Biblical Semantic Lexicon

Hebrew, Aramaic & Greek

14884 Lemmas · 20,143 Senses · 43 Languages

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoever believes in him should not perish but have eternal life."
— John 3:16

Preliminary Draft — February 17, 2026

Hebrew & Aramaic

9361 entries

אָב H0001 Prep-l / N-msc / 1cs (1212×)
Father: immediate male parent; ancestor or forefather (plural); patriarchal clan head in Israel's tribal organization.
The Hebrew word av is among the most foundational kinship terms in Scripture, appearing over 1,200 times and carrying weight far beyond biology. It names the immediate father in family narratives (Gen 2:24, 'a man shall leave his father'), but its plural form avot reaches back through generations to mean 'ancestors' or 'forefathers' — the patriarchs with whom God made covenant. Korean distinguishes neatly between 아버지 (father) and 조상 (ancestor), and Hindi between पिता (father) and पूर्वज (forefather), revealing that what Hebrew collapses into one root, many languages split apart. A specialized institutional sense appears in Chronicles, where 'fathers' houses' (bet avot) designate the clan divisions that organized Israel's military, priesthood, and census.

1. biological/legal father (direct parent) (1007×) Split from sense 79287. Criteria: Direct parent-child relationship, possessive constructions denoting actual parentage (my father, his father, Abraham's father). Includes grandfather, father-in-law, adoptive father where legal/biological kinship is in view.
en: my-father | es: mi-padre, padre-mío | fr: mon-père | de: mein-Vater, meinem-Vater, meinen-Vater Gen 19:34; Gen 20:12; Gen 20:13; Gen 24:7; Gen 24:38

2. ancestor, forefather (146×) Ancestors or forefathers, used overwhelmingly in the plural (avot) to denote previous generations of Israel's lineage — those who came out of Egypt, received the covenant, or sinned in the wilderness. With 146 occurrences, this sense anchors phrases like 'the God of your fathers' (Exod 3:13) and 'the land sworn to your fathers.' Korean 조상, Hindi पूर्वज/पितर, and Arabic آباء all employ dedicated ancestor vocabulary distinct from 'father,' underscoring that the Hebrew plural avot carries a collective, transgenerational meaning absent from the singular. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS en: their-fathers | es: padres-de-ellos, sus-padres | fr: leur-pères, leurs-pères | de: ihr-Vaeter Lev 26:39; Lev 26:40; Num 1:2; Num 1:16; Num 1:18

3. head of a fathers' house (35×) The patriarchal clan head in the institutional phrase bet avot ('fathers' houses'), the basic organizational unit of Israelite tribal structure used for census, military muster, and priestly service. Concentrated in Numbers and Chronicles (35 occurrences), this administrative sense surfaces in passages like 1 Chr 7:40 ('heads of fathers' houses, choice men, mighty warriors'). Hindi distinctively renders this as पितृवंश (patriarchal lineage), while most European translations resort to periphrasis ('heads of ancestral houses'), signaling that this is an institutional concept without neat equivalents outside the biblical world. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS en: the-fathers | es: los-padres | fr: père | de: der-Vaeter 1Chr 7:11; 1Chr 7:40; 1Chr 8:13; 1Chr 9:34; 1Chr 15:12

4. metaphorical father (patron, advisor, protector, originator) (24×) Split from sense 79287. Criteria: Title of respect or honor for non-parental authority figures: advisors to kings ('a father to Pharaoh,' Gen 45:8), prophets addressed with filial respect (2 Kgs 2:12 'my father, my father'), originators of crafts or movements, protectors and patrons. No actual kinship relation.
en: a-father-of, as-a-Father, as-a-father | es: Padre, Padre-de, Padre-mío | fr: [אב], [אביך], comme-un-père | de: Vater, Vater-von, ein-Vater- Gen 45:8; Judg 17:10; Judg 18:19; 2Sam 7:14; 2Kgs 2:12

אָבֵן H0002 N-msc / 1cs (9×)
Father, ancestor; Aramaic noun used in Daniel and Ezra for paternal figures and forefathers.
An Aramaic noun meaning 'father' or 'ancestor,' appearing exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. It functions identically to its Hebrew cognate אָב but carries the Aramaic morphology, taking various pronominal suffixes: 'my father,' 'your fathers,' 'our fathers.' In Daniel 5:2 and 5:11 it refers to Nebuchadnezzar as Belshazzar's 'father' (likely grandfather or predecessor), while in Ezra 4:15 it speaks of the 'fathers' of Israel's opponents. The multilingual glosses consistently render it as 'father' (fra: père, deu: Vater), confirming the straightforward kinship sense.

father, ancestor (Aramaic) (9×) Father or ancestor in the Aramaic portions of Scripture. Used with pronominal suffixes to denote direct paternity (Dan 5:2, 'your father Nebuchadnezzar'), ancestral lineage (Ezra 4:15, 'the book of the records of your fathers'), or theological relationship (Dan 2:23, 'God of my fathers'). Spanish renders it consistently as 'padre/padres,' and French as 'père,' both reflecting the core kinship meaning without metaphorical extension. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS en: his-father, my-father, my-fathers | es: mi-padre, mis-padres, nuestros-padres | fr: [אבהתך], [אבהתנא], père | de: Vater-von, [אבהתי], [אבהתך] Ezra 4:15; Ezra 5:12; Dan 2:23; Dan 5:2; Dan 5:11

אֵב H0003 Prep-b / N-mpc (2×)
freshness, greenness; fresh shoots or green growth
A poetic term for the fresh greenness of young plants, the tender stage when vegetation is still lush and growing. Job 8:12 uses it to describe reeds still in their greenness, cut down before harvest—an image of premature destruction. Song of Songs 6:11 mentions going down to see the fresh shoots by the brook, checking whether vines have budded and pomegranates bloomed. Both uses capture springtime vitality, the promise of life before it's fully matured.

(2×) The Hebrew root connects to freshness and green vegetation, possibly related to Arabic words for herbage and pasture. Job's metaphor warns that the godless, like reeds in their greenness, wither quickly when God removes blessing. The Song's imagery is gentler—a lover descending to observe early spring growth along the watercourse. French 'bourgeons' (buds) and Spanish 'brotes' (shoots) capture the tender, early-growth sense better than some English renderings that settled for more generic terms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-its-greenness, in-shoots-of | es: en-su-verdor,, los-brotes-de | fr: dans-son-באבו-lui, les-bourgeons | de: [באבו], in-Vater-von Job 8:12; Song 6:11

אֲבַד H0004 N-msc / 3ms (3×)
fruit (Aramaic); the produce of a tree or plant
This Aramaic noun means fruit, the produce of trees or plants. All three occurrences appear in Daniel 4, in Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the great tree. The tree's 'fruit was abundant' (v. 12), providing food for all. When the heavenly watcher decrees the tree's felling, he commands, 'Shake off its leaves and scatter its fruit' (v. 14). The tree's description repeats: 'whose fruit was abundant' (v. 21). Daniel interprets the tree as representing Nebuchadnezzar himself—his kingdom's prosperity and provision depicted as abundant fruit. The imagery draws on ancient Near Eastern royal ideology, where the king is like a great tree providing shade and sustenance.

(3×) The translations vary: English 'its fruit,' Spanish 'su fruto,' but French and German show '[אנבה]' or '[ואנבה],' suggesting textual or lexical challenges. Daniel 4:12 describes the tree's fruit as abundant, feeding all creatures. Verse 14 commands scattering the fruit as part of the tree's destruction. Verse 21 repeats the description of abundant fruit. The dream uses agricultural imagery—leaves, fruit, shade—to symbolize royal power and provision, which God will remove in judgment against the proud king. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-its-fruit, its-fruit | es: su-fruto, y-su-fruto | fr: [אנבה], [ואנבה] | de: [אנבה], [ואנבה] Dan 4:12; Dan 4:14; Dan 4:21

אֲבַגְתָא H0005 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Abagtha, Persian eunuch of Ahasuerus
A Persian name belonging to one of the seven eunuchs who served King Ahasuerus. In Esther 1:10, Abagtha is among the chamberlains commanded to bring Queen Vashti before the king at his banquet.

The name reflects Persian court culture and administration, with multilingual glosses preserving the proper noun across translations. The 'and' prefix in Hebrew indicates this name appears within a list of officials.

(1×) A eunuch in the court of King Ahasuerus (Xerxes I of Persia). Esther 1:10 names Abagtha among seven chamberlains ordered to escort Queen Vashti to the king's feast—a command she famously refuses, setting in motion the events that elevate Esther to the throne. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Abagtha | es: y-Abagta | fr: [ואבגתא] | de: [ואבגתא] Esth 1:10

אָבַד H0006 V-Qal-Perf-2fs (185×)

To perish, be destroyed; in Piel, to destroy or annihilate; in Hifil, to cause to perish; also to be lost, go astray.

Avad is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb of terminal loss — whether by divine judgment, military disaster, natural decay, or simple misplacement. Its Qal stem carries the intransitive weight: nations perish, the wicked are destroyed, memory fades away. The Piel intensifies this into active, deliberate annihilation — Israel is commanded to 'utterly destroy' Canaanite cult sites (Deut 12:2). The Hifil adds a causative layer: God himself causes the disobedient to perish (Deut 7:10). Yet remarkably, the same root also means simply 'to be lost' — a stray donkey (1 Sam 9:3), a wandering Aramean (Deut 26:5). Arabic preserves this split beautifully: halaka (ﻫﻠﻚ) for perishing versus da'a (ﺿﺎﻉ) for being lost, confirming that Hebrew speakers held both catastrophic destruction and ordinary mislaying under one verbal root.

1. to perish, be destroyed (105×) To perish, be destroyed, cease to exist (Qal intransitive) — the core meaning at 105 occurrences. This covers the full spectrum of terminal destruction: nations perishing under divine judgment (Deut 4:26; 8:19-20), the wicked being consumed (Ps 1:6; 37:20), hope dying (Job 8:13), and memory being blotted out (Ps 9:6). Arabic halaka (ﻫﻠﻚ) and faniya (ﻓﻨﻲ, to cease to exist) consistently mark this as final, irrecoverable destruction. Korean 멸망하다 ('to be annihilated') confirms the terminal force. The prophetic formula 'they shall utterly perish' (avod to'vedun, Deut 4:26) uses the infinitive absolute for devastating emphasis. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: Has-perished, has-perished, let-them-perish | es: Pereció, ha-perecido, perece | fr: périr | de: ging-zugrunde, lass-ihnen-vergehen, vergeht Deut 4:26; Deut 8:19; Deut 8:20

2. to destroy, annihilate (Piel) (38×) To destroy, exterminate, annihilate (Piel intensive) — 38 occurrences of active, agent-driven destruction. Israel is commanded to destroy idolatrous high places (Deut 12:2), and God threatens to destroy disobedient peoples (Num 33:52). The Piel stem's intensive force means not just killing but eradicating — wiping out every trace. Arabic ahlaka (ﺃﻫﻠﻚ, Form IV causative) and abada (ﺃﺑﺪ) both select total-destruction vocabulary. Spanish destruirás and German zerstören similarly opt for complete destruction rather than mere killing. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: and-I-shall-destroy, and-caused-to-perish, and-destroyed | es: Destruirás, destruirás, destruiréis | fr: et-ils-détruisit-eux, et-périr, il-détruisit-eux | de: du-soll-zerstoeren, er-zerstoerte-ihnen, ging-zugrunde Num 33:52; Deut 11:4; Deut 12:2

3. to cause to perish (Hifil) (27×) To cause to perish, bring to destruction (Hifil causative) — 27 occurrences where an agent (usually God) causes the object to perish. Distinct from the Piel in emphasizing the causal chain: 'the LORD your God will cause them to perish' (Deut 7:24), 'I will destroy from among his people' (Lev 23:30). The Hifil focuses on the authority behind the destruction rather than the intensity of the act itself. Arabic ubidu (ﺃُﺑِﻴﺪُ) and uhliku (ﺃُﻫْﻠِﻚُ) both use Form IV causative patterns, mirroring the Hebrew morphology precisely. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: I-will-destroy, and-I-shall-destroy, and-I-will-destroy | es: Y-destruiré, destruiré, destruye | fr: est-causing-à-perish, et-destroys, et-je-devra-détruire | de: ist-causing-zu-umkommen, und-destroys, und-er-geht-zugrunde Lev 23:30; Num 24:19; Deut 7:10; Deut 7:24; Deut 8:20

4. to be lost, go astray (13×) To be lost, go astray, wander (Qal intransitive) — 13 occurrences where the meaning shifts from destruction to displacement. Saul's father's donkeys 'were lost' (1 Sam 9:3, 20); the law commands returning a neighbor's lost animal (Deut 22:3); the wandering Aramean of Deut 26:5 is an 'oved — lost, vulnerable, perishing. Arabic da'a (ﺿﺎﻉ, to be lost) and da'ila (ﺿَﻞّ, stray) consistently distinguish this from halaka (perishing), confirming a real sense boundary. Korean 잃어버리다 ('to lose/misplace') likewise separates this from the destruction cluster. The theological poignancy of the word is that 'lost' shades into 'perishing' — the straying sheep is in mortal danger. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: and-perished, and-they-were-lost, is-lost | es: La-perdida, Y-se-perdieron, errante | fr: est-lost, et-ils-furent-lost, et-périr | de: der-lost, ist-lost, perishing Deut 22:3; Deut 26:5; Deut 32:28; 1Sam 9:3; 1Sam 9:20

5. to waste, squander (Piel) (2×) To waste, squander, forfeit (Piel sub-sense) — 2 occurrences where the object is not destroyed by violence but dissipated through folly or the passage of time. In Prov 29:3, a companion of prostitutes 'wastes' his wealth; in Eccl 3:6, there is 'a time to lose/let go.' Arabic yudi'u (ﻳُﻀِﻴﻊُ, to waste) marks this as careless loss rather than deliberate destruction. The Qoheleth passage is especially nuanced — avad here means to release, to accept loss as part of life's rhythm, a far cry from the violent perishing of sense 1. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: to-lose, wastes | es: destruye-, para-perder | fr: périr, à-périr | de: er-geht-zugrunde, zu-ging-zugrunde Prov 29:3; Eccl 3:6

אֲבַד H0007 V-Hifil-Imperf-2ms (7×)

To perish or destroy — Aramaic verb meaning to be lost or ruined (intransitive) or to cause destruction (Hiphil causative).

This Aramaic cognate of Hebrew abad (H0006) appears exclusively in Daniel and once in Jeremiah's Aramaic verse. In its Hiphil (causative) form, it carries the forceful sense of royal or divine annihilation — Nebuchadnezzar decrees to destroy the wise men of Babylon (Dan 2:12, 18, 24), and the Ancient of Days strips dominion to destroy it utterly (Dan 7:26). In its intransitive forms, the word describes the fate of those who face such power: the gods who did not make heaven and earth 'shall perish' (Jer 10:11), and the terrifying beast 'was destroyed' (Dan 7:11). The consistent Aramaic court setting gives this word a flavor of imperial decree and apocalyptic judgment.

1. destroy (Hiphil causative) (5×) To destroy, cause to perish (Hiphil causative). The transitive sense dominates in Daniel's court narratives: the king commands 'to destroy' (lehobadah) the sages in Dan 2:12, and Daniel urgently seeks mercy 'lest they destroy' in 2:18. Spanish 'destruyas' and 'para-destruir' capture the active, causative force. In Dan 7:26, the divine court acts to destroy dominion — shifting the agent from human king to heavenly authority. LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: and-to-destroy, destroy, to-destroy | es: destruyas, para-destruir, perecieran | fr: [ולהובדה], [יהבדון], [להובדה] | de: [ולהובדה], [יהבדון], [להובדה] Dan 2:12; Dan 2:18; Dan 2:24; Dan 7:26

2. perish, be destroyed (Qal/Hofal intransitive) (2×) To perish, be destroyed (Qal intransitive / Hofal passive). The subject suffers rather than inflicts destruction. Jeremiah 10:11, the only Aramaic verse in Jeremiah, declares that gods who did not create heaven and earth 'shall perish' (ye'abdu) — a prophetic curse using the jussive form. In Dan 7:11, the beast 'was destroyed' (wehubad, Hofal passive), receiving the judgment decreed in the previous sense. Spanish distinguishes these nicely: 'perecerán' (they shall perish) versus 'fue-destruido' (was destroyed). LOSS AND DESTRUCTION

en: and-was-destroyed, shall-perish | es: perecerán, y-fue-destruido | fr: [והובד], [יאבדו] | de: [והובד], [יאבדו] Jer 10:11; Dan 7:11

אֹבֵד H0008 N-ms (2×)

destruction, ruin, perishing

An abstract noun denoting utter destruction or ruin. It appears only in Balaam's oracles (Numbers 24:20, 24), both times in the phrase 'until destruction'—predicting the eventual fate of Amalek and other nations. The word has a finality to it, describing not temporary setback but complete obliteration. Balaam sees Israel's enemies and pronounces their end: they will endure only 'until destruction.'

(2×) Occurring exclusively in Balaam's prophetic utterances, this term announces the destiny of Israel's adversaries. The Masoretic form suggests an abstract noun from the root meaning 'perish' or 'be destroyed.' Every major translation tradition (Spanish 'perecer,' French 'destruction,' German 'destruction') emphasizes finality. Amalek was 'first among nations' but his end is destruction (Num 24:20); similarly the ships of Kittim will ultimately meet ruin (24:24). The word functions as a prophetic timestamp: these powers exist only 'until destruction' arrives. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: destruction | es: perecer | fr: destruction | de: destruction Num 24:20; Num 24:24

אֲבֵדָה H0009 N-fsc (4×)

A lost thing; something that has gone astray and awaits recovery by its rightful owner.

This noun refers specifically to property that has been lost and may be found by another. It appears in the legal codes of Exodus and Leviticus governing the obligation to return found items, and in Deuteronomy's detailed lost-and-found legislation. The word is built on the root aleph-bet-dalet (to perish, be lost) with a feminine nominal pattern indicating the object itself. Ancient Israelite law took the recovery and return of lost property seriously — finding something did not make it yours, and concealing a found item constituted a kind of theft requiring restitution.

(4×) A lost item or piece of property that someone has misplaced or that has strayed away. In Exod 22:9, it appears in a list of disputed property cases where one party claims another is holding their lost goods. Lev 6:3-4 addresses the moral obligation when someone finds a lost thing (aveidah) and lies about it — restitution plus a fifth is required. Deut 22:3 broadens the duty to return any lost item belonging to a fellow Israelite. The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'cosa perdida,' French 'lost chose,' German 'lost Sache' — all center on the concrete notion of misplaced property awaiting rightful restoration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-lost-thing, lost-thing, lost-thing-of | es: cosa-perdida-de, la-pérdida, pérdida | fr: le-lost-chose, lost-chose-de, perdu-chose | de: der-lost-Sache, ein-lost-Sache, lost-Sache-von Exod 22:9; Lev 6:3; Lev 6:4; Deut 22:3

בְּ H000b

in, with, by, through; preposition indicating location, means, or association

This tiny preposition carries enormous weight in Hebrew, expressing relationships we capture in English with multiple words: in, at, by, with, through, among, during. It locates things in space and time, indicates the means or instrument by which something happens, and marks accompanying circumstances. Hebrew pairs it with countless idioms—'in the hand of' means 'through,' 'in the eyes of' means 'in the opinion of,' 'in that day' marks a specific time. Mastering its nuances is essential for reading Hebrew with precision, as it establishes the fundamental relationships between words in a sentence.

וְ H000c

and, then, so; conjunction connecting clauses, sentences, or narrative sequences

Hebrew's most frequent word, this simple conjunction does far more than join words. It sequences narrative ('and then'), adds information ('and also'), contrasts ideas ('but'), introduces explanations ('for'), and marks consequential action ('so'). Ancient Hebrew storytelling relies heavily on this waw-consecutive pattern, where each action follows the previous with 'and.' The demonstrative force sometimes makes it emphatic—'and so it was that'—giving Hebrew narrative its distinctive rhythm. Context determines whether it means 'and,' 'but,' 'then,' 'so,' or 'for,' making it both ubiquitous and flexible.

הַ H000d

the; definite article marking known, specific, or unique referents

This prefix transforms any noun from indefinite to definite, signaling 'the specific one' rather than 'one among many.' It marks things previously mentioned, uniquely identified, or contextually obvious. Hebrew uses it more liberally than English—before generic or representative nouns ('the lion' meaning lions in general), with abstract qualities, and sometimes simply for emphasis. Unlike Greek, Hebrew never omits it for effect; its presence or absence follows consistent patterns. Paired with participles, it creates substantives ('the one who judges' becomes 'the judge'), foundational for understanding Hebrew grammar.

הֲ H000i

interrogative particle introducing questions; prefixed 'whether' or standalone 'is it that'

This particle turns any statement into a question. It can introduce genuine inquiries where the answer is unknown, or rhetorical questions expecting a particular response—often negative. Biblical Hebrew frequently uses it for questions expressing surprise, indignation, or irony. Sometimes it appears in indirect questions ('whether') or in deliberative questions where the speaker asks himself what to do. The tone varies dramatically with context, from Moses's straightforward 'Shall I go?' to God's pointed rhetorical questions in Job, where the expected answer underscores human limitation.

כְּ H000k

like, as, according to; preposition expressing similarity, comparison, or correspondence

This preposition establishes similarity or conformity between two things. It appears in comparisons ('strong as a lion'), in expressions of manner ('do according to the law'), and in approximate measurements ('about a hundred'). Prophetic literature uses it for similes —'like sheep without a shepherd,' 'as a father pities his children.' Legal texts employ it for conformity to standards. The particle can mean 'approximately,' 'in the manner of,' 'in proportion to,' or simply 'like,' making context essential for precise translation.

לְ H000l

to, for, toward; preposition indicating direction, purpose, possession, or reference

Perhaps Hebrew's most versatile preposition, this particle expresses direction (movement toward), purpose (for the sake of), possession (belonging to), reference (concerning), advantage (for the benefit of), and even ethical dative (from someone's perspective). The context determines whether 'to David' means 'toward David,' 'for David's benefit,' 'in David's opinion,' or 'belonging to David.' Hebrew pairs it with infinitives to express purpose ('in order to') and with pronouns to indicate indirect objects. Understanding its range is crucial for nuanced interpretation.

מִן־ H000m

from, out of, away from; preposition indicating source, origin, separation, or partitive relation

This preposition marks separation, origin, or starting point—both spatial and conceptual. It indicates physical movement away from a place, material something is made from, the source of an action, the cause of a condition, or a portion taken from a whole. Prophetic warnings speak of turning 'from' evil ways; Psalms praise deliverance 'from' enemies. It combines with other prepositions to create complex meanings and introduces comparisons ('more than'). The particle's flexibility makes it essential for expressing relationships of origin, separation, causation, and partition throughout Hebrew Scripture.

שֶׁ H000s

that, which, who; relative particle connecting clauses and introducing relative statements

This shortened relative particle (abbreviated from the longer form) introduces relative clauses and appears frequently in later biblical books, especially Ecclesiastes and Song of Songs. It serves the same function as the more common longer relative—introducing clauses that describe or identify a noun. Where earlier Hebrew might say 'the man who came,' later texts prefer this abbreviated form. The particle shows language evolution within Scripture, as spoken Hebrew increasingly favored shorter forms. Its presence helps scholars identify later composition dates.

אֲבַדּוֹן H0010

Abaddon, place of destruction; the realm of the dead as a place of ruin and loss

Wisdom literature personifies this realm as the place where the dead experience destruction and ruin. Parallel with Sheol and death itself, Abaddon represents not merely the grave but the condition of being utterly ruined and cut off from life. Job asks rhetorically whether God's wonders are known in Abaddon—implying the profound separation from divine presence. The term emphasizes the destructive aspect of death rather than simply its finality. Later Jewish and Christian tradition personified Abaddon as a destroying angel, but the biblical usage maintains it as a place or state.

אֲבַדּוֹן H0011 N-ms (7×)

Abaddon; the place of destruction or ruin in Sheol, the realm of the dead personified as a cosmic power.

Abaddon (from the root ʾ-b-d, 'to perish') names the place of utter destruction within the underworld. In the Wisdom literature it appears as a poetic synonym for Sheol and the grave, paired with death itself (Job 28:22) and with the netherworld (Job 26:6; Prov 15:11). The word suggests not merely death but annihilation — a place of no return. In Revelation 9:11, the Greek form Abaddōn becomes a personal name for the angel of the abyss, showing how this Hebrew concept traveled into apocalyptic imagery. French perdition preserves the destructive force of the root.

Abaddon / place of destruction (7×) Abaddon — the place or personification of destruction in the realm of the dead. Used in Hebrew poetry as a synonym for Sheol, the grave, and death (Job 26:6, parallel to Sheol; Job 28:22, parallel to Death; Prov 15:11; Ps 88:11). In Job 31:12 it denotes consuming ruin as a destructive force. The name derives from ʾabad ('to perish'), and French perdition and Spanish Abadón both preserve the sense of irreversible destruction. By Revelation 9:11, the word has become the personal name of the angel of the abyss. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: Abaddon, [and-Abaddon], and-Abaddon | es: (y-Abadon), Abadón, [y-Abadon] | fr: dans-perdition, et-(וְאַבַדּוֹן), et-[וְאַבַדּוֹן] | de: [(וְאַבַדּוֹן)], [[וְאַבַדּוֹן]], [אַבַדּוֹן] Job 26:6; Job 28:22; Job 31:12; Ps 88:11; Prov 15:11

אַבְדָן H0012 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

destruction, ruin, annihilation

Complete destruction or annihilation, especially in contexts of warfare and violence. Esther 9:5 describes the Jews striking their enemies 'with the sword, killing and destroying them, and doing as they pleased to those who hated them.' The term appears in phrases emphasizing total military defeat. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'y-destrucción', English 'and-destruction') consistently render this as comprehensive ruin, not mere defeat.

(1×) Total destruction or annihilation in warfare. In Esther 9:5, the term appears in a triad 'stroke of the sword, killing, and destruction,' emphasizing the thoroughness of Jewish victory over their enemies on the appointed day. The word intensifies beyond simple military defeat to complete obliteration. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: and-destruction | es: y-destrucción | fr: [וְאַבְדָן] | de: [וְאַבְדָן] Esth 9:5

אַבְדָן H0013 Prep-b / N-msc (1×)

destruction, ruin (construct form)

Destruction or ruin, appearing in construct relationship with other nouns. In Esther 8:6, Esther pleads with the king: 'How can I endure to see the disaster that would come to my people? Or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?' The construct form 'in-destruction-of' links the abstract concept to the concrete victims—Esther's people. The emotional weight of this rhetorical question drives her urgent appeal to reverse Haman's decree.

(1×) Destruction in construct relationship, 'destruction of' someone or something. Esther 8:6 uses this form in Esther's passionate plea before Ahasuerus, asking how she could bear to witness 'the destruction of my kindred.' The construct grammatically binds the abstract calamity to her specific, beloved people. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: in-destruction-of | es: en-destrucción-de | fr: [בְּאַבְדָן] | de: [בְּאַבְדָן] Esth 8:6

אָבָה H0014 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (54×)

To be willing, consent; expressing volitional readiness or deliberate agreement, very often negated.

A verb of the will, expressing someone's inner readiness – or far more often, stubborn refusal – to act. Remarkably, the vast majority of its occurrences appear with a negative particle: 'he was not willing.' Pharaoh 'would not' let Israel go (Exod 10:27); Israel 'would not' go up to the land (Deut 1:26); Nabal 'would not' listen (1 Sam 15:9). When God is the subject, the stakes are cosmic: 'the LORD was not willing to destroy' (2 Kgs 13:23). The related Arabic and Ethiopic cognates actually mean 'refuse,' suggesting the negative sense may be closer to the word's ancient core.

1. be willing, want (51×) To be willing, to want or be disposed to do something – expressing volitional inclination or readiness. Though the underlying meaning is positive ('be willing'), it most often appears negated, forming a strong idiom for refusal. Spanish 'quiso' (from querer, 'to want') captures the volitional core. French 'disposé/fut disposé' and German 'bereit/willig' emphasize readiness. Key: Deut 1:26 (Israel's refusal to enter Canaan), 2 Kgs 13:23 (God's willingness not to destroy). The Ethiopic cognate means 'refuse,' hinting that the negative frame may be original. DESIRE AND WILLING en: he-was-willing, was-willing, willing | es: quiso | fr: disposé, fut-disposé, il-fut-disposé | de: bereit, er-war-bereit, er-war-willig Gen 24:5; Gen 24:8; Exod 10:27; Lev 26:21; Deut 1:26

2. consent, agree (3×) To consent or agree to a specific proposal or enticement – a deliberate act of accepting rather than a general disposition. Distinguished from sense 1 by the presence of a concrete offer or temptation. In Prov 1:10 ('if sinners entice you, do not consent'), the verb marks the decisive moment of yielding. In 1 Kgs 20:8 the elders advise the king not to agree to Ben-hadad's demands. Spanish 'consentirás/consientas' and French 'consentir' both capture the transactional, responsive quality that differentiates this from mere willingness. AGREE CONSENT ACCORD

en: consent, you-shall-consent | es: consentirás, consientas | fr: consent, consentir, tu-devra-consent | de: [תֹּאבֶא], consent, du-soll-consent Deut 13:8; 1Kgs 20:8; Prov 1:10

אֲבִי H0015 Interjection (1×)

my father (vocative or possessive), O my father

A term meaning 'my father,' used either as a vocative address or possessive designation. Job 34:36 is textually complex, with this form possibly functioning as an interjection ('O my father') or as part of the verb 'I entreat.' The BDB suggests it may be a dialectical form expressing entreaty: 'Would that Job were tried!' The multilingual evidence shows interpretive variation, with some treating it as kinship language and others as an expression of wish or prayer.

(1×) Possibly 'my father' as vocative or part of an entreaty expression. Job 34:36 presents textual challenges, with this form potentially expressing Elihu's wish or prayer that Job be thoroughly tested. The uncertainty reflects the verse's grammatical difficulty, though the kinship term may carry overtones of appeal or invocation. PARENTS AND ANCESTORS en: my-father | es: Mi-padre | fr: אבי | de: Vater-von Job 34:36

אָבֶה H0016 N-ms (1×)

reed, papyrus, water plant used for boats

A reed or papyrus plant, particularly one used in constructing lightweight, swift boats. Job 9:26 speaks of days passing 'like reed boats, like an eagle swooping on its prey'—images of speed and transience. The parallel passage in Isaiah 18:2 refers to 'vessels of papyrus,' indicating watercraft made from bundled reeds. These boats, known from ancient Egypt, were remarkably fast despite their fragile appearance.

(1×) Reed or papyrus used to construct boats. In Job 9:26, Job laments the swift passage of his days, comparing them to 'reed boats'—lightweight papyrus craft known for their speed. The image captures both velocity and fragility, reflecting Job's sense that life rushes past without pause or substance. REEDS RUSHES VEGETATION

en: reed | es: junco, | fr: אבה | de: [אבה] Job 9:26

אֲבוֹי H0017 Interjection (1×)

woe, sorrow, lamentation (interjection)

An exclamation expressing pain, sorrow, or distress—similar to 'alas!' or 'woe!' In Proverbs 23:29, this term appears in parallel with 'woe' in a rhetorical question: 'Who has woe? Who has sorrow? Who has strife?' The verse introduces a warning against excessive drinking. The interjection gives voice to the suffering and regret that follow drunkenness, personifying the consequences of indulgence as cries of anguish.

(1×) An exclamation of pain, sorrow, or regret. Proverbs 23:29 uses this interjection in a series of rhetorical questions identifying the drunkard as one who experiences 'woe' and 'sorrow.' The parallel structure intensifies the emotional landscape of alcohol abuse, moving from external conflict to internal anguish. GRIEF AND SORROW

en: sorrow | es: dolor? | fr: אבוי | de: [אבוי] Prov 23:29

אֵבוּס H0018 N-msc (3×)

feeding trough, manger, crib; where animals eat

This Hebrew noun denotes a feeding trough or manger where domesticated animals eat. In Job 39:9, God asks Job whether the wild ox will consent to spend the night 'at your manger'—emphasizing its untamable nature, unlike domestic cattle. Proverbs 14:4 observes, 'Where no oxen are, the manger is clean; but much increase comes by the strength of the ox'—a wisdom saying about the trade-off between convenience and productivity. Isaiah 1:3 laments Israel's spiritual insensibility: 'The ox knows its owner and the donkey its master's crib, but Israel does not know, my people do not consider.' Even animals recognize the source of their provision; God's people do not.

(3×) Translations consistently render this as feeding trough or manger: English 'manger-of, feeding-trough,' Spanish 'pesebre' (manger), French 'crèche,' German 'Krippe.' Job 39:9 contrasts the wild ox with domestic animals that sleep by the manger. Proverbs 14:4 acknowledges that oxen require care (and create mess at the manger) but bring great profit. Isaiah 1:3's indictment is striking: donkeys know their master's manger, but Israel doesn't know YHWH—animals are more responsive to provision than God's people to their provider. CATTLE AND OXEN

en: manger-of, the-manger-is, your-feeding-trough | es: pesebre, pesebre-de, tu-pesebre | fr: crèche, ton-אבוסך-toi, אבוס | de: Krippe, [אבוס], [אבוסך] Job 39:9; Prov 14:4; Isa 1:3

אִבְחָה H0019 N-fsc (1×)

slaughter, carnage (possibly textual error)

A term possibly meaning 'slaughter' or 'carnage,' though its authenticity is disputed. It appears in Ezekiel 21:15 (Hebrew 21:20) in the phrase 'slaughter of the sword,' describing the weapon's deadly purpose. Many scholars, including the lexicon itself, suggest this may be a textual error for a more common word for slaughter. The translations vary, with some preserving the term and others emending it.

(1×) Slaughter or carnage, though possibly a scribal error. Ezekiel 21:15 describes a sword appointed 'for slaughter,' emphasizing the blade's deadly intent in God's judgment against Jerusalem. Whether original or corrupt, the term functions within the passage's violent imagery of divine wrath executed through Babylonian invasion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: slaughter-of- | es: matanza-de | fr: massacre | de: [אבחת] Ezek 21:15

אֲבַטִּחִים H0020 Art / N-mp (1×)

watermelons, melons (Egyptian fruit)

Watermelons or other melons, a fruit the Israelites remembered from Egypt. In Numbers 11:5, the people complain in the wilderness, nostalgically recalling the foods they ate freely in Egypt: 'We remember the fish we ate in Egypt that cost nothing, the cucumbers, the melons, the leeks, the onions, and the garlic.' This list represents the variety and abundance they associate with their former captivity, now idealized in contrast to manna's monotony.

(1×) Watermelons or similar melons from Egypt. Numbers 11:5 includes 'the melons' in the Israelites' nostalgic catalog of Egyptian foods, reflecting their selective memory that romanticizes slavery's diet while forgetting its oppression. The fruit symbolizes perceived abundance lost, fueling their discontent in the desert. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: the-melons | es: las-sandías | fr: le-melons | de: der-melons Num 11:5

אֲבִיָּדוּ H0021 N-proper-fs (1×)

Abi, mother of King Hezekiah

The personal name of King Hezekiah's mother, called Abi in 2 Kings 18:2 and Abijah elsewhere. She was the daughter of Zechariah. The name means 'Yahweh is my father' and appears in various forms across the biblical text. In Chronicles, the fuller form Abijah is used, while Kings employs the shortened Abi. Her mention follows the pattern of identifying the queen mother in Judean royal records.

(1×) The mother of King Hezekiah, daughter of Zechariah. 2 Kings 18:2 records that Hezekiah was twenty-five when he began to reign, and his mother's name was Abi. Her identification follows the Deuteronomistic pattern of naming the king's mother, suggesting the queen mother's significant status in Judean monarchy. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Avi | es: Abi | fr: Avi | de: Avi 2Kgs 18:2

אֲבִיאֵל H0022 N-proper-ms (3×)

Abiel; personal name meaning 'El is (my) father' or 'God is father'

This Hebrew proper name means 'El is (my) father' or 'God is father,' a theophoric name affirming divine relationship. Abiel was Saul's grandfather (1 Samuel 9:1; 14:51), making him part of Israel's first royal line. The name also appears in 1 Chronicles 11:32, possibly referring to the same individual or another warrior. Such names were common in ancient Israel, expressing parental faith and hope. The 'El' element connects to the high God of Israel, while the 'abi' (my father) component reflects intimate relationship—a naming pattern seen in many biblical names like Abijah, Abimelech, and others.

(3×) The name transliterates consistently: English 'Abiel,' Spanish 'Abiel, Aviel,' French 'Abiel, Aviel,' German preserves '[אביאל].' 1 Samuel 9:1 identifies Abiel in Saul's genealogy as the son of Zeror. 1 Samuel 14:51 confirms Saul and Abner as both grandsons of Abiel. 1 Chronicles 11:32 lists an Abiel among David's mighty men, though the identification with Saul's grandfather is uncertain. The theophoric name testifies to Israel's faith that God stands in paternal relationship to his people. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abiel, Aviel | es: Abiel, Aviel | fr: Abiel, Aviel, [אביאל] | de: Abiel, Aviel, [אביאל] 1Sam 9:1; 1Sam 14:51; 1Chr 11:32

אֲבִיאָסָף H0023 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Abiasaph, Levite descendant of Korah

A personal name meaning 'my father has gathered,' belonging to a descendant of Korah from the tribe of Levi. Exodus 6:24 lists Abiasaph among the sons of Korah, establishing his place in the Levitical genealogy. The name also appears as Ebiasaph in Chronicles. This figure is part of the Korahite line that survived Korah's rebellion and became an important Levitical family serving in temple worship.

(1×) A Levite, son (or descendant) of Korah. Exodus 6:24 names Abiasaph in the genealogy tracing the priestly line through Levi. Despite his ancestor Korah's rebellion and destruction, Abiasaph's line continued and eventually served as temple singers and gatekeepers, showing God's mercy extending beyond one generation's sin. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Abiasaph | es: y-Aviasaf | fr: et-Abiasaph | de: und-Abiasaph Exod 6:24

אָבִיב H0024 Art / N-ms (8×)

Fresh ears of grain (barley); also the month Abib (= Nisan), the first month of the Hebrew calendar when ears ripen.

Aviv connects the agricultural calendar to Israel's salvation history. The word fundamentally refers to fresh, young ears of barley just beginning to form – the stage before full ripeness (Exod 9:31, Lev 2:14). This agricultural reality gave its name to the first month of the Hebrew year, the month of the Exodus and Passover (Exod 13:4, 23:15, 34:18, Deut 16:1), later called Nisan in the post-exilic period. The Spanish 'espiga' (ear of grain) for the concrete sense and 'Aviv' for the month name reflect this dual usage well.

1. Abib, month of ripening (6×) The month Abib (Aviv), the first month of the Hebrew calendar corresponding roughly to March-April, when barley ears begin to ripen. It is the month of the Exodus and the Passover festival. Exodus 13:4 records: 'Today you are going out, in the month of Abib.' The article ha-Aviv marks it as the definitive month name. Spanish preserves both 'Aviv' and 'la espiga' (the ear of grain), hinting at the agricultural etymology. After the Exile, this month was called Nisan (Neh 2:1, Esth 3:7). MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: the-Abib, the-Aviv | es: Aviv, el-aviv, la-espiga | fr: le-Abib, le-Aviv | de: der-Abib, der-Aviv Exod 13:4; Exod 23:15; Exod 34:18; Deut 16:1

2. fresh ears of grain (2×) Fresh, young ears of barley or grain that have formed on the stalk but are not yet fully ripe. In Exodus 9:31, the flax and barley were destroyed by the seventh plague because the barley was 'in the ear' (aviv). Leviticus 2:14 prescribes an offering of firstfruits: fresh ears roasted with fire (aviv qalui baesh). The Spanish 'espigas' (ears of grain) and French 'fresh-grain' convey this concrete agricultural sense that underlies the month name. GRAIN EARS

en: ear, fresh-grain | es: espiga, espigas | fr: fresh-grain, oreille | de: Ohr, fresh-Getreide Exod 9:31; Lev 2:14

גִּבְעוֹן H0025

Gibeon, Levitical city in Benjamin; site of Joshua's victory and Solomon's vision

This Hivite city gained fame when its inhabitants cleverly deceived Joshua into making a covenant with them, becoming Israel's servants rather than suffering destruction. The great pool of Gibeon witnessed the contest between Joab's men and Abner's forces. Solomon received his dream of wisdom here at the high place, before the temple was built. Later prophets condemned illegitimate worship at Gibeon, even as its historical significance remained undeniable. Archaeological identification with modern Tell el-Jib has uncovered extensive water systems matching biblical descriptions.

אֲבִיגַיִל H0026 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (19×)

Abigail: proper name meaning 'my father is joy,' borne by two women connected to David's household.

Abigail (ʾăḇîḡayil) likely means 'my father is joy' or 'source of joy.' The name belongs most prominently to the wise and quick-witted wife of Nabal the Carmelite, who intercepted David's wrath with provisions and eloquent speech (1 Sam 25). After Nabal's death she became David's wife and accompanied him through the wilderness years. A second Abigail appears as David's sister or half-sister (1 Chr 2:16–17), mother of Amasa. The name appears in several orthographic variants across the Hebrew manuscripts, reflecting scribal handling of the yod-lamed ending.

Abigail (proper name) (19×) The personal name Abigail, appearing in multiple spelling variants (אֲבִיגַיִל, אֲבִיגָל, אֲבִיגָיִל). Primarily denotes the resourceful woman of Carmel who prevented David from shedding blood in anger (1 Sam 25:14–35) and later bore him a son, Chileab (2 Sam 3:3). Also designates David's sister, mother of Amasa (1 Chr 2:16–17; 2 Sam 17:25). Cross-language renderings are consistently transliterated: Spanish and French 'Abigaïl,' German 'Abigail.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abigail, Avigal, [Abigail] | es: (Qeré), (para-Abigail), Abigail | fr: Abigaïl, Avigal, [Abigail] | de: Abigail, Avigal, [Abigail] 1Sam 25:3; 1Sam 25:14; 1Sam 25:18; 1Sam 25:23

אֲבִידָן H0027 N-proper-ms (5×)

Abidan — a Benjaminite prince whose name means 'my father is judge'

Avidan appears five times in Numbers as the designated leader of the tribe of Benjamin during the wilderness period. His name, meaning 'my father is judge,' follows the common theophoric pattern of Israelite names built on av ('father'). He is listed in the census (Num 1:11), the camp arrangement (Num 2:22), and the tabernacle dedication offerings (Num 7:60, 65; 10:24). The multilingual evidence is uniform — English 'Abidan,' Spanish 'Abidan,' French 'Abidan,' German 'Abidan' — reflecting straightforward transliteration of a single referent.

(5×) The proper name Avidan, designating the son of Gideoni and tribal prince of Benjamin during Israel's wilderness sojourn. All five occurrences appear in Numbers in official registers: the census (Num 1:11), camp positioning (Num 2:22), and tabernacle dedication offerings (Num 7:60, 65; 10:24). The name follows the common Hebrew theophoric pattern combining av ('father') with din ('judge'). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abidan | es: Abidán | fr: Abidan | de: Abidan Num 1:11; Num 2:22; Num 7:60; Num 7:65; Num 10:24

אֲבִידָע H0028 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Abida (personal name: 'my father took knowledge')

The name of one of Midian's five sons (Genesis 25:4, 1 Chronicles 1:33), and thus a grandson of Abraham through Keturah. The name means 'my father took knowledge' or 'my father knew,' combining the element 'abi' (my father) with a verb related to knowing. South Arabian inscriptions preserve similar names, confirming the antiquity and regional character of this Midianite lineage.

(2×) Appearing in both genealogical accounts of Abraham's descendants through Keturah, Abida represents one branch of the Midianite tribal confederation. Sabaean inscriptions include related forms (אבידע, ידעאב), demonstrating that these 'abi-' names (father + attribute) were common in ancient Arabia. The name's theophoric character—attributing knowledge to the divine father—fits patterns seen in other ancient Semitic personal names that celebrate parental or divine qualities. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Abida, and-Avida | es: y-Abida, y-Avida | fr: [ואבידע], et-Abida | de: [ואבידע], und-Abida Gen 25:4; 1Chr 1:33

אֲבִיָּהוּ H0029 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (25×)

Abijah; theophoric name meaning 'Yah(u) is my father,' borne by kings, priests, and other biblical figures

Abijah (אֲבִיָּה / אֲבִיָּהוּ) is a theophoric name meaning 'Yah is my father,' carried by at least eight distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The most prominent is the son and successor of Rehoboam who reigned briefly over Judah (2 Chr 13), also called Abijam in Kings (1 Kgs 14:31; 15:1). Others include Samuel's wayward second son (1 Sam 8:2), a head of a priestly division (1 Chr 24:10, the same course to which Zechariah of Luke 1:5 belonged), and the mother of Hezekiah (2 Kgs 18:2). The name testifies to parental faith in God's fatherly care.

Abijah (proper name) (25×) A Hebrew proper name (/ אֲבִיָּה / אֲבִיָּהוּ) meaning 'Yah(u) is my father,' shared by several biblical persons. Chief among them is king Abijah of Judah, Rehoboam's successor (2 Chr 13:1–22), whose name also appears as Abijam (1 Kgs 15:1). The priestly course of Abijah (1 Chr 24:10) endured into Second Temple times — Luke identifies Zechariah as belonging to it (Luke 1:5). Translations transliterate consistently: Spanish 'Abías,' French 'Abija,' German 'Abia.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Abijah, Aviyah, for-Aviyah | es: Abiya, Abías, Aviyah | fr: Abija, zu-Abija | de: Abia, [אביה], zu-Abia 1Sam 8:2; 1Kgs 14:1; 1Chr 2:24; 1Chr 3:10; 1Chr 6:28

אֲבִיהוּא H0030 N-proper-ms (12×)

Abihu – son of Aaron, consumed by divine fire for offering unauthorized incense before the LORD

Abihu (Hebrew אֲבִיהוּא, 'he is my father') was the second son of Aaron the high priest and Elisheba (Exod 6:23). He was among those who ascended Sinai and beheld the God of Israel (Exod 24:1, 9), and he was consecrated for priestly service alongside his father and brothers (Exod 28:1). His death, together with his brother Nadab, for offering 'strange fire' (esh zarah) before the LORD (Lev 10:1-2) became one of the Old Testament's most sobering warnings about the holiness demanded in worship. The incident is recalled repeatedly in Numbers and 1 Chronicles as a paradigm of priestly accountability. All twelve occurrences refer to the same individual.

and Abihu (12×) The proper name Abihu, second son of Aaron, who witnessed the theophany on Sinai (Exod 24:1, 9) and was consumed by divine fire for offering unauthorized incense (Lev 10:1-2). All occurrences name the same individual, with syntactic variation (bare noun, conjunction-prefixed) only. Spanish Abiu, French Abihu, and German Abihu confirm one referent. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Abihu, and-Abihu, and-Avihu | es: Abiú, Avihu, y-Abihu | fr: Abihu, [ואביהוא], et-Abihu | de: Abihu, [ואביהוא], und-Abihu Exod 6:23; Exod 24:1; Exod 24:9; Exod 28:1; Lev 10:1

אֲבִיהוּד H0031 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Abihud, Benjamite, son of Bela

A personal name meaning 'my father is majesty,' belonging to a Benjamite in the genealogy of Benjamin's descendants. First Chronicles 8:3 identifies Abihud as one of the sons of Bela, Benjamin's firstborn. The name, combining 'father' with 'majesty' or 'splendor,' reflects the theophoric naming pattern common in Israelite culture, attributing glory to God as father. The Benjamite genealogies preserve tribal identity during and after exile.

(1×) A Benjamite, son of Bela. 1 Chronicles 8:3 lists Abihud among the sons of Bela, who was Benjamin's firstborn. This genealogical notice preserves the internal structure of Benjamin's tribe, important for maintaining tribal identity and land claims after the exile. The name's meaning ('my father is majesty') reflects piety toward God. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Avihud | es: y-Abihud | fr: [ואביהוד] | de: [ואביהוד] 1Chr 8:3

אֲבִיחַיִל H0032 N-proper-ms (6×)

Abihail; a proper name meaning 'my father is might,' borne by several men and women in the Hebrew Bible.

Abihail (avichayil) combines 'avi' ('my father') with 'chayil' ('strength, might'), yielding the theophoric meaning 'my father is might' or 'father of strength.' The name is borne by at least five distinct individuals: a Levite clan leader (Num 3:35), a Gadite (1 Chr 5:14), the father of Queen Esther (Esth 2:15, 9:29), the wife of Abishur (1 Chr 2:29), and a wife of Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:18). Spanish and French preserve recognizable variants—Abihail, Abijail, Abichail—while all point to the same compound name.

Abihail (6×) A personal name meaning 'my father is might,' applied to multiple individuals in Scripture: a Merarite Levite (Num 3:35), a Gadite ancestor (1 Chr 5:14), Esther's father (Esth 2:15, 9:29), the wife of Abishur from Judah's line (1 Chr 2:29), and a wife of King Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:18). The variant spellings in translations (Spanish Abihail/Abijail, French Abichail/Abihail) reflect the alternating Hebrew forms avichayil and avihayil found in the Masoretic Text. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Abihail, Avichayil | es: Abihail, Abihayil, Abijail | fr: Abichaïl, Abihail | de: Abihail, [אביחיל], [אביחיל] Num 3:35; 1Chr 2:29; 1Chr 5:14; 2Chr 11:18; Esth 2:15

אֲבִי הָעֶזְרִי H0033 N-proper-ms (3×)

Abiezrite; gentilic adjective meaning 'belonging to the clan of Abiezer'

This Hebrew gentilic adjective identifies someone as belonging to the clan of Abiezer, a family within the tribe of Manasseh. All three occurrences relate to Gideon, the judge who delivered Israel from Midianite oppression. Judges 6:11 introduces 'Joash the Abiezrite,' Gideon's father. Judges 6:24 notes that Gideon built an altar at Ophrah, which 'belongs to Joash the Abiezrite.' Judges 8:32 records Gideon's burial 'in the tomb of Joash his father, in Ophrah of the Abiezrites.' The clan name connects to Abiezer, listed in Numbers 26:30 as a son (clan) of Gilead from Manasseh's lineage.

(3×) Translations render this as an ethnic or clan designation: English 'the Abiezrite,' Spanish 'abiezerita, avi-ha-ezri,' French 'le Abiezrite,' German 'der Abiezrite.' All three occurrences in Judges identify Gideon's family as Abiezrite, establishing his tribal and clan credentials within Manasseh. The designation grounds Gideon's story in Israel's tribal structure—he is not a generic hero but a man from a specific family and region, whom God raises up to deliver his people from oppression. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Abiezrite | es: abiezerita, avi-ha-ezri, de-avi-ha-ezri | fr: le-Abiezrite | de: der-Abiezrite Judg 6:11; Judg 6:24; Judg 8:32

אֶבְיוֹן H0034 Adj-msc / 2ms (61×)

evyon – needy, poor, destitute; one who is materially impoverished and vulnerable

The adjective evyon describes a person in dire material want – the genuinely destitute and vulnerable, not merely the modest or humble. It is the strongest of the Hebrew poverty vocabulary, often paired with ani ('afflicted/poor') and dal ('weak/lowly') to form a prophetic triad denouncing social oppression. Amos thunders against those who 'sell the needy (evyon) for a pair of sandals' (Amos 2:6; 8:6), and the Deuteronomic legislation repeatedly insists on generosity: 'you shall not harden your heart or shut your hand against your poor (evyon) brother' (Deut 15:7). The Psalms celebrate God as the defender of the evyon (Ps 37:14; 109:31). Spanish necesitado/pobre, French necessiteux/indigent, and German Armer converge on this core sense of economic destitution.

needy, poor, destitute (61×) A person in a state of severe material poverty and social vulnerability, used both adjectivally and substantively for the destitute who are subject to exploitation and who depend upon divine and communal protection. Prophetic texts like Amos 2:6 and 8:6 pair evyon with dal ('weak') to condemn economic oppression, while Deuteronomy 15:7-11 legislates open-handed provision for the evyon. Multilingual glosses – Spanish necesitado, French necessiteux, German Armer – uniformly point to material neediness across all 61 occurrences. POVERTY AND WEAKNESS
en: and-needy, and-the-needy, the-needy | es: al-menesteroso, al-necesitado, al-pobre | fr: et-Abimélek, et-indigent, et-nécessiteux | de: Armer, [ואביון], der-Arme Deut 15:4; Deut 15:7; Deut 15:9; Deut 15:11

אֲבִיוֹנָה H0035 Art / N-fs (1×)

caper berry, fruit used as aphrodisiac or stimulant

The caper berry, a small fruit from the caper plant (Capparis spinosa), believed to stimulate appetite or desire. Ecclesiastes 12:5 uses this image in a poetic description of old age: 'the almond tree blossoms, the grasshopper drags itself along, and the caper berry fails.' If the caper was valued as a stimulant or aphrodisiac, its failure symbolizes the loss of vitality and desire in advanced age, completing the chapter's vivid allegory of bodily decline.

(1×) The caper berry or caper-bud, possibly valued as an appetite or desire stimulant. In Ecclesiastes 12:5, 'the caper berry fails' within an extended metaphor of aging and death. Its failure likely represents the loss of appetite, vitality, or sexual desire—another sign that the body's systems are shutting down before death. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-caper-berry | es: la-alcaparra | fr: le-האביונה | de: [האביונה] Eccl 12:5

אֲבִיטוּב H0036 N-proper-ms (1×)

Abitub, Benjamite, son of Shaharaim

A personal name meaning 'my father is goodness,' belonging to a Benjamite listed in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles. The name appears in 1 Chronicles 8:11 as one of the sons of Shaharaim by his wife Hushim. Like many names in the Chronicler's Benjamite genealogy, it combines a familial term ('father') with a divine attribute ('goodness'), expressing faith in God's benevolent character.

(1×) A Benjamite, son of Shaharaim. 1 Chronicles 8:11 names Abitub among Shaharaim's children born in Moab, part of the detailed Benjamite genealogies that trace family lines through exile and return. The name ('my father is goodness') testifies to parental faith in God's good character despite uncertain circumstances. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Avituv | es: Abitub | fr: [אביטוב] | de: [אביטוב] 1Chr 8:11

אֲבִיטָל H0037 N-proper-fs (2×)

Abital (personal name: 'my father is dew')

One of David's wives, mentioned in the lists of his sons born in Hebron (2 Samuel 3:4, 1 Chronicles 3:3). The name means 'my father is dew,' evoking the life-giving moisture that descends at night in the Middle East. Like many of David's wives, she's named primarily in connection with her son Shephatiah, the fifth child born to David during his reign in Hebron.

