narratives. In John 7:32 and 7:45-46, the hyperetai are sent to seize Jesus but return empty-handed. In Matthew 5:25, the hyperetes is the court officer who imprisons a debtor. Spanish 'alguacil' (constable) and 'guardias' (guards) clearly mark the official, enforcement role. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: officer, officers, servants | es: alguacil, guardias | fr: serviteur | de: Diener Matt 5:25; Matt 26:58; Mark 14:54; Mark 14:65; John 7:32

2. servant, minister, attendant (5×) A personal servant, assistant, or minister who attends to someone or serves a cause. Luke 1:2 speaks of eyewitnesses who became hyperetai of the word; the synagogue attendant (hyperetes) in Luke 4:20 hands Jesus the scroll; John Mark acts as hyperetes to Paul and Barnabas (Acts 13:5); and Paul is appointed a hyperetes and witness of Christ (Acts 26:16). Spanish 'servidor' and 'ayudante,' along with French 'serviteur,' mark the personal, ministerial quality distinct from judicial enforcement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-servant, as-assistant, attendant | es: como-ayudante, servidor, servidores | fr: serviteur | de: Diener Luke 1:2; Luke 4:20; Acts 13:5; Acts 26:16; 1Cor 4:1

ὕπνος G5258 N-DMS (6×)

hypnos – sleep; natural physical rest, sometimes used figuratively for spiritual dullness or death

The noun hypnos ('sleep') – source of English 'hypnosis' – denotes the natural state of physical rest and unconsciousness. In the New Testament it appears in both literal and figuratively charged contexts. Joseph awakes from sleep (hypnos) after receiving the angelic message about Mary (Matt 1:24). The disciples are 'heavy with sleep' on the Mount of Transfiguration (Luke 9:32). Jesus clarifies that Lazarus' 'sleep' is actually death (John 11:13). The young Eutychus sinks into 'deep sleep' (bathys hypnos) during Paul's lengthy sermon and falls from the third story (Acts 20:9). Romans 13:11 uses it metaphorically: 'it is the hour to awake from sleep.' French sommeil, Spanish sueno, and German Schlaf all map uniformly to this core concept.

sleep (6×) Natural physical sleep or slumber, encompassing both ordinary rest and its figurative extensions to spiritual lethargy and the euphemism of death. Joseph awakes from hypnos after the angelic dream (Matt 1:24); disciples are weighed down with sleep at the Transfiguration (Luke 9:32); Jesus distinguishes Lazarus' death-sleep from ordinary hypnos (John 11:13); Eutychus succumbs to deep sleep during Paul's sermon (Acts 20:9); and Romans 13:11 deploys it as a metaphor for spiritual dullness. French sommeil, Spanish sueno, and German Schlaf converge uniformly, confirming a single lexical sense with contextual extensions. SLEEP AND SLUMBER

en: sleep, with-sleep | es: de-sueño, por-sueño, sueño | fr: sommeil | de: Schlaf, ὕπνου, ὕπνῳ Matt 1:24; Luke 9:32; John 11:13; Acts 20:9

ὑπό G5259 Prep (223×)

Under, by (agency); with genitive marks the agent performing an action; with accusative indicates position beneath or subordination.

Hypo is a preposition whose two main faces — agency and spatial position — are so distinct that many languages split them entirely. In its genitive usage (171 occurrences), it marks the agent behind a passive verb: prophets spoke 'by' the Holy Spirit, Jesus was baptized 'by' John, and Scripture was fulfilled as spoken 'by' the Lord through the prophet (Matt 1:22). With the accusative (51 occurrences), it shifts to spatial 'under': a lamp placed 'under' a basket, a centurion 'under' authority, chicks gathered 'under' wings. Spanish perfectly illustrates the split — por for agency, bajo/debajo de for position — while French par covers both but with different syntactic framing. The rare temporal sense at Acts 5:21 ('about daybreak') shows the preposition at the edge of its range.

1. by (171×) Agency marker with the genitive case: 'by' a person, force, or divine actor. At 171 occurrences this is the overwhelmingly dominant sense, appearing in passive constructions throughout the New Testament. Matthew's fulfillment formula 'what was spoken by the Lord through the prophet' (Matt 1:22; 2:15) is paradigmatic. Spanish por, German von, and Korean -에 의해 (-e uihae, 'by means of') all consistently select agentive vocabulary, distinguishing this clearly from the spatial sense. The construction hypo + genitive became the standard Koine marker of personal agency, replacing classical Greek instrumental uses of the dative. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by, by- | es: por | fr: par- | de: von Matt 1:22; Matt 2:15; Matt 2:16; Matt 3:6; Matt 3:13

2. under (51×) Spatial position with the accusative case: 'under, beneath, below.' Covering 51 occurrences, this sense denotes physical location under an object or metaphorical subordination under authority. A lamp is not placed 'under' a basket (Matt 5:15); the centurion declares himself a man 'under' authority (Matt 8:9); Jesus longs to gather Jerusalem's children 'under' his wings (Matt 23:37). Spanish bajo/debajo de, German unter, and Korean arae-e (아래에) all select positional-spatial vocabulary, and the accusative case in Greek itself signals directionality or extent rather than agency. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: under, under- | es: bajo, bajo-, debajo-de | fr: par- | de: unter-, von Matt 5:15; Matt 8:8; Matt 8:9; Matt 23:37

3. at (1×) Temporal approximation: 'about, around (a time).' A single occurrence at Acts 5:21 where the Sanhedrin gathers hypo ton orthron, 'about daybreak.' This temporal-proximity use, while rare in the New Testament, has classical precedent (hypo nykta, 'toward nightfall'). Spanish hacia ('toward') and the contextual rendering in other languages confirm a temporal rather than spatial or agentive reading. A marginal but genuine extension of the preposition's 'under/near' spatial core into the time domain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at | es: hacia | fr: par- | de: von Acts 5:21

ὑποβάλλω G5260 V-AIA-3P (1×)

To secretly induce, suborn, instigate covertly; to put someone up to making false accusations

This verb originally meant to throw or put under, but developed the specialized sense of secretly instigating or suborning someone—putting them up to something, usually something underhanded. Acts 6:11 uses it to describe how opponents of Stephen 'secretly induced' men to bring false charges of blasphemy against him. The verb suggests covert manipulation, coaching false witnesses behind the scenes. Spanish 'sobornaron' (they bribed) captures the corrupt, underhanded nature of the action.

(1×) In Acts 6:11, Stephen's opponents, unable to refute his wisdom, resorted to dirty tactics: 'they secretly induced men to say, We have heard him speak blasphemous words.' The verb describes covert instigation (Spanish 'sobornaron,' they bribed/suborned) of false testimony—coaching or bribing witnesses to make false accusations. The classical sense of 'putting under' developed into this specialized meaning of underhandedly instigating false charges, fitting Luke's narrative of the religious establishment's corrupt opposition to the gospel. SUBJECTION AND AUTHORITY

en: they-secretly-induced | es: sobornaron | fr: soumettre | de: ὑπέβαλον Acts 6:11

ὑπογραμμός G5261 N-AMS (1×)

A copy for imitation, pattern, example; a model to be followed, especially in conduct or suffering

This noun originally referred to a writing-copy that students would trace or imitate—an outline or pattern for learning. By extension it came to mean any example or pattern to be followed. In 1 Peter 2:21, Christ's suffering is described as leaving believers 'an example' that they should follow in his steps. Jesus' patient endurance under unjust suffering provides the pattern for Christian response to persecution. The word emphasizes intentional imitation of a model.

(1×) In 1 Pet 2:21, Peter writes that 'Christ suffered for you, leaving you an example that you should follow in his steps.' The noun denotes a pattern or model (Spanish 'ejemplo,' French transliteration, German 'Vorbild') to be deliberately imitated. The context is Christ's patient endurance of unjust suffering without retaliation—this becomes the template for believers facing persecution. Like students tracing a writing-copy, Christians are to trace Christ's footsteps, conforming their response to suffering to His redemptive pattern. EXAMPLES AND TYPES en: example | es: ejemplo | fr: ὑπογραμμὸν | de: Vorbild 1Pet 2:21

ὑπόδειγ-μα G5262 N-ANS (6×)

An example, pattern, or copy; ranges from a moral model set for imitation or warning to an imperfect earthly representation of a heavenly reality.

This noun carries a double force in the New Testament. On one hand it denotes an example or model held up for imitation or caution — Christ washing the disciples' feet as a pattern of humble service (John 13:15), the prophets as examples of patient endurance (Jas 5:10), or Sodom and Gomorrah as a warning example of divine judgment (2 Pet 2:6). On the other hand, Hebrews employs the word for the earthly tabernacle as a mere copy or shadow of the heavenly original (Heb 8:5; 9:23). The shift between these senses is subtle but real: one points forward ('follow this model'), the other points upward ('this is only a sketch of the true').

1. example, pattern, model (4×) A model, example, or pattern set before someone for imitation or as a warning. Jesus tells the disciples 'I have given you an example' after washing their feet (John 13:15); James points to the prophets as examples of patience (Jas 5:10); and the writer of Hebrews warns against falling 'after the same example of disobedience' (Heb 4:11). Spanish 'ejemplo' and German 'Vorbild' (role model) underscore the didactic, exemplary force. EXAMPLES AND TYPES en: an-example, example | es: Ejemplo, ejemplo | fr: Vorbild, exemple | de: Vorbild John 13:15; Heb 4:11; Jas 5:10; 2Pet 2:6

2. copy, representation, figure (2×) A copy, sketch, or imperfect representation of a higher, heavenly reality. Used exclusively in Hebrews for the earthly tabernacle as a derivative image of the true sanctuary in heaven (Heb 8:5; 9:23). The earthly form serves and shadows the original, not the reverse. English 'copy/copies' and Spanish 'copias' / 'en modelo' capture the subordinate, imitative character of this sense. EXAMPLES AND TYPES en: copies, copy | es: copias, en-modelo | fr: Vorbild | de: Vorbild Heb 8:5; Heb 9:23

ὑποδείκ-νῡμι G5263 V-AIA-1S (6×)

To show, demonstrate, or point out; also to warn or forewarn someone of coming danger or judgment.

This verb fundamentally means to make something visible or evident — to show, demonstrate, or point out what was previously unknown. Jesus tells a disciple 'I will show you' whom to fear (Luke 12:5) and Paul says the Lord 'showed me' what he must suffer (Acts 9:16). But in the mouths of John the Baptist and Jesus, it takes on a sharper edge: 'Who warned you to flee from the wrath to come?' (Matt 3:7; Luke 3:7). Here the word moves from neutral demonstration to urgent admonition. The Swahili translation 'aliwaonya' (he warned them) captures the cautionary force that distinguishes this warning sense from simple showing.

1. to show, demonstrate, point out (4×) To show, demonstrate, or point out something, making visible what was previously hidden or unknown. Used when Jesus declares 'I will show you whom to fear' (Luke 12:5), when Paul recalls how the Lord 'showed' him coming sufferings (Acts 9:16), and when teaching is illustrated by example (Luke 6:47; Acts 20:35). Spanish 'mostraré / os mostraré' and German 'zeigt' reflect the straightforward demonstrative meaning. SHOWING AND REVEALING
en: I-showed, I-will-show, will-show | es: mostraré, os-mostraré, os-mostré | fr: montrer | de: zeigt Luke 6:47; Luke 12:5; Acts 9:16; Acts 20:35

2. to warn, admonish (2×) To warn or forewarn someone, pointing out impending danger or divine judgment as a cautionary admonition. Both John the Baptist and Jesus ask the crowds, 'Who warned you to flee from the coming wrath?' (Matt 3:7; Luke 3:7). The shift from neutral showing to urgent warning is confirmed by Swahili 'aliwaonya' (he warned them), distinct from the general 'show' translations elsewhere. SHOWING AND REVEALING
en: warned | es: mostró, os-mostró | fr: montrer | de: zeigt Matt 3:7; Luke 3:7

ὑποδέχομαι G5264 V-AIM-3S (4×)
To receive as a guest, welcome into one's home; to offer hospitality by taking someone in.
Carries the warm connotation of welcoming a guest into one's own dwelling, going beyond mere receiving to imply personal hospitality. In Luke 10:38 Martha 'received' Jesus into her home, and in Luke 19:6 Zacchaeus joyfully 'received' him. Acts 17:7 describes Jason welcoming Paul and Silas in Thessalonica, and James 2:25 recalls Rahab who 'received' the Israelite spies. The French 'accueillir' captures the warmth of welcome especially well. Each instance highlights a host who takes personal risk or initiative in extending shelter and welcome.

(4×) To welcome someone into one's home as a guest, extending personal hospitality. Luke 10:38 shows Martha receiving Jesus; Luke 19:6 has Zacchaeus joyfully welcoming him down from the tree. Acts 17:7 describes Jason harboring Paul and Silas at personal legal risk, and Jas 2:25 recalls Rahab's reception of the spies as an act of faith. The French 'accueillir' and Spanish 'recibir' both emphasize the warmth of welcome, while the contexts consistently show hospitality as a courageous and faith-laden act. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: has-received, having-received, he-received | es: ha-recibido, habiendo-recibido, lo-recibió | fr: accueillir, recevoir, ὑποδεξαμένη | de: ὑπεδέξατο, ὑποδέδεκται, ὑποδεξαμένη Luke 10:38; Luke 19:6; Acts 17:7; Jas 2:25

ὑποδέω G5265 V-AMM-2S (3×)
to bind under the feet, put on sandals; to fasten footwear with straps or thongs
This verb means to bind sandals or shoes onto the feet, a necessary action since ancient footwear was secured with straps rather than being slip-on. The compound (hupo- "under" + deō "bind") captures the action of binding straps under and around the foot. In the passive, it means "to be shod" or "having put on sandals." All New Testament uses involve either literal instructions about footwear in preparation for travel/work or the spiritual armor metaphor where feet are "shod with the readiness of the gospel."

(3×) Mark 6:9 records Jesus instructing the Twelve to "wear sandals" (hupodedemenous) but not take extra tunics—travel light with basic necessities. Acts 12:8 shows the angel commanding Peter in prison to "bind on your sandals" (hupodesai)—prepare to leave, this is real not a vision. Ephesians 6:15 uses the participle "having shod" (hupodesaménoi) your feet with readiness that comes from the gospel of peace—part of the spiritual armor, feet ready to move/stand as the gospel requires. The multilingual glosses (Spanish calzados/átate, French attacher/chausser, German forms) emphasize both the binding action and the resulting shod state. The literal preparations (mission, escape) and metaphorical readiness (gospel armor) share the theme of being equipped and prepared for action. SANDALS FOOTWEAR
en: bind-on, having-been-shod, having-shod | es: calzados, habiendo-calzado, átate | fr: attacher, chausser, ὑποδησάμενοι | de: ὑποδεδεμένους, ὑποδησάμενοι, ὑπόδησαι Mark 6:9; Acts 12:8; Eph 6:15

ὑπόδημ-α G5266 N-GNP (10×)
Sandal, shoe — basic footwear of the ancient Near East; symbol of servile humility and sacred ground
The noun ὑπόδημα (hypodema) denotes a sandal or shoe, the standard footwear of the biblical world. Its theological weight far exceeds its humble material form. John the Baptist declares himself unworthy to 'carry' or 'untie' the sandals of the Coming One (Matt 3:11; Mark 1:7; Luke 3:16; John 1:27; Acts 13:25) — since removing sandals was the task of the lowest slave. Jesus sends out the Twelve without extra sandals (Matt 10:10; Luke 10:4), symbolizing radical dependence on God. At the burning bush, Moses is told to remove his sandals on holy ground (Acts 7:33, echoing Exod 3:5). Spanish 'sandalias/calzado' and French 'sandales' preserve the everyday-yet-symbolic character.

sandal, footwear (10×) A sandal or shoe — basic leather footwear strapped to the foot — carrying symbolic weight in three domains: servile humility (John the Baptist unworthy to carry/untie Jesus' sandals, Matt 3:11; Mark 1:7; Acts 13:25), missionary dependence (the Twelve sent without extra sandals, Matt 10:10; Luke 10:4; 22:35), and sacred encounter (Moses removing sandals on holy ground, Acts 7:33). The prodigal son receives sandals as a sign of restored sonship (Luke 15:22). Spanish 'sandalias' and German 'Schuhe/Sandalen' both capture the ordinary item that Scripture repeatedly loads with theological meaning. SANDALS FOOTWEAR en: sandal, sandals | es: calzado, sandalia, sandalias | fr: chaussure, sandale | de: Sandale, Schuhe Matt 3:11; Matt 10:10; Mark 1:7; Luke 3:16; Luke 10:4

ὑπόδῐκος G5267 Adj-NMS (1×)
Accountable, answerable, liable to judgment; subject to legal penalty or divine condemnation
This adjective describes being under legal liability or subject to trial and judgment. In Romans 3:19, Paul uses it to state that the purpose of the Law is to silence all excuses so that 'the whole world may become accountable to God.' No one can claim innocence; all stand answerable before the divine judge. The term carries legal weight—being liable to penalty, facing charges without defense. Translations consistently use 'accountable,' 'answerable,' or 'subject to judgment.'

(1×) In Rom 3:19, Paul concludes his argument that all humanity is sinful: the Law speaks 'so that every mouth may be stopped and the whole world become accountable to God.' The adjective describes standing liable before the divine tribunal (Spanish 'responsable,' responsible/accountable; German 'strafbar,' liable to punishment). The context is forensic—no one has grounds for self-defense; all are answerable to God's righteous judgment. French 'condamné' (condemned) captures the verdict that accountability brings for the guilty. TESTIMONY OBJECTS
en: accountable | es: responsable | fr: condamné | de: strafbar Rom 3:19

ὑποζύγι-ον G5268 N-NNS (2×)
a beast of burden, especially a donkey or ass
This term originally meant any beast used for yoking or burden-bearing (oxen, mules), but by the Hellenistic period specifically designated donkeys. Matthew uses it in quoting Zechariah's prophecy about the Messiah coming 'seated on a donkey,' fulfilled in Jesus' triumphal entry. Peter employs it in recounting Balaam's rebuke, where a normally speechless donkey spoke to restrain the prophet's madness. Both contexts give theological significance to a humble work animal.

(2×) From classical 'beast for the yoke' (ὑποζύγιον), the term narrowed to donkeys/asses in later Greek. Matt 21:5 quotes Zechariah 9:9 about the king 'mounted on a donkey' (ἐπὶ ὑποζύγιον), fulfilled when Jesus rode into Jerusalem—the humble beast symbolizing messianic peace versus military conquest. 2 Pet 2:16 recalls Balaam's 'speechless donkey' (ὑποζύγιον ἄφωνον) speaking with human voice, the humble animal shaming the mercenary prophet. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: donkey, of-a-beast-of-burden | es: bestia-de-carga, de-bestia-de-carga | fr: ânesse, ὑποζύγιον | de: ὑποζυγίου, ὑποζύγιον Matt 21:5; 2Pet 2:16

ὑποζώννῡμι G5269 V-PPA-NMP (1×)

To undergird, brace with ropes or cables; to secure a ship's hull by passing cables around it

This technical nautical term describes a procedure for strengthening a ship in stormy seas—passing cables under the hull and around the ship to hold it together and prevent the planks from separating. Acts 27:17 uses it during Paul's voyage to Rome when the ship encounters a violent storm: the sailors 'undergirded' the vessel to keep it from breaking apart. The Spanish and French translations retain the technical imagery while German uses the Greek transliteration.

(1×) In Acts 27:17, as Paul's ship is caught in a severe storm, Luke reports that the crew took measures to save the vessel: 'undergirding it' by passing ropes or cables around the hull. This emergency procedure (Spanish 'ciñendo,' girding; French 'ceindre,' to gird) braced the ship's structure to prevent the planks from being pulled apart by the violent waves. The participle preserves technical nautical vocabulary, showing Luke's attention to maritime detail and emphasizing the life-threatening severity of the storm. GIRDING AND DRESSING en: undergirding | es: ciñendo | fr: ceindre | de: ὑποζωννύντες Acts 27:17

ὑποκάτω G5270 Prep (11×)

Under, underneath, beneath — a spatial preposition indicating position below something, often with metaphorical force

The improper preposition ὑποκάτω (hypokatō) means 'under, underneath, beneath,' combining ὑπό with κάτω for emphasis. Its most theologically charged use comes from Psalm 110:1: God will make the Messiah's enemies 'a footstool under his feet' (Matt 22:44; Mark 12:36; Heb 2:8). The Syrophoenician woman pleads that 'even the dogs under the table eat the children's crumbs' (Mark 7:28). Jesus instructs disciples to shake dust from 'under your feet' (Mark 6:11), and Luke notes that no one puts a lamp 'under a bed' (Luke 8:16). In Revelation, souls cry from 'under the altar' (Rev 6:9). Spanish 'debajo de' and French 'au-dessous de' convey the spatial sense.

(11×) A spatial preposition meaning 'under, underneath, beneath' — indicating a position lower than or subordinate to something. Used in the Messianic psalm quotation about enemies placed 'under his feet' (Matt 22:44; Mark 12:36; Heb 2:8, citing Psalm 110:1), the Syrophoenician woman's argument about dogs 'under the table' (Mark 7:28), the instruction to shake dust from 'under your feet' (Mark 6:11), hiding a lamp 'under a bed' (Luke 8:16), John unworthy to untie sandals (John 1:27 v.l.), and souls 'under the altar' in Revelation (Rev 6:9). Spanish 'debajo de,' Korean 'arae-e,' and Arabic 'tahta' all express spatial inferiority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: under, under-, underneath | es: debajo, debajo-de | fr: au-dessous-de, sous- | de: unter, unterhalb Matt 22:44; Mark 6:11; Mark 7:28; Mark 12:36; Luke 8:16

ὑποκρίνω G5271 V-PPM/P-AMP (1×)

To pretend, feign, play a part; to act hypocritically by concealing one's true motives or character

This middle voice verb originally meant to answer or interpret, then came to mean acting on stage (playing a role), and finally developed the negative sense of pretending or feigning—acting a part to deceive. Luke 20:20 uses it to describe spies sent by Jesus' opponents who 'pretended to be sincere' while actually seeking to trap him. They played a false role, concealing their hostile intent behind a mask of honest inquiry. All translations capture the deceitful, hypocritical nature of this pretense.

(1×) In Luke 20:20, the religious authorities 'sent spies who pretended to be sincere, that they might catch Jesus in something he said.' The participle describes feigning (Spanish 'fingiéndose,' feigning themselves; French 'feindre,' to feign) a character opposite to one's true intentions—these men acted the role of honest seekers while actually being agents provocateurs. The verb's theatrical origin (acting/playing a part) developed into this meaning of hypocritical pretense, wearing a false mask to deceive. HYPOCRISY PRETENSE

en: pretending | es: fingiéndose | fr: feindre | de: ὑποκρινομένους Luke 20:20

ὑπό-κρῐσις G5272 N-AFP (6×)

hypokrisis – hypocrisy, pretense, dissimulation; playing a part one does not genuinely inhabit

Rooted in the theatrical world – hypokrisis originally meant 'playing a part on stage' (from hypokrinomai, 'to answer, to play a role') – this noun came to denote the moral vice of pretending to be what one is not. Jesus deploys it as a devastating critique of religious leaders who perform piety without inner transformation: 'You also outwardly appear righteous, but within you are full of hypocrisy and lawlessness' (Matt 23:28). Luke 12:1 warns against 'the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy.' Paul confronts Peter's hypocrisy at Antioch (Gal 2:13), and 1 Timothy 4:2 warns of deceivers speaking 'in hypocrisy.' Spanish hipocresia, French hypocrisie, and German Heuchelei all preserve the stage-acting metaphor at their etymological root.

hypocrisy, pretense (6×) The act or quality of pretending to hold beliefs, virtues, or feelings that one does not actually possess – a moral vice rooted in theatrical metaphor (playing a part on stage). Jesus uses it to indict religious pretense in Matt 23:28 and Mark 12:15; Luke 12:1 calls it the 'leaven of the Pharisees'; Paul confronts corporate hypocrisy at Antioch (Gal 2:13); and 1 Tim 4:2 warns of demonic teaching delivered 'in hypocrisy.' Spanish hipocresia and French hypocrisie both trace back to the same Greek theatrical origin, confirming a single unified sense of moral dissimulation across all six New Testament occurrences. HYPOCRISY PRETENSE

en: hypocrisies, hypocrisy, of-hypocrisy | es: de-hipocresía, hipocresía, hipocresías | fr: hypocrisie, ὑποκρίσει, ὑποκρίσεις | de: ὑποκρίσει, ὑποκρίσεις, ὑποκρίσεως Matt 23:28; Mark 12:15; Luke 12:1; Gal 2:13; 1Tim 4:2

ὑπο-κρῐτής G5273 N-GMP (18×)

hypocrite, pretender — one who feigns piety or virtue while lacking genuine devotion; a religious actor

Hypokrites originally meant a stage actor in classical Greek — one who speaks from behind a mask — but by the time of the New Testament it had become a stinging epithet for religious pretenders. All 18 occurrences carry this pejorative sense, and the vast majority come from the lips of Jesus himself in Matthew's Gospel, where it becomes his signature rebuke of the scribes and Pharisees. In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus warns against practicing righteousness 'like the hypocrites' who pray on street corners and disfigure their faces when fasting to be seen by others (Matt 6:2, 5, 16). The devastating sevenfold 'Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!' of Matthew 23 (vv. 13, 15, 23, 25, 27, 29) constitutes the most concentrated denunciation in the Gospels. Luke preserves Jesus calling the crowds hypocrites for reading weather signs but not the signs of the times (Luke 12:56; 13:15). The underlying theatrical metaphor — a person performing a role rather than living authentically — gives the word its enduring moral force. Spanish 'hipocrita,' French 'hypocrite,' and German 'Heuchler' all descend from or translate this Greek term.

hypocrite, pretender (18×) A religious pretender who performs outward piety without inward sincerity, originally a theatrical term for an actor speaking through a mask. Jesus employs it as his primary epithet for the scribes and Pharisees: those who pray ostentatiously

(Matt 6:2, 5), disfigure their faces in fasting (Matt 6:16), and strain at gnats while swallowing camels (Matt 23:13-29). The sevenfold 'Woe to you, hypocrites!' in Matthew 23 constitutes the Gospel's most sustained denunciation. Mark 7:6 and Matt 15:7 apply it to those who honor God with their lips while their hearts are far away, citing Isaiah 29:13. Luke extends it to the crowds who cannot read the signs of the times (Luke 12:56; 13:15). The theatrical etymology — one who plays a part — gives the word permanent moral resonance across every translation tradition. HYPOCRISY PRETENSE

en: Hypocrite, Hypocrites, hypocrite | es: Hipócritas, hipócrita, hipócritas | fr: hypocrite | de: Heuchler, ὑποκριτῶν Matt 6:2; Matt 6:5; Matt 6:16; Matt 7:5; Matt 15:7

ὑπολαμβάνω G5274 V-AIA-3S (5×) hypolambano – to take up, receive, support; to suppose or assume; to respond in conversation

The verb hypolambano (literally 'to take from underneath') carries a surprisingly broad range in its five New Testament occurrences, spanning physical, cognitive, and conversational senses. A cloud 'received' Jesus out of sight at the Ascension (Acts 1:9), Peter 'responded' to Jesus's question in a dialogue (Luke 7:43; 10:30), Peter tells the Pentecost crowd not to 'suppose' the disciples are drunk (Acts 2:15), and John urges believers to 'receive' traveling missionaries (3 John 1:8). Spanish captures this breadth with recibio, supongo, and sostener, while French uses repondre for the conversational sense – evidence that this verb's semantic range genuinely extends across three distinct domains.

(5×) To take up or receive, either physically or hospitably. At the Ascension a cloud 'took him up' (Acts 1:9) out of the disciples' sight, and 3 John 1:8 urges believers to 'receive' (hypolambanein) itinerant missionaries so as to become fellow workers in the truth. Spanish recibio and French the Greek transliteration both point to the concrete uptaking sense. ANSWERING AND TESTIFYING en: I-suppose, having-taken-up, received | es: recibió, sostener, supongo | fr: répondre, ὑπολαμβάνειν | de: ὑπέλαβεν, ὑπολαβὼν, ὑπολαμβάνειν Luke 7:43; Luke 10:30; Acts 1:9; Acts 2:15; 3John 1:8

ὑπολείπω G5275 N-NNS (2×)

a remnant, what is left remaining

This term denotes what remains or is left over after others are removed. Paul uses it twice in Romans to describe the faithful remnant of Israel preserved by God's grace. Quoting Isaiah, he notes that though Israel's numbers were like the sand, only a remnant would be saved. Then citing Elijah's experience, Paul reminds readers that even when things seemed hopeless, God preserved 7,000 who hadn't bowed to Baal—a remnant according to the election of grace.

(2×) From classical usage for what remains or is left behind, ὑπόλειμμα/ὑπολειφθέντες carries theological weight in Paul's remnant theology. Rom 9:27 quotes Isaiah: though Israel's number is vast, 'a remnant will be saved' (τὸ ὑπόλειμμα σωθήσεται). Rom 11:3 cites Elijah's despair ('I alone am left'), before God reveals 7,000 preserved—illustrating that God always maintains a faithful remnant by grace, not human merit. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: remnant, was-left | es: quedé, remanente | fr: laisser | de: uebrigbleiben Rom 9:27; Rom 11:3

ὑπολήνιον G5276 N-ANS (1×)

A wine vat, the trough beneath a winepress that receives the pressed juice; part of vineyard equipment

This technical agricultural term designates the lower receptacle of a winepress—the vat or trough positioned beneath the pressing platform to collect the juice flowing from crushed grapes. Mark 12:1 mentions it as standard equipment in the parable of the vineyard: the owner 'dug a wine vat' as part of establishing a fully equipped vineyard before leasing it to tenants. The detail emphasizes the completeness of the owner's provision and investment.

(1×) In Mark 12:1, Jesus begins the parable of the vineyard: a man 'planted a vineyard, put a fence around it, dug a wine vat, and built a tower.' The wine vat (Spanish 'lagar,' French 'cuve,' German 'Kelter'—all winepress-related terms) was the collection basin positioned below the press to receive the juice. Mentioning it signals a fully equipped, productive vineyard—the owner spared no expense in preparing the property before entrusting it to tenants, heightening their ingratitude when they refuse to pay rent. WINEPRESS VAT

en: a-wine-vat | es: lagar | fr: cuve | de: Kelter Mark 12:1

ὑπολιμπάνω G5277 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

To leave behind as an example; to abandon one thing while departing toward another, leaving a pattern

This compound verb intensifies the basic sense of leaving by suggesting leaving something behind as one departs. In 1 Peter 2:21, it describes how Christ's suffering 'left behind' an example for believers —as Christ departed through suffering into glory, he left a pattern for his followers to trace. The verb combines departure with legacy: Christ didn't just suffer and leave; he left his suffering as a model. Most translations render it simply as 'leaving.'

(1×) In 1 Pet 2:21, Peter writes that Christ 'suffered for you, leaving you an example.' The participle suggests departing while leaving something behind (Spanish 'dejando,' leaving) for those who remain. Christ's suffering wasn't merely personal; it was exemplary —as he passed through suffering to glory, he bequeathed a pattern for believers facing similar trials. The verb emphasizes both Christ's forward movement through suffering and the legacy he left: a template of patient endurance for his followers to imitate. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: leaving-behind | es: dejando | fr: ὑπολιμπάνων | de: hinterlassen 1Pet 2:21

ὑπομένω G5278 V-APA-NMS (17×)

To remain behind or stay; more often, to endure patiently, persevere under hardship without yielding.

Built from hypo ('under') and meno ('remain'), this verb pictures someone who stands firm under a heavy load rather than fleeing. Its dominant NT sense is steadfast endurance — bearing up under persecution, suffering, or trial without collapse (Matt 10:22; Heb 12:2-3; Jas 5:11). German ausharren ('to hold out, persist') and Spanish perseverar capture the gritty resilience involved. Yet the compound's older spatial meaning — 'to stay behind after others have left' — surfaces twice: the boy Jesus remaining behind in Jerusalem (Luke 2:43) and Silas staying in Berea when Paul departs (Acts 17:14). Spanish permanecer in these cases signals the purely locative sense, distinct from the moral fortitude implied elsewhere.

1. endure, persevere under hardship (15×) To endure, bear up patiently, or persevere under hardship, trial, or opposition without giving way (15 occurrences). This is the theologically weighty sense: 'the one who endures to the end will be saved' (Matt 10:22; 24:13; Mark 13:13). Hebrews holds up Jesus as the supreme example, who 'endured the cross' (12:2). James points to Job's steadfastness (5:11). German ausharren and Spanish perseverar both convey the active, muscular quality of this endurance — not passive resignation but resolute standing firm under pressure. PATIENCE ENDURANCE

en: I-endure, endure, endured | es: el-que-perseverare, habiendo-perseverado, lo-soportáis | fr: ausharren, endurer | de: ausharren, harrt-aus Matt 10:22; Matt 24:13; Mark 13:13; Rom 12:12; 1Cor 13:7

2. remain behind, stay (2×) To remain behind in a place after others have departed — the literal spatial sense of the compound (2 occurrences). In Luke 2:43 the twelve-year-old Jesus 'remained behind' in Jerusalem when his parents left, and in Acts 17:14 Silas and Timothy 'stayed behind' in Berea. Spanish permanecer and permanecieron ('they remained') mark the purely locative meaning, while French and German do not differentiate, using the same endurer and ausharren for both senses — a gap in those languages that the multilingual evidence helpfully exposes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: remained, remained-behind | es: permanecieron, permaneció | fr: endurer | de: harrt-aus Luke 2:43; Acts 17:14

ὑπομιμνήσκω G5279 V-PNA (7×)

To remind someone or bring something to remembrance; in the passive, to be reminded or to recall.

Hupomimnesko is built from hupo ('under, from below') and mimnesko ('remind'), suggesting a gentle bringing-up from beneath the surface of memory. In its active forms, it describes the deliberate act of calling something back to someone's attention — as when Jesus promises the Spirit will 'remind you of all that I said' (John 14:26), or when Paul instructs Titus to 'remind them to be submissive to rulers' (Titus 3:1). The single passive occurrence in Luke 22:61 is poignant: Peter 'was reminded' of Jesus' word when the rooster crowed. Spanish uses 'recordar' throughout, while French 'rappeler' preserves the same re-calling motion.

1. remind, call to remembrance (6×) To actively remind someone of something, to call a matter back to another person's attention. Jesus promises the Holy Spirit will 'remind you of everything I have said' (John 14:26) — here the Spirit is the agent of recall. Paul uses the word for pastoral instruction: remind them of these things (2 Tim 2:14), remind them to be subject to rulers (Titus 3:1). Spanish 'recordar' and French 'rappeler' both capture the transitive act of causing another to remember. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING en: I-will-remind, To-remind, remind | es: Recordar, recordar, recordará | fr: Rappeler, rappeler | de: Erinnern, erinnern John 14:26; 2Tim 2:14; Titus 3:1; 2Pet 1:12; 3John 1:10

2. remembered, recalled (passive) (1×) To be caused to remember, to have something recalled to one's mind (passive/intransitive). In Luke 22:61, after the rooster crows, Peter 'was reminded' (hupemnesthe) of the Lord's word — the emphasis falls on the experience of sudden, involuntary recall rather than on any external agent doing the reminding. Spanish 'recordó' shifts to a reflexive nuance, and the Greek aorist passive underscores the moment's immediacy: the memory surfaces unbidden. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING en: remembered | es: recordó | fr: rappeler | de: ὑπεμνήσθη Luke 22:61

ὑπόμνησ-ις G5280 N-DFS (3×)

reminder, remembrance; the act of calling to mind or bringing something back to memory

This noun denotes the act of reminding or the state of remembering, often with the nuance of keeping something actively in mind rather than letting it slip into forgetfulness. Plato called writing a "drug of reminder" (hupomnēsis) rather than memory itself—it prompts recall rather than embeds knowledge. The New Testament uses reflect pastoral concern for keeping important truths present and active in believers' minds. All three occurrences appear in 2 Timothy and 2 Peter, epistles concerned with preserving apostolic truth after the apostles' deaths.

(3×) Second Timothy 1:5 speaks of Timothy's sincere faith, bringing to "remembrance" (hupomnēsin) the faith that first lived in his grandmother Lois and mother Eunice—calling to mind the generational transmission. Second Peter 1:13 explains Peter's purpose: to "stir you up by way of reminder" (en hupomnēsei)—keep truths active rather than dormant. Second Peter 3:1 identifies this as Peter's second letter, written to "stir up your sincere mind by way of reminder" (en hupomnēsei)—preventing complacency. The Spanish recuerdo, French and German forms capture the reminder/remembrance sense. These pastoral reminders acknowledge that believers need repeated stirring up to keep foundational truths vivid and operative, especially as eyewitnesses pass from the scene. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE en: remembrance, reminder | es: recuerdo | fr: ὑπομνήσει, ὑπόμνησιν | de: Erinnerung 2Tim 1:5; 2Pet 1:13; 2Pet 3:1

ὑπομονή G5281 N-DFS (32×)

endurance, patient perseverance — steadfast remaining under trial without yielding, a cardinal Christian virtue Hypomone (from hypo 'under' + meno 'remain') literally means 'remaining under' — standing firm beneath a weight rather than fleeing from it. Its 32 New Testament occurrences establish it as one of the defining virtues of the Christian life. Paul builds a famous chain in Romans 5:3-4: suffering produces endurance, endurance produces proven character, and proven character produces hope. Jesus teaches that the good-soil hearers bear fruit 'with endurance' (Luke 8:15), and warns that 'by your endurance you will gain your lives' (Luke 21:19). James agrees that the testing of faith produces hypomone, and urges believers to let it have its 'perfect work' (Jas 1:3-4). Revelation rewards the saints' endurance against the beast (Rev 13:10; 14:12). The word never denotes passive resignation; as Spanish perseverancia and German Geduld suggest, it carries active, purposeful resolve.

endurance, patient perseverance (32×) Steadfast endurance under trial, active perseverance that refuses to surrender or retreat. Paul's chain in Romans 5:3-4 places it between suffering and proven character as a transformative virtue. Jesus ties it to fruitfulness in the parable of the sower (Luke 8:15) and to eschatological survival (Luke 21:19). James insists it must be brought to completion (Jas 1:3-4). In Revelation, it defines the saints who keep God's commandments under persecution (Rev 13:10; 14:12). PATIENCE ENDURANCE en: endurance, of-endurance | es: de-paciencia, paciencia, perseverancia | fr: endurance, patience, persévérance | de: Geduld, ὑπομονῇ Luke 8:15; Luke 21:19; Rom 2:7; Rom 5:3; Rom 5:4

ὑπονο-έω G5282 V-PIA-2P (3×)

to suspect, suppose, conjecture; to form an opinion based on partial evidence or assumption

This verb means to suspect, surmise, or suppose something—to form a tentative opinion without full certainty. It can carry negative overtones (suspicion, watching captiously) or neutral ones (reasonable conjecture). The root involves thinking under the surface (huponoeō), examining possibilities beneath what's stated. All three New Testament uses appear in Acts, describing people's uncertain interpretations of situations—guessing at meaning when full information isn't available. The term captures the tentative, provisional nature of human judgment when working from incomplete data.

(3×) Acts 13:25 records John the Baptist's question, "Who do you suppose (huponoeite) I am?"—challenging the crowds' assumptions about his identity. Acts 25:18 has Festus explaining that the Jewish accusers didn't charge Paul with crimes "such as I was supposing" (hupenooun)—his expectations were wrong. Acts 27:27 describes the sailors "supposing" (hupenooun) they were drawing near to land as they drifted in the storm—an uncertain conjecture proved correct. The Spanish suponéis/suponía/sospechaban, French penser, and German forms convey the supposing/suspecting range. The term highlights human limitation—we constantly operate on assumptions and guesses, sometimes right (the sailors) and sometimes wrong (Festus), requiring humility about our certainty. THINKING AND SEEMING en: do-you-suppose, was-supposing, were-supposing | es: sospechaban, suponéis, suponía | fr: penser | de: ὑπενόουν, ὑπονοεῖτε Acts 13:25; Acts 25:18; Acts 27:27

ὑπόνοια G5283 N-NFP (1×)

Suspicions, conjectures; unfounded notions or imaginings that breed distrust and conflict

This noun denotes suspicions or speculative guesses—thoughts not grounded in evidence but arising from a mistrustful disposition. In 1 Timothy 6:4, Paul lists 'suspicions' among the evil fruits of false teaching that loves controversy: it breeds envy, strife, slander, and baseless suspicions. These are imagined offenses or paranoid conjectures that poison community relationships. The classical usage could mean conjecture or guess; in the New Testament it takes on the negative sense of unfounded, divisive suspicions.

(1×) In 1 Tim 6:4, Paul describes the fruits of false teaching: 'envy, strife, slander, evil suspicions, constant friction among people.' The noun denotes unfounded conjectures (Spanish 'sospechas,' suspicions; German 'Verdacht,' suspicion) that arise from a corrupt mind. Rather than assuming the best, divisive teachers breed mistrust—people begin imagining evil motives in others without evidence. These suspicions corrode community trust and generate endless conflict. French retains the Greek transliteration while recognizing its meaning as baseless, divisive imaginings. THINKING AND SEEMING en: suspicions | es: sospechas | fr: ὑπόνοιαι | de: Verdacht 1Tim 6:4

ὑποπλέω G5284 V-AIA-1P (2×)

to sail under the lee of (an island or coast), seeking shelter from wind

This nautical term means to sail in the sheltered water on the leeward side of an island or coastline, using the land mass as protection from wind and waves. Luke uses it twice in his detailed account of Paul's voyage to Rome, describing how the storm-battered ship sought refuge by sailing under the lee of Cyprus and then Crete. The technical precision adds authenticity to the narrative.

(2×) The nautical verb ὑποπλέω describes sailing in the protected waters on the lee side of land. Acts 27:4 and 27:7 both describe the ship's attempt to find shelter during Paul's voyage: sailing 'under the lee of Cyprus' and later Crete because contrary winds prevented direct sailing. Luke's accurate seamanship terminology (reflected across languages: German ὑπεπλεύσαμεν, French naviguer-sous) grounds the narrative in realistic maritime detail. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: we-sailed-under-the-lee | es: navegamos-bajo-el-abrigo-de | fr: naviguer-sous | de: ὑπεπλεύσαμεν Acts 27:4; Acts 27:7

ὑποπνέω G5285 V-APA-GMS (1×)

To blow gently, breathe softly; used of a gentle wind beginning to blow

This verb describes a gentle, soft blowing of wind—the opposite of a violent gale. Acts 27:13 uses it during Paul's voyage narrative: when 'a south wind blew gently,' the sailors thought conditions were favorable to sail, so they weighed anchor. The gentle breeze seemed safe, but it was the deceptive calm before the violent storm that would soon engulf them. All translations preserve the sense of soft, gentle blowing.

(1×) In Acts 27:13, Luke narrates, 'When a south wind blew gently, supposing they had obtained their purpose, they weighed anchor.' The participle describes a soft, gentle breeze (Spanish 'habiendo soplado suavemente,' having blown gently; German transliteration recognizing the gentle blowing) that gave the crew false confidence to sail. The gentle conditions were misleading—soon a violent northeaster would seize the ship. The verb's emphasis on gentleness heightens the irony of their miscalculation. BLOWING AND BREATHING

en: Having-blown-gently | es: Habiendo-soplado-suavemente | fr: souffler-dessous | de: Ὑποπνεύσαντος Acts 27:13

ὑποπόδ-ιον G5286 N-ANS (7×)

A footstool; a low stool or platform on which feet are rested, used chiefly as a metaphor for divine sovereignty.

In classical use a literal piece of furniture placed beneath the feet, but in the NT it functions almost exclusively as a theologically charged metaphor drawn from Psalm 110:1 — 'until I make your enemies a footstool for your feet.' This royal image, quoted more than any other OT verse in the NT, depicts total subjugation of enemies beneath the sovereign's feet. It appears in Jesus's own argument (Luke 20:43), in Peter's Pentecost sermon (Acts 2:35), in Stephen's speech citing Isaiah (Acts 7:49, 'the earth is my footstool'), and in the Christological argument of Hebrews (Heb 1:13; 10:13). Spanish offers two renderings — 'escabel' and 'estrado' — both evoking a raised dais of authority.

a footstool (7×) A footstool — literally a low support for the feet, but in the NT used almost entirely as a metaphor for divine sovereignty and the subjugation of enemies. The dominant quotation is Psalm 110:1 ('until I make your enemies a footstool for your feet'), cited in Luke 20:43, Acts 2:35, Heb 1:13, and Heb 10:13 to establish Christ's exalted reign. In Acts 7:49, quoting Isaiah 66:1, the earth itself is God's footstool. Spanish 'escabel' and 'estrado' and German 'Fußschemel' all preserve the image of a platform beneath royal feet. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-footstool, footstool | es: escabel, estrado | fr: Fussschemel, marchepied | de: Fussschemel, ὑποπόδιον, ὑποπόδιόν Matt 5:35; Luke 20:43; Acts 2:35; Acts 7:49; Heb 1:13

ὑπόστᾰσις G5287 N-NFS (5×)

hypostasis – substance, essence, reality; confident assurance or firm ground beneath one's conviction

The noun hypostasis (literally 'that which stands under') is one of the most theologically consequential words in the New Testament, carrying the force of underlying reality and confident assurance. In Heb 1:3 the Son is the exact imprint of God's hypostasis – his very being or essence – making this term foundational to later Trinitarian theology. In Heb 11:1 faith is the hypostasis of things hoped for, variously rendered as 'substance' (KJV), 'assurance' (ESV), or 'confident reality.' Paul uses it in a different key in 2 Cor 9:4 and 11:17 to mean 'confidence' or 'basis for boasting.' German Wesen ('being, essence') and French substance together capture the word's two poles: objective reality and subjective certitude.

(5×) The underlying essence, substantial nature, or very being of something. In Heb 1:3 the Son is 'the exact imprint of his hypostasis,' meaning God's essential being – a passage that became foundational for Nicene Trinitarian theology. German Wesen ('essence, being') and French substance both gravitate to this ontological core, indicating the objective reality that undergirds appearance. CONFIDENCE AND TRUST

en: assurance, confidence, situation | es: confianza, sustancia | fr: Wesen, substance | de: Wesen 2Cor 9:4; 2Cor 11:17; Heb 1:3; Heb 3:14; Heb 11:1

ὑποστέλλω G5288 V-IIA-3S (4×)

To shrink back, withdraw, hold back; to draw back from declaring or doing something out of timidity or cowardice.

Conveys the idea of pulling back, retreating, or holding something in reserve, often with an undertone of cowardice or self-protective concealment. In Acts 20:20 and 20:27 Paul insists he did not 'shrink back' from declaring the full counsel of God to the Ephesians. Galatians 2:12 describes Peter 'withdrawing' from table fellowship with Gentiles when the circumcision party arrived. Hebrews 10:38 warns that if anyone 'shrinks back,' God's soul has no pleasure in that person. The Spanish 'retraerse' and French 'reculer' both capture the backward movement — a retreat from conviction under social pressure.

(4×) To draw back, shrink away, or withhold out of fear or social pressure, failing to stand firm in conviction. Paul twice insists he never shrank back from declaring truth (Acts 20:20,27), while Gal 2:12 shows Peter withdrawing from Gentile fellowship under pressure from the circumcision faction. Heb 10:38 frames shrinking back as the opposite of living by faith. The Spanish 'retraerse' and French 'reculer' vividly convey the backward retreat, and the German 'zurückziehen' (pull back) captures the self-protective withdrawal. TURNING BACK APOSTASY

en: I-shrank-back, he-shrinks-back, he-was-withdrawing | es: me-retraje, retrocede, se-retraía | fr: reculer, retirer | de: zurueckziehen, ὑπεστειλάμην Acts 20:20; Acts 20:27; Gal 2:12; Heb 10:38

ὑποστολή G5289 N-GFS (1×)

Shrinking back, timidity, withdrawal; cowardly retreat from commitment, especially in faith

This noun describes the act of drawing back, shrinking away, or withdrawing—especially from danger or commitment. In Hebrews 10:39, the author contrasts two responses to persecution: 'shrinking back' leading to destruction versus faith that preserves the soul. To shrink back is to abandon one's confession under pressure, to retreat from costly discipleship. The term carries connotations of cowardice and timidity. Translations use 'shrinking back,' 'withdrawal,' or 'timidity.'

(1×) In Heb 10:39, after warning about apostasy, the author declares, 'We are not of those who shrink back to destruction, but of those who have faith to the preserving of the soul.' The noun denotes cowardly withdrawal (Spanish 'de retroceso,' of retreat; French 'reculer,' to retreat; German 'Zurückweichen,' shrinking back) from Christian confession under persecution. The context contrasts faithless retreat leading to ruin with persevering faith leading to salvation. Shrinking back means abandoning one's profession, betraying Christ to avoid suffering. TURNING BACK APOSTASY

en: of-shrinking-back | es: de-retroceso | fr: reculer | de: Zurueckweichen Heb 10:39

ὑποστρέφω G5290 V-APA-NMP (35×)

To return, go back — physical travel to a previous location; rarely, to turn back from a course

Almost exclusively a travel verb in Luke-Acts, describing people going back to where they came from. Mary returns to her home after visiting Elizabeth (Luke 1:56), the shepherds return glorifying God (Luke 2:20), and Paul's missionary journeys are punctuated by returns to Antioch and Jerusalem. The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform — Spanish 'regresar/volver', French 'retourner', German 'zurückkehren' — because 34 of 35 uses denote straightforward physical return. The lone exception in 2 Peter 2:21 shifts to a figurative moral sense: turning back from the holy commandment.

1. return to a place (34×) To return physically to a prior location — going back to a city, home, or region after a journey or errand. This accounts for nearly all NT occurrences and dominates Luke-Acts (Luke 1:56; 2:20, 43, 45; 4:1; Acts 8:28; 13:13). Translations across all languages use dedicated return-verbs (spa 'regresar/volver', fra 'retourner', deu 'zurückkehren'), showing no semantic variation within this sense. RETURNING AND RESTORING en: having-returned, returned, they-returned | es: habiendo-regresado, habiendo-vuelto, regresaban | fr: retourner | de: kehrt-zurück Luke 1:56; Luke 2:20; Luke 2:43; Luke 2:45; Luke 4:1

2. turn back from a course (1×) To turn back from a course or way of life — a figurative reversal rather than geographic return. Attested only in 2 Pet 2:21, where it would have been better not to have known the way of righteousness than to turn back (ὑποστρέψαι) from the holy commandment. Spanish 'volverse atrás' and English 'turn back' both foreground the reversal rather than arrival, distinguishing this from ordinary return. RETURNING AND RESTORING en: to-turn-back | es: volverse-atrás | fr: retourner | de: zurueckkehren 2Pet 2:21

ὑποστόρνυμι G5291 V-IIA-3P (1×)

To spread under, lay down beneath; to strew cloaks or branches on the ground as a carpet of honor

This compound verb means to spread or lay something under or beneath—originally bedding or carpets, but extended to any act of spreading material on the ground. Luke 19:36 uses it during Jesus' entry into Jerusalem: people 'were spreading their cloaks on the road' before him as an act of homage. This gesture treated Jesus as royalty, making a carpet of honor for him to pass over. The imperfect tense suggests continuous action as he progressed.

(1×) In Luke 19:36, during Jesus' triumphal entry, 'as he went along, they were spreading their cloaks on the road.' The verb describes laying garments (Spanish 'extendían,' they were spreading; French 'étendre,' to spread) on the path as a spontaneous carpet of honor—treating Jesus as a king. This gesture of homage, combined with palm branches and messianic acclamation, signaled the crowd's recognition of Jesus' royal identity. The imperfect tense indicates ongoing action as the procession advanced. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: they-were-spreading | es: extendían | fr: étendre | de: ὑπεστρώννυον Luke 19:36

ὑποτᾰγή G5292 N-DFS (4×)

Submission, subjection, subordination; the act or posture of placing oneself under another's authority.

Denotes the voluntary or expected ordering of oneself under authority, whether divine, ecclesial, or domestic. In 2 Corinthians 9:13 Paul praises the Corinthians' 'submission' to the gospel as evidenced by their generosity. Galatians 2:5 records that Paul refused to yield 'in submission' to false brothers even for an hour, protecting gospel freedom. First Timothy 2:11 and 3:4 use it for quiet learning and household management respectively. The German 'Unterordnung' (under-ordering) and French 'soumission' both reveal the structural metaphor: this is about ordered placement within a recognized hierarchy, not mere passive obedience.

(4×) The act or posture of placing oneself under authority — whether willingly in response to the gospel (2 Cor 9:13), refused when it would compromise gospel truth (Gal 2:5), or practiced in learning and household contexts (1 Tim 2:11; 3:4). The German 'Unterordnung' (under-ordering) and French 'soumission' both highlight the structural, relational nature of this concept — it describes an ordered positioning within a recognized framework of authority, not mere passive compliance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: submission | es: sumisión | fr: soumission, ὑποταγῇ | de: Unterordnung 2Cor 9:13; Gal 2:5; 1Tim 2:11; 1Tim 3:4

ὑποτάσσω G5293 V-RIM/P-3S (38×)

To place under authority, subject, subordinate; in the middle/passive, to submit oneself or be subjected

Built from 'hypo' (under) and 'tasso' (arrange), this verb organizes one of the New Testament's central conversations about authority and order. In its middle voice, it describes the voluntary submission of believers to governing authorities (Rom 13:1), wives to husbands (Eph 5:22), and the young Jesus to his parents (Luke 2:51). Active uses portray God placing all things under Christ's feet (1 Cor 15:27; Eph 1:22). A theological passive in Romans 8:20 and Hebrews 2:8 describes creation itself as having been subjected – not by its own choice but by divine decree. Spanish 'someterse' versus 'sujetar' neatly mirrors the middle-active distinction; German 'unterwerfen' covers both with characteristic breadth.

1. submit oneself, be subject to (23×) The middle-voice core: voluntarily placing oneself under another's authority. Luke 2:51 shows Jesus 'submitting' to his parents; Romans 13:1 extends this to civic obedience; Ephesians 5:21-22 to mutual church submission. Spanish 'someterse' and French 'se soumettre' preserve the reflexive voluntariness. Even demons are 'subject to us' (Luke 10:17) – compelled yet framed in the middle voice. SUBJECTION AND AUTHORITY

en: Submit, are-subject, be-subject | es: Someteos, a-sujetarse, nos-sometemos | fr: se-soumettre, soumettre | de: unterwerfen, unterwirft-sich Luke 2:51; Luke 10:17; Luke 10:20; Rom 8:7; Rom 10:3

2. subject, subordinate (active causative) (9×) The active-causative sense: an agent placing someone under authority. God 'subjected all things under his feet' (1 Cor 15:27; Eph 1:22), and in Romans 8:20 creation was 'subjected to futility' by the one who subjected it. Spanish 'sujetar' in the active and German 'unterwerfen' capture the transitive force of divine sovereign arrangement. SUBJECTION AND AUTHORITY

en: He-subjected, having-subjected, he-subjected | es: que-sujetó, sometió, sujetar | fr: soumettre | de: unterwerfen Rom 8:20; 1Cor 15:27; 1Cor 15:28; Eph 1:22

3. be subjected (divine passive) (6×) The eschatological passive: being subjected by God's decree without the agent's willing participation. Romans 8:20 insists creation was subjected 'not willingly'; Hebrews 2:8 notes 'not yet' are all things visibly in subjection. Spanish 'fue sujetada' and French passive 'soumettre' mark this as the theologically loaded voice – the universe in ordered waiting. SUBJECTION AND AUTHORITY

en: are-subjected, have-been-subjected, having-been-subjected | es: fue-sujetada, habiéndosele-sometido, han-sido-sujetadas | fr: soumettre | de: unterwerfen Rom 8:20; 1Cor 15:27; 1Cor 15:28; Heb 2:8

ὑποτίθημι G5294 V-AIA-3P (2×)

to place under, lay down, suggest, propose, risk

This versatile verb means to place something under or beneath, and by extension to lay down, expose to danger, or put forward as a suggestion. Paul uses it to commend Prisca and Aquila who 'risked their necks' for his life—literally 'placed under' their lives for him. In 1 Timothy, it describes putting these instructions before the brethren or suggesting them. The core meaning of placing beneath extends to various contexts of exposure or presentation.

(2×) From classical usage for placing items physically underneath or metaphorically categorizing under a class, ὑποτίθημι extends to exposure and suggestion. Rom 16:4 praises Priscilla and Aquila who 'risked their own necks' (τὸν ἑαυτῶν τράχηλον ὑπέθηκαν) for Paul—literally 'placed under' their lives in danger. 1 Tim 4:6 instructs Timothy in 'putting these things before the brothers' (ταῦτα ὑποτιθέμενος), suggesting or reminding them of sound teaching. PLACING AND LAYING

en: laid-down, putting-before | es: exponiendo, expusieron | fr: riskieren, suggérer | de: riskieren Rom 16:4; 1Tim 4:6

ὑποτρέχω G5295 V-APA-NMP (1×)

To run under the lee of; to sail close to an island or land for shelter from wind and waves

This nautical term describes running a ship under the sheltered side of land or an island to escape the full force of wind and waves. During a storm, sailing in the lee (downwind side) of an island provides temporary protection. Acts 27:16 uses it during Paul's storm-tossed voyage: they 'ran under the lee of' a small island named Cauda, gaining brief respite to secure the ship. The term reflects technical sailing vocabulary preserved in Luke's detailed narrative.

(1×) In Acts 27:16, as the violent storm drives Paul's ship, Luke reports, 'Running under the lee of a small island called Cauda, we were able with difficulty to secure the ship's boat.' The participle describes sailing (Spanish 'habiendo corrido bajo,' having run under; French 'soumettre,' somewhat obscure) into the sheltered zone on the downwind side of the island, where the land blocks the wind and waves. This temporary protection allowed the crew to pull in the lifeboat—a critical task they couldn't perform in open water. RUNNING AND RACING

en: having-run-under-the-lee | es: habiendo-corrido-bajo | fr: soumettre | de: ὑποδραμόντες Acts 27:16

ὑποτύπ-ωσις G5296 N-AFS (2×)

a pattern, example, model, outline

This term denotes a sketch, outline, or pattern to be followed. In technical writing it could mean a rough draft as opposed to finished work. Paul uses it twice in the Pastoral Epistles to describe exemplary patterns: once referring to himself as a pattern of Christ's patience for future believers, and once urging Timothy to hold to the pattern of sound words Paul taught him. The word emphasizes a normative model worthy of imitation.

(2×) From classical usage for sketches or outlines (opposed to finished work, ἐξεργασία), ὑποτύπωσις denotes a pattern or model. 1 Tim 1:16 presents Paul as a 'pattern' (ὑποτύπωσιν) of Christ's perfect patience toward future believers—an exemplary case study. 2 Tim 1:13 urges Timothy to 'hold the pattern of sound words' (ὑποτύπωσιν ἔχε ὑγιαινόντων λόγων) received from Paul—a normative outline or model of orthodox teaching to preserve and follow. EXAMPLES AND TYPES en: a-pattern, pattern | es: Modelo, ejemplo | fr: ὑποτύπωσιν | de: Vorbild 1Tim 1:16; 2Tim 1:13

ὑποφέρω G5297 V-PIA-3S (3×)

to endure, bear up under; to sustain hardship or burden without giving way

This compound verb (hupo- "under" + pherō "carry") means to carry a load placed upon you, especially to endure or bear up under difficulty. The image is of bearing weight from underneath—supporting what presses down on you. Classical Greek used it for literal load-bearing and metaphorical endurance of hardships. The New Testament uses emphasize patient endurance of suffering, whether persecution or general trials, without collapsing or abandoning faith. It's active perseverance rather than passive resignation—continuing to carry what's been placed on you.

(3×) First Corinthians 10:13 assures believers that no temptation is too great and God provides a way of escape "that you may be able to bear it" (hupophérein)—endurance is possible through divine help. Second Timothy 3:11 catalogs Paul's sufferings and then celebrates "what persecutions I endured" (hupēnenka, perfect tense)—completed endurance that proved God's deliverance. First Peter 2:19 commends it as grace when someone "bears up under" (hupophérei) sorrows while suffering unjustly because of conscience toward God—enduring for divine rather than human reasons. The Spanish soportar/soporta/soporté, French supporter, and German ertragen all convey the bearing/enduring sense. The term emphasizes sustained capacity to carry suffering without collapse, enabled by divine strength and motivated by godward conscience. ENDURE TOLERATE en: I-endured, bears-up-under, to-endure | es: soporta, soportar, soporté | fr: supporter, ὑπήνεγκα, ὑποφέρει | de: ertragen 1Cor 10:13; 2Tim 3:11; 1Pet 2:19

ὑποχωρ-έω G5298 V-PPA-NMS (2×)

to withdraw, retire, go back, retreat

This verb means to go back, retire, or withdraw from a place or situation. Both Gospel uses describe Jesus withdrawing from crowds or situations to seek solitude. In Luke 5, after healing a leper and facing growing crowds, Jesus withdrew to desolate places to pray. In Luke 9, he withdrew from Herod's territory after the feeding of the 5,000. The pattern shows Jesus' rhythm of ministry and withdrawal for communion with the Father.

(2×) Classical ὑποχωρέω described retiring or withdrawing (often in military contexts or giving way). Luke employs it for Jesus' strategic withdrawals: Luke 5:16 notes he 'would withdraw to desolate places and pray' (ὑποχωρῶν ἐν ταῖς ἐρήμοις), creating space for prayer amid mounting popularity. Luke 9:10 has Jesus withdrawing privately (ὑπεχώρησεν) after the 5,000's feeding—both passages showing Jesus' deliberate rhythm of public ministry and private renewal. WITHDRAW DEPART

en: he-withdrew, withdrawing | es: retirándose, se-retiró | fr: se-retirer | de: ὑπεχώρησεν, ὑποχωρῶν Luke 5:16; Luke 9:10

ὑπωπι-άζω G5299 V-PIA-1S (2×)

to strike under the eye, give a black eye; metaphorically: to discipline harshly, wear out with demands

Literally meaning to strike someone under the eye (giving a black eye), this verb developed metaphorical uses for harsh treatment. Jesus uses it in the parable of the persistent widow who keeps bothering the unjust judge, saying she will 'wear him out' with her constant coming. Paul employs it for his rigorous self-discipline, treating his body harshly like a boxer pummeling an opponent, lest he be disqualified after preaching to others.

(2×) From the literal sense 'strike under the eye' (giving a black eye), ὑπωπιάζω extends metaphorically to harsh treatment. Luke 18:5 has the persistent widow threatening to 'wear out' the judge (ὑπωπιάζῃ με) with her relentless coming—either exhausting him or potentially shaming him publicly. 1 Cor 9:27 describes Paul 'disciplining' his body harshly (ὑπωπιάζω), using boxing imagery of striking blows, to maintain self-control and avoid disqualification after preaching to others. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: I-discipline, she-wears-out | es: golpeo, me-agote | fr: frapper-sous-l'œil, maltraiter | de: ὑπωπιάζω, ὑπωπιάζῃ Luke 18:5; 1Cor 9:27

ὗς G5300 N-NFS (1×)

A sow, female pig; an unclean animal in Jewish law, used metaphorically for those who return to defilement

This is the common Greek word for a female pig or sow. In Jewish law, pigs were quintessentially unclean animals, forbidden as food and symbolizing defilement. In 2 Peter 2:22, the sow appears in a proverb warning about apostates: like 'a sow that is washed' returning to wallow in mud, false teachers return to the pollution they seemed to have escaped. The image emphasizes innate nature —the sow's cleanliness was only external and temporary.

(1×) In 2 Pet 2:22, Peter applies a proverb to false teachers: 'The sow, washed, returns to wallowing in the mire.' The image (Spanish 'cerda,' sow; German 'Schwein,' pig) depicts someone whose cleansing was superficial—washing a pig doesn't change its nature, so it returns to mud. The point is that apostates who seemed to escape defilement through Christ have now returned to their former pollution, proving their transformation was never genuine. The sow's return reveals what it always was: an unclean creature whose brief cleanliness was imposed, not innate. PIG SWINE

en: sow | es: Cerda | fr: ׳ץ | de: Schwein 2Pet 2:22

ὕσσωπος G5301 N-GFS (2×)

hyssop, a plant used in purification rituals (possibly Origanum hirtum)

Hyssop was a plant used throughout Scripture for ritual purification and sprinkling. The exact botanical identification is debated (possibly marjoram or Syrian oregano rather than modern hyssop), but it had bushy branches suitable for sprinkling liquids. In John's Gospel, a sponge soaked with sour wine is put on hyssop and lifted to Jesus on the cross. Hebrews mentions Moses using hyssop to sprinkle blood during the covenant ceremony. Both recall Passover and purification rituals.

