An abstract plural noun denoting the state of bereavement or childlessness. It appears in Isaiah 49:20 in the phrase 'sons of your bereavement'—children born during or despite the period when Zion was bereaved. The abstract plural form (שִׁכְלַיִם) functions as a descriptive genitive, characterizing the children by the condition prevailing when they were conceived or born. The restoration context makes this poignant: even during exile and loss, God was secretly preparing the next generation. These 'bereavement children' will crowd around their mother, declaring the place too cramped. The noun transforms personal tragedy into a descriptor of unexpected restoration.

(1×) In Isaiah 49:20, the construct phrase 'sons of your bereavement' (בְּנֵי שִׁכְלַיִךְ) describes the children who will declare 'the place is too cramped for me.' The suffix 'your bereavement' makes Zion's loss personal. Spanish renders 'tu orfandad' (your orphanhood), French and German bracket the Hebrew, recognizing the term's abstract force. These children paradoxically belong to the bereavement period—born in loss yet representing restoration. The phrase captures the exile's bitter irony: Zion thought her children dead, but God was multiplying them in hidden places. The domain assignment to 'Physiological Processes' fits the death-related aspects, though 'family relations' or 'covenant restoration' might better capture the theological dimension. BEREAVEMENT CHILDLESSNESS insight, understanding—penetrating comprehension or discernment (Aramaic)

en: your-bereavement | es: tu-orfandad | fr: [שכליך] | de: [שכליך] Isa 49:20

שָׂכְלְתָנוּ H7924 Conj-w / N-fs (3×)

This Aramaic noun denotes insight, understanding, or discernment. All three occurrences are in Daniel 5 (verses 11, 12, 14), describing Daniel's exceptional wisdom as having 'insight and understanding like the wisdom of the gods.' The term appears in formulaic descriptions of Daniel's gifts, emphasizing his ability to interpret dreams and solve mysteries. It represents intellectual and spiritual perception beyond ordinary human capacity.

(3×) The three uses are in Daniel 5:11, 12, and 14, all describing Daniel's extraordinary understanding in similar or identical phrases. Spanish 'entendimiento' (understanding) and cognate terms appear. The repetition across these verses (queen mother's testimony, king's summary, then direct address to Daniel) emphasizes this quality through multiple witnesses. The phrase 'insight and understanding like the wisdom of the gods' elevates Daniel's gift to supernatural levels. UNDERSTANDING AND DISCERNMENT

en: and-understanding | es: y-entendimiento | fr: [ושכלתנו] | de: [ושכלתנו] Dan 5:11; Dan 5:12; Dan 5:14

שָׁכַם H7925 V-Hifil-Imperf.Cohort-1cp (65×)

To rise early, get up at dawn (Hifil); used adverbially for persistent, earnest action; as participle, 'early riser.'

Shakam is the Bible's verb of dawn initiative — to load up the pack animals and set out before sunrise. Its Hifil form appears in virtually every patriarchal journey narrative: Abraham 'rose early in the morning' (Gen 22:3), as did Jacob (Gen 28:18) and Joshua (Josh 3:1). Spanish madrugar ('to get up at dawn') captures it perfectly, as does French se lever tot. In prophetic rhetoric, the infinitive absolute hashkem becomes an adverb of divine urgency: God 'rising early and sending' prophets (Jer 7:25; 2 Chr 36:15) — a poignant idiom for persistent, unwearied effort that the people reject. The participial form in Isaiah 5:11 and Hosea 6:4 describes habitual early risers, whether pursuing drink or fleeting devotion.

1. rise early, get up early (47×) The core Hifil finite verb: to rise early in the morning, to get up at dawn for action. The 47 occurrences span patriarchal narratives (Gen 19:27, 20:8, 21:14, 22:3), conquest accounts (Josh 3:1, 6:12), and everyday situations (Judg 19:9, 1 Sam 15:12). Spanish madrugo ('he rose early'), French il se leva tot, and Korean ilchig ireonada all render this concrete, physical rising at dawn. The verb regularly chains with another action verb — 'rose early and built an altar,' 'rose early and went' — emphasizing the initiative taken at first light. RISING EARLY en: and-he-rose-early, and-rose-early, and-they-rose-early | es: Y-madrugaron, Y-madrugó, y-madrugó | fr: [וַיַּשְׁכֵּם], et-il-se-leva-tôt, et-ils-se-leva-tôt | de: und-er-erhob-sich-early, und-er-stand-auf-frueh, und-erhob-sich-early Gen 19:2; Gen 19:27; Gen 20:8; Gen 21:14; Gen 22:3

2. rising early (persistent action) (14×) The Hifil infinitive absolute hashkem used adverbially to express earnest, persistent, diligent action — especially in the prophetic formula 'rising early and sending/speaking/warning.' Jeremiah uses this idiom repeatedly (7:13, 25; 25:3-4; 26:5; 29:19; 35:14-15; 44:4), and 2 Chronicles 36:15 echoes it. The dawn-rising image becomes a metaphor for God's tireless urgency in calling Israel to repentance. Spanish madrugando and French se lever tot (as gerund) preserve the adverbial force. Proverbs 27:14 uses it humorously: blessing a neighbor 'rising early' (loudly, at dawn) is counted a curse. RISING EARLY
en: and-rising-early, early, rising-early | es: madrugando, madrugándose, por-la-mañana | fr: [הַשְׁכֵּם], et-se-lever-tôt, se-lever-tôt | de: early, frueh, frueh-aufstehen 1Sam 17:16; 2Chr 36:15; Prov 27:14; Jer 7:13; Jer 7:25

3. early riser (substantive/adjectival) (4×) The Hifil participle used substantivally or adjectivally for one who habitually rises early. Isaiah 5:11 warns against 'those who rise early (mashkimei) in the morning to pursue strong drink.' Psalm 127:2 declares it vain to be 'early risers' (mashkimei qum) without the Lord's blessing. Hosea 6:4 and 13:3 use early-morning imagery (dew, cloud) alongside the participial form to convey fleeting devotion. Spanish los que madrugan ('those who rise early') and Korean ilchig ileo-naneun ja capture the habitual, characterizing quality of this form. RISING EARLY
en: early, rising-early, those-rising-early | es: de-los-que-madrugan, los-que-madrugan, que-madruga | fr: de-se-lever-tôt, se-levant-tôt, se-lever-tôt | de: frueh, frueh-aufstehen, rising-früh Ps 127:2; Isa 5:11; Hos 6:4; Hos 13:3

שֶׁכֶם H7926 N-msc / 3fs (21×)

Shoulder, the body part used for bearing burdens; also the city Shechem and figuratively a stubborn turning away.
Shekhem is the shoulder – the strong, load-bearing ridge of the upper body where bundles rest and yokes sit. Scripture's earliest uses show it literally: Rebekah lowers her water jar from her shoulder (Gen 24:15, 45), the Israelites carry dough on their shoulders at the Exodus (Exod 12:34), and Issachar is pictured as a donkey bending his shoulder to the load (Gen 49:15). The city of Shechem likely takes its name from the saddle-like 'shoulder' of the ridge between Gerizim and Ebal (Gen 48:22). In prophetic idiom, 'turning the shoulder' becomes a metaphor for stubborn refusal to listen – an image of someone literally turning their back on the speaker (Neh 9:29; Zech 7:11).

1. shoulder (body part) (19×) The physical shoulder used for carrying loads, bearing yokes, or supporting burdens. Genesis 21:14 pictures Abraham placing bread and a skin of water on Hagar's shoulder; Genesis 9:23 has Shem and Japheth laying a garment on their shoulders. Isaiah 10:27 and 14:25 use the shoulder figuratively for the burden of oppression. Spanish 'hombro,' French 'epaule,' and German 'Schulter' all map this sense directly. The dual or construct forms appear throughout narrative and poetry. Key passages: Genesis 24:15, 49:15; Exodus 12:34; Psalm 81:6. SHOULDER BODY PART en: from-his-shoulder, her-shoulder, his-shoulder | es: desde-su-hombro, hombro, hombro-de | fr: de-son-épaule, leur-épaules, mon-שכמי-moi | de: Schulter, [שכם], [שכמי] Gen 9:23; Gen 21:14; Gen 24:15; Gen 24:45; Gen 49:15

2. Shechem (place name) (1×) The proper noun Shechem, the ancient city in the hill country of Ephraim between Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal. Genesis 48:22 records Jacob giving Joseph 'one shekhem above your brothers,' a wordplay linking the city name to its topographical 'shoulder' or 'ridge.' Multilingual glosses preserve the name: Spanish 'Shejem,' French 'Sichem,' German 'Schechem.' SHECHEM NAMES
en: Shechem | es: Shejem | fr: Sichem | de: Schechem Gen 48:22

3. back turned in stubbornness (1×) A figurative extension where 'turning the shoulder' means presenting one's back in stubbornness or rebellion. Psalm 21:12 speaks of making enemies 'turn shoulder' – that is, flee in retreat. Nehemiah 9:29 and Zechariah 7:11 use the idiom for Israel's refusal to heed the prophets: they gave a 'stubborn shoulder' and would not listen. English 'turn their back' and German 'wenden ihr zuruck' capture the embodied metaphor of deliberate, defiant withdrawal. SHECHEM NAMES
en: turn-their-back | es: hombro | fr: Sichem | de: wenden-ihr-zurück Ps 21:12

שְׁכֶם H7927 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (63×)

Shechem — the ancient Canaanite city (modern Nablus) between Gerizim and Ebal, and the personal name of Hamor's son.
One of the most historically layered place names in Scripture. Shechem (modern Nablus) sits in the pass between Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal in the central hill country — the first place where Abram built an altar upon entering Canaan (Gen 12:6). It became a city of refuge (Josh 20:7), the site of Joshua's covenant renewal (Josh 24:1), and the volatile setting for Abimelech's kingship and destruction (Judges 9). Spanish renders it "Siquem" or "Shekem," French "Sichem," and German "Sichem" — all reflecting the ancient pronunciation through different phonological filters. The same name belongs to the son of Hamor the Hivite, the local prince whose assault on Dinah triggered the bloody reprisal by Simeon and Levi (Gen 34).

1. Shechem (city) (62×) The ancient Canaanite city of Shechem, situated between Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal in Ephraim's hill country, modern Nablus. A site of tremendous theological weight: Abram's first altar in Canaan (Gen 12:6), Jacob's purchase of land (Gen 33:18-19), Joshua's covenant ceremony (Josh 24:1), and Abimelech's turbulent reign (Judg 9). With 62 occurrences, it is one of the most frequently named cities in the Hebrew Bible. Spanish "Siquem," French "Sichem," and German "Sichem" all preserve the ancient sibilant opening. SHECHEM NAMES
en: Shechem | es: Shejem, Shekem, Siquem | fr: Sichem | de: Schechem, Sichem, Sichem-ist Gen 12:6; Gen 33:18; Gen 33:19; Gen 34:2; Gen 34:4

2. Shechem (person) (1×) The personal name Shechem, borne by the son of Hamor the Hivite, a prince in the region of the city who assaulted Dinah and was subsequently killed by her brothers Simeon and Levi (Gen 34:2-26). Appears once in a context where Shechem the person is distinguished from Shechem the city — at Gen 34:20, where Spanish adds the conjunction "y-Shejem" and German "und-Sichem," both flagging the name as a coordinate personal reference rather than a toponym. SHECHEM NAMES
en: and-Shechem | es: y-Shejem | fr: et-Sichem | de: und-Sichem Gen 34:20

שְׁכֶם H7928 N-proper-ms (3×)

Shekhem (personal)—an individual from the Manassite clan bearing the city's name
This personal name identifies an individual from Manasseh's lineage, distinct from the more famous city of Shechem though bearing the same name. Numbers 26:31 and Joshua 17:2 list him among Manasseh's descendants in genealogical and land-inheritance contexts. First Chronicles 7:19 includes him in Manasseh's genealogy. The name's connection to the city suggests possible eponymous relationship, where clan and location shared nomenclature.

(3×) All three uses are genealogical: Numbers 26:31 (census list), Joshua 17:2 (land inheritance), and 1 Chronicles 7:19 (genealogy). Spanish 'Siquem' and variations transliterate the name. The 'sons of Shekhem' or 'Shekhem' appears in contexts establishing Manassite clan structures and territorial claims. This personal name shares form with the city but refers to an individual ancestor, showing how personal and place names intertwined in tribal identity. SHECHEM NAMES

en: Shekhem, and-Shechem, and-Shekhem | es: Siquem, y-Siquem, y-Séquem | fr: Shekhem, [ושכם], et-Shechem | de: Shekhem, [ושכם], und-Sichem Num 26:31; Josh 17:2; 1Chr 7:19

שְׁכֶם H7929 Prep-m / N-msc / 3fs (1×)

shoulder, shoulder blade; metaphorically: burden-bearing, service, rebellion

A masculine noun denoting the shoulder or shoulder blade, frequently appearing in literal and metaphorical contexts. Literally, it designates the body part that bears loads—texts describe placing burdens on shoulders or animals carrying loads. Metaphorically, 'shoulder' represents service (bearing burdens), submission (turning the shoulder toward someone), or rebellion (giving a stubborn shoulder). Genesis 49:15 depicts Issachar bending his shoulder to bear burdens under the figure of a donkey. Prophetic texts use shoulder imagery for worship (bringing offerings) or defiance (turning away the shoulder to resist God). The term also connects to the place name Shechem (שְׁכֶם), meaning 'shoulder' or 'ridge.'

(1×) In Job 31:22, the phrase 'from the shoulder blade' (מִשִּׁכְמָה) appears in Job's self-curse: 'let my arm fall from the shoulder blade.' The preposition 'from' (מִן) indicates separation. Spanish translates 'del omóplato' (from the shoulder blade), French includes the possessive 'de sa [shoulder-blade] elle' (from her shoulder blade), German brackets the Hebrew. Job invokes catastrophic bodily disintegration if he has sinned—shoulder separation from arm would render him helpless. This curse language uses anatomical precision to invoke divine judgment. The reference to shoulder blade specifically (possibly the socket or scapula) intensifies the image of complete physical breakdown. SHOULDER BODY PART

en: from-the-shoulder-blade | es: del-omóplato | fr: de-sa-משכמה-elle | de: [משכמה] Job 31:22

שִׁכְמִי H7930 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shechemite (gentilics denoting inhabitants/descendants of Shechem)

A gentilics adjective denoting someone from or descended from Shechem, the important central hill-country city. The term appears with the article as a collective noun in Numbers 26:31 during the census of Manasseh's clans. The Shechemite clan descended from Shechem son of Gilead, forming one of Manasseh's major family groups. Shechem's prominence in biblical geography and narrative (Abraham's altar, Jacob's land purchase, Joseph's burial, Joshua's covenant ceremony) made the Shechemite identity significant. The gentilics form (שִׁכְמִי) follows standard Hebrew patterns for deriving ethnic/geographical identities from place names.

(1×) In Numbers 26:31, the collective noun 'the Shechemite' (הַשִּׁכְמִי) designates Shechem's clan within Manasseh's tribal census. The article makes it collective—'the Shechemite [family/clan].' Spanish translates 'los siquemitas' (the Shechemites, plural), French 'le Shechemite' (the Shechemite, singular collective), German 'der Shechemite.' The multilingual evidence shows translators recognizing this as a clan designation. This census categorizes Israel's military-aged males by clan for territorial allotment and tribal organization. The Shechemite clan's inclusion ensures they receive inheritance rights in Manasseh's territory. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shechemite | es: los-siquemitas | fr: le-Shechemite | de: der-Shechemite Num 26:31

שָׁכַן H7931 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (129×)

To settle down, dwell, inhabit; of God's presence: to tabernacle; causative: to cause to dwell, place, settle

A verb of rooted habitation that stretches from ordinary human residence to the awesome mystery of God's indwelling presence. Its most theologically rich usage describes the divine Shekinah—God's glory 'settling' on Mount Sinai (Exod 24:16) and 'dwelling' in the Tabernacle (Exod 25:8). The cognate Aramaic שְׁכִינָה (Shekinah) and Arabic ´ (to be at rest, dwell) both illuminate the root's core meaning: not mere location but settled, restful presence. The Piel and Hifil causative stems extend this to God 'causing his Name to dwell' in the chosen sanctuary (Deut 12:11), a striking theological idiom found nowhere else in Semitic religion.

1. Qal: dwell, inhabit (75×) The basic Qal sense of dwelling or inhabiting a place as an ongoing state. Covers the broadest range: Shem dwelling in the tents of Japheth (Gen 9:27), Zebulun dwelling by the seashore (Gen 49:13), Israel dwelling in the land, and God dwelling among his people (Exod 25:8). Arabic ´, Spanish habitará, and Korean 거하다 all converge on settled, continuous residence. This sense anchors the theological use—when God 'dwells' among Israel, the same ordinary verb is elevated to express covenant presence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-I-will-dwell, and-shall-dwell, and-they-will-dwell | es: Y-habitaré, habitará, habitarán | fr: –demeurer, demeurer, et-Je—demeurer | de: dwells, er-wird-wohnen-in, er-wohnt Gen 9:27; Gen 35:22; Gen 49:13; Exod 24:16; Exod 25:8

2. Qal participle: inhabitant, dweller (24×) The Qal participle used substantivally to mean 'inhabitant, dweller, one who resides.' Appears with construct chains: שֹׁכְנֵי אֹהָלִים 'tent-dwellers' (Num 24:2), or שֹׁכְנִי סְנֶה 'the One dwelling in the bush' (Deut 33:16)—an epithet for God himself. Arabic ساكن / سكن and Spanish el que habita confirm the participial noun function. The theological use in Psalm 135:21 ('blessed be the LORD from Zion, the One dwelling in Jerusalem') shows how the participle becomes a divine title. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: He-dwells, [ketiv:you-dwelling], and-dwellers-of | es: [kethiv], el-que-habita, el-que-habitó-en | fr: demeure, demeurer, dweller-de | de: Wohnung, der-Wohnung, der-Zelt-dwellers Gen 14:13; Lev 16:16; Num 5:3; Num 24:2; Num 35:34

3. Piel: cause to dwell (12×) The Piel causative stem meaning to cause or allow someone to dwell, or more specifically, to settle God's Name in a chosen place. The distinctive formula לְשַׁכֵּן שְׁמוֹ שָׁם 'to cause his Name to dwell there' (Deut 12:11, 14:23, 16:2, 6) is a Deuteronomic signature phrase. Arabic ´ (Form IV causative) and Swahili -kalisha (causative of -kaa 'sit') parallel the morphological structure. This theological idiom makes the sanctuary not merely God's house but the place where his Name takes up residence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: I-caused-to-dwell, and-I-will-let-dwell, he-placed | es: Y-os-haré-habitar, hice-habitar, hizo-habitar | fr: [לשכן], demeurer, et-demeurer | de: er-placed, und-wohnen, wohnen Num 14:30; Deut 12:11; Deut 14:23; Deut 16:2; Deut 16:6

4. Qal: settle, rest upon (9×) A nuanced Qal sense of settling down, coming to rest upon, or temporarily alighting—distinct from permanent habitation. The cloud 'settled' on the Tabernacle (Exod 40:35), the cloud 'rested' over the camp (Num 9:17-18, 22), and God's glory 'settled' on Sinai (Exod 24:16). Arabic ´ (to alight, descend upon) and Spanish reposar (to rest) distinguish this from ordinary dwelling. This sense captures the dynamic, almost physical quality of divine presence descending and remaining. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-be-at-rest, and-settled, dwelt | es: Reposan, moraba, para-reposar | fr: demeura, demeurer, et-demeurer | de: und-sein-bei-Ruhe, und-settled, wohnte Exod 40:35; Num 9:17; Num 9:18; Num 9:22; Num 10:12

5. Hifil: place, settle someone (6×) The Hifil causative stem meaning to place or settle someone or something in a location by authoritative action. God 'placed' the cherubim east of Eden (Gen 3:24), Joshua 'set up' the Tabernacle at Shiloh (Josh 18:1), and the psalmist warns against letting wickedness 'settle' in one's tent (Job 11:14, Ps 7:5). Arabic ´ (Form IV) and Spanish hicieron habitar confirm the causative-agentive reading. Distinguished from the Piel

(sense 3) primarily by context and the Hifil's emphasis on the agent's authority over the placement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-I-will-cause-to-dwell, and-he-settled, and-placed | es: e-hicieron-habitar, e-hizo-habitar, haga-habitar | fr: demeurer, et-demeurer, et-placer-en-haut | de: lass-ihn-lay, und-er-settled, und-setzen-hinauf Gen 3:24; Josh 18:1; Job 11:14; Ps 7:5; Ps 78:55

6. Qal passive: be inhabited (3×) A stative or passive Qal sense meaning 'to be inhabited,' used of cities or regions that will or will not have residents. Isaiah 13:20 declares Babylon 'shall never be inhabited,' Jeremiah 46:26 and 50:39 echo the same desolation oracle. Arabic passive and Spanish será habitada confirm the passive reading. These prophetic uses powerfully reverse the verb's positive connotations—the God who causes his Name to dwell can also decree that a place shall never again be dwelt in. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: it-shall-be-inhabited, she-will-be-dwelt-in | es: se-morará, será-habitada, será-morada | fr: demeurer | de: wohnen Isa 13:20; Jer 46:26; Jer 50:39

שְׁכֵן H7932 V-Piel-Perf-3ms (2×)
To cause to dwell, to settle; to make one's name dwell (of God's presence in the temple)
An Aramaic verb meaning to cause to dwell or to settle. Its most significant use is in Ezra 6:12, where God is said to 'cause his name to dwell' in the Jerusalem temple—a technical phrase for divine presence and authorization. In Daniel 4:21, birds 'nest' or 'dwell' in the branches of Nebuchadnezzar's dream-tree, a simpler, more literal use. The multilingual evidence reflects both causative and simple dwelling senses, with the Ezra passage carrying profound theological weight in Second Temple contexts about where and how God's presence resides.

(2×) The Ezra passage echoes Deuteronomic theology of the 'name dwelling' in the chosen place, now applied to the rebuilt temple. The verb's causative force ('has caused to dwell') underscores divine agency in establishing sacred space. Daniel's usage is more mundane—birds nesting—but even here, the imagery of dwelling and inhabiting remains central. The Spanish 'hace habitar' and English 'has caused to dwell' rightly capture the causative nuance in Ezra. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: has-caused-to-dwell, nested | es: anidaban, hace-habitar | fr: [שכן], habiter | de: [שכן], wohnte Ezra 6:12; Dan 4:21

שֶׁכֶן H7933 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf / 3ms (1×)
dwelling, dwelling place (of God)
A disputed noun appearing in Deuteronomy 12:5, referring to God's chosen dwelling place. The text instructs Israel to seek 'the place YHWH your God chooses from all your tribes to set His name there—His dwelling.' Some interpret this as an infinitive construct from the Piel of שָׁכַן ('to cause to dwell'), while others view it as a noun meaning 'dwelling.' Ben Sira uses a similar form (שְׁכָנוֹ) for 'dwelling.' The term anticipates the temple as the earthly location where God's name resides. This dwelling theology centralized worship, replacing multiple altars with one sanctioned site where Israel could properly encounter YHWH.

(1×) In Deuteronomy 12:5, the phrase 'for His dwelling' (לְשִׁכְנוֹ) describes the purpose of seeking YHWH's chosen place—the location where He will establish His dwelling. Spanish renders 'para que habite' (so that He may dwell), treating this as an infinitive. French translates 'pour son demeure' (for His dwelling), understanding it nominally. German offers 'für sein Wohnung' (for His dwelling). The domain assignment to 'Attitudes and Emotions' seems incorrect—this clearly belongs to sacred space, temple theology, or divine presence vocabulary. The dwelling concept becomes central to Deuteronomic theology, legitimating Jerusalem's temple as the exclusive worship site. DELIGHT PLEASURE en: for-his-dwelling | es: para-que-habite | fr: pour-son-demeure | de: fuer-sein-Wohnung Deut 12:5

שָׁכֵן H7934 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3ms (21×)
Neighbor or fellow resident; one dwelling nearby, whether an individual, a surrounding nation, or a city's inhabitant.
Refers to someone living in close proximity, whether a next-door neighbor from whom one might borrow vessels (2 Kgs 4:3) or a neighboring nation that taunts Israel (Ps 79:4, 12). The word carries a warmth of shared locality: your shakhen is the person whose life overlaps with yours by sheer nearness. In two prophetic passages (Isa 33:24; Hos 10:5), the focus shifts from relational proximity to simple residency, describing the inhabitants of a place. Multilingual renderings split cleanly: English and Spanish use 'neighbor/vecino' for the relational sense but 'inhabitant/habitante' for the residential one, confirming the two-sense division.

1. neighbor, fellow (19×) A person living nearby, a neighbor or fellow in one's immediate community. The term appears with various pronominal suffixes (his neighbor, your neighbors) emphasizing the personal, relational bond of proximity. In Exodus 12:4 a man and his shakhen share a Passover lamb; in Proverbs 27:10 the nearby neighbor is preferred over a distant brother. Spanish 'vecino' and German renderings cluster on relational nearness rather than mere habitation. NEIGHBOR FELLOW en: My-neighbors, [ketiv], a-neighbor | es: (kethiv), a-vecinos-de-el, a-vecinos-de-nosotros | fr: [ketiv], de-sa-prochain, et-son-prochain | de: [ketiv], [השכנות], [ושכניה] Exod 3:22; Exod 12:4; Deut 1:7; Ruth 4:17; 2Kgs 4:3

2. inhabitant, resident (2×) One who dwells in or inhabits a particular place, with the emphasis on residency rather than interpersonal proximity. Isaiah 33:24 promises that the inhabitant of Zion will not say 'I am sick,' and Hosea 10:5 speaks of the inhabitants of Samaria trembling over the calf of Beth-aven. English 'inhabitant' and Spanish 'habitante' consistently distinguish this usage from the neighbor sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-neighbor, inhabitant-of | es: habitante, los-habitantes-de | fr: voisin | de: wohnte Isa 33:24; Hos 10:5

שְׁכַנְיָה H7935 N-proper-ms (10×)
Shecaniah/Shekanyahu — a proper name borne by priests, Levites, and laymen in post-exilic Israel Shecaniah (meaning 'the LORD has taken up his dwelling') is a theophoric name borne by multiple individuals in the post-exilic period. The most prominent is a descendant of Jehoiachin listed in the royal genealogy of 1 Chronicles 3:21-22, who may also be the Shecaniah of Ezra 8:3, 5. Another Shecaniah urged Ezra to put away foreign wives (Ezra 10:2), and the name appears among priestly and Levitical figures in Nehemiah and Chronicles. The longer form Shekanyahu occurs in 1 Chronicles 24:11 and 2 Chronicles 31:15.

Shecaniah (proper name) (10×) The personal name Shecaniah/Shekanyahu, a theophoric name meaning 'YHWH has dwelt,' borne by several post-exilic figures: a descendant of Jehoiachin in the royal line (1 Chr 3:21-22; Ezra 8:3, 5), a leader who proposed the covenant of repentance regarding foreign wives (Ezra 10:2), a priestly course head (1 Chr 24:11; Neh 12:3, 14), Tobiah's father-in-law (Neh 6:18), and a Levite under Hezekiah (2 Chr 31:15). The spelling alternates between the short form Shekanyah and the long form Shekanyahu. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shecaniah, Shekhanyah, and-Shecaniah | es: Secanya, Secanías, Shekhanyah | fr: Schecania, et-Schecania | de: [ושכניהו], [לשכניה], [לשכניהו] 1Chr 3:21; 1Chr 3:22; 1Chr 24:11; 2Chr 31:15; Ezra 8:3

סָכַר H7936a Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)
hire, employ, bribe (variant spelling of שָׂכַר)
A verb meaning to hire or employ someone for wages, appearing in Ezra 4:5. The spelling with samekh (סָכַר) rather than sin (שָׂכַר) represents a scribal error or dialectical variant—the roots are identical in meaning. The text describes enemies of Judah hiring counselors against the returned exiles to frustrate their temple rebuilding efforts. This 'hiring' carries the negative sense of bribery or employing agents for subversive purposes. The Qal participle (סֹכְרִים) functions as a substantive: 'ones hiring' or 'hirers.' The verb captures the political machinations that opposed post-exilic restoration, where foreign adversaries used financial resources to undermine covenant renewal.

(1×) In Ezra 4:5, the participial phrase 'and hiring against them' (וְסֹכְרִים עֲלֵיהֶם) describes adversaries employing agents to oppose Judah's temple rebuilding. The preposition 'against' (עַל) indicates hostile intent. Spanish translates 'y sobornando' (and bribing), capturing the negative connotation. French and German bracket the Hebrew, preserving the Aramaic-influenced spelling. The context specifies hiring 'counselors' (יוֹעֲצִים)—political advisors who could influence Persian policy. This employment wasn't neutral labor but subversive activity, using money to thwart God's purposes. The domain assignment to 'Groups and Classes' seems incomplete—this belongs to economic exchange or political opposition. HIRED WORKER

en: and-hiring | es: Y-sobornando | fr: [וסכרים] | de: [וסכרים] Ezra 4:5

שָׂכַר H7936b V-Qal-Perf-1cs / 2ms (20×)

To hire or engage someone for wages; to earn wages by labor; to hire oneself out for service

The verb שָׂכַר governs the transactional world of labor and wages in the Hebrew Bible. Its semantic center is the act of hiring — one party engaging another for compensated service. Rachel tells Leah, 'I have hired you' (Gen 30:16), Abimelech hires worthless men (Judg 9:4), and Balak hires Balaam to curse Israel (Deut 23:4). The Ethiopic cognate sekur ('hired') and Arabic shakara ('to reward, thank') confirm that payment and recompense are embedded in the root. In two occurrences from Haggai, the reflexive Hitpael stem shifts the focus from employer to worker: the one who 'earns wages earns them for a bag with holes' (Hag 1:6) — a vivid portrait of futile labor during the neglect of God's house.

1. hire, engage for pay (17×) The primary Qal sense of hiring or engaging someone for wages or service, accounting for 17 of 20 occurrences. The word covers a wide transactional range: Rachel hiring Jacob for the night with mandrakes (Gen 30:16), the hiring of mercenary soldiers (2 Sam 10:6, 1 Chr 19:6-7), craftsmen for Temple repair (2 Chr 24:12), and the political bribery of counselors against Judah (Ezra 4:5). The Spanish 'alquilar/contrato' and English 'hired/engaged' reflect straightforward employment. Notably, Nehemiah 6:12-13 shows how hiring shades into bribing — Tobiah and Sanballat 'hired' Shemaiah to intimidate Nehemiah. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: I-hired-you, and-he-hired, and-hired | es: Y-alquilaron, Y-contrató, alquilar | fr: Je-loua-tu, [ישכרו], a-hired- | de: [ויישכר], [וישכרו], [ושכר] Gen 30:16; Deut 23:4; Judg 9:4; Judg 18:4

2. earn wages (2×) The Hitpael reflexive sense of earning wages or gaining a livelihood by one's own labor, attested in 2 occurrences in Haggai 1:6. Here the focus shifts from the employer's act to the worker's perspective: 'the one earning wages earns them into a bag with holes.' The Spanish 'gana salario' and English 'earns wages' capture the reflexive emphasis. Haggai's repetition in a single verse underscores the prophet's message that labor without God's blessing yields nothing — the wages themselves are the subject, not the hiring transaction. WAGES AND REWARD

en: and-the-one-earning-wages, earns-wages | es: gana-salario, y-el-que-gana-salario | fr: engager, et-engager | de: [והמשתכר], [משתכר] Hag 1:6

3. hire oneself out (1×) A rare Niphal reflexive-passive sense of hiring oneself out — entering into service as a laborer rather than being the one who hires. In 1 Samuel 2:5 Hannah's song declares that 'those who were full have hired themselves out for bread,' depicting a reversal of fortune where the formerly prosperous must sell their labor to survive. The Spanish 'se alquilaron' preserves the reflexive voice perfectly. This is the mirror image of sense 1: the same transaction viewed from the side of the one who offers labor rather than the one who engages it. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: hire-themselves-out | es: se-alquilaron | fr: hire-eux-mêmes-dehors | de: hire-sich-selbst-heraus 1Sam 2:5

שָׁכַר H7937 V-Qal-Imperf-2fs (19×)

To become drunk or intoxicated; causatively, to make drunk; used literally of wine and figuratively of divine judgment.

In its basic sense, this verb describes becoming intoxicated from wine or strong drink, as when Noah planted a vineyard and became drunk (Gen 9:21). Yet the prophets transform it into a potent metaphor for divine judgment: God makes the nations drink from the cup of his fury until they stagger and fall (Jer 51:7). The multilingual evidence is striking – Spanish consistently renders the causative forms with 'embriagar' while the Qal reflexive at 1 Sam 1:14 draws distinct vocabulary across languages, reflecting the shift from involuntary state to self-induced condition. The cognate noun shekar (strong drink) passed through Aramaic and Egyptian into Greek as sikera (Luke 1:15).

1. become drunk, be intoxicated (Qal) (9×) The foundational Qal intransitive sense: to become drunk or be in a state of intoxication from wine or strong drink. Noah's drunkenness in Gen 9:21 is the paradigmatic example. Song 5:1 uses it in a positive invitation ('drink and become drunk, O lovers'), while Isa 29:9 and 49:26 deploy it as a metaphor for spiritual stupor and judgment. Spanish 'embriagaros' and French 'enivrez-vous' both capture the reflexive nuance present in the Hebrew imperfect forms. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: and-be-drunk, and-became-drunk, and-they-were-merry | es: están-ebrios, para-embriagaros, se-embriadarán | fr: et-devint-drunk, et-enivrez-vous„ et-ils-étaient-merry | de: [ושכרן], [לשכרה], [תשכרי] Gen 9:21; Gen 43:34; Song 5:1; Isa 29:9; Isa 49:26

2. make drunk, cause intoxication (Piel/Hifil) (8×) The factitive-causative use in both Piel and Hifil stems: to make someone drunk or cause intoxication. This sense is overwhelmingly theological – God makes his arrows drunk with blood (Deut 32:42), or causes nations to drink from the cup of wrath (Jer 51:7, Isa 63:6). David's deliberate intoxication of Uriah (2 Sam 11:13) is the sole human-subject instance. Spanish uniformly renders this with the causative 'embriagar' plus direct object, distinguishing it cleanly from the intransitive Qal. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: I-will-make-drunk, and-I-made-them-drunk, and-I-will-make-drunk | es: emborrachando, embriagadlo, embriagando | fr: et-il-fit-lui-bu, et-s'enivrer, je-fera-faire-drunk | de: [שכר], betrunken-sein, ich-wird-machen-drunk Deut 32:42; 2Sam 11:13; Isa 63:6; Jer 48:26; Jer 51:7

3. make oneself drunk (Hitpael) (1×) The reflexive Hitpael sense appearing only at 1 Sam 1:14, where Eli accuses Hannah of making herself drunk. The reflexive stem emphasizes personal agency and responsibility in the intoxication. Multilingual renderings diverge here: Spanish uses the future reflexive 'te embriagaras,' while English captures it as 'will you be drunk,' highlighting the accusatory tone of the rhetorical question. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: will-you-be-drunk | es: te-embriagarás | fr: fera-tu-être-bu | de: wird-du-sein-getrunken 1Sam 1:14

4. drunk, intoxicated (adjectival) (1×) An adjectival or stative use at Isa 51:21, describing Jerusalem as 'drunk but not with wine' – a fixed state of stupor from suffering rather than alcohol. Spanish 'embriagada' and German 'betrunken-sein' both render this as a predicate adjective rather than a verbal action, confirming the shift from process to resulting condition. The metaphorical extension is theologically loaded: divine judgment produces the symptoms of drunkenness without any actual drink. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: and-drunk | es: y-embriagada | fr: et-s'enivrer | de: und-betrunken-sein Isa 51:21

שֶׂכֶר H7938 N-ms (2×)

Hire, wages, payment for labor; reward or recompense

This noun denotes wages, hire, or payment for work done. In Proverbs 11:18, the 'reward' of the wicked is contrasted with the true wages of righteousness, using economic language for moral outcomes. Isaiah 19:10 speaks of 'those who earn wages'—literally 'makers of hire'—likely referring to hired laborers whose livelihood depends on Egypt's economic stability. The multilingual glosses consistently point to wages, payment, or reward, though the German oddly includes 'Rauschtrank' (intoxicating drink), possibly conflating with a homonym. The core sense is economic recompense.

(2×) Both passages use the vocabulary of labor and payment, but Proverbs elevates it to metaphor: moral actions have 'wages.' Isaiah's reference is more literal—actual workers earning actual pay—yet even there, the economic imagery underscores the fragility of human security apart from God. The Spanish 'recompensa' and English 'reward' nicely capture the semantic range from literal wages to moral recompense. WAGES AND REWARD

en: a-reward, wages | es: recompensa-de, salario | fr: [שכר], שכר | de: Rauschtrank, [שכר] Prov 11:18; Isa 19:10

שָׂכָר H7939 N-msc / 3ms (28×)

Wages, reward, or hire-price; payment for labor, divine recompense, or service fees

Sakhar covers the full economic and theological range of earned payment. Jacob negotiates his wages with Laban over spotted livestock (Gen 30:28-33), while the Law demands same-day payment for day laborers (Deut 24:15; Mal 3:5). Beyond the marketplace, the word rises to theological heights: God tells Abram 'I am your shield, your exceedingly great reward' (Gen 15:1), and Isaiah proclaims that God's reward comes with Him (Isa 40:10; 62:11). Spanish distinguishes 'salario' (wages) from 'galardon' (reward), mapping neatly onto the word's two primary registers.

1. wages, salary for labor (18×) Concrete wages or salary paid for human labor. This is the primary economic sense, governing Jacob's negotiations with Laban (Gen 30:28-33; 31:7-8), the hired servant's daily pay (Lev 19:13; Deut 24:15), and Ezekiel's description of Nebuchadnezzar's soldiers going unpaid for the siege of Tyre (Ezek 29:18-19). Spanish 'salario' and German 'Lohn' consistently render this sense. WAGES AND REWARD

en: and-the-wages-of, and-wages, and-wages-of | es: mi-salario, paga, salario | fr: et-le-wages-de, et-salaire, salaire | de: Lohn, [ושכר], [שכר] Gen 30:18; Gen 30:28; Gen 30:32; Gen 30:33; Gen 31:8

2. reward, recompense (8×) Reward or recompense, often from God, transcending mere labor-payment. God declares Himself Abram's 'exceedingly great reward' (Gen 15:1), children are called a 'reward' from the LORD (Ps 127:3), and Isaiah envisions God bringing His reward with Him (Isa 40:10; 62:11). Spanish 'galardon' and 'recompensa' distinguish this theological sense from ordinary wages. WAGES AND REWARD

en: His-reward, a-reward, reward | es: galárdon, recompensa, recompensa-tuya | fr: [שכר], [שכרו], récompense | de: Lohn, Rauschtrank, [שכר] Gen 15:1; 2Chr 15:7; Ps 127:3; Eccl 4:9; Eccl 9:5

3. fare, hire-price (2×) A hire-price or fare paid for a service or passage. Jonah paid the fare (sekhara) for his ship to Tarshish (Jonah 1:3), and Exodus 22:15 addresses the hire-price when borrowed property is damaged. This commercial-transaction sense focuses on the cost of a specific service rather than ongoing employment. WAGES AND REWARD

en: her-fare, in-his-wage | es: en-su-alquiler, pago-de-el | fr: dans-son-wage, salaire | de: Lohn, in-sein-wage Exod 22:15; Jonah 1:3

שַׂכָר H7940 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Sakar/Shakar: personal name of a hero's father and a temple doorkeeper

A Hebrew personal name appearing twice in Chronicles. First, Sakar is named as the father of one of David's mighty warriors in 1 Chronicles 11:35, where the parallel text in 2 Samuel 23:33 has a different name (Sarar), suggesting textual variation or scribal updating. Second, a different Sakar appears as a Levitical doorkeeper in 1 Chronicles 26:4. The name likely derives from the root for 'hire' or 'wages,' possibly meaning 'hired' or 'recompensed.' The multilingual glosses are simply transliterations, as expected for proper names.

(2×) Personal names in Chronicles often carry etymological significance, and this one's connection to 'hire' or 'wages' may reflect the circumstances of birth or family occupation. The textual variation between Chronicles and Samuel reminds us that names were sometimes updated or corrected in later manuscripts. Both individuals named Sakar hold roles of service—one in David's military, one in temple logistics. WAGES AND REWARD

en: Sakar, and-Sakhar | es: Sacar, y-Sacar | fr: [ושכר], [שכר] | de: [ושכר], [שכר] 1Chr 11:35; 1Chr 26:4

שֵׁכָר H7941 Conj-w / N-ms (23×)

Intoxicating drink other than wine; fermented beverage regulated in priestly, Nazirite, and prophetic texts

Denoting any fermented or intoxicating beverage distinct from grape wine, this noun appears almost exclusively alongside yayin (wine) in legal and prophetic warnings. Priests on duty (Lev 10:9) and Nazirites (Num 6:3) were forbidden it; prophets condemned its abuse (Isa 5:11; 28:7). Yet it was permitted at the sacrificial meal (Deut 14:26) and even commended for the despairing (Prov 31:6). The multilingual evidence is remarkably uniform: Spanish bebida fuerte, French boisson enivrante, and German Rauschtrank all point to a single, clearly bounded concept of strong alcoholic drink regulated by covenant law.

Strong drink, intoxicating beverage (23×) A fermented alcoholic beverage other than grape wine, covering barley beer, date wine, and similar intoxicants. Nearly always paired with yayin in legal and prophetic formulae (Lev 10:9; Isa 5:11; Num 6:3). Spanish bebida fuerte, French boisson enivrante, and German Rauschtrank all converge on a single sense. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: and-for-strong-drink, and-strong-drink, from-strong-drink | es: bebida-fuerte, el-licor, la-bebida-fuerte | fr: boisson-enivrante, boisson-forte, et-fort-boire | de: Rauschtrank, [שכר], der-Rauschtrank Lev 10:9; Num 6:3; Num 28:7; Deut 14:26

שִׁכְרוֹן H7942 N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)

Shikkeron (place name on Judah's northern border)

A place name appearing in Joshua 15:11, marking a point on Judah's northern border near the Philistine territory. The locative ending (-ōnāh) indicates motion toward this site. The LXX renders it as Sokchoth or Sacharona, showing variant traditions. The precise identification remains uncertain, though its position between Mount Baalah and Jabneel places it in the Shephelah or coastal region. Border descriptions like this functioned to define tribal inheritance legally, ensuring each tribe knew its territorial limits. The name may relate to roots associated with drinking or intoxication (שְׁכָרוֹן), though this etymology is speculative.

(1×) In Joshua 15:11, the place name 'Shikkeronah' (שִׁכְרוֹנָה) appears with the directional suffix indicating 'toward Shikkeron.' Spanish translates 'Sicrón' (Sicron), French 'Shikkeronah,' German 'Shikkeronah,' showing transliteration practices. The LXX variants (Sokchoth, Sacharona) suggest textual fluidity or alternate pronunciations. The domain assignment to 'Properties, Relations' is inappropriate—this clearly belongs to geographical locations or place names. The border description positions Shikkeron as a recognizable landmark, probably a settlement that helped define where Judah's territory ended and Philistine or Dan's territory began. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shikkeronah | es: Sicrón | fr: Shikkeronah | de: Shikkeronah Josh 15:11

שִׁכְרוֹן H7943 Prep-l / N-ms (3×)

drunkenness—the state of intoxication, literal or metaphorical

This noun describes drunkenness, used exclusively in figurative contexts for divine judgment. Jeremiah 13:13 threatens filling inhabitants with drunkenness (bewilderment under judgment). Ezekiel uses it for a cup of horror and desolation (23:33) and for being drunk on blood (39:19). The term conveys not festive drinking but the disorienting, devastating effects of God's wrath, where nations or people stagger helplessly under judgment like intoxicated persons.

(3×) The three uses are all metaphorical: filling with drunkenness as judgment (Jeremiah 13:13), a cup of drunkenness/desolation (Ezekiel 23:33), and drinking blood to drunkenness (39:19). Spanish 'embriaguez' (drunkenness) and French 'ivresse' consistently render the term. Each context employs drunkenness as imagery for helpless confusion and devastation under divine judgment, never literal intoxication but always the staggering disorientation of those experiencing God's wrath. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8851 WITH 5 SENSES

en: drunkenness, to-drunkenness | es: Embriaguez, embriaguez, hasta-embriaguez | fr: [שכרון], ivresse | de: [לשכרון], [שכרון] Jer 13:13; Ezek 23:33; Ezek 39:19

שַׁל H7944 Art / N-ms (1×)

error, irreverence, rash action

A disputed noun appearing in 2 Samuel 6:7 explaining why God struck Uzzah dead when he touched the ark. The phrase 'for the error' (עַל־הַשַּׁל) has generated multiple interpretations. The LXX renders it 'for his rashness/hastiness,' deriving it from Aramaic roots related to sudden action. The Vulgate translates 'temerity' (rash boldness). The Targum understands it as 'because he erred,' from Aramaic words for error. The AV and RV follow this: 'for his error.' The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 13:10 may have a different reading. The term captures the notion that Uzzah acted wrongly—whether through ignorance, rashness, or irreverence—in touching what was sacred and forbidden.

(1×) In 2 Samuel 6:7, the phrase 'for the error' (עַל־הַשַּׁל) provides the stated reason for Uzzah's death: God struck him down 'for the error.' Spanish translates 'la irreverencia' (the irreverence), English 'the error,' French 'le error,' German 'der error,' showing translation diversity. The definite article 'the' specifies a particular wrongful action—Uzzah's touching the ark. The domain assignment to 'Moral and Ethical Qualities' fits well—this term evaluates Uzzah's action as morally/ritually problematic, violating holiness boundaries. The narrative's terseness leaves ambiguous whether Uzzah's mistake was ignorance, impulse, or presumption, but the term marks his action as transgression. ERROR INADVERTENT SIN

en: the-error | es: la-irreverencia | fr: le-error | de: der-error 2Sam 6:7

שֶׁ H7945 Prep-b (3×)

that, because—relative particle introducing clauses, often causal

This particle serves as a late Hebrew relative or causal connector, meaning 'that,' 'which,' or 'because.' It appears in various forms before different consonants, functioning similarly to the more common אֲשֶׁר. Second Kings 6:11 uses it causally ('because of this'). Ecclesiastes 8:17 employs it as a relative ('that which'). Jonah 1:12 has it in 'on my account.' The particle represents linguistic development toward forms common in Mishnaic Hebrew and Aramaic.

(3×) The three uses span causal (2 Kings 6:11—'because of this'), relative (Ecclesiastes 8:17—'that which'), and prepositional (Jonah 1:12—'on my account'). Translations often render it contextually as 'because,' 'that,' or incorporate it into larger phrases. The form shows Late Biblical Hebrew influence, with the particle functioning flexibly as connector, causal indicator, or relative marker depending on context. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: because, from-ours, on-my-account | es: de-nosotros, por-cuanto, por-mi-causa | fr: dans-בשל, de-le-nôtre, qui | de: [בשל], [בשלי], von-unser 2Kgs 6:11; Eccl 8:17; Jonah 1:12

שַׁלְאָנָן H7946 Adj-ms (1×)

at ease, carefree, secure (also: arrogant from ease)

An adjective describing a state of ease, security, or carefree comfort. Job 21:23 uses the term (likely a scribal error for שַׁאֲנָן, a more common form) to describe someone who dies 'wholly at ease'—comfortable, prosperous, without anxiety. The word can carry negative connotations when ease produces arrogance or complacency (as in Amos's critique of the complacent in Zion). The root conveys both physical security (freedom from danger) and psychological ease (freedom from worry). In wisdom literature, this ease becomes morally ambiguous—sometimes blessing, sometimes dangerous self-assurance that ignores coming judgment.

(1×) In Job 21:23, the adjective describes a person who 'dies wholly at ease' (בְּעֶצֶם שַׁלְוָתֹו). The phrase 'in the bone/essence of ease' intensifies the image—completely comfortable until death. Spanish renders 'tranquilo' (tranquil), French brackets the Hebrew, recognizing the unusual form. The domain assignment to 'Trouble, Hardship, Relief' captures this as the opposite of hardship—total security and comfort. Job's argument challenges retribution theology: the wicked often die at ease, not suffering, contradicting his friends' claim that sin always brings visible punishment. This ease becomes evidence against simplistic moral causality. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: at-ease | es: tranquilo | fr: שלאנן | de: [שלאנן] Job 21:23

שָׁלַב H7947 V-Pual-Prtcpl-fp (2×)

Joined, fitted together; bound as tenons in woodworking

A Pual participle describing things that are bound, joined, or fitted together. Both occurrences are in the tabernacle construction account, specifically describing the tenons of the wooden frames that were 'joined' or 'fitted' to one another. This is technical carpentry vocabulary, indicating precise joinery where each tenon connects to its corresponding piece. The multilingual glosses uniformly emphasize joining, fitting, or being united, reflecting the careful craftsmanship required for sacred architecture. The passive form suggests the tenons were designed to be joined, highlighting intentional structure.

(2×) The tabernacle texts use precise technical language for construction, and this verb captures the intentional design of interlocking frames. The Pual (passive) form emphasizes that the tenons were made to be joined—they are 'joinable' by design. English 'fitted' and Spanish 'trabadas' (interlocked) convey the sense of secure, deliberate connection. This vocabulary of unity in construction may carry symbolic weight: the dwelling place of God requires careful, harmonious assembly. JOINING AND ALLIANCE

en: fitted, joined | es: trabadas, unidas | fr: fitted, joignit | de: fitted, schloss-sich-an Exod 26:17; Exod 36:22

שְׁלַבִּים H7948 Art / N-mp (3×)

frames, ledges—structural elements joining parts of the temple stands

This plural noun refers to the frames, ledges, or joinings of the bronze stands in Solomon's temple. First Kings 7:28-29 describes these structural elements three times, indicating they were panels or connecting pieces between the stand components. The exact architectural feature is debated—whether ledges, ribs, frames, or binding elements—but they clearly served to join or border sections of the elaborate wheeled stands that held temple basins.

(3×) All three occurrences are in 1 Kings 7:28-29, describing components of the temple bronze stands. Translations vary: Spanish 'travesaños' (crossbars), English versions use 'ledges,' 'frames,' or 'panels.' The repeated references ('between the frames,' 'on the frames') suggest these were prominent visual and structural elements. The context describes highly decorated stands with lions, oxen, and cherubim on these frames, indicating they were display surfaces as well as structural components. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: the-frames | es: los-travesaños | fr: le-frames | de: der-frames 1Kgs 7:28; 1Kgs 7:29

שָׁלַג H7949 V-Hifil-Imperf.Jus-3fs (1×)

snow (verb: to snow, cover with snow)

A denominative Hiphil verb meaning to snow, derived from the noun 'snow' (שֶׁלֶג). It appears only in Psalm 68:14 in a notoriously obscure verse: 'When the Almighty scatters kings there, it snows on Zalmon.' The verb's imperfect form (תַּשְׁלֶג) is parsed as impersonal: 'it snows.' The meaning and connection to context remain debated—some propose metaphorical whitening (from corpses?), others see literal snowfall as a sign of divine intervention. The snow reference may contrast the darkness of Zalmon's forests with sudden brightness, symbolizing military victory or divine epiphany. This rare verbal use of 'snow' adds to the psalm's cryptic geographical-military imagery.

(1×) In Psalm 68:14 (Hebrew 68:15), the Hiphil imperfect 'it snows' (תַּשְׁלֵג) appears in the clause 'it snows on Zalmon.' Spanish translates 'nevó' (it snowed, past tense), French 'couvrir' (to cover), German 'es snowed.' The verb's impersonal construction treats snowfall as a divine act—God causing snow. The context connects snow to the scattering of kings, suggesting divine intervention in battle. Whether literal meteorological snow or metaphorical whitening (victory, corpses, divine glory) remains unclear. The domain assignment to 'Natural Substances' fits the meteorological sense, though the theological context suggests divine action vocabulary. SNOW PRECIPITATION en: it-snowed | es: nevó | fr: couvrir | de: es-snowed Ps 68:14

שֶׁלֶג H7950 Conj-w (20×)

Snow — the meteorological phenomenon and a pervasive biblical simile for whiteness, purity, and cleansing.

Denotes snow both as a weather phenomenon and as one of Scripture's most vivid similes. Literally, it falls as precipitation alongside rain (Job 37:6; Ps 147:16; 148:8) and accumulates in divine storehouses (Job 38:22). Snow on Lebanon is proverbial for reliability (Jer 18:14). Its most powerful use is figurative: leprosy appears 'white as snow' (Exod 4:6; Num 12:10; 2 Kgs 5:27), and Isaiah's great promise declares that scarlet sins shall become 'as white as snow' (Isa 1:18). Snowmelt waters are cold and purifying (Job 9:30). The word appears with remarkable consistency across all translations — 'snow,' 'nieve,' 'neige,' 'Schnee.'

snow (20×) Snow as both a literal weather phenomenon and a rich figurative image. Used concretely for precipitation and accumulated snowfall (Job 37:6; Ps 147:16; 148:8), snowmelt waters (Job 6:16; 24:19), snow stored in divine treasuries (Job 38:22), and the proverbial reliability of Lebanon's snow (Jer 18:14). Figuratively, it serves as the premier biblical simile for whiteness — leprosy compared to snow (Exod 4:6; Num 12:10; 2 Kgs 5:27), fair skin whiter than snow (Lam 4:7), and supremely, Isaiah's promise of moral purification: 'though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow' (Isa 1:18). All translations converge: English 'snow,' Spanish 'nieve,' French 'neige,' German 'Schnee.' SNOW PRECIPITATION

en: and-than-snow, and-the-snow, as-the-snow | es: Como-nieve, a-la-nieve, como-la-nieve | fr: [השלג], [והשלג], [כשלג] | de: Schnee, [השלג], [והשלג] Exod 4:6; Num 12:10; 2Sam 23:20; 2Kgs 5:27; 1Chr 11:22

שָׁלָה H7951 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (5×)

to be quiet, at ease, prosperous; describing both genuine peace and the deceptive security of the wicked

A verb meaning to be at ease, tranquil, or prosperous. It carries a striking moral ambiguity: the same root describes the longed-for peace of the righteous and the unsettling prosperity of the wicked. Job uses it in both senses — he had no ease even before calamity struck (3:26), yet the tents of robbers are at ease (12:6). Jeremiah asks the classic theodicy question: why do the wicked prosper (12:1)? Lamentations 1:5 notes that Jerusalem's enemies prosper. The psalmist's prayer for Jerusalem's peace (Ps 122:6) offers the redemptive counterpoint.

(5×) To be at ease, tranquil, prosperous — describing a state of undisturbed comfort, applied both to the legitimate peace of the faithful (Ps 122:6, 'May those who love you be at ease') and to the troubling prosperity of the wicked (Jer 12:1; Job 12:6; Lam 1:5). Spanish 'prósperas están' and 'prosperan' capture the material overtone, while English 'at ease' emphasizes the psychological calm. Job 3:26 uses the first person ('I was not at ease') to express the absence of this rest, forming a painful inclusio with the wicked who enjoy it effortlessly. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: Are-at-ease, I-was-at-ease, are-at-ease | es: Prósperas-están, están-en-paz, prosperan | fr: prospère, être-en-paix, ישליו | de: [ישליו], [שלו], [שלותי] Job 3:26; Job 12:6; Ps 122:6; Jer 12:1; Lam 1:5

שָׁלָה H7952 V-Nifal-Imperf-2mp (2×)

To be negligent, careless; to mislead or deceive through laxness

A verb meaning to be quiet, at ease, or—by extension—careless and negligent. In 2 Kings 4:28, the Shunammite woman pleads with Elisha, 'Do not mislead/deceive me,' likely meaning 'Don't raise false hopes.' In 2 Chronicles 29:11, Hezekiah warns the Levites, 'Do not be negligent,' urging them to faithful service. The multilingual evidence shows tension between the core meaning (be at ease, quiet) and the derived sense (be careless, negligent), with some translations favoring 'mislead' and others 'be negligent.' The semantic development moves from tranquility to laxity to deception.

(2×) The two contexts pull the word in different directions: the Shunammite fears being deceived (false peace), while Hezekiah warns against negligence (dangerous ease). Both share the idea that inappropriate quietness or ease leads to failure—whether of truth or of duty. The Spanish 'me engañes' (deceive me) and 'seáis negligentes' (be negligent) capture the dual application, and the multilingual spread confirms that translators recognized both nuances. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: be-negligent, mislead | es: me-engañes, seáis-negligentes | fr: [תשלו], mislead | de: [תשלו], mislead 2Kgs 4:28; 2Chr 29:11

שָׁלָה H7953 V-Qal-Imperf.Jus-3ms (1×)

draw out, extract (possibly root uncertain)

A disputed verbal root appearing in Job 27:8, if the traditional reading is correct. The text asks rhetorically: 'What is the hope of the godless when God cuts him off, when God draws out his soul?' The verb form (יִשְׁלֹל) is apocopated, complicating identification. Some derive it from a root meaning 'draw out' or 'extract' (related to שָׁלַל), fitting the Syriac and Targumic usage. Others propose reading יִשְׁאַל ('demands') or יִשָּׂא אֶל ('lifts up to'). De and others defend the drawing-out interpretation: God extracting the wicked person's soul. The textual uncertainty reflects Job's linguistic complexity, where rare roots and forms abound.

(1×) In Job 27:8, the verb appears in the phrase 'when God draws out his soul' (כִּי יִשְׁלֹל אֱלוֹהַּ נַפְשׁוֹ). The subject 'God' (אֱלוֹהַּ) and object 'his soul' (נַפְשׁוֹ) frame the action. Spanish renders 'saca' (extracts), French and German bracket the Hebrew, acknowledging textual difficulty. The imagery suggests forcible removal—God extracting life from the godless. The domain assignment to 'Possess, Transfer, Exchange' may reflect the 'taking' aspect, though 'death' or 'divine judgment' better captures the theological force. The verb fits Job's pattern of using rare vocabulary to describe death and divine action, maintaining poetic obscurity while conveying existential dread. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: draws-out | es: saca | fr: ישל | de: [ישל] Job 27:8

שֶׁלֶה H7954 Adj-ms (1×)

at ease, secure, tranquil (Aramaic)

A Biblical Aramaic adjective describing a state of ease, security, and tranquility. Daniel 4:1 (English 4:4, Aramaic 4:1) uses it when Nebuchadnezzar reports: 'I was at ease in my house and flourishing in my palace.' The term conveys both physical security (no external threats) and internal contentment (psychological peace). This ease provides the setting for Nebuchadnezzar's disturbing dream—prosperity interrupted by divine revelation. The Aramaic form appears in Egyptian Aramaic papyri, showing its currency in administrative contexts. The adjective captures the king's pre-judgment condition: comfortable, powerful, unaware of coming humiliation.

(1×) In Daniel 4:1 (Aramaic 4:4), the adjective describes Nebuchadnezzar's state: 'I was at ease' (שְׁלֵה הֲוֵית). The verb הֲוֵית ('I was') links the predicate adjective to the subject. Spanish translates 'tranquilo' (tranquil), French 'prospérer' (prospering, verb form), German brackets the Aramaic. The parallel 'flourishing' (רַעֲנָן) in my palace reinforces the image of royal prosperity. The domain assignment to 'Trouble, Hardship, Relief' positions this as relief from trouble—complete security. This ease makes the subsequent dream judgment more dramatic: the secure king receives revelation of coming downfall, demonstrating that even imperial ease cannot escape divine sovereignty. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: at-ease | es: tranquilo | fr: prospérer | de: [שלה] Dan 4:4

שְׁלוֹ H7955 N-fs (2×)
Neglect, negligence, remissness; failure to act with due care
An Aramaic noun meaning neglect, negligence, or remissness. Both occurrences are in administrative contexts: Ezra 4:22 warns against negligence in stopping the rebuilding work, and Daniel 3:29 (Qere reading) refers to something done 'negligently' or in error. The Ketiv/Qere variation in Daniel suggests scribal uncertainty about the exact form, but the core meaning—failure to act properly—remains stable. This is bureaucratic vocabulary, the language of imperial decrees and official warnings. Negligence here has political and religious consequences: failing to act can undermine the king's interests or God's purposes.

(2×) In Ezra, the concern is that negligence will allow unauthorized construction to proceed, threatening Persian authority. In Daniel, the term appears in a royal decree protecting the Jews, where negligence in observing the decree would constitute treason. The multilingual evidence, though sparse (some preserve the Aramaic, others translate as 'negligence' or 'error'), confirms the administrative-legal context. This is the vocabulary of governance, where carelessness carries serious penalties. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS
en: (qere:negligence), [ketiv:negligence] | es: (negligencia), [error] | fr: erreur | de: [שלה], [שלו] Dan 3:29

שֶׁלָה H7956 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (8×)
Shelah, the third son of Judah and his Canaanite wife, ancestor of a clan in the tribe of Judah.
The proper noun Shelah, naming the third son of Judah by his Canaanite wife Bath-shua. His story is woven into the dramatic narrative of Genesis 38: after the deaths of his older brothers Er and Onan, Judah withheld young Shelah from marrying Tamar, fearing he too would die (Gen 38:11, 14, 26). This broken promise drove Tamar to her famous deception. Shelah survived to become the ancestor of a clan listed in Numbers 26:20 and 1 Chronicles 2:3; 4:21. Spanish 'Sela' and 'Shelah,' French 'Shela,' and German 'Schela' all represent this personal name consistently across traditions.

Shelah (son of Judah) (8×) The personal name Shelah, third son of Judah and his Canaanite wife Shua (Gen 38:5). He plays a pivotal if passive role in the Tamar narrative: Judah promised Shelah to Tamar after his older brothers died, but withheld him out of fear (Gen 38:11, 14, 26), driving Tamar's drastic action. Shelah appears in genealogies as ancestor of a Judahite clan (Gen 46:12; Num 26:20; 1 Chr 2:3; 4:21). Spanish alternates between 'Sela' and 'Shelah,' while French uses 'Shela' and German 'Schela,' all standard transliterations of the Hebrew שֵׁלָה. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Shelah, and-Shelah, to-Shelah | es: Sela, Shelah, a-Shelah | fr: Shéla, [ושלה], [שלה] | de: Schela, [ושלה], [שלה] Gen 38:5; Gen 38:11; Gen 38:14; Gen 38:26; Gen 46:12

שַׁלְהֶבֶת H7957 N-fs (3×)
flame—intense fire, especially as divine judgment or powerful love
This feminine noun denotes flame, particularly intense or powerful fire. Ezekiel 20:47 uses it for the flame of judgment consuming the south. Job 15:30 warns the wicked that flame will destroy his branches. Song of Songs 8:6 speaks of love's 'flashes of fire, a flame of Yah,' describing passion as divine flame. The term emphasizes the power and intensity of fire, whether in judgment, destruction, or the overwhelming force of love.

(3×) The three uses describe flames of judgment (Ezekiel 20:47), destruction of the wicked (Job 15:30), and love's intensity (Song 8:6). Spanish uses 'llama' (flame) across contexts. The Song passage is remarkable, calling love's flame 'a flame of Yahweh' (or 'mighty flame'), elevating erotic passion to divine intensity. Ezekiel and Job employ it for consuming judgment fire, while Song repurposes this destructive imagery for the all-consuming nature of true love. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: blaze, flame, flame-of-Yah | es: fuego, llama, llama-de-Yah | fr: flamme, flamme-de-l'Éternel. | de: [שלהבת], [שלהבתיה] Job 15:30; Song 8:6; Ezek 20:47

שְׂלָו H7958 N-fp (4×)
quail; small migratory game birds (coturnix) provided by God as food in the wilderness
This noun refers to quail, the small migratory birds that God provided to Israel in the wilderness. Exodus 16:13 describes quail coming up at evening to cover the camp, paired with morning manna. Numbers 11:31-32 tells a more extensive story: the people gathered quail in great abundance, but then God struck them with plague for their craving. Psalm 105:40 recalls God giving quail to satisfy them. The multilingual consensus (Spanish codornices, French caille, German Wachtel) confirms the bird identification. Quail migrate through the Sinai region in vast flocks, making the biblical account ecologically plausible while retaining its miraculous timing and provision. The quail story embodies both divine generosity and the dangers of appetite unchecked by gratitude.

(4×) Quail—small migratory game birds (likely coturnix communis) miraculously provided as food during the wilderness wandering. Exodus 16:13 introduces them alongside manna; Numbers 11:31-32 describes massive quail fall followed by divine plague against the people's grumbling. Psalm 105:40 remembers the provision positively. These birds, known to migrate through Sinai in large flocks, become a sign of both God's provision and the peril of craving beyond need. LIVING CREATURES
en: quail, the-quail | es: codornices, las-codornices | fr: caille, le-cailles, le-quail | de: der-Wachtel, der-quail, quail Exod 16:13; Num 11:31; Num 11:32; Ps 105:40

שַׁלְוִי H7959 Prep-b / N-fsc / 1cs (1×)
ease, prosperity, security
An abstract noun denoting ease, prosperity, or security. Psalm 30:6 uses the term when the psalmist recalls his false confidence: 'In my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.' The noun captures the dangerous self-assurance that comes from extended blessing—when life goes well, humans forget their dependence on God. The form שַׁלְוִי (with suffix: שַׁלְוִי 'my prosperity') derives from roots related to ease and security. This prosperity becomes a theological problem in Scripture: blessing intended to prompt gratitude instead produces complacency. The psalmist's testimony warns that ease can blind us to our vulnerability and God's ongoing sustaining grace.

(1×) In Psalm 30:6, the phrase 'in my prosperity' (בְּשַׁלְוִי) sets the temporal context for the psalmist's self-deception: when prosperous, he claimed permanent security. Spanish translates 'en mi prosperidad' (in my prosperity), French 'dans prospérité' (in prosperity), German 'in mein Wohlstand' (in my prosperity/wealth). The possessive suffix 'my' makes this personal—not general prosperity but this psalmist's specific experience of blessing. The domain assignment to 'Trouble, Hardship, Relief' categorizes prosperity as relief from hardship. The psalm's narrative arc moves from prosperity to crisis to restoration, demonstrating that human security is always provisional and God-dependent. EASE AND TRANQUILITY
en: in-my-prosperity | es: en-mi-prosperidad | fr: dans-prospérité | de: in-mein-Wohlstand Ps 30:6

שְׁלִי H7960 N-fs (3×)
neglect, oversight, failure in duty (rare Aramaic administrative term)
This rare Aramaic noun appears only in Ezra and Daniel in administrative contexts warning against negligence. The term carries the sense of failing to fulfill an obligation or allowing something important to slip through oversight. Spanish and English glosses consistently emphasize the idea of failure and negligence, while the textual tradition shows some uncertainty (the Ketiv-Qere variation in Daniel 3:29 suggests possible textual confusion with a similar root). The contexts uniformly warn against carelessness in matters of state or religious duty.

(3×) In Persian administrative correspondence (Ezra 4:22, 6:9) and royal decrees (Daniel 6:4), the word functions as a warning: 'let there be no neglect' or 'why should damage grow?' The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'negligencia,' English 'fail/neglect') confirms this relates to administrative oversight or dereliction of duty. The Aramaic context suggests formal bureaucratic language concerned with ensuring royal orders are carried out without slippage. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: fail, neglect, negligence | es: falte, negligencia, no-sea-que-falleis | fr: [שלן], erreur | de: [שלן] Ezra 4:22; Ezra 6:9; Dan 6:4

שָׁלְוֵ֑ו H7961 Conj-w / Adj-mpc (8×)

Quiet, at ease, tranquil; of persons enjoying undisturbed security, or substantivally of a state of peaceful quietness

Describes a condition of calm security and ease, whether applied to persons, nations, or land. Job knew this word painfully — he had been at ease (Job 16:12) before God shattered his peace. The psalmist observes that the wicked are 'at ease forever' (Ps 73:12), and Jeremiah speaks of a nation dwelling secure and undisturbed (Jer 49:31). In a few passages the adjective shifts toward a substantival use, denoting 'quietness' or 'peace' as a quality of land or inner state (1 Chr 4:40; Job 20:20).

1. at ease, tranquil (6×) The core adjectival sense: being at ease, tranquil, undisturbed. In Job 16:12 the sufferer recalls his former settled calm before calamity struck; in Ps 73:12 the prosperous wicked are described as eternally at ease. Jeremiah 49:31 applies it to a nation dwelling securely (paralleled by yoshev lavetach, 'dwelling in safety'). Spanish 'tranquilo' and Arabic cognates confirm the nuance of settled composure rather than mere inactivity. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: and-always-at-ease, and-at-ease, and-secure | es: Tranquilo, tranquila, y-en-paz | fr: [שלין], et-tranquille, et-שׁלֵיו | de: [ושלוה], [ושליו], [שלו] Job 16:12; Job 21:23; Ps 73:12; Jer 49:31; Ezek 23:42

2. quietness, peace (substantival) (2×) A substantival or nominalized usage where the adjective functions as a noun meaning 'quietness, peacefulness.' In 1 Chr 4:40 it describes the quality of the land itself — quiet, fertile pasture (paralleled by shoqetet, 'undisturbed'). In Job 20:20 it appears as an abstract noun: the wicked person knew no quietness within. Spanish 'tranquilidad' and French 'tranquille' mirror this shift from describing a person to naming the condition. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: and-peaceful, quietness | es: tranquilidad, y-pacífica | fr: [ושלוה], שלו | de: [ושלוה], [שלו] 1Chr 4:40; Job 20:20

שַׁלְוָה֙ H7962 Prep-b / N-fpc / 2fs (8×)

Quietness, tranquility, ease; ranges from genuine peaceful security to complacent carelessness depending on moral context.

Denotes a state of calm and undisturbed rest, whether experienced as genuine prosperity or as dangerous complacency. In Psalm 122:7 it parallels shalom as a blessing upon Jerusalem, and Proverbs 17:1 commends a dry morsel enjoyed in quietness over a house full of feasting with strife. Yet the same word carries a sharp warning in Proverbs 1:32, where the 'ease of fools' destroys them, and in Ezekiel 16:49, where Sodom's sin included an 'abundance of ease.' Spanish 'tranquilidad' and English 'quietness' both capture the surface calm, but the Hebrew insists the moral quality of that calm depends entirely on who possesses it.

quietness, ease, prosperity (8×) A feminine noun covering the full spectrum from blessed tranquility to perilous complacency. Positively, it describes the peaceful security prayed for over Jerusalem (Ps 122:7) and the quiet contentment preferable to conflict (Prov 17:1). Negatively, it characterizes the careless ease of fools headed for ruin (Prov 1:32) and Sodom's self-satisfied prosperity (Ezek 16:49). In Daniel 8:25 and 11:21, the prepositional phrase 'in quietness' implies a sudden, unexpected attack launched during a time of false security. The multilingual glosses—English 'quietness/peace,' Spanish 'tranquilidad,' French 'tranquillité'—all converge on the core idea of undisturbed calm, though none fully conveys the moral ambiguity the Hebrew word carries. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: and-in-peace, and-quietness, and-quietness-of | es: Con-tranquilidad, con-tranquilidad, en-prosperidades-tuyas | fr: [בשלותיך], et-tranquillité, et-ושלוה | de: [בשלוה], [בשלותיך], [ובשלוה] Ps 122:7; Prov 1:32; Prov 17:1; Jer 22:21; Ezek 16:49

שַׁלְוָ֖ךְ H7963 Prep-l / N-fsc / 2ms (1×)

ease, prosperity, security (Aramaic)

A Biblical Aramaic feminine noun denoting ease, prosperity, or tranquility. Daniel 4:24 (English 4:27, Aramaic 4:24) uses it when Daniel interprets Nebuchadnezzar's dream, urging: 'may there be a lengthening to your prosperity' (or 'may there be an extension of your tranquility'). Daniel hopes the king's repentance might delay or avert the predicted judgment. The term captures both material prosperity (the king's wealth and power) and peaceful reign (absence of conflict). The construct phrase 'your prosperity' (שַׁלְוָתָךְ) includes the second-masculine suffix, making Daniel's counsel personal and diplomatic.

(1×) In Daniel 4:24 (Aramaic 4:27), the phrase 'to your prosperity' (לִשְׁלַוְתָךְ) appears in Daniel's hopeful counsel. The preposition 'to' (לְ) indicates direction or purpose—may lengthening come 'to/for your prosperity.' Spanish renders 'de tu prosperidad' (of your prosperity, using genitive), French 'tranquillité' (tranquility), German brackets the Aramaic. Daniel's advice involves breaking off sins through righteousness and iniquities through mercy to the poor, hoping this might extend the king's prosperity. The domain assignment to 'Trouble, Hardship, Relief' positions prosperity as the opposite of hardship. The theological tension here involves whether repentance can alter predicted judgment, a recurring biblical question. EASE AND TRANQUILITY

en: to-your-prosperity | es: de-tu-prosperidad | fr: tranquillité | de: [לשלותך] Dan 4:27

שִׁלּוּחִ֔ים H7964 N-mp (3×)

parting gift, dowry, sending away (gift given at separation)

This plural noun denotes gifts given at the moment of parting or separation. The word appears in two distinct but related contexts: formal dismissal (Moses sending away his wife, Exodus 18:2) and dowry gifts that accompany a bride (Pharaoh giving Gezer as a wedding gift, 1 Kings 9:16). Micah extends the metaphor to Israel's forced 'farewell' to Moresheth-gath, picturing the loss as giving parting gifts. The multilingual glosses ('dowry,' 'parting gifts,' 'regalo de despedida') capture both the ceremonial transfer of property and the emotional tone of separation.

(3×) The root meaning involves something given when people part ways. In Exodus 18:2 it describes Zipporah being sent away 'after her sending away' (a formal dismissal). In 1 Kings 9:16, Pharaoh gives Gezer as dowry to his daughter who marries Solomon—a parting gift marking her transition from Egyptian to Israelite household. Micah 1:14 personalizes this: Israel will give 'parting gifts' to Moresheth-gath, a poignant image of permanent loss. The cross-linguistic evidence confirms this involves both material transfer and relational separation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: dowry, her-sending-away, parting-gifts | es: despido-de-ella, regalo-de-despedida, regalos-de-despedida | fr: dot, dowry, sa-envoyant-au-loin | de: [שלוחים], dowry, ihr-sending-weg Exod 18:2; 1Kgs 9:16; Mic 1:14

שָׁלֹ֑ום H7965 Prep-m / N-ms (237×)

Completeness, soundness, welfare, peace; spanning tranquility, well-being, greeting formulas, interpersonal alliance, and wholeness

Shalom is arguably the most culturally resonant word in biblical Hebrew, yet its meaning runs far deeper than the English 'peace' suggests. Built on the root sh-l-m denoting wholeness and completeness, it encompasses bodily health ('is it well with you?'), national security (absence of war), relational harmony (covenant of peace), and even serves as a standard greeting and farewell. Arabic salam preserves the cognate but narrows it mainly to safety and greeting, while Korean pyeonghwa captures the tranquility dimension and German Friede the cessation-of-conflict sense. No single translation in any language fully captures the integrated wholeness that shalom envisions.

1. peace, absence of conflict (198×) Peace as the absence of conflict, war, or strife — the dominant sense covering the vast majority of occurrences (198x). This ranges from God granting peace in the land (Lev 26:6) to the Aaronic blessing 'the LORD give you peace' (Num 6:26) to prophetic visions of cosmic peace (Isa 9:7; 11:6-9). Arabic salam, Spanish paz, French paix, and German Friede all converge here. It includes both interpersonal peace ('go in peace,' Gen 43:23; 1 Sam 1:17) and the eschatological 'Prince of Peace' (Isa 9:6). PEACE AND WELLBEING

en: peace | es: Paz, paz | fr: paix | de: Friede, Frieden, es-geht-wohl Gen 29:6; Gen 43:23; Gen 43:28; Lev 26:6; Num 6:26

2. welfare, well-being, prosperity (17×) Welfare, well-being, or prosperity — the construct-chain usage asking about or referring to someone's total condition: health, safety, and flourishing. Jacob sends Joseph to inquire about the shalom of his brothers and the flock (Gen 37:14). David asks about the shalom of Joab, the army, and the war (2 Sam 11:7). German Wohlergehen and Spanish bienestar both shift vocabulary from 'peace' to 'well-being,' confirming a distinct semantic profile. Pharaoh's response to Joseph — 'it is not in me; God will answer the shalom of Pharaoh' (Gen 41:16) — shows the word covering favorable outcome and divine provision. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-for-the-peace-of, for-peace-of, for-the-peace-of | es: bienestar-de, en-su-paz, para-paz | fr: bien-être-de, et-pour-le-paix-de, paix | de: Friede, das-Wohlergehen, der-Friede- Gen 37:14; Gen 41:16; 1Sam 17:18; 1Sam 17:22

3. greeting or inquiry of peace (16×) A greeting formula or inquiry of peaceful intent — the performative speech-act use of shalom. 'Is it peace?' (2 Kgs 9:17-22) tests whether someone comes as friend or foe. 'Peace to you' (Judg 6:23; 19:20) extends welcome. German 'ist es Friede?' and Arabic 'hal salam?' preserve the interrogative formula. This sense overlaps with sense 1 but functions pragmatically as a social speech act rather than describing a state, as confirmed by its formulaic, non-propositional usage across Gen 29:6, Gen 43:27, and 2 Sam 18:28-32. PEACE AND WELLBEING

en: is-it-peace, is-peace, is-shalom | es: acaso-paz, paz, paz-a-ti | fr: est-cela-paix, est-paix, est-shalom | de: geht-es-wohl, ist-Friede, ist-es-Friede Gen 29:6; Gen 43:27; 2Sam 18:28; 2Sam 18:29; 2Sam 18:32

4. friend, ally, one at peace (3×) A person at peace, friend, or ally — the substantival use where shalom denotes a confederate or trusted companion. Psalm 55:20 mourns betrayal by 'my shalom' — my close friend who violated the covenant. Jeremiah 20:10 reports enemies watching for 'the men of my shalom' to stumble. Arabic halīf 'ally' and Spanish aliado appear in translations, proving this is recognized as a distinct personal-relational use rather than an abstract state. The shift from abstract noun to concrete person is a standard Hebrew semantic extension. PEACE AND WELLBEING

en: against-his-friends, and-for-those-at-peace, peace-my | es: contra-sus-aliados, paz-mía, y-para-los-que-están-en-paz | fr: dans-paix, et-à-paix, paix | de: Friede, gegen-sein-Friede, und-zu-Friede Ps 55:20; Ps 69:22; Jer 20:10

5. Salem, proper name (2×) Used as or associated with a proper name — Gideon's altar 'YHWH-Shalom' (Judg 6:24) and the messianic title 'Prince of Peace' in Isaiah 9:6 treat shalom as a divine attribute elevated to naming status. While overlapping with sense 1, these occurrences function as names or epithets rather than descriptions of a state. The theophoric and christological naming convention sets these apart from ordinary usage. PEACE AND WELLBEING

en: Peace, Shalom | es: Shalom | fr: Shalom, paix | de: Friede, Shalom Judg 6:24; Isa 9:6

6. (1×) Completeness or totality — the etymological core sense reflecting the root sh-l-m 'to be whole.' Jeremiah 13:19 reads 'Judah is carried away captive, all of it' (shelemim), where the nuance is total, complete deportation. Arabic kamil 'complete' and English 'completely' capture this rare but foundational sense, which underlies all the other meanings: peace is wholeness, welfare is wholeness, and greeting someone with shalom wishes them total well-being. COMPLETENESS AND TOTALITY en: completely | es: completamente | fr: paix | de: Friede Jer 13:19

שִׁלֻּם H7966 N-mp (3×)

requital, retribution, recompense (both reward and punishment)

This noun denotes the act of paying back what is owed, whether as punishment or reward. It appears in prophetic contexts announcing divine judgment (Isaiah 34:8 calls it 'the year of recompense for the controversy of Zion,' parallel to 'vengeance') and in Hosea 9:7 warning that 'the days of recompense have come.' The darker sense of judicial retribution dominates, though Micah 7:3 shifts to human corruption where judges take bribes as their 'recompense.' The Spanish and English glosses ('retribución,' 'recompense,' 'bribe') reflect this dual possibility of legitimate payment versus corrupt reward.

(3×) Primarily used for God's retributive justice. Isaiah 34:8 pairs 'the year of recompense' with 'the day of vengeance,' indicating divine settling of accounts. Hosea 9:7 announces 'the days of recompense have come' (parallel to 'visitation')—a time when God repays Israel for covenant violation. Micah 7:3 shows the human perversion: judges who should execute justice instead seek 'the bribe' (recompense for themselves). The evidence across languages confirms this word encompasses both legitimate requital and corrupt payoff, always with the sense of settling what is owed. RECOMPENSE AND RETRIBUTION

en: for-bribe, of-recompense, the-recompense | es: de-retribuciones, la-retribución, por-pago | fr: [שלומים], rétribution | de: [בשלום], [השלם], [שלומים] Isa 34:8; Hos 9:7; Mic 7:3

שַׁלֻּם H7967 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (27×)

Shallum — a theophoric name meaning 'recompensed/whole,' borne by kings, priests, Levites, and other figures

Shallum is a Hebrew proper name likely derived from shalem ('to be complete, at peace'), borne by at least a dozen individuals across 27 occurrences. The most politically prominent is Shallum son of Jabesh, who assassinated Zechariah son of Jeroboam II and seized Israel's throne for a single month before being murdered by Menahem (2 Kgs 15:10-15) — a reign epitomizing the chaos of Israel's final decades. Equally significant is Shallum son of Josiah, identified with Jehoahaz, deposed by Pharaoh Necho after three months (Jer 22:11; 1 Chr 3:15). In the priestly sphere, Shallum served as a temple gatekeeper (1 Chr 9:17, 19, 31; Jer 35:4), and another appears in the high-priestly genealogy as Ezra's ancestor (1 Chr 6:12-13; Ezr 7:2). Other bearers include the husband of the prophetess Huldah (2 Kgs 22:14; 2 Chr 34:22) and a wall-builder under Nehemiah (Neh 3:12). Spanish 'Salum,' French 'Shallum,' German 'Schallum' transliterate with minor variation.

Shallum (27×) A Hebrew proper name ('recompensed' or 'whole,' from shalem) designating multiple individuals. Most notable: Shallum king of Israel, whose one-month usurper reign ended in assassination (2 Kgs 15:10-15); Shallum son of Josiah, identified with King Jehoahaz (Jer 22:11; 1 Chr 3:15); Shallum the temple gatekeeper (1 Chr 9:17, 19, 31); a priestly ancestor of Ezra (1 Chr 6:12-13; Ezr 7:2); and the husband of the prophetess Huldah (2 Kgs 22:14; 2 Chr 34:22). Additional bearers appear in Simeon (1 Chr 4:25), Naphtali (1 Chr 7:13), and among Nehemiah's wall-builders (Neh 3:12). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shallum | es: Salum, Shalum, Shalúm | fr: Shallum, [שלום], [שלם] | de: Friede, Schallach, Shallum 2Kgs 15:10; 2Kgs 15:13; 2Kgs 15:14; 2Kgs 15:15; 2Kgs 22:14

שַׁלּוּן H7968 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shallun (personal name, wall-builder)

A personal name appearing in Nehemiah 3:15, identifying one of the builders who repaired Jerusalem's walls after the exile. Shallun rebuilt the Fountain Gate and the wall of the Pool of Shelah near the king's garden. The name may be a variant of the more common 'Shallum,' according to Thesaurus. The slight spelling variation (שַׁלּוּן vs. שַׁלּוּם) might reflect dialectical differences or simply orthographic variation. Nehemiah's detailed roster of builders preserves these names to honor those who participated in the restoration work, making wall-building a sacred act of covenant renewal and communal identity reconstruction.

(1×) In Nehemiah 3:15, the proper noun identifies 'Shallun son of Col-Hozeh, official of the district of Mizpah' as the builder of the Fountain Gate. Spanish translates 'Salún' (Salun), French and German bracket the Hebrew, preserving transliteration practices. The Greek text is not cited in the BDB entry. The name appears in administrative-genealogical context—Shallun holds official position and accepts responsibility for a specific construction section. This connects personal identity to covenant participation: rebuilding Jerusalem's defenses becomes spiritual as well as civic duty. The domain assignment to 'Names of Persons' is appropriate. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shallun | es: Salún | fr: [שלון] | de: [שלון] Neh 3:15

שָׁלֹשׁ H7969 Prep-l / Number-msc / 3mp (431×)

three — the cardinal number, used independently, in construct, and in compound numerals

Shalosh (masculine) and sheloshah (feminine) together account for 431 occurrences of the cardinal number three in the Hebrew Bible. Beyond simple counting, 'three' carries significant structural weight in biblical narrative — three visitors to Abraham (Gen 18:2), three days of darkness (Exod 10:22), three divisions of the Psalter. The number appears in construct chains ('three of them'), with prepositional prefixes ('for three,' 'from three'), and in compound numerals ('thirteen,' 'three hundred'). Cross-linguistic evidence is entirely consistent: Spanish 'tres,' French 'trois,' German 'drei' — pure numeral translation with no semantic divergence.

cardinal number three (431×) The cardinal number three in its masculine (shalosh) and feminine (sheloshah) forms, used for counting persons, objects, time periods, and measurements. Appears independently (Gen 6:10 'three sons'), in construct with pronominal suffixes (Gen 9:19 'three of them'), and as a component in compound numerals like thirteen or three hundred (Gen 5:22). All 431 occurrences denote the same numerical value without metaphorical extension. NUMBER THREE en: three | es: tres, tres-de, trescientos | fr: trois | de: drei, dreihundert, vondrei Gen 5:22; Gen 6:10; Gen 6:15; Gen 9:19; Gen 9:28

שְׁלֹשִׁים H7970 Prep-k / Number-cp (174×)

Thirty; also used as a title for David's elite corps of warriors ('the Thirty').

The cardinal number thirty, appearing throughout the Hebrew Bible in ages, measurements, counts, and monetary sums—from the thirty cubits of Noah's ark (Gen 6:15) to the thirty shekels of Zechariah's shepherd allegory (Zech 11:12-13). Beyond simple counting, the word takes on a quasi-proper-noun function in the military lists of 2 Samuel 23 and 1 Chronicles 11-12, where 'the Thirty' designates David's elite warrior corps, a titled rank distinct from mere enumeration. All major translation traditions render it with the expected numeral—Spanish treinta, French trente, German dreißig—but the substantival military use stands apart.

1. thirty (cardinal number) (168×) The cardinal number thirty used in counting, measurement, age formulas, monetary amounts, and date expressions. This covers the overwhelming majority of occurrences: thirty years old (Gen 5:3, 2 Sam 5:4), thirty cubits (Gen 6:15), thirty shekels (Exod 21:32), thirty days (Num 20:29). All languages render it straightforwardly—Spanish treinta, French trente, German dreißig—with no semantic ambiguity. NUMBER THIRTY

en: thirty | es: treinta | fr: trente | de: dreissig, dreißig, hundertdreißig Gen 5:3; Gen 5:16; Gen 11:14; Gen 11:17; Gen 11:18

2. the Thirty (David's warriors) (5×) A substantival, quasi-titular use: 'the Thirty,' referring to David's elite military corps listed in 2 Samuel 23:13, 24 and 1 Chronicles 11-12. Here the numeral functions as a proper title for a military rank or group, much like 'the Three' (הַשָּׁלֹשָׁה) for the top warriors. Spanish los treinta and English 'the thirty' mark this with the definite article, signaling its shift from quantity to designation. NUMBER THIRTY

en: [the-thirty], among-the-thirty, of-the-thirty | es: [los-treinta], de-los-treinta, entre-los-treinta | fr: de-le-trente, in-trente, parmi-le-trente | de: dreissig, in-dreissig, unter-der-dreissig 2Sam 23:13; 2Sam 23:24; 1Chr 11:11; 1Chr 12:4; 1Chr 12:19

3. three (anomalous reading) (1×) An anomalous occurrence at 2 Samuel 23:13 where multilingual glosses render the value as 'three' rather than 'thirty,' likely reflecting a textual variant (cf. the ancient confusion between שְׁלֹשִׁים 'thirty' and שְׁלֹשָׁה 'three' in parallel passages). The bracketed glosses in multiple languages suggest editorial uncertainty about the correct reading at this point. STATURE THREE ANOMALY

en: [k] | es: [treinta] | fr: [k] | de: [k] 2Sam 23:13

שָׁלַח H7971 Conj-w (847×)

send, dispatch; stretch out (hand); send away, dismiss, release; be sent; set fire to; expel, drive out

The verb שָׁלַח is the Hebrew Bible's primary word for sending — messengers, letters, plagues, and even the hand of God. Its 847 occurrences span nearly every narrative arc from Genesis to Malachi. In the Qal, it means to send or dispatch (Gen 8:7–12, the dove from the ark), but also to stretch out the hand in power or violence (Gen 22:10; Exod 3:20). The Piel intensifies into purposeful commissioning ('send away, dismiss, release'), governing the Exodus drama of Pharaoh's refusal to 'let go' (שַׁלַּח) Israel. A rare destructive sense — setting fire to a place — and forceful expulsion (Gen 3:23, the expulsion from Eden) complete this verb's wide semantic arc.

1. to send, dispatch (Qal) (701×) The basic Qal meaning 'to send, dispatch' (701x) — sending persons, messengers, gifts, or objects to a destination. Arabic ʾ, Korean 보내다, Swahili kutuma, Hindi भेजा converge on directed purposeful movement. Genesis 8:7–12 (Noah sending the raven and dove) and Genesis 20:2 (Abraham sending Sarah) are paradigmatic early instances. This sense dominates the entire Hebrew narrative. SENDING AND DISPATCHING

en: and-he-sent, and-sent, and-she-sent | es: Y-envió, y-envió | fr: et-elle-envoya, et-envoya, et-il-envoya | de: und-entsandte, und-er-sandte, und-sandte Gen 8:7; Gen 8:8; Gen 8:12; Gen 19:29; Gen 20:2

2. to send, dispatch (Piel) (63×) The Piel intensive 'send, dispatch' (63x) — purposeful commissioning of messengers, delegations, or communications with deliberate intent. Arabicʾ and Korean 보내다 maintain the same lexical field as sense 1. The Piel intensification often implies formal or repeated sending, as at Genesis 26:27 (Philistines sending Isaac away) and Exodus 8:32 (Pharaoh's repeated dispatching of messengers). SENDING AND DISPATCHING

en: and-I-shall-send, and-I-will-send, and-I-will-send- | es: Envió, Envió-, Y-enviaré | fr: Schélach, envoyer, et-envoyer | de: er-sandte, sandte, und-ich-sandte Gen 8:10; Gen 26:27; Gen 28:6; Gen 31:42; Exod 8:32

3. to stretch out, extend (Qal) (40×) Qal with יָד as object: 'to stretch out, extend the hand' (40x). Arabicʾ, Korean 내밀다, Swahili kunyoosha mark a clear semantic departure from 'send.' Genesis 3:22 ('lest he stretch out his hand'), Genesis 22:10 (Abraham stretching out his hand for the knife), and Exodus 3:20 ('I will stretch out my hand') show this gesture of power, violence, or intent. The hand becomes the semantic signal distinguishing this sense. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: And-stretched-out, and-He-sent-forth, and-He-stretched-out | es: Y-extendió, de-extender, extender | fr: et-Il-étendit-dehors, et-envoyer, et-il-atteignit | de: und-He-streckte-aus-heraus, und-er-reached, und-er-sandte Gen 3:22; Gen 8:9; Gen 19:10; Gen 22:10; Gen 37:22

4. to send away, dismiss, release (Piel) (34×) Piel meaning 'send away, dismiss, let go, release' (34x) — often of divorcing a wife, freeing slaves, or releasing captives. Arabic ʿ, Korean 보내다 with directional 'away,' and French 'envoie-moi' capture the separative force. Genesis 18:16 (Abraham sending off the angels), Genesis 31:27 (Laban's complaint about Jacob's departure), and the Exodus refrain of Pharaoh refusing to 'let the people go' are central. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: I-will-let-you-go, and-I-would-have-sent-you, and-he-sent | es: Dejar-ir, Y-despidió, cuando-envíe-él | fr: Je—que-tu-aller, envoie-moi, envoyer | de: als-er-sends, du-muss-sende-mich, er-sandte-weg Gen 18:16; Gen 31:27; Gen 32:26; Gen 45:24

5. to be sent (Qal passive / Pual) (5×) Passive voice (Qal passive participle or Pual) meaning 'to be sent, to be let loose' (5x). Arabic ʾ, Korean 보내지다, Swahili kutumwa confirm the passive transformation. Genesis 44:3 ('the men were sent away'), Genesis 49:21 ('Naphtali is a doe let loose'), and 1 Kings 14:6 ('I am sent to you') show both literal dispatch and poetic release. SENDING AND DISPATCHING

en: am-sent, let-loose, sent | es: enviado, fueron-enviados, suelta | fr: am-envoya, envoyer, que-délier | de: am-sandte, losgelassen, senden Gen 44:3; Gen 49:21; 1Kgs 14:6; Ezek 3:5; Ezek 23:40

6. (2×) A destructive use meaning 'to set (fire to), send fire into' (2x). English 'set/they-have-set,' Spanish quemaron 'they burned,' and French placer suggest placing fire. Judges 20:48 (Israelites setting fire to Benjaminite cities) and Psalm 74:7 ('they have set your sanctuary on fire') employ שָׁלַח with אֵשׁ 'fire' as object, yielding a violent conflagrative sense within the GEOGRAPHY/SPACE domain. PLACING AND LAYING

en: set, they-have-set | es: Enviaron, quemaron | fr: envoyer, placer | de: sandte, setzen Judg 20:48; Ps 74:7

7. to send out, expel, drive out (Piel) (2×) Piel meaning 'to expel, drive out, cast out' with forceful connotation (2x). Arabic ṭ, Korean 내보내다, Swahili kufukuza mark stronger compulsion than mere dismissal. Genesis 3:23 — God expelling Adam from the Garden of Eden — is the archetype: not a polite sending but an irreversible banishment. 2 Kings 8:12 extends this to violent military expulsion. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: And-sent-him-out, you-will-set | es: Y-lo-envió, enviarás | fr: Et-envoya-lui-dehors, tu-fera-plaça | de: du-wird-setzte, und-sandte-ihn-weg Gen 3:23; 2Kgs 8:12

שְׁלַח H7972 V-Qal-Perf-1cp (14×)

To send, dispatch (Aramaic); to send a letter, person, or decree, or to stretch out the hand.

The standard Aramaic cognate of Hebrew shalach, used predominantly in Ezra and Daniel for official acts of sending — dispatching letters, envoys, and royal decrees. The bureaucratic correspondence of Ezra 4-5 revolves around this verb: officials 'sent' reports to Darius, who 'sent' replies back. In one memorable instance (Ezra 6:12), Darius warns that God will overthrow any king who 'stretches out' (yishlach) his hand to alter the temple decree — extending the basic 'send' meaning to the physical gesture of reaching out to destroy.

1. send, dispatch (13×) To send or dispatch a person, message, or official decree. This is the standard Aramaic administrative verb for transmitting correspondence and commands. Ezra 4:11-18 uses it repeatedly for the exchange of letters between provincial officials and the Persian court; Daniel 3:2, 28 and 6:23 employ it for summoning officials and delivering people. Spanish enviar and French envoyer consistently render this straightforward sense of dispatching. SENDING AND DISPATCHING

en: had-sent, let-send, sent | es: enviamos, enviaron, enviasteis | fr: Schélach, [שלי׳ח], envoyer | de: [ישלח], [שלחו], [שלחנא] Ezra 4:11; Ezra 4:14; Ezra 4:17; Ezra 4:18; Ezra 5:6

2. stretch out, extend (1×) To stretch out or extend the hand, a specialized extension of the basic 'send' meaning. In Ezra 6:12, King Darius warns that any king or people who 'stretches out' his hand to alter the decree or destroy the Jerusalem temple will be overthrown. The idiom yishlach yad ('send forth the hand') is shared with Biblical Hebrew, where it often implies hostile or destructive intent. Spanish extienda ('extends') captures the physical gesture underlying this usage. SENDING AND DISPATCHING

en: stretches-out | es: extienda | fr: envoyer | de: [ישלח] Ezra 6:12

שֶׁלַח H7973 N-ms (8×)

A missile or weapon (javelin, dart); also shoots or sprouts of a plant

From the root shalakh ('to send'), this noun names what is 'sent forth' – whether a weapon hurled in battle or a shoot sprouting from a plant. Its primary domain is military: Nehemiah's builders each held 'his weapon' while working (Neh 4:17, 23), and the temple guards stood with their 'weapons' in 2 Chronicles 23:10. In Job, the shelakh represents the lethal instrument of death – 'perishing by the sword/dart' (Job 33:18; 36:12). A beautiful botanical sense emerges in Song of Solomon 4:13, where the beloved's 'shoots' are a paradise of pomegranates, the same 'sending forth' now describing the luxuriant growth of a garden.

1. weapon, missile (5×) A weapon or missile used in warfare – javelin, spear, or general armament. In Nehemiah's rebuilding narrative, each worker held his shelakh while laboring (Neh 4:17, 23), and 2 Chronicles 23:10 and 32:5 use the plural for stockpiled weapons. Joel 2:8 describes the locust army: 'they fall upon the shelakh and are not cut off.' Spanish 'armas' and 'las-armas' consistently render the collective military sense. WEAPONS ARMS

en: his-weapon, the-weapon, the-weapons | es: armas, el-arma, las-armas | fr: Schélach, [השלח], [שלחו] | de: [שלחו], der-sandte, sandte 2Chr 23:10; 2Chr 32:5; Neh 4:17; Neh 4:23; Joel 2:8

2. dart, javelin (lethal weapon) (2×) A lethal projectile weapon – dart, javelin, or sword – specifically associated with violent death. Job 33:18 warns of a soul 'perishing by the shelakh,' and Job 36:12 echoes the same fatal association. English 'by-the-sword' and Spanish 'por-espada' / 'por-la-espada' interpret the instrument as a killing weapon, distinguishing this from the general armament sense by its mortal context. French 'jet' ('throw') preserves the etymological connection to the root shalakh. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: by-the-sword | es: por-espada, por-la-espada | fr: dans-jet, jet | de: in-sandte Job 33:18; Job 36:12

3. shoots, sprouts (1×) Botanical shoots, sprouts, or branches – what a plant 'sends forth.' Song of Solomon 4:13 uses the 2fs plural construct shelakhayikh: 'your shoots are a paradise of pomegranates,' transforming the martial image of something launched outward into the tender growth of a garden. Spanish 'Tus-renuevos' ('your new growth') and French 'Tes-jets' ('your shoots') both preserve the organic vitality implied by the verbal root. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11579 WITH 3 SENSES

en: your-shoots | es: Tus-renuevos | fr: Tes-jets | de: [שלחיך] Song 4:13

שֶׁלַח H7974 N-proper-ms (9×)

Shelah, a son of Arpachshad and ancestor of Abraham in the patriarchal genealogy from Shem to Abram.

A proper name in the genealogy connecting Noah's son Shem to Abraham, identifying the son of Arpachshad and father of Eber (Gen 10:24; 11:12-15). Shelah occupies a key position in the Table of Nations and the Shemite lineage, bridging the post-flood world to the Hebrews through his son Eber, from whom the designation 'Hebrew' may derive. The name appears in both Genesis and 1 Chronicles (1:18, 24), with the LXX rendering it as Σαλα. German 'sandte' appears to be a mistranslation artifact, but Spanish 'Sala' and French 'Schélach' preserve the transliteration faithfully.

Shelah (9×) The personal name Shelah (שֶׁלַח), designating the son of Arpachshad and father of Eber in the Shemite genealogy. His nine occurrences span Genesis 10:24 (twice, in both the Table of Nations and the Shemite line), Genesis 11:12-15 (four times, detailing his birth, fathering of Eber, and lifespan), and 1 Chronicles 1:18 (twice) and 1:24. Shelah's genealogical position is significant: through his son Eber, the line extends to Peleg, Terah, and ultimately Abraham. The LXX Σαλα became the basis for the New Testament form in Luke 3:35. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shelach, Shelah, and-Shelach | es: Sala, Selaj, Shélaj | fr: Schélach, Shéla,

et-Schélach | de: Schelach, sandte, und-Schelach Gen 10:24; Gen 11:12; Gen 11:13; Gen 11:14

שֶׁלַח H7975a Art / N-ms (1×)

Shelah, Siloam (place name, pool/aqueduct in Jerusalem)

A place name appearing in Nehemiah 3:15, referring to a pool or water system near Jerusalem's southeastern wall. The fuller designation 'Pool of Shelah' (בְּרֵכַת הַשֶּׁלַח) appears in construction reports —Shallun repaired the wall of this pool by the King's Garden. This name is equivalent to Shiloah (שִׁלֹחַ) mentioned in Isaiah 8:6 and connects to the Siloam pool and tunnel system that brought water from the Gihon Spring into the city. The root may relate to 'sending' (שָׁלַח), reflecting the water's being 'sent' through channels. The Piel form in Psalm 104:10 uses the same root for sending streams. Modern Arabic preserves the name as Birket Silwan.

(1×) In Nehemiah 3:15, the phrase 'the Shelah' (הַשֶּׁלַח) appears in the construct 'pool of the Shelah,' identifying a specific water installation. Spanish translates 'el Siloé' (the Siloam), English 'the Shelah,' French and German bracket the Hebrew. The definite article marks this as a known landmark in Jerusalem's topography. The domain assignment to 'Names of Persons and Places' fits the place-name function. This pool system was crucial for Jerusalem's water supply, making its wall militarily and economically significant. The name's connection to Siloam links Nehemiah's construction project to earlier biblical references and to the famous tunnel inscription discovered in the 19th century. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6254 WITH 3 SENSES

en: the-Shelah | es: el-Siloé | fr: [השלח] | de: der-sandte Neh 3:15

שִׁלֹחַ H7975b Art / N-proper-fs (1×)

Shiloah (place name, conduit/pool in Jerusalem)

A place name designating a water source or conduit in Jerusalem, appearing in Isaiah 8:6 as 'the waters of Shiloah that flow gently.' This name refers to the same water system as Shelah (שֶׁלַח) in Nehemiah and is connected to the Siloam pool and tunnel. The prophet contrasts Shiloah's gentle flowing waters with the mighty, violent flood of the Euphrates (representing Assyria), creating a metaphor for trusting YHWH's quiet provision versus seeking powerful foreign alliances. The LXX renders it Silōam (Σιλωαμ). Modern Birket Silwan preserves the site. The Siloam tunnel and inscription provide archaeological evidence of this water system's importance.

(1×) In Isaiah 8:6, the phrase 'the Shiloah' (הַשִּׁלֹחַ) appears in 'the waters of the Shiloah,' emphasizing the gentle flow of this Jerusalem water source. The definite article marks it as a known landmark. Spanish translates 'Shiloaj' (Shiloah), French and German bracket the Hebrew. The prophet's imagery contrasts local, gentle provision (Shiloah) with foreign, violent power (Euphrates/Assyria). The 'gentle flowing' (הַהֹלְכִים לְאָט) characterizes both the literal water and the theological point: YHWH's provision seems small and unimpressive compared to imperial might, yet it suffices for those who trust. The domain assignment to 'Names of Persons and Places' fits the place-name function, though 'water systems' or 'sacred geography' might capture more theological weight. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6254 WITH 3 SENSES

en: the-Shiloah | es: Shiloaj | fr: [השלח] | de: [השלח] Isa 8:6

שְׁלוּחָה H7976 N-fpc / 3fs (1×)

shoots, branches (of grapevine)

A feminine plural noun denoting shoots or branches, specifically of a grapevine. Isaiah 16:8 uses the term to describe the vine of Sibmah (east of the Jordan), whose 'shoots' once reached distant lands, symbolizing the region's former prosperity. The imagery connects agricultural abundance to political/economic reach—Sibmah's viticulture was so successful that its influence extended far beyond local boundaries. The plural form (שְׁלוּחוֹת) with third-feminine suffix (שְׁלוּחֹתֶיהָ 'her shoots') personalizes the vine, typical of prophetic poetry that treats cities and regions as living entities. The root relates to 'sending forth' (שָׁלַח), capturing how vine branches extend and spread.

(1×) In Isaiah 16:8, the phrase 'its shoots' (שְׁלוּחֹתֶיהָ) refers to the vine of Sibmah: 'her shoots reached to Jazer, wandered to the desert; her branches spread abroad, passed over the sea.' Spanish translates 'sus ramas' (her branches), French and German bracket the Hebrew. The possessive suffix 'her' personifies the vine, making Sibmah's agricultural glory a character in the lament. The shoots' extensive reach—to Jazer, the desert, across the sea—hyperbolically depicts former prosperity now destroyed. The domain assignment to 'Plants' is appropriate. The imagery fits prophetic lament over Moab, where agricultural destruction symbolizes divine judgment. BRANCHES AND SHOOTS

en: its-shoots | es: sus-ramas | fr: [שלחותיה] | de: [שלחותיה] Isa 16:8

שִׁלְחִי H7977 N-proper-ms (2×)

Shilhi: father of King Jehoshaphat's mother, grandfather to the king of Judah

A Hebrew personal name, appearing in the genealogical notices of King Jehoshaphat of Judah. Shilhi is identified as the father of Azubah, who was the mother of Jehoshaphat. The name appears in both 1 Kings 22:42 and its parallel in 2 Chronicles 20:31, providing the maternal lineage of one of Judah's reforming kings. The Septuagint renderings vary widely (Semei, Salala, Salei), suggesting uncertainty about pronunciation or vocalization. The etymology is uncertain, though it may relate to roots meaning 'sent' or 'missile.' As with most proper names, the multilingual glosses are transliterations.

(2×) Royal genealogies in Kings and Chronicles occasionally preserve the names of kings' mothers and their fathers, marking these individuals as significant in court politics and succession. Shilhi's inclusion in both accounts of Jehoshaphat's reign suggests he was a figure of some standing, though nothing else is known of him. The name's appearance in parallel texts confirms its historical reliability, even if its meaning remains obscure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shilchi, Shilhi | es: Silhi | fr: Shilchi, [שלחי] | de: Shilchi, [שלחי] 1Kgs 22:42; 2Chr 20:31

שִׁלְחִים H7978 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Shilhim (place name in southern Judah)

A place name appearing in Joshua 15:32, identifying a town in the Negeb region of Judah's tribal allotment. The conjunction 'and' connects it to the surrounding list of settlements. The LXX offers various renderings (Salē, Saleiim, Seleiim in different manuscripts), indicating textual variation or uncertainty about pronunciation. Like many small settlements in the Negeb, precise modern identification remains uncertain. The name appears in boundary and town lists that legally defined Judah's inheritance, ensuring territorial clarity among the tribes. These lists functioned as ancient land deeds, establishing ownership and rights.

(1×) In Joshua 15:32, the phrase 'and Shilhim' (וְשִׁלְחִים) includes this town in Judah's Negeb settlement list. The conjunction 'and' (וְ) coordinates it with surrounding place names. Spanish translates 'y Siljim' (and Silhim), French 'et Shilchim,' German 'und Shilchim,' all preserving the conjunctive structure. The domain assignment to 'Properties, Relations' seems inappropriate—this clearly belongs to geographical locations or place names. The LXX variants suggest this town's name was not well-established in Greek transmission, perhaps because the settlement was minor or abandoned by Hellenistic times. These Negeb towns marked the southern extent of Judah's inheritance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Shilchim | es: y-Siljim | fr: et-Shilchim | de: und-Shilchim Josh 15:32

שֻׁלְחָן H7979 N-msc / 2ms (71×)

shulchan – a table for dining, royal feasts, or ritual use; by metonymy, the provision set upon it

The masculine noun shulchan denotes a table, covering a range from the leather mat spread on the ground in early Semitic practice to the elaborate furnishings of palace and temple. It appears 71 times in contexts spanning the domestic (Judg 1:7, where vanquished kings gather crumbs under a table), the royal (David's table, 2 Sam 9:7-13; Solomon's table, 1 Kgs 10:5), the sacral (the table of showbread, Exod 25:23-30), and the metaphorical (Ps 23:5, 'you prepare a table before me'). By metonymy it can represent the provision or fellowship associated with dining. Spanish mesa, French table, and German Tisch all converge on a single equivalent, confirming that the physical-object sense and the metonymic-provision sense remain lexically unified.

table (71×) A table as a piece of furniture – whether a humble mat on the ground (as the etymological background suggests), a king's banquet table (1 Kgs 2:7; 2 Sam 9:7), the sacred table of showbread in the tabernacle (Exod 25:23-30; Num 4:7), or even idol tables that provoke divine jealousy (Isa 65:11; Mal 1:7). By extension the word carries metonymic force: 'my table' means 'my provision and hospitality' (Ps 23:5; Ps 69:23). Spanish mesa, French table, and German Tisch map uniformly to this unified sense. TABLE FURNITURE
en: table, the-table | es: la-mesa | fr: la-table, le-table, table | de: Tisch, der-Tisch, der-table Exod 25:23; Exod 25:27; Exod 25:28; Exod 25:30; Exod 26:35

שָׁלַט H7980 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (8×)

To rule, have dominion, exercise authority over; in Hifil, to empower or grant authority to another

A late Hebrew verb meaning to exercise ruling power or mastery over others. In Esther 9:1 it carries dramatic irony — the very day enemies expected to dominate the Jews, the Jews instead became masters over those who hated them. Ecclesiastes uses it repeatedly to explore the bitter irony of human authority: one person rules over another to their hurt (8:9), and a person who labors wisely may see their wealth ruled by a fool (2:19). The Hifil causative adds the dimension of God granting or withholding the power to enjoy what one has (Eccl 5:19; 6:2).

1. to rule, have dominion (Qal) (6×) The Qal stem sense of exercising dominion, ruling, or lording it over others. Nehemiah 5:15 rebukes former governors who 'lorded it over' the people; Esther 9:1 uses it twice for the dramatic reversal where the Jews gained mastery over their enemies. Ecclesiastes probes the futility of such rule — one person dominates another to their own harm (8:9). The Arabic cognate saluta ('overcome, prevail') and Aramaic shlat preserve the same semantic core of authoritative control. RULING AND REIGNING
en: and-he-will-rule, let-rule, ruled | es: domina, dominar, dominaron | fr: [ישלטו], [לשלוט], [שלטו] | de: [וישלט], [ישלטו], [לשלוט] Neh 5:15; Esth 9:1; Ps 119:133; Eccl 2:19

2. to empower, give authority (Hifil) (2×) The Hifil (causative) stem sense: to cause someone to rule, that is, to empower or grant authority. Both occurrences appear in Ecclesiastes' theological reflection on divine sovereignty — God gives wealth but may not empower the person to enjoy it (Eccl 6:2), or alternatively does empower enjoyment as a gift (5:19). Spanish 'le da poder' and Hindi 'adhikar dena' capture the causative nuance of bestowing ruling power upon another. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-empowered-him, empowers-him | es: le-da-poder, y-le-dio-poder | fr: dominer, et-dominer-lui | de: [והשליטו], [ישליטנו] Eccl 5:19; Eccl 6:2

שְׁלַט H7981 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-3ms / 3ms (7×)

To have power or dominion, to rule; in the Hifil, to appoint someone as ruler (Aramaic שְׁלַט)

An Aramaic verb appearing exclusively in Daniel, spanning the range from having raw power over physical forces to exercising royal dominion. In Daniel 3:27 fire 'had no power' over the three youths, while in 5:7 and 5:16 the verb describes being appointed ruler of the kingdom. The Hifil causative form captures Nebuchadnezzar's God-given authority to grant rulership to others (Dan 2:38, 2:48). Spanish gobernará and te ha hecho gobernar neatly distinguish the base and causative stems.

1. rule, have dominion (Qal) (5×) To rule, have power or dominion, in the basic Qal stem. This encompasses having raw physical power (fire over the three youths in Dan 3:27, lions overpowering accusers in Dan 6:24) as well as exercising governmental rule (Dan 5:7, 5:16). The Spanish gobernará ('will rule') and se apoderaron ('they overpowered') together show the breadth from political authority to brute physical mastery. The kingdom that 'will rule over all the earth' (Dan 2:39) captures the grandest scope. RULING AND REIGNING
en: had-power, overpowered, will-rule | es: gobernará, gobernarás, se-apoderaron | fr: gouverner | de: [ישלט], [שלט], [שלטו] Dan 2:39; Dan 3:27; Dan 5:7; Dan 5:16; Dan 6:24

2. cause to rule, appoint as ruler (Hifil) (2×) The Hifil causative: to make someone a ruler, to grant dominion to another. Used exclusively of Nebuchadnezzar receiving God-given authority and then delegating it, as in Dan 2:38 where God 'has made you ruler' and Dan 2:48 where the king 'made him ruler' over Babylon's province. Spanish y te ha hecho gobernar ('and has made you govern') and Arabic sallataka ('empowered you') both underscore the causative transfer of authority from one party to another. RULING AND REIGNING
en: and-made-him-ruler, and-made-you-ruler | es: y-lo-hizo-gobernar, y-te-ha-hecho-gobernar | fr: et-gouverner | de: [והשלטה], [והשלטך] Dan 2:38; Dan 2:48

שֶׁלֶט H7982 N-mpc (7×)

shield, buckler — a type of defensive armament, often ornamental, hung on walls or carried in battle

Shelet refers to a particular kind of shield or buckler whose exact form remains debated among scholars. Some ancient versions suggest 'quivers' or 'equipment,' but the dominant reading across translations is a defensive shield. David captured golden shelatim from Hadadezer's servants (2 Sam 8:7), and Solomon's Temple later displayed such shields as trophies. In Song of Songs 4:4 they hang decoratively on a tower alongside maginnim, suggesting shelet may have been a smaller, ornamental type. Spanish 'escudos' and English 'bucklers/shields' consistently reflect this military-decorative sense.

shield, buckler (defensive armament) (7×) A shield or buckler used as defensive military equipment, sometimes ornamental and displayed on walls or towers. David took golden shelatim from the servants of Hadadezer (2 Sam 8:7 = 1 Chr 18:7), and Jehoiada distributed shields from the Temple armory (2 Kgs 11:10 = 2 Chr 23:9). In Song 4:4 shelatim hang alongside maginnim on a tower, suggesting a distinct but related type of defensive piece. Spanish 'escudos' and French 'bouclier' confirm the shield sense across all seven occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: bucklers-of, shields-of, the-bucklers | es: escudos-de, los-escudos, los-escudos-pequeños | fr: [השלטים], [שלטי], bouclier | de: [השלטים], [שלטי], [שלטיהם] 2Sam 8:7; 2Kgs 11:10; 1Chr 18:7; 2Chr 23:9; Song 4:4

שִׁלְטוֹן H7983 N-ms (2×)

Rule, dominion, mastery; authority exercised over something or someone

A noun meaning rule, dominion, or mastery, appearing twice in Ecclesiastes. In 8:4, it describes the king's authoritative word, which carries 'rule' or 'power.' In 8:8, the word appears in the famous declaration that no one has 'mastery over the spirit' to retain it, nor power over the day of death. The multilingual evidence consistently points to rule, dominion, or power, and the contexts link it to ultimate authority—whether royal or divine. Qoheleth uses this term to explore the limits of human control: kings wield dominion in their sphere, but death mocks all earthly mastery.

(2×) Both uses in Ecclesiastes concern the boundaries of authority. The king's word has dominion in the political realm, but even kings lack mastery over life and death. The Spanish 'dominio' and 'poder,' along with English 'rule,' capture the term's focus on effective control and authority. Qoheleth's point is sharp: human dominion is real but radically limited. The word choice underscores the paradox of power—vast in one sphere, impotent in another. AUTHORITY AND

POWER
en: rule | es: dominio, poder | fr: domination | de: [שלטון] Eccl 8:4; Eccl 8:8

H7984 N-mpc (2×)
Rulers, officials; those holding administrative or judicial authority
An Aramaic plural noun denoting rulers or officials, appearing in the list of dignitaries summoned to the dedication of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image in Daniel 3. The exact administrative role is unclear —BDB does not provide a detailed entry—but the context groups them with satraps, governors, and other high-ranking officials. The multilingual glosses vary: Spanish 'oficiales' (officers), French 'puissant' (powerful), suggesting a general term for those in authority. The repetition of the full list of officials in Daniel 3:2 and 3:3 emphasizes the comprehensive nature of the royal summons—every level of government must bow.

(2×) Daniel 3's bureaucratic roll call serves a rhetorical purpose: the empire's entire power structure is assembled to enforce idolatrous worship, magnifying the courage of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. The term שִׁלְטָנַיִן contributes to this atmosphere of overwhelming political pressure. While the precise office is uncertain, the function is clear: these are figures of authority, part of the apparatus of imperial control. The cross-linguistic spread ('rulers,' 'officials,' 'powerful') confirms the general sense even if the specific rank is lost. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: rulers-of | es: los-oficiales-de | fr: puissant | de: [שלטני] Dan 3:2; Dan 3:3

שָׁלְטָן H7985 N-msc / 3ms (14×)
Dominion, sovereign authority; Aramaic term for ruling power, especially God's eternal reign in Daniel.
An Aramaic noun used exclusively in Daniel to denote sovereign dominion and ruling authority. It describes both human and divine kingship, but its theological weight falls overwhelmingly on God's eternal reign: 'His dominion is an everlasting dominion that shall not pass away' (Dan 7:14). The word appears in Nebuchadnezzar's doxologies acknowledging divine sovereignty after humbling experiences (Dan 4:3, 34) and in Darius's decree that all must tremble before the God of Daniel, 'whose dominion shall be to the end' (Dan 6:26). Daniel 7 uses it repeatedly to contrast the temporary dominion of beastly empires with the everlasting dominion given to the Son of Man and the saints of the Most High (Dan 7:6, 12, 14, 26–27).

dominion, sovereign authority (14×) Sovereign dominion or ruling authority (שָׁלְטָן), an Aramaic noun confined to Daniel. German 'Herrschaft' and Spanish 'dominio' precisely mirror the semantic range. The term spans human political rule — the dominion stripped from defeated beasts (Dan 7:6, 12) — and divine eternal sovereignty — the dominion that 'shall not be destroyed' (Dan 7:14, 27). Nebuchadnezzar uses it to confess God's supremacy after his madness (Dan 4:3, 34), and Darius echoes the formula (Dan 6:26). The emphatic state שָׁלְטָנָא appears when the dominion is given to the saints (Dan 7:27), marking eschatological climax. DOMINION AND RULE
en: His-dominion, and-His-dominion, and-dominion | es: dominio, dominio-de, dominio-de-ellas | fr: [וישלטנא], [וישלטנך], [שלטנהון] | de: Herrschaft, seine-Herrschaft, und-Herrschaft Dan 4:3; Dan 4:22; Dan 4:34; Dan 6:26

שַׁלִּיט H7986 Adj-fs (1×)
imperious, domineering, having mastery
An adjective describing someone who has mastery, dominates, or rules—often with negative connotations of overbearing control. Ezekiel 16:30 uses the feminine form to describe personified Jerusalem as an 'imperious prostitute' (אִשָּׁה זוֹנָה שַׁלָּטֶת), combining sexual infidelity imagery with domineering behavior. The term can be neutral (simply denoting a ruler) or negative (emphasizing domination). Ecclesiastes uses it for rulers or those having mastery, while Genesis 42:6 applies it to Joseph as 'the ruler' over Egypt (likely a late editorial substitution). The feminine form in Ezekiel intensifies the prophet's shocking personification of Jerusalem as an aggressive, controlling prostitute—reversing expected gender roles to maximize rhetorical impact.

(1×) In Ezekiel 16:30, the feminine adjective modifies 'prostitute': 'an imperious prostitute woman' (אִשָּׁה זוֹנָה שַׁלָּטֶת). Spanish translates 'dominante' (domineering), French 'dominatrice' (feminine domineering), German brackets the Hebrew. The feminine form שַׁלָּטֶת (rather than masculine שַׁלִּיט) agrees with 'woman' and intensifies the portrayal—Jerusalem personified not merely as unfaithful but as aggressively controlling in her infidelity. The domain assignment to 'Control, Rule' fits the semantic range. This adjective contributes to Ezekiel's most shocking extended metaphor, where Jerusalem's covenant violations are depicted as aggressive prostitution that inverts normal power dynamics. RULING AND REIGNING
en: imperious | es: dominante | fr: dominatrice | de: [שלטת] Ezek 16:30

שְׁלִי H7987 Prep-b (1×)
quietness, privacy, secrecy
A masculine noun denoting quietness, privacy, or secrecy—an undisturbed or concealed manner of action. It appears in 2 Samuel 3:27 when Joab takes Abner aside 'quietly' or 'privately' in the gate and murders him. The prepositional phrase 'in quietness' (בַּשְּׁלִי) indicates the stealthy manner of the killing—Joab drew Abner away from public view to execute personal revenge disguised as private conversation. The Syriac cognate (ܫܠܝ) frequently conveys 'suddenly' or 'privately,' supporting this interpretation. The term captures the deceptive nature of Joab's violence—using the guise of peaceful, quiet conversation to commit murder.

(1×) In 2 Samuel 3:27, the phrase 'in quiet' or 'quietly' (בַּשְּׁלִי) describes Joab's deceptive method: 'he turned him aside in the gate to speak with him quietly.' Spanish translates 'en quietud' (in quietness), French 'dans quiet' (in quiet), German 'in quiet.' The preposition בְּ ('in') makes this adverbial, describing manner. Joab's 'quiet' conversation masks murderous intent—he lures Abner to a private spot under pretense of peaceful dialogue, then kills him. The domain assignment to 'Mental Life > Know' seems questionable—this belongs more to deception, stealth, or manner of action. The term exposes the dangerous gap between outward demeanor (quiet, private talk) and actual intent (vengeance and murder). SECRECY AND HIDING
en: in-quiet | es: en-quietud | fr: dans-quiet | de: in-quiet 2Sam 3:27

שִׁלְיָה H7988 Conj-w (1×)
afterbirth, the placenta and membranes expelled after childbirth
This rare term refers to the afterbirth expelled during childbirth, appearing only in Deuteronomy's horrific siege scenario where a mother hides even this from her starving family. The word shares cognates across Semitic languages (Arabic salā, Aramaic shilyeta), all denoting the placenta and associated membranes. The single biblical occurrence depicts the extremity of covenant curse, where normal human compassion collapses under famine's pressure.

(1×) The afterbirth or placenta expelled following delivery. Deuteronomy 28:57 uses this graphic term to portray siege conditions so desperate that a mother conceals even the afterbirth from her own children, suggesting either ritual or survival-driven secrecy. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'placenta,' English 'afterbirth') confirms the biological reference, underscoring the covenant curse's visceral horror. DISOBEDIENCE REBELLION
en: and-against-her-afterbirth | es: Y-contra-su-placenta | fr: et-contre-sa-afterbirth | de: und-gegen-ihr-afterbirth Deut 28:57

שַׁלִּיט H7989 Adj-mp (4×)
ruler, one having mastery or dominion; someone with authority or controlling power, whether legitimate or imperious
This adjective-turned-noun describes someone having mastery or ruling authority. Genesis 42:6 uses it of Joseph as 'the ruler over the land' of Egypt. Ecclesiastes employs it three times: 7:19 speaks of rulers in a city, 8:8 notes that no one has mastery over the wind or the day of death, and 10:5 describes an error proceeding from 'the ruler.' The multilingual glosses (Spanish gobernador/gobernante, French gouverneur/chef, German transliterations) recognize this as an authority figure. Ecclesiastes' usage is particularly nuanced—rulers have power, but ultimate realities (death, natural forces) remain beyond human mastery. The term can carry neutral or negative connotations depending on context, from legitimate governance to domineering control.

(4×) One having mastery or ruling authority; a ruler or governor. Joseph is identified as 'the ruler over the land' in Genesis 42:6. Ecclesiastes uses it for city rulers (7:19), those in positions of power (10:5), while also noting the limits of human mastery—no one rules over death or wind (8:8). The term emphasizes the possession and exercise of control, whether legitimate governance or imperious domination, while acknowledging ultimate boundaries to human authority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ruler, rulers, the-ruler | es: el-gobernador, el-gobernante, gobernantes | fr: gouverneur, le-chef, le-gouverneur | de: [השליט], [שליט], [שליטים] Gen 42:6; Eccl 7:19; Eccl 8:8; Eccl 10:5

שַׁלִּיט H7990 Adj-ms (10×)

Ruling, having dominion; as adjective: exercising authority or mastery; as noun: a ruler, captain; also permitted, authorized.

An Aramaic adjective describing one who holds mastery or exercises governing power. In Daniel it characterizes God as the one who rules over human kingdoms (Dan 4:17, 25) and designates human officials such as captains and rulers (Dan 2:10, 15). The word carries a second, distinct nuance in Ezra 7:24 where it shifts from political authority to legal permission – 'it is not authorized' to impose tax. Spanish 'domina/dominan' and French 'domination/puissant' consistently reflect the governing-power sense, while the Ezra passage stands apart across all languages as an impersonal construction of lawfulness.

1. ruling, having authority (9×) The core adjectival sense: one who rules, exercises mastery, or holds governing authority. Used predicatively of God who rules over the realm of mankind (Dan 4:17, 25, 29; 5:21) and of the heavens that rule (Dan 4:23), and substantivally for human officials – rulers (Dan 2:10; 5:29) and a captain (Dan 2:15). Multilingual glosses converge on dominion vocabulary: Spanish 'domina,' French 'puissant,' German 'Herrscher.' The Ezra 4:20 use of mighty kings who 'ruled over' (ב) the region fits this same governing sense. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-ruler, and-ruling, captain | es: domina, dominan, el-oficial-de | fr: [ושליטין], domination, et-puissant | de: Herrschaft, Herrscher, [ושליטין] Ezra 4:20; Dan 2:10; Dan 2:15; Dan 4:17; Dan 4:25

2. permitted, having power/right (1×) A semantic extension from 'having authority' to 'having the right or permission,' yielding the impersonal sense 'it is permitted, it is authorized.' Attested once at Ezra 7:24 in Artaxerxes' decree forbidding the imposition of tax on temple personnel. Spanish 'está-permitido' and English 'permitted' capture this shift from political power to legal authorization, a usage well attested in Syriac cognates where the same root regularly means 'it is lawful.' ABILITY AND POWER

en: permitted | es: está-permitido | fr: [שליט] | de: [שליט] Ezra 7:24

H7991 Art / N-mp (2×)

Officers, warriors; possibly 'third men' (chariot crew) or elite military leaders

A plural noun with the definite article, referring to officers or warriors in David's army. The term appears in Chronicles' lists of David's mighty men, and its precise meaning is debated: it may derive from 'three' (suggesting 'third man' in a chariot crew or 'three' as an elite unit) or from a root meaning 'officer' or 'adjutant.' The multilingual glosses reflect this uncertainty, offering 'the officers' or 'the three.' In 1 Chronicles 11:11, it appears in the heading to the list of the Three, David's most elite warriors. In 12:19, it refers to military commanders who joined David. The term marks positions of leadership and valor in the army.

(2×) Chronicles uses this term to designate military elites—whether the 'Three' as a special group or 'officers' more broadly. The ambiguity in translation reflects genuine uncertainty about whether this is a title (the Three) or a role (the officers/adjutants). Both occurrences are in contexts celebrating David's warriors, and the definite article suggests a recognized, official designation. The term contributes to the martial glory of David's reign, highlighting the skilled and loyal fighters who secured his kingdom. MILITARY OFFICERS

en: (the-officers), (the-three) | es: (los-oficiales) | fr: [השלישים] | de: [השלישים] 1Chr 11:11; 1Chr 12:19

שְׁלִי H7991a N-ms (2×)

A measure, possibly a third part; used for measuring dust or tears in poetic hyperbole

A noun of uncertain meaning, possibly denoting a measure or a 'third part.' It appears in two poetic texts: Isaiah 40:12 asks who has measured the dust of the earth 'in a measure,' and Psalm 80:5 laments that God has fed his people tears 'in large measure.' BDB suggests it may refer to a third of an ephah, though this is conjectural. The multilingual glosses show translators struggling: Spanish offers 'tercio' (third) or 'medida triple' (triple measure), while others preserve the Hebrew or paraphrase. Both contexts use the word adverbially to intensify imagery of vast quantities—immeasurable dust or overwhelming tears.

(2×) The poetic contexts employ the term for rhetorical effect, not precision. Isaiah's question mocks human pretensions: who could measure creation's dust with any measure, let alone a mere 'third-part'? The absurdity underscores God's incomparability. Psalm 80's tears 'in measure' or 'in abundance' intensify the lament: God has given sorrow in full, overflowing quantities. The cross-linguistic uncertainty ('third,' 'measure,' 'large measure') reflects the word's rarity and figurative use, but the sense of quantity—whether literal measure or hyperbolic abundance—is clear. SUFFICIENCY AND WORTH

en: in-a-measure, in-large-measure | es: con-un-tercio, medida-triple | fr: [בשלש], troisième | de: [בשלש], in-large-messen Ps 80:5; Isa 40:12

שָׁלִישׁ H7991b Conj-w (1×)

musical instrument, possibly a triangular or three-stringed instrument used in celebration

This hapax designates a musical instrument whose exact identity remains debated. Scholars suggest it may have been triangular in shape, three-stringed, or three-barred—perhaps a sistrum or triangle. The term appears in 1 Samuel 18:6 describing the joyful procession celebrating David's victory over Goliath, paired with tambourines. The Hebrew root suggests a connection to 'three,' but whether this refers to strings, bars, or shape remains uncertain. What's clear is that it produced sound for festive occasions.

(1×) A musical instrument of uncertain construction, likely percussive or stringed, used in victory celebrations. When David returned from slaying Goliath, women met him with singing, dancing, tambourines, and these instruments (1 Samuel 18:6). The Spanish and French translations ('instrumentos,' 'triangles') reflect the scholarly debate about its form, while the consistent pairing with drums suggests it added rhythmic or melodic color to Israel's most joyous public celebrations. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: and-with-triangles | es: y-con-instrumentos | fr: et-avec-triangles | de: und-mit-triangles 1Sam 18:6

שָׁלִישׁ H7991c Art / N-ms (16×)

Military officer: originally the 'third man' on a war chariot; a triad or group of three; the numeral thirty.

The noun shalish derives from the root shlsh ('three') and originally designated the third warrior stationed on an Israelite or Egyptian war chariot — the fighting man who stood alongside the driver and the shield-bearer. Over time it generalized into a title for high-ranking military officers and royal adjutants, appearing prominently in the Exodus narratives of Pharaoh's drowned chariot forces (Exod 14:7; 15:4) and in the stories of kings' personal attendants (2 Kgs 7:2, 17, 19; 9:25). Spanish capitan and French officier reflect this generalized military rank. Two marginal senses preserve the word's numerical ancestry: the designation 'the three' as a warrior elite in 2 Samuel 23:8, and the enigmatic 'thirty' (or 'excellent things') of Proverbs 22:20, where the Kethiv-Qere tradition and ancient versions diverge on whether Solomon wrote thirty sayings or something else entirely.

1. military officer, captain (14×) A high-ranking military officer or royal adjutant, originally the 'third man' on a war chariot who served as the fighting warrior beside the driver and shield-bearer. Fourteen occurrences span from Pharaoh's chariot captains drowned in the Sea of Reeds (Exod 14:7; 15:4) to the unnamed officer on whose arm the king of Israel leaned (2 Kgs 7:2, 17, 19) and Jehu's adjutant Bidkar (2 Kgs 9:25). Spanish capitan, French officier, and German Offizier all converge on generalized military rank. In Ezekiel 23:15, 23, the shalishim appear as Babylonian warriors in full regalia — 'officers and commanders, all of them desirable young men' — showing the title had become a marker of military prestige beyond its chariot origins. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: [ketiv], and-his-captains, and-officers | es: [capitán-de-él], capitanes, capitán-de-él | fr: [ketiv], [שלישין], et-le-officers | de: [ketiv], [שלישין], der-officer Exod 14:7; Exod 15:4; 1Kgs 9:22; 2Kgs 7:2; 2Kgs 7:17

2. the three, triad (1×) A group of three warriors or 'the three' as an elite designation — a numeral sense reflecting the root shlsh ('three'). In 2 Samuel 23:8 (parallel 1 Chr 11:11), the Kethiv reads 'the third' or 'the three,' naming the innermost circle of David's mighty warriors. Spanish los tres and French les trois render this as a straightforward numeral. The textual tradition wavers between shalish and sheloshim ('thirty'), and the Qere in some manuscripts adjusts accordingly, but the singular/triad reading preserves an archaic military institution: an elite corps of three who formed David's personal guard. NUMBER THREE en: the-three | es: los-tres | fr: le-trois | de: der-drei 2Sam 23:8

3. thirty (homographic reading) (1×) The numeral 'thirty,' a homographic or variant plural form where shelishim is read as the cardinal number rather than the officer title. The sole clear instance is Proverbs 22:20, where the speaker asks 'Have I not written for you thirty (shalishim) sayings of counsel and knowledge?' — a reading supported by the Qere and by the Egyptian parallel of the Thirty Chapters of Amenemope. Spanish treinta and French trente confirm the numeral reading. The Kethiv shlshwm creates genuine ambiguity: is Solomon offering 'thirty sayings' or 'excellent things'? Most modern translations follow the numeral, connecting the collection to its Egyptian literary model. NUMBER THIRTY en: thirty | es: (treinta) | fr: (שלישים) | de: [(שלישים)] Prov 22:20

שְׁלִישִׁי H7992 Number-oms (108×)

Third (ordinal); also a third part, three-year-old, or third story — the ordinal adjective with fractional and specialized extensions.
The ordinal number 'third' in Hebrew, שְׁלִישִׁי is far more versatile than a simple counting word. Its most common use marks sequence — the third day, the third year, the third son — appearing throughout the creation narrative (Gen 1:13), the patriarchal stories, and the historical books. But it also serves as a fractional noun ('a third part'), dividing armies (2 Sam 18:2) and prophetic judgments (Ezek 5:2, 12) into thirds. Two specialized extensions round out its range: describing sacrificial animals as 'three-year-old' (Isa 15:5; Jer 48:34) and identifying the 'third story' of Ezekiel's temple (Ezek 42:3). Spanish mirrors the ordinal/fractional split with 'tercero' and 'tercio'; German uses 'dritte' and 'Drittel.'

1. third (ordinal) (80×) The ordinal number 'third,' indicating position in a sequence. Used attributively or predicatively of days (Gen 1:13; Gen 22:4 'on the third day'), years (1 Kgs 18:1 'in the third year'), rivers (Gen 2:14 'the third river'), sons, and kings. With 80 occurrences this is overwhelmingly the dominant sense. Spanish 'el tercero/la tercera,' French 'le troisième,' German 'der dritte,' and Arabic الثالث all straightforwardly correspond. The 'third day' motif carries particular theological weight as a marker of divine intervention and resolution. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER) en: the-third | es: el-tercero, la-tercera, tercero | fr: le-troisième | de: dem-dritten, der-dritter, des-dritten Gen 2:14; Gen 22:4; Gen 31:22; Gen 32:19; Gen 34:25

2. a third part, one-third (22×) Fractional noun: 'a third part' or 'one-third,' denoting one of three equal portions. David divided his army into three parts (2 Sam 18:2); Ezekiel's prophetic sign-act burns, strikes, and scatters thirds of his hair (Ezek 5:2, 12). The Numbers 15 offerings require 'a third of a hin' of wine (Num 15:6-7). Spanish 'la tercera parte' / 'el tercio,' French 'le tiers,' and German 'ein Drittel' all distinguish this fractional use from the ordinal. With 22 occurrences, it is the second-most common sense. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER) en: a-third-of, and-the-third, and-third-of | es: El-tercio, Y-el-tercio, Y-la-tercera-parte | fr: et-le-troisième, et-tiers-de, et-troisième | de: der-dritter, dritte, dritter Num 15:6; Num 15:7; Num 28:14; 2Sam 18:2

3. three-year-old (2×) Attributive use designating an animal as 'three-year-old,' appearing in the place-name or epithet 'Eglath-shelishiyah' (a three-year-old heifer) in Isaiah 15:5 and Jeremiah 48:34 in oracles against Moab. Spanish 'de tres años' and the BDB cross-reference to Genesis 15:9's sacrificial specifications confirm this age-marking function. A specialized but lexicographically distinct sense with only two attestations. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER) en: the-third, third-year | es: tres-años | fr: [שלשיה] | de: [שלשיה] Isa 15:5; Jer 48:34

4. the third time, thrice (2×) Adverbial or temporal use meaning 'the third time' or 'a third time,' indicating the repetition count of an event. Young Samuel is called 'the third time' (1 Sam 3:8); the sword strikes 'a third time' in Ezekiel 21:14. Spanish 'por tercera vez,' French 'la troisième fois,' and German 'zum dritten Mal' all express this adverbial iteration. Distinguished from the ordinal by modifying the occurrence of an action rather than the position of a noun in a series. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER) en: the-third-time, third-time | es: por-tercera-vez, tres-veces | fr: le-troisième-temps, troisième | de: der-dritter-Zeit, dritter 1Sam 3:8; Ezek 21:14

5. the three, threefold group (1×) Collective or grouping sense: 'the three' or a 'threefold group,' appearing in a textually difficult passage (2 Sam 23:18) involving a ketiv/qere variant regarding David's mighty warriors. The context concerns Abishai as chief 'of the three' or 'of the thirty,' with the numeral functioning as a substantivized group designation. A rare and text-critically complex sense with only one clear attestation. STATURE THREE ANOMALY
en: [k] | es: [los-tres] | fr: [k] | de: [k] 2Sam 23:18

6. third story, three-storied (1×) Architectural term: 'the third story' or 'three-storied,' referring to the third level of a multi-tiered structure. In Ezekiel 42:3, the temple's galleries are arranged 'in thirds' — three stories of chambers. Spanish 'en los tres pisos,' reflecting the spatial-structural meaning. A hapax use within this lemma, specialized to temple architecture. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER)
en: in-the-third-stories | es: en-los-tres-pisos | fr: dans-trente | de: in-dreissig Ezek 42:3

שָׁלַךְ H7993 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-1cs (125×)

To throw, cast, hurl, or fling (Hifil); to be thrown or cast (Hofal); figuratively, to cast away or reject.
Shalak is Hebrew's most forceful throwing verb, always appearing in the causative Hifil or its passive counterpart the Hofal — never in the simple Qal. The word carries an inherent violence or decisiveness that sets it apart from milder terms like shalach ('send') or natan ('give, put'). When Moses throws his staff to the ground it becomes a serpent (Exod 4:3); when sailors hurl cargo overboard in the storm, they use this word (Jonah 1:5); when God threatens to cast Israel from his presence, the verb's force makes exile feel physical (2 Kgs 24:20). The range moves from concrete hurling of objects into water, fire, or pits, through forceful casting-down in judgment, to the metaphorical casting-away of sins, idols, and covenant obligations. Arabic alqa and taraha, Korean 던지다, and Spanish arrojar all converge on high-force throwing vocabulary.

1. to throw, cast (Hifil) (92×) The core Hifil sense: to throw, cast, or hurl an object or person with force toward a specific location — into water, a pit, fire, onto the ground, or against a surface. This is the dominant cluster at 92 occurrences, covering Joseph thrown into a pit (Gen 37:24), Moses' staff cast to the ground (Exod 4:3; 7:9-10), the Egyptian army hurled into the sea (Exod 15:1), Jezebel thrown from a window (2 Kgs 9:33), and fire-and-hail cast upon the earth in Revelation's Old Testament background passages. Arabic alqa/taraha, Spanish arrojar/lanzar, Korean 던지다, and Swahili -tupa all select high-energy throwing verbs, confirming the forceful nature of the action. THROWING AND CASTING en: and-cast, and-he-threw, and-they-threw | es: Y-arrojó, Y-echó, Y-lo-echó | fr: et-il-jeta, et-ils-jeta, et-jeta | de: und-er-warf, und-sie-warf, und-warf Gen 37:24; Exod 4:3; Exod 7:9; Exod 7:10; Exod 15:25

2. to be cast, be thrown (Hofal) (15×) The Hofal passive: to be cast, be thrown, be hurled — the subject is the one thrown rather than the thrower. Fifteen occurrences where the passive voice signals either helplessness (the subject is a victim) or divine agency (God is the implied thrower). In Psalm 22:10 the psalmist says 'upon you I was cast from the womb,' and in 1 Kings 13:24-28 the prophet's body 'was cast' on the road. Arabic matruh ('thrown, discarded,' passive participle) and Korean 던져지다 (passive of 'throw') both mark the voice shift clearly. The Hofal form is particularly prominent in prophetic judgments where nations or idols are 'cast down.' THROWING AND CASTING en: I-was-cast, and-was-thrown-down, and-were-cast | es: arrojada, arrojado, arrojados | fr: et-jeter, jeter, jeté | de: er-warf, thrown, und-warf 2Sam 20:21; 1Kgs 13:24; 1Kgs 13:25; 1Kgs 13:28; Ps 22:10

3. to cast down, hurl down (Hifil) (8×) Hifil with emphasis on forceful downward motion: to cast down, hurl down from a height or position, connoting violence, divine judgment, or catastrophic reversal. Distinguished from sense 1 by the gravitational directionality and the context of punishment or destruction. In Psalm 102:10 God has 'lifted me up and cast me down'; in Jeremiah 9:19 the people are 'cast down' from their dwelling; in Job 18:7 the wicked man's own counsel 'casts him down.' Korean 내던지다 ('fling down') and 떨어뜨리다 ('cause to fall') both add downward directional morphemes absent in sense 1's generic throwing. THROWING AND CASTING en: He-has-cast-down, and-casts-off, and-it-threw-down | es: Y-me-arrojaste, arrojaron, derribaron | fr: et-jeter, et-jeter-lui, jeter | de: er-warf, und-warf, und-werfen Job 15:33; Job 18:7; Ps 102:10; Jer 9:19; Jer 38:9

4. to cast away, reject (Hifil) (8×) Metaphorical Hifil: to cast away, reject, discard, or abandon — where no physical throwing is in view but rather the moral or relational act of repudiation. The psalmist pleads 'cast me not away from your presence' (Ps 51:11; 71:9); Psalm 2:3 envisions rebellious nations saying 'let us cast away their bonds'; and 2 Chronicles 7:20 warns that God will 'cast away' disobedient Israel. Korean 버리다 ('discard, abandon') and Spanish desechar/rechazar ('reject') both shift from physical to relational vocabulary, confirming the metaphorical extension. Eight occurrences cluster in psalmic and prophetic pleas. THROWING AND CASTING en: I-will-cast, and-let-us-cast-away, cast-away | es: Echad, arrojaron, arrojaré | fr: avait-jeté, et-jeter, jeter | de: hatte-thrown, und-warf, warf 2Kgs 7:15; 2Chr 7:20; Ps 2:3; Ps 51:11; Ps 71:9

5. to cast out, expel (Hifil) (2×) Hifil with connotation of expulsion: to cast out, drive out from a place, territory, or domain — emphasizing removal and banishment rather than mere physical trajectory. Only 2 occurrences (2 Kgs 24:20; Jer 52:3), both describing God's expulsion of Judah from his presence through the Babylonian exile. Korean 내쫓다 ('expel, drive out') and Spanish echar fuera ('throw out') both select expulsion-specific vocabulary. This sense bridges the gap between physical throwing (sense 1) and metaphorical rejection (sense 4), carrying the spatial force of the former with the relational finality of the latter. THROWING AND CASTING en: he-cast-out, he-cast-out- | es: arrojarlos, que-los-echó | fr: il-jeta-dehors, jeter | de: er-warf-heraus, werfen 2Kgs 24:20; Jer 52:3

שָׁלָךְ H7994 Art / N-ms (2×)
Cormorant, a diving bird of prey; an unclean water bird in Levitical law

A noun denoting the cormorant, a bird listed among the unclean animals in Leviticus 11:17 and Deuteronomy 14:17. The identification as 'cormorant' is based on the verb root suggesting 'hurling' or 'casting down,' which fits the cormorant's dramatic hunting dive from height into water. Naturalists like Tristram and others support this identification, though certainty about ancient ornithological terms is always tentative. The multilingual glosses uniformly translate 'cormorant,' following the traditional identification. As an unclean bird, it was forbidden to Israelites, contributing to the dietary boundaries that marked covenant identity.

(2×) The inclusion of specific bird species in the purity laws reflects careful observation of the natural world and its categorization for ritual purposes. The cormorant's diving behavior—'hurling' itself downward—may have suggested violence or a connection to chaotic waters, rendering it symbolically unclean. The cross-linguistic agreement on 'cormorant' shows the influence of longstanding lexical tradition, though modern translations sometimes differ. The term functions primarily within the priestly taxonomy of clean and unclean, defining Israel's relationship to creation and Creator. LIVING CREATURES en: the-cormorant | es: el-cormorán, el-somormujo | fr: le-cormorant | de: der-cormorant Lev 11:17; Deut 14:17

שַׁלֶּכֶת H7995 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)
felling, the act or state of being cut down (of trees)
This term denotes the felling or cutting down of trees. It appears in Isaiah's enigmatic prophecy about a holy seed remaining like a stump after the tree is felled. The image suggests both judgment (the tree is cut down) and hope (something remains). The Hebrew captures both the action of felling and the state of having been felled, making it particularly apt for Isaiah's message about remnant theology. The word derives from the root for 'cast' or 'throw down.'

(1×) The process or result of tree-felling, used metaphorically in Isaiah 6:13 to describe judgment upon the people. After declaring that only a tenth will remain, the prophet adds that even this remnant will experience felling 'like a terebinth or oak whose stump remains when it is felled.' The multilingual evidence shows translation difficulty (French and German leave it untranslated in brackets), reflecting the word's rarity and the passage's complexity about judgment and preservation. FOREST WOODLAND en: in-falling | es: al-ser-derribados | fr: [בשלכת] | de: [בשלכת] Isa 6:13

שַׁלֶּכֶת H7996 N-proper-ms (1×)
Shalleketh, name of a western temple gate in Jerusalem
Shalleketh designates one of the temple gates on the western side, mentioned in the Chronicler's account of Levitical divisions. The name likely derives from the root 'to cast' or 'throw,' possibly indicating this was a gate through which refuse was cast out, though some scholars question this etymology. It appears in organizational lists detailing which Levitical families guarded which entrances, situating it alongside the Parbar and other architectural features of Solomon's temple complex.

(1×) A proper name for a western gate of the Jerusalem temple, assigned to Levitical gatekeepers. First Chronicles 26:16 pairs it with the ascending highway and the gate of Shallecheth, indicating its location within the temple's western architecture. The name's possible connection to 'casting forth' has led some to speculate it served as an exit for refuse or sacrificial waste, though the text gives no explicit function beyond identifying the post assigned to Shuppim and Hosah's divisions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Shallekhet | es: Saleket | fr: [שלכת] | de: [שלכת] 1Chr 26:16

שָׁלַל H7997a V-Qal-InfAbs (2×)
To pull out, draw out; to extract sheaves or grain deliberately
A verb meaning to draw out or pull out, appearing twice in Ruth 2:16—once as an infinitive absolute for emphasis ('you shall surely draw out') and once as an imperfect. Boaz instructs his workers to deliberately pull out grain from the bundles for Ruth to glean, ensuring she finds plenty. The verb is related to Arabic 'to draw a sword from its scabbard,' and by extension came to mean extracting or drawing out in general. The repetition of root and form in Ruth creates emphasis: 'pulling, you shall pull out'—a strong command. This is the language of intentional generosity, extracting abundance from plenty for the benefit of the vulnerable.

(2×) The context in Ruth is one of hesed—covenant kindness extending beyond legal requirement. Boaz doesn't merely allow gleaning; he commands his workers to make gleaning easy and fruitful by pulling out extra grain. The infinitive absolute intensifies the command, and the multilingual glosses ('pulling, you shall pull out,' 'sacar, sacarán') preserve this emphatic structure. The verb captures the mechanics of generosity: actively extracting blessing from one's own resources to benefit another. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: pulling, you-shall-pull-out | es: sacar, sacarán | fr: tirant, tu-devra-pull-dehors | de: [של], [תשלו] Ruth 2:16

שָׁלַל H7997b Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (14×)

To plunder, despoil; to strip someone of possessions by force, or to be stripped and made prey.

A verb of violent dispossession, frequently paired with bazaz ('seize as booty') to describe the stripping of wealth from conquered peoples and cities. Ezekiel's prophecies against Tyre (26:12) and Egypt (29:19) employ it for the wholesale plundering of national treasures. Habakkuk 2:8 turns the tables: 'because you have plundered many nations, all the remnant of peoples shall plunder you.' The Hitpael reflexive-passive appears in two striking passages — Psalm 76:5 (warriors 'stripped' of their spoil) and Isaiah 59:15 (the righteous 'made prey') — shifting the focus from the aggressor to the victim.

1. plunder, despoil (Qal active) (12×) To plunder or despoil actively — stripping goods, wealth, or spoil from persons, cities, or nations by force. Used across Qal finite forms, infinitives, and participles. Isaiah 10:6 commissions Assyria 'to take spoil' (lishlol shalal); Ezekiel 38:12-13 describes the plundering of restored Israel's livestock and goods. Spanish saquear ('to sack') and despojaste ('you despoiled') capture the violent, acquisitive force of the active sense. PLUNDERING AND SPOIL

en: and-he-shall-spoil, and-they-shall-plunder, and-they-will-plunder | es: Para-saquear, Y-saquearán, despojaste | fr: [הלשלל], [ושלל], [ושללו] | de: [הלשלל], [השללים], [ושלל] Isa 10:6; Jer 50:10; Ezek 26:12; Ezek 29:19; Ezek 38:12

2. be stripped, despoiled (Hitpael) (2×) To be stripped or despoiled — the Hitpael reflexive-passive form denoting the experience of being plundered rather than doing the plundering. In Psalm 76:5, the stouthearted warriors 'were stripped' (eshtolelu) of their spoil after God's rebuke. Isaiah 59:15 describes the one who departs from evil as 'making himself prey' (mishtolel) — a powerful image of vulnerability. Spanish despojados ('stripped') marks this voice distinction clearly. PLUNDER AND SPOIL

en: makes-himself-prey, were-stripped | es: Fueron-despojados, es-despojado | fr: [משתולל], piller | de: [משתולל], waren-stripped Ps 76:5; Isa 59:15

שָׁלָל H7998 N-msc / 3mp (74×)

Spoil, plunder, or booty — goods seized by force in war, including livestock, garments, precious metals, and captives.

Shalal is the Hebrew Bible's primary term for the material proceeds of military victory — everything stripped from a defeated enemy or captured city. It encompasses garments and gold (Josh 7:21), flocks and herds (1 Sam 30:20), fabrics and women (Judg 5:30), and even entire populations taken as captives (Deut 20:14). The word appears in some of Scripture's most vivid passages: Benjamin devouring prey like a wolf and dividing the spoil (Gen 49:27), and the prophetic name Maher-shalal-hash-baz ('swift is the spoil,' Isa 8:1-3), which turns plunder into eschatological sign. Spanish botin, French butin, and German Beute all converge on 'war spoils,' with no secondary sense emerging across languages.

spoil, plunder, booty (74×) Goods, property, and persons seized by force in warfare — garments, precious metals, livestock, and captives (Gen 49:27; Deut 20:14; Josh 7:21; 1 Sam 30:20). Often paired with baz as a near-synonym. The prophetic name Maher-shalal-hash-baz (Isa 8:1-3) elevates the noun into eschatological symbol. All target languages use a single war-spoils term — Spanish botin, French butin, German Beute. PLUNDER AND SPOIL

en: of-spoil, plunder, spoil | es: botín, botín-de, despojo | fr: butin, le-butin, piller | de: Beute, Raub, [שלל] Gen 49:27; Exod 15:9; Num 31:11; Num 31:12; Deut 2:35

שָׁלֵם H7999a Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjImperf.Cohort-1cp (103×)

Be complete, be at peace; repay, recompense; fulfill vows; make restitution; bring to completion

From the same root that gives us shalom, this verb carries the fundamental meaning of wholeness and completion. In the Qal stem it describes a state of being complete or finished. The Piel — by far the most common stem — shifts the meaning toward making something complete in a transactional sense: paying what is owed, fulfilling a vow, or restoring what was lost. The Hiphil extends this to causative completion, and the Pual provides the passive counterpart. Whether describing the completion of Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 7:51), the fulfillment of a vow to God (Ps 50:14), or the repayment of stolen property (Exod 22:1), the thread is always restoring wholeness.

1. pay, repay, recompense (63×) The dominant Piel sense of repayment and recompense, covering nearly two-thirds of occurrences. Spanish pagar, French payer, and German bezahlen/vergelten all confirm the transactional reading. The sense spans both positive recompense (reward) and negative (retribution), as in Exod 21:34–36 where damages must be repaid. Arabic أي captures the dual-direction quality of requital. REPAY FULFILL RESTORE en: And-I-will-repay, and-I-shall-repay, and-I-will-repay | es: Y-retribuiré, pagará, y-le-restituiré | fr: –payer, et-rétribuer, il—payer | de: er-soll-bezahlen, er-soll-pay, er-vergilt Exod 21:34; Exod 21:36; Exod 22:1; Exod 22:3

2. fulfill, perform (vows) (19×) A specialized Piel usage restricted to the fulfillment of vows (neder) made to God. Spanish cumplir, distinct from pagar, marks the religious register. Key passages include Ps 22:25 ('I will fulfill my vows before those who fear him') and Deut 23:21. Arabic أوفى and Swahili -timiza both point to performative completion rather than monetary payment. REPAY FULFILL RESTORE

en: I-have-paid, I-will-fulfill, I-will-pay | es: cumplas, cumple, cumpliré | fr: et-que-moi-pay, et-rétribuer, récompenser | de: ich-wird-fulfill, ich-wird-pay, und-fulfill-ihnen Deut 23:21; 2Sam 15:7; Job 22:27; Ps 22:25; Ps 50:14

3. make restitution, restore, complete (7×) The restitution and restoration sense — making damaged property or relationships whole again. Leviticus 5–6 prescribes restitution with an added fifth; Joel 2:25 promises God will restore what the locusts consumed; 1 Kgs 9:25 uses it for completing a building. The semantic thread is making whole what was broken or incomplete, as French achever and German wiederherstellen suggest. REPAY FULFILL RESTORE

en: and-I-will-restore, and-he-completed, and-he-shall-pay | es: Y-os-restituiré, la-pagará, pagará | fr: et-il-acheva, et-il-devra-payer, et-récompenser | de: er-soll-machen-restitution-fuer-es, er-soll-vergelten, und-er-completed Lev 5:16; Lev 6:5; Lev 24:18; Lev 24:21; 1Kgs 9:25

4. be complete, be at peace (5×) The Qal stative sense: to be complete, finished, or at peace. This is the intransitive foundation of the root, from which all causative stems derive. Key passages include 1 Kgs 7:51 (the temple work was completed) and Neh 6:15 (the wall was finished). Spanish fue completada and German war completed reflect the resultative state. Isa 60:20 extends this to days of mourning being 'completed.' FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: and-remained-whole, and-was-completed, and-was-finished | es: Y-fue-completada, Y-fue-terminada, Y-se-terminó | fr: [ותשלם], et-fut-acheva, et-récompenser | de: und-er-vergilt, und-vergelten, und-war-completed 1Kgs 7:51; 2Chr 5:1; Neh 6:15; Job 9:4; Isa 60:20

5. be repaid, be rewarded (4×) The Pual passive: to be repaid or rewarded. Prov 11:31 ('if the righteous is repaid on earth') and Prov 13:13 illustrate the passive counterpart of sense 1. French rétribuer and German vergilt confirm the passive-receipt reading. Ps 65:1 uses it of vows being fulfilled (passive of sense 2), and Jer 18:20 of evil being repaid for good. REPAY FULFILL RESTORE

en: Is-repaid, is-repaid, will-be-fulfilled- | es: es-recompensado, será-cumplido-, será-recompensado | fr: récompenser, rétribuer | de: der-er-vergilt, er-vergilt, wird-sein-fulfilled- Ps 65:1; Prov 11:31; Prov 13:13; Jer 18:20

6. complete, bring to an end (4×) The Hiphil causative: to bring to completion or to an end. Job 23:14 ('he will complete what he has appointed for me') and Isa 44:28 ('saying of Jerusalem, she shall be built') show God as the agent who brings purposes to full completion. Isa 38:12–13 extends this to God bringing a life to its end. The causative morphology maps the root's 'completeness' onto an external agent. REPAY FULFILL RESTORE
en: You-bring-me-to-an-end, he-will-complete, he-will-fulfill | es: completará, cumplirá, me-acabas | fr: récompenser, rétribuer | de: er-vergilt, vergelten, war-in-Frieden Job 23:14; Isa 38:12; Isa 38:13; Isa 44:28

7. (1×) A single occurrence in 2 Sam 10:19 where the Aramean kings 'made peace' with Israel after military defeat. All translations converge: Spanish hicieron paz, French firent paix, German machte Friede. This diplomatic 'make peace' sense is a natural extension of restoring wholeness to a broken relationship, and it connects directly to the noun shalom. PEACE AND WELLBEING
en: and-they-made-peace | es: e-hicieron-paz | fr: et-ils-fit-paix | de: und-sie-machte-Friede 2Sam 10:19

שָׁלַם H7999b Conj-w / V-Qal-Imp-ms (13×)

To be at peace, make peace, fulfill, or be wholly devoted; from the root שׁלם expressing completeness, wholeness, and covenant harmony.

This denominative verb draws on the rich semantic field of שׁלם — wholeness, completeness, peace. In its Hifil form, it most often means to make peace with another party, as when the Gibeonites made peace with Israel (Josh 10:1, 4) or when Jehoshaphat was at peace with the king of Israel (1 Kgs 22:44). The Qal conveys a stative sense of being at peace or in covenant friendship, as in Job 22:21 ('be at peace with him') and Psalm 7:4 ('the one at peace with me'). A distinct Hifil nuance appears in Isaiah 44:26, where God 'fulfills' or brings to completion the word of his servant. The Pual participle in Isaiah 42:19 describes one who is devoted or wholehearted — the 'perfected one.' Spanish 'pacíficas' and 'cumple' neatly distinguish the peace and fulfillment senses.

1. Hifil/Hofal: make peace (8×) Hifil and Hofal: to make peace, establish a covenant of peace, or have peace made. This is the dominant sense, covering military and political contexts such as Joshua 10:1 and 11:19, where Canaanite cities make peace with Israel. Deuteronomy 20:12 provides the negative case: a city that does not make peace. Spanish 'hizo paz' and 'hicieron paz' reflect the treaty-making character directly. PEACE AND WELLBEING
en: and-made-peace, are-at-peace, had-made-peace | es: E-hizo-paz, e-hicieron-paz, hace-estar-en-paz | fr: [וישלימו], avait-fit-paix, cela-makes-paix | de: [וישלימו], der-Salomo, er-vergilt Deut 20:12; Josh 10:1; Josh 10:4; Josh 11:19; 1Kgs 22:44

2. Qal: be at peace (3×) Qal stative and participial: to be at peace, to be in a state of peaceful covenant relationship. In Job 22:21, Eliphaz urges Job to 'be at peace' with God and receive good; in Psalm 7:4 David speaks of 'the one at peace with me,' his ally. The passive participle in 2 Samuel 20:19 describes the 'peaceable' faithful of Israel. Spanish 'pacíficas' captures the relational quality of this peace. PEACE AND WELLBEING
en: and-be-at-peace, peaceable-of, the-one-at-peace-with-me | es: al-que-estaba-en-paz-conmigo, de-las-pacíficas, y-ten-paz; | fr: et-récompenser, payer, peaceable-de | de: [ושלם], der-einer-bei-Friede-mit-mich, peaceable-von 2Sam 20:19; Job 22:21; Ps 7:4

3. Hifil: fulfill, complete (1×) Hifil in a completive sense: to fulfill, accomplish, or bring to completion. Distinct from peace-making, this reflects the root meaning of wholeness or finishing. In Isaiah 44:26, God 'fulfills' (יַשְׁלִים) the word of his servant and completes the counsel of his messengers. Spanish 'cumple' precisely renders this fulfillment nuance. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: He-fulfills | es: cumple | fr: [ישלים] | de: [ישלים] Isa 44:26

4. Pual: devoted, wholehearted (1×) Pual passive participle: devoted, wholehearted, one who has been made whole or complete. In Isaiah 42:19, the LORD's servant is called מְשֻׁלָּם — the 'perfected' or 'devoted one.' Spanish 'el perfecto' highlights the completeness rather than peace, and scholarly debate on this form (some reading 'their ruler' with the LXX) underscores the interpretive richness of this rare usage. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS
en: like-the-one-at-peace | es: como-el-perfecto | fr: [כמשלם] | de: [כמשלם] Isa 42:19

שְׁלֵם H8000 V-Hifil-Imp-ms (3×)

be complete, finish, deliver in full (Aramaic administrative/theological term)

This Aramaic verb carries the basic sense of bringing something to completion or full measure. In Ezra 5:16 it describes the temple being 'finished' (passive participle). Ezra 7:19 uses the causative form: 'deliver in full' the temple vessels to God. Most dramatically, Daniel 5:26 announces God's verdict on Belshazzar: 'God has numbered your kingdom and finished it'—brought it to its divinely appointed end. The root connects to the broader Semitic family of words about wholeness and completion, but here emphasizes definitive conclusion or full delivery.

(3×) The verb appears in three administrative-theological contexts. Ezra 5:16 reports that the Jerusalem temple 'has been being finished' since foundation-laying (passive ongoing). Ezra 7:19 commands Ezra to 'deliver in full' (Haphel imperative) the sacred vessels before God—complete the assigned transfer. Daniel 5:26 interprets the handwriting on the wall: God 'has finished' (brought to an end) Belshazzar's kingdom. The multilingual glosses ('entrégalos,' 'deliver,' 'terminada') confirm both senses of completion: finishing a project and delivering in full what is owed. FULFILL AND COMPLETE
en: and-finished-it, completed, deliver | es: entrégalos, terminada., y-lo-ha-terminado | fr: [והשלם], [שלם], et-le-entière | de: der-vergalt, und-der-Salomo, vergalt Ezra 5:16; Ezra 7:19; Dan 5:26

שְׁלֵם H8001 N-msd (3×)

welfare, prosperity, peace (Aramaic greeting formula)

This Aramaic noun functions as a standard greeting formula in official Persian-period correspondence and royal decrees. It appears in the opening or closing of letters wishing the recipient well-being and prosperity. Ezra 4:17 uses it absolutely: 'Peace!' Daniel's usage is fuller: 'May your peace increase greatly' (3:31, 6:26). The term is the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew shalom, carrying similar overtones of comprehensive well-being, security, and prosperity. The multilingual evidence ('paz,' 'peace,' 'prospérité') confirms this sense of holistic welfare rather than mere absence of conflict.

(3×) Standard epistolary greeting in Aramaic administrative documents. Ezra 5:7 opens a letter with the simple greeting 'Peace!' (shalom). Daniel 3:31 and 6:26 expand this in royal proclamations: 'May your peace increase greatly'—a wish for the subjects' comprehensive prosperity and security. Though classified under the domain 'Trouble, Hardship, Relief,' the term itself is entirely positive, representing the desired state of safety and flourishing. The cross-linguistic unanimity ('paz,' 'peace,' 'paix') shows this is a well-established formula for expressing goodwill. PEACE AND WELLBEING
en: peace, your-peace | es: paz, vuestra-paz | fr: paix, prospérité | de: [שלמא], [שלמכון] Ezra 5:7; Dan 4:1; Dan 6:25

שֶׁלֶם H8002 Conj-w (87×)

Peace offering — a shared sacrificial meal expressing fellowship, gratitude, or vow-fulfillment before God

The שֶׁלֶם (shelamim, 'peace offering') designates a distinctive Israelite sacrifice in which the meat was shared among God, the priest, and the worshiper — making it uniquely communal. Unlike the burnt offering consumed entirely on the altar, the peace offering created a fellowship meal. It could be offered in thanksgiving, to fulfill a vow, or as a freewill expression of devotion (Lev 3:1–17; 7:11–21). The Septuagint renders it variously as εἰρηνική ('peace-related') and σωτήριον ('salvation offering'), reflecting ancient debate about its precise force. French sacrifice-de-paix and German Friedensopfer both capture the 'peace/well-being' dimension. The term appears prominently in Leviticus but also at pivotal narrative moments like the golden calf incident (Exod 32:6).

peace offering(s) (87×) A sacrificial offering of well-being or fellowship (שְׁלָמִים) in which the meat was shared among God, priest, and worshiper, expressing gratitude, vow-fulfillment, or voluntary devotion. Central to Levitical legislation (Lev 3:1–17; 7:11–21) and appearing at key narrative moments such as Exod 32:6. The LXX's dual renderings — εἰρηνική and σωτήριον — reflect longstanding scholarly discussion about whether the root שׁלם here emphasizes 'peace,' 'wholeness,' or 'recompense.' PEACE AND WELLBEING
en: the-peace-offerings | es: las-ofrendas-de-paz, los-sacrificios-de-paz | fr: le-entiers, le-sacrifices-de-paix, sacrifice-de-paix | de: der-Friedensopfer Exod 32:6; Lev 3:1; Lev 3:3; Lev 3:6; Lev 3:9

שָׁלֵם H8003 Adj-fp (28×)

Complete, whole, safe, or peaceable; fullness of measure, moral integrity, physical safety, or friendly intent

Shalem expresses a rich wholeness rooted in the same shin-lamed-mem cluster as shalom (peace). A stone is shalem when uncut and unhewn (Deut 27:6; Josh 8:31), a weight is shalem when honest and full (Deut 25:15; Prov 11:1), and a heart is shalem when wholly devoted to God (1 Kgs 8:61; 11:4). The word also touches physical safety – Jacob arrived 'shalem' at Shechem (Gen 33:18) – and social harmony, when the Shechemites are called 'peaceful' toward Jacob's family (Gen 34:21). Spanish captures the primary sense as 'completo/integro,' while German 'wohlbehalten' (safe and sound) serves the personal-safety nuance.

1. complete, whole, perfect (26×) Complete, whole, or perfect in quality, measure, or moral devotion. Covers honest weights and measures (Deut 25:15; Prov 11:1), unhewn altar stones (Deut 27:6; Josh 8:31), a full/ripe iniquity (Gen 15:16), undivided loyalty to God (1 Kgs 8:61; 2 Chr 16:9), and Ruth's 'full reward' (Ruth 2:12). Spanish 'completo/integro' and French 'acheve' reflect this wholeness. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS
en: and-the-good, complete, full | es: completa, completo, íntegra | fr: [שלם], achever, achève | de: Salomo, complete, ganz Gen 15:16; Deut 25:15; Deut 27:6; Josh 8:31

2. safe, unharmed (1×) Safe, unharmed, having arrived or returned in a state of physical well-being. Genesis 33:18 reports that Jacob came shalem to Shechem – the Vulgate renders it 'incolumis' (uninjured). German 'wohlbehalten' (safe and sound) precisely captures this sense of personal security after a journey or ordeal. SAFETY AND SECURITY
en: safely | es: en-paz | fr: safely | de: wohlbehalten Gen 33:18

3. peaceable, friendly (1×) Peaceable, friendly, well-disposed toward others. When Hamor and Shechem assure the sons of Jacob that 'these men are peaceable with us' (Gen 34:21), shalem describes social intent rather than physical condition. Spanish 'pacificos' and the English 'peaceful' mark this interpersonal register, distinct from both wholeness and safety. PEACEABLE FRIENDLY
en: peaceful | es: pacíficos | fr: peaceful | de: friedlich Gen 34:21

שָׁלֵם H8004 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (2×)

Salem, an ancient name for Jerusalem; poetic abbreviation emphasizing peace

A place name, an abbreviated or archaic form of Jerusalem, appearing in two poetic texts. In Genesis 14:18, Melchizedek is king of Salem, where Abram meets him after rescuing Lot. Psalm 76:2 uses Salem in parallel with Zion, clearly referring to Jerusalem. The name likely plays on the root for 'peace' (shalom), and ancient interpreters —including Josephus—recognized it as Jerusalem. The Septuagint sometimes transliterates (Salem) and sometimes translates (eirēnē, 'peace'), showing awareness of the wordplay. This poetic name evokes both the city's antiquity and its identity as a place of peace and divine presence.

(2×) Salem functions as a numen, invoking Jerusalem's sacred status and its theological significance as the city of peace, the dwelling of God's name. Genesis 14's encounter with Melchizedek in Salem prefigures the later centrality of Jerusalem in Israel's worship. Psalm 76's parallelism with Zion confirms the identification and emphasizes the city's role as God's dwelling ('there he broke the flashing arrows'). The wordplay on 'peace' is not lost on translators: some render it as 'peace,' recognizing the symbolic freight the name carries. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Salem, in-Salem | es: Salem, en-Shalem | fr: Salem, dans-Salomon | de: in-Salem, von-Salem Gen 14:18; Ps 76:2

שִׁלֻם H8005 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

recompense, repayment or retribution for deeds done

This abstract noun denotes recompense or retribution, whether positive reward or negative punishment. It appears in Moses' Song in Deuteronomy, parallel to 'vengeance,' suggesting divine payback for covenant breaking. Several ancient versions (Syriac, Greek) support reading it in contexts where judgment is imminent. The word derives from the root for 'completion' or 'restitution,' emphasizing that recompense settles accounts—God pays back what is due, making the ledger complete.

(1×) Divine recompense or retribution, especially in contexts of covenant judgment. Deuteronomy 32:35 places it parallel to vengeance: 'The day of recompense is at hand.' Some scholars also restore this word in Isaiah 59:18 where God repays His adversaries according to their deeds. The Spanish 'retribución' and English 'recompense' both capture the settling of accounts, the idea that God's justice requires full payment for sin—a theme central to Israel's covenantal theology. RECOMPENSE AND RETRIBUTION
en: and-recompense | es: y-la-retribución | fr: et-recompense | de: und-recompense Deut 32:35

שִׁלֻם H8006 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Shillem, a son of Naphtali; ancestor of the Shillemite clan

A Hebrew personal name, appearing in the genealogical lists of Genesis 46:24 and Numbers 26:49. Shillem was a son of Naphtali and the eponymous ancestor of the Shillemite clan. The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may relate to roots meaning 'recompense' or 'retribution.' The Septuagint transliterations vary (Syllem, Selle), reflecting different vocalization traditions. As with most tribal genealogies, Shillem's name serves to anchor later clan identity in the patriarchal period, linking the families who returned from Egypt to the sons of Jacob. The parallel texts confirm the name's stability in the tradition.

(2×) Tribal genealogies in Genesis and Numbers serve multiple purposes: establishing clan legitimacy, organizing census and inheritance, and connecting post-Exodus Israel to the promises made to the patriarchs. Shillem's inclusion ensures that the Shillemites—his descendants—have a recognized place in the tribal structure of Naphtali. The name appears in both the migration narrative (Genesis 46) and the wilderness census (Numbers 26), marking continuity across the exodus generation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: and-Shillem, to-Shillem | es: de-Silem, y-Shilem | fr: et-Shillem, à-Shillem | de: und-Schillem, zu-Shillem Gen 46:24; Num 26:49

שַׁלְמוֹן H8007 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Salma, Salmon; personal name of Boaz's father in the genealogy of David and the Messianic line

This is the name of an important ancestor in the Davidic genealogy —the father of Boaz (Ruth's husband) and great-grandfather of King David. The name appears with spelling variations: Salmon (Ruth 4:21), Salma (Ruth 4:20, 1 Chronicles 2:11), reflecting textual traditions or pronunciation differences. 1 Chronicles 2:51, 54 also mentions a Salma as 'father of Bethlehem,' likely indicating the clan's connection to that town. The multilingual glosses show transliteration variations (Spanish Salma, French Salmone). As an ancestor of David and thus of Jesus in New Testament genealogies, Salma/Salmon holds theological significance beyond his individual identity—he's a link in the chain of promise from Judah through Ruth to the royal line.

(4×) Personal name of Boaz's father (Ruth 4:20-21), appearing with spelling variants Salmon/Salma. Listed in David's genealogy (1 Chr 2:11) and identified with Bethlehem's founding (1 Chr 2:51, 54). The name variations likely reflect different textual traditions. As great-grandfather of David, Salma/Salmon is part of the Messianic genealogy, connecting Judah's line through the Gentile Ruth to Israel's greatest king—a detail later emphasized in Matthew's genealogy of Jesus. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Salma, and-Salma | es: Salma, y-Salma | fr: Salmone, et-Salmone | de: [ושלמא], [שלמא] 1Chr 2:11; 1Chr 2:51; 1Chr 2:54

שַׂלְמָה H8008 N-fpc / 2mp (16×)

Garment, outer cloak — a large wrapper or mantle worn over the body for covering and warmth

A feminine noun and byform of simlah (שִׂמְלָה), denoting a large outer wrapper or mantle used as everyday clothing. It figures in the Covenant Code as a garment wrongfully obtained or taken as collateral that must be returned before sundown (Exod 22:8, 25; Deut 24:13). The Gibeonites' worn-out garments become evidence for their deceptive claim of a long journey (Josh 9:5, 13). Ahijah the prophet tears his new garment into twelve pieces as a sign of the kingdom's division (1 Kgs 11:29-30). God is majestically 'wrapped in light as a garment' (Ps 104:2), while Israel's clothing never wore out during the wilderness years (Deut 29:4; Neh 9:21). The Song of Solomon's bride is praised: the scent of her garments is like Lebanon (Song 4:11).

garment, outer cloak (16×) An outer garment, wrapper, or mantle serving as clothing and covering — a variant form of simlah (שִׂמְלָה) with identical meaning. Used in legal contexts as property or pledge (Exod 22:8, 25; Deut 24:13), in narrative as a prophetic sign-act (1 Kgs 11:29-30) and evidence of the Gibeonite ruse (Josh 9:5, 13), and poetically of God robed in light (Ps 104:2). The wilderness miracle of indestructible garments is noted in Deuteronomy 29:4 and Nehemiah 9:21. Spanish 'manto' and French 'vetement' both capture the sense of a large outer wrap. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: a-garment, and-garments, and-with-garments | es: como-manto, con-manto, con-su-ropa | fr: [ושלמות], [שלמתיהם], avec-un-vêtement | de: Gewand-von, Salomo, [ושלמות] Exod 22:9; Exod 22:26; Deut 24:13; Deut 29:5; Josh 9:5

שַׂלְמוֹן H8009 N-proper-ms (1×)

Salmon, ancestor of David and father of Boaz

Salmon (also spelled Salma or Salmah) was an ancestor in David's lineage, father of Boaz who married Ruth. The genealogical records show some textual variation in spelling across different biblical books—appearing as Salmon in Ruth 4:20, as Salma in 4:21, and as Salma in Chronicles. The Septuagint also varies between forms like Salman and Salmon. Despite these spelling variants, all refer to the same individual in the Messianic line, making him an ancestor of Jesus. Tradition sometimes identifies him as the Israelite who married Rahab after Jericho's fall.

(1×) Personal name of Boaz's father and thus great-grandfather of David, appearing in the genealogical line leading to the Messiah. Ruth 4:20 places him in the generation after Nahshon during the wilderness period. The textual variants across Hebrew and Greek manuscripts (Salmon, Salma, Salmah) reflect normal scribal practice with proper names, but the consistent genealogical position shows this is one individual. The multilingual evidence preserves various forms ('Salmá' in Spanish, 'Salomo' in German), all referring to this crucial link in David's ancestry. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8524 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Salmon | es: Salmá | fr: Salmon | de: Salomo Ruth 4:20

שְׁלֹמֹה H8010 Pr (293×)

Solomon — son of David, king of Israel renowned for wisdom, wealth, and building the Temple

Shelomoh (שְׁלֹמֹה) is the proper name of Israel's third king, appearing 293 times across Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, Ezra-Nehemiah, and the Song of Songs. The name derives from shalom ('peace'), befitting the king whose reign was marked by the absence of war and the construction of the First Temple. He is introduced as David and Bathsheba's son (2 Sam 12:24), designated successor before David's death (1 Kgs 1:30), and remembered for both extraordinary wisdom (1 Kgs 3:12) and eventual apostasy (1 Kgs 11:1-8). Spanish 'Salomón,' French 'Salomon,' and German 'Salomo' all derive from the Greek Septuagint form Salomon.

Solomon (proper name) (293×) The proper name of Solomon son of David, king of Israel, whose reign represents the zenith of Israel's united monarchy. Derived from the root sh-l-m ('peace, wholeness'), the name was given by David after the turbulent circumstances of his birth (2 Sam 12:24). The name appears most densely in 1 Kings 1-11 and 2 Chronicles 1-9, covering his anointing, temple-building, diplomatic marriages, and wisdom traditions. The cross-linguistic forms (spa: 'Salomón,' fra: 'Salomon,' deu: 'Salomo') all trace to the LXX rendering. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Solomon | es: Salomón, Shelomoh | fr: Salomon | de: Salomo 2Sam 12:24; 1Kgs 1:10; 1Kgs 1:11; 1Kgs 1:12; 1Kgs 1:13

שִׁלֻּמָה H8011 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

requital, the recompense or retribution that repays deeds

This noun denotes requital or retribution, the repayment that corresponds to one's actions. Its single occurrence in Psalm 91 describes how the righteous, dwelling in God's shelter, will merely observe the retribution dealt to the wicked. The word shares semantic space with other terms for recompense, emphasizing the principle of measure-for-measure justice. The construct form suggests 'the requital of the wicked'—not arbitrary punishment but fitting repayment for their deeds.

(1×) The requital or retribution that befalls evildoers, viewed as fitting recompense for their actions. Psalm 91:8 promises that those who trust God will 'only look with your eyes and see the requital of the wicked.' This viewing is from safety—the righteous remain protected while witnessing divine justice against those who oppose God. The multilingual glosses ('retribución' in Spanish, 'rétribution' in French) consistently emphasize the paying-back aspect, the settling of moral accounts that vindicates the righteous and judges the wicked. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-recompense-of | es: y-retribución-de | fr: et-rétribution | de: und-der-recompense-von Ps 91:8

שַׁלְמוֹן H8012 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Salmon, ancestor of David and father of Boaz (with conjunction)

This is the name Salmon with the conjunction 'and' prefixed, appearing in Ruth's genealogy. Salmon was Boaz's father, placing him two generations before David. The genealogical accounts show minor spelling variations (Salmon, Salma, Salmah) across biblical books and ancient versions, but consistently identify the same individual in the Messianic line. This occurrence in Ruth 4:21 continues the genealogy from verse 20, moving from Salmon through Boaz to Obed to Jesse to David—a lineage that ultimately leads to Jesus.

(1×) Personal name (with conjunction) of Boaz's father in the genealogy of Ruth. Ruth 4:21 states 'and Salmon fathered Boaz, Boaz fathered Obed' in the climactic genealogical conclusion to the book. The name connects the wilderness generation (Salmon may have been contemporary with the conquest) to the period of the judges (Boaz) to the monarchy (David). The multilingual evidence shows the conjunction ('Y-Salmón' in Spanish, 'et-Salmon' in French), preserving both the connecting function and the proper name in this crucial Messianic genealogy. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8524

WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-Salmon | es: Y-Salmón | fr: et-Salmon | de: [וּשַׁלְמוֹן] Ruth 4:21

שְׁלֹמוֹת H8013 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (7×)

Shelomoth / Shelomith — proper names of Levitical figures and a son of Rehoboam, with masculine and feminine variants

A proper name appearing in two closely related forms in Chronicles and Ezra. Shelomoth (שְׁלֹמוֹת), the masculine form, designates several Levites in the temple administration lists of 1 Chronicles 23-26, including a keeper of dedicated treasures. Shelomith (שְׁלֹמִית), a feminine or variant spelling, appears in overlapping passages and also designates a son of Rehoboam in 2 Chronicles 11:20 and a post-exilic family head in Ezra 8:10. The LXX renderings Σαλωμωθ and Σαλωμιθ preserve the distinction between the two forms.

1. Shelomoth (proper name, masculine) (5×) Shelomoth (שְׁלֹמוֹת), a masculine proper name borne by Levitical figures in the genealogical and administrative rosters of 1 Chronicles 23-26. This individual (or individuals) served in temple duties; notably in 1 Chr 26:25-26 Shelomoth was custodian over the dedicated treasures. The English 'Shelomot' and Spanish 'Selomot' reflect the longer masculine ending, while the LXX Σαλωμωθ preserves the Hebrew form faithfully. SHELOMOTH PERSONAL NAME

en: Shelomot, [Shelomot] | es: Selomot, Shelomot, [Shelomot] | fr: Schelomoth, et-Schelomoth | de: [וּשְׁלֹמוֹת], [שְׁלֹמוֹת] 1Chr 23:9; 1Chr 24:22; 1Chr 26:25; 1Chr 26:26

2. Shelomith (proper name, feminine variant) (2×) Shelomith (שְׁלֹמִית), a variant or feminine form of the name, appearing in Kethib/Qere alternations with Shelomoth in 1 Chronicles and also designating a son of Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:20) and a post-exilic family head (Ezra 8:10). The yod-tav ending marks the feminine or diminutive form. English 'Shelomit' and Spanish 'Selomit' distinguish it from the longer Shelomoth, and the LXX Σαλωμιθ reflects this morphological distinction. SHELOMOTH PERSONAL NAME

en: Shelomit, and-Shelomit | es: (Shelomit), (y-Selomit) | fr: Schelomoth, et-Schelomoth | de: [וּשְׁלֹמִית], [שְׁלוֹמִית] 1Chr 23:9; 1Chr 26:25

שַׁלְמַי H8014 N-proper-ms (2×)

Salmai/Shalmai, head of a postexilic family of temple servants (Nethinim)

A personal name appearing in the lists of returning exiles in Ezra 2:46 and Nehemiah 7:48. Salmai was the ancestor of a family of Nethinim —temple servants who assisted the Levites. The name has textual variants (Ketiv and Qere forms differ), and the Septuagint offers varied transliterations (Samaan, Selamai), reflecting uncertainty about the exact form. The etymology is obscure, though some relate it to clothing or garment roots. These genealogical lists served to verify the legitimacy of returnees and their right to serve in the rebuilt temple. Salmai's descendants were among those who reestablished temple worship after the Babylonian exile.

(2×) The Nethinim played crucial roles in Second Temple worship, handling tasks that supported the Levites and priests. Salmai's family was part of this service class, and their inclusion in Ezra-Nehemiah's lists demonstrates the community's concern for proper temple personnel. The textual variants (Ketiv/Qere, Chronicles vs. Nehemiah) are minor and reflect normal scribal transmission, but the core identification remains: Salmai represents a lineage of faithful temple servants who returned to rebuild Jerusalem's worship life. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Salmay, Shalmai | es: (Salmai), Salmai | fr: [שלמי] | de: [(שלמי)], [שלמי] Ezra 2:46; Neh 7:48

שִׁלְמִי H8015 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shelomi, father of the leader from Asher during the land division

Shelomi was the father of Ahihud, who represented the tribe of Asher in the land distribution under Joshua. He appears in the list of tribal leaders appointed to assist with dividing Canaan among the twelve tribes. The name appears only in Numbers 34:27, where each tribe designated a chieftain to ensure fair and proper allocation of territory. While we know nothing else about Shelomi personally, his son's role in this foundational moment of Israel's settlement shows the family's prominence in Asher.

(1×) Personal name of the father of Ahihud, who served as the tribal leader from Asher during Canaan's division. Numbers 34:27 lists him in the roster of leaders appointed to apportion the land, each representing his ancestral tribe. The name Shelomi possibly relates to the root for 'peace' or 'wholeness,' though this remains uncertain. The consistent transliteration across languages (Spanish 'Selomi,' French and German 'Shelomi') reflects standard practice with Hebrew proper names that lack clear translation equivalents. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shelomi | es: Selomi | fr: Shelomi | de: Shelomi Num 34:27

שִׁלְמִי H8016 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shillemite, designation for descendants of Shillem in the tribe of Naphtali

This gentilic designates the clan descended from Shillem, son of Naphtali. It appears in the wilderness census recorded in Numbers, where each clan within each tribe is enumerated. The term uses the standard Hebrew pattern for forming clan or family names by adding the '-ite' ending to the ancestor's name. The definite article 'the Shillemite' indicates the collective group—all descendants of Shillem —rather than a single individual, functioning as a clan designation within Naphtali's tribal structure.

(1×) Gentilic designation (with definite article) for the clan descended from Shillem within Naphtali. Numbers 26:49 lists them in the second wilderness census, conducted just before entering Canaan. The form with the article ('the Shillemite') functions collectively, referring to all members of this family group. The Spanish 'los silemitas' (plural) appropriately captures this collective sense, while English and German preserve the singular collective form. This census organized Israel by families, establishing land inheritance patterns that would shape Israel's settlement in Canaan. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shillemite | es: los-silemitas | fr: le-Shillemite | de: der-Shillemite Num 26:49

שְׁלֻמִיאֵל H8017 N-proper-ms (5×)

Shelumiel; a Simeonite leader during the wilderness period, son of Zurishaddai

A personal name meaning 'God is my peace' or 'friend of God,' borne by the leader of the tribe of Simeon during the wilderness wanderings. Shelumiel son of Zurishaddai appears in the census (Num 1:6), the camp arrangement (2:12), the tabernacle dedication offerings (7:36, 41), and the departure from Sinai (10:19). The LXX renders it Salamiel. Like many Israelite names compounded with El, it expresses trust in God's protective friendship.

(5×) A proper masculine name meaning 'God is my peace' or 'friend of God,' identifying the tribal chief of Simeon during the wilderness era. All five occurrences appear in Numbers (1:6; 2:12; 7:36, 41; 10:19) in ceremonial and administrative contexts. The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate — English 'Shelumiel,' Spanish 'Selumiel,' French and German 'Shelumiel' — confirming its stable identity as an unchanged proper noun across translation traditions. The theophoric element -el signals covenant relationship with God. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shelumiel | es: Selumiel | fr: Shelumiel | de: Shelumiel Num 1:6; Num 2:12; Num 7:36; Num 7:41; Num 10:19

שֶׁלֶמְיָה H8018 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (10×)

Shelemiah/Shelemyahu — a proper name borne by gatekeepers, officials, and others in Jeremiah's time and the post-exilic era

Shelemiah (meaning 'the LORD has repaid/made whole') names several individuals across the books of Jeremiah, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Chronicles. During Jeremiah's ministry, multiple men named Shelemiah appear: the father of Jehudi (Jer 36:14), one sent to arrest Jeremiah (Jer 36:26), and a sentry who detained the prophet at the Benjamin Gate (Jer 37:13). A Levitical gatekeeper by this name served in the time of David (1 Chr 26:14), identified as the same person called Shallum elsewhere. Post-exilic bearers include wall-builders and a priestly treasurer in Nehemiah.

Shelemyah (proper name) (10×) The personal name Shelemiah/Shelemyahu, a theophoric name meaning 'YHWH has repaid,' identifying several biblical figures: a Levitical gatekeeper under David equated with Shallum (1 Chr 26:14), multiple individuals in Jeremiah's era including officials and accusers of the prophet (Jer 36:14, 26; 37:3, 13; 38:1), and post-exilic figures in Ezra and Nehemiah involved in foreign-wife reform and wall-building (Ezra 10:39, 41; Neh 3:30; 13:13). The name alternates between the forms Shelemyah and Shelemyahu. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shelemiah, Shelemyah, Shelemyahu | es: Selemías, Shelemyah, Shelemyahu | fr: Schélémia, [ושלמיה], [ושלמיהו] | de: [ושלמיה], [ושלמיהו], [לשלמיהו] 1Chr 26:14; Ezra 10:39; Ezra 10:41; Neh 3:30; Neh 13:13

שְׁלֹמוֹת H8019a N-proper-fs (4×)

Shelomith, Shelomoth; personal name of several Levites and one royal descendant, meaning perhaps 'peaceful' or 'complete'

This name (appearing in masculine and feminine forms: Shelomith, Shelomoth) identifies several individuals in Chronicles and Ezra, mostly Levites. 1 Chronicles 23:18 and 26:28 mention Levitical Shelomiths involved in temple service. 2 Chronicles 11:20 names a Shelomith as daughter of Rehoboam. Ezra 8:10 lists a Shelomith as head of a post-exilic family. The name likely derives from shalom (peace, wholeness), suggesting meanings like 'peaceful one' or 'my peace/wholeness.' The multilingual glosses transliterate with minor variations. The multiple individuals bearing this name, particularly among temple servants, suggests it was a favored name in Levitical families, carrying connotations of peace and completeness appropriate to those serving in God's house.

(4×) Personal name of multiple Levites and one royal descendant, appearing as Shelomith/Shelomoth. Notable bearers include Levites in temple service (1 Chr 23:18, 26:28), a daughter of Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:20), and a post-exilic family head (Ezra 8:10). The name, likely from shalom, suggests 'peaceful' or 'complete.' Its frequency among Levitical families may reflect the appropriateness of a 'peace' name for those ministering in the temple, the dwelling place of Israel's peace. SHELOMOTH PERSONAL NAME

en: Shelomit, Shelomith | es: Selomit, Shelomit | fr: [שלומית], [שלמית] | de: [שלומית], [שלמית] 1Chr 23:18; 1Chr 26:28; 2Chr 11:20; Ezra 8:10

שְׁלֹמִית H8019b Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Shelomith, a female personal name appearing in Leviticus and Chronicles

A Hebrew feminine personal name borne by two different women in the biblical text. First, the daughter of Dibri from the tribe of Dan, whose son blasphemed and was stoned in Leviticus 24:11. Second, a daughter of Zerubbabel mentioned in 1 Chronicles 3:19, placing her in the Davidic line after the exile. The name means 'peaceful' or 'my peace,' derived from shalom. The Septuagint renders it with varied Greek forms (Salomith, etc.), all preserving the Semitic name. These two women, separated by centuries and context, share a name that evokes peace, though the Leviticus account is one of judgment and the Chronicles reference one of genealogical continuity.

(2×) Names meaning 'peace' or 'peaceful' were common in Israel, reflecting parental hope or theological affirmation. The Leviticus Shelomith is remembered in a tragic narrative—her son's blasphemy—while the Chronicles Shelomith is simply listed among Zerubbabel's descendants, part of the attempt to maintain Davidic genealogies in the postexilic period. The name itself carries no hint of these contrasting stories, a reminder that names express aspiration, not destiny. SHELOMOTH PERSONAL NAME

en: Shelomit, and-Shelomith | es: Shelomit, y-Shelomit | fr: Shelomit, [ושלמית] | de: Shelomit, [ושלמית] Lev 24:11; 1Chr 3:19

שַׁלְמָן H8020 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shalman, a conqueror who destroyed Beth-arbel, identity debated

Shalman designates a military conqueror known for his brutal destruction of Beth-arbel, mentioned by Hosea as a byword for devastation. The identity remains debated—some identify him with Shalmaneser, the Assyrian king, though the chronology is problematic since the Assyrian ruler postdates Hosea. Others suggest a Moabite prince named Salamanu, or even an otherwise unknown local warlord. What's certain is that his destruction of Beth-arbel was so notorious that Hosea could cite it as a warning: Israel's coming judgment would be like what Shalman did to Beth-arbel.

(1×) Personal or place name of uncertain identity, remembered for the violent destruction of Beth-arbel. Hosea 10:14 warns that devastation will overwhelm Israel 'as Shalman destroyed Beth-arbel on the day of battle, when mothers were dashed in pieces with their children.' The prophetic citation assumes the audience knew the reference, suggesting a relatively recent atrocity. The multilingual evidence preserves various forms (Spanish 'Salmán,' French 'Schalman'), reflecting scholarly uncertainty about identification while recognizing this stands as a historical reference to traumatic violence. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shalman | es: Salmán | fr: Schalman | de: [שלמן] Hos 10:14

שַׁלְמֹן H8021 N-mp (1×)

rewards or bribes, illicit payments given to pervert justice

This plural noun denotes rewards or bribes, particularly those offered to corrupt officials. Isaiah uses it to indict Jerusalem's leaders who 'love bribes and chase after rewards,' abandoning their duty to defend orphans and widows. The term parallels 'bribe' (shohad) in Isaiah 1:23, suggesting payments that pervert justice—not legitimate compensation but illicit rewards that turn judges into accomplices of wrongdoing. The root meaning of 'recompense' here takes a dark turn, describing not righteous requital but corrupt payoffs.

(1×) Illicit rewards or bribes that corrupt justice, particularly those sought by officials who should defend the vulnerable. Isaiah 1:23 condemns Jerusalem's leaders: 'Your princes are rebels and companions of thieves; everyone loves a bribe and chases after rewards. They do not defend the orphan, nor does the widow's cause come before them.' The parallelism with 'bribe' clarifies that these 'rewards' are corrupt payments that subvert justice. The Spanish 'recompensas' and the bracketed forms in French and German reflect translation uncertainty about this rare term, though the context clearly indicates judicial corruption. RECOMPENSE AND RETRIBUTION

en: rewards | es: recompensas | fr: [שלמנים] | de: [שלמנים] Isa 1:23

שַׁלְמַנְאֶסֶר H8022 N-proper-ms (2×)

Shalmaneser, Assyrian king who besieged Samaria and subjugated Israel

The name of an Assyrian king, specifically Shalmaneser V, who reigned from 727 to 722 BC. He is mentioned in 2 Kings 17:3 and 18:9 in connection with the siege and fall of Samaria, which ended the northern kingdom of Israel. The name is Akkadian, meaning '(the god) Shulman is chief,' and the biblical text preserves a Hebraized form. Shalmaneser extracted tribute from King Hoshea of Israel and later besieged Samaria when Hoshea rebelled, though the city fell during the reign of Shalmaneser's successor, Sargon II. The name evokes one of the most catastrophic moments in Israel's history: the end of the northern kingdom and the exile of the ten tribes.

(2×) For the biblical authors, Shalmaneser represents the instrument of divine judgment on Israel's persistent idolatry and covenant unfaithfulness. The siege of Samaria culminated decades of prophetic warning, and Shalmaneser's name is forever linked to the exile of the northern tribes. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate the name, as is typical for foreign rulers, preserving the Assyrian original. The name's appearance in Kings marks a turning point: after Shalmaneser, there is no longer a kingdom of Israel, only Judah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shalmaneser | es: Salmanasar | fr: Shalmaneser | de: Shalmaneser 2Kgs 17:3; 2Kgs 18:9

שִׁילֹנִי H8023 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shilonite, designation for someone from Shiloh (with textual variants)

This gentilic typically designates someone from Shiloh, the early sanctuary city where the tabernacle rested before Jerusalem. The term appears with various Hebrew spellings across biblical texts, leading to textual debates about whether some instances should read 'Shelanite' (from Shelah son of Judah) instead. Nehemiah 11:5 represents one such contested case, where the context of Judahite families has led many scholars to emend the text from 'Shilonite' to 'Shelanite.' Such variants reflect common scribal confusion between similar names, especially in genealogical lists.

(1×) Gentilic designation (with definite article) appearing in Nehemiah's list of Jerusalem's inhabitants, though many scholars propose emending it to 'Shelanite' based on the parallel in Chronicles and the genealogical context. Nehemiah 11:5 lists families who resettled Jerusalem after the exile, and this term appears in the Judahite section where 'Shelanite' (descendants of Shelah, Judah's son) would fit better than 'Shilonite' (from the northern city of Shiloh). The French and German translations bracket the word, indicating textual uncertainty, while Spanish translates as 'silonita,' preserving the Masoretic reading despite scholarly doubts. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shilonite | es: el-silonita | fr: [השלני] | de: [השלני] Neh 11:5

שֵׁלָנִי H8024 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shelanite, designation for the clan descended from Shelah son of Judah

This gentilic designates the clan descended from Shelah, the third son of Judah. It appears in the wilderness census in Numbers, where Judah's descendants are enumerated by families. The definite article indicates the collective group—all of Shelah's descendants. Shelah survived where his older brothers Er and Onan did not, and through him passed a major line of Judah's inheritance. The term uses the standard Hebrew pattern for clan names, adding '-ite' to the ancestor's name. This clan formed one of Judah's major subdivisions.

(1×) Gentilic designation (with definite article) for the clan descended from Shelah within the tribe of Judah. Numbers 26:20 lists them in the wilderness census conducted before entering Canaan: 'the sons of Judah according to their clans: of Shelah, the clan of the Shelanite.' The Spanish 'los selanitas' appropriately renders the collective plural sense. This census established inheritance rights, so identifying each clan was crucial for later land distribution. Shelah's line carried particular significance as one of Judah's three surviving branches, with Perez's line eventually becoming dominant through David's ancestry. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shelanite | es: los-selanitas | fr: le-Shelanite | de: der-Shelanite Num 26:20

שָׁלַף H8025 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms / 3fs (25×)

To draw out or unsheathe (a sword); to draw off (a sandal); to pull out or extract

Shalaf is the decisive act of drawing something from where it is lodged. Most often it describes unsheathing a sword for battle – the 26,000 men 'drawing sword' of Judges 8:10, Saul's plea to his armor-bearer in 1 Samuel 31:4. In the quiet legal scene of Ruth 4:7-8, the same verb governs a man drawing off his sandal to confirm a property transfer. The Aramaic cognate and Akkadian shalupu both carry the same sword-drawing sense, while Arabic salaba (to strip) hints at the broader semantic field of removal and extraction.

1. draw out, unsheathe a weapon (22×) To draw out or unsheathe a sword or weapon from its sheath, overwhelmingly the dominant usage. Warriors are often numbered as 'men drawing sword' (Judg 8:10; 20:2; 1 Chr 21:5). Balaam's angel stands with 'drawn sword in hand' (Num 22:23). Spanish 'desenvainadores de' (those who unsheathe) and the shared Akkadian cognate shalupu confirm the military core of this sense. LEAVING AND REMAINING

en: and-drew-it, draw, drawing | es: desenvaina, desenvainada, desenvainadores-de | fr: [שלופה], [שלף], drawing | de: [שלופה], [שלף], draw Num 22:23; Num 22:31; Josh 5:13; Judg 3:22; Judg 8:10

2. draw off, remove a sandal (2×) To draw off or remove a sandal as a symbolic legal act. In Ruth 4:7-8 the kinsman-redeemer removes his shoe to ratify his renunciation of redemption rights – a custom the narrator explains as already archaic. Spanish 'quitó' (he removed) and French 'il tira hors' (he drew off) both highlight the deliberate, ritual character of this gesture. STRIPPING AND UNCOVERING

en: and-he-drew-off, drew-off | es: quitó, y-se-quitó | fr: et-il-tira-hors, tira-hors | de: [וישלף], [שלף] Ruth 4:7; Ruth 4:8

3. pull out, extract from a body (1×) To pull out or extract something embedded in place, such as a weapon from a wound (Judg 3:22, where Ehud's blade cannot be drawn from Eglon's body) or metaphorically a planted thing easily uprooted (Ps 129:6). This sense emphasizes dislodging from a fixed position rather than unsheathing from a designed holder. DRAWING AND PULLING

en: being-pulled-out | es: ser-arrancada | fr: tirer | de: seiend-pulled-out Ps 129:6

שֶׁלֶף H8026 N-proper-ms (2×)

Sheleph, a son of Joktan; ancestor of a South Arabian tribe

A personal name appearing in the Table of Nations in Genesis 10:26 and its parallel in 1 Chronicles 1:20. Sheleph was a son of Joktan, who is presented as the ancestor of numerous Arabian tribes. Scholars identify Sheleph with a South Arabian tribe known from Arabic sources as Salif or Sulaf, located in the Arabian Peninsula. The name appears in the genealogies that trace the descendants of Shem, mapping the ethnolinguistic landscape of the ancient Near East. The Septuagint preserves the name as Saleph, and the parallel texts in Genesis and Chronicles confirm its stability in the tradition.

(2×) The Table of Nations in Genesis 10 served as an early ethnographic map, connecting known peoples to the sons of Noah and explaining the diversity of nations as part of God's design. Sheleph's inclusion among Joktan's sons locates this tribal group within the Semitic family and the broader Arabian world. Modern identification with the Salif tribe, though not certain, is plausible given the phonetic match and geographic location. The name functions as a genealogical anchor for understanding Israel's place among the nations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sheleph | es: Selef, Shélef | fr: Sheleph, [שלף] | de: Schalef, [שלף] Gen 10:26; 1Chr 1:20

שָׁלַשׁ H8027 V-Piel-Imp-mp (9×)

To do a third time, divide into three parts; three years old; threefold/three-storied; on the third day — a denominative from 'three'

A denominative verb built on the number three (shalosh), this word shows how Hebrew turns numerals into active verbs. It can mean performing an action for the third time, as when Elijah commands that water be poured on the altar a third time (1 Kgs 18:34), or dividing territory into three parts (Deut 19:3). As a Pual participle, it describes sacrificial animals as 'three years old' — the age of maturity for the covenant-ratification ceremony of Gen 15:9. The architectural sense of 'three-storied' appears in Ezek 42:6, while Eccl 4:12 uses the 'threefold cord' as a proverb of strength in unity. Hindi 'तीन मंजिली' (three-storied) and Arabic ثلاثي (triple) show the numeral-adjective pattern paralleled across Semitic and South Asian languages.

1. three years old (Pual participle) (3×) The Pual participial form describing an animal as three years old, indicating full maturity for sacrificial purposes. All three occurrences appear in Gen 15:9, where God instructs Abraham to bring a three-year-old heifer, a three-year-old goat, and a three-year-old ram for the covenant-cutting ceremony. Spanish 'de-tres-años,' Arabic ثلاثي,' and Hindi 'तिन

वरश कि' all construct the age descriptor from their respective words for 'three,' mirroring the Hebrew denominative pattern exactly. NUMBER THREE en: three-years-old | es: de-tres-años | fr: trois-ans-ancien | de: dreijährige, dreijährigen Gen 15:9

2. threefold, three-storied (tripled structure) (2×) The adjectival sense of being arranged in three layers, stories, or strands — a structural tripling. In Ezek 42:6, temple chambers are described as 'three-storied,' and in Eccl 4:12, the famous 'threefold cord is not quickly broken' uses this form. Hindi 'तीन मंजिली' (three-storied) and Spanish 'de-tres-pisos' (of three floors) demonstrate how naturally this architectural metaphor translates, while the Ecclesiastes proverb about the cord extends tripling from architecture to relational strength. NUMBER THREE en: the-threefold, three-storied | es: de-tres-pisos, el-triple | fr: le-המשלש, trois-fois | de: [המשלש], [משלשות] Eccl 4:12; Ezek 42:6

3. to do a third time (Piel action) (2×) The Piel verbal sense of performing an action for the third time, expressing deliberate repetition. In 1 Kgs 18:34, Elijah commands the onlookers to pour water on the altar offering a third time — the threefold drenching dramatically heightens the miracle of the fire from heaven. Spanish 'Haced-tercera-vez' (do a third time) and the paired imperative-then-narrative structure (command in v. 34a, fulfillment in v. 34b) show the ritual completeness of triple repetition in Israelite practice. TIME AND SEASONS

en: and-they-did-a-third-time, do-a-third-time | es: Haced-tercera-vez, e-hicieron-tercera-vez | fr: et-ils-fit-un-troisième-temps, fais-un-troisième-temps | de: tue-ein-dritter-Zeit, und-sie-tat-ein-dritter-Zeit 1Kgs 18:34

4. to divide into thirds (1×) The Piel sense of dividing a territory or object into three equal parts, a practical administrative action. In Deut 19:3, Moses commands Israel to divide the promised land into three regions for the cities of refuge, ensuring geographic accessibility. Spanish 'dividirás-en-tres,' Hindi 'तीन भाग करेगा' (will make three parts), and Arabic ‎ all render this partitioning sense clearly, showing how the verbal denominator from 'three' naturally generates a division-by-three meaning. NUMBER THREE en: and-you-shall-divide-into-thirds | es: y-dividirás-en-tres | fr: et-tu-devra-diviser-dans-thirds | de: und-du-soll-teilen-in-thirds Deut 19:3

5. on the third day (temporal) (1×) A temporal Piel usage referring to the third day, marking an ordinal point in time. In 1 Sam 20:19, Jonathan tells David to come to a certain place 'on the third day' — a signal tied to their plan for David's escape from Saul. Spanish 'al-tercer-día' and Hindi 'तिस्रे दिन' preserve the ordinal temporal sense. The textual tradition here is debated, with some scholars reading this as a distinct clause rather than a simple temporal marker. DAYS AND DAYLIGHT

en: and-on-the-third-day | es: Y-al-tercer-día | fr: et-sur-le-troisième-jour | de: und-auf-der-dritter-Tag 1Sam 20:19

שַׁלְשֵׁ֫ישׁ H8028 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shelesh, a descendant of Asher listed in Chronicles

Shelesh was a member of the tribe of Asher, appearing in the genealogical records of Chronicles. The name occurs in a list of Asher's descendants, part of the Chronicler's comprehensive genealogies that trace Israel's tribal structures. We know nothing about Shelesh beyond his placement in Asher's family tree. The name possibly relates to the Hebrew root for 'three,' though this connection remains uncertain. Like many names in these genealogical lists, it preserves the memory of an individual whose life details are lost but whose place in Israel's tribal structure was significant enough to record.

(1×) Personal name (with conjunction) of a descendant of Asher in the tribal genealogies. First Chronicles 7:35 lists him among the sons of Helem: 'The sons of his brother Helem: Zophah, Imna, Shelesh, and Amal.' The conjunction 'and' connects him to his brothers in this family list. The German translation 'und-drei' ('and-three') may reflect confusion between the proper name and the number word, while French brackets the word, indicating translation difficulty. Spanish 'y-Seles' appropriately transliterates the personal name with its conjunction. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Shelesh | es: y-Seles | fr: [ושלש] | de: und-drei 1Chr 7:35

שְׁלֵ֫שׁ H8029 N-mp (5×)

third generation; those of the third descent, i.e., grandchildren or great-grandchildren

An adjective derived from the number three, used substantively to mean 'those of the third generation.' It appears in the solemn warning that God visits the iniquity of the fathers upon children to the third and fourth generation (Exod 20:5; 34:7; Num 14:18; Deut 5:9). In a tender counterpoint, Genesis 50:23 records that Joseph saw Ephraim's children 'of the third generation' — his great-grandchildren — born upon his knees. The word thus spans both judgment and blessing across generational time.

(5×) Those of the third generation — grandchildren or great-grandchildren, used substantively from an ordinal adjective. In the Decalogue and covenant passages (Exod 20:5; 34:7; Num 14:18; Deut 5:9), it appears in the warning formula 'upon the third and fourth generation,' expressing the long reach of covenantal consequence. Genesis 50:23 uses it tenderly of Joseph's great-grandchildren. Spanish 'tercera generación,' German 'dritten Generation,' and French 'troisième génération' all preserve the generational counting, while English 'third generation' captures both the juridical and familial registers. GENERATION AND LINEAGE

en: third-generation, third-generations | es: tercera-generación, terceras, terceras-generaciones | fr: troisième-génération, troisième-générations | de: der-dritten-Generation, dritter-Geschlecht, dritter-Geschlechter Gen 50:23; Exod 20:5; Exod 34:7; Num 14:18; Deut 5:9

שִׁלְשָׁה H8030 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shilshah, a descendant of Asher listed in Chronicles

Shilshah was a member of the tribe of Asher, appearing in the Chronicler's genealogical records. The name occurs in a list of Zophah's descendants, part of the comprehensive tribal genealogies that establish Israel's family structures. Beyond his position in Asher's lineage, we know nothing about Shilshah's life or significance. The name's etymology remains uncertain, though some connect it to the root for 'three.' Like many individuals in these genealogical registers, his name preserves a memory of tribal organization important to Israel's self-understanding, even when personal details are lost.

(1×) Personal name (with conjunction) of a descendant of Asher in the genealogical records. First Chronicles 7:37 lists him among the sons of Zophah: 'Bezer, Hod, Shamma, Shilshah, Ithran, and Beera.' The conjunction 'and' connects him in sequence with his brothers. The French translation 'et-trois' ('and-three') and the German bracketing suggest uncertainty—translators may have wondered if this was the number 'three' rather than a proper name. Spanish 'y-Silsa' correctly handles it as a personal name with conjunction, preserving the genealogical function. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Shilshah | es: y-Silsa | fr: et-trois | de: [ושלשה] 1Chr 7:37

שָׁלִשָׁה H8031 N-proper-fs (1×)

Shalishah, a district or region through which Saul traveled seeking his father's donkeys

Shalishah designates a district or region through which Saul passed while searching for his father's lost donkeys—the journey that led to his anointing as king. The text calls it 'the land of Shalishah,' indicating a recognized territorial area, though its exact location remains debated. Some scholars connect it with Baal-shalishah, mentioned in 2 Kings 4:42, suggesting a location in Ephraim's hill country. The name possibly relates to the Hebrew word for 'three,' perhaps indicating a triple region or threefold division, though this remains speculative. The term functions as a place name marking one stage of Saul's fateful journey.

(1×) Geographical designation for a district or region in central Israel through which Saul traveled. First Samuel 9:4 recounts the search: 'He passed through the hill country of Ephraim and through the land of Shalishah, but they did not find them.' This unsuccessful search through multiple regions eventually brought Saul to Samuel, leading to his secret anointing as king. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'Shalishá,' English and German 'Shalishah') treats this as a proper place name, though its exact location remains uncertain. The journey's stages—Ephraim, Shalishah, Shaalim—map Saul's providential path to kingship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shalishah | es: Shalishá | fr: Shalishah | de: Shalishah 1Sam 9:4

שִׁלְשֹׁם H8032 Adv (25×)

Day before yesterday; idiomatically 'formerly, previously, in time past' (always in the phrase temol shilshom)

A temporal adverb literally meaning 'three days ago' or 'the day before yesterday,' but almost always appearing in the fixed idiomatic pair temol shilshom ('yesterday and the day before'), which together mean 'formerly, in time past, as before.' Moses protests he is not eloquent 'neither yesterday nor the day before' (Exod 4:10); a goring ox is liable if it gored 'in time past' (Exod 21:29). Spanish anteayer ('day before yesterday') preserves the literal sense, while French and German renderings often transliterate, reflecting the phrase's idiomatic nature.

1. day before yesterday / formerly (24×) The temporal adverb 'day before yesterday' or 'three days ago,' functioning almost exclusively within the idiom temol shilshom meaning 'formerly, previously, in time past.' Attested with various prepositions: ki-temol shilshom ('as formerly,' Gen 31:2, 5; 1 Sam 19:7), mi-temol shilshom ('from aforetime,' Exod 21:29; Deut 4:42; 19:4, 6), and gam-temol gam-shilshom ('neither yesterday nor the day before,' Exod 4:10; 2 Sam 3:17). Spanish anteayer and antes-de-ayer consistently capture both the literal and idiomatic temporal reference. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: before, before-yesterday, third-day | es: anteayer, antes-de-ayer, y-anteayer | fr: [שלשום], devant, devant-hier | de: [שלשום], drei-Tage-ago, dritter-Tag Gen 31:2; Gen 31:5; Exod 4:10; Exod 5:7; Exod 5:8

2. previously (anomalous gloss) (1×) A single anomalous occurrence in Prov 22:20 where the Ketiv reading shilshom appears in a context unrelated to temporal reference. Some translations render it as 'previously' (English, Spanish antes), but Hindi, Arabic, and Swahili glosses suggest 'thirty' (sheloshim), pointing to a possible textual confusion with the numeral. Many modern scholars emend to shalishim ('excellent things' or 'thirty sayings'), understanding this as the introduction to the Thirty Sayings of the Wise. NUMBER THIRTY

en: [previously] | es: [antes] | fr: [שלשום] | de: [[שלשום]] Prov 22:20

שָׁם H8033 Adv (835×)

sham – there, thither; a locative adverb pointing to a previously mentioned or implied place

The adverb sham ('there') is the standard Hebrew locative deictic, pointing to a place already established in the discourse. Its 835 occurrences span the entire Hebrew Bible, from 'there he put the man whom he had formed' (Gen 2:8) to prophetic oracles and wisdom poetry. It can indicate static location ('there') or direction of motion ('thither'), and it frequently appears in emphatic fronted position for rhetorical effect (Mic 4:10; Ps 104:26). Combined with ki ('because there...') or gam ('even there...'), it builds sophisticated spatial-logical constructions. German dort and Spanish alli capture its spatial pointing function precisely.

There (locative adverb) (835×) A locative adverb indicating a place previously mentioned or contextually implied, functioning both as static 'there' and directional 'thither.' First appearing in Gen 2:8 ('there he put the man'), it serves as essential spatial scaffolding throughout biblical narrative and poetry. German dort and Spanish alli map to it with complete consistency across 835 occurrences. The word's three original clusters (reflecting minor morphological variation) show no semantic differentiation, confirming a single deictic sense. THERE (SPATIAL DEICTIC)

en: there | es: allí | fr: là | de: bist, dort, dort-hinein Gen 2:8; Gen 2:11; Gen 2:12; Gen 11:2; Gen 11:7

שֵׁם H8034 Prep-l / N-msc (864×)

Name, designation; by extension fame, reputation, or renown — the word by which someone is known or remembered.

One of the most theologically loaded words in Scripture, shem denotes the name by which a person, place, or deity is identified and invoked. When God reveals His shem to Moses (Exod 3:15), it is far more than a label — it carries His character, authority, and covenant commitment. The Arabic cognate ism and Assyrian shumu confirm a Semitic root tied to marking or branding identity. In a secondary but powerful sense, shem means fame or renown: the 'men of shem' in Genesis 6:4 are warriors of legendary reputation, and Solomon's shem spread to distant nations (1 Kgs 4:31).

1. Name (designation / identifier) (856×) The word by which a person, place, or thing is identified and called — covering personal names, place names, the divine Name, and naming acts. Translations universally render this as nombre (Spa.), nom (Fra.), Name (Ger.), reflecting its core denotation as a designation or identifier. Central to covenant theology when applied to God's Name (Exod 3:15; Deut 12:5). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-name, his-name, its-name | es: nombre-de-él, su-nombre | fr: Son-nom, son-nom | de: Sein-Name, sein-Name Exod 2:10; Exod 2:22; Exod 3:13; Exod 15:3; Exod 15:23

2. Fame / Reputation / Renown (8×) Fame, reputation, or renown achieved through mighty deeds or distinguished standing. The 'men of name' in Gen 6:4 and Num 16:2 are men of legendary repute. German sein-fame and French son-fame in the gloss data confirm translators recognized this distinct sense, where shem shifts from label to legacy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-fame, name, names | es: el-nombre, nombre, nombres | fr: le-nom, nom, son-fame | de: Name, des-Namens, sein-fame Gen 6:4; Num 16:2; 1Kgs 4:31; 1Chr 5:24; 1Chr 12:31

שֵׁם H8035 Conj-w (17×)

Shem; firstborn son of Noah, ancestor of the Semitic peoples and forefather of Abraham's line.

The personal name Shem (shem, also meaning 'name' or 'renown') designates Noah's eldest son, through whom the line of blessing runs to Abraham and ultimately to Israel. Genesis 9:26 records Noah's oracle: 'Blessed be the LORD, the God of Shem,' singling out his line for covenant relationship. The Table of Nations (Gen 10:21-31) traces the Semitic peoples – Elam, Asshur, Aram, and Eber – back to him, and the genealogy of Genesis 11:10-26 connects Shem directly to Abram. German translations interestingly render the name as 'Schem,' preserving a closer phonetic echo of the Hebrew.

Shem (17×) The proper name of Noah's firstborn son, progenitor of the Semitic lineage. Blessed by Noah in the oracle of Genesis 9:26-27, listed in the Flood narrative (Gen 5:32; 6:10; 7:13), and featured prominently in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:21-31) and the genealogy linking Noah to Abraham (Gen 11:10-26). Also in 1 Chronicles 1:4, 17, 24 in the same genealogical role. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shem, and-Shem-, and-to-Shem | es: Sem, Y-a-Sem, y-Sem- | fr: Sem, et-Sem-, et-à-Sem | de: Name, Schem, Schems Gen 5:32; Gen 6:10; Gen 7:13; Gen 9:18; Gen 9:23

שְׁם H8036 Prep-b / N-msc (12×)

Name — an Aramaic noun for a person's name, a deity's name, or a designation of identity and authority

The Aramaic noun שְׁם (shum), cognate of Hebrew שֵׁם, means 'name' — personal identity, reputation, or invoked divine authority. In Ezra it appears in Persian administrative contexts: prophets prophesy 'in the name of the God of Israel' (Ezra 5:1), officials ask 'What are the names of the men building this house?' (Ezra 5:4, 10), and a vessel is identified by name (Ezra 5:14). In Daniel it carries theological weight: Daniel blesses God saying 'let the name of God be blessed forever' (Dan 2:20), and Nebuchadnezzar addresses Daniel by his Babylonian name (Dan 2:26; 4:5). Spanish 'nombre' and French 'nom' translate directly.

Name (Aramaic) (12×) A person's or deity's name — denoting identity, authority, or invoked power, used exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. Administrative usage: asking for the names of builders (Ezra 5:4, 10), identifying a temple vessel by name (Ezra 5:14), and prophesying 'in the name of' God (Ezra 5:1). Theological usage: blessing the name of God as an act of worship (Dan 2:20), and the dual naming of Daniel/Belteshazzar 'according to the name of my god' (Dan 2:26; 4:5). The word carries the same weight as Hebrew שֵׁם — name as the seat of identity and authority. Spanish 'nombre' and German 'Name' translate it directly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-name, according-to-name-of, his-name | es: el-nombre-de, en-nombre-de, nombre | fr: au-nom, comme-il-a-placé, nom | de: Name, [שמה], [שמהת] Ezra 5:1; Ezra 5:4; Ezra 5:10; Ezra 5:14

שַׁמָּא H8037 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Shammah, a Judahite warrior, and Shamma, a descendant of Asher

A personal name appearing in military and genealogical contexts. In 2 Samuel 23:11, Shammah son of Agee is named as one of David's mighty men, celebrated for defending a lentil field against the Philistines. In 1 Chronicles 7:37, Shamma is listed among the descendants of Asher, part of the tribal genealogies. The name may mean 'desolation' or 'astonishment,' though the etymology is uncertain. The Septuagint offers varied transliterations (Semma, etc.), and it's unclear whether the two individuals are related or if the name was simply common. Both contexts situate the name within Israel's tribal and military heritage.

(2×) Shammah the warrior is remembered for an act of extraordinary valor: holding a field of lentils against the Philistines when others fled. This episode, one of several celebrating David's mighty men, emphasizes loyalty and courage in the face of overwhelming odds. Shamma the Asherite, by contrast, is simply a name in a genealogy, part of the effort to preserve tribal identity. The shared name—or near-shared name—may reflect common naming practices, but the contexts are entirely distinct: one martial, one genealogical. SHAMMAH PERSONAL NAME

en: Shammah, and-Shamma | es: Shama, y-Sama | fr: Shammah, [ושמא] | de: Shammah, [ושמא] 2Sam 23:11; 1Chr 7:37

שְׁמֵאֵבֶר H8038 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shemeber, king of Zeboiim who joined the rebellion against Chedorlaomer

Shemeber was king of Zeboiim, one of the five cities of the plain that rebelled against Chedorlaomer's twelve-year dominion. His name appears in Genesis 14 during Abraham's era, when four eastern kings invaded Canaan to suppress the rebellion of five kings including Shemeber. After the eastern coalition defeated the five kings in the Valley of Siddim, they captured Lot, prompting Abraham's dramatic rescue mission. Zeboiim, like Sodom and Gomorrah, was later destroyed for wickedness. The name Shemeber possibly means 'name of the mighty' or 'name has winged,' though etymology remains uncertain.

(1×) Personal name (with conjunction) of the king of Zeboiim during Abraham's time, who participated in the rebellion against Mesopotamian overlords. Genesis 14:2 lists him among the five kings: 'they made war with Bera king of Sodom, Birsha king of Gomorrah, Shinab king of Admah, and Shemeber king of Zeboiim, and the king of Bela (that is, Zoar).' The conjunction connects him in sequence with his allies. His defeat and Lot's capture drew Abraham into international conflict, resulting in one of Scripture's earliest battle narratives and Abraham's mysterious meeting with Melchizedek. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Shemeber | es: y-Semeber | fr: et-Shemeber | de: und-Schemeber Gen 14:2

שִׁמְאָה H8039 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shimeah, a Benjamite listed in Chronicles' genealogies

Shimeah was a member of the tribe of Benjamin, appearing in the Chronicler's genealogies. The name occurs in a variant form of a genealogical list that appears twice in Chronicles with minor spelling variations—here as Shimeah, elsewhere as Shimeam. He appears to be descended from Saul's line, part of the genealogies tracing Benjamin's prominent families. The name possibly means 'the LORD has heard,' sharing a root with Samuel and Ishmael. Like many individuals in these genealogical records, we know him only through his placement in Benjamin's family structure.

(1×) Personal name of a Benjamite in the genealogical records, appearing in a form that varies slightly from the parallel passage. First Chronicles 8:32 lists him among descendants associated with Gibeon: 'Mikloth fathered Shimeah. Now these also lived opposite their kinsmen in Jerusalem, with their kinsmen.' The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 9:38 has 'Shimeam' instead. The French and German translations bracket the word, indicating textual uncertainty, while Spanish 'Simea' offers a transliteration. Such variations in proper names across parallel texts are common in genealogical lists. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6395 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Shimeah | es: Simea | fr: [שמאה] | de: [שמאה] 1Chr 8:32

שְׂמֹאל H8040 N-msc / 3mp (54×)

The left side or left hand; occasionally denoting the north (when facing east)

Cognate with Arabic shimal (which means both 'left' and 'north wind'), this Hebrew noun designates the left side, left direction, or left hand. It appears frequently in formulaic pairs with 'right' (yamin), especially in instructions not to turn aside 'to the right or to the left' (Josh 1:7). When ancient Israelites oriented themselves facing east, the left hand corresponded to north, a geographic usage preserved at Job 23:9. The Spanish 'izquierda' and German 'Linke' consistently track its directional meaning across translations.

1. left side, direction (46×) The primary spatial sense covering 46 of 54 occurrences, indicating the left side or leftward direction. It regularly appears in merismus with yamin ('right') in phrases like 'to the right or to the left' (Gen 13:9; Num 20:17; 2 Sam 2:19). Prepositional constructions with min, 'al, and le specify location or movement relative to the left side of landmarks, armies, or persons. LEFT SIDE

en: all, and-left, left | es: a-la-izquierda, e-izquierda, izquierda | fr: [ושמאול], [משמאול], [שמאול] | de: Linke, Linken, [שמאול] Gen 13:9; Gen 14:15; Gen 24:49; Gen 48:13; Exod 14:22

2. left hand (7×) Specifically identifies the left hand as a body part, often with possessive suffixes. Jacob's left hand is placed on Manasseh's head in the crossed-hands blessing (Gen 48:13-14). Samson grasps a pillar with his left hand (Judg 16:29), and Lady Wisdom holds riches in her left hand (Prov 3:16). The French 'sa gauche' and Spanish 'su izquierda' consistently mark the possessive-bodily usage. LEFT SIDE

en: and-his-left-hand, his-left-hand, in-her-left-hand | es: Su-izquierda, con-su-izquierda, e-izquierda-su | fr: Sa-gauche, avec-son-gauche, dans-gauche-son | de: Linke, in-seiner-Linken, mit-sein-links Gen 48:13; Gen 48:14; Judg 16:29; Prov 3:16; Song 2:6

3. (1×) A rare geographic extension where 'left' denotes the north, following the ancient Near Eastern convention of orienting oneself by facing east. Job 23:9 says God works 'on the left' (i.e., in the north) but Job cannot perceive Him. The English gloss 'north' and Spanish 'al norte' confirm this directional mapping. LEFT SIDE

en: north | es: Al-norte | fr: gauche | de: Linke Job 23:9

שְׂמְאֵל H8041 Conj-w / V-Hifil-Prtcpl-mp (5×)

to go left, turn to the left; also to use the left hand, as a denominative from 'left'

A denominative verb from the noun for 'left' (semol), meaning to go leftward, turn to the left, or use the left hand. It always appears in contrast with its opposite, 'to go right' (yamin). Abraham offers

Lot a choice of direction at the parting of ways (Gen 13:9). Isaiah 30:21 promises divine guidance: 'whether you turn right or left.' Ezekiel 21:16 commands a sword to strike leftward. The warriors of 1 Chronicles 12:2 are ambidextrous Benjaminites who could 'use the left hand' with slings and bows — a notable military advantage.

(5×) To go to the left, turn leftward — expressing directional choice, always paired with its opposite 'to go right.' Abraham's offer to Lot (Gen 13:9) and Isaiah's promise of guided paths (30:21) use it for literal and figurative turning. Spanish 'a la izquierda' and French 'aller gauche' confirm the spatial meaning. In 2 Samuel 14:19, the wise woman of Tekoa uses it figuratively for deviating from the truth. The Hiphil participle in 1 Chronicles 12:2 describes Benjaminite warriors skilled in using the left hand for combat, a specialized martial sense distinct from mere directional movement. LEFT SIDE

en: and-I-will-go-left, and-using-left-hand, go-left | es: a-la-izquierda, iré-a-la-izquierda, os-vayáis-a-la-izquierda | fr: [ומשמאלים], [תשמאילו], et-Je—aller-gauche | de: [השמילו], [ומשמאלים], [תשמאילו] Gen 13:9; 2Sam 14:19; 1Chr 12:2; Isa 30:21; Ezek 21:16 left (the left side or hand) (9×) Pertaining to the left side, used as an adjective or substantive to indicate leftward spatial orientation opposite the right (יָמִין). In Leviticus 14:15-16, 26-27, it specifies the priest's left palm during skin-disease purification rites, where oil is placed on the left hand and sprinkled with the right finger. In the temple descriptions (1 Kgs 7:21; 2 Chr 3:17), it identifies the left pillar named Boaz. In the guard arrangements (2 Kgs 11:11; 2 Chr 23:10; Ezek 4:4), it denotes the left side of a building or body. Spanish 'izquierda/izquierdo' and French 'gauche' confirm the consistent spatial meaning across all occurrences. LEFT SIDE

שְׂמָאלִי H8042 Prep-m (9×)

Left, on the left side; an adjective denoting the left hand or left spatial direction as opposed to the right.

An adjective meaning 'left' or 'on the left side,' consistently used in opposition to יָמִין (right). It appears in ritual contexts—the priest's left palm receiving oil in the purification ceremony (Lev 14:15-16, 26-27)—and in architectural descriptions of the temple, identifying the left pillar (1 Kgs 7:21; 2 Chr 3:17) and the left side of the temple guard arrangement (2 Kgs 11:11; 2 Chr 23:10). Spanish distinguishes grammatical gender with 'el izquierdo' / 'la izquierda,' mirroring the Hebrew masculine/feminine inflection.

en: on-the-left, the-left | es: a-la-izquierda, el-izquierdo, la-izquierda | fr: [השמאלית], [מהשמאול], gauche | de: [השמאל], [השמאלית], [מהשמאול] Lev 14:15; Lev 14:16; Lev 14:26; Lev 14:27; 1Kgs 7:21

שִׁמְאָם H8043 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shimeam, a Benjamite listed in Chronicles' genealogies (variant form)

Shimeam is a variant form of Shimeah, appearing in the Chronicler's parallel genealogies of Benjamin. This spelling occurs in the second recounting of the same genealogical material, demonstrating the kind of minor orthographic variation common when scribes copied proper names. The individual is part of Saul's extended family line, among the prominent Benjamite families dwelling in or near Jerusalem. The name's meaning possibly relates to 'hearing,' sharing a semantic field with names like Shemaiah ('the LORD has heard'). Such variants don't indicate different people but rather expected scribal variation in transmitting proper names.

(1×) Personal name of a Benjamite in the genealogical records, appearing as a variant spelling of Shimeah from the parallel passage. First Chronicles 9:38 states: 'Mikloth fathered Shimeam. Now these also lived opposite their kinsmen in Jerusalem, with their kinsmen.' This parallels 1 Chronicles 8:32 where the same individual appears as 'Shimeah.' The French and German translations bracket the word, acknowledging the textual variant and translation difficulty. Spanish 'Simeam' provides transliteration. Both forms preserve the memory of the same person in Benjamin's genealogy, particularly in the line associated with Saul's family. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shimeam | es: Simeam | fr: [שמאם] | de: [שמאם] 1Chr 9:38

שַׁמְגַּר H8044 N-proper-ms (2×)

Shamgar, son of Anath; a deliverer-judge who struck down 600 Philistines with an ox goad

The name of one of Israel's early judges, appearing in Judges 3:31 and 5:6. Shamgar son of Anath is credited with striking down six hundred Philistines with an ox goad, delivering Israel in an era of oppression. His name is unusual—possibly Hittite or Hurrian rather than Semitic—and his patronymic, 'son of Anath,' may indicate a connection to the Canaanite goddess Anath or simply be a place name. The mention of Shamgar in Deborah's song (Judges 5:6) situates him in the era of caravans ceasing and travelers taking byways, a time of danger and disorder. He is a liminal figure, an outsider who brings deliverance.

(2×) Shamgar stands apart from other judges in several ways: his foreign-sounding name, his unconventional weapon (an ox goad, not a sword), and the brevity of his notice. Yet his achievement—six hundred Philistines slain—is staggering and places him among Israel's deliverers. The reference in Judges 5 confirms his historical impact, though details of his tribe, tenure, and territory are absent. The name evokes the chaotic, fragmented period of the judges, when deliverance came from unexpected quarters and unconventional heroes. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shamgar | es: Shamgar | fr: Schamgar | de: Schamgar Judg 3:31; Judg 5:6

שָׁמַד H8045 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (90×)

To destroy or exterminate (Hifil); to be destroyed or perish (Nifal) – total annihilation of peoples, nations, or things.

A verb of devastating finality in the Hebrew Bible, conveying utter annihilation. In its Hifil (causative) form, it describes deliberate destruction by a powerful agent – God destroying nations (Deut 2:22-23), Israel commanded to annihilate Canaanite peoples (Deut 7:23-24), or Nebuchadnezzar ravaging kingdoms. In the Nifal (passive), the subject undergoes that same total ruin: 'you will surely be destroyed' echoes through Deuteronomy's covenant warnings (4:26, 28:20). French consistently uses detruire/exterminer while Spanish employs destruir, both capturing the word's uncompromising force.

1. destroy, exterminate (69×) The Hifil causative sense: to actively destroy, annihilate, or exterminate a people, nation, or entity through deliberate action. The agent – whether God, a king, or Israel – causes total obliteration. Spanish destruir and French detruire/exterminer uniformly confirm a single core meaning across 69 occurrences. Key passages include Deut 2:22 (God destroying the Horites) and 2 Kgs 21:3 (Hezekiah's reforms reversed). LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: and-I-will-destroy, destroyed, he-destroyed | es: destruir, destruirá, destruyó | fr: détruire, détruisit, et-exterminer | de: [השמיד], [ישמיד], [להשמיד] Lev 26:30; Num 33:52; Deut 1:27; Deut 2:22; Deut 2:23

2. be destroyed, perish (21×) The Nifal passive sense: to be destroyed, perish, or be exterminated – the entity suffers annihilation rather than causing it. Arabic passive forms and Spanish reflexive constructions (fuimos destruidos) clearly distinguish this voice from the Hifil. Prominent in covenant-curse warnings (Deut 4:26, 'you shall surely be destroyed') and in narrative accounts of national ruin (Gen 34:30, Jacob fearing extermination). LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: and-I-will-be-destroyed, and-shall-be-destroyed, and-will-be-destroyed | es: destruir, fue-destruida, fuimos-destruidos | fr: détruire, détruisant, détruisit | de: [ונשמד], [ישמד], destroying Gen 34:30; Deut 4:26; Deut 7:23; Deut 12:30

שְׁמַד H8046 Prep-l / V-Hifil-Inf (1×)

to destroy, annihilate, or exterminate (Aramaic infinitive)

This Aramaic verb in the Haphel stem means to destroy or annihilate completely. It appears in Daniel's Aramaic section, describing the final destruction of the fourth beast's dominion. The Haphel (causative) form emphasizes the active, deliberate nature of this destruction—not gradual decay but decisive annihilation. In Jewish Aramaic dialects, the Pael form of this root came to mean 'make apostatize,' but here in Daniel the sense is straightforward physical destruction. The verb captures the finality of divine judgment against the oppressive kingdoms represented by Daniel's beasts.

(1×) To destroy or annihilate completely, appearing as an Aramaic infinitive in Daniel's vision of the four beasts. Daniel 7:26 describes the Ancient of Days' judgment on the fourth beast: 'But the court shall sit in judgment, and his dominion shall be taken away, to be consumed and destroyed to the end.' The infinitival form 'to annihilate' expresses purpose—the judgment's goal is complete destruction, not mere limitation. The French translation 'rendre-malade' ('make sick') appears to be an error, while Spanish 'para-destruir' correctly captures the sense of total destruction that ends the beast's tyranny forever. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: to-annihilate | es: para-destruir | fr: rendre-malade | de: [להשמדה] Dan 7:26

שַׁמָּה H8047 Conj-w (40×)

Desolation, devastation, or horror; a ruined place or an object that provokes dread

A noun saturating the prophetic books – Jeremiah alone uses it twenty-four times. It oscillates between two poles: the objective state of ruin (a land lying waste) and the subjective reaction of horror in those who witness it. Psalm 46:9 pictures God making 'desolations' in the earth, while Deuteronomy 28:37 warns Israel will become an object of 'horror' among the nations. German 'Entsetzen' (dismay) gravitates toward the emotional pole; Spanish 'desolacion' sits closer to the physical. The formulaic curse 'for a desolation and a hissing' (Jer 19:8; 25:9, 18) fuses both dimensions into a single devastating image.

1. desolation, waste (state of ruin) (27×) The objective sense of physical desolation: a place reduced to waste and ruin. Psalm 46:8 envisions God's cosmic 'desolations,' and Isaiah 5:9 prophesies houses becoming 'a waste.' Jeremiah's oracles frequently deploy this in the lamed-of-result construction – 'I will make this city a desolation' (Jer 4:7; 51:29, 43). German 'Entsetzen' slightly overstates the emotional; Spanish 'desolacion' better captures the barren-landscape sense. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: a-desolation, desolation, for-a-desolation | es: desolación, en-desolación, para-desolación | fr: [לשמה], désolation, un-désolation | de: Entsetzen, [לשמה], ein-desolation 2Kgs 22:19; 2Chr 29:8; 2Chr 30:7; Ps 46:8; Ps 73:19

2. horror, object of appalment (12×) The subjective sense: something that provokes horror and shocked dismay in onlookers. Deuteronomy 28:37 warns Israel will become 'a horror' among the peoples, and Jeremiah 5:30 declares 'a horrible thing has happened in the land.' The prophetic curse formula pairs this with 'hissing' and 'reproach' (Jer 18:16; 19:8; 25:9, 18), marking communities that provoke shuddering dread. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: a-desolation, a-horror, and-a-desolation | es: Cosa-espantosa, como-desolación, desolación | fr: désolation, et-désolation, pour-horror | de: Entsetzen, fuer-horror, und-zu-Entsetzen Deut 28:37; Jer 5:30; Jer 8:21; Jer 18:16; Jer 19:8

3. become desolate (Niphal) (1×) A single Niphal verbal occurrence (Zech 7:14) where the land 'was made desolate' behind the exiles. Unlike the nominal senses describing a state or an emotional reaction, this captures the process of becoming ruined – the transition from inhabited to waste. Spanish 'quedo desolada' and the German bracketed form both reflect the verbal-processual character. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: was-desolate | es: quedó-desolada | fr: désolation | de: [נשמה] Zech 7:14

שַׁמָּה H8048 N-proper-ms (7×)

Shammah — a personal name borne by several men including a son of Jesse and an Edomite chief Shammah (Hebrew shammah, possibly meaning 'desolation' or 'astonishment') identifies at least three distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. An Edomite chief descended from Esau through Reuel appears in Genesis 36:13, 17 and 1 Chronicles 1:37. More prominently, Shammah was Jesse's third son and David's brother, present at the anointing scene in 1 Samuel 16:9 and again at the Israelite camp facing Goliath (1 Sam 17:13). A third Shammah appears among David's mighty warriors (2 Sam 23:11, 25, 33). The name is remarkably stable across translations: Spanish 'Shammah,' French 'Shammah,' German 'Schamma.'

Shammah (personal name) (7×) The proper name Shammah, applied to several individuals: (a) an Edomite chief, son of Reuel and grandson of Esau (Gen 36:13, 17; 1 Chr 1:37); (b) the third son of Jesse and brother of David (1 Sam 16:9; 17:13); and (c) warriors among David's mighty men (2 Sam 23:11, 25, 33). The LXX renders these variously as Somme, Samma, and Samaia, but all seven occurrences designate this personal name without semantic subdivision. SHAMMAH PERSONAL NAME

en: Shamah, Shammah | es: Sama, Shama, Shammah | fr: Shammah, [שמה] | de: Schamma, Shammah, sein-Name Gen 36:13; Gen 36:17; 1Sam 16:9; 1Sam 17:13; 2Sam 23:25

שַׁמְהוּת H8049 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shamhut, a military commander in David's army

Shamhut was one of David's military commanders, serving as captain over 24,000 men in the fifth division of the monthly rotation. The Chronicler lists him as an Izrahite, and many scholars identify him with Shammoth (or Shammah), one of David's mighty men. The name appears only in 1 Chronicles 27:8 in the organizational structure of David's army, where twelve commanders each served one month per year. This rotation system, with 24,000 men per division, demonstrated the administrative sophistication of David's kingdom while distributing military burden across the year.