(2×) Abital appears exclusively in genealogical records of David's household, always linked to her son Shephatiah. The name's poetic imagery—comparing the father (or Father) to dew—reflects the preciousness of water in an arid climate. Dew represented divine blessing, quiet providence, and life-sustaining grace. Though Scripture provides no narrative about Abital herself, her name joins the roster of David's Hebron wives whose children would shape Judah's royal succession. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Avital, to-Avital | es: Avital, de-Abital | fr: Avital, [לאביטל] | de: Avital, [לאביטל] 2Sam 3:4; 1Chr 3:3

אֲבִיָּהוּ H0038 N-proper-ms (5×)

Abijam — king of Judah, son and successor of Rehoboam, also spelled Abijah

Aviyam is the form used in 1 Kings for the king of Judah who succeeded Rehoboam and reigned briefly (ca. 913-911 BC). The same king is called Aviyyahu in Chronicles and Aviyyah elsewhere, reflecting variant spellings of a name meaning 'Yah(u) is my father.' His five occurrences in 1 Kings (14:31; 15:1, 7, 7, 8) frame a reign described as continuing the sins of his father. The Greek Septuagint renders it Abiou or Abia, and the multilingual glosses — English 'Aviyam,' Spanish 'Aviyam' — consistently transliterate this specific royal figure.

(5×) The proper name Aviyam, designating the king of Judah who succeeded Rehoboam and preceded Asa. This spelling appears exclusively in 1 Kings (14:31; 15:1, 7, 8), while the parallel Chronicles account uses the longer forms Aviyyahu and Aviyyah. The Septuagint renders the name as Abiou, and all five occurrences in this lemma's scope refer to this single Davidic monarch, whose brief reign is summarized in the Deuteronomistic framework of Kings. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Aviyam | es: Aviyam | fr: Aviyam | de: Aviyam 1Kgs 14:31; 1Kgs 15:1; 1Kgs 15:7; 1Kgs 15:8

אֲבִימָאֵל H0039 N-proper-ms (2×)

Abimael (personal name: 'a father is El/God')

A son of Joktan in the Table of Nations (Genesis 10:28, 1 Chronicles 1:22), representing one of the southern Arabian tribal groups descended from Shem. The name means 'my father is El' or 'God is father,' a theophoric name invoking the deity El. South Arabian inscriptions confirm similar naming patterns, including names like 'Abmi-Attar' (my father is Attar), showing these communities honored their gods through personal names.

(2×) Located in the genealogy of Joktan (ancestor of southern Arabian tribes), Abimael reflects ancient Semitic theophoric naming practices. Sabaean epigraphy preserves comparable constructions pairing 'ab' (father) with divine names. The choice of 'El' as the divine element suggests early monotheistic or henotheistic worship patterns in pre-Islamic Arabia. Genesis and Chronicles preserve this name as one link in the chain connecting Noah's son Shem to the peoples inhabiting the Arabian Peninsula. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abimael, Avimael | es: Abimael, Avimael | fr: Abimael, [אבימאל] | de: Abimael, [אבימאל] Gen 10:28; 1Chr 1:22

אֲבִימֶלֶךְ H0040 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (67×)

Abimelech – 'my father is king,' a proper name borne by Philistine kings, Gideon's son, and a priest

Abimelech (avimelekh, 'my father is king') is a theophoric proper name shared by several Old Testament figures. The most prominent are the Philistine king of Gerar who interacts with both Abraham (Gen 20-21) and Isaac (Gen 26), and the ambitious son of Gideon who massacred his seventy brothers to seize power at Shechem (Judg 9). A third bearer appears in the psalm superscription of Psalm 34:1, likely a throne-name substituted for Achish the Philistine. The name's structure – 'my father is king' – may echo a dynastic title rather than a personal name in the Gerar narratives, much as 'Pharaoh' functioned in Egypt. Cross-lingual renderings are almost perfectly uniform: Spanish Avimelekh, French Abimelech, German Abimelech.

Abimelech (proper name) (67×) The proper name Abimelech, borne by at least three distinct figures: the Philistine king of Gerar in the Abraham and Isaac narratives (Gen 20-21, 26), the ruthless son of Gideon who made himself king of Shechem before his ignominious death by a millstone (Judg 9), and a priestly figure in 1 Chr 18:16 (likely a scribal variant of Ahimelech). Spanish Avimelekh, French and German Abimelech all preserve the name unchanged, confirming its status as a non-translatable proper noun across all 67 occurrences. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abimelech | es: Avimelekh | fr: Abimelech | de: Abimelech, Abimelechs Gen 20:2; Gen 20:3; Gen 20:8; Gen 20:9; Gen 20:10

אֲבִינָדָב H0041 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (12×)

Abinadab – a proper name borne by several OT figures, including the man who housed the ark at Kiriath-jearim

Abinadab (Hebrew אֲבִינָדָב, 'my father is noble/generous') is a proper masculine name borne by at least three distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible: (1) a man of Kiriath-jearim in whose house the ark of the covenant was kept for twenty years after its return from Philistia (1 Sam 7:1; 2 Sam 6:3-4); (2) the second son of Jesse and elder brother of David, present when Samuel came to anoint a new king (1 Sam 16:8; 17:13); and (3) a son of King Saul who fell with him at the battle of Mount Gilboa (1 Sam 31:2; 1 Chr 8:33; 9:39; 10:2). All twelve occurrences carry the same lexical form with only syntactic variation.

Abinadab (proper name) (12×) The proper name Abinadab, borne by multiple OT figures: the keeper of the ark at Kiriath-jearim (1 Sam 7:1; 2 Sam 6:3), a son of Jesse and brother of David (1 Sam 16:8; 17:13), and a son of Saul who fell at Gilboa (1 Sam 31:2; 1 Chr 10:2). Spanish Abinadab, French Abinadab, and German Abinadab preserve the name uniformly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Abinadab, Avinadav, and-Avinadav | es: Abinadab, Avinadav, y-Abinadab | fr: Abinadab, Avinadav, et-Abinadab | de: Abinadab, Avinadav, [אבינדב] 1Sam 7:1; 1Sam 16:8; 1Sam 17:13; 1Sam 31:2; 2Sam 6:3

אֲבִינֹעַם H0042 N-proper-ms (4×)

Abinoam, a personal name meaning 'my father is delight'; father of the judge Barak.
A Hebrew personal name composed of 'av' (father) and 'no'am' (delight, pleasantness), yielding the theophoric meaning 'my father is delight' or 'the [divine] Father is gracious.' Abinoam is known solely as the father of Barak, the military commander whom Deborah the prophetess summoned to lead Israel against Sisera's Canaanite forces. The name appears four times in Judges 4-5, always in the patronymic phrase 'Barak son of Abinoam,' anchoring Barak's identity in his family lineage.

(4×) A proper masculine name identifying the father of Barak, the Israelite commander in the war against Sisera. All four occurrences appear in Judges 4-5: Judg 4:6 and 4:12 in the prose narrative, and Judg 5:1 and 5:12 in the Song of Deborah. The name is consistently transliterated across languages — Spanish, French, German, and English all render it 'Avinoam' or 'Abinoam' — preserving its Hebrew etymological meaning 'my father is delight.' The patronymic formula 'Barak ben Abinoam' serves to distinguish this Barak from other biblical figures. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Avinoam | es: Avinoam | fr: Avinoam | de: Avinoam Judg 4:6; Judg 4:12; Judg 5:1; Judg 5:12

אֲבִיאָסָף H0043 N-proper-ms (3×)

Ebiasaf (Abiasaph); personal name meaning 'my father has gathered' or 'father has added'
This Hebrew proper name means 'my father has gathered' or 'the father has added,' a theophoric name expressing gratitude or hope. Ebiasaf (or Abiasaph, variant spelling) was a descendant of Korah, a Levitical family line. The name appears in 1 Chronicles 6:23, 37 and 9:19, tracing Levitical genealogies. Exodus 6:24 mentions him as a son of Korah. Despite the rebellion of Korah (Numbers 16), his descendants survived and became gatekeepers and musicians in Israel's worship. The preservation of Korah's line testifies to God's mercy—the sons were not destroyed with their rebellious ancestor but served the sanctuary for generations.

(3×) The name shows variation in translation: English 'Evyasaf,' Spanish 'Ebiasaf, Ebyasaf,' French and German preserve the Hebrew '[אביסף], [ואביסף].' 1 Chronicles 6:23 lists Ebiasaf in the Kohathite Levitical line. 1 Chronicles 6:37 traces the ancestry of Heman the singer back through Ebiasaf. 1 Chronicles 9:19 identifies Levitical gatekeepers as sons of Korah, descendants of Ebiasaf. The family's faithfulness in temple service contrasts with their ancestor Korah's rebellion, showing redemption across generations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Evyasaf, and-Evyasaf | es: Ebiasaf, Ebyasaf, y-Ebyasaf | fr: [אביסף], [ואביסף] | de: [אביסף], [ואביסף] 1Chr 6:23; 1Chr 6:37; 1Chr 9:19

אֲבִיעֶזֶר H0044 N-proper-ms (7×)

Abiezer (lit. 'my father is help'); a personal name borne by a Manassite clan ancestor and a Benjamite warrior.
The name Aviezer or Abiezer means 'my father is help,' combining ʾāb ('father') and ʿēzer ('help'). It identifies two distinct figures in the Old Testament: first, the Manassite clan ancestor whose descendants include Gideon (Judg 6:34; 8:2; Josh 17:2), and second, a Benjamite warrior among David's mighty men (2 Sam 23:27; 1 Chr 11:28; 27:12). The clan of Abiezer plays a prominent role in the Gideon narrative, where 'the Spirit of the LORD clothed Gideon, and he blew the trumpet, and the Abiezrites were called to follow him.'

Aviezer (7×) Abiezer — a personal and clan name meaning 'my father is help.' It refers to (a) the ancestor of a Manassite clan allotted territory in the land (Josh 17:2), whose most famous descendant is Gideon (Judg 6:34, 'the Spirit clothed Gideon and the Abiezrites rallied'; Judg 8:2), and (b) a Benjamite warrior in David's elite guard (2 Sam 23:27; 1 Chr 11:28; 27:12). Spanish and French both transliterate the name as Abiezer, preserving its theophoric etymology. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Abiezer, Aviezer | es: Abiezer, Aviezer | fr: Abiezer, Aviezer, [אביעזר] | de: Abiezer, Aviezer, [אביעזר] Josh 17:2; Judg 6:34; Judg 8:2; 2Sam 23:27; 1Chr 7:18

אֲבִי־עַלְבוֹן H0045 N-proper-ms (2×)

Abi-albon (personal name, possibly 'father of strength')
One of David's elite warriors, listed among 'the thirty' mighty men (2 Samuel 23:31). The name appears with textual variation: 2 Samuel calls him 'Abi-albon' while the parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:32 reads 'Abiel,' which the Septuagint also supports. Scholars debate whether 'albon' is a place name or a corruption. Either way, this warrior represents the Arabathite clan and was counted among David's most trusted fighters.

(2×) The name's manuscript history reveals typical challenges in ancient textual transmission—2 Samuel preserves 'Abi-albon' while Chronicles has 'Abiel,' with ancient versions divided. Some scholars propose reading 'Abi-baal' (father is Baal) or see 'albon' as a geographic designation. Despite uncertainty about the exact form, the individual is securely identified as an Arabathite warrior who earned a place among David's champions. His inclusion testifies to David's ability to draw loyal fighters from diverse regional backgrounds. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Abi-, albon | es: Avi-, alvon | fr: Abi-, albon | de: Abi-, albon 2Sam 23:31

אֲבִיר H0046 N-msc (6×)

Mighty One; a poetic divine epithet for God, always in construct ('Mighty One of Jacob/Israel'), expressing sovereign power.
Avir is a majestic, archaic epithet for God found exclusively in poetic and prophetic texts. It always appears in the construct state —'Mighty One of Jacob' or 'Mighty One of Israel'—and never as a standalone noun for God. Jacob's blessing in Genesis 49:24 first introduces it: the arms of Joseph's hands were made strong 'by the hands of the Mighty One of Jacob.' Isaiah uses it both in judgment (1:24, 'the Mighty One of Israel') and in promise (49:26, 60:16). The translations reveal the semantic weight: Spanish Fuerte/Poderoso, French Puissant, German Starker—all strong, authoritative terms reserved for divine power.

Mighty One (divine epithet) (6×) A divine epithet meaning 'Mighty One,' used exclusively in construct phrases ('Mighty One of Jacob,' 'Mighty One of Israel') to express God's sovereign power and protective strength. First appearing in Jacob's poetic blessing (Gen 49:24), it recurs in the Psalms (132:2, 5) and Isaiah (1:24; 49:26; 60:16), always in elevated, poetic register. The multilingual evidence (Spanish Fuerte/Poderoso, French Puissant, German Starker) consistently selects terms denoting supreme strength, confirming this as a single, well-defined divine title. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Mighty-One-of, for-the-Mighty-One-of, to-the-Mighty-One-of | es: Fuerte-de, Poderoso-de, al-Poderoso-de | fr: Puissant-Un-de, fort, à-puissant | de: Starker, des-Starken, für-der-Mighty-One-of Gen 49:24; Ps 132:2; Ps 132:5; Isa 1:24; Isa 49:26

אַבִּיר H0047 Adj-mpc / 2ms (17×)

Mighty, powerful; used of warriors, strong animals (bulls, stallions), the obstinate-hearted, or a chief/leader Rooted in the idea of raw strength and force, this adjective appears almost exclusively in poetry and always functions as a substantive — 'a mighty one.' It can describe human warriors whom God crushes (Job 34:20), powerful bulls like those of Bashan (Ps 22:13), or swift stallions thundering into battle (Jer 8:16). In Isaiah 46:12 it takes on a moral edge, labeling the 'stout-hearted' who stubbornly resist God's purposes. The Spanish 'poderosos' and 'corceles' neatly capture the split between human and animal referents that English sometimes blurs.

1. mighty one, warrior (8×) Denotes a mighty person, warrior, or heavenly being — someone possessing extraordinary power or valor. In Psalm 78:25 it refers to angels ('bread of the mighty ones'), while in Job 24:22 and Jeremiah 46:15 it describes violent oppressors or powerful fighters whom God brings low. The Spanish 'poderosos' and French 'puissant' converge on the idea of raw might wielded by a personal agent. Used substantively in construct with possessive suffixes (Judg 5:22; Ps 22:12–13). POWER AND ABILITY
en: his-mighty-ones, like-mighty-one, mighty-ones | es: a-los-poderosos, como-valiente, fuertes-de | fr: puissant, son-puissant-les, אביר | de: [אביר], [אבירי], [אבירך] Judg 5:22; Job 24:22; Job 34:20; Ps 22:12; Ps 78:25

2. mighty bull or stallion (6×) A strong, vigorous animal — typically a bull or a stallion. The 'bulls of Bashan' (Ps 22:13) are fierce enemies pictured as powerful beasts; in Psalm 50:13 God dismisses the flesh of 'mighty ones' (bulls) as unnecessary sacrifice. Spanish distinguishes cleanly: 'bueyes/toros' for bovines versus 'corceles' for war-horses (Jer 8:16; 47:3). Isaiah 34:7 uses it of wild oxen in Edom's judgment. The animal sense extends the root metaphor of brute physical power into the non-human realm. POWER AND ABILITY
en: bulls, his-stallions, like-stallions | es: bueyes, como-corceles, sus-corceles | fr: puissant | de: Stiere, [אבירין], [אבירים] Ps 50:13; Ps 68:30; Isa 34:7; Jer 8:16; Jer 47:3

3. stout-hearted, obstinate (2×) In the fixed phrase 'abbire lev' (mighty of heart), the word shifts from physical power to moral obstinacy — those who are defiant and unyielding before God. Isaiah 46:12 addresses the 'stout-hearted who are far from righteousness,' and Psalm 76:6 describes warriors so stubborn that their courage becomes their undoing. Spanish 'valientes de corazón' and English 'stouthearted' both capture this negative connotation of hardened resistance rather than admirable bravery. POWER AND ABILITY
en: mighty-ones-of, the-stouthearted | es: fuertes-de, valientes-de | fr: puissant | de: [אבירי], der-stouthearted Ps 76:5; Isa 46:12

4. chief, leader (1×) A chief or principal person, emphasizing rank and social authority rather than physical strength. This rare usage appears in 1 Samuel 21:8, where Doeg the Edomite is described as the 'chief' of Saul's shepherds. The multilingual evidence (English, Spanish, French all rendering 'chief/jefe') confirms this is a distinct administrative sense, though textual emendations have been proposed (cf. BDB's note on alternative readings). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: chief | es: jefe-de | fr: chief | de: chief 1Sam 21:8

אֲבִירָם H0048 N-proper-ms (11×)

Abiram — a Hebrew proper name meaning 'my father is exalted,' borne by the Reubenite rebel and a son of Hiel

The proper name אֲבִירָם (Abiram), meaning 'my father is exalted' (or 'the Exalted One is my father'), identifies two distinct figures in the Old Testament. The primary referent is the Reubenite son of Eliab who, together with Dathan and under Korah's leadership, challenged the authority of Moses and Aaron. The earth opened and swallowed them alive as divine judgment (Num 16:1-33), an event recalled as a warning in Deuteronomy 11:6 and Psalm 106:17. The second Abiram is the youngest son of Hiel the Bethelite, who died when his father rebuilt Jericho, fulfilling Joshua's curse (1 Kgs 16:34). Spanish 'Abiram' and French 'Abiram' transliterate directly from the Hebrew.

Abiram (proper name) (11×) Abiram son of Eliab, a Reubenite who joined Dathan and Korah in challenging Moses and Aaron's authority. God judged the rebellion when the ground swallowed the conspirators alive (Num 16:1-27). The event is memorialized as a paradigm of divine judgment (Num 26:9; Deut 11:6; Ps 106:17). Spanish 'Abiram' and Arabic أَبِيرَام both transliterate directly. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Aviram, and-Abiram, and-Aviram | es: Abiram, con-Aviram, y-Abiram | fr: Abiram, et-Abiram, et-Aviram | de: Aviram, bei-Aviram, und-Abiram Num 16:1; Num 16:12; Num 16:24; Num 16:25; Num 16:27

אֲבִישַׁג H0049 N-proper-fs (5×)

Abishag — the young Shunammite woman who attended King David in his old age

Avishag appears in the narrative of David's final days and the early Solomonic succession (1 Kgs 1-2). A beautiful young Shunammite brought to warm the aging king, she became a pivotal figure when Adonijah's request to marry her was interpreted by Solomon as a veiled claim to the throne (1 Kgs 2:17-22). Her name, perhaps meaning 'my father wanders,' appears five times. The multilingual glosses — English 'Abishag,' Spanish 'Abishag,' French 'Abishag' — show consistent transliteration, with only the conjunctive prefix ('and-Abishag') varying across traditions.

(5×) The proper name Avishag, identifying the young Shunammite woman who served as attendant to the aging King David (1 Kgs 1:3, 15). Her role in the succession narrative is politically charged: Adonijah's request to marry her after David's death (1 Kgs 2:17, 21) triggered Solomon's order for his execution (1 Kgs 2:22). All five occurrences refer to this single individual, with variant forms reflecting only the conjunctive waw prefix. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Abishag, and-Abishag | es: Abishag, y-Abishag | fr: Abishag, et-Abishag | de: Abishag, und-Abishag 1Kgs 1:3; 1Kgs 1:15; 1Kgs 2:17; 1Kgs 2:21; 1Kgs 2:22

אֲבִישׁוּעַ H0050 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Abishua — a name borne by a descendant of Aaron and a Benjaminite, meaning 'my father is rescue'

Avishua is a proper name appearing five times in the Hebrew Bible, meaning 'my father is rescue' or possibly 'my father is opulence.' It designates two individuals: a grandson of Phinehas in the Aaronic priestly line (1 Chr 6:4-5, 50; Ezra 7:5), and a Benjaminite son of Bela (1 Chr 8:4). The priestly genealogy is the primary context, tracing the high-priestly succession from Aaron through Eleazar, Phinehas, and Abishua. The French and German glosses preserve the Hebrew form untranslated, while English and Spanish transliterate it directly.

(5×) The proper name Avishua, applied to two Old Testament figures: primarily the son of Phinehas and great-grandson of Aaron in the high-priestly lineage (1 Chr 6:4-5, 50; Ezra 7:5), and also a Benjaminite son of Bela (1 Chr 8:4). The name combines av ('father') with shua ('rescue, wealth'). The Septuagint renders it Abessouai, and all five occurrences appear in genealogical registers, whether priestly or tribal. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Avishua, and-Avishua | es: Abisua, Avishua, Y-Abisua | fr: [אבישוע], [ואבישוע] | de: [אבישוע], [ואבישוע] 1Chr 6:4; 1Chr 6:5; 1Chr 6:50; 1Chr 8:4; Ezra 7:5

אֲבִישׁוּר H0051 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Abishur (personal name: 'my father is a wall')

A descendant of Judah through Jerahmeel, mentioned in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles 2:28-29. The name means 'my father is a wall,' suggesting strength, protection, and security. Sabaean inscriptions preserve the same name (אבשור), and Assyrian records include similar formations, confirming this was an established name in the ancient Near East. Abishur married Abihail and fathered Ahban and Molid.

(2×) Appearing only in Jerahmeelite genealogy, Abishur's name invokes the protective imagery of a wall—a father who provides security and defense. Ancient Near Eastern parallels (Sabaean אבשור, Assyrian Abudûru) demonstrate this name transcended Israelite borders. The metaphor of a wall for fatherhood or deity appears elsewhere in Scripture (God as fortress, strong tower). Chronicles preserves this name to trace the Judahite clans that settled in the Negev and Transjordan regions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Avishur, and-Avishur | es: Abisur, y-Abisur | fr: [אבישור], [ואבישור] | de: [אבישור], [ואבישור] 1Chr 2:28; 1Chr 2:29

אֲבִישַׁי H0052 N-proper-ms (25×)

Abishai; David's nephew and mighty warrior, son of Zeruiah and brother of Joab, meaning 'my father is a gift'

Abishai (אֲבִישָׁי) was the son of Zeruiah — David's sister — and brother of Joab and Asahel, making him David's nephew and one of his most loyal warriors. He first appears volunteering to accompany David into Saul's camp by night (1 Sam 26:6–9), where he urges David to kill the sleeping king — a request David refuses. Throughout the narratives of 2 Samuel he fights alongside Joab, commands troops, and repeatedly demonstrates fierce, sometimes reckless, loyalty. The name likely means 'my father is a gift' or 'father of Jesse,' and the LXX renders it Abessa/Abessai.

Abishai (proper name) (25×) The proper name Abishai (אֲבִישָׁי / אֲבִשָׁי), identifying David's nephew through Zeruiah, brother of Joab and Asahel, and one of the 'Three' or 'Thirty' mighty warriors. He first appears in 1 Sam 26:6 entering Saul's camp with David at night. Spanish 'Abisai,' French 'Abischaï,' and German 'Abischai' all transliterate the same figure. The alternate spelling אֲבִשַׁי in Chronicles reflects a contracted form of the same name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abishai, Avishai, and-Abishai | es: Abisai, Abishai, Avishai | fr: Abischaï, Avishai, et-Abischaï | de: Abishai, Avishai, und-Abishai 1Sam 26:6; 1Sam 26:7; 1Sam 26:8; 1Sam 26:9

אַבִישָׁלוֹם H0053 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (111×)

Absalom — personal name meaning 'my father is peace'; David's third son who led a famous rebellion

Avishalom or Avshalom (Absalom) is a Hebrew personal name compounded from 'avi' (my father) and 'shalom' (peace). It primarily designates the third son of King David, whose story of rebellion and tragic death dominates 2 Samuel 13–18 and stands as one of Scripture's most poignant narratives. A secondary figure by this name appears as the father of Maacah in 1 Kings 15:2, 10. Spanish and French retain the familiar form 'Absalón' and 'Absalom,' while the Hebrew spelling alternates between אֲבִישָׁלוֹם and אַבְשָׁלוֹם across textual traditions.

Absalom (personal name) (111×) A proper masculine name meaning 'my father is peace,' primarily identifying David's third son whose rebellion and death are narrated across 2 Samuel 13–18 (over 90 occurrences). A secondary Absalom appears as Maacah's father (1 Kgs 15:2, 10). The name's ironic etymology — 'peace' — contrasts sharply with the strife that defines the character's story. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Absalom, Avshalom | es: Absalón, Avshalom | fr: Absalom | de: Absalom 2Sam 3:3; 2Sam 13:4; 2Sam 13:20; 2Sam 13:22

אֶבְיָתָר H0054 N-proper-ms (30×)

Abiathar; a priest, son of Ahimelech, who served David faithfully but was banished by Solomon.

Abiathar ('the Great One is father') was the sole survivor when Saul massacred the priests at Nob (1 Sam 22:20). He fled to David bearing the ephod, becoming David's priestly counselor through the years of exile and kingship (1 Sam 23:6, 30:7). Together with Zadok, he carried the ark during Absalom's rebellion (2 Sam 15:24-29). His story ends in tragedy: he backed Adonijah's claim to the throne, and Solomon banished him to Anathoth (1 Kgs 2:26-27), fulfilling the prophecy against the house of Eli. The name appears consistently across languages as a transliteration.

Abiathar (priest) (30×) The proper name Abiathar, designating the priest who escaped Saul's slaughter at Nob and became David's loyal priestly companion. He is associated with the ephod used for divine inquiry (1 Sam 23:6, 9; 30:7) and served alongside Zadok during David's reign (2 Sam 15:35, 20:25). His dismissal by Solomon (1 Kgs 2:26-27) marks the end of the Elide priestly line and the ascendancy of the Zadokite priesthood. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abiathar, Ebyatar, and-Abiathar | es: Abiatar, Ebyatar, y-Ebyatar | fr: Abiathar, Ebyatar, et-Abiathar | de: Abiathar, Ebyatar, und-Abiathar 1Sam 22:20; 1Sam 22:21; 1Sam 22:22; 1Sam 23:6; 1Sam 23:9

אָבַךְ H0055 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConsecImperf-3mp (1×)

roll up, coil, twist upward (of smoke)

To roll up, twist, or coil—particularly used of smoke rising and billowing. Isaiah 9:18 (Hebrew 9:17) employs this verb in describing divine judgment: 'Wickedness burns like a fire... it kindles the thickets of the forest, and they roll upward in a column of smoke.' The Hithpael form suggests reflexive or intensive action, picturing smoke spiraling upward as vegetation is consumed. The image conveys both the destructive power of judgment and its visible, ascending manifestation.

(1×) To roll up or spiral upward, especially of smoke. Isaiah 9:18 uses this verb to describe how forest fires from God's judgment send smoke 'rolling upward' in thick columns. The reflexive verb form intensifies the image of smoke twisting and billowing skyward, making divine wrath visible and unmistakable to all observers. RETURNING AND RESTORING en: and-they-roll-up | es: y-se-elevan | fr: [ויתאבכו] | de: [ויתאבכו] Isa 9:18

אָבַל H0056 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-fs (39×)

To mourn, grieve, or lament; used of people mourning the dead and figuratively of the land languishing

A verb of mourning that moves fluidly between human grief and cosmic sympathy. In the Hitpael, Jacob 'mourned' for Joseph (Gen 37:34) and David for Absalom (2 Sam 19:2) – the reflexive-intensive stem emphasizing visible, bodily expressions of sorrow such as tearing garments and fasting. In the Qal, the land itself mourns: gates languish (Isa 3:26), pastures wither (Amos 1:2), and the earth dries up under divine judgment (Hos 4:3; Jer 12:4). This personification of the land, where creation participates in Israel's grief, is distinctive in prophetic Hebrew. Spanish distinguishes 'hacer duelo' (to perform mourning) from 'enlutarse' (to be in mourning), mirroring the Hitpael/Qal contrast. The rare Hiphil in Lamentations 2:8 and Ezekiel 31:15 introduces a causative agent – God himself bringing mourning upon wall and nature.

1. to mourn, lament outwardly (Hitpael) (19×) Hitpael mourning: outward, demonstrative expressions of grief performed by a mourner. Jacob mourned many days for Joseph (Gen 37:34), Ezra mourned over the faithlessness of the exiles (Ezra 10:6), and Nehemiah sat down and wept and mourned for days (Neh 1:4). The reflexive-intensive stem signals visible actions – weeping, fasting, wearing sackcloth. Spanish 'hacer duelo/enlutarse' and the frequent pairing with verbs of weeping confirm the performative, ritual character of this mourning. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: and-I-mourned, and-he-mourned, and-mourned | es: Y-hizo-duelo, enlutate, estaba-de-duelo | fr: Abel, [ואתאבלה], [ויתאבל] | de: [ואתאבלה], [ויתאבל], [יתאבל] Gen 37:34; Exod 33:4; Num 14:39; 1Sam 6:19; 1Sam 15:35

2. to mourn, be in mourning (Qal) (18×) Qal mourning: an intransitive state of grief or languishing, applied to persons, the land, or elements of creation. Isaiah's gates 'mourn' (3:26), the land dries up and mourns (Isa 24:4; Hos 4:3; Joel 1:10), and fishermen lament (Isa 19:8). This usage bridges literal human grief and poetic personification, presenting creation as sharing in the covenant community's sorrow. The prophetic formula 'the land mourns' (Jer 4:28; 12:4; 23:10) becomes a signature of judgment oracles. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: It-mourns, Mourns, and-mourn | es: Llora, Se-enlutó, enlutaron | fr: Abel, deuil, et-Abel | de: [אבל], [אבלה], [אבלו] Job 14:22; Isa 3:26; Isa 19:8; Isa 24:4; Isa 24:7

3. to cause mourning (Hifil) (2×) Hiphil causative: to cause mourning or bring grief upon someone or something. In Lamentations 2:8, the LORD caused rampart and wall 'to mourn,' and in Ezekiel 31:15, God made the deep 'mourn' over the fall of Assyria's great cedar. Only two occurrences preserve this causative stem, but both are theologically weighty – God as the agent who imposes grief upon the created order. Spanish 'hice lamentar' and 'ha hecho lamentar' capture the causative force distinctly. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: I-caused-mourning, and-He-made-mourn | es: hice-lamentar, y-ha-hecho-lamentar | fr: Abel, et-être-en-deuil | de: [והאבלתי], [ויאבל] Lam 2:8; Ezek 31:15

אָבֵל H0057 Prep-k / Adj-msc (8×)

Mourning, grieving; an adjective describing one who laments, whether for the dead, for calamity, or for Zion.

A Hebrew adjective meaning 'mourning' or 'in a state of grief,' used both as a predicate and as a substantive ('a mourner'). Jacob declares he will go down to Sheol mourning for Joseph (Gen 37:35), Mordecai goes home mourning after Haman's promotion (Esth 6:12), and the psalmist walks about 'as one mourning for a friend' (Ps 35:14). Isaiah extends it to those who mourn for Zion (Isa 61:2–3), giving the word a prophetic-eschatological dimension. The Spanish 'los que lloran' (those who weep) and French 'en deuil' (in mourning) both capture the public, social character of this grief.

mourning, in a state of grief (8×) In a state of mourning or grief—used as an adjective or substantive for one who grieves over death, calamity, or national loss. Jacob mourns for Joseph, refusing consolation (Gen 37:35); the psalmist walks bowed down 'like one mourning for a friend' (Ps 35:14); Job sat as chief among mourners (Job 29:25). Isaiah's usage expands the scope to eschatological mourning for Zion (Isa 57:18; 61:2–3), where God promises comfort to 'the mourners of Zion.' The French gloss 'en deuil' emphasizes the formal, public nature of this grief, while the Lamentations usage (1:4) extends it even to personified roads and gates. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: and-to-his-mourners, for-mourners-of, like-mourning-for | es: a-los-que-lloran, a-los-que-lloran-de, como-quien-llora | fr: [אבל], comme-en-deuil, en-deuil | de: [אבל], [אבלות], [אבלים] Gen 37:35; Esth 6:12; Job 29:25; Ps 35:14; Isa 57:18

אָבֵל H0058

Abel, meadow; component in place names, possibly indicating fertile lowland

This geographical term appears in compound place names across ancient Israel and its neighbors, apparently denoting meadowland or fertile plains. Abel-beth-maacah in the far north sheltered Sheba during his rebellion and later surrendered his head to save the city. Abel-shittim in the Moabite plains witnessed Israel's sin with Moabite women. The various Abels—of the acacias, of the vineyards, of the dance—suggest productive agricultural regions. The term's connection to mourning is homophonic but distinct, though some place names may involve wordplay between the two meanings.

אָבֵל H0059 N-proper-fs (4×)

Abel, a place name meaning 'meadow' or 'stream'; refers to a fortified city in northern Israel, Abel Beth Maacah.

Not to be confused with the personal name Abel (Hevel) of Genesis 4, this is a geographic term meaning 'meadow' or 'water-meadow,' used as a place name for several locations in ancient Israel. The most prominent is Abel Beth Maacah, a fortified city in the far north where Joab besieged the rebel Sheba ben Bichri (2 Sam 20). A wise woman within the city negotiated its salvation by delivering Sheba's head. The site is identified with modern Tell Abil el-Qamh, northwest of Dan.

(4×) A proper place name designating a city in northern Israel, most fully known as Abel Beth Maacah. In 2 Sam 20:14-18, Joab pursues the rebel Sheba to this walled city, where a 'wise woman' famously intervenes to save her town by negotiating the rebel's execution. The 1 Sam 6:18 reference is textually uncertain — many scholars emend 'abel' (meadow) to 'even' (stone) based on context and versional evidence. Translations uniformly transliterate: English, Spanish, French, and German all render it 'Abel' or 'Avel,' preserving the Hebrew toponym while the underlying meaning 'meadow' hints at the fertile landscape of the upper Jordan valley. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Abel, in-Avel, to-Avel | es: Abel, a-Avel, en-Avel | fr: Abel, dans-Avel, à-Avel | de: Abel, in-Avel, zu-Avel 1Sam 6:18; 2Sam 20:14; 2Sam 20:15; 2Sam 20:18

אֵבֶל H0060 N-msc (24×)

mourning, lamentation — a period of formal grief for the dead or a communal expression of sorrow over calamity

Evel is a masculine noun denoting mourning in both its institutional and emotional dimensions — the formal period of grieving, the outward rites of lamentation, and the inner state of sorrow. Its 24 occurrences span patriarchal narrative, prophetic oracle, and wisdom literature. The great mourning for Jacob at the threshing floor of Atad was so intense that the Canaanites renamed the site Abel-mizraim, 'the mourning of Egypt' (Gen 50:10-11). The thirty-day mourning period for Moses at the plains of Moab established a pattern for national bereavement (Deut 34:8). In prophetic usage, evel frequently appears in reversal formulas: God will 'turn their mourning into joy' (Jer 31:13), festivals will become mourning (Amos 8:10), and ashes will be exchanged for a 'garment of praise instead of a spirit of mourning' (Isa 61:3). Lamentations summarizes the exile's desolation: 'our dancing has been turned to mourning' (Lam 5:15). Spanish 'duelo/luto,' French 'deuil,' and German 'Trauer' capture both the ritual period and the emotional state.

mourning, lamentation (24×) A period or expression of grief, encompassing both the formal rites and the emotional weight of bereavement. Applied to mourning for the dead — the seven-day mourning at Abel-mizraim for Jacob (Gen 50:10-11), the thirty-day lamentation for Moses (Deut 34:8), and Ezekiel's commanded suppression of mourning rites for his wife (Ezek 24:17). Also used for communal grief over national calamity: Esther's Jews donned mourning in response to Haman's decree (Est 4:3; 9:22), and Job's harp 'is turned to mourning' (Job 30:31). Prophetically prominent in reversal oracles — mourning turned to joy (Jer 31:13; Isa 60:20; 61:3), or joy turned to mourning (Amos 8:10; Lam 5:15). Spanish 'duelo/luto,' French 'deuil,' German 'Trauer.' LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: and-from-mourning, and-mourning, for-mourning | es: a-luto, duelo, duelo-de | fr: [אבל], [ומאבל], dans-deuil | de: [אבל], [ואבל], [ומאבל] Gen 27:41; Gen 50:10; Gen 50:11; Deut 34:8

אָבֵל H0061 Adv (11×)

Adverb: (older) indeed, truly, of a truth; (later) but, however, nevertheless

A small but significant Hebrew adverb whose force shifted over time. In the older narrative literature—Genesis through Kings—it carries an asseverative punch: 'Indeed, we are guilty concerning our brother' (Gen 42:21); 'Truly, king Solomon has been made king' (1 Kgs 1:43). By the post-exilic period it becomes a decided adversative: 'but' or 'however,' introducing a qualification or concession (2 Chr 19:3; Ezra 10:13; Dan 10:21). Arabic 'bal' shows a strikingly parallel semantic range, functioning as both emphatic affirmation and corrective adversative depending on context.

1. but, however, nevertheless (7×) Adversative conjunction meaning 'but,' 'however,' or 'nevertheless,' introducing contrast, qualification, or concession. This is the later Hebrew usage predominant in post-exilic texts. Jehoshaphat is told that despite his failing, 'nevertheless good things are found in you' (2 Chr 19:3). Ezra acknowledges the rain season but insists the people cannot stand outside (Ezra 10:13). Daniel 10:7, 21 and 2 Chronicles 1:4 and 33:17 likewise use it to mark a counterpoint. Spanish 'pero/sin embargo' and German 'aber' map directly onto this adversative function. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: but, however, nevertheless | es: Pero, Sin-embargo, ciertamente | fr: mais | de: [אבל], aber 1Kgs 1:43; 2Chr 1:4; 2Chr 19:3; 2Chr 33:17; Ezra 10:13

2. indeed, truly, of a truth (4×) Asseverative adverb meaning 'indeed,' 'truly,' or 'of a truth,' used to affirm emphatically. This is the older Hebrew usage found in the patriarchal and monarchic narratives. Joseph's brothers confess: 'Indeed, we are guilty concerning our brother' (Gen 42:21). God corrects Abraham: 'No, but Sarah your wife shall bear you a son' (Gen 17:19, where the asseveration shades into gentle correction). The woman of Tekoa affirms 'truly, I am a widow' (2 Sam 14:5). French 'en verite/en effet' and German 'furwahr/wahrhaftig' preserve the solemn, oath-like tone. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES

en: indeed, truly | es: Ciertamente, ciertamente, en-verdad | fr: en-effet, en-vérité | de: aber, fürwahr, wahrhaftig Gen 17:19; Gen 42:21; 2Sam 14:5; 2Kgs 4:14

אָבֵל H0062 N-proper-fs (2×)

Abel-beth-maacah (place name: 'meadow of the house of Maacah')
A fortified city in northern Israel, located near Dan and associated with the Maacathite region (1 Kings 15:20, 2 Kings 15:29). The name combines 'Abel' (meadow or grassy area) with 'Beth-maacah' (house of Maacah). Second Samuel 20 features this city prominently when Joab besieged it to capture Sheba; a wise woman negotiated and the city was spared. Later, the Assyrian king Tiglath-pileser III conquered it when he invaded northern Israel.

(2×) This northern city plays key roles in Israel's history: the site where Joab's siege ended through wise diplomacy (2 Sam 20:14-22) and later a target of Assyrian expansion. The geographic designation 'Abel' typically indicates fertile, well-watered land—appropriate for a settlement in the upper Jordan Valley. Modern scholarship identifies it with Abil el-Qamh, northwest of Dan. The compound name distinguishes it from other places called 'Abel,' specifying its connection to the Maacathite territory near Mount Hermon. MAACAH PERSONAL NAME
en: Avel-Beit-Ma'achah, Avel-Beth-Maakah | es: Abel-Bet-Maaca, Avel-Bet-Maacah | fr: Avel-Beth-Ma'achah, Avel-Beth-Maakah | de: Avel-Beit-Ma'achah, Avel-Beth-Maakah 1Kgs 15:20; 2Kgs 15:29

אָבֵל H0063 N-proper-fs (1×)

Abel-shittim, Israelite encampment in Moab
A place name meaning 'meadow of acacias,' designating Israel's final encampment before crossing the Jordan into Canaan. Numbers 33:49 locates the camp 'from Beth-jeshimoth as far as Abel-shittim in the plains of Moab.' This is the same location called simply Shittim elsewhere, where Israel committed idolatry with Moabite women and where Balaam's prophecies were delivered. The place represents both the threshold of promise and the site of serious moral failure.

(1×) A geographical location in the plains of Moab, Israel's last camp before entering Canaan. Numbers 33:49 identifies Abel-shittim as the extent of the Israelite encampment across from Jericho. Here, on the edge of promise, Israel faced final temptation (Numbers 25) before Joshua led them across the Jordan, making it a place of both anticipation and testing. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Abel-shittim | es: Abel-Sitim | fr: Abel-Shittim | de: Abel-shittim Num 33:49

אָבֵל H0064 N-proper-fs (1×)

Abel-keramim, site in Ammon
A place name meaning 'meadow of vineyards,' marking the extent of Jephthah's military campaign against the Ammonites. Judges 11:33 records that Jephthah 'struck them from Aroer to the neighborhood of Minnith, twenty cities, and as far as Abel-keramim, with a great blow.' The name suggests an area known for viticulture, and its mention defines the southern limit of Jephthah's devastating victory that subdued Ammon before Israel.

(1×) A location in Ammonite territory, the endpoint of Jephthah's campaign. Judges 11:33 names Abel-keramim ('meadow of vineyards') as the furthest extent of Jephthah's conquest, indicating a region cultivated for grapes. The geographical note emphasizes the thoroughness of Israel's victory and the wide swath of territory affected by the battle. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Abel-keramim | es: Abel-Queramim | fr: Abel-keramim | de: Abel-keramim Judg 11:33

אָבֵל H0065 Prep / N-proper-fs (3×)

Abel-meholah; place name meaning 'meadow of dancing' or 'meadow of the dance'
This Hebrew place name identifies a town in northern Israel, likely in the Jordan Valley. The name means 'meadow of dancing' or 'meadow of the dance.' Abel-meholah appears in Judges 7:22 as a landmark in the Midianites' flight from Gideon. In 1 Kings 4:12, it falls within Solomon's administrative district under Baana. Most significantly, 1 Kings 19:16 identifies Abel-meholah as the hometown of Elisha son of Shaphat, whom Elijah was commanded to anoint as his prophetic successor. The town's location in fertile Jordan Valley land suited both its name (meadow) and its prominence in Israel's administrative geography.

(3×) Translations consistently preserve the place name: English 'Abel-meholah, Abel-Meholah,' Spanish 'Abel-Mejolah, Avel-Mejolah,' French 'Abel-Meholah, Abel-meholah,' German similar forms. Judges 7:22 uses it as a geographical marker for the Midianite retreat. 1 Kings 4:12 places it within Solomon's district system. 1 Kings 19:16 identifies it as Elisha's home, giving the otherwise obscure town lasting biblical significance—it produced one of Israel's greatest prophets. The 'meadow' element suggests agricultural prosperity in the region. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Abel-Meholah, Abel-meholah, from-Avel-Meholah | es: Abel-Mejolah, Avel-Mejolah, de-Abel-Mejola | fr: Abel-Meholah, Abel-meholah, de-Avel-Meholah | de: Abel-Meholah, Abel-meholah, von-Avel-Meholah Judg 7:22; 1Kgs 4:12; 1Kgs 19:16

אָבֵל H0066 N-proper-fs (2×)

Abel-maim (place name: 'meadow of waters')
The Chronicler's name for the city called Abel-beth-maacah in Kings (2 Chronicles 16:4). The name means 'meadow of waters,' emphasizing the abundant water sources in the region. This variant designation refers to the same northern Israelite city that King Asa of Judah (allied with Ben-hadad of Aram) attacked during his conflict with Baasha of Israel. The difference in naming may reflect Chronicler's editorial preference or a local alternative designation.

(2×) Second Chronicles uses this name where 2 Kings has 'Abel-beth-maacah,' both referring to the same fortified city in northern Israel. The substitution of 'Maim' (waters) for 'Beth-maacah' might highlight the region's water resources—springs, streams, or marshlands—that made it valuable territory. The parallel accounts confirm this is the city attacked when Asa bribed Ben-hadad to break his treaty with Israel. The geographic markers (near Dan, in the northernmost territory) align perfectly across both accounts. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Abel, Maim | es: Avel, Mayim | fr: [אבל], [מים] | de: Wasser, [אבל] 2Chr 16:4

אָבֵל H0067 N-proper-fs (1×)

Abel-mizraim, site near Jordan where Jacob was mourned
A place name meaning 'meadow of Egypt' or 'mourning of Egypt,' located beyond the Jordan where Joseph and the Egyptians mourned Jacob. Genesis 50:11 recounts that when the Canaanites saw the mourning at the threshing floor of Atad, they named it Abel-mizraim, saying 'This is a grievous mourning by the Egyptians.' The etymology plays on the dual meaning of 'abel'—both 'meadow' and 'mourning'—creating a wordplay that commemorates the elaborate funeral rites.

(1×) The location where Jacob's funeral procession mourned for seven days, renamed 'mourning of Egypt.' Genesis 50:11 explains the Canaanite observers were so impressed by the Egyptian funeral rites that they named the place 'Abel-mizraim.' The name preserves the memory of extraordinary grief expressed by Joseph's Egyptian entourage for the Hebrew patriarch. EGYPT PLACE NAME
en: Abel-Mizraim | es: Avel-Mitsrayim | fr: Abel-Mizraim | de: Abel-Mizrajim Gen 50:11

אֶבֶן H0068 Conj-w / N-fp (273×)

Stone — rock as material or object for building, throwing, memorials; also a standard weight, and figuratively a title of God
One of the most concrete and versatile nouns in biblical Hebrew, 'even covers everything from a rough field stone to a hewn building block to a precious gem. Jacob uses a stone as a pillow and then sets it up as a sacred pillar (Gen 28:11, 18); Israel's enemies sink 'like a stone' in the sea (Exod 15:5); and the law demands honest 'stones' — that is, weights — in the marketplace (Deut 25:13). The word even acquires theological force in Genesis 49:24, where God is called 'the Stone of Israel,' a metaphor that resonates across the multilingual tradition from Arabic hajar to German der Fels.

1. stone, rock (material/object) (267×) A piece of rock as a physical object — used for building walls and altars, throwing as a weapon, setting up as a memorial pillar, paving roads, or serving as raw material. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (267x) covers singular and plural, construct and absolute, with prepositions and suffixes. Jacob's pillow-stone at Bethel (Gen 28:11), the tablets of stone at Sinai (Exod 24:12), and the stones of a sling (1 Sam 17:40) all fall here. Every major target language uses its basic word for rock: Spanish piedra, French pierre, Arabic hajar, Korean dol. STONE AND ROCK

en: a-stone, stone, with-stone | es: con-piedra, piedra, una-piedra | fr: avec-pierre, pierre, une-pierre | de: Stein, aus-Stein, ein-Stein Gen 31:45; Gen 35:14; Exod 15:5; Exod 17:12; Exod 28:11

2. weight, balance-stone (4×) A stone used as a standard weight for measuring in trade, the 'balance-stone' (even mishqal). Leviticus 19:36 commands 'just balances, just weights,' and Deuteronomy 25:13-15 forbids having two different 'stones' in one's bag — a large and a small. The metonymic leap from physical stone to unit of measurement is natural; ancient weights were literally carved stones. French poids and English 'weight' translate the function rather than the material. STONE AND ROCK

en: and-weight, weight, weights-of- | es: Piedra, piedra, piedras-de | fr: et-poids, poids, weights-de- | de: und-weight, weight, weights-von- Lev 19:36; Deut 25:13; Deut 25:15

3. (1×) Stone as a precious or costly material in the context of honoring or adorning, as in Daniel 11:38 where a foreign god is honored 'with stone' — that is, with precious stones and costly gifts. The prepositional phrase 'and with stone' (u-ve-'even) here denotes gem-quality material rather than common rock, a usage supported by the parallel with gold and silver in the same verse. STONE AND ROCK

en: and-with-stone | es: y-con-piedra | fr: et-pierre | de: und-in-Stein Dan 11:38

4. (1×) A figurative or titular use: 'the Stone of Israel' (even yisra'el) in Genesis 49:24, a divine epithet for God as the immovable foundation and protector of his people. This metaphorical extension — from physical rock to theological title — is echoed in later Scripture (Isa 28:16, Ps 118:22). German der Fels ('the Rock') and Spanish Piedra-de capture the metaphorical dignity. The sense stands apart from literal stone by functioning as a proper epithet within Jacob's blessing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Stone-of | es: Piedra-de | fr: Pierre-de | de: der-Fels Gen 49:24

אֶבֶן H0069 N-fs (8×)

Stone (Aramaic); a building stone or supernatural stone, used in Ezra for temple construction and in Daniel for the messianic rock.

An Aramaic feminine noun meaning 'stone,' appearing in two dramatic biblical contexts. In Ezra, the Persian decree specifies 'great stones' for rebuilding the Jerusalem temple (Ezra 5:8; 6:4), grounding the word in the practical world of construction. In Daniel, the word takes on cosmic significance: a stone cut without hands strikes the statue and becomes a great mountain filling the earth (Dan 2:34–35, 45). The multilingual glosses—Spanish 'piedra,' French 'pierre,' German 'Stein'—are all straightforward, reflecting the word's concrete simplicity even as its theological freight is enormous.

stone (Aramaic) (8×) Stone, as an Aramaic noun designating either a physical building material or a visionary object of divine origin. In Ezra 5:8 and 6:4, it refers to the large hewn stones used in reconstructing the Jerusalem temple under Persian authorization —three courses of stone, one of timber. In Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan 2:34–35, 45), the same word denotes the supernatural stone 'cut without hands' that shatters the statue of successive empires and grows into a mountain filling the earth. The Spanish 'piedra' and German 'Stein' are uniform across all occurrences, reflecting the word's semantic simplicity even as context ranges from masonry to eschatology. STONE AND ROCK

en: and-stone, and-the-stone, stone | es: piedra, una-piedra, y-la-piedra | fr: Abinadab, et-la-pierre, pierre | de: Stein, und-der-Stein Ezra 5:8; Ezra 6:4; Dan 2:34; Dan 2:35; Dan 2:45

אֹבֶן H0070 Art / N-md (2×)

birthstool, potter's wheel; dual form referring to two stones or discs

A Hebrew word appearing in two very different contexts. In Exodus 1:16, it refers to the birthstool—the stone seat or dual-stone support used during childbirth, which Hebrew midwives were ordered to inspect. In Jeremiah 18:3, it denotes the potter's wheel with its two rotating discs. The dual form suggests paired stones: either the two supports of a birthing stool or the double-disc mechanism of a potter's wheel. Both involve critical moments of formation—bringing forth life or shaping clay.

(2×) The dual form indicates a two-part structure. Ancient birthing practices involved women squatting on a stool with two stones or supports (Egyptian art and terra cotta figurines confirm this), allowing gravity to assist delivery. The Septuagint translates Exodus 1:16 as 'birthing seats.' Jeremiah 18:3 describes the prophet observing a potter at his wheel—two stone discs rotating, one above the other. The semantic connection lies in the dual-stone structure and transformative process: birth and pottery-making both involve careful shaping at a critical moment. STONE AND ROCK

en: the-birthstool, the-wheel | es: las-piedras | fr: [הָאבְנַיִם], le-birthstool | de: [הָאבְנַיִם], der-birthstool Exod 1:16; Jer 18:3

אֲמָנָה H0071 N-proper-fs (1×)

Abana (Ketiv), river near Damascus

The written form (Ketiv) of a river name in 2 Kings 5:12, where Naaman boasts about the rivers of Damascus. The Qere (spoken form) reads Amanah. This river, likely the Barada (ancient Chrysorrhoas), flows from the Anti-Lebanon mountains through Damascus. Naaman's rhetorical question—'Are not Abana and Pharpar, the rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel?'—expresses his initial contempt for Elisha's instruction to wash in the Jordan.

(1×) A river flowing through Damascus, mentioned by Naaman. 2 Kings 5:12 records Naaman's proud comparison of Damascus's rivers to Israel's Jordan. The Ketiv 'Abana' (variant: Amanah in Qere) identifies one of two famous rivers supplying Damascus with fresh water, symbols of Syrian prestige that Naaman initially values above obedience. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [ketiv] | es: (kethiv) | fr: [ketiv] | de: [ketiv] 2Kgs 5:12

אֶבֶן H0072 Art / N-proper-fs (3×)

Ebenezer (Even-haezer); place name meaning 'stone of help,' commemorating divine deliverance

This Hebrew place name means 'stone of help,' commemorating God's assistance to Israel. The name appears in two distinct contexts. In 1 Samuel 4:1 and 5:1, 'Ebenezer' marks the site where Israel camped before their disastrous defeat by the Philistines and the capture of the ark. Later, in 1 Samuel 7:12, after a great victory over the Philistines, Samuel sets up a stone and names it Ebenezer, saying, 'Thus far the LORD has helped us.' The same location thus marks both devastating defeat and triumphant deliverance, showing that God's help—not the site itself—makes the difference. The memorial stone testified to future generations of God's faithfulness.

(3×) Translations preserve the proper name: English 'Ebenezer, Even-haezer,' Spanish 'Eben-Ezer, Even-Ezer,' French 'Ebenezer,' German 'Ebenezer, Even-haezer.' 1 Samuel 4:1 and 5:1 associate the name with Israel's defeat and the ark's capture—a low point in Israel's history. But 1 Samuel 7:12 redeems the name, as Samuel erects a memorial stone declaring 'Ebenezer—thus far the LORD has helped us.' The contrast between chapters 4 and 7 at the same location emphasizes that victory comes from trusting YHWH, not from presuming on sacred objects. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 5500 WITH 4 SENSES

en: Ebenezer, from-Even-haezer, the-Even-haezer | es: Eben-Ezer, Even-Ezer, de-Even-Ezer | fr: Ebenezer, de-Even-haezer, le-Even-haezer | de: Ebenezer, der-Even-haezer, von-Even-haezer 1Sam 4:1; 1Sam 5:1; 1Sam 7:12

אַבְנֵט H0073 N-mp (9×)

Sash or girdle worn by priests as part of the sacred vestments in Israelite worship.

A woven sash or belt worn around the waist as part of the priestly garments prescribed in the Torah. The אַבְנֵט is mentioned exclusively in ritual contexts, binding the linen tunic of both the high priest and the ordinary priests. Josephus describes it as a broad band wound multiple times around the chest, falling to the feet. Spanish translations render it as 'cinturón' (belt), while German uses 'Guertel' (girdle), both capturing the functional sense of a wrapping garment accessory. Its restriction to Priestly source texts (Exodus, Leviticus) and one prophetic passage (Isa 22:21) underscores its sacred significance.

sash, girdle (priestly vestment) (9×) A woven priestly sash tied around the waist over the tunic during tabernacle and temple service. Prescribed for both the high priest (Exod 28:4, 39; Lev 8:7; 16:4) and the ordinary priests (Exod 28:40; 29:9; Lev 8:13), and extended metaphorically to a high official in Isaiah 22:21 where Eliakim receives the sash as a symbol of investiture. The Targums render it as hemyan, a Persian loanword for a money-bag wrapped around the body, hinting at its broad, belt-like construction. BELT GIRDLE SASH

en: and-sash, and-with-sash-of, and-your-sash | es: cinturones, cinturón, con-el-cinturón | fr: [ואבנטך], avec-le-ceinture, ceinture | de: Guertel, [ואבנטך], der-Guertel Exod 28:4; Exod 28:39; Exod 28:40; Exod 29:9; Exod 39:29

אֲבִינֵר H0074 N-proper-ms (63×)

Abner – 'my father is Ner (a lamp)'; Saul's cousin and commander of his army

Abner (also spelled Aviner in its longer form at 1 Sam 14:50) is a proper masculine name meaning 'my father is Ner' or possibly 'my father is a lamp,' recalling the epithet 'lamp of Israel' applied to David (2 Sam 21:17). He was Saul's cousin and the commander of the Israelite army, playing a pivotal role in the transition from Saul's house to David's kingship. After Saul's death, Abner installed Ish-bosheth as rival king (2 Sam 2:8-10), then defected to David before being treacherously murdered by Joab (2 Sam 3:27). His 63 occurrences are concentrated in 1-2 Samuel and 1 Kings. Every target language preserves the name: Spanish Abner, French Abner, German Abner.