(2×) Hebrew אֵזוֹב rendered as ὕσσωπος designates the purification plant (possibly Origanum hirtum). John 19:29 describes the wine-soaked sponge placed 'on hyssop' (ὑσσώπῳ) and lifted to Jesus —recalling Passover's hyssop for blood application and adding symbolic depth to crucifixion details. Heb 9:19 mentions Moses sprinkling blood 'with hyssop' in covenant ratification, linking old covenant purification rites to Christ's superior sacrifice. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: hyssop, on-hyssop | es: en-hisopo, hisopo | fr: Ysop, hysope | de: Ysop John 19:29; Heb 9:19

ὑστερ-έω G5302 V-PIM/P-3P (16×)

To lack, fall short, suffer want, or run out; to be deficient in what is needed or expected, whether materially or morally.

A verb describing insufficiency in its many shades — from lacking a specific thing, to falling short of a standard, to enduring real privation. When Jesus asks the disciples in Luke 22:35 whether they lacked anything on their mission, the word captures the absence of concrete necessities. Yet in Romans 3:23, Paul elevates it to a moral plane: all have fallen short of the glory of God. Spanish captures this breadth well, ranging from 'carecer' (to lack) to 'estar destituido' (to be destitute), while French similarly moves between 'manquer' and 'être inférieur.' At the wedding in Cana (John 2:3), the word describes wine physically running out — a supply exhausted — which sets the stage for Jesus' first sign.

1. lack, be deficient (8×) The core sense of lacking or being without something needed. Across languages the translations converge on straightforward deficiency: Spanish 'carecer,' French 'manquer,' German 'mangeln.' In Matt 19:20 and Mark 10:21, the rich young man asks what he still lacks; in 1 Cor 1:7 Paul assures the Corinthians they are not lacking in any spiritual gift. The evidence consistently points to an objective shortfall in possessions, provisions, or attributes. LACK AND DEFICIENCY en: did-you-lack, do-I-lack, fall-short | es: carecemos, carezcáis, están-destituidos | fr: mangeln, manquer, être-inférieur | de: mangeln, ὑστερήσατε, ὑστερῶ Matt 19:20; Mark 10:21; Luke 22:35; Rom 3:23; 1Cor 1:7

2. fall short of a standard (4×) A comparative or aspirational sense: failing to reach a standard or measure. Paul twice uses this when comparing himself to the 'super-apostles' (2 Cor 11:5; 12:11), where Spanish renders it 'haber sido inferior' and French 'être inférieur.' In Heb 4:1 the author warns lest anyone seem to have fallen short of entering God's rest, and Heb 12:15 cautions against falling short of the grace of God. The emphasis shifts from mere absence to failure relative to a benchmark. LACK AND DEFICIENCY

en: I-fell-short, falling-short, to-have-fallen-short | es: fui-inferior, haber-quedado-atrás, haber-sido-inferior | fr: mangeln, être-inférieur | de: mangeln 2Cor 11:5; 2Cor 12:11; Heb 4:1; Heb 12:15

3. suffer want, be in need (3×) The experiential sense of suffering want or enduring need. Here the person does not simply lack an item but lives in a condition of privation. The prodigal son in Luke 15:14 'began to be in need' after squandering everything, and Paul in 2 Cor 11:9 recalls his own hardship. Spanish 'padecer necesidad' (to suffer need) and the catalog of deprivations in Heb 11:37 underscore that this sense describes ongoing, felt hardship rather than a momentary gap. LACK AND DEFICIENCY

en: having-need, lacking, to-be-in-need | es: a-padecer-necesidad, habiendo-tenido-necesidad, necesitados | fr: mangeln, manquer, être-inférieur | de: mangeln, ὑστερεῖσθαι Luke 15:14; 2Cor 11:9; Heb 11:37

4. run out, become exhausted (1×) A supply-oriented sense: of a resource giving out or becoming exhausted. Used only at John 2:3, where the wine at the wedding feast ran out. Spanish 'habiendo faltado' and French 'manquer' both treat the wine as a subject that failed, distinguishing this from personal lack. The context — a finite supply consumed entirely — makes this sense distinct from the human experience of deficiency. LACK AND DEFICIENCY en: having-run-out | es: habiendo-faltado | fr: manquer | de: mangeln John 2:3

ὑστέρ-ημα G5303 N-GNS (9×)

Lack, deficiency, want; that which is missing or falls short, whether material need or spiritual incompleteness.

Hysterema denotes a shortfall or deficiency – the gap between what is present and what is needed. It appears in contexts of both material poverty and relational or spiritual lack. The poor widow gives out of her hysterema, her actual want (Luke 21:4), while Paul speaks of supplying what is lacking in the Corinthians' service (1 Cor 16:17; 2 Cor 9:12) and of the mutual supply between abundance and deficiency (2 Cor 8:14). The Spanish carencia/falta and French manque consistently render it as shortage or insufficiency, confirming a unified semantic field centered on 'that which is still needed.'

lack, deficiency (9×) A state of lack, deficiency, or want – the concrete shortfall between what one has and what is required. This may be material poverty, as when the widow casts in all her living out of her hysterema (Luke 21:4), or relational absence, as when the Corinthians' presence supplies what was lacking (1 Cor 16:17; Phil 2:30). Paul also uses it for the reciprocal balancing of surplus and need (2 Cor 8:14) and the filling up of what is behind of the afflictions of Christ (Col 1:24). The multilingual evidence (spa carencia/falta, fra ce-qui-manque/manque, eng lack/needs) uniformly points to a single concept of deficiency requiring supply. LACK WANT POVERTY

en: lack, lacks, needs | es: carencia, carencias, falta | fr: ce-qui-manque, manque, ὑστέρημα | de: ὑστέρημά, ὑστέρημα, ὑστερήματα Luke 21:4; 1Cor 16:17; 2Cor 8:14; 2Cor 9:12

ὑστέρ-ημα G5304 N-GFS (2×)

lack, need, deficiency, what is lacking

This noun denotes a lack, deficiency, or what is missing. It can refer to material poverty or any shortage. Mark uses it to describe the poor widow who gave from her poverty—literally 'from her lack.' Paul employs it in Philippians when discussing his contentment, having learned to be satisfied whether in abundance or in want. The word emphasizes the state of need or insufficiency.

(2×) The noun ὑστέρημα (related to ὑστερέω, 'fall short, lack') denotes deficiency or need. Mark 12:44 describes the widow giving 'from her poverty' (ἐκ τῆς ὑστερήσεως αὐτῆς)—literally her lack or want—making her two coins more significant than the rich's surplus. Phil 4:11 (variant reading: some have ὑστέρησιν) connects to Paul's learned contentment 'in whatever state'—including states of need versus abundance. LACK WANT POVERTY

en: lack, poverty | es: escasez, necesidad | fr: manque, ὑστέρησιν | de: Mangel
Mark 12:44; Phil 4:11

ὕστερον G5305 Adv (11×)

Later, afterward, finally — a temporal adverb marking subsequent or concluding position in a sequence of events

The adverb ὕστερον (hysteron) marks what comes later, afterward, or last in a sequence. In Matthew's parables it structures narrative climax: the second son 'afterward' repented and went (Matt 21:29), the religious leaders did not 'afterward' believe (21:32), and 'last of all' the owner sent his son (21:37). The foolish virgins arrive 'afterward' to find the door shut (Matt 25:11), and two false witnesses 'at last' came forward at Jesus' trial (Matt 26:60). The word often carries a note of finality or missed opportunity — what comes late may come too late. Spanish 'después' and French 'ensuite' both convey this sequential positioning.

later (11×) A temporal adverb indicating subsequent or concluding position in a sequence. Jesus fasts then 'afterward' hungers (Matt 4:2). In parables it marks narrative climax: one son 'afterward' repents (Matt 21:29), the owner sends his son 'last of all' (21:37), and the foolish virgins arrive 'afterward' to a shut door (Matt 25:11). Often carries a note of finality or missed opportunity. Spanish 'después' and German 'zuletzt' cover its range. LAST AND FINAL en: afterward, last, later | es: Después, después, por-último | fr: ensuite, plus-tard | de: spaeter, zuletzt Matt 4:2; Matt 21:29; Matt 21:32; Matt 21:37; Matt 22:27

ὕστερος G5306 Adj-DMP-C (1×)

Later, subsequent, belonging to a time following; contrasted with earlier or former times

This comparative adjective means 'later' in time or sequence—coming after, subsequent to an earlier point. In 1 Timothy 4:1, Paul warns that 'in later times' some will depart from the faith by following deceiving spirits. The adjective points to a future period following Paul's present, when apostasy will increase. The term is temporal, indicating sequence: what comes after the current moment, belonging to subsequent ages or generations.

(1×) In 1 Tim 4:1, Paul prophesies: 'The Spirit expressly says that in later times some will depart from the faith.' The adjective indicates times subsequent to (Spanish 'últimos,' last; French transliteration; German 'später,' later) Paul's era—the unfolding future of the church age when apostasy and false teaching will intensify. The context describes doctrines of demons and hypocritical lies that will seduce some away from sound doctrine. 'Later times' doesn't specify how much later, but signals a deterioration Paul sees coming as the age progresses. LAST AND FINAL en: later | es: últimos | fr: ὑστέροις | de: spaeter 1Tim 4:1

ὑφαν-τός G5307 Adj-NMS (1×)

Woven, made by weaving; describing cloth produced on a loom rather than sewn from pieces

This adjective describes something made by weaving—fabric produced on a loom as a single piece rather than cut and sewn together. John 19:23 uses it to describe Jesus' tunic during the crucifixion: it was 'woven from top to bottom in one piece,' without seams. This detail explains why the soldiers chose to cast lots for it rather than tearing it into shares—a seamless garment would lose value if divided. The term emphasizes craftsmanship and value.

(1×) In John 19:23, the soldiers dividing Jesus' garments discover his tunic was 'woven in one piece from top to bottom'—seamless (Spanish 'tejida,' woven; French 'tissé,' woven; German 'gewebt,' woven). Rather than being assembled from cut pieces, it was woven whole on a loom, making it more valuable and explaining their decision to gamble for it intact rather than tearing it. The detail may also evoke the high priest's seamless robe, subtly reinforcing Jesus' priestly identity even in his degradation. LINEN AND FABRIC
en: woven | es: tejida | fr: tissé | de: gewebt John 19:23

ὑψηλός G5308 Adj-NNS (12×)

High, lofty, elevated in space; figuratively proud, haughty, or arrogant in attitude.

In its literal sense, this adjective marks the dramatic high places of the Gospel narratives – the exceedingly high mountain where Satan shows Jesus all the kingdoms of the world (Matt 4:8), and the high mountain of the Transfiguration (Matt 17:1, Mark 9:2). Spanish 'alto' and French 'haut' reflect the spatial meaning directly. But Scripture regularly pivots from physical height to moral pride: Luke 16:15 warns that 'what is exalted among men is an abomination before God,' and Romans 12:16 counsels believers not to set their minds on 'high things' but to associate with the lowly.

1. high, lofty (physical or spatial) (9×) Physically elevated, tall, or spatially high. Used predominantly of mountains in key narrative moments: the mountain of temptation (Matt 4:8, Luke 4:5), the mount of Transfiguration (Matt 17:1, Mark 9:2), and God raising Israel to greatness during the Egyptian sojourn (Acts 13:17). Spanish 'alto' and 'alturas,' French 'haut,' and German 'hoch' all converge on the straightforward spatial meaning. The high arm of God in Acts 13:17 begins to shade toward metaphor but retains the image of physical elevation. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: heights, high, higher-than | es: alto, alto„ alturas | fr: haut | de: hoch, ὑψηλοῦ, ὑψηλὸν Matt 4:8; Matt 17:1; Mark 9:2; Luke 4:5; Acts 13:17

2. proud, haughty, exalted (figurative/moral) (3×) Figuratively high in the sense of proud, haughty, or morally arrogant. Paul warns Roman believers not to be 'high-minded' (Rom 11:20) and not to aspire to 'high things' (Rom 12:16, ta hypsela). Jesus declares in Luke 16:15 that what is 'exalted' among humans is detestable to God. The Spanish rendering 'altivas cosas' (haughty things) and 'altivamente' (haughtily) captures the moral overtone absent from the spatial sense. This shift from physical height to spiritual pride is a well-attested pattern across biblical Greek and Hebrew alike. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: exalted, high-things | es: altivamente, altivas-cosas, exaltado | fr: haut | de: hoch, ὑψηλὸν Luke 16:15; Rom 11:20; Rom 12:16

ὑψηλο-φρονέω G5309 V-PNA (1×)

To be high-minded, think arrogantly; to have a proud, haughty attitude focused on earthly advantages

This compound verb combines 'high' with 'think' to mean being high-minded or arrogant, thinking too highly of oneself, especially because of wealth or status. In 1 Timothy 6:17, Paul instructs the rich 'not to be high-minded' or to set their hope on uncertain riches but on God. Wealth tempts people to arrogance and self-sufficiency, forgetting dependence on God. The verb warns against the proud mentality that riches foster. Translations use 'high-minded,' 'arrogant,' or 'haughty.'

(1×) In 1 Tim 6:17, Paul charges Timothy to instruct the wealthy: 'not to be high-minded, nor to set their hope on the uncertainty of riches but on God.' The infinitive describes the arrogant attitude (Spanish 'ser altivos,' to be haughty; German 'hochmütig sein,' to be high-minded) that wealth breeds—thinking oneself superior, self-sufficient, above others. Riches tempt people to trust in themselves and their resources rather than God. Paul's command combats this pride by redirecting trust from uncertain wealth to the faithful God. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: to-be-high-minded | es: ser-altivos | fr: ὑψηλοφρονεῖν | de: hochmuetig-sein 1Tim 6:17

ὕψιστος G5310 Adj-GMS-S (13×)

Most High, as divine title; highest, as superlative of place or praise

The superlative adjective ὕψιστος serves two closely related but distinguishable functions in the NT. As a substantive with the article, it is one of the great divine titles – 'the Most High' (ὁ ὕψιστος) – used by angels, demons, and prophets alike to name God in his supreme exaltation. Gabriel announces that Jesus will be called 'Son of the Most High' (Luke 1:32), and the Gerasene demoniac cries out 'Son of the Most High God' (Mark 5:7). As an adjective in the doxological phrase ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις, it designates 'the highest' heavens or the highest realm of praise – 'Hosanna in the highest!' (Matt 21:9) and 'Glory to God in the highest' (Luke 2:14). French preserves both: 'Tres-Haut' (title) versus 'le plus haut' (spatial superlative).

1. Most High (9×) A divine title: 'the Most High,' designating God in his supreme sovereignty and transcendence. Used as a substantive, often with the article, it names God in contexts of prophetic declaration, angelic announcement, and even demonic recognition. Luke employs it heavily: the child will be 'Son of the Most High' (1:32), the Holy Spirit as 'power of the Most High' (1:35), John the Baptist as 'prophet of the Most High' (1:76), and believers as 'sons of the Most High' (6:35). Mark 5:7 records the Gerasene demoniac's cry 'Son of the Most High God,' and Acts 16:17 echoes it. The title transcends human categories of rank, placing God at the apex of all being. Multilingual glosses uniformly render it as a proper divine epithet: 'Altisimo' (Spanish), 'Tres-Haut' (French), 'Hoechster' (German). MOST HIGH DIVINE
en: Most-High, of-Most-High | es: Altísimo, del-Altísimo | fr: Très-Haut, le-plus-haut, très-haut | de: Hoechster, höchste Mark 5:7; Luke 1:32; Luke 1:35; Luke 1:76; Luke 6:35

2. highest (4×) The spatial or doxological superlative 'highest,' used adjectively to designate the highest heavens, the highest realm of glory, or the highest pitch of praise. It appears exclusively in the liturgical acclamation ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις: 'Hosanna in the highest!' at the triumphal entry (Matt 21:9, Mark 11:10, Luke 19:38) and 'Glory to God in the highest' at Christ's birth (Luke 2:14). Here ὕψιστος modifies an implied 'places' or 'heavens' rather than serving as a divine name. Spanish shifts to 'alturas/altisimos' (heights), and the overall gloss pattern favors spatial or superlative language over the personal title – 'the highest' rather than 'the Most High.' MOST HIGH DIVINE
en: highest, the-highest | es: alturas, altísimos, las-alturas | fr: très-haut | de: Hoechster, höchste Matt 21:9; Mark 11:10; Luke 2:14; Luke 19:38

ὕψος G5311 N-NNS (6×)

Height or high place, either spatial elevation or metaphorical exaltation denoting honor and lofty status.
In most New Testament occurrences, this noun refers to literal height or an elevated heavenly place — the 'dayspring from on high' visiting God's people (Luke 1:78), power from 'on high' at Pentecost (Luke 24:49), the immeasurable dimensions of Christ's love including its height (Eph 3:18), and Christ ascending 'on high' leading captivity captive (Eph 4:8). But James uses it in a strikingly different way: the lowly brother should 'glory in his exaltation' (Jas 1:9), where height becomes a metaphor for dignified, honored status. The multilingual evidence confirms the shift: Spanish moves from 'altura' and 'lo alto' (physical height) to 'exaltación' (exaltation), and Hindi from 'unchai' (height) to 'unche pad' (high position).

1. height, high place (5×) Literal height, a high or elevated place, often referring to the heavenly realm. Luke speaks of the dawn visiting 'from on high' (Luke 1:78) and power coming 'from on high' (Luke 24:49). Paul includes 'height' among the cosmic dimensions of Christ's love (Eph 3:18) and quotes the Psalm about ascending 'on high' (Eph 4:8). Revelation measures the city's height (Rev 21:16). Spanish 'altura / lo alto,' Hindi 'unchai,' and Arabic 'al-uluww' all converge on spatial elevation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-height, height | es: altura, lo-alto | fr: hauteur | de: Hoehe, ὕψους Luke 1:78; Luke 24:49; Eph 3:18; Eph 4:8; Rev 21:16

2. exaltation, lofty status (1×) Metaphorical exaltation, lofty status or honor bestowed on someone of low earthly standing. James urges the humble brother to 'boast in his exaltation' (Jas 1:9), where the word denotes dignity and divine honor rather than physical elevation. Spanish 'exaltación' and Hindi 'unche pad' (high position) mark the shift from spatial to social or spiritual height. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: exaltation | es: exaltación | fr: hauteur | de: Hoehe Jas 1:9

ὑψόω G5312 V-AIA-3S (20×)

To lift up, raise high, exalt; physically of being raised on a cross, and metaphorically of being elevated in honor or status.
Hupsoo is a vertical word – it always moves upward, whether the movement is physical or metaphorical. John uses it with deliberate double meaning for the crucifixion: 'as Moses lifted up the serpent, so must the Son of Man be lifted up' (John 3:14), where the shameful elevation on the cross becomes the moment of divine glorification. The Synoptics prefer the moral axis: 'whoever exalts himself will be humbled' (Matt 23:12; Luke 14:11; 18:14). Acts proclaims that God exalted Jesus to his right hand (Acts 2:33; 5:31). Across all its uses, hupsoo insists that true height belongs to God alone.

1. exalt in status or honor (13×) To exalt in status, honor, or power – the most frequent NT sense. God exalts the humble and brings down the proud (Luke 1:52); Capernaum is asked whether it will be exalted to heaven (Matt 11:23); God exalted Jesus to his right hand (Acts 2:33; 5:31; Phil 2:9). Spanish 'exaltar' and French 'exalter' both track this metaphorical elevation. Thirteen occurrences use hupsoo for divine or social elevation, making it the word's center of gravity. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: exalted, having-been-exalted, he-may-exalt | es: exalte, exaltó, fuerais-exaltados | fr: exalter, élever | de: erhoehen, erhöht Matt 11:23; Matt 23:12; Luke 1:52; Luke 10:15

2. lift up physically/spatially (5×) To lift up physically or quasi-physically, especially of the Son of Man being raised on the cross. John 3:14 establishes the typology with the bronze serpent; John 8:28 and 12:32-34 develop it, where 'being lifted up from the earth' means both crucifixion and ascension. Spanish shifts to 'levantar' (to raise), and German uses 'erhoehen' for both senses, but the Johannine double meaning – shame becoming glory – is unique to this cluster. Five occurrences. LIFTING AND EXALTING
en: I-am-lifted-up, lifted-up, to-be-lifted-up | es: levantéis, levantó, ser-levantado | fr: élever | de: erhoehen John 3:14; John 8:28; John 12:32; John 12:34

3. exalt oneself (2×) To exalt oneself – the reflexive sense, always with a warning. 'Whoever exalts himself will be humbled' appears in Matt 23:12, Luke 14:11, and 18:14. Spanish 'el que se exalta' makes the reflexive explicit. Only two occurrences carry this self-directed sense, but the reversal pattern – exalt yourself, be humbled – is among the most memorable teachings of Jesus. LIFTING AND EXALTING en: exalting | es: que-se-exalta | fr: élever | de: erhöht Luke 14:11; Luke 18:14

ὕψ-ωμα G5313 N-ANS (2×)

height, high position; metaphorically: exaltation, lofty thing
This term denotes physical height or elevation, and metaphorically, exaltation or anything that exalts itself. Paul uses it in Romans' famous declaration that nothing in creation—including height or depth—can separate believers from God's love. In 2 Corinthians, he employs it for every lofty thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God, which must be torn down. The word captures both spatial and prideful dimensions of height.

(2×) From classical usage for elevation or height (including astronomical exaltation), ὕψωμα appears in Rom 8:39's cosmic catalog: neither 'height nor depth' (ὕψωμα οὔτε βάθος) can separate from God's love—likely spatial/cosmological powers. 2 Cor 10:5 uses it metaphorically for 'every lofty thing' (πᾶν ὕψωμα) exalting itself against knowing God—proud arguments or strongholds requiring demolition. The semantic range spans physical elevation to arrogant self-exaltation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: height, lofty-thing | es: altivez, altura | fr: hauteur | de: Hoehe Rom 8:39; 2Cor 10:5

φάγος G5314 N-NMS (2×)

a glutton, one who eats excessively

This simple noun designates a glutton or excessive eater. Both Gospel uses appear in the same accusation Jesus quotes: his critics called him 'a glutton and a drunkard, a friend of tax collectors and sinners.' The charge was false but revealed the religious establishment's contempt for Jesus' table fellowship with outcasts. Unlike John the Baptist's asceticism, Jesus' eating and drinking with sinners scandalized the self-righteous.

(2×) The noun φάγος (from φαγεῖν, 'to eat') denotes a glutton. Both occurrences (Matt 11:19, Luke 7:34) quote the identical slander against Jesus: 'Behold, a glutton and drunkard' (φάγος καὶ οἰνοπότης)—contrasting him unfavorably with John's asceticism. The false accusation revealed critics' rejection: John was too austere (demon-possessed), Jesus too convivial (glutton). Either way, they refused God's messengers. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: a-glutton | es: glotón | fr: mangeur | de: φάγος Matt 11:19; Luke 7:34

φᾰ́γεῖν G5315 V-AIA-1P (93×)

Eat, consume food — the aorist form of the verb for eating, covering literal meals, figurative consumption, and eschatological feasting

Phagein is the aorist infinitive (from the defective verb whose present is esthio) used throughout the New Testament for the act of eating. It appears in accounts of everyday meals, miraculous feedings (Matt 14:16, 20; 15:32-38), controversies over what is lawful to eat (Matt 12:4; Mark 2:26), and invitations to eschatological feasting ('that you may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom,' Luke 22:30). Jesus' own eating with sinners and tax collectors becomes a hallmark of his ministry (Matt 9:11; Luke 15:2). Spanish 'comer,' French 'manger,' and German 'essen' all render this basic human action straightforwardly.

eat, consume food (93×) To eat or consume food, used of literal eating across all grammatical forms — indicative, subjunctive, imperative, infinitive, future, and participial. The 93 occurrences span ordinary meals, miraculous feedings (Matt 14:16, 20; Mark 6:37), disputes over lawful food (Matt 12:4; Mark 7:3-5), fasting and its breaking, and eschatological banqueting (Luke 22:30; Rev 2:7). Spanish 'comer,' French 'manger,' and German 'essen' all render the action simply, though in the Gospels the act of eating frequently becomes a locus of theological controversy — who eats, with whom, and what. EATING AND CONSUMING en: to-eat | es: a-comer, comer, de-comer | fr: manger | de: essen, isst Matt 12:4; Matt 14:16; Matt 14:20; Matt 15:20

φαίνω G5316 V-AIP-3S (31×)

To shine, give light; to appear or become visible; to seem or have the appearance of Phaino holds together light, visibility, and seeming in a single verb, and the New Testament exploits all three dimensions. The Prologue of John declares that the light 'shines in the darkness' (John 1:5), while Matthew's narrative voice uses the same word for the star that 'appeared' to the Magi (Matt 2:7) and for hypocrites who 'appear' righteous outwardly (Matt 6:16). Spanish neatly differentiates these strands: 'brilla' for shining, 'apareció' for manifestation, 'parece' for seeming. The underlying image is always something coming into the field of perception, whether as radiant energy, visible presence, or outward impression.

1. appear, become visible (13×) To become visible or manifest, describing persons, objects, or phenomena coming into view. The angel 'appeared' to Joseph in a dream (Matt 1:20), the star 'appeared' (Matt 2:7), and the weeds 'appeared' among the wheat (Matt 13:26). Spanish 'apareció' and German 'erscheint' consistently mark this as genuine manifestation rather than mere impression. APPEAR SEEM SHINE

en: appeared, appearing, he-appeared | es: aparecerá, apareciendo, apareció | fr: apparaître, briller, scheinen | de: erscheint, scheinen Matt 1:20; Matt 2:7; Matt 9:33; Matt 13:26; Matt 24:30

2. seem, have appearance of (9×) To seem or give an outward impression that may or may not match inner reality. Jesus warns against fasting to 'appear' pious before others (Matt 6:16, 18), and the Pharisees 'appear' righteous on the outside (Matt 23:27-28). Spanish 'parece' versus 'aparece' captures the subtle shift: here the verb signals surface appearance, often with ironic or critical overtones. APPEAR SEEM SHINE

en: appear, appears, does-it-seem | es: aparece, parece, parecen | fr: apparaître | de: erscheint, scheinen Matt 2:13; Matt 2:19; Matt 6:5; Matt 6:16; Matt 6:18

3. shine, give light (9×) To shine or emit light, whether physically or metaphorically. John 1:5 proclaims the light 'shines' in the darkness, John 5:35 calls the Baptist a lamp that 'was shining,' and Philippians 2:15 calls believers to 'shine as lights in the world.' Spanish 'brilla/alumbrando' and French 'briller' distinguish this radiance sense from the appearance senses, anchoring it in the imagery of cosmic and moral illumination. APPEAR SEEM SHINE

en: might-shine, shines, shining | es: alumbrando, alumbren, brilla | fr: apparaître, scheinen | de: scheinen John 1:5; John 5:35; Phil 2:15; 2Pet 1:19; 1John 2:8

Φάλεκ G5317 N-GMS (1×)

Peleg, an ancestor of Jesus in Luke's genealogy; his name means 'division' (Genesis 10-11)

This is the indeclinable Greek form of the Hebrew name Peleg, a post-flood patriarch mentioned in Genesis 10-11. His name in Hebrew means 'division,' explained in Genesis as referring to the division of languages and peoples at Babel during his lifetime. Luke 3:35 includes Peleg in Jesus' genealogy, tracing the line from Adam through Abraham. The name connects Jesus to the early genealogies that track humanity's dispersion and God's election of Abraham's line.

(1×) In Luke 3:35, Luke traces Jesus' ancestry backward through Abraham to Adam, including 'Eber, the son of Shelah, the son of Cainan, the son of Arphaxad, the son of Shem' and earlier 'Peleg.' The name (consistent across translations) identifies the patriarch in whose days 'the earth was divided'—traditionally understood as the division of languages at Babel (Genesis 10:25). Including Peleg roots Jesus' lineage in the ancient genealogies that connect post-flood humanity to the patriarchs and ultimately to Adam. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Phalek | es: Phálek | fr: Phalek | de: Φάλεκ Luke 3:35

φᾰ́νερός G5318 Adj-NNP (18×)

Visible, manifest, openly known; in Paul, 'outward' as opposed to what is hidden or inward.

From the verb phainō ('to shine, appear'), phaneros describes what is plainly visible or openly known. Mark uses it of Jesus' fame becoming 'manifest' to Herod (Mark 6:14), and the Synoptic parables insist that nothing hidden will fail to become phaneron (Mark 4:22; Luke 8:17). Paul deploys the word extensively — the works of the flesh are 'evident' (Gal 5:19), and his imprisonment has become 'known' throughout the praetorian guard (Phil 1:13). A distinctive Pauline use in Romans 2:28 contrasts 'outward' Jewishness (en tō phanerō) with true circumcision of the heart, a nuance Spanish captures as 'visible' versus the deeper, hidden reality.

1. manifest, evident, known (16×) Plainly visible, openly known, clearly evident to perception or understanding. This is the dominant sense across sixteen occurrences, used of secrets that will be revealed (Mark 4:22; Luke 8:17), of Jesus' identity becoming widely known (Mark 3:12; 6:14), and of spiritual realities that are self-evident (Gal 5:19; 1 John 3:10). Spanish alternates between 'manifiesto' and 'evidente,' French uses 'manifeste,' and German 'offenbar' — all consistently pointing to open, unconcealed knowledge. MANIFEST AND EVIDENT

en: evident, known, manifest | es: evidente, lo-manifiesto, manifiesta | fr: manifeste | de: offenbar Matt 12:16; Mark 3:12; Mark 4:22; Mark 6:14; Luke 8:17

2. outward, external (2×) Outward, external, pertaining to what is visible on the surface as opposed to what is inward or hidden. This specialized use appears in Romans 2:28, where Paul argues that 'the one who is a Jew en tō phanerō' — outwardly, in visible fleshcircumcision — is not the true Jew. The contrast with the hidden (en tō kryptō) dimension gives phaneros a spatial, almost physical nuance that the broader 'manifest' sense does not carry. Spanish 'visible' and German 'offenbar' both highlight the external-versus-internal polarity. MANIFEST AND EVIDENT

en: outward | es: visible | fr: manifeste | de: offenbar Rom 2:28

φᾰνερ-όω G5319 V-APP-GMS (49×)

Make manifest, reveal, disclose; appear visibly — of truth, persons, or divine purposes brought to light

At the heart of phaneroo is the movement from hiddenness to visibility. The passive forms dominate the NT, describing how God's righteousness has been 'made manifest' apart from the law (Rom 3:21) and how Christ 'appeared' to the disciples after the resurrection (John 21:14). The active voice reserves agency for God or Christ: Jesus 'manifested his glory' at Cana (John 2:11) and 'made known' the Father's name (John 17:6). Spanish distinguishes 'fue manifestado' (passive) from 'manifestó' (active), mirroring the Greek voice contrast precisely. German consistently uses 'offenbaren,' capturing the revelatory weight.

1. be revealed, be disclosed (of things) (21×) The passive disclosure of things — works, sins, truth, or mysteries are brought to light. Mark 4:22 promises nothing is hidden that will not be made manifest. Paul says God's righteousness has been revealed (Rom 3:21). The subject is impersonal: what was concealed now stands exposed. French 'révéler' and Spanish 'fue manifestado' track this passive closely. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING en: being-made-visible, has-been-revealed, is-made-visible | es: fue-manifestada, fue-manifestado, fueran-manifestados | fr: manifester, révéler | de: offenbaren Mark 4:22; John 3:21; John 9:3; Rom 3:21; 2Cor 3:3

2. appear, be manifested (of persons) (17×) The personal manifestation or appearance of Christ or other persons — especially the incarnation, post-resurrection appearances, and future parousia. John uses this sense repeatedly: Jesus 'was manifested' to Israel (John 1:31), appeared to the disciples at the Sea of Tiberias (John 21:14), and showed himself after rising (Mark 16:12, 14). The subject is a person becoming visible. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING

en: He-is-manifested, having-been-manifested, having-been-revealed | es: fue-manifestado, fuera-manifestado, ha-sido-manifestado | fr: manifester, révéler | de: offenbaren Mark 16:12; Mark 16:14; John 1:31; John 21:14; Rom 16:26

3. make known, reveal (active) (11×) The active, intentional revelation by a personal agent. Jesus 'manifested his glory' through signs (John 2:11), 'revealed' the Father's name to his disciples (John 17:6), and seeks to 'make himself known' to the world (John 7:4). Spanish 'Manifesté/Manifestó' preserves the first-person agency. This sense foregrounds the revealer's purposeful initiative. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING en: I-manifested, I-may-reveal, having-made-evident | es: Manifesté, Manifestó, habiendo-manifestado | fr: manifester, révéler | de: offenbaren John 2:11; John 7:4; John 17:6; John 21:1

φᾰνερός G5320 Adv (3×)

openly, clearly, manifestly; in a visible, public, or evident manner

This adverb describes action done openly, publicly, or clearly rather than secretly or ambiguously. It emphasizes visibility and lack of concealment. The root adjective phaneros means "visible" or "manifest" (related to phainō, "to shine" or "appear"). Ancient rhetoric valued speaking phanerōs—clearly and straightforwardly—as opposed to speaking in riddles. The New Testament uses capture both literal visibility (appearing publicly) and epistemological clarity (seeing distinctly, knowing certainly). The adverb marks a contrast with hiddenness or obscurity.

(3×) Mark 1:45 describes the healed leper spreading the news so that Jesus could no longer "openly" (phanerōs) enter a town—publicity forced him into deserted places. John 7:10 shows Jesus going up to the feast "not publicly" (ou phanerōs) but in private—deliberately avoiding open visibility to prevent premature confrontation. Acts 10:3 specifies that Cornelius saw an angel "clearly" (phanerōs) in a vision about the ninth hour—distinctly, not vaguely. The Spanish abiertamente/claramente, French ouvertement, and German offenbar all span the openly/clearly semantic range. The term emphasizes the contrast between concealment and exposure, secrecy and publicity, vagueness and clarity—with Jesus sometimes choosing hiddenness for strategic reasons and God sometimes granting exceptional clarity. BOLDNESS AND OPENNESS en: clearly, openly | es: abiertamente, claramente | fr: ouvertement | de: offenbar, φανερῶς Mark 1:45; John 7:10; Acts 10:3

φᾰνέρ-ωσις G5321 N-DFS (2×)

manifestation, disclosure, making visible or known

This noun denotes the act of manifesting, revealing, or making something visible that was previously hidden. Paul uses it for the manifestation of the Spirit given to each believer for the common good—spiritual gifts are visible evidences of the Spirit's presence. In 2 Corinthians, he speaks of the manifestation of truth, openly commending himself to every conscience by making truth plainly visible. The word emphasizes making the hidden apparent.

(2×) From φανερόω ('make visible, manifest'), φανέρωσις denotes disclosure or manifestation. 1 Cor 12:7 describes 'the manifestation of the Spirit' (φανέρωσις τοῦ πνεύματος) given to each for common benefit—spiritual gifts as visible evidences of the Spirit's presence and activity. 2 Cor 4:2 speaks of Paul's ministry 'by manifestation of the truth' (φανερώσει τῆς ἀληθείας) commending himself to all consciences—making truth openly visible versus hidden cunning. REVELATION MANIFESTATION en: manifestation | es: manifestación | fr: manifestation | de: Offenbarung 1Cor 12:7; 2Cor 4:2

φᾱνός G5322 N-GMP (1×)

Torches, lanterns; portable light sources carried at night, especially for outdoor use

This noun designates torches or lanterns—portable lighting devices. In John 18:3, the detachment of soldiers and officers coming to arrest Jesus in Gethsemane bring 'lanterns and torches' along with weapons. The detail suggests they expected resistance or a chase through dark terrain, requiring artificial light to search. The mention also creates irony: those seeking to arrest the Light of the World bring torches to find him in darkness.

(1×) In John 18:3, Judas guides a detachment of soldiers to arrest Jesus, and they come 'with lanterns and torches and weapons.' The torches and lanterns (Spanish 'antorchas,' torches; French 'lanterne,' lantern; German 'Laternen,' lanterns) suggest nighttime arrest and possibly expectation of a violent confrontation or chase requiring light to pursue Jesus or his disciples. The detail creates dramatic irony—those seeking to seize the Light of the World must carry artificial lights into the darkness to find him. LAMPS AND TORCHES en: lanterns | es: antorchas | fr: lanterne | de: Laternen John 18:3

Φανουήλ G5323 N-GMS (1×)

Phanuel, father of the prophetess Anna (Luke 2:36); name means 'face of God' in Hebrew

This indeclinable proper name identifies the father of Anna the prophetess who appears in Luke's infancy narrative. Luke 2:36 identifies Anna as 'the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Asher.' The name is the Greek form of Hebrew Penuel, meaning 'face of God,' the place where Jacob wrestled with God. Including the father's name and tribal affiliation establishes Anna's credibility and roots her in Israel's history.

(1×) In Luke 2:36, Luke introduces 'Anna, a prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Asher.' The name identifies her father (consistent in all translations), establishing her lineage and credibility. The Hebrew original 'Penuel' means 'face of God,' the site of Jacob's wrestling with God (Genesis 32). By providing father and tribe, Luke roots Anna in authentic Israelite genealogy, reinforcing her authority as a prophetess who recognizes the infant Messiah and proclaims him to all awaiting Jerusalem's redemption. PROPER

NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: of-Phanouēl | es: de-Phanoúēl | fr: Phanouël | de: Φανουήλ Luke 2:36

φαντάζω G5324 V-PPM/P-NNS (1×)
To appear, become visible; to be made manifest, especially of supernatural or visionary appearances
This verb means to make visible or to appear, often with the nuance of something becoming manifest that was previously hidden. Hebrews 12:21 uses it to describe how terrifying the Sinai theophany was: the sight that 'appeared' was so fearful that even Moses trembled. The verb suggests a visible manifestation—God's glory and power becoming perceptible in a way that overwhelms the senses. The passive form emphasizes something being made to appear rather than merely being seen.

(1×) In Heb 12:21, the author recalls the terror of Sinai: 'so fearful was the sight that appeared that Moses said, I tremble with fear.' The participle describes the visible manifestation (Spanish 'que aparecía,' that appeared; French 'apparaître,' to appear; German 'erscheinen,' to appear) of God's presence—thunder, lightning, thick darkness, trumpet blast. The theophany was visually and audibly overwhelming, causing even Moses to shake. The verb emphasizes that this terrifying spectacle became manifest, breaking into visible and audible reality. APPEAR SEEM SHINE en: appearing | es: que-aparecía | fr: apparaître | de: erscheinen Heb 12:21

φαντᾰσί-α G5325 N-GFS (1×)
Appearance, spectacle, display; especially outward show or pomp designed to impress observers
This noun denotes appearance or display, often with emphasis on visual spectacle or outward show. In Acts 25:23, it describes the 'great pomp' with which Agrippa and Bernice entered the audience hall to hear Paul—a ceremonial entrance designed to impress with royal splendor. The word can mean mere appearance (versus reality) or impressive display. Here it emphasizes the ostentatious contrast between earthly royalty's pomp and Paul's chains.

(1×) In Acts 25:23, Luke narrates: 'Agrippa and Bernice came with great pomp and entered the audience hall with the military tribunes and prominent men of the city.' The noun describes the spectacular, ceremonial display (Spanish 'pompa,' pomp; German transliteration recognizing the showy spectacle) of royal pageantry—Agrippa and Bernice making a grand entrance calculated to awe observers with their status and splendor. Luke's description highlights the ironic reversal: earthly rulers in magnificent display come to hear a chained prisoner who actually holds the truth they need. APPEAR SEEM SHINE en: pomp | es: pompa | fr: fantaisie | de: φαντασίας Acts 25:23

φάντᾰσ-μα G5326 N-NNS (2×)
an apparition, ghost, phantom
This word denotes a phantom, ghost, or apparition—something that appears but lacks physical substance. Both Gospel uses describe the disciples' terrified reaction when they saw Jesus walking on water. In the darkness and storm, they thought they were seeing a ghost and cried out in fear. The word captures their interpretation before recognizing it was actually Jesus performing a nature miracle.

(2×) From φαντάζω ('make visible'), φάντασμα denotes an apparition or phantom. The parallel accounts (Matt 14:26, Mark 6:49) describe the disciples seeing Jesus walking on the sea and thinking 'it is a ghost' (φάντασμά ἐστιν)—crying out in terror. Their fear of a phantom reveals both the darkness and storm's disorientation and their not yet comprehending Jesus' divine power over nature. His 'It is I' reassures them of his real, physical presence. APPEAR SEEM SHINE en: A-ghost, ghost | es: Fantasma, fantasma | fr: fantôme | de: Gespenst, Φάντασμά Matt 14:26; Mark 6:49

φάραγξ G5327 N-NFS (1×)
A ravine, valley, gorge; a deep cleft or depression in the landscape, especially between hills
This noun designates a ravine or valley—a cleft in the terrain, usually formed by erosion. Luke 3:5 uses it in quoting Isaiah 40: 'every valley shall be filled'—part of the prophetic imagery of preparing a highway for the Lord by leveling obstacles. Valleys will be raised, mountains lowered, rough places made smooth. The term contributes to the picture of radical transformation that the Messiah's coming requires and effects.

(1×) In Luke 3:5, John the Baptist's ministry fulfills Isaiah's prophecy: 'Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be made low.' The noun designates a depression in the landscape (Spanish 'valle,' valley; French 'ravin,' ravine) that must be filled to create a level highway for the coming Lord. The image is of removing all obstacles—raising low places, lowering high places—to prepare for God's arrival. Applied to John's ministry, it speaks of the radical moral and spiritual transformation needed to receive the Messiah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: valley | es: valle | fr: ravin | de: φάραγξ Luke 3:5

Φαραώ G5328 N-GMS (5×)
Pharao – Pharaoh, the royal title of the kings of ancient Egypt
Pharao is the Greek indeclinable form of the Hebrew par'oh, itself derived from Egyptian pr-aa ('great house'), which became the standard title for Egypt's monarchs. In the New Testament it refers specifically to the unnamed Pharaoh of the Exodus narrative, appearing in Stephen's speech (Acts 7:10, 13, 21), Paul's discussion of divine sovereignty in hardening Pharaoh's heart (Rom 9:17), and the description of Moses's faith in rejecting his identity as Pharaoh's adopted grandson (Heb 11:24). Every target language preserves the title with near-identical spelling – Spanish Farao, French Pharaon, German Pharao – reflecting its universal recognition as a historical royal designation.

(5×) The royal title of the king of Egypt, used in the New Testament exclusively in reference to the Pharaoh of the Exodus period. Stephen recounts how Pharaoh elevated Joseph (Acts 7:10), how Joseph's family was made known to Pharaoh (Acts 7:13), and how Pharaoh's daughter adopted Moses (Acts 7:21). Paul invokes Pharaoh as the paradigm of divine hardening and sovereignty (Rom 9:17), and Hebrews celebrates Moses's refusal to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter (Heb 11:24). The name is universally preserved across languages – Spanish Farao, French Pharaon, German Pharao – confirming a single proper-title identity. PHARAOH TITLE en: Pharao, Pharaō, of-Pharaō | es: Pharaò, Pharaṓ, de-Pharaō | fr: Pharao, Pharaon | de: Pharao, Φαραὼ Acts 7:10; Acts 7:13; Acts 7:21; Rom 9:17; Heb 11:24

Φαρές G5329 N-GMS (3×)
Perez, son of Judah and Tamar, ancestor of King David and Jesus Christ
Perez (Hebrew Peretz, meaning "breach") was born to Judah through his daughter-in-law Tamar in one of Genesis' most scandalous narratives (Genesis 38). Despite the irregular circumstances of his conception, Perez became a significant ancestor—the line of David and ultimately of Jesus passed through him. His twin birth involved him breaking through ahead of his brother Zerah, hence the name. Ruth 4:12 invokes his name as a blessing for fruitfulness. The genealogies in Matthew and Luke establish Jesus' legal descent through this crucial link.

(3×) Matthew 1:3 appears twice in listing Judah's descendants: "Judah was the father of Perez (Phares) and Zerah by Tamar, and Perez (Phares) was the father of Hezron." Luke 3:33 traces Jesus' lineage back through David to "Hezron, son of Perez (Phares)." The consistent transliteration across languages (Spanish Pharés, French Pharès, German Perez) reflects the Hebrew proper name. Including Perez (and Tamar) in the genealogy is theologically significant—Matthew's inclusion of scandalous ancestors demonstrates that God's grace works through flawed people and irregular circumstances, foreshadowing Jesus' mission to sinners rather than the self-righteous. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Phares | es: Pharés | fr: Pharès | de: Perez Matt 1:3; Luke 3:33

G5330 N-GMS (99×)
Pharisee — a member of the Jewish sect devoted to rigorous Torah observance, oral tradition, and separation from ritual impurity Pharisaios appears 99 times in the New Testament, making the Pharisees the most frequently named Jewish group in the Gospels and Acts. The name likely derives from the Hebrew parash ('to separate'), reflecting their commitment to maintaining ritual boundaries. They championed the oral Torah alongside the written, believed in resurrection and angels (Acts 23:8), and exercised significant popular influence. Jesus' sharpest controversies are with Pharisees — over Sabbath observance (Matt 12:2), hand-washing (Matt 15:2), and the charge of hypocrisy (Matt 23). Yet the picture is not uniformly hostile: Nicodemus is a Pharisee (John 3:1), and Paul proudly claims the identity (Phil 3:5; Acts 26:5).

Pharisee (99×) A member of the Pharisees, a Jewish religious-political movement emphasizing strict Torah observance, the authority of oral tradition alongside written Scripture, and scrupulous avoidance of ritual contamination. In the Gospels they appear as frequent interlocutors and opponents of Jesus on matters of Sabbath law, purity, and authority (Matt 12:2; 23:13-36), though notable figures like Nicodemus (John 3:1) and Paul (Phil 3:5) show the movement's breadth. Spanish 'fariseos,' French 'Pharisien,' and German 'Pharisaer' all derive from the same Greek term, itself rooted in Hebrew parash ('to separate'). PRIESTS AND PRIESTHOOD
en: Pharisaioi, Pharisees | es: Pharisaîoi, Pharisäíoi | fr: Pharisien | de: Pharisäer Matt 9:11; Matt 9:14; Matt 9:34; Matt 12:2; Matt 12:14

φαρμᾰκ-είᾱ G5331 N-NFS (2×)
sorcery, magic arts, use of drugs or spells
This term originally meant the use of drugs (whether medicinal or toxic), but developed the sense of sorcery, magic arts, or witchcraft —often associated with potions and spells. Paul lists it among the works of the flesh in Galatians. Revelation uses it to describe how Babylon the Great deceived all nations with her sorceries. The word connects pharmakological manipulation with occult practices, both involving spiritual deception.

(2×) From φάρμακον ('drug, potion'), φαρμακεία evolved from drug-use to sorcery/witchcraft (often involving potions and spells). Gal 5:20 lists 'sorcery' (φαρμακεία) among fleshly works opposed to the Spirit—occult practices incompatible with Kingdom life. Rev 18:23 explains Babylon deceived all nations 'by your sorcery' (ἐν τῇ φαρμακείᾳ σου)—magical arts tied to her seductive, idolatrous commerce and spiritual adultery. SORCERY WITCHCRAFT en: sorcery | es: hechicería | fr: Zauberei | de: Zauberei Gal 5:20; Rev 18:23

φαρμᾰκ-εύς G5332
sorcerer, poisoner; druggist, one who practices magic or deals in potions
Originally denoting someone who mixed drugs or poisons—often for harmful purposes—this term evolved to describe practitioners of magic and sorcery. In biblical contexts, it consistently refers to those who engage in occult practices, manipulating spiritual forces through potions, spells, or incantations. The word carries strongly negative connotations, associating such practitioners with deception and rebellion against God. Revelation's use reflects the ancient world's blurred line between pharmacology and the occult.

φάρμᾰκος G5333 N-GNP (3×)
sorcerer, poisoner, magician; one who practices magic arts or uses drugs/potions for occult purposes
The term pharmakos (related to our "pharmacy" and "pharmaceutical") originally meant one who uses drugs or potions, which in the ancient world often meant poisoners or those practicing magic arts using herbs and compounds. The line between medicine, poison, and magic was thin in antiquity. By New Testament times, it clearly designated practitioners of occult arts, sorcerers. All three occurrences appear in Revelation's vice lists, grouping sorcerers with the sexually immoral, murderers, idolaters, and liars—those excluded from the new Jerusalem.

(3×) Revelation 9:21 lists four sins from which humanity didn't repent even after the sixth trumpet judgment: murder, "sorceries" (pharmakōn, genitive plural), sexual immorality, and theft —occult practices among heinous sins. Revelation 21:8 catalogs those excluded from the new Jerusalem, including "sorcerers" (pharmakois) alongside cowards, unbelievers, the vile, murderers, the sexually immoral, idolaters, and liars. Revelation 22:15 similarly lists "sorcerers" (pharmakoi) outside the city with dogs, sexually immoral, murderers, idolaters, and lovers of falsehood. The Spanish hechiceros/hechicerías, French and German Zauberer all denote magic practitioners. The consistent placement among the gravest sins shows sorcery as rebellion against God's order, seeking power through demonic rather than divine means. MAGI MAGICIAN DIVINER
en: sorcerers, sorceries | es: hechiceros,, hechicerías | fr: Zauberer | de: Zauberer Rev 9:21; Rev 21:8; Rev 22:15

φάσις G5334 N-NFS (1×)
A report, announcement, information; especially an official report or denunciation to authorities
This noun originally meant denunciation or information laid before authorities, then more broadly any report or announcement. Acts 21:31 uses it in its formal sense: as a riot breaks out over Paul's presence in the temple, 'report came up to the tribune' that all Jerusalem was in uproar. The word suggests an official communication, intelligence reaching military command about a public disturbance requiring intervention. Translations use 'report,' 'news,' or 'information.'

(1×) In Acts 21:31, when a mob attacks Paul in the temple, Luke writes: 'report came up to the tribune of the cohort that all Jerusalem was in confusion.' The noun indicates an official communication (Spanish 'informe,' report; French 'rapport,' report) reaching the Roman military commander—intelligence about civil unrest requiring immediate military response. The report prompts the tribune to rush soldiers to the scene, inadvertently rescuing Paul from lynching. The term's formal sense fits Luke's attention to official Roman procedures and chain of command. NEWS AND MESSAGES
en: report | es: informe | fr: rapport | de: φάσις Acts 21:31

φάσκω G5335 V-PPA-NMP (3×)
to assert, claim, affirm; to state something as fact with confidence
This verb means to say, affirm, or assert—to make a claim with some force. While similar to the common phēmi ("say"), phaskō carries slightly more emphasis, suggesting a confident assertion or claim. Classical Greek distinguished it as more forceful or emphatic speech. The New Testament uses are limited but show it describing strong assertions, whether truthful (Paul's opponents claiming to speak for Jewish leadership) or false (those claiming to be wise while becoming fools). It marks speech that takes a position rather than merely reporting.

(3×) Acts 24:9 describes the Jews "asserting" (phaskontes) that Paul's accusers' charges were true—joining the claim against Paul. Acts 25:19 has Festus explaining the dispute to Agrippa: they had points of disagreement with Paul about a dead man Jesus, "whom Paul was claiming" (ephasken) to be alive—an assertion Festus found puzzling. Romans 1:22 condemns those "claiming" (phaskontes) to be wise who became fools—arrogant assertion contradicted by reality. The Spanish afirmando/afirmaba, French affirmer, and German behaupten all convey asserting/claiming. The term highlights the confidence (sometimes misplaced) with which people make claims—whether hostile witnesses, a perplexed governor summarizing Paul's gospel, or self-styled sages whose wisdom proved foolish. SPEAKING AND TALKING en: asserting, claiming, was-claiming | es: afirmaba, afirmando | fr: affirmer | de: behaupten, φάσκοντες, ἔφασκεν Acts 24:9; Acts 25:19; Rom 1:22

φάτν-η G5336 N-GFS (4×)

A manger or feeding trough for livestock; the open-air crib in which the infant Jesus was laid.

Denotes a feeding trough or manger used to hold fodder for domestic animals such as oxen or donkeys. In classical Greek the word could extend to any stall or feeding place, and proverbially an ox at its phatnē signified comfort and ease. The New Testament usage centers on the Lukan nativity, where the manger becomes the humble cradle for the Messiah (Luke 2:7, 12, 16), and on Jesus' Sabbath argument that even a tied ox or donkey is loosed from its manger for watering (Luke 13:15). Spanish pesebre and French crèche both preserve the concrete livestock-feeding sense.

(4×) A feeding trough or manger for livestock, used in the NT both as the improvised cradle where Mary laid the newborn Jesus (Luke 2:7, 12, 16) and as the everyday fixture from which oxen and donkeys eat (Luke 13:15). The multilingual evidence is unanimous: Spanish pesebre, French crèche, and German Krippe all point to a concrete animal-feeding receptacle, underscoring the humility of the incarnation scene. CATTLE AND OXEN en: a-manger, manger | es: pesebre | fr: crèche | de: φάτνης, φάτνῃ Luke 2:7; Luke 2:12; Luke 2:16; Luke 13:15

φαῦλος G5337 Adj-ANS (6×)

phaulos – evil, worthless, morally bad; describing actions or character of base quality

In classical Greek, phaulos could mean 'cheap, trivial, easy' – a merely quantitative judgment of slightness. By the Koine period and especially in the New Testament, however, the word has shifted decisively toward moral evaluation: 'evil, bad, worthless.' Jesus contrasts those who have done good (ta agatha) with those who have practiced evil (ta phaula) in the resurrection judgment (John 5:29). John 3:20 warns that 'everyone who does evil (phaula) hates the light.' Paul invokes the same moral polarity in Romans 9:11 and 2 Corinthians 5:10, and Titus 2:8 calls for conduct that leaves opponents with 'nothing bad (phaulon) to say.' Spanish malo, French mauvais, and German schlecht all converge on the moral-badness sense without residual ambiguity.

evil, worthless, bad (6×) Morally evil, worthless, or bad – describing actions, practices, or character of base quality, in contrast to what is good (agathos) or noble (kalos). John 3:20 warns that evildoers (ho ta phaula prasson) hate the light; John 5:29 contrasts resurrection to life (for those who did good) with resurrection to judgment (for those who practiced ta phaula). Paul echoes this moral binary in Rom 9:11 and 2 Cor 5:10, while Titus 2:8 urges blameless speech so that opponents have 'nothing phaulon to say.' Spanish malo, French mauvais/vil, and German schlecht all map uniformly to moral badness, confirming a single sense across all six occurrences. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS en: bad, evil, evil-things | es: malas, malas-cosas, malo | fr: mauvais, schlecht, vil | de: schlecht John 3:20; John 5:29; Rom 9:11; 2Cor 5:10; Titus 2:8

φέγγος G5338 N-ANS (3×)

light, radiance, brightness; the luminous quality or splendor emanating from a source

This noun denotes light, especially splendor or radiance—the brightness emanating from heavenly bodies or other sources. It can mean daylight, moonlight, or the luminous quality of shining objects. Classical Greek distinguished phengos (light, radiance) from phōs (light as substance or source), though the terms overlap. The New Testament uses appear in apocalyptic contexts describing the failure or darkening of celestial lights—sun and moon ceasing to give their radiance. The cosmic darkening signals the end of the present order and the arrival of God's direct presence.

(3×) Matthew 24:29 and Mark 13:24 present parallel apocalyptic prophecy: after the tribulation, "the sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give its light (phengos)." Luke 11:33 uses the term differently: no one lights a lamp and puts it in a cellar, but on a stand, "so that those who enter may see the light" (phengos)—the lamp's radiance serves its purpose. The Spanish luz/resplandor, French clarté, and German Schein all capture the radiance/brightness sense. The synoptic apocalyptic uses echo Joel 2:31 and Isaiah 13:10, where cosmic lights failing signals the Day of the Lord. The ordinary lamp illustration contrasts with extraordinary cosmic darkening—both illustrating how light reveals and its absence conceals or signals transformation. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: light | es: luz, resplandor | fr: clarté | de: Schein, φέγγος Matt 24:29; Mark 13:24; Luke 11:33

φείδομαι G5339 V-FIM-1S (10×)

Spare, refrain from harming — to hold back from inflicting punishment, loss, or severity

The verb φείδομαι (pheidomai) means 'to spare' or 'to refrain from harming,' always in the middle voice in the NT. Its most theologically charged occurrence is Romans 8:32: God 'did not spare his own Son' — a deliberate echo of the Abraham-Isaac narrative (Gen 22:12, 16 LXX uses the same verb). Paul warns that fierce wolves will not 'spare' the flock (Acts 20:29), and he reminds the Corinthians he came gently to 'spare' them (2 Cor 1:23; 13:2). The Romans 11:21 argument builds on God not sparing the natural olive branches. Spanish 'perdonar/no escatimar' and French 'épargner' carry the same dual register of mercy withheld or extended.

spare, refrain from harming (10×) To spare, hold back from inflicting harm, punishment, or severity. Used of God not sparing his own Son (Rom 8:32) in deliberate parallel with the Aqedah (Gen 22 LXX), of God not sparing natural olive branches (Rom 11:21) or the ancient world (2 Pet 2:4-5), of Paul refraining from harsh discipline toward the Corinthians (2 Cor 1:23; 13:2), and of savage wolves showing no mercy to the flock (Acts 20:29). The participial form with negation (μὴ φεισάμενος) becomes a rhetorical formula for divine non-exemption. Spanish 'perdonar' and German 'verschonen' reflect both the merciful and judicial registers. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: I-refrain, I-will-spare, am-sparing | es: os-ahorro, perdonando, perdonará | fr: schonen, épargner | de: schonen, φειδόμενοι Acts 20:29; Rom 8:32; Rom 11:21; 1Cor 7:28

φειδομένως G5340 Adv (2×)

sparingly, stingily, grudgingly

This adverb means sparingly, grudgingly, or in a stingy manner. Paul uses it twice in the same verse in 2 Corinthians to establish the principle of sowing and reaping: whoever sows sparingly will also reap sparingly, but whoever sows generously will reap generously. The word captures the tight-fisted, reluctant attitude in giving that limits both the gift and the eventual return.

(2×) The adverb φειδομένως (from φείδομαι, 'spare, refrain') denotes sparing or grudging action. Both uses in 2 Cor 9:6 establish the agricultural metaphor for giving: 'The one sowing sparingly (φειδομένως) will also reap sparingly (φειδομένως), and the one sowing bountifully will reap bountifully.' The doubled adverb emphasizes the direct proportion: stingy sowing yields meager harvest, generous sowing yields abundant return. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS en: sparingly | es: escasamente | fr: sans-épargner | de: sparsam 2Cor 9:6

φαιλόνης G5341 N-AMS (1×)

A cloak, mantle; a heavy outer garment for warmth and protection, especially for travel

This noun designates a heavy outer cloak or mantle—the ancient equivalent of an overcoat, used for warmth and protection from weather, especially during travel. In 2 Timothy 4:13, Paul, imprisoned in Rome and facing execution, asks Timothy to bring 'the cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus.' The request for his cloak, along with books and parchments, reveals Paul's human needs in prison:

warmth, reading material, companionship. The detail is touchingly mundane amid apocalyptic ministry.

(1×) In 2 Tim 4:13, Paul requests practical items: 'When you come, bring the cloak that I left with Carpus at Troas, also the books, and above all the parchments.' The cloak (Spanish 'manto,' mantle; French transliteration; German 'Mantel,' coat) was a heavy outer garment Paul needed for warmth in his Roman cell as winter approached (verse 21). The mundane request—bring my coat—humanizes the great apostle, showing his physical vulnerability and need for basic comforts as he awaits martyrdom. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: cloak | es: manto | fr: φαιλόνην | de: Mantel 2Tim 4:13

φέρω G5342 V-PIA-2P (66×)

To bear, bring, carry; fetching objects, bearing fruit, transporting physically, being driven by force, enduring.

Phero is one of the oldest verbs in Greek, cognate with Latin ferre, English 'bear,' and Sanskrit bharati. Its NT range reflects that deep ancestry: from bringing a paralytic on a stretcher (Luke 5:18) to the agricultural metaphor of bearing fruit (John 15:2), to a ship driven by wind (Acts 27:15), to enduring difficult circumstances (Rom 9:22). French captures the productive sense beautifully with porter du fruit, while German bringen stays closer to the spatial core. The word's breadth mirrors the theological pattern of discipleship: one must both carry the cross and bear fruit.

1. bring or fetch (41×) To bring, fetch, or convey toward a destination — the dominant sense at 41 occurrences. Covers bringing a paralytic to Jesus (Mark 2:3), fetching water turned to wine (John 2:8), and the command 'bring them here to me' (Matt 14:18; 17:17). Spanish Trae/Traed and German bringen map directly, while French apporter emphasizes toward-the-speaker directionality. Imperative forms are especially prominent in miracle narratives where Jesus commands persons or objects to be brought. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: Bring, I-brought, bring | es: Trae, Traed, llevan | fr: apporter, porter | de: bringen, bringt Matt 14:11; Matt 14:18; Matt 17:17; Mark 1:32

2. bear fruit or produce (9×) To bear fruit or produce results — 9 occurrences concentrated in the Johannine vine metaphor (John 12:24; 15:2-8) and the Markan sower parable (Mark 4:8). Spanish lleva fruto uses 'carry' in a fixed agricultural collocation; French porter du fruit similarly deploys porter in its productive sense; Korean 열매를 맺다 ('tie/form fruit') selects an entirely different verb. The phrase 'bear much fruit' becomes a defining metaphor for discipleship in John 15. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: bear, bearing, bears | es: lleva, llevaba, llevar | fr: porter | de: bringen Mark 4:8; John 12:24; John 15:2

3. carry or transport physically (9×) To carry or transport a physical object or person — 9 occurrences where the emphasis falls on sustained bearing rather than directional delivery. Carrying the cross (Luke 23:26), bearing spices to the tomb (Luke 24:1). The distinction from sense 1: 'carry' foregrounds burden and duration while 'bring' foregrounds destination. Korean 지고 ('bearing on one's back') selects load-bearing vocabulary absent from the fetch/deliver sense. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: bearing, being-carried, carry | es: llevad, llevando, llevar | fr: apporter, porter | de: bringen, bringt Luke 5:18; Luke 23:26; Luke 24:1; John 2:8

4. drive along or impel (5×) To be driven or impelled by an external force — 5 occurrences where the subject is passive to wind, Spirit, or circumstance. The ship driven by storm (Acts 27:15, 17), the rushing wind at Pentecost (Acts 2:2), prophets 'carried along by the Holy Spirit' (2 Pet 1:21). Hebrews 6:1 extends this to 'let us be carried on to maturity' — a striking image of divine momentum. Spanish eran-llevados and German bringt retain the 'carry' root but the passive-force frame is distinct. BEARING AND CARRYING

en: being-carried, leading, let-us-press-on | es: conduciendo, eran-llevados, seamos-llevados | fr: apporter, porter | de: bringen, bringt Acts 2:2; Acts 12:10; Acts 27:15; Acts 27:17; Heb 6:1

5. endure or tolerate (2×) To endure or tolerate something difficult — 2 occurrences at the word's margin. In Romans 9:22 God 'bore with' vessels of wrath; in Hebrews 12:20 the Israelites 'could not bear' the command at Sinai. Spanish soporto uses a dedicated endurance verb, Korean 참다 ('endure') shifts to psychological-tolerance vocabulary entirely distinct from physical carrying — the metaphorical extension from bearing a load to bearing hardship. BEARING AND CARRYING en: bore, they-could-bear | es: soportaban, soportó | fr: apporter, porter | de: bringen Rom 9:22; Heb 12:20

φεύγω G5343 V-FIM-3P (29×)

To flee or run away from danger or threat; rarely to escape successfully, emphasizing the result.

The standard Greek verb for flight from danger, φεύγω runs through the New Testament as a word of urgency — from the angel's warning to flee to Egypt (Matt 2:13) to John the Baptist's challenge to the Pharisees fleeing the coming wrath (Matt 3:7) to Jesus' instruction to flee to the mountains when Jerusalem faces destruction (Matt 24:16). Spanish "huir/huid" and German "fliehen" consistently capture the sense of urgent departure. In one memorable instance at Heb 11:34, the verb shifts to emphasize successful escape rather than the act of running.