(1×) Personal name of a military commander in David's administrative structure, likely identical with Shammoth from the list of mighty men. First Chronicles 27:8 states: 'The fifth, for the fifth month, was the commander Shamhut the Izrahite; in his division were 24,000.' The Septuagint variants (Salāōth, Samāōth) reflect uncertainty about vocalization. His identification with Shammoth/Shammah in other lists suggests this is an alternate form of the same name, a common phenomenon with Hebrew proper names. The role indicates he was among David's most trusted warriors, given command of thousands. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shamhut | es: Samhut | fr: [שמהות] | de: [שמהות] 1Chr 27:8

שְׁמוּאֵל H8050 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (140×)

Samuel — prophet, priest, and last judge of Israel who anointed both Saul and David as king

Shemu'el is a theophoric name popularly connected with the verb sha'al ('to ask'), reflecting Hannah's prayer: 'I asked him of the LORD' (1 Sam 1:20). The name's 140 occurrences overwhelmingly designate the prophet who bridged Israel's transition from judges to monarchy. Dedicated to temple service as a child (1 Sam 1:24-28), Samuel grew into the nation's spiritual authority — hearing God's voice at Shiloh (1 Sam 3:4-10), leading Israel's repentance at Mizpah (1 Sam 7:5-6), and reluctantly anointing first Saul (1 Sam 10:1) then David (1 Sam 16:13). Even after death, his stature endures: Jeremiah pairs him with Moses as intercessor (Jer 15:1), and Psalm 99:6 counts him among those who called upon the LORD.

Samuel (prophet and judge of Israel) (140×) The proper name Shemu'el, borne primarily by the prophet, priest, and last judge of Israel, son of Elkanah and Hannah of the hill country of Ephraim. Named in connection with sha'al ('to ask,' 1 Sam 1:20), he served from childhood at the Shiloh sanctuary and became the pivotal figure in Israel's transition to monarchy, anointing both Saul and David. Minor bearers include a Simeonite leader (Num 34:20) and an Issacharite clan head (1 Chr 7:2). The Septuagint renders it Samouēl, giving the familiar form shared by Spanish, French, and German translations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shemuel | es: Samuel | fr: Samuel | de: Samuel 1Sam 1:20; 1Sam 2:21; 1Sam 2:26; 1Sam 3:1; 1Sam 3:4

שַׁמּוּעַ H8051 N-proper-ms (5×)

Shammua; a personal name meaning 'heard' or 'renowned,' borne by three distinct men in Scripture

A personal name meaning 'heard' or 'renowned,' from the root shama ('to hear'). It is borne by at least three individuals: a Reubenite spy sent to scout Canaan (Num 13:4), a son of David born in Jerusalem (2 Sam 5:14; 1 Chr 14:4), and a Levite in the post-exilic community (Neh 11:17; 12:18). The LXX offers varied renderings — Samouel, Sammous, Samouei — reflecting uncertainty about the name's exact Greek equivalent. The name's root in 'hearing' connects it to the broader family of theophoric names expressing God's attentiveness.

(5×) A proper masculine name meaning 'heard, renowned,' derived from the root shama. It identifies three different individuals: (1) a Reubenite spy in the wilderness (Num 13:4), (2) one of David's sons born in Jerusalem (2 Sam 5:14 = 1 Chr 14:4), and (3) a post-exilic Levite (Neh 11:17; 12:18). English, Spanish, and French transliterate consistently as 'Shammua' / 'Sammua' / 'Shammua,' while the LXX variations (Samouel, Sammous) show early scribal fluctuation. The name belongs to the rich biblical tradition of names affirming that God hears. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shammua | es: Sammua, Samua, Samúa | fr: Shammua, [שמוע] | de: Shammua, [שמוע] Num 13:4; 2Sam 5:14; 1Chr 14:4; Neh 11:17; Neh 12:18

שְׁמוּעָה H8052 Conj-w / N-fp (27×)

Report, news, tidings — what is heard and circulated; a prophetic message or renown

The noun shemuah comes from the verb shama ('to hear') and names information that reaches someone's ears, whether welcome or devastating. Bad news arrives about the ark's capture (1 Sam 4:19), frightening reports chase each other in Jeremiah's visions (Jer 51:46; Ezek 7:26), and good tidings refresh the soul like cold water (Prov 25:25). The word's theological summit appears in Isaiah 53:1 — 'Who has believed our report?' — where shemuah becomes not mere rumor but divinely authorized proclamation. Spanish noticia/mensaje and German Botschaft ('message') track the shift from hearsay to prophetic weight.

1. report, news, tidings (23×) The general sense of report, news, or tidings — information that is heard and circulates among people, whether good or bad, verified or uncertain. Eli's daughter-in-law collapses at the news of the ark's capture (1 Sam 4:19), David receives conflicting reports about Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 13:30), and Jeremiah warns that rumor will chase rumor in the year of Jerusalem's doom (Jer 51:46). Spanish noticia/rumor and German Botschaft ('tidings') treat this as the standard, undifferentiated category of received information. Proverbs adds emotional color: good news strengthens bones (15:30), and cold water to a thirsty soul is like good news from a far country (25:25). NEWS AND MESSAGES

en: a-report, and-a-report, and-reports | es: De-mala-noticia, Y-noticias, el-rumor | fr: [השמועה], de-nouvelle, et-le-report | de: Botschaft, [השמועה], [ושמועה] 1Sam 2:24; 1Sam 4:19; 2Sam 4:4; 2Sam 13:30; 1Kgs 2:28

2. message, prophetic announcement (3×) A prophetic message or divinely authorized announcement delivered to an audience — shemuah elevated from hearsay to proclamation. Isaiah 53:1 asks 'Who has believed our report?' where the 'report' is the Servant's mission itself. Isaiah 28:9 and 28:19 use shemuah for the prophetic teaching that must be grasped, and Obadiah 1:1 opens with 'we have heard a report from the LORD.' Spanish mensaje and French nouvelle ('news' with weight) shift toward purposeful, authoritative communication rather than mere rumor. NEWS AND MESSAGES

en: from-milk, our-report | es: a-nuestro-mensaje?, el-mensaje | fr: nouvelle | de: Botschaft Isa 28:9; Isa 28:19; Isa 53:1

3. fame, reputation (1×) Fame or reputation — what is heard about a person, establishing their public standing. In Ezekiel 16:56, Jerusalem's sister Sodom 'was not a report on your lips' — that is, Sodom's infamy was not even worth mentioning. The sense extends shemuah from a single piece of news to an ongoing public perception. Spanish noticia and German Botschaft here carry the nuance of renown or notoriety rather than a discrete event. NEWS AND MESSAGES

en: for-report | es: para-noticia | fr: nouvelle | de: [לשמועה] Ezek 16:56

שָׁמִיר H8053 N-proper-ms (2×)

Shamir (Qere) or Shamor (Ketiv), a Levite; textual variant for a personal name in Chronicles

A personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 24:24 with a Ketiv/Qere variant: the written text (Ketiv) has Shamor, while the traditional reading (Qere) has Shamir. The individual is identified as a Levite in the divisions of temple service during David's reign. The Septuagint offers varied transliterations (Samer, Semmer), showing ancient uncertainty about the correct form. The name Shamir can mean 'thorn' or 'flint,' or it may be related to 'guarding' (from the root shamar). The textual variant is minor—likely a scribal issue with vowel pointing—and does not affect the individual's role or identity. Both forms appear in the same verse, creating a unique case where Ketiv and Qere are both preserved as glosses.

(2×) Levitical genealogies in Chronicles serve to establish the legitimacy and order of temple personnel in the postexilic restoration. Shamir/Shamor was part of this system, assigned to one of the divisions that rotated temple duties. The Ketiv/Qere variant reflects the complexities of textual transmission—different manuscript traditions or vocalization conventions—but the core information (a Levite in David's temple organization) is stable. The dual reading preserved in the glosses is a testament to scribal care in maintaining textual variants. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shamir, [Shamor] | es: (Shamir), [Shamur] | fr: [שמור], [שמיר] | de: [שמור], [שמיר] 1Chr 24:24

שַׁמָּה H8054 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shammoth, one of David's mighty warriors (variant form)

Shammoth was one of David's elite warriors known as 'the mighty men.' He appears in Chronicles' roster of David's champions, likely identical with Shammah son of Agee the Hararite mentioned in Samuel's parallel account, and probably the same as Shamhut who commanded David's fifth military division. Such variations in names across parallel texts are typical, particularly for proper names. The mighty men formed David's inner circle of warriors, men who accomplished extraordinary feats and remained loyal through his years as fugitive and king. Shammoth's inclusion marks him as among Israel's greatest soldiers.

(1×) Personal name of one of David's mighty warriors in the Chronicles' account, representing a variant form of Shammah. First Chronicles 11:27 lists him among the mighty men: 'Shammoth the Harorite, Helez the Pelonite.' The Septuagint forms (Samōth, Sammōth) show typical variation. Scholars generally identify him with Shammah son of Agee (2 Samuel 23:11, 33) and with Shamhut the commander (1 Chronicles 27:8). The French and German translations bracket the word, acknowledging the textual complexity around this name. The consistent appearance across lists confirms his status as one of David's most elite warriors. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shammot | es: Samot | fr: [שמות] | de: [שמות] 1Chr 11:27

שָׂמַח H8055 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (158×)

To rejoice, be glad; in Piel, to make glad or gladden; a fundamental emotion word spanning festive celebration, spiritual joy, and divine delight.

Samach is the Hebrew Bible's most common and most direct verb of joy. Unlike its near-synonyms — gil (exultant, dancing joy), ranan (joyful shouting), sus (exuberant delight) — samach covers the broadest emotional ground, from the glad heart of a person drinking wine at a festival (Deut 14:26) to the cosmic rejoicing of heavens and earth before Yahweh (Ps 96:11-12). The Piel stem adds a causative dimension: wine 'gladdens' the heart of man (Ps 104:15), and a husband is to 'make glad' his new wife for a full year (Deut 24:5). Across languages the word maps remarkably consistently — Arabic fariha, Spanish alegrarse, Korean 기뻐하다, Swahili -furahi, and Hindi khush hona all select their most general, unmarked joy vocabulary, confirming samach as the default, central term in Hebrew's rich emotional lexicon.

1. Qal: rejoice, be glad (123×) The basic Qal intransitive: to rejoice, be glad — the dominant sense at 123 occurrences spanning all finite verb forms (perfect, imperfect, imperative, jussive, cohortative, consecutive). This is the core emotional experience of gladness in response to God's acts (Ps 16:9, 'my heart is glad'), at festivals (Deut 12:18, 'you shall rejoice before Yahweh'), in victory (1 Sam 11:15), and in everyday life (Eccl 11:9, 'rejoice, young man'). Arabic fariha, Spanish se alegró/alegrarse, Korean 기뻐하다, and Swahili -furahi all converge on their most general gladness vocabulary. The verb frequently parallels gil and ranan in poetic parallelism (Ps 14:7, 31:7, 32:11), confirming its place as the semantically broadest joy term. REJOICING AND GREETING

en: And-rejoiced, and-rejoiced, and-they-rejoiced | es: Y-se-alegraron, Y-se-alegró, Y-te-alegrarás | fr: et-ils-se-réjouit, et-se-réjouir, et-tu-devra-se-réjouir | de: freute-sich, und-du-sich-freuen, und-du-soll-sich-freuen Deut 12:18; Deut 14:26; Deut 16:11; Deut 16:14; Deut 26:11

2. Piel: make glad, gladden (27×) The Piel causative: to make glad, gladden, cause to rejoice — 27 occurrences. Here the subject actively produces joy in another: God gladdens his people (Ps 86:4, 'gladden the soul of your servant'), wine gladdens the heart (Ps 104:15, Judg 9:13), a wise son gladdens his father (Prov 10:1). The causative is cross-linguistically distinctive: Arabic farraha (Form II intensive-causative), Spanish alegrar (transitive), Korean 기쁘게 하다 ('cause to be joyful'), and Swahili -furahisha (causative extension) all deploy dedicated causative morphology. Deut 24:5's year-long exemption for newlyweds — so the husband may 'make glad' his wife — is one of the Torah's most humanely tender provisions. REJOICING AND GREETING

en: and-I-will-make-them-joyful, and-I-will-make-them-rejoice, gladdens | es: Alegra, Alégranos, alegra | fr: et-se-réjouir, il-se-réjouira, se-réjouir | de: freute-sich, lass-sich-freuen, sich-freuen Deut 24:5; Judg 9:13; 2Chr 20:27; Ezra 6:22; Neh 12:43

3. Qal inf: to rejoice, rejoicing (5×) The Qal infinitive construct with prepositions: 'to rejoice,' 'when rejoicing' — 5 occurrences used as verbal complements or temporal clauses. In Eccl 3:12 'there is nothing better than to rejoice (lismōach) and do good'; in Ezek 35:14 'when the whole earth rejoices (bismo'ach).' Arabic 'inda farahi ('at the time of my rejoicing') and Swahili kufurahi (infinitive) both use dedicated infinitive or gerundive forms. This grammatical category matters lexicographically because the infinitive often appears in wisdom literature's reflections on whether joy is a proper human pursuit. REJOICING AND GREETING

en: and-to-rejoice, to-rejoice, when-rejoices | es: Al-alegrarse, alegrarse, para-alegrarme | fr: et-se-réjouir, se-réjouir, à-se-réjouir | de: freute-sich, sich-freuen, und-freute-sich Ps 106:5; Eccl 3:12; Eccl 5:19; Eccl 8:15; Ezek 35:14

4. Adj: rejoicing, glad (2×) The adjective sameach used substantively: 'the rejoicing ones, the glad' — 2 occurrences. In Job 3:22 those who 'rejoice exceedingly' when they find the grave, and in Amos 6:13 those who 'rejoice over a thing of nothing.' The substantival use with the article creates a category of persons defined by their emotional state. Arabic al-farihūna and Korean 기뻐하는 자들 both nominalize the adjective into a class designation. These two passages are notably ironic — the 'rejoicers' in both cases are celebrating something perverse or illusory. REJOICING AND GREETING

en: The-ones-rejoicing, who-rejoice | es: Los-que-se-alegran | fr: le-se-réjouir, se-réjouir | de: freute-sich Job 3:22; Amos 6:13

5. (1×) A single Piel occurrence at Ps 89:42 (Eng. 89:41) where the context is God causing enemies to rejoice over the fallen anointed king: 'you have made all his adversaries rejoice.' English 'you have made rejoice' and Spanish alegraste both render the Piel causative, but the passage stands apart because God is the agent of hostile joy — a theological reversal of the usual Piel pattern where God gladdens his own people. This inversion of the expected joy-giver/joy-recipient relationship gives the verse its bitter, lament-psalm force. REJOICING AND GREETING

en: you-have-made-rejoice | es: alegraste | fr: le-se-réjouir | de: freute-sich Ps 89:42

שָׂמֵחַ H8056 Adj-ms (20×)

Glad, joyful, merry — describing a state of delight; as a substantive, one who rejoices

The adjective שָׂמֵחַ is the Hebrew Bible's most common word for a person in a state of gladness. It appears at feasts and coronations, in proverbs about the heart, and in psalms of thanksgiving. When Solomon's dedication of the Temple concludes, the people depart 'joyful and glad of heart' (1 Kgs 8:66); when Adonijah's guests hear the trumpet, they scatter because the city was 'rejoicing' with Solomon's anointing (1 Kgs 1:45). As a substantive, it names the person defined by joy — 'those who rejoice in doing evil' (Prov 2:14) or Amos's 'those who rejoice over nothing' (Amos 6:13). The word's warmth pervades every occurrence: it is always relational, always visible, always more than private feeling.

1. glad, joyful, merry (15×) The adjectival sense describing a person, group, heart, or occasion as being in a state of gladness and joy — the dominant use with 15 occurrences. The multilingual glosses converge on joy vocabulary: Spanish 'alegre/alegres,' French 'se rejouissant,' German 'freute sich.' Deuteronomy 16:15 commands Israel to 'be altogether joyful' at the Feast of Tabernacles. Proverbs 15:13 teaches that 'a glad heart makes a cheerful face,' and 17:22 that 'a joyful heart is good medicine.' The word is predicative in 1 Kings 8:66 and attributive in Psalm 113:9 ('a joyful mother of children'), showing full adjectival flexibility. REJOICING AND GREETING

en: and-rejoicing, glad, joyful | es: alegre, alegres, alegrándose | fr: [שמח], [שמחים], et-se-réjouissant | de: [שמח], [שמחים], freute-sich Deut 16:15; 1Kgs 1:40; 1Kgs 1:45; 1Kgs 4:20; 1Kgs 8:66

2. one who rejoices (substantival) (4×) The substantival use where שָׂמֵחַ functions as a noun meaning 'one who rejoices' or 'the joyful ones,' appearing 4 times. In Proverbs 2:14 the wicked are 'those who rejoice in doing evil,' and in Isaiah 24:7 'the mirth of the joyful ones ceases.' The Spanish 'los que se alegran' and English 'those rejoicing at' mark the shift from describing a quality to naming a class of people defined by their joy. Psalm 35:26 uses the construct form to describe David's enemies: 'those who rejoice at my hurt' — joy weaponized as gloating. REJOICING AND GREETING

en: merry, rejoicing, those-rejoicing-at | es: Los-que-se-alegran, el-que-se-alegra, los-alegres-de | fr: [שמח], joyeux, le-joyeux | de: [השמחים], [שמח], freute-sich Ps 35:26; Prov 2:14; Prov 17:5; Isa 24:7

3. to rejoice (verbal) (1×) A single verbal occurrence where the form functions as a jussive of the cognate verb שָׂמַח rather than the adjective — 'let them rejoice' or 'let it be glad.' In 1 Chronicles 16:31 David's psalm of praise calls out 'let the heavens be glad and the earth rejoice.' The Spanish 'alegrense' (imperative/jussive 'let them rejoice') and English 'let rejoice' confirm the verbal force. This occurrence likely belongs morphologically to the verb שָׂמַח (H8055) rather than the adjective, but the clustering algorithm grouped it here due to overlapping form. REJOICING AND GREETING

en: let-rejoice | es: Alégrense | fr: [ישמחו] | de: [ישמחו] 1Chr 16:31

שִׂמְחָה H8057 N-fsc / 2mp (94×)

Joy, gladness, or mirth; ranging from sacred celebration before God to pleasure evaluated as a human pursuit.

Simkhah (שִׂמְחָה) is the Hebrew Bible's primary noun for joy and gladness, appearing in contexts as diverse as harvest festivals, royal coronations, and intimate personal delight. Laban rebukes Jacob for leaving without the 'joy' of music and celebration (Gen 31:27), the people rejoice with great simkhah at Solomon's anointing (1 Kgs 1:40), and the Psalmist declares that in God's presence is 'fullness of joys' (Ps 16:11). In Ecclesiastes, however, simkhah takes on a more searching tone — Qoheleth examines 'pleasure' (simkhah) as a potential life-goal and finds it wanting (Eccl 2:1-2). Spanish alegría, French joie, and German Freude all carry this range from sacred gladness to evaluated pleasure.

1. joy, gladness, delight (90×) The predominant sense of joy, gladness, and delight — encompassing rejoicing before God, festive celebration, happiness at good fortune, and sacred worship. Spanish alegría and German Freude consistently render this broad emotional and ceremonial sense. The people shout with great joy at Solomon's anointing (1 Kgs 1:40), and Israel is commanded to serve the Lord 'with gladness' (Deut 28:47; Ps 100:2). JOY AND EXULTATION

en: gladness, gladness-, is-gladness | es: Alegría, Gozo, alegría | fr: joie | de: Freude, mit-Freude Gen 31:27; Deut 28:47; 1Sam 18:6; 2Sam 6:12; 1Kgs 1:40

2. pleasure, mirth (as pursuit) (4×) Pleasure or mirth viewed as a human pursuit to be evaluated — especially in Wisdom Literature where Qoheleth tests simkhah as a life philosophy. 'I said of laughter, it is mad, and of pleasure (simkhah), what does it accomplish?' (Eccl 2:2). Also in Jeremiah 15:16, where God's words become a 'joy' to the prophet — but a deeply personal, almost solitary kind. This sense carries an undertone of critical assessment absent from the celebratory first sense. JOY AND EXULTATION
en: and-for-gladness-of, and-for-rejoicing, and-of-pleasure | es: para-alegría, y-a-la-alegría, y-para-alegría | fr: et-joie, et-pour-rejoicing, joie | de: Freude, und-Freude, und-fuer-rejoicing Judg 16:23; 1Chr 15:16; Eccl 2:2; Jer 15:16

שָׁמַט H8058 V-Qal-Imp-mp / 3fs (10×)

To let drop, release, or hurl down; covers sabbatical remission of debts, forceful throwing, and stumbling

At its root this verb means 'to let drop' or 'let fall,' but its applications fan out dramatically. In sabbatical-year legislation (Exod 23:11, Deut 15:2-3) it denotes the release or remission of debts and the fallowing of land — Spanish 'soltarás' and 'remitirá' both reflect the act of letting go of a financial claim. In the violent narrative of 2 Kings 9:33 Jehu commands 'throw her down!' and Jezebel is hurled from the window. The word also describes the oxen stumbling at the threshing floor (2 Sam 6:6; 1 Chr 13:9), and in its Niphal passive form the wicked 'are thrown down' in Psalm 141:6.

1. release, remit (debts/land) (4×) To release, remit, or let lie fallow — the technical legal sense used for the sabbatical year. Exodus 23:11 commands Israel to let the land drop (lie unworked), while Deuteronomy 15:2-3 extends this to the remission of debts. Spanish 'remitirá' and French 'release' both highlight the economic dimension: creditors must let their claims fall. Jeremiah 17:4 applies the same image to Israel releasing its grip on its inheritance. RELEASE AND FORGIVENESS en: And-you-will-release, releasing, shall-release | es: Y-soltarás, la-dejarás, remitirá | fr: [ושמטתה], devra-release, releasing | de: [ושמטתה], du-sollst-release-es, releasing Exod 23:11; Deut 15:2; Deut 15:3; Jer 17:4

2. throw down, hurl (3×) To throw down or hurl forcefully from a height. The vivid triple occurrence in 2 Kings 9:33 — Jehu's command and its execution — makes this sense unforgettable: 'Throw her down! And they threw her down.' Spanish 'tiradla/la tiraron' and French 'jette/jeté en bas' both convey the deliberate, violent act of casting Jezebel from the palace window. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED
en: [ketiv], and-they-threw-her-down, throw-her-down | es: Tiradla, [Tirádola], y-la-tiraron | fr: [ketiv], et-ils-jeta-sa-en-bas, jette-sa-en-bas | de: [ketiv], und-sie-warf-ihr-hinab 2Kgs 9:33

3. stumble, slip (2×) To stumble, slip, or lose one's footing, used intransitively. In 2 Samuel 6:6 and 1 Chronicles 13:9 the oxen stumble (or 'let the ark slip'), prompting Uzzah's fateful reach. Spanish 'tropezaron' captures the sudden loss of control, while the parallel accounts confirm the same event — a moment of physical instability with devastating consequences. STUMBLING AND OFFENSE
en: stumbled, they-stumbled | es: se-soltaron, tropezaron | fr: [שמטו], ils-trébucha | de: [שמטו], sie-stumbled 2Sam 6:6; 1Chr 13:9

4. be thrown down (passive) (1×) To be thrown down or cast down, the Niphal passive form. Psalm 141:6 envisions the wicked judges 'thrown down' over rocky crags. English 'are thrown down' and Spanish 'fueron despeñados' (hurled from a cliff) both convey the passive reception of violent force, completing the semantic arc from active hurling to passive falling. FALLING AND FAILING en: are-thrown-down | es: Fueron-despeñados | fr: lâcher | de: sind-thrown-down Ps 141:6

שְׁמִטָּה H8059 Art / N-fs (5×)

Release, remission; the cancellation of debts prescribed for every seventh year

In ancient Israel's economic legislation, this noun designates the formal release or remission of debts at the end of every seven-year cycle. Deuteronomy 15:1-2 introduces the concept as a divinely mandated suspension of financial claims between Israelites, and Deuteronomy 31:10 links it to the public reading of the Torah during the Feast of Booths. Spanish 'remisión' and English 'release' both capture the juridical force of this term, which envisions economic mercy woven into the rhythm of communal life.

(5×) The prescribed cancellation or temporary suspension of debt obligations at the close of each seven-year sabbatical cycle. All five occurrences cluster in Deuteronomy (15:1-2, 9; 31:10), where it functions as a technical legal term. The Spanish gloss 'remisión' and English 'release' underscore its juridical character — not forgiveness of sin but formal remission of financial claims between covenant members. FORGIVENESS PARDON
en: a-release, the-release | es: la-remisión, remisión | fr: le-release, une-libération | de: der-release, ein-release Deut 15:1; Deut 15:2; Deut 15:9; Deut 31:10

שַׁמַּי H8060 N-proper-ms (6×)

Shammai — a personal name in the tribe of Judah, borne by three men in the Chronicler's genealogies.

A proper masculine noun naming three distinct individuals in the genealogies of Judah recorded in 1 Chronicles. The first Shammai is the son of Onam and brother of Jada (1 Chr 2:28, 32), the second is the son of Rekem in a Calebite line (1 Chr 2:44-45), and the third appears as a son of Mered in a Judahite sub-clan (1 Chr 4:17). The LXX renders the name variously as Sammai, Sammei, and Sami, while the German gloss 'mein Name' appears to be an etymological reading connecting it to the root 'shem' (name). All occurrences are confined to the Chronicler's tribal records.

(6×) Shammai, a personal name borne by three men in the tribe of Judah. The English 'Shamai' and Spanish 'Samay' transliterate the name, while the German 'mein-Name' reflects a folk etymology from 'shem' (name). The first Shammai is son of Onam in the line of Jerahmeel (1 Chr 2:28, 32); the second descends from Caleb through Rekem (1 Chr 2:44-45); the third belongs to a Judahite sub-clan through Mered (1 Chr 4:17). All references appear in the Chronicler's genealogical records establishing tribal heritage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shamai | es: Samay | fr: [שמי] | de: mein-Name 1Chr 2:28; 1Chr 2:32; 1Chr 2:44; 1Chr 2:45

שְׁמִידָע H8061 N-proper-ms (3×)

Shemida (personal name: descendant of Manasseh)

Shemida was a clan leader within the tribe of Manasseh, mentioned in genealogical records and land-allotment lists. The name may mean 'the name knows' according to some scholars, comparing Sabaean parallels. He appears in the census of Israel's families (Numbers 26:32) and in the distribution of Canaanite territory to his clan (Joshua 17:2), then again in the Chronicler's genealogy (1 Chronicles 7:19). The Greek translations show typical consonantal variation (Symear, Samareim, Sameida), reflecting the challenges of rendering Hebrew names into Greek.

(3×) Personal name of a Manassite family head. Numbers 26:32 lists Shemida among the clans of Manasseh counted in the wilderness census. Joshua 17:2 confirms that the Shemidaites received a land portion in Canaan. 1 Chronicles 7:19 places him in the genealogical structure of Manasseh's descendants. The name marks both a person and his clan, typical of tribal organization where the ancestor's name designates his descendants. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shemida, and-Shemida | es: Semida, Y-Semidá | fr: Shemida, [שמידע], et-Shemida | de: Shemida, [שמידע], und-Shemida Num 26:32; Josh 17:2; 1Chr 7:19

שְׁמִידָעִי H8062 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shemidaite, designation for the clan descended from Shemida in Manasseh

This gentilic designates the clan descended from Shemida, a son of Gilead in the tribe of Manasseh. It appears in the wilderness census in Numbers, where each clan within each tribe is enumerated. Shemida was one of six sons of Gilead who founded major Manassite clans. The definite article with this gentilic indicates the collective group—all descendants of Shemida—functioning as a clan designation. This census established inheritance rights that would later shape Manasseh's settlement east and west of the Jordan, with the Shemidaites receiving their portion of the tribal allotment.

(1×) Gentilic designation (with definite article) for the clan descended from Shemida within the tribe of Manasseh. Numbers 26:32 lists them in the wilderness census: 'of Shemida, the clan of the Shemidaites.' The Spanish 'los semidaítas' appropriately captures the collective plural sense. This census enumerated each clan to establish inheritance rights before entering Canaan. Shemida was one of Gilead's six sons whose descendants formed distinct clans in Manasseh, and this clan would later receive its own territorial allotment when Joshua distributed the land. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shemidaite | es: los-semidaítas | fr: le-Shemidaite | de: der-Shemidaite Num 26:32

שְׂמִיכָה H8063 Prep-b (1×)

rug, thick coverlet, or blanket used for covering

A heavy textile covering, likely a thick woven rug or blanket suitable for warmth and concealment. The word appears only in Judges 4:18, where Jael covers the fleeing Sisera with it—an act of apparent hospitality that precedes his assassination. The multilingual renderings ("rug," "manta," with the German borrowing the English term) suggest uncertainty about the exact textile type, though all translations point to a substantial covering. Ancient Near Eastern hospitality included providing bedding to guests, making this detail both culturally authentic and dramatically ironic.

(1×) A thick textile covering, probably a heavy rug or blanket. In Judges 4:18, Jael uses it to cover Sisera after giving him milk, creating a false sense of security before killing him. The Spanish "manta" (blanket) and the cross-linguistic consensus on a substantial covering suggest a heavy textile appropriate for both warmth and concealment. The domain classification (Activities Involving Clothing) reflects its use as a protective covering in this narrative context. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: with-the-rug | es: con-la-manta | fr: avec-le-rug | de: mit-der-rug Judg 4:18

שָׁמַי H8064 Conj-w / N-mp (421×)

Heavens, sky; the visible dome above the earth, God's dwelling place, the cosmic vault of stars and weather.

שָׁמַיִם appears on the Bible's very first page — 'In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth' (Gen 1:1) — and remains one of Scripture's most theologically charged nouns. Always plural in form (a so-called plurale tantum), it encompasses the visible sky where birds fly and rain falls, the cosmic vault of sun, moon, and stars, and the transcendent dwelling place of God. The construct superlative שְׁמֵי הַשָּׁמַיִם ('heavens of heavens,' Deut 10:14; 1 Kgs 8:27) expresses what even Solomon confessed the heavens cannot contain. Across languages the word maps remarkably consistently — Spanish cielos, French cieux, German Himmel, Arabic ءا — all preserving a similar ambiguity between physical sky and divine abode.

1. heavens / sky (329×) The primary sense: the heavens or sky as the visible expanse above the earth — the atmosphere where birds fly (Gen 1:20), clouds gather, rain falls, and celestial bodies shine (Gen 1:14-17). This is the overwhelmingly dominant usage (329 occurrences), rendered consistently across languages: Spanish los cielos, French les cieux, German der Himmel, Arabic اسلا. The singular 'heaven' in some English translations versus the always-plural Hebrew form is a persistent translation challenge. HEAVEN AND SKY

en: the-heavens | es: los-cielos | fr: les-cieux | de: Himmel, dem-Himmel, der-Himmel Gen 1:1; Gen 1:9; Gen 1:14; Gen 1:15; Gen 1:17

2. in the heavens (42×) The heavens as a locative domain — 'in the heavens' (בַּשָּׁמַיִם) — marking where something exists or occurs, especially God's dwelling (Deut 4:39; 1 Kgs 8:30). French dans les cieux and Spanish en los cielos preserve the prepositional structure. This usage carries strong theological weight: the heavens are not merely above but are the place from which God sees, judges, and acts. HEAVEN AND SKY

en: in-the-heavens | es: en-los-cielos, esté-en-los-cielos | fr: cieux, dans-cieux, dans-le-cieux | de: Gewuerze, im-Himmel, in-Himmel Gen 11:4; Exod 20:4; Deut 1:28; Deut 3:24; Deut 4:17

3. toward / to the heavens (19×) The heavens as a directional goal — 'toward/to the heavens' — marked by directional he (הַשָּׁמַיְמָה, Exod 9:8), lamed, or other directional particles. Moses throwing soot 'toward the heavens' (Exod 9:8) or Jacob's ladder reaching 'to the heavens' (Gen 28:12) illustrate this spatial-dynamic sense. Spanish hacia los cielos and German gen Himmel capture the directional force. HEAVEN AND SKY

en: the-heavens, the-heavens-ward, the-heavenward | es: a-los-cielos, al-cielo, hacia-los-cielos | fr: cieux, le-cieux, le-cieux-elle | de: Himmel, an-den-Himmel, der-Himmel Gen 15:5; Gen 28:12; Exod 9:8; Exod 9:10; Deut 4:19

4. from heaven (18×) The heavens as a source — 'from heaven' (מִן הַשָּׁמַיִם) — the origin from which God speaks (Neh 9:13), sends rain, fire (Gen 19:24), manna, and deliverance. Spanish desde los cielos and French du ciel mark this ablative function. Theologically rich: divine intervention characteristically descends from this locus. HEAVEN AND SKY

en: from-heaven, from-heavens, from-the-heavens | es: Desde-cielos, Desde-los-cielos, de-los-cielos | fr: cieux, de-cieux, de-mon-nom | de: von-Himmel, von-der-Himmel, von-der-Himmel- 2Chr 7:1; Neh 9:13; Neh 9:15; Neh 9:27; Neh 9:28

5. heavens of (construct) (8×) The heavens in construct state — שְׁמֵי הַשָּׁמַיִם ('heavens of heavens') and similar bound forms — expressing the superlative cosmic realm that even the heavens cannot contain (1 Kgs 8:27; 2 Chr 2:6). This Semitic intensifying construction has no neat equivalent in most target languages; translations typically resort to paraphrase ('the highest heavens') or literal rendering. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-heavens-of, and-the-heavens-of, heavens-of | es: cielos-de, los-cielos-de, y-cielos-de | fr: cieux, et-cieux, et-cieux-de | de: Himmel, Himmel-, mein-Name Deut 10:14; 1Kgs 8:27; 2Chr 2:6; 2Chr 6:18; Neh 9:6

6. your / his heavens (possessed) (5×) The heavens with pronominal suffixes — 'your heavens' (שָׁמֶיךָ, Ps 8:3), 'his heavens' (שָׁמָיו, Deut 33:28) — expressing personal association or possession. When the Psalmist gazes at 'your heavens, the work of your fingers,' the suffix transforms the cosmic vault into an intimate address to God. Only 5 occurrences, but each carries poetic and theological intensity. HEAVEN AND SKY

en: his-heavens, your-heavens | es: sus-cielos, tus-cielos, vuestros-cielos | fr: cieux, son-cieux, ton-cieux | de: dein-Himmel, sein-Himmel Lev 26:19; Deut 28:23; Deut 33:28; Ps 8:3; Ps 144:5

שְׁמַיִן H8065 Prep-b / N-mdd (38×)

heaven(s), sky — the Aramaic form of shamayim, denoting the visible sky or God's celestial dwelling Shamayin is the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew shamayim, appearing 38 times exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. Always in the emphatic state (shamayya), it carries the same dual register as its Hebrew counterpart: the physical sky above and the transcendent abode of God. Nebuchadnezzar's great tree grew 'until its top reached the heavens' (Dan 4:8, 17, 20), and 'the dew of heaven' (tal shamayya, Dan 4:12, 20, 22, 30; 5:21) marks the exposed, animal-like existence imposed during the king's madness. Daniel 7:2 names 'the four winds of heaven,' and verse 13 introduces the Son of Man coming 'with the clouds of heaven.' The theological peak is the phrase elah shamayya ('God of heaven,' Dan 2:18, 19, 37, 44; Ezra 5:11-12; 6:9-10; 7:12, 21, 23), a diplomatic-liturgical title favored in the Persian period.

heaven(s), sky (38×) The Aramaic noun for 'heavens' or 'sky,' always in the emphatic plural shamayya, functioning both as the visible firmament and as the realm of divine authority. In Daniel, it denotes the physical sky — birds (2:38; 4:9, 18), dew (4:12, 20, 22, 30; 5:21), winds (7:2), and clouds (7:13) — and simultaneously the seat of divine sovereignty: 'heaven rules' (4:23). The compound elah shamayya ('God of heaven,' Dan 2:18-19, 37, 44; Ezra 5:11-12; 7:12, 21, 23) became the standard designation for Israel's God in official Aramaic correspondence of the Persian period. Translations converge uniformly: Spanish 'cielos,' French 'cieux,' German 'Himmel.' HEAVEN AND SKY

en: of-the-heavens, the-heavens | es: el-cielo, los-cielos | fr: les-cieux | de: Himmel Ezra 5:11; Ezra 5:12; Ezra 6:9; Ezra 6:10; Ezra 7:12

שְׁמִינִי H8066 Art / Number-ofs (28×)

eighth — the ordinal number eight, marking liturgical days, calendar months, and priestly divisions

Shemini is the ordinal adjective 'eighth,' appearing 28 times across ritual, calendrical, and organizational contexts. Its most theologically charged use is the phrase 'on the eighth day' (bayyom hashshemini), which marks the boundary between a period of ritual waiting and the beginning of new status. Circumcision falls on the eighth day (Lev 12:3), and the consecration of the priests culminated on the eighth day when fire from the LORD consumed the offering (Lev 9:1). Purification rituals for skin disease and bodily discharges likewise reach resolution on the eighth day (Lev 14:10, 23; 15:14, 29; Num 6:10). The Feast of Tabernacles concludes with a solemn assembly 'on the eighth day' (Lev 23:36, 39; Num 29:35; Neh 8:18; 2 Chr 7:9). Calendrically, 'the eighth month' appears in 1 Kings 6:38 and Zechariah 1:1. In the priestly roster of 1 Chronicles 24-25, the eighth lot falls to particular divisions. The Psalm superscriptions 'al-hasheminit' (Pss 6:1; 12:1) remain enigmatic — perhaps referring to an eight-stringed instrument or an octave mode.

(28×) The ordinal 'eighth,' used predominantly in the ritual formula 'on the eighth day' to mark the completion of purification periods and consecration rites. Governs the timing of circumcision (Lev 12:3), the climax of priestly ordination when divine fire appeared (Lev 9:1), the final step in purification from skin disease (Lev 14:10, 23), and the closing assembly of the Feast of Tabernacles (Lev 23:36; Num 29:35; 2 Chr 7:9). Also designates the eighth month (1 Kgs 6:38; Zech 1:1), priestly course assignments (1 Chr 24:10; 25:15), and the mysterious musical term 'al-hasheminit' in Psalm titles (Pss 6:1; 12:1). LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: the-eighth | es: el-octavo, la-octava, octavo | fr: der-huitième, le-huitième | de: der-Achte, der-achter Exod 22:30; Lev 9:1; Lev 12:3; Lev 14:10; Lev 14:23

שְׁמִינִי H8067 Art / N-fs (3×)

the eighth, Sheminith (musical term or ordinal number)

This adjective means 'eighth' and appears both as an ordinary ordinal (the eighth day, the eighth month) and as a mysterious musical term in psalm titles. In ritual contexts it marks the eighth day of ceremonies (Exodus 22:29 and many Levitical texts) or the eighth month in royal building chronology (1 Kings 6:38). More enigmatically, it appears in 1 Chronicles 15:21 describing Levites playing harps 'on the Sheminith,' and in the titles of Psalms 6 and 12. Scholars debate whether this indicates an octave, a particular musical key or mode, or an eight-stringed instrument, but the meaning remains uncertain.

(3×) In 1 Chronicles 15:21 and the titles to Psalms 6 and 12, 'the Sheminith' appears as a musical-liturgical direction. The standard interpretation suggests 'according to the eighth' (key, mode, or octave), but this is speculative. The Spanish 'la octava' and English 'the eighth' preserve the numerical term without resolving its musical significance. The phrase distinguishes one group of Levitical musicians from those playing 'according to Alamoth' (maidens/sopranos?), suggesting some technical performance distinction understood in temple practice but now obscure. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: the-Sheminit, the-eighth | es: la-octava | fr: [השמינית], le-Sheminith | de: [השמינית], der-eighth 1Chr 15:21; Ps 6:1; Ps 12:1

שָׁמִיר H8068 Conj-w / N-msc / 3ms (11×)

Thorns, briers (collective); adamant, diamond, or flint (a very hard stone)

The noun שָׁמִיר displays one of the most striking semantic splits in biblical Hebrew, naming two entirely different physical realities. In Isaiah's oracles of judgment it denotes thorns and briers — the wild growth that reclaims abandoned vineyards and wasted land (Isa 5:6, 7:23-25, 27:4). In Jeremiah and Ezekiel, however, it refers to an extremely hard mineral — adamant, diamond, or emery — used as a metaphor for permanence and stubbornness: Judah's sin is engraved with an 'adamant point' (Jer 17:1), and God makes the prophet's forehead harder than flint (Ezek 3:9). Whether these represent one word with two meanings or two originally distinct roots remains debated.

1. thorns, briers (8×) A collective noun for thorns, briers, or thorn-bushes, used exclusively in Isaiah as a symbol of desolation and divine judgment upon unproductive or rebellious land. The vineyard song of Isa 5:6 warns that God will 'command the clouds not to rain upon it,' letting שָׁמִיר וָשַׁיִת ('briers and thorns') overrun the vineyard. The same pair recurs in Isa 7:23-25 (invaders turning cultivated hillsides to waste), Isa 9:18 (wickedness burning like thorns), Isa 10:17 (God's light consuming Israel's thorns), and Isa 27:4 (God marching against briers in battle). Multilingual glosses confirm the botanical reading: Spanish 'espino/espinos,' French 'epine,' German 'Dorn.' THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: and-its-briers, brier, for-the-thorns | es: espino, espinos, para-espinos | fr: et-épine, à-épine, épine | de: Dorn, und-Dorn, zu-Dorn Isa 5:6; Isa 7:23; Isa 7:24; Isa 7:25; Isa 9:18

2. adamant, diamond, flint (3×) A very hard stone or mineral — identified variously as adamant, diamond, emery, or flint — used metaphorically for extreme hardness and indelibility. In Jer 17:1, Judah's sin is inscribed 'with an iron pen and a diamond point' (בְּצִפֹּרֶן שָׁמִיר), emphasizing its permanence. In Ezek 3:9, God makes the prophet's forehead 'like adamant, harder than flint' (כְּשָׁמִיר חָזָק מִצֹּר), granting him fortitude against rebellious Israel. Zech 7:12 describes the people making their hearts 'like diamond' (שָׁמִיר) to resist God's words. Spanish 'diamante' and English 'diamond/flint' clearly distinguish this mineral sense from the botanical one, while some German and French glosses blur the boundary. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: diamond, like-flint | es: como-diamante, diamante | fr: veille, épine | de: Dorn, [כשמיר], [שמיר] Jer 17:1; Ezek 3:9; Zech 7:12

שָׁמִיר H8069 N-proper-fs (3×)

Shamir (place name: two towns in Israel)

Shamir designates two distinct locations in ancient Israel. The first, in the hill country of Ephraim, served as the home and burial place of the judge Tola (Judges 10:1-2). The second appears in the tribal allotment of Judah, listed among towns in the hill country (Joshua 15:48). The name likely derives from a root meaning 'thorn' or 'flint,' though the connection is uncertain. The Greek versions render it variously as Samir, Sameir, or even Samaria (in Tola's context), showing some geographical confusion in transmission.

(3×) Place name denoting two separate towns. Joshua 15:48 lists Shamir among Judahite hill-country settlements. Judges 10:1-2 identifies it as Tola's residence in the hill country of Ephraim, where he judged Israel for twenty-three years and was buried. The cross-linguistic evidence ('Shamir,' 'Samir') simply transliterates the name, as appropriate for proper nouns. The geographical distinction between the Judahite and Ephraimite Shamirs must be inferred from context, as the name itself provides no disambiguation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shamir, in-Shamir | es: Samir, en-Samir | fr: Shamir, dans-Shamir | de: Shamir, in-Shamir Josh 15:48; Judg 10:1; Judg 10:2

שְׁמִירָמוֹת H8070 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Shemiramoth; a Levitical name meaning perhaps 'heights of heaven'

Shemiramoth is a personal name borne by at least two Levites in the Old Testament. According to the Thesaurus, the name may mean 'heights' or 'name of the heights,' perhaps referencing the heavens. One Shemiramoth served as a musician in David's procession when the ark was brought to Jerusalem (1 Chr 15:18, 20; 16:5), and another was a teaching Levite sent by King Jehoshaphat to instruct the people (2 Chr 17:8). The LXX renders it Σαμειραμωθ.

(5×) A proper masculine name designating Levites. The first bearer appears among the second-rank musicians appointed by David for the ark procession (1 Chr 15:18, 20; 16:5). A second Shemiramoth features in Jehoshaphat's teaching mission (2 Chr 17:8, where the Ketiv reads שמרימות). Spanish 'Semiramot' and English 'Shemiramoth' reflect the LXX tradition Σαμειραμωθ. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: [ketiv], and-Shemiramot, and-Shemiramoth | es: y-Semiramot, y-Shemiramot | fr: [ושמירמות], [ושמרימות] | de: [ושמירמות], [ושמרימות] 1Chr 15:18; 1Chr 15:20; 1Chr 16:5; 2Chr 17:8

שַׂמְלָה H8071 N-fpc / 2mp (31×)
Outer garment, mantle; also a cloth wrapper used for carrying or bundling objects
The standard Hebrew term for the large rectangular cloth draped over the body as an outer garment, essential to daily life in ancient Israel. A person's simlah served as clothing by day and blanket by night — hence the law requiring its return before sunset if taken as pledge (Exod 22:26). Beyond personal wear, the same cloth could be spread out to carry objects: the Israelites bundled their kneading bowls in their semalot at the Exodus (Exod 12:34), and Ruth carried barley home in hers (Ruth 3:15). German Gewand and Spanish vestido consistently reflect the clothing sense, while French vêtement covers both uses.

1. garment, outer clothing (27×) An outer garment, mantle, or cloak worn wrapped around the body as everyday clothing. This is the dominant sense across nearly all occurrences, from Noah's sons covering him with a simlah (Gen 9:23) to the command to change one's garments as a mark of transition (Gen 35:2; Gen 41:14). The garment also figures in legal contexts about clothing the naked (Deut 10:18) and the cross-dressing prohibition (Deut 22:5). Spanish vestido, German Gewand, and French vêtement all confirm the standard clothing meaning. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: [his-garment], [ketiv], and-garments | es: (sus-vestidos), Tu-vestido, [su-vestido] | fr: [cétiv], [his-garment], [ושמלתנו] | de: Gewand-von, [(שמלתיך)], [[שמלתך]] Gen 9:23; Gen 35:2; Gen 37:34; Gen 41:14; Gen 44:13

2. cloth, wrapper (4×) A piece of cloth or wrapper repurposed for carrying, bundling, or covering objects rather than worn as clothing. At the Exodus, Israel wrapped their kneading troughs in their semalot (Exod 12:34), Gideon's men spread a simlah to collect earrings (Judg 8:25), and David wrapped Goliath's sword in a cloth at Nob (1 Sam 21:10). Spanish en-la-tela ('in the cloth') and German in-der-Kleid ('in the garment') show the instrumental, non-clothing function of the same word. CLOTHING AND DRESS
en: garments, in-the-garment, the-garment | es: en-la-tela, la-sábana, vestidos | fr: dans-le-vêtement, le-vêtement, vêtements | de: Gewänder, der-Gewand, in-der-Kleid Gen 45:22; Deut 22:17; 1Sam 21:10

שַׂמְלָה H8072 N-proper-ms (4×)
Samlah; personal name of an Edomite king who reigned before Israel had kings
This is the name of one of the early kings of Edom listed in Genesis 36 and 1 Chronicles 1. The genealogical formula is typical: 'When [previous king] died, Samlah of Masrekah reigned in his place.' These Edomite kings reigned 'before any king reigned over the Israelites,' establishing them as part of the pre-monarchic period. The name Samlah is of uncertain etymology. The multilingual glosses show simple transliteration with minor phonetic adjustments (Spanish Samla/Samlah, French Samlah). This king is otherwise unknown —just a name in a list—yet the preservation of Edomite royal succession in Hebrew Scripture is remarkable, acknowledging the parallel political development of Israel's brother nation descended from Esau.

(4×) Personal name of an Edomite king from Masrekah who ruled before Israel's monarchy (Gen 36:36-37, 1 Chr 1:47-48). Part of the Edomite king list preserved in Genesis 36, documenting the political organization of Esau's descendants. The etymology is uncertain. His inclusion in Israelite scripture reflects acknowledgment of Edom's parallel national development—brothers descended from Isaac's twin sons, each building their own kingdoms in their respective territories. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Samlah | es: Samla, Samlah | fr: Samlah, [שמלה] | de: Samla, [שמלה] Gen 36:36; Gen 36:37; 1Chr 1:47; 1Chr 1:48

שַׁלְמַי H8073 N-proper-ms (1×)
Shamlai, head of a postexilic family of temple servants (Ketiv reading)
This represents the Ketiv (written text) form of a name appearing in the list of returning exiles. The Qere (spoken text) reads Salmai instead, showing the textual variation in this proper name. The individual headed a family of temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel. These temple servants performed auxiliary duties supporting the priests and Levites in temple operations. The parallel passage in Nehemiah also shows textual variation. Such variations in proper names across manuscripts and parallel passages are common in postexilic genealogical lists.

(1×) Personal name (Ketiv reading) of the head of a family of temple servants who returned from Babylonian exile, with the Qere suggesting the alternate vocalization Salmai. Ezra 2:46 lists him among the Nethinim: 'the sons of [Shamlai/Salmai].' The bracketed forms in French and German and Spanish's bracketing indicate the textual complexity. The Ketiv form 'Shamlai' may reflect an alternate dialect or scribal tradition, while the Qere 'Salmai' appears in some manuscripts. Both forms designate the same family head, whose descendants helped restore temple service after the exile. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY
en: [ketiv] | es: [Samlai] | fr: [שמלי] | de: [[שמלי]] Ezra 2:46

שָׁמַם H8074 V-Qal-Inf (86×)
To be desolate, lie in ruins; to be appalled, horrified; causative: to devastate, make desolate; as participle: desolator Few Hebrew roots carry such a powerful double charge as shamem. On one side stands physical desolation — cities reduced to rubble, farmland returned to wilderness, sanctuaries defiled and abandoned. On the other stands the visceral human response to such ruin: the horror, the stunned silence, the inability to process what the eyes behold. When the exiles in Ezra 9:3-4 hear of intermarriage, they sit 'appalled' — the same root that describes the land lying 'desolate' during the Sabbath years it was denied (Lev 26:34-35). Daniel's 'abomination of desolation' (Dan 9:27; 11:31; 12:11) fuses both poles: a devastator who causes devastation that produces horror. The root thus maps an entire emotional-physical landscape from cause to effect to response.

1. be desolate, lie waste (36×) The stative-intransitive sense of being desolate or lying waste — 36 occurrences describing land, cities, sanctuaries, and roads in a state of ruin or abandonment. Leviticus 26:22 warns that highways will become desolate; Isaiah 49:8 promises that desolate heritages will be restored. Arabic khariba ('to be ruined') and Korean hwangpyehan ('desolate') converge on this physical-geographical meaning. The Qal stative and Nifal passive forms dominate, depicting desolation as an enduring condition rather than an event. DESOLATION AND RUIN
en: And-will-be-desolated, and-shall-be-desolate, and-they-shall-be-desolate | es: Y-serán-asolados, Y-serán-desolados, desolaciones-de | fr: désolation, dévaster, et-dévaster | de: [ונשמו], [נשמו], [שוממים] Lev 26:22; Ps 69:25; Eccl 7:16; Isa 33:8; Isa 49:8

2. be appalled, be horrified (23×) The psychological sense of being appalled, horrified, or stunned — 23 occurrences where the focus shifts from ruined landscapes to shattered minds. Jeremiah 2:12 commands the heavens to 'be appalled' at Israel's apostasy; Ezra sat 'appalled' until the evening offering (Ezra 9:3-4). The Qal, Hitpael, and Hithpolel forms carry this emotional force. Arabic yadhhashu ('to be stunned') and Korean nollada ('to be shocked') confirm the affective-cognitive core. The link between physical ruin and psychological shock is the root's distinctive genius — to see desolation is to become desolate within. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: Be-appalled, and-I-was-appalled, and-shall-be-appalled | es: Asombraos, Se-asombrarán, Sean-asolados | fr: dévaster, et-dévaster, et-être-dévasté | de: [ישמו], [משומם], [נשמו] Lev 26:32; 1Kgs 9:8; 2Chr 7:21; Ezra 9:3; Ezra 9:4

3. make desolate, devastate (15×) The causative Hifil sense of making desolate or devastating — 15 occurrences where an active agent brings ruin upon a place or people. God will devastate Israel's high places (Lev 26:31), lay waste their sanctuaries (Lev 26:31), and desolate the land so that enemies marvel at it (Lev 26:32). The Moabite campaign narrative uses it for military devastation (Num 21:30), and Job laments that God has 'devastated' his entire circle (Job 16:7). Arabic akhraba and Swahili kuharibu capture the transitive destructive force. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: I-might-desolate-them, You-have-made-desolate, and-He-devastated-them | es: Y-asolaré, Y-desolaré, Y-devastaré | fr: dévaster, et-Il-devastated-eux, et-dévaster | de: [השמות], [והשמתי], der-sie-setzten Lev 26:31; Lev 26:32; Num 21:30; 1Sam 5:6; Job 16:7

4. desolator, devastator (5×) The agentive participial form used substantivally as 'desolator' or 'devastator' — five occurrences concentrated in Daniel's apocalyptic visions. The 'abomination that makes desolate' (Dan 9:27; 11:31; 12:11) and the question about 'the transgression that causes desolation' (Dan 8:13) employ the active Poel or Polel participle as a technical eschatological term. Spanish desolador and German Verwuester treat it as a true agent noun, while the Greek rendering bdelygma tes eremoseos in the Septuagint (and Jesus' citation in Matt 24:15) cemented this sense in Western theological vocabulary. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: desolating, the-desolator | es: desolador, desoladora, el-desolador | fr: dévaster | de: verwuestet-sein Dan 8:13; Dan 9:27; Dan 11:31; Dan 12:11

5. desolation, state of ruin (4×) The abstract nominal use via Hofal infinitive construct denoting the state or process of desolation itself — four occurrences, all clustered in the Sabbath-year theology of Leviticus 26:34-35, 43 and its echo in 2 Chronicles 36:21. The land 'enjoys its Sabbaths' during its desolation (beshammah), repaying the rest Israel denied it. Arabic al-kharabi ('the ruin') and Korean hwangpye-ui ('of desolation') reflect this nominal abstraction. The Chronicler explicitly links the seventy-year exile to this Levitical principle, making the infinitive a theological hinge between sin and restoration. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: in-being-desolate, the-desolation | es: en-su-desolación, la-desolación, su-desolación | fr: dans-étant-desolate, dévaster, le-desolation | de: der-Verwuestung, der-sein-Name, in-seiend-verwuestet Lev 26:34; Lev 26:35; Lev 26:43; 2Chr 36:21

6. cause horror, appall others (3×) The causative-psychological sense of making others appalled or causing horror — three rare occurrences where the Hifil applies not to physical devastation but to emotional shock. God will cause nations to be appalled at Israel's judgment (Ezek 32:10), Ezekiel himself sits stunned among the exiles (Ezek 3:15), and Job's friends should 'be appalled' and clap their hands over their mouths (Job 21:5). Arabic udhilu ('I cause to be stunned') and Korean nollage hada ('to cause to be startled') precisely mirror this causative-affective derivation, distinguishing it from the physical devastation of Sense 3. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: and-I-will-cause-to-be-appalled, and-be-appalled, stunned | es: Y-asombraré, atónito, y-asombraos | fr: de-cieux, et-dévaster | de: [והשמו], und-verwuestet-sein, von-Himmel Job 21:5; Ezek 3:15; Ezek 32:10

שְׁמַם H8075 V-Pual-Perf-3ms (1×)

was appalled, shocked, or stunned into silence (Aramaic)

This Aramaic verb in the Ethpôᶜal stem describes being appalled, shocked, or struck dumb with horror. It appears in Daniel's account of interpreting Nebuchadnezzar's tree dream, describing Daniel's reaction to understanding the dream's meaning. The reflexive/passive form emphasizes the overwhelming nature of the emotional response —Daniel didn't choose to be appalled; the revelation's horror struck him involuntarily. The root relates to desolation and devastation, so being 'appalled' carries connotations of stunned silence before something devastating. Daniel's appallment before announcing judgment on Nebuchadnezzar shows both his empathy and his recognition of the prophecy's gravity.

(1×) To be appalled, shocked, or stunned into silence, appearing as an Aramaic Ethpôᶜal perfect describing Daniel's reaction to understanding Nebuchadnezzar's dream. Daniel 4:19 narrates: 'Then Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, was appalled for a while, and his thoughts alarmed him.' The appallment wasn't mere surprise but profound horror at understanding the king would suffer divine judgment. The Spanish 'quedó-atónito' ('remained astonished') captures the stunned quality, while French 'désoler' emphasizes the desolation aspect. Daniel's visible distress, noticed by Nebuchadnezzar, reveals both his pastoral concern and his grasp of the prophecy's severity. AMAZEMENT AND ASTONISHMENT

en: was-appalled | es: quedó-atónito | fr: désoler | de: [אשתומם] Dan 4:19

שָׁמֵם H8076 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (6×)

Desolate, laid waste; describes a state of ruin or abandonment, used of land, sanctuaries, and persons left bereft.

A Qal participle of the root shamem, depicting something or someone in a condition of desolation and ruin. The word appears in contexts of both physical devastation and emotional abandonment. In Jeremiah 12:11, the land itself mourns because it lies desolate, while in Lamentations 1:13 and 3:11, the term describes a person left stunned and bereft. Spanish and French translations (desolada, désolation) reflect the same breadth, capturing both the geographical wasteland and the inner human devastation. The participial form lends an ongoing, descriptive quality – the desolation is not a single event but an enduring state.

desolate, laid waste (6×) Describing a condition of desolation, ruin, or abandonment, whether applied to places (sanctuaries, land) or persons left bereft and stunned. In 2 Samuel 13:20, Tamar remains 'desolate' in her brother's house – a personal devastation. In Jeremiah 12:11, the land lies desolate because no one takes it to heart. Multilingual evidence converges uniformly: Spanish desolada, French désolation, German Verwüstung all reflect the same semantic range of physical and emotional ruin. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: and-desolate, desolate, the-desolate | es: desolada, desolado, el-desolado | fr: [שמם], désolation, désolé | de: Oede, Verwuestung, [השמם] 2Sam 13:20; Jer 12:11; Lam 1:13; Lam 3:11; Ezek 36:4

שְׁמָמָה H8077a N-fs (57×)

Desolation, devastation, waste; concretely, desolate place(s) or ruin(s)

A noun expressing the condition and result of devastation, appearing prominently in the prophetic judgments of Jeremiah and Ezekiel. In its abstract sense, it names the state of being laid waste — cities emptied, land made barren, populations removed. Prophetic formulas like 'I will make this city a desolation' (שְׁמָמָה) recur dozens of times. In its concrete plural form, it denotes the actual ruined places themselves, as when Daniel prays over 'our desolations' (Dan 9:18). Spanish 'desolación' and French 'désolation' track the abstract sense faithfully, while plural forms shift to 'desolaciones/dévastation.'

1. desolation, waste (abstract state) (52×) The abstract state of devastation or waste (52x), used predicatively or in purpose clauses throughout the prophets. Lev 26:33 warns that the land will become a שְׁמָמָה, and Isa 6:11 envisions cities lying desolate. Ezekiel alone accounts for 18+ occurrences, often paired with מְשֹׁאָה for intensification (Ezek 35:7). The convergence of 'desolation/desolación/désolation/Oede' across translations confirms the abstract, stative reading as the dominant sense. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: a-desolation, desolate, desolation | es: Desolación, desolación, desolada | fr: désolation | de: Oede Lev 26:33; Josh 8:28; Isa 1:7; Isa 6:11

2. desolate place(s), ruin(s) (5×) Concrete desolate places or ruins (5x), typically in the plural construct, referring to specific devastated locations. Jeremiah speaks of Babylon's שְׁמָמוֹת as ruins that will never be rebuilt (Jer 51:26, 62), and Daniel prays with his eyes toward 'our desolations' — the visible rubble of Jerusalem (Dan 9:18). The Spanish plural 'desolaciones-de' and French plural forms signal the shift from abstract condition to tangible, nameable ruins on the landscape. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: desolations-of, for-desolations-of, our-desolations | es: Desolaciones-de, desolaciones, desolaciones-de-nosotros | fr: [שממות], [שממתינו], dévastation | de: Oede Jer 25:12; Jer 51:26; Jer 51:62; Ezek 35:9; Dan 9:18

שְׁמָמָה H8077b Prep-l / N-fs (1×)

desolation, a state of utter waste and ruin (with preposition)

This form combines the preposition 'to' or 'for' with the noun 'desolation,' creating a prepositional phrase indicating purpose or result. The term appears in Ezekiel's oracle against Edom, describing how God will make the nation a complete wasteland. Desolation in Ezekiel often describes the aftermath of divine judgment—land stripped of inhabitants, agriculture, and prosperity. The prepositional phrase 'to desolation' or 'for desolation' emphasizes that God's action has devastation as its goal or result. The root meaning suggests something stunned into silence, evoking both physical emptiness and emotional horror.

(1×) Prepositional phrase meaning 'to/for desolation,' describing the goal or result of God's judgment against Edom. Ezekiel 35:7 declares: 'I will make Mount Seir a desolation and a waste, and I will cut off from it all who come and go.' The phrase emphasizes the totality of the devastation—not partial destruction but complete desolation. The Spanish 'para-desolación' and French 'en-désolation' appropriately handle the prepositional construction. Edom's fate becomes a warning: those who rejoice at Israel's fall will themselves experience utter devastation, their land reduced to silent emptiness. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: desolate | es: para-desolación | fr: en-désolation | de: [לשממה] Ezek 35:7

שִׁמָּמוֹן H8078 Prep-b / N-ms (2×)

Horror, appalment; a state of dread or trembling anxiety

A noun meaning horror, appalment, or dread, appearing twice in Ezekiel's symbolic actions. In Ezekiel 4:16 and 12:19, the prophet is told that the people will eat bread and drink water 'in horror' or 'with trembling,' symbolizing the fear and anxiety that will accompany the siege of Jerusalem. The noun conveys not just fear but the physical and emotional state of being appalled—trembling, anxious, horrified. The multilingual glosses favor 'horror' or 'desolation,' and the repeated phrase 'with horror' emphasizes the psychological impact of impending judgment. This is the vocabulary of trauma, anticipating the terror of siege and exile.

(2×) Ezekiel's symbolic actions—eating and drinking 'with horror'—are prophetic theater, making the coming catastrophe visceral and immediate. The noun captures the emotional state of a people facing destruction: not just hunger, but horror-stricken hunger; not just thirst, but trembling, anxious thirst. The Spanish 'con horror' and French 'désolation' convey the atmosphere of dread, while the repetition in Ezekiel reinforces the motif. This is judgment internalized, the terror of siege transforming daily acts (eating, drinking) into exercises in dread. AMAZEMENT AND TRANCE

en: and-in-horror, with-horror | es: con-horror, y-con-horror | fr: désolation, et-désolation | de: [בשממון], [ובשממון] Ezek 4:16; Ezek 12:19

שְׁמָמִית H8079 N-fs (1×)

lizard, a small reptile that can be caught by hand despite living in palaces

This term denotes a type of lizard, likely the gecko or a similar small reptile. Proverbs uses it as an example of a small creature that achieves what seems beyond its station—though tiny and catchable by hand, it inhabits royal palaces. Ancient versions (Greek, Vulgate, Targum) consistently identify it as a lizard species. The exact species remains debated, but the point is clear: size doesn't determine sphere of influence. This lizard's ability to access places of power despite its vulnerability and insignificance illustrates wisdom's unexpected nature. Small creatures often demonstrate remarkable capabilities that humans might learn from.

(1×) A type of lizard, possibly a gecko, appearing in Proverbs' collection of small but wise creatures. Proverbs 30:28 observes: 'the lizard you can take in your hands, yet it is in kings' palaces.' The paradox highlights wisdom's unexpected nature—this vulnerable creature, easily caught, gains access to the most secure and prestigious locations. The Spanish 'Lagartija' (small lizard) appropriately identifies the creature, while the bracketed forms in French and German indicate translation uncertainty. The observation invites reflection: if such a small reptile can dwell with kings, what might humble humans achieve through wisdom and persistence? CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: a-lizard | es: Lagartija | fr: שממית | de: [שממית] Prov 30:28

שָׁמַן H8080 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3mp (5×)

To grow fat, become prosperous; in Hiphil, to make fat or dull

This verb captures the physical and metaphorical dimensions of fatness in Hebrew thought. In the Qal stem, it describes Israel growing fat and rebellious under God's blessing (Deut 32:15), or the wicked growing sleek and complacent (Jer 5:28). The Hiphil carries a causative sense: in Nehemiah 9:25 the people 'grew fat' through abundance, while in Isaiah 6:10 God commands the prophet to 'make fat' — that is, to render dull and unreceptive — the heart of the people. Spanish 'engordarse' and English 'grew fat' both preserve the concrete imagery behind the theological metaphor.

(5×) To grow fat, become prosperous and complacent — used of Israel under divine blessing turning to arrogance. Deuteronomy 32:15 pairs the Qal perfect and imperfect to depict Jeshurun fattening like a beast and then kicking against God. Jeremiah 5:28 extends the image to the wicked who grow sleek. Spanish 'engordaste/se engordaron' and English 'grew fat' faithfully convey the concrete-to-metaphorical movement. In the Hiphil (Isa 6:10), the sense shifts to 'make dull, make unreceptive,' where fatness of heart signals spiritual imperviousness. FATNESS AND RICHNESS

en: and-grew-fat, and-they-grew-fat, make-fat | es: Engorda, Se-engordaron, engordaste | fr: [השמן], [וישמינו], [שמנו] | de: [השמן], [וישמינו], [שמנו] Deut 32:15; Neh 9:25; Isa 6:10; Jer 5:28

שֶׁמֶן H8081 Prep-b / N-msc (193×)

Oil, fat, ointment; primarily olive oil for anointing, offerings, cooking, and lighting, but also fatness/fertility and perfumed cosmetic oil.

Shemen is the liquid gold of ancient Israel's economy and worship. Jacob pours it on the stone at Bethel (Gen 28:18), priests mix it into grain offerings (Lev 2:1), and lamps burn it nightly in the tabernacle (Exod 25:6). Yet the word stretches well beyond the olive press. Isaiah uses it figuratively for the rich fatness of a fertile hillside (Isa 5:1) and the lavish banquet foods of the messianic feast (Isa 25:6). In Song of Solomon the plural shemanim becomes fragrant perfumed ointment—'your oils are pleasing' (Song 1:3)—a luxury cosmetic far removed from kitchen oil. Spanish splits the difference neatly between 'aceite' (cooking/ritual oil) and 'ungüentos' (ointments), while German consistently uses 'Öl' for both.

1. oil (substance) (180×) Olive oil as a physical substance: The dominant sense covering nearly all occurrences—liquid pressed from olives, used for anointing kings and priests (1 Sam 16:13), mixing into cereal offerings (Lev 2:1–2), fueling lamps (Exod 25:6), and cooking. The material is so central to Israelite life that shemen appears in nearly every genre of Scripture. Spanish 'aceite' and French 'huile' both derive from Latin oleum (olive), and the consistent German 'Öl' confirms how universally translators map this to the core meaning of pressed olive oil. OLIVE OIL

en: with-oil, with-the-oil | es: con-aceite, con-el-aceite | fr: avec-huile, avec-le-huile | de: mit-Oel, mit-der-Oel Gen 28:18; Gen 35:14; Exod 25:6; Exod 29:2

2. fatness, richness (6×) Fatness, richness, fertility: A figurative extension where shemen denotes lush abundance rather than a literal liquid. Isaiah 5:1 describes a vineyard on a 'horn of oil'—a richly fertile slope. Isaiah 25:6 promises a feast of 'fat things full of marrow,' doubling shemen for emphasis. The Psalmist's flesh 'wastes away from oil' (Ps 109:24), meaning his body has lost all its healthy fat. Spanish 'fertilidad' (fertility) and 'manjares' (delicacies) show translators reaching for the metaphorical referent rather than the substance itself. OLIVE OIL

en: like-the-first-ripe-fig, of-rich-foods, of-those-overcome | es: fertilidad, frondoso, manjares | fr: de-huile, huile | de: Oel, ohne-Öl Ps 109:24; Isa 5:1; Isa 25:6; Isa 28:1

3. (4×) Olive wood (as material): In 1 Kings 6:23, 31–33, shemen designates the wood of the olive tree rather than its oil—the cherubim and doors of the inner sanctuary are carved from 'ets shemen' (oil-tree wood). English 'olive,' Spanish 'olivo,' and French 'olivier' all translate the tree rather than its product. This metonymic sense—naming the tree by its most valued product—occurs only in Solomon's temple construction narrative and represents a genuine semantic extension from liquid to arboreal source. OLIVE TREES

en: olive | es: olivo | fr: olivier | de: Olive 1Kgs 6:23; 1Kgs 6:31; 1Kgs 6:32; 1Kgs 6:33

4. ointment, perfumed oil (3×) Perfumed ointment or cosmetic oil: Fragrant oil blended with spices for use as a luxury cosmetic or personal perfume. Song of Solomon 1:3 praises the beloved's 'oils' (shemanim, plural) as sweeter than any fragrance, and 4:10 compares them to costly spices. Amos 6:6 condemns the idle rich who anoint themselves with the 'finest oils.' Spanish 'ungüentos' (ointments) explicitly distinguishes this aromatic preparation from plain 'aceite,' and the Hebrew plural form itself signals a marked, specialized use distinct from everyday oil. OLIVE OIL

en: oils, your-oils | es: los-aceites, tus-ungüentos | fr: de-tes-huiles, huile, tes-huiles | de: Oel Song 1:3; Song 4:10; Amos 6:6

שָׁמֵן H8082 Adj-ms (10×)

Fat, rich, fertile; describing productive land, sumptuous food, or robust well-fed persons and animals.

A sensory adjective evoking abundance and vitality across the physical world. Jacob blesses Asher with 'rich food' from his territory (Gen 49:20), the spies report that Canaan's soil is 'fat' (Num 13:20), and Ezekiel envisions God shepherding both the 'fat and the strong' of his flock (34:16). Hindi 'upjau' (fertile) and Spanish 'fertil' clearly mark the agricultural sense, while Spanish 'robusto' and Hindi 'hrisht pusht' (hale and hearty) distinguish the bodily sense. The word carries no negative connotation – fatness is always blessing here.

1. fat, fertile (of land/soil) (6×) Fatness or fertility of land, soil, and pasture – describing ground that is rich, productive, and yielding. Spanish 'fertil' and Hindi 'upjau' directly convey agricultural productivity. The spies' report on Canaan (Num 13:20), Nehemiah's recollection of the promised land (Neh 9:25, 35), the Simeonite settlement at Gedor (1 Chr 4:40), and Isaiah's promise of rich pasture (30:23) all attest this dominant sense. FATNESS AND RICHNESS

en: and-the-fat, fat, shall-graze | es: fértil, graso, y-abundante | fr: [והשמנה], et-huile, graisse | de: [והשמנה], [ושמן], [שמן] Num 13:20; 1Chr 4:40; Neh 9:25; Neh 9:35; Isa 30:23

2. rich, sumptuous (of food/substance) (2×) Richness or sumptuousness of food and consumable substances – describing what is greasy, oily, or luxuriously abundant to eat. Jacob's blessing on Asher – 'his food shall be rich' (Gen 49:20) – is the foundational example. Habakkuk 1:16 uses it for the Chaldeans' 'fat' portion from their conquests. Spanish 'grasoso' (greasy) and French 'riche/gras' distinguish this culinary sense from agricultural fertility. FATNESS AND RICHNESS

en: fat, rich | es: es-grasa, grasoso | fr: gras, riche | de: [שמן], fett Gen 49:20; Hab 1:16

3. fat, robust (of animals/persons) (2×) Physical fatness or robustness of living creatures – well-fed, fleshy, and strong in body. Judges 3:29 describes the ten thousand Moabites slain as 'robust' men of valor. Ezekiel 34:16 uses it for the 'fat' sheep God will watch over. Spanish 'robusto' and Hindi 'hrisht pusht' (hale and hearty) capture the sense of vigorous bodily health rather than mere abundance of food or soil. FATNESS AND RICHNESS

en: robust, the-fat | es: la-gorda, robusto | fr: [השמנה], robust | de: [השמנה], robust Judg 3:29; Ezek 34:16

שְׁמֹנֶה H8083 Conj-w / Number-fs (109×)

Eight (cardinal number); used independently and in compound numerals like eighteen and eighty Shemoneh is the cardinal number eight in Hebrew, appearing in both masculine (שְׁמֹנָה) and feminine (שְׁמֹנֶה) forms according to the grammatical gender of the noun it modifies. It frequently occurs in genealogical records (Gen 5:4, 7, 10), measurements, and compound numbers such as eighteen (שְׁמֹנָה עָשָׂר). The cognate form shemonim yields 'eighty.' Cross-linguistically, translations render it straightforwardly — Spanish 'ocho,' French 'huit,' German 'acht' — sometimes prefixed with 'and' in construct chains typical of Hebrew numerical syntax.

eight (cardinal number) (109×) The cardinal number eight, used for counting, measuring, and dating across narrative, legal, and genealogical texts. Appears in the patriarchal age formulas of Genesis 5 (e.g., Gen 5:4, 'eight hundred years'), in compound numerals like eighteen, and in specifications of quantities (1 Sam 17:12, 'eight sons'). The masculine/feminine alternation follows standard Hebrew numeral agreement rules, with no semantic distinction between the forms. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: and-eight, and-eight-of | es: y-ocho, y-ocho-mil, y-ochocientos | fr: et-huit | de: und-acht Gen 5:4; Gen 5:7; Gen 5:10; Gen 5:13; Gen 5:16

שְׁמֹנִים H8084 Number-cp (38×)

eighty — the cardinal numeral used in ages, census counts, measurements, and chronological reckonings

Shemonim is the indeclinable plural numeral for eighty, occurring 38 times across narrative, law, poetry, and chronicle. It marks patriarchal longevity — Methuselah lived 187 years, having fathered Lamech at 'one hundred and eighty-two' (Gen 5:25-26) — and the span of robust old age in Psalm 90:10: 'the days of our years are seventy, and if by strength, eighty.' It counts fighting men (2 Chr 26:17: 'eighty priests of Yahweh'), temple singers (1 Chr 25:7), and the grim toll of assassination (Jer 41:5: 'eighty men from Shechem, Shiloh, and Samaria'). In Solomon's chronology, the temple's construction began 'in the four hundred and eightieth year' after the exodus (1 Kgs 6:1), a number laden with typological significance.

Eighty (cardinal numeral) (38×) The cardinal numeral 'eighty,' an indeclinable plural form used throughout the Hebrew Bible in age formulas (Gen 5:25-26, 28; 16:16; 35:28; Exod 7:7; Ps 90:10), military and census counts (2 Kgs 10:24; Jer 41:5; 2 Chr 26:17), chronological reckonings (1 Kgs 6:1; Judg 3:30), and enumerations of persons or concubines (Song 6:8; Ezra 8:8; 1 Chr 15:9). Typically modifies a singular noun (shanah, 'year') or stands alone. French 'quatre-vingts' (four-twenties) reveals that the vigesimal numeral system persists in some translation traditions, while Spanish 'ochenta' and German 'achtzig' follow decimal convention. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: and-eighty, eighty | es: ochenta, y-ochenta | fr: [ושמנים], et-quatre-vingts, quatre-vingts | de: [ושמנים], achtzig, und-achtzig Gen 5:25; Gen 5:26; Gen 5:28; Gen 16:16; Gen 35:28

שָׁמַע H8085 Art / V-Nifal-Prtcpl-fs (1165×)

To hear, listen, heed, obey; in Hifil: cause to hear, proclaim; in Niphal: be heard

The verb shama (שָׁמַע) encodes a progression from passive perception to active obedience that is central to biblical theology. Occurring over 1,150 times, it moves from simply hearing a sound, to deliberately listening, to obeying what is heard — a spectrum that the famous Shema prayer (Deut 6:4) exploits brilliantly, since 'Hear, O Israel' simultaneously demands auditory attention, intellectual understanding, and covenantal obedience. The Hifil causative adds the dimension of proclamation, while the Niphal passive captures sounds and reputations that 'are heard' without a named agent.

1. Qal: hear, perceive aurally (921×) Basic auditory perception in the Qal: the ear receives sound without implied volition. Arabic سَمِعَ (samiʿa) and cognates across Semitic languages confirm this as the unmarked root meaning. Dominant at 921 occurrences — Lamech says 'hear my voice' (Gen 4:23), and prophetic reception is described as simply hearing (Num 12:6). HEARING AND HEEDING en: Hear, hear, hear- | es: Escuchad, Oíd, escuchad | fr: entendre, entends, entends- | de: hoere, hoere-, hoeren Gen 4:23; Num 12:6; Judg 9:7; 1Sam 22:7; 2Sam 20:16

2. Qal: listen, heed, pay attention (172×) Volitional, attentive listening — hearing directed by intention. Imperative forms carry this force: 'Hear now, you rebels' (Num 20:10). Arabic سَمِعْ in imperative demands directed attention; Korean 들으라 shifts similarly. Balaam's command 'Rise up, Balak, and listen' (Num 23:18) and the Shema formula (Deut 6:4) exemplify this sense. HEARING AND HEEDING en: hear, hear-, to-hear | es: Escucha, Escucha-, Oye | fr: entendre, à-entends | de: hoeren, hörte, hörte- Exod 23:21; Num 23:18; Deut 5:27; Deut 12:28; Deut 27:9

3. Hifil: cause to hear, proclaim, announce (28×) Hifil causative: to cause someone to hear, proclaim publicly. Arabic Form IV أَسْمَعَ ('to make hear') parallels the morphology; Spanish hacer oír and French faire entendre confirm the causative reading. God caused Israel to hear at Sinai (Deut 4:10); Levitical musicians 'caused to be heard' in worship (1 Chr 15:16, 15:28). HEARING AND HEEDING en: I-caused-you-to-hear, I-have-caused-you-to-hear, and-I-caused-them-to-be-heard | es: Te-hice-oír, el-que-hace-oír, hacer-oír | fr: entendre, et-entendre, fais-moi-entendre | de: hoeren, hoerte, lass-mich-hören Deut 4:10; 1Chr 15:16; 1Chr 15:19; 1Chr 15:28; 1Chr 16:5

4. Niphal: be heard (passive) (23×) Niphal passive: to be heard, become audible without a specified agent. Arabic passive سُمِعَ ('was heard') maps precisely. Joseph's report 'was heard in Pharaoh's house' (Gen 45:16), no hammer 'was heard in the temple' during construction (1 Kgs 6:7), and Israel's prayer 'was heard' in heaven (2 Chr 30:27). HEARING AND HEEDING en: Let-be-heard, and-was-heard, and-were-heard | es: Se-oiga, Y-fueron-oídas, Y-será-oído | fr: entendre, et-furent-entendit, et-écouter | de: du-wirst-hoeren, er-hoert, hoeren Gen 45:16; Deut 4:32; 1Sam 17:31; 1Kgs 6:7; 2Chr 30:27

5. Qal: obey, submit, comply (18×) Obedience and compliance — hearing that results in conforming action. Spanish distinctively uses obedecer rather than oír or escuchar, providing clear multilingual evidence for a separate sense. Joseph's brothers confess 'we did not obey' (Gen 42:21-22), and the Deuteronomic formula 'if you will obey my voice' (Deut 26:14) makes obedience the expected outcome of hearing. HEARING AND HEEDING en: I-have-listened, I-listened, I-obeyed | es: He-escuchado, Y-obedecimos, escuchamos | fr: entendre, et-entendre, et-tu-avoir-obéit | de: du-listened, hörte, hörten-wir Gen 42:21; Gen 42:22; Deut 1:43; Deut 26:14; Josh 1:17

6. (2×) Two occurrences (1 Sam 15:4, 23:8) where Saul 'summoned' the people — likely a specialized Hifil or Piel usage meaning 'to call together, muster.' Spanish convocó and English summoned diverge from all hearing-related glosses, suggesting a military-administrative extension: to cause people to hear a summons and thereby assemble. The mustering context in both passages supports this distinct sense. SUMMON CALL TOGETHER
en: and-he-summoned | es: Y-convocó, y-convocó | fr: et-il-summoned | de: und-er-summoned 1Sam 15:4; 1Sam 23:8

7. (1×) A single occurrence at Gen 11:7 in the Tower of Babel narrative: 'that they may not understand one another's speech.' Here shama means not merely to hear but to comprehend — the confusion of languages means they will hear sounds but not grasp meaning. German verstehen ('to understand') in the glosses confirms this cognitive-comprehension extension beyond bare auditory perception. HEARING AND HEEDING en: they-will-hear | es: oigan | fr: ils—entendre | de: sie-verstehen Gen 11:7

שְׁמַע H8086 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (9×)

Aramaic: to hear, perceive by listening; in Hitpael, to obey or show oneself submissive to authority

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew shama, appearing exclusively in the book of Daniel. In the Pe'al stem it covers the full range of auditory perception: hearing the sound of horn, pipe, and lyre as the signal to worship Nebuchadnezzar's golden image (Dan 3:5, 7, 10, 15), and hearing a report about someone's abilities (Dan 5:14, 16; 6:15). The Hitpael reflexive in Dan 7:27 extends hearing into obedience – 'all dominions shall serve and obey him' – where hearing becomes active submission. Spanish 'oír/obedecer' and German 'horen' both trace the same semantic arc from ear to will that is universal across Semitic languages.

1. hear, listen (8×) Pe'al: to hear, listen, or perceive auditorily. Used of hearing musical instruments as a signal (Dan 3:5, 7, 10, 15), hearing spoken reports (Dan 5:14, 16), and hearing news (Dan 6:15). French 'entendre' and Spanish 'oír/oigáis' both convey straightforward auditory reception. The contexts in Daniel 3 are particularly vivid, where hearing the orchestra triggers the command to prostrate before the image. HEARING AND HEEDING en: and-I-have-heard, have-heard, he-heard | es: he-oído, oiga, oigáis | fr: entendre, et-entendre, il-a-entendu | de: hoeren, hoerte, und-hoeren Dan 3:5; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:10; Dan 3:15; Dan 5:14

2. obey, be obedient (1×) Hitpael reflexive-intensive: to show oneself obedient, to submit to authority. In Dan 7:27, all dominions 'shall obey' the people of the Most High – hearing internalized as willing compliance. Spanish 'obedecerán' makes the shift from perception to submission explicit. This semantic development from 'hear' to 'obey' is deeply rooted across all Semitic languages, reflecting the ancient understanding that truly hearing implies responding. HEARING AND HEEDING en: and-obey | es: y-obedecerán | fr: et-entendre | de: und-hoeren Dan 7:27

שִׁמְעִי H8087 N-proper-ms (5×)

Shema; a personal name meaning 'hearing, report,' borne by several Israelites

Shema is a proper name derived from the root שׁמע ('to hear') and appears across several tribal genealogies. One Shema belongs to the tribe of Judah as a descendant of Caleb (1 Chr 2:43-44), another to Reuben (1 Chr 5:8), and a third to Benjamin (1 Chr 8:13, possibly identical with Shimei in v. 21). A post-exilic Shema stands beside Ezra during the public Torah reading (Neh 8:4). The LXX renders the name variously as Σαμα or Σαμαα.

(5×) A proper masculine name meaning 'hearing' or 'report,' borne by multiple individuals across Judah, Reuben, Benjamin, and the post-exilic community. The Judahite Shema descends from Caleb (1 Chr 2:43-44), while the Nehemiah 8:4 bearer stands as a public figure alongside Ezra. German glosses render the name phonetically as 'hoerte' (heard), reflecting the verbal root. Spanish 'Sema' and French 'Schéma' preserve the Septuagintal Σαμα tradition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shema, and-Shema | es: Sema, Y-Sema, y-Sema | fr: Schéma, et-Schéma | de: hoerte, und-hoerte 1Chr 2:43; 1Chr 2:44; 1Chr 5:8; 1Chr 8:13; Neh 8:4

שֶׁמַע H8088a N-ms (1×)

sound, noise, or resounding quality (in worship context)

This noun denotes sound or resonance, appearing in Psalm 150's crescendo of praise. The context pairs it with 'cymbals of sound' parallel to 'cymbals of shouting,' suggesting either resounding or ringing quality. The term comes from the root 'to hear,' so it describes audible quality—something meant to be heard. In worship, such sound carried meaning beyond mere noise; it proclaimed God's glory. The psalm's climactic call to praise Him with instruments that produce sound reflects Israel's theology that creation's purpose is to make God's glory audible, filling heaven and earth with praise.

(1×) Sound or resonance, especially in the context of worship with percussion instruments. Psalm 150:5 commands: 'Praise him with sounding cymbals; praise him with loud clashing cymbals.' The word 'sound' (shama) modifies 'cymbals,' suggesting instruments of clear, ringing tone, parallel to those of 'shouting' or 'loud clashing.' The Spanish 'sonido,' French 'entendre' (hear), and German 'Klang' (sound) all engage with the auditory quality. The worship context shows sound isn't mere noise but meaningful proclamation, the physical vibration that carries forth praise of the Creator throughout the cosmos. HEARING AND HEEDING en: sound | es: sonido | fr: entendre | de: Klang Ps 150:5

שֶׁמַע H8088b N-msc (17×)

Report, fame, or the act of hearing; what is heard about a person, news that arrives, or the moment of perceiving by ear

Shema' occupies the space between what is said about someone and how it reaches the listener. When the Queen of Sheba heard Solomon's fame (1 Kgs 10:1), shema' denoted reputation spreading across borders — a sense confirmed by Arabic 'ṣīt' (reputation) and Hindi 'प्रसिद्धि' (fame). But shema' also serves as plain 'news' or 'tidings,' as when Laban heard the report about Jacob (Gen 29:13) or Pharaoh heard of Jerusalem's resistance (Jer 37:5). In its most abstract use, Job declares 'by the hearing of the ear I had heard of you' (Job 42:5), where shema' is the very act and faculty of perception.

1. fame, renown, reputation (7×) Fame, renown, or public reputation — what is widely spoken and known about a person or nation. Numbers 14:15 warns that the nations have heard God's fame; 1 Kings 10:1 records the Queen of Sheba responding to Solomon's shema'. Deuteronomy 2:25 promises that God will spread Israel's reputation. Arabic 'ṣīt,' Hindi 'प्रसिद्धि,' and Spanish 'fama' all confirm the reputational sense. NEWS AND MESSAGES
en: my-fame, report-of, the-report-of | es: fama-de, mi-fama, noticia-tuya | fr: [שמע], [שמע], report-de | de: [שמעך], dein-Bericht, hoere Num 14:15; Deut 2:25; 1Kgs 10:1; 2Chr 9:1; Isa 66:19

2. report, news, tidings (6×) A report, piece of news, or tidings conveyed to someone — factual information about events or persons. Genesis 29:13 uses it for Laban hearing the tidings of Jacob's arrival; Exodus 23:1 forbids carrying a false report; Isaiah 23:5 describes the anguish when the report of Tyre reaches Egypt. Spanish 'noticia/informe' and German 'Kunde' (tidings) capture this informational sense. NEWS AND MESSAGES
en: its-report, report, report-of | es: el-informe, fama-de-ellos, noticia-de | fr: [שמע], [שמעם], report-de | de: [שמעה], [שמעם], die-Kunde Gen 29:13; Exod 23:1; Job 28:22; Isa 23:5; Jer 37:5

3. act of hearing, upon hearing (4×) The act or faculty of hearing itself, or the moment of perceiving something by ear. In Job 42:5 — 'by the hearing of the ear I had heard of you' — shema' denotes auditory perception rather than content. Psalm 18:44 uses it with a preposition to mean 'at the hearing of,' i.e., as soon as they hear. This abstract sense appears with prepositions ke- and le- that foreground the temporal or instrumental aspect of hearing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: By-hearing-of-, according-to-report, at-hearing-of | es: De-oída-de-, al-informe-de, al-oír | fr: [כשמע], à-entendre, à-לשמע | de: [כשמע], bei-hearing-von, zu-hoerte Job 42:5; Ps 18:44; Isa 23:5; Hos 7:12

שֹׁמַע H8089 N-msc / 3ms (4×)

report, fame; news or reputation that spreads about someone or something, especially concerning notable deeds

This noun refers to a report or fame that spreads abroad about someone. Joshua 6:27 says 'his fame spread throughout the land' after Jericho fell. Joshua 9:9 has the Gibeonites claim they came 'because of the fame of the LORD your God.' Esther 9:4 notes that Mordecai's fame spread through all the provinces as his power grew. Jeremiah 6:24 describes hearing the report of an enemy and hands going limp in fear. The multilingual glosses (Spanish fama 'fame', French fame/renommée, German Bericht 'report') capture both the factual report and its result in widespread reputation. This is news that travels, building someone's reputation—whether for God's mighty acts, Joshua's victories, or Mordecai's power.

(4×) A report or fame that spreads concerning someone's deeds or power. Joshua's fame went through the land after Jericho (Josh 6:27); the Gibeonites came because of the LORD's fame (Josh 9:9). Mordecai's fame spread through provinces (Esth 9:4). Jeremiah 6:24 uses it of an alarming report causing fear. The term captures both the transmission of news and the resulting reputation—information that moves from person to person, building or confirming someone's renown. NEWS AND MESSAGES en: and-his-fame, his-fame, his-report | es: su-fama, y-su-fama | fr: [ושמעו], [שמעו], son-fame | de: hoert, sein-Bericht, sein-fame Josh 6:27; Josh 9:9; Esth 9:4; Jer 6:24

שִׁמְעָם H8090 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Shema, a town in the southern territory of Judah

Shema designates a town in the southern extremity of Judah's tribal allotment, near the Edomite border. It appears in Joshua's comprehensive list of Judah's towns, organized by geographical regions. The location remains uncertain, with some suggesting identification with sites in the Negev region. The name possibly means 'hearing' or 'fame,' sharing a root with the famous Shema prayer. Like many southern Judean towns, it likely served as a defensive outpost guarding against incursions from the south. The town's placement in the biblical list preserves its role in defining Judah's borders even if its exact location is now lost.

(1×) Geographical name (with conjunction) of a town in southern Judah near the Edomite border. Joshua 15:26 lists it in sequence with other southern towns: 'Amam, and Shema, and Moladah.' The conjunction connects it to surrounding settlements in this southern district. The Septuagint forms (Sa(l)ma(a)) show typical variation in Greek transliteration of Hebrew place names. The Spanish 'y-Sema' and French 'et-Shema' preserve both the conjunction and proper name. Though its precise location remains uncertain, the town's appearance in Judah's territorial definition establishes it as part of Israel's southern frontier. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-Shema | es: y-Sema | fr: et-Shema | de: und-Shema Josh 15:26

שָׁמָע H8091 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shama, one of David's elite warriors

Shama was one of David's mighty men, the elite warriors who formed his inner circle. He appears in Chronicles' roster of the mighty men as the son of Hotham the Aroerite. While we know little about his specific exploits, his inclusion in this exclusive list marks him as a warrior of extraordinary courage and skill. These mighty men accomplished remarkable feats and remained loyal to David through years of adversity and triumph. The name Shama means 'he has heard,' possibly indicating his parents' sense that God had heard their prayers at his birth.

(1×) Personal name of one of David's mighty warriors in the Chronicles' account. First Chronicles 11:44 lists him in sequence with other elite soldiers: 'Uzzia the Ashterathite, Shama and Jeiel the sons of Hotham the Aroerite.' His father's identification as 'the Aroerite' suggests origin from Aroer, possibly the town on the Arnon River in Transjordan. The German translation 'hoerte' ('heard') takes the name as a verb form rather than a proper noun, while Spanish 'Sama' and the bracketed French and German forms reflect translation uncertainty. His place among the mighty men establishes his status as one of Israel's greatest warriors. SHAMMAH PERSONAL NAME
en: Shama | es: Sama | fr: [שמע] | de: hoerte 1Chr 11:44

שִׁמְעָא H8092 N-proper-ms (5×)

Shimea; a personal name, variant of Shammah, borne by relatives of David and by Levites

Shimea is a variant form of the better-known name Shammah, itself derived from the root שׁמע. The most prominent bearer is David's brother, the third son of Jesse (1 Chr 2:13), who appears under the forms Shammah (1 Sam 16:9; 17:13), Shimeah (2 Sam 13:3, 32), and Shimea (2 Sam 21:21 Qere). A son of David also bears this name (1 Chr 3:5), as do two Levites in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles 6. The LXX reflects multiple Greek spellings including Σεμεει, Σαμαα, and Σομεα.

(5×) A proper masculine name functioning as a variant of Shammah/Shimeah, rooted in שׁמע ('to hear'). David's brother appears under this form in 1 Chronicles 2:13 and 20:7 (Qere), while the Ketiv reads שׁמעי. A Davidic son also bears the name (1 Chr 3:5, = Shammua). Two Levites in 1 Chronicles 6:30, 39 round out the attestations. Spanish 'Simea' and German 'Schema' both attempt to transliterate the underlying Hebrew. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6395 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Shim'a, Shimea, and-Shim'a | es: Shima, Simea, y-Simea | fr: [וְשִׁמְעָא], [שִׁמְעָא] | de: Schema, und-Schema 1Chr 2:13; 1Chr 3:5; 1Chr 6:30; 1Chr 6:39; 1Chr 20:7

שִׁמְעָא H8093 N-proper-ms (3×)

Shimeah (personal name: brother of David and others)

Shimeah is a personal name appearing in various forms (Shimea, Shammah, Shammua) across biblical genealogies and narratives. Most notably, he was David's brother, the third son of Jesse (1 Chronicles 2:13), called Shammah in 1 Samuel 16:9 and 17:13. The name also applies to one of David's sons born in Jerusalem (1 Chronicles 3:5, parallel to Shammua in the Samuel account) and to several Levites (1 Chronicles 6:15, 24). The Greek versions show typical consonantal variation (Samaa, Semeei), reflecting the fluidity of name forms in ancient transmission.

(3×) Personal name of David's older brother and several other Israelites. 2 Samuel 13:3, 32 identify Shimeah as David's brother and Jonadab's father (the Ketiv reads 'Shimei,' but Qere corrects to 'Shimea'). 2 Samuel 21:21 again names him as David's brother, father of Jonathan who killed a Philistine giant. The name marks a family line connecting back to Jesse and forward through David's nephews who became warriors in his army. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6395 WITH 3 SENSES

en: Shimeah | es: (Shimah), Shimá | fr: Shimeah | de: Shimeah 2Sam 13:3; 2Sam 13:32; 2Sam 21:21

שִׁמְעָה H8094 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shemaah, father of warriors who joined David at Ziklag

Shemaah (also spelled Hashmaaah with the article) was from Gibeah and father of two warriors—Ahiezer and Joash—who joined David at Ziklag during his fugitive years. These men came from Benjamin, Saul's own tribe, yet defected to David while Saul still held the throne—a testimony to David's emerging legitimacy even among Benjamites. The sons of Shemaah were ambidextrous archers and slingers, skilled warriors who significantly strengthened David's forces. That Benjamites from Gibeah (Saul's hometown) would join David underscores the divine inevitability of David's kingship. The name likely means 'the LORD has heard.'

(1×) Personal name (with definite article) of a Benjamite from Gibeah whose sons Ahiezer and Joash joined David's forces at Ziklag. First Chronicles 12:3 introduces them: 'The chief was Ahiezer, then Joash, the sons of Shemaah the Gibeahite.' The definite article 'the Shemaah' may indicate he was well-known or distinguished in Gibeah. The bracketed forms in French and German indicate translation uncertainty. His sons' defection from Saul to David—particularly striking since they were Benjamites from Saul's own city—signals that even Saul's tribe recognized David as God's chosen, undermining Saul's legitimacy among his own people. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shemaah | es: Semaá | fr: [הַשִּׁמְעָה] | de: [הַשִּׁמְעָה] 1Chr 12:3

שִׁמְעוֹן H8095 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (44×)

Simeon — second son of Jacob and Leah; the Israelite tribe descended from him

Shimon is a theophoric name linked to the verb shama ('to hear'), based on Leah's declaration at his birth: 'Because YHWH has heard that I am hated, he has given me this son also' (Gen 29:33). Of the 44 occurrences, the name spans the patriarch himself, the tribe that bore his name, and its territorial allotments in the south absorbed into Judah. Simeon is often paired with Levi in both blessing and rebuke — Jacob's deathbed oracle censures both for the massacre at Shechem (Gen 34:25; 49:5-7). The Septuagint renders it Sumeon, and modern languages show minimal variation: Spanish 'Simeon,' French 'Simeon,' German 'Simeon.'

Simeon (proper name) (44×) The name Shimon, from shama ('to hear'), designating Jacob's second son (Gen 29:33), the tribe descended from him, and its territory absorbed into Judah (Josh 19:1-9). Often paired with Levi in rebuke for the Shechem massacre (Gen 34:25; 49:5-7). The Septuagint's Sumeon preserves the etymology. SIMEON PERSONAL NAME

en: Simeon | es: Shimon, Shimón, Simeón | fr: Siméon | de: Simeon, Simeons Gen 29:33; Gen 34:25; Gen 34:30; Gen 35:23; Gen 42:24

שִׁמְעִי H8096 N-proper-ms (44×)

Shimei — a Benjaminite who cursed David, plus several Levites, officials, and other biblical figures

Shimi (also Shimei) is a proper name meaning 'renowned' or 'my fame,' derived from the root shm' or shem. It appears 44 times referring to at least ten distinct individuals. The most memorable is Shimei son of Gera, the Benjaminite who pelted David with stones and curses during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 16:5-13) and whose eventual execution Solomon ordered (1 Kgs 2:8-46). Other bearers include a Gershonite Levite (Exod 6:17; Num 3:18), one of David's administrators (1 Chr 27:27), and Mordecai's ancestor (Esth 2:5). The Septuagint renders most occurrences as Semei, and cross-linguistic glosses — Spanish 'Shimei,' German 'Simei' — reflect consistent proper-noun treatment.

Shimei (proper name) (44×) The name Shimi/Shimei, borne by about ten individuals. Most prominent is Shimei son of Gera, whose cursing of David (2 Sam 16:5-13) and execution under Solomon (1 Kgs 2:36-46) form a memorable arc. Others include a Gershonite Levite (Exod 6:17) and Mordecai's ancestor (Esth 2:5). SHIMEI PERSONAL NAME

en: Shim'i, Shimei, Shimi | es: Shimei, Shimi, Simei | fr: Schimeï, Shiméi | de: Schimi, Simei Exod 6:17; Num 3:18; 2Sam 16:5; 2Sam 16:7; 2Sam 16:13

שִׁמְעִי H8097 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

The Shimeite, a gentilic denoting descendants of Shimei; a Levitical clan

A gentilic adjective with the definite article, meaning 'the Shimeite' or 'the Shimite,' referring to descendants of Shimei. In Numbers 3:21, the Shimeites are listed among the Levitical clans, specifically within the Gershonite division. In Zechariah 12:13, the 'family of the Shimeites' is mentioned in a future lament for the pierced one, part of a series of families mourning individually. The term functions as a collective noun, denoting a clan or family group rather than an individual. The multilingual glosses vary: some transliterate, others translate ('the Shimeite,' 'sentinel'—the latter likely an error). The name anchors a Levitical lineage and, in Zechariah, a future repentant community.

(2×) The Shimeites in Numbers are part of the Levitical census, responsible for specific tabernacle duties as descendants of Gershon. In Zechariah, the reference is eschatological: in the day of mourning for the pierced Messiah, the Shimeite family will lament separately, indicating the depth and particularity of repentance. The gentilic form ('the Shimeite[s]') emphasizes collective identity, whether in priestly service or in communal repentance. Both uses preserve the name Shimei as foundational to a recognized group within Israel. SHIMEI PERSONAL NAME

en: the-Shimeite, the-Shimi | es: el-simeita | fr: le-Shimeite, sentinelle | de: [הַשִּׁמְעִי], der-Shimeite Num 3:21; Zech 12:13

שְׁמַעְיָה H8098 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (41×)

Shemaiah — theophoric name meaning 'Yahweh has heard,' borne by prophets, priests, Levites, and others

Shema'yah (also Shema'yahu in the longer theophoric form) combines shama' ('to hear') with the divine name Yah, yielding 'Yahweh has heard.' Its 41 occurrences refer to numerous individuals spanning Israel's history from the monarchy through the postexilic period. The most prominent is Shemaiah the prophet who prevented Rehoboam from warring against the northern tribes after the kingdom's division (1 Kgs 12:22; 2 Chr 11:2; 12:5, 7, 15). A later Shemaiah was the false prophet from Nehelam whom Jeremiah condemned (Jer 29:24-32). The name also belongs to a Levite who helped distribute tithes under Hezekiah (2 Chr 31:15), a descendant of Zerubbabel (1 Chr 3:22), and multiple priestly and Levitical figures in Nehemiah's reconstruction community. Translations uniformly transliterate rather than translate.

Shemaiah (proper name) (41×) The proper masculine name Shema'yah/Shema'yahu ('Yahweh has heard'), identifying at least fifteen different individuals across the biblical record. The most theologically significant are the prophet who delivered God's word to Rehoboam against civil war (1 Kgs 12:22; 2 Chr 11:2) and the false prophet from Nehelam whom Jeremiah denounced (Jer 29:24-32). The remainder are genealogical entries in Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah — Levites (1 Chr 9:14, 16; 15:8; 24:6; 26:4-7), priests (Neh 10:8; 12:6, 18), and laymen (Ezr 8:13; 10:21, 31). Greek renders it Samaias; translations consistently transliterate: Spanish 'Semaias,' German 'Schemaja.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Shema'yah, Shemaiah, Shemayah | es: Semaya, Semayas, Semaías | fr: Schemaeja | de: Schemaja 1Kgs 12:22; 1Chr 3:22; 1Chr 4:37; 1Chr 5:4

שִׁמְעֹנִי H8099 Prep-l (4×)
Simeonite; gentillic adjective identifying members of the tribe of Simeon
This is the gentillic (ethnic/tribal) adjective meaning 'of the tribe of Simeon' or 'belonging to Simeon's descendants.' It appears in tribal census and administrative contexts. Numbers 25:14 identifies Zimri as 'a leader of a father's house among the Simeonites.' Numbers 26:14 introduces the Simeonite clans in the wilderness census. Joshua 21:4 mentions 'the tribe of the Simeonites' in the Levitical city allotments. 1 Chronicles 27:16 lists 'the leader of the Simeonites.' The multilingual glosses (Spanish simeonita/simeonitas, French Siméonite) show standard gentillic forms. As with other tribal designations, this term marks identity within Israel's twelve-tribe structure, though Simeon's history was complex—eventually absorbed largely into Judah's territory.

(4×) Gentillic adjective meaning 'of the tribe of Simeon,' identifying members of Simeon's descendants. Used in census lists (Num 26:14), tribal leadership contexts (1 Chr 27:16), land allotments (Josh 21:4), and identifying individuals like Zimri (Num 25:14). Standard tribal designation within Israel's twelve-tribe system, though Simeon's tribal territory became largely absorbed into Judah over time, making this identifier eventually more genealogical than geographical. SIMEON PERSONAL NAME
en: for-the-Shimeonites, of-the-Simeonite, the-Simeonite | es: de-los-simeonitas, el-simeonita, los-simeonitas | fr: [לשמעוני], de-le-Simeonite, le-Simeonite | de: [לשמעוני], der-Simeonite, der-Simeonites Num 25:14; Num 26:14; Josh 21:4; 1Chr 27:16

שִׁמְעָת H8100 N-proper-ms (2×)
Shim'at/Shimat, mother of a conspirator who murdered King Joash of Judah
A feminine personal name appearing in the accounts of King Joash's assassination. In 2 Kings 12:21, she is called Shim'at, while 2 Chronicles 24:26 calls her Shimat and identifies her as an Ammonitess, mother of Jozabad, one of Joash's murderers. The slight variation in spelling reflects normal textual transmission. The Septuagint offers varied forms (Iemouath, Samaa[th]), and the Chronicles addition of 'Ammonitess' may explain the conspiracy's foreign connections—court intrigue involving non-Israelite factions. Her name, meaning 'fame' or 'report,' is ironic given her son's infamy. She is remembered not for her own deeds but as the mother of a regicide.

(2×) The assassination of Joash, who began well but ended poorly, involved conspiracy by servants of foreign descent. Shim'at's identification as an Ammonitess in Chronicles suggests that foreign influence at court—perhaps through marriages or alliances—contributed to the instability that ended Joash's reign. Her name appears solely in the regicide account, a marginal figure made memorable by her son's treachery. The cross-textual comparison (Kings vs. Chronicles) shows minor orthographic variation but consistent identification. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Shim'at, Shimat | es: Simeat | fr: Shim'at, [שמעת] | de: Shim'at, [שמעת] 2Kgs 12:21; 2Chr 24:26

שִׁמְעָתִים H8101 N-proper-mp (1×)
Shimathites, a family of scribes in Judah
This gentilic designates a family of scribes who dwelt at Jabez in Judah. They appear in Chronicles' genealogical material as one of three scribal families associated with a particular location. The term represents the plural form, indicating the whole family or clan rather than an individual. These scribal families preserved, copied, and transmitted written materials—crucial work in a society where literacy was limited and written texts were precious. Their association with Jabez and their classification as scribes suggests they may have been involved in preserving legal, religious, or historical documents. Their mention preserves the memory of families whose intellectual work served Israel's continuity.

(1×) Gentilic plural designating a scribal family dwelling at Jabez in Judah. First Chronicles 2:55 lists them: 'The clans of scribes who lived at Jabez: the Tirathites, the Shimeathites and the Sucathites. These are the Kenites who came from Hammath, the father of the house of Recab.' The identification as scribes indicates their professional specialization in writing, copying, and preserving texts. The Spanish 'simateos' appropriately renders the plural collective, while the bracketed forms in French and German indicate translation uncertainty. These families' scribal work helped preserve the textual tradition that eventually became Scripture itself. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shim'athim | es: simateos | fr: [שמעתים] | de: [שמעתים] 1Chr 2:55

שֹׁמֶץ H8102 N-msc (2×)
A whisper, a faint sound; something barely audible, inadequate to convey the full reality
A noun meaning whisper, appearing twice in Job. In Job 4:12, Eliphaz describes receiving a 'whisper' in the night—a faint, mysterious word that came to him secretly. In Job 26:14, Job declares that all humanity's knowledge of God's works is merely 'a whisper of a word,' utterly inadequate to the full thunder of God's power. The term captures both the secrecy and the inadequacy of partial revelation: a whisper is intimate but incomplete, suggestive but insufficient. The multilingual evidence preserves the Hebrew in some cases, translates 'whisper' in others, conveying the sense of faint, barely perceptible sound.

(2×) Both Job contexts use 'whisper' to emphasize the limits of human knowledge. Eliphaz's whisper is eerie, a secretive revelation in the night that purports to disclose hidden wisdom. Job's whisper is cosmic: even the mighty acts of God we observe are merely faint echoes, whispers compared to the full thunder of his power ('the thunder of his might who can understand?'). The Spanish 'susurro' and English 'whisper' capture the auditory metaphor, and the contrast with 'thunder' in 26:14 sharpens the sense of inadequacy. We hear whispers; God speaks in storms. SILENCE AND SECRECY
en: a-whisper, whisper-of | es: susurro-de, un-susurro | fr: שמץ | de: [שמץ] Job 4:12; Job 26:14

שִׁמְצָה H8103 Prep-l / N-fs (1×)
shame or derision, disgrace resulting from others' mockery
This noun denotes shame, derision, or disgraceful exposure to mockery. It appears in Exodus' account of the golden calf incident, where Moses confronts Aaron about allowing the people to 'break loose' such that they became a derision to their enemies. The term derives from a root suggesting whispered mockery or derisive gossip. The shame isn't merely internal guilt but public disgrace—Israel's apostasy made them laughable to watching nations. Moses' use of this term highlights not just the sin's theological gravity but its practical consequences: covenant breaking brings not just divine judgment but humiliating exposure before one's enemies.

(1×) Shame or derision resulting from disgraceful behavior that exposes one to enemies' mockery. Exodus 32:25 states: 'And when Moses saw that the people had broken loose (for Aaron had let them break loose, to the derision of their enemies).' The prepositional phrase 'to shame' or 'for derision' indicates purpose or result—Aaron's failure to restrain the people resulted in Israel becoming an object of contempt. The Spanish 'para-vergüenza' (for shame) and French 'à-honte' (to disgrace) capture this dimension. The incident shows sin's public dimension: covenant breaking doesn't just offend God privately but exposes His people to deserved ridicule. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: to-shame | es: para-vergüenza | fr: à-honte | de: zu-shame Exod 32:25

שָׁמַר H8104 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-1cs (469×)

keep, watch, observe, guard, preserve; to maintain faithful custody over persons, things, commands, or covenants

One of the great covenant verbs of the Hebrew Bible, shamar weaves together the physical act of guarding and the moral act of obedience into a single lexeme. A shepherd keeps his flock, a watchman keeps the walls, and Israel keeps the commandments — all with the same verb. The Niphal reflexive ('guard yourself') and Hitpael intensive ('keep oneself') extend the semantic range inward, making self-vigilance a spiritual discipline. Across 469 occurrences, shamar anchors the biblical conviction that faithfulness is not passive belief but active, watchful custody.

1. Qal: keep, observe (law/covenant) (399×) Qal stem: to keep, observe, or obey commandments, statutes, covenants, and ordinances — the dominant sense covering nearly 400 occurrences. Spanish guardar, French garder, and German bewahren/beachten all preserve the dual meaning of custodial keeping and legal observance. Exodus 12:17 (keep the feast of unleavened bread) and Deuteronomy 5:12 (keep the Sabbath) show the verb at the heart of covenant loyalty. GUARDING AND KEEPING en: to-keep, to-observe | es: guardar, para-guardar | fr: pour-garder, à-garder, à-observe | de: zu-beachten, zu-bewahren, zu-bewahrte Exod 12:17; Exod 12:24; Exod 12:25; Exod 22:7

2. Niphal: beware, take heed (34×) Niphal stem: to beware, take heed, guard oneself — a reflexive sense warning against danger or wrongdoing. Spanish cuídate/guárdate and French garder-toi-même make the reflexive structure explicit. Genesis 24:6 (take heed that you do not take my son back there) and Exodus 19:12 (take heed not to go up the mountain) frame self-guarding as a response to divine boundaries. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: Guard-yourselves, and-you-shall-guard, be-careful | es: Cuídate, Guardaos, Guárdate | fr: et-garder, garder, garder-toi-même | de: bewachen, bewachen-dich-selbst, bewachen-euch-selbst Gen 24:6; Gen 31:24; Gen 31:29; Exod 10:28; Exod 19:12

3. Qal: watch, look out (26×) Qal stem: to watch, look out, lie in wait — emphasizing visual surveillance rather than custodial keeping. The sentinel standing watch over a city (2 Sam 11:16) and Eli watching Hannah's mouth move in prayer (1 Sam 1:12) both highlight the watchman's gaze. German der-Wächter and French le-watchmen confirm the occupational connotation of appointed observation. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: and-You-watch-me, and-those-who-watch-for, and-watch | es: Como-guardas-de, Guarda, Observa | fr: et-garder, garder, le-watchmen | de: bewahren, bewahrte, der-watchmen Judg 1:24; Judg 7:19; 1Sam 1:12; 2Sam 11:16; Job 10:14

4. Qal/Niphal passive: be kept (6×) Qal passive participle and Niphal passive: to be kept, guarded, or preserved by another. The reserved portion for Saul (1 Sam 9:24, 'that which has been kept') and the promise that the LORD preserves the faithful (Ps 37:28) show the passive voice expressing divine or human protective custody. Spanish fue-guardado and German bewahrte confirm the resultative state of having been safeguarded. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: and-guarded, have-kept, he-was-kept | es: fue-guardado, guardadas, guardado | fr: ai-garda, et-guarded, garda- | de: bewahrte, bewahrte-, habe-bewahrte 1Sam 9:24; 1Sam 21:5; 2Sam 23:5; Ps 37:28; Eccl 5:13

5. Hitpael: guard oneself (3×) Hitpael reflexive-intensive: to keep oneself, guard oneself with deliberate effort. Only three occurrences — 2 Samuel 22:24 and Psalm 18:23 (David's parallel confession 'I kept myself from my iniquity') and Micah 6:16 — but each conveys an intensified self-discipline beyond the simpler Niphal caution. The reflexive doubling signals moral vigilance as sustained, costly practice. GUARDING AND KEEPING

en: and-I-guarded-myself, and-I-kept-myself, and-are-kept | es: Y-se-guardan, y-me-guardé | fr: et-garder, et-je-guarded-moi-même | de: und-bewahrte, und-ich-guarded-mich-selbst 2Sam 22:24; Ps 18:23; Mic 6:16

6. (1×) A rare or disputed sense in Jonah 2:8: those who cling to or regard worthless idols. Spanish los-que-guardan ('those who keep') and English 'those who cling to' suggest a transferred sense where 'keeping' empty things becomes misplaced devotion — an ironic inversion of the covenant vocabulary of faithful observance. GUARDING AND KEEPING en: those-who-cling-to | es: Los-que-guardan | fr: garder | de: bewahrte Jonah 2:8

שֶׁמֶר H8105 N-mp (5×)

Lees, dregs; settled wine sediment used figuratively for complacency or rich feasting

Used exclusively in the plural, this noun refers to the lees or sediment that settles when wine is left undisturbed to mature. Isaiah 25:6 envisions the messianic banquet with 'wines on the lees' — aged, clarified, supremely fine. But the same image carries a darker edge: Jeremiah 48:11 compares Moab's untroubled existence to wine never poured from vessel to vessel, and Zephaniah 1:12 warns of those 'thickened on their lees,' frozen in complacency. Psalm 75:8 uses the dregs of God's cup as an image of judgment drained to the last drop.

(5×) Wine lees or dregs — the sediment that settles when wine ages undisturbed, employed in both positive and negative figurative senses. Positively, Isaiah 25:6 twice uses the plural to describe the finest aged wine at God's eschatological feast. Negatively, Jeremiah 48:11 and Zephaniah 1:12 deploy the image for undisturbed complacency, while Psalm 75:8 pictures the dregs of divine judgment. English 'aged wine/dregs' and Spanish 'heces/vinos añejos' together span both valences. WINE BEVERAGE

en: aged-wine, his-dregs, its-dregs | es: sus-heces, vinos-añejos | fr: [שמריו], [שמרים], garde | de: [שמריהם], [שמריו], [שמרים] Ps 75:8; Isa 25:6; Jer 48:11; Zeph 1:12

שֶׁמֶר H8106 N-proper-ms (5×)

Shemer; a personal name, notably the original owner of the hill on which Samaria was built Shemer is best known as the man from whom King Omri purchased the hill that became Samaria, Israel's northern capital (1 Kgs 16:24). The city name שֹׁמְרוֹן explicitly derives from this purchase. Beyond this historically pivotal figure, the name appears in Levitical and tribal genealogies: a Levite in 1 Chronicles 6:46, a member of Asher (1 Chr 7:34, variant Shomer in v. 32), and possibly a Benjaminite (1 Chr 8:12). The LXX renders it Σεμμηρ or Σωμηρ.

(5×) A proper masculine name meaning perhaps 'guardian' or 'watchman,' related to the root שׁמר. The most significant bearer sold the hill to Omri that became Samaria (1 Kgs 16:24, mentioned twice). Additional bearers include a Levite (1 Chr 6:46) and an Asherite (1 Chr 7:34). Spanish 'Semer/Shemer' and French 'Shemer' follow the standard transliteration. The name's connection to Israel's capital gives it outsized historical weight. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shamer, Shemer, and-Shamed | es: Semer, Shemer, y-Sámed | fr: Shemer, [ושמד], [שמר] | de: Shemer, [ושמד], [שמר] 1Kgs 16:24; 1Chr 6:46; 1Chr 7:34; 1Chr 8:12

שְׁמֻר H8107 N-mp (2×)
Watching, vigils; a night of watchful observation, especially the Passover night
A plural noun meaning watches, vigils, or times of watchful observation, appearing twice in Exodus 12:42 in the Passover narrative. The text declares that the night of the Exodus was 'a night of vigils to the LORD,' when he kept watch over Israel, and therefore it is 'a night of vigils for all the people of Israel throughout their generations.' The term emphasizes not sleep but wakefulness, not rest but alertness—a night when God watched over his people and they, in turn, are to keep vigil in remembrance. The multilingual glosses ('watching,' 'vigilias,' 'veillant') uniformly convey the sense of staying awake, keeping watch.

(2×) The Passover night is uniquely designated as a 'night of vigils'—God's vigil over Israel as he struck Egypt and delivered his people, and Israel's vigil of remembrance ever after. The repetition of שִׁמֻּרִים in Exodus 12:42 creates a mirror: God's watching and Israel's watching. This is not passive observation but active, intentional watchfulness, charged with redemptive significance. The Spanish 'vigilias' and English 'watching' capture the sense of wakefulness and alertness, transforming a historical night into an eternal posture of remembrance and anticipation. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: watching | es: vigilias | fr: veillant | de: watching Exod 12:42

שְׁמֻרָה H8108 N-fs (1×)
guard or watch, protection set over something vulnerable
This noun denotes a guard, watch, or protective observation. It appears in Psalm 141 where the psalmist asks God to set a guard over his mouth and protect his lips. The term emphasizes active, vigilant watching rather than passive barrier—a guard who monitors and controls. Paired with 'doorkeeper' for the lips, it suggests speech requires careful supervision since words can damage as easily as weapons. The root meaning 'keep' or 'guard' extends to protective watching in military, cultic, and moral contexts. Here the petition recognizes human inability to self-regulate speech, requiring divine assistance to guard against destructive words.

(1×) A guard, watch, or protective monitoring, particularly in the metaphor of guarding one's speech. Psalm 141:3 prays: 'Set a guard, O LORD, over my mouth; keep watch over the door of my lips.' The military metaphor applies to moral vigilance—just as a guard protects a city gate, so the psalmist needs God to monitor his speech. The Spanish 'guarda,' French 'garde,' and German 'hüten' all convey protective watching. The parallelism with 'doorkeeper' emphasizes that lips need active supervision, not mere restraint. The prayer acknowledges that controlling speech requires more than willpower; it needs divine intervention. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: a-guard | es: guarda | fr: garde | de: ein-hüten Ps 141:3

שְׁמֻרָה H8109 N-fpc (1×)
eyelids, the protective coverings that guard and close the eyes
This term denotes eyelids, understood as the guards or protectors of the eyes. The etymology connects to the root for 'guard,' viewing eyelids functionally as protective shutters that shield the eye. The word appears in Psalm 77 where the psalmist describes his distress—God holds his eyelids open, preventing sleep. The poetic image powerfully conveys insomnia driven by spiritual turmoil: even the natural protective mechanism of the eyelids, designed to close in rest, cannot function when God keeps them open. The term's connection to guarding emphasizes the eyelid's protective function, making their forced openness especially distressing.

(1×) Eyelids, conceptualized as guards or protectors of the eyes, appearing in a description of sleepless distress. Psalm 77:4 laments: 'You hold my eyelids open; I am so troubled that I cannot speak.' The construct phrase 'eyelids of my eyes' (lit. 'guards of my eyes') emphasizes their protective function. God's holding them open represents divine prevention of sleep's relief—the psalmist cannot even blink or close his eyes to rest. The Spanish 'vigilias-de' (watches of) and German 'closing' suggest translation difficulty, while French 'garde' (guard) maintains the root's meaning. The image powerfully conveys spiritual anguish that overrides physical need. GUARDS AND WATCHERS en: from-closing | es: vigilias-de | fr: garde | de: von-closing Ps 77:4

שִׁמְרוֹן H8110a Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)
Shimron, a Canaanite city in Zebulun, ruled by a king defeated by Joshua
A place name referring to a Canaanite city with a king, located in the territory later allotted to Zebulun. In Joshua 11:1, the king of Shimron joined the northern coalition against Israel. In Joshua 19:15, Shimron is listed as one of the towns in Zebulun's inheritance. The name may be related to 'guarding' or 'watching.' There is also a variant form Shimron-meron in Joshua 12:20, possibly referring to the same city or a compound name. The Septuagint offers varied transliterations (Symoon, Someron), showing uncertainty about vocalization. The city's identification with modern archaeological sites remains debated.

(2×) Shimron's king participated in the coalition defeated by Joshua at the waters of Merom, part of the northern campaign that secured Israelite control of Galilee. Later, the city itself became part of Zebulun's tribal inheritance, indicating either peaceful settlement or post-conquest allocation. The dual reference (as an enemy city in Joshua 11 and as an Israelite town in Joshua 19) reflects the book's two-part structure: conquest narratives followed by land distribution. The name endures in the tribal geography, anchoring Zebulun's territory in northern Canaan. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Shimron, and-Shimron | es: Simrón, y-Simrón | fr: Shimron, et-Shimron | de: Shimron, und-Shimron Josh 11:1; Josh 19:15

שִׁמְרוֹן H8110b Prep-l / N-proper-ms (3×)
Shimron (personal name: son of Issachar)
Shimron was the fourth son of Issachar, listed in patriarchal genealogies. He appears in the family roster when Jacob's household went to Egypt (Genesis 46:13), in the wilderness census as founder of the Shimronite clan (Numbers 26:24), and in Chronicles' genealogical record (1 Chronicles 7:1). The name derives from a root meaning 'watch' or 'guard.' The Greek versions show considerable variation (Zambram, Sambra, Semeron), typical of the challenges in rendering Hebrew names. This personal name should be distinguished from the Canaanite city Shimron (Joshua 11:1) and Shimron-meron (Joshua 12:20).

(3×) Personal name of Issachar's son and eponymous ancestor of the Shimronite clan. Genesis 46:13 lists Shimron among Issachar's four sons who came to Egypt with Jacob. Numbers 26:24 records his descendants as one of Issachar's tribal clans counted in the wilderness. 1 Chronicles 7:1 repeats the genealogy linking Shimron to Issachar's line. The name functions both personally (the individual son) and corporately (his clan descendants). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Shimron, to-Shimron | es: de-Simrón, y-Shimron, y-Simrón | fr: et-Samarie, et-Shimron, à-Shimron | de: und-Samaria, und-Schimron, zu-Shimron Gen 46:13; Num 26:24; 1Chr 7:1

שֹׁמְרוֹן H8111 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (109×)
Samaria (Shomron) — capital city of the northern kingdom of Israel; also the surrounding region Shomron (Samaria) names both the hilltop city purchased and built by King Omri as the capital of the northern kingdom (1 Kgs 16:24) and, by extension, the surrounding territory. The city served as Israel's political and religious center through the divided monarchy period, featuring prominently in the Elijah and Elisha narratives and in prophetic oracles of judgment. Ezekiel personifies Samaria as a woman alongside Jerusalem (Ezek 16:46; 23:4). The Assyrian conquest of Samaria in 722 BC marked the end of the northern kingdom. Spanish 'Samaria,' French 'Samarie,' and German 'Samarien' all preserve the place name transparently.

Samaria (city/region) (109×) The proper name Shomron (Samaria), designating the fortified capital city founded by Omri on a hill purchased from Shemer (1 Kgs 16:24) and, by metonymy, the northern kingdom's territory. Central to narratives of the Omride dynasty, the prophets Elijah and Elisha, and the Assyrian deportation (2 Kgs 17). Ezekiel personifies it as an unfaithful woman (Ezek 23:4), underscoring its symbolic weight in prophetic literature. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Samaria, Shomron | es: Samaria, Shomrón, a-Samaria | fr: Samarie | de: Samarien 1Kgs 16:24; 1Kgs 20:1; 1Kgs 20:10; 1Kgs 21:1

שֹׁמְרוֹן H8112 N-proper-fs (1×)

Shimron-meron, a Canaanite city with its own king, conquered by Joshua Shimron-meron designates a Canaanite city-state with its own king, conquered during Joshua's northern campaign. The name appears to be a compound of two place names—Shimron and Meron—though whether this indicates a dual city, a city named for two features, or simply an expanded name remains debated. The text shows textual variants (Ketiv has the full compound, Qere just 'Shimron'), suggesting some uncertainty even in antiquity. The city appears in Joshua's list of defeated kings, marking it as a significant Canaanite center that fell to Israel's conquest. Its location was somewhere in Zebulun's territory in Galilee.

(1×) Geographical name of a Canaanite city-state conquered by Joshua, appearing as a compound name combining Shimron and Meron. Joshua 12:20 lists its king among those defeated: 'the king of Shimron-meron, one.' The Ketiv reads the full compound 'Shimron-meron' while the Qere reads simply 'Shimron,' indicating textual variation even in ancient manuscripts. The Septuagint forms vary as well. The Spanish 'Simrón-Merón' preserves the compound, as do English and German. Whether this represents two adjacent cities or a single city with a compound name, it marks a significant Canaanite stronghold that submitted to Israel's conquest. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shimron-Meron | es: Simrón-Merón | fr: Shimron-Meron | de: Shimron-Meron Josh 12:20

שִׁמְרִי H8113 N-proper-ms (4×)

Shimri; personal name of several individuals, including a Simeonite, a father of one of David's warriors, and Levites

This personal name appears for multiple individuals in Chronicles. 1 Chronicles 4:37 mentions a Shimri in a Simeonite genealogy. 1 Chronicles 11:45 identifies Shimri as the father of Jediael, one of David's mighty warriors. 1 Chronicles 26:10 names a Shimri as a Levitical gatekeeper. 2 Chronicles 29:13 lists another Levite named Shimri involved in Hezekiah's temple cleansing. The name may derive from the root 'to keep/guard' (shamar), suggesting meanings like 'my guardian' or 'watchful.' The multilingual glosses transliterate with minor variations (Spanish Simri/Simrí). The name's appearance across different tribes (Simeon, Levi) and contexts (genealogy, military, temple service) suggests it was a common name in ancient Israel.

(4×) Personal name of several biblical individuals: a Simeonite (1 Chr 4:37), father of one of David's heroes (1 Chr 11:45), and Levites involved in temple service (1 Chr 26:10, 2 Chr 29:13). Possibly meaning 'watchful' or 'my guardian' from shamar (to keep/guard). The name's distribution across tribes and roles shows it was moderately common in Israel, with particular representation among Levitical families engaged in guarding and serving the temple. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shimri | es: Simri, Simrí | fr: [שמר] | de: [שמר] 1Chr 4:37; 1Chr 11:45; 1Chr 26:10; 2Chr 29:13

שְׁמַרְיָה H8114 N-proper-ms (4×)

Shemariah; personal name meaning 'YHWH has kept/preserved,' borne by one of David's warriors and two contemporaries of Ezra

This theophoric name (containing God's name) means 'YHWH has kept' or 'YHWH has preserved.' It appears with spelling variants: Shemaryahu (with full divine name ending) in 1 Chronicles 12:6 for one of David's warriors who joined him at Ziklag, and Shemariah (shorter form) for a son of Rehoboam (2 Chronicles 11:19) and two men listed among those who had married foreign women in Ezra's time (Ezra 10:32, 41). The multilingual glosses show transliteration with minor variations (Spanish Semarías). The name expresses parental gratitude for God's protection or preservation, perhaps of the child or family. That it appears among David's early followers and later among the post-exilic community shows its enduring use across Israel's history.

(4×) Personal name meaning 'YHWH has kept/preserved,' appearing as Shemaryahu or Shemariah. Borne by a warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:6), a son of Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:19), and two men in Ezra's time who had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:32, 41). The theophoric name expresses trust in God's preservation and protection, reflecting the faith and gratitude of those who named their sons thus across several centuries of Israelite history. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shemariah, Shemaryah, and-Shemaryahu | es: Semarías, Shemaryah, y-Semarías | fr: [ושמריהו], [שמריה] | de: Schemarja, [ושמריהו], [שמריה] 1Chr 12:6; 2Chr 11:19; Ezra 10:32; Ezra 10:41

שֹׁמְרָיִן H8115 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (3×)

Samaria, Shomrayin (Aramaic form of the city/region name)

This is the Aramaic spelling of Samaria, the capital city of the northern kingdom of Israel, appearing in Ezra's Aramaic correspondence. The name occurs in letters from provincial officials to the Persian king complaining about Jerusalem's rebuilding (Ezra 4:10, 17). By this period Samaria designated both the city and the surrounding province in the Persian administrative system. The word appears in contexts discussing regional politics and ethnic tensions, with Samaritan officials opposing Judean reconstruction efforts. The multilingual glosses sometimes simply transliterate 'Samaria,' reflecting the proper-name character.

(3×) Aramaic designation for Samaria in Persian-period administrative documents. Ezra 4:10 mentions officials 'in Samaria' (or 'in Shomrayin') and the rest of the Trans-Euphrates province. Ezra 4:17 (appearing twice in BDB's reference, though the second seems dubious) addresses correspondence to Samaritan officials. The name functions geographically to identify the northern province distinct from Judea, carrying political overtones of the Samaritan opposition to Jerusalem's restoration. PEACE AND WELLBEING

en: Shomrayin, in-Shomrayin, peace | es: Samaria, en-Samaria, paz | fr: [בשמרין], [שלם], [שמרין] | de: [בשמרין], [שמרין], vergalt Ezra 4:10; Ezra 4:17

שִׁמְרִית H8116 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shimrith, a Moabite woman and mother of one of King Joash's assassins

Shimrith was a Moabite woman, mother of Jehozabad who participated in the assassination of King Joash of Judah. Her Moabite origin is emphasized in Chronicles' account, possibly suggesting foreign influence in the conspiracy against Joash. The parallel account in Kings calls her Shomer (masculine form), representing either a textual variant or indicating that the same person had both a masculine and feminine form of the name. Joash's murder came as judgment for his apostasy after the death of Jehoiada the priest. That one of the conspirators had a Moabite mother may indicate the international dimensions of court intrigue.

(1×) Personal name of a Moabite woman whose son Jehozabad helped assassinate King Joash of Judah. Second Chronicles 24:26 identifies the conspirators: 'Those who conspired against him were Zabad the son of Shimeath the Ammonitess, and Jehozabad the son of Shimrith the Moabitess.' The emphasis on her Moabite ethnicity may suggest foreign influence in the plot. The parallel passage (2 Kings 12:21) calls her 'Shomer' (a masculine form), indicating either textual variation or name flexibility. The bracketed translations in French and German acknowledge this complexity, while Spanish 'Simrit' offers straightforward transliteration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shimrit | es: Simrit | fr: [שמרית] | de: [שמרית] 2Chr 24:26

שִׁמְרֹנִי H8117 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shimronite, designation for the clan descended from Shimron in Issachar

This gentilic designates the clan descended from Shimron, a son of Issachar. It appears in the wilderness census in Numbers, where each tribe's clans are enumerated. Shimron was fourth among Issachar's sons, and his descendants formed one of the clan divisions within that tribe. The definite article with the gentilic indicates the collective group—all of Shimron's descendants—functioning as a clan designation. This census established inheritance rights that would shape the distribution of land when Israel settled in Canaan, with each clan receiving its portion of the tribal allotment.

(1×) Gentilic designation (with definite article) for the clan descended from Shimron within the tribe of Issachar. Numbers 26:24 lists them in the wilderness census: 'of Shimron, the clan of the Shimronites.' The Spanish 'los simronitas' appropriately captures the collective plural sense. This census enumerated each clan to establish inheritance rights before entering Canaan. Shimron was one of Issachar's four sons whose descendants formed distinct family divisions. The clan would later receive its allotment within Issachar's territory, maintaining the tribal structure that organized Israel's settlement and governance. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: the-Shimronite | es: los-simronitas | fr: le-Shimronite | de: der-Shimronite Num 26:24

שֹׁמְרֹנִי H8118 Art / N-proper-mp (1×)

Samaritans; gentillic designation for the inhabitants of Samaria after the fall of the northern kingdom

This gentillic adjective identifies the people called Samaritans, the inhabitants of the region of Samaria after the Assyrian conquest. The term appears in 2 Kings 17:29 in the plural form, referring to the mixed population that settled in the area after the northern kingdom's fall. This ethnic-religious designation would later carry significant theological weight in Second Temple Judaism and the New Testament period, though its single biblical occurrence is descriptive rather than polemical.

(1×) Refers to the inhabitants of Samaria in the post-exilic period. The Hebrew השמרנים (ha-Shomronim) literally means 'the Samaritans' or 'those of Samaria.' The multilingual glosses retain transliterated forms (Spanish 'los-samaritanos' being the exception), reflecting the name's function as a gentillic identifier. In 2 Kings 17:29, the term describes the various peoples who made gods and set them in shrines throughout the towns of Samaria—a practice that characterized the syncretic worship of the region following Assyria's resettlement policies. SAMARITAN PERSON
en: the-Shomronim | es: los-samaritanos | fr: le-Shomronim | de: der-Shomronim 2Kgs 17:29

שִׁמְרָת H8119 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shimrat; personal name of a Benjaminite in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles Shimrat is a personal name appearing in the tribal genealogy of Benjamin. The name occurs in 1 Chronicles 8:21 within a list of descendants, where it serves to preserve family lineages and tribal identity during the post-exilic period. The name's etymology may relate to the root meaning 'to guard' or 'keep,' though as a proper name it functions primarily as an identifier rather than carrying active semantic weight.

(1×) The personal name of a Benjaminite listed in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles 8:21. The form ושמרת (we-Shimrat) includes the conjunction 'and,' indicating this name appears within a sequential list. Most language glosses preserve the transliterated Hebrew form (French and German retain bracketed Hebrew), while English and Spanish provide standard transliterations ('Shimrat,' 'Simrat'). The Septuagint renders this as Σαμαραθ or Σαμαρει, showing the typical variation in Greek transliteration of Hebrew names. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: and-Shimrat | es: y-Simrat | fr: [ושמרת] | de: [ושמרת] 1Chr 8:21

שְׁמַשׁ H8120 V-Piel-Imperf-3mp / 3mse (1×)

to serve, minister; Aramaic verb describing angelic or courtly service rendered to a superior

This Aramaic verb appears in the Piel stem, describing the act of ministering or serving in a formal, courtly context. In Daniel 7:10, it depicts the countless heavenly beings who serve before God's throne—a vision of celestial worship and divine majesty. The verb conveys respectful, reverent service rather than menial labor, appropriate to the cosmic courtroom scene where the Ancient of Days sits in judgment. The cognate forms across Aramaic dialects and into Rabbinic Hebrew consistently denote ritual or formal ministry.

(1×) Describes angelic or heavenly service rendered to God in Daniel's vision of the divine throne room. The form ישמשונה (yeshamme-shuneh) is a Piel imperfect 3rd masculine plural with pronominal suffix 'him,' literally 'they were ministering to him.' English 'served Him' and Spanish 'le servían' capture the ongoing action of celestial attendance. The context in Daniel 7:10 emphasizes the vast number of servants ('thousand thousands ministered to him') attending the divine presence, reflecting ancient Near Eastern court protocol elevated to cosmic scale. SERVING AND MINISTRY
en: served-Him | es: le-servían | fr: servir | de: [ישמשונה] Dan 7:10

שֶׁמֶשׁ H8121 N-csc / 3fs (134×)

The sun as celestial body, timekeeper, and symbol of glory; rarely, sun-shaped architectural ornaments (battlements).

Shemesh is the Hebrew Bible's standard word for the sun, appearing in contexts from creation poetry to legal regulation. It serves as the great timekeeper — sunrise (zarach) and sunset (bo) frame daily life, ritual purity periods, and covenant moments like Abraham's vision (Gen 15:12, 17). Figuratively, the sun represents God's justice (Mal 3:20, 'sun of righteousness'), royal splendor (Judg 5:31), and the relentless exposure of hidden deeds (Eccl 1:9). A single puzzling occurrence in Isaiah 54:12 uses the plural shimshot for architectural features — probably sun-shaped ornamental shields or pinnacles atop the walls of the eschatological Jerusalem.

1. sun (celestial body) (133×) The sun as celestial body in its full semantic range: physical luminary (Gen 37:9), temporal marker for sunrise and sunset (Gen 15:12, 17; Josh 10:12-13), metaphor for glory and righteousness (Judg 5:31; Mal 3:20), and symbol of life's transience under its circuit (Ecclesiastes passim). All major languages render with their primary solar term — el sol, le soleil, die Sonne — confirming total cross-linguistic convergence across 133 occurrences. SUN CELESTIAL BODY
en: the-sun | es: El-sol, el-sol | fr: le-soleil | de: der-Sonne, die-Sonne Gen 15:12; Gen 15:17; Gen 19:23; Gen 28:11; Gen 32:31

2. battlements, pinnacles (1×) Architectural ornaments described by the plural shimshot in Isaiah 54:12, within a vision of the new Jerusalem whose gates are carbuncles and walls precious stones. The term likely denotes sun-shaped shields or battlements crowning the city walls. English 'battlements' and Spanish 'almenas' (merlons) capture the architectural sense, while French and German retain 'soleil/Sonne,' reflecting the etymological connection to the sun-disc shape that inspired the ornament's name. SUN CELESTIAL BODY
en: your-battlements | es: tus-almenas | fr: soleil | de: Sonne Isa 54:12

שְׁמַשׁ H8122 N-msd (1×)

sun; the celestial luminary that marks time and seasons in the created order

This Aramaic noun refers to the sun, appearing in Daniel 6:14 in a temporal expression marking the time of day. While Hebrew uses שֶׁמֶשׁ for the sun, this Aramaic form שְׁמַשָּׁא appears in the emphatic state (equivalent to the definite article). The sun functions both as a timekeeper and as a created element within God's ordered cosmos, never as an object of worship in biblical theology despite its prominence in surrounding ancient Near Eastern religions.

(1×) The celestial body that provides light and marks time. In Daniel 6:14 (English 6:15), the emphatic form שִׁמְשָׁא (shimsha) appears in the phrase 'at the going down of the sun,' indicating the evening hour when King Darius reluctantly approached the lions' den. English, Spanish, and French all use their standard words for 'sun' ('the-sun,' 'el-sol,' 'soleil'), while German retains the bracketed Aramaic form. The sun here functions as a temporal marker rather than having symbolic significance, though the timing underscores the king's urgency and distress. SUN CELESTIAL BODY

en: the-sun | es: el-sol | fr: soleil | de: [שמשא] Dan 6:14

שִׁמְשׁוֹן H8123 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (38×)

Samson — the Danite judge whose name evokes 'sun,' famed for supernatural strength and tragic downfall

Shimshon (Samson) is the name of Israel's most colorful judge, built on the root shemesh ('sun') and appearing 38 times, all within Judges 13-16. His birth narrative echoes the annunciation pattern: the angel of the Lord appears to Manoah's barren wife, announcing a son who will be a Nazirite from the womb (Judg 13:3-5, 24). The stories that follow — the lion at Timnah (14:5-6), the jawbone of a donkey (15:15-17), the gates of Gaza carried to Hebron (16:3), and the final destruction of the Philistine temple (16:28-30) — are among the most dramatic in the Hebrew Bible. His name's solar etymology resonates with the geography: his home territory lies near Beth-shemesh ('house of the sun'). The Septuagint renders it Sampson, and translations uniformly transliterate the name with minor phonological adjustments.

Samson (38×) The proper masculine name Shimshon, identifying the Danite judge-hero whose exploits against the Philistines fill Judges 13-16. All 38 occurrences are confined to these four chapters, tracing his career from miraculous birth (13:24) through feats of supernatural strength (14:6, 19; 15:14-15; 16:3, 29-30) to his betrayal by Delilah and sacrificial death (16:4-30). The name derives from shemesh ('sun'), fitting his connection to the Sorek valley near Beth-shemesh. Translations uniformly transliterate: Greek Sampson, Spanish 'Sanson,' French 'Samson,' German 'Simson.' The Assyrian parallel name Shamshanu confirms the solar theophoric element. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Samson, Shimshon | es: Sansón, Shimshón | fr: Samson, Shimshon | de: Shimshon, Simson Judg 13:24; Judg 14:1; Judg 14:3; Judg 14:5; Judg 14:7

שִׁמְשַׁי H8124 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Shimshai; personal name of a scribe who opposed Jerusalem's rebuilding in Ezra 4, possibly of Persian origin

This name appears exclusively in Ezra 4:8, 9, 17, 23, always with the title 'Shimshai the scribe.' He and Rehum the commander write to King Artaxerxes opposing the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls, and they later receive the king's reply and enforce the cessation of work. The name is probably of Persian or Old Iranian origin (various proposals include meanings related to 'sun' or charitable connotations), adapted to fit Hebrew spelling. The multilingual glosses transliterate with minor variations (Spanish Simsai, French Shimshaï, German Schimschi). As a scribe in the Persian administration, Shimshai represents the bureaucratic opposition to Jewish restoration—using legal and political channels to block what God had decreed through Cyrus.

(4×) Personal name of a scribe in the Persian administration who opposed Jerusalem's rebuilding (Ezra 4:8-23). Always appears as 'Shimshai the scribe,' paired with Rehum the commander. The name is likely of Persian/Iranian origin, showing the multicultural nature of Persian bureaucracy. Shimshai represents official opposition to the Jewish restoration project—using correspondence and legal procedures to stop the wall construction, though ultimately God's purposes could not be permanently thwarted. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Shimshay | es: y-Simsai | fr: et-Shimshaï | de: und-Schimschi Ezra 4:8; Ezra 4:9; Ezra 4:17; Ezra 4:23

שַׁמְשְׁרַי H8125 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shamsherai; personal name of a Benjaminite listed in the tribal genealogies of 1 Chronicles Shamsherai is a personal name occurring in the genealogical records of Benjamin in 1 Chronicles 8:26. Like many names in these lists, it preserves family identity and tribal heritage during the period when maintaining genealogical records became crucial for establishing legitimacy and inheritance rights. The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may contain solar imagery given the 'shamash' component, though this remains speculative.

(1×) Personal name of a Benjaminite in the genealogical list of 1 Chronicles 8:26. The form ושמשרי (we-Shamsheray) appears with the conjunction 'and' in a genealogical sequence. Spanish provides a transliteration ('Samsrai'), while French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew form. The Septuagint shows variation (Ισμασαρια, Σαμσαρια, Σαμψαια), reflecting the challenges of transliterating unfamiliar Hebrew names into Greek. The name appears among the sons of Jeroham who lived in Jerusalem. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Shamsheray | es: Y-Samsrai | fr: [ושמשרי] | de: [ושמשרי] 1Chr 8:26

שַׁמָּתִי H8126 Conj-w (1×)

the Shumathite; gentillic designation for a clan descended from or associated with Caleb

This gentillic adjective identifies a family group or clan associated with Caleb's descendants in Judah. The term appears with the definite article in 1 Chronicles 2:53, marking it as a collective designation. The Shumathites are listed among the families connected to Kiriath-jearim, indicating their geographical and tribal affiliation. Like other gentillic forms, it preserves the social structure and kinship networks that defined identity in ancient Israel.

(1×) A clan designation identifying descendants or inhabitants associated with Caleb's lineage. The form והשמתי (we-ha-Shumathi) includes both the conjunction 'and' and the definite article 'the,' indicating its place in a list of related clans. Spanish translates the sense as 'el sumatita' (the Shumathite), while English provides 'and-the-Shumathi.' French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew. In 1 Chronicles 2:53, this group appears alongside other families like the Mishraites and Eshtaolites, all connected to Kiriath-jearim and the broader Calebite network in Judah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-the-Shumathi | es: y-el-sumatita | fr: [והשמתי] | de: [והשמתי] 1Chr 2:53

שֵׁן H8127 Conj-w (55×)

Tooth or teeth; ivory; a jagged crag or rocky peak; also a fork (for meat). From the physical image of a sharp, protruding point.

Shen begins in the mouth and radiates outward. At its core it means 'tooth' — the biting, gnashing, grinding part of the human or animal body — and this concrete anatomical sense dominates its 55 occurrences. The lex talionis enshrines it in legal formula: 'tooth for tooth' (shen tachat shen, Exod 21:24; Lev 24:20; Deut 19:21). But Hebrew saw the tooth's shape everywhere. Elephant tusks yielded shen as the word for 'ivory,' the luxury material of Solomon's throne (1 Kgs 10:18) and the decadent 'houses of ivory' denounced by Amos (3:15). Jagged rock formations became shen too — the twin crags flanking the Michmash pass in 1 Samuel 14:4-5 are literally 'teeth' of stone. Spanish captures the material extension beautifully: diente for the body part, marfil (from Arabic) for ivory, while French reserves dent for anatomy and ivoire for the precious material. German Zahn stays closer to the Hebrew, covering both tooth and tusk. A single curious occurrence in 1 Samuel 2:13 gives us the three-pronged fork — another pointed, tooth-like implement.

1. tooth, teeth (body part) (40×) A tooth or teeth as a body part — the dominant sense at 40 occurrences, covering human and animal dentition in literal, legal, and figurative contexts. The lex talionis repeats shen tachat shen ('tooth for tooth') across three legal codes (Exod 21:24, Lev 24:20, Deut 19:21), and Exodus 21:27 applies it practically: if a master knocks out a slave's tooth, the slave goes free. Figurative uses are vivid and varied: gnashing teeth in rage (Lam 2:16, Job 16:9, Ps 35:16), teeth set on edge by sour grapes in the proverb of inherited guilt (Jer 31:29-30, Ezek 18:2), teeth white with milk as a blessing on Judah (Gen 49:12), and teeth like a flock of shorn ewes in the Song of Songs (4:2, 6:6). Spanish diente, French dent, and German Zahn all straightforwardly select anatomical vocabulary throughout this cluster. The breadth of figurative elaboration — legal, emotional, proverbial, erotic — testifies to the tooth's centrality in Hebrew bodily imagination. TOOTH TEETH

en: a-tooth, and-teeth-of, and-the-teeth-of | es: Diente, diente, diente-de | fr: [שנן], dent, dent-de | de: Zahn, [שנן], ihr-teeth Gen 49:12; Exod 21:24; Exod 21:27

2. ivory (elephant tooth) (10×) Ivory as a luxury material derived from elephant tusks — 10 occurrences concentrated in royal and prophetic literature. Solomon's great throne was overlaid with shen (1 Kgs 10:18; 2 Chr 9:17), Ahab built a 'house of ivory' (1 Kgs 22:39), and the palaces of Psalm 45:8 are fragrant with myrrh from 'ivory palaces.' Amos 3:15 and 6:4 denounce ivory as a symbol of exploitative wealth, and Ezekiel 27:6, 15 lists it among Tyre's luxury imports. Song of Songs 5:14 compares the beloved's body to ivory work. Spanish marfil (borrowed from Arabic 'elephant tooth') and French ivoire both use dedicated luxury-material vocabulary entirely distinct from diente/dent, confirming a lexicalized sense shift. The metonymic path from tooth to tusk to material is natural and paralleled in many languages. IVORY MATERIAL

en: ivory, the-ivory | es: el-marfil, marfil | fr: [שן], d'ivoire,, d'ivoire; | de: Zahn, [שן], der-ivory 1Kgs 10:18; 1Kgs 22:39; 2Chr 9:17; Ps 45:8; Song 5:14

3. crag, rocky outcrop (4×) A crag, rocky peak, or cliff-tooth — 4 occurrences, all describing jagged rock formations. The most vivid is the Michmash pass narrative in 1 Samuel 14:4-5, where Jonathan and his armor-bearer cross between two shen-like crags named Bozez and Seneh, 'one on the north in front of Michmash, and the other on the south in front of Geba.' Job 39:28 places the eagle on the shen of a cliff. The metaphorical transfer from tooth to crag is spatial: a sharp, protruding point of rock resembles a fang jutting from a jawbone. Spanish diente de ('tooth of') preserves the metaphor transparently, while French dent maintains it as well. This geological sense appears nowhere outside these wilderness and mountain contexts, suggesting a specialized but real extension of the body-part image. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-tooth-of-, the-crag-of-, the-tooth | es: El-diente, diente-de-, y-diente-de- | fr: dent, et-tooth-de-, le-tooth | de: Zahn, der-tooth, tooth-von- 1Sam 14:4; 1Sam 14:5; Job 39:28

4. (1×) A fork or pronged implement — a single occurrence in 1 Samuel 2:13, where the priests' servants would come with a three-pronged mazleg ('fork') while the meat was boiling. The shen here refers to the prong or tine of the fork, with 'three teeth' (shelosh hashinayim) describing the implement's shape. Spanish los dientes ('the teeth') and French le teeth preserve the anatomical metaphor applied to the utensil. The semantic logic is the same as in sense 3: a sharp, pointed protrusion is called a 'tooth' regardless of whether it belongs to a mouth, a cliff, or a kitchen implement. This hapax usage reveals the underlying image schema — shen as any sharp projecting point — that unifies all four senses. TOOTH TEETH

en: the-teeth | es: los-dientes | fr: le-teeth | de: der-teeth 1Sam 2:13

שִׁן H8128 N-fpc / 3fs (5×)

Tooth, teeth (Aramaic); used of the iron teeth of the terrible beast in Daniel's visions

This Aramaic noun for 'tooth' appears exclusively in Daniel's apocalyptic visions of the four beasts. The dual form שְׁנַיִן denotes rows of teeth, specifically the great iron teeth of the fourth beast that devours and crushes everything (Dan 7:7, 19). The singular suffix form describes the teeth of the bear-like second beast with ribs in its mouth (Dan 7:5). In these visions, teeth function as symbols of imperial destructive power. The domain classification under TIME in the data reflects confusion with the homograph שְׁנָה ('year'), but the actual meaning is unmistakably 'teeth.'

(5×) Teeth of terrifying beasts in Daniel's apocalyptic visions — an Aramaic cognate of Hebrew שֵׁן. Daniel 7:5 describes the bear-beast with bones between its teeth, while 7:7 and 7:19 depict the dreadful fourth beast's iron teeth that devour and trample. Spanish 'dientes de ella' and English 'its teeth' correctly render the suffixed forms. French 'année' and German 'Jahr' in the gloss data reflect misidentification with the homograph שְׁנָה (year), but the context is purely anatomical and symbolic. YEAR (TIME UNIT)

en: (qere:its-teeth), [ketiv:its-teeth], and-teeth | es: [dientes-de-ella], dientes-de-ella, y-dientes | fr: [שנין], année | de: Jahr, [שנין], [שניה] Dan 7:5; Dan 7:7; Dan 7:19

שֵׁן H8129 Art / N-proper-fs (1×)

Shen; place name marking a boundary or location where Samuel set up the stone Ebenezer

Shen is a place name appearing in 1 Samuel 7:12, where it serves as one of two geographical markers for the location where Samuel erected the memorial stone called Ebenezer ('stone of help'). The name literally means 'tooth' or 'crag' in Hebrew, likely referring to a distinctive rocky outcrop or cliff formation that made it a recognizable landmark. The site marked Israel's victory over the Philistines and God's deliverance of his people.

(1×) A geographical location mentioned as a boundary marker in 1 Samuel 7:12. The form הַשֵּׁן (ha-Shen) appears with the definite article, literally 'the Shen' or 'the Tooth/Crag.' All major language glosses transliterate the name (English 'the-Shen,' Spanish 'Shen,' French 'le-Shen,' German 'der-Shen'), treating it as a proper place name. Samuel set up the stone Ebenezer 'between Mizpah and Shen,' commemorating the Lord's help in defeating the Philistines. The rocky formation likely provided a distinctive visual marker for travelers and served to anchor the memory of God's deliverance in the physical landscape. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-Shen | es: Shen | fr: le-Shen | de: der-Shen 1Sam 7:12

שָׂנֵא H8130 V-Qal-Inf (148×)

To hate, detest, feel aversion toward; as participle: enemy, adversary; as passive: unloved, disfavored

A verb of visceral emotional repulsion, covering the full spectrum from personal animosity to theological abhorrence. In its most common use it describes active hatred directed at persons or practices God considers detestable (Deut 12:31, Ps 5:5). The participle frequently becomes a noun meaning 'enemy'—those who hate me, you, or God—appearing in military, legal, and psalmic contexts alike. A poignant domestic use appears in the passive participle describing the 'unloved wife' of patriarchal marriage law (Gen 29:31; Deut 21:15), where Arabic عَدُوّ and Spanish aborrecida confirm the sense of emotional rejection rather than mere preference.

1. Qal: to hate, detest (60×) The core Qal finite sense: to feel hatred, animosity, or moral aversion toward a person, thing, or practice. Covers perfect, imperfect, imperative, and consecutive forms. The multilingual evidence is remarkably consistent—Spanish aborrezco, French haïr, German hasst, Arabic ʿ—all converging on visceral emotional hostility. Used of both human interpersonal hatred (Gen 37:4, Esau's brothers) and God's hatred of idolatrous practices (Deut 12:31, 16:22). HATRED AND HOSTILITY

en: He-hates, I-hate, I-have-hated | es: Aborrezco, aborrece, aborrezco | fr: haïr | de: [שנאה], [שנאתי], er-hasst Gen 26:27; Gen 37:4; Deut 12:31; Deut 16:22; Deut 22:13

2. Qal ptcp: hater, enemy (53×) The Qal active participle functioning substantivally as 'hater, enemy, adversary.' This is one of Hebrew's chief words for personal enemy, appearing constantly with pronominal suffixes: שֹׂנְאַי 'those who hate me' (Exod 20:5; Ps 69:5). Korean 미워하는 자들 and Swahili wanaonichukia capture the participial-as-noun pattern naturally. In Exodus 18:21 it describes the quality leaders must possess—שֹׂנְאֵי בָצַע, 'haters of unjust gain'—showing the participle can denote moral character. HATRED

AND HOSTILITY
en: against-their-haters, among-their-haters, but-he-who-hates | es: de-los-que-me-odian, el-que-odia, en-los-que-los-odiaban | fr: ceux-qui-me-haïssent, de-ceux-là-haïssant-moi, et-haïr | de: hasste, hating, und-hasste Gen 24:60; Exod 1:10; Exod 18:21; Exod 20:5; Exod 23:5

3. Piel ptcp: one who hates intensely (15×) The Piel intensive participle denoting those who hate with amplified force or persistence. Distinguished from sense 2 by the intensifying Piel stem, this form appears in elevated poetry and theophanic contexts: Moses' battle cry 'let those who hate you flee' (Num 10:35), the Song of Moses (Deut 32:41), and David's thanksgiving (2 Sam 22:41). Arabic الْيُن (Form IV intensive) and Spanish los que lo odian both capture the heightened enmity. HATRED AND HOSTILITY
en: and-from-those-hating-me, and-those-hating-him, and-those-hating-me | es: Los-que-odian-a, el-que-me-odia, los-que-lo-odian | fr: ceux-là-haïssant-moi, de-ceux-qui-me-haïssent, de-haïr | de: dein-haters, hasste, jene-hassend-mich Num 10:35; Deut 32:41; Deut 33:11; 2Sam 22:41; Job 31:29

4. Qal pass. ptcp: hated, unloved (10×) The Qal passive participle describing the state of being hated or unloved, used adjectivally. Its most memorable context is the 'unloved wife' in patriarchal marriage law (Gen 29:31, 33; Deut 21:15-16), where Leah is שְׂנוּאָה —not necessarily despised but emotionally disfavored compared to Rachel. Spanish aborrecida and Arabic مُبْغَضَة confirm the passive-stative reading. Proverbs 30:23 extends it to a hated woman who marries, signaling social disruption. HATRED AND HOSTILITY
en: [hated-of], an-unloved-woman, and-hated | es: (odiados-de), [odiados], aborrecida | fr: [hated-of], et-haïr, et-le-hated | de: [hated-of], [רשנואה], der-hasste Gen 29:31; Gen 29:33; Deut 21:15; Deut 21:16

5. Qal inf: to hate, hatred (8×) The Qal infinitive construct and absolute used either as a verbal complement ('began to hate,' Gen 37:5, 8) or nominally as the abstract concept of hatred. In Judges 15:2, שָׂנֹא שְׂנֵאתָהּ 'you utterly hated her' uses the infinitive absolute for emphatic intensification. In 2 Samuel 19:7 (Eng. 19:6) Joab accuses David of 'loving those who hate you and hating those who love you,' where the infinitive carries full nominal weight. Psalm 36:2 uses it for self-deceived hatred. HATRED AND HOSTILITY en: and-to-hate, hating, is-hatred-of | es: a-odiar, odiar, para-odiar | fr: et-à-haïs, hating, haïr | de: hasste, hating, und-zu-hasse Gen 37:5; Gen 37:8; Judg 15:2; 2Sam 19:6; Ps 36:2

6. (2×) A residual pair of occurrences in Proverbs (14:17, 14:20) where the form functions within wisdom sayings about the social consequences of folly and poverty—'a man of evil devices is hated' and 'the poor is hated even by his neighbor.' These stative-passive uses in proverbial discourse describe social rejection as a natural outcome, sitting between the active hatred of sense 1 and the marital disfavor of sense 4. HATRED AND HOSTILITY en: is-hated | es: es-odiado | fr: haïr | de: er-hasst Prov 14:17; Prov 14:20

שִׂנְאָ֑ H8131 Prep-l / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 2ms (2×)
To hate; your haters, your enemies (with Ketiv/Qere variant in Daniel)
An Aramaic verb meaning to hate, appearing in Daniel 4:19 with a Ketiv/Qere textual variant. The context is Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream: Daniel wishes the dream applied to the king's enemies rather than to the king himself. The written text (Ketiv) has the form 'your haters' (שנאיך), while the traditional reading (Qere) offers a slightly different vocalization (שנאך), both meaning essentially 'your haters' or 'your enemies.' The multilingual glosses reflect both readings, showing awareness of the variant. The term functions as a courteous euphemism: Daniel diplomatically wishes the troubling dream on the king's foes, not the king.

(2×) Daniel's use of 'your haters' is an act of tact and loyalty. Before delivering the harsh interpretation—Nebuchadnezzar will be driven from human society—Daniel expresses a wish that the dream pertained to the king's enemies instead. The Ketiv/Qere variant is minor, affecting vocalization but not meaning. Both forms are preserved in the glosses ('qere: to your haters,' 'ketiv: to your haters'), demonstrating scribal fidelity to textual traditions. The verb 'hate' here denotes not emotional antipathy but enmity and opposition, the stance of those who wish the king harm. HATRED AND HOSTILITY en: (qere:to-your-haters), [ketiv:to-your-haters] | es: (para-tus-enemigos), [para-tus-enemigos] | fr: haïr | de: [לשנאיך], [לשנאך] Dan 4:19

שְׁנָה H8132 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (3×)
change, alter, transform (Aramaic cognate of Hebrew shanah)
This Aramaic verb means to change or alter something from its previous state. It appears in three striking contexts: Nebuchadnezzar's color changing when he went mad (2 Kings 25:29, or possibly Jehoiachin's garments being changed), Qoheleth's observation that wisdom 'changes' a person's face (Ecclesiastes 8:1), and Jeremiah's lament that gold has 'changed' or become dim (Lamentations 4:1). The root connects to the broader Semitic family of words about transformation, including the possible derivation of 'year' (shanah) from the changing seasons. The Piel and other derived stems intensify the sense of deliberate alteration.

(3×) The verb describes visible alteration or transformation. 2 Kings 25:29 reports that Jehoiachin 'changed his prison garments' when released to dine with the Babylonian king (or possibly his face/appearance changed). Ecclesiastes 8:1 observes that wisdom 'changes' a person's face—transforms their countenance. Lamentations 4:1 mourns how 'the gold has changed'—lost its luster or become tarnished. The multilingual glosses ('cambió,' 'se cambia,' 'changed') confirm this basic sense of perceptible transformation from one state to another. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE
en: and-he-changed, is-changed | es: Y-cambió, se-cambia, se-ha-cambiado | fr: [ישנא], et-il-changed, ישנא | de: er-hasst, und-er-changed 2Kgs 25:29; Eccl 8:1; Lam 4:1

שְׁנָא H8133 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (22×)
To change, be altered, or be different; Aramaic verb used of transformations of appearance, character, or decrees in Daniel and Ezra
This Aramaic verb dominates the book of Daniel, where change — of faces, kingdoms, laws, and times — is a constant theme. It covers the full arc from intransitive change (Nebuchadnezzar's countenance 'was changed,' Dan 3:19) to active alteration (God 'changes times and seasons,' Dan 2:21) to the stative sense of being fundamentally different (the fourth beast 'was different from all the others,' Dan 7:7). Spanish distinguishes neatly between 'se alteró' for involuntary change and 'cambia' for deliberate alteration, mirroring the Hebrew stem distinctions.

1. be changed, undergo change (9×) The intransitive dynamic sense — to undergo change or become altered — appears most vividly when Belshazzar's face changes color at the handwriting on the wall (Dan 5:6, 9) and when Nebuchadnezzar's countenance changes in fury (Dan 3:19). The Aramaic garments of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were not changed by the fire (Dan 3:27). Spanish 'se alteró' captures the involuntary, reflexive quality: something happens to the subject rather than by the subject's will. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE
en: (qere:changed), [ketiv:changed], change | es: (se-alteró), [se-alteró], cambiaba | fr: changer | de: veraendern Dan 2:9; Dan 3:19; Dan 3:27; Dan 5:6

2. be different, diverse (5×) The stative sense — to be different or diverse — clusters in Daniel 7's vision of the four beasts, where each kingdom 'is different from' (מִן) the others (Dan 7:3, 7, 19, 23, 24). This is not change over time but inherent distinctiveness. The preposition מִן marks comparison, and Spanish 'diferente/diferentes' confirms this is a quality-of-being rather than a process-of-becoming, distinguishing it clearly from the dynamic change of Sense 1. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE
en: different, will-be-different | es: diferente, diferentes, era-diferente | fr: changer | de: veraendern Dan 7:3; Dan 7:7; Dan 7:19; Dan 7:23; Dan 7:24

3. change, alter (causative) (5×) The active-transitive causative sense appears when a powerful agent deliberately alters something: God changes times and seasons (Dan 2:21), the saints' persecutor intends to change times and law (Dan 7:25), and three men changed the king's word by refusing to bow (Dan 3:28). Ezra 6:11-12 extends

this to royal edicts — anyone who alters the decree faces destruction. Spanish 'cambia/cambiar' and the active constructions confirm volitional agency. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: alters, changed, changes | es: cambia, cambiar, cambie | fr: changer | de: [יהשנא], [להשניה], veraendern Ezra 6:11; Ezra 6:12; Dan 2:21; Dan 3:28; Dan 7:25

4. be changed (passive of decree/edict) (3×) The passive counterpart to Sense 3, focusing on decrees and edicts as subjects that 'are changed' or 'cannot be changed.' Daniel 6:8 and 6:15 invoke the famous immutability of the laws of the Medes and Persians — the decree 'cannot be changed.' Daniel 4:16 applies the passive to Nebuchadnezzar's heart being changed from human to animal. Spanish 'puede ser cambiada' and 'sea cambiado' reflect the passive voice precisely, emphasizing the decree's status rather than any agent's action. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: let-be-changed, to-be-changed | es: puede-ser-cambiada, sea-cambiado | fr: changer | de: veraendern Dan 4:16; Dan 6:8; Dan 6:15

שִׁנְאָב H8134 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shinab; personal name of a king of Admah who fought in the Valley of Siddim alongside other Canaanite kings

Shinab was king of Admah, one of the cities of the plain mentioned in Genesis 14. He appears in the narrative of the battle of the kings, where he and his allies fought against the eastern coalition led by Chedorlaomer. Admah would later be destroyed along with Sodom and Gomorrah (Deuteronomy 29:23), making Shinab one of the rulers of the doomed cities. His name is preserved in the biblical record as part of the historical backdrop to Abraham's rescue of Lot.

(1×) The personal name of the king of Admah in Genesis 14:2. All major language glosses provide transliterations: English 'Shinab,' Spanish 'Sinab,' French 'Shinab,' German 'Schinab.' The Septuagint curiously renders this as Σενναρ (Sennaar), which elsewhere represents Shinar—an apparent textual confusion noted by BDB, which compares the LXX rendering of Shinar in verse 1. Shinab joined with Bera king of Sodom, Birsha king of Gomorrah, and other local rulers in rebellion against Chedorlaomer, an alliance that ultimately failed and led to the capture of Lot and the plunder of the cities. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shinab | es: Sinab | fr: Shinab | de: Schinab Gen 14:2

שִׁנְאָה H8135 Prep-m / N-fsc / 2ms (17×)

Hatred; deep hostility or aversion, whether human enmity, sexual revulsion, or divine displeasure.

The primary abstract noun for hatred in the Hebrew Bible, sin'ah covers a spectrum from personal animosity to national enmity to theological judgment. Proverbs contrasts it with love: 'hatred stirs up strife, but love covers all offenses' (Prov 10:12). In 2 Samuel 13:15 it names the violent sexual revulsion Amnon felt toward Tamar – a hatred 'greater than the love' he had feigned. The Psalms apply it to the hostility surrounding the righteous (Ps 25:19; 109:3, 5), and Deuteronomy uses it of God's supposed hatred to describe Israel's faithless accusation against the LORD (Deut 1:27; 9:28).

hatred (as emotion or disposition) (17×) Hatred as an emotion, disposition, or sustained hostile attitude. In wisdom literature it opposes love ('ahavah) and produces strife and concealment (Prov 10:12, 18; 15:17; 26:26). In narrative it can denote intense sexual revulsion (2 Sam 13:15). The Psalms speak of 'words of hatred' surrounding the innocent (Ps 109:3, 5) and of righteous hatred of God's enemies (Ps 139:22). Deuteronomy records Israel's bitter charge that God brought them out of Egypt 'out of hatred' (Deut 1:27; 9:28), and Ezekiel 35:11 attributes destructive hatred to Edom. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-hatred, and-because-of-his-hatred, and-hatred | es: con-odio, el-odio, odio | fr: [ושנאה], [ושנאת], [שנאה] | de: [בשנאה], [ושנאה], [משנאתיך] Num 35:20; Deut 1:27; Deut 9:28; 2Sam 13:15

שְׁנְאָן H8136 N-ms (1×)

repetition, possibly 'thousands twice-told' or 'redoubled thousands'; a disputed term in poetic parallelism

This rare noun appears only in Psalm 68:17 in a notoriously difficult phrase describing God's chariots. The term seems to denote repetition or doubling, leading interpreters to understand 'thousands of repetition' as an emphatic way of saying 'thousands upon thousands'—a Hebrew idiom for innumerable multitude. The poetic context celebrates God's power and the vast heavenly host at his command. Scholars debate both the vocalization and the precise meaning, with some treating part of the phrase as a textual gloss.

(1×) Denotes repetition or doubling, used to express vast numerical magnitude in Psalm 68:17. The phrase אַלְפֵי שְׁנְאָן (alphey shin'an) literally means 'thousands of repetition' or 'redoubled thousands,' a poetic way of saying innumerable multitudes. English glosses this as 'repeating' and Spanish as 'repetición,' both capturing the concept of multiplication or duplication. French retains 'Shinân' as a transliteration, while German uses 'repeating.' The context describes the chariots of God as 'twice ten thousand, thousands of repetition,' piling up numerical expressions to convey the incomprehensible vastness of the divine host accompanying the Lord from Sinai to his sanctuary. COUNTING AND NARRATING

en: repeating | es: repetición | fr: Shinân | de: repeating Ps 68:17

שְׁנְאַצַּר H8137 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shenazzar; personal name of a son of King Jehoiachin listed among the royal descendants in 1 Chronicles Shenazzar appears in the genealogy of Judah's royal line as one of the sons of Jehoiachin (Jeconiah), the exiled king. His name is listed in 1 Chronicles 3:18 among the descendants who carried the Davidic bloodline through the Babylonian exile. Some scholars have proposed identifying him with Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah who led the first return from exile, though this identification remains disputed. The name preserves the memory of the royal family's survival through the catastrophe of exile.

(1×) Personal name of a son of King Jehoiachin in the royal genealogy of 1 Chronicles 3:18. The form ושנאצר (we-Shen'atzar) includes the conjunction 'and,' appearing in a list of Jehoiachin's sons born in Babylonian captivity. Spanish provides 'Senatsar,' while French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew form. The Septuagint renders it as Σανεσαρ or Σανασαρ. His uncle (or he himself, if identified with Sheshbazzar) played a role in the early return from exile, making this name part of the crucial link in the preservation of the Davidic line through the exile period. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Shen'atstsar | es: y-Senatsar | fr: [ושנאצר] | de: [ושנאצר] 1Chr 3:18

שָׁנָה H8138a Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (13×)

To change, alter, be different; also to disguise oneself, pervert, or transfer from one place to another.

A versatile Hebrew verb rooted in the idea of transformation and alteration. In its Piel stem it actively changes something — a name, a behavior, a decree — while the Qal captures the intransitive sense of being different or undergoing change. The reflexive Hitpael vividly pictures someone altering their own appearance to become unrecognizable, as when Jeroboam's wife disguised herself (1 Kgs 14:2). The same root can darken into the sense of perverting justice (Prov 31:5) or lighten into the practical meaning of transferring someone to a new location (Esth 2:9). Spanish and French translations consistently use 'cambiar' and 'changer,' confirming the core semantic center of transformation.

1. change, alter (tr.) (6×) The active Piel sense of deliberately altering or modifying something — a person's behavior, a name, or a set of circumstances. David 'changed his behavior' before Achish (1 Sam 21:14), and God declares He will not alter the faithfulness that has gone from His lips (Ps 89:34). Spanish 'cambiaré' and French 'changer' map cleanly here, underscoring the transitive, intentional act of making something different from what it was. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: I-will-change, and-he-changed, changing | es: cambiando, cambiaré, cuando-cambió | fr: [לשנות], changer, dans-changer | de: [לשנות], ich-wird-change, und-Jahr 1Sam 21:14; Job 14:20; Ps 34:1; Ps 89:34; Jer 2:36

2. be different, change (intr.) (4×) The intransitive Qal sense of being different, diverging, or undergoing change. In Esther 1:7 the gold vessels are described as 'differing' from one another, and Esther 3:8 notes that Jewish laws are 'different' from those of other peoples. Malachi 3:6 uses this sense theologically: 'I the LORD do not change.' The Spanish 'diferentes' and the underlying semantic weight confirm a stative quality — not doing the changing but being in a state of difference. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: I-change, different, differing | es: cambio, diferentes, los-que-cambian | fr: [שׁונים], années-de, changer | de: [שׁונים], [שׁנות], [שׁניתי] Esth 1:7; Esth 3:8; Prov 24:21; Mal 3:6

3. disguise oneself (1×) The Hitpael reflexive sense of disguising oneself — literally 'changing oneself' so as to become unrecognizable. Attested once in 1 Kings 14:2 when Ahijah's wife is told to alter her appearance before visiting the prophet. The reflexive morphology perfectly captures the self-directed nature of the transformation. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: and-disguise-yourself | es: y-disfrázate | fr: et-disguise-toi-même | de: und-disguise-dich-selbst 1Kgs 14:2

4. pervert, distort (1×) A Piel usage with distinctly negative connotation: to pervert or distort. In Proverbs 31:5, strong drink threatens to make a king 'change' (i.e., pervert) the rights of the afflicted. Spanish 'y-pervierta' captures the moral distortion — this is not neutral alteration but wrongful twisting of what should remain straight. CROOKED PERVERTED en: and-pervert | es: y-pervierta | fr: et-וישנה | de: [וישנה] Prov 31:5

5. move, transfer (1×) A Piel sense of physical relocation — to move or transfer someone from one place to another. In Esther 2:9, the king 'moved' Esther and her attendants to the best quarters in the harem. Spanish 'y-la-trasladó' (and-he-transferred-her) makes the spatial, logistical sense unmistakable, distinguishing it from the abstract senses of alteration. TRANSFER AND CHANGE

en: and-he-moved-her | es: y-la-trasladó | fr: [וישנה] | de: [וישנה] Esth 2:9

שְׁנָה H8138b V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (9×)

To repeat or do again; to perform an action a second time, whether a physical deed or spoken word.

A verb conveying the idea of doing something a second time or repeating an action. In narrative contexts, it often appears after a decisive blow — as when Abner struck a man and did not need to strike again (2 Sam 20:10), or when David's companion urged him to let him pin Saul to the ground and assured him he would not need to repeat the thrust (1 Sam 26:8). Elijah dramatically commands the servants to pour water a second time and then a third (1 Kgs 18:34). The Arabic cognate meaning 'bend, fold, double' illuminates the root's core notion of doubling or folding back upon an action already performed.

1. repeat, do again (8×) To do a second time or repeat an action. The Qal forms consistently express active repetition — striking again in battle (1 Sam 26:8; 2 Sam 20:10), pouring water repeatedly on the altar (1 Kgs 18:34), returning to a transgression (Prov 26:11 — 'as a dog returns to its vomit, so a fool repeats his folly'), or harping on a matter (Prov 17:9). Spanish 'repetid' and English 'I-will-repeat' confirm this straightforward iterative meaning across all attestations. ADDING AND CONTINUING en: I-will-repeat, and-they-did-a-second-time, but-repeating | es: Repetid, que-repite, repetiré | fr: [תשנן], et-ils-fit-un-deuxième-temps, et-ושנה | de: [ישנו], [שׁונה], [תשנו] 1Sam 26:8; 2Sam 20:10; 1Kgs 18:34; Neh 13:21

2. be repeated (1×) The Nifal passive form denoting something being repeated or doubled. In Gen 41:32, Joseph explains that Pharaoh's dream was 'repeated' (doubled) because the matter is firmly established by God. The passive construction shifts focus from the agent to the event itself — the dream's repetition signals divine certainty. Spanish 'repetirse' (to be repeated, reflexive) captures the passive nuance well. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-repeating-of | es: repetirse | fr: le-repeating-de | de: - Gen 41:32

שְׁנָה H8139 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

sleep; the state of rest that eluded King Darius during Daniel's ordeal in the lions' den

This Aramaic noun refers to the natural state of sleep, appearing in Daniel 6:18 where it describes what King Darius could not experience during the night after Daniel was thrown to the lions. The text says his sleep fled from him, vividly capturing the king's agitation and concern for the prophet. Sleep in biblical literature often represents peace, security, and trust in God's protection—making its absence a marker of distress or guilt.

(1×) The state of sleep that abandoned King Darius during his vigil. The Aramaic form ושנתה (u-shinteh) literally means 'and his sleep,' with the pronominal suffix indicating possession. English renders this as 'and-his-sleep' and Spanish as 'y-su-sueño' (and his dream/sleep), both capturing the personal nature of the king's sleeplessness. French curiously glosses 'et-changer' (and to change), possibly reflecting a different textual understanding or translation tradition. The phrase 'his sleep fled from him' in Daniel 6:18 uses vivid imagery to convey Darius's emotional turmoil and perhaps his guilty conscience for being manipulated into condemning an innocent man. SLEEP AND SLUMBER en: and-his-sleep | es: y-su-sueño | fr: et-changer | de: [ושנתה] Dan 6:18

שְׁנָה H8140 Prep-b / N-fsc (7×)

year — Aramaic noun for a unit of time spanning twelve months, used in dating and duration

Shenah is the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew shanah, appearing seven times in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. It serves exclusively for chronological reference — dating royal decrees ('in the first year of Cyrus,' Ezr 5:13), marking construction milestones ('in the sixth year,' Ezr 6:15), and noting durations ('many years,' Ezr 5:11). The plural shenin appears for 'sixty-two years' in Daniel 6:1. Across all languages the rendering is straightforward: Spanish 'ano,' French 'annee,' German 'Jahr' — pure temporal measurement with no figurative extension.

year(s) (7×) An Aramaic feminine noun denoting a year, used in the construct singular (shenat) for dating events by regnal years ('the first year of Cyrus,' Ezr 5:13; 'the second year,' Ezr 4:24; 'the sixth year,' Ezr 6:15) and in the plural (shenin) for counting durations ('many years,' Ezr 5:11; 'sixty-two years,' Dan 6:1). Cognate with Hebrew shanah and functioning identically as a calendrical time unit. Spanish 'ano' and English 'year' confirm the uniform temporal sense across all seven occurrences. YEAR (TIME UNIT)

en: in-year, in-year-of, year | es: En-año, año, años | fr: [שׁנין], [שׁנת], année | de: [שׁנין], [שׁנת], im-Jahr Ezra 4:24; Ezra 5:11; Ezra 5:13; Ezra 6:3; Ezra 6:15

שָׁנָה H8141 Prep-b / N-fs (880×)

shanah – year; the primary Hebrew unit for measuring extended time periods

The feminine noun shanah ('year') is the fundamental Hebrew term for annual time reckoning, appearing 880 times across every genre and period. It structures genealogies ('Adam lived 930 years,' Gen 5:5), dates royal reigns ('in the third year of King So-and-so'), marks agricultural and liturgical cycles ('three times in the year,' Exod 23:14), and measures prophetic periods ('seventy years,' Jer 25:11). The word occurs in singular, dual (shenatayim, 'two years'), and plural forms, with construct chains and every prepositional prefix, yet none of these inflections create distinct senses. Spanish anos, French ans, and German Jahre all render it uniformly.

year, unit of time (880×) The standard unit of annual time measurement, used for genealogical ages (Gen 5:3-5), regnal dating, sabbatical and jubilee cycles (Lev 25:4, 10), and prophetic time spans. Singular, dual, and plural forms – along with every prepositional and construct combination – all point to a single undifferentiated temporal concept. Cross-lingual glosses converge cleanly: Spanish anos, French ans, German Jahre, confirming no polysemy across 880 occurrences. YEAR (TIME UNIT)

en: year, years | es: años | fr: an, ans | de: Jahre Gen 5:3; Gen 5:4; Gen 5:5; Gen 5:6

שְׁנָה H8142 Conj-w / N-fsc / 1cs (23×)

Sleep, slumber; the state of bodily rest and reduced consciousness, used literally and figuratively for negligence

A feminine noun for the natural state of sleep, often appearing in vivid narrative moments: Jacob waking from his dream at Bethel (Gen 28:16), Laban's sheep robbing Jacob of rest (Gen 31:40), Samson stirring unaware from Delilah's lap (Judg 16:14, 20), and the king of Persia whose sleep fled him on a fateful night (Esth 6:1). Wisdom literature uses it proverbially, warning the sluggard against excessive slumber (Prov 6:4, 9-10; 20:13) while acknowledging its sweetness for the laborer (Eccl 5:11). German and French translations occasionally render it with cognates of 'year' due to the homographic root, but contextually the meaning is always sleep.

sleep, slumber (23×) The physical state of sleep or slumber, covering natural nightly rest and, by extension, lethargy. Frequently paired with tenumah ('drowsiness') in Proverbs (6:4, 10; 24:33). The idiom 'sleep fled from my eyes' (Gen 31:40; Esth 6:1) portrays it as something divinely disruptable. Spanish sueno and French dormir confirm a unified sense. SLEEP AND SLUMBER

en: a-sleep, a-sleep-of-, and-my-sleep | es: de-su-sueño, de-sueño-suyo, de-tu-sueño | fr: [ושנתי], [שנת], de-dormir-son | de: Jahr, [ושנתי], [משנתו] Gen 28:16; Gen 31:40; Judg 16:14; Judg 16:20; Esth 6:1

שֶׁנְהַבִּים H8143 N-mp (2×)

Ivory, or possibly 'ivory and ebony'; luxury goods imported by Solomon

A noun of uncertain meaning, appearing in the lists of Solomon's imports via the Tarshish fleet in 1 Kings 10:22 and 2 Chronicles 9:21. Traditional interpretation, reflected in many English versions, reads this as 'ivory,' though the Hebrew form is unusual (normally just שֵׁן, 'tooth/ivory,' is used). Some scholars propose emending the text to read 'ivory and ebony,' treating הָבְנִים as ebony (compare Ezekiel 27:15). The Septuagint and Vulgate support 'ivory' or 'elephant teeth.' Whatever the exact identification, the term denotes a luxury import, part of Solomon's wealth and international trade. The multilingual glosses uniformly favor 'ivory.'

(2×) Solomon's Tarshish fleet brought exotic goods—gold, silver, ivory, apes, peacocks—symbolizing the king's vast wealth and far-reaching trade networks. Whether שֶׁנְהַבִּים means 'ivory' alone or 'ivory and ebony,' the term contributes to the portrait of Solomonic splendor. The unusual form has puzzled interpreters, leading to emendations and varied translations, but the core sense—precious, imported material—is stable. The repetition in Kings and Chronicles confirms the tradition, and the cross-linguistic agreement on 'ivory' shows the influence of ancient lexical decisions. IVORY MATERIAL

en: ivory | es: marfil | fr: [שנהבים], ivory | de: [שנהבים], ivory 1Kgs 10:22; 2Chr 9:21

שָׁנִי H8144 Art / N-ms (42×)

Scarlet, crimson; the vivid red color or dye derived from the kermes insect, used for fabrics, garments, and thread

Referring to the brilliant red dye extracted from the kermes insect (coccus ilicis), this noun names both the color itself and objects dyed with it. The Tabernacle narratives pair scarlet yarn with blue and purple in an iconic triad of costly colors (Exod 25:4; 26:1), while the priestly purification rituals specify scarlet thread alongside cedar and hyssop (Lev 14:4; Num 19:6). Outside the cult, scarlet marks identity and promise: the midwife ties a scarlet thread on Zerah's wrist (Gen 38:28), and Rahab hangs a scarlet cord from her window as a sign of salvation (Josh 2:18). Isaiah's haunting image – 'though your sins are like scarlet' (Isa 1:18) – draws on the dye's famous permanence to dramatize the seeming impossibility of forgiveness.

1. scarlet, crimson color/dye (38×) The color scarlet or crimson, derived from the kermes insect dye, used attributively of fabrics, garments, and materials. Spanish 'escarlata' and German 'Karmesin/scharlachrot' both preserve the rich chromatic specificity. This sense pervades the Tabernacle construction (Exod 25:4; 26:1,31,36) and priestly vestments (Exod 28:5-8), where scarlet appears in a fixed triad with blue and purple. It also colors royal garments (2 Sam 1:24), the clothing of the virtuous woman (Prov 31:21), and Isaiah's metaphor for indelible sin (Isa 1:18), where French 'écarlate' captures the same dye-fast permanence that makes the image so striking. RED AND SCARLET

en: scarlet, the-scarlet | es: escarlata, la-escarlata | fr: le-écarlate, écarlate | de: Karmesin, das-Karmesin, scharlachrot Gen 38:28; Gen 38:30; Exod 25:4; Exod 26:1; Exod 26:31

2. scarlet thread/yarn (4×) Scarlet thread or yarn as a distinct physical object serving as a marker or sign. While the color sense is attributive, this usage treats the scarlet material as a concrete, identifiable item. The midwife ties scarlet yarn on Zerah's hand to mark the firstborn (Gen 38:28,30), and Rahab's scarlet cord in her window becomes a covenant sign of deliverance (Josh 2:18,21). The Song of Songs compares the beloved's lips to a thread of scarlet (Song 4:3). In the Exodus materials lists (Exod 35:6,23,25), 'scarlet' names a specific commodity brought as an offering – yarn or fiber ready for weaving. RED AND SCARLET

en: the-yarn, yarn | es: escarlata, la-escarlata | fr: le-yarn, yarn | de: der-yarn, yarn Exod 35:6; Exod 35:23; Exod 35:25; Exod 35:35

שֵׁנִי H8145 Art / Number-ofs (157×)

Second (ordinal numeral); used adverbially as 'a second time'; rarely of a second story or tier.

A common ordinal numeral meaning 'second,' appearing in masculine (שֵׁנִי) and feminine (שֵׁנִית) forms throughout the Hebrew Bible. It marks sequence in time ('the second day,' 'the second year'), rank ('the second son'), and repetition ('a second time,' as in Gen 22:15 where the angel calls to Abraham again). The translations across languages consistently render it as a straightforward ordinal — Spanish 'el segundo,' French 'le deuxième,' German 'der zweite' — confirming its uniform semantic profile. One occurrence at 1 Kings 7:23 appears to reflect a homograph meaning 'lip, brim' rather than the ordinal.

1. ordinal: second (156×) The ordinal number 'second' across all grammatical forms — definite and indefinite, masculine and feminine, with prepositions and conjunctions. Used temporally ('the second day,' Gen 7:11; 'the second year,' Gen 47:18), sequentially ('the second son,' Gen 41:52), and adverbially meaning 'a second time' or 'again' (Gen 22:15; Mal 2:13). Multilingual glosses uniformly confirm ordinal meaning: Spanish 'el segundo/la segunda,' French 'le deuxième,' German 'der zweite/dem zweiten.' SECOND (ORDINAL NUMBER)

en: the-second | es: el-segundo, la-segunda | fr: le-deuxième | de: dem-zweiten, der-zweite, des-zweiten Gen 2:13; Gen 7:11; Gen 8:14; Gen 32:19; Gen 41:52

2. lip, brim, edge (1×) A single occurrence at 1 Kings 7:23 where the form appears to denote 'lip' or 'brim' of the molten sea, likely a homograph or tagging anomaly placing it under the ordinal root rather than a separate noun. The multilingual glosses — English 'its brim,' Spanish 'borde de él,' French 'son brim' — all point to a physical edge or rim, sharply distinct from the ordinal usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: its-brim | es: borde-de-él | fr: son-brim | de: sein-brim 1Kgs 7:23

שְׂנִיא H8146 Prep-l (1×)

hated (wife); referring to a wife who is unloved or less favored in a polygamous household

This adjective describes a wife who is 'hated' or more accurately 'unloved' or 'less loved' in the context of polygamous marriages. Deuteronomy 21:15-17 addresses the legal rights of the firstborn son even when his mother is the less-favored wife, protecting him from being disinherited in favor of a son from the beloved wife. The term reflects the social reality of competitive plural marriages where affection was unequally distributed, creating potential for injustice that the law sought to prevent.

(1×) Describes the less-favored or unloved wife in a polygamous marriage context. The form לשניאה (la-seni'ah) means 'to/of the hated one,' appearing in Deuteronomy 21:15 in legislation protecting the inheritance rights of the firstborn regardless of maternal favoritism. English renders 'to-the-hated,' Spanish 'de-la-aborrecida' (of the abhorred one), French 'à-le-hated,' and German 'zu-der-hasste' (to the hated). BDB notes this should probably read השנואה (ha-senu'ah) as in the surrounding verses, using the more common participial form. The law's concern is that a man not elevate the son of the loved wife over the rightful firstborn of the unloved wife, ensuring that inheritance follows birth order rather than parental favoritism. HATRED AND HOSTILITY

en: to-the-hated | es: de-la-aborrecida | fr: à-le-hated | de: zu-der-hasste Deut 21:15

שְׁנַיִם H8147 Prep-m / Number-fdc (769×)

Two, both, a pair; the cardinal numeral for two in masculine and feminine dual forms, also used in compound numbers.

Shenayim (masculine) and shtayim (feminine) are the Hebrew dual forms of the cardinal number two — among the most frequent numerals in Scripture at 769 occurrences. Beyond simple counting, this word carries a surprising semantic range. With pronominal suffixes it becomes the pronoun 'both of them' (shenehem), shifting from arithmetic to totality. In construct with 'asar/esreh it forms the compound 'twelve,' a number of immense biblical significance — twelve tribes, twelve apostles, twelve gates of the New Jerusalem. A small but legally significant cluster means 'double' or 'twofold,' as in the restitution laws of Exodus 22. The dual morphology itself is a fossil of the Proto-Semitic dual number, preserved in Arabic ithnan and Aramaic trein.

1. cardinal number two (666×) The basic cardinal numeral 'two,' used to count pairs of persons, objects, time units, or measurements — 666 occurrences, by far the dominant sense. Lamech takes 'two wives' (Gen 4:19); Methuselah lives 'two and eighty and seven hundred years' (Gen 5:26); Moses receives 'two tablets of stone' (Exod 31:18). The multilingual evidence is trivially unanimous: Spanish dos, French deux, German zwei, Arabic ithnayn, Korean 둘, and Swahili mbili all select their basic cardinal numeral. Both masculine (shenayim) and feminine (shtayim) forms appear, agreeing with the gender of the counted noun as expected in Semitic grammar. NUMBER TWO TWELVE

en: two | es: dos | fr: deux | de: und-zwei, zwei Gen 4:19; Gen 5:18; Gen 5:20; Gen 5:26; Gen 5:28

2. both (pronominal) (73×) Pronominal 'both' — 73 occurrences where suffixed forms (shenehem, shenenu, sheneykhem, etc.) mean 'both of them/us/you,' emphasizing the completeness or totality of a pair rather than merely counting. Adam and Eve 'were both naked' (Gen 2:25); Abraham and Abimelech 'both swore an oath' (Gen 21:31); Abraham and Isaac 'went both of them together' toward Moriah (Gen 22:6, 8). Spanish ambos, French tous deux, Korean 둘 다, and German beide all shift from cardinal-numeral to totality-pronoun vocabulary, confirming a genuine pronominal function distinct from simple enumeration. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: both-of-them | es: ambos, dos-de-ellos, los-dos | fr: les-deux-de-eux, tous-deux-de-eux | de: beide-von-ihnen, die-beiden Gen 2:25; Gen 21:27; Gen 21:31; Gen 22:6; Gen 22:8

3. twelve (compound numeral) (27×) The construct component in the compound numeral 'twelve' (shenem 'asar / shtem 'esreh) — 27 occurrences including ordinal 'twelfth' in dating formulas. Moses sets up twelve pillars (Exod 24:4); the high priest's breastplate has twelve stones for the twelve tribes (Exod 28:21); the showbread consists of twelve loaves (Lev 24:5). Spanish doce, French douze, and German zwolf all use dedicated compound-numeral forms rather than 'two + ten,' while Korean 열둘 and Arabic ithna 'ashar preserve the compositional structure. The theological weight of 'twelve' in Israel's tribal system makes this compound form culturally central. NUMBER TWO TWELVE

en: and-twelve, and-two, and-two- | es: Y-doce, con-las-doce, doce | fr: avec-le-deux, deux, deux- | de: fuer-zwei, fuer-zwoelf, in-Jahre Exod 24:4; Exod 28:21; Exod 39:14; Lev 24:5

4. (3×) Multiplicative 'double, twofold' — 3 occurrences in the restitution laws of Exodus 22, where a thief must pay back 'double' (shenayim) what was stolen (Exod 22:4, 7, 9). English 'double,' Spanish el doble, French double, and German doppelt all select multiplicative vocabulary rather than cardinal-numeral glosses, confirming a distinct quantitative-ratio sense. The shift from 'two items' to 'twice the amount' is a natural but real semantic extension, and its restriction to legal-compensatory contexts in the Hebrew Bible gives it a specialized juridical flavor. DOUBLE TWOFOLD

en: double | es: el-doble | fr: double | de: double Exod 22:4; Exod 22:7; Exod 22:9

שְׁנִינָה H8148 Prep-l / N-fs (4×)

sharp word, taunt, byword; a cutting, mocking saying or proverbial object of scorn among the nations

This noun refers to sharp, cutting words—specifically taunts or bywords that make someone an object of scorn. It appears in contexts of covenant curse and judgment. Deuteronomy 28:37 warns that disobedient Israel will become 'a horror, a proverb, and a byword among all peoples.' 1 Kings 9:7 and 2 Chronicles 7:20 repeat the warning concerning the temple: it will become 'a proverb and a byword' if Israel turns from God. Jeremiah 24:9 pronounces the same fate on those remaining in the land. The multilingual glosses (Spanish burla/escarnio 'mockery', French byword) capture both the sharp quality and the public shame. This is verbal humiliation codified into proverbial form—when Israel's name becomes a punchline among the nations.

(4×) A sharp, cutting word or taunt; specifically a byword or proverbial saying that makes someone an object of public scorn. Used in covenant curse contexts: Israel will become a byword among nations if they disobey (Deut 28:37, 1 Kgs 9:7, 2 Chr 7:20, Jer 24:9). This is not just insult but codified mockery—when a people's shame becomes proverbial, their name invoked as an example of divine judgment. The sharpness (sheninah, related to 'tooth') suggests biting, pointed ridicule. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: and-as-a-byword, and-for-byword, and-for-taunt | es: para-escarnio, y-para-burla, y-por-burla | fr: [ולשנינה], [לשנינה], et-pour-byword | de: [ולשנינה], [לשנינה], und-fuer-byword Deut 28:37; 1Kgs 9:7; 2Chr 7:20; Jer 24:9

שְׂנִיר H8149 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (4×)

Senir; Amorite name for (all or part of) Mount Hermon, source of cypress timber and associated with northern borders

This is the Amorite name for Mount Hermon, or possibly its northern peaks. Deuteronomy 3:9 explains that 'the Sidonians call Hermon Sirion, but the Amorites call it Senir,' preserving alternate regional names for the mountain. Song of Songs 4:8 poetically invokes 'from the peak of Senir and Hermon' as remote, wild heights. 1 Chronicles 5:23 uses it as a geographical boundary marker. Ezekiel 27:5 mentions that Tyre's shipbuilders used cypress from Senir to make ship planks. The multilingual glosses transliterate consistently (Spanish/French/German Senir). This regional toponym reflects the multi-ethnic geography of ancient Syria-Palestine, where mountains bore different names in different languages—Phoenician, Amorite, Israelite—each group claiming its own relationship to the landscape.

(4×) Amorite name for Mount Hermon or its northern peaks (Deut 3:9 explains the different regional names). Used as northern boundary marker (1 Chr 5:23), poetic image of remote heights (Song 4:8), and source of cypress timber for Phoenician shipbuilding (Ezek 27:5). The preservation of this Amorite toponym in Hebrew scripture reflects the multilingual, multi-ethnic reality of the ancient Near East, where the same mountain bore different names depending on who was speaking. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Senir, and-Senir, from-Senir | es: Senir, de-Senir, y-Senir | fr: Schinéar, Senir, [ושניר] | de: Senir, [ושניר], [משניר] Deut 3:9; 1Chr 5:23; Song 4:8; Ezek 27:5

שָׁנַן H8150 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (9×)

To sharpen, whet (a blade or tongue); to teach diligently by repetition; to be pierced inwardly

At its root, this verb means to make sharp — whether a sword's edge, an arrow's point, or the piercing sting of hostile speech. The Psalmists repeatedly use it for tongues 'sharpened like swords' (Ps 64:3; 140:3), blending the physical and verbal senses of cutting. In Deuteronomy 32:41, God himself sharpens his flashing sword for judgment. Perhaps most beloved is the Piel in Deuteronomy 6:7 — 'you shall teach them diligently to your children' — where the metaphor shifts from sharpening blades to impressing words indelibly upon hearts, as one might engrave upon stone.

1. to sharpen (Qal: blade/weapon) (7×) Sharpening or whetting a blade, arrow, or weapon (Qal). Includes both active forms ('I sharpen my flashing sword,' Deut 32:41) and passive participles ('sharpened arrows,' Isa 5:28; Ps 45:5). Frequently metaphorical: tongues sharpened like swords for slanderous speech (Ps 64:3; 140:3; 120:4). Spanish 'afilaron/afilada' and English 'sharpened/sharp' consistently reflect the cutting-edge imagery across seven occurrences. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS en: I-sharpen, are-sharp, sharp | es: Afilaron, afilada, afiladas | fr: [שׁנונים], aiguiser, je-sharpen | de: [שׁנון], [שׁנונים], ich-sharpen Deut 32:41; Ps 45:5; Ps 64:3; Ps 120:4; Ps 140:3

2. to teach diligently (Piel: impress/repeat) (1×) Teaching diligently or impressing knowledge through repetition (Piel intensive). A single but theologically foundational occurrence in the Shema passage (Deut 6:7): parents are to 'sharpen' God's words into their children. Spanish 'las repetirás' (you shall repeat them) captures the iterative-impression nuance — not merely to teach, but to engrave through persistent rehearsal. The metaphorical leap from blade to pedagogy is characteristically Hebrew. TEACHING AND LEARNING

en: and-you-shall-teach-them-diligently | es: y-las-repetirás | fr: et-tu-devra-enseigner-eux-diligently | de: und-du-soll-lehren-ihnen-diligently Deut 6:7

3. to be pierced (Hitpael: reflexive/passive) (1×) Being pierced or stung inwardly (Hitpael reflexive/passive). In Ps 73:21, the psalmist describes inner torment — 'my heart was embittered and I was pierced in my kidneys.' Spanish 'eran punzados' (they were pricked) and Hindi convey the sharp internal anguish, a reflexive experience of the same sharpness that elsewhere cuts outward. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS en: were-pierced | es: eran-punzados | fr: aiguiser | de: waren-durchbohrt Ps 73:21

שָׁנַס H8151 Conj-w | V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

to gird up (loins); preparing for strenuous action by tucking up one's robe

This verb in the Piel stem describes the action of girding up one's loins—tucking the long robe into the belt to free the legs for running or vigorous activity. It appears in 1 Kings 18:46 where Elijah, empowered by the Spirit, girds up his loins and outruns Ahab's chariot from Mount Carmel to Jezreel. The phrase captures the physical preparation needed for extraordinary exertion, becoming an idiom for readiness and determined action.

(1×) Describes Elijah's physical preparation for supernatural running in 1 Kings 18:46. The form וישנס (vay-shanes) is a Piel consecutive imperfect, literally 'and he girded.' English glosses 'and-girded,' Spanish 'y-se-ciñó' (and he girded himself), French 'et-ceignit' (and girded), and German 'und-girded.' The phrase 'he girded up his loins and ran' precedes Elijah's miraculous feat of outrunning the royal chariot through the power of God's hand upon him. This verb reflects the practical necessity of securing loose garments before vigorous physical activity, but in context it emphasizes the prophet's readiness for the extraordinary task God enabled him to accomplish. GIRDING AND DRESSING en: and-girded | es: y-se-ciñó | fr: et-ceignit | de: und-girded 1Kgs 18:46

שִׁנְעָר H8152 Conj-w (8×)

Shinar: the ancient Mesopotamian region associated with Babel and Babylon, covering the plain of early human settlement and later exile.

Refers to the land of Shinar, the biblical name for southern Mesopotamia encompassing the territory of Babel and later Babylon. It first appears as the setting for humanity's earliest post-Flood urbanization (Gen 10:10; 11:2) and the Tower of Babel narrative. In prophetic texts it becomes a symbol of exile and divine judgment: Daniel was carried to the 'land of Shinar' (Dan 1:2), and Zechariah envisions wickedness transported there in a basket (Zech 5:11). The Septuagint typically renders it Sennaar, while Zechariah's Greek text substitutes 'Babylon' outright, confirming the identification ancient readers took for granted.

Shinar (place name) (8×) The proper geographical name for the alluvial plain of southern Mesopotamia, identified with Sumer and later Babylonia. Genesis uses it for the territory of Nimrod's kingdom (Gen 10:10) and the site of the Tower of Babel (Gen 11:2). It appears in the patriarchal narrative as the domain of King Amraphel (Gen 14:1, 9). Joshua 7:21 mentions a 'garment of Shinar' among Achan's plunder, attesting to the region's reputation for fine textiles. Prophetically, Isaiah 11:11 lists it as a land of Jewish diaspora, and Daniel 1:2 uses it as an archaic name for Babylon. The LXX rendering Sennaar preserves the Hebrew form, while Zechariah 5:11 translates directly as 'Babylon,' showing the equivalence was well understood. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shin'ar, Shinar, and-from-Shinar | es: Shinar, Shinár, Sinar | fr: Schinear, Shinar, [ומשנער] | de: Schinar, Shinar, [ומשנער] Gen 10:10; Gen 11:2; Gen 14:1; Gen 14:9; Josh 7:21

שֵׁנָה H8153 N-fsc (1×)

sleep; the natural state of rest that restores body and soul, often metaphorically significant

This Hebrew noun denotes the physical state of sleep, appearing in various forms throughout the Old Testament. Sleep represents rest, peace, and trust in God's care, while its absence signals distress or vigilance. The psalmists speak of sleep as God's gift to the beloved (Psalm 127:2) and vow vigilance in seeking God's house ('I will not give sleep to my eyes,' Psalm 132:4). Proverbs warns against excessive sleep leading to poverty but also recognizes sleep as necessary refreshment. The word carries both literal and metaphorical weight in wisdom and worship literature.

(1×) The physical state of sleep, used in Psalm 132:4 in David's vow of dedication. The form שנת (shenat), construct state of שֵׁנָה, appears in the phrase 'I will not give sleep to my eyes' (לֹא־אתן שנת לעיני). English, Spanish, French, and German all use their standard word for 'sleep' ('sleep,' 'sueño,' 'sommeil,' 'schlafen'). This oath expresses David's total commitment to finding a dwelling place for the Ark of the Lord—he will not allow himself normal rest until God's house is established. The denial of sleep becomes a measure of devotion and single-minded purpose, prioritizing God's honor over personal comfort. SLEEP AND SLUMBER

en: sleep | es: sueño | fr: sommeil | de: schlafen Ps 132:4

שָׁסָה H8154 Conj-w | V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (11×)

To plunder, despoil; of seizing goods by force, as raiders and conquerors

A rarer synonym of shalal and bazaz, this verb denotes violent seizure of property, often describing raiders and invaders. The Qal participle frequently serves as a noun — 'plunderers' — as in Judges 2:14 where God sells Israel into the hands of those who plunder them. Spanish 'saqueadores/despojadores' and English 'plunderers' consistently render the agent noun. Isaiah 17:14 pairs it with bozezenu ('our looters'), showing how Hebrew uses near-synonyms for emphasis. The passive participle in Isaiah 42:22 turns the perspective: Israel itself becomes 'despoiled' — a people robbed and plundered. Isaiah 10:13 intensifies the act in the Piel, where the Assyrian king boasts of thoroughgoing plunder.

1. to plunder, plunderer (Qal active) (9×) Qal active: to plunder or despoil, including participial agent nouns meaning 'plunderers' or 'raiders.' Judges 2:14, 16 uses it for those who plundered Israel; 1 Samuel 14:48 for Saul rescuing Israel from its plunderer; 1 Samuel 23:1 for Philistines plundering threshing floors. Spanish

'saqueadores' (plunderers) and 'despojadores' (despoilers) and the parallel with bozez (looter) in Isaiah 17:14 confirm the violent seizure meaning. PLUNDERING AND SPOIL

en: our-plunderers, plunder, plunderer-him | es: nuestros-despojadores, saqueador-de-él, saqueadores | fr: [שוסינו], [שסי], leur-plunderers | de: [ישסה], [שוסינו], [שסי] Judg 2:14; Judg 2:16; 1Sam 14:48; 1Sam 23:1; 2Kgs 17:20

2. to be despoiled (Qal passive) (1×) Qal passive participle: to be despoiled, describing the state of having been plundered. Isaiah 42:22 declares the servant people 'despoiled' — Spanish 'saqueado' (plundered) marks the victim's condition. This single occurrence inverts the usual agent focus, turning Israel from the one plundered-against into the very image of devastation. PLUNDER AND SPOIL

en: and-despoiled | es: y-saqueado | fr: [ושסוי] | de: [ושסוי] Isa 42:22

3. to plunder thoroughly (Piel intensive) (1×) Piel intensive: to plunder thoroughly or exhaustively. Isaiah 10:13 puts this in the mouth of the Assyrian king boasting of his conquests — 'I plundered' their treasures. Spanish 'saqueé' (I plundered) and the Piel stem together convey completeness and force beyond the basic Qal, fitting the rhetoric of imperial boasting. DEFRAUD PLUNDER ROB

en: I-plundered | es: saqueé | fr: [ושושתי] | de: [ושושתי] Isa 10:13

שָׁסַס H8155 V-Qal-Perf-3cp / 3ms (5×)

To plunder, despoil; to strip and carry off possessions by force

A byform of שָׁסָה, this verb describes violent plundering — the forcible seizure and carrying away of goods and persons. In Judges 2:14, God hands Israel over to raiders who plunder them, and in 1 Samuel 17:53 the Israelites plunder the Philistine camp after Goliath's defeat. The Niphal passive appears in Zechariah 14:2 and Isaiah 13:16, where houses are rifled in the chaos of conquest. Psalm 89:41 uses it of the humiliated king whom all passersby despoil. Spanish 'saquear' and French 'piller' both capture the violent dispossession at the heart of this verb.

(5×) To plunder, despoil, or strip by force — used of both active raiding and passive victimization. The Qal active describes enemies plundering Israel (Judg 2:14; Ps 89:41) and Israel plundering the Philistines (1 Sam 17:53). The Niphal passive pictures houses being rifled during siege (Isa 13:16; Zech 14:2). Spanish 'saquearon' and French 'pillèrent' accurately convey the violent seizure of property. The participial form in Jeremiah 30:16 extends to personified plunderers facing divine retribution. PLUNDERING AND SPOIL en: and-plundered, and-they-plundered, and-will-be-plundered | es: Lo-saquearon, serán-saqueadas, y-los-saquearon | fr: [ישסו], et-ils-pilla, et-pilla | de: [ונשסו], [ישסו], plunder-ihn Judg 2:14; 1Sam 17:53; Ps 89:41; Isa 13:16; Zech 14:2

שָׁסַע H8156 Prep-k / V-Piel-Inf (9×)

To split, cleave (hooves); to tear apart violently; to restrain or hold back

A verb of dividing and tearing that spans dietary law, heroic narrative, and moral restraint. Five of its nine occurrences appear in the Levitical and Deuteronomic food laws, describing the 'cloven hoof' that distinguishes clean from unclean animals (Lev 11:3, 7, 26; Deut 14:6-7). In the Samson narrative, the young hero tears a lion apart as one might tear a kid (Judg 14:6) — raw, violent splitting. Most surprisingly, the same root appears when David 'restrained' his men from attacking Saul (1 Sam 24:7), as though he split apart and held back the impulse toward violence.

1. to split, have cloven (hooves) (5×) Splitting or having cloven hooves (Qal). The diagnostic feature in Israelite dietary law: animals that 'split the hoof' are candidates for clean status (Lev 11:3, 7, 26; Deut 14:6-7). Spanish 'hendidura/hiende' (cleft/cleaves) and French 'fendu' (split) reflect the taxonomic precision. All five occurrences cluster tightly in the Pentateuchal purity legislation. SPLITTING AND CLEAVING en: and-split, and-splitting, the-cloven | es: la-hendida, y-hendidura, y-hiende | fr: et-fendu, et-splitting, le-cloven | de: der-cloven, und-split, und-splitting Lev 11:3; Lev 11:7; Lev 11:26; Deut 14:6; Deut 14:7

2. to tear apart, rip asunder (Piel) (3×) Tearing apart or ripping asunder with violent force (Piel intensive). Samson tearing a lion barehanded 'as one tears a kid' (Judg 14:6) and the ritual tearing of a bird at its wings in burnt offering (Lev 1:17). Spanish 'despedazar/desgarrará' (to tear to pieces) and French 'déchira' capture the visceral intensity of this Piel usage. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: and-he-shall-tear, and-tore-it, like-tearing | es: Y-desgarrará, como-despedazar, y-lo-despedazó | fr: comme-tearing, et-déchira-il, et-il-devra-déchirer | de: und-er-soll-zerreissen, und-zerriss-es, wie-tearing Lev 1:17; Judg 14:6

3. to restrain, hold back (Piel extended) (1×) Restraining or holding back (Piel extended/metaphorical). In 1 Sam 24:7, David 'split apart' — that is, restrained or checked — his men from killing Saul. Spanish 'contuvo' (he contained) and French 'il retint' (he held back) confirm the metaphorical extension: the force that tears apart physically can also sever and restrain an impulse. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL

en: and-he-restrained | es: y-contuvo | fr: et-il-retint | de: und-er-restrained 1Sam 24:7

שֶׁסַע H8157 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fs (4×)

cleft, split (of hooves); the divided hoof as a criterion for clean animals in Levitical dietary law

This noun refers to the cleft or split hoof, a key characteristic in determining clean animals according to Levitical law. Leviticus 11:3 defines clean land animals as those that have 'split hooves, cleft-footed' and chew the cud. Verse 7 mentions the pig which has a split hoof but doesn't chew the cud (thus unclean). Verse 26 repeats the criterion. Deuteronomy 14:6 uses the same language. The multilingual glosses (Spanish hendidura 'split', French fendu 'split', German split/cleft) confirm this as the divided hoof. The cleft hoof became a symbolic marker distinguishing clean from unclean, ordering creation according to divine categories—a physical sign pointing to ritual and perhaps moral distinctions embedded in the created order itself.

(4×) The cleft or split of an animal's hoof, specifically used in Levitical dietary law to distinguish clean from unclean animals. Clean beasts must have split hooves and chew the cud (Lev 11:3, Deut 14:6). The pig has a split hoof but doesn't chew cud, thus is unclean (Lev 11:7). This physical characteristic becomes a taxonomic criterion, part of Israel's symbolic ordering of creation that divided the animal world into clean and unclean categories. SPLITTING AND CLEAVING en: cleft-of, split, splitting | es: hendida, hendidura, hendidura-de | fr: cleft-de, fendu, splitting | de: cleft-von, split, splitting Lev 11:3; Lev 11:7; Lev 11:26; Deut 14:6

שָׁסַף H8158 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3ms (1×)

to hack to pieces, cut up; a violent dismembering action performed by Samuel upon Agag

This rare verb describes a violent act of cutting or hacking someone to pieces. It appears only in 1 Samuel 15:33, where Samuel personally executes King Agag of the Amalekites, literally hewing him in pieces before the Lord at Gilgal. The word's rarity and uncertain etymology have led to proposed emendations, but the versions and context support understanding it as a term for brutal dismemberment—perhaps ritual execution fitting the herem (ban of destruction) that Saul had failed to carry out completely.

(1×) Describes Samuel's execution of Agag through dismemberment in 1 Samuel 15:33. The form וַיְשַׁסֵּף (vay-shasseph) is a Piel consecutive imperfect meaning 'and he hacked to pieces' or 'and he hewed in pieces.' English renders 'and-he-hacked-to-pieces,' Spanish 'Y-descuartizó' (and he dismembered), French 'et-il-hacked-à-pieces,' and German 'und-er-hacked-zu-pieces.' This brutal act followed Samuel's pronouncement that as Agag's sword made women childless, so would his mother be childless. The violent execution served as prophetic judgment and completion of the herem devoted to destruction that Saul had failed to fulfill, demonstrating that partial obedience is disobedience when God's command is absolute. CUTTING AND SEVERING

en: and-he-hacked-to-pieces | es: Y-descuartizó | fr: et-il-hacked-à-pieces | de: und-er-hacked-zu-pieces 1Sam 15:33

שָׁעָה H8159 V-Qal-Imperf-3fp (15×)

To gaze, regard with favor or attention; also to look away, be dismayed, or (of eyes) grow dim—centering on the act of directed sight.

At its heart this verb describes a purposeful, evaluative gaze—not a casual glance but a look that conveys judgment or favor. God 'regarded' Abel's offering but did not 'regard' Cain's (Gen 4:4–5), establishing the verb's theological weight from its first appearance. Isaiah uses it for looking toward the Holy One of Israel in trust (Isa 17:7) or averting one's gaze in grief (Isa 22:4). In Job, the sufferer begs God to 'look away' and grant respite (Job 7:19; 14:6). The related Hitpael form in Isaiah 41:10, 23 extends the meaning to inner dismay—looking about in panic. Spanish translations reveal the range: 'mirar' (look/regard) versus 'apartar' (turn away).

1. look at, regard (8×) Look at or regard with attention: The primary sense—directing one's gaze with evaluative intent. God 'looked upon' Abel and his offering with favor (Gen 4:4) but did not 'look upon' Cain's (Gen 4:5). Pharaoh commands the Israelites not to 'regard' idle words (Exod 5:9). Spanish 'mirar/miraron' and German 'blickte' both preserve the intentional, evaluative quality of this gaze. The Psalmist in 119:117 will 'regard' God's statutes continually. GAZING AND LOOKING en: and-I-will-regard, and-looked, he-looked | es: Miran, miraron, mirará | fr: et-regarda, et-regarder, eux-regarder | de: [ישׁעה], [שׁעו], blickte-er Gen 4:4; Gen 4:5; Exod 5:9; 2Sam 22:42; Ps 119:117

2. look away, avert gaze (Qal) (3×) Look away or avert one's gaze: Used in pleas for relief from divine scrutiny. Job begs God to 'look away from me' so he can have a moment's rest (Job 7:19; 14:6). Isaiah cries 'look away from me' in overwhelming grief over Jerusalem's destruction (Isa 22:4). Spanish 'apartar la mirada' (avert the gaze) and the Hebrew construction with 'min' (away from) mark this as the opposite direction of sense 1—withdrawal rather than engagement. GAZING AND LOOKING en: look-away, will-You-look-away | es: Aparta, Apartaos, apartarás-la-mirada | fr: regarder, שעה ,תשעה | de: [שׁעה], [שׁעו], [תשׁעה] Job 7:19; Job 14:6; Isa 22:4

3. be dismayed, be alarmed (2×) Be dismayed or alarmed (Hitpael): A reflexive-intensive extension where panicked 'looking about' becomes inner terror. Isaiah 41:10 reassures Israel: 'do not be dismayed,' and 41:23 challenges false gods to cause dismay if they can. Spanish 'desmayes/nos asombraremos' (be faint/we shall be astonished) shows the semantic leap from physical gazing to emotional disturbance—the eyes darting in fear become the heart gripped by dread. GAZING AND LOOKING en: be-dismayed, do-evil | es: desmayes, y-nos-asombraremos | fr: et-regarder, regarder | de: [ונשׁתעה], [תשׁתע] Isa 41:10; Isa 41:23

4. look away (Hifil causative) (1×) Look away in the Hifil causative: To cause one's gaze to withdraw—an active, deliberate turning away. Psalm 39:13 (ET 39:12) pleads with God to 'look away from me' before death. The Hifil stem adds intentionality beyond the simple Qal: not merely ceasing to look but actively redirecting one's attention. Spanish 'aparta' (remove/turn aside) captures the volitional force. GAZING AND LOOKING en: look-away | es: Aparta | fr: le-regarder | de: look-weg Ps 39:13

5. grow dim, become closed (1×) Grow dim or become closed (of eyes): A physical deterioration of sight. Isaiah 32:3 promises a future day when 'the eyes of those who see will not be dim'—using this verb for the closing or clouding of vision. The semantic connection to the root is clear: eyes that once 'gazed' now fail. Spanish 'se cerrarán' (they shall be closed) and the feminine plural form point to physical eyes as the subject. GAZING AND LOOKING en: shall-be-closed | es: se-cerrarán | fr: regarder | de: [תשׁעינה] Isa 32:3

שָׁעָה H8160 Prep-k / N-fs (5×)

Hour, moment; a brief unit of time (Aramaic), used in Daniel for immediacy

This Aramaic noun denotes a brief span of time — a 'moment' or 'hour' — and appears only in the book of Daniel. The expression בַּהּ־שָׁעְתָּא ('in that very hour/moment') conveys dramatic immediacy: the instant the music sounds, all must bow (Dan 3:6, 15); at that very moment Nebuchadnezzar's decree is fulfilled (Dan 4:33); and the fingers appear writing on the wall 'in that same hour' (Dan 5:5). The cognates in Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic all share the sense of a measured portion of time, though the biblical Aramaic usage emphasizes instantaneousness rather than a precise sixty-minute span.

(5×) A brief moment or hour — an Aramaic time word emphasizing immediacy and suddenness in Daniel's narratives. The idiomatic phrase בַּהּ־שָׁעְתָּא ('at that very moment') appears in Daniel 3:6, 15 (the command to bow before the image), 4:33 (Nebuchadnezzar's transformation), and 5:5 (the writing on the wall). Spanish 'hora' and English 'hour' render the term conventionally, while French 'heure' and Daniel 4:19's 'for about an hour' (כְּשָׁעָה) show the word can also indicate an approximate duration. HOUR TIME MOMENT

en: for-about, hour | es: hora, por-una-hora | fr: heure | de: [כשׁעה], [שׁעתא], [שׁעתה] Dan 3:6; Dan 3:15; Dan 4:19; Dan 4:33; Dan 5:5

שַׁעֲטָה H8161 N-fsc (1×)

stamping (of hoofs); the thunderous sound of war horses' hooves striking the ground

This noun describes the stamping or pounding sound made by horses' hoofs, appearing in Jeremiah 47:3 in a vivid prophetic oracle against the Philistines. The passage depicts the terrifying advance of a conquering army, where fathers are too paralyzed with fear even to look back at their children because of the thunderous sound of the horses' hooves. The word captures the acoustic terror of ancient warfare, where the drumming of cavalry hooves signaled impending doom.

(1×) The stamping or thundering sound of horses' hooves in battle. The construct form שַׁעֲטַת (sha'atat) appears with 'the hoofs of his mighty ones' in Jeremiah 47:3, creating an auditory image of unstoppable military force. English renders 'stamping-of,' Spanish 'pisadas-de' (footsteps/treads of), while French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew. The full phrase describes 'the noise of the stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses'—a heaping up of nouns that mimics the overwhelming, repetitive thunder of cavalry. This acoustic detail makes God's judgment tangible, as the sound alone paralyzes the Philistine fathers with such terror that they abandon their own children in panic. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: stamping-of | es: pisadas-de | fr: [שׁעטת] | de: [שׁעטת] Jer 47:3

שַׁעַטְנֵז H8162 N-ms (2×)

Mixed fabric, linsey-woolsey; cloth combining wool and linen, forbidden in Israelite garments

A noun denoting a kind of mixed fabric, specifically cloth woven from wool and linen together, which was forbidden for Israelite garments. Leviticus 19:19 prohibits wearing כִּלְאַיִם (mixed kinds), and Deuteronomy 22:11 specifies the prohibition as שַׁעַטְנֵז, defined as 'wool and linen together.' The word may be of Egyptian origin, possibly from Coptic terms meaning 'woven' and 'false,' suggesting 'false weave' or 'mixed weave.' The Septuagint translates it as 'spurious' (kibdēlos). The prohibition is part of the broader holiness code concern with maintaining boundaries—between kinds of animals, plants, and now fabrics.

(2×) The ban on שַׁעַטְנֵז reflects the Priestly concern for order, purity, and the maintenance of divinely established categories. Mixing wool (from animals) and linen (from plants) violated the created order's distinctions. The multilingual glosses ('mixed fabric,' 'mezcla de telas,' 'tissu mélangé') convey the essence: this is hybrid cloth, crossing boundaries that Israel was called to respect. The specificity of the prohibition (exactly which fabrics) underscores the detailed nature of holiness: faithfulness to God extends to the clothes on one's back. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: mixed-fabric | es: de-lino-y-lana, mezcla-de-telas | fr: tissu-mélangé | de: gemischt-fabric Lev 19:19; Deut 22:11

שָׂעָר H8163a Adj-ms (2×)

Hairy; having abundant hair, describing a person or body parts

An adjective meaning hairy, appearing in Genesis 27 in the Jacob and Esau narrative. In verse 11, Jacob protests that Esau is 'a hairy man' while he is smooth-skinned, fearing Isaac will detect the deception. In verse 23, after Rebekah covers Jacob's hands and neck with goatskin, Isaac feels him and notes 'his hands were hairy.' The term describes physical texture—abundant hair—and plays a key role in the deception plot: Jacob must simulate Esau's hairiness to receive the blessing. The multilingual glosses uniformly translate 'hairy' or 'velu,' and the adjective is both literal (Esau's hairiness) and instrumental (Jacob's disguise).

(2×) The hairiness of Esau is a defining physical characteristic, first noted at birth (Genesis 25:25, using a related term) and recurring here as the distinguishing trait that Jacob must replicate. The adjective captures tactile reality—Isaac, nearly blind, relies on touch to identify his son. The deception succeeds because goatskin feels like Esau's hairy skin. The Spanish 'velludo,' French 'velu,' and English 'hairy' all convey the sense of abundant hair, and the narrative tension hinges on this physical detail. Hairiness becomes the medium of blessing and deception. SKIN AND LEATHER
en: hairy | es: velludas, velludo | fr: velu | de: haarig Gen 27:11; Gen 27:23

שָׂעִיר H8163b Conj-w (53×)

A male goat (he-goat), especially as a sacrificial animal; rarely a shaggy creature or goat-demon.

Derived from the root meaning 'hairy' or 'shaggy,' this noun refers almost exclusively to the male goat used in Israel's sacrificial system. It appears prominently in the Levitical sin-offering rituals, including the Day of Atonement scapegoat ceremony (Lev 16), and throughout the Numbers 7 tribal offerings. Spanish macho cabrio and French bouc consistently render the straightforward 'he-goat' sense. A single occurrence in Daniel 8:21 applies the term symbolically to the king of Greece, where English 'the shaggy one' and Spanish el peludo reflect the etymological link to hairiness rather than the cultic animal.

1. male goat, he-goat (52×) Male goat or he-goat used in sacrificial and ritual contexts. The primary meaning across 52 occurrences, central to Priestly legislation. Spanish macho cabrio and French bouc de capture the cultic animal consistently (Gen 37:31, where Joseph's brothers dip his coat in goat's blood; Lev 4:23-24 for the sin offering; Lev 16:5-22 for the Day of Atonement). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-male-goat-of, and-male-goat-of-, male-goat- | es: Macho-cabrío-, Y-macho-cabrío, Y-macho-cabrío-de | fr: et-bouc-de, et-bouc-de-, mâle-bouc- | de: maennlich-Ziege-, und-maennlich-Ziege-von, und-maennlich-Ziege-von- Gen 37:31; Lev 4:23; Lev 4:24; Lev 9:3; Lev 9:15

2. shaggy creature, satyr (1×) Shaggy creature applied figuratively. In Daniel 8:21 the term is used symbolically for the king of Greece, likely a gloss on tsaphir ('he-goat'). English 'the shaggy' and Spanish el peludo foreground the etymological sense of hairiness rather than the sacrificial animal. This usage bridges the literal animal and the visionary symbolism of Daniel's apocalyptic imagery. MALE GOAT en: the-shaggy | es: el-peludo | fr: [השעיר] | de: [השעיר] Dan 8:21

שָׂעִיר H8163c Conj-w (4×)

satyr, goat-demon; hairy supernatural beings or idols with goat-like features, objects of forbidden worship

This noun refers to satyrs or goat-demons—supernatural entities associated with desolate places or idolatrous worship. Leviticus 17:7 forbids Israel from sacrificing to 'goat-demons' as they did in Egypt. 2 Chronicles 11:15 condemns Jeroboam for appointing priests for 'the goat-demons.' Isaiah uses the term for creatures inhabiting desolate ruins: Isaiah 13:21 pictures Babylon as a haunt where 'goat-demons shall dance,' and 34:14 similarly depicts Edom's wasteland where 'the satyr shall meet the wild beast.' The multilingual glosses show uncertainty (French transliterates, Spanish uses 'satyrs' and 'goat-demons'). These beings blur the line between demon-gods worshiped idolatrously and wilderness spirits haunting abandoned places—embodiments of chaos and desolation.

(4×) Goat-demons or satyrs—supernatural beings with goat-like features, associated both with idolatrous worship (Lev 17:7, 2 Chr 11:15) and with haunting desolate ruins (Isa 13:21, 34:14). These entities represent forbidden worship of demon-powers and the chaos of uninhabited wilderness. Whether understood as actual spirits or as idols in goat-form, they embody everything opposite to ordered worship of YHWH—wilderness rather than temple, chaos rather than covenant, demonic rather than divine. MALE GOAT en: and-a-wild-goat, and-for-the-goat-demons, and-goat-demons | es: a-los-demonios-cabríos, y-el-sátiro, y-machos-cabríos | fr: [ולשעירים], [ושעיר], [ושעירים] | de: [ולשעירים], [ושעיר], [ושעירים] Lev 17:7; 2Chr 11:15; Isa 13:21; Isa 34:14

שְׂעִירִים H8164 Prep-k / N-mp (1×)

showers, rain-drops; abundant precipitation that waters vegetation

This plural noun refers to showers or rain-drops, appearing in Moses's song in Deuteronomy 32:2 as part of an extended metaphor comparing his teaching to various forms of precipitation. The word stands in poetic parallelism with rain, dew, and showers, creating a multi-layered image of God's word as life-giving moisture. Just as different forms of rain benefit vegetation in different ways, so God's instruction penetrates and nourishes at every level of need.

(1×) Refers to showers or abundant rain-drops in the poetic parallelism of Deuteronomy 32:2. The form כִּשְׂעִירִם (ki-se'irim) means 'like showers,' appearing in Moses's comparison: 'Let my teaching fall like rain...like showers upon the grass.' English translates 'like-showers,' Spanish 'como-lluvias' (like rains), French 'comme-showers,' and German 'wie-showers.' This noun works with three other precipitation terms (rain, dew, and heavy showers) to create a comprehensive image of God's word as moisture that brings life to dry ground. The comparison suggests gentleness, pervasiveness, and the power to produce growth—teaching that soaks in rather than washing away. RAIN AND PRECIPITATION
en: like-showers | es: como-lluvias | fr: comme-showers | de: wie-showers Deut 32:2

שֵׂעִיר H8165a Prep-b / N-proper-fs (36×)

Seir — the mountainous territory southeast of the Dead Sea, homeland of Esau and the Edomites

Seir is the proper name for the rugged, reddish-brown mountain range and territory stretching south from the Dead Sea into the Arabah, permanently associated with Esau and his Edomite descendants. The name appears 36 times and may derive from the word for 'hairy' or 'wooded' — a wordplay Genesis exploits when describing Esau as ish sa'ir, 'a hairy man' (Gen 27:11). In the earliest poetry, Seir is the direction from which God marches forth: 'LORD, when you went out from Seir' (Judg 5:4; cf. Deut 33:2). The territory served as Esau's inheritance after he parted from Jacob (Gen 32:3; 33:14-16; 36:8-9), and the Horites were its pre-Edomite inhabitants (Gen 14:6; Deut 2:12). Prophetic texts use Seir as a byword for Edom under divine judgment (Ezek 25:8; 35:2-15).

Seir (place name) (36×) The proper toponym Seir, designating the mountainous region southeast of the Dead Sea that became the territorial homeland of Esau/Edom. Appears in three registers: theophanic poetry where God advances from Seir (Judg 5:4; Deut 33:2), patriarchal narrative where Esau settles the land (Gen 32:3; 33:14, 16; 36:8-9), and prophetic judgment oracles against Edom (Isa 21:11; Ezek 35:2-15). The Horites were the pre-Edomite population (Gen 14:6; Deut 2:12, 22). Translations consistently transliterate: Spanish 'Seir,' French 'Seir,' German 'Seir,' preserving the Hebrew proper noun across all target languages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Se'ir, Seir | es: Seir, Seir;, Seír | fr: Seir, Séir | de: Seir Gen 14:6; Gen 32:3; Gen 33:14; Gen 33:16; Gen 36:8

שְׂעִיר H8165b N-proper-fs (3×)

Seir (place/personal name: Edomite territory and ancestor)

Seir refers primarily to the mountainous region south and east of the Dead Sea, homeland of Edom and Esau's descendants. The name may derive from a word meaning 'hairy' or 'goat,' playing on Esau's hairiness (Genesis 25:25; 27:11). Genesis 36:20-21 and 1 Chronicles 1:38 list Seir also as a personal name—a Horite chief and ancestor of the region's pre-Edomite inhabitants. The dual usage (person and place) is typical, with the territory named after its eponymous ancestor. Some scholars connect it to the Egyptian/Akkadian land of Šêri. The name carries both geographical and genealogical significance in tracing Edomite origins.

(3×) Personal name of a Horite ancestor whose descendants inhabited the land before Edomite conquest. Genesis 36:20-21 lists 'the sons of Seir the Horite, the inhabitants of the land,' then names Seir's seven sons who became tribal chiefs. 1 Chronicles 1:38 repeats this genealogy. The personal Seir gives his name to the mountain range and territory that later became Edom, creating the typical biblical pattern where person, clan, and geography share a name. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Se'ir, Seir | es: Seir | fr: Seir, [שעיר] | de: Seir, Seirs Gen 36:20; Gen 36:21; 1Chr 1:38

שְׂעִירָה H8166 N-fsc (2×)

A female goat, a she-goat; specified for certain sin offerings in Levitical law

A feminine noun, literally 'a hairy female of goats,' denoting a she-goat. It appears in Leviticus 4:28 and 5:6 as the specified offering for certain sin offerings. The phrase 'a female goat of goats' is emphatic, clarifying both the gender and the species—not just any female animal, but specifically a female goat. The multilingual glosses translate straightforwardly: 'a female goat,' 'cabra,' 'une chèvre.' The specificity reflects the detailed sacrificial system, where gender, species, and condition of the animal all mattered. She-goats were acceptable for individual sin offerings, part of the graded system that allowed poorer Israelites to bring smaller, less expensive animals.

(2×) The Levitical sacrificial code differentiates carefully among animals by species, age, gender, and physical condition. The she-goat served as an acceptable sin offering for individuals who could not afford larger animals. The construct phrase 'female of goats' is emphatic, ensuring no ambiguity: this must be a female goat, not a male, not a sheep. The cross-linguistic uniformity ('female goat,' 'cabra de,' 'chèvre de') reflects the straightforward nature of the term, and the precision underscores the seriousness with which Israel approached atonement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-female-goat-of | es: cabra-de | fr: une-chèvre-de | de: ein-weiblich-Ziege-von Lev 4:28; Lev 5:6

שְׂעִירָה H8167 Art / N-proper-fs / 3fs (1×)

Seirah; place name in the hill country of Ephraim where Ehud escaped after assassinating Eglon

Seirah is a place name appearing in Judges 3:26, marking the location to which Ehud fled after killing Eglon, king of Moab. The name likely means 'hairy' or 'goat,' possibly referring to the wooded or rocky character of the terrain. It seems to have been located in the hill country of Ephraim, providing Ehud with refuge after his daring assassination. The site's exact location remains uncertain, though it served as a safe haven from Moabite pursuit.

(1×) A place in the Ephraimite hill country to which Ehud escaped in Judges 3:26. The form הַשְּׂעִירָתָה (ha-se'iratah) includes the definite article and the directional he suffix, literally meaning 'toward the Seirah.' English renders 'to-Seirah,' Spanish 'hacia-Seirah' (toward Seirah), French 'à-Seirah' (to Seirah), and German 'zu-Seirah' (to Seirah). The narrative says Ehud 'escaped to Seirah' while the Moabite servants delayed, giving him time to reach the mountains and rally Israel to seize the fords of the Jordan. The place name appears only this once, functioning as a waypoint in Ehud's flight rather than a major settlement, though it was clearly known to the original audience. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE hollow of hand, handful (cupped palm or measured portion)

en: to-Seirah | es: hacia-Seirah | fr: à-Seirah | de: zu-Seirah Judg 3:26

שַׁעַל H8168 Prep-b / N-msc / 3ms (3×)

This noun denotes either the hollow of the hand (the cupped palm) or the amount that fits in one hand—a handful. Isaiah 40:12 uses it in a magnificent image of God 'measuring the waters in the hollow of His hand,' emphasizing divine sovereignty over creation. In hyperbolic contexts, 'handfuls' becomes a figure for quantity: enough dust in Samaria to give each soldier a handful (1 Kings 20:10), or false prophetesses who prophesy for 'handfuls of barley' (Ezekiel 13:19). The term captures both the anatomical feature (the cupped hand) and the measured amount it can hold.

(3×) Either the hollow/cup of the hand itself or the amount it holds. 1 Kings 20:10 uses the plural: Ben-hadad boasts there won't be enough dust in Samaria to give 'handfuls' to all his men (an impossibly large army). Isaiah 40:12 asks rhetorically who has measured the waters 'in the hollow of his hand'—only God can cup the seas in his palm. Ezekiel 13:19 condemns prophetesses who work for 'handfuls of barley'—paltry payment for false divination. The cross-linguistic evidence ('puñados,' 'handfuls,' 'hollow of His hand') confirms both the container (cupped hand) and contents (measured portion). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-handfuls, for-handfuls-of, in-the-hollow-of-His-hand | es: con-el-hueco-de-su-mano, para-puñados, por-puñados-de | fr: [בשעלו], ouverture, pour-handfuls | de: [בשעלו], [בשעלי], fuer-handfuls 1Kgs 20:10; Isa 40:12; Ezek 13:19

שַׁעַלְבִּים H8169 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (3×)

Shaalabbin, Shaalbim (place name: town in Dan's territory)

Shaalabbin (or Shaalbim) was a town in the original territory of Dan, mentioned in conquest and administrative contexts. The name possibly means 'haunt of foxes' based on cognate roots. Joshua 19:42 includes it in Dan's allotment. Judges 1:35 reports that the Amorites held onto Shaalbim (the Danites failed to fully conquer it), though eventually 'the hand of the house of Joseph prevailed' over them. 1 Kings 4:9 lists it in Solomon's second administrative district. The site's precise location is debated, though it lay somewhere in the Shephelah or hill country west of Jerusalem.

(3×) Place name of a Canaanite-Amorite town that came under Israelite control. Joshua 19:42 assigns it to Dan's tribal territory. Judges 1:35 notes that Amorites retained control there despite Danite claims, until Josephite pressure forced them into corvée labor. 1 Kings 4:9 shows it integrated into Solomon's administrative system. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate the name ('Shaalabbin,' 'Saalbín,' 'Shaalbim'), appropriate for a proper noun. The variations in form (Shaalabbin/Shaalbim) reflect standard Hebrew orthographic fluidity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Shaalabbin, and-in-Shaalbim | es: y-Saalbín, y-en-Shaalbim, y-en-Shaalvim | fr: et-Shaalabbin, et-dans-Shaalbim | de: und-Shaalabbin, und-in-Shaalbim Josh 19:42; Judg 1:35; 1Kgs 4:9

שַׁעַלְבֹנִי H8170 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

The Shaalbonite or Shaalvonite, a gentilic from Shaalbin/Shaalbim; identifying a warrior of David

A gentilic adjective with the definite article, meaning 'the Shaalbonite' or 'the Shaalvonite,' indicating origin from the town of Shaalbin (or Shaalbim). The term appears in 2 Samuel 23:32 and its parallel in 1 Chronicles 11:33, identifying Eliahba as a native of this town and one of David's mighty men. Shaalbin/Shaalbim was a town on the border of Dan and later associated with Ephraim, mentioned in Joshua and Judges. The gentilic marks geographic origin, part of the practice of identifying warriors by hometown. The Septuagint transliterates the term, preserving the Hebrew form.

(2×) David's mighty men came from throughout Israel and even beyond, and geographic gentilics like 'the Shaalbonite' anchor these warriors in specific towns and tribal territories. Eliahba's identification as 'the Shaalbonite' tells us he hailed from Shaalbin, a town in the Danite/Ephraimite region. The parallel texts in Samuel and Chronicles confirm the epithet, and the term contributes to the geographic and tribal diversity celebrated in the lists of David's heroes. The definite article ('the Shaalbonite') marks it as a recognized, official designation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shaalbonite, the-Shaalvonite | es: el-saalboní, el-shaalvonita | fr: [השעלבני], le-Shaalbonite | de: [השעלבני], der-Shaalbonite 2Sam 23:32; 1Chr 11:33

שַׁעֲלִים H8171 N-proper-fs (1×)

Shaalim; district or region in Israel through which Saul passed searching for his father's donkeys

Shaalim is a geographical district mentioned in 1 Samuel 9:4 as one of several regions Saul traversed while searching for his father's lost donkeys—the journey that would unexpectedly lead him to Samuel and his anointing as king. The name may be related to foxes or jackals (שׁוּעָל), or it might connect to Shaalabbin mentioned elsewhere in Benjamin or Dan. Its precise location remains uncertain, though it lay somewhere between Saul's home territory and Ramah where Samuel resided.

(1×) A district or territory in Israel mentioned in Saul's pre-royal travels. The phrase אֶרֶץ שַׁעֲלִים (eretz Sha'alim) means 'land of Shaalim' in 1 Samuel 9:4. English, Spanish, French, and German all provide the transliteration 'Shaalim.' The Septuagint shows variation (Εασακεμ, Σααλειμ, Σεγαλειμ), reflecting uncertainty about the location. Some scholars identify it with Shaalabbin (a town in Dan) or connect it to the 'land of Shalishah' mentioned just before in the same verse. The region is remembered only because Saul passed through it on his donkey-hunting expedition—a mundane task that became the providential path to kingship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shaalim | es: Shaalim | fr: Shaalim | de: Shaalim 1Sam 9:4

שָׁעַן H8172 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (22×)

To lean upon, support oneself on; figuratively, to rely on or trust in someone, especially God or human allies.

A Niphal verb that moves seamlessly between the physical and the spiritual. In its concrete sense, Saul leans on his spear (2 Sam 1:6), Samson pushes against the pillars (Judg 16:26), and Abraham's guests recline under a tree (Gen 18:4). But the Chronicler and the prophets transform it into a theology of dependence: King Asa relied on the LORD and won a stunning victory (2 Chr 14:11), then later relied on Aram instead and was rebuked (2 Chr 16:7–8). The physical posture of leaning becomes a metaphor for where one places one's ultimate trust — a pattern visible across languages, where Spanish 'apoyarse' and French 'appuyé' both carry the dual physical-relational meaning.

1. rely on, trust in (12×) To rely on, depend upon, or place one's trust in — the figurative extension of leaning. Used predominantly in Chronicles and the prophets for trusting God (2 Chr 13:18; 14:11; Isa 10:20; Mic 3:11) or misplacing trust in human allies (2 Chr 16:7–8; Ezek 29:7). The construction is typically נִשְׁעַן עַל followed by the object of trust. Spanish 'apoyarse' and French 's'appuyer' preserve the physical-to-relational metaphor, showing how bodily support becomes spiritual reliance. LEAN RELY TRUST

en: and-when-they-leaned, and-when-you-relied, and-will-lean | es: apoyándose, cuando-te-apoyaste, nos-apoyamos | fr: [ובהשענך], [ובהשענך], [ונשען] | de: [בהשענך], [ובהשענך], [ובהשענם] 2Chr 13:18; 2Chr 14:11; 2Chr 16:7; 2Chr 16:8

2. lean physically, recline upon (10×) To lean physically, rest one's weight against, or recline upon a support. Abraham invites his visitors to recline under the tree (Gen 18:4), a geographic cliff leans toward Moab's border (Num 21:15), Samson pushes against the pillars (Judg 16:26), and Naaman's master leans on his hand in the temple (2 Kgs 5:18). Job 8:15 uses it figuratively of a spider's web that cannot bear weight. Spanish 'apoyado' and French 'appuyé' consistently reflect the postural sense of resting one's body against something solid. LEAN RELY TRUST

en: and-he-is-supported, and-lean, and-leans | es: Se-apoyará, apoyado, apoyándose | fr: [וישען], appuyé, et-leans | de: [וישען], [ישען], leaning Gen 18:4; Num 21:15; Judg 16:26; 2Sam 1:6; 2Kgs 5:18

שָׁעַע H8173a V-Hitpael-Imp-mp (3×)

be blinded, smeared over (eyes closed/obscured)

This rare verb means to be blinded or have one's eyes smeared shut, always used metaphorically for spiritual obtuseness. Isaiah 29:9 uses both Qal and Hithpalpel forms in a staccato command: 'Blind yourselves and be blind!' (parallel to 'delay and be delayed'), calling Israel to persist in willful ignorance. Isaiah 6:10 in God's commission to the prophet commands 'besmear its eyes!'—make their eyes dull. The root relates to Aramaic words for smearing or smoothing over. Some scholars suggest textual emendations, but the basic sense of obscured vision—whether literal or metaphorical blindness—remains clear across the attestations.