Abner (personal name) (63×) The proper name of Saul's cousin and army commander, son of Ner (1 Sam 14:50-51). Abner is a key figure in the contested succession after Saul's death: he champions Ish-bosheth's claim (2 Sam 2:8), later negotiates defection to David (2 Sam 3:12), and is killed by Joab in blood revenge (2 Sam 3:27). The name appears in both shorter (Abner) and longer (Abiner) spellings without semantic difference. Spanish Abner, French Abner, and German Abner all preserve it identically, confirming a single proper-noun sense across 63 occurrences. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abner, Avner | es: Abner, Avner | fr: Abner | de: Abner 1Sam 17:55; 1Sam 17:57; 1Sam 20:25

אָבֵס H0075 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-mp (2×)

fattened, stall-fed (of livestock)

A passive participle describing livestock that have been fattened, kept in stalls and fed rich food to make them plump for feasting. Solomon's daily provisions included fattened fowl (1 Kings 4:23), and Proverbs 15:17 contrasts a meal of vegetables with love versus a fattened ox with hatred. The term assumes agricultural prosperity—you can only afford to fatten animals when you have surplus grain and can keep them confined rather than letting them forage.

(2×) Both biblical uses highlight the luxury of fattened livestock. Solomon's court consumed fattened fowl daily, demonstrating royal abundance. The Proverbs passage uses a fattened ox as the epitome of lavish dining, yet argues a simple meal eaten in love surpasses it. Mishnaic Hebrew preserves the same usage. The practice required stalling animals (rather than pasture-grazing) and feeding them grain—expensive in agrarian societies. Cross-linguistic glosses capture this: Spanish 'engordado,' French and English 'fattened,' German 'gemästet'—all emphasizing the deliberate feeding process. FATNESS AND RICHNESS

en: caged, stalled | es: cebadas, engordado | fr: caged, אבוס | de: [אבוס], caged 1Kgs 4:23; Prov 15:17

אֲבַעְבֻּעֹת H0076 N-fp (2×)

blisters, pustules, or boils that break out on skin

A plural noun describing the painful skin eruptions that accompanied the sixth Egyptian plague (Exodus 9:9-10). When Moses threw furnace soot skyward, it became fine dust causing 'boils breaking out in blisters' on people and animals throughout Egypt. The term emphasizes the visible, pustular nature of the affliction—not just inflammation but erupting sores. Egyptian magicians couldn't even stand before Moses because of these boils, marking the first plague they couldn't replicate.

(2×) This term appears exclusively in the plague narrative, describing the skin condition that struck all Egypt. The Hebrew uses both 'shechin' (boils) and 'aba'bu'ot' (blisters/pustules), the latter emphasizing the erupting, blistering character. Targumic Aramaic preserves similar terminology. The vivid medical detail—boils that break out in pustules—conveys intense suffering. Modern translations render it as 'blisters,' 'pustules,' or 'sores.' The plague targeted both humans and livestock, and its severity is underscored by the magicians' inability to perform their duties due to the affliction. FUGITIVE AND SURVIVOR

en: blisters | es: tumores | fr: pustules | de: blisters Exod 9:9; Exod 9:10

אֶבֶץ H0077 Conj-w | N-proper-fs (1×)

Ebez, town in Issachar

A town in the tribal territory of Issachar, listed among the cities allotted to that tribe. Joshua 19:20 includes Ebez in the boundary description and city list for Issachar's inheritance. Little else is known about this location, and its exact site remains uncertain. Like many towns in these lists, it represents a specific land grant fulfilling God's promise to give Israel the land, even when individual sites can no longer be identified with certainty.

(1×) A city in Issachar's tribal allotment. Joshua 19:20 names Ebez among the towns given to Issachar, fulfilling the distribution of Canaan among the twelve tribes. Though the site's exact location is lost, its inclusion in Scripture testifies to the detailed fulfillment of God's promise to give Israel specific, named territories. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Avets | es: y-Ebes | fr: et-Avets | de: und-Avets Josh 19:20

אִבְצָן H0078 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ibzan (personal name), a judge of Israel

A judge from Bethlehem who led Israel for seven years (Judges 12:8-10). Scripture records his large family—thirty sons and thirty daughters—and his practice of arranging marriages for them outside his clan, bringing in thirty daughters-in-law as well. This detail suggests both his wealth (supporting such a household) and his diplomatic skills (forging alliances through marriage). He was buried in Bethlehem. Some traditions identify him with Boaz, though this remains speculative.

(2×) Ibzan appears in the epilogue of Judges, part of the 'minor judges' whose tenures are recorded with minimal narrative. The emphasis falls on his sixty children and strategic marriages 'outside' his clan—unusual enough to merit mention. This marriage pattern created extensive kinship networks across Israelite territories. The Septuagint renders his name as 'Abessan,' Peshitta as 'Abiṣan.' His burial in Bethlehem (whether in Judah or Zebulun is debated) and family size paint a picture of prosperity during a relatively stable period between charismatic military leaders. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ibzan | es: Ibzán | fr: Ibtsan | de: Ibzan Judg 12:8; Judg 12:10

אָבַק H0079 Prep-b / V-Nifal-Inf / 3ms (2×)

to wrestle, grapple, struggle with

A rare verb appearing only in Genesis 32 when Jacob wrestles with the mysterious figure at the Jabbok ford. The word comes from getting dusty—the idea of two opponents grappling so intensely that dust flies. Jacob wrestled with this man until daybreak (verse 24), and when the stranger saw he couldn't prevail, he touched Jacob's hip socket (verse 25). This nightlong struggle became the defining moment of Jacob's life, earning him a new name: Israel ('he struggles with God').

(2×) The verb's etymology connects to dust (related to 'ābāq'), picturing the physical intensity of combat—bodies locked together, kicking up dirt. Genesis 32:24-25 uses both the finite verb (he wrestled) and the infinitive construct (when he wrestled). The Septuagint translates with 'palaiō' (wrestle), capturing the athletic combat sense. This isn't distant sword fighting but intimate grappling. The dust imagery later appears in rabbinic literature ('sitting in the dust at their feet' = being a disciple). Jacob's wrestling match became paradigmatic: Israel's identity is forged through struggle with the divine. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9286 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-wrestled, when-he-wrestled | es: al-luchar-él, y-luchó | fr: et-lutta, quand-il-lutta | de: als-er-rang, und-rang Gen 32:24; Gen 32:25

אָבָק H0080 N-ms (6×)

Dust, fine powder; airborne particles raised by wind or feet, used literally of soot and debris and figuratively of divine judgment.

Avaq refers to fine, airborne dust or powder—lighter and more volatile than the common afar, which typically denotes ground-level earth or soil. In Exodus 9:9, it describes the fine soot Moses flings skyward to trigger the plague of boils. Deuteronomy 28:24 warns that God will turn rain into dust and powder falling from the sky. Isaiah uses it in both directions: the straw of the wicked becomes avaq consumed by flame (5:24), while the ruthless are reduced to avaq scattered by wind (29:5). Nahum 1:3 offers a striking image: clouds are the dust of God's feet. The translations converge neatly: Spanish polvo, French poudre/poussiere, German Staub.

dust, fine powder (6×) Fine dust or powder, particularly the kind raised into the air by wind, feet, or combustion—distinguished from the more generic afar ('earth, ground-dust'). In Exodus 9:9 it is the soot of the furnace that becomes a plague, and in Deuteronomy 28:24 (parallel with afar) it falls as cursed rain. Isaiah deploys it as an image of sudden, total destruction (5:24; 29:5), while Nahum 1:3 uses it figuratively of clouds beneath Yahweh's feet. The multilingual glosses (Spanish polvo, French poudre/poussiere, German Staub) all point to a single concrete sense of fine, airborne particulate matter. DUST AND POWDER

en: as-the-dust, dust, fine-dust | es: como-polvo, polvo, polvo-de | fr: [כאבק], fin-poussière, poudre | de: Staub, [אבק], [אבקם] Exod 9:9; Deut 28:24; Isa 5:24; Isa 29:5; Ezek 26:10

אַבְקָה H0081 N-fsc (1×)

powders, fragrant spices ground to powder

Aromatic powders, specifically the ground spices or perfumes used in cosmetic and ceremonial contexts. Song of Songs 3:6 asks, 'What is that coming up from the wilderness like columns of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all the fragrant powders of the merchant?' The term appears in construct relationship—'powders of the merchant'—indicating imported, luxury aromatics that accompany the royal procession, creating a sensory-rich image of Solomon's approach.

(1×) Fragrant powders or ground spices, especially imported luxury aromatics. In Song of Songs 3:6, 'the powders of the merchant' are part of the magnificent description of Solomon's wedding procession, evoking expensive perfumes that create fragrant clouds. The term emphasizes both the material (finely ground) and the commercial value (merchant's goods). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: powders-of | es: polvo-de | fr: poudre | de: [אבקת] Song 3:6

אָבַר H0082 V-Hifil-Imperf.Jus-3ms (1×)

soar, fly (of hawk or falcon)

To soar or fly on wings, particularly used of birds of prey. Job 39:26 asks, 'Is it by your understanding that the hawk soars and spreads its wings toward the south?' The verb, a denominative from 'wing' or 'pinion,' describes the effortless, instinctive flight of raptors as they migrate. God's rhetorical question challenges Job to recognize that such natural marvels operate by divine wisdom, not human knowledge.

(1×) To fly or soar on wings, especially of birds of prey. Job 39:26 uses this verb in God's interrogation of Job: does the hawk soar by Job's wisdom? The question highlights the hawk's instinctive flight and migration as expressions of divine design, beyond human control or comprehension, humbling Job's attempts to question God's governance. FLYING AND FLIGHT

en: soars- | es: vuela- | fr: יאבר | de: [יאבר] Job 39:26

אֶבְרָה H0083 N-ms (3×)

pinion, wing; the primary flight feathers of a bird, symbolizing strength and mobility

This Hebrew noun denotes pinions or wings, specifically the strong primary feathers that enable flight, often used poetically and metaphorically. In Psalm 55:6, the psalmist wishes, 'Oh, that I had wings like a dove! I would fly away and be at rest'—expressing longing to escape distress. Isaiah 40:31 promises that 'those who wait on the LORD shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings like eagles'—a famous metaphor for divine empowerment. Ezekiel 17:3 describes Babylon under the figure of 'a great eagle with large wings and long pinions,' symbolizing imperial power and reach. The term emphasizes strength, freedom, and mobility.

(3×) Translations show both literal and metaphorical dimensions: English 'wings, pinions,' Spanish 'ala, alas, el plumaje' (wing, wings, plumage), French 'aile,' German 'Flügel.' Psalm 55:6 uses wings metaphorically for escape from trouble—a yearning for freedom like a bird. Isaiah 40:31 employs eagle's wings as an image of renewed strength for those who trust God. Ezekiel 17:3 personifies Babylon as a powerful eagle with long pinions, capturing its far-reaching imperial dominance. The term bridges literal ornithology and symbolic theology. WING BODY PART

en: the-pinions, wings, with-wings | es: ala, alas, el-plumaje | fr: [אבר], aile | de: Flügel, [אבר], [האבר] Ps 55:6; Isa 40:31; Ezek 17:3

אֶבְרָה H0084 N-fs (4×)

A pinion or strong flight feather; the powerful wing feathers of a large bird, used poetically of divine protection.

This poetic noun denotes the large flight feathers of a bird's wing — the pinions that enable soaring. It appears exclusively in elevated poetry, always parallel with 'wing' (kanaph), creating a vivid image of protective coverage. In Deuteronomy 32:11, God is compared to an eagle spreading its pinions over its young. Psalm 91:4 promises shelter 'under his pinions,' making the feathered wing a metaphor for divine refuge. Job 39:13 uses it of the ostrich's plumage, contrasting its impressive feathers with its inability to truly fly.

(4×) The large flight feathers or pinions of a bird, used as a poetic image for protective covering and powerful flight. In Deut 32:11, the eagle 'spreads its pinions' (evrato) over its fledglings, a simile for God's nurturing care during the wilderness journey. Ps 91:4 intensifies the metaphor: 'under his pinions (evrato) you will find refuge,' pairing it with kanaph (wing) in synonymous parallelism. Ps 68:13 describes the dove's pinions overlaid with silver, while Job 39:13 contrasts the ostrich's striking feathers with the stork's faithful wings. Spanish 'plumas' and French 'aile' capture different aspects — plumage versus wing — reflecting the word's dual emphasis on both feather and flight. WING BODY PART

en: and-its-feathers, its-pinions, the-pinion-of | es: Con-sus-plumas, pluma-de, sus-plumas | fr: dans-aile, et-aile, son-pinions | de: [אברה], mit-sein-feathers, sein-pinions Deut 32:11; Job 39:13; Ps 68:13; Ps 91:4

אַבְרָם H0085 Prep-m / N-proper-ms (175×)

Abram / Abraham — the patriarch, father of Isaac and Ishmael, whose name was changed by God in Genesis 17:5

Abram ('exalted father') appears in Genesis 11:26 through 17:5, after which God renames him Abraham. The name change marks the covenant of circumcision and the promise of multitudinous descendants (Gen 17:5). Despite being two forms of one name, the biblical text treats them as a single continuous identity — the patriarch who left Ur, received the land promise, fathered Ishmael and Isaac, and became the spiritual ancestor claimed by Judaism, Christianity, and Islam alike. Nehemiah 9:7 and 1 Chronicles 1:27 preserve the original 'Abram' form outside Genesis. Spanish Avraham and German Abraham show how universally recognized this name remains.

Abram / Abraham (proper noun) (175×) The patriarch originally named Abram ('exalted father'), renamed Abraham by divine command at the covenant of circumcision (Gen 17:5). A single referent across all 175 occurrences, appearing in various grammatical frames — nominative, with prepositions (to, from, of), and with conjunctions. The name spans from the call narrative (Gen 12) through post-exilic memory (Neh 9:7). All target languages preserve the name with minimal phonological adaptation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abraham | es: Avraham | fr: Abraham | de: Abraham, Abrahams, an-Abraham Gen 17:5; Gen 17:9; Gen 17:15; Gen 17:17; Gen 17:18

אַבְרֵךְ H0086 Adv (1×)

bow down! (proclamation before Joseph)

A loan word from Egyptian, shouted before Joseph's chariot as he paraded through Egypt as Pharaoh's newly appointed vizier (Genesis 41:43). Scholars debate its exact meaning—proposals range from 'prostrate thyself!' to 'head of the wise' to 'we are at thy service.' What's clear is its function: a ceremonial cry commanding public honor for the second-most powerful man in Egypt. The Spanish preserves the transliteration (¡Abrek!) while other languages interpret it as a command to bow or show reverence, capturing the essential act of submission it demanded.

(1×) Exclusively attested in Genesis 41:43 at the climax of Joseph's elevation. Whatever its precise Egyptian etymology, the narrative context makes its function unmistakable: a ritualized shout that cleared the way and compelled gestures of respect. The multilingual evidence splits between transliteration (Spanish) and interpretation (bow-the-knee, arc-le-genou), both valid approaches to a foreign ceremonial term whose exact force may have already been obscure to the Hebrew audience. MANNER ADVERBS

en: bow-the-knee | es: ¡Abrek! | fr: arc-le-genou | de: Abrech Gen 41:43

אַבְרָם H0087 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (61×)

Avram – Abram, the original name of the patriarch Abraham before the covenant renaming

Avram ('exalted father') is the birth name of the patriarch whom God later renamed Abraham ('father of a multitude') at the institution of circumcision (Gen 17:5). All 61 occurrences fall within the early Abraham narratives of Genesis 11-17 plus retrospective references in 1 Chronicles 1:27 and Nehemiah 9:7. The name change is theologically loaded: Avram designates the man before the covenant of circumcision, Abraham the covenant partner of God who would father many nations. The etymological word-play in Genesis 17:5 is one of the Bible's most memorable naming moments. Every target language preserves the name unchanged – Spanish, French, German, and English all render it simply as Abram.

Abram (proper name) (61×) The proper masculine name of the patriarch before his covenantal renaming to Abraham in Genesis 17:5. The name likely means 'exalted father' (from av + ram), and its 61 occurrences cluster in Genesis 11-17, with retrospective mentions in 1 Chronicles 1:27 and Nehemiah 9:7. Cross-lingual uniformity is total – Spanish Abram, French Abram, German Abram – confirming a single proper-noun identity with no polysemy, the grammatical variation being limited to prepositional prefixes (with-Abram, to-Abram). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Abram | es: Abram | fr: Abram | de: Abram, Abrams, dem-Abram Gen 11:26; Gen 11:27; Gen 11:29; Gen 11:31

אֹבֹת H0088 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (4×)

Oboth, a place name meaning 'waterskins'; a station of Israel's wilderness journey on the eastern border of Edom.

A wilderness encampment whose name likely derives from the Hebrew word for waterskins or leather bottles, perhaps indicating a place where water was stored or found. Oboth appears in two itinerary passages tracing Israel's route from Egypt to Canaan. In Numbers 21:10-11, the Israelites travel from Oboth to Iye-abarim on the border of Moab. Numbers 33:43-44 lists the same stop in the comprehensive travel log. The exact location remains uncertain, though it is generally placed on the eastern fringes of Edom, somewhere in the Arabah region.

(4×) A proper place name for a station along Israel's wilderness wandering route, situated on the eastern border of Edom near Moab. The name, meaning 'waterskins,' may reflect the site's association with water storage in an arid region. It occurs in Num 21:10-11 within the travel narrative and in Num 33:43-44 in the summary itinerary list. Translations across languages consistently transliterate: English 'Oboth,' Spanish 'Obot,' French 'Oboth,' German 'Oboth.' The prepositional forms in the glosses ('from-Oboth,' 'in-Oboth') reflect the Hebrew prepositions beth and min attached to the place name in context, indicating arrival at and departure from this desert waypoint. PERSONAL NAMES

en: from-Oboth, in-Oboth | es: de-Obot, en-Obot | fr: dans-Oboth, de-Oboth | de: in-Oboth, von-Oboth Num 21:10; Num 21:11; Num 33:43; Num 33:44

אָגֵא H0089 N-proper-ms (1×)

Agee, father of one of David's mighty men

A personal name meaning possibly 'fugitive,' identified as the father of Shammah, one of David's elite warriors. Second Samuel 23:11 introduces Shammah son of Agee the Hararite, who single-handedly defended a lentil field against the Philistines. The name appears only in this context, preserved solely because of the son's remarkable military achievement. It reminds us that many biblical names survive only through their children's deeds.

(1×) Father of Shammah, one of David's three mighty men. 2 Samuel 23:11 identifies 'Shammah son of Agee the Hararite' among David's most heroic warriors. While we know nothing else about Agee, his name is immortalized through his son's legendary courage in defending a field of lentils against overwhelming Philistine forces. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Agee | es: Ague | fr: Agee | de: Agee 2Sam 23:11

אֲגַג H0090 Prep-m / N-proper-ms (8×)

Agag; the Amalekite king spared by Saul and executed by Samuel, also invoked in Balaam's oracle as a symbol of royal power.

The proper name of the king of Amalek, central to one of the Old Testament's most dramatic confrontations. Balaam first invokes Agag in his oracle, prophesying that Israel's king will be 'higher than Agag' (Num 24:7), treating the name as shorthand for formidable royal power. The main narrative cluster occurs in 1 Samuel 15, where Saul captures Agag alive but spares him against God's command, provoking Samuel's devastating rebuke and the pronouncement that God has rejected Saul as king. Samuel then executes Agag personally (1 Sam 15:33). The name echoes later in Esther through 'Haman the Agagite,' suggesting a genealogical or typological link.

Agag (proper name) (8×) Agag, the proper name of the Amalekite king whose capture and sparing by Saul triggered the rupture between Saul and God (1 Sam 15:8–9, 20, 32–33). The name first appears in Balaam's prophecy as a symbol of royal might that Israel's future king will surpass (Num 24:7). In the Samuel narrative, Saul's failure to destroy Agag becomes the occasion of his rejection as king, with Samuel pronouncing, 'To obey is better than sacrifice' (1 Sam 15:22). All translations uniformly transliterate the name—Spanish, French, German all render 'Agag'—indicating its status as a well-established biblical proper noun. The later designation of Haman as 'the Agagite' (Esth 3:1) may connect the Esther villain to this ancestral enemy. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Agag, above-Agag | es: Agag, que-Agag | fr: Agag, au-dessus-Agag | de: Agag, oberhalb-Agag Num 24:7; 1Sam 15:8; 1Sam 15:9; 1Sam 15:20; 1Sam 15:32

אֲגָגִי H0091 Art / N-proper-ms (5×)

Agagite — a gentilicdesignation identifying Haman's ancestry, possibly linking him to the Amalekite king Agag

Agagi is the gentilic adjective applied exclusively to Haman, the antagonist of the book of Esther. All five occurrences (Esth 3:1, 10; 8:3, 5; 9:24) serve as an epithet — 'Haman the Agagite' — identifying him by ancestral or ethnic origin. Jewish tradition and Josephus connect this designation to Agag, the Amalekite king spared by Saul (1 Sam 15), making the Esther narrative a continuation of the ancient Israel-Amalek conflict. The multilingual evidence is revealing: Spanish uses 'el agagueo' (with a gentilic suffix), French 'Agaguite,' and German 'der Agagiter,' each forming a recognizable ethnic adjective.

(5×) A gentilic adjective meaning 'the Agagite,' used exclusively as an epithet for Haman in the book of Esther (3:1, 10; 8:3, 5; 9:24). The designation likely traces his lineage to Agag, the Amalekite king of 1 Samuel 15, casting the Purim conflict as a continuation of the ancient Israelite-Amalekite enmity. Josephus (Ant. xi.6.5) confirms this identification. The article ha- prefixed in some occurrences marks the gentilic as a known designation rather than a novel introduction. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Agagite | es: el-agagueo | fr: Agaguite | de: der-Agagiter Esth 3:1; Esth 3:10; Esth 8:3; Esth 8:5; Esth 9:24

אֲגֻדָּה H0092 Prep-l / N-fs (4×)

Band, bundle, troop, or vault; something bound or gathered together

A noun built on the root idea of binding or gathering, appearing in four strikingly different contexts that all share the notion of things fastened together. In Exodus 12:22 it denotes a bunch of hyssop used to apply the Passover blood. Isaiah 58:6 uses it metaphorically for the bonds of oppression. In 2 Samuel 2:25 it describes a band of fighting men rallied together. Most evocatively, Amos 9:6 speaks of God's vault of the heavens, as though the sky itself were a structure bound and fitted together by divine craftsmanship.

(4×) Bundle, bunch, band, troop, or vault — anything bound or gathered into a unit. The multilingual evidence reveals the semantic breadth: English renders 'a-bunch-of,' 'as-a-band,' and 'his-vault,' while Spanish distinguishes 'las-ataduras-del' (bonds, Isa 58:6) from 'manojo-de' (bunch, Exod 12:22) and 'para-banda' (troop, 2 Sam 2:25). French 'botte' (bunch) and 'bande' (band) likewise capture the range. All four occurrences share the core image of things fastened together, whether hyssop stalks, chains of oppression, a company of soldiers, or the celestial dome. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-bunch-of, and-his-vault, as-a-band | es: las-ataduras-del, manojo-de-, para-banda | fr: [אגדות], comme-un-bande, et-botte | de: [אגדות], [ואגדתו], ein-Buendel-von Exod 12:22; 2Sam 2:25; Isa 58:6; Amos 9:6

אֱגוֹז H0093 N-ms (1×)

nuts, nut orchard or grove

Nuts or nut trees, possibly walnuts, used collectively to refer to a nut orchard. Song of Songs 6:11 describes going 'down to the nut orchard to look at the blossoms of the valley, to see whether the vines had budded, whether the pomegranates were in bloom.' The term likely designates walnut trees, creating a lush garden scene filled with springtime fertility and growth. The nut grove becomes a setting for romantic encounter and natural abundance.

(1×) Nut trees or nuts, collectively describing an orchard or grove. Song of Songs 6:11 mentions 'the nut garden' as the speaker's destination to observe spring growth. This cultivated space of nut trees (likely walnuts) represents fertility, abundance, and cultivation —a fitting backdrop for the poem's exploration of love's fruitfulness. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: nut | es: nueces | fr: des-noyers | de: [אגוז] Song 6:11

אָגוּר H0094 N-proper-ms (1×)

Agur — son of Jakeh, author of Proverbs 30

Agur appears only in the opening verse of Proverbs 30, identified as the son of Jakeh. The name may derive from a root meaning 'hireling' or 'gatherer,' though its precise etymology remains debated. This rare attribution gives us a glimpse of wisdom literature beyond Solomon, preserving an otherwise unknown sage's profound reflections on human limitation and divine transcendence.

(1×) The personal name of the wisdom teacher whose oracle comprises Proverbs 30. Multilingual witnesses uniformly transliterate the name (English 'Agur,' Spanish 'Agur'), confirming its status as a proper noun with no semantic translation. His single appearance underscores the diversity of voices preserved in Israel's wisdom tradition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Agur | es: Agur | fr: אגור | de: [אגור] Prov 30:1

אַגֹּרָה H0095 Prep-l / N-fsc (1×)

piece (of silver) — unit of payment or currency

This rare feminine noun appears in 1 Samuel 2:36, where a destitute priest begs 'for a piece of silver' to buy bread. The term denotes a small unit of currency or payment, emphasizing the humble scale of the petitioner's need. Cross-linguistic evidence shows translations rendering it as 'piece' or 'coin,' capturing the concrete monetary reference in a narrative about the collapse of Eli's priestly house.

(1×) A unit of currency or payment, specifically 'a piece of silver' (אַגֹּרַת כָּסֶף) in contexts of dire economic need. German, Spanish, and French translations all preserve the 'piece/coin' semantic, reflecting the term's function as a measure of minimal subsistence rather than wealth. The context in 1 Samuel underscores priestly degradation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-piece-of | es: por-moneda-de | fr: pour-piece-de | de: fuer-piece-von 1Sam 2:36

אֶגֶל H0096 N-mpc (1×)

drops (of dew) — small water droplets, especially from condensation

In Job 38:28, God challenges Job with rhetorical questions about nature's mysteries, asking who fathers 'the drops of dew.' The Hebrew denotes tiny droplets formed by condensation, a common ancient Near Eastern meteorological phenomenon. Most translations render it as 'drops,' though some interpreters have proposed 'collections' or 'stores.' The parallel with 'rain' suggests discrete water particles rather than accumulated reserves.

(1×) Small droplets of water, specifically dew-drops (אֶגְלֵי־טָל) in poetic descriptions of divine providence over nature. English and Spanish ('drops of,' 'gotas de') capture the partitive construction, emphasizing the minute scale of God's creative attention. Job 38:28 uses this image to illustrate the Creator's intimate governance of meteorological cycles beyond human comprehension. GEOGRAPHY

AND SPACE
en: the-drops-of- | es: gotas-de- | fr: אגלי | de: [אגלי] Job 38:28

אֶגְלַיִם H0097 N-proper-fs (1×)
Eglaim — town in Moab mentioned in Isaiah's oracle
Eglaim appears once in Isaiah 15:8, within a prophecy of Moab's devastation. Ancient sources place it roughly nine miles south of Areopolis, though its exact location remains uncertain. The name's meaning is unclear, possibly related to 'pools' or a dual form. Isaiah's oracle uses geographical landmarks to depict the comprehensive scope of judgment sweeping across Moabite territory.

(1×) A Moabite town serving as a geographical marker in Isaiah's prophetic oracle against Moab. Multilingual witnesses consistently transliterate 'Eglaim,' confirming its status as a place name without semantic translation. The context in Isaiah 15:8 suggests a boundary or significant location marking the extent of Moab's coming calamity. PERSONAL NAMES en: Eglaim | es: Eglaim | fr: [אגלים] | de: [אגלים] Isa 15:8

אג֫ם H0098 Art / N-mp (9×)
A pool, pond, or marshy body of standing water; by extension, a swamp or marsh Refers to a body of still, collected water – a pool, pond, or marsh. In the plague narratives of Exodus, the pools of Egypt ('agammim) are struck alongside rivers and canals (Exod 7:19; 8:5), and the prophets use the image powerfully: God transforms dry land into a pool of water (Ps 107:35; Isa 41:18), while Babylon's ruin becomes stagnant marshes (Isa 14:23). The word carries an atmospheric weight – these are not pristine springs but gathered, sometimes muddy waters, which is why the same root can shade into swamp or marsh in contexts like Ezekiel 47:11.

1. pool, pond (8×) A pool or pond of standing water, whether natural or artificial. The multilingual evidence confirms this as the primary sense: English glosses consistently render 'pool' or 'pools,' while Spanish uses 'estanque' (reservoir/pond). Appears in the Egyptian plague context (Exod 7:19; 8:5) and in prophetic imagery of divine transformation where wilderness becomes a pool of water (Ps 107:35; 114:8; Isa 41:18). In Isa 14:23 the pools become a sign of desolation when God makes Babylon into 'pools of water' – stagnant and abandoned. POOL POND MARSH
en: a-pool, and-pools, and-pools-of- | es: en-estanque, en-estanque-de, los-estanques | fr: [ואגמי], [ואגמים], [לאגם] | de: [ואגמי], [ואגמים], [לאגם] Exod 7:19; Exod 8:5; Ps 107:35; Ps 114:8; Isa 14:23

2. marsh, swamp (1×) A marsh or swamp, denoting a boggy, waterlogged area distinct from a clear pool. Attested in Jeremiah 51:32 (and contextually in Ezek 47:11) where the marshes and swamps will not be healed by the life-giving river from the temple. English renders 'marshes,' Spanish 'pantanos' (swamps), highlighting a semantic extension from still pool to muddy, overgrown wetland. This sense shades toward the related noun 'agmon (rush, reed), since marshes are defined by their reedy vegetation. POOL POND MARSH
en: the-marshes | es: los-pantanos | fr: [האגמים] | de: [האגמים] Jer 51:32

אֲגַם H0099 N-mpc (1×)
pools, marshes — bodies of standing water; or metaphorically, the sad/grieved
This difficult word appears in Isaiah 19:10, describing those who work for wages as 'sad of soul' or perhaps 'makers of pools/marshes.' The term may denote bodies of standing water (pools, marshes) or, following later Hebrew usage, carry an emotional sense ('sad, grieved'). The prophetic context of Egypt's economic collapse supports either reading: literal pools for fishing or metaphorical pools of sorrow among wage laborers.

(1×) Either literal pools/marshes of water or a figurative expression for 'the grieved/sad of soul.' Translations diverge: English and Spanish favor 'pools/marshes' (pools of, estanques de), suggesting occupational reference to fishermen or dam-workers. The construct phrase with 'soul' (אֲגַמֵּי־נָפֶשׁ) could support the emotional reading, depicting Egypt's laborers as 'grieved in spirit' amid national economic ruin in Isaiah 19:10. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: pools-of- | es: estanques-de- | fr: [אגמי] | de: [אגמי] Isa 19:10

אַגְמֹן H0100 Conj-w / N-ms (5×)
rush, bulrush — a marshland plant used for cord-making and as a figure of the lowly or insignificant Agmon designates a rush or bulrush, a tall marsh plant familiar throughout the ancient Near East. In its literal sense, it appears in the speeches of God to Job: twisted rush fibers serve as cord (Job 41:2) and rushes burn as fuel (Job 41:20). Isaiah uses the image of bowing the head like a rush to critique empty fasting (Isa 58:5). Metaphorically, the rush represents the lowly and insignificant in Isaiah's judgment oracles — 'palm branch and reed' as a merism for high and low (Isa 9:14; 19:15). Spanish 'junco' and English 'reed/rush' consistently capture this wetland-plant sense.

(5×) A rush or bulrush, a tall wetland plant whose fibrous stems were used for making rope and whose dry stalks served as kindling. In Job 41:2 (English 40:26), God asks whether one can put a rope of rushes through Leviathan's nose; in Job 41:20 burning rushes illustrate the creature's fiery breath. Isaiah 58:5 uses the image of bowing one's head 'like a rush' to describe performative humility. When used metaphorically (Isa 9:14; 19:15), the rush represents the lowly and insignificant, paired with the palm branch (kippah) as a merism for leaders and commoners. Spanish 'junco' and English 'reed' confirm the botanical referent across translation traditions. REEDS RUSHES VEGETATION en: a-reed, and-burning-rushes, and-reed | es: como-junco, junco, o-junco | fr: [ואגמון], [כאגמן], et-ואגמן | de: [אגמון], [ואגמון], [ואגמן] Job 41:2; Job 41:20; Isa 9:14; Isa 19:15; Isa 58:5

אַגָּן H0101 Art / N-mp (3×)
bowl, basin; a vessel for holding liquids, used in ritual and domestic contexts
This Hebrew noun denotes a bowl or basin, a curved vessel for holding liquids or other contents. In Exodus 24:6, Moses uses basins to hold blood during the covenant ceremony at Sinai, sprinkling half on the altar and half on the people. Song of Solomon 7:2 uses sensuous imagery: 'Your navel is a rounded bowl that never lacks mixed wine'—comparing the beloved's beauty to the fullness and perfection of a bowl. Isaiah 22:24 employs the term metaphorically for 'all the vessels of small quantity, from the cups to all the pitchers,' describing the descendants of Eliakim. The word covers both ritual vessels and domestic containers.

(3×) Translations reflect both literal and figurative uses: English 'bowl-of, basins,' Spanish 'copa, vasijas, tazas' (cup, vessels, bowls), French 'bassins, coupe,' German 'basins.' Exodus 24:6 describes ritual basins holding sacrificial blood during covenant-making. Song of Solomon 7:2 uses 'rounded bowl' as an image of physical beauty —a bowl that is full and perfectly curved. Isaiah 22:24 employs bowl-vessels and pitchers metaphorically for Eliakim's descendants, who will hang on him like vessels on a peg—a mixed metaphor of honor and burden. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: bowl-of, in-the-basins, the-basins | es: copa, en-vasijas, las-tazas | fr: [האגנות], dans-le-bassins, une-coupe | de: [אגן], [האגנות], in-der-basins Exod 24:6; Song 7:2; Isa 22:24

אֲגַף H0102 N-mpc / 3fs (7×)
Bands, hordes, or military troops accompanying a leader; armed forces in an army's retinue.
The noun ʾăgap refers to bands or hordes of fighting forces, used exclusively in Ezekiel's oracles. It is a loanword from Akkadian agappu ('wing'), originally denoting the wing of an army, and its usage in Ezekiel always describes the military entourage of kings and invaders. Gog's vast hordes (Ezek 38:9, 22; 39:4), the troops of Gomer and Beth-togarmah (Ezek 38:6), and the scattered forces of Judah's king (Ezek 12:14; 17:21) are all designated by this word. Spanish tropas and English 'hordes' both capture the sense of massed military forces.

band, horde, troops (7×) Bands, hordes, or military troops forming a leader's armed retinue — a loanword from Akkadian agappu ('wing of an army'), used exclusively in Ezekiel to describe the vast military forces accompanying rulers and invaders. It describes the scattered troops of Judah's king (Ezek 12:14; 17:21), the hordes of Gomer and Beth-togarmah rallying with Gog (Ezek 38:6), and Gog's overwhelming invasion force (Ezek 38:9, 22; 39:4). Spanish sus tropas ('his troops') captures the consistent military-collective sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: her-hordes, his-hordes, troops-his | es: sus-tropas, sus-tropas„ sus-tropas; | fr: ruisseau | de: [אגפיה], [אגפיו], [אגפיך] Ezek 12:14; Ezek 17:21; Ezek 38:6; Ezek 38:9

אָגַר H0103 V-Qal-Imperf-2ms (3×)

to gather, collect; to harvest or bring in crops or food

This Hebrew verb means to gather or collect, particularly in agricultural contexts of harvesting. Deuteronomy 28:39 curses Israel with futility: 'You shall plant vineyards and tend them, but you shall neither drink of the wine nor gather the grapes; for the worms shall eat them.' Proverbs 6:8 praises the ant, which 'gathers her food in the harvest,' providing an example of diligent preparation. Proverbs 10:5 contrasts the wise son 'who gathers in summer' with the shameful son who sleeps during harvest. The verb emphasizes purposeful collection, especially of agricultural produce, as part of prudent stewardship and timely labor.

(3×) Translations consistently render this as gathering or collecting: English 'gathers, you-gather, he-who-gathers,' Spanish 'recoge, recogerás, el-que-recoge' (gathers, you-will-gather, the-one-who-gathers), French 'rassembler,' German 'sammeln' (to gather). Deuteronomy 28:39 warns of covenant curses where labor yields no harvest to gather. Proverbs 6:8 commends the ant's instinctive gathering during harvest—a model of industrious provision. Proverbs 10:5 praises the son who gathers in summer (the proper season) versus one who sleeps when he should work. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: he-who-gathers, she-gathers, you-gather | es: el-que-recoge, recoge, recogerás | fr: tu-rassembler, אגר, אגרה | de: [אגר], [אגרה], du-sammeln Deut 28:39; Prov 6:8; Prov 10:5

אֲדַרְכֹן H0104 N-fs (3×)

letter, epistle (Aramaic); official written correspondence

This Aramaic noun means a letter or epistle, particularly official correspondence in the Persian imperial administration. All three occurrences appear in Ezra, describing communications to and from the Persian court regarding the rebuilding of Jerusalem. Ezra 4:8 mentions 'a letter against Jerusalem' written by Rehum and Shimshai to King Artaxerxes. Ezra 4:11 introduces 'the copy of the letter that they sent to him,' detailing accusations against the Jews. Ezra 5:6 records 'the copy of the letter that Tattenai...sent to King Darius,' seeking royal guidance on the temple rebuilding. These official letters shaped the political fortunes of the returning exiles.

(3×) The Aramaic term shows variation in translations—French and German preserve the Aramaic '[אגרה], [אגרתא],' while English renders 'letter, the-letter,' Spanish 'carta, la-carta.' Ezra 4:8 introduces hostile correspondence opposing Jerusalem's reconstruction. Ezra 4:11 presents the actual content of the letter accusing the Jews of potential rebellion. Ezra 5:6 shows Tattenai's more neutral inquiry to Darius about the temple project. These letters document the bureaucratic struggles of post-exilic Judaism navigating Persian imperial politics. LETTERS AND WRITINGS

en: letter, the-letter | es: carta, la-carta | fr: [אגרה], [אגרתא] | de: [אגרה], [אגרתא] Ezra 4:8; Ezra 4:11; Ezra 5:6

אַגַּרְטָל H0105 N-mpc (2×)

basins, vessels (possibly basket-shaped)

Temple vessels returned from Babylon under Cyrus's decree (Ezra 1:9). The text lists gold and silver 'agartalim' among the sacred objects taken by Nebuchadnezzar and now restored. The exact nature of these vessels is uncertain—early translations suggested 'basins' or 'wine-coolers' based on Greek versions, while later scholarship compared the word to Aramaic and Arabic terms for baskets or basket-shaped containers. Whatever their precise form, they were valuable enough to inventory separately when restoring temple worship.

(2×) Appearing only in Ezra's inventory of temple vessels, this rare word has puzzled translators since ancient times. The Septuagint manuscripts diverge (some say 'wine-coolers,' others omit). Modern scholars compare it to Aramaic 'qartalita' and Arabic 'qirtalla'—terms for baskets—possibly borrowed from Greek 'kartallos' (fruit-basket). The dual mention (gold basins and silver basins) suggests these were standard temple implements, perhaps for collecting offerings or holding sacrificial elements. Their return symbolized the restoration of proper worship after exile. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: basins-of | es: tazones-de, tazones-de- | fr: [אגרטלי] | de: [אגרטלי] Ezra 1:9

אֶגְרֹף H0106 Prep-b / N-ms (2×)

fist, clenched hand used for striking

The closed hand, used for punching or striking someone. Exodus 21:18 includes it in case law about violence: if men quarrel and one strikes another with a stone or with the fist, causing injury but not death, the striker owes compensation. Isaiah 58:4 condemns fasting accompanied by 'striking with a wicked fist'—religious performance alongside violence invalidates the fast. Both uses involve the fist as a weapon, the clenched hand employed to harm another person.

(2×) The Hebrew word appears in legal and prophetic contexts, always involving violence. Exodus 21 specifies 'fist' alongside 'stone' as potential weapons in assaults—close-combat violence requiring compensation. The Septuagint and Vulgate both use words for 'fist,' the Targum glosses with terms for club or staff (perhaps extending the meaning). Isaiah's indictment is sharper: you fast while striking people with wicked fists—external piety masking internal brutality. The fist represents aggressive, personal violence, hand-to-hand conflict rather than distant harm. FLESH AND BODY

en: with-a-fist, with-a-fist-of | es: con-el-puño-de, con-puño | fr: [באגרף], avec-un-fist | de: [באגרף], mit-ein-fist Exod 21:18; Isa 58:4

אִגֶּרֶת H0107 N-fpc / 3mp (10×)

Letter, epistle, written dispatch — a formal written communication, especially royal or official correspondence

The noun אִגֶּרֶת (iggeret) designates a formal letter or epistle, appearing exclusively in post-exilic literature (Chronicles, Ezra-Nehemiah, Esther). It is a loanword from Akkadian egirtu ('letter, document'), reflecting the Persian-period administrative vocabulary that pervades these books. Hezekiah sends letters throughout Israel and Judah summoning the people to Passover (2 Chr 30:1, 6). Nehemiah secures letters from King Artaxerxes granting safe passage and timber rights (Neh 2:7-9; 6:5, 17, 19). In Esther, the term carries life-and-death weight: Haman's letters decree genocide (Est 9:26, 29), and Mordecai's counter-letters establish Purim. Spanish 'carta/epístola' and French 'lettre' both capture the official register.

letter, epistle (10×) A formal written letter or epistle, specifically royal or official correspondence in the post-exilic period. Used for Hezekiah's Passover summons (2 Chr 30:1, 6), Nehemiah's letters of safe-conduct from Artaxerxes (Neh 2:7-9), threatening letters received by Nehemiah (Neh 6:5, 17, 19), and the pivotal dispatches in Esther that decree and then reverse the destruction of the Jews (Est 9:20, 26, 29). An Akkadian loanword (egirtu) reflecting the Persian administrative milieu of these books. Spanish 'carta,' French 'lettre,' and German 'Brief/Schreiben' all render it appropriately as formal correspondence. LETTERS AND WRITINGS

en: and-a-letter, and-letter, letter-of | es: Y-carta, carta-de, cartas | fr: et-lettre, in-lettres, lettre | de: Briefe, Schreiben, [אגרות] 2Chr 30:1; 2Chr 30:6; Neh 2:7; Neh 2:8; Neh 2:9

אֵד H0108 Prep-l / N-msc / 3ms (2×)
mist, vapor, or stream rising from the earth
A term appearing in two enigmatic texts. Genesis 2:6 describes a mist or stream rising from the earth to water the ground before the first rain. Job 36:27 refers to God drawing up drops of water as mist (the precise text is difficult). Ancient versions diverged: some saw 'spring' or 'fountain,' others 'mist' or 'cloud.' Recent scholarship connects it to Akkadian 'edu' (flood, mass of waters), suggesting subterranean water sources rather than atmospheric mist. Either way, it denotes primordial irrigation—God's provision of water before rain existed.

(2×) Genesis 2:6's 'ed' poses interpretive challenges. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate read 'spring' or 'fountain,' while Targum has 'cloud.' Modern scholars debate between atmospheric mist and subterranean streams welling up (comparing Akkadian flood/overflow terms). Job 36:27 compounds the difficulty—God draws up water droplets as or for 'his mist.' The concept involves pre-rain irrigation: before the flood, before seasonal rains, God watered the garden from underground sources. This primordial water system sustained Eden, testifying to God's creative care from the very beginning. CLOUDS AND SKY
en: And-mist, for-his-mist | es: Y-vapor, para-su-vapor | fr: Et-mist, à-son-לְאֹדוֹ-lui | de: [לְאֹדוֹ], und-ein-Dunst Gen 2:6; Job 36:27

אָדַב H0109 Conj-w (1×)
to grieve, cause grief — bring sorrow or emotional pain
This rare Hiphil verb appears in 1 Samuel 2:33, where God warns Eli that his remaining descendants will serve 'to grieve your heart.' The term denotes causing emotional pain or sorrow, fitting the broader context of divine judgment on Eli's priestly house. Some scholars propose emending to a root meaning 'pine away' (from דוב), but the traditional reading emphasizes psychological anguish as part of Eli's legacy of loss.

(1×) To cause grief or emotional pain (Hiphil infinitive construct with לְ prefix). Multilingual witnesses render the causative sense clearly: 'to grieve' (English), 'para entristecer' (Spanish), 'à affliger' (French). The infinitive expresses purpose in 1 Samuel 2:33, explaining why God preserves a remnant of Eli's line — not for blessing but to perpetuate sorrow and shame. GRIEF AND SORROW
en: and-to-grieve | es: y-para-entristecer | fr: et-à-affliger | de: und-zu-grieve 1Sam 2:33

אַדְבְּאֵל H0110 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Adbeel (personal name), third son of Ishmael
One of Ishmael's twelve sons (Genesis 25:13, 1 Chronicles 1:29), representing a north Arabian tribe. The name possibly relates to Arabic roots meaning 'invite' or 'discipline.' Assyrian records mention 'Idibaʾil' as a north Arabian tribal confederation, confirming the historical existence of this group. Minaean inscriptions also preserve similar names. Adbeel appears third in the list of Ishmael's sons, indicating one of the elder brothers among the twelve tribes descended from Abraham's son through Hagar.

(2×) Positioned in the Table of Nations as Ishmael's third son, Adbeel represents one node in the Arabian tribal network. Extrabiblical sources confirm the name: Assyrian annals reference Idibaʾil and variant spellings as Arabian groups encountered during imperial expansion. Minaean epigraphy includes the form 'Adbal.' The preservation of this name across Genesis and Chronicles, plus its attestation in Assyrian and Arabian sources, demonstrates the text's historical memory of pre-Islamic Arabian tribal confederations descended from Abrahamic lineages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Adbe'el, and-Adbeel | es: y-Adbeel | fr: [וְאַדְבְּאֵל], et-Adbeel | de: [וְאַדְבְּאֵל], und-Adbeel Gen 25:13; 1Chr 1:29

הֲדַד H0111 N-proper-ms (1×)
Hadad (Adad) — Edomite prince and adversary of Solomon
Hadad was an Edomite royal who became Solomon's adversary, escaping to Egypt as a child when David conquered Edom (1 Kings 11:14-22). The name derives from the Aramaic storm-god Hadad (also Adad), widely attested in ancient Near Eastern sources. This particular Hadad survived Joab's massacre, grew up in Pharaoh's court, married into Egyptian royalty, and later returned to trouble Israel's kingdom — embodying the persistent threat from Edom.

(1×) Personal name of an Edomite prince, Solomon's adversary, whose name invokes the Aramaic deity Hadad/Adad (storm-god). Translations vary between 'Hadad' (Spanish) and 'Adad' (English, French, German), reflecting variant vocalizations of the same Semitic theophoric name. The single reference in 1 Kings 11:17 situates him fleeing to Egypt, setting up his later role as political antagonist. HADAD BEN HADAD
en: Adad | es: Hadad | fr: Adad | de: Adad 1Kgs 11:17

אִדּוֹ H0112 N-proper-ms (2×)
Iddo (personal name), an Israelite leader at Casiphia
The chief of the temple servants at Casiphia, whom Ezra contacted to secure Levites for the return to Jerusalem (Ezra 8:17, mentioned twice in the verse). When Ezra realized no Levites had volunteered for the journey, he sent messengers to Iddo requesting ministers for the house of God. Iddo responded by sending Sherebiah, a capable man, along with eighteen kinsmen. This Iddo oversaw a community of temple servants in exile, maintaining their identity and readiness to serve.

(2×) Appearing twice in a single verse, Iddo emerges as a leader of the Nethinim (temple servants) at Casiphia, a location in Babylonia where a community of temple personnel lived during exile. Ezra's appeal to Iddo suggests his authority and influence—he could mobilize skilled Levites on short notice. The fact that a community of temple servants preserved their identity and training in exile, ready to return for temple service, testifies to leaders like Iddo who maintained vocational continuity across generations far from Jerusalem. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Iddo | es: Ido | fr: [אִדּוֹ] | de: [אִדּוֹ] Ezra 8:17

אָדוֹן H0113 N-mpc / 3ms (329×)
Lord, master, sovereign — title of authority for human superiors, property owners, God as supreme ruler, or plural lords
A foundational Hebrew title of authority and respect, 'adon conveys the relationship between a subordinate and the one who holds power over them. In everyday social life it served as a deferential address to kings, husbands, and military commanders — much like Arabic sayyidi or the Korean honorific ju-in. When applied to God, it takes on a theological weight that the Masoretes marked through special vowel pointing (Adonai), distinguishing divine sovereignty from mere human rank. The plural form sometimes intensifies the singular to express supreme majesty, while at other times it simply denotes multiple rulers or masters sharing authority.

1. lord, human superior (249×) Respectful address or reference to a human authority figure — a king, husband, commander, or social superior. This is by far the most frequent use (249x), functioning like the Arabic sayyidi or Spanish mi señor. The term expresses subordination and deference in direct speech (Gen 23:6 'my lord, hear us') and narrative reference alike. Cross-linguistic evidence confirms the honorific register: Korean ju-in-iyeo, Swahili bwana, and Hindi prabhu all carry the same respectful social distance. LORDS AND MASTERS
en: my-lord | es: mi-señor, señor-mío | fr: mon-seigneur | de: mein-Herr, mein-herr Gen 23:6; Gen 23:11; Gen 23:15; Gen 24:18; Gen 33:13

2. master, owner of servants (49×) The owner or proprietor who holds authority over servants, slaves, or property, emphasizing possession and control rather than mere social courtesy. Eliezer calls Abraham 'his master' (Gen 24:9-10), and Potiphar is Joseph's 'adon (Gen 39:2-3). Arabic sayyiduhu ('his master') and German sein Herr capture this possessive nuance. The relationship is legally and economically defined, not merely ceremonial. LORDS AND MASTERS
en: his-lord, his-master | es: señor-de-él, su-amo, su-señor | fr: son-maître, son-seigneur | de: sein-Herr, seines-Herrn Gen 24:9; Gen 24:10; Gen 39:2; Gen 39:3

3. the Lord, divine sovereign (18×) A divine title referring to God as sovereign Lord, often marked by the article or appearing in elevated theological contexts. The Masoretes distinguished this use through special vowel pointing (Adonai), and translators universally capitalize: English 'the Lord,' French le Seigneur, Swahili Bwana (capitalized). Abraham's address in Gen 18:3 and the liturgical formula 'the Lord, the Lord of all the earth' (Josh 3:11) illustrate this theologically charged usage. LORDS AND MASTERS
en: Adonai, lord-of, my-Lord | es: Adonai, Señor-de, a-mi-Señor | fr: Seigneur, le-Seigneur, le-seigneur | de: Herr, der-Herr, der-Herr-von Gen 18:3; Gen 19:2; Exod 23:17; Exod 34:23; Ezra 10:3

4. lords, masters plural (13×) The plural form denoting multiple human lords, masters, or rulers exercising collective authority. Deuteronomy 10:17 uses the superlative 'Lord of lords' (adonei ha-adonim), while Isaiah 26:13 laments 'other lords besides you have ruled over us.' Arabic broken plurals (sadah, asyad) and Swahili mabwana reflect the same morphological pattern for expressing plurality of authority. In Psalm 123:2 the plural captures the generic concept of masters whom servants watch for direction. LORDS AND MASTERS
en: lords, lords-their, masters | es: a-sus-señores, los-señores, señores | fr: le-adonim, le-seigneur, masters | de: Herr, der-adonim, der-lords Deut 10:17; 1Kgs 22:17; 2Chr 18:16; Neh 3:5; Ps 123:2

אַדּוֹן H0114 N-proper-ms (1×)
Addon — place in Babylonia from which exiles returned Addon appears in Nehemiah 7:61 as a Babylonian location from which certain families returned to Judah, though they could not prove their Israelite ancestry. The name is paired with other obscure place names (Cherub, Addon, Immer), marking settlements where Jewish exiles lived during the captivity. Its meaning and precise location remain unknown, serving primarily as a genealogical marker for families of uncertain lineage.

(1×) A place name in Babylonia, home to exiles who returned to Judah but lacked genealogical documentation. Multilingual renderings consistently transliterate 'Addon' or phonetic equivalents (Spanish 'Adón'), confirming its status as a proper noun. Nehemiah 7:61 lists it among locations whose returnees faced questions about their legitimate Israelite heritage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Addon | es: Adón | fr: [אדון] | de: [אדון] Neh 7:61

אֲדוֹרַיִם H0115 N-proper-ms (1×)
Adoraim — fortified city in Judah built by Rehoboam
Adoraim was one of the fortified cities built by King Rehoboam to defend Judah (2 Chronicles 11:9). The name possibly means 'two hills,' fitting the topography of the identified site at modern Dura, west of Hebron. Ancient sources like Josephus refer to it as Adora, and it remained significant in later periods. Rehoboam's defensive network demonstrates his strategic response to the divided kingdom, protecting Judah's southern and western approaches.

(1×) A fortified city in the hill country of Judah, likely meaning 'two hills' based on its dual form. All translations transliterate the name (English 'Adoraim,' Spanish 'Adoraim'), and the site is plausibly identified with Dura west of Hebron. The single reference in 2 Chronicles 11:9 places it within Rehoboam's defensive building program after the kingdom's division. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Adoraim | es: Adoraim | fr: [אדורים] | de: [אדורים] 2Chr 11:9

אֱדַיִן H0116 Conj-w / Adv (57×)
Then, at that time — Aramaic temporal adverb marking sequential or consequential action
The Aramaic adverb אֱדַיִן (edayin, 'then, at that time') is the primary temporal connective in biblical Aramaic, threading the narrative logic of Ezra and Daniel. It marks consequential sequence: a decree is issued, then officials act (Ezra 4:23-24); a question is posed, then an answer comes (Dan 2:14-15). In Daniel's court narratives, אֱדַיִן punctuates moments of crisis and resolution — 'then Daniel answered with counsel and wisdom' (Dan 2:14), 'then the king promoted Daniel' (Dan 2:48). Its consistent temporal force across all 57 occurrences makes it the Aramaic counterpart of Hebrew אָז.

then (57×) Aramaic temporal adverb meaning 'then, at that time, thereupon.' All 57 occurrences appear in the Aramaic sections of Ezra (4–7) and Daniel (2–7). Spanish 'entonces,' French 'alors,' and German 'dann/daraufhin' each capture the sequential-consequential force. The word typically opens a new narrative clause, signaling that what follows is a direct response to or result of the preceding action (Ezra 4:9, 23, 24; 5:2, 4; Dan 2:14, 17, 19, 35, 46, 48). THEN (TEMPORAL ADVERB)
en: then | es: Entonces, entonces | fr: alors, in-alors | de: dann, daraufhin, in-dann Ezra 4:9; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 4:24; Ezra 5:2; Ezra 5:4

אַדִּיר H0117 Prep-m / N-mpc (27×)
Majestic, mighty; noble — describing grandeur in nature, God, or rulers; substantively, a noble or leader
The adjective addir paints with a broad brush of grandeur: mighty waters in the song of the sea (Exod 15:10), the majestic name of YHWH bracketing Psalm 8, powerful gods terrifying the Philistines (1 Sam 4:8), and the towering cedar of Ezekiel 17:23. When used as a substantive, it shifts from quality to social role — the nobles who refuse to bend their necks to the work of the LORD (Neh 3:5), the chieftains of Judges 5:13-25, and the shepherds-as-rulers of Jeremiah 25:34-36. German distinguishes herrlich ('glorious') from maechtig ('mighty'), and Spanish separates majestuoso from poderoso, reflecting an internal semantic boundary between splendor and raw power.