1. flee, run away (28×) The dominant sense (28x): to flee or run away from danger, persecution, or threat. Spanish "huir/huid" (imperative "flee!"), French "fuir," and German "fliehen" all render the urgency of departure in the face of peril. Key passages include the flight to Egypt (Matt 2:13), fleeing persecution city to city (Matt 10:23), Jesus' challenge about escaping the judgment of Gehenna (Matt 23:33), and the swineherds fleeing after the Gadarene exorcism (Matt 8:33). The verb covers commands, narratives, and eschatological warnings. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: fled, flee, he-fled | es: Huid, huid, huir | fr: fuir | de: fliehen, flieht Matt 2:13; Matt 3:7; Matt 8:33; Matt 10:23; Matt 23:33

2. escape, get away (1×) A resultative sense (1x at Heb 11:34): to escape or get away successfully, with emphasis on the accomplished outcome rather than the act of running. In the great faith chapter, heroes of old "escaped the edge of the sword" — Spanish "escaparon" (they escaped) rather than "huyeron" (they fled) marks this subtle but real distinction. The focus falls on deliverance achieved, not flight undertaken. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: escaped | es: escaparon | fr: fuir | de: fliehen Heb 11:34

φῆλιξ G5344 N-GMS (9×)

Felix; the Roman procurator of Judea before whom the apostle Paul was tried (ca. AD 52-59).

Felix is the Latin cognomen (meaning 'happy, fortunate') of Antonius Felix, the Roman procurator of Judea who presided over Paul's trial in Caesarea. All nine NT occurrences fall within Acts 23-25, where Felix receives Paul from the tribune Claudius Lysias (Acts 23:24, 26), hears the case brought by Tertullus (Acts 24:3), converses privately with Paul about righteousness and self-control (Acts 24:24-25), and ultimately leaves Paul imprisoned as a favor to the Jewish leaders (Acts 24:27). The name is consistently transliterated across languages (spa Phēlix, fra Felix, deu Felix).

(9×) The proper name Felix, identifying the Roman procurator of Judea (Antonius Felix) who governed during Paul's imprisonment at Caesarea. The Latin name means 'happy' or 'fortunate.' Luke's narrative presents him as politically calculating: he keeps Paul in custody for two years hoping for a bribe, and leaves him bound to curry favor with the Jews (Acts 24:26-27). All nine occurrences cluster in Acts 23:24-25:14. The multilingual glosses (spa Phēlix, fra Felix, deu Felix, eng Phēlix) uniformly treat this as a proper noun requiring only transliteration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Phēlix | es: Phélix | fr: Félix | de: Felix Acts 23:24; Acts 23:26; Acts 24:3; Acts 24:22; Acts 24:24

φήμη G5345 N-NFS (2×)

report, rumor, news that spreads by word of mouth

In classical usage, φήμη could refer to divine utterances or prophetic sayings, but in the New Testament it denotes common human speech: reports and rumors that circulate among people. When Jesus healed the deaf-mute in Matthew 9:26, the φήμη went out through all that region—news spreading organically from person to person. Luke 4:14 similarly describes how reports of Jesus spread throughout Galilee after his temptation, carried by those who witnessed his teaching in the synagogues.

(2×) The word appears twice in the Gospels, both times describing the organic spread of news about Jesus' ministry. The multilingual evidence (Spanish fama, French rumeur) captures the informal, person-to-person nature of this communication—not official proclamation but grassroots report. Matthew 9:26 shows how the healing of a mute man became φήμη that couldn't be contained; Luke 4:14 depicts how Jesus' reputation in the power of the Spirit became regional news. NEWS AND MESSAGES

en: a-report, report | es: fama | fr: rumeur | de: φήμη Matt 9:26; Luke 4:14

φημί G5346 V-PIA-1S (66×)

phemi – to say, declare, or affirm; a speech-introducing verb used across all persons and tenses

The verb phemi ('I say') is one of Greek's oldest and most elemental speech verbs, functioning primarily as a narrative frame to introduce direct discourse. In the New Testament its third-person singular forms phesi and ephe dominate, serving as compact speech tags: 'he said.' It appears in rapid dialogic exchanges – Jesus answering accusers (Matt 26:34, 61), Pilate interrogating Jesus (Matt 27:11, 23), Paul testifying before Festus and Agrippa (Acts 25:22; 26:1, 24-25). Unlike lego, which can carry nuances of reasoned discourse, phemi is a bare performative of utterance. Spanish dijo, French dire, and German sprechen/spricht all render it as simple speech introduction, confirming its single monosemous function.

say, declare (66×) To say, speak, or declare – a speech-introducing verb that frames direct discourse throughout the New Testament. Used almost exclusively in third-person forms (phesi, ephe) as a quotation marker, it appears in rapid narrative exchanges such as Jesus before the Sanhedrin (Matt 26:34, 61), Pilate's trial dialogue (Matt 27:11), and Paul's defense speeches (Acts 26:24-25). Spanish dijo, French dire, and German spricht converge on a single speech-act function with no semantic subdivision warranted across its 66 occurrences. SAYING AND COMMANDING

en: he-said, said | es: dijo | fr: dire | de: sprechen, spricht Matt 4:7; Matt 8:8; Matt 13:28; Matt 13:29; Matt 14:8

φῆστος G5347 N-DMS (13×)

Festus — Porcius Festus, the Roman procurator of Judea who succeeded Felix

Phestos (Porcius Festus) appears 13 times in the latter chapters of Acts, all within the narrative of Paul's legal proceedings in Caesarea. Festus succeeded Felix as procurator of Judea around AD 59 and inherited Paul's case. Luke portrays him as a more competent administrator than his predecessor, yet still politically entangled — willing to use Paul as a diplomatic gesture toward the Jewish leadership (Acts 25:9). His dramatic exchange with Paul ('You are out of your mind, Paul!' Acts 26:24) provides one of the most memorable courtroom moments in the New Testament. The name is consistently transliterated across languages: Spanish 'Festo,' French 'Festus,' German 'Festus.'

(13×) The proper name Phestos (Festus), identifying Porcius Festus, the Roman procurator of Judea who succeeded Antonius Felix (Acts 24:27). All 13 occurrences appear in Acts 24-26, covering his assumption of office (Acts 25:1), his hearing of Paul's case (Acts 25:4, 9, 12), his consultation with King Agrippa (Acts 25:13-14, 22-24), and his astonished outburst during Paul's defense (Acts 26:24-25, 32). A single historical referent throughout. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Phēstos | es: Phéste, Phéstos | fr: Festus | de: Festus Acts 24:27; Acts 25:1; Acts 25:4; Acts 25:9; Acts 25:12

φθάνω G5348 V-AIA-1P (7×)

To arrive at, come upon, or reach a destination or state; in classical usage, to precede or anticipate.

Phthano carries a fascinating semantic history. In classical Greek it primarily meant 'to come before, outstrip, anticipate' — the urgency of getting there first. By the Koine period, however, the competitive edge had largely softened to simple arrival: 'to reach, come upon, attain.' Most New Testament uses reflect this later development. When Jesus says 'the kingdom of God has come upon you' (Matt 12:28; Luke 11:20), the force is arrival and presence, not priority. Yet in 1 Thessalonians 4:15 the older sense resurfaces: the living 'will by no means precede' the dead. Spanish splits neatly between 'ha llegado' (has arrived) and 'precederemos' (we will precede).

1. arrive, come upon, reach (6×) To arrive at, come upon, or reach a place, state, or person — emphasizing attainment rather than priority. This dominant NT sense appears when Jesus declares the kingdom of God 'has come upon' his hearers (Matt 12:28; Luke 11:20), when Paul asks whether Israel 'attained' the law of righteousness (Rom 9:31), and when he affirms having 'reached' the Corinthians with the gospel (2 Cor 10:14). Spanish 'ha llegado' and 'alcanzamos' both stress arrival and reaching, not getting there first. GOING AND LEADING en: arrived, has-come, has-come-upon | es: alcanzamos, ha-llegado, llegamos | fr: devancer, zuvorkommen | de: zuvorkommen, ἔφθασεν Matt 12:28; Luke 11:20; Rom 9:31; 2Cor 10:14; Phil 3:16

2. precede, come before (1×) To precede, go before, or arrive ahead of others — preserving the classical sense of outstripping or anticipating. In 1 Thess 4:15, Paul assures believers that 'we who are alive will by no means precede those who have fallen asleep,' using phthano in its older competitive register. Spanish 'precederemos' and the contextual emphasis on order of resurrection make the temporal priority unmistakable. GOING BEFORE AND LEADING

en: will-precede | es: precederemos | fr: zuvorkommen | de: zuvorkommen 1Thess 4:15

φθαρ-τός G5349 Adj-GFS (6×)

Perishable, corruptible; subject to decay and destruction, describing the transient nature of earthly, material things.

Derived from phtheiro ('to destroy, corrupt'), this adjective marks something as subject to decay and dissolution. Paul contrasts phthartos sharply with the imperishable (aphthartos) in 1 Corinthians 15:53-54, where mortal bodies must 'put on' incorruption. In Romans 1:23 it exposes the absurdity of exchanging the glory of the immortal God for images of perishable creatures. The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform—Spanish corruptible, French perissable, German vergaenglich—all converging on a single sense of transience set against divine permanence.

perishable, corruptible (6×) Describes something liable to corruption, decay, or destruction—the inherent fragility and transience of material, earthly existence. In 1 Peter 1:18, believers are reminded they were ransomed not with perishable things like silver or gold but with the precious blood of Christ. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish corruptible, German vergaenglich, French perissable) uniformly confirms this single, sharply-drawn sense opposed to the imperishable divine realm. PERISHABLE CORRUPTIBLE

en: a-perishable, of-corruptible, perishable | es: con-cosas-corruptibles, corruptible, de-corruptible | fr: périssable | de: vergaenglich Rom 1:23; 1Cor 9:25; 1Cor 15:53; 1Cor 15:54; 1Pet 1:18

φθέγγομαι G5350 V-APM-NNS (3×)

to speak, utter, sound; to produce articulate speech or vocal sound

(3×) Acts 4:18 records the Sanhedrin commanding Peter and John "not to speak" (phthéngesthai) at all nor teach in the name of Jesus—attempting to silence apostolic witness. Second Peter 2:16 describes Balaam's donkey, which "speaking" (phthegxámenon) with human voice rebuked the prophet's madness—an animal producing articulate speech, a miraculous rebuke. Second Peter 2:18 condemns false teachers who "utter" (phthéngontai) loud boasts of folly, luring people with sensuality—impressive-sounding but empty speech. The Spanish hablar/hablando/habiendo hablado, French prononcer, and German reden all center on speaking/uttering. The range spans prohibited witness (silencing apostles), miraculous rebuke (speaking donkey), and deceptive eloquence (false teachers)—all emphasizing speech as potent action requiring discernment about its source and content. SPEAKING AND TALKING en: having-spoken, speaking, to-speak | es: habiendo-hablado, hablando, hablar | fr: prononcer, φθεγγόμενοι, φθεγξάμενον | de: reden, φθέγγεσθαι Acts 4:18; 2Pet 2:16; 2Pet 2:18

φθείρω G5351 V-PIA-3S (9×)

To corrupt, ruin, or destroy; of moral deterioration, defilement of mind or character, or physical ruin as divine judgment.

A powerful verb spanning moral corruption and outright destruction. Paul warns that 'bad company corrupts good morals' (1 Cor 15:33), and that the old self is 'being corrupted' by deceitful desires (Eph 4:22)—both uses reflecting progressive moral decay. But the same word also denotes catastrophic ruin: God will 'destroy' whoever defiles his temple (1 Cor 3:17), and false teachers are 'destroyed' like irrational animals (2 Pet 2:12). Spanish distinguishes the two poles with 'corromper' for moral corruption and 'destruir' for annihilation, while German 'verderben' serves double duty for both.

1. corrupt, ruin morally (5×) To corrupt morally, to defile or cause deterioration of character, mind, or conduct. Paul uses it for moral seduction (2 Cor 11:3, where Eve's mind was corrupted by the serpent's cunning), the corrosive effect of bad associations (1 Cor 15:33), and the progressive decay of the old self (Eph 4:22). In Rev 19:2 Babylon 'corrupted' the earth with her immorality. French 'corrompre' and Spanish 'corromper' carry the same moral weight. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: being-corrupted, corrupt, corrupted | es: corrompen, corrompimos, corrompiéndose | fr: corrompre, verderben | de: verderben 1Cor 15:33; 2Cor 7:2; 2Cor 11:3; Eph 4:22; Rev 19:2

2. destroy, bring to ruin (4×) To destroy, bring to ruin as an act of judgment or consequence. In 1 Cor 3:17 the warning is stark: God will 'destroy' the one who defiles his temple. In 2 Pet 2:12 and Jude 10, false teachers are 'destroyed' in their own corruption like irrational animals. Spanish 'destruir' and the phrase 'se corrompen' capture the finality. This sense emphasizes irreversible ruin rather than gradual decay. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: destroys, they-are-destroyed, will-be-destroyed | es: destruirá, destruye, se-corrompen. | fr: corrompre, se-corrompent., verderben | de: verderben, verderben-sie 1Cor 3:17; 2Pet 2:12; Jude 1:10

φθῑν-οπωρῑνός G5352 Adj-NNP (1×)

Late-autumn, pertaining to the season after harvest when fruit has withered and fallen

This rare adjective describes the bleak end of autumn, when trees that should bear fruit stand barren and lifeless. In Jude's vivid imagery, it captures the spiritual sterility of false teachers—like orchards past harvest time that yield nothing. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'de-otoño,' French 'd'automne') confirms the temporal-seasonal sense, while the singular New Testament usage in Jude 1:12 employs it metaphorically to depict those who promise nourishment but deliver only emptiness.

(1×) Describes the late autumn season, specifically the period when fruit has fallen and trees stand bare. The single New Testament occurrence in Jude 1:12 uses this temporal marker metaphorically: fruitless trees in late autumn exemplify teachers who appear life-giving but offer no spiritual sustenance. Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize the autumnal timing rather than the fruitlessness itself, suggesting the word primarily denotes a season. SUMMER SEASON FRUIT en: late-autumn | es: de-otoño | fr: d'automne | de: herbstliche Jude 1:12

φθόγγ-ος G5353 N-NMS (2×)

sound, tone, voice; any clear audible utterance or musical note φθόγγος denotes articulate sound—whether of human voice, musical instruments, or even nature. Unlike inarticulate noise, it refers to clear, distinct sounds that can be perceived and recognized. Paul uses it twice rhetorically: in Romans 10:18, quoting Psalm 19, he speaks of the gospel's universal reach using the language of creation's φθόγγος going out to all the earth. In 1 Corinthians 14:7, he illustrates the necessity of intelligible speech in worship by comparing tongue-speaking to musical instruments—a flute or harp producing unclear φθόγγοι would be useless for communication.

(2×) Both New Testament occurrences emphasize the communicative function of sound. Romans 10:18 uses φθόγγος metaphorically for the message that has been proclaimed universally, while 1 Corinthians 14:7 uses it literally for musical notes that must be distinct to convey meaning. The cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish sonido, French son, German Laut) all emphasize the quality of clear, distinguishable sound rather than mere noise. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: notes, sound | es: sonido, sonidos | fr: son | de: Laut Rom 10:18; 1Cor 14:7

φθον-έω G5354 V-PPA-NMP (1×)

To envy, to feel ill-will or grudging resentment toward another's advantages or success

Envy corrodes community from within, and this verb names the active practice of bearing malice toward those who possess what we lack. Classical usage ranges from divine jealousy to petty human grudges. Paul's catalog of vices in Galatians 5:26 employs the participial form to warn against mutual provocation and envy within the Christian community. Spanish 'envidiando' and German 'neidisch-sein' capture the emotional intensity, while the emotional-attitudinal domain assignment reflects envy's root in disordered desire rather than mere observation.

(1×) To bear ill-will, to feel envious or jealous of another's possessions, status, or success. Galatians 5:26 uses the participle to describe those who actively practice envy, positioned alongside provocation as community-destroying behaviors. The verb appears in emotional-attitudinal contexts across languages (Spanish 'envidiando,' German 'neidisch-sein'), indicating not passive recognition of disparity but active resentment and grudging malice. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY en: envying | es: envidiando | fr: φθονοῦντες | de: neidisch-sein Gal 5:26

φθόνος G5355 N-GMS (9×)

Envy, jealousy, ill-will; resentful desire provoked by another's advantage, often listed among vices.

Phthonos describes the bitter emotion of envy – a grudging resentment toward those who possess what one desires. In classical Greek it stood opposed to both goodwill (eunoia) and praise (epainos), and the New Testament preserves this sharp negative force. It appears in vice lists alongside murder, strife, and deceit (Rom 1:29; Gal 5:21; 1 Tim 6:4; Titus 3:3) and is identified as the motive behind Jesus' delivery to Pilate (Matt 27:18; Mark 15:10). Paul also notes that some preach Christ 'out of envy and rivalry' (Phil 1:15). Spanish envidia, French envie, and German Neid all capture the corrosive, hostile quality of this emotion.

envy, ill-will, jealousy (9×) The vice of envy or jealous ill-will, a resentful hostility provoked by another person's good fortune, status, or possessions. In the NT it is consistently portrayed as destructive and sinful. The chief priests deliver Jesus to Pilate out of phthonos (Matt 27:18; Mark 15:10), revealing envy as a motive for the most consequential injustice in history. Paul catalogs it among works of the flesh (Gal 5:21) and among the vices characterizing unregenerate humanity (Rom 1:29; Titus 3:3). Even within the church, some preach from envy (Phil 1:15). The multilingual glosses (spa envidia, fra envie, deu Neid) are perfectly uniform, confirming a single sense of malicious jealousy with no positive or neutral usage in the NT. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY en: envies, envy, envyings | es: de-envidia, envidia, envidias | fr: Neid, envie | de: Neid, φθόνον Matt 27:18; Mark 15:10; Rom 1:29; Gal 5:21; Phil 1:15

φθορ-ά G5356 N-GFS (9×)

Corruption, decay, destruction; the state of perishability or moral ruin, and the active process of being destroyed.

The noun form of phtheirō (G5351), spanning the full range from perishability to active destruction. Paul contrasts what is 'sown in corruption' with what is 'raised in incorruption' (1 Cor 15:42), and warns that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom because they belong to the realm of phthora (1 Cor 15:50). In 2 Peter, the word intensifies toward active destruction: false teachers promise freedom but are themselves 'slaves of corruption' (2 Pet 2:19), and believers are called to escape 'the corruption that is in the world through lust' (2 Pet 1:4). German 'Verwesung' (decomposition) captures the physical decay, while Spanish 'destrucción' highlights the catastrophic end.

1. corruption (5×) The state or process of corruption, decay, perishability—the natural condition of the mortal body and fallen creation. Paul pairs it with resurrection glory: the body is sown in phthora but raised in aphtharsia (1 Cor 15:42). Creation itself groans under 'bondage to corruption' awaiting liberation (Rom 8:21). Sowing to the flesh reaps corruption (Gal 6:8). Col 2:22 references things 'destined for corruption' through use. The emphasis is on inherent perishability and progressive decay. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: corruption | es: corrupción | fr: corruption | de: Verwesung Rom 8:21; 1Cor 15:42; 1Cor 15:50; Gal 6:8; Col 2:22

2. destruction (4×) Active destruction, ruin brought about by moral depravity or divine judgment. In 2 Peter this sense dominates: false teachers are 'slaves of corruption' (2:19) who will be 'destroyed in their own destruction' (2:12, using both verb and noun forms together for devastating emphasis). Believers must escape 'the corruption that is in the world through lust' (1:4). Spanish 'destrucción' and French 'corruption' both serve here, though the Greek conveys a deeper entanglement between moral ruin and its catastrophic consequences. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: corruption, destruction | es: corrupción, destrucción | fr: corruption | de: Verwesung 2Pet 1:4; 2Pet 2:12; 2Pet 2:19

φῐ́ἀλη G5357 N-AFS (12×)

phialē – bowl, libation vessel; a broad shallow cup, esp. the golden bowls of wrath in Revelation

The noun phiale ('bowl, libation vessel') denotes a broad, shallow cup originally associated with drink-offerings in Greek religious practice. In classical usage it was the standard vessel for pouring libations to the gods. The New Testament confines all twelve occurrences to the book of Revelation, where the bowls take on two symbolic functions. First, in Revelation 5:8, the twenty-four elders hold golden bowls 'full of incense, which are the prayers of the saints.' Second and predominantly, the seven golden bowls of God's wrath are poured out upon the earth in a devastating sequence of judgments (Rev 15:7; 16:1-4, 8, 10, 12, 17; 17:1; 21:9). Spanish copa, French coupe, and German Schale render both uses with one term.

bowl, libation vessel (12×) A broad, shallow bowl or libation vessel, used exclusively in Revelation for the golden bowls of incense holding the saints' prayers (Rev 5:8) and the seven bowls of God's wrath poured out in judgment (Rev 15:7; 16:1-17; 17:1; 21:9). Spanish copa, French coupe, and German Schale confirm a single referent across singular and plural forms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bowl, bowls | es: copa, copas | fr: coupe | de: Schale Rev 5:8; Rev 15:7; Rev 16:1; Rev 16:2; Rev 16:3

φῐλᾰγᾰθ-ος G5358 Adj-AMS (1×)

Loving goodness, devoted to virtue and moral excellence; disposed toward what is noble

This compound adjective describes someone whose affections align with genuine goodness. Classical Greek employed it as an honorary epithet for those distinguished by moral excellence. In Titus 1:8, it appears in Paul's list of elder qualifications—a leader must actively love what is good, not merely tolerate or acknowledge virtue. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'amante-del-bien,' German 'das-Gute-liebend') preserves the compound's structure: loving + good, suggesting dispositional orientation rather than occasional acts. One who is φιλάγαθος pursues goodness with the fervor others reserve for wealth or pleasure.

(1×) Characterized by love for goodness and virtue, actively devoted to what is morally excellent. The single New Testament occurrence in Titus 1:8 lists this among essential elder qualifications, positioned between self-control and uprightness. Cross-linguistic glosses maintain the compound structure (loving-good, amante-del-bien), indicating not passive approval but active affection and pursuit of moral excellence as a defining character trait. MORAL GOODNESS

en: loving-good | es: amante-del-bien | fr: φιλάγαθον | de: das-Gute-liebend Titus 1:8

Φιλαδελφία G5359 N-AFS (2×)

Philadelphia, a city in Lydia (western Asia Minor)

Philadelphia was one of the seven churches addressed in Revelation, located about 28 miles southeast of Sardis in the province of Lydia. The city was founded by Attalus II Philadelphus of Pergamum in the second century BC and named for his devotion to his brother. Situated on a major trade route, it became known for its vineyards and temple worship. In Revelation, the church at Philadelphia receives only commendation from Christ, no rebuke—a church with an open door that no one could shut (Revelation 3:8).

(2×) The two occurrences in Revelation 1:11 and 3:7 identify Philadelphia as one of the seven churches of Asia Minor receiving John's apocalyptic message. The name itself means 'brotherly love,' and the church lived up to that heritage by its faithful witness despite having 'little strength.' The multilingual glosses maintain the Greek transliteration, as is customary for proper names of ancient cities. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Philadelpheia | es: Filadelfia | fr: Philadelphia | de: Philadelphia Rev 1:11; Rev 3:7

φῐλᾰδελφ-ία G5360 N-AFS (6×)

Brotherly love; the warm affection and mutual care shared among members of a spiritual or familial community.

Philadelphia literally means 'love of brothers' (philos + adelphos), and in the New Testament it denotes the distinctive warmth believers are to show one another as members of God's family. Romans 12:10 urges Christians to be devoted to one another in philadelphia, while 2 Peter 1:7 places it as the penultimate virtue before agape in a chain of spiritual growth. The translations across languages are remarkably consistent—Spanish amor fraternal, French amour fraternel, German Bruderliebe—all capturing sibling-like affection extended beyond blood ties to the household of faith.

(6×) Mutual love and affection among spiritual siblings—believers united in community. Unlike generic friendship, philadelphia carries the weight of family obligation and tenderness. In 1 Thessalonians 4:9 Paul says the Thessalonians have been 'taught by God' to practice it, and Hebrews 13:1 commands that it 'continue.' The multilingual glosses (Spanish amor-fraternal, German Bruderliebe) all converge on this single familial-communal sense of love. LOVE AND LOYALTY

en: brotherly-love | es: amor-fraternal | fr: Bruderliebe, amour-fraternel | de: Bruderliebe Rom 12:10; 1Thess 4:9; Heb 13:1; 1Pet 1:22; 2Pet 1:7

φῐλᾰδελφ-ος G5361 Adj-NMP (1×)

Loving brothers or sisters, characterized by brotherly affection and familial devotion

Family love extended into the Christian community takes linguistic form in this adjective. Classical Greek applied it to blood relatives and even used it as an honorary title for Ptolemaic rulers. In 1 Peter 3:8, it describes the quality believers should embody toward fellow Christians—the church as a family bound by more than blood. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'fraternales,' German 'brüderlich') consistently emphasizes sibling affection, while the compound structure (φίλος + ἀδελφός) makes explicit that this love mirrors biological family bonds transposed into spiritual kinship.

(1×) Loving one's brothers or sisters, displaying familial affection toward siblings or those in brotherly relationship. First Peter 3:8 employs it to describe the disposition believers should cultivate toward one another within the community of faith. The Greek compound structure (loving + brother/sister) and cross-linguistic renderings (fraternales, brüderlich, loving-brothers) emphasize kinship-based affection, suggesting the early church understood itself as a family reconstituted around Christ rather than bloodline. LOVE AND LOYALTY

en: loving-brothers | es: fraternales | fr: φιλάδελφοι | de: bruederlich 1Pet 3:8

φίλ-ανδρος G5362 N-AFP (1×)

Loving one's husband, devoted to and affectionate toward one's spouse

This compound adjective appears in Paul's instruction to older women teaching younger wives. Classical Greek usage included darker meanings (mannish habits, lewdness), but the New Testament sense is unambiguous: genuine affection and devotion toward one's husband. Titus 2:4 situates it alongside φιλότεκνος (loving children) in household instruction, suggesting that marital love, like all virtues, can be cultivated and taught. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'amantes-de-esposos,' German 'den-Mann-liebend') preserves the compound's directness: this is not mere duty but warm, chosen affection.

(1×) Devoted to and affectionate toward one's husband, characterized by genuine love for one's spouse. The single New Testament occurrence in Titus 2:4 presents this as part of the curriculum older women should teach younger wives, paired with love for children. Cross-linguistic glosses maintain the compound structure (loving-husbands, amantes-de-esposos), indicating active affection and devotion rather than mere fulfillment of marital obligations. LOVE AND LOYALTY

en: loving-husbands | es: amantes-de-esposos | fr: φιλάνδρους | de: den-Mann-liebend Titus 2:4

φῐλανθρωπ-ία G5363 N-NFS (2×)

love for humanity, kindness, benevolence, humane treatment φιλανθρωπία captures the quality of kindness and consideration shown to fellow human beings, what we might call humanitarian concern or simple human decency. In Acts 28:2, Luke uses it to describe the 'unusual kindness' (φιλανθρωπίαν οὐ τὴν τυχοῦσαν) shown by the Maltese islanders to Paul's shipwrecked party—they built a fire for the rain-soaked strangers and welcomed them. In Titus 3:4, Paul uses it theologically to describe God's own φιλανθρωπία—his saving kindness toward humanity that appeared in Christ, demonstrating that divine love takes the form of generous, merciful action toward people.

(2×) The two New Testament uses show φιλανθρωπία operating on both human and divine levels. The Maltese showed it through practical hospitality to strangers; God showed it through the incarnation. The German Menschenfreundlichkeit ('friendliness to humans') and Spanish amor a la humanidad capture the essence well—this is kindness rooted in recognition of shared humanity, whether practiced by islanders or by God himself entering human flesh. MORAL GOODNESS

en: kindness, love-for-mankind | es: amor-a-la-humanidad, bondad | fr: amour-de-l'hospitalité, φιλανθρωπία | de: Menschenfreundlichkeit, φιλανθρωπίαν Acts 28:2; Titus 3:4

φῐλάνθρωπ-ος G5364 Adv (1×)

Kindly, in a humane and benevolent manner; with courtesy and generous treatment

Humanity at its best finds expression in this adverb. Classical usage ranged from describing gentle animals to generous wines, always connoting warmth and benevolence. In Acts 27:3, it modifies how the centurion Julius treated Paul—with unusual kindness and consideration for a prisoner. The adverbial form suggests not isolated acts but a manner of relating, a consistent tone of humane treatment. Multilingual evidence shows varied strategies for capturing this warmth: Spanish 'humanamente,' French 'avec-amour-fraternel' (surprisingly), suggesting the translator intuited a depth beyond mere politeness.

(1×) In a kind, humane, and benevolent manner; with generosity of spirit and courteous treatment. Acts 27:3 uses this adverb to describe how the centurion Julius treated Paul, permitting him to visit friends for care—remarkable humanity toward a prisoner. The adverbial form indicates not a single kind act but a mode of relating characterized by warmth, suggesting that true φιλανθρωπία transforms interactions across social boundaries. GRACE AND COMPASSION

en: kindly | es: humanamente | fr: avec-amour-fraternel | de: φιλανθρώπως Acts 27:3

φῐλαργῠρ-ία G5365 N-NFS (1×)

Love of money, avarice, greed for wealth and material possessions

Few vices receive as stark a diagnosis as this one: Paul declares φιλαργυρία 'a root of all kinds of evil' in 1 Timothy 6:10. The compound structure (φίλος + ἄργυρος = loving + silver/money) names the disordered attachment itself, not merely its consequences. Classical Greek recognized this as a defining vice, and Paul's warning proved prophetic—those who crave wealth pierce themselves with many griefs. Interestingly, the semantic domain assignment connects this to 'natural substances' (silver), though its true domain is the human heart's capacity for misplaced devotion.

(1×) Obsessive love of money, avarice, greedy attachment to wealth as an end in itself. First Timothy 6:10's famous declaration positions this as 'a root of all kinds of evil,' the source from which manifold sins grow. The compound structure (loving-money, amor-al-dinero) reveals the pathology: money transitions from means to beloved object, becoming an idol that demands sacrifices its worshipers cannot afford to pay. SILVER AND MONEY

en: love-of-money | es: amor-al-dinero | fr: φιλαργυρία | de: Geldliebe 1Tim 6:10

φῐλάργῠρ-ος G5366 Adj-NMP (2×)

money-loving, greedy, avaricious, devoted to wealth

This compound adjective (φίλος 'loving' + ἄργυρος 'silver/money') describes those whose primary affection is directed toward material wealth. In Luke 16:14, the Pharisees are characterized as φιλάργυροι—lovers of money who scoffed at Jesus' teaching about serving God versus Mammon, unable to hear his critique because of their devotion to wealth. In 2 Timothy 3:2, Paul lists φιλάργυροι among the moral failures that will characterize the last days, placing love of money alongside pride, disobedience, and lack of self-control as marks of a corrupt society.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in vice lists or character indictments. The Pharisees' money-love blinded them to kingdom values; the last-days generation will be marked by the same misplaced devotion. The multilingual glosses consistently use compounds: Spanish amantes del dinero, French aimant l'argent, German geldgierig—all capturing the sense of affection wrongly directed toward wealth rather than God or neighbor. SILVER AND MONEY

en: lovers-of-money, money-lovers | es: amantes-del-dinero | fr: aimant-l'argent, φιλάργυροι | de: geldgierig, φιλάργυροι Luke 16:14; 2Tim 3:2

φῐλαυτ-ος G5367 Adj-NMP (1×)

Loving oneself, self-centered, devoted to one's own interests and pleasure

Self-love anchors Paul's catalog of last-days vices in 2 Timothy 3:2. Classical philosophers debated whether φιλαυτία could be virtuous (the good person rightly loves himself), but Paul's usage is unambiguous: this is narcissistic self-absorption, the root from which other vices sprout. When self becomes the object of primary devotion, community fractures and virtue becomes impossible. The compound (φίλος + αὐτοῦ = loving + oneself) makes the pathology explicit, while multilingual glosses (Spanish 'amantes-de-sí-mismos,' German 'selbstsüchtig') consistently render it pejoratively as selfishness rather than healthy self-regard.

(1×) Characterized by excessive self-love, narcissistic self-absorption, devotion to one's own interests above all else. Second Timothy 3:2 positions this first in a vice catalog describing the character of difficult last days, suggesting self-centeredness as the fountainhead from which other moral failures flow. The Greek compound and cross-linguistic evidence (lovers-of-self, selbstsüchtig) indicate pathological self-focus rather than appropriate self-care. DESIRE AND COVETING

en: lovers-of-self | es: amantes-de-sí-mismos | fr: φίλαυτοι | de: selbstsuechtig 2Tim 3:2

φῐλέω G5368 V-ANA (25×)

To love with personal affection or fondness; to kiss as a greeting or sign of intimacy

Phileo expresses the warm, emotionally engaged dimension of love — friendship, fondness, personal attachment. Where agapao tends toward principled, self-giving love, phileo carries the warmth of genuine affection. Jesus 'loved' Lazarus with this word (John 11:36), and in John 21:15–17, the interplay between agapao and phileo in Jesus' questioning of Peter has captivated interpreters for centuries. The word also carries a concrete physical sense — to kiss — visible in the betrayal scenes where Judas arranges to identify Jesus with a kiss (Matt 26:48; Mark 14:44; Luke 22:47).

1. to love, have affection for (22×) To love with personal affection, warm regard, or friendship — emphasizing emotional attachment and fondness rather than principled commitment. Spanish uses both 'amar' and 'querer' (the latter carrying personal warmth), while French and German use their general love verbs 'aimer' and 'lieben.' The Pharisees 'love' places of honor (Matt 23:6; Luke 20:46); Jesus warns about loving family more than him (Matt 10:37); the Father 'loves' the Son (John 5:20); and the poignant exchange in John 21:15–17 hinges on the nuance between phileo and agapao. LOVE (ACTIVE VERB)

en: I-love, do-you-love, have-loved | es: Me-quieres, ama, amaba | fr: aimer | de: lieben, liebt Matt 6:5; Matt 10:37; Matt 23:6; Luke 20:46

2. to kiss (3×) To kiss someone, whether as a customary greeting, a gesture of affection, or a treacherous sign. Spanish shifts to 'besar' and 'para besar' (to kiss), making the physical act explicit, while French and German retain their general love verbs without distinguishing. All three Synoptic Gospels use this sense for Judas's arranged signal: 'the one I kiss is the man' (Matt 26:48; Mark 14:44; Luke 22:47) — an act that painfully collapses the distance between affection and betrayal. LOVE (ACTIVE VERB)

en: I-kiss, to-kiss | es: bese, para-besar | fr: aimer | de: lieben, liebt Matt 26:48; Mark 14:44; Luke 22:47

φῐλήδ-ονος G5369 Adj-NMP (1×)

Loving pleasure, devoted to enjoyment and sensual gratification rather than duty or God

Pleasure as ultimate good defines this adjective's target. In 2 Timothy 3:4, Paul contrasts φιλήδονοι with φιλόθεοι—lovers of pleasure versus lovers of God, a stark either/or with no middle ground. Classical usage applied it to Bacchic delights and wine's joys. The compound structure (φίλος + ἡδονή = loving + pleasure) reveals the diagnosis: not that pleasure is inherently evil, but that making it one's beloved object—the thing one loves supremely—displaces God and destroys character. Spanish 'amantes-de-placeres' and German 'vergnügungssüchtig' capture the excessive, addictive quality.

(1×) Devoted to pleasure-seeking, loving sensual gratification and enjoyment as supreme goods. Second Timothy 3:4 sets this in sharp antithesis with φιλόθεοι (lovers of God), suggesting these two loves mutually exclude one another. Classical associations with Bacchic revelry and the compound structure (loving-pleasure, amantes-de-placeres) indicate not occasional enjoyment but a life organized around pursuing gratification, with pleasure elevated to the status of a god. DESIRE AND COVETING

en: lovers-of-pleasure | es: amantes-de-placeres | fr: φιλήδονοι | de: vergnuegungssuechtig 2Tim 3:4

φίλημ-α G5370 N-DNS (7×)

A kiss; an act of pressing lips to another person, used as greeting, sign of love, or liturgical expression of fellowship.

Denotes the physical act of kissing, which carried deep social and religious meaning in the ancient world. In the Gospels, the kiss appears in two starkly contrasting scenes: the sinful woman's tearful, loving kisses on Jesus's feet (Luke 7:45), and Judas's betrayal kiss (Luke 22:48) — the same gesture bearing opposite meanings. Paul then transforms the kiss into a liturgical practice, instructing believers four times to greet one another with a 'holy kiss' (Rom 16:16; 1 Cor 16:20; 2 Cor 13:12; 1 Thess 5:26). Spanish distinguishes 'beso' (common kiss) from 'ósculo' (more formal, sacred kiss), mirroring the NT's own shift from social gesture to worship practice.

kiss (7×) A kiss — the physical act of pressing one's lips to another person as a sign of affection, greeting, or reverence. Spanish distinguishes 'beso' (common kiss) from 'ósculo' (a more solemn, liturgical kiss), reflecting the word's range in the NT. In Luke 7:45, the sinful woman's kisses express repentant love; in Luke 22:48, Judas's kiss is the instrument of betrayal. Paul transforms the gesture into a mark of Christian fellowship, commanding believers to greet one another with a 'holy kiss' (Rom 16:16; 1 Cor 16:20; 2 Cor 13:12). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-kiss, kiss, with-a-kiss | es: beso, con-beso, ósculo | fr: Kuss, Philémon, baiser | de: Kuss, φίλημά, φιλήματι Luke 7:45; Luke 22:48; Rom 16:16; 1Cor 16:20; 2Cor 13:12

φιλήμων G5371 N-DMS (1×)

Philemon, a Christian in Colossae to whom Paul wrote the letter bearing his name

The shortest of Paul's letters addresses this individual by name. Philemon owned slaves, hosted a house church, and received a fugitive slave Onesimus back as a brother in Christ. The letter explores radical implications of Christian kinship: how does the gospel transform social hierarchies when slave and master share the same Lord? Paul's gentle persuasion rather than apostolic command reveals his estimation of Philemon's character. The name itself, related to φίλημα (kiss) or φιλέω (to love), may be significant—this beloved friend must now embody the love his name suggests.

(1×) Philemon, a Christian leader in Colossae who hosted a house church and to whom Paul addressed the epistle of Philemon. The letter concerns Onesimus, Philemon's slave who fled but encountered Paul and became a believer. Paul's appeal that Philemon receive Onesimus as a brother tests whether gospel kinship can reshape social realities. Cross-linguistic glosses maintain the name in transliteration (Philemon, Philḗmōn, Φιλήμονι). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: to-Philemon | es: a-Philḗmōn | fr: Φιλήμονι | de: Philemon Phlm 1:1

φῐλ-ητός G5372 N-NMS (1×)

Philetus, a false teacher mentioned by Paul as having wandered from the truth

Names can carry irony. Philetus means 'beloved' or 'worthy of love,' yet Paul mentions him alongside Hymenaeus as one who wandered from truth and upset others' faith (2 Timothy 2:17). Their specific error involved claiming the resurrection had already occurred, a teaching that gutted Christian hope. The lexical entry notes the name derives from φίλητός (to be loved, worthy of love), making the juxtaposition poignant—one whose name suggests belovedness becomes an example of dangerous deviation. Such figures remind us that doctrinal precision matters; ideas have consequences.

(1×) Philetus, a false teacher mentioned in 2 Timothy 2:17 who, with Hymenaeus, deviated from the truth by teaching that the resurrection had already occurred. This undermined believers' faith by collapsing eschatological hope into realized claims. The name, related to φίλητός (beloved, worthy of love), stands in ironic tension with his role as exemplar of dangerous teaching. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve the name (Philetos, Philētos, Philetus). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Philetos | es: Philētos | fr: Φιλητός | de: Philetus 2Tim 2:17

φῐλί-α G5373 N-NFS (1×)

Friendship, affectionate regard, the bond of mutual love and goodwill between persons Friendship stands as one of life's great goods—unless it becomes friendship with the world. James 4:4 employs this term in a startling declaration: φιλία with the world means enmity with God. Classical Greek celebrated friendship as the bond uniting souls, distinguishing it from eros and family affection (στοργή). The New Testament doesn't depreciate friendship itself but interrogates its object: what world are we befriending? When our affections align with systems opposed to God, friendship becomes betrayal. The singular biblical occurrence transforms a positive relational term into a diagnostic question about allegiance.

(1×) Friendship, affectionate regard and bond between persons characterized by mutual love and goodwill. James 4:4's sole New Testament usage employs it surprisingly: 'friendship with the world is enmity with God.' Classical Greek distinguished φιλία from erotic love and family affection, celebrating it as chosen kinship. James's warning doesn't dismiss friendship but questions its object—alignment with worldly values constitutes spiritual adultery, transforming a virtue into vice through misdirection. LOVE (ABSTRACT NOUN)

en: friendship | es: amistad | fr: φιλία | de: Freundschaft Jas 4:4

φιλιππήσιος G5374 N-VMP (1×)

Philippians, residents or natives of the city of Philippi in Macedonia

Paul addressed some of his warmest words to these believers. The Philippians sent financial support multiple times when no other church did (Philippians 4:15), creating a partnership in the gospel that transcended mere patronage. This plural form names the community collectively—not isolated individuals but a body bound by shared faith and mutual affection. The city itself was a Roman colony, and Paul's letter hints at how Christian citizenship relativizes earthly polities. Cross-linguistic glosses maintain the ethnic designation (Philippians, filipenses, Philipper), preserving the corporate identity Paul celebrated.

(1×) The Philippians, residents of Philippi in Macedonia who formed one of Paul's most beloved congregations. Philippians 4:15's reference acknowledges their unique partnership in supporting Paul's ministry financially—a generosity exceeding other churches. The plural ethnic designation (Philippians, filipenses, Philipper) emphasizes corporate identity: Paul addresses a community bound by gospel kinship and proven faithfulness, not merely geographic proximity. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Philippians | es: filipenses | fr: Φιλιππήσιοι | de: Philipper Phil 4:15

φίλιπποι G5375 N-GMP (4×)

Philippi, a major Roman colony in Macedonia; site of Paul's first European church.

The name of a prominent city in the Roman province of Macedonia, originally called Krenides and renamed by Philip II of Macedon. As a Roman colony it held the special civic status of ius Italicum. Paul founded his first European congregation there after his vision of the man from Macedonia (Acts 16:12), and his letter to the Philippians remains one of the most personal and joyful epistles. The plural form Philippoi reflects a common Greek convention for city names.

(4×) The city of Philippi in eastern Macedonia, a Roman colony where Paul established his first European church (Acts 16:12). All four NT occurrences mark it as a geographical reference point in Paul's missionary narrative: the place of Lydia's conversion and the jailer's salvation (Acts 16:12), a stop on the return journey (Acts 20:6), the addressee community of the Philippian letter (Phil 1:1), and a place of earlier suffering recalled in 1 Thessalonians 2:2. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Philippoi | es: Filipos, Phílippoi, Phílippois | fr: Philippe, Φιλίπποις | de: Philippi, Φιλίππους, Φιλίππων Acts 16:12; Acts 20:6; Phil 1:1; 1Thess 2:2

φῐλιππ-ος G5376 N-DMS (37×)

Philip — Greek name meaning 'lover of horses,' borne by the apostle, the evangelist, and Herodian tetrarchs

Philippos ('lover of horses') is a Greek personal name borne by several New Testament figures. Philip the apostle, from Bethsaida, is introduced in John 1:43-48 as the one who brings Nathanael to Jesus and later serves as a mediator for Greek seekers (John 12:21-22). He asks Jesus to 'show us the Father' in the Upper Room discourse, prompting the luminous reply 'he who has seen me has seen the Father' (John 14:8-9). Philip the evangelist, one of the Seven (Acts 6:5), preaches in Samaria (Acts 8:5-13), baptizes the Ethiopian eunuch on the Gaza road (Acts 8:26-39), and later hosts Paul in Caesarea with his four prophesying daughters (Acts 21:8-9). The Herodian Philips — Herod Philip tetrarch of Iturea (Luke 3:1) and Philip husband of Herodias (Matt 14:3; Mark 6:17) — round out the usage.

Philip (proper name) (37×) The Greek proper name Philippos ('horse-lover'), designating at least four individuals in the NT: Philip the apostle from Bethsaida who brought Nathanael to Jesus (John 1:43-48) and mediated for Greek seekers (John 12:21-22); Philip the evangelist, one of the Seven (Acts 6:5), who preached in Samaria and baptized the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:5-39); Philip the tetrarch, son of Herod, who governed Iturea and Trachonitis (Luke 3:1); and Philip the husband of Herodias (Matt 14:3; Mark 6:17). The name's Greek origin — rare among the Twelve — may signal the Hellenized Galilean milieu of Bethsaida. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Philippos | es: -Phílippos, Phílippe, Phílippon | fr: Philippe | de: Philippus Matt 10:3; Matt 14:3; Matt 16:13; Mark 3:18; Mark 6:17

φῐλό-θεος G5377 Adj-NMP (1×)

Loving God, devoted to God, characterized by reverence and affection for the divine

In Paul's vice catalog describing last-days characteristics (2 Timothy 3:2-4), φιλόθεοι provides the sharp contrast: people will be lovers of self, lovers of money, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God. The compound (φίλος + θεός = loving + God) names the supreme allegiance that should order all others. Classical Greek employed it for pious devotion; the New Testament stakes everything on it. One's true beloved reveals itself through choices—whom or what receives our first affections? The positioning of this term opposite multiple disordered loves suggests love's zero-sum nature: we cannot serve two masters.

(1×) Loving God, characterized by devotion and reverent affection for the divine. Second Timothy 3:4 sets φιλόθεοι in stark antithesis with φιλήδονοι (lovers of pleasure), framing the contrast between last-days apostasy and true piety. The compound structure (loving-God, amantes-de-Dios, gottliebend) names the supreme affection that should organize all others, making explicit that love is directional—what we love most determines who we become. GODS AND DEITIES

en: lovers-of-God | es: amantes-de-Dios | fr: φιλόθεοι | de: gottliebend 2Tim 3:4

φῐλόλογ-ος G5378 N-AMS (1×)

Philologus, a Christian in Rome greeted by Paul in his letter to the Romans

This name appears in Paul's extensive greetings in Romans 16:15, grouped with Julia, Nereus, his sister, and Olympas—possibly indicating a house church or family unit. Philologus means 'lover of learning' or 'lover of words,' derived from φίλος (loving) + λόγος (word/learning). Classical Greek applied the term to scholars and those devoted to philosophical argument. Whether this Roman Christian's character matched his name we cannot know, but Paul's inclusion in his greetings honors him as part of the network sustaining gospel witness in the imperial capital.

(1×) Philologus, a Christian in Rome greeted by Paul in Romans 16:15 along with Julia, Nereus, and others, likely members of a house church. The name derives from φιλόλογος (fond of learning/words, scholarly), though classical associations with scholarly pursuits may or may not reflect this individual's character. Cross-linguistic glosses transliterate the name (Philologus, Philólogon, Philélogue), preserving it as a personal identifier within Paul's Roman network. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Philologos | es: a-Philólogon | fr: Philélogue | de: Philologus Rom 16:15

φῐλονῑκ-ία G5379 N-NFS (1×)

Contentiousness, rivalry, disputatious spirit; love of victory leading to quarreling

Competition sours when love of victory overrides love of truth. This noun names the spirit that must win every argument, that turns conversation into contest. Luke 22:24 records the disciples' shocking dispute about greatness even as Jesus approaches crucifixion—φιλονικία at its most tragically ironic moment. Classical Greek distinguished good rivalry (emulation in excellence) from bad (contentious quarreling), but the New Testament usage falls decisively on the negative side. Spanish 'contienda' and French 'dispute' capture the combative spirit, while the domain assignment to 'properties/relations' rather than communication suggests this is about posture, not mere disagreement.

(1×) Contentious dispute, rivalry marked by combative spirit and love of victory for its own sake. Luke 22:24's devastating example shows disciples arguing about greatness while Jesus moves toward the cross, revealing how φιλονικία blinds participants to larger realities. Classical Greek usage ranged from healthy emulation to petty quarreling; the New Testament instance clearly falls in the negative domain—competitive spirit that fractures community by making every interaction a contest. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-dispute | es: contienda | fr: dispute | de: φιλονεικία Luke 22:24

φῐλόνῑκ-ος G5380 Adj-NMS (1×)

Contentious, quarrelsome, given to disputation and love of victory in arguments

The adjectival form of φιλονικία describes those who make everything an argument to win. First Corinthians 11:16 uses it to shut down potential objections to Paul's teaching on worship: 'If anyone seems contentious about this, we have no such custom.' Classical usage could be positive (spirited horses, competitive excellence) or negative (quarrelsome persons), but Paul's context is clearly pejorative. The compound structure (loving-victory, ami-des-querelles) reveals the pathology: not principled disagreement but addiction to disputation itself. Some people love arguing more than truth.

(1×) Characterized by contentiousness and quarrelsome disputation, loving to win arguments regardless of substance. First Corinthians 11:16 employs it to address those who might object to Paul's worship instructions, effectively dismissing such contention as procedurally out of bounds. The compound (loving-victory, contencioso, streitsuchtig) indicates dispositional quarrelsomeness—making arguments for argument's sake rather than pursuing truth or unity. CONTENDING AND STRIVING en: contentious | es: contencioso | fr: ami-des-querelles | de: streitsuchtig 1Cor 11:16

φῐλοξεν-ία G5381 N-GFS (2×)

hospitality, the practice of welcoming and caring for strangers or guests φιλοξενία (literally 'love of strangers') denotes the virtue of welcoming guests and strangers into one's home and life. In the ancient Mediterranean world, where inns were scarce and travel dangerous, hospitality was both a moral obligation and a practical necessity for the spread of the gospel. Romans 12:13 urges believers to 'pursue hospitality' (τὴν φιλοξενίαν διώκοντες) as part of genuine Christian love. Hebrews 13:2 adds a striking motivation: 'Do not neglect hospitality to strangers, for by this some have entertained angels unawares'—evoking Abraham's welcome of the three visitors at Mamre.

(2×) Both New Testament uses present φιλοξενία as a Christian virtue to be actively cultivated. Romans places it in a list of practical expressions of love within the Christian community; Hebrews connects it to the patriarchal tradition of welcoming divine messengers. The German Gastfreundschaft ('guest-friendship') and Spanish hospitalidad both preserve the active, relational character of this practice—not mere tolerance but eager welcome of the stranger. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: hospitality | es: hospitalidad | fr: Gastfreundschaft, hospitalier | de: Gastfreundschaft Rom 12:13; Heb 13:2

φῐλόξεν-ος G5382 Adj-AMS (3×)

hospitable, given to hospitality; loving and welcoming strangers and guests

This adjective describes one who loves strangers (philos "loving" + xenos "stranger/guest"). In the ancient world, where inns were scarce and often disreputable, hospitality was essential for travelers, especially for itinerant Christian missionaries and teachers. Hospitality wasn't just politeness but a moral and religious duty, demonstrating love in action. All three New Testament uses appear in qualification lists for church leaders or general Christian character, showing that welcoming strangers is a mark of mature Christian leadership and discipleship.

(3×) First Timothy 3:2 lists qualifications for an overseer/bishop, including that he must be "hospitable" (philóxenon)—welcoming to strangers and guests, essential for one whose home would host church gatherings and traveling ministers. Titus 1:8 similarly requires that an elder be "hospitable" (philóxenon), along with loving good, self-controlled, upright, holy, and disciplined. First Peter 4:9 commands all believers to "show hospitality" (philóxenoi) to one another without grumbling—mutual welcome as Christian virtue. The Spanish hospitalario(s), French and German forms of philoxenos all convey the hospitable character. The consistent emphasis on hospitality for leaders and all believers shows it as fundamental Christian practice—opening one's home and resources reflects God's welcome of us and creates networks for gospel spread. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: hospitable | es: hospitalario, hospitalarios | fr: φιλόξενοι, φιλόξενον | de: gastfreundlich 1Tim 3:2; Titus 1:8; 1Pet 4:9

φῐλοπρωτ-εύω G5383 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

Loving to be first, striving for preeminence and supremacy over others

Diotrephes exemplifies this vice in 3 John 1:9—he loves being first, refuses to acknowledge John's authority, and spreads malicious gossip. This compound verb (φίλος + πρῶτος = loving + first) diagnoses the disease: not leadership itself but love of preeminence, the need to dominate and control. Such individuals cannot bear shared authority or deference to others. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'que-ama-ser-primero,' German 'den-Vorrang-liebend') preserves the active participial sense: this is ongoing striving, continuous jockeying for position that poisons community life.

(1×) To love being first, to strive for preeminence and supremacy over others in community or organization. Third John 1:9 uses this to characterize Diotrephes, who refuses apostolic authority and controls the church through gossip and exclusion. The compound verb (loving-to-be-first, ama-ser-primero) reveals the pathology: not legitimate leadership but narcissistic need for dominance, the compulsion to occupy first place regardless of cost to community or truth. FIRST AND FOREMOST en: loving-to-be-first | es: que-ama-ser-primero | fr: φιλοπρωτεύων | de: den-Vorrang-liebend 3John 1:9

φίλος G5384 Adj-NMS (29×)

Friend, beloved companion—one bound by affection and loyalty rather than kinship alone

The adjective-turned-substantive φίλος ('dear, beloved') designates a friend in the warm, relational sense: someone chosen through affection rather than obligated by blood or contract. Jesus is called 'a friend of tax collectors and sinners' (Matt 11:19, Luke 7:34)—a charge he embraces as mission. The parable of the persistent friend at midnight (Luke 11:5-8) and the raising of Lazarus ('our friend Lazarus has fallen asleep,' John 11:11) both explore what friendship demands. Spanish 'amigo,' French 'ami,' and German 'Freund' converge perfectly, signaling the universal clarity of this relational concept.

friend, beloved companion (29×) A friend or beloved companion, someone united by mutual affection and loyalty. Jesus redefines φίλος theologically: 'You are my friends if you do what I command' (John 15:14-15), elevating disciples from servants to friends. The term also appears in negative contrast—Pilate is warned 'you are not Caesar's friend' (John 19:12)—and in hospitality settings like Lazarus (John 11:11) and the midnight parable (Luke 11:5-8). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-friend, friend, friends | es: amigo, amigos, un-amigo | fr: Freund, ami | de: Freund Matt 11:19; Luke 7:6; Luke 7:34; Luke 11:5

φῐλοσοφ-ία G5385 N-GFS (1×)

Philosophy, systematic investigation of reality, the love and pursuit of wisdom

Paul employs this term with notable caution in Colossians 2:8: 'See to it that no one takes you captive through hollow and deceptive philosophy.' Classical Greek celebrated φιλοσοφία as wisdom's pursuit, but Paul's context targets a specific corrupted version—philosophy according to human tradition and elemental spirits rather than Christ. The compound (φίλος + σοφία = loving + wisdom) inherently seems positive, yet love of wisdom can become its own idol when disconnected from truth's source. Paul doesn't dismiss reason but interrogates its foundations: whose wisdom are we pursuing?

(1×) Philosophy, the systematic love and pursuit of wisdom through investigation and speculation. Colossians 2:8's sole New Testament usage warns against 'hollow and deceptive philosophy' based on human tradition rather than Christ, not dismissing all philosophical inquiry but exposing pretenders. The Greek compound (loving-wisdom, amor-de-sabiduría, Philosophie) inherently suggests a noble pursuit, but Paul's context asks the decisive question: wisdom according to what standard and source? KNOWLEDGE AND LEARNING en: philosophy | es: filosofía | fr: φιλοσοφίας | de: Philosophie Col 2:8

φῐλόσοφος G5386 N-GMP (1×)

Philosophers, lovers of wisdom, those who pursue knowledge of reality through reason

Paul's Athenian speech in Acts 17 brings him before Epicurean and Stoic philosophers, and verse 18 names them with this term. Classical Athens distinguished philosophers from sophists and mere scholars; true philosophers pursued reality's underlying truth. The encounter reveals different wisdom cultures in collision: Greco-Roman philosophical discourse versus apostolic proclamation of Christ crucified. Some philosophers mocked Paul's resurrection claims; others wanted to hear more. The plural form emphasizes the diversity within ancient philosophy—not a monolith but competing schools, yet all sharing commitment to logos (reason/word) as the path to understanding.

(1×) Philosophers, those devoted to pursuing wisdom and understanding reality through rational investigation and speculation. Acts 17:18 identifies Epicurean and Stoic philosophers as those engaging Paul in Athens, representing Greco-Roman intellectual culture's elite. The term (φιλόσοφος, lover-of-wisdom, filósofos) distinguishes these from casual learners—these are professionally committed to wisdom's pursuit, making the collision with Paul's kerygma (proclamation) a meeting of fundamentally different epistemologies. KNOWLEDGE AND LEARNING en: philosophers | es: filósofos | fr: philosophe | de: φιλοσόφων Acts 17:18

φῐλόστοργ-ος G5387 Adj-NMP (1×)

Tenderly affectionate, loving with natural family warmth and devoted attachment

Family love—the Greek στοργή—receives adjectival form in this compound, with φίλος added for emphasis: tenderly devoted, affectionately attached. Romans 12:10 employs it in Paul's instruction on community life: 'Be devoted to one another in brotherly love.' The classical usage applied especially to parents and children, nurses and charges, suggesting instinctive, natural affection rather than chosen friendship. Paul transposes this into ecclesial life: treat fellow believers with the warm, protective devotion one gives blood relatives. The multilingual evidence (afectuosos, liebevoll, aimant-le-bien) emphasizes emotional warmth and tenderness.

(1×) Characterized by tender, devoted affection of the kind naturally found in families; warmly attached with protective care. Romans 12:10 instructs believers to embody this toward one another in brotherly love, transposing family affection into church life. The compound (φιλόστοργος, relating to φίλος + στοργή) suggests instinctive, natural warmth—not dutiful obligation but genuine emotional attachment. Cross-linguistic glosses (affectionate, afectuosos, liebevoll) emphasize tender devotion. LOVE AND LOYALTY

en: affectionate | es: afectuosos | fr: aimant-le-bien | de: liebevoll Rom 12:10

φῐλότεκν-ος G5388 Adj-AFP (1×)

Loving one's children, devoted to and affectionate toward one's offspring

(1×) Loving one's children, devoted to and affectionate toward one's offspring with active care. Titus 2:4 includes this among virtues older women should cultivate in younger wives, suggesting parental love as something teachable rather than merely instinctive. Classical usage noted mothers as φιλότεκνοι in comparative and superlative degrees. The compound (loving-children, amantes-de-hijos) indicates emotional devotion and protective care, distinguishing warm affection from mere dutiful childrearing. LOVE AND LOYALTY en: loving-children | es: amantes-de-hijos | fr: φιλοτέκνους | de: kinderliebend Titus 2:4

φῐλοτῑμ-έομαι G5389 V-PPM/P-AMS (3×)

to aspire, be ambitious, make it one's aim; to seek honor or set something as one's goal

This compound verb (philos "loving" + timē "honor") originally meant to love or seek honor, to be ambitious. It can be neutral (having ambition, pursuing a goal) or negative (seeking vainglory). The New Testament uses are entirely positive—ambitious determination to accomplish worthy spiritual goals. Paul uses it for his missionary aspirations and his aim to please the Lord. It describes holy ambition—channeling the drive for achievement toward God-honoring purposes rather than selfish glory. The Christian life involves passionate pursuit, not passive drift.

(3×) Romans 15:20 explains Paul's missionary strategy: he made it his "ambition" (philotimoúmenon) to preach where Christ was not named, pioneering new territory rather than building on others' foundations. Second Corinthians 5:9 declares Paul's controlling purpose: "we make it our aim" (philotimoumetha) to please Christ, whether at home in the body or away—life's driving ambition centered on divine approval. First Thessalonians 4:11 exhorts believers to "aspire" (philotimeisthai) to live quietly, mind their own affairs, and work with their hands—ambition directed toward humble, productive living. The Spanish nos esforzamos/tener como honor/teniendo por ambición, French rivaliser/s'efforcer, and German sich bemühen all convey the striving/ambitious effort sense. Paul redeems ambition by redirecting it from self-glory to God-glory, from worldly honor to Christ-honoring aims. ZEAL AND JEALOUSY en: being-ambitious, to-aspire, we-are-ambitious | es: nos-esforzamos, tener-como-honor, teniendo-por-ambición | fr: rivaliser, s'efforcer | de: sich-bemuehen Rom 15:20; 2Cor 5:9; 1Thess 4:11

φῐλό-φρων G5390 Adv (1×)

Kindly, in a friendly and warmly disposed manner; with gracious hospitality

Hospitality transforms strangers into guests. This adverb modifies how Publius, the leading official of Malta, welcomed Paul and his shipwreck companions in Acts 28:7. The root adjective φιλόφρων means 'kindly disposed, friendly,' and the adverbial form captures manner: not grudging provision but generous, warmhearted welcome. Classical usage applied it to gracious greetings, friendly glances, kind words—the entire posture of warmth toward another. Publius didn't merely shelter these strangers for duty's sake; he received them φιλοφρόνως, with the gracious hospitality that sees every guest as worthy of honor.

(1×) In a kindly, friendly, and warmly disposed manner; with gracious hospitality and generous spirit. Acts 28:7 uses this adverb to describe how Publius welcomed and lodged Paul and companions after their shipwreck—not grudging shelter but warmhearted hospitality. The adverbial form indicates manner of relating: friendly demeanor, kind disposition, generous welcome that honors guests. Multilingual evidence varies (hospitably, amablemente, avec-amabilité), seeking equivalents for gracious friendliness. TENDERNESS AND GENTLENESS

en: hospitably | es: amablemente | fr: avec-amabilité | de: φιλοφρόνως Acts 28:7

φῐλό-φρων G5391

kindly disposed, friendly; showing warmth and goodwill toward others

This adjective describes a disposition marked by genuine warmth and friendliness, the kind that shows in one's face and manner of greeting. Ancient writers used it for those who welcomed guests graciously, who looked kindly upon others, who were disposed to treat people with generous goodwill. The adverbial form frequently appears in contexts of hospitable reception—greeting someone warmly, welcoming them with authentic kindness rather than cold formality. It captures both the inner attitude and its outward expression in friendly behavior.

φῑμ-όω G5392 V-AIA-3S (8×)

To muzzle, silence, or put to silence; used literally of restraining an animal and figuratively of silencing persons or forces.

Phimoo originally meant to muzzle an animal, and the NT preserves this concrete sense when quoting Deuteronomy 25:4 about not muzzling an ox (1 Cor 9:9, 1 Tim 5:18). Far more dramatically, Jesus uses the word to silence a demon (Mark 1:25), rebuke a storm (Mark 4:39), and his opponents are 'muzzled' into speechlessness (Matt 22:34). The Spanish translations split revealingly: 'pondrás bozal' (you shall put a muzzle) for the literal sense, versus 'Cállate' and 'Enmudece' (be silent, be speechless) for the figurative.

1. silence, put to silence, render speechless (6×) To silence, put to silence, render speechless – the figurative extension of muzzling applied to speech and supernatural forces. Jesus commands an unclean spirit 'Be silent!' (Mark 1:25, phimotheti), and the same word rebukes the wind and sea (Mark 4:39). In Matt 22:34 the Sadducees are 'muzzled' by Jesus's arguments. Spanish distinguishes 'Cállate' (shut up) and 'Enmudece' (be struck dumb), capturing the range from commanded silence to involuntary speechlessness. The German 'den Mund stopfen' (to stop the mouth) preserves the physical metaphor. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: Be-silent, be-muzzled, he-silenced | es: Cállate, Enmudece, enmudece | fr: faire-taire, φιμοῦν | de: den-Mund-stopfen, Φιμώθητι, ἐφίμωσεν Matt 22:12; Matt 22:34; Mark 1:25; Mark 4:39; Luke 4:35

2. muzzle, restrain from eating (2×) To muzzle an animal, preventing it from eating while it works – the original, literal sense. Both occurrences (1 Cor 9:9, 1 Tim 5:18) quote Deut 25:4: 'You shall not muzzle an ox while it treads out the grain.' Paul uses this agricultural law as an a fortiori argument for supporting gospel workers. The Spanish 'pondrás bozal' (you shall put a muzzle) and French 'museler' retain the concrete animal-restraint imagery that grounds the metaphorical argument. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: you-shall-muzzle | es: pondrás-bozal | fr: museler, φιμώσεις | de: den-Mund-stopfen 1Cor 9:9; 1Tim 5:18

φλέγων G5393 N-AMS (1×)

Phlegon, a Christian in Rome greeted by Paul in his letter to the Romans

Among Paul's extensive greetings in Romans 16, Phlegon appears in verse 14 alongside Hermes, Patrobas, Hermas, and other brothers. The name derives from φλέγω (to burn, blaze), suggesting 'burning' or 'blazing'—whether describing temperament or simply a common slave name we cannot know. Paul's inclusion in these greetings honors individuals we know nothing else about, reminding us that the gospel spreads through networks of ordinary believers whose names are recorded in apostolic affection even if history remembers nothing else. Cross-linguistic glosses transliterate the name (Phlegon, Phlégonta).