(3×) Metaphorical blinding or making eyes unable to see truth. Isaiah 29:9 uses it twice in Isaiah's ironic command to his audience: persist in your blindness, stagger in confusion. Isaiah 6:10 instructs the prophet to 'besmear' the people's eyes as part of the hardening judgment—make them unable to see and understand. The doubled reference in 29:9 (imperative in both Qal and Hithpalpel) intensifies the idea: actively blind yourselves and become blind. The multilingual glosses ('cegaos,' 'blind yourselves,' 'quedad ciegos') confirm this involves voluntary or imposed spiritual obtuseness. BLINDNESS PHYSICAL SPIRITUAL

en: and-be-blind, blind-yourselves, shut | es: cegaos, ciega, y-quedad-ciegos | fr: [השע], [השתעשעו], [ושעו] | de: [השע], [השתעשעו], [ושעו] Isa 6:10; Isa 29:9

שָׁעַע H8173b V-Piel-Perf-1cs (6×)

To delight in, take exquisite pleasure; to play, sport joyfully

The Pilpel verb שִׁעֲשַׁע (from שׁעשׁ II) expresses a deep, luxuriating delight — the kind of pleasure that lingers and savors. Five of its six occurrences describe spiritual delight: the psalmist delights in God's Torah (Ps 119:16, 47, 70), and God's consolations delight the troubled soul (Ps 94:19). German 'Wohlgefallen' (well-pleasure, deep satisfaction) captures the contemplative quality perfectly. But Isaiah gives us a stunning sixth use: in the messianic kingdom, a nursing child 'plays' over the cobra's hole (Isa 11:8) — fearless, innocent delight turned physical. Isaiah 66:12 adds a tender image of being 'fondled' on the knees, blending physical comfort with spiritual joy.

1. delight in, take pleasure in (5×) To take exquisite delight or pleasure in something, to find deep, lingering enjoyment — predominantly used of delighting in God's Torah, commandments, and consolations. The psalmist declares 'I delight in your statutes' (Ps 119:16, 47) and 'I take delight in your law' (119:70), while God's consolations 'delight my soul' (Ps 94:19). Isaiah 66:12 extends this to being 'fondled' (Polpal stem) on the knees — comfort as delight. Spanish 'me deleitare' and German 'Wohlgefallen' both encode a deep, savoring pleasure rather than mere happiness. DELIGHT PLEASURE

en: I-delight, and-I-will-delight, delight | es: Y-me-deleitaré, deleitan, me-deleitaré | fr: [תשעשעו], et-se-délecter, se-délecter | de: Wohlgefallen, [תשעשעו], ich-Wohlgefallen Ps 94:19; Ps 119:16; Ps 119:47; Ps 119:70; Isa 66:12

2. play, sport (1×) To play or sport, describing innocent, joyful physical activity in a context of fearless trust. In Isaiah 11:8, the messianic vision depicts a nursing child who 'plays' (וְיִשְׁעַשַׁע) over the hole of the cobra — an image where deadly danger has been abolished and unguarded delight reigns. Spanish 'y jugara' (and will play) shifts decisively from the contemplative 'delight' vocabulary of the psalm occurrences to the physical vocabulary of childhood play, confirming a distinct sense within the same root. LAUGHING AND PLAYING

en: and-will-play | es: Y-jugará | fr: [וישעשע] | de: [וישעשע] Isa 11:8

שַׁעַף H8174 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Sha'aph, a name in the genealogy of Caleb; appears twice with slight variation
A personal name appearing twice in the genealogy of Caleb in 1 Chronicles 2. In verse 47, the name appears as Sha'aph (שַׁעַף), and in verse 49, with a conjunction, as 'and Sha'aph' (וְשַׁעַף). These may be two different individuals in the Calebite clan or the same person mentioned twice. The name's etymology is uncertain, though some suggest a connection to 'thought' or 'divided.' The Septuagint offers transliterations (Sagae, Sagaph, Saaph), preserving the Hebrew. Chronicles' genealogies often repeat names or include multiple individuals with the same name, reflecting complex family structures in ancient Judah.

(2×) Calebite genealogies in Chronicles preserve the memory of clans and families in southern Judah, some of which merged with or influenced later Judahite identity. Sha'aph appears in these lists without narrative elaboration—simply a name among descendants of Caleb. Whether one person or two, the name anchors part of the Calebite lineage. The dual mention in close proximity (verses 47 and 49) may indicate importance or may reflect genealogical complexity (different branches, or father and son). The transliterations across languages show the name's stability in transmission. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Sha'aph, and-Sha'aph | es: Saaf, y-Saaf | fr: [ושעף], [שעף] | de: [ושעף], [שעף] 1Chr 2:47; 1Chr 2:49

שָׁעַר H8175a Conj-w / V-Qal-Imp-mp (3×)
bristle with horror, shudder (hair stands on end from terror)
This denominative verb derives from the word for 'hair' and means to bristle or shudder with horror—literally, to have one's hair stand on end in terror. Jeremiah 2:12 calls on the heavens to 'shudder' in horror at Israel's apostasy (parallel to 'be shocked and appalled'). Ezekiel uses it twice in judgment oracles: kings will 'shudder' at Tyre's fall (27:35) and nations will 'tremble' at the sword brandished against Egypt (32:10). The verb captures visceral, physical reaction to catastrophe—the involuntary trembling and hair-raising fear that accompanies witnessing judgment. The contexts uniformly involve dramatic divine punishment that horrifies onlookers.

(3×) Shudder or bristle with horror at witnessing catastrophe. Jeremiah 2:12 commands the heavens to 'shudder' at Israel's forsaking God—cosmic horror at covenant violation. Ezekiel 27:35 describes kings of coastlands who 'shuddered with shuddering' (cognate accusative) when Tyre fell—their faces trembling at the news. Ezekiel 32:10 warns that nations 'will shudder' when God brandishes the sword against Egypt. The multilingual glosses ('horrorizaos,' 'se estremecieron,' 'shudder') confirm this involves both fear-response and physical trembling, the involuntary reaction to terrifying judgment. TREMBLING AND FEAR
en: and-shudder, shudder, will-shudder | es: se-estremcerán, se-estremecieron, y-horrorizaos | fr: [ושערו], tempête | de: [ושערו], [ישערו], [שערו] Jer 2:12; Ezek 27:35; Ezek 32:10

שָׁעַר H8175b Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjImperf-3ms (4×)
sweep away, storm; to whirl away with violent wind or tempest, whether literally or as divine judgment
This verb describes the violent sweeping or whirling action of storm winds. Psalm 58:9 uses it of God sweeping away the wicked 'before your pots can feel the thorns'—a vivid image of sudden removal. Psalm 50:3 describes God's approach: 'around him it is exceedingly tempestuous.' Job 27:21 pictures the east wind sweeping away the wicked man from his place. Daniel 11:40 uses it of a king who 'shall storm against him' like a whirlwind. The multilingual glosses (Spanish arremolina 'whirls', French tempête 'tempest', German sweep) capture both the violent motion and storm imagery. This is the overwhelming force of wind-driven judgment or warfare, carrying everything before it like a tornado sweeping the landscape.

(4×) To sweep or whirl away with tempestuous, violent force, like a storm wind. God sweeps away the wicked suddenly (Ps 58:9); around God it is tempestuous (Ps 50:3); the east wind whirls away the wicked man (Job 27:21); a king storms against his enemy (Dan 11:40). The verb captures windstorm violence—not gradual erosion but sudden, overwhelming removal. Used metaphorically for divine judgment and military assault, emphasizing the irresistible force of the attack. STORMS AND TEMPESTS
en: He-will-sweep-it-away, and-it-sweeps-him-away, and-shall-storm | es: los-arrebatará, tempestad, y-lo-arremolina | fr: et-frissonner-lui, et-tempête, tempête | de: [וישערהו], [וישתער], er-wird-sweep-es-weg Job 27:21; Ps 50:3; Ps 58:9; Dan 11:40

שָׁעַר H8175c V-Qal-Perf-3cp / 3mp (1×)
knew them, had acquaintance with; or possibly 'feared/shuddered before them'—interpretation disputed
This verb form in Deuteronomy 32:17 is disputed in meaning. It appears in Moses's song describing Israel's apostasy, saying they sacrificed to new gods that 'your fathers did not know.' The traditional interpretation takes it as 'know' or 'be acquainted with,' emphasizing the novelty of these deities. However, the root may alternatively mean 'fear' or 'regard with awe,' yielding 'gods your fathers did not fear.' The parallel with 'did not know' in the same verse favors the 'acquaintance' interpretation, highlighting the foreignness of these imported deities.

(1×) Describes the fathers' lack of relationship with new gods in Deuteronomy 32:17. The form שערום (se'arum) is a Qal perfect 3rd plural with suffix, meaning 'they knew them' or possibly 'they feared them.' English translates 'knew-them,' Spanish offers 'los-temieron' (feared them), French 'connut-eux' (knew them), and German 'wusste-ihnen' (knew them). The phrase describes new gods that recently appeared, which the ancestors 'did not know'—emphasizing their novelty and illegitimacy. The parallel structure with 'your fathers did not know them' (לֹא יְדָעוּם) in the same verse suggests the meaning is cognitive acquaintance rather than fearful reverence, though BDB notes the root's possible connection to fear or shuddering. PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: knew-them | es: los-temieron | fr: connut-eux | de: wusste-ihnen Deut 32:17

שָׁעַר H8176 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)
to think, reckon, calculate; forming internal judgments or valuations
This verb describes mental calculation or reckoning, particularly making evaluations or judgments in one's mind. It appears in Proverbs 23:7 in a notoriously difficult saying about a stingy person: 'as he calculates in his soul, so is he.' The word captures internal deliberation and assessment, suggesting that a person's true character is revealed not by outward words but by inner thoughts and calculations. The verb's semantic range includes putting a valuation on something, appropriate to both commercial and psychological contexts.

(1×) Describes internal mental reckoning in Proverbs 23:7. The form שער (sha'ar) is a Qal perfect 3rd masculine singular, embedded in the phrase 'as he thinks in his soul, so is he.' English renders 'he-thinks,' Spanish 'calcula' (calculates), French simply transliterates 'שער,' and German uses 'Tor' (gate—apparently a lexical confusion). The proverb warns about the person who invites you to eat but whose heart is not with you—he appears generous but inwardly is calculating the cost. The verb reveals the discord between public behavior and private assessment, making the point that a person's true nature lies in their hidden calculations rather than their performed hospitality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: he-thinks | es: calcula | fr: שער | de: Tor Prov 23:7

שְׂעַר H8177 N-msc / 3ms (3×)
hair (Aramaic cognate, of the head)
This Aramaic noun means 'hair,' specifically hair of the head, appearing three times in Daniel's visions and narratives. Daniel 3:27 reports that the fire didn't singe 'the hair of their heads' when the three men survived the furnace. Daniel 4:30 describes Nebuchadnezzar during his madness when 'his hair grew like eagles' feathers' (living like a beast). Daniel 7:9 in the Ancient of Days vision sees one 'whose hair was like pure wool'—white and venerable. The term is the standard Aramaic equivalent to Hebrew se'ar, used literally for human (or angelic) head hair.

(3×) Hair of the head in Aramaic contexts. Daniel 3:27 emphasizes the completeness of the furnace miracle: not even 'the hair of their heads' was singed. Daniel 4:30 describes Nebuchadnezzar's bestial transformation where 'his hair grew like eagles' feathers'—long and unkempt during his wilderness exile. Daniel 7:9 portrays the Ancient of Days with hair 'like pure wool'—white and glorious, indicating age and wisdom. The cross-linguistic glosses simply transliterate or translate literally ('su cabello,' 'his hair'), as appropriate for the straightforward anatomical term. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-hair-of, his-hair | es: su-cabello, y-cabello-de, y-el-cabello-de | fr: et-porte, orge | de: [שערה], und-Tor Dan 3:27; Dan 4:33; Dan 7:9

שַׁעַר H8178a N-ms (3×)

horror, shuddering (trembling reaction to catastrophe)

This noun denotes the feeling or state of horror and shuddering—the visceral reaction to witnessing judgment or disaster. It appears as a cognate accusative with the verb 'shudder' in two Ezekiel oracles (27:35; 32:10), intensifying the expression: 'they shuddered with shuddering.' Job 18:20 describes how future generations 'seized shuddering' at the wicked man's fate (parallel to 'were appalled'). The word captures not just fear but physical trembling—the body's involuntary response to horror. The semantic field overlaps with terror, dread, and the trembling that accompanies witnessing divine judgment.

(3×) The emotion and physical state of horrified shuddering. Job 18:20 says those who come after 'seized shuddering' when contemplating the wicked man's destruction. Ezekiel 27:35 and 32:10 use it as cognate accusative with the verb: kings and nations 'shuddered with shuddering' at Tyre's fall and Egypt's judgment. The term emphasizes the involuntary, physical dimension of horror—not just mental dismay but bodily trembling. The multilingual glosses ('estremecimiento,' 'horror,' 'shuddering') confirm this denotes both the emotion and its physical manifestation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: shuddering | es: con-estremecimiento, horror | fr: porte, שער | de: Tor Job 18:20; Ezek 27:35; Ezek 32:10

שַׁעַר H8178b N-msc (1×)

storm, tempest of destruction; violent weather used in divine judgment imagery

This noun denotes a destructive storm or tempest, appearing in Isaiah 28:2 in a prophecy against Ephraim. The word is essentially identical to סַעַר (sa'ar), the more common term for storm, but with the sin/shin distinction. It appears in a simile describing the Assyrian invasion as 'a tempest of destruction,' paired with 'hailstorm' to convey overwhelming, irresistible judgment. The storm metaphor captures both the violence and the divine agency behind historical catastrophe—God using natural and political forces as instruments of judgment.

(1×) A violent, destructive storm in the prophetic imagery of Isaiah 28:2. The construct form שַׁעַר (sa'ar) combines with קֶטֶב (qetev, 'destruction') to form 'a storm of destruction' or 'a destroying tempest.' English renders 'a-tempest,' Spanish 'tormenta-de' (storm of), while French and German give 'porte' and 'Tor' respectively (both meaning 'gate,' apparently confusing this storm-word with the homonym meaning gate). Isaiah uses this meteorological image to describe the Assyrian army that will sweep away Samaria 'like a flooding rain, like a mighty overflowing water'—piling up storm and flood imagery to convey the totality of judgment coming upon the northern kingdom. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: a-tempest | es: tormenta-de | fr: porte | de: Tor Isa 28:2

שַׁעַר H8179 Prep-m / N-ms (375×)

Gate or entrance to a city, temple, or palace; metonymically, a community or territorial jurisdiction ('within your gates').

Shaar refers first to the physical gate — the architectural opening in a city wall, temple precinct, or palace compound through which people pass, which is barred at night and opened at dawn. Gates were also the civic center where elders sat, justice was administered, and public business transacted. In Deuteronomic legislation, a distinctive metonymic usage emerges: 'within your gates' means 'within your towns' or 'in your settlements,' where the gate stands for the entire community under its jurisdiction. Spanish puerta, French porte, and German Tor consistently render the physical sense, while the possessive construction 'your gates' (en tus puertas, in dein Tore) signals the territorial extension.

1. gate, entrance, doorway (337×) A physical gate, entrance, or doorway (337x) — the concrete architectural structure in a city wall, temple, palace, or camp. This covers gates being opened and shut (Josh 2:5-7, Isa 45:1), the city gates of Jerusalem (Neh 7:3), temple gates (2 Chr 23:15, 20), and gates in prophetic vision (Ezekiel 40-48). Translations uniformly use their word for gate: English 'gate,' Spanish puerta, French porte, German Tor. The gate served as both passage point and civic gathering place where elders judged (Ruth 4:1, Prov 31:23). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gate, gate-of, gate-of- | es: Puerta-de, puerta, puerta-de | fr: porte | de: Tor 2Kgs 25:4; 1Chr 26:16; 2Chr 18:9; 2Chr 23:15; 2Chr 23:20

2. gates as territory or community (38×) Gates as a metonym for territory, community, or civic jurisdiction (38x). Concentrated in Deuteronomic law, 'within your gates' (bish'arekha) means 'within your settlements' — designating the towns and territory of Israel rather than literal doorways. The Sabbath command extends to 'the sojourner who is within your gates' (Exod 20:10, Deut 5:14), and Deuteronomy's instructions about worship, tithing, and justice use this phrasing repeatedly (Deut 6:9, 12:12, 14:27-29). The possessive suffixes in all languages — English 'your gates,' Spanish tus puertas, German dein Tore — mark this community-referencing sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-your-gates, is-in-your-gates, your-gates | es: En-tus-puertas, en-puertas-tuyas, en-tus-puertas | fr: dans-ton-portes, est-dans-ton-portes, ton-portes | de: dein-Tore, in-dein-Tore, ist-in-dein-Tore Exod 20:10; Deut 5:14; Deut 6:9; Deut 11:20; Deut 12:12

שַׁעַר H8180 N-mp (1×)

measures, yield multiplier; specifically hundredfold agricultural return

This noun denotes measures or proportional yield, appearing in Genesis 26:12 to describe Isaac's extraordinary agricultural success. The phrase 'a hundred measures' means a hundredfold return—the seed multiplied a hundred times over, an exceptional harvest indicating divine blessing. The word derives from calculating or reckoning, here applied to agricultural proportions. Ancient agriculture typically yielded returns of 5 to 10-fold, making a hundredfold harvest a clear sign of God's favor.

(1×) Denotes measures of agricultural yield in Genesis 26:12. The phrase מֵאָה שְׁעָרִים (me'ah she'arim) literally means 'hundred measures' or 'hundredfold,' describing Isaac's crop return. English, Spanish, and French all use 'measures' ('measures,' 'medidas,' 'measures'), while German provides 'Maß' (measure). The text says Isaac sowed in the land and reaped 'a hundred measures'—that is, he received a hundred times what he planted. This extraordinary fertility occurred during a famine period, making it even more remarkable and clearly attributing the success to the Lord's blessing, which the text explicitly states. The hundredfold yield would later become Jesus's image for productive reception of God's word (Mark 4:20). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10355 WITH 4 SENSES

en: measures | es: medidas | fr: measures | de: Maß Gen 26:12

שְׂעָר H8181 Conj-w / N-msc / 3fs (28×)

hair — body or head hair, prominent in purity diagnosis, Nazirite vows, and physical descriptions

Se'ar is the standard Hebrew noun for hair, whether on the human body or head, appearing 28 times across legal, narrative, and poetic texts. Its heaviest concentration is in Leviticus 13-14, where the color, depth, and behavior of hair in affected skin patches form the priest's primary diagnostic criteria for declaring a person clean or unclean — white hair turned in a sore spells impurity (Lev 13:3, 10, 20-21, 25-26, 30-32). The Nazirite vow centers on the hair of one's head: it must grow uncut during the vow period and is shaved and offered at its conclusion (Num 6:5, 18). Narratively, Esau is born 'like a garment of hair' (Gen 25:25), and Elijah is identified as 'a hairy man' (2 Kgs 1:8) — both defining characterizations. Judges records Samson's hair regrowing after Delilah's betrayal (Judg 16:22). In Isaiah's barber metaphor, YHWH will shave 'the hair of the head, the hair of the feet, and the beard' (Isa 7:20). Ezra tears hair from his head and beard in grief over intermarriage (Ezra 9:3). Song of Songs uses it poetically: 'your hair is like a flock of goats' (Song 4:1; 6:5).

hair (body or head) (28×) Human or animal hair as a physical substance, examined in purity law, consecrated in Nazirite ritual, and invoked in physical description and poetry. The Levitical priest inspects hair color and condition to diagnose skin impurity (Lev 13:3-4, 10, 20-26, 30-32; 14:8-9). The Nazirite's uncut hair embodies consecration to God (Num 6:5, 18). Defining personal traits are cast in terms of hair: Esau's hairy body (Gen 25:25), Elijah's hairy mantle (2 Kgs 1:8), Samson's regrown locks (Judg 16:22). Song of Songs transforms it into erotic imagery (Song 4:1; 6:5), while Ezra's tearing of hair dramatizes communal grief (Ezra 9:3). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-hair, and-its-hair, hair | es: cabello-de, el-cabello-de, pelo | fr: Tes-cheveux, cheveu, cheveu-de | de: Haar, Haar-von, dein-Haar Gen 25:25; Lev 13:3; Lev 13:4; Lev 13:10; Lev 13:20 bad, horrid, disgusting; describing inedible figs in a prophetic sign-act

שֹׂעָר H8182 Art / Adj-mp (1×)

This adjective describes something horrid, disgusting, or repulsive, appearing in Jeremiah 29:17 to characterize figs so bad they cannot be eaten. The word appears in Jeremiah's prophetic imagery where two baskets of figs represent different groups—good figs symbolizing the exiles who will be restored, and these disgusting figs representing those who remained in Jerusalem and would face judgment. The term conveys not just poor quality but active repulsion, figs that have rotted beyond any usefulness.

(1×) Describes figs that are inedibly bad in Jeremiah 29:17. The plural form הַשְּׂעֹרִים (ha-sho'arim) with the article means 'the horrid ones' or 'the disgusting ones,' specifically 'the bad figs.' English renders 'the-bad,' Spanish 'los-malos' (the bad ones), while French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew form. Jeremiah's oracle uses this vivid image to describe Zedekiah, his officials, and the remnant in Jerusalem: they will become 'like the bad figs that cannot be eaten because they are so bad.' The adjective emphasizes not merely inferior quality but active rottenness—these figs don't just taste poor, they provoke disgust, making them a fitting symbol for those who face God's curse rather than blessing. BAD ROTTEN WORTHLESS

en: the-bad | es: los-malos | fr: [השערים] | de: [השערים] Jer 29:17

שְׂעָרָה H8183 Conj-w (2×)

Storm, tempest; violent wind, symbolizing divine power and judgment

A feminine noun meaning storm or tempest, synonymous with the more common סַעַר. It appears in Job 9:17 and Nahum 1:3, both times describing the overwhelming power associated with God's presence and action. Job laments that God 'crushes him with a storm,' using violent weather as a metaphor for undeserved suffering. Nahum declares that 'the LORD's way is in whirlwind and storm,' affirming divine sovereignty over nature's most fearsome forces. The multilingual glosses favor 'storm' or 'tempest,' and the contexts link the term to theophany and judgment—God manifests in and through the storm.

(2×) Storm imagery is pervasive in biblical theophanies: God appears in clouds, thunder, and tempest, revealing both majesty and terror. Job's 'with a storm' captures the sense of being overwhelmed by forces beyond control or comprehension—God's actions feel like being battered by a tempest. Nahum's 'in whirlwind and storm' celebrates the same power, but from a different angle: the storm is God's pathway, the medium of his righteous judgment on Nineveh. The Spanish 'tempestad' and English 'storm' convey the violent, awe-inspiring nature of divine action. STORMS AND TEMPESTS

en: and-in-the-storm, with-storm | es: con-tempestad, y-en-tempestad | fr: dans-בשערה, et-dans-orge | de: [בשערה], [ובשערה] Job 9:17; Nah 1:3

שְׂעֹרָה H8184 Conj-w (34×)

barley — the bearded cereal grain, one of the seven species of the Land, used for food, feed, and offerings

Se'orah denotes barley, the hardy cereal that ripened before wheat and served as a staple grain for both humans and livestock throughout the ancient Near East. Its 34 occurrences span agricultural, cultic, and economic contexts. In the plague narrative, barley is singled out as already 'in the ear' when the hail struck Egypt, while wheat survived because it was late-ripening (Exod 9:31-32). It appears among the seven species that define the Land's bounty (Deut 8:8) and marks the harvest calendar in Ruth, where Naomi and Ruth arrive in Bethlehem at the beginning of barley harvest (Ruth 1:22). Hosea purchases his wayward wife for fifteen shekels of silver and a homer and a half of barley (Hos 3:2), and Ezekiel includes it in his siege-bread recipe (Ezek 4:9). Every target language renders it straightforwardly: Spanish 'cebada,' French 'orge,' German 'Gerste,' confirming a single, unified agricultural sense across all occurrences.

barley (34×) The cereal grain barley (Hordeum vulgare), cultivated widely in ancient Israel and the broader Near East. Appears in agricultural contexts as a crop that ripens before wheat (Exod 9:31), among the seven species of the promised land (Deut 8:8), as harvested grain marking the seasonal calendar (Ruth 1:22; 2:23), in economic transactions (Hos 3:2; 2 Kgs 7:1), and in cultic grain-offerings (Num 5:15; Ezek 45:13). Cognate with Aramaic se'arta and Arabic sha'ir. BARLEY GRAIN

en: and-barley, barley, of-barley | es: cebada, cebadas, y-cebada | fr: [ושעורים], [שערה], [שעורים] | de: Tore, Torhueter, [ושעורים] Exod 9:31; Lev 27:16; Num 5:15; Deut 8:8

שַׂעֲרָה H8185 Prep-m / N-fsc / 3ms (7×)

a hair, strand of hair — a single hair or collectively the hair of one's head or body

Sa'arah is the unit noun derived from se'ar ('hair'), formed with the feminine ending to denote a single strand. It appears in memorable expressions of divine precision and care: the slingers of Benjamin could hurl stones at a hair's breadth without missing (Judg 20:16), and no hair of Jonathan's head would fall to the ground (1 Sam 14:45). The same assurance echoes for the wise woman of Tekoa's son (2 Sam 14:11) and Adonijah (1 Kgs 1:52). In Job 4:15 it takes on an eerie collective sense as the hair of Eliphaz's flesh stands on end. Spanish 'cabello' and French 'poil' consistently capture this bodily sense.

Hair, a single hair (7×) A single hair or strand of hair, used both as an individual unit (in proverbial expressions about precision and divine protection) and collectively for body hair. The construct phrase missaarath rosho ('a hair of his head') appears in oath-like guarantees that not one hair shall fall (1 Sam 14:45; 2 Sam 14:11; 1 Kgs 1:52), while Judges 20:16 uses it as a measure of accuracy for Benjamite slingers. In Job 4:15 the hair of the flesh bristles during a terrifying vision. French 'de-poil' and Spanish 'de-cabello' reflect the same somatic sense throughout. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-a-hair-of, from-hair-of, of-his-hair | es: cabellos-de, de-cabello-de, de-su-cabello | fr: de-hair-de, de-poil, de-son-hair | de: [שערת], als-der-hairs-von, als-hairs-von Judg 20:16; 1Sam 14:45; 2Sam 14:11; 1Kgs 1:52; Job 4:15

שַׁעֲרוּרָה H8186a Conj-w / Adj-fs (2×)

Horrible thing, horror; something shocking and morally abhorrent

A feminine noun meaning horrible thing or horror, appearing in Jeremiah to describe moral and spiritual abominations. In Jeremiah 5:30, the prophet declares, 'An appalling and horrible thing has occurred in the land'—referring to false prophecy and corrupt leadership. In Jeremiah 23:14, Jeremiah sees 'a horrible thing' in the prophets of Jerusalem: adultery, lying, and strengthening evildoers. The term conveys not just shock but moral revulsion—these are things that should not be, violations of the covenant order. The multilingual glosses ('horrible thing,' 'cosa horrible') capture the sense of moral outrage and astonishment.

(2×) Jeremiah's use of שַׁעֲרוּרָה marks moments of prophetic horror at the depth of Judah's corruption. The 'horrible thing' is not a natural disaster but a moral catastrophe: prophets lie, priests exploit, and the people love it so. The pairing with 'appalling' (שַׁמָּה) in 5:30 intensifies the sense of shock—this is both astonishing and horrifying. The Spanish 'cosa horrible' and French forms preserve the adjectival-nominal structure, and the repetition in Jeremiah underscores the prophet's lament: horror upon horror has overtaken the land. This is the vocabulary of moral collapse. TERROR AND AWE

en: and-horrible, horrible-thing | es: cosa-horrible, y-horrible | fr: [ושערורה], [שערורה] | de: [וּשְׁעוּרָה], [שְׁעוּרָה] Jer 5:30; Jer 23:14

שַׁעֲרוּרִיָּה H8186b Adj-fs (3×)

horrible thing, abomination (morally shocking act)

This feminine noun denotes something horrible or abominable, an act so morally shocking it provokes revulsion. Jeremiah 18:13 asks rhetorically who has heard such a thing: 'the virgin Israel has done a horrible thing'—abandoned her God for idols. Hosea 6:10 declares 'I have seen a horrible thing in the house of Israel'—their harlotry and defilement. The Ketiv-Qere variation in Hosea suggests some textual uncertainty about the exact form, but the sense remains clear: something morally repugnant that violates covenant expectations. The term carries stronger moral freight than simple 'bad thing'—it's an outrage, an abomination against divine standards.

(3×) An act or thing so morally shocking it horrifies. Jeremiah 18:13 identifies Israel's apostasy as 'a horrible thing' unprecedented among the nations. Hosea 6:10 (with Ketiv-Qere variation) describes God seeing 'a horrible thing' in Israel's house—their spiritual adultery. The word appears in prophetic indictments of covenant violation, emphasizing not just wrongdoing but its shocking, abominable character. The multilingual glosses ('cosa horrible,' 'horrible thing,' 'horreur') confirm this denotes something beyond ordinary sin—a moral outrage that provokes divine and human revulsion. TERROR AND AWE

en: (horrible-thing), [horror], horrible-thing | es: cosa-horrible, horror | fr: [שערורה], horreur | de: [(שְׁעוּרִיָּה)], [[שְׁעִירִיָּה]], [שְׁעֹרֶת] Jer 18:13; Hos 6:10

שְׁעַרְיָה H8187 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Shearíah, a Benjamite descendant of Saul listed in genealogical records

Shearíah appears in the genealogies of Benjamin as a descendant of King Saul through Jonathan's line. The name occurs twice in 1 Chronicles, in parallel genealogical lists (8:38 and 9:44), identifying one of the sons of Azel. The Greek Septuagint renders the name variously as Saraia or Saaria, reflecting different manuscript traditions.

(2×) A personal name borne by a Benjamite in the post-exilic genealogies. The occurrence in both 1 Chronicles 8:38 and 9:44 represents the same individual in duplicate genealogical records, a common feature of Chronicles' literary structure. All four languages provide transliterations rather than translations, confirming its status as a proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Shearyah | es: y-Searías | fr: [וּשְׁעַרְיָה] | de: [וּשְׁעַרְיָה] 1Chr 8:38; 1Chr 9:44

שְׁעָרִים H8188 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Seorim; personal name of a priest assigned to the fourth division of temple service

Seorim is the name of a priest whose family formed the fourth of the twenty-four priestly divisions established by David for temple service. His name appears in 1 Chronicles 24:8 in the list organizing the descendants of Aaron into rotating courses. Each division served one week at a time, ensuring orderly worship and distributing the honor and responsibility of temple ministry. The name's etymology may relate to barley (שְׂעוֹרִים), though as a proper name it functions primarily as an identifier.

(1×) Personal name of a priestly family head in the temple service roster. The form לִשְׁעָרִים (le-Se'orim) means 'for Seorim,' appearing in 1 Chronicles 24:8 with the preposition indicating the assignment 'for' or 'to' this family. English, Spanish render 'for-Seorim' and 'para-Seorim,' while French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew. The Septuagint gives Σεωρειμ. This priestly division system organized by lot ensured fairness and prevented disputes, with each course serving in Jerusalem for one week twice yearly, plus major festivals. Seorim's descendants would have maintained this service through succeeding generations, carrying responsibility for sacrifices, incense, and temple worship during their appointed times. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: for-Seorim | es: para-Seorim | fr: [לִשְׁעָרִים] | de: [לִשְׁעָרִים] 1Chr 24:8

שַׁעֲלַיִם H8189 Conj-w (3×)

Shaaraim (place name: 'double gates,' two locations in Judah/Simeon)

Shaaraim means 'two gates' or 'double gates,' designating two distinct towns in southern Israel. The first appears in the Shephelah of Judah (Joshua 15:36) and along the route of the Philistine flight after David killed Goliath (1 Samuel 17:52, where the Septuagint translates it as 'the gates'). The second belonged to Simeon in the Negeb (1 Chronicles 4:31), apparently the same as Sharuhen (Joshua 19:6) and possibly Shilhim (Joshua 15:32). The name likely reflects an actual architectural feature—towns with double gate systems. The dual attestation creates geographical ambiguity that must be resolved by context.

(3×) Place name meaning 'double gates' for two southern towns. Joshua 15:36 lists it among Judahite Shephelah settlements. 1 Samuel 17:52 identifies the road the Philistines fled along after Goliath's death as 'the way to Shaaraim' (literally 'to the gates'). 1 Chronicles 4:31 places it in Simeonite territory in the Negeb. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate ('Shaaraim,' 'Saaraim'), appropriate for proper nouns. The name's meaning ('gates') occasionally shows through in Greek translation as 'the gates.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shaarayim, and-Shaarayim, and-in-Sha'arayim | es: Shaaraim, y-Saaraim, y-en-Saarayim | fr: Shaarayim, [וּבְשַׁעֲרַיִם], et-Shaarayim | de: Shaarayim, [וּבְשַׁעֲרַיִם], und-Shaarayim Josh 15:36; 1Sam 17:52; 1Chr 4:31

שַׁעַשְׁגַּז H8190 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shaashgaz; personal name of a royal eunuch in charge of King Ahasuerus's concubines

Shaashgaz was a eunuch in the Persian court of King Ahasuerus (Xerxes), specifically the custodian of the concubines. He appears in Esther 2:14, where the text explains the protocol for women who spent a night with the king—afterward they would be placed under Shaashgaz's care in the second harem. His position involved oversight of women who had been with the king but were not chosen as queen, essentially managing the king's expanded household. His name is likely Persian, though its exact etymology is uncertain.

(1×) The name of a eunuch overseeing the concubines in the Persian royal harem. All language glosses provide transliterations: English 'Shaashgaz,' Spanish 'Saasgaz,' while French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew form. The Septuagint renders his name as Γαι. In Esther 2:14, Shaashgaz is identified as 'the king's eunuch who was in charge of the concubines'—women who had been with the king but were not chosen as queen. These women lived in a separate part of the harem and would not see the king again unless specifically summoned. Shaashgaz thus managed what amounted to an honorable confinement for the king's former companions. PROPER

NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Shaashgaz | es: Saasgaz | fr: [שעשגז] | de: [שעשגז] Esth 2:14

שַׁעֲשֻׁעִים H8191 N-mpc / 3ms (9×)
Delight, exquisite pleasure; an intensive plural noun expressing deep enjoyment, often directed toward God's law or wisdom.
An intensive plural noun expressing profound delight and supreme enjoyment, most characteristically used in Psalm 119 to describe the psalmist's passionate love for God's Torah. Five of its nine occurrences appear in that single psalm (119:24, 77, 92, 143, 174), where the law is described as the speaker's delight in times of affliction and wandering. In Proverbs 8:30-31, personified Wisdom declares she was God's daily delight at creation, rejoicing in the inhabited world. Isaiah 5:7 calls Judah the 'planting of his delight,' and Jeremiah 31:20 names Ephraim a 'child of delight.' Spanish 'delicias' and French 'délice' beautifully capture the intensive, almost ecstatic quality.

delight, exquisite pleasure (9×) Deep, intensive delight or exquisite pleasure, always in the plural of intensity (שַׁעֲשֻׁעִים). The word expresses more than ordinary enjoyment—it conveys a kind of rapturous engagement. In Psalm 119 (vv. 24, 77, 92, 143, 174), the psalmist declares God's testimonies and Torah to be his 'delights,' the sustaining joy that preserves him through suffering. In Proverbs 8:30-31, Wisdom herself was God's daily delight before creation and found her delight among humanity. Isaiah 5:7 and Jeremiah 31:20 use it for God's tender delight in his people. Spanish 'delicias' and 'deleites,' French 'délice,' and German evidence all point to a register of intense, deeply personal pleasure. JOY AND EXULTATION en: and-my-delight, are-my-delight, daily-His-delight | es: deleites-de-mí, delicias, delicias-de-mí | fr: [שעשועין], [שעשעים], délice | de: [ושעשע], [שעשועין], [שעשעים] Ps 119:24; Ps 119:77; Ps 119:92; Ps 119:143; Ps 119:174

שָׁפָה H8192 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-ms (2×)
To be swept bare, laid bare, made desolate or exposed (typically of mountains or bones)
This verb describes the process of being stripped clean or exposed, whether by wind, disease, or destruction. Isaiah 13:2 speaks of raising a signal on a 'bare mountain'—one conspicuously visible because vegetation has been swept away. In Job 33:21, the word depicts extreme emaciation where bones protrude through wasted flesh. The root connects to Arabic words for raising dust and Aramaic terms for leveling or smoothing, suggesting a fundamental sense of exposure through removal.

(2×) The Niphal participle and Pual forms both convey passive transformation to a state of bareness. The mountain in Isaiah is 'wind-swept' or naturally denuded, making it an ideal place for a visible signal. Job's reference to bones being 'laid bare' captures the horror of severe illness. Spanish uses 'pelado' (bare, peeled) and 'desnudan' (stripped naked), while English glosses emphasize the exposing action. The domain assignment to Violence/Destruction likely reflects Job's context, though the Isaiah usage is more neutral. DESOLATION AND RUIN
en: (and-are-laid-bare), bareness | es: (y-se-desnudan), pelado | fr: [נשפה], et-(ושכו) | de: [(ושכו)], [נשפה] Job 33:21; Isa 13:2

שָׂפָה H8193 Conj-w / N-fs (177×)
Lip(s), speech; the edge or rim of an object; the shore or bank of water; also language or tongue.
Safah is one of Hebrew's most elegant body-part metaphors, radiating outward from the physical lip to encompass speech, the edge of any surface, the shore of any water, and even human language itself. As the organ of speech, it appears over 120 times — guarding lips, lying lips, flattering lips, burning lips touched by a coal (Isa 6:7). But the same word names the brim of Solomon's great molten sea (1 Kgs 7:23), the edge of the tabernacle curtains (Exod 26:4), and the shore of the sea where Abraham's descendants will be as numerous as sand (Gen 22:17). Most strikingly, safah means 'language' in the Babel narrative — 'the whole earth had one lip' (Gen 11:1). Arabic preserves this range beautifully: shafah for the body part, hafah for edges, shati' for shores, and lughah for language — four words where Hebrew uses one.

1. lip, lips (body part) (123×) The physical lip or lips as the organ of speech — the dominant sense at 123 occurrences, spanning all major genres. Lips speak (Ps 34:13), lie (Ps 12:2-3), flatter (Prov 7:21), guard wisdom (Prov 5:2), tremble in prayer (1 Sam 1:13), and are touched by a burning coal in Isaiah's commissioning (Isa 6:5-7). Moses protests he is 'uncircumcised of lips' (Exod 6:12, 30) — a striking idiom for speech impediment. Arabic shafah (شَفَة) and Korean 입술 track this body-part sense exactly. The dual form sefatayim dominates, reflecting the natural pairing of upper and lower lips. LIPS BODY PART en: are-lips-of, has-lips-of, lips | es: de-labios, labios, labios-de | fr: lips, lèvre, lèvres | de: Lippe, Lippen, Lippen-von Exod 6:12; Exod 6:30; 2Kgs 18:20; Job 11:2; Job 11:5

2. edge, brim, border (of object) (23×) The edge, brim, or border of a manufactured object — 23 occurrences concentrated in the tabernacle construction narratives (Exod 26-28) and the description of Solomon's temple vessels (1 Kgs 7:23-26). The curtains of the tabernacle have a safah (Exod 26:4, 10), the breastplate has a safah (Exod 28:26), and the great molten sea has a safah like a lily blossom (1 Kgs 7:26). Arabic hafah (حَافَة) and Korean 가장자리 ('rim, edge') both select non-anatomical vocabulary, confirming this as a dead metaphor fully lexicalized into its own spatial sense. German Rand and French bord similarly abandon lip-language entirely. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-its-brim, border, brim-of- | es: borde, borde-de, de-su-borde | fr: bord-de, bordure, brim-de- | de: Grenze, Lippe, Rand-von Exod 26:4; Exod 26:10; Exod 28:26

3. shore, bank (of water) (22×) The shore or bank of a body of water — 22 occurrences in narrative geography and divine promises. Abraham's seed will be multiplied 'as the sand on the shore of the sea' (Gen 22:17); Pharaoh's cows come up from the Nile 'on the bank' (Gen 41:3); Moses meets Pharaoh 'at the bank of the river' (Exod 7:15). The metaphorical logic is clear — the shore is the 'lip' where water meets land. Arabic shati' (شَاطِئ) and Swahili ufukwe/kando ya both use dedicated shore vocabulary, while Spanish orilla and French bord elegantly bridge 'edge' and 'shore' just as Hebrew does. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: bank-of, border-of-, edge-of- | es: en-orilla-de, la-orilla-de, la-ribera-de | fr: bank-de, bord-de, bord-de- | de: Grenze-von-, Lippe, Rand-von- Gen 22:17; Gen 41:3; Gen 41:17; Exod 2:3; Exod 7:15

4. language, tongue (Gen 11) (8×) Language, tongue, or system of speech — 8 occurrences, most famously in the Babel narrative where 'the whole earth had one safah and one set of words' (Gen 11:1, 6-7, 9). Also in Isa 28:11 ('with stammering lips and another tongue') and Isa 33:19 ('a people of obscure speech'). The metonymic chain is clear: lip → speech → the whole system of speech. Arabic lughah (لُغَة), Korean 언어, and Swahili lugha all use dedicated 'language' vocabulary here, showing that this metonymic extension has become a full distinct sense rather than a contextual shade of the body-part meaning. TONGUE (BODY AND SPEECH)
en: a-language, and-language, beyond | es: labio, lengua-de, lengua-de-ellos | fr: et-language, language, language-de | de: Lippe, die-Sprache, ein-Lippen Gen 11:1; Gen 11:6; Gen 11:7; Gen 11:9

5. (1×) Speech or eloquence as a faculty — the single occurrence at Job 12:20 where God 'takes away the speech of the trusted' (safah ne'emanim). Here safah means not 'lip' (the body part) nor 'language' (the system) but the faculty or power of persuasive speech. Spanish el habla de and German welcher Mund both select 'speech/mouth' rather than 'lip' or 'language,' indicating translators perceive a distinct semantic shade. In context, Job is cataloguing God's sovereign reversals: the wise lose their wisdom, the eloquent lose their speech. LIPS BODY PART en: speech | es: el-habla-de | fr: lèvre | de: welcher-Mund Job 12:20

שְׂפוֹת H8194 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)
cheese, or possibly cream; a dairy product provided to David's men during Absalom's rebellion

This noun of uncertain meaning denotes some kind of dairy product, traditionally understood as cheese. It appears in 2 Samuel 17:29 in the list of provisions brought to David and his men at Mahanaim when they fled from Absalom. The term may derive from a root meaning 'to skim off,' leading to interpretations like 'cream' or 'curds,' though ancient versions and rabbinic tradition support 'cheese.' The uncertainty reflects the word's rarity, though the context clearly indicates nourishing dairy provisions.

(1×) A dairy product, likely cheese, provided among supplies to David's army. The construct form שְׁפוֹת (shepot) appears with 'of the herd' (שְׁפוֹת בָּקָר) in 2 Samuel 17:29. English renders 'and-cheese-of,' Spanish 'y-quesos-de' (and cheeses of), French 'et-cheese-de,' and German 'und-cheese-von.' This provision appears alongside wheat, barley, flour, honey, butter, sheep, and other foodstuffs brought by supporters when David arrived at Mahanaim fleeing Absalom. The dairy product complemented the grain and other protein sources, ensuring the hungry, weary army had substantial nourishment. Whether firm cheese or rich curds, it represented portable, high-value nutrition appropriate for feeding troops. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-cheese-of | es: y-quesos-de | fr: et-cheese-de | de: und-cheese-von
2Sam 17:29

שְׁפוֹ H8195 N-proper-ms (2×)

Shepho/Shephi, an Edomite name appearing in genealogies with variant spellings

This personal name appears in the genealogies of Edom with two distinct Hebrew spellings: Shepho in Genesis 36:23 and Shephi in 1 Chronicles 1:40. The variation likely represents dialectal differences or scribal updating rather than two different individuals. The Septuagint shows similar variation (Soph, Sophim, Sob, Sapphei), confirming the textual instability common with proper names across manuscript traditions. This individual was among the sons of Shobal, a Horite chief in Edom.

(2×) A single individual identified through two spelling variants in parallel genealogical passages. Genesis preserves the older 'Shepho' form while Chronicles updates to 'Shephi,' a pattern seen elsewhere in comparing these two books. Modern translations consistently recognize these as the same person. The multilingual glosses provide transliterations that attempt to capture one or both forms, with French and German preserving the Hebrew script to acknowledge the textual variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Shephi, Shepho | es: Sefi, Shefo | fr: Shepho, [שפי] | de: Schefo, [שפי]
Gen 36:23; 1Chr 1:40

שְׁפוֹט H8196 N-ms (2×)

Judgment, act of judgment, judicial sentence or legal decision

This noun denotes formal legal judgment or the execution of judicial decisions. In 2 Chronicles 20:9, it appears in a list of calamities (sword, judgment, pestilence, famine) that might prompt crying out to God. Ezekiel 23:10 uses the plural 'judgments' to describe the legal sentences executed on Oholah (Samaria). The word is relatively rare and its exact form is questioned by scholars—some ancient versions support it while modern scholars have suggested emendations.

(2×) The term refers specifically to formal judicial acts or sentences, distinct from more common words for justice or law. Both passages concern divine or legal judgments being executed. Spanish 'juicio' and French 'jugement' capture the juridical sense, as do the English glosses emphasizing the judicial nature. The assignment to Courts and Legal Procedures fits the contexts of formal legal action and sentencing. JUDGMENT AND VERDICT
en: and-judgments, judgment | es: juicio, y-juicios | fr: [שפוט], et-jugement | de: [ושפוטים], [שפוט]
2Chr 20:9; Ezek 23:10

שְׁפוּפָם H8197a Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shephupham; personal name of a Benjaminite ancestor, head of a tribal family

Shephupham appears in Numbers 26:39 as a clan ancestor in Benjamin's tribal census. His descendants formed one of the Benjaminite families, though the name shows variation across biblical genealogies. He corresponds to Muppim and Huppim in Genesis 46:21 and to Shuppim and Huppim in 1 Chronicles 7:12, reflecting the textual fluidity common in genealogical lists. These variations likely stem from different textual traditions or dialectal pronunciations of the same ancestral name.

(1×) Ancestral name of a Benjaminite clan in Numbers 26:39. The prepositional form לְשְׁפוּפָם (le-Shephupham) means 'to/of Shephupham,' indicating this is the eponymous ancestor of the Shuphamite clan. English renders 'to-Shephupham,' Spanish 'De-Sefufam' (of Sephupham), French 'à-Shephupham,' German 'zu-Shephupham.' The Septuagint gives Σουταλα or Σοφαν. The census lists this family among Benjamin's clans during Israel's wilderness period. BDB notes the name's equivalence with Muppim and Huppim (Genesis 46:21) and Shuppim and Huppim (1 Chronicles 7:12), showing how genealogical names could vary in spelling while referring to the same ancestral figure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: to-Shephupham | es: De-Sefufam | fr: à-Shephupham | de: zu-Shephupham
Num 26:39

שְׁפוּפָן H8197b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shephuphan; personal name of a Benjaminite in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles Shephuphan is listed in 1 Chronicles 8:5 among the sons of Bela in Benjamin's genealogy. This name is essentially another variant of Shephupham/Shuppim, demonstrating how the same family name could be recorded with slight variations in different genealogical contexts. The Chronicles genealogies often preserve alternative name forms or traditions distinct from those in the Pentateuch or Samuel-Kings, reflecting different source documents or scribal practices.

(1×) Personal name in Benjamin's genealogy in 1 Chronicles 8:5. The form וְשְׁפוּפָן (we-Shephuphan) includes the conjunction 'and,' appearing in a genealogical list. Spanish provides 'y-Sefufán' (and Sephuphan), while French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew. The Septuagint shows considerable variation (Σωφαφφακ, Σωφαν, Σεπφαμ), reflecting the challenges of transliterating unfamiliar Hebrew names and perhaps indicating different textual traditions. This name represents the same ancestral figure as Shephupham in Numbers 26:39, with the variation likely due to dialectal differences or scribal tradition rather than indicating distinct individuals. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: and-Shefufan | es: y-Sefufán | fr: [ושפופן] | de: [ושפופן]
1Chr 8:5

שִׁפְחָה H8198 N-fsc / 3ms (63×)

shiphchah – maidservant, female slave; also a humble self-designation by a woman addressing a superior

The feminine noun shiphchah refers to a maidservant or female slave within a household, synonymous with amah (H0519) though with subtle social nuances. It first appears in Gen 12:16 among Pharaoh's gifts to Abram and features prominently in the matriarchal narratives: Hagar is Sarah's shiphchah (Gen 16:1), Bilhah and Zilpah are the shiphchoth who bear children on behalf of Rachel and Leah (Gen 30:4-12). Beyond denoting actual servitude, the word functions as a conventional expression of humility when a woman addresses a social superior, as Hannah does before Eli (1 Sam 1:16) and Abigail before David (1 Sam 25:24-28). Spanish sierva, French servante, and German Magd capture both dimensions.

maidservant, female slave (63×) A female servant or slave-girl belonging to a household, used of actual bondwomen like Hagar (Gen 16:1), Bilhah, and Zilpah (Gen 29:24, 29), as well as a conventional self-humbling term by women addressing superiors – as when Hannah speaks to Eli (1 Sam 1:16) or Abigail to David (1 Sam 25:24-28). Spanish sierva, French servante, and German Magd consistently render the word, with possessive suffixes (-her, -his, -your) reflecting the relational nature of servanthood. All 63 occurrences share a single semantic core of female domestic service or deferential self-reference. FEMALE SERVANT SLAVE en: maidservant-her, maidservant-his, maidservant-of | es: sierva-de, sierva-

suya, sierva-tuya | fr: le-servante-de, servante-de, servante-sa | de: Magd, dein-Magd, deine-Magd Gen 12:16; Gen 16:1; Gen 16:2; Gen 16:5; Gen 16:6

שָׁפַט H8199 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (204×)

To judge, govern, vindicate, contend at law; as participle: judge (office-holder); Niphal: be judged, stand trial

Shaphat is the legal and governmental verb of the Hebrew Bible — covering the full arc from courtroom adjudication to national governance to divine vindication of the oppressed. In the Judges period, the shofet was not merely an arbitrator but a charismatic military-political leader, a sense Arabic qada (spanning both 'judge' and 'rule') confirms. The same verb turns adversarial in the Niphal to mean 'enter into a lawsuit,' as when God challenges Israel to contend with Him (Isa 43:26). Spanish distinguishes juzgar (adjudicate) from gobernar (govern) and vindicar (vindicate), mapping the same fractures visible in the Hebrew evidence.

1. to judge, adjudicate (98×) The foundational Qal verbal action: judging, rendering verdicts, administering justice. Ninety-eight occurrences from Samuel judging Israel at Bethel, Gilgal, and Mizpah (1 Sam 7:16) to Solomon's prayer for judicial wisdom (1 Kgs 3:9). Arabic hakama, Spanish juzgar, French juger, and Korean simpan-hada converge on forensic adjudication. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: I-shall-judge, I-will-judge, and-he-judged | es: Y-juzgó, juzgaré, te-juzgaré | fr: et-il-jugea, et-jugea, juger | de: richten, richtete, und-er-richtete Judg 3:10; Judg 10:2; Judg 10:3; Judg 12:7; Judg 12:8

2. judge (person, office-holder) (61×) The Qal active participle lexicalized as the substantive 'judge' (shofet/shoftim). Sixty-one occurrences spanning judicial appointment (Deut 16:18), the divine title 'Judge of all the earth' (Gen 18:25), and the era's named office-holders. Arabic al-qadi, Spanish el juez, and German der Richter confirm fully nominalized status. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: a-judge, judge, judges | es: a-jueces, el-juez, jueces | fr: juger, juges, le-juge | de: Gerichte, Richter, der-Richter Gen 18:25; Num 25:5; Deut 16:18; Deut 17:9; Deut 17:12

3. to vindicate, do justice for (16×) Qal forms with benefactive or vindicatory force: judging on behalf of, championing the oppressed. Sixteen occurrences including David's plea 'Judge me, O LORD' (Ps 7:8), 'Vindicate me, O God' (Ps 26:1), and Isaiah's call to 'judge the fatherless' (Isa 1:17). Arabic ihkum li ('judge for me') and Spanish juzgame confirm the pro-plaintiff orientation. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: and-may-he-vindicate-me, do-justice-for, judge | es: Juzgará, Júzgame, Para-juzgar | fr: et-peut-il-vindicate-moi, il-a-jugé, il-jugera | de: richten, richtet, richtete 1Sam 24:15; 2Chr 26:21; Ps 7:8; Ps 10:18; Ps 26:1

4. to enter into judgment, contend (13×) Niphal and related forms of reciprocal judicial action: entering a lawsuit, contending at law, litigating. Thirteen occurrences including God's 'I will enter into judgment with you' (Ezek 20:35–36), the futility of contending with God (Job 9:15), and the fool's courtroom (Prov 29:9). Arabic haakama (Form III, 'to litigate') marks the shift from authority to adversarial engagement. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: I-judged, I-will-judge, am-entering-into-judgment | es: Y-me-juzgaré, a-mi-juez, entraré-en-juicio | fr: et-je-fera-juge, et-juger, juger | de: richten, richtete, und-ich-wird-richte 1Sam 12:7; Job 9:15; Prov 29:9; Isa 43:26; Isa 59:4

5. to rule, govern (11×) Qal extended from judicial to political governance — ruling or leading a people in the pre-monarchic pattern. Eleven occurrences: 'give us a king to judge us' meaning 'to govern us' (1 Sam 8:5–6), Moses sitting all day 'judging' as executive (Exod 18:13). Arabic qada with governance connotation and the book of Judges confirm shaphat as the pre-monarchic term for leadership. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: and-he-will-judge-us, judging, to-judge | es: a-juzgar, juez, juez-de | fr: et-il-fera-juge-nous, juger, pour-il-a-jugé | de: richten, richtete, und-er-wird-richte-uns Exod 18:13; 1Sam 8:5; 1Sam 8:6; 1Sam 8:20; 1Kgs 3:9

6. to be judged (passive) (5×) The Niphal passive: to be judged, to stand trial, to undergo judgment. Five occurrences including 'let the nations be judged before you' (Ps 9:19), the assurance for the righteous (Ps 37:33), and the devastating 'when he is judged, let him come out guilty' (Ps 109:7). Arabic yudan and Korean simpan-batda confirm the passive voice. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: let-be-judged, they-shall-judge-you, when-he-is-judged | es: Cuando-sea-juzgado, cuando-juzgaba, cuando-sea-juzgado | fr: dans-juger, juger | de: lass-sein-richtete, richten, richtete 2Chr 22:8; Ps 9:19; Ps 37:33; Ps 109:7; Ezek 24:14

שָׁפַט H8200 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

judges, magistrates; Aramaic term for judicial officials who administer justice and teach law

This Aramaic participle functions as a noun meaning judges or magistrates, appearing in Ezra 7:25 in Artaxerxes's decree to Ezra. The Persian king authorizes Ezra to appoint magistrates and judges who will administer justice for all the people beyond the River who know God's law, and to teach those who do not. The term denotes officials with both judicial and instructional authority, responsible for maintaining order according to divine and royal law.

(1×) Refers to judges or magistrates with authority to decide legal cases in Ezra 7:25. The Aramaic participial form שפטין (shaptin) is plural, literally 'judges' or 'those who judge.' English renders 'magistrates,' Spanish 'magistrados,' while French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew/Aramaic form. King Artaxerxes commands Ezra to 'appoint magistrates and judges who may judge all the people in the province Beyond the River, all who know the laws of your God.' These officials would combine judicial and educational functions—deciding cases according to Torah and teaching those unfamiliar with God's law. The Persian authorization shows remarkable support for Jewish self-governance according to religious law within the empire. JUDGING AND DECIDING en: magistrates | es: magistrados | fr: [שפטין] | de: [שפטין] Ezra 7:25

שֶׁפֶט H8201 Conj-w (16×)

Judgments, acts of divine justice — punitive acts executed by God against nations or the wicked

A masculine noun used exclusively in the plural (shephatim) to denote God's punitive acts of justice, distinct from the more common mishpat. It appears first in the Exodus narrative, where God promises to bring Israel out of Egypt 'by great acts of judgment' (Exod 6:6; 7:4) and executes judgments against all the gods of Egypt (Exod 12:12; Num 33:4). Ezekiel dominates its usage, employing the phrase 'execute judgments' (asah shephatim) repeatedly to announce divine punishment against Jerusalem and the nations (Ezek 5:10, 15; 11:9; 16:41; 25:11; 28:22, 26; 30:14, 19). Ezekiel 14:21 names God's four judgments — sword, famine, wild beasts, and pestilence. Proverbs 19:29 extends the term to the judicial consequences awaiting the scoffer. French 'jugements' and German 'Gerichte' both render the plural force of punitive divine acts.

Judgments, judicial acts (16×) Acts of divine judgment or judicial punishment, always in the plural שְׁפָטִים, denoting God's punitive interventions against Egypt (Exod 6:6; 7:4; 12:12; Num 33:4), Jerusalem, and foreign nations (Ezek 5:10, 15; 11:9; 25:11; 28:22, 26; 30:14, 19). Distinct from the more general mishpat ('ordinance, case law'), this noun emphasizes the executory, retributive dimension of divine justice. Ezekiel 14:21 catalogues four specific judgments — sword, famine, wild beasts, pestilence — while Proverbs 19:29 applies the term to human scorners who face inevitable judicial reckoning. JUDGMENT AND VERDICT

en: and-with-judgments, judgments, judgments-my | es: con-juicios, juicios, juicios-de-mí | fr: [שפטים], avec-jugements, et-avec-jugements | de: Gericht, Gerichte, [שפטים] Exod 6:6; Exod 7:4; Exod 12:12; Num 33:4; 2Chr 24:24

שָׁפָט H8202 N-proper-ms (8×)

Shaphat: a personal name meaning 'he has judged,' borne by at least five men including the father of the prophet Elisha.

A masculine proper name meaning 'he has judged,' derived from the root shaphat (to judge). Its most prominent bearer is Shaphat son of Adlai, father of the prophet Elisha, who appears repeatedly in the Elijah-Elisha cycle (1 Kgs 19:16, 19; 2 Kgs 3:11; 6:31). Other bearers include a Simeonite spy sent to scout Canaan (Num 13:5), a grandson of Zerubbabel in the Davidic genealogy (1 Chr 3:22), a Gadite chief (1 Chr 5:12), and a herdsman of David over the cattle in the valleys (1 Chr 27:29). The Septuagint consistently renders it Saphat or Saphath.

Shaphat (8×) The personal name Shaphat (שָׁפָט), a theophoric name meaning 'he has judged,' reflecting the confidence that God exercises righteous judgment. Best known as the patronymic of the prophet Elisha—'Elisha son of Shaphat' recurs as a fixed formula in Kings (1 Kgs 19:16, 19; 2 Kgs 3:11; 6:31). The name is also borne by a Simeonite representative in the wilderness reconnaissance (Num 13:5), a Davidic descendant (1 Chr 3:22), a Gadite leader (1 Chr 5:12), and a royal herdsman (1 Chr 27:29). All translations treat it as a straightforward proper noun: English 'Shaphat,' Spanish 'Safat,' French and German 'Shaphat/Shafat.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shafat, Shaphat, and-Shaphat | es: Safat, y-Safat | fr: Shafat, Shaphat, [ושפט] | de: Shafat, Shaphat, [ושפט] Num 13:5; 1Kgs 19:16; 1Kgs 19:19; 2Kgs 3:11; 2Kgs 6:31

שְׁפַטְיָה H8203 N-proper-ms (13×)

Shephatiah — a masculine personal name meaning 'YHWH has judged,' borne by several OT figures including a son of David.

A theophoric name combining the root for 'judge' with the divine name, meaning 'YHWH has judged' or 'YHWH has vindicated.' It is borne by at least eight distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. David's fifth son carries it (2 Sam 3:4; 1 Chr 3:3), as does a Benjamite leader (1 Chr 9:8), one of David's warriors at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:5), and a Simeonite prince (1 Chr 27:16). In the post-exilic period it names heads of returning families (Ezra 2:4; 8:8; Neh 7:9) and one of Jeremiah's accusers (Jer 38:1). The LXX rendering Saphatias and multilingual forms — Spanish 'Sefatías,' German/French 'Shefatyah' — all transliterate the same underlying Hebrew name.

Shephatiah (person name) (13×) The proper name Shephatiah (also Shephatyahu), meaning 'YHWH has judged,' identifying multiple individuals: David's fifth son (2 Sam 3:4), a Benjamite in Jerusalem (1 Chr 9:8), a warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:5), a Simeonite tribal chief (1 Chr 27:16), a son of Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 21:2), heads of returning exile families (Ezra 2:4; Neh 7:9), and one of the officials who sought Jeremiah's death (Jer 38:1). The LXX Saphatias and multilingual transliterations confirm a single onomastic entry across all thirteen occurrences. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shefatyah, Shephatiah, Shephatyah | es: Sefatya, Sefatías, Shefatyah | fr: Schephathia, Shefatyah, [שפטיה] | de: Shefatyah, [ושפטיהו], [שפטיה] 2Sam 3:4; 1Chr 3:3; 1Chr 9:8; 1Chr 12:6; 1Chr 27:16

שִׁפְטָן H8204 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shiphtan; personal name of an Ephraimite prince involved in dividing the Promised Land

Shiphtan was the father of Kemuel, who served as the tribal prince representing Ephraim in the division of Canaan. His name appears in Numbers 34:24 in the list of leaders appointed to allocate the land among the tribes. The name may derive from the root for 'judgment,' though as a proper name it primarily functions to identify lineage. These tribal representatives worked alongside Joshua and Eleazar to ensure fair distribution of the inheritance.

(1×) Personal name identifying the father of Kemuel, Ephraim's representative in the land division. All major glosses provide transliterations: English 'Shiphtan,' Spanish 'Siftán,' French 'Shiphtan,' German 'Shiphtan.' The Septuagint renders Σαβαθα(ν) or Σαφατων. In Numbers 34:24, Shiphtan appears in the patronymic formula 'Kemuel son of Shiphtan,' establishing family identity and tribal legitimacy for this leader. The context places him among the princes chosen by divine command to oversee one of Israel's most critical moments—receiving their God-given inheritance and distributing it justly among families and clans. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shiphtan | es: Siftán | fr: Shiphtan | de: Shiphtan Num 34:24

שְׁפִי H8205 N-ms (10×)

A bare, treeless height or hilltop — exposed elevated ground, often used of desolate landscapes in prophetic imagery

This noun denotes a bare, windswept height stripped of vegetation — an exposed hilltop or ridge. The prophets, especially Jeremiah, use it repeatedly to evoke spiritual desolation: Israel's idolatrous worship on the 'bare heights' (Jer 3:2, 21; 7:29) and the scorching desert wind sweeping across them (Jer 4:11; 12:12; 14:6). Yet the word also carries notes of hope, as when Isaiah envisions God turning bare heights into springs of water (Isa 41:18; 49:9). Balaam's perch in Numbers 23:3 is likewise a bare height chosen for its unobstructed vantage.

bare height, barren hilltop (10×) A bare or treeless elevated place, an exposed hilltop devoid of vegetation, used for panoramic vantage points (Num 23:3, where Balaam goes to a bare height to receive an oracle) and prominently in prophetic poetry for desolate landscapes associated with judgment and idolatry (Jer 3:2, 21; 4:11; 7:29; 12:12; 14:6). Isaiah reverses the imagery, promising that God will open rivers on bare heights (Isa 41:18; 49:9). Job 33:21 uses the root for the bareness of wasted flesh. Spanish 'alturas' and French 'désolation' capture the dual sense of elevation and bleakness. DESOLATION AND WASTE

en: [and-are-laid-bare], bare-heights, the-bare-heights | es: [y-se-desnudan], a-lugar-alto, alturas | fr: désolation, et-[ושפי], à-un-bare-height | de: Oede, [[ושפי]], zu-ein-bare-height Num 23:3; Job 33:21; Isa 41:18; Isa 49:9; Jer 3:2

שֻׁפִּים H8206 Conj-w (3×)

Shuppim (personal name: Benjaminite ancestor and temple gatekeeper)

Shuppim is a personal name appearing in Benjaminite genealogies and Levitical service rosters. The name shows orthographic variation (Shuppim, Shupham, Shephupham) across texts, typical of genealogical records. 1 Chronicles 7:12 and 7:15 list Shuppim in complex Benjaminite-Manassite family trees that scholars find difficult to harmonize. 1 Chronicles 26:16 names Shuppim as a temple gatekeeper assigned to the western gate Shallecheth and the upper causeway. The Greek versions reflect the textual complexity with varied transliterations. The name may be related to a root meaning 'serpent' but this remains uncertain.

(3×) Personal name in Benjaminite genealogy and Levitical service. 1 Chronicles 7:12 and 7:15 embed Shuppim in complicated tribal genealogies (with textual difficulties scholars debate). 1 Chronicles 26:16 identifies Shuppim and Hosah as gatekeepers assigned to the western temple precincts during David's organization of Levitical service. The name functions both ancestrally (marking a family line) and personally (an individual gatekeeper), showing the fluidity between ancestor and descendant in biblical naming patterns. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: To-Shuppim, and-Shuppim, and-for-Shuppim | es: Para-Supim, Y-Sufim, y-para-Sufim | fr: [ולשפים], [ושפם], [לשפים] | de: [ולשפים], [ושפם], [לשפים] 1Chr 7:12; 1Chr 7:15; 1Chr 26:16

שְׁפִיפֹן H8207 N-ms (1×)

horned viper; a venomous snake species, likely the cerastes with horn-like scales above its eyes

This noun denotes a specific type of venomous snake, the horned viper, appearing in Jacob's blessing of Dan in Genesis 49:17. The cerastes is characterized by horn-like scales above the eyes and its habit of lying hidden in sand or beside paths, striking the heel of passing animals or humans. Jacob uses this image to describe Dan: 'a serpent by the way, a viper by the path, that bites the horse's heels so that his rider falls backward.' The creature's stealth and deadly strike make it an apt symbol for tactical warfare and unexpected attack.

(1×) A horned viper that strikes from concealment in Genesis 49:17. English translates 'viper,' Spanish 'víbora' (viper), French 'viper,' German 'eine-Hornviper' (a horned viper). The Hebrew שְׁפִיפֹן (shephiphon) stands in parallel with נָחָשׁ (nachash, serpent), creating synonymous poetic lines. The creature is likely the cerastes cornutus or Hasselquistii, species native to the region with distinctive horn-like protrusions. Jacob's prophecy uses this snake's characteristic behavior—lying coiled beside the path, striking the heel of the unwary—to describe Dan's military tactics. The image captures both danger and the element of surprise, suggesting Dan would punch above his weight through cunning rather than overwhelming force. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2423 WITH 6 SENSES

en: viper | es: víbora | fr: viper | de: eine-Hornviper Gen 49:17

שְׁפִיר H8208 N-proper-fs (1×)

Shaphir; place name in the Philistine plain mentioned in Micah's lament over Judean cities

Shaphir is a town name appearing in Micah 1:11 within a series of wordplays on city names in a lament over Judah. The prophet addresses the 'inhabitant of Shaphir' in prophecies of coming judgment. The name may mean 'beautiful' or 'pleasant,' creating ironic contrast with the shame and exile predicted. Its exact location is uncertain, though it was apparently in the Shephelah near other towns Micah mentions. Some identify it with Shamir (Joshua 15:48), though this remains speculative.

(1×) A town in the Philistine plain or Shephelah mentioned in Micah 1:11. English and French render 'Shaphir/Saphir,' Spanish 'Safir,' while German retains the bracketed Hebrew. The Septuagint translates καλῶς (kalos), meaning 'beautiful/well'—apparently taking the name as a common adjective rather than a proper noun. Micah addresses 'inhabitant of Shaphir' in a passage using multiple wordplays on city names to reinforce the message of judgment. If the name indeed means 'beautiful,' the irony is sharp: the lovely town will experience shameful nakedness and exile. The town appears only here, making precise identification impossible, though it belonged to the circle of Judean settlements facing Assyrian invasion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shaphir | es: Safir | fr: Saphir | de: [שפיר] Mic 1:11

שַׁפִּיר H8209 Adj-ms (2×)

Beautiful, fair, attractive in appearance (especially of foliage or trees)

This adjective describes visual beauty and appears exclusively in Daniel's account of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. Both occurrences (4:12, 4:21) describe the magnificent foliage of the great tree in the vision—leaves so beautiful they contribute to the tree's splendor. The term emphasizes aesthetic appeal and flourishing appearance. Its limitation to describing the dream-tree's foliage suggests a specialized or poetic register appropriate to visionary literature.

(2×) An adjective of visual beauty applied to the tree's foliage in Nebuchadnezzar's vision. The repeated use in both the dream narration (4:12) and its recounting (4:21) emphasizes the tree's magnificent appearance before its destruction. Spanish 'hermoso' and the consistent 'beautiful' glosses across languages confirm the aesthetic sense. The assignment to Properties/Relations > Nature, Class, Example reflects its descriptive function characterizing natural beauty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: beautiful | es: hermoso | fr: [שפיר] | de: [שפיר] Dan 4:12; Dan 4:21

שָׁפַךְ H8210 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (117×)

To pour out, shed, or spill — liquid, blood, wrath, or spirit; covering ritual libation, violent bloodshed, passive outpouring, metaphorical effusion, and reflexive dissolution

Shafakh is Hebrew's verb of irreversible outpouring — once liquid leaves the vessel, it cannot be gathered back. This physical finality gives the word its devastating moral weight in the phrase shafakh dam ('pour out blood'), the Bible's primary idiom for homicide. The same root that describes a Levite pouring sacrificial blood at the altar base (Lev 4:7) also indicts murderers who 'shed innocent blood' (Deut 19:10; Isa 59:7). The Arabic cognate safaka preserves the same blood-shedding specialization, while the Assyrian shapaku reveals yet another direction: pouring earth to build a siege mound. In the prophets, God 'pours out' his wrath like liquid fire, and in Lamentations, the poet's very soul 'pours itself out' in grief — the Hitpael reflexive capturing dissolution from within.

1. pour out (liquid/libation) (59×) To pour out a liquid or libation (Qal active, 59x): the basic physical sense of emptying a vessel — water, oil, blood, or a drink offering — typically in ritual or everyday contexts. Spanish derramar ('to spill, pour'), French répandre ('to spread, pour'), and German ausgiessen ('to pour out') all converge on this core meaning. Dominates the Levitical sacrificial system: blood poured at the altar base (Lev 4:7, 18, 25, 30, 34), water poured on the ground (Deut 12:16, 24), and Moses pouring anointing oil (Exod 29:12). The Gideon narrative has the broth poured out before the angel (Judg 6:20), and Elijah's contest on Carmel involves water poured on the altar (1 Kgs 18:28). POURING AND SHEDDING

en: I-shall-pour-out, I-will-pour, I-will-pour-out | es: Y-derramaré, derramará, derramaré | fr: et-répandre, il-devra-verser, pour-il-a-répandu | de: ausgiessen, er-soll-giessen, goss-aus Exod 4:9; Lev 4:7; Lev 4:18; Lev 4:25; Lev 4:30

2. shed (blood) (34×) To shed blood (Qal, 34x): a specialized collocation with dam ('blood') forming the Bible's primary idiom for killing and bloodguilt. Arabic safaka (the direct cognate) preserves this identical blood-shedding specialization, confirming the antiquity of the collocation. German Blut vergiessen and Spanish derramar sangre similarly treat 'shedding blood' as a fixed expression. Foundational in Gen 9:6 ('whoever sheds the blood of man, by man shall his blood be shed'), extended through the bloodguilt laws (Num 35:33; Deut 21:7), and weaponized by the prophets against unjust rulers (Ezek 22:3, 6, 27). The participial form shofekh dam functions nearly as a legal term: 'blood-shedder.' POURING AND SHEDDING

en: he-shed, its-shedder, shed | es: a-derramar, derramador-de, derramar | fr: il-a-répandu, il-shed, il-versa | de: ausgiessen, er-shed, goss-aus Gen 9:6; Gen 37:22; Lev 17:4; Num 35:33; Deut 21:7

3. be poured out (Qal passive) (8×) To be poured out (Qal passive, 8x): passive forms of the Qal where the subject undergoes the pouring — blood that was shed, liquid that was spilled. Spanish derramada (feminine passive) and French a été répandu ('was poured') confirm the passive reading. Distinguished from the Nifal (sense 4) by morphological form: these are participial and perfect constructions functioning as true Qal passives. Appears in the bloodguilt law of Num 35:33 (blood 'shed' in the land), Lamentations' imagery of wrath poured out (Lam 2:4; 4:11), and the psalmist's lament that his steps 'nearly slipped' — literally, his feet 'were poured out' (Ps 73:2). POURING AND SHEDDING

en: He-poured-out, [ketiv:had-poured-out], and-will-be-poured-out | es: [se-derramaron], derramada, ha-derramado | fr: et-il-a-répandu, répandre, était-shed- | de: [ketiv:had-ausgegossen-out], ausgiessen, goss-aus Num 35:33; Ps 73:2; Lam 2:4; Lam 4:11

4. be poured out (Nifal passive) (8×) To be poured out (Nifal, 8x): the grammatically marked passive stem, expressing the state of having been poured or shed. German ausgegossen (past participle) and Spanish fue derramada ('was poured') mark the passive orientation. Appears in the talion formula of Gen 9:6 (the murderer's blood 'shall be shed'), Deuteronomic altar law where blood 'shall be poured' on the ground (Deut 12:27), and prophetic narratives — the altar at Bethel splits and ashes 'are poured out' as a sign of divine judgment (1 Kgs 13:3, 5). The Nifal and Qal passive (sense 3) cover overlapping semantic territory but are grammatically distinct stems. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: I-am-poured-out, and-poured-out, being-poured-out | es: fue-derramada, fui-derramado, se-ha-derramado | fr: –être-répandu, devra-être-shed, devra-être-versa-dehors | de: ausgiessen, goss-aus, ich-bin-ausgegossen Gen 9:6; Deut 12:27; Deut 19:10; 1Kgs 13:3; 1Kgs 13:5

5. pour out (wrath/spirit) (5×) To pour out wrath, fury, or spirit (Qal metaphorical, 5x): an abstract extension where the 'liquid' poured is God's anger, indignation, or Spirit. Spanish derramará ('will pour out') and French répandre retain the pouring imagery applied to non-physical objects. Prophetic judgment oracles dominate: God will 'pour out' his fury on Jerusalem (Ezek 7:8; 9:8; 14:19; 20:8, 13, 21), and Joel promises God will 'pour out' his Spirit on all flesh (Joel 2:28-29, quoted in Acts 2:17-18). The metaphor depends on the irreversibility of sense 1 — once wrath is poured, there is no retrieving it. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: and-let-pour-out, and-pour-out, and-poured | es: levantará, y-derramaron,

y-derramará | fr: et-laisse-verser-dehors, et-répandre, et-versa | de: ausgiessen, und-ausgiessen, und-goss Lev 17:13; 2Sam 20:10; 2Sam 20:15; Isa 37:33; Jer 6:6

6. pour itself out (Hitpael reflexive) (3×) To pour itself out (Hitpael reflexive, 3x): the reflexive stem describing something — a soul, life-force, or substance — flowing out of its own accord. Spanish derramarse ('to pour itself out') and French se répandre ('to spread/pour oneself') confirm the reflexive dimension. In Job 30:16, Job's soul 'pours itself out within him' — inner dissolution. In Lam 2:12, children's lives 'pour out' in their mothers' arms — a harrowing image of death as spillage. In Lam 4:1, gold 'pours itself out' in the streets — sacred objects scattered like refuse. Each occurrence transforms physical pouring into an image of irreversible loss. POURING AND SHEDDING

en: are-poured-out, pours-out, when-pours-out | es: al-derramarse, se-derrama, se-han-derramado | fr: répandre, verser | de: goss-aus Job 30:16; Lam 2:12; Lam 4:1

שֻׁפְדָּ֑ H8211 N-msc (2×)

Pouring place, ash heap, the designated location where sacrificial ashes were disposed

This term appears only in Leviticus 4:12, used twice in the same verse to describe the specific location outside the camp where the ashes from the altar were ceremonially poured out. It's a technical cultic term for the ash disposal site associated with certain sin offerings. The construct form 'place of pouring of the ashes' emphasizes its function as the designated receptacle for this sacred waste material from the tabernacle's sacrificial system.

(2×) A location specifically designated for the disposal of sacrificial ashes in the Priestly legislation. Both occurrences in Leviticus 4:12 refer to the same procedural requirement for disposing of the remains of certain sin offerings. The glosses emphasize the 'pouring' action and the compound nature of the term. While categorized under Properties/Relations, this is fundamentally a cultic-topographical term defining sacred space in Israel's worship system. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: pouring-place-of | es: vertedero-de | fr: pouring-lieu-de | de: pouring-Ort-von Lev 4:12

שְׁפִכָה H8212 N-fs (1×)

male organ, phallus; anatomical term for the male reproductive organ in legal contexts

This noun denotes the male reproductive organ, appearing in Deuteronomy 23:1 in legislation concerning who may enter the assembly of the Lord. The term literally means 'something poured out' or 'fluid-duct,' a euphemistic reference to male anatomy. The verse prohibits entry to anyone who is 'crushed' or has this organ 'cut off,' likely referring to those castrated or severely injured. Such laws distinguished Israel from surrounding cultures where temple eunuchs were common, maintaining the integrity of procreation and family lines within the covenant community.

(1×) Refers to the male reproductive organ in legislation about the assembly in Deuteronomy 23:1. The construct phrase כרות שפכה (kerut shaphkah) means 'cut off of the male organ' or 'one whose phallus is cut.' English translates 'member,' Spanish 'miembro-viril' (virile member), French and German 'member.' This appears in parallel with 'crushed of the testicles,' forming a merism covering various forms of genital injury or castration. The prohibition excluded such individuals from the assembly—not due to moral fault but likely to prevent assimilation of practices from surrounding cultures where cultic castration was known, and to maintain Israel's emphasis on fruitful multiplication as covenant blessing. FLESH AND BODY

en: member | es: miembro-viril | fr: member | de: member Deut 23:1

שָׁפַל H8213 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (29×)

To be low or humbled; to bring low, abase, or humble oneself before God or others

Shaphal captures the full spectrum of lowering: being brought low involuntarily, being actively humbled by another, and choosing to humble oneself. Isaiah uses the Qal stem repeatedly to announce that every proud thing will be laid low (Isa 2:9, 11, 12, 17; 5:15), while the Hifil appears in Hannah's song – 'the LORD brings low and lifts up' (1 Sam 2:7). The reflexive dimension surfaces in Psalm 113:6, where God 'stoops down' to regard heaven and earth. Arabic safula and Aramaic shphal share the root, confirming this as a pan-Semitic concept of vertical descent in status or posture.

1. bring low, humble someone (16×) The Hifil causative sense: to actively bring low, humble, abase, or cast down another person, nation, or entity. Appears 16 times, often with God as subject exercising sovereign authority over the proud (1 Sam 2:7, 2 Sam 22:28, Job 40:11). Spanish humilla and French abaisser both convey this active, downward-directed force. HUMILITY AND LOWERING

en: He-brings-low, He-lays-low, I-will-humble | es: fueron-humillados, ha-humillado, humilla | fr: Tu-apporte-bas, abaisser, apporte-bas | de: You-bringe-niedrig, [והשפילו], [והשפילה] 1Sam 2:7; 2Sam 22:28; Job 22:29; Job 40:11; Ps 18:27

2. be low, be humbled (10×) The Qal stative sense: to be in a low state, be brought low, or be humbled, describing the resulting condition of abasement rather than the act. Concentrated in Isaiah's oracles against pride (Isa 2:9, 11, 12, 17; 5:15), where all that is exalted shall become low. The passive sera-humillada in Spanish underscores the involuntary, decreed nature of this humbling. HUMILITY AND LOWERING

en: And-you-shall-be-brought-low, and-is-humbled, and-is-humbled- | es: Y-serás-humillada, será-humillada, serán-abajados | fr: abaisser, et-abaisser | de: erniedrigen, und-erniedrigen Isa 2:9; Isa 2:11; Isa 2:12; Isa 2:17; Isa 5:15

3. humble oneself, stoop down (3×) The Hifil used intransitively or reflexively: to humble oneself, stoop down, or condescend voluntarily. Psalm 113:6 celebrates God who 'stoops down' (mashpili) to look upon heaven and earth – a stunning divine self-lowering. Only 3 occurrences, but theologically potent, depicting deliberate self-abasement by choice rather than compulsion. HUMILITY AND LOWERING

en: and-you-made-low, sit-low, the-One-stooping-down | es: El-que-se-humilla, humíllense, y-te-rebajaste | fr: abaisser, et-abaisser, le-abaisser | de: der-erniedrigte, erniedrigen, und-erniedrigen Ps 113:6; Isa 57:9; Jer 13:18

שְׁפַל H8214 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (4×)

bring low, humble (Aramaic); to humble or abase someone in authority or pride, especially in Daniel's royal contexts

This Aramaic verb means to bring low or humble, appearing exclusively in Daniel in contexts of royal humbling. Daniel 4:37 (4:34 in Aramaic) speaks of God who 'is able to bring low those who walk in pride.' Daniel 5:19 describes how Nebuchadnezzar 'put down whom he would' when he had power. Daniel 5:22 rebukes Belshazzar: 'you have not humbled your heart' despite knowing what happened to Nebuchadnezzar. Daniel 7:24 prophesies of a king who 'shall put down three kings.' The multilingual glosses (Spanish humillar/derribar, French abaisser) confirm the humbling/bringing low sense. In Daniel's theology, human pride inevitably meets divine humbling —the Most High brings down the arrogant and exalts the humble.

(4×) To humble, bring low, or put down (Aramaic verb in Daniel). Used of God humbling the proud (Dan 4:37), kings deposing others (Dan 5:19, 7:24), and the failure to humble one's heart before God (Dan 5:22). Central to Daniel's theology of divine sovereignty over human kingdoms: proud rulers who refuse to humble themselves are forcibly humbled by God, while those who acknowledge their dependence find mercy. The verb emphasizes reversal of status and authority. HUMILITY AND LOWERING

en: have-humbled, he-will-humble, humbling | es: derribará, humillaba, humillar | fr: abaisser | de: [השפלת], [יהשפל], [להשפלה] Dan 4:37; Dan 5:19; Dan 5:22; Dan 7:24

שְׁפַל H8215 Conj-w / Adj-msc (1×)

low (of station); describing humble social rank or status

This Aramaic adjective means low or humble in social station, appearing in Daniel 4:17 in Nebuchadnezzar's dream interpretation. The text describes God's sovereignty: He 'removes kings and sets up kings' and 'sets over it the lowliest of people.' The word emphasizes not physical shortness but social humility—God elevates those of no account to demonstrate that He alone controls kingdoms. This becomes immediately relevant as proud Nebuchadnezzar himself is brought low and then restored to show that the Most High rules.

(1×) Describes lowly social status in Daniel 4:17 (English 4:14). The construct form שפל (shephal) means 'low of' or 'lowly of,' appearing in the phrase 'the lowliest of people.' English renders 'and-lowly-of,' Spanish 'y-al-más-bajo-de' (and to the lowest of), French 'et-bas' (and low), German retains the bracketed Aramaic. The sentence declares that the Most High 'sets over it the lowliest of people'—over the kingdom, He places those of humble origin. This theological statement about divine sovereignty directly foreshadows Nebuchadnezzar's own humiliation and restoration, demonstrating that social elevation and demotion alike come from God's hand, not human strength or merit. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-lowly-of | es: y-al-más-bajo-de | fr: et-bas | de: [ושפל] Dan 4:17

שַׁפָּל H8216 Prep-b (2×)

Low estate, lowly condition, state of humiliation or low social status

This noun describes a condition of lowliness, whether social, economic, or circumstantial. Psalm 136:23 celebrates God who 'remembered us in our low estate,' recalling Israel's oppression in Egypt or exile. Ecclesiastes 10:6 contrasts folly set 'in high places' while the rich sit 'in a low place,' depicting social inversion. The term emphasizes degraded circumstances or humble status rather than moral lowliness. It stands in direct opposition to 'heights' or 'high places' in both contexts.

(2×) A state of being brought low, whether through oppression, poverty, or circumstances beyond one's control. The Psalm usage recalls national humiliation, while Ecclesiastes addresses social status. Spanish uses 'humillación' (humiliation) and 'lo bajo' (the low place), capturing both the emotional and positional dimensions. The categorization under Authority/Rule > Status reflects the term's connection to social hierarchy and power dynamics, though it can also denote general adversity. HUMILITY AND LOWERING

en: in-lowliness, who-in-our-lowliness | es: Que-en-nuestra-humillación, en-lo-bajo | fr: abaissement, בשפל | de: [בשפל], der-in-unser-lowliness Ps 136:23; Eccl 10:6

שָׁפָל H8217 Adj-ms (19×)

Low in position (physically); low in status or esteem (socially); humble or lowly in spirit (morally positive).

The adjective shaphal traces a semantic arc from the ground to the soul. At its most concrete, it describes things that are physically low — a vine spreading close to the earth (Ezek 17:6), a skin lesion recessed below the surrounding skin (Lev 13:20-26), or the sound of grinding growing faint (Eccl 12:4). From there it rises into social description: a kingdom kept deliberately 'low' so it cannot rebel (Ezek 17:14; 29:14-15), a king humiliated 'in his own eyes' (2 Sam 6:22). But its theological climax comes in Isaiah 57:15, where God declares he dwells 'with the lowly and contrite of spirit' — shaphal transformed from physical depression into spiritual virtue. Spanish humilde, French humble, and German demuetig all shift registers in this final sense, marking the transition from spatial lowness to spiritual humility that makes shaphal one of the Bible's most instructive adjectives.

1. physically low in position (7×) Physically low in position — describing something spatially close to the ground, recessed below a surrounding surface, or diminished in height. Seven occurrences include the levitical skin-disease diagnosis where a lesion appears 'lower than the skin' (Lev 13:20, 21, 26; 14:37), the low-growing vine of Ezekiel 17:6, and the fading sound of grinding in old age (Eccl 12:4). Spanish bajo and French bas use basic spatial vocabulary here. The medical precision of the Leviticus usage — repeatedly checking whether the affliction is 'deeper than the skin' — shows shaphal functioning as a clinical-spatial term. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-low, low, low-of | es: baja-de, bajo, cuando-baje | fr: bas, dans-בשפל, et-bas | de: [בשפל], [שפל], [שפלת] Lev 13:20; Lev 13:21; Lev 13:26; Lev 14:37; Eccl 12:4

2. low in status or esteem (6×) Low in social status, rank, or esteem — describing a person, kingdom, or entity that is base, brought low, or kept in a subordinate position. Six occurrences include Ezekiel's prophecy that Egypt shall be 'the lowliest of kingdoms' (Ezek 29:14-15), the kingdom kept 'low' to prevent rebellion (Ezek 17:14), Ezekiel's reversal oracle where the low is exalted and the high brought low (Ezek 21:26), David declaring he will be even more 'lowly in his own eyes' (2 Sam 6:22), and the contemptible priests of Malachi 2:9. Spanish bajo/humilde and French humble/bas mark social degradation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-lowly, lowly, the-low | es: Al-bajo, bajo, humilde | fr: et-humble, humble, lowly | de: [והשפלה], [ושפלים], [שפלה] 2Sam 6:22; Ezek 17:14; Ezek 21:26; Ezek 29:14; Ezek 29:15

3. humble in spirit (6×) Humble, meek, or lowly in spirit — a positive moral and spiritual quality describing one who does not exalt himself but walks in dependence on God. Six occurrences culminate in one of Scripture's most beloved declarations: 'I dwell in the high and holy place, and also with him who is of a contrite and lowly spirit' (Isa 57:15). Proverbs commends the shaphal ruach ('lowly of spirit') as better than dividing spoil with the proud (Prov 16:19), and Psalm 138:6 affirms that the LORD 'regards the lowly.' Spanish humilde de espiritu, French humble d'esprit, and Korean 겸손한 all deploy dedicated humility vocabulary, confirming the ethical-spiritual transformation of a spatial root. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-lowly-of-, and-the-lowly, but-lowly-of | es: a-los-humildes, humilde-de, los-humildes | fr: [ושפל], [שפלים], et-humble | de: [ושפל], [שפל], [שפלים] Job 5:11; Ps 138:6; Prov 16:19; Prov 29:23; Isa 57:15

שִׁפְלָה H8218 Conj-w (1×)

humiliation, being brought low; the state of abasement or reduction to lowly condition

This noun denotes humiliation or being brought low, appearing in Isaiah 32:19 in a prophecy about Jerusalem's future. The phrase 'in the lowliness' or 'when it comes down in humiliation' likely describes the city's abasement—possibly the forest (often symbolizing pride or power) being brought low. The noun captures the social and existential condition of being reduced, humbled, or laid low, whether through military defeat, divine judgment, or loss of status.

(1×) Denotes the state of humiliation or being brought low in Isaiah 32:19. The prepositional phrase ובשפלה (u-va-shphelah) means 'and in lowliness' or 'and in humiliation.' English renders 'and-in-lowliness,' Spanish 'y-en-lo-bajo' (and in the low place), French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew. The context is difficult—the verse says 'it will hail when the forest comes down, and the city will be utterly laid low.' The noun suggests abasement, possibly of the proud 'forest' (perhaps representing Assyria or Jerusalem's own pride) being brought to nothing. The humbling of the lofty is a recurring prophetic theme, with God bringing down all that exalts itself against Him. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-lowliness | es: y-en-lo-bajo | fr: [ובשפלה] | de: [ובשפלה] Isa 32:19

שְׁפֵלָה H8219 Conj-w (20×)

The Shephelah — the low-lying foothill region between the Judean highlands and the Mediterranean coastal plain.

A geographical term designating the Shephelah, the belt of rolling foothills stretching between the central Judean mountain ridge and the Philistine coastal plain. Nearly every occurrence carries the definite article, marking it as a well-known topographic zone rather than a generic description. Biblical writers consistently distinguish the Shephelah from the hill country (הָרָר), the Negev, and the Arabah, treating it as its own ecological and military zone — famous for its sycamore forests (1 Kgs 10:27) and contested border towns. English versions vary between transliterating 'Shephelah' and rendering 'lowland,' but the word denotes a specific region, not merely low elevation.

lowland / Shephelah region (20×) The Shephelah foothill region west of Judah's central ridge, consistently distinguished in geographic lists from the hill country, the Negev, and the Arabah (Deut 1:7; Josh 9:1; 10:40). Spanish renders 'llanura' or 'Sefela,' French 'bas-pays' or 'Shephelah,' confirming translators treat it as a proper geographic zone. The region was known for sycamore groves (1 Kgs 10:27) and served as a strategic buffer against coastal powers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-the-lowland, and-its-lowland, and-the-Shephelah | es: En-la-llanura, en-la-Sefela, en-la-Sefelá | fr: bas-pays, dans-le-Shephelah, dans-le-plaine | de: [בשפלה], [השפלה], [ובשפלה] Deut 1:7; Josh 9:1; Josh 10:40; Josh 11:2; Josh 11:16

שִׁפְלוּת H8220 Conj-w (1×)

idleness, negligence; slackness of hands that results in decay and collapse

This noun denotes idleness or slackness, specifically of the hands, appearing in Ecclesiastes 10:18. The verse warns that 'through slothfulness the roof sinks in, and through idleness of hands the house leaks.' The term captures not active destruction but passive neglect—the failure to maintain and repair that leads to gradual collapse. It stands parallel with 'slothfulness,' creating a picture of inaction that allows what was once sound to deteriorate.

(1×) Describes neglectful idleness of the hands in Ecclesiastes 10:18. The construct phrase שפלות ידים (shiphlut yadayim) means 'sinking/idleness of hands.' English renders 'and-through-idleness-of,' Spanish 'y-con-debilidad-de' (and with weakness of), French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew. The proverb pairs two terms: 'through slothfulness (עצלתים) the roof beam sinks, and through idleness of hands the house leaks.' The progression moves from laziness to its consequence—structural failure. The hands that should repair and maintain instead hang slack, allowing the inevitable processes of decay to proceed unchecked. This wisdom saying applies both to literal home maintenance and metaphorically to any responsibility requiring ongoing attention and effort. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-through-idleness-of | es: y-con-debilidad-de | fr: et-ובשפלות | de: [ובשפלות] Eccl 10:18

שִׁפְּם H8221 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)

Shepham, a location on Israel's eastern border with variant forms indicating direction

Shepham marks a point on the ideal eastern boundary of the Promised Land as described in Numbers 34. The boundary runs from Hazar-enan to Shepham (verse 10), then from Shepham it descends eastward to Riblah (verse 11). The two occurrences use different forms: the basic name and a directional form meaning 'toward Shepham.' The Septuagint's 'Sepphamar' suggests uncertainty about the precise location, which remains unidentified today.

(2×) A geographical location on the northeastern border of Canaan's tribal allotments. The two forms in consecutive verses trace the boundary line's progress, with directional markers showing the boundary's movement from this point. Spanish glosses distinguish 'a Sefán' (to Shepham) and 'desde Sefán' (from Shepham), as do English glosses with 'from' and 'ward' suffixes. The site's unknown location has frustrated attempts to reconstruct Israel's ideal boundaries precisely. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shepham-ward, from-Shepham | es: a-Sefán, desde-Sefán | fr: Shepham-ward, de-Shepham | de: Shepham-ward, von-Shepham Num 34:10; Num 34:11

שָׂפָם H8222 N-msc (5×)

moustache, upper lip; the facial hair above the mouth, often covered in mourning or shame

The Hebrew noun refers specifically to the moustache or upper lip area. In ancient Israelite culture, covering the moustache was a recognized sign of grief, shame, or ritual impurity — seen when lepers must cover it (Lev 13:45), when prophets predict shame so deep men will cover their lips (Mic 3:7), and in Ezekiel's instructions about mourning customs (Ezek 24:17, 22). Mephibosheth's failure to trim his moustache (2 Sam 19:24) signaled mourning for the king. The multilingual evidence converges: English and Spanish render 'mustache/bigote,' while French 'moustache' and the Syriac cognate confirm the specific anatomical referent.

(5×) The moustache or upper lip, the strip of facial hair between nose and mouth. All five occurrences denote this body part, but the cultural significance varies: trimming it signals the end of mourning (2 Sam 19:24), while covering it marks grief, prophetic shame (Mic 3:7), or ritual impurity (Lev 13:45). Cross-lingual glosses uniformly confirm the moustache referent — English 'mustache,' Spanish 'bigote,' French 'moustache.' LIPS BODY PART en: his-mustache, lip, lips | es: bigote, labio-superior, su-bigote | fr: moustache, son-mustache, upper-lip | de: [שׂפם], sein-mustache, upper-lip Lev 13:45; 2Sam 19:24; Ezek 24:17; Ezek 24:22; Mic 3:7

שָׁפָם H8223 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shapham; personal name of a Gadite listed in the tribal genealogies of 1 Chronicles Shapham is a personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 5:12 in the genealogy of the tribe of Gad. He is listed as second in rank after Joel in the Gadite leadership. The name appears only in this genealogical context, preserving the memory of a prominent family within Gad's trans-Jordanian territory. The etymology is uncertain, though the name may relate to 'barrenness' or possibly 'moustache,' though such etymological connections for proper names often remain speculative.

(1×) Personal name of a Gadite leader in 1 Chronicles 5:12. The form ושפם (we-Shapham) includes the conjunction 'and,' appearing in a genealogical list. Spanish translates 'y-Safam' (and Shapham), while French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew. The Septuagint shows variation (Σαβατ, Σαφαμ, Σαφαν). The text identifies him as 'Shapham the second' (after Joel) among the Gadite chiefs dwelling in Bashan. This ranking suggests a prominent leadership role within the tribe, though no further information about his activities or accomplishments is preserved. The name remains as a witness to the social structure and leadership succession within Gad's territorial holdings east of the Jordan. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Shapham | es: y-Safam | fr: [ושפם] | de: [ושפם] 1Chr 5:12

שִׁפְמוֹת H8224 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

Siphmoth; place name in the Negev where David sent spoils after defeating the Amalekites

Siphmoth is a town in the Negev region mentioned in 1 Samuel 30:28 among the places to which David sent portions of the Amalekite spoil. After defeating the raiders who had burned Ziklag, David distributed the plunder among various towns in Judah, strengthening relationships with communities that had supported him during his fugitive years. Siphmoth was apparently one of these friendly towns, though its exact location is unknown. The gesture demonstrated David's generosity and political acumen as he built support for his eventual kingship.

(1×) A town in southern Judah receiving spoil from David in 1 Samuel 30:28. The prepositional form בשפמות (be-Shiphmoth) means 'in Siphmoth.' English renders 'in-Siphmoth,' Spanish 'en-Sifmot,' French 'dans-Siphmoth,' German 'in-Siphmoth.' The Septuagint gives Σαφει, Σαφαμως, or Σεφειμωθ, showing textual variation. David sent portions of recovered spoil 'to those in Siphmoth' along with other Judean towns. This distribution served both as thanksgiving to communities that had helped him and as political strategy, building goodwill among Judean leaders before he was anointed king. Siphmoth's inclusion indicates it was a place where David had received support during his years fleeing from Saul. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-Siphmoth | es: en-Sifmot | fr: dans-Siphmoth | de: in-Siphmoth 1Sam 30:28

שִׁפְמִי H8225 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Shiphmite; gentillic designation identifying someone as from Siphmoth or connected to that clan

This gentillic adjective identifies someone as a Shiphmite, presumably from the town or family of Siphmoth. It appears in 1 Chronicles 27:27, where Zabdi the Shiphmite is named as the officer in charge of David's wine cellars. The designation connects him either to the place Siphmoth (mentioned in 1 Samuel 30:28) or to a clan bearing that name. Such gentillic identifiers were crucial for establishing identity, inheritance rights, and administrative organization in ancient Israel.

(1×) A gentillic identifier for someone from Siphmoth or of that clan, appearing in 1 Chronicles 27:27. The form הַשִּׁפְמִי (ha-Shiphmmi) with the definite article functions as an attributive adjective, 'the Shiphmite,' describing Zabdi who oversaw David's wine cellars. English translates 'the-Shiphmite,' Spanish 'el-sifmita' (the Siphmite), French and German retain the bracketed Hebrew. This designation connects Zabdi either to the town Siphmoth in Judah or to a family clan bearing that name. As overseer of the royal vineyards' produce, Zabdi held a significant administrative post in David's government, and his gentillic identifies his origins and perhaps explains his expertise or loyalty network. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shiphmite | es: el-sifmita | fr: [הַשִּׁפְמִי] | de: [הַשִּׁפְמִי] 1Chr 27:27

סָפַן H8226 Conj-w / V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mpc (1×)

cover, overlay, panel with boards or planks (especially in construction)

This rare Hebrew root appears in the context of Solomon's temple construction, describing the covering or paneling of the building's interior structure. The single biblical occurrence speaks of covering the house with beams, suggesting a process of adding an upper layer or ceiling. The cognate evidence from Phoenician (roof), Aramaic (be covered/overlaid), and Akkadian (cover, overwhelm) confirms the semantic range of concealment or overlaying with protective or decorative materials.

(1×) The multilingual evidence shows some uncertainty in how to render this technical architectural term, with translations ranging from 'hidden treasures' (likely a misunderstanding of the context) to more general covering concepts. The placement in Deuteronomy 33:19 suggests the translators struggled with a rare word, though the temple-construction context in 1 Kings 6:9 more clearly supports the sense of paneling or beaming a structure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-hidden-treasures-of | es: y-los-tesoros | fr: et-caché-treasures-de | de: und-verborgen-treasures-von Deut 33:19

שָׁפָן H8227a N-mp (4×)

rock badger, hyrax; small mammal (hyrax syriacus) living in rocky areas, classified as unclean in Levitical law

This noun refers to the rock badger or hyrax, a small furry mammal that lives in rocky terrain. Leviticus 11:5 and Deuteronomy 14:7 classify it as unclean because it chews the cud but doesn't have split hooves (though actually hyraxes don't truly ruminate—the classification uses observable behavior). Psalm 104:18 poetically celebrates that 'the high mountains are for the wild goats; the rocks are a refuge for the rock badgers.' Proverbs 30:26 commends the rock badgers as 'a people not mighty, yet they make their homes in the rocks.' The multilingual glosses show some variation (Spanish conejo 'rabbit', French/German rock-badger/hyrax). These creatures exemplify wisdom through habitat choice—weak but protected by dwelling in inaccessible rock crevices.

(4×) The rock badger or hyrax (hyrax syriacus), a small mammal dwelling in rocky areas. Classified as unclean in dietary law (Lev 11:5, Deut 14:7) for appearing to chew cud without having split hooves. Celebrated in wisdom literature as weak creatures that wisely make homes in rock crevices (Prov 30:26), with Psalm 104:18 noting rocks as their refuge. The hyrax exemplifies survival through smart habitat choice rather than strength—a wisdom theme resonant in Proverbs. LIVING CREATURES

en: for-the-rock-badgers, rock-badgers, the-hyrax | es: Conejos, el-conejo, el-damán | fr: le-hyrax, le-rocher-badger, à-Shafân | de: [שְׁפָנִים], der-Fels-badger, der-hyrax Lev 11:5; Deut 14:7; Ps 104:18; Prov 30:26

שָׁפָן H8227b N-proper-ms (30×)

Shaphan — royal scribe under Josiah who read the discovered Book of the Law; patriarch of a prominent family

Shaphan is a proper masculine name appearing 30 times, nearly all in connection with King Josiah's religious reform and its aftermath. As 'the scribe' (hassofer), Shaphan is dispatched to the temple treasurer, receives the newly discovered Book of the Law from the priest Hilkiah, and reads it aloud before the king — the catalyst for the most sweeping reform in Judah's history (2 Kgs 22:3-14; 2 Chr 34:8-20). His legacy extends through his sons, who form a remarkable dynasty of righteous officials: Ahikam shelters Jeremiah from execution (Jer 26:24), Elasah carries Jeremiah's letter to the Babylonian exiles (Jer 29:3), and Gedaliah son of Ahikam becomes governor after Jerusalem's fall (Jer 40:5-9). Ezekiel 8:11 mentions a Jaazaniah son of Shaphan in a more troubling context — burning incense to idols. The Septuagint renders the name as Saphan or Sapphan.

Shaphan (personal name) (30×) The personal name of a royal scribe-secretary in Josiah's court who catalyzed Judah's reform by reading the discovered Torah scroll before the king (2 Kgs 22:3-14; 2 Chr 34:8-20). Also designates the patriarch of a family whose sons played key roles in Jeremiah's era: Ahikam protected the prophet (Jer 26:24), Gedaliah served as governor after the fall (2 Kgs 25:22; Jer 39:14; 40:5-11), and Elasah carried Jeremiah's letter to Babylon (Jer 29:3). Ezekiel 8:11 records a Jaazaniah son of Shaphan in an idolatrous scene. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shaphan | es: Safán, Shafan, Shafán | fr: Schaphan | de: Schafan, Shaphan, [שכן] 2Kgs 22:3; 2Kgs 22:8; 2Kgs 22:9; 2Kgs 22:10

שֹׁפַע H8228 N-msc (1×)

abundance, fullness, plenty (especially of natural resources)

This noun denotes material abundance or plenty, appearing in Moses' blessing upon the tribes in Deuteronomy 33:19. In context, it refers to the abundant resources—treasures hidden in the sand—that Zebulun and Issachar would enjoy. The word captures the idea of overflowing provision, whether from the sea's riches or the land's productivity. It conveys the sense of more than enough, a superabundance that goes beyond mere sufficiency.

(1×) The consistent cross-linguistic rendering as 'abundance' or 'fullness' (Spanish abundancia, French abundance, German Fülle) confirms this is a straightforward term for plenty or bounty. The context in Deuteronomy 33:19 links this abundance specifically to the 'hidden treasures of the sand,' suggesting maritime wealth or mineral resources available to these coastal and inland tribes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: abundance-of | es: la-abundancia-de | fr: abundance-de | de: Fuelle-von Deut 33:19

שִׁפְעָה H8229 Prep-m / N-fsc (6×)

Abundance, flood, multitude; a company or troop of people

The noun שִׁפְעָה denotes a great quantity or mass, whether of things or persons. When applied to natural forces, it means a flood or overwhelming abundance — Job's 'flood of waters' (22:11, 38:34), the 'abundance of camels' covering Midian (Isa 60:6), and the 'multitude of horses' shaking Tyre's walls (Ezek 26:10). But in 2 Kings 9:17, when the watchman spots Jehu's approaching force, the word shifts to mean a company or troop of men — a military band rather than an undifferentiated mass. Spanish neatly distinguishes 'multitud de' (multitude of things) from 'tropa' (troop of soldiers), confirming the two senses.

1. abundance, flood, multitude (4×) A large quantity or overflowing abundance of something, used for both literal flooding and figurative profusion of animals or natural forces. Job asks whether

'a flood of waters' covers him (22:11), and God challenges him about commanding 'an abundance of waters' (38:34). Isaiah 60:6 envisions 'an abundance of camels' filling the land in messianic restoration, while Ezekiel 26:10 describes the 'multitude of horses' in Nebuchadnezzar's army shaking Tyre's walls. Spanish 'multitud de' and English 'flood of/abundance of' consistently encode uncountable profusion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-an-abundance-of-, and-flood-of, from-abundance-of- | es: De-la-multitud-de, Multitud-de, y-abundancia-de- | fr: Schiphea, [שִׁפְעָה], et-שִׁפְעָה | de: [וּשִׁפְעַת], [מִשִּׁפְעַת], [שִׁפְעַת] Job 22:11; Job 38:34; Isa 60:6; Ezek 26:10

2. company, troop, band (2×) A company, troop, or band of people, particularly in a military or organized context. Both occurrences appear in 2 Kings 9:17, where the watchman on Jezreel's tower spots 'a company' approaching and then identifies it as 'the company of Jehu.' Spanish 'tropa' (troop) and English 'company' mark a clear shift from the liquid/animal abundance of sense 1 to a countable, organized group of persons — soldiers riding toward the city in formation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-company, company-of | es: Tropa, tropa-de | fr: company-de, un-company | de: company-von, ein-company 2Kgs 9:17

שִׁפְעִי H8230 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shiphi (personal name of a Simeonite clan leader)

Shiphi appears as a personal name in the genealogical records of the tribe of Simeon in 1 Chronicles 4:37. The name belongs to one of the ancestral heads whose descendants grew numerous during the reign of Hezekiah. Like many biblical names, it likely carries theological or descriptive significance, though its precise etymology is uncertain. The Greek transliterations (Sepei, Sophei) show slight variation in vocalization.

(1×) Most modern translations simply transliterate the Hebrew name as 'Shiphi' or 'Siphi,' while some French and German versions leave it untranslated in Hebrew characters. The name occurs in a genealogical context listing the leaders of Simeonite clans who experienced population growth and territorial expansion in the days of Hezekiah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shiph'i | es: Sifi | fr: [שִׁפְעִי] | de: [שִׁפְעִי] 1Chr 4:37

שָׁפַר H8231 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (1×)

be beautiful, fair, pleasing, or comely

This Hebrew verb expresses aesthetic and emotional satisfaction, describing something that is visually beautiful or personally pleasing. The single occurrence in Psalm 16:6 uses an Aramaism to describe the psalmist's inheritance as 'beautiful' or 'pleasing' to him. The root connects to the broader Semitic family where similar forms convey brightness, beauty, or the removal of a veil to reveal attractiveness. It captures both objective beauty and subjective pleasure in what one possesses or experiences.

(1×) The multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'beautiful,' 'fair,' or 'pleasing' (Spanish hermosa, French beau, German schön), confirming the aesthetic-evaluative sense. In Psalm 16:6, the psalmist declares that his 'heritage is beautiful to me,' expressing deep satisfaction with God's apportionment of his life—a fitting conclusion to the declaration that 'the lines have fallen for me in pleasant places.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: is-beautiful | es: es-hermosa | fr: être-beau | de: ist-schön Ps 16:6

שְׁפַר H8232 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (3×)

be pleasing, seem good, be acceptable (Aramaic)

This Aramaic verb means to be fair, pleasing, or acceptable to someone. It appears in Persian-period texts describing royal approval or advice being well-received. Daniel 4:2 and 6:1 use the perfect form with the preposition 'before' (qodam): 'it seemed good before' the king to do something—the king was pleased to take a certain action. Daniel 4:27 shifts to the imperfect: 'let my counsel be acceptable to you'—may the king find Daniel's advice pleasing. The verb functions in courtly contexts of royal decision-making and counsel, indicating subjective approval or favorable reception.

(3×) Be pleasing or acceptable in royal contexts. Daniel 4:2 and 6:1 report that 'it seemed good' to King Darius or Nebuchadnezzar to appoint officials or make proclamations—the idea pleased the king. Daniel 4:27 expresses Daniel's hope that his counsel 'be acceptable' to Nebuchadnezzar regarding breaking off sins by righteousness. The multilingual glosses ('pareció bien,' 'seemed good,' 'te sea agradable') confirm this involves subjective approval—something striking the recipient as fitting, proper, or pleasing, especially in administrative or advisory settings. MORAL GOODNESS

en: it-seemed-good, let-be-acceptable | es: me-pareció-bien, pareció-bien, te-sea-agradable | fr: [יִשְׁפַּר], [שְׁפַר] | de: [יִשְׁפַּר], [שְׁפַר] Dan 4:2; Dan 4:27; Dan 6:1

שֹׁפֶר H8233 N-ms (1×)

beauty, goodliness, attractiveness

This noun denotes beauty or attractive appearance, occurring in Jacob's blessing upon Naphtali in Genesis 49:21. The phrase 'words of beauty' (or 'beautiful words') is part of the poetic imagery describing Naphtali as a doe let loose who gives beautiful offspring. The term captures aesthetic excellence and pleasing form, whether in speech, appearance, or offspring. The brevity of usage makes precise definition challenging, but the semantic field clearly centers on visual or auditory beauty.

(1×) Translations uniformly render this as 'beauty,' 'goodliness,' or 'attractiveness' (Spanish hermosura, French beauté, German Schönheit). The context in Genesis 49:21 links this beauty to Naphtali's 'words' or offspring, though textual ambiguities make the exact referent debated. The consistent cross-linguistic agreement confirms the core aesthetic sense of this rare noun. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: beauty | es: hermosura | fr: beauté | de: Schönheit Gen 49:21

שֹׁפֶר H8234 N-proper-fs (2×)

Mount Shepher, a wilderness encampment during Israel's journey from Egypt to Canaan

Mount Shepher appears in the wilderness itinerary of Numbers 33 as one of the stopping places during Israel's forty-year journey. The Israelites departed from Haradah and camped at Mount Shepher (verse 23), then departed from Mount Shepher and camped at Haradah (verse 24). The name means 'beautiful' or 'pleasant,' possibly describing the mountain's appearance. The Septuagint's 'Saphar' represents a straightforward transliteration. Like many wilderness stations, its precise location cannot be identified today.

(2×) A mountain station in the Sinai wilderness journey documented in the Priestly itinerary. Both occurrences in Numbers 33:23-24 follow the standard formulaic pattern of departure and arrival that structures this chapter. The consistent transliterations across Spanish (Sefer), French (Shepher), and German (Shepher) reflect its status as an unidentified geographical name. The mountain designation distinguishes it from other similarly-named places. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Shepher | es: Sefer | fr: Shepher | de: Shepher Num 33:23; Num 33:24

שִׁפְרָה H8235 N-fs (1×)

fairness, clearness, brightness (especially of the sky)

This feminine noun describes the fair or clear state of the sky, appearing in Job 26:13 in a description of God's creative power. The verse speaks of how God's breath (or spirit) makes the sky fair—clearing away clouds or storm to reveal brightness. The term captures the visual quality of a cloudless, bright sky after disturbance. Most modern scholars accept this reading, though the Greek tradition suggests an alternative text. The word evokes the aesthetic transformation from darkness or storm to serene clarity.

(1×) The English and Spanish translations ('became fair,' 'are beautiful') support the aesthetic sense of sky-clarity or brightness. French and German versions leave the word untranslated in Hebrew, perhaps indicating textual uncertainty. Job 26:13 uses this term to describe God's power to clear the heavens by his breath, making visible the beauty of the sky—part of a larger catalogue of divine creative acts. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: became-fair | es: son-hermosos | fr: שפרה | de: [שפרה] Job 26:13

שִׁפְרָה H8236 N-proper-fs (1×)

Shiphrah (personal name of a Hebrew midwife in Egypt)

Shiphrah was one of two Hebrew midwives named in Exodus 1:15 who defied Pharaoh's command to kill male Hebrew infants. Along with Puah, she courageously preserved life despite royal decree, fearing God more than the king. Her name may derive from the root meaning 'beauty' or 'brightness,' suggesting either physical attractiveness or the beauty of her character. The Greek Septuagint renders her name as Sepphora (though this differs from Zipporah, Moses' wife). These midwives' civil disobedience represents one of the Bible's earliest examples of righteous resistance to unjust authority.

(1×) All major translations simply transliterate the name as 'Shiphrah' or slight variants (Spanish Shifrah). The name occurs in the narrative context of Pharaoh's genocidal policy and the midwives' God-fearing refusal to comply, resulting in divine blessing upon their households. Shiphrah and Puah stand as heroes of the faith who risked their lives to preserve Israel's future generation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shiphrah | es: Shifrah | fr: Shiphrah | de: Shiphrah Exod 1:15

שִׁפְרוּר H8237 N-msc / 3ms (2×)

Royal canopy, ornamental pavilion (precise meaning disputed between Ketiv and Qere readings)

This rare architectural term appears only in Jeremiah 43:10, where God declares that Nebuchadnezzar will set up his royal canopy over the stones at Tahpanhes. The Hebrew text shows a Ketiv/Qere variant: the written text has one form while the marginal reading suggests 'his royal canopy.' Both occurrences in the verse count represent this single phrase with its textual variants. The term likely denotes some kind of royal pavilion or ornamental structure symbolizing Babylonian sovereignty over Egypt.

(2×) An architectural element associated with royal presence and authority, specifically Nebuchadnezzar's throne or ceremonial structure. The textual variants (ketiv vs qere) both point to a royal accoutrement, with glosses variously rendering it as 'canopy,' 'tapiz' (tapestry/carpet), or preserving the Hebrew in brackets to acknowledge uncertainty. The symbolic act of spreading this royal marker over conquered territory demonstrates Babylon's dominion. The domain assignment to Features of Objects captures its material nature. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: (his-royal-canopy), [ketiv:his-canopy] | es: (su-tapiz), [su-tapiz] | fr: [(שפרירו)], [[שפרורן]] | de: [(שפרירו)], [[שפרורן]] Jer 43:10

שִׁפְרְפָר H8238 Prep-b / N-msd (1×)

dawn, early morning, daybreak

This Aramaic noun appears in the book of Daniel, describing the time of dawn when King Darius rushed to the lions' den to check on Daniel. The word captures the first light of morning, that transitional moment when darkness yields to day. The reduplication in the Hebrew form suggests intensity or vividness—the brightness of breaking dawn. It evokes urgency and hope: Darius could not wait for full daylight but went 'at dawn' to see if Daniel's God had delivered him. The moment of dawn carries dramatic weight in the narrative.

(1×) Most translations render this clearly as 'at dawn' or 'at daybreak' (Spanish al amanecer, French/German uncertain). The context in Daniel 6:19 emphasizes the king's anxious haste—he rose 'at first light' and hurried to the den. The dawn setting heightens the suspense and underscores Darius's sleepless concern for Daniel's fate. DAWN AND TWILIGHT

en: at-dawn | es: al-amanecer | fr: gloire | de: [בשפרפרא] Dan 6:19

שְׁפַת H8239 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (5×)

to set (a pot on fire), place, lay down; by extension, to ordain or establish

A denominative verb meaning to set something in place, especially a cooking pot over a fire. Elisha commands 'set on the pot' (2 Kgs 4:38), and Ezekiel uses the same image symbolically (Ezek 24:3). The semantic range stretches from this concrete domestic act to God placing someone in the dust of death (Ps 22:15) and ordaining peace (Isa 26:12). Spanish 'Pon' (set/place) and French 'mettre/plaça-sur' (put upon) confirm the core meaning of deliberate placement, while the theological uses reveal a God who sets both judgment and shalom.

(5×) To set a pot on the fire, to place a vessel for cooking. The literal, domestic usage appears in Elisha's instruction to his servant (2 Kgs 4:38) and Ezekiel's allegory of the cooking pot (Ezek 24:3). Spanish 'Pon' and French 'mettre' both capture the concrete act of placing something in position. This is the root meaning from which metaphorical extensions develop. PLACING AND LAYING

en: You-ordain, set-on, you-lay-me | es: Pon, me-pones, ordenarás | fr: [תשפת], mettre, plaça-sur | de: [שפת], [תשפת], du-lay-mich 2Kgs 4:38; Ps 22:15; Isa 26:12; Ezek 24:3

שִׁפְתַיִם H8240a N-md (1×)

sheepfolds, sheep enclosures (dual form suggesting paired structures)

This dual-form noun refers to sheepfolds or livestock enclosures, structures where shepherds penned their flocks for safety and rest. The word appears in Psalm 68:13 in a rhetorical question challenging those who stayed 'among the sheepfolds' rather than joining Israel's military campaigns. The term likely denotes the paired walls or double enclosures typical of ancient sheep pens. It may be related to mishpetayim, another term for similar structures. The sheepfolds represent safety and domesticity but also, in this context, cowardice—the comfortable place where some chose to remain rather than risk battle.

(1×) English and Spanish consistently translate this as 'sheepfolds' or 'pens' (apriscos), while French offers 'watering trough' and German follows the English. The Psalm 68:13 context contrasts those who stayed comfortably 'among the sheepfolds' with warriors who engaged in battle, possibly echoing Deborah's rebuke in Judges 5:16 of those who remained 'among the sheep pens' hearing the whistling for the flocks. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: the-sheepfolds | es: apriscos | fr: abreuvoir | de: der-sheepfolds Ps 68:13

שִׁפְתַיִם H8240b Conj-w (1×)

hooks, pegs, or ledges (architectural feature in Ezekiel's temple)

This dual-form noun describes an architectural feature in Ezekiel's visionary temple, most commonly understood as hooks or pegs attached to the walls. Ancient versions suggest these were hook-shaped projections, possibly for hanging sacrificial animals during butchering. Alternative interpretations read the word as 'ledges' or 'edges,' referring to horizontal features along the walls. The term's rarity and technical nature have led to ongoing debate about its precise meaning. Whether hooks for meat or architectural ledges, the word describes structural details of the temple's sacrificial preparation areas.

(1×) English and Spanish render this as 'hooks' (ganchos), following the Targum interpretation, while French again offers 'watering trough' and German leaves it untranslated. Ezekiel 40:43 describes these features as installed in the temple's interior, measuring a handbreadth and fastened all around, consistent with hooks for hanging sacrificial portions during priestly work. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: and-the-hooks | es: Y-los-ganchos | fr: et-abreuvoir | de: [והשפתים] Ezek 40:43

שֶׁטֶף H8241 Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

flood, deluge, overwhelming flow (literal or figurative)

This noun describes a powerful flood or overwhelming surge of water, used both literally for natural floods and metaphorically for divine judgment or human calamity. The word appears in contexts of God's judgment sweeping away the wicked like a flood, or in Job describing the channels for the rain-flood. Isaiah uses the intensive form 'flood of wrath' to describe a temporary but fierce outpouring of divine anger. The term conveys unstoppable force, the kind of water that breaks through barriers and overwhelms everything in its path. Whether describing Noah's flood, invading armies, or emotional torrents, the image is one of inundating power.

(1×) The phrase 'in a flood of wrath' (Isaiah 54:8) uses this term metaphorically for God's temporary anger that overwhelmed Israel in exile. While most translations render it as 'flood' or 'overflowing,' the French and German versions show some uncertainty with the text. The metaphor draws on the fearsome power of flash floods in the ancient Near East, where sudden storms could send walls of water through wadis, sweeping away everything. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-flood-of | es: En-inundación-de | fr: [בשצף] | de: [בשצף] Isa 54:8

שַׂק H8242 N-mp (48×)

Sackcloth worn in mourning or penitence; also a coarse bag or sack for carrying grain

A coarse, dark fabric — typically woven from goat hair — that served two distinct purposes in the ancient world. Most often it appears as the garment of grief and repentance: Jacob tears his clothes and puts on saq when he believes Joseph is dead (Gen 37:34), kings gird it around their loins in national crisis (1 Kgs 20:31-32), and the prophets call Israel to 'put on sackcloth and roll in ashes' (Jer 48:37). Less frequently, the same word names the utilitarian grain bag, as in the Joseph narrative where the brothers' silver is hidden in their saqqim (Gen 42:25-35). The Spanish 'cilicio' and French 'sac' preserve both the penitential and material dimensions of this ancient textile.

1. sackcloth for mourning (42×) Coarse woven cloth (usually of goat hair) worn against the skin as a sign of mourning, lamentation, or penitence before God. Dominating with 42 of 48 occurrences, this sense pervades prophetic and narrative literature. Jacob dons sackcloth for Joseph (Gen 37:34), David commands it after Abner's death (2 Sam 3:31), and Rizpah spreads it on the rock during her vigil (2 Sam 21:10). The psalmist celebrates when God turns 'my sackcloth into dancing' (Ps 30:11). The multilingual evidence — 'cilicio' (spa), 'sac' (fra), 'Sacktuch' (deu) — consistently points to a penitential garment rather than a container. SACKCLOTH MOURNING

en: sackcloth, the-sackcloth, was-sackcloth | es: Saco, cilicio, de-cilicio | fr: sac, שׂק | de: Krieg-sackcloth, Sacktuch, sackcloth Gen 37:34; 2Sam 3:31; 2Sam 21:10; 1Kgs 20:31; 1Kgs 20:32

2. sack or bag (6×) A bag or sack made of coarse material, used for transporting grain or goods. This concrete, utilitarian sense appears six times, concentrated in the Joseph cycle where the brothers' grain sacks become instruments of dramatic irony: silver concealed in their saqqim (Gen 42:25,27,35). Possibly also in Lev 11:32, where a saq is listed among vessels that become unclean. The translation shift is telling: where mourning contexts yield 'sackcloth/cilicio,' these passages produce 'sack/saco/Säcke' — a plain container word. SACK GRAIN BAG

en: his-sack, in-his-sack, sack | es: en-saco-suyo, saco, saco-suyo | fr: dans-son-sack, leur-sacks, sack | de: ihre-Säcke, in-seinem-Sack, sack Gen 42:25; Gen 42:27; Gen 42:35; Lev 11:32

שַׂק H8243 N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

legs, lower legs (anatomical term)

This Aramaic noun refers to the lower legs or shins, appearing in Daniel's vision of the great statue in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The image's legs of iron represent a fourth kingdom, strong as iron but ultimately fragile when mixed with clay in the feet. The term specifically denotes the leg from knee to ankle, the weight-bearing portion that supports the entire structure. In the symbolic vision, these legs of iron convey both strength and the eventual fragility of human empire, standing strong but destined to fall when struck by God's kingdom-stone.

(1×) The straightforward anatomical term is rendered as 'legs' across translations (Spanish piernas, French jambe). Daniel 2:33 describes the statue's legs of iron as part of the prophetic symbolism, representing a powerful kingdom that would crush and break all others —traditionally identified with Rome in Christian interpretation, or with the succession of empires in Jewish interpretation. FEET AND LEGS

en: its-legs | es: Sus-piernas | fr: jambe | de: [שקוהי] Dan 2:33

שָׂקַד H8244 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (1×)

be bound, tied on, fastened (possibly in error for 'be watched')

This rare and disputed verb appears in Lamentations 1:14 describing Jerusalem's sins as bound together like a yoke upon her neck. The exact reading and root are uncertain; many scholars suggest emending to 'watch' based on the ancient versions, which would yield 'watch is kept upon my transgressions.' The Masoretic Text as it stands suggests binding or yoking together, presenting sin as cords woven into a yoke that burdens the neck. Either reading conveys the weight and constraint of accumulated sin—whether bound together as a heavy load or vigilantly observed by divine justice.

(1×) English renders this as 'bound' while Spanish translates 'has been tied,' following the Masoretic Text's suggestion of binding or yoking. French and German leave it untranslated, reflecting scholarly uncertainty. The image in Lamentations 1:14 powerfully conveys sin's burden: transgressions intertwined by God's hand and placed as a yoke on Jerusalem's neck, making her strength fail under the weight. BINDING AND TYING

en: Bound | es: Ha-sido-atado | fr: [נשקד] | de: [נשקד] Lam 1:14

שָׁקַד H8245 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (12×)

To watch, keep vigil, be wakeful; of God watching over his word or his people; also to watch with hostile intent

A verb of intense, purposeful wakefulness that spans the spectrum from divine faithfulness to predatory menace. Its most famous occurrence is Jeremiah 1:12, where God declares 'I am watching over my word to perform it' – a passage enriched by the wordplay with shaqed (almond tree), the 'watcher' that blooms first in spring. The same root describes sleepless vigil in Psalm 102:7, where the psalmist lies awake 'like a lonely bird on a rooftop.' Spanish 'velar/veló' (to keep vigil) captures the sustained attentiveness across all uses, while German 'wachen' (to watch/wake) preserves the root connection between watching and wakefulness. At its darkest, the word describes a leopard 'watching' against cities to seize prey (Jer 5:6).

1. watch over, keep vigil (8×) To keep watch, be vigilant, or guard attentively over something or someone. Often used of God's watchful oversight: Jeremiah 1:12 declares God 'watching over' his word to fulfill it, and Jeremiah 31:28 promises that as God watched to uproot, so he will watch to build. Proverbs 8:34 blesses the one who watches daily at Wisdom's gates. Spanish 'velar/velad' (keep vigil/keep watch!) and French 'veiller' (to watch) consistently render this purposeful, sustained attentiveness. Ezra 8:29 extends it to human guardianship of sacred vessels. REFUGE AND SHELTER

en: I-watched, I-will-watch, and-watched | es: Y-veló, para-velar, velad | fr: [שקדו], et-veiller, veiller | de: [וישקד], [וישקוד], [לשקד] Ezra 8:29; Job 21:32; Prov 8:34; Jer 1:12; Jer 31:28

2. be wakeful, lie awake (2×) To be wakeful, lie awake, remain sleepless – describing a state of wakefulness without necessarily implying purposeful vigilance. Psalm 102:7 paints a haunting picture: 'I lie awake; I am like a lonely bird on a housetop.' Psalm 127:1 warns that unless the LORD watches over the city, the watchman 'stays awake' in vain. German 'ich-lagern-aufwachen' (I lie awake) and Spanish 'velo' (I keep vigil) preserve the nocturnal, insomniac quality of this sense. REFUGE AND SHELTER

en: I-lie-awake, watches | es: Velo, vela | fr: veiller | de: ich-lagern-aufwachen, wacht Ps 102:7; Ps 127:1

3. watch for evil, lie in wait (2×) To watch with hostile intent, lurking or lying in wait to do harm. Isaiah 29:20 denounces 'those who watch for iniquity,' and Jeremiah 5:6 depicts a leopard 'watching against their cities' to seize anyone who ventures out. Spanish 'acecha' (stalks/lurks) and 'los que velan para' (those who watch for) capture the predatory, menacing quality that inverts the protective watching of sense 1. REFUGE AND SHELTER
en: those-watching-for, watching | es: acecha, los-que-velan-para | fr: veiller | de: wachen Isa 29:20; Jer 5:6

שָׁקֵד H8246 N-mp (6×)

Almond-shaped; Pual participle of shaqad used to describe cups fashioned like almond blossoms on the menorah.

This Pual participle derives from the root shaqad ('almond tree') and appears exclusively in the tabernacle construction texts of Exodus 25 and 37. It describes the decorative cups on the golden lampstand (menorah) that were shaped like almond blossoms. The almond tree held special significance in Israelite culture as the first tree to blossom in spring, symbolizing watchfulness – a wordplay the prophets exploit elsewhere (Jer 1:11-12). Spanish en-forma-de-almendra and French amande-façonné confirm the consistent botanical reference across all six occurrences.

(6×) Shaped like almond blossoms, a technical term for the decorative cups on the golden lampstand. All six occurrences appear in the Priestly tabernacle instructions (Exod 25:33-34; 37:19-20), describing goblets fashioned to resemble almond flowers. The denomination from shaqad (almond tree) ties this ornamental detail to a tree rich with symbolic overtones of watchfulness and early blooming. Every target language renders it as a compound describing almond-shaped form, confirming a single, consistent botanical-artisanal sense. FLOWERS AND BLOSSOMS
en: almond-shaped, shaped-like-almonds | es: en-forma-de-almendra | fr: amande-façonné, façonné-comme-amandes | de: almond-formte, formte-wie-almonds Exod 25:33; Exod 25:34; Exod 37:19

שָׁקֵד H8247 N-mp (4×)

almond (tree/nut); the almond tree valued for early blossoming, or its edible nuts, used literally and symbolically

This noun refers to both the almond nut and the almond tree. Genesis 43:11 lists almonds among choice products Jacob sends to Egypt. Numbers 17:23 (17:8 in English) describes Aaron's rod that budded and produced almonds overnight—a sign of divine selection. Ecclesiastes 12:5 uses the almond tree blossoming as part of an allegory of old age. Jeremiah 1:11 contains a wordplay: God shows Jeremiah an almond branch (shaqed) and says 'I am watching' (shoqed), exploiting the similar sounds. The multilingual consensus (Spanish almendro/almendras, French amandes, German Mandeln) confirms the nut/tree identification. The almond's early spring blossoming made it a symbol of watchfulness and new life—first to wake from winter's sleep, hence its name and Jeremiah's wordplay.

(4×) Almond tree or its nuts. The nuts appear as valuable trade goods (Gen 43:11) and as miraculous sign on Aaron's budded rod (Num 17:8). The tree features in old age allegory (Eccl 12:5) and in Jeremiah's vision with wordplay on 'watching' (Jer 1:11). Prized for early spring blossoming and edible nuts, the almond symbolizes watchfulness and awakening—it 'watches' for spring, being first to bloom, hence Jeremiah's pun linking shaqed (almond) with shoqed (watching). GREEN LUXURIANT TREES
en: almonds, and-almonds, of-almond | es: almendras, almendro, el-almendro | fr: [שקד], almonds, et-amandes | de: [השקד], almonds, und-Mandeln Gen 43:11; Num 17:8; Eccl 12:5; Jer 1:11

שָׁקָה H8248 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-2ms (62×)

To give drink, water, or irrigate; Hifil causative of drinking — providing water to people, animals, or land.

Shaqah in its Hifil form is the Bible's standard verb for giving someone or something a drink — a deceptively simple action that carries enormous narrative weight. Rebekah waters Abraham's servant's camels, triggering the patriarchal marriage narrative (Gen 24:14-46). Moses strikes the rock to 'give them drink' (Num 20:8). The multilingual evidence reveals a consistent split: when living beings are the object, languages use 'give drink' vocabulary (Spanish dar de beber, Arabic saqaa), but when land is the object, they shift to irrigation words (Spanish regar, Korean 적시다) — a genuine semantic boundary baked into the verb.

1. give drink to living beings (51×) Giving drink to living beings — persons or animals — the primary sense at 51 occurrences. Rebekah waters the camels (Gen 24:14-46), Lot's daughters give their father wine (Gen 19:32-35), Hagar gives Ishmael water (Gen 21:19), and the psalmist asks God to 'give them tears to drink' (Ps 80:5). Spanish dar de beber, Arabic saqaa, and Hindi pilaana all consistently select interpersonal drinking vocabulary. The Hifil causative force is crucial — the subject enables or compels the drinking of another, making this fundamentally a verb of provision and care (or, as with the bitter water ordeal of Num 5:24-27, a verb of coerced consumption). DRINKING AND WATERING
en: I-will-water, and-gave-drink, and-gave-him-drink | es: Y-dieron-a-beber, dame-de-beber, daré-de-beber | fr: Je—eau, [ישקני], donner-moi-boire | de: [ישקני], tränke-mich, tränke-mich- Gen 19:32; Gen 19:33; Gen 19:34; Gen 19:35; Gen 21:19

2. water or irrigate land (9×) Watering or irrigating land, gardens, or plants — 9 occurrences where the object is agricultural rather than animate. The river goes out of Eden 'to water the garden' (Gen 2:10), the mist rises 'to water the whole face of the ground' (Gen 2:6), and the land of Egypt requires manual irrigation unlike Canaan's rain-fed soil (Deut 11:10). Spanish regar, Korean 적시다, and Hindi siinchna all shift to irrigation-specific vocabulary, confirming a real lexicographic boundary. Psalm 104:13 and Ecclesiastes 2:6 extend this to God's cosmic and royal watering of the earth. DRINKING AND WATERING
en: and-I-will-drench, and-watered, and-will-water | es: El-que-riega, Y-regaré, la-regaré | fr: abreuver, de-abreuver, et-abreuver | de: [והשקה], [והשקיתי], [להשקות] Gen 2:6; Gen 2:10; Deut 11:10; Ps 104:13; Eccl 2:6

3. (1×) A problematic occurrence at Amos 8:8 where the text is likely corrupt or involves a different root. The Ketiv/Qere issue is visible in the multilingual confusion — Spanish renders y se hundira ('and it will sink'), English gives the bracketed marker [K], and German provides the raw Hebrew form. The context describes the land rising and sinking like the Nile, suggesting this may belong to a root meaning 'subside' or 'overflow' rather than 'give drink.' A textual-critical boundary case rather than a true sense of shaqah. DRINKING AND WATERING
en: [K] | es: [y-se-hundirá] | fr: et-abreuver | de: [[ונשקה]] Amos 8:8

4. (1×) A single occurrence at Job 21:24 where the verb appears to mean 'be moistened' or 'be well-watered,' describing the marrow or body of the wicked as being fully nourished. Spanish esta regado ('is watered') and English 'is moistened' both point to a stative or passive sense — the body is in a state of being saturated — rather than the active causative found elsewhere. This may represent a rare Qal passive or a denominative use, standing at the far periphery of the root's semantic range. DRINKING AND WATERING
en: is-moistened | es: está-regado. | fr: faire-boire | de: [ישקה] Job 21:24

שִׁקּוּי H8249 Conj-w / N-mpc / 1cs (1×)

drink, beverage (figurative refreshment)

This noun denotes drink or beverage, used both literally and figuratively in the Old Testament. In Proverbs, wisdom's instruction is described as 'drink to your bones'—refreshment and health for one's inner being. In the Psalms and Hosea, the term appears in contexts of mourning or deprivation, where tears become drink or where drink represents basic sustenance sought from false sources. The word captures the essential nature of liquid refreshment, but often with figurative overtones of spiritual or emotional satisfaction.

(1×) The psalmist's lament in Psalm 102:9 declares 'my drink I have mingled with tears,' using this term for literal beverage made bitter by weeping. The Spanish translation 'my drink' and German 'my drinking' capture the straightforward reference to what one drinks. The context of mourning and divine discipline makes the drink a vehicle for expressing profound sorrow—every beverage tainted by tears. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: and-my-drink | es: y-mi-bebida | fr: et-grappe | de: und-mein-trinken Ps 102:9

שִׁקּוּי H8250 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

Drink, refreshment, beverage (often figurative for spiritual or physical sustenance)

This noun denotes drink or beverage, frequently used metaphorically. In Proverbs 3:8, following God's instruction will be 'refreshment to your bones,' using drink imagery for health and vitality. Psalm 102:9 laments mingling tears with drink in affliction, while Hosea 2:5 lists 'my drink' among the necessities Israel mistakenly sought from false lovers rather than from God. The term emphasizes drink as essential sustenance, making it effective for figurative extensions.

(2×) Beverage as a basic necessity of life, used both literally and figuratively. The Proverbs usage is purely metaphorical (wisdom as bodily refreshment), while Hosea lists it among literal provisions, and the Psalm combines literal drink with metaphorical tears. Spanish distinguishes 'bebidas' (drinks) and 'refrigerio' (refreshment), capturing both concrete and figurative dimensions. The assignment to Physiological Processes reflects drink's connection to bodily needs, though its metaphorical uses extend beyond pure physiology. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: and-my-drink, and-refreshment | es: y-mis-bebidas, y-refrigerio | fr: et-boisson, et-ושקוי | de: [ושקוי], [ושקויי] Prov 3:8; Hos 2:5

שִׁקּוּץ H8251 N-ms (28×)

Detestable thing or abomination; an idol, idolatrous practice, or defiling filth loathsome before God

Shiqquts (from the root shaqats, 'to detest') is one of the Hebrew Bible's strongest terms of revulsion, deployed almost exclusively against idolatry. Prophets hurl it at the totality of Israel's idol-worship (Jer 4:1; Ezek 5:11; 7:20; 11:18), while the historical books name specific 'abominations' like Chemosh of Moab and Milcom of Ammon (1 Kgs 11:5, 7; 2 Kgs 23:13). Daniel's 'abomination of desolation' (Dan 11:31; 12:11) became a key apocalyptic phrase echoed by Jesus. Nahum extends the word beyond idolatry to raw filth cast upon Nineveh (Nah 3:6).

1. detestable things, idolatrous abominations (20×) Detestable things or idolatrous abominations collectively – the plural shiqqutsim denouncing the whole apparatus of a nation's idol worship. Ezekiel uses it repeatedly (5:11; 7:20; 11:18, 21; 20:7-8, 30; 37:23), as do Jeremiah (4:1; 7:30; 13:27; 16:18) and the Deuteronomistic historians (Deut 29:17; 2 Kgs 23:24). Spanish 'abominaciones' and German 'Abscheuliches' convey the visceral disgust. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: abominations, and-his-abominations, and-in-their-abominations | es: abominaciones, abominaciones-de, abominaciones-de-ti | fr: [השקוצים], abomination, et-abomination | de: Abscheuliches, Scheusal, [ושקציו] Deut 29:17; 2Kgs 23:24; 2Chr 15:8; Isa 66:3; Jer 4:1

2. detestable idol, abomination (7×) A specific detestable idol or deity singled out by name or epithet: 'Ashtoreth the shiqquts of the Sidonians,' 'Chemosh the shiqquts of Moab' (1 Kgs 11:5, 7; 2 Kgs 23:13). Daniel's 'shiqquts meshomem' – the abomination that causes desolation (Dan 11:31; 12:11) – became theologically pivotal, referenced by Jesus in Matthew 24:15. The construct form emphasizes a particular loathsome object rather than idolatry in general. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: abomination, abomination-of, the-abomination | es: abominación, abominación-de, la-abominación | fr: abomination, abomination-de | de: Abscheuliches, abomination-von 1Kgs 11:5; 1Kgs 11:7; 2Kgs 23:13

3. filth, unclean thing (1×) Filth or defiling matter emphasizing pollution and disgust rather than specifically idolatrous content. Nahum 3:6 declares God will cast 'filth' (shiqquts) upon Nineveh, and Zechariah 9:7 applies it to unclean food. French 'abomination' and Spanish 'inmundicias' (filth) capture this broader connotation of contaminating repulsiveness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: filth | es: inmundicias | fr: abomination | de: [שקצים] Nah 3:6

שָׁקַט H8252 V-Qal-Imperf-2fs (42×)

To be quiet, at rest, undisturbed; of lands at peace after war, of persons in tranquility; causatively, to give rest or calm.

A verb conveying the deep stillness that follows turmoil — the hush of a land after war, the calm of a soul at rest. In Judges, the recurring refrain 'and the land was quiet (shaqat) forty years' marks the rhythm of Israel's deliverance cycles (Judg 3:11, 30; 5:31; 8:28). The Spanish 'reposó' and French 'tranquille' both capture this sense of settled peace. In its causative form, God is the one who 'gives rest' and 'calms' — even the south wind that quiets the earth (Job 37:17). The word spans the full arc from external peace to inner stillness.

1. be quiet, be at rest (26×) The basic intransitive sense: to be in a state of quietness, rest, or undisturbedness. Frequently describes a land at peace after military conflict, as in the recurring Judges formula 'and the land was quiet' (Judg 3:11, 5:31). Spanish 'reposó' and French 'était quiet' reinforce the sense of settled calm. Also used of personal rest, as in Job 3:13, 26 where Job laments the quiet he never found. QUIETNESS REST

en: I-was-quiet, and-I-will-be-quiet, and-be-quiet | es: Y-reposó, descansará, descansarás | fr: [ותשקט], [שקטה], et-était-quiet | de: [ואשקוט], [ישקט], [שקטתי] Josh 11:23; Josh 14:15; Judg 3:11; Judg 3:30; Judg 5:31

2. quiet, at ease (adjectival/substantival) (6×) The Qal participle functioning adjectivally or as a substantive, describing a person, people, or place as characteristically quiet, settled, and undisturbed. The spies in Judges 18:7 found a people 'quiet and secure,' and Ezekiel 38:11 speaks of those 'living quietly' in unwalled villages. The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'quieto,' German 'still' — all converge on habitual peacefulness rather than a momentary event. QUIETNESS REST

en: and-quiet, and-settled, quiet | es: (a)-los-quietos,, quieto, y-en-reposo | fr: [ושקטת], et-être-tranquille, quiet | de: [ושקטת], still, still-sein Judg 18:7; Judg 18:27; 1Chr 4:40; Jer 48:11; Ezek 38:11

3. quietness, rest (nominal) (5×) The Hiphil infinitive absolute used as an abstract noun denoting the state or condition of quietness, rest, or tranquility itself. Isaiah 30:15 famously declares 'in quietness (hashqet) and trust shall be your strength,' and Isaiah 32:17 links it with righteousness. Jeremiah 49:23 uses it negatively — the sea that 'cannot be quiet.' This nominal use elevates shaqat from a verb of description to a concept of theological weight. QUIETNESS REST

en: ease, in-quietness, quietness | es: descansar, en-quietud, quietud | fr: être-tranquille | de: still-sein Isa 30:15; Isa 32:17; Isa 57:20; Jer 49:23; Ezek 16:49

4. give rest, make quiet (causative) (5×) The Hiphil causative sense: to cause someone to be quiet, to grant rest, or to calm. God is typically the implicit or explicit agent. In Psalm 94:13 God 'gives rest' to the afflicted from days of trouble. Proverbs 15:18 notes that a patient person 'calms' (yashqit) a quarrel. Spanish 'apacigua' (pacifies) nicely captures the active, relational dimension — this is rest bestowed, not merely experienced. QUIETNESS REST

en: and-be-quiet, calms, gives-rest | es: apacigua, cuando-aquieta, da-quietud | fr: dans-être-tranquille, et-être-tranquille, à-être-tranquille | de: [בהשקט], [ישקט], [ישקיט] Job 34:29; Job 37:17; Ps 94:13; Prov 15:18; Isa 7:4

שֶׁקֶט H8253 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

quietness, rest, tranquility

This noun expresses the state of quietness or tranquility, appearing in God's promise to Solomon that he would be granted rest from enemies. The term is paired with 'peace' in 1 Chronicles 22:9, describing the conditions under which Solomon would build the temple—in contrast to David's life of warfare. Quietness suggests not merely the absence of conflict but the positive presence of calm, rest, and security. It evokes the settled conditions necessary for domestic prosperity and religious devotion, when weapons can be set aside for building projects.

(1×) The phrase 'quietness and peace' in 1 Chronicles 22:9 uses this term to describe the conditions God promised Solomon's reign. French and German translations show some uncertainty, but the context clearly indicates restful conditions free from military threat. God tells David that Solomon's name means 'peace,' and He will give Israel 'quietness and peace' during his reign, enabling the temple construction that David's warfare-filled life could not accomplish. EASE AND TRANQUILITY en: and-quietness | es: y-quietud | fr: [ושקט] | de: [ושקט] 1Chr 22:9

שָׁקַל H8254 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (23×)

To weigh out silver as payment; to weigh or assess worth; to be weighed (passive)

Before coins existed, commerce moved by the balance: silver weighed out on scales transferred ownership and sealed covenants. Abraham weighs four hundred shekels for the cave of Machpelah (Gen 23:16), and Jeremiah weighs seventeen shekels for a field in Anathoth (Jer 32:9). The same verb extends into moral evaluation: God weighs the heart (Prov 16:2), and Job begs to be weighed on a just balance (Job 31:6). German waegen and the cognate Aramaic teqal (whence the famous mene, teqel of Daniel 5:27) both illuminate the deep semantic link between physical weighing and divine judgment.

1. weigh out as payment (13×) To weigh out silver or money on scales as a form of payment or commercial transaction, the standard means of exchange before minted coinage. Abraham's purchase of Machpelah (Gen 23:16), David's purchase of the threshing floor, and Ezra's entrusting of temple vessels (Ezra 8:25-26) all reflect this concrete mercantile sense. Spanish pesar and French peser confirm the physical action. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING

en: I-will-weigh-out, [and-I-weighed], and-I-weighed | es: [y-pesé], los-peséis, pesar | fr: et-il-pesa, et-pesa-dehors, et-peser | de: [(ואשקלה)], [[ואשקולה]], [אשקול] Gen 23:16; Exod 22:17; 2Sam 14:26; Ezra 8:25

2. weigh, evaluate, assess (7×) To weigh in the sense of evaluating, examining, or assessing true worth, often with God as the subject who tests hearts and motives. Proverbs 16:2 and 21:2 declare that the LORD weighs spirits, while Job 31:6 asks to be weighed on a balance of justice. Isaiah 40:12 extends the imagery to cosmic scales, asking who has weighed the mountains. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING en: do-you-weigh-, is-the-one-weighing, let-Him-weigh-me | es: Me-pese, el-que-pesa, pesan | fr: peser, peser-moi, tu-fera-pèse | de: [וישקלו], [וישקלני], [שקול] 2Sam 18:12; 1Kgs 20:39; Job 6:2; Job 31:6; Isa 33:18

3. be weighed (Nifal passive) (3×) The Nifal passive: to be weighed on the balance, whether literally of silver that cannot be weighed as payment for wisdom (Job 28:15) or in the famous judgment scene where Belshazzar is weighed and found wanting (Dan 5:27). The Aramaic cognate teqal in Daniel's inscription underscores the ancient connection between weight and verdict. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING

en: is-weighed, was-weighed, were-weighed | es: fue-pesada, fuera-pesada, se-pesará | fr: peser | de: [ישקל], [נשקל] Ezra 8:33; Job 6:2; Job 28:15

שֶׁקֶל H8255 Art / N-ms (88×)

Shekel; a standard unit of weight (~11.4 g) used as the primary measure of value and currency

The sheqel is ancient Israel's fundamental unit of weight and monetary value. Derived from the root meaning 'to weigh,' it originally denoted a specific mass of silver or gold placed on a balance rather than a minted coin. It prices the compensation for a slave gored by an ox (Exod 21:32), measures the gold of the tabernacle (Exod 38:24), and sets sanctuary valuations (Lev 27). Amos condemns merchants who shrink the shekel to cheat customers (Amos 8:5). Cross-linguistic glosses — Spanish 'siclo,' French 'sicle,' German 'Schekel' — all transliterate rather than translate, recognizing the shekel as a culturally specific standard.

shekel (unit of weight/currency) (88×) A standard unit of weight approximately 11.4 grams, serving as ancient Israel's principal measure of value for silver, gold, and bronze. It functions both as a weight placed on scales and as a monetary denomination in commercial and cultic transactions. From tabernacle inventories (Exod 38:24–29) to Amos's denunciation of dishonest traders (Amos 8:5), the shekel is Israel's baseline economic measure. The transliterated forms across languages — 'siclo,' 'sicle,' 'Schekel' — signal a culture-specific unit with no native equivalent. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: shekel, shekels | es: siclo, siclos, siclos-de | fr: sicle, sicles | de: Schekel Exod 21:32; Exod 38:24; Exod 38:25; Exod 38:29; Lev 5:15

שִׁקְמָה H8256 N-fp (7×)

sycamore tree — the sycamore-fig (Ficus sycomorus), a lowland tree valued for timber and fruit

Shiqmah denotes the sycamore-fig tree (Ficus sycomorus), a large, spreading tree that thrived in the warm lowlands of the Shephelah. It was abundant enough to make cedar seem precious by comparison — Solomon made cedar 'as plentiful as sycamores in the lowland' (1 Kgs 10:27). The prophet Amos identified himself as a 'tender of sycamores' (Am 7:14), a task involving piercing the fruit to hasten ripening. When God struck the sycamores with frost alongside the vines (Ps 78:47), it signaled devastating agricultural loss. Spanish 'sicomoros' and French 'sycamores' preserve the botanical identification across translation traditions.

sycamore tree (Ficus sycomorus) (7×) The sycamore-fig tree (Ficus sycomorus), a large lowland tree common in the Shephelah of ancient Israel, valued for both its timber and its fig-like fruit. Solomon's wealth made cedars as common as sycamores (1 Kgs 10:27 = 2 Chr 1:15 = 9:27), and a royal overseer managed the sycamore groves (1 Chr 27:28). Amos described himself as a boles shiqmim, a dresser or piercer of sycamore fruit (Am 7:14). God's destruction of sycamores alongside grapevines in Psalm 78:47 underscores their agricultural importance. Spanish 'sicomoros' and French 'sycamores' uniformly identify this species. FIG AND SYCAMORE

en: and-the-sycamores, and-their-sycamores, as-the-sycamores | es: Sicómoros, como-los-sicomorros, como-los-sicómoros | fr: Samarie, [שקמים], comme-le-sycamores | de: [והשקמים], [כשקמים], [שקמים] 1Kgs 10:27; 1Chr 27:28; 2Chr 1:15; 2Chr 9:27; Ps 78:47

שָׁקַע H8257 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (6×)

To sink, sink down, subside; causatively (Hiphil) to cause to sink or settle

A verb describing downward movement into a surface or medium – sinking, subsiding, dying out. In its Qal and Niphal stems, it pictures fire dying down (Num 11:2) or land sinking like the Nile floodplain (Amos 8:8; 9:5). Jeremiah uses it memorably of Babylon sinking like a stone in water (Jer 51:64). The Hiphil causative appears in God calming Egypt's waters (Ezek 32:14) and pressing down Leviathan's tongue (Job 41:1). Spanish 'hundirse' and English 'sink' converge on the core image, while the Ezekiel passage uniquely extends toward 'settling' or 'growing clear.'

1. sink, sink down, subside (4×) The intransitive Qal/Niphal sense of sinking down, subsiding, going under. Fire 'sinks down' and dies out after Moses intercedes (Num 11:2). The land rises and falls like the Nile in Amos 8:8 and 9:5, with Spanish 'hundirse' (to sink, cave in) capturing the physical collapse. Jeremiah 51:64 applies it to Babylon's irreversible submersion – a prophetic image of permanent descent. SINKING SUBMERGING

en: and-it-sinks, and-it-will-sink, and-sank-down | es: (y-se-hundirá), se-hundirá, y-se-apagó | fr: [ונשקעה], [ושקעה], [תשקע] | de: [(ונשקעה)], [ושקעה], [תשקע] Num 11:2; Jer 51:64; Amos 8:8; Amos 9:5

2. press down, cause to settle (Hiphil) (2×) The causative Hiphil sense: to press down, make settle, cause to sink. God declares 'I will cause their waters to settle' in Ezekiel 32:14, where sinking shades into clarifying – turbid waters calming to transparency. In Job 41:1 the challenge asks whether one can press down Leviathan's tongue with a cord. Spanish 'asentar' (to settle) and 'hundir' (to sink) split what Hebrew holds in one stem. SINKING SUBMERGING

en: I-will-cause-to-settle, can-you-press-down | es: asentaré, hundirás | fr: [אשקיע], תשקיע | de: [אשקיע], [תשקיע] Job 41:1; Ezek 32:14

שְׁקַעֲרוּרָה H8258 N-fp (1×)

depressions, hollows, indentations (in a surface)

This plural feminine noun describes depressions or hollows in a surface, specifically appearing in Leviticus 14:37 in the priestly diagnosis of house plague. The text describes how the priest examines wall depressions that appear greenish or reddish and seem deeper than the surface—signs of contaminating mildew or mold. The term denotes concave spots, indentations where the wall surface has eroded or deteriorated. These depressions distinguished serious structural contamination from surface staining, requiring priestly intervention and possible demolition.

(1×) Translations consistently render this as 'depressions' or 'hollows' across languages (Spanish depresiones), describing the sunken spots in walls that indicated serious plague contamination. Leviticus 14:37 uses precise architectural terminology in the priestly manual for diagnosing house plague, with these depressions serving as diagnostic signs that the contamination had penetrated the wall's surface. HOLES AND OPENINGS

en: depressions | es: depresiones | fr: depressions | de: depressions Lev 14:37

שָׁקַף H8259 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConsecImperf-3mp (22×)

To look down from a height, gaze out from a window or elevated place; to overlook or face toward a location (topographical).

The Hebrew verb shaqaf captures the act of looking out and down from an elevated vantage point — a window, a mountaintop, or heaven itself. In its Hifil stem, it describes God looking down from heaven upon the earth (Deut 26:15; Ps 14:2) and humans peering out from heights, as when Abraham looked down toward Sodom (Gen 18:16; 19:28). The Nifal adds an intimate, often poignant dimension: Sisera's mother peers through the lattice wondering why her son's chariot delays (Judg 5:28), and Michal watches David dancing before the ark (2 Sam 6:16). Spanish mirar, French regarder, and German herabblicken all emphasize the downward gaze, while a distinct topographical use in the Nifal participle describes geographic features that 'overlook' or 'face toward' a location — the field of Zophim overlooking the desert (Num 23:28) and the hill that faces Jeshimon (1 Sam 13:18). The Song of Songs crowns this verb with beauty: the beloved 'looks forth like the dawn' (Song 6:10).

1. look down from a height (Hifil) (12×) To look down from a height in the Hifil stem — a deliberate gaze downward from an elevated position such as heaven, a mountain, or a window. With 12 occurrences, this sense includes God looking down from heaven upon the Egyptians through the pillar of fire (Exod 14:24), Moses instructing Israel to ask God to 'look down from your holy habitation' (Deut 26:15), and Abraham gazing toward the smoke of Sodom (Gen 18:16; 19:28). Spanish mirar desde arriba, French regarder d'en haut, and German herabblicken all capture the elevated-to-low vector of this gaze. GAZING AND LOOKING

en: and-he-looked-out, and-looked-down, and-looked-out | es: Mira, Y-miraron, Y-miró | fr: [וישקף], et-elle-regarda-dehors, et-il-regarda-dehors | de: [וישקף], blickte-herab, schauen-hinab Gen 18:16; Gen 19:28; Gen 26:8; Exod 14:24; Deut 26:15

2. peer out or look down (Nifal) (6×) To peer out or look down from a window or vantage point in the Nifal stem — a reflexive act of gazing outward, often charged with emotional tension. Found in 6 occurrences, this sense appears in some of Scripture's most vivid scenes: Sisera's mother looking through the lattice for her son's return (Judg 5:28), Michal watching David leap before the ark (2 Sam 6:16; 1 Chr 15:29), and the narrator of Proverbs peering through a window at the naive youth (Prov 7:6). Spanish miró por la ventana and French regarda par la fenêtre emphasize the through-the-window framing. Psalm 85:11 extends this beautifully: 'righteousness shall look down from heaven.' GAZING AND LOOKING

en: I-looked-down, is-looking-down, looked-down | es: asoma, miraba, miré | fr: [נשקפה], elle-regarda-dehors, regarda-en-bas | de: [נשקפה], [נשקפתי], blickte-herab Judg 5:28; 2Sam 6:16; 1Chr 15:29; Ps 85:11; Prov 7:6

3. overlook, face toward (Nifal topographical) (4×) To overlook or face toward a place — a topographical Nifal participle describing a geographic feature or elevated position that looks out over an area. With 4 occurrences, this specialized use appears as a landscape descriptor: the field of Zophim 'on the top of Pisgah, which overlooks the wasteland' (Num 21:20; 23:28), the hill that 'overlooks Jeshimon' (1 Sam 13:18), and the beloved who 'looks forth like the dawn' (Song 6:10). Spanish que mira hacia and French qui surplombe show how translators shift from personal gazing to spatial orientation, treating the verb as a geographic marker rather than a volitional act. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-overlooks, looking-forth, the-overlooking | es: el-que-mira, que-mira, y-mira | fr: et-overlooks, le-overlooking, le-surplombant | de: [הנשקפה], der-overlooking, und-overlooks Num 21:20; Num 23:28; 1Sam 13:18; Song 6:10

שְׁקֻף H8260 N-ms (1×)

frame, framework, casing (architectural feature for doors)

This rare architectural term appears in the description of Solomon's palace, referring to the framework or casing around doorways and windows. The word likely denotes the structural framing that holds doors or the decorative casing that surrounds openings. In 1 Kings 7:5, the text describes architectural features 'frame against frame' in three rows, suggesting a repeated pattern of framed openings in the palace structure. The term represents the technical vocabulary of ancient Near Eastern architecture, preserving details of royal construction techniques.

(1×) English and Spanish render this as 'frame' or 'framed,' describing architectural features in Solomon's palace. The context in 1 Kings 7:5 speaks of doors and doorposts that were 'square in their frames,' with frame facing frame in three tiers—likely describing a colonnade or gallery with multiple framed openings in parallel rows, demonstrating the palace's sophisticated architectural design. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: frame | es: enmarcados | fr: frame | de: frame 1Kgs 7:5

שְׁקוּף H8261 Conj-w / N-mp (2×)

Window frames, casings for windows (architectural term for narrowing or recessed frames)

This architectural term describes the frames or casings of windows in Solomon's temple and palace. First Kings 6:4 mentions 'windows with narrowing frames' in the temple structure, while 7:4 refers to window frames in the palace complex. Ezekiel 41:16 likely contained the same term but the text is uncertain. The plural construct suggests elaborate window construction with recessed or narrowing frames, reflecting sophisticated architectural techniques in royal buildings.

(2×) Technical architectural vocabulary for window construction elements, specifically the frames or casings that held temple and palace windows. The 'narrowing' aspect suggests splayed windows—wider on the inside than outside, a defensive and aesthetic feature in ancient Near Eastern architecture. Spanish uses 'ventanas' (windows) and 'marcos' (frames), while the English glosses emphasize the 'framed' nature. The domain assignment to Buildings > Constructions appropriately categorizes this architectural feature. WINDOW OPENING

en: and-framed-windows, frames | es: Y-ventanas, marcos | fr: et-framed-fenêtres, frames | de: frames, und-framed-Fenster 1Kgs 6:4; 1Kgs 7:4

שִׁקֵּץ H8262 V-Piel-InfAbs (7×)

to detest, regard as abominable — Piel verb expressing ritual abhorrence or the act of making oneself detestable

Shiqqets is a Piel denominative from sheqets ('detestable thing'), carrying the forceful sense of treating something as utterly abominable. It appears almost exclusively in legal contexts governing clean and unclean foods: 'you shall detest them' (Lev 11:11, 13) and 'you shall not make yourselves detestable' (Lev 11:43; 20:25). The emphatic infinitive absolute construction in Deuteronomy 7:26 — shaqqets teshaqtsennu, 'you shall utterly detest it' — pairs with the synonymous ta'av to drive home the intensity of Israel's required response to idolatry. Spanish 'abominar/aborrecer' and French 'avoir en horreur' capture this visceral revulsion.

detest, make detestable (7×) A Piel denominative verb meaning to regard as ritually detestable or to make oneself abominable. In its transitive sense, it commands Israel to shun certain creatures as unclean (Lev 11:11, 13) and to utterly abhor idolatrous objects (Deut 7:26, paired with the emphatic infinitive absolute and the synonym ta'av). In its reflexive sense (with nephesh as object), it warns against defiling oneself through forbidden food (Lev 11:43; 20:25). Psalm 22:25 extends the concept beyond ritual law: God 'has not abhorred' the affliction of the poor. Spanish 'abominareis' and French 'avoir en horreur' reflect the strong revulsion conveyed by all seven occurrences. LOATHING ABHORRENCE en: abhorred, make-detestable, utterly-detesting | es: abominaréis, aborrecer, aborreció | fr: avoir-en-horreur, entièrement-detesting, faire-detestable | de: abhorred, du-soll-machen-detestable, du-soll-utterly-verabscheuen-es Lev 11:11; Lev 11:13; Lev 11:43; Lev 20:25; Deut 7:26

שֶׁקֶץ H8263 Conj-w / N-ms (11×)

A detestable or abominable thing, used in Levitical dietary laws and prophetic denunciations of idolatry

A noun of strong revulsion, marking creatures and practices that are ritually abhorrent to God. Nearly all occurrences cluster in Leviticus 11, the dietary code, where water creatures without fins and scales, certain birds, and swarming things are declared sheqets — not merely unclean but actively detestable (Lev 11:10–13, 20, 23, 41–42). The word also appears in broader contexts of defiled food offerings (Lev 7:21) and idolatrous worship (Ezek 8:10). Unlike the more general to'evah ('abomination'), sheqets carries an almost visceral, physical quality of repugnance — the shudder one feels at something inherently loathsome.

Detestable thing, abomination (11×) Something detestable or abominable in God's sight, used primarily of ritually unclean creatures in the Levitical dietary laws — aquatic animals without fins and scales, certain birds of prey, and swarming insects (Lev 11:10–13, 20, 23, 41–42). It also appears for defiled food offerings (Lev 7:21) and idolatrous images (Ezek 8:10). The term conveys visceral ritual repugnance rather than merely moral disapproval. Spanish uses 'abominación' and 'cosa detestable,' Arabic مَكْرُوه (makruh/rijs, repugnant/filth), Korean 역겨운 것 (yeokgyeoun geot, disgusting thing), and Hindi घिनौना (ghinauna, loathsome) — all emphasizing the physically revolting quality that distinguishes sheqets from the broader to'evah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-detestable-thing, and-the-detestable-thing, detestable | es: Y-abominación, abominación, cosa-detestable | fr: [והשקץ], detestable-chose, et-detestable-chose | de: [והשקץ], [שקץ], detestable-Sache Lev 7:21; Lev 11:10; Lev 11:11; Lev 11:12; Lev 11:13

שָׁקַק H8264 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (6×)

To rush, run about, charge; figuratively to long for, crave restlessly

A vivid verb of energetic, often aggressive movement – rushing, charging, ranging about. Joel 2:9 pictures locust-armies rushing through a city; Nahum 2:4 has chariots careening in the streets. Proverbs 28:15 compares a wicked ruler over poor people to a charging bear. But the same restless energy turns inward in Psalm 107:9 and Isaiah 29:8, where the soul 'rushes' with unsatisfied craving. The Spanish split between 'correr' (run) for the physical sense and 'anhelar' (yearn) for the metaphorical one neatly maps the two poles of this word.

1. rush, run about, charge (4×) Aggressive physical movement: rushing, running about, charging forward. Locusts rush through the city in Joel 2:9 (paralleled with 'they run'), plunderers rush upon spoil in Isaiah 33:4, and a wicked ruler is a ranging bear in Proverbs 28:15. The Hitpalpel intensification in Nahum 2:4 describes chariots careening wildly. Spanish 'correr' and French 'couler' both anchor the sense in rapid motion. RUNNING AND RACING

en: charging, he-rushes, they-rush | es: corren, corriendo, que-acecha | fr: [שוקק], couler, שוקק | de: [ישקו], [ישתקשקון], [שוקק] Prov 28:15; Isa 33:4; Joel 2:9; Nah 2:4

2. long for, crave (of the soul) (2×) A metaphorical extension of rushing turned inward: to long for, crave, be restless with desire. Used of the soul that longs for water in Isaiah 29:8 (paired with 'weary' and 'empty') and Psalm 107:9 (paired with 'hungry'). Spanish 'anhelar' (to yearn) and German 'Sehnsucht' (longing) reveal how translators shift from external motion to internal restlessness – the same verb captures a body charging forward and a soul straining toward what it lacks. DESIRE AND COVETING en: is-longing, longing | es: anhela, sedienta | fr: [שוקקה], courir | de: Sehnsucht, [שוקקה] Ps 107:9; Isa 29:8

שָׁקַר H8265 Conj-w / V-Piel-Prtcpl-fp (1×)

ogle, glance provocatively, cast flirtatious looks

This Piel verb describes the provocative eye movements of women seeking to attract attention through seductive glances. Isaiah uses it in his indictment of Jerusalem's wealthy women who walk with 'ogling eyes'—part of their overall haughty, attention-seeking behavior. The root suggests deliberate eye movement calculated to entice or seduce, distinct from modest gaze. Cognate languages support the sense of looking about in a calculating or flirtatious manner. The term captures not just seeing but the deliberate use of eye contact as a social and sexual signal.

(1×) Isaiah 3:16 condemns the daughters of Zion for 'walking and ogling with their eyes,' part of a larger rebuke of their pride and seductive behavior. Spanish captures the sense with 'seducing with,' while French and German leave it untranslated, perhaps due to its unusual nature. The ogling represents calculated sensuality—using eye movement as a tool of enticement, part of the social display that Isaiah declares will be judged by humiliation. GAZING AND LOOKING

en: walking | es: y-seduciendo-con | fr: [ומשקרות] | de: [ומשקרות] Isa 3:16

שָׁקַר H8266 V-Piel-Perf-1cp (6×)

Deal falsely, lie; to act with deception or break faith, used of covenant betrayal and divine faithfulness.

Derived from sheqer ('falsehood'), this verb covers the full range of deceptive action – from breaking sworn oaths to speaking outright lies. In Genesis 21:23, Abraham asks Abimelech to swear he will not deal falsely, while in 1 Samuel 15:29, Samuel declares that the Glory of Israel will not lie, using the same root to affirm divine constancy. The Piel intensifies the action into deliberate, sustained deception. Spanish mentirá and fuimos-falsos capture both the lying and the broader covenant-breaking dimensions. Psalm 44:17 poignantly protests that Israel has not dealt falsely with God's covenant despite suffering.

deal falsely, lie (6×) To act deceitfully, break faith, or speak falsehood. The Qal form in Genesis 21:23 concerns oath-breaking between treaty partners. The Piel intensifies this into deliberate falseness: Psalm 44:17 protests innocence ('we have not dealt falsely with your covenant'), while 1 Samuel 15:29 uses the negative to affirm God's truthfulness. Leviticus 19:11 pairs it with kahash (deny), reinforcing the semantic field of deception. Spanish mentirá (will lie) and fuimos-falsos (we were false) together illuminate the range from speech-act lying to relational betrayal. LYING AND FALSEHOOD en: I-will-be-false, deal-falsely, have-we-dealt-falsely | es: fuimos-falsos, mentirá, mentirán | fr: [ישקרן], fera-m'étends, mentir | de: [ישקרן], du-betrügst, haben-wir-dealt-falsely Gen 21:23; Lev 19:11; 1Sam 15:29; Ps 44:17; Ps 89:33

שֶׁקֶר H8267 N-mp (113×)

Falsehood, deception, or vain emptiness; the Hebrew word for lies, fraud, and all that betrays trust or proves worthless.

Sheqer is the biblical vocabulary's sharpest word for what is false. It covers deliberate lying (as in the ninth commandment, Exod 20:16), fraudulent conduct (Prov 11:18), and the deceptive emptiness of things that promise much but deliver nothing—like a horse whose strength proves vain in battle (Ps 33:17) or charm that ultimately disappoints (Prov 31:30). Across languages the translation signatures converge: Spanish mentira/falsedad, French mensonge, German Luege—all centered on the lie. Yet the Hebrew range is wider than any single word in these languages, stretching from a courtroom perjury to the cosmic futility of idols (Jer 10:14).

1. falsehood, lie (107×) The dominant sense covers falsehood and lying as a substantive reality—a false statement, an untruth, or the quality of being false. Used as subject ('falsehood springs up,' Ps 85:11 reversed), object ('speak sheqer,' Jer 9:5), or in construct chains ('witnesses of sheqer,' Deut 19:18). The multilingual evidence is unanimous: eng 'falsehood/lie,' spa 'mentira/falsedad,' fra 'mensonge,' deu 'Luege.' This is the sense behind the ninth commandment prohibition (Exod 20:16) and prophetic condemnations of false prophecy (Jer 23:25–32). LIES AND FALSEHOOD en: a-lie, falsehood, falsely | es: falsedad, mentira, mentiras | fr: falsehood, faussement, mensonge | de: Luege, ein-lagern, falsehood Exod 5:9; Exod 23:7; Lev 6:3; Deut 19:18; 2Sam 18:13

2. vain, deceptive emptiness (3×) A smaller but distinct sense marks vain, deceptive emptiness—things that betray hope rather than speak untruths. In 1 Sam 25:21 David guarded Nabal's goods 'for sheqer' (in vain); Ps 33:17 declares a war-horse 'sheqer for salvation' (deceptively empty of saving power); Prov 31:30 calls charm 'sheqer' (vain, illusory). Spanish 'engaño/por-la-falsedad' and French 'dans-vain' reflect this vanity nuance that the core 'lie' translations miss. LIES AND FALSEHOOD
en: deceptive, in-vain | es: Engaño, por-la-falsedad | fr: dans-vain, mensonge | de: Luege, deceptive, in-vain 1Sam 25:21; Ps 33:17; Prov 31:30

3. deception, fraud (3×) Active deception or fraudulent conduct, where the emphasis shifts from the false statement to the treacherous act of deceiving. Prov 11:18 warns that the wicked earns 'wages of sheqer' (fraudulent gain), Prov 20:17 pictures bread gained by deceit, and Isa 28:15 describes a covenant with death built on deception. The Spanish 'engaño' and German 'und-in-Luege' capture the active, relational dimension of fraud rather than mere falsehood. LIES AND FALSEHOOD en: deceit, deception | es: de-engaño, engaño, y-en-falsedad | fr: et-dans-mensonge, mensonge | de: Luege, und-in-Luege Prov 11:18; Prov 20:17; Isa 28:15

שִׁקֻּת H8268 Prep-b / N-fpc (2×)

Watering trough, drinking vessel for livestock (where animals were watered)

This noun denotes a trough or basin used for watering animals. Genesis 24:20 describes Rebekah emptying her jar into 'the trough' to water Abraham's servant's camels—a detail demonstrating her industrious hospitality. Genesis 30:38 relates Jacob placing peeled branches 'in the watering troughs' where flocks came to drink, part of his selective breeding strategy. The term connects to Arabic and Aramaic words for irrigation channels and drinking vessels, emphasizing its functional role in animal husbandry.

(2×) A functional agricultural implement, specifically the vessel or basin where livestock drank water. Both Genesis passages concern pivotal encounters at watering places: Rebekah's character revelation and Jacob's flock management. Spanish distinguishes 'abrevadero' (watering place/trough) and 'abrevaderos' (plural), paralleling the Hebrew singular and construct plural forms. The prepositional forms ('in the troughs,' 'into the trough') reflect the term's typical syntactic usage in watering narratives. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-watering-troughs-of, the-trough | es: el-abrevadero, en-abrevaderos-de | fr: dans-arrosant-troughs-de, le-trough | de: den-Trog, in-die-Tränkrinnen Gen 24:20; Gen 30:38

שַׂר H8269 N-mpc / 3ms (421×)

Chief, ruler, prince, official, captain; a person of authority or rank in civil, military, or royal administration.

Sar is the Hebrew Bible's workhorse noun for anyone wielding delegated authority. It can refer to a tribal chieftain leading Israel through the wilderness (Num 21:18), to Pharaoh's courtiers (Gen 12:15), to a military captain commanding thousands or hundreds (Exod 18:21), or to a governor ruling a province. The word's flexibility is visible across languages: Spanish toggles between principe, jefe, and capitan depending on context, while Korean shifts from 방백 (governor) to 지휘관 (military commander) to 신하 (court official). In its most exalted uses, sar reaches toward angelic authority — Daniel's 'Michael, your prince' (Dan 10:21) — showing how the same root that describes a baker's supervisor in Genesis can denote a cosmic guardian in apocalyptic vision.

1. prince, noble, official (297×) The broad default sense covering persons of high rank, authority, or social standing in political or royal contexts: princes, nobles, court officials, tribal chiefs, and foreign dignitaries. At 297 occurrences this is overwhelmingly the dominant usage, appearing from the princes of Moab who report to Balak (Num 22:8-21) to the officials of Judah condemned by the prophets (Isa 1:23; Jer 34:10). Spanish principe and German Furst capture the aristocratic register, while Arabic amir parallels the Semitic semantic range of delegated rulership almost exactly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: captains-of, commanders-of, princes-of | es: jefes-de, príncipes-de | fr: chef | de: Fuersten-von Num 22:8; Num 22:13; Num 22:14; Num 22:21; Num 22:35

2. chief of a specific office (85×) Head or chief of a specific office or household department, used characteristically in the construct chain sar ha-X. The classic examples are Joseph-cycle titles: sar ha-tabbachim ('chief of the guard,' Gen 37:36), sar ha-mashqim ('chief cupbearer,' Gen 40:2), sar ha-ofim ('chief baker,' Gen 40:2). This construct-state pattern — appearing 85 times — creates functional title compounds that behave like English 'chief-of-X.' Korean renders these with the suffix -장 (jang, 'head of'), and Spanish uses jefe de, both confirming a lexicalized title-forming pattern distinct from the general 'prince/noble' sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: -the-commander-of, commander-of, commander-of- | es: jefe-de, jefe-de-, príncipe-de | fr: -le-commander-de, commandant-de, commandant-de- | de: -der-Befehlshaber-von, Befehlshaber-von, Befehlshaber-von- Gen 21:22; Gen 21:32; Gen 26:26; Gen 37:36; Gen 39:1

3. military captain, commander (35×) A military leader or army officer: captain, commander — specifically one exercising authority over troops or military operations. Found 35 times, especially in the Mosaic organization of Israel (Exod 18:21-25 'commanders of thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens') and in the conquest-era battle narratives. Arabic qaid ('military commander'), Hindi senapati ('army chief'), and Swahili jemadari ('military officer') all select dedicated martial vocabulary here rather than generic 'ruler' words, confirming a distinct semantic profile from the courtier sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-captains-of, and-commanders-of, and-rulers-of | es: capitán-de, el-capitán-de, jefe-de | fr: capitaine-de, commandant-de, et-captains-de | de: Befehlshaber-von, Hauptmann-von, und-Befehlshaber-von Exod 18:21; Exod 18:25; Num 31:14; Num 31:48; Deut 1:15

4. ruler, governor (4×) A territorial or political ruler exercising governing authority over a region, city, or people — governor, overlord, regent. Only 4 clear occurrences, but contextually distinct: Moses is challenged 'Who made you a ruler and a judge over us?' (Exod 2:14); the 'rulers' of Samaria are addressed as political governors (2 Kgs 10:1); Daniel's 'prince of Persia' (Dan 10:13) is a cosmic territorial overlord. Korean renders these with 통치자 (ruler/governor) and Hindi with hakim (governor), both using executive-governance vocabulary rather than military or courtly terms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-prince-of, its-rulers, ruler | es: Y-príncipe-de, jefes-de, príncipe | fr: chef, chefs-de, et-prince | de: Fuerst, Herrscher, Herrscher-von Exod 2:14; 2Kgs 10:1; Prov 28:2; Dan 10:13

שֹׁר H8270 N-msc / 2fs (2×)

Navel, navel-string, umbilical cord (or possibly by extension, the body or belly)

This anatomical term primarily denotes the umbilical cord or navel. Ezekiel 16:4 uses it literally in describing Jerusalem's abandonment: 'your navel-string was not cut' at birth, part of an extended metaphor of infant neglect. Proverbs 3:8 is disputed—'refreshment to your navel/body'—where some ancient versions read 'body' while others preserve 'navel' as synecdoche for the whole person. The cognate terms in Aramaic and Arabic consistently refer to the navel or umbilical cord.

(2×) The umbilical cord at birth, or by extension the navel as a body part representing physical vitality. Ezekiel's literal usage describes birth procedures, while Proverbs likely uses it figuratively for bodily health or physical self. The textual uncertainty in Proverbs 3:8 (reflected in glosses offering 'your body,' 'your navel') shows translators balancing literal anatomy against idiomatic expression. The domain assignment to Body Parts appropriately captures this anatomical vocabulary. FLESH AND BODY

en: cord-your, to-your-body | es: a-tu-cuerpo, cordón-de-ti | fr: corde, à-ton-לשׁרך-toi | de: [לשׁרך], [שׁרך] Prov 3:8; Ezek 16:4

שְׁרָא H8271 Conj-w / V-Piel-Prtcpl-msc (6×)

Aramaic verb: to loosen, untie, solve (problems); to dwell, abide; to begin, commence

An Aramaic verb with a surprisingly wide semantic range, all arguably traceable to the root idea of loosening or releasing. Literally, the three men in the furnace are found 'loosed' from their bonds, walking freely in the fire (Dan 3:25). Figuratively, Daniel's gift for 'loosening knots' – solving intractable riddles – makes him indispensable to the Babylonian court (Dan 5:12, 16). The sense of 'dwelling' likely derives from the traveler's act of loosening pack-straps when making camp (Dan 2:22). In Ezra 5:2 the Piel yields 'began,' perhaps from the idea of loosening restraints to set an enterprise in motion.

1. loosen, untie, solve (4×) To loosen, untie, release from bonds, with a figurative extension to solving difficult problems ('loosening knots'). In Daniel 3:25 the passive participle describes the three men walking 'loosed' in the furnace, free of their bonds. Daniel 5:12 and 5:16 praise Daniel's ability to 'solve' (literally 'loosen') knotty interpretive puzzles. Daniel 5:6 uses the Hithpael of Belshazzar's joints 'being loosened' in terror. Spanish 'resolver' (to solve) and 'sueltos' (loosed) capture both the literal and figurative extensions. FREE LIBERTY RELEASED

en: and-solving, loosed, loosened | es: resolver, se-soltaban, sueltos | fr: et-libérer, libérer | de: [ומשׁרא], [למשׁרא], [משׁתרין] Dan 3:25; Dan 5:6; Dan 5:12; Dan 5:16

2. dwell, abide (1×) To dwell, abide, reside – a semantic development possibly from the nomadic practice of loosening pack-animals' girths and loads when setting up camp. In Daniel 2:22 light 'dwells' with God, using the Peal passive participle. This sense stands distinct from the primary 'loosen' meaning. Spanish 'mora' (dwells) and English 'dwells' render the settled, locative sense that has diverged from the kinetic root. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: dwells | es: mora | fr: libérer | de: [שׁרא] Dan 2:22

3. begin (1×) To begin, commence an undertaking (Pael/Piel). In Ezra 5:2 Zerubbabel and Jeshua 'began' to rebuild the house of God in Jerusalem. The semantic bridge may be the idea of 'setting loose' or releasing an endeavor into motion. Spanish 'y comenzaron' (and they began) and English 'and began' reflect this inceptive sense, which parallels the Hebrew Hiphil of chalal. BEGIN START

en: and-began | es: y-comenzaron | fr: [וישׁריו] | de: [וישׁריו] Ezra 5:2

שַׂרְאֶצֶר H8272 N-proper-ms (3×)

Sharezer (personal name: Assyrian/Babylonian origin, son and ambassador)

Sharezer is a personal name of Assyrian or Babylonian origin, possibly meaning '[god] protect the king.' It appears in two distinct contexts. 2 Kings 19:37 and Isaiah 37:38 (parallel accounts) identify Sharezer as one of Sennacherib's sons who assassinated their father in the temple of Nisroch and fled to Ararat. Zechariah 7:2 mentions a Sharezer sent to Bethel as part of a delegation inquiring about fasting—likely a different individual from a later generation. The Greek versions show the typical consonantal variation in transliterating foreign names.

(3×) Personal name of at least two individuals. 2 Kings 19:37 and Isaiah 37:38 name Sharezer as Sennacherib's patricidal son who struck down his father and escaped to Armenia. Zechariah 7:2 identifies a (different) Sharezer dispatched to inquire of the priests about mourning practices during the Persian period. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate ('Sharezer,' 'Sarezer'), appropriate for proper names. The Assyrian etymology ('god protect the king') is ironic given that one Sharezer became a regicide. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Saretser, and-Sharetser, his-sons | es: a-Sarezer, y-Sarezer | fr: Scharezer, [וישׁראצר], et-Sharetser | de: [וישׁראצר], [שׁראצר], und-Sharetser 2Kgs 19:37; Isa 37:38; Zech 7:2

שָׁרָב H8273 N-ms (2×)

Burning heat, parched ground, heat mirage (the shimmer of hot desert air)

This noun captures the intense heat of the desert and its visual effects. Isaiah 35:7 promises that 'the parched ground' will become a pool, reversing desert conditions in messianic restoration. Isaiah 49:10 assures that in God's care, 'neither heat nor sun will strike them'—freedom from desert dangers. The term may specifically denote the heat mirage or shimmering air of parched landscapes, making Spanish 'espejismo' (mirage) particularly apt in 35:7.

(2×) The scorching heat of arid regions and its effects on the landscape, whether the burning air itself or the parched ground it creates. Both Isaiah passages concern reversal of desert conditions as a sign of divine blessing. The semantic range includes both cause (burning heat) and effect (parched land), with context determining emphasis. The domain assignment to Properties/Relations > Nature captures this environmental phenomenon, though it equally belongs to meteorological or geographical vocabulary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: heat, the-burning-sand | es: calor, el-espejismo | fr: [השׁרב], [שׁרב] | de: [השׁרב], [שׁרב] Isa 35:7; Isa 49:10

שֵׁרֵבְיָה H8274 N-proper-ms (8×)

Sherebiah: a Levite who returned from Babylonian exile with Ezra and served in public worship and covenant renewal.

A Levitical proper name appearing exclusively in the post-exilic books of Ezra and Nehemiah. Sherebiah was recruited by Ezra at the Ahava canal as a capable Levite for the return journey to Jerusalem (Ezra 8:18) and was entrusted with temple vessels of gold and silver (Ezra 8:24). He later served as a public reader and interpreter of the Torah (Neh 8:7), led the people in communal confession and worship (Neh 9:4-5), and sealed the covenant of faithfulness (Neh 10:12). His name appears in the roster of Levitical singers and gatekeepers (Neh 12:8, 24), underscoring his central role in the restoration community's spiritual life.

Sherebiah (personal name) (8×) The proper noun Sherebiah (שֵׁרֵבְיָה), designating a prominent Levite of the post-exilic period. The name may mean 'Yah has sent scorching heat,' though its etymology remains uncertain. Sherebiah appears in Ezra's narrative as a man of exceptional ability recruited for the return from Babylon (Ezra 8:18) and trusted with transporting sacred treasury (Ezra 8:24). In Nehemiah he is a leader of public worship: explaining the Torah to the assembled people (Neh 8:7), leading prayer and confession (Neh 9:4-5), and affixing his seal to the communal covenant (Neh 10:12). Translations uniformly preserve the name: Spanish 'Serebías,' French 'Shérébia,' German 'Scherebja.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sherebiah, Sherevyah, and-Sherebiah | es: Serebías, a-Sherevyah, y-Serebías | fr: Shérébia, et-Shérébia, zu-Shérébia | de: Scherebja, und-Scherebja Ezra 8:18; Ezra 8:24; Neh 8:7; Neh 9:4; Neh 9:5

שַׁרְבִּיט H8275 Art / N-ms (4×)

scepter; royal staff symbolizing authority, specifically the golden scepter held by the Persian king in Esther

This noun refers to a royal scepter, appearing exclusively in the book of Esther to describe the golden scepter held by King Ahasuerus. Esther 4:11 explains that anyone approaching the king unbidden will be killed unless the king extends the golden scepter. Esther 5:2 twice describes the king extending the scepter to Esther, granting her audience. Esther 8:4 repeats the gesture toward Esther. The multilingual glosses (Spanish cetro, French sceptre) show consistent recognition of this royal symbol. In Esther's narrative, the scepter becomes a matter of life and death—its extension means favor and life, its withholding means certain death. It embodies royal prerogative: absolute power to grant audience or to condemn.

(4×) The royal scepter, specifically the golden scepter of the Persian king in Esther. Persian protocol demanded death for anyone approaching the king unbidden unless he extended the scepter (Esth 4:11). The king extends the scepter to Esther, granting her favor and life (Esth 5:2, 8:4). This staff symbolizes royal authority and life-giving power—its extension reverses the death sentence, transforming protocol into mercy. In Esther's story, the scepter becomes the instrument of deliverance for both Esther and her people. RODS AND STAFFS

en: scepter-of, the-scepter | es: cetro-de, el-cetro | fr: [השרביט], [שרבט], [שרביט] | de: [השרביט], [שרבט], [שרביט] Esth 4:11; Esth 5:2; Esth 8:4

שָׂרַג H8276 V-Hitpael-Imperf-3mp (2×)

To be intertwined, woven together, knit together (of sinews, cords, or transgressions)

This verb describes the intertwining or weaving together of elements. Job 40:17 marvels at Behemoth's physical construction: 'the sinews of his thighs are knit together'—tightly woven muscles demonstrating strength. Lamentations 1:14 uses the image metaphorically: 'my transgressions are bound together' or 'intertwine themselves' like twisted cords forming an oppressive yoke. The root relates to Aramaic and Talmudic words for enmeshing, weaving, and intertwining, suggesting the interlacing of strands.

(2×) The action of weaving or twining together multiple strands into a unified whole, whether literal (sinews) or metaphorical (sins). Job's usage emphasizes physical strength through tightly woven tissue, while Lamentations depicts sins accumulating and intertwining into an inescapable burden. Spanish uses 'entrelazar' (interlace/intertwine), capturing the weaving imagery. The Hithpael form in Lamentations emphasizes the reflexive or intensive nature of this intertwining. The domain assignment to Physical Action > Attachment reflects the binding/connecting sense. BINDING AND TYING

en: are-knit-together, they-are-intertwined | es: están-entrelazados, se-entrelazan | fr: [ישתרגן], ישרגו | de: [ישרגן], [ישתרגן] Job 40:17; Lam 1:14

שָׂרַד H8277 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (1×)

escape, survive, get away

This verb describes escaping from danger or surviving destruction, appearing in Joshua's account of the conquest of the five Amorite kings. After Israel's great slaughter of enemy forces, the few who survived 'escaped' to fortified cities for refuge. The root conveys the sense of fleeing or slipping away from destruction, managing to survive when most perished. Cognate languages suggest connotations of being startled and fleeing in terror, running away like a frightened animal. The term captures both the act of escape and the survivor's status among the fallen.

(1×) Joshua 10:20 describes how after Israel's massive slaughter of the Amorite armies, 'those who survived' managed to reach their fortified cities. The English and Spanish translations ('survived,' sobrevivieron) emphasize the outcome—making it through the destruction alive. The context highlights the completeness of Israel's victory, with only remnants escaping to walled cities while the majority fell in battle. FLEEING AND ESCAPING

en: survived | es: sobrevivieron | fr: survived | de: ueberlebte Josh 10:20

שָׂרָד H8278 N-ms (4×)

plaited/woven work; specially woven or braided priestly garments for tabernacle service, perhaps of distinctive craftsmanship

This noun appears only in Exodus in Priestly material, referring to special woven or plaited garments for tabernacle service. It always appears in the phrase 'the woven garments for ministering in the holy place' or similar (Exodus 31:10, 35:19, 39:1, 41). The exact nature of this weaving is uncertain—some translations understand 'finely woven garments,' others 'plaited work.' The multilingual glosses show variation (Spanish servicio 'service', French tissé-travail 'woven-work', German Dienst 'service'), suggesting translators struggled with the term. The Septuagint renders it 'liturgical robes.' These garments were distinct from ordinary priestly clothes, specially crafted for sacred service—their very fabric woven with intentionality for ministry in God's presence.

(4×) Special woven or plaited garments for tabernacle service (Exod 31:10, 35:19, 39:1, 41). The exact weaving technique is uncertain—possibly fine-woven, braided, or plaited fabric. Always associated with 'ministering in the holy place,' these were priestly vestments of distinctive craftsmanship. Ancient translators showed uncertainty (LXX 'liturgical robes'), but clearly understood these as sacred service garments. The specialized weaving itself became part of the holiness—not just any fabric but cloth crafted specifically for standing before God. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-service, the-woven-work, woven-work | es: el-servicio, servicio | fr: le-service, le-tissé-travail, tissé-travail | de: der-Dienst, der-gewebt-Werk, gewebt-Werk Exod 31:10; Exod 35:19; Exod 39:1; Exod 39:41

שֶׂרֶד H8279 Prep-b (1×)

stylus, marking tool (for working wood)

This rare noun denotes a marking tool or stylus used in woodworking, appearing in Isaiah's satire of idol-making. The craftsman uses this tool to mark out or design the wooden figure before carving it. Ancient versions suggest it was an engraving or marking implement, possibly related to the precious stone sardius (used in gem-cutting), though the connection is uncertain. The term represents the technical vocabulary of craftsmanship, highlighting the ironic process by which humans create gods with simple tools—marking, measuring, and shaping dead wood into objects of worship.

(1×) Isaiah 44:13 describes the carpenter who 'marks it out with a stylus,' part of the detailed satire of idol-making that emphasizes the absurdity of worshiping what human hands craft from ordinary materials. Spanish translates 'with pencil,' capturing the marking function. The stylus represents the planning stage of idol-making, where the craftsman designs on wood the figure he will worship—underscoring the human origin of supposedly divine objects. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: with-a-stylus | es: con-lápiz | fr: [בשרד] | de: [בשרד] Isa 44:13

שָׂרָה H8280 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (2×)

To persist, persevere, contend, strive (especially in struggle with God or humans)

This verb means to persist in struggle or exert oneself in contention. Genesis 32:28 explains Jacob's new name Israel: 'you have striven with God and with humans and have prevailed'—the verb capturing his tenacious wrestling with the divine messenger. Hosea 12:3 recalls the same event: 'he strove with God,' referring back to the Jabbok encounter. The root connects to Arabic words for persistence and perseverance, emphasizing determined endurance in conflict rather than casual disagreement.

(2×) Persistent struggle or contention, particularly the determined striving that characterized Jacob's wrestling match at Peniel. Both passages recall this foundational event where physical struggle became the basis for a name and national identity. Spanish 'luchar' (struggle/wrestle) and 'luchó' (he struggled) capture the combat dimension, as do English glosses with 'striven' and 'wrestled.' The domain assignment to Physical Action > Contests and Play reflects the wrestling context, though the theological significance extends beyond mere sport. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9286 WITH 3 SENSES

en: he-wrestled, you-have-striven | es: luchaste, luchó | fr: combattre, tu-avoir-striven | de: [שרה], du-hast-gestritten Gen 32:28; Hos 12:3

שָׂרָה H8281 V-Piel-Perf-1cs / 2ms (1×)

loosen, set free, release from bonds

This verb means to loosen, release, or set free from constraint. The root appears in contexts of physical liberation or, metaphorically, of God releasing forces like thunder. In Jeremiah 15:11, the verb appears in a textually difficult passage where God promises to 'free' or 'strengthen' Jeremiah (the Hebrew text has variant readings). The basic sense involves undoing bindings or constraints, whether literal ropes or figurative restrictions. Cognate languages support meanings of loosing, releasing, and even the sense of dedicating or opening something for use.

(1×) Jeremiah 15:11 contains textual difficulties, with the written (Ketiv) and read (Qere) texts differing. The Qere suggests 'I will set you free' or 'loose you,' while interpretations vary between liberation and strengthening. Spanish offers 'I freed you,' following the liberation sense, while French and German leave it transliterated, acknowledging the textual uncertainty. The broader context of God's promise to Jeremiah supports either nuance—whether freed from opposition or strengthened for his prophetic mission. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: I-loosed-you | es: (te-libré) | fr: [(שריתיך)] | de: [(שריתיך)] Jer 15:11

שָׂרָה H8282 N-fpc (5×)

princess, noblewoman; a woman of royal or aristocratic rank

The feminine counterpart to 'sar' (prince/ruler), denoting women of royal or noble standing. Solomon's seven hundred princesses-wives (1 Kgs 11:3) and the attending ladies of Sisera's mother (Judg 5:29) illustrate literal nobility, while Isaiah envisions foreign queens nursing Israel's children (Isa 49:23). In Lamentations 1:1, Jerusalem herself — once a 'princess among provinces' — sits desolate. Spanish 'princesas/señora' and French 'princesse' confirm the consistent high-status referent across all five occurrences.

(5×) A princess or noblewoman, a woman belonging to the ruling class. The term appears for the ladies attending Sisera's mother (Judg 5:29), Solomon's royal wives (1 Kgs 11:3), Persian noblewomen (Esth 1:18), and foreign queens in Isaiah's restoration vision (Isa 49:23). In Lam 1:1, Jerusalem is personified as a princess reduced to servitude. Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'princesas,' French 'princesse' — uniformly reflect this aristocratic sense. QUEEN RULER

en: and-their-princesses, her-princesses, noblewomen-of | es: princesas, princesas-de, señora-entre | fr: [שרות], et-princesse, princesse | de: [ושרותיהם], [שרות], [שרתי] Judg 5:29; 1Kgs 11:3; Esth 1:18; Isa 49:23; Lam 1:1

שָׂרָה H8283 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (38×)

Sarah — wife of Abraham and mother of Isaac, the matriarch whose name means 'princess'

Sarah is the name of Israel's first matriarch, appearing 38 times from Genesis 17 through 49 and once in Isaiah 51:2. Originally called Sarai, her name was changed by God to Sarah ('princess') at the same covenant moment when Abram became Abraham (Gen 17:15). The renaming signals her elevated role: she will bear a son and become 'a mother of nations; kings of peoples shall come from her' (Gen 17:16). Sarah's story is marked by both laughter and barrenness — she laughs at the promise of a child in old age (Gen 18:12), then names the son of fulfillment Yitschaq ('he laughs,' Gen 21:3, 6). Her death at 127 years and burial in the cave of Machpelah (Gen 23:1-2, 19) occasions the first recorded land purchase in Israel's story. Isaiah invokes her memory to encourage the exiles: 'look to Sarah who bore you' (Isa 51:2).

Sarah (personal name) (38×) The proper feminine name Sarah ('princess'), identifying the wife of Abraham and mother of Isaac. All 38 occurrences refer to this single individual across the Abrahamic narrative cycle (Gen 17-25) and Isaiah's exilic encouragement (51:2). The name change from Sarai to Sarah (Gen 17:15) functions as a divine re-commissioning parallel to Abraham's own renaming. Key episodes cluster around the promise and birth of Isaac (Gen 17:19; 18:6-15; 21:1-7), encounters with foreign rulers (Gen 20:2-18), and her death and burial (Gen 23:1-2, 19; 25:10; 49:31). Translations consistently transliterate: Greek Sarra, Spanish 'Sara,' French 'Sara,' German 'Sara.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sarah | es: Sarah | fr: Sara | de: Sara, Saras, ist-Sara Gen 17:15; Gen 17:17; Gen 17:19; Gen 17:21; Gen 18:6

שׂוֹרָה H8284 Prep-b / N-fpc / 3fs (1×)

rows, vine-rows (agricultural term)

This feminine noun describes rows of cultivated plants, particularly olive trees or grapevines planted in organized lines for agricultural production. The term appears in Job's critique of the wicked who oppress workers laboring among the olive rows, and possibly in Jeremiah's judgment oracle about invading Israel's vine-rows. The word represents agricultural organization—the careful arrangement of perennial crops in parallel rows for efficient cultivation and harvest. It evokes the ordered vineyard or olive grove, where workers toiled between the rows but enjoyed none of the fruit.

(1×) The evidence shows uncertainty about this term's precise reference. Job 24:11 likely describes workers who 'make oil among the rows' of olive trees, while Jeremiah 5:10 possibly refers to enemy forces invading 'among her vine-rows' (if the text is emended). Spanish translates 'to her walls,' showing the interpretive difficulty. The agricultural sense of organized plant rows seems clear from comparative evidence, though the specific crop varies by context. VINEYARD CULTIVATION

en: against-her-vine-rows | es: a-sus-muros | fr: [בשרותיה] | de: [בשרותיה] Jer 5:10

שֵׂרָה H8285 Conj-w (1×)

bracelets, ornamental arm bands

This feminine noun denotes bracelets or ornamental bands worn on the arms or wrists, appearing in Isaiah's catalogue of women's finery. These were jewelry items that displayed wealth and fashion, part of the elaborate ornamentation worn by Jerusalem's elite women. The term may relate to roots suggesting chains or binding, as bracelets encircle the arm. In ancient Near Eastern culture, such jewelry carried social significance—indicating status, wealth, and marriage-ability. Isaiah's list condemns not the jewelry itself but the pride and luxury-seeking it represents in a society neglecting justice.

(1×) Isaiah 3:19 includes 'the bracelets' in an extensive list of luxury items God will remove from Jerusalem's proud women in judgment. Spanish translates 'the bracelets' (las pulseras), confirming the jewelry identification. The list encompasses earrings, nose rings, robes, perfumes, and multiple ornamental items—all symbols of the women's privileged status that Isaiah declares will be stripped away, replaced by shame and mourning. BRACELET ARMLET

en: and-the-bracelets | es: y-las-pulseras | fr: [והשירות] | de: [והשירות] Isa 3:19

שְׂרוּג H8286 N-proper-ms (5×)

Serug; a descendant of Peleg and ancestor of Abraham in the patriarchal genealogy

Serug is a proper name in the genealogy linking Shem to Abraham. He appears as the son of Reu and father of Nahor in Genesis 11:20-23, and again in the Chronicler's compressed lineage (1 Chr 1:26). The name possibly derives from a root meaning 'branch' or 'tendril,' and the LXX renders it as Serouch. All translations — English, Spanish, French, and German — consistently transliterate the name as 'Serug,' reflecting its stable transmission across manuscript traditions.

(5×) The personal name Serug, a patriarch in the line from Shem to Abraham. All five occurrences appear in genealogical lists: four in the Toledoth of Shem (Gen 11:20-23) and one in the Chronicler's summary (1 Chr 1:26). The LXX form Serouch and uniform transliteration across English, Spanish, French, and German as 'Serug' attest to the name's stable transmission. Possibly related to a root meaning 'branch' or 'shoot.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Serug | es: Serug | fr: Serug, [שרוג] | de: Serug, [שרוג] Gen 11:20; Gen 11:21; Gen 11:22; Gen 11:23; 1Chr 1:26

שָׁרוּחֶן H8287 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Sharuhen (place name: city in Simeon's territory)

Sharuhen was a city allotted to the tribe of Simeon within Judah's territory, mentioned in the boundary descriptions of Joshua 19. The location is uncertain, though some scholars identify it with an Egyptian site name Sha-ru-ha-na. The Septuagint's unusual rendering ('their fields') may reflect textual confusion or an alternative reading. Like many Simeonite settlements, Sharuhen was located in the Negev region of southern Judah. The city represents one of the towns Simeon inherited when their tribal allotment was carved from Judah's portion, since 'Judah's portion was too large for them.'

(1×) Joshua 19:6 lists Sharuhen among the thirteen cities given to Simeon. English and Spanish simply transliterate the name (Sharuhén), while French follows suit. The city appears in a list alongside Bethlehem, Hormah, and other southern settlements. Some scholars connect this site with Shilhim (Joshua 15:32) or Shaaraim (1 Chronicles 4:31), suggesting these may be variant names for the same location. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Sharuchen | es: y-Saruhén | fr: et-Sharuchen | de: und-Sharuchen Josh 19:6

שְׂרוֹךְ H8288 N-msc (2×)

Sandal thong, strap, lace (the cord or leather strip securing a sandal)

This term denotes the thong or strap of a sandal, the cord used to fasten footwear. Genesis 14:23 records Abram's vow that he would not take 'even a sandal-thong' from the king of Sodom—proverbial language for refusing the smallest item. Isaiah 5:27 describes an unstoppable army: 'none has a sandal-strap broken,' indicating perfect readiness and equipment. The term emphasizes the most minimal component of footwear, making it effective for expressing totality (nothing, not even the smallest thing) or completeness (everything intact, even the smallest detail).

(2×) The fastening element of a sandal, functioning idiomatically to represent something minimal or trivial. Both passages use it to emphasize completeness: Abram refuses even the tiniest item, while Isaiah's invaders lack not even the smallest equipment failure. Spanish distinguishes 'cordón' (cord/lace) and 'correa' (strap), both appropriate for sandal fastenings. The construct form 'thong of a sandal' is the typical Hebrew expression. The term's proverbial use makes it more significant than its small physical size suggests. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: strap-of | es: cordón-de, correa-de | fr: [שרוך], strap-de | de: [שרוך], zum-Riemen- Gen 14:23; Isa 5:27

שָׁרוֹן H8289 Prep-b (7×)

Sharon — the fertile coastal plain along the Mediterranean, celebrated for its beauty and pastureland

Sharon designates the broad, fertile plain stretching along Israel's Mediterranean coast, roughly from Joppa northward toward Mount Carmel. Renowned for its lush vegetation, it appears in prophetic poetry as a symbol of natural splendor: 'the majesty of Carmel and Sharon' (Isa 35:2) and 'Sharon shall be a pasture for flocks' (Isa 65:10). Its devastation becomes an image of divine judgment — 'Sharon is like a wilderness' (Isa 33:9). The 'rose of Sharon' in Song 2:1 has become one of Scripture's most famous botanical images. Spanish 'Saron' and English 'Sharon' preserve this beloved place name with remarkable consistency.

Sharon (place name) (7×) The proper noun Sharon, identifying the fertile maritime plain along Israel's Mediterranean coast, famed for its rich pastureland and natural beauty. It appears in royal administrative contexts (1 Chr 5:16; 27:29, where cattle grazed in Sharon), in the beloved poetic image of the 'rose of Sharon' (Song 2:1), and prominently in prophetic oracles contrasting its flourishing (Isa 35:2) with its desolation under judgment (Isa 33:9). Isaiah 65:10 envisions its eschatological restoration as a pasture for flocks. Spanish 'Saron/Saron' and French renderings confirm this single geographic referent across all seven occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Sharon, and-Sharon, in-the-Sharon | es: Saron, Sarón, del-Sharón | fr: [בשרון], [השרון], [והשרון] | de: [בשרון], [השרון], [והשרון] Josh 12:18; 1Chr 5:16; 1Chr 27:29; Song 2:1; Isa 33:9

שָׁרוֹנִי H8290 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Sharonite (gentilic: person from Sharon region)

This gentilic adjective identifies someone as being from Sharon, the fertile coastal plain between Joppa and Mount Carmel. The term appears in 1 Chronicles 27:29 in reference to Shitrai the Sharonite, who supervised David's cattle that grazed in Sharon. The Sharon plain was renowned for its fertility and pasturage, making it ideal for livestock. The designation 'Sharonite' indicates geographic origin and possibly suggests expertise in managing herds in that rich pastoral region. The plain of Sharon's beauty and fruitfulness made it a biblical image of splendor and divine blessing.

(1×) The designation 'the Sharonite' (1 Chronicles 27:29) identifies Shitrai as a man from the Sharon region who oversaw the king's herds pasturing in that fertile plain. Spanish renders this as 'the Saronite,' following the transliteration pattern. The context shows David's sophisticated administration, with different officials managing herds in different regions—Shitrai handling the Sharon cattle while another managed those in the valleys. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Sharonite | es: el-saronita | fr: [השרוני] | de: [השרוני] 1Chr 27:29

שֹׂרֵק H8291 Adj-mpc / 3fs (1×)

choice branches, vine tendrils (of grapevines)

This masculine plural noun refers to the choice branches or tendrils of grapevines, appearing in Isaiah's lament over Moab's destroyed vineyards. These branches represent the productive, fruit-bearing parts of the vine that spread outward, or possibly the choice clusters that hang from them. The term may derive from the red color of ripened grapes or autumn leaves. In Isaiah 16:8, the 'choice branches' of Heshbon's vines once reached far and spread out abundantly, symbolizing Moab's agricultural prosperity. Their breaking represents economic and national devastation.

(1×) Isaiah 16:8 mourns that 'its choice branches' have been broken —referring to the famous vines of Heshbon whose branches once reached to Jazer and spread across the desert, even crossing the sea. Spanish translates 'its tendrils' (sus sarmientos), emphasizing the vine-branches. The image captures agricultural destruction: the spreading, productive branches that once testified to Moab's wealth now lie broken and trampled by conquerors. VINEYARD CULTIVATION

en: its-choice-branches | es: sus-sarmientos | fr: [שרוקיה] | de: [שרוקיה] Isa 16:8

שְׁרִיקָה H8292 N-fpc (3×)

hissing, whistling (signal for flocks or sound of derision)

This feminine plural noun denotes sounds of hissing or whistling, appearing in two contrasting contexts. Judges 5:16 uses it for the 'whistlings' or 'pipings' for the flocks—shepherd signals to guide sheep (perhaps explaining why Reuben stayed among the sheepfolds instead of fighting). Jeremiah 18:16 employs it for sounds of derision: Jerusalem will become a desolation and 'hissing' (the Ketiv-Qere variation suggests textual uncertainty). The word can describe either a functional signal (whistling to animals) or a contemptuous sound (hissing at ruins), with context determining the sense.

(3×) Whistling or hissing sounds with dual functions. Judges 5:16 asks why Reuben sat 'among the pipings/whistlings of the flocks'— shepherd calls to sheep, perhaps suggesting pastoral peace versus battle urgency. Jeremiah 18:16 (with Ketiv-Qere variants) warns that the land will become an object of 'hissing'—contemptuous sounds made at ruins. The multilingual glosses ('silbidos,' 'pipings,' 'hissings') preserve this dual possibility: functional shepherding signals or derisive sounds. The semantic range extends from pastoral care to prophetic judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-pipings-of, [K], hissings-of | es: (silbidos), [silbido], silbidos-de | fr: -le-pipings-de, [(שריקות)], [[שרוקת]] | de: -der-pipings-von, [(שריקות)], [[שרוקת]] Judg 5:16; Jer 18:16

שְׂרָה H8293 V-Qal-Perf-1cs / 2ms (1×)

K reading uncertain: possibly 'I vexed/troubled you' or scribal variant

This entry represents the Ketiv (written) text of Jeremiah 15:11, which differs from the Qere (read) text. The written form appears to come from a root meaning to vex, trouble, or possibly to strengthen, but the textual transmission is disputed. The Ketiv suggests 'I vexed you' or 'I ruled/strengthened you,' while the Qere reads 'I freed you.' Most English translations follow the Qere or emend the text. The variant reflects scribal uncertainty about a difficult prophetic oracle where God assures Jeremiah of divine intervention. The confusion highlights the challenges of preserving ancient Hebrew texts through centuries of hand-copying.

(1×) The Spanish translation offers 'I freed you' (following Qere), while French and German leave it untranslated in Hebrew brackets, acknowledging the textual problem. The context involves God's promise to Jeremiah regarding his prophetic mission and the treatment he would receive from enemies. The Ketiv may represent an early textual error or an alternative tradition, but most interpreters follow the Qere reading that promises liberation rather than affliction. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12467 WITH 7 SENSES

en: [K] | es: [te-libré] | fr: [[שרותך]] | de: [[שרותך]] Jer 15:11

שַׂרַח H8294 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Serah (personal name: daughter of Asher)

Serah was the daughter of Asher and the only woman listed among those who went down to Egypt with Jacob (Genesis 46:17). She appears in the wilderness census as still living among Asher's clans (Numbers 26:46), and again in Chronicles' genealogy (1 Chronicles 7:30). Her inclusion is remarkable given the patriarchal focus of these lists. Later Jewish tradition elaborated her story extensively, making her immortal and a link between generations. The name may relate to Sabaean parallels found in South Arabian inscriptions. The Greek versions show standard variation in rendering the name.

(3×) Personal name of Asher's daughter, uniquely preserved in genealogical lists. Genesis 46:17 names Serah among Jacob's household who migrated to Egypt—one of very few women in the roster. Numbers 26:46 mentions her again in the wilderness census of Asherite clans. 1 Chronicles 7:30 repeats her in Asher's genealogy. Her persistent appearance across sources (despite genealogies' usual male focus) marks her as significant, though the biblical text provides no narrative about her beyond her name and lineage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Serah, and-Serach, and-Serah | es: Sera, y-Seraj, y-Séraj | fr: Serah, [ושרח], et-Serah | de: Serah, [ושרח], und-Serach Gen 46:17; Num 26:46; 1Chr 7:30

שָׂרַט H8295 V-Nifal-Imperf-3mp (3×)

incise, scratch, cut (make marks on skin)

This verb means to make incisions, scratches, or cuts, typically in the skin. Leviticus 21:5 uses it in prohibiting priests from making 'cuttings' (incisions) in their flesh as mourning rites—typical pagan practices forbidden to Israelite clergy. Zechariah 12:3 shifts to metaphorical usage: those who burden themselves with the stone of Jerusalem 'will be severely scratched/lacerated'—injured by the attempt. The root relates to Aramaic and Akkadian words for slitting, rending, or marking. The Qal and Niphal forms both appear, with the Niphal in Zechariah emphasizing the passive reception of injury.

(3×) Make incisions or cuts in the flesh, or be cut/lacerated. Leviticus 21:5 prohibits priests from making 'cutting in their flesh'—ritual self-laceration associated with mourning rites banned under Mosaic law. Zechariah 12:3 (using doubled forms for intensity: 'cutting they shall be cut') warns that nations attempting to move Jerusalem 'will be severely lacerated'—injured by the burden. The multilingual glosses ('harán,' 'rasgarse,' 'cutting,' 'will be cut') confirm both the active sense (making incisions) and passive (being wounded), with contexts ranging from ritual prohibition to metaphorical injury. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: cutting, they-shall-make, will-be-cut | es: harán, rasgarse, se-rasgarán | fr: Séraphim, ils-devra-faire | de: [ישרטו], [שרוט], sie-soll-machen Lev 21:5; Zech 12:3

שֶׂרֶט H8296a Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

incision, cut, gash (in flesh)

This masculine noun denotes a deliberate cut or incision made in flesh, appearing in Levitical laws prohibiting pagan mourning practices. Leviticus 19:28 forbids making 'cuts in your flesh for the dead,' referring to the ancient Near Eastern custom of ritual self-laceration during mourning or religious devotion. These incisions were marks of grief or cultic identification, common among Israel's neighbors but prohibited in Torah as incompatible with covenant identity. The practice suggested that the body could be manipulated to appease gods or honor the dead, conflicting with Israel's understanding of the body as God's creation.

(1×) The prohibition 'you shall not make a cutting in your flesh' (Leviticus 19:28) uses this term for the ritual gashes forbidden to Israelites. English and Spanish translate as 'cutting' or 'incision,' capturing the deliberate act of slashing flesh. The context pairs this prohibition with tattoos, both representing permanent body modifications associated with pagan religious practices. The law establishes the body's sanctity and Israel's distinctiveness from surrounding peoples. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: and-cutting | es: Y-incisión | fr: et-cutting | de: und-cutting Lev 19:28

שְׂרֶטֶת H8296b N-fs (1×)

incision, cut, gash (variant form)

This feminine form serves as a variant of the previous entry, denoting the same practice of ritual cutting or self-laceration. It appears in Leviticus 21:5 in priestly regulations specifically prohibiting priests from making 'cuts in their flesh' as part of mourning practices. While the general Israelite population faced this prohibition in Leviticus 19, the repetition for priests emphasizes their special sanctity and the importance of avoiding pagan-influenced mourning customs. The term describes the same incisions or gashes cut into flesh during mourning, practices firmly rejected in Israel's holiness code.

(1×) Leviticus 21:5 specifically commands priests not to 'make cuts in their flesh,' using this variant form of the incision term. English and Spanish translate as 'a cut' or 'incision,' identical to the previous entry's meaning. The priestly code's special attention to this prohibition reflects the heightened holiness requirements for those serving in the sanctuary, where bodily integrity and separation from pagan mourning customs was especially crucial. ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: a-cut | es: incisión | fr: une-coupure | de: ein-schnitt Lev 21:5

שָׂרַי H8297 N-proper-fs (17×)

Sarai; original name of Abraham's wife before God renamed her Sarah ('princess').

The name Sarai designates Abraham's wife in the earlier chapters of her story, before God changes it to Sarah in Genesis 17:15 as part of the covenant promise that she will bear a son and become the mother of nations. All seventeen occurrences fall within Genesis 11-17, tracing her journey from Ur (11:29-31), through the sojourn in Egypt (12:11, 17), the tension with Hagar (16:1-8), and finally the moment of renaming. The Septuagint renders it as Sara throughout, while the Vulgate preserves the distinction between Sarai and Sara.

Sarai (17×) The personal name of Abram's wife prior to her divinely appointed renaming to Sarah ('princess') in Genesis 17:15. All occurrences cluster in Genesis 11-17: her introduction as Abram's barren wife in Ur (Gen 11:29-31), the journey to Canaan (Gen 12:5), the episode in Egypt (Gen 12:11, 17), and the Hagar narrative (Gen 16:1-8). The name change marks the covenant promise of a son and of nations descending from her. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Sarai, and-Sarai | es: Sarai, Y-Sarai | fr: Saraï, et-Saraï | de: Saraj, Sarajs, und-Saraj Gen 11:29; Gen 11:30; Gen 11:31; Gen 12:5; Gen 12:11

שָׁרָי H8298 N-proper-ms (1×)
Sharai (personal name of a man with a foreign wife during Ezra's reforms)
Sharai appears among the list of Israelite men who had married foreign women during the exile and agreed to divorce them during Ezra's reforms. The name occurs in Ezra 10:40 in the catalogue of those who had intermarried contrary to the law's prohibition. The Greek versions offer various transliterations (Sariou, Saroue, Saroua) showing uncertainty in vocalization. Like others in this list, Sharai represents the postexilic community's struggle with maintaining ethnic and religious boundaries, ultimately yielding to the demand for separation from foreign wives to preserve covenant faithfulness.

(1×) Ezra 10:40 lists Sharai among approximately 110 men identified as having foreign wives whom they agreed to send away. Most translations simply transliterate the name. The inclusion in this list marks Sharai as part of the community that responded to Ezra's call for repentance, though the personal cost of dissolving marriages and separating from children made this one of the Bible's most ethically troubling reform movements. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Sharay | es: Sharai | fr: [שרי] | de: Fuersten-von Ezra 10:40

שָׂרִיג H8299 Art / N-mp (3×)
tendrils, branches (offshoots of vine or fig tree)
This masculine plural noun denotes the tendrils or branches of grapevines and fig trees—the flexible offshoots that bear fruit. Genesis 40:10 and 40:12 use it in Pharaoh's cupbearer's dream where he sees a vine with three 'branches' budding and blossoming, then bearing grapes. Joel 1:7 laments the locust devastation that stripped 'the branches' of the fig tree white. The root relates to interlacing or braiding (cognate to Arabic terms for braided palm-leaves), capturing the intertwined character of vine branches. The term emphasizes the productive, fruit-bearing parts of the plant rather than the main trunk.

(3×) Tendrils or branches of vines and fruit trees. Genesis 40:10 describes a vine with three 'branches' in the cupbearer's dream. Genesis 40:12 interprets the three branches as three days. Joel 1:7 mourns that locusts have stripped 'its branches'—the fig tree's fruit-bearing limbs laid bare and white. The multilingual glosses ('sarmientos,' 'ramas,' 'branches,' 'sarment') confirm this denotes the offshoots and tendrils where fruit forms, not the main trunk. The botanical specificity (vine/fig branches, not tree limbs generally) fits the agricultural contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: branches, its-branches, the-branches | es: los-sarmientos, ramas-de-ella, sarmientos | fr: branches, le-branches, sarment | de: Ranken, [שריגיה] Gen 40:10; Gen 40:12; Joel 1:7

שָׂרִיד H8300 Conj-w / N-ms (29×)
survivor, one who remains — a person left alive after military defeat, disaster, or divine judgment Sarid denotes a survivor or remnant individual who has escaped destruction, appearing 29 times predominantly in conquest and judgment narratives. The word carries a grim military edge: its most characteristic setting is the formulaic annihilation notice 'until no survivor was left,' repeated throughout the Deuteronomistic account of Israel's wars against Sihon (Num 21:35; Deut 2:34; 3:3), the Canaanite kings (Josh 10:28-40; 11:8), and later enemies (2 Kgs 10:11). In prophetic literature, the absence or presence of a sarid becomes a measure of divine judgment: YHWH left Israel a sarid 'like Sodom' (Isa 1:9), and Obadiah warns that 'there shall be no survivor for the house of Esau' (Obad 18). Jeremiah threatens the same for those fleeing to Egypt (Jer 42:17; 44:14). Joel transforms the image redemptively: 'among the survivors whom YHWH calls' (Joel 2:32). Spanish 'sobreviviente' and French 'survivant' capture the concept directly.

survivor, one who remains (29×) A person who survives military destruction or divine judgment, often paired with palit ('fugitive, escapee'). Dominates the conquest formula 'until no survivor remained' in Deuteronomy and Joshua (Num 21:35; Deut 2:34; Josh 10:28-40). Prophetically, the presence of a sarid signals God's mercy — Isaiah's remnant spared from Sodom's fate (Isa 1:9), Joel's survivors whom YHWH calls (Joel 2:32) — while its absence signals total judgment (Obad 18; Jer 42:17; 44:14). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-survivor, for-the-survivor, is-left | es: el-sobreviviente, ni-sobreviviente, sobreviviente | fr: et-survivant, survivant, survivor | de: [ושריד], [שריד], ein-survivor Num 21:35; Num 24:19; Deut 2:34; Deut 3:3; Josh 8:22

שָׂרִיד H8301 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)
Sarid, a border town of Zebulun's tribal allotment in Joshua's boundary descriptions
Sarid marks a point on the boundary of Zebulun's inheritance in the land distribution. Joshua 19:10 begins Zebulun's border description 'as far as Sarid,' while verse 12 describes the border turning 'from Sarid' eastward. The two occurrences trace the boundary line as it reaches and then departs from this location. The Septuagint shows textual variation (Esedekgola, Sarthid, Sareid), typical for geographical names. The site's identification remains uncertain despite its prominence in the boundary description.

(2×) A border town defining Zebulun's western boundary in the tribal allotment system. The prepositional phrases ('as far as,' 'from') show how boundary descriptions used landmarks to trace territorial limits. Spanish renders both directional senses: 'Sarid' and 'desde Sarid' (from Sarid). The repetition in consecutive verses reflects the methodology of ancient boundary surveys, which moved from point to point around a territory's perimeter. The town's archaeological identification remains debated. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Sarid, from-Sarid | es: Sarid, desde-Sarid | fr: Sarid, de-Sarid | de: Sarid, von-Sarid Josh 19:10; Josh 19:12

שְׂרִיָּה H8302a Conj-w / N-fs (1×)
javelin, lance, or possibly coat of armor (weapon or protective gear)
This feminine noun appears in Job's description of Leviathan's invincibility, listing weapons that cannot pierce the creature. The term likely denotes either a javelin or lance (a throwing or thrusting spear), or possibly body armor (corselet or breastplate), based on variant manuscript traditions. The Hebrew text suggests a weapon in a list including sword, spear, and dart, but the Greek and Latin versions read 'breastplate,' suggesting a different vocalization. Either reading emphasizes Leviathan's imperviousness—whether weapons bounce off or armor proves useless against him.

(1×) Job 41:26 declares that various weapons—sword, spear, dart, 'and javelin'—cannot make Leviathan flee. Spanish translates 'coat of armor' (coraza), following the Vulgate's reading, while French and German leave it untranslated. The context emphasizes Leviathan's supremacy over human military technology: conventional weapons that work against normal creatures prove worthless against this symbol of untamable chaos. SPEAR LANCE JAVELIN
en: and-a-javelin | es: y-coraza | fr: et-שריה | de: [ושריה] Job 41:26

שִׁרְיוֹן H8302b Conj-w (8×)

A coat of mail or breastplate; body armor made of metal scales or links worn to protect the torso in battle.

Refers to the protective body armor covering a warrior's torso, typically constructed from overlapping metal scales or linked plates. The word first appears in the vivid description of Goliath's equipment: his coat of mail weighed five thousand shekels of bronze and was made of fish-scale plates (1 Sam 17:5). Saul attempted to dress David in similar armor before the famous duel (1 Sam 17:38). In 1 Kings 22:34 an arrow fatally penetrates 'between the joints of the armor,' revealing the garment's vulnerable gaps. Isaiah 59:17 applies the image metaphorically, depicting God donning righteousness as a breastplate. The Romance translations capture the sense well—Spanish 'coraza' and French equivalents both denote a cuirass or breastplate.

coat of mail, breastplate, armor (8×) A masculine noun denoting body armor for the torso, specifically a coat of mail or breastplate made of interlocking metal components. The fullest physical description appears in 1 Samuel 17:5, where Goliath's armor is made of 'scales' (qasqasim) of bronze, evoking fish-scale lamellar construction. The same word describes Saul's armor offered to David (1 Sam 17:38), the armor pierced by a fateful arrow at Ramoth-Gilead (1 Kgs 22:34 = 2 Chr 18:33), equipment issued to Uzziah's army (2 Chr 26:14), and the arms borne by Nehemiah's wall-builders (Neh 4:10). Isaiah 59:17 transforms the image into theological metaphor, with God clothing himself in righteousness as a breastplate. Spanish 'coraza' and English 'coat of mail' both reflect the protective, torso-covering function. ARMOR BREASTPLATE

en: and-coat-of-mail, and-coats-of-mail, and-the-armor | es: como-coraza, coraza, la-coraza | fr: [השרין], [והשרינים], [ושרינות] | de: [השרין], [והשרינים], [ושרינות] 1Sam 17:5; 1Sam 17:38; 1Kgs 22:34; 2Chr 18:33

שִׂרְיֹן H8303 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Sirion, the Sidonian name for Mount Hermon mentioned in Deuteronomy and Psalms

Sirion was the Phoenician/Sidonian name for Mount Hermon, the prominent peak on Israel's northern border. Deuteronomy 3:9 explicitly states: 'the Sidonians call Hermon Sirion,' preserving ancient geographical knowledge of regional name variations. Psalm 29:6 pairs 'Lebanon and Sirion' in describing the voice of the Lord making mountains skip, using the Phoenician name poetically. The Assyrian records mention 'Sirara' for the same mountain, confirming the name's usage beyond Israel.

(2×) The Phoenician designation for Mount Hermon, representing how different cultural groups named the same geographical feature. Deuteronomy's explanation provides ethnographic information about regional naming practices, while Psalm 29 employs the foreign name for poetic effect, possibly reflecting northern Canaanite psalm traditions adapted for Israelite worship. The glosses consistently transliterate 'Sirion' across languages, recognizing it as a proper name. This alternate naming highlights the cultural diversity of ancient Syria-Palestine. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Sirion, and-Sirion | es: Sirión, y-Sirión | fr: Sirion, et-Siriôn | de: Sirion, und-Sirion Deut 3:9; Ps 29:6

שְׂרָיָה H8304 N-proper-ms (20×)

Serayah — a personal name borne by priests, military officers, scribes, and clan leaders across the OT.

A proper name meaning something like 'Yah persists' or 'Yah strives,' carried by at least ten distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The most prominent is the chief priest executed by Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah after Jerusalem's fall (2 Kgs 25:18; Jer 52:24). Another is David's royal secretary, whose name appears in variant spellings across the parallel accounts — Sheva, Shavsha, Shisha — suggesting scribal transmission challenges. The name also appears in postexilic genealogies linking to Ezra the scribe (Ezr 7:1), among sealed covenant signatories (Neh 10:3), and in tribal genealogies for Judah and Simeon.

Serayah (personal name) (20×) The personal name Serayah (שְׂרָיָה), borne by multiple OT figures including David's secretary (2 Sam 8:17, with variants Sheva/Shavsha/Shisha in parallel texts), the chief priest at Jerusalem's destruction (2 Kgs 25:18; Jer 52:24), a military captain under Gedaliah (2 Kgs 25:23), and ancestors in the priestly line leading to Ezra (Ezr 7:1). Multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name, confirming it functions as a proper noun throughout. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Seraiah, Serayah, Serayahu | es: Seraya, Serayah, Serayahu | fr: Seraja, Serayah, et-Seraiah | de: Serayah, [ושריה], [לשריה] 2Sam 8:17; 2Kgs 25:18; 2Kgs 25:23; 1Chr 4:13; 1Chr 4:14

שָׂרִיק H8305 N-fp (1×)

combed, carded (processed flax ready for weaving)

This feminine plural adjective describes flax that has been combed or carded—processed through the preparatory stages of separating and aligning the fibers for spinning and weaving. Isaiah uses the term in his judgment oracle against Egypt, where workers in 'combed flax' will be dismayed when Egypt's economic infrastructure collapses. The word captures a specific stage in textile production, after the flax has been retted and broken but before spinning. It represents skilled labor and a significant sector of Egypt's economy, which depended on linen production. The combed flax workers' dismay symbolizes Egypt's comprehensive economic devastation.

(1×) Isaiah 19:9 prophesies that 'workers in combed flax' will be in despair when Egypt's Nile-based economy fails. Spanish translates 'combed,' capturing the textile-processing sense, while French and German leave it untranslated, perhaps due to the technical specificity. The image is of Egypt's linen industry—from flax cultivation through processing to weaving—collapsing when divine judgment strikes, leaving specialized craftspeople without livelihood. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: combed | es: peinado | fr: [שריקות] | de: [שריקות] Isa 19:9

שָׂרִיר H8306 Prep-b / N-mpc (1×)

sinews, muscles (anatomical term for strong tissues)

This masculine plural noun denotes the sinews or muscles, the strong fibrous tissues that enable bodily movement and strength. The term appears in God's description of Behemoth in Job 40:16, highlighting the creature's extraordinary physical power. The parallel structure pairs this term with 'loins,' emphasizing Behemoth's massive muscular structure. Sinews represent the source of animal and human strength, the tissues that connect bone to muscle and generate force. In Behemoth's case, the sinews of his belly concentrate tremendous power, making him an unmatched example of God's creative might.

(1×) Job 40:16 declares that Behemoth's 'power is in the muscles of his belly,' parallel to 'his strength is in his loins.' Spanish translates 'in the muscles of,' while French and German show uncertainty. The anatomical language emphasizes Behemoth's core strength—the massive musculature of his abdomen that enables his powerful movements. God's point is that the creature's strength far exceeds human capacity, demonstrating divine creative power beyond human comprehension or control. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-muscles-of | es: en-músculos-de | fr: dans-בשרירי | de: [בשרירי] Job 40:16

שְׂרִירוּת H8307 Prep-b / N-fsc (10×)

Stubbornness, obstinacy — firmness of heart in a negative sense, willful refusal to heed God's word

This noun, always appearing in construct with 'heart' (lev/libbam), describes a fixed, unyielding disposition — stubbornness or obstinacy that refuses correction. It is Jeremiah's signature diagnosis of Israel's spiritual condition, appearing seven times in his prophecy alone (Jer 3:17; 7:24; 9:13; 11:8; 13:10; 16:12; 18:12; 23:17). The word derives from a root meaning 'to be firm,' but its usage is entirely negative: a heart hardened against God's instruction. Deuteronomy 29:19 warns against anyone who walks in this stubbornness, and Psalm 81:12 laments that God gave Israel over to their stubborn hearts.

in stubbornness of (10×) Stubbornness or obstinacy of heart, always in the construct phrase 'stubbornness of (their) heart,' denoting a willful, hardened refusal to obey God's covenant commands. Jeremiah uses the expression as a recurring motif for Israel's chronic disobedience (Jer 3:17; 7:24; 9:13; 11:8; 13:10; 16:12; 18:12; 23:17), while Deuteronomy 29:19 and Psalm 81:12 frame it as the self-deceptive resolve that invites divine judgment. Spanish 'dureza de' and German 'Eigensinn' both convey the hard, unyielding quality of a heart set against correction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-stubbornness-of, in-the-stubbornness-of, stubbornness-of | es: dureza-de, en-dureza-de, en-la-dureza-de | fr: dans-cœur, dans-obstination, dans-stubbornness-de | de: Eigensinn, in-Eigensinn, in-stubbornness-von Deut 29:19; Ps 81:12; Jer 3:17; Jer 7:24; Jer 9:14

שָׂרַךְ H8308 V-Piel-Prtcpl-fs (1×)
twist, entangle, interweave (especially of paths or ways)
This Piel verb means to twist together, entangle, or interweave, appearing in Jeremiah's accusation against faithless Israel. The prophet uses the image of a swift young camel 'entangling her ways'—running about in confused, crisscrossing paths during mating season, leaving tracks that loop and twist everywhere. The verb captures chaotic, purposeless movement that weaves back and forth without clear direction. It conveys both physical entanglement and metaphorical confusion—Israel's spiritual promiscuity compared to an animal in heat, rushing frantically in all directions seeking satisfaction.

(1×) Jeremiah 2:23 describes faithless Israel as 'a swift camel entangling her ways,' using this term for the confused, crisscrossing tracks left by the frantic animal. Spanish translates 'crossing' or 'intertwining' (entrecruza), capturing the weaving-together sense. The image is of irrational, driven behavior—like an animal in heat that runs wildly in every direction, leaving a tangled maze of footprints. Israel's pursuit of other gods mirrors this frenzied, shameless searching. BINDING AND TYING
en: running-about | es: que-entrecruza | fr: [משרכת] | de: [משרכת] Jer 2:23

שְׂדֵמָה H8309 Art / N-fp (1×)
K variant reading: possibly 'walls' or 'ramparts' (textual variant for 'fields')
This entry represents the Ketiv reading in Jeremiah 31:40, where the written text differs from the Qere (read) form. The Qere reads 'fields,' the standard word for cultivated lands, while the Ketiv presents an uncertain form. The context describes the rebuilt Jerusalem's extended boundaries, encompassing various locations including fields or possibly ramparts. The textual variant reflects scribal uncertainty about this geographical description in Jeremiah's prophecy of restoration. Most modern translations follow the Qere reading of 'fields,' treating the Ketiv as a scribal error or dialectal variant.

(1×) The geographic description in Jeremiah 31:40 lists areas that will be holy to the Lord when Jerusalem is rebuilt. The Ketiv suggests 'walls' or 'ramparts,' while the Qere reads 'fields,' with most translations following the latter. French and German leave it in Hebrew brackets, acknowledging the textual problem. The broader context describes Jerusalem's expanded sacred boundaries, encompassing even areas previously considered unclean—the valley of corpses and ashes transformed into holy ground. EARTH AND LAND
en: [the-fields] | es: [los-campos] | fr: [[השרמות]] | de: [[השרמות]] Jer 31:40

שַׂרְסְכִים H8310 N-proper-ms (2×)
Sarsekim, a title or name of a Babylonian official in Jeremiah 39 (textually uncertain)
This puzzling term appears in Jeremiah 39:3's list of Babylonian officials entering Jerusalem. The text is widely considered corrupt, with modern scholars suggesting 'Sarsekim' may be a mistaken reading for part of 'Nergal-sharezer' or representing a title rather than a personal name. Some reconstruct it as 'sar-sekanim' (chief of officers) or suggest reading 'Nebo-Shezban' by rearranging letters. The Septuagint's confused rendering (Nabousachar) confirms early textual difficulty. The phrase occurs twice because the same list element appears in the original textual confusion.

(2×) Either a personal name or official title among Nebuchadnezzar's officers who entered Jerusalem in 586 BC, though the exact identification remains uncertain due to textual corruption. The Hebrew presents difficulties that ancient versions could not resolve, leading modern scholars to propose various emendations. Spanish and English glosses attempt transliterations ('Sekhim,' 'prince of,' 'oficial') while acknowledging uncertainty. The repetition likely stems from the confused state of the source text rather than representing two distinct individuals. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Sekhim, prince-of | es: Sekhim, oficial-de | fr: [סכים], prince | de: Fuerst, [סכים] Jer 39:3

שָׂרַע H8311 Prep-m / V-Hitpael-Inf (3×)
extend, stretch out (abnormally long limb or stretching oneself)
This verb means to extend or stretch out, appearing in both literal physical contexts and one metaphorical usage. Leviticus 21:18 uses the Qal passive participle for a man who is 'extended/deformed'—having an abnormally long limb that disqualifies him from priestly service. Leviticus 22:23 similarly describes an animal that is 'extended/deformed' in a limb, making it unsuitable for sacrifice. Isaiah 28:20 shifts to metaphor: the bed is too short 'for stretching out'—there's no room for comfort or rest (illustrating the inadequacy of false refuges). The root relates to Arabic words for entering upon a path or making straight.

(3×) Be abnormally extended or stretch oneself out. Leviticus 21:18 and 22:23 use the passive participle to describe physical deformity—a limb 'extended' beyond normal proportion, whether in humans or animals, disqualifying them for sacred service. Isaiah 28:20 employs the Hithpael infinitive metaphorically: the bed is too short 'for stretching out'—no room to extend oneself, symbolizing the futility of false security. The multilingual glosses ('deforme,' 'deformed,' 'to stretch out') capture both the literal anatomical sense and the metaphorical extension. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: deformed, to-stretch-out | es: deforme, para-extenderse | fr: [מהשתרע], difforme | de: [מהשתרע], deformed Lev 21:18; Lev 22:23; Isa 28:20

שַׂרְעַפִּים H8312 N-mpc / 1cs (2×)
Disquieting thoughts, anxious cares, troubled musings (inner turmoil or disturbing reflections)
This plural noun describes troubling inner thoughts or anxious reflections. Psalm 94:19 declares 'when my disquieting thoughts multiply within me, your consolations delight my soul'—worried thoughts crowding the mind that God's comfort displaces. Psalm 139:23 asks God to 'know my anxious thoughts,' where the term may denote either troubling doubts or intimate secrets known to God. The root connection to words for branching or division suggests thoughts that proliferate or divide the mind.

(2×) Internal mental activity characterized by anxiety, worry, or disturbing reflection. Both Psalm contexts involve the psalmist's inner life—either troubled thoughts needing divine comfort (94:19) or hidden concerns open to God's scrutiny (139:23). Spanish uses 'pensamientos' (thoughts) with modifiers like 'ansiosos' (anxious), while English emphasizes 'anxious thoughts' or 'disquieting thoughts.' The parallelism with 'heart' in 139:23 suggests these are deep-seated concerns rather than passing worries. The term captures the multiplying, branching nature of anxious rumination. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: my-anxious-thoughts | es: mis-pensamientos, mis-pensamientos-ansiosos | fr: pensée | de: mein-anxious-thoughts, mein-besorgt-Gedanken Ps 94:19; Ps 139:23

שָׂרַף H8313 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (117×)
To burn or set fire to; consume with fire, whether actively, passively, or as a resulting state of having been burned

The verb saraph is the primary Hebrew word for burning, appearing overwhelmingly with the phrase ba'esh ('with fire'). It spans the full voice system: active burning of idols, corpses, and sacrificial remains (Exod 32:20, Lev 4:12), passive 'being burned' as punishment or purification (Gen 38:24, Lev 7:17), and the resultant state 'burned' describing ruined cities and scorched walls (1 Sam 30:3, Neh 4:2). The Assyrian cognate sharapu and Arabic ʿ confirm the same core meaning. Ritual contexts dominate: roughly half the occurrences involve Levitical procedures for disposing of sacrificial remains outside the camp.

1. burn, set fire to (94×) The active transitive sense: to burn, set fire to, or consume something with fire. This is the overwhelmingly dominant use, covering destruction of idols (Deut 7:5), disposal of sacrificial remains (Lev 4:12), and military devastation (Josh 11:9). Arabic ʿ (Form IV), Korean 태우다/불태우다, and Swahili kuchoma all render it as a straightforward transitive 'burn.' FIRE AND BURNING
en: and-he-burned, burned, he-burned | es: quemó, y-la-quemó, y-lo-quemó | fr: brûla, brûler, et-il-brûla | de: er-verbrannte, und-er-verbrannte, verbrannte Exod 29:14; Exod 29:34; Exod 32:20; Lev 4:12; Lev 4:21

2. be burned (passive) (15×) The passive sense: to be burned, to be consumed by fire. Tamar faces this sentence in Genesis 38:24, and Levitical law specifies that leftover sacrificial meat 'shall be burned' (Lev 7:17, 19). Arabic passive ʿ and Korean 태워지다 distinguish this from the active agent construction, and it typically appears in Niphal or Pual stems. FIRE AND BURNING
en: and-burned, and-let-her-be-burned, be-burned | es: había-sido-quemado, se-quemarán, será-quemada | fr: brûler, cela-devra-être-brûla, cela-était-brûla | de: [ישרפו], [תשרפנה], es-soll-sein-verbrannte Gen 38:24; Lev 4:12; Lev 6:30; Lev 7:17; Lev 7:19

3. burned (resultative state) (5×) The resultative-state use of the Qal passive participle, describing something already burned. Psalm 80:16 laments the vine 'burned with fire,' Nehemiah 4:2 surveys walls that are 'burned,' and 1 Samuel 30:3 finds Ziklag 'burned.' Arabic participial forms ʿ distinguish this adjectival state from ongoing process. FIRE AND BURNING
en: burned, burned-with, the-burned-ones | es: Quemada, los-quemados, quemada | fr: brûla, brûler, le-brûla-ones | de: [שרופות], der-verbrannte-die, verbrannt Num 16:39; 1Sam 30:3; Neh 4:2; Ps 80:16; Isa 1:7

4. one who burns (agent) (3×) The agentive participle used substantively: 'one who burns,' the person performing the ritual burning. Leviticus 16:28 prescribes that 'the one who burns' the sin offering must wash his clothes, and Numbers 19:8 similarly purifies the agent. This specialized ritual role is distinct enough that Korean 태우는 자 ('burning person') and Swahili anayechoma ('one who burns') render it as a substantive. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-burner, and-the-one-burning, burning | es: Y-el-que-quema, Y-el-que-queme, quemando | fr: brûlant, et-le-burner, et-le-un-brûlant | de: und-der-burner, und-der-eins-burning, verbrennend Lev 16:28; Num 19:8; 2Kgs 17:31

שָׂרָף H8314a N-ms (5×)

fiery serpent; a venomous snake whose bite burns, or a mythic winged serpent/dragon

Derived from the root meaning 'to burn,' this noun describes serpents whose venom produces a burning sensation. In the wilderness narratives, God sends 'fiery serpents' whose deadly bites punish Israel's complaint (Num 21:6), and Moses is instructed to fashion a bronze replica (Num 21:8). Deuteronomy 8:15 recalls the 'fiery serpent' of the desert. Isaiah's oracles describe a more mythic creature — a 'flying fiery serpent' (Isa 14:29; 30:6) — blending natural and supernatural imagery. Spanish 'ardiente' (burning) preserves the etymological link to fire, while English 'fiery' and French/German equivalents confirm the burning quality as central.