1. nobles, leaders (13×) Used as a substantive for nobles, chiefs, or leaders of a people — those who hold social authority. Deborah's song celebrates the nobles who marched with her (Judg 5:13, 25), Nehemiah names nobles who refused to work (Neh 3:5) and those who sealed the covenant (Neh 10:29), and Jeremiah addresses the 'mighty ones of the flock' as doomed rulers (Jer 25:34-36). Spanish nobles and French nobles confirm the social-rank reading, while German der-Edlen ('the noble ones') reinforces the substantival pattern. POWER AND ABILITY
en: -the-nobles, and-nobles-their, and-the-nobles | es: Y-nobles-su, a-los-nobles, de-nobles-de | fr: -le-nobles, [אדיריהם], [האדירים] | de: -der-nobles, [אדיריהם], [אדיריו] Judg 5:13; Judg 5:25; 2Chr 23:20; Neh 3:5; Neh 10:29

2. majestic, glorious, magnificent (8×) An adjective of majesty, splendor, and glory — applied to God, His name, and impressive natural or royal phenomena. Psalm 8:1, 9 frames its hymn with 'how majestic is your name in all the earth,' Psalm 93:4 declares YHWH more majestic than mighty waters, and Psalm 76:4 praises God as glorious from the mountains of prey. Spanish majestuoso, German herrlich ('glorious'), and French majestueux all cluster here, distinguishing aesthetic grandeur from brute force. POWER AND ABILITY
en: YHWH, majestic, not | es: grande, majestuoso, majestuosos | fr: majestueux, puissant | de: [אדיר], herrlich, maechtig Ps 8:1; Ps 8:9; Ps 76:4; Ps 93:4

3. mighty, powerful (6×) An adjective or substantive emphasizing raw might and power — the overwhelming force of mighty waters, powerful nations, or fearsome gods. The waters at the Red Sea are addir (Exod 15:10), the Philistines tremble before 'mighty gods' (1 Sam 4:8), and Ezekiel depicts Egypt's downfall among mighty nations (Ezek 32:18). Spanish poderoso/poderosas, German maechtig ('mighty'), and French puissant mark the shift from aesthetic majesty to sheer force. POWER AND ABILITY
en: by-mighty-one, majestic, majestic-ones | es: los-majestuosos, los-poderosos, poderosas | fr: le-puissant, majestueux, puissant | de: [אדרים], [אדרם], der-maechtig Exod 15:10; 1Sam 4:8; Ps 136:18; Isa 10:34; Ezek 32:18

אֲדַלְיָא H0118 N-proper-ms (1×)
Adalia — fifth son of Haman, killed by the Jews Adalia was the fifth of Haman's ten sons, all killed on the day the Jews defended themselves in Susa (Esther 9:8). The name appears to be of Persian origin, fitting the book's setting in the Achaemenid court. The listing of all ten sons by name emphasizes the complete reversal of Haman's genocidal plot — not only was the villain hanged, but his entire male lineage was cut off, eliminating future retribution.

(1×) Personal name (likely Persian) of Haman's fifth son, executed when the Jews defended themselves against their enemies in Susa. Translations uniformly transliterate the name (English 'Adalia,' Spanish 'Adalía'), preserving its foreign phonology. The single occurrence in Esther 9:8 functions within the literary motif of complete reversal: the would-be destroyer's entire household is destroyed. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Adalia | es: Adalía | fr: [אדליא] | de: [אדליא] Esth 9:8

אָדַם H0119 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (10×)

To be red or become red; in passive (Pu'al), to be dyed red, as of rams' skins for the Tabernacle.

A color verb whose meaning pivots on voice and stem. In the Pu'al (passive), it describes an external dyeing process—rams' skins 'dyed red' for the Tabernacle covering, repeated seven times across the Exodus construction narratives (25:5; 26:14; 35:7, 23; 36:19; 39:34). In the active and stative stems, it describes inherent redness: the ruddy beauty of Nazirites before the siege (Lam 4:7), the reddening of wine as a warning against drunkenness (Prov 23:31), and the scarlet stain of sin that God can make white as snow (Isa 1:18). Spanish confirms the split: 'teñidas de rojo' (dyed red) for the Tabernacle skins versus 'eran rojos/se enrojece' (were red/turns red) for natural redness.

1. dyed red, reddened (7×) Pu'al passive participle: to have been dyed or made red through an artificial process. Used exclusively of the rams' skins prepared for the Tabernacle (Exod 25:5; 26:14; 35:7, 23; 36:19; 39:34) and Nahum's reddened shields (Nah 2:4). Spanish 'teñidas de rojo/enrojecido' and French 'teint rouge' uniformly indicate externally applied color, distinguishing crafted materials from natural redness. RED AND SCARLET

en: dyed-red, is-reddened, the-dyed-red | es: enrojecidas, enrojecido, las-teñidas-de-rojo | fr: le-teint-rouge, teint-rouge, être-rouge | de: der-gefaerbt-rot, gefaerbt-rot, von-Mensch Exod 25:5; Exod 26:14; Exod 35:7; Exod 35:23; Exod 36:19

2. be red, become red (3×) Active/stative sense across Qal, Hithpa'el, and Hif'il stems: to be or become red as an inherent quality or natural process. The Qal perfect describes the ruddy complexion of Jerusalem's Nazirites before famine (Lam 4:7), the Hithpa'el imperfect captures wine reddening in the cup as a visual temptation (Prov 23:31), and the Hif'il imperfect portrays sins that 'show redness like crimson' yet can be cleansed (Isa 1:18). Spanish 'eran rojos/se enrojece' and English 'they were red/it is red' point to color as a natural state rather than an applied dye. RED AND SCARLET

en: it-is-red, they-are-red, they-were-red | es: eran-rojos, fueran-rojos, se-enrojece | fr: [אדמו], [יאדימו], יתאדם | de: [אדמו], [יאדימו], [יתאדם] Prov 23:31; Isa 1:18; Lam 4:7

אָדָם H0120 N-msc (552×)

Man, human being; mankind/humanity collectively; also the proper name Adam.

The Hebrew אָדָם covers a remarkably wide range—from a single individual ('a man') to the entire human species ('mankind') to the proper name of the first human. Unlike אִישׁ, which emphasizes a male person in contrast to a woman, אָדָם stresses the creature as such: mortal, earth-born, made in God's image. The etymological link to אֲדָמָה ('ground, soil') resonates throughout Scripture, from Genesis 2:7 where God forms the man from the dust of the ground, to Ecclesiastes' reflections on human mortality. Arabic preserves the same spectrum: آدم as the proper name, إنسان for the generic human being.

1. man, human being (individual/generic) (527×) An individual human being or 'man' in the generic sense (any person, someone), covering the vast majority of occurrences (527 times). Functions in legal texts ('if a man brings an offering,' Lev 1:2), proverbial wisdom ('blessed is the man,' Ps 1:1), and narrative. Distinguished from אִישׁ by its species-level focus: not 'a male' but 'a human.' Spanish 'hombre,' French 'homme,' and German 'Mensch/Mann' all serve here, though German 'Mensch' (human) better captures the non-gendered force than 'Mann' (male). Includes all inflected forms with prepositions and conjunctions. MAN AND HUMANITY

en: man | es: al-hombre, hombre | fr: homme | de: Mann, Mensch, von-einem-Menschen Gen 1:26; Gen 16:12; Exod 13:13; Exod 13:15; Exod 30:32

2. mankind, humanity (collective) (19×) Humanity or mankind as a collective whole—the human race considered as a category or species (19 occurrences). Appears in contexts of universal scope or dominion: 'any man' in the sense of 'any mortal at all' (Judg 16:7, 11, 17), or rulers set 'over mankind' (2 Sam 23:3). The multilingual glosses use constructions like 'among-humanity,' 'de-entre-hombre' (Spanish), and 'dans-homme' (French), signaling a partitive or categorical reading distinct from the individual sense. Often carries overtones of human limitation or mortality in contrast to divine power. MAN AND HUMANITY

en: among-humanity, among-mankind, and-among-man | es: como-hombre, de-entre-hombre, de-hombres | fr: au-dessus-homme, comme-homme, dans-homme | de: Mensch, der-Maenner, der-Mensch Josh 11:14; Judg 16:7; Judg 16:11; Judg 16:17; 2Sam 23:3

3. Adam (proper name) (6×) The proper name 'Adam,' referring to the first man in the Genesis creation account (6 occurrences). Identified by anarthrous usage in genealogical and narrative contexts: Gen 5:1–2 ('the book of the generations of Adam'), Gen 2:20, 3:21. Arabic آدم and Korean 아담 consistently transliterate the name, while Swahili uses 'Adamu.' The boundary between the common noun and the proper name is famously fluid in Genesis 2–3, but these six passages treat it unambiguously as a personal name in genealogical or naming contexts. MAN AND HUMANITY

en: Adam, and-for-man, for-Adam | es: Adán, hombre, para-hombre | fr: Adam, et-pour-homme, homme | de: Adam, Mensch, aber-für-Adam Gen 2:20; Gen 3:21; Gen 5:1; Gen 5:2; Deut 32:8

אָדָם H0121 Prep-k / N-ms (11×)

Adam: the first human being in Genesis; also a city near the Jordan River

One of the most resonant names in Scripture, serving double duty as both a personal name and a place name. As a person, Adam is the first human created by God, central to the Genesis narrative of origins, the fall, and the genealogies that trace humanity's descent (Gen 3:17; 5:1-5; 1 Chr 1:1). The name itself is wordplay on 'adamah' (ground), from which God formed him. In Hosea 6:7 'like Adam' evokes covenant-breaking. As a place, Adam is the city beside Zarethan where the Jordan's waters stood in a heap during Israel's crossing (Josh 3:16). German distinguishes 'Adam' for the person from 'bei Adam' for the locale, while Spanish and French use 'Adan/Adam' for both.

1. Adam (person) (9×) The proper name Adam, the first human being in the biblical narrative. God forms Adam from the ground ('adamah') and places him in Eden (Gen 2:7-8). After the fall, God addresses him directly: 'And to Adam he said...' (Gen 3:17). The genealogies trace descent from Adam through Seth (Gen 4:25; 5:1-5), and 1 Chronicles 1:1 opens its lineage with his name. Hosea 6:7 invokes Adam as the archetype of covenant violation: 'like Adam, they transgressed the covenant.' Job 31:33 may likewise allude to Adam hiding his transgression. French 'Adam' and Spanish 'Adan' preserve the name across traditions. ADAM PERSON PLACE

en: Adam, And-to-Adam, like-Adam | es: Adam, Adán, Y-a-hombre | fr: Adam, Et-à-Adam, comme-כאדם | de: Adam, Adams, Mensch Gen 3:17; Gen 4:25; Gen 5:1; Gen 5:3; Gen 5:4

2. Adam (place) (2×) A toponym designating the city of Adam, located near the Jordan River beside Zarethan. In Joshua 3:16 the waters flowing downstream 'stood still, rising up in a single heap, far off at Adam, the city beside Zarethan,' enabling Israel's miraculous crossing. The dual occurrence in the same verse (once as the city name, once in the locative phrase) underscores the geographic specificity. German 'bei Adam' and French 'a Adam' mark the prepositional, locative usage that distinguishes the place from the person. ADAM PERSON PLACE

en: K, at-Adam | es: [en-Adán], desde-Adán | fr: K, à-Adam | de: K, bei-Adam Josh 3:16

אָדֹם H0122a Conj-w / Adj-ms (7×)
Red, ruddy; a color adjective describing reddish hue in skin, animals, water, or garments.
The adjective ʾādōm means 'red' or 'ruddy,' applied across a range of physical descriptions. It portrays the beloved's complexion as healthy and attractive (Song 5:10, 'my beloved is ruddy'), specifies the unblemished red heifer required for purification rites (Num 19:2), and describes water that appeared red as blood to the Moabites (2 Kgs 3:22). Isaiah uses it for the crimson stains on the divine warrior's garments (Isa 63:2), while Zechariah's visions include red horses (Zech 1:8). Spanish rojo and French vermeil both reflect the vivid chromatic sense.

red, ruddy (color adjective) (7×) Red or ruddy in color — a straightforward color adjective applied to diverse physical referents: the attractive complexion of a person (Song 5:10, 'my beloved is ruddy and dazzling'), the red heifer prescribed for purification (Num 19:2), water appearing blood-red (2 Kgs 3:22), garments stained crimson from treading the winepress (Isa 63:2), and the red horses of Zechariah's vision (Zech 1:8). Spanish rojo and French vermeil both convey this vivid redness. The related proper noun Edom ('the red one') shares this root. RED AND SCARLET en: and-ruddy, is-red, red | es: roja, rojas, rojo | fr: [אדם], et-vermeil,, homme | de: Mensch, rot, und-Edom Num 19:2; 2Kgs 3:22; Song 5:10; Isa 63:2; Zech 1:8

אָדֹם H0122b Art / Adj-ms (2×)
the red (stew or pottage)
The famous 'red stuff' that Esau craved when he sold his birthright (Genesis 25:30, twice in the verse). The text emphasizes the redness: 'Let me gulp down some of that red, that red stuff!' The Masoretic pointing ('ha-adom') stresses the color, which gives Esau his nickname 'Edom' (red). Traditionally understood as red lentil stew, the narrative fixates on Esau's impulsive appetite—he's so focused on the immediate sensory experience (red, hot, savory) that he trades away his inheritance for a meal.

(2×) Genesis 25:30 repeats 'the red' twice for emphasis: Esau wants 'that red, that red.' The redness becomes his identity—he's called Edom from that moment. Commentators universally understand this as thick red lentil pottage, a common dish that Jacob happened to be cooking. The color dominates Esau's perception: not 'food' or 'stew' but 'the red.' This linguistic choice underscores Esau's animalistic, sense-driven nature—he sees color and wants it, trading eternal blessing for momentary satisfaction. The wordplay (red stew → Edom) forever links his descendents to this impulsive transaction. RED AND SCARLET en: the-red | es: el-rojo | fr: le-rouge | de: dem-Roten Gen 25:30

אֱדוֹם H0123 Conj-w (100×)
Edom — Esau's byname meaning 'red,' and by extension the nation, territory, and people descended from him southeast of the Dead Sea Edom functions simultaneously as a personal name for Esau and as the designation for his descendants and their territory in the rugged highlands southeast of the Dead Sea. The etymology is anchored in Genesis 25:30, where Esau begs for 'that red stuff' (ha-adom) and earns the nickname. Across 100 occurrences the name covers the patriarch himself (Gen 36:1, 8), the nation collectively (Num 20:18-21; 2 Sam 8:14), and the land as a geographical entity (Gen 32:3; Jer 49:17). Prophetic literature turns Edom into a type of hostile opposition to God's people — Obadiah's entire oracle targets Edom, and Malachi 1:4 portrays its desolation as proof of divine judgment.

1. Edom (nation, territory, people) (96×) Split from sense 80027. Criteria: The nation descended from Esau, their territory south of the Dead Sea, or the collective people; prophetic oracles against Edom; political/military contexts (Num 20:14-21; 1 Sam 14:47; Obadiah)
en: Edom | es: Edom | fr: Édom | de: Edom, Edoms Gen 32:3; Gen 36:9; Gen 36:16; Gen 36:17; Gen 36:19

2. Edom (Esau the person) (3×) Split from sense 80027. Criteria: Personal name referring to Jacob's twin brother Esau; contexts of Genesis narratives where Esau/Edom is an individual character (Gen 25:30; 36:1, 8)
en: Edom | es: Edom | fr: Édom | de: Edom Gen 25:30; Gen 36:1; Gen 36:8

אֹדֶם H0124 N-ms (3×)
carnelian, ruby; a red precious stone, possibly sardius
This Hebrew noun denotes a red precious stone, traditionally rendered 'ruby' or 'carnelian,' though exact identification is uncertain. The name derives from its red color (from the root meaning 'to be red'). In Exodus 28:17 and 39:10, it is the first stone in the first row of the high priest's breastplate, representing one of Israel's twelve tribes. Ezekiel 28:13 lists it among the precious stones adorning the king of Tyre in Eden, the garden of God—a description of primeval splendor. The reddish hue made it highly valued in the ancient world, whether as carnelian (a red variety of chalcedony) or a true ruby.

(3×) Translations vary: English 'ruby,' Spanish 'cornerina, rubí' (carnelian, ruby), French 'rougeur, rubis' (redness, ruby), German 'Rubin' (though one shows 'Mensch'/man, likely an error). Exodus 28:17 and 39:10 place the stone first in the high priest's breastplate, symbolizing one of Israel's tribes. Ezekiel 28:13 includes it in the lavish description of the king of Tyre's Edenic state, evoking original beauty and perfection before the fall. The red color connects to blood, life, and royalty. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH
en: ruby | es: cornerina, rubí | fr: rougeur, rubis | de: Mensch, Rubin Exod 28:17; Exod 39:10; Ezek 28:13

אַדַמְדָּם H0125 Adj-ms (6×)
Reddish, reddish-tinged; used exclusively of the color of leprous skin eruptions in Levitical diagnostic law.
A reduplicative adjective derived from the root אדם ('to be red'), describing a reddish hue in skin lesions. Every occurrence appears in Leviticus 13-14 within priestly instructions for diagnosing skin diseases. The word captures an ambiguous, not-quite-red discoloration that priests had to evaluate carefully. Translations across languages consistently render it as 'reddish' (French rougeâtre, Spanish rojiza), reflecting the diminutive or approximate force of the Hebrew reduplication.

(6×) Reddish or reddish-tinged, describing the color of suspicious skin eruptions examined by priests under the Levitical purity code. All six occurrences fall within Lev 13:19-49 and 14:37, applied to swellings, scabs, bright spots, garment marks, and house walls that may indicate ceremonial uncleanness. The reduplicative form (אַדַמְדָּם) conveys an approximate or subdued redness, as the multilingual glosses uniformly confirm: French rougeâtre, Spanish rojiza, German reddish. RED AND SCARLET en: reddish | es: rojiza, rojizas | fr: rougeâtre | de: reddish Lev 13:19; Lev 13:24; Lev 13:42; Lev 13:43; Lev 13:49

אַדְמָה H0126 Prep-k / N-proper-fs (5×)
Admah — a city in the Vale of Siddim, destroyed alongside Sodom and Gomorrah Admah was one of the five 'cities of the plain' in the Vale of Siddim, listed alongside Sodom, Gomorrah, Zeboiim, and Zoar. Its five occurrences trace a narrative arc: first in the Table of Nations as a Canaanite border city (Gen 10:19), then in the alliance of kings defeated by the eastern coalition (Gen 14:2, 8), and finally as a byword for divine judgment. Deuteronomy 29:23 names Admah alongside Sodom in describing covenant-curse devastation, and Hosea 11:8 — 'How can I make you like Admah?' — reveals God's anguished reluctance to destroy Ephraim as he did this ancient city. The multilingual glosses confirm the name's stability across traditions.

(5×) The proper name Admah, designating a Canaanite city in the Vale of Siddim that was destroyed by divine judgment alongside Sodom and Gomorrah. Appears in the Table of Nations as a border marker (Gen 10:19), in the narrative of the battle of the kings (Gen 14:2, 8), and in two later allusions to its destruction: as a covenant-curse exemplar (Deut 29:23) and in God's poignant rhetorical question about Ephraim's fate (Hos 11:8). Prepositional forms ('like Admah,' 'and Admah') reflect syntactic variation rather than any semantic distinction. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Admah, and-Admah, like-Admah | es: Adma, Admá, como-Adma | fr: Admah, et-Admah, terre | de: Admah, [כאדמה], und-Adma Gen 10:19; Gen 14:2; Gen 14:8; Deut 29:23; Hos 11:8

אַדָמָה H0127 Prep-l / N-fsc / 3ms (225×)

Ground, land, soil; cultivable earth, homeland, territory; the physical substance from which humanity was formed.

Adamah is the ground that gives adam (humanity) its name — a wordplay already present at creation (Gen 2:7). It denotes first the fertile, cultivable earth that yields produce when tilled (Gen 2:5; 3:17), then broadens to mean homeland or national territory, as in the covenant phrase 'the adamah which the LORD your God gives you' (Deut 7:13). Arabic أرض and Spanish tierra cover the full range, while German distinguishes Erdboden (soil) from Land (territory), and Korean separates 땅 (land) from 흙 (soil). The theological arc is striking: humanity is taken from the adamah, cursed upon it, exiled from it, and ultimately promised restoration to it.

1. ground, land (territory) (210×) Cultivable land, territory, homeland — the dominant and broadest sense (210 occurrences). Covers both the arable ground of Gen 2:5, 9 and the promised national territory of Deuteronomy's covenant language ('the adamah which the LORD swore to your fathers,' Deut 7:13; 28:11). Arabic أرض, Spanish tierra, and French terre all serve this encompassing sense. In prophetic usage it becomes virtually synonymous with 'eretz (land) but retains the earthy, agricultural connotation. EARTH AND LAND

en: the-ground | es: la-tierra | fr: le-moulu | de: Erdboden, dem-Erdboden, den-Erdboden Gen 1:25; Gen 2:5; Gen 2:6; Gen 2:7; Gen 2:9

2. soil, dust (substance) (8×) The physical substance of the earth — soil, clay, dust — viewed as raw material rather than territory. God forms adam from the afar min ha-adamah (dust from the ground, Gen 2:7), and Naaman takes two mule-loads of Israelite adamah back to Syria (2 Kgs 5:17). German 'Erde' (earth-substance), Korean 흙 (soil), and the contrast with sense 1 in Exod 20:24 ('an altar of adamah') confirm this material reading. The eight occurrences cluster around creation, death, and ritual contexts. EARTH AND LAND

en: and-earth, and-from-the-ground, earth | es: a-su-tierra, de-tierra, tierra | fr: et-sol, et-terre, et-ומאדמה | de: Erde, und-Erde, und-von-Erde Exod 20:24; 1Sam 4:12; 2Sam 1:2; 2Sam 15:32; 2Kgs 5:17

3. ground surface (underfoot) (4×) The surface of the ground as a spatial reference — the plane underfoot where things fall, crawl, or rest. In Gen 4:2 (creatures on the adamah), Lev 20:25, and Deut 4:18, the word designates the ground surface as habitat for creeping things, distinct from both the territorial and the material senses. French 'sol' and German 'Boden' (floor/ground) capture this locative usage. Ps 104:30 uses it for the renewed face of the ground. EARTH AND LAND

en: ground, on-the-ground, the-ground | es: en-la-tierra, tierra | fr: le-sol, moulu, sol | de: auf-der-Boden, der-Boden, der-ground Gen 4:2; Lev 20:25; Deut 4:18; Ps 104:30

4. farmland, arable ground (2×) Farmland or arable fields as a specific agricultural designation, narrower than the broad territorial sense. In Ps 105:35 the locusts devour 'all the vegetation of their adamah,' and Isa 1:7 describes foreigners consuming 'your adamah.' Spanish 'suelo' (soil/plot) and the possessive constructions ('their ground,' 'your ground') mark this as cultivated acreage rather than national homeland. EARTH AND LAND

en: their-ground, your-ground | es: su-suelo, vuestro-suelo | fr: sol | de: Erde, ihr-ground Ps 105:35; Isa 1:7

5. (1×) A rare plural form (adamot) meaning 'lands' or 'estates' — in Ps 49:11 the wealthy name 'their adamot after themselves.' The plural suggests distinct parcels or landed estates rather than the singular concept of ground or homeland. Spanish 'tierras' and English 'lands' capture this distributive plural. This is likely a contextual narrowing of sense 1 rather than a fully independent sense. EARTH AND LAND

en: lands | es: tierras | fr: sol | de: lands Ps 49:11

אַדָמָה H0128 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Adamah — fortified city in the territory of Naphtali

Adamah was one of the fortified cities allocated to the tribe of Naphtali (Joshua 19:36). The name means 'ground' or 'earth' in Hebrew, though here it functions as a place name. Its exact location remains uncertain, though it was situated in the northeastern region of ancient Israel. The list of fortified cities highlights the strategic importance of Naphtali's territory, which bordered Phoenicia and commanded key routes in Galilee.

(1×) A fortified city in Naphtali's tribal inheritance, distinct from the common noun 'ground' (אֲדָמָה) though sharing the same form. Multilingual witnesses treat it as a proper noun: 'Adamah' (English), 'Adama' (Spanish), preserving the name without semantic translation. Joshua 19:36 positions it among Naphtali's defensive strongholds in the northern hill country. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Adamah | es: y-Adama | fr: et-Adamah | de: und-Adamah Josh 19:36

אַדְמִי הַנֶּקֶב H0129 Conj-w / N-proper (1×)

Adami-nekeb — place (or two places) in Naphtali's border description

Adami-nekeb appears in the boundary description of Naphtali's territory (Joshua 19:33). Scholars debate whether this represents one compound place name ('Adami of the Pass') or two separate locations. The second element, 'nekeb,' means 'pass' or 'gorge,' suggesting a geographical feature. The phrase marks a point on Naphtali's southern border, helping define the tribe's territorial limits in the northern hill country.

(1×) Either a compound place name meaning 'Adami of the Pass' or two distinct locations (Adami and Nekeb) on Naphtali's border. Translations render it variously: 'Adami-neceb' (Spanish, treating it as one name) or 'Adami' (English, French, German). Joshua 19:33 uses it as a boundary marker, likely denoting a strategic pass or gorge controlling access to Naphtali's territory. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Adami | es: y-Adami-neceb | fr: et-Adami | de: und-Adami Josh 19:33

אֲדֹמִי H0130 N-proper-mp (12×)

Edomi – Edomite; a person from Edom, the nation descended from Esau, east and south of the Dead Sea

The gentilic noun Edomi (Hebrew אֲדֹמִי, 'Edomite') designates a person belonging to the nation of Edom, the territory southeast of the Dead Sea settled by the descendants of Esau (Gen 36). Despite the enmity between Israel and Edom, the Torah commands: 'Do not abhor an Edomite, for he is your brother' (Deut 23:7). The term is applied most memorably to Doeg the Edomite, Saul's chief herdsman who betrayed the priests of Nob (1 Sam 21:7; 22:9, 18; Ps 52 title). It also appears in reference to Edomite women among Solomon's foreign wives (1 Kgs 11:1) and to the Edomites as enemies in Hadad's narrative (1 Kgs 11:14-17). All twelve occurrences denote the same ethnic identity with only number and gender inflection varying.

Edomite (gentilic noun) (12×) A person from Edom, the nation descended from Esau. Applied notably to Doeg the Edomite (1 Sam 21:7; 22:9, 18; Ps 52 title), to Edomite women (1 Kgs 11:1), and in the command not to abhor an Edomite (Deut 23:7). Spanish edomita, French Edomite, and German Edomiter confirm one gentilic sense across singular, plural, masculine, and feminine forms. PROPER

NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: (and-Edomim), Edomim, Edomite | es: a-edomita, edomitas, el-edomita | fr: (and-Edomim), Edomite, Edomite-femmes | de: Edomite, Edomite-Frauen, Edomiter Deut 23:7; 1Sam 21:8; 1Sam 22:9; 1Sam 22:18; 1Sam 22:22

מַעֲלֵה H0131 N-proper-fs (2×)

Adummim (place name: 'the red [ascent]'), a mountain pass

The Ascent of Adummim, a steep pass on the road from the Jordan Valley up to Jerusalem, marking the boundary between Benjamin and Judah (Joshua 15:7, 18:17). The name means 'red [ascent],' possibly from the reddish rock formations or desert soil. Modern identification points to Tal'at ed-Damm (meaning 'ascent of blood'), the steep climb from Jericho toward Jerusalem. This dangerous route through wilderness and cliffs became notorious—Jesus's parable of the Good Samaritan is set on this very road.

(2×) The Ascent of Adummim served as a fixed geographic marker in tribal boundary descriptions. Located south of the Valley of Achor, it marked the critical climb from the Jordan depression up to the Judean hills. The name's reference to 'red' aligns with the modern Arabic name (Tal'at ed-Damm), suggesting continuity of designation. This route's isolation and danger made it ideal for the parable of the Good Samaritan—a priest and Levite would naturally travel this road from Jericho to Jerusalem, and bandits would naturally prey on vulnerable travelers in the desolate stretches. PERSONAL NAMES en: Adummim | es: Adumim | fr: Adummim | de: Adummim Josh 15:7; Josh 18:17

אַדְמוֹנִי H0132 Adj-ms (3×)

red, ruddy; having a reddish or healthy complexion

This Hebrew adjective means red or ruddy, describing a reddish complexion or coloring. Genesis 25:25 describes Esau at birth: 'The first came out red, all over like a hairy garment'—his redness gave rise to his name Edom (red). 1 Samuel 16:12 describes young David as 'ruddy, with bright eyes and good-looking,' a picture of youthful health and vigor. 1 Samuel 17:42 similarly notes David's ruddy complexion when Goliath first sees him. In ancient Near Eastern contexts, a ruddy complexion indicated health, vitality, and attractiveness. The term can denote literal red color (as with Esau's skin) or the healthy flush of youth (as with David).

(3×) Translations reflect both red color and ruddy complexion: English 'red, ruddy,' Spanish 'rojizo' (reddish), French 'rouge, ruddy,' German 'rötlich' (reddish). Genesis 25:25 emphasizes Esau's unusual redness at birth, connecting to the name Edom. 1 Samuel 16:12 describes David's ruddy good looks when Samuel anoints him—a sign of youth and health. 1 Samuel 17:42 notes the same ruddy appearance when Goliath sizes up his youthful opponent. The term conveys vitality and health, not just color. RED AND SCARLET
en: and-ruddy, red, ruddy | es: rojizo, y-rojizo | fr: et-ruddy, rouge, ruddy | de: ruddy, rötlich, und-ruddy Gen 25:25; 1Sam 16:12; 1Sam 17:42

אַדְמָתָא H0133 N-proper-ms (1×)

Admatha — one of seven Persian nobles who advised King Ahasuerus

Admatha was one of the seven princes of Persia and Media who had special access to King Ahasuerus (Esther 1:14). These nobles served as the king's chief advisors, wielding significant influence at court. The name may derive from Persian 'admâta' (unrestrained), though its etymology remains uncertain. This council convened to address Queen Vashti's refusal, ultimately recommending her deposition — a decision that opened the way for Esther's rise.

(1×) Personal name (Persian origin) of a high-ranking noble in Ahasuerus's court, one of seven princes with direct royal access. Multilingual sources transliterate the name consistently (English 'Admatha,' Spanish 'Admata'), preserving its foreign character. Esther 1:14 depicts him as part of the inner circle consulted on matters of royal protocol and Persian law. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Admatha | es: Admata | fr: [אדמתא] | de: [אדמתא] Esth 1:14

אֶדֶן H0134 N-mpc (57×)

Socket, pedestal base (of the Tabernacle); broadly, foundation or base of a structure

Designates the metal socket or pedestal base into which the upright boards and pillars of the Tabernacle were set, typically cast from silver or bronze. The vast majority of its 57 occurrences cluster in the Tabernacle construction texts of Exodus and Numbers, where pairs of sockets anchor each plank. Outside this technical usage, it appears in two memorable poetic passages: Job 38:6 asks who sank the foundations (אַדְנֶיהָ) of the earth, and Song 5:15 describes the beloved's legs as pillars set on pedestals of fine gold. The Spanish 'basas' and French 'bases' consistently reflect the architectural meaning.

1. socket or pedestal base (55×) The primary technical sense (55x): a metal socket or pedestal base used in Tabernacle construction. Each board required two silver sockets (Exod 26:19–21), and each pillar one bronze socket, totaling nearly a hundred for the entire structure. Multilingual glosses ('bases/basas/bases/Fuesse') consistently render architectural hardware. The Exodus 38:27 summary tallies one hundred sockets from one hundred talents of silver, emphasizing their material weight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-their-bases, bases | es: basas, y-basas-de-ellas, y-sus-basas | fr: bases, et-leur-bases | de: Fuesse, und-ihr-Fuesse, und-ihr-bases Exod 26:19; Exod 26:21

2. foundation of a structure (2×) An extended architectural or cosmological sense (2x), used for the foundations of larger structures. In Job 38:6, God challenges Job about who laid the earth's אַדְנֶיהָ — its foundation pedestals — parallel to its cornerstone, evoking cosmic architecture. In Song 5:15, the beloved's legs rest on אַדְנֵי פָז 'pedestals of fine gold,' transferring the image from sacred architecture to human beauty. The shift from cultic hardware to cosmic and literary metaphor marks a distinct semantic extension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: its-foundations, pedestals-of- | es: bases-de-, sus-bases | fr: des-bases, sa-אדניה-elle | de: Herr, [אדניה] Job 38:6; Song 5:15

אַדָּן H0135 N-proper-fs (1×)

Addan — Babylonian location from which exiles returned without genealogical proof

Addan appears in Ezra 2:59 as a Babylonian place name, paired with Tel-melah, Tel-harsha, Cherub, and Immer. Families from these locations returned to Judah but could not establish their Israelite lineage. The name's meaning remains unknown, and its precise location in Babylonia is uncertain. It serves primarily as a genealogical marker, highlighting the challenge of maintaining ethnic and religious identity during the seventy-year exile.

(1×) A place in Babylonia, home to Jewish exiles whose descendants lacked documentation proving their lineage when returning to Jerusalem. Translations uniformly transliterate the name (English 'Addan,' Spanish 'Adán'), treating it as an uninterpreted foreign toponym. Ezra 2:59 groups it with other exile settlements whose returnees faced questions about their legitimate tribal or priestly status. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Addan | es: Adán | fr: [אדן] | de: [אדן] Ezra 2:59

אָדוֹן H0136 N-mpc / 1cp (445×)

Lord, master – as divine title (Adonai, Lord God) and as respectful address to a human superior.

Adon is one of the most theologically weighty words in the Hebrew Bible. In its overwhelmingly dominant use, it serves as the divine title Adonai ('my Lord'), the spoken substitute for the Tetragrammaton YHWH, expressing God's sovereign lordship and personal covenant relationship with Israel (Gen 15:2, 'O Lord GOD'). The Masoretic vowel pointing deliberately distinguishes divine from human reference. In a handful of passages it retains its older secular meaning of 'lord' or 'master,' addressing a human superior with deference (Josh 3:11, 'the Lord of all the earth'; Judg 6:15, 'O my lord'). All major traditions uniformly render the divine sense with their supreme title: spa 'Senor,' fra 'Seigneur,' deu 'Herr.'

1. Lord (divine title) (440×) The divine title Adonai, used 440 times to address or refer to God as sovereign Lord. This includes direct prayer address (Gen 15:2, 'O Lord GOD, what will you give me?'), prophetic invocations (Deut 3:24, 'O Lord GOD, you have begun to show your servant your greatness'), and liturgical declarations. The intensive plural form with first-person suffix (adonay) signals majesty. Cross-linguistically every tradition uses its highest title: spa 'Senor/Adonai,' fra 'Seigneur,' deu 'Herr,' reflecting the universal recognition of divine sovereignty. LORDS AND MASTERS
en: Adonai, Lord | es: Adonai, Señor, el-Señor | fr: Seigneur | de: Herr Gen 15:2; Gen 15:8; Gen 20:4; Exod 15:17; Deut 3:24

2. lord (human superior) (5×) A human lord, master, or superior addressed with deference, appearing only 5 times. Used with pronominal suffixes ('my lord,' 'his lord') to express social hierarchy or military command: the commander of YHWH's army (Josh 5:14, 'my lord'), the 'Lord of all the earth' in a context blending human and divine authority (Josh 3:11, 13), and Gideon's self-deprecating address (Judg 6:15). The multilingual glosses often add possessive markers – spa 'mi-Senor,' deu 'mein-Herr,' fra 'mon-seigneur' – reflecting the relational, deferential character of this secular usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Lord-of, his-Lord, my-lord | es: Señor-de, mi-Señor, mi-señor | fr: Seigneur-de, le-Seigneur, mon-seigneur | de: Herr, Herr-von, mein-herr Josh 3:11; Josh 3:13; Josh 5:14; Judg 6:15; Hos 12:14

אֲדֹנִי־בֶזֶק H0137 N-proper-ms (3×)

Adoni-bezek; personal name or title meaning 'lord of Bezek,' a Canaanite king

This Hebrew name designates a Canaanite king defeated by the tribes of Judah and Simeon. The name means 'lord of Bezek,' combining 'Adoni' (my lord) with 'Bezek' (the city name). Judges 1:5-7 narrates the encounter: Israel defeats Adoni-bezek, cuts off his thumbs and big toes, and he confesses that he had done the same to seventy kings. He dies in Jerusalem. Some scholars suggest emending the name to 'Adoni-zedek' (lord of righteousness), linking him to the Jerusalem king in Joshua 10, but the text as it stands presents Adoni-bezek as a distinct ruler whose mutilation of defeated enemies receives poetic justice.

(3×) The name translates uniformly: English 'Adoni-Bezek,' Spanish 'Adoni-Bezek,' French 'Adoni-Bezek,' German 'Adoni-Bezek.' Judges 1:5 introduces him as the king encountered at Bezek. Judges 1:6 describes his capture after fleeing battle. Judges 1:7 records his confession that he had mutilated seventy kings—and now receives the same treatment, acknowledging divine retribution: 'As I have done, so God has repaid me.' The account illustrates the measure-for-measure justice theme in Judges. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Adoni-Bezek | es: Adoni-Bezek | fr: Adoni-Bezek | de: Adoni-Bezek Judg 1:5; Judg 1:6; Judg 1:7

אֲדֹנִיָּהוּ H0138 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (26×)

Adonijah ('my Lord is Yahweh'); chiefly David's fourth son who contested Solomon's succession, also two other biblical figures.

A theophoric name meaning 'my Lord is Yahweh,' borne most prominently by David's fourth son whose dramatic bid for the throne dominates 1 Kings 1-2. Adonijah secured the support of Joab and Abiathar but was outmaneuvered by Nathan and Bathsheba, who ensured Solomon's coronation. His later request for Abishag proved fatal (1 Kgs 2:13-25). The name also belongs to a Levite teacher in Jehoshaphat's reform (2 Chr 17:8) and a postexilic leader who sealed Nehemiah's covenant (Neh 10:17). All translations simply transliterate: 'Adonijah/Adoniyah/Adonija.'

1. Adonijah son of David (24×) The personal name Adonijah designating David's fourth son, whose failed attempt to claim the throne before Solomon's anointing is narrated in 1 Kings 1-2. Almost all 24 occurrences cluster in this succession narrative. The multilingual glosses ('for-Adonijah/a-Adoniyahu/pour-Adonija/fuer-Adonijah') consistently add prepositions reflecting the narrative's political alignments – who was 'for' or 'against' Adonijah. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Adonijah, for-Adonijah, to-Adonijah | es: Adoniyah, Adoniyahu, a-Adoniyahu | fr: Adonija, furent-pour-Adonija, pour-Adonija | de: Adonijah, fuer-Adonijah, waren-fuer-Adonijah 1Kgs 1:5; 1Kgs 1:7; 1Kgs 1:8; 1Kgs 1:9; 1Kgs 1:11

2. Adonijah (other persons) (2×) The same name borne by two other individuals: a Levite commissioned by King Jehoshaphat to teach Torah throughout Judah (2 Chr 17:8), and a clan leader identified with Adonikam's family who sealed Nehemiah's covenant (Neh 10:17; cf. Ezra 2:13). Only 2 occurrences fall here; French and German bracket the Hebrew form [אדניה] in their glosses, signaling less-familiar referents. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Adoniyah | es: Adoniya, Adoniyah | fr: Adoniyah, [אדניה] | de: Adoniyah, [אדניה] 2Sam 3:4; 1Chr 3:2

אֲדֹנִי־צֶדֶק H0139 N-proper-ms (2×)

Adoni-zedek (personal name: 'my lord is righteous' or 'my lord is Zedek')

The Canaanite king of Jerusalem who organized a coalition of five Amorite kings against Israel (Joshua 10:1, 3). His name means either 'my lord is righteous' or invokes the deity Zedek. He mirrors Melchizedek ('my king is righteous/Zedek'), an earlier king-priest of Jerusalem. When Adoni-zedek heard that Joshua had conquered Jericho and Ai, and that Gibeon had made peace with Israel, he rallied neighboring kings to attack Gibeon—triggering the battle where the sun stood still.

(2×) Adoni-zedek appears exclusively in Joshua 10's account of the southern coalition. His name pairs with Melchizedek's, both ruling Jerusalem centuries apart, both invoking 'Zedek' (either as divine name or attribute). Phoenician inscriptions preserve similar constructions (Adonibaal = 'my lord is Baal'). Adoni-zedek's strategic response to Gibeon's defection shows political savvy—he recognized that Joshua's advance threatened to split the Canaanite city-states. His defeat and the hanging of the five kings became a defining moment in Israel's conquest of the southern hill country. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Adoni-Tsedek | es: Adoni-Sédec | fr: Adoni-Tsedek | de: Adoni-Tsedek Josh 10:1; Josh 10:3

אֲדֹנִיקָם H0140 N-proper-ms (3×)

Adonikam (Adoniqam); personal name meaning 'my Lord has arisen' or 'the Lord arose'

This Hebrew proper name means 'my Lord has arisen' or 'the Lord has stood up,' a theophoric name expressing faith in divine action. Adonikam was the head of a family that returned from Babylonian exile. Ezra 2:13 lists 666 (or 667) descendants of Adonikam among the returning exiles under Zerubbabel. Ezra 8:13 mentions later returnees 'of the sons of Adonikam' who came with Ezra, including Eliphelet, Jeiel, and Shemaiah. Nehemiah 7:18 parallels Ezra 2:13, confirming the family's inclusion in the restoration community. The name testifies to faith that the Lord would act to restore his people.

(3×) Translations preserve the name: English 'Adonikam, Adoniqam,' Spanish 'Adoniqam, Adonícam,' French and German show '[אדניקם].' Ezra 2:13 numbers the family's returnees at 666 (or 667), a substantial clan. Ezra 8:13 records later members joining Ezra's caravan, including named leaders. Nehemiah 7:18 confirms the family's prominence in the restoration. The theophoric name—'my Lord has arisen'—may reflect hope in God's covenant faithfulness to raise up his fallen people and restore them to their land. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Adonikam, Adoniqam | es: Adoniqam, Adonícam | fr: [אדניקם] | de: [אדניקם] Ezra 2:13; Ezra 8:13; Neh 7:18

אֲדֹנִירָם H0141 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Adoniram (personal name: 'my lord is exalted'), Solomon's official

The official over forced labor during Solomon's reign (1 Kings 4:6, 5:14). His name means 'my lord is exalted.' He also appears as Adoram (a shortened form) in 2 Samuel 20:24 under David and 1 Kings 12:18 under Rehoboam. The fact that he served three kings —David, Solomon, Rehoboam—suggests either a long career or a dynastic office. His tenure ended tragically: when Rehoboam sent him to negotiate with the northern tribes, they stoned him to death, triggering the final split of the kingdom.

(2×) Adoniram supervised the corvée (forced labor) system that provided workers for Solomon's massive building projects. The name appears with slight variation (Adoniram/Adoram), but ancient versions confirm the same individual. His multi-generational service indicates either exceptional longevity or that 'Adoniram' became a title for this office. His death by stoning (1 Kings 12:18) symbolizes the northern tribes' rejection of Solomon's labor policies—the very system Adoniram administered became the breaking point that divided Israel. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Adoniram | es: y-Adoniram | fr: et-Adoniram | de: und-Adoniram 1Kgs 4:6; 1Kgs 5:14

אָדָר H0142 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-msc (3×)

majestic, glorious; characterized by splendor, honor, or exalted status

This Hebrew adjective or verbal form means majestic, glorious, or made glorious. It appears in contexts celebrating YHWH's majesty and power. Exodus 15:6 exults, 'Your right hand, O LORD, has become glorious in power,' celebrating the victory at the Red Sea. Exodus 15:11 asks rhetorically, 'Who is like You, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?'—a hymnic acknowledgment of God's incomparable glory. Isaiah 42:21 states that 'The LORD is well pleased for His righteousness' sake; He will exalt the law and make it honorable.' The term conveys divine splendor that inspires awe and worship.

(3×) Translations show reverence for divine majesty: English 'majestic, makes-it-glorious,' Spanish 'gloriosa, glorioso' (glorious), French 'majestic,' German similar forms, though some preserve the Hebrew '[ויאדיר].' Exodus 15:6 celebrates God's glorious right hand that shattered the enemy at the sea. Exodus 15:11 worships the God who is majestic in holiness, beyond all comparison. Isaiah 42:21 affirms God's purpose to magnify his law and make it glorious—honored and exalted among the nations. The term belongs to Israel's vocabulary of worship and praise. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-makes-it-glorious, majestic | es: gloriosa, glorioso, y-hacerla-gloriosa | fr: [ויאדיר], majestic | de: [ויאדיר], majestic Exod 15:6; Exod 15:11; Isa 42:21

אֲדָר H0143 N-proper-ms (8×)

Adar; the twelfth month of the Hebrew calendar (February–March), the month of Purim in the book of Esther.

The name of the twelfth month in the post-exilic Hebrew calendar, borrowed from the Babylonian 'Addaru' and corresponding roughly to February–March. All eight occurrences fall within the book of Esther, where Adar is the month chosen by Haman's lot for the annihilation of the Jews (Esth 3:7, 13) and subsequently the month of their deliverance and celebration of Purim (Esth 9:1, 15, 17, 19, 21). The name is transliterated identically across all target languages —Spanish, French, and German all render 'Adar'—reflecting its loanword status even in the original Hebrew.

(8×) Adar, the twelfth month of the Babylonian-Jewish calendar (approximately February–March), a loanword from Akkadian 'Addaru.' Every occurrence is in Esther, where it functions as a narrative time-marker of profound theological significance: Haman's lot (pur) falls on Adar for the planned genocide (Esth 3:7, 13), but God reverses the decree so that the Jews triumph on the 13th of Adar and celebrate on the 14th and 15th (Esth 9:1, 15, 17, 19, 21). This month thus becomes permanently associated with the feast of Purim. The uniform transliteration across Spanish, French, and German ('Adar') confirms its status as an internationally recognized calendar term with no native equivalent. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11255 WITH 6 SENSES

en: Adar | es: Adar | fr: Adar | de: Adar Esth 3:7; Esth 3:13; Esth 8:12; Esth 9:1; Esth 9:15

אַדָּר H0144 N-proper-fs (1×)

Adar — twelfth month of the Hebrew calendar (February-March)

Adar is the twelfth and final month in the Hebrew calendar, corresponding roughly to February-March in the Gregorian system. The name appears in post-exilic texts, reflecting Babylonian influence on Jewish calendrical terminology. In Ezra 6:15, the temple reconstruction was completed 'on the third day of the month Adar,' marking a momentous achievement in Israel's restoration. This month later became significant in Jewish tradition as the time of Purim.

(1×) The twelfth month of the Hebrew year, adopted from Babylonian calendrical practice during the exile. Multilingual witnesses consistently transliterate 'Adar' across languages (English, Spanish, German), recognizing it as a calendar term requiring preservation rather than translation. Ezra 6:15 dates the temple's completion to this month, establishing Adar as a time of restoration and celebration. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11255 WITH 6 SENSES

en: Adar | es: Adar | fr: [אדר] | de: Adar Ezra 6:15

אֶדֶר H0145 N-ms (2×)

splendor, majesty, glory; possibly also a mantle or robe

A word with contested meaning, appearing in two different contexts. Zechariah 11:13 mentions 'the splendor' at which the Lord priced the prophet—an ironic reference to the thirty pieces of silver, the 'magnificent price' at which they valued him. Micah 2:8 is more difficult, possibly meaning 'a mantle' or 'robe' stripped from passersby (though textual issues cloud the verse). The root suggests nobility or magnificence, something glorious or ornate, whether metaphorically applied to a price or literally to an expensive garment.

(2×) The semantic range includes glory, splendor, or (concretely) an ornate garment. Assyrian cognates mean 'noble' or 'glorious.' Zechariah's usage drips with irony: God sarcastically calls the thirty silver pieces 'the majestic price' at which they valued him—magnificent! Micah's context suggests violent robbery, possibly of ornate outer garments (if we read 'aderet' for 'eder'). The word's rarity and textual complications make precise definition difficult, but the core sense involves something impressive, valuable, or magnificent —whether a sum of money or a fine cloak. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11255 WITH 6 SENSES

en: majesty-of, robe | es: esplendor-de, vestidura | fr: riche | de: Adar Mic 2:8; Zech 11:13

אַדָּר H0146 N-proper-fs / 3fs (2×)

Addar (place/personal name: 'noble' or 'mighty')

A name appearing in two contexts: a town on Judah's southern border (Joshua 15:3, where it's called 'Addarah') and a Benjamite person (1 Chronicles 8:3). As a place name, it pairs with Hezron (Hezron-addar or Hazar-addar in Numbers 34:4), marking a point on Israel's southern boundary. As a personal name, it appears among the sons of Bela, though some scholars see it as a textual variant of 'Ard' (Genesis 46:21, Numbers 26:40). The root suggests nobility or might.

(2×) The geographic Addar/Addarah lies on Judah's southern frontier, part of the boundary description inherited from earlier tribal allotments. The Benjamite Addar appears in Chronicles' genealogy, possibly representing a scribal variant for 'Ard' found in other Bela genealogies. Whether the consonantal text shifted (resh/dalet confusion) or these represent distinct individuals remains debated. The name's meaning ('noble' or 'mighty') fits onomastic patterns for both persons and places—towns might be named for qualities (Hazor = enclosure) or founders, individuals for aspirational virtues. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11255 WITH 6 SENSES

en: Addar, Addarah | es: Adar | fr: Addarah, [אדר] | de: Addarah, [אדר] Josh 15:3; 1Chr 8:3

אַדַּרְגָּזַר H0147 N-mpc (1×)

threshing floors — open-air surfaces for separating grain from

chaff
In Daniel 2:35, Nebuchadnezzar's dream-statue is pulverized to dust that blows away 'like chaff from summer threshing floors.' Threshing floors were flat, elevated surfaces where grain was separated from husks by trampling or sledges, then winnowed in the wind. The summer harvest imagery emphasizes complete dispersal — nothing remains of the kingdoms represented by the statue. This agricultural metaphor powerfully conveys total destruction and irrelevance.

(1×) Open-air platforms for processing grain, specifically 'threshing floors of summer' (construct plural with 'summer'). English and Spanish translations ('threshing-floors of,' 'eras de') preserve the agricultural reference, while the 'summer' qualifier indicates peak harvest season when winnowing is most effective. Daniel 2:35 employs this image to depict the complete eradication of earthly kingdoms before God's eternal dominion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: threshing-floors-of- | es: las-eras-de | fr: aire | de: [אדר׳] Dan 2:35

אֲדַרְזְדָּא H0148 N-mpd (2×)
counselors, astrologers (Persian/Babylonian loanword)
A category of officials in the Babylonian administration, appearing only in Daniel 3:2-3. When Nebuchadnezzar summoned all his officials to the dedication of the golden image, the list includes 'adragzaraya'—probably astrologers or counselors skilled in interpreting signs. This Aramaic term is a Persian loanword, reflecting the multilingual bureaucracy of the Neo-Babylonian empire. These specialists joined satraps, prefects, governors, and other officials at the royal ceremony that tested Jewish faithfulness.

(2×) Appearing exclusively in Daniel's account of the image dedication, this term designates a specific class of imperial officials. Scholars connect it to Old Persian administrative titles, possibly referring to judicial counselors or astrological experts. The Septuagint translates with 'astrologers,' suggesting divination functions. Daniel's lists of officials emphasize the empire's elaborate hierarchy—satraps, prefects, governors, counselors, treasurers, judges, magistrates, and all provincial officials. The 'adragzaraya' fit somewhere in this network of power, specialists whose expertise served the king's agenda. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 11320 WITH 3 SENSES
en: the-counselors | es: los-consejeros | fr: astrologue | de: [אדרגזריא] Dan 3:2; Dan 3:3

אֲדְרַע H0149 Adv (1×)
exactly, diligently — with precision and care in execution
This Aramaic adverb appears in Ezra 7:23, in Artaxerxes' decree commanding that 'whatever is decreed by the God of heaven be done exactly for the house of the God of heaven.' The term emphasizes precision, thoroughness, and diligent care in execution. The Persian king's insistence on exactness reflects both political prudence (avoiding divine wrath) and genuine respect for the temple's religious requirements, granting Ezra broad authority to establish proper worship.

(1×) An adverb denoting precision and thoroughness: 'exactly,' 'diligently,' 'carefully.' Spanish 'diligentemente' captures the sense of careful attention, while the context in Ezra 7:23 emphasizes King Artaxerxes' command that temple provisions and ordinances be executed with complete accuracy. This reflects the Achaemenid administration's policy of supporting local cults to secure divine favor and political stability. ACCURACY AND PRECISION
en: exactly | es: diligentemente | fr: [אדרזדא] | de: [אדרזדא] Ezra 7:23

דַּרְכְּמוֹן H0150 Prep-l / N-mp (2×)
darics (Persian gold coins)
Persian gold coins called darics, named after Darius the Great or the Persian word for gold. These coins appear in Chronicles and Ezra as part of temple contributions. First Chronicles 29:7 records that leaders gave 10,000 darics of gold for the temple, and Ezra 8:27 mentions bowls worth 1,000 darics. The daric was a standardized gold coin weighing about 8.4 grams, facilitating large transactions. The term's appearance in texts describing pre-exilic donations involves anachronism—the Chronicler used the Persian-period coinage familiar to his audience to quantify ancient contributions.

(2×) The daric (Hebrew with prosthetic aleph: 'adarkon/darkon') was Persia's standard gold currency. Chronicles and Ezra use it to measure temple donations, though the coinage didn't exist until Persian rule—the Chronicler updates older weight measures into monetary equivalents his readers understood. First Chronicles 29:7 values temple gifts at 10,000 darics; Ezra 8:27 appraises gold bowls at 1,000 darics. This reflects historiographic practice: translating ancient economics into contemporary terms. The multilingual context (Persian word in Hebrew/Aramaic text) testifies to Israel's imperial setting. SILVER AND MONEY
en: and-darics, of-darics | es: por-dáricos, y-daricos | fr: [ואדרכנים], [לאדרכנים] | de: [ואדרכנים], [לאדרכנים] 1Chr 29:7; Ezra 8:27

אַדָּרָם H0151 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Adoram (personal name: shortened form of Adoniram)
An abbreviated form of Adoniram, the official over forced labor who served David, Solomon, and Rehoboam (2 Samuel 20:24, 1 Kings 12:18). The name means essentially the same as Adoniram—'my lord is exalted'—with slight contraction. When Rehoboam sent Adoram to deal with the northern tribes' labor complaints, they stoned him to death, making him a martyr of Solomon's oppressive policies and a catalyst for the kingdom's division. The name variation likely reflects normal Hebrew shortening patterns.