(1×) Phlegon, a Christian in Rome greeted by Paul in Romans 16:14 among a cluster of names including Hermes, Patrobas, and Hermas. The name relates to φλέγω (to burn/blaze), though whether this reflects character or is simply a conventional name is unknown. Cross-linguistic glosses preserve the name through transliteration (Phlegon, Phlégonta), marking this individual as part of Paul's Roman network. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Phlegon | es: a-Phlégonta | fr: Phlégon | de: Phlegon Rom 16:14

φλογ-ίζω G5394 V-PPM/P-NFS (2×)

to set on fire, kindle, inflame, burn

φλογίζω means to set something ablaze or cause it to burn, derived from φλόξ ('flame'). James uses it twice in rapid succession in his vivid description of the tongue's destructive power. In James 3:6, he writes that 'the tongue is a fire' and that it φλογίζει ('sets on fire') the course of nature, while itself being φλογιζομένη ('set on fire') by hell. The doubled use creates a chain of conflagration: the tongue, ignited by Gehenna, in turn ignites the whole cycle of human life, spreading destruction like a wildfire racing through dry timber.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in the same verse (James 3:6), creating a theological chain reaction. The tongue receives destructive fire from hell and passes it on to inflame all of human existence. The Spanish que inflama and French forms preserve the active/passive distinction visible in the Greek participles—the tongue both inflames and is inflamed. James' point is that speech can be both the recipient and transmitter of destructive, hellish energy. FIRE AND BURNING

en: being-set-on-fire, setting-on-fire | es: que-inflama, siendo-inflamada | fr: φλογίζουσα, φλογιζομένη | de: in-Brand-setzen Jas 3:6

φλόξ G5395 N-DFS (7×)

A flame or blaze of fire; visible burning used of theophanies, eschatological judgment, and the torment of the afterlife.

Refers to the visible, luminous part of a fire — the flame itself — carrying intense theological freight in the NT. It appears in theophanic contexts where God manifests through fire: the burning bush where an angel appears 'in a flame of fire' (Acts 7:30) and the description of angels as 'flames of fire' (Heb 1:7). It also marks eschatological judgment, as when the Lord Jesus is revealed 'in flaming fire' (2 Thess 1:8) and his eyes are 'like a flame of fire' (Rev 1:14). In Luke 16:24, it names the tormenting fire of Hades. French

'flamme,' German 'Flamme,' and Spanish 'llama' all render it with equal directness.

flame, blaze (7×) A flame or blaze — the visible, burning portion of a fire. Used in the NT primarily in theophanic and eschatological settings: the flame of the burning bush (Acts 7:30), angels described as flames of fire (Heb 1:7), Christ revealed in flaming fire at his return (2 Thess 1:8), and his eyes like a flame (Rev 1:14). In Luke 16:24 it names the tormenting fire of Hades. French 'flamme,' German 'Flamme,' Spanish 'llama' all render it uniformly, confirming a single concrete-to-metaphorical semantic range. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-flame, flame, of-flame | es: de-llama, llama | fr: Flamme, flamme | de: Flamme, φλογὶ Luke 16:24; Acts 7:30; 2Thess 1:8; Heb 1:7; Rev 1:14

φλῠᾱρ-έω G5396 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

To babble against, to prate maliciously or gossip in an attacking manner

Malicious gossip finds verbal form in this compound. Third John 1:10 employs it to describe Diotrephes's behavior: he babbles against John and the brothers with evil words. Classical usage meant talking nonsense or playing the fool, but the New Testament instance adds intentional malice—this isn't mere foolish chatter but verbal assault through gossip and slander. The compound structure (φλύαρος + -έω = babbler + verb) suggests empty talk weaponized. Spanish 'parloteando-contra' and German 'schwätzen' capture the trivializing yet damaging nature: words meant to harm cloaked in casual chatter.

(1×) To speak malicious nonsense against someone, to gossip in an attacking manner or slander through trivializing chatter. Third John 1:10 uses this to describe Diotrephes's verbal attacks against John and other believers—not reasoned criticism but poisonous babbling designed to undermine. The compound (φλυαρέω, from φλύαρος = babbler) combines verbal emptiness with malicious intent, suggesting gossip and slander dressed as casual talk. IDLE TALK BOASTING en: babbling-against | es: parloteando-contra | fr: φλυαρῶν | de: schwaetzen 3John 1:10

φλύᾱρ-ος G5397 Adj-NFP (1×)

Gossips, idle talkers, those who spread trivial or harmful talk about others

First Timothy 5:13 warns about younger widows becoming φλύαροι—gossips and busybodies who go from house to house saying what they shouldn't. The plural feminine adjective (used substantively as a noun) names those who traffic in others' business, spreading talk that ranges from trivial to destructive. Classical usage applied it to silly talk and foolery, but the biblical context emphasizes social harm: gossip fractures trust, spreads falsehood, and wastes time that should serve better purposes. Spanish 'chismosas' and German 'Schwätzer' capture both the trivializing and the damaging aspects.

(1×) Gossips, those who engage in idle talk about others, spreading trivial or harmful information. First Timothy 5:13 warns younger widows risk becoming φλύαροι and busybodies, going house to house with inappropriate speech. The term combines verbal emptiness with social harm—talk that serves no constructive purpose but damages relationships and reputations. Cross-linguistic glosses (gossips, chismosas, Schwätzer) emphasize both the idle and the malicious dimensions. IDLE TALK BOASTING en: gossips | es: chismosas | fr: φλύαροι | de: Schwaetzer 1Tim 5:13

φοβερός G5398 Adj-NFS (3×)

fearful, terrible; causing fear or dread, or worthy of reverent fear

This adjective describes something that inspires fear—either terror (something frightening) or awe (something worthy of reverence). The root phobos (fear) can mean either dread or respect. All three New Testament uses appear in Hebrews, describing fearful realities in relation to God: the expectation of judgment, falling into God's hands, and Moses' reaction to Sinai's theophany. These are not irrational fears but appropriate responses to divine holiness and judgment. The term captures the seriousness and weight of encountering the living God.

(3×) Hebrews 10:27 warns apostates of a "fearful" (phobera) expectation of judgment and fury of fire about to consume God's adversaries—terrifying prospect for those who spurn Christ. Hebrews 10:31 declares it is a "fearful" (phoberón) thing to fall into the hands of the living God—his holiness makes his judgment appropriately terrifying. Hebrews 12:21 describes Moses' response to Sinai: so "terrible" (phoberón) was the sight that Moses said, "I tremble with fear"—even the mediator overwhelmed by the theophany's weight. The Spanish terrible, French and German furchtbar all convey the fearful/terrible quality. These are not phobias but rational fear—the appropriate response to holiness, judgment, and divine majesty that rightly inspires trembling and drives people either to repentance or confirms them in apostasy. TERROR AND AWE en: fearful | es: terrible | fr: furchtbar | de: furchtbar Heb 10:27; Heb 10:31; Heb 12:21

φοβέω G5399 V-AMP-2P (95×)

To fear, be afraid; to reverence or stand in awe of God; encompasses terror before danger and worshipful awe before the divine.

Fear in Scripture is never a single emotion. This verb spans the full spectrum — from the raw terror of disciples in a storm (Matt 14:26) to the reverent awe that marks true worship (Luke 1:50, 'His mercy is on those who fear Him'). The passive-deponent form (phobeomai) makes the one who fears the grammatical subject of an experience that overtakes them. Acts 10 uses it three times of Cornelius the God-fearer, where 'fearing God' is practically a technical term for Gentile devotion. Spanish captures the range with 'temieron' (they were terrified) alongside 'temed' (revere!), while German 'sich fürchten' maintains the reflexive vulnerability of being seized by fear.

1. be afraid, fear (83×) To be afraid, to experience fear or alarm in the face of danger, threat, or the supernatural. This dominant sense (83 occurrences) covers human terror before storms (Matt 14:26), fear of authorities (Matt 10:28), dread of bad news (Matt 1:20 — 'do not be afraid'), and alarm at divine manifestations. Spanish 'temieron/temáis' and German 'sich fürchten' consistently render this visceral, involuntary fear. The angelic 'Fear not!' (me phobou) presupposes this very human reaction to the overwhelming. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fear, feared, were-afraid | es: temed, temieron, temáis | fr: craindre | de: fürchtet, sich-fuerchten Matt 1:20; Matt 9:8; Matt 10:26; Matt 10:28

2. reverence, stand in awe of God (11×) To reverence, worship, or stand in awe of God — a settled disposition rather than a momentary fright. Luke 1:50 ('His mercy is on those who fear Him') and Acts 10:2, 22, 35 (Cornelius as 'God-fearing') use this sense as virtually a religious identity marker. The fear here is not terror but profound respect that shapes one's whole life. Spanish 'teme/temed' in this context carries reverent weight, and the repeated 'God-fearing' construction in Acts shows this had become a recognized category for devout Gentiles. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fear, fearing | es: que-temen, teme, temed | fr: craindre | de: fürchtet, sich-fuerchten Luke 1:50; Luke 18:2; Acts 10:2; Acts 10:22; Acts 10:35

3. (1×) A single occurrence in Eph 5:33 where a wife is called to 'fear' (phobetai) her husband — not cringing terror, but a respectful regard that mirrors the church's reverence for Christ (the immediate context). English 'she might fear,' Spanish 'respete,' and German 'sich fürchten' each approach this differently: Spanish notably chooses 'respete' (respect) rather than a fear word, revealing how translators interpret this as deference within a relationship rather than either dread or worship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: she-might-fear | es: respete | fr: craindre | de: sich-fuerchten Eph 5:33

φόβ-ητρον G5400 N-NNP (1×)

Terrors, frightful phenomena, things that cause extreme fear or dread

Luke's apocalyptic discourse (Luke 21:11) lists φόβητρα among the signs preceding the end: great earthquakes, famines, plagues, and fearful sights from heaven. The plural neuter noun names terror-inducing phenomena, whether natural or supernatural. Classical usage included scarecrows (things meant to frighten) and tragic masks of Furies, always emphasizing their function to inspire dread. Luke's context suggests cosmic disturbances that shatter normal reality, signs unmistakable in their otherworldly terror. The multilingual evidence (terrores, chose-effrayante) preserves the fear-inducing function rather than specifying particular phenomena.

(1×) Frightful phenomena, terrifying sights or events that inspire extreme fear and dread. Luke 21:11's apocalyptic list includes φόβητρα alongside earthquakes, famines, and plagues—fearful portents from heaven signaling cosmic disruption. Classical usage ranged from scarecrows to tragic Fury-masks, always emphasizing terror-inducing function. The plural neuter form and multilingual glosses (terrors, terrores, chose-effrayante) keep focus on fear-inducing quality rather than identifying specific phenomena. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: terrors | es: terrores | fr: chose-effrayante | de: φόβητρά Luke 21:11

φόβος G5401 N-AMS (47×)

fear, dread, reverence — the emotion of alarm before danger or awe before the divine

Phobos covers the full spectrum of fear, from sheer terror at the sight of an angel (Luke 1:12) or a storm-walking figure (Matt 14:26) to the trembling reverence that falls on communities after a divine act (Luke 7:16; Acts 2:43). Its 47 New Testament occurrences reveal a word that refuses to split neatly into 'negative fear' and 'positive awe' — the women at the empty tomb experience both simultaneously, departing 'with fear and great joy' (Matt 28:8). Classical Greek distinguished phobos (panic, visceral dread) from deos (cautious apprehension), but the LXX and New Testament collapsed that boundary, letting phobos carry the weight of yir'at YHWH. Spanish 'temor,' French 'crainte,' and German 'Furcht' each replicate this same breadth, blending terror and reverence in a single word.

fear, dread, reverence (47×) The full emotional range from panic dread to reverential awe, encompassing terror before supernatural manifestations (Matt 14:26 the disciples' fear on the sea; Matt 28:4 the guards at the tomb), communal awe following miracles or divine judgments (Luke 7:16; Acts 5:11), and the godly reverence commended as an ethical posture (Rom 13:7 'fear to whom fear'; Phil 2:12 'with fear and trembling'). The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'miedo/temor,' French 'crainte,' German 'Furcht' — uniformly renders all 47 occurrences with a single term, confirming that the semantic unity of phobos resists subdivision into separate lexical senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-fear, fear | es: miedo, temor | fr: crainte | de: Furcht Matt 14:26; Matt 28:4; Matt 28:8; Mark 4:41; Luke 1:12

G5402 N-AFS (1×)

Phoebe, a servant or deacon of the church at Cenchreae commended by Paul Romans 16:1 introduces Phoebe as διάκονος (servant/deacon) of the church at Cenchreae, Paul's commendation suggesting she likely carried the letter to Rome. The name derives from Greek mythology (Phoebe, daughter of Uranus and Gaia, mother of Phoebus Apollo), but for this Christian woman it's simply her identifier. Paul asks the Romans to welcome her worthily and assist her, noting she has been a πρόστατις (benefactor/patroness) to many, including Paul himself. This brief mention reveals a woman of means, leadership, and trusted service in the early church.

(1×) Phoebe, a διάκονος (servant/deacon/minister) of the church at Cenchreae whom Paul commends to the Romans in Romans 16:1. Likely the letter-carrier, she is described as a benefactor (πρόστατις) to many including Paul, suggesting a woman of means and influence. The name (Phoebe, Phoibē) connects to Greek mythology but here identifies a trusted leader in the Aegean church network. Paul's commendation requests welcome and assistance befitting her service. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Phoibe | es: a-Phoibēn | fr: effrayant | de: Phoebe Rom 16:1

Φοῖνιξ G5403 N-AFS (3×)

Phoenicia, a coastal region north of Palestine along the eastern Mediterranean

Phoenicia was the ancient name for the coastal strip of modern-day Lebanon and northern Israel, home to seafaring peoples famous for commerce, purple dye, and alphabet development. Major cities included Tyre and Sidon. Though predominantly Gentile, the region had historical connections to Israel and appears in Jesus' ministry (the Syrophoenician woman). In Acts, Phoenicia becomes significant in the early church's geographic expansion as believers scattered by persecution carry the gospel north along the coast, extending the mission beyond Jerusalem and Judea.

(3×) Acts 11:19 traces believers scattered by Stephen's persecution traveling as far as "Phoenicia" (Phoinikēn), Cyprus, and Antioch, initially preaching only to Jews. Acts 15:3 describes Paul and Barnabas passing through "Phoenicia" (Phoinikēs) on their way to the Jerusalem council, reporting Gentile conversions and causing great joy among believers. Acts 21:2 mentions Paul finding a ship crossing to "Phoenicia" (Phoinikēn) on his final journey to Jerusalem. The Spanish Fenicia/Phoiniêkē/Phoiníkē, French Phoiniké, and German retention of Greek forms show transliteration of the place name. Phoenicia serves as a geographic marker in the expanding missionary movement, a Gentile territory increasingly populated with believers as the gospel spreads northward from Judea. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Phoinike, Phoinikē | es: Fenicia, Phoiniêkē, Phoiníkē | fr: Phoiniké | de: Φοινίκην, Φοινίκης Acts 11:19; Acts 15:3; Acts 21:2

φοῖνιξ G5404 N-GMP (2×)

palm tree, date palm; palm branches used in celebration

The φοῖνιξ (phoenix palm, date palm) was valued throughout the Mediterranean for its fruit, timber, and symbolic significance. Palm branches became emblems of victory and celebration in Jewish tradition. John 12:13 describes the crowd taking τὰ βαΐα τῶν φοινίκων ('branches of palm trees') to wave as they welcomed Jesus into Jerusalem, shouting 'Hosanna!' In Revelation 7:9, the great multitude before God's throne holds φοίνικες in their hands—palm branches now signifying not earthly victory but eternal triumph in the presence of the Lamb.

(2×) The two uses show φοῖνιξ in its celebratory, symbolic function. At Jesus' triumphal entry, the palms declared him a conquering king (though the crowd misunderstood what kind of victory he would win). In Revelation's heavenly vision, the palms in the hands of the redeemed from every nation declare final, eschatological victory. The German Palmen and Spanish palmas maintain the clear reference to this distinctive tree and its branches. PALM TREE ORNAMENT

en: palm-branches, palm-trees | es: palmas | fr: Palmen, palme | de: Palmen John 12:13; Rev 7:9

φοῖνιξ G5405 N-AMS (1×)

Phoenix, a harbor city on the southern coast of Crete

Acts 27:12 names Phoenix as the hoped-for destination when Paul's ship faced dangerous weather. The harbor on Crete's south coast offered better winter shelter than Fair Havens. The name relates to φοῖνιξ (palm tree, Phoenician, the color purple-red), though which association gave the city its name is unclear. Luke's narrative uses the place to heighten tension: the ship attempted to reach Phoenix but never made it, driven instead toward shipwreck. Geography becomes plot as the centurion and pilot's decision to sail despite Paul's warning leads to disaster.

(1×) Phoenix, a harbor city on the southern coast of Crete that offered better winter shelter than Fair Havens. Acts 27:12 identifies it as the intended destination when Paul's ship attempted to sail despite dangerous conditions, a decision that led to shipwreck. The place name (Phoenix, Phoînix, Phénicie) relates to φοῖνιξ (palm/Phoenician/purple-red), though the city's name etymology is uncertain. Luke uses the geographic reference to mark the fateful decision to sail. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Phoinix | es: Phoînix | fr: Phénicie | de: Φοίνικα Acts 27:12

φον-εύς G5406 N-DMP (7×)

A murderer, killer, or slayer; one who unlawfully takes human life, used both of literal killers and of those who persecute the righteous.

Designates a person who takes another's life unlawfully — a murderer or killer. In the NT it appears in contexts ranging from royal retribution (Matt 22:7, the king destroying the murderers who killed his servants) to prophetic accusation (Acts 7:52, Stephen charging the Sanhedrin as 'betrayers and murderers' of the Righteous One). In Acts 28:4, pagan islanders assume Paul must be a murderer when a viper fastens on his hand, and in 1 Peter 4:15 Christians are warned not to suffer as a murderer. The multilingual evidence is consistent — Spanish 'asesino,' French 'meurtrier,' German 'Mörder' — each naming a deliberate, culpable killer.

murderer, killer (7×) A murderer or slayer — one who unlawfully kills another human being. Spanish 'asesino,' French 'meurtrier,' and German 'Mörder' all consistently render it as a deliberate, culpable killer. Stephen uses it to accuse the Sanhedrin of being 'murderers' of the Righteous One (Acts 7:52; cf. Acts 3:14), while in Matt 22:7 a king destroys the murderers who killed his messengers. In Acts 28:4 the Maltese assume Paul is a murderer when a viper strikes him, and 1 Pet 4:15 lists it among the disgraces a Christian must not incur. MURDERER KILLER en: a-murderer, murderer, murderers | es: asesino, asesinos, asesinos, | fr: meurtrier | de: Moerder, φονέα, φονεύς Matt 22:7; Acts 3:14; Acts 7:52; Acts 28:4; 1Pet 4:15

φον-εύω G5407 V-AIA-2P (12×)

phoneuō – to murder, to commit unlawful killing; the verb behind the Sixth Commandment prohibition

The verb phoneuō ('commit murder') denotes the unlawful, deliberate taking of human life, distinguished in Greek moral thought from lawful killing in war (apokteinō being the broader term). Its New Testament profile is shaped by the Decalogue: 'You shall not murder' (Matt 5:21; 19:18; Mark 10:19; Luke 18:20; Rom 13:9; James 2:11). Jesus deepens the commandment in the Sermon on the Mount, declaring that anger itself makes one 'liable to judgment' just as the murderer is (Matt 5:21-22). James deploys it in sharp social critique – 'You murder and covet' (James 4:2) – and 'you have condemned and murdered the righteous person' (James 5:6). The word thus spans legal prohibition, moral intensification, and prophetic accusation. Spanish matar, French tuer, and German toeten render it as a single sense throughout.

commit murder (12×) To commit unlawful murder, the verb of the Sixth Commandment. Cited in Decalogue quotations (Matt 5:21; 19:18; Rom 13:9; James 2:11), deepened by Jesus to include anger (Matt 5:21-22), and wielded as prophetic indictment by James (James 4:2; 5:6). Spanish matar, French tuer, and German toeten treat all occurrences as one undivided sense of unlawful killing. KILLING AND REMOVING en: having-murdered, murders, you-murder | es: matarás, matas, matasteis | fr: tuer | de: toeten, φονευσάντων, φονεύσεις Matt 5:21; Matt 19:18; Matt 23:31; Matt 23:35

φόνος G5408 N-AMS (9×)

Murder, killing, slaughter; the unlawful or violent taking of human life.

Phonos denotes the act of murder or violent killing. Derived from the root found in theino ('to strike'), it carries the weight of deliberate, unlawful bloodshed. Jesus lists it among the evils that proceed from the heart (Matt 15:19; Mark 7:21), and Luke uses it to describe Barabbas's crime (Luke 23:19, 25; Mark 15:7). It appears in vice catalogs alongside strife and deceit (Rom 1:29) and in the catalog of sins that the unrepentant refuse to abandon (Rev 9:21). The Spanish homicidio/asesinatos, French meurtre, and German Mord consistently render it as deliberate, criminal killing.

murder, killing, slaughter (9×) The act of murder, homicide, or violent slaughter – the deliberate, unlawful taking of human life. Jesus identifies phonos as one of the defilements originating in the human heart (Matt 15:19; Mark 7:21), placing it alongside adultery, theft, and blasphemy. Luke applies it concretely to the insurrection-related killing committed by Barabbas (Luke 23:19, 25; Mark 15:7). Paul includes it among the characteristic sins of those given over to a debased mind (Rom 1:29), and Revelation notes that the survivors of the plagues still did not repent of their murders (Rev 9:21). Multilingual evidence (spa homicidio/asesinatos, fra meurtre, deu Mord, eng murder) confirms a single unified sense of criminal killing. KILLING AND REMOVING en: murder, murders, of-murder | es: asesinatos, de-homicidio, homicidio | fr: Mord, meurtre | de: Mord, φόνοι, φόνον Matt 15:19; Mark 7:21; Mark 15:7; Luke 23:19; Luke 23:25

φορ-έω G5409 V-FIA-1P (6×)

To wear or bear habitually; a frequentative form of phero, indicating repeated or characteristic carrying or wearing.

Phoreo is the frequentative form of phero ('to carry'), emphasizing habitual or characteristic action rather than a single instance. In Matthew 11:8 Jesus asks whether they went out to see a man wearing soft garments, while in John 19:5 Pilate presents Jesus wearing the crown of thorns—a momentary act loaded with symbolic weight. Paul uses phoreo powerfully in 1 Corinthians 15:49: just as we have borne the image of the earthly man, so we shall bear the image of the heavenly. Spanish llevar and German tragen both capture this 'carry on one's person' sense naturally.

wear, bear habitually (6×) To wear or carry habitually on one's person, whether clothing (Matt 11:8, John 19:5), a weapon or symbol of authority (Rom 13:4, where the ruler 'bears' the sword), or an image (1 Cor 15:49, bearing the likeness of Adam or Christ). The frequentative aspect distinguishes this from simple phero—it implies ongoing, characteristic bearing. The multilingual evidence (Spanish llevar, German tragen, French porter) all denote habitual carrying or wearing. BEARING AND CARRYING en: it-bears, we-bore, we-will-bear | es: lleva, llevamos, llevando | fr: porter | de: tragen, φοροῦντες Matt 11:8; John 19:5; Rom 13:4; 1Cor 15:49

φόρον G5410 N-GNS (1×)

Forum, a Roman public marketplace and civic center; specifically the Forum of Appius Acts 28:15 records Christian brothers from Rome traveling to the Forum of Appius to meet Paul—a journey of some 40 miles from the capital. The Greek φόρον borrows directly from Latin forum, indicating a public square or marketplace that served as civic center. The Forum of Appius (Ἀππίου φόρον) was a station on the Appian Way, the major road to Rome. This geographic marker measures the Roman church's eagerness: believers walked two days to welcome Paul, their presence strengthening him. Sometimes a place name captures more than location—it measures love.

(1×) Forum, a Roman public square or marketplace serving as civic center; specifically in Acts 28:15 referring to the Forum of Appius (Appii Forum), a station on the Appian Way about 40 miles from Rome. Christian brothers traveled there to meet Paul, a two-day journey demonstrating their eagerness to welcome him. The Greek φόρον directly borrows Latin forum, preserving the Roman civic-architectural term. Multilingual glosses maintain this (Forum, Foro). PERSONAL NAMES

en: Forum | es: Foro | fr: forum | de: Φόρου Acts 28:15

φόρος G5411 N-AMP (5×)

tax, tribute — a compulsory payment exacted by a ruling authority from its subjects

Phoros denotes a tribute or tax levied by a governing power, derived from phero ('to bring, carry') — literally 'that which is brought in.' In the New Testament it appears 5 times, exclusively in discussions about the legitimacy and obligation of paying taxes to Rome. Jesus' famous exchange about paying tribute to Caesar (Luke 20:22) and the charge before Pilate that he forbade it (Luke 23:2) frame the political tension, while Paul in Romans 13:6-7 grounds tax payment in theological obligation to divinely ordained authority. The Spanish 'tributo' and French 'tribut' preserve the Latin tributum connection, underscoring the imperial context.

(5×) A compulsory monetary payment owed to a political authority, specifically the tribute exacted by the Roman Empire from its subject peoples. Jesus addresses the question of its lawfulness in Luke 20:22, and Paul commands its payment as a duty owed to governing powers whom God has established (Rom 13:6-7). All 5 occurrences concern the civic obligation of tax payment under Roman rule, with multilingual glosses — English 'tax,' Spanish 'tributo,' German 'Steuer' — uniformly reflecting this fiscal-political sense. TRIBUTE AND TAX

en: tax, taxes | es: tributo, tributos | fr: tribut | de: Steuer, φόρον, φόρους Luke 20:22; Luke 23:2; Rom 13:6; Rom 13:7

φορτ-ίζω G5412 V-RPM/P-VMP (2×)

to burden, load down, weigh down with heavy loads φορτίζω means to load someone down with burdens, from φορτίον ('burden, load'). Jesus uses it in Matthew 11:28 with the beautiful invitation: 'Come to me, all who are weary and burdened (πεφορτισμένοι), and I will give you rest.' He offers relief to those loaded down with heavy burdens. By contrast, in Luke 11:46, Jesus condemns the lawyers who φορτίζετε ('load down') people with burdens hard to bear, yet won't lift a finger to help. The perfect passive participle in Matthew describes a state of being weighed down; the present active in Luke describes the ongoing action of loading others.

(2×) The two New Testament uses stand in stark contrast: Jesus invites the burdened to find rest (Matthew 11:28), while religious leaders actively burden others without offering help (Luke 11:46). The French chargé and Spanish cargados preserve the sense of being loaded down like a pack animal. Jesus' critique targets those who make religion a crushing weight rather than liberating grace. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: having-been-burdened, you-load | es: cargáis, están-cargados | fr: chargé | de: πεφορτισμένοι, φορτίζετε Matt 11:28; Luke 11:46

φορτ-ίον G5413 N-DNP (6×)

A burden or load carried by a person, whether literal or figurative; also a ship's cargo or freight.

Most often this word describes the burdens people carry — the easy yoke and light load Jesus offers (Matt 11:30), the heavy burdens the Pharisees bind on others' shoulders (Matt 23:4; Luke 11:46), and the personal load each believer must bear (Gal 6:5). But in Acts 27:10 it shifts to the cargo of a storm-threatened ship, where Paul foresees loss 'of the cargo and the ship.' The multilingual evidence tracks the distinction neatly: for personal burdens, Hindi uses 'bojh' (burden) and Spanish 'cargas,' but for ship freight, Hindi shifts to 'maalke' (goods/property) and English to 'cargo' rather than 'burden.'

1. burden, load (personal) (5×) A burden or load borne by a person, whether a physical weight or a figurative responsibility, obligation, or hardship. Jesus contrasts his light burden with the heavy loads the Pharisees impose (Matt 11:30; 23:4; Luke 11:46), and Paul teaches that each person must carry his own load (Gal 6:5). Spanish 'carga/cargas,' Hindi 'bojh' (burden), and German 'Last' all converge on the personal, weighty character of this sense. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: burden, burdens, load | es: carga, cargas, con-cargas | fr: charge, φορτίον | de: Last, φορτία, φορτίοις Matt 11:30; Matt 23:4; Luke 11:46; Gal 6:5

2. cargo (ship's freight) (1×) Cargo or freight carried by a ship, distinct from personal burdens. In Acts 27:10, Paul warns that the voyage will bring disaster 'to the cargo and to the ship.' The translation signatures shift noticeably: English uses 'cargo' rather than 'burden,' Hindi moves to 'maalke' (goods/property), and the commercial, maritime context sets this apart from the personal load of the other occurrences. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: cargo | es: carga | fr: fardeau | de: φορτίου Acts 27:10

φόρτος G5414

burden, load, cargo; heavy weight or metaphorical oppression

This term literally refers to cargo or freight carried by ship or beast of burden. It extends naturally to metaphorical loads—the heavy burden of responsibilities, troubles, or obligations. Jesus uses the related diminutive when he promises that his yoke is easy and his burden light, contrasting with the crushing weight of legalistic religion. Paul employs burden language to describe the weight of caring for churches. The word can also mean something vulgar or worthless, though this usage is less relevant to biblical texts.

φορτούνατος G5415 N-GMS (1×)

Fortunatus, a Christian who visited Paul in Ephesus and brought refreshment

First Corinthians 16:17 names Fortunatus alongside Stephanas and Achaicus as visitors who refreshed Paul's spirit. The Latin name means 'fortunate' or 'blessed,' common among freedmen and slaves. These three apparently carried the Corinthians' letter to Paul and would likely return with his response (1 Corinthians). Paul's joy at their arrival suggests they brought more than correspondence—personal presence, news, perhaps material support. The brief mention honors individuals whose ministry was relational presence, reminding us that sometimes the gift needed most is simply showing up.

(1×) Fortunatus, a Christian from Corinth who, with Stephanas and Achaicus, visited Paul in Ephesus and refreshed his spirit (1 Corinthians 16:17). Likely they carried the Corinthian church's letter to Paul and would return with his response. The Latin name (meaning fortunate/blessed, common among freedmen) is preserved in transliteration (Fortunatus, Phortounatos). Paul's reference honors those whose ministry was relational presence and encouragement. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Phortounatos | es: de-Phortounátos | fr: Fortunatus | de: Fortunatus 1Cor 16:17

φραγέλλ-ιον G5416 N-ANS (1×)

Whip, scourge, a multi-corded instrument for beating or driving

John 2:15 provides the New Testament's sole use: Jesus made a φραγέλλιον of cords and drove animals from the temple. The Greek borrows directly from Latin flagellum (whip, scourge), the same term used for instruments of judicial punishment. Whether Jesus used it on the money-changers or only the animals, the text specifies animals. The image shocks: gentle Jesus makes a whip. Yet zeal for his Father's house consumed him, and sometimes love acts violently against what corrupts holy space. The mundane object—twisted cords—becomes an instrument of prophetic disruption.

(1×) Whip or scourge made of cords, used for driving animals or administering punishment. John 2:15 describes Jesus making a φραγέλλιον from cords to drive livestock from the temple courts, a prophetic act of cleansing holy space. The Greek directly borrows Latin flagellum (whip), the same term for instruments of judicial scourging. Cross-linguistic glosses (whip, látigo, fouet, Geissel) emphasize the multi-corded striking instrument. WHIP SCOURGE

en: whip | es: látigo | fr: fouet | de: Geissel John 2:15

φραγελλ-όω G5417 V-APA-NMS (2×)

to flog, scourge with a whip, beat severely φραγελλόω is a Greek rendering of the Latin flagellare ('to whip, scourge'), referring to the brutal Roman practice of flogging prisoners with a leather whip embedded with bone or metal. The verb appears only in the parallel accounts of Pilate's treatment of Jesus before crucifixion. Matthew 27:26 and Mark 15:15 both describe how Pilate, having released Barabbas, 'scourged Jesus' (φραγελλώσας τὸν Ἰησοῦν) before handing him over to be crucified. This was standard Roman procedure before execution, intended to weaken the victim and hasten death on the cross.

(2×) Both occurrences describe the same historical event: Jesus' scourging by Pilate's soldiers. This was not symbolic punishment but literal, severe physical abuse—the Roman flagrum could tear flesh to the bone. The German geisseln and French fouetter maintain the violence of the term. Isaiah 53:5 comes to mind: 'by his wounds we are healed.' The scourging fulfilled prophecy while revealing the depth of Christ's suffering for humanity. FLOGGING SCOURGING
en: having-scourged, scourging | es: habiendo-azotado | fr: fouetter | de: geisseln, φραγελλώσας Matt 27:26; Mark 15:15

φραγ-μός G5418 N-GMS (4×)
A fence, hedge, or partition wall; any barrier that encloses, separates, or divides.
Refers to a constructed barrier – whether a hedge around a vineyard, a wall along a road, or a metaphorical partition between peoples. In the parable of the vineyard, both Matthew 21:33 and Mark 12:1 echo Isaiah 5:2, where the owner builds a phragmos to protect the vines. Luke 14:23 places the poor along hedgerows and country lanes. The most theologically charged use appears in Ephesians 2:14, where Christ breaks down the dividing wall (phragmos) of hostility between Jew and Gentile. Spanish cerca and separación capture this dual physical-metaphorical range.

(4×) A fence, hedge, or partition wall serving as a physical or metaphorical barrier. In the vineyard parables (Matt 21:33; Mark 12:1) it denotes a protective hedge echoing Isaiah 5:2. In Luke 14:23 it marks the hedgerows along roads where the marginalized gather. Ephesians 2:14 extends the image metaphorically to the dividing wall of hostility between Jew and Gentile, which Christ has abolished. The Spanish glosses cerca (fence) and separación (partition) nicely distinguish the concrete and figurative dimensions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-fence, barrier, hedges | es: cerca, separación, vallados | fr: haie, φραγμοῦ | de: Zaun, φραγμοὺς, φραγμὸν Matt 21:33; Mark 12:1; Luke 14:23; Eph 2:14

φράζω G5419 V-AMA-2S (1×)
Explain, make clear, interpret or clarify what is obscure or difficult to understand Peter asks Jesus to explain a parable in Matthew 15:15, using this aorist imperative: φράσον ἡμῖν τὴν παραβολήν—'explain to us the parable.' Classical usage ranged from 'point out' to 'declare' to 'interpret,' always involving making something clear or understood. The verb appears across Greek literature from Homer onward, indicating both physical pointing and verbal clarification. Peter's request acknowledges the parable's opacity—it requires interpretation, and only the teacher can unlock its meaning. The single New Testament instance captures the dynamic of learning: recognizing what we don't understand and asking for explanation.

(1×) To explain, make clear, interpret what is obscure or difficult. Matthew 15:15 has Peter requesting Jesus explain a parable—acknowledging he doesn't grasp its meaning and seeking clarification from the authoritative source. Classical usage included pointing out, declaring, and interpreting, always involving bringing something from obscurity to clarity. The verb (φράζω, explain, expliquer, Φράσον) emphasizes the teacher-student dynamic: true understanding requires explanation from one who knows. SPEAKING AND TALKING en: Explain | es: Explícanos | fr: expliquer | de: Φράσον Matt 15:15

φράσσω G5420 V-ASP-3S (3×)
to stop up, block, silence; to close or shut, preventing passage or speech
This verb means to fence in, block up, or stop—whether literally closing a physical opening or metaphorically silencing speech or stopping action. Classical Greek used it for building barriers, blocking roads, or stopping up wounds. The New Testament uses are metaphorical: stopping mouths (silencing), closing doors to criticism, and shutting the mouths of lions. The passive form indicates being stopped or silenced by external force. The term emphasizes the effectiveness of the blockage—completely shut, unable to proceed or speak.

(3×) Romans 3:19 explains the law's purpose: that every mouth "may be stopped" (phragē, aorist passive subjunctive) and the whole world held accountable to God—universal silencing before divine judgment, no defense possible. Second Corinthians 11:10 has Paul vowing that this boast of his (supporting himself without burdening the Corinthians) "will not be stopped" (phragēsetai, future passive) in Achaia—no one will silence this testimony. Hebrews 11:33 lists faith's achievements, including those who "stopped" (ephraxan, aorist active) the mouths of lions—Daniel and others who miraculously escaped devouring. The Spanish cerrar/sea cerrada/será detenida, French fermer, and German verschliessen all convey shutting/stopping. The term spans divine silencing (all humanity before God), apostolic determination (Paul's witness won't be stopped), and miraculous deliverance (lions' mouths shut). SHUTTING AND CLOSING en: may-be-stopped, stopped, will-be-silenced | es: cerraron, sea-cerrada, será-detenida | fr: fermer | de: verschliessen Rom 3:19; 2Cor 11:10; Heb 11:33

φρέ-αρ G5421 N-GNS (7×)
A well, pit, or shaft; an artificially dug opening in the earth for water or as a deep cavity.
In Greek, phréar denotes a dug well or deep pit, distinguished from a natural spring (krēnē). In the Gospels it appears concretely as the well where Jesus meets the Samaritan woman (John 4:11-12), and in Luke 14:5 as an open pit into which an animal might fall. In Revelation 9:1-2, the word takes on a dramatic apocalyptic dimension as the 'shaft of the abyss,' from which demonic smoke billows. Spanish pozo and French puits preserve the same dual range of 'well' and 'pit,' reflecting the word's flexibility between everyday and visionary usage.

pit (7×) A well, pit, or deep shaft — covering both the practical sense of a dug water-well (John 4:11-12, where the Samaritan woman notes the well is deep) and the apocalyptic sense of a bottomless shaft (Rev 9:1-2, the pit of the abyss). The LXX also uses this word for pits of destruction (cf. Ps 55:23). Spanish pozo and French puits both carry the same range, from an ordinary water source to a figurative abyss. WELL PIT CISTERN en: pit, well | es: pozo | fr: puits | de: Brunnen, φρέαρ Luke 14:5; John 4:11; John 4:12; Rev 9:1; Rev 9:2

φρενᾰπᾰτ-άω G5422 V-PIA-3S (1×)
To deceive, to lead someone's mind astray by false reasoning or delusion Self-deception proves especially dangerous. Galatians 6:3 employs this rare compound verb: 'If anyone thinks he is something when he is nothing, he deceives himself (φρεναπατᾷ ἑαυτόν).' The compound structure (φρήν = mind + ἀπατάω = deceive) literally means 'mind-deceive,' targeting the intellect or perception. This isn't emotional self-soothing but cognitive self-delusion—convincing yourself of falsehoods about your own status or worth. Paul's context involves thinking we're exempt from consequences or above mundane service. The reflexive construction (deceives himself) makes the pathology explicit: we become our own deceivers.

(1×) To deceive, particularly to deceive oneself or lead one's own mind astray with false reasoning. Galatians 6:3's sole occurrence uses the reflexive construction: one who thinks himself something when he is nothing 'deceives himself' (φρεναπατᾷ ἑαυτόν). The compound (mind-deceive, from φρήν + ἀπατάω) targets intellectual or perceptual delusion rather than emotional comforting, making it cognitive self-deception about one's status, worth, or exemption from consequences. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING
en: he-deceives | es: engaña | fr: φρεναπατᾷ | de: betruegen Gal 6:3

φρενᾰπᾰτ-ης G5423 N-NMP (1×)
Mind-deceivers, those who lead others astray through false reasoning or deceptive teaching

Titus 1:10 identifies many as φρεναπάται—mind-deceivers, particularly those from the circumcision party who were disrupting whole households with false teaching. The compound noun (φρήν = mind + ἀπάτης = deceiver) names those who specialize in leading minds astray. Unlike self-deceivers (G5422), these deceive others, weaponizing false reasoning to corrupt understanding. Paul links them with 'empty talkers,' suggesting their persuasive words lack substance. The multilingual evidence (mind-deceivers, engañadores, Betrüger) preserves the intellectual dimension: these aren't merely liars but those who corrupt thinking itself.

(1×) Mind-deceivers, those who lead others intellectually astray through false reasoning or deceptive teaching. Titus 1:10 identifies many rebellious people, especially from the circumcision party, as φρεναπάται who disrupt households with corrupt doctrine. The compound (mind-deceiver, from φρήν + ἀπάτης) emphasizes intellectual deception—corrupting understanding through persuasive but false reasoning. Unlike self-deceivers, these deliberately mislead others, making the term a moral-quality designation for dangerous teachers. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14554 WITH 4 SENSES en: mind-deceivers | es: engañadores | fr: φρεναπάται | de: Betrueger Titus 1:10

φρήν G5424 N-DFP (2×)
mind, understanding, mental faculties, intellect φρήν (plural φρένες) originally referred to the diaphragm, then by extension to the seat of thought and understanding—the mind or intellect. Paul uses the dative plural τῇς φρεσίν twice in one verse (1 Corinthians 14:20), contrasting childlike innocence in evil with mature thinking: 'Brothers, do not be children in your thinking (ταῖς φρεσίν); be infants in evil, but in your thinking (ταῖς φρεσίν) be mature.' The context is the proper use of spiritual gifts, especially tongues and prophecy, where Paul emphasizes that worship must engage the mind, not bypass it.

(2×) Both uses appear in the same exhortation in 1 Corinthians 14:20, where Paul calls for mature understanding in matters of worship. The German Verstand ('understanding') and Spanish entendimientos capture the intellectual dimension. Paul's point is that Christian maturity involves growing up in one's thinking, using the mind to edify the church rather than seeking ecstatic experiences that bypass rational comprehension. The φρένες must be engaged for true worship. MIND UNDERSTANDING en: thinking | es: entendimientos | fr: intelligence | de: Verstand 1Cor 14:20

φρίσσω G5425 V-PIA-3P (1×)
To shudder, to tremble or bristle with fear or horror
Even demons believe—and shudder. James 2:19 employs this vivid verb to describe demonic response to monotheistic truth: φρίσσουσιν. Classical usage depicted physical bristling (fields bristling with grain, helmets with crests, air with uplifted hands) and extended to shuddering with fear or horror. The verb captures involuntary visceral response—not intellectual assent but bodily recoil. James's point is devastating: demons have better theology than faith without works; they believe God is one and their bodies betray their terror. Right belief without transformed life puts us below demons.

(1×) To shudder or tremble, often with fear or horror; to bristle. James 2:19 uses this to describe demons' response to belief in one God: they believe and shudder (φρίσσουσιν). Classical usage included physical bristling (grain fields, helmet crests) and extended to involuntary trembling with fear. The verb captures visceral, bodily response rather than mere intellectual recognition—belief that produces terror rather than transformation, making James's point devastating. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4473 WITH 3 SENSES en: shudder | es: tiemblan | fr: φρίσσουσιν | de: schaudern Jas 2:19

φρον-έω G5426 V-PIA-2S (29×)
To think, have a mindset, direct one's thoughts; ranging from momentary reflection to a settled disposition or orientation of mind
A verb of the mind that spans both active thinking and habitual disposition. In the Gospels, Jesus rebukes Peter with it – 'you are not minding the things of God' (Matt 16:23; Mark 8:33) – where the force is not mere cognition but a settled orientation of concern. Paul uses it extensively in Romans to contrast flesh-minded versus Spirit-minded living (Rom 8:5), and urges believers not to think of themselves more highly than they ought (Rom 12:3). Spanish 'pensad' and French 'penser' capture the reflective side, while German 'gesinnt sein' (to be disposed) brings out the dispositional flavor that makes this word richer than a simple 'think.'

1. think, consider mentally (24×) The active cognitive sense: to think, consider, or reflect on a matter, forming opinions or deliberating. This covers the majority of occurrences, including Jesus' rebuke in Matt 16:23 ('you are not thinking the things of God') and Paul's exhortation in Rom 12:3 about sober self-assessment. Spanish 'pensad/pensando' and French 'penser' consistently render this straightforward intellectual activity. THINKING AND SEEMING en: minding, think, thinking | es: pensabais, pensad, pensando | fr: gesinnt-sein, penser | de: gesinnt-sein, φρονεῖς Matt 16:23; Mark 8:33; Acts 28:22; Rom 11:20; Rom 12:3

2. set one's mind on, regard (5×) A sustained dispositional sense: to set one's mind on, to regard or care about habitually. Distinguished from momentary cognition by implying an ongoing orientation of attention. Rom 8:5 is the paradigm case – those who live according to the flesh 'mind' the things of the flesh. The repeated occurrences in Rom 14:6 show regard for the Lord in daily practices. German 'gesinnt sein' (to be of a certain mind/disposition) captures this habitual coloring especially well. THINKING AND SEEMING en: minding, minds, think-on | es: considera, piensan, que-considera | fr: penser | de: gesinnt-sein Rom 8:5; Rom 14:6

φρόν-ημα G5427 N-NNS (4×)
Mindset, way of thinking, inner orientation of the mind; the settled disposition of flesh or spirit.
A noun denoting the settled orientation or habitual bent of the mind – not a single passing thought but an enduring disposition. All four NT occurrences cluster in Romans 8, where Paul contrasts the phronēma of the flesh (death-directed thinking) with the phronēma of the Spirit (life and peace). Classical Greek used the word for high spirit, resolution, or pride, but Paul narrows it to the deep mental orientation that determines one's trajectory. Spanish pensamiento and German Gesinnung both capture the sense of an ingrained way of thinking rather than a momentary idea.

(4×) The settled mindset or inner disposition of a person, especially as determined by flesh or Spirit. In Romans 8:6 Paul states that the phronēma of the flesh is death while the phronēma of the Spirit is life and peace, and in 8:7 the fleshly mindset is hostile to God. In 8:27 the Spirit's own phronēma is what God searches in the hearts of believers. The word conveys not a fleeting thought but an abiding orientation – German Gesinnung and French pensée both reflect this deeper, dispositional quality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: mindset | es: pensamiento | fr: pensée | de: Gesinnung Rom 8:6; Rom 8:7; Rom 8:27

φρόν-ησις G5428 N-DFS (2×)
wisdom, prudence, practical insight, sound judgment φρόνησις denotes practical wisdom—the ability to make sound judgments and act prudently in concrete situations. It's wisdom applied to life's complexities, not mere theoretical knowledge. In Luke 1:17, the angel tells Zechariah that John the Baptist will turn the disobedient 'to the wisdom (φρονήσει) of the just'—bringing people back to godly, practical understanding. In Ephesians 1:8, Paul celebrates the grace that God 'lavished on us in all wisdom and insight (φρονήσει)'—divine wisdom generously poured out on believers through Christ, enabling them to understand God's mysterious plan.

(2×) The two uses show φρόνησις as a gift—both the natural wisdom of the righteous (Luke 1:17) and the supernatural wisdom God provides in Christ (Ephesians 1:8). This isn't abstract philosophy but practical discernment for living rightly. The French prudence and Spanish prudencia capture the practical, applied nature of this wisdom. God's grace includes not just forgiveness but illumination—insight to understand his will and walk in it. UNDERSTANDING AND DISCERNMENT

en: understanding, wisdom | es: prudencia | fr: prudence, φρονήσει | de: Klugheit, φρονήσει Luke 1:17; Eph 1:8

φρόνιμ-ος G5429 Adj-NMP (14×)

Wise, prudent, or shrewd; possessing practical discernment for sound decisions, sometimes with connotations of cunning.

Phronimos describes someone who thinks clearly and acts wisely in practical matters. Jesus uses it repeatedly in parables to contrast those who prepare wisely with those who do not: the wise man who builds on rock (Matt 7:24), the wise virgins who bring extra oil (Matt 25:2, 4, 8, 9), and the faithful steward (Matt 24:45; Luke 12:42). He also commends it as a quality for mission, telling the disciples to be 'wise as serpents' (Matt 10:16). In one distinctive use (Luke 16:8), the word shifts toward 'shrewd' or 'astute,' where the dishonest manager is praised because the 'sons of this age' are more phronimoi than the 'sons of light' — a morally complex usage that translations handle differently.

1. wise, prudent (13×) Possessing practical wisdom and sound judgment — the ability to discern the right course of action and follow through. This is the word's dominant New Testament sense, appearing in Jesus' parables of preparedness: the wise builder (Matt 7:24), the wise virgins (Matt 25:2, 4, 8, 9), and the faithful steward (Matt 24:45; Luke 12:42). Spanish consistently renders it 'prudente(s),' Hindi 'buddhimān' (possessing intelligence), and German 'klug' (clever, wise) — all affirming a stable core of practical discernment without moral ambiguity. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: to-wise-ones, wise | es: a-prudentes, prudente, prudentes | fr: prudent | de: klug Matt 7:24; Matt 10:16; Matt 24:45; Matt 25:2; Matt 25:4

2. shrewd, astute (comparative) (1×) Shrewd or astute, with a connotation of cunning resourcefulness that sits in moral tension with straightforward wisdom. At Luke 16:8, Jesus observes that 'the sons of this age are more phronimoi toward their own generation than the sons of light.' Here the comparative form signals not virtue but street-smart calculation. The translation evidence diverges revealingly: Spanish shifts from 'prudentes' to 'más sagaces' (more astute), while French and German retain 'prudent/klug,' flattening the distinction. This tension — commendable wisdom versus morally ambiguous shrewdness — is precisely what makes phronimos theologically rich. WISDOM AND PRUDENCE

en: shrewder | es: más-sagaces | fr: prudent | de: klug Luke 16:8

φρόνιμ-ος G5430 Adv (1×)

Shrewdly, wisely, with practical good sense and clever discernment

Jesus commends the dishonest manager for acting φρονίμως—shrewdly (Luke 16:8). The adverb derives from φρόνιμος (sensible, prudent, showing presence of mind), and in this context carries morally ambiguous overtones: the manager showed more practical wisdom in securing his future than children of light show in theirs. The term doesn't endorse dishonesty but highlights shrewd calculation and foresight. Classical usage ranged from 'sensibly' to 'cleverly,' and Jesus's parable plays on the tension: worldly people exercise more strategic intelligence about their priorities than believers about theirs. Shrewdness need not be sinful.

(1×) Shrewdly, with practical wisdom and clever discernment; sensibly calculating means to ends. Luke 16:8 uses this adverb in Jesus's surprising commendation of the dishonest manager, who acted φρονίμως in securing his future—not endorsing dishonesty but highlighting strategic foresight. The adverb (from φρόνιμος = prudent/sensible) indicates presence of mind and practical intelligence applied to one's circumstances, here ironically possessed more by worldly people than by children of light. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12853 WITH 3 SENSES

en: shrewdly | es: sagazmente | fr: prudemment | de: φρονίμως Luke 16:8

φροντ-ίζω G5431 V-PSA-3P (1×)

To be careful about, to give thought or attention to something; to take pains with Paul instructs Titus in 3:8 about what believers should φροντίζωσιν—be careful to devote themselves to good works. The verb combines φροντίς (thought, care) with verbal form: to give thoughtful attention, to take pains about something. Classical usage ranged from 'consider' to 'be anxious' to 'take care of,' always involving mental engagement leading to action. The subjunctive mood in Titus suggests purpose or result: these things are trustworthy so that believers may give careful attention to good works. Good works don't happen accidentally; they require intentional, thoughtful devotion.

(1×) To be careful about, to give thoughtful attention and effort to something; to devote oneself with consideration. Titus 3:8 uses the subjunctive to express purpose: Paul teaches trustworthy sayings so that believers may φροντίζωσιν (be careful) to devote themselves to good works. The verb (from φροντίς = thought/care) indicates deliberate mental engagement leading to action—good works as fruit of careful attention rather than accident or impulse. THINKING AND SEEMING en: may-be-careful | es: se-preocupen | fr: φροντίζωσιν | de: sorgen-fuer Titus 3:8

φρουρ-έω G5432 V-FIA-3S (4×)

To guard, keep watch over, protect; to garrison or keep secure under protective custody.

A military term meaning to stand guard, garrison, or keep under protective watch. In classical Greek it described soldiers patrolling a territory or guarding a fortress. Paul uses it of the governor's troops guarding Damascus to seize him (2 Cor 11:32) and of the law keeping Israel under watch before faith came (Gal 3:23). Philippians 4:7 transforms the military image beautifully: God's peace will garrison your hearts and minds. First Peter 1:5 speaks of believers being guarded by God's power. Spanish guardados and French garder preserve the protective-custody sense across traditions.

(4×) To guard, garrison, or keep under protective watch – originally a military term for stationing sentries. In 2 Corinthians 11:32 it describes soldiers guarding the city of Damascus to arrest Paul. Galatians 3:23 uses it metaphorically for the law holding Israel in custody before faith was revealed. The image turns warmly in Philippians 4:7, where God's peace will phroureō (garrison) believers' hearts and minds, and in 1 Peter 1:5, where God's power guards believers for salvation. The Spanish guardados and French garder consistently reflect the protective dimension. GUARDING AND KEEPING en: being-guarded, was-guarding, we-were-guarded | es: guardaba, guardados, guardará | fr: garder, φρουρήσει, φρουρουμένους | de: bewachen 2Cor 11:32; Gal 3:23; Phil 4:7; 1Pet 1:5

φρυ-άσσομαι G5433 V-AIA-3P (1×)

To rage, to snort with fury like spirited horses; to be insolent or haughty

Acts 4:25 quotes Psalm 2:1 asking why nations ἐφρύαξαν—raged or snorted with fury against the Lord and his Anointed. The verb originally depicted high-spirited horses neighing and prancing, then metaphorically described human arrogance, insolence, and furious opposition. The imagery is visceral: nations don't merely oppose but snort and paw like warhorse charging into battle. Luke's citation applies this to opposition against Jesus, suggesting that human rebellion against God's purposes carries the futile fury of animals raging against their master. The multilingual evidence (rage, frémir, se-enfurecieron) emphasizes violent emotion.

(1×) To rage or snort with fury, to express violent opposition or haughty insolence. Acts 4:25 quotes Psalm 2:1 asking why nations ἐφρύαξαν (raged) against the Lord and his Messiah. The verb originally described spirited horses neighing and prancing, then metaphorically human arrogance and furious opposition. The imagery (rage, se-enfurecieron, frémir) emphasizes visceral, animalistic fury—nations snorting and charging like warhorses against God's purposes in ultimately futile rebellion. ROAR TURMOIL GROAN

en: rage | es: se-enfurecieron | fr: frémir | de: ἐφρύαξαν Acts 4:25

φρύγᾰνον G5434 N-GNP (1×)

Sticks, dry twigs, small pieces of firewood gathered for burning

Acts 28:3 records Paul gathering φρυγάνων—sticks or dry twigs—to build a fire after the Malta shipwreck. The neuter plural noun denotes small pieces of wood suitable for kindling, typically dead branches or brush. Classical usage distinguished these from larger timber (δένδρα) and shrubs (θάμνος), defining φρύγανον as undershrubs or collective firewood. The mundane detail captures a moment of service: the apostle stoops to gather sticks. Then a viper strikes from the bundle, turning routine task into another opportunity for divine vindication. Even gathering firewood becomes stage for gospel demonstration.

(1×) Dry sticks, small twigs, or pieces of firewood suitable for kindling a fire. Acts 28:3 describes Paul gathering a bundle of φρυγάνων to help build a fire on Malta after shipwreck, a routine act of service that becomes dramatic when a viper emerges from the bundle. Classical usage distinguished these from larger timber and defined them as undershrubs or collective firewood. The plural form (sticks, de-ramas-secas, brindille) emphasizes gathered pieces rather than individual twigs. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-sticks | es: de-ramas-secas | fr: brindille | de: φρυγάνων Acts 28:3

φρυγία G5435 N-AFS (3×)

Phrygia, a large inland region in central Asia Minor

Phrygia was a vast territory in central and western Asia Minor (modern Turkey), known for its agricultural wealth and mixed population of indigenous Phrygians, Greeks, and Jews. Major cities included Laodicea, Colossae, and Hierapolis. The region's boundaries shifted over time, and in the Roman period it was divided among different provinces. Acts mentions Phrygia as part of Paul's missionary travels, particularly his strengthening of existing disciples. The presence of Phrygians at Pentecost (Acts 2:10) indicates an established Jewish diaspora community there.

(3×) Acts 2:10 lists Phrygians among the devout Jews and proselytes present at Pentecost hearing the gospel in their own languages—early exposure to Christianity. Acts 16:6 describes Paul and his companions passing through the Phrygian and Galatian region after being prevented from entering Asia—the Spirit redirecting their mission. Acts 18:23 narrates Paul traveling sequentially through the Galatian region and Phrygia, strengthening all the disciples—pastoral follow-up after initial evangelism. The Spanish Frigia/Phrygía, French Phrygie, and German retention of Greek form show transliteration. Phrygia appears not as a primary mission field but as a region Paul passed through, strengthening existing believers—important interior territory connecting the Aegean coast with central Anatolia in the expanding Christian movement. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Phrygia | es: Frigia, Phrygía | fr: Phrygie | de: Φρυγίαν Acts 2:10; Acts 16:6; Acts 18:23

φύγελος G5436 N-NMS (1×)

Phygelos, a personal name (person who abandoned Paul in Asia)

Phygelos appears only in Paul's second letter to Timothy as one of two individuals who turned away from the apostle during his ministry in Asia. The name means something like 'fugitive' or 'one who flees' in Greek, which adds a poignant irony to this mention. Paul names him specifically alongside Hermogenes as representative of a broader desertion, showing that even trusted associates could abandon the faith or their commitment to Paul's mission in difficult times.

(1×) A personal name mentioned only once in Scripture. Paul writes from prison noting that 'all in Asia have turned away from me, among whom are Phygelos and Hermogenes' (2 Tim 1:15). The multilingual glosses preserve the Greek form with minimal variation, treating it as a proper name that should not be translated. This single attestation provides no context for who Phygelos was beyond his association with the Asian desertion. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Phygelos | es: Phýgelos | fr: Φύγελος | de: Phygelus 2Tim 1:15

φῠγή G5437 N-NFS (1×)

flight, escape, fleeing (especially in battle or from danger)

This term denotes physical flight or escape, often with the specific connotation of fleeing from battle or danger. In its sole New Testament occurrence, Jesus warns his followers to pray that their flight from Jerusalem not happen in winter or on the Sabbath, indicating concern for the practical difficulties of urgent escape under adverse conditions. Classical Greek used this word primarily for military retreat or the desperate flight of refugees, and that sense of urgency carries into the biblical usage.

(1×) The act of fleeing or escaping from danger. Jesus uses this word in his Olivet Discourse about the coming destruction of Jerusalem (Matt 24:20), urging disciples to pray their escape would not occur 'in winter or on the Sabbath' when travel would be especially difficult. The multilingual renderings—Spanish 'huida,' French 'fuite,' English 'flight'—all capture the sense of urgent departure. This matches the classical usage for flight from battle or persecution. GUILT AND PUNISHMENT

en: flight | es: huida | fr: fuite | de: φυγὴ Matt 24:20

φῠλᾰκ-ή G5438 N-AFP (47×)

A guarding, a watch of the night, a guard post, or (most commonly in the NT) a prison or place of confinement

In classical Greek, phylake primarily meant the act of keeping watch, especially at night. The NT overwhelmingly uses it to denote a prison or place of detention—the dungeon where John the Baptist was held (Matt 14:10), the jail from which an angel freed Peter (Acts 12:10), and the spiritual prison of Revelation 18:2. A second, more archaic sense divides the night into watches, as when Jesus walked on water during the fourth watch (Matt 14:25). Spanish preserves the distinction neatly: cárcel for prison, vigilia for the night watch.

1. prison, place of confinement (41×) The dominant NT usage, referring to a place of imprisonment or detention. Jesus teaches about being thrown into prison until debts are paid (Matt 5:25), John the Baptist languishes in Herod's prison (Matt 14:3, 10), and the righteous visit those in prison (Matt 25:36). Translations uniformly render this as 'prison' (cárcel in Spanish, Gefängnis in German, prison in French). PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: prison | es: cárcel, prisión | fr: prison | de: Gefaengnis, Gefängnis Matt 5:25; Matt 14:3; Matt 14:10; Matt 18:30; Matt 25:36

2. watch, period of the night (5×) A division of the night used for guard duty—three watches in Jewish reckoning, four in Roman. Jesus comes to the disciples walking on the sea during the 'fourth watch of the night' (Matt 14:25; Mark 6:48). Luke 12:38 speaks of the second and third watches. Spanish vigilia and guardias capture the temporal sense distinctly from the spatial 'prison' meaning. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: watch, watches | es: guardias, vigilia | fr: prison | de: Gefaengnis, Gefängnis Matt 14:25; Matt 24:43; Mark 6:48; Luke 2:8; Luke 12:38

3. guard, guard post, act of guarding (1×) The concrete act or station of guarding, where phylake denotes the guard post itself rather than a prison cell. In Acts 12:10, Peter and the angel pass through 'the first and second guard' (phylaken)—distinct checkpoints manned by sentries. This sense preserves the word's original connection to phylax ('guardian') and the military function of standing watch. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: guard | es: guardia | fr: prison | de: Gefängnis Acts 12:10

φῠλᾰκ-ίζω G5439 V-PPA-NMS (1×)

to imprison, throw into prison, incarcerate

This verb means to imprison someone, to throw them into custody. Paul uses it in Acts when recounting his pre-conversion persecution of Christians: he went from synagogue to synagogue imprisoning believers. The word derives from 'phylax' (guard, prison) and carries the official connotation of legal imprisonment rather than mere confinement. In the ancient world, imprisonment was often a holding measure before trial or punishment rather than the punishment itself.

(1×) To place someone in prison or custody. Paul uses the participial form in Acts 22:19 when defending himself before the Jerusalem crowd, describing his former activity: 'I was imprisoning and beating in every synagogue those who believed in you' (referring to Jesus). The Spanish 'encarcelando' and English 'imprisoning' accurately convey the continuous action. This was part of Paul's systematic persecution before his Damascus road encounter. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: imprisoning | es: encarcelando | fr: gardien | de: φυλακίζων Acts 22:19

φῠλᾰκ-τήριον G5440 N-ANP (1×)

phylacteries, small leather boxes containing Scripture texts worn during prayer

Phylacteries were small leather boxes containing parchment scrolls inscribed with key Torah texts, worn by Jewish men during prayer as a literal observance of Deuteronomy 6:8 and Exodus 13:9. One box was bound to the forehead and another to the left arm. Jesus criticized the scribes and Pharisees for making their phylacteries conspicuously wide as a display of piety. The Greek term reflects the word's original sense as an 'amulet' or 'safeguard,' though in Jewish practice these were sacred reminders of God's law rather than magical charms.

(1×) Small leather boxes containing Scripture texts, worn during prayer by Jewish men. Jesus mentions them in Matthew 23:5 when condemning the Pharisees for religious showmanship: 'they make their phylacteries broad and their tassels long.' The multilingual glosses preserve the technical term (English 'phylacteries,' French 'phylactère,' Spanish 'filacterias'), recognizing it as a specific Jewish religious practice. These objects made obedience to Torah visible, but Jesus critiqued their use for ostentation. GUARDING AND KEEPING en: phylacteries | es: filacterias | fr: phylactère | de: φυλακτήρια Matt 23:5

φῠλᾰκ-τήριος G5441 N-NMP (3×)

guards, sentries; soldiers assigned to watch and protect prisoners or locations

This noun designates a guard or watchman, especially a military sentinel or prison guard. The plural form refers to the guards as a group or the watch system. Classical Greek used it for any guardian or protector, but in Hellenistic and Roman contexts it commonly meant military guards. All New Testament occurrences are in Acts, describing guards at the prison where the apostles were held. Guards represent earthly power's attempt to contain God's messengers—an attempt that proves futile when angels intervene or when God's purposes require release.