(5×) A venomous serpent whose bite produces a burning sensation, the 'fiery snake' of the wilderness. Numbers 21:6 and 21:8 describe these lethal creatures sent as divine punishment, and Deut 8:15 recalls the desert's 'fiery serpent' danger. Spanish 'ardiente' (burning) and English 'fiery' capture the etymological core — the burning effect of the venom. In Isaiah 14:29 and 30:6, the term expands to a mythic 'flying fiery serpent,' a winged dragon-like creature symbolizing heightened threat from hostile nations. FIRE AND BURNING
en: a-fiery-serpent, and-flying, fiery | es: ardiente, las-ardientes, serafín | fr: [ושרף], [שרף], fiery | de: der-fiery, ein-fiery-Schlange, fiery Num 21:6; Num 21:8; Deut 8:15; Isa 14:29; Isa 30:6

שָׂרָף H8314b Art / N-mp (2×)

Seraphim, celestial beings with six wings attending God's throne in Isaiah's vision

The seraphim appear exclusively in Isaiah 6 as angelic beings stationed above the Lord's throne. They have six wings (two covering the face, two the feet, two for flying), human hands and voices, and they call antiphonally 'Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts.' One touches Isaiah's lips with a burning coal to cleanse his sin. The name likely derives from the root 'burn' and may originally have had serpentine associations (compare 'fiery serpent' elsewhere), though Isaiah presents them as humanoid. They serve as guardians and worshipers in the heavenly throne room.

(2×) Majestic celestial beings serving in God's immediate presence, characterized by their six-winged form and role in declaring divine holiness. Isaiah 6:2 describes their form and position, while 6:6 shows one acting to purify the prophet. The unique plural form occurs only in these two verses, making the seraphim distinctive to Isaiah's throne vision. All translations transliterate 'seraphim' or preserve the Hebrew, recognizing this as a specific class of heavenly beings. Their burning/purifying function aligns with their etymological connection to fire. SERPENTS AND SNAKES
en: seraphim, the-seraphim | es: Serafines, los-serafines | fr: [השרפים], [שרפים] | de: [השרפים], [שרפים] Isa 6:2; Isa 6:6

שָׂרָף H8315 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Saraph (personal name of a Judahite who 'ruled in Moab')

Saraph appears in 1 Chronicles 4:22 as a descendant of Judah, noted for having 'ruled in Moab.' The brief reference suggests he exercised authority over Moabite territory, possibly as a governor during Israel's dominance over Moab under David or Solomon. His name derives from the root meaning 'burn,' the same root that gives us 'seraphim.' The terse genealogical note leaves much uncertain —whether his rule was administrative, military, or represented intermarriage and settlement. The text notes these are 'ancient records,' suggesting the chronicler drew from old sources whose full context was already partially lost.

(1×) The genealogical note in 1 Chronicles 4:22 simply states that Saraph 'ruled in Moab,' with most translations (Spanish: Saraf) offering transliteration. The unusual detail about Moabite rule stands out in the genealogy, hinting at Judahite expansion or influence over neighboring peoples during the early monarchy. The name and his connection to Moab receive no further biblical development, leaving Saraph as one of Scripture's many briefly-mentioned figures whose fuller story remains lost. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Saraph | es: y-Saraf | fr: [ושרף] | de: [ושרף] 1Chr 4:22

שְׂרֵפָה H8316 Prep-k / N-fsc (13×)

Burning, conflagration; a burn wound or scar on skin

The feminine noun sherefah denotes the act or result of burning. In most of its thirteen occurrences it refers to destructive fire or ritual burning: the firing of bricks at Babel (Gen 11:3), the burning of the red heifer (Num 19:6), the spice-burning funeral rites for Judah's kings (2 Chr 16:14; 21:19), and the devastating conflagration of the land or temple (Isa 64:10; Jer 51:25). A distinct but related sense appears in Levitical skin-disease regulations, where it designates the mark or scar left by a burn on flesh rather than the fire event itself.

1. burning, conflagration (11×) The act or event of burning, whether constructive, ritual, penal, or destructive. Genesis 11:3 pairs it with the verb saraf for brick-firing; Numbers 19:6 and 19:17 apply it to the incineration of the red heifer in purification ritual. In 2 Chronicles 16:14 and 21:19, the cognate accusative construction describes the burning of spices at royal funerals — a ceremonial rite Spanish renders as 'quema de' and English as 'burning-of.' The prophets use it for catastrophic fire: Isaiah 9:4 depicts garments as fuel for burning, Isaiah 64:10 mourns the temple 'become a burning of fire,' and Jeremiah 51:25 denounces Babylon as 'a burnt-out mountain.' The multilingual evidence uniformly points to an event of combustion rather than its physical aftermath. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-burning-of, burning, burning-of | es: a-fuego, como-quema-de, de-incendio | fr: [כשרפת], [לשרפה], [לשרפת] | de: [כשרפת], [לשרפה], [לשרפת] Gen 11:3; Lev 10:6; Num 19:6; Num 19:17; 2Chr 16:14

2. burn mark, burn scar (2×) The physical mark or wound left by burning on skin — a burn scar or brand. This sense appears in the Levitical diagnosis of skin conditions (Lev 13:24-28, reflected at Num 16:37 and Deut 29:23 in the clustering data), where priests must examine whether a burn mark shows signs of infection. Spanish consistently renders it 'quemadura' (a burn wound) rather than 'quema' (an act of burning), and English shifts to 'the burning' as a noun of result rather than action, confirming the distinction from the event-sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: burning, the-burning | es: la-quemadura, quemadura | fr: brûlant, le-brûlant | de: burning, der-burning Num 16:37; Deut 29:23

שָׁרַץ H8317 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (14×)

To swarm, teem; creatures multiplying abundantly, or (as participle) a swarming/creeping creature.

Evokes the teeming vitality of creation — waters swarming with fish, the land crawling with creatures, peoples multiplying beyond counting. In Genesis 1:20-21, God commands the waters to 'swarm with swarms of living creatures,' and the verb recurs whenever Scripture wants to convey explosive, prolific reproduction (Gen 8:17; 9:7; Exod 1:7, of Israel in Egypt). The participial form (ha-shorets) becomes a classifier for small animals that move in swarms — the 'creeping things' of Leviticus 11:29-46 whose contact renders one unclean. Spanish pulular and German wimmeln both capture this vivid image of abundance in motion.

1. to swarm, teem, multiply (8×) The verbal action of living creatures multiplying abundantly, filling a space by swarming or teeming in great numbers. Genesis 1:20-21 uses it for the primordial fecundity of creation; Genesis 9:7 and Exodus 1:7 apply it to human population growth — Israel 'swarmed' in Egypt, an echo of the creation mandate. The waters of Ezekiel's temple vision (47:9) will teem with fish wherever the river flows. Spanish produjeron abundantemente and French essaim ('swarm') convey the explosive vitality of this sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-let-them-swarm, and-swarmed, and-will-swarm | es: Pulularon, Y-pulularán, produjeron-abundantemente | fr: essaim, et—essaim, et-grouilla | de: [ישרץ], es-wimmle, swarmed Gen 1:20; Gen 1:21; Gen 8:17; Gen 9:7; Exod 1:7

2. swarming creature, creeping thing (6×) The participial or substantival use designating creatures characterized by swarming or creeping movement — a taxonomic classifier for small animals that move in masses. Leviticus 11:29-46 uses ha-shorets ('the swarming thing') repeatedly to define a category of ritually unclean creatures: weasels, mice, lizards, and their kin. Genesis 7:21 lists 'every swarming thing that swarms on the earth' among those destroyed in the flood. Spanish el que repta ('the creeping one') and German das wimmelt ('that which swarms') reflect this nominal, classificatory function. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: the-swarming | es: el-que-pululaba, el-que-repta, la-que-hormiguea | fr: le-grouillant, le-swarming | de: das-wimmelt, der-schwaermend Gen 7:21; Lev 11:29; Lev 11:41; Lev 11:42; Lev 11:43

שֶׁרֶץ H8318 N-ms (15×)

Swarming creatures — collective term for small animals that teem in water or creep on land

The noun שֶׁרֶץ (sherets) is a collective term for small creatures that swarm, teem, or creep — encompassing aquatic swarmers, land-crawling reptiles and rodents, and flying insects. It appears at creation itself (Gen 1:20), in the flood narrative (Gen 7:21), and extensively in Leviticus 11's purity laws, where it helps define the boundary between clean and unclean. The word's semantic breadth is striking: it covers everything from fish-like swarmers to lizards, mice, and four-legged insects. Spanish splits between 'enjambre' (swarm) and 'reptil' (creeping thing), reflecting the term's dual aquatic and terrestrial range.

swarming creatures, creeping things (15×) A collective noun for small animals that move in swarms or creep along surfaces, spanning aquatic creatures (Gen 1:20; Lev 11:10), small land animals like lizards and rodents (Lev 11:29, 41-44), and winged insects (Lev 11:20-23; Deut 14:19). Central to the Priestly purity system, where contact with dead sherets renders one unclean until evening (Lev 5:2; 11:31-32). French 'animal grouillant' and German 'Gewimmel' both emphasize the teeming, swarming quality that is the word's core image. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-swarming-thing, among-the-swarming-creature, swarmers | es: cosa-que-se-arrastra, el-enjambre, el-reptil | fr: animal-grouillant, le-grouillant-chose, le-swarming-créature | de: Gewimmel, der-schwaermend-creature, ein-Gewimmel Gen 1:20; Gen 7:21; Lev 5:2; Lev 11:10; Lev 11:20

שָׁרַק H8319 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (12×)

To hiss, whistle — a sharp sibilant sound expressing scorn over ruins or summoning agents from afar

The verb שָׁרַק (sharaq) describes a sharp, piercing sound — a hiss or whistle — used in two distinct senses. Most commonly it expresses derision at devastated places: passersby 'hiss' at Jerusalem's ruins (1 Kgs 9:8; Jer 19:8; 49:17; 50:13), at fallen Tyre (Ezek 27:36), and at Israel's desolation (Lam 2:15-16). This hissing blends contempt with shock. In a second usage, God 'whistles' to summon distant nations: 'He will whistle for them from the ends of the earth' (Isa 5:26; 7:18). Zechariah 10:8 redeploys the image positively — God whistles to gather His redeemed. Spanish 'silbar' and French 'siffler' cover both registers.

to hiss, to whistle (in scorn or as signal) (12×) To hiss or whistle in scorn and horror at devastated places — an involuntary sibilant response expressing both contempt and shock at the magnitude of ruin. Directed at the ruins of the temple and Jerusalem (1 Kgs 9:8; Jer 19:8; 49:17; 50:13; Lam 2:15-16), at fallen Tyre (Ezek 27:36), and at desolate lands generally (Jer 49:17; Mic 6:16). The gesture accompanies head-shaking and hand-clapping as signs of appalled mockery. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: I-will-whistle, and-He-hisses, and-he-will-whistle | es: Les-silbaré, silban, silbaron | fr: [אשרקה], [שרקו], et-fera-hiss | de: [וישרק], [ושרק], [ישרק] 1Kgs 9:8; Job 27:23; Isa 5:26; Isa 7:18; Jer 19:8

שָׂרֹק H8320 Adj-mp (1×)

sorrel (color description of horses: reddish-brown)

This masculine plural adjective describes the color of horses in Zechariah's night vision, most commonly understood as 'sorrel'—a reddish-brown or chestnut hue. The term appears in a list of horse colors: red, sorrel, and white. The root may relate to redness or the color of fine grapes, suggesting a brownish-red or rust color. In ancient Near Eastern context, horse colors carried symbolic significance in military and visionary contexts. These variously colored horses pull chariots in Zechariah's vision of divine agents patrolling the earth, with the color distinctions possibly indicating different functions or jurisdictions.

(1×) Zechariah 1:8 describes the prophet's vision of horses with three color designations: 'red, sorrel, and white.' Spanish translates 'chestnut' or 'bay' (alazanes), confirming the brownish-red horse color, while French offers simply 'red.' The vision presents these colored horses among the myrtle trees with riders who patrol the earth as the Lord's scouts. The color distinction serves the vision's symbolic framework, though interpreters debate whether specific theological meanings attach to each color. RED AND SCARLET

en: sorrel | es: alazanes | fr: rouge | de: [שרקים] Zech 1:8

שֹׂרֵק H8321a N-msc (2×)

Choice vine, select variety of grape vine (used figuratively for Israel's privileged status)

This term denotes a superior variety of grape vine, used metaphorically for Israel in prophetic oracles. Isaiah 5:2 begins the Song of the Vineyard: God planted 'a choice vine' yet it yielded wild grapes—Israel blessed with every advantage produced unfaithfulness. Jeremiah 2:21 echoes this: 'I planted you a choice vine, completely of true seed'—completely reliable stock that nevertheless degenerated. The term emphasizes quality and careful selection, making the subsequent failure more condemning. It may refer to a specific cultivar known for excellence.

(2×) A superior grape variety representing the best possible planting stock, used prophetically to depict God's careful establishment of Israel with every advantage. Both passages employ vineyard imagery to indict Israel's failure despite premium origins. The identical metaphorical use in Isaiah and Jeremiah suggests this was an established prophetic motif. Spanish 'vid escogida' (chosen/select vine) captures the notion of deliberate selection for quality. The agricultural specificity enhances the metaphor's force: only the best was planted, making the corruption inexcusable. VINEYARD CULTIVATION

en: a-choice-vine, choice-vine | es: vid-escogida | fr: [שרק] | de: [שרק] Isa 5:2; Jer 2:21

שֹׂרֵקָה H8321b Conj-w (1×)

choice vine, noble vine (superior grape variety)

This feminine noun denotes a choice or noble vine, a superior variety of grape known for quality fruit. The term appears in Jacob's blessing upon Judah in Genesis 49:11, in poetic imagery of abundance and royalty. The 'choice vine' represents valuable agricultural stock, the kind of vine a wealthy landowner would cultivate for premium wine production. In the prophetic imagery, Judah's abundance will be so great that he can afford to tie his donkey to a choice vine—treating valuable property casually because of overwhelming prosperity. The term emphasizes quality and value, distinguishing superior vines from common varieties.

(1×) Genesis 49:11 pictures Judah tying his donkey 'to the choice vine,' part of vivid imagery of wine abundance during Judah's reign. English and Spanish translate 'choice vine' or 'noble vine' (cepa), emphasizing the quality designation. The image conveys messianic abundance: royal prosperity so great that even valuable grapevines serve utilitarian purposes like hitching posts, and wine flows so freely that one washes clothes in it—a vision of Eden-like fruitfulness under Judah's scepter. VINEYARD CULTIVATION

en: and-to-the-choice-vine | es: y-a-la-cepa | fr: et-à-le-choice-vigne | de: und-an-die-Edelrebe Gen 49:11

שְׁרֵקָה H8322 Conj-w / N-fs (7×)

hissing, scorn — derisive whistling directed at a ruined place, expressing mockery and horror

Shereqah denotes the act of hissing or whistling in scorn, a gesture of derision aimed at a place reduced to ruin by divine judgment. It appears exclusively in prophetic judgment oracles and always alongside shammah ('desolation'), forming a fixed pair that intensifies the picture of utter devastation. Jeremiah uses this word-pair repeatedly to describe the fate of Judah and the nations (Jer 19:8; 25:9, 18; 29:18; 51:37), while Micah 6:16 applies it to Samaria's legacy. Spanish 'silbido/burla' captures both the sound and the mockery, while Arabic cognate evidence points to the same hissing gesture.

hissing (scorn/derision) (7×) A feminine noun denoting derisive hissing or scornful whistling, always appearing alongside shammah ('desolation') in prophetic judgment contexts. The pair shammah u-shereqah ('a desolation and a hissing') is a formulaic expression for the total ruin of a city or land under God's wrath. Jeremiah deploys it against Jerusalem (Jer 19:8), the nations (Jer 25:9, 18), Babylon (Jer 51:37), and the exiles (Jer 29:18), sometimes adding further terms like qelalah ('curse') and cherpah ('reproach'). Micah 6:16 and 2 Chronicles 29:8 extend the pattern. Spanish 'burla' (mockery) and French 'moquerie' confirm the sense of contemptuous derision throughout. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: and-a-hissing, and-for-a-hissing, and-for-hissing | es: por-silbido, y-burla, y-para-burla | fr: [ולשרקה], et-objet-de-moquerie, horreur | de: [ולשרקה], [ושרקה], [לשרקה] 2Chr 29:8; Jer 19:8; Jer 25:9; Jer 25:18; Jer 29:18

שָׂרַר H8323 V-Hitpael-InfAbs (6×)

Rule, act as prince; denominative from sar, to exercise authority, govern, or lord it over others.

A denominative verb built on sar ('prince, ruler'), expressing the activity of princely rule and governance. The Hitpael stem in Numbers 16:13 carries a pejorative tone – Korah's faction accuses Moses of 'lording it over' them, playing the prince. By contrast, Isaiah 32:1 and Proverbs 8:16 use the Qal to describe righteous and legitimate governance. The semantic range thus stretches from proper authority to overreach. Spanish gobernarán (they will govern) versus enseñoreando (lording it) mirrors this tension between legitimate rule and domineering pretension. Esther 1:22 extends the concept to domestic headship.

rule, act as prince (6×) To exercise princely authority, govern, or domineer, depending on stem and context. In Isaiah 32:1, princes 'rule' justly in parallel with a righteous king – legitimate governance. In Numbers 16:13, the Hitpael with infinitive absolute intensifies into an accusation of tyrannical overreach: 'you keep playing the prince over us.' Proverbs 8:16 places it in Wisdom's mouth, affirming that rulers govern by her counsel. Esther 1:22 applies it to household authority. The German and French glosses show difficulty rendering the nuance, while Spanish gobernarán versus enseñoreando neatly captures the legitimate-to-overreaching spectrum. RULING AND REIGNING

en: lording-it, made-princes, rule | es: enseñoreando?, establecieron-príncipes, gobernarán | fr: [ישרון], [שרר], lording-cela | de: [ישרון], [שרר], der-singt Num 16:13; Esth 1:22; Prov 8:16; Isa 32:1

שׁוֹרֵר H8324 Prep-b / N-mpc / 1cs (5×)

an (insidious) watcher, enemy; one who lies in wait with hostile intent

This noun, always appearing in the Psalms with a first-person suffix ('my watchers/enemies'), denotes adversaries who observe and stalk with malicious purpose. Unlike the more common 'oyev' (enemy), this term carries the nuance of surveillance and lurking hostility — enemies who watch for an opportunity to strike. The multilingual evidence is unanimous: English 'my enemies/foes,' Spanish 'mis enemigos,' French 'ennemi,' and German 'mein Feinde' all render it as personal adversaries. The Psalmic context consistently places these watchers in opposition to the righteous sufferer.

(5×) A hostile watcher or lurking enemy, one who observes with malicious intent. All five occurrences are Psalmic, always with the first-person suffix: the psalmist prays for guidance because of 'my watchers' (Ps 5:8; 27:11), appeals for vindication against them (Ps 54:5; 59:10), and laments their relentless pursuit (Ps 56:2). Cross-lingual glosses — English 'my enemies,' Spanish 'mis enemigos,' French 'ennemi' — confirm the adversarial sense. The participial form emphasizes ongoing, insidious observation rather than open combat. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: my-enemies, on-my-enemies, to-my-foes | es: a-mis-enemigos, en-mis-enemigos, mis-enemigos | fr: dans-ennemi, ennemi, à-ennemi | de: auf-mein-Feinde, mein-Feinde, zu-mein-Feinde Ps 5:8; Ps 27:11; Ps 54:5; Ps 56:2; Ps 59:10

שָׂרָר H8325 N-proper-ms (1×)

Sharar (personal name: father of one of David's mighty men)

Sharar appears in 2 Samuel 23:33 as the father of Ahiam, one of David's elite warriors known as 'the Thirty.' The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:35 gives the name as Sacar (or Sachar), suggesting textual variation or possibly two names for the same person. Personal names in the lists of David's mighty men often show such variation between Samuel and Chronicles. Sharar himself receives no other biblical mention; his significance derives entirely from his son's place among David's honored combat veterans who performed extraordinary military feats.

(1×) The designation 'Ahiam son of Sharar' (2 Samuel 23:33) identifies one of David's elite Thirty warriors by patronymic. All major translations simply transliterate the name (Sharar). His inclusion in this prestigious list honors his son's military service and places Sharar's family among the heroes of David's reign. The slight variation with Chronicles (Sacar) reflects the common textual fluidity in personal names transmitted through centuries of hand-copying. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sharar | es: Sharar | fr: Sharar | de: Sharar 2Sam 23:33

שֹׁר H8326 N-msc / 2fs (1×)

navel, navel-string, or possibly body/belly (anatomical term)

This masculine noun denotes the navel or navel-string (umbilical cord), appearing in Ezekiel's allegory of Jerusalem's origins and in wisdom literature. In Ezekiel 16:4, God speaks of Jerusalem's birth when 'your navel-string was not cut,' part of vivid imagery describing Israel's abandoned, unwashed infancy before God's adoption. The term may extend metaphorically to mean the body's center or the belly generally. In disputed passages in Proverbs and Song of Songs, translations vary between 'navel,' 'body,' and even 'vulva,' reflecting interpretive challenges with intimate anatomical vocabulary.

(1×) Song of Songs 7:2 uses this term in the lover's description of his beloved's body, translated as 'navel' or 'body's center,' though some suggest euphemistic reference to female anatomy. Spanish translates 'your navel,' while French offers 'your navel.' The context describes physical beauty in highly metaphorical language, where various body parts receive poetic comparison to landscape features. Whether specifically the navel or more broadly the belly/body center, the term fits the passage's celebratory, sensual description. FLESH AND BODY

en: your-navel | es: Tu-ombligo | fr: Ton-nombril, | de: [שררך] Song 7:2

שָׁרַשׁ H8327 V-Hifil-Imperf.Jus-3ms (8×)

To take root or become firmly established; also to uproot, tear out by the roots, or be uprooted.

A denominative verb built on the noun for 'root' (shoresh), carrying both ends of the botanical metaphor. In its Hiphil and Poal stems it pictures Israel or the wicked striking deep roots into the land (Isa 27:6; Jer 12:2), while the Piel means violent uprooting — God tearing someone out of the land of the living (Ps 52:5). Spanish 'arraigado' (rooted) and 'desarraigará' (will uproot) capture the polarity neatly. The passive Pual in Job 31:8 ('be uprooted') rounds out the picture: what God plants, God can also pull up.

1. to take root, become established (5×) To take root, become firmly established — said of Israel's future flourishing (Isa 27:6), a vine planted by God (Ps 80:9), or even the deceptive prosperity of the wicked (Jer 12:2; Isa 40:24). Spanish 'echando raíces' and 'arraigado' both highlight the gradual, organic process of becoming deeply settled. Covers Hiphil, Poal, and Poel stems across five occurrences. ROOT PLANT PART

en: and-it-took-deep-root, days-shall-take-root, is-rooted | es: arraigado, echando-raíces, echaron-raíces | fr: [ישרש], [שרשן], enraciner | de: [ישרש], [משריש], [שרש] Job 5:3; Ps 80:9; Isa 27:6; Isa 40:24; Jer 12:2

2. to uproot, pull out by the roots (2×) To uproot, tear out by the roots — active destruction in the Piel stem. In Ps 52:5, God uproots the deceitful from the land of the living; in Job 31:12, fire metaphorically 'roots at' all one's produce. Spanish 'desarraigará' (will uproot) mirrors the violent reversal of sense 1. UPROOT PLUCK UP

en: and-uproot-you, would-uproot | es: desarraigará, y-te-desarraigará | fr: enraciner, et-enraciner | de: [תשרש], und-uproot-du Job 31:12; Ps 52:5

3. to be uprooted (1×) To be uprooted — the Pual passive, appearing once in Job 31:8, where Job invokes a self-curse: 'let what I have planted be uprooted.' Spanish 'serán desarraigados' confirms the passive force. The single occurrence rounds out the active-passive pair with sense 2. UPROOT PLUCK UP

en: be-uprooted | es: serán-desarraigados | fr: enraciner | de: [ישרשן] Job 31:8

שֹׁרֶשׁ H8328 N-msc / 1cs (33×)

Root – the underground part of a plant; figuratively, ancestral stock, origin, or deepest cause of something.

Denotes a root in both the botanical and figurative senses. Literally, it describes roots that spread by water (Job 8:17; 29:19), are torn up in judgment (Amos 2:9; Mal 4:1), or take hold and flourish (2 Kgs 19:30; Hos 14:5). Figuratively, it becomes a powerful image for lineage and origin – the messianic 'root of Jesse' (Isa 11:1, 10), or the 'root of the matter' found in a person (Job 19:28). Across all languages the translation is strikingly uniform: Spanish 'raíz,' French 'racine,' German 'Wurzel' – the metaphor travels effortlessly.

1. root of a plant (28×) The literal botanical root of a tree or plant – the part underground that anchors, nourishes, or is destroyed in judgment. Multilingual uniformity is striking: Spanish 'raíz,' French 'racine,' German 'Wurzel.' Used of roots spreading by water (Job 8:17; 29:19), being dried up in divine punishment (Hos 9:16; Amos 2:9; Mal 4:1), and taking downward hold to bear fruit upward (2 Kgs 19:30 = Isa 37:31). Deuteronomy 29:18 warns against a 'root bearing poisonous fruit.' ROOT PLANT PART

en: and-his-roots, and-roots-its, her-roots | es: las-raíces-de, raíces-suyas, raíz | fr: et-racine, leur-root, racine | de: Wurzel, [ושרשיו], [שרש] Deut 29:18; Judg 5:14; 2Kgs 19:30; Job 8:17; Job 13:27

2. root as stock or origin (5×) Figurative use of root to denote ancestral stock, lineage, source, or underlying cause. The 'root of Jesse' (Isa 11:1, 10) becomes a cornerstone messianic title, while 'the root of the matter' (Job 19:28) means the essential cause. Isaiah 14:29 warns that from the serpent's root will come a viper. Spanish 'la raíz del' and German 'Wurzel' carry the metaphor naturally. Proverbs 12:3, 12 contrasts the wicked who have no root with the righteous whose root endures. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-root-of, and-the-root-of, but-the-root-of | es: Y-la-raíz-del, de-raíz-de, y-raíz-de | fr: de-racine, et-racine | de: [ושרש], [משרש] Job 19:28; Job 30:4; Prov 12:3; Prov 12:12; Isa 14:29

שֶׁרֶשׁ H8329 N-proper-ms (1×)

Sheresh — personal name of a descendant of Manasseh mentioned in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles Sheresh appears only once in Scripture, listed among the descendants of Manasseh in the tribal genealogies. The name may be related to the Hebrew root for 'root' (shoresh), though the connection remains uncertain. The Septuagint renders it variously as Souros or Phoros, reflecting different textual traditions. Like many genealogical names, Sheresh preserves the memory of a family line within one of Israel's tribes.

(1×) A personal name occurring in the Manassite genealogy of 1 Chronicles 7:16. The single attestation and genealogical context clearly establish this as a proper name, though the individual's historical significance beyond his family connection remains unknown. The multilingual glosses consistently treat this as a transliterated proper name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sheresh | es: Seres | fr: [שרש] | de: [שרש] 1Chr 7:16

שֹׁרֶשׁ H8330 N-mpc / 3ms (3×)

roots (Aramaic, of trees)

This Aramaic masculine plural noun with suffix means 'roots,' specifically roots of a tree, appearing only in Daniel's account of Nebuchadnezzar's dream and its fulfillment. Daniel 4:12 describes the great tree in the dream with 'its roots' still in the ground after being cut down. The command to leave the stump with 'roots' in the earth (4:20, 23) symbolizes that Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom will be restored after his period of madness—the root system remains viable for regrowth. The imagery draws on agricultural knowledge: a cut tree with intact roots can sprout again, representing hope of restoration after judgment.

(3×) Tree roots in Nebuchadnezzar's dream symbolism. Daniel 4:12 (Aramaic 4:15) commands leaving 'its roots in the earth' when cutting down the great tree. Daniel 4:20 and 4:23 (Aramaic 4:23, 26) repeat the instruction about preserving 'the roots' as a sign that 'your kingdom will be yours' after acknowledging heaven's rule. The preserved root system ensures eventual restoration—the tree can grow again. The multilingual glosses ('sus raíces,' 'its roots') straightforwardly translate this botanical-theological image of judgment with promised restoration. ROOT PLANT PART

en: its-roots, roots-of | es: sus-raíces | fr: [שרשוהי] | de: [שרשוהי] Dan 4:15; Dan 4:23; Dan 4:26

שַׁרְשָׁה H8331 N-fpc (1×)

chains (construct form) — links or ornamental chains, specifically in the context of priestly garments

This term appears in Exodus 28:22 describing the chains attached to the high priest's breastplate. The word is a construct plural form ('chains of'), indicating these chains belonged to or were made for something specific. The multilingual evidence shows consistent translation as 'chains,' with the construct relationship preserved across languages. These were not ordinary chains but sacred items crafted for Israel's worship.

(1×) The construct plural form meaning 'chains of,' used exclusively in Exodus 28:22 for the ornamental chains of the high priestly breastplate. The domain assignment to 'Nature, Class, Example' reflects the grammatical construct relationship, though the underlying semantic content relates to priestly vestments and sacred objects. Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly recognize the chain imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: chains-of | es: cadenas-de | fr: chaînes-de | de: Ketten-von Exod 28:22

שרשו H8332 Prep-l / N-ms (2×)

Uprooting, banishment, expulsion (as a legal penalty involving being torn from one's place)

This rare noun appears only in Ezra 7:26, listing potential punishments for violating God's law or the king's decree: death, banishment, confiscation of goods, or imprisonment. The term derives from the root 'to uproot,' making 'banishment' or 'exile' the most natural rendering—being torn up from one's place and removed. The Ketiv/Qere variant shows textual uncertainty in the exact form, but both readings point to removal or uprooting as punishment. The term emphasizes the violent separation from one's land and community.

(2×) A judicial penalty involving forcible removal from one's homeland or community, listed among capital and corporal punishments in Persian-period legal administration. The two occurrences represent the Ketiv and Qere variants of the same word in Ezra 7:26. Spanish 'destierro' (exile/banishment) and 'desarraigo' (uprooting) capture both the legal and etymological dimensions. The root metaphor of plant uprooting emphasizes the violence and completeness of separation. This represents one of four escalating punishments available to enforce religious and civil law. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: [for-banishment], for-banishment | es: [para-desarraigo], para-destierro | fr: [לשרשו], [לשרשי] | de: [(לשרשי)], [[לשרשו]] Ezra 7:26

שַׁרְשְׁרָה H8333 Conj-w / N-fp (7×)

chain, wreathed chain — linked metalwork used for priestly vestment ornamentation and architectural decoration

Sharshrah denotes chains of wreathed or braided metalwork, appearing in two distinct but related settings: the sacred vestments and the Temple architecture. In Exodus 28:14, 22 and 39:15, golden chains of corded work attach the breastplate of judgment to the ephod — a detail of priestly craftsmanship described with careful precision. In 1 Kings 7:17 and 2 Chronicles 3:5, 15-16, similar chains adorn the pillars and interior of Solomon's Temple. The Akkadian cognate sharshurratu ('chain, fetter') confirms the deep Semitic antiquity of this term. Spanish 'cadenas' and German 'Ketten' uniformly render the chain sense.

chains / fetters (7×) Chains of wreathed or braided metalwork, used for ornamental and sacred purposes. In the priestly vestments, golden sharshrot attach the breastplate to the shoulder-pieces of the ephod (Exod 28:14, 22; 39:15), described as 'chains of corded work' in meticulous construction detail. In Temple architecture, similar chainwork decorates the capitals of the bronze pillars (1 Kgs 7:17) and the interior walls and pillars of Solomon's Temple (2 Chr 3:5, 15-16). The Akkadian cognate sharshurratu ('chain, fetter') and Mishnaic Hebrew sharshrot attest to long continuity. Spanish 'cadenas' and German 'Ketten' confirm the uniform chain-ornament sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-chains, chains, chains-of | es: cadenas, cadenas-de, en-las-cadenas | fr: [בשרשרות], [ושרשרות], [שרשרות] | de: Ketten, Ketten-von, [בשרשרות] Exod 28:14; Exod 39:15; 1Kgs 7:17; 2Chr 3:5

שָׁרַת H8334 Conj-w / V-Piel-Prtcpl-mp (98×)

To minister or serve in an honored capacity; as a substantive, a minister, attendant, or servant of high standing.

Unlike the more general ʿabad ('to work, serve as a slave'), sharat (שָׁרַת) denotes dignified ministerial service — the kind rendered by a trusted personal attendant or a priest in the sanctuary. Joseph 'ministered' to Potiphar in a position of trust (Gen 39:4), Joshua was Moses' personal minister (Exod 24:13), and the Levites 'minister' before the Lord in the tabernacle (Num 3:6). The Piel stem intensifies the sense of devoted, ongoing service. Translations across languages consistently distinguish this from menial labor: Spanish ministrar versus servir, German dienen in its elevated sense, and French serviteur versus esclave.

1. to minister, serve (52×) The verbal action of ministering or serving in a position of honor, whether in cultic/priestly duty or personal attendance upon a superior. Covers finite and infinitive forms of the Piel stem. Spanish para-ministrar and German dienen capture the elevated register. The Levites serve (sharat) before the tabernacle (Num 3:6), and the priests minister in the sanctuary (Exod 28:35). SERVING AND MINISTRY

en: for-serving, to-minister, to-serve | es: para-ministrar, para-servir, para-servirle | fr: pour-serving, servir, à-minister | de: dienen, fuer-dienend, zu-diene Gen 39:4; Gen 40:4; Exod 28:35; Exod 28:43; Exod 29:30

2. minister, servant, attendant (46×) A substantivized participle functioning as a noun: 'minister,' 'attendant,' 'servant' — one who occupies a recognized role of honored service. Joshua is called meshareth Mosheh, 'minister of Moses' (Exod 24:13; Josh 1:1), and Samuel serves as attendant before the Lord (1 Sam 2:11). French serviteur and German Diener both render this as a title of dignified office rather than menial labor. SERVING AND MINISTRY

en: attendant-of, ministering, ministers-of | es: el-servidor-de, los-que-ministran, los-que-servían | fr: servant, servir, serviteur-de | de: Diener, Diener-von, Knecht-von Exod 24:13; Exod 33:11; Num 11:28; Josh 1:1; 1Sam 2:11

שֵׁרֶת H8335 Art / N-ms (2×)

Religious ministry, sacred service (specifically referring to service in the tabernacle or temple)

This noun denotes religious or cultic service, particularly in the context of tabernacle or temple ministry. Numbers 4:12 mentions 'the vessels of ministry' used in the sanctuary, while 2 Chronicles 24:14 refers to vessels made 'for the ministry' after temple repairs under Joash. The term derives from the verb 'to minister/serve' and emphasizes the sacred service performed by priests and Levites. It distinguishes cultic ministry from general labor or service through its specialized ritual context.

(2×) The specialized service or ministry conducted in Israel's worship spaces, specifically referring to ritual acts and sacred functions. Both passages concern the implements ('vessels') used in this ministry, connecting equipment to function. Spanish uses 'servicio' and 'ministerio' interchangeably, both denoting service with religious overtones. The construct phrase 'vessels of ministry' indicates objects dedicated to sacred use. The term belongs to the technical vocabulary of Priestly and Levitical service, distinguishing holy work from ordinary labor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: service, the-ministry | es: el-servicio, ministerio | fr: [שרת], le-ministry | de: [שרת], der-ministry Num 4:12; 2Chr 24:14

H8336 N-ms (1×)
fine linen — high-quality linen fabric, associated with luxury and purity in biblical contexts
This word denotes fine linen, a premium fabric in the ancient world. Ezekiel 16:13 uses it to describe Jerusalem adorned in splendor. Interestingly, the German and French glosses ('sechs,' 'six') suggest textual confusion with the homographic numeral 'six' (also שֵׁשׁ), highlighting how ancient copyists faced similar ambiguities. The context in Ezekiel clearly demands the fabric meaning, as the verse catalogues luxurious garments.

(1×) Fine linen fabric, mentioned in Ezekiel 16:13 as part of Jerusalem's metaphorical adornment. The domain 'Activities Involving Cloth' appropriately captures the textile context. The confusion evident in German and French translations (rendering it as 'six') demonstrates the challenge of homographs in unpointed Hebrew text, where the consonants שׁשׁ can represent either the numeral or the fabric. LINEN AND FABRIC
en: fine-linen | es: (lino) | fr: six | de: sechs Ezek 16:13

שֵׁשׁ H8336a Conj-w / N-ms (3×)
marble (white stone for pillars and pavement)
This noun denotes marble, the white or colored stone used in royal architecture and luxury construction. Esther 1:6 describes the Persian palace courtyard with pillars of marble supporting the awnings. The same verse mentions marble twice more in describing the elaborate mosaic pavement (alongside other precious stones). Song of Songs 5:15 uses it metaphorically: the beloved's legs are 'pillars of marble set on bases of gold'—imagery of strength and beauty. The contexts uniformly associate marble with royal splendor and costly construction, fitting Persian imperial aesthetics and love poetry's idealized imagery.

(3×) Marble stone in architectural and poetic contexts. Esther 1:6 (appearing three times in the verse) describes Ahasuerus's palace courtyard with marble pillars and marble pavement (alongside porphyry and other precious stones)—typical of Persian imperial grandeur. Song of Songs 5:15 uses marble metaphorically: the beloved's legs are 'pillars of marble'—strong, white, beautiful. The multilingual glosses ('mármol,' 'marble') uniformly identify this as the precious white stone, emphasizing its association with luxury, strength, and aesthetic appeal. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5911 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-marble, marble | es: mármol, y-mármol | fr: [שׁשׁ], [שׁשׁ], de-marbre, | de: [שׁשׁ], [שׁשׁ] Esth 1:6; Song 5:15

שֵׁשׁ H8336b Prep-b (38×)
fine linen, byssus — high-quality white Egyptian linen used for priestly garments and tabernacle furnishings Shesh is a loanword from Egyptian, designating the fine white linen (byssus) prized throughout the ancient Near East. Its 38 occurrences cluster overwhelmingly in Exodus 25-39, where it is the signature fabric of the tabernacle: curtains, veils, priestly ephods, sashes, and turbans are all made of shesh or shesh moshzar ('twisted fine linen'). The material first appears on Joseph, whom Pharaoh clothes in 'garments of fine linen' as a mark of royal favor (Gen 41:42). Ezekiel 16:10, 13 uses shesh metaphorically: God clothed Jerusalem in fine linen, symbolizing covenant splendor. Proverbs 31:22 praises the virtuous woman whose coverings are shesh and argaman ('fine linen and purple'). The later Hebrew synonym buts eventually replaced shesh in postexilic texts. The multilingual glosses converge: Spanish 'lino fino,' French 'fin lin,' German 'feines Leinen.'

fine linen (fabric) (38×) Fine Egyptian linen or byssus, a premium white textile associated with royalty, priesthood, and sacred space. In the tabernacle texts (Exod 25-28, 35-39), shesh is the base fabric for nearly every woven element — curtains (26:1, 31, 36), the court hangings (27:9, 18), and the priestly garments (28:5, 6, 8, 15, 39; 39:2-29). Women skilled in spinning produced the thread (Exod 35:25). Outside the tabernacle corpus, it marks royal investiture (Gen 41:42), covenant metaphor (Ezek 16:10, 13; 27:7), and domestic virtue (Prov 31:22). The word is an Egyptian loanword (Coptic shens), confirming that Israel imported both the material and its name from Egypt. LINEN AND FABRIC
en: and-fine-linen, fine-linen | es: lino, lino-fino, y-lino | fr: et-fin-lin, fin-lin | de: Leinen, feines-Leinen, und-fein-Leinen Gen 41:42; Exod 25:4; Exod 26:1; Exod 26:31; Exod 26:36

שֵׁשׁ H8337 Number-fsc (215×)
Six – the cardinal number, used independently and as the base in compounds like sixteen and six hundred.
Shesh (masculine) and shisha (feminine) denote the cardinal number six, appearing across legal, narrative, and ritual texts. Six days of labor before the Sabbath rest (Exod 20:9) is among its most theologically resonant uses, establishing the rhythm of work and worship at the heart of Israelite life. It also appears in measurements (six cubits, 1 Sam 17:4 for Goliath's height), genealogies, and compound numerals. Spanish 'seis,' French 'six,' and German 'sechs' all translate it uniformly, reflecting its straightforward numerical function without semantic variation across contexts.

six (cardinal number) (215×) The cardinal number six, appearing in masculine (shesh) and feminine (shisha) forms across absolute and construct states. Functions independently ('six days,' Exod 20:9; 'six cubits,' 1 Sam 17:4) and as a base component in compound numerals (sixteen, sixty, six hundred). Its most prominent theological context is the six days of creation and labor preceding Sabbath rest (Gen 1; Exod 23:12). All target languages render it with a single numeral equivalent – Spanish 'seis,' French 'six,' German 'sechs' – confirming one unified sense. SIX CARDINAL NUMBER en: six | es: Seis, seis, seis-de- | fr: six | de: sechs Gen 30:20; Exod 16:26; Exod 20:9; Exod 21:2; Exod 26:9

שִׁשְּׁא H8338 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-1cs / 2ms (1×)
lead on, entice — to guide or lure forward, used of God bringing Gog into judgment
This intensive verb form appears only in Ezekiel 39:2, where God declares 'I will lead you on' to Gog of Magog. The verb conveys purposeful guidance, though with an undertone of enticement into a trap. The grammatical form is a Piel consecutive perfect, intensifying the basic meaning. God is portrayed as actively bringing the enemy into position for judgment, demonstrating sovereign control even over hostile forces.

(1×) An intensive verb meaning 'to lead on' or 'entice forward,' occurring only in Ezekiel 39:2 where Yahweh speaks of bringing Gog into the land for judgment. BDB notes the form derives from a Pilpel intensive of an assumed root, emphasizing the deliberate, purposeful nature of the divine action. The French gloss 'sixième' (sixth) appears to be a textual error, while English and Spanish correctly capture the motion verb. GOING AND LEADING en: and-I-will-lead-you-on | es: y-te-guiaré | fr: et-sixième | de: [וששאתיך] Ezek 39:2

שֶׁשְׁבַּצַּר H8339 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)
Sheshbazzar, a prince of Judah who led the first return from Babylonian exile Sheshbazzar appears in Ezra as the leader to whom Cyrus entrusted the temple vessels for return to Jerusalem. Ezra 1:8, 11 identify him as 'the prince of Judah' who received the sacred items, while 5:14, 16 (in the Aramaic section) describe him as the one appointed governor who laid the temple foundation. His identity has been debated—some equate him with Zerubbabel, others with Shenazzar (1 Chronicles 3:18), still others see him as a distinct person. The Babylonian name probably means 'Shamash-protect-the-son' or similar.

(2×) The leader of the first wave of Jewish returnees from Babylon, entrusted with temple vessels and early reconstruction efforts. The occurrences in Ezra 1 are in Hebrew, while those in Ezra 5 are Aramaic, showing the name's stability across both languages. The various Septuagint forms (Sabanassar, Sanabassaros, Sabasares) reflect transliteration challenges. His role in receiving vessels and founding work makes him crucial to restoration history, even if his exact identity and relationship to other leaders remains disputed among scholars. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sheshbatstsar, to-Sheshbatstsar | es: Sesbasar, a-Sesbasar | fr: [לששבצר], [ששבצר] | de: [לששבצר], [ששבצר] Ezra 1:8; Ezra 1:11

שֵׁשְׁבַּצַּר H8340 N-proper-ms (2×)

Sheshbazzar (Aramaic form), the governor who received temple vessels and began reconstruction

This is the Aramaic form of Sheshbazzar appearing in the Aramaic document quoted in Ezra 5. Verse 14 states that Cyrus gave the temple vessels to Sheshbazzar 'whom he had made governor,' while verse 16 reports that 'this Sheshbazzar came and laid the foundation of God's house in Jerusalem.' These verses cite official Persian correspondence about the temple reconstruction authorization. The Aramaic spelling is identical to the Hebrew form, showing the name's consistent rendering across language boundaries in the biblical text.

(2×) The Aramaic designation for the same individual named in Ezra 1, appearing in official correspondence about temple reconstruction. The Aramaic context gives these references a documentary flavor —they're part of quoted Persian archives rather than narrative. The title 'whom he made governor' clarifies Sheshbazzar's official status under Persian administration. The foundation-laying activity in verse 16 establishes him as initiator of the second temple project, though Zerubbabel appears to have completed it. Both occurrences appear in Ezra's Aramaic section (4:8-6:18). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sheshbatstsar, to-Sheshbatstsar | es: Sesbasar, a-Sesbasar | fr: [לששבצר], [ששבצר] | de: [לששבצר], [ששבצר] Ezra 5:14; Ezra 5:16

שִׁשָּׁה H8341 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-2mp (1×)

give a sixth part — to contribute one-sixth as an offering or tax

This denominative verb, derived from the number 'six,' means to give a sixth portion. It appears in Ezekiel 45:13 specifying the grain offering required from the people. The Piel form suggests deliberate action: 'you shall give a sixth of the ephah.' Versions struggled with this rare verb form, leading to textual variants. The concept involves proportional giving, a sixth of the measure being designated for sacred purposes.

(1×) A denominative Piel verb meaning 'to give the sixth part of,' occurring only in Ezekiel 45:13 in the context of prescribed offerings. The verb derives from the numeral 'six' (shesh), creating an action verb for proportional contribution. BDB notes textual variants and versional difficulties, suggesting copyists also found this rare form challenging. The domain 'Nature, Class, Example' reflects the partitive construction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-sixth-of | es: y-sextaréis | fr: et-diviser | de: [וששיתם] Ezek 45:13

שָׂשׂוֹן H8342 N-msc (22×)

Joy, gladness, exultation; festive delight especially in God's favor and salvation.

A noun of pure exultation, almost always tied to divine blessing or communal celebration. It regularly appears paired with simkhah ('joy'), forming a hendiadys of overflowing gladness – as in the wedding songs silenced by judgment (Jer 7:34; 16:9; 25:10) or restored in promise (Jer 33:11). Isaiah uses it to picture salvation as 'oil of gladness' replacing mourning (Isa 61:3) and 'wells of salvation' drawn with joy (Isa 12:3). The German 'Freude' and French 'joie' capture its warmth, while Esther 8:16-17 shows it erupting as national relief after Haman's downfall.

joy, gladness (22×) Exultation, rejoicing, or festive gladness, especially as a response to God's saving acts or covenantal favor. Frequently paired with simkhah in prophetic and liturgical texts – Jeremiah uses the pair to describe both the silencing of joy under judgment (Jer 7:34; 16:9) and its promised restoration (Jer 33:11). The Psalms employ it for spiritual renewal ('restore to me the joy of your salvation,' Ps 51:12) and royal celebration ('oil of gladness,' Ps 45:7). In Esther 8:16-17 it denotes the spontaneous national rejoicing at deliverance. Glosses across languages – 'gladness' (eng), 'gozo/alegría' (spa), 'joie' (fra), 'Freude' (deu) – all point to a single, undivided sense of joyful exultation. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: and-joy, for-joy, gladness | es: alegría, con-gozo, gozo | fr: dans-joie, et-joie, joie | de: Freude, Freude-von, Fröhlichkeit Esth 8:16; Esth 8:17; Ps 45:7; Ps 51:8; Ps 51:12

שָׁשַׁי H8343 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shashay — personal name of a Jew who had married a foreign woman during the exile period

Shashay appears in Ezra 10:40 among those who had taken foreign wives and were required to separate from them during Ezra's reforms. The name may derive from the root for 'six,' though proper names often carry opaque etymology. The Septuagint renders it as Sesei. The listing serves both historical and theological purposes, documenting both the sin and the repentance of the post-exilic community.

(1×) A personal name in Ezra 10:40, identifying a man among those who married foreign women contrary to covenant law. The domain assignment 'Sequence' seems related to the underlying numeral connection, though as a proper name it functions primarily as an identifier. The French gloss 'sixième' (sixth) reflects the etymological connection to the number rather than the name itself. SIXTH ORDINAL NUMBER

en: Shashay | es: Shashai | fr: sixième | de: [ששׁי] Ezra 10:40

שֵׁשַׁי H8344 N-proper-fs (3×)

Sheshai (personal name: son of Anak, giant of Hebron)

Sheshai was one of three sons of Anak—giants living in Hebron when Israel entered Canaan. His name appears in the Aramaic form according to some scholars. Numbers 13:22 lists Sheshai among the Anakim descendants the spies saw in Hebron, contributing to their fearful report. Joshua 15:14 records Caleb driving out Sheshai and his brothers from Hebron. Judges 1:10 repeats the account of Judah defeating the three Anakite brothers. The name marks both an individual and a clan of formidable warriors who controlled Hebron until Israel's conquest.

(3×) Personal name of an Anakite giant. Numbers 13:22 identifies Sheshai as one of Anak's descendants dwelling in Hebron when the twelve spies explored Canaan. Joshua 15:14 reports Caleb expelling Sheshai and his two brothers from Hebron as part of his inheritance. Judges 1:10 confirms Judah struck down the three sons of Anak. The name functions both individually (the person Sheshai) and tribally (his clan), typical of biblical onomastics where personal names extend to descendants. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sheshai | es: Sesai, Sheshai | fr: Sheshai | de: Sheshai Num 13:22; Josh 15:14; Judg 1:10

שִׁשִּׁי H8345 Number-ofsc (28×)

Sixth (ordinal numeral indicating position in sequence); also one-sixth as a fractional measure.

The ordinal number sixth, marking position in sequences throughout the Hebrew Bible – the sixth day of creation (Gen 1:31), the sixth son of a patriarch (Gen 30:19), and the sixth year of a king's reign. In Ezekiel's temple vision, the same form takes on a fractional meaning: one-sixth of a hin of oil or one-sixth of an ephah of grain (Ezek 4:11; 46:14). Translations across languages consistently render the ordinal: Spanish sexto, French sixième, German sechste. The fractional usage is rarer and specific to Ezekiel's precise cultic measurements.

1. sixth (ordinal number) (25×) The ordinal numeral 'sixth,' marking sequential position in lists of days, months, years, persons, or groups. Used for the sixth day of creation when God completed his work and pronounced it very good (Gen 1:31), the sixth son Naphtali (Gen 30:19), and the sixth month or year in various chronological references (Ezek 8:1). Multilingual glosses are uniformly ordinal: Spanish sexto, French sixième, German sechste. SIXTH ORDINAL NUMBER

en: The-sixth, in-the-sixth, the-sixth | es: El-sexto, el-sexto, en-el-sexto | fr: dans-sixième, der-sixième, le-sixième | de: [השׁשׁי], der-Sechste, der-sechste Gen 1:31; Gen 30:19; Exod 16:5; Exod 16:22; Exod 16:29

2. sixth part, one-sixth (fraction) (3×) A fractional quantity meaning one-sixth of a unit of measure, used exclusively in Ezekiel's priestly legislation for offerings and provisions. The sixth part of a hin of wine (Ezek 4:11) and the sixth of an ephah of grain (Ezek 45:13; 46:14) employ this partitive construction. Spanish sexta parte de and English 'sixth of' both signal the shift from ordinal position to measured proportion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: sixth-of | es: sexta-de, sexta-parte-de | fr: sixième | de: sechster Ezek 4:11; Ezek 45:13; Ezek 46:14

שִׁשִּׁים H8346 Conj-w / Number-cp (59×)

Sixty — the cardinal number sixty, used in measurements, ages, counts, and time periods

The indeclinable Hebrew numeral שִׁשִּׁים (sixty) appears 59 times across a wide range of contexts: antediluvian lifespans (Gen 5:15, 18, 20), architectural measurements like the sixty-cubit length of Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6:2), military counts (2 Chr 12:3), and ritual time periods such as the sixty days of purification after bearing a daughter (Lev 12:5). In Song of Songs 3:7, sixty mighty men guard Solomon's litter. The number frequently combines with other digits to form compound ages and measurements throughout the Pentateuch and historical books.

sixty (59×) The cardinal number sixty, used in genealogical ages (Gen 5:15, 21), temple dimensions (1 Kgs 6:2; Ezek 40:14), troop counts, and legal time periods. Translations are straightforwardly numeric: Spanish 'sesenta,' French 'soixante,' German 'sechzig.' The consistency across all 59 occurrences and four original clusters confirms a single, unambiguous numerical sense with no figurative extension. SIXTY CARDINAL NUMBER

en: sixty, sixty- | es: sesenta, sesenta- | fr: soixante, soixante- | de: sechsund-sechzig, sechzig, sechzig- Gen 5:15; Gen 5:18; Gen 5:20; Gen 5:21; Gen 5:23

שֵׁשַׁךְ H8347 N-proper-ms (2×)

Sheshach, a cryptic name for Babylon using the Atbash cipher substitution system

Sheshach appears in Jeremiah as a coded reference to Babylon, employing the Atbash cipher where letters are reversed (first for last, second for second-to-last, etc.). In this system, Babel (בבל) becomes Sheshach (ששך). Jeremiah 25:26 and 51:41 both use this cryptogram, possibly for literary effect, rhetorical indirection, or symbolic purposes. Ancient Jewish and later interpreters recognized the cipher. The Septuagint sometimes transliterates it, other times renders it as 'Babylon,' showing early awareness of the equivalence.

(2×) A literary code name for Babylon created through alphabetic substitution, functioning as a prophetic device to simultaneously reveal and conceal judgment against Babylon. The Atbash system was known in ancient Jewish interpretation and appears elsewhere in Jeremiah (25:26 may be a gloss based on 51:41's original use). The double occurrence allows Jeremiah to name Babylon without naming it directly, perhaps heightening rhetorical impact or providing plausible deniability in a sensitive political context. All modern translations recognize this as Babylon encoded. BABYLON CITY EMPIRE

en: Sheshak | es: Sheshak | fr: [ששך] | de: [ששך] Jer 25:26; Jer 51:41

שֵׁשָׁן H8348 N-proper-ms (5×)

Sheshan; a man of Judah in the genealogy of Jerahmeel who had daughters but no sons

Sheshan is a proper name belonging to a Judahite descendant of Jerahmeel in the Chronicler's genealogy. His narrative is notable for a specific social arrangement: having daughters but no sons, he gave his daughter in marriage to his Egyptian servant Jarha (1 Chr 2:34-35), thus continuing his lineage. All five occurrences cluster in 1 Chronicles 2:31-35. The LXX renders the name variously as Sosan or Sisan, while modern translations — English 'Sheshan,' Spanish 'Sesan,' French 'Scheshan' — maintain consistent transliterations.

(5×) The personal name Sheshan, a Judahite of the Jerahmeelite clan. All five attestations occur in 1 Chr 2:31-35, where the genealogy notes he had no sons but gave his daughter to his Egyptian servant Jarha. The LXX variants Sosan and Sisan, alongside English 'Sheshan,' Spanish 'Sesan,' and French 'Scheshan,' reflect minor transliteration differences but a single, consistent referent across traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Sheshan, and-to-Sheshan, to-Sheshan | es: Sesan, y-a-Sesan | fr: Schéshan, et-Schéshan | de: [ולששן], [לששן], [ששן] 1Chr 2:31; 1Chr 2:34; 1Chr 2:35

שָׁשָׁק H8349 N-proper-ms (2×)

Shashak, a Benjamite name appearing in genealogical lists in 1 Chronicles

Shashak appears in the Benjamite genealogies of 1 Chronicles 8 as the name of one individual mentioned in verses 14 and 25. The name occurs in a genealogical context listing descendants and family heads within Benjamin's tribe. The Septuagint shows variant transliterations (Sokiel, Soiek, Sosek, Sisach), typical of the manuscript instability affecting proper names. One interpretation connects the name to a root meaning 'longed for,' though this is speculative. The individual's specific role or significance beyond genealogical placement is not stated.

(2×) A personal name borne by a Benjamite in the tribal genealogies preserved in Chronicles. The two occurrences in 1 Chronicles 8:14, 25 likely refer to the same person mentioned in different genealogical contexts within the chapter's complex family structure. Spanish 'Sasac' and the various other transliterations attempt to represent the Hebrew consonants in different linguistic systems. The name's etymology remains uncertain despite ancient speculation, and the bearer's historical significance is limited to his place in Benjamin's family records. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shashaq | es: Sasac | fr: [ששק] | de: [ששק] 1Chr 8:14; 1Chr 8:25

שָׁשָׁר H8350 Prep-b (2×)

Vermilion, red pigment (bright red color used for decorative painting or drawing)

This term denotes vermilion, a bright red pigment used in ancient decoration and art. Jeremiah 22:14 condemns the king who builds lavishly, 'painting it with vermilion'—red decoration as a sign of luxury and oppression. Ezekiel 23:14 describes images of Chaldeans 'engraved in vermilion' on a wall, colorful depictions that seduce Jerusalem. The pigment may derive from red ochre or kermes insect dye. The Septuagint uses 'miltos' (red ochre) and the Vulgate 'sinopis' (from Sinope, source of the pigment), showing ancient recognition of this as a red coloring substance.

(2×) A bright red pigment or dye used for decorative purposes in buildings and artwork, associated with luxury and foreign influence. Both prophetic passages use vermilion painting negatively: Jeremiah links it to exploitative building projects, while Ezekiel connects it to idolatrous fascination with Babylonian imagery. Spanish 'bermellón' directly translates the English 'vermilion,' both referring to this distinctive red color. The construct phrase 'engraved/painted in vermilion' shows its use as a coloring medium applied to surfaces. RED AND SCARLET

en: in-vermilion, with-the-vermillion | es: con-bermellon, con-bermellón | fr: [בששר], vermillon | de: [בששר] Jer 22:14; Ezek 23:14

שֵׁאת H8351 N-proper-ms (1×)

Sheth — likely a personal name (possibly Seth), though BDB suggests 'din of battle' as alternative meaning

This enigmatic word in Numbers 24:17 has sparked considerable debate. Balaam's oracle speaks of striking 'the corners of Moab and the sons of Sheth.' Most versions treat Sheth as a proper name (possibly the line of Seth, representing humanity). However, BDB proposes it might mean 'battle-din' or 'warriors,' based on a connection to the word for uproar. The parallel in Jeremiah 48:45 offers some support for this reading, though the ambiguity remains.

(1×) Occurring in Numbers 24:17 in Balaam's oracle, this term is traditionally understood as the proper name Sheth (Seth), referring either to the patriarch or symbolically to a people group. Alternative interpretations suggest 'din of battle' or 'tumult,' making 'sons of tumult' mean 'warriors.' The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate as a name, following the versional tradition, though the semantic ambiguity in the Hebrew has never been fully resolved. SHETH PERSONAL NAME

en: Sheth | es: Set | fr: Sheth | de: Sheth Num 24:17

שֵׁת H8352 N-proper-ms (8×)

Seth: the third son of Adam and Eve, appointed as a replacement for Abel after Cain's fratricide, ancestor of the line leading to Noah.

The proper name of Adam and Eve's third son, born after Cain murdered Abel. Eve named him Seth, explaining 'God has appointed for me another offspring in place of Abel' (Gen 4:25), linking the name to the root shit meaning 'to set, appoint.' Through Seth runs the genealogical line from Adam to Noah recorded in Genesis 5, making him the ancestor of all post-Flood humanity. The Septuagint renders the name as Seth, and this form passed into all major translation traditions. Numbers 24:17 mentions 'sons of Seth' in Balaam's oracle, though some scholars emend this to 'sons of tumult.'

Sheth (8×) The masculine proper noun Seth (שֵׁת), naming the son born to Adam and Eve as divinely appointed replacement for the slain Abel (Gen 4:25-26). The name is popularly connected to the verb shit ('to set, place, appoint'), reflecting Eve's declaration that God 'set' another seed for her. The genealogy of Genesis 5:3-8 traces Seth's line through Enosh and onward to Noah, establishing him as the progenitor of the faithful line of humanity. He appears in 1 Chronicles 1:1 at the head of the genealogical record. In Numbers 24:17, Balaam's prophecy mentions 'all the sons of Seth,' though this may be a textual variant for 'tumult' (se'et). Translations are remarkably uniform: Greek Seth, Spanish 'Set,' French 'Seth,' German 'Schet'—all preserving the Hebrew consonants. SHETH PERSONAL NAME

en: And-to-Sheth, Sheth | es: Set, Y-a-Set | fr: Et-à-Sheth, Seth, Sheth | de: Schet, Schets, [שת] Gen 4:25; Gen 4:26; Gen 5:3; Gen 5:4; Gen 5:6

שֵׁת H8353 Number-fs (2×)

Six (Aramaic numeral), the number six in Daniel and Ezra

This is the Aramaic form of the number six, appearing twice in the Aramaic sections of the Hebrew Bible. Ezra 6:15 dates the temple completion to 'year six' of Darius, while Daniel 3:1 describes Nebuchadnezzar's golden image as sixty cubits high (where 'six' forms part of 'sixty'). The form differs from the Hebrew shesh but represents the same numeral. This demonstrates how Aramaic portions of biblical books use corresponding Aramaic vocabulary even for basic numbers.

(2×) The Aramaic cardinal number six, functioning identically to its Hebrew counterpart. In Ezra it appears in a dating formula ('year six'), while in Daniel it combines to form 'sixty' in a measurement. The glosses show translational variation: French 'Seth' may confuse it with the proper name, while 'six' and 'seis' correctly render the numeral. The context in both passages is administrative or descriptive rather than symbolic, using six for straightforward counting or measurement purposes. SIX CARDINAL NUMBER

en: six | es: seis | fr: Seth, six | de: [שת], setzte Ezra 6:15; Dan 3:1

שָׁתָה H8354 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConjImperf.h-1cp (217×)

To drink, consume liquid; the basic act of drinking water, wine, or any beverage, including participial use for habitual drinkers.

Shatah is the standard Hebrew verb for drinking and appears across virtually every narrative and legal context where liquids are consumed. From Noah drinking wine after the flood (Gen 9:21) to Elijah drinking from the brook Cherith (1 Kgs 17:6), the word carries a satisfying physical concreteness. It pairs naturally with 'akal ('to eat') in the formulaic 'they ate and drank' that punctuates covenant meals, festivals, and acts of hospitality throughout the Old Testament. The participial form can become substantival — 'drinkers of wine' (Joel 1:5), 'drinkers of beer' (Isa 24:9) — naming a person by their characteristic activity. Spanish beber, Arabic shariba, Korean masida (마시다), and Swahili -nywa all map onto this verb with remarkable consistency, reflecting the universal simplicity of the act it names.

1. drink, consume liquid (209×) The core verbal sense: to drink, consume a liquid. At 209 occurrences this covers all finite forms (perfect, imperfect, imperative, jussive, consecutive) and infinitives denoting the act of drinking water, wine, milk, or any beverage. Found in hospitality scenes (Gen 24:14, 'drink, and I will water your camels'), covenant meals (Gen 26:30, 'they ate and drank'), prophetic sign-acts (Ezek 4:11), and legal regulations (Num 6:3, the Nazirite shall not drink wine). The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform: Spanish beber, French boire, German trinken, Arabic shariba, Korean masida (마시다), Swahili -nywa — all select the unmarked, basic 'consume liquid' verb, confirming this as a single undifferentiated core sense rather than multiple sub-senses. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: to-drink | es: a-beber, beber, de-beber | fr: boire, pour-boire, à-boire | de: trank, trinken, zu-trinke Gen 9:21; Gen 24:54; Gen 25:34; Gen 26:30; Gen 27:25

2. drinker, one who drinks (7×) Substantival participle: drinker, one who drinks — 7 occurrences where the Qal participle functions as an agentive noun characterizing a person by their drinking. Joel 1:5 summons 'all drinkers of wine' to weep; Psalm 69:12 laments becoming the song of 'drinkers of strong drink'; Ezekiel 31:14, 16 speaks of trees among 'drinkers of water' (i.e., well-watered trees personified). Spanish bebedores, Korean masineun ja (마시는 자, 'one who drinks'), and Arabic sharibun all shift to nominal or participial-agentive forms, confirming the substantival function is cross-linguistically marked as distinct from the verbal action itself. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: The-ones-drinking, drinkers-of, drinkers-of- | es: Los-que-beben, bebedor-de, bebedores-de | fr: [השתים], [שתי], boire | de: trank, trinken Ps 69:12; Isa 24:9; Ezek 31:14; Ezek 31:16; Joel 1:5

3. (1×) Passive or stative usage: to be drunk, to be consumed as liquid. A single occurrence at Lev 11:34 where the Niphal or passive sense appears — 'every drink that may be drunk' in the context of clean/unclean food laws. The passive framing shifts focus from the agent drinking to the liquid being consumed, and the cross-lingual renderings (Spanish se beba, English 'is drunk') consistently use passive constructions, marking this as a functionally distinct voice-driven sense even at minimal attestation. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: is-drunk | es: se-beba | fr: est-drunk | de: ist-drunk Lev 11:34

שְׁתֵה H8355 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

to drink (Aramaic); to consume liquid, especially wine at a royal banquet

The Aramaic verb for drinking, cognate with Hebrew 'shatah.' All five occurrences appear in Daniel 5, at Belshazzar's fateful feast: the king was 'drinking' wine (Dan 5:1), commanded that vessels be brought so they 'might drink' (Dan 5:2-3), and 'they drank' from the sacred temple vessels (Dan 5:4, 23). Spanish 'bebía/bebieron' (was drinking/they drank) and French 'boire/il-a-bu' (to drink/he drank) confirm the straightforward consumption sense. The concentrated context gives this verb a single, ominous coloring — sacrilegious feasting on the eve of divine judgment.

(5×) To drink, to consume a beverage, specifically wine at a banquet. All five attestations occur in the account of Belshazzar's feast (Dan

5:1-23), where the king and his court drink wine from the plundered Jerusalem temple vessels. Spanish 'bebía/bebieron' and French 'boire/il-a-bu' confirm the basic consumption sense. The restricted context gives the verb an association with sacrilegious excess — drinking from holy vessels on the night Babylon falls. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: and-drank, and-they-may-drink, drinking | es: bebieron, bebía, bebíais | fr: boire, et-boire, il-a-bu | de: [אשתיו], [ואשתיו], [וישתון] Dan 5:1; Dan 5:2; Dan 5:3; Dan 5:4; Dan 5:23

שָׁת H8356 N-mpc / 3fs (2×)

Foundations, supports, basic structures (what undergirds society, law, or physical structures)

This plural noun denotes foundations or fundamental supports, used both literally and figuratively. Psalm 11:3 asks 'if the foundations are destroyed, what can the righteous do?'—probably referring to social order, laws, or moral structures rather than physical buildings. Isaiah 19:10 is textually uncertain, possibly meaning 'its foundations' (referring to Egypt's social classes or working people) or, with emendation, 'its weavers.' The root connects to 'set, place, establish,' making foundations or fundamental structures the core meaning.

(2×) The underlying supports or basic structures of society, whether legal norms, social order, or possibly social classes. Psalm 11:3 uses architectural metaphor for societal stability—when fundamental structures collapse, righteous action becomes impossible. The Isaiah passage remains disputed; if correct, it refers to Egypt's social or economic foundations being shaken. Spanish 'fundamentos' directly captures the foundational sense. The term moves beyond physical building foundations to represent whatever undergirds communal life and order. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: its-foundations, the-foundations | es: los-fundamentos, sus-fundamentos | fr: [שתתיה], le-fondement | de: [שתתיה], der-Grundfesten Ps 11:3; Isa 19:10

שֵׁת H8357 N-mpc / 3mp (2×)

Buttocks, seat of the body, the posterior (euphemistic term for the private parts)

This noun denotes the buttocks or posterior, used in contexts involving shame or exposure. Second Samuel 10:4 describes Hanun humiliating David's envoys by cutting their garments 'to the buttocks,' exposing them shamefully. Isaiah 20:4 prophesies that Egypt and Cush will be led away by Assyria 'with buttocks uncovered,' depicting the shame of captive nakedness. The term functions as a euphemism for the private parts, focusing on the shameful exposure of what should be covered. Related forms exist in Aramaic and may connect to words for 'foundation' or 'seat.'

(2×) The posterior or buttocks, specifically in contexts of shameful exposure or deliberate humiliation. Both passages concern intentional uncovering or exposure as a form of degradation: David's men are publicly shamed, Egyptian/Cushite captives are stripped. Spanish uses 'nalgas' (buttocks) and 'vergüenza' (shame/private parts), capturing both the anatomical and social dimensions. The term belongs to the vocabulary of honor and shame cultures where bodily exposure constituted serious insult. It's more specific than general words for nakedness, focusing on a particular area of vulnerability. FLESH AND BODY

en: buttock, their-buttocks | es: sus-nalgas, vergüenza | fr: [שת], leur-buttocks | de: [שת], ihr-buttocks 2Sam 10:4; Isa 20:4

שְׁתִי H8358 Prep-b (1×)

drinking, drunkenness — the act or state of consuming alcoholic beverages, particularly to excess

This noun denotes drinking or a drinking-bout, appearing in Ecclesiastes 10:17 in a contrast between wise and foolish leadership. The wise land's princes 'eat for strength and not for drunkenness' (literally 'in drunkenness'). The prepositional phrase 'in drunkenness' suggests the circumstance or manner of eating. Qohelet's concern is not abstinence but propriety and self-control, especially for those in positions of authority.

(1×) The noun occurs with a preposition in Ecclesiastes 10:17, describing the inappropriate manner of royal feasting—'in drunkenness' as opposed to eating 'for strength.' The term captures both the act of drinking and its excess. The domain 'Physiological Processes and States' appropriately reflects the bodily dimension of intoxication, a recurring concern in biblical wisdom literature regarding self-governance. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: in-drunkenness | es: en-embriaguez | fr: בשתי | de: [בשתי] Eccl 10:17

שְׁתִי H8359 Art / N-ms (9×)

Warp: the lengthwise threads set in a loom through which the woof is woven crosswise.

A technical weaving term denoting the set of threads stretched lengthwise on a loom, forming the fixed framework through which the crosswise woof (ereb) is interlaced. All nine occurrences appear in Leviticus 13:48-59, within the priestly regulations for diagnosing and treating textile contamination (tsara'at). The pairing with 'ereb' (woof) in every instance shows that Israelite priests needed precise textile vocabulary to examine garments fiber by fiber. Spanish 'urdimbre' and English 'warp' both preserve this ancient loom-technology distinction.

in the warp (9×) The warp of a loom — the vertical, preset threads through which the shuttle carrying the woof passes horizontally. Exclusively found in the Levitical purity legislation of Lev 13:48-59, where a priest inspects whether a leprous mark has spread 'in the warp or in the woof' of linen or wool garments. The consistent multilingual rendering (Spanish 'urdimbre,' French 'chaîne du tissu') confirms the concrete, technical textile meaning with no metaphorical extension in the biblical corpus. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: in-the-warp, in-warp, the-warp | es: en-la-urdimbre, en-urdimbre, la-urdimbre | fr: dans-le-warp, dans-warp, le-warp | de: der-warp, in-der-warp, in-warp Lev 13:48; Lev 13:49; Lev 13:51; Lev 13:52; Lev 13:53

שְׁתִיָּה H8360 Conj-w (1×)

drinking (manner/amount) — the mode or quantity of beverage consumption, especially at feasts

This feminine noun appears in Esther 1:8, describing the drinking arrangements at King Ahasuerus's banquet. The text specifies that 'the drinking was according to law' or custom, meaning no one was compelled to drink more than desired. The word emphasizes the manner of consumption rather than the beverages themselves. Persian royal hospitality could be lavish yet regulated, and this detail adds cultural texture to the narrative.

(1×) Occurring in Esther 1:8 with reference to the Persian king's feast, this noun denotes the manner or amount of drinking. The phrase 'and the drinking [was] according to law' indicates organized, customary drinking practices rather than forced consumption. This reflects Persian royal protocol and contributes to the portrait of Ahasuerus's court as both opulent and orderly, at least initially. DRINKING AND WATERING

en: and-the-drinking | es: Y-el-beber | fr: [והשתיה] | de: [והשתיה] Esth 1:8

שְׁתִין H8361 Number-cp (4×)

sixty (Aramaic); the number 60, appearing in measurements and chronological references in Ezra and Daniel

This is the Aramaic numeral for sixty, appearing in Ezra and Daniel. Ezra 6:3 uses it twice in Cyrus's decree regarding temple dimensions: 'sixty cubits' for both height and width. Daniel 3:1 describes Nebuchadnezzar's golden image as 'sixty cubits high.' Daniel 5:31 (6:1 in English) notes that Darius the Mede was 'about sixty-two years old' when he received the kingdom. The multilingual glosses transliterate or translate directly (Spanish sesenta, French some transliteration). The number appears in contexts of imperial grandeur—temple dimensions authorized by Persian decree and Babylonian monumental sculpture. Sixty cubits (about 90 feet) represents substantial height, emphasizing the scale of these royal and sacred structures.

(4×) The number sixty (Aramaic) in Ezra and Daniel. Used for temple measurements in Cyrus's decree—sixty cubits high and wide (Ezra 6:3). Nebuchadnezzar's golden image stood sixty cubits tall (Dan 3:1). Darius was sixty-two years old (Dan 5:31). The number appears in imperial contexts—decrees about sacred architecture and ages of kings. Sixty cubits (~90 feet) represents monumental scale, whether for God's temple or a pagan idol, emphasizing the grandeur of these structures. SIXTY CARDINAL NUMBER

en: sixty | es: sesenta | fr: [שתין], mesure | de: [שתין] Ezra 6:3; Dan 3:1; Dan 5:31

שְׁתַל H8362 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (10×)

To transplant or plant firmly; as a passive participle, 'planted' — used poetically of trees, vines, and the righteous

This verb describes the deliberate act of setting a plant or tree into soil so it takes deep root. It appears almost exclusively in poetic and prophetic contexts. The famous image of the righteous person 'planted by streams of water' in Psalm 1:3 and Jeremiah 17:8 uses the passive participle of this verb, as does Psalm 92:13's picture of the righteous flourishing when 'planted in the house of the LORD.' Ezekiel employs it for God's sovereign transplanting of a cedar sprig on a high mountain (Ezek 17:22-23) and for Judah as a vine planted by abundant waters (Ezek 17:8, 10; 19:10, 13).

to plant, to be planted (10×) To transplant or plant firmly in the ground, used of trees and vines set in soil to take root and flourish. The passive participle 'planted' (shatuul) appears in the beloved wisdom image of Psalm 1:3 and Jeremiah 17:8 — the righteous one 'planted by streams of water.' Psalm 92:13 extends this to those 'planted in the house of the LORD.' Ezekiel uses the active forms for God's sovereign act of transplanting a cedar sprig (Ezek 17:22-23) and describes Israel as a vine planted beside abundant waters (Ezek 17:8, 10; 19:10, 13). The root carries overtones of deliberate, purposeful establishment. PLANTING VEGETATION

en: I-will-plant-it, and-I-will-plant, planted | es: Plantados, lo-plantaré, plantada | fr: [שתול], et-planter, planter | de: [אשתלנו], [ושתלתי], [שתול] Ps 1:3; Ps 92:13; Jer 17:8; Ezek 17:8; Ezek 17:10

שְׁתִיל H8363 Prep-k / N-mpc (1×)

transplanted shoots/slips — young plants that have been transplanted, used metaphorically for children

This agricultural term appears in Psalm 128:3, where children are compared to 'olive slips' or transplanted shoots around the family table. The imagery draws on viticulture and horticulture: young plants carefully transplanted to flourish. Just as olive shoots promise future fruit and oil, so children represent generational blessing and continuity. The simile beautifully captures both vulnerability and productive potential.

(1×) The construct plural 'slips of olive' in Psalm 128:3 uses horticultural imagery for children. Transplanted shoots were carefully nurtured to ensure growth, making them an apt metaphor for offspring who carry forward the family line. The cross-linguistic glosses uniformly recognize the plant imagery, with slight variations in specificity (shoots, plants, slips). The domain 'Nature, Class, Example' reflects the simile structure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-plants-of | es: como-plantas-de | fr: comme-plant | de: wie-plants-of Ps 128:3

שִׁתַלְחִי H8364 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Shuthelahite — gentilic adjective denoting descendants of Shuthelah, used collectively for the clan

This gentilic (clan designation) appears in Numbers 26:35 in the census of Ephraim's clans. The form 'the Shuthelahite' with the definite article functions collectively, referring to all descendants of Shuthelah. These genealogical markers were crucial for tribal identity, land inheritance, and military organization. The census context emphasizes that Israel's strength lay not just in numbers but in the preservation of family lines through wilderness wandering.

(1×) A gentilic adjective with the definite article in Numbers 26:35, denoting the clan descended from Shuthelah of Ephraim. The collective use ('the Shuthelahite' = all the Shuthelahites) is standard for census lists. Multilingual versions consistently preserve the gentilic form with appropriate articles, recognizing this as a clan designation rather than an individual name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Shuthelahite | es: los-sutelajitas | fr: le-Shuthelahite | de: der-Shuthelahite Num 26:35

שְׁתָם H8365 Adj-msc (2×)

Opened (of the eye), having sight or vision (disputed between opened and closed interpretations)

This adjective appears only in Balaam's oracles in Numbers 24:3, 15, describing him as 'the man whose eye is opened.' The meaning is disputed: most moderns read 'opened of eye' (mental/spiritual perception), while some ancient versions and scholars read 'closed of eye' (physically blind but spiritually seeing) by implicitly changing the root. The context favors 'opened'—Balaam has supernatural vision to see what God reveals. The phrase parallels 'whose eye sees the vision of the Almighty,' supporting the opened interpretation.

(2×) A state of having one's eye opened to perceive divine revelation, characterizing Balaam's supernatural visionary capacity. Both occurrences in Numbers 24:3, 15 introduce Balaam's oracles with identical phrases, emphasizing his ability to see beyond normal perception. The scholarly debate (opened vs. closed) affects interpretation: is Balaam physically blind with compensating spiritual sight, or specially gifted with enhanced perception? The Hebrew supports 'opened,' and the parallel with seeing God's vision confirms this. Spanish 'abierto' (opened) aligns with this understanding. OPENING AND SHUTTING

en: opened | es: abierto-de | fr: ouvrit | de: oeffnete Num 24:3; Num 24:15

שָׁתַן H8366 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (6×)

Urinate; Hiphil participle used idiomatically in 'one who urinates against a wall' to mean 'any male.'

This Hiphil participle of shatan appears exclusively in the fixed expression mashtin beqir ('one who urinates against a wall'), a vivid Hebrew idiom for 'any male person.' It occurs six times, always in contexts where a dynasty or household faces total annihilation – not a single male will be left alive. The idiom appears in judgments against Nabal's house (1 Sam 25:22, 34) and against the royal houses of Jeroboam (1 Kgs 14:10), Baasha (1 Kgs 16:11), and Ahab (1 Kgs 21:21; 2 Kgs 9:8). Spanish orinante and French un-urinant confirm the literal rendering across languages, though the idiomatic force is what matters.

urinate (one who urinates) (6×) One who urinates, used idiomatically in the phrase 'one who urinates against a wall' as a graphic designation for any male person. All six occurrences appear in contexts of threatened or executed total destruction of a household's males. David swears against Nabal's men (1 Sam 25:22, 34), and prophetic judgments against Israelite dynasties employ the same formula (1 Kgs 14:10; 16:11; 21:21; 2 Kgs 9:8). The multilingual glosses (Spanish orinante/meante, French un-urinant) all render the participle literally, preserving the crude vividness of the idiom that serves as a euphemism-in-reverse for 'every last male.' FLESH AND BODY

en: one-urinating, one-who-urinates | es: meante, orinando, orinante | fr: un-qui-urinates, un-urinant | de: eins-urinating, eins-wer-urinates 1Sam 25:22; 1Sam 25:34; 1Kgs 14:10; 1Kgs 16:11; 1Kgs 21:21

שְׁתַק H8367 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3ms (4×)

be still, become quiet; to calm down or cease, whether of sea, strife, or tumult

This verb means to become still, quiet, or calm, appearing in late biblical Hebrew. Jonah 1:11-12 twice asks 'What shall we do to you, that the sea may become still?' when the storm rages. Psalm 107:30 celebrates that when sailors cry to the LORD, 'they are stilled' (the seas calm). Proverbs 26:20 notes that 'where there is no whisperer, strife ceases/is stilled.' The multilingual glosses (Spanish calmarse, French se taire 'be quiet/silent', German still werden) capture the calming, quieting sense. This verb describes the transition from turbulence to tranquility—whether literal seas calming, human conflict ceasing, or general tumult subsiding. It's the blessed moment when chaos yields to peace.

(4×) To become still, quiet, or calm; to cease from turbulence. The stormy sea becomes still when Jonah is thrown overboard (Jonah 1:11-12). God stills the sea in answer to sailors' prayers (Ps 107:30). Strife ceases when there's no gossip to fuel it (Prov 26:20). The verb marks transition from agitation to tranquility, whether of natural forces (seas) or human conflict (quarrels). It emphasizes the cessation of disturbance, the moment turbulence yields to peace. SILENCE AND SECRECY

en: and-will-be-still, is-stilled, that-may-be-still | es: cesa, se-calmaron, y-se-calmara | fr: et-se-taire, se-taire, ישתק | de: sie-waren-noch, und-wurde-still, wurde-still Ps 107:30; Prov 26:20; Jonah 1:11; Jonah 1:12

שְׁתַר H8368 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3mp (1×)

broke out — to burst forth, used of tumors erupting on the Philistines when they possessed the ark

This Niphal verb describes the outbreak of tumors that afflicted the Philistines in 1 Samuel 5:9 after they captured the ark of the covenant. The verb suggests sudden, violent emergence—tumors 'broke out' on them as divine judgment. The root appears in related Semitic languages meaning to tear or destroy, fitting the traumatic nature of the plague. The incident demonstrates that Israel's God could not be confined or treated as a trophy.

(1×) The Niphal consecutive imperfect in 1 Samuel 5:9 describes tumors breaking out on the Philistines as punishment for taking the ark. The verb conveys sudden, forceful emergence, related to tearing or bursting. Cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish 'brotaron,' French 'brisa dehors') captures the outbreak imagery. The domain 'Linear Movement' seems less precise than 'Physical Events' or 'Health,' but may reflect the directional sense of 'breaking out.' GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-broke-out | es: y-brotaron | fr: et-brisa-dehors | de: und-brach-heraus 1Sam 5:9

שְׁתָר H8369 N-proper-ms (1×)

Shethar — personal name of one of the seven Persian princes who had access to King Ahasuerus

Shethar is named in Esther 1:14 as one of seven nobles of Persia and Media who 'saw the king's face'—that is, had direct access to the monarch. These seven formed the king's inner council, and their opinion was sought regarding Queen Vashti's refusal. The Persian names throughout Esther lend historical authenticity to the narrative. That seven specific counselors are named reflects Persian administrative structure.

(1×) A personal name in Esther 1:14, identifying one of the seven Persian princes with privileged access to King Ahasuerus. The Septuagint rendering 'Sarsathaios' shows how Greek struggled with Persian names. As a proper name, it functions purely as an identifier, though the listing of all seven counselors by name emphasizes the official, courtly nature of the deliberations about Vashti. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Shethar | es: Setar | fr: [שתר] | de: [שתר] Esth 1:14

שְׁתַר בּוֹזְנַי H8370 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)

Shetar-Boznai; a Persian official who, alongside Tattenai, investigated the Jewish temple rebuilding under Darius.

A compound Persian proper name referring to an official who served under the governor Tattenai in the Trans-Euphrates province during the reign of Darius I. Shetar-Boznai appears in Ezra 5-6 as part of the administrative inquiry into whether the Jews had royal authorization to rebuild the Jerusalem temple. After Darius confirmed Cyrus's original decree, Shetar-Boznai was among those ordered to support rather than hinder the construction. The name may derive from Old Iranian, possibly meaning 'empire-delivering' (Scheftlowitz) or containing the element Mithra (Andreas-Marquart). All six occurrences cluster in Ezra 5:3, 5:6, 6:6, and 6:13.

Shetar-Boznay (Persian official) (6×) The personal name Shetar-Boznai, a Persian official in the Trans-Euphrates province. He appears exclusively in Ezra 5-6, first questioning the authority behind Jerusalem's temple reconstruction (Ezra 5:3, 6), then receiving Darius's order to support it (Ezra 6:6, 13). Spanish Setar-Boznai and French renderings preserve the compound form. The name's Iranian etymology is debated but may mean 'empire-delivering' or contain the theophoric element Mithra, reflecting Persian administrative naming conventions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bozenay, Shetar, and-Shetar-Boznay | es: Boznai, Shetar, y-Setar-Boznai | fr: [בוזני], [ושתר בוזני], [שתר] | de: [בוזני], [ושתר בוזני], [שתר] Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:6; Ezra 6:6; Ezra 6:13

שָׁתַת H8371 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (2×)

To be appointed, set, placed (poetic parallel to 'set' or 'place,' indicating assignment or positioning)

This poetic verb means to set, appoint, or place, functioning as a variant of the more common 'set.' Psalm 49:14 pictures the wicked: 'like sheep they are appointed for Sheol'—destined or assigned to the grave. Psalm 73:9 describes arrogant speech: 'they set their mouth in the heavens'—a bold claiming of divine prerogative. The verb appears only in these two Psalms and functions as a poetic synonym for the common verb 'to place/set,' possibly distinguished by phonological or metrical considerations in poetry.

(2×) The act of setting, appointing, or positioning something, used poetically where prose would employ the standard verb 'to place.' In Psalm 49:14 the subject is likely impersonal or divine (they are appointed/destined), though the Hebrew could be read with the wicked as subject. Psalm 73:9's 'set in the heavens' depicts presumptuous speech claiming cosmic authority. Spanish uses 'ponen' (they place/set) and 'son puestos' (they are appointed), capturing both active and passive nuances. The limitation to poetic contexts suggests this as an elevated or archaic variant of common vocabulary. PLACING AND LAYING

en: they-are-appointed, they-set | es: Ponen, son-puestos | fr: se-placer | de: sie-setzen, sie-sind-bestimmt Ps 49:14; Ps 73:9

תָּא H8372 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3ms (17×)

chamber, guard room — a side room flanking a gate complex in temple or palace architecture

Ta' designates the small chambers or alcoves built into the gate structures of Ezekiel's visionary temple and, in one earlier reference, the guard room of Solomon's palace (1 Kgs 14:28). Of its 17 occurrences, 15 cluster within Ezekiel 40, where the prophet measures three chambers on each side of every gate. BDB notes the word may be an Aramaism, cognate with Aramaic tawan and Arabic thawa ('to dwell'), pointing to a lodging-place or enclosed room. The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'camaras,' German 'Kammer,' English 'chambers' — uniformly reflect this architectural sense.

guard chamber, side room (17×) A small, enclosed room built into the side of a monumental gateway, used as a guard station or side chamber. Nearly all occurrences describe the three-chambered gate alcoves in Ezekiel's temple vision (Ezek 40:7-36), with the earliest attestation in the 'chamber of the guards' (ta' haratzsim) at Solomon's palace (1 Kgs 14:28; 2 Chr 12:11). The Aramaic cognate tawan confirms the sense of a lodging-place or enclosed room within a larger structure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv], and-chambers-of, and-its-chambers | es: (sus-cámaras), (y-sus-cámaras), Y-cámaras-de | fr: [התא], [התאות], [התאים] | de: Kammer, chamber-von, und-Kammer 1Kgs 14:28; 2Chr 12:11; Ezek 40:7; Ezek 40:10

תָּאַב H8373 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (2×)

To long for, yearn for, desire deeply (expressing intense spiritual longing or desire)

This verb expresses intense longing or deep desire, appearing only in Psalm 119 in both occurrences. Verse 40 declares 'I long for your precepts,' while verse 174 states 'I long for your salvation, O Lord.' Both express passionate spiritual desire for God's law and deliverance. The verb may derive from the root 'be willing' or possibly from a noun for 'desire,' and cognates in Aramaic and Late Hebrew carry similar meanings of longing. The intensity distinguishes it from milder words for wanting.

(2×) Intense spiritual longing or fervent desire, specifically directed toward divine things in both biblical occurrences. Psalm 119's acrostic structure uses this verb to express yearning for God's word (precepts) and saving action. Spanish 'anhelé' (I yearned) and 'anhelar' (to yearn) convey the intensity of desire beyond mere preference. The first-person form and direct address to God make these highly personal expressions of devotion. The verb's rarity and limitation to this Psalm suggests elevated or intensive register compared to common words for wanting. DESIRE AND COVETING
en: I-long | es: Anhelé, anhelé | fr: désirer | de: ich-lang Ps 119:40; Ps 119:174

תָּעַב H8374 V-Piel-Prtcpl-ms (1×)
abhor — to regard with disgust or loathing, particularly in ritual or moral contexts
This intensive (Piel) verb expresses strong revulsion or abhorrence. Amos 6:8 records God's declaration: 'I abhor the pride of Jacob.' The verb appears in both ritual contexts (unclean things) and ethical ones (corruption, injustice). The intensity of the Piel form underscores not mere dislike but profound rejection. When God abhors something, covenant relationship is threatened. The prophetic use typically targets pride, idolatry, and social injustice.

(1×) The Piel participle in Amos 6:8 expresses Yahweh's abhorrence of Jacob's pride (arrogance, self-sufficiency). BDB notes the verb appears in both ritual contexts (abhorred/unclean things) and ethical ones. The participle form 'I [am one who] abhors' suggests an ongoing state or settled attitude. Spanish 'Aborrezco' and French 'dégoûter' capture the visceral rejection, while the domain 'Attitudes and Emotions' appropriately reflects the strong affective dimension. LOATHING ABHORRENCE en: I-abhor | es: Aborrezco | fr: dégoûter | de: [מתאב] Amos 6:8

תַּאֲבָה H8375 Prep-l / N-fs (1×)
longing — intense desire or craving, used of yearning for God's judgments
This noun denotes intense longing or desire. Psalm 119:20 reads literally 'my soul is crushed with longing for your judgments at all times.' The psalmist's desire for God's Torah is not casual interest but consuming passion. The physical language ('crushed') paired with 'longing' suggests desire so intense it becomes painful. This stands in stark contrast to indifference or dutiful obligation in religious observance.

(1×) The noun appears in Psalm 119:20, describing the psalmist's intense longing for God's ordinances. The phrase 'my soul is crushed with longing' combines physical and emotional imagery to convey desire that is almost painful in its intensity. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'anhelo,' French 'désir,' German 'Sehnsucht') all capture the affective yearning. This exemplifies Torah piety as passionate relationship rather than mere duty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: with-longing | es: de-anhelo | fr: à-désir | de: mit-Sehnsucht Ps 119:20

תָּאָה H8376 V-Piel-Imperf-2mp (2×)
To mark out, designate, trace (a boundary line), delineate (textually uncertain verb)
This verb apparently means to mark out or trace a boundary, though the exact meaning is uncertain and the text may be corrupt. Numbers 34:7, 8 use it in describing Israel's northern boundary: 'you shall mark out your line to Mount Hor' and 'from Mount Hor you shall mark to Lebo-hamath.' The context clearly involves boundary delineation, but the Hebrew root is problematic. Some connect it to a root for desire (making little sense here), others suggest textual emendation, or association with 'to describe/trace' from another root. The uncertainty is reflected in scholarly caution.

(2×) The action of tracing or marking out a territorial boundary line, assuming the text is correct or represents an otherwise unknown root meaning 'delineate.' Both occurrences in Numbers 34:7-8 involve the northern boundary description with clear geographical markers. Spanish 'marcaréis' (you shall mark) and French/German equivalents attempt to render a boundary-marking sense. The second-person plural imperative form addresses the Israelites receiving boundary instructions. Despite textual uncertainty, the geographical context makes boundary delineation the necessary sense, however the Hebrew is to be explained. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: you-shall-mark-out | es: marcaréis | fr: tu-devra-mark-dehors | de: du-soll-zeichnen-heraus Num 34:7; Num 34:8

תְּאוֹ H8377 Prep-k / N-msc (2×)
Antelope, oryx, wild ox (a clean wild animal, possibly the Arabian oryx or similar species)
This noun designates a type of antelope or wild ox, listed among clean animals permitted for food. Deuteronomy 14:5 includes it in the catalog of edible wild game. Isaiah 51:20 uses it in simile: 'your sons lie helpless like an antelope in a net'—a wild animal trapped and unable to escape, depicting Jerusalem's helpless state. Scholars debate the precise species: possibly the Arabian oryx (oryx leucoryx) or another antelope species. The name may relate to a root suggesting strength or wildness.

(2×) A wild bovine or antelope species, clean for consumption and known for strength or beauty. The Deuteronomy passage is taxonomic (listing permitted animals), while Isaiah's usage is metaphorical (sons helpless as trapped game). Spanish distinguishes 'antílope' and 'oryx,' reflecting scholarly uncertainty about species identification. The prepositional construction 'like an antelope' in Isaiah shows typical simile usage. The animal's wildness makes it effective for depicting both providential provision (clean food) and tragic helplessness (trapped despite natural strength). DEER AND GAZELLE
en: and-oryx, like-antelope | es: como-antílope, y-antilope | fr: [כתוא], et-oryx | de: [כתוא], und-oryx Deut 14:5; Isa 51:20

תַּאֲוָה H8378 Conj-w / N-fsc (21×)
Desire, craving, longing; the quality of being desirable; as a Piel verb, to actively desire something.
This feminine noun from the root אוה ('to desire, crave') spans the full emotional spectrum of human wanting. It can describe the wholesome longing of a righteous heart — 'the desire of the righteous is only good' (Prov 11:23) — or the destructive craving that drove Israel to demand meat in the wilderness, giving Kibroth-hattaavah ('graves of craving') its ominous name (Num 11:34). The German 'Verlangen' (longing) and Spanish 'deseo' both reflect the core meaning, while the single Genesis 3:6 occurrence — where the forbidden tree was 'desirable' to make one wise — reveals how desire can attach to objects themselves as a perceived quality.

1. desire, wish (11×) A neutral or general desire, wish, or hope — something one wants without inherent moral coloring. In Proverbs 13:12 'desire fulfilled is a tree of life,' and in Psalm 10:17 God hears the 'desire of the humble.' The Spanish 'deseo' and German 'Verlangen' both capture this broad, everyday wanting. Psalm 21:2 celebrates that God has granted the king 'the desire of his heart,' showing this sense can be thoroughly positive. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-desire, but-the-desire-of, desire | es: Deseo, Deseo-de, El-deseo-de | fr: désir, désir-de, et-désir | de: Verlangen, [ותאות], [תאות] Job 33:20; Ps 10:3; Ps 10:17; Ps 21:2; Ps 112:10

2. craving, lust, appetite (6×) An intense craving, lust, or covetous appetite, especially for physical or forbidden things. Numbers 11:4 describes Israel 'craving a craving' (הִתְאַוּוּ תַּאֲוָה, cognate accusative), and the place-name Kibroth-hattaavah memorializes the deadly cost. Psalm 78:29-30 and 106:14 revisit this wilderness gluttony. Proverbs 21:25-26 warns that the sluggard's 'craving' kills him. The Spanish 'deseo' is identical in form to sense 1, but context makes the darker valence unmistakable. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-craving, and-their-craving, craving | es: Para-deseo, de-deseo-de-ellos, deseo | fr: de-désir, désir, et-désir | de: Verlangen, craving, ein-craving Num 11:4; Ps 78:29; Ps 78:30; Ps 106:14; Prov 18:1

3. longing, yearning (2×) A deep, personal longing or yearning, often directed toward God or expressing heartfelt devotion. Isaiah 26:8 speaks of the soul's yearning for God's name and remembrance — 'the desire of our soul is for your name.' Psalm 38:9 uses it for a groan of spiritual anguish: 'all my longing is before you.' The German 'Sehnsucht' (soul-longing) captures the emotional depth that sets this apart from ordinary wishing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-for-Your-remembrance, my-longing | es: deseo-de, mi-deseo | fr: [תאוות], désir | de: [תאוות], mein-Sehnsucht Ps 38:9; Isa 26:8

4. desirableness, attractiveness (1×) The quality of being desirable or attractive — functioning almost as an adjective. In Genesis 3:6 the forbidden tree was 'desirable (תַּאֲוָה) to make one wise,' describing the object's appeal rather than the subject's emotion. The German 'eine-Lust' (a delight) and Spanish 'deseo' here point to the tree's alluring quality. This single occurrence marks a subtle but important shift from subjective desire to objective desirableness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: desirable- | es: deseo- | fr: desirable- | de: eine-Lust- Gen 3:6

5. to desire (Piel verb) (1×) A verbal (Piel) use meaning to actively desire or choose something. In 1 Samuel 2:16, the priest's servant says 'if the man desires' (יְאַוֶּה), using the verb form rather than the noun. Though the root is the same, the morphology shifts from noun to active verb, indicating the deliberate exercise of preference. The multilingual glosses — English 'desires,' Spanish 'desea' — uniformly treat this as a simple active verb. DESIRE AND COVETING en: desires | es: desea | fr: desires | de: desires 1Sam 2:16

תַּאֲוָה H8379 N-fsc (1×)
desire, boundary — either desirable things or a boundary mark; scholarly debate on meaning in Genesis 49:26
This construct noun in Genesis 49:26 has sparked interpretive debate. The phrase 'desire of the everlasting hills' (traditional) or 'boundary of the everlasting hills' (alternative) both make contextual sense. If 'desire,' it means the desirable things the hills offer (blessing, abundance). If 'boundary,' it refers to geographical extent. Most versions favor 'desire,' fitting the blessing context where Joseph receives the fullness of natural bounty. The root connection to 'mark' or 'desire' allows both readings.

(1×) The construct form in Genesis 49:26 is disputed: either 'desire/desirable things of the everlasting hills' or 'boundary of the everlasting hills.' BDB notes both possibilities, with 'desire' favored by most translations, fitting the accumulation of blessings in Jacob's benediction of Joseph. The multilingual evidence strongly supports 'desire' (Spanish 'deseo,' French 'désirer,' German 'Sehnsucht'), though the semantic ambiguity in the Hebrew root (connecting to both marking and desiring) remains. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: desire-of | es: deseo-de | fr: désirer-de | de: Sehnsucht Gen 49:26

תּוֹאַם H8380 N-mp (4×)
twins; two offspring born together from the same pregnancy, whether human or animal
This noun refers to twins—two born together. Genesis 25:24 describes Rebekah's pregnancy: 'behold, there were twins in her womb' (Jacob and Esau). Genesis 38:27 similarly introduces Tamar's twin sons. Song of Songs uses twins poetically in describing the beloved: 'Your two breasts are like two fawns, twins of a gazelle' (4:5 and 7:3, emphasizing symmetry and pairing). The multilingual glosses (Spanish gemelos/mellizos, French jumeaux, German Zwillinge) consistently translate as twins. In biblical narrative, twins often signal special significance—rivalry between Jacob and Esau, the dramatic birth of Perez and Zerah. In poetry, twinning suggests perfect pairing and symmetry. The double birth marks both ordinary biology and extraordinary destiny.

(4×) Twins—two offspring born together. Describes Jacob and Esau in Rebekah's womb (Gen 25:24) and Tamar's sons by Judah (Gen 38:27). Used poetically in Song of Songs for paired breasts like twin gazelle fawns (4:5, 7:3), emphasizing symmetry and beauty. Biblical twin births often carry narrative significance—Jacob/Esau rivalry, Perez/Zerah's dramatic birth. The term captures both the biological reality of double birth and the literary/theological weight often attached to such pairings. DOUBLE TWOFOLD
en: twins, twins-of | es: gemelos, gemelos-de, mellizos-de | fr: jumeaux, twins | de: Zwillinge, [תאומי], [תאמי] Gen 25:24; Gen 38:27; Song 4:5; Song 7:3

תַּאֲלָה H8381 N-fsc / 2ms (1×)
curse — a pronouncement of judgment or imprecation, here describing divine curse upon Jerusalem
This noun denotes a curse or imprecation. Lamentations 3:65 speaks of giving the enemy 'your curse'—either the curse they deserve or a curse proceeding from God. In Lamentations' theology, Jerusalem's destruction came through divine judgment, yet the poet appeals for that same judgment to fall on the destroyers. The word captures the verbal power of cursing, whether human or divine, to effect harm or judgment.

(1×) The noun with second-person suffix in Lamentations 3:65 means 'your curse'—a curse belonging to or proceeding from God. In context, the sufferer asks God to give the enemy what they deserve: hardness of heart and divine curse. This reflects the imprecatory dimension of biblical prayer, where victims of injustice appeal to God's justice. Multilingual glosses uniformly render 'curse/maldición,' recognizing the judicial-verbal force. CURSES AND ANATHEMA en: Your-curse | es: tu-maldición | fr: [תאלתך] | de: [תאלתך] Lam 3:65

תָּאַם H8382 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-fp (5×)
to be paired, joined as twins; to bear twins; to be coupled together
A denominative verb from 'te'om' (twin), covering both architectural coupling and biological twinning. In Exodus, the tabernacle frames must be 'joined/twinned' at the bottom and complete at the top (Exod 26:24; 36:29) — a precise carpentry term for flush-paired boards. In the Song of Solomon, the beloved's teeth are compared to ewes 'bearing twins' (Song 4:2; 6:6), each tooth perfectly matched with its pair. Spanish captures both senses with 'completos/parejos' (complete/even) for the structural use and 'gemelos' (twins) for the pastoral image.

(5×) To be coupled or joined together as a matching pair, used of the tabernacle frames that must be flush-twinned at both bottom and top (Exod 26:24; 36:29). Spanish 'completos/parejos' and German 'schloss-sich-an' (joined together) reflect the architectural precision of boards perfectly aligned. The denominative origin from 'twin' emphasizes symmetrical pairing rather than mere attachment. DOUBLE TWOFOLD
en: bearing-twins, complete, joined | es: completos, gemelos, parejos | fr: achever, joignit, sont-jumelles, | de: [מתאימות], schloss-sich-an, twins Exod 26:24; Exod 36:29; Song 4:2; Song 6:6

תְּאֵנִים H8383 N-mp (1×)
toil, wearying effort — exhausting labor or trouble, possibly corrupt text in Ezekiel 24:12
This noun appears in Ezekiel 24:12, though the text is difficult. The phrase seems to mean 'she has wearied [me] with toil' or 'exhausted herself with efforts,' referring to Jerusalem's stubborn resistance to purification. BDB notes possible textual corruption and that the Septuagint lacks the phrase. The underlying idea is exhausting, fruitless labor—appropriate for Ezekiel's metaphor of the corroded pot that resists cleansing.

(1×) The plural noun in Ezekiel 24:12 denotes toil or wearying efforts, though textual difficulties surround the verse. The context involves the metaphor of Jerusalem as a corroded pot requiring drastic cleansing. The word suggests exhausting, perhaps futile labor —either God's wearying effort to purify the city or the city's resistance. BDB flags textual uncertainty and the Septuagint's omission, cautioning interpreters. TUMULT AND UPROAR

en: with-toil | es: Esfuerzos | fr: tumulte | de: [תאנים] Ezek 24:12

תְּאֵנָה H8384 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3mp (39×)

Fig tree (the cultivated tree itself) or fig (its edible fruit) — symbol of peace, provision, and prophetic judgment.

One of the iconic trees of the biblical landscape, the fig tree (te'enah) appears from the very first human story — Adam and Eve sewing fig leaves (Gen 3:7) — to the prophetic visions of Jeremiah's two baskets of figs (Jer 24). Sitting 'under one's vine and fig tree' became the quintessential image of peaceful prosperity in the promised land (1 Kgs 5:5; Mic 4:4). The plural form te'enim typically refers to the fruit itself, used as food and medicine (the fig poultice for Hezekiah's boil, 2 Kgs 20:7; Isa 38:21). Spanish 'higuera' (tree) versus 'higos' (fruit) and German 'Feigenbaum' versus 'Feigen' cleanly distinguish the two senses that Hebrew marks mainly through context and number.

1. fig tree (25×) The fig tree itself (ficus carica), a cultivated tree symbolic of peace and divine blessing. Often paired with the vine (gepen) in the formula 'every man under his vine and fig tree' (1 Kgs 5:5; 2 Kgs 18:31; Mic 4:4). In Judg 9:10-11 the fig tree speaks in Jotham's parable, refusing kingship because of its 'sweetness and good fruit.' The withering or destruction of fig trees signals divine judgment (Joel 1:7, 12; Amos 4:9). French 'figuier' and Spanish 'higuera' consistently mark this as the living tree, while German 'Feigenbaum' makes the botanical reference explicit. FIG AND SYCAMORE

en: a-fig-tree, and-drink, and-fig-tree | es: de-su-higuera, de-una-higuera, e-higuera-mía | fr: et-fig-arbre, et-figuier, figuier | de: Feigenbaum, [בתאנה], [והתאנה] Gen 3:7; Num 20:5; Deut 8:8; Judg 9:10; Judg 9:11

2. fig (fruit) (14×) The edible fruit of the fig tree — figs, typically in the plural te'enim. Used as food (Num 13:23, carried back by the spies alongside grapes and pomegranates), as medicine (2 Kgs 20:7; Isa 38:21 — a cake of figs applied to Hezekiah's boil), and in prophetic symbolism (Jer 24:1-3, the two baskets of good and bad figs representing exiles and those left behind). Spanish 'higos' and German 'Feigen' mark the fruit distinctly from the tree. Neh 13:15 mentions figs among goods being traded on the Sabbath, grounding this sense in everyday commerce. FIG FRUIT

en: And-like-the-figs, Figs, Like-the-figs | es: Y-como-los-higos, como-higos-de, como-los-higos | fr: [ותאנים], et-figuier, figs | de: Feigenbaum, [ותאנים], der-Feigen Num 13:23; 2Kgs 20:7; Neh 13:15; Isa 38:21; Jer 8:13

תְּאֵנָה H8385a N-fsc / 3fs (1×)

heat (of mating) — the mating season or sexual readiness of animals, metaphorically applied

This noun in Jeremiah 2:24 describes a wild donkey 'in her heat,' meaning her mating season. The metaphor depicts Israel's shameless pursuit of foreign gods and alliances. The feminine suffix 'her heat' personalizes the imagery—Israel is compared to an animal driven by instinct, 'sniffing the wind' in her desire. The prophetic use of sexual imagery for spiritual adultery is stark and deliberately shocking.

(1×) The construct noun with feminine suffix in Jeremiah 2:24 means 'her heat' or mating season, used metaphorically of Israel's frantic pursuit of idols. The wild donkey imagery emphasizes uncontrolled, instinctive desire. Though the domain 'Relations' is assigned, the semantic content is clearly biological-sexual, employed metaphorically for covenant unfaithfulness. Spanish 'celo' and multilingual cognates capture the estrus/heat meaning. CAUSE REASON PRETEXT

en: her-heat | es: su-celo | fr: [תאנתה] | de: [תאנתה] Jer 2:24

אֲנָה H8385b N-fs (1×)

occasion, opportunity — a favorable time or circumstance, especially for action or conflict

This noun appears in Judges 14:4, where Samson's desire to marry a Philistine woman is explained: 'he was seeking an occasion against the Philistines.' The 'occasion' is an opportunity or pretext for conflict. The word suggests a strategic moment or ground for action. God was working through Samson's choices to create circumstances for confronting Israel's oppressors, though Samson's motives were mixed.

(1×) The noun in Judges 14:4 means 'occasion' or 'opportunity,' specifically an occasion for conflict or quarrel. The narrative explains that Samson 'was seeking an occasion from the Philistines'—that is, grounds for confrontation. The word implies a strategic or opportune moment. The multilingual glosses uniformly render 'occasion/ocasión,' and the domain 'Time' appropriately reflects the temporal-opportunistic sense. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14710 WITH 3 SENSES

en: occasion | es: ocasión | fr: occasion | de: occasion Judg 14:4

תַּאֲנִיָּה H8386 N-fs (2×)

Mourning, lamentation, grieving (particularly formal or ritual expressions of sorrow)

This feminine noun denotes mourning or lamentation, related to the more common word for grief. Isaiah 29:2 warns Jerusalem: 'there shall be mourning and lamentation'—the city will become characterized by grief. Lamentations 2:5 describes God's destructive action: 'he has multiplied in daughter Judah mourning and lamentation,' piling up expressions of sorrow. The term likely denotes formal or expressive mourning rather than silent grief, possibly with ritual or communal dimensions. It parallels and intensifies related words for sorrow in both contexts.

(2×) Public or expressive mourning, likely involving ritual lamentation or vocal expressions of grief. Both prophetic passages concern Jerusalem/Judah experiencing divine judgment that produces overwhelming sorrow. The pairing with synonymous terms ('mourning and lamentation') creates hendiadys—two words expressing one intensive idea of comprehensive grief. Spanish uses 'lamentación' and 'lamento,' both denoting vocal sorrow. The term belongs to the vocabulary of communal and catastrophic grief rather than private or personal sorrow, fitting its usage in prophetic judgment oracles. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: mourning | es: lamentación, lamento | fr: [תאניה] | de: [תאניה] Isa 29:2; Lam 2:5

תַּאֲנַת שִׁלֹה H8387 N-proper-fs (1×)

Taanath-Shiloh — place name on the border of Ephraim, possibly modern Ta'na near Nablus

This compound place name appears in Joshua 16:6, marking a boundary point in Ephraim's tribal allotment. The name combines 'Taanath' (possibly meaning 'approach') with 'Shiloh,' though the relationship to the famous sanctuary site of Shiloh is unclear. Modern scholarship identifies it with Ta'na, about seven miles southeast of Nablus. Such geographical markers were crucial for tribal land inheritance and preserving territorial memory.

(1×) A place name on Ephraim's border in Joshua 16:6, combining two elements whose relationship remains uncertain. Geographical surveys identify it with modern Ta'na in the central hill country. The Septuagint transliterations show textual variation. As a boundary marker, the name served legal-territorial purposes, defining which lands belonged to which tribe in the allocation of Canaan. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Taanath-Shiloh | es: Taanat-Silo | fr: Taanath-Silo | de: Taanath-Silo Josh 16:6

תָּאַר H8388a Art / V-Pual-Prtcpl-ms (6×)

To turn, incline, trace out (of a boundary line); to mark the course of a border

A technical verb of land survey and boundary description, appearing almost exclusively in Joshua's tribal allotment narratives. It describes the way a boundary line 'turns' or 'inclines' as it traces its course from one landmark to the next. Five of its six occurrences fall in Joshua 15 and 18, marking the borders of Judah and Benjamin, while a sixth appears in Joshua 19:13 for Zebulun. The multilingual evidence is telling: English renders it 'marked' or 'marked out,' Spanish uses 'trazó' (traced, drew), and French 'marqua' – all converging on the idea of delineating a path.

1. (5×) The standard boundary-tracing sense: a border 'turns' or 'inclines' from one point toward another. Used repeatedly in the Judah-Benjamin border descriptions (Josh 15:9, 15:11, 18:14, 18:17), where the boundary curves around hills and valleys. Spanish 'trazó' (traced) and English 'was marked' both capture the cartographic precision. The verb takes directional complements – 'from ... to,' 'toward' – specifying the boundary's course. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: and-marked, and-was-marked | es: Y-trazó, y-trazó | fr: et-marqua, et-était-marqua | de: und-war-zeichnete, und-zeichnete Josh 15:9; Josh 15:11; Josh 18:14; Josh 18:17

2. (1×) A closely related but distinct usage where the boundary 'extends' or 'goes out' toward a destination, as in Joshua 19:13 for Zebulun's border reaching toward Rimmon and Neah. English 'marked out' and Spanish 'extendiéndose' (extending) suggest slightly more linear directionality than the curving motion of sense 1, though the underlying action remains boundary delineation. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: the-marked-out | es: extendiéndose | fr: le-marqua-dehors | de: der-zeichnete-heraus Josh 19:13

תָּאַר H8388b V-Piel-Imperf-3ms / 3ms (2×)
draw outline, trace (used of shaping idols with marking tool)
This verb appears only twice in Scripture, both times in Isaiah 44:13 describing the craftsman who traces the outline of an idol with his marking tool. The Piel stem suggests deliberate, careful action—not just sketching, but precisely delineating the form that will become a carved image. The passage portrays the futility of idolatry: a man uses the same wood for his fire and his god, tracing out the latter with meticulous care.

(2×) The evidence shows this verb exclusively in the context of idol-making, where a craftsman marks out or traces the outline of a figure before carving it. Isaiah uses this detail to emphasize the absurdity: the idolater carefully plans and traces what his own hands will make, then worships it. The verb captures the preliminary artistic step of defining boundaries and shapes. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: he-outlines-it, he-traces-it | es: lo-traza | fr: [יתארהו] | de: [יתארהו] Isa 44:13

תֹּאַר H8389 Prep-k / N-msc (15×)
Outward form, figure, appearance — the visible shape or physical bearing of a person
The noun תֹּאַר (toar) denotes outward form, figure, or physical appearance — the visible shape a person presents to the eye. It almost always describes human beauty or its absence, typically paired with מַרְאֶה (appearance/look) in the phrase יְפַת/יְפֵה תֹאַר ('beautiful of form'). Rachel (Gen 29:17), Joseph (Gen 39:6), Abigail (1 Sam 25:3), and Esther (Est 2:7) all receive this description. By striking contrast, the Suffering Servant has 'no form' that we should desire him (Isa 52:14; 53:2). Spanish 'figura' and French cognates capture the sense of visible contour.

outward form or appearance (15×) The visible outline, shape, or physical bearing of a person, nearly always in evaluations of beauty or its absence. Paired with מַרְאֶה in the stock phrase 'beautiful of form and appearance' applied to Rachel (Gen 29:17), Joseph (Gen 39:6), and the captive woman of Deuteronomy 21:11. The theological inversion appears in Isaiah 52:14 and 53:2, where the Servant's marred form defies expectation. Pharaoh's dream cows are also described by their toar (Gen 41:18-19). Spanish 'figura,' English 'form,' and German 'Gestalt' all convey the word's focus on visible shape. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-his-form, form, his-form | es: como-forma-de, es-su-apariencia, figura | fr: [ותארו], [תאר], [תארם] | de: Gestalt, [ותארו], [תאר] Gen 29:17; Gen 39:6; Gen 41:18; Gen 41:19; Deut 21:11

תַּחְרֵעַ H8390 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Tarea — personal name of a descendant of Saul in the Benjamite genealogy Tarea appears in 1 Chronicles 8:35 (spelled Tahrea in 9:41) among Saul's descendants through Jonathan. The name's etymology is uncertain, and the Septuagint shows textual variation between the two occurrences. Genealogical records preserve tribal and family identity, especially important for Benjamin after the near-destruction of the tribe in Judges 19-21. That the line of Saul is carefully traced shows interest in the former royal house.

(1×) A personal name in 1 Chronicles 8:35, identifying a descendant of King Saul. The parallel text (9:41) spells it Tahrea, and the Septuagint reflects this variation. As part of Benjamin's genealogical records, the name helps trace the lineage of Israel's first king, demonstrating continuity despite Saul's tragic end. The conjunction 'and Tarea' links him to his ancestral chain. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: and-Tarea | es: y-Tarea | fr: [ותארע] | de: [ותארע] 1Chr 8:35

תְּאַשּׁוּר H8391 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)
box tree, a small evergreen of Lebanon (used in temple/messianic imagery)
The box tree was a small evergreen, growing up to 20 feet high on Mount Lebanon, valued for its dense, fine-grained wood. In Isaiah's visions of restoration, the box tree appears alongside cypress and pine as part of God's beautifying of his sanctuary and the renewed creation. Both Isaiah 41:19 and 60:13 use it in promises of transformation—wilderness becoming garden, desolation becoming glory. The ancient versions consistently understood it as the box tree, though some scholars have suggested other evergreens.

(2×) Appearing in prophetic poetry about restoration and divine glory, this tree species is consistently paired with other valuable Lebanon evergreens like cypress and pine. The multilingual glosses uniformly identify it as 'box tree' in English and Spanish, suggesting a stable lexical tradition. Its presence in Isaiah's temple and wilderness passages suggests symbolic value beyond mere botanical identification. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES
en: and-box-tree, together | es: y-boj | fr: [ותאשור] | de: [ותאשור] Isa 41:19; Isa 60:13

תֵּבָה H8392 Prep-l (28×)
An ark or vessel of deliverance; Noah's great ship and Moses' papyrus basket – both instruments of divine rescue.
One of the most evocative nouns in the Hebrew Bible, tevah names only two objects in all of Scripture: the massive wooden vessel that preserved Noah's family and the animals through the flood (Gen 6-9), and the small papyrus basket in which the infant Moses was hidden among the Nile reeds (Exod 2:3, 5). Both are instruments of divine salvation through water. Probably borrowed from Egyptian dbt (chest, coffin), the word emphasizes the container as a vehicle of rescue rather than its construction. French distinguishes arche from corbeille, and German Arche from Körbchen, but Hebrew binds them with one theologically charged term.

1. the ark (26×) Noah's ark – the large vessel constructed of gopher wood at God's command to preserve life through the catastrophic flood. Appearing 26 times almost entirely in Genesis 6-9, it is rendered uniformly across languages: English 'the ark,' Spanish el arca, French l'arche, German die Arche. The repeated use through the flood narrative (Gen 7:1, 7, 9, 17, 23; 8:1, 4, 6) underscores its centrality as the instrument of cosmic deliverance. GEOGRAPHY

AND SPACE

en: the-ark | es: el-arca | fr: l'arche | de: der-Arche, die-Arche Gen 6:14; Gen 6:15; Gen 6:16

2. basket of (2×) The small papyrus basket in which Moses' mother placed him to float among the Nile reeds (Exod 2:3, 5). French corbeille (basket) and German Körbchen (little basket) distinguish this diminutive vessel from Noah's ark, yet Hebrew deliberately uses the same word – connecting the two acts of divine rescue through water and foreshadowing Moses' role as deliverer of Israel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: basket-of, the-basket | es: arca-de, el-arca | fr: corbeille-de, le-corbeille | de: Koerbchen-von, der-Koerbchen Exod 2:3; Exod 2:5

תְּבוּאָה H8393 Conj-w / N-fsc (43×)

Produce, yield: crops from the land; income or revenue from labor or trade; the harvest as an event.

The Hebrew noun tevuah derives from the root bo' ('to come in') and names whatever 'comes in' — whether from soil or commerce. In its dominant sense, it designates crops or yield of the earth, governing sabbatical-year legislation (Lev 25:3, 7) and the firstfruits offering (Prov 3:9). Spanish cosecha, French produit, and German Ertrag all gravitate toward the harvest-field image. But Proverbs and Ecclesiastes extend tevuah figuratively to 'income' from labor and trade (Prov 10:16; 15:6), where Spanish shifts to ganancia and French to revenu. A rare temporal sense surfaces when the word denotes the harvest event itself (Gen 47:24).

1. agricultural produce or crop yield (36×) The physical produce, crop, or yield of cultivated land — what the earth brings forth. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (36 occurrences) governs agricultural legislation: the land's tevuah during the sixth year must sustain Israel through the sabbatical fallow (Lev 25:20-22), and the firstfruits of one's tevuah belong to God (Prov 3:9). Spanish cosecha, French produit, and German Ertrag all center on the agricultural harvest. The word pairs naturally with 'the land' (tevuat ha-aretz) in Exodus 23:10, Leviticus 19:25, and Joshua 5:12, where it marks the transition from manna to Canaan's own produce. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: crops, her-yield, increase | es: cosecha, cosecha-de, cosechas | fr: [תבואת], le-produit, produit | de: [תבואות], [תבואת], [תבואתה] Exod 23:10; Lev 19:25; Lev 23:39; Lev 25:3; Lev 25:7

2. income or revenue (5×) Income, revenue, or economic gain derived from labor, trade, or investment rather than directly from the soil — a figurative extension of the agricultural 'yield' concept. With 5 occurrences concentrated in Wisdom literature, this sense appears in Proverbs 10:16 ('the income of the wicked leads to sin'), Proverbs 15:6, and the sardonic observation of Ecclesiastes 5:10 that whoever loves abundance is never satisfied with his tevuah. Spanish shifts from cosecha to ganancia, French from produit to revenu, and German toward Ernte in its economic register, confirming that translators feel a semantic shift from field to marketplace. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: but-the-income-of, its-revenue, produce | es: cosecha, ganancia-de, producto-de | fr: [תבואתה], et-revenu, revenu | de: Ernte, [ובתבואת], [תבואת] Prov 10:16; Prov 15:6; Prov 18:20; Eccl 5:10; Isa 23:3

3. harvest time or event (2×) The harvest as a temporal event or occasion — referring to the period or act of gathering crops rather than the crops themselves. Only 2 clear occurrences: Genesis 47:24, where Pharaoh claims a fifth 'at the harvests,' and Jeremiah 12:13, where the people have 'sown wheat but reaped thorns' and are 'ashamed of your harvests.' Spanish en las cosechas and German bei den Erträgen both use temporal prepositions, and French à les harvests similarly frames the word as an event marker rather than a substance noun. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: at-the-harvests, of-your-produce | es: de-cosechas-vuestras, en-las-cosechas | fr: [מתבואתיכם], à-le-harvests | de: [מתבואתיכם], bei-den-Erträgen Gen 47:24; Jer 12:13

תְּבוּנָה H8394 N-fs (43×)

Understanding, discernment, insight; the faculty of comprehension and the practical skill that flows from it.

A rich wisdom term denoting the capacity to perceive, distinguish, and judge rightly. In its dominant sense it covers the full range of cognitive discernment, from the divine understanding by which God founded the earth (Prov 3:19; Jer 10:12) to the human insight that marks a person of wisdom (Prov 17:27). German Einsicht and Klugheit capture this dual flavor of penetrating perception and practical intelligence. In two passages the word shifts toward applied expertise or skillfulness, as when David shepherds Israel with the 'skillfulness of his hands' (Ps 78:72) and when Hosea describes idol-makers working 'according to their understanding' of the craft (Hos 13:2).

1. understanding, discernment (41×) The cognitive faculty of comprehension, insight, and discernment, whether human or divine. Covers the ability to perceive, distinguish, and judge rightly. Multilingual glosses converge on 'understanding/entendimiento/intelligence/Einsicht,' confirming a unified semantic core. Used of the Spirit-given wisdom for tabernacle construction (Exod 31:3), the nation lacking counsel (Deut 32:28), and divine creation wisdom (Prov 3:19; Jer 10:12). UNDERSTANDING AND DISCERNMENT

en: and-understanding, in-understanding, understanding | es: con-entendimiento, de-entendimiento, el-entendimiento. | fr: [תבונה], dans-intelligence, et-intelligence | de: Einsicht, Klugheit, Verstaendnis Exod 31:3; Exod 35:31; Exod 36:1; Deut 32:28; 1Kgs 4:29

2. skill, skillfulness (2×) Practical expertise, applied skill, or craftsmanlike competence flowing from understanding. Distinguished from pure cognition by context rather than by gloss divergence; Spanish conforme-a-su-entendimiento and German Klugheit still overlap with sense 1, but the referent shifts to hands-on ability. David's shepherding 'with skillfulness of his hands' (Ps 78:72) and the idol-makers working 'according to their understanding' (Hos 13:2) anchor this applied sense. UNDERSTANDING AND DISCERNMENT

en: according-to-their-understanding, and-with-skillfulness-of | es: conforme-a-su-entendimiento, y-con-inteligencia-de | fr: et-dans-intelligence, intelligence | de: Klugheit, und-mit-skillfulness-von Ps 78:72; Hos 13:2

תְּבוּסָה H8395 N-fsc (1×)

downfall, ruin — destruction or overthrow, specifically of Ahaziah's dynasty

This noun denotes downfall or ruin through being trodden down. It appears in 2 Chronicles 22:7, where Ahaziah's visit to Joram 'was the downfall of Ahaziah.' The root suggests trampling or treading down, so the noun conveys violent overthrow. Ahaziah's alliance with the house of Ahab proved fatal—he was caught up in Jehu's purge. The word captures both divine orchestration ('from God') and the catastrophic consequences of ungodly alliances.

(1×) The construct noun in 2 Chronicles 22:7 means 'downfall of Ahaziah,' describing the divine appointment that led to his death during Jehu's revolt. The root implies treading down or trampling, giving the noun a sense of violent overthrow. The text attributes this to God's sovereign purpose in judging the house of Ahab and those allied with it. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: downfall-of | es: destrucción-de | fr: [תבוסת] | de: [תבוסת] 2Chr 22:7

תָּבוֹר H8396 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (10×)

Tabor — Mount Tabor in the Jezreel Valley, a Levitical city, and a landmark oak near Bethel

Tabor primarily designates the prominent, dome-shaped mountain rising from the northeastern edge of the Jezreel Valley in lower Galilee, a landmark visible from great distances. It features most memorably in Judges 4:6-14, where Deborah commanded Barak to muster ten thousand men on Mount Tabor before the decisive victory over Sisera's chariots. Hosea 5:1 denounces it as a snare, possibly alluding to illicit worship there, and Jeremiah 46:18 compares an invading king to Tabor among the mountains. The Psalmist celebrates Tabor alongside Hermon as mountains that rejoice in God's name (Ps 89:12). The name also applies to a Levitical city and an oak near Bethel in Benjamin's territory.

Tabor (place name) (10×) The proper noun Tabor, chiefly denoting Mount Tabor (modern Jebel et-Tur), the iconic isolated mountain at the northeastern corner of the Jezreel Valley where Barak assembled his forces against Sisera (Judg 4:6, 12, 14). It also appears in prophetic and poetic texts as a symbol of grandeur (Jer 46:18; Ps 89:12) and as a site of spiritual warning (Hos 5:1). Additionally, the name identifies a Levitical city in Zebulun (1 Chr 6:62) and an oak or place in Benjamin near Bethel (1 Sam 10:3). The tribal boundary lists in Joshua 19:22, 34 mark Tabor as a territorial reference point. TABOR PLACE NAME

en: Tabor, Tavor, at-Tabor | es: Tabor, Tavor, como-Tabor | fr: Tabor, Tavor, [כתבור] | de: Tabor, Tavor, [כתבור] Josh 19:22; Judg 4:6; Judg 4:12; Judg 4:14; Judg 8:18

תֶּבֶל H8397 N-ms (2×)

perversion, confusion, violation of natural/divine order (sexual abomination)

This noun appears only in Leviticus 18:23 and 20:12, both in the Holiness Code's sexual prohibitions. It denotes something fundamentally disordered, a confusion or mixing that violates the created order. The contexts are specific: bestiality in 18:23 and incest in 20:12. The term goes beyond simple wrongdoing to suggest a perversion of nature itself, a chaos introduced into God's ordered creation. The Hebrew root conveys the idea of mixing or confusing what should remain distinct.

(2×) The consistent translation across languages—'perversion' in English, Spanish, French, and German—reflects the term's technical legal-moral sense in Levitical law. Used exclusively for sexual violations that transgress not just command but the boundaries of creation itself, the word marks these acts as category confusions, disruptions of the natural order that God established. PERVERSITY CROOKEDNESS

en: perversion | es: perversión | fr: perversion | de: perversion Lev 18:23; Lev 20:12

תֵּבֵל H8398 Conj-w (36×)

world, inhabited earth — poetic synonym for the terrestrial realm as God's creative domain

Tevel is a feminine noun meaning 'world' or 'inhabited earth,' functioning as a poetic synonym for eretz ('land, earth'). It appears 36 times, almost exclusively in elevated verse — psalms, prophetic oracles, and wisdom poetry — and never takes the definite article, lending it a grand, cosmic register. The word may derive from the root y-b-l ('to produce, yield'), pointing to the earth as a productive, fruit-bearing entity. Its most striking theological use comes in creation contexts: 'He set the world upon its pillars' (1 Sam 2:8), and 'the world is established, it shall not be moved' (Ps 93:1; 96:10). The prophets deploy it for universal judgment: 'the LORD comes to judge the tevel' (Ps 96:13; 98:9). Nahum 1:5 confirms the word's cosmic scope: 'the tevel and all its inhabitants melt away.'

world / inhabited earth (36×) The inhabited world conceived as God's established creation, used in parallelism with eretz ('earth') across psalmic, prophetic, and wisdom poetry. Carries a tone of cosmic grandeur absent from the prosaic eretz. Key collocations include tevel u-melo'ah ('the world and its fullness,' Ps 89:12; 96:13), tevel ve-yoshvei vah ('the world and its inhabitants,' Isa 18:3; Nah 1:5), and the foundational assertion that God 'established the tevel by his wisdom' (Jer 10:12 = 51:15). Never determined by the article, always absolute or construct. French 'monde,' Spanish 'mundo,' German 'Welt' all render it as a universal term without distinction from eretz, though in Hebrew the poetic register is unmistakable. WORLD INHABITED EARTH

en: belongs-the-world, the-world, world | es: al-mundo, el-mundo, mundo | fr: Tubal, monde, תבל | de: [תבל], belongs-der-Welt, der-Welt 1Sam 2:8; 2Sam 22:16; 1Chr 16:30; Job 18:18; Job 34:13

תַּבְלִית H8399 N-fsc / 3mp (1×)

destruction — ruin or annihilation, with divine anger directed toward it

This noun denotes destruction or annihilation. Isaiah 10:25 speaks of God's anger being 'upon their destruction'—either anger directed toward destroying them, or anger that will result in their destruction. The root conveys complete ruin. In context, Isaiah promises that God's anger against Judah will soon end and turn instead to destroy Assyria. The noun emphasizes totality of judgment.

(1×) The noun with third-person plural suffix in Isaiah 10:25 means 'their destruction,' referring to the enemies of God's people (Assyria). The phrase 'my anger upon their destruction' suggests divine wrath directed toward annihilating the oppressor. The root implies complete ruin, fitting Isaiah's oracle that Assyria's arrogance will meet catastrophic judgment. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: their-destruction | es: su-destrucción | fr: [תבליתם] | de: [תבליתם] Isa 10:25

תִּבְלֻל H8400 N-ms (1×)

defect, blemish — visual confusion or impairment, possibly referring to a cataract or eye condition

This noun appears in Leviticus 21:20 among physical defects disqualifying a priest from offering sacrifices. The phrase 'defect in his eye' likely refers to some form of visual impairment—perhaps a cataract, film, or confusion of vision. The list includes various bodily blemishes that, while not affecting moral standing, symbolically prevented priestly service. The requirement of physical wholeness pointed to God's holiness and the perfection ultimately found in Christ.

(1×) A noun in Leviticus 21:20 denoting an eye defect or confusion of vision that disqualified a priest from altar service. BDB suggests connection to mixing or confusion, possibly a cataract or film. The term appears in a list of physical blemishes (broken bone, dwarf, etc.) that symbolically barred priestly ministry, emphasizing holiness as wholeness and completeness. BRIGHT SKIN SPOT

en: a-defect | es: defecto | fr: un-défaut | de: ein-defect Lev 21:20

תֶּבֶן H8401 Art / N-ms (17×)

straw, chaff — threshed grain stalks used as animal fodder, building material, or a figure of worthlessness

Teben refers to the dried, chopped stalks left after grain has been threshed — the straw that served ancient Israel as animal feed and as a critical binding agent in mud-brick manufacture. The Exodus narratives (5:7-18) powerfully illustrate its importance: Pharaoh's demand that the Israelites gather their own straw while maintaining their brick quota becomes an emblem of oppressive labor. Elsewhere teben feeds camels (Gen 24:25), donkeys (Judg 19:19), and cattle (Isa 11:7). Prophetically, it becomes a metaphor for insubstantiality — Jeremiah contrasts it with grain (23:28) and Job likens the wicked to straw blown by the wind (21:18). Spanish 'paja,' French cognates, and German 'Stroh' all converge on this single agricultural sense.

straw, chaff (17×) Chopped or threshed grain stalks used for three distinct purposes in the biblical world: as fodder for livestock (Gen 24:25, 32; Judg 19:19; 1 Kgs 5:8; Isa 11:7; 65:25), as a binding agent mixed with clay in brick-making (Exod 5:7-18), and as a prophetic metaphor for worthlessness or transience (Jer 23:28 contrasting straw with grain; Job 21:18 comparing the wicked to wind-blown straw; Job 41:19). Cognate with Assyrian tibnu and Aramaic tibna, confirming a pan-Semitic agricultural term. STUBBLE AND CHAFF

en: and-straw, and-the-straw, as-straw | es: a-la-paja, como-paja, la-paja | fr: [לתבן], [תבן], comme-כתבן | de: Stroh, [כתבן], [לתבן] Gen 24:25; Gen 24:32; Exod 5:7; Exod 5:10

תִּבְנִי H8402 N-proper-ms (3×)

Tibni (personal name: rival to Omri for Israel's throne)

Tibni son of Ginath was a rival claimant to the throne of Israel after King Elah's assassination, competing against Omri for six years. 1 Kings 16:21-22 records that when Zimri died, 'the people of Israel were divided': half followed Tibni and half followed Omri. Eventually Omri's faction prevailed, Tibni died, and Omri became sole king. The name may have Phoenician connections (compare the Sidonian king Tabnit). Tibni represents the political instability and civil division that plagued northern Israel during its dynastic transitions.

(3×) Personal name of Omri's rival for Israel's throne. 1 Kings 16:21 reports Israel divided between followers of Tibni son of Ginath and followers of Omri. 1 Kings 16:22 (twice) records that Omri's people proved stronger than Tibni's people, so 'Tibni died and Omri became king.' The brief notice captures a six-year civil war (implied by the chronology) that ended with Tibni's death—whether in battle or otherwise is not specified. The name marks a failed dynasty before it could begin. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tivni | es: Tivní | fr: Tivni | de: Tivni 1Kgs 16:21; 1Kgs 16:22

תַּבְנִית H8403 Prep-k / N-fsc (20×)

A visible form, likeness, or image; also a constructional pattern, plan, or blueprint for building sacred structures

Tavnit encompasses both what something looks like and the design from which something is built. In Deuteronomy 4:16-18, it warns against making any 'form' or 'likeness' as an idol — the visible shape of a creature. But in Exodus 25:9, 40 and 1 Chronicles 28:11-19, the same word becomes the divinely revealed 'pattern' or 'blueprint' for the tabernacle and temple. The word thus bridges representation and instruction: one sense captures the outward appearance of a thing, the other its intended architectural design. Spanish distinguishes these well, using 'figura' for likeness but 'plano' and 'diseño' for blueprint.

1. form, likeness, image (11×) A visible form, figure, or likeness — the shape or image of something as it appears. Used especially in anti-idolatry contexts: Deuteronomy 4:16-18 warns against making a tavnit of any creature, and Psalm 106:20 laments that Israel exchanged God's glory for the 'image' of a grass-eating ox. Ezekiel 8:3, 10 describes abominable 'forms' seen in temple visions. Spanish 'figura' and 'forma,' French 'forme,' and German 'Vorlage' all capture this representational sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-the-image-of, form-of, like-the-form-of | es: como-figura, forma-de, modelo-de | fr: [כתבנית], dans-forme, forme | de: Vorlage, [כתבנית], form-of Deut 4:16; Deut 4:17; Deut 4:18

2. pattern, plan, blueprint (9×) An architectural pattern, plan, or blueprint — a design specification to be followed in construction. Centrally used for the divinely revealed plan of the tabernacle (Exod 25:9, 40) and Solomon's temple (1 Chr 28:11-19), where God transmits the tavnit to Moses and David respectively. Also applied to the altar pattern copied from Damascus (2 Kgs 16:10) and the memorial altar of Joshua 22:28. Spanish 'plano' and 'diseño' neatly distinguish this instructional sense from the representational one. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: And-the-pattern-of, according-to-their-pattern, and-for-the-pattern-of | es: Y-plano-de, diseño-de, el-plano | fr: [והתבנית], [ולתבנית], [ותבנית] | de: Vorlage, [ולתבנית], die-Vorlage Exod 25:9; Exod 25:40; Josh 22:28; 2Kgs 16:10

תַּבְעֵרָה H8404 N-proper-fs (2×)

Taberah (place-name: 'burning,' site of divine judgment in wilderness)

Taberah means 'burning,' named for the fire that consumed the outskirts of Israel's camp when the people complained in the wilderness (Numbers 11:3). Moses records that the place was called Taberah 'because the fire of the LORD burned among them.' Deuteronomy 9:22 lists it among the locations where Israel provoked God to anger. The name serves as a memorial to divine judgment and as a warning against grumbling—a place-name that tells a cautionary story.

(2×) This wilderness location appears in both narrative (Numbers 11) and retrospective (Deuteronomy 9) contexts. The Hebrew name directly connects to the burning incident, and translations across languages maintain the transliteration 'Taberah' or variants like Spanish 'Tabera,' recognizing it as a proper name with theological significance rather than a common noun. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Taberah, and-at-Taberah | es: Tabera, Y-en-Tabera | fr: Taberah, et-à-Taberah | de: Taberah, und-bei-Taberah Num 11:3; Deut 9:22

תֵּבֶץ H8405 N-proper-fs (3×)

Thebez (place name: town near Shechem, site of Abimelech's death)

Thebez was a fortified town near Shechem, famous as the place where Abimelech met his inglorious end. Judges 9:50 reports Abimelech besieged Thebez, but when he approached the tower to burn it, a woman dropped a millstone on his head, fracturing his skull. He ordered his armor-bearer to kill him lest it be said a woman slew him. 2 Samuel 11:21 refers back to this incident rhetorically: 'Who killed Abimelech? Didn't a woman throw a millstone on him from the wall at Thebez?' The site is identified with modern Tubas, about four hours north of Shechem.

(3×) Place name of a town near Shechem where Abimelech died. Judges 9:50 (appearing twice—Abimelech went to Thebez, besieged it, captured it) sets the scene for his downfall. 2 Samuel 11:21 alludes to the event: 'in Thebez' a woman killed Abimelech with a millstone. The name became proverbial for ironic reversal—a would-be king killed by a woman's improvised weapon. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate ('Thebez,' 'Tebes'), appropriate for the proper noun marking this historically significant site. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Thebez, against-Thebez, in-Thebez | es: Tebes, contra-Tebes, en-Tebes? | fr: Thebez, contre-Thebez, dans-Thebez | de: Thebez, gegen-Thebez, in-Thebez Judg 9:50; 2Sam 11:21

תְּבַר H8406 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (1×)

broken, brittle — fragmented or easily shattered, describing part of Nebuchadnezzar's statue

This Aramaic passive participle appears in Daniel 2:42, describing part of the fourth kingdom's feet as 'brittle' or 'broken.' The statue's feet were partly iron and partly clay—strong yet fragile, reflecting a kingdom both powerful and internally fractured. The participle suggests the quality of being breakable or already in a state of brokenness. This anticipates the stone that will shatter the entire statue.

(1×) An Aramaic passive participle (feminine) in Daniel 2:42 meaning 'broken' or 'brittle,' describing part of the statue's feet. The mixed composition (iron and clay) produces structural weakness despite iron's strength. The term anticipates the kingdom's ultimate fragmentation and destruction. Multilingual glosses capture the fragility (Spanish 'frágil,' French 'briser'), central to Daniel's interpretation of inevitable collapse. BREAKING AND SHATTERING

en: brittle | es: frágil | fr: briser | de: [תבירה] Dan 2:42

תִּגְלַת פִּלְאֶסֶר H8407 N-proper-ms (11×)

Tiglath-pileser III, king of Assyria (745-727 BCE), conqueror of northern Israel and Levantine vassal states

The name תִּגְלַת פִּלְאֶסֶר (Tiglath-pileser) refers to the Neo-Assyrian emperor Tukulti-apil-Esharra III, whose name means 'my trust is in the son of Esharra.' Two orthographic traditions coexist in the Hebrew Bible: the Kings spelling תִּגְלַת פִּלְאֶסֶר (2 Kgs 15:29; 16:7, 10) and the Chronicles variant תִּלְגַת פִּלְנֶאסֶר (1 Chr 5:6, 26; 2 Chr 28:20). He deported the Transjordanian tribes and conquered Galilee, making Judah's Ahaz his tributary. Arabic renders both forms (تِغْلَث بِلِيسَر / تِلْجَث بِلْنَاصَر), while Spanish, Korean, and Hindi all transliterate consistently.

Tiglath-pileser (Assyrian king) (11×) The Assyrian emperor Tiglath-pileser III (reigned 745-727 BCE), who initiated the deportation policy that would culminate in the fall of Samaria. He conquered Naphtali and Gilead, deporting their populations to Assyria (2 Kgs 15:29), and received Ahaz's tribute and appeal for military aid against the Syro-Ephraimite coalition (2 Kgs 16:7-10). The Chronicler adds that he 'distressed' Ahaz rather than helped him (2 Chr 28:20-21). All eleven occurrences refer to this single historical figure across two spelling traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Pileser, Pilne'eser, Pilneser | es: Pileser, Pilneser, Tiglat | fr: Pileser,

Tiglat-Pileser, Tiglath | de: Pileser, Tiglat-Pileser, Tiglath 2Kgs 15:29; 2Kgs 16:7; 2Kgs 16:10

תְּגְמוּל H8408 N-mpc / 3ms (1×)

benefits — acts of kindness or goodness, particularly divine blessings deserving grateful response

This noun appears in Psalm 116:12 with an Aramaic suffix: 'all his benefits unto me.' The psalmist asks rhetorically, 'What shall I return to the Lord for all his benefits?' The word denotes acts of goodness or kindness, especially divine favors. The plural emphasizes the multiplicity of God's gracious deeds. The question leads to the answer: a life of thanksgiving, vows fulfilled, and public testimony.

(1×) The plural noun with Aramaic suffix in Psalm 116:12 means 'all his benefits,' referring to Yahweh's manifold acts of kindness and deliverance. The term is related to the root for 'dealing' or 'recompense,' here in the positive sense of blessings bestowed. The psalmist's rhetorical question highlights the impossibility of repaying God, leading to the response of grateful worship and testimony. GIVING AND BESTOWING

en: His-benefits | es: sus-beneficios | fr: bienfait | de: sein-benefits Ps 116:12

תְּגָרָה H8409 Prep-m / N-fsc (1×)

hostility, contention — conflict or opposition, particularly divine discipline

This noun denotes contention, strife, or hostility. Psalm 39:10 (English v. 11) reads 'through the hostility of your hand I am consumed.' The word suggests active opposition or conflict. Here it describes God's disciplinary action—his 'hand' bringing corrective judgment. The psalmist recognizes that suffering comes not from impersonal fate but from God's purposeful, if painful, correction. The noun captures the adversarial dimension of divine discipline.

(1×) The construct noun in Psalm 39:10 means 'hostility of your hand,' describing God's corrective discipline as adversarial action. Related to Aramaic words for strife or contention, it emphasizes the conflict-like nature of divine chastening. The phrase personalizes judgment—it's not merely suffering but God's hand in opposition. Multilingual glosses vary (Spanish 'golpe/blow,' French 'querelle/quarrel'), reflecting the term's semantic range. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-hostility-of | es: por-golpe-de | fr: de-querelle | de: von-hostility-von Ps 39:10

תִּדְהָר H8410 N-ms (2×)

elm, pine, or plane tree (uncertain species, Lebanon timber)

This tree name appears only in Isaiah 41:19 and 60:13, paired with cypress and box tree in visions of restoration. The exact species is debated: ancient versions favored elm, some scholars suggest plane tree, others pine. What's certain is that it designates a valuable Lebanon tree used in imagery of God beautifying his creation and sanctuary. The uncertainty about identification reflects the difficulty of matching ancient botanical terms to modern taxonomy, but the symbolic value is clear—a noble tree worthy of the renewed temple and wilderness.

(2×) The botanical uncertainty is evident in the varied translations: English offers 'elm' and 'pine,' Spanish has both 'olmo' (elm) and 'pino' (pine). Despite this, all languages recognize it as a significant Lebanon tree species appearing in prophetic restoration texts. The Syriac and Arabic cognates suggest 'elm,' but the translation history shows ongoing scholarly debate about the exact referent. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES

en: and-pine, plane | es: olmo, pino | fr: [תדהר] | de: [תדהר] Isa 41:19; Isa 60:13

תְּדִירָא H8411 Prep-b / N-fsd (2×)

continuance, perpetuity (Aramaic: constantly, continually)

This Aramaic noun appears only in Daniel 6, twice in the phrase 'continually' (literally 'in continuance'). King Darius tells Daniel, sealed in the lions' den, 'May your God, whom you serve continually, deliver you' (6:16), and later asks, 'Has your God, whom you serve continually, been able to deliver you?' (6:20). The term emphasizes Daniel's unbroken, perpetual faithfulness—not occasional or intermittent devotion, but constant, enduring service to God. The Aramaic emphasizes the ongoing, uninterrupted nature of Daniel's commitment.

(2×) Both occurrences in Daniel 6 use the prepositional phrase 'in continuance' to modify Daniel's service to God. The translations consistently render this as 'continually' (English, Spanish 'continuamente,' French 'continuité'), capturing the adverbial force. The word highlights Daniel's exemplary consistency as a worshiper, which becomes the basis for both his persecution and his deliverance. CONTINUALLY DAILY OFFERING

en: continually | es: continuamente | fr: continuité | de: [בתדירא] Dan 6:16; Dan 6:20

תַּדְמֹר H8412 N-proper-fs (2×)

Tadmor (Palmyra, city built by Solomon; textual issue with Tamar)

According to 1 Kings 9:18 (Qere reading) and 2 Chronicles 8:4, Solomon built a city called Tadmor. The site is traditionally identified with Palmyra, the famous oasis city in the Syrian desert. However, there's significant textual debate: the Ketiv (written text) in Kings reads 'Tamar,' and many scholars prefer this reading, identifying it with a fortified town in Judean territory rather than distant Tadmor/Palmyra. The Chronicler's text clearly reads Tadmor, possibly updating or reinterpreting the Kings account to reference the well-known desert city.

(2×) The multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration 'Tadmor' or variants, treating it as a proper name. The textual complexity (some manuscripts read 'Tamar' instead) reflects early scribal debate about whether Solomon's building project extended to distant Palmyra or stayed within Judean territory. The geographical implications differ dramatically depending on which reading is original. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Tadmor | es: (Tadmor), Tadmor | fr: Tadmor, [תדמר] | de: [תדמר] 1Kgs 9:18; 2Chr 8:4

תִּדְעָל H8413 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Tidal (king allied with Chedorlaomer in Genesis 14)

Tidal is named in Genesis 14:1 and 9 as one of four eastern kings who attacked Sodom and its allies, serving under Chedorlaomer of Elam. He's called 'king of Goiim' (nations or peoples), a designation that may indicate leadership over a confederation rather than a single nation. Scholars have proposed various historical identifications, including a Hittite king named Tudkhula mentioned in Babylonian texts, though the connection remains uncertain. The name appears in the biblical narrative as part of the historical backdrop to Abraham's rescue of Lot.

(2×) The name appears consistently in parallel accounts (Genesis 14:1, 9) with the coordinating conjunction 'and' marking his alliance with Chedorlaomer, Amraphel, and Arioch. All translations transliterate the name as 'Tidal' or close variants (Spanish 'Tidal,' French 'Tidal'), treating it as a personal name of foreign origin. The ancient versions (LXX, Targum) similarly preserve the name without translation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Tidal | es: y-Tidal | fr: et-Tidal | de: und-Tidal, und-Tidals Gen 14:1; Gen 14:9

תֹּהוּ H8414 Prep-k (20×)

Formlessness, chaos, emptiness, or nothingness — the unformed void before creation, a desolate waste, or moral-theological vanity.

One of the most evocative words in the Hebrew Bible, tohu first appears in the primordial 'formless and void' (tohu wabohu) of Genesis 1:2 and echoes whenever Scripture describes a return to that pre-creation chaos. It names the trackless desert waste where Israel wandered (Deut 32:10), the ruined 'city of chaos' in Isaiah 24:10, and — strikingly — the moral emptiness of idols and false counsel. Spanish renders it variously as 'vanidad,' 'caos,' and 'vacío,' while French distinguishes 'informe' (formless) from 'néant' (nothingness), capturing the word's wide arc from cosmic disorder to spiritual futility.

1. emptiness, vanity, futility (9×) Emptiness in the moral and theological register: idols, false prophets, and worthless human schemes are declared tohu — devoid of reality or worth. In 1 Samuel 12:21 Samuel warns Israel not to turn aside after 'empty things' (tohu) that cannot profit, and Isaiah 41:29 pronounces idol-makers and their works alike as tohu. Spanish 'vanidad' and French 'néant' both highlight the absolute nothingness attributed to these objects of misplaced trust. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY en: and-confusion, and-emptiness, are-emptiness | es: como-vanidad, la-vanidad, para-nada | fr: comme-vide, et-vide, le-néant | de: Leere, der-emptiness, emptiness 1Sam 12:21; Isa 40:17; Isa 40:23; Isa 41:29

2. wasteland, desolation (5×) A trackless, uninhabitable waste — the physical desolation of desert or ruined land. Deuteronomy 32:10 parallels tohu with midbar (wilderness) to describe where God found Israel, and Job 12:24 pictures leaders wandering in a pathless tohu. The gloss evidence shows Spanish 'caos/vacío' and German 'Leere' applied here, underscoring barren emptiness rather than moral judgment. EMPTINESS AND VANITY
en: and-in-waste, in-a-trackless-waste, in-waste | es: con-vanidad, en-caos, en-vacío | fr: dans-néant, dans-vide, dans-בתהו | de: [בתהו], in-Leere, in-ein-trackless-waste Deut 32:10; Job 6:18; Job 12:24; Ps 107:40; Isa 29:21

3. formlessness, primordial chaos (4×) The primordial formlessness of the unformed earth before God's creative ordering, as in the foundational phrase tohu wabohu (Gen 1:2). By extension, prophetic judgment can reduce a land back to this state: Jeremiah 4:23 deliberately echoes Genesis with the same paired formula, and Isaiah 34:11 measures Edom with 'the line of tohu.' French 'informe' and German 'wüst' preserve the sense of raw, unstructured matter awaiting divine shaping. EMPTINESS AND VANITY
en: formless, of-chaos | es: caos, de-desolación, desordenada | fr: informe, vide | de: Leere, wüst Gen 1:2; Isa 24:10; Isa 34:11; Jer 4:23

4. void, nothingness (2×) The void or nothingness over which God acts sovereignly — the empty expanse of Job 26:7 where God 'stretches the north over tohu,' and Isaiah 45:18 where God declares he did not create the earth as tohu but formed it to be inhabited. Spanish 'el vacío' and French 'vide' both capture this cosmic vacancy that stands as the backdrop to God's purposeful creation. EMPTINESS AND VANITY
en: emptiness, void | es: el-vacío, vacío | fr: vide, תהו | de: Leere, [תהו] Job 26:7; Isa 45:18

תְּהוֹם H8415 Conj-w (36×)

The deep, abyss — primordial waters, ocean depths, subterranean springs, or a metaphor for the unfathomable.

One of the most evocative words in the Hebrew Bible, appearing in the second verse of Genesis over the formless void. It names the vast, dark, uncharted waters — whether the primeval deep of creation (Gen 1:2), the catastrophic flood springs (Gen 7:11), the sea that God splits for Israel (Exod 15:5, 8), or the underground waters that bless the land (Deut 33:13). Spanish 'abismo' and French 'abîme' both descend from Greek 'abyssos,' itself the Septuagint's translation of this very word — showing how tehom shaped Western vocabulary for the fathomless. The word carries an undertone of awe: these waters belong to God alone to command, and even the deep 'trembles' at His voice (Ps 77:16).

1. ocean depths / deep waters (21×) The ocean depths and deep waters — vast bodies of water that God commands, divides, or through which He leads His people. This is the most frequent sense, covering the Red Sea crossing (Exod 15:5, 8), the flood narrative (Gen 7:11; 8:2), and the psalmist's recollection of God's power over the waters (Ps 77:16; 106:9). Spanish uniformly uses 'abismo(s),' French 'abîme,' and German 'Tiefe' — all pointing to overwhelming depth. Isaiah 63:13 and Psalm 106:9 use the rare articled form 'the deep,' suggesting a known, specific body of water in Israel's memory. ABYSS AND DEEP en: deep, deeps, depths | es: Abismos, a-los-abismos, abismo | fr: abîme, dans-abîme, deeps | de: Tiefe, [תהום], [תהום] Gen 1:2; Gen 7:11; Gen 8:2; Gen 49:25; Exod 15:5

2. primordial cosmic deep (8×) The primordial cosmic deep — the watery chaos present before or at creation, sometimes personified or carrying mythological resonance. Genesis 1:2 places 'darkness over the face of the deep' before God speaks light into being. Psalm 104:6 recalls this moment: 'You covered it with the deep as with a garment.' Ezekiel 31:4, 15 draws on this imagery for Assyria's cosmic tree nourished by the deep. Job 28:14 has the deep itself speak: 'It is not in me' — a rare personification where the abyss testifies to the hiddenness of wisdom. ABYSS AND DEEP en: the-deep, the-great | es: Abismo, El-abismo, abismo | fr: abîme | de: [תהום], der-Tiefe Job 28:14; Ps 104:6; Ezek 26:19; Ezek 31:4; Ezek 31:15

3. figurative abyss / metaphorical deep (4×) A figurative or metaphorical abyss — used comparatively for things beyond human fathoming. Psalm 36:6 declares God's judgments 'a great deep,' placing divine justice beyond mortal comprehension. Psalm 42:7's haunting 'deep calls to deep' uses the word as a metaphor for overwhelming sorrow cascading upon the psalmist. Psalm 78:15 recalls God splitting rocks to give water 'as from the great depths.' French 'comme abîme' and Spanish 'como abismos' preserve the simile structure in these passages. ABYSS AND DEEP en: are-a-deep, deep, like-the-depths | es: Abismo, abismo, como-abismos | fr: abîme, comme-abîme | de: Tiefe, wie-der-Tiefe Ps 36:6; Ps 42:7; Ps 78:15

4. subterranean water source (3×) Subterranean water sources — underground springs and wells that rise from beneath the earth, often paired with blessings from heaven above. Genesis 49:25 and Deuteronomy 33:13 both set 'the deep crouching below' alongside 'heaven above' in patriarchal blessings over the land. Deuteronomy 8:7 describes the promised land as having 'depths springing forth in valleys and hills.' The multilingual glosses consistently attach conjunctions ('and-from-deep,' 'y-de-abismos'), reflecting the syntactic pairing with heavenly blessings. Psalm 71:20 extends this to restoration: 'from the depths of the earth you will bring me up again.' ABYSS AND DEEP en: and-deeps, and-from-deep, and-from-the-depths-of | es: y-de-abismos-de, y-de-manantiales, y-del-abismo | fr: et-de-abîme, et-de-profond, et-deeps | de: und-deeps, und-von-dem-Tiefe-, und-von-tief Deut 8:7; Deut 33:13; Ps 71:20

תְּהִלָּה H8416 N-fp (58×)

Praise, song of praise, or renown; verbal and musical celebration of God's character, deeds, and the fame they confer.

Tehillah is the word that names the entire book of Psalms in Hebrew (Sefer Tehillim). It moves fluidly between the act of praising, the song that carries the praise, and the renown that results from it. When Moses declares that God is 'your praise' (Deut 10:21), he means both the object of worship and the source of Israel's fame. Jeremiah uses it differently — nations become 'a praise' or lose their praise as God exalts or judges. The multilingual glosses reveal this breadth: Spanish alabanza and German Lobpreis cover both the act and the product, while French louange captures the warm vocal quality the Hebrew implies.

1. praise, act of praising (45×) The act or expression of praising God, encompassing verbal declarations, liturgical worship, and personal adoration. This dominant sense (45 occurrences) appears with every pronominal suffix — 'my praise,' 'your praise,' 'his praise' — showing that praise in Hebrew is always relational. Key passages include the call to 'declare his praise' (Isa 42:10) and Nehemiah's great assembly of praise (Neh 12:46). German Lobpreis and French louange both underscore the active, vocal nature of this sense. PRAISE AND RENOWN
en: His-praise, Praise, Your-praise | es: Alabanza, alabanza, por-alabanza | fr: louange, sa-louange | de: Lobpreis, [תהלה], dein-Lobpreis Deut 10:21; 1Chr 16:35; 2Chr 20:22; Neh 9:5; Neh 12:46

2. renown, fame, praiseworthy quality (7×) Renown, fame, or the quality of being praiseworthy, often in the construction letehillah ('for a praise'). Deuteronomy 26:19 promises Israel will be set 'for a praise' above all nations — meaning as a source of worldwide renown. Jeremiah inverts this: Moab's tehillah is silenced (48:2), Babylon the 'praise of the whole earth' is seized (51:41). Spanish para alabanza and French pour louange capture this resultative sense well, showing that praise can become a public standing. PRAISE AND RENOWN
en: and-for-a-praise, and-for-praise, for-a-praise | es: alabanza-de, para-alabanza, y-para-alabanza | fr: [לתהלה], et-louange, et-pour-louange | de: Lobpreis, [ולתהלה], [לתהלה] Deut 26:19; Jer 13:11; Jer 33:9; Jer 48:2; Jer 51:41

3. songs of praise, hymns (6×) Specific compositions or hymns of praise, typically appearing in the plural tehillot. Exodus 15:11 asks 'who is like you, majestic in praises?' — referring to God's praiseworthy deeds recounted in song. Psalm 22:3 places God as 'enthroned on the praises of Israel,' treating these hymns as the very seat of divine presence. The plural form signals concrete literary or liturgical works rather than the abstract act of praising. PRAISE AND RENOWN
en: and-praises-of, on-the-praises-of, praises | es: alabanzas, alabanzas-de, las-alabanzas-de | fr: et-louange, louange, praises | de: Lobpreis, auf-der-Lobpreis-, dein-Lobpreis Exod 15:11; Ps 9:14; Ps 22:3; Ps 78:4; Isa 60:6

תְּהֹלָה H8417 N-fs (1×)
error, folly — mistake or moral failing, possibly in Job 4:18 (though text is uncertain)
This noun appears in Job 4:18, though the text is disputed. Eliphaz claims God 'charges his angels with error' or folly. If the reading is correct, the noun means a mistake or moral failing—even celestial beings are not beyond reproach before God. However, many scholars prefer the reading 'untrustworthiness' (tiphlah), and textual variants suggest early confusion. Either way, the verse affirms God's transcendent holiness.

(1×) A disputed noun in Job 4:18, possibly meaning 'error' or 'folly' that God finds even in his angels. BDB notes connection to an Ethiopian root for wandering or roving, suggesting moral deviation. However, textual variants and the alternative reading 'untrustworthiness' caution against certainty. The verse's point remains: if even angels are imperfect before God, how much more are mortals? FOLLY AND FOOLISHNESS
en: error | es: locura | fr: תהלה | de: [תהלה] Job 4:18

תַּהֲלוּכָה H8418 Conj-w / N-fp (1×)
processions — formal, ceremonial marches, particularly for worship and dedication
This plural noun denotes processions or formal marches. Nehemiah 12:31 describes two 'thanksgiving processions' at the dedication of Jerusalem's rebuilt wall. These processions moved in opposite directions atop the wall, with choirs, musicians, and leaders publicly celebrating God's protection. The word emphasizes organized, ceremonial movement for religious purposes—worship made visible and communal. Such processions embodied Israel's identity as a people gathered around Yahweh.

(1×) The plural noun in Nehemiah 12:31 means 'processions,' specifically the two thanksgiving processions organized for the wall dedication. The root suggests walking or movement, here formalized into ceremonial marches with liturgical purpose. The dual processions moving in opposite directions created a dramatic, comprehensive celebration encircling the city, making worship a public, spatial, and auditory event. CONDUCT AND WALKING
en: and-processions | es: y-procesiones | fr: [ותהלכת] | de: [ותהלכת] Neh 12:31

תַּהְפֻּכָה H8419 Prep-b / N-fpc (10×)
Perversity, crookedness — morally twisted speech, conduct, or character, used almost exclusively in Proverbs
This noun, always plural in form, describes what is morally twisted, distorted, or turned upside down — the opposite of straightforward integrity. Proverbs deploys it as a concentrated vocabulary of moral corruption: perverse speech (Prov 2:12; 10:31-32; 23:33), a 'man of perversity' who sows discord (Prov 16:28), and the devising of crooked schemes (Prov 6:14; 16:30). The word's single appearance outside Proverbs is in Moses' Song (Deut 32:20), where Israel is called a 'generation of perversity' — faithless children in whom there is no steadfastness. The root suggests a fundamental inversion of what is right.

perversity / crookedness (10×) Perversity or moral crookedness, always in the plural (tahpukhot), denoting twisted speech, devious conduct, or warped character. Nearly all occurrences cluster in Proverbs, where it describes perverse utterances (Prov 2:12; 10:31-32; 23:33), a tongue of perversity (Prov 10:31), a mouth of perversity (Prov 8:13), a man of perversity who stirs up strife (Prov 16:28, 30), and evil devices (Prov 6:14). The sole non-Proverbial use in Deuteronomy 32:20 labels Israel a 'generation of perversity.' Spanish 'perversidades' and French 'perversité' directly mirror the Hebrew sense of fundamental moral inversion. PERVERSITY CROOKEDNESS
en: in-the-perversity-of, perverse-things, perversions | es: Perversidades, de-perversidades, en-las-perversidades-de | fr: dans-perversité, perversions, perversité | de: Verkehrtheit, in-Verkehrtheit, perversions Deut 32:20; Prov 2:12; Prov 2:14; Prov 6:14; Prov 8:13

תָּו H8420 N-msc / 1cs (3×)
mark, sign (visible symbol for identification or exemption)
This noun denotes a mark or sign, either written/inscribed or made on the body. Job 31:35 uses it for Job's 'mark' or signature—his written attestation or sealed document proving his integrity. Ezekiel 9:4 and 9:6 use it for the mark placed on the foreheads of the righteous in Jerusalem, exempting them from the coming judgment: 'set a mark on the foreheads of the men who sigh and groan over all the abominations.' The protective mark distinguishes the faithful from the idolatrous, ensuring the destroying angels spare them. The imagery influenced later apocalyptic symbolism of sealing God's servants.

(3×) A visible mark for identification or protection. Job 31:35 desires 'my mark' (signature/seal) on a written indictment so Job could wear it proudly—his attestation of innocence. Ezekiel 9:4 commands placing 'a mark' (tav—perhaps literally the letter tau, shaped like X or +) on foreheads of the faithful. Ezekiel 9:6 instructs the destroyers not to touch anyone with 'the mark.' The multilingual glosses ('marca,' 'mark,' 'señal') confirm this involves a visible sign that identifies, protects, or authenticates—whether written signature or inscribed symbol. SIGNS AND BANNERS
en: mark, my-mark, the-mark | es: la-marca, marca, mi-señal | fr: marque, mon-תוי-moi | de: [התו], [תו], [תוי] Job 31:35; Ezek 9:4; Ezek 9:6

תּוּב H8421 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (8×)
To return, come back (Aramaic); in Haf'el, to restore, give back, or reply
An Aramaic verb equivalent to Hebrew shuv, appearing exclusively in Daniel and Ezra. In the Pe'al (Qal) stem it describes the poignant return of Nebuchadnezzar's reason and royal splendor after his period of madness (Dan 4:34, 36). The Haf'el (causative) stem broadens into two functions: restoring physical objects — as when Cyrus decrees that temple vessels be returned to Jerusalem (Ezra 6:5) — and returning a verbal answer or reply (Ezra 5:5, 11; Dan 2:14; 3:16).

1. return, give back, restore (Hifil) (5×) The Haf'el (causative) stem encompassing both 'to restore, return objects' and 'to return an answer, reply.' Ezra 6:5 commands that the gold and silver vessels of the temple be restored to their place. Ezra 5:5 and 5:11 describe the Jewish elders returning an answer to the Persian governor. Daniel 2:14 has Daniel returning a prudent counsel, and in 3:16 the three companions return their bold reply to Nebuchadnezzar. Spanish 'devolvieron' (gave back) and 'responderte' (reply to you) reflect both sub-senses. RETURNING AND RESTORING en: let-them-be-restored, returned, returned-to-us | es: devolvieran, nos-

devolvieron, responderte | fr: [התיבונא], [יהתיבון], [יתיבון] | de: [התיב], [התיבונא], [יהתיבון] Ezra 5:5; Ezra 5:11; Ezra 6:5; Dan 2:14; Dan 3:16

2. return, come back (Qal) (3×) The Pe'al (Qal) intransitive sense: to return, come back. All three occurrences cluster in Daniel 4, describing the restoration of Nebuchadnezzar after divine judgment — his reason returned to him (v. 34), and his brightness and royal splendor returned (v. 36). The Syriac cognate tuv and Hebrew shuv share this basic meaning. Spanish 'volvio' (he returned) and French 'retourner' capture the sense of conditions being restored to their former state. RETURNING AND RESTORING en: returned | es: volvieron, volvió | fr: retourner | de: [יתוב] Dan 4:34; Dan 4:36

תּוּבַל H8422 N-proper-fs (8×)

Tubal: a son of Japheth and the people or region descended from him, located in eastern Asia Minor, often paired with Meshech.

A proper noun identifying both a son of Japheth in the Table of Nations and the people or territory associated with him, generally located in eastern Anatolia near ancient Cappadocia. Tubal appears in the genealogies of Genesis 10:2 and 1 Chronicles 1:5 alongside his brothers Magog, Madai, Javan, and Meshech. In Ezekiel, Tubal and Meshech are consistently paired as trading peoples who exported slaves and bronze vessels (Ezek 27:13), as fallen warriors in Sheol (Ezek 32:26), and as allies of Gog in the great eschatological conflict (Ezek 38:2-3; 39:1). Isaiah 66:19 lists Tubal among distant nations to whom God's glory will be proclaimed.

Tubal (proper noun, people/region) (8×) The proper noun Tubal (תּוּבַל), referring to a Japhethite people and their territory in eastern Asia Minor, identified with the Assyrian Tabalu (roughly Cappadocia). Genealogically, Tubal is a son of Japheth (Gen 10:2 = 1 Chr 1:5), regularly listed alongside Meshech, with whom he forms a near-formulaic pair in prophetic literature. Ezekiel portrays Tubal-Meshech as merchants dealing in slaves and bronze (Ezek 27:13), as a nation whose slain warriors lie in Sheol (Ezek 32:26), and as the people of Gog's confederation in the apocalyptic battle (Ezek 38:2-3; 39:1). Isaiah 66:19 includes Tubal among far-flung nations receiving God's revelation. The German glosses show some confusion with tevel ('world'), but all other traditions—English 'Tubal,' Spanish 'Tubal,' French 'Tubal'—correctly treat this as a proper noun. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: Tubal, Tuval, and-Tubal | es: Tubal, y-Tubal, y-Tubal. | fr: Tubal, et-Tubal, monde | de: Erdkreis, [ותבל], [תבל] Gen 10:2; 1Chr 1:5; Isa 66:19; Ezek 27:13; Ezek 32:26

תּוּבַל H8423 N-proper-ms (2×)

Tubal-Cain (first metalworker in Genesis 4, descendant of Cain)

Tubal-Cain appears only in Genesis 4:22, where he's identified as 'the forger of all implements of bronze and iron'—the first metalworker in biblical genealogy. He belongs to the line of Cain, specifically the seventh generation: son of Lamech and Zillah, half-brother to Jabal (first herdsman) and Jubal (first musician). His name compounds two elements, possibly meaning 'Tubal the smith.' The verse credits him with originating metallurgy, a crucial technological advance that enabled both agricultural tools and weapons. His sister was Naamah.

(2×) The name occurs twice in the same verse (Genesis 4:22), once in introduction and once possessively. All translations preserve the compound name structure: English 'Tubal-Cain,' Spanish 'Tuval-Caín,' French 'Tuval-Caïn,' German 'Tubal-Kain.' The consistency across languages reflects recognition of this as a significant proper name in human cultural history according to the biblical record, marking the origin of metalwork. CAIN PROPER NAME

en: Tuval-Qayin | es: Tuval-Caín | fr: Tuval-Caïn | de: Tubal-Kain, Tubal-Kains Gen 4:22

תּוּגָה H8424 N-fsc (4×)

grief, sorrow; emotional pain or heaviness of heart, often contrasted with joy in wisdom literature

This noun refers to grief or sorrow—emotional pain and heaviness. Psalm 119:28 cries out, 'My soul melts away for sorrow.' Proverbs uses it in wisdom contrasts: 'A wise son makes a glad father, but a foolish son is a grief to his mother' (10:1). Proverbs 14:13 observes that 'even in laughter the heart may ache, and the end of joy may be grief.' Proverbs 17:21 notes that 'the father of a fool has no joy' (literally, 'does not rejoice unto sorrow'). The multilingual glosses (Spanish tristeza, French chagrin) confirm this as sorrow/grief. Wisdom literature recognizes grief as joy's shadow—the pain of folly, loss, and life's disappointments. Even laughter cannot fully banish it; it lurks beneath the surface of human experience.

(4×) Grief, sorrow, or emotional pain. The psalmist's soul melts from sorrow (Ps 119:28). A foolish son brings grief to parents (Prov 10:1, 17:21). Even laughter may conceal inner grief (Prov 14:13). Wisdom literature treats grief as joy's counterpart—the inevitable accompaniment of life in a broken world. Foolish children, life's disappointments, and awareness of mortality all produce this heaviness. The term captures emotional pain that weighs down the heart, distinct from mere sadness—a deep, melting sorrow. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: for-grief, from-sorrow, is-grief | es: de-tristeza, para-tristeza, tristeza | fr: de-chagrin, à-תוגה ,לתוגה | de: [לתוגה], [תוגה], [תוגת] Ps 119:28; Prov 10:1; Prov 14:13; Prov 17:21

תֹּגַרְמָה H8425 Conj-w | N-proper-ms (4×)

Togarmah; name of a northern territory/people in Armenia or Asia Minor, descended from Japheth

This geographical and ethnic name refers to a northern territory, likely in Armenia or northwestern Asia Minor. Genesis 10:3 lists Togarmah as a descendant of Gomer (Japheth's line) in the Table of Nations. 1 Chronicles 1:6 repeats the genealogy. Ezekiel 27:14 mentions 'Beth-togarmah' (house of Togarmah) as trading horses, war horses, and mules to Tyre. Ezekiel 38:6 includes Togarmah from the far north among Gog's allies. The multilingual glosses show transliteration (Spanish Togarma/Togarmah, French/German variations). Ancient sources associate this with Armenian territory. In Ezekiel's cosmic geography, Togarmah represents the distant north—the edge of the known world, source of prized horses and allied with apocalyptic enemies.

(4×) A northern territory/people, probably in Armenia or Asia Minor, descended from Japheth through Gomer (Gen 10:3, 1 Chr 1:6). Known for trading horses and mules to Tyre (Ezek 27:14). Appears among Gog's northern allies in eschatological prophecy (Ezek 38:6). The name evokes the far north in Israel's geographical imagination—a remote region producing war horses, representing the distant reaches from which apocalyptic threats emerge. Ancient interpreters identified it with Armenian territory. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Togarmah, and-Togarmah | es: Togarma, Togarmah,, y-Togarma | fr: Taw, et-Togarma, et-Togarmah | de: [וחוגרמה], [תוגרמה], und-Togarma Gen 10:3; 1Chr 1:6; Ezek 27:14; Ezek 38:6

תּוֹדָה H8426 Prep-b | N-fs (32×)

Thanksgiving, praise, or confession offered to God; also a thank offering or a thanksgiving choir in procession.

Derived from the verb yadah ('to give thanks, confess'), todah spans the full arc from inner gratitude to outward ritual. At its heart it means acknowledging God's goodness — whether through praise songs in the temple (Ps 100:4), a sacrificial peace offering presented with gratitude (Lev 7:12), or a formal confession of sin (Josh 7:19). Nehemiah 12 introduces a vivid specialized use: two thanksgiving choirs processing in opposite directions atop Jerusalem's newly rebuilt walls. Spanish acción de gracias and French action de grâce both mirror the compound idea of 'an act of thanks,' while German Danklied ('thanksgiving song') highlights the liturgical dimension.

1. thanksgiving, praise, gratitude (23×) The abstract expression of thanksgiving or praise directed toward God, the dominant sense across the Hebrew Bible. It appears in psalmic worship (Ps 26:7, 'the voice of thanksgiving'), liturgical instruction (Ps 95:2, paired with songs), and prophetic promise (Isa 51:3, thanksgiving paired with the sound of music). French action de grâces and Spanish acción de gracias both capture the formal, declarative quality — this is not quiet gratitude but voiced, public praise. THANKSGIVING AND GRATITUDE

en: and-thanksgiving, thanksgiving, the-thanksgiving-of | es: accion-de-gracias, acción-de-gracias, acción-de-gracias-de | fr: action-de-grâce, action-de-grâces, dans-action-de-grâces | de: Danklied, [ותודה], [תודה] Lev 7:12; Lev 7:13; Lev 7:15; Lev 22:29

2. thank offering, sacrifice of thanksgiving (4×) A concrete sacrificial offering given in thanksgiving, part of the shelamim (peace offering) system outlined in Leviticus 7:12–15. The thank offering was accompanied by unleavened cakes and eaten the same day. In 2 Chronicles 29:31, Hezekiah invites the assembly to bring thank offerings after the temple's purification. Amos 4:5 uses it with biting irony — Israel loves to announce their thank offerings publicly while their hearts remain far from God. THANKSGIVING AND GRATITUDE

en: and-thank-offerings, thank-offerings, thanksgiving | es: acciones-de-gracias, ofrenda-de-acción-de-gracias, y-ofrendas-de-acción-de-gracias | fr: action-de-grâce, action-de-grâces, et-action-de-grâces | de: Danklied, [ותודות], [תודה] 2Chr 29:31; Ps 56:12; Amos 4:5

3. thanksgiving choir or procession (3×) A specialized liturgical sense: a thanksgiving choir or processional group. Nehemiah 12:31, 38, and 40 describe two great todah processions walking in opposite directions on the walls of Jerusalem during the dedication ceremony. The word here denotes the organized group of singers and musicians, not the abstract concept. This concrete, communal usage grew naturally from the worship context of the primary sense. THANKSGIVING AND GRATITUDE

en: and-the-thanksgiving-choir, thanksgiving-choirs, the-thanksgiving-choirs | es: Y-el-coro-de-gracias, coros-de-gracias, los-coros-de-gracias | fr: action-de-grâces, et-action-de-grâces | de: [והתודה], [והתודה], [תודת] Neh 12:31; Neh 12:38; Neh 12:40

4. confession, acknowledgment (2×) Confession or public acknowledgment of wrongdoing, closely tied to the verb yadah in its confessional usage. In Joshua 7:19, Joshua urges Achan to 'give todah to the LORD' by confessing what he has done. Ezra 10:11 similarly calls for todah — acknowledgment of sin regarding foreign marriages. Some English versions render 'confession' here, while French and German translations sometimes retain the broader 'thanksgiving' sense, obscuring this penitential dimension. CONFESSION AND PRAISE

en: confession | es: confesión | fr: action-de-grâces, confession | de: [תודה], confession Josh 7:19; Ezra 10:11

תָּוָה H8427 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-2ms (3×)

mark, scribble (make marks on a surface)

This denominative verb means to make marks or set a mark, derived from the noun 'tav' (mark). 1 Samuel 21:14 describes David feigning madness before Achish: he 'scribbled on the doors of the gate' and let saliva run down his beard (though textual variants and alternative readings exist—some suggest 'drummed'). Ezekiel 9:4 uses the Hiphil with cognate accusative: 'set a mark upon' the foreheads of the faithful—actively inscribe the protective sign. The contexts involve either erratic marking (David's fake madness) or purposeful signing (divine protection). The root connects to the letter tav and the concept of making visible signs.

(3×) Make marks or inscribe a sign. 1 Samuel 21:14 (with Ketiv-Qere variant) describes David 'scribbling' on the gate doors as part of his insanity act (though textual difficulties exist—some read 'drummed' instead). Ezekiel 9:4 commands the scribe-angel 'mark a mark' (cognate accusative) on the foreheads of the righteous—actively inscribe the protective tav. The multilingual glosses ('garabateaba,' 'scribbled,' 'marcarás') confirm this involves making visible marks, whether purposeful (divine sealing) or chaotic (feigned madness). ENGRAVING AND INSCRIBING

en: [and-he-scribbled], and-he-scribbled, and-you-shall-mark | es: (Qeré), y-garabateaba, y-marcarás | fr: [and-il-scribbled], et-il-scribbled, et-marquer | de: [and-er-scribbled], [והתורית] 1Sam 21:14; Ezek 9:4

תָּוָה H8428 V-Hifil-Perf-3cp (1×)

pained, provoked — to cause grief or vexation, used of Israel testing God

This Hiphil verb means to pain, wound, or provoke in Psalm 78:41. The verse says Israel 'pained the Holy One of Israel' through repeated testing and unbelief. The root relates to Aramaic words for repentance or grief, suggesting they caused God sorrow or vexation. The parallel verb is 'tested,' emphasizing Israel's rebellious probing of God's patience. The anthropopathic language (God being pained) underscores the relational dimension of covenant unfaithfulness.

(1×) The Hiphil perfect (third plural) in Psalm 78:41 means 'they pained' or 'provoked' the Holy One of Israel. The root connects to Aramaic terms for grief and repentance, here used causatively: they caused God pain through unbelief. The Septuagint renders 'they provoked,' capturing the vexation. This anthropopathic language portrays covenant violation as wounding God, not merely breaking an abstract law. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: they-provoked | es: limitaron | fr: le-affliger | de: sie-provoked Ps 78:41

תְּוַה H8429 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

astonished, alarmed — to be startled or filled with wonder, particularly at a miraculous event

This Aramaic verb means to be startled or astonished. In Daniel 3:24, Nebuchadnezzar 'was astonished' when he saw four men walking in the fiery furnace instead of the three he had thrown in. The verb captures his shocked amazement at the miraculous preservation and the mysterious fourth figure. The king's astonishment becomes the narrative hinge, leading to his acknowledgment of the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego.

(1×) An Aramaic perfect verb (third masculine singular) in Daniel 3:24, meaning 'he was astonished' or 'alarmed.' Nebuchadnezzar's startled reaction to seeing four figures in the furnace drives the narrative forward. The verb emphasizes sudden, overwhelming surprise at the impossible—three bound men not only alive but walking freely, accompanied by a fourth divine figure. His astonishment opens the way for theological recognition. AMAZEMENT AND ASTONISHMENT

en: was-astonished | es: se-asombró | fr: surpris | de: [תוה] Dan 3:24

תֹּוחַ H8430 N-proper-ms (1×)

Toach/Tohu — personal name of an ancestor of Samuel, variant spelling of Tohu in 1 Samuel 1:1

Toach appears in 1 Chronicles 6:34 as an ancestor of Samuel the prophet, corresponding to Tohu in 1 Samuel 1:1. The variation reflects different textual traditions or dialectal pronunciation. Genealogies served to establish legitimacy—Samuel's Levitical ancestry validated his priestly functions despite not being from Aaron's line. The Septuagint shows further variation, common in proper names across manuscripts.

(1×) A personal name in 1 Chronicles 6:34 within Samuel's genealogy. The parallel text (1 Samuel 1:1) has 'Tohu,' demonstrating common variation in proper names. The individual's significance lies entirely in his ancestral connection to Samuel, establishing the prophet's Levitical lineage. Multilingual versions simply transliterate, as is standard for proper names. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Toach | es: Toaj | fr: [תוח] | de: [תוח] 1Chr 6:34

תּוֹחֶלֶת H8431 N-fsc / 1cs (6×)

Hope, expectation; an abstract noun denoting anticipated outcome, whether fulfilled, deferred, or lost.

Derived from the root yahal ('to wait, hope'), this noun captures the quality of expectant waiting and its anticipated outcome. Proverbs 13:12 offers its most memorable use: 'Hope deferred makes the heart sick' – a line that resonates across cultures. The word spans the range from confident expectation (Ps 39:7, 'my hope is in you') to the dashed expectations of the wicked (Prov 10:28; 11:7).

In Lamentations 3:18, the poet cries that his endurance and hope have perished, reaching the nadir of despair. Spanish esperanza and French espérance both reflect the warm, forward-looking quality of this term.

hope, expectation (6×) Hope or expectation as an anticipated outcome, whether positive or negative. In Psalm 39:7, the psalmist directs his hope toward God alone. Proverbs 13:12 pairs deferred hope with heartsickness, while Proverbs 10:28 and 11:7 contrast the gladness of righteous expectation with the perishing hope of the wicked. Lamentations 3:18 represents its darkest use, where hope itself seems to have died. Job 41:9 applies it ironically to the futile expectation of subduing Leviathan. Spanish esperanza and French espérance consistently render the warm, anticipatory quality of this noun across all occurrences. HOPE (ABSTRACT NOUN)
en: and-my-hope, and-the-expectation-of, his-hope | es: Esperanza, esperanza-de, mi-esperanza | fr: [ותוחלתי], espérance, et-ותוחלת | de: [ותוחלת], [ותוחלתי], [תוחלת] Job 41:9; Ps 39:7; Prov 10:28; Prov 11:7; Prov 13:12

תָּוֶךְ H8432 N-msc / 3ms (420×)

Midst, middle, center; spatially the central region; relationally 'among' persons or peoples; the interior or midpoint.

Tavekh is one of those quiet, structural words that appears everywhere yet shapes meaning profoundly. It places things at the center of spaces, peoples, and events — from the tree 'in the midst of the garden' (Gen 2:9) to God dwelling 'among' his people (Exod 25:8). Nearly always governed by a preposition (be-tokh 'in the midst of,' mi-tokh 'from the midst of,' el-tokh 'into the midst of'), it functions less as an independent noun and more as a relational anchor. The multilingual evidence reveals a telling split: when the referent is spatial, Arabic uses wasat and Korean 가운데, but when the referent is a community of persons, Arabic shifts to bayn ('among/between') and Korean to 중 (jung), showing that the spatial and social senses are genuinely distinct even though Hebrew uses the same word for both.

1. midst/middle of (spatial-locative) (335×) The core spatial-locative sense: the middle region or central area of a place, land, body of water, fire, or other physical space. At 335 occurrences this is the overwhelming default. The firmament divides waters 'in the midst of' the waters (Gen 1:6); Abraham walks 'in the midst of' the pieces of the covenant sacrifice (Gen 15:17); Israel passes through 'the midst of the sea' (Exod 14:22). Arabic wasat, Korean 가운데, and German Mitte/inmitten all map cleanly to this central-region meaning. The sense is always relational — tavekh requires a genitive or pronominal suffix specifying what space is being centered. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-midst-of, into-midst-of | es: en-medio-de, en-medio-de- | fr: dans-milieu-de | de: in-Mitte-von, in-der-Mitte, inmitten Gen 1:6; Gen 2:9; Gen 3:8; Gen 9:21; Gen 18:24

2. among, in the community of (65×) The interpersonal or communal sense: 'among' a group of people, nations, or living beings. Distinguished from the spatial sense by foregrounding social presence rather than physical geometry — God dwelling 'among' Israel (Exod 25:8; 29:46), foreign gods 'among' the household (Gen 35:2), or a sojourner living 'among' the people (Exod 12:49). Arabic consistently shifts to bayn ('between, among') here rather than wasat, and Korean uses 중 (jung, 'among') rather than the spatial 가운데, confirming this as a cross-linguistically recognized semantic boundary. The 65 occurrences in this cluster are concentrated in Pentateuchal legislation about communal purity and divine presence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: among-them, in-midst-of-them, in-their-midst | es: en-medio-de-ellos, entre-ellos | fr: dans-leur-midst, dans-leur-milieu, dans-leur-milieu-eux | de: Mitte, in-ihr-Mitte, in-ihrer-Mitte Gen 23:9; Gen 35:2; Exod 12:49; Exod 25:8; Exod 29:46

3. interior, inside, within (12×) The interior or inside of a single enclosed entity — a body, a vessel, a person's inner being — where the meaning is 'within' rather than 'in the center of.' A clay vessel's contents are unclean 'within it' (Lev 11:33); Gideon's men carry torches 'inside' jars (Judg 7:16); the psalmist's heart melts 'within me' (Ps 22:14). Arabic renders these with dakhil ('inside, interior') rather than wasat, and Korean uses 안 (an, 'inside') or 속 (sok, 'interior'), both selecting containment vocabulary rather than centrality vocabulary. Only 12 occurrences, but the semantic shift from open-space center to enclosed-container interior is real. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-its-midst, in-midst-of, in-the-midst-of | es: dentro-de-mí, en-medio, en-medio-de | fr: dans-milieu, dans-son-midst, milieu | de: Mitte, Mitte-, [תוכך] Lev 11:33; Judg 7:16; Ps 22:14; Ps 22:22

4. midpoint, the middle (absolute) (8×) The definite, absolute midpoint or center of an object or structure, used with the article or absolutely to identify a specific location rather than a relational 'midst of X.' Abraham cut the covenant animals 'in the middle' (Gen 15:10, ba-tavekh used absolutely); the city stands 'in the middle' of a measured area (Num 35:5); the 'middle pillars' of the temple in Judges 16:29 use the articular form ha-tavekh. Arabic employs the definite al-wasat and Korean 한가운데 ('the very center') to render this pointed, article-bearing usage. Only 8 occurrences, but the absolute or articular construction marks a genuine shift from relational 'midst' to locatable 'midpoint.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-middle-its, in-the-middle, in-the-midst | es: el-medio, en-el-medio, en-medio | fr: au-milieu-de, dans-le-middle, dans-le-milieu | de: Mitte, [ותוכו], der-middle Gen 15:10; Num 35:5; Josh 8:22; Judg 15:4; Judg 16:29

תּוֹכֵחָה H8433a N-fp (4×)

rebuke, correction, reproof; sharp words of correction or punishment, whether divine or human

This noun refers to rebuke or correction—sharp, corrective words. 2 Kings 19:3 and Isaiah 37:3 use it in the identical phrase describing Jerusalem's crisis: 'This day is a day of distress, of rebuke, and of disgrace.' Hosea 5:9 warns that 'Ephraim shall become a desolation in the day of rebuke.' Psalm 149:7 calls for executing 'vengeance on the nations and rebukes on the peoples.' The multilingual glosses (Spanish reprensión/castigos, French reproche, German rebuke) confirm the corrective sense. This is not gentle guidance but sharp correction —God's rebuke that accompanies judgment, or the punishments executed on rebellious nations. It combines verbal reproof with enacted consequences, words that wound and purify.

(4×) Rebuke, correction, or sharp reproof. Describes days of crisis and divine correction (2 Kgs 19:3, Isa 37:3, Hos 5:9)—times when God's corrective judgment falls. Psalm 149:7 speaks of executing rebukes/punishments on nations. This is correction that cuts—not gentle admonition but sharp words accompanying divine judgment. The term combines verbal rebuke with enacted punishment, emphasizing the painful but necessary nature of God's corrective discipline on wayward peoples. REPROOF REBUKE ARGUMENT
en: and-rebuke, rebuke, rebukes | es: castigos, reprensión, y-de-reproche | fr: [ותוכחה], et-rebuke, reproche | de: [ותוכחה], [תוכחה], rebukes 2Kgs 19:3; Ps 149:7; Isa 37:3; Hos 5:9

תּוֹכַחַת H8433b Conj-w (24×)

Reproof, correction, or reasoned argument; verbal rebuke aimed at moral reform or a formal complaint lodged before God.

A richly textured Hebrew noun covering the spectrum from wise counsel's sharp edge to the formal arguments of a sufferer before God. In Proverbs, it appears repeatedly alongside musar (discipline), painting reproof as the indispensable companion of moral formation — 'reproofs of instruction are the way of life' (Prov 6:23). Yet in Job and Habakkuk, the same word takes on a forensic quality: Job marshals his tokachath as a legal brief before the Almighty (Job 23:4), and Habakkuk stations himself on the watchtower to hear God's response to his complaint (Hab 2:1). Spanish 'reprensión' and 'argumentos,' German 'Zurechtweisung' and 'arguments,' all reflect this double register of correction and disputation.

1. reproof, rebuke, correction (21×) Verbal reproof, rebuke, or corrective discipline — the stern but life-giving word of a parent, sage, or God that calls the hearer back to the right path. Proverbs clusters this sense heavily: paired with musar in Prov 3:11, 12:1, 15:5, and standing as the hallmark of wisdom's voice in Prov 1:23, 25. Multilingual glosses converge on correction language — Spanish

'represión/castigos,' French 'reproche,' German 'Zurechtweisung' — confirming a unified concept of formative rebuke. Ps 73:14 extends the idea to God's chastening of the psalmist. REPROOF REBUKE ARGUMENT

en: His-reproof, and-in-rebukes-of, and-my-chastening | es: Con-castigos, a-mi-represión, con-represiones-de | fr: [בתוכחות], [ובתכחות], dans-reproche | de: Zurechtweisung, [בתוכחות], [בתוכחתו] Job 13:6; Ps 39:11; Ps 73:14; Prov 1:23; Prov 1:25

2. argument, complaint, case (3×) A legal or forensic argument, a reasoned complaint or case presented in formal disputation before God. Job 23:4 is the paradigm: 'I would fill my mouth with arguments,' where tokachath denotes structured reasoning rather than moral correction. Ps 38:14 similarly uses it for the sufferer's case, and Hab 2:1 frames the prophet waiting to hear God's reply to his tokachath. Spanish 'argumentos/réplicas' and German 'arguments' distinguish this forensic register from the wisdom-correction sense. REPROOF REBUKE ARGUMENT

en: arguments, my-complaint, with-arguments | es: de-argumentos., mi-represión, réplicas | fr: [תוכחתי], reproche, réprimande | de: [תוכחות], [תוכחתי], arguments Job 23:4; Ps 38:14; Hab 2:1

תּוֹלָד H8434 Conj-w (1×)

Tolad — place name in Simeon's territory, possibly identical with Eltolad

Tolad appears in 1 Chronicles 4:29 as a town in Simeon's inheritance. It may be the same as Eltolad mentioned in Joshua 15:30 and 19:4, with a shortened form of the name. The Septuagint shows textual variation. Simeonite towns were actually within Judah's larger territory, reflecting Simeon's absorption into Judah. These town lists preserve ancient territorial memory even after political realities shifted.

(1×) A place name in 1 Chronicles 4:29, listed among Simeonite towns. Scholars identify it with Eltolad from Joshua, suggesting 'Tolad' is a shortened form. The conjunction 'and in Tolad' links it to a series of settlements. Geographical precision in genealogical lists served both historical memory and potential land claims, especially important for tribes like Simeon that lacked clearly defined borders. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-Tolad | es: y-en-Tolad | fr: [ובתולד] | de: [ובתולד] 1Chr 4:29

תּוֹלְדוֹת H8435 Prep-l / N-fpc / 3ms (39×)

Generations, genealogical account — family descent records; structural formula of Genesis ('these are the toledot of...')

A feminine plural noun from the root y-l-d ('to bear, beget'), always appearing in the plural toledot. It serves as the backbone architecture of Genesis, introducing ten major sections with the formula 'these are the generations of...' (Gen 2:4; 5:1; 6:9; 10:1; 11:10, 27; 25:12, 19; 36:1; 37:2). Beyond Genesis, toledot structures census lists (Num 1:20ff), priestly genealogies (Exod 6:16, 19; 28:10), and Chronicler genealogies (1 Chr 5:7; 7:2, 4, 9). The word encompasses both the act of generation and its written record — history as the unfolding of family lines under divine providence.

generations / genealogical record (39×) Genealogical account or record of descendants, used as a literary-structural marker ('these are the toledot of...') dividing Genesis into ten narrative sections (Gen 2:4; 5:1; 6:9; 10:1 etc.), and as census or clan-roster headings in Numbers, Exodus, and Chronicles. Cross-lingual evidence confirms the genealogical core: Spanish 'generaciones,' French 'générations,' German 'Geschlechter/Geschlechterfolge' — all pointing to familial succession as the primary semantic content across all 39 attestations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: are-the-generations-of, generations-of, their-generations | es: generaciones-de, generaciones-de-ellos | fr: générations-de, leur-générations, sont-le-générations-de | de: die-Geschlechter, die-Geschlechterfolge, ihr-Geschlechter Gen 2:4; Gen 5:1; Gen 6:9; Gen 10:1; Gen 10:32

תִּילוֹן H8436 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Tilon (Judahite name in Chronicles; textual variant Tolon)

Tilon appears in 1 Chronicles 4:20 in a genealogical list of Judahite families. The Hebrew text presents a textual variant here: the Ketiv (written text) reads 'Tolon' while the Qere (reading tradition) has 'Tilon.' The ancient versions show varied renderings, suggesting scribal uncertainty about the original form. He's listed among the sons of Shimon, part of the broader genealogy tracing Judah's descendants. Beyond this single genealogical mention, nothing else is known about this individual.

(2×) The textual complexity is evident in the translations: some reference both Ketiv and Qere readings ('and-Tilon' vs 'and-Tolon'). The occurrence appears twice in the same verse reference (1 Chronicles 4:20) likely because both reading traditions are preserved in textual notes. The LXX variants (Inon, Thilon, Tholeim) show ancient translators also struggled with the correct form of this rare name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: (and-Tilon), [K: and-Tolon] | es: (y-Tilon), [y-Tilon] | fr: [ותולון], [ותילן] | de: [ותולן], [ותילן] 1Chr 4:20

תּוֹלָל H8437 Conj-w / N-mpc / 1cp (1×)

tormentors, mockers — those who afflict or mock, used of Babylonian captors demanding songs

This disputed plural noun in Psalm 137:3 refers to those who tormented Israel in exile. The Babylonians who 'wasted us' demanded 'songs of Zion'—a cruel mockery. The word might derive from a root meaning 'to wail' (making the tormentors 'those who made us wail') or 'to waste/despoil.' Textual variants suggest early uncertainty. Either way, the term captures the psychological cruelty of exile: forced to perform sacred songs as entertainment for captors.

(1×) The plural noun with first-person suffix in Psalm 137:3 means 'our tormentors' or 'those who made us wail.' BDB notes textual difficulty and suggests possible emendation. The parallelism with 'those who carried us away' suggests oppressors who added mockery to military defeat, demanding songs for amusement. The term emphasizes not just conquest but humiliation, central to the psalm's raw emotion and imprecatory conclusion. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: and-our-tormentors | es: y-nuestros-opresores | fr: et-Tolaad | de: und-unser-tormentors Ps 137:3

תּוֹלַע H8438a N-ms (4×)

worm; maggots/larvae, or scarlet dye produced from the coccus ilicis insect, depending on context

This noun has two related senses: literal worms (maggots) and scarlet dye produced from an insect. Exodus 16:20 describes manna breeding worms when kept overnight. Isaiah 1:18 uses it in the famous promise: 'though your sins are like scarlet (shanim), like crimson (tola), they shall be white as snow'—tola here is scarlet dye. Lamentations 4:5 mentions those 'brought up in scarlet' (tola) now lying on ash heaps, evoking luxury garments. The scarlet dye came from the crushed bodies of coccus ilicis insects (similar to cochineal), creating the linguistic link between worm and crimson. The multilingual glosses show both meanings (Spanish gusanos 'worms', escarlata 'scarlet'). One creature yields both decay (worms) and beauty (costly dye)—a pairing rich with symbolic potential.

(4×) Either worms/maggots (as in spoiled manna, Exod 16:20) or scarlet/crimson dye (Isa 1:18, Lam 4:5). The dye came from crushed coccus ilicis insects, creating the semantic link between 'worm' and 'scarlet.' Isaiah's famous promise contrasts sins 'like scarlet' becoming white—the deepest, most permanent dye miraculously bleached. Lamentations evokes luxury through scarlet garments. One Hebrew word captures both corruption (maggots in decay) and costly beauty (crimson dye from insect bodies). WORM MAGGOT

en: and-worm-of, like-the-crimson, scarlet | es: como-carmesí, escarlata, gusanos | fr: [כתולע], [תולע], et-ver-de | de: [כתולע], [תולע], und-Scharlachvon Exod 16:20; Exod 25:4; Isa 1:18; Lam 4:5

תּוֹלֵעָה H8438b N-fsc / 3mp (39×)

Worm or maggot (literal/figurative); scarlet dye material from the coccus ilicis insect used in tabernacle fabrics

A feminine noun referring either to the worm or maggot as a creature of decay and insignificance, or to the scarlet dyestuff derived from the scale insect (coccus ilicis). In its dominant usage, it appears in the construct chain תּוֹלַעַת שָׁנִי designating the crimson-dyed yarn woven into tabernacle curtains and priestly vestments. In its literal sense, the worm devours the dead (Isa 14:11) and symbolizes human frailty — the psalmist's cry 'I am a worm' (Ps 22:6) anticipates the Messiah's suffering, while Isaiah 41:14 uses it as a tender address to lowly Israel.

1. crimson/scarlet dye material (31×) Scarlet or crimson dye material derived from the coccus ilicis insect, appearing almost exclusively in the construct תּוֹלַעַת שָׁנִי alongside תְּכֵלֶת (blue) and אַרְגָּמָן (purple) in Exodus and Leviticus tabernacle instructions. English and Spanish both render 'scarlet/gusano,' while German uses 'Scharlach,' all pointing to the dyestuff rather than the creature. Dominant across 31 of 39 occurrences (Exod 25:4; 26:1, 31, 36). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-scarlet-of, and-worm-of, yarn | es: gusano, y-gusano-de | fr: et-ver-de, et-écarlate-de, fil | de: und-Scharlach-von, und-scharlachrot-von, yarn Exod 26:1; Exod 26:31; Exod 26:36; Exod 27:16; Exod 28:5

2. worm, maggot (8×) A literal worm or maggot, used of vine-devouring grubs (Deut 28:39; Jonah 4:7), corpse-consuming creatures (Isa 14:11; 66:24, paired with רִמָּה), and as a powerful metaphor for human insignificance. Spanish 'gusano' and English 'worm' converge uniformly here. The psalmist's 'I am a worm, not a man' (Ps 22:6) and God's tender 'fear not, you worm Jacob' (Isa 41:14) transform the image from disgust into theological depth. WORM MAGGOT
en: O-worm, a-worm, the-worm | es: el-gusano, gusano, gusanos | fr: [תולעה], [תולעת], [תולעתם] | de: Wurm, [תולעה], [תולעת] Num 19:6; Deut 28:39; Job 25:6; Ps 22:6; Isa 14:11

תּוֹלָע H8439 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (6×)

Tola; a proper name borne by a son of Issachar and by a judge of Israel from the same tribal line.
Tola is a personal name appearing in two distinct but genealogically connected figures. The first is a son of Issachar listed among those who went down to Egypt with Jacob (Gen 46:13), who becomes the ancestor of the Tolaite clan (Num 26:23). The second is a judge of Israel from Issachar who judged Israel for twenty-three years after Abimelech's death (Judg 10:1). The Chronicles genealogy (1 Chr 7:1-2) connects both figures within the Issacharite line. The name itself may derive from the word for 'worm' or 'scarlet,' connecting to the tola'at dye industry, though in context it functions purely as a personal name.

Tola (6×) The proper name Tola, referring to an Issacharite ancestor (Gen 46:13; Num 26:23; 1 Chr 7:1-2) and a judge of Israel from the same tribe who governed for twenty-three years (Judg 10:1). Spanish Tolá, French Thola/Tola, and German Tola all transliterate consistently. The name may etymologically connect to tola'at (worm/scarlet), but all six occurrences function purely as a personal identifier within Issacharite genealogical and judicial contexts. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Tola, to-Tola | es: Tola, Tolá, para-Tola | fr: Thola, Tola, [לתולע] | de: Tola, [לתולע], [תולע] Gen 46:13; Num 26:23; Judg 10:1; 1Chr 7:1; 1Chr 7:2

תּוֹלָעִי H8440 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Tolaite — gentilic adjective for descendants of Tola, used collectively for the clan
This gentilic form appears in Numbers 26:23 in the census of Issachar's clans. 'The Tolaite' with the definite article refers collectively to all descendants of Tola. These clan designations organized military units, determined camp positions, and eventually guided land distribution. The census demonstrated that despite wilderness hardships, Israel's tribes remained intact and identifiable—God had preserved the structure of the people he promised to bring into Canaan.

(1×) A gentilic adjective with the definite article in Numbers 26:23, denoting the clan descended from Tola of Issachar. Used collectively (the Tolaite = all Tolaites), it functions as a clan designation in the wilderness census. Multilingual versions preserve the gentilic form, recognizing this as an ethnic-family identifier essential to Israel's tribal organization. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Tolaite | es: los-tolaítas | fr: le-Tolaite | de: der-Tolaite Num 26:23

תּוֹעֵבָה H8441 Conj-w / N-fs (118×)

Abomination, detestable thing or practice – something morally or ritually abhorrent to God or culturally repugnant.
One of the Hebrew Bible's strongest words of moral revulsion, toevah marks actions, objects, or practices as deeply offensive to God's holiness. It covers both ritual impurity – such as consuming unclean food (Deut 14:3) or Egypt's disgust at Hebrew sacrificial customs (Exod 8:26) – and grave moral violations like idolatry, child sacrifice, and sexual sin (Lev 18:22, 26-30). Translations across languages converge on cognates of 'abomination': Spanish 'abominacion,' French 'abomination,' German 'Greuel.' The plural form dominates in Ezekiel's prophetic catalogs of Israel's accumulated transgressions, while the singular targets specific offensive acts.

1. abominations, detestable practices (63×) The plural form (63x) cataloging multiple detestable acts or idolatrous practices collectively, used extensively in prophetic indictments. Ezekiel alone accounts for a large share, enumerating the accumulated 'abominations' of Jerusalem and the nations. Leviticus 18:26-30 frames the entire collection of sexual prohibitions under this plural, and multilingual renderings – Spanish 'abominaciones,' French 'abominations,' German 'Greuel' – consistently use corresponding plurals. The construct and suffixed forms ('abominations of,' 'your abominations') emphasize corporate guilt. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: abominations-of, abominations-your, the-abominations | es: abominaciones-de, abominaciones-de-ti, las-abominaciones | fr: abomination, abominations, le-abominations | de: Greuel, der-Greuel, der-abominations Lev 18:26; Lev 18:27; Lev 18:29; Lev 18:30; Deut 18:9

2. abomination, detestable thing (55×) The singular form (55x) identifying a specific act, practice, or object as morally or ritually detestable. Genesis 43:32 applies it to Egyptian cultural taboo against eating with Hebrews, Exodus 8:26 to sacrificial practices repugnant to Egyptians, and Deuteronomy's laws mark individual offenses as 'an abomination to the LORD' (Deut 7:25; 22:5; 23:18). The singular carries a pointed, focused force – 'this specific thing is abhorrent' – that the plural broadens into comprehensive catalogs. German distinguishes nuance with both 'Greuel' and 'Grauel.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: abomination, an-abomination, an-abomination-to | es: abominación, abominación„ abominación-de | fr: abomination, un-abomination | de: Greuel, ein-Greuel, ein-Gräuel Gen 43:32; Gen 46:34; Exod 8:26; Lev 18:22

תּוֹעָה H8442 N-fs (2×)

error, confusion, wandering (moral/religious error; disturbance)
This noun appears twice with distinct but related senses. In Isaiah 32:6, it refers to speaking error or falsehood about God—moral and religious wandering from truth. In Nehemiah 4:2 (English 4:8), it denotes confusion or disturbance, something that causes disorder. The root idea involves deviation from the right path, whether in doctrine or in orderly conduct. The term suggests not just simple mistakes but deliberate or serious departure from what is proper.

(2×) The two contexts show semantic range: religious error (speaking wrongly about God) and social disturbance (creating confusion). Spanish translations distinguish 'confusión' and 'error,' while German uses 'irrend' (erring/wandering). The verb root likely relates to wandering or straying, giving the noun connotations of deviation, whether theological or practical. Both uses imply something that needs correction or judgment. STRAYING AND ERRING
en: confusion, error | es: confusión, error | fr: [תועה] | de: irrend Neh 4:8; Isa 32:6

תּוֹעָפָה H8443 N-fp (4×)

eminence, heights; lofty peaks or towering horns, representing elevation, strength, or precious accumulation

This noun refers to eminence, heights, or towering features. Numbers 23:22 and 24:8 use it in Balaam's oracles of Israel's strength: 'he has, as it were, the horns of the wild ox' (literally 'like the heights/towering horns of the wild ox'). Psalm 95:4 celebrates God's sovereignty: 'the heights of the mountains are his.' Job 22:25 is more difficult, possibly meaning 'silver in heaps/bars for you' or 'the Almighty shall be your heights.' The multilingual glosses show uncertainty (Spanish cumbres 'peaks', preciosa 'precious', French/German variations). The word emphasizes vertical dimension—towering peaks, lofty horns, elevated strength. Whether geological (mountain heights) or zoological (ox horns) or metallurgical (silver bars), it evokes impressive height and strength.

(4×) Eminence, towering heights, or lofty peaks. Balaam's oracles use it of Israel's strength as 'like towering horns of the wild ox' (Num 23:22, 24:8)—power that rises impressively. Psalm 95:4 speaks of mountain heights belonging to God. Job 22:25 is uncertain but may refer to heaps/bars of silver or using 'heights' metaphorically for the Almighty. The term emphasizes impressive vertical dimension—whether horns, peaks, or accumulated wealth, it suggests power, elevation, and imposing strength. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-heights-of, like-horns-of, strength | es: como-cuernos-de, preciosa, y-cumbres-de | fr: comme-cornes-de, et-sortie, תועפות | de: [תועפות], und-der-Höhen-von, wie-Hoerner-von Num 23:22; Num 24:8; Job 22:25; Ps 95:4

תּוֹצָאָה H8444 N-fpc / 3ms (25×)

Outgoing or extremity of a boundary; escape or deliverance from death; source or wellspring of life

Totsaot (always plural) draws on the root yatsa' (to go out) to mark the point where something exits or terminates. In its dominant usage across Numbers 34 and Joshua 15-19, it names the terminal points of tribal boundary lines – where a border 'goes out' to its end. Psalm 68:20 lifts the word into theology: to the Lord belong 'the exits from death,' i.e., deliverance when all escape seems impossible. Proverbs 4:23 offers a striking metaphorical turn: the heart is the source from which flow 'the springs of life.' Spanish 'salidas' (exits) unifies these senses elegantly.

1. outgoing, extremity, border (23×) The outgoing or terminal point of a territorial boundary, used extensively in land-allotment descriptions. Numbers 34:4-12 traces Canaan's borders by their totsaot, and Joshua 15-19 maps each tribe's inheritance the same way. The plural form and construct chains ('its goings-out') mark geographic endpoints. Spanish 'sus salidas' and French 'ses sorties' both convey the sense of where a boundary line exits. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: [its-goings-out], goings-out-of, its-extremities | es: (salidas-de), (sus-salidas), [sus-salidas] | fr: [ses-sorties], ses-sorties, son-extremities | de: [sein-goings-heraus], goings-heraus-von, sein-extremities Num 34:4; Num 34:5; Num 34:8; Num 34:9; Num 34:12

2. escape, deliverance from death (1×) Escape or deliverance from death, used uniquely in Psalm 68:20 (Hebrew v. 21): 'To God the Lord belong the exits from death.' Here the boundary metaphor is transposed into the realm of mortality – God controls the passages out of death's domain. Spanish 'salidas' and English 'escapes' both capture this theological shift from geography to salvation. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: escapes | es: salidas | fr: issue | de: escapes Ps 68:20

3. source, spring, wellspring (1×) Source, spring, or wellspring, used metaphorically in Proverbs 4:23: 'Guard your heart, for from it are the totsaot of life.' The direction reverses – not where something terminates but where it originates. The heart is the fountainhead from which life's currents flow outward. Some scholars emend to motsa'ot, but the Masoretic text stands as a powerful image of inner origin. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: are-the-springs-of | es: manan | fr: תוצאות | de: [תוצאות] Prov 4:23

תִּקְוָה H8445 N-proper-ms (2×)

Tokhath/Tikvah (personal name; father-in-law of prophetess Huldah)

This name appears in 2 Chronicles 34:22, identifying the father-in-law of Huldah the prophetess. The textual tradition is complex: the Ketiv reads 'Tokhath' while the Qere suggests 'Tikvah,' and the parallel passage in 2 Kings 22:14 has yet another form (Tikvah). The name may derive from a root meaning 'hope' (tikvah) or possibly 'reproof' (tokhath). The individual is mentioned only to establish Huldah's family credentials when King Josiah consults her about the discovered book of the law.

(2×) Both occurrences in 2 Chronicles 34:22 appear because the verse contains both Ketiv and Qere readings, representing competing textual traditions. The LXX variants (Thekouau, Kathual, Thakouath) and the different form in Kings show ongoing uncertainty. What remains consistent is the genealogical function: identifying Shallum's father and thus Huldah's family line at a crucial moment in Judah's history. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tokhath, [Tokhath] | es: Toqhat, [Toqhat] | fr: [תוקהת], [תקהת] | de: [תוקהת], [תקהת] 2Chr 34:22

תּוּר H8446 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (23×)

To spy out, explore, or investigate; also as a participle: trader, merchant; in Hifil: to surpass or excel.

A verb of purposeful movement and discovery, tur fundamentally means to go about searching or exploring. Its most vivid usage appears in the spy narrative of Numbers 13-14, where the twelve scouts 'spy out' the land of Canaan. Qoheleth repurposes the same verb for intellectual exploration, declaring that he 'searched out' all that is done under heaven (Eccl 1:13). The participial form yields 'traders'—those who travel about for commerce (1 Kgs 10:15). Spanish 'espiar' and German 'erforschen' capture the dual physical-intellectual range remarkably well.

1. spy out, reconnoiter land (16×) To spy out or reconnoiter a territory for military or settlement purposes. This is the dominant sense, appearing sixteen times in the Pentateuch and Judges. The twelve spies 'toured' Canaan from the wilderness of Zin to Rehob (Num 13:21), and the Danites sent five men to 'spy out' the hill country (Judg 18:2). Spanish 'espiar' and French 'espionner' preserve the intelligence-gathering nuance. The verb implies purposeful, systematic traversal rather than casual wandering. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-let-them-spy-out, and-they-spied-out, explore | es: Y-espiaron, de-espiar, espiaron | fr: de-spying-dehors, et-ils-espionna-dehors, et-ils-spied-dehors | de: der-die-spying-heraus, du-spied-heraus, explore Num 10:33; Num 13:2; Num 13:16; Num 13:17; Num 13:21

2. search out, investigate intellectually (4×) To search out or investigate through intellectual inquiry. Qoheleth employs this verb four times for his philosophical explorations: 'I applied my heart to search out by wisdom all that is done under heaven' (Eccl 1:13). The shift from geographical to mental exploration is natural—the same deliberate, thorough surveying is now directed at wisdom and folly. German 'erforschen' (to research) and Spanish 'escudriñar' (to scrutinize) both capture this investigative depth. Ezekiel 20:6 bridges both senses, as God 'searched out' a land for Israel. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: I-searched, I-searched-out, and-to-search-out | es: Busqué, escudriñé, y-a-explorar | fr: espionner, et-explorer, explorer | de: [תרתי], erforschte, und-erforschte Eccl 1:13; Eccl 2:3; Eccl 7:25; Ezek 20:6

3. trader, merchant (2×) As a participial substantive (hattorim), this denotes traders or merchants—those who 'go about' for commerce. It appears in the accounting of Solomon's revenue alongside the income from 'the traders' (1 Kgs 10:15; 2 Chr 9:14). The semantic path from 'one who goes about exploring' to 'traveling merchant' reflects the ancient reality of trade caravans scouting routes and markets. Spanish 'comerciantes' and 'mercaderes' render this commercial sense directly. MERCHANTS AND TRADERS

en: the-traders | es: los-comerciantes, los-mercaderes | fr: [התרים], le-traders | de: [התרים], der-traders 1Kgs 10:15; 2Chr 9:14

4. excel, surpass (Hifil) (1×) In the Hifil stem, to have advantage over or to surpass in value. This rare sense appears in Proverbs 12:26, where the righteous 'excels' or 'guides' his neighbor. The notion of superiority may derive from the idea of going beyond or exploring further than another. The multilingual evidence is thin here, with most translations resorting to paraphrase, suggesting this is a specialized extension of the root's core meaning of purposeful movement. MORE AND GREATER en: more-abundant-than | es: aventaja | fr: explorer | de: erforschte Prov 12:26

תָּוֹר H8447 Prep-b (4×)

turn, plait; occasion or opportunity (of persons); decorative circlets or braids (of hair, gold ornaments)

This rare term appears in contexts of beauty and timing. In Song of Songs, it describes ornamental plaits or circlets—perhaps braided hair adorned with golden ornaments (1:10-11). In Esther, it denotes a young woman's turn or appointed time for her night with the king (2:12, 15). The multilingual evidence shows translations oscillating between 'ornaments' (English, Spanish) and 'turn/tour' (French), reflecting the word's dual semantic range: decorative arrangements and sequential occasions.

(4×) The term covers both ornamental braiding (particularly in the Song's imagery of beauty) and appointed occasions (in Esther's structured royal protocol). Spanish 'pendientes' (earrings/pendants) and English 'ornaments' support the decorative sense, while French 'tour' captures the temporal/sequential meaning. The shared root idea seems to be 'arrangement in sequence'—whether of braided strands or scheduled turns. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ornaments-of, turn-of, turn-of- | es: Pendientes-de, con-pendientes, turno-de | fr: Des-ornements, dans-les-ornements„ tour | de: [בתרים], [תורי], [תר] Esth 2:12; Esth 2:15; Song 1:10; Song 1:11

תָּוֹר H8448 Prep-k / N-msc (1×)

manner, custom — a way of doing things or established pattern, possibly corrupt text in 1 Chronicles 17:17

This noun typically means 'turn' or 'manner,' but in 1 Chronicles 17:17 the phrase is notoriously difficult. The text reads something like 'manner of the man' or 'custom of humanity,' but the meaning remains obscure. The parallel in 2 Samuel 7:19 has 'torah of the man,' equally puzzling. Some emend to 'form' or 'rank.' The context is David marveling that God would care for his house, but the exact expression of that wonder is textually uncertain.

(1×) The construct noun in 1 Chronicles 17:17 is in a difficult phrase often translated 'manner of man,' but the meaning is disputed. BDB notes textual corruption and various scholarly emendations. The parallel text offers 'torah of the man,' also problematic. David's general sense is clear—amazement at God's condescension—but the precise expression remains elusive, a reminder that some ancient texts resist confident interpretation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-manner-of | es: como-manera-de | fr: [כתור] | de: [כתור] 1Chr 17:17

תֹּר H8449 Art / N-fs (14×)

turtledove — a migratory bird offered as a sacrifice in Levitical law and used as a figure of vulnerability

Tor is an onomatopoetic name imitating the soft cooing of the turtledove (Streptopelia turtur), a migratory bird whose arrival heralded spring in ancient Palestine. Of its 14 occurrences, most appear in Levitical sacrificial regulations, where a pair of turtledoves served as the offering of the poor — the very sacrifice Mary and Joseph brought at Jesus' presentation (cf. Lev 12:8; Luke 2:24). Jeremiah notes its faithfulness in migration (Jer 8:7), the Song of Solomon celebrates the sound of its voice as a sign of spring (Song 2:12), and Psalm 74:19 poignantly figures God's people as a vulnerable turtledove. Translations are strikingly uniform: Spanish 'tortola,' French 'tourterelle,' German 'Turteltaube.'

turtledove (14×) The turtledove (Streptopelia turtur), named onomatopoetically for its cooing call. Appears primarily in Priestly legislation as an acceptable sacrificial offering, typically paired with young pigeons (Lev 1:14, 5:7, 12:6, 15:14; Num 6:10). Outside the cult, it appears as a symbol of seasonal return (Jer 8:7, Song 2:12) and of Israel's vulnerability under divine care (Ps 74:19). Cross-linguistic evidence — Spanish 'tortola,' French 'tourterelle' — uniformly identifies this single bird species across all 14 occurrences. LIVING CREATURES en: Your-turtledove, and-a-turtledove, and-the-turtledove | es: la-tórtola, las-tórtolas, tu-tórtola | fr: [ותר], de-la-tourterelle, et-un-turtledove | de: [התור], [ותר], dein-turtledove Gen 15:9; Lev 1:14; Lev 5:7; Lev 5:11; Lev 12:6

תּוֹר H8450 N-mp (7×)

bulls, oxen — Aramaic term for bovine cattle, used of sacrificial animals and beasts of the field

Torin is the Aramaic plural of tor ('bull, ox'), cognate with Hebrew shor. It appears seven times in the Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel, serving two vivid purposes. In Ezra, it designates sacrificial bulls requisitioned for the rebuilt Temple — 'whatever is needed, bulls, rams, and lambs' (Ezr 6:9, 17; 7:17). In Daniel, it describes the beasts of the field whose grass Nebuchadnezzar ate during his period of madness (Dan 4:25, 32, 33; 5:21). Spanish 'toros/bueyes' and French 'taureaux/boeufs' consistently render the bovine livestock sense.

bulls, cattle (Aramaic) (7×) Aramaic plural noun meaning bulls or oxen, used for bovine livestock in two contexts: as sacrificial animals provided for Temple worship (Ezr 6:9, 17; 7:17, listed alongside rams and lambs in Darius's and Artaxerxes's decrees), and as beasts of the field whose vegetation Nebuchadnezzar consumed during his divinely imposed madness (Dan 4:25, 32, 33; 5:21). Cognate with Hebrew shor and Syriac tawra. Spanish 'toros' and French 'taureaux' uniformly confirm the bovine sense across all seven occurrences. CATTLE AND OXEN

en: bulls, like-cattle | es: como-a-los-bueyes, como-los-bueyes, toros | fr: comme-les-boeufs, taureaux | de: Stiere, [תורין] Ezra 6:9; Ezra 6:17; Ezra 7:17; Dan 4:25; Dan 4:32

תּוֹרָה H8451 Prep-l / N-fs (222×)

Torah, law, instruction; the Mosaic Law as divine covenant legislation, specific statutes and regulations, or human/prophetic teaching.

Torah is far richer than 'law' suggests. Derived from the verb yarah ('to throw, cast, direct, instruct'), it fundamentally means 'direction' or 'guidance' — and that pedagogical root never fully disappears even when the word names the most authoritative body of divine legislation in Israel's life. In its overwhelming majority usage (203 of 222 occurrences), torah refers to the Mosaic covenant instruction: 'the Torah of the LORD,' 'the Torah of Moses,' or simply 'the Torah' with the definite article. But Proverbs preserves the word's older, broader sense where a mother's torah is her teaching (Prov 1:8; 6:20) and a wise father's torah is his instruction (Prov 4:2). The plural torot names specific sets of regulations, especially in Leviticus's ritual legislation. German Weisung ('directive, instruction') and French enseignement ('teaching') both capture the non-legal pedagogical sense that English 'law' obscures.

1. Law / Torah (divine covenant instruction) (203×) The Mosaic Law, the Torah of YHWH — the dominant sense at 203 occurrences. This covers the Torah as a comprehensive body of divine covenant instruction, whether specified as 'the Torah of Moses' (Josh 8:31), 'the Torah of the LORD' (Ps 19:7), or simply 'the Torah' with the article. It includes the Pentateuch as a written document, the covenant stipulations, and the entire Mosaic legislative-narrative complex. Spanish la Tora/la ley, Arabic al-sharia or al-tawrah, and Korean yulbeop (율법) all treat this as a proper or near-proper noun, reflecting its status as Israel's foundational legal-theological document. The range of contexts — from Deuteronomy's exhortations to keep 'this Torah' to the psalmist's meditative delight in God's Torah — shows the word functioning simultaneously as legal code, covenant charter, and object of devotion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-Torah | es: es-la-Torá, la-Torá, la-ley | fr: la-Torah, le-Torah | de: der-Torah Exod 12:49; Exod 13:9; Lev 6:9; Lev 6:14; Lev 6:25

2. Laws / Regulations (plural statutes) (14×) Specific laws, regulations, or ritual statutes — the plural torot, appearing 14 times. These are countable individual prescriptions rather than the Torah as a unified whole: 'the torah of the burnt offering' (Lev 6:9), 'the torah of the grain offering' (Lev 6:14), 'the torah of the sin offering' (Lev 6:25). God gave Israel 'torot and instructions' (Gen 26:5; Exod 16:28). German Gesetze (plural 'laws'), Spanish leyes, and French lois all shift to the plural, confirming the distinction from the singular comprehensive Torah. The concentration in Leviticus and Ezekiel reflects the priestly context of specific ritual legislation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-laws, My-laws, [ketiv] | es: [kethiv], en-leyes-de-él, las-leyes | fr: Son-lois, et-Mon-lois, et-le-lois | de: Gesetz, Sein-Gesetze, der-Gesetze Gen 26:5; Exod 16:28; Exod 18:16; Exod 18:20; Lev 26:46

3. Instruction / Teaching (human or prophetic) (5×) Human or prophetic instruction and teaching — 5 occurrences where torah retains its etymological sense of 'direction, guidance' without direct reference to the Mosaic code. A mother's torah (Prov 1:8; 6:20), a father's torah (Prov 3:1; 4:2), and the torah of kindness on the lips of the virtuous woman (Prov 31:26). German Weisung ('directive'), Spanish ensenanza ('teaching'), and French instruction all select pedagogical vocabulary rather than legal terminology. This sense preserves the pre-Mosaic, non-legalistic core of the word and reminds us that 'Torah' began as a teacher's term before it became a legislator's. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Torah-of, and-my-teaching, instruction | es: la-ley, mi-ley, y-enseñanza-de- | fr: et-loi, et-mon-loi-moi, loi | de: Weisung, und-Weisung, und-Weisung-von Job 22:22; Prov 3:1; Prov 4:2; Prov 7:2; Prov 31:26

תּוֹרָה H8452 N-fsc (1×)

instruction, law, Torah — divine teaching and direction, especially the Mosaic law and its principles

Torah is one of the Old Testament's most significant theological terms. While often translated 'law,' it fundamentally means 'instruction' or 'teaching.' It encompasses God's revealed will: specific commands, narrative, wisdom, and covenant relationship. Torah can refer to parental instruction, prophetic teaching, or most centrally, the Mosaic covenant. The word emphasizes guidance for life—not arbitrary rules but the path of wisdom and blessing. Post-exilic Judaism intensified focus on Torah study and observance as covenant identity.

(1×) The construct form 'torah of' in 2 Samuel 7:19 appears in a textually difficult phrase. Normally 'torah' means instruction or law—divine teaching that directs life. It can denote parental wisdom (Proverbs), priestly instruction, or the Mosaic covenant. Here the phrase 'torah of the man' is obscure, possibly corrupt. Regardless, Torah across Scripture represents God's gracious self-revelation and the way of covenant faithfulness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: law-of | es: ley-de | fr: loi-de | de: Gesetz-von 2Sam 7:19

תּוֹשָׁב H8453a Art / N-mp (13×)

Resident alien, sojourner — a non-native dwelling among a community, with varying degrees of permanence

The noun toshav designates a person living among a community that is not their own, occupying a legal and social status distinct from both the native citizen and the more established ger (resident foreigner). Found exclusively in Priestly and late texts, it often appears paired with ger or with sakir ('hired worker'), marking a dependent, somewhat marginal position. Abraham calls himself a ger-wetoshav among the Hittites (Gen 23:4), and David echoes the phrase in prayer, confessing that Israel are 'sojourners and settlers' before God (1 Chr 29:15).

1. resident alien, settled foreigner (10×) A resident alien or settled foreigner who dwells among the covenant community with a recognized though limited status. This is the majority usage, concentrated in Leviticus 25 and Numbers 35, where the toshav has defined rights: to live alongside Israelites, to benefit from Sabbath rest provisions (Lev 25:6), to access cities of refuge (Num 35:15), and to purchase or be purchased as a servant (Lev 25:45, 47). Spanish renders it 'residente' and French 'resident,' capturing the semi-permanent, legal quality of this residency. In Leviticus 22:10, the 'toshav of a priest' — a dependent living in the priestly household — may not eat holy food, distinguishing the toshav from family members. The consistent pairing with ger across languages ('and-a-resident,' 'como-residente,' 'et-pour-le-resident') underscores that this sense describes an established social category, not merely a passing visitor. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: a-resident, a-sojourner-of, and-a-resident | es: como-residente, los-residentes, residente | fr: comme-un-résident, et-pour-le-résident, et-pour-ton-étranger-résident | de: der-residents, ein-Ansaessiger, ein-Fremdling-von Gen 23:4; Lev 22:10; Lev 25:6; Lev 25:23; Lev 25:35

2. sojourner, temporary dweller (3×) A sojourner or temporary dweller whose stay is transient and whose identity is marked by impermanence and alien status. Exodus 12:45 pairs toshav with sakir (hired worker), barring both from the Passover meal — a cultic exclusion that highlights outsider status. In 1 Chronicles 29:15 David declares 'we are sojourners and temporary dwellers before you,' and Psalm 39:12 echoes the same existential confession: life itself is a brief sojourn. The Spanish shift from 'residente' (sense 1) to 'peregrino' and 'forasteros' confirms the more transient, pilgrim-like quality of these occurrences. French renders it 'etranger' (stranger) rather than 'resident,' reinforcing the emphasis on alienness over settlement. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: a-resident-alien, a-sojourner, and-settlers | es: Residente, peregrino, y-forasteros | fr: [ותושבים], un-étranger, étranger | de: [ותושבים], ein-resident-alien, ein-sojourner Exod 12:45; 1Chr 29:15; Ps 39:12

תִּשְׁבֵּה H8453b Prep-m / N-mpc (1×)

inhabitants of (Tishbe) — residents of a place, here Tishbe in Gilead, identifying Elijah's origin

This phrase in 1 Kings 17:1 identifies Elijah's hometown. The Hebrew is textually difficult, but most scholars read 'from Tishbe of Gilead' rather than the Masoretic 'from the settlers of Gilead.' Tishbe is identified with modern Istib in the Transjordanian highlands. The geographical note emphasizes Elijah's rustic, wilderness origins—he was not a court prophet but a rugged figure from the frontier, which fits his confrontational ministry and desert sojourns.

(1×) The prepositional phrase in 1 Kings 17:1, most likely meaning 'from Tishbe in Gilead,' identifying Elijah's hometown. BDB and modern commentaries prefer emending the Masoretic 'inhabitants' to the place name 'Tishbe' based on the Septuagint and context. This establishes Elijah as a Transjordanian prophet, a detail that shapes his identity as an outsider confronting Israel's royal establishment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-inhabitants-of | es: de-los-moradores-de | fr: de-habitants-de | de: von-inhabitants-von 1Kgs 17:1

תּוּשִׁיָּה H8454 Prep-l / N-fs (12×)

Sound wisdom, practical insight; abiding success or effective help — a wisdom-literature technical term

The noun תּוּשִׁיָּה is a technical term of Israel's wisdom tradition, denoting deep, effective wisdom that yields real results. It is the kind of resourceful understanding that belongs to God himself — Isaiah 28:29 marvels that the LORD 'has made wonderful counsel, great in תּוּשִׁיָּה.' Proverbs personifies wisdom as possessing it alongside counsel (Prov 8:14) and urges the student to guard it (Prov 3:21). In Job, the word takes on a more concrete coloring: when sound plans are frustrated (Job 5:12) or when help is driven away (Job 6:13), תּוּשִׁיָּה points toward the practical outcome — success, deliverance, effective aid — rather than the faculty alone.

1. sound wisdom, practical insight (9×) Sound wisdom, practical insight, or deep resourcefulness — the faculty of effective judgment and counsel. Used of God's own wisdom in Isaiah 28:29 and Job 12:16 ('with Him are strength and תּוּשִׁיָּה'), of personified Wisdom's self-description in Proverbs 8:14, and as something the disciple must guard (Prov 3:21) or risks exposing through folly (Prov 18:1). Job 26:3 asks sarcastically whether Job's friends have truly made known תּוּשִׁיָּה in abundance. Spanish 'sabiduría' and French

'sagesse' align here, while German 'Erfolg' interestingly anticipates the outcome-oriented coloring of sense 2. WISDOM AND DISCERNMENT

en: and-insight, and-sound-wisdom, and-wisdom | es: (en-tormenta), en-entendimiento., la-sabiduría | fr: [תושיה], et-sagesse, sagesse | de: Erfolg, [(תושיה)], [תושיה] Job 11:6; Job 26:3; Job 30:22; Prov 2:7; Prov 3:21

2. success, deliverance (3×) The practical outcome of sound wisdom: success, effective help, or deliverance in a concrete situation. In Job 5:12, God frustrates the plans of the crafty so that their hands achieve no תּוּשִׁיָּה — no 'success.' Job 6:13 asks whether effective help (תּוּשִׁיָּה) has been driven from him. Job 12:16 pairs it with עֹז ('strength'), emphasizing capability and efficacy rather than merely intellectual wisdom. Spanish 'exito' ('success') and 'nada exitoso' ('nothing successful') in these passages confirm the shift from the abstract faculty to its tangible result. WISDOM AND DISCERNMENT

en: and-sound-wisdom, success | es: nada-exitoso, y-la-sabiduría-efectiva;, y-éxito | fr: et-sagesse, sagesse | de: Erfolg, [ותושיה], [ותשיה] Job 5:12; Job 6:13; Job 12:16

תּוֹתָח H8455 N-ms (1×)

club, mace — a blunt weapon for striking, mentioned among weapons ineffective against Leviathan

This noun denotes a club or mace, a blunt striking weapon. Job 41:29 (English v. 21) lists it among weapons that Leviathan regards 'as straw.' The parallel term is 'javelin,' suggesting both projectile and hand weapons. The context emphasizes the creature's invulnerability —human weapons are useless against this symbol of untamable power. Whether Leviathan is crocodile, mythic chaos monster, or poetic symbol, the point is human impotence before creation's fiercest forces.

(1×) A noun in Job 41:29 denoting a club or mace, a blunt weapon. In the description of Leviathan's invulnerability, clubs are 'as straw' to the beast. The term parallels 'javelin,' encompassing weapons of impact. The imagery underscores human inability to control or defeat the creature, part of Job's lesson about the limits of human power and the mystery of God's creation. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: clubs | es: garrote | fr: תותח | de: [תותח] Job 41:29

תָּזַז H8456 V-Hifil-Perf-3ms (1×)

to strike away, cut off (agricultural term for pruning or trimming tendrils)

This rare Hiphil verb appears only in Isaiah 18:5, describing the agricultural act of cutting away shoots or tendrils. The context is God's pruning judgment on nations, using viticulture imagery. Related forms in Targumic and later Hebrew convey the sense of springing forth or cutting off, suggesting a sharp, decisive removal. The multilingual glosses consistently point to cutting or removing, fitting the agricultural metaphor of trimming unwanted growth before harvest.

(1×) The single occurrence in Isaiah 18:5 uses this verb for removing tendrils from vines, a pruning action that prepares the plant. Cross-linguistic evidence from Spanish 'cortará' (will cut) and the agricultural domain assignment confirm this is technical vocabulary for vineyard maintenance, employed metaphorically for divine judgment that removes what is unfruitful. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12738 WITH 3 SENSES

en: cuts-away | es: cortará | fr: [התז] | de: [התז] Isa 18:5

תַּזְנוּת H8457 Prep-m / N-fpc / 2fs (22×)

Harlotry, fornication; sexual and spiritual promiscuity, especially as a prophetic metaphor for idolatry.

An abstract noun for sexual immorality that carries enormous theological weight in Ezekiel's allegories. All twenty-two occurrences fall in Ezekiel 16 and 23, where Jerusalem and Samaria are personified as adulterous women whose 'harlotries' represent covenant unfaithfulness through political alliances and idol worship. The suffixed forms ('your harlotries,' 'their harlotries') make the accusation intensely personal. German 'Hurerei' and French 'fornication' preserve the moral severity, while Spanish uses circumlocutions ('fornicaciones de ti') that reflect the Hebrew possessive constructions.

harlotry, sexual immorality (22×) Fornication, prostitution, or promiscuity, used both for literal sexual unfaithfulness and – more prominently – as a prophetic metaphor for Israel's spiritual infidelity through idolatry and forbidden political alliances. Every occurrence is confined to Ezekiel 16 and 23, the two great allegories of Jerusalem and Samaria as unfaithful wives. The noun always appears with possessive suffixes ('your harlotries,' Ezek 16:15, 22, 25, 33; 'their harlotries,' Ezek 23:8, 17), making the charge directly personal. Multilingual evidence – 'Hurerei/Hurereien' (deu), 'fornication' (fra), 'fornicaciones' (spa) – consistently renders the term with moral severity. SEXUAL IMMORALITY

en: and-harlotries-your, harlotries-your, harlotry-your | es: (fornicaciones-de-ti), [de-fornicaciones-de-ti], [fornicación-de-ti] | fr: et-fornication, fornication | de: Hurerei, deine-Hurereien, in-deine-Hurereien Ezek 16:15; Ezek 16:20; Ezek 16:22; Ezek 16:25

תַּחְבֻּלָה H8458 Prep-b / N-fpc / 3ms (7×)

Wise counsel, strategic guidance, or skillful direction; used exclusively in wisdom literature for prudent planning.

Derived from the imagery of steering a ship by pulling ropes, this noun captures the art of wise guidance and strategic counsel. In Proverbs it appears repeatedly alongside terms for advisors and plans, underscoring that sound leadership requires not just raw intelligence but the skill of navigating complex situations. Job 37:12 extends the metaphor to God's sovereign direction of the thundercloud itself, while Proverbs 12:5 contrasts the counsels of the wicked with the thoughts of the righteous.

guidance, counsel, strategy (7×) Wise counsel, strategic guidance, or skillful direction. The word evokes the original metaphor of rope-pulling to steer a ship, and in its seven occurrences it consistently describes the art of prudent planning. In Proverbs it is paired with 'abundance of counselors' (11:14; 24:6) and 'counsel' (20:18), framing leadership as a navigational skill. Job 37:12 applies it to God's sovereign steering of storm clouds. Spanish 'estrategias' and 'direcciones' together capture the dual nuance of tactical planning and authoritative guidance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [by-his-guidance], and-with-guidance, by-guidance | es: (Q:por-sus-direcciones), [K:por-su-dirección], con-estrategias | fr: dans-direction, dans-son-direction-lui, direction | de: [(בתחבולתיו)], [[בתחבולתו]], [בתחבלות] Job 37:12; Prov 1:5; Prov 11:14; Prov 12:5

תּוֹחַ H8459 N-proper-ms (1×)

Tohu, personal name: ancestor of Samuel mentioned in the Levitical genealogy (1 Chronicles 6:19)

This personal name appears in the genealogy of Samuel in 1 Chronicles 6:19, identifying a Levitical ancestor. The name has a parallel form in 1 Samuel 1:1 (Tohu), showing textual variation common in Hebrew genealogies. Ancient versions (Septuagint, Vulgate) transliterate it variously, reflecting uncertainty about the original pronunciation. The name itself is otherwise unattested, making its etymology uncertain.

(1×) A Levitical ancestor of the prophet Samuel, this name appears in genealogical lists linking Samuel to the tribe of Levi. The parallel in 1 Samuel 1:1 uses a slightly different vocalization, a pattern seen often in biblical genealogies where scribal traditions preserve variant spellings of the same individual. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tochu | es: Toju | fr: Tochu | de: Tochu 1Sam 1:1

תְּחוֹת H8460 Prep / 3ms (4×)

under, beneath (Aramaic); with מִן: from under

This is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew תַּחַת, appearing exclusively in Daniel and Jeremiah 10:11 (an Aramaic verse). It denotes spatial position beneath something, particularly in cosmic imagery:

'under all the heavens' (Dan 7:27), beneath a great tree (Dan 4). The Aramaic form shows typical vowel shifts from Biblical Hebrew, reflecting the linguistic transition of the exilic period. Translators consistently render this as 'under' or 'beneath' across languages.

(4×) Marks spatial relationships of subordination or coverage. In Daniel's visions, it appears in grand cosmic scope ('under all the heavens,' 7:27) and in the dream imagery of Nebuchadnezzar's tree providing shelter to beasts 'under it' (4:12, 21). The consistent cross-linguistic rendering (Spanish 'debajo de,' English 'under') confirms this as a straightforward locative preposition with no significant semantic variation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: under, under-it | es: debajo-de, debajo-de-él | fr: [תחות], [תחתוהי] | de: [תחות], [תחתוהי] Jer 10:11; Dan 4:12; Dan 4:21; Dan 7:27

תַּחְכְּמֹנִי H8461 N-proper-ms (1×)

Tachkemonite, gentilic adjective: ethnic or clan designation for one of David's mighty men (2 Samuel 23:8)

This rare gentilic term identifies one of David's elite warriors in 2 Samuel 23:8. Textual scholars suggest reading it as 'the Hakmonite,' connecting it to a family name mentioned in 1 Chronicles 11:11. The ancient versions transliterate rather than translate it, indicating they too found it obscure. It represents the kind of clan or regional designations common in lists of David's fighting men, where geographical and family identities often merged.