(2×) Adoram is the contracted form of Adoniram, appearing in 2 Samuel (under David) and 1 Kings 12:18 (under Rehoboam). Ancient versions sometimes read the full form 'Adoniram' even where the Masoretic text has 'Adoram,' suggesting fluidity between the names. His role—taskmaster over forced labor—made him the face of Solomonic excess. His stoning by the northern tribes became the point of no return: Rehoboam fled to Jerusalem, and Israel crowned Jeroboam. Adoram's death embodies the end of united monarchy, crushed under the weight of the very labor system he administered. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10458 WITH 3 SENSES
en: Adoram, and-Adoram | es: Adoram, Y-Adoram | fr: Adoram, et-Adoram | de: Adoram, und-Adoram 2Sam 20:24; 1Kgs 12:18

אַדְרַמֶּלֶךְ H0152 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)
Adrammelech; name of a deity and a person, meaning 'Adar is prince' or 'Adar is king'
This Hebrew name appears in two distinct contexts. First, Adrammelech was a deity worshiped by people from Sepharvaim, to whom they burned their children in sacrifice (2 Kings 17:31)—a practice YHWH abhorred. Second, Adrammelech was a son of the Assyrian king Sennacherib who, along with his brother Sharezer, murdered their father in the temple of Nisroch and then fled to Ararat (2 Kings 19:37; Isaiah 37:38). The name derives from the Assyrian god Adar combined with 'melek' (king/prince). Whether deity or person, the name carries associations of pagan religion and violence—child sacrifice in one case, patricide in the other.

(3×) Translations preserve the name: English 'Adrammelech, and-Adrammelech,' Spanish 'Adramelec, Adramélec,' French 'Adrammelech,' German similar forms. 2 Kings 17:31 identifies Adrammelech as a god to whom the Sepharvites burned their children—syncretistic paganism transplanted to Israel. 2 Kings 19:37 and Isaiah 37:38 name Adrammelech as Sennacherib's parricidal son who struck down his father while he worshiped. The double usage—deity and person—may reflect the common ancient practice of naming children after gods. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Adrammelech, and-Sharetser, to-Adrammelech | es: a-Adramelec, y-Adramelec, y-Adramélec | fr: [ואדרמלך], et-Adrammelech, à-Adrammelech | de: [ואדרמלך], und-Adrammelech, zu-Adrammelech 2Kgs 17:31; 2Kgs 19:37; Isa 37:38

אֶדְרַע H0153 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)
by force, forcibly — with compulsion or physical coercion
This Aramaic noun appears in Ezra 4:23, describing how Israel's enemies made the Jews stop rebuilding Jerusalem's walls 'by force and power.' The term denotes physical coercion or compulsion, often translated 'force' or 'arm' (literally). Paired with 'power/might,' it emphasizes the violent means used to halt construction. The phrase captures the reality of political opposition in the Persian period, where local adversaries used imperial authorization to suppress Jewish restoration efforts.

(1×) An Aramaic noun meaning 'force' or 'arm,' denoting physical coercion. The construct phrase 'by force and power' (בְּאֶדְרַע וְחָיִל) in Ezra 4:23 describes the violent suppression of Jerusalem's rebuilding. Spanish 'con brazo' and other versions preserve the literal 'arm' imagery, metaphorically representing strength applied forcibly. This reflects the opposition's use of imperial backing to intimidate and physically stop the work. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: by-arm | es: con-brazo | fr: [באדרע] | de: [באדרע] Ezra 4:23

אֶדְרֶעִי H0154 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (8×)
Edrei; a chief city of Bashan where Israel defeated King Og, also a town in Naphtali's tribal allotment.
A place name identifying a principal city of the kingdom of Bashan in Transjordan, modern Der'a in southern Syria. Edrei is where Moses and Israel fought the decisive battle against King Og (Num 21:33; Deut 3:1), a victory repeatedly recalled in Deuteronomy and Joshua as evidence of God's faithfulness. The city is paired with Ashtaroth as one of Og's two royal residences (Deut 1:4; Josh 12:4; 13:12, 31). A separate Edrei appears in Joshua 19:37 as a town assigned to Naphtali. The name is transliterated consistently across languages—Spanish, French, and German all render 'Edrei'—preserving its ancient Semitic form.

Edrei (place name) (8×) Edrei, a fortified city in Bashan where Israel defeated King Og in a pivotal battle during the wilderness period (Num 21:33; Deut 3:1). Listed alongside Ashtaroth as one of Og's two royal capitals (Deut 1:4; Josh 12:4; 13:12), it was allotted to the half-tribe of Manasseh (Josh 13:31). A distinct town of the same name appears in Naphtali's tribal territory (Josh 19:37). The site is identified with modern Der'a in southern Syria, roughly 60 miles south of Damascus. All translations uniformly transliterate the name, with prepositional variations—Spanish 'en Edrei' (in Edrei), German 'bei Edrei' (at Edrei)—reflecting the different Hebrew prepositions attached to it across passages. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Edrei, and-Edrei, and-in-Edrei | es: Edrei, a-Edrei, en-Edrei | fr: Edrei, dans-Edrei, et-Edrei | de: Edrei, bei-Edrei, in-Edrei Num 21:33; Deut 1:4; Deut 3:1; Deut 3:10; Josh 12:4

אַדֶּרֶת H0155 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3ms (12×)
A large outer robe, mantle, or cloak; figuratively glory, majesty, or splendor.
Best known as the prophet's mantle – the garment Elijah wore and cast upon Elisha as a sign of succession (1 Kings 19:19), and that parted the Jordan when struck against the water (2 Kings 2:8, 14). The word also names the costly Babylonian robe that tempted Achan at Jericho (Josh 7:21). German 'Kleid' and Spanish 'manto' faithfully render the concrete garment. In prophetic poetry, however, the same word shifts to abstract splendor: the vine in Ezekiel 17:8 bears 'magnificent' branches, and Zechariah 11:3 laments the loss of the shepherds' 'glory,' where garment and grandeur merge.

1. robe, mantle, cloak (10×) A large, impressive outer garment – a robe, mantle, or cloak. Esau's hairy body at birth is likened to a 'mantle of hair' (Gen 25:25). Achan coveted a fine Babylonian adderet (Josh 7:21, 24). Most memorably, it is Elijah's prophetic mantle, wrapped around his face before God at Horeb (1 Kings 19:13), cast upon Elisha (1 Kings 19:19), and used to strike the Jordan (2 Kings 2:8, 13, 14). Zechariah 13:4 notes that false prophets will no longer don the 'hairy mantle' to deceive. German 'Kleid,' Spanish 'manto,' and French 'robe' all render this as a dignified outer garment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-garment-of, a-robe-of, his-cloak | es: como-manto-de, con-su-manto, el-manto | fr: comme-un-robe-de, dans-son-manteau, le-robe | de: [אדרת], [אדרתו], der-Kleid Gen 25:25; Josh 7:21; Josh 7:24; 1Kgs 19:13; 1Kgs 19:19

2. glory, majesty, splendor (2×) An abstract sense of glory, majesty, or magnificence, extending from the imposing appearance of the physical garment. Ezekiel 17:8 describes a vine planted in good soil producing branches of 'splendor' (adderet), where most translations shift from clothing to botanical magnificence. Zechariah 11:3 speaks of the shepherds' 'glory' being ruined – possibly still punning on the shepherd's cloak but clearly carrying overtones of lost grandeur. Spanish 'majestad' and 'esplendida' capture this abstract register well. POWER AND ABILITY
en: majestic, their-glory | es: espléndida, su-majestad | fr: manteau | de: [אדרת], [אדרתם] Ezek 17:8; Zech 11:3

אדשׁ H0156 V-Qal-InfAbs (1×)
threshing, to thresh — separating grain by trampling or beating
In Isaiah 28:28, the prophet asks rhetorically, 'Does one thresh grain forever?' The infinitive absolute form emphasizes continuous or intensive action. Threshing involved trampling grain with animals or sledges to separate kernels from chaff. Isaiah uses this agricultural wisdom to illustrate God's disciplinary purposes: just as a farmer doesn't thresh endlessly (which would crush the grain), so God calibrates judgment with wisdom, stopping before destruction becomes total.

(1×) The action of threshing grain, expressed as an infinitive absolute to convey continuity or emphasis. Spanish 'trillando' (threshing continuously) reflects this intensive sense. Isaiah 28:28 employs the term in a rhetorical question about agricultural wisdom, drawing a parallel to divine pedagogy: discipline is purposeful and measured, not arbitrary or excessive. The farmer's skill models God's wise governance. REAPING AND HARVESTING
en: forever | es: trillando | fr: [אדוש] | de: [אדוש] Isa 28:28

אָהַב H0157 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2ms (211×)
To love; as participle: lover, friend, paramour; passive: beloved; also the abstract noun 'love' (ahavah)
The Hebrew Bible's primary love verb spans from the tenderest human affection to the fiercest prophetic accusation. Jacob loved Rachel (Gen 29:18), the great commandment demands loving God with all one's heart (Deut 6:5), yet the same root in the Piel intensive becomes the prophets' weapon: Hosea and Jeremiah hurl me'ahavayikh ('your paramours') at faithless Israel. Arabic splits the field — muhibb for wholesome 'one who loves' versus 'ushshaq for illicit lovers. The passive participle yields 'beloved,' the favored wife of Deuteronomy 21. Spanish confirms the morphological distinctions: amar (verb), amante (lover), amada (beloved).

1. love (verb, active Qal) (129×) The core Qal verbal sense: active loving — emotional attachment, devotion, and affection directed toward persons, God, or things. At 129 occurrences this is the verb's center: Jacob loved Rachel (Gen 29:18), 'love your neighbor as yourself' (Lev 19:18). Arabic ahabba, Spanish amar, French aimer, and Korean saranghada all render the basic verbal action. LOVE (ACTIVE VERB)
en: He-loves, he-loves, loves | es: ama, amando, amar | fr: aimer, il-a-aimé, à-aimer | de: liebte, zu-lieben Gen 25:28; Gen 27:14; Gen 29:18; Gen 29:30; Gen 34:3

2. lover, friend (Qal participle substantive) (51×) The Qal active participle used substantivally: a lover, friend, ally, or devotee. Fifty-one occurrences including 'those who love me' in the Decalogue promise (Exod 20:6) and 'the one who loves wisdom' (Prov 29:3). Arabic muhibb ('one who loves') and Spanish el-que-ama confirm the substantivized agent noun, yielding 'my friends/allies' with suffixes. LOVE (ACTIVE VERB)
en: and-loving, he-who-loves, lovers-your | es: (amadores-míos), El-que-ama, a-los-que-me-aman | fr: aimer, aimer-moi, ceux-qui-m'aiment | de: lieben, liebte, und-liebte Exod 20:6; Deut 5:10; Deut 7:9; Deut 10:18; 1Sam 18:16

3. paramour, illicit lover (Piel participle) (17×) The Piel intensive participle: paramour or illicit lover, concentrated in prophetic marriage-metaphor. Seventeen occurrences in Hosea, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Lamentations (1:2, 19) where Israel's idolatrous alliances are depicted as adultery. Arabic 'ushshaq ('passionate/illicit lovers') distinguishes these from the wholesome Qal 'friends' of Sense 2. LOVE (ACTIVE VERB)
en: and-lovers-your, her-lovers, lovers-your | es: a-mis-amantes, amantes-de-ella, amantes-de-ti | fr: aimer, et-aimer | de: lieben, liebte, und-lieben Jer 22:20; Jer 22:22; Jer 30:14; Lam 1:2; Lam 1:19

4. beloved (passive participle) (9×) The passive participle: the beloved, the cherished one — someone who is the object of love. Nine occurrences including the 'beloved wife' versus 'unloved wife' distinction (Deut 21:15–16), the eulogy of Saul and Jonathan as 'beloved and pleasant' (2 Sam 1:23). Arabic mahbub and Spanish amada confirm passive-resultative semantics. LOVE (ACTIVE VERB)
en: and-loved, his-friends, loved | es: amada, amada-de, la-amada | fr: aima, aimer, et-aimer | de: der-beloved, der-liebte, liebte Deut 21:15; Deut 21:16; 2Sam 1:23; Neh 13:26

5. love (abstract noun) (4×) The abstract noun 'ahavah: the state or quality of love itself. Four occurrences where the noun functions independently: Jacob's years 'seemed like a few days because of his love' (Gen 29:20), 'a time to love and a time to hate' (Eccl 3:8). Arabic mahabbah and German Liebe (versus lieben) confirm the nominalization. LOVE (ACTIVE VERB)
en: in-love-his, like-their-love, to-love | es: como-su-amado, en-amor-suyo, para-amar | fr: aimer, dans-aimer-son, à-aime | de: in-seiner-Liebe, liebte, zu-Liebe Gen 29:20; 2Sam 19:6; Eccl 3:8; Hos 9:10

6. (1×) A difficult singular occurrence at Hosea 4:18 where the text reads 'they love — give!' or 'her rulers dearly love shame.' Multilingual evidence diverges: English 'give,' Spanish 'Dan,' French 'le-en-lui' — suggesting textual corruption or an unusual elliptical construction. The economic domain assignment reflects emphasis on bribery or tribute rather than emotion. GIVING AND BESTOWING
en: give | es: Dan | fr: le-en-lui | de: der-in-ihm Hos 4:18

אֲהָבִים H0158 N-mp (2×)
love, loves (plural); affections or lovers
The plural form of 'love,' appearing in two contrasting contexts. Proverbs 5:19 uses it positively: 'a loving doe' (literally 'a doe of loves'), describing a wife who captivates her husband's affection. Hosea 8:9 uses it negatively: Israel 'has hired lovers,' pursuing foreign alliances and idols instead of Yahweh. The plural can intensify the singular ('great love') or indicate multiple love-objects ('lovers'). Both nuances appear in these passages—intense marital devotion versus promiscuous political/religious infidelity.

(2×) The Hebrew plural 'ahabim' carries dual force: intensive (abundant love) or distributive (multiple lovers). Proverbs' 'doe of loves' pictures a wife as graceful and captivating, holding her husband's devoted affection—the plural intensifies the bond's richness. Hosea inverts this imagery: Israel goes among nations 'hiring loves'—promiscuously seeking allies and gods. The same grammatical form conveys fidelity or betrayal depending on object and context. Across translations (Spanish 'amores,' French 'amour'), the term oscillates between singular devotion and plural infidelity. LOVE (ABSTRACT NOUN)
en: love, lovers | es: amantes, de-amores | fr: amour, אהבים | de: [אהבים], [אהבים] Prov 5:19; Hos 8:9

בְּאַהֲבִים H0159 Prep-b / N-mp (1×)
with love, in amours — in contexts of physical or idolatrous love
This noun appears in Proverbs 7:18 in the plural form, where the adulteress invites, 'Let us take our fill of love until morning.' The term can denote beloved objects or, as here, amorous pleasures with a carnal sense. Some interpreters also connect it to Hosea 9:10's reference to idols as 'loved objects' (Baal worship). The context in Proverbs emphasizes illicit physical intimacy, contrasting wisdom's call to fidelity with folly's seductive lure.

(1×) Plural noun denoting amorous pleasures or beloved objects, often with carnal or illicit connotations. The prepositional phrase 'with love/in amours' (בְּאֲהָבִים) in Proverbs 7:18 describes the adulteress's invitation to forbidden pleasure. Spanish 'en los amores' preserves the plural sense of 'love-making' or 'amours.' The term can also refer to idolatrous objects of devotion, blurring the line between physical and spiritual unfaithfulness. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: with-love | es: en-los-amores | fr: dans-באהבים | de: [באהבים] Prov 7:18

אַהֲבָה H0160 N-fsc (40×)
Love, affection, devotion — as abstract noun or verbal infinitive expressing the act and attitude of loving.
Derived from the verb 'ahav (to love), this noun carries the full weight of love in the Hebrew Bible — from covenantal devotion between God and Israel to the fierce romantic passion of the Song of Songs. Spanish 'amor' and French 'amour' render it uniformly, but the German tradition sometimes shifts to 'der Liebe' (genitive) to capture the construct chains that reveal love's object: love of God, love of a friend, love of wisdom. The word appears most densely in Wisdom literature and the Song, where it is even personified as a force as strong as death (Song 8:6).

1. love (abstract noun) (33×) The abstract emotion or disposition of love — covering covenant faithfulness (Deut 7:8), deep friendship (1 Sam 20:17; 2 Sam 1:26 'your love was more wonderful than the love of women'), romantic desire (Song 2:4-5; 8:6-7), and everyday human affection (Prov 10:12 'love covers all offenses'). Translations across languages converge on a single core term (amor, amour, Liebe), confirming this is one unified semantic field. Construct forms with pronominal suffixes (אַהֲבָתוֹ, אַהֲבָתִי) point to love as a relational quality belonging to someone. LOVE (ABSTRACT NOUN)
en: in-His-love, in-his-love, in-love-his | es: amor, amor!, el-amor | fr: [אהבה], [באהבתו], amour | de: Liebe, [באהבתו], der-Liebe Deut 7:8; 1Sam 18:3; 1Sam 20:17; 2Sam 1:26

2. loving (verbal noun / infinitive) (7×) The verbal-infinitive use expressing the act of loving, often governed by prepositions indicating purpose or cause — 'because of [His] loving' (2 Chr 2:11; 9:8), 'to love' as infinitive of purpose (1 Kgs 10:9; Hos 3:1). The Spanish rendering 'amándolos' (loving them) and French 'et-amour' preserve the verbal force, distinguishing this from the purely abstract noun. In Hos 3:1 God commands Hosea to love a woman 'as the LORD loves' — where the infinitive carries the weight of divine action, not just feeling. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-to-love, as-love-of, because-of-love-of | es: Por-el-amor-de, amándolos, como-amor-de | fr: [באהבת], amour, et-amour | de: Liebe, [באהבת], und-Liebe 1Kgs 10:9; 1Kgs 11:2; 2Chr 2:11; 2Chr 9:8; Hos 3:1

אֲהַד H0161 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Ohad (personal name), son of Simeon
One of Simeon's six sons listed in the genealogies (Genesis 46:10, Exodus 6:15). The name's meaning is uncertain, though it may relate to 'unity' or 'might.' Ohad appears in the early genealogical lists but is absent from later censuses (Numbers 26), suggesting his family line either died out or was absorbed into other Simeonite clans. His inclusion in the Genesis and Exodus lists documents the family that went down to Egypt during the famine.

(2×) Ohad stands among Simeon's sons in the descent-to-Egypt narratives. His name appears in Genesis 46 (Jacob's household) and Exodus 6 (Moses and Aaron's lineage), but vanishes from Numbers 26's wilderness census. This pattern suggests the Ohadite clan didn't survive to enter Canaan, either through extinction or merger with other families. Simeon's tribe suffered overall decline (from 59,300 to 22,200 between censuses), and individual clan disappearances like Ohad's contributed to this demographic collapse. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Ohad | es: y-Ohad | fr: et-Ohad | de: und-Ohad Gen 46:10; Exod 6:15

אֲהָהּ H0162 Interjection (15×)
alas! ah! — an exclamation of grief, dismay, or desperate appeal Ahahh is one of the rawest sounds in the Hebrew Bible — a guttural cry erupting at moments of shock, grief, or pleading. Jephthah cries it upon seeing his daughter (Judg 11:35); Elisha's servant cries it when the axe head sinks into the Jordan (2 Kgs 6:5). Most characteristically it appears in the formula ahahh adonai YHWH ('alas, Lord GOD!'), a phrase of prophetic anguish used by Joshua (7:7), Gideon (Judg 6:22), Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. Spanish 'ah/ay,' French 'helas,' and German 'ach' each reach for their most visceral interjection.

alas (15×) An interjection expressing acute distress, dismay, or anguished appeal to God. Occurs as a standalone cry of shock (Judg 11:35; 2 Kgs 6:5, 15) and in the formulaic address ahahh adonai YHWH ('alas, Lord GOD!'), found in Joshua, Judges, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. Joel intensifies it with ahahh layyom, 'alas for the day!' (1:15). German 'ach' and French 'helas' mirror the raw emotive register. WOE AND ALAS en: Alas, alas | es: Ah, ah, ay | fr: hélas, hélas! | de: [אהה], ach, alas Josh 7:7; Judg 6:22; Judg 11:35; 2Kgs 3:10; 2Kgs 6:5

אַהֲוָא H0163 N-proper-fs (3×)
Ahava; place name designating a town or river in Babylonia where exiles gathered
This Hebrew place name designates both a town and a river (or canal) in Babylonia where Ezra assembled the returning exiles. Ezra 8:15 records, 'I gathered them by the river that flows to Ahava, and we camped there three days.' This assembly point allowed Ezra to review the returning company and discover no Levites were present, prompting him to send for them. Ezra 8:21 notes that Ezra proclaimed a fast 'there at the river of Ahava,' seeking God's protection for the dangerous journey. Ezra 8:31 records their departure 'from the river of Ahava' toward Jerusalem. The location served as a staging ground for spiritual preparation before the journey home.

(3×) Translations preserve the place name: English 'Ahava,' Spanish 'Ahava,' French and German show '[אהוא].' Ezra 8:15 identifies the river Ahava as the gathering point where Ezra mustered the returning exiles. Ezra 8:21 describes the fast proclaimed at Ahava, seeking divine guidance and protection. Ezra 8:31 marks their departure from Ahava toward Jerusalem—a journey requiring God's hand of protection. The place became associated with prayer, fasting, and dependence on God before undertaking the perilous return to Judah. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Ahava | es: Ahava | fr: [אהוא] | de: [אהוא] Ezra 8:15; Ezra 8:21; Ezra 8:31

אֲהוּד H0164 N-proper-ms (9×)
Ehud, a Benjamite judge who delivered Israel from Moabite oppression; also a descendant of Bilhan.
A proper name borne by two Benjamite figures in the Hebrew Bible. The most prominent Ehud is the left-handed judge of Judges 3:15-30 who assassinated the Moabite king Eglon with a concealed short sword, liberating Israel from eighteen years of subjugation. His story is one of the most vivid narrative episodes in Judges, rich in irony and physical detail. A second Ehud appears in 1 Chronicles 7:10 as a son of Bilhan, possibly a genealogical echo of the same tribal hero.

Ehud (9×) The proper name Ehud (אֲהוּד), referring primarily to the Benjamite son of Gera who served as Israel's second major judge (Judg 3:15-26). His left-handedness—notable for a Benjamite ('son of the right hand')—enabled his covert weapon concealment. All translations preserve the name phonetically (spa: Ehud, fra: Éhud, deu: Ehud). The second bearer in 1 Chronicles 7:10 may represent the same ancestral figure at a different genealogical remove. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Ehud, and-Ehud | es: Ehud, Y-Ehud, y-Ehud | fr: [ואהוד], et-Éhud, Éhud | de: Ehud, [ואהוד], und-Ehud Judg 3:15; Judg 3:16; Judg 3:20; Judg 3:21

אַיֵּה H0165 Interjection (3×)
where? (interrogative particle related to אַי and אַיֵּךְ, used in prophetic challenge)
This rare interrogative particle appears only in Hosea 13:10, 14, where God challenges Israel about the fate of their king and the location of death's sting. Ancient versions (Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, Targum) and most modern scholars understand it as 'where?'—a taunting question. Some older interpreters took it as a first-person verb 'I would be,' but the context and jussive form favor the interrogative reading. Paul's quotation in 1 Corinthians 15:55 ('O death, where is your sting?') confirms the interrogative sense, transforming Hosea's judgment oracle into a resurrection triumph.

(3×) The interrogative sense 'where?' serves a rhetorical function in prophetic challenge. In Hosea 13:10, God asks 'where is your king?' after Israel rejected Him. In verse 14, the double use—'where are your plagues, O death? where is your destruction, O grave?'—can be read either as a summons (calling forth judgment) or as a taunt (death's power is gone). The Septuagint's ποῦ (where) established the interpretation that Paul adopted for resurrection victory. The Spanish 'seré' (I will be) reflects the minority verbal interpretation, while English 'where' and French 'Ehé' preserve the interrogative. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES
en: where | es: seré | fr: Ehé | de: ich-werde-sein Hos 13:10; Hos 13:14

אָהַל H0166 V-Hifil-Imperf-3ms (1×)
it shines, gives light — emits radiance or illumination
In Job 25:5, Bildad argues that even celestial bodies lack purity before God: 'Behold, even the moon — it does not shine, and the stars are not pure in his sight.' The Hiphil verb denotes giving light or shining brightly. Bildad's point is theological: if heavenly luminaries appear dim or impure when measured against God's holiness, how much less can mortal humans claim righteousness? The image underscores divine transcendence through cosmic comparison.

(1×) Hiphil imperfect verb meaning 'to shine, give light, be bright.' The subject in Job 25:5 is the moon (יָרֵחַ), which 'does not shine' when compared to God's surpassing glory. The parallel with stars being 'not pure' suggests that even the most brilliant created lights appear dull before the Creator's holiness. Translations render it as 'shines' (English, Spanish 'brilla'), capturing the luminous sense. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR
en: it-shines | es: brilla | fr: יאהיל | de: [יאהיל] Job 25:5

אָהַל H0167 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (3×)
to pitch tent, encamp; to set up one's dwelling as a nomad
This Hebrew verb means to pitch a tent or encamp, reflecting the nomadic lifestyle of Israel's ancestors. Genesis 13:12 states that 'Lot pitched his tent even as far as Sodom,' a fateful decision bringing him near wickedness. Genesis 13:18 records that 'Abram moved his tent, and went and dwelt by the terebinth trees of Mamre, which are in Hebron, and built an altar there to the LORD'—showing Abraham's mobile worship. Isaiah 13:20 prophesies Babylon's desolation: 'It will never be inhabited...nor will the Arabian pitch tents there'—using tent-dwelling as a sign of habitation. The verb captures the transient, mobile existence of pastoral nomads.

(3×) Translations reflect tent-pitching or camping: English 'pitched-tent, will-pitch-tent,' Spanish 'acampaba, acampará' (camped, will camp), French 'dressa-tente' (pitched tent), German 'zeltete' (tented). Genesis 13:12 and 13:18 describe Abraham and Lot's nomadic movements—pitching tents marked significant relocations. Isaiah 13:20 uses the absence of tent-pitching as a sign of utter desolation: even nomadic Arabians, who need no permanent structures, will not camp in ruined Babylon. The term evokes the patriarchal wanderings and temporary dwelling in the land of promise. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-he-pitched-tent, and-pitched-tent, will-pitch-tent | es: Y-acampaba, acampará, y-acampaba | fr: [יהל], et-dressa-tente, et-il-dressa-tente | de: [יהל], und-zeltete Gen 13:12; Gen 13:18; Isa 13:20

אֹהֶל H0168 N-mpc / 2ms (349×)

Tent; a portable dwelling of cloth or skins, used for nomadic habitation, worship (the Tabernacle), and military encampment.
One of the most evocative words in the Hebrew Bible, ohel conjures the entire world of patriarchal and wilderness life. From Jabal, the 'father of tent-dwellers' (Gen 4:20), through the elaborate Tent of Meeting where God's presence dwelt among Israel, to the romantic imagery of the beloved's dark tents in Song of Songs 1:5, this word appears nearly 350 times. Every major target language renders it with a single core equivalent – Arabic khayma, Spanish tienda, German Zelt, French tente – underscoring its stable, concrete meaning across cultures.

1. Tabernacle / Tent of Meeting (sacred) (201×) Split from sense 80317. Criteria: The sacred Tabernacle, the 'ohel mo'ed' (Tent of Meeting), God's dwelling place among Israel (Exod 28:43, 29:4). Distinct theological and ritual significance.
en: tent-of | es: la-tienda-de, tienda-de, tienda-de- | fr: tente-de | de: Zelt-der Exod 28:43; Exod 29:4; Exod 29:10; Exod 29:11; Exod 29:30

2. tent (ordinary dwelling) (147×) Split from sense 80317. Criteria: Nomadic or domestic tents used for habitation, military encampments, personal shelter (Gen 4:20, 25:27).
en: -the-tent-of, a-tent, in-tent-of | es: en-tienda-de, la-tienda, la-tienda, | fr: -le-tente-de, dans-tente-de, la-tente | de: -der-Zelt-von, Zelt, der-Zelt Gen 18:1; Gen 18:2; Gen 18:9; Gen 18:10; Gen 31:25

3. (1×) A single disputed occurrence in 1 Kings 7:45 where the text refers to temple furnishings, and some English versions read 'these vessels.' The multilingual glosses fragment here – Spanish renders 'utensilios' (utensils), while others give demonstrative pronouns – suggesting a possible textual or parsing difficulty rather than a genuine second sense of ohel. Most scholars treat this as a scribal or cataloguing anomaly. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY
en: [the-these] | es: [los-utensilios] | fr: [the-these] | de: [the-these] 1Kgs 7:45

אֹהֶל H0169 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ohel — son of Zerubbabel in the post-exilic lineage of David Ohel appears in 1 Chronicles 3:20 as one of Zerubbabel's sons, part of the Davidic genealogy in the post-exilic period. The name means 'tent' in Hebrew, a common word repurposed as a personal name. His inclusion in this genealogy underscores the survival and continuation of David's line after the Babylonian exile, even though the monarchy itself had ended. These genealogical records preserved messianic hope by tracking royal descent.

(1×) Personal name of a son of Zerubbabel, meaning 'tent' but functioning as a proper noun in this context. Multilingual witnesses transliterate 'Ohel' rather than translate, recognizing its onomastic function. The single reference in 1 Chronicles 3:20 places him within the post-exilic Davidic line, a genealogical link important for maintaining royal legitimacy and messianic expectation despite political subjugation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Ohel | es: y-Ohel | fr: [ואהל] | de: [ואהל] 1Chr 3:20

אָהֳלָה H0170 N-proper-fs (5×)

Oholah — a symbolic name for Samaria as an unfaithful woman in Ezekiel's allegory Oholah is a symbolic proper name created by the prophet Ezekiel to personify Samaria (the northern kingdom) as an adulterous woman. The name means 'she who has her own tent,' implying that Samaria set up illegitimate worship apart from the Jerusalem temple — 'her tent' rather than God's. All five occurrences appear in Ezekiel 23, the extended allegory of two sisters — Oholah (Samaria) and Oholibah (Jerusalem) — who prostituted themselves with Assyria and Babylon respectively. The multilingual glosses — English 'Oholah,' Spanish 'Ohola,' French 'Ohola' — transliterate the name directly, preserving its symbolic weight.

(5×) The allegorical proper name Oholah, meaning 'her tent' or 'tent-woman,' used by Ezekiel to personify Samaria as the elder of two adulterous sisters (Ezek 23:4, 5, 36, 44). The name implies illegitimate worship at self-erected shrines rather than at the Jerusalem tabernacle. Her 'adultery' with Assyria (Ezek 23:5-10) represents the northern kingdom's political and religious entanglements. All five occurrences are confined to Ezekiel 23's sustained allegorical indictment. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Oholah | es: Ohola | fr: Ohola | de: Ohola Ezek 23:4; Ezek 23:5; Ezek 23:36; Ezek 23:44

אָהֳלִיאָב H0171 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Oholiab — the chief artisan who assisted Bezalel in constructing the tabernacle Oholiav was a Danite craftsman whom God appointed as the principal assistant to Bezalel in building the wilderness tabernacle (Exod 31:6). His name means 'the father's tent,' a fitting designation for one entrusted with constructing God's dwelling place among Israel. All five occurrences appear in Exodus (31:6; 35:34; 36:1-2; 38:23), consistently in the context of tabernacle construction. He is described as skilled in engraving, designing, and embroidering — complementing Bezalel's metalwork and woodcraft. The multilingual glosses show uniform transliteration: English 'Oholiab,' Spanish 'Oholiab,' with conjunctive variants ('and-Oholiab') in several languages.

(5×) The proper name Oholiav, designating the son of Ahisamach of the tribe of Dan, appointed by God as chief assistant to Bezalel in constructing the tabernacle and its furnishings (Exod 31:6). Skilled in engraving, embroidery, and textile design (Exod 38:23), he represents the divinely gifted artisan tradition alongside Bezalel. His name — 'father's tent' — resonates with his role as builder of God's tent-dwelling. All five occurrences are confined to the tabernacle construction narratives of Exodus 31-38. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Oholiab, and-Oholiab | es: Oholiab, y-Oholiab | fr: Oholiab, et-Oholiab | de: Oholiab, und-Oholiab Exod 31:6; Exod 35:34; Exod 36:1; Exod 36:2; Exod 38:23

אָהֳלִיבָה H0172 N-proper-fs (6×)

Oholibah, symbolic name for Jerusalem as an unfaithful wife in Ezekiel's allegory of the two sisters.
A prophetic proper name meaning 'my tent is in her,' used by Ezekiel to represent Jerusalem alongside her sister Oholah (Samaria). The name suggests that God's tabernacle-presence dwelt in Jerusalem, making her infidelity all the more grievous. All six occurrences cluster in Ezekiel 23, one of Scripture's most vivid allegories of covenant unfaithfulness. The name's etymology links the tent (אֹהֶל) of God's dwelling to the city that was supposed to house it faithfully.

Oholibah (6×) Oholibah (אָהֳלִיבָה, 'my tent is in her'), the symbolic name for Jerusalem in Ezekiel 23. She is depicted as the younger sister of Oholah (Samaria), both portrayed as adulterous wives of Yahweh. The name implies that God placed his sanctuary-tent within Jerusalem, yet she pursued foreign alliances and idolatries even more brazenly than her sister (Ezek 23:11). All six occurrences appear in this single extended allegory (Ezek 23:4, 11, 22, 36, 44). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Oholibah, and-Oholibah | es: Oholiba, y-Oholiba | fr: Oholiba, et-Oholiba | de: Oholiba, und-Oholiba Ezek 23:4; Ezek 23:11; Ezek 23:22; Ezek 23:36

אָהֳלִיבָמָה H0173 N-proper-ms (8×)

Oholibamah — a wife of Esau and an Edomite clan chief, meaning 'tent of the high place'
Oholibamah (meaning 'tent of the high place') appears exclusively in the Esau genealogies of Genesis 36 and 1 Chronicles 1. She is identified as the daughter of Anah and wife of Esau, through whom several Edomite clans traced their lineage. The name may also designate an Edomite chief or clan. Cross-language renderings are remarkably consistent — English 'Oholibamah,' Spanish 'Oholibama,' French and German similarly preserving the Hebrew form — reflecting the standard treatment of proper names in translation.

Oholibamah (proper name) (8×) The personal and clan name Oholibamah (אָהֳלִיבָמָה), etymologically 'tent of the high place,' designating Esau's wife (daughter of Anah, granddaughter of Zibeon the Hivite) and the Edomite clan descending from her. All eight occurrences cluster in Genesis 36 and 1 Chronicles 1:52, the Edomite genealogical registers. Translations across languages uniformly transliterate the name with minimal variation, confirming a single referent throughout. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Oholibamah, Oholivamah, and-Oholibamah | es: Oholibama, Oholivamah, y-Oholivamah | fr: Oholibamah, [אהליבמה], et-Oholibamah | de: Oholibama, Oholibamas, [אהליבמה] Gen 36:2; Gen 36:5; Gen 36:14; Gen 36:18

אַהֲלֹת H0174 N-mp (4×)
Aloes; a fragrant tree or aromatic spice derived from it Refers to an aromatic tree or its fragrant product, traditionally identified with aloeswood (aloexylon agallochum), prized across the ancient Near East for its perfume. Balaam's oracle compares Israel's tents to aloe trees planted by the LORD beside flowing waters (Num 24:6). Elsewhere it appears alongside myrrh and cassia as a luxury perfume — anointing royal robes (Ps 45:8), scenting a lover's bed (Prov 7:17), and listed among the choicest spices of the garden in Song 4:14.

(4×) Aloe trees or aloes as fragrant aromatic material. Every available translation converges on a single sense: English 'aloes,' Spanish 'áloes,' French 'aloès,' and German 'aloes' all agree. In Numbers 24:6 the plural designates aromatic trees (parallel to cedars), while in Psalms 45:8, Proverbs 7:17, and Song of Songs 4:14 the reference is to the costly perfume extracted from such wood, used to scent garments and living spaces. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME
en: aloes, and-aloes, like-aloes | es: como-áloes, y-áloe, y-áloes | fr: aloès, comme-aloes, et-aloès | de: [אהלים], [ואהלות], und-aloes Num 24:6; Ps 45:8; Prov 7:17; Song 4:14

אַהֲרֹן H0175 N-proper-ms (347×)
Aaron; elder brother of Moses, first high priest of Israel, and ancestor of the Levitical priesthood Aharon (Aaron) appears 347 times, making him one of the most frequently named figures in the Hebrew Bible. As Moses' elder brother (Exod 7:7), he served as spokesperson before Pharaoh and was consecrated as Israel's first high priest (Exod 28-29). His name dominates the Priestly source in Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers, where 'Aaron and his sons' becomes a formulaic designation for the legitimate priesthood. The narrative is not uncritical: Aaron also fashioned the golden calf (Exod 32) and was barred from entering the Promised Land alongside Moses (Num 20:24). His descendants, the 'sons of Aaron,' remained the priestly line throughout Israel's history.

Aaron (personal name) (347×) Proper masculine name of uncertain etymology, borne by Moses' elder brother (Exod 7:7) who became Israel's first high priest. He served as Moses' spokesman before Pharaoh (Exod 4:14-16), was consecrated in an elaborate ordination ceremony (Lev 8), and established the hereditary priestly line ('sons of Aaron,' Lev 1:5; Num 3:3). The narrative also records his failures, including the golden calf incident (Exod 32) and his death on Mount Hor before entering the land (Num 20:24-28). Called 'the holy one of the LORD' in Psalm 106:16. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Aaron | es: Aharon | fr: Aaron | de: Aaron Exod 4:14; Exod 4:27; Exod 4:30; Exod 5:20; Exod 6:13

אוֹ H0176a Conj (320×)
Or — disjunctive conjunction presenting alternatives or introducing particular cases
The Hebrew conjunction 'o functions as the standard disjunctive 'or,' connecting alternatives in legal codes, narratives, and everyday speech. Across its 320 occurrences it ranges from simple either/or choices (Gen 24:49) to the technical legal formula 'or if' that introduces subcases under a general rule (Exod 21:31; Lev 4:23). It can also imply preference — 'or rather' — as in Gen 24:55. Every major target language renders it with a single basic word: Spanish 'o,' French 'ou,' German 'oder,' confirming its stable, universal function.

(320×) A disjunctive conjunction that presents two or more alternatives, functioning like English 'or.' In legislative contexts (Leviticus, Exodus), it frequently introduces a particular case under a broader statute — 'or if he gore a son' (Exod 21:31). Occasionally it carries the nuance of 'or rather,' suggesting preference between options, as in Gen 24:55 ('days or ten'). The uniform cross-linguistic rendering (spa: 'o,' fra: 'ou,' deu: 'oder') reflects its straightforward semantic role. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES
en: or, or- | es: o, o- | fr: ou, ou- | de: oder, oder- Gen 24:49; Gen 24:50; Gen 24:55; Gen 31:43; Gen 44:8

אַו H0176b Conj (1×)
or, where — uncertain particle, possibly discourse marker or interrogative
This textual crux appears in Proverbs 31:4, in Lemuel's mother's warning: 'It is not for kings to drink wine, or (where?) for rulers strong drink.' The Ketiv reads 'or' (אוֹ), suggesting an alternative or choice, but some manuscripts and the Qere tradition read 'where' (אַי), posing a rhetorical question. The ambiguity affects translation but not the core message: rulers must avoid intoxication that clouds judgment. This reflects ancient Near Eastern wisdom on sobriety in leadership.

(1×) A discourse particle of uncertain reading in Proverbs 31:4, traditionally rendered 'or' but possibly 'where.' French preserves 'ou' (or), while Spanish opts for the interrogative '¿dónde?' (where). The textual uncertainty reflects scribal variation between אוֹ (or) and אַי (where). Either reading supports the broader warning against royal drunkenness, though the rhetorical force differs slightly between presenting alternatives versus posing a question. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES
en: [or] | es: [dónde] | fr: ou | de: [[או]] Prov 31:4

אוּאֵל H0177 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Uel — Israelite who divorced his foreign wife during Ezra's reform
Uel appears in Ezra 10:34 among those who had married foreign women and agreed to divorce them during Ezra's reform. The name may mean 'will of God' or be a contraction of a longer theophoric name. This painful episode reflects the post-exilic community's struggle to maintain covenant fidelity after the trauma of exile. The naming of individuals emphasizes personal accountability in the communal commitment to renewed obedience.

(1×) Personal name of a man from Bani's family who married a foreign wife contrary to covenant law. The name possibly means 'will of God' (from a root meaning 'desire' + El). Translations uniformly transliterate 'Uel' (English, Spanish), preserving the Hebrew onomastic form. Ezra 10:34 lists him among those who pledged to send away foreign wives, a controversial measure aimed at preserving ethnic and religious identity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Uel | es: y-Uel | fr: [ואואל] | de: [ואואל] Ezra 10:34

אוֹב H0178 Prep-k / N-ms (17×)
A spirit of the dead consulted through necromancy; also a leather bottle or wineskin used for storing wine.
In nearly every occurrence, this word refers to a medium or necromantic spirit – the kind of conjuring practice sternly forbidden throughout the Torah (Lev 19:31; 20:6, 27; Deut 18:11). It regularly appears paired with yiddeoni ('wizard'), forming a stock phrase for illicit contact with the dead. Saul's desperate visit to the medium at Endor (1 Sam 28:3-9) illustrates the gravity of transgressing this prohibition. In a single, striking use, Job 32:19 employs the same word to mean 'wineskin' – Elihu likens his pent-up words to new wine about to burst its leather container. Spanish renders the necromantic sense as 'espiritu de muertos' while using 'odres' for the wineskin, revealing how sharply the two senses diverge.

1. medium or necromantic spirit (16×) A person who conjures or channels the spirits of the dead, or the spirit itself invoked through divination. Consistently paired with yiddeoni in legal prohibitions (Lev 19:31; 20:6, 27; Deut 18:11) and narrative contexts (1 Sam 28:3, 7-9; 2 Kgs 21:6; 23:24). English translations render it 'medium' or 'familiar spirit'; Spanish uses 'espiritu de muertos,' emphasizing the ghostly entity rather than the human practitioner. SORCERY WITCHCRAFT

en: by-medium, like-a-ghost, medium | es: como-de-médium, espíritu, espíritu-de-muertos | fr: [אוב], [באוב], [האבות] | de: [אוב], [באוב], [האבות] Lev 19:31; Lev 20:6; Lev 20:27; Deut 18:11; 1Sam 28:3

2. wineskin or leather bottle (1×) A leather bottle or wineskin, attested only in Job 32:19 where Elihu compares the pressure of unspoken words to new wine about to burst fresh wineskins. Spanish 'como odres' and English 'like wineskins' confirm this concrete, everyday sense, which shares an etymological link to the hollow, swollen shape that also suggested the ghostly 'hollow voice' of the necromancer. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-wineskins | es: como-odres | fr: comme-כאבות | de: [כאבות] Job 32:19

אוֹבִיל H0179 N-proper-ms (1×)

Obil — Ishmaelite overseer of David's camels

Obil was an Ishmaelite who served as overseer of David's camels (1 Chronicles 27:30). The name may mean 'camel-driver' or possibly be theophoric (containing a divine element). His ethnic identity as an Ishmaelite is noteworthy, demonstrating that David's administration included non-Israelites in positions of trust. The role of camel overseer was significant in an era when these animals were valuable for trade, military logistics, and desert transport.

(1×) Personal name (possibly meaning 'camel-driver') of an Ishmaelite administrator in David's service. The name is consistently transliterated across languages (English 'Obil,' Spanish 'Obil'), though variant vocalizations exist. His appointment in 1 Chronicles 27:30 as overseer of camels reflects both his ethnic background (Ishmaelites were traditionally camel-herders) and David's cosmopolitan administrative structure, which incorporated skilled foreigners. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ovil | es: Obil | fr: [אוביל] | de: [אוביל] 1Chr 27:30

אוּבָל H0180 Art / N-ms (3×)

the Ulai (Aramaic); a river or canal near Susa in Persia, site of Daniel's vision

This Aramaic noun designates the Ulai, a river or canal near the Persian capital Susa where Daniel received prophetic visions. Daniel 8:2 places Daniel 'by the River Ulai' during a vision of a ram and goat. Daniel 8:3 and 8:6 both mention 'the river' in describing the ram's position and the goat's approach. The Ulai was likely a canal or tributary near Susa, giving the vision a specific geographical anchor. The riverside setting echoes other biblical visions—Ezekiel by the Chebar, John on Patmos—suggesting that God often revealed himself to exiled prophets near water in foreign lands.

(3×) Translations preserve the river name: English 'the-river,' Spanish 'el-río, río,' French and German show '[אובל], [האבל].' Daniel 8:2 locates the vision by the Ulai River in Susa, the Persian administrative capital. Daniel 8:3 positions the two-horned ram standing beside the river. Daniel 8:6 describes the goat charging toward the ram at the river. The Ulai's precise identification remains debated (perhaps the Eulaeus mentioned by classical writers), but it clearly designates a waterway near Susa where Daniel received revelation concerning the Medo-Persian and Greek empires. RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: the-river | es: el-río, río | fr: [אובל], [האבל] | de: [אובל], [האבל] Dan 8:2; Dan 8:3; Dan 8:6

אוּד H0181 N-ms (3×)

firebrand, burning stick; a piece of wood partially burned, used metaphorically for those rescued from disaster

This Hebrew noun denotes a firebrand or burning stick—a piece of wood pulled from the fire, charred but not consumed. Isaiah 7:4 dismisses the threat of Syria and Israel as 'two stubs of smoking firebrands,' fierce in appearance but nearly burned out. Amos 4:11 compares Israel's narrow escape from judgment to 'a firebrand plucked from the burning,' emphasizing God's mercy in sparing a remnant. Zechariah 3:2 uses the same image for Joshua the high priest: 'Is this not a brand plucked from the fire?'—rescued from exile and restored to service despite unworthiness. The metaphor vividly portrays those saved at the last moment from destruction.

(3×) Translations consistently render this as firebrand or burning stick: English 'brand, firebrands,' Spanish 'tizón, tizones' (firebrand, firebrands), French 'tison,' German similar forms. Isaiah 7:4 dismisses Israel's enemies as 'smoking firebrands'—looking dangerous but nearly extinguished. Amos 4:11 describes Israel as 'a firebrand snatched from the fire'—barely rescued from complete destruction. Zechariah 3:2 applies the image to Joshua, rescued from Babylonian exile and restored despite his defiled state. The term conveys dramatic rescue from the brink of disaster. BURNING AND FIRE

en: a-brand, like-a-brand, the-firebrands | es: como-tizón, tizones, un-tizón | fr: [האודים], tison | de: [אוד], [האודים], [כאוד] Isa 7:4; Amos 4:11; Zech 3:2

אוֹדָה H0182 N-fpc (11×)

Cause, reason, account — a feminine noun occurring only in the plural with עַל, meaning 'because of' or 'concerning'

The noun אוֹדָה (ʾodah) appears exclusively in the plural construct אוֹדוֹת / אוֹדֹת with the preposition עַל, forming the compound preposition 'on account of' or 'because of.' Abraham is distressed 'on account of' his son Ishmael (Gen 21:11) and confronts Abimelech 'about' the seized well (Gen 21:25). Isaac's servants report 'concerning' the well they dug (Gen 26:32). Jethro hears about everything God did 'on account of' Israel (Exod 18:8). Miriam and Aaron speak against Moses 'because of' the Cushite woman (Num 12:1). The expression consistently introduces the reason or occasion for a preceding action or emotion. Spanish 'a causa de' and French 'à cause de' function as equivalents.

cause, reason, account (11×) Cause, reason, or occasion — always in the plural construct with עַל to form 'on account of' or 'because of.' It introduces the motivating reason behind an action or emotion: Abraham's distress over Ishmael (Gen 21:11), his confrontation over the well (Gen 21:25), Jethro hearing what God did for Israel (Exod 18:8), and opposition to Moses over the Cushite wife (Num 12:1). Spanish 'a causa de' and German 'wegen' capture its causal function. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: account-of, because-of, matter-of | es: asunto-de, causa-de, cuenta-de- | fr: [אדות], account-de, affaire-de | de: Sache-von, [אדות], account-von Gen 21:11; Gen 21:25; Gen 26:32; Exod 18:8; Num 12:1

אָוָה H0183 V-Hitpael-Perf-3ms (28×)

To desire, crave, or yearn; ranging from neutral wish to sinful covetousness to deep longing

The Hebrew root avah captures the full spectrum of human wanting. In its Piel stem it expresses ordinary desire – a soul wishing to eat meat (Deut 12:20) or God choosing Zion as His dwelling (Ps 132:13-14). The Hitpael intensifies the verb into visceral craving: at Kibroth-hattaavah the people 'craved a craving' for meat (Num 11:4, 34), while the Decalogue forbids coveting a neighbor's possessions (Deut 5:21). Yet the same Hitpael can voice tender yearning, as when David longed for water from Bethlehem's well (2 Sam 23:15) or the psalmist invited a king to desire the bride's beauty (Ps 45:11).

1. desire, wish for (13×) Neutral or positive desire, predominantly in the Piel stem: wishing for food (Deut 12:20, 14:26), a king's authority (2 Sam 3:21; 1 Kgs 11:37), or God desiring Zion (Ps 132:13). Spanish 'desea' and the straightforward English 'desire' match this temperate register. The subject's nephesh (soul/appetite) typically governs the verb. DESIRE AND COVETING

en: I-desire-You, I-desired, I-have-desired-it | es: Desea, desea, desea- | fr: [אוה], [אויתיך], [אותיה] | de: [אויתיך], [אותה], [התאויתי] Deut 12:20; Deut 14:26; 2Sam 3:21; 1Kgs 11:37; Job 23:13

2. crave, covet, lust after (10×) Intense craving with negative moral overtones, characteristic of the Hitpael in prohibition contexts. The rabble's meat-craving at Kibroth-hattaavah (Num 11:4, 34) and the Tenth Commandment's 'you shall not covet' (Deut 5:21) anchor this sense. Proverbs 21:26 warns that the sluggard craves all day long. Spanish 'codiciar' and the connotation-heavy English 'covet' reflect the moral weight. DESIRE AND COVETING
en: [desire], and-they-craved, craved | es: (codicies), Y-desearon, [codicies] | fr: [ויתאוו], craved, désirer | de: [(תתאיו)], [[תתאו]], [תתאו] Num 11:4; Num 11:34; Deut 5:21; Ps 106:14; Prov 21:26

3. long for, yearn (5×) Deep emotional yearning or longing, also Hitpael but without negative judgment. David's soldiers risked their lives because he longed for water from the Bethlehem cistern (2 Sam 23:15; 1 Chr 11:17). The royal psalm invites the king to 'desire' the bride's beauty (Ps 45:11). Spanish '(y-deseo)' and German translations preserve the affective warmth distinct from both neutral wishing and sinful craving. DESIRE AND COVETING
en: (and-longed), [and-longed], and-he-longed | es: (y-deseó), Y-deseará, Y-deseó | fr: [ויתאו], [ויתאיו], désirer | de: [המתאוים], [ויתאו], [ויתאיו] 2Sam 23:15; 1Chr 11:17; Ps 45:11; Amos 5:18

אָוָה H0184 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-ConjPerf-2mp (1×)
you shall mark out, designate — establish boundaries by marking
In Numbers 34:10, Israel is commanded to 'mark out' or 'designate' the eastern boundary of the Promised Land. The Hithpael verb suggests reflexive or deliberate action — Israel is to determine and delineate their own borders according to God's instructions. This boundary-setting was crucial for tribal land allocation and national identity. The command combines divine gift with human responsibility: God grants the land, but Israel must actively define and claim its extent.

(1×) Hithpael verb meaning 'to mark out for yourselves, designate, measure off' (boundaries). The command in Numbers 34:10 instructs Israel to establish their eastern border by deliberate marking. Translations render it as 'you shall mark out' (English), 'marcaréis' (Spanish, 'you will mark'), capturing the active role Israel plays in defining territorial limits. This participatory element emphasizes covenant partnership: divine promise requires human obedience and action. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: and-you-shall-mark-out | es: Y-marcaréis | fr: et-tu-devra-mark-dehors | de: und-du-soll-zeichnen-heraus Num 34:10

אַוַּת H0185 Prep-b / N-fsc / 1cs (7×)
Desire, longing, craving; an intense want or appetite, whether natural, royal, or divine.
The feminine noun ᵊavvāh denotes a strong desire or craving, almost always appearing in the construct phrase 'the desire of (one's) soul.' In Deuteronomy it expresses the natural, morally neutral appetite for meat when living far from the sanctuary (Deut 12:15, 20, 21) and the Levite's heartfelt longing to serve at the chosen place (Deut 18:6). In 1 Samuel 23:20, it describes Saul's royal determination to seize David. Hosea 10:10 applies it to God's own purposeful will. Spanish deseo and French désir both preserve the intensity of yearning.

desire, longing, craving (7×) Desire, longing, or craving — an intense inward want, typically appearing in the construct 'desire of the soul' (ᵊavvat nepeš). It covers morally neutral physical appetite for food (Deut 12:15, 20, 21, 'you may slaughter and eat meat in all your gates, according to the desire of your soul'), a Levite's yearning to serve at the central sanctuary (Deut 18:6), a king's determined will (1 Sam 23:20, 'according to all the desire of your soul to come down'), and even divine purpose (Hos 10:10). Spanish deseo de and French désir both capture this range of intense longing. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: desire-of, in-my-desire, in-the-desire | es: deseo-de, el-deseo-de, en-el-deseo-de | fr: [באות], desire-de, désir | de: [באות], desire-von, in-mich Deut 12:15; Deut 12:20; Deut 12:21; Deut 18:6; 1Sam 23:20

אוּזַי H0186 N-proper-ms (1×)
Uzai — father of Palal, who helped rebuild Jerusalem's wall
Uzai appears in Nehemiah 3:25 as the father of Palal, one of those who worked on rebuilding Jerusalem's walls. The name may be related to roots meaning 'hearing' or strength,' though its precise derivation is uncertain. These genealogical markers in Nehemiah's wall-building account serve to honor participants and document communal effort. Individual names transform a construction project into a narrative of families and clans united in national restoration.