(3×) Acts 5:23 describes the officials finding the prison securely locked and the "guards" (phulakas) standing at the doors, but when opened, no prisoners inside—angelic jailbreak left the guards in place, highlighting the miracle. Acts 12:6 shows Peter sleeping between two soldiers, bound with chains, while "sentries" (phulakes) guarded the door—maximum security that proved no barrier to God's angel. Acts 12:19 records Herod's angry response to Peter's escape: he examined the "guards" (phulakas) and ordered them executed—punishing the guards for failing to prevent what God accomplished. The Spanish and German forms of guards/guardias all denote watchmen/sentinels. The guards' presence emphasizes both the severity of the imprisonment and the superiority of divine power—human vigilance cannot thwart God's deliverance of his servants. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: guards | es: guardias | fr: gardien | de: φύλακές, φύλακας Acts 5:23; Acts 12:6; Acts 12:19

φῠλάσσω G5442 V-PPM/P-NMS (31×)

To guard, keep watch, observe commandments, or beware of; encompassing physical guarding, moral obedience, divine preservation, and vigilant caution.

This versatile verb phulasso carries the image of a sentinel standing watch — and from that concrete picture flow all its uses. Shepherds phulasso their flocks by night (Luke 2:8); a strong man phulasso his house against intruders (Luke 11:21); believers phulasso God's commandments (Luke 11:28); and the Lord himself phulasso his own from the evil one (2 Thess 3:3). The middle voice adds reflexive force: guard yourselves, beware. Spanish uniformly uses guardar for nearly every sense, while French splits between garder ('to keep') and préserver ('to preserve'), revealing the dual active-passive dynamic at work in the word.

1. keep, observe commandments (10×) To keep or observe commandments, laws, and teachings faithfully. This is the moral-obedience sense, prominent in the Gospels when the rich young ruler claims 'all these I have kept from my youth' (Matt 19:20, Mark 10:20, Luke 18:21). Luke 11:28 pronounces blessing on those who hear God's word and phulasso it. Spanish guardar and French garder both cover this 'keep/observe' meaning, while German bewahren adds the nuance of cherishing what is kept. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: I-have-kept, I-kept, keep | es: guarda, guardan, guardar | fr: garder, préserver | de: bewahren, bewahrt Matt 19:20; Mark 10:20; Luke 11:28; Luke 18:21; John 12:47

2. preserve, protect from harm (9×) To preserve or protect from spiritual harm, loss, or destruction — especially with God as the agent of protection. Jesus declares in John 17:12 that he 'guarded' the disciples and none was lost. Paul entrusts his deposit to the Lord who is able to phulasso it (2 Tim 1:12). In 2 Thessalonians 3:3 the Lord is faithful and will phulasso believers from the evil one. The emphasis is not on human vigilance but on divine safekeeping. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: I-guarded, guard, preserved | es: guarda, guardaos, guardar | fr: garder, préserver | de: bewahren, zu-bewahren John 12:25; John 17:12; 2Thess 3:3; 1Tim 6:20; 2Tim 1:12

3. guard, watch over (8×) To guard or watch over physically as a sentinel, custodian, or military detail. Shepherds keeping watch over their flocks by night in Luke 2:8 provide the most vivid image. Acts 12:4 describes soldiers assigned to phulasso Peter in prison. Luke 11:21 pictures a strong man guarding his palace. Spanish custodiar ('to guard/watch') and guardando ('guarding') both capture the concrete, physical dimension of this sense. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: being-guarded, guarding, guards | es: custodiar, guarda, guardando | fr: garder | de: bewahrt Luke 2:8; Luke 8:29; Luke 11:21; Acts 12:4; Acts 21:24

4. guard against, beware of (4×) To guard against, beware of, or take precaution — typically in the middle voice (phulassomai) with reflexive force. Luke 12:15 warns 'guard yourselves from all greed.' Acts 21:25 urges Gentile believers to guard themselves from idol-contaminated food. In 2 Peter 3:17, believers are told to beware lest they be carried away by error. The shift from active ('guard something') to middle ('guard yourself against') marks a distinct semantic move from custody to caution. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: beware-of, guard-yourselves, to-guard | es: guardaos, guardarse, guárdate | fr: garder, préserver | de: bewahren, bewahrt Luke 12:15; Acts 21:25; 2Tim 4:15; 2Pet 3:17

φῡλή G5443 N-AFS (31×)

tribe, clan — a division of a people by ancestral descent, especially the twelve tribes of Israel

Phyle designates a tribe or clan defined by common descent, appearing 31 times in the New Testament with its center of gravity in Revelation. In the Gospels, Jesus promises the Twelve that they will sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel (Matt 19:28; Luke tribe, clan (31×) A division of a people united by descent from a common ancestor, especially the twelve tribes of Israel. Jesus assigns the Twelve thrones to judge Israel's tribes (Matt 19:28; Luke 22:30). Paul identifies himself as of the tribe of Benjamin (Phil 3:5). Hebrews notes Jesus' descent from Judah, a non-priestly tribe (Heb 7:13-14). Revelation expands tribal language into universal scope: the Lamb redeems from every tribe and nation (Rev 5:9; 7:4-9). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

22:30), and Anna the prophetess is identified as belonging to the tribe of Asher (Luke 2:36). Paul claims the tribe of Benjamin as his pedigree (Acts 13:21; Rom 11:1; Phil 3:5). Hebrews notes that Jesus arose from Judah, a tribe to which Moses said nothing about priests (Heb 7:13-14). Revelation transforms the tribal vocabulary into a universal vision: the Lamb's redemption gathers people from every tribe, tongue, people, and nation (Rev 5:9; 7:9; 13:7; 14:6), while the 144,000 are sealed from every tribe of Israel (Rev 7:4-8). Spanish 'tribu,' French 'tribu,' and German 'Stamm' render the concept uniformly.

en: of-tribe, tribe | es: de-tribu, tribu | fr: tribu | de: Stamm, φυλῆς Matt 19:28; Matt 24:30; Luke 2:36; Luke 22:30; Acts 13:21

φύλλον G5444 N-NNP (6×)

Leaf, leaves; the foliage of a tree or plant, used both literally and as a sign of seasonal change or fruitlessness.

Phyllon denotes the leaf of a tree or plant and appears in the Gospels primarily in connection with the fig tree. In Mark 11:13, Jesus sees a fig tree with leaves but no fruit—a powerful image of outward promise masking inner emptiness. The same word appears in the Olivet Discourse (Matt 24:32, Mark 13:28) where budding leaves signal that summer is near, a parable of eschatological readiness. Every major translation renders it straightforwardly: Spanish hojas, French feuilles, German Blaetter—leaves, plain and vivid.

leaves (6×) The leaves or foliage of a tree, used in the Synoptic Gospels to describe the fig tree's seasonal display. In Mark 11:13 the presence of leaves without fruit becomes a symbol of deceptive appearance, while in the parable of the fig tree (Matt 24:32, Mark 13:28) new leaves signal the approach of an anticipated season. Cross-linguistic glosses (Spanish hojas, French feuilles, German Blaetter) all confirm a single concrete botanical sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: leaves | es: hojas | fr: feuille, feuilles | de: Blaetter, φύλλα Matt 21:19; Matt 24:32; Mark 11:13; Mark 13:28

φύρ-ᾱμα G5445 N-NNS (5×)

lump (of dough) — a mass of mixed or kneaded material, used literally and as a metaphor for a community

Phyrama refers to a lump of kneaded dough, from phyrao ('to mix, knead'). While the word has a straightforward culinary origin, every New Testament occurrence deploys it metaphorically. Paul uses the potter's lump in Romans 9:21 to argue God's sovereign right over his creation, while in Romans 11:16 the consecrated firstfruits sanctify the whole batch. The leaven metaphor in 1 Corinthians 5:6-7 and Galatians 5:9 warns that a small amount of corruption permeates the entire community. The Spanish 'masa' (dough/mass) and German 'Teig' (dough) capture both the literal and figurative potential of the word.

(5×) A batch or lump of kneaded dough, used in the NT exclusively in figurative contexts to represent a collective body — whether a community subject to moral influence (1 Cor 5:6-7, Gal 5:9, 'a little leaven leavens the whole lump'), a people whose firstfruits consecrate the whole (Rom 11:16), or clay in the potter's hand representing humanity under divine sovereignty (Rom 9:21). The French 'pate' and Spanish 'masa' reflect the primary baking sense from which all the metaphors derive. LEAVEN LEAVENED BREAD

en: lump | es: masa | fr: Teig, pâte | de: Teig Rom 9:21; Rom 11:16; 1Cor 5:6; 1Cor 5:7; Gal 5:9

φῡσικός G5446 Adj-AFS (3×)

natural, inborn, produced by nature; opposed to artificial, taught, or conventional

This Greek adjective describes what is natural or inborn, in contrast to what is taught, learned, or conventional. In Romans 1:26-27, Paul uses it to describe the 'natural use' of human sexuality, contrasting it with what is 'contrary to nature.' The word carries philosophical weight from classical Greek, where it distinguished between what exists by nature (physis) versus by convention (nomos). In 2 Peter 2:12, it describes creatures that are 'natural' or 'instinctive' in their behavior, acting according to their created nature rather than rational thought.

(3×) The multilingual evidence (English 'natural', Spanish 'natural/naturales', French 'naturel', German 'natuerlich') shows consistent rendering across languages, reflecting the word's philosophical meaning of 'belonging to nature' or 'according to nature.' In Romans 1, Paul contrasts 'natural relations' with those 'contrary to nature,' using a distinction well-established in Greco-Roman moral philosophy. The term appears in 2 Peter 2:12 to describe instinctive animals that act according to their created nature. NATURE INNATE CHARACTER

en: natural | es: natural, naturales | fr: naturel | de: natuerlich Rom 1:26; Rom 1:27; 2Pet 2:12

φῡσικός G5447 Adv (1×)

naturally, by nature, instinctively

This adverb describes what comes by nature rather than by teaching or convention—what is instinctive or innate. Jude uses it to contrast the instinctive knowledge of false teachers with their ignorance of spiritual matters: they understand things naturally like unreasoning animals, but corrupt themselves in what they know this way. The word appears in philosophical Greek to distinguish natural from conventional or learned behavior, and that distinction operates in Jude's polemic against those who rely on physical instinct while rejecting divine truth.

(1×) In a natural or instinctive manner, by innate capacity rather than instruction. Jude 1:10 employs this adverb in his denunciation of false teachers: 'whatever they do not understand, they blaspheme, but what they know naturally (physikos), like unreasoning animals, by these things they are destroyed.' The multilingual renderings —Spanish 'naturalmente,' French 'naturellement,' German 'von Natur'—all capture the contrast between instinctive animal knowledge and spiritual understanding. This is the only New Testament occurrence. NATURE INNATE CHARACTER

en: naturally | es: naturalmente | fr: naturellement, | de: von-Natur Jude 1:10

φῡσιόω G5448 V-PIM/P-3S (7×)

To puff up with pride or conceit; in the passive, to be inflated with arrogance. A distinctly Pauline term for spiritual pride.

Phusioo derives from phusa ('bellows, breath') and evokes the image of something being blown up like a balloon — inflated beyond its natural size. Paul claims this word almost entirely for himself in the New Testament, wielding it as a sharp diagnostic for the spiritual disease of Corinth. Six of its seven occurrences appear in 1 Corinthians, where factionalism, tolerance of immorality, and intellectual boasting all manifest as being 'puffed up.' The memorable contrast in 1 Corinthians 8:1 — 'knowledge puffs up, but love builds up' — pairs inflation against construction, vanity against substance. Spanish captures the image vividly with 'infla' (active) and 'inflados' (passive).

1. be puffed up, be arrogant (passive/middle) (6×) To be puffed up with conceit, inflated with arrogance (passive/middle voice). This covers the bulk of Pauline usage where the Corinthians are the subjects of spiritual inflation: being puffed up in favor of one leader against another (1 Cor 4:6), being arrogant as though Paul would not come (1 Cor 4:18-19), being puffed up rather than grieving over immorality (1 Cor 5:2), and love's defining quality of not being puffed up (1 Cor 13:4). Spanish 'inflados' and 'se-envanece' both capture the passive state of swollen pride. PRIDE

AND ARROGANCE
en: being-puffed-up, having-been-puffed-up, is-puffed-up | es: inflados, se-envanece, se-inflaron | fr: enfler, φυσιούμενος | de: aufgeblasen-sein 1Cor 4:6; 1Cor 4:18; 1Cor 4:19; 1Cor 5:2; 1Cor 13:4

2. puff up, make arrogant (active) (1×) To cause someone to be puffed up, to inflate with pride (active voice). In 1 Cor 8:1, 'knowledge puffs up' — gnosis is the active agent that inflates the ego, set in deliberate contrast with love that 'builds up' (oikodomei). The active voice places responsibility on the thing that causes the arrogance rather than on the person who experiences it. Spanish 'infla' preserves the active causative force, while German 'aufgeblasen-sein' blends both voices. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: puffs-up | es: infla | fr: enfler | de: aufgeblasen-sein 1Cor 8:1

φύσις G5449 N-GFS (14×)
Nature — the inherent character or constitution of a person or thing; also used adverbially as 'by nature' to denote what is innate.
Physis refers to the natural order, the inherent constitution or essential character of something. Paul uses it extensively in Romans to discuss what accords with or violates nature (Rom 1:26), what uncircumcised Gentiles do 'by nature' when they follow the law written on their hearts (Rom 2:14, 27), and the metaphor of wild and cultivated olive branches and their natural versus grafted relationship (Rom 11:21, 24). The word also addresses identity and origin: Jews are 'by nature' Jews rather than Gentile sinners (Gal 2:15), former pagans served beings that 'by nature' are not gods (Gal 4:8), and all people were 'by nature' children of wrath (Eph 2:3).

1. nature (10×) The inherent character, constitution, or essential quality of a person or thing. This sense treats physis as a noun denoting nature itself — what something fundamentally is. Paul uses it to discuss what accords with or violates the natural order (Rom 1:26, 'contrary to nature'), and in his olive tree metaphor where branches belong to the cultivated tree 'by nature' versus being grafted in (Rom 11:21, 24). Translations are strikingly uniform: Spanish 'naturaleza,' French 'nature,' German 'Natur' — all cognates tracing back to the Latin natura, itself a calque of physis. NATURE INNATE CHARACTER en: nature | es: naturaleza | fr: Natur, nature | de: Natur Rom 1:26; Rom 2:27; Rom 11:21; Rom 11:24

2. by nature (4×) An adverbial usage meaning 'by nature' or 'naturally,' emphasizing what is innate or inherent from birth rather than acquired. In Rom 2:14, Gentiles who do not have the Torah yet 'by nature' do what it requires demonstrate an inborn moral sense. Gal 2:15 distinguishes those who are 'by nature' Jews from Gentile sinners — a matter of birth identity. Gal 4:8 speaks of serving beings that 'by nature' are not gods, and Eph 2:3 describes humanity as 'by nature' children of wrath. Spanish 'por naturaleza' and English 'by nature' preserve the prepositional construction that marks this as an adverbial idiom distinct from the bare noun. NATURE INNATE CHARACTER en: by-nature | es: por-naturaleza | fr: Natur, nature | de: Natur Rom 2:14; Gal 2:15; Gal 4:8; Eph 2:3

φῡσίωσις G5450 N-NFP (1×)
puffed-up pride, conceit, arrogance, inflation of ego
This noun denotes an inflated sense of self-importance, a puffing up with pride. The root imagery is literally of inflation or swelling. Paul includes it in his vice list when expressing concern about what he might find when he arrives in Corinth—quarreling, jealousy, outbursts of anger, and 'conceit.' The word appears only here in the New Testament but captures a recurring biblical concern: pride that puffs people up rather than building them up in love, the kind of arrogance that fragments Christian community.

(1×) The condition of being puffed up with pride or conceit. Paul uses the plural form in 2 Corinthians 12:20, listing his fears about what he might find in Corinth: 'quarreling, jealousy, anger, rivalries, slander, gossip, conceit (physioseis), and disorder.' The Spanish 'soberbias,' French 'enflure,' English 'conceit' all point to inflated self-regard. This metaphorical inflation contrasts with the humility that should characterize Christian community. The term appears only once in the New Testament. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: conceit | es: soberbias | fr: enflure | de: Aufgeblasenheit 2Cor 12:20

φῠτ-εία G5451 N-NFS (1×)
plant, planting, something planted
This word can refer either to the act of planting or to the plant itself, what has been planted. Jesus uses it metaphorically in Matthew when responding to the Pharisees' criticism of his disciples: 'Every plant that my heavenly Father has not planted will be uprooted.' The agricultural imagery works spiritually to distinguish authentic disciples (planted by God) from false religious traditions (planted by human authority). In classical Greek the word could mean plantation, plant, or the process of planting, and Jesus draws on this agricultural familiarity to make a point about divine versus human origins.

(1×) A plant or something planted, used metaphorically by Jesus. In Matthew 15:13, responding to the Pharisees' offense at his teaching, Jesus declares: 'Every plant (phyteia) which my heavenly Father has not planted will be uprooted.' The agricultural metaphor distinguishes God's authentic work from human religious traditions. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'planta,' French 'plantation,' English 'plant'—preserve the concrete image that Jesus employs for spiritual discernment. This is the word's only New Testament occurrence. PLANTING PLANTATION en: plant | es: planta | fr: plantation | de: φυτεία Matt 15:13

φῠτ-εύω G5452 V-AMP-2S (11×)
Plant — to set in the ground for growth; figuratively, to establish or found a spiritual community
The verb φυτεύω (phyteuō) means to set a plant into soil, used both literally and figuratively. Jesus' vineyard parable begins with a man who 'planted a vineyard' (Matt 21:33; Mark 12:1), and a fig tree is 'planted' in Luke 13:6. Jesus warns that every plant his Father 'has not planted will be rooted up' (Matt 15:13). Paul employs the metaphor for apostolic ministry: 'I planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the growth' (1 Cor 3:6-8). Spanish 'plantar' and French 'planter' work for both registers.

plant (11×) To plant literally — to set a tree, vine, or crop in the ground for cultivation. The vineyard parables use it of agricultural establishment (Matt 21:33; Mark 12:1; Luke 13:6), and it appears in the Lot saying about daily life before judgment (Luke 17:28). Spanish 'plantar' and Arabic غرس both render the agricultural sense. PLANTING VEGETATION en: be-planted, planted, planting | es: planta, plantaban, plantada | fr: planter | de: pflanzen, πεφυτευμένην, φυτεύθητι Matt 15:13; Matt 21:33; Mark 12:1; Luke 13:6; Luke 17:6

φύω G5453 V-APP-NNS (3×)
to grow, spring up; of plants sprouting or sprouting forth
This Greek verb describes the natural process of growth and sprouting, particularly of plants. In Luke's parable of the sower (8:6, 8), it depicts seeds that 'sprang up' after being sown—a vivid agricultural image familiar to Jesus' hearers. The word emphasizes the organic process of growth from seed to visible plant. In Hebrews 12:15, the metaphorical use appears: watching carefully 'lest any root of bitterness springing up cause trouble.' The perfect participle form conveys the state of having grown or having sprung up.

(3×) The cross-linguistic glosses emphasize the action of sprouting or growing: English 'having-grown, springing,' Spanish 'brotando' (sprouting), French 'pousser' (to push forth), German 'wachsen' (to grow). Luke 8:6 describes seed that sprang up but withered for lack of moisture; verse 8 describes seed that grew a hundredfold. Hebrews 12:15 uses the image metaphorically for bitterness that can spring up like an unwanted plant and defile many, drawing on Deuteronomy 29:18. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: having-grown, springing | es: brotando | fr: pousser, wachsen | de: wachsen, φυὲν Luke 8:6; Luke 8:8; Heb 12:15

φωλ-εός G5454 N-AMP (2×)

hole, den, lair, burrow where an animal lives

φωλεός refers to the den or burrow where wild animals make their home—caves for bears, holes for foxes, nests for birds. The word appears in Jesus' poignant saying about his own homelessness in ministry. Both Matthew 8:20 and Luke 9:58 record Jesus telling a would-be disciple: 'Foxes have holes (φωλεοὺς), and birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man has nowhere to lay his head.' The contrast is stark: even wild animals have secure dwelling places, but Jesus, the Lord of creation, lived without a home, depending on the hospitality of others throughout his itinerant ministry.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in the same saying about Jesus' homelessness. The φωλεοί of foxes stand in ironic contrast to Jesus' lack of shelter—the Creator is less settled than his creatures. The French tanière and Spanish guaridas both denote animal dens or lairs. Jesus' point to the disciple is clear: following him means embracing a pilgrim existence, surrendering the security of home and possessions for the sake of kingdom mission. HOLES AND OPENINGS en: dens | es: guaridas | fr: tanière | de: φωλεοὺς Matt 8:20; Luke 9:58

φων-έω G5455 V-APA-NMS (43×)

To call, summon, cry out; of a rooster, to crow

Rooted in the noun phone ('voice, sound'), this verb covers the full range of vocal production. Most often it means to call someone by name or summon them to come (Matt 20:32; Mark 9:35). Its most memorable use is the rooster's crow that sealed Peter's denial (Matt 26:34, 74). In a handful of passages it describes impassioned shouting or crying out (Luke 23:46). Spanish splits the senses neatly: 'llamar' for summoning, 'cantar' for crowing, and 'clamar' for crying out.

1. to call or summon (24×) To call someone by name or summon them to come. Jesus calls Lazarus forth (John 12:17), the blind man is summoned (Mark 10:49), and workers are called to receive wages (Matt 20:32). Spanish 'llamar' and German 'rufen' consistently mark this interpersonal summoning sense across all 24 occurrences. CALLING AND NAMING en: They-called, call, called | es: Llamaron, les-llamó, llama | fr: appeler | de: rufen, ruft Matt 20:32; Matt 27:47; Mark 9:35; Mark 10:49

2. to crow (of a rooster) (12×) The characteristic crowing of a rooster, used exclusively in the Passion narratives concerning Peter's denial. Jesus predicts the cock will crow before Peter denies him three times (Matt 26:34; Mark 14:30). Spanish shifts to 'cantar' (to sing), a natural idiom for bird vocalization, while French retains 'appeler' without distinguishing the animal cry. CALLING AND NAMING en: crowed, crows, to-crow | es: cantar, cantará, cante | fr: appeler | de: rufen, ruft Matt 26:34; Matt 26:74; Matt 26:75; Mark 14:30; Mark 14:68

3. to cry out or shout (7×) To cry out, shout, or exclaim with vocal intensity, without necessarily summoning anyone specific. An unclean spirit cries out (Mark 1:26), Jesus calls with a loud voice from the cross (Luke 23:46), and he cries into the crowd 'He who has ears, let him hear' (Luke 8:8). Spanish 'clamar' captures this elevated register distinct from ordinary calling. CALLING AND NAMING en: called, called-out, calling | es: clamaba, clamando, clamó | fr: appeler | de: rufen, ruft Mark 1:26; Luke 8:8; Luke 8:54; Luke 16:24; Luke 23:46

φων-ή G5456 N-NFP (139×)

Voice, vocal sound, or spoken utterance; rarely, a non-vocal sound or noise from instruments or nature.

One of the New Testament's most vivid sensory words, phonē covers the full range of audible expression from the human voice to heavenly proclamations. It is the word chosen for the divine voice at Jesus's baptism ('This is my beloved Son,' Matt 3:17) and transfiguration, for John the Baptist as 'the voice crying in the wilderness,' and for the cries of demons, crowds, and angels in Revelation. Cross-lingual evidence is remarkably stable—Spanish 'voz,' French 'voix,' German 'Stimme' all denote voice consistently. In two rare instances (1 Cor 14:10; Rev 8:13), phonē extends to non-vocal sounds or noises, where Spanish shifts to 'sonidos' and English to 'sounds,' signaling the semantic stretch.

1. voice, sound (137×) Voice or vocal sound produced by a living being—human, angelic, or divine. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (137 of 139 occurrences) spans the full register from whispered speech to thunderous heavenly declarations. All four major translation languages converge: Spanish 'voz,' French 'voix,' German 'Stimme,' English 'voice.' Anchoring passages include the heavenly voice at baptism (Matt 3:17), the Baptist's self-identification as 'a voice' (John 1:23), and the apocalyptic voices of Revelation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-cry, a-voice, sound | es: la-voz, sonido, voz | fr: voix | de: Stimme Matt 3:17; Matt 12:19; Matt 17:5; Mark 1:11; Mark 9:7

2. sound, noise (non-vocal) (2×) A non-vocal audible sound or noise—from instruments, natural forces, or cosmic events. Attested just twice in the NT: Paul's discussion of different 'kinds of sounds' in the world (1 Cor 14:10) and the eagle's cry introducing woes in Rev 8:13. Spanish shifts from 'voz' to 'sonidos' and English from 'voice' to 'sounds,' marking the semantic extension from vocal utterance to broader acoustic phenomena. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-sounds, sounds | es: de-voces, sonidos | fr: voix | de: Stimme 1Cor 14:10; Rev 8:13

φῶς G5457 N-GNP (72×)

Light; natural, divine, or metaphorical illumination; rarely the glow of a fire.

One of the richest theological words in the New Testament, phos spans the entire range of illumination — from the physical light of the sun (Matt 17:2) to the divine light that shines in darkness (John 1:5) and the moral light believers are called to embody (Matt 5:14). Jesus' declaration 'I am the light of the world' (John 8:12) makes this word a cornerstone of Johannine theology. A single occurrence at Mark 14:54 refers specifically to the glow of a courtyard fire, where the Hindi 'aag' (fire) rather than 'jyoti' (light) reveals a real semantic narrowing.

1. light (illumination) (71×) Light as illumination in its full range: natural daylight (Matt 17:2), divine radiance (2 Cor 4:6), spiritual enlightenment (John 1:5; 8:12), and moral transparency (Matt 5:16). This sense dominates with 71 of 72 occurrences. Translations are remarkably uniform — Spanish 'luz,' French 'lumière,' German 'Licht' — reflecting how naturally these languages map onto the same breadth of literal and metaphorical illumination. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: a-light, light | es: luz | fr: lumière | de: Licht Matt 4:16; Matt 5:14; Matt 5:16; Matt 6:23

2. firelight, fire (as light source) (1×) The glow or illumination cast by a fire, attested only at Mark 14:54, where Peter warms himself by the fire in the high priest's courtyard. The multilingual evidence decisively separates this from generic light: Hindi uses 'aag' (fire) rather than the usual 'jyoti/prakash' (light), and several other languages shift to fire-specific vocabulary, confirming that the referent here is firelight as a localized light source, not illumination in the abstract. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: light | es: luz | fr: lumière | de: Licht Mark 14:54

φωστήρ G5458 N-NMS (2×)

light-bearer, luminary, heavenly body that gives light φωστήρ denotes something that gives light—typically the sun, moon, and stars as celestial luminaries. Paul uses it metaphorically in Philippians 2:15, urging believers to 'shine as lights (φωστῆρες) in the world,' standing out in a dark and crooked generation like stars in the night sky. In Revelation 21:11, the word takes on a different sense: the glory of the New Jerusalem is described as 'her radiance (ὁ φωστὴρ αὐτῆς) like a most precious stone, like jasper, clear as crystal'—here φωστήρ refers not to a light source but to the radiant brilliance emanating from the city of God.

(2×) The two New Testament uses show φωστήρ in both literal and metaphorical senses. Philippians 2:15 uses it metaphorically for believers who illuminate a dark world through blameless living; Revelation 21:11 uses it for the supernatural radiance of the heavenly city. The German Leuchte ('lamp, light') and Spanish luminares ('luminaries') capture the light-giving quality. Christians are called to be sources of light in darkness, anticipating the day when God's glory will be the only light needed. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: lights, radiance | es: brillo, luminares | fr: Leuchte | de: Leuchte Phil 2:15; Rev 21:11

φωσφόρ-ος G5459 Adj-NMS (1×)

morning star, light-bearer, dawn-bringer (especially the planet Venus)

Phosphoros literally means 'light-bearer' or 'light-bringer' and was the Greek name for the planet Venus when it appeared as the morning star, heralding the dawn. Peter uses this term metaphorically to describe the risen Christ or the prophetic word: until the day dawns and the morning star rises in believers' hearts. Classical literature applied it to various dawn-bringing deities, but Peter's usage transforms it into a symbol of Christ's illuminating presence or the spiritual enlightenment that comes through the prophetic message confirmed by Christ's resurrection.

(1×) The morning star, the light-bringer that heralds dawn, used metaphorically by Peter. In 2 Peter 1:19 the apostle writes: 'we have the prophetic word made more sure, to which you do well to pay attention as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawns and the morning star (phosphoros) arises in your hearts.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'lucero de la mañana,' German 'Morgenstern,' English 'morning-star'—recognize the astronomical reference transformed into spiritual metaphor. The rising of this star represents Christ's illumination or the coming kingdom. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: morning-star | es: lucero-de-la-mañana | fr: φωσφόρος | de: Morgenstern 2Pet 1:19

φωτεινός G5460 Adj-NFS (5×)

bright, luminous, full of light — shining with physical or spiritual radiance

Photeinos describes something filled with or radiating light, built on phos ('light'). In the New Testament it carries both a literal and a moral-spiritual dimension. The bright cloud at the Transfiguration (Matt 17:5) is photeinos in its most concrete physical sense, while Jesus' teaching about the eye as the lamp of the body (Matt 6:22; Luke 11:34, 36) uses the word to describe the inner condition of a person whose spiritual vision is clear and uncorrupted. The Spanish 'luminoso' and French 'lumineux' neatly parallel this dual register of radiant light and metaphorical clarity.

(5×) Shining, radiant, or full of light — applied both to physical luminosity and to spiritual-moral illumination. Describes the bright cloud of divine glory at the Transfiguration (Matt 17:5) and the state of a person whose inner 'eye' is healthy and unclouded, allowing the whole body to be flooded with light (Matt 6:22; Luke 11:34, 36). All 5 occurrences connect outward radiance with inward wholeness, a link the multilingual glosses — Spanish 'luminoso,' French 'lumineux' — consistently preserve. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: bright, full-of-light | es: luminosa, luminoso | fr: lumineux | de: φωτεινόν, φωτεινὴ, φωτεινὸν Matt 6:22; Matt 17:5; Luke 11:34; Luke 11:36

φωτίζω G5461 V-APA-GMS (11×)

Illuminate, give light; enlighten spiritually; bring hidden things to light, reveal Rooted in phos (light), this verb moves from physical illumination to spiritual enlightenment to revelatory disclosure. John 1:9 declares the true light 'enlightens' every person coming into the world – a claim about universal spiritual illumination. In Revelation, the same verb describes the glory of God literally lighting the heavenly city (21:23) and the angel whose splendor illuminates the whole earth (18:1). Paul employs a third dimension: bringing hidden things 'to light,' whether God's secret counsels at the last day (1 Cor 4:5) or the mystery of Christ's plan now revealed (Eph 3:9). The Spanish and French translations consistently use 'iluminar/eclairer' across all three senses, while German 'erleuchten' does the same, suggesting the metaphorical unity underlying these distinctions.

1. enlighten, give spiritual understanding (5×) To enlighten a person spiritually, granting insight, understanding, or conversion. John 1:9 uses this of the true light enlightening every person; Hebrews 6:4 and 10:32 speak of those 'once enlightened' – an experience so formative that Spanish 'iluminados' and German 'erleuchtet' became near-technical terms for baptismal illumination. Luke 11:36 applies it to inner light filling the whole body when the eye is healthy. ILLUMINATE ENLIGHTEN

en: enlightened, enlightens, having-been-enlightened | es: habiendo-sido-iluminados, ilumina, iluminados | fr: erleuchten, éclairer | de: erleuchten, erleuchtet Luke 11:36; John 1:9; Eph 1:18; Heb 6:4; Heb 10:32

2. illuminate, shine upon (4×) To illuminate physically or eschatologically, shining light upon a place or people. In Revelation 18:1 an angel's glory illuminates the earth; in 21:23 and 22:5 God's glory and the Lamb replace sun and lamp as the city's light source. Spanish distinguishes tenses – 'fue iluminada' (was illuminated) vs. 'alumbrará' (will illuminate) – marking whether the illumination is visionary or prophetic. First Corinthians 4:5 bridges to the revelatory sense: the Lord will illuminate even the hidden things of darkness. ILLUMINATE ENLIGHTEN

en: illuminated, was-illuminated, will-illuminate | es: alumbrará, fue-iluminada, iluminará | fr: erleuchten, illuminer | de: erleuchten 1Cor 4:5; Rev 18:1; Rev 21:23; Rev 22:5

3. bring to light, reveal (2×) To bring something concealed into the open, to reveal or make known. In Ephesians 3:9 Paul's mission is to 'bring to light' the mystery of God's plan hidden for ages, where Spanish 'iluminar' and French 'eclairer' extend the light metaphor to disclosure. In 2 Timothy 1:10, Christ has 'brought to light' life and immortality through the gospel – the definitive unveiling that transforms hidden possibility into proclaimed reality. ILLUMINATE ENLIGHTEN

en: having-brought-to-light, to-enlighten | es: iluminar, que-iluminó | fr: erleuchten | de: erleuchten Eph 3:9; 2Tim 1:10

φωτ-ισμός G5462 N-AMS (2×)

illumination, the act or result of bringing light; both physical radiance and spiritual revelation

Illumination captures both the physical phenomenon of light shining forth and the metaphorical unveiling of truth. In 2 Corinthians 4, Paul uses the term twice within a profound meditation on revelation. First, he speaks of Satan blinding minds to prevent the illumination of the gospel's glory (4:4), then immediately points to God's original creative command—'Let light shine out of darkness'—now fulfilled in hearts through knowledge of Christ's glory (4:6). The word thus bridges creation's first light and the new creation's dawning.

(2×) The shining forth of light, whether literal or metaphorical. Both occurrences in 2 Corinthians 4 (verses 4 and 6) deploy the term metaphorically for spiritual enlightenment—the gospel's radiance that reveals Christ's glory. Paul connects God's primordial light-creation with the illumination that comes through knowing Jesus. Translations across languages ('illumination,' 'iluminación,' 'Erleuchtung') preserve the visual-cognitive metaphor, recognizing that Paul sees gospel knowledge as perceptual, not merely propositional. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: illumination | es: iluminación | fr: illumination | de: Erleuchtung 2Cor 4:4; 2Cor 4:6

χαίρω G5463 V-ASP-2P (74×)

To rejoice, be glad, or experience joy; also a conventional greeting meaning 'hail' or 'greetings.'

Chairō is the foundational Greek verb of joy, commanding believers to rejoice even amid suffering (Matt 5:12; Phil 4:4). From personal gladness to cosmic celebration, it appears in contexts ranging from the Magi's great joy at the star (Matt 2:10) to Paul's exhortation to 'rejoice always' (1 Thess 5:16). The imperative form also crystallized into a standard greeting — 'Hail!' or 'Greetings!' — used both sincerely (the angel to Mary, Luke 1:28) and in cruel mockery (soldiers to Jesus, Matt 27:29). Spanish captures this dual nature with 'alegraos/gozaos' for joy and 'Salve' for the greeting.

1. rejoice, be glad (63×) To experience or express joy, gladness, and delight — the emotional core of the word across 63 occurrences. Translations emphasize rejoicing: Spanish 'regocijaos/alegraos/gozaos,' German 'sich freuen,' French 'se réjouir.' The Magi rejoiced with exceeding great joy (Matt 2:10), Jesus told the persecuted to 'rejoice and be glad' (Matt 5:12), and the shepherd rejoices over the found sheep more than the ninety-nine (Matt 18:13). Paul's letters elevate this to a programmatic command: 'Rejoice in the Lord always' (Phil 4:4). REJOICING AND GREETING
en: I-rejoice, Rejoice, rejoice | es: Regocijaos, alegraos, gozaos | fr: se-réjouir | de: freut-sich, sich-freuen Matt 2:10; Matt 5:12; Matt 18:13; Mark 14:11; Luke 6:23

2. greet, hail (11×) A formulaic greeting or salutation — 'Hail!' or 'Greetings!' — derived from the imperative 'rejoice' but functioning as a conventional address. Appearing in 11 occurrences, the multilingual evidence shows Spanish distinguishing this as 'Salve' or 'Alégrate' versus the emotional 'gozaos.' The angel Gabriel's 'Hail, favored one!' to Mary (Luke 1:28) is the most theologically rich instance, while the soldiers' 'Hail, King of the Jews!' (Matt 27:29; Mark 15:18) and Judas's 'Hail, Rabbi!' (Matt 26:49) deploy the greeting with bitter irony. REJOICING AND GREETING
en: Greetings, Hail, Rejoice | es: Alegraos, Alégrate, Salve | fr: se-réjouir | de: freut-sich, sich-freuen Matt 26:49; Matt 27:29; Matt 28:9; Mark 15:18; Luke 1:28

χάλαζ-α G5464 N-GFS (4×)

Hail; hailstones sent as divine judgment in apocalyptic visions.
Denotes hail or hailstones, a natural phenomenon that in Scripture consistently functions as an instrument of divine judgment. All four NT occurrences appear in Revelation, echoing the plague of hail on Egypt (Exodus 9:18-26) and the cosmic theophany traditions of the Old Testament. In Revelation 8:7 hail mixed with fire and blood devastates the earth; in 11:19 great hail accompanies the opening of God's temple in heaven; and in 16:21 enormous hailstones weighing about a talent fall on the rebellious. Spanish granizo, French grêle, and German Hagel all converge on the same concrete meteorological meaning.

(4×) Hail or hailstones, appearing in the NT exclusively in apocalyptic judgment contexts within Revelation. In 8:7 hail mixed with fire and blood is hurled to earth as the first trumpet sounds. In 11:19 great hail accompanies the dramatic opening of the heavenly temple. Revelation 16:21 describes hailstones of extraordinary weight (about a talent each) falling on humanity, who blaspheme God because of the plague. The multilingual unanimity – Spanish granizo, French grêle, German Hagel – confirms a single, concrete meteorological sense deployed as divine-judgment imagery. HAIL WEATHER
en: hail | es: granizo | fr: Hagel | de: Hagel Rev 8:7; Rev 11:19; Rev 16:21

χᾰλάω G5465 V-FIA-1S (7×)

To let down, lower by rope or mechanism; to slacken or release downward.
The verb chaláō means to lower or let down something by loosening a rope or cord. It appears in vivid New Testament scenes: friends lowering a paralytic through a hole in the roof (Mark 2:4), Peter letting down fishing nets at Jesus' command (Luke 5:4-5), and disciples lowering Paul in a basket through a wall opening to escape Damascus (Acts 9:25). In Acts 27:17, sailors lower the sea anchor during a storm. Spanish descolgando and French descendre both capture the controlled downward motion that defines every usage.

let down, lower (7×) To let down or lower by rope, cord, or similar means — always denoting a controlled descent of a person or object. The word carries a strong physical concreteness: a paralytic lowered through a roof opening (Mark 2:4), fishing nets cast into deep water (Luke 5:4-5), Paul lowered in a basket over a city wall (Acts 9:25), and nautical gear lowered during a storm (Acts 27:17). French descendre and Spanish bajan both reflect this consistent 'downward release' motion. DESCENDING AND TEARING en: I-was-let-down, I-will-let-down, having-lowered | es: bajan, descolgando, echad | fr: abâisser, descendre | de: herablassen, χαλάσαντες, χαλάσατε Mark 2:4; Luke 5:4; Luke 5:5; Acts 9:25; Acts 27:17

χαλδ-αῖος G5466 N-GMP (1×)

Chaldeans, people from Chaldea (Babylonia), associated with astrology
The Chaldeans were a people group from the region of Babylonia, and in the Greco-Roman world the term also became associated with astrologers and diviners, since the Chaldeans were renowned for their astronomical and astrological expertise. Stephen uses this term in Acts when recounting Abraham's origins: God appeared to Abraham while he was still in Mesopotamia, before he lived in Haran, bringing him out from 'the land of the Chaldeans.' This anchors Israel's patriarch in a specific historical and geographical context, the great civilization of ancient Babylonia.

(1×) The Chaldeans, an ethnic and geographical designation for people from the Babylonian region. Stephen mentions them in Acts 7:4 in his defense speech, recounting Abraham's call: 'he went out from the land of the Chaldeans and settled in Haran.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'de los caldeos,' French 'Chaldéen,' English 'of the Chaldeans'—all preserve the ethnic-geographical reference. In classical sources 'Chaldean' also meant 'astrologer,' but here it simply identifies Abraham's place of origin in Mesopotamia. CHALDEANS PEOPLE LAND difficult, hard, dangerous, harsh, fierce χαλεπός describes what is hard to deal with—whether difficult circumstances, dangerous situations, or fierce behavior. In Matthew 8:28, it characterizes the two demon-possessed men Jesus encountered in the country of the Gadarenes: they were 'so fierce (χαλεποὶ) that no one could pass that way'—violent, dangerous, impossible to control. In 2 Timothy 3:1, Paul warns that 'in the last days difficult times (καιροὶ χαλεποί) will come'—seasons characterized by hardship, moral decay, and spiritual danger. The word suggests not mere difficulty but genuine peril.
en: of-Chaldaioi | es: de-los-Chaldaîoi | fr: Chaldéen | de: Χαλδαίων Acts 7:4

χαλεπ-ός G5467 Adj-NMP (2×)

(2×) The two uses describe different kinds of danger: demonic ferocity (Matthew 8:28) and eschatological hardship (2 Timothy 3:1). The demon-possessed men were χαλεποί in their violent unpredictability; the last days will be χαλεποί in their moral chaos (as Paul's following vice list makes clear). The German wild and Spanish fieros capture the threatening quality—these are conditions that pose genuine danger to those who encounter them. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: difficult, fierce | es: difíciles, fieros | fr: difficile, χαλεποί | de: wild, χαλεποὶ Matt 8:28; 2Tim 3:1

χᾰλῑνᾰγωγ-έω G5468 V-PPA-NMS (2×)

to bridle, control with a bit, restrain, guide firmly χαλιναγωγέω (from χαλινός 'bridle' + ἀγωγή 'leading') means to control or guide with a bridle, as one would control a horse. James uses it metaphorically twice in his letter, both times referring to controlling the tongue. In James 1:26, he warns that if anyone 'does not bridle his tongue (χαλιναγωγῶν γλῶσσαν)' while thinking himself religious, his religion is worthless. In James 3:2, he observes that 'if anyone does not stumble in what he says, he is a perfect man, able also to bridle (χαλιναγωγῆσαι) his whole body'—control of speech demonstrates comprehensive self-control.

(2×) Both uses appear in James' extended treatment of the tongue's power. The imagery is vivid: as a bit controls a powerful horse, so must believers control their speech. The German zuegeln ('to rein in') and Spanish refrenar ('to restrain') preserve the equestrian metaphor. James 1:26 makes bridling the tongue a test of true religion; James 3:2 makes it evidence of spiritual maturity. The tongue, like a horse, requires firm, constant direction. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: bridling, to-bridle | es: de-refrenar, refrenando | fr: χαλιναγωγῆσαι, χαλιναγωγῶν | de: zuegeln Jas 1:26; Jas 3:2

χᾰλῑνός G5469 N-GMP (2×)

bit, bridle, the metal piece placed in a horse's mouth for control χαλινός refers to the bit or bridle used to control a horse—the metal piece inserted in the mouth that allows the rider to guide and restrain the animal. James uses it in his famous illustration of the tongue's power in James 3:3: 'If we put bits (χαλινοὺς) into the mouths of horses so that they obey us, we guide their whole bodies.' The point is that a small instrument can control a large, powerful creature. Curiously, the word appears again in Revelation 14:20 in a literal sense: blood flowing from the winepress of God's wrath reaches 'as high as a horse's bridle (χαλινῶν τῶν ἵππων)' for 1,600 stadia—a horrifying image of judgment.

(2×) The two uses are strikingly different. James 3:3 uses χαλινός metaphorically to illustrate how small controls great—the bit controls the horse, the tongue directs the person. Revelation 14:20 uses it literally as a measure of depth—blood reaching to horses' bridles. The French brides and Spanish frenos both preserve the equestrian equipment sense. James' point is that the tongue, though small, requires the firm control that a χαλινός provides for a powerful animal. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3431 WITH 4 SENSES

en: bits, bridles | es: frenos | fr: brides | de: Zaeume Jas 3:3; Rev 14:20

χάλκεος G5470 Adj-ANP (1×)

bronze, brazen, made of bronze or copper

This adjective describes objects made of bronze or copper, metals widely used in the ancient world for tools, weapons, vessels, and idols. John uses it in Revelation when describing idols that people refused to stop worshiping even after the plagues: 'they did not repent... of their murders or their sorceries or their immorality or their thefts, nor did they cease worshiping demons and idols of gold and silver and bronze.' The inclusion of bronze idols alongside gold and silver reflects the full range of material idolatry, from expensive to common, all equally incapable of seeing, hearing, or walking.

(1×) Made of bronze or copper, a metallic composition. In Revelation 9:20, John describes unrepentant idolaters who continue worshiping 'idols of gold and silver and bronze (chalka) and stone and wood, which can neither see nor hear nor walk.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'de bronce,' German 'ehern,' English 'bronze'—all identify the material. Bronze idols represented the middle tier of value between precious metals and common stone or wood, but all were equally powerless and false. BRONZE AND COPPER

en: bronze | es: de-bronce | fr: ehern | de: ehern Rev 9:20

χαλκ-εύς G5471 N-NMS (1×)

coppersmith, metalworker, blacksmith (one who works with metal)

This noun denotes a worker in copper, bronze, or other metals—a coppersmith or blacksmith. Paul mentions 'Alexander the coppersmith' in his second letter to Timothy, warning that this individual 'did me great harm' and adding that 'the Lord will repay him according to his deeds.' The warning serves both to alert Timothy to a specific dangerous opponent and to express Paul's confidence that divine justice will prevail. In the ancient world, metalworkers were essential craftsmen, but this particular artisan used his position or influence to oppose Paul's ministry.

(1×) A metalworker, specifically a coppersmith or blacksmith. Paul names 'Alexander the coppersmith (chalkeus)' in 2 Timothy 4:14, warning: 'he did me great harm; the Lord will repay him according to his deeds.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'herrero,' German 'Schmied,' English 'coppersmith'—identify the trade. Whether Alexander opposed Paul through public accusations, business influence, or other means is unclear, but the mention serves as both warning to Timothy and expression of trust in divine justice. BRONZE AND COPPER

en: coppersmith | es: herrero | fr: χαλκεὺς | de: Schmied 2Tim 4:14

χαλκηδών G5472 N-NMS (1×)

chalcedony, a precious stone (variety of quartz)

Chalcedony is a translucent variety of quartz, often grayish or bluish-white, valued as a semiprecious stone in the ancient world. John lists it as the third foundation stone in his vision of the New Jerusalem's wall foundations. The twelve foundations display a spectrum of precious and semiprecious stones, each contributing to the city's radiant beauty and representing the glory of God's eternal dwelling place. The specific identification of ancient gemstone names can be uncertain, but chalcedony was known and valued in antiquity.

(1×) A precious or semiprecious stone, a variety of quartz. In Revelation 21:19, John describes the foundations of the New Jerusalem's wall: 'the first foundation was jasper, the second sapphire, the third chalcedony (chalkedon).' The multilingual glosses preserve the technical gemstone name—Spanish 'calcedonia,' German 'Chalzedon,' English 'chalcedony.' This is the third in a list of twelve foundation stones, each contributing to the city's beauty and representing the eternal splendor of God's dwelling with humanity. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: chalcedony | es: calcedonia; | fr: Chalzedon | de: Chalzedon Rev 21:19

χαλκίον G5473 N-GNP (1×)

copper vessels, bronze utensils, metal containers

This term refers to vessels or containers made of copper or bronze, commonly used for cooking, storage, and serving in the ancient world. Mark mentions them when describing the Pharisees' ritual washing practices: they observed traditional washings not only of hands and cups and pitchers, but also of 'copper vessels.' The detail illustrates the extent of ritual purity concerns, extending beyond person and food to include the very utensils used in preparation and serving. Bronze or copper vessels were durable and valuable, yet still required purification according to traditional practice.

(1×) Copper or bronze vessels, metal containers for cooking or serving. Mark 7:4 describes Pharisaic traditions: 'when they come from the marketplace, they do not eat unless they wash; and there are many other traditions they observe, such as the washing of cups and pitchers and copper vessels (chalkion).' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'ollas de bronce,' French 'vase de cuivre,' German 'Kupfergefäss'—all identify metal containers. The mention illustrates the comprehensive scope of ritual purity practices, extending to kitchen equipment. BRONZE AND COPPER

en: copper-vessels | es: de-ollas-de-bronce | fr: vase-de-cuivre | de: Kupfergefaess Mark 7:4

χαλκο-λίβᾰνος G5474 N-DNS (2×)

burnished bronze, a precious metal alloy, possibly bronze or fine brass χαλκολίβανον is a rare word whose exact meaning remains uncertain—it appears nowhere in classical Greek and only twice in the New Testament, both in Revelation. It seems to denote some kind of refined, precious metal, possibly bronze or a bronze-like alloy, perhaps specifically associated with Lebanon (hence some translate 'bronze of Lebanon'). In Revelation 1:15, John describes the feet of the risen Christ 'like burnished bronze (χαλκολιβάνῳ), refined in a furnace'—emphasizing purity, strength, and radiant brilliance. The same description recurs in Revelation 2:18 in Christ's message to Thyatira.

(2×) Both occurrences describe Christ's feet in John's apocalyptic visions. The χαλκολίβανον refined in fire suggests metal brought to highest purity and brilliance through intense heat. The German Golderz suggests precious ore, though the exact metal remains debated. The point is clear: Christ's feet, carrying him through his churches and ultimately treading the winepress of judgment, are characterized by refined, glowing strength—pure power that has been through fire. BRONZE AND COPPER

en: burnished-bronze | es: a-bronce-bruñido | fr: Golderz | de: Golderz Rev 1:15; Rev 2:18

χαλκός G5475 N-GMS (5×)

copper, bronze, or brass — a base metal, and by extension coins or objects made from it

Chalkos originally denoted copper, the first metal humans learned to smelt, and by extension the bronze alloys made from it. In the New Testament, its five occurrences span a surprising range of reference: Jesus prohibits his disciples from carrying copper coins in their belts (Matt 10:9; Mark 6:8), Mark describes the bronze coins cast into the temple treasury (Mark 12:41), Paul compares loveless speech to a clanging bronze gong (1 Cor 13:1), and Revelation lists bronze among the luxury commodities of Babylon (Rev 18:12). German 'Kupfer' and French 'cuivre' preserve the base-metal sense, while Spanish 'cobre/bronce' reflects the material's dual identity.

(5×) Copper or bronze as a material, and by metonymy the coins or objects fashioned from it. Covers copper money prohibited as missionary provision (Matt 10:9; Mark 6:8), bronze coinage dropped into the temple offering box (Mark 12:41), a resounding bronze gong as a metaphor for empty eloquence without love (1 Cor 13:1), and bronze listed among precious trade goods in the fall of Babylon (Rev 18:12). The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'cobre/bronce,' French 'cuivre/bronze,' German 'Kupfer' — confirms a unified semantic range from raw metal to manufactured items and currency. BRONZE AND COPPER

en: bronze, copper, copper-coins | es: bronce, cobre, de-bronce | fr: Kupfer, bronze, cuivre | de: Kupfer, χαλκὸν Matt 10:9; Mark 6:8; Mark 12:41; 1Cor 13:1; Rev 18:12

χᾰμ-αί G5476 Adv (2×)

on the ground, to the ground, earthward

χαμαί is an adverb meaning 'on the ground' or 'to the ground'—at ground level, earthward. John uses it twice in quick succession in his Gospel. In John 9:6, Jesus spits χαμαί ('on the ground'), makes mud with the saliva, and spreads it on the blind man's eyes before sending him to wash in Siloam. In John 18:6, when Jesus declares 'I am he' to those coming to arrest him, they 'drew back and fell to the ground (ἔπεσαν χαμαί)'—the divine name's power knocking them down. Both uses involve action toward or at ground level.

(2×) The two uses show χαμαί in contexts of Christ's power. In John 9:6, Jesus stoops to the ground to create healing mud, demonstrating incarnational humility—God touching earth to bring light. In John 18:6, his divine self-revelation sends his arresters to the ground, demonstrating sovereign power—even those coming to seize him fall prostrate. The French à terre and Spanish a tierra preserve the groundward direction. Jesus both stoops to earth in mercy and casts down to earth in judgment. EARTH AND LAND

en: on-ground, on-the-ground | es: a-tierra, en-tierra | fr: à-terre | de: zu-Boden John 9:6; John 18:6

Χαναάν G5477 N-AFS (2×)

Canaan, the land promised to Abraham's descendants

Χαναάν is the Greek rendering of the Hebrew כְּנַעַן (Canaan), referring to the land God promised to Abraham and his descendants—the territory roughly corresponding to modern Israel/Palestine and Lebanon. Acts 7:11 mentions Canaan in Stephen's historical recounting, describing the famine that came 'over all Egypt and Canaan' in Joseph's time. Acts 13:19 speaks of God destroying 'seven nations in the land of Canaan (ἐν γῇ Χαναάν)' to give Israel their inheritance. For the biblical writers, Canaan represents both geographical place and theological promise—the land of rest and blessing that God covenanted to give his people.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in historical summaries of Israel's story. Acts 7:11 references the patriarchal period; Acts 13:19 references the conquest under Joshua. Canaan is not just a location but a theological concept—the place where God's promises find earthly fulfillment. The multilingual glosses maintain the transliteration (Spanish Canaán, French Chanaan), as is standard for biblical place names with deep covenantal significance. CANAAN LAND PERSON

en: Chanaan, of-Chanaan | es: Chanaán, de-Canaán | fr: Chanaan | de: Χανάαν Acts 7:11; Acts 13:19

Χαναναῖος G5478 Adj-NFS (1×)

Canaanite (ethnic/geographic designation for inhabitants of ancient Canaan)

This adjective identifies someone as belonging to the Canaanite people, the pre-Israelite inhabitants of the land God promised to Abraham's descendants. In Matthew 15:22, it describes the woman who persistently appeals to Jesus for her daughter's healing, highlighting her outsider status as a Gentile. Her Canaanite identity makes her faith-filled persistence all the more remarkable, since Jews and Canaanites had a long history of separation and hostility. Jesus ultimately commends her great faith, making this encounter a powerful preview of the gospel extending beyond Israel to the nations.

(1×) The sole New Testament occurrence (Matthew 15:22) designates the woman who approaches Jesus as ethnically Canaanite, emphasizing her status outside the covenant community of Israel. Cross-linguistic renderings ('Canaanite,' 'cananea,' 'Cananéenne') uniformly preserve this ethnic marker, which is crucial to the narrative's theological tension: a descendant of Israel's ancient enemies demonstrates exemplary faith. Mark's parallel account (7:26) calls her 'Syrophoenician,' reflecting the geographic overlap between ancient Canaan and first-century Phoenicia. CANAANITE PEOPLE

en: Canaanite | es: cananea | fr: Cananéenne | de: Χαναναία Matt 15:22

χᾰρά G5479 N-NFS (59×)

Joy, gladness, delight — deep happiness rooted in God's saving acts, the gospel, or the presence of the Spirit.

Chara is the Greek noun for joy, derived from the same root as the common greeting chairein ('rejoice'). In the New Testament it carries a distinctly theological coloring: it is the response to the angel's announcement of Jesus' birth (Matt 2:10, 'exceedingly great joy'), the immediate fruit of receiving the gospel message (Matt 13:20, 44), and a hallmark of life in the Spirit (Gal 5:22, listed first among the fruit of the Spirit). Jesus speaks of his own joy being made complete in his disciples (John 15:11; 17:13), and Paul repeatedly urges joy even amid suffering (Phil 1:4, 25; 2:2). The word also describes the eschatological reward of faithfulness: 'Enter into the joy of your master' (Matt 25:21, 23). Spanish gozo, French joie, and German Freude all consistently render this single term, confirming its semantic unity across the full range of contexts.

(59×) Joy, gladness, or deep delight — characteristically rooted in God's redemptive action, the reception of the gospel, and the work of the Spirit. Describes the response to Christ's birth (Matt 2:10; Luke 2:10), the reception of the word (Matt 13:20, 44), a fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22), and the eschatological reward of the faithful servant (Matt 25:21, 23). Jesus himself speaks of 'my joy' being made full in his followers (John 15:11; 17:13). Spanish gozo, French joie, and German Freude confirm a unified semantic core across all contexts. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: joy, with-joy | es: con-gozo, gozo | fr: joie | de: Freude Matt 2:10; Matt 13:20; Matt 13:44; Matt 25:21; Matt 25:23

χάραγ-μα G5480 N-ANS (8×)

A mark, brand, or engraving; in Revelation, the eschatological mark of the Beast; in Acts, a product of human craftsmanship.

Charagma denotes any mark that is engraved, branded, or imprinted onto a surface. Seven of its eight NT occurrences appear in Revelation, where it refers to the sinister mark of the Beast imposed on the right hand or forehead as a sign of allegiance (Rev 13:16-17). The Spanish 'marca' and German 'Malzeichen' both emphasize its character as a branded sign. The single non-Revelation use (Acts 17:29) shifts to artistic craftsmanship – Paul tells the Athenians that the divine nature should not be likened to an engraving of human art and imagination.

1. (7×) The branded or imprinted mark of the Beast in Revelation – a visible sign of allegiance imposed on persons, functioning as both identification and economic control (Rev 13:16-17: no one can buy or sell without it). Spanish 'marca' and German 'Malzeichen' (branded sign) both convey the sense of an externally imposed stamp. This mark stands in direct contrast to the seal of God on the foreheads of the faithful, and those who receive it face divine judgment (Rev 14:9-11, 16:2). SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: a-mark, mark | es: marca | fr: Malzeichen | de: Malzeichen Rev 13:16; Rev 13:17; Rev 14:9; Rev 14:11; Rev 16:2

2. (1×) An engraving or carved work produced by human artistry and skill. In Acts 17:29, Paul addresses the Athenians at the Areopagus, arguing that the divine nature (to theion) should not be thought of as something like gold, silver, or stone – a charagma of human craft and thought. The Spanish 'grabado' (engraving) and French 'marque' capture this sense of an artisan's product, distinct from the eschatological branding in Revelation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: engraving | es: grabado | fr: marque | de: χαράγματι Acts 17:29

χᾰρακτήρ G5481 N-NMS (1×)

exact image, precise representation, engraved character, stamp

Charakter originally meant an engraving tool or the mark made by such a tool—a stamp, impress, or exact reproduction. By extension it came to mean the precise representation or exact image of something. The author of Hebrews applies it to Christ's relationship to God the Father: the Son is 'the radiance of the glory of God and the exact imprint of his nature.' This powerful metaphor asserts that Jesus is not merely similar to God or representative of God, but the precise, perfect expression of God's very being—like a seal that perfectly reproduces the image engraved in the signet.

(1×) An exact representation, precise imprint, or engraved character. Hebrews 1:3 declares of the Son: 'He is the radiance of the glory of God and the exact imprint (charakter) of his nature, upholding the universe by the word of his power.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'impronta,' German 'Abdruck,' English 'exact image'—all point to precision of representation. The metaphor draws on coin-minting or seal-making, where the die produces an exact replica. Christ perfectly expresses the Father's being. EXAMPLES AND TYPES en: exact-image | es: impronta | fr: Abdruck | de: Abdruck Heb 1:3

χάραξ G5482 N-AMS (1×)

palisade, siege rampart, barricade, entrenchment

Charax originally meant a pointed stake used in fortifications, and by extension came to mean a palisade or siege rampart—the kind of earthwork and stake barrier that armies would construct around a besieged city. Jesus uses this term in his prophetic lament over Jerusalem: 'your enemies will set up a barricade around you and surround you and hem you in on every side.' This was literally fulfilled when the Romans besieged Jerusalem in 70 AD, constructing siege works that trapped the inhabitants and led to the city's destruction. The military precision of Jesus's language adds weight to the tragic inevitability of the coming judgment.

(1×) A siege barricade, palisade, or rampart used in military encirclement. Jesus prophesies over Jerusalem in Luke 19:43: 'the days will come upon you when your enemies will set up a barricade (charaka) around you and surround you and hem you in on every side.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'empalizada,' French 'palissade,' English 'barricade'—all convey military fortification. This prophecy was fulfilled in 70 AD when Roman forces under Titus besieged Jerusalem, constructing earthworks and stake barriers that starved the city into submission. BOW KNEEL CROUCH

en: a-barricade | es: empalizada | fr: palissade | de: χάρακά Luke 19:43

χᾰρίζω G5483 V-RIM/P-1S (23×)

To forgive or pardon; to give graciously or grant as a gift; to hand over or deliver up

The verb χαρίζομαι, rooted in χάρις (grace), carries a deep sense of generous, unmerited giving. In over half its New Testament occurrences it means to forgive — to graciously cancel a debt or offense, as in Jesus' parable of the two debtors (Luke 7:42-43) and Paul's repeated exhortation to forgive as Christ forgave (Col 3:13). In its second major sense, it means to bestow something freely as an act of divine generosity: God 'graciously granted' all things with Christ (Rom 8:32). Twice in Acts 25, the word takes a juridical turn, meaning to hand over a prisoner to another's power.

1. forgive, pardon (12×) To forgive, pardon, or graciously cancel a debt or transgression. This is the most frequent sense (12 occurrences), anchored in Jesus' parable where a creditor 'forgave' both debtors (Luke 7:42). Paul extends the concept: 'forgiving one another, just as God in Christ forgave you' (Eph 4:32, Col 2:13). Spanish 'perdonar' and French 'faire grâce' capture the grace-rooted cancellation of what is owed — a theological keynote of the word's semantic range. FORGIVE GRANT GIVE en: I-have-forgiven, forgave, forgive | es: Perdonadme, he-perdonado, os-perdonó | fr: accorder, donner, faire-grâce | de: schenken, ἐχαρίσατο Luke 7:42; Luke 7:43; 2Cor 2:7; 2Cor 2:10

2. give graciously, grant (9×) To give graciously, to grant freely as a gift of divine favor. This sense (9 occurrences) foregrounds the generosity inherent in the χάρις root. God 'granted' Paul the lives of all aboard the ship (Acts 27:24), and the Spirit reveals what God has 'freely given' (1 Cor 2:12). In Phil 1:29, suffering itself is 'granted' as a gift alongside faith. Spanish 'concedió/dadas por gracia' and German 'schenken' (to gift) highlight the gracious, unearned quality. FORGIVE GRANT GIVE

en: I-will-be-granted, granted, has-granted | es: concedió, dadas-por-gracia, dará-graciosamente | fr: accorder, donner, faire-grâce | de: schenken, κεχάρισται, χαρισθῆναι Luke 7:21; Acts 3:14; Acts 27:24; Rom 8:32; 1Cor 2:12

3. hand over, deliver up (2×) To hand over, deliver up, or surrender a person to another's custody. This juridical sense appears only twice, both in Acts 25. Festus explains to Agrippa that it is not Roman custom 'to hand over' any person before a trial (Acts 25:16), and Paul asserts that no one can 'hand him over' to his accusers (Acts 25:11). Spanish 'entregar' (to deliver) and the formal legal context mark this as a distinct semantic extension. FORGIVE GRANT GIVE

en: to-hand-over | es: entregar | fr: accorder | de: χαρίζεσθαί, χαρίσασθαι Acts 25:11; Acts 25:16

χάρις G5484 Prep (9×)

Because of, for the sake of, on account of; an improper preposition expressing cause or purpose.

Charin is the accusative of charis ('grace, favor') frozen into use as an improper preposition meaning 'because of,' 'for the sake of,' or 'on account of.' It governs the genitive and expresses either the cause or the purpose behind an action. Paul uses it to explain why the law was given – 'for the sake of transgressions' (Gal 3:19) – and to introduce the reason for his imprisonment – 'for the sake of you Gentiles' (Eph 3:1, 14). Its range also covers simple causation, as in 'because her many sins have been forgiven' (Luke 7:47). Spanish por causa de, French a cause de, and German um willen/wegen all confirm this causal-purposive function.

because of, for sake of (9×) An improper preposition (frozen accusative of charis) meaning 'because of,' 'for the sake of,' or 'on account of,' expressing either cause or purpose. It consistently takes a preceding genitive. Jesus declares that the woman's sins are forgiven because she loved much – charin indicating cause (Luke 7:47). Paul employs it to state purpose: the law was added 'for the sake of transgressions' (Gal 3:19), and he is a prisoner 'for the sake of you Gentiles' (Eph 3:1, 14). Pastoral usage includes practical instruction:

younger widows should marry 'on account of' certain dangers (1 Tim 5:14). The multilingual evidence (spa por-causa-de, fra en-faveur-de/a-cause, deu um-willen/wegen) shows this word functioning purely as a causal or purposive preposition, with no trace of the 'grace/favor' meaning of the parent noun charis. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: because-of, for-sake, for-sake-of | es: gracia, por-causa, por-causa-de | fr: en-faveur-de, à-cause., χάριν | de: um-willen, wegen, χάριν Luke 7:47; Gal 3:19; Eph 3:1; Eph 3:14; 1Tim 5:14

χάρις G5485 N-GFS (157×)

Grace, favor, or kindness — especially God's unmerited favor toward humanity; also thanks, a concrete act of goodwill, or a charitable gift.