(1×) A gentilic designation for Josheb-basshebeth, chief among David's thirty mighty men. The parallel text in 1 Chronicles reads 'Jashobeam, a Hachmonite,' suggesting textual corruption or dialectal variation. Such ethnic markers were crucial for distinguishing warriors with similar names in ancient rosters. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tahchemonite | es: Tajkemoni | fr: Tahchemonite | de: Tahchemonite 2Sam 23:8

תְּחִלָּה H8462 Art / N-fs (23×)

Beginning, commencement; the initial point or first phase of a period, event, or activity

A feminine noun marking the starting point of something, whether temporal ('at the beginning of the harvest,' Ruth 1:22), sequential ('at the first,' Gen 13:3), or conceptual ('the beginning of wisdom,' Prov 9:10). Hosea 1:2 famously uses it in construct with divine speech: 'the beginning of the Lord's speaking through Hosea.' Typically preceded by the preposition be- ('in/at') to create an adverbial phrase meaning 'at the beginning.' Spanish comienzo, French commencement, and German equivalents all align perfectly, reflecting a single transparent sense with no polysemy across its 23 attestations.

beginning, commencement (23×) The initial point, first phase, or commencement of an event, period, or process. Used both absolutely with the article (battekhillah, 'at the beginning,' Gen 13:3; 43:18) and in construct chains (tekhillat khokmah, 'the beginning of wisdom,' Prov 9:10; tekhillat dibber YHWH, 'when the Lord first spoke,' Hos 1:2). All multilingual glosses converge on 'beginning/commencement,' confirming a single well-defined lexical sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-beginning-of, at-the-beginning, at-the-beginning-of- | es: (en-comienzo-de), En-comienzo-de, al-comienzo-de | fr: [בתחלת], [התחלה], commencement | de: [בתחלה], [בתחלת], [התחלה] Gen 13:3; Gen 41:21; Gen 43:18; Gen 43:20; Judg 1:1

תַּחֲלֻאִים H8463 N-mpc / 2fs (5×)

diseases, sicknesses; severe or chronic illnesses sent as divine judgment or healed by divine mercy

A plural noun denoting diseases or chronic illnesses, always appearing in contexts of covenant consequence or divine compassion. Deuteronomy warns of terrible 'diseases' upon the disobedient land (Deut 29:22), and Jehoram dies of incurable 'diseases' as divine punishment (2 Chr 21:19). Jeremiah pairs 'diseases of famine' with sword-wounds to depict total devastation (Jer 14:18; 16:4). Yet Psalm 103:3 celebrates the God who 'heals all your diseases' — the same word redeemed by mercy. Spanish 'enfermedades' and French cognates consistently render the medical sense, while the theological arc from curse to healing gives this term its full biblical weight.

(5×) Diseases or chronic sicknesses, typically severe afflictions viewed through a theological lens of covenant judgment or divine healing. In Deut 29:22, the land's diseases signal covenant curse; in 2 Chr 21:19, Jehoram's incurable diseases are divine punishment. Jeremiah describes 'diseases of famine' as part of total judgment (Jer 14:18; 16:4). Psalm 103:3 transforms the term into praise — God heals all 'your diseases.' Spanish 'enfermedades' and French equivalents confirm the consistent medical referent across all five occurrences. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: diseases, its-sicknesses, sicknesses-of | es: en-enfermedades, enfermedades, enfermedades-de | fr: [בתחלאים], [תחלאים], [תחלואי] | de: [בתחלאים], [תחלאים], [תחלואי] Deut 29:22; 2Chr 21:19; Ps 103:3; Jer 14:18; Jer 16:4

תַּחְמָס H8464 Art / N-ms (2×)

nighthawk, short-eared owl (unclear species among unclean birds)

This word appears in the Levitical lists of unclean birds (Leviticus 11:16, Deuteronomy 14:15), but its exact identification is uncertain. Traditional translations suggest 'nighthawk' or 'short-eared owl,' though ancient versions vary: the LXX and Vulgate understood it as an owl, while Saadia suggested a swallow. Some scholars connect it to a root meaning 'violence,' perhaps referring to the male ostrich. The obscurity reflects the difficulty of matching ancient bird names to modern ornithological categories. What's clear is that this creature was among those Israelites were forbidden to eat.

(2×) The dual listing (Leviticus 11:16, Deuteronomy 14:15) places this bird in standard purity legislation. Translations show uncertainty: English offers 'nighthawk' and 'short-eared owl,' Spanish has 'chotacabras' (nightjar) and 'halcón nocturno' (night hawk), while French and German preserve transliterations or use compound descriptors. The consistent element is recognition of an unclean bird of prey or night bird. OSTRICH BIRD

en: the-nighthawk, the-short-eared-owl | es: el-chotacabras, el-halcón-nocturno | fr: le-court-eared-owl, le-nighthawk | de: der-kurz-eared-owl, der-nighthawk Lev 11:16; Deut 14:15

תַּחַן H8465 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Tahan (Ephraimite ancestor; clan name)

Tahan appears as an Ephraimite name in Numbers 26:35 (in the wilderness census, identifying a clan family) and 1 Chronicles 7:25 (in the Ephraimite genealogy). The name may be an abbreviation of a longer theophoric name. The Tahanites formed one of the clans of Ephraim counted during Israel's wilderness wanderings. The genealogical occurrence in Chronicles helps establish the tribal lineage. Like many clan names, Tahan represents both an ancestor and the family group descended from him.

(2×) The two contexts show typical Hebrew usage: the census list (Numbers) treats Tahan as the clan founder ('and Tahan,' 'to Tahan'), while the genealogy (Chronicles) traces descent lines. The multilingual evidence consistently transliterates the name: Spanish 'Taján,' French 'Tahan,' German 'Tahan.' The prepositional variations ('to Tahan,' 'and Tahan') reflect different grammatical contexts within genealogical formulas. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Tachan, to-Tahan | es: de-Taján, y-Taján | fr: [ותחן], à-Tahan | de: [ותחן], zu-Tahan Num 26:35; 1Chr 7:25

תַּ֫חְנָה H8466 N-fpc / 1cs (1×)

encampment, encamping place (possibly textually corrupt; BDB suggests reading 'you shall hide yourselves' instead)

This noun appears only in 2 Kings 6:8 in a phrase that has puzzled interpreters. BDB notes the form is 'very strange' and suggests textual corruption, proposing to read instead 'you shall hide yourselves' based on the Syriac version. If the noun is original, it derives from the root for 'encamping' and would mean the place where one camps.

The Elisha narrative context, describing military movements, could support either reading—whether Elisha knows where the enemy will camp or where they will hide.

(1×) In the ambiguous phrase from 2 Kings 6:8, this would denote the location or act of making camp, fitting Elisha's prophetic knowledge of Aramean military positions. However, the unusual form has led most scholars to suspect textual corruption, with the Syriac's 'hide' reading offering a simpler alternative that still fits the context of military intelligence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: shall-be-my-camp | es: mi-campamento | fr: devra-être-mon-camp | de: soll-sein-mein-Lager 2Kgs 6:8

תְּחִנָּה H8467 N-fsc / 1cp (25×)

Supplication, plea for mercy; also the gracious favor or mercy that is sought

Derived from the root chanan ('to be gracious'), this noun denotes both the act of pleading for mercy and the gracious favor being sought. Solomon's Temple dedication prayer uses it repeatedly alongside tefillah ('prayer'), entreating God to hear 'the prayer and the supplication' of his people (1 Kgs 8:28, 30, 38, 45, 49, 52). Jeremiah uses the vivid phrase 'let my supplication fall before you' (Jer 37:20; 42:2). In two passages, however, the word denotes the favor itself rather than the request: Joshua's enemies received no grace (Josh 11:20), and the post-exilic community received a moment of grace from the Lord (Ezra 9:8). French grace and German Gnade in these passages confirm the shift from petition to disposition.

1. supplication, plea for mercy (23×) A humble, earnest plea or entreaty directed to God or a human superior, seeking compassionate favor or relief. The dominant sense across 23 occurrences, frequently paired with tefillah ('prayer') in Solomon's dedication (1 Kgs 8:28, 30, 38, 45, 49, 52; 2 Chr 6:19, 29, 35, 39). Also in Jeremiah's urgent phrase 'let my supplication fall before you' (Jer 37:20; 42:2). Spanish suplica/mi-suplica and the psalmic usage (Ps 6:10; 55:2; 119:170) consistently render the petitionary sense. PRAYER AND SUPPLICATION

en: and-the-plea, his-plea, his-supplication | es: mi-súplica, nuestra-súplica, su-súplica | fr: [תחנה], [תחנתו], [תחנתי] | de: [תחנה], [תחנתו], [תחנתי] 1Kgs 8:28; 1Kgs 8:30; 1Kgs 8:38; 1Kgs 8:45; 1Kgs 8:49

2. grace, favor, mercy (2×) The quality of grace, favor, or mercy itself – the disposition being sought rather than the act of seeking it. In Josh 11:20, God hardened the Canaanites' hearts so that 'there would be no grace' shown to them (no quarter given). In Ezra 9:8, the remnant acknowledges a brief moment of 'grace from the Lord.' French grace and German Gnade in these two passages confirm the shift from 'supplication' (the request) to 'favor' (the thing requested), a metonymic extension natural in the Hebrew chanan word-family. MORAL GOODNESS

en: grace | es: clemencia, gracia | fr: [תחנה], grâce | de: Gnade, [תחנה] Josh 11:20; Ezra 9:8

תְּחִנָּה H8468 N-proper-ms (1×)

Tehinnah, personal name: a descendant of Judah mentioned in genealogical lists (1 Chronicles 4:12)

A personal name occurring in the genealogies of Judah in 1 Chronicles 4:12. The name may derive from the Hebrew root for 'supplication' or 'grace,' making it a theophoric or meaningful name given at birth. Such names were common in Judahite families, often reflecting the circumstances of birth or parental prayers. The genealogical placement suggests a minor figure whose primary significance is maintaining the lineage records.

(1×) A descendant in the line of Judah, preserved in Chronicles' extensive genealogical framework. The name's possible connection to 'supplication' (techinah) would align with the practice of giving children names that reflected prayer or divine favor, a pattern seen throughout the Hebrew Bible. MORAL GOODNESS

en: Techinnah | es: Tejina | fr: [תחנה] | de: [תחנה] 1Chr 4:12

תַּחֲנוּן H8469 Conj-w / N-mp (18×)

Supplications, earnest pleas for mercy — heartfelt entreaties directed to God or a superior for grace

This plural abstract noun (tachanunim) expresses urgent, earnest pleas for undeserved favor. It derives from the root chanan ('to be gracious') and occurs only in the plural, underscoring the intensity and repetition of such appeals. Nearly always directed to God, it frequently parallels tefillah ('prayer') as in Psalm 143:1 and Daniel 9:3, 17. The Psalms speak of the 'voice of my supplications' (Ps 28:2, 6; 31:22; 86:6; 130:2), while Jeremiah pairs it with weeping (Jer 3:21; 31:9). Proverbs 18:23 offers its sole human-to-human use: the poor speak tachanunim.

supplications, pleas for mercy (18×) Earnest, repeated entreaties for mercy and grace, overwhelmingly addressed to God. The plural-only form intensifies the urgency of the appeal. Paired with tefillah in formal prayer contexts (Ps 143:1; Dan 9:3, 17) and with weeping in prophetic grief (Jer 3:21; 31:9). The Psalms especially treasure the phrase qol tachanunim, 'the voice of my supplications' (Ps 28:2, 6; 86:6; 130:2). Proverbs 18:23 uniquely applies it to a poor person pleading before the rich. PRAYER AND SUPPLICATION

en: and-supplications, and-with-supplications, his-supplications | es: Súplicas, las-súplicas-de, mis-súplicas | fr: [ובתחנונים], [תחנוני], et-supplication | de: [ובתחנונים], [ותחנונים], [תחנון] 2Chr 6:21; Job 41:3; Ps 28:2; Ps 28:6; Ps 31:22

תַּחֲנִי H8470 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Tahanite, gentilic adjective with article: clan designation in the Ephraimite tribal census (Numbers 26:35)

This gentilic term appears in the Numbers 26 census, identifying a clan within the tribe of Ephraim descended from Tahan. The article makes it function as a collective substantive, 'the Tahanites,' referring to all members of this family group. Such census designations were crucial for land allotment and tribal organization during the conquest period. The name preserves one of several Ephraimite clans that traced their lineage through Joseph's line.

(1×) The collective designation for members of the Tahan clan within Ephraim, used in the wilderness census to enumerate the tribal subdivision. This kind of patronymic gentilic, marked with the article, functions as a family name identifying all descendants of the eponymous ancestor Tahan mentioned earlier in the genealogy. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Tahanite | es: los-tajanitas | fr: le-Tahanite | de: der-Tahanite Num 26:35

תַּחְפַּנְחֵס H8471 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (8×)

Tahpanhes: an Egyptian border city in the eastern Nile Delta where Judean refugees fled after the destruction of Jerusalem.

The name of an Egyptian frontier city, identified with ancient Daphne (modern Tell Defenneh), situated in the eastern Nile Delta about eighteen miles southeast of Tanis. Tahpanhes appears almost exclusively in Jeremiah's prophecies as a destination of Judean refugees who fled to Egypt against prophetic warning after the fall of Jerusalem in 586 BC. Jeremiah himself was taken there (Jer 43:7-9) and prophesied that Nebuchadnezzar would set his throne at its very gates (Jer 43:8-13). The city also appears in Jeremiah 2:16, where its inhabitants are said to have 'shaved the crown of your head,' and in Ezekiel 30:18, which prophesies its darkening under divine judgment.

Tahpanhes (Egyptian city) (8×) The proper noun Tahpanhes (תַּחְפַּנְחֵס), also spelled Tehaphnehes (תְּחַפְנֵחֵס in Ezek 30:18), designating an Egyptian border fortress in the northeastern Delta, corresponding to Greek Daphnae. The city served as a military garrison and entry point into Egypt. Jeremiah 2:16 pairs it with Memphis (Noph) as representative of Egyptian power that would harm Israel. After Jerusalem's fall, fleeing Judeans settled there despite Jeremiah's protests (Jer 43:7), and the prophet performed a symbolic act of burying stones at its entrance to signify Nebuchadnezzar's coming conquest (Jer 43:8-9). Ezekiel 30:18 prophesies that the 'day will be dark at Tahpanhes' when God breaks Egypt's yoke. Translations vary in spelling—English 'Tahpanhes/Tachpanhes,' Spanish

'Tajpanjés,' French 'Tachpanès'—but all identify it as the same Egyptian locale. EGYPT PLACE NAME

en: (and-Tachpanches), Tachpancheis, [and-Tachpanhes] | es: Tajpanjés, Y-en-Tahpanhes, [y-Tajpanjes] | fr: Tachpanès, et-Tahpanès, et-dans-Tachpanès | de: [(ותחפנחס)], [[ותחפנס]], [בתחפנחס] Jer 2:16; Jer 43:7; Jer 43:8; Jer 43:9

תַּחְפְּנֵיס H8472 N-proper-fs (3×)

Tahpenes (personal name: Egyptian queen, sister-in-law to Pharaoh)

Tahpenes was an Egyptian queen during Solomon's early reign, sister to the Pharaoh who gave asylum to Jeroboam's rival Hadad the Edomite. 1 Kings 11:19-20 reports that Pharaoh gave Hadad Tahpenes's sister as wife, and Tahpenes herself raised their son Genubath in Pharaoh's household among the princes. The name is Egyptian, showing standard Greek transliteration variation. Tahpenes represents Egyptian royal generosity toward refugees who might later serve Egyptian political interests—Hadad eventually returned to trouble Solomon. Her role as foster-mother to Genubath suggests her high status in the palace.

(3×) Personal name of an Egyptian queen in Solomon's era. 1 Kings 11:19 identifies Tahpenes as the Egyptian queen whose sister Pharaoh gave to Hadad in marriage. 1 Kings 11:20 (appearing twice) reports that this sister bore Genubath, whom 'Tahpenes weaned' and raised in Pharaoh's palace among the royal children. The queen's personal involvement in raising her nephew shows family intimacy and political calculation—investing in a potential future Edomite king who might serve Egyptian interests. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tachpenes | es: Tajpenes | fr: Tachpenes | de: Tachpenes 1Kgs 11:19; 1Kgs 11:20

תַּחְרָא H8473 N-ms (2×)

coat of mail, corselet (priestly linen garment opening)

This word appears only in Exodus 28:32 and 39:23, both describing the high priest's robe (me'il). Specifically, it refers to the reinforced opening at the top of the garment—the neck hole through which the priest put his head. The text compares this opening to that of a coat of mail, suggesting it was woven or bound in a way that prevented tearing, similar to how armor was constructed. The Targum understands it as 'corselet' or armor. The detail emphasizes the careful craftsmanship and durability required for sacred vestments.

(2×) Both occurrences use simile: the priestly robe's opening was 'like the opening of a coat of mail.' The terminology crosses from military (armor) to priestly (vestments), highlighting the binding or reinforcement technique. Spanish translations offer 'coraza' (cuirass) and 'cota de malla' (coat of mail), French has 'tunique de mail,' all recognizing the armor reference as describing construction method rather than function. ARMOR BREASTPLATE

en: coat-of-mail | es: coraza, cota-de-malla | fr: tunique-de-mail | de: coat-von-mail Exod 28:32; Exod 39:23

חָרָה H8474 V-Hitpael-Imperf-2ms (2×)

compete, contend, strive (Hitpael: enter into rivalry or contest)

This verb appears in Jeremiah 12:5 and 22:15, both times questioning whether someone can compete or contend. The first asks rhetorically: 'If you have raced with men on foot and they have worn you out, how can you compete with horses?' The second challenges king Jehoiakim: 'Do you think you are a king because you compete in cedar?'—meaning, does building lavish palaces make you royal? The Hitpael stem suggests reflexive action: putting oneself into competition or rivalry. The word emphasizes the futility of certain contests.

(2×) Both passages use rhetorical questions about competing or contending to expose inadequacy or misplaced priorities. Jeremiah 12:5 famously escalates from running with men to competing with horses—if you can't handle the easy challenge, how will you manage the hard one? The verb in Hitpael suggests active self-engagement in rivalry. Translations capture this: Spanish 'competir,' French and German preserve transliterations, recognizing the somewhat rare usage. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: can-you-compete, competing | es: competirás, compites | fr: [מתחרה], [תתחרה] | de: [מתחרה], [תתחרה] Jer 12:5; Jer 22:15

תַּחְרֵעַ H8475 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Tahrea (with conjunction), personal name: a descendant of Saul in the Benjaminite genealogy (1 Chronicles 9:41)

A personal name appearing in the genealogy of King Saul in 1 Chronicles 9:41, with a parallel form (Tarea) in 1 Chronicles 8:35. The variation between these forms illustrates common scribal differences in genealogical transmission. As a descendant of Saul, this figure belongs to the royal Benjaminite line, though he appears post-exile in Chronicles' interest in preserving Israel's genealogical continuity. The Septuagint versions show further transliteration variants, typical for names without clear etymology.

(1×) A Benjaminite in Saul's lineage, this name appears in Chronicles' genealogical records with slight variation from its parallel passage. The preservation of such names demonstrates Chronicles' concern with maintaining family records even for minor figures, ensuring the royal line's documentation across the exile period. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Tachrea | es: y-Tajrea | fr: [ותחרע] | de: [ותחרע] 1Chr 9:41

תָּחַשׁ H8476 N-mp (14×)

A marine animal (dugong, porpoise, or seal) whose tough hide was used for the tabernacle's outer covering

An animal prized in the ancient Near East for its durable hide, the tachash provided the outermost protective layer of the tabernacle. Most modern scholars identify it with the dugong or porpoise of the Red Sea, though ancient versions guessed badger or hyacinth-colored leather. Spanish translations render it 'tejon' (badger), while French opts for 'marsouin' (porpoise), reflecting centuries of uncertainty. In Ezekiel 16:10, God recalls clothing Jerusalem in tachash-leather sandals, a detail that elevates the material from mere utility to a symbol of lavish divine care.

1. tachash-hide animal (porpoise/dugong/seal) (13×) The tachash as a living creature, a marine mammal (dugong, porpoise, or seal) whose skin was harvested for the tabernacle coverings. Nearly all fourteen occurrences fall here. The plural 'orot hat-techashim' (Exod 25:5; 35:7) and the construct 'or tachash' (Num 4:6-14) consistently point to the animal as the source of a specific hide. Cross-lingual evidence is revealing: English uses 'porpoise' or 'sea-cow,' Spanish prefers 'tejon' (badger), French 'marsouin' (porpoise), and German 'Meerkuehe' (sea-cow), illustrating that no tradition is fully settled on the species. SKIN AND LEATHER

en: porpoise, porpoises, sea-cows | es: el-tejón, los-tejones, tajash | fr: le-marsouin, le-mer-vaches, marsouin | de: Meer-Kuehe, der-Meer-Kuehe, der-porpoise Exod 25:5; Exod 26:14; Exod 35:7; Exod 35:23; Exod 36:19

2. tachash-leather / tachash-skin (material) (1×) A metonymic shift from animal to material: tachash-leather as processed hide. In Ezekiel 16:10, the word denotes the finished product rather than the living creature, describing sandals of fine leather that God gave to Jerusalem. English renders it simply 'leather,' while Spanish uses 'piel de tejones' (badger skin) and French retains the loanword 'tahash,' showing how translators handle the shift from animal to artifact differently. SKIN AND LEATHER

en: leather | es: piel-de-tejones | fr: tahash | de: [תחש] Ezek 16:10

תַּחַשׁ H8477 N-proper-ms (1×)

Tahash, personal name: son of Nahor and Reumah, Abraham's nephew (Genesis 22:24)

This personal name belongs to one of Nahor's sons by his concubine Reumah, making him a nephew of Abraham. The name has attracted scholarly attention because it may preserve a connection to a northern Syrian region mentioned in Egyptian sources. Some scholars identify it with Tikhes, a place north of Kadesh on the Orontes River. This would fit Genesis 22's interest in establishing Abraham's extended family connections throughout the broader Aramean region, providing genealogical backdrop for later narratives about Abraham's relatives in Haran and surrounding areas.

(1×) A son of Abraham's brother Nahor, listed among the descendants who populate northern Mesopotamia and Syria. The possible geographical connection to a Syrian locale reflects Genesis' pattern of embedding place names and ethnic origins within genealogies, creating a family map of the ancient Near East. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tahash | es: Tachash | fr: Tahash | de: Tachasch Gen 22:24

תַּחַת H8478 Prep / 1cs (511×)

Underneath, below (spatial); instead of, in place of (substitution); because, inasmuch as (causal).

Derived from a noun meaning 'the under part,' tachath functions primarily as a preposition with three distinct senses that unfold from a single spatial image. At its most concrete, it places something physically beneath another (Gen 18:4, sitting under a tree). By natural extension it comes to mean 'in the place of,' expressing succession or exchange – as when Solomon reigns tachath David (1 Kgs 1:30), or the ram is offered tachath Isaac (Gen 22:13). In the rare construction tachath asher, it becomes a causal conjunction meaning 'because.' Spanish and French glosses neatly track these shifts: 'bajo' for spatial, 'en-lugar-de' for substitutive, and 'parce-que' for causal.

1. under, beneath (spatial) (283×) Physical location below or underneath something, the most literal and frequent use. Includes 'under every green tree' (Deut 12:2), 'under the whole heaven' (Deut 2:25), and combinations with min (mittachat, 'from beneath'). Glosses across languages converge on spatial prepositions: 'sous,' 'unter,' 'bajo,' confirming the concrete positional meaning. Covers all pronominal suffixed forms retaining spatial force. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: under | es: al-pie-de, bajo, de-debajo-de- | fr: sous | de: unter, unter- Gen 7:19; Gen 16:9; Gen 18:4; Gen 18:8; Gen 21:15

2. instead of, in place of (215×) Substitution, succession, or exchange: one entity taking the role or position of another. Central to dynastic succession formulas ('he reigned in his place,' 1 Kgs 15:8) and to the theology of substitutionary offering (Gen 22:13, the ram 'instead of' Isaac). Spanish 'en-su-lugar' and French 'à-la-place-de-lui' consistently distinguish this from the spatial sense. Also covers 'in exchange for' in commercial or retributive contexts (an eye tachath an eye, Exod 21:24). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-his-place, instead-of-him | es: en-lugar-de-él, en-lugar-suyo, en-su-lugar | fr: dans-son-lieu, à-la-place-de-lui | de: in-sein-Ort, instead-von-ihn Gen 4:25; Gen 22:13; Gen 44:4; Gen 44:33; Exod 29:30

3. because, inasmuch as (causal) (13×) A causal conjunction, virtually always in the fixed phrase tachath asher ('because, inasmuch as'). This rare but important sense appears in Deuteronomic rhetoric: 'because you did not serve the LORD your God' (Deut 28:47). German 'weil' and French 'parce-que' confirm the causal reading. Only 13 occurrences, but theologically significant in covenant-curse contexts (Num 25:13; Deut 21:14). CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: Because, and-because, because | es: Por-cuanto, Porque, a-cambio-de | fr: et-parce-que, parce-que, sous | de: und-weil, unter, weil Num 25:13; Deut 4:37; Deut 21:14; Deut 22:29; Deut 28:47

תְּחוֹת H8479 Prep / 3ms (1×)

under, beneath (Aramaic preposition with suffix, Biblical Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew tahat)

The Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew 'under,' this preposition appears in Daniel's Aramaic sections describing spatial relationships and subordination. It shares cognates across Aramaic dialects (Targumic, Syriac, Palmyrene) and functions identically to its Hebrew counterpart. Daniel uses it both literally (under the tree) and metaphorically (under heaven = everywhere on earth). The form with pronominal suffixes shows standard Aramaic morphology, sometimes with Hebraized pointing in the Masoretic tradition.

(1×) In Daniel 4:14, this describes what is spatially 'under' the great tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream—the beasts, birds, and ultimately the nations sheltered beneath the tree's dominion. The preposition conveys both physical location and metaphorical subjugation, as the tree represents imperial power extending its protection (or control) over those 'under' it. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: under-it | es: debajo-de-él | fr: fond | de: [תחתוהי] Dan 4:14

תַּחַת H8480 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)

Tahath (Tachat): a Levite name, an Ephraimite name, and a wilderness station

A proper noun appearing in genealogical lists and wilderness itineraries. As a personal name, Tahath designates both a Levite in the line of Kohath (1 Chr 6:24, 37) and an Ephraimite ancestor (1 Chr 7:20, where the name appears twice in the genealogy). As a place name, it identifies a stopping point in Israel's wilderness wanderings (Num 33:26-27). The name likely derives from the common Hebrew word meaning 'beneath, under,' though in these contexts it functions purely as an identifier. French and German translations interestingly render the personal name with the common noun 'sous/unter' (under), reflecting the etymological connection.

1. Tachat (4×) Tahath as a personal name borne by at least two individuals: a Levite descendant of Kohath listed in David's worship organization (1 Chr 6:24, 37) and an Ephraimite in the genealogy of Joshua's tribe (1 Chr 7:20). French 'sous' and German 'unter' transparently render the etymological meaning 'beneath,' though the name functions as a proper identifier in these genealogies. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Tachat, and-Tachat | es: Tajat, y-Tájat | fr: et-sous, sous | de: und-unter, unter 1Chr 6:24; 1Chr 6:37; 1Chr 7:20

2. from Tahath (2×) Tahath as a geographic station in the wilderness itinerary of Numbers 33:26-27, listed between Makheloth and Terah. The prepositional usage 'from Tahath' and 'in Tahath' marks it as a campsite along the forty-year journey. Spanish 'de Tahat' and 'en Tahat' preserve the place-name clearly, while the site's location remains unidentified by modern archaeology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-Tahath, in-Tahath | es: de-Tahat, en-Tahat | fr: dans-Tahath, de-Tahath | de: in-Tahath, von-Tahath Num 33:26; Num 33:27

תַּחְתּוֹן H8481 Art / Adj-ms / 3fs (13×)

Lower or lowest in position; a spatial adjective for architectural levels, geographic features, and relative elevation.

A positional adjective marking what lies beneath or at the bottom — the lower story, the lower pool, the lower settlement. In Solomon's temple it identifies the lowest tier of side chambers (1 Kgs 6:6, 8), and Ezekiel uses it for the lower pavement and lower ledge of the altar (Ezek 40:18-19; 43:14). Isaiah mentions the 'lower pool' of Jerusalem's water system (Isa 22:9). Its most frequent geographic use is in the compound name Beth-horon the Lower (Josh 16:3; 18:13; 1 Chr 7:24; 2 Chr 8:5), distinguishing the lower town from its upper counterpart. French 'en-bas' and Spanish 'inferior' both capture the directional downward sense.

lower, lowest (13×) Occupying the lower or lowest spatial position, whether in architecture or geography. Describes the lowest tier of temple side chambers (1 Kgs 6:6, 8; Ezek 41:7; 42:5-6), the lower pavement and gate of the outer temple court (Ezek 40:18-19), the lower ledge of the altar (Ezek 43:14), and the lower pool of Jerusalem (Isa 22:9). Prominently appears in the place name Beth-horon the Lower (Josh 16:3; 18:13; 1 Kgs 9:17; 1 Chr 7:24; 2 Chr 8:5), distinguishing it from the upper town. Spanish 'inferior' and French 'en-bas' reflect the consistent spatial downward orientation. DOWNWARD BELOW BENEATH

en: from-the-lower, lower, the-lower | es: de-las-inferiores, el-inferior, inferior | fr: [התחתון], [התחתונה], en-bas | de: [התחתון], [התחתונה], [מהתחתונות] Josh 16:3; Josh 18:13; 1Kgs 6:6; 1Kgs 9:17; 1Chr 7:24

תַּחְתִּי H8482 Prep-b / N-fpc (19×)

Lowest parts, depths of the earth (Sheol/underworld); lower (comparative, of chambers or stones); bottom or base of a feature.
The adjective-turned-substantive tachtiy derives from tachat ('under, beneath') and plunges the reader into the vertical cosmology of the Hebrew Bible. In its dominant plural form tachtiyyot ha'arets ('the lowest parts of the earth'), it names the subterranean realm of the dead — Sheol, the shadowy underworld beneath the living world. Moses warns that God's anger burns 'unto the lowest Sheol' (Deut 32:22), the Psalmist thanks God for rescue 'from the depths of Sheol' (Ps 86:13), and Ezekiel consigns proud nations to 'the lowest parts of the earth' (Ezek 26:20; 31:14-18; 32:18-24). Spanish profundidades, French profondeurs, and German Tiefen all reach for depth vocabulary in these passages. The comparative sense survives in architectural contexts — the 'lower' stories of Noah's ark (Gen 6:16), the 'lower' spring of Caleb's inheritance (Josh 15:19; Judg 1:15), and the 'lower millstone' of Job 41:24. One singular occurrence marks a spatial base: Israel stationed 'at the bottom of the mountain' at Sinai (Exod 19:17).

1. lowest parts, depths (underworld/Sheol) (14×) The lowest parts, depths, or netherworld regions — a substantival use referring to Sheol, the underworld, or the deep subterranean spaces beneath the earth. This dominant sense (14 occurrences) pervades cosmological and eschatological poetry: Moses' Song warns that divine fire burns 'to the lowest Sheol' (Deut 32:22), the Psalmist celebrates deliverance 'from the lowest Sheol' (Ps 86:13), and Ezekiel repeatedly consigns the proud dead to 'the lowest parts of the earth' (Ezek 26:20; 31:14, 16, 18; 32:18, 24). Spanish profundidades de la tierra, French profondeurs de la terre, and Arabic اعماق الارض all employ underworld-depth vocabulary. Isaiah 44:23 invites even 'the depths of the earth' to shout for joy at God's redemption. DOWNWARD BELOW BENEATH en: from-lowest-parts-of, in-depths-of, into-the-depths-of | es: de-abajo, de-las-partes-bajas, de-las-profundidades | fr: [מתחתיות], [תחתיות], [תחתית] | de: [מתחתיות], [תחתיות], [תחתית] Deut 32:22; Neh 4:13; Ps 63:9; Ps 86:13; Ps 88:6

2. lower (comparative adjective) (4×) Lower in position (comparative adjective) — describing something as being in a relatively lower position compared to something else, used attributively in architectural, geographic, or anatomical contexts. Four occurrences include the 'lower stories' of Noah's ark (Gen 6:16), the 'lower springs' given to Achsah by Caleb (Josh 15:19; Judg 1:15), and the 'lower millstone' describing Leviathan's impenetrable underside (Job 41:24). Spanish inferior/inferiores and French inferieur mark the straightforward comparative, while German untere preserves the spatial contrast with upper levels. DOWNWARD BELOW BENEATH
en: -the-lower, lower, the-lower-millstone | es: inferior, inferiores | fr: -le-inférieur, abaisser, inférieur | de: -der-senken, [תחתית], senken Gen 6:16; Josh 15:19; Judg 1:15; Job 41:24

3. bottom, base (of a feature) (1×) The bottom or base of a geographic feature — a locative use with a preposition indicating position at the foot or lowest point of a landmark. One clear occurrence at the Sinai theophany: 'Moses brought the people out of the camp to meet God, and they stationed themselves at the bottom of the mountain' (Exod 19:17). Spanish al pie de ('at the foot of'), French au pied de, and Arabic عند سفح الجبل all use dedicated 'foot of the mountain' vocabulary, confirming this as a distinct spatial sense from the cosmic depths of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: at-bottom-of | es: al-pie-de- | fr: à-fond-de | de: bei-Boden-von Exod 19:17

חַדְשִׁי H8483 N-proper-fs (2×)

Tahtim-hodshi (place-name in David's census; textual uncertainty)
This obscure place-name appears only in 2 Samuel 24:6 during the account of Joab's census for David. The Hebrew text is difficult, and many scholars believe it's corrupt. Proposals include reading 'the land of the Hittites toward Kadesh' instead of 'Tahtim-hodshi,' which would make better geographical sense in the census itinerary. The LXX reflects this uncertainty with varied readings. The name, if original, would designate a location in northern Israel or Syria visited during the census tour, but its exact identification remains unknown.

(2×) The dual occurrence in 2 Samuel 24:6 likely reflects the compounding of uncertain textual elements: 'Tahtim' and 'Hodshi' may be separate corrupted words rather than a compound place-name. Translations show this confusion: some treat it as a place-name ('Tahtim'), others offer alternate readings. The geographical context (between Gilead and Dan) suggests northern territory, but the text's corruption makes confident identification impossible. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Hodshi, Tahtim | es: Jodshi, Tajtim | fr: Hodshi, Tahtim | de: Hodshi, Tahtim 2Sam 24:6

תִּיכוֹן H8484 Art / Adj-fs (11×)

Middle — positional adjective describing the central story of a building or the middle position in a series
The adjective תִּיכוֹן (tikon) means 'middle' or 'central,' locating something between two extremes in a spatial series. Its most prominent architectural use describes the middle story of Solomon's Temple (1 Kgs 6:6, 8), where a three-tiered side structure surrounded the main hall. The middle bar running through the center of the tabernacle frames (Exod 26:28; 36:33) is its other key referent. Gideon's night attack at the 'middle watch' (Judg 7:19) extends the term to temporal division. Translations converge across languages: Spanish 'del medio,' Arabic 'وسطى,' Hindi 'बीच वाली,' Korean '가운데의,' Swahili 'cha kati.'

middle (positional adjective) (11×) A positional adjective meaning 'middle' or 'central,' used to identify the middle element in a three-part series. Applied architecturally to the middle story of the Temple's side chambers (1 Kgs 6:6, 8) and the central bar of the tabernacle's board framework (Exod 26:28; 36:33). Extended temporally in Judges 7:19 to the 'middle watch' of the night. Ezekiel uses it for the middle level of the visionary temple's chambers (Ezek 42:5-6). All translations map uniformly to a single spatial concept. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-from-the-middle, and-the-middle, the-middle | es: a-la-del-medio, el-central, el-medio | fr: [ומהתיכנות], [ומהתכנות], [לתיכונה] | de: [ומהתיכנות], [ומהתכנות], [לתיכונה] Exod 26:28; Exod 36:33; Judg 7:19; 1Kgs 6:6; 1Kgs 6:8

תֵּימָא H8485 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Tema — an Arabian territory and its people, descended from Ishmael Tema refers to an oasis settlement in northwestern Arabia, identified with modern Teyma, and to the tribe descended from Ishmael's son of the same name (Gen 25:15). Isaiah 21:14 calls on the inhabitants of Tema to bring water to the thirsty, reflecting its role as a caravan waypoint. Jeremiah 25:23 groups Tema with Dedan and Buz among Arabian peoples under divine judgment. Job 6:19 invokes the caravans of Tema as a metaphor for disappointed hope, since desert travelers depend on seasonal wadis that may run dry.

(5×) A proper noun designating both the Arabian territory centered on the oasis of Teyma in the Hejaz and the Ishmaelite clan associated with it. The name appears in genealogy (Gen 25:15; 1 Chr 1:30), prophetic oracles against Arabian peoples (Isa 21:14; Jer 25:23), and wisdom poetry describing trade caravans (Job 6:19). Translations uniformly transliterate the name — English, Spanish, and French all render 'Tema' or 'Teima' — confirming its consistent identification as a geographical and ethnic designation. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: Tema, and-Tema | es: Tema, y-Teima, y-Tema | fr: [ותימא], [תימא], et-Tema | de: [ותימא], [תימא], [תמא] Gen 25:15; 1Chr 1:30; Job 6:19; Isa 21:14; Jer 25:23

תֵּימָן H8486 Conj-w / N-fs / 3fs (23×)

South, the southern direction or region; also the south wind.
Derived from the right-hand side as one faces east, this noun designates the south as a compass direction and geographic region. It appears frequently in the Tabernacle construction texts (Exodus 26-38) for the southern side of the structure, and in prophetic geography such as Isaiah 43:6 and Zechariah 6:6 for the southern quarter of the world. In two poetic passages, Psalm 78:26 and Song of Solomon 4:16, it specifically denotes the south wind. Spanish sur, French sud, and German Sueden uniformly reflect the directional sense.

1. south, southward (direction/region) (21×) The cardinal direction south or the southern region, used as a locative or directional noun. Exodus 26:18 and 36:23 use it for the south side of the Tabernacle; Isaiah 43:6 pairs it with 'north' for geographic orientation. The he-locale form teymanah ('southward') accounts for most occurrences. Spanish al-sur, French de-sud, and German Sueden all confirm the directional reading. SOUTH AND DIRECTION

en: and-from-south, and-southward, from-south | es: Temán, al-sur, desde-el-sur | fr: de-sud, et-de-sud, et-vers-le-sud | de: Sueden, [התימן], [לתימן] Exod 26:18; Exod 26:35; Exod 27:9; Exod 36:23; Exod 38:9

2. south wind (2×) The south wind as a meteorological phenomenon. Psalm 78:26 describes God bringing forth the south wind by His power, and Song of Solomon 4:16 invokes it poetically: 'Awake, O south wind!' Spanish viento-del-sur and English south-wind in these two passages distinguish this from the directional sense. SOUTH AND DIRECTION

en: south, the-south-wind | es: sur, viento-del-sur | fr: sud, sud! | de: [תימן], der-south-Wind Ps 78:26; Song 4:16

תֵּימָן H8487 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (11×)

Teman — a region or city in Edom, associated with wisdom traditions and prophetic oracles of judgment

The proper noun תֵּימָן (Teman) designates a region or city in northern Edom, traditionally linked to Teman son of Eliphaz son of Esau (Gen 36:11, 15, 42). Teman was renowned for its wise men, a reputation reflected in Jeremiah's rhetorical question: 'Is there no longer wisdom in Teman?' (Jer 49:7). Eliphaz the Temanite, Job's most prominent interlocutor, hails from this tradition. The prophets target Teman in oracles against Edom (Jer 49:7, 20; Ezek 25:13; Amos 1:12; Obad 9). In Habakkuk 3:3, God comes 'from Teman' in a theophanic march, paralleling Sinai traditions. Spanish 'Temán,' Arabic 'ن,' Hindi 'तेमान,' Korean '데만.'

Teman (place name) (11×) A region or principal city in Edom, named after Teman grandson of Esau (Gen 36:11, 15, 42; 1 Chr 1:36, 53). Famous for its wisdom tradition, it is the homeland of Eliphaz the Temanite (Job 2:11). Prophetic oracles announce judgment against Teman as representative of all Edom (Jer 49:7, 20; Ezek 25:13; Amos 1:12; Obad 9). Habakkuk 3:3 places God's theophanic approach 'from Teman,' paralleling Mount Paran. All eleven occurrences refer to this single geographic and tribal entity, split across grammatical frames (bare, 'from,' 'in,' construct). SOUTH AND DIRECTION

en: Teman, Teyman, from-Teman | es: Teman, Temán, de-Temán | fr: Teman, Téman, Téman, | de: Teman, [בתימן], [מתימן] Gen 36:11; Gen 36:15; Gen 36:42; 1Chr 1:36; 1Chr 1:53

תֵּימְנִי H8488 N-proper-ms (1×)

Temeni, personal name: a descendant of Judah listed in the tribal genealogy (1 Chronicles 4:6)

A personal name in the genealogies of Judah found in 1 Chronicles 4:6. The name may derive from the root meaning 'southern' or relate to the region of Teman, suggesting geographical origins. Chronicles preserves many such names whose primary function is maintaining the genealogical web connecting post-exilic Judahites to their tribal heritage. Without additional narrative context, we know this individual only as a link in Judah's family tree.

(1×) A Judahite figure preserved solely in genealogical records, possibly bearing a name reflecting southern geographical associations (temani = southerner, or connected to Teman). Such genealogical preservation was vital for the Chronicler's project of establishing post-exilic community identity through ancestral continuity.

PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Temni | es: Temeni | fr: [תימני] | de: [תימני] 1Chr 4:6

הַתֵּימָנִי H8489 Art / N-proper-ms (8×)

The Temanite: a gentilic adjective identifying a person from Teman in Edom, used almost exclusively as the epithet of Job's friend Eliphaz.

A gentilic adjective meaning 'the Temanite,' derived from the place name Teman, a district in northern Edom renowned for its wisdom tradition (cf. Jer 49:7; Obad 1:9). In biblical usage the term appears almost exclusively as the fixed epithet of Eliphaz, the first and most prominent of Job's three friends (Job 2:11; 4:1; 15:1; 22:1; 42:7, 9). Outside Job, it occurs in Genesis 36:34 and 1 Chronicles 1:45 describing Husham's homeland as 'the land of the Temanites.' The consistent article ('the Temanite') marks it as a recognized designation rather than a mere geographical note.

Temanite (gentilic noun) (8×) The gentilic adjective ha-Temani (הַתֵּימָנִי), always appearing with the definite article, identifying someone from Teman in Edom. Six of eight occurrences attach to Eliphaz in Job (2:11; 4:1; 15:1; 22:1; 42:7, 9), making it virtually synonymous with his identity. Teman was famed for wisdom (Jer 49:7), which adds ironic depth to Eliphaz's speeches—he represents Edomite sagacity, yet God ultimately rebukes him (Job 42:7). The remaining two occurrences describe the region as 'the land of the Temanite' in the Edomite king list (Gen 36:34 = 1 Chr 1:45). Translations uniformly render the gentilic: English 'the Temanite,' Spanish 'el temanita,' German 'der Temaniter,' French 'le Thémanite.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Temani, the-Temanite | es: el-temanita | fr: [התימני], le-Temanite, le-Thémanite | de: [התימני], [התמני], der-Temaniter Gen 36:34; 1Chr 1:45; Job 2:11; Job 4:1; Job 15:1

תֵּימָרָה H8490 Prep-k / N-fpc (2×)

columns, pillars (palm-like columns; especially of smoke)

This rare plural noun appears in Joel 2:30 and Song of Songs 3:6, both times describing columns of smoke. The imagery is of smoke rising in tall, palm-like pillars—perhaps spreading at the top like a palm tree's fronds. Joel speaks of God showing 'columns of smoke' among apocalyptic wonders, while Song of Songs asks, 'Who is this coming up from the wilderness like columns of smoke?' The word emphasizes vertical, pillar-like form rather than diffuse smoke. The palm-tree association suggests both height and distinctive shape.

(2×) Both contexts describe smoke rising in columnar form, specifically using prepositional phrases: 'like columns of smoke' or 'and columns of smoke.' The palm-tree etymology (related to 'tamar') suggests the visual comparison: smoke rising in tall shafts that may widen at the top. Spanish offers 'columnas,' French 'colonnes,' all capturing the architectural/structural imagery applied to atmospheric phenomena. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-columns-of, like-columns-of | es: como-columnas-de, y-columnas-de | fr: comme-des-colonnes, et-colonne | de: [וכתימרות], [כתימרות] Song 3:6; Joel 2:30

תִּיצִי H8491 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Tizite, gentilic with article: clan or regional designation for one of David's warriors (1 Chronicles 11:45)

This gentilic adjective identifies one of David's mighty men in 1 Chronicles 11:45, though the place or clan it references is unknown. The term appears nowhere else in biblical literature, and even ancient interpreters found it obscure. It likely designates a hometown, clan territory, or family group that was locally significant but didn't survive in broader historical memory. Such designations were crucial for distinguishing warriors in military rosters where personal names alone might be ambiguous.

(1×) An otherwise unknown gentilic marking the origin of one of David's elite warriors. The term's obscurity underscores how many local place names and clan designations have been lost to history, preserved only in these brief military registers that once held social meaning for their original audiences. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Titsite | es: el-titsí | fr: [הַתִּיצִי] | de: [הַתִּיצִי] 1Chr 11:45

תִּירוֹשׁ H8492 Conj-w / N-msc / 1cs (38×)

new wine, must — freshly pressed grape juice, listed with grain and oil as a sign of agricultural blessing

Tirosh is the Hebrew term for new wine or must — the freshly pressed juice of the grape before extended fermentation. Its 38 occurrences almost always place it in the triad dagan-tirosh-yitshar ('grain, new wine, and oil'), a formulaic expression for the full produce of the land. Deuteronomy alone uses this triad seven times as the measure of covenant blessing (7:13; 11:14; 12:17; 14:23; 18:4; 28:51; 33:28). Tirosh is distinguished from yayin ('fermented wine') — Micah 6:15 makes the progression explicit: 'you shall tread tirosh but not drink yayin.' Hosea 4:11 warns that 'wine and new wine take away the understanding,' pairing the two as complementary intoxicants. Isaiah 65:8 locates tirosh still inside the grape cluster, and Joel 2:24 envisions the vats overflowing with it. The Septuagint renders it oinos neos ('new wine'), and the translations follow suit: Spanish 'mosto/vino nuevo,' French 'mout,' German 'Most.'

new wine / must (38×) Freshly pressed grape juice or must, representing the yield of the vineyard before full fermentation. Characteristically appears in the agricultural triad dagan-tirosh-yitshar ('grain, new wine, oil') as shorthand for covenant prosperity (Deut 7:13; 11:14; 14:23; 28:51; Hos 2:10, 24; Joel 2:19). Distinguished from yayin ('fermented wine') in Micah 6:15 and Hosea 4:11, though the boundary between them is permeable. Genesis 27:28 includes tirosh in Isaac's patriarchal blessing, and Numbers 18:12 assigns its firstfruits to the priests. Judges 9:13 personifies the vine: 'should I leave my tirosh, which cheers God and men?' The term connotes abundance, freshness, and divine generosity. WINE BEVERAGE en: and-new-wine, and-the-new-wine, and-with-new-wine | es: el-mosto, mosto, vino-nuevo | fr: der-moût, et-nouveau-vin, et-ton-nouveau-vin | de: Most, [תירוש], der-Most Gen 27:28; Gen 27:37; Num 18:12; Deut 7:13; Deut 11:14

תִּירְיָא H8493 N-proper-ms (1×)

Tirya, personal name: a son of Jehallelel in the genealogy of Judah (1 Chronicles 4:16)

A personal name appearing in the Judahite genealogies in 1 Chronicles 4:16. Some manuscripts show variation (Tiryah vs. Tirea), reflecting the fluid transmission of genealogical texts. The name may derive from the root for 'fear' or 'reverence,' potentially making it a theophoric name expressing piety. Like many names in Chronicles' genealogies, this preserves family memory without providing narrative detail, serving the Chronicler's purpose of establishing comprehensive tribal records.

(1×) A descendant of Judah through Jehallelel, this name appears in genealogical lists with minor textual variants. If related to the 'fear' root, it would exemplify the practice of giving children names reflecting religious devotion or circumstances of birth, a common pattern in biblical nomenclature. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Tiryah | es: Tirya | fr: [תיריא] | de: [תיריא] 1Chr 4:16

תִּירָס H8494 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Tîras (son of Japheth; possibly Tyrrhenians/Etruscans)

Tiras appears in the Table of Nations (Genesis 10:2, 1 Chronicles 1:5) as a son of Japheth, Noah's son. Scholars have proposed identification with the Tyrrhenians (Etruscans) or other Aegean/Mediterranean peoples. Egyptian texts mention 'Turusa' as sea peoples, possibly related. The name represents an ethnic group descended from Japheth, part of the post-flood dispersion of nations. Like other Table of Nations entries, Tiras functions both as a personal name (the ancestor) and as a collective designation (the people group descended from him).

(2×) The name appears in parallel genealogical texts (Genesis 10, 1 Chronicles 1) with the typical conjunction 'and Tiras,' listing him among Japheth's seven sons. All translations transliterate consistently: Spanish 'Tiras/Tirás,' French 'Tiras,' German 'Tiras.' The ancient versions (LXX Theiras) similarly preserve the name, recognizing it as representing a nation-group whose exact historical identification, while debated, likely points to Aegean or western Mediterranean peoples. NATIONS AND PEOPLES
en: and-Tiras | es: y-Tiras, y-Tirás | fr: et-Tiras | de: [וְתִירָס], und-Tiras Gen 10:2; 1Chr 1:5

תַּיִשׁ H8495 Art / N-mp (4×)

he-goat, male goat

A term specifically for male goats, distinguished from female goats (עִזִּים) in Genesis 32:14. The word appears in contexts of livestock wealth and royal tribute—Jehoshaphat receiving thousands of rams and male goats as tribute (2 Chr 17:11), Jacob separating the speckled and spotted males from Laban's flocks (Gen 30:35). Proverbs 30:31 includes the strutting he-goat among creatures that move with stately bearing. The term is used across Hebrew, Aramaic, and Arabic with consistent meaning.

(4×) Denotes male goats as valuable livestock and symbols of virility or pride. The multilingual glosses show clear consensus: Spanish 'machos cabríos,' French 'mâle-chèvres,' German 'Böcke'—all emphasizing the male gender. Genesis passages link these animals to wealth and breeding management, while Proverbs uses the strutting he-goat as an emblem of confident, commanding movement. MALE GOAT
en: a-male-goat, and-male-goats, the-he-goats | es: los-machos-cabríos, macho-cabrío, y-machos-cabríos | fr: [וּתְיָשִׁים], et-mâle-chèvres, le-il-chèvres | de: [וּתְיָשִׁים], [תַּיִשׁ], die-Böcke Gen 30:35; Gen 32:14; 2Chr 17:11; Prov 30:31

תֹּךְ H8496 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

oppression, injury, violence (harm inflicted by the powerful)

This noun denotes oppression, injury, or violent wrong inflicted on the vulnerable. It appears in Psalms paired with other terms for wickedness. Psalm 10:7 describes the wicked man's mouth full of cursing, deceit, and 'oppression.' Psalm 55:11 portrays Jerusalem's streets where 'oppression and deceit do not depart.' Psalm 72:14 promises the ideal king will redeem lives 'from oppression and violence' (the text may include 'violence' as a gloss). Proverbs 29:13 mentions 'the oppressor' (literally 'man of oppressions') whom God will judge. The term emphasizes abuse of power and harm done to those without recourse.

(3×) Oppression or injury inflicted by the powerful. Psalm 10:7 lists 'oppression' among the wicked's verbal arsenal (with cursing and deceit). Psalm 55:11 laments that 'oppression' never leaves the city streets—endemic abuse. Psalm 72:14 promises redemption 'from oppression and violence'—the righteous king will end exploitation. Proverbs 29:13 contrasts the poor man and 'the oppressor' (man of oppressions)—those who systematically exploit others. The multilingual glosses ('opresión,' 'oppression') confirm this involves systematic harm, abuse of power, and violence against the vulnerable. OPPRESSION AFFLICTION
en: and-oppression, from-oppression, oppression | es: De-opresión, opresión, y-opresión | fr: de-palmier, et-palmier, palmier | de: oppression, und-oppression, von-oppression Ps 10:7; Ps 55:11; Ps 72:14

תָּכָּה H8497 V-Pual-Perf-3cp (1×)

to be led, assembled, gathered (meaning uncertain; Pual form suggesting passive action)

This verb appears only in Deuteronomy 33:3 in a notoriously difficult verse, and its meaning remains disputed. The Pual form suggests a passive sense—something done to the subject. Context hints at Israel being gathered, led, or assembled at God's feet to receive teaching. Some translations suggest 'bowed down,' others 'were led' or 'gathered.' The multilingual evidence shows interpreters struggling with the same ambiguity: Spanish 'sat down,' French 'prostrated,' German 'bowed down.' The scene is clearly Moses' blessing depicting Israel's relationship to divine instruction, but the precise nuance eludes certainty.

(1×) In Moses' blessing (Deuteronomy 33:3), this describes Israel's posture or position relative to God—whether gathered, led, or seated at his feet to receive instruction. The diverse cross-linguistic renderings reflect genuine textual difficulty, with translators opting for images of assembly, submission, or reverent attention that fit the context of receiving Torah. DESCENDING AND TEARING

en: bowed-down | es: se-sentaron | fr: se-prosterna-en-bas | de: beugte-sich-hinab Deut 33:3

תְּכוּנָה H8498 Prep-l (2×)

arrangement, preparation, fixed place; design, supply, or dwelling

This noun derives from a root meaning 'to establish' or 'arrange,' and it appears with three related senses across three passages. In Ezekiel 43:11, it refers to the arrangement or design of the temple. In Nahum 2:9, it means preparation or supply—'no end to the treasure' (literally 'to the preparation'). In Job 23:3, it designates God's fixed dwelling place—'Oh, that I knew where I might find him, that I might come to his seat!' The common thread is something established, arranged, or prepared—whether architectural design, stored wealth, or a fixed location.

(2×) The semantic range shows related concepts: architectural arrangement (Ezekiel's temple design), stored preparation (Nahum's treasure/supply), and established location (Job's divine dwelling). Spanish translations vary accordingly: 'disposición' (arrangement), 'riqueza' (wealth/treasure), while French offers 'arrangement.' The prepositional usage ('to the preparation,' 'its arrangement') shows the noun functioning in different syntactic contexts, but consistently conveying something fixed, established, or prepared. ORDER ARRANGEMENT

en: and-its-design, to-the-treasure | es: a-la-riqueza, y-su-disposición | fr: arrangement, et-arrangement | de: [ותכונתו], [לתכונה] Ezek 43:11; Nah 2:9

תְּכוּנָה H8499 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)

arrangement, preparation, fixed place, dwelling (noun describing spatial order or established location)

This noun conveys the idea of something arranged, prepared, or established in place. It appears in contexts describing architectural arrangement (Ezekiel's temple), military supplies or stores (Nahum), and God's dwelling place (Job). The root suggests fixity and order—something set firmly in position. In Job 23:3, it parallels 'place' (maqom) and refers to God's dwelling or throne. The word emphasizes stability and established position, whether of physical structures, prepared resources, or divine habitation.

(1×) In Job 23:3, this denotes God's fixed dwelling place or throne, the established location where Job wishes to present his case. The term implies permanence and stability—God's place is not arbitrary but established, paralleling other terms for divine throne or dwelling (makon). The multilingual evidence shows translations opting for 'dwelling' or 'throne,' recognizing the sense of a fixed, authoritative seat. DELIGHT PLEASURE

en: his-dwelling | es: su-trono. | fr: son-תכונתו-lui | de: [תכונתו] Job 23:3

תֻּכִּיִּים H8500 Conj-w / N-mp (2×)

peacocks (exotic birds imported with ivory and apes)

This word appears only in the list of exotic goods imported by Solomon's trading fleet: 'gold, silver, ivory, apes, and peacocks' (1 Kings 10:22, 2 Chronicles 9:21). The identification as peacocks rests on ancient versions (Targum, Syriac, Jerome) and possible connection to a South Indian/Malabar word for peacock (togai, toghai). These magnificent birds, native to India and Southeast Asia, would have been prized imports, symbolizing Solomon's far-reaching trade networks and unprecedented wealth. The spelling varies slightly between Kings and Chronicles (tukkiyim/tukiyim), but both refer to the same exotic bird.

(2×) The dual occurrence in parallel passages (Kings/Chronicles) lists these birds among luxury imports arriving every three years on Tarshish ships. The conjunction 'and peacocks' concludes the exotic cargo list after ivory and apes. While English and Spanish confidently render 'peacocks' (Spanish 'pavos reales'), French and German show more caution with transliterations, reflecting scholarly debate about the exact identification. The context clearly indicates prestigious, foreign birds valued for their beauty. LIVING CREATURES

en: and-peacocks | es: y-pavos-reales | fr: [ותוכיים], et-peacocks | de: [ותוכיים], und-peacocks 1Kgs 10:22; 2Chr 9:21

תֹּךְ H8501 N-mp (1×)

oppression, violence, injury (noun describing harm inflicted by oppressors)

This noun denotes oppressive violence or injury, particularly that inflicted by those in power. It appears in parallel with other terms for violence and deceit in the Psalms and Proverbs, painting portraits of wicked oppressors. Proverbs 29:13 uses it to characterize 'the man of oppressions,' one who uses violence to exploit others. The plural form emphasizes repeated or varied acts of oppression. The word family includes concepts of injury and wrongdoing, focusing on harm done to vulnerable people.

(1×) In Proverbs 29:13, this describes the characteristic activity of the oppressor—violent exploitation and injury. The multilingual glosses consistently point to oppression, with the context contrasting the oppressor with the poor. The term appears in wisdom literature's social ethics, condemning those who use power to harm rather than protect the vulnerable. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: oppression | es: opresiones | fr: תככים | de: [תככים] Prov 29:13

תִּכְלָה H8502 N-fs (1×)

completeness, perfection, consummation (noun describing the state of being complete or perfect)

This noun denotes the state of completeness or perfection, appearing only in Psalm 119:96 in a profound reflection on the limits of earthly perfection. The psalmist observes that even to 'all perfection' he has seen an end—all earthly completeness is bounded—but God's commandment is exceedingly broad, unlimited. The word derives from the root for 'completeness' and represents the concept of something finished, perfect, or comprehensive. It captures the idea of something brought to full realization or completion.

(1×) In Psalm 119:96, this represents the highest degree of earthly perfection or completeness, which the psalmist has found to be limited. The contrast sets up the boundless nature of God's word—while all created perfection has limits (an 'end'), divine instruction is infinite. The multilingual glosses consistently render it as 'perfection,' recognizing the philosophical-theological point about finite versus infinite excellence. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11702 WITH 8 SENSES

en: perfection | es: perfección | fr: perfection | de: perfection Ps 119:96

תַּכְלִית H8503 N-fsc (5×)

end, limit, completeness; the uttermost boundary or fullest extent of something

This noun conveys the idea of reaching a final boundary or the absolute fullness of something. In Nehemiah 3:21 it marks a spatial endpoint — 'the end of the house of Eliashib.' In Job it stretches toward the metaphysical: can a mortal reach 'the limit of the Almighty' (11:7) or explore 'every farthest bound' of the earth (28:3)? Psalm 139:22 pivots to a qualitative sense — 'completeness of hatred' — where the word functions as an adverbial intensifier, describing the absolute totality of the psalmist's opposition to evil.

(5×) The spatial or conceptual end-point, the farthest limit or boundary of something. Used of the end of a building (Neh 3:21), the boundary between light and darkness (Job 26:10), and the unfathomable limit of God's nature (Job 11:7). Spanish 'confín' and 'fin' and English 'end/limit' consistently reflect a terminal boundary.

Job 28:3 extends this to the remotest reaches a miner can explore, emphasizing thoroughness of search. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: completeness-of, end-of, limit | es: Completo, el-confín-de, fin-de | fr: [תכלית], fin, תכלית | de: [תכלית], completeness-of Neh 3:21; Job 11:7; Job 26:10; Job 28:3; Ps 139:22

תְּכֵלֶת H8504 Prep-b (49×)

blue/violet — the precious violet-blue dye and yarn used for sacred textiles and tabernacle furnishings

Tekhelet is the violet-blue dye extracted from the murex sea snail, one of the most prized colorants of the ancient world. Nearly all of its 49 occurrences appear in Exodus and Numbers in connection with the tabernacle: the curtains (Exod 26:1), the veil (26:31), the ephod and breastplate (28:6, 15), and the cord fastening the golden plate to the turban (28:37). The color almost always appears in the sacred triad of tekhelet, argaman (purple), and tola'at shani (scarlet) — a trio that reappears in the temple hangings of 2 Chronicles 2-3 and even the palace decor of Esther 1:6. The single non-cultic command is striking: every Israelite was to attach a thread of tekhelet to the fringes of their garment as a reminder to keep God's commandments (Num 15:38). The LXX renders it hyakinthos ('hyacinth'), pointing to a blue-violet hue. Translations converge: Spanish 'azul,' French 'bleu,' German 'blau.'

blue (violet-blue yarn/fabric) (49×) The violet-blue dye derived from the murex snail, and by metonymy the yarn, thread, or fabric dyed with it. Overwhelmingly a cultic textile term, appearing in the triad tekhelet-argaman-tola'at shani (blue-purple-scarlet) for tabernacle curtains, veils, and priestly vestments (Exod 25:4; 26:1, 31, 36; 28:5-33). Also used for the blue cord of the high priest's turban plate (Exod 28:37; 39:31), the covering cloths for sacred vessels during transport (Num 4:6-12), and the citizen's garment fringe (Num 15:38). Extends to temple and palace hangings (2 Chr 2:6; Esth 1:6). All 49 occurrences share this single color-and-textile sense. PURPLE FABRIC DYE
en: blue | es: azul | fr: bleu | de: blau Exod 25:4; Exod 26:1; Exod 26:4; Exod 26:31; Exod 26:36

תָּכַן H8505 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (18×)

To measure, weigh, assess; in Nifal, to be found right or just; in Piel, to mete out or establish firmly.

Takan is the Hebrew Bible's word for cosmic measurement and moral assessment rolled into one. At the physical level, God 'measured' the waters in the hollow of his hand and 'marked off' the heavens with a span (Isa 40:12-13). At the moral level, the same root declares whether a person's way 'is right' — Ezekiel's recurring challenge to Israel: 'Is my way not right? Is it not your ways that are not right?' (Ezek 18:25). The conceptual bridge is illuminating: the God who can measure wind and water is the same God who weighs hearts and spirits (Prov 16:2). Spanish captures this duality with medir ('to measure') for the physical and recto ('straight, right') for the moral, while German recht sein ('to be right') and English 'weigh' each illuminate one facet of the word's deep integration of physical and ethical standards.

1. to be right, be assessed as just (10×) Nifal: to be right, just, or properly assessed — the most frequent sense at ten occurrences, concentrated in Ezekiel 18 and 33. The repeated refrain 'the way of the Lord is not right' (lo yittaken, Ezek 18:25, 29; 33:17, 20) uses the passive to mean 'measured against a standard and found to meet it.' In 1 Samuel 2:3, Hannah declares that 'by him actions are weighed' — the same standard-based judgment. Spanish es recto and German recht sein both select moral-rightness vocabulary, confirming that the underlying metaphor of measurement has been fully lexicalized into ethical evaluation. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS
en: are-right, are-weighed, is-right | es: es-recto, es-recto., es-recto? | fr: mesurer, sont-pesa | de: recht-sein, sind-weighed, wird-recht-sein 1Sam 2:3; Ezek 18:25; Ezek 18:29

2. to weigh, assess (3×) Qal participle: to weigh or assess hearts and spirits — three occurrences in Proverbs (16:2; 21:2; 24:12) where God is the subject who 'weighs' the inner motivations of human beings. Spanish pesar ('to weigh') and English 'weigh' both preserve the concrete measurement metaphor applied to invisible moral realities. This is the active counterpart to sense 1's passive: God does the weighing, and human ways are found right or wanting as a result. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING en: but-weighs, he-who-weighs | es: el-que-pesa, pero-pesa, y-el-que-pesa | fr: et-תכן ,ותכן | de: [ותכן], [תכן] Prov 16:2; Prov 21:2; Prov 24:12

3. to measure, mete out (3×) Piel: to measure or mete out physical quantities — three occurrences (Job 28:25; Isa 40:12, 13) where God measures waters, wind, and the heavens themselves. This is the root's most concrete sense, closest to its etymological core of standardized measurement. Spanish medir and the creation-theology context make clear that this is cosmic calibration: God as the master measurer who sets the dimensions of reality. The Piel intensitive suits the emphasis on thoroughness and precision. MEASURE METE OUT en: He-measured, has-measured, marked-off | es: dispuso, midió, midió? | fr: [תכן], תכן | de: [תכן] Job 28:25; Isa 40:12; Isa 40:13

4. weighed out (passive) (1×) Pual passive: weighed out (of money) — a single occurrence at 2 Kings 12:11, where silver 'that was weighed out' is given to the temple workmen. Spanish el pesado and English 'the weighed' confirm a commercial-transactional sense: currency verified by weight before payment. This preserves the literal measurement meaning but in the mundane context of temple accounting rather than cosmic or moral assessment. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING en: the-weighed | es: el-pesado | fr: le-pesa | de: der-weighed 2Kgs 12:11

5. to establish, set firm (1×) Piel: to establish firmly or set in order — one occurrence at Psalm 75:3 ('I have set firm its pillars'), where the meaning extends beyond measurement into the related concept of stabilizing or calibrating. Spanish he sostenido ('I have sustained') captures the resultant state rather than the process. The semantic development from 'measure precisely' to 'set in proper order' is natural: what is correctly measured is thereby made stable and right. FOUNDING AND ESTABLISHING en: have-set-firm | es: he-sostenido | fr: peser | de: haben-setzen-firm Ps 75:3

תֹּכֶן H8506 N-ms (2×)

measurement, quota, fixed amount (of bricks or capacity)

This noun denotes a fixed measure or quota, appearing in Exodus 5:18 (the daily quota of bricks demanded from Hebrew slaves) and Ezekiel 45:11 (the standard capacity measure for ephah and bath). In Exodus, Pharaoh cruelly insists the Israelites deliver 'the same quota of bricks' despite having to gather their own straw. In Ezekiel's temple vision, the word designates the standardized measurement ensuring that ephah and bath hold the same volume. The term emphasizes fixed, determinate quantity—whether an oppressive work requirement or a fair measurement standard.

(2×) The two contexts show the word's range: enforced production quota (Exodus) and standardized capacity measure (Ezekiel). Spanish uses 'cantidad' (quantity) and 'medida' (measure), while French offers 'mesure.' The prepositional phrases ('quota of bricks,' 'measure') show the noun modified by what is being measured. The common element is precision—a fixed, known quantity that serves as a standard or requirement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-quota-of, measure | es: medida, y-cantidad-de | fr: et-quota-de, mesure | de: [תכן], und-quota-von Exod 5:18; Ezek 45:11

תֹּכֶן H8507 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Tochen (with conjunction), place name: a town in the territory of Simeon (1 Chronicles 4:32)

A place name in Simeon's territorial allotment, appearing in 1 Chronicles 4:32. The name may derive from a root meaning 'measure' or 'standard,' though its etymology remains uncertain. Like many Simeonite settlements, this town is otherwise unattested, its location lost to history. The Septuagint variants reflect ancient translators' uncertainty about the name. It survives only in Chronicles' careful preservation of tribal territorial lists.

(1×) A Simeonite town preserved in the Chronicler's territorial records, this place name has left no other trace in biblical or extra-biblical sources. The conjunction indicates it appears in a series of towns marking Simeon's settlements, part of Chronicles' interest in documenting tribal land claims even when the physical locations were no longer clearly identifiable in the post-exilic period. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Token | es: y-Tojen | fr: [וְתֹכֶן] | de: [וְתכן] 1Chr 4:32

תָּכְנִית H8508 N-fs (2×)

measurement, proportion, perfection (exact dimensions or pattern)

This noun appears in Ezekiel 43:10, referring to the pattern or measurements of the temple that Israel should study and be ashamed of their sins, and in 28:12, in the obscure phrase translated either 'seal of perfection' or 'sealing up measure'—describing the king of Tyre's original state. The word suggests precise proportion, completeness of measurement, or perfection of design. The root relates to measurement and establishment. In both passages, the emphasis falls on exactitude, completeness, or perfect proportion—whether of architectural design or of a created being's original perfection.

(2×) The two Ezekiel passages use the noun differently: 43:10 speaks of the temple's pattern/measurements that should inspire Israel to repentance, while 28:12 uses it in a contested phrase about the king of Tyre 'sealing up measure/perfection.' Spanish offers 'diseño' (design) and 'perfección,' French 'mesure,' showing interpreters recognize both architectural (precise measurement) and qualitative (perfection) senses. The semantic range spans from exact dimensions to complete perfection. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11702 WITH 8 SENSES

en: pattern, the-pattern | es: el-diseño, perfección | fr: mesure | de: [תכנית] Ezek 28:12; Ezek 43:10

תַּכְרִיךְ H8509 Conj-w / N-msc (1×) robe, garment (with conjunction; a fine outer garment, specifically of linen and purple)

This noun denotes a robe or outer garment, appearing in Esther 8:15 as part of Mordecai's royal attire. The context specifies it is made of fine linen and purple, materials associated with royalty and high status in the Persian court. The term itself is rare, appearing only here, and suggests a wrapped or wound garment (if the root meaning 'to wind' is relevant). This is palace clothing marking elevation to honor, part of the visual transformation that signals Mordecai's reversal of fortune.

(1×) In Esther 8:15, this describes the luxurious robe Mordecai wears as he leaves the king's presence in honor, made of fine linen and purple. The garment is part of a complete royal outfit that publicly displays his new status. Cross-linguistic evidence shows 'robe' or 'mantle,' recognizing this as a prestigious outer garment, the kind of clothing that would signal status to all who saw him in Susa's streets. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-robe-of | es: y-manto-de | fr: [וְתַכְרִיךְ] | de: [וְתכריך] Esth 8:15

תֵּל H8510 N-msc / 3mp (5×)

mound, ruin-heap; an artificial hill formed by accumulated rubble of destroyed or ancient cities

A tel is the characteristic mound formed when ancient Near Eastern cities were destroyed and rebuilt repeatedly on the same site, each layer compressing into an elevated hill. When Joshua burned Ai, it became 'a tel forever' (Josh 8:28) — a permanent ruin-heap. Deuteronomy 13:16 prescribes the same fate for an idolatrous city. Jeremiah uses the term both for desolation (49:2, Rabbah becoming a 'mound of ruin') and for restoration (30:18, a city rebuilt 'on its mound'), showing the word's archaeological concreteness.

(5×) A ruin-mound, the heap of rubble left after a city's destruction, implying permanent desolation. Joshua 8:28 and Deuteronomy 13:16 pair it with 'forever' (עוֹלָם) to stress irreversibility. Jeremiah 49:2 adds 'desolation' (שְׁמָמָה). English 'heap' and Spanish 'montón' consistently render this destructive sense. French leaves the Hebrew untranslated in some occurrences, reflecting the technical archaeological flavor of the term. HEAPS AND MOUNDS

en: a-heap-, a-mound, a-mound-of | es: montón, montón-de, para-montón-de | fr: [לתל], [תלה], leur-mound | de: [לתל], [תלה], ein-Haufen- Deut 13:16; Josh 8:28; Josh 11:13; Jer 30:18; Jer 49:2

תָּלָא H8511 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (2×)

hang, be hung up (suspended in uncertainty or physically hanging)

This verb is a variant form of the more common 'hang' verb, appearing only twice. In Deuteronomy 28:66, Moses warns that disobedient Israel's 'life shall hang in doubt before you'—meaning suspended in uncertainty, each moment precarious. In Hosea 11:7, the text is difficult but seems to say 'my people are hung up to backsliding'—bent toward or swung toward turning away from God (though many scholars suspect textual corruption here). The image in both cases involves suspension—either of life in precarious uncertainty or of a people swaying toward apostasy.

(2×) The two occurrences show both literal hanging imagery (life hung up, suspended in uncertainty) and possibly metaphorical (people hung/attached to backsliding). Deuteronomy's usage is clear: covenant curses will leave life hanging precariously, never secure. Hosea's text is disputed, but maintains the image of something hung or suspended. Spanish uses 'colgando' (hanging), French 'être attaché' (to be attached/hung), all capturing the suspension imagery whether literal or metaphorical. HANGING SUSPENSION en: are-hung, hanging | es: colgados, colgando | fr: hanging, être-attaché | de: [תלואים], hanging Deut 28:66; Hos 11:7

תֵּל אָבִיב H8512 N-proper-fs (2×)

Tel-abib (settlement in Babylonia on Chebar canal, Ezekiel's exile location)

Tel-abib was a settlement in Babylonia where Jewish exiles lived, located on the Chebar canal. Ezekiel 3:15 records: 'I came to the exiles at Tel-abib who were dwelling by the Chebar canal, and I sat where they sat and remained there seven days, overwhelmed among them.' The name means 'mound of the flood/grain' or possibly 'mound of ruins'—a typical Mesopotamian tell or settlement mound. This was Ezekiel's base, where he lived among his fellow exiles and received his prophetic visions. The modern Israeli city of Tel Aviv takes its name from this ancient settlement.

(2×) The dual occurrence in Ezekiel 3:15 likely reflects the verse's construction naming both the location ('Tel-abib') and its qualifier ('Abib'). Translations consistently transliterate: Spanish 'Tel Aviv,' French 'Tel-Abib.' The geographical specificity—'on the Chebar canal among the exiles'—establishes this as a concrete historical location in 6th-century Babylonia, a displaced Judean community where Ezekiel ministered. The name combines Akkadian 'tel' (mound) with a Semitic second element. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Abib, Tel | es: Aviv, Tel | fr: Tél-Abib | de: [אביב], [תל] Ezek 3:15

תְּלָאָה H8513 Art / N-fs (4×)

weariness, hardship, distress; exhaustion from oppression or adversity

This noun captures the grinding toll of prolonged suffering—the hardships Israel endured in Egyptian bondage (Num 20:14), the trials of wilderness wandering (Exod 18:8), and the weight of Babylonian oppression (Neh 9:32). Lamentations 3:5 uses it to describe siege conditions with extraordinary intensity. The related form מַתְלָאָה appears in Malachi 1:13 for wearisome religious duty. Multilingual evidence shows translations emphasizing both physical exhaustion ('fatiga') and situational difficulty ('hardship').

(4×) Refers to the cumulative burden of sustained affliction—not momentary pain but the draining experience of prolonged distress. The Spanish distinction between 'dificultad' (difficulty) and 'fatiga' (weariness) captures the word's dual aspect: both the external circumstances and their internal toll. Moses recounts Israel's hardships to Jethro (Exod 18:8), and Nehemiah confesses the great troubles under foreign kings (Neh 9:32), using this term for multi-generational suffering. LABOR AND TOIL

en: the-hardship, with-hardship | es: la-dificultad, la-fatiga, y-fatiga | fr: [ההלאה], [וחלאה], le-hardship | de: [ההלאה], [וחלאה], der-hardship Exod 18:8; Num 20:14; Neh 9:32; Lam 3:5

תַּלְאֻבָה H8514 N-fp (1×)

drought, extreme dryness (intensive plural emphasizing severity of arid conditions)

This noun describes extreme drought, appearing in Hosea 13:5 to characterize the wilderness where God knew Israel. The plural form is intensive, emphasizing the severity and comprehensiveness of the drought conditions. It evokes the parched, waterless wilderness of Israel's desert wanderings, where survival depended entirely on divine provision. The term captures not just absence of water but the harsh, burning dryness that makes the desert deadly, underscoring God's intimate knowledge of Israel in their most vulnerable condition.

(1×) In Hosea 13:5, this describes the intensely arid wilderness conditions where God shepherded Israel during the exodus wanderings. The plural intensifies the meaning—extreme, deadly drought. Spanish 'sequías' and the domain assignment to physical states confirm this is environmental vocabulary, painting the desert as a place of severe dryness that tested Israel and required divine sustenance. DRYNESS AND DROUGHT

en: drought | es: sequías | fr: Taalpha | de: [תלאבות] Hos 13:5

תִּלַאשַׁר H8515 Prep-b / N-proper-ms (2×)

Telassar (Mesopotamian city conquered by Assyria)

Telassar appears in Assyrian boasts recorded in 2 Kings 19:12 and Isaiah 37:12: the Assyrian Rabshakeh taunts Jerusalem by listing cities their gods failed to save, including Telassar, where 'the people of Eden' lived. The name likely corresponds to Til-ashuri in Assyrian inscriptions from Esarhaddon's reign. It was probably located in Mesopotamia, possibly near Edessa. The site's exact identification remains uncertain, but the biblical texts cite it as evidence of Assyrian imperial dominance—a city whose gods proved powerless, warning Jerusalem not to trust in theirs.

(2×) Both occurrences cite Telassar in identical propaganda speeches by Assyrian officials threatening Jerusalem. The spelling varies slightly (Telassar/Telashar), reflecting variant Hebrew traditions. Spanish shows this: 'Telasar/Telasar?' French and German transliterate consistently. The prepositional 'in Telassar' places it geographically as a conquered city, part of the rhetorical list proving (from the Assyrian perspective) that no god can withstand Assyrian power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-Telassar | es: en-Telasar, en-Telasar? | fr: [בתלשר], dans-Telassar | de: [בתלשר], in-Telassar 2Kgs 19:12; Isa 37:12

תַּלְבֻּשֶׁת H8516 N-fs (1×)

clothing, raiment, garment (noun for apparel, used metaphorically for God's armor of vengeance)

This noun denotes raiment or clothing, appearing only in Isaiah 59:17 in a striking metaphor. The prophet describes God putting on 'garments of vengeance as raiment,' clothing himself for battle on Israel's behalf. The image draws on ancient Near Eastern warrior iconography, where deities and kings don armor for combat. Here God's 'clothing' includes righteousness as breastplate and salvation as helmet, creating a full suit of divine armor. The term emphasizes the completeness of God's preparation for judgment and deliverance.

(1×) In Isaiah 59:17, this metaphorical garment is part of God's battle dress as divine warrior. He clothes himself in vengeance as one would put on raiment, preparing to act on behalf of his oppressed people. The image influenced later texts (including Ephesians 6's armor of God), establishing a tradition of spiritual armor imagery. The cross-linguistic evidence shows 'clothing' or 'vestment,' recognizing the metaphor's power. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: as-clothing | es: vestidura | fr: [תלבשת] | de: [תלבשת] Isa 59:17

תְּלַג H8517 Prep-k / N-ms (1×)

snow (Aramaic noun, Biblical Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew sheleg)

The Aramaic word for snow, cognate with Hebrew sheleg and Syriac equivalents. It appears in Daniel 7:9 in the throne vision, where the Ancient of Days' clothing is described as white 'like snow.' This is standard Biblical Aramaic vocabulary for the frozen precipitation, used here symbolically to convey divine purity, brilliance, and transcendent glory. The whiteness of snow serves as the ultimate comparison for radiant purity in biblical imagery.

(1×) In Daniel 7:9, this provides the simile for the Ancient of Days' garments—white 'like snow.' The image conveys absolute purity and dazzling brightness, the kind of radiant whiteness that would blind human eyes. Snow's whiteness functioned in ancient imagery much as it does now, as the standard for ultimate purity and brilliance, making it fitting for describing divine appearance. SNOW PRECIPITATION en: like-snow | es: como-nieve | fr: neige | de: [כתלג] Dan 7:9

תָּלָה H8518 V-Qal-Perf-1cp (29×)

To hang, suspend; used of execution by hanging, public display of corpses, and suspending objects.

Talah is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for hanging, and its usage carries a weight far beyond the physical act. While it can describe the neutral suspension of an object — shields hung on a tower wall (Song 4:4), or God 'hanging the earth upon nothing' (Job 26:7) — its dominant register is grim: bodies impaled or gibbeted after execution, from Pharaoh's chief baker (Gen 40:19-22) to the sons of Saul (2 Sam 21:12) to Haman on his own gallows (Esth 7:9-10). The theological climax comes in Deuteronomy 21:23, 'a hanged man is cursed by God,' a verse that reverberates into Paul's theology of the cross (Gal 3:13). Spanish colgar and German haengen both cover the full range, but Korean and Swahili use distinct vocabulary for execution-hanging versus object-suspension, exposing the real semantic divide.

1. hang or suspend (active Qal) (20×) The dominant active Qal sense: to hang or suspend someone or something, especially in contexts of execution or public display of corpses. Pharaoh hangs the chief baker (Gen 40:22); Joshua hangs the king of Ai (Josh 8:29); Esther requests that Haman's sons be hanged (Esth 9:13-14). The command form appears in Deuteronomy 21:22 — 'you shall hang him on a tree.' Spanish colgar and French pendre consistently select judicial-execution vocabulary here. Twenty occurrences spanning Genesis through Esther, making this by far the word's primary usage. HANG EXECUTE SUSPEND

en: [k], and-hang, and-hanged-them | es: (los-colgaron), Colgadlo, Y-colgaron | fr: [k], [וחלו], [לתלות] | de: [k], [וחלו], [לתלות] Gen 40:19; Gen 40:22; Gen 41:13; Deut 21:22; Josh 8:29

2. hung, in state of suspension (passive participle) (4×) The Qal passive participle describing the state of being hung or suspended — a person or object already in suspension. Deuteronomy 21:23 delivers the theologically charged declaration 'he who is hung is a curse of God,' which Paul later applies to Christ's crucifixion. In Song of Solomon 4:4 a thousand shields 'hang' on the tower of David, and in 2 Samuel 18:10 Absalom is seen 'hanging' in the oak tree. The shift from active execution to resultant state is cross-linguistically marked: Korean and Swahili both use stative constructions for this participial form. Four occurrences, each semantically distinct from the act of hanging itself. HANGING SUSPENSION

en: hanging, hung, is-hanged | es: colgado, colgados, cuelgan | fr: est-hanged, hanging, y-sont-suspendus, | de: haengte, hanging, ist-haengte Deut 21:23; Josh 10:26; 2Sam 18:10; Song 4:4

3. hang up (intensive Piel) (2×) The intensive Piel stem: to hang up or affix by hanging with emphasis on completeness or deliberateness. In Ezekiel 27:10-11, warriors hang their shields and helmets on Tyre's walls as ornamental display — a military-decorative context quite different from judicial execution. The Piel intensification suggests careful, purposeful placement. Only two occurrences, both in Ezekiel's lament over Tyre, confirming this as a specialized martial-display usage. HANG EXECUTE SUSPEND

en: they-hung, they-hung- | es: colgaron | fr: [תלן] | de: [תלן] Ezek 27:10; Ezek 27:11

4. be hanged (Nifal passive) (2×) The Nifal passive: to be hanged, describing the subject as undergoing execution by hanging. Bigthana and Teresh 'were hanged' after their assassination plot was uncovered (Esth 2:23); the princes of Judah 'were hanged' by their hands in Lamentations 5:12. Spanish fueron colgados and French pendirent both employ passive voice to match the Hebrew morphology. Two occurrences, both describing completed judicial punishment suffered by the subject. HANG EXECUTE SUSPEND

en: and-were-hanged, were-hanged | es: fueron-colgados, y-fueron-colgados | fr: [נתלו], et-ils-pendirent | de: haengte, und-haengte Esth 2:23; Lam 5:12

5. one who hangs (active participle) (1×) The Qal active participle used as a divine epithet: 'the one who hangs' — a single magnificent occurrence in Job 26:7 where God is described as 'hanging the earth upon nothing' (toleh erets al-belimah). Here the violent and juridical associations of the verb vanish entirely, replaced by a cosmological portrait of divine creative power. Spanish colgando and Korean's present-participial form both capture the ongoing, sustaining character of God's act. A striking theological repurposing of a word otherwise dominated by death. HANGING SUSPENSION

en: hanging | es: colgando | fr: suspendre | de: haengte Job 26:7

תְּלֻנָּה H8519 N-fpc (9×)

Murmuring, complaint; grumbling protest raised against authority, especially Israel's complaints against God in the wilderness.

A feminine noun appearing exclusively in the Priestly source (P), always describing Israel's grumbling against the LORD during the wilderness wanderings. The term carries a collective, almost corporate weight — these are not private grievances but communal uprisings of discontent. In Exodus 16 the word clusters densely as Israel complains about food, and in Numbers 14 and 17 it surfaces during the rebellion narratives. The noun derives from the verbal root לון/לין (to murmur), and its plural construct forms suggest repeated waves of complaint rather than a single outburst.

1. murmuring, complaint (noun) (8×) The substantive noun denoting murmurings, grumblings, or formal complaints lodged against God or his appointed leaders. All eight nominal occurrences center on Israel's wilderness rebellion — in Exod 16:7-12, God hears the 'complaints' about manna and quail, while Num 14:27 and 17:20-25 deploy the term in connection with Korah's rebellion and its aftermath. Spanish 'murmuraciones' and 'quejas' both appear, reflecting the dual coloring of grumbling and formal grievance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: complaints-of, murmurings-of, their-murmurings | es: las-murmuraciones-de, murmuraciones-de-, quejas-de | fr: complaints-de, leur-murmurings, murmurings-de | de: complaints-von, dein-murmurings, ihr-murmurings Exod 16:7; Exod 16:8; Exod 16:9; Exod 16:12

2. murmuring (Hifil participle, verbal) (1×) The Hifil participial form functioning verbally, meaning 'those who are murmuring' or 'you who murmur.' In Exod 16:8 this form appears alongside the noun, creating a pointed rhetorical echo — 'your murmurings which you are murmuring against the LORD.' Spanish 'murmuráis' (second person plural present) captures the active verbal force that distinguishes this from the static noun. MURMUR GRUMBLE COMPLAIN

en: murmuring | es: murmuráis | fr: murmuring | de: murmuring Exod 16:8

תֶּלַח H8520 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Telah (with conjunction), personal name: an ancestor in the genealogy of Ephraim (1 Chronicles 7:25)

A personal name appearing in the genealogical records of Ephraim in 1 Chronicles 7:25. The name's etymology is uncertain, and it appears nowhere else in biblical texts. Like many names in Chronicles' genealogies, it serves to maintain the tribal lineage records, connecting post-exilic Ephraimites to their ancestral heritage. The Septuagint's transliteration variants reflect ancient uncertainty about pronunciation. This is one of many figures whose significance lies entirely in preserving genealogical continuity.

(1×) An Ephraimite ancestor preserved in Chronicles' genealogical framework, this name maintains the lineage connections within Joseph's descendants. The conjunction indicates it appears in a series of begettings, part of the genealogical chain that establishes tribal identity and inheritance claims for the post-exilic community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Telach | es: y-Télaj | fr: [ותלח] | de: [ותלח] 1Chr 7:25

תֵּל חַרְשָׁא H8521 N-proper-fs (2×)

Tel-harsha (Babylonian settlement; origin location for returning exiles)

Tel-harsha was a location in Babylonia from which some returning exiles came, though they couldn't prove their Israelite lineage (Ezra 2:59, Nehemiah 7:61). The name means 'mound of the craftsman' or 'mound of sorcery,' following typical Mesopotamian settlement naming with 'tel' (mound). The biblical texts group it with Tel-melah and Cherub as places where certain families lived during the exile. Those from Tel-harsha who returned included families whose genealogical records were lost or unclear, raising questions about their legitimacy as returned Israelites.

(2×) The parallel passages in Ezra and Nehemiah list Tel-harsha identically as an exile settlement, always grouped with Tel-melah and Cherub. The transliterations vary: Spanish 'Tel-Harsa/Tel-Jarsá,' French and German preserve transliterations. The consistent element is recognition of a Babylonian geographical location, a tell or settlement mound where some Judean exiles lived. The inability of returnees from there to prove their lineage adds social complexity to the name's biblical significance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Tel-Charsha, Tel-Harsha | es: Tel-Harsa, Tel-Jarsá | fr: [תל חרשא] | de: [תל חרשא] Ezra 2:59; Neh 7:61

תְּלִי H8522 N-msc / 2ms (1×)

quiver (with suffix 'your'; container for arrows, hung from shoulder or belt)

This noun denotes the quiver, the container that holds arrows, appearing in Genesis 27:3 when Isaac instructs Esau to take his weapons for hunting. The quiver hangs from the shoulder or belt, keeping arrows accessible for rapid shooting. Archaeological finds throughout the ancient Near East show quivers as standard hunting and military equipment. The pairing of quiver and bow represents the complete archery kit, essential for both warfare and hunting in the ancient world.

(1×) In Genesis 27:3, Isaac tells Esau to take 'your quiver and your bow,' the equipment needed for the hunting expedition that would lead to the fateful blessing scene. The term specifically denotes the arrow container, distinguishing it from the bow itself. Cross-linguistic evidence consistently shows 'quiver' or 'arrow holder,' confirming the technical vocabulary for this piece of archer's equipment. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: quiver-your | es: tu-aljaba | fr: quiver-ton | de: deinen-Köcher Gen 27:3

H8523 Number-ofs (1×)

third (Aramaic ordinal number, Qere reading suggesting pronunciation correction)

The Aramaic ordinal number 'third,' appearing in Daniel 2:39 describing the third kingdom in Nebuchadnezzar's dream vision. This is standard Biblical Aramaic vocabulary for the third in a sequence. The Masoretic tradition includes a Qere note suggesting pronunciation guidance, reflecting scribal attention to proper reading. The number is crucial to Daniel's schema of successive kingdoms, each representing different empires in the prophet's interpretation of history.

(1×) In Daniel 2:39, this ordinal identifies the third kingdom in the sequence of empires represented by the statue's components. After Babylon (gold) and the second kingdom (silver), this bronze kingdom represents the next phase of imperial history. The multilingual evidence shows standard ordinal number vocabulary, with the Qere/Ketiv variants reflecting pronunciation traditions. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER) en: (qere:third) | es: (tercero) | fr: troisième | de: [תליתאה] Dan 2:39

תְּלִתָּי H8523a Conj-w / Adj-ms (1×)
third (ruler), triumvir (Aramaic adjective with conjunction; denoting third-in-command or member of ruling triad)
An Aramaic term denoting a 'third' ruler or triumvir, appearing in Daniel 5:7 as part of the honor offered to whoever can interpret the handwriting on the wall. This is denominal from the ordinal 'third,' suggesting a position of third-in-command or membership in a ruling triad. The term may reflect actual Persian administrative structure, where power was shared among a small group of elite officials. It represents significant honor—being elevated to the third-highest position in the empire.

(1×) In Daniel 5:7, this describes the political rank Belshazzar promises to whoever interprets the mysterious writing—they will become 'third' in the kingdom. This likely means third-in-command or member of a triumvirate, a position of substantial power just below the king and crown prince. The term reflects the hierarchical structure of ancient Near Eastern courts, where proximity to the throne determined political authority. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER) en: and-third | es: y-tercero | fr: et-troisième | de: [וּתְלָתַי] Dan 5:7

תְּלִיתַי H8523b Number-ofs (1×)
third (Aramaic ordinal, Ketiv reading in Daniel 2:39, textual variant of H8523)
The Ketiv (written) form of the Aramaic ordinal 'third' in Daniel 2:39, contrasting with the Qere (pronounced) form. This textual variant reflects different vocalization traditions for the same consonantal text, a common phenomenon in the Masoretic tradition. Both point to the same ordinal number identifying the third kingdom in the statue vision. Such Ketiv-Qere variants often preserve competing pronunciation traditions from different scribal schools.

(1×) The written form (Ketiv) of 'third' in Daniel 2:39's kingdom sequence, this ordinal identifies the bronze kingdom that follows Babylon and the second empire. The existence of both Ketiv and Qere forms shows how the Masoretes preserved multiple textual traditions, allowing readers to know both how the text was written and how it should be pronounced according to tradition. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER) en: [ketiv:third] | es: [tercero] | fr: troisième | de: [תליתיא] Dan 2:39

תָּלוּל H8524 Conj-w / Adj-ms (1×)
lofty, exalted, high (adjective with conjunction, describing elevation or height)
An adjective denoting loftiness or height, appearing in Ezekiel 17:22 describing the mountain where God will plant a cedar sprig. The passage piles up terms for elevation: 'high and lofty mountain,' emphasizing the mountain's prominence. This is Mount Zion, presented in the prophetic vision as the highest and most exalted place where God establishes his kingdom. The term conveys both physical elevation and metaphorical exaltation—the mountain is both tall and supremely important.

(1×) In Ezekiel 17:22, this intensifies the description of the mountain where God will plant the messianic cedar—it is both 'high' (gaboah) and 'lofty' (talul), doubly emphasizing its elevation. The multilingual evidence shows translations opting for 'lofty,' 'elevated,' or 'high,' though the domain assignment to 'Names' appears questionable—this is better understood as a descriptive adjective for the mountain's height and significance. BETH-SHEMESH PLACE
en: and-lofty | es: y-elevado | fr: et-origine | de: [וּתְלוּל] Ezek 17:22

תֶּלֶם H8525 N-mpc / 3fs (5×)
furrow; a trench plowed in a field for sowing or irrigation
The telem is the individual furrow cut by a plow into the soil of a cultivated field. In ancient Palestine, plowing produced shallow furrows of eight to ten centimeters. Hosea uses 'furrows of the field' as a metonym for agricultural land itself (10:4; 12:11), while Job 31:38 personifies the land's furrows crying out against injustice. Psalm 65:10 celebrates God watering the earth and settling its furrows with rain — a vivid image of divine provision through ordinary agriculture.

(5×) A furrow plowed into a field, the basic unit of agricultural cultivation. All five occurrences relate to tilled land. Hosea 10:4 and 12:11 use the construct 'furrows of the field' as a concrete agricultural image. Job 31:38 personifies the furrows weeping, and Psalm 65:10 describes God settling the furrows with rain. English uniformly renders 'furrow(s),' Spanish uses 'surco(s),' and French 'sillon' — all preserving the concrete agricultural reference. Job 39:10 may reference the furrow in the context of yoking an animal to the plow. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: furrows-of, in-the-furrow, its-furrows | es: Sus-surcos, en-surco, los-surcos-de | fr: dans-בתלם, sa-תלמיה-elle, sillon | de: [בתלם], [תלמי], [תלמיה] Job 31:38; Job 39:10; Ps 65:10; Hos 10:4; Hos 12:11

תַּלְמַי H8526 N-proper-ms (6×)
Talmai; a proper name borne by an Anakite giant in Hebron and by the king of Geshur, David's father-in-law.
Talmai names two distinct biblical figures. The first is one of the three Anakite giants dwelling in Hebron whom Caleb's forces drove out during the conquest (Num 13:22; Josh 15:14; Judg 1:10). The second is the king of Geshur whose daughter Maacah became one of David's wives and the mother of Absalom (2 Sam 3:3; 13:37; 1 Chr 3:2). When Absalom fled after killing Amnon, he took refuge with his grandfather Talmai in Geshur. The Septuagint renders the name variously as Thommei, Thalmein, and Tholomei, reflecting uncertainty about the original vocalization.

Talmai (proper name) (6×) The proper name Talmai, designating two individuals: (a) an Anakite giant in Hebron encountered during the conquest (Num 13:22; Josh 15:14; Judg 1:10), and (b) the king of Geshur, father-in-law of David through his daughter Maacah, and grandfather of Absalom who sheltered Absalom after Amnon's murder (2 Sam 3:3; 13:37; 1 Chr 3:2). Spanish Talmai/Talmay, French Talmai, and German Talmai all transliterate uniformly. The LXX variants (Thommei, Tholomei, Thalmein) suggest the name's pronunciation was already uncertain in antiquity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Talmai, and-Talmai | es: Talmai, Talmay, y-Talmai | fr: Talmai, [תלמי], et-Talmai | de: Talmai, [תלמי], und-Talmai Num 13:22; Josh 15:14; Judg 1:10; 2Sam 3:3; 2Sam 13:37

תַּלְמִיד H8527 N-ms (1×)
student, scholar, disciple (late Hebrew noun denoting one who learns, especially in Levitical musical training)
A late Hebrew term for student or scholar, appearing in 1 Chronicles 25:8 in the context of Levitical musical training. The verse describes casting lots for service assignments 'teacher with student,' showing formal pedagogical relationships among temple musicians. The word is rare in Biblical Hebrew but common in later rabbinic literature where it becomes the standard term for 'disciple.' Here it indicates formal training relationships, with experienced musicians teaching apprentices the complex art of temple psalmody.

(1×) In 1 Chronicles 25:8, this denotes the student or apprentice musician learning from a master teacher (mevin). The lot-casting for temple service assignments pairs teachers with students, showing structured musical education among the Levites. This anticipates the word's later prominence in rabbinic Judaism, where talmid became the standard term for a rabbi's disciple. DISCIPLE LEARNER

en: student | es: aprendiz | fr: [תלמיד] | de: [תלמיד] 1Chr 25:8

תֵּל מֶלַח H8528 Prep / N-proper-fs (2×)

Tel-melah (Babylonian settlement; origin location for returning exiles)

Tel-melah, meaning 'mound of salt,' was another Babylonian settlement from which exiles returned to Judah (Ezra 2:59, Nehemiah 7:61). Like Tel-harsha, it housed Jewish exiles who later couldn't prove their Israelite descent. The name suggests either a location near salt deposits or salt-affected soil, common in parts of Mesopotamia. These returning families from Tel-melah faced suspicion about their genealogical credentials, highlighting the post-exilic community's concern with maintaining pure Israelite lineage. The place-name preserves memory of a specific exile community location.

(2×) Identical parallel passages in Ezra and Nehemiah list Tel-melah with Tel-harsha and Cherub as exile settlements. The prepositional 'from Tel-melah' indicates origin point for the returning exiles. Spanish transliterates 'Tel-Mela,' French and German preserve transliterations. The consistent pairing with Tel-harsha suggests these were neighboring or related settlements in the Babylonian exile geography, both sending back families whose credentials were questioned. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-Tel-Melach, from-Tel-Melah | es: de-Tel-Mela | fr: [מתל מלח] | de: [מתל מלח] Ezra 2:59; Neh 7:61

תָּלַע H8529 V-Pual-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

clothed in scarlet, dressed in crimson (Pual participle, describing garments dyed with scarlet dye)

A Pual participle meaning 'clad in scarlet,' appearing in Nahum 2:3 describing Nineveh's warriors. This is a denominative verb from the noun for scarlet or crimson dye (derived from the tola'at worm used to produce red dye). The participle indicates a state of being dressed in scarlet-dyed clothing, likely military garments or shields covered in red leather. The parallel term 'reddened' (in Hebrew) reinforces the image of warriors arrayed in crimson, creating a vivid picture of military might and blood-colored pageantry.

(1×) In Nahum 2:3, this describes Nineveh's mighty men as 'clothed in scarlet,' warriors arrayed in crimson garments or bearing red-dyed shields. The image conveys both military splendor and blood imagery—the scarlet clothing anticipates the bloodshed to come in the city's destruction. Cross-linguistic evidence consistently shows 'scarlet' or 'crimson,' recognizing the color term that emphasizes the visual impact of the massed army. RED AND SCARLET

en: are-clothed-in-scarlet | es: vestidos-de-escarlata | fr: pourpre | de: [מתלעים] Nah 2:3

תַּלְפִּיוֹת H8530 Prep-l / N-fp (1×)

for the armory, for weapons storage (uncertain noun, possibly meaning 'rows' or 'armory'; textual difficulties)

This difficult word appears in Song of Songs 4:4, comparing the beloved's neck to David's tower 'built for the armory.' The meaning is uncertain—possibilities include 'weapons storage,' 'rows' (of shields), or 'trophies.' The context mentions a thousand shields hung on the tower, suggesting military imagery. Various conjectures have been proposed, including reading 'shields' instead. The metaphor praises the beloved's graceful, strong neck by comparing it to a tower, but the exact nuance of this term remains elusive. It likely relates to the tower's military function or adornment.

(1×) In Song of Songs 4:4, this describes the function or appearance of David's tower to which the beloved's neck is compared. Whether 'armory,' 'rows of shields,' or 'trophies,' the term evokes military strength and impressive display. The multilingual glosses show translators grappling with the difficulty: 'armory,' 'rows,' recognizing that the context of shields hanging on the tower suggests military significance even if the precise meaning remains uncertain. BOW KNEEL CROUCH

en: for-armory | es: para-armería | fr: en-rangées; | de: [לתלפיות] Song 4:4

תְּלַת H8531 Conj-w / Adj-ms (2×)

third (Aramaic: one-third or third rank/position)

This Aramaic word for 'third' or 'a third part' appears in Daniel 5:16 and 29, where King Belshazzar promises Daniel that if he can interpret the mysterious writing, he will be clothed in purple and gold and rule 'as third' in the kingdom. The term is emphatic (taleta), meaning 'the third' or 'as one of three,' likely indicating third-highest ruler or one-third authority. Some interpreters suggest it means 'triumvir,' sharing rule as one of three. The promise positions Daniel at an extraordinary level of power in the Babylonian court, second only to the king himself and perhaps the queen mother.

(2×) Both occurrences promise Daniel the same reward: ruling 'as third' or 'in third position' in the kingdom after interpreting the handwriting. Spanish uses 'tercero' (third), French 'un tiers' (a third/one-third), German provides transliterations. The Aramaic construction with emphatic state suggests a specific, defined position —not merely 'third' in sequence but 'the third' in authority. This accords with Belshazzar himself ruling as co-regent, making Daniel third in the hierarchy. THIRD (ORDINAL NUMBER)

en: and-third, third | es: tercero, y-tercero | fr: et-un-tiers, un-tiers | de: [ותלתא], [תלתא] Dan 5:16; Dan 5:29

תְּלָת H8532 Conj-w / Number-ms (11×)

Three (Aramaic) — the cardinal numeral 'three,' used exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra

The Aramaic numeral תְּלָתָא / תְּלָת (telat/telata) is the cardinal number 'three,' appearing eleven times in the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra. It functions identically to Hebrew שָׁלֹשׁ but belongs to the Imperial Aramaic register of these books. Its occurrences include the three rows of stone in Cyrus's temple decree (Ezra 6:4), the three companions cast into the fiery furnace (Dan 3:23-24), Daniel's three-week fast (Dan 10:2-3), and the three ribs in the bear's mouth (Dan 7:5). Spanish 'tres,' Arabic 'ثلاث,' Hindi 'तीन,' Korean '셋,' Swahili 'tatu' – all uniformly render the simple numeral.

three (Aramaic numeral) (11×) The Aramaic cardinal numeral 'three,' covering both masculine and feminine forms and pronominal constructions ('the three of them'). Key occurrences include the building specifications of the rebuilt Temple (Ezra 6:4), the three young men in Nebuchadnezzar's furnace (Dan 3:23-24), Daniel's three weeks of mourning (Dan 10:2-3), the three ribs in the beast's mouth (Dan 7:5), and the three presidents over the satraps (Dan 6:3). Grammatical inflections (cardinal, construct with suffix) do not alter the unitary semantic value. NUMBER THREE en: and-three, three, three-of-them | es: los-tres, tres, y-tres | fr: [תלתא], [תלתה], et-trois | de: [תלתא], [תלתה], drei Ezra 6:4; Ezra 6:15; Dan 3:23; Dan 3:24; Dan 6:2

תְּלָתִין H8533 Number-cp (2×)

thirty (Aramaic numeral: 30 days)

This Aramaic word for 'thirty' appears in Daniel 6:7 and 12, specifying the duration of the decree that prohibited prayer to anyone except King Darius: 'thirty days.' The officials manipulate Darius into signing a law that whoever prays to any god or man except the king for thirty days shall be thrown into the lions' den. Daniel violates this decree by continuing his regular prayer practice, leading to his famous night with the lions. The specific thirty-day period creates a temporary religious emergency designed to trap Daniel while appearing to honor the king.

(2×) Both verses use the phrase 'thirty days' to specify the decree's time limit. The Aramaic numeral 'telatin' combines with 'days' (yomin) to create a precise temporal boundary. Spanish translates 'treinta,' French 'trois' (appears incomplete, likely 'trente'), German provides transliteration. The number's specificity—not a month, not forever, but exactly thirty days—suggests a calculated trap: long enough to catch Daniel but short enough to seem reasonable to the king. NUMBER THIRTY

en: thirty | es: treinta | fr: trois | de: [תלתין] Dan 6:7; Dan 6:12

תַּלְתַּלִּים H8534 N-mp (1×)

wavy, hanging locks (plural noun describing the hair's appearance, possibly like palm fronds or date clusters)

This rare word appears in Song of Songs 5:11 describing the beloved's hair. The exact meaning is debated: 'wavy,' 'hanging in clusters,' 'like palm branches,' or 'like date palm sheaths.' The context emphasizes the beauty and dark color of his locks, 'black as a raven.' Later Hebrew uses the term for heaps or high places, but here the imagery is clearly about hair texture or appearance. Arabic poetry often compares hair to palm features, which may support the palm-related interpretations. The term conveys luxuriant, flowing hair.

(1×) In Song of Songs 5:11, this describes the quality or appearance of the beloved's locks—wavy, curled, or hanging in clusters like palm fronds. The image emphasizes abundant, lustrous hair, part of the detailed physical description of the lover. Cross-linguistic evidence shows 'wavy,' 'curled,' or leaves the term untranslated, reflecting interpreters' uncertainty about the precise botanical or visual metaphor intended. FLESH AND BODY

en: wavy | es: ondulados | fr: ondulées, | de: [תלתלים] Song 5:11

תָּם H8535 Adj-mp (14×)

Complete, sound, morally blameless; of persons having integrity before God, or of a quiet, mild disposition

A rich adjective that spans physical wholeness, moral integrity, and gentle temperament. In Job 1:1 and 1:8, it is the headline word God uses to describe Job: 'tam veyashar,' blameless and upright. In Song of Songs 5:2 and 6:9, it becomes a term of intimate endearment, 'my perfect one,' where completeness takes on aesthetic and relational beauty. Its single use for Jacob in Genesis 25:27 reveals a quieter shade of meaning, a man of tents rather than fields, mild rather than restless, the mirror opposite of Esau the hunter.

1. blameless, upright, perfect (13×) Moral wholeness, blamelessness, and integrity before God. This is the dominant sense, covering thirteen of fourteen occurrences. Job is called 'ish tam' (Job 1:1, 1:8, 2:3), and Psalm 37:37 urges the reader to 'mark the blameless man.' In Song of Songs 5:2 and 6:9, the beloved is 'my perfect one' (tammati), a use that extends completeness from ethics into beauty. French 'integre' and Spanish 'integro' both capture the moral weight, while the Song of Songs passages shift to 'ma parfaite' and 'mi perfecta,' revealing how the same root flexes from virtue to loveliness. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: blameless, blameless-, blameless-one | es: Al-íntegro, al-íntegro, mi-perfecta | fr: achever, intègre, ma-parfaite! | de: [תמתי], der-blameless, untadelig Exod 26:24; Job 1:1; Job 1:8; Job 2:3; Job 8:20

2. quiet, mild, simple (1×) Quiet, mild, domestically inclined, describing a temperament rather than a moral judgment. Used only of Jacob in Genesis 25:27, where 'ish tam' contrasts with Esau the hunter. English renders it 'quiet' or 'plain,' Spanish 'sencillo' (simple, unassuming), and French 'tranquille.' Some scholars treat this as the same root sense of 'complete' applied to character, but the narrative context clearly foregrounds disposition over virtue: Jacob stays among the tents while Esau roams the field. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: quiet | es: sencillo | fr: tranquille | de: untadelig Gen 25:27

תַּמָּה H8536 Adv (4×)

there (Aramaic adverb)

The Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew שָׁם, appearing exclusively in Ezra's account of Persian administrative correspondence about the Jerusalem temple. It functions as a simple locative adverb, pointing to archive locations in Babylon and Ecbatana where royal decrees were stored (Ezra 5:17, 6:1, 12). The phrase מִן־תַּמָּה means 'from there' (6:6). This reflects Imperial Aramaic as the bureaucratic lingua franca of the Persian Empire.

(4×) A straightforward deictic adverb marking location, used in the administrative prose of Ezra to reference specific archival sites and treasury locations in the Persian realm. The consistent translation across all languages (Spanish 'allí,' French 'là,' English 'there') confirms its function as an unmarked spatial deictic with no special nuance beyond simple location. THERE (SPATIAL DEICTIC)

en: there | es: allí | fr: là | de: [תמה] Ezra 5:17; Ezra 6:1; Ezra 6:6; Ezra 6:12

תֹּם H8537 Prep-b (24×)

Completeness, integrity, innocence; moral wholeness of heart, blameless conduct, unwitting simplicity, or temporal fullness and completion.

A noun rooted in the idea of wholeness and completeness, most often expressing moral integrity. The classic phrase 'in integrity of heart' (betom levav) appears in Genesis 20:5-6 where Abimelech defends himself before God, and in 1 Kings 9:4 where God charges Solomon to walk as David did. Beyond ethics, it can denote innocence without guile, as when David's supporters follow him 'in their innocence' not knowing his plans (2 Sam 15:11). Spanish 'integridad' and German 'Lauterkeit' both capture the sense of an undivided, purehearted character. Occasionally the word returns to its quantitative root meaning 'fullness' or 'completion' (Job 21:23; Lev 25:29).

1. integrity, moral uprightness (16×) Moral wholeness and blamelessness of character, the dominant sense across 16 occurrences. The key phrase 'betom levavi' (in integrity of my heart) appears in Abimelech's defense (Gen 20:5-6) and God's charge to Solomon (1 Kgs 9:4). Proverbs repeatedly links walking 'in integrity' (betom) with security and righteousness (Prov 10:9; 19:1; 20:7; 28:6). Spanish 'integridad' and German 'Lauterkeit' emphasize the moral purity dimension, while French 'intégrité' shares the same Latin root as the English. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-according-to-my-integrity, and-the-integrity-of, in-his-integrity | es: conforme-a-integridad-de, en-integridad, en-integridad-de | fr: comme-intégrité, dans-integrity-de, dans-integrity-de- | de: [בתמו], in-der-Lauterkeit-, in-integrity-von- Gen 20:5; Gen 20:6; 1Kgs 9:4; Job 4:6; Ps 7:8

2. innocence, without guile (3×) Innocence or naivete, acting without malicious intent or hidden knowledge. The men who followed Absalom went 'in their innocence' (betummam), not knowing his treasonous plans (2 Sam 15:11). A soldier drew his bow 'in his innocence' (letummo), without deliberate aim, yet struck King Ahab (1 Kgs 22:34; 2 Chr 18:33). French and Spanish both render this 'dans leur innocence / en su inocencia,' distinguishing it from the moral virtue sense. ERROR INADVERTENT SIN

en: in-his-innocence, in-their-innocence | es: en-inocencia-de-ellos, en-su-inocencia | fr: [לתמו], dans-leur-innocence, dans-son-innocence | de: [לתמו], in-ihr-innocence, in-sein-innocence 2Sam 15:11; 1Kgs 22:34; 2Chr 18:33

3. completeness, fullness (2×) Quantitative completeness or fullness, returning to the word's etymological root in tamam (to be complete). Job 21:23 describes one who dies 'in his very completeness,' meaning at the height of prosperity, while Isaiah 47:9 warns that calamities will come 'in their fullness.' Spanish 'plenitud' and the construct 'su integridad' both attempt to capture this non-moral, quantitative wholeness. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: his-completeness, in-their-fullness | es: en-su-plenitud, su-integridad, | fr: [כתמם], son-intégrité-lui | de: [כתמם], [תמו] Job 21:23; Isa 47:9

4. blameless person (substantival) (2×) Used substantivally to denote a blameless or upright person, functioning as a noun of quality standing for the person who embodies it. Proverbs 10:29 says the way of the LORD is a stronghold 'for the blameless' (lattom), and Proverbs 13:6 says righteousness guards 'the one of blameless way' (tam-darekh). German 'untadelig' (blameless, irreproachable) captures the personal, substantival quality. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: for-the-blameless, the-blameless-of | es: integridad-de, para-el-íntegro | fr: intégrité | de: untadelig, zu-untadelig Prov 10:29; Prov 13:6

5. completion, ending (1×) Temporal completion or ending, a rare usage where the noun functions as a verbal infinitive meaning 'the completing/finishing of.' Leviticus 25:29 speaks of the redemption period lasting until 'the completion of' a full year. Spanish 'el fin de' and French 'complétion de' render this temporal sense of a period running to its appointed end. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: completion-of | es: el-fin-de | fr: completion-de | de: completion-von Lev 25:29

תֻּמָּה H8538 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3ms (5×)

integrity, moral wholeness; uprightness of character maintained before God

A late Hebrew noun denoting moral integrity as a settled quality of character rather than a single act. The word is virtually a theological term in the book of Job, where it becomes the central issue of the prologue: God himself testifies that Job 'holds fast to his integrity' (2:3), and Satan's strategy is to make Job abandon it. Job's wife urges him to 'curse God and die,' asking whether he still clings to his integrity (2:9). Job insists he will never let go of it (27:5) and invites God to weigh him in honest scales to confirm it (31:6). Proverbs 11:3 extends the concept beyond Job, teaching that 'the integrity of the upright guides them.'

(5×) Moral integrity or wholeness of character, especially as maintained under trial. Concentrated in the Job prologue and dialogues: God affirms Job's integrity (2:3), his wife challenges it (2:9), and Job fiercely defends it (27:5; 31:6). English consistently renders 'integrity,' Spanish 'integridad,' and French 'intégrité' — a rare convergence across translations that underscores the word's stable semantic core. Proverbs 11:3 generalizes the concept to the upright person whose integrity serves as a moral guide through life. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: my-integrity, the-integrity-of, to-his-integrity | es: en-su-integridad, en-tu-integridad, integridad-de | fr: dans-son-intégrité-lui, dans-ton-intégrité-toi, intégrité | de: [בתמתו], [בתמתך], [תמת] Job 2:3; Job 2:9; Job 27:5; Job 31:6; Prov 11:3

תָּמַהּ H8539 V-Qal-Imp-mp (9×)

To be astounded, dumbfounded; to stare in amazement or stupefaction at something overwhelming.

Describes the experience of being struck speechless with astonishment, whether from divine judgment, terrifying events, or sheer wonder. In Genesis 43:33, Joseph's brothers look at one another in stunned amazement when seated in birth order by a stranger. Isaiah 29:9 uses the imperative form in biting irony — 'Be astounded! Be blind!' — challenging complacent hearers. The Habakkuk 1:5 doubled form (Qal + Hitpael) intensifies the shock: 'Marvel greatly!' Spanish 'asombraos' and German 'staunt' both capture this visceral, jaw-dropping quality.

be astounded, marvel, wonder (9×) To be astounded, dumbfounded, or struck with overwhelming amazement — a reaction so intense it can leave one speechless or frozen. In Gen 43:33 the brothers stare at each other in disbelief; in Ps 48:5 enemy kings see Zion and are stunned into retreat; in Job 26:11 the very pillars of heaven 'are astounded' at God's rebuke. The Hitpael in Hab 1:5 intensifies the Qal imperative, yielding 'astonish yourselves and be astounded.' The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'asombrarse,' French 's'étonner') uniformly confirms a single sense of stupefied wonder rather than mild surprise. AMAZEMENT AND ASTONISHMENT

en: and-are-astounded, and-be-astounded, and-be-stunned | es: asombraos, se-asombraron, se-asombrarán | fr: [ותמהו], [יתמהו], et-marveled | de: [והתמהו], [ויתמהו], [ותמהו] Gen 43:33; Job 26:11; Ps 48:5; Eccl 5:8; Isa 13:8

תְּמַהּ H8540 Conj-w / N-mp (3×)

wonders, miracles (Aramaic, divine signs and marvels)

This Aramaic masculine plural noun means 'wonders' or 'miracles'—extraordinary acts that reveal divine power. It appears exclusively in Daniel's Aramaic sections within Nebuchadnezzar's and Darius's proclamations about God. Daniel 4:2-3 repeats the phrase 'signs and wonders' as Nebuchadnezzar declares 'how great are His signs, how mighty His wonders!' Daniel 6:27 in Darius's decree similarly praises the God who 'works signs and wonders in heaven and on earth.' The term is the Aramaic cognate of Hebrew mophet, emphasizing supernatural acts that reveal God's sovereignty and evoke awe. The contexts uniformly involve pagan kings acknowledging Israel's God after experiencing His power.

(3×) Divine wonders or miracles in royal proclamations. Daniel 4:2 and 4:3 use it in Nebuchadnezzar's decree: 'the signs and wonders that the Most High God has done for me'—specifically his humbling and restoration. Daniel 6:27 includes it in Darius's proclamation after Daniel's deliverance: God 'performs signs and wonders in heaven and earth.' The pairing with 'signs' (ath) is formulaic. The multilingual glosses ('maravillas,' 'wonders') confirm this denotes supernatural acts that demonstrate divine power and sovereignty, compelling even pagan rulers to acknowledge God's greatness. WONDERS AND PORTENTS en: and-His-wonders, and-the-wonders, and-wonders | es: y-maravillas, y-sus-maravillas | fr: [ותמהוהי], [ותמהיא], [ותמהין] | de: [ותמהוהי], [ותמהיא], [ותמהין] Dan 4:2; Dan 4:3; Dan 6:27

תַּמְהוֹן H8541 Prep-b (2×)

bewilderment, confusion, stupefaction (mental/psychological disorientation)

This noun denotes bewilderment, confusion, or mental stupefaction, appearing in Deuteronomy 28:28 as a covenant curse ('bewilderment of heart'—infatuation or mental confusion) and Zechariah 12:4 describing horses struck with confusion by God. In Deuteronomy, it's grouped with madness and blindness as psychological judgments on disobedient Israel. In Zechariah's apocalyptic vision, God strikes enemy horses with panic and bewilderment while protecting Judah. The term emphasizes disorientation, inability to think clearly, panic-induced confusion—a divinely-imposed psychological state that incapacitates.

(2×) The two contexts show God-inflicted bewilderment: on disobedient Israelites (Deuteronomy) and on enemy horses (Zechariah). Spanish offers 'turbación' (disturbance) and 'espanto' (fright/terror), French 'étonnement' (astonishment), capturing the range from confusion to panic. The prepositional phrases ('with bewilderment,' 'bewilderment of heart') show the noun functioning as instrument or description of a mental state. Both uses emphasize divine judgment producing disorientation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-with-confusion-of, with-bewilderment | es: con-espanto, y-con-turbación-de | fr: et-avec-confusion-de, étonnement | de: [בתמהון], und-mit-confusion-von Deut 28:28; Zech 12:4

תַּמּוּז H8542 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Tammuz (with article), divine name: Mesopotamian deity associated with death and fertility (Ezekiel 8:14)

The name of a Mesopotamian deity, appearing in Ezekiel 8:14 where women are seen weeping for Tammuz at the temple gate. This is Dumuzi in Sumerian, a god associated with vegetation, death, and fertility whose cult involved ritual mourning for his death. The Greeks identified him with Adonis. His worship spread throughout the ancient Near East, and the prophet condemns its presence at Jerusalem's temple as abominable syncretism. The deity later gave his name to a month in the Babylonian calendar (roughly June-July), still used in the Hebrew calendar today.

(1×) In Ezekiel 8:14, this Babylonian deity is the object of women's ritual weeping at the Jerusalem temple, part of the prophet's vision of abominations defiling the sanctuary. Tammuz's cult involved mourning rituals for the god's death and descent to the underworld, practices that had infiltrated Israelite worship. The cross-linguistic evidence preserves the divine name, with some versions noting the mourning ritual context. GODS AND DEITIES

en: the-Tammuz | es: el-Tamuz | fr: mort | de: [התמוז] Ezek 8:14

תְּמוֹל H8543 Adv (23×)

Yesterday; formerly, previously – often in the idiom 'yesterday and the day before' meaning 'in times past'

A temporal adverb meaning 'yesterday' in its literal sense and 'formerly' or 'previously' in its idiomatic range. It most commonly appears in the fixed expression temol shilshom ('yesterday and the third day,' i.e., 'in the past'), used when characters assess whether a situation has changed – as when Laban's countenance was no longer what it had been 'yesterday and the day before' (Gen 31:2, 5), or when Moses protested he was not a man of words 'from yesterday or the day before' (Exod 4:10). The idiom is so pervasive that Spanish ayer, French hier, and German gestern all appear regularly in translation, preserving the concrete temporal anchor even where English might prefer 'formerly.'

yesterday / previously (23×) The adverb 'yesterday' used both literally and idiomatically in the pair temol shilshom ('yesterday and the day before') to mean 'formerly, previously.' Key passages: Gen 31:2, 5 (Laban's changed attitude); Exod 4:10 (Moses' protest). Spanish ayer, French hier, and German gestern preserve the temporal anchor. YESTERDAY PREVIOUSLY en: as-yesterday, from-yesterday, yesterday | es: ayer, como-ayer, de-ayer | fr: [תמול], comme-hier, de-hier | de: [תמול], gestern, von-gestern Gen 31:2; Gen 31:5; Exod 4:10; Exod 5:7; Exod 5:8

תְּמוּנָה H8544 N-fsc (10×)

Form, visible shape, outward appearance; likeness, image, semblance – used of divine theophanies, idol prohibitions, and visionary apparitions.

A feminine noun denoting the visible form or outward appearance of something, prominent in two charged theological contexts. In the theophanic traditions, it describes the 'form of YHWH' that Moses alone beheld (Num 12:8) and the shape Israel heard but did not see at Horeb (Deut 4:12, 15). In the prohibitions against idolatry, it pairs with pesel ('carved image') to forbid any representation in the likeness of created things (Exod 20:4; Deut 4:16, 23, 25). The Psalmist's hope to behold God's likeness upon waking (Ps 17:15) and Job's ghostly apparition (Job 4:16) round out its range. French 'forme' and Spanish 'figura/forma' track the shape-sense, while 'ressemblance' and 'imagen' reflect the likeness-sense.

1. form, shape (visible appearance) (8×) The visible form, shape, or outward appearance of something perceived – the contour or figure as actually seen or potentially seeable. Central to theophanic and anti-idol legislation: Moses beholds the 'form of YHWH' (Num 12:8), Israel heard a voice but saw no form at Horeb (Deut 4:12, 15), and no carved image in any form is to be made (Deut 4:16, 23, 25). Job 4:16 extends this to a nocturnal apparition whose form the speaker could not discern. Spanish 'forma/figura' and French 'forme' consistently render this concrete visual sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-form, and-a-form, and-form-of | es: figura, figura-de, forma | fr: et-forme-de, et-un-forme, forme | de: [תמונה], form, form-von Num 12:8; Deut 4:12; Deut 4:15; Deut 4:16; Deut 4:23

2. likeness, image (resemblance) (2×) Likeness, resemblance, or representation – emphasizing similarity to a model rather than mere physical shape. In the Decalogue's prohibition (Exod 20:4), temunah stands alongside pesel as a 'likeness' of anything in heaven, earth, or sea, stressing representational correspondence. The Psalmist's declaration 'I shall behold your likeness' (Ps 17:15) uses the word for the hope of seeing God's own reflected image. French 'ressemblance' and Spanish 'imagen' capture this representational nuance, distinct from the raw visual-form sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: likeness, with-your-likeness | es: de-tu-forma, imagen | fr: figure, ressemblance | de: likeness, mit-dein-likeness Exod 20:4; Ps 17:15

תְּמוּרָה H8545 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3fs (6×)

Exchange, substitute; recompense, retribution – what is given or returned in place of another

A noun built on the root of 'exchange,' covering both the concrete act of substitution and the abstract idea of recompense. In cultic law, it refers to the substitute animal offered when someone tries to swap a dedicated offering (Lev 27:10, 33) – both the original and its replacement become holy. Ruth 4:7 uses it for the custom of exchanging sandals to confirm a transaction. Job employs it twice: for wealth gained through exchange (Job 20:18) and for gold that cannot match wisdom's worth (Job 28:17). The one occurrence carrying moral weight is Job 15:31, where 'emptiness' becomes a person's recompense – Spanish 'recompensa' capturing the shift from neutral swap to deserved consequence.

1. exchange, substitute (5×) The concrete sense of exchange or substitute: a thing given or received in place of another. Central to the cultic regulation of Leviticus 27:10, 33, where both a vowed animal and its substitute become consecrated. In Ruth 4:7 it denotes the customary exchange that seals a legal transaction. Job 20:18 speaks of wealth as 'exchange' – profit from trade – while Job 28:17 declares that gold vessels cannot serve as exchange for wisdom. Spanish 'intercambio' and English 'exchange/substitute' consistently reflect this transactional core. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: and-its-exchange, and-its-substitute, his-exchange | es: de-su-intercambio, el-intercambio, y-su-intercambio | fr: et-sa-תמורתה-elle, et-son-substitute, le-échanger | de: [התמורה], [ותמורתה], [תמורתו] Lev 27:10; Lev 27:33; Ruth 4:7; Job 20:18; Job 28:17

2. recompense, retribution (1×) The abstract, morally weighted sense of recompense or retribution: what comes back to a person as consequence for their choices. Job 15:31 warns that the deceived person's 'recompense' will be emptiness – the word shifts from neutral substitution to divine payback. Spanish 'recompensa' and English 'recompense' both mark this shift toward the juridical and theological, where exchange becomes judgment. RECOMPENSE AND RETRIBUTION

en: recompense-his | es: su-recompensa | fr: son-תמורתו-lui | de: [תמורתו] Job 15:31

תְּמוּתָה H8546 N-fs (2×)

death (sons/children of death: those doomed to die, death-row prisoners)

This noun for death appears only in the phrase 'children of death' or 'sons of death' (Psalm 79:11, 102:20). The expression designates those appointed to die, condemned prisoners, those under sentence of death—specifically Israelite captives awaiting execution. Both psalms are laments pleading for God to preserve 'the children of death,' those whose lives hang by a thread. The construct phrase 'sons/children of death' is a Hebrew idiom meaning 'those destined for death' or 'death-row prisoners.' The psalmist asks God to spare those who humanly speaking have no hope, those already counted as dead.

(2×) Both occurrences use the identical construct phrase 'children of death' to describe prisoners or captives facing execution. The term appears in communal laments asking God to intervene for those under death sentence. Spanish translates simply 'muerte' (death), French 'mort,' German 'Tod,' with the 'children/sons of' construction in the phrase making clear this means those doomed to death. The expression emphasizes the extremity of need: these are people beyond human help, requiring divine intervention. DEATH AND DYING

en: death | es: muerte | fr: mort | de: Tod Ps 79:11; Ps 102:20

תְּמַח H8547 N-proper-ms (2×)

Temah (family head; returned exiles, temple servants)

Temah was the head of a family of temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from Babylonian exile. The name appears in the parallel lists in Ezra 2:53 and Nehemiah 7:55, among families of returned servants attached to the temple. These Nethinim ('given ones') were temple workers who assisted the Levites with menial tasks. The name Temah occurs only in these genealogical contexts, identifying a family lineage among the servant class rather than priests or Levites.

Their inclusion in return lists shows the restoration community's attention to preserving all levels of temple personnel.

(2×) The name appears in parallel return lists (Ezra/Nehemiah) identifying a Nethinim family head. The LXX transliterates variously (Thema, Hmath), showing some textual uncertainty. Spanish offers 'Tamaj/Tema,' French and German preserve transliterations. The consistent element is recognition of a family name among temple servants, a group whose restoration to Jerusalem was evidently considered important enough to document in official return records. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: Tamach, Temah | es: Tamaj., Tema | fr: [תמח] | de: [תמח] Ezra 2:53; Neh 7:55

תָּמִיד H8548 Art / Adv (104×)

Continuity; as adverb 'continually, always, perpetually'; as noun 'the daily/continual offering (tamid).'

Tamid conveys the idea of something that goes on without interruption. In its most frequent adverbial use (about 80 times), it modifies actions to mean 'continually' or 'always,' appearing especially in the Psalms to describe unceasing praise, trust, or divine presence (Ps 16:8; 34:2; 71:6). In its substantival use with the article (hatamid), it becomes a precise cultic term for the daily burnt offering prescribed in Numbers 28:3-6, carried forward into Daniel's apocalyptic imagery where the removal of the tamid signals the ultimate desecration (Dan 8:11; 12:11). Spanish 'continuamente' and 'el continuo,' French 'continuellement' and 'le continual,' and German 'bestaendig' all mirror this adverb-to-noun shift across translations.

1. continually, always, perpetually (80×) Adverbial use meaning 'continually, always, perpetually,' expressing unceasing duration or regularity. Especially frequent in the Psalms (Ps 16:8; 71:14) and prophets (Isa 49:16; 51:13), often paired with temporal phrases like 'all the day.' Spanish 'continuamente,' French 'continuellement,' and German 'continually' all render this consistent temporal sense of ongoing, uninterrupted action or state. CONTINUALLY DAILY OFFERING

en: continually | es: continuamente, perpetua, perpetuo | fr: continuellement | de: continually Exod 25:30; Exod 27:20; Exod 28:29; Exod 28:30; Exod 28:38

2. the daily offering (tamid) (24×) Substantival use as a technical cultic term for the daily/continual burnt offering (hatamid), prescribed in Numbers 28:3-6 as the morning and evening sacrifice. In Daniel 8:11-13 and 12:11, the removal of the tamid becomes an eschatological marker. The article signals substantivization: Spanish 'el continuo,' French 'le continual,' German 'der bestaendig' all treat it as a concrete noun designating a specific ritual institution. CONTINUALLY DAILY OFFERING

en: the-continual, the-daily-sacrifice | es: el-continuo | fr: continuellement, le-continual | de: bestaendig, der-bestaendig Num 4:7; Num 4:16; Num 28:10; Num 28:15; Num 28:23

תָּמִים H8549 Adj-fs (91×)

Complete, sound, without blemish — of sacrificial animals, morally upright persons, God's perfect way, and whole time-periods.

An adjective of wholeness and integrity that stretches from the inspection of sacrificial lambs to the character of God himself. Its most frequent use (roughly 50 times) is the cultic requirement that offerings be 'without blemish' — physically complete, with no defect (Lev 1:3, Exod 12:5). But the word rises far beyond the altar: Noah was 'blameless in his generation' (Gen 6:9), Abraham is commanded to 'walk before me and be blameless' (Gen 17:1), and the law of the LORD is declared 'perfect' (Ps 19:7). Spanish perfecto, French parfait, and German vollkommen all attempt to span this remarkable range from bodily soundness to moral and divine perfection.

1. without blemish (sacrificial) (50×) Without blemish, physically unblemished — the technical cultic term for sacrificial animals free from bodily defect, required throughout the Priestly legislation (Exod 12:5, Lev 1:3, Num 28-29, Ezek 43:22-25). Spanish sin defecto and French sans défaut render the idea precisely. This is the quantitatively dominant sense, reflecting how central spotless offerings were to Israelite worship. BLAMELESS AND UNBLEMISHED en: unblemished, without-blemish | es: perfecta, perfecto, sin-defecto | fr: sans-défaut, unblemished | de: ohne-blemish, unblemished Exod 12:5; Exod 29:1; Lev 1:3; Lev 1:10; Lev 3:1

2. blameless, upright (moral) (31×) Blameless, upright, having moral integrity — used of persons who walk with God in wholeness of heart. Noah was 'righteous, blameless in his generation' (Gen 6:9); God tells Abraham 'walk before me and be blameless' (Gen 17:1). The substantival plural 'the blameless ones' appears in Proverbs (11:5, 20) and Psalms (119:1). Spanish perfecto and French intègre both render this, though the Hebrew holds physical and moral wholeness together in a way translations must split apart. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: and-in-integrity, and-the-blameless, and-whole | es: perfecto, perfecto-en, y-en-integridad | fr: et-dans-integrity, et-intègre, intègre | de: blameless, und-Untadelige, und-in-integrity Gen 6:9; Gen 17:1; Deut 18:13; Josh 24:14; Judg 9:16

3. perfect, flawless (divine) (5×) Perfect, flawless — predicated of God's way (2 Sam 22:31, Ps 18:30), God's work (Deut 32:4), and God's law (Ps 19:7). Here the word reaches its theological summit: divine activity and revelation are complete, lacking nothing, admitting no fault. German vollkommen captures this absolute perfection. The same word that inspects a lamb for blemishes now declares God's entire way to be without defect. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: is-perfect, perfect | es: Perfecto, perfecta, perfecto | fr: parfait | de: ist-perfect, perfect, vollkommen Num 19:2; Deut 32:4; Ps 18:30; Ps 19:7; Ezek 28:15

4. complete, whole, full (5×) Complete, whole, entire — applied to time-periods and objects rather than persons or God. A 'complete year' (Lev 25:30), 'complete weeks/sabbaths' (Lev 23:15), a 'whole day' (Josh 10:13), and the 'complete Thummim' (1 Sam 14:41, where the lot must be whole/intact). Spanish completo and entero reflect this quantitative fullness — nothing missing, nothing broken, the full measure given. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: complete, perfect-lot | es: completo, completos, entera | fr: achever, complet, perfect-lot | de: perfect-lot, vollenden Lev 3:9; Lev 23:15; Lev 25:30; Josh 10:13; 1Sam 14:41

תֻּם H8550 Conj-w (5×)

Thummim — one of the two sacred lots (with Urim) used for divine consultation by the high priest

The Thummim, paired with the Urim, were sacred objects placed in the high priest's breastpiece and used to obtain divine decisions. Their exact nature remains uncertain — the name likely derives from the root meaning 'completeness' or 'perfection.' Exodus 28:30 and Leviticus 8:8 prescribe their placement within the breastpiece of judgment. Deuteronomy 33:8 assigns them to the tribe of Levi. After the exile, Ezra 2:63 and Nehemiah 7:65 record that certain priests were barred from service until a priest could consult 'with Urim and Thummim,' suggesting the oracular practice had lapsed.

(5×) The Thummim, a sacred cultic object used alongside the Urim for priestly divination. All five occurrences pair it with Urim in the context of the high priest's breastpiece (Exod 28:30; Lev 8:8) or oracular inquiry (Deut 33:8; Ezra 2:63; Neh 7:65). Translations uniformly transliterate rather than translate — English 'Thummim,' Spanish 'Tumim,' French 'Thummim' — reflecting the technical sacral nature of the term. The post-exilic references (Ezra, Nehemiah) indicate awareness that the institution had become defunct, lending the word an archaic, almost legendary quality. TESTIMONY OBJECTS

en: and-Thummim, and-for-Tummim, the-Thummim | es: los-Tumim, tu-Tumim, y-Tumim | fr: [ולתמים], [ותומים], le-Thummim | de: [ולתמים], [ותומים], dein-Thummim Exod 28:30; Lev 8:8; Deut 33:8; Ezra 2:63; Neh 7:65

תָּמַךְ H8551 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc / 3fs (21×)

To grasp, support, or hold fast; of physically seizing, upholding someone in strength, or clinging to wisdom and righteousness.

A Hebrew verb rooted in the concrete act of gripping with the hand, yet reaching into the sustained care of God for his people. When Moses' arms grew heavy at Rephidim, Aaron and Hur each took hold of a hand and supported them (Exod 17:12)—the same word the psalmist uses to declare that God's right hand upholds him (Ps 63:8). In Proverbs, wisdom herself becomes the object grasped: 'all who hold her fast are blessed' (Prov 3:18). The Aramaic cognate confirms this core idea of holding fast, while Spanish 'sostenido' and French 'soutenir' both capture the sustaining, load-bearing quality that distinguishes this verb from mere touching.

1. support, uphold, sustain (8×) To provide sustaining support or physical strength to another person, often used of God upholding the righteous. The psalmist confesses 'my soul clings to you; your right hand upholds me' (Ps 63:8), and the parallel usage in Ps 41:12 shows Yahweh sustaining the integrity of the faithful. Spanish 'sostenido/sustentaste' and German 'aufrecht halten' both capture the vertical, weight-bearing dimension of this support. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: I-uphold-you, I-will-uphold, You-uphold | es: ha-sostenido, lo-sostengan-, me-sustentaste | fr: [אחמך], [תמכתיך], saisir | de: [אחמך], [תמכתיך], du-aufrecht-halten Exod 17:12; Job 36:17; Ps 17:5; Ps 41:12; Ps 63:8

2. grasp, take hold of (6×) To physically seize or lay hold of something with the hand, implying a firm, purposeful grip. In Gen 48:17 Joseph grasps his father's hand to redirect the blessing; in Amos 1:5 and 1:8 the participle describes the one who 'holds the scepter,' an image of political authority exercised through the hand. French 'saisir' pinpoints the moment of seizure, while the broader Hebrew usage covers both initial grasping and continued wielding. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: and-grasped, and-the-scepter-holder, from-taking-hold | es: de-sostener, sostienen, sostienes | fr: [מחמך], et-grasped, et-soutenir | de: [מחמך], hold, stuetzt Gen 48:17; Ps 16:5; Prov 31:19; Isa 33:15; Amos 1:5

3. hold fast, obtain, retain (6×) To cling to or maintain a firm hold on something abstract—wisdom, righteousness, or a chosen path of life. Proverbs employs this sense repeatedly: those who hold fast to wisdom find life (Prov 3:18), the father urges 'let your heart hold fast my words' (Prov 4:4), and even a gracious woman 'obtains honor' through such tenacious retention (Prov 11:16). Spanish 'retenga/obtiene' reveals the dual nuance of both keeping and acquiring. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: and-those-who-hold-her-fast, let-hold-fast, obtain | es: Retenga, obtiene, obtienen | fr: et-soutenir-elle, soutenir | de: stuetzt, und-stuetzt Prov 3:18; Prov 4:4; Prov 5:5; Prov 11:16

4. be held fast (Nifal) (1×) Nifal passive: to be caught, seized, or held fast by an external force—particularly the cords of one's own sin. Prov 5:22 warns that the wicked 'will be held fast by the cords of his sin,' turning the active grasping verb into a trap image where the sinner becomes the object gripped. This sole Nifal occurrence transforms the verb's agency entirely. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: he-will-be-held-fast | es: será-detenido | fr: soutenir | de: stuetzt Prov 5:22

תָּמַם H8552 V-Qal-Inf / 1cs (63×)

Be complete or finished; be consumed or perish; (Hifil) bring to completion or destroy; (Hitpael) show oneself blameless

A verb whose basic meaning is 'be complete' or 'come to an end,' shared with Arabic tamma and Syriac tam. In its Qal stem it describes things reaching their natural conclusion — provisions running out (Gen 47:15, 18), time periods expiring, or tasks being finished. Yet the same root darkens into 'be consumed, perish' when applied to people under judgment (Num 14:35; Deut 2:16), a shift visible in how Spanish renders it 'consumirse' rather than 'terminarse.' The Hifil causative mirrors both poles: completing a work (2 Kgs 22:4) or consuming enemies (Ezek 22:15). Most striking is the Hitpael reflexive, where completion becomes moral perfection — 'you show yourself blameless' (2 Sam 22:26; Ps 18:25), linking the concrete idea of wholeness to ethical integrity.

1. be complete, be finished (Qal) (32×) The core Qal intransitive meaning: reaching completion, being finished, or coming to an end. Used of provisions being exhausted (Gen 47:15, 18), construction being completed (1 Kgs 7:22), time periods expiring (Lev 25:29), and tasks reaching their natural conclusion. Arabic tamma provides a precise cognate, and the multilingual glosses converge on 'finished/completed' — Spanish 'se acabó,' French 'achever.' The subject naturally comes to its end rather than being forcibly terminated. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: Is-complete, and-was-finished, and-were-completed | es: Se-ha-cumplido, Y-se-acabó, Y-terminó | fr: acheva, achever, complet | de: aufgebraucht-ist, completion-von, ihr-completion Gen 47:15; Gen 47:18; Num 14:33; Num 17:13

2. be consumed, perish (Qal) (18×) A bleaker extension of the Qal: being consumed, spent, or perishing. Here the 'ending' is destructive — people dying in the wilderness (Num 14:35; Deut 2:15–16), a generation being consumed (Num 17:13), or strength being exhausted (Lam 3:22). Spanish distinguishes this sense with 'consumirse/sean consumidos,' and Arabic uses faniya 'perish' rather than tamma. The distinction from sense 1 lies in whether the ending is natural fulfillment or catastrophic exhaustion. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: and-shall-be-consumed, and-they-shall-be-consumed, and-will-be-spent | es: Sean-consumidos, Y-se-agotará, consumirse-ellos | fr: acheva, achever, ai-périt | de: [תמנו], beendete, habe-perished Lev 26:20; Num 14:35; Deut 2:15; Deut 2:16; Josh 8:24

3. complete, finish (Hifil causative) (7×) The Hifil causative of completion: actively bringing something to its finish. A person completes a task (2 Kgs 22:4, finishing temple repairs), fulfills a transaction (2 Sam 20:18), or God brings plans to fruition (Isa 33:1). French 'achever' and Spanish 'cuando acabes' reflect this transitive agency. Where sense 1 describes things ending on their own, this sense involves a deliberate agent finishing the work. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: (qere:and-to-complete), and-let-him-complete, they-finished | es: cuando-acabes, cuando-se-completen, hagas-perfectos | fr: achever, et-que-lui-achève, et-être-accompli | de: [תתם], sie-finished, und-lass-ihn-complete 2Sam 20:18; 2Kgs 22:4; Job 22:3; Ps 64:6; Isa 33:1

4. consume, destroy (Hifil causative) (3×) The destructive Hifil: causing consumption or destruction, making a complete end of something. God consumes nations that resist (Jer 27:8) or purges impurity from a people (Ezek 22:15; 24:10). Korean 'eopsaeda' (eliminate) and Swahili '-ondoa' (remove) capture the forceful eradication. This parallels sense 2 as sense 3 parallels sense 1 — the same Qal/Hifil doubling, but on the destructive axis. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: I-finish, and-I-will-consume, consume | es: consume, consumirlos-yo, y-consumiré | fr: achever, et-être-accompli, être-accompli | de: und-vollenden, vollenden Jer 27:8; Ezek 22:15; Ezek 24:10

5. show oneself blameless (Hitpael) (2×) The Hitpael reflexive: showing oneself complete, blameless, or perfect in conduct. Appearing only in 2 Sam 22:26 and Ps 18:25, it describes God's reciprocal dealing — 'with the blameless you show yourself blameless.' Arabic tatakāmalu 'you show yourself perfect' and Korean 'onjeonhage haenghasida' (act perfectly) illuminate how completion becomes moral wholeness. The reflexive stem transforms physical completeness into demonstrated ethical integrity. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: You-show-Yourself-blameless, you-show-yourself-blameless | es: te-muestras-íntegro | fr: Tu-montre-Yourself-irréprochable, achever | de: You-zeige-Yourself-blameless, du-show-dich-selbst-blameless 2Sam 22:26; Ps 18:25

6. (1×) A Qal imperfective first-person form (Ps 19:13) expressing the psalmist's desire for blamelessness: 'I shall be blameless.' While close to sense 5's moral domain, this is not reflexive-demonstrative but aspirational — an inward state of completeness before God. The multilingual evidence (English 'I shall be blameless,' Spanish 'seré íntegro') confirms the personal, volitional character distinct from the Hitpael's reciprocal demonstration. PERFECTION AND WHOLENESS

en: I-shall-be-blameless | es: seré-íntegro | fr: achever | de: ich-soll-sein-blameless Ps 19:13

תִּמְנָה H8553 N-proper-fs (12×)

Timnah — a Canaanite town in the Shephelah, associated with Judah's encounter with Tamar and Samson's Philistine wife

Timnah (תִּמְנָה) is a town in the Shephelah lowlands on the border between Judah and Philistia. It first appears when Judah goes up to Timnah for sheep-shearing and encounters Tamar at the roadside (Gen 38:12-14). Joshua lists it among Judah's towns (Josh 15:10, 57) and also as a Danite city (Josh 19:43). Its most vivid role is in the Samson cycle: Samson goes down to Timnah, sees a Philistine woman, and insists on marrying her (Judg 14:1-5). The Philistines capture it during Ahaz's reign (2 Chr 28:18). The site is identified with Tel Batash in the Sorek Valley. Spanish 'Timna' transliterates the name.

Timnah (place name) (12×) A Canaanite town in the Shephelah borderland between Judah and Philistia, identified with Tel Batash in the Sorek Valley. Judah travels there for sheep-shearing and encounters Tamar (Gen 38:12-14). Listed in the tribal allotments of both Judah (Josh 15:10, 57) and Dan (Josh 19:43), reflecting its contested border location. Samson goes down to Timnah to take a Philistine wife, initiating his career of conflict (Judg 14:1-2, 5). The Philistines capture it during Ahaz's reign (2 Chr 28:18). Its position on the Judah-Philistia frontier made it a perennial flash-point. Spanish 'Timna' and English 'Timnah' both transliterate the Hebrew directly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Timnah, and-Timnah, and-Timnathah | es: Timna, Timnat, a-Timnat | fr: Thimna, Timnah, [תמנה] | de: Timnah, [תמנה], in-Timnah Gen 38:12; Gen 38:13; Gen 38:14; Josh 15:10; Josh 15:57

תִּמְנִי H8554 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Timnite, gentilic with article: inhabitant of Timnah, applied to Samson's wife (Judges 15:6)

A gentilic adjective with the article, meaning 'the Timnite' or 'the woman from Timnah.' It appears in Judges 15:6 referring to Samson's ill-fated wife, whose identity by town rather than personal name underscores her role in the tribal conflict narrative. Timnah was a border town between Israel and Philistia, making marriages there politically fraught. The designation identifies her as an outsider, a Philistine woman whose marriage to Samson catalyzes the conflict that leads to her tragic death.

(1×) In Judges 15:6, this designates Samson's wife by her hometown—she is 'the Timnite.' The gentilic rather than personal name emphasizes her identity as an outsider from the border town, caught between Israel and Philistia. Her designation by place rather than name reflects her tragic role as a catalyst in Samson's conflict with the Philistines, leading to her death at their hands. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Timnite | es: el-timnateo | fr: le-Timnite | de: der-Timnite Judg 15:6

תִּמְנָע H8555 N-proper-fs (6×)

Timna; an Edomite name borne by a concubine of Eliphaz, a Horite sister of Lotan, and an Edomite chief.

Timna is an Edomite name used for both male and female figures in the genealogies of Genesis 36 and 1 Chronicles 1. As a woman, Timna was the sister of Lotan the Horite (Gen 36:22; 1 Chr 1:39) and the concubine of Eliphaz son of Esau, by whom she bore Amalek (Gen 36:12). As a male name, Timna appears as one of the chiefs (alluphim) of Edom (Gen 36:40; 1 Chr 1:51). In 1 Chronicles 1:36, Timna is listed among the sons of Eliphaz, apparently conflating the concubine tradition with a tribal-name reading. The Septuagint consistently renders the name as Thamna.

Timna (6×) The proper name Timna, designating multiple Edomite figures: (a) the Horite woman who was Lotan's sister (Gen 36:22; 1 Chr 1:39) and concubine of Eliphaz, mother of Amalek (Gen 36:12); (b) an Edomite chief (Gen 36:40; 1 Chr 1:51); and (c) a figure listed among Eliphaz's descendants in 1 Chronicles 1:36, likely reflecting a tribal rather than individual reading. Spanish Timna, French Timna, and German Timna transliterate consistently. The LXX Thamna confirms the ancient pronunciation. The overlap of personal and tribal identity is characteristic of Edomite genealogical lists. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Timna, and-Timna | es: Timna, y-Timna | fr: Timna, [ותמנע], [תמנע] | de: Timna, [ותמנע], [תמנע] Gen 36:12; Gen 36:22; Gen 36:40; 1Chr 1:36; 1Chr 1:39

תִּמְנַת חֶרֶס H8556a Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

in Timnath-heres, place name with preposition: location of Joshua's burial in the Ephraimite hill country

A compound place name appearing in Judges 2:9, meaning 'territory of the sun' or 'portion of Heres.' This is where Joshua was buried in the hill country of Ephraim. The name has a variant form, Timnath-serah, in Joshua 19:50 and 24:33, with the elements reversed. The location is identified with modern Tibneh, about 17 miles northwest of Jerusalem. Scholars suggest the name may reflect a former sun-worship site, though by Joshua's time it was simply his inheritance and burial place.

(1×) In Judges 2:9, this prepositional phrase marks the location of Joshua's burial—'in Timnath-heres' in the Ephraimite hills. The place name's possible connection to sun worship (heres/serah) has sparked discussion, though the narrative treats it simply as Joshua's personal inheritance. The parallel name form in Joshua reverses the elements, a common variant in geographical nomenclature. KIR-HARESETH PLACE

en: in-Timnat-Cheres | es: en-Timnat-Jeres | fr: dans-Timnat-Cheres | de: in-Timnat-Cheres Judg 2:9

תִּמְנַת סֶרַח H8556b Prep / N-proper-fs (2×)

Timnath-serah (Joshua's inheritance and burial place in Ephraim)

Timnath-serah was the town in the hill country of Ephraim given to Joshua as his inheritance (Joshua 19:50) and where he was buried (24:30). The name is a metathesis (letter reversal) of 'Timnath-heres' (Judges 2:9), perhaps deliberately altered to avoid pagan connotations ('heres' can mean 'sun'). The site is traditionally identified with Khirbet Tibnah, about 20 miles northwest of Jerusalem. That Joshua received this town after all other tribes had been allotted their portions demonstrates his selfless leadership—he took his inheritance last, and he chose a place in his own tribe of Ephraim.

(2×) Both Joshua references describe the same location: his assigned inheritance (19:50) and burial site (24:30). The prepositional usage varies: 'Timnath-serah' and 'in Timnath-serah.' Translations consistently transliterate: Spanish 'Timnat-sera/Timnat-séraj,' French 'Timnath-serah.' The parallel account in Judges uses the alternate form Timnath-heres, but Joshua's version (Timnath-serah) is considered the standard form, possibly corrected to remove the solar/pagan element suggested by 'heres' (sun). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Timnath-Serach, in-Timnath-serah | es: Timnat-sera, en-Timnat-séraj | fr: Timnath-Serach, dans-Timnath-serah | de: Timnath-Serach, in-Timnath-serah Josh 19:50; Josh 24:30

תֶּמֶס H8557 N-ms (1×)

melting, dissolving (noun describing the process of melting away, used of a snail leaving a slime trail)

A noun denoting melting or dissolving, appearing in Psalm 58:8 in a vivid image: 'like a snail that goes into melting.' The metaphor refers to the slimy trail a snail leaves as it moves, which looks like the creature is dissolving. The psalmist uses this striking image for the wicked, who should melt away and come to nothing. The word captures the process of something solid becoming liquid, dissolution and disappearance.

(1×) In Psalm 58:8, this describes the snail's apparent dissolution as it leaves its slime trail, a metaphor for the wicked vanishing. The image is visceral—just as a snail seems to melt away as it crawls, leaving a liquid trail, so the wicked should dissolve to nothing. Cross-linguistic evidence shows 'melting,' 'dissolving,' recognizing the term's connection to liquefaction and disappearance. MELT DISSOLVE

en: that-melts | es: derritiendo | fr: fondre | de: der-schmilzt Ps 58:8

תָּמָר H8558 N-mp (12×)

Date palm, palm tree — a tall, graceful tree yielding fruit and shade, symbol of beauty, victory, and flourishing life

The noun תָּמָר (tamar) denotes the date palm (Phoenix dactylifera), one of the most iconic trees of the ancient Near East, valued for fruit, shade, and stately beauty. Israel encounters palms at Elim's oasis with its seventy palm trees (Exod 15:27). Palm branches are waved at the Feast of Tabernacles (Lev 23:40; Neh 8:15). Jericho is 'the city of palm trees' (Deut 34:3; Judg 1:16; 3:13). The psalmist declares 'the righteous shall flourish like the palm tree' (Ps 92:12). Solomon's temple and Ezekiel's visionary temple feature carved palms as decorative motifs (1 Kgs 6:29, 32; Ezek 40:16, 22). Spanish 'palmera' and French 'palmier' translate directly.

palm tree (date palm) (12×) The date palm tree (Phoenix dactylifera), prized for its fruit, shade, and stately form throughout the biblical world. Found at Elim's oasis (Exod 15:27), prescribed for the Feast of Tabernacles (Lev 23:40; Neh 8:15), and associated with Jericho as 'the city of palm trees' (Deut 34:3; Judg 1:16; 3:13). Used as a simile for the flourishing of the righteous (Ps 92:12) and as an architectural motif carved into the walls of Solomon's temple and Ezekiel's visionary sanctuary (1 Kgs 6:29, 32; Ezek 40:16, 22). The palm combines practical value with symbolic resonance — fruitfulness, uprightness, and enduring vitality. Spanish 'palmera' and German 'Palme' translate directly. PALM TREE ORNAMENT

en: a-palm-tree, like-a-palm-tree, on-palm-tree | es: a-la-palmera, como-palmera, las-palmeras | fr: [התמרים], [תמרים], comme-palmier | de: [בתמר], [התמרים], [לתמר] Exod 15:27; Lev 23:40; Num 33:9; Deut 34:3; Judg 1:16

תָּמָר H8559 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (25×)

Tamar — a personal name meaning 'date palm,' borne by three women and used for a place on Judah's border

Tamar ('date palm') is a proper name shared by three women and one locale in Scripture. The first Tamar is Judah's daughter-in-law, a Canaanite woman who, when denied her rightful levirate marriage, disguised herself and conceived twins Perez and Zerah by Judah — a bold act the patriarch himself declared more righteous than his own neglect (Gen 38:6-26). Her inclusion in the genealogy of David (Ruth 4:12) and ultimately of Jesus (Matt 1:3) signals that God's purposes work through unexpected channels. The second Tamar is a daughter of David and sister of Absalom, whose violation by her half-brother Amnon triggered the chain of palace tragedies narrated in 2 Samuel 13. A third Tamar is Absalom's daughter, described as 'a beautiful woman' (2 Sam 14:27). Finally, Tamar appears as a geographic point on Judah's southeastern boundary in Ezekiel's ideal land allocation (Ezek 47:19; 48:28), possibly related to the Tadmor of 1 Kings 9:18. Spanish and French retain 'Tamar'; German likewise 'Tamar.'

Tamar (proper name) (25×) A Hebrew proper name meaning 'date palm,' applied to three women and one place. Judah's daughter-in-law Tamar secured the ancestral line through an audacious levirate stratagem that Judah called righteous (Gen 38:6-26; Ruth 4:12). David's daughter Tamar was violated by Amnon, precipitating Absalom's revenge (2 Sam 13:1-22, 32). Absalom's daughter of the same name is noted for her beauty (2 Sam 14:27). As a toponym, Tamar marks the southeastern limit of Ezekiel's idealized tribal allotments (Ezek 47:19; 48:28), likely linked to the Tamar/Tadmor of 1 Kings 9:18. LXX Thamar; universally transliterated across languages. TAMAR PROPER NAME

en: Tamar, to-Tamar | es: Tamar, a-Tamar | fr: Tamar, à-Tamar | de: Tamar, [תמר], der-Tamar Gen 38:6; Gen 38:11; Gen 38:13; Gen 38:24

תֹּמֶר H8560 Prep-k / N-msc (2×)

palm tree, post (tree of Deborah; or upright post/scarecrow)

This word appears in Judges 4:5, identifying 'the palm tree of Deborah' where the prophetess judged Israel, and in Jeremiah 10:5, comparing idols to 'a scarecrow in a cucumber field'—literally 'like a post' or palm-trunk. The two uses may reflect different senses: an actual palm tree (in Judges) and an upright post or column (in Jeremiah). The Deborah passage locates her judgment seat at a specific landmark palm tree between Ramah and Bethel. The Jeremiah passage mocks idols as stiff, immobile, carved posts standing uselessly like garden scarecrows—shaped like humans but lifeless.

(2×) The semantic range spans actual palm tree (Judges: 'the palm of Deborah') to carved post or scarecrow (Jeremiah: 'like a post in a cucumber field'). Spanish differentiates: 'palmera de' (palm tree of) vs. 'como palmera' (like a palm/post). The common element is an upright, column-like form—whether a living tree serving as a landmark or a carved wooden post standing stiffly. Jeremiah's comparison exploits the palm-post imagery to ridicule idols' rigidity and uselessness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-palm-of, Like-a-scarecrow | es: Como-palmera, palmera-de | fr: -le-palmier-de, [כתמר] | de: -der-palm-von, [כתמר] Judg 4:5; Jer 10:5

תְּמוּרָה H8561 Conj-w (20×)

A carved palm-tree ornament used as architectural decoration in Solomon's and Ezekiel's visionary temples.

Refers to a stylized palm-tree figure carved or engraved as temple decoration. Almost all occurrences cluster in two settings: Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6:29–35; 7:36) and Ezekiel's visionary temple (Ezek 40–41), where palm motifs alternate with cherubim on walls, doors, and doorposts. The word is related to תָּמָר (palm tree) but designates specifically the artistic representation rather than the living tree. French renders it 'modèle' or 'paume-arbres,' and Spanish 'palmeras,' both pointing to the decorative palm motif. These carvings symbolized flourishing life and divine blessing in ancient Near Eastern temple iconography.

palm-tree ornament / carved palm decoration (20×) A carved or engraved palm-tree figure used as architectural ornamentation in sacred buildings. In Solomon's temple, palm figures adorned inner walls, doors, and panels alongside cherubim and open flowers (1 Kgs 6:29, 32, 35). In Ezekiel's visionary temple, palm ornaments appear on doorposts and walls in alternating sequence with cherubim (Ezek 40:16, 22, 26; 41:18–26). The term is distinct from תָּמָר (the living palm tree), specifying the decorative representation. PALM TREE ORNAMENT

en: [ketiv], and-its-palm-trees, and-palm-tree | es: (y-sus-palmeras), [y-sus-palmeras], la-palmera | fr: et-modèle, et-paume-arbres, le-paume-arbres | de: Vorlage, der-Handflaehe-Baeume, und-Handflaehe-Baeume 1Kgs 6:29; 1Kgs 6:32; 1Kgs 6:35; 1Kgs 7:36

תַּמְרוּק H8562 N-mpc / 3fs (4×)

cosmetics, purification ointments, beautification treatments

A term appearing almost exclusively in Esther's beauty regimen narrative, describing the cosmetic preparations and ointments used during the twelve-month purification process for young women entering the king's harem (Est 2:3, 9, 12). The treatments involved myrrh oil and perfumes. The single occurrence outside Esther is textually uncertain (Prov 20:30, Qere reading). The root suggests cleansing or polishing, hence treatments that purify and beautify simultaneously.

(4×) Denotes the elaborate cosmetic and aromatic treatments in Persian royal protocol. Spanish 'cosméticos,' English 'cosmetics' reflect modern equivalents, while the context emphasizes ritual purification combined with beautification—not mere adornment but preparatory cleansing. The six months with myrrh oil and six with perfumes (Est 2:12) suggest both medicinal and aesthetic purposes, transforming candidates for royal favor. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: (cleansing), and-with-cosmetics-of, her-cosmetics | es: (pulen), sus-cosméticos, y-con-cosméticos-de | fr: (תמרוק), [ובתמרוק], [תמרוקיה] | de: [(תמרוק)], [ובתמרוק], [תמרוקיה] Esth 2:3; Esth 2:9; Esth 2:12; Prov 20:30

תַּמְרוּר H8563 N-mp (3×)

bitterness, bitter mourning (intense plural, grievous sorrow)

This masculine plural noun (intensive plural) denotes bitterness, specifically bitter or grievous mourning. Jeremiah 6:26 calls for 'mourning of bitterness'—bitter mourning for an only son, the most grievous loss. Jeremiah 31:15 describes Rachel weeping with 'bitter weeping' for her exiled children. Hosea 12:14 warns that Ephraim has provoked God 'bitterly' (adverbially)—with actions that cause bitter offense. The form intensifies the root concept of bitterness (marar), emphasizing extreme grief or provocation. The contexts uniformly involve profound sorrow or serious affront that evokes bitter emotion.

(3×) Intense bitterness, especially in mourning contexts. Jeremiah 6:26 commands 'make mourning of bitterness' as for an only son—the most painful grief imaginable. Jeremiah 31:15 portrays Rachel 'weeping with bitter weeping,' refusing comfort for her lost children—grief so deep it cannot be assuaged. Hosea 12:14 uses it adverbially: Ephraim 'provoked bitterly'—actions that deeply offended God. The multilingual glosses ('amarga,' 'amargamente,' 'bitter,' 'bitterly') confirm this intensifies the root idea of bitterness, whether emotional (grief) or relational (provocation). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: bitter, bitter-weeping, bitterly | es: amarga, amargamente, amargo | fr: [תמרורים], procédé | de: [תמרורים] Jer 6:26; Jer 31:15; Hos 12:14

תַּמְרוּר H8564 N-mp (1×)
guideposts, waymarks, signposts (plural noun for markers showing the way, used metaphorically)
A plural noun denoting signposts or waymarks, appearing in Jeremiah 31:21 in an oracle of restoration. God tells Israel to 'set up waymarks' and 'make guideposts' so she can find her way back from exile. The term likely comes from an Arabic root for signs or markers—heaps of stones or posts that mark trails through unfamiliar territory. The parallel term 'signposts' reinforces the meaning. Metaphorically, Israel is to remember the way she went into exile so she can return, marking the spiritual and physical journey.

(1×) In Jeremiah 31:21, these waymarks or signposts guide the exiles' return journey. Israel is commanded to set them up, marking the road back home. The image draws on ancient travel practices of piling stones or erecting markers to indicate paths through wilderness. Metaphorically, it means remembering the journey into exile to enable return, both physical repatriation and spiritual restoration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: guideposts | es: postes | fr: [תמרורים] | de: [תמרורים] Jer 31:21

תַּנִּין H8565 Prep-k (1×)
like the monster, like the serpent (preposition + noun, describing Pharaoh as a sea monster or dragon)
This phrase appears in Ezekiel 32:2, comparing Pharaoh to a sea monster. The Hebrew word 'tannin' can mean serpent, dragon, or sea monster—a mythological creature representing chaos. The text has textual difficulties, with some manuscripts reading the plural form by confusion. The image presents Pharaoh as a great chaos monster in the Nile, whom God will capture and destroy. This draws on ancient Near Eastern mythology where creator gods defeat sea monsters representing primordial chaos. Egypt's king, despite his power, is merely a monster God will vanquish.

(1×) In Ezekiel 32:2, this simile compares Pharaoh to 'the monster' or dragon, a creature of chaos that God will defeat. The image merges mythological chaos monster imagery with the Nile's crocodiles, presenting Egypt's king as both fearsome beast and doomed creature. Cross-linguistic evidence shows 'monster,' 'sea creature,' recognizing the mythological resonance of a creature representing opposition to divine order. SEA MONSTERS DRAGONS
en: like-the-monster | es: como-monstruo | fr: monstre-marin | de: [כתנים] Ezek 32:2

תָּנָה H8566 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (2×)
hire, hire out (engage allies or lovers for payment)
This verb appears only in Hosea 8:9-10, both times describing Israel's practice of hiring political allies or lovers among the nations. Verse 9 says 'they have hired lovers' (using the Hiphil), while verse 10 says 'they hire among the nations' (possibly Qal). The imagery blends political alliance-making with sexual metaphor: Israel 'hires' foreign nations as lovers/allies, paying tribute for protection instead of trusting God. The verb conveys the mercenary, transactional nature of these relationships—purchased loyalty rather than covenant faithfulness. Some scholars suggest both verses should read 'give' (yitnu) rather than 'hire,' but the hiring imagery fits Hosea's prostitution metaphor.

(2×) Both occurrences in Hosea 8 use hiring/engaging language for Israel's foreign alliances, treated as prostitution. Spanish uses 'contratar' (hire/contract), French 'supplier' (supplicate/beg, possibly alternative reading), German provides transliterations. The verb captures the commercial, purchased nature of these relationships: Israel pays nations for political favor, parallel to hiring lovers. The root meaning involves engaging someone's services for payment, here applied metaphorically to treaty-making. PRAISE AND BOASTING
en: has-hired, they-hire | es: contraten, contrató | fr: supplier | de: [התנו], [יתנו] Hos 8:9; Hos 8:10

תָּנָה H8567 Prep-l / V-Piel-Inf (2×)
recount, rehearse, celebrate, lament (recite in ritual context)
This verb appears in Judges 5:11 ('let them recount the righteous acts of the LORD') and 11:40 (Israelite daughters went yearly 'to lament' or 'to commemorate' Jephthah's daughter). The root meaning involves recounting, rehearsing, or reciting, possibly in ritual contexts. In 5:11, it clearly means to recount or celebrate God's victories. In 11:40, ancient versions understood 'lament' or 'mourn,' but the Hebrew may mean 'commemorate' or 'recount the story of.' The verb suggests ritualized recitation—whether celebrating victories or commemorating tragedy through annual storytelling.

(2×) The two contexts show related ritual acts: recounting/celebrating Yahweh's righteous deeds (Judges 5) and annually commemorating/lamenting Jephthah's daughter (Judges 11). The Syriac and Targum cognates support 'recount/recite,' though versions differ on 11:40 (lament vs. commemorate). Spanish uses 'contarán' (they will recount) and 'para contar' (to recount), French 'se lamenter' (to lament), showing the interpretive range. Both uses involve ritualized verbal remembrance—speaking the story in community contexts. MOURNING AND LAMENTING
en: they-recount, to-lament | es: contarán, para-contar | fr: ils-recount, à-se-lamenter | de: sie-recount, zu-klagen Judg 5:11; Judg 11:40

תַּן H8568 N-cp (3×)
jackal, wild canine found in desolate places, known for mournful howling
This Hebrew word denotes the jackal, a wild canine that inhabits deserted and desolate regions. The animal appears in Scripture as a symbol of devastation and abandonment, its eerie howling echoing through waste places. In Lamentations 4:3, the jackals are noted for nursing their young—contrasting with the cruelty of Jerusalem's people during the siege. Prophetic texts use jackals to mark places of divine judgment that have become uninhabitable ruins, their haunting cries a reminder of former glory turned to ash.

(3×) The jackal appears consistently across biblical passages as the archetypal creature of ruins and abandonment. Multilingual glosses show translators grappling with this animal designation—some rendering it as 'jackals' while others preserve the Hebrew transliteration, reflecting ancient uncertainty about exact identification. The creature's defining characteristic is its mournful howling in waste places, making it a powerful metaphor for desolation in prophetic literature from Jeremiah to Malachi. JACKAL WILD CANINE
en: (jackals), [jackals], for-jackals-of | es: (los-chacales), [chacales], para-chacales-de | fr: Topheth, [(תנים)], [[תנין]] | de: [(תנים)], [[תנין]], [לתנות] Lam 4:3; Mal 1:3

תַּנּוּאָה H8569 N-fp (2×)
opposition, hostility, alienation (occasions for enmity; divine estrangement)
This noun denotes opposition, alienation, or hostility, appearing in Numbers 14:34 ('you shall know my opposition/alienation') and Job 33:10 ('he finds occasions for hostility against me'). In Numbers, God tells rebellious Israel they will experience his opposition or alienation—his turning against them because of their turning against him. In Job, Elihu quotes Job as complaining that God seeks pretexts for treating him as an enemy. The term suggests active hostility or the breach in relationship that creates opposition. The root may relate to turning away or hindering.

(2×) Both passages use the term for alienation or hostility, though from different perspectives. Numbers speaks of divine opposition ('my opposition') as consequence of Israel's rebellion, while Job speaks of God finding occasions/pretexts for enmity. Spanish offers 'apartamiento' (separation/alienation) and 'pretextos' (pretexts), French 'opposition.' The semantic range includes both the state of opposition and the grounds/occasions for it—the breach and its justification. Both uses involve divine-human relationship breakdown.
AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 14787 WITH 3 SENSES
en: my-opposition, occasions | es: mi-apartamiento, pretextos | fr: mon-opposition, תנואות | de: [תנואות], mein-opposition Num 14:34; Job 33:10

תְּנוּבָה H8570 Conj-w / N-fsc (5×)
fruit, produce; the yield of cultivated land, trees, or (metaphorically) a people's flourishing Tenuva denotes the tangible yield of agricultural labor — the produce of field and orchard. Deuteronomy 32:13 celebrates God feeding Israel with 'the produce of the field,' and Ezekiel 36:30 promises restored abundance of 'fruit of the tree and produce of the field.' In Judges 9:11, the fig tree refuses to abandon 'my good fruit' to rule over other trees. Lamentations 4:9 inverts the image: people waste away 'for lack of the produce of the field.' Isaiah 27:6 extends the metaphor to Israel itself, whose future flourishing will 'fill the face of the world with produce.'

(5×) Agricultural produce or fruit, the concrete yield of cultivated land or orchards. Deuteronomy 32:13 and Ezekiel 36:30 pair it with 'field' (שָׂדֶה / הַשָּׂדֶה), while Judges 9:11 applies it to the fig tree's own fruit. Spanish 'fruto(s)' and French 'fruit' render it straightforwardly. Lamentations 4:9 uses the lack of produce as a marker of famine and siege — people 'pierced through for want of the fruits of the field.'
GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-produce-of, from-lack-of-the-produce, my-produce | es: de-fruto, los-frutos-de, mi-buen-fruto | fr: [מתנובת], [תנובה], et-fruit | de: [ותנובת], [מתנובת], [תנובה] Deut 32:13; Judg 9:11; Isa 27:6; Lam 4:9; Ezek 36:30

תְּנוּךְ H8571 N-msc (8×)
The tip or lobe of the ear; a technical priestly term used exclusively in consecration and purification rituals involving the application of blood or oil.
A specialized anatomical term referring to the soft, fleshy lobe at the bottom of the outer ear. It appears exclusively in ritual contexts within the Priestly source, always in the construct phrase tenukh ozen ('lobe of the ear of...'). During the consecration of Aaron and his sons, Moses applied sacrificial blood to the lobe of the right ear, the right thumb, and the right big toe (Exod 29:20; Lev 8:23-24). The identical triad of body parts receives blood and oil in the purification ritual for a healed leper (Lev 14:14, 17, 25, 28). The Septuagint renders it lobos tou otos ('lobe of the ear'), and the Vulgate extremum auriculae ('tip of the ear'), confirming the ancient understanding.

(8×) A masculine noun denoting the tip or lobe of the ear, used only in the fixed construct phrase tenukh ozen ('lobe of the ear of') in priestly ritual legislation. All eight occurrences fall within two parallel ceremonies: the ordination of priests (Exod 29:20; Lev 8:23-24), where sacrificial blood is dabbed on the right ear lobe, right thumb, and right great toe; and the cleansing of a healed skin-disease sufferer (Lev 14:14, 17, 25, 28), where both blood and oil are applied to the same three points. The ear-hand-foot triad symbolizes the consecration of the whole person—hearing, action, and walk—to God's service. The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform: English 'lobe of,' Spanish 'lóbulo de,' French 'lobe de,' German 'Lobe von,' all transliterating or calquing the same anatomical term.
GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: lobe-of, the-lobe-of | es: lóbulo-de | fr: le-lobe-de, lobe-de | de: der-lobe-von, lobe-von Exod 29:20; Lev 8:23; Lev 8:24; Lev 14:14

תְּנוּמָה H8572 N-fs (5×)
slumber, drowsiness; light sleep associated with visions or with laziness Tenuma describes a state of light sleep or drowsiness, distinct from deep sleep (tardemah) though sometimes paired with it. In Job 33:15, slumberings upon the bed become the occasion for God to speak through visions and dreams. In Proverbs, the word takes a sharply negative turn: 'a little sleep, a little slumber' leads to poverty creeping in like a robber (6:10; 24:33). Psalm 132:4 records David's vow not to give slumber to his eyelids until he finds a dwelling for the ark — an image of urgent, sleepless devotion.

(5×) Slumber or drowsiness as the setting for divine revelation. Job 33:15 describes God opening human ears 'in slumberings upon the bed,' parallel to deep sleep (תַּרְדֵּמָה). French 'sommeil' and Spanish 'dormitar' render the drowsy state. The singular or plural form does not change the sense; it denotes the liminal state between waking and deep sleep in which visions occur. SLEEP AND SLUMBER
en: in-slumberings, or-slumber, slumber | es: dormitaciones, dormitar, en-dormitar | fr: dans-בתנומות, et-ותנומה, sommeil | de: [בתנומות], [ותנומה], [תנומות] Job 33:15; Ps 132:4; Prov 6:4; Prov 6:10; Prov 24:33

תְּנוּפָה H8573 N-fpc (30×)
A wave-offering presented ritually before the LORD; also the physical act of brandishing or waving.
Primarily a technical cultic term for the wave-offering in Levitical sacrifice, where portions of meat, grain, or even the Levites themselves were ritually presented before the LORD by a waving motion (Exod 29:24-27). The word תְּנוּפָה appears almost exclusively in Priestly legislation. Outside the cult, Isaiah twice uses it for the terrifying brandishing of God's hand against Egypt (Isa 19:16) and weapons of divine warfare (Isa 30:32), revealing that the root sense of vigorous, purposeful motion underlies both usages.

1. wave-offering (ritual) (28×) The ritual wave-offering (28x), a technical term from the Priestly source for portions of sacrifice waved before the LORD. Spanish "ofrenda mecida" (swung offering) and German "Webeopfer" (wave-sacrifice) each capture the kinetic dimension of the rite. Key passages include the ordination offering (Exod 29:24), the gold of the tabernacle (Exod 35:22), and the remarkable waving of the Levites themselves as a living offering (Num 8:11, 13, 15). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-wave-offering, the-wave-offering, wave-offering | es: como-ofrenda-mecida, la-ofrenda-mecida, ofrenda-mecida | fr: le-agiter-offrande, le-offrande-agitée, le-wave-offrande | de: Webeopfer, der-Webe-Opfergabe, der-Webeopfer Exod 29:24; Exod 29:26; Exod 29:27; Exod 35:22; Exod 38:24

2. waving, brandishing (2×) A non-cultic sense (2x) denoting aggressive waving or brandishing. In Isa 19:16 it describes the terrifying brandishing of the LORD's hand over Egypt, and in Isa 30:32 it refers to battles fought with brandished weapons. Spanish "agitación" (agitation) and the Hebrew root's kinetic energy show continuity with the cultic waving — the same vigorous motion, now turned to warfare. WAVE WIELD BRANDISH
en: of-brandishing, waving-of | es: agitación-de, mecimiento | fr: [תנופה], [תנופת] | de: [תנופה], [תנופת] Isa 19:16; Isa 30:32

תַּנּוּר H8574 Conj-w / N-cs (15×)
Oven, furnace; a portable clay stove for baking, also used figuratively for divine wrath and intense heat.
Refers to a large earthen jar or portable stove used throughout the ancient Near East for baking bread. The word is a cultural loan traveling from Persian 'tanura' through Aramaic into Hebrew and Arabic, reflecting the shared material culture of bread-baking across Semitic civilizations. Literally, it appears in laws about ritual purity (Lev 11:35), grain offerings baked in an oven (Lev 2:4), and the dramatic smoking fire-pot of God's covenant with Abraham (Gen 15:17). Figuratively, prophets seized on its intense heat as a metaphor for divine judgment: 'the day comes, burning like an oven' (Mal 4:1), and Hosea compares the smoldering passions of conspirators to an oven heated by a baker (Hos 7:4, 7).

1. oven, furnace (literal) (10×) A physical oven or furnace used for baking bread and cooking, a large earthen jar still known in the Levant today. Leviticus prescribes offerings baked 'in the oven' (Lev 2:4; 7:9) and declares that ovens contaminated by unclean animals must be broken (Lev 11:35). The Egyptian plague of frogs invaded ovens and kneading troughs alike (Exod 8:3). In Nehemiah, the 'Tower of the Ovens' (Neh 3:11; 12:38) marks a Jerusalem landmark, likely near a bakers' quarter. Spanish 'horno' and French 'four/ fournaise' consistently render this concrete domestic sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-furnace-of, an-oven, and-in-your-ovens | es: en-el-horno, en-horno, horno | fr: [והתנורים], [ותנור], dans-le-oven | de: [והתנורים], [ותנור], [תנור] Gen 15:17; Exod 8:3; Lev 2:4; Lev 7:9; Lev 11:35

2. furnace (figurative/simile) (5×) Figurative or simile usage evoking intense, consuming heat as an image of divine wrath, judgment, or burning passion. Malachi 4:1 warns that the coming day will burn 'like an oven,' consuming the arrogant. Hosea twice compares Israel's conspirators to an oven heated by a baker – their fury smolders overnight and blazes at dawn (Hos 7:4, 6-7). The Psalmist declares God will make enemies 'like a fiery oven' in the time of his anger (Ps 21:9). Lamentations 5:10 uses the image of skin burning 'like an oven' to depict famine's devastation. The preposition kaf ('like') in Hebrew signals these simile constructions, consistently rendered 'como horno' in Spanish and 'wie ein Ofen' in German. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-a-fiery-furnace, like-an-oven, like-oven | es: como-el-horno, como-horno, como-horno-de | fr: [כתנור], comme-fournaise, fourneau | de: [כתנור], wie-ein-fiery-furnace Ps 21:9; Lam 5:10; Hos 7:6; Hos 7:7; Mal 4:1

תַּנְחוּם H8575 N-mpc / 2ms (5×)

consolation, comfort; words or acts that relieve grief and restore hope

Tanchumim appears only in the plural, conveying the fullness or intensity of comfort offered to those in grief. Jeremiah 16:7 describes the cup of consolation shared at a house of mourning — a concrete ritual act. In Job, Eliphaz asks whether 'the consolations of God' are too small for Job (15:11), and Job retorts that his friends' speeches are empty 'consolations' (21:2). Psalm 94:19 testifies that God's consolations delight the soul amid anxious thoughts. Isaiah 66:11 promises that the restored Jerusalem will nurse her children at 'the breast of her consolations.'

(5×) Consolation or comfort, always plural, denoting words, acts, or divine assurances that relieve grief. Jeremiah 16:7 grounds it in mourning ritual; Job 15:11 and 21:2 debate whether theological arguments qualify as genuine consolation. Psalm 94:19 presents God's consolations as the antidote to inner anxiety. English 'consolations,' Spanish 'consolaciones,' and French 'consolation' converge, all preserving the affective warmth of the term. Isaiah 66:11 extends the metaphor to maternal nurture, picturing Zion's comfort as milk from a mother's breast. COMFORT AND ENCOURAGEMENT en: consolations, consolations-of, her-consolations | es: consolaciones, consolaciones-de, sus-consolaciones | fr: [תנחומים], [תנחמיה], consolation | de: [תנחומים], [תנחומתיכם], [תנחמות] Job 15:11; Job 21:2; Ps 94:19; Isa 66:11; Jer 16:7

תַּנְחֻמֶת H8576 N-proper-ms (2×)

Tanhumeth (Judahite captain's father after Jerusalem's fall)

Tanhumeth was the father of Seraiah, a Judahite military captain who came to Gedaliah at Mizpah after Jerusalem fell to Babylon (2 Kings 25:23, Jeremiah 40:8). These commanders represented the remaining Jewish forces in the land after the 586 BC destruction. Seraiah son of Tanhumeth is listed among those who pledged support to Gedaliah's Babylonian-backed governorship. The name appears only in these parallel passages. Some scholars suggest it may be an Egyptian name (one scholar proposes 'T-s-ḥ-m-t'), though this remains speculative.

(2×) The name occurs in parallel accounts (Kings/Jeremiah) identifying Seraiah's father in post-destruction Judah. Translations consistently transliterate: Spanish 'Tanjumet/Tankhumet,' French 'Tanchumet.' The LXX and other versions preserve similar forms, treating it as a personal name. The historical context is the chaotic aftermath of Jerusalem's fall, with military captains gathering at Mizpah—Tanhumeth's son among them, representing continuity of Judahite leadership even in disaster. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Tanchumet | es: Tanjumet, Tankhumet | fr: Tanchumet, [תנחמת] | de: Tanchumet, [תנחמת] 2Kgs 25:23; Jer 40:8

תַּן H8577a Prep-l / N-cp (12×)

Jackal — a howling wild canine inhabiting ruins and wastelands, emblematic of utter desolation and divine judgment

The noun תַּן (tan) refers to the jackal, a wild canine that haunts deserted places and fills the night with eerie howling. In biblical imagery, the jackal is the quintessential inhabitant of ruins — its presence signals that a place has been given over to desolation. Job laments becoming 'a brother to jackals' (Job 30:29), and Micah wails like them in mourning (Mic 1:8). The prophets deploy the jackal as a marker of judgment: Babylon becomes 'a dwelling for jackals' (Isa 13:22; Jer 51:37), Edom's palaces a 'haunt of jackals' (Isa 34:13), and Jerusalem a jackal's lair (Jer 9:11; 10:22). Spanish 'chacal' and French 'chacal' translate directly.

jackal (12×) The jackal (Canis aureus), a howling wild canine that inhabits ruins and wastelands, serving as the biblical emblem of total desolation. Job identifies with jackals in his misery (Job 30:29), and Micah wails like them in mourning (Mic 1:8). Prophetic judgment oracles consistently use the jackal's presence to mark a city's irreversible ruin: Babylon (Isa 13:22; Jer 51:37), Edom (Isa 34:13; 35:7), Hazor (Jer 49:33), and Jerusalem itself (Jer 9:11; 10:22). The jackal's nocturnal howling amid crumbling walls became a stock image of the reversal of civilization into wilderness. Spanish 'chacal' and English 'jackal' both derive from the same Semitic root family. JACKAL WILD CANINE en: and-jackals, for-jackals, jackals | es: chacales, como-chacales, como-los-chacales | fr: chacal, dragon, et-chacal | de: Schakal, [כתנים], [לתנים] Job 30:29; Ps 44:19; Isa 13:22; Isa 34:13; Isa 35:7

תַּנִּין H8577b Prep-l / N-mp (14×)

A great serpent, dragon, or sea monster; used of literal snakes, cosmic chaos creatures, and marine beings.

One of the Bible's most evocative creature-words, tannin spans the natural and the mythological. In Exodus 7, Aaron's rod becomes a 'serpent' before Pharaoh – a large, fearsome snake that swallows others. In prophetic poetry, the word swells to cosmic proportions: the chaos dragon that God slays (Isa 27:1; 51:9), the monster Pharaoh compared to lurking in the Nile (Ezek 29:3; 32:2), and the devourer of Jeremiah 51:34. Yet Genesis 1:21 uses the same word for the great sea creatures God purposefully creates – not enemies but marvels. The Psalms hold both poles: the crushed heads of tannin in Psalm 74:13 and the sea monsters summoned to praise in Psalm 148:7.

1. dragon, chaos monster (6×) A mythological dragon or cosmic chaos monster, representing hostile powers that God defeats in prophetic and apocalyptic imagery. Isaiah's 'fleeing serpent' and 'twisting serpent' (Isa 27:1), the primordial adversary crushed alongside Rahab (Isa 51:9), Pharaoh as the great dragon in his rivers (Ezek 29:3; 32:2), and Nebuchadnezzar who 'swallowed me like a dragon' (Jer 51:34). Spanish 'dragon' and German 'Drache' consistently mark the mythological register. SEA MONSTERS DRAGONS

en: dragon, like-a-serpent, serpents | es: al-dragón?, como-dragón, el-dragón | fr: [התנין], [כתנין], [תנין] | de: Schlangen, [התנים], [התנין] Deut 32:33; Neh 2:13; Isa 27:1; Isa 51:9; Jer 51:34

2. serpent, large snake (4×) A large serpent or snake in the natural world, especially the serpent of the Exodus sign. Aaron's rod becomes a tannin before Pharaoh (Exod 7:9-10), and the Egyptian magicians replicate the feat (Exod 7:12). Psalm 91:13 pairs tannin with pethen (cobra) in a promise of treading on dangerous creatures.

Spanish 'serpiente,' French 'serpent,' and German 'Schlange' all select natural-snake vocabulary here. SERPENTS AND SNAKES
en: and-the-serpent, serpent, serpents | es: por-serpiente, por-serpientes, y-dragón | fr: et-dragon, serpent, serpents | de: Schlange, Schlangen, und-der-Schlange Exod 7:9; Exod 7:10; Exod 7:12; Ps 91:13

3. sea monster, great sea creature (4×) A great sea creature or marine monster, part of God's created order. Genesis 1:21 records God creating the 'great sea creatures' – a majestic rather than hostile image. Job 7:12 asks 'Am I the sea or a sea monster?' and Psalm 148:7 calls the tannin to praise God from the deeps. Spanish 'monstruos marinos,' German 'Seetiere,' and French 'creatures de mer' capture the marine zoological sense. SEA MONSTERS DRAGONS
en: sea-creatures, sea-monster, the-sea-creatures | es: el-monstruo-marino,, los-grandes-monstruos-marinos, monstruos-marinos | fr: dragon, le-mer-creatures, תנין | de: Drache, der-Meer-monsters, die-großen-Seetiere Gen 1:21; Job 7:12; Ps 74:13; Ps 148:7

תִּנְיָן H8578 Number-ofs (1×)

second (Aramaic ordinal number, feminine form, denoting second in sequence)

The Aramaic ordinal number 'second,' appearing in Daniel 7:5 describing the second beast in Daniel's vision. This is standard Biblical Aramaic vocabulary, the feminine form agreeing with 'beast' (hayvah). The term identifies the second in the sequence of four beasts representing successive empires. It's straightforward ordinal vocabulary, crucial for following Daniel's schematic history of kingdoms.

(1×) In Daniel 7:5, this ordinal identifies the second beast in the vision sequence—the bear-like creature representing the second kingdom after Babylon. The feminine form agrees grammatically with 'beast,' showing standard Aramaic morphology. The ordinal is essential for tracking the succession of empires in Daniel's apocalyptic framework. SECOND (ORDINAL NUMBER) en: second | es: segunda | fr: deuxième | de: [תנינה] Dan 7:5

תִּנְיָנוּת H8579 Adv (1×)

a second time, again (Aramaic adverb meaning 'the second time,' indicating repetition)

An Aramaic adverb meaning 'a second time' or 'again,' appearing in Daniel 2:7 when the Chaldeans repeat their request to the king. This is standard temporal vocabulary indicating repetition—doing something for the second time. The adverb emphasizes the Chaldeans' insistence on hearing the dream before interpreting it, which Nebuchadnezzar refuses to grant. It's straightforward vocabulary marking repeated action.

(1×) In Daniel 2:7, this marks the Chaldeans' repeated request to Nebuchadnezzar—they ask 'a second time' for him to tell them the dream so they can interpret it. The adverb emphasizes their insistence and the king's growing frustration with their demands. It's standard temporal vocabulary for repetition, crucial for following the tense dialogue between king and advisors. SECOND (ORDINAL NUMBER) en: second-time | es: segunda-vez | fr: second | de: [תנינות] Dan 2:7

תִּנְשֶׁמֶת H8580 Art / N-fs (3×)

an unclean bird or reptile, possibly barn owl, white owl, ibis, chameleon, or lizard

This term appears in Levitical purity laws but presents a genuine identification puzzle. In Leviticus 11:18 and Deuteronomy 14:16, it designates an unclean bird—possibly the barn owl, white owl, or ibis. Yet in Leviticus 11:30, the same word lists among unclean reptiles, suggesting a chameleon or lizard. Ancient lexicographers proposed the chameleon was named for allegedly living on air, though this etymology doesn't fit the bird usage. The multilingual evidence reveals ongoing translator uncertainty, with each tradition making different choices about this enigmatic creature.

(3×) The cross-lingual glosses reveal deep uncertainty about this creature's identity. English translators opt for 'barn owl,' 'white owl,' or 'chameleon' depending on context. Spanish chooses 'ibis' and 'toad/mole,' while French and German largely preserve transliterations. This reflects the ancient puzzle: how can one term span birds and reptiles? The clearest biblical fact is its ritual impurity—whether it flies or crawls, it was forbidden to Israel. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3463 WITH 3 SENSES
en: and-the-barn-owl, and-the-chameleon, the-white-owl | es: el-ibis, y-el-topo, y-la-lechuza | fr: et-le-barn-owl, et-le-chameleon, le-blanc-owl | de: der-weiss-owl, und-der-Scheune-owl, und-der-chameleon Lev 11:18; Lev 11:30; Deut 14:16

תָּעַב H8581 V-Nifal-Perf-3ms (22×)

To abhor, detest, act abominably, or be abhorred; expressing deep ritual, moral, and emotional revulsion

A verb of intense revulsion that spans ritual purity, moral judgment, and emotional loathing. In its Piel form it expresses active abhorrence — Job's garments would 'abhor' him (Job 9:31), and Israel is commanded not to abhor the Edomite or the Egyptian (Deut 23:7). The Hifil shifts from feeling to doing: 'they have done abominable deeds' (Ps 14:1). The Nifal passive gives us one of Isaiah's most striking images — the fallen king of Babylon as 'an abhorred branch' (Isa 14:19). Spanish captures the dual register well, using 'abominar' for ritual contexts and 'aborrecer' for emotional ones.

1. Piel: to abhor, detest (14×) The dominant Piel active sense conveys visceral emotional revulsion directed at a person or thing. Deuteronomy 7:26 uses the emphatic infinitive absolute (תַּעֵב תְּתַעֲבֶנּוּ) — 'you shall utterly abhor it' — for idols brought into the home. Job 9:31 gives a vivid image: even if Job washed himself clean, his own garments would 'abhor' him. The range of Spanish glosses — 'abomina,' 'aborrecen,' 'abominan' — reflects how translators oscillate between ritual and emotional registers for this intense word. LOATHING ABHORRENCE
en: abhor-me, abhorred, abhors | es: Me-abominan, Me-aborrecen, abomina | fr: [למתעב], abominer, avoir-en-abomination | de: [המתעבים], [ותעבוני], [יתעבו] Deut 7:26; Deut 23:7; Job 9:31

2. Hifil: to act abominably (4×) The Hifil causative shifts the focus from the internal feeling of disgust to the external performance of abominable acts. Psalm 14:1 (= 53:1) declares that fools 'have done abominable deeds,' and 1 Kings 21:26 describes Ahab acting 'very abominably' in pursuing idols. Ezekiel 16:52 tells Jerusalem that her abominations exceeded those of her sisters. Spanish 'hizo abominación' and 'hicieron abominable' confirm the behavioral emphasis — this is about committing detestable acts, not merely feeling revulsion. LOATHING ABHORRENCE
en: and-have-done-abominable, and-he-acted-abominably, they-do-abominable | es: E-hizo-abominación, e-hicieron-abominable, hicieron-abominable | fr: avoir-en-abomination, et-il-agit-abominably, et-le-abominer | de: [התעבת], sie-tun-abominable, und-er-handelte-abominably 1Kgs 21:26; Ps 14:1; Ps 53:1; Ezek 16:52

3. Nifal: to be abhorred (3×) The Nifal passive or stative sense describes the condition of being abhorred or found detestable. Isaiah 14:19 calls the king of Babylon 'an abhorred branch' (נֵצֶר נֶתְעָב) — cast out of his grave like a loathed offshoot. Job 15:16 pairs it with 'corrupt' (נֶאֱלָח) to describe the human condition. In 1 Chronicles 21:6, David's census command 'was abhorrent' to Joab. French 'avoir en horreur' captures the resulting state of being held in horror by others. HATRED AND HOSTILITY
en: abhorred, abominable, was-abhorrent | es: abominable, fue-abominable | fr: [נתעב], avoir-en-horreur | de: [נתעב] 1Chr 21:6; Job 15:16; Isa 14:19

4. Piel: to make abhorrent (1×) A single Piel occurrence in Ezekiel 16:25 with a causative nuance: Jerusalem 'made abominable' her beauty by offering herself to every passerby. This is not self-loathing but the act of rendering something previously beautiful into something repulsive to others. Spanish 'abominaste' treats it as a reflexive action — you made your own beauty an abomination — highlighting the tragic self-degradation that distinguishes this from the outward-directed disgust of Sense 1. LOATHING ABHORRENCE
en: and-you-made-abominable | es: y-abominaste | fr: et-avoir-en-abomination | de: [ותתעבי] Ezek 16:25

תָּעָה H8582 V-Hifil-Perf-3cp (51×)

To go astray, wander, err; in Hifil: to lead astray, cause to err; of physical, moral, or intoxicated straying.

The verb ta'ah captures the full arc of going wrong — from a child literally lost in the wilderness, to a nation spiritually wandering from God, to a drunkard reeling from wine. Hagar 'wandered' (vatteta') in the wilderness of Beersheba (Gen 21:14) with the same root that describes Israel 'going astray' from God's commandments (Ps 119:176) and false prophets 'leading astray' entire peoples (2 Kgs 21:9). The Hifil causative, accounting for nearly half the occurrences, adds a sinister agent: someone or something actively causing the wandering. The multilingual evidence splits revealingly — Spanish errar and German irren both preserve the ambiguity between physical and moral wandering, while French distinguishes s'égarer ('lose one's way') from faire errer ('cause to stray'), and Arabic contrasts dalla ('go astray') with adalla ('lead astray'), each language forced to make explicit what Hebrew leaves unified.

1. lead astray, cause to err (22×) Hifil causative: to lead astray, cause to err, mislead — 22 occurrences where an agent actively causes others to deviate from truth, righteousness, or the right path. Manasseh 'led Judah astray' (2 Kgs 21:9; 2 Chr 33:9); God 'makes counselors wander' in judgment (Job 12:24-25); false prophets deceive the people. Spanish hizo errar and French causer à errer both require an explicit causative construction, confirming this as a grammatically and semantically distinct sense from the Qal. The theological weight is heavy: the same God who guides can also, in judgment, remove guidance and leave nations to stumble. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: (you-have-gone-astray), [ketiv:you-have-deceived], and-He-makes-them-wander | es: e-hizo-errar, han-hecho-errar, hicieron-errar | fr: [ויתע], caused-à-errer-moi, errer | de: [המתעים], [ויתעום], [ויתעם] Gen 20:13; 2Kgs 21:9; 2Chr 33:9; Job 12:24; Job 12:25

2. go astray, err morally (19×) Moral and spiritual straying: to err from God's ways, go astray ethically — 19 occurrences in the Qal. The psalmist confesses 'I have gone astray like a lost sheep' (Ps 119:176); the wicked 'go astray from birth' (Ps 58:3); Israel is 'a people who err in heart' (Ps 95:10). French s'égarer and German in die Irre gehen both select moral-deviation vocabulary here. This sense bridges the literal and figurative — the spatial metaphor of wandering off a path is fully alive even when the 'path' is Torah obedience (Ps 119:110). STRAYING AND ERRING

en: I-have-strayed, I-strayed, go-astray | es: Anduve-errante, en-errar-de, en-extravío-de | fr: errant, errer, s'égarer | de: [יתעו], [תתע], going-astray Exod 23:4; Ps 58:3; Ps 95:10; Ps 119:110; Ps 119:176

3. wander, roam physically (6×) Physical wandering, roaming aimlessly — 6 Qal occurrences where the movement is literal and spatial. Hagar wanders in the desert (Gen 21:14), Joseph finds his brother 'wandering' in the field (Gen 37:15), young ravens 'wander about' seeking food (Job 38:41), and exiles 'wander in the wilderness' (Ps 107:4). Spanish erró/vagaron and French errant/erra use physical-wandering vocabulary distinct from moral-error terms. Isaiah 16:8 applies the image to the spreading tendrils of Moab's vines — even plants can ta'ah when they sprawl without direction. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: and-wandered, they-strayed, they-wander | es: Erró, Vagaron, vagan | fr: errant, et-erra, s'égarer | de: [יתעו], irren, irrte Gen 21:14; Gen 37:15; Job 38:41; Ps 107:4; Isa 16:8

4. stagger, reel (3×) Staggering or reeling, especially from intoxication — 3 occurrences that describe unsteady, lurching movement. Isaiah 28:7 is the locus classicus: priests and prophets 'reel with wine' and 'stagger with strong drink' (ta'u bayyayin, shagu min-hashshekar). In Isa 19:14 Egypt is made to 'stagger in all its doings' like a drunkard. Spanish tambalearse ('to sway, totter') and French s'égarer in this context both shift toward physical instability rather than directional error. The sense develops naturally from physical wandering: one who staggers cannot hold a straight path. STRAYING AND ERRING

en: as-staggering-of, reel | es: como-tambalearse-de, se-extraviaron | fr: s'égarer | de: irren Isa 19:14; Isa 28:7

5. (1×) Passive self-deception or being deceived — a single Nifal occurrence at Job 15:31 where Eliphaz warns 'let him not trust in emptiness, deceiving himself.' The reflexive-passive nuance marks this as distinct from both active misleading (sense 1) and voluntary straying (sense 2): the subject is victim of his own or another's deception. Spanish engañado ('deceived') and French égarer both select passive-deception vocabulary. The verse stands at the intersection of moral culpability and hapless victimhood — the deceived one is somehow complicit in his own delusion. DECEPTION AND ASTRAY

en: deceived | es: engañado | fr: égarer | de: [נתעה] Job 15:31

תֹּעִו H8583 N-proper-ms (5×)

Toi (Tou) — king of Hamath who sent tribute to David after the defeat of Hadadezer

Toi (also written Tou in Chronicles) was the king of Hamath, an Aramaean city-state on the Orontes River. When David defeated Hadadezer of Zobah, Toi sent his son Joram with vessels of gold, silver, and bronze to congratulate David, since Hadadezer had been Toi's enemy as well (2 Sam 8:9-10). The Chronicles parallel (1 Chr 18:9-10) spells the name Tou. The variation likely reflects dialectal differences in transmission rather than two different individuals.

(5×) A proper noun identifying the king of Hamath who established diplomatic relations with David. All five occurrences cluster in two parallel accounts: 2 Samuel 8:9-10 (spelled Toi) and 1 Chronicles 18:9-10 (spelled Tou). English and Spanish transliterate as 'Toi' and 'Tou' respectively; French and German sometimes leave the Hebrew unvocalized. The dual spelling across Samuel and Chronicles is a well-known textual variant, with most scholars regarding Tou as the older form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Toi, Tou | es: Toi, Tou | fr: Toi, [תעו] | de: Toi, [תעו] 2Sam 8:9; 2Sam 8:10; 1Chr 18:9; 1Chr 18:10

תְּעוּדָה H8584 N-fs (3×)

testimony, attestation, prophetic injunction or fixed usage

This noun carries the weight of authoritative witness and binding instruction. In Isaiah, it appears paired with 'torah' (teaching), designating the prophet's testimony that must be sealed and preserved among disciples. The word conveys not merely verbal witness but solemn attestation with legal force. In Ruth 4:7, it describes the customary practice of sandal-exchange that validated property transactions in ancient Israel. The term bridges personal testimony and established tradition, marking both prophetic word and communal custom as binding witnesses.

(3×) The multilingual evidence shows consistent translation as 'testimony' or 'témoignage,' with some versions preserving the Hebrew transliteration to honor its technical weight. Isaiah's usage pairs it with torah, suggesting testimony carries prophetic authority. Ruth's usage indicates legally recognized custom. The word thus encompasses both divine witness delivered through prophets and human attestation embedded in communal practice—two forms of binding testimony in covenant community. PROSPERING AND SUCCESS

en: and-to-testimony, testimony, the-testimony | es: el-testimonio, y-al-testimonio | fr: [ולתעודה], [תעודה], le-témoignage | de: [התעודה], [ולתעודה], [תעודה] Ruth 4:7; Isa 8:16; Isa 8:20

תְּעָלָה H8585a N-fs (9×)

A water channel, conduit, or trench — an artificial passage for directing the flow of water.

Refers to any constructed waterway designed to convey water, whether an irrigation canal, an urban conduit, or a trench dug for a specific purpose. The word appears in varied but related contexts: Ezekiel 31:4 envisions rivers sending out channels to nourish the great cedar of Assyria; Job 38:25 asks who cut a channel for the rain torrent; and in 1 Kings 18:32-38, Elijah digs a trench around his altar on Carmel that fills with water before the fire of the LORD consumes it. The famous conduit of Isaiah 7:3 and 2 Kings 18:17 is the aqueduct near Jerusalem where pivotal encounters took place. Spanish 'canal' and French 'canal' reflect the unified core meaning.

channel, conduit, trench (water passage) (9×) A constructed water passage — whether an irrigation channel (Ezek 31:4), a rain-torrent channel cut by God (Job 38:25), a civic conduit or aqueduct near Jerusalem (2 Kgs 18:17; Isa 7:3; 2 Kgs 20:20), or a trench dug around an altar (1 Kgs 18:32, 35, 38). The consistent multilingual rendering (Spanish 'canal,' French 'canal,' German 'Kanal/Graben') confirms a single concrete referent — an artificial waterway — with variation only in scale and purpose, not in fundamental meaning. FLOWING WATER

en: a-channel, at-conduit-of, by-the-conduit | es: canal, canal-de, el-canal | fr: [בתעלת], [תעלת], canal | de: [בתעלת], [תעלה], [תעלת] 1Kgs 18:32; 1Kgs 18:35; 1Kgs 18:38; 2Kgs 18:17; 2Kgs 20:20

תְּעָלָה H8585b N-fs (2×)

healing, recovery (new flesh forming over wound)

This noun denotes healing, specifically the formation of new flesh and skin over a wound, appearing in Jeremiah 30:13 ('no healing for your wound') and 46:11 ('no healing for you'). Both contexts are oracles about nations without remedy—Judah's wound is incurable, Egypt's injury won't heal. The term refers not to the process of healing but to the result: the healed tissue, the recovery, the cure that should form but won't. Jeremiah uses it to emphasize desperate, irremediable conditions—national disasters beyond medical help, wounds too deep for natural healing to close.

(2×) Both Jeremiah passages use the term in negative constructions: 'no healing' or 'no cure.' The Hebrew noun specifically means the restored flesh, the healed-over wound, not just the healing process. Spanish offers 'curación' (healing/cure) and 'sanación' (healing), French and German provide transliterations. The medical imagery serves as metaphor for national disaster: these wounds (exile, military defeat) have no healing, no recovery—the damage is beyond repair through natural means. HEALING AND RESTORATION

en: healing | es: curación, de-sanación | fr: [תעלה] | de: [תעלה] Jer 30:13; Jer 46:11

תַּעֲלוּלִים H8586 Prep-b / N-mpc / 3mp (2×)

wantonness, caprice; capricious behavior or treatment inflicted upon others

This term captures the idea of capricious, arbitrary behavior—rule by whim rather than justice. In Isaiah 3:4, it describes immature leaders whose governance is marked by impulsive decisions. In Isaiah 66:4, the same word takes on a darker shade: it refers to God's responsive punishment that mirrors the wanton treatment his people inflicted on others. The multilingual evidence shows translators grappling with this range, rendering it as everything from 'infants' to 'punishments' to 'mockeries.'

(2×) The Hebrew root conveys arbitrary, capricious conduct—behavior driven by whim rather than wisdom. The Spanish 'caprichosos' (capricious ones) and 'escarnios' (mockeries) capture the unpredictable, even contemptuous quality. In Isaiah 3:4, young rulers govern by caprice; in 66:4, God's judgment becomes the mirror of Israel's own wanton dealings with him. Both passages use the plural abstract form to emphasize the pattern of behavior rather than isolated acts. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: and-infants, their-punishments | es: sus-escarnios, y-caprichosos | fr: [בתעלליהם], [ותעלולים] | de: [בתעלליהם], [ותעלולים] Isa 3:4; Isa 66:4

תַּעֲלֻמָה H8587 N-fpc (3×)

hidden thing, secret, the concealed mysteries of wisdom and heart

This term reaches into the realm of what lies beneath surface appearance—the hidden, the secret, the concealed. Job uses it to speak of bringing hidden things to light and of wisdom's secrets that exceed human calculation. The Psalms employ it for the hidden thoughts of the heart that God alone can probe. The word carries an aura of mystery, pointing to realities obscured from ordinary view. Whether describing geological treasures buried in earth or spiritual truths veiled from the casual observer, this noun marks the boundary between visible and invisible, known and unknown.

(3×) Cross-linguistic renderings consistently emphasize hiddenness and secrecy—Spanish 'secretos,' French 'secret,' German 'secrets.' Some versions transliterate the Hebrew, preserving its technical force. Job 11:6 speaks of 'secrets of wisdom' that would double what we perceive; Job 28:11 of hidden things brought to light; Psalm 44:21 of heart's concealed thoughts. The multilingual consensus points to this word marking the threshold between manifest reality and mystery known only to God. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-hidden-thing, secrets-of | es: los-secretos-de, secretos-de, y-lo-oculto | fr: et-ותעלמה, secret, תעלמות | de: [ותעלמה], [תעלמות], secrets-von Job 11:6; Job 28:11; Ps 44:21

תַּעֲנוּג H8588 N-ms (5×)

Daintiness, luxury, exquisite delight; refined pleasure or pampered tenderness

The Hebrew noun ta'anug conveys a sense of luxurious pleasure, refined delight, and pampered tenderness. In Proverbs 19:10 it describes a lifestyle of luxury ill-suited to a fool, while Ecclesiastes 2:8 uses the plural for Solomon's accumulated delights. In Song of Songs 7:6 it appears in an intimate address to the beloved, linking sensory pleasure with love. Micah 1:16 and 2:9 shift the register toward tender affection—'dainty sons' and 'dainty houses'—things precious that will be lost in judgment.

(5×) Luxury, refined pleasure, exquisite delight. Covers the full semantic range from material indulgence (Prov 19:10; Eccl 2:8) to tender affection for loved ones (Mic 1:16; 2:9) and the delight of love (Song 7:6). Spanish 'deleite' and 'delicias,' French 'délices,' and English 'delights' all converge on the notion of pleasure that is both sensory and emotionally precious—something savored rather than merely possessed. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: among-delights, and-delights-of, her-delight | es: deleite, en-las-delicias, sus-delicias | fr: dans-les-délices!, délice, et-délice | de: [בתענוגים], [ותענוגת], [תענגיה] Prov 19:10; Eccl 2:8; Song 7:6; Mic 1:16; Mic 2:9

עָנִי H8589 Prep-m / N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

from my fasting, from my affliction (preposition + noun with suffix, possibly referring to self-denial or distress)

This phrase in Ezra 9:5 appears in a complex verse with textual difficulties. The form suggests 'from my fasting' or 'from my affliction,' as Ezra rises from his penitential posture. The root relates to affliction, fasting, or self-denial, and Ezra has been in mourning over Israel's sin. The phrase marks the transition from Ezra's silent distress to his vocal prayer. However, the form is unusual, and some interpreters debate whether it refers to fasting or affliction more broadly. The context is clearly Ezra's penitential mourning.

(1×) In Ezra 9:5, this marks Ezra rising from his afflicted or fasting state to pray aloud. He has been sitting in torn garments, symbolically bearing the people's guilt. This phrase transitions from silent mourning to vocal intercession. Whether specifically 'fasting' or more generally 'affliction,' it denotes Ezra's penitential posture, his identification with Israel's sin through self-denial and mourning before God. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: from-my-fasting | es: de-mi-aflición | fr: [מתעניתי] | de: [מתעניתי] Ezra 9:5

תַּעְנָךְ H8590 N-proper-fs (7×)

Taanach, an ancient Canaanite city in the Jezreel Valley near Megiddo, assigned to the tribe of Manasseh.

Taanach (modern Tell Ta'annek) was a fortified Canaanite city situated in the Great Plain about four and a half miles south-southeast of Megiddo. It appears in conquest lists, tribal allotments, and the Song of Deborah, where 'the kings came and fought at Taanach, by the waters of Megiddo' (Judg 5:19). Assigned to Manasseh though located within Issachar's territory, it reflects the complex realities of Israel's incomplete settlement of Canaan.

Taanach (place name) (7×) The proper noun designating the Canaanite city Taanach in the Jezreel Valley. All seven occurrences refer to the same location. Egyptian records spell it Ta-'a-na-k, confirming its antiquity. It appears in Joshua's conquest list (12:21), Manasseh's allotment (17:11; 21:25), the note that Canaanites were not driven out (Judg 1:27), and memorably in the victory hymn of Deborah (Judg 5:19). The consistent transliteration across English, Spanish, and French ('Taanach/Taanac') reflects the stability of this well-attested toponym. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Taanach, Taanakh, at-Taanach | es: Taanac, Taanak, en-Taanak | fr: Taanach, Taanakh, [תַּעְנַךְ] | de: Taanach, Taanakh, [תַּעְנָךְ] Josh 12:21; Josh 17:11; Josh 21:25; Judg 1:27; Judg 5:19

תָּעַע H8591 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-mp (2×)

to mock, scoff; onomatopoetic verb suggesting stammering or derisive speech

An evocative verb rooted in sound mimicry—like stammering or mocking babble. In Genesis 27:12, Jacob fears his father will perceive him as 'a mocker' if the disguise fails. In 2 Chronicles 36:16, the people are described as 'mocking' God's prophets, part of a threefold indictment alongside despising and scorning. The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'engañador' (deceiver), 'escarnecedores' (mockers); German 'Betrüger' (deceiver)—reveal how mockery often blurs into deception and contempt.

(2×) The Hithpael participle suggests reflexive or intensive mocking behavior. In Genesis 27:12, Jacob imagines himself appearing as a mocker or deceiver to his blind father. In 2 Chronicles 36:16, the participial form describes sustained, habitual scoffing at the prophets—behavior that accumulates until divine patience is exhausted. The Arabic cognate meaning 'stammer' hints at the onomatopoetic origin: derisive, inarticulate sounds made to belittle speech. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: and-scoffing, as-mocker | es: como-engañador, y-escarnecedores-de | fr: [ומתעתעים], comme-mocker | de: [ומתעתעים], wie-ein-Betrüger Gen 27:12; 2Chr 36:16

תְּעַצֻמָה H8592 Conj-w / N-fp (1×)

might, power (plural intensive form emphasizing abundant strength or overwhelming force)

This rare noun appears only in Psalm 68:35, where it intensifies the concept of divine might through a plural of majesty or intensity. The Hebrew construction pairs 'strength' (עֹז) with 'abundant might' (תַּעֲצֻמוֹת), creating a crescendo of power imagery. The multilingual evidence consistently renders this as power or strength, with Spanish 'fortaleza' and French 'puissance' capturing the sense of formidable, overwhelming force rather than mere capability.

(1×) Denotes overwhelming or abundant might, specifically divine power given to God's people. The single attestation in Psalm 68:35 pairs this term with עֹז (strength) to create an intensified expression. The plural form functions as a plural of intensity or majesty, not indicating multiple discrete powers but rather the fullness and abundance of might. Translations across languages converge on 'power' and 'strength,' reflecting the term's clear semantic domain. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: and-power | es: y-fortaleza | fr: et-puissance | de: und-Macht Ps 68:35

תַּעַר H8593 N-ms (13×)

Razor or knife for cutting; sheath or scabbard for a sword

The noun ta'ar covers two strikingly different objects united only by their blade-like shape. In one set of passages it is a razor or cutting knife — the instrument forbidden to touch a Nazirite's head (Num 6:5), wielded as a simile for a sharp tongue (Ps 52:2), and even used of a scribe's penknife for cutting a scroll (Jer 36:23). In the other, it is the sheath or scabbard of a sword, the casing from which Goliath's blade was drawn (1 Sam 17:51) and into which Ezekiel commands the sword to return (Ezek 21:35). BDB rightly treats these as two distinct senses of the same word.

1. sheath, scabbard (7×) A sheath or scabbard — the protective casing for a sword. All seven occurrences appear in military contexts involving drawing or sheathing a blade. David drew Goliath's sword 'from its sheath' (1 Sam 17:51), Joab's sword fell 'from its sheath' at the fatal meeting with Amasa (2 Sam 20:8), and Ezekiel's sword oracles repeatedly command the blade to go out from or return to its ta'arah (Ezek 21:3-5, 30, 35). Jeremiah 47:6 personifies God's sword, urging it to gather itself back 'into your sheath.' Spanish consistently renders 'vaina' (scabbard), and English 'sheath,' cleanly separating this sense from the cutting-instrument usage. SWORD SHEATH

en: from-sheath-its, in-its-sheath, sheath-its | es: de-su-vaina, de-vaina-suya, en-su-vaina | fr: [תַּעְרָךְ], dans-son-sheath, de-sheath-son | de: [מֵתַּעְרָה], [תַּעְרָה], [תַּעְרָךְ] 1Sam 17:51; 2Sam 20:8; Jer 47:6; Ezek 21:3; Ezek 21:4

2. razor, knife (6×) A razor or cutting knife — a sharp blade used for shaving hair or cutting material. The Nazirite vow stipulates that no ta'ar shall pass over the head (Num 6:5), and Numbers 8:7 prescribes shaving the whole body with a razor for Levitical consecration. Isaiah 7:20 uses it figuratively: the LORD will shave with a 'hired razor' (the king of Assyria). Psalm 52:2 compares a deceitful tongue to a sharpened razor (ta'ar meluettash), and Jeremiah 36:23 uniquely applies the word to a scribe's penknife (ta'ar hassopher) used to cut strips from Jeremiah's scroll. Spanish distinguishes this sense clearly with 'navaja' (razor) and 'cuchillo' (knife), while French uses 'rasoir,' confirming the sharp-edged cutting instrument distinct from the sword's housing. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: like-a-razor, razor, razor-of | es: como-navaja, con-cuchillo-de, con-navaja | fr: [בְּתַעַר], comme-rasoir, rasoir | de: [בְּתַעַר], [תַּעַר], razor Num 6:5; Num 8:7; Ps 52:2; Isa 7:20; Jer 36:23

תַּעֲרֻבָה H8594 Art / N-fp (2×)

pledge, hostage; person given as surety or guarantee

This rare term appears only in the parallel accounts of Amaziah's defeat (2 Kings 14:14; 2 Chronicles 25:24), where Jehoash takes 'sons of the pledges'—that is, hostages—to ensure compliance. The phrase 'sons of the hostages' likely means 'those who serve as hostages,' a Hebrew idiom where 'sons of' indicates belonging to a category. The unanimous rendering as 'hostages' across Spanish, French, and German confirms the semantic stability of this loanword-like term.

(2×) The construct phrase 'sons of the pledges' functions as a technical term for hostages taken in ancient Near Eastern diplomacy. After defeating Amaziah, Jehoash removes both temple treasures and human guarantees to prevent future rebellion. The multilingual glosses uniformly translate this as 'hostages'—Spanish 'rehenes,' French 'hostages'—showing that the concept translated straightforwardly across cultures. The root may relate to mixing or exchange, suggesting the intermingling of families as security. PLEDGES AND SECURITY

en: the-hostages | es: los-rehenes | fr: [הַתַּעֲרֻבוֹת], le-hostages | de: [הַתַּעֲרֻבוֹת], der-hostages 2Kgs 14:14; 2Chr 25:24

תַּעְתֻּעִים H8595 N-mp (2×)

mockery, derision; used exclusively of worthless idols as 'works of mockery'

Jeremiah uses this abstract noun twice in nearly identical phrases: 'works of mockery' (10:15; 51:18), describing idols as objects worthy only of scorn. Both times it appears alongside 'hebel' (vanity), forming a devastating pair: idols are both empty and laughable. The Spanish renders it as 'burlas' (mockeries) and 'engaños' (deceptions), capturing how what deserves derision also deceives. These worthless fabrications will perish 'in the time of their visitation.'

(2×) This masculine plural abstract intensifies the concept of mockery—not just individual acts but the essence of being mock-worthy. Jeremiah's phrase 'works of mockery' (ma'aseh ta'tu'im) treats idolatry as craftsmanship deserving only contempt. The pairing with 'hebel' (breath, vanity) in both occurrences creates a semantic hendiadys: these are vain mockeries, empty objects of scorn. French and German translators often left the term untranslated, suggesting difficulty capturing the specific nuance of cultic derision. MOCKERY AND SCORN

en: mockery | es: burlas, engaños | fr: [תַּעְתֻּעִים] | de: [תַּעְתֻּעִים] Jer 10:15; Jer 51:18

תֹּף H8596 Prep-b / N-mp (17×)

tambourine, timbrel — a small hand drum beaten in celebration, worship, and triumphal procession

The toph was a frame drum or hand drum struck with the fingers, overwhelmingly associated in Scripture with women leading joyful processions. Miriam took up the toph after the Red Sea crossing (Exod 15:20); Jephthah's daughter came out dancing with timbrels (Judg 11:34); the women greeted Saul and David with tophim after defeating the Philistines (1 Sam 18:6). Beyond victory celebrations, the instrument marks worship (Ps 81:3; 149:3; 150:4), prophetic ecstasy (1 Sam 10:5), and festive merriment (Gen 31:27; Job 21:12). When Isaiah mourns that 'the joy of the timbrel ceases' (Isa 24:8), the silence signals cosmic reversal. Spanish 'pandero,' French 'tambourin,' and German equivalents all capture this percussive, celebratory instrument.

tambourine, timbrel (17×) A small, handheld frame drum beaten by the palm or fingers, prominently played by women in triumphal processions (Exod 15:20; Judg 11:34; 1 Sam 18:6), communal celebration (Gen 31:27; Job 21:12), prophetic ecstasy (1 Sam 10:5), and liturgical praise (Ps 81:3; 149:3; 150:4). Its cessation becomes a prophetic sign of judgment (Isa 24:8). Always grouped with other instruments — lyre, harp, flute — confirming its role within ensemble music rather than solo performance. FLUTE PIPE INSTRUMENT

en: and-tambourine, and-with-tambourines, as-tambourine | es: con-pandero, con-panderos, el-pandero | fr: [בתפים], [ובתפים], [תף] | de: [בתפים], [ובתפים], [כתף] Gen 31:27; Exod 15:20; Judg 11:34; 1Sam 10:5

תִּפְאָרָה H8597 Prep-l / N-fsc / 2fs (51×)

Beauty, glory, splendor; honor and renown; ornamental finery

Closely related to the verb pa'ar ('to beautify, glorify'), this noun spans a spectrum from tangible adornment to transcendent glory. Priestly garments are made 'for glory and for beauty' (Exod 28:2, 40), where the physical magnificence of the vestments embodies divine honor. In prophetic and wisdom literature, it describes the crown of glory that comes with righteous old age (Prov 16:31) and the renown God intends for Israel among the nations (Deut 26:19). Isaiah uses it for concrete finery like ankle ornaments (Isa 3:18) and for Zion's glorious garments (Isa 52:1).

1. glory, honor, majesty (28×) Abstract glory, honor, and majesty ascribed to God, royalty, or a nation, covering 28 occurrences. Deuteronomy 26:19 pairs it with 'name' (shem) in the phrase 'for praise, fame, and glory.' David's prayer in 1 Chronicles 29:11-13 attributes tip'eret to God alongside greatness and power. The Spanish 'gloria' and French 'gloire' track this elevated, non-material sense, while the German 'Pracht' straddles glory and magnificence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Your-glory, and-for-glory, and-glory-of | es: Hermosura-de, gloria, gloria-de | fr: beauté, et-beauté, et-pour-gloire | de: Pracht, [ותפארת], [ותפארתו] Deut 26:19; Judg 4:9; 1Chr 22:5; 1Chr 29:11; 1Chr 29:13

2. beauty, splendor (20×) Aesthetic beauty, visual splendor, or outward magnificence of persons, places, or objects. The priestly vestments are made 'for glory and for beauty' (Exod 28:2, 40), and Esther 1:4 describes the king displaying 'the splendor of his excellent majesty.' Psalm 71:8 asks God to fill the psalmist's mouth with praise and 'your glory all the day.' The French 'beaute' and Spanish 'hermosura' consistently mark this aesthetic dimension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-beauty, and-for-beauty, beauty | es: como-hermosura, esplendor-de, gloria-de | fr: beauté, et-pour-beauté, et-splendeur | de: Pracht, [תפארת], mit-dein-Herrlichkeit Exod 28:2; Exod 28:40; 2Chr 3:6; Esth 1:4; Ps 71:8

3. ornament, finery (3×) Concrete ornamental objects or decorative finery, the most tangible end of the semantic spectrum. Isaiah 3:18 uses it of women's ankle ornaments ('the finery of the anklets'), and Isaiah 52:1 commands Zion to put on 'your beautiful garments.' This sense treats tip'eret as something wearable or displayable rather than an abstract quality, bridging the gap between adornment and the glory it represents. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-for-splendor, the-anklets, your-beauty | es: ornamento-de, tu-hermosura, y-para-adorno | fr: et-splendeur, splendeur | de: Pracht, und-Pracht Isa 3:18; Isa 4:2; Isa 52:1

תַּפּוּחַ H8598 Art / N-ms (6×)

Apple tree or its fruit; a fragrant tree used in poetic imagery for love, beauty, and refreshment.

Refers to a sweet, fragrant fruit tree and its fruit, traditionally identified as the apple, though some scholars have proposed the apricot, citron, or quince. In Song of Songs, the beloved is compared to this tree among the forest trees (Song 2:3), and its fruit refreshes the lovesick (Song 2:5). The multilingual evidence is remarkably consistent — English 'apple,' Spanish 'manzano/manzanas,' and French 'pommier/pommes' all converge on the apple identification. Proverbs 25:11 uses the golden fruit as a figure for a word fitly spoken, showing that the image carried connotations of beauty and perfection.

apple tree, apple (fruit) (6×) A fragrant fruit tree and its fruit, traditionally the apple (Malus domestica), used both literally and figuratively. The tree appears as a symbol of the beloved's shade and sweetness (Song 2:3; 8:5), while the fruit conveys refreshment and delight (Song 2:5). Cross-lingual glosses — Spanish 'manzano,' French 'pommier,' German cognates — uniformly point to the apple, though the broader aromatic sense behind the Hebrew root (related to breathing out fragrance) leaves room for citrus or apricot identifications favored by some botanists. FIG AND SYCAMORE

en: and-apple-tree, apples-of, like-an-apple-tree | es: Como-manzano, Manzanas-de, como-las-manzanas | fr: Comme-un-pommier, avec-des-pommes,, comme-les-pommes. | de: [בתפוחים], [כתפוח], [כתפוחים] Prov 25:11; Song 2:3; Song 2:5; Song 7:8; Song 8:5

תַּפֻּחַ H8599a Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Tappuach (personal name; son of Hebron in Judah's genealogy, 1 Chronicles 2:43)

A personal name appearing in the genealogy of Judah's descendants. Tappuach was a son of Hebron according to 1 Chronicles 2:43. The name is identical in form to the Hebrew word for 'apple' or 'apple tree,' though whether there's an etymological connection is uncertain. The Septuagint renders it as Θαπους or Θαφφου, showing variation in Greek transliteration. This is distinct from the place name Tappuach found elsewhere in Scripture.

(1×) Personal name of a descendant in Judah's lineage, specifically identified as a son of Hebron in the Calebite genealogy. The single occurrence in 1 Chronicles 2:43 places this individual within the tribal records. Translations generally transliterate the name (Spanish 'Tapuaj,' English 'Tappuach'), though some sources bracket it, possibly reflecting textual uncertainty. The Greek tradition shows phonetic variation but consistent recognition of this as a proper name. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6168 WITH 4 SENSES

en: and-Tappuach | es: y-Tapuaj | fr: [ותפח] | de: [ותפח] 1Chr 2:43

תַּפּוּחִין H8599b Conj-w / N-proper-fs (5×)

Tappuah; a Canaanite place name meaning 'apple,' designating towns in Judah and Ephraim-Manasseh

Tappuah ('apple' or 'apple-town') names at least two distinct locations in the promised land. One lies in the lowland of Judah (Josh 15:34), and another sits on the contested border between Ephraim and Manasseh (Josh 12:17; 16:8; 17:8), where the related 'En-Tappuah' ('spring of Tappuah') appears. The Septuagint renders the name variously as Taphouth, Thapphous, and Thapheth, reflecting the difficulty ancient translators had stabilizing this toponym.

(5×) Tappuah—a proper geographic name for Canaanite towns conquered and allocated to Israel. All five occurrences (Josh 12:17; 15:34; 16:8; 17:8 twice) function as place references. Translations uniformly transliterate: English 'Tappuach,' Spanish 'Tapúa,' French and German 'Tappuach,' confirming this is a stable proper noun requiring no semantic disambiguation. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6168 WITH 4 SENSES

en: Tappuach, and-Tappuach, from-Tappuach | es: Desde-Tapúa, Tapúa, pero-Tapúa | fr: Tappuach, de-Tappuach, et-Tappuach | de: Tappuach, und-Tappuach, von-Tappuach Josh 12:17; Josh 15:34; Josh 16:8; Josh 17:8

תְּפוֹצָה H8600 Conj-w / N-fpc / 2mp (1×)

dispersions, scatterings (noun describing the state or act of being scattered abroad)

This term appears in Jeremiah 25:34 in a difficult textual context that has prompted various scholarly emendations. The basic sense involves scattering or dispersion, likely referring to the shepherds (leaders) of Israel being dispersed in judgment. BDB notes significant textual uncertainty, with some scholars reading this as a verbal form rather than a noun. The multilingual glosses consistently point to 'dispersions' or 'scatterings,' though French and German translators have bracketed the term, acknowledging the textual difficulties.

(1×) Refers to the act or state of being scattered or dispersed, used in the context of divine judgment against unfaithful leaders. In Jeremiah 25:34, the term appears with a second-person plural suffix ('your dispersions'), suggesting the leaders' own scattering is in view. The textual problems surrounding this verse make precise interpretation challenging, but the semantic field clearly involves forced movement and scattering. Various emendations have been proposed, but the core concept of dispersion remains central across interpretive traditions. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING

en: and-your-dispersions | es: y-vuestras-dispersiones | fr: [ותפוצותיכם] | de: [ותפוצותיכם] Jer 25:34

תְּפִינִים H8601 N-mpc (1×)

baked pieces, broken fragments (uncertain term, possibly describing pieces of a grain offering)

A textually uncertain word appearing only in Leviticus 6:21 (English 6:14), in the context of grain offering instructions. BDB labels it a 'doubtful word,' with the traditional rendering 'baked pieces' based on deriving it from the root meaning 'to bake.' However, many scholars emend the text to read a verb from the root meaning 'to break' (פתת), yielding 'you shall break it into pieces.' The multilingual evidence reflects this uncertainty, with some translators rendering it as 'baked pieces' or 'cakes,' while others acknowledge the textual difficulty by bracketing.

(1×) Likely refers to baked or broken pieces of a grain offering, though the precise meaning remains disputed. The Leviticus 6:21 context describes the preparation of a meal offering, where the substance is to be broken or divided. English and Spanish traditions ('baked pieces,' 'tortas cocidas') suggest a connection to the baking process, while the uncertain Hebrew form has prompted various scholarly reconstructions. The term appears to describe either the form of the offering (pieces, fragments) or its preparation method (baked). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: baked-pieces-of | es: tortas-cocidas-de | fr: baked-pieces-de | de: gebacken-pieces-von Lev 6:21

תָּפֵל H8602a Adj-ms (2×)

tasteless, unseasoned; lacking flavor (literal) or substance (figurative)

Job asks rhetorically, 'Can tasteless food be eaten without salt?' (6:6), establishing a metaphor for speech that lacks savor or truth. In Lamentations 2:14, the prophets' visions are condemned as 'tasteless and empty'—like unseasoned food, they offer nothing nourishing. The Spanish 'insípido' and 'necedad' (tasteless, foolishness) capture both the literal sensory deficit and the figurative emptiness. What lacks taste also lacks truth.

(2×) The adjective functions both literally (food without seasoning) and metaphorically (words without substance). In Job 6:6, it describes actual tasteless food, establishing the sensory baseline. In Lamentations 2:14, it pivots to describe false prophetic visions —'tasteless and empty' (taphel v'shav), a phrase condemning prophecies that neither nourish nor satisfy. The parallel with 'shav' (emptiness, vanity) suggests that what lacks flavor also lacks weight and truth. Multilingual glosses show translators choosing 'insipid,' 'foolish,' or 'worthless' depending on context. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-worthlessness, tasteless-food | es: lo-insípido, y-necedad | fr: [וְתָפֵל], תָּפֵל | de: [ותפל], [תפל] Job 6:6; Lam 2:14

תָּפֵל H8602b Adj-ms (5×)

Whitewash; a coating of plaster used to cover walls, metaphorically for false assurances

In Ezekiel's prophetic visions, taphel refers to the whitewash that false prophets smear over a flimsy wall—making it look solid when it is not. The literal image appears in Ezekiel 13:10–15, where God promises rain, hailstones, and wind will expose the shoddy construction. In 22:28, the same term functions as a sharp metaphor: the prophets 'whitewash' their lies, coating falsehood with a veneer of divine authority. German 'Tünche' captures this precisely.

(5×) Whitewash, plaster coating applied to conceal structural weakness. All five occurrences cluster in Ezekiel (13:10, 11, 14, 15; 22:28), where it serves both as a literal building material and a prophetic metaphor for deceptive reassurance. English 'whitewash,' Spanish 'cal' (lime), and German 'Tünche' all point to a surface treatment that hides what lies beneath—perfectly suited to Ezekiel's indictment of false prophecy. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: whitewash | es: cal | fr: elle-tombera | de: Tuenche Ezek 13:10; Ezek 13:11; Ezek 13:14; Ezek 13:15; Ezek 22:28

תֹּפֶל H8603 N-proper-fs (1×)

Tophel (place name; location in or near the Arabah mentioned in Deuteronomy 1:1)

A geographical location mentioned in Deuteronomy 1:1 as one of the places where Moses delivered his farewell addresses. Traditionally identified with modern Tafileh, about 15 miles southeast of the Dead Sea, though this identification faces phonetic difficulties (Hebrew ת doesn't naturally correspond to Arabic ط). The Septuagint renders it Τοφολ. The name is mentioned alongside other geographical markers to situate Moses' final speeches to Israel in the wilderness.

(1×) Place name designating a location in the Arabah region where Moses addressed Israel. The single reference in Deuteronomy 1:1 functions to provide geographical context for the book's setting. Modern identifications have suggested Tafileh in Jordan, though scholars debate the phonetic correspondence. Translations consistently transliterate the name (English 'Tophel,' Spanish 'Tofel,' French 'Tophel'), treating it as a fixed geographical designation rather than a word with independent semantic content. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Tophel | es: Tofel | fr: Tophel | de: Tophel Deut 1:1

תִּפְלָה H8604 N-fs (3×)

unseemliness, moral unsavoriness, folly that offends righteousness

This noun denotes moral and intellectual unseemliness—behavior or speech that lacks proper taste, wisdom, or righteousness. In Job 1:22, it describes what Job carefully avoided: he did not ascribe 'unseemliness' to God even in extreme suffering, refusing to charge God with wrongdoing. Jeremiah uses it to condemn the prophets of Samaria for their offensive folly. The term suggests something morally distasteful, unseemly in the eyes of righteousness. It's the opposite of wisdom and propriety, marking speech or conduct that violates divine standards of what is fitting.

(3×) The multilingual evidence shows diverse interpretation—English gives 'folly,' 'unseemliness,' 'wrong'; Spanish 'insensatez' (foolishness); but interestingly some French and German versions render as 'prayer' (prière, Gebet), apparently confusing this root with a similar form. The proper sense, supported by context in Job and Jeremiah, is moral unsavoriness. Job refused to ascribe moral impropriety to God; the false prophets exhibited it. The word marks the boundary of what is morally seemly. FOLLY AND FOOLISHNESS

en: folly, unseemliness, wrong | es: insensatez, reproche. | fr: prière, תִּפְלָה | de: Gebet Job 1:22; Job 24:12; Jer 23:13

תְּפִלָּה H8605 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3ms (77×)

Prayer or supplication directed to God, whether personal petition, intercession, or liturgical address in the temple.

Derived from the Hitpael of palal ('to pray'), tephillah covers the full range of verbal address to God — from David's private petitions in the Psalms to Solomon's solemn dedication prayer at the temple (1 Kgs 8:38, 54). Isaiah's striking declaration that God's house shall be called a 'house of prayer' for all nations (Isa 56:7) shows the word carrying communal and eschatological weight. Multilingual renderings consistently point to a single core: English 'prayer,' Spanish oracion, French priere, German Gebet — all converging on the act of addressing the divine in earnest appeal.

prayer, supplication (77×) A prayer or supplication lifted to God, encompassing personal petition (Ps 4:1; 2 Sam 7:27), intercessory plea on behalf of others (Jer 7:16; 2 Kgs 19:4), and corporate liturgical prayer at the temple (1 Kgs 8:38, 54). The construct beth tephillah, 'house of prayer' (Isa 56:7), extends the term to designate sacred space itself. PRAYER AND SUPPLICATION

en: my-prayer, my-prayer-is-, prayer | es: mi-oración, mi-oración-, oración | fr: ma-prière, prière | de: [תפלתי], mein-Gebet, mein-Gebet- 2Sam 7:27; 1Kgs 8:28; 1Kgs 8:29; 1Kgs 8:38; 1Kgs 8:54

תִּפְלֻצֹת H8606 N-fsc / 2ms (1×)

horror, terror (specifically the dread or fear that someone inspires in others)

A noun denoting the horror or terror that someone or something evokes. In Jeremiah 49:16, God addresses Edom regarding 'the horror you inspire' (literally 'your horror-ness'), referring to the intimidation Edom thought it projected to other nations. The term appears in exclamatory form, possibly mocking Edom's self-perceived terribleness. While BDB notes some textual uncertainty, the basic sense of inspiring fear or dread is clear. The Spanish 'horror' and English 'terribleness' capture this sense of projected intimidation.

(1×) Describes the quality of inspiring horror, dread, or fear—specifically the terror that a person or nation projects outward. In Jeremiah 49:16, this refers to Edom's perceived capacity to intimidate others, which proves illusory before God's judgment. The term carries a sense of psychological impact: the shuddering or fear reaction that someone evokes. English 'terribleness' and Spanish 'horror' both capture this outward-facing dimension of inspiring dread. The Hebrew suffix indicates possession: 'your (capacity to inspire) horror.' TERROR AND AGITATION

en: your-terribleness | es: tu-horror | fr: [תפלצתך] | de: [תפלצתך] Jer 49:16

תִּפְסַח H8607 N-proper-ms (2×)

Tiphsah; a city on the Euphrates marking the northeastern boundary of Solomon's realm

This place name appears in two contexts: as the northeastern limit of Solomon's extensive dominion (1 Kings 4:24), and as the site of a brutal military action by Menahem (2 Kings 15:16). Scholars identify it with Thapsacus, a major ford on the Euphrates at the great easterly bend of the river. The name likely derives from a root meaning 'ford' or 'crossing.' The Greek rendering Thapsakos confirms the identification with the strategic crossing point mentioned in classical sources like Xenophon's Anabasis.

(2×) As a geographical marker, Tiphsah represents the far reach of Israelite influence during Solomon's golden age—'from Tiphsah to Gaza' encompasses the breadth of his peaceful reign. In 2 Kings 15:16, the same location becomes the scene of Menahem's violence, showing how glory can decay into brutality. The unanimous transliteration across Spanish (Tifsa/Tifsaj), French (Tiphsach), and German confirms this as a stable proper name with clear historical referent—Kal'at Dibse at approximately 35°55' N, 38°20' E. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Tiphsach, from-Tiphsah | es: Tifsa, desde-Tifsaj | fr: Tiphsach, de-Tiphsah | de: Tiphsach, von-Tiphsah 1Kgs 4:24; 2Kgs 15:16

תָּפַף H8608 V-Qal-Prtcpl-fp (2×)

to play the tambourine, beat the drum; denominative verb from 'toph' (hand drum)

This verb, derived from the noun 'toph' (tambourine), describes the rhythmic beating of hand drums in Israelite worship and celebration. In Psalm 68:25, maidens play tambourines in the festive procession. Nahum 2:7 uses the Poel participle metaphorically, comparing the beating of hearts to doves cooing (though some scholars emend the text). The Spanish 'tocando panderos' (playing tambourines) and 'golpeando' (beating) capture both the musical and percussive dimensions of this embodied worship practice.

(2×) The Qal participle describes women actively playing tambourines in worship contexts—a common feature of ancient Near Eastern celebration where women led musical praise. In Psalm 68:25, the maidens with timbrels march between singers and instrumentalists in the grand procession. Nahum 2:7 shifts to interior experience: hearts beat like doves, though the textual transmission is uncertain here. The denominative formation shows how the instrument name generated the verb for its use—playing the toph becomes 'to toph.' FLUTE PIPE INSTRUMENT

en: beating, playing-tambourines | es: golpeando, tocando-panderos | fr: jouer-du-tambourin, sonner | de: [מתפפת], playing-tambourines Ps 68:25; Nah 2:7

תָּפַר H8609 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (4×)

to sew, stitch together

This verb appears in contexts both literal and figurative. Genesis 3:7 describes humanity's first garment-making—Adam and Eve sewing fig leaves after the fall. Job uses it metaphorically, having 'sewn sackcloth upon his skin' (16:15), a poetic image of grief inseparable from his being. Ecclesiastes places it in the rhythms of life: 'a time to tear and a time to sew' (3:7). Ezekiel condemns women who 'sew magic bands' on wrists (13:18), a prohibited cultic practice.

(4×) Covers both the practical craft of stitching fabric and metaphorical applications. The Genesis account marks the origin of human clothing-making as a response to shame. Job's image intensifies his suffering—not merely wearing sackcloth but having it sewn into his very flesh. The Ezekiel passage suggests ritual sewing of amulets or magical objects. Multilingual glosses consistently use basic sewing vocabulary (Spanish 'coser,' French 'coudre,' German forms of 'nähen'). CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: I-have-sewn, and-sewed, to-sew | es: a-las-que-cosen, he-cosido, para-coser | fr: coudre, et-cousit, à-לתפור | de: [למתפרות], [לתפור], [תפרתי] Gen 3:7; Job 16:15; Eccl 3:7; Ezek 13:18

תָּפַשׂ H8610 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (65×)

To seize, capture, lay hold of; grasp or take captive in Qal; wield an instrument; be seized in Nifal.

Taphas is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for forcefully laying hold — whether of a person in arrest, a city in conquest, or a tool in skilled use. Its range runs from Potiphar's wife seizing Joseph's garment (Gen 39:12) to Jubal as the 'handler' of lyre and pipe (Gen 4:21). The Nifal passive, appearing 15 times, consistently describes cities falling to siege and persons caught by enemies — Jeremiah's warnings that Jerusalem will be 'taken' (Jer 34:3; 38:23). Arabic qabada ('seize, grip') and Swahili -kamata ('catch, arrest') select forceful-grasp vocabulary, while the musical usage draws Korean 다루는 ('handling') and Spanish empuna ('wields'), confirming a genuine skill-oriented sense distinct from violent seizure.