(1×) Personal name of Palal's father, identified in the list of those who repaired Jerusalem's walls under Nehemiah's leadership. Translations consistently transliterate 'Uzai' (English, Spanish), preserving the Hebrew name without semantic rendering. The single reference in Nehemiah 3:25 anchors Palal's identity within a family line, a common biblical pattern that grounds individuals in kinship networks and collective memory. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Uzai | es: Uzai | fr: [אוזי] | de: [אוזי] Neh 3:25

אוּזָל H0187 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (3×)
Uzal; personal and place name, a son of Joktan and a region in southern Arabia (Yemen)
This Hebrew name designates both a person and a place. Uzal was the sixth son of Joktan, a descendant of Shem, listed in the Table of Nations (Genesis 10:27; 1 Chronicles 1:21). The name also identifies a region or city in southern Arabia, associated with the old capital of Yemen. Ezekiel 27:19 mentions Uzal (emended from the MT) as a trading partner of Tyre, supplying wrought iron, cassia, and calamus—luxury goods from Arabia. The name connects to the Arabian Peninsula's trade networks that brought spices, metals, and aromatics to the Mediterranean world. Uzal represents Israel's awareness of distant peoples and places descended from Noah.

(3×) Translations preserve the name: English 'Uzal, from-Uzal,' Spanish 'Uzal, de-Uzal,' French 'Uzal,' German 'Usal' and Hebrew variants. Genesis 10:27 and 1 Chronicles 1:21 list Uzal among Joktan's sons, tracing Arabian genealogy from Shem. Ezekiel 27:19 (following emendation 'from Uzal') identifies the region as a source of trade goods for Tyre—iron, cassia, and calamus from southern Arabia. The name bridges genealogy and geography, linking a personal descendant to a geographical region known for valuable trade commodities. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Uzal, from-Uzal | es: Uzal, de-Uzal | fr: Uzal, [אוזל] | de: Usal, [אוזל], [מאוזל] Gen 10:27; 1Chr 1:21; Ezek 27:19

אוֹי H0188 Interjection (24×)
woe! — a passionate cry of grief, despair, or prophetic denunciation, often introducing judgment oracles Oy is an interjection — a raw, guttural cry of distress whose onomatopoeic force transcends translation. Its 24 occurrences divide between two emotional registers. In the first, it voices personal anguish: Isaiah's 'Woe is me, for I am undone!' upon seeing YHWH enthroned (Isa 6:5), Jeremiah's agonized 'Woe is me, my mother, that you bore me!' (Jer 15:10), and the despairing communal cry 'Woe to us!' when the ark was captured (1 Sam 4:7-8) or when invasion loomed (Jer 4:13; 6:4). In the second register, oy becomes a prophetic weapon of denunciation, introducing oracles of doom against nations and sinners: 'Woe to you, Moab!' (Num 21:29), 'Woe to the bloody city!' (Ezek 24:6, 9), and Hosea's devastating 'Woe to them, for they have strayed from me!' (Hos 7:13; 9:12). Proverbs uses it as a substantive: 'Who has woe? Who has sorrow? Those who linger long over wine' (Prov 23:29). The doubled form oy oy lakh ('woe, woe to you!') in Ezekiel 16:23 intensifies the denunciation. Spanish 'ay,' French 'malheur,' and German 'wehe' are precise cross-linguistic equivalents of this grief-laden exclamation.

woe (24×) An impassioned interjection expressing grief, despair, or prophetic condemnation. As personal lament: Isaiah's cry of unworthiness before the divine throne (Isa 6:5), Jeremiah's anguish over his calling (Jer 15:10; 45:3), and Israel's communal dread at military defeat (1 Sam 4:7-8; Jer 4:13, 31; 6:4). As prophetic denunciation:

oracles against Moab (Num 21:29), the 'bloody city' (Ezek 24:6, 9), and apostate Israel (Hos 7:13; 9:12; Isa 3:9, 11). Used substantively in Prov 23:29 ('who has woe?') and doubled for emphasis in Ezek 16:23. The word's onomatopoeic quality — preserved in Spanish 'ay,' French 'malheur,' German 'wehe' — gives it a visceral force that transcends mere vocabulary. WOE AND ALAS

en: Woe, deal-treacherously, woe | es: Ay, ay, ay? | fr: malheur, malheur!, woe | de: Wehe, Wehe!, wehe Num 21:29; Num 24:23; 1Sam 4:7; 1Sam 4:8; Prov 23:29

אֱוִי H0189 N-proper-ms (2×)

Evi (personal name: 'desire'), a Midianite chief

One of five Midianite kings killed during Israel's war against Midian (Numbers 31:8, Joshua 13:21). Evi, along with Rekem, Zur, Hur, and Reba, fell in battle when Israel executed divine judgment on Midian for the Baal-peor incident. Joshua 13:21 identifies these five as 'princes of Sihon,' vassals of the Amorite king who ruled the region. Their defeat cleared Transjordan for Israelite settlement. The name 'Evi' likely means 'desire' or 'longing.'

(2×) Evi appears exclusively in accounts of Midian's destruction. Numbers 31 lists him among the five kings slain alongside the prophet Balaam, retribution for leading Israel into sexual immorality and idolatry at Peor. Joshua's retrospective identifies the five as vassal princes under Sihon, indicating a complex political hierarchy in Transjordan—Amorite overlords with Midianite sub-kings. Evi's name ('desire') joins other Midianite names in preserving pre-Israelite onomastic traditions. His death contributes to Israel's conquest narrative: clearing enemies from the promised inheritance. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Evi | es: Evi | fr: Evi | de: Evi Num 31:8; Josh 13:21

אוֹיָה H0190 Interjection (1×)

woe, alas — interjection expressing grief or distress

This interjection appears in Psalm 120:5, where the psalmist laments, 'Woe is me that I sojourn in Meshech!' It expresses deep grief, distress, or lamentation. The form is a variant of the more common אוֹי, extended for poetic or emphatic effect. The psalmist's cry captures the anguish of living among hostile foreigners, far from Jerusalem. Such laments give voice to exile's psychological toll, when geographical displacement compounds spiritual alienation.

(1×) An interjection of lamentation or distress, 'woe!' or 'alas!', a variant form of אוֹי. Multilingual witnesses render it consistently as an exclamation of grief: 'woe' (English, German), 'Ay' (Spanish), 'malheur' (French, 'misfortune/woe'). Psalm 120:5 uses it to express the psalmist's anguish at dwelling among those hostile to peace, intensifying the sense of exile and longing for Zion. WOE AND ALAS en: woe | es: Ay | fr: malheur | de: woe Ps 120:5

אֱוִיל H0191 Adj-ms (26×)

fool, foolish person — one who is morally obtuse, despising wisdom and discipline

Evil (pronounced eh-VEEL) is the Hebrew wisdom tradition's portrait of the moral fool — not someone lacking intelligence but someone who willfully rejects wisdom, discipline, and the fear of the LORD. Of its 26 occurrences, 19 appear in Proverbs, where the evil is a fixed character type set alongside the naive (peti) and the scoffer (lets). This fool despises wisdom and instruction (Prov 1:7; 15:5), mocks at guilt (Prov 14:9), picks quarrels needlessly (Prov 20:3), and cannot be reformed even when ground in a mortar with a pestle (Prov 27:22). The prophets deploy the term as a devastating label: Hosea calls the prophet himself evil (Hos 9:7), Isaiah mocks Egypt's counselors as sons of the wise who give foolish advice (Isa 19:11), and Jeremiah indicts Israel as a people 'foolish, who do not know me' (Jer 4:22). Job's friend Eliphaz warns that 'vexation kills the fool' (Job 5:2-3). The Psalms note that fools suffer for their transgressions (Ps 107:17).

fool, foolish person (26×) A person characterized by willful moral and spiritual obtuseness who rejects wisdom, discipline, and the fear of the LORD. Proverbs builds an extensive profile: the evil despises instruction (Prov 1:7; 15:5), mocks at guilt (Prov 14:9), provokes strife (Prov 20:3), and is incorrigible even under extreme correction (Prov 27:22). Prophets wield the term as indictment: Hosea labels the prophet foolish (Hos 9:7), Isaiah mocks Egypt's sages (Isa 19:11), and Jeremiah brands Israel as morally senseless (Jer 4:22). Spanish 'necio/insensato' captures the moral rather than intellectual dimension. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: a-fool, but-a-fool-of, but-fools | es: Necio, Necios, insensato | fr: [אויל], [ואוילים], et-insensé | de: Tor, [אויל], [ואוילים] Job 5:2; Job 5:3; Ps 107:17; Prov 1:7; Prov 7:22

אֱוִיל מְרֹדַךְ H0192 N-proper-ms (3×)

Evil-merodach; personal name of a Babylonian king, son and successor of Nebuchadnezzar

This Hebrew name designates Evil-merodach (Babylonian Awel-Marduk, meaning 'man of Marduk'), king of Babylon who succeeded his father Nebuchadnezzar in 562 B.C. His brief reign (562-560 B.C.) is noted in Scripture for one significant act: he released King Jehoiachin of Judah from prison, gave him a position of honor, and provided for him the rest of his life (2 Kings 25:27; Jeremiah 52:31). This royal clemency toward a captive Judean king is narrated twice, emphasizing its importance. It offered hope to the exiles that their fortunes might change. Evil-merodach's own reign was short; he was assassinated by his brother-in-law Neriglissar.

(3×) Translations preserve the royal name: English 'Evil-Merodach, Evil, Merodakh,' Spanish 'Evil-Merodak, Evil, Merodac,' French 'Evil, Merodakh,' German similar forms. 2 Kings 25:27 (occurring twice, counting the name components) records that in his first year, Evil-merodach released Jehoiachin from Babylonian prison. Jeremiah 52:31 parallels this account, confirming that Jehoiachin received royal favor—eating at the king's table and receiving a regular allowance. This act of mercy provided a glimmer of hope for exiled Judah, showing that God could move pagan kings to show kindness to his anointed. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Evil, Evil-Merodak, Merodakh | es: Evil, Evil-Merodak, Merodac | fr: Evil, Merodakh, [אויל מרדך] | de: Evil, Merodakh, [אויל מרדך] 2Kgs 25:27; Jer 52:31

אוּל H0193a N-msc / 3mp (1×)

body, belly — physical torso or prominent front part

In Psalm 73:4, the psalmist observes the wicked: 'They have no pangs until death; their body is fat and sleek' (ESV). The Hebrew term denotes the body or belly, specifically the prominent front part. Used with a tone of contempt, it emphasizes the physical robustness and apparent well-being of the wicked, which troubles the psalmist who sees the righteous suffering. This body-imagery contrasts outward prosperity with inward spiritual bankruptcy.

(1×) The body or belly, specifically the front or prominent part of the torso, used here with a contemptuous tone. The phrase 'their body' (אוּלָם) in Psalm 73:4 describes the wicked's robust health, which the psalmist finds troubling. Spanish 'su cuerpo' (their body) and the construct with a suffix underscore physical well-being as a challenge to faith — why do the wicked prosper bodily while the righteous suffer? POWER AND ABILITY

en: is-their-body | es: su-cuerpo | fr: puissant | de: ist-ihr-body Ps 73:4

אוּל H0193b N-mpc (1×)

leading men, nobles — prominent or mighty leaders

This term appears in the Ketiv of 2 Kings 24:15, describing Nebuchadnezzar's deportation of 'the leading men of the land' from Jerusalem to Babylon. The Qere reading substitutes 'rams' (metaphorically for leaders), but the Ketiv's 'leading men' or 'nobles' is straightforward. The context depicts the systematic stripping of Judah's elite — royalty, officials, warriors, craftsmen — leaving only the poorest to prevent rebellion. This exile of leadership ensured political paralysis.

(1×) Plural construct noun denoting 'leading men, nobles, mighty ones' of a region or people. Translations render it as 'mighty ones of' (English), 'los fuertes de' (Spanish, 'the strong/mighty of'), emphasizing social and political prominence. In 2 Kings 24:15, these leaders are exiled to Babylon, crippling Judah's capacity for organized resistance. The term highlights the strategic deportation of those capable of leadership and influence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: mighty-ones-of | es: los-fuertes-de | fr: puissant-ceux-de 2Kgs 24:15

אוּלַי H0194 Adv (45×)

perhaps, peradventure — an adverb expressing hopeful possibility, anxious doubt, or conditional supposition

Ulay is the Hebrew adverb of uncertain possibility, covering the spectrum from hopeful expectation to anxious fear. Across its 45 occurrences, it most often expresses a cautious hope: Sarah's 'perhaps I shall obtain children through her' (Gen 16:2), Balak's 'perhaps I shall be able to defeat them' (Num 22:6), and Abraham's servant wondering 'perhaps the woman will not follow me' (Gen 24:5). In Abraham's intercession for Sodom, ulay functions as a virtual conditional: 'Perhaps there are fifty righteous — will you spare the city?' (Gen 18:24-32), each iteration ratcheting the number downward. Occasionally it carries a note of ironic mockery, as when Isaiah taunts Babylon: 'Perhaps you may profit from your sorceries' (Isa 47:12). The translations capture the tentativeness well: Spanish 'quizas,' French 'peut-etre,' German 'vielleicht.'

(45×) An adverb of contingent possibility, introducing a clause whose outcome is uncertain but contemplated with hope, fear, or speculation. Most commonly expresses a hopeful wish ('perhaps God will be gracious,' 2 Sam 16:12; 'perhaps I shall be built up through her,' Gen 16:2) or an apprehensive doubt ('perhaps the woman will not follow me,' Gen 24:5, 39). In the Sodom intercession (Gen 18:24-32), it functions as a conditional protasis ('if perhaps there are fifty righteous'). Occasionally tinged with irony, as when prophets mock pagan reliance on rituals (Isa 47:12; Jer 51:8). All 45 occurrences share this single modal-epistemic sense of uncertain possibility. HAPPENING AND CHANCE

en: perhaps | es: quizás | fr: peut-être | de: vielleicht Gen 16:2; Gen 18:24; Gen 18:28; Gen 18:29; Gen 18:30

אוּלַי H0195 N-proper-fs (2×)

Ulai (place name), a river in Elam near Susa

A river in the province of Elam where Daniel saw visions (Daniel 8:2, 16). The Ulai (Greek: Eulaeus, Assyrian: Ulâi) is identified with the Karūn River in modern Iran, flowing past the ancient city of Susa. In his vision, Daniel found himself beside the Ulai canal when he saw the ram and goat representing Persia and Greece. The river's mention grounds the apocalyptic vision in concrete geography—Daniel stands at the administrative heart of the Persian Empire, receiving revelation about kingdoms yet to come.

(2×) The Ulai appears twice in Daniel 8, establishing the geographic setting for the ram-and-goat vision. Ancient sources confirm this as a major waterway near Susa (the Persian administrative capital). The Greek Septuagint calls it 'Eulaios,' matching Greco-Roman references to the river. Some scholarship suggests the upper Ulai corresponded to the modern Kerkha River (ancient Choaspes), later merging with the Karūn. Daniel's presence at this imperial center—far from Jerusalem—symbolizes exile's reality even as God reveals future redemption. HAPPENING AND CHANCE

en: Ulay | es: Ulai | fr: Ézéchiel | de: vielleicht Dan 8:2; Dan 8:16

אֱוִלִי H0196 Adj-ms (1×)

foolish, senseless — lacking wisdom or moral discernment

In Zechariah 11:15, God commands the prophet to take up 'the equipment of a foolish shepherd,' symbolizing coming judgment through incompetent leadership. The adjective denotes moral and intellectual foolishness — a shepherd who neglects, exploits, and destroys the flock rather than protecting it. This acted prophecy warns of leaders who abandon their pastoral responsibility, resulting in the sheep's ruin. It's a sobering image of judgment mediated through failed stewardship.

(1×) Adjective meaning 'foolish, senseless, lacking understanding' in a moral and practical sense. Zechariah 11:15 uses it to characterize a shepherd (leader) who fails his duty, symbolizing corrupt or incompetent rulers. Spanish 'insensato' (foolish, senseless) and French 'insensé' capture the moral deficiency. The context emphasizes willful neglect and exploitation, not mere incompetence — a shepherd who actively harms rather than protects the flock. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY

en: foolish | es: insensato | fr: insensé | de: [אולי] Zech 11:15

אוּלָם H0197 Prep-k (34×)

Porch, vestibule, portico; the covered entrance hall of a temple or palace

An architectural term for the entrance hall or covered portico of an important building, appearing almost exclusively in descriptions of Solomon's temple and palace, and in Ezekiel's visionary temple. The porch of the temple (1 Kgs 6:3; 7:21) served as the grand threshold between the outer courts and the holy place, a liminal space of approach to God's presence. Joel 2:17 places weeping priests 'between the porch and the altar,' a location of intense intercession. French renders it as a transliteration, while German 'Vorhalle' ('fore-hall') captures the architectural function precisely.

porch, vestibule, portico (34×) The covered entrance hall or vestibule of a sacred or royal building — a portico forming the front section of the temple or palace. Concentrated in descriptions of Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6:3; 7:19, 21), his palace complex with its 'porch of pillars' and 'porch of the throne' (1 Kgs 7:6–7), and Ezekiel's visionary temple (Ezek 40:7–49). Joel 2:17 invokes the space 'between the porch and the altar' as the locus of priestly lament, underscoring its liturgical significance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-porch, and-the-porch, porch | es: el-pórtico, pórtico, pórtico-de | fr: [אלם], [האלם], et-le-portique | de: Vorhalle, [האולם], die-Vorhalle 1Kgs 6:3; 1Kgs 7:6; 1Kgs 7:7

אוּלָם H0198 N-proper-ms (4×)

Ulam; a proper name borne by two men in the Chronicler's genealogies

A masculine proper name meaning perhaps 'porch' or 'vestibule,' borne by two figures in the genealogical records of Chronicles. The first Ulam is a son of Sheresh in the Manassite line (1 Chr 7:16–17). The second is a Benjaminite descendant of Saul whose sons were mighty warriors and prolific archers, numbering 150 sons and grandsons (1 Chr 8:39–40). The name is consistently transliterated across languages — English, Spanish, and French all render it 'Ulam' or 'Oulam.'

(4×) Ulam — a personal name appearing in two distinct genealogical contexts. English and Spanish uniformly transliterate 'Ulam,' while French renders 'Oulam.' German 'Vorhalle' (vestibule) interestingly reflects the common noun meaning of the root rather than the proper name. In 1 Chronicles 7:16–17 Ulam belongs to Manasseh's tribe; in 1 Chronicles 8:39–40 the name designates a Benjaminite warrior clan descended from Saul. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ulam | es: Ulam | fr: Oulam | de: Vorhalle 1Chr 7:16; 1Chr 7:17; 1Chr 8:39; 1Chr 8:40

אוּלָם H0199 Conj (19×)

But indeed, however, surely: a strong adversative-asseverative conjunction introducing emphatic contrast.

This conjunction (ʾûlām) introduces a sharp turn in the argument, often rendered 'but indeed' or 'howbeit.' It appears most frequently with waw (wĕʾûlām), strengthening the contrast. When God tells Pharaoh 'but in very deed for this cause have I raised you up' (Exod 9:16), the particle underscores divine sovereignty overriding human expectation. In Job it marks the sufferer's pivotal rebuttals—'but as for me, I would seek God' (Job 5:8). German 'aber' and 'doch,' Spanish 'pero' and 'ciertamente,' and French 'cependant' together capture its blend of adversative force and asseverative weight.

but indeed / and surely (adversative-asseverative conjunction) (19×) An adversative-asseverative conjunction that signals a strong but or emphatic contrast, often combined with waw as wĕʾûlām. In Gen 48:19 Jacob concedes Manasseh's greatness but insists Ephraim will surpass him. In Exod 9:16 it underscores God's sovereign purpose behind Pharaoh's existence. Throughout Job (2:5; 5:8; 13:3) it introduces the speaker's defiant counterclaim. The multilingual evidence—Spanish 'pero-ciertamente,' German 'aber-gewiss'—confirms its dual adversative-asseverative function. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: and-but, and-however, and-surely | es: Ciertamente, Pero, Pero-ciertamente | fr: et-cependant, et-certainement, et-encore | de: aber, aber-gewiss, doch Gen 28:19; Gen 48:19; Exod 9:16; Num 14:21; Judg 18:29

אִוֶּלֶת H0200 N-fs (25×)

Folly, foolishness; moral and intellectual stupidity characteristic of the fool in Wisdom literature

Ivveleth (אִוֶּלֶת) is the abstract feminine noun for folly in Hebrew Wisdom literature, denoting not mere ignorance but a deep-seated moral and intellectual obtuseness. Proverbs sets it in direct opposition to wisdom and understanding: folly is 'bound up in the heart of a child' and must be driven out by discipline (Prov 22:15), and Lady Folly personified tears down the house that Wisdom builds (Prov 14:1). The psalmist confesses 'my folly is not hidden from you' (Ps 38:5; 69:5), linking it to guilt and spiritual exposure. Nearly every occurrence ties to the kesil or ewil — the obstinate fool who refuses correction.

folly / foolishness (25×) Moral and intellectual foolishness, the defining quality of the kesil and ewil in Proverbs and Psalms. Contrasted explicitly with understanding (tevunah, Prov 14:29; 15:21), it describes not simple ignorance but willful refusal of wisdom. Spanish 'necedad,' French 'folie,' and German 'Torheit' all capture the moral weight. Proverbs 22:15 declares it 'bound up in the heart of a child,' removable only by the rod of discipline, while Proverbs 14:1 personifies it as a destructive force opposing Lady Wisdom. FOLLY AND FOOLISHNESS

en: but-folly, but-the-folly-of, folly | es: La-necedad, Necedad, en-necedad-su | fr: dans-son-folie-lui, et-folie, folie | de: Torheit, und-Torheit Ps 38:5; Ps 69:5; Prov 5:23; Prov 12:23; Prov 13:16

אוֹמָר H0201 N-proper-ms (3×)

Omar; personal name meaning 'eloquent' or 'speaker,' a descendant of Esau

This Hebrew proper name designates Omar, a grandson of Esau through his son Eliphaz. The name possibly means 'eloquent' or 'speaker.' Omar appears in Esau's genealogy in Genesis 36:11 and 15, listed among the chiefs of Edom, and again in 1 Chronicles 1:36. As part of Edom's chiefly families, Omar represents the fulfillment of God's promise that Esau would also become a great nation, though not the nation of covenant promise. The genealogies of Edom show God's providence extending even to those outside the direct line of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, affirming the blessing promised to all peoples through Abraham.

(3×) Translations preserve the personal name: English 'Omar, and-Omar,' Spanish 'Omar, y-Omar,' French 'Omar,' German with Hebrew variants. Genesis 36:11 lists Omar among the sons of Eliphaz, Esau's firstborn. Genesis 36:15 identifies him as a chief among Esau's descendants in Edom. 1 Chronicles 1:36 repeats the genealogy, confirming Omar's place in Edomite tribal structure. The name testifies to God's faithfulness in multiplying Esau's line, even as the covenant promises passed through Jacob. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Omar, and-Omar | es: Omar, y-Omar | fr: Omar, [וֹאומר] | de: Omar, [וֹאומר] Gen 36:11; Gen 36:15; 1Chr 1:36

אוֹן H0202 N-msc / 1cs (12×)

Vigor, manly strength, vitality; by extension wealth, substance, or material resources.

When Jacob blesses Reuben as 'the firstfruits of my vigor' (Gen 49:3), the word on points to procreative, life-giving power – the strength of a man at his prime. Spanish 'vigor' and French 'force' preserve this bodily energy. Isaiah 40:26 applies the same term to God's inexhaustible cosmic power, while Isaiah 40:29 contrasts those 'without strength.' A secondary sense emerges in wisdom and prophetic literature where vigor becomes material wealth: Job 20:10 describes the wicked man's children restoring 'his wealth,' and Hosea 12:8 records Ephraim boasting 'I have found riches for myself.'

1. vigor, strength, manly power (10×) Physical vigor, manly strength, reproductive vitality. The core meaning appears in Jacob's blessing of Reuben: 'the beginning of my vigor' (Gen 49:3, reshit oni), referring to the firstborn as proof of procreative power. Deuteronomy 21:17 echoes this in the law of inheritance. In Job, the word describes human strength that fails (Job 18:7, 12) and the raw muscular power of Behemoth (Job 40:16). Isaiah 40:26 scales this up to divine power – God who summons the stars 'by abundance of great strength.' Spanish 'vigor/fuerza,' French 'force,' and German 'Starke' all reflect bodily potency. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: and-in-his-strength, and-its-power, his-strength | es: de-su-poder, fuerzas, mi-vigor | fr: [אונים], et-force, et-son-force-lui | de: Stärke, [אונן], [אונים] Gen 49:3; Deut 21:17; Job 18:7; Job 18:12; Job 40:16

2. wealth, substance, riches (2×) Material wealth, substance, or riches – an extension from physical power to the resources that power produces. In Job 20:10 the wicked man's children must 'restore his wealth' (ono), where the possessions stand as the fruit of one's life energy. Hosea 12:8 clinches this sense: Ephraim says 'I have found wealth for myself' (on li), boasting of material prosperity. Spanish 'riqueza' and the parallel with Hosea's economic context confirm the semantic shift from bodily vigor to accumulated riches. MIXED MULTITUDE en: his-wealth, wealth | es: riqueza, su-riqueza. | fr: force, son-force-lui | de: Unheil, [אונן] Job 20:10; Hos 12:8

אוֹן H0203 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

On — Reubenite leader who joined Korah's rebellion

On, son of Peleth, is mentioned in Numbers 16:1 as a Reubenite who initially joined Korah's rebellion against Moses and Aaron. Interestingly, he disappears from the narrative after this introduction, leading some to speculate he withdrew or was somehow spared. The name may mean 'vigour' or 'strength.' His brief appearance highlights the broader tribal and factional dynamics underlying the rebellion — not just Levitical jealousy, but Reubenite resentment over lost primacy.

(1×) Personal name (possibly meaning 'vigour') of a Reubenite who joined Korah's rebellion but vanishes from the subsequent narrative. Translations uniformly transliterate 'On' (English, Spanish, French, German), preserving the Hebrew name. His mention in Numbers 16:1 signals Reubenite involvement in the uprising, yet his absence from later verses has sparked interpretive speculation — did he repent, escape judgment, or was his role minimal? PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-On | es: y-On | fr: et-On | de: und-On Num 16:1

אֹן H0204 N-proper-ms (3×)

On; place name of an Egyptian city, center of sun worship, known as Heliopolis

This Hebrew name designates On, an ancient Egyptian city (Egyptian 'Iunu,' Greek 'Heliopolis,' meaning 'city of the sun'). Located near modern Cairo on the Nile's east bank, On was a major religious center for the worship of the sun god Ra. Genesis 41:45 and 41:50 identify Potiphera, Joseph's father-in-law, as 'priest of On,' and Genesis 46:20 confirms that Joseph's sons were born to Asenath, daughter of this priest. Ezekiel 30:17 prophesies judgment on 'the young men of Aven [On],' condemning the idolatry centered there. On thus represents Egyptian religion and culture into which Joseph married, a detail highlighting God's providence in exalting Joseph even within Egypt's pagan structures.

(3×) Translations preserve the city name: English 'On,' Spanish 'On,' French 'On,' German 'On, von-On' (from On). Genesis 41:45, 50, and 46:20 connect Joseph's marriage to Asenath, daughter of the priest of On, integrating Joseph into Egyptian elite society. Ezekiel 30:17 pronounces judgment on On (there called 'Aven,' a wordplay on wickedness), predicting that its young men will fall by the sword. The city's prominence in sun worship made it emblematic of Egyptian paganism, yet God used even this setting to preserve Jacob's family through Joseph. PERSONAL NAMES

en: On | es: On | fr: On | de: On, von-On Gen 41:45; Gen 41:50; Gen 46:20

אָוֶן H0205 N-msc / 3ms (79×)

Trouble, sorrow, wickedness; ranges from harmful wrongdoing and its guilty consequences to emptiness, vanity, and mourning.

Aven is one of those Hebrew words whose semantic range reveals a theology: trouble, sorrow, wickedness, and nothingness are not separate categories but points on a single continuum. What begins as moral 'iniquity' inevitably produces 'trouble' for others and eventually collapses into 'emptiness.' Balaam's oracle declares that God 'has not beheld aven in Jacob' (Num 23:21), where the parallelism with 'amal (misery, toil) shows how tightly wrongdoing and its painful consequences are woven together. The prophets exploit this fusion brilliantly: Hosea renames Beth-el ('house of God') as Beth-aven ('house of nothingness'), and Isaiah 41:29 declares idols to be aven — simultaneously wicked, worthless, and empty. German Unheil and Nichtigkeit capture the trouble and nothingness poles; Spanish iniquidad and vanidad the moral and existential poles; but no single word in any language spans the full arc.

1. iniquity, wickedness (69×) Iniquity, wickedness, wrongdoing — the dominant sense at 69 occurrences, covering active moral evil, the sinful condition, and the guilt that clings to the evildoer. The phrase po'ale aven ('workers of iniquity') is nearly formulaic in the Psalms (Ps 5:5; 6:8; 14:4; 36:12; 53:4; 59:2; 92:7; 94:4; 125:5; 141:9), branding persistent wrongdoers as a class. Job's friends insist that those who 'plow iniquity and sow trouble reap the same' (Job 4:8), revealing how this sense shades into consequence. Spanish iniquidad, French iniquité, and German Missetat all select moral-evil vocabulary, while Arabic ithm ('sin, guilt') confirms the ethical-juridical weight. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS

en: evil, iniquity, trouble | es: iniquidad, iniquidad., la-iniquidad | fr: iniquité | de: Missetat, Nichtigkeit, Unheil Num 23:21; Job 4:8; Job 5:6; Job 11:11; Job 11:14

2. trouble, calamity, sorrow (3×) Trouble, calamity, sorrow — 3 occurrences where the emphasis falls on the harmful consequences and distress that wrongdoing produces, rather than the moral act itself. In Ps 90:10 the span of human life is 'amal va-aven' ('toil and trouble'), a merism for life's griefs. Jer 4:15 announces aven coming from the hill-country of Ephraim, and Hab 3:7 sees the tents of Cushan 'in affliction.' Arabic musiba ('calamity') and German Unheil ('un-welfare') both shift from moral to experiential vocabulary, marking a real boundary. The sense is the flip side of sense 1: not the crime, but the suffering it generates. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: and-sorrow, trouble | es: aflicción, calamidad, y-vanidad | fr: et-vanité, iniquité, vanité | de: Nichtigkeit, Unheil, und-sorrow Ps 90:10; Jer 4:15; Hab 3:7

3. emptiness, vanity, nothingness (3×) Emptiness, vanity, nothingness — 3 occurrences where aven describes what is fundamentally devoid of substance or reality. Isaiah 41:29 declares idols to be aven ('nothing'); Amos 5:5 puns that Beth-el will become aven ('nothingness'); Zech 10:2 says the teraphim speak aven ('emptiness'). Here the word approaches hebel in meaning — futility and insubstantiality. Spanish vanidad, French vanité, and German Nichtigkeit all select the 'emptiness' register. This is theologically potent: idolatry is not just wicked (sense 1) but ontologically vacant. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: emptiness, nothing | es: iniquidad, para-nada, vanidad | fr: iniquité, vanité | de: Nichtigkeit, Unheil, zu-Unheil Isa 41:29; Amos 5:5; Zech 10:2

4. mourning, grief (2×) Mourning, grief — 2 occurrences in ritual contexts. In Gen 35:18 Rachel names her dying-born son Ben-oni ('son of my sorrow'), and in Deut 26:14 and Hos 9:4 the term appears in connection with funeral mourning rites and mourners' bread. Arabic huzn ('grief') and Spanish duelo ('mourning') both select bereavement-specific vocabulary. The Hosea passage is particularly illuminating: bread associated with aven is ritually defiling, suggesting this sense carried cultic as well as emotional weight. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: in-my-mourning, mourning | es: duelo, en-mi-luto | fr: dans-mon-mourning, iniquité | de: Unheil, in-mein-mourning Deut 26:14; Hos 9:4

5. Aven (place name) (1×) Aven as a place name or toponym — 1 clear occurrence at Hos 10:8, where 'the high places of Aven' designates the idolatrous shrine, probably a contemptuous renaming of Beth-el. The word functions simultaneously as a proper noun and a theological judgment — the place is named for what it truly is. This usage is confirmed by the LXX's transliteration On and by the broader prophetic pattern of polemical place-naming (cf. Amos 5:5). Spanish and English both preserve the proper-noun treatment: 'Aven.' INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS

en: Aven | es: Aven | fr: iniquité | de: Unheil Hos 10:8

6. wicked, powerful ones (1×) Substantival use: wicked or powerful ones — 1 occurrence at Prov 11:7 where 'the hope of aven perishes' apparently uses the term as a substantive referring to persons characterized by wickedness or oppressive power. The Spanish rendering fuertes ('strong ones') suggests an alternative reading linking to Hebrew 'on ('vigor, wealth'), and indeed some lexicographers treat this as a homonym. The ambiguity is itself instructive: in proverbial wisdom, the wicked and the merely powerful often collapse into the same category. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: the-wicked | es: fuertes | fr: iniquité | de: Unheil Prov 11:7

אָוֶן H0206 N-proper-fs (2×)

Aven (place name: 'wickedness' or 'trouble'), referring to false worship centers

A derogatory name applied to false worship sites, playing on the word for 'wickedness' or 'trouble.' Ezekiel 30:17 uses it for On (Heliopolis), Egypt's center of sun worship. Amos 1:5 refers to the 'Valley of Aven,' likely the Beqaa Valley in Lebanon where idolatrous shrines stood. Both prophets employ wordplay: instead of using the actual place names, they substitute 'Aven' to emphasize the locations' moral corruption and coming judgment. It's prophetic mockery—calling cult centers by their true character.

(2×) Prophets weaponized 'aven' (trouble/wickedness) as a substitute name for idolatrous sites. Ezekiel targets On (Heliopolis), Egypt's prestigious sun-cult center, renaming it 'Aven' to signal its doom alongside Tehaphnehes. Amos condemns Damascus and its sphere, including the 'Valley of Aven'—probably Baalbek's Beqaa Valley with its long pagan history. The name-substitution functions as prophetic satire: these places proud of their religious significance are actually centers of 'aven,' destined for destruction. The Hebrew pun exposes false worship's reality beneath its impressive facade. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS en: Aven | es: Avén | fr: force | de: Unheil, [אוֹן] Ezek 30:17; Amos 1:5

אוֹנוֹ H0207 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Ono — a Benjaminite town northwest of Lydda, associated with the plain of the same name

Ono was a town in the territory of Benjamin, identified with modern Kefr Ana northwest of Lydda (Lod). Its five occurrences span from the Chronicler's genealogies to the post-exilic community. It first appears as a town built (or rebuilt) by a Benjaminite named Shemed (1 Chr 8:12), then in the census lists of returning exiles alongside Lod (Ezra 2:33; Neh 7:37), in the resettlement roster (Neh 11:35), and notably in Nehemiah 6:2, where Sanballat and Geshem propose a meeting 'in the plain of Ono' — an invitation Nehemiah wisely refuses. The multilingual glosses — English 'Ono,' Spanish 'Ono' — reflect straightforward transliteration of this toponym.

(5×) The proper noun Ono, designating a Benjaminite town and its surrounding plain, located northwest of Lydda in the Shephelah region. First mentioned as founded by Shemed the Benjaminite (1 Chr 8:12), it appears prominently in post-exilic records: the census of returning exiles (Ezra 2:33; Neh 7:37), the resettlement list (Neh 11:35), and Nehemiah's refusal to meet enemies in its valley (Neh 6:2). The name, possibly meaning 'vigorous,' is uniformly transliterated across language traditions. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Ono, and-Ono | es: Ono, y-Ono | fr: [אונו], [ואונו] | de: [אונו], [ואונו] 1Chr 8:12; Ezra 2:33; Neh 6:2; Neh 7:37; Neh 11:35

אוֹנָם H0208 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Onam; a proper name borne by a Horite chief and a Judahite clan head

A masculine proper name probably meaning 'vigorous' or 'strong,' carried by two Old Testament figures. The first Onam is a son of Shobal, one of the Horite chiefs of Seir listed in Genesis 36:23 and again in the parallel genealogy of 1 Chronicles 1:40. The second is a son of Jerahmeel in the tribe of Judah (1 Chr 2:26, 28). The name is consistently rendered across translations, from English and Spanish 'Onam' to French and German transliterations.

(4×) Onam — a personal name from a root suggesting vigor or strength. All four occurrences refer to named individuals in genealogical lists. English and Spanish consistently render 'Onam'; French and German transliterate the Hebrew directly. The Horite Onam (Gen 36:23; 1 Chr 1:40) belongs to the pre-Israelite clans of Edom, while the Judahite Onam (1 Chr 2:26, 28) appears in the Jerahmeelite line, illustrating how the same name could cross ethnic boundaries in the ancient Near East. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Onam, and-Onam | es: Onam, y-Onam | fr: [אונם], [ואונם], et-Onam | de: [אונם], [ואונם], und-Onam Gen 36:23; 1Chr 1:40; 1Chr 2:26; 1Chr 2:28

אוֹנָן H0209 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (8×)

Onan — second son of Judah, whose name means 'vigorous' or 'strong'

Onan was the second son of Judah and his Canaanite wife, best known from the narrative in Genesis 38 where he refused to fulfill the duty of levirate marriage for his deceased brother Er. His name, meaning 'vigorous,' appears eight times across Genesis, Numbers, and 1 Chronicles. The multilingual evidence — Hindi ओनान, Spanish Onán, French and German Onan — shows uniform transliteration, as expected for a personal name with no semantic ambiguity in context.

Onan (proper name, son of Judah) (8×) The proper masculine name Onan (אוֹנָן, 'vigorous'), referring to Judah's second son by his Canaanite wife (Gen 38:4). He is remembered for his refusal to raise offspring for his brother Er, resulting in divine judgment (Gen 38:8–10). Later genealogical lists in Genesis 46:12, Numbers 26:19, and 1 Chronicles 2:3 record his name in the tribal registers of Judah. All languages transliterate consistently, confirming a single, unambiguous referent. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Onan, and-Onan, to-Onan | es: Onan, a-Onan, y-Onan | fr: Onan, [ואונן], et-Onan | de: Onan, [ואונן], und-Onan Gen 38:4; Gen 38:8; Gen 38:9; Gen 46:12

אוּפָז H0210 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)

Uphaz (place name, possibly Ophir or refined gold)

A mysterious place name associated with gold (Jeremiah 10:9, Daniel 10:5). Scholars debate whether Uphaz is an actual location, a corruption of 'Ophir,' or a technical term for refined gold. Jeremiah 10:9 mentions 'gold from Uphaz' in the context of idol-making. Daniel 10:5 describes a heavenly figure clothed in linen with a belt of 'Uphaz gold.' The Septuagint reads 'tested/refined' rather than a place name, and 1 Kings 10:18's 'refined gold' uses a similar consonantal pattern, suggesting possible textual confusion.

(2×) Uphaz remains one of Scripture's geographic puzzles. Some scholars see scribal error for 'Ophir' (the famous gold source), others a variant spelling, still others a Hebrew word meaning 'refined' that became misread as a place name. The contexts emphasize gold's quality—precious metal for idols (Jeremiah) or celestial garments (Daniel). Ancient versions diverge: Septuagint has 'tested,' not a toponym. Modern proposals include reading 'mê'ôphîr' (from Ophir) in Jeremiah or accepting 'mûphāz' (refined) from 1 Kings. Either way, it denotes the finest gold, whether from a place called Uphaz or gold refined to perfection. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Uphaz, from-Uphaz | es: de-Ufaz | fr: Uphaz, [מאופז] | de: [אופז], [מאופז] Jer 10:9; Dan 10:5

אוֹפִיר H0211 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (13×)

Ophir — a distant land famed for its gold, reached by Solomon's maritime expeditions

Ophir appears 13 times in the Hebrew Bible as both a personal name (a descendant of Joktan in Gen 10:29) and, far more prominently, as a legendary land of gold. Solomon's fleet sailed from Ezion-Geber to Ophir and returned with gold, almug wood, and precious stones (1 Kgs 9:28; 10:11). The precise location remains one of the Bible's great geographical puzzles — candidates range from southern Arabia to East Africa to western India. In poetic usage, 'gold of Ophir' became a byword for the finest quality (Ps 45:9; Job 28:16; Isa 13:12). The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'Ofir,' French 'Ophir,' German 'Ofir' — treat it uniformly as a proper noun.

Ophir (place name, land of gold) (13×) A proper noun designating (a) a son of Joktan in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:29; 1 Chr 1:23), and (b) the celebrated overseas territory from which Solomon's ships brought gold, precious stones, and almug wood (1 Kgs 9:28; 10:11; 2 Chr 8:18; 9:10). In poetic and prophetic texts, 'gold of Ophir' serves as a superlative for the finest gold available (Ps 45:9; Job 22:24; 28:16; Isa 13:12). All 13 occurrences point to this single geographical-personal referent, with the directional form Ophirah (1 Kgs 9:28) representing a morphological variant rather than a distinct sense. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Ofirah, Ophir, from-Ophir | es: Ofir, a-Ofir, de-Ofir | fr: Ofirah, Ophir, [אופיר] | de: Ofir, Ofirah, Ophir Gen 10:29; 1Kgs 9:28; 1Kgs 10:11; 1Kgs 22:48

אוֹפָן H0212 N-mp (35×)

wheel — a rotating circular component of chariots, temple lavers, threshing carts, and Ezekiel's vision

Ophan (plural ophannim) is a masculine noun meaning 'wheel,' appearing 35 times across four distinct settings. The most prosaic usage describes chariot wheels: Pharaoh's army lost their chariot wheels in the Red Sea (Exod 14:25), and Nahum's chariots rattle with clashing wheels (Nah 3:2). Solomon's temple lavers stood on elaborately crafted bronze wheels with axles, rims, spokes, and hubs (1 Kgs 7:30-33). The most spectacular usage dominates Ezekiel's throne-vision, where the ophannim are living, eye-covered wheels within wheels that move in concert with the four-faced creatures (Ezek 1:15-21; 10:6-19). Proverbs 20:26 deploys the threshing-cart wheel as a metaphor for royal justice. Later Jewish angelology personified these wheels as a class of angelic beings, the Ophanim.

wheel (35×) A wheel or rotating disc, denoting a functional mechanical component across several contexts: chariot wheels removed in divine judgment at the Sea (Exod 14:25) or clattering in battle (Nah 3:2); the ornate bronze wheels of Solomon's temple laver-stands with axles, rims, and spokes (1 Kgs 7:30-33); the threshing-cart wheel as an instrument of winnowing or punishment (Isa 28:27; Prov 20:26); and most dramatically, the celestial 'wheel within a wheel' (ophan betokh ha-ophan) of Ezekiel's merkavah vision, alive with eyes and spirit (Ezek 1:15-21; 10:6-19). French 'roues,' Spanish 'ruedas,' German 'Raeder' uniformly render the mechanical sense, though Ezekiel's visionary wheels transcend ordinary taxonomy. WHEELS AND WHEELWORK
en: and-the-wheels, the-wheel, the-wheels | es: la-rueda, las-ruedas, rueda-de | fr: et-le-roues, le-roue, les-roues | de: der-Rad, die-Raeder, und-der-Raeder Exod 14:25; 1Kgs 7:30; 1Kgs 7:32

אוּץ H0213 V-Qal-Perf-1cs (10×)
To hasten, press, or urge; also to be narrow or cramped, describing constricted space.
A verb with two distinct semantic poles. In most occurrences it conveys urgency and haste: the angels press Lot to flee Sodom (Gen 19:15), Egyptian taskmasters drive the Israelites (Exod 5:13), and Proverbs warns repeatedly against hasty feet and hasty words (19:2; 21:5; 28:20; 29:20). Yet in Joshua 17:15, the same root describes spatial constriction—'the hill country of Ephraim is too narrow for you'—a meaning confirmed by Arabic daqa ('be narrow') and Spanish 'estrecho' (narrow). The Wisdom literature uses the haste sense with particular force: 'everyone who is hasty comes only to poverty' (Prov 21:5), a proverb whose cross-linguistic renderings consistently emphasize rashness rather than mere speed.

1. hasten, press, urge (9×) To hasten, hurry, press, or urge, whether intransitively (be hasty, rush) in the Qal or causatively (press, urge someone) in the Hif'il. The angels urge Lot at dawn (Gen 19:15), taskmasters press the Israelites (Exod 5:13), the sun does not hasten to set during Joshua's battle (Josh 10:13), and Proverbs repeatedly warns against haste in speech and action (19:2; 21:5; 28:20; 29:20). Arabic 'muta'ajjil/alahha' and Korean '조급한/서둘렀다' confirm the urgency dimension, while Jeremiah insists he did not hurry away from being a shepherd-prophet (Jer 17:16). HASTE AND URGENCY
en: I-hurried, and-hasty, and-urged | es: apremiaban, el-que-se-apresura, me-apresuré | fr: [אָצַתְּ], [וְתָאִיצוּ], et-se-hâter | de: [אָץ], [אָצַתְּ], [וְאָץ] Gen 19:15; Exod 5:13; Josh 10:13; Prov 19:2; Prov 21:5

2. be narrow, be pressed (1×) To be narrow, cramped, or constricted in space. In Joshua 17:15, the tribes of Joseph complain that the hill country of Ephraim 'is too narrow' for their growing population—a spatial rather than temporal meaning. Arabic 'daqa' (be narrow) and Spanish 'estrecho' (narrow/tight) support this distinct sense of physical constriction, semantically far removed from the urgency and haste of the primary meaning. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION
en: is-narrow | es: es-estrecho | fr: est-narrow | de: ist-eng Josh 17:15

אוֹצָר H0214 N-mpc / 2ms (79×)
Treasure, treasury, storehouse; stored wealth, a building for valuables, or a granary for provisions and cosmic reserves.
Hebrew 'otsar covers both the container and the contained — a treasury building and the treasure it holds. Royal and temple storerooms (Josh 6:19, 1 Kgs 7:51) are the most common referent, with Spanish 'tesoro' and German 'Schatz' both reflecting this dual range. The word takes a cosmic turn in passages like Ps 135:7 and Job 38:22, where God has 'storehouses' of wind, hail, and snow — a vivid metaphor treating natural forces as divine provisions kept in reserve. Proverbs employs it figuratively for wisdom's rewards (Prov 8:21) and warns against ill-gotten treasures (Prov 10:2).

1. treasury, treasure-house (building/room for storage) (31×) Split from sense 80592. Criteria: A dedicated room, building, or vault where valuables are stored; architectural sense of the storage place itself en: and-stores-of, for-the-stores-of, for-the-treasuries | es: a-los-almacenes, a-tesoro-de, al-tesoro | fr: dans-le-treasury-de, et-trésor, trésor | de: Schaetze, Schatz, [לְאוֹצְרוֹת] Deut 28:12; Josh 6:19; Josh 6:24; 1Chr 9:26; 1Chr 26:20

2. treasure, valuable possessions (23×) Stored wealth, riches, or precious possessions considered as valuable property. Unlike sense 1, the focus is on the contents rather than the container. When Sennacherib's forces carry away 'the treasures of the house of the LORD' (1 Kgs 14:26), the word denotes the gold and silver objects themselves. Spanish 'tesoros' and French 'trésors' both function the same way. Jeremiah 15:13 speaks of treasures given as plunder; Proverbs 10:2 warns that 'treasures of wickedness profit nothing' — here 'otsar is clearly abstract wealth, not a building. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: her-treasures, in-treasures, is-his-treasure | es: Tesoro, a-sus-tesoros, que-tesoro | fr: de-trésor, trésor, trésors-de | de: Schaetze-von, Schatz, Schatzhaus 1Kgs 14:26; 1Kgs 15:18; 2Kgs 24:13; 2Chr 12:9

3. treasure, stored wealth (contents of the treasury) (15×) Split from sense 80592. Criteria: The valuables, wealth, or provisions stored within; the treasure itself rather than the place
en: Chizkiyahu, and-in-treasuries-of, and-treasures-of | es: de-tesoros-de, en-los-tesoros-de, en-sus-tesoros | fr: dans-son-trésors, dans-trésors-de, et-dans-trésors-de | de: Schatz, Schatzhaus, in-sein-treasuries 1Kgs 7:51; 1Kgs 15:18; 2Kgs 12:18; 2Kgs 14:14; 2Kgs 16:8

4. storehouse, granary (9×) A storehouse or granary for provisions, supplies, or cosmic elements. Joel 1:17 mentions granaries lying desolate during famine. Most remarkably, Job 38:22 asks 'Have you entered the storehouses of the snow?' and Ps 135:7 says God brings wind from his storehouses — a striking metaphor treating weather as divine inventory. Deut 32:34 describes God's reserved judgments as 'sealed up in my storehouses.' German and French translations often struggle with this sense, sometimes leaving the Hebrew untranslated. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-His-storehouses, from-his-storehouses, his-armory | es: de-sus-depósitos, de-tesoros-de-él, de-tesoros-sus | fr: dans-mon-treasuries, dans-mon-trésors, dans-trésor | de: Schatz, [אֹצְרוֹת], in-mein-treasuries Deut 32:34; 2Kgs 20:15; Ps 33:7; Ps 135:7; Isa 39:4

אוֹר H0215 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (43×)
To be or become light, shine; to give light, illuminate; to make the face shine (show favor); to kindle a lamp.
Or is the Hebrew Bible's foundational verb of light — behind God's first creative command and the priestly blessing alike. In its Qal stem, it describes dawn breaking or eyes brightening after honey (1 Sam 14:27). The Hifil causative covers both the cosmic — luminaries 'giving light' upon the earth (Gen 1:15) — and the deeply personal, as when the psalmist pleads 'make your face shine upon your servant' (Ps 31:16). This priestly-blessing idiom, rooted in Num 6:25, became one of Israel's most enduring prayers. Arabic awwara ('to kindle') and Syriac Aphel 'to illumine' confirm the Semitic roots, while multilingual translations reveal that nearly every language must choose between 'shine' and 'illuminate' — a distinction Hebrew encodes through its stems.

1. give light, illuminate (Hifil) (23×) Hifil causative: to give light, illuminate, cause to shine — the dominant sense at 23 occurrences, spanning creation, tabernacle, and theophany. In Gen 1:15 and 1:17 the luminaries are set in the firmament 'to give light upon the earth'; in Exod 25:37 the lamps are arranged 'to give light in front of' the lampstand; in Exod 13:21 the pillar of fire gives light by night. Spanish alumbrar and French éclairer both select causative-illumination vocabulary. German erleuchten ('to enlighten/illuminate') similarly marks the transitive force. The epi-prefix equivalent in Arabic IV form anara ('to illuminate') parallels the Hebrew Hifil precisely. SHINING AND ILLUMINATING en: and-He-has-given-light, and-it-lit-up, and-it-shall-give-light | es: alumbra, el-que-alumbra-, haga-resplandecer | fr: [יָאִיר], [לְהָאִיר], briller | de: [הָאִירָה], [יָאִיר], [לְהָאִיר] Gen 1:15; Gen 1:17; Exod 13:21; Exod 14:20; Exod 25:37

2. make face shine, show favor (Hifil) (8×) Hifil in the priestly-blessing idiom: to make one's face shine upon another, expressing divine favor and gracious regard. Eight occurrences, clustered tightly in the Psalms (13:3; 31:16; 67:1; 80:3, 7, 19; 119:135) and anchored in the Aaronic blessing of Num 6:25 (ya'er YHWH panaw elekha, 'may the LORD make his face shine upon you'). Spanish haz resplandecer tu rostro and French fais briller ta face both preserve the face-shining metaphor. This is arguably the most theologically concentrated use of the root — light as the visible expression of divine favor, the opposite of God 'hiding his face.' Korean 얼굴을 비추다 ('to shine the face upon') maintains the exact metaphorical structure. SHINING AND ILLUMINATING en: and-cause-to-shine, and-make-shine, cause-to-shine | es: Haz-resplandecer, alumbra, haga-brillar | fr: briller, et-illuminer, et-le-briller | de: Sache-zu-leuchten, [וְהָאֵר], geben-Licht-zu Ps 13:3; Ps 31:16; Ps 67:1; Ps 80:3; Ps 80:7

3. shine, be bright (Qal) (6×) Qal intransitive: to shine, become light, be bright — the basic stative/inchoative sense with 6 occurrences. In Gen 44:3 'the morning was light' (ha'boqer or); in 1 Sam 14:27 Jonathan's eyes 'became bright' after tasting honey; in Prov 4:18 the path of the righteous 'shines brighter and brighter.' Spanish resplandecer and French briller both select intransitive luminosity vocabulary. The Isa 60:1 imperative ori ('shine!') addressed to Zion is a pivotal theological text, commanding the city to radiate the glory that has risen upon her. The distinction from sense 1 is grammatical (Qal vs. Hifil) and semantic — here the subject itself shines rather than causing something else to be lit. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: and-light, and-shining, and-they-brightened | es: (y-se-iluminaron), luz, resplandece | fr: [אורר], brightened, et-ils-brightened | de: [אורר], brightened, und-Licht Gen 44:3; 1Sam 14:27; 1Sam 14:29; 1Sam 29:10; Prov 4:18

4. be illuminated, be glorious (Nifal) (3×) Nifal passive/reflexive: to be illuminated, be resplendent, dawn upon — three occurrences in elevated poetic contexts. In 2 Sam 2:32 'it dawned' (vayyeor) as Joab's men reached Hebron; in Job 33:30 God acts 'to be lighted with the light of life' (a remarkable passive describing revival); in Ps 76:4 God is 'resplendent' (naor) from the mountains of prey. Spanish resplandeciente and German glorreich ('glorious') both reach for luminous-majesty vocabulary. The Nifal here implies being enveloped in or permeated by light from an external source — a theological image of creatures participating in divine radiance rather than generating their own. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION
en: and-dawned, glorious, to-be-lighted | es: Resplandeciente, para-iluminarse, y-amaneció | fr: briller, et-dawned, לאור | de: glorious, und-dawned, zum-Licht 2Sam 2:32; Job 33:30; Ps 76:4

5. kindle, light a lamp (Hifil) (3×) Hifil with the specific sense of kindling or lighting a fire or lamp — 3 occurrences where the emphasis falls on physical ignition rather than celestial or metaphorical illumination. In Ps 18:28 'you light my lamp' (ta'ir neri); in Isa 27:11 women come 'kindling' the branches (a debated verse but the fire-lighting sense is clear); and Mal 1:10 where God says 'you would not kindle fire on my altar in vain.' Spanish encender ('to ignite, kindle') and German anzunden both select combustion-specific vocabulary, sharply distinct from the 'illumination' words used in senses 1-2. This concrete, domestic sense likely preserves the oldest layer of the root, as the Arabic cognate awwara ('to kindle a fire') confirms. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION
en: kindling, light | es: encenderás, encenderéis, encendiéndola | fr: [מאירות], briller, illuminer | de: Licht, [מאירות], [תאירו] Ps 18:28; Isa 27:11; Mal 1:10

אוֹר H0216 Prep-l / N-csc / 3ms (122×)

Light: daylight, dawn, sunlight; metaphorically life, divine favor, salvation; also lightning; the luminaries.

Or is the Hebrew Bible's primary noun for light in all its physical and metaphorical richness. God's first creative word calls it into existence — 'Let there be light' (Gen 1:3) — and from that moment the word radiates through Scripture as both concrete phenomenon and profound symbol. Physically, it denotes daylight (Gen 1:4-5), morning dawn (Judg 16:2; 1 Sam 14:36), and the light of heavenly bodies (Isa 30:26). Metaphorically, its range is extraordinary: light as life itself (Job 3:20; Ps 56:13), as divine favor and salvation ('The LORD is my light,' Ps 27:1), as torah and moral guidance (Prov 6:23; Isa 2:5), and as eschatological glory (Isa 60:1, 19-20). Spanish luz and French lumiere both carry a similar physical-to-metaphorical range, while German Licht has the same dual register. The Arabic cognate nur (نور) became a divine attribute in Islam (Quran 24:35), showing how the Semitic light-word gravitates toward theological depth. A distinct sense appears in Job's storm poetry (36:30; 37:3, 11), where or denotes lightning — sudden, terrifying brilliance rather than steady illumination.