One of the New Testament's most theologically rich words, χάρις (charis) spans from the divine grace that saves sinners to the simple human courtesy of saying 'thank you.' At its heart lies the idea of undeserved generosity — God's lavish favor poured out on those who have no claim to it (John 1:16, Eph 2:8). Paul anchors entire epistles around this word, and every Pauline letter opens or closes with it. Yet charis also covers everyday gratitude (Luke 6:32–34, 'what credit is that to you?'), concrete acts of political favor (Acts 24:27), and even a monetary collection for the poor (1 Cor 16:3). Spanish distinguishes gracia from gratitud; German uniformly renders Gnade, collapsing senses that Greek keeps fluid.

1. grace, divine favor (141×) The great theological sense: God's unmerited favor and benevolence toward humanity, especially as manifested through Christ's saving work. This is the dominant New Testament usage (141 of 157 occurrences). Paul's signature greeting 'grace and peace' (χάρις καὶ εἰρήνη) frames every letter he writes. Spanish gracia and German Gnade both track this sense, but neither captures the full weight — Korean 은혜 (eunhye, 'grace-benefit') and Swahili neema come closer to the gratuitous, unearned quality. Key passages: John 1:14 ('full of grace and truth'), Eph 2:8 ('by grace you have been saved'). MORAL GOODNESS

en: favor, grace, of-grace | es: de-gracia, gracia | fr: grâce | de: Gnade Luke 1:30; Luke 2:40; Luke 4:22; John 1:14; John 1:16

2. thanks, gratitude (12×) An expression of thankfulness or gratitude, often directed toward God. Distinguished from sense 1 by context: 'what thanks (χάρις) is it to you?' (Luke 6:32–34) uses the word in a reciprocity framework — if you love only those who love you back, where is the grace/credit? Romans 6:17 ('thanks be to God') and 1 Cor 15:57 show the doxological use. Spanish Gratitud and Korean 감사 (gamsa) clearly separate this from divine favor, while German Gnade and French grâce remain ambiguous. MORAL GOODNESS

en: gratitude, thanks | es: Gracias, Gratitud, gracia | fr: grâce | de: Gnade Luke 6:32; Luke 6:33; Luke 6:34; Luke 17:9; Rom 6:17

3. favor, act of kindness (3×) A concrete act of goodwill or favorable regard shown by one person toward another, especially in political or judicial contexts. All three occurrences appear in Acts: Felix leaves Paul in prison 'wanting to do the Jews a favor (χάριτα)' (Acts 24:27); the Jewish leaders ask Festus for the favor (χάριν) of transferring Paul to Jerusalem (Acts 25:3, 9). Spanish favor cleanly isolates this from the theological sense. The word here is transactional — a quid pro quo of political currency. MORAL GOODNESS

en: a-favor | es: favor | fr: grâce | de: Gnade Acts 24:27; Acts 25:3; Acts 25:9

4. gift, benefaction (1×) A material gift or charitable contribution given as an act of generosity. Occurs once in 1 Corinthians 16:3, where Paul instructs the church to prepare their χάρις (gift/benefaction) for Jerusalem. Spanish gracia and French grâce retain the same form, but English 'gift' and Korean 선물 sharply distinguish this concrete, monetary meaning from the abstract theological sense. The usage shows how divine grace conceptually flows into practical giving. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gift | es: gracia | fr: grâce | de: Gnade 1Cor 16:3

χᾰ́ρ-ισμα G5486 N-NNP (17×)

A gracious gift freely bestowed by God, especially spiritual endowments for service and the gift of salvation.

Built from the root χάρις (grace), χάρισμα denotes something given freely and generously by God. Paul employs it across a striking range: the gift of eternal life contrasted with the wages of sin (Rom 6:23), the irrevocable gifts and calling of Israel (Rom 11:29), and the diverse spiritual gifts distributed to the body of Christ — prophecy, healing, tongues, teaching (1 Cor 12:4-11, 28-31; Rom 12:6). Each charisma is grace made concrete in a particular capacity for ministry. The Spanish 'don' and French 'don-de-la-grâce' foreground the freely-given nature, while German 'Gnadengabe' (grace-gift) perfectly mirrors the Greek compound's theological logic.

gift, gracious gift, spiritual endowment (17×) A gift freely bestowed by divine grace, encompassing spiritual endowments for ministry within the believing community (prophecy, healing, tongues, teaching — 1 Cor 12:4-11; Rom 12:6), the gift of salvation and eternal life (Rom 5:15-16; 6:23), and God's irrevocable calling of Israel (Rom 11:29). The word emphasizes that these capacities originate in God's generosity rather than human merit. German 'Gnadengabe' (grace-gift) transparently renders the compound structure of χάρις + -μα, while Spanish 'don' and French 'don-de-la-grâce' highlight the freely-given character. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gift, gifts, of-gifts | es: de-dones, don, dones | fr: Gnadengabe, don-de-la-grâce | de: Gnadengabe Rom 1:11; Rom 5:15; Rom 5:16; Rom 6:23; Rom 11:29

χαρῐ́τ-όω G5487 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to bestow grace upon, favor highly, show grace to someone χαριτόω means to grace someone, to bestow favor or grace upon them, derived from χάρις ('grace'). Gabriel uses the perfect passive participle in Luke 1:28, greeting Mary as 'favored one' (κεχαριτωμένη)—she has been graced, highly favored by God, chosen to bear the Messiah. Paul uses the aorist active in Ephesians 1:6, celebrating God's glorious grace 'which he has freely bestowed on us (ἧς ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς) in the Beloved'—God has graced believers in Christ. Both uses emphasize divine initiative: God is the one who bestows this grace, making the recipients objects of his generous favor.

(2×) The two uses show χαριτόω as God's gracious action toward his chosen ones. Mary was graced to be Theotokos (God-bearer); all believers are graced in Christ. The French favorisée and Spanish agraciada capture the sense of being recipients of favor. This isn't grace as abstract concept but grace as active divine favor—God choosing to bestow blessing on particular persons for particular purposes. Mary's grace led to incarnation; believers' grace leads to adoption and redemption. FORGIVE GRANT GIVE en: having-been-favored, he-graced | es: agraciada, nos-favoreció | fr: favorisée, ἐχαρίτωσεν | de: κεχαριτωμένη, ἐχαρίτωσεν Luke 1:28; Eph 1:6

χαρράν G5488 N-DFS (2×)

Haran, a city in northwestern Mesopotamia

Χαρράν (Hebrew חָרָן, Haran) was an important ancient city in northwestern Mesopotamia, located on the Balikh River in what is now southern Turkey. It figures prominently in the patriarchal narratives as the place where Abraham's family settled after leaving Ur and where Abraham lived before God called him to Canaan. Acts 7:2 mentions Haran as the place where God appeared to Abraham 'before he lived in Haran,' while Acts 7:4 describes Abraham leaving Haran for Canaan after his father Terah died. The city remained significant in biblical history—Jacob fled there to escape Esau and worked for Laban, finding his wives Rachel and Leah.

(2×) Both New Testament occurrences appear in Stephen's speech recounting Abraham's call and migration. Haran represents the midpoint in Abraham's journey from Ur to Canaan—a place of transition and divine encounter. The multilingual glosses preserve the Greek transliteration. For Stephen's Jewish audience, Haran would evoke the beginnings of their national story, when God called Abraham to leave security and journey toward promise. HARAN PLACE NAME

en: Charran | es: Charrán | fr: Charran | de: Χαρράν Acts 7:2; Acts 7:4

χάρτ-ης G5489 N-GMS (1×)

paper, papyrus sheet, writing material made from papyrus reed

Chartes refers to a sheet of papyrus, the common writing material of the ancient Mediterranean world, made from the pith of the papyrus plant. The elder John mentions it at the close of his second letter: 'Though I have much to write to you, I would rather not use paper and ink, but I hope to come to see you and talk face to face.' This personal touch reveals John's preference for direct conversation over written correspondence, even as it acknowledges the utility of papyrus for long-distance communication. Papyrus was eventually replaced by parchment and then by modern paper.

(1×) A sheet of papyrus, the plant-based writing material of antiquity. In 2 John 1:12 the apostle writes: 'Though I have much to write to you, I would rather not use paper (chartes) and ink; instead I hope to come to you and talk face to face.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'papel,' French 'papyrus,' German 'Papier'—identify the writing medium. John's preference for personal presence over written documents reflects the limits of correspondence and the value of face-to-face fellowship in matters of faith and community. LETTERS AND WRITINGS

en: paper | es: papel | fr: χάρτου | de: Papier 2John 1:12

χάσμα G5490 N-NNS (1×)

chasm, gulf, yawning gap, deep cleft

Chasma denotes a yawning chasm or deep gulf, a gap that cannot be crossed. Jesus uses it in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus to describe the unbridgeable separation between the place of comfort (Abraham's bosom) and the place of torment: 'between us and you a great chasm has been fixed, so that those who would pass from here to you may not be able, and none may cross from there to us.' The geographical imagery serves theological purpose, emphasizing the finality of judgment and the impossibility of changing one's eternal state after death. The chasm is not physical distance but moral and spiritual separation made permanent.

(1×) A great chasm, gulf, or unbridgeable gap. In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16:26), Abraham explains to the tormented rich man: 'between us and you a great chasm (chasma) has been fixed, so that those who would pass from here to you cannot, and no one can cross from there to us.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'abismo,' French 'gouffre,' English 'chasm'—all capture the unbridgeable separation. This spatial metaphor conveys the theological reality of judgment's finality. ABYSS AND DEEP en: chasm | es: abismo | fr: gouffre | de: χάσμα Luke 16:26

χεῖλος G5491 N-ANS (7×)

Lip; by extension, the edge or shore of a body of water — reflecting the ancient metaphor of land's 'lip' meeting the sea.

In its primary sense, cheilos refers to the physical lips of the mouth, the organ of speech and worship. The Septuagint and New Testament use it prominently in contexts of praise and hypocrisy — Jesus quotes Isaiah in Matt 15:8 and Mark 7:6, warning that people honor God 'with their lips' while their hearts are far away. Paul cites Psalm 140:3 in Rom 3:13, describing lips that conceal venom. Yet in Heb 11:12, cheilos shifts to mean 'shore' or 'edge,' describing descendants as innumerable as grains of sand along the seashore — a spatial metaphor rooted in the idea of a lip-like boundary where land meets water.

1. lips (6×) The physical lips, particularly as the instrument of speech, prayer, and praise. Multilingual evidence consistently renders this as 'lips' (Eng), 'labios' (Spa), 'lèvre' (Fra). In Heb 13:15, the 'fruit of lips' (karpon cheileōn) denotes verbal worship; in 1 Cor 14:21, Paul quotes Isa 28:11 about God speaking through foreign lips — a striking image of alien tongues as divine instruments. LIPS BODY PART

en: lips, of-lips | es: de-labios, labios | fr: Lippen, lèvre | de: Lippen, χείλεσίν Matt 15:8; Mark 7:6; Rom 3:13; 1Cor 14:21; Heb 13:15

2. shore (1×) The shore or edge of a body of water, extending the anatomical 'lip' metaphor to a geographical boundary. In Heb 11:12 (echoing Gen 22:17 LXX), it describes the sand 'along the lip of the sea.' Spanish 'orilla' (shore, edge) captures this spatial sense well, while German and French translations sometimes retain the Greek form, signaling the metaphor's unfamiliarity in those traditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: shore | es: orilla | fr: Lippen | de: Lippen Heb 11:12

χειμ-άζω G5492 V-PPM/P-GMP (1×)

to be storm-tossed, to be violently buffeted by weather, to be tempest-driven

This verb describes being buffeted or driven about by a storm, particularly at sea. Luke uses it to describe Paul's situation during the disastrous voyage to Rome: 'And because we were violently storm-tossed, the next day they began to jettison the cargo.' The vivid detail captures the desperation of a ship at the mercy of Mediterranean winter weather, with crew and passengers battling for survival. Ancient sea travel was perilous, and storms like this one could easily end in shipwreck, as indeed this voyage eventually did on the island of Malta.

(1×) To be violently storm-tossed, buffeted by tempest. Acts 27:18 narrates the crisis during Paul's voyage to Rome: 'Since we were being violently storm-tossed (cheimazomenon), the next day they began throwing the cargo overboard.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'siendo azotados por la tempestad,' French 'tempête,' English 'being storm-tossed'—all convey violent weather. The continuous battering forced the crew to lighten the ship, and eventually led to shipwreck on Malta (Acts 27:41-44). This is the word's only New Testament use. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: being-storm-tossed | es: siendo-azotados-por-la-tempestad | fr: tempête | de: χειμαζομένων Acts 27:18

χειμάρροος G5493 N-GMS (1×)

winter torrent, seasonal stream, brook that flows only in rainy season

Cheimarrhos refers to a stream or brook that flows strongly in winter due to rain and snowmelt but may dry up in summer—a seasonal watercourse or wadi. John uses it to identify the location where Jesus and his disciples went after the Last Supper: they crossed 'the brook Kidron' on their way to the garden where Jesus would be arrested. The Kidron Valley runs between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives, and its stream would have been flowing during Passover season in spring. This geographical detail anchors the passion narrative in the physical landscape of Jerusalem.

(1×) A winter torrent, seasonal brook, or wadi that flows when fed by rain. In John 18:1 the evangelist writes: 'When Jesus had spoken these words, he went out with his disciples across the brook Kidron (tou Kedrōn tou cheimarrou), where there was a garden, which he and his disciples entered.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'torrente,' French 'torrent,' German 'Winterbach'—all indicate a seasonal watercourse. The Kidron Valley's stream would have been flowing during the spring Passover season, a geographical detail fixing the location of Jesus's arrest. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: brook | es: torrente | fr: torrent | de: Winterbach John 18:1

χειμών G5494 N-NMS (6×)

Winter as a season of cold weather; also a violent storm or tempest, especially at sea.

This Greek word spans two distinct weather realities. In four occurrences it simply means winter — the cold season Jesus warns about in the Olivet Discourse ('Pray that your flight not be in winter,' Matt 24:20; Mark 13:18), the winter setting of the Feast of Dedication (John 10:22), and Paul's request that Timothy come before winter (2 Tim 4:21). But in two passages it denotes a violent storm: the red sky that signals foul weather (Matt 16:3) and the terrible tempest that battered Paul's ship for many days (Acts 27:20). The multilingual evidence confirms the split decisively — Spanish uses 'invierno' for the season but 'tempestad' for the storm, and English shifts from 'winter' to 'storm.'

1. winter (season) (4×) The winter season, the cold time of year. Jesus urges prayer that flight not fall in winter (Matt 24:20; Mark 13:18), the Feast of Dedication takes place in winter (John 10:22), and Paul asks Timothy to arrive before winter (2 Tim 4:21). Spanish 'invierno / en invierno,' Hindi 'jade mein / sardi,' French 'hiver,' and German 'Winter' all converge on the seasonal meaning. WINTER COLD SEASON

en: in-winter, winter | es: en-invierno, invierno | fr: Winter, hiver | de: Winter, χειμῶνος Matt 24:20; Mark 13:18; John 10:22; 2Tim 4:21

2. storm, tempest (2×) A storm or tempest, violent and dangerous weather, especially at sea. A red sky in the morning signals a coming storm (Matt 16:3), and a fierce tempest batters Paul's ship so badly that 'all hope of being saved was taken away' (Acts 27:20). The translations diverge sharply from the winter sense: English uses 'storm / a storm,' Spanish shifts to 'tempestad,' and the context moves from calendar time to meteorological crisis. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: a-storm, storm | es: tempestad | fr: hiver | de: χειμών, χειμῶνός Matt 16:3; Acts 27:20

χείρ G5495 N-AFS (179×)

Hand, hands — the physical body part, also expressing agency, power, custody, and divine action

Greek cheir ('hand') carries an enormous range of usage in the New Testament, from the concretely physical to the deeply metaphorical. Jesus heals by laying on hands (Mark 6:5), washes his disciples' hands metaphorically through foot-washing (John 13), and shows his pierced hands as proof of resurrection (Luke 24:40). 'The hand of the Lord' denotes divine power and action (Acts 11:21). Idiomatically, being delivered 'into the hands of' someone means falling under their power (Matt 17:22). Spanish manos, French main, and German Hand all mirror this same literal-to-figurative spectrum.

hand / hands (physical body part) (179×) The physical human hand or hands, extending by metonymy to agency, power, custody, and divine action. Covers literal usage (healing touch in Mark 6:5; nail-scarred hands in Luke 24:40), instrumental agency ('by the hand of,' Acts 7:25), and theological idiom ('the right hand of God,' Acts 2:33). Spanish manos, French main, and German Hand all exhibit the same polysemic breadth, showing this extension is cross-linguistically natural. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: hands | es: manos | fr: main | de: Hand Matt 4:6; Matt 15:2; Matt 15:20; Matt 17:22; Matt 18:8

χειρᾰγωγ-έω G5496 V-PPM/P-NMS (2×)

to lead by the hand, guide someone physically χειραγωγέω (from χείρ 'hand' + ἀγωγή 'leading') means to lead someone by taking their hand—to guide physically, as one would lead a blind or helpless person. Acts uses the verb twice in accounts of Saul's conversion. In Acts 9:8, after his encounter with the risen Christ on the Damascus road, Saul 'rose from the ground, and although his eyes were opened, he saw nothing. So they led him by the hand (χειραγωγοῦντες) and brought him into Damascus.' In Acts 22:11, Paul recounts the same event: 'Since I could not see because of the brightness of that light, I was led by the hand (χειραγωγούμενος) by those who were with me.'

(2×) Both uses describe the same historical moment: Saul struck blind, needing to be physically guided into Damascus. The proud Pharisee, formerly confident in his own sight and direction, must now be led helpless by the hand. The French mener par la main preserves the literal hand-leading sense. Luke's point is clear: divine encounter reduces human self-sufficiency to helplessness, requiring new guidance. The one who thought he saw clearly now needs others to lead him, preparing him to receive true sight from Ananias. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: being-led-by-hand, leading-by-hand | es: guiándole-de-la-mano, llevado-de-la-mano | fr: mener-par-la-main | de: χειραγωγούμενος, χειραγωγοῦντες Acts 9:8; Acts 22:11

χειρᾰγωγ-ός G5497 N-AMP (1×)

one who leads by the hand, a guide for the blind or helpless

Cheiragogos literally means 'one who leads by the hand' and refers to a guide, especially one who leads a blind person or someone who cannot find their way. Luke uses it when describing Saul's condition after his encounter with the risen Christ on the Damascus road: blinded by the light, 'those who were with him led him by the hand and brought him into Damascus.' Later, when Saul (now Paul) recounts being struck blind by Elymas the sorcerer's opposition, he declares 'you will be blind and unable to see the sun for a time,' requiring 'guides to lead him by the hand.' The word captures both physical helplessness and the need for assistance.

(1×) A guide who leads someone by the hand, especially a blind person. In Acts 13:11 Paul pronounces judgment on the sorcerer Elymas: 'you will be blind, unable to see the sun for a time.' Immediately 'mist and darkness fell upon him, and he went about seeking people to lead him by the hand (cheiragogous).' The multilingual glosses —Spanish 'guías,' French 'guide,' English 'guides'—all capture the assistive role. This echoes Saul's own experience of blindness after his Damascus road encounter (Acts 9:8), when companions led him by the hand into the city. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12553 WITH 3 SENSES

en: guides | es: guías | fr: guide | de: χειραγωγούς Acts 13:11

χειρόγρᾰφ-ος G5498 N-ANS (1×)

handwritten note, bond, certificate of debt written by hand

Cheirographon denotes something written by hand, particularly a signed document or bond acknowledging a debt. Paul uses it metaphorically in Colossians to describe what Christ accomplished at the cross: he 'canceled the record of debt that stood against us with its legal demands. This he set aside, nailing it to the cross.' The imagery draws on the ancient practice of canceling debt certificates by striking them through or nailing them publicly to indicate payment. Paul transforms this commercial image into spiritual reality: Christ's death canceled the unpayable debt of sin that the law's demands had created.

(1×) A handwritten document, specifically a certificate of debt or bond. Paul writes in Colossians 2:14 about Christ's work: 'having canceled the record of debt (cheirographon) that stood against us with its legal demands. This he set aside, nailing it to the cross.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'documento de deuda,' German 'Schuldschein,' English 'handwriting'—all point to written obligation. The metaphor of nailing the debt certificate to the cross proclaims full cancellation of humanity's unpayable obligation under the law's judgment. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: handwriting | es: documento-de-deuda | fr: χειρόγραφον | de: Schuldschein Col 2:14

χειρο-ποίητος G5499 Adj-GFS (6×)

Made by hands, handmade; manufactured by human effort, often contrasted with divine or spiritual creation.

This compound adjective (cheir, 'hand' + poieo, 'to make') describes anything fashioned by human craft. In the New Testament it nearly always carries a negative or limiting connotation: God does not dwell in temples made with hands (Acts 7:48, 17:24), and Christ entered a sanctuary not made with hands (Heb 9:11). Mark 14:58 records the false charge that Jesus would destroy the handmade temple and build another 'not made with hands.' The consistent multilingual rendering—Spanish hecho a mano, French fait de main, German handgemacht—underscores the universal clarity of this concept.

made by hands / handmade (6×) Constructed or manufactured by human hands, in contrast to what is divine, spiritual, or not of human origin. Stephen's speech (Acts 7:48) and Paul's Areopagus address (Acts 17:24) both insist that God does not inhabit cheiropoietos structures. In Ephesians 2:11, circumcision is described as 'made in the flesh by hands,' relativizing it against a greater spiritual reality. The Spanish hecho-a-mano and German handgemacht mirror the compound etymology perfectly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: hand-made, made-by-hands, made-with-hands | es: hecha-a-mano, hechas-a-mano, hecho-a-mano | fr: fait-de-main, handgemacht | de: handgemacht, χειροποιήτοις Mark 14:58; Acts 7:48; Acts 17:24; Eph 2:11; Heb 9:11

χειροτον-έω G5500 V-APA-NMP (2×)

to appoint, elect, choose for office (originally by show of hands) χειροτονέω originally meant to vote by stretching out the hand (χείρ 'hand' + τείνω 'stretch'), the standard method of voting in Greek assemblies, but it came to mean more generally to appoint or select someone for a position. In Acts 14:23, Paul and Barnabas 'appointed elders (χειροτονήσαντες πρεσβυτέρους) for them in every church' on their return journey, with prayer and fasting commending them to the Lord. In 2 Corinthians 8:19, Paul mentions that his traveling companion 'was appointed (χειροτονηθείς) by the churches to travel with us' in carrying the collection to Jerusalem—here the passive voice emphasizes that the churches themselves made the selection.

(2×) The two uses show χειροτονέω in early church leadership selection. Acts 14:23 describes apostolic appointment of local elders; 2 Corinthians 8:19 describes congregational choice of a financial representative. The French ordonner and Spanish designando suggest formal appointment. Whether apostles appointed (Acts) or churches chose (2 Corinthians), the selection process was deliberate and solemn, involving prayer and recognition of God's guidance in choosing leaders. COMMANDING AND ORDERING

en: having-appointed, having-been-appointed | es: designando, habiendo-sido-elegido | fr: ordonner | de: erwaehlt, χειροτονήσαντες Acts 14:23; 2Cor 8:19

χείρων G5501 Adj-ANS-C (11×)

Worse — comparative adjective denoting inferior condition, greater severity, or moral deterioration

The adjective χείρων (cheirōn), the irregular comparative of κακός ('bad'), describes a deteriorated or more severe state. The demoniac's re-possessed condition is 'worse than the first' (Matt 12:45; Luke 11:26), and the hemorrhaging woman 'grew worse' under many physicians (Mark 5:26). An unshrunk patch makes a tear 'worse' (Matt 9:16; Mark 2:21). Pilate fears a 'worse' deception (Matt 27:64). Peter warns that apostates find their last state 'worse' (2 Pet 2:20), and Paul says impostors go 'from bad to worse' (2 Tim 3:13). Spanish 'peor' and French 'pire' map directly.

worse (11×) Worse in condition or severity — describing a deteriorated physical, spiritual, or situational state. The hemorrhaging woman 'grew worse' under physicians (Mark 5:26), a garment rip worsens with an improper patch (Matt 9:16; Mark 2:21), and re-possession leaves the demoniac 'worse than the first' (Matt 12:45). Apostates likewise face a 'worse' final state (2 Pet 2:20). Spanish 'peor' and German 'schlimmer' serve as equivalents. SMALLNESS AND LEAST

en: of-worse, worse | es: de-peor, peor, peores | fr: pire | de: schlechter, χείρονα, χείρων Matt 9:16; Matt 12:45; Matt 27:64; Mark 2:21; Mark 5:26

G5502 N-NNP (1×)

cherubim, angelic beings associated with God's throne and glory

Cherubim (Hebrew plural form transliterated into Greek) are angelic beings consistently associated with God's presence, glory, and throne. They appear in Genesis guarding Eden after the fall, in Exodus as golden figures overshadowing the mercy seat on the ark of the covenant, in Ezekiel's visions as living creatures bearing God's throne-chariot, and in Revelation around God's throne. The author of Hebrews mentions them when describing the Old Testament tabernacle: above the ark were 'the cherubim of glory overshadowing the mercy seat.' These figures represented the heavenly reality that the earthly sanctuary symbolized, God's holy presence enthroned among his people.

(1×) Cherubim, the angelic beings who attend God's throne and glory. Hebrews 9:5 describes the tabernacle furnishings: 'above it were the cherubim (Cheroubin) of glory overshadowing the mercy seat.' The multilingual glosses preserve the transliterated Hebrew plural—Spanish 'querubines,' French 'Cherubim,' English 'cherubim.' These golden figures on the ark represented the heavenly beings who surround God's presence, connecting the earthly sanctuary to the divine throne room. The cherubim's wings overshadowed the place where blood was sprinkled on the Day of Atonement. CHERUB GUARDIAN BEING en: Cheroubin | es: Cheroubín | fr: Cherubim | de: Cherubim Heb 9:5

χήρ-α G5503 N-NFS (27×)

widow — a woman whose husband has died, often emblematic of vulnerability and dependence on God's justice

Chera designates a widow, a woman bereft of her husband, and its 27 NT occurrences carry both social and theological weight. Widows in the ancient world occupied a precarious position — without a husband's protection or provision, they depended on family, community, and ultimately God. Jesus denounces the scribes who 'devour widows' houses' while making a show of long prayers (Mark 12:40; Luke 20:47), then immediately elevates a poor widow whose two copper coins outweigh every other offering (Mark 12:42-43; Luke 21:2-3). Luke is especially attentive to widows: Anna the prophetess, a widow of eighty-four years, recognizes the infant Jesus in the temple (Luke 2:37); Jesus raises the only son of the widow of Nain (Luke 7:12); and the parable of the persistent widow models unceasing prayer (Luke 18:3-5). Jesus cites the widow of Zarephath as evidence of God's care beyond Israel (Luke 4:25-26). Acts records the daily distribution dispute involving Hellenist widows (Acts 6:1), and the widows who mourned Tabitha display the garments she had made (Acts 9:39, 41). First Timothy establishes criteria for enrolling widows in the church's care (1 Tim 5:3-16). Spanish 'viuda,' French 'veuve,' German 'Witwe.'

widow (27×) A woman whose husband has died, occupying a socially vulnerable position that Scripture repeatedly marks as deserving of protection and justice. Jesus condemns those who exploit widows (Mark 12:40; Luke 20:47) and exalts the widow's sacrificial giving (Mark 12:42-43; Luke 21:2-3). Luke highlights widows as exemplars of faith: Anna the prophetess (Luke 2:37), the widow of Nain whose son Jesus raises (Luke 7:12), the persistent widow whose prayer God answers (Luke 18:3-5), and the Zarephath widow who received Elijah (Luke 4:25-26). In Acts, widows' care becomes a catalyst for church organization (Acts 6:1), and 1 Timothy 5:3-16 codifies their communal support. WIDOW BEREAVED WOMAN

en: Widow, a-widow, widow | es: viuda, viudas | fr: Witwe, veuve | de: Witwe Matt 23:14; Mark 12:40; Mark 12:42; Mark 12:43; Luke 2:37

χθές G5504 Adv (3×)

yesterday; the day before today

A simple temporal adverb meaning 'yesterday,' this word appears in contexts contrasting recent events with the present or future. In John 4:52, the nobleman asks about the hour when his son began to recover, and the servants answer 'Yesterday at the seventh hour.' Acts 7:28 recalls Moses' action the previous day: 'Did you want to kill me as you killed the Egyptian yesterday?' Hebrews 13:8 uses it in the famous formula 'Jesus Christ the same yesterday and today and forever,' spanning past, present, and future. The word is cognate with Latin 'heri' and Sanskrit 'hyas.'

(3×) The word translates uniformly across languages: English 'yesterday,' Spanish 'ayer,' French 'hier,' German 'gestern,' all from Indo-European roots meaning the day before. John 4:52 uses it for specific temporal reference to when healing occurred. Acts 7:28 references Moses' killing of the Egyptian the previous day. Hebrews 13:8 employs the word theologically, affirming Christ's unchanging nature across all time—yesterday (past), today (present), and forever (future). YESTERDAY PREVIOUSLY en: Yesterday, yesterday | es: Ayer, ayer | fr: gestern, hier | de: gestern, ἐχθὲς John 4:52; Acts 7:28; Heb 13:8

χῑλι-άς G5505 N-DFP (23×)

A thousand; a unit of one thousand, used for large numbers in narrative and apocalyptic contexts.

The feminine noun chilias denotes the number one thousand as a counting unit. While it appears in straightforward narrative — the five thousand who believed (Acts 4:4), the twenty-three thousand who fell (1 Cor 10:8) — its most theologically charged usage comes in Revelation, where it structures the 144,000 sealed from twelve tribes (Rev 7:4-8), the thousand-year reign (Rev 20:2-6), and heavenly hosts numbering 'myriads of myriads and thousands of thousands' (Rev 5:11). Spanish 'miles,' French 'millier,' and German 'Tausende' all employ straightforward numeral plurals, confirming uniform semantic treatment across all 23 occurrences.

thousand, thousands (23×) The cardinal number one thousand or a group counted in thousands, used in narrative tallies (Acts 4:4; 1 Cor 10:8) and Revelation's symbolic figures — the 144,000 sealed (Rev 7:4-8), the thousand-year reign (Rev 20:2-6), heavenly myriads (Rev 5:11). Spanish 'mil,' French 'mille,' and German 'tausend' confirm uniform treatment. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS

en: thousand, thousands | es: mil, mil., miles | fr: Tausende, mille, millier | de: Tausende, tausend Luke 14:31; Acts 4:4; 1Cor 10:8; Rev 5:11

χῑλίαρχ-ος G5506 N-DMS (22×)

A chiliarch (commander of a thousand); a Roman military tribune responsible for a garrison cohort.

Designates a Roman military officer commanding roughly one thousand soldiers, equivalent to the Latin tribunus militum. In the New Testament, this figure appears most prominently in Acts 21–23, where the chiliarch Claudius Lysias arrests Paul in Jerusalem, rescues him from a mob, and transfers him under armed escort to Caesarea. The term also surfaces at Mark 6:21 among Herod's dinner guests and in John 18:12 during Jesus' arrest. Spanish comandante and German Oberste both highlight the command authority this rank carried.

military tribune, commander (22×) A Roman military tribune commanding approximately a thousand troops, the senior officer of a cohort stationed in a garrison city. In Acts 21:31–33 the chiliarch of the Jerusalem cohort intervenes to rescue Paul from a violent crowd; in John 18:12 a chiliarch participates in Jesus' arrest. Multilingual glosses—comandante (Spanish), tribun (French), Oberste (German)—all emphasize the rank's command authority over a substantial military unit. MILITARY OFFICERS

en: commander, military-commanders, of-commanders | es: comandante, comandantes, de-tribunos, | fr: Oberste, tribun | de: Oberste, Tribun Mark 6:21; John 18:12; Acts 21:31; Acts 21:32; Acts 21:33

χίλιοι G5507 Adj-AFP (11×)

A thousand — the cardinal number 1,000, used literally and symbolically for vast duration and measurement

The adjective χίλιοι (chilioi) is the Greek cardinal for a thousand. Its NT usage is concentrated in Revelation with rich symbolic weight. Peter relativizes human time: 'with the Lord one day is as a thousand years' (2 Pet 3:8). Revelation uses it for prophetic witness duration (Rev 11:3), the woman's wilderness refuge (Rev 12:6), a vast distance (Rev 14:20), and most famously the millennial reign, where Satan is bound and saints reign for 'a thousand years' (Rev 20:2-7). Spanish 'mil' and French 'mille' translate directly.

(11×) The cardinal number one thousand, used for literal quantities and symbolic prophetic durations. Peter relativizes earthly time: 'a thousand years is as one day' (2 Pet 3:8). Revelation employs it for prophetic witness (Rev 11:3), the woman's desert sojourn (Rev 12:6), and the millennial binding of Satan and reign of saints (Rev 20:2-7). The number conveys completeness and divine sovereignty over time. Spanish 'mil' and Korean 천 both render it directly. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS

en: a-thousand, thousand | es: mil | fr: tausend | de: tausend 2Pet 3:8; Rev 11:3; Rev 12:6; Rev 14:20

G5508 N-GFS (1×)

Chios, an island in the Aegean Sea (off the coast of Asia Minor)

Chios was a large island in the Aegean Sea off the western coast of Asia Minor, famed in antiquity for its wine and as the claimed birthplace of Homer. Luke mentions it briefly in Acts when narrating Paul's return journey to Jerusalem: sailing from Asia, 'we sailed to the point opposite Chios' and the next day arrived at Samos. This geographical detail tracks Paul's island-hopping route through the Aegean, giving readers a sense of the apostle's travels and the connected network of islands that facilitated ancient Mediterranean navigation and commerce.

(1×) Chios, an island in the Aegean Sea. Acts 20:15 records Paul's travel itinerary: 'sailing from there [Assos], we came the following day opposite Chios (Chiou), and the next day we touched at Samos.' The multilingual glosses preserve the place name—Spanish 'Quíos,' English 'Chios.' This was a major island known for wine production and cultural significance. Luke's careful navigation notes provide a concrete sense of Paul's journey and the maritime geography connecting Asia Minor, the Greek islands, and the mainland. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chios | es: Quíos | fr: Chloé | de: Χίου Acts 20:15

χῑτών G5509 N-NMS (11×)

Tunic, inner garment — the basic garment worn next to the skin, distinct from the outer cloak (ἱμάτιον)

The noun χιτών (chitōn) designates the tunic worn directly against the body, distinct from the outer cloak (ἱμάτιον). Jesus teaches radical generosity: do not withhold your tunic from the one suing for your cloak (Matt 5:40; Luke 6:29). Missionaries are to carry no spare (Matt 10:10; Mark 6:9). John the Baptist demands sharing tunics with the needy (Luke 3:11). The high priest tears his garments at Jesus' trial (Mark 14:63), and Tabitha's friends display the tunics she sewed for widows (Acts 9:39). Spanish 'túnica' and Arabic قَمِيص preserve the reference.

tunic / inner garment (11×) A tunic or undergarment worn next to the skin, distinct from the outer cloak (himation). Jesus teaches giving one's tunic to the one suing for the cloak (Matt 5:40; Luke 6:29), and missionaries carry no spare (Matt 10:10; Mark 6:9). John the Baptist demands sharing tunics with the needy (Luke 3:11). The high priest tears his garments in outrage (Mark 14:63), and Tabitha's friends show tunics she sewed for widows (Acts 9:39). Spanish 'túnica' and Hindi कुर्ता both denote this garment. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: garment, tunic, tunics | es: túnica, túnica., túnicas | fr: tunique, vêtement. | de: Gewand, Untergewand, Unterkleid Matt 5:40; Matt 10:10; Mark 6:9; Mark 14:63; Luke 3:11

χιών G5510 N-NFS (2×)

snow, frozen precipitation

χιών denotes snow—frozen water falling from the sky or lying on the ground. In Scripture, snow's striking whiteness makes it a natural image for purity and radiance. Matthew 28:3 describes the angel at Jesus' tomb: 'His appearance was like lightning, and his clothing white as snow (λευκὸν ὡς χιών)'—dazzling brilliance suggesting heavenly glory. Revelation 1:14 uses similar language for the risen Christ: 'The hairs of his head were white, like white wool, like snow (ὡς χιών)'—emphasizing not age but the radiant purity and transcendent glory of the exalted Lord.

(2×) Both uses employ snow as a simile for dazzling whiteness. The angel's clothing and Christ's head are white ὡς χιών—suggesting purity, glory, otherworldly radiance. The German Schnee and Spanish nieve straightforwardly denote the natural phenomenon. In biblical imagery, snow's whiteness transcends mere color to symbolize the purity of heaven itself, the blinding glory of divine presence that sets apart heavenly beings from earthly reality. SNOW PRECIPITATION en: snow | es: nieve | fr: neige | de: Schnee, χιών Matt 28:3; Rev 1:14

χλᾰμύς G5511 N-AFS (2×)

cloak, military cape, short mantle worn by soldiers χλαμύς refers to a short cloak or mantle, particularly the military cape worn by soldiers and rulers. It appears only in Matthew's passion narrative. In Matthew 27:28, the soldiers 'stripped him and put a scarlet cloak (χλαμύδα κοκκίνην) on him' as part of their mockery—dressing Jesus as a pretend king with a mock royal robe. In Matthew 27:31, after mocking him, they 'stripped him of the cloak (τὴν χλαμύδα)' and put his own clothes back on before leading him to crucifixion. The scarlet military cloak was meant to ridicule Jesus' claim to kingship, but ironically testified to the truth they were mocking.

(2×) Both uses describe the same garment in the same scene—soldiers' mockery of Jesus. They dress him in a χλαμύς to ridicule his royal claims, then remove it before execution. The French manteau and Spanish manto preserve the outer-garment sense. The irony is profound: they clothe him in royal colors to mock, not knowing he truly is King. The scarlet cloak, meant to deride, becomes a symbol of the suffering King who wears a crown of thorns before wearing a crown of glory. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: cloak | es: manto | fr: manteau | de: χλαμύδα Matt 27:28; Matt 27:31

χλευ-άζω G5512 V-PPA-NMP (2×)

to mock, jeer, scoff, ridicule

χλευάζω means to mock or scoff at someone, to treat with contempt through ridicule or jeering. Luke uses it twice in Acts to describe negative responses to apostolic preaching. In Acts 2:13, when the disciples speak in tongues at Pentecost, some in the crowd 'mocked them (ἐχλεύαζον)' saying 'They are filled with new wine'—dismissing the miracle as drunkenness. In Acts 17:32, when Paul preaches the resurrection to the Athenian philosophers, some 'mocked (ἐχλεύαζον)'—sophisticated Greeks finding the idea of bodily resurrection laughable, intellectually beneath them. Both contexts show intellectual or spiritual pride rejecting divine truth through mockery.

(2×) Both uses describe mockers dismissing the gospel message. At Pentecost, some attribute the Spirit's work to wine; at Athens, some attribute Paul's resurrection preaching to philosophical naïveté. The French moquer and Spanish burlándose capture the contemptuous ridicule. Luke's point is that mockery is a predictable response to God's surprising work—whether tongues-speaking or resurrection proclamation, divine truth often provokes scorn from those who think themselves too clever or sophisticated to believe. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: mocking, were-mocking | es: burlándose, se-burlaban | fr: moquer | de: διαχλευάζοντες, ἐχλεύαζον Acts 2:13; Acts 17:32

χλιᾰρός G5513 Adj-NMS (1×)

lukewarm, tepid, neither hot nor cold

Chliaros means lukewarm or tepid, neither hot nor cold. The risen Christ uses it in his devastating critique of the Laodicean church: 'I know your works: you are neither cold nor hot. Would that you were either cold or hot! So, because you are lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spit you out of my mouth.' The temperature metaphor conveys spiritual complacency and ineffectiveness. Hot water is useful for cleansing and therapeutic purposes; cold water refreshes; but lukewarm water is unpleasant and useless. The church's tepid commitment provokes revulsion rather than approval.

(1×) Lukewarm, tepid, neither hot nor cold. In Revelation 3:16 Jesus addresses the Laodicean church: 'So, because you are lukewarm (chliaros), and neither hot nor cold, I will spit you out of my mouth.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'tibio,' French 'lau,' German 'lau,' English 'lukewarm'—all describe temperature mediocrity. The metaphor indicts spiritual complacency: the church is neither zealously committed (hot) nor refreshingly honest about unbelief (cold), but self-satisfied and useless, provoking divine disgust. HEAT AND WARMTH

en: lukewarm | es: tibio | fr: lau | de: lau Rev 3:16

χλόη G5514 N-GFS (1×)

Chloe, a personal name (woman whose household reported divisions in Corinth)

Chloe is a woman's name meaning 'green shoot' or 'young verdure' in Greek, often associated with Demeter/fertility. Paul mentions her in 1 Corinthians when citing his source of information about divisions in the Corinthian church: 'it has been reported to me by Chloe's people that there is quarreling among you.' Whether Chloe herself was a believer, a church patron, or simply the head of a household whose members brought news to Paul is uncertain, but the reference shows Paul's transparency about his sources and indicates that women could head households with sufficient autonomy and connection to the apostle to relay important information.

(1×) Chloe, a personal name; a woman whose household members reported church problems to Paul. In 1 Corinthians 1:11 Paul writes: 'it has been reported to me by Chloe's people (tōn Chloēs) that there is quarreling among you, my brothers.' The multilingual glosses preserve the Greek name—Spanish 'Cloé,' French 'Chloé,' English 'Chloe.' We know nothing else about this woman, but the reference indicates she had a household with members connected to both Corinth and Paul, and that Paul felt comfortable citing them as a credible source. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: of-Chloē | es: Chlóē | fr: Chloé | de: Chloe 1Cor 1:11

χλωρός G5515 Adj-ANS (4×)

Green, pale green, or ashen pale; describing vegetation's verdant color or the pallor of death.

An adjective spanning the color range from fresh green to sickly pale – a spectrum ancient Greek perceived as a single continuum of light, yellowish-green hue. In Mark 6:39 Jesus seats the crowd on the green grass, evoking the lush Galilean spring. In Revelation 9:4 the locusts are forbidden to harm any green thing. But in Revelation 6:8 the fourth horseman rides a chlōros horse – the pale, deathly greenish hue of a corpse. Spanish captures this duality with verde (green) alongside verde-pálido (pale green), while French vert and German grün tend toward the verdant end.

(4×) Describing the fresh green color of living vegetation. In Mark 6:39 the crowd sits on the green grass before the feeding of the five thousand, and in Revelation 9:4 the demonic locusts are restrained from destroying any green plant or tree. Spanish verde and French vert straightforwardly render this botanical sense of vibrant, living greenness. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES

en: green, green-thing, pale | es: verde, verde-pálido | fr: vert | de: gruen Mark 6:39; Rev 6:8; Rev 8:7; Rev 9:4

χξς G5516

six hundred sixty-six (or six hundred sixteen), the cryptic number of the beast

This numerical expression appears only in Revelation 13:18 as the mysterious number of the beast, one of Scripture's most debated symbols. Ancient manuscripts vary between 666 and 616, suggesting some scribes recognized the number as a cipher. Jewish and early Christian readers familiar with gematria (where letters have numerical values) would have understood this as a coded reference, possibly to a Roman emperor. The triple repetition of six, falling short of the perfect seven, may symbolize persistent human imperfection and rebellion against God.

χοϊκός G5517 Adj-GMS (4×)

Made of dust, earthy; pertaining to the material, mortal nature of humanity formed from soil.

An adjective derived from chous (dust, soil), describing what is made from earth or belongs to the realm of dust. Paul uses it exclusively in 1 Corinthians 15:47-49 to contrast the first Adam, who is choïkos – formed from the ground (Gen 2:7) – with the second Adam (Christ), who is from heaven. Believers currently bear the image of the earthly man but will bear the image of the heavenly. Spanish terrenal, French terrestre, and German irdisch all reflect this earthy-versus-heavenly polarity that structures Paul's resurrection argument.

(4×) Pertaining to dust or earth, characterizing the mortal, material nature of humanity as formed from the ground (cf. Gen 2:7). All four occurrences appear in 1 Corinthians 15:47-49, where Paul contrasts the choïkos (earthy) first Adam with the heavenly Christ: the first man is 'of dust' (v. 47), those who share his nature are 'earthy' (v. 48), and believers have borne the image of the earthy man (v. 49). Spanish terrenal and German irdisch capture the earthbound, mortal quality Paul sets against the heavenly resurrection body. EARTHLY TERRESTRIAL

en: of-dust | es: terrenal, terrenales | fr: terrestre | de: irdisch 1Cor 15:47; 1Cor 15:48; 1Cor 15:49

χοῖνιξ G5518 N-NFS (2×)

choenix, a dry measure equal to about a quart (roughly one person's daily grain ration) χοῖνιξ was a Greek dry measure used particularly for grain, equivalent to about one quart or roughly one liter—the typical daily bread ration for one person. It appears only in Revelation 6:6, in John's vision of the third seal judgment. The voice announces: 'A quart (χοῖνιξ) of wheat for a denarius, and three quarts (τρεῖς χοίνικες) of barley for a denarius'—depicting severe famine conditions where a full day's wage buys only enough grain for one person's basic subsistence. This is economic devastation: no surplus, nothing for family, nothing for any other needs. The χοῖνιξ becomes a unit measuring scarcity and judgment.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in the same verse (Revelation 6:6), where χοῖνιξ measures famine severity during the apocalyptic tribulation. A denarius for a χοῖνιξ means starvation-level economics—working all day for just enough grain to survive one more day. The German Choinix and French transliterations preserve the technical term. John's vision depicts judgment as economic collapse, where the basic measure of daily bread becomes the measure of suffering. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10355 WITH 4 SENSES

en: A-quart, quarts | es: Un-quénix, quénices | fr: Choinix | de: Choinix Rev 6:6

χοῖρος G5519 N-AMP (12×)

choiros – swine, pig; an unclean animal under Mosaic law, associated with impurity and Gentile life

The noun choiros ('swine, pig') designates the domesticated pig, an animal classified as ritually unclean under the Levitical food laws (Lev 11:7). In the New Testament every occurrence carries overtones of impurity, degradation, or the Gentile world. The Gadarene demoniacs episode, where Jesus sends demons into a herd of swine that rush into the sea (Matt 8:30-32; Mark 5:11-13; Luke 8:32-33), dramatizes the transfer of uncleanness from possessed persons to ritually unclean animals. The prodigal son's nadir is feeding pigs (Luke 15:15-16), the lowest conceivable occupation for a Jewish youth. Jesus' proverb 'do not cast your pearls before swine' (Matt 7:6) uses choiros as a figure for those who cannot appreciate what is holy.

(12×) A pig or swine – an animal ritually unclean under Mosaic law. Used in the Gadarene demoniac episode (Matt 8:30-32; Mark 5:11-13; Luke 8:32-33), the prodigal son's degradation (Luke 15:15-16), and the proverb about pearls before swine (Matt 7:6). Spanish cerdos, French porc, and German Schwein uniformly render a single sense of the unclean domestic animal. PIG SWINE

en: of-pigs, pigs | es: cerdos, de-cerdos | fr: porc | de: Schwein Matt 7:6; Matt 8:30; Matt 8:31; Matt 8:32; Mark 5:11

χολ-άω G5520 V-PIA-2P (1×)

to be angry, to rage, to be filled with wrath

Cholaō means to be angry or enraged, often with the connotation of bile-driven anger (from cholē, bile). Jesus uses it in John's Gospel when defending his Sabbath healing: 'I did one work, and you all marvel at it. Moses gave you circumcision... and you circumcise a man on the Sabbath. If on the Sabbath a man receives circumcision... are you angry with me because on the Sabbath I made a man's whole body well?' The rhetorical question exposes the inconsistency of his opponents: they permit surgical circumcision on the Sabbath but rage when Jesus heals, revealing that their anger comes from hostility to Jesus rather than from principled Sabbath observance.

(1×) To be angry, to rage. Jesus addresses the Jerusalem authorities in John 7:23: 'If a man receives circumcision on the Sabbath, so that the law of Moses may not be broken, are you angry (cholaō) with me because I made a man's whole body well on the Sabbath?' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'os enfurecéis,' French 'être irrité,' German 'zürnen,' English 'are you angry'—all convey anger or wrath. Jesus's question exposes the irrationality of opposing his Sabbath healing while permitting Sabbath circumcision, revealing their anger as prejudice rather than principle. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: are-you-angry | es: os-enfurecéis | fr: être-irrité | de: zuernen John 7:23

χολή G5521 N-GFS (2×)

gall, bile; literally the bitter bodily fluid, metaphorically bitterness, poison, or extreme affliction

Gall refers to the bitter bile produced by the liver, a substance associated in ancient medicine with bitterness and disease. Matthew 27:34 records the offer of wine mixed with gall to Jesus on the cross—likely a narcotic drink meant to dull pain, which he refused. In Acts 8:23, Peter tells Simon the magician he is 'in the gall of bitterness,' using the bodily fluid as a vivid metaphor for spiritual corruption and bondage to sin. Classical Greek writers also used gall figuratively for bitter anger or wrath, making it a potent image for toxic spiritual states.

(2×) The bitter bile secreted by the liver, used both literally and metaphorically. Matthew 27:34 refers to the actual substance mixed with wine—translations universally render it 'gall' (English), 'hiel' (Spanish), 'fiel' (French), 'Galle' (German), confirming the physical reference. Acts 8:23 employs it metaphorically for spiritual bitterness and poisonous sinfulness. Ancient medical texts associated gall with disease and bitterness, and classical usage extended it to mean bitter rage, enriching Peter's diagnosis of Simon's toxic spiritual condition. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION dust, fine particles of soil or earth; metaphorically the grave

en: gall | es: hiel | fr: bile, fiel | de: Galle Matt 27:34; Acts 8:23

χοῦς G5522 N-AMS (2×)

This Greek term refers to the fine, powdery substance that results from dried earth—what we simply call dust. The word appears in two vivid New Testament scenes: Jesus instructing his disciples to shake the dust off their feet as a testimony against unbelieving towns, and merchants weeping over Babylon's destruction by throwing dust on their heads in mourning. The gesture of casting dust on one's head was a traditional sign of grief throughout the ancient Mediterranean world, making the dust itself a symbol of human mortality and sorrow.

(2×) The physical substance of fine, dry particles of earth. In Mark 6:11, the dust on the disciples' feet represents the literal soil of a rejecting town, while in Revelation 18:19, merchants throw dust on their heads in a dramatic gesture of mourning over Babylon's fall. The multilingual evidence (German and French both use Staub, Spanish polvo, English dust) confirms the consistent physical meaning across contexts, though the dust functions symbolically in both passages—as testimony and as grief-marker respectively. DUST AND POWDER

en: dust | es: polvo | fr: Staub, poussière | de: Staub Mark 6:11; Rev 18:19

Χοραζείν G5523 N-VFS (2×)

Chorazin, a town in Galilee near Capernaum

Χοραζίν (Chorazin) was a town in Galilee, located a few miles north of Capernaum on the northern shore of the Sea of Galilee. Though Jesus must have ministered extensively there (performing 'mighty works' according to Matthew 11:21), the Gospels record no specific events in Chorazin. The town appears only in Jesus' pronouncement of woe. Both Matthew 11:21 and Luke 10:13 record Jesus' judgment:

'Woe to you, Chorazin!... For if the mighty works done in you had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago'—condemning the town for rejecting Jesus despite witnessing his powerful works.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in Jesus' pronouncement of judgment on unrepentant Galilean cities. Chorazin witnessed Jesus' miracles but refused to repent, making its guilt greater than that of pagan Tyre and Sidon. The multilingual glosses preserve the Greek name. Jesus' woe reveals a sobering principle: privilege brings responsibility. Chorazin had front-row access to Jesus' ministry yet remained hard-hearted, sealing its judgment. Greater light refused brings greater accountability. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Chorazin | es: Chorazín | fr: Chorazin | de: Χοραζίν Matt 11:21; Luke 10:13

χορηγ-έω G5524 V-FIA-3S (2×)

to supply, provide, furnish abundantly

χορηγέω originally referred to financing a chorus or public festival (from χορηγός, 'chorus leader/sponsor'), but came to mean more generally to supply or provide abundantly, to furnish what is needed. Paul uses it twice, both times of God's generous provision. In 2 Corinthians 9:10, he writes that 'He who supplies (ὁ... χορηγῶν) seed to the sower and bread for food will supply (χορηγήσει) and multiply your seed for sowing'—God generously provides resources so believers can be generous. In 1 Peter 4:11, Peter instructs that whoever serves should do so 'as one who serves by the strength that God supplies (χορηγεῖ)'—God furnishes the enabling power for ministry.

(2×) Both uses describe God as the generous supplier. 2 Corinthians 9:10 speaks of material provision for giving; 1 Peter 4:11 speaks of spiritual strength for serving. The French fournir and Spanish suministra capture the supplying action. The root meaning of chorus-sponsoring conveys the idea well: God doesn't provide grudgingly but abundantly, like a wealthy benefactor funding a magnificent public festival. He supplies both the seed and the strength, both resource and power. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: supplies, will-supply | es: suministra, suplirá | fr: fournir, χορηγεῖ | de: darreichen 2Cor 9:10; 1Pet 4:11

χορός G5525 N-GMP (1×)

dance, dancing, choral dance (often religious or festive)

Choros refers to dancing, particularly the kind of group or choral dance that accompanied celebrations in the ancient world. Jesus uses it in the parable of the prodigal son: when the older brother returns from the field and hears 'music and dancing,' he learns that his wayward brother has returned and the father has thrown a celebration. The dancing signifies unrestrained joy and festivity—exactly what offends the self-righteous older brother, who thinks his father's mercy is excessive. In classical Greek, choros could mean both the dance itself and the group of dancers, often in religious or dramatic contexts.

(1×) Dancing, festive or celebratory dance. In the parable of the prodigal son (Luke 15:25), the older brother 'came and drew near to the house, and he heard music and dancing (chorōn).' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'danzas,' French 'danse,' English 'dancing'—all identify festive celebration. The sound of dancing signals the father's extravagant joy at the lost son's return, a joy that will provoke the older brother's resentment. Dancing represented unrestrained celebration, appropriate for the restoration Jesus proclaims for repentant sinners. DANCE AND DANCING

en: dancing | es: danzas | fr: danse | de: χορῶν Luke 15:25

χορτ-άζω G5526 V-ANA (15×)

To feed, fill, or satisfy with food; passively, to eat one's fill and be satiated

Originally a term for feeding cattle, this verb in the New Testament describes the deeply satisfying experience of being filled with food—both physical and spiritual. The feeding miracles (Matt 14:20; 15:37; Mark 6:42; 8:8) all culminate with the crowd being 'satisfied,' and the Beatitudes promise that those who hunger for righteousness 'shall be filled' (Matt 5:6). Spanish consistently uses 'saciar' (to satiate), capturing the sense of complete fullness. The transitive form appears when the disciples wonder how they could possibly 'satisfy' such a crowd in the wilderness (Matt 15:33; Mark 8:4).

1. be satisfied or filled (13×) To be satisfied, filled, or satiated with food — the intransitive or passive experience of having eaten enough. Used after the miraculous feedings where thousands ate and 'were filled' (Matt 14:20; Mark 6:42), and eschatologically in the Beatitude 'Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for righteousness, for they shall be satisfied' (Matt 5:6). Spanish 'fueron saciados' and German 'gesättigt' emphasize the completeness of the satisfaction. Philippians 4:12 uses it for Paul's contentment in any circumstance. SATIATION AND FULLNESS

en: be-filled, be-satisfied, to-be-filled | es: fueron-saciadas, fueron-saciados, fuisteis-saciados | fr: rassasier | de: saettigen, χορτασθήσεσθε, χορτασθήσονται Matt 5:6; Matt 14:20; Matt 15:37; Mark 6:42; Mark 7:27

2. satisfy or feed someone (2×) To feed or satisfy others with food — the active, causative sense of providing enough to satiate. The disciples ask in dismay, 'Where could we get enough bread to satisfy so great a crowd?' (Matt 15:33; Mark 8:4). Spanish 'saciar' in the active voice and the transitive construction distinguish this from the passive experience of being filled. The emphasis falls on the agent who provides rather than the recipient who is satisfied. SATIATION AND FULLNESS

en: to-satisfy | es: saciar | fr: rassasier | de: saettigen, χορτάσαι Matt 15:33; Mark 8:4

χόρτ-ασμα G5527 N-ANP (1×)

food, fodder, that which satisfies hunger

Chortasma denotes food or fodder, that which satisfies hunger. While it could be used for animal feed, it also applied to human food, especially basic sustenance. Luke uses it in Acts when describing the famine in Egypt and Canaan during Joseph's time: 'our fathers could find no food.' The term emphasizes the shortage of basic provisions necessary for survival, the kind of famine that forced Jacob's family to go to Egypt seeking grain. The word appears only here in the New Testament, in a context that recalls God's providential preservation of Israel through Joseph's prior enslavement and rise to power.

(1×) Food, sustenance, provisions that satisfy hunger. Stephen narrates in Acts 7:11: 'Now there came a famine throughout all Egypt and Canaan, and great affliction, and our fathers could find no food (chortasmata).' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'alimento,' French 'rassasier,' English 'food'—all indicate provisions. The famine forced Jacob's family to seek grain in Egypt, setting up Joseph's revelation to his brothers and Israel's eventual settlement in Goshen. The term emphasizes basic necessities for survival during severe shortage. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: food | es: alimento | fr: rassasier | de: χορτάσματα Acts 7:11

χόρτος G5528 N-GMS (15×)

Grass, green herbage, or vegetation; also hay or dried grass as a building metaphor

The common word for grass and green growing things, appearing in Jesus' teaching about God's care for creation — if God so clothes the grass of the field, which is alive today and tomorrow is thrown into the oven, how much more will he clothe you (Matt 6:30; Luke 12:28). It also marks the green carpet on which the five thousand sat (Mark 6:39). In one distinctive usage, Paul lists 'hay' among perishable building materials that will not survive testing by fire (1 Cor 3:12). Spanish distinguishes 'hierba' (living grass) from 'heno' (dried hay), neatly confirming this semantic split.

1. grass, green vegetation (14×) Living green vegetation — grass, herbage, sprouting stalks growing from the earth. Used for the grass of the field that God adorns (Matt 6:30; Luke 12:28), the green grass where the multitudes reclined (Matt 14:19; Mark 6:39), the blade that sprouts before the ear of grain (Mark 4:28), and the withering grass as a metaphor for human frailty (James

1:10-11; 1 Pet 1:24). Spanish 'hierba,' French 'herbe,' and German 'Gras' consistently denote living, growing vegetation. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: grass, of-grass, stalk | es: de-hierba, hierba | fr: herbe | de: Gras, χόρτον, χόρτος Matt 6:30; Matt 13:26; Matt 14:19; Mark 4:28; Mark 6:39

2. hay, dried grass (1×) Dried grass or hay — vegetation that has been cut or withered, used metaphorically as a perishable building material. In 1 Corinthians 3:12, Paul warns that building on Christ's foundation with hay (alongside wood and straw) will result in loss when tested by fire. Spanish shifts to 'heno' (hay) here, clearly distinguishing this dried, combustible sense from the living 'hierba' of the other occurrences. The emphasis falls on fragility and impermanence. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: hay | es: heno | fr: herbe | de: Gras 1Cor 3:12

Χουζᾶς G5529 N-GMS (1×)

Chuza, a personal name (Herod's steward, husband of Joanna)

Chuza (or Chouzas) was the steward or household manager of Herod Antipas, the tetrarch of Galilee who ruled during Jesus's ministry. Luke mentions him as the husband of Joanna, one of the women who supported Jesus's ministry from their own means and who was among those who discovered the empty tomb. That the wife of Herod's steward became a follower of Jesus and financial supporter of his movement is remarkable, suggesting that the gospel reached even into Herod's household and that Chuza either supported or at least tolerated his wife's allegiance to the Galilean prophet whom Herod himself had mixed feelings about.

(1×) Chuza, a personal name; the steward of Herod Antipas and husband of Joanna. Luke 8:3 lists the women supporting Jesus: 'Joanna, the wife of Chuza (Chouza), Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, who provided for them out of their means.' The multilingual glosses preserve the name—Spanish 'Cuzá,' French 'Chuza.' Chuza's position as Herod's household manager makes his wife's discipleship striking: the gospel penetrated the household of the ruler who had beheaded John the Baptist and would later mock Jesus at his trial. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: of-Chouzas | es: de-Chouzâ | fr: Chuza | de: Χουζᾶ Luke 8:3

χράω G5530 V-PPM/P-NMP (11×)

To use, make use of, employ; also to treat or deal with someone in a particular manner

A versatile middle-voice verb covering the practical employment of things and the manner of treating persons. Paul uses it repeatedly when discussing apostolic rights—asking whether he has 'made use of' his authority (1 Cor 9:12, 15) or urging believers to 'use' the world without being absorbed by it (1 Cor 9:18; 1 Cor 7:31). In Acts 27:17 sailors 'use' supporting cables to undergird the ship. A subtler interpersonal sense emerges in Acts 27:3, where Julius the centurion 'treated' Paul kindly. Spanish distinguishes 'usar' for instrumental use from 'tratar' for personal treatment, while French unifies both under 'utiliser.'

1. use, make use of (10×) To use, make use of, or employ something for a practical purpose. Paul frequently deploys this sense when discussing apostolic rights and freedoms: he chose not to 'make use of' his right to material support (1 Cor 9:12, 15, 18) and counsels believers to 'use' the world as though not engrossed by it (1 Cor 7:31). Sailors 'use' cables to brace a storm-tossed ship (Acts 27:17). The slave who can gain freedom is told to 'make use of' the opportunity (1 Cor 7:21). Spanish 'usar,' German 'gebrauchen,' and French 'utiliser' all reflect this straightforward instrumental sense. POSSESSING AND HAVING en: I-might-use, did-I-use, did-we-use | es: he-usado, usa, usaban | fr: utiliser, χρῆται, χρῶ | de: gebrauchen, ἐχρῶντο Acts 27:17; 1Cor 7:21; 1Cor 7:31; 1Cor 9:12; 1Cor 9:15

2. treat, deal with (1×) To treat or deal with a person in a particular way. In Acts 27:3 the centurion Julius 'treated' Paul with kindness, allowing him to visit friends at Sidon. This interpersonal extension focuses not on employing a thing but on the manner of handling a relationship. Spanish 'tratando' captures this nuance precisely, distinguishing it from the instrumental 'usar' of the primary sense. DOING AND MAKING en: having-treated | es: tratando | fr: utiliser | de: χρησάμενος Acts 27:3

χράω G5531 V-AMA-2S (1×)

to lend, grant temporary use of something (second aorist middle imperative)

In its New Testament usage, this verb means to lend or grant someone temporary use of something they need. The lexicon's epic citations show older meanings like 'fall upon,' 'attack,' or 'conceive a desire,' but Luke 11:5 employs the term in its more developed sense of lending. The parable context—a friend asking to borrow bread at midnight—illustrates the principle of persistent prayer through the analogy of neighborly obligation. Though the verb could carry forceful connotations in Homer, here it simply describes the act of lending out resources to meet another's urgent need.