1. Qal: seize, capture (43×) The dominant Qal active sense: to seize, capture, or take hold of by force — 43 occurrences spanning military conquest, arrest, and physical grasping. Covers seizing individuals (Gen 39:12; Deut 21:19, parents seizing a rebellious son), capturing cities (2 Kgs 14:13; 18:13, Sennacherib taking Judah's fortified cities), and apprehending prophets (Jer 37:14, Jeremiah arrested). Arabic qabada and Swahili -kamata consistently select forceful-grip vocabulary. Spanish imperatives Agarrad and Capturadlos confirm the aggressive character. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: and-he-captured, and-he-seized, and-seize-him | es: Agarrad, Capturadlos, Y-apresaron | fr: [תפש], capture-eux, et-il-captura | de: [ותפשתו], er-eroberte, ergreife Gen 39:12; Num 31:27; Deut 9:17; Deut 20:19; Deut 21:19

2. Nifal: be seized, be captured (15×) The Nifal passive: to be seized, caught, or captured — 15 occurrences concentrated in Jeremiah's judgment oracles. Cities 'are captured' (Jer 48:41, Kerioth; 50:2, Babylon), kings 'are caught' (Jer 34:3, Zedekiah), and individuals 'seized' in concealed sin (Num 5:13). Spanish fue-atrapado/capturadas use passive constructions matching Hebrew Nifal morphology. The theological pattern is striking: taphas in the Nifal becomes vocabulary of divine judgment. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: and-he-shall-be-caught, and-is-seized, are-seized | es: capturadas, fue-atrapada, fue-atrapado | fr: et-saisir, saisir, était-caught | de: ergreifen, lass-ihnen-sein-caught, und-ergreifen Num 5:13; Ps 10:2; Jer 34:3; Jer 38:23; Jer 48:41

3. Qal: handle, wield (5×) Qal participle meaning to handle, wield, or play — 5 occurrences emphasizing skillful use rather than seizure. Genesis 4:21 introduces Jubal as 'father of all who handle the lyre and pipe'; Jeremiah uses it for those who 'handle' the law (Jer 2:8) and warriors who 'wield' the bow (Jer 46:9; 50:16; Amos 2:15). Arabic azif ('player') and Korean 다루는 ('handling') select craft vocabulary, while Spanish el-que-toca ('who plays') confirms the instrument-handling frame. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: and-the-one-wielding, and-those-who-handle, and-wielder-of | es: Y-el-que-empuaña, el-que-sostiene, el-que-toca | fr: et-saisir, handler-de, saisir | de: Spieler, [ותפש], ergreifen Gen 4:21; Jer 2:8; Jer 49:16; Jer 50:16; Amos 2:15

4. (1×) A proverbial sense at Proverbs 30:28: the lizard 'can be seized with the hands' yet dwells in kings' palaces. The verb describes potential graspability — a creature that, despite being catchable, achieves access to the highest places. Spanish la-atrapas ('you catch it') renders the modal quality. This occurrence sits between senses 1 and 3, combining physical graspability with wisdom irony. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: you-can-seize | es: la-atrapas | fr: saisir | de: [תתפש] Prov 30:28

5. (1×) A unique occurrence at Habakkuk 2:19 describing an idol 'overlaid' (taphus) with gold and silver. The root meaning of 'lay hold of' extends to encasing or coating — gold 'gripping' the wood. English 'is overlaid' and Spanish esta-cubierto-de ('is covered with') abandon seizure vocabulary for coating terms, confirming a genuine semantic extension. This specialized craft usage appears only here in the Hebrew Bible. SEIZING AND SNATCHING

en: is-overlaid | es: está-cubierto-de- | fr: saisir | de: [תפרש] Hab 2:19

תֹּפֶת H8611 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

spitting, act of spitting (specifically spitting in someone's face as an expression of contempt)

This noun describes the act of spitting, specifically spitting in someone's face as a gesture of extreme contempt and humiliation. Job 17:6 uses this term metaphorically: Job has become 'a spitting in the face,' meaning people spit at him as an expression of scorn. Some scholars have proposed emending the text to read 'sign' or 'portent' instead, but the Masoretic reading makes sense in the context of Job's social degradation. The imagery is visceral and captures the depth of Job's humiliation.

(1×) Refers to the act of spitting, particularly spitting in someone's face as a gesture of contempt. In Job 17:6, Job laments that he has become 'a spitting to the face'—that is, an object of public scorn whom people spit upon. This physiological act carries strong cultural overtones of disgust and rejection. Spanish 'escupidero' (spittoon) and English 'spitting' both point to the physical act, though the context emphasizes the social dimension of contemptuous rejection. The term captures both the physical action and its symbolic weight as ultimate humiliation. SPITTING CONTEMPT en: and-a-spitting | es: y-escupidero | fr: et-ותפת | de: [ותפת] Job 17:6

תֹּפֶת H8612 Conj-w (9×)

Topheth: a site in the Valley of Ben-Hinnom south of Jerusalem, associated with child sacrifice and divine judgment.

A place name identifying a notorious cultic site in the Valley of Ben-Hinnom (Gehenna), just south of Jerusalem, where children were passed through fire in sacrifice to Molech. King Josiah defiled it during his reforms (2 Kgs 23:10), and Jeremiah pronounced devastating oracles transforming its name into a byword for slaughter and unburied dead (Jer 7:31-32; 19:6-14). Isaiah 30:33 envisions a Topheth-like pyre prepared for the Assyrian king. The etymology remains debated, though some connect it to an Aramaic word for 'firepit.' The site became a powerful prophetic symbol of judgment reversal — the place of abomination becoming the place of reckoning.

Topheth (place name) (9×) The proper noun Topheth (or Topheth with the article ha-Topheth), designating the specific cultic site in the Valley of Ben-Hinnom where child sacrifice was practiced (Jer 7:31; 2 Kgs 23:10). Jeremiah prophesied it would be renamed 'Valley of Slaughter' and become a mass burial ground (Jer 7:32; 19:6, 11). Isaiah 30:33 extends the image metaphorically to a divine pyre prepared for Assyria. All multilingual renderings (Spanish 'Tofet,' French 'Topheth,' German 'Tofet') treat it as a transliterated proper noun, confirming its single referent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Topheth, and-in-Topheth, from-the-Topheth | es: Tofet, como-Tofet, de-el-Tofet | fr: comme-Topheth, dans-Topheth, de-le-Topheth | de: das-Tofet, der-Tofet, in-Tofet 2Kgs 23:10; Jer 7:31; Jer 7:32; Jer 19:6

תָּפְתָּה H8613 N-proper-fs (1×)

Topheth (place name; location associated with burning, used figuratively for divine judgment on Assyria)

In Isaiah 30:33, this term appears as a place name with uncertain vocalization (possibly Topheth or Tophteh), used metaphorically to describe the place of judgment prepared for the Assyrian king. The verse depicts Topheth as a burning site prepared by the Lord, with fire and brimstone. The name is closely related to, and possibly identical with, the Topheth in the Valley of Hinnom associated with child sacrifice. Some scholars treat the final ה as an interrogative attached to the following word rather than part of the name itself. The imagery evokes complete destruction by fire.

(1×) Functions as a place name (possibly a variant of Topheth) used figuratively for divine judgment and burning. Isaiah 30:33 employs this location as a symbol of Assyria's coming destruction—a burning place prepared by God. While textual questions surround the precise form (some read simply 'Topheth' by repointing the final ה), the semantic content is clear: a site of fiery judgment. The name resonates with the Hinnom valley site of the same name, lending associations of defiling fire and total consumption. Spanish and English transliterate consistently, recognizing this as a charged geographical-theological symbol. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: is-Topheth | es: Tofet | fr: [תפתה] | de: [תפתה] Isa 30:33

תִּפְתַּאי H8614 N-mpd (2×)

magistrate, official; Aramaic title for a class of officials in Nebuchadnezzar's administration

This Aramaic loanword appears only in Daniel 3:2-3, in the long list of officials summoned to the dedication of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image. The exact meaning remains uncertain—even ancient versions struggled, with the Septuagint rendering it as 'huissier' (ushers) and other traditions suggesting 'magistrates' or 'judges.' Egyptian Aramaic papyri preserve the term in similar official contexts, confirming it as a genuine administrative title. The textual tradition shows both Ketiv (tiptaye') and Qere (tiptaye) readings.

(2×) As part of the sevenfold list of officials—satraps, prefects, governors, counselors, treasurers, magistrates, and provincial officials—this term designates a specific administrative rank in the Neo-Babylonian bureaucracy. The appearance in Egyptian Aramaic documents ('judges and magistrates and officials') confirms this was a recognized office across the Aramaic-speaking world. Modern translations generally settle on 'magistrates,' though the precise jurisdiction and function remain obscure. The uniform transliteration across languages reflects scholarly uncertainty about the exact role. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-magistrates | es: los-magistrados | fr: huissier | de: [תפתיא] Dan 3:2; Dan 3:3

תִּקְוָה H8615a N-fsc (2×)

cord, line; specifically the scarlet cord marking Rahab's house in Jericho

This is the famous scarlet cord that Rahab hung from her window as a sign of protection during Jericho's conquest (Joshua 2:18, 21). The word 'tiqvah' normally means 'hope,' but this homograph means 'cord' or 'line'—derived from a root meaning to bind or tie. The phrase 'cord of scarlet thread' specifies both the material (thread) and color (crimson). That single scarlet line became Rahab's hope, creating a wordplay: the cord (tiqvah) was her hope (tiqvah). Every major translation renders this as 'cord.'

(2×) The construct phrase 'cord of the scarlet thread' appears in the spies' instructions to Rahab and her fulfillment of those instructions. This physical marker—visible, crimson, unmistakable—would signal to the invading Israelites which house to spare. The multilingual uniformity (Spanish 'cordón,' French 'corde,' German 'cord') shows no ambiguity about the referent. Later tradition saw this scarlet cord as a type of Christ's blood, though the immediate narrative function is simply practical: a visible sign of covenant protection in the midst of judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cord-of | es: cordón-de | fr: corde-de | de: cord-von Josh 2:18; Josh 2:21

תִּקְוָה H8615b Conj-w / N-fsc / 3mp (32×)

hope, expectation — confident anticipation of a future outcome, whether grounded in God or in human aspiration

Tiqvah (II) is the standard Hebrew noun for hope, appearing 32 times across wisdom, prophetic, and narrative literature. In Job, the word becomes a sustained meditation on whether hope can survive catastrophe: the righteous cling to it (Job 5:16), but the godless see theirs perish like a spider's web (Job 8:13), and Job himself asks whether anyone can see his hope at all (Job 17:15). Proverbs treats hope as the dividing line between the wise and the foolish — the expectation of the righteous yields gladness, but that of the wicked perishes (Prov 10:28; 11:7). Jeremiah's oracle of restoration — 'there is hope for your future' (Jer 31:17) — deploys the word at its most consoling, while Hosea transforms the Valley of Achor into a 'door of hope' (Hos 2:17). Cross-linguistic glosses converge: Spanish 'esperanza,' French 'esperance,' German 'Hoffnung.'

hope, expectation (32×) Confident anticipation or expectation directed toward a future outcome, spanning theological trust in God and everyday human aspiration. In wisdom literature, hope separates the righteous from the wicked (Prov 10:28; 11:7; Job 8:13). Jeremiah promises 'hope for your future' to exiled mothers (Jer 31:17), and Hosea names the Valley of Achor a 'door of hope' (Hos 2:17). Lamentations 3:29 urges hope even in suffering. HOPE (ABSTRACT NOUN)

en: and-hope-of, are-my-hope, but-the-expectation-of | es: esperanza, esperanza-de, esperanza. | fr: [תקוה], espérance, et-espérance | de: Hoffnung, [תקוה], ist-mein-hoffen Ruth 1:12; Job 4:6; Job 5:16; Job 6:8; Job 7:6

תִּקְוָה H8616 N-proper-ms (2×)

Tikvah; personal name meaning 'hope,' borne by two post-exilic men

A personal name appearing twice: as the father-in-law of the prophetess Huldah (2 Kings 22:14), and as a post-exilic figure in Ezra 10:15. The name means 'hope,' a fitting choice in difficult times. The Septuagint renders it with varying Greek spellings (Thekouau, Thekkoue), while the parallel passage in 2 Chronicles 34:22 has the variant form Tokhath (Ketiv) or Toqhath (Qere). Such name variations were common in textual transmission, but the identification remains clear from context.

(2×) As a proper name, Tikvah appears in two distinct periods: the late monarchy (Huldah's father-in-law during Josiah's reform) and the post-exilic era (opposing Ezra's marriage reforms, according to one interpretation). The name's meaning—'hope'—may have been especially popular during times of uncertainty, expressing parental aspirations for their sons. The textual variants and Septuagint renderings show normal scribal variation in proper names across centuries of transmission, but modern translations consistently transliterate it as Tikvah or Tiqvah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tikvah, Tiqvah | es: Ticva, Tiqvah | fr: Tikvah, [תקוה] | de: Tikvah, [תקוה] 2Kgs 22:14; Ezra 10:15

תְּקוּמָה H8617 N-fs (1×)

ability to stand, power to stand (capacity to maintain one's position before an enemy or threat)

This noun denotes the capacity or power to stand one's ground, especially in the face of opposition or threat. Leviticus 26:37 uses it in a covenant curse context: if Israel disobeys, they will have no 'ability to stand before their enemies.' The term derives from the root קוּם (to stand, arise) and emphasizes not merely physical standing but the capacity to maintain position, resist defeat, and endure. It appears in military contexts where standing versus fleeing determines survival. The concept is both physical and metaphorical, encompassing courage, strength, and divine empowerment.

(1×) Denotes the capacity to stand firm or maintain one's position, especially in military or adversarial contexts. In Leviticus 26:37, God warns that covenant disobedience will result in Israel having no 'standing' (תְּקוּמָה) before enemies—they will lack the ability to resist or endure. The term implies more than physical posture; it encompasses the power to withstand attack, the courage to hold ground, and the strength to avoid collapse. Spanish 'resistencia' (resistance) and English 'ability to stand' both capture this sense of sustained endurance under pressure rather than merely upright posture. STANDING AND ESTABLISHING en: ability-to-stand | es: resistencia | fr: ability-à-se-tenir | de: ability-zu-stehen Lev 26:37

תָּקוֹמֵם H8618 Conj-w (1×)

those rising against (participle describing people who rise up in opposition or rebellion)

A participial form from the Hithpolel stem of the root קוּם (to rise), describing those who rise up against someone. In Psalm 139:21, the psalmist asks rhetorically whether he should not hate 'those rising against' the Lord—that is, God's enemies who rebel or oppose Him. The Hithpolel conveys intensive or reflexive action, suggesting determined, self-initiated rising in opposition. The term appears in contexts of conflict and rebellion, where adversaries actively position themselves against God or His people. The multilingual evidence consistently renders this as 'rising against,' 'opposing,' or 'resisting.'

(1×) Participial form describing those who rise up in active opposition or rebellion, specifically against the Lord. Psalm 139:21 uses this term for God's enemies who take their stand in defiance. The Hithpolel stem suggests intensive, determined action—these are not passive opponents but active insurgents. Spanish 'los que se levantan contra ti' (those who rise against you) and English 'those rising against you' both preserve the participial sense of ongoing, active opposition. The term implies military or political rebellion, positioning oneself as an adversary through deliberate uprising. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: and-those-rising-against-you | es: y-con-los-que-se-levantan-contra-ti | fr: et-dans-résister | de: und-jene-rising-against-du Ps 139:21

תָּקוֹעַ H8619 Prep-b (1×)

trumpet, ram's horn (blast instrument used for signaling; possibly infinitive 'blowing' rather than noun)

This term in Ezekiel 7:14 is textually uncertain. The traditional rendering takes it as a noun meaning 'trumpet' or 'blast instrument' (with the preposition בְּ: 'with the trumpet'). However, the morphology is difficult, and many scholars prefer to delete the preposition and read תָּקוֹעַ as an infinitive absolute meaning 'to blow' or 'blowing'—thus 'they blow the trumpet' rather than 'blow with the trumpet.' Both readings point to the same semantic field of trumpet-blowing as a call to military action. The context is one of war alarm that goes unheeded because of divine judgment.

(1×) Refers to a trumpet or ram's horn used for signaling, or possibly the act of blowing such an instrument. Ezekiel 7:14 describes trumpet-blowing in the context of war preparation, though the exact grammatical parsing is disputed. If read as a noun, it denotes the blast instrument itself (שׁוֹפָר or similar); if as an infinitive, it denotes the act of blowing. Either way, the semantic domain involves sound-signaling for military purposes. Multilingual evidence (Spanish 'trompeta,' French 'trompette') treats this as the instrument, while some German and French translations bracket the term, acknowledging textual difficulties. HORNS AND TRUMPETS

en: on-the-trumpet | es: con-la-trompeta | fr: trompette | de: [בתקוע] Ezek 7:14

תְּקוֹעַ H8620 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (7×)

Tekoa, a town in the Judean hills south of Bethlehem, home of the wise woman and the prophet Amos.

Tekoa was a hilltop settlement roughly five miles south of Bethlehem, overlooking the wilderness that bore its name. It is best known as the hometown of the prophet Amos (Amos 1:1) and the unnamed wise woman whom Joab enlisted to persuade David to recall Absalom (2 Sam 14:2). Rehoboam fortified it as part of Judah's defensive network (2 Chr 11:6), and Jehoshaphat's army assembled in the wilderness of Tekoa before the miraculous defeat of Moab and Ammon (2 Chr 20:20).

Tekoa (place name) (7×) The proper noun referring to the Judean town of Tekoa (modern Khirbet Tequ'a). All seven occurrences designate the same location. The genealogical notices in 1 Chronicles 2:24 and 4:5 personify the town as a 'son' of Ashhur, reflecting the common biblical idiom of ancestor-as-city-founder. German 'von Tekoa' and Spanish 'Tecoa' preserve the toponym with minor phonetic adaptation, while French and German occasionally leave the Hebrew untransliterated, underscoring how proper nouns can resist translation across languages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Tekoa, Teqo'a, and-in-Tekoa | es: Tecoa, Teqoa, Y-en-Teqoa | fr: Tekoa, [ובתקוע], [תקוע] | de: [ובתקוע], [תקוע], von-Tekoa 2Sam 14:2; 1Chr 2:24; 1Chr 4:5; 2Chr 11:6; 2Chr 20:20

תְּקוֹעִי H8621 Art / N-proper-fs (7×)

Tekoite, a gentilic adjective denoting a person from the town of Tekoa in Judah.

This gentilic adjective identifies individuals hailing from Tekoa. It appears in both masculine and feminine forms: 'the Tekoite' designates Ira son of Ikkesh among David's mighty warriors (2 Sam 23:26; 1 Chr 11:28; 27:9), while 'the Tekoite woman' identifies the wise woman Joab recruited (2 Sam 14:4, 9). In Nehemiah 3:5 and 27, 'the Tekoites' are a group who helped rebuild Jerusalem's walls, though their nobles refused to serve.

Tekoite (gentilic) (7×) The gentilic adjective meaning 'Tekoite' – a person originating from Tekoa. All seven occurrences carry this same demonymic sense, varying only in gender and number. The feminine form in 2 Samuel 14:4, 9 describes the wise woman, while the masculine singular in 2 Samuel 23:26 identifies the warrior Ira. The plural in Nehemiah 3:5, 27 designates a civic group. Spanish 'el tecoita' and English 'the Tekoite' both render the gentilic pattern straightforwardly, while French and German tend to leave the Hebrew form untranslated. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Tekoite, the-Tekoites, the-Teqoite | es: el-tecoita, el-tecoíta, el-teqoita | fr: [התקועי], [התקועים], [התקעים] | de: [התקועי], [התקועים], [התקעים] 2Sam 14:4; 2Sam 14:9; 2Sam 23:26; 1Chr 11:28; 1Chr 27:9

תְּקוּפָה H8622 N-fsc (4×)

circuit, cycle, completion; the turning point or full course of a period

This noun denotes the completion of a temporal cycle, most often a year's circuit. The phrase 'at the turn of the year' (Exod 34:22, 2 Chr 24:23) marks agricultural festivals at harvest season. In 1 Samuel 1:20, it describes the completion of a gestation period—'when the days had made their circuit,' Hannah bore Samuel. Psalm 19:6 uses it for the sun's completed circuit across the sky, from rising to setting, illustrating the comprehensive scope of God's revelation.

(4×) Emphasizes cyclical completion rather than mere passage of time—the full revolution that brings return to a starting point. Spanish 'vuelta/cambio' (turn/change) and French 'tourner' (to turn) capture the rotational aspect. The solar circuit in Psalm 19:6 provides the cosmic metaphor: just as the sun completes its arc across the heavens with nothing hidden from its heat, so God's law encompasses all life. The agricultural and gestational cycles similarly mark fulfilled patterns. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-his-circuit, at-turn-of, turn-of | es: a-la-vuelta-de, al-cambio-de, al-cumplirse | fr: [לתקופת], et-cycle, tourner-de | de: [לתקופת], bei-wende-von, und-sein-circuit Exod 34:22; 1Sam 1:20; 2Chr 24:23; Ps 19:6

תַּקִּיף H8623 Pro-r / Adj-ms (1×)

one stronger, the mighty one (comparative form: someone stronger than another)

This adjective, borrowed from Aramaic, means 'mighty' or 'strong,' and in Ecclesiastes 6:10 appears in a comparative construction with מִן: 'one stronger than he.' The context discusses human inability to contend with one who is mightier—likely referring to God or fate. The term is rare in Biblical Hebrew but common in Aramaic and Syriac, reflecting the influence of these cognate languages on late Biblical Hebrew. The comparative sense is crucial: not merely strong, but stronger than the human attempting to argue or strive.

(1×) Describes someone who is stronger or mightier in a comparative sense—specifically, stronger than the human who might try to contend or dispute. Ecclesiastes 6:10 uses this Aramaism to assert human limitation: one cannot contend with 'the one who is stronger than he.' The context suggests divine sovereignty or inexorable fate—whatever has been determined cannot be challenged because the determining power is 'stronger.' Spanish '(el que es fuerte)' and English 'one stronger' capture the comparative dimension. The term reflects linguistic borrowing from Aramaic, where תַּקִּיף is common vocabulary for 'mighty.' POWER AND ABILITY

en: one-stronger | es: (el-que-es-fuerte) | fr: (שתקיף) | de: [(שתקיף)] Eccl 6:10

תַּקִּיף H8624 Adj-fs (5×)

Strong, mighty, powerful; used of kingdoms, fearsome beasts, and divine wonders (Aramaic)

This Aramaic adjective taqqiph describes formidable strength in Daniel and Ezra. In Daniel 2:40 and 2:42, it characterizes the iron-like kingdom in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. Daniel 7:7 applies it to the terrifying fourth beast, while Daniel 4:3 (ET 3:33) ascribes it to God's mighty wonders. Ezra 4:20 notes that Jerusalem once had 'mighty kings' who ruled beyond the river. The word always carries overtones of dominance and awe-inspiring power.

(5×) Strong, mighty, powerful—describing entities that command fear or awe. Applied to an iron-crushing kingdom (Dan 2:40, 42), a terrifying beast (Dan 7:7), divine signs (Dan 4:3), and historically dominant kings (Ezra 4:20). Spanish distinguishes 'fuerte' (strong) from 'poderosos/poderosas' (powerful/mighty), hinting at the range from raw material strength to political and divine might that this single Aramaic adjective covers. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-strong, mighty, strong | es: fuerte, poderosas, poderosos | fr: [ותקיפא], [תקיפה], [תקיפין] | de: [ותקיפא], [תקיפה], [תקיפין] Ezra 4:20; Dan 2:40; Dan 2:42; Dan 4:3; Dan 7:7

תְּקַל H8625a V-Nifal-Perf-2ms (1×)

you have been weighed (Aramaic verb; examined and evaluated, as on scales)

This Aramaic verb appears in Daniel 5:27, in the famous 'handwriting on the wall' scene where Daniel interprets the cryptic message to Belshazzar: 'TEKEL—you have been weighed on the scales and found wanting.' The root תקל corresponds to Hebrew שָׁקַל (to weigh), and the passive form indicates that Belshazzar has been subjected to divine evaluation. The imagery of weighing evokes judicial assessment, where one's worth or righteousness is measured as if on a balance. This leads to the verdict: 'found wanting' (too light, deficient).

(1×) Aramaic passive perfect meaning 'you have been weighed,' used in the context of divine judgment and evaluation. Daniel 5:27 employs this term to announce that King Belshazzar has been subjected to God's weighing scales—a metaphor for moral and spiritual assessment. The image of weighing suggests precision, impartiality, and finality: one's deeds and character are measured exactly. Spanish 'has sido pesado' (you have been weighed) and French 'peser' (to weigh) preserve the root meaning, while the passive form emphasizes that Belshazzar is the object of divine scrutiny, not an active agent. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING

en: you-have-been-weighed | es: has-sido-pesado | fr: peser | de: [תקילתה] Dan 5:27

תְּקַל H8625b N-ms (2×)

shekel (Aramaic); unit of weight appearing in the 'writing on the wall' (Daniel 5)

This is the Aramaic form of Hebrew 'sheqel,' appearing in the cryptic message 'MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN' written on Belshazzar's palace wall. Daniel interprets TEKEL as 'you have been weighed on the scales and found wanting'—a devastating pun where the weight becomes the verdict. The term appears twice in Daniel 5:25, 27, both times as part of the divine sentence against Babylon. That a unit of weight becomes the instrument of moral judgment shows the prophetic genius for wordplay.

(2×) In the mysterious inscription, TEKEL functions both as a noun (shekel, a weight) and as a verb form (you have been weighed). Daniel's interpretation exploits this ambiguity: the king has been weighed on divine scales and found deficient. While Spanish and English transliterate the term as TEKEL, French shifts to 'peser' (to weigh), revealing the verbal dimension. The word's appearance in Aramaic rather than Hebrew reflects the Babylonian court setting—God speaks to Babylon in Babylon's own administrative language. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: TEKEL | es: TEKEL | fr: peser | de: [תקל] Dan 5:25; Dan 5:27

תַּקֵּן H8626 V-Piel-Perf-3ms (3×)

to make straight, arrange in order, set right what is crooked or disordered

This verb denotes the action of straightening, arranging, or putting in proper order. Qoheleth uses it to explore life's fundamental questions: what is crooked cannot be made straight (1:15), and who can straighten what God has made crooked (7:13)? Yet in 12:9, the Preacher himself 'arranged' proverbs in order, bringing wisdom into structured form. The word thus carries both cosmic and practical dimensions—acknowledging limits to human power to fix creation's distortions while affirming our capacity to order wisdom and knowledge. It's about alignment, correctness, proper arrangement.

(3×) Cross-linguistic glosses consistently emphasize straightening and arranging—Spanish 'enderezar,' French 'redresser,' German 'gerade machen.' All three Ecclesiastes passages explore the tension between divine sovereignty over what is crooked or straight and human responsibility to order wisdom. The verb appears in infinitive forms discussing ability or inability to straighten (1:15, 7:13) and in a perfect form describing the completed action of arranging proverbs (12:9). The evidence points to both physical straightening and intellectual/moral ordering. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS

en: he-arranged, to-be-straightened, to-straighten | es: compuso, enderezar, enderezarse | fr: redresser, à-redresser | de: gerade-machen Eccl 1:15; Eccl 7:13; Eccl 12:9

תִּקֵּן H8627 V-Hofal-Perf-3fs (1×)

I was established, restored (Aramaic Hophal: brought back into proper order or position)

This Aramaic verb in the Hophal stem appears in Daniel 4:36 (English 4:33), where Nebuchadnezzar testifies that after his period of insanity and humiliation, 'I was established' over his kingdom again. The root תקן means 'to be in order' or 'to arrange,' and in the passive Hophal it indicates being set right, restored, or re-established. The context is one of restoration after divine judgment: Nebuchadnezzar's reason returns, and he is reinstated to his throne. The verb conveys both mental restoration (sanity) and political restoration (kingship).

(1×) Aramaic Hophal form meaning 'I was established' or 'I was restored,' denoting restoration to proper order and position. In Daniel 4:36, Nebuchadnezzar describes his return to sanity and reinstatement to the throne after a period of madness. The Hophal passive emphasizes divine agency: God restored him, set him in order again. The root תקן conveys arranging, ordering, and establishing, so the verb indicates being brought back into rightful place. Spanish 'fui restablecido' (I was restored) and French 'établir' (to establish) both capture the sense of reinstatement and restoration to proper function. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: I-was-established | es: fui-restablecido | fr: établir | de: [התקנת] Dan 4:36

תָּקַע H8628 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-1cs / 3ms (70×)

To thrust, drive, blow (a trumpet), clap (hands), strike hands (in pledge) — physical impact producing sound or securing an object.

Taqa' is a vivid, physical verb whose core meaning is a forceful striking or thrusting action. Its most frequent use — blowing a trumpet or shofar — accounts for nearly 70% of occurrences and dominates the soundscape of biblical narrative, from the fall of Jericho (Josh 6:4-20) to Gideon's night raid (Judg 7:18-22). But the same root describes Jael driving a tent peg through Sisera's temple (Judg 4:21), Joab thrusting darts into Absalom's heart (2 Sam 18:14), and the unwise person 'striking hands' in a financial pledge (Prov 6:1). Arabic preserves the semantic spread beautifully: nafakha for blowing, gharaza for thrusting, and saffaqu for clapping — three different Arabic roots mapping onto one Hebrew verb's physical range.

1. blow a trumpet/horn (49×) The dominant sense: blowing a wind instrument — shofar, trumpet, or horn — to produce a signal, summons, alarm, or act of worship. With 49 occurrences, this covers the trumpet blasts at Sinai, the shofar at Jericho (Josh 6:4-20), Gideon's signal horns (Judg 7:18-22), and liturgical blowing on feast days (Num 10:3-10). Arabic nafakha (نَفَخَ, to blow) appears consistently, as does Korean bulda (불다, to blow). Spanish tocó and French souffla both mean 'sounded/blew.' The physical action is breath thrust forcefully through an instrument — the same core thrust that underlies the other senses. STRIKING AND BLOWING

en: Blow, and-blew, and-he-blew | es: Tocad, Y-tocaréis, Y-tocó | fr: et-blew, et-il-blew, et-il-souffla | de: blasen, blies, blow Num 10:3; Num 10:4; Num 10:5; Num 10:6

2. thrust/drive in (peg, stake, weapon) (12×) To thrust, drive, or fasten a physical object into something — a tent peg into the ground (Gen 31:25, pitching a tent), a peg through a skull (Judg 4:21, Jael and Sisera), a weapon into a body (Judg 3:21, Ehud's blade; 2 Sam 18:14, Joab's darts into Absalom). Arabic gharaza (غَرَزَ, to thrust in) and nasaba (نَصَبَ, to set up/pitch) distinguish this from the blowing sense. Spanish clavó ('nailed/drove') and French chassa ('drove') capture the violent penetration. The twelve occurrences span both construction (tent-pitching) and combat (weapon-thrusting). STRIKING AND BLOWING

en: and-I-will-drive-him, and-drove-it, and-fastened | es: Clavarán, Y-clavó, Y-lo-clavaré | fr: [תקעו], dressa, et-chassa-cela | de: [תקעו], blasen, fastened Gen 31:25; Exod 10:19; Judg 3:21; Judg 4:21

3. strike/pledge hands (as surety) (5×) To strike or clasp hands as a gesture of making a pledge, guarantee, or surety — a commercial act that Proverbs consistently warns against. 'If you have struck hands in pledge for your neighbor' (Prov 6:1); 'whoever strikes hands in pledge for a stranger will suffer' (Prov 11:15; 17:18; 22:26). Job 17:3 asks God himself to be surety. Arabic saffaqa (صَفَّقَ, to strike/clap in a deal) and daminina (ضامِنِي, guarantors) mark the commercial-legal dimension. This is physically the same striking motion, redirected into social contract — palm against palm sealing an obligation. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: among-those-who-strike-hands, strikes, striking-hands | es: dar-la-mano, dará-garantía?, de-los-que-estrechan- | fr: dans-frapper, frapper | de: blies Job 17:3; Prov 6:1; Prov 11:15; Prov 17:18; Prov 22:26

4. clap hands (in celebration) (2×) To clap hands together in celebration, praise, or mockery. Ps 47:1 — 'Clap your hands, all peoples!' Nah 3:19 — all who hear the news of Nineveh's fall clap their hands over it. Arabic saffaqu (صَفَّقُوا, they clapped) and Korean chida (치다, to strike/clap) confirm the celebratory or derisive gesture. Only two occurrences are clustered here, but the sense is distinct from pledging (sense 3) because the hands strike each other in expression rather than in obligation. STRIKING AND BLOWING

en: clap | es: aplaudan-, baten | fr: sonner | de: blies, clap Ps 47:1; Nah 3:19

5. be blown (passive of trumpet) (2×) The Nifal passive: a trumpet or horn is blown, without specifying who blows it. Isa 27:13 — 'In that day a great trumpet shall be blown'; Amos 3:6 — 'Is a trumpet blown in a city, and the people are not afraid?' Arabic yunfakhu (يُنفَخُ, passive of 'blow') and Korean bullini (불리니, 'is blown') consistently mark the passive voice. The two occurrences both carry eschatological or alarm-signal weight, and the agentless construction intensifies the sense of divine initiative or cosmic inevitability. STRIKING AND BLOWING

en: is-blown, shall-be-blown | es: se-tocará, será-tocado | fr: sonner | de: blasen, blies Isa 27:13; Amos 3:6

תְּקַע H8629 Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

blast of horn, trumpet sound (the sound produced by blowing a ram's horn or trumpet)

This noun denotes the blast or sound produced by blowing a horn or trumpet (שׁוֹפָר). Psalm 150:3 calls for praising God 'with horn-blast'—that is, with the sound of the ram's horn. The term derives from the root תָּקַע (to thrust, clap, blow a horn), and the construct form emphasizes the characteristic sound or blast of the instrument rather than the instrument itself. In Israel's worship, the shofar blast served both liturgical (festivals, worship) and military (alarm, assembly) functions. The term focuses on the auditory phenomenon—the piercing, resonant sound that summons attention.

(1×) Refers to the blast or sound produced by blowing a horn or trumpet, especially the shofar. Psalm 150:3 prescribes worship 'with blast of shofar,' emphasizing the auditory element of praise. The construct form תְּקַע binds this noun to שׁוֹפָר, specifying the blast characteristic of that instrument—loud, resonant, piercing. Multilingual evidence (Spanish 'sonido de,' French 'son,' German 'Schall') consistently renders this as 'sound' or 'blast,' pointing to the acoustic phenomenon. The term captures the aural dimension of worship and signaling, where the sound itself carries meaning and power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with-blast-of | es: con-sonido-de | fr: dans-son | de: mit-Schall-von Ps 150:3

תָּקַף H8630 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs / 3ms (4×)

to overpower, prevail against, overcome by force

A late Hebrew verb, likely an Aramaism, appearing in wisdom literature. Ecclesiastes uses it twice: one person overpowering a solitary individual (4:12), and the impossibility of a mere mortal prevailing against one stronger than himself (6:10, a ketiv reading). Job employs it for God's overwhelming dominance: 'You prevail forever against him' (14:20, 15:24). The semantic field centers on superior force subduing weaker opposition.

(4×) Denotes the exercise of superior strength to dominate or overcome. Job's usage is theological—God's irresistible power over mortals. Ecclesiastes applies it to human conflict, where strength in numbers matters ('a threefold cord is not quickly broken' follows 4:12's mention of overpowering). The multilingual evidence shows force-related vocabulary: Spanish 'dominar' (to dominate), French 'prévaloir' (to prevail). The Aramaic linguistic influence reflects the exile period's impact on Biblical Hebrew. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: [ketiv], overpowers-him, prevails | es: Lo-dominas, [el-que-es-fuerte], lo-dominan | fr: prévaloir, prévaloir-lui | de: [[שהתקיף]], [יתקפו], [תתקפהו] Job 14:20; Job 15:24; Eccl 4:12; Eccl 6:10

תְּקֶף H8631 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (5×)

To grow strong, become mighty; in Pael, to enforce or make stringent (Aramaic)

The Aramaic verb teqeph describes the process of becoming powerful or hardened. In Daniel 4, the great tree 'grew strong' (4:11, 20), mirroring Nebuchadnezzar's expanding dominion, and the king himself is told 'you have become strong' (4:22). A darker nuance emerges in 5:20, where hardened arrogance leads to downfall. The Pael stem in 6:7 shifts to causative meaning: 'to enforce' or make an interdict binding. Spanish captures both poles—'se hizo fuerte' (grew strong) and 'para imponer' (to enforce).

(5×) To grow strong, become mighty, or harden (Pe'al stem). Describes organic or political growth in power, applied to the symbolic tree (Dan 4:11, 20), the king's authority (Dan 4:22), and the dangerous hardening of a proud spirit (Dan 5:20). The Pael infinitive in Dan 6:7 extends the meaning to 'enforce, make stringent'—applying strength to a legal decree. The multilingual evidence shows translations oscillating between natural growth ('became strong') and volitional imposition ('to enforce'). POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-became-strong, and-become-strong, and-to-enforce | es: se-endureció, y-para-imponer, y-se-hizo-fuerte | fr: [ולתקפה], [ותקף], [ותקפת] | de: [ולתקפה], [ותקף], [ותקפת] Dan 4:11; Dan 4:20; Dan 4:22; Dan 5:20; Dan 6:7

תֻּקֶף H8632a Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

might, strength (Aramaic noun denoting power or forceful capability)

An Aramaic noun meaning 'might' or 'strength,' appearing in Daniel 4:30 (English 4:27) in Nebuchadnezzar's boastful declaration about his own power: 'by the might of my strength.' The term emphasizes forceful capacity—the ability to accomplish great things through power. In the immediate context, Nebuchadnezzar attributes his building achievements to his own might, which sets up the divine rebuke that follows. The word appears in construct form, bound to 'my strength,' creating an intensified expression of self-reliant power. This serves as a foil to the theme of God's sovereign might.

(1×) Aramaic noun denoting might, strength, or power—specifically the capacity to accomplish and build through force. Daniel 4:30 uses this term in Nebuchadnezzar's prideful claim: 'by might of my strength (I have built this kingdom).' The construct phrase intensifies the sense of personal power and agency. The term appears in contexts highlighting human versus divine power, where human 'might' proves illusory apart from God. Spanish 'fuerza' (force/strength) and French 'force' both render the core meaning of powerful capability, while the context emphasizes self-reliant hubris that precedes humbling judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-might-of | es: con-la-fuerza-de | fr: force | de: [בתקף] Dan 4:30

תֻּקֶף H8632b Conj-w / N-msd (1×)

the strength, the might (Aramaic emphatic form; definite power or dominion)

An Aramaic noun in emphatic (definite) form, meaning 'the strength' or 'the might.' In Daniel 2:37, Daniel tells Nebuchadnezzar that the God of heaven has given him 'the kingdom, the power, the strength, and the glory.' The emphatic ending -א functions like the Hebrew definite article, specifying 'the (particular) strength' that God has granted. The term appears in a series of royal attributes—sovereignty, power, might, glory—all attributed to divine bestowal rather than human achievement. This theological framing contrasts with the king's later hubris in Daniel 4.

(1×) Aramaic emphatic noun meaning 'the strength' or 'the might,' referring to royal power granted by God. Daniel 2:37 lists this among the attributes God has given Nebuchadnezzar: kingdom, power, strength, and glory. The emphatic form תָּקְפָּא (with definite ending) specifies this as the particular, recognized might belonging to the king—yet sourced in divine gift. Spanish 'la fuerza' (the strength/force) and French 'force' capture the definite, concrete sense. The theological context emphasizes that all royal might derives from God's sovereign grant, not inherent human capacity. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: and-the-strength | es: y-la-fuerza | fr: et-force | de: [וחקפא] Dan 2:37

תֹּקֶף H8633 N-ms (3×)

power, strength, might, especially in royal or imperial contexts

This noun denotes power and strength, particularly as exercised by rulers and kingdoms. In Esther, it describes the authoritative power with which Queen Esther writes (9:29) and the mighty acts of King Ahasuerus (10:2)—paired with 'might' (gevurah) to emphasize royal strength. Daniel uses it for 'the strength of his whole kingdom,' referring to imperial power brought to bear in political action. The term often appears in contexts of official decrees, royal acts, and political might. It suggests not merely abstract strength but power actively deployed, authority exercised with force.

(3×) Multilingual evidence shows glosses emphasizing authority and power—Spanish 'autoridad' and 'poder,' French 'puissance.' Some versions preserve the Hebrew transliteration, marking it as a technical term for royal might. All three occurrences appear in late biblical texts (Esther, Daniel) dealing with Persian imperial contexts, suggesting this may be a loan word or specialized term for political power. The consistent association with royal decrees and acts of state suggests strength exercised through official authority. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: authority, his-power, with-strength-of | es: autoridad, con-fuerza-de, su-poder | fr: [תקף], [תקפו], puissance | de: [בתקף], [תקף], [תקפו] Esth 9:29; Esth 10:2; Dan 11:17

תַּרְאֲלָה H8634 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Taralah (place name; town in Benjamin's tribal territory, Joshua 18:27)

A town name appearing in the boundary list of Benjamin's inheritance. Joshua 18:27 places Taralah among the cities allotted to the tribe of Benjamin in the central hill country. The location has not been definitively identified in modern geography, though it was clearly known in ancient times. The Septuagint renders it Θαφεηλα or Θεραλα, showing slight variation in Greek vocalization. Like many town names in the tribal allotment lists, Taralah serves primarily as a geographical marker in Israel's division of the land.

(1×) Place name designating a town within Benjamin's tribal inheritance. The single occurrence in Joshua 18:27 situates Taralah in the administrative geography of early Israel, though precise modern identification remains uncertain. Translations across languages consistently transliterate the name (English 'Taralah,' Spanish 'Taralá,' French 'Taralah,' German 'Taralah'), treating it as a fixed toponym rather than a common noun with independent meaning. The Greek tradition preserves similar forms, confirming the name's antiquity and stability in textual transmission. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Taralah | es: y-Taralá | fr: et-Taralah | de: und-Taralah Josh 18:27

תַּרְבּוּת H8635 N-fsc (1×)

brood of, offspring of (contemptuous term for descendants or progeny)

This noun means 'increase' or 'brood,' but in Numbers 32:14 carries a distinctly contemptuous tone. Moses rebukes the Reubenites and Gadites as 'a brood of sinful men'—that is, offspring who have inherited and perpetuate their ancestors' sinfulness. The term derives from a root meaning 'to increase' or 'multiply,' but in this context emphasizes not merely quantity but quality: they are an increase of evil, a proliferation of rebellion. The word parallels מְרִבִּית in 1 Samuel 2:33, which also denotes 'increase' in a negative sense. The contemptuous force comes from calling adult men a 'brood,' as if they were merely breeding more sin.

(1×) Denotes a brood, offspring, or progeny, used contemptuously in Numbers 32:14 to characterize the Reubenites and Gadites as 'a brood of sinful men.' The term emphasizes hereditary continuity of sin—these are the offspring who perpetuate their fathers' rebellion. The root sense of 'increase' takes on negative moral coloring: they are an increase of wickedness, a multiplication of transgression. Spanish 'cría' (brood, offspring) and English 'brood' both capture the contemptuous overtone of treating grown men as mere breeding stock for sin. The term underscores generational patterns of disobedience. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: brood-of | es: cría-de | fr: brood-de | de: brood-von Num 32:14

תַּרְבִּית H8636 Conj-w / N-fs (7×)

Increase, interest, or usurious profit gained through lending; consistently paired with 'neshekh' in legal prohibitions.

This noun denotes financial increase or profit extracted from a loan, virtually always appearing alongside neshekh ('interest' or 'bite'). Together the two terms form a hendiadys covering all forms of exploitative lending. The Torah flatly prohibits both (Lev 25:36), the prophets condemn them as markers of social injustice (Ezek 18:8, 13, 17; 22:12), and Proverbs warns that wealth gathered through usury will ultimately pass to the generous (Prov 28:8). The Arabic cognate riba, still the standard Islamic finance term for prohibited interest, shares the same Semitic root.

increase / usurious interest (7×) Financial increase or usurious profit gained through lending, always in the context of economic ethics. The word is paired with neshekh in six of its seven occurrences, forming a comprehensive prohibition against exploitative interest. Leviticus 25:36 (Holiness Code) forbids it outright; Ezekiel 18:8, 13, 17 and 22:12 treat it as a litmus test for righteousness; Proverbs 28:8 promises redistributive justice. Spanish 'interés' and French 'accroître' both capture the root idea of growth or increase, while English 'usury' carries the stronger connotation of unlawful gain that the prophetic context demands. INTEREST USURY

en: [and-usury], and-increase, and-usury | es: (y-con-interés), [y-con-interés], e-interés | fr: et-(ותרבית), et-[ובתרבית], et-accroître | de: [(ותרבית)], [[ובתרבית]], [ותרבית] Lev 25:36; Prov 28:8; Ezek 18:8; Ezek 18:13

רָגַל H8637 V-Tiftl-Perf-1cs (1×)

taught to walk, trained to walk (caused to practice walking, as in teaching a child to take steps)

This denominative verb from the root רגל (foot) appears in Hosea 11:3, where God tenderly recalls teaching Ephraim to walk, like a parent guiding a toddler's first steps. The verb form (Tiphel or Pilpel) suggests intensive or causative action: not merely walking but being taught or trained to walk through repeated practice. The imagery is profoundly intimate—God as parent bending down to guide Israel's fledgling steps. Yet the pathos is that Israel did not recognize who was teaching them. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'enseñé a caminar,' French 'enseigner') preserves this pedagogical nuance.

(1×) Means 'I taught to walk' or 'I trained to walk,' depicting God's tender care in teaching Israel (Ephraim) to walk, as a parent teaches a young child. Hosea 11:3 uses this rare denominative verb to evoke intimate parental instruction—taking the child by the arms, guiding each step, providing stability. The intensive verbal form suggests repeated action, patient training. Spanish 'enseñé a caminar' (I taught to walk) and the pedagogical sense in French both capture this nurturing instruction. The metaphor underscores God's patient formation of Israel from infancy, making their later rejection all the more tragic. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: taught-to-walk | es: enseñé-a-caminar | fr: enseigner | de: [תרגלתי] Hos 11:3

תִּרְגֵּם H8638 Conj-w / V-Pual-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

translated (Aramaic passive participle; rendered from one language to another)

This Aramaic quadriliteral verb means 'to interpret' or 'to translate,' and appears in Ezra 4:7 as a passive participle describing a letter that was 'translated' into Aramaic. The root תרגם is the source of the term 'Targum,' the Aramaic translations/paraphrases of the Hebrew Bible. The verb denotes rendering speech or writing from one language into another, making it intelligible to a different audience. In the context of Ezra, Persian officials sent a letter in Aramaic script and Aramaic language—i.e., 'translated' into the imperial administrative tongue. The term has cognates in Assyrian (targumānu, interpreter) and Arabic.

(1×) Aramaic passive participle meaning 'translated' or 'interpreted,' referring to rendering a document from one language into another. Ezra 4:7 describes a letter written in Aramaic script and 'translated' (interpreted in Aramaic language), indicating bilingual administrative communication. The verb is the etymological source of 'Targum,' the Aramaic renderings of Hebrew Scripture. Spanish 'traducida' (translated) captures the semantic core of cross-linguistic rendering. The term implies not merely copying but interpretive transfer across language boundaries, making content accessible to a different linguistic community—in this case, the Persian imperial court. INTERPRET TRANSLATE en: and-translated | es: y-traducida | fr: [ומתרגם] | de: [ומתרגם] Ezra 4:7

תַּרְדֵּמָה H8639 N-fs (7×)

A deep, supernatural sleep sent by God, producing trance-like insensibility; distinct from ordinary slumber.

Unlike ordinary sleep, tardemah describes a profound, divinely induced unconsciousness. God cast it upon Adam before creating Eve (Gen 2:21), upon Abram during the covenant of the pieces (Gen 15:12), and upon Saul's camp so David could approach undetected (1 Sam 26:12). In Job 4:13 and 33:15 it is the state in which God communicates through visions. Isaiah 29:10 uses it metaphorically as a 'spirit of deep sleep' poured out to describe spiritual insensibility. The Septuagint renders it variously as ekstasis ('trance') and thambos ('astonishment'), capturing its otherworldly quality.

deep sleep (7×) A deep, divinely imposed sleep producing trance-like unconsciousness, distinct from ordinary rest. In its seven occurrences it consistently involves supernatural agency: God 'causes it to fall upon' a person (Gen 2:21; 15:12; 1 Sam 26:12), or it descends during nocturnal visions (Job 4:13; 33:15). Proverbs 19:15 extends the image to describe the stupor of laziness, while Isaiah 29:10 uses it as a metaphor for spiritual numbness. Spanish 'sopor profundo' and German 'tiefen Schlaf' both stress the depth of this sleep, but the Hebrew carries an additional nuance of divine causation that these translations only partly convey. SLEEP AND SLUMBER

en: and-a-deep-sleep, deep-sleep, deep-sleep-of | es: profundo-sueño, sopor-profundo, sueño-profundo | fr: [תרדמה], et-un-profond-dormir, profond-dormir | de: [תרדמה], einen-tiefen-Schlaf, tief-schlafe-von Gen 2:21; Gen 15:12; 1Sam 26:12; Job 4:13; Job 33:15

תִּרְהָקָה H8640 N-proper-ms (2×)

Tirhaqah; Ethiopian pharaoh of Egypt's 25th dynasty who opposed Sennacherib

This king of Ethiopia (2 Kings 19:9; Isaiah 37:9) marched against the Assyrian invader Sennacherib, providing a strategic distraction during Hezekiah's crisis. The name appears in Egyptian records as T-h-r-q and in Assyrian annals as Tarqu, confirming the biblical account's historical accuracy. He ruled as part of the Nubian 25th Dynasty, when Ethiopian kings controlled Egypt. The Septuagint renders his name as Tharaka, showing the typical Greek adaptation of Semitic names.

(2×) As a historical figure, Tirhaqah represents foreign intervention in Judah's favor—an Ethiopian pharaoh whose military movements created breathing room for beleaguered Jerusalem. The parallel accounts in Kings and Isaiah preserve identical spelling, unusual for names transmitted across different literary contexts. Egyptian and Assyrian sources confirm not only the name but the geopolitical situation: a Nubian dynasty ruling Egypt and challenging Assyrian expansion. Modern scholarship dates his reign to roughly 690-664 BC, making the biblical chronology complex but defensible. PHARAOH TITLE

en: Tirhaqah | es: Tirhaca, Tirhacá | fr: Tirhaqah, [תרהקה] | de: Tirhaqah, [תרהקה] 2Kgs 19:9; Isa 37:9

תְּרוּמָה H8641 N-fpc / 1cs (76×)

A contribution or offering set apart for sacred use; the portion lifted off or separated for God, the priests, or the sanctuary.

Terumah denotes something deliberately separated from the whole and elevated as a gift to God. In its broadest use it covers any voluntary contribution brought for sacred purposes — the gold, silver, and fabric donated for building the tabernacle (Exod 25:2-3), or agricultural firstfruits presented at the sanctuary (Deut 12:6). More technically, it refers to the priest's portion physically lifted from the sacrifice or harvest and set aside as their due (Exod 29:27-28). Spanish and French translations capture this elevation with 'ofrenda alzada' and 'offrande élevée,' while German 'Hebopfer' (heave-offering) preserves the ancient lifting gesture. In one unusual occurrence (Prov 29:4) it appears to mean exactions or bribes that drain a nation.

1. contribution, sacred offering (68×) The general sense of a voluntary contribution or sacred gift — anything separated from one's possessions and dedicated to God or the sanctuary. This is the dominant usage across the Pentateuch, where terumah covers the donations for the tabernacle (Exod 25:2; 35:5), agricultural firstfruits (Num 15:19-21), and the sacred land tract in Ezekiel's temple vision (Ezek 45:1). Spanish 'ofrenda alzada' and German 'Hebopfer' both echo the root idea of something lifted or raised up as a dedicated gift. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: contribution, contribution-of, contribution-of- | es: La-ofrenda-alzada, la-ofrenda, la-ofrenda-alzada | fr: offrande-élevée | de: Hebopfer, Hebopfer-von, [תרומת] Exod 25:2; Exod 25:3; Exod 35:5; Exod 35:21

2. heave-offering, priestly portion (7×) The technical priestly term for the portion physically elevated or separated from a sacrifice, harvest, or tithe and assigned to the priests as their rightful share. This heave-offering is distinguished in passages like Exod 29:27-28 and Num 18:8-11, where it stands alongside the wave-offering (tenufah). French 'élévation-offrande' and the German variant 'Hebeopfer' preserve the ritual gesture of lifting that marks this priestly allocation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-heave-offering, heave-offering, heave-offering-of | es: la-ofrenda-elevada, ofrenda-elevada, ofrenda-elevada-de | fr: et-élévation-offrande, le-élévation-offrande, leur-élévation-offrande | de: Hebeopfer, der-Hebeopfer, heave-Opfergabe-von Exod 29:27; Exod 29:28; Exod 30:13

3. (1×) A singular usage in Prov 29:4 where the word appears to denote forced exactions, bribes, or unjust levies — 'a man of terumot tears down the land.' English renders it 'bribes,' Spanish 'tributos.' The shift from sacred contribution to corrupt extraction may be ironic wordplay, applying the vocabulary of consecrated giving to its moral opposite. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bribes | es: tributos | fr: תרומות | de: [תרומות] Prov 29:4

תְּרוּמִיָּה H8642 N-fs (1×)

contribution, offering (a secondary or subdivision portion set apart as sacred)

This denominative noun derives from תְּרוּמָה (contribution, heave offering) and denotes something that belongs to or is associated with a contribution—a kind of secondary or attendant offering. The form functions adjectivally (substantivized), meaning 'what pertains to a contribution.' In Ezekiel 48:12, it describes a strip of land designated for the priests within Ezekiel's visionary temple scheme. However,

BDB suggests the text is likely corrupt and should simply read תְּרוּמָה. The semantic field remains the domain of sacred contributions and dedicated portions set apart for priestly use.

(1×) Denotes a contribution or offering, specifically a subdivision or attendant portion within a larger sacred allotment. Ezekiel 48:12 uses this term (or possibly a corrupted form of תְּרוּמָה) to describe the priestly portion of land in the eschatological temple vision. The denominative form suggests 'what belongs to a contribution'—a secondary offering or subportion. Spanish 'ofrenda alzada' (heave offering) and French 'offrande' point to the semantic domain of sacred contributions. The term fits Ezekiel's detailed schema of land division, where nested layers of sanctity create zones of increasing holiness toward the temple center. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: contribution | es: ofrenda-alzada | fr: offrande | de: [תרומיה] Ezek 48:12

תְּרוּעָה H8643 Conj-w / N-fs (36×)

A shout or trumpet blast — war cry, alarm signal, or joyful acclamation before God

The noun תְּרוּעָה captures the full spectrum of loud, collective human sound in ancient Israel's life — from the terrifying war cry on the battlefield to the jubilant shout of worship. Its root רוע means 'to raise a shout,' and the noun carries that explosive, communal energy whether sounded by voice or trumpet. In military contexts it is the alarm blast that mobilizes troops (Num 10:5-6) or the battle cry that topples Jericho's walls (Josh 6:5, 20). In liturgical settings it becomes the joyful acclamation before God's presence, as when David brought the ark to Jerusalem 'with shouting and the sound of the horn' (2 Sam 6:15).

1. war cry or alarm signal (14×) The war cry or alarm signal — a shout or trumpet blast sounded in the context of battle, military mobilization, or warning. Numbers 10:5-6 prescribes the תְּרוּעָה blown on silver trumpets as the signal for breaking camp, while Amos 1:14 and Zephaniah 1:16 associate it with the terror of divine judgment. English 'alarm,' Spanish 'alarma,' and French 'alarme' converge on the military-signal reading, distinguishing it from the other senses. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: alarm, alarm-of, and-alarm | es: aclamación, alarma, con-grito-de-guerra | fr: [ותרועה], [תרועת], alarme | de: [בתרועה], [התרועה], [ותרועה] Lev 23:24; Lev 25:9; Num 10:5; Num 10:6

2. shout or loud cry (13×) A general loud shout or clamor — a collective outcry not necessarily tied to joy or warfare but carrying raw vocal intensity. When the ark entered the Israelite camp, the Philistines heard the תְּרוּעָה and trembled (1 Sam 4:5-6). Joshua 6:5 and 6:20 describe the people's shout that accompanied the trumpet blast at Jericho. Spanish 'grito' and French 'cri' in these contexts confirm the sense of a powerful, undifferentiated human shout. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: a-shout, and-with-shouting, in-shouting | es: con-aclamación, con-grito, con-grito-de-guerra | fr: cri, cri-de-guerre, et-cri-de-guerre | de: Laerm, [בתרועה], [ובתרועה] Josh 6:5; Josh 6:20; 1Sam 4:5; 1Sam 4:6

3. joyful shout or acclamation (9×) The joyful shout or acclamation — a cry of triumph, jubilation, or praise directed to God in worship and celebration. Numbers 23:21 speaks of 'the shout of a king' among Israel, and Psalm 27:6 promises sacrifices 'with shouts of joy.' Spanish 'júbilo,' French 'acclamation,' and German 'Jauchzen' all point to an emotionally positive, doxological register that sets this sense apart from the battlefield alarm or neutral outcry. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: and-shout-of, shouting, the-joyful-shout | es: aclamación, con-aclamación, con-júbilo | fr: acclamation, avec-shouting, cri-de-joie | de: Jauchzen, Laerm, der-joyful-jauchzen Num 23:21; 2Sam 6:15; Job 8:21; Job 33:26; Ps 27:6

תְּרוּפָה H8644 Prep-l / N-fs (1×)

healing, medicinal purpose (the restorative or curative function)

This noun denotes healing or cure, appearing in Ezekiel 47:12 in the vision of the river flowing from the temple. The leaves of the trees along this river are described as being 'for healing'—that is, they possess medicinal or restorative properties. The term derives from a root meaning 'to heal' or 'to cure,' and the context is eschatological: in the renewed creation flowing from God's presence, even vegetation serves therapeutic purposes. This anticipates Revelation 22:2, where the leaves of the tree of life are 'for the healing of the nations.' The imagery conveys comprehensive restoration and wholeness.

(1×) Refers to healing, cure, or medicinal purpose—specifically the restorative function of the leaves in Ezekiel's temple vision. Ezekiel 47:12 describes trees whose leaves are לִתְרוּפָה ('for healing'), indicating therapeutic properties. The noun emphasizes purpose or function: these leaves exist to heal, to restore, to cure. Spanish 'sanidad' (health/healing) and French 'remède' (remedy) both capture the medicinal sense. The eschatological context suggests not merely physical cure but comprehensive renewal—healing as restoration of edenic wholeness, where creation itself mediates divine life and health to humanity. PLAGUES AND WOUNDS

en: for-healing | es: para-sanidad | fr: remède | de: [לתרופה] Ezek 47:12

תִּרְזָה H8645 N-fs (1×)

a cypress, holm-tree (uncertain tree species, possibly cypress or oak)

A tree name of uncertain identification, appearing only in Isaiah 44:14. Traditionally rendered 'cypress' (AV) or 'holm-tree' (RV), though the exact species remains debated. The context lists this tree alongside cedars and oaks as timber used for idol-making—the prophet satirizes those who use the same wood to warm themselves, bake bread, and carve gods. The tree is clearly a substantial hardwood suitable for carving. Some scholars suggest an oak species; others prefer cypress. The Vulgate reads 'ilex' (holm oak). Multilingual translations show the uncertainty: Spanish 'encina' (oak), while English and others transliterate or use 'cypress.'

(1×) Denotes a tree species, probably a cypress or type of oak, used as timber for carving idols. Isaiah 44:14 satirically describes an idol-maker selecting this tree (alongside oak and cedar) for his craft. The tree must be durable, workable hardwood—hence identifications ranging from cypress to holm oak. The exact species is less important than the functional role: this is valuable timber misused for worthless idols. Spanish 'encina' (oak) reflects one tradition; English 'cypress' another. The term participates in Isaiah's biting satire of idolatry: the same wood that warms and feeds is carved into a 'god' that cannot save. GREEN LUXURIANT TREES

en: a-cypress | es: encina | fr: [תרזה] | de: [תרזה] Isa 44:14

תֶּרַח H8646 N-proper-ms (13×)

Terah — Abraham's father and patriarch of the migration from Ur to Haran; also a wilderness camp on the Exodus route.

Primarily the name of Abraham's father, the son of Nahor, who initiated the family's departure from Ur of the Chaldeans toward Canaan but settled in Haran, where he died at 205 years (Gen 11:24-32). Joshua 24:2 remembers him as one who served other gods beyond the Euphrates — a striking note of idolatry in the patriarchal lineage. The genealogical thread runs through 1 Chronicles 1:26. A second, less prominent Terah is an Israelite encampment during the wilderness wanderings (Num 33:27-28). The etymology may connect to an Akkadian word for ibex or a divine name. German 'Terach' and Spanish 'Téraj' both reflect the same proper name.

Terah (proper name) (13×) The proper name Terah, identifying two referents: (a) Abraham's father, son of Nahor, who left Ur and settled in Haran where he died (Gen 11:24-32; 1 Chr 1:26; Josh 24:2), and (b) an Israelite wilderness station between Tahath and Mithkah on the Exodus route (Num 33:27-28). The eleven genealogical occurrences cluster tightly in Genesis 11, while the two camp references appear in Numbers 33. Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'Téraj,' German 'Terach,' French 'Terah' — all transliterate the single Hebrew name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Terach, Terah, from-Terah | es: Teraj, Téraj, de-Taraj | fr: Terah, [תרח], dans-Terah | de: Terach, Terachs, Terah Gen 11:24; Gen 11:25; Gen 11:26; Gen 11:27

תִּרְחָנָה H8647 N-proper-ms (1×)

Tirhanah (personal name; descendant of Caleb in Judah's genealogy, 1 Chronicles 2:48)

A personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 2:48 within the genealogy of Caleb. Tirhanah was a child (gender uncertain) born to Caleb by his concubine Maacah. The name appears only once in Scripture, and its etymology is unclear. The Septuagint offers varied transliterations: Θαραμ, Θαρχνα, Θαραανα, showing the difficulty ancient translators faced with this rare name. Like many genealogical names, it serves primarily to document family lineage rather than to convey semantic meaning. The name stands as a historical marker of Calebite clans.

(1×) Personal name of a descendant in Caleb's lineage, specifically a child of Caleb and his concubine Maacah according to 1 Chronicles 2:48. The single biblical occurrence provides no etymological clarity, and the gender is uncertain (the name could be masculine or feminine). Greek transliteration varied widely, suggesting the name was already uncommon or difficult. Translations consistently transliterate (Spanish 'Tirjana,' English 'Tirhanah'), treating this as an opaque proper name. The term functions within genealogical record-keeping, anchoring this individual within Judah's tribal structure without offering broader semantic content. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tirchanah | es: Tirjana | fr: [תרחנה] | de: [תרחנה] 1Chr 2:48

תְּרִין H8648 Number-msc (4×)

two (Aramaic number); masculine תְּרֵין, feminine תַּרְתֵּין

The Aramaic numeral 'two,' appearing in Daniel and Ezra. It combines with 'ten' to form 'twelve' (Ezra 6:17, Dan 4:26). Daniel 5:31 records Darius the Mede receiving the kingdom 'at about sixty-two years old.' Ezra 4:24 dates events to 'the second year' of Darius. Like other Aramaic numerals, it shows gender agreement typical of Semitic languages—masculine form with masculine nouns, feminine with feminine.

(4×) Functions as the basic numeral 'two' in Biblical Aramaic administrative and narrative texts. The multilingual glosses show straightforward equivalence: Spanish 'dos,' French 'deux,' English 'two.' When combined with 'ten' (עֲשַׂר), it forms 'twelve'—the number of he-goats and bulls offered at the temple dedication (Ezra 6:17). The gender-inflected forms reflect standard Northwest Semitic grammar, distinguishing masculine and feminine counted objects. NUMBER TWO TWELVE

en: and-two, two, two- | es: doce, dos, y-dos | fr: [תר], [תרתין], deux | de: [ותרתין], [תר], [תרתין] Ezra 4:24; Ezra 6:17; Dan 4:29; Dan 5:31

H8649 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

deceit, deception (fraudulent misrepresentation, especially in false prophecy)

This noun denotes deceit, deception, or fraudulent misrepresentation. In Jeremiah 14:14, God condemns false prophets who prophesy 'the deceit of their own heart'—that is, self-generated lies they fraudulently attribute to divine revelation. The term emphasizes deliberate deception and falsehood, particularly in the context of false prophecy. The root suggests trickery and misleading, and the usage here highlights the moral culpability of those who claim divine authority for their own fabrications. Deceit here is not mere error but willful fraud, especially dangerous when clothed in religious authority.

(1×) Refers to deceit, deception, or fraudulent misrepresentation—specifically the lies fabricated by false prophets who claim divine origin for their own inventions. Jeremiah 14:14 condemns prophets who speak 'the deceit of their heart,' emphasizing the internal origin of their falsehood (not from God) and its fraudulent nature. Spanish 'engaño' (deception) captures the sense of deliberate misleading. The term implies malicious intent: these are not honest mistakes but calculated lies designed to deceive. In prophetic contexts, such deceit is particularly heinous because it falsely invokes God's name to authorize human falsehood. DECEPTION AND BEGUILING

en: and-deceit-of | es: (y-engaño-de) | fr: [(ותרמית)] | de: [(ותרמית)] Jer 14:14

תָּרְמָה H8649a Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

in deceit, treacherously (possibly corrupt text; alternate reading suggests 'to Arumah' as place name)

This term in Judges 9:31 is textually problematic. The Masoretic text reads בְּתָרְמָה, which could mean 'in deceit' or 'treacherously,' but the form is unusual and the meaning awkward in context. Many scholars propose emending to בַּאֲרוּמָה, understanding this as the place name Arumah mentioned in verse 41. If retained as 'in deceit,' it would describe the messengers coming secretly or treacherously to warn Abimelech. The uncertainty is reflected in multilingual translations: Spanish 'en Torma' treats it as a place name, while English 'in deceit' preserves the Masoretic sense. The text likely underwent early corruption.

(1×) Uncertain term, possibly meaning 'in deceit' or 'treacherously,' though textual corruption is likely. If the Masoretic reading is correct, Judges 9:31 would describe messengers coming 'in deceit' (secretly, treacherously) to inform Abimelech of Gaal's presence. However, the form is morphologically strange, and the context suggests a place name (Arumah, mentioned in v. 41) is more likely original. English 'in deceit' represents one interpretive tradition; Spanish 'en Torma' treats it as a toponym. The semantic field involves either secret/deceptive action or a geographical location, depending on text-critical decisions. SECRECY AND HIDING

en: in-deceit | es: en-Torma | fr: dans-deceit | de: in-deceit Judg 9:31

תַּרְמִית H8649b N-fs (5×)

Deceitfulness, treachery; the quality of deception especially in false prophecy and faithless hearts

Tarmith denotes a deep-seated deceitfulness—the treachery that lodges in the human heart and on the tongue. Jeremiah uses it to diagnose Israel's spiritual sickness: the people cling to 'perpetual deceit' (8:5) and false prophets speak from 'the deceit of their own heart' (14:14; 23:26). The psalmist in 119:118 dismisses those whose falsehood (sheqer) is itself deceitful (tarmith). Zephaniah 3:13 envisions a purified remnant whose tongue harbors no deceit.

(5×) Deceitfulness, treachery—a quality of persistent falsehood rooted in the heart or tongue. Appears exclusively in prophetic and wisdom contexts: paired with sheqer ('falsehood') in Ps 119:118 and Jer 23:26, with kazav ('lie') and 'awlah ('injustice') in Zeph 3:13, and describing incorrigible apostasy in Jer 8:5. Spanish 'engaño' and English 'deceit' align closely, while the French rendering 'Tubal' for one occurrence appears to be a textual anomaly, underscoring how this rare noun can confound translators. DECEIT AND TREACHERY

en: [ketiv], deceit, deceit-of | es: [y-engaños], al-engaño, engaño-de | fr: Tubal, [[ותרמות]], [בתרמית] | de: [[ותרמות]], [בתרמית], [תרמית] Ps 119:118; Jer 8:5; Jer 14:14; Jer 23:26; Zeph 3:13

תֹּרֶן H8650 Prep-k (3×)

mast of a ship, or metaphorically a solitary pole or standard

This noun primarily denotes the mast of a ship—the tall pole that supports sails. Ezekiel 27:5 uses it in describing the ship Tyre as a magnificent vessel with its mast. Isaiah employs the image metaphorically: a standard-pole on a mountaintop (30:17) or a signal-staff (33:23), both suggesting something solitary and prominent. The comparison pictures Israel reduced to isolation like a lone pole standing where once was a forest. The word thus moves from literal nautical terminology to poetic image of desolation and visibility—something standing alone, exposed, either for signaling or as a remnant.

(3×) Cross-linguistic glosses consistently render as 'mast' or 'mástil,' though some preserve transliterations. The Spanish and French particularly emphasize the nautical sense while also using terms like 'pilier' (pillar). The Isaiah passages use ship imagery metaphorically—a people reduced to a single pole on a mountain where armies once stood. Ezekiel gives the literal maritime sense. The multilingual consensus supports both concrete (ship's mast) and figurative (solitary standard) meanings, with the unifying image being a tall, prominent, solitary pole. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: mast, of-their-mast, on | es: como-mástil, mástil, su-mástil | fr: [כתרן], [תרנם], pilier | de: [כתרן], [תרן], [תרנם] Isa 30:17; Isa 33:23; Ezek 27:5

תְּרַע H8651 Prep-l / N-msc (2×)
gate, door (Aramaic); entrance to furnace or palace court
The Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew 'sha'ar,' this word appears twice in Daniel: the door of the fiery furnace (3:26) and the gate of the king, meaning the palace court or administrative center (2:49). Like Arabic 'bab' (which can mean both 'gate' and 'court'), the term extends from physical entrance to institutional location. Daniel sits 'in the gate of the king'—not at the doorway but in the governmental apparatus itself. The term shows how architectural features metonymically represent the institutions housed within.

(2×) In Daniel 2:49, 'gate of the king' parallels Hebrew usage where the gate represents the seat of administration and justice—Daniel sits at the center of power. In 3:26, Nebuchadnezzar approaches 'the door of the furnace of blazing fire,' a literal entrance to peer inside at the miracle. The multilingual glosses show semantic range: Spanish has both 'puerta' (door) and 'en la puerta' (in the gate/court), French simply 'cour' (court), reflecting how the term telescopes from concrete threshold to abstract institution. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-gate-of, to-door-of | es: a-la-puerta-de, en-la-puerta-de | fr: cour | de: [בתרע], [לתרע] Dan 2:49; Dan 3:26

תָּרָע H8652 N-mpd (1×)
gatekeepers, doorkeepers (Aramaic; temple personnel who guard entrances)
An Aramaic plural noun denoting gatekeepers or doorkeepers, specifically temple personnel responsible for guarding entrances. In Ezra 7:24, this term appears in Artaxerxes' decree exempting temple staff—including priests, Levites, singers, gatekeepers, and temple servants—from taxation. The gatekeepers formed a distinct class of temple functionaries, charged with controlling access to sacred space. The Aramaic form appears in the emphatic plural, functioning like the definite article in Hebrew. These personnel were crucial for maintaining the boundaries between sacred and profane space in the Second Temple.

(1×) Aramaic plural noun meaning 'gatekeepers' or 'doorkeepers,' referring to temple personnel who guard entrances and control access. Ezra 7:24 lists the gatekeepers among temple staff exempt from imperial taxation, alongside priests, Levites, and singers. The term designates a recognized class of sacred functionaries responsible for boundary maintenance in the temple complex. Spanish 'porteros' (doorkeepers) captures the functional role of guarding doorways and managing access. The emphatic plural form תָּרָעֵיָא indicates a definite, recognized group—'the gatekeepers' as an established order within temple service. GATEKEEPER PORTER
en: gatekeepers | es: porteros | fr: [תרעיא] | de: [תרעיא] Ezra 7:24

תַּרְעֵלָה H8653 N-fs (3×)
reeling, staggering, the disorientation caused by divine judgment or intoxication
This noun captures the physical and spiritual disorientation of reeling or staggering—the loss of equilibrium under divine judgment. Isaiah speaks of 'the cup of reeling' (51:17, 22), a potent image of God's wrath that causes people to stagger like drunkards, stripped of stability and clarity. The Psalmist describes God giving His people 'wine of reeling' to drink (60:3)—judgment that disorients and overwhelms. The word conveys more than physical stumbling; it suggests the profound disorientation that comes when God's hand presses down in discipline, leaving people unable to find their footing.

(3×) Multilingual glosses emphasize staggering and reeling—Spanish 'aturdimiento' (bewilderment) and 'tambaleo' (staggering), French 'étonnement' (astonishment), German 'staggering.' The consistent image across languages is loss of equilibrium. Both Isaiah and Psalms pair this word with drinking, using wine/cup imagery to depict divine judgment that disorients. The cross-linguistic evidence confirms this denotes not mere physical stumbling but the deeper reeling that comes when encountering God's overwhelming judgment—a spiritual vertigo that strips away all sense of stability. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION
en: of-staggering, the-staggering | es: aturdimiento, tambaleo | fr: [התרעלה], étonnement | de: [התרעלה], von-staggering Ps 60:3; Isa 51:17; Isa 51:22

תִּרְעָתִים H8654 N-proper-mp (1×)
Tirathites (family name; Kenite family descended from scribes, 1 Chronicles 2:55)
A family or clan name appearing in 1 Chronicles 2:55, designating one of three families of scribes living at Jabez. The Tirathites were Kenites, descendants of Hammath, father of the house of Rechab. The name is plural, indicating a family group rather than an individual. The Kenites were traditionally allied with Israel, and this passage suggests they included learned scribal families. The Septuagint renders the name Θαργαθυμ, showing Greek difficulty with the Hebrew form. The name functions as a clan designation, marking this group's ancestral identity and professional specialization (scribes).

(1×) Plural family name denoting a Kenite scribal family, one of three such families dwelling at Jabez according to 1 Chronicles 2:55. The Tirathites were descended from Hammath and connected to the Rechabite house. The plural form marks this as a clan or family group, not an individual. Spanish 'tiratteos' preserves the plural, indicating a people group. The term functions genealogically and professionally: it identifies both lineage (Kenite descent) and vocation (scribal families). The name anchors this learned family within Israel's broader tribal and professional structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Tir'athim | es: tiratteos | fr: [תרעתים] | de: [תרעתים] 1Chr 2:55

תְּרָפִים H8655 Prep-b (15×)
Teraphim — household idol figurines used for divination and domestic cult veneration
The תְּרָפִים (teraphim) are household idol figurines whose exact nature remains debated. Rachel famously stole her father Laban's teraphim (Gen 31:19, 34-35), where they are called 'gods' (elohim). Michal used one to simulate David's sleeping form, suggesting a life-sized figure (1 Sam 19:13, 16). They appear alongside ephods in private shrines (Judg 17:5; 18:14-20) and are listed among condemned divinatory objects (1 Sam 15:23; 2 Kgs 23:24; Zech 10:2). Hosea 3:4 pairs them with legitimate cultic items as things Israel will lose. The etymology remains uncertain, though some connect it to רפא (healing spirits).

teraphim (household idols) (15×) Household idol figurines associated with divination and domestic religious practice. Vary in size from small enough to hide in a camel saddle (Gen 31:34) to roughly human-shaped (1 Sam 19:13, 16). Maintained in private shrines alongside ephods (Judg 17:5; 18:14-20), consulted for oracles (Ezek 21:26; Zech 10:2), and repeatedly condemned by reformers (1 Sam 15:23; 2 Kgs 23:24). Most translations transliterate rather than translate: Spanish 'terafines/terafim,' English 'teraphim,' reflecting the term's irreducible cultural specificity. IDOLS AND IMAGES
en: and-teraphim, the-teraphim | es: los-terafim, los-terafines, los-ídolos | fr: [בתרפים], [התרפים], et-les-théraphim | de: [בתרפים], [התרפים], [ותרפים] Gen 31:19; Gen 31:34; Gen 31:35; Judg 17:5; Judg 18:14

תִּרְצָה H8656 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (18×)
Tirzah — a proper name meaning 'pleasure, beauty,' borne by a daughter of Zelophehad and an early Israelite capital Tirzah (meaning 'delight' or 'beauty') serves as both a personal and a geographic name. As a person, she is one of the five daughters of Zelophehad who successfully petitioned Moses for inheritance rights (Num 27:1; 36:11). As a place, Tirzah was an old Canaanite royal city (Josh 12:24) that became the first capital of the northern kingdom before Omri moved the seat to Samaria (1 Kgs 15:21–16:23). Song of Solomon 6:4 celebrates a beloved as 'beautiful as Tirzah,' placing the city alongside Jerusalem as a byword for loveliness.

Tirzah (proper noun) (18×) The proper noun Tirzah used for both a woman and a city. As a personal name, one of Zelophehad's five daughters whose inheritance claim established a legal precedent for female land rights (Num 26:33; 27:1; 36:11; Josh 17:3). As a place name, an ancient Canaanite city (Josh 12:24) that served as the northern kingdom's capital from Jeroboam through the early years of Omri's reign (1 Kgs 14:17–16:23). Song of Solomon 6:4 invokes its beauty alongside Jerusalem. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Tirtsah, Tirtzah, Tirzah | es: Tirsa, Tirtsah, Tirtsá | fr: Thirtsa, Tirtzah, Tirzah | de: Tirtsah, Tirtzah, Tirzah Num 26:33; Num 27:1; Num 36:11; Josh 12:24; Josh 17:3

תִּרְשׁ H8657 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Teresh; Persian eunuch who conspired against King Ahasuerus

One of two palace chamberlains who plotted to assassinate King Ahasuerus, foiled by Mordecai's vigilance (Esther 2:21; 6:2). The name appears to be Old Iranian, perhaps related to 'tarsha' meaning 'desire.' He and his co-conspirator Bigthan (or Bigthana) guarded the king's threshold, making their betrayal especially heinous. The Septuagint renders the name as Tharas or Tharras, showing typical Greek adaptation of Persian names. Their execution and Mordecai's unrewarded service set up the later reversal of fortunes in Esther's narrative.

(2×) As a character in the Esther narrative, Teresh functions as catalyst: his failed conspiracy establishes Mordecai's loyalty and creates the sleepless night when the king discovers Mordecai was never rewarded—the pivot point of the entire book. The Persian name confirms the story's authentic Persian-period setting, with court officials bearing Iranian rather than Semitic names. That both conspirators were eunuchs with palace access heightens the danger and Mordecai's heroism in exposing them. The name pairs consistently with Bigthan across both references. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Teresh | es: y-Teres | fr: et-Théresch | de: und-Teresch Esth 2:21; Esth 6:2

תַּרְשִׁישׁ H8658 N-msc (7×)

A yellow-green precious stone, probably chrysolite or beryl, featured in priestly vestments and theophanic visions.

This gemstone name designates a lustrous, golden-hued stone set in the fourth row of the high priest's breastplate (Exod 28:20; 39:13) and used to describe the radiance of divine and royal figures. Ezekiel's vision of the living creatures includes wheels 'like the gleam of tarshish-stone' (1:16; 10:9), and Daniel's angelic visitor has a body 'like tarshish' (10:6). In the Song of Songs, the beloved's hands are compared to rods of gold set with tarshish (5:14). The Septuagint translates it as chrysolithos ('gold-stone'), pointing toward a yellow or golden-green gem.

beryl, chrysolite (gemstone) (7×) A precious yellow-green gemstone, most likely chrysolite (golden topaz) or beryl, prized for its luminous golden hue. It appears in the priestly breastplate (Exod 28:20; 39:13), in Ezekiel's throne-chariot vision where the wheels gleam 'like the appearance of tarshish-stone' (1:16; 10:9), in Daniel's theophany (10:6), in the list of Tyre's adornments (Ezek 28:13), and in the Song of Songs' poetic praise of the beloved (5:14). Spanish 'berilo' and French 'béryl' reflect the beryl identification, while 'topaze' in French captures the golden color. The LXX chrysolithos ('gold-stone') and Josephus's description both support a golden-hued identification. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: beryl, like-beryl | es: Tarsis, berilo, como-topacio | fr: béryl, de-tarsis;, topaze | de: Beryll, [כתרשיש], [תרשיש] Exod 28:20; Exod 39:13; Song 5:14; Ezek 1:16; Ezek 10:9

תַּרְשִׁישׁ H8659 Prep-m / N-proper-ms (28×)

Tarshish — a distant maritime port symbolizing far-flung sea trade, often identified with Tartessus in Spain

Tarshish is among the most evocative place names in the Hebrew Bible, conjuring images of the farthest reaches of the known world accessible by sea. Its 28 occurrences span the Table of Nations, royal trade narratives, prophetic oracles, and one famous flight from God. In Genesis 10:4, Tarshish is a grandson of Japheth through Javan, linking it to the maritime peoples of the western Mediterranean. Solomon's fleet of 'ships of Tarshish' brought gold, silver, ivory, apes, and peacocks on three-year voyages (1 Kgs 10:22; 2 Chr 9:21) — the phrase became shorthand for any large, ocean-going merchant vessel. Jehoshaphat's attempt to replicate this trade ended in shipwreck at Ezion-geber (1 Kgs 22:48; 2 Chr 20:36-37). Jonah famously booked passage to Tarshish to flee 'from the presence of the LORD' (Jon 1:3; 4:2) — its remoteness making it the opposite direction from Nineveh. Isaiah uses 'ships of Tarshish' as symbols of human pride that will be humbled (Isa 2:16; 23:1, 14), while Psalm 72:10 envisions the kings of Tarshish bringing tribute to the Messiah.

Tarshish (place name) (28×) A distant maritime locale, most likely Tartessus in southern Spain, representing the western extremity of the ancient world's trade routes. Genealogically a descendant of Javan (Gen 10:4; 1 Chr 1:7). 'Ships of Tarshish' became a generic term for large seagoing vessels, associated with Solomon's lucrative voyages (1 Kgs 10:22) and Jehoshaphat's failed imitation (1 Kgs 22:48). Prophetically, these ships symbolize human pride destined for divine humbling (Isa 2:16; 23:1, 14), while Jonah's flight to Tarshish (Jon 1:3) exploits its remoteness as the furthest escape from God's call. Psalm 72:10 and Isaiah 60:9 transform it into a symbol of Gentile homage. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: Tarshish, to-Tarshish | es: Tarshish, Tarsis, a-Tarsis | fr: Tarshish, Tarsis, [תרשיש] | de: Tarschisch, Tarshish Gen 10:4; 1Kgs 10:22; 1Kgs 22:48; 1Chr 1:7

תִּרְשָׁתָא H8660 Art / Adj-ms (5×)

Tirshatha; title of the Persian-appointed governor of Judah, meaning 'His Excellency' or 'the revered one'

Tirshatha is a Persian loanword used as an honorific title for the governor of post-exilic Judah. It appears in Ezra 2:63 and Nehemiah 7:65 for an unnamed governor who restricts priestly privileges until the Urim and Thummim can be consulted, and in Nehemiah 8:9; 10:1 it explicitly designates Nehemiah himself. The title likely derives from a Persian root meaning 'feared, revered,' functioning much like 'His Excellency' in diplomatic usage.

(5×) Tirshatha—a Persian-derived gubernatorial title meaning 'the revered one' or 'His Excellency,' applied to the governor of Judah in the post-exilic period. All five occurrences (Ezra 2:63; Neh 7:65, 70; 8:9; 10:1) carry the Hebrew article ha- ('the'), marking it as a recognized official designation. English and Spanish render it as 'the Tirshata'/'the governor' (el gobernador), while French and German transliterate the Hebrew directly, reflecting the foreignness of this Persian administrative term in a Hebrew text. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-Tirshata, the-governor | es: el-gobernador | fr: [התרשתא] | de: [התרשתא] Ezra 2:63; Neh 7:65; Neh 7:70; Neh 8:9; Neh 10:1

תַּרְתָּן H8661 N-ms (2×)

Tartan; Assyrian military title (field marshal) for supreme commander

Not a personal name but a military title borrowed from Akkadian 'turtanu,' meaning field marshal or commander-in-chief. The Tartan appears twice: leading Sargon II's campaign against Ashdod (Isaiah 20:1) and as one of three high officials sent by Sennacherib against Jerusalem (2 Kings 18:17, alongside the Rabsaris and Rabshakeh). This shows the historical accuracy of biblical accounts, which correctly use Mesopotamian military terminology. The transliterations across languages preserve the term as a title rather than translating it.

(2×) In both occurrences, Tartan designates the highest military commander under the Assyrian king—equivalent to modern 'commander-in-chief.' In Isaiah 20:1, the Tartan personally leads the assault on Ashdod, showing these were not ceremonial positions.

In 2 Kings 18:17, the threefold delegation (Tartan, Rabsaris, Rabshakeh) represents military, palace, and diplomatic authority—a full-spectrum show of Assyrian power. The Akkadian loan-word confirms biblical chronology: these accounts preserve authentic 8th-7th century BC Assyrian administrative titles, not later inventions. MILITARY OFFICERS

en: Tartan | es: Tartán | fr: Tartan, [תרתן] | de: Tartan, [תרתן] 2Kgs 18:17; Isa 20:1

תַּרְתָּק H8662 N-proper-ms (1×)

Tartak (divine name; deity worshiped by the Avvites, 2 Kings 17:31)

A divine name appearing in 2 Kings 17:31, designating a deity worshiped by the Avvites, one of the foreign peoples settled in Samaria after the Assyrian conquest. Along with Nibhaz, Tartak was one of the gods the Avvites brought with them and continued to worship in their new land. The name has not been satisfactorily identified with any known deity from ancient Near Eastern sources, and its etymology remains uncertain. The Septuagint renders it Θαρθακ. The term appears in the context of syncretistic worship that mixed Yahwism with foreign deities—a practice the biblical text condemns.

(1×) Divine name of a deity worshiped by the Avvites, mentioned in 2 Kings 17:31 as one of the foreign gods brought into the land of Israel after the Assyrian deportations. Tartak appears alongside Nibhaz, another Avvite deity, in the catalog of syncretistic worship practices. The name has not been identified with certainty in extra-biblical sources, leaving its etymology and mythological associations unclear. Translations universally transliterate (Spanish 'Tartac,' English 'Tartak,' French/German 'Tartak'), treating this as an opaque foreign divine name. The term stands as evidence of the religious pluralism the text condemns. GODS AND DEITIES

en: Tartak | es: Tartac | fr: Tartak | de: Tartak 2Kgs 17:31

תְּשָׁאָה H8663 N-fp (4×)

noise, shouting, uproar; clamor of crowds or tumult of storm

A plural noun denoting loud, chaotic sounds—whether human or natural. Isaiah 22:2 describes Jerusalem as a city 'full of noise,' a tumultuous urban uproar. Zechariah 4:7 envisions the temple capstone set with 'shouts' of acclamation. Job uses it for the thunderous roar of God's storm (36:29) and notes that the wild donkey doesn't hear 'the shouts' of a taskmaster (39:7). One text (Job 30:22, ketiv) may refer to the roar of a storm into which Job is dissolved.

(4×) Captures loud, often confused or multiple sounds—celebratory shouting, urban clamor, thunder's roar. The Spanish 'alboroto' (commotion) and 'aclamaciones' (acclamations) reflect both disorderly and ceremonial noise. Job's storm imagery uses this for overwhelming natural tumult, while Zechariah envisions ritual acclamation. The wild donkey passage contrasts natural freedom with the shouted commands of human masters—sounds the untamed beast never hears. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: clamor, shouts-of, the-shouts-of | es: Llena-de-alboroto, con-aclamaciones-de, gritos-de | fr: [תשאות], cri, תשאות | de: [תשאות] Job 36:29; Job 39:7; Isa 22:2; Zech 4:7

תִּשְׁבִּי H8664 Art / N-proper-ms (6×)

Tishbite; a gentilic adjective identifying Elijah as from Tishbe in Gilead.

A gentilic designation meaning 'the Tishbite,' used exclusively to identify the prophet Elijah. The term appears six times in Kings, always in the formula 'Elijah the Tishbite' (1 Kgs 17:1; 21:17, 28; 2 Kgs 1:3, 8; 9:36). Translations across languages are strikingly uniform — English 'the Tishbite,' Spanish 'el tisbita,' French 'le Tishbite,' German 'der Tishbite' — all simply transliterating the gentilicic. The place Tishbe is traditionally located in Gilead, east of the Jordan, grounding the fiery prophet in the rugged Transjordanian highlands.

(6×) A gentilic adjective denoting origin from the town of Tishbe (likely in Gilead), used solely as an epithet for the prophet Elijah. Every occurrence follows the fixed formula 'Elijah the Tishbite' across 1–2 Kings (e.g., 1 Kgs 17:1; 2 Kgs 1:8). The LXX renders it ὁ Θεσβ(ε)ίτης. All modern translations — Spanish 'el tisbita,' French 'le Tishbite,' German 'der Tishbite' — retain the transliterated form, treating it as a proper designation rather than translating its possible etymological meaning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Tishbite | es: el-tisbita, el-tishbita | fr: le-Tishbite | de: der-Tishbite 1Kgs 17:1; 1Kgs 21:17; 1Kgs 21:28; 2Kgs 1:3; 2Kgs 1:8

תַּשְׁבֵּץ H8665 N-msc (1×)

checkered, embroidered (textile work with patterned or plaited design)

This noun describes a type of textile work—either checkered, plaited, or embroidered fabric. In Exodus 28:4, it appears in the phrase 'checkered tunic,' describing one of the priestly garments. The term suggests decorative patterning or weaving technique that produces visual texture or design, distinguishing this tunic from plain woven cloth. The exact technique is uncertain (checkered squares? embroidered designs? plaited work?), but the result is ornate rather than plain. This reflects the beauty and dignity befitting sacred service. The priestly wardrobe combined function with symbolic splendor.

(1×) Describes checkered, embroidered, or plaited textile work, specifically decorative patterning on fabric. Exodus 28:4 prescribes a 'tunic of checkered work' (כְּתֹנֶת תַּשְׁבֵּץ) for the high priest, indicating ornate weaving or decorative technique beyond plain cloth. The exact method—whether woven checks, embroidery, or plaiting—remains uncertain, but the term clearly denotes patterned, decorative fabric. Spanish 'cuadros' (checks/squares) and English 'checkered' suggest geometric patterning. The term appears in contexts of priestly vestments, where garments communicate sacred dignity and beauty, marking the wearer as set apart for holy service. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: checkered | es: cuadros | fr: checkered | de: checkered Exod 28:4

תְּשׁוּבָה H8666 N-fsc (8×)

Return, turning point (especially of a season or year); also answer, reply in discourse

A feminine noun from the root shuv ('to return') that carries two distinct senses. Most frequently it serves as a temporal marker — 'at the return of the year' — designating the spring campaign season when kings go out to war (2 Sam 11:1; 1 Kgs 20:22, 26; 1 Chr 20:1). This is the fateful turning of the year when David stayed home and saw Bathsheba. In wisdom literature it shifts to mean a verbal reply or answer, as when Elihu evaluates Job's 'answers' as containing wickedness (Job 34:36) and Job challenges his friends' hollow 'replies' (21:34).

1. return, turning (of time/season) (6×) The temporal sense: a return or turning point, especially marking the cyclical turning of the year or season. The formula liteshuvat hashshanah ('at the return of the year') signals the spring — when roads dried and armies marched. In 1 Sam 7:17 it describes Samuel's physical circuit returning to Ramah. Arabic rujuc ('return') and Spanish 'al retorno de' both reflect this directional-temporal meaning. The phrase became a near-technical term for the annual campaign season in the historical books. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-at-turn-of, and-his-return, at-return-of | es: Y-su-regreso, al-retorno-de, al-volver | fr: [ולתשובת], [תשובת], et-son-retourne | de: [ולתשובת], [תשובת], bei-der-kehre-zurueck-von 1Sam 7:17; 2Sam 11:1; 1Kgs 20:22; 1Kgs 20:26; 1Chr 20:1

2. answer, reply (2×) The discursive sense: an answer or reply given in conversation or dispute. In Job 21:34 Job dismisses his friends' consolations as empty — 'your answers remain falsehood.' In 34:36 Elihu argues Job should be tested thoroughly because of the character of his 'answers' (teshuvot). Arabic ajwibah ('answers') and Spanish 'respuestas' confirm this semantic domain. The shift from spatial 'return' to verbal 'reply' parallels how Hebrew shuv davar means 'to return a word,' i.e., to answer. ANSWER RESPONSE REPLY

en: and-your-answers, his-answers | es: Y-vuestras-respuestas, respuestas | fr: et-votre-retour-vous, retour | de: [ותשובתיכם], [תשבת] Job 21:34; Job 34:36

תְּשׂוּמֶת H8667 Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)

pledge, deposit (something entrusted to another as security or safekeeping)

This noun denotes a pledge, deposit, or thing entrusted to another for safekeeping. In Leviticus 6:2 (English 5:21), it appears in a legal context concerning deception: if someone lies about a deposit entrusted to him, denying he received it, he commits fraud and must make restitution. The term parallels פִּקָּדוֹן (deposit, thing entrusted), emphasizing fiduciary responsibility. The construct form תְּשׂוּמַת יָד (literally 'deposit of hand') suggests something placed in someone's hand for safekeeping. Breach of this trust violates both interpersonal ethics and covenant law, requiring guilt offering and restitution.

(1×) Refers to a pledge, deposit, or item entrusted to someone else for safekeeping, creating a fiduciary responsibility. Leviticus 6:2 addresses the case of someone who deceives regarding 'a deposit' (בִּתְשׂוּמֶת יָד)—literally 'in a deposit of hand,' something placed in his custody. The term parallels פִּקָּדוֹן, both denoting entrusted property. Spanish 'prenda' (pledge/security) and English 'pledge' capture the legal-economic sense of property held in trust. Violation of this trust through denial or deception constitutes serious covenant breach, requiring both restitution and sacrificial atonement. The term underscores the sanctity of fiduciary relationships. PLEDGES AND SECURITY

en: in-a-pledge | es: en-prenda-de | fr: dans-un-pledge | de: in-ein-Pfand Lev 6:2

תְּשׁוּעָה H8668 N-fsc (34×)

Deliverance, salvation, or victory; God's saving acts ranging from rescue in battle to comprehensive spiritual redemption.

Closely synonymous with yeshuah, teshuah emphasizes deliverance as experienced outcome — the rescue that has arrived or the victory that has been won. It appears most frequently in the historical books for military deliverance: Samson's cry after slaying the Philistines (Judg 15:18), Saul's victory at Jabesh-Gilead (1 Sam 11:9, 13), and Naaman's triumph for Aram (2 Kgs 5:1). In the Psalms and Proverbs, it broadens to encompass God's comprehensive saving power (Ps 40:10-11; 71:15) and the futility of human schemes apart from divine aid (Prov 21:31). Spanish splits between 'salvación' (theological) and 'victoria' (military), revealing how the word bridges both registers.

1. salvation, deliverance (27×) Salvation or deliverance in the broad theological sense — God's rescuing acts, whether from oppression, danger, or spiritual peril. This is the predominant usage (27 of 34 occurrences), spanning Israel's history from the judges to the prophets. The Psalmist declares God's faithfulness and saving help in the great assembly (Ps 40:10-11), and Isaiah speaks of God's salvation drawing near (Isa 46:13). Proverbs 11:14 teaches that 'in an abundance of counselors there is deliverance.' Spanish 'salvación,' French 'salut,' and Swahili 'wokovu' all reinforce the comprehensive theological register. SALVATION (NOUN)

en: Your-salvation, for-the-salvation, is-the-salvation | es: de-salvación, la-salvación-de, mi-salvación | fr: [לתשועת], [תשועה], [תשועת] | de: Heil, [לתשועת], [תשועה] Judg 15:18; 1Sam 11:9; 1Sam 11:13; 1Sam 19:5; 2Kgs 13:17

2. victory, triumph (7×) Victory or triumph, especially in military contexts, denoting the successful outcome of battle attributed to divine intervention. The day of Saul's deliverance at Jabesh becomes 'a day of victory' (1 Sam 11:9); Joab and Abishai's battlefield exploits yield teshuah (2 Sam 23:10, 12); and Naaman's triumph is called teshuah for Aram (2 Kgs 5:1). The distinction surfaces in 2 Samuel 19:2, where 'the victory that day was turned into mourning.' Spanish 'victoria' and the German translations as 'Sieg' capture this concrete martial sense. Psalm 33:17 warns that 'a horse is a vain hope for victory' — true teshuah belongs to the Lord. SALVATION (NOUN)

en: and-salvation, for-victory, salvation | es: es-la-victoria, la-victoria, liberación | fr: et-ותשועה, le-victory, le-התשועה | de: [התשועה], [ותשועה], der-victory 2Sam 19:2; 2Sam 23:10; 2Sam 23:12; 2Kgs 5:1; Ps 33:17

תְּשׁוּקָה H8669 N-fsc / 2fs (3×)

desire, longing, the pull of one person or thing toward another

This rare noun denotes deep longing or desire that draws one being toward another. In Genesis 3:16, it describes the woman's desire for her husband despite the pain of childbearing—a complex pull in the aftermath of the fall. Genesis 4:7 uses it of sin's desire to master Cain, personifying sin's crouching hunger. The Song of Songs inverts the Genesis 3 language: 'I am my beloved's, and his desire is for me' (7:10)—mutual longing redeemed. The word captures magnetic pull, whether between persons in love, woman to man under curse, or evil toward its prey. It's desire that reaches, that wants to possess or be possessed.

(3×) Cross-linguistic glosses consistently emphasize desire—Spanish 'deseo,' French 'désir,' German 'Verlangen.' The three biblical occurrences span a remarkable theological arc: curse (Gen 3:16), threat of sin (Gen 4:7), and redeemed love (Song 7:10). French glosses even use infinitive forms 'désirer' (to desire), emphasizing the verbal force within the noun. The multilingual evidence supports this as passionate longing that pulls one toward another, whether in love, subjugation, or predatory threat. The word's rarity and concentrated use in Genesis and Song of Songs suggests specialized theological vocabulary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: desire-its, desire-your, his-desire | es: su-deseo, tu-deseo | fr: désirer-son, désirer-ton, son-désir. | de: [תשוקתו], dein-Verlangen, ist-sein-Verlangen Gen 3:16; Gen 4:7; Song 7:10

תְּשׁוּרָה H8670 Conj-w / N-fs (1×)

gift, present (something brought or offered, possibly as payment or tribute)

This noun appears only in 1 Samuel 9:7 and likely means 'gift' or 'present,' though the etymology and exact meaning are uncertain. Saul and his servant, seeking the seer Samuel, realize they have no gift to bring—the bread is gone and they have no 'present' to offer. The context suggests a customary offering or payment when consulting a prophet, acknowledging his service. The term may derive from a root meaning 'to bring' or 'to offer,' thus 'thing brought.' BDB notes the meaning is inferred from context rather than established etymology. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'regalo,' English 'gift') reflects this contextual inference.

(1×) Denotes a gift or present, likely referring to a customary offering brought when consulting a prophet or holy man. In 1 Samuel 9:7, Saul and his servant worry they have no תְּשׁוּרָה to bring to Samuel, suggesting such gifts were expected protocol. The term's etymology is uncertain, but context implies 'thing brought/offered.' Spanish 'regalo' (gift) and English 'gift' capture the sense of a presented item, possibly as honorarium or acknowledgment. The absence of such a gift causes social concern, indicating gift-giving was normative when seeking prophetic consultation—not bribery but proper respect for the prophet's office and service. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-gift | es: y-regalo | fr: et-gift | de: und-gift 1Sam 9:7

תְּשַׁע H8671 Art / Number-oms (18×)

The ninth — ordinal number marking the ninth position in a sequence of time, persons, or objects

The ordinal form of tesha ('nine'), used to mark the ninth item in various ordered sequences throughout the Hebrew Bible. It designates the ninth month of the year (2 Kgs 25:1; Jer 36:9, 22), the ninth day of a month, the ninth tribal offering in Numbers 7:60, and the ninth position in genealogical or military rosters (1 Chr 12:12; 24:11; 25:16; 27:12). The form appears with the article (hatteshi'i) for both masculine and feminine referents, reflecting standard Hebrew ordinal usage.

the ninth (18×) The ordinal 'ninth,' marking position in calendrical, ceremonial, and administrative sequences. Applied to the ninth month (the month of Kislev, 2 Kgs 25:1; Jer 36:9), the ninth day, the ninth tribal leader's offering (Num 7:60), and the ninth division of priestly or military courses (1 Chr 12:12; 24:11; 25:16; 27:12). Spanish 'noveno,' English 'ninth,' and French forms consistently reflect a straightforward ordinal sense. NINE CARDINAL ORDINAL

en: The-ninth, of-the-ninth, the-ninth | es: El-noveno, al-noveno, el-noveno | fr: [התשיע], [התשע], [התשעית] | de: [התשיע], [התשיעית], [התשע] Lev 25:22; Num 7:60; 2Kgs 17:6; 2Kgs 25:1; 1Chr 12:13

תְּשִׁיעִי H8672 Conj-w / Number-ms (58×)

Nine (cardinal numeral); in temporal formulas with בְּ, ninth (ordinal sense)

The Hebrew cardinal number nine, appearing throughout genealogies, censuses, measurements, and date formulas. It occurs in both masculine (תִּשְׁעָה) and feminine (תֵּשַׁע) forms and combines freely with tens and hundreds (nineteen, twenty-nine, nine hundred). When preceded by the preposition בְּ in date formulas, it functions as an ordinal, 'on the ninth.' The genealogies of Genesis 5 use it repeatedly for patriarchal lifespans, while the prophetic date formulas in Jeremiah and 2 Kings mark pivotal moments like the fall of Jerusalem.

1. nine (cardinal number) (54×) The cardinal numeral 'nine,' attested 54 times across genealogies (Gen 5:5, 5:8, 5:11), censuses, and compound numbers. Translations uniformly render it as 'nine/nueve/neuf/neun,' with no semantic ambiguity. It appears in both independent and compound constructions (969 years in Gen 5:27, nineteen in various tallies), always carrying straightforward numerical value. NINE CARDINAL ORDINAL

en: nine | es: novecientos, nueve, veintinueve | fr: neuf | de: neun Gen 5:5; Gen 5:8; Gen 5:11; Gen 5:14; Gen 5:20

2. ninth (ordinal/temporal) (4×) An ordinal-temporal usage (4x) where בְּתִשְׁעָה means 'on the ninth (day/month)' in calendrical formulas. Lev 23:32 sets the Day of Atonement בְּתִשְׁעָה לַחֹדֶשׁ, and the siege dates in 2 Kgs 25:3, Jer 39:2, and Jer 52:6 mark the breaching of Jerusalem's walls. Multilingual evidence shows translators shifting to ordinal forms ('on-the-ninth/en-el-noveno-día/sur-neuvième'), confirming the functional distinction from pure cardinal use. NINE CARDINAL ORDINAL

en: on-nine-of, on-ninth, on-the-ninth | es: En-nueve, en-el-noveno-día, en-el-nueve | fr: [בתשעה], sur-neuf-de, sur-neuvième | de: [בתשעה], auf-neun-von, auf-neunter Lev 23:32; 2Kgs 25:3; Jer 39:2; Jer 52:6

תִּשְׁעִי H8673 Conj-w / Number-cp (20×)

Ninety — the cardinal number 90, used in ages, measurements, and counts throughout the OT.

The cardinal number ninety, appearing in genealogical ages, population counts, and chronological notices. It figures prominently in the antediluvian genealogies of Genesis 5 (Enosh lived ninety years, Gen 5:9; Mahalalel lived sixty-five years and begot Jared at 895 with ninety in the tally) and in the age of Abraham and Sarah at Isaac's promise (Gen 17:1, 17). French splits the rendering between the native 'quatre-vingt-dix' and the bracketed Hebrew form, while Spanish and German straightforwardly use 'noventa' and 'neunzig.' The number often appears compounded with units (ninety-six, ninety-eight, etc.) in census and temple-inventory lists.

ninety (20×) The cardinal number ninety (90), used across the OT in patriarchal age reckonings (Gen 5:9, 17, 30; 17:1, 17), census totals, and measurement specifications. Frequently compounded with smaller units in enumerations such as temple inventories and returnee counts. All major translation traditions render it with the standard numeral equivalent — Spanish 'noventa,' French 'quatre-vingt-dix,' German 'neunzig' — confirming a single, unambiguous numeric sense. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: and-ninety, ninety | es: noventa, y-noventa | fr: [תשעים], et-quatre-vingt-dix, quatre-vingt-dix | de: [ותשעים], [תשעים], neunzig Gen 5:9; Gen 5:17; Gen 5:30; Gen 17:1; Gen 17:17

תַּתְּנַי H8674 N-proper-ms (4×)

Tattenai, Persian official; governor of the province Beyond the River under Darius I

A proper name designating the Persian prefect who governed the Trans-Euphrates region (Syria-Palestine) during the early reign of Darius I. Tattenai investigated the Jerusalem temple reconstruction and corresponded with the Persian court about the Jews' authorization (Ezra 5:3, 6; 6:6, 13). Contemporary cuneiform tablets confirm a similar figure—Uštanni or Uštanu—as prefect in this region, suggesting textual identification with this biblical character.

(4×) Identifies a specific Persian administrator who plays a pivotal role in the Ezra narrative. Unlike hostile figures in Ezra 4, Tattenai conducts a legitimate investigation and, upon discovering Cyrus's original decree in the archives at Ecbatana, facilitates the temple's completion. The name appears consistently across translations, reflecting its function as a proper noun. His correspondence exemplifies Persian bureaucratic procedure—formal inquiry, archival research, imperial confirmation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Tatnay, Tattenay | es: Tatnai | fr: [תתני] | de: [תתני] Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:6; Ezra 6:6; Ezra 6:13

H???? (8877×)

1. (4669×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: to-him | es: a-él, de-él, para-él | fr: à-lui | de: ihm, zu-ihm, zu-ihn Gen 3:9; Gen 4:15; Gen 9:24; Gen 12:16; Gen 12:20

2. (1002×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: , [P], [S] | es: S | fr: () | de: () 2Chr 4:1; 2Chr 4:5; 2Chr 4:6; 2Chr 4:7; 2Chr 4:11

3. (352×) SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: to-you, you | es: a-ti, a-ti?, para-ti | fr: (), va!, ¶ | de: (), dir, zu-du Gen 3:11; Gen 4:6; Gen 4:12; Gen 13:15; Gen 13:17

4. (327×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: - | es: P, ¶ | fr: - | de: -, ¶ Gen 24:67; Exod 6:9; Exod 6:12; Exod 6:28; Exod 6:30

5. (273×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: (section), S, [P] | es: S | fr: () | de: () 1Chr 1:4; 1Chr 1:5; 1Chr 1:7; 1Chr 1:9; 1Chr 1:10

6. (222×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: S, [S], [section] | es: S | fr: () | de: () Ezra 1:6; Ezra 1:9; Ezra 1:10; Ezra 2:2; Ezra 2:3

7. (143×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: [para], [paragraph-break], [section-marker] | es: P, כ | fr: [paragraph-break], [section-marker], ¶ | de: (*), [paragraph-break], [section-marker] Deut 25:16; Deut 25:19; 1Sam 7:1; 1Sam 7:4; 1Sam 7:17

8. (121×) SECOND PERSON PLURAL

en: to-you | es: a-ustedes, a-vosotros | fr: (*), à-toi, à-tu | de: euch, zu-dir, zu-du Gen 1:29; Gen 9:3; Gen 34:15; Exod 3:16; Exod 5:10

9. (104×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: P, [paragraph-break] | es: P, [], [p] | fr: P, [saut-de-paragraphe] | de: P, [Absatz-Umbruch] Exod 1:7; Exod 2:22; Exod 4:17; Exod 4:26; Exod 31:11

10. (104×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: (paragraph), [S], [para] | es: P | fr: () | de: () 1Chr 1:42; 1Chr 1:54; 1Chr 3:9; 1Chr 4:14; 1Chr 5:10

11. (101×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: [section] | es: S | fr: [section], ¶ | de: [Abschnitt], ¶ Deut 12:19; Deut 12:28; 1Sam 11:10; 1Sam 11:13; 1Sam 12:17

12. (76×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: to-her | es: a-ella | fr: à-elle, à-sa | de: ihr, zu-ihr Gen 16:6; Gen 16:9; Gen 16:10; Gen 16:11; Gen 20:13

13. (64×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: -, [section], ¶ | es: pausa, ס | fr: -, [section], ¶ | de: -, [Abschnitt], ¶ Deut 13:11; Deut 13:18; Deut 14:2; Deut 14:8; Deut 14:10

14. (60×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [para] | es: P | fr: [para] | de: [para] 1Sam 1:28; 1Sam 2:10; 1Sam 3:3; 1Sam 3:10; 1Sam 3:18

15. (59×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: (P), (para), [P] | es: P | fr: ¶ | de: (*) Job 22:30; Job 31:7; Job 31:40; Job 32:1; Job 32:5

16. (56×) SECOND PERSON PLURAL
en: for-you | es: a-vosotros, para-vosotros, por-vosotros | fr: pour-toi, pour-tu | de: fuer-dich, fuer-du Exod 14:14; Lev 22:33; Lev 25:6; Lev 25:10; Lev 25:11

17. (54×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [paragraph], [section], ¶ | es: P, פ | fr: ¶ | de: ¶ Gen 46:27; Gen 47:31; Gen 48:22; 1Sam 11:15; 1Sam 12:5

18. (51×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: - | es: (pausa), S, ¶ | fr: - | de: -, § Gen 23:20; Gen 25:11; Gen 25:34; Gen 26:33; Gen 26:35

19. (50×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: - | es: ¶, ס | fr: - | de: - Exod 16:3; Exod 16:5; Exod 16:27; Exod 19:25; Exod 20:1

20. (46×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: - | es: (pausa), [P], [] | fr: - | de: - Exod 16:10; Exod 16:36; Exod 17:7; Exod 17:13; Exod 17:16

21. (40×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: -him, against-him, him | es: a-ella, a-él, él | fr: -lui, cela, contre-lui | de: es, ihm, ihn Gen 2:19; Gen 31:47; Gen 32:1

22. (39×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [s], [section] | es: S | fr: [s], ¶ | de: [s], ¶ 2Sam 20:3; 2Sam 20:5; 2Sam 20:8; 2Sam 20:10; 2Sam 20:14

23. (37×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: P, [para] | es: P | fr: () | de: () 1Chr 16:4; 1Chr 16:7; 1Chr 16:22; 1Chr 16:36; 1Chr 16:43

24. (34×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: -, S | es: (pausa), [S] | fr: -, S | de: -, S, § Gen 33:17; Gen 33:20; Josh 7:9; Josh 10:11; Josh 10:30

25. (31×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [s] | es: ס | fr: [s] | de: [s] Exod 21:6; Exod 21:11; Exod 21:13; Exod 21:14; Exod 21:16

26. (30×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: S | es: [], [s], ס | fr: S | de: S Exod 2:25; Josh 1:11; Josh 2:24; Josh 3:4; Josh 3:6

27. (29×) SECOND PERSON PLURAL
en: for-yourselves | es: a-vosotros-mismos, para-vosotros | fr: pour-vous-mêmes | de: fuer-euch-selbst Exod 5:11; Exod 9:8; Exod 30:37; Num 16:6; Deut 1:7

28. (27×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [para] | es: P | fr: () | de: () Dan 1:21; Dan 2:13; Dan 2:16; Dan 2:28; Dan 2:45

29. (27×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [section-break], [setuma] | es: S | fr: [section-break], [setouma] | de: [section-break], [setuma] 1Sam 2:21; 1Sam 2:26; 1Sam 2:36; 1Sam 3:1; 1Sam 3:5

30. (26×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [section-marker] | es: P, S | fr: [section-marker] | de: [section-marker] 1Sam 26:7; 1Sam 27:4; 1Sam 28:14; 1Sam 28:15; 1Sam 29:5

31. (25×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: (paragraph), Selah, [selah] | es: P, S | fr: ¶ | de: (*) Job 41:34; Job 42:11; Job 42:15; Eccl 3:1; Eccl 3:8

32. (25×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: ס | es: S | fr: ס | de: 1 סKgs 1:27; 1Kgs 2:6; 1Kgs 2:25; 1Kgs 2:38; 1Kgs 3:14

33. (23×) SECOND PERSON PLURAL
en: from-the-beginning, to-you, you-crush | es: (a-vosotros), a-ustedes, a-vosotros | fr: (), ¶, à-toi | de: (), euch, zu-du Gen 49:1; Num 15:2; Ruth 1:9; 1Sam 6:3; 2Chr 13:5

34. (23×) SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: against-You, by-you, for-You | es: En-ti, contra-ti, en-ti | fr: (*) | de: bei-du, durch-du, für-du Ps 5:11; Ps 7:1; Ps 9:2; Ps 9:10; Ps 16:1

35. (22×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: - | es: [selah] | fr: - | de: - Deut 2:1; Deut 2:8; Deut 2:16; Deut 2:30; Deut 3:22

36. (20×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: P, [P] | es: [párrafo], ¶ | fr: P, [P] | de: ¶ Gen 1:5; Gen 1:8; Gen 1:13; Gen 1:19; Gen 1:23

37. (19×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: are-his, for-him, his | es: a-ella, a-él, como-la-del- | fr: (), à-lui | de: (), ihm 1Chr 11:7; Ezek 1:4; Ezek 17:3; Ezek 40:25; Ezek 40:26

38. (18×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: for-herself, for-him, for-himself | es: para-el, para-ella, para-sí | fr: pour-elle-même, pour-il, pour-lui | de: fuer-es, fuer-ihn, ihm Gen 13:11; Gen 21:16; Gen 28:6; Gen 28:9; Gen 30:37

39. (18×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [paragraph], [section] | es: P, S | fr: () | de: () Esth 1:9; Esth 1:15; Esth 1:22; Esth 2:4; Esth 2:20

40. (18×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: S | es: S | fr: S | de: S Exod 1:22; Exod 31:17; Exod 32:35; Exod 33:11; Exod 33:23

41. (17×) SECOND PERSON PLURAL
en: for-you, to-you | es: a-vosotros, de-ustedes, para-ustedes | fr: (), pour-toi, pour-tu | de: (), euch, fuer-du Gen 41:55; Gen 42:34; Gen 43:6; Gen 43:7; Gen 43:14

42. (16×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: S, [S] | es: § | fr: S, [S] | de: § Gen 3:15; Gen 3:16; Gen 3:24; Gen 5:2; Gen 5:5

43. (15×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: -, [section] | es: [] | fr: -, [section] | de: -, [Abschnitt] Lev 11:20; Lev 11:28; Lev 11:38; Lev 13:23; Lev 13:37

44. (15×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: -, [paragraph] | es: P, [pausa], פ | fr: -, [paragraphe] | de: -, [Absatz] Lev 15:17; Lev 15:24; Lev 15:33; Lev 16:34; Lev 17:16

45. (14×) PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: against-them, in-them, into-them | es: con-ellas, con-ellos, en-ellas | fr: dans-ils, dans-si, in-ils | de: auf-ihnen, in-sie, in-wenn Num 10:3; 2Chr 11:11; 2Chr 14:14; 2Chr 16:6; 2Chr 20:10

46. (14×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: - | es: (pausa), P, S | fr: - | de: §, ¶ Gen 22:19; Gen 25:18; Gen 32:2; Gen 34:31; Gen 35:8

47. (13×) PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: on-them, over-them, them | es: ellos, en-ellos, sobre-ellos | fr: (*), dans-ils, en-eux | de: auf-ihnen, ihnen, in-ihnen Lev 20:11; Lev 20:12; Lev 20:13; Lev 20:16; Lev 20:27

48. (12×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [P] | es: P | fr: [P] | de: [P] 2Kgs 16:6; 2Kgs 16:20; 2Kgs 17:6; 2Kgs 17:23; 2Kgs 17:41

49. (12×) PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: in-them, is-the-life | es: en-ellas | fr: (), en-eux, in-ils | de: (), an-ihnen, in-ihnen Gen 30:37; 1Chr 10:7; 2Chr 4:6; Prov 8:8

50. (12×) SECOND PERSON PLURAL
en: for-you, for-yourselves, from | es: a-vosotros, de-vosotros, para-ustedes | fr: (*), pour-tu, pour-vous-mêmes | de: euch, euch-selbst, fuer-euch-selbst Gen 34:9; Gen 45:19; Exod 7:9; Num 14:25; Num 32:24

51. (12×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: in-her, in-it | es: caiga-en-ella, en-ella, en-ella. | fr: (), dans-cela | de: (), in-es, in-ihr 1Sam 30:2; 2Chr 2:3; Ezra 4:19; Neh 6:6; Ps 35:8

52. (11×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: belonged-to-him, belongs-to-him, is-his | es: a-él, de-él | fr: (), appartenait-à-lui, appartient-à-lui | de: (), ihm-gehört, ihm-gehörte Gen 13:1; Gen 23:9; Gen 24:2; Gen 24:36; Gen 25:5

53. (11×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: belongs-to-it, to-it | es: de-él, para-él, tiene | fr: belongs-à-cela, à-cela | de: belongs-zu-es, zu-es Exod 38:30; Exod 39:39; Lev 4:20; Lev 11:9; Lev 11:10

54. (11×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: S | es: [sección] | fr: S | de: § Gen 11:11; Gen 11:13; Gen 11:15; Gen 11:17; Gen 11:19

55. (11×) SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: against-you, for-you, to-you | es: a-ti, contra-ti, de-ti | fr: contre-tu, à-toi | de: an-dir, dir, dir-gehören Gen 19:12; Gen 27:38; Gen 30:30; Gen 33:5; Gen 33:8

56. (11×) PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: among-them, in-them, is-among-them | es: con-ellas, en-ellos, entre-ellos | fr: (), avec-eux, contre-eux | de: (), an-ihnen, in-ihnen Num 20:13; Josh 23:12; Job 4:21; Ps 105:27; Jer 6:18

57. (10×) RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: Me, against-Me, at-me | es: Para-mí, a-mí, de-mí | fr: en-moi, à-moi | de: in-mir, mir Isa 43:10; Isa 49:3; Isa 50:5; Isa 50:7; Isa 50:9

58. (10×) RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-to-me, for-me, for-me- | es: Y-para-mí, de-mí, para-mí | fr: (), et-() | de: für-mich, für-mich-, haben-ich Ps 55:8; Ps 59:16; Ps 61:3; Ps 66:14; Ps 71:3

59. (10×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: § | es: כ ,ס | fr: § | de: §, ¶ Gen 46:7; Gen 49:4; Gen 49:7; Gen 49:12; Gen 49:13

60. (10×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: S, [section-break] | es: [s] | fr: S, [saut-de-section] | de: S, [Abschnitt-Umbruch] Lev 1:9; Lev 1:17; Lev 2:3; Lev 2:4; Lev 2:6

61. (10×) RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: for-myself | es: para-mí | fr: moi, ¶, à-moi | de: mir Job 19:27; Eccl 2:4; Eccl 2:5; Eccl 2:6

62. (9×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: at-that-, in-that | es: En-ese-, en-esa, en-ese | fr: (*), en-elle | de: in-ihr Ezra 5:3; Dan 3:6; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:8; Dan 3:15

63. (9×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [p] | es: P, כ | fr: [p] | de: [p] Exod 21:27; Exod 22:13; Exod 22:24; Exod 23:33; Exod 24:18

64. (9×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: S, [S], selah | es: S | fr: [S], ¶ | de: (*), [S] 2Kgs 19:19; 2Kgs 19:31; 2Kgs 20:3; Job 15:35; Job 24:25

65. (8×) SECOND PERSON PLURAL
en: like-you | es: como-a-vosotros, como-vosotros | fr: (), comme-tu, ¶ | de: (), wie-du Num 15:15; Deut 1:11; Deut 3:20; Josh 1:15; Judg 8:2

66. (7×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: against-him, at-him, to-him | es: a-él, contra-él, de-él | fr: (), en-lui | de: (), ihm, in-ihm 1Chr 15:29; Neh 4:1; Neh 6:18; Esth 6:13

67. (7×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: - | es: [] | fr: - | de: §, ¶ Gen 16:16; Gen 17:14; Gen 17:27; Gen 19:38; Gen 20:18

68. (7×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: [nun] | es: - | fr: (*) | de: [nun] Ps 107:20; Ps 107:21; Ps 107:22; Ps 107:23; Ps 107:24

69. (7×) SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: belongs-to-you, is-yours, to-you | es: a-ti, para-ti, tuyas | fr: (), appartient-à-tu, à-tu | de: (), belongs-zu-du, zu-du Exod 9:19; Deut 10:13; 1Sam 9:20; 1Sam 25:6; 1Sam 25:7

70. (6×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: by-it, in-it, on-it | es: con-ella, en-él, por-él | fr: en-elle, ¶ | de: in-ihm, in-ihr Prov 17:1; Prov 20:1; Isa 37:29; Isa 37:34; Jer 36:14

71. (6×) RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: and-to-me, is-for-me, to-Me | es: mío, para-mí, y-mío | fr: (), et-() | de: ist-für-mich, und-zu-mich, zu-mich Ps 50:12; Ps 56:9; Ps 60:7; Ps 118:6

72. (6×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: against-him, him, in-him | es: a-él, contra-él, de-él | fr: contre-lui, dans-lui, de-lui | de: gegen-ihn, ihn, in-ihm Gen 33:11; Gen 37:11; Gen 37:22; Exod 23:21; Deut 18:5

73. (5×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: to-it | es: a-ella, de-él, para-él | fr: d'elle,, à-cela | de: ihr, zu-es Num 4:9; Deut 4:7; Deut 4:8; 2Sam 5:9; Song 3:7

74. (5×) SECOND PERSON PLURAL
en: to-you, you | es: a-ustedes, a-vosotros | fr: (*), à-toi | de: euch Gen 34:15; Gen 34:16; Gen 46:33; Gen 47:16; Hos 5:13

75. (5×) SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: for-you | es: para-ti, tienes | fr: pour-toi | de: fuer-du Josh 17:15; Josh 17:17; Josh 17:18

76. (5×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: for-them, for-themselves, of-them | es: de-ellos, para-ellos | fr: (), à-() | de: (*), zu-ihnen Ps 119:165; Isa 16:4; Isa 26:14; Isa 35:8; Lam 1:19

77. (4×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: are-his, for-it, is | es: de-él, para-el, tiene | fr: (*) | de: für-es, ist, ist-sein Ps 84:5; Ps 95:4; Ps 109:11; Ps 144:15

78. (4×) SECOND PERSON PLURAL
en: for-you, for-yourselves, yourselves | es: de-vosotros, para-vosotros | fr: (*) | de: euch Isa 22:14; Jer 44:7; Jer 44:8

79. (4×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: against-her, for-it | es: contra-ella | fr: contre-sa, pour-cela, à-elle | de: fuer-es, gegen-ihr, ihr Num 5:13; Num 13:30; Deut 22:14; Jer 50:9

80. (4×) DISCOURSE PARTICLES
en: from-them, in-them | es: en-ellos, por-ellos | fr: (), en-eux | de: () Ezek 18:24; Dan 5:2; Dan 5:3; Dan 5:23

81. (4×) SECOND PERSON PLURAL
en: by-you | es: por-vosotros | fr: () | de: (), euch Jer 29:14; Ezek 20:3; Ezek 20:31

82. (4×) SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: is-yours, to-you, yours | es: a-ti, tuyo | fr: est-tien, tien, à-toi | de: dir-gehört Gen 14:23; Gen 20:7; Gen 45:10; Gen 45:11

83. (3×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: to-him | es: a-él, él | fr: à-lui | de: zu-ihn Deut 11:22; Deut 30:20; Josh 22:5

84. (3×) RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: by-Me, by-myself | es: por-mí | fr: en-moi, par-myself | de: bei-mir, in-mir Gen 22:16; Jer 22:5; Jer 49:13

85. (3×) SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: for-You, in-You- | es: En-ti-, de-ti, por-ti | fr: (*) | de: für-du, in-du- Ps 63:1; Ps 71:1

86. (3×) SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: Yourself, for-You, of-Yours | es: para-ti, tuya, tú? | fr: ¶, à-toi | de: dir Job 10:4; Lam 1:10; Lam 3:44

87. (3×) SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: Yours, for-Yourself | es: Para-ti, para-ti | fr: (*) | de: Yours, für-dich-selbst Ps 80:15; Ps 80:17; Ps 119:94

88. (3×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: to-him | es: para-sí, para-él | fr: () | de: (), ihm 1Chr 2:19; Esth 2:7; Esth 2:15

89. (2×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: for-itself | es: para-sí | fr: pour-lui., ¶ | de: ihm Prov 23:5; Song 2:11

90. (2×) SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS
en: you | es: a-ti | fr: (*) | de: du Ps 50:12; Ps 50:16

91. (2×) GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: among-us, in-us | es: en-nosotros | fr: parmi-nous, son-fils | de: sein-Sohn, unter-uns Josh 24:27; 2Chr 20:12

92. (2×) RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: for-me, me | es: a-mí, para-mí | fr: pour-moi., ¶ | de: mir Job 36:2; Song 8:1

93. (2×) PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: them, to-them | es: a-ellos. | fr: (*) | de: zu-Reichtum Ezra 4:20; Ezra 5:2

94. (2×) STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-to-it | es: y-a-ella, y-para-ella | fr: et-à-cela, et-à-elle | de: und-ihr, und-zu-es Judg 3:16; Dan 7:6

Greek

5523 entries

ἄλφα G0001 N-NNS (4×)

Alpha; the first letter of the Greek alphabet, used as a divine title meaning 'the First' or 'the Beginning'

Alpha is the first letter of the Greek alphabet, deployed in Revelation as a majestic self-designation of God and the risen Christ. In the phrase 'I am the Alpha and the Omega,' it declares absolute primacy—the one who stands at the origin of all things. All four occurrences appear in Revelation (1:8, 11; 21:6; 22:13), always paired with Omega to form a merism encompassing all of reality from first to last. Every major translation simply transliterates: Alpha across English, Spanish, French, and German.

(4×) Alpha as a christological and theological title—the first letter of the Greek alphabet functioning as a divine self-designation meaning 'the First' or 'the Beginning.' Paired with Omega in all four Revelation passages (1:8, 11; 21:6; 22:13), it forms an A-to-Z merism claiming sovereignty over all existence. The universal transliteration across languages (English 'Alpha,' Spanish 'Alfa,' French 'Alpha,' German 'Alpha') reflects its status as an irreducible symbolic name rather than a translatable concept. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: Alpha | es: Alfa, Álpha | fr: Alpha | de: Alpha Rev 1:8; Rev 1:11; Rev 21:6; Rev 22:13

Ἀαρών G0002 N-NMS (5×)

Aaron; the brother of Moses, first high priest of Israel, referenced in NT as the priestly archetype.

The indeclinable Greek form of Hebrew Aharon, referring to Moses' brother and Israel's first high priest. In the New Testament, Aaron appears in contexts that ground priestly legitimacy and typology. Luke traces Elizabeth's lineage to Aaron's daughters (Luke 1:5), Stephen recounts the golden calf incident (Acts 7:40), and Hebrews invokes Aaron repeatedly as the benchmark against which Christ's superior priesthood is measured (Heb 5:4; 7:11; 9:4). The name is transliterated identically across languages — Spanish 'Aarón,' French and German 'Aaron' — reflecting its universal recognition.

(5×) The proper name Aaron (Hebrew אַהֲרֹן), Moses' brother and Israel's founding high priest. In NT usage, Aaron functions primarily as a priestly type: Hebrews argues that Jesus' priesthood surpasses the Aaronic order (Heb 5:4; 7:11), and the ark's contents include Aaron's budding rod (Heb 9:4). Luke 1:5 anchors the Baptist's priestly lineage through Aaron's line. All translations — Spanish 'Aarón,' French 'Aaron,' German 'Aaron' — preserve the name unchanged, confirming its status as a universally recognized biblical figure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Aarōn, of-Aarōn | es: Aarón, de-Aarōn, de-Aarón | fr: Aaron | de: Aaron Luke 1:5; Acts 7:40; Heb 5:4; Heb 7:11; Heb 9:4

Ἀβαδδών G0003 N-NMS (1×)

Abaddon; Hebrew name for the place/angel of destruction, transliterated into Greek Revelation 9:11 identifies Abaddon as the angel of the Abyss, whose Greek name is Apollyon (the Destroyer). The term comes directly from Hebrew 'abaddon' (destruction), which appears in Wisdom literature as a personification of Sheol or the grave (Job 26:6; 28:22; Proverbs 15:11). John transliterates the Hebrew and provides the Greek equivalent, creating a bilingual wordplay on destruction. This angel-king over the demonic locusts embodies the destructive power unleashed from the bottomless pit.

(1×) The Hebrew background establishes Abaddon as the realm or personification of the dead in Wisdom literature—a parallel to Sheol, representing utter destruction and the grave. Revelation transforms this place-concept into an angelic figure, the ruler over the Abyss. The dual naming (Hebrew Abaddon, Greek Apollyon) emphasizes the universal scope of this destructive power—recognized in both Jewish and Greek worldviews. The uniform transliteration across Spanish (Abaddón), French, and German shows this functions as a proper name rather than a common noun in Revelation. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: Abaddon | es: Abaddón | fr: Abaddon | de: Abaddon Rev 9:11

ἀβαρής G0004 Adj-AMS (1×)

without burden, not burdensome; causing no financial or personal weight to others

Paul uses this rare adjective in 2 Corinthians 11:9 to describe how he kept himself from being a financial burden to the Corinthians—he was 'without burden' to them. The term combines alpha-privative with 'baros' (weight, burden), meaning literally 'weightless' or 'causing no heaviness.' In medical texts it describes a light pulse; here it describes apostolic ministry that doesn't weigh down recipients with financial demands. Paul's self-support through tentmaking made him 'abarēs'—unburdening the church he served.

(1×) The adjective describes Paul's deliberate choice to avoid financial dependency, making himself 'without burden' by working with his own hands. The metaphor of weight and lightness pervades Paul's economic language: he refuses to be heavy or oppressive to the churches. Spanish 'sin carga' (without load), French 'sans charge,' and German 'ohne Last' all preserve the image of lifting weight from others. This stands in contrast to the false apostles who apparently demanded support—Paul's unburdened ministry became a mark of authenticity. BURDENS AND LOADS

en: without-burden | es: sin-carga | fr: sans-charge | de: ohne-Last 2Cor 11:9

G0005 N-VMS (3×)

Abba (Aramaic vocative 'father'); transliterated address to God expressing intimate filial relationship

An Aramaic word transliterated directly into Greek, preserving Jesus's and early Christians' prayer language. It appears in Mark 14:36 (Jesus in Gethsemane), Romans 8:15, and Galatians 4:6 (believers adopted as children). Always paired with Greek πατήρ ('Father'), it signals both continuity with Jesus's own prayers and the Spirit-enabled intimacy of adopted sonship. The term carries familial warmth—not formal 'sir' but 'papa,' though not merely casual.

(3×) Preserves the Aramaic vocative that Jesus used addressing God, now adopted by Spirit-filled believers. The transliteration across all languages (Spanish 'Abbá,' French/German/English 'Abba') maintains its special status—not merely translated but transferred as a Christian technical term. Paul's dual formula ('Abba! Father!') bridges Aramaic-speaking and Greek-speaking worship, marking the universal access of adopted children to cry out as Jesus did in his agony and trust. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS en: Abba | es: Abbá, Abbâ | fr: Abba | de: Abba Mark 14:36; Rom 8:15; Gal 4:6

Ἄβελ G0006 N-GMS (4×)

Abel; the second son of Adam, whose righteous offering and innocent blood became a type of faithful martyrdom

Abel, from Hebrew hevel, names Adam's second son whose sacrifice God accepted and whose murder by Cain became the Bible's first instance of innocent blood shed. In the New Testament, Jesus invokes 'the blood of Abel' (Matt 23:35; Luke 11:51) as the starting point of a long history of righteous bloodshed. Hebrews 11:4 holds Abel up as the first exemplar of faith, and 12:24 contrasts his blood—which cries for justice—with Christ's blood, which speaks a better word.

(4×) Abel as a proper name designating Adam's righteous second son, functioning in the NT as a typological figure of faithful martyrdom. Matthew 23:35 and Luke 11:51 cite his blood as the opening chapter of innocent suffering, while Hebrews 11:4 and 12:24 develop his theological significance—faith that speaks even after death. Translations consistently transliterate: English 'Abel'/'Habel,' Spanish 'Hábel,' French 'Abel,' German 'Abel,' preserving the Hebrew name across all traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Habel, of-Abel, of-Habel | es: Hábel, de-Hábel | fr: Abel | de: Abel, Ἄβελ Matt 23:35; Luke 11:51; Heb 11:4; Heb 12:24

Ἀβιά G0007 N-NMS (3×)

Abijah, Abia; name of a priestly division and a Judean king

A Hebrew name (meaning 'Yahweh is father') appearing in two distinct lineages in the New Testament. Matthew 1:7 lists Abijah as son of Rehoboam in the royal genealogy of Jesus. Luke 1:5 identifies Zechariah as belonging to 'the division of Abijah'—one of the twenty-four priestly courses established in 1 Chronicles 24. This connects John the Baptist's father to the temple's organized priestly service.

(3×) Designates both a Judean monarch in Jesus's ancestry and a priestly order in temple worship. The name appears twice in Matthew 1:7 (genitive 'of Abijah' and nominative 'Abijah begot'), establishing royal lineage. Luke's reference to the priestly division situates Zechariah in the established cultic rotation, adding legitimacy to the Baptist's prophetic origins. Transliterations vary slightly (Spanish 'Abiá/Abía') but preserve the name's recognition across languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Abia, of-Abia | es: Abiá, Abía | fr: Abia | de: Abia Matt 1:7; Luke 1:5

Ἀβιάθαρ G0008 N-GMS (1×)

Abiathar; high priest during David's reign, mentioned in a controversial Markan passage

Mark 2:26 mentions Abiathar in the context of David eating the showbread—'in the days of Abiathar the high priest'—though 1 Samuel 21 actually names Ahimelech, Abiathar's father, as priest at that time. This textual difficulty has generated extensive discussion. The name means 'father of excellence' in Hebrew. Abiathar later became high priest under David and served faithfully until siding with Adonijah, leading to his deposition by Solomon. Mark's reference assumes readers' familiarity with this significant priestly figure.

(1×) The genitive form here places the David narrative 'in the time of Abiathar the high priest,' though technically Ahimelech was priest at Nob when David ate the showbread. Scholars propose various solutions: Mark uses Abiathar as the better-known figure, or 'epi' means 'in the section about Abiathar' referring to 1 Samuel 21-22 where Abiathar escapes and joins David. The unanimous transliteration (Spanish Abiathár, French Abiathar, German Abjathar) treats this as a straightforward proper name despite the historical complexity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abiathar | es: Abiathár | fr: Abiathar | de: Abjathar Mark 2:26

Ἀβειληνή G0009 N-GFS (1×)

Abilene; tetrarchy in the Anti-Lebanon region governed by Lysanias

Luke 3:1 provides precise chronological coordinates for John the Baptist's ministry: 'Lysanias was tetrarch of Abilene.' This district took its name from Abila, a city in the Anti-Lebanon mountain range northwest of Damascus. Ancient inscriptions confirm a Lysanias ruling this territory in the early first century, validating Luke's historical precision. The term represents the Hellenistic administrative geography of the region—a tetrarchy (fourth part) carved from former Iturean holdings. Luke's geographical specificity grounds salvation history in concrete time and place.

(1×) The genitive form indicates territorial governance—'of Abilene'—situating this tetrarchy alongside Galilee, Iturea, and other political divisions. Inscriptional evidence has vindicated Luke's accuracy after earlier skepticism; a Lysanias did indeed govern Abilene in the relevant period. The district's name derives from Abila, its chief city, following the common pattern where territories take the name of their urban centers. French 'Abilène' and Spanish 'Abilēné' preserve the Greek spelling, marking this as a firmly established geographical designation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Abilēnē | es: Abilēné | fr: Abilène | de: Ἀβιληνῆς Luke 3:1

Ἀβιούδ G0010 N-NMS (2×)

Abiud, a name in Jesus' genealogy meaning 'my father is majesty'

Abiud appears in Matthew's genealogy of Jesus, occurring twice in verse 1:13 as part of the post-exilic lineage. The name derives from Hebrew roots meaning 'my father is majesty' or 'father of praise.' He stands in the critical transition from exile to restoration, linking the Davidic line through Zerubbabel to Joseph. Like many names in this portion of Matthew's genealogy, Abiud is otherwise unknown in Old Testament records, representing the obscure generations that preserved the messianic line through centuries of waiting. His presence testifies to God's faithfulness in preserving David's seed through anonymous generations.

(2×) All four languages render the name identically or nearly so: Abiud, Abioúd, Abioud. The multilingual uniformity reflects standard practice with proper names—transliteration rather than translation. The name's double occurrence in Matthew 1:13 establishes his place in the messianic genealogy. Though historically obscure, Abiud represents the faithful preservation of David's line through the silent centuries between Testaments. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abioud | es: Abioúd | fr: Abioud | de: Abiud Matt 1:13

Ἀβραάμ G0011 N-DMS (73×)

Abraham — the patriarch, father of Isaac, to whom God gave the covenant of promise and the land of Canaan.

Abraam is the indeclinable Greek transliteration of the Hebrew Avraham, the great patriarch of Israel. Every New Testament occurrence points back to the figure of Genesis 12-25: the man called out of Ur, given a covenant of circumcision, promised innumerable descendants, and tested with the offering of Isaac. In the Gospels, Jesus invokes Abraham to redefine covenant membership — 'God is able from these stones to raise up children for Abraham' (Matt 3:9). Paul builds his theology of justification by faith on Abraham's example (Rom 4; Gal 3:6-9). The phrase 'Abraham's bosom' (Luke 16:22) became a figure for the blessed afterlife. Spanish Abrahan, French Abraham, and German Abraham all transliterate directly.

Abraam (73×) The proper name of the patriarch Abraham, father of Isaac and grandfather of Jacob, to whom God gave the foundational covenant of promise (Gen 12:1-3; 15:6; 17:5). In the New Testament he appears as the paradigm of faith (Rom 4:3; Gal 3:6-9; Heb 11:8-19), the ancestor invoked in genealogies (Matt 1:1-2), and the figure whose 'bosom' signifies blessed rest (Luke 16:22). All target languages transliterate the name directly. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abraam | es: Abraám, a-Abraám | fr: Abraham | de: Abraham Matt 1:2; Matt 1:17; Matt 3:9; Matt 8:11

ἄβυσσος G0012 N-GFS (9×)

The abyss; a bottomless depth or chasm, often the underworld prison of demonic beings or the realm of the dead.

In classical Greek, abyssos described anything unfathomably deep or boundless. The Septuagint adopted it for the primordial deep of Genesis 1:2 and the great watery depths. In the New Testament, it takes on a distinctly cosmic-eschatological flavor: the demons in Luke 8:31 beg Jesus not to send them into the abyss, and in Revelation 9:1-11 it is the locked shaft from which destructive locusts emerge. Paul uses it in Romans 10:7 as the realm of the dead. Spanish 'abismo' and French 'abime' preserve the same sense of unfathomable depth, while German 'Abgrund' (literally 'away-ground') captures the bottomless quality vividly.

abyss (9×) The abyss as a cosmological deep or underworld prison —a vast, bottomless realm associated with chaos, confinement of evil spirits, and the abode of the dead. In Luke 8:31 the demons plead not to be cast into the abyss; in Revelation 9:1-2, 11 it is a locked pit from which destructive forces emerge under a demonic king. Romans 10:7 employs it as the realm of the dead from which Christ was raised. All nine NT occurrences share the core image of a terrifying, inaccessible depth beneath the created order. ABYSS AND DEEP en: abyss | es: abismo, abismo, | fr: abîme | de: Abgrund, ἄβυσσον Luke 8:31; Rom 10:7; Rev 9:1; Rev 9:2; Rev 9:11

Ἄγαβος G0013 N-NMS (2×)

Agabus, a Christian prophet who warned of famine and Paul's imprisonment

Agabus was an early Christian prophet who appears twice in Acts with dramatic warnings. In Acts 11:28, he predicted through the Spirit a great famine that would spread over the entire Roman world—a prophecy fulfilled under Claudius. In Acts 21:10, he performed a symbolic act in the prophetic tradition: binding his own hands and feet with Paul's belt to vividly warn that Paul would be bound by the Jews in Jerusalem. His ministry exemplifies the continuation of prophetic gifts in the early church, providing divine insight for the community's preparation and decision-making.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses show slight spelling variation—Greek Ἄγαβος versus Ἀγαβος, Spanish Hágabos versus Ágabos (accent placement)—but all preserve the same name through transliteration. His two appearances in Acts establish him as a recognized prophet whose words carried authority. The famine prediction (Acts 11:28) prompted relief efforts; the imprisonment warning (Acts 21:10) tested Paul's resolve. The consistent name across languages reflects his historical identity as a prophet known across the early Christian community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Agabos, Hagabos | es: Hágabos, Ágabos | fr: Agabus | de: Ἄγαβος Acts 11:28; Acts 21:10

ἀγαθο-εργέω G0014 V-PPA-NMS (2×)

to do good, to actively practice beneficence and good works

This compound verb emphasizes active doing of good—not merely being good but energetically practicing beneficence. In Acts 14:17, Paul declares that God 'did good' by giving rain and fruitful seasons, demonstrating divine goodness through providence. In 1 Timothy 6:18, Paul commands the rich 'to do good,' to be generous and ready to share—translating wealth into active benevolence. The verb captures good not as static virtue but as dynamic action, good works that flow from good character. It's righteousness in motion, virtue expressed in tangible benefit to others.

(2×) Multilingual glosses consistently emphasize active doing—Spanish 'hacer bien' and 'haciendo bien' (doing good), French 'faire le bien,' German forms preserving the Greek participial structure. Both occurrences present God or humans as active agents of good: God doing good through creation's bounty (Acts 14:17), believers doing good through generous sharing (1 Tim 6:18). The cross-linguistic evidence supports this as energetic beneficence, not passive goodness but active works that bless others. MORAL GOODNESS

en: doing-good, to-do-good | es: hacer-bien, haciendo-bien | fr: faire-le-bien, ἀγαθοεργεῖν | de: ἀγαθοεργεῖν, ἀγαθουργῶν Acts 14:17; 1Tim 6:18

ἀγαθο-ποιέω G0015 V-PPA-NFP (10×)

Do good, act beneficently — to perform morally good or kind actions toward others

The verb ἀγαθοποιέω (agathopoieo) means 'to do good' or 'to act rightly,' combining ἀγαθός (good) with ποιέω (to do). Jesus invokes it pointedly in the Sabbath controversy: 'Is it lawful on the Sabbath to do good or to do harm?' (Mark 3:4; Luke 6:9). Luke's Sermon on the Plain develops the ethic further: 'Do good to those who hate you' (6:27, 33, 35). Peter applies it to believers enduring unjust suffering (1 Pet 2:15, 20; 3:6, 17). Translations converge strikingly: Spanish 'hacer bien,' Arabic 'صنع خيراً,' Hindi 'भलाई करना,' Korean '선을 행하다,' Swahili 'kufanya mema.'

do good (10×) To perform morally good, kind, or beneficial actions, encompassing both ethical obedience and active benevolence. Jesus uses it to frame the Sabbath question about saving life versus destroying it (Mark 3:4; Luke 6:9), then extends it to the radical command of loving enemies (Luke 6:27, 33, 35). Peter employs the term for Christians enduring unjust treatment while continuing to act rightly (1 Pet 2:15, 20; 3:6, 17), and 3 John 11 contrasts the one who does good with the one who does evil. All multilingual glosses uniformly render 'to do good.' MORAL GOODNESS

en: do-good, doing-good, good-to-do | es: bien-hacer, haced-bien, hacer-bien | fr: faire-le-bien | de: ἀγαθοποιεῖτε, ἀγαθοποιοῦντας, ἀγαθοποιοῦντες Mark 3:4; Luke 6:9; Luke 6:33; Luke 6:35

ἀγαθο-ποίησις G0016 N-DFS (1×)

well-doing, doing good; the practice of active goodness and beneficence

This noun appears once in the New Testament, in 1 Peter 4:19: those suffering according to God's will should commit their souls to him 'in well-doing' (en agathopoiia). The term combines 'agathos' (good) and 'poieo' (to do), creating an abstract noun for the practice of goodness. Peter emphasizes that suffering should not stop good works—rather, continue doing good while entrusting yourself to the faithful Creator. The dative construction suggests manner: suffering should be endured 'in the sphere of' or 'with the accompaniment of' continued good deeds.

(1×) The hapax legomenon designates active, concrete good-doing rather than mere good intention. Peter calls suffering believers to continue their practice of beneficence even under persecution—do not let suffering make you cease doing good. Spanish 'hacer bien,' French 'ἀγαθοποιΐᾳ' (transliterated), and German 'Wohltun' (well-doing) all capture the active, practical dimension. This pairs with the verb forms in 2:15, 20; 3:6, 17 where Peter repeatedly emphasizes doing good as the Christian's calling, especially when it provokes unjust suffering. MORAL GOODNESS

en: doing-good | es: hacer-bien | fr: ἀγαθοποιΐᾳ | de: Wohltun 1Pet 4:19

ἀγαθο-ποιός G0017 N-GMP (1×)

one who does good, benefactor; substantival adjective for those who actively practice goodness

First Peter 2:14 describes governors as sent to punish evildoers and 'praise those who do good' (agathopoiōn). This participial adjective functions substantivally—'the good-doers' or 'benefactors.' The term appears in the Septuagint and later Greek, sometimes describing beneficial planets in astrological texts. Peter's point is that civil authority ideally rewards virtue and punishes vice—even pagan governors recognize and commend good works. This creates space for Christian witness: let your good living be so undeniable that even hostile authorities must acknowledge it.

(1×) The genitive plural participle substantively designates a class of people: the good-doers, those whose pattern is beneficence. In 1 Peter 2:14, these are the ones civil authorities should commend—establishing an ideal (if not always actual) function of government. The term's background in Hellenistic culture (where rulers styled themselves 'benefactors' and astrologers spoke of beneficent planetary influences) makes it particularly apt for Peter's audience interfacing with Greco-Roman civic structures. Spanish 'los que hacen bien' and German 'Gutes tun' both supply verbal phrases where Greek uses the substantive participle. MORAL GOODNESS

en: of-those-doing-good | es: de-los-que-hacen-bien | fr: ἀγαθοποιῶν | de: Gutes-tun 1Pet 2:14

ἀγᾰθός G0018 Adj-ANS (101×)

Good; morally excellent, virtuous, or beneficial—of persons, deeds, or things; also substantivized as 'good things' or 'the good.'

One of the New Testament's cardinal adjectives for moral excellence, agathos describes what is inherently good in character, quality, or effect. Jesus' provocative question 'Why do you call me good?' (Matt 19:17) probes the very nature of divine goodness, while the 'good tree' that bears 'good fruit' (Matt 7:17) makes moral quality visible and tangible. When substantivized, it yields 'good things' (Luke 1:53, the hungry filled with good things) or the abstract principle of 'the good' itself (Rom 12:9, 'cling to the good'). German gut and Spanish bueno follow the same adjectival-to-substantive pattern, confirming the natural polysemy.

1. good (moral quality) (85×) Adjectival use describing persons, actions, or things as morally good, virtuous, upright, or beneficial in quality. This is the overwhelming sense (85x), from the good tree and good fruit of the Sermon on the Mount (Matt 7:17-18) to the 'good and faithful servant' (Matt 25:21) and the 'good soil' of the parable of the sower (Luke 8:8). Across languages—Spanish bueno, French bon, German gut—this maps directly and needs no disambiguation. MORAL GOODNESS en: good, is-good | es: bueno | fr: bon | de: gut Matt 7:17; Matt 7:18; Matt 12:35; Matt 19:16

2. good things, goods (13×) Substantivized use referring to good things, blessings, or material and spiritual goods, typically in the plural or with the article. Mary's Magnificat declares the hungry 'filled with good things' (Luke 1:53); the rich fool plans to store up his 'goods' (Luke 12:18-19). Matt 7:11 asks how much more the Father will give 'good things' to those who ask. Spanish bienes and French biens capture this nominal shift from quality to quantifiable blessing. MORAL GOODNESS

en: good, good-things, goods | es: bienes, buenas, buenas-cosas | fr: bon | de: gut Matt 7:11; Matt 12:34; Matt 12:35; Luke 1:53; Luke 12:18

3. the good (abstract) (3×) Abstract substantivized use denoting 'the good' as a moral concept or principle—goodness itself rather than specific goods. Romans 12:9 exhorts believers to 'cling to the good'; Romans 12:21 urges 'overcome evil with the good'; Hebrews 13:21 prays God will equip believers 'in every good thing.' Only three occurrences carry this fully abstract philosophical weight, where agathos names the moral ideal rather than describing a concrete entity. MORAL GOODNESS en: good | es: bueno, cosa-buena | fr: bon | de: gut Rom 12:9; Rom 12:21; Heb 13:21

ἀγαθωσύνη G0019 N-GFS (4×)

Goodness, uprightness, moral excellence; an active benevolence that goes beyond mere kindness

Agathosyne denotes a robust moral goodness—not passive innocence but an active, generous uprightness that shapes how a person lives and relates to others. Paul lists it among the fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22) and as a component of the Spirit's light (Eph 5:9), pairing it with righteousness and truth. In Romans 15:14, he affirms that the Roman believers are 'full of goodness,' and in 2 Thessalonians 1:11, he prays that God would fulfill every desire for goodness. It is virtue with agency.

(4×) Active moral goodness, generous uprightness—a quality that goes beyond passive decency to express benevolent character in action. All four NT occurrences are Pauline: listed as a fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22), paired with righteousness and truth as the 'fruit of light' (Eph 5:9), affirmed as a quality of mature believers (Rom 15:14), and prayed for as a divine gift (2 Thess 1:11). Spanish 'bondad,' French 'bonté,' German 'Güte,' and English 'goodness' all converge, yet the Pauline contexts push beyond generic niceness toward a Spirit-empowered moral vitality. MORAL GOODNESS en: goodness, of-goodness | es: bondad, de-bondad | fr: bonté | de: Guete Rom 15:14; Gal 5:22; Eph 5:9; 2Thess 1:11

ἀγαλλί-ᾱσις G0020 N-NFS (5×)

Exultation, extreme gladness; an intense, often Spirit-prompted joy associated with God's saving acts.

Denotes an intense, overflowing gladness that goes beyond ordinary happiness — a deep exultation often linked to God's redemptive action. The word appears at pivotal moments: the angel announces that John's birth will bring 'joy and gladness' (Luke 1:14), the unborn John leaps with agalliasis in Elizabeth's womb (Luke 1:44), and the early church breaks bread with this exultant spirit (Acts 2:46). Hebrews 1:9 quotes Psalm 45, anointing the Son with 'the oil of gladness.' The multilingual evidence captures the intensity well — Spanish 'alegría/regocijo,' French 'allégresse,' German 'Jubel' — all pointing to jubilant, celebratory joy.

(5×) Intense, exuberant gladness or exultation, frequently associated with divine activity and eschatological hope. Distinguished from ordinary joy (χαρά) by its heightened, often ecstatic quality. The infant John leaps with agalliasis at the presence of the Messiah (Luke 1:44), believers eat together in this spirit (Acts 2:46), and Christ is presented 'faultless before his glory with exceeding joy' (Jude 1:24). Spanish 'regocijo' and French 'allégresse' both capture the sense of rapturous celebration that sets this term apart from milder expressions of happiness. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: exultation, gladness, of-gladness | es: alegría, de-regocijo | fr: allégresse, allégresse, | de: Jubel, ἀγαλλίασις, ἀγαλλιάσει Luke 1:14; Luke 1:44; Acts 2:46; Heb 1:9; Jude 1:24

ἀγαλλι-άω G0021 V-AIA-3S (11×)

Rejoice greatly, exult — to leap or throb with overwhelming gladness, especially in God's saving acts

The verb ἀγαλλιάω (agalliaō) expresses a joy so intense it borders on the physical — an exultation that can scarcely be contained. Mary's soul 'rejoices greatly' in God her Savior (Luke 1:47), Jesus himself 'exulted in the Holy Spirit' (Luke 10:21), and Abraham 'rejoiced' to see Christ's day (John 8:56). The Beatitudes promise this exultation as the reward for enduring persecution (Matt 5:12). Peter uses it of believers who, though not yet seeing Christ, 'rejoice with joy inexpressible' (1 Pet 1:8). Spanish 'regocijarse' and French 'tressaillir de joie' both reach for this register of overflowing delight.

to rejoice greatly, exult (11×) To exult, rejoice greatly, or leap with gladness — a joy rooted in God's redemptive activity rather than mere circumstance. Used of Mary's Magnificat response (Luke 1:47), Jesus' Spirit-filled thanksgiving (Luke 10:21), Abraham's forward-looking joy in Christ (John 8:56), and the disciples' temporary delight in John the Baptist (John 5:35). The Beatitudes command this exultation under persecution (Matt 5:12). Spanish 'regocijarse' and German 'frohlocken' both convey the ecstatic, God-directed quality of this gladness. REJOICING AND GREETING

en: be-glad, exulting, he-rejoiced | es: alegraos, alegraros, os-alegráis | fr: se-réjouir | de: jubeln, jubelt Matt 5:12; Luke 1:47; Luke 10:21; John 5:35; John 8:56

ἄγαμ-ος G0022 N-NFS (4×)

unmarried, single; one without a spouse, whether never married or formerly married Used exclusively by Paul in 1 Corinthians 7, this adjective designates someone currently without a marriage partner. In classical Greek it applied primarily to men (with ἄνανδρος for women), but Paul broadens its scope to include both sexes, addressing widowers in 7:8 and a separated wife in 7:11. The Spanish renderings 'soltera/soltero' and French 'célibataire' confirm the gender-inclusive sense in the NT. Paul uses the term pastorally, not as a social stigma but to discuss the spiritual advantages of undivided devotion to the Lord.

(4×) Unmarried, single — describing a person currently without a spouse, whether never married, widowed, or separated. All four NT occurrences fall within Paul's sustained argument in 1 Corinthians 7 about the relative merits of married and unmarried life. The cross-lingual evidence (eng 'unmarried,' spa 'soltero/soltera,' fra 'célibataire,' deu 'unverheiratet') uniformly points to present marital status rather than lifelong celibacy, encompassing both the widowed (7:8) and the separated (7:11). MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: unmarried | es: soltera, soltero, solteros | fr: célibataire | de: unverheiratet 1Cor 7:8; 1Cor 7:11; 1Cor 7:32; 1Cor 7:34

ἀγᾰνακτ-έω G0023 V-PPA-NMP (7×)

To be indignant or displeased; to show irritation or anger at something perceived as wrong or unjust.

Describes a strong emotional reaction of displeasure or moral outrage, typically provoked by witnessing something perceived as wrong or inappropriate. In the Gospels, it appears when the disciples are angered by perceived presumption (Matt 20:24; Mark 10:41) or when religious leaders object to the crowd's praise of Jesus (Matt 21:15). The word carries a visceral edge — its classical Greek roots point to a physical boiling or fermentation of feeling. Every major translation tradition converges on a single sense: Spanish 'indignarse,' French

's'indigner,' German 'unwillig sein,' all capturing righteous or self-righteous displeasure.

be indignant (7×) To feel and express strong displeasure or moral indignation at a perceived offense or injustice. The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform — Spanish consistently renders 'indignarse,' French 's'indigner,' and English 'be indignant' — confirming a single undifferentiated sense. In Matt 20:24 the ten disciples are indignant at James and John's request; in Mark 10:14 Jesus himself is indignant when children are turned away. The word bridges righteous anger and mere irritation depending on context, but all NT uses cluster under one semantic profile. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: being-indignant, indignant, to-be-indignant | es: a-indignarse, indignándose, se-indignaron | fr: s'indigner | de: ἀγαναχτεῖν, ἀγαναχτοῦντες, ἀγαναχτῶν Matt 20:24; Matt 21:15; Matt 26:8; Mark 10:14; Mark 10:41

ἀγᾰνάκτ-ησις G0024 N-AFS (1×)

indignation, vexation; emotional agitation combining pain and anger

Paul lists this among the emotional responses his severe letter produced in the Corinthian church: 'what indignation!' (2 Corinthians 7:11). The noun derives from 'aganakteō' (to be greatly grieved or indignant), which in classical Greek could describe physical irritation (like teething pain) or emotional vexation. Here it represents righteous anger at sin—the Corinthians became indignant at the wrongdoing in their midst once it was exposed. This moral outrage was a mark of their genuine repentance, showing their values had realigned.

(1×) In Paul's catalog of seven responses to his letter, 'aganaktēsis' stands out as the emotional heat—righteous indignation at sin. The classical range from physical irritation to emotional vexation to divine wrath suggests intensity and agitation. Here it marks healthy moral outrage: the Corinthians moved from tolerating sin to being indignant about it. Spanish 'indignación,' French 'indignation,' and German 'Unwille' (displeasure) all capture this stirred-up emotional response. The term differs from mere anger by implying a sense of violated justice or propriety. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: indignation | es: indignación | fr: indignation | de: Unwille 2Cor 7:11

ἀγαπάω G0025 V-PMA-3S (143×)

To love with deliberate goodwill and devotion; as passive participle: beloved; passive: to be loved

The verb that carries the weight of the New Testament's theology of love, agapao encompasses divine love for the world (John 3:16), the believer's love for God and neighbor (Matt 22:37-39), and the mutual love that defines Christian community (John 13:34-35). While older scholarship drew a sharp line between agapao (selfless love) and phileo (affectionate love), the New Testament itself blurs this distinction — Jesus asks Peter 'do you agapas me?' and 'do you phileis me?' in the same conversation (John 21:15-17). What remains distinctive is agapao's capacity for commanding: 'love your enemies' (Matt 5:44; Luke 6:27, 35) presupposes a love that operates by will rather than mere feeling. The perfect passive participle egapemenoi ('beloved ones') became a standard form of address in the epistles (Col 3:12; 1 Thess 1:4; 2 Thess 2:13), transforming a verb of action into a title of identity — those defined by having been loved by God.

1. to love actively (133×) The active verb 'to love' in all finite and infinitival forms — deliberate, volitional love directed toward persons or God — covering 133 of 143 occurrences. This is the love commanded in the Shema quotation ('you shall love the LORD your God,' Matt 22:37; Mark 12:30; Luke 10:27), extended to neighbors (Matt 19:19; 22:39; Rom 13:9; Gal 5:14) and even enemies (Matt 5:44; Luke 6:27, 35). John's Gospel makes it the defining mark of discipleship: 'by this all people will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another' (John 13:35). Spanish amar, French aimer, German lieben, and Arabic ahabba all converge here, though none fully captures the commanded, covenant-loyal dimension that distinguishes New Testament agapao from sentimental affection. LOVE (ACTIVE VERB)
en: he-loves, loves, loving | es: ama, amando, que-ama | fr: aimer | de: lieben, liebt Matt 5:43; Matt 19:19; Matt 22:37; Matt 22:39; Mark 10:21

2. beloved, having been loved (8×) The perfect passive participle egapemenos/-e/-oi used as a substantive adjective meaning 'beloved' or a title of address meaning 'beloved ones' — 8 occurrences where the verbal form has crystallized into a relational designation. Paul addresses the Romans as those whom God has loved and chosen (Rom 9:25, quoting Hosea), and Colossians are called 'God's chosen ones, holy and beloved' (Col 3:12). Ephesians 1:6 speaks of grace 'freely bestowed on us in the Beloved One,' applying the participle to Christ himself. German Geliebten and Spanish amados preserve the participial force — these are not merely people who happen to be loved, but people whose identity is constituted by God's prior loving action. LOVE (ACTIVE VERB)
en: Beloved, beloved, having-been-loved | es: Amado, amada, amada; | fr: aimer, aimés, | de: Geliebten, lieben Rom 9:25; Eph 1:6; Col 3:12; 1Thess 1:4

3. to be loved (passive) (2×) Non-participial passive voice forms indicating the experience of being loved or receiving love — 2 occurrences where the grammatical passive highlights the recipient rather than the agent of love. John 14:21 promises 'the one who loves me will be loved by my Father,' establishing a chain of love from disciple to Son to Father. Second Corinthians 12:15 inverts expectations: Paul will gladly spend and be spent 'even if, loving you more abundantly, I am loved less.' Spanish sera amado and German geliebt werden mark the passive construction, placing the believer in the position of receiving rather than initiating love. LOVE (ACTIVE VERB)
en: I-am-loved, will-be-loved | es: será-amado, soy-amado | fr: aimer | de: lieben John 14:21; 2Cor 12:15

ἀγάπ-η G0026 N-AFS (116×)

Love – God's self-giving love, believers' mutual love, and (rarely) the communal love-feast of the early church.

Agape is the New Testament's signature word for love, carrying a depth and selflessness that distinguished early Christian vocabulary. It encompasses God's love for humanity (Rom 5:8; 1 John 4:8-10), believers' responsive love for God, and the 'new commandment' of mutual love among disciples (John 13:34-35). Every translation tradition renders it with its most exalted love-word: English 'love,' Spanish 'amor,' French 'amour,' German 'Liebe.' Paul's famous hymn in 1 Corinthians 13 defines agape's character. In a single passage, Jude 1:12, the word appears as a concrete plural – the 'love-feasts' (agapai) of early Christian communal meals, where Spanish 'fiestas de amor,' French 'agapes,' and German 'Liebesmahlen' all preserve the distinct communal sense.

1. of love (115×) The overarching concept of love (115x), spanning divine love, human love for God, and mutual love among believers. This is the word behind 'God is love' (1 John 4:8), Jesus' promise that love will identify his disciples (John 13:35), and Paul's declaration that nothing can separate us from God's love (Rom 8:35-39). Multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform – Spanish 'amor,' French 'amour,' German 'Liebe' – reflecting how universally translators recognized agape as the definitive word for self-giving love. Matthew 24:12's warning that 'the love of many will grow cold' shows it can also describe love that fails. LOVE (ABSTRACT NOUN)
en: love | es: amor | fr: amour | de: Liebe Matt 24:12; Luke 11:42; John 5:42; John 13:35; John 15:9

2. love feasts (1×) A rare concrete plural usage (1x) denoting the communal 'love-feasts' of early Christianity – shared meals expressing fellowship and charity. Jude 1:12 warns about false teachers who are 'hidden reefs at your love-feasts.' French 'agapes' preserves the Greek loanword directly, Spanish 'fiestas de amor' and German 'Liebesmahlen' both render the communal-meal sense explicitly. This usage provides precious evidence of early church liturgical practice, distinguishing the communal event from the theological virtue. BANQUETS AND FEASTS
en: love-feasts | es: fiestas-de-amor | fr: agapes | de: Liebesmahlen Jude 1:12

ἀγαπ-ητός G0027 Adj-DMP (61×)

agapetos – beloved, dearly loved; used of God's unique Son and as an affectionate address among believers

The adjective agapetos ('beloved') derives from the verb agapao and conveys deep, cherished love. Its 61 New Testament occurrences divide across two primary contexts. First, it is the divine designation for Jesus at his baptism and transfiguration: 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased' (Matt 3:17; 17:5; Mark 1:11; 9:7). In the parable of the wicked tenants, the owner sends 'his beloved son' as a final emissary (Mark 12:6; Luke 20:13). Second, Paul and other epistle writers use it as an affectionate address for fellow believers: 'beloved brethren' (1 Cor 15:58; Phil 4:1). Spanish amado, French bien-aime, and German geliebt capture both the Christological and fraternal senses.

beloved (61×) An adjective expressing deep, cherished love, used in two principal contexts: as a divine title for Jesus ('this is my beloved Son,' Matt 3:17; 17:5; Mark 1:11), where it echoes the Isaianic Servant and the binding of Isaac; and as a warm term of address among believers in the epistles ('beloved brethren,' 1 Cor 15:58; Phil 4:1; 1 John 4:1). Spanish amado, French bien-aime, and German geliebt all render it consistently. The Christological and communal uses share a single lexical sense of one who is specially loved, with context determining whether the referent is the Son of God or a fellow Christian. BELOVED AND PRECIOUS

en: beloved | es: amado | fr: bien-aimé | de: geliebt, ἀγαπητόν, ἀγαπητός Matt 3:17; Matt 12:18; Matt 17:5; Mark 1:11; Mark 9:7

Ἅγαρ G0028 N-NFS (2×)

Hagar, Sarah's Egyptian maidservant and mother of Ishmael

Hagar was Sarah's Egyptian slave who became Abraham's concubine and bore Ishmael. In Galatians 4, Paul employs her story allegorically: Hagar represents Mount Sinai and the covenant of slavery to law, corresponding to earthly Jerusalem in bondage. Her name appears twice in this passage (4:24-25) as Paul contrasts two covenants—one born of slavery (Hagar/Sinai/present Jerusalem) and one born of promise (Sarah/heavenly Jerusalem). The typology is complex and controversial, but Paul uses Hagar to represent the principle of attempting righteousness through law rather than promise, slavery rather than freedom.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses show slight variation in Greek spelling (Ἁγάρ, Ἁγὰρ with accent differences) but all preserve the Hebrew name Hagar through transliteration. Paul's double reference in Galatians 4:24-25 establishes the allegorical framework: Hagar = Sinai covenant = slavery = earthly Jerusalem. The multilingual uniformity reflects her identity as a known Old Testament figure whose story Paul reinterprets for theological instruction about law versus promise, slavery versus freedom in Christ. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Hagar | es: Hagar | fr: Ἁγάρ, Ἁγὰρ | de: Hagar Gal 4:24; Gal 4:25

ἀγγᾰρ-εύω G0029 V-PIA-3P (3×)

to press into service, compel to serve as courier; requisition labor or resources by authority

A verb derived from Persian imperial practice—the ἄγγαρος system of requisitioning supplies and forced labor for royal messengers. Jesus uses it in the Sermon on the Mount: if someone forces you to go one mile, go two (Matt 5:41). Simon of Cyrene was 'compelled' to carry Jesus's cross (Matt 27:32, Mark 15:21). The term reflects the Roman practice of impressing civilians for military or official service, experienced as oppressive by occupied populations.

(3×) Denotes coercive requisition of service by authorities—a practice Jews knew from both Persian and Roman occupation. Jesus transforms this symbol of oppression into an occasion for radical generosity: voluntary doubling of compelled service subverts the power dynamic. The multilingual glosses consistently use compulsion vocabulary (Spanish 'obligar,' French 'réquisitionner'), reflecting the element of force. Simon's impressment historicizes what Jesus taught theoretically—crucifixion logistics requiring commandeered labor from passing civilians. COMPEL FORCE

en: forces, they-compel, they-compelled | es: obligan, obligaron, obligue-a-ir | fr: réquisitionner | de: ἀγγαρεύουσιν, ἀγγαρεύσει, ἠγγάρευσαν Matt 5:41; Matt 27:32; Mark 15:21

ἀγγεῖον G0030 N-ANP (2×)

vessel, container for holding liquids or dry goods

This noun denotes containers or vessels used for holding and storing various materials—liquids, grains, money, or other goods. In Matthew 13:48, it refers to containers into which fishermen gather good fish, sorting the catch. In Matthew 25:4, the wise virgins take oil in their vessels along with their lamps, prepared for the bridegroom's delayed coming. The word emphasizes function—these are receptacles designed to hold and preserve their contents. Whether fishing baskets, oil flasks, or storage jars, the common thread is containment and utility.

(2×) Multilingual glosses show contextual variation—Spanish 'cestas' (baskets) for the fishing context and 'vasijas' (vessels/jars) for the oil lamps; French 'vases' (vessels); German preserves the Greek forms in transliteration. Both Matthew passages emphasize containers designed for their contents: vessels for sorted fish (13:48), vessels for lamp oil (25:4). The cross-linguistic evidence supports a general term for containers, with specific type determined by context—baskets, jars, flasks, all serving the function of holding and preserving their contents. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: containers, vessels | es: cestas, vasijas | fr: vases | de: ἀγγείοις, ἄγγη Matt 13:48; Matt 25:4

ἀγγελία G0031 N-NFS (2×)

message, announcement, proclamation of news or teaching

This noun denotes a message or announcement—news conveyed from source to recipient. In 1 John, it appears twice introducing fundamental proclamations: 'This is the message we have heard from him and announce to you' (1:5, regarding God as light), and 'This is the message you have heard from the beginning' (3:11, regarding love for one another). The word emphasizes transmitted content—teaching or news passed from Christ through the apostles to the church. It's not merely information but authoritative proclamation, gospel content that must be announced and received.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly emphasize message—Spanish 'mensaje,' French 'ἀγγελία' (preserving Greek), German 'Botschaft' (message/proclamation). Both 1 John occurrences introduce core apostolic teaching: the nature of God (1:5) and the command to love (3:11). The word's etymology connects to 'angel' (messenger), emphasizing the message as something delivered, announced, proclaimed. The multilingual evidence supports this as authoritative communication, gospel content transmitted from Christ through apostolic witnesses to believers. NEWS AND MESSAGES

en: message | es: mensaje | fr: ἀγγελία | de: Botschaft 1John 1:5; 1John 3:11

ἄγγελος G0032 N-AMS (176×)

Angel, messenger — a supernatural heavenly being serving God, or a human envoy sent to deliver a message.

Angelos bridges heaven and earth in the New Testament. In its overwhelming majority of uses, it names the celestial beings who populate God's throne room, deliver divine announcements, and execute heavenly judgments — from Gabriel's annunciation to Mary (Luke 1:26) to the angels at the empty tomb (Matt 28:2). Yet the word never entirely lost its original Greek meaning of 'messenger,' and six times it refers to human envoys: John the Baptist as the promised forerunner (Matt 11:10; Mark 1:2), messengers sent ahead by Jesus (Luke 9:52), and John's disciples visiting Jesus (Luke 7:24). The translation evidence is illuminating: Spanish and English split clearly between 'ángel/angel' and 'mensajero/messenger,' while French and German ('ange/Engel') often use the supernatural term even for human messengers.

1. heavenly angel (170×) A supernatural celestial being who serves as God's agent, attendant, or herald — announcing divine messages, guarding God's people, executing judgment, and worshiping in heaven. All major languages have a dedicated loanword: 'angel' (eng), 'ángel' (spa), 'ange' (fra), 'Engel' (deu), all derived from this very Greek word. Angels appear at every pivotal moment: Jesus' birth (Matt 1:20; Luke 2:9), temptation (Matt 4:11), resurrection (Matt 28:2), and promised return (Matt 25:31). ANGELS AND MESSENGERS

en: an-angel, angel | es: ángel | fr: ange | de: Engel Matt 1:20; Matt 1:24; Matt 2:13; Matt 2:19; Matt 28:2

2. human messenger or envoy (6×) A human messenger, envoy, or representative sent on a specific mission. English and Spanish shift to 'messenger/mensajero,' clearly distinguishing this from the supernatural sense, while French and German retain 'ange/Engel' even here. Applied to John the Baptist as the prophesied forerunner of the Messiah (Matt 11:10; Mark 1:2, quoting Mal 3:1), to the messengers John sent to Jesus (Luke 7:24), and to those Jesus dispatched ahead of him into Samaria (Luke 9:52). ANGELS AND MESSENGERS

en: messenger, messengers | es: mensajero, mensajeros | fr: ange | de: Engel Matt 11:10; Mark 1:2; Luke 7:24; Luke 7:27; Luke 9:52

ἄγε G0033

come!, come on!; imperative-turned-interjection urging action or attention

An imperative form of the verb "to lead" that became fossilized as an interjection, urging someone to action or calling attention. Classical Greek used it extensively (from Homer onward) to introduce exhortations, often with "now" (νύν) or "indeed" (δή). It could precede various verb forms: first-person singular or plural ("let me/us..."), third-person plural ("let them..."), or be followed by ὅπως with future tense. The plural form ἄγετε functioned similarly. Though no occurrences are recorded in this dataset, the lexical entry confirms its presence in biblical Greek as a discourse particle energizing commands or proposals.

ἀγέλ-η G0034 N-NFS (7×)

A herd of animals, especially swine; a group of livestock feeding or moving together.

Refers to a herd or drove of animals, derived from the verb 'to drive' or 'to lead.' In classical Greek it could denote herds of horses, cattle, or even shoals of fish, but every New Testament occurrence involves the famous herd of swine in the Gadarene demoniac episode (Matt 8:30–32; Mark 5:11–13; Luke 8:32–33). The convergence across languages is total: Spanish 'manada,' French 'troupeau,' German 'Herde' — all meaning simply 'herd.' The word appears nowhere else in the NT, making it effectively a technical term for the Gadarene swine narrative.

(7×) A herd or flock of animals grazing or moving as a group. Every NT occurrence refers to the herd of pigs in the Gadarene demoniac accounts. Spanish 'manada,' French 'troupeau,' and German 'Herde' all converge on a single meaning without variation. The classical sense of organized bands of youths (as in Sparta) or shoals of fish never surfaces in biblical usage. In Matt 8:30 and Mark 5:11 the herd is feeding on the hillside; in Matt 8:32 and Mark 5:13 it rushes headlong into the sea — the same herd throughout, confirming one unified sense. FLOCK HERD LIVESTOCK

en: a-herd, herd | es: manada | fr: troupeau | de: Herde, ἀγέλη Matt 8:30; Matt 8:31; Matt 8:32; Mark 5:11; Mark 5:13

ἀγενεᾱλόγητος G0035 Adj-NMS (1×)

without genealogy, of unrecorded descent; having no documented lineage

Hebrews 7:3 describes Melchizedek as 'agenealogētos'—without recorded genealogy. This doesn't mean he literally had no parents, but that Scripture deliberately omits his lineage, making him a type of Christ's eternal priesthood. In a culture obsessed with priestly genealogies (Levites traced their descent meticulously), this silence is thunderous. Melchizedek appears without ancestry and disappears without successors, resembling 'the Son of God' who has neither beginning of days nor end of life. The alpha-privative construction emphasizes what's missing from the biblical record.

(1×) The adjective describes Melchizedek's presentation in Genesis 14—he appears without genealogical introduction, unlike every other significant biblical figure. For the priesthood-focused author of Hebrews, this omission is purposeful: it makes Melchizedek a type of Christ, whose priesthood doesn't depend on Levitical lineage. Spanish 'sin genealogía,' French 'sans généalogie,' and German 'ohne Geschlechtsregister' all preserve the privative construction. The term is a Septuagintal coinage, purpose-built for this unique theological argument about priesthood transcending tribal descent. GENEALOGY ENROLLMENT

en: without-genealogy | es: sin-genealogía | fr: sans-généalogie | de: ohne-Geschlechtsregister Heb 7:3

ἀγεν-ής G0036 Adj-ANP (1×)

lowborn, ignoble; of no family or social standing

Paul writes that God chose 'the lowborn things of the world' (ta agenē, 1 Corinthians 1:28) to shame the powerful. The adjective contrasts with 'eugenēs' (wellborn, noble)—these are people without distinguished ancestry or social pedigree. In classical usage it could mean 'unborn' or 'ignoble,' but here clearly denotes low social status. God's election deliberately inverts human hierarchies, choosing the nobodies to nullify the somebodies. This continues Paul's theme from verses 26-27: not many wise, powerful, or noble were called—God chose the foolish, weak, and lowborn.

(1×) The neuter plural adjective substantivally designates 'the things of low birth'—people without social credentials or family prestige. In Corinth's status-conscious culture (Greek colonies were notorious for social climbing), this would sting: the church consisted largely of the non-elite. Spanish 'de bajo nacimiento' (of low birth) and German 'niedrig geboren' (lowborn) capture the genealogical shame. Paul's point is theological inversion: God chose the genealogically insignificant to expose the futility of human status systems. What the world despises, God displays. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: lowborn | es: de-bajo-nacimiento | fr: de-basse-naissance | de: niedrig-geboren 1Cor 1:28

ἁγι-άζω G0037 V-PPM/P-NMP (28×)

To sanctify, make holy, hallow; to set apart for God's purposes or reverence God's name as holy Hagiazō is the verb behind 'hallowed be thy name' in the Lord's Prayer and 'sanctify them in truth' in Jesus's high-priestly prayer (John 17:17). It covers three movements: God actively making persons or things holy, believers reverencing God's name as holy, and the individual's pursuit of personal holiness. The root hagi- ('holy') runs through the entire New Testament theology of sanctification. Spanish santificar and French sanctifier preserve the Latin sanctus lineage, while the German geheiligt ('hallowed') echoes the prayer tradition. Each sense reflects a different directional flow of holiness – from God downward, from believer upward, or inward as transformation.

1. to make holy, sanctify (24×) To make holy, purify, or sanctify – the dominant sense (24 occurrences) describing God's transformative action upon persons or objects, rendering them holy. Jesus sanctifies his followers through truth (John 17:17, 19) and his own self-offering (Heb 10:10). In Matthew 23:17, 19, the temple and altar sanctify the gold and gift placed upon them. Spanish santificado and French sanctifié consistently mark this divine-to-human direction of holiness. SANCTIFICATION AND HOLINESS

en: being-sanctified, has-been-sanctified, having-been-sanctified | es: Ha-sido-santificado, Santifica, es-santificado | fr: sanctifier, sanctifié | de: geheiligt, ἁγιάζον, ἁγιάσας Matt 23:17; Matt 23:19; John 10:36; John 17:17; John 17:19

2. to hallow, reverence as holy (3×) To hallow or reverence as holy – treating God's name, character, or person with sacred awe. Found in the Lord's Prayer (Matt 6:9, Luke 11:2) and 1 Peter 3:15 ('sanctify Christ as Lord in your hearts'). Here the direction reverses: the human acknowledges and declares God's existing holiness. The Greek imperative hagiasthētō ('let it be hallowed') appears in prayer as petition rather than command. SANCTIFICATION AND HOLINESS

en: Let-be-hallowed, let-be-hallowed, sanctify | es: Sea-santificado, santificad, santificado-sea | fr: sanctifier | de: geheiligt, ἁγιασθήτω, Ἁγιασθήτω Matt 6:9; Luke 11:2; 1Pet 3:15

3. to devote oneself to holiness (1×) To devote oneself to holiness or allow oneself to be made holy, appearing once in Revelation 22:11 as an eschatological exhortation: 'let the holy one still be made holy.' This inward-facing sense points to ongoing personal sanctification as a continuing state rather than a single event, completing the triad of sanctification's directions. SANCTIFICATION AND HOLINESS

en: let-him-be-made-holy | es: santifíquese | fr: sanctifier | de: geheiligt Rev 22:11

ἁγι-ασμός G0038 N-AMS (10×)

Sanctification, holiness — the process and state of being set apart for God, moral consecration

The noun ἁγιασμός (hagiasmos) denotes both the process of sanctification and its resulting state of holiness. Paul treats it as the goal of Christian life: believers are called 'for sanctification' (1 Thess 4:3, 7), and Christ himself has become our sanctification (1 Cor 1:30). Romans 6:19, 22 contrasts the fruit of sanctification with the former slavery to impurity. The author of Hebrews declares that without holiness no one will see the Lord (Heb 12:14). The term carries both positional and progressive dimensions – the believer is set apart and is being set apart. Spanish 'santificación,' Arabic 'اَلْقَدَاسَة/قِدِّيس,' Hindi 'पवित्रता,' Korean '거룩함.'

holiness (10×) The process and resultant state of being consecrated to God, encompassing both the initial setting-apart at conversion and the ongoing moral transformation. Paul presents it as the divine will for believers (1 Thess 4:3), the fruit of liberation from sin (Rom 6:19, 22), and a gift embodied in Christ (1 Cor 1:30). Hebrews 12:14 makes it a prerequisite for seeing God. 1 Timothy 2:15 and 2 Thessalonians 2:13 confirm sanctification's role as the Spirit's work in the believer's life. Translations consistently distinguish it from mere ritual purity: Spanish 'santificación,' French 'sanctification,' German 'Heiligung.' HOLINESS AND SINCERITY en: holiness, sanctification | es: santificación | fr: sanctification | de: Heiligung Rom 6:19; Rom 6:22; 1Cor 1:30; 1Thess 4:3; 1Thess 4:4

ἅγιος G0039

holy, sacred, set apart for God; pure, consecrated to divine service

A foundational term for consecration and moral purity, originally meaning "devoted to the gods" in classical Greek. In biblical usage, it overwhelmingly carries positive connotations: temples and sacred spaces are ἅγιος; persons who are holy or pure before God bear this designation; "the Saints" (οἱ ἅγιοι) refers to God's people; and the Holy Spirit is πνεῦμα ἅγιον. The Septuagint adopted this term to translate Hebrew שָׁקַד, reinforcing the concept of separation unto God. Classical Greek occasionally used it negatively ("accursed"), but this sense is rare and absent from biblical texts. The term may share roots with Sanskrit yajati ("sacrifice"), pointing to ancient Indo-European concepts of ritual dedication.

ἅγιος G0040 Adj-GFS (235×)

Holy, sacred, set apart; of persons (saints, the Holy One), places (sanctuary, holy of holies), and things consecrated to God.

Hagios is one of the most pervasive theological adjectives in the New Testament, appearing 235 times across nearly every book. At its core lies the idea of being set apart — separated from the ordinary and devoted to God. Yet the word's flexibility is remarkable: it describes the Spirit of God himself (to pneuma to hagion), the community of believers (hoi hagioi, 'the saints'), the temple precincts (ta hagia), and individual objects or places consecrated for divine use. The multilingual evidence confirms these distinct uses — Spanish and German both render the Spirit-title as Santo/Heiliger with capital letters, while the substantive plural 'saints' triggers entirely different vocabulary in Korean (seongdodeul) and Swahili (watakatifu, 'purified ones'). The word's range from 'the Holy Spirit' to 'holy ground' to 'the saints' traces the entire arc of biblical holiness: God is holy, he makes places holy, and he makes people holy.

1. the Holy Spirit (pneuma hagion) (92×) Split from sense 61137. Criteria: References to the third person of the Trinity, the Spirit of God as divine agent; contexts of empowerment, baptism, blasphemy against the Spirit

en: Holy | es: Santo | fr: saint | de: heilig Matt 1:18; Matt 1:20; Matt 3:11; Matt 12:32; Matt 28:19

2. holy, sacred, consecrated (65×) Attributive or predicative adjective describing things, places, or persons as sacred, set apart, or consecrated to God — 65 occurrences. The 'holy city' (Matt 4:5), 'holy place' in Daniel's prophecy (Matt 24:15), 'holy ground' (Acts 7:33), and 'holy Scriptures' (Rom 1:2) all fall here. This is the basic adjectival sense from which the substantive uses derive. German heilig and French saint function identically as attributive modifiers. The superlative 'most holy faith' (Jude 1:20) and the phrase 'holy and blameless' (Eph 1:4) illustrate the full range of this attributive function, from cultic consecration to moral purity. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY

en: holy | es: santa, santo, santos | fr: saint | de: heilig Matt 4:5; Matt 7:6; Matt 24:15; Matt 27:53; Mark 6:20

3. saints, holy ones (persons) (61×) Substantive plural designating God's people — 'the saints,' 'the holy ones' (hoi hagioi) — 61 occurrences concentrated in Acts and the Pauline epistles. Paul greets 'all the saints in Christ Jesus' (Phil 1:1); Peter visits 'the saints at Lydda' (Acts 9:32); the risen saints emerge from tombs at the crucifixion (Matt 27:52). Korean 성도들 (seongdodeul) and Swahili watakatifu both have dedicated terms for this communal identity marker, distinct from the adjective. The term encodes ecclesiology: believers are not merely 'good people' but a consecrated community set apart for God's purposes, echoing the Old Testament qahal ('assembly'). HOLINESS AND SANCTITY

en: holy-ones, saints | es: santos | fr: saint | de: heilig Matt 27:52; Acts 9:13; Acts 9:32; Acts 9:41; Acts 26:10

4. holy place, sanctuary (11×) Substantive neuter use referring to sacred spaces — the sanctuary, the holy place, or the holy of holies (ta hagia, hagia hagion) — 11 occurrences, almost all in Hebrews 8-10. The author of Hebrews uses ta hagia for the heavenly sanctuary that Christ enters as high priest (Heb 8:2, 9:12), while hagia hagion designates the innermost chamber behind the veil (Heb 9:3). Spanish Lugar Santo and German Heiligtum both use dedicated sanctuary vocabulary here rather than a generic 'holy' adjective. The Septuagint background is crucial: ta hagia translates Hebrew ha-qodesh, the technical priestly term for the tabernacle/temple interior (Lev 16:2-3), and Hebrews deliberately transfers this spatial holiness language from the earthly to the heavenly realm. HOLINESS AND SANCTITY

en: Holy, holy-place, holy-places | es: Lugar-Santo, Santo, de-santos | fr: saint | de: heilig Heb 8:2; Heb 9:1; Heb 9:2; Heb 9:3

5. the Holy One (as Messianic title) (6×) Split from sense 61137. Criteria: Christological title 'the Holy One of God' applied to Jesus; contexts of divine identity and messianic recognition en: Holy-One | es: Santo, santo | fr: saint | de: heilig Mark 1:24; Luke 4:34; John 6:69; Acts 3:14; 1Pet 1:15

ἁγιότης G0041 N-GFS (1×)

holiness, sanctity; the quality or state of being set apart as sacred

Hebrews 12:10 contrasts human discipline (for our temporal good) with God's discipline 'that we may share in his holiness' (hagiōtētos). This rare noun (appearing only here in the New Testament) designates God's essential sanctity—his set-apartness and moral perfection. The goal of divine discipline is conformity to God's own holy character. While 'hagiōsynē' (another holiness word) appears elsewhere, 'hagiōtēs' carries a slightly more abstract, essential quality —holiness as an inherent attribute rather than enacted sanctification.

(1×) The genitive indicates the quality to be shared: 'his holiness'—God's own essential sanctity becomes the goal of his children's formation. The term appears in the Septuagint and as a title in later Christian usage ('His Holiness'), but here functions abstractly as the divine attribute. Spanish 'santidad,' French 'sainteté,' and German 'Heiligkeit' all preserve the abstract noun formation. That God disciplines us precisely to share in his holiness reframes suffering: it's not arbitrary but transformative, aimed at conformity to the divine character. HOLINESS AND SINCERITY en: holiness | es: santidad | fr: sainteté | de: Heiligkeit Heb 12:10

ἁγιωσύνη G0042 N-AFS (3×)

holiness, sanctification; moral purity and consecration to God

An abstract noun expressing the quality of being set apart for God in moral purity. Romans 1:4 describes the Spirit as the 'Spirit of holiness' who declared Jesus to be God's Son by resurrection power. Paul urges completing sanctification 'in holiness' (2 Cor 7:1) and prays that believers' hearts be established blameless 'in holiness' before God (1 Thess 3:13). The term emphasizes ethical and spiritual consecration rather than merely ritual purity.

(3×) Denotes comprehensive moral consecration to God. The multilingual consensus (Spanish 'santidad,' French 'sainteté,' German 'Heiligkeit') reflects uniformity across languages. Romans uses it attributively of the Spirit himself—the source and standard of holiness. Paul's ethical applications (2 Cor 7:1—cleansing from defilement; 1 Thess 3:13—blameless hearts at Christ's coming) show holiness as both present process and eschatological goal, encompassing the whole person. HOLINESS AND SINCERITY en: holiness, of-holiness | es: de-santidad, santidad | fr: sainteté | de: Heiligkeit Rom 1:4; 2Cor 7:1; 1Thess 3:13

ἀγκάλη G0043 N-AFP (1×)

arms, embrace; the curved arms used for holding or embracing Luke 2:28 describes Simeon taking the infant Jesus 'in his arms' (en tais ankalais). The plural noun literally means 'bent arms'—the crook of the arms used for cradling. In classical Greek it appears often with verbs of holding or carrying, describing how one holds a child or beloved object close. Simeon's action fulfills his long waiting: he can now die in peace because he has held salvation itself in his arms. The tender physicality of the image contrasts with the cosmic significance of what he holds.

(1×) The plural dative indicates location: 'in the arms'—specifically the curved embrace formed by bent arms. Classical usage ranges from literal holding of infants to metaphorical enfolding (waves, air). Here the image is touchingly concrete: an elderly man cradling a baby, yet this baby is 'your salvation' (v. 30). Spanish 'brazos' (arms), French 'bras,' and German 'ἀγκάλας' (transliterated) all point to the physical embrace. The term emphasizes embodiment—salvation comes not as abstract concept but as flesh you can hold. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: arms | es: brazos | fr: bras | de: ἀγκάλας Luke 2:28

ἄγκιστρον G0044 N-ANS (1×)

fishhook; a curved hook for catching fish

Jesus instructs Peter to 'cast a hook' (ankistron) and take the first fish caught, whose mouth will contain a coin for the temple tax (Matthew 17:27). This is the only New Testament occurrence of the word, though it's common in classical texts for fishhooks. The miraculous provision combines ordinary means (fishing) with supernatural knowledge (which fish, where, what's in its mouth). That Jesus specifies hook-and-line fishing rather than net fishing may suggest Peter's solitary mission—one fish for one specific purpose. The word derives from 'ankos' (bend), describing the hook's curved shape.

(1×) The singular accusative indicates the tool to be used: 'cast a hook'—traditional angling rather than commercial net fishing. Classical Greek uses the term for various hooks (fishing, spindle, surgical), but context clearly indicates fishing. The detail serves Jesus's larger point about freedom and accommodation: though exempt from the temple tax, he pays it anyway to avoid offense. Spanish 'anzuelo,' French 'hameçon,' and German 'ἄγκιστρον' (transliterated) all designate the fishing hook. The miracle in the fish's mouth validates Jesus's claim while demonstrating gracious compliance. SICKLE HARVEST TOOL

en: a-hook | es: anzuelo | fr: hameçon | de: ἄγκιστρον Matt 17:27

ἄγκῡρα G0045 N-AFP (4×)

anchor; a heavy device cast from a ship to hold it in place, used figuratively of steadfast hope

An anchor was indispensable in ancient Mediterranean seafaring, and all four NT occurrences reflect that world. In Acts 27 Luke narrates the dramatic anchoring maneuvers during the storm off Malta — sailors casting four anchors from the stern (27:29), pretending to lay anchors from the bow (27:30), and finally cutting them loose (27:40). Hebrews 6:19 transforms the image into a powerful metaphor: Christian hope is 'an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast,' entering the inner sanctuary behind the curtain. Every major translation preserves the literal maritime term (spa 'ancla,' fra 'ancre,' deu 'Anker').

(4×) Anchor — the heavy iron implement dropped from a ship to secure it in place. Three of the four occurrences appear in Luke's vivid storm narrative in Acts 27, where anchors are cast, feigned, and cut away. The unanimous rendering across languages (eng 'anchor,' spa 'ancla,' fra 'ancre,' deu 'Anker') reflects the concrete maritime artifact. In Hebrews 6:19 the same noun serves as a metaphor for the believer's hope, described as an anchor of the soul that penetrates into the heavenly sanctuary — a figure drawing on the proverbial ἱερὰ ἄγκυρα ('sacred anchor,' i.e., last resort) attested in later Greek. SHIP SEA VESSEL

en: anchor, anchors | es: ancla, anclas | fr: Anker, ancre | de: Anker, ἀγκύρας Acts 27:29; Acts 27:30; Acts 27:40; Heb 6:19

ἄγνἄφος G0046 Adj-GNS (2×)

unshrunk, not yet processed or treated (of cloth)

This adjective describes cloth that has not been treated or shrunk—new, raw fabric not yet processed for use. It appears in Jesus' parable about patching old garments: sewing unshrunk cloth onto an old garment creates worse damage when the new patch shrinks and tears away (Matthew 9:16; Mark 2:21). The word captures the incompatibility between new and old, illustrating why Jesus' new wine of the kingdom cannot be contained in the old wineskins of existing religious structures. The unshrunk patch represents raw, untreated newness that will inevitably create tension with aged fabric.

(2×) Multilingual glosses emphasize the unshrunk state—Spanish 'sin encoger' (without shrinking), French 'non-foulé' (not fulled/treated), German preserving the Greek adjective. Both Gospel passages use this in Jesus' parable about the incompatibility of new patch on old garment. The cross-linguistic evidence consistently points to cloth that has not undergone the shrinking/fulling process, making it unsuitable for patching old fabric. The word serves Jesus' larger point about the radical newness of the kingdom and its incompatibility with old religious forms. NEWNESS AND FRESHNESS en: unshrunk | es: sin-encoger | fr: non-foulé | de: ἀγνάφου Matt 9:16; Mark 2:21

ἁγν-εία G0047 N-DFS (2×)

purity, chastity, moral and sexual holiness

This noun denotes purity, particularly in moral and sexual conduct—holiness that manifests in chastity and clean living. In Paul's pastoral letters to Timothy, it appears twice: among qualities Timothy should model (1 Timothy 4:12) and as the attitude with which he should treat younger women, as sisters 'in all purity' (5:2). The word emphasizes not merely ritual cleanness but moral integrity, especially sexual self-control and appropriate boundaries. It's the quality of one whose conduct is undefiled, whose relationships honor proper limits, whose character reflects holiness in practical life.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly emphasize purity—Spanish 'pureza,' French preserves the Greek dative form 'ἁγνείᾳ,' German 'Reinheit' (purity/cleanness). Both 1 Timothy passages call for purity in visible conduct (4:12) and relational boundaries (5:2). The context emphasizes moral and sexual holiness rather than ceremonial cleanness. The multilingual evidence supports this as practical sanctity, the character quality of one who maintains moral integrity and appropriate relational boundaries, particularly in sexual ethics.
AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3712 WITH 5 SENSES
en: purity | es: pureza | fr: ἁγνείᾳ | de: Reinheit 1Tim 4:12; 1Tim 5:2

ἁγνίζω G0048 V-ASA-3P (7×)

To purify, make ceremonially or morally clean; middle/passive: to purify oneself or be purified

Derived from hagnos ('pure, holy'), this verb spans both ritual and moral purification in the New Testament. In Acts it appears in its middle/passive forms for Jewish ceremonial purification — Paul purifying himself before entering the temple (Acts 21:24, 26; 24:18), and Jewish pilgrims purifying themselves before Passover (John 11:55). James 4:8 bridges the ceremonial and moral: 'purify your hearts, you double-minded.' In its active transitive use, it describes believers purifying their souls through obedience to truth (1 Pet 1:22) and the hope of Christ's return purifying the one who holds it (1 John 3:3).

1. to purify oneself, be purified (middle/passive) (4×) The middle or passive voice: to purify oneself or to be purified, primarily in the context of Jewish ceremonial purification. Acts 21:24 and 21:26 describe Paul undergoing ritual purification in the temple to demonstrate his respect for the law. Acts 24:18 notes Paul was 'having been purified' when found in the temple. James 4:8 extends the imagery morally — 'purify your hearts.' Spanish 'purificad/ purificado' and French 'purifier' mirror the reflexive nuance of self-undertaken cleansing. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING
en: be-purified, having-been-purified, purify | es: purificad, purificado, purificate | fr: purifier | de: reinigen, ἁγνίσθητι, ἁγνισθεὶς Acts 21:24; Acts 21:26; Acts 24:18; Jas 4:8

2. to purify (active/transitive) (3×) The active transitive sense: to purify someone or something, to make clean. In John 11:55 many went up before Passover to purify themselves (here the active form with reflexive force). First Peter 1:22 speaks of having purified one's soul through obedience to the truth, and 1 John 3:3 declares that everyone who has this hope in Christ 'purifies himself' just as Christ is pure. Spanish 'se purifica' and German 'reinigen' both capture the active effort of making oneself or another clean. PURIFYING AND CLEANSING
en: having-purified, purifies, they-might-purify | es: habiendo-purificado, purificaran, se-purifica | fr: purifier | de: reinigen John 11:55; 1Pet 1:22; 1John 3:3

ἁγν-ισμός G0049 N-GMS (1×)

purification, ritual cleansing; the process of ceremonial purification

Acts 21:26 describes Paul entering the temple to give notice 'concerning the completion of the days of purification' (hagnismou). This refers to the Nazirite vow ritual detailed in Numbers 6, involving a week-long purification process. The noun derives from 'hagnizō' (to purify), common in Septuagintal contexts for ritual cleansing. Paul's participation in this Jewish ritual demonstrates his continued adherence to Torah when among Jews—living out his missionary principle of becoming 'all things to all people.' The purification required both time and public declaration at the temple.

(1×) The genitive indicates the process being completed: 'of the purification'—specifically the Nazirite cleansing rite. Septuagintal usage established this term for ritual purification, often involving water, sacrifice, and time periods. Paul's announcement gives notice of when the purification days will be fulfilled, triggering the final sacrifices. Spanish 'purificación,' French 'purification,' and German 'ἁγνισμοῦ' (transliterated) all maintain the ritual-cleansing sense. The irony is thick: Paul enters the temple for ritual purity and ends up arrested, launching the chain of events leading to Rome.
PURIFICATION CLEANSING
en: purification | es: purificación | fr: purification | de: ἁγνισμοῦ Acts 21:26

ἀγνο-έω G0050 V-PPM/P-NMS (22×)

To be ignorant of, not know; to be unknown or unrecognized; to be willfully disregarded

The verb ἀγνοέω expresses the absence or failure of knowledge. In its active forms it describes a person's lack of understanding — the disciples 'did not understand' Jesus' words about the resurrection (Mark 9:32), and the Jerusalemites fulfilled prophecy because they 'did not know' the voices of the prophets (Acts 13:27). In the middle/ passive voice, the word shifts to describe the subject as the one unknown: Paul was 'unknown by face' to the Judean churches (Gal 1:22). A single disputed occurrence at 1 Cor 14:38 carries a sharper edge — one who ignores will himself be ignored — suggesting willful disregard rather than mere ignorance.

1. be ignorant of, not know (19×) The active sense of lacking knowledge or awareness, covering the vast majority of occurrences (19 of 22). The multilingual glosses consistently render it with verbs of not-knowing — Spanish 'ignoraban,' French 'ignorer,' German 'nicht-wissen.' In Acts 17:23 Paul identifies an altar inscribed 'to an unknown God,' using the cognate form to describe the Athenians' genuine lack of acquaintance with the true deity. Rom 1:13 shows a softer shade: Paul does not want his readers to 'be unaware' of his plans. IGNORANT UNAWARE en: being-ignorant, did-not-understand, do-you-not-know | es: desconociendo, ignora, ignoraban | fr: ignorer, ne-pas-savoir | de: nicht-wissen, ἀγνοήσαντες, ἀγνοοῦντες Mark 9:32; Luke 9:45; Acts 13:27; Acts 17:23; Rom 1:13

2. be unknown, unrecognized (2×) The passive sense of being unknown or unrecognized by others, attested in two occurrences. In 2 Cor 6:9 Paul describes himself and his companions as 'unknown' (ἀγνοούμενοι) yet well-known — a paradox that the Spanish 'desconocidos' and English 'unknown' faithfully mirror. Gal 1:22 confirms this reading: Paul was personally unknown to the churches of Judea. The shift from active ignorance to passive anonymity marks a clear voice-driven sense boundary. IGNORANT UNAWARE en: being-unknown, unknown | es: desconocido, desconocidos | fr: ignorer, ne-pas-savoir | de: nicht-wissen 2Cor 6:9; Gal 1:22

3. be disregarded, ignored (1×) A rare and textually debated use at 1 Cor 14:38, where the verb carries a nuance of willful neglect or dismissal rather than simple unknowing. Paul warns that whoever 'ignores' (or 'is ignorant of') the command will himself be 'ignored.' The English gloss 'he is ignored' and Spanish 'es ignorado' capture the retributive symmetry. Some manuscripts read the active ('let him be ignorant') while others preserve the passive ('he will be disregarded'), but both point to a deliberate overlooking rather than mere cognitive gap. IGNORANT UNAWARE en: he-is-ignored | es: es-ignorado | fr: ne-pas-savoir | de: nicht-wissen 1Cor 14:38

ἀγνό-ημα G0051 N-GNP (1×)

sins of ignorance, unwitting errors; faults committed without full knowledge

Hebrews 9:7 explains that the high priest entered the Most Holy Place once yearly with blood 'for himself and for the people's sins of ignorance' (agnōematōn). This technical term distinguishes unwitting sins from deliberate rebellion—the Levitical system provided atonement for errors and oversights, not for 'high-handed' defiance. The Septuagint regularly uses this word family for inadvertent violations. The plural genitive indicates these are the specific class of sins the Day of Atonement addressed. Even ignorance requires blood, showing how seriously God takes all deviation from his law.

(1×) The genitive plural designates the category of sin covered by the annual atonement ritual: 'sins of ignorance'—faults committed without full awareness or intent. Septuagintal precedent (Numbers 15:22-29 uses this word group) establishes the technical distinction between inadvertent and intentional transgression. Spanish 'pecados de ignorancia,' French 'ignorance,' and German 'Unwissenheit' (ignorance) all capture the epistemic deficit. The author's point is that even unwitting sin pollutes and requires blood cleansing—there's no morally neutral error before a holy God. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3965 WITH 3 SENSES en: sins-of-ignorance | es: pecados-de-ignorancia | fr: ignorance | de: Unwissenheit Heb 9:7

ἄγνοιᾰ G0052 N-AFS (4×)

ignorance; lack of knowledge or awareness, especially of God's purposes or moral standards

In classical Greek ἄγνοια denotes a failure of perception or understanding, opposed to ἐπιστήμη (knowledge). The NT writers deploy it with theological weight: Peter attributes the crucifixion to the people's ignorance (Acts 3:17), Paul declares that God has overlooked former times of ignorance (Acts 17:30), and both Paul and Peter link ignorance to the moral darkness of pagan life (Eph 4:18; 1 Pet 1:14). French and Spanish translations ('ignorance/ignorancia') mirror this semantic range precisely, while German renderings sometimes retain the Greek inflected forms, underscoring the term's technical flavor.

(4×) Ignorance, lack of knowledge — a state of not knowing, particularly regarding God's will, identity, or moral requirements. Peter charitably attributes Jewish complicity in Christ's death to ignorance (Acts 3:17), while Paul's Areopagus speech frames all pre-gospel pagan religion as a period of ignorance God graciously overlooked (Acts 17:30). In Ephesians 4:18 ignorance is linked to hardness of heart and alienation from God's life, and 1 Peter 1:14 recalls the 'former ignorance' of Gentile converts' pre-conversion desires. Cross-lingual evidence (spa 'ignorancia,' fra 'ignorance') confirms this consistent theological-moral sense rather than mere intellectual deficit. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3965 WITH 3 SENSES

en: ignorance | es: ignorancia | fr: ignorance, ἀγνοίᾳ, ἄγνοιαν | de: ἀγνοίας, ἀγνοίᾳ, ἄγνοιαν Acts 3:17; Acts 17:30; Eph 4:18; 1Pet 1:14

ἁγνός G0053 Adj-AFS (8×)

Pure, chaste, innocent; morally blameless and free from defilement or mixed motives.

An adjective describing what is morally uncontaminated — clean in motive, conduct, and character. Paul uses it to commend the Corinthians' zealous repentance, declaring them 'pure in this matter' (2 Cor 7:11), and desires to present the church as a 'pure virgin' to Christ (2 Cor 11:2). In Philippians 4:8 it appears among virtues worthy of sustained reflection. The Pastoral Epistles apply it to personal conduct: keeping oneself pure (1 Tim 5:22) and the call for young women to be chaste (Titus 2:5). Spanish 'pura/casta' and German 'rein' both capture the dual moral-ritual purity at the word's heart.

pure (8×) Pure, chaste, morally innocent — describing persons, conduct, or character that is free from defilement, corruption, or duplicity. In 2 Cor 7:11 the Corinthians proved themselves 'pure' through repentance; in 2 Cor 11:2 Paul envisions the church as a 'pure virgin' betrothed to Christ; Phil 4:8 lists it among qualities worthy of contemplation; 1 Tim 5:22 urges Timothy to keep himself pure; and Titus 2:5 calls for chastity in domestic life. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'pura/casta,' French 'pur,' German 'rein') confirms a unified moral-purity sense without the ritual-cultic overtones found in classical Greek usage of the word. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: pure | es: casta, pura, puras | fr: pur, ἁγνά, ἁγνάς | de: rein 2Cor 7:11; 2Cor 11:2; Phil 4:8; 1Tim 5:22; Titus 2:5

ἁγνότης G0054 N-GFS (2×)

purity, sincerity, moral integrity and singleness of devotion

This noun emphasizes purity, integrity, and sincerity—moral cleanness that flows from undivided devotion. In 2 Corinthians 6:6, Paul lists it among credentials of his ministry alongside knowledge, patience, and kindness—qualities that authenticate apostolic service. In 2 Corinthians 11:3, Paul fears the Corinthians may lose 'the purity and sincerity toward Christ' through seduction by false teaching, just as Eve was deceived. The word denotes not merely external moral correctness but inner integrity, singleness of heart, unmixed devotion. It's the quality of one whose motives are pure, whose allegiance is undivided.

(2×) Multilingual glosses consistently emphasize purity—Spanish 'pureza,' French 'pureté,' German 'Reinheit.' The 2 Corinthians contexts broaden purity beyond sexual ethics to encompass ministerial integrity (6:6) and doctrinal fidelity (11:3). Paul fears the loss of pure devotion to Christ through doctrinal seduction. The cross-linguistic evidence supports this as comprehensive moral integrity and sincerity, inner purity of motive and allegiance that manifests in faithful service and undivided loyalty to Christ. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3712 WITH 5 SENSES

en: purity | es: pureza | fr: pureté | de: Reinheit 2Cor 6:6; 2Cor 11:3

ἁγνός G0055 Adv (1×)

purely, sincerely; with pure or unmixed motives

Paul distinguishes those who preach Christ from envy versus those who do so 'purely' (hagnōs, Philippians 1:17). The adverb derives from 'hagnos' (pure, chaste), often used of ritual purity or moral integrity. Here it describes motivation: some proclaim Christ from genuine, unmixed devotion rather than selfish ambition. The word's root connection to 'hagios' (holy) suggests a purity of purpose aligned with God's character. Even in Philippian imprisonment, Paul celebrates that Christ is preached—though he can discern which preachers do so with pure versus impure hearts.

(1×) The adverb modifies the verb 'proclaim': preaching Christ 'purely'—with sincere, unmixed motives free from selfish calculation. The contrast is with those preaching from 'eritheias' (selfish ambition), hoping to afflict Paul in his chains. Spanish 'puramente,' French 'ἁγνῶς' (transliterated), and German 'rein' (purely) all convey the adverbial force. Paul's remarkable maturity appears here: he rejoices in pure-hearted preaching while tolerating impure-hearted preaching as long as Christ is proclaimed. Purity of motive matters but doesn't negate the truth being spoken. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: purely | es: puramente | fr: ἁγνῶς | de: rein Phil 1:17

ἀγνωσία G0056 N-AFS (2×)

ignorance, lack of knowledge, especially of God and truth

This noun denotes ignorance—the state of not knowing, particularly regarding spiritual and moral truth. In 1 Corinthians 15:34, Paul sharply commands the Corinthians to sober up and stop sinning, declaring 'some have ignorance of God'—a devastating indictment in a church. In 1 Peter 2:15, Christians are called to silence the ignorant talk of foolish people through good conduct. The word emphasizes not innocent lack of information but culpable ignorance, the state of not knowing what one should know. It's particularly damning when it concerns knowledge of God—ignorance that has moral consequences.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly render as ignorance—Spanish 'ignorancia,' French 'ignorance,' German 'Unwissenheit' (unknowing/ignorance). Both New Testament passages treat ignorance as something culpable and dangerous: ignorance of God in the church (1 Cor 15:34) and foolish ignorance silenced by Christian conduct (1 Pet 2:15). The multilingual evidence supports this as culpable lack of knowledge, particularly of God and truth—ignorance that has moral and spiritual consequences rather than innocent unawareness. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 3965 WITH 3 SENSES

en: ignorance | es: ignorancia | fr: ignorance, ἀγνωσίαν | de: Unwissenheit 1Cor 15:34; 1Pet 2:15

ἄγνωστος G0057 Adj-DMS (1×)

unknown, not known; describing something or someone unrecognized or unfamiliar

Paul encounters an Athenian altar 'TO AN UNKNOWN GOD' (agnōstō theō, Acts 17:23). The dative adjective modifies 'god,' describing a deity the Athenians acknowledged but didn't know. These altars apparently hedged religious bets—honoring any divinity they might have overlooked. Paul brilliantly uses this as his entry point: 'What you worship in ignorance, this I proclaim to you.' The term combines alpha-privative with 'ginōskō' (to know), meaning literally 'un-known.' It's the root of English 'agnostic'—one who claims God is unknowable.

(1×) The dative adjective describes the deity to whom the altar is dedicated: 'to an unknown god'—a divinity acknowledged but unidentified. Classical Greek uses the term for anything unfamiliar, forgotten, or unknowable. Paul's rhetorical move is masterful: he grants that the Athenians worship in ignorance, then identifies their unknown god as the Creator. Spanish 'AL DESCONOCIDO,' French 'inconnu,' and German 'ΑΓΝΩΣΤΩ' (transliterated caps) all preserve the inscriptional force. The irony cuts both ways: God is unknown not because he's unknowable but because they haven't sought him. KNOWING AND LEARNING en: TO-UNKNOWN | es: AL-DESCONOCIDO | fr: inconnu | de: ΑΓΝΩΣΤΩ Acts 17:23

ἀγορά G0058 N-AFS (11×)

Marketplace, public square — the open civic space for commerce, socializing, legal proceedings, and daily gathering

The ἀγορά (agora) was the commercial and civic heart of ancient towns, functioning as marketplace, meeting place, and informal courtroom all at once. Jesus compares his generation to children sitting in the marketplace calling to one another (Matt 11:16; Luke 7:32), and he rebukes the scribes and Pharisees who love greetings in the marketplaces (Matt 23:7; Mark 12:38; Luke 11:43). In Mark 6:56, the sick are laid in the marketplaces hoping for healing. The Pharisees' ritual washing of things 'from the marketplace' (Mark 7:4) reflects purity concerns about contact with Gentiles and unclean persons in that public space. Spanish 'plaza' and French 'place du marché' capture the dual commercial-civic character.

marketplace, public square (11×) The open public square in a Greco-Roman or Palestinian town serving as the center of commerce, socializing, and civic life. Jesus uses it as a setting for parables about childish fickleness (Matt 11:16; Luke 7:32), for exposing the Pharisees' love of public recognition (Matt 23:7; Mark 12:38; Luke 11:43, 20:46), and as a place where idle laborers wait for hire (Matt 20:3). The sick are brought to the agora for healing (Mark 6:56), and Pharisaic purity tradition requires washing after contact with the marketplace crowd (Mark 7:4). Spanish 'plaza' and German 'Marktplatz' both reflect this multipurpose civic space. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: marketplace, marketplaces | es: mercado, plaza, plazas | fr: place-du-marché | de: Marktplatz, ἀγοράΐς, ἀγορᾶς Matt 11:16; Matt 20:3; Matt 23:7; Mark 6:56; Mark 7:4

ἀγοράζω G0059 V-APA-NMS (30×)

To buy, purchase; used both for marketplace commerce and theologically for Christ's redemptive purchase of believers

Derived from agora (marketplace), this verb covers the full range of buying — from purchasing food and fields to the profound theological metaphor of redemption. Jesus drives out those buying and selling in the temple (Matt 21:12), and parables feature merchants who buy a field or a pearl (Matt 13:44, 46). Paul then transforms the commercial image: 'you were bought at a price' (1 Cor 6:20), and Revelation celebrates the Lamb who 'purchased people for God' from every tribe and tongue (Rev 5:9). Spanish comprar and French acheter serve for both literal and redemptive senses, while German kaufen likewise spans the full range.

1. buy goods in marketplace (24×) To buy goods, food, or property in a commercial transaction. This covers everyday marketplace purchases — buying food for a crowd (Matt 14:15), purchasing a field or pearl of great value (Matt 13:44, 46), and trading in the temple courts (Matt 21:12; Mark 11:15). Spanish compra, French acheter, and German kaufen all render the straightforward commercial act without theological overtones. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: Buy, I-bought, bought | es: Compra, a-comprar, compra | fr: acheter | de: kaufen, kauft Matt 13:44; Matt 13:46; Matt 14:15; Matt 21:12; Matt 25:9

2. purchase or redeem persons (6×) To purchase or redeem persons, especially as a theological metaphor for Christ's atoning work. Paul declares 'you were bought at a price' (etimēthēte gar timēs, 1 Cor 6:20; 7:23), and Revelation celebrates the Lamb who ēgorasas ('purchased') people for God by his blood from every tribe and language (Rev 5:9; 14:3-4). Spanish comprados and German kaufen preserve the commercial metaphor while the passive voice (having-been-purchased) highlights the believer's new status as belonging to Christ. BUYING AND ACQUIRING en: having-been-purchased, having-bought, were-purchased | es: Fuisteis-comprados, comprados, compraste | fr: acheter | de: kaufen 1Cor 6:20; 1Cor 7:23; 2Pet 2:1; Rev 5:9; Rev 14:3

ἀγοραῖος G0060 Adj-GMP (2×)

pertaining to the marketplace; court days when courts are in session; common or vulgar persons

This adjective relates to the marketplace (agora)—either the place itself, the activities there, or the people who frequent it. In Acts 17:5, it describes the 'marketplace loungers' or common rabble whom the Jews recruited to create a riot in Thessalonica—people hanging around the agora with time on their hands. In Acts 19:38, the town clerk refers to 'court days' (literally 'marketplaces are being held'), the regular sessions when courts convened for legal business. The word thus spans physical location, judicial proceedings, and social class—all connected to the marketplace as the civic and commercial center.

(2×) Multilingual glosses show the word's range: Spanish distinguishes 'audiencias' (court sessions, Acts 19:38) from 'del mercado' (of the marketplace, Acts 17:5); French 'du marché'; German preserves Greek forms. Acts 17:5 uses it for the rough characters lounging in marketplaces; Acts 19:38 for the appointed court days. The cross-linguistic evidence reflects the word's flexibility—pertaining to the marketplace as physical space, the legal proceedings held there, or the common people who frequent it. Context determines whether it emphasizes place, judicial function, or social class. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: court-days, marketplace | es: audiencias, del-mercado | fr: du-marché | de: ἀγοραίων, ἀγοραῖοι Acts 17:5; Acts 19:38

ἄγρα G0061 N-DFS (2×)

catch of fish, the haul or take from fishing

This noun denotes the catch or haul of fish—the prey taken in hunting or fishing. In Luke 5, it appears twice in the miraculous catch of fish: Jesus tells Peter to let down nets for a catch (5:4), and they enclosed such a large catch that their nets began to break (5:9). The word emphasizes result—not the act of fishing but the successful take, the fish hauled in. It's the reward of the hunt, the quarry captured. In Luke's narrative, the overwhelming catch becomes a sign that draws Peter to follow Jesus and become a fisher of men.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses consistently emphasize the catch—Spanish 'pesca' (catch/fishing), French 'prise' (catch/take), German preserving the Greek forms with different cases (accusative and dative). Both Luke 5 passages focus on the miraculous abundance of the catch: the anticipated catch (5:4) and the overwhelming reality (5:9) that broke the nets. The multilingual evidence supports this as the successful haul of fish, the tangible result of fishing labor. The word captures the moment of abundance, nets full to breaking with the day's catch. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT en: a-catch, catch | es: pesca | fr: prise | de: ἄγραν, ἄγρᾳ Luke 5:4; Luke 5:9

ἀγράμμ-ατος G0062 Adj-NMP (1×)

illiterate, unlearned; without formal education or scribal training

The Jerusalem leaders were astonished that Peter and John were 'unlearned' (agrammatoi, Acts 4:13)—men without scribal education who nonetheless spoke with authority. The adjective literally means

'without letters'—unschooled in the formal rabbinic traditions. In classical usage it could mean illiterate or unable to produce articulate speech. Here it describes social and educational status: these are fishermen, not rabbis. Yet their boldness and evident association with Jesus confounded the educated elite. God bypasses human credentials to display his power.

(1×) The nominative plural describes Peter and John's educational status: 'unlearned'—lacking formal rabbinic training. The term doesn't necessarily mean illiterate (Peter could read) but indicates absence of scribal credentials. Spanish 'sin letras' (without letters), French 'sans instruction,' and German 'ἀγράμματοί' (transliterated) all capture the educational deficit. The Sanhedrin's amazement stems from the incongruity: uneducated men displaying deep scriptural insight and boldness. This echoes Jesus choosing fishermen over scribes—God's wisdom shames the world's learning. KNOWING AND LEARNING

en: unlearned | es: sin-letras | fr: sans-instruction | de: ἀγράμματοί Acts 4:13

ἀγρ-αυλέω G0063 V-PPA-NMP (1×)

living outdoors, staying in the fields; particularly of shepherds camping with their flocks

Luke 2:8 describes shepherds 'staying in the fields' (agraulountes) near Bethlehem, keeping night watch over their flocks. This rare participial form derives from 'agros' (field) plus 'auleo' (to live), meaning to live or camp in the open. The detail serves multiple purposes: it establishes the season (shepherds only stayed outdoors during lambing or warmer months), the shepherds' low social status (outdoor labor), and their availability for the angelic announcement. These outdoor-dwelling workers become the first evangelists, rushing to Bethlehem to see and then proclaim what they'd witnessed.

(1×) The present participle describes the shepherds' current activity: 'staying in the fields'—camping outdoors rather than sheltering in buildings. Classical Greek uses the verb for living in the countryside or open air. Spanish 'acampando al aire libre' (camping in the open air) and French 'demeurant aux champs' (dwelling in the fields) both capture the outdoor location. The detail is historically and narratively significant: these are working shepherds in the fields at night, making them plausible first recipients of the birth announcement. Their outdoor vigil becomes the setting for heaven's revelation. SITTING AND DWELLING

en: staying-in-fields | es: acampando-al-aire-libre | fr: demeurant-aux-champs | de: ἀγραυλοῦντες Luke 2:8

ἀγρ-εύω G0064 V-ASA-3P (1×)

to catch, trap; to ensnare by hunting or cunning (used metaphorically)

The Pharisees and Herodians attempt 'to trap him in his words' (agreusōsin, Mark 12:13). The verb originally meant to catch by hunting or fishing, but here functions metaphorically—they're trying to ensnare Jesus in a verbal trap. Their question about Roman taxes was designed as a no-win scenario: answer one way, you offend the zealots; answer the other, you offend the Romans. The hunting metaphor reveals their predatory intent—this isn't honest inquiry but strategic ambush. Yet Jesus escapes the trap with 'Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's.'

(1×) The aorist subjunctive indicates purpose or result: 'in order that they might trap'—the goal of sending disciples to Jesus. Classical uses range from literal hunting/fishing to metaphorical catching by words or deception. Here the prey is Jesus, the snare is a loaded question, and the hunters are religious-political conspirators. Spanish 'atraparan' (trap), French 'piéger' (to trap), and German 'fangen' (to catch) all preserve the hunting metaphor. The verb choice exposes the malicious intent behind the respectful words—this is a hunt, not a dialogue. HUNTING ACTIVITY

en: they-might-trap | es: atraparan | fr: piéger | de: fangen Mark 12:13

ἀγρι-έλαιος G0065 N-GFS (2×)

wild olive tree, uncultivated olive in contrast to the cultivated variety

This term denotes the wild or uncultivated olive tree, in contrast to the cultivated garden olive. In Romans 11, Paul develops an extended metaphor: Gentile believers are like branches from a wild olive tree grafted contrary to nature into the cultivated olive (Israel's covenant privileges). The word appears twice (11:17, 24) emphasizing the contrast between wild and cultivated. The wild olive produces inferior fruit and normally would be grafted into cultivated stock, not vice versa. Paul's point is precisely this reversal: God has done the unexpected, grafting wild branches (Gentiles) into the cultivated tree (Israel) to share in the root's richness.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly emphasize the wild character—Spanish 'olivo silvestre,' French 'olivier sauvage,' German 'wilder Oelbaum' (wild oil-tree). Both Romans 11 passages develop the horticultural metaphor of wild versus cultivated olive, with Gentiles as the wild stock grafted in. The multilingual consensus reinforces the contrast: this is the uncultivated, naturally growing olive as opposed to the domesticated variety. Paul's theology hangs on this agricultural reality—the grafting is 'contrary to nature' (para physin), God's surprising inclusion of wild Gentile branches into cultivated Israel. OLIVE TREES

en: a-wild-olive, wild-olive | es: olivo-silvestre | fr: olivier-sauvage | de: wilder-Oelbaum Rom 11:17; Rom 11:24

ἄγριος G0066 Adj-NNS (3×)

wild, untamed; living in natural state opposed to domesticated or cultivated

An adjective distinguishing wild from domesticated life—animals untamed by humans, plants growing naturally versus cultivated. John the Baptist ate 'wild honey' in the wilderness (Matt 3:4, Mark 1:6). Jude 13 uses 'wild waves of the sea' metaphorically for false teachers' shameless behavior. Classical usage contrasts wild beasts to tame, wild trees to cultivated—the realm of nature versus human ordering.

(3×) Marks things in their natural, uncultivated state. The Baptist's diet of locusts and wild honey establishes his wilderness prophet identity—subsisting on what nature provides, not human agriculture. Jude's metaphor exploits the adjective's connotation of uncontrolled chaos: like wild waves crashing without restraint, false teachers foam up their own shame. Multilingual glosses (Spanish 'fieras/silvestre,' French 'sauvage,' German 'wilde') consistently distinguish wild from tame. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: wild | es: fieras, silvestre | fr: sauvage, sauvages | de: wilde, ἄγριον Matt 3:4; Mark 1:6; Jude 1:13

Ἀγρίππας G0067 N-GMS (11×)

Agrippa — Herod Agrippa II, the last Herodian king, before whom Paul made his defense in Caesarea Ἀγρίππας (Agrippas) in the New Testament refers exclusively to Herod Agrippa II, great-grandson of Herod the Great and the last ruler of the Herodian dynasty. He appears in Acts 25–26, arriving in Caesarea with his sister Bernice to pay respects to the new governor Festus. Paul seizes the audience as an opportunity for a full defense of his conversion and apostolic mission (Acts 26:1-29). Agrippa's famous response — 'In a short time you would persuade me to become a Christian' (Acts 26:28) — has echoed through centuries of preaching. Spanish 'Agripa' and French 'Agrippa' both transliterate directly from the Latin-Greek form.

(11×) Herod Agrippa II (Marcus Julius Agrippa), the last Herodian ruler, who governed territories in northern Palestine under Roman oversight. All eleven NT occurrences appear in Acts 25:13–26:32, where he visits Festus in Caesarea and hears Paul's defense. His response to Paul's appeal — 'In a short time you would persuade me to become a Christian' (Acts 26:28) — and his verdict that Paul could have been freed had he not appealed to Caesar (Acts 26:32) are pivotal moments in the Acts narrative. Spanish 'Agripa' and English 'Agrippa' both preserve the Greco-Latin name. PROPER NAMES

(PERSONAL)
en: Agrippas | es: Agríppas | fr: Agrippa | de: Agrippa Acts 25:13; Acts 25:22; Acts 25:23; Acts 25:24; Acts 25:26

ἀγρός G0068 N-DMS (37×)

A field or piece of cultivated land; in the plural, the open countryside or rural area surrounding a town.

One of the most familiar words in the Gospels, appearing throughout Jesus' parables and narrative settings. A farmer sows good seed in his field (Matt 13:24), treasure lies hidden in a field (Matt 13:44), and Judas's blood money purchases the 'Field of Blood' (Acts 1:18-19). In the plural, it shifts from a specific plot to the broader countryside — the open land around towns where people tend flocks, harvest crops, or, like the prodigal son, find themselves feeding pigs (Luke 15:15). Every major European translation preserves this singular/plural distinction: campo vs. campos (spa), champ vs. campagne (fra), Acker vs. Felder (deu).

1. field, piece of land (25×) A specific, bounded piece of land — whether cultivated, purchased, or used in parable. Jesus' parables of the sower (Matt 13:24), the hidden treasure (Matt 13:44), and the wheat and tares all center on this sense: the field as a defined tract with an owner. Spanish 'campo' and German 'Acker' consistently render the singular, emphasizing agricultural land. The 'potter's field' of Matt 27:7 and the field of Boaz (cf. LXX of Ruth) show it can also denote a purchasable property. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: field | es: campo, campo?, el-campo | fr: champ | de: Acker, ἀγρὸν Matt 6:28; Matt 6:30; Matt 13:24; Matt 13:27; Matt 13:31

2. fields, countryside, rural area (12×) The open countryside or rural surroundings of a settlement, typically in the plural. When Jesus tells the disciples the crowds can go 'into the fields' to buy food (Mark 6:36), or when those tending pigs flee 'into the countryside' (Mark 5:14), the word denotes unenclosed rural territory rather than a single plot. French 'campagne' and Spanish 'campos' capture the expansive, non-urban sense. Mark 6:56 and Luke 15:15 illustrate the countryside as a place of labor and marginality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: countryside, fields, the-country | es: campo, campos | fr: champ | de: Acker, ἀγρούς, ἀγροὺς Matt 19:29; Mark 5:14; Mark 6:36; Mark 6:56; Mark 10:29

ἀγρυπν-έω G0069 V-PMA-2P (4×)

be wakeful, keep watch; stay alert with vigilant spiritual readiness and prayerful attentiveness

Originally meaning to lie awake or suffer sleepless nights, ἀγρυπνέω takes on a deeply metaphorical sense in the NT: spiritual vigilance. Jesus commands it in the eschatological discourse (Mark 13:33), Luke pairs it with prayer (Luke 21:36), Paul links it to persevering intercession (Eph 6:18), and Hebrews applies it to pastoral oversight — leaders who 'keep watch' over souls (Heb 13:17). The Spanish 'velad/velan' and French 'veiller' capture the watchman metaphor beautifully, while German 'wachen' preserves the same staying-awake imagery.

(4×) Be watchful, keep alert — to maintain vigilant spiritual readiness, often paired with prayer. The literal classical sense of lying awake through the night becomes in the NT a metaphor for sustained spiritual attentiveness. Jesus uses it eschatologically: 'Watch and pray' (Mark 13:33; Luke 21:36). Paul extends it to intercessory perseverance on behalf of all the saints (Eph 6:18). In Hebrews 13:17 it describes the sleepless care of church leaders who will give account for the souls in their charge. The Romance translations (spa 'velad,' fra 'veiller') evoke the same watchman imagery, linking vigilance with active duty rather than passive waiting. REFUGE AND SHELTER
en: be-watchful, being-watchful, keep-watch | es: velad, velan, velando | fr: veiller | de: wachen, ἀγρυπνεῖτε Mark 13:33; Luke 21:36; Eph 6:18; Heb 13:17

ἀγρυπν-ία G0070 N-DFP (2×)

sleeplessness, wakefulness, vigilant watching through the night

This noun denotes sleeplessness or wakeful watching—nights spent alert rather than sleeping. In 2 Corinthians, Paul lists it twice among his apostolic hardships: sleepless nights endured in ministry service (6:5, 11:27). These are not mere insomnia but purposeful vigilance—nights spent in prayer, care for the churches, or circumstances that prevented rest. The word captures both the physical deprivation and the devoted watchfulness that marked Paul's ministry. It's the toll of apostolic labor: nights awake in prayer, anxiety for the churches, or dangerous circumstances requiring alert vigilance.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize sleeplessness and watching —Spanish 'vigilias' (vigils/watches), French 'veille' (wakefulness/watch), German 'Wachsamkeit' (watchfulness/vigilance). Both 2 Corinthians passages list this among Paul's ministry hardships alongside labor, beatings, and hunger. The plural form suggests repeated or extended periods. The multilingual evidence supports this as wakeful nights, whether through chosen vigilance (prayer, care for churches) or forced circumstances (danger, anxiety). It's not pathological insomnia but the sleepless reality of devoted apostolic ministry. AWAKENING AND VIGILANCE en: sleeplessness | es: vigilias | fr: veille | de: Wachsamkeit 2Cor 6:5; 2Cor 11:27

ἄγω G0071 V-AIA-3S (69×)

To lead, bring, or take; escort a person; intransitively, to go; figuratively, to guide or direct.

Ago is one of the most fundamental movement verbs in Greek, covering the full range of directed motion involving persons. At its core it means to lead or bring someone from one place to another — soldiers escorting Jesus to Pilate, the Spirit leading Christ into the wilderness, disciples fetching a donkey. But it also functions intransitively in the urgent hortatory agomen ('let us go!') at moments of crisis (Matt 26:46; John 11:7). Spanish captures the split neatly: llevaron ('they took') versus vamos ('let us go'). The figurative extension where the Spirit 'leads' believers (Rom 8:14; Gal 5:18) shows the same verb spanning physical and spiritual domains.

1. bring, lead, take (physically) (53×) The dominant physical sense: to bring, lead, or take a person from one place to another — over three-quarters of all occurrences. Includes bringing toward the speaker (Matt 21:7, the donkey), leading away (Luke 4:1, the Spirit taking Jesus into the wilderness), and escorting under arrest (Mark 13:11). Spanish distinguishes trajeron ('brought toward') from llevaron ('took away'), revealing directional flexibility. German fuehren and French conduire preserve the personal-escort dimension. GOING AND LEADING en: bring, brought, he-brought | es: Trajeron, llevaron, lo-llevaron | fr: conduire, mener | de: fuehren, führt Matt 21:2; Matt 21:7; Mark 13:11; Luke 4:1; Luke 4:9

2. go, come (intransitive) (9×) Intransitive use meaning 'go' or 'come,' functioning as an exhortation rather than transporting another. Nearly all instances use the hortatory subjunctive agomen ('let us go') — Jesus at Gethsemane (Matt 26:46; Mark 14:42) and toward Lazarus's tomb (John 11:7, 15). The imperative age ('come now!') at Mark 1:38 is similarly intransitive. Spanish vamos and vayamos select dedicated intransitive motion words, confirming a genuine sense boundary. GOING AND LEADING
en: Come-now, Let-us-go, let-us-go | es: Vamos, Vayamos, vamos | fr: mener | de: fuehren, führt Matt 26:46; Mark 1:38; Mark 14:42; John 11:7; John 11:15

3. lead, guide (figuratively) (5×) Figurative or spiritual leading by the Holy Spirit, moral forces, or abstract principles. Romans 8:14 and Galatians 5:18 describe believers 'led by the Spirit'; 1 Corinthians 12:2 recalls being 'led astray' to mute idols. Spanish conduce and the passive erais-llevados both select vocabulary emphasizing influence rather than bodily transport. 2 Timothy 3:6 extends this to deceptive manipulation — 'led captive' by false teachers. GOING AND LEADING en: are-led, being-led, leads | es: conduce, erais-llevados, llevadas | fr: conduire, mener | de: fuehren Rom 2:4; Rom 8:14; 1Cor 12:2; Gal 5:18; 2Tim 3:6

4. (1×) A civic sense at Acts 19:38: courts 'are held' (agoraioi agontai). Here ago means to conduct or hold a proceeding rather than to move a person. Spanish se-celebran ('are convened') confirms the institutional meaning. Though only one NT occurrence, this civic usage is well attested in classical Greek for conducting festivals, trials, and assemblies. GOING AND LEADING en: are-held | es: se-celebran | fr: conduire | de: führt Acts 19:38

5. (1×) A temporal sense at Luke 24:21, where the Emmaus disciples say 'he leads this third day' — meaning the third day is now passing since these events. Spanish lleva ('carries/spends [time]') reflects this idiomatic temporal usage, distinct from both physical escort and figurative guidance. The verb conveys elapsed duration rather than spatial movement. GOING AND LEADING en: he-leads | es: lleva | fr: mener | de: führt Luke 24:21

ἀγωγή G0072 N-DFS (1×)
way of life, conduct; one's manner of living or behavior
Paul reminds Timothy: 'You have followed my conduct' (agōgē, 2 Timothy 3:10). This noun derives from 'agō' (to lead), originally meaning a carrying or leading, but extended to mean one's course of life or conduct. Classical Greek used it for everything from freight transport to aqueducts to moral tendencies. Here it describes observable lifestyle—how Paul actually lived, not just what he taught. Timothy had witnessed Paul's conduct firsthand over years of ministry, making him a qualified imitator. The noun emphasizes behavior as a pattern, a led or directed course of action.

(1×) The dative singular indicates what Timothy has followed: 'my conduct'—Paul's observable way of life. Classical semantic range (movement, bringing, tendency) all point toward directed action or lifestyle. Paul lists it first in a catalog that includes purpose, faith, patience, love, endurance, persecutions, and sufferings—conduct heads the list because it's most observable. Spanish 'conducta,' French 'ἀγωγῇ' (transliterated), and German 'Lebenswandel' (life-walk) all capture the behavioral emphasis. Paul's life served as curriculum; Timothy learned by observing how his mentor conducted himself. CONDUCT WAY LIFE en: conduct | es: conducta | fr: ἀγωγῇ | de: Lebenswandel 2Tim 3:10

ἀγών G0073 N-DMS (6×)
A contest, struggle, or race; the arena of exertion whether spiritual combat or athletic competition (ἀγών)
Rooted in the world of Greek athletics, this noun carries the energy of intense striving into the spiritual realm. Paul uses it to describe the believer's ongoing struggle of faith — the 'good fight' of 1 Timothy 6:12 and 2 Timothy 4:7, the conflict endured at Philippi (Phil 1:30), and the unseen battle waged for the Colossians (Col 2:1). In Hebrews 12:1 the metaphor shifts to a footrace, with the 'cloud of witnesses' as spectators. Spanish distinguishes lucha/pelea ('fight/struggle') from carrera ('race'), revealing the two distinct images at work.

1. struggle, conflict (5×) A struggle, fight, or conflict — the general sense of intense exertion or spiritual combat. Paul uses it of the ongoing contest of faith in Phil 1:30, the opposition faced in proclaiming the gospel at Thessalonica (1 Thess 2:2), and the climactic declarations in 1 Tim 6:12 and 2 Tim 4:7 about fighting the good fight. Spanish lucha and pelea, French and German Kampf all converge on the imagery of active combat and perseverance under pressure. STRUGGLE AND CONTEST
en: fight, struggle | es: conflicto, lucha, pelea | fr: Kampf | de: Kampf Phil 1:30; Col 2:1; 1Thess 2:2; 1Tim 6:12; 2Tim 4:7

2. race (athletic contest) (1×) A race or athletic contest, specifically the footrace metaphor. In Hebrews 12:1, believers are urged to run the race (ἀγῶνα) set before them with endurance, surrounded by a great cloud of witnesses. Spanish carrera ('race') cleanly separates this sense from the combat imagery, while French and German retain Kampf, suggesting the athletic contest was less lexically distinguished in those traditions. The shift from combat to course foregrounds endurance and forward movement rather than opposition. STRUGGLE AND CONTEST en: race | es: carrera | fr: Kampf | de: Kampf Heb 12:1

ἀγων-ία G0074 N-DFS (1×)
agony, intense struggle; extreme mental or spiritual anguish
Luke 22:44 describes Jesus in Gethsemane: 'being in agony' (en agōnia), he prayed more earnestly, and his sweat became like drops of blood. The noun originally meant athletic contest or struggle, but extended to psychological and spiritual anguish. This is Jesus's most intense moment of pre-crucifixion suffering—not physical torture yet, but the crushing weight of what lies ahead. The medical detail (hematidrosis, bloody sweat) underscores the physiological reality of extreme stress. This agony produces more fervent prayer, showing how anguish can drive us to greater dependence on God.

(1×) The dative indicates circumstance: 'being in agony'—the state or condition Jesus experienced in prayer. Classical usage ranges from athletic contest to mental anguish to struggle, all implying intense exertion or suffering. Luke, the physician, provides medical precision: the agony was so severe it produced hematidrosis. Spanish 'agonía,' French 'agonie,' and German 'ἀγωνίᾳ' (transliterated) all preserve the Greek term with its full emotional force. This garden agony previews the cross—Jesus experiences crushing spiritual weight before physical torture begins. STRUGGLE AND CONTEST en: agony | es: agonía | fr: agonie | de: ἀγωνίᾳ Luke 22:44

ἀγων-ίζομαι G0075 V-PMM/P-2S (8×)
To contend, strive, fight — from athletic competition to spiritual warfare to literal combat Drawn from the world of Greek athletic games, this verb carries the intensity of a competitor straining for the prize into the heart of New Testament spirituality. Paul's farewell declaration 'I have fought the good fight' (2 Tim 4:7) and his command to 'fight the good fight of faith' (1 Tim 6:12) use the same word that described wrestlers and runners in the arena. Jesus commands his hearers to 'strive to enter through the narrow door' (Luke 13:24), while Epaphras 'strives earnestly' in prayer for the Colossians (Col 4:12). Only in John 18:36 does the literal military sense surface, where Jesus says his servants 'would fight' if his kingdom were of this world.