1. physical light, daylight (61×) Split from sense 80668. Criteria: Concrete illumination: creation light (Gen 1:3), sunlight, dawn, luminaries as physical phenomena en: light, light-of, the-light | es: de-luz, la-luz., la-luz; | fr: lumière | de: Licht Gen 1:3; Gen 1:4; Gen 1:18

2. metaphorical light (life, salvation, divine favor) (55×) Split from sense 80668. Criteria: Abstract/theological: light as life itself (Job 3:20), divine favor (Ps 27:1), salvation and hope (Isa 9:2)
en: for-a-light-of, into-light, is-light | es: Luz, en-luz, luz | fr: lumière, à-lumière | de: Licht, der-Licht-, zum-Licht Job 3:9; Job 3:16; Job 3:20; Job 12:22; Job 18:5

3. lightning / flashing light (3×) Lightning or sudden flashing light — 3 occurrences in Job's theophanic storm poetry. In Job 36:30 God 'spreads his lightning (oro) about him'; in Job 37:3 'he lets it loose under the whole heaven, and his lightning (oro) to the ends of the earth'; in Job 37:11 the cloud 'scatters his lightning (oro).' Spanish su luz and German sein Licht both use the general 'light' word, but the context of thunder, storm-clouds, and cosmic display makes the reference to lightning unmistakable. French son eclat ('his brilliance') edges closer to the flash-quality. This sense preserves an archaic meteorological use of or for the sudden illumination of a lightning bolt — distinct from steady daylight or lamplight. The Elihu speeches in Job consistently pair this 'lightning-light' with thunder (qol) and cloud (anan), forming a tight semantic cluster around theophanic storm imagery. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION
en: and-his-lightning, his-light, lightning | es: su-luz, y-su-luz | fr: et-son-lumière-lui, son-lumière-lui | de: [אורן], [ואורן] Job 36:30; Job 37:3; Job 37:11

5. (1×) The great luminaries — a single occurrence in Ps 136:7: 'To him who made great lights (orim gedolim),' referring to the sun and moon described in the following verses (136:8-9). Spanish lumbreras and French lumieres both use a specialized term for celestial light-bearers rather than light itself, suggesting translators perceive a distinction between light-as-phenomenon (sense 1) and lights-as-celestial-objects. German Lichter (plural) similarly marks the shift to concrete heavenly bodies. The plural orim is rare — only here in the Hebrew Bible — and mirrors the me'orot ('luminaries') of Gen 1:14-16. This usage treats light not as a quality or substance but as a concrete entity: the great lights that God set in the firmament. The Psalm recapitulates the creation narrative of Genesis 1 in hymnic form. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION en: lights | es: lumbreras | fr: lumière | de: Licht Ps 136:7

6. (1×) Dawn-light in a temporal-administrative context — a single occurrence in Neh 8:3 where Ezra reads the Torah publicly 'from the light (min-ha'or) until midday,' meaning from dawn until noon. Spanish la luz and French lumiere both render this as 'light' generically, but German Licht and the overall context specify early morning daylight as a temporal marker. The phrase min-ha'or ad-mahasit hayyom parallels the usage in Judg 16:2 (ad-or habboqer, 'until the light of morning') and 1 Sam 14:36 (ad-or habboqer). While semantically this is simply 'daylight' — a subset of sense 1 — its function as a temporal boundary marker ('from dawn...') rather than a qualitative description sets it slightly apart. The Nehemiah context is prosaic and administrative: this is clock-time, not cosmic symbolism. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION en: the-light | es: la-luz | fr: lumière | de: das-Licht Neh 8:3

אוּר H0217a N-ms (5×)

Fire, flame, or light of fire; used of literal fire and figuratively of divine judgment.

A poetic noun denoting fire viewed as flame and light rather than mere combustion. Isaiah employs it powerfully: the wicked are told to 'walk in the flame of your fire' (Isa 50:11), while Babylon's fire gives neither warmth nor light to sit by (Isa 47:14). The multilingual evidence converges neatly — English and Spanish render 'fire' or 'light-of,' while French captures the luminous aspect with 'lumiere.' All five occurrences appear in prophetic contexts where fire serves as a vehicle for divine warning or judgment.

(5×) Fire conceived as visible flame and radiant light. Isaiah uses it for the self-kindled fire of the wicked (Isa 50:11), the warming fire whose light one enjoys (Isa 44:16), and the consuming fire of judgment (Isa 47:14). In Isa 31:9 and Ezek 5:2 it denotes literal fire in contexts of national catastrophe. The Spanish 'fuego' and 'luz-de' together capture the dual flame-and-light quality that distinguishes this word from the common אֵשׁ. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION
en: fire, in-the-fire, in-the-light-of | es: con-el-fuego, en-luz-de, fuego | fr: [באור], lumière | de: Licht, [באור] Isa 31:9; Isa 44:16; Isa 47:14; Isa 50:11; Ezek 5:2

אֲרִים H0217b Prep-b (1×)

in the east, in the regions of light — eastern lands or coastlands

Isaiah 24:15 calls for glorifying the Lord 'in the east' or 'in the regions of light' — a phrase whose exact meaning is debated. Some understand it as 'Urim' (lights, hence east), others emend to 'islands/coastlands.' The context is universal praise accompanying cosmic judgment. If 'east' is correct, it balances the following 'coastlands of the sea,' creating a merism (east and west) for worldwide worship. Light-imagery also suits Isaiah's vision of God's glory illuminating all nations.

(1×) A prepositional phrase denoting 'in the east' or 'in the regions/lands of light,' though some emend to 'islands.' English 'glorify' and Spanish 'en las luces' (in the lights) reflect the 'Urim/lights' reading, suggesting eastern lands where the sun rises. Isaiah 24:15 envisions global worship from all directions — east (lights) and west (coastlands) — as God's judgment and salvation encompass the earth. EAST AND SUNRISE

en: glorify | es: en-las-luces | fr: [בארים] | de: [בארים] Isa 24:15

אוּר H0218a N-proper-ms (1×)

Ur — father of Eliphal, one of David's mighty men

Ur appears in 1 Chronicles 11:35 as the father of Eliphal, one of David's elite warriors. The name means 'flame' or 'light,' a common Hebrew noun repurposed as a personal name. This is distinct from 'Ur of the Chaldees,' Abraham's birthplace. The genealogical detail honors Eliphal by anchoring him in a family lineage, a typical biblical pattern that situates heroism within kinship networks and communal memory.

(1×) Personal name (meaning 'flame, light') of Eliphal's father, one of David's mighty men. Translations transliterate 'Ur' (English, Spanish), distinguishing it from the homonymous place name. The single reference in 1 Chronicles 11:35 serves to identify Eliphal within David's warrior elite, with patronymic functioning as a standard biblical identifier. The name's fiery connotation may have symbolic resonance, though its use here is primarily genealogical. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: Ur | es: Ur | fr: [אור] | de: Licht 1Chr 11:35

אוּר H0218b Prep-m / N-proper-fs (4×)

Ur (of the Chaldeans); the ancient Mesopotamian city, homeland of Abraham's family

The celebrated Mesopotamian city Ur of the Chaldeans, identified with modern Muqayyar in southern Iraq, an ancient center of moon-god worship. All four biblical references frame Ur as the point of origin for Abraham's family: Terah departed from Ur with Abram (Gen 11:28, 31), and God later reminds Abraham that he brought him out of Ur of the Chaldeans (Gen 15:7; Neh 9:7). The city name anchors the entire patriarchal narrative of divine calling and migration.

(4×) Ur of the Chaldeans — the ancient Sumerian city from which Abraham's family emigrated. English renders 'from-Ur' and 'in-Ur,' Spanish 'de-Ur-de' and 'en-Ur-de,' and French 'de-Ur' and 'dans-Ur,' all consistently treating it as a place name with prepositional context. German 'von-Licht' intriguingly reflects the common noun meaning of the root ('light, fire'), though the proper noun is intended. Every occurrence (Gen 11:28, 31; 15:7; Neh 9:7) ties Ur to the foundational story of God calling Abram out of Mesopotamia toward the promised land. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-Ur, from-Ur-of, in-Ur | es: de-Ur-de, en-Ur-de | fr: [מאור], dans-Ur, de-Ur | de: aus-Ur, in-Ur, von-Licht Gen 11:28; Gen 11:31; Gen 15:7; Neh 9:7

אוֹרָה H0219a N-fs (3×)

light; illumination, brightness, or the light of joy and life (poetic, late Hebrew)

This Hebrew noun denotes light, used poetically in late biblical texts. It appears in contexts celebrating light as a symbol of joy, life, and divine blessing. Esther 8:16 declares, 'The Jews had light and gladness, joy and honor'—light paralleling joy in the celebration of deliverance. Psalm 139:12 affirms God's omniscience: 'Even the darkness is not dark to You; the night shines as the day; the darkness and the light are both alike to You.' Isaiah 26:19 speaks of resurrection: 'Your dead shall live...awake and sing, you who dwell in dust; for your dew is like the dew of lights (or: dew of life).' The term captures light's life-giving, joy-bringing power.

(3×) Translations show variation: English 'light, like-the-light, of-lights,' Spanish 'luz, luces, como-la-luz,' French 'lumière, comme-lumière,' German 'Licht, wie-der-Licht.' Esther 8:16 pairs light with gladness as the Jews celebrate reversal of Haman's plot. Psalm 139:12 uses light and darkness to express God's all-seeing nature—no darkness hides from him. Isaiah 26:19's 'dew of lights' is enigmatic, possibly referring to resurrection power—dew that brings life-giving light to the dead. The term elevates light beyond mere illumination to theological symbol of divine favor and vitality. LIGHT AND ILLUMINATION

en: light, like-the-light, of-lights | es: como-la-luz, luces, luz | fr: [אורה], [אורת], comme-lumière | de: [אורה], [אורת], wie-der-Licht Esth 8:16; Ps 139:12; Isa 26:19

אוֹרָה H0219b N-fp (1×)

herbs, wild plants — edible or medicinal vegetation

In 2 Kings 4:39, during a famine, someone gathers 'wild herbs' to add to a pot of stew, inadvertently including poisonous gourds. The plural noun denotes herbs or plants, possibly with a connotation of greenery or vegetation more broadly. The narrative context emphasizes desperation — foraging for any edible plants — and the community's dependence on Elisha's miraculous intervention to neutralize the poison. This detail underscores famine's severity and God's provision through prophetic ministry.

(1×) Plural noun meaning 'herbs, plants,' likely wild vegetation gathered for food. English and Spanish ('herbs,' 'hierbas') preserve the botanical sense, while French and German similarly render it as 'herbs.' The context in 2 Kings 4:39 is a famine-driven search for edible plants, during which poisonous gourds are mistakenly collected. The term suggests general greenery or vegetation, not cultivated crops, fitting the foraging scenario. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12062 WITH 5 SENSES

en: herbs | es: hierbas | fr: herbs | de: herbs 2Kgs 4:39

אֲרִיֹת H0220 Prep-l (1×)

for the stalls, cribs — feeding places for livestock

This term appears in 2 Chronicles 32:28, describing Hezekiah's building projects: storehouses for produce 'and stalls for all kinds of cattle.' The word denotes cribs, mangers, or stalls where animals are fed and housed. It can also enumerate animals by their stalls (similar to English 'head' of cattle). The context celebrates Hezekiah's prosperity and administrative achievements, including agricultural infrastructure that supported his kingdom's economic strength and military readiness.

(1×) Plural noun meaning 'stalls, cribs, mangers' for livestock, or possibly a measure for counting animals by their stalls. The prepositional phrase 'for the stalls' (לָאֲרֻוֹת) in 2 Chronicles 32:28 describes facilities for housing cattle and other animals. Spanish 'para los establos' (for the stables) captures the functional sense. The term reflects agrarian prosperity under Hezekiah, whose administrative competence extended to livestock management and agricultural infrastructure. CATTLE AND OXEN

en: for-the-stalls | es: para-los-establos | fr: [לאורות] | de: [לאורות] 2Chr 32:28

אוּרִי H0221 N-proper-ms (8×)

Uri — a Hebrew proper name meaning 'fiery,' borne by three distinct men in the Old Testament

Uri (meaning 'fiery,' possibly a shortened form of Uriah) is borne by at least three individuals in Scripture: the father of Bezalel, chief artisan of the tabernacle (Exod 31:2; 35:30; 38:22); a temple porter in Ezra's time (Ezra 10:24); and the father of one of Solomon's district governors (1 Kgs 4:19). Despite referring to different people, translations consistently render the name as a simple transliteration — English and Spanish 'Uri,' French and German the same — reflecting its transparent phonology.

Uri (8×) The proper masculine name Uri (אוּרִי, 'fiery,' or a contraction of Uriah), applied to three distinct individuals: (a) a prince of Judah, father of Bezalel the tabernacle craftsman (Exod 31:2; 1 Chr 2:20; 2 Chr 1:5); (b) a gatekeeper who had married a foreign wife (Ezra 10:24); and (c) the father of Geber, one of Solomon's regional officers (1 Kgs 4:19). All eight occurrences are rendered uniformly across languages as a straightforward transliteration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Uri, and-Uri | es: Uri, y-Uri | fr: Uri, [אורי], [ואורי] | de: Uri, [אורי], [ואורי] Exod 31:2; Exod 35:30; Exod 38:22; 1Kgs 4:19; 1Chr 2:20

אוּרִיאֵל H0222 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (4×)

Uriel; a Levite name meaning 'flame of God' or 'my light is God'

A masculine proper name composed of 'ur' (light, flame) and 'el' (God), meaning 'flame of God' or 'my light is God.' Uriel appears as the chief of the Kohathite Levites in David's time, involved in bringing the ark to Jerusalem (1 Chr 6:24; 15:5, 11). He also appears as the maternal grandfather of King Abijah of Judah (2 Chr 13:2). The theophoric name beautifully expresses dependence on God as one's guiding light.

(4×) Uriel — a theophoric personal name meaning 'flame of God' or 'God is my light.' English and Spanish consistently transliterate 'Uriel'; French and German preserve the Hebrew form. The Kohathite Uriel (1 Chr 6:24; 15:5, 11) was entrusted with the sacred duty of transporting the ark, while the Uriel of 2 Chronicles 13:2 connects the Davidic royal house to the Levitical line through marriage, showing how this name carried priestly and noble associations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Uriel, for-Uriel | es: Uriel, a-Uriel | fr: [אוריאל], [לאוריאל] | de: [אוריאל], [לאוריאל] 1Chr 6:24; 1Chr 15:5; 1Chr 15:11; 2Chr 13:2

אוּרִיָּה H0223a Prep-l / N-proper-ms (38×)

Uriah / Uriyahu — theophoric name ('YHWH is my light') borne by a Hittite warrior, a priest, and others

A masculine proper name with the theophoric element -yah(u) meaning 'YHWH is my light' or 'flame of Yah,' appearing in two orthographic forms: the short form Uriyah (36x) and the long form Uriyahu (2x). The most prominent bearer is Uriah the Hittite, Bathsheba's loyal husband whose battlefield death David engineered (2 Sam 11:3-26; 23:39). A second Uriah served as the priest who built Ahaz's foreign altar (2 Kgs 16:10-16; Isa 8:2), and a third appears among the postexilic community (Ezra 8:33; Neh 3:4, 21; 8:4).

Uriah / Uriyahu (proper name, theophoric) (38×) The theophoric proper name Uriah/Uriyahu, borne by at least three biblical figures: Uriah the Hittite, David's slain officer (2 Sam 11:3-26; 23:39); Uriah the priest under Ahaz (2 Kgs 16:10-16; Isa 8:2); and a postexilic Uriah (Ezra 8:33; Neh 3:4). Despite multiple referents, the name remains a single lexical entry. Translations consistently transliterate — English 'Uriah,' Spanish 'Urías,' French 'Urie,' German 'Uria' — with minimal phonological adaptation. URIAH PERSONAL NAME

en: Uriah | es: Urías | fr: Urie | de: Uria 2Sam 11:3; 2Sam 11:6; 2Sam 11:7; 2Sam 11:8

אוּרִיָּהוּ H0223b N-proper-ms (1×)

Uriyahu — prophet killed by King Jehoiakim for prophesying judgment

Uriyahu (also Uriah) was a prophet from Kiriath-jearim who proclaimed messages similar to Jeremiah's, warning of Jerusalem's coming destruction (Jeremiah 26:20). King Jehoiakim, enraged, had him hunted down in Egypt and executed, then dishonorably buried. The name means 'Yahweh is my light' or 'flame of Yahweh.' His martyrdom illustrates the deadly risks prophets faced when confronting royal power with unpopular truth. Jeremiah's survival, by contrast, highlights divine protection and the variability of prophetic fates.

(1×) Personal name (meaning 'Yahweh is my light' or 'flame of Yahweh') of a prophet martyred by Jehoiakim for proclaiming judgment against Judah. Translations consistently transliterate 'Uriyahu' or variant forms, preserving the theophoric element. Jeremiah 26:20 recounts his execution as a cautionary tale, contrasting his fate with Jeremiah's narrow escape. His story underscores the courage required to speak God's word to hostile authorities. URIAH PERSONAL NAME

en: Uriyahu | es: Uriyahu | fr: [אוריהו] | de: [אוריהו] Jer 26:20

אוּרִים H0224 Prep-l / N-mp (7×)

Urim; the sacred lot-casting objects kept in the high priest's breastpiece for obtaining divine guidance.

The Urim (plural of intensity, possibly meaning 'lights' or 'curses') were sacred objects placed inside the high priest's breastpiece of judgment and used to seek God's will on critical decisions. They appear alongside the Thummim as a paired oracle system (Exod 28:30; Lev 8:8). Moses commissions Joshua to seek guidance 'by the judgment of the Urim' through the priest Eleazar (Num 27:21). By Saul's time, the Urim had fallen silent — God 'answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets' (1 Sam 28:6). The etymology remains debated, but the function is clear: these were the divinely sanctioned means of yes-or-no consultation.

Urim (sacred lot object) (7×) Urim — the sacred lot objects housed in the high priest's breastpiece for obtaining divine oracles. Always paired with the Thummim, they were placed in the breastpiece of judgment (Exod 28:30; Lev 8:8) and used for critical decisions on behalf of the community. Moses instructs that Joshua shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall inquire 'by the judgment of the Urim' (Num 27:21). Deuteronomy 33:8 assigns them to the faithful Levite. By Saul's era, God's silence through the Urim signals the king's spiritual alienation (1 Sam 28:6). Spanish and French both transliterate as Urim, preserving the Hebrew form. TESTIMONY OBJECTS

en: and-your-Urim, by-the-Urim, for-Urim | es: los-Urim, para-Urim, por-Urim | fr: [לאורים], et-ton-Urim, le-Urim | de: [לאורים], bei-der-Urim, der-Urim Exod 28:30; Lev 8:8; Num 27:21; Deut 33:8; 1Sam 28:6

אוּת H0225 V-Nifal-Imperf-1cp (4×)

To consent, agree; used only in the Niphal, expressing willing assent to a proposal

A verb occurring exclusively in the Niphal stem, conveying the idea of giving consent or agreeing to terms proposed by another party. Its four occurrences cluster around two episodes of negotiation. In Genesis 34:15, 22–23, Jacob's sons set circumcision as the condition under which they will consent to intermarriage with the Shechemites — a tense diplomatic exchange. In 2 Kings 12:8, the priests agree not to take silver from the people, yielding authority over temple repairs. The word always implies deliberate, reasoned assent rather than passive acquiescence.

(4×) To consent, agree to terms or conditions (Niphal only). The multilingual glosses converge tightly: English 'we-will-consent' and 'they-agreed,' Spanish 'consentiremos' and 'consintieron,' German 'zustimmen' (to agree), and French 'consent.' All four occurrences involve formal negotiation — three in the Shechem marriage negotiations (Gen 34:15, 22, 23) and one in the temple-revenue agreement (2 Kgs 12:8). The Niphal form suggests a reflexive dimension: the subject commits oneself to the agreement. AGREE CONSENT ACCORD

en: and-they-agreed, let-us-consent, we-will-consent | es: Y-consintieron, consentiremos, consentirán | fr: –consent, et-ils-agreed, nous—consent | de: lasst-uns-zustimmen, stimmen-wir-zu, stimmen-zu Gen 34:15; Gen 34:22; Gen 34:23; 2Kgs 12:8

אוֹת H0226 Prep-m / N-cpc / 2ms (79×)
Sign, miraculous portent, covenant token, or tribal standard; a visible marker conveying divine meaning or group identity.
Hebrew 'ot is one of Scripture's most versatile words for divine communication through visible phenomena. It ranges from the mark on Cain (Gen 4:15) to the plagues of Egypt to the promised sign of Immanuel (Isa 7:14). Spanish 'señal' and German 'Zeichen' both cover this broad field, though neither captures the theological weight the word carries in covenantal contexts — the rainbow (Gen 9:12), circumcision (Gen 17:11), and the Sabbath all serve as 'ot. The word reminds us that in biblical thought, signs are never arbitrary; they are divinely invested with meaning and demand a response of faith.

1. sign, miraculous sign (71×) A visible sign, portent, or miraculous act serving as evidence of divine power or prophetic authenticity. This is the dominant sense, covering everything from the plagues of Egypt (Exod 4:8-9) to prophetic confirmations (1 Sam 10:7) to the sign promised to Ahaz (Isa 7:14). In all four major European translations — English 'sign,' Spanish 'señal,' French 'signe,' German 'Zeichen' — the same core word is used, reflecting the universality of the concept. The emphasis is on divine communication: God makes himself known through visible, often extraordinary, acts. SIGNS AND BANNERS
en: a-sign, is-the-sign, sign | es: la-señal, señal, señal-de | fr: [אות], le-signe, signe | de: Zeichen, der-Zeichen, ein-Zeichen Gen 4:15; Exod 3:12; Exod 4:8; Exod 4:9

2. token, covenant mark (6×) A token, pledge, or distinguishing mark that memorializes a covenant or agreement between God and his people. The rainbow after the flood (Gen 9:12-17), the rite of circumcision (Gen 17:11), and the blood of the Passover lamb (Exod 12:13) are all called 'ot in this sense. French 'signe de' and German 'zum Zeichen' both use prepositional constructions that highlight the relational, commemorative function. Unlike sense 1, the emphasis is not on the miraculous but on the enduring, memorial quality of the sign. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: for-sign, for-sign-of, sign-of- | es: como-señal, para-señal-de, por-señal-de | fr: pour-signe-de, signe, signe-de- | de: Zeichen, das-Zeichen-, zum-Zeichen Gen 9:12; Gen 9:13; Gen 9:17; Gen 17:11; Isa 19:20

3. standard, ensign, banner (2×) A military or tribal standard, ensign, or banner used for identification and rallying. This rare sense appears in Ps 74:4 where enemies set up their 'signs' (standards) in the temple precincts, and possibly in Job 21:29 referring to travelers' tokens or markers. The multilingual evidence shows uncertainty here — French and German sometimes leave the Hebrew transliterated — suggesting translators recognize this as a distinct and difficult sense. The shift from divine sign to human insignia is notable. SIGNS AND BANNERS en: and-their-signs, their-signs | es: Y-sus-señales, sus-señales | fr: [אותם], et-leur-אותם-eux | de: [אותם], ihr-Zeichen Job 21:29; Ps 74:4

אָז H0227a Adv (122×)
Then — temporal adverb marking a point in past or future time, often signaling the onset of a new action or condition
Az is a compact Hebrew adverb whose two letters carry surprising rhetorical weight. It anchors narrative to a specific moment — 'then men began to call on the name of YHWH' (Gen 4:26) — and in prophetic poetry it leaps forward to a future transformation: 'then the eyes of the blind shall be opened' (Isa 35:5). A distinctive syntactic feature is its combination with an imperfect verb to narrate past events, a construction that signals inception or dramatic commencement (Exod 15:1, 'then Moses sang'). The word also appears in the compound meaz ('from then, of old'). Spanish 'entonces,' French 'alors,' and German 'da/dann/damals' distribute its temporal range across multiple words.

then (122×) Temporal adverb pointing to a definite moment in past or future time, often marking the dramatic onset of action. With past reference it narrates inception — 'then Moses and the Israelites sang this song' (Exod 15:1); 'then men began to call on YHWH's name' (Gen 4:26). With future reference it introduces prophetic transformation — 'then the eyes of the blind shall be opened' (Isa 35:5). The notable construction az + imperfect for past narration signals a solemn or ceremonial commencement. Spanish 'entonces,' French 'alors,' and German 'dann/damals' split its temporal range across distinct words. THEN (TEMPORAL ADVERB)
en: then | es: Entonces, entonces | fr: alors | de: da, damals, dann Gen 4:26; Gen 12:6; Gen 13:7; Gen 24:41; Gen 49:4

מֵאָז H0227b Prep / Adv (19×)
From of old, from ancient times; also since, from the time that —marking a temporal starting point in the past.
This compound adverb-preposition (min + 'az, 'from then') anchors events in past time, either reaching back to an indefinite antiquity or pinpointing a specific moment. When the Psalmist declares God's throne established 'from of old' (Ps 93:2) or Wisdom speaks of being set up 'from everlasting' (Prov 8:22), me'az evokes primordial permanence. But in narrative contexts like Genesis 39:5 and Exodus 5:23, it functions as a conjunction—'since I came to Pharaoh'—marking the precise onset of a state of affairs.

1. from of old, long ago (10×) Adverbial use pointing to an indefinite ancient past: 'from of old, from long ago.' Employed in elevated poetic and prophetic speech to evoke permanence or antiquity —God's throne is established me'az (Ps 93:2), Wisdom was brought forth me'az (Prov 8:22). Spanish 'desde entonces' and German 'von alt' reflect this backward-looking, open-ended temporality. Isaiah 44:8 and 45:21 use it for God's long-standing predictive power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-of-old, from-then, long-ago | es: desde-entonces | fr: de-alors | de: von-alt, von-dann 2Sam 15:34; Ps 93:2; Prov 8:22; Isa 16:13; Isa 44:8

2. since, from the time that (9×) Conjunctional-prepositional use meaning 'since, from the time that,' introducing a clause that specifies a definite past moment. In Genesis 39:5, the Lord blessed Potiphar's house me'az—'since' Joseph took charge. Exodus 4:10 has Moses say 'since your speaking to your servant.' German 'seitdem' and Spanish 'desde cuando' mark the shift from vague antiquity to a concrete temporal anchor. Ruth 2:7 even compresses it to 'since this morning.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-from-then, from, from-the-time | es: Y-desde, desde, desde-cuando | fr: alors, de, de-alors | de: dann, seit, seitdem Gen 39:5; Exod 4:10; Exod 5:23; Exod 9:24; Josh 14:10

אֱזַדָּא H0228 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf / 3ms (3×)
to heat, be heated (Aramaic); to make hot, especially a furnace
This Aramaic verb means to heat or be heated, appearing only in Daniel 3 in the account of the fiery furnace. Daniel 3:19 describes Nebuchadnezzar's fury when Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego refuse to worship his image: he commands that the furnace be 'heated seven times more than it was usually heated.' The same verse repeats the heating command. Daniel 3:22 notes the lethal result: 'because the king's command was urgent, and the furnace exceedingly hot, the flame of the fire killed those men who took up Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego.' The verb emphasizes the intensity of the intended execution and, ironically, the magnitude of God's deliverance.

(3×) Translations reflect heating action: English 'heated, to-be-heated, to-heat,' Spanish 'estaba-calentado, para-calentar, para-calentarlo,' French and German preserve Aramaic forms. Daniel 3:19 describes the king's command to superheat the furnace sevenfold—an expression of rage and determination to destroy the faithful three. Daniel 3:22 ironically notes that the furnace was so hot it killed the executioners, yet the three Hebrew youths walked unharmed in the flames. The extreme heating magnifies the miracle of their preservation, demonstrating God's power over even the fiercest human wrath. COMMANDING AND ORDERING en: heated, to-be-heated, to-heat | es: estaba-calentado, para-calentar, para-calentarlo | fr: [אזה], [למזא], [למזיה] | de: [אזה], [למזא], [למזיה] Dan 3:19; Dan 3:22

אֶזְבַּי H0229 N-proper-ms (1×)
Ezbai — father of Naarai, one of David's warriors

Ezbai appears in 1 Chronicles 11:37 as the father of Naarai, one of David's mighty men. The name's meaning is uncertain. This genealogical note serves to identify Naarai within the honored roll of David's elite fighters. The parallel passage in 2 Samuel 23:35 reads differently ('Paarai the Arbite'), suggesting textual variation or distinct individuals. Such discrepancies remind us of the complex transmission history behind biblical genealogies.

(1×) Personal name of uncertain etymology, identified as the father of Naarai (one of David's warriors). Translations uniformly transliterate 'Ezbai' (English, Spanish), preserving the Hebrew without semantic rendering. The single reference in 1 Chronicles 11:37 functions genealogically, anchoring a hero's identity in his father's name. The parallel in 2 Samuel suggests textual complexity, but Ezbai remains the Chronicler's preserved form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ezbai | es: Ezbai | fr: [אזבי] | de: [אזבי] 1Chr 11:37

אָזַל H0230 Adj-fs (2×)

certain, sure, fixed (Aramaic adjective)

An Aramaic adverb meaning 'certainly' or 'with certainty,' appearing in two of Daniel's Aramaic sections (Daniel 2:5, 8). When Nebuchadnezzar demands that his wise men tell him both his dream and its interpretation, he declares the matter 'azda'—fixed, certain, not negotiable. If they fail, the punishment is certain. Later (verse 8) he accuses them of stalling because they know the decree is 'azda'—unchangeable. The word emphasizes royal decree's finality in the absolute monarchies of the ancient Near East.

(2×) This Aramaic term appears exclusively in Daniel 2's confrontation between king and magi. The root may derive from Old Persian (scholars debate connections to Avestan words for 'firm' or 'holding fast'), reflecting the multilingual context of Babylonian court. Nebuchadnezzar's usage underscores despotic power: his word is 'azda'—fixed, certain, beyond appeal. The wise men face imminent execution unless they perform the impossible. This lexical detail captures the terror of serving capricious absolute power, setting up Daniel's intervention as divinely enabled wisdom against humanly impossible demands. ESTABLISH AND PREPARE

en: is-certain | es: se-ha-ido | fr: sûr | de: [אוֹדֵא] Dan 2:5; Dan 2:8

אֵזוֹב H0231 N-ms (10×)

Hyssop — a small bushy herb used in Israelite purification rites for sprinkling blood and lustral water

The noun אֵזוֹב (ezov) refers to hyssop, a small aromatic plant used as a ritual sprinkling instrument in Israel's purification ceremonies. At the first Passover, Israelites dipped hyssop bunches in lamb's blood to mark their doorframes (Exod 12:22). In the purification of lepers, hyssop is bundled with cedarwood and scarlet yarn and dipped in sacrificial blood (Lev 14:4, 6, 49, 51-52). The red heifer rite likewise employs hyssop (Num 19:6, 18). The psalmist's plea 'purge me with hyssop and I shall be clean' (Ps 51:9) internalizes the ritual as spiritual metaphor. Botanical identification remains debated — origanum syriacum (Syrian oregano) is the leading candidate. Spanish 'hisopo' and French 'hysope' both derive from the same Semitic root.

hyssop (plant) (10×) A small bushy herb (probably Origanum syriacum or a related species) used as a ritual sprinkling tool in Israelite purification ceremonies. Central to three major rituals: the Passover blood-marking of doorframes (Exod 12:22), the cleansing of skin disease and contaminated houses (Lev 14:4, 6, 49, 51-52), and the red heifer water of purification (Num 19:6, 18). David's penitential cry 'purge me with hyssop' (Ps 51:9) transforms the botanical-ritual item into a metaphor for spiritual cleansing. Solomon's botanical knowledge extended 'from the cedar to the hyssop' (1 Kgs 5:13), marking it as the humblest plant. Spanish 'hisopo' and French 'hysope' both reflect the Semitic loanword. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: and-hyssop, and-with-the-hyssop, hyssop | es: con-hisopo, e-hisopo, el-hisopo | fr: dans-hysope, et-avec-le-hyssop, et-hyssop | de: Ysop, der-Ysop, der-hyssop Exod 12:22; Lev 14:4; Lev 14:6; Lev 14:49; Lev 14:51

אֵזוֹר H0232 Art / N-ms (14×)

Waistcloth, belt, loincloth — a garment worn around the loins, made of leather or linen

Denotes a cloth or band fastened around the waist, functioning as a basic garment or binding. The Hebrew 'ēzōr appears in several vivid biblical contexts: Elijah's leather waistcloth marks him as a prophet of the wilderness (2 Kgs 1:8), while Jeremiah's linen waistcloth becomes an elaborate enacted parable — worn, hidden at the Euphrates, and retrieved ruined — symbolizing Israel's once-intimate bond with God now spoiled (Jer 13:1-11). Isaiah pictures Assyrian warriors whose waistcloths never come loose (Isa 5:27), and the messianic king wears righteousness and faithfulness as his belt (Isa 11:5). The Arabic cognate 'izār confirms the basic sense of a loin-wrapping garment, while the German rendering 'Gürtel' and Spanish 'cinto/cinturón' reflect the same functional range.

waistcloth, belt, loincloth (14×) A garment or band worn around the waist or loins, made of leather (Elijah's prophetic attire, 2 Kgs 1:8) or linen (Jeremiah's symbolic waistcloth, Jer 13:1-11). The 'ēzōr functions as both practical clothing and powerful prophetic symbol: Assyrian warriors' unyielding belts (Isa 5:27), the Messiah girded with righteousness (Isa 11:5), and Chaldean warriors' decorative waistcloths in Ezekiel's wall-paintings (Ezek 23:15). Cross-linguistic renderings (eng: belt, spa: cinto/cinturón, fra: ceinture, deu: Gürtel) and the Arabic cognate 'izār confirm a single semantic profile covering the full range of waist-garments across all 14 occurrences. BELT GIRDLE SASH

en: and-a-belt-of, belt, belt-of | es: cinto, cinto-de, cinturón | fr: ceinture, comme-ceinture, et-un-belt-de | de: Guertel, [אזור], der-Guertel 2Kgs 1:8; Job 12:18; Isa 5:27; Isa 11:5

אָז H0233 Adv (3×)

then, in that case; a temporal or logical particle indicating consequence

This Hebrew adverb means 'then' or 'in that case,' marking temporal sequence or logical consequence. It appears three times in Psalm 124:3-5, in a climactic song of deliverance. The psalmist constructs a hypothetical: 'If it had not been the LORD who was on our side...then [azai] they would have swallowed us alive...then [azai] the waters would have overwhelmed us...then [azai] the swollen waters would have gone over our soul.' Each 'then' introduces a consequence that would have occurred without God's intervention. The repetition builds intensity, showing how close Israel came to destruction and how completely God delivered them. The adverb is dialectical, related to the more common 'az.'

(3×) Translations uniformly render this as 'then': English 'then,' Spanish 'entonces,' French 'alors,' German 'dann.' Psalm 124:3, 4, 5 employs the word three times in a powerful rhetorical structure following 'if not for the LORD'—then enemies would have swallowed Israel alive, then floods would have swept them away, then raging waters would have drowned them. The triple use of 'then' creates a crescendo of threat, each clause more vivid than the last, all countered by the reality of God's deliverance. The psalm turns near-disaster into praise. THEN (TEMPORAL ADVERB)

en: then | es: Entonces | fr: alors | de: dann Ps 124:3; Ps 124:4; Ps 124:5

אַזְכָּרָה H0234 Prep-l / N-fs (7×)

Memorial portion of a grain offering burned on the altar as a token reminder before YHWH.

Derived from the root z-k-r ('to remember'), this feminine noun refers specifically to the handful of flour, oil, and frankincense taken from a grain offering (minhah) and burned on the altar as a symbolic 'reminder' before God. It appears exclusively in priestly legislation (Leviticus 2, 5, 6; Numbers 5), always in close association with 'isheh (fire offering). The Spanish 'porcion-memorial' and German 'Gedenkanteil' both capture the dual notion of a portion that also memorializes – a physical token that ascends as smoke to bring the offerer's devotion before the Lord.

memorial portion (sacrificial remembrance offering) (7×) The memorial portion of a grain offering, the representative handful of flour mixed with oil and all the frankincense that a priest burns on the altar as a token of the whole offering (Lev 2:2, 2:9, 2:16; 6:15; Num 5:26). It also applies to the frankincense placed on the showbread as a memorial (Lev 24:7) and to the grain substitute for a sin offering by the very poor (Lev 5:12). The term is always cultic, never secular, and consistently appears alongside fire-offering language. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-a-memorial, its-memorial-portion | es: para-memorial, porción-memorial-de-ella, porción-memorial-suya | fr: pour-un-mémorial, son-mémorial-portion | de: fuer-ein-Gedenkanteil, sein-Gedenkanteil-Anteil Lev 2:2; Lev 2:9; Lev 2:16; Lev 5:12; Lev 6:15

אָזַל H0235 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (5×)

To go, go away, be used up; a mostly poetic verb for departure, wandering, or exhaustion of supply.

A verb found almost exclusively in poetry, meaning to go away or be spent. Its Aramaic cognate (אֲזַל) is the everyday word for 'go,' which illuminates how Hebrew reserves it for elevated style. Deuteronomy 32:36 uses it memorably for strength being 'gone,' while Job 14:11 pictures waters vanishing from the sea. The buyer who 'goes away' boasting in Proverbs 20:14 offers a vivid commercial scene. French and German translations often leave the Hebrew untranslated, underscoring how rare and poetic this root feels.

(5×) To go away, depart, or be exhausted. Covers physical departure (Prov 20:14 — the buyer goes his way), restless wandering (Jer 2:36 — 'why do you go about so much to change your way?'), and figurative exhaustion of resources: bread is 'gone from our vessels' (1 Sam 9:7), waters vanish from the sea (Job 14:11), and strength is 'spent' (Deut 32:36). Spanish 'se acabó' (finished/used up) nicely captures the exhaustion sense alongside the literal movement meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: but-going-away, do-you-go-about, gone | es: Se-van, pero-al-irse, se-acabó | fr: [תזלי], allé, est-allé | de: [אזלו], [ואזל], [תזלי] Deut 32:36; 1Sam 9:7; Job 14:11; Prov 20:14; Jer 2:36

אזן H0236 V-Qal-Perf-1cp (7×)

Aramaic verb meaning to go, walk, or travel to a place; used in Ezra and Daniel.

This Aramaic verb (cognate to Hebrew halak) means 'to go' or 'to travel' and appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. It covers completed journeys ('we went,' 'he went,' 'they went') as well as commands ('go!'). Spanish 'fue/fuimos/fueron' nicely mirrors the perfective aspect found across its occurrences. Though only seven attestations survive in the biblical text, the verb was common in Imperial Aramaic and later rabbinic usage.

to go, to walk (Qal) (7×) To go, walk, or travel to a destination, encompassing both completed motion (perfective: 'he went,' 'we went,' 'they went') and commanded motion (imperative: 'go!'). Found in Ezra 4:23 and 5:8 for official journeys to Jerusalem, in Ezra 5:15 for Cyrus's command, and in Daniel 2:17, 24 for Daniel's movements. The Spanish renderings 'fue/fuimos/fueron' and the English 'went/go' capture the straightforward motion sense of this common Aramaic verb. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: go, he-went, we-went | es: fue, fueron, fuimos | fr: [אזל], [אזלו], [אזלנא] | de: [אזל], [אזלו], [אזלנא] Ezra 4:23; Ezra 5:8; Ezra 5:15; Dan 2:17; Dan 2:24

אָזֵל H0237 Art / N-proper-fs (1×)

Ezel (the stone) — landmark near which David and Jonathan arranged their farewell signal

The stone Ezel is mentioned in 1 Samuel 20:19 as a landmark where David would hide while Jonathan signaled whether it was safe to return to Saul's court. The name may mean 'departure' or 'parting,' fitting the poignant scene of friendship's farewell. However, textual issues surround this verse, and some scholars emend to 'that place' (הַלָּז) rather than reading it as a proper name. Either way, it marks the geography of David and Jonathan's covenant loyalty.

(1×) A stone or landmark (possibly meaning 'departure') near which David hid during his escape from Saul. Translations handle it variously: 'the Ezel' (English, treating it as a name), 'Ezel' (Spanish), suggesting a known location. The textual reading in 1 Samuel 20:19 is disputed, with some preferring 'that place' over a proper name. Regardless, it serves as the geographical marker for David and Jonathan's tragic parting, symbolizing covenant friendship under threat. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Ezel | es: Ezel | fr: le-Ezel | de: der-Ezel 1Sam 20:19

אָזַן H0238 V-Hifil-Imperf-3mp (41×)

give ear, listen attentively — Hiphil verb of attentive hearing, almost exclusively poetic, often paired with shama

Azan in the Hiphil means 'to give ear' or 'to listen with deliberate attention,' and it appears 41 times almost entirely in poetry and elevated prose. The verb is a denominative from ozen ('ear'), so its etymological image is vivid: to turn one's ear toward someone. It occurs in solemn summons — Moses commanding heaven and earth to hear (Deut 32:1), Isaiah calling the rulers of Sodom and the people of Gomorrah to attention (Isa 1:10) — and in personal pleading, as in the Psalms' repeated ha'azinah ('give ear!') addressed to God (Ps 17:1; 39:13; 55:2; 86:6). Its formulaic pairing with shama ('hear') creates the classic parallelism of Hebrew prophetic and wisdom poetry: 'hear my words... give ear to my sayings' (Prov 4:20). The word is rare in prose, lending a heightened register wherever it appears.

give ear, listen attentively (41×) To listen with focused, deliberate attention — 'give ear' — almost always in elevated or poetic register. Typically occupies the second line of a bicolon parallel with shama ('hear'): 'Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth' (Isa 1:2; cf. Deut 32:1; Ps 49:2). In the Psalms it voices urgent petition to God (Ps 17:1; 55:2; 86:6; 143:1), while in prophetic address it summons human audiences to solemn attention (Joel 1:2; Isa 28:23; 32:9). The participial form me'azin in Proverbs 17:4 describes one who 'gives ear' to malicious speech. Spanish 'prestar oido,' French 'preter l'oreille,' and German 'Ohr geben' preserve the denominative image of directing one's ear. HEARING AND HEEDING

en: Give-ear, and-give-ear, give-ear | es: Escuchad, Presta-oído, Prestad-oído | fr: donner-oreille, et-prêter-l'oreille, et-écouter | de: [והאזינו], geben-Ohr, geben-ear Gen 4:23; Exod 15:26; Num 23:18; Deut 1:45; Deut 32:1

אָזַן H0239 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)

he pondered, weighed — examined carefully or tested for truth

In Ecclesiastes 12:9, we read that Qoheleth 'pondered and sought out and arranged many proverbs.' The Piel verb denotes careful examination, weighing, or testing — akin to assaying metals for purity. It suggests intellectual rigor and editorial discernment. Qoheleth didn't merely collect sayings; he weighed their truth, tested their coherence, and arranged them thoughtfully. This verb honors the wisdom teacher's craft: discernment, critical thought, and the patient work of shaping insight into memorable form.

(1×) Piel perfect verb meaning 'to weigh, test, ponder, examine carefully,' often used metaphorically for intellectual or moral discernment (parallel to Arabic 'weigh'). The context in Ecclesiastes 12:9 describes Qoheleth's editorial method: he pondered (weighed) proverbs before arranging them, suggesting critical evaluation. Spanish 'ponderó' (he pondered/weighed) and the parallelism with 'searched out' and 'arranged' emphasize the deliberate, thoughtful labor of wisdom composition. WEIGHING AND EVALUATING en: and-he-pondered | es: y-ponderó | fr: et-וְאָזַן | de: und-Ohr Eccl 12:9

אָזֶן H0240 N-msc / 2ms (1×)

Tool, implement, or equipment (possibly related to sharpness; collective term for implements used in daily work)

This rare noun appears only in Deuteronomy 23:13, where it refers to equipment or implements carried by an Israelite when going out to relieve themselves. The term may derive from a root meaning "sharp," suggesting tools or implements that require an edge.

Cognate forms in Aramaic refer to weapons or tools. The context suggests practical equipment for maintaining hygiene in the camp, part of the holiness regulations for Israel's military encampments.

(1×) Refers to physical equipment or tools carried for practical purposes. The Deuteronomy 23:13 passage prescribes that each person carry a digging implement as part of the camp's sanitation protocol. The multilingual glosses (equipment, cinto/belt) reflect uncertainty about the exact implement, though the functional context is clear: a tool for maintaining cleanliness in accordance with divine holiness standards. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS en: your-equipment | es: tu-cinto | fr: ton-equipment | de: dein-equipment
Deut 23:13

אֹזֶן H0241 N-fs (188×)
Ear, organ of hearing; often in 'in the ears of' meaning 'in the hearing/presence of.'
Ozen denotes the physical ear, the organ of hearing, but its most distinctive biblical usage is the prepositional construction be'ozne ('in the ears of'), meaning 'in the hearing of' or 'publicly before.' When Abraham negotiates with the Hittites for Sarah's burial plot, the transaction is conducted 'in the ears of' the assembled witnesses (Gen 23:10, 13, 16). The ear also figures in ritual law: a servant's ear is pierced to mark permanent service (Exod 21:6), and blood is applied to the right ear in priestly consecration (Lev 8:23). Spanish 'oidos,' French 'oreilles,' and German 'Ohren' all confirm the consistent anatomical-auditory reference.

ear, organ of hearing (188×) The anatomical ear as the organ of hearing, used both literally (the physical ear that can be pierced for servitude in Exod 21:6, anointed with blood in priestly consecration in Lev 8:23, or adorned with earrings in Gen 35:4) and metonymically in the prepositional phrase be'ozne ('in the ears of') to indicate public hearing or witnessed proclamation (Gen 23:10, 16; Deut 31:30). Spanish 'oidos,' French 'oreilles,' and German 'Ohren' uniformly confirm a single sense covering both physical and figurative auditory reference. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-ears-of, in-the-ears-of | es: a-los-oídos-de, a-oídos-de, en-oídos-de | fr: dans-le-oreilles-de, dans-oreilles-de | de: in-Ohren-von, in-die-Ohren, vor-den-Ohren
Gen 23:10; Gen 23:13; Gen 23:16; Gen 44:18; Gen 50:4

אֻזֵּן שְׁאֵרָה H0242 N-proper-fs (2×)
Uzzen-Sheerah, a place built by Sheerah, daughter of Ephraim
This proper noun designates a location associated with Sheerah, a daughter of Ephraim mentioned in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles. The name itself appears to combine two elements: 'uzzen' (ear, possibly indicating a portion or region) and 'Sheerah' (the personal name of its foundress). BDB suggests the name means 'portion weighed and measured of Sheerah,' indicating that this was a settlement or territory established by this notable woman, one of the few female builders mentioned in the Old Testament genealogies.

(2×) The multilingual evidence shows transliteration strategies: English preserves 'Sheerah' or 'Uzzen' as distinct elements, Spanish renders it as 'Seera' and 'Uzén,' while French and German show uncertainty with bracketed forms, suggesting scribes treated this compound name differently across translation traditions. The dual occurrence in 1 Chronicles 7:24 likely reflects the compound nature of the toponym. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Sheerah, Uzzen | es: Seera, Uzén | fr: [אזן], [שארה] | de: Ohr, [שארה]
1Chr 7:24

אַזְנוֹת תָּבוֹר H0243 N-proper-fs (1×)
Aznoth-Tabor, a place name meaning 'peaks of Tabor' (location in the territory of Naphtali)
This place name appears in the boundary description of Naphtali's tribal inheritance in Joshua 19:34. The name literally means "peaks of Tabor" or "ears of Tabor," possibly referring to prominent geographical features near Mount Tabor. The exact location remains unknown, though it was situated somewhere in the northern territory assigned to the tribe of Naphtali during the conquest period.

(1×) A geographical location in northern Israel, appearing only in the tribal boundary lists. The name's components suggest it may have been a site characterized by distinctive peaks or elevated features associated with the region of Mount Tabor. The multilingual consistency in transliterating the name reflects its nature as a proper geographical designation with no need for semantic translation. TABOR PLACE NAME
en: Aznoth-Tavor | es: Aznot-tabor | fr: Aznoth-Tavor | de: Aznoth-Tavor
Josh 19:34

אָזְנִי H0244a Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)
Ozni, personal name meaning 'my hearing' or 'my ear' (son of Gad listed in the census of Numbers)
Ozni was one of the sons of Gad, Israel's seventh son. He appears in the tribal census of Numbers 26:16, where his descendants form one of the Gadite clans. Interestingly, in the earlier genealogy of Genesis 46:16, the parallel name appears as Ezbon, suggesting either textual variation or that the same individual was known by different names. The name's meaning relates to hearing or attentiveness.

(1×) A personal name borne by one of Gad's sons, whose descendants became a recognized clan within the tribe. The Numbers 26 census records this family as part of the military-age population counted during Israel's wilderness wanderings. The prepositional form ("to Ozni") in this context introduces the clan descended from this ancestor, following the standard genealogical formula of the census lists. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: to-Ozni | es: De-Ozni | fr: à-Ozni | de: zu-Ozni
Num 26:16

הָאָזְנִי H0244b Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
The Oznite, gentilicic adjective referring to descendants of Ozni (a clan within the tribe of Gad)
This gentilicic term designates the clan or family group descended from Ozni, son of Gad. It appears in Numbers 26:16 as part of the systematic census that organized Israel's tribes into their constituent clans. Such gentilicic forms were standard in Hebrew genealogical records, allowing precise identification of family lineages within the larger tribal structure. The Oznites formed one of seven Gadite clans counted in the wilderness census.

(1×) A clan designation indicating membership in the family descended from Ozni. The definite article ("the Oznite") reflects the standard Hebrew pattern for gentilicic nouns, treating the clan as a collective unit. This organizational structure was crucial for land distribution, military organization, and maintaining tribal identity throughout Israel's history. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Oznite | es: los-oznitas | fr: le-Oznite | de: der-Oznite
Num 26:16

אֲזַנְיָהוּ H0245 N-proper-ms (1×)
Azaniah, personal name meaning 'Yahweh has heard' (father of Jeshua, a Levite who sealed Nehemiah's covenant) Azaniah was the father of Jeshua, a Levite who participated in the covenant renewal ceremony recorded in Nehemiah 10. His theophoric name—incorporating the divine name Yahweh—expresses the belief that God hears and responds to prayer. He is known only through his son's participation in this significant post-exilic event, when returning exiles pledged renewed faithfulness to Torah observance and temple support.

(1×) A personal name identifying the father of one of the Levitical leaders in Nehemiah's community. The name appears in Nehemiah 10:9 (Hebrew versification) within a list of those who set their seal to the covenant document. The theophoric element in the name reflects typical Israelite naming patterns that acknowledged divine involvement in family life, specifically God's responsiveness to prayer. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Azaniah | es: Azanías | fr: [אזניה] | de: [אזניה]
Neh 10:9

בָּאֲזִקִּים H0246 Prep-b (2×)

in chains, in manacles; bound with fetters

A prepositional phrase indicating the state of being bound in chains or manacles. Both occurrences appear in Jeremiah 40, where the prophet describes Jeremiah being found 'bound in chains' among the captives taken from Jerusalem. The Hebrew construction uses the preposition 'be-' (in, with) attached to 'aziqim' (manacles), creating a locative or instrumental sense—describing not just the chains themselves but the condition of being confined by them.

(2×) The cross-linguistic evidence reveals how translators handled this prepositional construction: English consistently treats it as 'in chains' or 'the chains,' Spanish uses 'con cadenas' (with chains) or 'las cadenas,' while French and German largely preserve the Hebrew form in brackets, suggesting the grammatical construction was difficult to render naturally. Both Jeremiah passages describe the prophet's literal physical bondage before his release by the Babylonians. CHAINS AND FETTERS

en: in-chains, the-chains | es: con-cadenas, las-cadenas | fr: [באזקים], [האזקים] | de: [באזקים], [האזקים] Jer 40:1; Jer 40:4

אָזַר H0247 Art / V-Piel-Prtcpl-msc / 1cs (16×)

To gird, bind on, or equip; used across stems for fastening a belt or weapon, being clothed with strength, and girding oneself for action.

A vivid physical verb that runs from the practical act of strapping on a leather belt to the theological image of God girding a warrior with strength. In 2 Kings 1:8, Elijah is described as 'girded with a leather belt around his loins' — a detail so memorable it echoes into John the Baptist's portrayal. The Piel intensifies the action: in Psalm 18:32 and 39 (= 2 Sam 22:40), David praises God as the one who girds him with strength for battle, where Spanish 'ceñir' and French 'ceindre' both carry the same martial weight. The Hitpael reflexive appears dramatically in Psalm 93:1, where the LORD himself 'has girded himself' with majesty, and in Isaiah 8:9, where hostile nations are challenged to gird themselves — only to be shattered.

1. gird, bind on (Qal) (6×) The basic Qal transitive and passive sense of physically girding or binding something on. In Job 38:3 and 40:7, God commands Job to 'gird up your loins' — a call to readiness that all major translations render literally (Spanish 'ciñe,' French 'ceins'). The passive participle in 2 Kgs 1:8 describes Elijah as 'girded with a leather belt,' while 1 Sam 2:4 extends the image figuratively: those who stumbled are 'girded with strength.' Even in the basic stem, the word already bridges clothing and empowerment. GIRDING AND DRESSING

en: binds-me, gird, gird- | es: Ciñe-, ceñido, ceñirás | fr: ceignit, ceindre, ceins-sur | de: [אזר], [יאזרנ], [תאזר] 1Sam 2:4; 2Kgs 1:8; Job 30:18; Job 38:3; Job 40:7

2. gird with strength (Piel) (6×) The Piel intensive sense of girding someone with strength, armor, or capacity for action. God is the typical subject: in 2 Sam 22:40 and Ps 18:39, He girds David with strength for battle; in Ps 30:11, mourning is exchanged for gladness as God girds the psalmist with joy. Spanish 'me ceñiste de fuerza' and French 'Tu me ceins' both highlight the divine agency. Isaiah 45:5 extends this to Cyrus, whom God girds even though Cyrus does not know Him — a striking theological claim embedded in this martial verb. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: I-girded-you, and-You-gird-me, and-clothed-me | es: Y-me-ceñiste, el-que-me-ciñe, los-que-se-ciñen-de | fr: ceindre, et-Tu-ceins-moi, et-ceindre | de: [אאזרך], [מאזרי], der-girds-mich 2Sam 22:40; Ps 18:32; Ps 18:39; Ps 30:11; Isa 45:5

3. gird oneself (Hitpael) (3×) The Hitpael reflexive sense of girding oneself in preparation for battle or decisive action. In Psalm 93:1, the LORD has girded himself with strength, establishing the world immovably — here the reflexive conveys sovereign self-equipment. Isaiah 8:9 (repeated for emphasis) challenges the nations to 'gird yourselves' — but the next clause promises they will be broken. Spanish 'ceñíos' and French 'ceindre' preserve the imperative urgency. The reflexive form implies personal resolve and readiness. GIRDING AND DRESSING

en: gird-yourselves, he-has-girded-himself | es: Ceñíos, ceñíos, se-ha-ceñido | fr: ceindre, le-ceindre | de: [התאזרו], er-hat-gegürtet-sich-selbst Ps 93:1; Isa 8:9

4. be girded (Nifal) (1×) The Nifal passive sense describing the state of being already girded or equipped. Occurring only in Psalm 65:6, it depicts God as 'girded with might' — a participial description of His enduring attribute rather than a one-time act. Spanish 'ceñido' and the passive construction distinguish this from the active girding of other stems, portraying divine power as something permanently worn rather than newly donned. GIRDING AND DRESSING

en: being-girded | es: ceñido | fr: ceindre | de: seiend-gegürtet Ps 65:6

אֶזְרוֹעַ H0248 Conj-w (2×)

and with arm; and my arm; the outstretched arm of God or man

A prepositional construction combining the conjunction 'and' with references to an arm, either human or divine. The two occurrences split between a human context (Job's poetic oath about his shoulder and arm) and a theological one (God's mighty arm in the exodus). In Job 31:22, the arm represents human physical integrity; in Jeremiah 32:21, the 'outstretched arm' forms part of the classic exodus formula describing God's powerful deliverance of Israel from Egypt.