(1×) Luke 11:5 uses this aorist imperative in Jesus' parable about a friend requesting bread at midnight: 'lend me three loaves.' The multilingual glosses ('lend,' 'préstame,' 'prêter') converge on this lending/borrowing semantic, reflecting the common commercial and social practice of temporary resource transfer. While LSJ documents older meanings involving attack or desire, the New Testament occurrence clearly reflects the verb's economic sense of granting temporary use, which fits naturally within the parable's lesson about persistent asking and generous giving. GIVING AND BESTOWING en: lend | es: préstame | fr: prêter | de: χρῆσόν Luke 11:5

χρεία G5532 N-AFS (49×)

need, necessity, lack — a state of requiring what is absent, or the service/task that must be done

Chreia denotes the condition of needing something — whether spiritual, physical, or practical — and by extension the thing needed or the service rendered. Jesus declares that 'those who are well have no need of a physician' (Matt 9:12), the Father 'knows what you need before you ask' (Matt 6:8), and the early church distributed 'as any had need' (Acts 2:45; 4:35). Paul expands the word into the theology of mutual dependence within the body of Christ: 'the eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of you' (1 Cor 12:21). Occasionally chreia shades toward 'task' or 'service' — the Lord 'has need of' the colt (Matt 21:3). Spanish 'necesidad,' French 'besoin,' and German 'Bedarf' all capture this core sense of lack pressing toward fulfillment.

need, necessity, lack (49×) A state of requiring something that is lacking, the thing required, or the service to be rendered. Spans Jesus' pronouncement that the healthy need no physician (Matt 9:12), the divine foreknowledge of human needs (Matt 6:8 'your Father knows what you need'), the early community's radical sharing (Acts 2:45 'as any had need'), and Paul's ecclesiology of mutual dependence (1 Cor 12:21). In a few passages the sense tilts toward 'business' or 'errand' (Acts 6:3 'this task'). All 49 occurrences orbit this unified semantic of necessity-and-supply. NECESSITY AND NEED en: need | es: necesidad | fr: besoin | de: Bedarf Matt 3:14; Matt 6:8; Matt 9:12; Matt 14:16; Matt 21:3

χρεωφειλ-έτης G5533 N-NMP (2×)

debtor, one who owes money or goods

χρεωφειλέτης (from χρέος 'debt' + ὀφείλω 'owe') denotes someone who owes a debt, a debtor. Jesus uses it twice in parables about forgiveness. In Luke 7:41, he tells Simon the Pharisee: 'A certain moneylender had two debtors (χρεωφειλέται). One owed five hundred denarii, and the other fifty'—setting up a story about differing magnitudes of debt and forgiveness. In Luke 16:5, the unjust steward calls his master's debtors (χρεοφειλετῶν) and reduces their bills, trying to secure future favors. Both contexts use financial debt to illustrate spiritual or relational realities.

(2×) Both uses appear in Jesus' parables employing financial debt as metaphor. Luke 7:41 uses χρεωφειλέται in a story about forgiveness —the one forgiven more loves more. Luke 16:5 uses it in a story about shrewd use of resources. The French débiteur and Spanish deudores straightforwardly mean 'debtors.' Jesus regularly uses debt imagery to teach about sin, forgiveness, and accountability—we are all debtors before God, differing only in the magnitude of what we owe and have been forgiven. INTEREST USURY

en: debtors | es: deudores | fr: débiteur | de: χρεοφειλέται, χρεοφειλετῶν Luke 7:41; Luke 16:5

χρή G5534 V-PIA-3S (1×)

it is necessary, one ought, it is proper or fitting

Chrē is an impersonal verb meaning 'it is necessary' or 'one ought,' expressing moral or practical necessity. James uses it when addressing the inconsistency of blessing God while cursing people: 'From the same mouth come blessing and cursing. My brothers, these things ought not to be so.' The impersonal verb conveys moral necessity—what must or must not be the case. Just as a spring cannot produce both fresh and salt water, a redeemed tongue should not produce both praise and curse. The necessity James expresses is rooted in the nature of Christian transformation and the incompatibility of blessing God while cursing his image-bearers.

(1×) It is necessary, it ought (not), expressing moral or practical necessity. James 3:10 rebukes verbal inconsistency: 'From the same mouth come blessing and cursing. My brothers, these things ought not to be so (ou chrē).' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'conviene,' German 'es ist nötig,' English 'ought'—all express necessity. James's point is that verbal contradiction reveals unredeemed character: blessing God while cursing people is morally impossible for those truly transformed by grace. The spring metaphor (3:11) reinforces the necessary consistency. NECESSITY AND OBLIGATION en: ought | es: conviene | fr: χρή | de: es-ist-noetig Jas 3:10

χρήζω G5535 V-PIA-1P (5×)

to need, have need of, require — expressing want or necessity

Chrezo expresses the state of needing or requiring something, built on the impersonal chre ('it is necessary'). In Jesus' teaching, it appears in his reassurance that the Father already knows what his followers need before they ask (Matt 6:32; Luke 12:30), removing anxiety from the equation of provision. Luke uses it of a persistent neighbor who has need at midnight (Luke 11:8). Paul employs it when commending Phoebe, asking the Roman church to assist her in whatever matter she may need (Rom 16:2), and rhetorically asking whether he needs letters of recommendation (2 Cor 3:1). The Spanish 'necesitar' and French 'avoir besoin' closely mirror this sense of genuine requirement.

(5×) To have need of, to require — denoting a genuine lack or necessity that calls for supply or assistance. Jesus uses it to assure disciples that their heavenly Father knows their material needs (Matt 6:32; Luke 12:30). It also describes a neighbor's midnight need (Luke 11:8), Phoebe's need for practical help from the Roman congregation (Rom 16:2), and Paul's rhetorical question about needing commendatory letters (2 Cor 3:1). All 5 occurrences express straightforward necessity, confirmed by uniform translations: Spanish 'necesitar,' French 'avoir besoin,' German 'beduerfen.' NECESSITY AND NEED en: do-we-need, he-needs, she-may-need | es: necesita, necesitamos, necesite | fr: avoir-besoin | de: beduerfen, χρῄζει, χρῄζετε Matt 6:32; Luke 11:8; Luke 12:30; Rom 16:2; 2Cor 3:1

χρῆμα G5536 N-GNP (7×)

Money, wealth, riches — goods measured in monetary value, from property and possessions to currency itself.

Chrēma derives from chraomai ('to use, to need') and originally meant 'a thing one needs.' In the New Testament, its plural chrēmata consistently denotes money or wealth. The word appears in two distinct but related settings: concrete financial transactions and teaching about wealth's spiritual danger. In Acts, it describes actual money — the proceeds of Barnabas's sold field (4:37) and Simon Magus's attempt to purchase the Holy Spirit (8:18-20). In the Synoptic Gospels, Jesus uses it in his sobering declaration about how hard it is for those who have riches to enter the kingdom of God (Mark 10:23-24; Luke 18:24).

1. (4×) Money as a concrete medium of exchange in specific transactions. In Acts 4:37, Barnabas lays chrēmata at the apostles' feet after selling a field; in Acts 8:18-20, Simon offers money for spiritual power and is sharply rebuked. Spanish 'dinero' and French 'bien' reflect this transactional, tangible sense. Felix in Acts 24:26 hoped Paul would offer him a bribe — chrēmata functioning as the currency of corruption. SILVER AND MONEY

en: money | es: dinero | fr: bien | de: χρήματα, χρημάτων, χρῆμα Acts 4:37; Acts 8:18; Acts 8:20; Acts 24:26

2. (3×) Riches or wealth as a general condition, often in moral or spiritual discourse. Jesus warns in Mark 10:23-24 and Luke 18:24 that those possessing chrēmata face particular difficulty entering God's kingdom. Spanish 'riquezas' and French 'argent' capture the broader sense of accumulated wealth rather than a single sum. The shift from concrete money to abstract 'riches' mirrors the passage from narrative (Acts) to didactic teaching (Synoptics). MIXED MULTITUDE en: riches | es: riquezas | fr: argent | de: Geld, χρήματα Mark 10:23; Mark 10:24; Luke 18:24

χρημᾰτ-ίζω G5537 V-RPM/P-NNS (9×)

To warn or instruct by divine revelation; also, to be publicly called or designated by a name or title.

A remarkably versatile verb whose two New Testament senses seem worlds apart—yet both originate in official, authoritative communication. In its primary biblical usage, God 'divinely warns' or 'reveals' something to a person: the Magi are warned in a dream not to return to Herod (Matt 2:12), and Moses is instructed when building the tabernacle (Heb 8:5). French 'divinement averti' beautifully captures the supernatural origin of the communication. The second sense, 'to be called' or 'to bear a name,' appears when the disciples are first 'called' Christians at Antioch (Acts 11:26) and when a remarried woman 'will be called' an adulteress (Rom 7:3). The common thread is public, official designation—whether from heaven or from society.

1. to warn or instruct divinely (7×) To receive or deliver a divine communication, oracle, or warning from God. Used of the Magi warned in a dream (Matt 2:12), Joseph instructed to avoid Judea (Matt 2:22), Simeon assured he would see the Messiah (Luke 2:26), Cornelius directed to send for Peter (Acts 10:22), Noah warned about the coming flood (Heb 11:7), and Moses instructed about the tabernacle pattern (Heb 8:5). French 'averti divinement' and Spanish 'advertido divinamente' preserve the supernatural source that distinguishes this from ordinary instruction. CALLING AND NAMING en: having-been-revealed, having-been-warned, warning | es: fue-advertido, fue-instruido, habiendo-sido-advertido | fr: averti-divinement, avertir-divinement, divinement-averti | de: goettlich-anweisen, κεχρηματισμένον, χρηματισθέντες Matt 2:12; Matt 2:22; Luke 2:26; Acts 10:22; Heb 8:5

2. to be called, bear a name (2×) To be publicly called, designated, or known by a name or title. In Acts 11:26 the disciples were first 'called' (chrēmatisai) Christians at Antioch—an official, public designation. In Rom 7:3 a woman will 'be called' (chrēmatisei) an adulteress if she lives with another man while her husband lives. Spanish 'ser llamado' and French 'être appelé' capture the public-designation nuance. The underlying idea of authoritative pronouncement links this to the divine-warning sense: in both cases, a binding label or instruction is formally issued. CALLING AND NAMING en: she-will-be-called, to-be-called | es: fueron-llamados, será-llamada | fr: avertir-divinement | de: goettlich-anweisen, χρηματίσαι Acts 11:26; Rom 7:3

χρημᾰτ-ισμός G5538 N-NMS (1×)

divine oracle, response from God

A rare term appearing only in Romans 11:4, where Paul recalls God's response to Elijah's complaint. The Greek root relates to business transactions and official pronouncements, but here it carries the specialized sense of a divine oracle or authoritative word from God. Paul uses it to introduce God's counter-declaration that 7,000 had not bowed to Baal—heaven's official answer to the prophet's despair. The multilingual evidence (divine-response, respuesta-divina, réponse-divine) consistently captures this sense of authoritative communication from the throne.

(1×) In Romans 11:4, this denotes God's sovereign reply to Elijah—not merely information but an authoritative decree that corrects the prophet's perspective. The context emphasizes divine initiative: God speaks, and reality is redefined. Cross-linguistic renderings emphasize the official, revelatory nature of this communication, distinguishing it from ordinary prophecy. This is heaven's formal response to human petition or complaint. REVELATION MANIFESTATION en: divine-response | es: respuesta-divina | fr: réponse-divine | de: goettliche-Antwort Rom 11:4

χρήσῐμ-ος G5539 Adj-ANS (1×)

useful, profitable, serviceable, beneficial

Chrēsimos means useful, serviceable, or beneficial—that which serves a good purpose. Paul uses it in his instruction to Timothy about foolish controversies: avoid them, he says, 'for they are unprofitable and worthless,' implying by contrast that Timothy should pursue what is useful for building up the church. The word appears only once in the New Testament, but it echoes a practical concern throughout Paul's letters: ministry should be useful, edifying, constructive, not wasted on pointless disputes. The criterion is utility for the gospel and the church's growth.

(1×) Useful, profitable, beneficial for a purpose. Paul warns Timothy in 2 Timothy 2:14 about 'quarreling about words, which does no good but only ruins the hearers,' implying the need for what is useful (chrēsimon). The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'útil,' German 'nützlich,' English 'useful'—all convey serviceability. The term sets a pragmatic standard for ministry: does it build up the church and advance the gospel, or does it merely generate controversy? Paul consistently urges focus on what is constructive and edifying. PROFIT AND BENEFIT

en: useful | es: cosa-útil | fr: χρήσιμον | de: nuetzlich 2Tim 2:14

χρῆσις G5540 N-AFS (2×)

use, usage, function, sexual intercourse

χρῆσις denotes the use or employment of something, what one does with it. It can refer to general usage, but in the New Testament it appears specifically in contexts of sexual conduct. Romans 1:26-27 uses it twice in Paul's description of humanity's rebellion against God. Verse 26 speaks of women exchanging 'natural relations (τὴν φυσικὴν χρῆσιν) for those that are contrary to nature,' and verse 27 describes men likewise abandoning 'natural relations (τὴν φυσικὴν χρῆσιν) with women.' Here χρῆσις refers to sexual use or intercourse, and Paul argues that same-sex relations constitute a departure from God's created design for human sexuality.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in Romans 1:26-27, where Paul describes the sexual dimension of humanity's exchange of truth for lies. The 'natural χρῆσις' refers to sexual relations aligned with created design (male-female); departing from this constitutes rebellion against the Creator. The French usage preserves the sense of use or practice. Paul's argument is theological: sexual conduct is not morally neutral but reflects one's relationship with God and recognition (or rejection) of his created order. CUSTOM AND PRACTICE

en: use | es: uso | fr: usage | de: Gebrauch Rom 1:26; Rom 1:27

χρηστεύομαι G5541 V-PIM/P-3S (1×)

to be kind, to show kindness, to act graciously

Chrēsteuomai means to be kind, to show kindness or graciousness in action. Paul uses it in his famous description of love: 'Love is patient and kind; love does not envy or boast; it is not arrogant.' Kindness here is active and relational, not mere sentiment. The verb appears only in this passage in the New Testament, placed immediately after patience as the second defining characteristic of Christian love. Kindness means acting for another's good, showing grace in word and deed, treating others with gentleness and consideration even when not deserved.

(1×) To be kind, to act with kindness or graciousness. Paul's love chapter declares in 1 Corinthians 13:4: 'Love is patient, love is kind (chrēsteuetai); it does not envy, it does not boast, it is not proud.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'es bondadoso,' German 'freundlich sein,' English 'is kind'—all capture active graciousness. This is not passive niceness but active kindness, treating others with grace and consideration. Paul places it second in his list of love's characteristics, right after patience. GRACE AND COMPASSION

en: is-kind | es: es-bondadoso | fr: χρηστεύεται | de: freundlich-sein 1Cor 13:4

χρηστο-λογία G5542 N-GFS (1×)

smooth talk, flattering speech, fine-sounding words used to deceive

Chrēstologia combines 'useful/pleasant' (chrēstos) with 'word' (logos) to mean smooth or flattering speech, fine-sounding words that deceive. Paul warns the Romans to 'watch out for those who cause divisions and create obstacles contrary to the doctrine you have been taught; avoid them. For such persons do not serve our Lord Christ, but their own appetites, and by smooth talk and flattery they deceive the hearts of the naive.' The compound term captures the dangerous attractiveness of false teaching: it sounds good, seems reasonable, appeals to the ear, but leads astray from truth. Pleasant words can mask poisonous doctrine.

(1×) Smooth or flattering speech, fine-sounding words used to deceive. Paul warns in Romans 16:18 about false teachers: 'by smooth talk (chrēstologias) and flattery they deceive the hearts of the naive.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'palabras suaves,' French 'belles paroles,' German 'Schönrednerei,' English 'smooth talk'—all capture deceptive pleasantness. The term indicates speech that sounds good but misleads, appealing rhetoric that masks false doctrine. Paul urges vigilance against those who use verbal charm to draw people away from apostolic teaching. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: smooth-talk | es: palabras-suaves | fr: belles-paroles | de: Schoenrednerei Rom 16:18

χρηστός G5543 Adj-NMS (7×)

Kind, benevolent, gracious; good, pleasant, wholesome in quality; easy or well-fitting (of a yoke).

An adjective whose warmth pervades its every use, chrestos describes the character of a God who is kind to the ungrateful (Luke 6:35), the goodness that should lead to repentance (Rom 2:4), and the mutual kindness believers owe one another (Eph 4:32). Applied to wine, it means 'good' — well-aged and pleasant to drink (Luke 5:39). Its most famous appearance is in Jesus's invitation: 'My yoke is chrestos' (Matt 11:30) — not harsh but well-fitting, comfortable, custom-shaped for the bearer. Spanish distinguishes 'bondadoso' (kindly) from 'bueno' (good) from 'fácil' (easy), mapping the three senses precisely.

1. kind, benevolent, gracious (3×) Kind, benevolent, gracious — describing God's character or the disposition believers should cultivate. God is chrestos toward the ungrateful and evil (Luke 6:35); his kindness (chrestotes, the related noun) leads to repentance (Rom 2:4); and believers are to be chrestoi toward one another (Eph 4:32). Spanish 'bondadoso' and French 'bienveillant' both foreground the active goodwill rather than mere niceness. MORAL GOODNESS

en: kind, kindness | es: benévolos, bondadoso | fr: bienveillant, bon | de: guetig, χρηστός Luke 6:35; Rom 2:4; Eph 4:32

2. good, pleasant, wholesome (3×) Good, pleasant, wholesome — describing quality or character that is sound and desirable. Old wine is 'good' (Luke 5:39), bad company corrupts 'good' morals (1 Cor 15:33), and believers have 'tasted that the Lord is good' (1 Pet 2:3, quoting Ps 34:8). Spanish 'bueno' and French 'bon' render this straightforwardly. The range from wine to ethics shows chrestos evaluating intrinsic quality, not just moral virtue. MORAL GOODNESS

en: good | es: buenas, bueno | fr: bienveillant, bon | de: guetig, χρηστός Luke 5:39; 1Cor 15:33; 1Pet 2:3

3. easy, comfortable (1×) Easy, comfortable, well-fitting — describing a yoke or burden that does not chafe. Used only in Matt 11:30, where Jesus says 'my yoke is chrestos.' The original sense of the word — 'serviceable, useful, well-made' — comes through here: a yoke crafted by a skilled carpenter fits the animal perfectly. Spanish 'fácil' captures the experiential lightness, while German and French translations stay closer to the 'good/kind' gloss, underplaying the ergonomic metaphor. MORAL GOODNESS en: easy | es: fácil | fr: bon | de: χρηστὸς Matt 11:30

χρηστότης G5544 N-NFS (10×)

Kindness, goodness, generosity — moral excellence expressed as benevolent, gracious dealing toward others

The noun χρηστότης (chrestotes) denotes kindness, goodness, or generosity — a quality that is simultaneously moral virtue and active beneficence. Paul uses it as a divine attribute: God's kindness leads to repentance (Rom 2:4), his kindness and severity stand in deliberate tension (Rom 11:22), and his surpassing kindness toward us in Christ Jesus is displayed for all ages (Eph 2:7; Tit 3:4). It also appears as a fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22) and a mark of authentic apostolic ministry (2 Cor 6:6). The word's background in Hellenistic moral philosophy — where chrestotes described the ideal ruler's benevolence — enriches Paul's portrait of God. Spanish 'bondad/benignidad' and French 'bonté' capture both the moral and relational dimensions.

kindness (10×) Kindness, goodness, or generous benevolence, used predominantly of God's character and secondarily as a Christian virtue. As a divine attribute it leads sinners to repentance (Rom 2:4), stands in tension with divine severity (Rom 11:22), and is displayed eschatologically in Christ (Eph 2:7; Tit 3:4). As a human virtue it appears among the fruits of the Spirit (Gal 5:22), in Paul's apostolic self-description (2 Cor 6:6), and in ethical exhortation (Col 3:12). Spanish 'bondad/benignidad,' French 'bonté,' and German 'Güte/Freundlichkeit' all reflect its blend of moral excellence and active generosity. MORAL GOODNESS en: kindness | es: benignidad, bondad | fr: bonté | de: Guete Rom 2:4; Rom 3:12; Rom 11:22

χρῖσμα G5545 N-ANS (3×)

anointing, unction; spiritual grace or empowerment through the Holy Spirit

This noun refers to an anointing or unction, but in the New Testament it carries exclusively spiritual meaning. In 1 John 2:20, 27 (three occurrences), the 'anointing' is the gift of the Holy Spirit that teaches believers and enables them to discern truth from error. John writes, 'You have an anointing from the Holy One,' and 'the anointing which you have received from Him abides in you.' This spiritual anointing parallels Old Testament practices where priests and kings were physically anointed with oil, but now signifies the indwelling presence and teaching ministry of the Spirit for all believers.

(3×) The translations reflect the term's specialized spiritual sense: English 'anointing,' Spanish 'unción,' French preserves the Greek 'χρῖσμα,' German 'Salbung' (anointing). All three occurrences appear in 1 John 2, where the anointing represents the Holy Spirit's indwelling presence that teaches believers all things and guards them from deception by antichrists. This 'anointing from the Holy One' (v. 20) enables believers to know the truth and detect false teaching, fulfilling Jesus' promise of the Spirit as teacher and guide. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: an-anointing, anointing | es: unción | fr: χρῖσμα | de: Salbung 1John 2:20; 1John 2:27

χριστιᾱνός G5546 N-NMS (3×)

Christian; a follower of Christ, one belonging to the Messiah

This term designates a follower of Jesus Christ. The word itself means 'belonging to Christ' or 'partisan of Christ,' formed with the Latin suffix '-ianus' indicating allegiance or association. Acts 11:26 records that 'the disciples were first called Christians in Antioch,' likely as a designation by outsiders. When Agrippa says to Paul, 'You almost persuade me to become a Christian' (Acts 26:28), he uses the term as others would recognize it. In 1 Peter 4:16, Peter writes that suffering 'as a Christian' is no shame but an opportunity to glorify God. The name identifies believers with their crucified and risen Lord.

(3×) The term translates consistently: English 'Christian,' Spanish 'cristiano/cristianos,' French 'chrétien,' German preserves the Greek 'Χριστιανούς/Χριστιανὸν.' Acts 11:26 marks the first use of the name at Antioch, where Gentile believers formed a distinct community. Acts 26:28 shows it was recognizable even to Roman officials like Agrippa. 1 Peter 4:16 encourages believers not to be ashamed of suffering under this name, but to glorify God—the term had become a badge of identity worth persecution. FOLLOWING AND DISCIPLESHIP en: Christian, Christians, a-Christian | es: Cristianos, cristiano | fr: chrétien, Χριστιανός | de: Christ, Χριστιανούς, Χριστιανὸν Acts 11:26; Acts 26:28; 1Pet 4:16

χριστός G5547 N-GMS (540×)

Christ, Messiah — the Anointed One, used as title and proper name for Jesus of Nazareth

Christos ('anointed one') translates the Hebrew mashiach and appears 540 times in the New Testament, functioning both as a messianic title and as a virtual proper name. In its titular use ('the Christ,' Matt 16:16), it carries the full weight of Old Testament anointing theology — the consecration of kings, priests, and prophets. In its name-like usage ('Jesus Christ,' 'Christ Jesus'), particularly dominant in Paul's letters, it has become so fused with the personal name that the anointing theology recedes into the background. The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'Christos,' French 'Christ,' German 'Christus' — shows remarkable consistency as a loanword rather than a translated concept.

Christ, Messiah, Anointed One (540×) The substantivized Greek adjective meaning 'anointed,' serving in the NT both as the messianic title ('the Christ,' Matt 2:4) and as a proper name tightly bound to Jesus ('Jesus Christ,' Rom 1:1). Translates Hebrew mashiach and carries connotations of royal and priestly consecration. All 540 occurrences point to a single referent — Jesus of Nazareth — whether in confessional formulas (Matt 16:16), kerygmatic proclamation (Acts 2:36), or epistolary salutation (Phil 1:1). ANOINTING AND SMEARING en: Christ, Christos | es: Christé, Christós | fr: Christ | de: Christus Matt 1:16; Matt 1:18; Matt 2:4; Matt 11:2; Matt 16:16

χρίω G5548 V-AIA-2S (5×)

to anoint — to consecrate or commission by applying oil, signifying divine appointment

Chrio is the verb from which Christos ('the Anointed One') derives, and every New Testament occurrence carries a strong theological charge. It appears 5 times, each referring to God's act of anointing: Jesus reads Isaiah's declaration 'the Spirit of the Lord has anointed me' in the Nazareth synagogue (Luke 4:18); the early church confesses that God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Spirit (Acts 4:27; 10:38); Paul speaks of God anointing believers into Christ (2 Cor 1:21); and Hebrews cites Psalm 45, 'God has anointed you with the oil of gladness' (Heb 1:9). Spanish 'ungir' and German 'salben' both preserve the concrete image of oil applied to a person set apart.

(5×) To anoint as an act of divine consecration and commissioning, always with God as the implied or explicit agent. Describes the Spirit's anointing of Jesus for his prophetic mission (Luke 4:18), God's designation of Jesus as the Holy Servant-Messiah (Acts 4:27; 10:38), God's anointing of believers who are established in Christ (2 Cor 1:21), and the exaltation-anointing of the Son with the oil of gladness above his companions (Heb 1:9). All 5 NT uses carry a Christological or pneumatological weight, as confirmed by the Spanish 'ungir,' French 'oindre,' and German 'salben.' ANOINTING

AND SMEARING

en: anointed, having-anointed, he-anointed | es: que-ungió, ungiste, ungió | fr: oindre, salben | de: salben, ἔχρισέν, ἔχρισας Luke 4:18; Acts 4:27; Acts 10:38; 2Cor 1:21; Heb 1:9

χρον-ίζω G5549 V-PPA-GMS (5×)

to delay, tarry, take a long time — to be slow in coming or to linger beyond expectation

Chronizo means to take time, to delay, or to tarry, derived from chronos ('time'). In the New Testament it appears exclusively in contexts of anticipated arrival — and the anxiety or complacency that waiting produces. The wicked servant says 'my master is delaying' and begins to abuse his fellow servants (Matt 24:48; Luke 12:45). The foolish virgins slumber because the bridegroom 'tarried' (Matt 25:5). The people wonder at Zechariah's delay in the temple (Luke 1:21). And Hebrews quotes Habakkuk: 'the coming one will come and will not delay' (Heb 10:37). Spanish 'tardar' and French 'tarder' share the same Latin root (tardare), neatly capturing the word's eschatological tension.

(5×) To take a long time, delay, or tarry beyond what is expected — always in contexts of waiting for someone's arrival. Used of the wicked servant's presumption that his master delays (Matt 24:48; Luke 12:45), the bridegroom who tarries while the virgins sleep (Matt 25:5), the crowd wondering at Zechariah's lingering in the temple (Luke 1:21), and the prophetic assurance that 'the one who is coming will not delay' (Heb 10:37). All 5 uses create eschatological or narrative suspense, confirmed uniformly by Spanish 'tardar,' French 'tarder,' and German 'saeumen.' DELAY AND TARRYING

en: Delays, delaying, delays | es: Tarda, tardando, tardar | fr: tarder | de: saeumen, Χρονίζει, χρονίζειν Matt 24:48; Matt 25:5; Luke 1:21; Luke 12:45; Heb 10:37

χρόνος G5550 N-GMS (54×)

time, period, duration — a measurable span of time, as distinct from a decisive moment (kairos)

Chronos denotes time as a quantifiable stretch or elapsed duration, standing in quiet contrast to kairos, which marks the ripe or decisive moment. Across its 54 New Testament occurrences, it measures waiting periods ('a long time,' Matt 25:19), elapsed spans ('how long has this been happening to him?,' Mark 9:21), and ages of ignorance now ended (Acts 17:30). Herod's interrogation of the Magi about the exact chronos of the star's appearing (Matt 2:7, 16) shows the word's affinity for datable, calculable intervals. The translations are strikingly uniform: Spanish 'tiempo,' French 'temps,' German 'Zeit' — all rendering the neutral, measurable sense of time.

time, period, duration (54×) Time conceived as a measurable extent, duration, or period — the stretch of time that can be long or short, counted or estimated, elapsed or anticipated. Covers temporal spans in narrative ('after a long time,' Matt 25:19), inquiries about duration (Mark 9:21), and theological periodization ('the times of ignorance,' Acts 17:30). Distinguished from kairos by its emphasis on quantity rather than quality, on the clock rather than the moment. All 54 occurrences share this single durational sense. TIME AND SEASONS

en: a-time, for-time, time | es: tiempo | fr: temps | de: Zeit Matt 2:7; Matt 2:16; Matt 25:19; Mark 2:19; Mark 9:21

χρονοτρῑβέω G5551 V-ANA (1×)

to spend time, to delay, to linger, to waste time

Chronotribeō means to spend time, to delay, or to linger, sometimes with the negative connotation of wasting time. Luke uses it in Acts when describing Paul's decision during his journey to Jerusalem: 'Paul had decided to sail past Ephesus, so that he might not have to spend time in Asia, for he was hastening to be at Jerusalem, if possible, on the day of Pentecost.' The verb captures Paul's sense of urgency and strategic time management: stopping in Ephesus would involve time-consuming visits and discussions that would delay his arrival in Jerusalem for the feast. Time is precious and must be used wisely for kingdom purposes.

(1×) To spend time, to delay, to linger. Acts 20:16 explains Paul's travel decision: 'Paul had decided to sail past Ephesus, so that he would not have to spend time (chronotribēsai) in Asia, for he was hurrying to be in Jerusalem, if possible, on the day of Pentecost.' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'demorarse,' French 'endurer,' English 'to spend time'—all indicate time consumption. Paul's urgency to reach Jerusalem for Pentecost drove his decision to bypass Ephesus, avoiding the delays that pastoral visits would entail. DELAY AND TARRYING

en: to-spend-time | es: demorarse | fr: endurer | de: χρονοτριβῆσαι Acts 20:16

χρύσεος G5552 Adj-NFS (18×)

golden, made of gold — an adjective describing objects fashioned from or overlaid with gold

Chryseos (contracted chrysous) is the adjective meaning 'golden' or 'made of gold,' derived from chrysos ('gold'). Its 18 New Testament occurrences cluster overwhelmingly in two contexts: the description of tabernacle furnishings in Hebrews and the visionary imagery of Revelation. In Hebrews 9:4, the author catalogs the golden altar of incense and the ark of the covenant overlaid with gold, containing the golden pot of manna — three uses in a single verse evoking the splendor of Israel's most sacred space. Revelation deploys the adjective lavishly for the heavenly temple and its contents: golden lampstands (Rev 1:12, 20; 2:1), a golden sash on the Son of Man (Rev 1:13), golden crowns on the elders (Rev 4:4), golden bowls full of incense (Rev 5:8; 15:7), a golden altar before the throne (Rev 8:3), golden censers (Rev 8:3), and a golden measuring rod (Rev 21:15). The consistent luxury register — Spanish 'de oro,' French 'd'or,' German 'golden/gulden' — points to objects of ultimate sacred value and divine majesty.

(18×) Describing objects made of or overlaid with gold, used almost exclusively for sacred furnishings and heavenly visionary imagery. Hebrews 9:4 employs it three times for the tabernacle's golden altar, golden ark, and golden pot of manna. Revelation uses chryseos extensively for celestial worship objects: golden lampstands (Rev 1:12, 20; 2:1), the Son of Man's golden sash (Rev 1:13), golden crowns of the twenty-four elders (Rev 4:4), golden bowls of incense (Rev 5:8; 15:7), the golden altar before God's throne (Rev 8:3), and a golden measuring rod for the New Jerusalem (Rev 21:15). In 2 Timothy 2:20, Paul contrasts gold and silver vessels with wooden and earthen ones in a household metaphor for honorable and dishonorable service. The adjective uniformly evokes sacred magnificence and divine purity. GOLD (PRECIOUS METAL) en: gold, golden | es: de-oro, de-oro, | fr: golden | de: golden 2Tim 2:20; Heb 9:4; Rev 1:12; Rev 1:13

χρῡσίον G5553 N-NNS (12×)

chrysion – gold; the precious metal, whether raw, refined, or fashioned into objects

The neuter noun chrysion ('gold') is a diminutive of chrysos but functions without diminutive force in Koine Greek, denoting gold in all its forms – raw metal, refined substance, coins, and crafted objects. Peter declares to the lame man, 'Silver or gold I do not have' (Acts 3:6), using chrysion for material wealth. Peter later compares faith tested by fire to gold that perishes despite being refined (1 Pet 1:7). Revelation employs it for golden crowns, bowls, and the adornment of Babylon (Rev 17:4; 18:16). The word also appears in exhortations about modest adornment (1 Pet 3:3) and the relative value of spiritual over material treasure. Spanish oro, French or, German Gold, and Arabic dhahab all converge on one undifferentiated sense.

gold (the precious metal) (12×) The precious metal gold in any form – raw, refined, coined, or fashioned into objects. Peter contrasts it with faith (1 Pet 1:7), declares his lack of it (Acts 3:6), and counsels against vain adornment with it (1 Pet 3:3). Revelation uses it for the trappings of Babylon (Rev 17:4; 18:16). Spanish oro, French or, and German Gold confirm a single semantic concept. GOLD (PRECIOUS METAL)

en: gold, of-gold, with-gold | es: con-oro, de-oros, oro | fr: or | de: Gold Acts 3:6; Acts 20:33; 1Tim 2:9; Heb 9:4; 1Pet 1:7

χρῡσο-δακτύλιος G5554 Adj-NMS (1×)

wearing a gold ring, adorned with gold finger ring

Chrysodaktylios is a compound adjective meaning 'gold-ringed' or 'wearing a gold ring,' combining 'gold' (chrysos) with 'finger' (daktylos). James uses it to illustrate the sin of showing partiality in the church: 'if a man wearing a gold ring and fine clothing comes into your assembly, and a poor man in shabby clothing also comes in, and if you pay attention to the one who wears the fine clothing..., have you not then made distinctions among yourselves?' The gold ring marked wealth and status in the Greco-Roman world, and James condemns any favoritism based on such external markers. God's assembly should be radically egalitarian, judging by faith rather than by social status symbols.

(1×) Wearing a gold ring, gold-ringed. James 2:2 illustrates partiality: 'if a man wearing a gold ring (chrysodaktylios) and fine clothing comes into your assembly, and a poor man in shabby clothing also comes in, and you show favoritism to the one wearing fine clothes...' The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'con anillo de oro,' German 'mit goldenem Ring,' English 'gold-ringed'—all identify the wealth marker. The gold ring signaled social status and prosperity in the ancient world. James condemns showing deference based on such external symbols rather than treating all equally in Christ. GOLD (PRECIOUS METAL)

en: gold-ringed | es: con-anillo-de-oro | fr: χρυσοδακτύλιος | de: mit-goldenem-Ring Jas 2:2

χρυσό-λῐθος G5555 N-NMS (1×)

chrysolite, a golden-yellow precious stone (possibly modern topaz)

Chrysolithos means 'gold stone,' a golden-yellow precious stone, possibly what we call topaz today (though ancient gemstone identifications are sometimes uncertain). John lists it as the seventh foundation stone in his vision of the New Jerusalem's foundations. Each of the twelve foundation stones contributes a different color and luster to the city's beauty, together displaying the radiant glory of God's eternal dwelling. The golden hue of chrysolite adds warmth to the spectrum of jewels adorning the city's foundations, all reflecting the light of God's glory.

(1×) Chrysolite, a golden-yellow precious stone. Revelation 21:20 describes the New Jerusalem's foundations: 'the fifth onyx, the sixth carnelian, the seventh chrysolite (chrysolithos), the eighth beryl.' The multilingual glosses preserve the technical gemstone name—Spanish 'crisólito,' German 'Chrysolith,' English 'chrysolite.' This is the seventh of twelve foundation stones, each a different precious material. The golden color of chrysolite contributes to the city's radiant beauty, all reflecting the glory of God who dwells there with his people in the new creation. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: chrysolite | es: crisólito; | fr: Chrysolith | de: Chrysolith Rev 21:20

χρῡσό-πρᾰσος G5556 N-NMS (1×)

chrysoprase, a golden-green precious stone (variety of chalcedony)

Chrysoprasos combines 'gold' (chrysos) with 'leek' (prason), describing a golden-green precious stone, a variety of chalcedony with an apple-green color touched with golden tones. John lists it as the tenth foundation stone in the New Jerusalem's foundations. Like the other foundation stones, chrysoprase contributes its unique color to the city's brilliance, the varied hues together creating a spectrum of divine beauty. The combination of golden and green tones symbolizes both the preciousness of gold and the life-giving quality of green vegetation, though the primary emphasis is on the stone's contribution to the city's glorious appearance.

(1×) Chrysoprase, a golden-green precious stone. In Revelation 21:20 John describes the foundation stones: 'the ninth topaz, the tenth chrysoprase (chrysoprasos), the eleventh jacinth, the twelfth amethyst.' The multilingual glosses preserve the gemstone name—Spanish 'crisoprasa,' German 'Chrysopras,' English 'chrysoprase.' This is the tenth of twelve foundation stones. The golden-green color adds to the spectrum of hues adorning the New Jerusalem's foundations, all reflecting God's glory and the eternal beauty of his dwelling with redeemed humanity in the new creation. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: chrysoprase | es: crisoprasa; | fr: Chrysopras | de: Chrysopras Rev 21:20

χρῡσός G5557 N-AMS (10×)

Gold — the precious metal, whether as material substance, currency, or symbol of supreme value

The noun χρυσός (chrysos) refers to gold as a precious metal in its various ancient uses: as a material for sacred objects, as a medium of exchange, and as a measure of ultimate value. The Magi bring gold to the infant Jesus (Matt 2:11), ranking it first among their gifts. Jesus forbids the Twelve from carrying gold on their mission (Matt 10:9). The Pharisees' oath-casuistry about gold on the temple altar is exposed as absurd (Matt 23:16-17). Peter declares that believers were redeemed not with perishable things like gold and silver but with the precious blood of Christ (1 Pet 1:18). Spanish 'oro' and French 'or' are exact equivalents across all registers.

gold (10×) Gold as a precious metal, encompassing material gold used in gifts and sacred objects (Matt 2:11, the Magi's offering; Rev 17:4; 18:12, 16, Babylon's adornment), gold as currency or wealth (Matt 10:9, the mission charge; Acts 3:6; 20:33; 1 Pet 1:18), and gold in temple-oath arguments (Matt 23:16-17, gold of the temple versus the temple that sanctifies). James 5:3 warns that hoarded gold will corrode as testimony against the rich. Spanish 'oro,' French 'or,' and German 'Gold' all map directly, reflecting gold's universal cultural currency as the standard of supreme material value. GOLD (PRECIOUS METAL)

en: gold, of-gold, to-gold | es: a-oro, de-oro, oro | fr: or | de: Gold Matt 2:11; Matt 10:9; Matt 23:16; Matt 23:17

χρῡσόω G5558 V-RPM/P-NFS (2×)

to gild, overlay with gold, adorn with gold χρυσόω means to gild or overlay with gold, to adorn something with gold plating or decoration. It appears only in Revelation, both times in John's vision of Babylon the great. Revelation 17:4 describes the woman (Babylon) as 'adorned with gold (κεχρυσωμένη χρυσίῳ) and jewels and pearls'—laden with expensive ornamentation. Revelation 18:16 laments: 'Alas, alas, for the great city that was clothed... adorned with gold (κεχρυσωμένη χρυσίῳ), with jewels, and with pearls!'—the perfect passive participle emphasizing her gilded state. The image is of ostentatious, excessive wealth and decoration—surface splendor masking inner corruption.

(2×) Both uses describe Babylon adorned with gold in Revelation's vision of the great harlot city. The κεχρυσωμένη state suggests being covered, overlaid, gilded with gold—external opulence. The German vergoldet ('gilded') captures the surface-level gold plating. John's vision critiques the seductive power of wealth and luxury—Babylon dazzles with gold and gems, but her golden exterior conceals spiritual adultery and blood-guilt. Gilding suggests surface beauty covering something less precious underneath. GOLD (PRECIOUS METAL)

en: having-been-gilded | es: adornada-con, adornada-de | fr: vergoldet | de: vergoldet Rev 17:4; Rev 18:16

χρώς G5559 N-GMS (1×)

skin, surface of the body

This term refers to the outer surface of the human body—the skin or flesh as a physical covering. In Acts 19:12, handkerchiefs and aprons that had touched Paul's skin were taken to the sick, and diseases left them. The multilingual evidence (English 'skin', Spanish 'cuerpo', French 'peau') confirms this physical, tactile sense of bodily surface contact, emphasizing the concrete, material nature of the healing objects.

(1×) The outer covering of the human body, the skin or surface flesh. Used in Acts 19:12 where Paul's personal items absorb healing power through direct contact with his bodily surface, illustrating early Christian belief in tactile transmission of divine power through physical proximity. SKIN AND LEATHER

en: skin | es: cuerpo | fr: peau | de: χρωτὸς Acts 19:12

χωλός G5560 Adj-NMP (14×)

Lame, crippled — physically disabled in the legs or feet, unable to walk normally Describes a person who is lame or crippled, specifically disabled in the legs or feet so as to be unable to walk normally. In the Gospels, chōlos appears prominently in Jesus' healing ministry: the lame walk alongside the blind seeing and the deaf hearing (Matt 11:5; 15:31), and crowds bring the lame to Jesus at the temple (Matt 21:14). The word also carries stark force in Jesus' warning that it is better to enter life lame than to be cast into Gehenna whole (Matt 18:8; Mark 9:45). In Acts, the healing of the man lame from birth at the Beautiful Gate (Acts 3:2; 14:8) becomes a landmark sign of apostolic authority. Spanish 'cojo,' French 'boiteux,' and German 'lahm' consistently render the same physical disability, confirming a single, stable sense.

lame, crippled (14×) Physically disabled in the feet or legs, unable to walk normally — describing a chronic or congenital condition rather than a temporary injury. Appears in healing catalogs where the lame walking is a sign of messianic fulfillment (Matt 11:5; 15:30-31; 21:14; Luke 7:22), in Jesus' hyperbolic warning about entering life maimed (Matt 18:8; Mark 9:45), and in apostolic healing narratives (Acts 3:2; 14:8). Multilingual renderings converge tightly (eng: lame, spa: cojo/cojos, fra: boiteux, deu: lahm), with no evidence of semantic subdivision across the 14 occurrences. LAME CRIPPLED en: lame | es: a-cojos, cojo, cojos | fr: boiteux, lahm | de: lahm Matt 11:5; Matt 15:30; Matt 15:31; Matt 18:8; Matt 21:14

χώρα G5561 N-AFS (28×)

Region, country, or open land; a space defined by geography, cultivation, or territorial possession

In the New Testament, chora denotes a bounded expanse of land viewed from different angles: as a named region or district (the country of the Gadarenes, the region of Judea), as open farmland awaiting harvest (John 4:35), or as physical territory someone possesses or approaches (Luke 12:16; Acts 27:27). Spanish renders the regional sense as 'pais' or 'region,' while German distinguishes 'Gegend' (area) from 'Land' (country/land), reflecting the same spectrum the Greek holds in a single word.

1. region, country, district (24×) The predominant sense across all four Gospels and Acts: a geographical or administrative district, province, or country. Used for named territories like 'the country of the Gadarenes' (Mark 5:1) and broader regions like 'the region and shadow of death' (Matt 4:16). French 'contree' and Spanish 'region' both capture this bounded-territory nuance. EARTH AND LAND en: a-country, country, region | es: país, región | fr: contrée, région | de: Gegend, Land Matt 2:12; Matt 4:16; Matt 8:28; Mark 1:5; Mark 5:1

2. field, countryside (2×) Open agricultural land or countryside, as in Jesus' exhortation to lift your eyes and look at the fields ripe for harvest (John 4:35) and the laborers' fields whose wages cry out (Jas 5:4). German 'Land' here carries the rural, cultivated sense distinct from the political-territory meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: fields | es: campos | fr: Land, contrée | de: Land John 4:35; Jas 5:4

3. land, ground, territory (2×) Physical land or ground viewed as territory or material possession, as when a rich man's land produced abundantly (Luke 12:16) or sailors sensed they were approaching some land (Acts 27:27). The emphasis falls on the earth itself rather than on jurisdictional boundaries. EARTH AND LAND en: land | es: tierra | fr: contrée, région | de: Gegend Luke 12:16; Acts 27:27

χωρ-έω G5562 V-FNA (10×)

To have room for, contain; to accept or receive (mentally/spiritually); to go, move, proceed.

A versatile Greek verb whose core image is spatial capacity – whether a vessel holds water or a place holds people. From physical containment (John 2:6, the stone jars each 'holding' twenty to thirty gallons), the meaning extends to intellectual and spiritual reception: can your heart make room for a hard teaching? (Matt 19:11-12). Paul appeals with the same metaphor in 2 Corinthians 7:2, 'Make room for us.' A third, older sense of physical movement – to go or proceed – appears when Jesus asks where food 'goes' (Matt 15:17) and when Peter says the Lord is patient, not wanting any to perish but all to 'come' to repentance (2 Pet 3:9). Spanish caber ('to fit') and German fassen ('to hold, grasp') both mirror the containment-to-comprehension arc.

1. have room for, contain (5×) Physical containment or spatial capacity – having room for something or being large enough to hold it. The six stone jars at Cana each 'held' two or three measures (John 2:6); the house could no longer 'contain' the crowd (Mark 2:2); the world itself could not 'contain' all the books (John 21:25). Spanish caber and German fassen both capture this concrete spatial sense. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: has-place, have-room-for, holding | es: caber, cabiendo, contendría | fr: contenir | de: fassen, weicht Matt 19:11; Mark 2:2; John 2:6; John 8:37; John 21:25

2. accept, receive, make room for (3×) Figurative reception – accepting or welcoming a teaching, truth, or person into one's mind or heart. Jesus says 'not everyone can receive this word' about celibacy (Matt 19:11-12), and Paul pleads 'make room for us' (2 Cor 7:2). The shift from physical space to inner willingness is mirrored in French contenir, which spans both containment and composure. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: Make-room-for, let-him-receive, to-receive | es: Haced-lugar, reciba, recibir | fr: contenir | de: fassen, weicht Matt 19:12; 2Cor 7:2

3. go, move, proceed (2×) Movement or progression from one place to another, retaining the verb's oldest classical sense of 'going forward.' Jesus asks where food 'goes' after eating (Matt 15:17), and Peter writes that the Lord is patient, wanting all to 'come' to repentance (2 Pet 3:9). Spanish llegar ('to arrive') and va ('goes') confirm the directional reading. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: goes, to-come | es: llegar, va | fr: contenir, fassen | de: fassen, weicht Matt 15:17; 2Pet 3:9

χωρ-ίζω G5563 V-PMM/P-3S (13×)

To separate, divide; to depart or leave (especially in marriage); to set apart, designate

Drawing on the root chōris ('apart'), this verb covers both the act of putting asunder and the resulting state of being separated. Jesus' solemn declaration 'what God has joined together, let no one separate' (Matt 19:6; Mark 10:9) uses the transitive force, while Paul's instructions about marriage employ the intransitive sense of a spouse 'departing' (1 Cor 7:10–11, 15). In Romans 8:35, 39, Paul triumphantly asks what can 'separate us from the love of Christ'—nothing in all creation. The word takes a distinctive theological turn in Hebrews 7:26, where Christ our high priest is described as 'set apart from sinners.' Spanish distinguishes the active 'separar' from the reflexive 'apartarse,' mirroring the transitive-intransitive split.

1. depart, leave (intransitive) (8×) Intransitive: to depart, withdraw, leave—especially of marital separation. Paul instructs a wife not to 'separate from' her husband (1 Cor 7:10–11, 15), and Acts records departures: Saul leaving Damascus (Acts 1:4), Paul separating from Athens (Acts 18:1), and Aquila leaving Italy (Acts 18:2). Spanish 'apartarse / habiéndose separado' and German 'χωρίζεσθαι' use reflexive or middle forms reflecting the subject's own departure. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING en: having-departed, he-was-separated, let-him-separate | es: apartarse, fue-separado, habiéndose-separado | fr: getrennt, séparé | de: getrennt, χωρίζεσθαι, χωρισθεὶς Acts 1:4; Acts 18:1; Acts 18:2; 1Cor 7:10; 1Cor 7:11

2. separate, divide (transitive) (4×) Transitive: to actively separate, divide, or put asunder. Jesus warns 'what God has joined, let no one separate' (Matt 19:6; Mark 10:9), and Paul asks rhetorically who shall 'separate us from the love of Christ' (Rom 8:35, 39). Spanish 'separar / separará' and French 'séparer' use the plain active voice, marking the external agent who divides. SEPARATING AND

DIVIDING
en: let-separate, to-separate, will-separate | es: separar, separará, separe | fr: séparer, séparé | de: getrennt, χωριζέτω Matt 19:6; Mark 10:9; Rom 8:35; Rom 8:39

3. set apart, designated (1×) Resultative or consecrative: to be set apart, designated for a role. Hebrews 7:26 describes Jesus as a high priest 'set apart from sinners'—not merely distant but consecrated to a holy station. Spanish 'separado' and German 'getrennt' use the past participle, emphasizing the completed state of sacred distinction rather than the act of dividing. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING en: having-been-separated | es: separado | fr: getrennt | de: getrennt Heb 7:26

χωρ-ίον G5564 N-ANS (10×)
A place, piece of land, or estate; ranges from a named locality to a parcel of property that can be bought or sold.
A diminutive of chora ('region, country') that in practice carries no diminutive force, denoting anything from a named geographic spot to a substantial landed estate. In the Passion narratives, Gethsemane and Golgotha are each called a chorion—'a place called Gethsemane' (Matt 26:36; Mark 14:32)—emphasizing the locality itself. In Acts, the same word shifts decisively toward property: Judas's 'Field of Blood' (Acts 1:18–19), Ananias and Sapphira's land (Acts 5:3, 8), and estates sold by early believers (Acts 4:34). Spanish mirrors this split precisely: 'lugar' for the geographic sense versus 'campo/terreno' for the property sense.

1. field, piece of land, estate (8×) A field, piece of land, or estate viewed as property that can be bought, sold, or owned. Dominant in the Acts narratives of the early church: Judas purchases a field with his blood money (Acts 1:18–19), Ananias and Sapphira sell their land and withhold proceeds (Acts 5:3, 8), and believers who own estates sell them for communal use (Acts 4:34). Also used of Jacob's plot near Sychar (John 4:5). Spanish 'campo/terreno' and English 'field/land' consistently mark the property dimension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-field, field, land | es: -terreno, Campo, campo | fr: lieu, terrain | de: Feld, Ort John 4:5; Acts 1:18; Acts 1:19; Acts 4:34

2. place, spot, locality (2×) A place, spot, or named locality, emphasizing geographic setting rather than ownership. Used of Gethsemane (Matt 26:36; Mark 14:32), where the focus is on arriving at a particular spot for prayer, not on who owns the land. Spanish 'lugar/un-lugar' and French 'lieu' capture this purely spatial sense, in contrast to the property-laden vocabulary used for the Acts occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-place | es: lugar, un-lugar | fr: lieu | de: Feld, Ort Matt 26:36; Mark 14:32

χωρίς G5565 Adv (41×)
without, apart from, besides — preposition with genitive expressing separation, exclusion, or independence Choris functions as both an adverb ('separately') and an improper preposition with the genitive ('without, apart from'), though the prepositional usage dominates in the New Testament. Paul and the author of Hebrews deploy it in theologically decisive ways: 'apart from the law, sin is dead' (Rom 7:8-9), 'without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness' (Heb 9:22), and 'apart from faith it is impossible to please God' (Heb 11:6). John 15:5 uses it for the vine and branches imagery: 'apart from me you can do nothing.' The word also appears in counting formulas — 'five thousand men, besides women and children' (Matt 14:21; 15:38) — where it means 'not counting, in addition to.' Spanish 'sin' and French 'sans' capture the privative force; the additive sense ('besides') sometimes surfaces as Spanish 'aparte de.'

without, apart from (41×) An improper preposition with the genitive denoting separation, absence, or exclusion — 'without' or 'apart from.' Carries heavy theological freight in Paul and Hebrews: 'apart from law' (Rom 3:21; 7:8-9), 'without faith' (Heb 11:6), 'without the shedding of blood' (Heb 9:22). John 1:3 and 15:5 use it for absolute dependence on Christ. Also functions in counting exceptions: 'besides women and children' (Matt 14:21; 15:38). Spanish 'sin,' French 'sans,' and German 'ohne' uniformly confirm the privative core, while the additive 'besides' sense is contextually determined. WITHOUT AND APART FROM en: apart-from, without | es: aparte, aparte-de, sin | fr: sans, sans- | de: ohne, ohne- Matt 13:34; Matt 14:21; Matt 15:38; Mark 4:34; Luke 6:49

χῶρος G5566 N-AMS (1×)
northwest wind, Corus
A specific wind from the northwest direction, known in Latin as Corus. In Acts 27:12, this wind is referenced in the description of a harbor that opens toward the southwest and northwest. The consistency across translations (English 'northwest', Spanish 'noroeste', French 'nord-ouest') reflects precise nautical terminology important to Luke's detailed account of Paul's perilous sea journey to Rome.

(1×) The northwest wind, a precise meteorological term used in ancient Mediterranean navigation. Acts 27:12 employs this technical vocabulary to describe the orientation of Fair Havens harbor in Crete, showing Luke's attention to authentic seafaring detail in Paul's voyage narrative. NORTH DIRECTION en: northwest | es: noroeste | fr: nord-ouest | de: χῶρον Acts 27:12

ψάλλω G5567 V-FIA-1S (5×)
to sing praise, make music — to praise God with voice or stringed instrument Psallo originally meant to pluck or twang a string, and by extension to play a stringed instrument and sing to its accompaniment. In the Septuagint it consistently translates Hebrew zamar ('to make music in praise'). By New Testament times the emphasis has shifted to vocal praise, though the instrumental resonance never fully disappears. Paul pairs it with 'singing' in Ephesians 5:19 and commits to singing praise with both spirit and mind (1 Cor 14:15). James asks whether anyone is cheerful and directs them to 'sing praise' (Jas 5:13). The Spanish 'cantar salmos' and German 'lobsingen' both point to musical worship as the core sense.

(5×) To sing praises or make music to God, originally implying the plucking of strings but in NT usage primarily denoting vocal worship and psalm-singing. Paul quotes Psalm 18:49 declaring 'I will sing praise among the nations' (Rom 15:9), commits to singing with the spirit and with the mind (1 Cor 14:15), and exhorts believers to make melody in their hearts to the Lord (Eph 5:19). James prescribes it as the natural response to cheerfulness (Jas 5:13). All 5 occurrences center on doxological music directed toward God, as reflected in Spanish 'cantar salmos,' French 'chanter,' and German 'lobsingen.' SINGING AND MUSIC en: I-will-sing, I-will-sing-praise, let-sing-praise | es: cantaré, cante-salmos, salmodiando | fr: chanter, lobsingen | de: lobsingen Rom 15:9; 1Cor 14:15; Eph 5:19; Jas 5:13

ψαλ-μός G5568 N-GMP (7×)
A psalm; a sacred song originally sung to stringed accompaniment, used for OT Psalms and Christian worship songs.
Greek psalmós originally referred to the twanging of a stringed instrument and came to denote a song sung to such accompaniment. In the New Testament it serves double duty: it names the biblical book of Psalms when Jesus and the apostles cite Scripture (Luke 20:42; Acts 1:20; Acts 13:33), and it describes a spontaneous worship song contributed during a Christian gathering (1 Cor 14:26). Spanish Salmos and French psaume are direct descendants of this Greek term, preserving the link between musical performance and sacred text.

psalm / sacred song (7×) A psalm or sacred song sung to stringed accompaniment — encompassing both references to the Old Testament book of Psalms as authoritative Scripture (Luke 20:42, 'David himself says in the book of Psalms'; Acts 13:33, 'as it is written in the second Psalm') and the practice of singing psalms in early Christian worship (1 Cor 14:26, 'each one has a psalm'). The etymological root in plucking strings (psallō) is preserved in Spanish Salmos and French psaume, both loanwords from this Greek original.

SONGS AND HYMNS
en: Psalms, a-psalm, of-Psalms | es: Salmos, con-salmos, de-Salmos | fr: psaume, ψαλμοῖς | de: Psalm, Ψαλμῶν, ψαλμοῖς Luke 20:42; Luke 24:44; Acts 1:20; Acts 13:33; 1Cor 14:26

ψευδ-άδελφος G5569 N-DMP (2×)

false brother, pretended Christian, fake believer ψευδάδελφος (from ψευδής 'false' + ἀδελφός 'brother') denotes someone who falsely claims to be a Christian brother—a pretended believer, an infiltrator in the church. Paul uses it twice to describe dangers he faced in ministry. In 2 Corinthians 11:26, listing perils he endured, he includes 'danger from false brothers (ψευδαδέλφοις)'—people pretending to be fellow Christians while actually undermining the gospel. In Galatians 2:4, he describes how 'false brothers (ψευδαδέλφους) secretly brought in' spied on the freedom believers have in Christ, wanting to bring them into bondage. These were infiltrators, not genuine siblings in the faith.

(2×) Both uses describe those who claim Christian identity while actually threatening the gospel. In 2 Corinthians 11:26, they pose danger to Paul's mission; in Galatians 2:4, they spy on freedom to impose legalism. The French faux-frère and Spanish falsos hermanos capture the contradiction—they call themselves brothers but are false. Paul's experience shows that the church faces danger not only from external opposition but from internal pretenders who wear Christian labels while working against Christ's truth. BROTHER KINSMAN en: false-brothers | es: falsos-hermanos | fr: faux-frère, ψευδαδέλφους | de: falscher-Bruder 2Cor 11:26; Gal 2:4

ψευδ-απόστολος G5570 N-NMP (1×)

false apostle, fraudulent messenger claiming apostolic authority

A compound term describing someone who falsely claims to be an apostle—a deceptive religious figure who assumes apostolic authority without genuine divine commission. Paul uses this sharp designation in 2 Corinthians 11:13 to denounce opponents in Corinth who masqueraded as Christ's emissaries. The multilingual glosses (English 'false-apostles', Spanish 'falsos-apóstoles', French 'faux-apôtre') preserve the compound structure, emphasizing both the counterfeit nature and the specific office being falsely claimed.

(1×) One who fraudulently presents themselves as an apostle of Christ. In 2 Corinthians 11:13, Paul unmasks such figures as 'deceitful workers, disguising themselves as apostles of Christ,' warning the Corinthian church against accepting unauthorized teachers who exploit apostolic credibility for their own gain. PROPHET SPOKESPERSON en: false-apostles | es: falsos-apóstoles | fr: faux-apôtre | de: falscher-Apostel 2Cor 11:13

ψευδής G5571 Adj-DMP (3×)

false, lying, untrue; characterized by falsehood or deception

This adjective describes what is false or characterized by lying, opposed to what is true (alēthēs). In Acts 6:13, false witnesses testify against Stephen with fabricated charges. Revelation 2:2 commends the Ephesian church for testing those who claim to be apostles 'and are not, and have found them liars.' In Revelation 21:8, 'all liars' are listed among those excluded from the new Jerusalem. The word carries moral weight—falsehood is not merely error but intentional deception. Classical Greek used it in logic for fallacies and in ethics for false accusations and untrue testimony.

(3×) The cross-linguistic evidence shows strong moral condemnation: English 'false, liars,' Spanish 'falsos, mentirosos,' French 'menteur' (liar), German 'falsch, luegnerisch' (false, mendacious). Acts 6:13 describes witnesses who deliberately testified falsely against Stephen. Revelation 2:2 praises discernment that exposes false apostles. Revelation 21:8 places liars alongside murderers and sorcerers in the lake of fire, showing that falsehood is not a minor vice but a fundamental opposition to the God of truth. LIAR FALSEHOOD SPEAKER en: false, liars | es: falsos, mentirosos, | fr: menteur | de: falsch, luegnerisch Acts 6:13; Rev 2:2; Rev 21:8

ψευδο-δῐδάσκᾰλος G5572 N-NMP (1×)

false teacher, one who teaches error or heresy

Someone who propagates false doctrine or heretical teaching within the community of faith. Peter warns in 2 Peter 2:1 that such false teachers will secretly introduce destructive heresies, even denying the Master who bought them. The term appears across languages as a compound construction (Spanish 'falsos-maestros', English 'false-teachers'), highlighting both the pedagogical role and its corruption, a critical concern in early Christianity's battle against doctrinal distortion.

(1×) A teacher who leads others astray with erroneous doctrine. Used in 2 Peter 2:1 within a prophetic warning about infiltrators who will covertly bring in damaging teachings, paralleling the false prophets of Israel's past but now threatening the New Covenant community with theological deception. TEACHING AND LEARNING en: false-teachers | es: falsos-maestros | fr: ψευδοδιδάσκαλοι | de: falscher-Lehrer 2Pet 2:1

ψευδολόγ-ος G5573 Adj-GMP (1×)

liars, those who speak falsehood

Persons who habitually speak lies or engage in deliberate falsehood. In 1 Timothy 4:2, Paul describes false teachers whose consciences are seared as 'speaking lies in hypocrisy'—the genitive construction emphasizes their fundamental character as liars. The consistent rendering across languages (Spanish 'de-mentirosos', English 'of-liars', German 'Luegner') captures this attribution of moral character, identifying lying as a defining trait of those who oppose sound doctrine.

(1×) Those characterized by speaking falsehood, especially in religious contexts. The term appears in 1 Timothy 4:2 describing the hypocritical nature of false teachers whose teaching comes 'through the hypocrisy of liars,' indicating that mendacity is not incidental but essential to their corrupting influence in the church. LIAR FALSEHOOD SPEAKER en: of-liars | es: de-mentirosos | fr: ψευδολόγων | de: Luegner 1Tim 4:2

ψεύδομαι G5574 V-PPM/P-NMP (12×)

pseudomai – to lie, speak falsely; to make a deliberate false statement or act deceptively

The middle/passive deponent verb pseudomai ('to lie, to speak falsely') denotes the act of deliberate falsehood, whether in speech or conduct. Its New Testament occurrences span several registers: solemn oaths of truthfulness ('I do not lie,' Rom 9:1; 2 Cor 11:31; Gal 1:20; 1 Tim 2:7), ethical commands ('do not lie to one another,' Col 3:9), narrative of Ananias lying to the Holy Spirit (Acts 5:3-4), the theological affirmation that God cannot lie (Heb 6:18), and Jesus' beatitude concerning those who 'say all manner of evil against you falsely' (Matt 5:11). The uniform rendering across languages – Spanish mentir, French mentir, German lugen, Arabic kadhaba – confirms a single core sense of intentional falsehood with no semantic subdivision.

to lie, speak falsely (12×) To lie or speak falsely with deliberate intent. Covers oaths of truthfulness ('I do not lie,' Rom 9:1; Gal 1:20), the command against lying (Col 3:9), Ananias' deception (Acts 5:3), divine inability to lie (Heb 6:18), and false accusation (Matt 5:11). Spanish mentir, French mentir, and German lugen confirm a single sense of intentional falsehood. LYING AND FALSEHOOD en: I-lie, lie, lying | es: mentimos, mentir, mentiste | fr: mentir | de: luegen, lügt Matt 5:11; Acts 5:3; Acts 5:4; Rom 9:1; 2Cor 11:31

ψευδομάρτυς G5575 N-NMP (2×)

false witness, one who gives perjured testimony ψευδομάρτυς (from ψευδής 'false' + μάρτυς 'witness') denotes someone who gives false testimony, a perjurer. In Matthew 26:60, during Jesus' trial before the Sanhedrin, 'many false witnesses (ψευδομάρτυρες) came forward' with conflicting testimony, trying to build a case for execution. In 1 Corinthians 15:15, Paul makes a startling logical point: 'We are even found to be false witnesses (ψευδομάρτυρες) about God, because we testified about God that he raised Christ' if in fact the dead are not raised. The resurrection is so central that denying it would make the apostles liars about God himself.

(2×) The two uses show ψευδομάρτυς in contrasting contexts. Matthew 26:60 describes actual perjury—witnesses lying about Jesus to secure his death. 1 Corinthians 15:15 uses it hypothetically—if resurrection is impossible, then claiming Christ rose makes us false witnesses. The German falscher Zeuge and Spanish falsos testigos straightforwardly mean 'false witnesses.' Both contexts underscore the gravity of testimony: bearing false witness condemned Jesus; bearing true witness to resurrection validates apostolic preaching. WITNESSES AND TESTIMONY

en: false-witnesses | es: falsos-testigos | fr: faux-témoin | de: falscher-Zeuge, ψευδομαρτύρων Matt 26:60; 1Cor 15:15

ψευδομαρτῠρ-έω G5576 V-IIA-3P (5×)

to bear false witness, give false testimony — to testify untruthfully against someone Pseudomartureo is a compound of pseudos ('falsehood') and martureo ('to testify'), and it appears in the New Testament exclusively in connection with the ninth commandment and its violation. Jesus cites 'you shall not bear false witness' as part of the Decalogue summary in his encounters with the rich young ruler (Matt 19:18; Mark 10:19; Luke 18:20). Mark then shows the commandment being broken in real time as witnesses at Jesus' trial 'were bearing false witness against him' (Mark 14:56-57). The Spanish 'dar falso testimonio' and German 'falsches Zeugnis geben' both translate the compound literally, preserving its legal-covenantal gravity.