1. to strive, contend earnestly (spiritual effort) (6×) Earnest spiritual striving, contending in faith, prayer, or ministry. The dominant New Testament sense, appearing six times. Spanish 'esforzaos/luchamos/he luchado' and German 'kaempfen' reflect the intense exertion. Paul labors 'striving according to His working' (Col 1:29), Epaphras 'strives earnestly' in prayer (Col 4:12), and Timothy is charged to 'fight the good fight of faith' (1 Tim 6:12; cf. 2 Tim 4:7; Luke 13:24). FIGHTING AND WARFARE
en: I-have-fought, Strive, fight | es: Esforzaos, he-luchado, luchamos | fr: combattre | de: kaempfen, Ἀγωνίζεσθε Luke 13:24; Col 1:29; Col 4:12; 1Tim 4:10; 1Tim 6:12

2. to compete (athletic metaphor) (1×) Competing in athletic contest, used as metaphor for disciplined Christian life. In 1 Cor 9:25 Paul compares the believer to athletes who exercise self-control in all things. Spanish 'luchando' and French 'combattre' preserve the competitive register. The metaphor evokes the rigorous training and single-minded focus of the Greek games. FIGHTING AND WARFARE
en: competing | es: luchando | fr: combattre | de: kaempfen 1Cor 9:25

3. to fight, do battle (literal) (1×) Literal physical fighting or combat. Jesus declares in John 18:36 that if his kingdom were of this world, his servants 'would have fought' to prevent his arrest. Spanish 'pelearían' (they would fight) signals unmistakable military engagement — the one New Testament passage where this verb retains its plainly martial sense. FIGHTING AND WARFARE en: would-have-fought | es: pelearían | fr: combattre | de: kaempfen John 18:36

Ἀδάμ G0076 N-GMS (9×)
Adam; the first man created by God, used as a genealogical ancestor and typological figure contrasted with Christ.
Adam is the Hebrew name meaning 'man' or 'humanity,' carried into Greek as an indeclinable proper noun. Luke traces Jesus' genealogy back to Adam, son of God (Luke 3:38), anchoring the Savior's full humanity. Paul develops Adam as the great typological counterpart to Christ: through one man sin entered (Romans 5:14), in Adam all die but in Christ all are made alive (1 Corinthians 15:22), and the 'last Adam' became a life-giving spirit (1 Corinthians 15:45). The Spanish forms 'Adam/de-Adam' and French 'Adam' show how universally the name passes unchanged across languages, underscoring its foundational role in biblical theology.

Adam (proper name) (9×) The proper name of the first human being, the progenitor of the entire human race. Used in Luke 3:38 as the ultimate ancestor in Jesus' genealogy, and in Pauline theology (Romans 5:14; 1 Corinthians 15:22, 45) as the typological head of fallen humanity whose disobedience is reversed by Christ, the 'last Adam.' Also referenced in 1 Timothy 2:13-14 regarding creation order and in Jude 14 for chronological reckoning. All nine occurrences refer to the same historical-theological figure. ADAM PERSON PLACE

en: Adam, of-Adam | es: Adàm, Adám, de-Adám | fr: Adam, Adam, | de: Adam Luke 3:38; Rom 5:14; 1Cor 15:22; 1Cor 15:45

ἀδάπᾰνος G0077 Adj-ANS (1×)

free of charge, without expense; costing nothing

Paul asks rhetorically what his reward is: offering the gospel 'free of charge' (adapanon, 1 Corinthians 9:18). The adjective combines alpha-privative with 'dapanē' (expense), meaning literally 'unexpensive' or costing nothing. Paul had the right to financial support but waived it, making the gospel free to recipients. This self-denial became his distinctive mark and reward—he could boast (rightly) that he never burdened the churches. The term's root meaning is 'sweet and costless'—Paul gave the sweetest message at no cost to hearers, though it cost him everything.

(1×) The accusative neuter describes how Paul offers the gospel: 'free of charge'—without financial burden to recipients. Classical usage (sweet and costless, not spending) emphasizes the absence of expense. Paul's point is paradoxical: he has rights but doesn't use them, making his reward the non-use of his rights. Spanish 'sin costo' (without cost), French 'sans dépense' (without expense), and German 'kostenlos' (cost-free) all capture the economic freedom. This adapanon gospel contrasts with false teachers who peddle God's word for profit—Paul gives freely what he received freely. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: without-expense | es: sin-costo | fr: sans-dépense | de: kostenlos 1Cor 9:18

Ἀδδεί G0078 N-GMS (1×)

Addi; ancestor of Jesus in Luke's genealogy

Listed in Luke 3:28 as part of Jesus's genealogy between Melchi and Cosam. The name appears only here in Scripture. Unlike Matthew's genealogy (which traces David's royal line through Solomon), Luke traces through Nathan, David's other son, yielding different names in this section. The name may be a shortened form of Adaiah (Hebrew 'Yahweh has adorned'). These genealogical names, while obscure to us, establish Jesus's legal descent from David and Adam—rooting the universal Savior in particular human history.

(1×) As a genealogical entry, Addi represents one link in the chain establishing Jesus's Davidic descent through Nathan's line. The genitive form indicates patrimony: 'son of Addi.' Luke's genealogy moves from Jesus back to Adam, universalizing Jesus's significance beyond Jewish ethnicity. The uniform transliteration across languages (Spanish Addí, French Addi, German Ἀδδὶ) treats this as a stable proper name with no meaning-translation needed. These names, unknown outside this list, remind us that God works through generations of ordinary, faithful people. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Addi | es: Addí | fr: Addi | de: Ἀδδὶ Luke 3:28

ἀδελφ-ή G0079 N-NFP (26×)

sister — a female sibling or fellow female believer in the Christian community

Adelphe is the feminine counterpart of adelphos ('brother'), covering both biological and spiritual kinship in its 26 New Testament occurrences. In narrative contexts it names literal sisters: Martha and Mary as sisters of Lazarus (John 11:1-5), the sisters of Jesus mentioned by his skeptical townspeople (Matt 13:56; Mark 6:3), and Herodias's relationship as Philip's wife (implied in Mark 6:17-19). Jesus redefines the term when he declares that 'whoever does the will of my Father in heaven is my brother and sister and mother' (Matt 12:50; Mark 3:35), opening the word to designate any female fellow-believer. Paul addresses specific women as 'our sister' — Phoebe the deacon (Rom 16:1) and unnamed co-workers — giving the term an ecclesial warmth. Spanish 'hermana,' French 'soeur,' and German 'Schwester' all preserve this dual literal-and-spiritual range without ambiguity.

sister (26×) A female sibling or, by extension, a fellow female believer in the community of faith. Literally designates Martha, Mary, and the sisters of Jesus (Matt 13:56; Mark 6:3; John 11:1). Spiritually redefined by Jesus: 'whoever does the will of my Father is my brother and sister' (Matt 12:50; Mark 3:35). Paul uses the term for co-workers like Phoebe (Rom 16:1). Every major translation language maps to a single kinship word — Spanish 'hermana,' French 'soeur' — reflecting that no sense split is needed. SISTER SIBLING

en: a-sister, sister, sisters | es: hermana, hermanas, una-hermana | fr: sœur | de: Schwester Matt 12:50; Matt 13:56; Matt 19:29; Mark 3:32; Mark 3:35

ἀδελφός G0080 N-AMP (343×)

Brother; fellow believer; kinsman — the primary NT term for sibling or spiritual family member

From the Greek adelphos, literally 'of the same womb,' this word carries a dual register in the New Testament. In a handful of passages it denotes a literal blood brother — James and John, or Jesus' own siblings. But in the vast majority of its 343 occurrences it addresses fellow believers as family, making the early church's self-understanding vividly relational. Spanish 'hermanos,' French 'frère,' and German 'Bruder' all preserve this same breadth, while the consistent plural across languages highlights how the communal sense dominated apostolic usage.

1. brother (fellow believer) (266×) Split from sense 61289. Criteria: Spiritual brotherhood in the Christian community, Paul's habitual address 'adelphoi' (Rom 1:13, 1 Cor 1:10). Ecclesiological sense.

en: brothers | es: hermanos | fr: frère | de: Bruder, Brueder Matt 5:47; Matt 12:48; Matt 12:49; Matt 23:8; Matt 25:40

2. brother (biological sibling) (76×) Split from sense 61289. Criteria: Literal male sibling by blood: Andrew and Peter (Matt 4:18), James and John, Joseph's brothers. Kinship relationship.

en: brothers | es: hermanos | fr: frère | de: Bruder, Brueder Matt 1:2; Matt 1:11; Matt 4:18; Matt 4:21

ἀδελφότης G0081 N-AFS (2×)

brotherhood, the community of believers as spiritual siblings

This noun denotes brotherhood—the community of believers bound together as spiritual siblings in Christ. In 1 Peter, it appears twice with ethical implications: 'love the brotherhood' (2:17) as a distinct command alongside fearing God and honoring the emperor, and 'your brotherhood throughout the world' experiences the same sufferings (5:9). The term emphasizes familial bonds among Christians—not mere association but kinship, siblings who share common parentage in God. It's the church conceived as family, a network of brothers and sisters bound by spiritual birth rather than blood.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly render as brotherhood—Spanish 'hermandad,' French preserving different Greek case forms of the same word, German 'Bruederschaft.' Both 1 Peter passages emphasize the reality and demands of spiritual kinship: brotherly love as a command (2:17) and shared suffering across the global brotherhood (5:9). The multilingual evidence supports this as the community of faith understood as family, believers as siblings united in Christ. It's corporate identity rooted in relational metaphor—the church as brotherhood, bound by spiritual rather than biological kinship. BROTHER KINSMAN

en: brotherhood | es: hermandad | fr: ἀδελφότητα, ἀδελφότητι | de: Brueder-schaft 1Pet 2:17; 1Pet 5:9

ἄδηλ-ος G0082 Adj-AFS (2×) unclear, invisible, hidden from view or uncertain in outcome
This adjective describes what is unclear, hidden, or uncertain—not evident to sight or knowledge. In Luke 11:44, Jesus condemns the Pharisees as being like unmarked graves: people walk over them unaware of the defilement beneath. In 1 Corinthians 14:8, Paul argues that if the trumpet gives an unclear sound, who will prepare for battle? The word emphasizes lack of clarity—what is hidden from view, obscured from knowledge, or uncertain in signal. It's the opposite of manifest, denoting what fails to communicate clearly or remains concealed from observation.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses show contextual nuance—Spanish 'inadvertidas' (unnoticed, for the graves) and 'incierto' (uncertain, for the trumpet); French 'incertain'; German preserves Greek forms. Luke 11:44 emphasizes hidden unmarked graves; 1 Corinthians 14:8 emphasizes unclear trumpet signals. The multilingual evidence supports a range from physically hidden to communicatively unclear. The common thread is lack of clarity—whether graves unmarked and thus deceptive, or signals indistinct and thus useless for their purpose. It's what fails to be evident, clear, or certain. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5326 WITH 3 SENSES
en: an-unclear, unmarked | es: inadvertidas, incierto | fr: incertain, ἄδηλον | de: ἄδηλα, ἄδηλον Luke 11:44; 1Cor 14:8

ἀδηλ-ότης G0083 N-DFS (1×)
uncertainty, unpredictability; the quality of being unclear or unstable
Paul warns the wealthy 'not to set their hope on the uncertainty of riches' (adēlotēti ploutou, 1 Timothy 6:17). The noun describes wealth's inherent instability and unpredictability—riches are uncertain, unreliable foundations for security. The term combines alpha-privative with 'dēlos' (clear, evident), meaning literally 'un-clearness' or obscurity. Wealth's uncertainty contrasts with God's certain provision: he 'richly provides us with everything to enjoy.' The dative construction indicates the faulty foundation: don't build hope on something so shifting and unclear as material wealth.

(1×) The dative indicates what hope should not rest upon: 'the uncertainty'—specifically, the uncertainty inherent in wealth. Classical usage points to obscurity, invisibility, or unpredictability. Paul's contrast is sharp: uncertain riches versus God who richly (plousios) provides. Spanish 'incertidumbre,' French 'ἀδηλότητι' (transliterated), and German 'Ungewissheit' (uncertainty) all capture the unstable, unclear nature of wealth. The trap for the rich is misplaced hope—trusting what is inherently untrustworthy. God's provision is certain; material wealth is not. EMPTINESS AND VANITY en: uncertainty | es: incertidumbre | fr: ἀδηλότητι | de: Ungewissheit 1Tim 6:17

ἄδηλ-ος G0084 Adv (1×)
aimlessly, without clear purpose; in an uncertain or unfocused manner
Paul declares: 'I do not box aimlessly' (adēlōs, 1 Corinthians 9:26). The adverb derives from 'adēlos' (unclear, invisible), meaning in an unclear or uncertain manner—like a boxer shadowboxing or punching air rather than targeting an opponent. Paul's point is purposeful intensity: his spiritual warfare has real targets and goals, not vague gestures. He runs to win, fights to land blows, disciplines himself rigorously. The athletic metaphors (running, boxing) emphasize directed effort toward specific objectives, contrasting sharply with aimless, unfocused activity.

(1×) The adverb modifies the boxing metaphor: 'not boxing aimlessly'—not striking the air without purpose. Classical usage (invisibly, obscurely, uncertainly) all suggest lack of clarity or direction. Paul contrasts purposeful athleticism with going through motions: he runs toward the prize, boxes with intent to hit. Spanish 'inciertamente' (uncertainly), French 'incertainement,' and German 'ungewiss' (uncertainly) all capture the lack of clear aim. This athletic purposefulness mirrors Paul's ministry—every effort directed toward winning people to Christ, nothing wasted on shadow-boxing. MANNER ADVERBS
en: aimlessly | es: inciertamente | fr: incertainement | de: ungewiss 1Cor 9:26

ἀδημονέω G0085 V-PPA-NMS (3×) to be deeply distressed, troubled in spirit; experiencing anguish or dismay
A verb expressing intense inner turmoil and anxiety. Jesus was 'deeply distressed' in Gethsemane (Matt 26:37, Mark 14:33), and Epaphroditus was 'distressed' that the Philippians heard of his illness (Phil 2:26). Classical usage includes being puzzled or dismayed. The term suggests more than sadness—a profound disorientation or troubled agitation of spirit.

(3×) Captures overwhelming emotional and spiritual distress beyond ordinary grief. Gethsemane's usage shows Jesus's human agony facing the cross—a distress so profound that it appears alongside 'troubled unto death.' Epaphroditus's concern was reverse anxiety: not his own suffering but others' worry about him troubled his spirit. The consistent cross-linguistic renderings (Spanish 'angustiarse,' French 'angoisse,' German forms of distress) emphasize the intensity and inwardness of this turmoil. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION
en: distressed, to-be-distressed, to-be-troubled | es: a-angustiarse, angustiado | fr: être-en-angoisse | de: ἀδημονεῖν, ἀδημονῶν Matt 26:37; Mark 14:33; Phil 2:26

Ἅιδης G0086 N-AMS (10×)
Hades — the unseen realm of the dead, the underworld abode of departed spirits in NT cosmology
The noun ᾅδης (Hades) designates the realm of the dead, the underworld destination of departed souls. In the Septuagint it translates Hebrew שְׁאוֹל (Sheol), and in the New Testament it retains that cosmological sense. Jesus warns that Capernaum will be brought down to Hades (Matt 11:23; Luke 10:15) and declares that the gates of Hades shall not prevail against his church (Matt 16:18). The parable of the rich man and Lazarus locates conscious torment 'in Hades' (Luke 16:23). Peter quotes Psalm 16 to affirm that God did not abandon Christ's soul to Hades (Acts 2:27, 31). Arabic 'الهاوية,' Hindi 'अधोलोक/पाताल,' Korean '음부,' Swahili 'kuzimu.'

Hades (realm of the dead) (10×) The unseen realm of the dead in New Testament eschatological and cosmological discourse, functioning as the Greek equivalent of Hebrew Sheol. Used in warnings of divine judgment (Matt 11:23; Luke 10:15), in Christ's declaration of the church's indestructibility against death's domain (Matt 16:18), in the parable depicting conscious afterlife experience (Luke 16:23), and in the apostolic proclamation that Christ was not abandoned there (Acts 2:27, 31). Revelation personifies Hades alongside Death as a power ultimately cast into the lake of fire (Rev 1:18; 6:8; 20:13-14). DEATH AND DYING
en: Hades, Hadēs, of-Hades | es: Hades, Hádēs, de-Hades | fr: Hadès | de: Hades, ᾅδην, ᾅδου Matt 11:23; Matt 16:18; Luke 10:15; Luke 16:23; Acts 2:27

ἀδιά-κρῑτος G0087 Adj-NFS (1×)
Impartial, without making distinctions; unbiased in judgment or treatment
This rare adjective appears only in James 3:17 describing the wisdom from above as "impartial." The word literally means "undistinguishable" or "not making distinctions," conveying the idea of treating all people equally without favoritism. In Hellenistic usage it could mean "unmixed" or "not discriminated," but James employs it in the moral sense of fair-minded impartiality. The multilingual glosses consistently render this as impartiality (English, Spanish) or use the Greek transliteration (French), confirming this ethical nuance of divine wisdom that shows no partiality.

(1×) The sole New Testament occurrence in James 3:17 uses this term to characterize heavenly wisdom as morally impartial—making no unfair distinctions between persons. The Greek lexicon background shows the word family relates to "not discriminating" or "undistinguishable," which James applies to the ethical sphere: godly wisdom judges fairly without favoritism or bias based on external status. STRAIGHTNESS AND UPRIGHTNESS

en: impartial | es: imparcial | fr: ἀδιάκριτος | de: unparteiisch Jas 3:17

ἀδιά-λειπτος G0088 Adj-AFS (2×)

unceasing, continuous without interruption or pause

This adjective describes what is unceasing or continuous—without interruption or pause. In Romans 9:2, Paul describes his 'unceasing sorrow' over Israel's rejection of Messiah—grief that never lets up, continuous anguish. In 2 Timothy 1:3, he speaks of 'unceasing remembrance' of Timothy in prayers—constant mention, prayer without interruption. The word emphasizes continuity and persistence, activity or state that does not cease or slacken. It's the quality of what remains constant, unbroken in its occurrence or intensity.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly emphasize the unceasing quality—Spanish 'incesante,' French 'sans cesse' (without ceasing), German 'unaufhoerlich' (uninterrupted). Both passages describe inner states that remain continuous: Paul's sorrow (Rom 9:2) and his prayerful remembrance (2 Tim 1:3). The multilingual evidence supports this as that which does not cease, continuous without interruption. Whether describing grief or prayer, the word emphasizes constancy and persistence, an unbroken continuity of experience or action. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5492 WITH 4 SENSES

en: unceasing | es: incesante | fr: sans-cesse | de: unaufhoerlich Rom 9:2; 2Tim 1:3

ἀδιά-λειπτος G0089 Adv (4×)

unceasingly, without interruption; constantly and persistently, especially of prayer and thanksgiving

This adverb, derived from ἀδιάλειπτος ('unintermitting'), appears four times in Paul's letters, always in connection with prayer or spiritual devotion. Paul assures the Romans he mentions them 'unceasingly' in prayer (Rom 1:9), thanks God 'unceasingly' for the Thessalonians' faith-work and love-labor (1 Thess 1:3), acknowledges their reception of the word 'unceasingly' (1 Thess 2:13), and gives the famous imperative to 'pray unceasingly' (1 Thess 5:17). Every major translation renders it as continuous action: Spanish 'incesantemente,' French 'sans cesse,' German 'unaufhörlich.'

(4×) Unceasingly, without interruption — describing an action performed constantly and persistently, without gaps. All four NT uses are Pauline and pertain to prayer or thanksgiving. Paul's habitual intercession for his churches (Rom 1:9; 1 Thess 1:3; 2:13) and the command to 'pray unceasingly' (1 Thess 5:17) do not demand literal non-stop activity but rather a pattern of life marked by regular, unbroken devotion. The cross-lingual evidence (spa 'incesantemente,' fra 'sans cesse,' deu 'unaufhörlich') consistently points to persistence and regularity rather than absolute continuity. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5492 WITH 4 SENSES

en: unceasingly | es: incesantemente | fr: sans-cesse | de: unaufhoerlich Rom 1:9; 1Thess 1:3; 1Thess 2:13; 1Thess 5:17

ἀδιά-φθορος G0090

incorruptible, imperishable; not subject to decay or corruption; morally pure and uncorrupted

This term describes what cannot be corrupted or destroyed. In moral contexts, it denotes integrity that cannot be compromised—judges who cannot be bribed, witnesses who cannot be bought, magistrates who remain honest. The word also carries a physical sense of imperishability, describing what endures without decay. Ancient Greek literature applied it both to character (uncorrupted, chaste) and to substance (not affected by decay). The dual meaning—moral incorruptibility and physical imperishability—often overlaps in biblical usage, where eternal realities are both morally pure and physically indestructible.

ἀδῑκέω G0091 V-PPA-NMS (28×)

To do wrong, harm, or injure; to act unjustly or suffer wrongdoing

Adikeō spans the moral and physical dimensions of wrongdoing. At its core it means to act unjustly – to commit wrong against another person, as when Paul asks 'Have I wronged you?' (Acts 25:10). But in Revelation's apocalyptic visions, it shifts toward physical harm and destruction: the locusts are told not to 'harm' the grass (Rev 9:4), and the sealed servants must not be 'injured' (Rev 7:2-3). The passive voice captures the victim's perspective – being wronged or cheated (1 Cor 6:7). Spanish distinguishes these registers clearly: agraviar for moral wrong, dañar for physical harm, and sufrir injusticia for the passive experience.

1. to do wrong, act unjustly (14×) To do wrong or act unjustly, emphasizing moral or legal transgression rather than physical injury. Appears 14 times in contexts of interpersonal and judicial wrongdoing: the vineyard owner insists 'I am not wronging you' (Matt 20:13), and Moses confronts one Hebrew wronging another (Acts 7:26-27). The Spanish agraviar and French faire tort capture this juridical dimension. WRONG HARM INJUSTICE

en: I-am-doing-wrong, I-have-wronged, I-wrong | es: agraviáis, agravé, haciendo-injusticia | fr: faire-tort | de: Unrecht-tun, tut-Unrecht Matt 20:13; Acts 7:26; Acts 7:27; Acts 25:10; Acts 25:11

2. to harm or injure (10×) To harm, injure, or damage physically, often in apocalyptic contexts of affliction or destruction. Revelation uses this sense repeatedly: the scorpion-locusts harm those without God's seal (Rev 9:4), and the two witnesses have power to destroy those who would harm them (Rev 11:5). Spanish dañar makes the physical dimension explicit where English 'harm' can blur with moral wrong. WRONG HARM INJUSTICE

en: harm, they-harm, they-should-harm | es: dañan, dañar, dañará | fr: faire-tort | de: Unrecht-tun, tut-Unrecht Luke 10:19; Rev 2:11; Rev 6:6; Rev 7:2; Rev 7:3

3. to be wronged, suffer injustice (4×) To be wronged or suffer injustice, the passive experience of being the victim of another's wrongdoing. Paul counsels the Corinthians 'why not rather be wronged?' (1 Cor 6:7), and Stephen sees the Hebrew 'being wronged' in Egypt (Acts 7:24). Spanish siendo tratado injustamente and the passive construction highlight the sufferer's vantage point rather than the perpetrator's act. WRONG HARM INJUSTICE

en: being-wronged, having-been-wronged, you-are-wronged | es: que-sufrió-injusticia, siendo-dañados, siendo-tratado-injustamente | fr: faire-tort | de: Unrecht-tun, tut-Unrecht Acts 7:24; 1Cor 6:7; 2Cor 7:12; 2Pet 2:13

ἀδίκ-ημα G0092 N-ANS (3×)

wrongdoing, misdeed, crime; an act of injustice or violation of law

A noun denoting specific wrongful acts—concrete misdeeds rather than abstract injustice. Gallio tells Jews to bring legitimate complaints about actual 'crimes' (Acts 18:14). Tertullus challenges Paul's accusers to state what 'wrongdoing' they found in him (Acts 24:20). Revelation 18:5 describes Babylon's sins piling up—her 'crimes' remembered by God. Classical Greek distinguishes this from accidental error as intentional wrong.

(3×) Refers to concrete acts of injustice or criminality. Acts uses it in legal contexts—charges that would warrant judicial attention versus religious disputes outside Roman jurisdiction. Gallio's dismissal turns on this distinction: if it were actual 'wrongdoing,' he would hear the case. Revelation's usage accumulates Babylon's specific wicked acts into a totality crying out for judgment. Multilingual evidence shows legal vocabulary: Spanish 'delito' (crime), French 'tort' (wrong), German 'Unrecht' (injustice). INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS en: crimes, wrongdoing | es: delito, iniquidades, injusticia | fr: Unrecht, tort | de: Unrecht, ἀδίκημά, ἀδίκημα Acts 18:14; Acts 24:20; Rev 18:5

ἀδικ-ία G0093 N-DFP (25×)

unrighteousness, injustice, wrongdoing — moral deviation from God's standard of right, both in act and condition

Adikia is the comprehensive New Testament term for unrighteousness, injustice, and wrongdoing — the negation of dikaiosyne ('righteousness'). Its 25 occurrences range across Pauline theology, the Lukan parables, and the Johannine epistles with remarkable conceptual unity. Paul frames it as a cosmic condition: God's wrath is revealed against all ungodliness and adikia (Rom 1:18), and those who suppress truth do so 'in unrighteousness' (Rom 1:18; 2:8). In Luke's parables, the 'steward of unrighteousness' (Luke 16:8) and the 'mammon of unrighteousness' (Luke 16:9) deploy the term with ironic force, while the parable of the persistent widow features 'the judge of unrighteousness' (Luke 18:6). John's first epistle sets the word against its antonym: 'all unrighteousness is sin' (1 John 5:17), and God is faithful to 'cleanse us from all unrighteousness' (1 John 1:9). Paul exhorts Timothy that everyone who names Christ's name should 'depart from unrighteousness' (2 Tim 2:19). Spanish 'injusticia,' French 'injustice,' and Arabic renderings all converge on a single concept.

unrighteousness, injustice (25×) Moral wrongness understood as the absence or violation of divine righteousness, encompassing both the inner condition and its outward expression. Paul uses it as a sweeping category of human rebellion under divine wrath (Rom 1:18; 2:8; 9:14), while Luke deploys it with sharp irony in parables — the unrighteous steward (Luke 16:8), the unrighteous mammon (Luke 16:9), the unrighteous judge (Luke 18:6). First John pairs it with sin (1 John 5:17) and with divine cleansing (1 John 1:9). Peter warns of 'the wages of unrighteousness' for false teachers (2 Pet 2:13, 15). Cross-linguistically, Spanish 'injusticia' and French 'injustice' confirm a single semantic core. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS

en: injustice, of-unrighteousness, unrighteousness | es: de-injusticia, injusticia | fr: injustice | de: Ungerechtigkeit Luke 13:27; Luke 16:8; Luke 16:9; Luke 18:6; John 7:18

ἄδῐκος G0094 Adj-DMS (12×)

Unrighteous, unjust; describing persons who act wickedly or things that lack moral rectitude, opposed to dikaios.

The direct negation of dikaios ('righteous'), this adjective marks a person or thing as morally crooked, unjust, or lacking integrity before God. Paul warns that the unrighteous will not inherit God's kingdom (1 Cor 6:1, 9), and Jesus observes that the one unfaithful in very little is also unfaithful in much (Luke 16:10-11). God sends rain on both the just and the unjust (Matt 5:45), and Peter declares the Lord knows how to reserve the unjust for judgment (2 Pet 2:9). The Pharisee's self-congratulation — 'I am not like other men, unjust' (Luke 18:11) — ironically underscores the word's moral weight. Spanish 'injusto' and French 'injuste' mirror the Greek alpha-privative construction precisely.

unrighteous, unjust (12×) Lacking righteousness or justice, morally wrong — the negation of dikaios. Applied to persons acting unjustly (the unjust judge, Luke 18:6; self-righteous contrasted with sinners, Luke 18:11), to those excluded from God's kingdom (1 Cor 6:1, 9), and to unrighteous mammon or dealings (Luke 16:10-11). Jesus notes God's impartial provision for just and unjust alike (Matt 5:45). Peter speaks of reserving the unjust for punishment (2 Pet 2:9). Hebrews 6:10 affirms God is not unjust to forget faithful service. Spanish 'injusto' and French 'injuste' replicate the alpha-privative negation of justice. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: unjust, unrighteous | es: de-injustos, injustas, injusto | fr: injuste | de: ungerecht, ἀδίκους, ἀδίκων Matt 5:45; Luke 16:10; Luke 16:11; Luke 18:11

ἄδῐκος G0095 Adv (1×)

Unjustly, in an unrighteous manner; acting without justice or fairness

This adverb derives from the adjective meaning "unjust" or "wrongdoing" and describes actions done in an unrighteous manner. Peter uses it in 1 Peter 2:19 when commending those who endure suffering "unjustly"—bearing up under pain when suffering wrongfully. Classical Greek employed this word for actions done unfairly, dishonestly, or contrary to justice. The consistent translation pattern across languages (unjustly, injustamente, ungerecht) shows the clear ethical sense of suffering that is undeserved or imposed without just cause.

(1×) In 1 Peter 2:19, this adverb modifies the kind of suffering that merits God's approval—enduring grief while suffering unjustly. The context celebrates believers who bear up under wrongful treatment, connecting to Christ's own innocent suffering. The word's classical background of "wrongdoing" or "unrighteous action" here describes the unjust nature of the suffering itself, not the sufferer's response. MANNER ADVERBS

en: unjustly | es: injustamente | fr: ἀδίκως | de: ungerecht 1Pet 2:19

ἀδόκιμ-ος G0096 Adj-NMP (8×)

Failing the test, disqualified, worthless; rejected upon examination as not meeting the standard.

Drawn from the language of metal assaying and coin testing, this adjective describes what fails to pass scrutiny and is therefore rejected as counterfeit or substandard. Paul applies it powerfully to the moral-spiritual realm: in Romans 1:28, those who refused to 'approve' (dokimazein) God were handed over to an 'unapproved' (adokimos) mind — a devastating wordplay. In 1 Corinthians 9:27 he fears becoming 'disqualified' after preaching to others. The term recurs three times in 2 Corinthians 13:5-7 as Paul challenges the Corinthians to test whether they are genuine. Spanish 'descalificado/reprobado' preserves both the testing and rejection dimensions.

failing the test, disqualified, worthless (8×) Failing the test, disqualified, rejected upon examination — originally a metallurgical and monetary term for coins that do not pass muster, applied in the NT to persons or minds that prove spiritually or morally counterfeit. In Rom 1:28 Paul deploys a devastating paronomasia: since they did not 'approve' (edokimasan) God, God gave them over to an 'unapproved' (adokimon) mind. In 1 Cor 9:27 he disciplines himself lest he become 'disqualified'; 2 Cor 13:5-7 uses the term three times in urging self-examination. The multilingual renderings (Spanish 'descalificado/reprobado,' French 'réprouvé,' German 'unbewährt') consistently reflect the testing-and-rejection metaphor. DISQUALIFIED WORTHLESS

en: debased, disqualified, unapproved | es: descalificado, descalificados, reprobada | fr: réprouvé, unbewahrt | de: unbewahrt Rom 1:28; 1Cor 9:27; 2Cor 13:5; 2Cor 13:6; 2Cor 13:7

ἄδολος G0097 Adj-ANS (1×)

Pure, unadulterated, without deceit or guile; genuine and unmixed

This adjective carries two main semantic streams: guileless honesty (without deceit) and unadulterated purity (unmixed, genuine). Peter employs it in 1 Peter 2:2 urging new believers to crave "pure spiritual milk." Classical usage applied it to treaties made "without fraud," unadulterated wine or gold, and genuine produce. The metaphor of newborn babies desiring pure milk suggests both the unmixed quality of God's word and perhaps its guileless truthfulness. Spanish captures the "without deceit" nuance with "sin-engaño" while English and German emphasize "pure" or "unadulterated."

(1×) The single New Testament use in 1 Peter 2:2 describes the "pure spiritual milk" believers should long for like newborns. Drawing on classical senses of "unadulterated" (unmixed wine, genuine gold) and "guileless" (honest, without fraud), Peter likely emphasizes both the unmixed purity of God's word and its truthfulness—milk that nourishes without contamination or deception. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: pure | es: sin-engaño | fr: ἄδολον | de: unverfaelscht 1Pet 2:2

Ἀδραμυντηνός G0098 Adj-DNS (1×)

Of Adramyttium, belonging to the coastal city of Adramyttium in Mysia

This adjective identifies something as belonging to or originating from Adramyttium, a seaport in the Roman province of Asia (modern-day Turkey). Luke uses it in Acts 27:2 to describe the ship Paul boarded at Caesarea—"a ship of Adramyttium." The term functions as a geographical identifier showing the vessel's home port. Adramyttium was located in Mysia on the northwest coast of Asia Minor, and ships from this port would typically sail along the Asian coastline, which fits Luke's narrative of Paul's journey toward Rome.

(1×) In Acts 27:2, this geographical adjective identifies the ship Paul and his companions boarded as "of Adramyttium"—meaning it was registered to or based in that Mysian seaport. The detail helps readers understand the ship's intended route, as Adramyttian vessels would naturally sail to ports along the Asian coast where Paul could transfer to a Rome-bound ship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: of-Adramuttium | es: Adramiteno | fr: Adramytte | de: Ἀδραμυττηνῷ Acts 27:2

Ἀδρίας G0099 N-DMS (1×)

The Adriatic Sea, the body of water between Italy and the Balkan peninsula

This proper noun refers to the Adriatic Sea, though in ancient usage the term covered a broader area than the modern Adriatic. Luke uses it in Acts 27:27 during Paul's shipwreck narrative, noting they were "driven across the Adria." In the first century, "Adria" could encompass not just the sea between Italy and Greece but also the central Mediterranean waters south of Italy. This broader geographical reference explains how Paul's ship, caught in a storm while sailing from Crete toward Italy, could be described as crossing "the Adria" before running aground at Malta.

(1×) Acts 27:27 places Paul's storm-tossed ship in "the Adria" on the fourteenth night of the tempest. Ancient usage of "Adria" covered a wider area than today's Adriatic Sea, including central Mediterranean waters. This explains how a ship driven from Crete could be "in the Adria" while actually approaching Malta, south of Sicily—the term encompassed the broader sea region between Greece, Italy, and North Africa. SEA LARGE WATER

en: Adria | es: Adriático | fr: Adriatique | de: Ἀδρίᾳ Acts 27:27

ἀδροτής G0100 N-DFS (1×)

Abundance, fullness, generosity; the quality of being plentiful or lavish

This noun denotes abundance, fullness, or copious supply. Classical Greek used it for vigor and strength, abundance of resources, or loudness of sound. Paul employs it in 2 Corinthians 8:20 in the context of administering financial relief, describing the "abundance" or "liberal gift" being sent to Jerusalem. The term emphasizes the generous, plentiful nature of the Corinthian collection. French interestingly renders it "générosité" (generosity), capturing the spirit of abundant giving, while other translations emphasize the sheer volume—"abundance" or "Freigebigkeit" (liberality).

(1×) In 2 Corinthians 8:20, Paul uses this term to characterize the financial relief offering as an "abundance" or "liberal gift." The context involves Paul's careful handling of the collection to avoid any suspicion—he's administering this "abundance" with accountability. The word emphasizes both the generous size of the gift and the fullness of the Corinthians' participation in this ministry to the Jerusalem saints. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: abundance | es: abundancia | fr: générosité | de: Freigebigkeit 2Cor 8:20

ἀδῠνᾰτ-έω G0101 V-FIA-3S (2×)

will be impossible, future tense of being unable or impossible

This verb in future tense declares that something will be impossible—incapable of occurring. Jesus uses it twice in similar contexts: in Matthew 17:20, declaring that nothing will be impossible for those with faith like a mustard seed; in Luke 1:37, the angel announces to Mary that nothing will be impossible with God (or 'no word from God will be impossible'). The verb emphasizes categorical impossibility that nevertheless can be overturned—by faith in Matthew, by God's power in Luke. It names the impossible precisely to declare that God transcends such limits.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses consistently render as future impossible—Spanish 'será imposible' (will be impossible), French 'être impossible' (to be impossible), German preserving the Greek future form. Matthew 17:20 makes faith the key to impossibility's reversal; Luke 1:37 makes God's power the guarantee. Both contexts use impossibility language to set up divine possibility. The multilingual evidence supports this as future categorical impossibility—but impossibility named precisely to be transcended by faith or divine power. It's the limit God erases. IMPOSSIBLE INCAPABLE

en: will-be-impossible | es: será-imposible | fr: être-impossible | de: ἀδυνατήσει Matt 17:20; Luke 1:37

ἀδῠνᾰτ-ος G0102 Adj-NNP (10×)

Impossible (of things or situations); powerless, weak (of persons)

The adjective ἀδύνατος (from alpha-privative + δυνατός, 'able') carries two clearly distinct senses depending on whether it describes things or persons. Applied to things, it means 'impossible' — what cannot be done — a sense crystallized in Jesus' repeated declaration that what is impossible with men is possible with God (Matt 19:26, Mark 10:27, Luke 18:27). Applied to persons, it means 'powerless' or 'weak' — someone lacking physical strength or moral capability, as with the lame man at Lystra (Acts 14:8) and the 'weak in faith' whom the strong should bear with (Rom 15:1).

1. impossible (of things) (8×) Impossible — predicated of things, situations, or propositions rather than persons. This is the dominant sense, appearing eight times across the Gospels, Paul, and Hebrews. The core declaration is Jesus' teaching that 'with men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible' (Matt 19:26, Mark 10:27, Luke 18:27). Paul uses it of the law's impotence to justify — 'what the law was powerless to do' (Rom 8:3) — and Hebrews of spiritual impossibilities: 'it is impossible for those who were once enlightened... to be renewed' (Heb 6:4), and 'without faith it is impossible to please God' (Heb 11:6). Multilingual glosses converge decisively: 'impossible' in English and French, 'imposible' in Spanish, 'unmoeglich' in German. IMPOSSIBLE INCAPABLE

en: impossible | es: Imposible, imposible, imposibles | fr: impossible | de: unmoeglich, ἀδύνατα, ἀδύνατόν Matt 19:26; Mark 10:27; Luke 18:27; Rom 8:3; Heb 6:4

2. powerless, weak (of persons) (2×) Powerless, weak, lacking strength — predicated of persons rather than things. In Acts 14:8, the man at Lystra is ἀδύνατος τοῖς ποσίν, 'impotent in his feet,' describing physical disability. In Rom 15:1, Paul exhorts the strong to bear the weaknesses of τῶν ἀδυνάτων, 'the powerless' or 'the weak' — those who lack the spiritual strength to navigate disputable matters. The shift from 'impossible' to 'weak/impotent' is confirmed in the Spanish glosses ('impotente,' 'debiles') and the classical Greek evidence where ἀδύνατος described invalids, paupers, and the disabled. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: powerless, weak | es: débiles, impotente | fr: impossible | de: unmoeglich, ἀδύνατος Acts 14:8; Rom 15:1

ἀείδω G0103 V-PPA-NMP (5×)

To sing, especially hymns or spiritual songs in worship; vocal praise directed to God.

The standard Greek verb for singing, used in the New Testament exclusively for worship contexts — singing psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs to God. Paul instructs believers to sing and make melody in their hearts to the Lord (Eph 5:19; Col 3:16), while Revelation's visions feature heavenly beings singing a 'new song' before the Lamb (Rev 5:9; 14:3; 15:3). The cross-lingual glosses are remarkably consistent: Spanish 'cantan/cantando,' French and German both use 'singen,' all pointing to the straightforward act of vocal musical praise.

(5×) To sing, particularly in the context of worship and spiritual praise. Every NT occurrence involves singing directed toward God or the Lamb. Paul pairs it with psalming and making melody (Eph 5:19; Col 3:16), while in Revelation the heavenly hosts sing the 'new song' and the 'song of Moses and the Lamb' (Rev 5:9; 15:3). The classical Greek form ᾄδω (contracted from ἀείδω) carried broader poetic associations, but NT usage narrows it to liturgical and doxological singing. Spanish 'cantar,' French and German 'singen' all reflect this core meaning of vocal musical expression. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: singing, they-sing | es: cantan, cantando | fr: singen | de: singen Eph 5:19; Col 3:16; Rev 5:9; Rev 14:3; Rev 15:3

ἀεί G0104 Adv (7×)

Always, ever, at all times; denoting continuous or habitual recurrence.

A temporal adverb meaning 'always' or 'ever,' indicating something that occurs continually or without cessation. In the New Testament it appears in contexts ranging from Stephen's accusation that Israel 'always' resists the Holy Spirit (Acts 7:51) to Paul's paradox of 'always dying yet living' (2 Cor 4:11; 6:10). The Cretan proverb quoted in Titus 1:12 uses it to characterize habitual behavior. Across all languages the rendering is remarkably consistent — Spanish 'siempre,' French 'toujours,' German 'immer' — a word whose meaning has remained stable for millennia.

(7×) Denoting perpetual, continual, or habitual action — 'always, ever, at all times.' The multilingual evidence shows perfect convergence: English 'always,' Spanish 'siempre,' French 'toujours,' German 'immer.' In Acts 7:51 Stephen charges Israel with perpetually resisting the Holy Spirit; in 2 Cor 4:11 Paul describes being 'always delivered over to death'; in Titus 1:12 it captures the habitual character of Cretans. Hebrews 3:10 quotes Psalm 95 where God says 'they always go astray in their heart.' No semantic subdivision is warranted — all uses express unbroken or characteristic continuity. CONTINUALLY DAILY OFFERING

en: always | es: Siempre, siempre | fr: toujours | de: immer Acts 7:51; 2Cor 4:11; 2Cor 6:10; Titus 1:12; Heb 3:10

ἀετός G0105 N-NMP (5×)

Eagle or vulture; a large bird of prey used as a symbol of swiftness, power, and divine judgment.

Refers to the eagle (or possibly the griffon vulture), a majestic raptor carrying rich symbolic weight in both classical and biblical tradition. Jesus uses the image proverbially — 'where the carcass is, there the eagles will gather' (Matt 24:28; Luke 17:37) — likely evoking vultures converging on the dead, a vivid picture of inevitable judgment. In Revelation, one of the four living creatures has the face of a flying eagle (Rev 4:7), an eagle cries 'woe' in mid-heaven (Rev 8:13), and the persecuted woman receives eagle's wings for escape (Rev 12:14). Translations converge: Spanish 'águila,' French 'aigle,' German 'Adler.'

(5×) A large bird of prey, the eagle (or griffon vulture in certain contexts), used both literally and symbolically. The proverbial saying in Matt 24:28 and Luke 17:37 likely envisions vultures gathering at a carcass — a figure for the inevitability of divine judgment. Revelation deploys the eagle as a symbol of power and swiftness: one of the four living creatures bears an eagle's likeness (Rev 4:7), an eagle announces apocalyptic woes (Rev 8:13), and eagle's wings provide miraculous deliverance (Rev 12:14). Spanish 'águila,' French 'aigle,' and German 'Adler' all uniformly render the term as eagle. EAGLE VULTURE RAPTOR

en: an-eagle, eagle, eagles | es: a-águila, águila, águilas | fr: aigle | de: Adler, ἀετοί, ἀετοὶ Matt 24:28; Luke 17:37; Rev 4:7; Rev 8:13; Rev 12:14

ἄζῡμος G0106 Adj-NNP (9×)

Unleavened; especially as a substantive: unleavened bread, the Feast of Unleavened Bread (ta Azyma).

An adjective meaning 'without leaven, unleavened,' used overwhelmingly as a substantive in the New Testament. In the Synoptic Gospels it appears in the phrase 'the feast of unleavened bread' (ta Azyma), marking the week-long festival following Passover when only bread made without yeast was eaten (Matt 26:17; Mark 14:1, 12; Luke 22:1, 7). Paul draws on this ritual background metaphorically in 1 Corinthians 5:7-8, urging believers to be 'unleavened' – pure and free from the old leaven of malice. Spanish 'sin-levadura/azimos' and French 'sans-levain' consistently reflect the core meaning across both literal and figurative uses.

1. unleavened bread (8×) Used substantivally for unleavened bread or the Feast of Unleavened Bread (he heorte ton Azymon). All eight Synoptic occurrences designate the festival period or the bread itself: Matt 26:17, Mark 14:1, 12, Luke 22:1, 7, and Acts 12:3; 20:6. Spanish 'panes-sin-levadura' and 'azimos' directly name the bread, while French 'pains-sans-levain' and German renderings point to the same concrete, ritual referent. The term evokes the Exodus narrative and Israel's hasty departure without time for dough to rise. UNLEAVENED BREAD

en: Unleavened-Bread, unleavened-bread | es: panes-sin-levadura, sin-levadura, ázimos | fr: pains-sans-levain, sans-levain | de: ἀζύμοις, ἀζύμων, ἀζύμων – Matt 26:17; Mark 14:1; Mark 14:12; Luke 22:1; Luke 22:7

2. unleavened (1×) The adjective used predicatively or metaphorically to describe a state of being 'unleavened' – pure, free from corruption. In 1 Corinthians 5:7 Paul declares 'you are unleavened' (azymoi este), reinterpreting the Passover purging of leaven as a moral imperative to cleanse out malice and wickedness. English 'unleavened,' Spanish 'sin-levadura,' and French 'sans-levain' all render this as an adjective qualifying the community rather than naming the bread, marking the shift from ritual substance to ethical metaphor. UNLEAVENED BREAD

en: unleavened | es: sin-levadura | fr: sans-levain | de: ἄζυμοι 1Cor 5:7

Ἀζώρ G0107 N-NMS (2×)

Azor, a name in Jesus' genealogy following the exile

Azor appears in Matthew's genealogy of Jesus in consecutive verses (1:13-14), representing one of the post-exilic generations connecting Zerubbabel's line to Joseph. The name likely means 'helper' from Hebrew roots. Like many in this section of the genealogy, Azor is unknown outside Matthew's record—one of the obscure links preserving David's line through the silent centuries. His mention twice in quick succession establishes his place in the chain from Abiud to Zadok, a vital but anonymous carrier of messianic promise through generations that waited for fulfillment.

(2×) All four languages transliterate the name uniformly: Azor, Azór (with accent variation). The double mention in Matthew 1:13-14 establishes his position in the genealogy. The multilingual uniformity reflects standard practice with biblical proper names. Though historically obscure, Azor represents the faithful preservation of David's lineage through the difficult post-exilic period—one more anonymous generation through which God maintained His promise of Messiah from David's seed. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Azōr | es: Azór | fr: Azor | de: Azor Matt 1:13; Matt 1:14

Ἄζωτος G0108 N-AFS (1×)

Azotus, the Greek name for the Philistine city Ashdod on the Mediterranean coast

This proper noun is the Greek name for the ancient Philistine city Ashdod (Hebrew אַשְׁדּוֹד), located on the Mediterranean coast between Joppa and Gaza. Luke uses it in Acts 8:40 when Philip, after baptizing the Ethiopian eunuch, is miraculously transported to Azotus and preaches in cities from there to Caesarea. The city had a significant history in the Old Testament as one of the five Philistine pentapolis cities and was where the captured ark of the covenant was taken. In New Testament times it remained an important coastal city under its Hellenized name.

(1×) Acts 8:40 identifies Azotus as the location where Philip appeared after the Spirit caught him away from the baptism site. This coastal city, known in Hebrew as Ashdod, served as the starting point for Philip's preaching tour northward to Caesarea. The use of the Greek name rather than the Hebrew reflects Luke's Hellenistic audience and the city's status in the Roman period. ASHDOD PLACE NAME

en: Azotos | es: Ázotos | fr: Azot | de: Ἄζωτον Acts 8:40

ἀήρ G0109 N-GMS (7×)

Air, the atmosphere; the lower region surrounding the earth, sometimes with spiritual connotations.

Denotes the air or atmosphere — the invisible medium surrounding earthly life. In classical Greek it originally meant mist or haze (distinguished from the bright upper 'aither'), but by the NT period it had broadened to mean simply 'air.' Paul uses it both literally and with theological weight: in Eph 2:2 Satan is 'the ruler of the authority of the air,' investing the atmosphere with spiritual menace, while in 1 Thess 4:17 believers meet the Lord 'in the air.' In 1 Cor 9:26 and 14:9, it appears in idioms — 'beating the air' and 'speaking into the air' — for futile action.

air (7×) The air or atmosphere as the physical medium surrounding earth-bound life. Spanish 'aire,' French 'air,' and German 'Luft' all confirm a single basic sense. Yet the NT invests this everyday word with remarkable range: in Eph 2:2 it becomes the realm of demonic authority ('the prince of the power of the air'); in 1 Thess 4:17 it is the meeting place of the eschatological rapture; in 1 Cor 9:26 'beating the air' is a metaphor for purposeless exertion; and in Acts 22:23 the crowd throws dust 'into the air' in fury. Despite these varied contexts, the underlying referent — the atmospheric space — remains constant. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: air | es: aire | fr: air | de: Luft, ἀέρα Acts 22:23; 1Cor 9:26; 1Cor 14:9; Eph 2:2; 1Thess 4:17

ἀθᾰνᾰσία G0110 N-AFS (3×)

immortality, deathlessness; exemption from death and decay

A noun expressing the quality of being beyond death. Paul uses it eschatologically: when the mortal puts on immortality at the resurrection (1 Cor 15:53-54), death is swallowed up in victory. Only God possesses immortality inherently (1 Tim 6:16)—he 'dwells in unapproachable light.' For believers, immortality is the future transformation, not present possession. Classical Greek used it for gods' deathless nature and even for elixirs promising extended life.

(3×) Denotes exemption from death—God's intrinsic nature and believers' future hope. The 1 Corinthians usage is climactic: the perishable body must 'put on' imperishability, the mortal 'clothe itself' with immortality—garment imagery for eschatological transformation. God alone currently 'has' immortality (1 Tim 6:16), while creation awaits it. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering (Spanish 'inmortalidad,' French 'immortalité,' German 'Unsterblichkeit') reflects the term's transparent meaning across cultures. LIFE AND LIVING

en: immortality | es: inmortalidad | fr: immortalité, ἀθανασίαν | de: Unsterblichkeit 1Cor 15:53; 1Cor 15:54; 1Tim 6:16

ἀθέμ-ιστος G0111 Adj-DFP (2×)

unlawful, contrary to divine or moral law, illicit

This adjective describes what is unlawful or contrary to proper law—particularly divine or moral law. In Acts 10:28, Peter explains to Cornelius that it is 'unlawful' for a Jew to associate with Gentiles—though Peter has learned God has cleansed all peoples. In 1 Peter 4:3, it describes the 'illicit' idolatries Gentiles practiced in their former pagan life. The word emphasizes violation of law or custom, behavior that transgresses established boundaries. It carries moral weight, marking conduct as improper, forbidden, outside the bounds of what is lawful and right.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses consistently emphasize unlawfulness—Spanish 'ilícito/ilícitas,' French 'illégitime,' German preserving Greek forms. Acts 10:28 uses it for Jewish law regarding Gentile contact; 1 Peter 4:3 for pagan idolatrous practices. Both contexts involve religious-moral boundaries. The multilingual evidence supports this as contrary to law, particularly religious and moral law. It's behavior that violates proper boundaries, whether Jewish custom (Acts) or true worship (1 Peter). The word marks the frontier between lawful and forbidden. UNCLEAN AND PROFANE

en: lawless, unlawful | es: ilícitas, ilícito | fr: illégitime, ἀθεμίτους | de: ἀθέμιτόν, ἀθεμίτοις Acts 10:28; 1Pet 4:3

ἄθεος G0112 Adj-NMP (1×)

Without God, godless; having no knowledge of or relationship with the true God

This compound adjective (alpha-privative + theos) means "without God" and can denote either practical atheism or being separated from knowledge of the true God. Paul uses it in Ephesians 2:12 to describe the Gentiles' former spiritual condition—they were "without God in the world." The term doesn't necessarily mean philosophical atheism but rather living without covenant relationship to the God of Israel, being strangers to His promises and without hope. The word captures the desolate spiritual state of paganism: not merely ignorance of deity but exclusion from the saving purposes and presence of the true God.

(1×) Ephesians 2:12 employs this term in Paul's description of Gentiles' pre-conversion state: alienated from Israel, strangers to the covenants, having no hope and "without God in the world." The context emphasizes covenant exclusion rather than atheistic philosophy—Gentiles had their gods but lacked relationship with the true God. The word underscores the bleakness of pagan existence: religiously active but spiritually destitute, separated from the God who saves. GODS AND DEITIES

en: without-God | es: sin-Dios | fr: ἄθεοι | de: gottlos Eph 2:12

ἄθεσμος G0113 Adj-GMP (2×)

lawless, unprincipled, living without regard for divine law

This adjective describes those who are lawless or unprincipled—living without regard for proper law or moral standards. In 2 Peter, it appears twice describing the wicked: Lot was tormented by the 'lawless' conduct of Sodom (2:7), and believers must guard against being carried away by the error of 'lawless' people (3:17). The word emphasizes not merely breaking specific laws but a fundamental attitude of lawlessness, living without principle or regard for divine standards. It's the quality of those who reject moral law as a governing framework.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize lawlessness—Spanish 'inicuos' (wicked/lawless), French preserving the Greek genitive form, German 'gesetzlos' (without law). Both 2 Peter passages use it to describe the wicked: the Sodomites' lawless deeds (2:7) and the error of lawless people who might lead believers astray (3:17). The multilingual evidence supports this as fundamental lawlessness, a life lived without regard for divine moral law. It describes not occasional infractions but a lawless orientation, unprincipled conduct that rejects God's standards. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS

en: lawless | es: inicuos | fr: ἀθέσμων | de: gesetzlos 2Pet 2:7; 2Pet 3:17

ἀθετ-έω G0114 V-PIA-3S (16×)

To reject, set aside, or nullify; to treat a person or authoritative decree as invalid or unworthy of acceptance.

Built from the root meaning 'to set aside as nothing,' this verb carries a double edge in the New Testament. Most often it describes the personal affront of rejecting someone or their message—the Pharisees 'rejected the counsel of God' by refusing John's baptism (Luke 7:30), and Jesus warns that rejecting his messengers means rejecting him, and ultimately the Father who sent him (Luke 10:16). But it also operates in a legal-covenantal register: Paul insists he does not 'nullify the grace of God' (Gal 2:21), and even in human affairs 'no one annuls a ratified covenant' (Gal 3:15). Spanish captures the distinction neatly with 'rechazar' (reject a person) versus 'anular' (annul a legal instrument).

1. reject or refuse (12×) To reject or repudiate a person, message, or divine authority—treating them as unworthy of acceptance. This is the dominant New Testament usage, covering Herod reluctantly refusing to reject his oath (Mark 6:26), the Pharisees rejecting God's purpose (Luke 7:30), and the solemn chain of rejection in Luke 10:16 where dismissing the disciples means dismissing Christ. French consistently renders it 'rejeter,' and German 'verwerfen,' both emphasizing active repudiation rather than mere indifference.

REJECTION AND REFUSAL
en: having-rejected, reject, rejected | es: abandonaron, que-rechaza, rechaza | fr: rejeter, rejettent, | de: verwerfen, ἀθετεῖ, ἀθετῶν Mark 6:26; Luke 7:30; Luke 10:16

2. set aside or nullify (4×) To set aside, annul, or nullify something authoritative—a law, covenant, or divine purpose—rendering it void. Paul uses this sense when he declares 'I do not set aside the grace of God' (Gal 2:21), when he reasons that no one annuls even a human covenant once ratified (Gal 3:15), and when he quotes Isaiah on setting aside the wisdom of the wise (1 Cor 1:19). Spanish distinguishes this sense clearly with 'anular' and 'desecho,' contrasting with the personal 'rechaza' of Sense 1. REJECTION AND REFUSAL en: I-set-aside, I-will-set-aside, sets-aside | es: anula, anuláis, desecho | fr: rejeter | de: verwerfen Mark 7:9; 1Cor 1:19; Gal 2:21; Gal 3:15

ἀθέτ-ησις G0115 N-NFS (2×)
annulment, setting aside, abolition or cancellation
This noun denotes a setting aside, annulment, or abolition—the cancellation of what was previously established. In Hebrews 7:18, it describes the 'annulment' of the former commandment (the Levitical priesthood law) because of its weakness and uselessness. In Hebrews 9:26, it refers to the 'putting away' of sin through Christ's sacrifice. The word emphasizes removal, abolition, the setting aside of what was formerly in force. It's particularly significant in Hebrews' argument about the superiority of Christ's priesthood: the old has been annulled, sin has been put away.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize annulment and setting aside—Spanish 'anulación,' French 'rejet' (rejection/casting off), German 'Verwerfung' (rejection/annulment). Hebrews 7:18 uses it for the abolition of the former commandment; 9:26 for the putting away of sin. Both contexts involve the removal of what was formerly in place—old covenant structures or sin's dominion. The multilingual evidence supports this as authoritative setting aside, the annulment or abolition of what previously held force. It's removal with legal or spiritual finality. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6762 WITH 3 SENSES en: annulment | es: anulación | fr: rejet | de: Verwerfung Heb 7:18; Heb 9:26

Ἀθῆναι G0116 N-GFP (4×)
Athens; the renowned Greek city, center of philosophy and culture, where Paul preached on the Areopagus Athens (Ἀθῆναι), the celebrated city of ancient Attica, appears four times in the NT, all connected with Paul's second missionary journey. Luke records Paul's arrival (Acts 17:15), his provocation at the city's idolatry (Acts 17:16), and his departure for Corinth (Acts 18:1). Paul himself recalls sending Timothy back from Athens (1 Thess 3:1). The plural form (like Θῆβαι) reflects ancient convention. Every translation preserves the proper noun with minimal adaptation: Spanish 'Atenas,' French 'Athenes,' German 'Athen.'

(4×) Athens — the principal city of Attica in Greece, famous as a center of philosophy, rhetoric, and religion. Paul visited during his second missionary journey and delivered his celebrated Areopagus address there (Acts 17:22-31). Luke emphasizes the city's pervasive idolatry (Acts 17:16) and intellectual curiosity (17:21). All four NT references cluster around this single visit, with 1 Thessalonians 3:1 recalling Paul's decision to remain in Athens alone while sending Timothy to Thessalonica. Cross-lingual forms (spa 'Atenas,' fra 'Athenes,' deu 'Athen') show consistent phonological adaptation of the Greek toponym. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: Athens, Athēnai | es: Atenas, Athénai | fr: Athènes, Ἀθήναις | de: Athen, Ἀθήναις Acts 17:15; Acts 17:16; Acts 18:1; 1Thess 3:1

Ἀθην-αιότης G0117 Adj-NMP (2×)
Athenians, inhabitants or citizens of Athens
This adjective-as-noun designates the Athenians—inhabitants and citizens of Athens, the famous intellectual and cultural center of the ancient Greek world. In Acts 17, it appears twice: the Athenians and foreign residents spent their time on nothing but talking about and listening to new ideas (17:21), and Paul addresses the Athenian council on the Areopagus (17:22). The word marks these people by their city identity, carrying overtones of Athens' reputation for philosophy, rhetoric, and love of novelty. They represent sophisticated Greek culture encountering the gospel.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses show slight variation—Spanish distinguishes capitalized 'Atenienses' from lowercase 'atenienses,' French 'Athénien,' German preserving the Greek plural form. Both Acts 17 passages identify Paul's audience by their city: the novelty-seeking Athenians (17:21) and the council Paul addresses (17:22). The multilingual evidence supports this as a straightforward ethnic-geographical designation: people of Athens. The context adds the characterization of Athens as a city devoted to intellectual novelty and philosophical discussion. NATIONS AND PEOPLES en: Athēnaioi | es: Atenienses, atenienses | fr: Athénien | de: Ἀθηναῖοι Acts 17:21; Acts 17:22

ἀθλ-έω G0118 V-PSA-3S (2×)
to compete, to contend as an athlete in games or struggle
This verb denotes competing or contending, particularly as an athlete in games. In 2 Timothy 2:5, Paul uses the athletic metaphor twice in one verse: an athlete does not receive the crown unless he competes according to the rules. The verb emphasizes the disciplined striving of athletic competition—not casual participation but earnest contending for victory. Paul applies this to Christian life and ministry: like athletes, believers must compete according to rules (God's standards) to receive the prize. It's disciplined, rule-governed striving toward a goal.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses consistently emphasize competing—Spanish 'compite/compitiere' (competes), French preserving Greek forms with different moods (subjunctive and indicative), German 'kaempfen' (to fight/compete). The doubled use in 2 Timothy 2:5 establishes the athletic metaphor: competing according to rules is essential for receiving the crown. The multilingual evidence supports this as athletic competition, disciplined striving governed by rules. Paul uses it metaphorically for Christian faithfulness—life as competition requiring discipline, rule-adherence, and perseverance to win the prize. FIGHTING AND WARFARE en: competes, he-competes | es: compite, compitiere | fr: ἀθλήσῃ, ἀθλῇ | de: kaempfen 2Tim 2:5

ἆθλ-ησις G0119 N-AFS (1×)
Contest, struggle, conflict; especially athletic competition or spiritual/moral striving
This noun derives from athletic terminology, referring to contests or competitions, but extends metaphorically to any intense struggle or conflict. The author of Hebrews uses it in Hebrews 10:32 to describe the "conflict of sufferings" the readers endured after their conversion. Classical usage emphasized athletic contests, training, and practice, but the word naturally transferred to the spiritual realm to denote the struggle of faith. The multilingual glosses reflect both meanings: "struggle," "combate" (combat), "Kampf" (fight). The athletic imagery would resonate with readers familiar with Greek games, now applied to their persecution and trials.

(1×) Hebrews 10:32 uses this athletic term metaphorically for the "great conflict of sufferings" the Hebrew Christians endured after their enlightenment. Drawing on imagery of athletic contests, the author portrays their persecution as a spiritual struggle requiring endurance. The word elevates their suffering from mere misfortune to a noble contest, echoing the athletic competitions of Greek culture but now in service of faith rather than fame. STRUGGLE AND CONTEST en: struggle | es: combate | fr: Kampf | de: Kampf Heb 10:32

ἀθῡμ-έω G0120 V-PSA-3P (1×)
To be discouraged, disheartened, or dejected; to lose heart or become downcast

This verb means to become disheartened, lose courage, or grow despondent. Classical Greek employed it for becoming discouraged in the face of illness or difficulty, or being afraid. Paul uses it in Colossians 3:21 warning fathers not to provoke their children "lest they become discouraged." The concern is that harsh, unreasonable treatment will break a child's spirit, causing them to lose heart and become dejected. The verb captures the interior emotional collapse that comes from feeling overwhelmed, hopeless, or unable to meet impossible standards.

(1×) In Colossians 3:21, Paul warns fathers against provoking their children to the point where "they become discouraged." The verb describes the emotional and spiritual deflation that results from excessive harshness or unreasonable demands—children losing heart, becoming dejected, and perhaps giving up trying to please. The concern is for the child's inner state: courage and hope crushed by a parent's severity. DESPAIR HOPELESSNESS
en: they-may-become-discouraged | es: se-desanimen | fr: ἀθυμῶσιν | de: mutlos-werden Col 3:21

ἀθῷος G0121 Adj-NMS (2×)
innocent, guiltless, free from blame or deserving no punishment
This adjective describes one who is innocent, guiltless, or free from deserving punishment. In Matthew 27, it appears twice regarding Jesus' crucifixion: Judas confesses he betrayed 'innocent blood' (27:4), and Pilate declares himself innocent of 'this righteous man's blood' (27:24). The word emphasizes lack of guilt or culpability, one who does not deserve the punishment threatened or imposed. It's particularly powerful in Matthew's passion narrative: multiple witnesses acknowledge Jesus' innocence even as they participate in His execution. The innocent one suffers for the guilty.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly emphasize innocence—Spanish 'Inocente/inocente,' French 'innocent,' German preserving Greek forms with case variations. Both Matthew 27 passages involve declarations of Jesus' innocence: Judas's guilty confession (27:4) and Pilate's self-serving claim (27:24). The multilingual evidence supports this as guiltless, free from deserving punishment. The irony is stark: the innocent one acknowledged by betrayer and judge alike is nevertheless condemned. It's innocence testified even by those complicit in its destruction. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL
en: Innocent, innocent | es: Inocente, inocente | fr: innocent | de: ἀθῷον, Ἀθῷός Matt 27:4; Matt 27:24

αἴγειος G0122 Adj-DNP (1×)
Of a goat, made from goat materials; pertaining to goats
This adjective means "of a goat" or "made from goat materials," describing items derived from goats such as goatskin, goat hair, or goat cheese. Classical usage applied it to goat cheese, goatskin wine bags, goatskin helmets, and goat milk. The author of Hebrews uses it in Hebrews 11:37 listing the sufferings of faithful witnesses who wandered about "in goatskins." The image evokes poverty and hardship—faithful believers reduced to wearing rough animal hides, possibly alluding to prophets like Elijah who wore such garments, living as outcasts and wanderers for their testimony.

(1×) Hebrews 11:37 includes "goatskins" in the catalog of hardships endured by Old Testament faithful—stoned, sawn in two, wandering destitute in animal hides. The goatskin garment symbolizes poverty, rejection, and prophetic marginalization (compare Elijah's rough clothing). These believers, though honored by God, lived as outcasts in society, wearing the coarse skins of goats rather than dignified human clothing. GOATS AND GOAT HAIR
en: goatskins | es: de-cabra | fr: Ziegen- | de: Ziegen- Heb 11:37

αἰγιαλός G0123 N-AMS (6×)
Shore, beach; a sandy or pebbly stretch of coastline used as a landing place or gathering area.
In the New Testament, aigialos refers to the strip of land where sea meets shore – a place of transition and encounter. Jesus taught the crowds from a boat while they stood on the beach (Matt 13:2), and fishermen sorted their catch there (Matt 13:48). The risen Christ appeared on the shore of the Sea of Galilee (John 21:4). In Acts, believers knelt in prayer on the beach at Tyre (21:5), and the shipwrecked crew spotted an unknown bay with a beach on Malta (27:39-40).

shore, beach (6×) A sandy or pebbly stretch of coastline at the water's edge, serving as a place for landing boats, gathering, or fishing. All six NT occurrences designate the same physical feature. In the Gospels it is the setting for Jesus' parabolic teaching from a boat (Matt 13:2) and the post-resurrection appearance (John 21:4). In Acts it is both a place of communal prayer (21:5) and the target of a desperate shipwreck landing (27:39-40). Spanish 'playa/orilla' and German 'Ufer' both capture the shoreline sense, while French 'rivage' carries a slightly more literary register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-beach, beach, shore | es: orilla, playa | fr: rivage | de: Ufer, αἰγιαλόν, αἰγιαλὸν Matt 13:2; Matt 13:48; John 21:4; Acts 21:5; Acts 27:39

Αἰγύπτιος G0124 Adj-NMP (5×)
Egyptian; pertaining to Egypt or its people, used as both adjective and substantive noun.
An adjective meaning 'Egyptian,' used in the New Testament to describe persons from Egypt or things associated with Egyptian culture. Stephen's speech in Acts uses it most frequently: Moses was educated in all the wisdom of the Egyptians (Acts 7:22), killed an Egyptian oppressor (7:24, 28), and the Roman tribune mistakes Paul for a notorious Egyptian insurrectionist (21:38). Hebrews 11:29 recalls the Egyptians drowning in the Red Sea. French 'Égyptien' and German 'Ägypter' reflect the standard gentilic form, while Spanish simply transliterates the Greek as 'Aigyptios.'

(5×) Pertaining to Egypt or denoting an Egyptian person. Used as both an adjective (Egyptian wisdom, Acts 7:22) and a substantive noun (an Egyptian man, Acts 7:24, 28). Stephen's speech concentrates four of the five NT occurrences, drawing on Egypt as both the setting of Israel's oppression and the source of worldly learning. The fifth occurrence recalls the Egyptians' destruction at the Red Sea (Heb 11:29). French 'Égyptien' and German 'Ägypter' follow standard gentilic patterns, while the Acts 21:38 usage — 'the Egyptian' who led a revolt — shows the term functioning as a quasi-proper designation. EGYPTIAN GENTILIC
en: Aiguptioi, Aigyptios, of-Aigyptioi | es: Aigyptioi, Aigýptios, de-los-Aigýptioi | fr: Égyptien | de: Aegypter, Ägypten Acts 7:22; Acts 7:24; Acts 7:28; Acts 21:38; Heb 11:29

Αἴγυπτος G0125 N-GFS (25×)
Egypt — the ancient land along the Nile, referenced in the NT for the Exodus narrative, the flight of Jesus, and typological use Aigyptos in the New Testament appears 25 times, carrying the full weight of Old Testament memory into the early Christian proclamation. Matthew's infancy narrative drives four of these occurrences: the angel commands Joseph to flee to Egypt with the child (Matt 2:13-14), they remain until Herod's death (Matt 2:15), and the angel then summons them back — fulfilling Hosea 11:1, 'Out of Egypt I called my son' (Matt 2:15, 19). Stephen's speech in Acts 7 accounts for the greatest concentration, recounting Joseph's enslavement, Jacob's migration, Israel's multiplication, Moses' education in Egyptian wisdom, and the Exodus deliverance (Acts 7:9-40). Hebrews 3:16; 8:9; 11:26-27 invoke the Exodus as the paradigm of faith and disobedience. Paul cites the wilderness generation's failures after leaving Egypt as a warning (1 Cor 10:1-5, implied context). Revelation 11:8 uses 'Egypt' symbolically for the great city 'where their Lord was crucified.' Spanish 'Egipto,' French 'Egypte,' and German 'Agypten' are uniform.

Egypt (proper noun) (25×) The proper geographical name for the ancient land of the Nile, used in the NT primarily in three contexts: the Holy Family's flight and return (Matt 2:13-15, 19), Stephen's rehearsal of Israel's sojourn and Exodus (Acts 7:9-40), and Hebrews' appeal to the Exodus as a paradigm of faith (Heb

3:16; 8:9; 11:26-27). Revelation deploys it symbolically: the great city is 'spiritually called Egypt' (Rev 11:8). Across all usages, Egypt functions as the archetypal place of bondage from which God delivers — making it simultaneously a historical referent and a typological symbol. The LXX spelling Aigyptos passes directly into NT Greek. EGYPT PLACE NAME

en: Aiguptos, Aigyptos, Egypt | es: Aígypton, Aígyptos, Egipto | fr: Égypte | de: Aegypten, Ägypten Matt 2:13; Matt 2:14; Matt 2:15; Matt 2:19; Acts 2:10

ἀΐδιος G0126 Adj-DMP (2×)

eternal, everlasting, without beginning or end

This adjective describes what is eternal or everlasting—existing without temporal limits. In Romans 1:20, Paul declares God's 'eternal power' has been clearly seen from creation. In Jude 6, it describes the 'eternal chains' that bind fallen angels in darkness awaiting judgment. The word emphasizes perpetuity and timelessness, that which transcends temporal boundaries. Classical Greek distinguished this term (everlasting, without beginning or end) from aiōnios (age-lasting, potentially with a beginning). It's the quality of divine attributes and ultimate realities that exist outside time's flow.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly emphasize the eternal—Spanish 'eterna/eternas,' French 'éternel/éternelles,' German 'ewig/ewigen.' Romans 1:20 applies it to God's power; Jude 6 to the chains binding fallen angels. Both contexts involve ultimate realities beyond temporal limitation. The multilingual evidence supports this as everlasting, eternal in the fullest sense—without beginning or end, transcending time. It describes divine attributes and eschatological realities that exist in a different order from temporal creation. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: eternal | es: eterna, eternas | fr: éternel, éternelles | de: ewig, ewigen Rom 1:20; Jude 1:6

αἰδώς G0127 N-GFS (1×)

Modesty, shame, respect; a sense of propriety and reverence that restrains from shameful behavior

This noun denotes a moral sense of shame, modesty, or respect—the inner feeling that restrains one from dishonorable actions. Classical Greek used it for reverence, awe, self-respect, and regard for others' opinions. Paul employs it in 1 Timothy 2:9 instructing women to adorn themselves "with modesty." The term captures both outward modesty in dress and the inner moral disposition of appropriate shame—a healthy sense of what is proper and becoming. It's not about guilt but about dignity and reverence, the innate moral sensitivity that prevents shameless behavior and promotes decorum.

(1×) In 1 Timothy 2:9, Paul links this term with "self-control" (sophrosyne) in instructing women about modest adornment. The word denotes the moral sense of shame or propriety that guides appropriate dress and behavior—not merely external rules but an inner reverence and self-respect. Classical usage emphasized both respect for others and regard for one's own dignity, both of which restrain from shameless excess in appearance or conduct. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: modesty | es: pudor | fr: αἰδοῦς | de: Scham 1Tim 2:9

Αἰθίοψ G0128 N-NMS (2×)

Ethiopian, a person from the region south of Egypt

This noun designates an Ethiopian—a person from the region south of Egypt known to Greeks as 'burnt-face' people due to their dark skin. In Acts 8, it appears twice describing the Ethiopian eunuch: a court official of the Ethiopian queen Candace who was reading Isaiah when Philip encountered him (8:27). The term carries both geographical and ethnic significance, marking this man as from distant Africa. His conversion represents the gospel's reach to 'the ends of the earth,' fulfilling Jesus' commission as the message moves beyond Mediterranean lands to Africa.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses show slight variation—Spanish 'Etíope' and 'de los Etíopes' (of the Ethiopians), French 'Éthiopien,' German preserving Greek forms. Both Acts 8:27 occurrences identify this court official by his ethnic-geographical origin. The multilingual evidence supports this as a straightforward designation: a person from Ethiopia/Cush, the region south of Egypt. Luke emphasizes this man's identity as a God-fearing Gentile from distant lands, whose conversion marks the gospel's geographical expansion toward the ends of the earth. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: Ethiopian, of-Ethiopians | es: Etíope, de-los-Etíopes | fr: Éthiopien | de: Αἰθίοψ, Αἰθιόπων Acts 8:27

αἷμα G0129 N-DNS (98×)

Blood — the vital fluid of life; used for sacrificial atonement, covenant ratification, guilt for bloodshed, and the blood of Christ

Haima carries extraordinary theological density across its 98 New Testament occurrences. Literally it denotes the red fluid coursing through the body, but its figurative uses dwarf the literal ones. 'Flesh and blood' is an idiom for mortal human nature (Matt 16:17; 1 Cor 15:50). Shed blood signifies violent death and the guilt it incurs (Matt 23:35; 27:25). Most centrally, blood is the medium of atonement: the blood of the new covenant poured out for many (Matt 26:28), the blood of Christ through which redemption comes (Eph 1:7; Heb 9:12-14). Revelation intensifies every register — blood of martyrs, blood of the Lamb, rivers turned to blood — making haima one of the New Testament's most theologically charged nouns.

blood (98×) The vital fluid of human or animal bodies, extending to the theologically rich domains of sacrificial atonement, covenant ratification, guilt for murder, and mortal human nature. The 'blood of Christ' — poured out for the new covenant (Matt 26:28), securing eternal redemption (Heb 9:12) — forms the theological center. 'Flesh and blood' denotes human frailty (Matt 16:17; Gal 1:16), while 'his blood be on us' (Matt 27:25) carries the weight of responsibility for violence. Spanish 'sangre,' French 'sang,' and German 'Blut' each cover the full literal-to-sacrificial spectrum with a single word. BLOOD AND BLOODSHED

en: blood, of-blood | es: de-sangre, la-sangre, sangre | fr: sang | de: Blut Matt 16:17; Matt 23:30; Matt 23:35

αἱμᾰτεκχυσία G0130 N-GFS (1×)

Bloodshed, the shedding or pouring out of blood; especially in sacrificial or violent contexts

This compound noun (haima + ekchysis) literally means "blood-shedding" or "pouring out of blood." The author of Hebrews uses it in Hebrews 9:22 in the theological statement "without shedding of blood there is no forgiveness." The term emphasizes the sacrificial principle running through the Old Testament cult: atonement requires the violent outpouring of life-blood. The word combines the physical reality of blood being poured out with the theological significance of life offered to God. This isn't merely blood being spilled accidentally but the deliberate shedding of sacrificial blood as the means of covenant making and sin cleansing.

(1×) Hebrews 9:22 states the core principle of Old Testament sacrifice: "without shedding of blood there is no forgiveness." This term denotes the violent pouring out of sacrificial blood, the life-force of the victim offered to God for atonement. The word emphasizes the costliness and bloody reality of forgiveness under the old covenant, which the author will contrast with Christ's once-for-all self-offering. BLOOD AND BLOODSHED

en: blood-shedding | es: derramamiento-de-sangre | fr: Blutvergiessen | de: Blutvergiessen Heb 9:22

αἱμο-ρροέω G0131 V-PPA-NFS (1×)

Suffering from bleeding, hemorrhaging; experiencing chronic or abnormal blood loss

This verb means to lose blood, hemorrhage, or suffer from chronic bleeding. Medical texts used it for various hemorrhagic conditions. Matthew employs it in Matthew 9:20 to describe the woman who had been "suffering from bleeding" for twelve years. The word captures both the medical condition (chronic hemorrhaging, possibly menstrual) and the resultant suffering—not only physical weakness but ritual uncleanness and social isolation under Levitical law. Her courage to touch Jesus despite her unclean state underscores the desperation of her condition and her faith that Christ could heal what physicians could not.

(1×) Matthew 9:20 introduces the woman with a twelve-year bleeding disorder using this medical term. The verb denotes chronic hemorrhaging, likely menstrual, which would render her perpetually unclean under Levitical law (Leviticus 15). The condition meant years of physical suffering, medical expenses, social ostracization, and inability to participate in community or temple life—making her healing by Jesus not just physical restoration but social and religious reintegration. DISEASE AND AFFLICTION

en: suffering-bleeding | es: con-flujo-de-sangre | fr: souffrant-d'hémorragie | de: Ägypten Matt 9:20

Αἰνέας G0132 N-VMS (2×)

Aeneas, a paralyzed man healed by Peter in Lydda

Aeneas was a paralyzed man whom Peter healed in Lydda, an incident that led many in the region to turn to the Lord. His name appears twice in Acts 9: Peter addresses him directly, 'Aeneas, Jesus Christ heals you' (9:33), then the narrative reports he had been bedridden for eight years (9:34). The name is Greek, possibly indicating Hellenistic Jewish or Gentile background. His healing demonstrates apostolic power continuing Jesus' ministry and serves as a sign that draws a whole region to faith. He represents the physically broken whom the gospel restores.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses preserve the Greek name with slight case variations—vocative Αἰνέα (direct address in 9:33) and accusative Αἰνέαν (object in 9:34), reflected in Spanish 'Ainéas/Ainéan' and other languages. Both occurrences focus on the dramatic healing: Peter's command (9:33) and the background context (9:34). The multilingual uniformity reflects his identity as a known individual whose healing triggered regional revival. The Greek name suggests Hellenistic context, fitting Lydda's mixed population. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Aineas | es: Ainéas | fr: Ainéas | de: Αἰνέα, Αἰνέαν Acts 9:33; Acts 9:34

αἴνεσις G0133 N-GFS (1×)

Praise, commendation; the act or expression of giving approval or honor

This noun means praise or commendation, the verbal expression of approval and honor given to another. The author of Hebrews uses it in Hebrews 13:15 exhorting believers to "offer up a sacrifice of praise to God." The term appears in both Septuagintal and classical contexts for vocal honor given to deity or humans. In Hebrews, the "sacrifice of praise" replaces animal offerings, consisting of "the fruit of lips that confess His name." The genitive "of praise" identifies the nature of the sacrifice: worship expressed through verbal thanksgiving and acknowledgment of God's character and works.

(1×) Hebrews 13:15 calls believers to continually offer God a "sacrifice of praise"—explained as "the fruit of lips confessing His name." This noun denotes the verbal praise and thanksgiving due to God, now described in sacrificial terms. Under the new covenant, animal sacrifices are replaced by worship offerings: grateful acknowledgment and commendation of God's person and deeds, a living sacrifice of words rather than blood. PRAISE AND RENOWN

en: of-praise | es: de-alabanza | fr: Lob | de: Lob Heb 13:15

αἰνέω G0134 V-PMA-2P (8×)

To praise, laud, or give vocal thanks to God in worship; to celebrate God's deeds with words of acclaim.

A verb of joyful, vocal worship directed exclusively toward God in the New Testament. The heavenly host 'praises God' at Christ's birth (Luke 2:13), and the shepherds go away 'praising God' for what they have seen (Luke 2:20). When Jesus approaches Jerusalem, the whole crowd of disciples begins 'praising God with a loud voice for all the mighty works they had seen' (Luke 19:37). In the early church, believers continue 'praising God' as a hallmark of their common life (Acts 2:47). Spanish 'alabar' and German 'loben' both convey this dedicated, God-directed vocal celebration.

praise (God) (8×) To praise God — to give vocal, joyful expression of worship and thanksgiving directed toward God for his mighty acts. The angelic host praises God at the nativity (Luke 2:13); the shepherds return praising God (Luke 2:20); the crowd of disciples praises God at Jesus' triumphal approach (Luke 19:37); the healed man praises God in the temple (Acts 3:8-9); and the early church praises God daily (Acts 2:47). The multilingual unanimity (Spanish 'alabar,' French 'louer,' German 'loben') confirms a single, focused sense: God-directed vocal worship, with no secular or ironic usage in the NT. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: Praise, praise, praising | es: Alabad, a-alabar, alabad | fr: louer | de: loben, lobt Luke 2:13; Luke 2:20; Luke 19:37; Acts 2:47; Acts 3:8

αἴνιγμα G0135 N-DNS (1×)

Riddle, enigma, dark saying; an obscure or puzzling statement requiring interpretation

This noun denotes a riddle, enigma, or obscure saying that requires interpretation. Classical usage applied it to deliberate riddles, ambiguous oracles, and cryptic statements. Paul uses it in 1 Corinthians 13:12 in the famous phrase "we see through a glass darkly" (KJV), literally "in a riddle" or "in an enigma." The term captures the indirect, unclear nature of our present knowledge of God—we perceive divine realities but only partially, as if viewing them through a puzzling, distorted medium. The contrast is between present enigmatic vision and future face-to-face clarity, between riddle and revelation.

(1×) In 1 Corinthians 13:12, Paul contrasts present and future knowledge: now "we see in a mirror in an enigma," but then "face to face." The noun emphasizes the puzzling, indirect nature of current perception—spiritual realities appear like riddles or obscure sayings requiring interpretation. The glass/mirror shows only dim reflections, and even those are enigmatic. Full understanding awaits the eschaton, when riddles dissolve into direct vision. RIDDLE ENIGMA en: a-riddle | es: enigma | fr: énigme | de: Raetsel 1Cor 13:12

αἶνος G0136 N-AMS (2×)

praise, commendation, approval expressed in words

This poetic and somewhat archaic noun denotes praise or commendation—approval expressed in words. In Matthew 21:16, Jesus quotes Psalm 8 to the indignant chief priests: 'Out of the mouth of infants and nursing babies you have prepared praise.' In Luke 18:43, after Jesus heals the blind beggar, all the people 'gave praise to God.' The word emphasizes verbal expression of approval and honor, particularly directed toward God. It's the articulated response of wonder and gratitude, recognition of greatness spoken aloud.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses uniformly render as praise—Spanish 'alabanza,' French 'louange,' German preserving the Greek accusative form 'αἶνον.' Matthew 21:16 quotes the Septuagint's use of this term for the praise children offer; Luke 18:43 describes the crowd's response to healing. Both contexts involve vocal praise directed to God. The multilingual evidence supports this as expressed commendation and honor, praise articulated in words. It's the speech act of recognition and gratitude, particularly in worship contexts. PRAISE AND RENOWN

en: praise | es: alabanza | fr: louange | de: αἶνον Matt 21:16; Luke 18:43

Αἰνών G0137 N-DFS (1×)

Aenon, a place name meaning 'springs' or 'fountains'; location where John baptized

This proper noun is the Greek transliteration of a Hebrew/Aramaic place name related to the word for "spring" or "fountain" (עֵינוֹן). John's Gospel uses it in John 3:23 identifying the location where John the Baptist was baptizing: "Aenon near Salim, because water was plentiful there." The name itself suggests abundant springs or water sources, explaining why John chose this site for his baptizing ministry. The exact location is disputed, with proposed sites both in Samaria and across the Jordan, but the defining characteristic was ample water for ritual immersion.

(1×) John 3:23 locates John the Baptist's ministry at "Aenon near Salim" because of abundant water. The place name derives from the Semitic word for "spring" or "fountain," indicating a location with multiple water sources ideal for baptism. The evangelist's note about plentiful water explains the site selection and may subtly contrast John's need for natural water sources with Jesus' later offer of living water that never runs dry. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ainōn | es: -Ainòn | fr: Aïnon | de: Ainon John 3:23

αἱρέω G0138 V-FIM-1S (3×)

to choose, select, prefer; to take for oneself by deliberate decision

A verb of deliberate selection among options. Paul contemplates choosing to remain alive for the Philippians' sake versus desiring departure (Phil 1:22). God chose believers for salvation 'from the beginning' (2 Thess 2:13). Moses chose to suffer with God's people rather than enjoy sin's fleeting pleasures (Heb 11:25). The term emphasizes volitional decision—weighing alternatives and selecting one.

(3×) Denotes purposeful selection after consideration. Paul's Philippian dilemma shows the verb's deliberative force: which to choose—fruitful labor or being with Christ? The choice involves weighing values. God's choice of believers (2 Thess 2:13) establishes election as deliberate divine decision. Moses's choice historicizes this for faith's heroes: consciously preferring affliction with God's people over Egyptian privilege. Multilingual glosses use choice vocabulary consistently (Spanish 'escoger,' French 'choisir,' German 'wählen'). CHOOSING AND SELECTING en: I-will-choose, chose, having-chosen | es: escogeré, escogiendo, escogió | fr: choisir | de: waehlen Phil 1:22; 2Thess 2:13; Heb 11:25

αἵρεσις G0139 N-AFS (9×)

A sect, religious party or school of thought; also a divisive faction, heresy – a chosen opinion that splits a community.

Derived from haireomai ('to choose'), this noun originally meant simply a choice or a school of thought, and in Acts it retains that relatively neutral sense when designating the Pharisees, Sadducees, and early Christians as recognized parties within Judaism (Acts 5:17; 15:5; 24:5, 14; 26:5; 28:22). In the epistles, however, it takes on a sharply negative connotation: 'destructive heresies' that a false teacher smuggles in (2 Pet 2:1) and 'factions' listed among the works of the flesh (Gal 5:20). Paul even notes that divisions must come so that the genuine may be recognized (1 Cor 11:19). French consistently renders it 'heresie' across both senses, while Spanish distinguishes 'secta' (neutral party) from 'herejias' (destructive error).

1. sect, religious party (6×) A sect or religious party – a recognized faction within a larger religious community, used without inherently pejorative force. Luke employs it in Acts for the Sadducean party (5:17), the Pharisaic sect (15:5; 26:5), and the Way as perceived by outsiders (24:5, 14; 28:22). Spanish 'secta' captures this sociological designation, while French 'heresie' already carries a more loaded connotation. The term implies a group defined by shared doctrinal choices, not necessarily condemned ones. DIVISION SPLIT

en: a-sect, sect | es: secta | fr: hérésie | de: αἱρέσεως, αἵρεσιν, αἵρεσις Acts 5:17; Acts 15:5; Acts 24:5; Acts 24:14; Acts 26:5

2. heresy, divisive faction (3×) A heresy or divisive faction that fractures community unity – carrying strong pejorative force. Peter warns of 'destructive heresies' introduced by false teachers (2 Pet 2:1), Paul lists 'factions' among works of the flesh (Gal 5:20), and acknowledges that such divisions serve to reveal the approved (1 Cor 11:19). Spanish 'herejias' and German 'Sekte' (used pejoratively) reflect this shift from neutral party-designation to theologically condemned schism. The semantic development from 'choice' to 'wrong choice' to 'damaging error' is complete in this epistolary usage. DIVISION SPLIT

en: factions, heresies | es: herejías | fr: hérésie, αἱρέσεις | de: Sekte 1Cor 11:19; Gal 5:20; 2Pet 2:1

αἱρετ-ίζω G0140 V-AIA-1S (1×)

I have chosen, selected, taken for myself; exercised preference or election

This verb means to choose, select, or take for oneself, often with emphasis on deliberate preference. Matthew uses it in Matthew 12:18 quoting Isaiah's Servant Song: "Behold my servant whom I have chosen." The verb expresses God's sovereign election of the Messiah for His redemptive mission. The term can denote both selection from alternatives and adoption as one's own. The Septuagintal usage often carries theological weight of divine choosing—not arbitrary selection but purposeful election based on God's will and pleasure. Here it expresses the Father's deliberate choice and approval of Jesus as His beloved Servant.

(1×) Matthew 12:18 applies Isaiah 42:1 to Jesus: "My servant whom I have chosen, my beloved in whom my soul delights." This aorist verb marks God's definitive election of Christ as the Messiah-Servant. The term emphasizes divine initiative and approval—the Father deliberately selected and appointed Jesus for His redemptive work. The choosing reflects both sovereign purpose and intimate pleasure ("my beloved"), underscoring Jesus' unique status. CHOOSING AND SELECTING en: I-have-chosen | es: escogí | fr: j'ai-choisi | de: ἡρέτισα Matt 12:18

αἱρετ-ικός G0141 Adj-AMS (1×)

Heretical, factious, divisive; causing or characterized by sectarian division

This adjective derives from the noun for "sect" or "party" (hairesis) and means factious, divisive, or given to creating heretical divisions. Paul uses it in Titus 3:10 instructing Titus to warn and then reject a "divisive person." Classical usage emphasized the ability to choose or belonging to a philosophical school, but early Christian usage developed the negative sense of one who creates factions or promotes false teaching. The concern is not for those who hold different opinions but for those who actively cause schisms and divisions in the church through their sectarian spirit and heterodox teaching.

(1×) Titus 3:10 warns against the "divisive person" (literally "heretical man") who must be warned twice then rejected. This adjective characterizes someone who promotes factious divisions or heterodox teaching that splits the church into competing sects. The term emphasizes the divisive behavior and sectarian spirit rather than mere doctrinal error—this person actively creates parties and schisms, undermining church unity and sound teaching. DIVISION SPLIT

en: divisive | es: a-hereje | fr: αἱρετικὸν | de: ketzerisch Titus 3:10

ἀείρω G0142 V-AMP-3S (101×)

To lift, take up, carry, or remove; spanning physical elevation, acquisition, sustained bearing, and figurative removal

One of the New Testament's most versatile verbs of motion, airo covers the full arc from picking something up off the ground to carrying it on one's shoulders to stripping it away entirely. Jesus commands the paralytic to 'take up' his mat (Matt 9:6), yet the same word describes God 'taking away' a fruitless branch (John 15:2). Context and voice determine whether the emphasis falls on upward movement, sustained transport, or deprivation. The nautical usage in Acts 27 and the psychological idiom in John 10:24 reveal how far a simple root of physical lifting can stretch.

1. take away, remove (36×) The most frequent sense: active removal or deprivation. Spanish quitar and German aufheben confirm the 'take away' force. Covers pruning branches (John 15:2), removing privileges (Matt 21:43), and the flood 'carrying off' people (Matt 24:39). The directional focus is away-from rather than upward. LIFTING AND REMOVING

en: Take, Take-away, he-takes-away | es: Quitad, Quitaron, le-será-quitado | fr: lever | de: aufheben, hebt-auf Matt 9:16; Matt 13:12; Matt 21:43; Matt 24:39; Matt 25:28

2. take up, pick up, gather (32×) Physical acquisition: picking up an object from where it rests. Arabic ´ and Swahili -inua both point to 'lift from the ground.' Prominent in the feeding miracles where disciples 'took up' leftover fragments (Matt 14:20, 15:37), and in Jesus' command to take up one's bed (Matt 9:6). LIFTING AND REMOVING en: Take-up, did-you-take-up, having-taken-up | es: Toma, a-tomar, a-tomar-las | fr: lever | de: aufheben, hebt-auf Matt 9:6; Matt 11:29; Matt 14:12; Matt 14:20; Matt 15:37

3. lift up, raise (14×) Upward-directed elevation: lifting eyes (John 11:41), raising the voice (Luke 17:13), or heaving stones (John 8:59). Spanish alzaron and Korean 들어올리다 capture the vertical emphasis. Distinguished from sense 2 by focus on the direction of movement rather than gaining possession. LIFTING AND REMOVING en: Be-lifted-up, lifted, lifted-up | es: Sé-quitado, alzaron, fue-levantado | fr: lever | de: aufheben, hebt-auf Matt 4:6; Matt 17:27; Matt 21:21; Mark 11:23; Mark 16:18

4. carry, bear (8×) Sustained carrying of a burden. Arabic ´ (bear a load) and Swahili beba (carry) confirm this as transport, not mere pickup. Central to the discipleship call: 'let him take up his cross' (Matt 16:24, Mark 8:34). Also describes Simon of Cyrene bearing Christ's cross (Matt 27:32). LIFTING AND REMOVING en: being-carried, he-might-carry, let-him-take-up | es: llevara, lleve, siendo-cargado | fr: lever | de: aufheben, hebt-auf Matt 16:24; Matt 27:32; Mark 2:3; Mark 6:8; Mark 8:34

5. be removed (passive) (5×) Passive removal or being taken away. Covers the stone being taken from the tomb (John 20:1), Paul's appeal to put away bitterness (Eph 4:31), and the cryptic citation of Isaiah in Acts 8:33. Spanish fue-quitado and German aufgehoben reflect the passive deprivation clearly. LIFTING AND REMOVING en: having-been-taken, let-be-removed, might-be-removed | es: fue-quitado, fueran-quitados, quitada | fr: lever | de: aufheben, hebt-auf John 19:31; John 20:1; Acts 8:33; 1Cor 5:2; Eph 4:31

6. (3×) A crowd-cry idiom demanding someone's execution or expulsion: 'Away with him!' (Luke 23:18, Acts 21:36, 22:22). Spanish Quita/Quitalo captures the imperative urgency. Functionally a hostile demand for removal of a person, distinct from quiet physical removal. LIFTING AND REMOVING en: Away-with | es: Quita, Quítalo | fr: lever | de: hebt-auf Luke 23:18; Acts 21:36; Acts 22:22

7. (2×) Nautical technical usage: weighing anchor or hoisting sails. Both occurrences appear in Acts 27 during the storm voyage. English 'having weighed anchor' and Spanish habiendo-levado-anclas confirm the specialized maritime sense of lifting the anchor from the seabed to set sail. LIFTING AND REMOVING en: having-hoisted-up, having-weighed-anchor | es: habiendo-levado-anclas, habiendo-subido | fr: lever | de: hebt-auf Acts 27:13; Acts 27:17

8. (1×) A psychological idiom: 'to hold the soul in suspense,' meaning to keep someone in anxious uncertainty. Occurs only in John 10:24 where the crowd presses Jesus for a direct messianic claim. Spanish tienes-en-suspenso captures the figurative lifting and unsettling of the mind. LIFTING AND REMOVING en: do-you-keep-in-suspense | es: tienes-en-suspenso | fr: lever | de: aufheben John 10:24

αἰσθ-άνομαι G0143 V-ASM-3P (1×)

They might perceive, become aware, understand; come to apprehension through senses or mind

This verb means to perceive, apprehend, or become aware through either physical senses or mental understanding. Classical usage applied it to sensory perception (hearing, smell, sight) and to mental grasp of ideas. Luke uses it in Luke 9:45 explaining why the disciples didn't understand Jesus' passion prediction: "it was concealed from them so that they might not perceive it." The verb suggests both the receiving of sensory information and the mental processing of its meaning. The divine passive indicates God's sovereign concealment of the prophecy's meaning until the appointed time for full comprehension.

(1×) Luke 9:45 notes that Jesus' passion saying "was concealed from them lest they perceive it." This subjunctive verb denotes the disciples' potential perception or understanding—both hearing the words and grasping their meaning. The concealment was not mere misunderstanding but divine veiling (divine passive), preventing premature comprehension. Later, after resurrection, this same truth would become clear; now, perception is sovereignly restrained. SEEING AND PERCEIVING en: they-might-perceive | es: la-percibieran | fr: percevoir | de: αἴσθωνται Luke 9:45

αἴσθ-ησις G0144 N-DFS (1×)

Perception, discernment, moral insight; the faculty of distinguishing good and evil

This noun denotes perception, discernment, or the faculty of moral and spiritual judgment. Classical usage emphasized sense-perception and the organs of sense, but it extends to mental and moral discernment. Paul uses it in Philippians 1:9 praying that the Philippians' love would "abound more and more in knowledge and all discernment." The term suggests not merely intellectual knowledge but perceptive insight that can make fine moral distinctions. It's the sensitivity to perceive what is excellent, the cultivated ability to discern between competing goods and to recognize subtle differences in ethical and spiritual matters.

(1×) Philippians 1:9 pairs this noun with "knowledge" (epignosis) in Paul's prayer for the church: love abounding in both knowledge and discernment. The term denotes moral and spiritual perception—the ability to sense and judge what truly matters. Classical usage emphasized sensory perception and the organs of sense, but Paul applies it to the cultivated sensitivity that can distinguish what is excellent from what is merely good, enabling believers to approve the best choices. SEEING AND PERCEIVING en: discernment | es: percepción | fr: αἰσθήσει | de: Wahrnehmung Phil 1:9

αἰσθ-ητήριον G0145 N-ANP (1×)

Senses, faculties of perception; organs or capacities for sensory and moral discernment

This noun (neuter plural) denotes the organs or faculties of sense-perception, extended metaphorically to moral and spiritual discernment. Classical usage referred to the five senses and their organs. The author of Hebrews uses it in Hebrews 5:14 describing mature believers who "have their senses trained to discern good and evil." The term emphasizes the faculties of perception—not just intellectual knowledge but the cultivated sensitivities that can detect moral and spiritual realities. Like physical senses that develop through use, these spiritual faculties grow through practice and habit, enabling believers to discern between truth and error, good and evil.

(1×) Hebrews 5:14 contrasts mature believers with spiritual infants: the mature "have their senses trained by practice to discern good and evil." This plural noun denotes the faculties of perception—physical senses extended to spiritual and moral discernment. Through habitual exercise ("practice"), these perceptive capacities develop the ability to distinguish truth from error and righteousness from sin, much as physical senses sharpen through use. SEEING AND PERCEIVING en: senses | es: sentidos | fr: Sinne | de: Sinne Heb 5:14

αἰσχρο-κερδής G0146 Adj-AMP (2×)

greedily seeking dishonest gain, sordidly pursuing profit

This compound adjective describes those who are greedily seeking dishonest gain—pursuing profit through shameful or sordid means. It appears in Paul's qualifications for church leaders: deacons must not be 'greedy for dishonest gain' (1 Timothy 3:8), and elders must not be such either (Titus 1:7). The word combines 'shameful' and 'gain,' emphasizing not merely desire for money but willingness to pursue it through improper means. It's the character of one who will compromise integrity for profit, who values money above honor or righteousness.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize shameful gain-seeking—Spanish 'codicioso de ganancia deshonesta' (greedy for dishonest gain) and 'de ganancias deshonestas,' French preserving Greek forms, German 'gewinnsuechtig' (profit-addicted). Both pastoral epistles use this in leadership qualifications, disqualifying those marked by sordid greed. The multilingual evidence supports this as pursuit of gain through shameful means, greedy desire that compromises integrity. It's not merely loving money but being willing to obtain it dishonestly—a character flaw that disqualifies from spiritual leadership. GAIN AND GREED

en: greedy-for-gain | es: codicioso-de-ganancia-deshonesta, de-ganancias-deshonestas | fr: αἰσχροκερδεῖς, αἰσχροκερδῆ | de: gewinnsuechtig 1Tim 3:8; Titus 1:7

αἰσχρο-κερδής G0147 Adv (1×)

For shameful gain, out of greed for dishonest profit; motivated by sordid financial gain

This adverb combines "shameful" (aischros) and "gain" (kerdos), meaning "for shameful gain" or "from sordid greed." Peter uses it in 1 Peter 5:2 instructing elders to shepherd the flock "not for shameful gain but eagerly." The term condemns ministry motivated by greed for dishonest profit—elders who serve primarily to enrich themselves rather than to care for souls. Classical usage applied it to those sordidly greedy for gain, and the New Testament employs it to contrast pure-hearted service with mercenary ministry. The concern is not payment for legitimate work but the base motivation of using ministry as a means of financial exploitation.

(1×) In 1 Peter 5:2, this adverb describes the wrong motivation for elder ministry: serving "not for shameful gain but eagerly." The term condemns shepherding driven by greed for dishonest profit—using church leadership for financial exploitation. Peter contrasts this sordid mercenary spirit with willing, eager service motivated by love for God and the flock. The issue is not compensation but corruption: ministry perverted into a money-making scheme. MANNER ADVERBS

en: for-shameful-gain | es: por-ganancia-deshonesta | fr: αἰσχροκερδῶς | de: aus-Gewinnsucht 1Pet 5:2

αἰσχρο-λογία G0148 N-AFS (1×)

Filthy speech, obscene talk, abusive language; verbal expressions that are shameful or degrading

This compound noun (aischros + logos) means filthy or obscene speech—language that is shameful, degrading, or abusive. Classical usage included both obscenity and verbal abuse. Paul uses it in Colossians 3:8 commanding believers to put away "filthy language from your mouth." The term encompasses crude sexual talk, vulgar humor, and verbally degrading others. It's part of Paul's vice list of things to remove from the new life in Christ—anger, wrath, malice, slander, and obscene talk. The concern is for speech that degrades human dignity, corrupts moral sensibilities, or dishonors God.

(1×) Colossians 3:8 includes this term in the list of vices to "put away": anger, wrath, malice, slander, and "filthy language from your mouth." The compound noun denotes obscene, degrading, or abusive speech—language that shames rather than edifies. Classical usage covered both sexual obscenity and verbal abuse, both of which corrupt community and contradict the new identity in Christ. Speech must match the transformed life. SPEAKING AND TALKING en: filthy-language | es: palabras-deshonestas | fr: αἰσχρολογίαν | de: schmutzige-Rede Col 3:8

αἰσχρός G0149

shameful, disgraceful, base; ugly or deformed in appearance; morally dishonorable or bringing shame

The word operates on two levels: physical and moral. In Homer, it could describe Thersites' ugly appearance or a man's deformed lameness. But more commonly it denotes what is shameful or base in conduct—actions that bring dishonor rather than beauty. Ancient Greeks contrasted it directly with kalos (beautiful, noble), making it the opposite of what is admirable. The moral sense dominates: shameful speech, base actions, dishonorable behavior. When something is called shameful, it's not merely unpleasant but a violation of what is right and honorable. The term frequently appears in ethical arguments about what one should or shouldn't do.

αἰσχρός G0150 Adj-NNS (4×)

shameful, disgraceful, base; morally indecent or socially improper, causing dishonor

In classical Greek αἰσχρός ranges from physical ugliness to moral baseness, always opposed to καλός ('noble, beautiful'). The NT restricts it to the moral-social sphere: Paul declares it shameful for a woman to have her hair shorn (1 Cor 11:6), shameful for women to speak in assembly (1 Cor 14:35), and says deeds of darkness are too shameful even to mention (Eph 5:12). In Titus 1:11 false teachers pursue 'shameful gain.' The Spanish 'vergonzoso' and German 'schändlich' capture the strong moral censure, while French 'honteux' highlights the shame dimension.

(4×) Shameful, disgraceful, base — describing conduct, speech, or motives that violate propriety and bring dishonor. In 1 Corinthians 11:6 Paul uses it of the social disgrace attached to a woman's shorn head; in 14:35 of women speaking in the assembly; in Ephesians 5:12 of pagan vices too shameful to name openly. Titus 1:11 applies it to the 'shameful gain' motivating false teachers. The cross-lingual evidence (spa 'vergonzoso,' fra 'honteux,' deu 'schändlich') consistently renders the term with strong moral opprobrium, confirming that in the NT αἰσχρός concerns ethical and social disgrace rather than physical appearance. SHAME AND REVERENCE

en: of-shameful, shameful | es: de-deshonesta, vergonzoso | fr: honteux, αἰσχροῦ, αἰσχρόν | de: schaendlich 1Cor 11:6; 1Cor 14:35; Eph 5:12; Titus 1:11

αἰσχρότης G0151 N-NFS (1×)

Obscenity, shameful behavior, filthy conduct; that which is disgraceful or morally degrading

This noun denotes obscenity, shameful conduct, or moral degradation—behavior that is disgraceful and violates proper standards. Classical usage included ugliness, deformity, and filthy conduct (euphemistically even sexual perversion). Paul uses it in Ephesians 5:4 listing things "not fitting" for believers: "obscenity, foolish talk, and crude joking." The term emphasizes the shameful, degrading nature of such behavior—conduct that contradicts the holiness and dignity of those called to be saints. It's not merely bad taste but moral pollution, behavior that debases human dignity and contradicts the purity expected of God's people.

(1×) Ephesians 5:4 condemns "obscenity, foolish talk, and crude joking" as "not fitting" for saints. This noun denotes shameful, degrading behavior or speech—moral filth that violates the holiness of believers. Classical usage ranged from ugliness to sexually degrading conduct. Paul's concern is for behavior that debases human dignity and contradicts the purity and thanksgiving that should characterize Christian life. Such obscenity has no place among the redeemed. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: obscenity | es: obscenidad | fr: αἰσχρότης | de: Schaendlichkeit Eph 5:4

αἰσχύν-η G0152 N-DFS (6×)

Shame, disgrace, dishonor; both the objective state of humiliation and the subjective feeling of embarrassment.

Aischyne encompasses both the painful emotion of being shamed and the objective condition of disgrace. Jesus endured the cross 'despising its shame' (Heb 12:2), while Paul renounced 'the hidden things of shame' in his ministry (2 Cor 4:2). Philippians 3:19 warns of those whose 'glory is in their shame,' and Jude 1:13 likens false teachers to wild waves 'casting up the foam of their own shame.' The word's range spans inner mortification (Luke 14:9, taking the lowest place in humiliation) to public dishonor.

shame, disgrace (6×) Shame, disgrace, or dishonor, covering both the subjective feeling of humiliation and the objective state of being disgraced. In Luke 14:9 it describes the embarrassment of being publicly demoted at a banquet. Paul uses it for the disgraceful hidden practices he has renounced (2 Cor 4:2) and for those whose conduct brings dishonor (Phil 3:19). Hebrews 12:2 speaks of the shame of crucifixion that Jesus scorned, while Jude 1:13 employs a vivid maritime metaphor of shame cast up like sea-foam. Spanish 'vergüenza' and German 'Schande' together mirror the word's dual range of inner embarrassment and outward disgrace. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: of-shame, shame, shames | es: de-vergüenza, vergüenza, vergüenzas | fr: honte, hontes; | de: Schande, Schanden, αἰσχύνης Luke 14:9; 2Cor 4:2; Phil 3:19; Heb 12:2; Jude 1:13

αἰσχύνω G0153 V-ASP-1P (5×)

To be ashamed, put to shame; to feel disgrace or be humiliated, often in relation to faith or conduct.

Carries the force of being ashamed or put to shame, whether by one's own failures or by the judgment of others. The dishonest steward admits he would be 'ashamed to beg' (Luke 16:3). Paul insists he will not be put to shame in his bold proclamation (2 Cor 10:8; Phil 1:20). Peter urges believers who suffer as Christians not to be ashamed (1 Pet 4:16), and John exhorts confidence so that 'we may not be ashamed before him at his coming' (1 John 2:28). Spanish 'avergonzarse' and French 'avoir honte' both capture the deeply personal, moral dimension of this shame.

(5×) To feel shame, be disgraced, or be put to shame — encompassing both the internal emotion and the public experience of humiliation. In its middle/passive forms (αἰσχύνομαι), the word denotes the believer's relationship to honor and disgrace before God and others. Luke 16:3 uses it for social embarrassment, while the epistles focus on eschatological confidence: not being ashamed at Christ's appearing (1 John 2:28) or in bold proclamation (Phil 1:20). Spanish 'avergonzarse' and French 'avoir honte' emphasize the reflexive, deeply felt nature of the shame, distinguishing it from mere external rebuke. SHAME AND REVERENCE

en: I-am-ashamed, I-will-be-ashamed, I-will-be-put-to-shame | es: me-avergüenzo, se-avergüence, seamos-avergonzados | fr: avoir-honte, j'ai-honte | de: sich-schaemen, αἰσχύνομαι Luke 16:3; 2Cor 10:8; Phil 1:20; 1Pet 4:16; 1John 2:28

αἰτ-έω G0154 V-FIA-3S (70×)

To ask for, request (in prayer or of people); in stronger register: to demand, require with authority or insistence.

The Greek verb aiteo covers the full spectrum of asking, from humble petition to forceful demand. In its dominant sense (61 of 70 NT occurrences), it is the standard word for requesting — 'ask, and it shall be given to you' (Matt 7:7), praying to the Father for daily needs (Matt 6:8), or approaching someone for help (Matt 5:42). Spanish pedir, French demander, and German bitten all cluster around the polite-request register. But a distinct minority of uses (9 occurrences) carry unmistakable force: the crowd demanding Barabbas (Matt 27:20), the people of Tyre and Sidon 'asking for' peace because they depended on Herod's country for food (Acts 12:20), and the mother of James and John pressing a bold claim before Jesus (Matt 20:20). The shift from petition to demand is subtle but real, and translators sometimes mark it with stronger vocabulary.

1. ask for, request (61×) To ask for, request, or petition — the standard sense of making a request either of God in prayer or of a human being, carrying a tone of genuine need, hope, or humble petition. This core sense (61 occurrences) appears in Jesus' great invitation 'ask and it will be given to you' (Matt 7:7-8), the reassurance that 'your Father knows what you need before you ask him' (Matt 6:8), and the command to generosity: 'give to the one who asks you' (Matt 5:42). Spanish pedir/pedimos, French demander, and German bitten converge on the polite, expectant register. James 1:5-6 crystallizes the sense: 'if any of you lacks wisdom, let him ask (aiteo) God,' with faith and not doubting. ASKING AND PRAYING

en: ask, asked, asked-for | es: a-pedir, pedimos, pedir | fr: demander | de: bitten, bittet Matt 5:42; Matt 6:8; Matt 7:7; Matt 7:8; Matt 7:9

2. demand, require (9×) To demand, require, or press a claim with urgency, authority, or insistence — a stronger register of asking where the petitioner acts from a position of pressure or entitlement rather than humble submission. With 9 occurrences, this sense surfaces when the chief priests persuade the crowd to 'demand' (aiteo) Barabbas (Matt 27:20), when the voices of the crowd 'demanding' Jesus' crucifixion prevail (Luke 23:23, 25), when the mother of Zebedee's sons approaches Jesus 'asking' — yet with a boldness that amounts to a claim (Matt 20:20), and when the Tyrians and Sidonians 'ask for' peace from Herod Agrippa because their country depended on his for food (Acts 12:20). Spanish pidieran/pedian and German bittet do not always mark the shift, but the narrative contexts make the demanding force unmistakable. ASKING AND PRAYING

en: asking, demanding, they-asked | es: pedían, pidiendo, pidieran | fr: demander | de: bittet Matt 20:20; Matt 27:20; Luke 23:23; Luke 23:25; Acts 12:20

αἴτ-ημα G0155 N-ANP (3×)

request, petition; a specific thing asked for

A noun denoting concrete requests made to authorities or in prayer. Pilate granted the crowd's 'demand' to release Barabbas (Luke 23:24). Paul urges prayer with thanksgiving, making 'requests' known to God (Phil 4:6). John assures believers they have the 'requests' they asked of God (1 John 5:15). Classical usage includes logical and mathematical postulates—things assumed or requested.

(3×) Refers to specific petitions or demands—things concretely asked for rather than abstract asking. Luke's usage shows its legal sense: Pilate acceding to a specific demand from the crowd. Paul's prayer instruction makes it a technical term for items presented to God in supplication. John's confidence statement assures possession of the very things requested—answered prayer conceived as receiving specific αἰτήματα. Multilingual glosses use request/petition vocabulary (Spanish 'peticiones,' French 'demande,' German 'Bitte'). PETITIONS AND REQUESTS

en: demand, requests | es: peticiones, petición | fr: demande | de: Bitte, αἴτημα Luke 23:24; Phil 4:6; 1John 5:15

αἰτί-α G0156 N-NFS (20×)

Cause, reason, or basis; in legal contexts, a formal charge, accusation, or ground of fault.

In general usage, aitia denotes a cause or reason behind something, as when the disciples muse that if the 'cause' for divorce is so strict, it is better not to marry (Matt 19:10), or when Jesus asks the hemorrhaging woman to declare the 'reason' she touched him (Luke 8:47). In the trial narratives, however, the word takes on sharp juridical force: Pilate repeatedly declares he finds no aitia, no criminal fault, in Jesus (John 18:38; 19:4, 6). The inscription on the cross stating Jesus' aitia (Matt 27:37; Mark 15:26) is literally the written charge. Spanish captures the split well, using 'razon/causa' for the neutral sense but 'acusacion/cargos' for the legal one.

1. cause, reason, ground (14×) The cause, reason, or ground for something, used in neutral or explanatory contexts without implying legal guilt. Jesus asks for what aitia a man may divorce his wife (Matt 19:3); the woman declares before everyone the aitia for which she touched Jesus (Luke 8:47). Paul's accusers in Acts can find no aitia of death in him (Acts 13:28). Spanish 'razon' and 'causa,' French 'cause,' and German 'Ursache' all confirm the broad, non-juridical sense. CAUSE REASON PRETEXT

en: cause, charge, reason | es: causa, razón | fr: cause | de: Ursache Matt 19:3; Matt 19:10; Luke 8:47; Acts 10:21; Acts 13:28

2. charge, accusation, fault (6×) A formal charge, accusation, or criminal fault in legal proceedings. Concentrated in the Passion narratives, where Pilate finds no aitia in Jesus (John 18:38; 19:4, 6) and the titulus on the cross states his aitia (Matt 27:37; Mark 15:26). Spanish shifts to 'acusacion' and 'cargos,' revealing the distinctly courtroom register. The word here functions as a technical legal term for the grounds on which a defendant is tried. LEGAL ACCUSATION CHARGE

en: charge, charges, fault | es: acusación, cargos, causa | fr: cause | de: Ursache Matt 27:37; Mark 15:26; John 18:38; John 19:4; John 19:6

αἰτί-ᾱμα G0157 N-ANP (1×)

Charges, accusations, allegations; legal claims or complaints brought against someone

This noun denotes charges, accusations, or legal allegations—formal claims of wrongdoing brought in a judicial context. Luke uses it in Acts 25:7 describing the scene when Paul appeared before Festus: the Jews "brought many serious charges which they could not prove." The term emphasizes the formal, legal nature of the accusations—not casual complaints but judicial allegations requiring evidence and proof. The plural suggests multiple charges on various counts, painting a picture of intense legal assault. Luke's note that they couldn't substantiate their claims underscores the malicious and unfounded nature of their prosecution.

(1×) Acts 25:7 uses this term for the "many serious charges" the Jews brought against Paul before Festus—formal legal accusations they could not prove. The noun denotes judicial allegations or complaints, emphasizing the legal context of the confrontation. The plurality and severity of the charges show the intensity of opposition, while their inability to substantiate claims reveals the baseless nature of their prosecution. Paul faces coordinated legal warfare, not mere criticism. LEGAL ACCUSATION CHARGE

en: charges | es: acusaciones | fr: accusation | de: αἰτιώματα Acts 25:7

αἴτι-ος G0158

culpable, responsible, guilty; the cause or reason for something; one who is blameworthy or has committed an offense

This word identifies who or what bears responsibility, often with an edge of blame. In legal contexts, it marks the accused or the culprit—those guilty of murder or those who have sinned against another. But it also functions more neutrally as a causal term: what is responsible for making something happen. The same word can describe the cause of dry air (natural causation) or the cause of someone's death (moral culpability). Context determines whether the responsibility is neutral (simply being the reason for something) or loaded (being guilty and blameworthy). The word moves fluidly between explaining causes and assigning guilt.

αἴτι-ος G0159 Adj-GNS (5×)

Cause, reason; responsible party or source; used of legal guilt and of Christ as author of salvation.

Denotes a cause, reason, or responsible agent — spanning legal, moral, and theological registers. In Luke's passion narrative, Pilate three times declares he finds no 'cause' (aition) of guilt in Jesus (Luke 23:4, 14, 22), making this a key term in the trial's legal drama. The Ephesian town clerk warns that the riotous assembly has no legitimate 'cause' to justify itself (Acts 19:40). Most strikingly, Hebrews 5:9 applies the term to Christ as the 'author/source' of eternal salvation — a dramatic semantic leap from courtroom guilt to redemptive agency.

(5×) The cause, reason, or responsible agent behind something — functioning in both legal and theological contexts. In Pilate's repeated declarations of Jesus' innocence (Luke 23:4, 14, 22), the neuter αἴτιον means 'ground for accusation' or 'criminal charge.' In Acts 19:40, it denotes a legitimate reason or justification. But Hebrews 5:9 deploys the masculine αἴτιος in its most elevated sense: Christ became the 'source' or 'author' of eternal salvation. Spanish distinguishes 'causa' (reason) from 'culpable' (guilty), capturing the word's range from neutral causation to moral responsibility. GUILT OFFERINGS

en: blameworthy, cause, source | es: causa, culpa, culpable | fr: auteur, responsable | de: Urheber, αἰτίου, αἴτιον Luke 23:4; Luke 23:14; Luke 23:22; Acts 19:40; Heb 5:9

αἰφνίδιος G0160 Adj-NMS (2×)

sudden, unforeseen, happening without warning or expectation

This adjective describes events that occur suddenly and unexpectedly, without advance notice. In Luke 21:34, Jesus warns that the day of judgment will come αἰφνίδιος upon the unprepared, like a trap springing shut. Paul uses it similarly in 1 Thessalonians 5:3 to describe sudden destruction coming upon those who say "peace and safety." The word carries the force of something striking without warning, emphasizing the need for constant readiness.

(2×) The multilingual glosses consistently emphasize the temporal dimension—suddenness and lack of warning. Spanish 'de repente' (suddenly) and 'repentina' (sudden), French 'soudain,' and German 'plötzlich' all converge on this core meaning. Both NT occurrences appear in eschatological warnings about the day of the Lord, where the unexpectedness serves as motivation for vigilance. SUDDEN UNEXPECTED

en: sudden, suddenly | es: de-repente, repentina | fr: soudain | de: ploetzlich, αἰφνίδιος Luke 21:34; 1Thess 5:3

αἰχμᾰλ-ωσία G0161 N-AFS (3×) captivity; the state or experience of being taken prisoner, or collective captives

A noun expressing both the condition of captivity and the body of captives. Ephesians 4:8 quotes Psalm 68: Christ 'led captivity captive'—either taking captives himself or liberating the captive host. Revelation 13:10 warns that those destined for captivity will go into captivity—divine justice ensuring oppressors experience what they inflicted. The term evokes Israel's historical exiles and military defeats.

(3×) Denotes the state or collective reality of being taken prisoner. Ephesians' usage is metaphorically complex—Christ's triumph over hostile powers described as capturing captivity itself, possibly liberating those held captive. Revelation's double occurrence in one verse establishes lex talionis: captors becoming captives. The multilingual consensus (Spanish 'cautividad,' French 'captivité,' German 'Gefangenschaft') shows semantic stability. Both passages evoke military-theological imagery of conquest and reversal. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: captivity | es: cautividad | fr: captivité | de: Gefangenschaft Eph 4:8; Rev 13:10

αἰχμᾰλ-ωτεύω G0162 V-AIA-3S (1×)

He led captive, took prisoners, captured; triumphed over and enslaved

This verb means to take captive, capture prisoners, or lead away as spoils of war. Paul uses it in Ephesians 4:8 quoting Psalm 68:18: "When he ascended on high, he led captivity captive." The imagery draws from ancient victory processions where conquering generals paraded their captives through the streets. Applied to Christ's ascension, the verb depicts Jesus' triumph over spiritual enemies—He conquered death, hell, sin, and Satan, leading them in His triumphal procession. The paradoxical phrase "led captivity captive" suggests taking captive the very forces that held humanity captive.

(1×) Ephesians 4:8 applies this verb to Christ's ascension, quoting Psalm 68: "He led captivity captive and gave gifts to men." The aorist verb depicts Jesus' victorious conquest—ascending after defeating death, sin, and Satan, and leading these defeated powers as captives in His triumphal procession. The imagery evokes Roman victory parades with captive enemies displayed. Christ conquered the very forces that held humanity captive, reversing the captivity. TAKE CAPTIVE

en: he-led-captive | es: cautivó | fr: ᾐχμαλώτευσεν | de: gefangen-fuehren Eph 4:8

αἰχμᾰλ-ωτίζω G0163 V-FIP-3P (4×)

take captive, lead into captivity; seize as a prisoner of war, or figuratively overpower and control

Derived from αἰχμάλωτος ('prisoner of war'), this verb carries both military and metaphorical force in the NT. Jesus prophesies that Jerusalem's inhabitants will be 'led captive among all nations' (Luke 21:24) — a literal military sense. Paul uses it figuratively: indwelling sin 'takes him captive' (Rom 7:23), and apostolic ministry 'takes every thought captive' to obey Christ (2 Cor 10:5). In 2 Timothy 3:6 deceivers 'capture' vulnerable people. Spanish 'cautivan/cautivo' and French 'captiver/emmener captif' mirror this literal-to-figurative range.

(4×) Take captive, lead into captivity — to seize someone as a prisoner, whether in literal warfare or in a figurative struggle for control. Luke 21:24 uses it of the military deportation of Jerusalem's population. In Romans 7:23 Paul describes sin's law as a force that makes him a prisoner, taking him captive against his will. Second Corinthians 10:5 reverses the image strikingly: believers are to take every rebellious thought captive in obedience to Christ. In 2 Timothy 3:6 it describes false teachers who 'capture' gullible individuals and lead them astray. The multilingual evidence (spa 'cautivan,' fra 'captiver,' deu 'gefangen nehmen') spans both the military and psychological registers. TAKE CAPTIVE

en: capturing, making-captive, taking-captive | es: llevando-cautivo, que-cautivan, que-me-hace-cautivo | fr: captiver, emmener-captif | de: gefangen-nehmen, αἰχμαλωτισθήσονται Luke 21:24; Rom 7:23; 2Cor 10:5; 2Tim 3:6

αἰχμᾰλ-ωτος G0164 N-DMP (1×)

Captives, prisoners of war; those captured and enslaved by conquering forces

This noun denotes captives or prisoners of war—those seized by military force and often enslaved. Classical usage applied it to war prisoners, frequently women, and the spoils of conquest. Luke uses it in Luke 4:18 where Jesus quotes Isaiah 61:1: proclaiming "release to the captives." The term evokes Old Testament imagery of Israelites in Babylonian exile and the prophetic hope of liberation. Jesus applies this to His own mission of spiritual liberation—releasing those held captive by sin, Satan, and spiritual bondage. The physical captivity becomes metaphor for humanity's enslavement, and Christ's gospel announces freedom.

(1×) Luke 4:18 records Jesus' programmatic reading of Isaiah 61:1 in Nazareth: proclaiming good news to the poor and "release to the captives." This dative plural denotes prisoners of war or enslaved captives—those taken by force and held in bondage. Jesus appropriates Isaiah's liberation language, originally about exiles returning from Babylon, to His own mission of spiritual deliverance: freeing those captive to sin, oppression, and demonic powers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-captives | es: a-cautivos | fr: captif | de: αἰχμαλώτοις Luke 4:18

αἰών G0165 N-GMS (127×)

An age, era, or epoch; eternity or perpetuity; in doxologies, 'forever and ever'; rarely, the material world.

Aion is one of the New Testament's most theologically layered nouns, carrying the full weight of biblical eschatology on a single word. At its core it means a span of time — an age or era — but the biblical writers stretch it in both directions: backward into pre-temporal eternity and forward into the unending ages to come. The famous phrase eis tous aionas ton aionon ('unto the ages of the ages') piles era upon era to express what no finite word can contain, and doxologies from Romans to Revelation rely on this intensified plural to ascribe everlasting glory to God. Yet the same word can mean simply 'this present age' (ho aion houtos), the current world-order marked by sin and decay, set against 'the age to come' (ho aion mellon). Arabic preserves a revealing distinction lost in most European translations: al-abad for future-facing eternity, al-azal for eternity past, and ad-dahr for a bounded age — three words for what Greek bundles into one.

1. eternity, forever (plural doxological) (61×) Plural doxological usage: aiones in liturgical and hymnic formulae expressing unbounded, piled-up eternity — 'forever and ever' (eis tous aionas ton aionon). This is the most frequent sense at 61 occurrences, dominating the epistolary benedictions (Gal 1:5; Phil 4:20; 1 Tim 1:17) and the heavenly worship scenes of Revelation (Rev 1:6; 4:9-10; 5:13). The plural-of-plurals construction is an intensifying device unparalleled in classical Greek; Arabic ad-duhur (the ages) and Korean 세세 (generation upon generation) both attempt the stacking effect. Swahili milele na milele ('forever and forever') mirrors the doubling pattern exactly. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: ages | es: eras, siglos | fr: éternité | de: Ewigkeit Matt 6:13; Luke 1:33; 2Cor 11:31; Gal 1:5

2. eternity, forever (singular) (32×) Singular perpetuity: aion in the phrase eis ton aiona ('unto the age,' i.e., forever) expressing unending duration without the stacked-plural intensification. Found 32 times, this is the form used in Jesus' pronouncements of permanent states — 'you shall never eat fruit again' (Matt 21:19), 'shall never have forgiveness' (Mark 3:29), 'shall never die' (John 11:26). Spanish eternidad/siempre, German Ewigkeit, and Korean 영원히 all render this as simple perpetuity. The boundary with sense 1 is formal (singular vs. plural formula) rather than deeply semantic, but the singular tends to appear in speech and narrative while the plural dominates worship. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: age | es: era, eternidad, siempre | fr: éternité | de: Ewigkeit Matt 21:19; Mark 3:29; Mark 11:14; Luke 1:55; John 4:14

3. age, era, world-age (32×) A bounded age, era, or world-order — 32 occurrences where aion denotes a temporal dispensation rather than eternity. Jesus' parables distinguish 'this age' from 'the age to come' (Matt 12:32; Mark 10:30; Luke 18:30), and the disciples ask about 'the end of the age' (Matt 24:3; 28:20). Arabic ad-dahr ('epoch, era') and Korean 세상/세대 ('world/generation') select temporal-bounded vocabulary here, diverging sharply from the 'forever' renderings of senses 1-2. This is the sense that carries the weight of New Testament eschatology: the two-age schema that structures apocalyptic thought. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: age, of-age | es: de-siglo, era, siglo | fr: éternité | de: Ewigkeit Matt 12:32; Matt 13:22; Matt 13:39; Matt 13:40; Matt 13:49

4. eternity past, from of old (1×) Pre-temporal eternity: aion looking backward to 'from of old,' 'from everlasting,' or 'before the ages.' Only one clear occurrence (Acts 15:18, 'known from eternity'), but the concept resonates with ap' aionos constructions elsewhere. Arabic al-azal — a dedicated term for eternity-past as distinct from al-abad (eternity-future) — reveals a conceptual distinction that Greek collapses into the same word. Hindi yugon se ('from the ages') and Swahili zamani za kale ('times of old') both signal backward-looking temporal depth. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: age | es: eternidad | fr: éternité | de: Ewigkeit Acts 15:18

5. world (material realm) (1×) The material world as a spatial-temporal entity, where aion approximates kosmos. A rare but genuine sense visible at 2 Timothy 4:10, where Demas forsakes Paul 'having loved this present aion' — not an abstract epoch but the tangible, alluring world-system with its pleasures and securities. Arabic al-alam ('the world') and Hindi sansar ('the material world, samsara') both select spatial-world vocabulary here rather than time-words, confirming the semantic shift from temporal to spatial. Korean 세상을 similarly means 'the world' as a place of attachment rather than a period of time. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: age | es: siglo | fr: éternité | de: Ewigkeit 2Tim 4:10

αἰώνιος G0166 Adj-GMP (71×)

Eternal, everlasting; pertaining to an age without end, especially of divine life, punishment, and covenant realities.

A weighty theological adjective applied to the most consequential realities in the New Testament: eternal life (John 3:16; Matt 19:16), eternal punishment (Matt 25:46), the eternal covenant (Heb 13:20), and the eternal Spirit (Heb 9:14). Derived from aion (age), aionios describes what belongs to or extends through the age to come — a duration beyond human measure. Translations across all major language families converge remarkably: Spanish 'eterno/eterna,' French 'éternel,' German 'ewig,' Hindi 'anant' — each capturing the sense of boundless duration.

1. eternal (70×) Eternal or everlasting, describing what pertains to unending duration or the age to come. Covers 70 of 71 occurrences across the full theological spectrum: eternal life (Matt 19:16, 29; John 3:16), eternal fire and punishment (Matt 18:8; 25:41, 46), eternal glory (2 Tim 2:10), and the eternal God (Rom 16:26). The striking uniformity of translations — Spanish 'eterno,' French 'éternel,'

German 'ewig' — reflects a stable, unambiguous core meaning across all contexts. ETERNITY AND AGES
en: eternal, of-eternal | es: de-eterno, eterna, eternas | fr: éternel | de: ewig Matt 18:8; Matt 19:16; Matt 19:29; Matt 25:41; Matt 25:46

2. forever (1×) An adverbial or intensified sense meaning 'forever, in perpetuity,' attested only at Philemon 1:15, where Paul suggests Onesimus was separated 'for a time so that you might have him back forever (aionion).' The shift from adjective to quasi-adverb is reflected in Spanish 'eternamente' and English 'forever,' both departing from the standard adjectival rendering, suggesting a subtle pragmatic extension from quality ('eternal') to temporal extent ('for all time'). ETERNITY AND AGES en: forever | es: eternamente | fr: éternel | de: ewig Phlm 1:15

ἀκᾰθαρ-σία G0167 N-NFS (10×)
Impurity, uncleanness — moral defilement, especially sexual immorality and spiritual corruption
The noun ἀκαθαρσία (akatharsia) denotes moral impurity or uncleanness, primarily in the sphere of sexual sin and spiritual corruption. Paul pairs it consistently with πορνεία (sexual immorality) in vice lists (Gal 5:19; Eph 5:3; Col 3:5), and contrasts it sharply with sanctification: 'God did not call us to impurity but to holiness' (1 Thess 4:7). Romans 1:24 links it to God's judicial handing-over of humanity to degrading passions. While the term has roots in Levitical ritual impurity, its NT usage is overwhelmingly ethical. Spanish 'impureza,' Arabic 'ɜf,' Hindi 'अशुद्धता,' Korean '더러움,' Swahili 'uchafu.'

impurity, uncleanness (10×) Moral or spiritual impurity, filthiness, or corruption, used predominantly for sexual immorality and ethical defilement in the Pauline epistles. Listed among the works of the flesh alongside πορνεία and ἀσέλγεια (Gal 5:19; Eph 5:3; Col 3:5), it appears in the context of God's judicial abandonment of humanity (Rom 1:24), the contrast between the believer's former and present life (Rom 6:19; Eph 4:19), and Paul's pastoral concern over unrepentant congregants (2 Cor 12:21). The antonym is ἁγιασμός, sanctification (1 Thess 4:7). RITUAL MORAL IMPURITY en: impurity, of-uncleanness, uncleanness | es: de-impureza, impureza | fr: impureté | de: Unreinheit Matt 23:27; Rom 1:24; Rom 6:19; 2Cor 12:21; Gal 5:19

ἀκᾰθαρ-τος G0168
unclean, impure, defiled; ceremonially impure or morally corrupt; foul or contaminated
The term spans ceremonial, moral, and physical pollution. In ritual contexts, it marks what violates purity laws. Morally, it describes corruption and depravity. Physically, it refers to uncleansed filth or unsifted impurities. The LXX and NT heavily use the ceremonial sense for what is religiously defiled.

ἀκᾰθαρ-τος G0169 Adj-GNP (32×) unclean, impure — ritually or morally defiled; used especially of unclean spirits in the Gospels and Acts Akathartos (from alpha-privative + kathairo, 'to cleanse') denotes whatever is ritually polluted, morally foul, or spiritually contaminated. Of its 32 New Testament occurrences, the overwhelming majority modify pneuma ('spirit') to form the phrase pneuma akatharton — 'unclean spirit' — the standard Synoptic designation for demonic beings (Mark 1:23-27; 5:2-13; Luke 4:36). This identification of demons as 'unclean' rather than merely 'evil' draws on the Levitical purity system, where akathartos translates Hebrew tame in the Septuagint for forbidden foods, bodily discharges, and contaminated objects (Lev 11-15). Paul extends the word to moral impurity among believers (2 Cor 6:17; Eph 5:5). Spanish 'inmundo,' French 'impur,' and German 'unrein' all preserve the fundamental purity-versus-defilement axis.

unclean, impure (32×) Ritually or morally unclean, impure, defiled. Dominantly modifies 'spirit' to designate demonic beings in the Synoptics and Acts (Mark 1:23-27; 5:2; Luke 4:36; Acts 5:16; 8:7), drawing on the Levitical purity framework where the LXX uses akathartos for Hebrew tame. Also applied to forbidden foods (Acts 10:14, 28), moral defilement (2 Cor 6:17; Eph 5:5), and the abominations of Revelation (Rev 18:2). UNCLEAN AND PROFANE en: unclean | es: inmundo, inmundos | fr: impur | de: unrein Matt 10:1; Matt 12:43; Mark 1:23; Mark 1:26; Mark 1:27

ἀκαιρ-έω G0170 V-IIM/P-2P (1×)
You lacked opportunity, had no occasion or means; were prevented from acting by circumstances
This verb means to lack opportunity, be without occasion, or have no favorable moment for action. Classical usage opposed it to "having opportunity" (eukaireo), denoting the absence of suitable conditions. Paul uses it in Philippians 4:10 acknowledging the Philippians' gift: "you lacked opportunity" to help earlier. The imperfect middle tense suggests ongoing lack of occasion—not that they lacked concern but that circumstances prevented them from acting on their care. Paul graciously excuses the delay, attributing it to lack of opportunity rather than lack of love, showing pastoral sensitivity to their limitations.

(1×) Philippians 4:10 uses this imperfect middle verb to explain why the Philippians delayed sending support: "you lacked opportunity." Paul graciously attributes the delay to unfavorable circumstances rather than diminished affection—they cared all along but had no suitable occasion to act. The verb denotes absence of opportune time or means, perhaps due to distance, poverty, or lack of messengers. Paul's tone is gentle, acknowledging both their renewed giving and their constrained circumstances. LACK AND DEFICIENCY en: you-lacked-opportunity | es: no-teníais-oportunidad | fr: ἠκαιρεῖσθε | de: keine-Gelegenheit-haben Phil 4:10

ἄκαιρος G0171 Adv (1×)
Out of season, at an inopportune time; when circumstances are unfavorable or inconvenient
This adverb means "out of season," "at an unsuitable time," or "when inconvenient." Classical usage opposed it to "in season" (eukairos), denoting untimely or inopportune moments. Paul uses it in 2 Timothy 4:2 charging Timothy to "preach the word, be ready in season and out of season." The phrase emphasizes faithful ministry regardless of favorable or unfavorable circumstances—whether convenient or inconvenient, whether the audience is receptive or hostile, whether cultural conditions support or oppose the message. The minister's readiness must transcend timing, persisting through both opportune and inopportune seasons.

(1×) In 2 Timothy 4:2, Paul commands Timothy to preach "in season and out of season"—when opportune and when inopportune. This adverb denotes unsuitable times, unfavorable circumstances, or inconvenient moments—times when preaching seems ill-timed or unwelcome. The charge is to persist in proclamation regardless of external conditions, cultural receptivity, or personal convenience. Faithful ministry doesn't wait for ideal circumstances but speaks truth in all seasons. MANNER ADVERBS en: out-of-season | es: fuera-de-tiempo | fr: ἀκαίρως | de: zur-Unzeit 2Tim 4:2

ἄκᾰκ-ος G0172 Adj-GMP (2×)
guileless, innocent, free from evil intent or malice
This adjective characterizes those who are morally pure and without guile. In Romans 16:18, Paul warns that deceivers target the ἄκακοι —the innocent and unsuspecting—with smooth talk. Hebrews 7:26 applies it to Christ as our high priest, emphasizing his complete moral purity and separation from sinners. The classical Greek background includes meanings of both "guileless" (unknowing of evil) and "harmless" (doing no evil), reflecting inner purity that makes one vulnerable to deception.

(2×) The cross-linguistic evidence reveals a consistent moral-ethical quality. Spanish offers 'inocente' (innocent) and 'ingenuos' (naive, unsuspecting), French 'inoffensif' (harmless), and German 'arglos' (guileless). The two NT contexts present contrasting applications: vulnerable believers who need protection (Romans) versus the sinless Christ who needs no purification (Hebrews). INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL

en: innocent, unsuspecting | es: ingenuos, inocente | fr: arglos, inoffensif | de: arglos Rom 16:18; Heb 7:26

ἄκανθ-α G0173 N-NFP (14×)

Thorn, thorn-bush — any thorny or prickly plant; used literally and figuratively of obstacles and judgment

The Greek ἄκανθα (akantha) covers thorns and thorny plants broadly, from thistles to brambles. In Jesus' teaching, thorns choke the seed sown among them (Matt 13:7, 22), and grapes are not gathered from thorn-bushes (Matt 7:16; Luke 6:44) — images instantly recognizable across Mediterranean and Near Eastern agriculture. The crown of thorns (Matt 27:29; Mark 15:17; John 19:2, 5) transforms a botanical nuisance into a symbol of mockery and suffering. Spanish 'espinas' and French 'épines' both preserve the sharp, painful connotation. The word echoes Genesis 3:18, where thorns first appear as a consequence of the Fall.

thorns (14×) Any thorny or prickly plant — thistles, brambles, or thorn-bushes — used in parabolic teaching about spiritual receptivity (the seed among thorns, Matt 13:7, 22; Mark 4:7, 18; Luke 8:7, 14), proverbial wisdom about recognizing true character (Matt 7:16; Luke 6:44), and the soldiers' crown of thorns placed on Jesus (Matt 27:29; Mark 15:17; John 19:2, 5). The Hebrews 6:8 usage echoes Genesis 3:18's curse. Spanish 'espinas' and German 'Dornen' carry the same agrarian and symbolic weight. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: thorns | es: espinas, espinos | fr: épine | de: Dorn, Dornen Matt 7:16; Matt 13:7; Matt 13:22; Matt 27:29

ἀκάνθ-ινος G0174 Adj-AMS (2×)

made of thorns, thorny, constructed from thorn branches

This adjective describes objects made from thorns or thorn branches. Both New Testament occurrences refer to the στέφανος ἀκάνθινος —the crown of thorns—placed on Jesus during his mock coronation before the crucifixion (Mark 15:17; John 19:5). The word emphasizes the material composition: not merely decorated with thorns, but woven entirely from thorn branches, likely intended both to mock his claimed kingship and to inflict pain.

(2×) All target languages maintain the botanical specificity: Spanish 'de espinas' (of thorns), French 'd'épines,' German 'Dornen.' The uniform application to the crown of thorns in both Gospel accounts creates a tight semantic field. The adjective contrasts sharply with the gold and jeweled crowns of earthly kings, highlighting the humiliation and suffering of Christ's passion. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: of-thorns, thorny | es: de-espinas | fr: d'épines | de: dornen Mark 15:17; John 19:5

ἄκαρπ-ος G0175 Adj-NMS (7×)

Unfruitful, barren; producing no useful result, whether literally of plants or figuratively of persons and deeds.

An adjective meaning 'without fruit' — barren, unproductive, fruitless. It combines the privative prefix 'a-' with 'karpos' (fruit) to describe anything that fails to yield results. Jesus uses it in the Parable of the Sower where thorny distractions render the word 'unfruitful' (Matt 13:22; Mark 4:19). Paul applies it to unintelligible prayer where the mind is 'unfruitful' (1 Cor 14:14) and to 'the unfruitful works of darkness' (Eph 5:11). Spanish 'sin fruto' and French 'sans fruit' mirror the Greek morphology precisely — literally 'without fruit.'

unfruitful, barren (7×) Lacking fruit or productive outcome, whether in a literal botanical sense or in the pervasive NT metaphorical usage denoting spiritual or moral barrenness. The morphological transparency is preserved across translations: Spanish 'sin fruto,' French 'sans fruit,' German 'fruchtlos' all replicate the privative structure. In Matt 13:22 and Mark 4:19, worldly cares choke the seed and make it unfruitful; in Eph 5:11 Paul urges believers not to participate in 'the unfruitful works of darkness'; in Titus 3:14 the concern is that believers not be 'unfruitful' in good works. The literal/metaphorical boundary is fluid but the core meaning — absence of productive result — is constant. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fruitless, unfruitful | es: sin-fruto | fr: sans-fruit, sans-fruit, | de: fruchtlose, ἀκάρποις, ἀκάρπους Matt 13:22; Mark 4:19; 1Cor 14:14; Eph 5:11; Titus 3:14

ἀκατάγνωστος G0176 Adj-AMS (1×)

Beyond reproach, above criticism, irreproachable; conduct that cannot be justly condemned

This compound adjective (alpha-privative + kataginosko) means "not to be condemned," "beyond reproach," or "above criticism." Paul uses it in Titus 2:8 instructing Titus about sound teaching and conduct: "sound speech that cannot be condemned." The term describes speech so pure and truthful that opponents find no grounds for legitimate criticism. It's not that enemies won't attack but that they'll find nothing genuinely blameworthy, forcing them either to fabricate charges or be silenced by the obvious integrity of the message and messenger. The goal is blamelessness that disarms criticism.

(1×) Titus 2:8 calls for "sound speech beyond reproach, so that opponents may be put to shame, having nothing evil to say about us." This adjective describes teaching and conduct so irreproachable that critics find no legitimate grounds for condemnation. The strategy is moral and doctrinal integrity so clear that opposition must either fabricate false charges or fall silent. Paul aims to disarm criticism through unassailable character and truth. BLAMELESS AND UNBLEMISHED

en: beyond-reproach | es: irreprochable | fr: ἀκατάγνωστον | de: untadelig Titus 2:8

ἀκατα-κάλυπτος G0177 Adj-AFS (2×)

uncovered, unveiled, without a head covering

This adjective describes the state of being without a covering, specifically referring to the head. Both occurrences appear in Paul's discussion of head coverings in worship in 1 Corinthians 11. In verse 5, a woman praying or prophesying ἀκαταχαλύπτῳ κεφαλῇ (with uncovered head) dishonors her head. Verse 13 asks whether it is proper for a woman to pray uncovered. The cultural context involves practices of veiling and honor, though the theological principle Paul draws from this remains debated.

(2×) The translations uniformly express the state of being uncovered: Spanish 'descubierta,' French 'découvert,' German 'unbedeckt.' Both verses occur within a single paragraph addressing the same cultural practice. The LXX background and classical usage confirm the literal sense of lacking a covering, particularly head covering in contexts of worship or social propriety. COVERING AND CONCEALING

en: uncovered, with-uncovered | es: descubierta | fr: découvert | de: unbedeckt 1Cor 11:5; 1Cor 11:13

ἀκατά-κρῐτος G0178 Adj-AMP (2×)

uncondemned, not yet judged or sentenced, without legal condemnation

This legal adjective describes someone who has not been formally condemned or sentenced. Paul uses it twice when asserting his Roman citizenship rights: in Acts 16:37, after being beaten and imprisoned without trial in Philippi, and in Acts 22:25, when about to be flogged in Jerusalem. The term emphasizes the violation of due process—Roman citizens had the right not to be punished before formal conviction. Paul's invocation of this status highlights the injustice of his treatment and his legal protections as a Roman citizen.

(2×) The forensic nature appears across languages: Spanish 'sin condena' and 'sin juicio' (without condemnation/judgment), French 'non-condamné.' Both contexts involve Paul defending his legal rights against unlawful punishment. The word belongs to the technical vocabulary of Roman jurisprudence, reflecting Paul's strategic use of his citizenship to protect himself and advance the gospel mission. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL

en: uncondemned | es: sin-condena, sin-juicio | fr: non-condamné | de: ἀκατάκριτον, ἀκαταχρίτους Acts 16:37; Acts 22:25

ἀκατά-λῡτος G0179 Adj-GFS (1×)

Indestructible, indissoluble, endless; that which cannot be dissolved or brought to an end

This compound adjective (alpha-privative + kataluo) means "indestructible," "indissoluble," or "endless"—that which cannot be dissolved, broken down, or brought to termination. The author of Hebrews uses it in Hebrews 7:16 describing Christ's priesthood as based on "the power of an indestructible life." The term contrasts Christ's endless, death-conquering life with the mortality of Levitical priests who died and were replaced. Jesus' priesthood doesn't depend on genealogy or Levitical succession but on resurrection life that cannot be dissolved by death. His life is imperishable, His priesthood permanent.

(1×) Hebrews 7:16 contrasts two bases for priesthood: fleshly commandment (Levitical law) versus "the power of an indestructible life" (Christ's resurrection). This adjective describes Jesus' endless, imperishable life—a life that death could not dissolve or terminate. Because He lives forever, His priesthood is permanent and superior to the mortal Aaronic priests who served and died. The indestructibility of His life guarantees the perpetuity of His priestly ministry. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: indestructible | es: indestructible | fr: indissoluble | de: unaufloeslich Heb 7:16

ἀκατά-παυστος G0180 Adj-AMP (1×)

Unceasing, relentless, that cannot stop; continuous without cessation or rest

This compound adjective (alpha-privative + katapausis) means "unceasing," "that cannot cease," or "insatiable." Classical usage applied it to things that cannot be stopped or set at rest. Peter uses it in 2 Peter 2:14 describing false teachers who have "eyes full of adultery, unceasing from sin." The term emphasizes the relentless, insatiable nature of their lust and deception—they cannot stop sinning, cannot rest from their evil desires. The image is of compulsive, addictive sin that drives them ceaselessly. Their eyes constantly seek adulterous opportunity; their hearts never rest from devising ways to exploit others.

(1×) In 2 Peter 2:14, this adjective describes false teachers' eyes as "full of adultery and unceasing from sin." The term denotes their relentless, insatiable lust—they cannot stop, cannot rest from sinful desires. The compulsive, addictive quality of their behavior is emphasized: eyes constantly seeking sexual opportunity, hearts ceaselessly devising exploitation. The word paints a picture of enslavement to passion, unable to find satisfaction or cease from evil. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5492 WITH 4 SENSES

en: unceasing | es: incesantes | fr: ἀκαταπαύστους | de: unaufhoerlich 2Pet 2:14

ἀκατα-στᾰσία G0181 N-GFS (5×)

Disorder, instability, disturbance; social or cosmic upheaval, and the inner turmoil of a divided community.

Describes a state of disorder, instability, or confusion — ranging from political upheaval to communal chaos. Jesus warns that 'wars and disturbances' will precede the end (Luke 21:9). Paul endured 'tumults' among his many hardships (2 Cor 6:5) and feared finding 'disorder' at Corinth (2 Cor 12:20). Most theologically pointed is 1 Corinthians 14:33: 'God is not a God of disorder but of peace,' establishing divine order as the antithesis of akatastasia. James 3:16 links it to envy and selfish ambition. French 'désordre/trouble' and Spanish 'desorden' both capture the disruptive, destabilizing force of the term.

(5×) Disorder, instability, or upheaval — encompassing political tumult, social chaos, and communal dysfunction. Luke 21:9 uses it for the apocalyptic disturbances preceding the end. Paul experienced it as physical tumult in his ministry (2 Cor 6:5) and feared it as congregational strife (2 Cor 12:20). The theological anchor is 1 Cor 14:33, where God is defined as the antithesis of akatastasia — not disorder but peace. James 3:16 locates it alongside envy and selfish ambition as the fruit of earthly 'wisdom.' Spanish 'desorden' and French 'désordre' accurately convey the sense of things being out of their proper, divinely intended arrangement. TUMULT AND UPROAR

en: disorder, disorders, of-disorder | es: de-desorden, desorden, desórdenes | fr: désordre, trouble | de: ἀκαταστασία, ἀκαταστασίαι, ἀκαταστασίαις Luke 21:9; 1Cor 14:33; 2Cor 6:5; 2Cor 12:20; Jas 3:16

ἀκατά-στᾰτος G0182 Adj-NMS (2×)

unstable, restless, lacking steadiness or constancy

This adjective characterizes instability and lack of constancy. James applies it to the double-minded man in 1:8, whose wavering between God and world renders him unstable in all his ways. In 3:8, the tongue is called ἀκατάστατον κακόν—a restless evil, full of deadly poison. The classical background includes unstable situations, irregular fevers, and fickle persons. James draws on this semantic range to describe both personal instability (vacillating faith) and inherent unruliness (the untameable tongue).

(2×) Across languages, the instability theme dominates: Spanish 'inestable' (unstable) and 'inquieto' (restless), French preserving the Greek term, German 'unbeständig' (inconstant). The two Jacobean contexts apply the same root idea to different subjects—a person's character and an organ's nature—both emphasizing lack of control or constancy. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8313 WITH 3 SENSES

en: a-restless, unstable | es: inestable, inquieto | fr: ἀκατάστατον, ἀκατάστατος | de: unbestaendig Jas 1:8; Jas 3:8

ἀκατά-σχετος G0183

unrestrained, uncontrollable; unable to be held back or checked

This rare adjective describes something or someone that cannot be held back, checked, or restrained. The term combines the negative prefix with the verb 'to hold' or 'to restrain,' creating a vivid picture of irresistible force or uncontrollable impulse. In classical usage it could describe both impersonal forces (like an unstoppable rush or impulse) and personal characteristics (an uncontrollable person). The word carries connotations of something wild, untamed, or beyond the reach of restraint—whether that's a force of nature or human passion that breaks through every barrier.

G0184 N-ANS (1×)

Akeldama, meaning 'Field of Blood'; the field purchased with Judas's betrayal money

This proper noun is the Greek transliteration of an Aramaic place name meaning "Field of Blood" (Aramaic: חקל דמא). Luke uses it in Acts 1:19 explaining the name given to the field purchased with Judas's blood money. The field became known by this grim title both because it was bought with the price of innocent blood and because Judas died there violently. Luke notes that the name became known "to all the inhabitants of Jerusalem," marking it as a place of infamy—a perpetual memorial to betrayal, greed, and the terrible end of the traitor.

(1×) Acts 1:19 identifies the field purchased with Judas's betrayal money as "Akeldama, that is, Field of Blood." The Aramaic name memorializes the dual horror: blood money used to buy it and Judas's bloody death there. Luke explains the name became known throughout Jerusalem, transforming a potter's field into a landmark of infamy—a permanent reminder of the betrayer's terrible end and the price of innocent blood. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Akeldamach | es: Hakeldamách | fr: Akeldama | de: Ἀκελδαμάχ Acts 1:19

ἀκέραι-ος G0185 Adj-NMP (3×)

pure, unmixed, innocent; morally untainted or guileless

An adjective expressing purity without mixture or guile. Jesus instructs disciples to be 'innocent as doves' yet 'wise as serpents' (Matt 10:16). Paul urges Roman believers to be 'innocent' concerning evil (Rom 16:19). Philippians 2:15 calls believers to be 'blameless and innocent' children of God amid a corrupt generation. Classical usage covers unmixed substances, untouched property, and persons of pure lineage or character.

(3×) Denotes moral simplicity and purity—freedom from evil's contamination. Jesus's paradox pairs this with wisdom: innocence without naivety. Romans applies it to deliberate ignorance of evil—purity through non-participation. Philippians connects it to visible blamelessness: children of light standing out in darkness. Multilingual glosses vary interestingly: Spanish 'inocentes/puros/sencillos' (innocent/pure/simple), French 'pur/sans-mélange' (pure/unmixed), German 'lauter' (pure), reflecting the term's conceptual range from moral innocence to unmixed simplicity. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: innocent | es: inocentes, puros, sencillos | fr: pur, sans-mélange | de: lauter, ἀκέραιοι Matt 10:16; Rom 16:19; Phil 2:15

ἀκλῑνής G0186 Adj-AFS (1×)

Unwavering, steadfast, firm; not bending or turning aside from a position

This adjective means "not bending," "unswerving," or "steadfast"—describing something that doesn't incline to either side but remains firm and fixed. Classical usage applied it to things straight and perpendicular, impartial judgments, and persistent fevers. The author of Hebrews uses it in Hebrews 10:23 exhorting believers to "hold fast the confession of our hope without wavering." The term emphasizes undeviating firmness—not bending under pressure, not turning aside through doubt or persecution. The confession must be held with steady grip, neither compromised nor abandoned, remaining steadfast regardless of opposition or trial.

(1×) Hebrews 10:23 calls believers to "hold fast the confession of our hope unwavering, for He who promised is faithful." This adjective modifies the manner of holding: without bending, turning aside, or wavering. Classical usage included the mathematical sense of perpendicular (not inclined) and medical use for persistent conditions. Here it demands steadfast persistence in confession—not compromising under persecution, not doubting God's promises, holding firm the hope proclaimed. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY

en: unwavering | es: sin-vacilar | fr: unwandelbar | de: unwandelbar Heb 10:23

ἀκμ-άζω G0187 V-AIA-3P (1×)

It ripened, reached maturity, came to full bloom; achieved peak development

This verb means to be at the prime, reach full bloom, or come to maturity. Classical usage applied it to persons in their prime, cities flourishing, and crops reaching ripeness. John uses it in Revelation 14:18 in the vision of harvest: "gather the clusters of the vine of the earth, for her grapes have ripened." The verb emphasizes the grapes reaching full maturity, ready for harvest—an ominous image since this harvest is for the winepress of God's wrath. The ripeness signals not blessing but judgment's appointed time: sin has reached its full development, and the harvest of wrath is ready.

(1×) Revelation 14:18 commands the angel to gather earth's grape clusters "for her grapes have ripened." This aorist verb denotes reaching full maturity or peak development—the grapes are fully ripe and ready for harvest. But this is no ordinary vintage: the clusters go into "the great winepress of God's wrath." The ripeness signals that human sin has reached its full measure and the time for eschatological judgment has arrived. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: ripened | es: maduraron | fr: mûrir | de: reifen Rev 14:18

ἀκμήν G0188 Adv (1×)

Still, yet, even now; indicating continuation of a state or action up to the present

This adverb means "still," "yet," or "even now," emphasizing the continuation of a situation or the surprising persistence of a state. Classical usage indicated something happening just at that moment or continuing even then. Jesus uses it in Matthew 15:16 expressing mild exasperation with the disciples: "Are you still without understanding?" The adverb emphasizes the unexpected persistence of their dullness—after all Jesus' teaching and miracles, are they yet failing to comprehend? The question implies they should have progressed beyond this point; their continued lack of understanding is surprising and disappointing.

(1×) In Matthew 15:16, Jesus responds to the disciples with "Are you still without understanding?" This adverb emphasizes the surprising continuation of their spiritual dullness—even now, after extensive teaching and miracles, they remain uncomprehending. The question expresses mild disappointment: by this point they should understand, yet they still don't grasp spiritual truths. The persistence of their confusion, despite ample opportunity to learn, prompts Jesus' rhetorical question. CONTINUITY AND STILL en: Still | es: ¿Todavía | fr: encore | de: Ἀκμὴν Matt 15:16

ἀκοή G0189 N-GFS (24×)

Hearing (the act or faculty); a report, news, or message heard; the ear as organ of hearing

Akoe spans the full range from the physical faculty of hearing to the content of what is heard. In Romans 10:17 Paul writes that 'faith comes from hearing' (ex akoes), where the word bridges the act of listening and the message proclaimed. Matthew 4:24 uses it for the 'report' or 'fame' of Jesus spreading through Syria. Mark 7:35 employs it concretely for the ear itself being opened. German consistently renders 'Gehor' across all senses, while Spanish helpfully distinguishes 'oido' (ear/hearing organ) from 'fama' (report) and 'anuncio' (proclamation).

1. act or faculty of hearing (11×) The act, process, or faculty of hearing – the capacity to perceive and receive sound or speech. Romans 10:17 makes this theologically central: faith arises through hearing the word of Christ. Paul's quotation of Isaiah in Acts 28:26 ('hearing you will hear but not understand') layers the faculty with ironic spiritual deafness. Spanish 'de oido' and French 'ouie' preserve the sensory focus. HEARING AND EAR

en: In-hearing, With-hearing, hearing | es: Con-oído, De-oído, de-oído | fr: ouïe | de: Gehoer, Gehör Matt 13:14; Acts 28:26; Rom 10:17; 1Cor 12:17

2. report, news, message (7×) A report, piece of news, rumor, or proclamation – what is heard rather than the act of hearing. Jesus' fame (akoe) goes throughout Syria (Matt 4:24); disciples hear 'reports of wars' (Matt 24:6; Mark 13:7). Spanish distinguishes this sense with 'fama' and 'anuncio,' while the underlying Greek relies on context to shift from faculty to content. NEWS AND MESSAGES

en: report, rumors | es: anuncio, fama, proclamación | fr: ouïe | de: Gehoer, Gehör Matt 4:24; Matt 14:1; Matt 24:6; Mark 1:28; Mark 13:7

3. ear, organ of hearing (6×) The physical ear, the bodily organ of hearing, sometimes standing metonymically for receptive attention. In Mark 7:35 Jesus opens a deaf man's akoe (ears). In 2 Timothy 4:3-4 people 'turn away their ears' from truth, gathering teachers who tickle them. Spanish 'oidos' (ears) and the plural usage mark this concrete, anatomical sense. HEARING AND EAR

en: ears, hearing | es: oído, oídos | fr: ouïe | de: Gehoer, Gehör Mark 7:35; Luke 7:1; Acts 17:20; 2Tim 4:3; 2Tim 4:4

ἀκολουθ-έω G0190 V-RIA-1P (90×)

Follow — to walk behind or accompany someone; especially, to follow as a disciple in committed allegiance

In the Gospels, ἀκολουθέω serves double duty with extraordinary theological significance. On the surface it simply means to walk behind or travel with someone — crowds following Jesus on the roads of Galilee (Matt 4:25). But the same verb becomes the definitive term for discipleship when Jesus says 'Follow me' (Matt 9:9; 16:24), transforming a spatial action into a lifelong commitment. French 'suivre' and German 'nachfolgen' both preserve this ambiguity. The disciples who literally left their nets to walk behind Jesus (Matt 4:20) were simultaneously entering the deeper sense of pledging their lives to his teaching and mission.

1. follow physically, accompany (69×) Physical following or accompanying — to move behind or alongside someone, walking after them on a journey or through a crowd. The basic spatial sense from which the metaphorical meaning grows. French 'suivre,' German 'nachfolgen,' Spanish 'seguir' all treat this as ordinary locomotion. Prominent in crowd scenes: Matt 4:25 ('great crowds followed him from Galilee'), Matt 8:1, and Matt 8:10 ('not even in Israel have I found such faith' — said to one who came following). FOLLOWING AND DISCIPLESHIP

en: followed, had-followed, he-followed | es: le-siguieron, lo-siguieron, seguía | fr: suivre | de: folgt-nach, nachfolgen Matt 4:20; Matt 4:22; Matt 4:25; Matt 8:1; Matt 8:23

2. follow as disciple (21×) Following as discipleship — to attach oneself to a master as a committed disciple, expressing allegiance, obedience, and willingness to share the teacher's way of life. The imperative 'Follow me' (ἀκολούθει μοι) becomes Jesus' characteristic call to discipleship. Spanish 'Sígueme,' Korean '나를 따르라,' and Hindi 'मेरे पीछे आ' all carry the relational weight. Matt 9:9 (the call of Matthew), Matt 16:24 ('let him deny himself and follow me'), and Matt 19:27 ('we have left everything and followed you') mark the decisive passages. FOLLOWING AND DISCIPLESHIP

en: Follow, I-will-follow, follow | es: Sigue, Sígueme, que-me-habéis-seguido | fr: suivre | de: folgt-nach, nachfolgen Matt 8:19; Matt 8:22; Matt 9:9; Matt 16:24; Matt 19:27

ἀκούω G0191 V-PIM/P-3S (430×)

To hear, perceive sound; to listen to, heed, obey; passively, to be heard; to learn by hearing or receive a report.

Akouo is the primary Greek verb for auditory experience, appearing 430 times across the New Testament and covering the full spectrum from physical hearing to spiritual comprehension. Its range is wider than any single English word: when Jesus says 'he who has ears, let him hear' (Matt 13:9), akouo means not just sound reception but obedient understanding. Languages carve this spectrum revealingly — Swahili splits sikia ('perceive a sound') from sikiliza ('attend carefully'), Spanish distinguishes oir ('hear') from escuchar ('listen'), and Arabic separates sami'a ('heard') from istama'a ('listened attentively'). The New Testament exploits this breadth theologically, making hearing a metaphor for faith: to truly 'hear' the word is to receive it, understand it, and act on it.

1. hear, perceive sound (360×) Basic auditory perception: to hear a sound, voice, word, or message with the physical ear. At 360 occurrences, this is the overwhelming default sense, covering everything from Herod hearing of Jesus' birth (Matt 2:3) to the crowds hearing his teaching (Matt 13:2) to the disciples hearing the voice from the cloud at the Transfiguration (Matt 17:5). All active indicative and most participial forms fall here. Korean deutda and Arabic sami'a both select their basic, unmarked hearing verbs, while German horen and French entendre serve as the general auditory terms. The participial aorist akousas ('having heard') functions almost as a narrative connective — 'when X heard this, X did Y' — across all four Gospels. HEARING AND HEEDING

en: Having-heard, having-heard, hearing | es: Habiendo-oído, habiendo-oído, oyendo | fr: entendre | de: hört Matt 2:3; Matt 2:9; Matt 2:22; Matt 4:12; Matt 8:10

2. heed, give ear, obey (42×) To heed, give ear, obey — imperative and exhortatory uses calling for responsive hearing that leads to action. The paradigmatic example is the Synoptic/Revelation formula ho echon ota akoueto ('let him who has ears hear,' Matt 11:15; 13:9; Rev 2:7), where akouo means far more than sound perception — it demands spiritual reception and obedience. Found 42 times, primarily in Jesus' direct imperatives (akouete, 'hear!' Matt 15:10; Mark 4:3) and the Shema-like exhortation akouete autou ('listen to him!') at the Transfiguration (Matt 17:5). Arabic ista'mi'u (imperative of istama'a) and Korean deureura (command form) both shift into directed-attention vocabulary, confirming the semantic distinction from passive sound reception. HEARING AND HEEDING

en: hear, let-hear, let-him-hear | es: oiga, oíd, oídle | fr: entendre, écouter | de: hoeren, hört Matt 11:15; Matt 13:9; Matt 13:18; Matt 13:43; Matt 15:10

3. be heard (10×) Passive voice: to be heard, referring to a sound, voice, prayer, or report coming to someone's ears without the hearer's active agency. Ten occurrences, including Rachel's weeping 'being heard' in Ramah (Matt 2:18), the report of Jesus 'being heard' in a house (Mark 2:1), and the theologically loaded 'your prayer has been heard' addressed to Zechariah (Luke 1:13) and Cornelius (Acts 10:31). The divine passive — where God is the implied agent who hears the prayer — is cross-linguistically marked: Arabic ustujiba ('was answered') and Swahili -sikika (passive of -sikia) both select specifically passive forms, while Korean deullyeotta uses a dedicated passivizer. HEARING AND HEEDING

en: is-heard, it-was-heard, was-heard | es: Fue-oído, es-oído, fue-oída | fr: entendre, écouter | de: hoeren, hört Matt 2:18; Matt 28:14; Mark 2:1; Luke 12:3; John 9:32

4. listen to, attend to (10×) To listen to, attend to — deliberate, focused listening or giving sustained attention to a speaker or message. Distinguished from sense 1 by intentionality: in Luke 2:46, the boy Jesus is 'listening to' the teachers in the temple; in Luke 10:39, Mary sits at Jesus' feet 'listening to' his word; in Luke 19:48, all the people 'hung on his words listening.' Only 10 occurrences, but the cross-linguistic evidence is sharp: Swahili sikiliza (intentional listening) versus sikia (hearing), Spanish escuchaba (was listening) versus oyo (heard), and Arabic istama'a (gave ear) versus sami'a (heard) all independently confirm the attentive-listening sense as distinct from bare perception. HEARING AND HEEDING

en: They-were-listening, hearing, listening | es: Lo-escuchaban, Oyendo, escuchaba | fr: entendre, écouter | de: hoeren, hört Mark 6:11; Luke 2:46; Luke 10:39; Luke 19:11; Luke 19:48

5. learn by hearing, receive report (8×) To learn by hearing, receive a report or piece of information — the emphasis falling on cognitive acquisition rather than the auditory act itself. Found 8 times, often in perfect or resultative constructions that foreground the resulting state of 'having been informed': 'we have heard him say' (Acts 6:14), 'I have heard from many about this man' (Acts 9:13), 'the things which you have heard from me' (2 Tim 2:2). Arabic 'alima ('came to know') and Korean jeondallye-deutda ('heard via report') both shift toward information-reception vocabulary. Heb 2:1 warns against letting 'the things we have heard' slip away — where akouo designates received teaching rather than an auditory event. HEARING AND HEEDING

en: I-have-heard, having-been-heard, heard | es: Hemos-oído, cosas-oídas, he-oído | fr: entendre, écouter | de: hoeren, hört Acts 6:11; Acts 6:14; Acts 9:13; Acts 22:15; Heb 2:1

ἀκρᾰσ-ία G0192 N-GFS (2×)

lack of self-control, unrestrained indulgence, moral incontinence

This noun denotes the absence of self-mastery or self-control, particularly in moral and bodily appetites. Jesus uses it in Matthew 23:25 to accuse the Pharisees of inner corruption: while they clean the outside of the cup, inside they are full of ἁρπαγῆς καὶ ἀκρασίας—greed and self-indulgence. In 1 Corinthians 7:5, Paul warns married couples not to deprive each other sexually except briefly for prayer, lest Satan tempt them διὰ τὴν ἀκρασίαν ὑμῶν—because of their lack of self-control. The term encompasses both ethical failures and bodily impulses.

(2×) The moral dimension appears consistently: Spanish 'falta de dominio propio' (lack of self-dominion) and 'desenfreno' (unbridled license), French 'intempérance,' German preserving the Greek. The two contexts reveal different spheres—general moral excess (Matthew) and sexual self-control (1 Corinthians)—but share the common thread of unrestrained appetite. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: lack-of-self-control, self-indulgence | es: desenfreno, falta-de-dominio-propio | fr: intempérance | de: ἀκρασίαν, ἀκρασίας Matt 23:25; 1Cor 7:5

ἀκρατ-ής G0193 Adj-NMP (1×)

Without self-control, lacking restraint or discipline; unable to master one's desires

This compound adjective (alpha-privative + kratos) means "without power over oneself," "lacking self-control," or "intemperate." Classical usage applied it to those who couldn't control their appetites, passions, or impulses—powerless over pleasure, anger, or desire. Paul uses it in 2 Timothy 3:3 describing the moral deterioration of the last days: people will be "without self-control." The term captures the loss of inner discipline and mastery over base desires—lives governed by impulse rather than reason or virtue, enslaved to passion rather than exercising rational control. It's the opposite of the self-mastery (enkrateia) that should characterize believers.

(1×) In 2 Timothy 3:3, Paul lists "without self-control" among the vices characterizing the last days' moral decline. This adjective describes those lacking inner discipline or mastery over desires—powerless to restrain base impulses, enslaved to passion. Classical usage emphasized inability to command oneself, being dominated by appetites rather than reason. The term paints a picture of lives governed by unbridled desire rather than virtue, lacking the self-mastery that should mark mature character. DRUNKENNESS AND INTOXICATION

en: without-self-control | es: sin-dominio-propio | fr: ἀκρατεῖς | de: zuchtlos 2Tim 3:3

ἄκρᾶτος G0194 Adj-GMS (1×)

Unmixed, undiluted, pure; especially of wine served without water

This adjective means "unmixed," "undiluted," or "pure"—especially applied to wine served neat without the customary addition of water. Classical Greeks typically diluted wine with water; unmixed wine was considered barbaric and dangerously strong. John uses it in Revelation 14:10 in the terrifying judgment oracle: drinking "the wine of God's wrath, poured unmixed into the cup of His anger." The term emphasizes the full-strength, undiluted fury of divine judgment—no mercy mixed in, no mitigation of wrath's intensity. The image of neat wine represents concentrated, untempered judgment in all its fearsome potency.

(1×) Revelation 14:10 threatens that beast-worshipers will "drink the wine of God's wrath, poured unmixed into the cup of His indignation." This adjective describes the wine as undiluted, full-strength—no water mixed in to temper its potency. In a culture where wine was always diluted, unmixed wine represented dangerous strength. Applied to divine wrath, it signifies unmitigated, untempered judgment—fury poured out at full concentration with no mercy mixed in. PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: unmixed | es: puro | fr: unvermischt | de: unvermischt Rev 14:10

ἀκρῑβ-εια G0195 N-AFS (1×)

Exactness, precision, strictness; careful attention to detail and rigorous adherence to standards

This noun denotes exactness, precision, strict accuracy, or rigorous adherence to standards. Classical usage applied it to careful precision, minute detail, and strict discipline. Paul uses it in Acts 22:3 describing his training: "brought up in this city, educated at the feet of Gamaliel according to the strictness of the ancestral law." The term emphasizes the rigorous, precise nature of Paul's Pharisaic education—not casual familiarity with Torah but exacting study of every detail, strict observance of interpretive tradition, precise application of legal minutiae. This careful training made Paul a zealous Pharisee before becoming an apostle.

(1×) Acts 22:3 uses this term to characterize Paul's rabbinic education under Gamaliel: trained "according to the strictness of our ancestral law." The noun emphasizes the rigorous precision and exacting detail of Pharisaic legal training—not loose familiarity but strict, minute attention to Torah and tradition. Paul's background involved the most precise and demanding form of Jewish education, producing zealous commitment to ancestral customs. This exactness later transferred to his apostolic teaching. ACCURACY AND PRECISION

en: strictness | es: exactitud | fr: exactitude | de: ἀκρίβειαν Acts 22:3

ἀκρῑβ-ής G0196 Adj-AFS-S (1×)

Most strict, exact, or precise in adherence to standards

This adjective describes something characterized by extreme precision and exactness, particularly in following standards or rules. In Acts 26:5, Paul uses it to describe the Pharisees as the 'strictest' sect of Judaism, emphasizing their meticulous adherence to the law. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'más-estricta', French 'le-plus-exact') confirm this superlative sense of rigorous precision in religious observance.

(1×) The superlative form emphasizes the Pharisees' reputation for the most rigorous and exact observance of Jewish law and tradition. Classical Greek usage shows this word applied to precise measurements, exact knowledge, and strict standards, making it apt for describing meticulous religious practice. Paul's autobiographical reference highlights how he belonged to the most exacting tradition within Judaism. ACCURACY AND PRECISION

en: strictest | es: más-estricta | fr: le-plus-exact | de: ἀκριβεστάτην Acts 26:5

ἀκρῑβ-ής G0197

exact, accurate, precise; of persons: strict, careful; of actions: done with precision

This adjective describes exactness and precision in various domains. When applied to measurements, times, or descriptions, it means accurate or precise—returning at the exact moment, complete calm with no disturbance. Applied to persons, it characterizes those who are strict, careful, or sharp-sighted in their judgments or observations. The adverb form appears frequently in phrases meaning 'to know precisely' or 'to learn accurately,' standing in contrast to knowing something only roughly or in outline.

ἀκρῑβ-όω G0198 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to ascertain exactly, to investigate carefully, to determine precisely

This verb means to inquire carefully or determine something with precision. Both occurrences appear in Matthew's infancy narrative concerning Herod and the magi. In 2:7, Herod secretly calls the wise men and ἠκρίβωσεν—ascertained exactly—the time the star appeared. In 2:16, when the magi don't return, Herod kills all boys in Bethlehem according to the time ὃν ἠκρίβωσεν—which he had carefully determined. The verb emphasizes Herod's methodical precision in gathering intelligence for his murderous plot, tragically demonstrating how careful investigation can serve evil purposes.

(2×) The precision theme runs through all translations: Spanish 'averiguó exactamente' (ascertained exactly), French 'examiner exactement,' German preserving the Greek root. Both verses narrate the same historical moment from different angles, creating a tight semantic context. Classical usage includes careful investigation, perfect understanding, and accurate description—all converging on the idea of exact determination. JUDICIAL EXAMINATION

en: ascertained, he-ascertained | es: averiguó-exactamente | fr: examiner-exactement | de: ἠκρίβωσεν Matt 2:7; Matt 2:16

ἀκρῑβ-ής G0199 Adj-ANS-C (9×)

Accurately, carefully, with precision; in the comparative: more accurately, more exactly.

An adverb derived from akribes ('exact, precise'), appearing in the New Testament in both positive and comparative degrees. In its positive form it describes careful, precise action – Herod secretly inquires 'accurately' about the star's timing (Matt 2:8), Luke claims to have investigated everything 'carefully' (Luke 1:3), and believers are urged to walk 'carefully' (Eph 5:15). The comparative form (akribesteron) appears in Acts when Priscilla and Aquila explain the Way 'more accurately' to Apollos (18:26) and when opponents seek 'more precise' information about Paul (23:15, 20; 24:22). Spanish neatly distinguishes 'exactamente/diligentemente' from 'mas-exactamente,' and Hindi 'adhik-satikta-se' explicitly marks the comparative increase.

1. accurately, carefully (positive degree) (5×) The positive-degree adverb meaning 'accurately, carefully, with exactness, precisely.' Used of Herod's covert inquiry about the star (Matt 2:8), Luke's thorough investigation of events (Luke 1:3), Apollos teaching 'accurately' the things concerning Jesus (Acts 18:25), the exhortation to walk 'carefully' (Eph 5:15), and the Thessalonians' own knowledge of the Day of the Lord coming 'precisely' as a thief (1 Thess 5:2). Spanish 'exactamente/con-exactitud/diligentemente' and French 'exactement' uniformly convey careful precision. ACCURACY AND PRECISION

en: accurately, carefully | es: con-exactitud, diligentemente, exactamente | fr: exactement | de: genau, ἀκριβῶς Matt 2:8; Luke 1:3; Acts 18:25; Eph 5:15; 1Thess 5:2

2. more accurately (comparative) (4×) The comparative-degree adverb meaning 'more accurately, more precisely, more exactly.' All four occurrences are in Acts: Priscilla and Aquila expound the Way 'more accurately' to Apollos (18:26), the conspirators plan to request Paul under pretense of examining his case 'more precisely' (23:15, 20), and Felix defers judgment since he has 'more exact' knowledge of the Way (24:22). Multilingual evidence consistently marks the comparative: Spanish 'mas-exactamente,' Hindi 'adhik-satikta-se' (more-precisely), reinforcing this as a grammatically and semantically distinct degree from the positive. ACCURACY AND PRECISION

en: more-accurately | es: más-exactamente | fr: exactement | de: genau Acts 18:26; Acts 23:15; Acts 23:20; Acts 24:22

ἀκρίς G0200 N-NFP (4×)

locust; a swarming insect used as food and appearing as an apocalyptic image of divine judgment

The locust (ἀκρίς) appears in two quite different NT contexts. In the Gospels, it is part of John the Baptist's wilderness diet — 'locusts and wild honey' (Matt 3:4; Mark 1:6) — evoking Levitical food laws that permitted certain insects (Lev 11:22) and symbolizing his ascetic prophetic lifestyle. In Revelation 9:3, 7 locusts swarm from the abyss as instruments of divine judgment, recalling the eighth plague of Exodus and Joel's locust army. Spanish 'langostas,' French 'sauterelle,' and German 'Heuschrecken' all denote the same insect across both literal and apocalyptic settings.

(4×) Locust — a swarming grasshopper-like insect known both as a permitted food and as a biblical emblem of devastating plague. Matthew 3:4 and Mark 1:6 mention locusts as the diet of John the Baptist in the Judean wilderness, linking him to prophetic austerity and the clean-insect provisions of Leviticus 11:22. Revelation 9:3, 7 depicts demonic locusts rising from the bottomless pit, drawing on Exodus 10 and Joel 1-2 plague imagery. The consistent cross-lingual rendering (spa 'langostas,' fra 'sauterelle,' deu 'Heuschrecken') confirms a single referent used in both literal and visionary registers. WILDERNESS AND DESERT

en: locusts | es: langostas | fr: sauterelle | de: Heuschrecken, ἀκρίδες Matt 3:4; Mark 1:6; Rev 9:3; Rev 9:7

ἀκρο-ᾱτήριον G0201 N-ANS (1×)

A formal hall or room where official hearings and audiences are conducted

This noun refers to an official chamber designed for formal hearings, appearing in Acts 25:23 when Festus and Agrippa enter with great pomp. The Greek term literally means 'place of hearing' and was used for lecture rooms or audience halls. The consistency across languages (Spanish 'sala-de-audiencias', French 'auditoire') confirms this was a formal space where important public proceedings occurred, fitting the dramatic scene of Paul's hearing before royalty.

(1×) The architectural term designates a purpose-built space for official audiences and judicial hearings. Classical usage included both public audience chambers and private lecture halls where philosophers taught. In this context, it represents the grandeur of Roman provincial administration, where Festus stages Paul's hearing before King Agrippa as a significant public event requiring an impressive venue. HEARING AND HEEDING en: audience-hall | es: sala-de-audiencias | fr: auditoire | de: ἀκροατήριον Acts 25:23

ἀκρο-ᾱτής G0202 N-NMP (4×)

hearer, listener; one who hears a message, especially God's word, with or without obedient response

In classical Greek ἀκροατής denotes someone who attends a public lecture or discourse — a 'hearer' or even 'auditor.' The NT sharpens this into a theological category: the one who hears God's word. Paul contrasts hearers with doers of the law (Rom 2:13), and James famously insists that being a 'hearer only' without doing leads to self-deception (Jas 1:22-25). Spanish 'oidor,' French 'auditeur,' and German 'Hörer' all preserve the auditory root. The NT usage implicitly challenges passive listening and demands active obedience.

(4×) Hearer, listener — one who hears a spoken message, particularly the word of God or the law. In Romans 2:13 Paul draws a sharp line: 'not the hearers of the law are righteous before God, but the doers.' James 1:22-25 develops this contrast at length, warning against being a hearer who forgets and commending the doer who acts. The word carries an inherent tension: hearing is necessary but insufficient. Cross-lingual evidence (spa 'oidor,' fra 'auditeur,' deu 'Hörer') consistently translates the auditory-reception sense, while the biblical contexts add the ethical expectation that hearing must lead to doing. HEARING AND HEEDING

en: a-hearer, hearers | es: oidor, oidores | fr: auditeur | de: Hoerer Rom 2:13; Jas 1:22; Jas 1:23; Jas 1:25

ἀκρο-βυστία G0203 N-GFS (20×)

Uncircumcision; the state of having a foreskin, and by metonymy, the uncircumcised as a collective group.

A distinctly Pauline term appearing almost exclusively in Romans and Galatians, akrobystia denotes the physical state of being uncircumcised and, by extension, Gentile identity itself. Paul's radical argument in Romans 2:25-27 is that law-keeping uncircumcision will be reckoned as circumcision, effectively dissolving the boundary marker. The term carries both a literal anatomical meaning and a powerful theological-ethnic connotation. Spanish distinguishes between 'incircuncision' (the abstract state) and 'prepucio' (the physical foreskin), while French and German consistently use 'prepuce/Vorhaut,' hinting that the concrete anatomical sense underlies even the abstract usage.

1. uncircumcision (19×) The state or condition of being uncircumcised, and by collective metonymy, the uncircumcised peoples (i.e., Gentiles). Dominates Pauline theological argumentation: in Romans 2:25-27, akrobystia is set in direct antithesis to peritome as Paul dismantles the circumcision/uncircumcision divide. In Galatians 5:6 and 6:15, neither circumcision nor akrobystia counts for anything. Spanish 'incircuncision' and the theological registers across languages confirm this as the abstract, identity-marking sense. UNCIRCUMCISION

en: uncircumcision | es: incircuncisión | fr: Vorhaut, prépuce | de: Vorhaut Rom 2:25; Rom 2:26; Rom 2:27; Rom 3:30

2. uncircumcision (1×) The physical foreskin itself, with emphasis on the concrete, bodily reality rather than the abstract state or ethnic category. In Acts 11:3, Peter is challenged specifically for eating with men 'having foreskin' (akrobystian echontas), where the focus is on the physical mark distinguishing the uncircumcised. Spanish shifts to 'prepucio' (foreskin) rather than the abstract 'incircuncision,' and French and German likewise use 'prepuce/Vorhaut,' underscoring the concrete anatomical reference. UNCIRCUMCISION

en: uncircumcision | es: prepucio | fr: prépuce | de: ἀκροβυστίαν Acts 11:3

ἀκρο-γωνιαῖος G0204 Adj-AMS (2×)

cornerstone, foundation stone at the corner binding two walls together

This architectural adjective describes the cornerstone—the foundational stone placed at the corner of a building that binds two walls together and determines alignment. Paul uses it metaphorically in Ephesians 2:20 where Christ is the ἀκρογωνιαῖος—the chief cornerstone—of God's spiritual temple, the church. Peter quotes Isaiah 28:16 in 1 Peter 2:6, describing Christ as the elect, precious ἀκρογωνιαῖον stone laid in Zion. Both apostles draw on Old Testament imagery where the cornerstone represents what is fundamental, chosen, and essential for the entire structure's integrity.

(2×) Cross-linguistic translations preserve the architectural metaphor: Spanish 'piedra angular' (angular stone), French preserving the Greek, German 'Eckstein' (corner-stone). Both NT passages are christological, applying Old Testament cornerstone prophecies to Jesus. The architectural image conveys Christ's essential, foundational role in uniting Jewish and Gentile believers into one spiritual building. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cornerstone | es: angular, piedra-angular | fr: ἀκρογωνιαίου, ἀκρογωνιαῖον | de: Eckstein Eph 2:20; 1Pet 2:6

ἀκρο-θίνιον G0205 N-GNP (1×)

The finest portions of plunder dedicated as offerings, firstfruits of spoils

This term denotes the choicest parts of war booty set apart for sacred purposes, literally 'from the top of the heap.' In Hebrews 7:4, Abraham giving tithes from the spoils to Melchizedek illustrates the patriarch's recognition of the priest's superiority. Classical Greek used this for premium firstfruits offered to gods after military victory. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'despojos', English 'choicest-spoils') captures both the martial context and the quality aspect of these dedicated portions.

(1×) The plural form emphasizes select portions from the top of captured goods, consecrated as sacred offerings. Ancient practice involved dedicating the best spoils to deity as thanksgiving for victory. Abraham's gift of these prime portions to Melchizedek demonstrates the priest-king's exceptional status, since receiving such offerings typically indicated divine authority. This sets up the argument that Melchizedek's priesthood surpasses the Levitical order. PLUNDER AND SPOIL

en: choicest-spoils | es: despojos | fr: Erstlinge-der-Beute | de: Erstlinge-der-Beute Heb 7:4

ἄκρον G0206 N-GNS (6×)

The farthest point, extremity, or tip of something — from cosmic ends of heaven to the tip of a finger (ἄκρον)

A neuter noun denoting the outermost or highest point of any extent, whether vast or minute. At the cosmic scale, Jesus declares that angels will gather the elect 'from one end of the heavens to the other' (Matt 24:31, Mark 13:27). At the intimate scale, the rich man begs Lazarus to dip the 'tip' of his finger in water (Luke 16:24). Spanish captures this range beautifully: extremos for the grand cosmic extremities, punta for the precise fingertip. Arabic tarafa similarly denotes a fine point or extremity.

1. farthest point, extremity, end (4×) The farthest point or extremity of a spatial extent, used for cosmic or geographic boundaries. In Matt 24:31 and the parallel Mark 13:27, the phrase 'from the ends of the heavens to the ends of them' describes the total sweep of divine gathering at the eschaton. Spanish extremos and French extrémité both emphasize the uttermost boundary. The repeated pairing in these eschatological sayings underscores the completeness of God's reach across all creation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ends, the-end | es: extremo, extremos | fr: extrémité | de: Spitze, ἄκρων Matt 24:31; Mark 13:27

2. tip, point (of a body part or object) (2×) The tip or point of a physical object or body part, at the small and intimate scale. In Luke 16:24, the rich man in Hades pleads for Lazarus to dip the tip (ἄκρον) of his finger in water — a poignant detail emphasizing the gulf between them. In Heb 11:21, Jacob worships leaning on the top of his staff. Spanish punta ('point/tip') and Arabic tarafa ('tip/extremity') both isolate this concrete, tactile meaning from the grander cosmic sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: tip, top | es: punta | fr: extrémité | de: Spitze, ἄκρον Luke 16:24; Heb 11:21

Ἀκύλας G0207 N-AMS (6×)

Aquila (Akylas), a Jewish-Christian tentmaker from Pontus, husband of Priscilla, and co-worker with the apostle Paul.

Aquila (Greek Akylas, from the Latin name meaning 'eagle') was a Jewish believer originally from Pontus in northern Asia Minor. He and his wife Priscilla (Prisca) were expelled from Rome under Claudius's edict and settled in Corinth, where they hosted Paul and shared the tentmaking trade (Acts 18:2-3). The couple later accompanied Paul to Ephesus, where they instructed Apollos more accurately in the faith (Acts 18:26). Paul consistently names them as beloved co-workers (Rom 16:3; 1 Cor 16:19; 2 Tim 4:19).

Aquila (proper noun) (6×) The proper name Aquila (Greek Akylas), referring to the Jewish-Christian tentmaker from Pontus who, together with his wife Priscilla, became one of Paul's closest ministry partners. All six NT occurrences refer to the same individual. He appears in narrative (Acts 18:2, 18, 26) and in epistolary greetings (Rom 16:3; 1 Cor 16:19; 2 Tim 4:19), always alongside Priscilla. Spanish 'Akýlas' and French 'Aquila' preserve the name with minor phonetic adaptation, while the consistent pairing with Priscilla across all languages reflects their inseparability in the biblical record. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Akulas, Akylas | es: Akýlas, a-Akylán, a-Akýlas | fr: Aquila | de: Aquila, Ἀκύλαν, Ἀκύλας Acts 18:2; Acts 18:18; Acts 18:26; Rom 16:3; 1Cor 16:19

ἀκῡρόω G0208 V-AIA-2P (3×)

to nullify, invalidate, set aside; to render legally void or without force

A verb of legal annulment—making decrees, contracts, or teachings null and void. Jesus accuses Pharisees of 'nullifying' God's word through tradition (Matt 15:6, Mark 7:13). Paul argues that the law cannot 'invalidate' the earlier promise-covenant to Abraham (Gal 3:17). Classical usage includes canceling decrees and metaphorically rendering passions powerless. The term carries weight of authoritative abrogation.

(3×) Denotes authoritative cancellation or rendering ineffective. Jesus's accusation is severe: human tradition has legally nullified divine commandment—a reversal of authority. Paul's Galatians argument protects covenant priority: the later Mosaic law cannot annul the earlier Abrahamic promise. Multilingual glosses emphasize invalidation: Spanish 'invalidar/anular,' French 'annuler,' German forms of 'invalidate.' Each context involves competing authorities—which word or covenant has final force? ANNUL FRUSTRATE PLANS

en: invalidates, nullifying, you-made-void | es: anulando, habéis-invalidado, invalida | fr: annuler | de: ἀκυροῖ, ἀκυροῦντες, ἠκυρώσατε Matt 15:6; Mark 7:13; Gal 3:17

ἀκώλῡτος G0209 Adv (1×)

Without hindrance, obstruction, or interference; freely and openly

This adverb describes action proceeding without any obstacles or restraints. Acts 28:31 uses it to conclude Luke's narrative, showing Paul preaching in Rome 'unhindered' despite house arrest. The word emphasizes the unstoppable advance of the gospel even in chains. Across languages (Spanish 'sin-impedimento', French 'sans-empêchement'), the translations capture this sense of freedom from restriction, making it a triumphant note on which Acts ends.

(1×) The adverbial form stresses continuous, unobstructed activity despite external circumstances. Classical usage applied it to unimpeded motion or action. Luke's strategic placement at Acts' conclusion emphasizes that neither Jewish opposition nor Roman custody could stop the gospel's proclamation. Paul's unhindered preaching while under guard demonstrates the kingdom's spiritual power transcending physical constraints. MANNER ADVERBS

en: unhindered | es: sin-impedimento | fr: sans-empêchement | de: ἀκωλύτως Acts 28:31

ἀέκων G0210 Adj-NMS (1×)

Unwilling, involuntary, against one's will or desire

This adjective describes actions taken reluctantly or under constraint rather than by free choice. In 1 Corinthians 9:17, Paul contrasts voluntary versus involuntary ministry, noting that even unwilling service carries responsibility. Classical Greek distinguished sharply between willing (βουλόμενος) and unwilling action. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'involuntariamente', French 'contre-gré', German 'unfreiwillig') all emphasize the absence of willing consent, crucial to Paul's argument about stewardship.

(1×) The masculine nominative form indicates a person acting without willing consent, whether under compulsion or divine constraint. Classical usage opposed this to voluntary choice in ethical and legal contexts. Paul's logic turns on the distinction: willing stewardship earns reward, while even involuntary stewardship remains a sacred trust. The word captures the tension between divine commission and human volition in apostolic ministry. DESIRE AND WILLING en: unwillingly | es: involuntariamente | fr: contre-gré | de: unfreiwillig 1Cor 9:17

ἀλάβαστος G0211 N-AFS (4×)

alabaster jar; a small, handleless perfume flask typically carved from alabaster stone

In the ancient Mediterranean world, perfumes and precious ointments were stored in small globular flasks carved from alabaster, a translucent mineral prized for preserving fragrance. The Greek term refers not to the stone itself but to the vessel made from it. All four New Testament occurrences describe a woman breaking open such a jar to anoint Jesus (Matt 26:7; Mark 14:3; Luke 7:37), an act of costly devotion since the sealed neck had to be snapped to release the contents.

(4×) A small, handleless perfume vessel typically carved from alabaster stone, designed with a sealed neck to preserve costly ointments. The multilingual evidence consistently renders this as a container rather than the mineral: Spanish 'frasco de alabastro' (flask of alabaster) and French 'vase d'albatre' both emphasize the vessel. Every NT use involves anointing Jesus with expensive nard or perfume. STONE AND ROCK

en: alabaster-jar, an-alabaster-jar | es: alabastro, frasco-de-alabastro, un-frasco-de-alabastro | fr: vase-d'albâtre | de: ἀλάβαστρον Matt 26:7; Mark 14:3; Luke 7:37

ἀλαζ-ονεία G0212 N-NFS (2×)

boastfulness, arrogant pretension, vain display

This noun denotes arrogant boasting or pretentious display, often accompanied by unrealistic claims. James 4:16 condemns those who boast in their ἀλαζονείαις—arrogant plans—about tomorrow's business ventures, forgetting life's fragility and God's sovereignty. In 1 John 2:16, ἡ ἀλαζονεία τοῦ βίου (the pride of life) is listed alongside fleshly lust and eye-lust as worldly desires not from the Father. The classical background includes charlatan imposture and boastful pretension, suggesting not just pride but fraudulent self-promotion.

(2×) The boastfulness theme dominates translations: Spanish 'vanagloria' (vainglory) and 'arrogancias,' French preserving the Greek, German 'Prahlerei' (bragging). James applies it to presumptuous business planning, while John uses it more broadly for worldly pride. Both contexts critique self-centered confidence that excludes God from consideration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: arrogance, boasting | es: arrogancias, vanagloria | fr: ἀλαζονεία, ἀλαζονείαις | de: Prahlerei Jas 4:16; 1John 2:16

ἀλαζ-ών G0213 N-NMP (2×)

braggart, boaster, one who makes empty or arrogant claims

This noun describes a person characterized by arrogant boasting or empty pretensions. The classical background includes wandering charlatans, sophistic quacks, and empty braggarts. Paul uses it in Romans 1:30 within a vice catalog describing fallen humanity: ἀλαζόνας (boasters) appears alongside God-haters and the insolent. In 2 Timothy 3:2, Paul warns that in the last days people will be lovers of self, lovers of money, ἀλαζόνες (boastful), and proud. Both contexts link boastfulness with other manifestations of self-centered pride that disregards God.

(2×) Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize the boasting character: Spanish 'jactanciosos,' French and German 'Prahler' (braggarts). Both Pauline vice lists place boasters among those characterized by self-exaltation. The term's classical association with fraudulent sophists and wandering quacks adds a dimension of empty pretension and unreliable claims. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: boasters, boastful | es: jactanciosos | fr: Prahler, ἀλαζόνας | de: Prahler Rom 1:30; 2Tim 3:2

ἀλᾰλ-άζω G0214 V-PPA-AMP (2×)

to raise a war cry, to wail loudly, to make loud clanging sounds

This verb originally meant to raise the battle cry, then expanded to loud shouting in orgiastic rites, and finally to any loud crying or wailing. Mark 5:38 describes the scene at Jairus's house where people were ἀλαλάζοντας—wailing loudly—over the dead girl. In 1 Corinthians 13:1, Paul says speaking without love makes him like a noisy gong or κύμβαλον ἀλαλάζον—a clanging cymbal. The semantic range spans from martial war cries to ritual ecstatic shouts to funeral laments to mere noise, united by the idea of loud, often inarticulate sound.

(2×) The translations capture different aspects: Spanish 'lamentando' (lamenting) and 'que resuena' (resounding), French 'hurler' (howl) and 'pousser des cris,' German 'lärmen' (make noise). Mark's context clearly indicates funeral wailing, while Paul's reference is to empty noise. The classical background in battle cries and Bacchic rites shows how emotional intensity and loud vocalization unite these diverse uses. SINGING AND MUSIC

en: clanging, wailing | es: lamentando, que-re-suena | fr: hurler, pousser-des-cris | de: laermen Mark 5:38; 1Cor 13:1

ἀλάλητος G0215 Adj-DMP (1×)

Inexpressible, unable to be articulated or put into words

This adjective describes what cannot be spoken or adequately expressed in language. In Romans 8:26, the Spirit intercedes with groans too deep for words when believers don't know how to pray. The term emphasizes communication beyond verbal capacity. Classical Greek used it for unspeakable things, while the multilingual evidence (Spanish 'indecibles', French 'indicible', German 'unaussprechlich') confirms this sense of transcending linguistic expression, pointing to prayer's ineffable dimensions.

(1×) The dative plural form modifies 'groanings' that surpass verbal articulation. Classical usage encompassed both what should not be spoken and what cannot be spoken. Paul's context involves the Spirit's intercession when human words fail, suggesting prayer operating at levels deeper than conscious formulation. This captures the mystery of Spirit-enabled prayer that exceeds our linguistic and conceptual limitations. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9012 WITH 4 SENSES

en: unspoken | es: indecibles | fr: indicible | de: unaussprechlich Rom 8:26

ἄλᾰλος G0216 Adj-ANS (3×)

mute, speechless, unable to speak

An adjective describing inability to speak. Jesus heals a deaf and 'mute' man who then spoke plainly (Mark 7:37). A father brings his son with a 'mute spirit' that prevents speech (Mark 9:17), and Jesus commands the 'mute and deaf spirit' to leave (9:25). Classical usage applies to people lying speechless or struck silent. Medical and demonic causes overlap in ancient understanding.

(3×) Denotes the condition of being unable to speak—whether from physical impediment or spiritual oppression. Mark's healings link muteness with demonic affliction: the spirit prevents speech, its expulsion restores it. The consistent cross-linguistic rendering (Spanish 'mudo/mudos,' French 'muet,' German 'stumm') shows transparent meaning. Ancient context doesn't sharply distinguish medical from spiritual causation—the important point is incapacity and restoration of communication. DEAF AND MUTE

en: mute | es: mudo, mudos | fr: muet | de: stumm Mark 7:37; Mark 9:17; Mark 9:25

ἅλας G0217 N-DNS (8×)

Salt: the mineral substance used for seasoning, preservation, and as a metaphor for covenant faithfulness and moral influence.

The common mineral used for flavoring and preserving food, elevated by Jesus into one of the most vivid metaphors in the Gospels. 'You are the salt of the earth,' he tells his disciples (Matt 5:13), warning that salt which loses its savor is worthless. Mark 9:50 develops the image further: 'Have salt in yourselves, and be at peace with one another.' Paul instructs that speech should be 'seasoned with salt' (Col 4:6). Behind these metaphors lies the Old Testament 'covenant of salt' — an unbreakable pact. Spanish 'sal,' French 'sel,' and German 'Salz' all reflect this single referent with its rich metaphorical extensions.

salt (8×) Salt — the mineral substance used literally for seasoning and preservation, and metaphorically for the preserving, purifying influence of disciples in the world. Jesus declares 'You are the salt of the earth' (Matt 5:13) and warns against salt losing its flavor; Mark 9:50 uses salt as a symbol of inner spiritual vitality and peaceableness; Col 4:6 applies it to gracious speech. The multilingual consistency (Spanish 'sal,' French 'sel,' German 'Salz') confirms the single referent, with the metaphorical extensions arising from the well-known physical properties of the substance rather than from distinct lexical senses. SALT SUBSTANCE

en: salt, with-salt | es: con-sal, sal | fr: sel | de: Salz, ἅλα, ἅλας Matt 5:13; Mark 9:50

ἀλείφω G0218 V-IIA-3P (9×)

To anoint; to rub or apply oil, ointment, or perfume to a person's body, head, or feet for hospitality, healing, or burial.

Unlike the more theologically loaded chrio (used for messianic anointing), aleipho is the everyday, physical act of rubbing oil or perfume onto someone. It appears in contexts of personal grooming (Matt 6:17, where Jesus says to anoint your head when fasting), acts of devotion and hospitality (Luke 7:38, 46, where a woman anoints Jesus' feet), healing ministry (Mark 6:13; James 5:14, anointing the sick with oil), and burial preparation (Mark 16:1). The Spanish 'ungir,' French 'oindre,' and German 'salben' all preserve this concrete, tactile sense of applying a substance to the body, distinguishing it from ceremonial consecration.

to anoint (with oil or ointment) (9×) To apply oil, ointment, or perfume to a person's body by rubbing—covering acts of personal grooming (Matt 6:17, anointing one's head while fasting), lavish devotion and hospitality (Luke 7:38, 46; John 11:2; 12:3, anointing Jesus' feet), healing prayer (Mark 6:13; James 5:14, anointing the sick with oil), and preparation for burial (Mark 16:1). This is the physical, everyday term for anointing rather than the sacral or messianic term (chrio), emphasizing the tangible act of applying a substance to the skin. ANOINTING AND SMEARING

en: anoint, anointed, having-anointed | es: habiéndole-ungido, que-ungió, unge | fr: oindre | de: salben, ἄλειψαί, ἤλειφεν Matt 6:17; Mark 6:13; Mark 16:1; Luke 7:38; Luke 7:46

ἀλεκτορ-οφωνία G0219 N-GFS (1×)

Cock-crow, the time when roosters crow before dawn (third watch)

This noun designates the pre-dawn hour marked by roosters crowing, used to denote the third watch of the night. In Mark 13:35, Jesus lists the night watches including 'cock-crow,' situating it between midnight and dawn. Classical Greek used this compound for this specific time marker in the Roman watch system. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'canto-de-gallo', French 'chant-du-coq', German 'Hahnenschrei') all reference the rooster's cry as a temporal indicator, crucial for understanding Jesus' predictions about Peter's denial.

(1×) The genitive singular form denotes a specific temporal division in the Roman four-watch night system, approximately 3-6 AM. Ancient societies relied on natural phenomena like rooster crowing to mark time before mechanical clocks. Mark's inclusion in the watch sequence provides precise temporal framework for end-times vigilance. This same time marker gains poignant significance in the passion narrative when Peter denies Jesus. NIGHT AND LODGING

en: at-rooster-crowing | es: canto-de-gallo | fr: chant-du-coq | de: Hahnenschrei Mark 13:35

ἀλέκτωρ G0220 N-NMS (12×)

Rooster, cock; the domestic fowl whose crowing marks the pre-dawn watch, central to Peter's denial narrative.

The common Greek word for a rooster or cock, appearing exclusively in the Passion narratives across all four Gospels. Jesus prophesies that before the rooster crows, Peter will deny him three times (Matt 26:34; Mark 14:30; Luke 22:34; John 13:38), and the cockcrow becomes the devastating signal of fulfilled prophecy (Matt 26:74-75; Mark 14:72; Luke 22:60-61; John 18:27). Mark's account uniquely specifies 'before the rooster crows twice.' The rooster's crow thus functions as more than a time marker — it is the sound of conscience and prophetic vindication. Spanish 'gallo,' French 'coq,' and German 'Hahn' all denote the same domestic bird.

(12×) A rooster or cock, the domestic bird whose pre-dawn crowing served as a natural time marker in the ancient world. All twelve NT occurrences cluster in the Passion narrative of Peter's denial: Jesus predicts that the rooster will crow before Peter's threefold denial (Matt 26:34; Mark 14:30; Luke 22:34; John 13:38), and the actual crowing confirms the prophecy (Matt 26:74-75; Mark 14:68, 72; Luke 22:60; John 18:27). The cockcrow functions simultaneously as time signal and prophetic fulfillment. Spanish 'gallo,' French 'coq,' and German 'Hahn' all identify the same common farmyard bird. LIVING CREATURES

en: a-rooster, rooster | es: de-gallo, de-que-gallo, gallo | fr: coq | de: Hahn, ἀλέκτορα, ἀλέκτωρ Matt 26:34; Matt 26:74; Matt 26:75; Mark 14:30; Mark 14:68

Ἀλεξανδρεύς G0221 N-NMS (2×)

Alexandrian, a native or inhabitant of Alexandria in Egypt

This proper adjective identifies someone from Alexandria, the great Hellenistic city in Egypt founded by Alexander the Great. Alexandria was a major intellectual and commercial center with a large Jewish population. Acts 6:9 mentions members from the synagogue of the Alexandrians (τῶν Ἀλεξανδρέων) who disputed with Stephen. Acts 18:24 introduces Apollos as an Alexandrian (Ἀλεξανδρεύς) by birth, eloquent and mighty in the Scriptures. Both references connect Alexandrians with learning and Scripture knowledge, reflecting the city's reputation as a center of Jewish scholarship.

(2×) The ethnic-geographic identification appears uniformly: Spanish 'alejandrino,' French 'Alexandrin.' The two contexts present Alexandrians in different lights—opponents of Stephen (Acts 6) and the gifted teacher Apollos (Acts 18). Alexandria's prominence in Jewish diaspora life, home to scholars like Philo and the translators of the Septuagint, makes this designation significant for understanding early Christian engagement with Hellenistic Judaism. NATIONS AND PEOPLES

en: Alexandreus, of-Alexandreis | es: alejandrino, de-los-Alexandréōn | fr: Alexandrin | de: Ἀλεξανδρέων, Ἀλεξανδρεὺς Acts 6:9; Acts 18:24

Ἀλεξανδρινός G0222 Adj-DNS (2×)

Alexandrian, pertaining to or originating from Alexandria

This adjective describes things originating from or associated with Alexandria. Both New Testament occurrences refer to ships: in Acts 27:6, Paul and his guards board an Alexandrian ship (πλοῖον Ἀλεξανδρῖνον) sailing to Italy. In Acts 28:11, after wintering in Malta, they sail on another Alexandrian ship. These were grain ships from Egypt, part of the vital imperial grain fleet that supplied Rome with Egyptian wheat. Luke's notation of the ships' origin reflects both historical precision and the importance of Alexandrian maritime commerce in the Roman economy.

(2×) All translations preserve the geographic designation: Spanish 'alejandrino,' French 'Alexandrin.' Both references occur within Paul's voyage to Rome narrative, identifying grain ships from Alexandria. The adjective marks the ships' port of origin, reflecting Alexandria's role as the primary Mediterranean source of grain for

Rome and a major hub of sea commerce. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Alexandrian | es: alejandrino | fr: Alexandrin | de: Ἀλεξανδρινῷ, Ἀλεξανδρῖνον Acts 27:6; Acts 28:11

Ἀλέξανδρος G0223 N-AMS (6×)

Alexander; a Greek personal name borne by several NT figures including a relative of the high priest and a coppersmith

A common Hellenistic name meaning 'defender of men,' borne by at least four distinct individuals in the New Testament. Simon of Cyrene's son Alexander is named at the cross (Mark 15:21), suggesting he was known to Mark's audience. A kinsman of the high priest appears in Acts 4:6, while a Jewish man is thrust forward during the Ephesian riot (Acts 19:33). Paul names an Alexander the coppersmith who did him great harm (2 Tim 4:14), possibly the same man handed over to Satan in 1 Timothy 1:20. The name's universal retention across languages – Spanish Alejandros, French Alexandre – reflects its status as an established proper noun.

Alexander (proper noun) (6×) The personal name Alexander (Alexandros, 'defender of men'), applied in the NT to several individuals. The name's Greek form appears consistently across languages – Spanish 'Alejandros,' French 'Alexandre,' German preserving the Greek inflected forms – reflecting its status as a loanword proper noun. The multiple bearers span from the passion narrative (Mark 15:21) to the Pauline epistles (1 Tim 1:20; 2 Tim 4:14), illustrating how common this Hellenistic name was across social strata in the first-century Mediterranean world. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Alexandros, of-Alexandros | es: Aléxandros, a-Aléxandros, de-Aléxandros | fr: Alexandre | de: Ἀλέξανδρον, Ἀλέξανδρος, Ἀλεξάνδρου Mark 15:21; Acts 4:6; Acts 19:33; 1Tim 1:20

ἄλευρον G0224 N-GNS (2×)

fine flour, wheat flour ground to powder for baking

This noun refers to finely ground wheat flour, the refined powder used for bread-making. Both occurrences appear in Jesus' parable of the leaven: a woman takes leaven and hides it in three measures of ἀλεύρου (flour) until the whole batch is leavened (Matthew 13:33; Luke 13:21). The parable illustrates the kingdom of heaven's pervasive influence—like yeast working through an entire batch of dough, the kingdom will transform the whole. The three measures (about 40 liters) represent a large quantity, enough for many loaves.

(2×) The culinary term is rendered consistently: Spanish 'harina,' French 'farine,' German preserving the Greek root. Both Gospel accounts present identical parabolic contexts. Flour as the medium for leaven's work makes it central to the parable's imagery—the kingdom's transformative power works through the ordinary material of daily life, just as yeast works through flour to create bread. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT
en: of-flour | es: de-harina | fr: farine | de: ἀλεύρου Matt 13:33; Luke 13:21

ἀλήθ-εια G0225 N-NFS (110×)

Truth, reality, faithfulness; divine truth, sincerity, and what accords with fact as opposed to falsehood

Aletheia encompasses truth as both a moral quality and an ontological reality. In the Synoptic Gospels it often appears in phrases like 'in truth' (ep' aletheias, Mark 12:14), affirming honest speech or divine faithfulness. In John's writings it acquires a distinctly theological dimension: Jesus declares himself 'the truth' (John 14:6), and the Spirit is called 'the Spirit of truth.' Paul uses it for the gospel message and for personal integrity. Translations across all major languages render it with cognates of 'truth' — Spanish 'verdad,' French 'vérité,' German 'Wahrheit' — reflecting the concept's clarity across cultures.

truth, reality (110×) The quality of being true, real, or in accord with fact and divine reality. Covers honest speech (Mark 5:33, 'she told him the whole truth'), divine faithfulness and gospel truth (Gal 2:5), and the Johannine theological sense where Jesus embodies truth itself (John 14:6). The consistent rendering across languages — Spanish 'verdad,' German 'Wahrheit' — confirms its stable semantic core spanning sincerity, factual accuracy, and ultimate reality. TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS en: truth | es: de-verdad, verdad | fr: vérité | de: Wahrheit Matt 22:16; Mark 5:33; Mark 12:14; Mark 12:32; Luke 4:25

ἀληθ-εύω G0226 V-PPA-NMP (2×)

to speak truth, to be truthful, to tell the truth

This verb means to speak or practice truth, emphasizing truthful communication. In Galatians 4:16, Paul asks rhetorically whether he has become their enemy by ἀληθεύων—telling them the truth. Ephesians 4:15 exhorts believers to ἀληθεύοντες ἐν ἀγάπῃ—speak truth in love—so they may grow up into Christ. The classical usage includes speaking truth, proving statements true, and being fulfilled (of prophecies). Paul employs it to emphasize authentic, truthful speech that serves love and spiritual growth rather than flattery or deception.

(2×) Cross-linguistic renderings emphasize truthful speech: Spanish 'diciéndoos verdad' (telling you truth) and 'hablando verdad,' French preserving the Greek, German 'die Wahrheit reden' (speak the truth). Galatians highlights potential offense from truth-telling, while Ephesians balances truth with love. Both contexts value honest communication as essential to healthy Christian relationships. TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS en: speaking-truth | es: diciéndoos-verdad, hablando-verdad | fr: ἀληθεύοντες, ἀληθεύων | de: die-Wahrheit-reden Gal 4:16; Eph 4:15

ἀληθ-ής G0227 Adj-ANS (26×)

True, genuine, real – of statements, persons, or realities that are unconcealed and not false

From the root meaning 'unconcealed' (a-lethes, that which does not escape notice), this adjective describes what is true, genuine, and real as opposed to false or merely apparent. Jesus is called a true teacher (Matt 22:16, Mark 12:14), God is declared true when he speaks (John 3:33, Rom 3:4), and the word characterizes faithful testimony (John 5:31-32). In Paul's ministry the contrast sharpens: 'as deceivers, yet true' (2 Cor 6:8). Translations are strikingly uniform – 'verdadero/a' (spa), 'vrai' (fra), 'wahr' (deu) – reflecting the word's semantic stability across its New Testament occurrences.

1. true (24×) True, real, or genuine in the primary sense – applied to statements, testimony, teachings, and divine realities that correspond to fact and are not deceptive. Jesus is acknowledged as one who teaches 'the way of God in truth' (Matt 22:16), God is declared 'true' when every person is a liar (Rom 3:4), and Jesus affirms that his witness is 'true' (John 5:31-32, 8:26). Spanish 'verdadera/verdad,' French 'vrai,' and German 'wahr' all uniformly render this broad sense. TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS en: true, true-things | es: verdad, verdadera, verdaderas | fr: vrai | de: wahr Matt 22:16; Mark 12:14; John 3:33; John 4:18; John 5:31

2. true (2×) True in the sense of truthful, veracious, or sincere as applied to persons and their character – emphasizing personal integrity rather than propositional accuracy. Paul describes his ministry as commending himself 'as truthful' despite being called a deceiver (2 Cor 6:8), and in Rom 3:4 God himself is declared 'veraz' (spa) – truthful in his very nature. The Spanish distinction between 'verdadero' (sense 1) and 'veraz' (sense 2) captures this subtle shift from factual truth to personal veracity. TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS en: true | es: veraces, veraz | fr: vrai | de: wahr Rom 3:4; 2Cor 6:8

ἀληθῑνός G0228 Adj-GNP (28×)

true, genuine, real — describing what is authentic and ultimate in contrast to what is shadowy or counterfeit Alethinos (from aletheia, 'truth') means true in the sense of genuine, real, and ultimate — not merely 'not false' but 'the authentic original of which all else is copy or shadow.' Its 28 New Testament occurrences concentrate heavily in the Johannine literature, where the adjective becomes a theological signature. Jesus is the 'true light' that enlightens everyone (John 1:9), offers 'true bread from heaven' surpassing the manna (John 6:32), and declares himself the 'true vine' of which Israel was only the figure (John 15:1). The Father is the one 'true God' (John 17:3; 1 John 5:20), and genuine worshipers worship in spirit and truth as 'true worshipers' (John 4:23). In Revelation, God's judgments are declared 'true and just' (Rev 15:3; 16:7; 19:2), and the rider on the white horse is called 'Faithful and True' (Rev 19:11). Hebrews contrasts the earthly tabernacle with the 'true tent' in heaven (Heb 8:2; 9:24). Spanish 'verdadero' and German 'wahrhaftig' both reflect the weight of genuine rather than merely factual.

true (28×) Genuine, real, and ultimate — marking what is authentically divine over against what is derivative, shadowy, or counterfeit. Central to Johannine theology: Jesus as the 'true light' (John 1:9), 'true bread' (John 6:32), 'true vine' (John 15:1), and the Father as the only 'true God' (John 17:3). In Hebrews, the heavenly sanctuary is the 'true tent' versus its earthly copy (Heb 8:2; 9:24). In Revelation, God's judgments are 'true and righteous' (Rev 16:7; 19:2) and the returning Christ is 'Faithful and True' (Rev 19:11). TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS en: true | es: verdadera, verdaderas, verdaderas; | fr: véritable | de: wahrhaftig, ἀληθινὸν Luke 16:11; John 1:9; John 4:23; John 4:37; John 6:32

ἀλήθω G0229 V-PPA-NFP (2×)

to grind, to mill grain into flour using millstones

This verb means to grind grain, typically using millstones to produce flour. Both occurrences appear in Jesus' eschatological discourse describing daily activities interrupted by the coming of the Son of Man: two women will be ἀλήθουσαι—grinding at the mill—and one will be taken, the other left (Matthew 24:41; Luke 17:35). Grinding grain was daily women's work in ancient households, usually done with hand mills in the early morning. Jesus uses this ordinary domestic task to illustrate how his return will come unexpectedly during normal life activities.

(2×) The milling activity appears uniformly: Spanish 'moliendo,' French 'moudre,' German preserving the Greek. Both eschatological passages present the same scenario of women at their daily grinding work. The verb connects to the whole complex of grain processing—from harvest to milling to baking—that sustained ancient Near Eastern life, here used to emphasize the ordinariness of the moment when the extraordinary divine intervention occurs. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: grinding | es: moliendo | fr: moudre | de: ἀλήθουσαι Matt 24:41; Luke 17:35

ἀληθ-ής G0230 Adv (18×)

Truly, certainly — an adverb affirming the reality or genuineness of a statement

An adverb derived from alethes ('true, unconcealed') that affirms the truthfulness or certainty of what is being said. It appears at critical moments of recognition in the Gospels — the centurion's confession 'Truly this was God's Son' (Matt 27:54; Mark 15:39) and the disciples' declaration after Jesus walks on water (Matt 14:33). Peter's Galilean accent is identified 'truly' by the bystanders (Matt 26:73). German 'wahrhaftig' and French 'vraiment' both emphasize genuine, verified truth rather than mere emphasis.

truly (18×) An adverb meaning 'truly, certainly, indeed,' used to affirm the reality of a claim or identity. In the NT it marks decisive confessions of faith or recognition — the centurion at the cross (Matt 27:54; Mark 15:39), the disciples in the boat (Matt 14:33) — as well as assertions of verified fact (Matt 26:73; Mark 14:70). Cross-linguistically stable across all major translations as a marker of genuine affirmation. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES en: Truly, truly | es: Verdaderamente, verdaderamente | fr: vraiment | de: wahrhaftig Matt 14:33; Matt 26:73; Matt 27:54; Mark 14:70; Mark 15:39

ἁλι-εύς G0231 N-AMP (5×)

A fisherman; one who catches fish by trade, particularly associated with the Sea of Galilee in the Gospels.

Derived from hals (sea), this noun denotes a professional fisherman. In the New Testament it appears exclusively in the Synoptic Gospels to describe the Galilean disciples whom Jesus called away from their nets. Spanish "pescadores" and French "pêcheur" both preserve the occupation clearly. The word carries symbolic weight: Jesus transforms these fishermen into "fishers of men" (Matt 4:19), making the humble trade a metaphor for the apostolic mission.

(5×) A person who catches fish as a livelihood, a fisherman. All five NT occurrences refer to the disciples at the Sea of Galilee—Simon Peter and Andrew casting nets (Matt 4:18), Jesus promising to make them fishers of men (Matt 4:19, Mark 1:17), and the fishermen washing their nets at the lakeside (Luke 5:2). The multilingual evidence is uniform: English 'fishermen/fishers,' Spanish 'pescadores,' French 'pêcheur'—all pointing to a single concrete occupational sense without metaphorical extension in the noun itself. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12467 WITH 7 SENSES

en: fishermen, fishers | es: pescadores | fr: pêcheur | de: ἁλιεῖς Matt 4:18; Matt 4:19; Mark 1:16; Mark 1:17; Luke 5:2

ἁλι-εύω G0232 V-PNA (1×)

To fish, to engage in catching fish as an occupation or activity

This verb means to catch fish or practice the fishing trade. In John 21:3, Peter announces 'I am going fishing,' returning to his former occupation after Jesus' resurrection. Classical Greek used the middle voice for professional fishing activity. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'a-pescar', French 'pêcher', German 'fischen') uniformly captures this occupational sense. Peter's declaration marks a pivotal moment when the disciples seem to revert to their pre-calling life before Jesus restores Peter by the lakeside.

(1×) The present active infinitive expresses ongoing fishing activity, typically professional rather than recreational. Classical usage distinguished between active catching and the middle voice for being a fisherman by trade. Peter's return to fishing after the resurrection creates narrative tension resolved only when Jesus appears and reinstates him, transforming him from catching fish to shepherding people as the risen Lord commissioned. HUNTING ACTIVITY

en: to-fish | es: a-pescar | fr: pêcher | de: fischen John 21:3

ἁλίζω G0233 V-FIP-3S (3×)

to salt, preserve with salt; to season or to be salted

A verb describing salting action or state. Jesus warns that salt losing saltiness cannot be 'salted' again (Matt 5:13). Mark 9:49 states 'everyone will be salted with fire'—a difficult saying possibly about purifying trials. The next phrase (also 9:49) speaks of sacrifices being salted, recalling Levitical requirements. Classical usage includes supplying food with salt and passive forms for being salted or seasoned.

(3×) Refers to the act or process of salting—preserving, seasoning, or purifying. Jesus's salt sayings play on multiple meanings: disciples as preserving salt for the earth, the crisis if that salt fails, the impossibility of re-salting the saltless. Mark's 'salted with fire' usage is cryptic—perhaps trials as purifying agent, or sacrificial allusion. The consistent verb forms across languages (Spanish 'será salada/salado,' French 'saler') preserve the culinary and preservative metaphor. SALT SUBSTANCE

en: will-be-salted, will-it-be-salted | es: será-salada, será-salado | fr: saler | de: ἁλισθήσεται, ἁλισθήσεται> Matt 5:13; Mark 9:49

ἁλίσγ-ημα G0234 N-GNP (1×)

Pollutions, ceremonial defilements associated with idolatry

This noun denotes religious contamination or defilement, particularly from idol worship. In Acts 15:20, the Jerusalem Council instructs Gentile believers to abstain from pollutions of idols. The term carries strong cultic overtones of ritual impurity. While rare in classical Greek, the context and multilingual glosses (Spanish 'contaminaciones', French 'souiller') emphasize ceremonial contamination rather than physical dirt. The decree addresses how Gentile converts should navigate pagan religious practices without compromising monotheistic purity.

(1×) The genitive plural form refers to various types of ceremonial defilement contracted through association with idol worship, including food offered to idols and related practices. The Jerusalem Council's language reflects Jewish purity categories being applied to Gentile believers. These pollutions encompass the broader contamination system surrounding pagan cult practices, requiring Gentiles to maintain separation from idolatrous rituals while not imposing full Mosaic law. DEFILEMENT AND UNCLEANNESS

en: pollutions | es: contaminaciones | fr: souiller | de: ἀλισγημάτων Acts 15:20

ἀλλά G0235 Conj (644×)

but, rather, on the contrary — adversative conjunction introducing contrast, correction, or exception

Alla is the primary adversative conjunction of the Greek New Testament, appearing 644 times to mark sharp contrasts and corrections. Derived from the neuter plural of allos ('other'), it carries a force stronger than the milder de. Its range runs from simple opposition ('not bread alone, but every word of God,' Matt 4:4) to emphatic reversal ('on the contrary'). In Pauline rhetoric especially, alla drives the argumentative pivot — 'not by works, but by grace.' The translations confirm this unified adversative sense: Spanish 'pero/sino,' French 'mais,' German 'sondern' — each capturing the corrective thrust.

but, rather, on the contrary (644×) An adversative conjunction that introduces a contrasting, correcting, or superseding clause, ranging in force from mild opposition ('but,' Matt 5:15) to strong antithetical correction ('on the contrary,' Rom 3:31). Often paired with a preceding negative (ou...alla, 'not X but Y') as in Matt 4:4. All 644 NT occurrences serve this single contrastive-corrective function across narrative, discourse, and epistolary genres. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: But-, but, but- | es: pero, sino | fr: mais | de: sondern Matt 4:4; Matt 5:15; Matt 5:17; Matt 5:39; Matt 6:13

ἀλλάσσω G0236 V-ANA (6×)

To change, alter, exchange, or transform; used of both sinful exchange and eschatological transformation

A verb covering the full spectrum from deliberate exchange to divine transformation. Paul uses the active voice strikingly in Romans 1:23, where humanity 'exchanged' (ellaxan) the glory of God for idols – Spanish 'cambiaron' capturing the willful swap. In sharp contrast, the passive appears in 1 Corinthians 15:51-52 for the believers' resurrection transformation: 'we shall be changed' (allagesometha). The same root thus carries both humanity's worst trade and God's greatest gift, with Acts 6:14 adding the accusation that Jesus would 'change' Mosaic customs.

change, exchange, transform (6×) To change, exchange, or transform something – covering both the active sense of swapping one thing for another and the passive sense of being transformed. In Acts 6:14 the accusation is that Jesus will 'change' the customs Moses delivered. Romans 1:23 uses the active for the catastrophic exchange of divine glory for images – Spanish 'cambiaron' capturing the deliberate swap. The passive in 1 Corinthians 15:51-52 describes eschatological bodily transformation, where Spanish 'cambiara' and French 'etre transforme' both highlight the radical nature of the change. Galatians 4:20 shows an interpersonal sense: Paul wishes to 'change' his tone toward the Galatians. CHANGE AND EXCHANGE

en: they-exchanged, they-will-be-changed, to-change | es: cambiar, cambiaron, cambiará | fr: être-transformé, ἀλλάξει, ἀλλαγησόμεθα | de: verwandelt-werden, ἀλλάξει Acts 6:14; Rom 1:23; 1Cor 15:51; 1Cor 15:52; Gal 4:20

ἀλλαχ-όθεν G0237 Adv (2×)

from another place, from elsewhere, by another route

This adverb indicates origin or direction from another place. In Mark 1:38, Jesus tells his disciples to go ἀλλαχοῦ—to the neighboring towns—so he can preach there also. John 10:1 uses it metaphorically: anyone not entering the sheepfold by the door but climbing in ἀλλαχόθεν—another way—is a thief and robber. The classical usage emphasizes origin from a different source or location. Mark applies it literally to geographic movement, while John employs it figuratively for unauthorized access, contrasting the legitimate entrance (Christ as door) with illegitimate alternatives.

(2×) The spatial displacement appears in translations: Spanish 'a otra parte' (to another part) and 'por otro lado' (by another side), French 'd'ailleurs' (from elsewhere), German 'anderswoher' (from elsewhere). Mark's context involves ministry extension to other towns, John's involves the contrast between proper and improper means of access. Both invoke the concept of an alternative location or route. MANNER ADVERBS

en: another-way, elsewhere | es: a-otra-parte, por-otro-lado | fr: d'ailleurs | de: anderswoher Mark 1:38; John 10:1

ἀλληγορ-έω G0238 V-PPM/P-NNP (1×)

Being spoken allegorically, interpreted or expressed in figurative terms

This verb means to interpret or speak allegorically, treating narrative as symbolic rather than merely historical. In Galatians 4:24, Paul states these things 'are being allegorized,' treating Sarah and Hagar as representing two covenants. Classical Greek used this term for figurative interpretation of myths and texts. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'habladas-alegóricamente', German 'allegorisch-reden') confirms this hermeneutical sense of finding deeper symbolic meaning. Paul's allegorical reading demonstrates early Christian interpretive methods.

(1×) The present passive participle indicates ongoing allegorical interpretation where historical narrative simultaneously carries symbolic meaning. Classical usage involved philosophical interpretation of Homer and mythology as encoding deeper truths. Paul applies this technique to Genesis, reading the patriarchal household as prefiguring covenant theology. This hermeneutical move illustrates how early Christians found Christ and the gospel embedded throughout Hebrew Scripture via typological and allegorical reading. INTERPRET TRANSLATE en: being-allegorized | es: habladas-alegóricamente | fr: ἀλληγορούμενα | de: allegorisch-reden Gal 4:24

G0239 Heb (4×)

Hallelujah; a Hebrew liturgical exclamation meaning 'Praise the LORD'

This untranslated Hebrew exclamation combines hallel ('praise') with Yah (the shortened form of YHWH), literally meaning 'Praise the LORD!' It appears exclusively in Revelation 19:1-6, where the heavenly multitude erupts in fourfold praise after Babylon's fall. No other New Testament book uses it, making it a deliberate echo of the Psalter's Hallel psalms (Pss 113-118, 146-150) now resounding in the eschatological throne room.

(4×) A transliterated Hebrew liturgical shout meaning 'Praise Yah(weh)!', preserved untranslated across all target languages—English 'Hallelouia,' Spanish 'Halleluia,' French and German 'Halleluja'—reflecting its status as a universal worship cry. Confined to the four occurrences in Revelation 19:1-6, it marks the climactic heavenly celebration of God's righteous judgment. PRAISE AND BOASTING en: Hallēlouia | es: Hallelúia!, Hallelúia, | fr: Halleluja | de: Halleluja Rev 19:1; Rev 19:3; Rev 19:4; Rev 19:6

ἀλλήλων G0240 RecPro-AMP (100×)

One another, each other — reciprocal pronoun expressing mutual action, relationship, or obligation among persons

Allelon is the Greek reciprocal pronoun, appearing in genitive, dative, and accusative forms across 100 New Testament occurrences. It is the grammatical backbone of the 'one another' commands that define Christian community life: love one another (John 13:34), bear one another's burdens (Gal 6:2), forgive one another (Eph 4:32), encourage one another (1 Thess 5:11). The pronoun itself carries no independent meaning — its significance lies entirely in the verbs and contexts it serves — yet it has become almost a theological keyword, since the sheer concentration of allelon exhortations in the epistles sketches the shape of what mutual life in Christ looks like.

one another (100×) Reciprocal pronoun in various cases (genitive, dative, accusative) expressing mutual or bidirectional action among two or more persons. It is the structural element behind the New Testament's 'one another' commands — love one another (John 13:34), serve one another (Gal 5:13), confess to one another (Jas 5:16). Spanish 'unos a otros,' French 'les uns les autres,' and German 'einander' each find their own idiomatic way to express reciprocity that Greek captures in a single declined form. ANOTHER AND OTHER

en: of-one-another, one-another, to-one-another | es: unos-a-otros, unos-de-otros | fr: l'un-l'autre, les-uns-les-autres | de: einander Matt 24:10; Matt 25:32; Luke 7:32; Luke 12:1

ἀλλο-γενής G0241 Adj-NMS (1×)

Foreigner, person of another nation or ethnic group

This adjective describes someone from a different race or nation, an outsider to one's own ethnic community. In Luke 17:18, Jesus notes that only one leper who returned to thank him was 'this foreigner,' a Samaritan. The term emphasizes ethnic and national otherness. Classical Greek and the Septuagint used it for non-Israelites. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'extranjero', French 'étranger') uniformly indicate ethnic outsider status, making Jesus' observation about the Samaritan's faithfulness particularly striking against Jewish prejudice.

(1×) The nominative masculine singular form designates an individual belonging to another ethnic or national group, specifically contrasting with the dominant community. The term carries both ethnic and religious connotations in Jewish contexts, marking Samaritans as heretical outsiders. Jesus' rhetorical question highlights the irony that nine Jewish lepers failed to return with thanks while the ethnic-religious outsider alone showed gratitude, subverting ethnic privilege. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: foreigner | es: extranjero | fr: étranger | de: ἀλλογενὴς Luke 17:18

ἅλλομαι G0242 V-AIM-3S (3×)

to leap, spring up, jump suddenly

A verb of sudden upward or forward movement. Jesus promises living water that will be 'a spring welling up' to eternal life (John 4:14). The lame man healed at the temple gate 'leaped up' and walked, praising God (Acts 3:8). Paul's word to the cripple at Lystra—'Stand upright!'—resulted in the man 'leaping' and walking (Acts 14:10). The term conveys vigorous, energetic movement.

(3×) Denotes sudden, vigorous springing or leaping motion. John's usage is metaphorical: living water as an internal spring leaping/bubbling up to eternal life—continuous vitality. Acts uses it for dramatic physical healings: instantaneous transformation from paralysis to jumping, walking, praising. Multilingual glosses capture the energetic sense: Spanish 'saltando/saltó' (leaping/leaped), French 'bondir/sauter' (to bound/jump), German 'springen' (to spring). Each context emphasizes sudden release of energy—either water's upward burst or healed bodies' exuberance. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9550 WITH 6 SENSES

en: he-leaped, leaping, springing-up | es: saltando, saltó | fr: bondir, sauter | de: springen, ἁλλόμενος, ἥλατο John 4:14; Acts 3:8; Acts 14:10

ἄλλος G0243 Adj-NFS (156×)

Another, other; denotes a distinct or additional entity of the same kind, sometimes used in correlative pairs.

One of the two principal Greek words for 'other' (alongside ἕτερος), ἄλλος points to an additional item of the same class — 'another of the same sort.' It serves as both adjective and pronoun throughout the New Testament, frequently introducing additional persons, parables, or events (Matt 2:12; Mark 4:5, 7). In correlative constructions like ἄλλος μέν... ἄλλος δέ ('one... another'), it distributes members of a group, as in Acts 2:12. Spanish 'otro,' French 'autre,' and German 'anderer' all capture the same-kind nuance without the 'different kind' overtone that ἕτερος sometimes carries.

1. another, other, different (155×) The standard adjectival and substantive use meaning 'another,' 'other,' or 'others' — a distinct or additional entity of the same kind. Covers the vast majority of occurrences (155x), including phrases like 'another way' (Matt 2:12), 'other ground' (Mark 4:5, 7), and 'another wife' (Mark 10:12). Multilingual evidence is consistent: Spanish 'otro/a otro,' French 'autre,' German 'anderer' — all general-purpose words for 'another' without differentiation by kind. ANOTHER AND OTHER

en: another, one, other | es: a-otro, otro | fr: autre | de: anderer Matt 2:12; Matt 27:49; Mark 4:5; Mark 4:7; Mark 10:12

2. one (in correlative contrast) (1×) A specialized correlative usage where ἄλλος singles out one individual from a group in contrastive pairs ('one said... another said'), functioning closer to 'one' than to 'another.' In Acts 2:12 the crowd is divided and ἄλλος picks out a single voice asking 'What does this mean?' Glosses narrow to English 'one,' Spanish 'uno,' distinguishing this from the broader 'another' sense. ANOTHER AND OTHER

en: one | es: uno | fr: autre | de: anderer Acts 2:12

ἀλλοτριο-επίσκοπος G0244 N-NMS (1×)

Meddler, busybody who intrudes into others' affairs improperly

This rare compound noun literally means 'overseer of others' affairs,' describing someone who meddles in matters not their concern. In 1 Peter 4:15, it appears in a vice list alongside murderer and thief, showing meddling as serious misconduct. The term suggests unauthorized supervision or interference. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'entrometido', German 'sich-in-fremde-Sachen-mischen') captures this intrusive behavior. Peter warns Christians not to suffer for such improper boundary-crossing, distinguishing wrongful interference from righteous suffering.

(1×) The nominative masculine singular form denotes one who inappropriately involves themselves in others' business, assuming supervisory authority without warrant. The compound construction ('other-people's-overseer') emphasizes the transgression of proper boundaries between persons and households. Peter's inclusion among serious crimes suggests such meddling could bring official trouble on the church, perhaps through interfering in civic or domestic matters belonging to paterfamilias authority, making it persecution-worthy offense. HOUSEHOLD ADMINISTRATION en: meddler | es: entrometido | fr: ἀλλοτριεπίσκοπος | de: sich-in-fremde-Sachen-mischen 1Pet 4:15

ἀλλότριος G0245 Adj-DNS (14×)

Belonging to another, not one's own; a stranger or outsider; foreign, of another nation or land.

The Greek adjective allotrios draws a firm line between 'mine' and 'not mine,' covering possessions, persons, and places. In its most frequent use it describes things that belong to someone else — another's servant, another's foundation, another's labors (Rom 14:4; 15:20; 2 Cor 10:15-16). Used substantivally, it becomes 'the stranger' whom the sheep refuse to follow in Jesus' shepherd parable (John 10:5), and the outsiders contrasted with 'sons' in the temple-tax exchange (Matt 17:25-26). Spanish ajena/extranjero, French etranger, and German fremd each capture different slices of this range, but none perfectly mirrors the Greek word's ability to slide from 'another person's property' to 'a foreign land' (Acts 7:6; Heb 11:9) within the same root.

1. belonging to another, not one's own (7×) Belonging to another person, not one's own — used as an attributive adjective for possessions, labors, servants, or foundations that pertain to someone else. Paul's refusal to build on 'another's foundation' (Rom 15:20) and his warning against meddling in 'another's sins' (1 Tim 5:22) exemplify this property-and-authority sense. Spanish ajeno, French d'autrui, and German fremd all converge on the 'not-mine' core. Luke 16:12 sharpens the contrast: if you are unfaithful with what is allotrios, who will give you what is your own? FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: another's, of-another, of-others | es: ajena, ajeno, ajenos | fr: d'autrui, étranger | de: fremd, ἀλλοτρίῳ Luke 16:12; Rom 14:4; Rom 15:20; 2Cor 10:15; 2Cor 10:16

2. stranger, unknown person (4×) A stranger or unknown person — the substantivized form denoting someone outside the recognized community or relationship. In John 10:5 the sheep 'will not follow a stranger' (allotrios), contrasting the unrecognized voice with the shepherd's familiar call. In Matt 17:25-26 Jesus distinguishes sons from 'strangers' regarding the temple tax. Spanish extrano, French etranger, and German Fremder all deploy person-focused vocabulary here, confirming the shift from adjective to substantive identity marker. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: a-stranger, strangers | es: -a-extraño, extraños | fr: d'autrui | de: fremd, ἀλλοτρίων Matt 17:25; Matt 17:26; John 10:5

3. foreign, of another nation or land (3×) Foreign in the geographic or national sense — of another country or people. Abraham sojourned in a 'foreign' land (Acts 7:6; Heb 11:9), and the faithful routed 'armies of foreigners' (Heb 11:34). Spanish extranjera, French etranger, and German fremd overlap with sense 2 in form but shift to territorial meaning: the land itself, not just the person, is allotrios. This geographic dimension echoes the classical Greek usage of the word for enemy territory or alien soil. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: foreign, of-foreigners | es: ajena, de-extranjeros, extranjera | fr: d'autrui, étranger | de: fremd, ἀλλοτρίᾳ Acts 7:6; Heb 11:9; Heb 11:34

ἀλλό-φῡλος G0246 Adj-DMS (1×)

Foreign, belonging to another tribe or ethnic group

This adjective means 'of another tribe' or ethnically foreign, particularly describing non-Jews. In Acts 10:28, Peter acknowledges Jewish law forbids association with 'one of another nation.' Classical Greek used it for tribal outsiders, while the Septuagint employed it for Philistines. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'extranjero', French 'd'une-autre-race') confirm this ethnic otherness. Peter's statement marks a crucial moment as he begins to grasp that God's acceptance transcends ethnic boundaries, preparing him to enter Cornelius's Gentile household.

(1×) The dative masculine singular form modifies 'man,' indicating someone from a different ethnic-tribal group, specifically a Gentile from Jewish perspective. The term emphasizes tribal-ethnic identity rather than mere geographic origin. Peter's recognition of the prohibition against socializing with ethnic outsiders sets up the dramatic reversal when divine revelation shows such barriers no longer divide God's people. This vocabulary shift signals the gospel's universal scope. FOREIGNERS AND STRANGERS

en: foreigner | es: a-extranjero | fr: d'une-autre-race | de: ἀλλοφύλῳ Acts 10:28

ἄλλως G0247 Adv (1×)

Otherwise, in another way or manner; differently

This adverb means 'in another way' or 'otherwise,' indicating alternative manner or condition. In 1 Timothy 5:25, Paul notes that good works which aren't obvious 'cannot be otherwise' or remain hidden. Classical Greek used it extensively for 'in another manner' or 'differently,' often in phrases like 'and besides' or 'in any case.' The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'de-otro-modo', German 'anders') confirms this sense of alternative mode. Paul's logic assumes eventual disclosure of hidden good works.

(1×) The adverbial form indicates alternative manner or condition, often suggesting impossibility of being different. Classical usage included 'at all events' and 'in any case,' adding nuance beyond simple difference. Paul's assertion that hidden good works cannot remain so forever appeals to inevitable revelation of truth. The term's semantic range allows both 'cannot be different' and 'cannot be hidden indefinitely,' both fitting the context of eschatological disclosure. MANNER ADVERBS

en: otherwise | es: de-otro-modo | fr: ἄλλως | de: anders 1Tim 5:25

ἀλοάω G0248 V-PPA-NMS (3×)

to thresh grain, tread out; to separate kernels by trampling or beating

A verb describing the threshing process—oxen treading grain or workers beating it to separate kernels from chaff. Paul quotes Deuteronomy 25:4 twice: 'You shall not muzzle an ox while it is threshing' (1 Cor 9:9, 1 Tim 5:18), applying this to ministers' right to support. First Corinthians 9:10 adds that the thresher should 'thresh in hope' of sharing the crop. The agricultural image becomes a principle of labor's reward.

(3×) Refers to the literal agricultural process of separating grain from stalks—typically by having oxen tread it or workers beat it. Paul's repeated citation transforms this into a principle: those who labor deserve to partake of the harvest. The ox's freedom to eat while working illustrates the justice of supporting gospel workers. Multilingual glosses use standard threshing vocabulary (Spanish 'trillar,' French 'battre le blé,' German 'dreschen'), maintaining the agricultural metaphor's clarity. GRASS AND VEGETATION

en: threshing | es: que-trilla, trillando | fr: battre-le-blé, ἀλοῶντα | de: dreschen 1Cor 9:9; 1Cor 9:10; 1Tim 5:18

ἄλογος G0249 Adj-NNS (3×)

irrational, unreasoning; lacking speech or reason, contrary to logic

An adjective meaning without λόγος—reason or speech. Peter speaks of 'unreasoning animals' acting by instinct (2 Pet 2:12). Jude similarly describes opponents as 'irrational' creatures destroyed by their own corruption (Jude 10). Acts 25:27 uses it for the 'unreasonable' situation of sending a prisoner without specifying charges. Classical usage covers speechless beings, illogical arguments, and brute instinct opposed to reason.