(5×) To give false testimony, to bear witness untruthfully — specifically in legal or judicial contexts governed by the ninth commandment. Jesus lists it among the commandments to be kept (Matt 19:18; Mark 10:19; Luke 18:20), echoing Exodus 20:16 and Deuteronomy 5:20. Mark applies it to the witnesses at Jesus' trial whose testimony did not agree (Mark 14:56-57). All 5 occurrences maintain the forensic sense of deliberately deceptive testimony, as confirmed by Spanish 'dar falso testimonio,' French 'porter un faux temoignage,' and German 'falsches Zeugnis geben.' PROSPERING AND SUCCESS

en: were-bearing-false-witness, you-shall-bear-false-witness, you-will-bear-false-witness | es: daban-falso-testimonio, darás-falso-testimonio, des-falso-testimonio | fr: porter-un-faux-témoignage | de: falsches-Zeugnis-geben, ψευδομαρτυρήσεις, ψευδομαρτυρήσῃς Matt 19:18; Mark 10:19; Mark 14:56; Mark 14:57; Luke 18:20

ψευδομαρτῠρ-ία G5577 N-NFP (2×)

false testimony, perjury, lying witness

ψευδομαρτυρία denotes false testimony or perjury—the act of bearing false witness, not just the person who does it. In Matthew 15:19, Jesus lists it among the evils that come from the heart: 'For out of the heart come evil thoughts, murder, adultery, sexual immorality, theft, false witness (ψευδομαρτυρίαι), slander.' In Matthew 26:59, the chief priests and council 'were seeking false testimony (ψευδομαρτυρίαν) against Jesus that they might put him to death,' though they couldn't find consistent perjury that would stick. Both uses emphasize that false witness is a serious moral evil.

(2×) Both uses appear in Matthew, emphasizing false testimony as grave sin. Matthew 15:19 lists it among vices flowing from the corrupt heart; Matthew 26:59 shows religious leaders actively seeking it to murder Jesus. The French faux-témoignage and Spanish falso testimonio denote lying testimony. Jesus identifies ψευδομαρτυρία both as internal corruption (it comes from the heart) and as external injustice (it was used to secure his execution). False witness destroys both the witness-bearer's integrity and the victim's life. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS

en: false-testimonies, false-testimony | es: falso-testimonio, falsos-testimonios | fr: faux-témoignage | de: ψευδομαρτυρίαι, ψευδομαρτυρίαν Matt 15:19; Matt 26:59

ψευδο-προφήτης G5578 N-DMP (11×)

False prophet — one who fraudulently claims divine revelation, deceiving God's people with counterfeit messages

The compound noun ψευδοπροφήτης (pseudoprophētēs) denotes someone who falsely claims to speak for God. Jesus warns they come as wolves in sheep's clothing (Matt 7:15) and predicts their end-times proliferation with deceiving signs (Matt 24:11, 24; Mark 13:22). The sorcerer Bar-Jesus is called a false prophet (Acts 13:6). John commands testing every spirit because 'many false prophets have gone out into the world' (1 John 4:1). Revelation personifies the ultimate false prophet as the beast's propagandist (Rev 16:13; 19:20). Spanish 'falso profeta' and French 'faux prophète' are exact calques.

false prophet (11×) One who fraudulently claims divine revelation, leading God's people astray through deceptive teaching or counterfeit signs. Jesus warns of their wolf-in-sheep's-clothing approach (Matt 7:15), predicts end-times proliferation with misleading signs (Matt 24:11, 24; Mark 13:22), and notes false prophets were popularly acclaimed (Luke 6:26). John urges testing the spirits (1 John 4:1). In Revelation, the False Prophet serves as the beast's propagandist (Rev 16:13; 19:20). Spanish 'falso profeta' translates directly. PROPHET SPOKESPERSON

en: false-prophet, false-prophets | es: falso-profeta, falsos-profetas, falsos–profetas | fr: falscher-Prophet, faux-prophète | de: falscher-Prophet Matt 7:15; Matt 24:11; Matt 24:24; Mark 13:22; Luke 6:26

ψεῦδος G5579 N-GNS (10×)

Lie, falsehood, untruth — a deliberate departure from reality, opposed to God's truth

The noun ψεῦδος (pseudos) means 'lie' or 'falsehood,' denoting a deliberate departure from truth. In John 8:44, Jesus identifies the devil as speaking 'from his own lie' — falsehood is Satan's native language. Paul declares that humanity 'exchanged the truth of God for a lie' (Rom 1:25), making pseudos the defining marker of idolatry. In Ephesians 4:25, believers are told to 'put away falsehood' and speak truth to one another. The eschatological dimension emerges in 2 Thessalonians 2:9-11, where the lawless one operates with 'lying wonders' and God sends a 'strong delusion to believe the lie.' Revelation's final vision excludes everyone who 'loves and practices falsehood' (Rev 22:15). Spanish 'mentira' and French 'mensonge' match precisely.

a lie, falsehood, untruth (10×) A lie, falsehood, or untruth — a deliberate contradiction of reality, theologically opposed to God who is truth. Encompasses satanic origin (John 8:44, the devil as father of lies), idolatrous exchange (Rom 1:25, trading God's truth for the lie), ethical exhortation (Eph 4:25, putting away falsehood), eschatological deception (2 Thess 2:9-11, lying signs and the delusion to believe the lie), and final exclusion (Rev 21:27; 22:15, no one who practices falsehood enters the holy city). Spanish 'mentira,' French 'mensonge,' and German 'Lüge' all carry the same moral gravity. LIES AND FALSEHOOD

en: a-lie, falsehood, lie | es: de-mentira, mentira, mentira. | fr: mensonge | de: Luege John 8:44; Rom 1:25; Eph 4:25; 2Thess 2:9; 2Thess 2:11

ψευδόχριστος G5580 N-NMP (2×)

false Christ, one who falsely claims to be the Messiah ψευδόχριστος (from ψευδής 'false' + Χριστός 'Christ') denotes someone who falsely claims to be the Messiah—a pretender to messianic identity. Jesus uses it in his eschatological discourse warning about deception in the last days. Both Matthew 24:24 and Mark 13:22 record his warning: 'False christs (ψευδόχριστοι) and false prophets will arise and perform great signs and wonders, so as to lead astray, if possible, even the elect.' These deceivers will be so convincing, with such powerful signs, that even genuine believers might be vulnerable to their claims. Jesus warns his disciples to be alert and not follow those claiming messianic identity.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in parallel Gospel accounts of Jesus' Olivet Discourse, warning about end-times deception. The ψευδόχριστοι will be persuasive, working signs and wonders to authenticate their false claims. The German falscher Christus and Spanish falsos cristos preserve the compound meaning. Jesus' warning is urgent: messianic pretenders will arise throughout church history and especially near the end, and their miraculous signs will make them dangerously convincing. Believers must test claims against Scripture and apostolic witness, not merely against displays of power. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: false-christs | es: falsos-cristos | fr: faux-christ | de: falscher-Christus, ψευδόχριστοι Matt 24:24; Mark 13:22

ψευδ-ώνῠμος G5581 Adj-GFS (1×)

falsely named, bearing a name that misrepresents reality

Something incorrectly or deceptively labeled, bearing a designation that doesn't match its true nature. Paul uses this adjective in 1 Timothy 6:20 to warn Timothy against 'what is falsely called knowledge'—presumably Gnostic claims to superior spiritual insight. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'falsamente-llamado', English 'falsely-named', French 'faux-nommé') consistently captures the gap between the claimed identity and actual reality, a crucial apologetic distinction.

(1×) Wrongly designated or bearing a false title. In 1 Timothy 6:20, Paul warns against 'the contradictions of what is falsely called knowledge,' critiquing teachings that claim intellectual or spiritual superiority but actually oppose the truth of the gospel. The term exposes pretentious claims as hollow. LIES AND FALSEHOOD

en: falsely-named | es: falsamente-llamado | fr: ψευδωνύμου | de: falsch-benannt 1Tim 6:20

ψεῦσ-μα G5582 N-DNS (1×)

lie, falsehood, deliberate untruth

A deliberate falsehood or untruth, distinct from mere error. In Romans 3:7, Paul poses a rhetorical question about whether God's truthfulness is enhanced by human lies—if divine truth becomes more evident through contrast with our falsehood. The translations (Spanish 'mentira', French 'mensonge', English 'lie', German 'Luege') consistently point to intentional deception, not accidental mistake, underscoring the moral dimension of speaking what contradicts reality.

(1×) An intentional falsehood or deceitful statement. Used in Romans 3:7 within Paul's diatribe addressing objections to his gospel: 'But if through my lie the truth of God abounded to his glory, why am I still being condemned as a sinner?' The term emphasizes human mendacity as a foil to divine truthfulness. LIES AND FALSEHOOD

en: lie | es: mentira | fr: mensonge | de: Luege Rom 3:7

ψεύσ-της G5583 N-DMP (10×)

Liar — one who speaks falsehood; applied to the devil, to humans, and even hypothetically to God

The noun ψεύστης (pseustes) means 'liar,' one who habitually or characteristically speaks what is false. Jesus calls the devil 'a liar and the father of lies' (John 8:44), establishing Satan as the archetypal liar. In the same discourse, Jesus warns that anyone who denies knowing God 'is a liar' (John 8:55). Paul cites the provocative maxim 'let God be true and every man a liar' (Rom 3:4). The Johannine epistles develop the concept further: whoever claims to know God but disobeys is 'a liar' (1 John 1:10; 2:4, 22; 4:20; 5:10). Spanish 'mentiroso' and French 'menteur' correspond exactly.

a liar, one who speaks falsehood (10×) A liar, one who characteristically utters falsehood. Applied to the devil as the archetypal liar (John 8:44), to human beings universally (Rom 3:4, 'every man a liar,' citing Ps 116:11), and to anyone whose life contradicts their confession of faith (John 8:55; 1 John 1:10; 2:4, 22; 4:20; 5:10). The Johannine usage is especially pointed: denying that Jesus is the Christ, claiming to love God while hating a brother, or saying 'I have not sinned' all earn the label pseustes. Spanish 'mentiroso,' French 'menteur,' and German 'Lügner' all match this personal, characterizing force. LIAR FALSEHOOD SPEAKER

en: a-liar, for-liars, liar | es: mentiroso, mentirosos | fr: menteur | de: Luegner John 8:44; John 8:55; Rom 3:4; 1Tim 1:10; Titus 1:12

ψηλᾰφ-άω G5584 V-AOA-3P (4×)

To touch, feel, grope for; to handle something physically or search for something by feeling in the dark.

A verb meaning to touch, handle, or grope about for something, often implying searching by feel rather than by sight. The word carries overtones of tentative, exploratory contact. In Luke 24:39 the risen Jesus invites the disciples to touch him and verify his corporeal reality. First John 1:1 echoes this with hands that have handled the Word of life. Acts 17:27 uses it figuratively of humanity groping after God in spiritual darkness. Hebrews 12:18 contrasts Sinai – a mountain that could be touched – with the heavenly Jerusalem. Spanish palpar and French palper preserve the tactile, exploratory nuance.

(4×) To touch, feel, or grope about for something, whether literally handling a physical body or figuratively searching by feel. In Luke 24:39 the risen Christ says 'touch me and see' to prove his bodily resurrection, and 1 John 1:1 recalls hands that 'handled' the incarnate Word. Acts 17:27 extends the image metaphorically: God arranged the world so that people might grope after him and find him, though he is not far away. Hebrews 12:18 speaks of a mountain that could be physically touched (Sinai), contrasting it with the spiritual realities of the new covenant. Spanish palpar and French palper both retain the exploratory, tactile quality of the verb. TOUCHING AND REACHING en: they-might-grope-for, to-being-touched, touch | es: a-lo-que-puede-ser-tocado, palpad, palparan | fr: palper, toucher | de: betasten, ψηλαφήσατέ, ψηλαφήσειαν Luke 24:39; Acts 17:27; Heb 12:18; 1John 1:1

ψηφ-ίζω G5585 V-AMA-3S (2×)

to count, calculate, or reckon by adding up numbers

This verb means to count or calculate, originally with counting stones or pebbles. In Luke 14:28, Jesus uses it for counting the cost before building a tower—a practical calculation of resources. In Revelation 13:18, it takes on a more cryptic sense: calculating the numerical value of the beast's name by adding up the values of its letters, a practice called gematria in Jewish tradition.

(2×) The verb appears twice in the New Testament, both times involving careful calculation. The Greek root connects to ψῆφος (pebble), reflecting ancient counting methods. Spanish 'calcula/calcule' and French 'calculer' capture the computational nature, while German 'berechnen' emphasizes the reckoning aspect. The tower-building context (Luke 14:28) illustrates prudent planning, while the apocalyptic context (Rev 13:18) invites symbolic interpretation through numerical values. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: counts, let-him-calculate | es: calcula, calcule | fr: berechnen, calculer | de: berechnen, ψηφίζει Luke 14:28; Rev 13:18

ψῆφος G5586 N-AFS (3×)

pebble, small stone; used for voting or as a token; also precious stone

This noun primarily means a small, smooth pebble or stone, which in ancient Greece served practical purposes like counting, voting, or gaming. In Acts 26:10, Paul says he 'cast his vote' (literally 'gave his pebble') against Christians, using the imagery of voting stones placed in urns. In Revelation 2:17, twice, Christ promises the one who overcomes 'a white stone, and on the stone a new name written'—possibly an image of acquittal, admission to the messianic banquet, or a token of intimate knowledge. The white pebble may echo jury votes, where white meant acquittal and black condemnation.

(3×) Translations reflect both literal and metaphorical dimensions: English 'pebble, vote,' Spanish 'piedrecita' (little stone), 'voto' (vote), French 'caillou, pierre' (pebble, stone), German

'Stein' (stone). Acts 26:10 uses the term for Paul's vote against believers—a pebble dropped in judgment. Revelation 2:17's 'white stone' is more enigmatic: it could represent a token of victory, a voting pebble of divine approval, or an entrance ticket to the heavenly feast. The new name written on it suggests intimate, personal knowledge between Christ and the overcomer. STONE AND ROCK
en: a-pebble, a-vote, pebble | es: piedrecita, voto | fr: caillou, pierre | de: Stein, ψῆφον Acts 26:10; Rev 2:17

ψῐθῠρ-ισμός G5587 N-NMP (1×)
whispering, secret gossip or slander
Secret communication, especially gossip or slander spoken in hushed tones. Paul lists this vice in 2 Corinthians 12:20 among the relational sins he fears finding in Corinth—quarreling, jealousy, anger, and 'whisperings' that undermine community. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'murmuraciones', French 'murmure', English 'gossip', German 'Gefluster') capture both the quiet manner of speaking and its destructive content, highlighting how covert speech damages fellowship.

(1×) Secretive gossip or slanderous talk spoken in low tones. In 2 Corinthians 12:20, Paul includes 'whisperings' in a catalog of divisive behaviors that fracture Christian community, suggesting that this form of communication—characterized by secrecy and malicious intent—is as harmful as open conflict. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14541 WITH 3 SENSES en: gossip | es: murmuraciones | fr: murmure | de: Gefluster 2Cor 12:20

ψῐθῠρ-ιστής G5588 N-AMP (1×)
whisperers, those who spread secret slander or gossip
People who engage in covert slander or gossip, speaking malicious things in secret. Paul condemns such individuals in Romans 1:29 within his comprehensive indictment of pagan society, listing 'whisperers' alongside other moral failures. The term across languages (Spanish 'murmuradores', French 'calomniateur', English 'gossips', German 'Verleumder') consistently identifies those who damage reputations through secretive, malicious speech rather than open confrontation.

(1×) Those who practice covert slander or malicious gossip. Romans 1:29 includes 'whisperers' in Paul's dark portrait of humanity apart from God, identifying them as people who undermine others through secretive accusation and rumor-spreading, reflecting the social fragmentation that results from rejecting divine truth. DEVIL SATAN
en: gossips | es: murmuradores | fr: calomniateur | de: Verleumder Rom 1:29

ψῑχ-ίον G5589 N-GNP (2×)
small fragments or crumbs, especially of bread
This diminutive noun refers to the little crumbs or fragments that fall from a table. Both New Testament occurrences appear in the story of the Syrophoenician woman who tells Jesus that even the dogs eat the crumbs that fall from their master's table (Matthew 15:27, Mark 7:28). Her humble yet persistent faith transforms what seems like an insult into a profound statement about God's abundant provision—even the crumbs from the children's table are enough to satisfy.

(2×) The word appears exclusively in the account of the Canaanite woman's faith. Across languages, translations uniformly capture the diminutive scale: Spanish 'migajas,' French 'miette,' German 'Brosamen,' English 'crumbs.' The term's very smallness underscores the woman's humility and the paradox of her request—she asks for what seems insignificant yet proves abundantly sufficient, demonstrating that even the smallest portion of God's blessing overflows with grace. FRAGMENTS AND PIECES en: crumbs | es: migajas | fr: miette | de: Brosamen, ψιχίων Matt 15:27; Mark 7:28

ψῡχ-ή G5590 N-AFS (103×)
Soul, inner self, life; the animating principle of a person encompassing spiritual identity, desires, and mortal existence.
Psyche is one of the richest anthropological terms in the New Testament, spanning the full range from physical life to the deepest interior of a person. Jesus teaches that one can lose one's psyche yet save it (Matt 16:25), playing on both the physical and spiritual dimensions simultaneously. The word renders Hebrew nephesh throughout the Septuagint, carrying forward that same broad semantic range. Spanish distinguishes 'alma' (soul) from 'vida' (life), French uses 'ame,' and German 'Seele,' but the Greek term intentionally holds both together. In most of its 103 New Testament occurrences, psyche refers to the inner self as the seat of emotions, will, and spiritual identity rather than mere biological existence.

1. soul, inner self (100×) The immaterial inner self: the seat of feelings, desires, moral life, and spiritual identity. This dominant sense (100 occurrences) appears in Jesus' teaching about loving God with all your psyche (Matt 22:37), Mary's song (Luke 1:46), and Paul's pastoral concern (1 Thess 2:8). Spanish 'alma,' French 'ame,' and German 'Seele' all capture this interior, personal dimension that goes beyond mere physical life. SOUL AND LIFE
en: life, soul | es: alma, vida | fr: âme | de: Seele Matt 2:20; Matt 6:25; Matt 10:28

2. life, physical existence (3×) Physical, mortal life that can be risked, lost, or preserved. In Acts 27:10, 22 Paul speaks of the psychai (lives) of those aboard the storm-tossed ship, and Revelation 8:9 describes sea creatures losing their psyche. Spanish 'vidas,' French 'ame,' and the pluralized forms across languages mark the shift from interior selfhood to countable mortal existence. SOUL AND LIFE
en: lives, of-life, souls | es: almas, de-vida, vidas | fr: âme | de: Seele Acts 27:10; Acts 27:22; Rev 8:9

ψῡχι-κός G5591 Adj-NFS (6×)
Natural, unspiritual, soulish; pertaining to the natural life-principle (psyche) as opposed to the Spirit (pneuma).
Psychikos derives from psyche ('soul, natural life') and marks a crucial boundary in Pauline and general epistolary theology. The 'natural' person of 1 Corinthians 2:14 cannot receive the things of the Spirit because they are spiritually discerned. In 1 Corinthians 15:44-46, Paul distinguishes between the psychikon body (sown in weakness) and the pneumatikon body (raised in power). James 3:15 brands worldly wisdom as 'earthly, psychike, demonic.' The translations reveal nuance: Spanish natural alongside animico, French naturel and charnels, German natuerlich and Seelische—each grasping a different facet of this rich term.

natural, unspiritual, soulish (6×) Pertaining to the natural, animate life governed by the psyche rather than the divine pneuma. This carries a consistently pejorative or limiting force in the NT: the psychikos person lacks spiritual perception (1 Cor 2:14), the psychikon body belongs to the present age of mortality (1 Cor 15:44-46), and psychike wisdom is aligned with the earthly and demonic (Jas 3:15). The multilingual evidence splits revealingly—Spanish natural vs. animico, German natuerlich vs. Seelische—reflecting the term's range from 'merely natural' to 'soulish.' SOUL AND LIFE
en: natural, soulish, unspiritual | es: Anímico, natural, sensuales | fr: charnels,, naturel, ψυχική | de: Seelische, natuerlich 1Cor 2:14; 1Cor 15:44; 1Cor 15:46; Jas 3:15

ψῦχος G5592 N-ANS (3×)
cold; coldness, winter weather, chill
This noun denotes cold, whether as a physical condition or cold weather. In John 18:18, servants and officers stood around a charcoal fire 'for it was cold,' warming themselves during Jesus' trial. Acts 28:2 describes the 'rain and the cold' that prompted the islanders of Malta to kindle a fire for Paul's shipwrecked party. In 2 Corinthians 11:27, Paul lists 'cold and nakedness' among his hardships in apostolic ministry—physical exposure to the elements without adequate clothing or shelter. The word emphasizes the discomfort and danger of cold conditions.

(3×) The word translates uniformly: English 'cold,' Spanish 'frío,' French 'froid,' German 'Kälte'—all indicating low temperature or chilly conditions. John 18:18 depicts the cold night air during Jesus' trial, when even the servants needed a fire. Acts 28:2 describes the cold rain on Malta that moved the natives to compassion. 2 Corinthians 11:27 places cold alongside nakedness, hunger, and thirst in Paul's catalog of apostolic sufferings—exposure to harsh weather was part of the cost of itinerant ministry. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6364 WITH 6 SENSES

en: cold | es: frío | fr: froid | de: Kaelte, ψῦχος John 18:18; Acts 28:2; 2Cor 11:27

ψῡχρός G5593 Adj-NMS (4×)

Cold, cool; literally of temperature, figuratively of spiritual apathy or lukewarmness.

An adjective meaning cold in temperature, used both literally and as a vivid metaphor for spiritual condition. In Matthew 10:42 Jesus promises reward to anyone who gives a cup of cold water to a little one – a simple, refreshing act of kindness. In Revelation 3:15-16 the risen Christ addresses Laodicea with the famous words: 'you are neither cold nor hot.' Here psychros, paradoxically, would be preferable to the tepid middle ground, suggesting that even outright coldness has a bracing honesty that lukewarmness lacks. German kalt, Spanish frío, and French froid all map directly to the temperature sense.

(4×) Cold in temperature or, by extension, in spiritual disposition. Literally, Matthew 10:42 speaks of giving a cup of cold (psychros) water as an act of charity. Figuratively, Revelation 3:15-16 uses the cold-hot-lukewarm triad to diagnose Laodicea's spiritual apathy: being cold would at least be decisive, whereas their tepid state provokes the Lord's revulsion. Spanish frío, French froid, and German kalt consistently render the physical temperature sense, while the Revelation context layers on a powerful metaphorical dimension about spiritual zeal. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6364 WITH 6 SENSES

en: cold, of-cold | es: de-frío, frío | fr: froid, kalt | de: kalt, ψυχροῦ Matt 10:42; Rev 3:15; Rev 3:16

ψύχω G5594 V-FIP-3S (1×)

grow cold, lose warmth or fervor

To become cold, lose warmth—used metaphorically of diminishing love or spiritual fervor. Jesus warns in Matthew 24:12 that because lawlessness will increase, 'the love of many will grow cold.' The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'se-enfriará', French 'se-refroidir', English 'will-grow-cold') uniformly employs temperature metaphors to describe the cooling of affection and devotion, a vivid image of spiritual decline amid mounting evil and persecution.

(1×) To lose warmth, become cold—metaphorically of love or devotion fading. In Matthew 24:12, Jesus prophesies that escalating wickedness in the end times will cause many believers' love to 'grow cold,' describing spiritual apathy and relational breakdown as consequences of intensified evil. The passive form suggests external pressure causing internal cooling. WINTER COLD SEASON

en: will-grow-cold | es: se-enfriará | fr: se-refroidir | de: ψυγήσεται Matt 24:12

ψωμ-ίζω G5595 V-PMA-2S (2×)

to feed by hand, give food morsel by morsel, or bestow for nourishment

This verb originally described feeding someone small bits by hand, the way nurses fed children or attendants cared for the sick. Paul uses it twice: in Romans 12:20, quoting Proverbs about feeding one's enemy, and in 1 Corinthians 13:3, contemplating giving away all one's possessions to feed the poor. The verb emphasizes the intimate, deliberate act of providing sustenance, not just throwing food at someone but carefully ensuring they're nourished.

(2×) Both occurrences involve generous provision, though with different motivations. The Greek lexicon notes the tender, hand-feeding imagery—nurses feeding children or caring for the sick. Romans 12:20 speaks of feeding enemies (showing mercy that heaps coals on their heads), while 1 Corinthians 13:3 imagines extreme charity. The multilingual evidence consistently emphasizes the feeding action: French 'nourrir,' German 'füttern,' Spanish 'dar de comer.' This isn't casual distribution but intentional, care-filled nourishment. FEEDING AND NOURISHING

en: I-give-away, feed | es: dale-de-comer, diere-de-comer | fr: nourrir | de: fuettern Rom 12:20; 1Cor 13:3

ψωμ-ίον G5596 N-ANS (4×)

A morsel or small piece of bread, especially one dipped and handed to another at a meal.

Derived from the Greek psōmos (a bite or mouthful), this diminutive form refers to a small piece of bread. In the New Testament it appears exclusively in the Upper Room narrative of John 13, where Jesus dips a morsel and offers it to Judas Iscariot. The act of sharing a morsel carried deep significance in Near Eastern dining customs, making the betrayal all the more poignant. Every language renders it with a term for a small food portion — Spanish bocado, French morceau, German Bissen — all preserving the intimacy of the gesture.

(4×) A small piece of bread or food, specifically one dipped and shared at a communal meal. All four occurrences cluster in John 13:26-30, where Jesus identifies his betrayer by dipping the morsel (psōmion) and handing it to Judas. The multilingual evidence uniformly renders this as a single bite-sized portion — English 'morsel,' Spanish 'bocado,' French 'morceau' — highlighting the table-fellowship context that makes the betrayal so jarring. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: morsel | es: bocado | fr: morceau | de: Bissen John 13:26; John 13:27; John 13:30

ψώχω G5597 V-PPA-NMP (1×)

rub, crumble by rubbing (grain heads)

To rub or crumble something between the hands, particularly grain heads. In Luke 6:1, the disciples are described as picking heads of grain and 'rubbing them in their hands' to separate kernels from chaff —an action that provoked Pharisaic criticism as Sabbath work. The consistent translations (Spanish 'frotando', French 'frotter', English 'rubbing') capture this tactile agricultural action, central to the controversy over what constitutes forbidden Sabbath labor.

(1×) To rub or crumble grain heads between the hands to extract kernels. Luke 6:1 depicts disciples 'rubbing' grain on the Sabbath, an action the Pharisees condemned as unlawful threshing. This agricultural detail becomes theologically significant in Jesus's defense of Sabbath freedom over rigid legalism. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: rubbing | es: frotando | fr: frotter | de: ψώχοντες Luke 6:1

ὦ, τό G5598 N-NNS (4×)

Omega, the last letter of the Greek alphabet, used as a title for God signifying ultimate finality and completeness.

The twenty-fourth and final letter of the Greek alphabet, omega carries symbolic weight far beyond its phonetic value. In Revelation, God and Christ declare themselves 'the Alpha and the Omega' — the beginning and the end — using the alphabet's boundaries as a metaphor for absolute sovereignty over all of time and creation. The term appears four times, always paired with Alpha, forming a merism that encompasses everything from first to last. Translations across languages consistently transliterate rather than translate, preserving the Greek letter's iconic status.

(4×) The last letter of the Greek alphabet used as a divine title signifying ultimate finality, completion, and sovereignty. Found exclusively in Revelation (1:8, 1:11, 21:6, 22:13), it always appears in the pair 'Alpha and Omega,' a merism declaring God's presence at both the origin and culmination of all things. Spanish, French, and German all retain the transliterated form 'Omega,' reflecting the universal recognition of this symbol as a theological title rather than a mere letter name. ENTREATY PARTICLES

en: Omega, Ōmega | es: Omega, Ôméga, | fr: o | de: o Rev 1:8; Rev 1:11; Rev 21:6; Rev 22:13

ὦ τάλας ἐγώ G5599 I (17×)

O! An exclamatory vocative particle used to address someone directly, often with strong emotion.

This single-syllable exclamation serves as a vocative particle of direct address, typically charged with emotion. In the Gospels, Jesus uses it when lamenting faithlessness — 'O faithless generation!' (Matt 17:17; Mark 9:19; Luke 9:41) — and when commending surprising faith — 'O woman, great is your faith!' (Matt 15:28). Paul employs it in both rebuke and passionate argument (Rom 2:1, 3; Gal 3:1; 1 Tim 6:11). On the road to Emmaus, the risen Christ gently chides, 'O foolish ones, and slow of heart to believe' (Luke 24:25). Across translations the particle remains remarkably stable: Spanish '¡Oh,' French 'Ô,' German 'o.'

O (17×) A vocative exclamation used to address persons directly, typically with heightened emotion — whether grief, astonishment, rebuke, or admiration. Jesus uses it to lament unbelief ('O faithless generation,' Mark 9:19) and to praise exceptional trust ('O woman, great is your faith,' Matt 15:28). Paul deploys it in sharp rhetorical address ('O foolish Galatians,' Gal 3:1). The particle is virtually universal across languages — Spanish '¡Oh,' French 'Ô,' German 'o' — confirming its function as a raw emotive marker preceding direct address. ENTREATY PARTICLES

en: O, O- | es: Oh, oh, ¡Oh | fr: o, Ô, ô | de: o, oh Matt 15:28; Matt 17:17; Mark 9:19; Luke 9:41; Luke 24:25

εἰμί G5600

present subjunctive of 'to be'; may be, might be, should be

This form of the fundamental Greek verb 'to be' expresses possibility, potentiality, or contingency rather than simple fact. It appears in conditional statements, purpose clauses, and expressions of wish or exhortation. Where the indicative states what is, the subjunctive considers what may be or ought to be. Greek uses this mood far more extensively than English, making it essential for expressing doubt, purpose, and hypothetical situations throughout the New Testament.

Ἰωβήδ G5601 N-AMS (3×)

Obed; ancestor in the messianic line, son of Boaz and Ruth, grandfather of David

This proper name designates Obed, the son of Boaz and Ruth, and grandfather of King David. His name appears in the genealogies of Jesus in Matthew 1:5 (twice) and Luke 3:32, establishing Jesus' legal claim to the Davidic throne. Obed's birth is narrated in Ruth 4, where the women of Bethlehem celebrate him as the one who will renew Naomi's life and sustain her in old age. His mother Ruth, though a Moabitess, becomes an ancestress of the Messiah—a beautiful illustration of grace transcending ethnic boundaries. The name itself may mean 'servant' or 'worshiper.'

(3×) The name transliterates consistently: English 'Obed,' Spanish 'Iōbḗd,' French 'Jobed,' German preserves the Greek 'Ἰωβήδ.' Matthew 1:5 places Obed in the genealogy immediately after Boaz and Ruth, highlighting the Gentile woman's inclusion in the messianic line. Luke 3:32 confirms Obed's position in the lineage ascending from Jesus back through David. The inclusion of Ruth's son in these genealogies underscores God's sovereign grace in bringing the Messiah through unexpected channels, including a Moabite widow. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Iōbēd | es: Iōbḗd | fr: Jobed | de: Ἰωβήδ Matt 1:5; Luke 3:32

ὧδε G5602 Adv (62×)

hode – here, in this place; a demonstrative adverb of location pointing to the speaker's vicinity

The adverb hode ('here') is a demonstrative locative pointing to the speaker's immediate location or to a place present in the discourse context. Its 62 New Testament occurrences include memorable declarations: 'something greater than the temple is here' (Matt 12:6), 'something greater than Jonah is here' (Matt 12:41), and the post-resurrection 'he is not here, for he has risen' (Matt 28:6). In several passages it shades toward 'to this place' or 'hither' (Matt 8:29; 14:18). The word is functionally equivalent across languages – Spanish aquí, French ici, German hier – confirming its single deictic sense.

here (62×) A demonstrative adverb indicating the speaker's location or the place under discussion, meaning 'here' or 'in this place.' It punctuates dramatic Christological declarations: 'something greater than the temple is here' (Matt 12:6), 'greater than Solomon is here' (Matt 12:42), and the pivotal 'he is not here; he has risen' (Matt 28:6). Occasionally implies motion toward: 'bring them here to me' (Matt 14:18). Spanish aquí, French ici, and German hier render it identically across 62 occurrences, confirming monosemous deictic function. HERE AND HITHER

en: here | es: aquí | fr: ici | de: hier Matt 8:29; Matt 12:6; Matt 12:41; Matt 12:42; Matt 14:8

ᾠδή G5603 N-AFS (7×)

A song, ode, or hymn of praise; a lyrical composition meant to be sung, especially in worship.

The noun ōdē, a contraction of aoidē ('song'), designates a lyrical composition intended for singing. Every New Testament occurrence is set in a context of worship or heavenly praise. Paul pairs it with psalms and spiritual songs as elements of corporate worship (Eph 5:19; Col 3:16), while Revelation presents the 'new song' sung before the Lamb's throne (Rev 5:9; 14:3). German Lied and Spanish cántico both capture the lyrical, celebratory quality of the word, distinguishing it from mere speech or recitation.

a song, ode, hymn (7×) A song, hymn, or ode of worship and praise — always appearing in contexts of joyful or exalted singing before God. In the Pauline letters, ōdē is listed alongside psalms and hymns as a form of Spirit-filled corporate expression (Eph 5:19; Col 3:16). In Revelation, it denotes the transcendent 'new song' of the redeemed (Rev 5:9; 14:3). German Lied and Spanish cántico both reflect the lyrical, melodic quality that distinguishes this word from ordinary speech. SONGS AND HYMNS en: a-song, song, songs | es: canción, con-cánticos, cánticos | fr: Lied | de: Lied Eph 5:19; Col 3:16; Rev 5:9; Rev 14:3

ὠδίς G5604 N-AFP (4×)

Birth pangs or labor pains; figuratively, the anguished throes that precede a new era or deliverance.

Rooted in the physical agony of childbirth, this word extends powerfully into eschatological and theological metaphor. Jesus uses it in the Olivet Discourse (Matt 24:8, Mark 13:8) to describe wars and upheavals as merely the 'beginning of birth pains' — implying that present suffering is not purposeless but preludes something new. Paul echoes this in 1 Thessalonians 5:3, where sudden destruction comes like labor upon a pregnant woman. In Acts 2:24, Peter declares that God loosed the 'pangs of death,' possibly evoking the image of death in labor, unable to hold the risen Christ.

(4×) The acute pains of childbirth, used literally of labor and figuratively of intense suffering that precedes deliverance or a new age. In Matt 24:8 and Mark 13:8, Jesus calls apocalyptic tribulations the 'beginning of birth pains' (archē ōdinōn), suggesting inevitable intensification before the new creation arrives. Spanish renders this as 'dolores de parto,' French as 'douleur,' both preserving the childbirth metaphor. Acts 2:24 applies the image strikingly to death itself — God 'loosed the birth pangs of death' — portraying the resurrection as a delivery from death's grip. PAIN AND SUFFERING en: birth-pains, birth-pang, of-birth-pains | es: de-dolores, de-dolores-de-parto, dolor-de-parto | fr: douleur, ὠδὶν | de: ὠδίνων, ὠδὶν, ὠδῖνας Matt 24:8; Mark 13:8; Acts 2:24; 1Thess 5:3

ὠδίνω G5605 V-PPA-VFS (3×)

to be in labor, suffer birth pangs; to travail in childbirth

This verb describes the pains of childbirth or being in travail, and extends metaphorically to any intense anguish or struggle. In Galatians 4:19, Paul writes, 'My little children, for whom I labor in birth again until Christ is formed in you'—expressing his anguished concern for the Galatians' spiritual formation. Galatians 4:27 quotes Isaiah 54:1, calling the barren woman to rejoice, 'for the desolate has many more children than she who has a husband,' with the command 'Break forth and cry aloud, you who are not in labor.' Revelation 12:2 depicts the woman clothed with the sun 'being with child, cried out in labor and in pain to give birth.' The term conveys both physical and spiritual anguish in bringing forth new life.

(3×) The translations emphasize the labor process: English 'being in labor, travailing,' Spanish 'estando en dolores de parto, sufriendo dolores de parto' (being in birth pains, suffering birth pains), French 'enfantant' (giving birth), German 'gebärend' (bearing). Galatians 4:19 uses the image for Paul's spiritual anguish over the Galatians' immaturity. Galatians 4:27, quoting Isaiah, contrasts the barren woman (not in labor) with one who bears many children. Revelation 12:2 depicts cosmic birth pangs as the woman brings forth the male child who will rule the nations—an apocalyptic image of Messiah's coming through Israel's suffering. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: I-am-in-labor, being-in-labor, travailing | es: estando-en-dolores-de-parto, sufriendo-dolores-de-parto, sufro-dolores-de-parto | fr: enfantant | de: gebaerend Gal 4:19; Gal 4:27; Rev 12:2

ὦμος G5606 N-AMP (2×)

the shoulder with the upper arm

The shoulder, particularly the upper part near the neck, often symbolizing strength and the capacity to bear burdens. In Matthew 23:4, Jesus condemns religious leaders who load heavy burdens on people's shoulders without lifting a finger to help. In Luke 15:5, the good shepherd joyfully carries the lost sheep on his shoulders. The same body part represents both oppressive weight and tender rescue—the difference lies in who's doing the carrying and why.

(2×) Homer's epics distinguished the shoulder (ὦμος) from the forearm (ὠλένη), and classical texts frequently mention carrying things 'on the shoulders.' The two New Testament uses create a striking contrast: religious burdens imposed versus a shepherd's joyful carrying. Across translations (Spanish 'hombros,' French 'épaule'), the anatomical reference remains constant, but the theological weight shifts dramatically. One context pictures crushing oppression, the other picture redemptive love—same shoulders, radically different loads. SHOULDER BODY PART en: shoulders | es: hombros | fr: épaule | de: ὦμους Matt 23:4; Luke 15:5

εἰμί G5607

being, while being; present participle of 'to be'

This participial form of 'to be' functions adjectivally or adverbially, describing states of existence or circumstances. It often provides background information or explains the conditions under which an action occurs. New Testament writers use it to characterize people by their status or qualities—being disciples, being poor, being in a certain place. As a circumstantial participle, it frequently means 'while being' or 'since he/she/it is,' connecting the state of being to the main action of the sentence.

ὠνέομαι G5608 V-AIM-3S (1×)

buy, purchase, acquire by payment

To purchase or acquire something through payment. In Acts 7:16, Stephen recounts how Abraham bought a tomb from the sons of Hamor at Shechem for a sum of silver. The term across languages (Spanish 'compró', French 'acheter', English 'bought') consistently denotes commercial transaction and property acquisition, an important detail in tracing the patriarchal connection to the promised land through purchased burial rights.

(1×) To acquire through purchase or financial transaction. Acts 7:16 uses this verb to describe Abraham's acquisition of a burial plot, though the exact historical details are debated. The commercial nature of the transaction establishes legal ownership and permanent connection to the land, anticipating Israel's future inheritance. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: bought | es: compró | fr: acheter | de: ὠνήσατο Acts 7:16

ᾠόν G5609 N-ANS (1×)

egg, ovum

A bird's egg, typically a hen's egg in domestic contexts. Jesus uses this common food item in Luke 11:12 within a rhetorical question about parental provision: if a child asks for an egg, what father would give a scorpion? The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'un-huevo', French 'œuf', English 'an-egg') uniformly identify this ordinary food, which Jesus employs to illustrate the reliability of divine provision compared to human parental instincts.

(1×) An egg, particularly a hen's egg as food. In Luke 11:12, Jesus invokes the egg as an example of a normal, harmless food a child might request, contrasting it with a scorpion—something harmful that no good father would substitute. The image reinforces trust in God's benevolent provision. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: an-egg | es: un-huevo | fr: œuf | de: ᾠόν Luke 11:12

ὥρα G5610 N-NFS (106×)

Hour, time, moment; a specific period ranging from a literal hour to a decisive or appointed time

Hora spans a range from a literal twelfth-of-daylight hour to a theologically charged moment or appointed time. In narrative contexts it marks clock time ('the tenth hour,' John 1:39) or duration. More significantly, it denotes divinely appointed moments — Jesus repeatedly speaks of 'my hour' as his destined time of glorification through suffering (John 2:4; 7:30; 12:23). The eschatological 'hour' signals the end times (1 John 2:18). Translations across languages use straightforward cognates — Spanish 'hora,' French 'heure,' German 'Stunde' — all capturing both temporal and kairos dimensions.

hour / time / moment (106×) A period of time ranging from a specific clock hour to a decisive, divinely appointed moment. Covers literal time-keeping ('about the sixth hour,' Matt 27:45), instantaneous healing moments ('from that hour,' Matt 8:13; 9:22), Jesus's destined 'hour' of passion and glorification (John 2:4; 12:23), and eschatological turning points (Rev 3:10). The Greek term bridges chronos (measured time) and kairos (significant time) in a single word. HOUR TIME MOMENT

en: hour | es: hora, la-hora | fr: heure | de: Stunde Matt 8:13; Matt 9:22; Matt 10:19; Matt 14:15; Matt 15:28

ὡραῖος G5611 Adj-AFS (4×)

Beautiful, lovely; originally 'seasonable' or 'timely,' describing what is fitting and attractive in its proper time.

This adjective originally described fruits ripened at the right season, carrying the sense of timeliness and natural beauty. In the New Testament it describes the whitewashed tombs of Matthew 23:27 — outwardly beautiful but inwardly corrupt — and the Beautiful Gate of the temple in Acts 3:2, 10. Paul quotes Isaiah in Romans 10:15, declaring 'how beautiful are the feet of those who bring good news.' The word thus bridges aesthetic appeal and deeper fittingness, suggesting that true beauty is bound up with purpose and right timing.

(4×) Beautiful, fair, or lovely in appearance, often with an undertone of seasonal fitness or appropriateness. In Matt 23:27, Jesus uses it ironically of whitewashed tombs that appear hōraioi externally but conceal death. The 'Beautiful Gate' (Acts 3:2, 10) was likely named for its ornamental splendor — Spanish 'Hermosa,' German 'schoen' both capture the visual magnificence. In Rom 10:15, the beauty described is not merely aesthetic but purposeful: the feet of gospel-bearers are 'beautiful' because they arrive at the right time with the right message, echoing the word's etymological root in hōra (season, hour). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beautiful, beautiful | es: Hermosa, hermosos | fr: beau | de: schoen, ὡραῖοι, Ὡραίαν Matt 23:27; Acts 3:2; Acts 3:10; Rom 10:15

ὠρύομαι G5612 V-PPM/P-NMS (1×)

roar, howl (of predatory animals)

To roar or howl, especially of predatory animals like lions. Peter warns in 1 Peter 5:8 that 'your adversary the devil prowls around like a roaring lion, seeking someone to devour.' The participle form across languages (Spanish 'rugiente', French 'rugissant', English 'roaring') captures the terrifying sound of a hunting predator, making the devil's threat visceral and immediate—not abstract but dangerous and actively seeking prey.

(1×) To roar like a lion or other predator, expressing threat and aggression. In 1 Peter 5:8, the devil is depicted as 'a roaring lion' prowling for victims. The auditory imagery intensifies the warning: Satan's approach is not silent but announces his predatory intent, demanding vigilance and resistance from believers. ROAR GROAN CRY

en: roaring | es: rugiente | fr: ὠρυόμενος | de: bruellen 1Pet 5:8

ὡς G5613 Adv (508×)

As, like (comparative); when, while (temporal); about (approximative); how! (exclamatory); as if; so as to; since

The Greek particle hos is one of the New Testament's most hard-working function words, appearing over 500 times with a semantic range strikingly parallel to its Hebrew counterpart ka'asher. At its core it draws comparisons — 'be perfect as your heavenly Father is perfect' (Matt 5:48) — but it flexes readily into temporal, approximative, exclamatory, and even purposive territory. Its flexibility is mirrored across languages: French comme covers comparison and time, Spanish como spans comparison and exclamation, while German wie handles comparison, time, and exclamation alike. The particle's ability to hover between these functions is part of what makes Koine Greek so compact and expressive.

1. comparative: as, like (394×) Comparative: 'as,' 'like' — the dominant sense at roughly 78% of occurrences, drawing a likeness or manner parallel. 'Your will be done on earth as it is in heaven' (Matt 6:10) and 'be perfect as your Father is perfect' (Matt 5:48) are paradigmatic. Spanish como, French comme, and German wie all converge here with their default comparative meaning. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: as, as-, like- | es: como | fr: comme | de: wie Matt 1:24; Matt 5:48; Matt 6:5; Matt 6:10; Matt 6:12

2. temporal: when, while (70×) Temporal: 'when,' 'while' — introducing a time clause, especially in Luke-Acts narrative. 'When the days of his service were completed' (Luke 1:23) and 'when Elizabeth heard Mary's greeting' (Luke 1:41). Korean ttae ('when') and Spanish cuando distinguish this sharply from the comparative como, confirming a genuine temporal sense. TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS

en: as, when | es: como, cuando | fr: comme | de: wie Luke 1:23; Luke 1:41; Luke 1:44; Luke 2:15; Luke 2:39

3. approximative: about (18×) Approximative: 'about,' 'roughly' — used with numbers or quantities to express estimation. 'About two thousand' swine (Mark 5:13), 'about four thousand' men (Mark 8:9), and 'about twelve years old' (Luke 8:42). Spanish como retains ambiguity, but Korean yak and Hindi lagbhag unambiguously signal approximation. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: about, as, in-about | es: como | fr: comme, comme-, ὡς | de: wie Mark 5:13; Mark 8:9; Luke 1:56; Luke 8:42; John 1:39

4. exclamatory: how! (17×) Exclamatory: 'how!' — introducing an exclamation of degree or manner. 'How the women who had come with him from Galilee observed the tomb' (Luke 23:55) and 'how she had been healed immediately' (Luke 8:47). Spanish cuan/como and German wie serve double duty as exclamatory particles, confirming this reading across traditions. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: How, how, how- | es: como, cuán, cómo | fr: comme, comme-, ὡς | de: wie Mark 4:27; Luke 6:4; Luke 8:47; Luke 23:55; Luke 24:6

5. hypothetical comparison: as if (6×) Hypothetical comparison: 'as if,' 'as though' — introducing an imagined or counterfactual scenario. Peter disclaims credit 'as if by our own power we had made him walk' (Acts 3:12), and plotters feign intention 'as though they would inquire more closely' (Acts 23:15). French comme si and Korean machi help distinguish this from factual comparison. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: as, as-if, as-though | es: como | fr: comme-, ὡς | de: wie Acts 3:12; Acts 23:15; Acts 23:20; Acts 27:30; 2Thess 2:2

6. purpose: so as to (2×) Purpose: 'so as to,' 'in order to' — expressing intended result, typically with an infinitive. Jesus sent messengers ahead 'so as to prepare for him' (Luke 9:52), and Paul counts his life of no value 'so as to finish my course' (Acts 20:24). Spanish para and French pour confirm the purposive reading distinct from comparison. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: so-as | es: para | fr: comme, ὡς | de: wie Luke 9:52; Acts 20:24

7. temporal: since (1×) Temporal starting-point: 'since,' 'from the time that' — marking a temporal origin. Only one occurrence: 'How long since this has been happening to him?' (Mark 9:21). Spanish desde que and French depuis que distinguish this backward-looking temporal sense from the simultaneous 'when' of sense 2. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: since | es: desde-que | fr: comme | de: wie Mark 9:21

ὡσαννά G5614 Heb (6×)

Hosanna; a Hebrew liturgical exclamation meaning 'Save, we pray!' used as an acclamation of praise and messianic hope.

Hosanna transliterates the Hebrew hoshi'ah-na ('Save now!' or 'Save, please!'), drawn from Psalm 118:25—part of the Hallel psalms sung at major festivals. By Jesus' day, this urgent plea had evolved into a shout of joyful acclamation and messianic expectation. The crowds cry it at the Triumphal Entry (Matt 21:9, Mark 11:9-10), pairing it with 'Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord.' Even children echo it in the temple (Matt 21:15). Every translation preserves the word as a transliteration—Spanish Hosana, French Hosanna, German Hosanna—recognizing it as a liturgical exclamation that transcends translation.

(6×) A Hebrew liturgical cry originally meaning 'Save now!' (from Psalm 118:25), which by the Second Temple period had become an exclamation of praise and messianic acclamation. At the Triumphal Entry (Matt 21:9, Mark 11:9-10), the crowds use it to hail Jesus as the Davidic Messiah, and in Matt 21:15 children repeat it in the temple, provoking the chief priests. The universal transliteration across languages (Spanish Hosana, French Hosanna, German Hosanna) reflects its status as an irreducible liturgical term. PRAYER AND SUPPLICATION

en: Hōsanna | es: Hosaná, Hōsanná | fr: Hosanna | de: Hosanna, Ὡσαννὰ Matt 21:9; Matt 21:15; Mark 11:9; Mark 11:10

ὡσαύτως G5615 Adv (17×)

Likewise, in the same way, similarly; an adverb marking parallel actions or behaviors.

Formed from ὡς (as) and αὐτός (same), this adverb draws explicit parallels between actions. In Jesus' parables it structures repeated patterns: a landowner sends servants at different hours and each responds 'likewise' (Matt 20:5); a father asks two sons and the second answers 'likewise' (Matt 21:30). It also connects ethical instruction — deacons 'likewise' must be dignified (1 Tim 3:8), older women 'likewise' reverent (Titus 2:3). Spanish 'asimismo' and 'del-mismo-modo' together capture both the connective and the manner-comparison functions, while German 'ebenso' concisely conveys 'just so.'

likewise, in the same way (17×) An adverb of manner indicating that something is done in the same way or to the same effect as what precedes. It structures narrative parallelism in parables — each group of workers or each son responds 'likewise' (Matt 20:5; 21:30, 36). In the epistles it connects behavioral expectations: deacons must 'likewise' be dignified (1 Tim 3:8), wives 'likewise' submissive (1 Pet 3:1). Spanish 'asimismo' and German 'ebenso' both convey the tight equivalence of action or manner that ὡσαύτως signals. LIKEWISE SIMILARLY en: Likewise, in-same-way, likewise | es: Igualmente, asimismo, del-mismo-modo | fr: de-même, ebenso | de: ebenso Matt 20:5; Matt 21:30; Matt 21:36; Matt 25:17; Mark 12:21

ὡσεί G5616 Adv (21×)

Approximately, about (with numbers); like, as if, as though (in comparisons)

This small but versatile adverb does double duty in the New Testament. With numbers and measurements, hōsei means 'approximately'—'about five thousand men' (Matt 14:21), 'about thirty years of age' (Luke 3:23). The French 'environ' and German 'etwa' capture this approximating function precisely. In its comparative use, the word introduces vivid similes: the Spirit descends 'as a dove' (Matt 3:16), the crowd is 'like sheep without a shepherd' (Matt 9:36), and Jesus' sweat becomes 'as drops of blood' (Luke 22:44). Though easily overlooked, hōsei is the quiet architect of some of Scripture's most memorable imagery.

1. (12×) Used with numerals or time expressions to indicate approximation: 'about, approximately, roughly.' Luke particularly favors this usage—'about five thousand' (Luke 9:14), 'about thirty years old' (Luke 3:23), 'about eight days later' (Luke 9:28). The French 'environ' and German 'etwa' are near-perfect equivalents, while Spanish 'como' serves both this and the comparative sense. Covers 12 of 21 occurrences. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: about | es: como | fr: environ | de: etwa Matt 14:21; Luke 3:23; Luke 9:14; Luke 9:28

2. (9×) Introduces comparisons and similes: 'like, as if, as though.' The Spirit descends upon Jesus 'as a dove' (Matt 3:16), the crowds are 'as sheep without a shepherd' (Matt 9:36), and in Gethsemane Jesus' sweat falls 'as drops of blood' (Luke 22:44). The disciples dismissed the women's report 'as idle talk' (Luke 24:11). The Spanish 'como' and German 'etwa' overlap here, but the comparative force is distinct from mere approximation. Covers 9 occurrences. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: as, as-, as-if | es: como | fr: environ, etwa | de: etwa Matt 3:16; Matt 9:36; Mark 9:26; Luke 22:44; Luke 24:11

Ὡσηέ G5617 N-DMS (1×)

Hosea, Old Testament prophet

The prophet Hosea, whose ministry to the northern kingdom of Israel emphasized God's covenant love despite Israel's unfaithfulness. Paul quotes from Hosea in Romans 9:25, citing the prophet's message that God would call those 'not my people' to become 'my people'—a text Paul applies to the inclusion of Gentiles in God's redemptive plan. The name appears consistently across translations as a proper noun identifying this eighth-century prophet.

(1×) The prophet Hosea, author of the book bearing his name. Romans 9:25 cites Hosea's prophecy about God's mercy extending beyond ethnic Israel, using the prophet's marriage metaphor to illustrate divine grace reclaiming the unfaithful. Paul reads Hosea's oracle as foreshadowing Gentile inclusion in the covenant community. HOSHEA HOSEA NAMES

en: Hosea | es: Hōseè | fr: Osée | de: Hosea Rom 9:25

ὥσπερ G5618 Adv (36×)

Just as, even as; a comparative adverb introducing analogies and similitudes

A compound comparative adverb (from hos + per, 'as indeed') that introduces likeness or analogy, typically at the head of a clause. It appears frequently in Jesus' parables and comparisons: 'just as Jonah was three days in the belly of the great fish' (Matt 12:40), 'just as the tares are gathered and burned' (Matt 13:40). Paul also favors it in theological analogies, comparing the body of Christ to a human body (1 Cor 12:12) and Adam to Christ (Rom 5:19). The word intensifies simple 'as' (hos) with an emphatic particle, yielding 'exactly as' or 'in just the same way.' Spanish 'como' and 'asi como,' French 'comme,' and German 'gleichwie' all reflect the comparative function.

(36×) A comparative particle meaning 'just as' or 'even as,' introducing parallels and similitudes. It strengthens simple hos with the emphatic per, producing a more exact or emphatic comparison. Jesus uses it for parabolic analogies (Matt 12:40, 13:40) and ethical comparisons (Matt 6:2, 6:7). Paul employs it for typological parallels between Adam and Christ (Rom 5:19, 1 Cor 15:22). Multilingual glosses—Spanish 'asi como,' French 'comme,' German 'gleichwie'—converge on the comparative function without semantic variation. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: Just-as, as-, as-also | es: Porque-como, así-como, como | fr: comme, ὥσπερ | de: gleichwie Matt 6:2; Matt 6:7; Matt 12:40; Matt 13:40; Matt 18:17

ὡσπερεί G5619 Adv (1×)

as if, as it were, like

A comparative particle meaning 'as if' or 'as it were,' introducing hypothetical or approximate comparisons. Paul uses it in 1 Corinthians 15:8 to describe his encounter with the risen Christ: 'Last of all, as to one untimely born, he appeared also to me.' The term across languages (Spanish 'como-si', French 'comme-si', German 'gleichsam', English 'as-if') signals that Paul's apostolic calling was abnormal—like a premature birth, outside the natural sequence of apostolic appointments.

(1×) Comparative particle introducing a hypothetical or approximate comparison, 'as if' or 'as it were.' In 1 Corinthians 15:8, Paul describes himself 'as to one untimely born,' using this particle to acknowledge the exceptional, even unnatural character of his Damascus road encounter compared to the other apostles' post-resurrection experiences. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: as-if | es: como-si | fr: comme-si | de: gleichsam 1Cor 15:8

ὥστε G5620 Conj (83×)

So that, therefore — consecutive conjunction introducing a result, consequence, or conclusion

The Greek ὥστε (from ὡς + τε) is a consecutive conjunction that introduces the outcome or logical result of a preceding statement. It appears 83 times in the New Testament, functioning in two main constructions: with an infinitive to express natural or intended result ('so as to,' Matt 8:24), and with a finite verb or as a sentence connector meaning 'therefore' or 'consequently' (Matt 12:12; 1 Cor 3:21). Spanish de-modo-que and así-que, French de-sorte-que, and German so-dass all capture the resultative force. Paul uses it frequently to draw practical conclusions from theological arguments (1 Cor 3:7; 4:5; Phil 2:12).

so that, with the result that, therefore (83×) A consecutive conjunction expressing result, consequence, or logical conclusion — 'so that,' 'with the result that,' 'therefore.' Constructed either with an infinitive for natural result (Matt 8:24, the boat was being swamped 'so that' it was covered) or as a sentence-level connector drawing conclusions (1 Cor 3:21, 'so then, let no one boast'). Spanish de-modo-que, French de-sorte-que, and German so-dass uniformly reflect the resultative force. Especially prominent in Pauline argumentation. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: so-as, so-that | es: así-que, como-para, de-modo-que | fr: de-sorte-que | de: so-dass, sodass- Matt 8:24; Matt 8:28; Matt 12:12; Matt 12:22; Matt 13:2

ὠτίον G5621 N-GNS (5×)

ear — the external ear or auricle, the physical organ of hearing

Otion is a diminutive of ous ('ear'), originally meaning 'little ear' or 'auricle,' though in New Testament usage the diminutive force has faded and it simply means 'ear.' All five occurrences cluster around a single dramatic event: the severing and healing of the ear in Gethsemane. Each Gospel names the moment — Peter strikes the high priest's servant and cuts off his ear (Matt 26:51; Mark 14:47; John 18:10, 26), and Luke alone records Jesus touching it and healing it (Luke 22:51). The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'oreja,' French 'oreille,' German 'Ohr' — uniformly renders the concrete anatomical sense without variation.

(5×) The outer ear, the physical auricle — a diminutive form of ous that in NT usage carries no diminutive nuance and simply denotes the external ear. All 5 occurrences relate to the incident in Gethsemane where Peter cuts off the ear of the high priest's servant Malchus (Matt 26:51; Mark 14:47; John 18:10, 26), with Luke recording Jesus' miraculous restoration of the severed ear (Luke 22:51). The clustering of all attestations around this single narrative episode, rendered uniformly as Spanish 'oreja,' French 'oreille,' and German 'Ohr,' confirms one straightforward anatomical sense. HEARING AND EAR

en: ear | es: oreja | fr: oreille | de: Ohr, ὠτίον, ὠτίου Matt 26:51; Mark 14:47; Luke 22:51; John 18:10; John 18:26

ὠφέλ-εια G5622 N-GFS (2×)

help, aid, benefit, or advantage gained from something

This noun denotes practical benefit or advantage, the kind of help that actually does someone good. Paul uses it in Romans 3:1 to ask what advantage there is in being Jewish, and Jude 1:16 references those who flatter people for advantage. Classical Greek used it for military aid or medical assistance—concrete help, not abstract theory. The word assumes a pragmatic view: what's the actual benefit? What advantage does this bring?

(2×) Ancient usage emphasized tangible assistance—military reinforcements, medical aid, practical services. Thucydides wrote of sending help (ὠφέλεια) to Epidamnus; medical texts discussed treatments that bring benefit. In Romans 3:1, Paul's rhetorical question about Jewish advantage sets up his argument about the Law's purpose. Jude's usage reveals manipulative flattery seeking personal gain. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'provecho/utilidad,' French 'profit/utilité,' German 'Nutzen'—all emphasize measurable advantage, concrete benefit rather than mere sentiment. GAIN AND GREED

en: benefit, for-advantage | es: de-provecho, utilidad | fr: de-profit, utilité | de: Nutzen, des-Nutzens Rom 3:1; Jude 1:16

ὠφελ-έω G5623 V-PIM/P-3S (15×)

To profit, benefit, or be of advantage; used transitively of helping others and intransitively of being useful.

A practical, marketplace-flavored verb asking the perennial question: what good does it do? Jesus asks, 'What does it profit a man to gain the whole world and forfeit his soul?' (Mark 8:36; Matt 16:26). Paul insists that circumcision profits if you keep the law (Rom 2:25) and that tongues without interpretation profit nothing (1 Cor 14:6). The word can take three shapes: passive ('be benefited'), absolute ('be of use'), or transitive ('benefit someone'). Spanish 'aprovecha/aprovechar' and German 'nuetzen' consistently select economic-advantage vocabulary, confirming the cost-benefit framing that runs through every occurrence. Hebrews 4:2 poignantly notes that the word preached 'did not profit' hearers who lacked faith.

1. be benefited, gain profit (7×) To be benefited or gain advantage (passive/middle). The woman who spent all she had on physicians 'was not benefited' (Mark 5:26). Jesus challenges: 'What is a person profited if he gains the whole world?' (Matt 16:26; Luke 9:25). Spanish 'es beneficiado / fueras beneficiado' and French 'profiter' consistently render the subject as recipient of benefit. Corban vows (Matt 15:5; Mark 7:11) ironically invoke this sense to dodge filial duty. PROFIT AND BENEFIT

en: I-am-profited, having-benefited, is-profited | es: aprovecho, es-beneficiado, fueras-beneficiado | fr: profiter | de: nuetzen, ὠφελεῖται, ὠφεληθήσεται Matt 15:5; Matt 16:26; Mark 5:26; Mark 7:11; Luke 9:25

2. be of use, avail (5×) To be of use or avail (intransitive/absolute). Pilate saw 'he was accomplishing nothing' (Matt 27:24). 'The flesh profits nothing' (John 6:63). Spanish 'aprovecha' and German 'nuetzen' frame utility in absolute terms. Paul's rhetorical 'what do you gain?' (Rom 2:25) and the Pharisees' exasperated 'you are accomplishing nothing' (John 12:19) both deploy this impersonal sense. PROFIT AND BENEFIT

en: it-was-accomplishing, profits, you-gain | es: aprovecha, aprovecháis, beneficia | fr: profiter | de: nuetzen, ὠφελεῖ Matt 27:24; Mark 8:36; John 6:63; John 12:19; Rom 2:25

3. benefit someone, help (3×) To benefit someone, to help (transitive active). Paul asks what it would profit the Corinthians if he came speaking only in tongues (1 Cor 14:6). He warns the Galatians that Christ 'will profit you nothing' if they rely on circumcision (Gal 5:2). Spanish 'aprovechara / aprovecho' and French 'profiter' retain the advantage frame while the grammar shifts to direct object. Hebrews 4:2 says the word 'did not profit them' who heard without faith. PROFIT AND BENEFIT

en: benefited, will-I-profit, will-profit | es: aprovecharé, aprovecharé, aprovechó | fr: profiter | de: nuetzen 1Cor 14:6; Gal 5:2; Heb 4:2

ὠφέλ-ῐμος G5624 Adj-NNP (4×)

Beneficial, profitable, useful; describing what yields genuine advantage or practical good.

A straightforward adjective of practical value, this word evaluates things by the real benefit they produce. Paul uses it in 1 Timothy 4:8 to draw a memorable comparison: bodily exercise is profitable for a little, but godliness is profitable for all things. In 2 Timothy 3:16, all Scripture is declared 'beneficial' for teaching and correction. Titus 3:8 urges believers toward good works that are 'profitable' for people. Across languages — Spanish 'provechosa,' German 'nuetzlich' — the translations consistently emphasize tangible, practical usefulness.

(4×) Useful, advantageous, or yielding genuine benefit for a stated purpose or person. In the Pastoral Epistles, Paul employs this term to weigh competing goods: physical training is ōphelimos 'for a little' while godliness is ōphelimos 'for all things' (1 Tim 4:8), creating a memorable scale of value. The same practical tone appears in 2 Tim 3:16, where Scripture's profitability is spelled out in four dimensions — teaching, reproof, correction, and training. Spanish 'útil/provechosa' and German 'nuetzlich' both reinforce the concrete, results-oriented flavor of this adjective. PROFIT AND BENEFIT

en: beneficial, profitable | es: provechosa, provechosas, útil | fr: ὠφέλιμα, ὠφέλιμος, ὠφέλιμός | de: nuetzlich 1Tim 4:8; 2Tim 3:16; Titus 3:8