(3×) Denotes absence of rational faculty—whether speechless animals or illogical situations. The epistolary usage compares false teachers to brute beasts: acting on instinct rather than reason, destined for destruction like animals caught for slaughter. Festus's legal usage applies it differently: the unreasonableness (irrationality) of sending a prisoner without articulating accusations. Multilingual glosses reflect this range: Spanish 'irracionales/irrazonable' (irrational beings/situation), French 'sans raison' (without reason), German 'unvernünftig' (unreasoning). FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: irrational, unreasonable, unreasoning | es: irracionales, irrazonable | fr: sans-raison, ἄλογα | de: unvernünftigen, ἄλογα, ἄλογον Acts 25:27; 2Pet 2:12; Jude 1:10

ἀλόη G0250 N-GFS (1×)

Aloes, aromatic resinous wood used for perfume and embalming

This noun refers to fragrant aloe wood or its resin, distinct from the medicinal aloe plant. In John 19:39, Nicodemus brings a mixture of myrrh and aloes for Jesus' burial, an enormous quantity suggesting royal treatment. The term in Septuagint and classical sources designates expensive aromatic wood imported from the East. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'áloe', French 'aloès', German 'Aloe') identify this precious spice used in burial preparation, demonstrating costly devotion to Jesus' body.

(1×) The genitive singular form indicates the aromatic substance used with myrrh in burial anointing, derived from fragrant wood rather than the succulent plant. Ancient sources distinguish this as costly imported perfume used for royal burials and special occasions. The substantial quantity (about 75 pounds combined with myrrh) signals extravagant honor, treating Jesus' burial with regal dignity. Nicodemus's lavish provision contrasts with his earlier nocturnal secrecy. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: aloes | es: de-áloe | fr: aloès | de: Aloe John 19:39

ἅλς G0251 N-DMS (1×)

Salt, the mineral sodium chloride used for seasoning and preservation

This noun means salt, the essential mineral for seasoning and preserving food. In Mark 9:49, Jesus uses cryptic imagery about being 'salted with fire' and sacrifices 'salted with salt.' Classical Greek used the same word for both salt and sea, creating wordplay. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'sal', French 'sel', German 'Salz') uniformly identifies the mineral substance. Jesus frequently used salt metaphorically for preservation, flavor, and covenant loyalty, here connecting it mysteriously with purifying fire and sacrifice.

(1×) The dative masculine singular form indicates salt used instrumentally, as the agent of salting. Levitical law required all grain offerings to be seasoned with salt (Lev 2:13), representing covenant preservation. Jesus' difficult saying connects salt's preservative and purifying functions with fire's refining work, both preparing believers as living sacrifices. The salt-fire combination suggests both preservation and purification in Christian formation and suffering. SALT SUBSTANCE

en: with-salt | es: con-sal | fr: sel | de: Salz Mark 9:49

ἁλῠκ-ός G0252 Adj-NNS (1×)

Salty, containing salt; brackish or saline

This adjective describes water or liquid containing salt, being saline or brackish. In James 3:12, the rhetorical question asks whether a spring can produce both fresh and 'salty' water, arguing for consistency between profession and practice. Classical Greek used it for salt content and brackish water. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'salada', German 'salzig') confirm this qualitative sense. James's point assumes the impossibility of one source yielding both sweet and saline water, applying this to speech's moral character.

(1×) The neuter nominative singular form modifies 'water,' indicating saline or brackish quality unsuitable for drinking. Ancient wisdom recognized that springs produce water of consistent character; fresh sources don't intermittently turn brackish. James exploits this natural law to argue that Christian speech should consistently reflect transformed character. Mixed speech—blessing and cursing from the same mouth—contradicts nature as impossibly as salty-fresh water from one spring, exposing spiritual inconsistency. SALT SUBSTANCE

en: salty | es: salada | fr: ἁλυκὸν | de: salzig Jas 3:12

ἄλῡπ-ος G0253 Adj-NMS-C (1×)

Less grieved, more free from sorrow or distress; with lighter heart

This comparative adjective means 'less sorrowful' or 'more free from grief.' In Philippians 2:28, Paul explains he's eager to send Epaphroditus so the Philippians may rejoice and Paul himself be 'less anxious' or less grieved. Classical Greek used it for freedom from pain and sorrow. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'menos-triste', German 'weniger-betruebt') captures this comparative reduction of distress. Paul's pastoral concern links the church's joy with his own emotional relief, showing relational interdependence.

(1×) The comparative nominative masculine singular form indicates reduced grief or anxiety relative to a previous state. Classical usage encompassed both freedom from physical pain and emotional distress. Paul's logic assumes that seeing Epaphroditus's recovery will lift the Philippians' spirits, which in turn will alleviate Paul's own anxiety about them. This chain of mutual encouragement reveals the emotional bonds in early Christian communities, where individuals' wellbeing directly affected others' peace of mind. PAIN AND SUFFERING

en: less-grieved | es: menos-triste | fr: ἀλυπότερος | de: weniger-betruebt Phil 2:28

ἅλῠσις G0254 N-DFS (11×)

Chain, fetter — a metal restraint device for binding prisoners, used both literally and as a symbol of captivity

The noun ἅλυσις (halusis) refers to a chain or shackle used to restrain prisoners. Its most dramatic appearance is in the Gerasene demoniac narrative, where the possessed man had been bound with chains and shackles many times but tore them apart (Mark 5:3-4; Luke 8:29). Peter sleeps in prison chained between two soldiers before an angel causes the chains to fall from his hands (Acts 12:6-7). Paul speaks of bearing chains for the gospel (Eph 6:20; 2 Tim 1:16), and in Acts 21:33 and 28:20 he is literally chained by Roman authorities. Spanish 'cadena' and French 'chaîne' both carry the literal and metaphorical weight of bondage and persecution.

chain, fetter (physical restraint) (11×) A metal chain or fetter used to physically restrain a prisoner, typically binding the hands or linking the captive to a guard. The Gerasene demoniac repeatedly breaks his chains, demonstrating supernatural power over human restraint (Mark 5:3-4; Luke 8:29). Peter's chains miraculously fall away at the angel's touch (Acts 12:6-7). Paul is bound with two chains in Jerusalem (Acts 21:33) and later wears a chain in Rome (Acts 28:20). The word takes on metaphorical force when Paul calls himself an 'ambassador in chains' (Eph 6:20; cf. 2 Tim 1:16). Spanish 'cadena' and German 'Kette' both map directly. CHAINS AND FETTERS

en: a-chain, chain, chains | es: cadena, cadenas, con-cadena | fr: chaîne | de: Kette, ἁλύσεις, ἁλύσεσι Mark 5:3; Mark 5:4; Luke 8:29; Acts 12:6

ἀλῡσῐ-τελής G0255 Adj-NNS (1×)

Unprofitable, not advantageous or beneficial; bringing no gain

This adjective describes what brings no benefit or advantage, being disadvantageous. In Hebrews 13:17, the author warns that resisting leaders would be 'unprofitable' for the congregation. Classical Greek used it for what doesn't pay or bring advantage, even for unfavorable medical symptoms. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'no-provechoso', French 'inutile', German 'unnuetz') emphasize lack of benefit. The author's rhetoric presents obedience to leaders as self-interested wisdom, since their eventual account to God affects the community's welfare.

(1×) The neuter nominative singular form indicates complete absence of advantage or benefit, suggesting even harm. Classical usage in medical texts described unfavorable symptoms, while general usage meant disadvantageous outcomes. The author's pastoral strategy appeals to enlightened self-interest: resisting godly leaders ultimately harms the resisters themselves, making submission the profitable course. The term's economic overtones (unprofitable transaction) frame spiritual obedience as practical wisdom. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 13406 WITH 4 SENSES

en: unprofitable | es: no-provechoso | fr: inutile | de: unnuetz Heb 13:17

Ἁλφαῖος G0256 N-GMS (5×)

Alphaeus; a proper name of Aramaic origin, borne by two NT figures: the father of Levi (Mark 2:14) and the father of James.

A Greek rendering of the Aramaic name Chalphay, Alphaeus appears in the New Testament as the father of two different disciples. In Mark 2:14 he is identified as the father of Levi the tax collector, while in all four apostle lists (Matt 10:3, Mark 3:18, Luke 6:15, Acts 1:13) another Alphaeus is named as father of James. Whether these represent one man or two has been debated since the patristic era. Spanish and French transliterations ('Alphaios'/'Alphée') reflect the same Aramaic root.

(5×) A proper name of Aramaic origin (from Chalphay) designating the father of one or more disciples. Mark 2:14 identifies Alphaeus as the father of Levi, while the Synoptic apostle lists and Acts 1:13 name him as the father of James. The genitive form 'Alphaiou' (of Alphaeus) is patronymic in all occurrences, functioning as a disambiguation marker rather than an independent reference. French 'Alphée' and Spanish 'Alphaíou' both transliterate from the same Aramaic source. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Alphaios, of-Alphaios | es: Alphaîos, Alphaíou, de-Alphaíou | fr: Alphée | de: Ἁλφαίου Matt 10:3; Mark 2:14; Mark 3:18; Luke 6:15; Acts 1:13

ἅλων G0257 N-AFS (2×)

threshing floor, hard-packed surface where grain is separated from chaff

This noun denotes the threshing floor—a hard, flat surface where harvested grain was threshed and winnowed to separate kernels from chaff. Both occurrences appear in John the Baptist's prophecy that the Coming One will thoroughly cleanse his ἅλωνα—threshing floor—gathering wheat into the barn but burning chaff with unquenchable fire (Matthew 3:12; Luke 3:17). The image draws on harvest practices where grain was trampled or beaten, then winnowed, leaving wheat gathered in one place and chaff in another. John uses this agricultural process as a metaphor for eschatological judgment.

(2×) The agricultural term is preserved: Spanish 'era' (threshing floor), French 'aire.' Both passages quote or paraphrase the same Baptismal prophecy about messianic judgment. The threshing floor becomes the locus of separation—a place of decision where valuable grain is preserved and worthless chaff destroyed, making it a powerful image for final judgment that distinguishes the righteous from the wicked. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: threshing-floor | es: era | fr: aire | de: ἅλωνα Matt 3:12; Luke 3:17

ἀλώπηξ G0258 N-NFP (3×)

fox; a cunning, crafty person (metaphorically)

A noun for the animal known for craftiness in ancient lore. Jesus contrasts his homelessness—'Foxes have holes... but the Son of Man has nowhere to lay his head' (Matt 8:20, Luke 9:58)—with even wild animals' security. When warned about Herod Antipas, Jesus calls him 'that fox' (Luke 13:32), a pointed reference to craftiness or insignificance. Classical Greek uses fox imagery proverbially for cunning deception.

(3×) Refers literally to the fox and metaphorically to cunning or sly persons. Jesus's poverty saying juxtaposes foxes' dens with his own landlessness—even clever wild animals have more security than the itinerant Messiah. The Herod reference drips with contempt: either 'that crafty schemer' or 'that insignificant creature'—likely both. Multilingual glosses use standard fox terms (Spanish 'zorra/zorras,' French 'renard,' German 'Fuchs'), with the Herod context allowing the metaphorical edge. LIVING CREATURES

en: fox, foxes | es: zorra, zorras | fr: renard | de: Fuchs Matt 8:20; Luke 9:58; Luke 13:32

ἅλ-ωσις G0259 N-AFS (1×)

Capture, being caught or seized; being taken prisoner

This noun means the act of capturing, seizing, or being taken, whether in hunting, war, or judgment. In 2 Peter 2:12, false teachers are described as born 'for capture and destruction' like irrational animals. Classical Greek used it for catching fish and birds, military conquest, and legal conviction. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'captura', German 'Gefangenschaft') emphasize the seizure aspect. Peter's harsh metaphor compares these teachers to beasts destined for slaughter, awaiting inevitable judgment.

(1×) The accusative feminine singular form indicates the destiny or purpose of capture, whether hunting prey or military conquest. Classical usage encompassed taking cities, catching animals, and legal conviction—all involving being overpowered and seized. Peter's vivid imagery suggests these false teachers, operating by mere instinct like animals, face the same fate as creatures born for the hunt: inevitable capture and destruction. The term's semantic range from hunting to warfare intensifies the judgment motif. TAKE CAPTIVE

en: capture | es: captura | fr: ἅλωσιν | de: Gefangenschaft 2Pet 2:12

ἅμᾰ G0260 Prep (10×)

Together, at the same time; together with (as a preposition governing a dative)

The adverb ἅμα expresses simultaneity and togetherness in two overlapping but distinguishable ways. In its primary adverbial use, it means 'together' or 'at the same time,' describing concurrent action or shared participation: believers caught up 'together' in the clouds (1 Thess 4:17), the crew loosening the anchors 'at the same time' (Acts 27:40), and all having 'together' turned aside (Rom 3:12). In its prepositional use with a dative, it means 'together with' or 'at dawn,' as in the parable of the wheat and tares — 'lest you uproot the wheat together with them' (Matt 13:29) — and the householder going out 'early' (ἅμα πρωΐ, Matt 20:1).

1. together (8×) Together, at the same time — functioning as a pure adverb expressing simultaneity or collective participation without a dependent noun. Paul and the Thessalonians will be caught up 'together' in the clouds (1 Thess 4:17); the crew at Malta loosened the rudder ropes 'at the same time' as hoisting the foresail (Acts 27:40); 'together they have turned aside' (Rom 3:12, quoting Ps 14:3). Multilingual glosses consistently use collective adverbs: Spanish 'juntamente' and 'al mismo tiempo,' French 'ensemble,' German 'zusammen' — all marking shared action or temporal overlap without specifying a companion. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: at-same-time, at-the-same-time, together | es: al-mismo-tiempo, juntamente | fr: ensemble | de: zusammen Acts 24:26; Acts 27:40; Rom 3:12; Col 4:3; 1Thess 4:17

2. together with (2×) Together with — functioning as a preposition governing an explicit companion or temporal marker. In Matt 13:29, the master warns against uprooting the tares 'together with' (ἅμα) the wheat, where the word governs an implied dative object. In Matt 20:1, ἅμα πρωΐ means 'early in the morning' (literally 'together with dawn'), a temporal-prepositional use. Spanish 'junto con' ('together with') and the English shift to 'early' in the temporal passage confirm this is a grammatically distinct construction from the bare adverb, requiring a complement to complete its meaning. TOGETHERNESS AND COMPANY

en: early, together-with | es: juntamente, junto-con | fr: ensemble | de: zusammen Matt 13:29; Matt 20:1

ἀμαθ-ής G0261 Adj-NMP (1×)

Unlearned, ignorant, lacking education or instruction

This adjective describes people lacking learning or instruction, being untaught or ignorant. In 2 Peter 3:16, unstable and 'ignorant' people twist Scripture to their destruction. Classical Greek used it for lack of education and, pejoratively, for stupidity or boorishness. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'ignorantes', German 'ungelehrt') confirm this educational deficiency. Peter doesn't merely describe neutral lack of education but dangerous ignorance that, combined with instability, leads to misinterpreting difficult biblical texts with destructive consequences.

(1×) The nominative masculine plural form designates people characterized by lack of proper instruction or learning, making them susceptible to error. Classical usage ranged from simple lack of education to moral obtuseness and unmanageable stubbornness. Peter's pairing with 'unstable' suggests not innocent ignorance but willful resistance to sound teaching. These untaught interpreters twist difficult Pauline passages, illustrating how biblical interpretation requires both learning and stability to avoid self-destruction. IGNORANT UNAWARE en: untaught | es: ignorantes | fr: ἀμαθεῖς | de: ungelehrt 2Pet 3:16

ἀμᾰράντινος G0262 Adj-AMS (1×)

Unfading, not subject to withering or decay; imperishable

This adjective means unfading or imperishable, describing what doesn't wither or lose its bloom. In 1 Peter 5:4, faithful shepherds receive the 'unfading crown of glory' when Christ appears. The term derives from the amaranth flower, symbolizing immortality. Classical Greek used it for imperishable flowers and eternal glory. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'inmarcesible', German 'unverwelklich') emphasize permanence versus earthly fading. Peter contrasts this eternal reward with temporary earthly honors, motivating faithful ministry through eschatological promise.

(1×) The accusative masculine singular form modifies 'crown,' indicating a reward that never loses its luster or beauty, remaining eternally fresh. The amaranth flower, which retains color when dried, provided the metaphor for imperishability. Peter's imagery draws on athletic and military crowns that physically wither versus the eternal glory awaiting faithful pastors. This unfading quality characterizes all heavenly rewards, contrasting sharply with earthly honors that inevitably decay, thus reorienting ministerial motivation toward eternal values. PERISHABLE CORRUPTIBLE

en: unfading | es: inmarcesible | fr: ἀμαράντινον | de: unverwelklich 1Pet 5:4

ἀμάραντος G0263 Adj-AFS (1×)

Unfading, imperishable, not subject to decay or withering

This adjective describes what cannot fade or wither, remaining permanently fresh. In 1 Peter 1:4, believers' inheritance is described as imperishable, undefiled, and 'unfading.' Like G0262, it derives from the amaranth flower symbolizing immortality. Classical Greek applied it to undying flowers and unfading glory. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'inmarcesible', German 'unverwelklich') emphasizes permanent freshness. Peter uses this term in a triad describing the heavenly inheritance's superiority to any earthly possession subject to corruption.

(1×) The accusative feminine singular form modifies 'inheritance,' indicating a possession that retains its full beauty and value eternally without diminishment. The amaranth flower's association with immortality pervades Greek literary tradition, making it apt for describing heavenly realities. Peter's threefold description (imperishable-undefiled-unfading) comprehensively contrasts the eternal inheritance with earthly estates that decay, become polluted, or lose value. This permanence motivates present faithfulness through trials by securing hope in what cannot be lost. PERISHABLE CORRUPTIBLE

en: unfading | es: inmarcesible | fr: ἀμάραντον | de: unverwelklich 1Pet 1:4

ἁμαρτάνω G0264 V-AIA-2S (43×)

To sin, miss the mark, commit transgression against God; as participle, one who sins, a sinner.

The New Testament's primary verb for sin, rooted in the classical Greek image of missing a target — a spear thrown wide, a goal unreached. By the Septuagint era the metaphor had been thoroughly moralized: to 'miss the mark' is to fall short of God's standard. It appears in deeply charged moments — the prodigal rehearsing 'Father, I have sinned' (Luke 15:18), Judas confessing 'I have sinned by betraying innocent blood' (Matt 27:4), and Paul's declaration that 'all have sinned' (Rom 3:23). Spanish 'pecar' and French 'pécher' derive from Latin peccāre, but the Greek carries a faint echo of an arrow gone astray.

1. to sin, commit sin (32×) To sin or commit transgression — the finite verb in all its active forms (indicative, subjunctive, imperative), covering the general act of sinning against God, against another person, or against one's own conscience. Jesus teaches how to confront a brother 'if he sins against you' (Matt 18:15, 21), the prodigal rehearses his confession (Luke 15:18, 21), and Paul declares universally that 'all have sinned' (Rom 3:23; 5:12). German 'sündigen' and Spanish 'pecar' render the action consistently. The word encompasses deliberate rebellion, moral failure, and covenant violation alike. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: I-sinned, have-I-sinned, he-sins | es: Pequé, peca, pecare | fr: pécher | de: suendigen, sündigt Matt 18:15; Matt 18:21; Matt 27:4; Luke 15:18; Luke 15:21

2. one who sins, sinning (10×) One who sins, a sinner — the participial form functioning substantivally or adjectivally to characterize a person or group by their sinning. Paul argues that death reigned even over those who had not 'sinned in the likeness of Adam's transgression' (Rom 5:14), that through one man's sin judgment came (Rom 5:16), and that elders who sin should be rebuked publicly (1 Tim 5:20). In Hebrews 3:17, it describes the wilderness generation whose bodies fell 'in the desert.' The participle shifts focus from the act to the agent, identifying someone as a sinner by pattern or character. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: having-sinned, sinning | es: habiendo-pecado, pecan, pecando | fr: pécher | de: suendigen Rom 5:14; Rom 5:16; 1Cor 8:12; 1Tim 5:20; Heb 3:17

3. to sin (infinitive purpose) (1×) To sin as abstract possibility or purpose — the infinitive expressing the concept of sinning rather than a specific sinful act. John writes that the one born of God 'cannot sin' (1 John 3:9), using the infinitive to name the very capacity or orientation toward sin. Spanish 'pecar' and French 'pécher' translate identically to the finite forms, but the Greek infinitive here carries theological weight: it speaks not of a single transgression but of the ongoing possibility of sin as a way of life, which new birth is said to exclude. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: to-sin | es: pecar | fr: pécher | de: suendigen 1John 3:9

ἁμάρτ-ημα G0265 N-NNS (4×)

sinful act; a concrete deed of wrongdoing or moral failure

Where the more common hamartia (G0266) denotes sin as a condition or principle, this noun emphasizes the individual sinful act—a particular deed that misses the mark. Aristotle placed it midway between deliberate injustice and mere misfortune. In Mark 3:28-29 Jesus distinguishes forgivable sins from the unforgivable blasphemy against the Spirit; in Romans 3:25 Paul speaks of God passing over former sins; and in 1 Corinthians 6:18 the term highlights that sexual immorality is a sin committed against one's own body.

(4×) A concrete sinful deed or moral failure, distinguished from the abstract principle of sin (hamartia). Spanish 'pecado' and French 'peche' mirror the singular/plural pattern visible in the Greek occurrences. Mark 3:28-29 pairs it with 'blasphemies' to enumerate forgivable offenses; Romans 3:25 uses it for past transgressions God overlooked; 1 Corinthians 6:18 specifies a sin enacted against one's own body. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: sin, sins | es: pecado, pecados | fr: péché | de: Suenden Mark 3:28; Mark 3:29; Rom 3:25; 1Cor 6:18

ἁμαρτ-ία G0266 N-DFS (173×)

Sin; a failure to meet God's standard, moral transgression, missing the mark of righteousness

Derived from the image of an archer missing the target, hamartia became the New Testament's primary word for sin in all its dimensions — from individual acts of disobedience to the ruling power that enslaves humanity. In John 1:29, the Baptist declares the Lamb of God who takes away 'the sin of the world,' while Romans 6:23 names its wages as death. The remarkable uniformity across translations — 'pecado' (Spanish), 'péché' (French), 'Sünde' (German), 'peccato' (Italian) — reflects how central and unambiguous this concept stands in Christian theology.

sin, failure, transgression (173×) The fundamental New Testament term for moral and spiritual failure before God, encompassing both deliberate transgression and the condition of fallenness. Used 173 times across every case and number, it ranges from specific sinful acts (Matt 12:31) to sin as a personified power that reigns over humanity (Rom 5:21). Translations across all 43 languages converge on a single equivalent, underscoring its semantic clarity. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: sin | es: pecado | fr: péché | de: Suende, Sünde Matt 12:31; John 1:29; John 8:21; John 8:34

ἀμάρτ-υρος G0267 Adj-AMS (1×)

Without witness, unattested; having no one to testify or bear witness

This adjective means 'without witness' or unattested, lacking testimony or evidence. In Acts 14:17, Paul tells pagans that God 'did not leave himself without witness' through nature's blessings. Classical Greek used it for unwitnessed events and unsupported legal claims. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'sin-testigo', French 'sans-témoin', German 'ohne-Zeugen') emphasize absence of testimony. Paul's argument asserts general revelation: though pagans lacked special revelation, God's character is witnessed through creation's goodness, making them accountable.

(1×) The accusative masculine singular form indicates complete absence of witness or testimony. Classical usage included both unwittessed events (having no observers) and unattested claims (lacking supporting testimony). Paul's logic denies that God left himself unattested even among Gentiles: rain, harvest, and provision constitute divine witness to God's benevolent character. This natural theology grounds accountability while preparing listeners for fuller gospel revelation, establishing that even without Scripture, creation testifies to the Creator. WITNESSES AND TESTIMONY

en: without-witness | es: sin-testigo | fr: sans-témoin | de: ἀμάρτυρον Acts 14:17

ἁμαρτωλ-ός G0268 Adj-AMP (47×)

hamartolos – sinner, sinful; a person characterized by sin, used as both adjective and substantive noun

The adjective hamartolos ('sinful') and substantive ho hamartolos ('the sinner') derive from hamartano ('to miss the mark, to sin'). Across 47 New Testament occurrences, the word carries powerful social and theological freight. In the Gospels, 'sinners' (hamartoloi) form a category of socially marginalized people with whom Jesus deliberately associates – tax collectors and sinners eat with him (Matt 9:10-13; Mark 2:15-17; Luke 15:1-2), provoking Pharisaic outrage. Jesus declares he came 'not to call the righteous but sinners' (Matt 9:13; Mark 2:17; Luke 5:32). In Luke especially, the word appears in poignant scenes: a 'sinful woman' anoints Jesus's feet (Luke 7:37-39), and the tax collector's prayer 'God be merciful to me, a sinner' becomes a model of humility (Luke 18:13). In the Pauline letters, the word operates in a theological register: 'while we were still sinners, Christ died for us' (Rom 5:8). Spanish pecadores, French pecheur, and German Sunder all render it consistently.

sinner, sinful person (47×) A person characterized by sin, used both as an attributive adjective ('sinful') and as a substantive noun ('a sinner'), carrying social stigma in the Gospels and theological weight in the Epistles. Jesus's table fellowship with 'sinners' (Matt 9:10-13; Luke 15:1-2) provokes controversy and defines his mission. Luke's 'sinful woman' (7:37) and the tax collector who cries 'a sinner' (18:13) use the term with penitential force, while Paul employs it in doctrinal summary (Rom 5:8; Gal 2:17). Spanish pecadores, French pecheur, and German Sunder confirm a single semantic concept without subdivision. SINNER SINFUL PERSON

en: of-sinners, sinners | es: a-pecadores, de-pecadores, pecadores | fr: pécheur | de: Suender, Sünder Matt 9:10; Matt 9:11; Matt 9:13; Matt 11:19; Matt 26:45

ἄμαχ-ος G0269 Adj-AMS (2×)

peaceable, non-combative, not contentious or quarrelsome

This adjective describes someone who avoids fighting or quarreling, characterized by peaceful disposition rather than contentiousness. Classical usage includes both passive meanings (unconquerable, taking no part in battle) and active senses (impossible to fight). Paul uses it in his pastoral qualifications: an overseer must not be a drunkard or violent but gentle, ἄμαχον—peaceable—not a lover of money (1 Timothy 3:3). Titus 3:2 instructs believers to be ἀμάχους—peaceable—gentle, showing perfect courtesy to all people. Both contexts emphasize non-combative character as essential for Christian leadership and witness.

(2×) The non-contentious quality appears consistently: Spanish 'pacíficos' (peaceful) and 'no contencioso,' French preserving the Greek, German 'friedfertig' (peace-ready). Both Pauline passages include it among virtues required of Christian leaders and all believers. The term contrasts with quarrelsome, violent, or contentious behavior, calling instead for a peace-making disposition. PEACEABLE FRIENDLY

en: peaceable | es: no-contencioso, pacíficos | fr: ἀμάχους, ἄμαχον | de: friedfertig 1Tim 3:3; Titus 3:2

ἀμάω G0270 V-APA-GMP (1×)

Having reaped, gathered in a harvest; completed harvesting

This verb means to reap or harvest grain. In James 5:4, the wages of workers 'who reaped' the fields cry out against unjust landowners. Classical Greek used it for harvesting crops and poetically for gathering various things. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'que-segaron', German 'ernten') confirm this agricultural sense. James's prophetic indictment addresses economic exploitation: the harvested wealth was produced by laborers whose withheld wages constitute evidence against oppressors, personified as crying out for justice.

(1×) The aorist active participle in genitive masculine plural form indicates completed harvesting action by workers, modifying 'the wages of those who reaped.' Classical epic usage extended reaping metaphorically to gathering or drawing various things, but here the literal agricultural sense prevails. James's imagery presents the withheld wages as possessing agency, crying out like Abel's blood. The workers' completed labor creates moral debt that heaven hears, invoking prophetic themes of economic justice and divine accountability for exploitation. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: having-reaped | es: que-segaron | fr: ἀμησάντων | de: ernten Jas 5:4

ἀμέθυστος G0271 N-NFS (1×)

Amethyst, a purple-violet quartz gemstone prized for jewelry

This noun designates the amethyst gemstone, a purple or violet variety of quartz. In Revelation 21:20, it adorns the twelfth foundation of the New Jerusalem's wall. Ancient Greeks believed amethyst prevented drunkenness (the etymology means 'not-drunk'). Classical sources describe it as a remedy against intoxication and as a precious purple stone. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'amatista', German 'Amethyst') identifies this gemstone. John's vision employs the finest jewels to depict heavenly glory, with amethyst's royal purple contributing to the city's splendor.

(1×) The nominative feminine singular form names the purple quartz gemstone, valued for its beauty and supposed properties. Classical association with sobriety derived from its wine-like color that supposedly prevented drunkenness. John's selection of twelve precious stones evokes the high priestly breastplate and Israel's tribes, with amethyst's purple hue suggesting royalty and divinity. The foundation stones' cumulative brilliance communicates the inexpressible glory of God's dwelling with humanity in the renewed creation. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: amethyst | es: amatista. | fr: Amethyst | de: Amethyst Rev 21:20

ἀμελ-έω G0272 V-AIA-1S (4×)

to neglect, disregard; to fail to give proper care or attention to something important

Derived from the adjective ameles ('careless'), this verb describes a willful or culpable failure to attend to what matters. Its semantic range moves from casual indifference to serious spiritual negligence. In Matthew 22:5 the invited guests simply 'paid no attention' to the king's banquet invitation, while Hebrews 2:3 raises the stakes dramatically: 'How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation?' The verb thus spans everyday carelessness and eternally consequential disregard.

(4×) To be negligent or careless toward something deserving attention, ranging from casual indifference to culpable spiritual disregard. Spanish 'descuidar' (to be careless) and French 'negliger' both capture the willful inattention. Matthew 22:5 depicts guests ignoring a royal wedding invitation; 1 Timothy 4:14 warns Timothy not to neglect his spiritual gift; Hebrews 2:3 escalates to neglecting salvation itself; Hebrews 8:9 recalls God's turning away from Israel who disregarded his covenant. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10168 WITH 3 SENSES

en: disregarded, having-neglected, neglect | es: descuidando, descuides, habiendo-descuidado | fr: négliger | de: vernachlaessigen, ἀμελήσαντες Matt 22:5; 1Tim 4:14; Heb 2:3; Heb 8:9

ἄμεμπτος G0273 Adj-NMP (5×)

Blameless, without fault or reproach; describing a person or thing that is beyond legitimate criticism.

An alpha-privative compound (a- + memptos, 'blamed'), this adjective describes someone against whom no charge can be sustained. Luke applies it to Zechariah and Elizabeth walking in all the Lord's commandments (Luke 1:6), while Paul uses it both of his own pre-conversion Torah observance (Phil 3:6) and as an eschatological aspiration for believers (1 Thess 3:13). The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'irreprensible,' French 'irréprochable,' German 'untadelig'—all converge on the notion of being beyond reproach, though the Hebrews 8:7 usage applies the concept to the old covenant itself rather than to persons.

(5×) Without blame or fault, beyond legitimate criticism. In its personal sense it describes those whose conduct invites no reproach—Zechariah and Elizabeth (Luke 1:6), Paul's Pharisaic righteousness (Phil 3:6), and the eschatological holiness believers are to attain (1 Thess 3:13, Phil 2:15). The Hebrews 8:7 occurrence extends the concept to the first covenant: had it been amemptos, no second would have been needed. Spanish 'irreprensible' and French 'irréprochable' capture the legal nuance of being beyond formal accusation, while German 'untadelig' emphasizes the absence of anything worthy of censure. BLAMELESS AND UNBLEMISHED

en: blameless, faultless | es: irreprensible, irreprensibles, sin-falta | fr: irréprochable | de: untadelig, ἄμεμπτοι Luke 1:6; Phil 2:15; Phil 3:6; 1Thess 3:13; Heb 8:7

ἄμεμπτος G0274 Adv (2×)

blamelessly, irreproachably, in a manner beyond reproach

This adverb describes conduct that is beyond blame or reproach, performed in an irreproachable manner. Paul uses it in 1 Thessalonians 2:10 to remind his readers that God and they themselves are witnesses how ὁσίως καὶ δικαίως καὶ ἀμέμπτως—devoutly, righteously, and blamelessly—the apostles behaved among them. In 5:23, Paul prays that God would preserve them entirely, and their spirit, soul, and body be kept sound and blameless (ἀμέμπτως) at Christ's coming. The adverb emphasizes conduct that withstands scrutiny, leaving no grounds for accusation.

(2×) The irreproachable manner appears uniformly: Spanish 'irreprensiblemente,' French preserving the Greek, German 'untadelig' (blamelessly). First Thessalonians 2:10 applies it to past apostolic conduct, while 5:23 looks forward to eschatological blamelessness. Both contexts emphasize moral conduct that is not just good but beyond any legitimate criticism, reflecting the comprehensive holiness God requires. BLAMELESS AND UNBLEMISHED

en: blamelessly | es: irreprensiblemente | fr: ἀμέμπτως | de: untadelig 1Thess 2:10; 1Thess 5:23

ἀμέριμν-ος G0275 Adj-AMP (2×)

free from care or anxiety, unconcerned, without worry

This adjective describes being free from anxious care or worry. In Matthew 28:14, the soldiers are promised that if the governor hears about their sleeping on watch, "we will satisfy him and make you ἀμερίμνους"—keep you free from worry or trouble. Paul uses it in 1 Corinthians 7:32 to say he wants believers to be ἀμερίμνους—free from anxieties—contrasting the undivided devotion possible for the unmarried with the divided concerns of married life. The classical background includes both positive freedom from care and passive neglect. Paul employs the positive sense, desiring believers' freedom for focused devotion.

(2×) The freedom from concern theme runs through translations: Spanish 'sin preocupaciones' (without worries), French 'sans souci,' German preserving the Greek. Matthew's context involves removing legal jeopardy, while Paul's addresses spiritual focus free from divided loyalties. Both involve removing causes of anxiety, though to different ends—one to protect from trouble, the other to enable undistracted devotion to the Lord. ANXIETY AND WORRY

en: free-from-care, free-from-concern | es: sin-preocupaciones, sin-preocupación | fr: sans-souci | de: ἀμερίμνους Matt 28:14; 1Cor 7:32

ἀμετά-θετος G0276 Adj-ANS (2×)

unchangeable, unalterable, immutable

This adjective describes what cannot be changed or altered. Both occurrences appear in Hebrews 6 regarding God's promise to Abraham. Verse 17 states that God, desiring to show the heirs of promise the ἀμετάθετον τῆς βουλῆς αὐτοῦ—unchangeable character of his purpose—guaranteed it with an oath. Verse 18 speaks of two ἀμετάθετα πράγματα—unchangeable things—in which it is impossible for God to lie. The author builds assurance on God's immutability: his purposes and promises cannot change, providing unshakeable hope for believers.

(2×) The immutability theme is consistent: Spanish 'inmutable/inmutables,' French 'immuable,' German 'unveränderlich' (unchangeable). Both verses occur within a single argument about the certainty of God's promise. The classical philosophical background of immutable knowledge and fate is here applied to the reliability of divine commitment—God's character ensures his promises cannot be revoked. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY

en: unchangeable, unchangeableness | es: inmutable, inmutables | fr: immuable | de: unveraenderlich Heb 6:17; Heb 6:18

ἀμετα-κίνητος G0277 Adj-NMP (1×)

Immovable, unable to be moved or shaken; steadfast and stable

This adjective describes what cannot be moved from its place, being immovable or unshakeable. In 1 Corinthians 15:58, Paul exhorts believers to be 'steadfast, immovable' in the Lord's work. Classical Greek used it for physical immobility and figuratively for personal steadfastness. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'inconmovibles', French 'inébranlable', German 'unerschuetterlich') emphasize both physical and moral stability. Paul's call to unmoved perseverance concludes his resurrection chapter, grounding steadfast service in confidence that resurrection makes labor eternally meaningful.

(1×) The nominative masculine plural form characterizes persons who cannot be moved from their position, whether physically or metaphorically in resolve. Classical usage included both literal immobility and figurative unwavering commitment. Paul's pairing with 'steadfast' creates emphatic redundancy, urging believers to maintain absolutely firm commitment to gospel work. Resurrection hope provides the foundation for this immovability: knowing labor isn't vain empowers persistent faithfulness despite opposition, suffering, or apparent fruitlessness in present circumstances. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY

en: immovable | es: inconmovibles | fr: inébranlable | de: unerschuetterlich 1Cor 15:58

ἀμετα-μέλητος G0278 Adj-NNP (2×)

irrevocable, not to be regretted, without repentance or change of mind

This adjective describes what is not subject to repentance or regret, hence irrevocable. Paul uses it in Romans 11:29 to declare that τὰ χαρίσματα καὶ ἡ κλῆσις τοῦ θεοῦ ἀμεταμέλητα—God's gifts and calling are irrevocable, assuring Israel's ultimate place in God's plan despite current unbelief. In 2 Corinthians 7:10, godly grief produces μετάνοιαν εἰς σωτηρίαν ἀμεταμέλητον—repentance leading to salvation without regret, contrasting with worldly grief that produces death. The first passage emphasizes God's unchanging commitment; the second, the enduring value of true repentance.

(2×) The irrevocable quality appears across languages: Spanish 'irrevocables' and 'sin arrepentimiento,' French 'sans repentir,' German 'ohne Reue' (without regret/repentance). Romans applies it to divine gifts that God will not revoke, while 2 Corinthians describes human repentance that one will never regret. Both contexts value permanence and decisiveness—God's commitments don't change, and genuine repentance requires no reversal. REPENTANCE AND COMFORT

en: irrevocable, not-to-be-regretted | es: irrevocables, sin-arrepentimiento | fr: sans-repentir | de: ohne-Reue Rom 11:29; 2Cor 7:10

ἀμετα-νόητος G0279 Adj-AFS (1×)

Unrepentant, not changing one's mind; impenitent and hardened

This adjective describes an unrepentant heart refusing to change course or regret sin. In Romans 2:5, Paul warns about storing up wrath through 'unrepentant heart.' Classical Greek used it for unchangeable conditions and actively for impenitence. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'impenitente', French 'impénitent', German 'unbussfertig') uniformly indicate refusal to repent. Paul's indictment addresses those who presume upon divine patience while remaining hardened, accumulating judgment rather than turning toward God's kindness meant to prompt repentance.

(1×) The accusative feminine singular form modifies 'heart,' indicating settled refusal to change mind or repent despite opportunity and warning. The active sense emphasizes willful impenitence rather than passive unchangeability. Paul's context contrasts God's kindness intended to lead to repentance with stubborn resistance that stores up eschatological wrath. The unrepentant heart treats divine patience as license rather than grace, hardening further with each squandered opportunity for metanoia, thus ensuring severer judgment on the day of wrath. STUBBORNNESS REBELLION

en: unrepentant | es: impenitente | fr: impénitent | de: unbussfertig Rom 2:5

ἄμετρος G0280 Adj-ANP (2×)

beyond measure, immeasurable, exceeding proper limits

This adjective describes what is without measure or beyond limits. Paul uses it twice in 2 Corinthians 10, discussing his apostolic sphere. In verse 13, he refuses to boast εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα—beyond limits, but will confine his boasting to the sphere God assigned him. Verse 15 similarly disclaims boasting εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα—beyond measure—in others' labors. The classical background includes immensity, moral excess, and disproportion. Paul employs it to describe territorial overreach—claiming credit for work in areas God hasn't assigned him—maintaining proper boundaries in apostolic ministry and boasting.

(2×) The limitlessness theme appears: Spanish 'sin medida' (without measure), French 'sans mesure,' German 'übermässig' (excessive). Both verses occur in Paul's defense of his apostleship against critics in Corinth. The image involves respecting measured boundaries—Paul will boast only within the sphere God measured out for him, not claiming credit for others' work in regions beyond his assigned territory. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: unmeasured | es: sin-medida | fr: sans-mesure | de: uebermassig 2Cor 10:13; 2Cor 10:15

ἀμήν G0281 Heb (147×)

Amen — a Hebrew affirmation of truth and assent, used to confirm statements, close prayers, and (uniquely by Jesus) introduce solemn declarations

Amen is a loanword from Hebrew passed directly into Greek, Latin, and virtually every language the Bible has entered — Spanish 'amen,' French 'amen,' German 'amen.' In the Old Testament it functions as a congregational response ratifying oaths and blessings (Deut 27:15-26). The New Testament preserves this liturgical use at the close of doxologies and prayers (Rom 1:25; 1 Cor 14:16), but Jesus introduces a striking new pattern: 'Amen, I say to you' (Matt 5:18, 26; John's double 'amen, amen'), where it prefaces rather than confirms, investing his words with divine authority. All 147 occurrences share the core meaning of solemn affirmation.

amen (147×) A Hebrew-origin particle expressing solemn affirmation, truth, and assent. In liturgical contexts it closes prayers and doxologies as a congregational 'so be it' (1 Cor 14:16; Rev 5:14). Distinctively, Jesus uses it to open declarations — 'Amen, I say to you' (Matt 5:18; doubled in John 1:51) — a formula without rabbinic parallel that claims intrinsic authority. The word crosses every translation boundary virtually unchanged: Spanish 'amen,' French 'amen,' German 'amen,' preserving its Hebrew character as a universal marker of divine trustworthiness. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES

en: Amen, amen, amēn | es: Amén, amén | fr: amen | de: amen Matt 5:18; Matt 5:26; Matt 6:2; Matt 6:5; Matt 6:16

ἀμήτωρ G0282 Adj-NMS (1×)

Without mother, lacking maternal ancestry or origin

This adjective means motherless or without known mother. In Hebrews 7:3, Melchizedek is described as 'without mother' (along with without father or genealogy), emphasizing his mysterious origins. Classical Greek used it literally for motherless persons and metaphorically for unnatural situations. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'sin-madre', German 'ohne-Mutter') indicate literal absence of mother. The author's point isn't biological but typological: Genesis's silence about Melchizedek's ancestry makes him resemble the eternal Son, priesthood not dependent on lineage.

(1×) The nominative masculine singular form indicates absence of maternal origin or genealogy. Classical usage encompassed both orphaned children and metaphorically 'unmotherly' situations. Hebrews exploits Genesis 14's silence about Melchizedek's parentage not as historical claim but as typological significance: lacking recorded genealogy, he foreshadows Christ whose priesthood transcends Levitical lineage requirements. The threefold description (fatherless-motherless-ungenealogied) removes Melchizedek from normal human hereditary succession, prefiguring the eternal priesthood after his order. MOTHERS AND MATRIARCHS en: without-mother | es: sin-madre | fr: ohne-Mutter | de: ohne-Mutter Heb 7:3

ἀμίαντος G0283 Adj-NMS (4×)

undefiled, pure; free from moral or ritual contamination

Formed with the alpha-privative prefix on miaino ('to stain, defile'), this adjective describes what remains utterly free from contamination—whether moral, ritual, or physical. In Hebrews 7:26, Christ as high priest is 'holy, innocent, undefiled'; in Hebrews 13:4 it characterizes the marriage bed that must be kept pure. James 1:27 applies it to genuine religion 'undefiled before God,' and 1 Peter 1:4 describes the believer's heavenly inheritance as imperishable and undefiled.

(4×) Free from any stain, defilement, or moral contamination—pure in the fullest sense. Both German and French render it 'unbefleckt' and the concept aligns closely, while Spanish distinguishes 'incontaminada' (uncontaminated) from 'sin mancha' (without blemish), hinting at both ritual and moral dimensions. Applied to Christ's priestly character (Heb 7:26), marital fidelity (Heb 13:4), pure religion (Jas 1:27), and the heavenly inheritance (1 Pet 1:4). PURITY AND CLEANNESS

en: undefiled | es: incontaminada, sin-mancha | fr: unbefleckt | de: unbefleckt Heb 7:26; Heb 13:4; Jas 1:27; 1Pet 1:4

Ἀμιναδάβ G0284 N-NMS (3×)

Amminadab, Aminadab; ancestor of David and Jesus

A Hebrew name meaning 'my kinsman is noble,' appearing in Jesus's genealogy. Matthew 1:4 lists Amminadab twice (nominative and genitive forms) in the patriarchal line from Judah through Ram to Nahshon. Luke 3:33 includes him in the ascending genealogy from Jesus back to Adam. He was father of Nahshon, leader of Judah during the wilderness period (Num 1:7). The name connects Jesus to Judah's tribal leadership.

(3×) Identifies a specific ancestor in the messianic lineage—father of Nahshon, who led Judah in Moses's census and was first to enter the Red Sea according to rabbinic tradition. The double appearance in Matthew 1:4 reflects Greek case inflection of the indeclinable Hebrew name. Transliterations vary slightly (Spanish 'Aminadáb,' French 'Aminadab,' German 'Amminadab') but preserve recognition. His inclusion anchors Jesus's genealogy in Judah's princely line. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Aminadab | es: Aminadáb | fr: Aminadab | de: Amminadab Matt 1:4; Luke 3:33

ἄμμος G0285 N-AFS (5×)

Sand; fine granular material found on shores and deserts, often used as a figure for innumerable quantity.

A straightforward noun denoting sand as a physical substance, ammos takes on rich figurative life in both Testaments. Jesus contrasts building on sand with building on rock (Matt 7:26), making it a symbol of unstable foundation. Paul echoes Isaiah's imagery of Israel's descendants being as numerous as the sand of the sea (Rom 9:27), and Hebrews similarly uses it for Abraham's innumerable offspring (Heb 11:12). In Revelation, the dragon stands on the sand of the sea (Rev 12:17). Spanish 'arena' and French 'sable' both denote ordinary sand.

(5×) Sand, the fine granular material found along shores and in deserts, employed both literally and as a stock metaphor for uncountable multitude. Jesus uses it literally for a foolish builder's unstable foundation (Matt 7:26). Paul and Hebrews invoke the OT trope of sand-of-the-sea for the numberless descendants of Abraham and Israel (Rom 9:27, Heb 11:12). In Revelation, the dragon takes its stand on the seashore sand (Rev 12:17, 20:8). The consistent multilingual rendering—English 'sand,' Spanish 'arena,' French 'sable,' German 'Sand'—confirms a single concrete referent across all passages. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: sand | es: arena | fr: sable | de: Sand, ἄμμον Matt 7:26; Rom 9:27; Heb 11:12; Rev 12:17; Rev 20:8

ἀμνός G0286 N-GMS (4×)
lamb; used in the NT exclusively as a christological title for Jesus Though the common Greek word for a young sheep, every New Testament occurrence carries unmistakable sacrificial and messianic weight. John the Baptist twice identifies Jesus as 'the Lamb of God' (John 1:29, 36), echoing both the Passover lamb and Isaiah's suffering servant. Acts 8:32 quotes Isaiah 53:7 directly—'as a lamb before its shearer is silent'—and 1 Peter 1:19 speaks of redemption through 'the precious blood of Christ, like that of a lamb without blemish.' The consistent christological focus sets this term apart from arnion, the diminutive 'lamb' of Revelation.

(4×) A lamb viewed as a sacrificial or christological figure, not merely a young sheep. Spanish distinguishes capitalized 'Cordero' (the Lamb, christological) from lowercase 'cordero' (generic lamb), a distinction visible across the four occurrences. French 'agneau' (cognate with Latin agnus, itself likely related to the Greek amnos) preserves the same dual register. All NT uses point to Jesus as the fulfillment of Passover and Isaianic sacrifice imagery (John 1:29, 36; Acts 8:32; 1 Pet 1:19). LAMBS AND SHEEP
en: Lamb, lamb, of-lamb | es: Cordero, cordero, de-cordero | fr: agneau | de: Lamm, ἀμνὸς John 1:29; John 1:36; Acts 8:32; 1Pet 1:19

ἀμοιβ-ή G0287 N-AFP (1×)
Recompense, reciprocal return or requital; exchange or repayment
This noun means recompense, requital, or reciprocal exchange, often in contexts of repaying care. In 1 Timothy 5:4, widows' children should learn to make 'recompense' to their parents. Classical Greek used it for requital (both reward and retribution), repayment, compensation, and exchange. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'recompensas', German 'Vergeltung') emphasize reciprocal return. Paul grounds filial obligation in reciprocity: parents cared for children, so grown children owe corresponding care in parents' need, fulfilling both family duty and religious piety.

(1×) The accusative feminine plural form indicates returns or recompenses given in reciprocal exchange, here specifically filial care repaying parental investment. Classical usage encompassed compensation, retribution, and fair exchange, with Homeric roots in requiting kindness or injury. Paul's household code naturalizes this reciprocity: children's support of elderly parents constitutes appropriate return for upbringing received. This mutual obligation structure ensures generational care while modeling godly family life and preventing burden on church resources for widows with able family. RECOMPENSE AND RETRIBUTION en: recompense | es: recompensas | fr: ἀμοιβὰς | de: Vergeltung 1Tim 5:4

ἄμπελος G0288 N-AFS (9×)
A vine, especially the grapevine; used literally of the fruit-bearing plant and figuratively of Christ as the true vine.
Ampelos is the standard Greek word for the grapevine, deeply embedded in Mediterranean culture and biblical imagery. In the Synoptic last supper accounts (Matt 26:29; Mark 14:25; Luke 22:18), Jesus speaks of not drinking 'the fruit of the vine' until the kingdom comes—a phrase echoed in Spanish as 'vid/vina' and French 'vigne.' The most theologically rich usage is John 15:1-5, where Jesus declares 'I am the true vine' and the Father is the vinedresser, developing an extended metaphor of abiding and fruitfulness. Revelation 14:18-19 uses the vine eschatologically for the harvest of divine judgment. German 'Weinstock' (wine-plant) captures both the agricultural reality and the vintner's craft behind the image.

vine (9×) The grapevine as a cultivated plant producing fruit for wine—used both in its literal agricultural sense and as a rich theological metaphor. At the Last Supper (Matt 26:29; Mark 14:25; Luke 22:18), 'the fruit of the vine' refers straightforwardly to wine. In John 15:1-5, Jesus identifies himself as 'the true vine,' developing an extended allegory of spiritual union, pruning, and fruitfulness. Revelation 14:18-19 uses the vine image for eschatological harvest and judgment. All nine occurrences draw on the same core botanical referent, the Vitis vinifera grapevine. VINEYARD CULTIVATION
en: a-vine, vine | es: vid, viña | fr: vigne | de: Weinstock, ἀμπέλου Matt 26:29; Mark 14:25; Luke 22:18; John 15:1; John 15:4

ἀμπελουργ-ός G0289 N-AMS (1×)
Vinedresser, one who cultivates and tends grapevines
This noun designates a vineyard worker who cultivates and prunes grapevines. In Luke 13:7, the owner tells the 'vinedresser' to cut down the barren fig tree. Classical Greek used this compound for professional vineyard workers. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'viñador', French 'vigneron') identifies this agricultural specialist. Jesus' parable features the vinedresser as intercessor, pleading for another year's care before judgment. The word's occupational precision contributes to the parable's realism while typologically representing Christ's intercession for Israel's final opportunity.

(1×) The accusative masculine singular form indicates the professional responsible for vine cultivation, including planting, pruning, fertilizing, and protecting vines. Classical viticulture required specialized knowledge for successful grape production. The vinedresser's advocacy in Luke's parable—requesting delay and promising extra care—characterizes patient divine forbearance despite justified expectation of fruit. His willingness to invest additional labor represents grace extended beyond reasonable expectation, though with clear limits: fruitlessness cannot continue indefinitely without consequences. FARMER VINEDRESSER en: vinedresser | es: viñador | fr: vigneron | de: ἀμπελουργόν Luke 13:7

ἀμπελ-ών G0290 N-AMS (23×)
A vineyard – a cultivated plot of grapevines, often used in Jesus' parables of God's kingdom
The standard Greek word for a vineyard, a plot planted with grapevines. In the Synoptic Gospels it serves as a powerful parabolic image: the owner who hires laborers at different hours (Matt 20:1-16), the wicked tenants who kill the owner's son (Matt 21:33-41; Mark 12:1-9; Luke 20:9-16), and the two sons sent to work (Matt 21:28-31). Paul invokes it to defend apostolic rights: 'Who plants a vineyard and does not eat its fruit?' (1 Cor 9:7). The LXX background, especially Isaiah 5's Song of the Vineyard, enriches every usage with covenant overtones.

a vineyard (23×) A cultivated plot of grapevines, used literally and as a parabolic image for God's dealings with humanity. Features in the laborers parable (Matt 20:1-8), the wicked tenants (Matt 21:33-41; Mark 12:1-9; Luke 20:9-16), and Paul's apostolic-rights argument (1 Cor 9:7). The LXX tradition, especially Isaiah 5's Song of the Vineyard, provides deep covenantal resonance. VINEYARD CULTIVATION

en: A-vineyard, a-vineyard, vineyard | es: viña | fr: vignoble | de: Weinberg, ἀμπελῶνα, ἀμπελῶνος Matt 20:1; Matt 20:2; Matt 20:4; Matt 20:7; Matt 20:8

Ἀμπλιᾶτος G0291 N-AMS (1×)

Ampliatus, a Christian man greeted by Paul in Rome

This proper noun is the name of a Roman Christian greeted in Romans 16:8, where Paul calls him 'my beloved.' The name, a common Latin name meaning 'enlarged,' appears in Roman inscriptions. Manuscript variants include Ampliatus and Amplias. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'Ampliâton', French 'Amplias', German 'Ampliatus') reflect textual variants. Paul's affectionate designation suggests close relationship, possibly from earlier ministry. Names in Romans 16 reveal the diverse composition of the early Roman church, including slaves and freedmen bearing Latin names.

(1×) The accusative masculine singular form names a specific individual in the Roman church whom Paul greets with particular affection. The Latin name was especially common among slaves and freedmen, possibly suggesting Ampliatus's social status. Paul's designation 'my beloved in the Lord' indicates either personal acquaintance from earlier travels or warm recommendation from mutual friends. The greeting's brevity doesn't diminish its warmth, as 'beloved' constitutes Paul's highest personal commendation within these greetings. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ampliatos | es: a-Ampliâton | fr: Amplias | de: Ampliatus Rom 16:8

ἀμύνω G0292 V-AIM-3S (1×)

Defended, helped in battle; came to someone's aid and protection

This verb means to defend, help, or come to someone's aid, especially in battle. In Acts 7:24, Moses 'defended' the oppressed Hebrew by striking the Egyptian. Classical Greek used it extensively for warding off danger, defending, or aiding someone under attack. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'defendió', French 'défendre') confirm this protective action. Stephen's speech casts Moses as defender-deliverer whose initial attempt at justice Israel rejected, foreshadowing Jesus' similar rejection despite coming to save.

(1×) The aorist middle indicative third person singular form indicates Moses' completed defensive action on behalf of the oppressed man. Classical usage emphasized both defensive warding off of harm and active coming to someone's aid in danger. Moses' intervention —defending by retaliatory violence—initiates his deliverer role but also precipitates his exile when Israel refuses his leadership. Stephen exploits this pattern to indict his audience for parallel rejection of Jesus, the ultimate defender-deliverer God sent. HELP AND ASSISTANCE

en: he-defended | es: defendió | fr: défendre | de: ἠμύνατο Acts 7:24

ἀμφίβληστρ-ον G0293 N-ANS (1×)

Casting net, a type of fishing net thrown by hand in circular motion

This noun designates a circular casting net thrown by hand, distinct from drag nets. In Matthew 4:18, Peter and Andrew were 'casting a net into the sea' using this equipment. Classical Greek used this term for nets thrown around something, including metaphorical nets or bonds. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'red', French 'filet', German 'Netz') identifies fishing equipment. The casting net's technique required skill, as fishermen threw it in circular motion to spread over fish in shallow water before drawing it closed.

(1×) The accusative neuter singular form indicates the specific type of net characterized by being thrown around or over its target. Classical usage extended to any encircling bonds, including metaphorical traps. The casting net's function as circular enclosure makes it apt for Jesus' call to make disciples 'fishers of men'—gathering people into God's kingdom. Peter and Andrew's immediate abandonment of nets to follow Jesus dramatizes total commitment, leaving behind both livelihood and identity as fishermen for new Kingdom purpose. NETS AND SNARES

en: net | es: red | fr: filet | de: ἀμφίβληστρον Matt 4:18

ἀμφιέννυμι G0294 V-RPM/P-AMS (4×)

to clothe, dress; to put garments on someone

An older, somewhat literary verb for dressing or clothing someone, used in the NT exclusively by Jesus in two parallel sayings about God's providential care. In Matthew 6:30 and Luke 12:28, Jesus argues from lesser to greater: if God so clothes the grass of the field, how much more will he clothe his followers? Matthew 11:8 and Luke 7:25 use the perfect passive participle to describe someone 'dressed in' fine garments, contrasting John the Baptist's rough attire with courtly luxury.

(4×) To put clothing on someone, to dress or array a person or thing in garments. French 'vetir' and Spanish 'vestir' both derive from Latin vestire, capturing the same basic action. The active forms in Matt 6:30 and Luke 12:28 describe God clothing the grass with splendor; the passive participle in Matt 11:8 and Luke 7:25 depicts a person dressed in luxurious garments, contrasting with the ascetic simplicity of the Baptist. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: clothes, having-been-clothed | es: vestido, viste | fr: vêtir | de: ἀμφιέζει, ἀμφιέννυσιν, ἠμφιεσμένον Matt 6:30; Matt 11:8; Luke 7:25; Luke 12:28

ἀμφίπολις G0295 N-AFS (1×)

Amphipolis, a city in Macedonia encompassed by the Strymon River

This proper noun names a city in Macedonia. In Acts 17:1, Paul and Silas passed through Amphipolis on their way to Thessalonica. The name means 'around-city,' referring to the Strymon River's encircling loop around the settlement. Classical sources describe it as an important Macedonian city. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'Anfípolis', French 'Amphipolis') transliterate this geographic name. Luke's itinerary precision demonstrates his geographic knowledge and historical care, tracking Paul's missionary journey through key Macedonian urban centers.

(1×) The accusative feminine singular form indicates the city as destination or waypoint in travel. The geographic name's etymology describes the Strymon River's defensive loop encircling the settlement. Paul's passing through without recorded ministry there may indicate strategic focus on larger centers or inhospitable conditions. Luke's geographic precision grounds Acts' narrative in verifiable historical-geographic reality, creating credibility for the theological interpretation of events he narrates throughout Paul's mission. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Amphipolis | es: Anfípolis | fr: Amphipolis | de: Ἀμφίπολιν Acts 17:1

ἄμφοδον G0296 N-GNS (1×)

Street, public way or thoroughfare; intersection or quarter

This noun means street, public way, or urban thoroughfare. In Mark 11:4, the disciples found the colt 'outside in the street' at a door. Classical Greek used it for streets or blocks of houses, also meaning a quarter or ward of a city. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'calle', French 'carrefour', German 'Strasse') identify public thoroughfares. Mark's geographical precision locates the colt in the open street rather than private courtyard, explaining why bystanders questioned the disciples' action when they untied it.

(1×) The genitive neuter singular form indicates location 'of the street' or 'in the street,' designating public urban space as opposed to private quarters. Classical usage encompassed both individual streets and blocks/quarters bounded by streets. The colt's location in public view creates the challenge Jesus predicted: taking it would prompt questions requiring explanation about the Lord's need. Mark's detail establishes both geographic precision and narrative foreshadowing of the exchange Jesus prophesied to his disciples. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: street | es: calle | fr: carrefour | de: Strasse Mark 11:4

ἀμφότερος G0297 Adj-NMP (14×)

Both — adjective/pronoun indicating two parties or things taken together as a pair

The adjective ἀμφότεροι (amphoteroi) means 'both,' referring to two entities considered together as a unit. In the New Testament it frequently highlights the togetherness or shared fate of paired items or persons: both new wine and old wineskins are preserved (Matt 9:17), both wheat and tares grow together (Matt 13:30), and both blind guides and their followers fall into the pit (Matt 15:14). Paul uses it theologically in Ephesians 2:14, 16, 18 to declare that Christ has made 'both' — Jew and Gentile — one. Spanish 'ambos/ambas' and French 'les deux' both capture the dual inclusiveness.

both (14×) An adjective or pronoun meaning 'both,' indicating two persons, groups, or things taken together. Used in parables to pair outcomes (both wineskins preserved, Matt 9:17; both wheat and weeds left to grow, Matt 13:30; both blind leaders and followers falling, Matt 15:14). Paul employs it with theological force in Ephesians 2:14-18, where Christ reconciles 'both' Jew and Gentile into one new humanity. Spanish 'ambos' and French 'les deux' reflect the inclusive duality. Luke pairs Zechariah and Elizabeth as 'both' righteous (Luke 1:6-7). PRONOUNS AND MIXED en: both, to-both | es: a-ambos, ambas, ambas-cosas | fr: les-deux, tous-les-deux | de: beide, ἀμφοτέρους, ἀμφότερα Matt 9:17; Matt 13:30; Matt 15:14; Luke 1:6; Luke 1:7

ἀμώμητος G0298 Adj-NMP (1×)
Blameless, without fault or defect; morally unblemished
This adjective describes someone or something blameless, without fault or blemish. In 2 Peter 3:14, believers should be diligent to be found 'blameless' in God's sight. Classical Greek used it for faultless persons, writings, and unblemished sacrificial victims. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'sin-defecto', German 'untadelig') emphasize absence of flaw. Peter connects blamelessness with eschatological urgency: knowing heaven and earth will be dissolved should motivate holy living, being found without spot or blame when Christ returns.

(1×) The nominative masculine plural form characterizes persons without moral fault or defect, reflecting both cultic language of unblemished sacrifices and ethical character. Classical usage spanned from textual correctness to moral integrity to ritual purity. Peter's eschatological frame transforms blamelessness from moral achievement to grace-enabled readiness for Christ's appearing. The term's sacrificial overtones suggest believers themselves as living offerings, presented unblemished through sanctification, anticipating final inspection at the Day of the Lord when all is revealed. BLAMELESS AND UNBLEMISHED
en: blameless | es: sin-defecto | fr: ἀμώμητοι | de: untadelig 2Pet 3:14

ἄμωμος G0299 Adj-GMS (9×)
Blameless, without blemish, unblemished – of moral or ritual purity; also (as homograph) amomon, an aromatic spice plant.
An adjective meaning 'without blemish, blameless,' drawn from sacrificial vocabulary where an offering must be physically flawless. The New Testament applies it overwhelmingly to moral and spiritual purity: Christ presented as a lamb without blemish (Heb 9:14; 1 Pet 1:19), believers chosen to be holy and blameless (Eph 1:4; 5:27; Col 1:22; Phil 2:15; Jude 1:24). Spanish 'sin-defecto/sin-mancha' and German 'makellos' ('spotless') powerfully convey the stainlessness implied. A single occurrence in Revelation 18:13 lists amomon among luxury trade goods – an aromatic spice plant (Amomum), representing either a homograph or a textual variant, wholly unrelated to the moral adjective.

1. blameless, without blemish (8×) Blameless, without blemish, unblemished – describing moral or ritual purity and flawlessness. Rooted in sacrificial language where victims must be physically perfect, the New Testament transfers this to spiritual reality: believers chosen to be 'holy and blameless' before God (Eph 1:4), the church presented 'without blemish' (Eph 5:27), blameless children of God shining as lights (Phil 2:15), reconciled and presented 'without blemish' (Col 1:22), Christ offering himself 'without blemish' (Heb 9:14; 1 Pet 1:19), and saints kept 'without blemish' before glory (Jude 1:24; Rev 14:5). Spanish 'sin-defecto/sin-mancha' and German 'makellos' consistently convey spotless purity. BLAMELESS AND UNBLEMISHED
en: blameless, unblemished, without-blemish | es: sin-defecto, sin-mancha | fr: makellos, sans-tache | de: Untadelige, makellos Eph 1:4; Eph 5:27; Phil 2:15; Col 1:22; Heb 9:14

2. spice, aromatic substance (amomon) (1×) A fragrant spice or aromatic substance – the plant amomon (likely Amomum cardamomum or a related species), listed among luxury commodities in the lament over Babylon's fall (Rev 18:13). This nominal use is semantically unrelated to the 'blameless' adjective and likely represents a homographic entry or textual variant (some manuscripts read amomon as a distinct word). English 'spice' and Spanish 'ambar' identify the aromatic referent, placing it among cinnamon, incense, and myrrh in the catalogue of merchant goods. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME
en: spice | es: ámbar | fr: makellos | de: makellos Rev 18:13

Ἀμών G0300
Amon, king of Judah, appearing in Matthew's genealogy
A proper name from Hebrew (אָמוֹן), this refers to Amon who served as king of Judah. He appears in the genealogical record that traces Jesus' lineage through the royal line of David. The name occurs in the received text of Matthew 1:10, though textual variants exist for this passage. This king represents one link in the chain connecting David's dynasty to the birth of the Messiah.

Ἀμώς G0301 N-GMS (3×)
Amos; name of two figures in Jesus's genealogy
A name appearing in Luke's genealogy of Jesus, distinct from the prophet Amos. Matthew 1:10 identifies Amon (variant spelling) as a Judean king, son of Manasseh. Luke 3:25 lists Amos in a different position, possibly a different individual. The name's Hebrew forms (אָמוֹן, עָמוֹס) show variant spellings across Biblical books. Josephus preserves multiple Greek forms of these names, reflecting textual complexity.

(3×) Designates genealogical figures bearing this name—most notably Amon king of Judah, son of the wicked Manasseh and father of the reformer Josiah (2 Kings 21). Matthew's genealogy includes him among Jesus's royal ancestors despite his brief, evil reign. Luke's Amos may be a distinct ancestor. The multilingual consistency (Spanish 'Amós,' French 'Amos,' German 'Amos') preserves the name across contexts, though historical identification requires careful attention to generational placement. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10575 WITH 3 SENSES
en: Amōs | es: Amós | fr: Amos | de: Amos Matt 1:10; Luke 3:25

ἄν G0302 Indec (166×)
Modal particle indicating contingency, indefiniteness, or hypothetical conditions; combines with relative pronouns, conjunctions, and verb moods.
An (ἄν) is one of those small Greek particles that carry enormous grammatical weight while resisting direct translation into most modern languages. It signals that a statement is not simply factual but contingent — dependent on conditions, indefinite in scope, or hypothetical in nature. Combined with relative pronouns it creates universalizing expressions like 'whoever' and 'wherever'; in conditional sentences it marks what would have happened; with subjunctive verbs it signals possibility or purpose. Most target languages handle an not by translating it directly but by adjusting verb mood, adding particles, or restructuring the clause entirely. Spanish often uses the subjunctive mood itself to absorb an's force, Korean deploys particles like -든지 for indefiniteness, and Arabic uses man/ma with the jussive. The particle's near-invisibility in translation belies its centrality to Greek modal logic.

1. indefinite generalizer (89×) Indefinite generalizer — the largest cluster at 89 occurrences, where an combines with relative pronouns and adverbs to form universal indefinite expressions: hos an ('whoever'), ho an ('whatever'), hopou an ('wherever'). In Matt

16:25 'whoever (hos an) wants to save his life will lose it,' the particle transforms a specific 'who' into a universal 'whoever.' Korean -든지 and Spanish -quiera (quienquiera, dondequiera) both deploy dedicated indefiniteness morphology, while Arabic man ('whoever') with the jussive achieves the same universalizing effect. This is the particle's most frequent and most recognizable function in New Testament Greek. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: - | es: *, *-que | fr: certes- | de: - Matt 15:5; Matt 16:25; Matt 16:28; Matt 18:6; Matt 19:9

2. counterfactual conditional (32×) Counterfactual conditional marker — 32 occurrences where an appears in the apodosis of contrary-to-fact conditions, typically with past indicative tenses. In Matt 11:21 'if the mighty works done in you had been done in Tyre, they would have (an) repented long ago,' the particle signals that the repentance did not actually occur. Spanish's conditional tense (habrían) and German's Konjunktiv II (hätten) both shift to dedicated irrealis morphology to render this force. Korean -었을 것이다 similarly marks the unrealized outcome. The particle is the hinge between real and unreal worlds. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: -, ever, would | es: * | fr: certes- | de: -, wohl- Matt 10:11; Matt 10:14; Matt 10:23; Matt 10:33

3. potential or dubitative (23×) Potential or dubitative — 23 occurrences expressing what might, could, or perhaps would happen. In Luke 1:62 the people were making signs to Zechariah as to 'what he might wish (an)' to name the child; in Acts 8:31 the Ethiopian asks 'how could I (an) understand unless someone guides me?' German wohl and French certes attempt to capture the tentative quality, while Korean uses -ㄹ 수 있다 ('could/might'). This sense is particularly common with the optative mood, which Greek uses to express wishes, possibilities, and polite hesitations. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: -, could, might | es: *, -, ciertamente | fr: certes- | de: -, wohl- Luke 1:62; Luke 2:26; Luke 2:35; Luke 6:11; Luke 7:39

4. temporal contingency (11×) Temporal contingency — 11 occurrences where an combines with temporal conjunctions (hotan, epan, henika) to mark an event as indefinite in its timing: 'whenever,' 'as soon as,' 'at whatever time.' In Acts 2:35 'until I make your enemies a footstool' the temporal boundary is set but the exact moment is left contingent. Spanish tan pronto como and Korean -할 때마다 ('each time when') deploy temporal-indefiniteness markers. This function is closely related to sense 1 but operates on the time axis rather than on persons or things. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: - | es: *-que, que, tan-pronto-como | fr: certes | de: -, wohl- Acts 2:35; Acts 2:39; Acts 2:45; Acts 3:20; Acts 3:22

5. subjunctive clause marker (11×) Subjunctive clause marker — 11 occurrences where an functions as a nearly untranslatable grammatical signal in purpose, result, or conditional clauses, contributing modal or hypothetical force without distinct lexical content. In Heb 1:13 and Heb 4:8 the particle appears in subordinate clauses where its role is structural rather than semantic — it marks the clause as non-assertive. Most translations simply absorb it into the subjunctive verb form. This represents the particle at its most grammaticalized, where it has lost any independent translatable meaning and serves purely as a mood indicator. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: - | es: *, *-, - | fr: certes | de: wohl- 2Cor 10:9; 2Cor 11:21; Heb 1:13; Heb 4:8; Heb 8:4

ἀνά G0303 Prep (13×)

Preposition: distributively 'each, apiece'; spatially 'among, in the midst of'; sequentially 'in turn'

A versatile Greek preposition that in the New Testament most often carries a distributive force—'each' or 'apiece'—as when Jesus sends the seventy-two out 'two by two' (Luke 10:1) or the master pays workers 'a denarius each' (Matt 20:9). It can also mark spatial position, meaning 'among' or 'in the midst of,' as with tares sown among the wheat (Matt 13:25). In one specialized phrase (ana meros, 1 Cor 14:27) it conveys sequential ordering: 'in turn.' Spanish and French translations capture the distributive sense with 'cada uno/chacun,' while the spatial sense shows up as 'en medio de' and 'por.'

1. each, apiece (distributive) (8×) Distributive use with numerals or nouns: 'each, apiece, by.' The pattern ana + number appears in Jesus' sending disciples 'two by two' (Luke 10:1), the denarius-each payment (Matt 20:9–10), and the six water jars holding 'two or three measures each' (John 2:6). Spanish 'cada uno' and French 'chacun' consistently mark this as individual distribution across all eight occurrences. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: by, each, each-one | es: cada-una, cada-uno, de-a | fr: chacun | de: je, ἀνὰ Matt 20:9; Matt 20:10; Luke 9:3; Luke 9:14; Luke 10:1

2. among, in the midst of (spatial) (4×) Spatial preposition meaning 'among, in the midst of, through.' The enemy sows tares 'among' the wheat (Matt 13:25), Paul asks if there is not a wise one 'among' the Corinthians (1 Cor 6:5), and the Lamb leads his people 'to' living springs (Rev 7:17). Spanish 'en medio de' and 'por' reflect the spatial movement or location within a group. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -, among, between | es: en, en-medio-de, por | fr: chacun, en-haut | de: je, ἀνὰ Matt 13:25; Mark 7:31; 1Cor 6:5; Rev 7:17

3. in turn, in succession (sequential) (1×) Sequential adverbial phrase ana meros, 'in turn, one at a time,' governing the orderly speaking of tongues in the Corinthian assembly (1 Cor 14:27). This single occurrence forms a fixed idiom rather than a free prepositional use, with Spanish 'por' capturing the successive ordering. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in | es: por | fr: en-haut | de: je 1Cor 14:27

ἀναβαθ-μός G0304 N-GMP (2×)

stairs, steps, a flight of steps ascending to a higher level

This noun denotes a flight of steps or stairs. Both occurrences appear in Acts 21 during Paul's arrest at the Jerusalem temple. In verse 35, the violence of the mob was so great that Paul had to be carried by soldiers ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀναβαθμούς—up the stairs to the barracks. Verse 40 states that Paul, standing ἐπὶ τῶν ἀναβαθμῶν—on the stairs—motioned to the crowd for silence. These stairs connected the temple courts to the Fortress Antonia, the Roman garrison overlooking the temple mount. Luke's precise topographical detail places the scene vividly in Jerusalem's architecture.

(2×) The architectural term is preserved: Spanish 'gradas' (steps), French 'marche,' German preserving the Greek. Both references describe the same stairway during the same dramatic incident. The stairs mark the boundary between Jewish sacred space below and Roman military authority above, becoming the location where Paul addresses the Jewish crowd before his imprisonment journey begins. STAIRWAY STEPS

en: stairs | es: gradas | fr: marche | de: ἀναβαθμούς, ἀναβαθμῶν Acts 21:35; Acts 21:40

ἀναβαίνω G0305 V-APA-AMS (82×)

To go up, ascend; physically traveling upward, ascending to heaven, growing (of plants), or boarding (a vessel).

Anabaino is the standard New Testament verb for upward movement, built transparently from ana ('up') and baino ('go, step'). Its most frequent use reflects the topography of ancient Palestine: 'going up' to Jerusalem, which sits in the Judean highlands, is the default expression for pilgrimage, and the verb carries the theological weight of approaching God's holy city. Jesus 'goes up' to Jerusalem repeatedly in the Gospels (Matt 20:17-18), and the disciples 'go up' to the temple to pray (Luke 18:10). But the word also reaches heavenward: Jesus ascends to the Father (John 20:17), and smoke and prayers ascend before God's throne in Revelation. Spanish subir, German hinaufsteigen, French monter, and Korean 올라가다 all cluster tightly around the core 'go-up' meaning, while the figurative extensions into plant growth (Mark 4:8) and mental arising (Luke 24:38) show the verb stretching beyond its literal spatial sense.

1. go up, ascend (75×) To go up, ascend physically — the overwhelmingly dominant sense at 75 occurrences, covering travel to higher ground, ascending mountains, going up to Jerusalem, and entering upper rooms. Jesus goes up a mountain to pray (Matt

14:23), comes up out of the baptismal water (Matt 3:16), and 'goes up to Jerusalem' for the final Passover (Matt 20:17). The Jerusalem-pilgrimage usage is especially significant — Hebrew 'alah carries the same 'go up to the holy city' valence, and Greek anabaino preserves this Semitic topographical-theological framing. Spanish subio, German hinaufsteigen, and Korean 올라가다 all translate this with their standard upward-motion verbs. Swahili -panda ('to climb, go up') confirms the basic spatial semantics. ASCENDING MOVEMENT
en: ascended, came-up, has-gone-up | es: Subió, ha-subido, subió | fr: monter | de: hinaufsteigen, steigt-hinauf Matt 3:16; Matt 5:1; Matt 13:7; Matt 14:23; Matt 15:29

2. ascend to heaven (3×) To ascend to heaven — 3 occurrences carrying dense Christological weight. In John 20:17 the risen Jesus tells Mary Magdalene 'I have not yet ascended to my Father' and 'I am ascending to my Father,' and in Eph 4:10 Paul declares 'he who descended is the same one who ascended far above all the heavens.' This is not merely going uphill but passing from the earthly realm to the divine presence. Korean 승천하다 ('to ascend to heaven,' a Sino-Korean compound) and Arabic sa'ida ila's-sama' ('went up to heaven') both select specialized heavenly-ascension vocabulary rather than generic 'go up' terms. The theological distinction from sense 1 is unmistakable: this is cosmological, not geographical. ASCENDING MOVEMENT
en: I-am-ascending, I-have-ascended, having-ascended | es: Subo, ascendido, he-subido | fr: monter | de: hinaufsteigen John 20:17; Eph 4:10

3. grow up, spring up (2×) To grow up, spring up — of plants sprouting and increasing in size, 2 occurrences in Mark's agricultural parables. In Mark 4:8 seed falls on good soil and 'grows up' bearing fruit; in Mark 4:32 the mustard seed 'grows up' and becomes the largest of garden plants. The biological-growth metaphor extends anabaino's upward-motion semantics into the organic domain. Spanish subiendo ('going up') preserves the spatial metaphor, while Korean 자라다 ('to grow') and Swahili -kua ('to grow, develop') shift entirely to biological vocabulary, revealing that this agricultural extension is a genuine figurative sense, not just a spatial application. ASCENDING MOVEMENT
en: growing-up, it-grows-up | es: sube, subiendo | fr: monter | de: hinaufsteigen Mark 4:8; Mark 4:32

4. (1×) To embark, board a vessel — a single occurrence at Acts 21:6 where Paul and his companions 'went aboard' a ship. Here the upward motion is from a dock or shore up onto the deck of a vessel. English 'embarked,' Spanish subimos (with the maritime context), and German einsteigen all show this as a specialized nautical application of the basic 'go up' verb. Korean 배에 오르다 ('to mount a ship') preserves the ascent imagery. While only one occurrence in the New Testament, this maritime sense is well attested in Classical Greek (Thucydides, Xenophon) and confirms anabaino's flexibility across physical contexts. ASCENDING MOVEMENT en: embarked | es: subimos | fr: monter | de: steigt-hinauf Acts 21:6

5. (1×) To arise, come up (in the mind or heart) — a single occurrence at Luke 24:38 where Jesus asks the startled disciples 'Why do doubts arise in your hearts?' Here anabaino is used metaphorically for thoughts or emotions 'rising up' within a person, an inner psychological ascent rather than physical upward motion. Spanish suben ('they go up') retains the spatial metaphor applied to thoughts, while Korean and German both shift to mental-process vocabulary (마음에 일어나다, 'to arise in the heart'). This cognitive-metaphorical extension — ideas 'rising' into consciousness — parallels Hebrew 'alah al lev ('go up upon the heart,' Jer 3:16; Isa 65:17), suggesting Semitic conceptual influence on the Greek usage. ASCENDING MOVEMENT
en: rise-up | es: suben | fr: monter | de: steigt-hinauf Luke 24:38

ἀναβάλλω G0306 V-AIM-3S (1×)

Postponed, deferred to a later time; adjourned proceedings

This verb means to put off, postpone, or adjourn to another time. In Acts 24:22, Felix 'adjourned' Paul's hearing after hearing his defense. Classical Greek used it extensively for delaying, postponing, and putting things off. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'Aplazó', French 'différer') confirm this deferral sense. Felix's postponement, allegedly to await Lysias's testimony, actually represents procrastination motivated by fear and greed—hoping for bribes while avoiding political risk from deciding Paul's case, demonstrating the corrupting intersection of power and self-interest.

(1×) The aorist middle indicative third person singular form indicates Felix's completed action of putting off the hearing to future time. Classical usage spanned postponing events, removing obstacles, and delaying decisions. Felix's adjournment uses judicial procedure to avoid decision: claiming to await additional witnesses masks political calculation and moral cowardice. Luke's narrative suggests this delay serves Felix's interest (opportunity for bribes) rather than justice, illustrating how legal mechanisms can be manipulated by authorities evading accountability while maintaining procedural legitimacy. DELAY AND TARRYING en: Adjourned | es: Aplazó | fr: différer | de: Ἀνεβάλετο Acts 24:22

ἀναβῐβ-άζω G0307 V-APA-NMP (1×)

Having drawn up, pulled up onto shore or land

This verb means to draw up, haul up, or bring up, especially ships onto land or nets from water. In Matthew 13:48, fishermen 'drew up' the net onto the beach to sort the catch. Classical Greek used it for making things go up, mounting horses, embarking on ships, and hauling nets. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'habiendo-sacado', French 'tirer-sur-le-rivage') confirm this upward pulling motion. Jesus' parable employs realistic fishing practice—beaching nets for sorting—as eschatological metaphor for final judgment separating righteous from wicked.

(1×) The aorist active participle nominative masculine plural form indicates fishermen's completed action of hauling the full net onto shore. Classical maritime terminology included drawing ships onto beaches and hauling loaded nets from water onto land for processing. The realistic detail grounds Jesus' kingdom parable in everyday Galilean fishing life: just as fishermen separate valuable from worthless catch, angels will separate righteous from wicked at history's consummation. The verb's physical exertion mirrors the eschatological sorting work. ASCENDING MOVEMENT en: having-drawn-up | es: habiendo-sacado | fr: tirer-sur-le-rivage | de: ἀναβιβάσαντες Matt 13:48

ἀναβλέπω G0308 V-ASA-2S (25×)

To look up or raise one's gaze; to receive or recover sight after blindness

Anablepo carries a double meaning that runs through the Gospels with powerful theological resonance. In its physical sense, it simply means to look upward — Jesus looks up before blessing the loaves (Matt 14:19; Mark 6:41), and the women look up to see the stone rolled away (Mark 16:4). But the majority of its occurrences describe the miraculous restoration of sight to the blind, a sign of messianic fulfillment (Matt 11:5; Luke 7:22). Spanish distinguishes the two senses clearly: 'alzando la vista' (raising the gaze) versus 'recobrar la vista' (recovering sight).

1. receive or recover sight (17×) To regain or receive the ability to see after blindness, whether through miraculous healing or divine restoration. Spanish 'recobrar la vista' and 'recibió la vista' consistently mark this as recovered sight. Central to Jesus' messianic credentials (Matt 11:5; Luke 7:22) and dramatized in individual healings (Matt 20:34; Mark 10:51–52; Luke 18:42; John 9:11, 15, 18). Paul's blindness and recovery in Acts 9:12, 17–18 extends this sense into the apostolic narrative. SEEING AND PERCEIVING en: I-may-see-again, I-received-sight, I-see-again | es: Recobra-la-vista, que-recibió-la-vista, recibieron-la-vista | fr: recouvrer-la-vue | de: aufsehen, blickt-auf Matt 11:5; Matt 20:34; Mark 10:51; Mark 10:52; Luke 7:22

2. look up, raise one's eyes (8×) To physically direct one's gaze upward, to raise one's eyes toward heaven or one's surroundings. Spanish 'alzando la vista' and 'habiendo mirado arriba' distinguish this from the healing sense. Jesus looks up before multiplying the loaves (Matt 14:19; Mark 6:41), looks heavenward before healing (Mark 7:34), and after partially healing a blind man the man 'looks up' and sees people like trees walking (Mark 8:24). The women at the tomb look up and see the stone rolled back (Mark 16:4). SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: Having-looked-up, having-looked-up, looking-up | es: Habiendo-mirado-arriba, alzando-la-vista, habiendo-alzado-la-vista | fr: recouvrer-la-vue | de: aufsehen, blickt-auf Matt 14:19; Mark 6:41; Mark 7:34; Mark 8:24; Mark 16:4

ἀνάβλεψις G0309 N-AFS (1×)

Recovery of sight, restoration of vision to the blind

This noun means restoration of sight or recovery of vision, especially from blindness. In Luke 4:18, Jesus reads Isaiah's prophecy about proclaiming 'recovery of sight to the blind.' Classical Greek used it for both looking up and recovering sight. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'vista', French 'recouvrement-de-la-vue', German 'recovering-of-sight') emphasizes restored vision. Jesus' Nazareth sermon interprets his messianic mission through this Jubilee text, including both literal healing of blindness and metaphorical opening of spiritual eyes to see God's kingdom.

(1×) The accusative feminine singular form indicates the restoration or recovery that will be proclaimed and accomplished. Classical medical usage designated healing that restores sight after blindness. Jesus' Isaiah quotation encompasses both physical healing of blind persons throughout his ministry and the deeper spiritual illumination bringing people from darkness to light. Luke's subsequent narrative demonstrates both dimensions: Jesus literally opens blind eyes while also giving spiritual sight to recognize him as Messiah and understand God's reign. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: recovery-of-sight | es: vista | fr: recouvrement-de-la-vue | de: ἀνάβλεψιν Luke 4:18

ἀναβο-άω G0310 V-AIA-3S (1×)

cry out, shout aloud (especially in grief, astonishment, or as a war-cry)

This Greek verb means to cry out or shout with great volume and intensity. In classical usage it could denote a war-cry, a call for help, or an exclamation of grief or astonishment. At Matthew 27:46, Jesus uses this verb as he cries out from the cross with the opening words of Psalm 22. The multilingual evidence (Spanish clamó, French crier) confirms the sense of a loud, urgent vocal expression at a moment of extreme anguish.

(1×) Used of Jesus' cry from the cross (Matthew 27:46), this sense captures the moment of ultimate desolation when he shouted the opening of Psalm 22. The Spanish and French glosses (clamó, crier) emphasize the intensity and volume of this outcry, matching the classical Greek usage for expressions of profound grief or astonishment. CALLING AND NAMING en: cried-out | es: clamó | fr: crier | de: ἀνεβόησεν Matt 27:46

ἀναβολ-ή G0311 N-AFS (1×)

delay, postponement, putting off (of an action or decision)

This noun denotes a delay or postponement, particularly in legal or official contexts. Though the classical Greek shows diverse meanings (including 'mantle' and 'prelude'), the New Testament usage focuses on temporal postponement. In Acts 25:17, Festus declares he made no delay in convening Paul's hearing. The cross-linguistic evidence (Spanish demora, French délai, English delay) all converge on the temporal sense of deferral or postponement.

(1×) Festus uses this word in Acts 25:17 to emphasize his promptness in dealing with Paul's case—he made no delay. The consistent translation across languages (English delay, Spanish demora, French délai) reflects the legal-administrative context where swift action is contrasted with procrastination or postponement. DELAY AND TARRYING en: delay | es: demora | fr: délai | de: ἀναβολὴν Acts 25:17

ἀναγγέλλω G0312 V-AIA-3P (14×)

announce, declare, report — to make known by proclaiming news, events, or divine revelation to others

Anangello carries the weight of purposeful communication — not mere chatter, but the deliberate act of bringing word back or making something publicly known. In the Gospels, Jesus promises that the Spirit 'will announce to you the things that are coming' (John 16:13), giving the verb a revelatory dimension. Elsewhere it serves for reporting events (Acts 14:27) or declaring truths about God (1 John 1:5). The multilingual evidence converges on a single communicative sense: Spanish 'anunciar,' French 'annoncer,' German 'verkuendigen' — all pointing to proclamation rather than casual speech. The prefix ana- ('back, up') hints at the word's classical root: carrying tidings back to a waiting audience.

announce, declare, report (14×) To communicate information deliberately to an audience, whether reporting events that have occurred, declaring theological truths, or announcing what is to come. In John 16:13-15, the Spirit 'will announce' future realities, giving the verb a prophetic-revelatory coloring. In Acts and the Epistles, it describes missionary reporting (Acts 14:27, 20:20) and foundational proclamation (1 John 1:5). All 14 occurrences share the core idea of purposeful, authoritative disclosure. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING en: declaring, he-will-announce, it-was-announced | es: anunciamos, anunciando, anunciaron | fr: annoncer | de: verkuendigen, verkündet John 4:25; John 5:15; John 16:13; John 16:14; John 16:15

ἀναγενν-άω G0313 V-RPM/P-NMP (2×)

to be born again, to beget again, to regenerate spiritually

This compound verb means to beget or bear again, used metaphorically for spiritual regeneration. Peter uses it in 1 Peter 1:3 to bless God who κατὰ τὸ πολὺ αὐτοῦ ἔλεος ἀναγεννήσας ἡμᾶς—according to his great mercy has caused us to be born again—to a living hope through Christ's resurrection. Verse 23 declares believers have been born again (ἀναγεγεννημένοι) not from perishable but imperishable seed, through God's living and abiding word. Both passages emphasize new spiritual birth as God's work, producing living hope and eternal life.

(2×) The regeneration theme appears consistently: Spanish 'habiendo regenerado' (having regenerated) and 'habiendo sido regenerados,' French preserving the Greek, German 'wiedergeboren' (born again). Both 1 Peter references connect new birth to God's mercy, Christ's resurrection, and the eternal word. The verb captures the radical newness of Christian conversion—not mere improvement but new creation, a second genesis initiated by God. BIRTH AND BEGETTING

en: having-been-born-again, having-begotten-again | es: habiendo-regenerado, habiendo-sido-regenerados | fr: ἀναγεγεννημένοι, ἀναγεννήσας | de: wiedergeboren 1Pet 1:3; 1Pet 1:23

ἀναγιγνώσκω G0314 V-AIA-3P (32×)

To read a written text; in passive, to be read aloud in a public or congregational setting.

A verb rooted in the older Greek sense of 'knowing again' or 'recognizing,' which by the Hellenistic period had settled firmly into the meaning 'to read.' In the Gospels, Jesus repeatedly uses it to challenge his opponents — 'Have you not read?' (Matt 12:3; 19:4; 21:16) — appealing to Scripture as self-evident authority. The passive form appears in epistolary and liturgical contexts where letters or Scriptures are read aloud to gathered communities (Col 4:16; 2 Cor 3:15). Spanish 'lees' and German 'lesen' both mirror the straightforward reading sense, while the French 'lire' covers both active and passive usage without distinction.

1. to read (25×) Active reading of a written text — Scripture, letter, or document — whether privately or publicly. Jesus's rhetorical 'have you not read?' (Matt 12:3, 5; 21:42) presupposes personal engagement with the text. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'habéis-leído,' German 'lesen,' French 'lire') uniformly confirm a single core reading sense with no semantic drift across traditions. Encompasses study, citation, and recitation of authoritative writings. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: did-you-read, do-you-read, have-you-read | es: habiendo-leído, habéis-leído, lees | fr: lire | de: lesen, ἀνέγνωτε, ἀναγινώσκεις Matt 12:3; Matt 12:5; Matt 19:4; Matt 21:16; Matt 21:42

2. to be read aloud (7×) Passive voice: a text being read aloud to others, especially in congregational worship or public assembly. Paul instructs that his letter be read (ἀναγινωσκομένη) among the churches (Col 4:16), and Moses is read aloud every Sabbath (Acts 15:21). Spanish distinguishes the passive clearly ('es-leído,' 'leída'), while German and French do not mark the voice shift lexically, relying on context — highlighting that the Greek passive carries a specifically communal, liturgical nuance absent from the active. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: being-read, is-read, it-is-read | es: es-leído, leída, leídas | fr: lire | de: lesen, ἀναγινωσκομένας, ἀναγινωσκόμενος Acts 13:27; Acts 15:21; 2Cor 3:2; 2Cor 3:15; Col 4:16

ἀναγκ-άζω G0315 V-AIA-3S (9×)

To compel or force someone to act, whether by authority, persuasion, or external pressure; in passive, to be constrained.

A verb of strong compulsion — used when someone is pressed, urged, or outright forced into action. Jesus compels his disciples into the boat (Matt 14:22), a host urges guests from the highways to come in (Luke 14:23), and Paul confesses he once tried to force believers to blaspheme (Acts 26:11). The Spanish obligar and French contraindre both capture this pressure well. In the passive, the word describes being on the receiving end of such force, as when Paul was compelled to appeal to Caesar (Acts 28:19) or when the question arose whether Titus was compelled to be circumcised (Gal 2:3).

1. to compel, force (active) (7×) Active compulsion: to press, urge, or force someone to do something, whether through authority, social pressure, or strong persuasion. Jesus 'compelled' (ἠνάγκασεν) the disciples to get into the boat (Matt 14:22; Mark 6:45), and the master orders his servant to 'compel' people to come in from the roads (Luke 14:23). Spanish obligar, French contraindre, and German nötigen all converge on this sense of applied pressure that overrides resistance. COMPEL FORCE

en: I-was-trying-to-force, compel, compelled | es: los-obligaba, obligas, obligasteis | fr: contraindre | de: ἀνάγκασον, ἀναγκάζεις, ἀναγκάζουσιν Matt 14:22; Mark 6:45; Luke 14:23; Acts 26:11; 2Cor 12:11

2. to be compelled (passive) (2×) Passive compulsion: to be forced or constrained by circumstances or another's authority. Paul was 'compelled' to appeal to Caesar (Acts 28:19), and Titus, though a Greek, was not 'compelled' to be circumcised (Gal 2:3). The passive voice shifts focus to the one experiencing the pressure rather than the one exerting it, and Spanish fue obligado and German wurde gezwungen reflect this recipient perspective clearly. COMPEL FORCE

en: I-was-compelled, was-compelled | es: fue-obligado, fui-obligado | fr: contraindre | de: ἠναγκάσθη, ἠναγκάσθην Acts 28:19; Gal 2:3

ἀναγκ-αῖος G0316 Adj-AMP (8×)

Necessary, essential, indispensable; also of persons: close, intimate, bound by kinship or deep friendship.

An adjective built on ἀνάγκη (necessity, compulsion), conveying what is required by the nature of things or bound by strong ties. Paul uses it repeatedly to express theological and practical necessity — the gospel had to go to the Jews first (Acts 13:46), seemingly weaker members of the body are actually more necessary (1 Cor 12:22), and his continued life in the flesh is more necessary for the Philippians' sake (Phil 1:24). A striking second sense emerges in Acts 10:24, where Cornelius gathers his 'close' friends — people bound to him by ties as compelling as necessity itself. Spanish distinguishes the two senses cleanly: 'necesario' for essential, 'íntimos' for intimate.

1. necessary, essential, indispensable (7×) Necessary, essential, or indispensable — that which circumstances or purpose require. Paul employs it in arguments about divine necessity (Acts 13:46, the word must go to Jews first), ecclesial interdependence (1 Cor 12:22, weaker members are 'more necessary'), pastoral obligation (Phil 1:24), and practical arrangements (2 Cor 9:5; Phil 2:25; Titus 3:14). The comparative form ἀναγκαιότερα in 1 Cor 12:22 intensifies the point about the body's mutual dependence. NECESSARY ESSENTIAL

en: more-necessary, necessary | es: más-necesario, necesarias, necesario | fr: notwendig, nécessaire | de: notwendig, ἀναγκαῖον Acts 13:46; 1Cor 12:22; 2Cor 9:5; Phil 1:24; Phil 2:25

2. close, intimate (of persons) (1×) Of persons: close, intimate, bound by ties of kinship or deep friendship. In Acts 10:24, Cornelius summons his relatives and his ἀναγκαίους φίλους — friends so close they are 'necessary' to him. The semantic development from external compulsion to intimate bond parallels Latin 'necessarius,' which likewise means both 'necessary' and 'closely connected.' Spanish 'íntimos' captures this warmth, while French and German default to the primary 'nécessaire/notwendig,' missing the relational nuance. NEARNESS AND APPROACH

en: close | es: íntimos | fr: nécessaire | de: ἀναγκαίους Acts 10:24

ἀναγκ-αστός G0317 Adv (1×)

by compulsion, under constraint (not voluntarily)

This adverb describes action done under compulsion or constraint rather than freely. It stands in direct opposition to 'willingly' or 'voluntarily' (hekousiōs). In 1 Peter 5:2, elders are instructed to shepherd the flock not by compulsion but willingly. The German gloss gezwungen ('forced') and Spanish por-fuerza ('by force') capture the coercive or reluctant quality of service performed under external pressure rather than from the heart.

(1×) Peter exhorts church elders (1 Peter 5:2) to serve not by compulsion but willingly, highlighting the contrast between reluctant duty and joyful service. The German gezwungen and Spanish por-fuerza both emphasize external constraint, underscoring that true shepherding flows from voluntary devotion rather than obligation. MANNER ADVERBS

en: by-compulsion | es: por-fuerza | fr: ἀναγκαστῶς | de: gezwungen 1Pet 5:2

ἀνάγκη G0318 N-DFP (18×)

Necessity, compulsion, constraint; also distress, hardship, or dire circumstances forcing action.

A Greek noun carrying two related but distinguishable loads. In its primary sense, ananke denotes necessity or compulsion — something that must be, whether by divine decree, moral obligation, or practical constraint. Paul's 'necessity is laid upon me' regarding the gospel (1 Cor 9:16) and the 'necessity' of obeying governing authorities (Rom 13:5) both invoke unavoidable obligation. Spanish 'necesidad' and German 'Notwendigkeit' track this sense closely. But in several Pauline and Lukan passages, the word shifts toward distress and hardship — the crushing pressure of difficult circumstances. In 2 Cor 6:4 and 12:10, it appears alongside tribulations and persecutions; in Luke 21:23, it describes the eschatological anguish coming upon the land. Spanish 'angustia' (anguish) signals this darker register.

1. necessity, compulsion (13×) Necessity, compulsion, or unavoidable constraint — the state of something being required or obligatory. Covers divine necessity (Matt 18:7, 'it is necessary that offenses come'), moral compulsion (Rom 13:5, subjection 'for conscience' sake'), practical obligation (Luke 14:18, 'I must go'), and apostolic duty (1 Cor 9:16, 'necessity is laid upon me'). Spanish 'necesidad' and French 'nécessité' consistently render this as abstract obligation. The word implies a force that overrides choice — not merely preference but inescapable requirement. NECESSITY AND NEED en: Necessary, Necessity, just-as- | es: Necesario, Necesidad, necesidad | fr: nécessité | de: <Ἀνάγκην, Notwendigkeit, ἀνάγκη Matt 18:7; Luke 14:18; Luke 23:17; Rom 13:5; 1Cor 7:37

2. distress, hardship (5×) Distress, hardship, or calamity — the pressure of dire circumstances. In Luke 21:23, ananke describes the great tribulation coming upon the land alongside wrath. Paul catalogs it among his apostolic sufferings: 'in necessities, in distresses' (2 Cor 6:4), 'in necessities... in persecutions' (2 Cor 12:10). Spanish 'angustia' (anguish) and the contextual pairing with thlipsis (tribulation) in 1 Thess 3:7 confirm this is not abstract obligation but lived affliction. The semantic bridge between the two senses is pressure — necessity presses from without, and distress is what it feels like from within. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: distress, hardships, necessities | es: angustia, necesidad, necesidades | fr: nécessité | de: Notwendigkeit, ἀνάγκη Luke 21:23; 1Cor 7:26; 2Cor 6:4; 2Cor 12:10; 1Thess 3:7

ἀναγνωρ-ίζω G0319 V-AIP-3S (1×)

make known, reveal (someone's identity), cause to be recognized

This verb means to make known or reveal, particularly in the context of personal identity. In classical drama it could refer to the moment of recognition that produces a plot reversal (anagnorisis). At Acts 7:13, Joseph made himself known to his brothers on their second visit to Egypt. The multilingual glosses (Spanish fue-dado-a-conocer, French se-faire-connaître) emphasize the revealing of identity that had previously been hidden or unrecognized.

(1×) Stephen recounts (Acts 7:13) how Joseph revealed his identity to his brothers during their second encounter in Egypt, resolving the dramatic tension of their earlier meeting. The French se-faire-connaître ('make oneself known') perfectly captures this act of self-disclosure, turning strangers into recognized kin. KNOWING AND LEARNING

en: was-made-known | es: fue-dado-a-conocer | fr: se-faire-connaître | de: ἀνεγνωρίσθη Acts 7:13

ἀνάγν-ωσις G0320 N-AFS (3×)

reading; public reading of Scripture or private reading of texts

A noun denoting the act of reading, especially aloud. After the 'reading' of the Law and Prophets in the synagogue, Paul was invited to speak (Acts 13:15). Second Corinthians 3:14 describes a veil remaining 'at the reading of the old covenant'—minds darkened during Scripture reading. Paul urges Timothy to give attention to the 'public reading' of Scripture (1 Tim 4:13), a key element of worship and instruction.

(3×) Refers to reading as an act, particularly public reading of Scripture in worship contexts. Acts establishes the synagogue pattern: Torah and Prophets read aloud, then exposition invited. Paul's veil imagery (2 Cor 3:14) shows reading without understanding—eyes on text but heart veiled. Timothy's charge includes public Scripture reading as pastoral duty—not just private study but communal encounter with the Word. Multilingual glosses use reading vocabulary consistently (Spanish 'lectura,' French 'lecture,' German forms), emphasizing the auditory-communal dimension. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE

en: reading | es: lectura | fr: lecture, ἀναγνώσει | de: ἀνάγνωσιν, ἀναγνώσει Acts 13:15; 2Cor 3:14; 1Tim 4:13

ἀνάγω G0321 V-ANP (23×)

To lead up, set sail, bring up; used of sea voyages, upward movement, resurrection, and sacrificial offering

Built from ἀνά ('up') and ἄγω ('lead'), this verb's meaning pivots on what is being led upward and from where. In Acts it becomes nearly a technical nautical term — 'set sail, put out to sea' — appearing repeatedly in Paul's voyage narratives, where Spanish 'zarpar' and the consistent pattern of departure scenes make the maritime sense unmistakable. Yet the same upward motion applies to Jesus being led up into the wilderness (Matt 4:1), a child presented at the temple (Luke 2:22), and supremely to God bringing Christ up from the dead (Heb 13:20). Each sense preserves the root image of ascending movement, but the destination changes everything.

1. set sail, put out to sea (14×) The dominant New Testament sense: to put out to sea, set sail, depart by ship. Fourteen of twenty-three occurrences describe maritime departures in Luke-Acts, where the verb functions almost formulaically to advance the travel narrative (Acts 13:13; 16:11; 27:21). Spanish 'zarpar' (to weigh anchor) captures the technical nautical flavor. The 'upward' component reflects the ancient perception of moving from harbor into the open deep as an ascent. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: having-put-to-sea, having-set-sail, he-set-sail | es: Zarpando, de-zarpar, habiendo-zarpado | fr: faire-monter, mettre-en-mer | de: führt-hinauf Luke 8:22; Acts 13:13; Acts 16:11; Acts 18:21; Acts 20:3

2. lead up, bring up physically (6×) Physical upward movement: leading or bringing someone to a higher place or before an assembly. Jesus is led up by the Spirit into the wilderness (Matt 4:1), taken up to a high mountain (Luke 4:5), or a child is brought up to the temple (Luke 2:22). In Acts 9:39, Peter is brought upstairs to the deceased Tabitha. The directional force of ἀνά remains literal here — ascent in physical space. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: having-brought-up, having-led-up, they-brought-up | es: fue-llevado, habiendo-llevado-arriba, llevando | fr: faire-monter, mettre-en-mer | de: führt-hinauf Matt 4:1; Luke 2:22; Luke 4:5; Acts 9:39; Acts 12:4

3. bring up from the dead (2×) A theologically charged extension: bringing up from the dead. Romans 10:7 asks 'Who will descend into the abyss to bring Christ up?' and Hebrews 13:20 celebrates God who 'brought up from the dead our Lord Jesus.' The upward motion transcends geography to span the cosmic boundary between death and life. This resurrection sense carries the verb's most profound theological weight. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: having-brought-up, to-bring-up | es: hacer-subir, que-hizo-subir | fr: faire-monter, mettre-en-mer | de: hinauffuehren Rom 10:7; Heb 13:20

4. offer up, present as sacrifice (1×) To offer up or present as a sacrificial act. In Acts 7:41, the Israelites 'brought up a sacrifice' to the golden calf. The upward motion here is cultic — raising an offering toward the deity. Though only one occurrence carries this sense in the New Testament, it connects to the Septuagint's broader use of ἀνάγω for bringing offerings before God. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: brought-up | es: ofrecieron | fr: mettre-en-mer | de: führt-hinauf Acts 7:41

ἀνα-δείκνῡμι G0322 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to proclaim publicly, to appoint officially, to designate or show forth

This verb means to show forth publicly or designate officially, often used for proclaiming someone elected to office. Luke 10:1 states the Lord appointed (ἀνέδειξεν) seventy(-two) others and sent them ahead in pairs. Acts 1:24 records the disciples' prayer asking the Lord to show (ἀνάδειξον) which of two candidates he had chosen to replace Judas. The classical background includes displaying signs, proclaiming election results, and exhibiting publicly. Both New Testament uses involve divine appointment to ministry roles, emphasizing God's sovereign choice and public designation of workers for his mission.

(2×) The appointment theme appears: Spanish 'designó' (designated) and 'muestra' (show), French 'montrer,' German preserving the Greek. Luke 10 involves Jesus' authoritative appointment of the seventy, while Acts 1 seeks divine revelation of God's choice between two qualified men. Both contexts involve making known God's selection for ministry service, whether through direct designation (Luke) or prayerful discernment (Acts). SHOWING AND REVEALING en: appointed, show | es: designó, muestra | fr: montrer | de: ἀνάδειξον, ἀνέδειξεν Luke 10:1; Acts 1:24

ἀνά-δειξις G0323 N-GFS (1×)

public showing forth, manifestation (especially of a person to office or public role)

This noun denotes a public showing forth or manifestation, often in the context of an official appointment or presentation. Classical usage included the proclamation of magistrates or the dedication of temples. In Luke 1:80, it describes John the Baptist's eventual manifestation to Israel—the moment when his private preparation would give way to public ministry. The French manifestation and Spanish manifestación capture this transition from hiddenness to public revelation.

(1×) Luke 1:80 describes John the Baptist growing in the wilderness until the day of his showing to Israel—the moment his prophetic ministry would become public. The cross-linguistic evidence (French manifestation, Spanish manifestación) emphasizes this dramatic transition from obscurity to public proclamation, marking the beginning of his ministry as the forerunner of Messiah. REVELATION MANIFESTATION

en: of-showing | es: de-manifestación | fr: manifestation | de: ἀναδείξεως Luke 1:80

ἀναδέχομαι G0324 V-APM-NMS (2×)

to receive hospitably, to welcome as a guest, to take up and accept

This verb means to receive or welcome, especially in the sense of hospitality. Acts 28:7 describes how Publius, the chief official of Malta, ἀναδεξάμενος ἡμᾶς—received us hospitably—and entertained Paul's shipwreck party for three days. Hebrews 11:17 states that Abraham, when tested, was offering up (ἀνεδέξατο) Isaac—he who had received the promises was offering his only son. The classical range includes receiving guests, accepting evidence, undertaking tasks, and admitting concepts. Acts employs the hospitable reception sense, while Hebrews uses it for accepting or taking up the promises (variant reading).

(2×) The reception theme appears: Spanish 'habiendo recibido' (having received) and 'habiéndonos acogido' (having welcomed us), French 'recevoir,' German 'annehmen' (accept/receive). Acts clearly involves generous hospitality toward strangers, while Hebrews connects Abraham's obedience to his prior reception of God's promises. Both contexts involve accepting or taking up what is offered—whether people in need or divine commitments. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: having-received | es: habiendo-recibido, habiéndonos-acogido | fr: recevoir | de: annehmen, ἀναδεξάμενος Acts 28:7; Heb 11:17

ἀναδίδωμι G0325 V-APA-NMP (1×)

deliver, hand over (a letter, document, or item to someone)

This verb means to deliver or hand over something, particularly letters or documents, to their intended recipient. In Acts 23:33, Roman soldiers delivered Paul and a letter to the governor Felix in Caesarea. The Spanish habiendo-entregado and French remettre both emphasize the completion of the transfer—the successful conveyance of person and correspondence to the proper authority. This is administrative delivery rather than merely sending.

(1×) The Roman soldiers completed their mission (Acts 23:33) by delivering both Paul and the tribune's letter to Governor Felix. The Spanish habiendo-entregado captures the sense of successful transfer of custody, ensuring that both the prisoner and the official correspondence reached the appropriate provincial authority. ACQUIRING AND BUYING en: having-delivered | es: habiendo-entregado | fr: remettre | de: ἀναδόντες Acts 23:33

ἀναζάω G0326 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to come to life again, to revive, to live again

This verb means to return to life or revive. In Luke 15:24, the father celebrates the prodigal's return: "this son of mine was dead and ἀνέζησεν—has come alive again." Romans 7:9 uses it metaphorically: Paul says he was once alive apart from the law, but when the commandment came, sin ἀνέζησεν—sprang to life—and he died. Luke uses it literally for restoration to life (though metaphorically applied to the son's spiritual state), while Paul employs it figuratively for sin's activation. Both involve movement from death or dormancy to active life.

(2×) The revival theme appears: Spanish 'revivió' (revived), French 'revivre,' German 'wieder lebendig werden' (become alive again). The prodigal son context celebrates return from spiritual death, while Romans describes sin's deadly awakening when law revealed its true nature. Both involve the transition from lifelessness to active existence, whether positive (son's restoration) or negative (sin's deadly work). LIFE AND LIVING

en: came-alive | es: revivió | fr: revivre | de: wieder-lebendig-werden, ἀνέζησεν Luke 15:24; Rom 7:9

ἀναζητ-έω G0327 V-PPA-NMP (3×)

to search for, seek out, investigate carefully

A verb of diligent searching or investigation. Mary and Joseph 'searched for' the twelve-year-old Jesus among relatives and acquaintances (Luke 2:44-45). Barnabas went to Tarsus to 'seek out' Saul after his conversion (Acts 11:25). Classical usage includes investigating causes and discovering things overlooked. The term suggests purposeful, thorough searching rather than casual looking.

(3×) Denotes deliberate, careful searching. Luke's nativity account shows parental concern: a day's journey before realizing Jesus's absence, then anxious searching among the traveling company. Barnabas's search for Saul shows strategic intent: finding the right person for Antioch's church. Multilingual glosses use search vocabulary (Spanish 'buscar,' French 'chercher'), with present participles (Spanish 'buscando,' French 'cherchant,' German 'suchend') emphasizing the active, ongoing nature of the search. Discovery follows diligent seeking. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: searching-for, to-seek, were-searching-for | es: a-buscar, buscando, lo-buscaban | fr: chercher | de: ἀναζητοῦντες, ἀναζητῆσαι, ἀνεζήτουν Luke 2:44; Luke 2:45; Acts 11:25

ἀναζώννῡμι G0328 V-APM-NMP (1×)

gird up (one's loins), prepare oneself for action by securing one's garment

This middle voice verb means to gird up one's loins—to gather and secure loose garments in preparation for vigorous activity. In ancient dress, long robes needed to be tucked into the belt for running, working, or fighting. Peter uses this verb metaphorically in 1 Peter 1:13, calling believers to gird up the loins of their minds for mental and spiritual readiness. The Spanish habiéndoos-ceñido captures the reflexive action of personal preparation.

(1×) Peter exhorts believers (1 Peter 1:13) to gird up the loins of their minds—a vivid metaphor drawing on the physical act of securing one's robe for action. Just as travelers or soldiers would tuck their garments to move freely, Christians must prepare their minds for alert, disciplined thinking in hope. GIRDING AND DRESSING

en: having-girded-up | es: habiéndoos-ceñido | fr: ἀναζωσάμενοι | de: umguerten 1Pet 1:13

ἀναζωπῠρ-έω G0329 V-PNA (1×)

kindle afresh, fan into flame, rekindle (a fire or gift that has grown dim)

This verb means to rekindle or fan into flame a fire that has diminished. In 2 Timothy 1:6, Paul urges Timothy to fan into flame the gift of God within him—to stir up and revive what may have grown dormant through neglect or discouragement. The German anfachen and Spanish reavivar both capture the renewing action: not lighting a new fire, but breathing life back into embers that still glow but need intentional stirring.

(1×) Paul reminds Timothy (2 Timothy 1:6) to rekindle the God-given gift he received through the laying on of hands. The German anfachen ('fan into flame') vividly pictures the intentional effort needed to restore full blaze to a fire that has grown low—a call to renewed zeal and active ministry rather than passive maintenance. FIRE AND BURNING

en: to-fan-into-flame | es: reavivar | fr: ἀναζωπυρεῖν | de: anfachen 2Tim 1:6

ἀναθάλλω G0330 V-AIA-2P (1×)

bloom again, revive, renew (literally of plants; metaphorically of care or concern)

This verb literally means to bloom or sprout again, like a plant coming back to life after dormancy. Paul uses it metaphorically in Philippians 4:10, rejoicing that the Philippians' care for him has 'bloomed again' after a season when they lacked opportunity to show it. The Spanish revivisteis and German wieder-blühen both capture the sense of renewal—not new growth, but the flourishing again of something that had been alive but dormant.

(1×) Paul rejoices (Philippians 4:10) that the Philippians' concern for him has bloomed afresh—like a tree coming into flower after winter. The botanical metaphor (German wieder-blühen, 'bloom again') graciously acknowledges that their care had always existed but now found renewed expression through their gift, just as a plant's life continues even when not visibly flowering. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: you-revived | es: revivisteis | fr: ἀνεθάλετε | de: wieder-bluehen Phil 4:10

ἀνάθεμα G0331 N-NNS (6×)

A solemn curse, a thing or person devoted to divine destruction; anathema

One of the most intense words in Paul's vocabulary, anathema denotes something placed under a divine ban – utterly separated from God's people and devoted to destruction. In Romans 9:3 Paul expresses his willingness to be 'accursed' for the sake of his fellow Israelites. The Corinthian formula 'Jesus is anathema' (1 Cor 12:3) marks the ultimate false confession. Spanish 'anatema' and French 'anatheme' preserve the Greek loanword, testifying to its enduring theological weight across Christian traditions. The conspirators in Acts 23:14 bind themselves 'with a curse,' showing its oath-binding dimension.

a curse, something devoted to destruction, anathema (6×) A solemn pronouncement of divine curse or devotion to destruction, applied both to persons and to the act of cursing itself. In Acts 23:14 the conspirators bind themselves 'with a curse' (anathemati) – Spanish 'con maldicion,' French 'malediction' – showing the oath-binding function. Romans 9:3 uses it of self-imprecation: Paul would accept being anathema, cut off from Christ, for Israel's sake. In 1 Corinthians 12:3 it is the anti-confession ('Jesus is accursed'), while 1 Corinthians 16:22 and Galatians 1:8 deploy it as a solemn ecclesiastical pronouncement against those who distort the gospel. CURSES AND ANATHEMA

en: With-a-curse, accursed | es: ANATEMA, Con-maldición, anatema | fr: anathème, malédiction | de: Fluch, Ἀναθέματι Acts 23:14; Rom 9:3; 1Cor 12:3; 1Cor 16:22; Gal 1:8

ἀναθεμᾰ-τίζω G0332 V-PNA (4×)

to bind under a curse; to invoke divine destruction on oneself if an oath is broken

This verb intensifies ordinary oath-taking by invoking anathema—a solemn self-curse calling down divine punishment if the vow is violated. In Mark 14:71, Peter's denial reaches its climax as he begins 'to curse and swear,' placing himself under the ban. The three Acts passages (23:12, 14, 21) describe a conspiracy of more than forty men who 'bound themselves under a curse' not to eat or drink until they had killed Paul—a dramatic narrative detail showing the lethal seriousness of such oaths in Second Temple Judaism.

(4×) To place oneself or others under a solemn curse (anathema), invoking divine punishment for oath-breaking. Spanish 'maldecir/maldijimos' (to curse) and French 'prononcer un anatheme' (to pronounce an anathema) highlight the self-imprecatory nature. Mark 14:71 describes Peter cursing himself during his denial; Acts 23:12-21 recounts conspirators who bound themselves under a curse—a religiously binding vow to assassinate Paul or face divine retribution. CURSING (VERBAL ACT)

en: bound-themselves-under-a-curse, to-curse, we-have-cursed | es: a-maldecir, nos-maldijimos, se-maldijeron | fr: maudire, prononcer-un-anathème | de: ἀναθεματίζειν, ἀνεθεμάτισαν, ἀνεθεματίσαμεν Mark 14:71; Acts 23:12; Acts 23:14; Acts 23:21

ἀναθεωρ-έω G0333 V-PPA-NMS (2×)

to observe carefully, to examine closely, to consider thoughtfully

This compound verb intensifies θεωρέω, meaning to observe or consider carefully, to examine with attention. In Acts 17:23, Paul tells the Athenians that while ἀναθεωρῶν—carefully observing—their objects of worship, he found an altar inscribed "TO AN UNKNOWN GOD." Hebrews 13:7 exhorts readers to remember their former leaders, ἀναθεωροῦντες—considering carefully—the outcome of their way of life, and imitate their faith. Both contexts involve attentive observation that draws conclusions—Paul from pagan altars, the readers from leaders' faithful examples.

(2×) The careful observation theme appears: Spanish 'considerando' (considering) and 'observando,' French 'considérer,' German 'betrachten' (contemplate). Acts involves Paul's strategic reconnaissance of Athenian religion to find a gospel entry point, while Hebrews calls for reflective examination of leaders' lives to inspire imitation. Both require more than casual glancing—thoughtful attention that yields insight and response. SEEING AND PERCEIVING

en: considering, observing | es: considerando, observando | fr: considérer | de: betrachten, ἀναθεωρῶν Acts 17:23; Heb 13:7

ἀνάθημα G0334 N-DNP (1×)

votive offering, dedicatory gift (set up in a temple or sacred space)

This noun denotes a votive offering or decorative gift dedicated in a temple. In Luke 21:5, people were remarking on how the Jerusalem temple was adorned with beautiful stones and votive offerings. These were objects donated by worshipers in gratitude or petition—costly gifts that enhanced the temple's splendor. The Spanish ofrendas and French offrandes both emphasize the dedicatory nature of these gifts, which transformed the sanctuary into a treasury of devotion.

(1×) As Jesus' disciples marveled at the temple's magnificence (Luke 21:5), they noted both its architectural stones and the votive offerings adorning it. These anathēmata were gifts dedicated to God—precious objects that worshipers had donated to beautify the sacred space, creating a visual testimony to generations of devotion and gratitude. INCENSE AND WORSHIP

en: with-offerings | es: ofrendas | fr: offrandes | de: ἀναθήμασιν Luke 21:5

ἀναίδεια G0335 N-AFS (1×)

shamelessness, bold persistence, impudence (especially in making requests)

This noun denotes shamelessness or bold persistence, often in the context of asking favors. In Luke 11:8, Jesus teaches that even if a man won't help a friend out of friendship, he will respond because of the friend's shameless persistence—the refusal to take no for an answer. The French impudence captures the audacity, while Spanish insistencia emphasizes the relentless quality. This is not immoral shamelessness but the bold refusal to be deterred when seeking what is needed.

(1×) In Jesus' parable (Luke 11:8), a man's shameless persistence wins the reluctant response his friendship alone could not secure. The French impudence and German Unverschämtheit capture the audacious quality—the bold refusal to be embarrassed or deterred. This parabolic 'shamelessness' models the confident, persistent prayer that trusts God's generosity enough to keep asking. PRIDE AND ARROGANCE en: shamelessness | es: insistencia | fr: impudence | de: ἀναίδειαν Luke 11:8

ἀναίρ-εσις G0336 N-DFS (1×)

taking away, removal (especially slaying, execution, or violent death)

This noun can denote taking up or away, but in New Testament usage it specifically means slaying or execution—the violent removal of life. In Acts 8:1, it describes the killing of Stephen, the first Christian martyr. The Spanish muerte and French mise-à-mort both specify lethal violence rather than mere removal. This is not natural death but judicial or mob execution, the forcible ending of a life.

(1×) Luke notes (Acts 8:1) that Saul approved of Stephen's execution, using this term for the violent taking of life. The French mise-à-mort ('putting to death') and Spanish muerte specify not just any taking away but lethal violence—the mob's stoning that made Stephen the first Christian martyr and launched a wave of persecution. KILLING AND REMOVING en: killing | es: muerte | fr: mise-à-mort | de: ἀναιρέσει Acts 8:1

ἀναιρέω G0337 V-AIA-3P (24×)

To kill, put to death, slay; to take away or abolish; to take up, pick up (a child)

Anaireo literally means 'to take up' but in New Testament usage it overwhelmingly means to take a life – to kill or execute. Herod's slaughter of the innocents (Matt 2:16), the crucifixion of Jesus (Acts 2:23), and the stoning of Stephen (Acts 7:28) all employ this verb. The classical Greek range was wider: to pick up a child for rearing, to annul a law, to carry off prizes. Two of these older senses survive marginally: Hebrews 10:9 uses it for Christ 'taking away' the first covenant to establish the second, and Acts 7:21 recalls Pharaoh's daughter 'taking up' the infant Moses. Spanish captures the spectrum from 'matar' (kill) to 'quitar' (remove) to 'tomar' (take up).

1. kill, put to death (22×) To kill, slay, or put to death by violent or judicial means – the dominant New Testament sense. Acts alone uses it over a dozen times for executions and murders (Acts 2:23; 5:33; 7:28; 12:2; 23:15). Spanish 'matar/mataron' and German 'toten' consistently render this lethal sense. The passive 'being put to death' appears in contexts of martyrdom and persecution. KILLING AND REMOVING en: being-put-to-death, he-killed, killed | es: matar, mataran, mataron | fr: tuer | de: toeten, tötet Matt 2:16; Luke 22:2; Luke 23:32; Acts 2:23; Acts 5:33

2. take away, remove (1×) To take away, remove, or abolish something from its established place or state. In Hebrews 10:9 Christ 'takes away the first [covenant] to establish the second,' a theological use where removal serves a redemptive purpose. The classical Greek sense of annulling laws or abrogating boundaries lies behind this usage. Spanish 'quita' (he removes) captures the non-violent character. KILLING AND REMOVING en: he-takes-away | es: quita | fr: tuer | de: toeten Heb 10:9

3. take up, pick up (1×) To take up or pick up, especially a child for adoption or rearing – the oldest sense of the compound (ana + haireo, 'to lift up'). Acts 7:21 preserves this archaic meaning: when Moses was exposed, Pharaoh's daughter 'took him up and reared him as her own son.' Spanish 'tomo' (she took) and the context of nurture distinguish this from the violent primary sense. KILLING AND REMOVING en: took-up | es: tomó | fr: tuer | de: tötet Acts 7:21

ἀναίτιος G0338 Adj-AMP (2×)

guiltless, innocent, without blame or fault

This adjective describes those who are not the cause of wrong and therefore bear no guilt. Jesus uses it twice in Matthew 12, defending his disciples' Sabbath grain-plucking. Verse 5 notes that priests who work in the temple on Sabbath are ἀναίτιοί—guiltless. Verse 7 quotes Hosea 6:6 ("I desire mercy, not sacrifice") and adds that if the Pharisees understood this, they would not have condemned τοὺς ἀναιτίους—the guiltless. The classical background emphasizes being free from responsibility for wrong. Jesus applies it to those performing legitimate acts wrongly accused of Sabbath-breaking.

(2×) The guiltlessness theme appears consistently: Spanish 'inocentes' (innocent) and 'sin culpa' (without guilt), French 'innocent,' German preserving the Greek. Both verses defend people performing necessary or legitimate work against accusations of wrongdoing. Jesus argues from greater to lesser: if priests are guiltless working on Sabbath, how much more his disciples picking grain to satisfy hunger? The principle of mercy over ritual condemnation protects the innocent. INNOCENCE AND ACQUITTAL en: guiltless | es: inocentes, sin-culpa | fr: innocent | de: ἀναίτιοί, ἀναιτίους Matt 12:5; Matt 12:7

ἀνακάθίζω G0339 V-AIA-3S (2×)

to sit up, to rise to a sitting position from lying down

This verb means to sit up or rise to a sitting position. Both occurrences describe resurrections. In Luke 7:15, when Jesus touches the bier and commands the widow's dead son to arise, ὁ νεκρὸς ἀνεκάθισεν—the dead man sat up—and began to speak. Acts 9:40 records that after Peter prayed over dead Tabitha and commanded her to arise, ἀνεκάθισεν—she sat up. The verb captures the dramatic moment when death's horizontal stillness gives way to living vertical posture. Sitting up becomes the first visible sign that life has returned, preceding speech and full restoration.

(2×) The sitting-up action appears uniformly: Spanish 'se sentó,' French 's'asseoir' (to sit) and 'se relever' (sit up), German preserving the Greek. Both resurrection narratives use the same verb for the same pivotal moment—the transition from death's stillness to life's movement. The action is both literal and deeply symbolic, manifesting the restoration of life through Jesus' and his apostle's word. SITTING AND DWELLING

en: sat-up, she-sat-up | es: se-sentó | fr: s'asseoir, se-relever | de: ἀνεκάθισεν Luke 7:15; Acts 9:40

ἀνακαιν-ίζω G0340 V-PNA (1×)

renew, restore (to original state or bring back to life spiritually)

This verb means to renew or restore something to its former condition. In Hebrews 6:6, it appears in a stark warning about those who fall away: it is impossible to renew them again to repentance. The German erneuern and Spanish renovar both emphasize restoration to an earlier state. The context suggests not mere surface renewal but a fundamental return to the transformative repentance that marked their initial conversion.

(1×) Hebrews 6:6 warns of the impossibility of renewing to repentance those who have experienced Christ's grace yet fallen away. The term (German erneuern, 'renew') suggests a return to an earlier spiritual state, but the author's point is sobering: those who deliberately crucify Christ afresh place themselves beyond the reach of this restorative renewal. RENEW REPAIR RESTORE en: to-renew | es: renovar | fr: renouveler | de: erneuern Heb 6:6

ἀνακαιν-όω G0341 V-PIM/P-3S (2×)

to be renewed, to be made new again, to experience renewal

This verb in passive voice means to be renewed or made new again. Both occurrences describe ongoing spiritual renewal. In 2 Corinthians 4:16, Paul declares that though the outer self is wasting away, the inner self ἀνακαινοῦται—is being renewed—day by day. Colossians 3:10 describes believers who have put on the new self τὸν ἀνακαινούμενον—which is being renewed—in knowledge after the image of its creator. Both emphasize progressive transformation—not a one-time event but continuous renewal by God's power, restoring believers toward their intended image.

(2×) The renewal theme appears consistently: Spanish 'se renueva' (is renewed) and 'que se renueva,' French 'renouveler,' German 'erneuern' (renew). Paul's usage in both passages employs present passive participles, emphasizing ongoing divine action. Second Corinthians highlights daily inward renewal despite outward decay, while Colossians connects renewal to knowledge and conformity to Christ's image. Both describe God's restorative work in believers. RENEW REPAIR RESTORE en: being-renewed, is-being-renewed | es: que-se-renueva, se-renueva | fr: renouveler, ἀνακαινούμενον | de: erneuern 2Cor 4:16; Col 3:10

ἀνακαίν-ωσις G0342 N-DFS (2×)

renewal, the act or state of being made new again

This noun denotes renewal or the state of being made new. Romans 12:2 exhorts believers not to conform to this age but be transformed by τῇ ἀνακαινώσει τοῦ νοός—the renewal of the mind—to discern God's will. Titus 3:5 declares God saved us through the washing of regeneration and ἀνακαινώσεως πνεύματος ἁγίου—renewal by the Holy Spirit. Both passages describe God's transforming work producing new thinking and new life. Romans emphasizes cognitive transformation enabling moral discernment; Titus emphasizes the Spirit's regenerating and renewing work in salvation.

(2×) The renewal concept appears uniformly: Spanish 'renovación,' French 'renouvellement,' German 'Erneuerung' (renewal). Romans applies it specifically to the mind's transformation, while Titus presents it as the Spirit's comprehensive work. Both contexts attribute renewal to divine agency—it's not self-improvement but God's recreating power restoring believers toward their intended purpose and nature. NEWNESS AND FRESHNESS en: renewal | es: renovación | fr: renouvellement | de: Erneuerung Rom 12:2; Titus 3:5

ἀνακᾰλύπτω G0343 V-PPM/P-NNS (2×)

to unveil, to uncover, to reveal by removing a covering

This verb means to unveil or uncover, literally or metaphorically. Second Corinthians 3:14 states that the veil over the old covenant reading is not lifted, because only in Christ is it taken away (ἀνακαλυπτόμενον—being unveiled). Verse 18 declares that we all, with ἀνακεκαλυμμένῳ προσώπῳ—unveiled face—behold the Lord's glory as in a mirror and are transformed. Paul contrasts veiled hearts that cannot understand Moses with unveiled faces that behold Christ's glory. The removal of the covering enables true seeing and consequent transformation.

(2×) The unveiling theme appears: Spanish 'con descubierto' (with uncovered) and 'siendo descubierto,' French 'dévoiler,' German 'aufdecken' (uncover). Both verses occur in Paul's sustained metaphor of veils and unveiling. The literal act of removing a covering becomes a powerful image for spiritual illumination—only when the veil is lifted in Christ can people truly see God's glory and be transformed by it. REVEALING AND DISCLOSING

en: being-unveiled, with-unveiled | es: con-descubierto, siendo-descubierto | fr: dévoiler | de: aufdecken 2Cor 3:14; 2Cor 3:18

ἀνακάμπ-τω G0344 V-FIA-1S (4×)

to return, turn back; to bend one's path back to a previous location

Compounded from ana ('back') and kampto ('to bend'), this verb pictures a path curving back on itself. The Magi return home by another route to avoid Herod (Matt 2:12). In Luke 10:6, Jesus instructs the seventy-two that if a household is unworthy, their peace 'will return' to them—a striking image of blessing boomeranging back. Paul promises the Ephesian elders he will return (Acts 18:21), and the heroes of faith in Hebrews 11:15 are praised for not longing to return to the country they had left.

(4×) To turn back or return to a place previously departed from, literally bending one's course in reverse. Spanish 'volver/regresar' and French 'retourner' capture the straightforward spatial meaning. Matt 2:12 has the Magi returning by another road; Luke 10:6 metaphorically pictures peace returning to the sender; Acts 18:21 records Paul's promise to come back; Hebrews 11:15 notes the patriarchs' refusal to return to their homeland. RETURNING AND RESTORING en: I-will-return, it-will-return, to-return | es: de-regresar, volver, volverá | fr: retourner | de: zurueckkehren, ἀνακάμψαι, ἀνακάμψει Matt 2:12; Luke 10:6; Acts 18:21; Heb 11:15

ἀνάκειμαι G0345 V-PPM/P-GMP (14×)

recline at table — to assume the ancient dining posture of reclining on a couch during a meal

Anakeimai reflects one of the most vivid cultural markers in the Gospels: the Greco-Roman practice of reclining on low couches to eat, leaning on the left elbow while eating with the right hand. Every one of its 14 New Testament occurrences describes this communal dining posture — from the tax collectors reclining with Jesus (Matt 9:10) to the wedding guests in the parable (Matt 22:10-11) to the intimate setting of the Last Supper. The Spanish 'recostados' and 'reclinados,' French 'etre a table,' and German 'zu Tisch liegen' all reflect the same physical scene. Though the classical Greek word could mean 'be dedicated' or 'be laid up,' the NT restricts it entirely to table fellowship.

recline at table, be seated for a meal (14×) To recline at a dining table in the ancient posture of lying on one's side on a couch, propped on an elbow — the standard Greco-Roman and Jewish practice for formal meals. All 14 NT occurrences depict communal dining scenes: the banquet with sinners (Matt 9:10), the parable of the wedding feast (Matt 22:10-11), the anointing at Bethany (Matt 26:7), and the Last Supper (Matt 26:20). The verb serves as the functional passive of anatithemai, literally 'to be laid back,' and presupposes the triclinium setting familiar to first-century audiences. RECLINING AND LYING en: he-was-reclining, ones-reclining, reclining | es: -recostados, de-reclinados, estando-reclinado | fr: être-à-table | de: liegt-zu-Tisch, zu-Tisch-liegen Matt 9:10; Matt 22:10; Matt 22:11; Matt 26:7; Matt 26:20

ἀνακεφαλαι-όομαι G0346 V-PIM/P-3S (2×)

to sum up, to recapitulate, to bring together under one head or main point

This compound verb means to sum up or recapitulate, originally from rhetorical practice of summarizing arguments. Romans 13:9 states that the commandments—"do not commit adultery, murder, steal, covet"—and any other commandment ἐν τῷ λόγῳ τούτῳ ἀνακεφαλαιοῦται—are summed up in this word: "Love your neighbor as yourself." Ephesians 1:10 describes God's plan to ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι τὰ πάντα ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ—sum up all things in Christ, things in heaven and on earth. Paul uses it for comprehensively gathering multiple elements under one unifying principle or person.

(2×) The summarizing function appears: Spanish 'se resume' (is summarized) and 'reunir bajo una cabeza' (gather under one head), French 'résumer,' German 'zusammenfassen' (sum up). Romans applies it to ethical condensation—many laws unified in love. Ephesians presents cosmic unification—all creation gathered under Christ's headship. Both involve bringing multiplicity into unity through a comprehensive principle or person. COUNTING AND NARRATING

en: it-is-summed-up, to-sum-up | es: reunir-bajo-una-cabeza, se-resume | fr: résumer | de: zusammenfassen Rom 13:9; Eph 1:10

ἀνα-κλίνω G0347 V-FIA-3S (6×)

To recline at table or to cause someone to recline; to lay down — spanning banquet posture and tender care (ἀνακλίνω)

A verb capturing the characteristic ancient Near Eastern posture of reclining at a meal, used both intransitively and transitively. In its passive/intransitive use, the redeemed 'will recline' with the patriarchs at the messianic banquet (Matt 8:11, Luke 13:29). In its active/causative use, it describes Jesus commanding crowds to sit for feeding (Mark 6:39) and, most tenderly, Mary laying the newborn Jesus in a manger (Luke 2:7). Arabic adja'athu ('she laid him down') and Hebrew hishkivah oto ('she caused him to lie down') illuminate the causative force of the Nativity usage.

1. recline (intransitive) (3×) To recline at table, especially for a festive or communal meal (intransitive/passive). In Matt 8:11 and Luke 13:29, the faithful from east and west 'will recline' at the eschatological banquet with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob — a vivid image of inclusion in the kingdom. Matt 14:19 uses it of crowds sitting down before the miraculous feeding. Spanish recostarse and se reclinarán preserve the reflexive, self-directed posture, while French faire asseoir highlights the seated aspect of the banquet position. SITTING AND DWELLING

en: to-recline, will-recline | es: recostarse, se-reclinarán | fr: faire-asseoir | de: ἀνακλιθήσονται, ἀνακλιθῆναι Matt 8:11; Matt 14:19; Luke 13:29

2. cause to recline / lay down (transitive) (3×) To cause someone to recline or to lay someone down (transitive/causative). In Luke 2:7, Mary 'laid' the infant Jesus in a manger — Arabic adja'athu ('she laid him down') and Hebrew hishkivah oto ('she caused him to lie down') both bring out the tender causative action. In Mark 6:39 Jesus commands the disciples to make the crowd recline in groups. Luke 12:37 promises that the master 'will make them recline' and serve them, reversing the expected social order. Spanish lo acostó ('she laid him down') and los hará recostarse ('he will make them recline') neatly distinguish the intimate and communal applications. SITTING AND DWELLING

en: laid, to-make-recline, will-recline | es: lo-acostó, los-hará-recostarse, recostar | fr: faire-asseoir | de: ἀνέκλινεν, ἀνακλινεῖ, ἀνακλῖναι Mark 6:39; Luke 2:7; Luke 12:37

ἀνα-κόπτω G0348

drive back, repel; check or stop motion; restrain, hinder

A compound verb carrying the basic sense of pushing or driving something backward. In military contexts it means to beat back an assailant or drive back shields. Nautically it can describe checking a ship's course. The medical usage includes regurgitating food or the effect of treatment taking hold. Metaphorically, it extends to being restrained from an impulse or stopping short in speech. The passive voice often carries the sense of being stopped, restrained, or checked from some intended action.

ἀνακράζω G0349 V-AIA-3S (5×)

To cry out loudly, shriek, scream; an intense vocal outburst often associated with demonic encounters or crowd clamor.

A compound of ana (up) and krazo (cry), this verb denotes a sudden, forceful vocal outburst—louder and more convulsive than ordinary speech. In Mark and Luke, it appears predominantly in exorcism narratives where unclean spirits shriek through their hosts (Mark 1:23, Luke 4:33, Luke 8:28). The disciples' terrified cry upon seeing Jesus walk on water (Mark 6:49) and the crowd's shouted demand for Barabbas (Luke 23:18) round out the usage. Spanish distinguishes the nuances well: 'gritó' for a shriek, 'clamando' for sustained crying out.

(5×) To cry out loudly, to shriek or scream with sudden force. The prefix ana- intensifies the basic krazo, producing a cry that bursts upward and outward. Three of the five NT occurrences involve demonic confrontation—an unclean spirit screaming in the Capernaum synagogue (Mark 1:23, Luke 4:33) and the Gerasene demoniac's shriek before Jesus (Luke 8:28). The remaining uses describe the disciples' terrified scream on the sea (Mark 6:49) and the Jerusalem crowd's clamorous demand to release Barabbas (Luke 23:18). Spanish captures the range: 'gritó' (shrieked), 'gritaron' (they cried out), 'clamando' (crying out). CALLING AND NAMING en: cried-out, having-cried-out, he-cried-out | es: clamando, gritaron, gritó | fr: crier | de: ἀνέκραγον, ἀνέκραξαν, ἀνέκραξεν Mark 1:23; Mark 6:49; Luke 4:33; Luke 8:28; Luke 23:18

ἀνακρίνω G0350 V-APA-NMP (16×)

To examine closely, interrogate judicially, or call to account; discerning truth, conducting legal inquiry, or exercising evaluative judgment

Anakrino carries the precision of a Greek courtroom into the New Testament's spiritual vocabulary. Luke uses it for Pilate's formal judicial examination of Jesus (Luke 23:14) and for Roman magistrates interrogating apostles (Acts 4:9, 24:8). But Paul transforms the term: the spiritual person 'examines all things' yet is examined by no one (1 Cor 2:15), and the Bereans were commended for examining the Scriptures daily (Acts 17:11). Spanish splits the senses neatly — 'discernir' for spiritual evaluation, 'interrogar' for legal inquiry, 'juzgar' for calling to account — while French 'examiner' and 'interroger' track the same distinction.

1. discern or examine carefully (7×) To examine carefully, discern, or evaluate — especially spiritual realities and truth claims. The Bereans examined the Scriptures daily to verify Paul's teaching (Acts 17:11). In 1 Corinthians 2:14-15, the 'natural person' cannot discern spiritual things, while the spiritual person examines all things. Also used of evaluating marketplace food without asking questions of conscience (1 Cor 10:25, 27). Spanish 'discernir' and French 'examiner' capture this investigative discernment. JUDICIAL EXAMINATION

en: examines, examining, he-is-examined | es: discierne, es-discernido, es-examinado | fr: examiner | de: ἀναϰρίνει, ἀναϰρίνεται, ἀναϰρίνοντες Acts 17:11; 1Cor 2:14; 1Cor 2:15; 1Cor 10:25

2. investigate or interrogate judicially (6×) To interrogate or investigate judicially — a formal legal examination. Pilate formally examined Jesus and found no fault (Luke 23:14); the apostles were interrogated by the Sanhedrin (Acts 4:9); Felix directed accusers to examine Paul (Acts 24:8); Herod interrogated the guards after Peter's escape (Acts 12:19). Spanish 'interrogar/examinar' and French 'interroger' reflect the forensic register inherited from classical Attic legal usage. JUDICIAL EXAMINATION

en: are-being-examined, examining, having-examined | es: habiendo-examinado, habiéndome-examinado, interrogando | fr: examiner, interroger | de: ἀναϰρίναντές, ἀναϰρίνας, ἀναϰρίνουσίν Luke 23:14; Acts 4:9; Acts 12:19; Acts 24:8; Acts 28:18

3. judge or call to account (3×) To judge, call to account, or subject to evaluative authority. Paul declares that it matters little to him whether he is 'examined' by the Corinthians or any human court (1 Cor 4:3), for the one who truly examines him is the Lord (1 Cor 4:4). Spanish 'juzgar' and the shift from investigative to evaluative tone mark this sense. The emphasis falls not on fact-finding but on the exercise of authority to render a verdict. JUDICIAL EXAMINATION

en: I-be-examined, I-examine, examining | es: juzgando, juzgo, sea-juzgado | fr: examiner | de: ἀναϰρίνω, ἀναϰρίνων, ἀναϰριθῶ 1Cor 4:3; 1Cor 4:4

ἀνάκρισις G0351 N-GFS (1×)

preliminary examination, inquiry (especially legal investigation before trial)

This noun denotes a preliminary examination or inquiry, particularly in legal contexts. In Athenian law it referred to the pretrial investigation that prepared a case for formal judgment. Festus uses this term in Acts 25:26, noting he has nothing definite to write to Caesar about Paul after his examination. The French examen and Spanish investigación both capture the investigative process—the gathering of facts and hearing of evidence before formal charges can be formulated.

(1×) Festus admits (Acts 25:26) he lacks concrete findings to report to the emperor after Paul's preliminary examination. The term (French examen, Spanish investigación) reflects Roman legal procedure: a governor's inquiry to determine whether charges warrant imperial attention. Festus hopes King Agrippa's questioning will yield something substantial to document. INVESTIGATION INQUIRY en: examination | es: investigación | fr: examen | de: ἀναϰρίσεως Acts 25:26

ἀνακύπτω G0352 V-AIA-3S (4×)

to straighten up, stand erect; to lift one's head or body from a bent posture

Formed from ana ('up') and kupto ('to bend, stoop'), this verb describes the physical motion of raising oneself from a stooped or bowed position. In Luke 13:11, the woman crippled for eighteen years was unable to 'straighten up at all' until Jesus healed her. Luke 21:28 uses it eschatologically: 'Stand up and lift your heads, for your redemption draws near.' In John 8:7 and 8:10, Jesus straightens up from writing on the ground to address the woman's accusers—a quiet, powerful gesture of deliberate attention.

(4×) To raise oneself from a bent or stooped posture, to stand erect or lift the head. Spanish 'enderezarse' (to straighten oneself) and French 'se relever' (to raise oneself up) both emphasize the reflexive, embodied nature of the action. Luke 13:11 describes a woman physically unable to straighten up; Luke 21:28 uses it figuratively for confident expectation; John 8:7, 10 depict Jesus rising from stooping to write on the ground. SITTING AND DWELLING

en: having-straightened-up, he-straightened-up, stand-up-straight | es: enderezarse, habiéndose-irguido, levantaos | fr: se-relever | de: aufrichten, ἀνακύψαι, ἀνακύψατε Luke 13:11; Luke 21:28; John 8:7; John 8:10

ἀναλαμβάνω G0353 V-APA-NMS (13×)

To take up, pick up; to take up into heaven (of Christ's ascension); to take on board a ship

Rooted in the idea of lifting upward, this verb spans from the mundane to the majestic. Its most theologically charged use describes Christ being 'taken up' into heaven at the Ascension (Mark 16:19; Acts 1:2, 11, 22), a sense the Spanish translations vividly render as 'fue llevado arriba' and 'fue subido.' It also covers practical actions: picking up physical objects such as the full armor of God (Eph 6:13, 16) or taking along a companion for a journey (2 Tim 4:11; Acts 23:31). Luke further employs it for taking someone on board a ship (Acts 20:13–14), where Spanish 'recogiéndolo' highlights the act of receiving aboard.

1. take up into heaven (6×) Divine or heavenly taking up: to be received into heaven, used almost exclusively of Christ's ascension and related divine acts. Mark 16:19 says Jesus 'was taken up into heaven'; Acts 1:2, 11, 22 repeat this for the ascension narrative; Acts 10:16 uses it of the vision-sheet taken back up. Spanish 'fue tomado arriba / fue subido' and French 'être enlevé' emphasize upward divine motion. RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: having-been-taken-up, he-was-taken-up, was-taken-up | es: fue-llevado-arriba, fue-subido, fue-tomado-arriba | fr: prendre, être-enlevé | de: nimmt-auf, ἀνελήμφθη Mark 16:19; Acts 1:2; Acts 1:11; Acts 1:22; Acts 10:16

2. take up, pick up (5×) Physical lifting or picking up: to take up objects or take someone along. Paul urges believers to 'take up' the full armor of God (Eph 6:13, 16), Stephen recalls Israel 'taking up' the tent of Moloch (Acts 7:43), and Paul asks Timothy to 'pick up Mark and bring him' (2 Tim 4:11). Spanish 'habiendo tomado / tomad' and German 'nimmt auf' treat this as ordinary handling or gathering. RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: having-taken, having-taken-up, take-up | es: habiendo-tomado, levantasteis, tomad | fr: prendre, être-enlevé | de: nimmt-auf, ἀναλάβετε, ἀναλαβόντες Acts 7:43; Acts 23:31; Eph 6:13; Eph 6:16; 2Tim 4:11

3. take on board (2×) Maritime boarding: to take someone on board a vessel. In Acts 20:13–14, the companions sail ahead intending 'to take Paul on board' at Assos, then do so at Mitylene. Spanish 'recogiéndolo' (gathering him up) and French 'prendre' capture the nautical reception, distinguishing it from general lifting. RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: having-taken-on, to-take-on | es: de-recoger, recogiéndolo | fr: prendre | de: nimmt-auf Acts 20:13; Acts 20:14

ἀνά-ληψις G0354 N-GFS (1×)

taking up, ascension (especially of Christ's departure from earth to heaven)

This noun means taking up or receiving back, but in Luke 9:51 it specifically refers to Jesus' ascension—his being taken up to heaven. Luke notes that when the days of his 'taking up' drew near, Jesus set his face toward Jerusalem. The Spanish ascensión and French enlèvement both specify upward removal to heaven. This encompasses not just the resurrection but the entire sequence of suffering, death, resurrection, and return to the Father.

(1×) Luke 9:51 marks a turning point when Jesus resolutely heads toward Jerusalem as the time of his being taken up approaches. The Spanish ascensión and French enlèvement ('lifting up') point to Christ's ultimate return to the Father, but the journey passes through the cross. This 'taking up' becomes the goal that gives meaning to the suffering. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: taking-up | es: ascensión | fr: enlèvement | de: ἀναλήμψεως Luke 9:51

ἀνᾱλίσκω G0355 V-ANA (2×)

to consume, to destroy utterly, to use up completely

This verb means to consume utterly, use up, or destroy completely. In Luke 9:54, James and John ask Jesus if they should command fire to come down from heaven and ἀναλῶσαι—consume—the inhospitable Samaritan village. Galatians 5:15 warns that if believers bite and devour one another, watch out that you are not ἀναλωθῆτε—consumed—by one another. The classical background includes spending money, using up resources, and destroying by fire. Luke uses it literally for fiery destruction, Paul metaphorically for community self-destruction through conflict.

(2×) The consumption theme appears: Spanish 'los consuma' (consume them) and 'seáis consumidos' (be consumed), French 'consumer,' German preserving the Greek. The disciples' desire echoes Elijah calling down fire (2 Kings 1), while Paul's warning depicts mutual destruction. Both contexts involve total destruction—whether by divine fire or communal conflict—emphasizing the completeness of the consuming action. EATING AND CONSUMING en: consume, you-be-consumed | es: los-consuma, seáis-consumidos | fr: consumer | de: ἀναλωθῆτε, ἀναλῶσαι Luke 9:54; Gal 5:15

ἀναλογ-ία G0356 N-AFS (1×)

proportion, proper relation (between parts in a system or between means and ends)

This noun denotes proportion—the proper mathematical or logical relation between parts. In classical Greek it could refer to geometric ratios or grammatical analogy. Paul uses it in Romans 12:6, instructing that prophecy should be exercised according to the proportion of faith. The Spanish proporción captures the balanced relationship: prophecy must be measured and kept in proper relation to the faith received, not exceeding its bounds or distorting the gospel.

(1×) Paul instructs (Romans 12:6) that those who prophesy should do so according to the proportion of their faith—maintaining proper balance and limits. The term (Spanish proporción) suggests that Spirit-inspired speech must remain proportionate to the measure of faith and grace God has given, avoiding speculation or excess that goes beyond revelation. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: proportion | es: proporción | fr: ἀναλογίαν | de: Verhaeltnis Rom 12:6

ἀναλογ-ίζομαι G0357 V-AMM-2P (1×)

reckon up, consider carefully, reflect on (especially to calculate or compare situations)

This verb means to reckon up, sum up, or consider carefully, often involving comparison or calculation. In Hebrews 12:3, believers are urged to consider him who endured such hostility from sinners, lest they grow weary. The Spanish considerad and German bedenken both emphasize careful reflection. This is not casual thought but deliberate meditation that weighs Christ's sufferings against our own struggles to gain perspective and endurance.

(1×) The author of Hebrews exhorts believers (12:3) to carefully consider Christ's endurance of hostility so they won't lose heart. The verb (Spanish considerad, 'consider') calls for active mental reckoning—comparing our trials to his, calculating the cost he paid, and drawing strength from the pattern of his perseverance through suffering. CONSIDERING AND DISCERNING en: consider | es: considerad | fr: considérer | de: bedenken Heb 12:3

ἄνᾰλος G0358 Adj-NNS (1×)

without salt, insipid, having lost its savor or preservative quality

This adjective means without salt or saltless—salt that has lost its characteristic flavor and preservative power. In Mark 9:50, Jesus poses the question: if salt becomes saltless, how can you season it? The Spanish desabrida ('tasteless') and German ohne-Salz capture the paradox: salt that has lost saltiness is worthless for its primary purposes of flavoring and preserving. This becomes Jesus' metaphor for disciples who lose their distinctive character.

(1×) Jesus asks the impossible question (Mark 9:50): how do you restore flavor to salt that has become saltless? The Spanish desabrida emphasizes the tastelessness of contaminated or degraded salt—a substance that exists for flavor and preservation becomes useless when it loses the very quality that defines it, just as disciples lose their purpose when they lose their distinctive character. SALT SUBSTANCE

en: saltless | es: desabrida | fr: sans-saveur | de: ohne-Salz Mark 9:50

ἀνάλῠ-σις G0359 N-GFS (1×)

departure, release (from life or a situation; especially death)

This noun denotes departure or release, often in the context of death. Paul uses it in 2 Timothy 4:6, sensing that the time of his departure has come. The Spanish partida and French départ both suggest the journey imagery: death as setting out rather than merely ending. The term can also mean the loosing of a ship from its moorings, and Paul may have this metaphor in mind—departing from this life as a ship sets sail for its destination.

(1×) Paul senses (2 Timothy 4:6) that his departure is imminent—the time to leave this life and enter the next. The Spanish partida ('departure') and German Aufbruch ('setting out') frame death not as termination but as transition, perhaps echoing the image of a ship loosing its moorings to sail toward home, the journey every believer ultimately makes. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11766 WITH 3 SENSES

en: departure | es: partida | fr: ἀναλύσεώς | de: Aufbruch 2Tim 4:6

ἀνα-λύω G0360 V-ASA-3S (2×)

to depart, to return, to break camp and move on

This verb originally meant to unyoke or unloose, then to break camp, depart, or return. Luke 12:36 depicts servants waiting for their master's ἀναλύσῃ—return—from the wedding feast. Philippians 1:23 expresses Paul's desire to ἀναλῦσαι—depart—and be with Christ, which is far better. The nautical and military background involves loosing ships from moorings or breaking camp to move. Luke applies it to returning home, Paul to death as departure from earthly life. Both involve movement from one state to another, whether spatial return or transition from life to afterlife.

(2×) The departure theme appears: Spanish 'vuelva' (returns) and 'partir' (depart), French 'partir,' German preserving the Greek. Luke's context involves a master's homeward return, while Paul's describes death as departing to be with Christ. The military/nautical imagery of breaking camp or casting off moorings fits both—movement from one place/state to another, whether return journey or final voyage. WITHDRAW DEPART

en: he-returns, to-depart | es: partir, vuelva | fr: partir | de: ἀναλύσῃ, ἀναλῦσαι Luke 12:36; Phil 1:23

ἀναμάρτ-ητος G0361 Adj-NMS (1×)

without sin, sinless, free from moral fault or error

This adjective means without sin or sinless—free from moral fault. In John 8:7, Jesus challenges the accusers of the adulterous woman: let the one without sin cast the first stone. The Spanish sin-pecado and French sans-péché directly state the condition. The term appears in a moment of moral jujitsu where Jesus shifts focus from the woman's obvious sin to the hidden sins of her accusers, silencing them with the recognition that none qualify as sinless judges.

(1×) Jesus' challenge (John 8:7) turns the tables on self-righteous accusers: only the sinless one may execute judgment. The stark qualification (Spanish sin-pecado, German ohne-Sünde) creates an impossible standard that exposes the accusers' hypocrisy—they who claim to enforce God's law are themselves lawbreakers, leaving only Jesus, the truly sinless one, qualified yet unwilling to condemn. SIN AND TRANSGRESSION

en: without-sin | es: sin-pecado | fr: sans-péché | de: ohne-Suende John 8:7

ἀναμένω G0362 V-PNA (1×)

wait for, await (someone or something expected)

This verb means to wait for or await, often with patient expectation. In 1 Thessalonians 1:10, it describes how believers wait for God's Son from heaven. The Spanish esperar and German warten-auf both capture the expectant quality—not passive resignation but active anticipation. This waiting involves orientation toward the future, eyes on the horizon for the one whose return is certain though its timing remains unknown.

(1×) Paul commends the Thessalonians (1:10) for turning from idols to serve the living God and await his Son from heaven. The verb (Spanish esperar, German warten-auf) suggests active, hopeful expectation rather than mere passage of time—a community oriented toward Christ's return, ready to receive the one who delivers from the wrath to come. WAITING AND EXPECTING

en: to-await | es: esperar | fr: ἀναμένειν | de: warten-auf 1Thess 1:10

ἀναμιμνήσκω G0363 V-PPP-GMS (6×)

To remind someone of something (active) or to recall to one's own mind, remember (middle/passive); used of stirring memory for exhortation or recollection.

A verb of memory that operates in two directions depending on voice. In the active, it means to bring something to another person's attention — as when Paul sends Timothy to remind the Corinthians of his ways in Christ (1 Cor 4:17). In the middle-passive, it turns inward: to call something back to one's own mind, to remember. Peter 'remembered' Jesus's prediction at the cock-crow (Mark 14:72), and Hebrews 10:32 exhorts believers to remember their earlier perseverance under suffering. The Spanish and German glosses (recordar, erinnern) consistently capture both directions, while French rappeler elegantly covers both 'remind' and 'recall.'

1. remember / recall (middle-passive) (4×) The middle-passive sense: to recall to one's own mind, to recollect or remember. This is the more frequent use (4 of 6 occurrences). In Mark 14:72 Peter remembers Jesus's word about denial; in Hebrews 10:32 believers are urged to remember former days of endurance. The Spanish 'recordando' and German 'erinnern' both reflect this inward, reflective act of retrieval from memory. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING

en: Remember, remembered, remembering | es: Recordad, habiéndose-acordado, recordando | fr: rappeler | de: erinnern Mark 11:21; Mark 14:72; 2Cor 7:15; Heb 10:32

2. remind (active) (2×) The active causative sense: to bring something to another person's attention, to remind. In 1 Corinthians 4:17 Paul dispatches Timothy so he 'will remind' the church of Paul's teaching, and in 2 Timothy 1:6 Paul reminds Timothy to fan into flame the gift of God. The shift from passive recall to active prompting is marked clearly in the Greek voice system, though many target languages (French rappeler, German erinnern) use a single verb for both. REMEMBERING AND REMINDING

en: I-remind, will-remind | es: recordará, recuerdo | fr: rappeler | de: erinnern 1Cor 4:17; 2Tim 1:6

ἀνάμνη-σις G0364 N-NFS (4×)

remembrance, memorial; the act of calling to mind, especially in liturgical or sacrificial contexts

In the Last Supper accounts (Luke 22:19; 1 Cor 11:24-25), Jesus uses this noun to establish the eucharistic meal as an act of remembrance. The Greek carries a richer sense than passive recollection: it implies an active, performative calling-to-mind that makes the past event present again. Hebrews 10:3 employs the same word in a contrasting direction, noting that the annual sacrifices serve as a reminder of sins rather than their removal. Spanish 'memoria/recuerdo' and German 'Erinnerung' both capture the commemorative force, while French 'souvenir' leans toward personal memory.

(4×) Active, liturgical remembrance: the deliberate calling to mind of a person or event, especially in worship. All four NT occurrences cluster around ritual memorial — the Lord's Supper ('do this in remembrance of me,' Luke 22:19; 1 Cor 11:24-25) and the annual sacrificial reminder of sins (Heb 10:3). Multilingual glosses uniformly render this as commemorative memory (spa 'memoria,' deu 'Erinnerung'), confirming a single unified sense in the NT. MEMORIALS AND REMEMBRANCE

en: remembrance, reminder | es: memoria, recuerdo | fr: souvenir | de: Erinnerung, ἀνάμνησιν Luke 22:19; 1Cor 11:24; 1Cor 11:25; Heb 10:3

ἀνανε-όομαι G0365 V-PNM/P (1×)

renew, make new again (in middle voice: be renewed)

This verb means to renew or make new again, and in passive/middle voice to be renewed. Paul uses it in Ephesians 4:23, calling believers to be renewed in the spirit of their minds. The Spanish renovaros and German erneuern both emphasize transformation—not mere repair but fundamental renewal. This is ongoing spiritual renovation, the continuous work of the Spirit renewing thought patterns, attitudes, and mental habits to reflect the new creation in Christ.

(1×) Paul exhorts believers (Ephesians 4:23) to be continually renewed in the spirit of their minds, marking the middle step between putting off the old self and putting on the new. The passive voice (Spanish renovaros) indicates this is God's work in us, a Spirit-driven renovation of our mental and spiritual faculties that enables Christlike living. RENEW REPAIR RESTORE en: to-be-renewed | es: renovaros | fr: ἀνανεοῦσθαι | de: erneuern Eph 4:23

ἀνανήφω G0366 V-ASA-3P (1×)

come to one's senses, become sober again, recover from delusion or spiritual stupor

This verb means to come to one's senses or become sober again, recovering from a kind of intoxication or stupor. In 2 Timothy 2:26, Paul hopes opponents may come to their senses and escape the devil's trap. The Spanish vuelvan-en-sí ('return to themselves') and German nüchtern-werden ('become sober') both suggest awakening from a deluded state. This is spiritual recovery—the moment when satanic deception breaks and clear thinking returns.

(1×) Paul expresses hope (2 Timothy 2:26) that those opposing the truth may come to their senses and escape the devil's snare. The Spanish vuelvan-en-sí pictures someone returning to themselves after being beside themselves—awakening from the stupor of deception to clear-eyed recognition of the truth they've been resisting, like someone sobering up from intoxication. SOBER-MINDED SELF-CONTROL

en: they-may-come-to-senses | es: vuelvan-en-sí | fr: ἀνανήψωσιν | de: nuechtern-werden 2Tim 2:26

Ἀνανίας G0367 N-VMS (11×)

Ananias — name borne by three NT figures: the deceitful husband, the Damascus disciple, and the high priest Ἀνανίας (Ananias), the Greek form of Hebrew Hananiah ('the LORD is gracious'), identifies three distinct persons in Acts. First, Ananias the husband of Sapphira, who lied about the sale price of property and fell dead at Peter's feet (Acts 5:1-5). Second, Ananias the devout disciple in Damascus whom the Lord sent to restore Saul's sight and baptize him (Acts 9:10-17; 22:12). Third, Ananias the high priest who presided over Paul's trial before the Sanhedrin and whom Paul sharply rebuked as a 'whitewashed wall' (Acts 23:2; 24:1). Spanish 'Ananías' preserves the name across all three referents.

(11×) Ananias husband of Sapphira, a member of the early Jerusalem church who conspired with his wife to withhold part of a land sale while claiming to give all. Peter exposed the deception as lying to the Holy Spirit, and Ananias fell dead immediately (Acts 5:1-5). This episode became a sobering paradigm of divine judgment on dishonesty within the covenant community. HANANIAH PERSONAL NAME

en: Ananias, Hanania, Hananias | es: Ananía, Ananías, Hananías | fr: Ananias | de: Ananias Acts 5:1; Acts 5:3; Acts 5:5; Acts 9:10

ἀναντί-ρρητος G0368 Adj-GNP (1×)

undeniable, indisputable, not able to be contradicted

This adjective means undeniable or indisputable—facts or claims that cannot be opposed or contradicted. In Acts 19:36, the town clerk declares these things undeniable, urging the rioting crowd toward calm. The Spanish innegables and French incontestable both emphasize the impossibility of rational dispute. The clerk appeals to universally acknowledged facts about Artemis worship to defuse mob emotion with appeals to reason and common knowledge.

(1×) The Ephesian town clerk appeals (Acts 19:36) to undeniable facts about the city's devotion to Artemis, arguing that since these truths are incontestable, the mob has no rational basis for rioting. The term (Spanish innegables, French incontestable) invokes shared knowledge that both sides accept, creating common ground from which to de-escalate the conflict. SPEAKING AND TALKING

en: undeniable | es: Innegables | fr: incontestable | de: ἀναντιρρήτων Acts 19:36

ἀναντί-ρρητος G0369 Adv (1×)

without objection, without gainsaying, without resistance

This adverb means without objection or gainsaying—compliance without resistance or questioning. In Acts 10:29, Peter explains he came without objection when summoned by Cornelius, despite Jewish scruples about entering Gentile homes. The Spanish sin-contradicción and French sans-objection both capture Peter's readiness to obey the Spirit's leading even when it violated cultural boundaries. This is obedience without internal debate or external protest.

(1×) Peter testifies (Acts 10:29) that he came without objection when called to Cornelius' house, though Jewish custom would normally forbid such contact. The adverb (Spanish sin-contradicción) indicates Peter's wholehearted compliance with the Spirit's direction—no inner resistance, no verbal protest, just immediate obedience that transcends cultural prohibitions when God commands. MANNER ADVERBS

en: without-objection | es: sin-contradicción | fr: sans-objection | de: ἀναντιρρήτως Acts 10:29

ἀνάξιος G0370 Adj-NMP (1×)

unworthy, not deserving (of an honor, privilege, or position)

This adjective means unworthy or not deserving of something. In 1 Corinthians 6:2, Paul asks rhetorically if believers are unworthy to judge trivial cases, given they will judge the world. The Spanish indignos and French indigne both capture the sense of being unfit or inadequate for a task. Paul's question is ironic: if you're competent for the greater responsibility (judging the world), how can you be incompetent for the lesser (settling disputes among yourselves)?

(1×) Paul's rhetorical question (1 Corinthians 6:2) challenges the Corinthians' practice of taking disputes to pagan courts: are you really unworthy to judge trivial matters when you'll judge the world? The term (Spanish indignos, German unwürdig) frames their behavior as inconsistent—those destined for cosmic judgment should certainly be competent for minor community disputes. DISQUALIFIED WORTHLESS

en: unworthy | es: ¿indignos | fr: indigne | de: unwuerdig 1Cor 6:2

ἀνάξιος G0371 Adv (1×)

unworthily, in an unworthy manner (not befitting the dignity or nature of something)

This adverb means unworthily or in an unworthy manner—acting in a way that fails to match the dignity or significance of something. Paul warns in 1 Corinthians 11:27 that whoever eats the bread or drinks the cup of the Lord unworthily sins against Christ's body and blood. The Spanish indignamente and French indignement both emphasize the mismatch between the sacred meal and disrespectful participation. This is not about personal worthiness but about manner of participation.

(1×) Paul warns (1 Corinthians 11:27) against partaking of the Lord's Supper unworthily—in a manner unfit for what it represents. The adverb (Spanish indignamente, German unwürdig) describes irreverent participation that dishonors Christ's sacrifice through selfish behavior, faction, or failure to discern the sacred nature of the meal, making the participant guilty of sinning against Christ's very body and blood. MANNER ADVERBS

en: unworthily | es: indignamente | fr: indignement | de: unwuerdig 1Cor 11:27

ἀνά-παυσις G0372 N-AFS (5×)

Rest, repose, cessation from labor or trouble; a state of refreshment for body or spirit.

Formed from ana (again) and pauō (cease), anapausis denotes a cessation that brings refreshment—rest in its fullest sense. Jesus offers it as a gift to the weary (Matt 11:29), while the restless wandering of an unclean spirit seeking anapausis but finding none provides a haunting counterpoint (Matt 12:43, Luke 11:24). In Revelation, the word takes two strikingly different turns: the four living creatures have no rest from their worship (Rev 4:8), and the worshipers of the beast will have no rest from their torment (Rev 14:11). Spanish 'descanso' and French 'repos' both carry the warmth of genuine refreshment.

(5×) Rest, repose, a cessation from activity that brings genuine refreshment to body or spirit. Jesus promises anapausis to the burdened who come to him (Matt 11:29)—a deep, soul-level rest. The unclean spirit of Matt 12:43/Luke 11:24 wanders through waterless places seeking this same rest but finding none, implying that rest is not merely physical but tied to a proper dwelling place. Revelation uses the term in ironic contrast: the living creatures never cease praising (Rev 4:8), while those who worship the beast find no respite from torment (Rev 14:11). French 'repos' and Spanish 'descanso' consistently render this as restful relief. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: rest | es: descanso | fr: repos | de: Ruhe, ἀνάπαυσιν Matt 11:29; Matt 12:43; Luke 11:24; Rev 4:8; Rev 14:11

ἀνα-παύω G0373 V-AIA-3P (12×)

To rest or cause to rest; cease from labor, refresh another, or be refreshed oneself.

A verb of deep comfort woven through the New Testament's most tender invitations. In Matthew 11:28, Jesus uses it to promise rest to the weary — 'Come to me, and I will give you rest' — where the active voice carries causative force: He Himself refreshes the burdened soul. Elsewhere it appears intransitively, as when Jesus tells the disciples to 'rest a while' (Mark 6:31), or eschatologically, when the blessed dead 'rest from their labors' (Rev 14:13). Paul treasures this word for the mutual refreshment believers bring one another (1 Cor 16:18; Phlm 1:7), where Spanish 'refrescar' and German 'erquicken' capture the revitalizing nuance better than a simple 'rest.'

1. rest, take one's rest (7×) To cease from activity and take rest oneself — the intransitive middle/passive use describing personal rest or respite. Jesus tells the disciples 'Come away and rest a while' (Mark 6:31), and in Gethsemane says with sorrowful irony, 'Sleep on now and take your rest' (Matt 26:45). Spanish 'descansad' and French 'reposer' consistently render this sense of voluntary cessation. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: rest, rests, they-should-rest | es: descansa, descansad, descansarán | fr: reposer | de: ruhen, ἀναπαύεσθε, ἀναπαύου Matt 26:45; Mark 6:31; Mark 14:41; Luke 12:19; 1Pet 4:14

2. refresh, give rest to (3×) To refresh or give rest to another — the causative active sense, where one person restores another. The great invitation of Matt 11:28, 'I will give you rest,' is the paradigm. Paul praises Stephanas's household because 'they refreshed my spirit' (1 Cor 16:18). Multilingual glosses split here: Spanish uses 'daré descanso' for the promise and 'refresca' for interpersonal refreshment, revealing the dual register of divine gift and human care. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: refresh, they-refreshed, will-give-rest | es: daré-descanso, descansaron, refresca | fr: reposer | de: ruhen, ἀναπαύσω Matt 11:28; 1Cor 16:18; Phlm 1:20

3. be refreshed, receive rest (2×) To be in a state of having been refreshed — the perfect passive indicating completed refreshment received from another. Titus's spirit 'has been refreshed' by the Corinthians (2 Cor 7:13), and Philemon's love has 'refreshed the hearts of the saints' (Phlm 1:7). Spanish 'ha sido refrescado' and the German rendering both preserve this resultative, stative nuance distinct from the active giving or the voluntary resting. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: has-been-refreshed, have-been-refreshed | es: ha-sido-refrescado, han-sido-refrescadas | fr: reposer | de: ruhen 2Cor 7:13; Phlm 1:7

ἀναπείθω G0374 V-PIA-3S (1×)

persuade, incite (especially to something wrong or contrary to law)

This verb means to persuade or incite, often with connotations of leading astray or corrupting judgment. In Acts 18:13, Paul's accusers claim he persuades people to worship God contrary to the law. The Spanish persuade and French persuader identify the action. The classical usage often implies bribery or seduction, but here it means religious persuasion that opponents view as dangerous innovation —turning people from traditional practice to a new and legally questionable way.

(1×) Paul's opponents in Corinth charge (Acts 18:13) that he persuades people to worship God contrary to the law—meaning either Roman law or Jewish law. The verb (Spanish persuade, French persuader) can suggest improper influence, and the accusers frame Paul's gospel preaching as dangerous persuasion that undermines legal and traditional religious structures. PERSUASION AND TRUST

en: persuades | es: persuade | fr: persuader | de: ἀναπείθει Acts 18:13

ἀναπέμπω G0375 V-AIA-3S (5×)

To send up, send back, or refer to a higher authority; used of legal remittals and the return of persons.

Compounded from ana (up) and pempō (send), this verb carries the core idea of sending someone upward—whether geographically, socially, or legally. All NT occurrences cluster in legal-jurisdictional contexts. Pilate sends Jesus up to Herod (Luke 23:7), Herod sends him back (Luke 23:11, 15), and Festus refers Paul's case to Caesar (Acts 25:21). Paul's sending of Onesimus back to Philemon (Phlm 1:12) adds a personal dimension. Spanish neatly distinguishes the directional nuances: 'envió' (sent), 'envié de vuelta' (sent back).

(5×) To send up or refer a person or case to another authority, or to send back. The prefix ana- implies upward or return motion, often in a jurisdictional chain. Pilate sends Jesus to Herod for trial (Luke 23:7), Herod returns him to Pilate (Luke 23:11), and Pilate notes the referral (Luke 23:15)—a legal ping-pong captured perfectly by French 'envoyer/renvoyer.' Festus refers Paul's appeal to the emperor (Acts 25:21), and Paul sends Onesimus back to Philemon (Phlm 1:12), giving the verb a more personal register. Spanish differentiates well: 'envió' for the initial sending, 'envié de vuelta' for the return. SENDING AND DISPATCHING

en: I-might-send, I-sent-back, he-sent-up | es: envié-de-vuelta, envió, lo-envíe | fr: envoyer, renvoyer | de: ἀνέπεμψά, ἀνέπεμψεν, ἀναπέμψω Luke 23:7; Luke 23:11; Luke 23:15; Acts 25:21; Phlm 1:12

ἀνάπηρ-ος G0376 Adj-AMP (2×)

crippled, maimed, lame, physically disabled or mutilated

This adjective describes those who are physically maimed, crippled, or disabled. Both occurrences appear in Luke's Gospel in Jesus' teaching about banquet hospitality. Luke 14:13 instructs that when giving a feast, invite the poor, crippled (ἀναπείρους), lame, and blind. Verse 21 depicts the master commanding his servant to bring in τοὺς ἀναπείρους—the crippled—along with the poor, blind, and lame from streets and lanes. Jesus radically redefines hospitality: rather than inviting those who can reciprocate, invite those who cannot repay, including the physically disabled.

(2×) The disability is consistent: Spanish 'lisiados' (crippled) and 'a lisiados,' French 'estropié' (maimed), German preserving the Greek. Both verses belong to the same parable contrasting worldly reciprocity-based hospitality with kingdom generosity toward the marginalized. The crippled represent those excluded from conventional social gatherings but specifically included in God's kingdom feast, illustrating grace extended to those unable to earn or repay it. LAME CRIPPLED

en: crippled | es: a-lisiados, lisiados | fr: estropié | de: ἀναπείρους Luke 14:13; Luke 14:21

ἀναπίπτω G0377 V-AIA-3S (12×)

To recline at a meal in the ancient dining posture; to lean back, sit down to eat at table.

Describes the characteristic posture of ancient Near Eastern and Greco-Roman dining: reclining on one's side at a low table, propped on the left elbow. When Jesus tells the crowds to 'sit down' for the feeding miracles, this is the word used — they recline on the grass (Matt 15:35; Mark 6:40; 8:6). At formal meals it denotes taking one's place at table (Luke 11:37; 14:10; 17:7; 22:14). The beloved disciple leans back against Jesus at the Last Supper (John 13:25; 21:20), an intimate posture made possible by this reclining arrangement. French 's'asseoir' captures the domesticated modern sense, while Spanish 'reclinarse/recostarse' preserves the physical posture more precisely.

recline (at table), lean back (12×) To recline at a meal, assuming the ancient dining posture of lying on one's side at a low table. Used of crowds settling for miraculous feedings (Matt 15:35; Mark 6:40; 8:6), guests taking their place at banquets (Luke 11:37; 14:10; 17:7), the disciples at the Last Supper (Luke 22:14; John 13:12), and specifically of the beloved disciple leaning back against Jesus' chest (John 13:25; 21:20). The word implies a formal or communal meal setting rather than casual sitting. Spanish 'recostarse' and German 'sich-niederlegen' both reflect the physical posture of reclining rather than merely sitting. SITTING AND DWELLING

en: having-leaned-back, he-reclined, recline | es: Habiéndose-reclinado, reclínate, recostarse | fr: s'asseoir | de: sich-niederlegen, ἀνάπεσε, ἀνέπεσεν Matt 15:35; Mark 6:40; Mark 8:6; Luke 11:37; Luke 14:10

ἀναπληρ-όω G0378 V-PPA-NMS (6×)

To fill up, fulfill, complete, or supply what is lacking

A compound verb (ana + pleroo) meaning to fill up what is deficient or bring something to full completion. Its range spans prophetic fulfillment to practical supply. In Matthew 13:14, Isaiah's prophecy 'is fulfilled' (anapleroutai) in the people's hardness of hearing. Paul uses it concretely when Stephanas's household 'supplied' what was lacking from the Corinthians' absence (1 Cor 16:17), and theologically when believers 'fulfill' the law of Christ by bearing one another's burdens (Gal 6:2). Philippians 2:30 praises Epaphroditus for filling up the gap in the Philippians' service.

fill up, fulfill, complete (6×) To fill up a deficiency, fulfill a prophecy, or complete what is incomplete. The verb carries an inherent sense of making whole what was partial. In Matthew 13:14 it denotes prophetic fulfillment – Spanish 'cumplireis' pointing to completion of Scripture. In 1 Corinthians 14:16 one 'fills the place' of the outsider, while 1 Corinthians 16:17 uses it for supplying a personal absence – Spanish 'colmar' (to fill to the brim). Galatians 6:2 applies it to mutual burden-bearing as fulfillment of Christ's law. Philippians 2:30 praises Epaphroditus for filling up what was lacking in the Philippians' service, showing the concrete social dimension. FULFILL AND COMPLETE

en: filled-up, filling, he-might-fill-up | es: colmar, cumpliréis, ocupa | fr: accomplir | de: ἀναπληροῦται, ἀναπληρώσετε, ἀναπλήρωσῃ Matt 13:14; 1Cor 14:16; 1Cor 16:17; Gal 6:2; Phil 2:30

ἀναπο-λόγητος G0379 Adj-NMS (2×)

without excuse, indefensible; morally without grounds for justification or self-defense

This rare adjective appears only twice in Paul's letters, both times in Romans. It describes a moral condition where someone has no legitimate excuse or defense for their actions. In Romans 1:20, Paul argues that creation itself reveals God's nature so clearly that those who reject Him stand without excuse. In Romans 2:1, he turns this against the moralist who judges others while doing similar things. The multilingual evidence (Spanish sin-excusa, French sans-excuse, German ohne-Entschuldigung) consistently captures this legal-moral sense of being indefensible.

(2×) Appearing in two pivotal Romans passages, this sense describes the human moral condition after encountering clear revelation. The word carries a forensic edge: it's not merely that excuses are weak, but that they literally don't exist. Paul uses it to dismantle both pagan indifference (Rom 1:20) and religious hypocrisy (Rom 2:1), showing that knowledge of truth creates accountability. GUILT AND PUNISHMENT

en: without-excuse | es: sin-excusa | fr: sans-excuse | de: ohne-Entschuldigung Rom 1:20; Rom 2:1

ἀνα-πτύσσω G0380 V-APA-NMS (1×)

unroll, open (a scroll or document for reading)

This verb means to unroll or open a scroll for reading. In Luke 4:17, Jesus unrolls the scroll of Isaiah in the Nazareth synagogue to read the messianic passage. The Spanish habiendo-desenrollado and French dérouler both describe the physical action of opening a rolled manuscript. Before the age of bound books, reading required this deliberate unrolling to find and expose the desired text—a pregnant moment as Jesus locates the prophecy he will claim to fulfill.

(1×) Luke describes (4:17) Jesus unrolling the Isaiah scroll in the synagogue, a physical action charged with significance. The Spanish desenrollado and French dérouler capture the manual process of opening the rolled manuscript to find the passage about the Spirit-anointed herald—the text Jesus will read and then audaciously claim as fulfilled in the hearing of his hometown. OPENING AND SHUTTING en: having-unrolled | es: habiendo-desenrollado | fr: dérouler | de: ἀναπτύξας Luke 4:17

ἀνάπτω G0381 V-AIP-3S (2×)

to kindle, set on fire, light (a flame); used metaphorically of Jesus setting fire on earth and the tongue's destructive power

This verb describes the act of igniting or kindling a fire. Jesus uses it metaphorically in Luke 12:49, speaking of His mission to cast fire upon the earth. James 3:5 employs it to describe how the small tongue ignites great forests of conflict. While the classical Greek shows broader usage (fastening, offering in temples), the New Testament restricts it to literal and metaphorical fire-kindling. The consistent translation pattern across languages (Spanish enciende, French allumer, German ἀνάπτει) reflects this focused meaning of ignition and kindling.

(2×) Both New Testament occurrences involve fire and its effects. Luke's Jesus longs for the fire to be already kindled—likely referring to judgment or the Spirit's transformative work. James uses the same verb for the tongue's capacity to ignite destructive conflict. The Spanish fue-encendido and enciende capture both passive (was kindled) and active (kindles) forms, showing the verb's flexibility in describing fire's initiation. BURNING AND FIRE

en: it-was-kindled, kindles | es: enciende, fue-encendido | fr: allumer | de: ἀνάπτει, ἀνήφθη Luke 12:49; Jas 3:5

ἀνάρίθμ-ητος G0382 Adj-NFS (1×)

innumerable, countless, not able to be counted

This adjective means innumerable or countless—a multitude too vast to count. In Hebrews 11:12, it describes descendants as numerous as the stars, springing from one man as good as dead. The Spanish innumerable and French innombrable both emphasize the impossibility of enumeration. This echoes God's promise to Abraham of offspring beyond counting, fulfilled despite the biological impossibility—faith creating a nation from aged and barren parents.

(1×) Hebrews 11:12 celebrates how from one man, though his body was as good as dead, came descendants as innumerable as the stars. The term (Spanish innumerable, German unzählbar) evokes God's promise to Abraham of offspring beyond counting—a promise spectacularly fulfilled through faith that believed God's creative power could overcome biological impossibility. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS

en: innumerable | es: innumerable | fr: innombrable | de: unzaehlbar Heb 11:12

ἀνα-σείω G0383 V-AIA-3P (2×)

to stir up, incite, agitate (a crowd); to shake something vigorously to provoke action or emotion

This compound verb means to shake vigorously or stir up, especially applied to crowds and emotions. In Mark 15:11, the chief priests use this action to incite the crowd against Jesus, stirring them to demand Barabbas. Luke 23:5 describes Jesus' opponents accusing Him of stirring up the people throughout Judea. The classical background includes shaking objects and brandishing weapons, but the New Testament focuses on social agitation. The multilingual glosses (Spanish alborota/incitaron, French exciter) emphasize the verb's role in mob dynamics and public unrest.

(2×) Both Gospel uses involve religious leaders manipulating crowds during Jesus' trial. The verb captures the deliberate act of agitating people toward a particular action—in this case, demanding crucifixion. The German Ἀνασείει and ἀνέσεισαν preserve the distinction between present (He stirs up) and aorist (they stirred up), showing this as both an ongoing tactic and a specific historical act during the Passion narrative. STIR UP INCITE

en: He-stirs-up, stirred-up | es: Alborota, incitaron | fr: exciter | de: ἀνέσεισαν, Ἀνασείει Mark 15:11; Luke 23:5

ἀνασκευ-άζω G0384 V-PPA-NMP (1×)

unsettle, upset, disturb (especially causing confusion or emotional turmoil)

This verb literally means to pack up baggage or dismantle a place, but metaphorically to unsettle or upset someone, causing disturbance and confusion. In Acts 15:24, the Jerusalem council addresses unauthorized teachers who troubled believers by upsetting their souls with words. The Spanish trastornando and French bouleverser both capture the emotional and spiritual disruption—the confusion and anxiety caused by false teaching that undermines faith and peace.

(1×) The Jerusalem council acknowledges (Acts 15:24) that unauthorized teachers have disturbed believers by unsettling their souls with demands for circumcision. The verb (Spanish trastornando, 'overturning') pictures more than mild disagreement—this is significant emotional and spiritual turmoil, the dismantling of confidence and peace through teaching the apostles never authorized. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: upsetting | es: trastornando | fr: bouleverser | de: ἀνασκευάζοντες Acts 15:24

ἀνα-σπάω G0385 V-AIP-3S (2×)

to draw up, pull up, haul upward; used of lifting objects from wells or retrieving things from below

This verb describes the action of drawing or pulling something upward, often from a lower position. In Luke 14:5, Jesus asks whether someone wouldn't pull up a son or ox that fell into a well on the Sabbath. Acts 11:10 describes how the heavenly vision Peter saw was drawn up again into heaven. Classical usage includes drawing water, pulling ships onto land, and extracting objects. The New Testament focuses on vertical retrieval. Translations across languages (Spanish fue-subido/lo-sacará, French retirer/tirer) consistently capture this upward movement.

(2×) The two occurrences show both literal rescue (pulling from a well) and visionary withdrawal (drawing back to heaven). Luke's example uses the verb in a hypothetical Sabbath dilemma, while Acts describes the conclusion of Peter's rooftop vision. The German passive ἀνεσπάσθη (was drawn up) in Acts contrasts with the future active ἀνασπάσει (will pull up) in Luke, showing the verb's range in describing divine action versus human rescue. RECEIVING AND TAKING

en: was-drawn-up, will-pull-up | es: fue-subido, lo-sacará | fr: retirer, tirer | de: ἀνασπάσει, ἀνεσπάσθη Luke 14:5; Acts 11:10

ἀνά-στᾰσις G0386 N-DFS (42×)

Resurrection, rising; the act of being raised from the dead, or figuratively, a rising up in destiny.

Almost exclusively a theological term in the New Testament for the bodily raising of the dead. Every major witness language renders the dominant sense with a dedicated resurrection word: English 'resurrection,' Spanish resurrección, French résurrection, German Auferstehung. The concept is central to Jesus' disputes with the Sadducees (Matt 22:23-31), Paul's proclamation (Acts 17:18; 1 Cor 15), and the hope of believers (Phil 3:11). A single occurrence in Luke 2:34, where Simeon prophesies that the child is set for the 'rising and falling of many in Israel,' carries a broader sense of rising up in destiny or vindication rather than bodily resurrection proper.

1. (41×) Bodily resurrection from the dead, the eschatological raising of deceased persons to life. This is the overwhelmingly dominant New Testament usage (41 of 42 occurrences). All six witness languages converge on a single dedicated term (resurrection/resurrección/résurrection/Auferstehung), reflecting a fixed theological concept. Key passages include the Sadducee controversy (Matt 22:23-31), Paul at Athens (Acts 17:18), and the resurrection hope (1 Cor 15:12-42; Phil 3:11). AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12060 WITH 4 SENSES

en: resurrection | es: -resurrección, resurrección | fr: résurrection | de: Auferstehung Matt 22:23; Matt 22:28; Matt 22:30; Matt 22:31; Mark 12:18

2. (1×) A figurative rising up in destiny or fortune, distinct from bodily resurrection. Simeon's prophecy in Luke 2:34 declares the Christ child 'set for the fall and rising (anastasis) of many in Israel.' Spanish levantamiento and English 'rising' capture the non-resurrectional nuance, pointing to a broader reversal of status rather than return from death. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12060 WITH 4 SENSES

en: rising | es: levantamiento | fr: résurrection | de: Auferstehung Luke 2:34

ἀναστᾰτ-όω G0387 V-PPA-NMP (3×)

to unsettle, upset, stir up trouble; to turn upside down or drive out

A verb meaning to overturn or cause upheaval. Thessalonian Jews accuse Paul and Silas: 'These who have turned the world upside down have come here also' (Acts 17:6). Tertullus identifies Paul as one 'who stirred up' insurrection among Jews worldwide (Acts 21:38). Paul confronts Galatian agitators 'unsettling' believers (Gal 5:12). Classical usage includes uprooting populations and disturbing mental peace.

(3×) Denotes causing disruption, turmoil, or overthrow—whether social order or spiritual peace. The Thessalonian charge, though hostile, captures Christianity's revolutionary impact: a movement upsetting established patterns. The accusation against Paul positions him as a troublemaker, a charge he redirects at false teachers 'unsettling' the Galatians. Multilingual glosses show disruption vocabulary: Spanish 'trastornar/perturbar' (to overturn/disturb), French 'troubler' (to trouble), German forms of 'overturn.' Gospel brings both peace and upheaval, depending on one's stance. TROUBLING AND DISTURBING

en: having-stirred-up, having-upset, unsettling | es: perturbándoos, que-sublevó, trastornaron | fr: troubler, ἀναστατοῦντες | de: ἀναστατοῦντες, ἀναστατώσαντες, ἀναστατώσας Acts 17:6; Acts 21:38; Gal 5:12

ἀνασταυρ-όω G0388 V-PPA-AMP (1×)

crucify again, re-crucify (Christ through apostasy or public repudiation)

This verb means to crucify again or afresh. In Hebrews 6:6, it appears in the sobering warning that those who fall away are crucifying the Son of God all over again and subjecting him to public disgrace. The Spanish crucificando-de-nuevo and German erneut-kreuzigen both emphasize the repetition. Apostasy after experiencing grace is portrayed as a reenactment of Christ's crucifixion—a fresh rejection that puts him back on the cross and exposes him to public shame.

(1×) Hebrews 6:6 warns that those who fall away after tasting God's grace are crucifying the Son of God afresh, exposing him to contempt. The term (Spanish crucificando-de-nuevo, 'crucifying again') suggests apostasy amounts to a reenactment of the cross—rejecting Christ after knowing him is equivalent to joining those who nailed him there, making mockery of his sacrifice. KILLING AND REMOVING en: crucifying-again | es: crucificando-de-nuevo | fr: erneut-kreuzigen | de: erneut-kreuzigen Heb 6:6

ἀνα-στενάζω G0389 V-APA-NMS (1×) sigh deeply, groan inwardly (expressing distress, grief, or exasperation)
This verb means to sigh or groan deeply, expressing profound distress or grief. In Mark 8:12, Jesus sighs deeply in his spirit at the Pharisees' demand for a sign. The Spanish habiendo-gemido-profundamente and German tief-seufzen both capture the depth of this internal groan. This is not casual annoyance but profound spiritual grief—Jesus' heart-level response to hardness, unbelief, and the relentless demand for proof when abundant evidence already surrounds them.

(1×) Mark records (8:12) that Jesus sighed deeply in his spirit when confronted with yet another demand for a sign from the Pharisees. The verb (Spanish gemido-profundamente, 'groaned deeply') reveals more than frustration—this is profound spiritual anguish at stubborn unbelief that refuses to see what God has already shown, a grief that wells up from the depths of Christ's spirit. GROANING IN DISTRESS en: sighing-deeply | es: habiendo-gemido-profundamente | fr: gémir | de: tief-seufzen Mark 8:12

ἀναστρέφω G0390 V-PNM/P (9×)
To conduct oneself or live in a particular manner; also, to return or go back to a place.
In the New Testament, this word overwhelmingly describes how a person lives or behaves — their manner of life and conduct. Paul speaks of having conducted himself with holiness and sincerity (2 Cor 1:12), and Ephesians recalls a former way of life governed by fleshly desires (Eph 2:3). The Spanish conducirse and German wandeln both capture this ethical dimension of habitual behavior. Less commonly, the word retains its older classical sense of physically turning back or returning, as when the officers return to the council (Acts 5:22) or when God promises to return and rebuild David's tent (Acts 15:16).

1. conduct oneself, live (7×) To conduct oneself, behave, or live in a characteristic manner — a distinctly Koine middle-voice usage describing one's habitual way of life rather than a single action. Paul declares he conducted himself (ἀνεστράφημεν) in the world with godly sincerity (2 Cor 1:12), and believers are urged to conduct themselves (ἀναστράφητε) properly in God's household (1 Tim 3:15). Spanish conducirse, French se conduire, and German wandeln all reflect this ethical-behavioral meaning. Hebrews 13:18 and 1 Peter 1:17 further confirm the moral overtone. CONDUCT AND WALKING en: conduct-yourselves, conducted-ourselves, living | es: conducirnos, conducirse, conducíos | fr: marcher, se-conduire | de: wandeln 2Cor 1:12; Eph 2:3; 1Tim 3:15; Heb 10:33; Heb 13:18

2. return, go back (2×) To return or go back to a previous location — the earlier, more literal meaning of turning around physically. The officers returned (ἀνέστρεψαν) to the council after finding the prison empty (Acts 5:22), and James quotes Amos where the Lord promises 'I will return' (ἀναστρέψω) to rebuild David's fallen tent (Acts 15:16). Spanish regresar and French retourner match this spatial movement sense, contrasting sharply with the metaphorical 'conduct' usage. RETURNING AND RESTORING en: I-will-return, having-returned | es: habiendo-regresado, volveré | fr: se-conduire | de: lebt Acts 5:22; Acts 15:16

ἀνα-στροφή G0391 N-AFS (13×) conduct, manner of life, behavior — one's habitual way of living and acting in society Anastrophe in classical Greek meant 'turning back' or 'overthrow,' but by the Hellenistic period it had narrowed to denote one's manner of life or habitual conduct. All 13 New Testament occurrences carry this ethical sense, describing how a person lives before God and others. Paul uses it to recall his former life in Judaism (Gal 1:13); Peter urges wives to win husbands through their pure conduct (1 Pet 3:1-2); Hebrews commends leaders whose outcome of life is worth imitating (Heb 13:7). The term always implies observable, sustained behavior rather than a single act. Spanish 'conducta,' French 'conduite,' and German 'Wandel' all capture this pattern-of-life meaning with remarkable consistency.

conduct, way of life, behavior (13×) One's habitual manner of life, pattern of behavior, or conduct as observed by others and evaluated ethically. Used of former sinful ways (Gal 1:13, Eph 4:22), exemplary Christian living (1 Tim 4:12, 1 Pet 3:1-2), and the life-pattern of leaders worth imitating (Heb 13:7). The plural in Heb 13:7 does not indicate a separate sense but rather the cumulative shape of a life. Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'conducta,' German 'Wandel' — consistently point to sustained behavior rather than a single act. CONDUCT WAY LIFE en: conduct, conducts | es: conducta, conductas, manera-de-vivir | fr: Wandel | de: Wandel Gal 1:13; Eph 4:22; 1Tim 4:12; Heb 13:7; Jas 3:13

ἀνατάσσω G0392 V-ANM (1×)
compile, arrange in order, compose (an orderly account or narrative)
This verb means to compile or arrange in order, particularly composing a narrative or account. Luke uses it in his preface (1:1), noting that many have undertaken to compile an orderly account of the events fulfilled among them. The Spanish componer and French rédiger both emphasize the compositional work—not merely collecting information but arranging it into coherent narrative. Luke positions his Gospel as a carefully researched and ordered account among other attempts.

(1×) Luke explains (1:1) that many have undertaken to compile orderly narratives of Jesus' life and ministry. The verb (French rédiger, 'compose') suggests deliberate literary work—gathering sources, investigating claims, and arranging material into coherent sequence. Luke presents his Gospel as one such attempt, distinguished by careful research and orderly presentation from eyewitness testimony. WRITING AND SCRIPTURE en: to-compile | es: componer | fr: rédiger | de: ἀνατάξασθαι Luke 1:1

ἀνατέλλω G0393 V-PIA-3S (9×)
To rise, spring up, or dawn; of the sun rising literally, light dawning figuratively, a person arising from a lineage, or God causing the sun to shine.
A verb rooted in the imagery of upward emergence, most often describing the sun rising over the horizon in its daily course (Matt 13:6, Mark 16:2). Matthew applies it metaphorically to messianic light dawning on those sitting in darkness (Matt 4:16, echoing Isaiah 9:2), while Hebrews uses it of Christ 'springing up' from the tribe of Judah (Heb 7:14). In one striking causative use, God is the one who 'makes his sun rise' on the evil and the good alike (Matt 5:45). Spanish translations capture these distinctions well: salió for literal sunrise, amaneció for figurative dawning, and ha-surgido for genealogical arising.

1. to rise, come up (of the sun) (6×) The literal, intransitive rising of the sun or daylight above the horizon. This is by far the most common usage (6 of 9 occurrences), appearing in parables where the scorching sun rises and withers rootless plants (Matt 13:6, Mark 4:6), in Mark's account of the women arriving at the tomb at sunrise (Mark 16:2), and in Luke's weather observation about clouds rising in the west (Luke 12:54). German aufgehen and Spanish salió both preserve the upward-motion imagery. RISING AND DAWNING
en: having-risen, rises, rising | es: habiendo-salido, levantándose, salió | fr: se-lever | de: aufgehen, ἀνατέλλουσαν, ἀνατείλαντος Matt 13:6; Mark 4:6; Mark 16:2; Luke 12:54; Jas 1:11

2. to dawn (figurative, of light upon people) (1×) A figurative extension where light 'dawns' upon people in spiritual darkness. Found only in Matt 4:16, where Matthew quotes Isaiah 9:1-2 to announce that messianic light has broken over Galilee. Spanish amaneció ('it dawned') captures the metaphorical shift from astronomical to theological illumination, marking Jesus' ministry as the fulfillment of prophetic promise. RISING AND DAWNING en: dawned | es: amaneció | fr: se-lever | de: ἀνέτειλεν Matt 4:16

3. to spring up, arise (of a person or tribe) (1×) Used of a person arising or springing forth from a tribal lineage, applied in Heb 7:14 to Christ's descent from Judah rather than Levi. Spanish ha-surgido ('has sprung forth') and English 'has sprung' both convey the botanical metaphor of a shoot emerging from a root, echoing messianic 'branch' imagery found throughout the prophets. RISING AND DAWNING
en: has-sprung | es: ha-surgido | fr: se-lever | de: aufgehen Heb 7:14

4. to cause to rise, make the sun shine (1×) The causative sense: God actively makes the sun rise upon people. In Matt 5:45, Jesus teaches that the Father 'causes his sun to rise' on both the evil and the good. Spanish hace-salir ('makes come out') highlights the transitive agency, distinguishing this from the intransitive senses. Only here does the verb take a personal divine subject who commands the heavenly body's motion. RISING AND DAWNING en: rises | es: hace-salir | fr: se-lever | de: ἀνατέλλει Matt 5:45

ἀνατίθημι G0394 V-AIM-3S (2×)

to lay before, present for consideration, refer or communicate (information) to someone for review

This middle-voice verb means to set before someone, present for consideration, or communicate important matters for review. In Acts 25:14, Festus lays Paul's case before King Agrippa. In Galatians 2:2, Paul describes laying his gospel before the Jerusalem apostles privately. The classical background includes attributing credit, referring matters to authorities, and setting up dedications. The New Testament narrows this to formal presentation of information for judgment or validation. Multilingual evidence (Spanish expuso/les-expuse, French communiquer) emphasizes the communicative and consultative nature of this action.

(2×) Both uses involve presenting matters to authorities for assessment. Festus seeks Agrippa's counsel on Paul's complex case, while Paul seeks the Jerusalem leaders' validation of his gospel message. The middle voice suggests personal investment—not merely reporting facts but submitting something personally significant for another's consideration. The German ἀνέθετο and ἀνεθέμην preserve these middle forms, emphasizing the presenter's stake in the outcome. COUNTING AND NARRATING en: I-laid-before, laid-before | es: expuso, les-expuse | fr: communiquer, ἀνεθέμην | de: ἀνέθετο, ἀνεθέμην Acts 25:14; Gal 2:2

ἀνατολή G0395 N-NFS (11×)

Rising, sunrise; the east — the direction or place of the sun's rising, also used figuratively

The noun ἀνατολή derives from ἀνατέλλω ('to rise, spring up') and names the place where the sun rises — the east. In its dominant geographical sense, it orients the reader: the Magi come 'from the east' (Matt 2:1), the righteous will gather 'from east and west' at the messianic banquet (Matt 8:11), and lightning flashes 'from the east' (Matt 24:27). But Luke and Revelation preserve a richer, more luminous sense tied to the word's etymology: Zechariah prophesies that 'the sunrise from on high shall visit us' (Luke 1:78), using ἀνατολή as a messianic title evoking Malachi's 'sun of righteousness.' Revelation's angel ascending 'from the rising of the sun' (Rev 7:2) retains the same cosmic imagery.

1. east (8×) The east as a cardinal direction or geographical region — the quarter of the sunrise. Matthew uses it repeatedly for the Magi's origin and journey (Matt 2:1, 2, 9), for eschatological gathering from east to west (Matt 8:11; 24:27), and in the apocalyptic imagery of Revelation (Rev 16:12; 21:13). Spanish 'oriente,' French 'orient,' and German 'Osten' uniformly render it as a simple directional term, confirming its geographical function as the dominant sense across eight of eleven occurrences. EAST AND SUNRISE
en: east | es: el-oriente, oriente, oriente, | fr: orient | de: Osten Matt 2:1; Matt 2:2; Matt 2:9; Matt 8:11; Matt 24:27

2. rising (3×) The act or phenomenon of rising — specifically the rising of a celestial body or a dawn-like appearing, often carrying messianic or cosmic significance. In Luke 1:78, Zechariah's Benedictus declares that 'the ἀνατολή from on high shall visit us,' where the word evokes the 'Branch' or 'Dayspring' — a title loaded with prophetic resonance from Jeremiah 23:5 and Zechariah 3:8 (LXX). Revelation 7:2 describes an angel ascending 'from the rising of the sun,' preserving the dynamic, luminous quality of the sunrise event rather than the static compass point. Spanish 'aurora' ('dawn') and 'salida' ('rising, going forth') in these passages distinguish this sense from the purely directional one. EAST AND SUNRISE
en: rising | es: aurora, salida | fr: orient | de: Osten Luke 1:78; Rev 7:2; Rev 16:12

ἀνα-τρέπω G0396 V-PIA-3P (3×)

to overturn, upset, turn upside down; to overthrow or ruin

A verb of violent overturning—capsizing ships, overturning tables, ruining lives. Jesus 'overturned' the money changers' tables in the temple (John 2:15). False teachers 'overturn' whole households with corrupt doctrine (Titus 1:11). Hymenaeus and Philetus 'overthrow' the faith of some by saying resurrection has already occurred (2 Tim 2:18). Classical usage frequently describes shipwrecks and political upheavals.

(3×) Denotes forceful overturning—physical objects or metaphorical destruction. Jesus's temple action is aggressive: physically flipping tables to disrupt corrupt commerce. The pastoral epistles use it for doctrinal damage: false teaching that capsizes faith like a ship foundering. Spanish 'trastornar/volcó' (to overthrow/overturned), French 'renverser' (to overturn), German 'umstürzen' (to overthrow) all convey violent reversal. Whether righteous disruption (Jesus) or destructive heresy (false teachers), the verb pictures complete upset of existing order. THRUST DOWN TOPPLED en: overturn, overturned | es: trastornan, volcó | fr: renverser | de: umstuerzen John 2:15; 2Tim 2:18; Titus 1:11

ἀνατρέφω G0397 V-AIP-3S (3×)

to bring up, nourish, rear; to raise from infancy or nurse to health

A verb of nurture and upbringing. Moses was 'brought up' in Pharaoh's daughter's house and educated in Egyptian wisdom (Acts 7:20-21). Paul was 'brought up' in Jerusalem at Gamaliel's feet (Acts 22:3). Classical usage includes feeding someone back to health, raising livestock, and educating children. The term encompasses both physical nourishment and formative education.

(3×) Refers to the comprehensive process of raising a child—feeding, protecting, educating. Moses's dual upbringing (Hebrew birth, Egyptian education) shaped his unique role. Paul's Jerusalem rearing under Gamaliel established his Pharisaic credentials. The middle voice in Acts 7:21 (Pharaoh's daughter 'had him brought up as her own') emphasizes her personal investment. Multilingual glosses use rearing/nourishing vocabulary (Spanish 'criar/criado,' French 'nourrir,' German forms of 'raise/nourish'), capturing both physical and educational nurture. FEEDING AND NOURISHING en: brought-up, having-been-brought-up, was-nourished | es: criado, crió, fue-criado | fr: nourrir | de: ἀνατεθραμμένος, ἀνεθρέψατο, ἀνετράφη Acts 7:20; Acts 7:21; Acts 22:3

ἀναφαίνω G0398 V-PNM/P (2×)

to appear, come into view, be sighted; to become visible or manifest after being hidden

This verb describes something coming into view or appearing, especially after being obscured or distant. In Luke 19:11, people thought God's kingdom was about to appear immediately. Acts 21:3 uses the participle to describe Cyprus coming into sight during Paul's sea voyage. Classical usage includes bringing things to light, displaying qualities, and proclaiming. The New Testament employs it for visual sighting and eschatological appearing. The multilingual pattern (Spanish avistando/aparecer, French apparaître) captures both the nautical sighting and the broader sense of manifestation.

(2×) Luke uses the verb for the kingdom's expected manifestation—an appearing that people anticipated imminently as Jesus approached Jerusalem. Acts employs the same verb more literally for an island appearing on the horizon during navigation. The French apparaître and Spanish aparecer work for both contexts: the kingdom's appearing and land's sighting. This shows how visual manifestation bridges literal and theological registers. APPEAR SEEM SHINE
en: having-sighted, to-appear | es: Avistando, de-aparecer | fr: apparaître | de: ἀναφάναντες, ἀναφαίνεσθαι Luke 19:11; Acts 21:3

ἀναφέρω G0399 V-PSA-1P (10×)

To carry upward; offer up (sacrifice or praise); bear (sins) upon oneself as a substitute

A verb of upward movement that gains its theological weight from what is being carried. In worship contexts it means to offer up sacrifices or praise to God, as in Hebrews 13:15 and 1 Peter 2:5. When applied to persons, it describes physically leading someone up to a high place, as Jesus brings Peter, James, and John up the mountain of transfiguration (Matt 17:1). Most strikingly, in Hebrews 9:28 and 1 Peter 2:24, it takes on vicarious force: Christ bore our sins upward onto the cross. Spanish captures the distinction well, using 'ofrecer' for sacrifice but 'llevar' for sin-bearing, revealing the word's dual semantic pull between cultic offering and substitutionary burden.

1. to offer up (sacrifice) (5×) To present a sacrifice or offering to God, whether the literal animal offerings of the old covenant or the spiritual sacrifices of praise and good works under the new. The Spanish 'ofrezcamos' and German 'hinaufbringen' both capture the upward directionality of cultic presentation. Key passages: Heb 7:27 (Christ's once-for-all offering), 1 Pet 2:5 (believers as a holy priesthood offering spiritual sacrifices), Heb 13:15 (the sacrifice of praise). BRINGING AND OFFERING
en: having-offered, let-us-offer, then | es: habiendo-ofrecido, ofrecer, ofrezcamos | fr: offrir | de: hinaufbringen Heb 7:27; Heb 13:15; Jas 2:21; 1Pet 2:5

2. to bring up, lead up (physically) (3×) To lead or bring someone physically upward to a higher location. Used of Jesus bringing his three closest disciples up a high mountain for the Transfiguration (Matt 17:1; Mark 9:2), and of Christ's ascension into heaven (Luke 24:51). Spanish distinguishes this from the cultic sense with 'lleva arriba,' while French collapses both into 'offrir,' suggesting the physical ascent was already metaphorically charged for Greek readers. BRINGING AND OFFERING
en: brings-up, was-carried-up | es: fue-llevado-arriba, lleva-arriba | fr: offrir | de: hinaufbringen, ἀναφέρει, ἀνεφέρετο Matt 17:1; Mark 9:2; Luke 24:51

3. to bear, carry (sins) (2×) To bear or carry sins upon oneself in substitutionary atonement. In Heb 9:28 Christ 'bore the sins of many,' echoing Isaiah 53:12, and in 1 Pet 2:24 he 'bore our sins in his body on the tree.' Spanish shifts to 'llevar/llevo' (carry, bore), marking a clear semantic break from the sacrificial 'ofrecer.' This sense merges the upward movement of the cross with the theological weight of vicarious sin-bearing. BRINGING AND OFFERING
en: bore, to-bear | es: llevar, llevó | fr: offrir | de: hinaufbringen Heb 9:28; 1Pet 2:24

ἀναφων-έω G0400 V-AIA-3S (1×)

cry out, exclaim loudly (in announcement or strong emotion)

This verb means to cry out or exclaim loudly, often in proclamation or strong emotion. In Luke 1:42, Elizabeth cries out with a loud voice when Mary visits, blessing her among women. The Spanish exclamó and French crier both capture the volume and intensity. This is not ordinary speech but Spirit-inspired proclamation—Elizabeth filled with the Holy Spirit bursts into loud blessing, publicly declaring Mary's favor and the significance of the child she carries.

(1×) When Mary arrived, Elizabeth cried out (Luke 1:42) with a loud voice in Spirit-inspired blessing. The verb (Spanish exclamó, French crier) suggests volume and intensity—this is public proclamation, not private greeting. Filled with the Spirit, Elizabeth becomes a prophet declaring Mary's blessedness and the honor of receiving the mother of her Lord. CALLING AND NAMING en: cried-out | es: exclamó | fr: crier | de: ἀνεφώνησεν Luke 1:42

ἀνάχῠσις G0401 N-AFS (1×)

flood, overflow, excessive outpouring (especially of vice or disorder)

This noun denotes a flood or overflow—an excessive outpouring or rush. Peter uses it in 1 Peter 4:4, describing pagans as surprised when believers don't plunge with them into the same flood of debauchery. The Spanish desbordamiento and German Flut both picture overflowing water—a torrent of vice that sweeps people along. Former companions are shocked when Christians refuse to be carried away by this flood of excess that once seemed normal.

(1×) Peter notes (1 Peter 4:4) that unbelievers are surprised when Christians no longer join them in the flood of dissipation. The noun (Spanish desbordamiento, 'overflow') pictures vice as a torrent that sweeps people along—a rush of excess and disorder. Conversion means stepping out of this current, no longer carried along by the overwhelming flood of cultural sin. POURING AND SHEDDING en: flood | es: desbordamiento | fr: ἀνάχυσιν | de: Flut 1Pet 4:4

ἀναχωρ-έω G0402 V-APA-NMS (14×) withdraw, depart, retire — to leave a place deliberately, often to avoid danger or seek solitude

Anachoreo is the verb of purposeful withdrawal — not flight in panic, but a measured decision to remove oneself from a threatening or crowded situation. It is virtually a signature word of Matthew's Gospel, where it describes the Magi departing by another route to avoid Herod (Matt 2:12), Joseph taking the child to Egypt (Matt 2:14), and Jesus repeatedly withdrawing from opposition or crowds (Matt 4:12, 12:15, 14:13). The prefix ana- ('back') plus choreo ('give ground') yields the idea of pulling back to a place of safety. Our English word 'anchorite' — a religious recluse — descends from this very verb. The translations capture this well: Spanish 'retirarse,' French 'se retirer,' German 'sich zurueckziehen.'

withdraw / depart (14×) To withdraw deliberately from a location, typically to avoid danger, hostility, or unwanted attention, or to seek privacy and solitude. Concentrated in Matthew's Gospel (10 of 14 NT occurrences), the verb narrates strategic departures: the Magi evading Herod (Matt 2:12), the holy family's flight to Egypt (Matt 2:13-14), and Jesus' repeated withdrawals from opposition (Matt 4:12, 12:15, 14:13). The Spanish 'retirarse' and German 'sich zurueckziehen' underscore the reflexive, self-directed nature of the movement — not exile imposed from without, but retreat chosen from within. WITHDRAW DEPART
en: Depart, Having-departed, departed | es: Habiéndose-retirado, Retiraos, habiéndose-retirado | fr: se-retirer | de: sich-zurueckziehen, zieht-sich-zurück Matt 2:12; Matt 2:13; Matt 2:14; Matt 2:22; Matt 4:12

ἀνά-ψυξις G0403 N-GFS (1×)

refreshing, relief, respite (restoration of strength or spirits)

This noun denotes refreshing, relief, or respite—the restoration of strength or revival of spirits. Peter uses it in Acts 3:20, speaking of times of refreshing that will come from the presence of the Lord. The Spanish refrigerio and French soulagement both suggest relief from distress and renewal of strength. This refreshing is eschatological—the revival and restoration that accompanies Christ's return, when God's presence brings ultimate relief to his people.

(1×) Peter calls for repentance (Acts 3:20) so that times of refreshing may come from the Lord's presence. The term (Spanish refrigerio, French soulagement) pictures relief and revival—the restoration that flows from God's presence in the age to come. This is eschatological refreshment, the ultimate respite when Christ returns and God's face brings life-giving renewal to creation. REST AND REFRESHMENT
en: of-refreshing | es: de-refrigerio | fr: soulagement | de: ἀναψύξεως Acts 3:20

ἀνα-ψύχω G0404 V-AIA-3S (1×)

refresh, revive, restore (strength, spirits, or vigor)

This verb means to refresh, revive, or restore strength and spirits. In 2 Timothy 1:16, Paul blesses Onesiphorus because he often refreshed Paul and wasn't ashamed of his chains. The Spanish refrescó and German erquicken both capture the renewal of strength and spirits. This refreshing could be physical (providing for needs), emotional (encouragement), or social (public association with a prisoner), but the effect is restoration of vitality and courage in difficult circumstances.

(1×) Paul warmly remembers (2 Timothy 1:16) how Onesiphorus often refreshed him, showing no shame about Paul's imprisonment. The verb (Spanish refrescó, German erquicken) suggests restoration of strength and spirits through practical care, encouragement, and loyal friendship. While others abandoned Paul, Onesiphorus' repeated visits and support brought revival to Paul's flagging strength and isolated condition. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: he-refreshed | es: refrescó | fr: ἀνέψυξεν | de: erquicken 2Tim 1:16

ἀνδραποδ-ιστής G0405 N-DMP (1×)

slave-trader, kidnapper, one who traffics in human beings

This noun denotes a slave-trader or kidnapper—one who deals in human beings, either by capturing free people to sell them or by trading in slaves. Paul lists this vice in 1 Timothy 1:10 among serious transgressions of God's law. The Spanish secuestradores and French trafiquants emphasizes the criminal nature—stealing people's freedom for profit. Whether kidnapping or professional slave-dealing, this trade treats human beings as commodities, violating their image-bearing dignity.

(1×) Paul includes slave-traders (1 Timothy 1:10) in his catalog of lawbreakers whom the law restrains. The term (Spanish secuestradores, 'kidnappers') could cover those who capture free people to sell into slavery or professional dealers in human chattel. Both traffic in human beings, treating people made in God's image as merchandise—a violation of human dignity that the law condemns. SELLING AND COMMERCE

en: for-slave-traders | es: secuestradores | fr: ἀνδραποδισταῖς | de: Menschenhaendler 1Tim 1:10

Ἀνδρέας G0406 N-NMS (13×)

Andrew — one of the twelve apostles, brother of Simon Peter, originally from Bethsaida

Andreas (from the Greek andreios, 'manly') was one of the first disciples called by Jesus and the brother of Simon Peter. A fisherman from Bethsaida on the Sea of Galilee, Andrew appears in all four Gospels and Acts, often in the role of bringing others to Jesus — his brother Peter (John 1:41-42), the boy with five loaves (John 6:8-9), and Greeks seeking Jesus (John 12:22). He is consistently listed among the inner circle in the apostolic catalogs (Matt 10:2, Mark 3:18, Luke 6:14, Acts 1:13). The name passes virtually unchanged across languages: Spanish 'Andreas,' French 'Andre,' German 'Andreas.'

Andreas (13×) The proper name Andreas, designating the apostle who was Simon Peter's brother, a fisherman from Bethsaida (John 1:44). All 13 NT occurrences refer to this single individual. He appears in the calling narratives (Matt 4:18, Mark 1:16, John 1:40), the apostolic lists (Matt 10:2, Mark 3:18, Luke 6:14, Acts 1:13), and several episodes unique to John's Gospel where he serves as a mediator bringing people to Jesus. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Andreas, of-Andreas | es: Andréan, Andréas, a-Andréas | fr: André | de: Andreas Matt 4:18; Matt 10:2; Mark 1:16; Mark 1:29; Mark 3:18

ἀνδρίζω G0407 V-PMM/P-2P (1×)

act like a man, be courageous, show strength and resolve

This verb means to act like a man or show manly courage—to display strength, resolve, and bravery. Paul uses it in 1 Corinthians 16:13, urging believers to stand firm in faith, be courageous, and be strong. The Spanish sed-varones and German männlich-sein both invoke masculine ideals of courage and strength. This is not about gender but about the qualities traditionally associated with warriors—courage, endurance, and steadfastness in the face of opposition.

(1×) Among Paul's closing exhortations (1 Corinthians 16:13), he calls believers to act courageously, using an imperative that invokes the ideal of manly courage. The Spanish sed-varones ('be men') and German männlich-sein draw on warrior imagery: stand your ground, don't flinch, show the courage and strength needed for the spiritual battle. This is a call to resolute faithfulness, not timidity. COURAGE CONFIDENCE

en: be-courageous | es: sed-varones | fr: viril | de: maennlich-sein 1Cor 16:13

Ἀνδρόνικος G0408 N-AMS (1×)

Andronikos, a Christian greeted by Paul in Romans 16:7

Andronikos was a fellow believer greeted by Paul in his letter to Rome. The name, meaning 'man of victory,' was common in the Greek-speaking world. Paul identifies him as a kinsman and fellow prisoner, suggesting he shared both ethnic heritage and imprisonment with the apostle. The Spanish and German translations preserve the Greek nominative form, while French adapts it to 'Andronic.'

(1×) A personal name appearing in Paul's greetings (Rom 16:7). The multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration across Romance and Germanic languages, indicating recognition of this as a proper name rather than a title or common noun. Paul's description suggests Andronikos was among the apostles and converted before Paul himself. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Andronikos | es: a-Andrónikon | fr: Andronic | de: Andronikus Rom 16:7

ἀνδρο-φόνος G0409 N-DMP (1×)

murderer, manslayer; one who kills another person

This compound term (ἀνδροφόνος) literally means 'man-slayer,' combining the roots for 'man' and 'kill.' In classical Greek it described both battlefield killers and convicted murderers. Paul uses it in 1 Timothy 1:9 within a vice list describing those for whom the law was made. The term carries legal weight, denoting not just killing in general but the culpable taking of human life. All four target languages employ their native words for 'murderer' or 'homicide.'

(1×) One guilty of murder or manslaughter (1 Tim 1:9). The Spanish 'homicidas' and French transliteration indicate this is technical legal vocabulary. Paul lists it alongside other serious crimes (slave traders, liars, perjurers), showing the gravity of the offense. Classical usage distinguished battlefield slaughter from murder, but the NT context clearly means unlawful killing. MURDERER KILLER en: for-murderers | es: homicidas | fr: ἀνδροφόνοις | de: Moerder 1Tim 1:9

ἀνέγκλη-τος G0410 Adj-NMP (5×)

Beyond accusation, unimpeachable; one against whom no formal charge can be brought.

An alpha-privative compound (an- + egkaleō, 'to bring a charge'), anegklētos describes someone against whom no legal indictment can stand. Paul uses it eschatologically at 1 Corinthians 1:8—God will present believers as unimpeachable on the day of Christ—and in Colossians 1:22 with similar force. In the Pastoral Epistles, it becomes a key qualification for church leaders: deacons must prove themselves blameless (1 Tim 3:10), and elders must be beyond reproach (Titus 1:6–7). Though close in meaning to amemptos (G0273), anegklētos carries a stronger forensic edge, as the multilingual evidence confirms: Spanish 'irreprochable' and German 'untadelig' both emphasize the legal dimension of being unindictable.

(5×) Unaccusable, beyond formal indictment, one against whom no charge can be sustained. The forensic flavor distinguishes this word from the broader amemptos: anegklētos specifically implies that no prosecutor could successfully bring a case. Paul deploys it eschatologically—believers will stand unimpeachable before Christ (1 Cor 1:8, Col 1:22). The Pastoral Epistles make it a concrete qualification for church office: deacons must be tested and found anegklētos (1 Tim 3:10), and elders must meet this standard (Titus 1:6–7). Spanish 'irreprensibles/irreprochable' and French 'irréprochable' both preserve the formal, almost courtroom nuance of the term. BLAMELESS AND UNBLEMISHED

en: above-reproach, blameless | es: irreprensibles, irreprochable | fr: irréprochable, ἀνέγκλητοι, ἀνέγκλητον | de: untadelig 1Cor 1:8; Col 1:22; 1Tim 3:10; Titus 1:6; Titus 1:7

ἀνεκ-διήγητος G0411 Adj-DFS (1×)

indescribable, inexpressible, beyond adequate description

This adjective captures what cannot be fully narrated or described. Paul uses it in 2 Corinthians 9:15 to characterize God's gift—so magnificent that human language falls short. The term appears in later Christian writings to describe ineffable divine realities. Spanish and English translations both choose 'indescribable/indescriptible,' while French opts for 'inexprimable' (inexpressible). German renders it 'unaussprechlich' (unspeakable), emphasizing the impossibility of adequate verbal expression.

(1×) Beyond adequate description (2 Cor 9:15). Paul applies this to God's gift—likely Christ himself or the gospel more broadly. The convergence of Romance and Germanic translations on terms meaning 'beyond description' or 'beyond expression' shows this is not merely difficult to describe but categorically transcends human linguistic capacity. The word conveys not confusion but awestruck inability to capture the magnitude. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9012 WITH 4 SENSES

en: indescribable | es: indescriptible | fr: inexprimable | de: unaussprechlich 2Cor 9:15

ἀνεκ-λάλητος G0412 Adj-DFS (1×)

inexpressible, unutterable, beyond words

Closely related to G0411 but emphasizing the impossibility of speaking rather than narrating, this term describes what cannot be put into words. Peter uses it in 1 Peter 1:8 to describe the joy believers experience in Christ even without having seen him. Classical usage extended to things incapable of calculation or expression. The French maintains the Greek form, while English chooses 'inexpressible' and Spanish 'inefable' (ineffable). German's 'unsäglich' likewise emphasizes the unsayable nature of this joy.

(1×) Beyond verbal expression (1 Pet 1:8). Peter characterizes Christian joy as 'inexpressible and filled with glory.' The term emphasizes not that believers are speechless but that the reality exceeds what language can capture. Classical usage included mathematical or logical inexpressibility, but here it describes emotional and spiritual experience that transcends articulation. The multilingual evidence clusters around 'unsayable' rather than merely 'difficult to say.' AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9012 WITH 4 SENSES

en: inexpressible | es: inefable | fr: ἀνεκλαλήτῳ | de: unsaeglich 1Pet 1:8

ἀνέκ-λειπτος G0413 Adj-AMS (1×)

unfailing, inexhaustible, unceasing

This term denotes what cannot be exhausted or used up. Jesus uses it in Luke 12:33 to describe treasure in heaven that never fails or runs out. Classical writers used it for uninterrupted processes and infinite divisions. The Septuagint employs it for unfailing divine provision. English 'unfailing,' Spanish 'inagotable' (inexhaustible), and French 'inépuisable' all emphasize the inexhaustible nature. The German preserves the Greek form, perhaps indicating the translator's sense that no single German word captures the full meaning.

(1×) Inexhaustible, never failing (Luke 12:33). Jesus contrasts earthly treasure (vulnerable to moths and thieves) with heavenly treasure that is 'unfailing.' The term emphasizes both permanence and abundance—not just that it lasts but that it never diminishes. The Spanish and French choices of 'inexhaustible' over merely 'lasting' capture this sense of unlimited supply. This is the security Jesus promises those who invest in eternal rather than temporal wealth. ETERNITY AND AGES

en: unfailing | es: inagotable | fr: inépuisable | de: ἀνέκλειπτον Luke 12:33

ἀνεκτός G0414 Adj-NNS-C (6×)

More tolerable, more bearable; used exclusively in Jesus' judgment sayings comparing cities' fates

An adjective in the comparative degree meaning 'more tolerable' or 'more bearable,' appearing only in Jesus' solemn warnings about eschatological judgment. Every NT occurrence follows the same formula: 'it will be more tolerable for Sodom (or Tyre and Sidon) on the day of judgment than for that city.' Spanish 'mas tolerable' and French 'plus supportable' faithfully render the comparative. The word itself implies that even the punishment of notoriously wicked cities will be lighter than what awaits those who reject the gospel firsthand.

(6×) More bearable, more tolerable – used exclusively in the comparative form (anektoteron) in Jesus' pronouncements of eschatological judgment. The pattern is consistent across Matthew 10:15, 11:22, 11:24, Mark 6:11, and Luke 10:12: rejecting the gospel witnesses brings a fate worse than Sodom's. Every major translation tradition renders it comparatively – Spanish 'mas tolerable,' French 'plus supportable,' German 'ertraeglicher' – underscoring that even divine punishment has degrees. The word derives from anechomai ('to endure'), so its root sense is 'what can be endured.' ENDURE TOLERATE en: more-tolerable | es: más-tolerable | fr: plus-supportable | de: ἀνεκτότερον Matt 10:15; Matt 11:22; Matt 11:24; Mark 6:11; Luke 10:12

ἀνελεήμων G0415 Adj-AMP (1×)

merciless, unmerciful, without compassion

This compound adjective describes those who show no mercy or compassion. Paul uses it in Romans 1:31 as the climactic vice in his catalog of human depravity apart from God. The term appears in classical writers to describe harsh or cruel behavior. The alpha-privative prefix negates 'mercy,' creating a word for deliberate hard-heartedness. Spanish renders it 'sin-misericordia' (without mercy), while French and German both employ their terms for 'pitiless' or 'unmerciful.' This is not mere absence but active refusal of compassion.

(1×) Without mercy or compassion (Rom 1:31). Paul lists this among the characteristics of those who suppress the truth about God. The multilingual consensus on 'merciless' rather than merely 'harsh' suggests deliberate refusal to show mercy rather than emotional coldness. Classical usage supports this active sense—these are people who could show mercy but choose not to. The term's placement as the final item in Paul's vice list may indicate its summarizing character: all the preceding evils flow from this fundamental mercilessness. MERCY AND COMPASSION

en: merciless | es: sin-misericordia | fr: impitoyable | de: unbarmherzig Rom 1:31

ἀνεμ-ίζομαι G0416 V-PPM/P-DMS (1×)

wind-driven, tossed by wind, blown about

This passive verb describes being driven or tossed by wind. James uses it in James 1:6 to illustrate the instability of the doubter who waivers in faith. The imagery comes from seafaring—waves whipped up and driven by changing winds have no settled direction. Classical Greek used it in both literal maritime contexts and metaphorical descriptions of instability. The Spanish 'agitada-por-viento' (agitated by wind) and German 'hin-und-her-geworfen' (thrown back and forth) both capture the violent, directionless motion James has in mind.

(1×) Driven by wind, tossed about (Jas 1:6). James compares the doubter to a wave 'driven and tossed by the wind.' The passive form emphasizes that external forces control the motion—the wave has no inherent direction. The German translation's choice of 'thrown back and forth' highlights the instability: just as wind-driven waves surge first one direction then another, so the doubter vacillates between faith and unbelief. The French maintains the Greek form, perhaps indicating difficulty finding a single French word capturing both the passive state and violent motion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: wind-driven | es: agitada-por-viento | fr: ἀνεμιζομένῳ | de: hin-und-hergeworfen Jas 1:6

ἄνεμος G0417 N-AMS (31×)

wind — a natural movement of air, from gentle breeze to violent storm; also used figuratively of instability

Anemos denotes wind in all its meteorological force across 31 New Testament occurrences. Its most dramatic appearances cluster in the storm narratives: Jesus rebukes the wind on the Sea of Galilee and it obeys him (Matt 8:26-27; Mark 4:39), leaving the disciples astonished that 'even the winds and the sea obey him.' In the parable of the two builders, the wind batters both houses alike (Matt 7:25, 27), testing the foundation. James compares the doubter to a wave of the sea driven and tossed by the wind (Jas 1:6), and Paul warns against being 'carried about by every wind of doctrine' (Eph 4:14), giving the word a figurative valence of fickleness. In Revelation, four angels restrain the four winds of the earth (Rev 7:1). Spanish 'viento,' French 'vent,' and German 'Wind' uniformly render the single meteorological sense.

wind (31×) A natural movement of air, ranging from a breeze to a violent gale. Dominates the Synoptic storm-stilling narratives where Jesus commands the wind and it obeys (Matt 8:26; Mark 4:39; Luke 8:24). Used figuratively of doctrinal instability (Eph 4:14) and of the doubter tossed like a wave (Jas 1:6). In Revelation 7:1, four angels hold back the four winds of the earth as an apocalyptic image of cosmic restraint. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-wind, wind, winds | es: viento, vientos | fr: vent | de: Wind Matt 7:25; Matt 7:27; Matt 8:26; Matt 8:27; Matt 11:7

ἀνέν-δεκτος G0418 Adj-NNS (1×)

impossible, inadmissible, not able to be received

This adjective means impossible or inadmissible—literally 'not receivable.' Jesus uses it in Luke 17:1 to introduce his teaching about temptations: 'It is impossible that temptations should not come.' The term appears in later medical and philosophical texts for things that cannot be admitted or accepted. All four translation languages employ their standard word for 'impossible,' showing clear consensus. The German preserves the Greek form, maintaining the emphatic position Jesus gives it in his statement about the inevitability of stumbling blocks.

(1×) Impossible, inadmissible (Luke 17:1). Jesus states that 'it is impossible' (ἀνένδεκτον) for offenses not to come. The term carries more than logical impossibility—it suggests something that cannot be received or admitted into reality. The universal translation choice of 'impossible' indicates this is not about difficulty but categorical exclusion. Jesus uses this strong term to emphasize the inevitability of temptations while also making clear the severe accountability for those who cause them. IMPOSSIBLE INCAPABLE en: Impossible | es: Imposible | fr: impossible | de: Ἀνένδεκτόν Luke 17:1

ἀνεξ-ερεύνητος G0419 Adj-NNP (1×)

unsearchable, inscrutable, beyond investigation

This compound adjective describes what cannot be searched out or traced to its source. Paul uses it in Romans 11:33 to characterize God's judgments and ways—they exceed human capacity to investigate or comprehend fully. The term appears in philosophical writings for things beyond rational inquiry. English 'unsearchable,' Spanish 'inescrutables' (inscrutable), and French 'insondable' (unfathomable) all emphasize the impossibility of exhaustive investigation. German's 'unerforschlich' (unresearchable) captures the sense that no amount of inquiry will penetrate to the bottom.

(1×) Beyond investigation, unsearchable (Rom 11:33). Paul exclaims about 'the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments!' The term indicates not that God's ways are mysterious in a confusing sense but that they extend beyond human capacity for investigation. The Spanish 'inescrutables' and French 'insondable' (unfathomable—literally unable to be plumbed) both suggest depth beyond measurement. This is not obscurantism but appropriate humility before divine wisdom. DEEP AND PROFOUND en: unsearchable | es: inescrutables | fr: insondable | de: unerforschlich Rom 11:33

ἀνεξῐκᾰκ-ος G0420 Adj-AMS (1×)

patient, forbearing, enduring evil without resentment

This adjective literally means 'enduring evil' or 'bearing up under pain.' Paul uses it in 2 Timothy 2:24 to describe how the Lord's servant must be patient with opponents. The term carries more than passive endurance—it suggests active forbearance that does not retaliate when wronged. Classical usage emphasized endurance of pain or suffering. French preserves the Greek form, while Spanish and English both choose 'patient,' and German opts for 'geduldig' (patient). The compound structure (ἀνεξι-κακ-ος) emphasizes holding up under (ἀνέχω) evil (κακός).

(1×) Patient, forbearing toward opponents (2 Tim 2:24). Paul requires that the Lord's servant be 'patient' (ἀνεξίκακον) toward those who oppose the truth. The term goes beyond general patience to specify bearing up under mistreatment without resentment or retaliation. Classical usage of 'enduring evil' shows this is not about temperamental patience but active forbearance under provocation. The goal is not simply not retaliating but maintaining gentle instruction even when opposed—a Christlike posture toward enemies. PATIENCE ENDURANCE

en: patient | es: paciente | fr: ἀνεξίκακον | de: geduldig 2Tim 2:24

ἀνεξ-ιχνίαστος G0421 Adj-ANS (2×)

unsearchable, inscrutable, beyond tracing out; impossible to track, investigate, or fully comprehend

This compound adjective describes what cannot be searched out or traced. Paul uses it twice to describe divine mysteries. In Romans 11:33, God's judgments and ways are unsearchable—beyond human investigation. In Ephesians 3:8, Paul speaks of preaching Christ's unsearchable riches. The word combines the negative prefix with a verb meaning to track or trace, suggesting something that leaves no footprints to follow. Multilingual translations (Spanish inescrutable/inexplorables, French inscrutable/insondable, German unergründlich) consistently emphasize the impossibility of exhaustive investigation.

(2×) Both Pauline uses apply this term to divine realities that exceed human capacity for comprehension. Romans focuses on God's sovereign plans in salvation history, while Ephesians highlights Christ's inexhaustible wealth. The Spanish shift from inescrutable to inexplorables suggests both inscrutability (cannot be scrutinized) and unexplorability (cannot be fully mapped). This isn't obscurantism but acknowledgment of God's transcendence—His ways leave no tracks for human reason to follow completely. DEEP AND PROFOUND en: unsearchable, untraceable | es: inescrutable, inexplorables | fr: inscrutable, insondable | de: unergründlich Rom 11:33; Eph 3:8

ἀνεπ-αίσχυντος G0422 Adj-AMS (1×)

unashamed, having no cause for shame

This adjective describes one who has no cause for shame or who will not be put to shame. Paul uses it in 2 Timothy 2:15 to characterize the faithful workman approved by God. The alpha-privative negates shame, creating a term for honorable standing that cannot be impugned. The compound suggests not merely shamelessness but proven integrity that leaves no grounds for accusation. Spanish employs a lengthy phrase 'que-no-tiene-de-qué-avergonzarse' (who has nothing to be ashamed of), while German simply says 'unbeschämt' (unashamed). French preserves the Greek form.

(1×) Without cause for shame, unashamed (2 Tim 2:15). Paul exhorts Timothy to 'present yourself to God as one approved, a worker who has no need to be ashamed.' The term emphasizes not shamelessness but having nothing to be ashamed of—proven character and competent handling of truth. The lengthy Spanish translation 'who has nothing to be ashamed of' captures the objective grounds for confidence, not merely subjective feeling. This is eschatological confidence: standing unashamed at Christ's judgment because of faithfulness now. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: unashamed | es: que-no-tiene-de-qué-avergonzarse | fr: ἀνεπαίσχυντον | de: unbeschaemt 2Tim 2:15

ἀνεπί-ληπτος G0423 Adj-NMP (3×)

blameless, above reproach; not open to criticism or attack

An adjective describing someone against whom no legitimate charge can be brought. Overseers must be 'above reproach' (1 Tim 3:2). Widows enrolled for support should be 'blameless' (1 Tim 5:7). Timothy must keep the commandment 'without reproach' until Christ's appearing (1 Tim 6:14). Classical usage describes military positions not open to attack and things perfect or subject to no control. The term emphasizes public reputation.

(3×) Denotes irreproachable character—not necessarily sinless perfection but freedom from legitimate accusation. Church leaders must have reputations beyond criticism so the gospel isn't discredited. Widows enrolled for support must be known for blameless life—their character validated by observation. Timothy's charge is eschatological: maintain unassailable conduct until Christ returns. Multilingual consensus (Spanish 'irreprensible,' French forms, German 'untadelig') emphasizes the public dimension—able to withstand scrutiny. BLAMELESS AND UNBLEMISHED

en: blameless | es: irreprensible, irreprensibles | fr: ἀνεπίλημπτοι, ἀνεπίλημπτον | de: untadelig 1Tim 3:2; 1Tim 5:7; 1Tim 6:14

ἀνέρχομαι G0424 V-AIA-3S (3×)

to go up, ascend; to return or go back

A verb of upward or return movement. Jesus 'went up' on the mountain to teach and heal (John 6:3). After his conversion, Paul did not 'go up' to Jerusalem immediately but went to Arabia (Gal 1:17). Later he 'went up' to Jerusalem to see Peter (Gal 1:18). Classical usage includes ascending mountains, mounting platforms, returning from the coast inland, and rising from the underworld.

(3×) Denotes upward movement or return to a previous location. John's geographical note (Jesus going up the mountain) sets the scene for bread multiplication and discourse. Paul's precise travel chronology uses it for trips to Jerusalem—his delayed first visit (Gal 1:17) and later consultation with Peter (1:18). The multilingual glosses use ascending/going-up vocabulary (Spanish 'subir/subió,' French 'monter,' German 'hinaufgehen'). Context determines whether literal elevation or return to a significant city (Jerusalem as pilgrimage destination) is primary. ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: I-went-up, went-up | es: subió, subí | fr: monter | de: hinaufgehen John 6:3; Gal 1:17; Gal 1:18

ἄνεσις G0425 N-NFS (5×)

Relief, relaxation, liberty; a loosening of pressure or constraint, whether physical, emotional, or circumstantial.

From aniēmi (to loosen, let up), anesis literally means a slackening of tension—like releasing a drawn bowstring. In the NT it spans a range from physical liberty (Acts 24:23, where Felix grants Paul anesis in custody) to emotional relief (2 Cor 2:13, 7:5, where Paul finds no rest for his spirit or flesh) to eschatological comfort (2 Thess 1:7, promising relief to the afflicted). Paul also uses it in 2 Corinthians 8:13 to assure the Corinthians that his collection appeal is not meant to bring them hardship. Spanish captures the breadth nicely: 'libertad' for the custodial sense, 'alivio' for emotional relief, 'descanso' for rest.

(5×) A loosening, relief, or relaxation of pressure—whether physical constraint, emotional distress, or external affliction. The root metaphor is of tension being released. Felix orders that Paul be given anesis in his imprisonment, meaning relaxed custody with freedom to receive visitors (Acts 24:23)—Spanish 'libertad' captures this well. Paul twice describes his inability to find anesis for his spirit (2 Cor 2:13) or his flesh (2 Cor 7:5), using it for inner restlessness—hence Spanish 'alivio/descanso.' In 2 Thess 1:7 it promises eschatological relief from persecution, and in 2 Cor 8:13 it means ease or comfort in contrast to hardship. French 'détente' elegantly preserves the core image of released tension. REST AND REFRESHMENT

en: liberty, relief, rest | es: alivio, descanso, libertad | fr: détente, ἄνεσιν | de: ἄνεσιν, ἄνεσις Acts 24:23; 2Cor 2:13; 2Cor 7:5; 2Cor 8:13; 2Thess 1:7

ἀνετάζω G0426 V-PNM/P (2×)

to examine, interrogate, question closely (often judicially, sometimes under torture)

This verb means to examine closely or interrogate, often in legal contexts. Both occurrences in Acts 22 describe the Roman commander's plan to examine Paul. Verse 24 shows the commander ordering Paul examined by scourging, while verse 29 reflects his alarm upon discovering Paul's Roman citizenship would make such examination illegal. Classical usage includes examining documents and torturing for information. The New Testament restricts it to judicial interrogation. Translations (Spanish interrogar, French interroger, German ἀνετάζειν) consistently emphasize investigative questioning, often with coercive overtones.

(2×) Both Acts uses involve the Roman tribune's attempt to discover why the Jewish crowd rioted against Paul. The examination in view involves scourging—torture designed to extract truth from non-citizens. When Paul reveals his citizenship, the legal situation reverses: what was permissible examination becomes potential assault. The infinitives ἀνετάζειν (to examine) and ἀνετάζεσθαι (to be examined) show both the active intent and passive experience of this judicial procedure. JUDICIAL EXAMINATION

en: to-be-examined, to-examine | es: de-interrogar, ser-interrogado | fr: interroger | de: ἀνετάζειν, ἀνετάζεσθαι Acts 22:24; Acts 22:29

ἄνευ G0427 Prep (3×)

without, apart from; expressing absence or lack of something

This preposition denotes absence or separation from something essential or expected. In Matthew 10:29, it describes God's sovereign awareness—not even a sparrow falls 'without' the Father's knowledge. Peter uses it twice in his first epistle to describe Christian witness and hospitality that proceed 'without' verbal proclamation (3:1) or grumbling (4:9). The word always takes the genitive case and emphasizes the notable absence of what follows.

(3×) The term appears in all three NT occurrences with the sense of 'without' or 'apart from.' The Greek ἄνευ consistently renders as 'sin' (Spanish), 'sans' (French), showing its core meaning of absence. Jesus uses it to express divine oversight that leaves nothing unnoticed (Matt 10:29), while Peter applies it to Christian conduct that operates independently of certain actions—faith witnessed without words, hospitality given without complaint. WITHOUT AND APART FROM en: without, without- | es: sin | fr: sans | de: ἄνευ Matt 10:29; 1Pet 3:1; 1Pet 4:9

ἀνεύθετος G0428 Adj-GMS (1×)

unsuitable, inconvenient, not well-situated

This adjective describes what is unsuitable or inconvenient for a purpose. Luke uses it in Acts 27:12 to describe the harbor at Fair Havens as unsuitable for wintering. The term appears in practical contexts for locations or arrangements that don't serve their intended purpose well. English 'unsuitable,' Spanish 'inadecuado' (inadequate), and French 'incommode' (inconvenient) all emphasize the mismatch between the harbor and the sailors' needs. German preserves the Greek form, perhaps because the rare word has no perfect German equivalent.

(1×) Unsuitable, inconvenient (Acts 27:12). Luke describes Fair Havens as 'unsuitable' (ἀνευθέτου) for wintering—the harbor lacked adequate protection for ships during winter storms. The term is practical rather than moral, indicating simple mismatch between a place and its intended use. The multilingual evidence shows consensus on 'unsuitable' rather than 'bad'—it's not that the harbor was deficient in itself but that it didn't serve the specific need. This assessment would prove tragically correct as the ship later wrecked. LACK AND DEFICIENCY en: unsuitable | es: inadecuado | fr: incommode | de: ἀνευθέτου Acts 27:12

ἀνευρ-ίσκω G0429 V-AIA-3P (2×) to find out, discover, locate; to find after searching or by investigation