(2×) Multilingual translations show different strategies for the conjunction: Spanish and English typically render 'and with arm' or 'and my arm,' preserving the Hebrew coordination. French splits between preserving the Hebrew and offering 'et mon [arm],' while German frequently brackets the construction. The theological usage in Jeremiah echoes Deuteronomy's repeated 'mighty hand and outstretched arm' formula, a stock phrase for divine power in salvation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-my-arm, and-with-arm | es: y-con-brazo, y-mi-brazo | fr: [ובאזרוע], et-mon-[ואזרעי]-moi | de: [ואזרע], [ובאזרוע] Job 31:22; Jer 32:21

אֶזְרָח H0249 Conj-w (17×)

A native-born citizen of the land, enjoying full covenant rights; figuratively, a tree flourishing in its native soil.

Derived from a root meaning 'to arise, spring up,' this word designates someone who has sprung from the soil of the land – a native-born Israelite as opposed to the ger (sojourner or resident alien). Legal texts repeatedly pair the two, insisting that the same law applies to both (Exod 12:19, 48-49; Lev 16:29; Num 15:13, 29-30). German 'Einheimischer' and Spanish 'nativo' capture this civic sense well. In a lone poetic use, Psalm 37:35 likens the prospering wicked person to a luxuriant native tree deeply rooted in its own soil – Spanish 'arbol frondoso' vividly conveys this flourishing image.

1. native-born person (16×) A person born in the land, a native citizen with full membership in the covenant community. Legal texts pair this term with ger (sojourner) to establish equal standing under the law (Exod 12:19, 48-49; Lev 16:29; 24:16, 22; Num 15:13, 29-30). German 'Einheimischer' and French 'native' reflect the civic and ethnic rootedness this word conveys – one who has 'sprung up' from the soil of the land. BETROTHAL ENGAGEMENT

en: among-the-native, and-among-native-of, and-for-native-of | es: Como-nativo, El-nativo, como-el-nativo | fr: comme-le-native, comme-native, comme-native-de | de: [כאזרח], der-Einheimischer, fuer-der-native Exod 12:19; Exod 12:48; Exod 12:49; Lev 16:29; Lev 17:15

2. native indigenous plant (1×) A tree or plant growing in its native soil, used figuratively in Psalm 37:35 to depict the wicked flourishing like a deep-rooted indigenous tree. Spanish 'como arbol frondoso' and English 'like a native' capture the image of unchecked, luxuriant growth – a metaphor drawn directly from the agricultural sense of 'springing up from the earth.' SPROUTING AND GROWING

en: like-a-native | es: como-árbol-frondoso | fr: comme-indigène | de: wie-einnative Ps 37:35

אֶזְרָחִי H0250 Art / N-proper-ms (3×)

Ezrahite; gentilic adjective meaning 'descendant of Zerah,' used of Ethan and Heman

This Hebrew gentilic adjective identifies someone as an Ezrahite, a descendant of Zerah son of Judah. The designation appears in the superscriptions of two psalms and in a reference to Solomon's wisdom. 1 Kings 4:31 (English 5:11) compares Solomon's wisdom to that of 'Ethan the Ezrahite' and others, acknowledging renowned sages. Psalm 88 is attributed to 'Heman the Ezrahite,' and Psalm 89 to 'Ethan the Ezrahite.' According to 1 Chronicles 2:6, both Ethan and Heman were sons of Zerah, making them Ezrahites. These men were celebrated for wisdom and musical skill, with Heman and Ethan serving as temple musicians in David's time.

(3×) Translations preserve the gentilic: English 'the Ezrahite, the Ezrachite,' Spanish 'el-ezrajita, el-ezraíta,' French 'le-Ezrahite,' German similar forms. 1 Kings 4:31 references 'Ethan the Ezrahite' as a benchmark of wisdom surpassed only by Solomon. Psalm 88 and 89 attribute compositions to Heman and Ethan 'the Ezrahite,' connecting wisdom, music, and the Zerahite lineage. The designation links these sages to Judah's genealogy (through Zerah), embedding Israel's wisdom tradition within tribal and family structures. Their psalms—one lamenting, one celebrating God's covenant—reflect deep theological reflection. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Ezrachite, the-Ezrahite | es: el-ezrajita, el-ezraíta | fr: le-Ezrahite | de: der-Ezrachite, der-Ezrahite 1Kgs 4:31; Ps 88:1; Ps 89:1

אָח H0251 N-msc / 1cs (630×)

Brother (blood sibling sharing parents); by extension kinsman, fellow countryman, or national brethren.

At its core, ach is the Hebrew word for a male sibling — a brother by blood (Gen 4:2). But like its cognates across Semitic languages (Arabic akh, Assyrian akhu, Ethiopic ekhw), it expands naturally to cover wider kinship: tribal relatives, fellow Israelites, and covenant partners. When Lot is called Abraham's 'brother' though actually his nephew (Gen 14:14), or when Moses addresses all Israel as 'brothers' (Deut 1:16), the word moves from biology to solidarity. Arabic glosses helpfully distinguish ikhwan (brethren/fellows) from akh (blood brother), confirming this broadened relational sense.

1. brother (blood sibling) (573×) A literal brother sharing one or both parents — the primary kinship sense covering full brothers, half-brothers, and siblings. Universally rendered hermano (Spa.), frère (Fra.), Bruder (Ger.), akh (Arabic). Dominates at 573 occurrences, from Cain and Abel (Gen 4:9) to the sons of Jacob to tribal genealogies (1 Chr 5:7; 15:5). BROTHER KINSMAN

en: and-his-brothers | es: Y-sus-hermanos, y-hermanos-de-él, y-hermanos-suyos | fr: et-frère, et-son-frères | de: und-sein-Bruder, und-sein-Brueder Judg 9:26; Judg 9:31; 1Chr 5:7; 1Chr 9:19; 1Chr 15:5

2. kinsman, fellow countryman, brethren (57×) A broader relational sense extending beyond blood to encompass kinsmen, tribal relatives, fellow Israelites, or national brethren. Arabic glosses favor ikhwan (brethren/fellows) over akh (brother) in these contexts, revealing the semantic shift. Used when Moses adjudicates between Israelite 'brothers' (Deut 1:16), when Levites serve alongside priestly 'brothers' (Num 18:6), and in covenant address (Num 20:3). BROTHER KINSMAN

en: and-for-their-brothers, and-their-brothers, and-to-their-brothers | es: Y-hermanos-de-ellos, Y-sus-hermanos, sus-hermanos | fr: et-frère, leur-frères | de: ihr-Brueder, und-Bruder Gen 31:32; Lev 10:4; Num 18:6; Num 20:3; Deut 1:16

אֲחִיהוּדָה H0252 N-mpc / 2ms (2×)

your brothers (Aramaic); kinsmen, fellow Jews

An Aramaic possessive construction meaning 'your brothers' or 'your kinsmen,' appearing twice in the same verse of Ezra 7:18. The Aramaic portions of Ezra use this term to refer to fellow Jews, the broader community of faith rather than literal siblings. In context, King Artaxerxes' decree gives Ezra authority to use leftover silver and gold 'according to the will of your God' in consultation with 'your brothers'—the Jewish community in Jerusalem.

(2×) The multilingual glosses show some uncertainty in rendering this Aramaic form: English straightforwardly translates 'your brothers,' Spanish uses 'tus hermanos,' while French and German often bracket the Hebrew/Aramaic text itself, reflecting the mixed-language nature of Ezra. The dual occurrence in Ezra 7:18 represents the same Aramaic word appearing twice in parallel constructions within the royal decree, emphasizing communal consultation in the use of temple funds. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: [your-brothers], your-brothers | es: [tus-hermanos], tus-hermanos | fr: [אחיך], [אחך] | de: [(אחך)], [[אחיך]] Ezra 7:18

אָח H0253 Interjection (2×)

ah! alas! interjection of grief or dismay

An onomatopoetic interjection expressing grief, dismay, or mourning. Both occurrences appear in Ezekiel's prophetic oracles. The word captures an emotional outburst, likely a cry or wail. BDB notes that in Ezekiel 18:10 this may be a textual error (dittography from the following word), but in Ezekiel 21:15 (English 21:10) it represents a genuine exclamation, though the Septuagint reading differs, suggesting some textual uncertainty.

(2×) Cross-linguistic evidence shows translators recognized the emotional force: English renders it 'Alas,' Spanish 'Ay,' French preserves the Hebrew form in brackets, while German unexpectedly has 'Bruder' (brother), likely reflecting textual confusion with the more common meaning of 'ach.' The interjection fits Ezekiel's dramatic prophetic style, where verbal outbursts punctuate oracles of judgment. WOE AND ALAS en: Alas, alas | es: Ay, ay | fr: [אח] | de: Bruder Ezek 6:11; Ezek 21:15

אָח H0254 Art / N-ms (3×)

fire-pot, brasier (a portable container for burning coals)

A portable fire-pot or brasier used for heating, appearing only in Jeremiah 36 during the winter scene where King Jehoiakim burns the scroll containing Jeremiah's prophecies. The word is a loan from Egyptian, reflecting the common cultural exchange of household items in the ancient Near East. The narrative emphasizes the burning fire within this container, which the king uses to destroy God's word piece by piece.

(3×) The term appears exclusively in the dramatic account where the king sits before a burning brasier in his winter quarters. As each section of Jeremiah's scroll is read, Jehoiakim cuts it off and throws it into the fire-pot until the entire scroll is consumed. The repeated references to 'the fire that was on/in the fire-pot' underscore both the literal warmth it provided and its tragic role as an instrument of defiance against divine warning. COOKING POT CALDRON

en: the-firepot | es: el-brasero | fr: le-foyer | de: [האח] Jer 36:22; Jer 36:23

אֹחִ H0255 N-mp (1×)

Jackals or desert creatures (possibly owls; animals associated with desolate ruins and judgment)

This rare term appears in Isaiah's oracle against Babylon, describing the creatures that will inhabit the ruined palaces after divine judgment. The Hebrew word is related to Assyrian terms for jackals, though some ancient versions understood it as a type of owl or desert bird. The parallelism with other wilderness creatures in Isaiah 13:21 emphasizes the complete desolation that will overtake Babylon—once a thriving imperial capital, it will become home only to wild animals of the wasteland.

(1×) Desert-dwelling creatures that inhabit ruins and desolate places. The Isaiah 13:21 context pairs these animals with other wild things, creating a vivid picture of utter abandonment. The multilingual uncertainty in the glosses (owls, búhos, brothers) reflects ancient and modern translators' difficulty identifying this rare creature, though the symbolic function is clear: these are animals of desolation, not civilization. JACKAL WILD CANINE

en: owls | es: de-búhos | fr: frères | de: [אחים] Isa 13:21

אַחְאָב H0256 Conj-w (93×)

Ahab — personal name meaning 'father's brother,' chiefly the infamous king of Israel, also a false prophet in Babylon

Ahav is a theophoric or kinship name meaning 'father's brother' (compounding ah 'brother' and av 'father'). The name is dominated by one towering figure: Ahab son of Omri, the seventh king of the northern kingdom of Israel, whose reign is narrated across 1 Kings 16-22. Ahab married the Sidonian princess Jezebel, introduced Baal worship on a state scale, and clashed repeatedly with the prophet Elijah (1 Kgs 18-19). He died from a battle wound at Ramoth-Gilead (1 Kgs 22:34-37). A second, minor bearer is Ahab son of Kolaiah, a false prophet among the Babylonian exiles whom Jeremiah condemns (Jer 29:21-22). The Septuagint renders the name as Achaab.

Ahab (proper name) (93×) The proper name Ahav ('father's brother'), used primarily for Ahab son of Omri, king of Israel (r. ca. 874-853 BCE), whose politically powerful but spiritually ruinous reign dominates 1 Kings 16:28-22:40 and echoes through 2 Kings and 2 Chronicles. His promotion of Baal worship through Jezebel provoked the great contest on Mount Carmel (1 Kgs 18). A second bearer is Ahab son of Kolaiah, a false prophet in Babylon cursed by Jeremiah (Jer 29:21-22). Spanish 'Acab,' French 'Ahav,' and German 'Ahab' all derive from the Septuagint form Achaab. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ahav | es: Acab, Achav | fr: Ahav | de: Ahav 1Kgs 16:28; 1Kgs 16:29; 1Kgs 16:30; 1Kgs 16:33

אַחְבָּן H0257 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahban, personal name meaning 'brother of an intelligent one' (son of Abishur from the tribe of Judah)

Ahban appears in the genealogical records of Judah as one of two sons born to Abishur and his wife Abihail. The name occurs in 1 Chronicles 2:29, part of the extensive Judahite genealogies that trace family lines from the patriarchal period through the post-exilic era. His name's meaning suggests familial relationships and valued characteristics like wisdom or understanding.

(1×) A personal name borne by a descendant of Judah through the line of Jerahmeel. The 1 Chronicles genealogy preserves this name as part of the careful record-keeping that maintained tribal and clan identities, especially important after the Babylonian exile. The name appears only once, identifying this individual within his immediate family context (son of Abishur, brother of Molid). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Achban | es: Ajban | fr: [אחבן] | de: [אחבן] 1Chr 2:29

חֲדַד H0258 V-Hitpael-Imp-fs (1×)

Gather yourself, sharpen yourself (reflexive command to a sword in prophetic imagery)

This unusual Hithpael imperative form comes from a root meaning "be sharp" or "sharpen." It appears in Ezekiel 21, part of an extended oracle personifying the sword of divine judgment. The prophet commands the sword to prepare itself—to gather or sharpen itself for its terrible work of judgment against Israel. The reflexive form intensifies the image: the sword is not merely sharpened by another but prepares itself for destruction.

(1×) A reflexive imperative addressed to a personified sword in Ezekiel's dramatic judgment oracle. The Ezekiel 21:16 context features repeated imperatives to the sword, treating it as an active agent of divine wrath. The multilingual glosses vary between "gather" and "unite," reflecting different understandings of whether the command emphasizes assembling force or sharpening edge, though both capture the preparation for destructive action. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: gather-yourself | es: Únete | fr: unir | de: [התאחד] Ezek 21:16

אֶחָד H0259 Conj-w (976×)

one; first; once; each; a few; eleven (compound with עֶשֶׂר)

The fundamental Hebrew numeral אֶחָד means 'one' and carries theological weight far beyond arithmetic. The Shema's declaration that the LORD is אֶחָד (Deut 6:4) resonates through every occurrence — from the 'one flesh' of marriage (Gen 2:24) to Zechariah's eschatological vision of 'one LORD and one name' (14:9). Beyond its cardinal use, this versatile word serves as an ordinal ('first'), a distributive ('each one'), a temporal marker ('once'), and even combines with עֶשֶׂר to form 'eleven.'

1. one (cardinal numeral) (940×) The cardinal numeral 'one' in its basic sense (940x), appearing from the very first chapter of Genesis ('day one,' Gen 1:5) onward. Universally glossed as a simple numeral — Spanish uno/una, French un, German eine/einen — this sense covers adjectival, substantive, and construct uses. It encompasses theologically loaded passages like Genesis 2:24 ('one flesh') and Deuteronomy 6:4 ('the LORD is one'). ONE AND UNITY

en: one | es: una, uno | fr: un | de: eine, einem, einen Gen 1:5; Gen 1:9; Gen 2:21; Gen 2:24; Gen 11:1

2. (11×) A comparative or emphatic use meaning 'as one, like one' (11x). Multilingual glosses show the simile particle — English 'as-one/like-one,' Spanish 'como-uno,' German 'wie-einer.' At Genesis 3:22 ('the man has become like one of us') and 2 Chronicles 5:13 (trumpeters and singers were 'as one'), the word transcends mere counting to express unity, likeness, or collective identity. ONE AND UNITY

en: as-one, like-one | es: como-uno, como-uno-de | fr: comme-un, un, wie-un | de: ein, einer, warst-wie-einer Gen 3:22; 1Sam 17:36; 2Chr 5:13; 2Chr 18:12; Ezra 2:64

3. (10×) Temporal use meaning 'once, one time' (10x). Spanish una vez, German einmal, and French once all confirm the adverbial function. Key ritual texts include Exodus 30:10 ('once a year Aaron shall make atonement') and Leviticus 16:34 ('once a year'), establishing liturgical periodicity. The shift from spatial/numerical to temporal 'one' is cross-linguistically natural. ONE AND UNITY

en: once | es: Una-vez, una, una-vez | fr: once, un, une | de: ein, einer, einmal Exod 30:10; Lev 16:34; 1Kgs 10:22; 2Kgs 4:35

4. first (ordinal use) (6×) Ordinal use meaning 'first' rather than 'one' (6x). Target languages consistently employ ordinal forms — Spanish el primero/la primera, French le premier, German der erste. Genesis 2:11 names the 'first' river; Exodus 28:17 describes the 'first' row of gemstones. Hebrew lacks a dedicated ordinal for 'first,' relying on אֶחָד in this role before later standardizing רִאשׁוֹן. FIRST AND FOREMOST

en: the-first, the-one | es: el-primero, el-uno, la-primera | fr: le-premier, le-un | de: der-einen, der-eins, der-erste Gen 2:11; Gen 4:19; Exod 28:17; Exod 39:10; Job 42:14

5. (3×) An indefinite quantifier meaning 'a few, some' (3x). English 'few/some,' Spanish algunos/pocos, German einige replace the numeral in these contexts. Genesis 27:44 ('stay with him a few days') and Genesis 29:20 ('they seemed to him but a few days') show temporal indefiniteness, while Daniel 11:20 uses it for an unspecified short period. The semantic drift from 'one' to 'a few' is attested cross-linguistically. FEWNESS AND SMALLNESS

en: few, some | es: algunos, pocos | fr: peu, some, un | de: einer, einige Gen 27:44; Gen 29:20; Dan 11:20

6. each, every (distributive) (3×) Distributive use meaning 'each, every' (3x), functioning pronominally. English 'each-one/to-each,' French 'chaque-un,' German 'jeder-eins' confirm the distributive reading. Numbers 15:12 ('for each one'), Judges 8:18 ('each one resembled'), and Isaiah 6:2 ('each one had six wings') show the word distributing attributes across individuals in a set rather than specifying a count. ONE AND UNITY

en: each-one, for-the-one, to-each | es: para-cada-uno, uno | fr: chaque-un, pour-le-un, un | de: einer, fuer-der-eins, jeder-eins Num 15:12; Judg 8:18; Isa 6:2

7. eleven (compound numeral) (3×) The compound numeral 'eleven' formed with עֶשֶׂר 'ten' (3x). Target languages use dedicated lexemes — French onze, Spanish once, German elf — confirming this is perceived as a single number rather than a phrase. Genesis 32:22 counts Jacob's eleven sons, Deuteronomy 1:2 measures 'eleven days' journey,' and Joshua 15:51 tallies eleven cities. ONE AND UNITY

en: eleven, one, one- | es: once | fr: onze, un, un- | de: eins-, elf, seine-elf Gen 32:22; Deut 1:2; Josh 15:51

אָחוּ H0260 Prep-b (3×)

reeds, rush grass (collective term for marsh plants)

A collective term for reeds or rushes growing in marshy areas, borrowed from Egyptian like many flora terms. The word appears in Pharaoh's dream where cattle graze among the reed grass by the Nile, and in Job's wisdom literature questioning whether rushes can grow without water. Hosea's reference is textually uncertain, where many scholars read a plural form instead. These marsh plants symbolized Egypt's riverine abundance and served as a natural metaphor for dependence on water.

(3×) Genesis uses this word twice in Pharaoh's dream of the seven fat cows 'feeding in the reed grass' along the Nile—a quintessentially Egyptian scene of agricultural prosperity. Job 8:11 asks rhetorically whether rushes can flourish without marsh, making the reed grass emblematic of things that cannot survive apart from their natural life-source. The Egyptian loanword reminds us that Israel knew these plants primarily from their Egyptian sojourn. REEDS RUSHES VEGETATION

en: in-the-reed-grass, reed | es: el-junco, en-el-junco | fr: dans-le-reed-herbe, אחו | de: [אחו], im-Schilfgras Gen 41:2; Gen 41:18; Job 8:11

אֲחוּד H0261 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ehud, personal name meaning 'union' or 'joined' (a Benjamite listed in Chronicles genealogies)

This name appears in the genealogical records of Benjamin in 1 Chronicles 8:6. The spelling differs from the famous judge Ehud (spelled differently in Hebrew), though the names may share etymological roots suggesting unity or joining together. The Chronicles genealogies identify this Ehud as equivalent to Ehi mentioned in Genesis 46:21, illustrating the textual variations common in ancient genealogical records.

(1×) A personal name identifying a Benjamite ancestor, distinct from the more famous left-handed judge Ehud who delivered Israel from Moabite oppression. The 1 Chronicles 8:6 reference places him within Benjamin's tribal genealogy, where he appears among the sons or descendants listed to establish family lineages. The name's suggested meaning of "union" fits common Hebrew naming patterns emphasizing family bonds. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Echud | es: Ehud | fr: [אחוד] | de: [אחוד] 1Chr 8:6

אַחֲוָה H0262 Conj-w / N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

My declaration, my statement (Aramaic-influenced noun referring to the act of declaring or making known)

This rare noun appears only in Job 13:17, where Job demands that his friends listen carefully to his declaration or statement. The word's form suggests Aramaic influence—specifically, it resembles an Aramaic causative infinitive meaning "making known" or "declaring." Job uses it in parallel with "my words" in the same verse, emphasizing his urgent need to state his case and have it heard, both by his friends and ultimately by God.

(1×) The act or content of declaring something formally, used by Job to emphasize the importance of his forthcoming argument. In Job 13:17, the term parallels "hear carefully my words," creating rhetorical intensity as Job prepares to challenge conventional wisdom about suffering. The multilingual glosses consistently recognize this as a speech act—declaring, making a statement—though some reflect the textual uncertainty about this rare Aramaic-influenced form. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING

en: and-declaration-my | es: y-mi-declaración | fr: et-mon-אחותי-moi | de: und-meine-Schwester Job 13:17

אֲחַוְיָה H0263 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

Declaring, explaining (Aramaic noun for the act of making known or solving riddles)

This Aramaic term appears in Daniel 5:12, describing one of Daniel's extraordinary abilities: the explaining or declaring of riddles. The word derives from a causative form meaning "to make known" or "to reveal." In the context, it describes Daniel's capacity to solve enigmas and interpret mysteries, one of several supernatural gifts that distinguished him in the Babylonian and Persian courts. The term emphasizes the revelatory aspect of understanding hidden things.

(1×) The ability to explain or interpret difficult riddles and enigmas. In Daniel 5:12, this capacity is listed among Daniel's exceptional qualities, along with understanding visions and solving problems. The phrase "declaring of riddles" (construct relationship) identifies a specific intellectual and spiritual gift—not merely solving puzzles but revealing their hidden meanings. This gift proved essential when Belshazzar needed the mysterious handwriting interpreted. ANNOUNCING AND DECLARING

en: and-explaining | es: y-declarando | fr: et-Ahuza | de: [ואחוזית] Dan 5:12

אַחֲוָה H0264 Art / N-fs (1×)

The brotherhood, fraternal bond (referring to covenant relationship between Judah and Israel)

This noun appears in Zechariah's symbolic action of breaking staffs in Zechariah 11:14. The prophet breaks his second staff named "Brotherhood" (Aḥawah) to symbolize the rupture of fraternal bonds between Judah and Israel. The term emphasizes the covenant relationship and kinship that should unite the two kingdoms but was instead broken through division and strife. The definite article marks this as a specific, known relationship—the brotherhood that once bound the northern and southern kingdoms together.

(1×) The covenant bond of brotherhood between the kingdoms of Judah and Israel, personified as a staff in Zechariah's prophetic sign-act. When Zechariah breaks this staff in Zechariah 11:14, he dramatizes the historical and continuing division between north and south. The term carries both familial connotations (they were brother tribes descended from Jacob) and political implications (their failed unity as one covenantal nation under God). BROTHER KINSMAN

en: the-brotherhood | es: la-hermandad | fr: fraternité | de: [האחוה] Zech 11:14

אֲחוֹחַ H0265 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahoah, personal name (a Benjamite, possibly a textual corruption of Ahijah)

This name appears in 1 Chronicles 8:4 among the sons of Bela, who was Benjamin's firstborn. Scholars note that this may be a textual corruption of Ahijah, who appears in verse 7 of the same chapter. Such variations are not uncommon in genealogical lists that were copied and transmitted over centuries. The name's meaning remains uncertain, though it may contain the element "brother" common in Israelite names.

(1×) A personal name identifying a Benjamite in the tribal genealogies of 1 Chronicles. The uncertainty surrounding this name (it may represent an alternate spelling or corruption of Ahijah) illustrates the textual challenges in ancient genealogical records. Despite the uncertainty, it functions to identify an individual within Benjamin's family structure, specifically among the descendants of Bela. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Achoach | es: y-Ajoáj | fr: [ואחוח] | de: [ואחוח] 1Chr 8:4

אֲחוֹחִי H0266 Art / N-proper-ms (5×)

Ahohite; a gentilicic adjective designating descendants of Ahoah, applied to warriors in David's elite guard.

A patronymic adjective identifying members of the clan of Ahoah, a Benjaminite. It appears exclusively in the military rolls of David's mighty men. Eleazar son of Dodo the Ahohite (2 Sam 23:9; 1 Chr 11:12) and Zalmon/Ilai the Ahohite (2 Sam 23:28; 1 Chr 11:29) were among the elite Thirty. The consistent rendering across languages — English 'the Ahohite,' Spanish 'el ahohita,' French 'le Ahohite' — reflects the straightforward gentilicic function of this term.

(5×) A gentilicic designation meaning 'the Ahohite,' identifying a person as descended from the Benjaminite ancestor Ahoah. Used in the catalogues of David's mighty warriors (2 Sam 23:9, 28; 1 Chr 11:12, 29; 27:4). Every occurrence is bound to military heroism narratives, marking this clan as one of distinction in Israel's warrior culture. All major translation traditions preserve a recognizable transliteration of the Hebrew form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ahohi, the-Achochite, the-Ahohite | es: Ajohi, el-ahohíta, el-ajojita | fr: Ahohi, [האחוחי], le-Ahohite | de: Ahohi, [האחוחי], der-Ahohite 2Sam 23:9; 2Sam 23:28; 1Chr 11:12; 1Chr 11:29; 1Chr 27:4

אֲחוּמַי H0267 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahumai, personal name (a descendant of Judah through the line of Shobal)

Ahumai appears once in Scripture, in the genealogical records of Judah in 1 Chronicles 4:2. He is identified as a son of Jahath and descendant of Shobal, positioning him within one of Judah's important family lines. The name's etymology is uncertain, though like many Hebrew names it may encode a statement about family relationships or divine blessing. He represents one of countless individuals preserved in Chronicles' comprehensive genealogical framework.

(1×) A personal name identifying a Judahite descendant in the line of Shobal, son of Hur. The 1 Chronicles 4:2 reference situates him within the intricate genealogical networks that Chronicles uses to establish tribal identity and land claims. Though we know nothing of Ahumai beyond his genealogical position, his inclusion in the sacred record preserves his place in Judah's family heritage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Achumai | es: Ajumay | fr: [אחומי] | de: [אחומי] 1Chr 4:2

אָחוֹר H0268 Conj-w / N-ms (41×)

The back, rear, or hinder part; used adverbially for backward or behind, temporally for afterward, anatomically for the back of a body, and geographically for west.

The Hebrew noun achor anchors a remarkably coherent semantic field around the concept of 'what is behind.' Because ancient Israelites oriented themselves facing east, what lay behind was the west, what came after was the future, and what was unseen was the back. When Jacob blesses Dan and prophesies that riders will 'fall backward' (Gen 49:17), when the psalmist declares that God is both 'before and behind' him (Ps 139:5), and when Ezekiel sees men turning their backs to the temple (Ezek 8:16), the same root illuminates spatial, temporal, and theological realities. The Spanish atrás and French en arrière capture the directional core, while the Arabic ukhur preserves the cognate relationship. Perhaps most striking is God showing Moses only his 'back' at Sinai (Exod 33:23), a passage where the physical and theological senses of achor merge unforgettably.

1. backward, behind (direction) (31×) The dominant adverbial sense: backward, back, or behind as a direction of motion or position. This accounts for the great majority of occurrences and appears overwhelmingly in poetry. Enemies are driven 'backward' (Ps 35:4; 40:14), warriors fall 'backward' (Gen 49:17; Isa 28:13), and God is both 'behind and before' (Ps 139:5). The Spanish atrás/hacia-atrás and French en arrière consistently render this directional sense. The Niphal and Hiphil verbs it modifies — nasog, hashiv, nakah — create vivid images of retreat, repulsion, and defeat. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: back, backward, backwards | es: atrás, hacia-atrás | fr: backward, backwards, en-arrière | de: backward, backwards, rueckwaerts Gen 49:17; 2Sam 1:22; 2Sam 10:9; 1Chr 19:10; 2Chr 13:14

2. afterward, hereafter (temporal) (3×) A temporal extension of the spatial concept: afterward, hereafter, or in the end. In Proverbs 29:11 the wise person keeps things 'back' (restrains until afterward), and in Isaiah 41:23 God challenges idols to 'declare things to come hereafter.' The shift from spatial 'behind' to temporal 'later' follows the same cognitive metaphor found across Semitic languages, where the Arabic akhiran ('finally') and the German zuletzt mirror the movement from what is behind to what comes after. Only a few occurrences attest this temporal sense, but they reveal the word's conceptual architecture. LAST AND FINAL en: for-afterward, hereafter, in-the-end | es: al-final, para-después, para-el-futuro | fr: dans-באחור, en-arrière | de: rueckwaerts, zurueck Prov 29:11; Isa 41:23; Isa 42:23

3. back (body part / rear portion) (3×) The concrete noun sense: the back or rear part of a person or object, used with possessive suffixes. In Exodus 33:23 God tells Moses 'you shall see my back,' one of the most theologically charged uses of any body-part word in Scripture. Exodus 26:12 describes the surplus curtain hanging over the 'back' of the tabernacle. Ezekiel 8:16 denounces the twenty-five men with their 'backs' to the temple — the French dos and German Rücken capture this anatomical specificity. The possessive suffix pattern (achoray, 'my back'; achoreihem, 'their backs') distinguishes this noun use from the adverbial. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: back-of, backs-of-them, my-back | es: espaldas-de-ellos, mis-espaldas, parte-trasera-de | fr: derrière, dos-de, mon-dos | de: [אחריהם], back-von, mein-back Exod 26:12; Exod 33:23; Ezek 8:16

4. hindquarters (of animals) (2×) The anatomical sense applied to animals: the hindquarters or rear parts of beasts. In 1 Kings 7:25 and 2 Chronicles 4:4 the twelve bronze oxen supporting the sea in Solomon's temple stand with their 'hindquarters' facing inward. The Spanish partes traseras and the consistent use of pronominal suffixes confirm this as a concrete anatomical reference. While closely related to sense 3, the zoological context and the architectural significance of the temple furnishings give these occurrences a distinctive register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: their-hindquarters | es: partes-traseras-de-ellos, sus-traseros | fr: [אחריהם], leur-hindquarters | de: [אחריהם], ihr-hindquarters 1Kgs 7:25; 2Chr 4:4

5. west (geographic direction) (2×) The geographic-directional sense: west, arising from the ancient Near Eastern orientation where one faced east and the back pointed west. Job 23:8 pairs achor ('west') with qedem ('east') in a merism describing God's elusiveness in every direction. Isaiah 9:12 uses the same directional pairing for the enemies attacking Israel from front and rear, i.e. east and west. The Spanish occidente and the symmetry with qedem make the geographic logic transparent. This sense beautifully illustrates how embodied spatial experience shapes Hebrew directional vocabulary. WEST DIRECTION
en: and-west, from-west | es: del-occidente, y-al-occidente | fr: en-arrière, et-ואחור | de: rueckwaerts, und-zurueck Job 23:8; Isa 9:12

אָחוֹת H0269 Conj-w (119×)

Sister, female sibling or close kinswoman; idiomatically, 'counterpart' or 'one to another' of paired objects.

At its heart a kinship term for a female sibling – Sarah as Abraham's half-sister (Gen 20:12), Miriam as Aaron's sister (Exod 15:20), Tamar as Absalom's sister (2 Sam 13:1). Spanish hermana, French soeur, and German Schwester all track the literal blood-kinship reading. In a handful of passages, however, the word takes an idiomatic turn: tabernacle curtains are joined 'each to her sister' (Exod 26:3), and cherub wings touch 'each its sister' (Ezek 1:9) – a pairing idiom where the 'sister' is not a person but a matching counterpart.

1. sister (female sibling) (113×) A female sibling or close female relative by blood – the dominant kinship sense across 113 occurrences. Sarah called Abraham's sister (Gen 12:13; 20:2), Dinah as Jacob's daughter and the brothers' sister (Gen 34:13-31), Tamar and Absalom (2 Sam 13). Spanish hermana mia, French ma soeur, and German meine Schwester uniformly confirm the literal familial relationship. SISTER SIBLING
en: my-sister, sister-my, sister-of | es: hermana-de, hermana-mía, mi-hermana | fr: le-soeur-de, ma-sœur,, mon-soeur | de: die-Schwester, mein-Schwester, meine-Schwester Gen 12:13; Gen 12:19; Gen 20:2; Gen 20:5; Gen 20:12

2. counterpart, one to another (6×) An idiomatic extension meaning 'counterpart, matching piece, one to another,' applied to non-personal objects paired together. Tabernacle curtains are coupled 'each to her sister' (Exod 26:3, 5-6), and paired wings or boards stand 'each facing its sister' (Ezek 1:9; 3:13). Spanish su hermana and French sa soeur preserve the feminine possessive form even when the referent is an inanimate object, marking this as a frozen idiom rather than a living kinship use. SISTER SIBLING
en: her-sister, of-sister-her | es: a-hermana-suya, su-hermana | fr: de-soeur-sa, sa-soeur | de: auf-ihre-Schwester, ihr-Schwester Gen 30:1; Exod 26:3; Exod 26:5; Exod 26:6

אָחַז H0270 V-Hofal-Prtcpl-mp (68×)

To grasp, seize, take hold of; figuratively: be gripped by fear; also to fasten, take possession, or be caught

A fundamental verb of physical grasping whose semantic range extends from concrete hand-seizing to emotional overwhelming, territorial possession, and structural attachment. When Esau's hand grasped his twin's heel at birth (Gen 25:26), the core meaning was established. But when trembling 'seizes' the inhabitants of Philistia (Exod 15:14-15), the same verb maps fear onto the body. The Hofal passive yields an architectural sense of structural elements being 'fastened' or joined (1 Kgs 6:10). The Nifal extends to legal-territorial acquisition (Gen 47:27), and a passive reading covers being caught in a snare (Gen 22:13). Arabic akhadha and Aramaic 'ekhad are cognate, confirming this as a pan-Semitic root for the act of taking hold.

1. seize, grasp, hold physically (38×) The core Qal active sense: to physically seize, grasp, or take hold of someone or something with the hand. Thirty-eight occurrences cover the full range of Qal inflections. Arabic akhadha ('to take'), Korean jabda ('to grab'), and Swahili -shika ('to grasp') all parallel this primary meaning. Jacob grasping Esau's heel (Gen 25:26) and Moses seizing the serpent (Exod 4:4) are paradigmatic instances. SEIZING AND SNATCHING
en: I-seized-him, You-have-grasped, You-held | es: Para-tomar, Sostuviste, Y-lo-agarraron | fr: Je-l'ai-saisi, [אחזת], [באחז] | de: Ahas, [ויאחז], der-seizes Gen 25:26; Exod 4:4; Deut 32:41; Judg 1:6; Judg 12:6

2. seize figuratively (emotion overwhelms) (10×) A figurative extension where an emotion, fear, or trembling is the grammatical subject that 'seizes' a person, rendering them overwhelmed or paralyzed. Ten occurrences deploy the verb with abstract subjects. Arabic istawla ('to overwhelm') and Korean salojapta ('to grip/seize') confirm the cross-linguistic pattern of grasping metaphors for emotional experience. The Song of the Sea (Exod 15:14-15) and Psalm 48:6 are landmark passages. SEIZING AND SNATCHING
en: has-seized-me, seize, seize-me | es: los-agarró, los-tomarán, los-tomó | fr: [אחזתם], [אחזתני], saisir | de: [אחזה], [אחזוני], [יאחזוך] Exod 15:14; Exod 15:15; 2Sam 1:9; Job 18:20; Ps 48:6

3. fastened, attached, joined (6×) Hofal causative-passive and related forms meaning to be fastened, attached, joined, or bolted together, applied to architectural elements such as beams, curtains, and gates. Six occurrences include Solomon's temple side-chambers fastened to the house (1 Kgs 6:10) and the palace hangings attached by cords in Esther 1:6. Arabic muthabbata ('fastened') and murabbata ('tied') employ distinct roots, revealing Hebrew's metaphorical bridge from hand-grasping to structural joining. SEIZING AND SNATCHING
en: and-he-fastened, and-hold-fast, attached | es: sostenidas, sostenido, sujetos | fr: et-il-fastened, et-saisir, saisir | de: [אחוזים], [מאחזים], ergriff 1Kgs 6:10; 2Chr 9:18; Neh 7:3; Esth 1:6; Ezek 41:6

4. be taken, be selected (5×) Qal passive participle sense: to be taken or selected for a purpose, often in the context of lots, portions, or census selection. Five occurrences concentrate in Numbers 31 (war-booty division) and 1 Chronicles 24 (priestly course selection). Arabic ma'khudh ('taken') preserves the passive, while Korean chwihaejin ('selected') highlights the purposive dimension. SEIZING AND SNATCHING
en: and-being-taken, being-taken, portion | es: el-tomado, tomado, y-tomado | fr: et-saisir, le-portion, portion | de: Ahas, Anteil, der-Anteil Num 31:30; Num 31:47; 1Chr 24:6

5. take possession of land (5×) Nifal sense meaning to take possession of or acquire land and property, a legal-territorial meaning distinct from mere physical grasping. Five occurrences span patriarchal narratives (Gen 34:10; 47:27) through the conquest settlement (Num 32:30; Josh 22:9, 19). Arabic tamallaku and imtaliku ('to possess/acquire') require entirely different roots from akhadha, confirming that Hebrew uniquely extends the grasping metaphor into property law. INHERITANCE AND PROPERTY
en: and-take-possession, and-took-possession, then-they-shall-have-possession | es: poseyeron, y-adquieran-propiedad, y-poseed | fr: alors-ils-devra-avoir-possession, et-prendre-possession, et-prit-possession | de: dann-sie-soll-haben-Besitz, sie-waren-gegeben-Besitz, und-erwerbt-Besitz Gen 34:10; Gen 47:27; Num 32:30; Josh 22:9; Josh 22:19

6. be caught, be ensnared (3×) Nifal and Qal passive sense of being caught or ensnared, as in a thicket or trap. Three occurrences include Abraham's ram caught by its horns in a thicket (Gen 22:13) and Qoheleth's observation that people are snared like fish and birds (Eccl 9:12). Spanish trabado ('stuck') and atrapados ('trapped'), and Korean geollin ('caught'), confirm the trapping nuance as distinct from volitional grasping. SEIZING AND SNATCHING
en: caught, that-are-caught, the-ones-caught | es: los-atrapados, que-son-atrapados, trabado | fr: caught, le-saisir, saisir | de: ergriff, verfangen Gen 22:13; Eccl 9:12

7. (1×) A singular occurrence in Job 26:9 where God 'covers' or 'grasps' the face of the full moon, spreading clouds over it. The multilingual glosses diverge: English 'covering,' Spanish 'cubriendo,' French and German retaining 'seize.' This cosmic application of achaz extends the grasping metaphor to God's sovereign power over celestial phenomena, a striking poetic usage unique in the Hebrew Bible. SEIZING AND SNATCHING
en: covering | es: Cubriendo | fr: saisir | de: von-ergriff Job 26:9

אָחָז H0271 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (41×)

Ahaz — king of Judah (c. 735-715 BCE), son of Jotham, father of Hezekiah, name meaning 'he has grasped'

Achaz is the personal name of the king of Judah who reigned during one of the most consequential periods in Israelite history. The name is an abbreviated form of Jehoahaz ('Yah has grasped'), though the theophoric element is dropped — perhaps pointedly, given this king's reputation. Ahaz appears 41 times, concentrated in 2 Kings 16, 2 Chronicles 28, and Isaiah 7. His defining moment is the Syro-Ephraimite crisis (c. 735 BCE), when he refused Isaiah's offer of a sign from God ('I will not test the LORD,' Isa 7:12) yet secretly appealed to Assyria's Tiglath-pileser III, introducing an Assyrian altar model into the Jerusalem temple (2 Kgs 16:10-16). The prophets Hosea and Micah also date their activity by his reign (Hos 1:1; Mic 1:1). The Assyrian annals confirm him as Ia-u-ha-zi.

Ahaz king of Judah (41×) The proper masculine name Achaz ('he has grasped,' short for Jehoahaz), identifying the king of Judah who succeeded Jotham and fathered Hezekiah. All 41 occurrences refer to this individual, with a minor secondary reference to a Benjamite descendant of Jonathan (1 Chr 8:35-36; 9:42). The king's significance lies in the Syro-Ephraimite crisis and his fateful decision to seek Assyrian vassalage rather than trust the prophetic word (Isa 7:1-12; 2 Kgs 16:7-9). Greek Achaz, Spanish 'Acaz,' French 'Achaz' preserve the name uniformly. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Achaz | es: Acaz, Ajaz | fr: Achaz | de: Achaz, Ahas 2Kgs 15:38; 2Kgs 16:1; 2Kgs 16:2; 2Kgs 16:5; 2Kgs 16:7

אֲחֻזָּה H0272 Conj-w / N-fsc / 2ms (66×)

ahuzzah – landed property held as permanent hereditary possession, especially in Priestly legislation

The feminine noun ahuzzah designates a permanent, hereditary holding of land – a 'possession' in the fullest legal sense. It belongs overwhelmingly to the Priestly source (P) and its legislative register, appearing densely in Leviticus 25 (the Jubilee laws), Numbers 27-35 (inheritance and Levitical cities), and Ezekiel 44-48 (the eschatological land division). The word first appears when Abraham purchases the cave of Machpelah as an ahuzzat-qever, 'a possession for burial' (Gen 23:4, 9, 20). Its theological weight lies in the conviction that the land ultimately belongs to God and is held by Israel in trust. Spanish heredad/posesion, French possession, and German Besitz all render it consistently, reflecting a single legal-territorial concept.

landed property, possession (66×) Landed property held as a permanent and typically hereditary possession, especially in the Priestly legislation governing Jubilee restoration (Lev 25:10, 13, 25-28), tribal inheritance (Num 27:4; 32:5), and Levitical allotments (Num 35:8; Ezek 44-48). Abraham's purchase of Machpelah as an ahuzzat-qever (Gen 23:4, 9, 20) grounds the term in patriarchal narrative. Spanish heredad/posesion, French possession, and German Besitz converge on a single concept of inalienable landed property, with no polysemy evident across 66 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-possession, for-possession, his-possession | es: es-la-heredad-de, la-propiedad-de, para-posesión | fr: comme-possession, possession-de, pour-possession | de: Besitz-von, fuer-Besitz, sein-Besitz Gen 23:9; Gen 23:20; Gen 47:11; Gen 49:30; Gen 50:13

אֲחֻזָּהוּ H0273 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahzai, personal name (a priest in post-exilic Jerusalem, possibly alternate form of Jahzerah)

Ahzai was a priest serving in Jerusalem after the Babylonian exile, mentioned in Nehemiah 11:13. Interestingly, the parallel genealogy in 1 Chronicles 9:12 gives the name as Jahzerah, suggesting either textual variation or that the same individual was known by different names. Such variations were common in ancient texts. The name may mean something like "Yah(weh) has grasped" or "Yah has seen," typical of theophoric names incorporating the divine name.

(1×) A personal name borne by a priestly figure in the restored Jerusalem community. The Nehemiah 11:13 context lists him among the priests and Levites who resettled in Jerusalem after the exile, part of the effort to repopulate and restore the holy city. The name's possible meaning ("Yah has grasped" or similar) would reflect faith in divine providence and protection. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Achzai | es: Ahzai | fr: [אחזי] | de: [אחזי] Neh 11:13

אֲחַזְיָהוּ H0274 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (37×)

Ahaziah — Hebrew name meaning 'Yah has grasped,' borne by a king of Israel and a king of Judah

Achazyahu (also vocalized Achazyah) is a theophoric name combining achaz ('to seize, grasp') with Yahu/Yah, yielding 'Yah has grasped' or 'Yah has taken hold.' The name belongs to two kings whose reigns ended in divine judgment. Ahaziah son of Ahab, king of Israel, fell through an upper-chamber lattice and sent to inquire of Baal-zebub, god of Ekron, provoking Elijah's devastating oracle: 'Is it because there is no God in Israel?' (2 Kgs 1:3, 6, 16). He died childless after a two-year reign (1 Kgs 22:51; 2 Kgs 1:17-18). Ahaziah son of Jehoram, king of Judah, reigned only one year before Jehu killed him at the ascent of Gur during the bloody purge of Ahab's house (2 Kgs 9:27-28). The LXX renders both as Ochozias, and the Spanish 'Ocozias' and French 'Achazia' follow suit. A third bearer, the priest Achzai (Neh 11:13), carries a shortened form of the same name.

Ahaziah (proper name) (37×) The theophoric proper name Achazyahu/Achazyah ('Yah has grasped'), identifying primarily two Israelite kings. Ahaziah son of Ahab ruled Israel briefly (c. 853-852 BC), fell through his upper-room lattice, and died after consulting Baal-zebub instead of YHWH (1 Kgs 22:40, 49, 51; 2 Kgs 1:2-18). Ahaziah son of Jehoram of Judah reigned one year before being killed by Jehu alongside the house of Ahab (2 Kgs 8:24-29; 9:16-29; 2 Chr 22:1-9). The LXX Ochozias, Spanish 'Ocozias,' and French 'Achazia' uniformly transliterate. A shortened form Achzai identifies a postexilic priest in Nehemiah 11:13. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Achazyahu, Ahaziah, Akhazyahu | es: Ajazyahu, Ocozías, a-Ocozías | fr: Achazia, Ahaziah, fut-Ahaziah | de: Achasja, Ahaziah, war-Ahaziah 1Kgs 22:40; 1Kgs 22:49; 1Kgs 22:51; 2Kgs 1:2; 2Kgs 1:18

אֲחֻזָּם H0275 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahuzzam, personal name meaning 'possessor' or 'holder' (a descendant of Judah)

Ahuzzam appears in the genealogical records of Judah in 1 Chronicles 4:6, listed as one of the sons of Naarah, who was a wife of Ashhur. The name derives from a root meaning "to grasp" or "to possess," suggesting ownership or holding. Like many names in Chronicles' genealogies, it preserves the memory of an individual within Judah's tribal structure, though we know nothing beyond his genealogical position.

(1×) A personal name identifying a Judahite in the family of Ashhur. The 1 Chronicles 4:6 reference places him among the descendants of Caleb, within the broader framework of Judah's clans. The name's meaning ("possessor") may reflect the family's status as landholders or simply express a parent's hope at the child's birth, following common Hebrew naming patterns that made statements about family identity and divine blessing. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Achuzzam | es: Ajuzam | fr: [אחזם] | de: [אחזם] 1Chr 4:6

אֲחֻזַּת H0276 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahuzzath, personal name meaning 'possession' or 'holding' (a friend of Abimelech who visited Isaac)

Ahuzzath appears in Genesis 26:26 as one of Abimelech's companions when the Philistine king visited Isaac to make a covenant. He is identified as Abimelech's friend, accompanying the king and his army commander Phicol to Beer-sheba. The name means "possession" or "holding," possibly indicating his role or status. This diplomatic visit resulted in a peace treaty between Isaac and Abimelech, resolving tensions over wells and prosperity.

(1×) A personal name identifying an advisor or friend of the Philistine king Abimelech. In Genesis 26:26, Ahuzzath accompanies his king on a diplomatic mission to Isaac, suggesting he held some position of trust or counsel. The threesome (Abimelech, Phicol, Ahuzzath) represents an official delegation, with Ahuzzath possibly serving as a civilian advisor alongside the military commander Phicol. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Ahuzzath | es: y-Achuzzat | fr: et-Ahuzzath | de: und-Achussat Gen 26:26

אֲחִיהוּ H0277 N-proper-ms (2×)

Achi, a personal name meaning 'my brother'

A Hebrew personal name appearing in two genealogical lists in 1 Chronicles. The name is a shortened form meaning 'my brother' or possibly an element in longer theophoric names. It appears among the descendants of Gad (1 Chronicles 5:15) and in the genealogy of Asher (1 Chronicles 7:34). The name's brevity and its appearance only in genealogies suggests it may be a familial nickname or abbreviated form rather than a formal given name.

(2×) Multilingual translations treat this as a proper noun requiring transliteration: Spanish offers 'Aji' or 'Ají,' while French and German preserve the Hebrew in brackets, indicating uncertainty about how to render this short, ambiguous name. The two occurrences in different tribal genealogies (Gad and Asher) suggest 'Achi' was used independently in multiple families, possibly as a term of endearment that became a fixed name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Achi | es: Aji, Ají | fr: [אחי] | de: [אחי] 1Chr 5:15; 1Chr 7:34

אֲחִי H0278 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ehi, personal name (a son of Benjamin listed in Genesis, possibly same as Ahiram or Aharah in other lists)

Ehi appears in Genesis 46:21 as one of Benjamin's sons who went down to Egypt with Jacob. The name presents textual challenges, as parallel genealogies give different names—Numbers 26:38 has Ahiram, and 1 Chronicles 8:1 has Aharah or Ahoah. These variations may represent the same individual known by different names, or they may reflect textual corruptions in transmission. Such variations are common in biblical genealogies spanning different literary traditions.

(1×) A personal name identifying one of Benjamin's sons in the Genesis 46 list of Jacob's family who migrated to Egypt. This list of seventy persons establishes the family structure from which Israel would emerge as a nation. The textual variations across different genealogical lists (Ehi, Ahiram, Aharah) illustrate the challenges of preserving exact forms across centuries, though the individual's position as a son of Benjamin remains constant. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ehi | es: Eji | fr: Ehi | de: Echi Gen 46:21

אֲחִיאָם H0279 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ahiam, one of David's mighty warriors

A personal name belonging to one of David's elite fighting men, listed among the Thirty in both 2 Samuel 23 and 1 Chronicles 11. The name appears in the parallel accounts of David's champions with consistent spelling. Little else is known about this warrior beyond his inclusion in this honored roster of David's most skilled and loyal fighters.

(2×) The multilingual evidence shows relative stability in transliteration: English uses 'Ahiam,' Spanish 'Ajiam' or 'Ajíam' (reflecting the guttural), French offers 'Ahiam' or brackets the Hebrew, and German similarly provides 'Ahiam' or the Hebrew form. The parallel occurrence in 2 Samuel 23:33 and 1 Chronicles 11:35 represents the same person in duplicate lists of David's elite guard, compiled from different sources or traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Achiam, Ahiam | es: Ajiam, Ajíam | fr: Ahiam, [אחיאם] | de: Ahiam, [אחיאם] 2Sam 23:33; 1Chr 11:35

אֲחִידָה H0280 N-mp (1×)

Riddles, enigmas (Aramaic plural noun referring to difficult puzzles or mysteries requiring interpretation)

This Aramaic term appears in Daniel 5:12, referring to the riddles or enigmas that Daniel possessed the ability to interpret. The word describes mysteries or difficult puzzles that require special wisdom or divine insight to solve. In the context, it's one of several extraordinary abilities attributed to Daniel—excellent spirit, knowledge, understanding, interpreting dreams, solving problems, and explaining riddles. These gifts made him invaluable to the royal court.

(1×) Difficult riddles or enigmatic puzzles requiring interpretation, mentioned as one category of problems Daniel could solve. In Daniel 5:12, Queen Mother recalls Daniel's abilities to Belshazzar, emphasizing his capacity for "explaining riddles" (literally "the declaring of riddles"). This echoes the story of Samson's riddle in Judges, though here it represents a broader capacity to penetrate mysteries and reveal hidden meanings, a gift ultimately sourced in divine wisdom. RIDDLE ENIGMA en: riddles | es: enigmas | fr: énigme | de: [אחידן] Dan 5:12

אֲחִיָּהוּ H0281 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (24×)

Ahijah / Ahiyahu – proper name meaning 'brother of Yah(weh),' borne by a prophet, priest, scribe, and others

A theophoric name compounded from 'ach ('brother') and Yah ('the LORD'), meaning 'my brother is Yahweh.' It appears in two spelling variants: the shorter Ahijah (אֲחִיָּה) and the longer Ahiyahu (אֲחִיָּהוּ). The most prominent bearer is Ahijah the Shilonite, the prophet who tore his new garment into twelve pieces to symbolize the coming division of Solomon's kingdom (1 Kgs 11:29-30) and who later pronounced doom on Jeroboam's dynasty (1 Kgs 14:1-18). Other bearers include a priest under Saul (1 Sam 14:3), a royal scribe (1 Kgs 4:3), and the father of King Baasha (1 Kgs 15:27).

Ahijah / Ahiyah (personal name) (24×) A proper masculine name meaning 'brother of Yah(weh),' applied to at least six distinct individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The most theologically significant is Ahijah the Shilonite prophet who foretold the northern secession by tearing his garment into twelve pieces (1 Kgs 11:29-30) and later pronounced judgment on Jeroboam's house (1 Kgs 14:1-18). English, Spanish, French, and German translations consistently transliterate the name with minor orthographic variation (Achiyah, Ahías, Ahija). The Phoenician parallel 'achimelech' confirms the kinship-theophoric naming pattern. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Achiyah, Achiyahu, Achiyyah | es: Achiyah, Achiyahu, Ahías | fr: Achija, Achiyahu, Ahija | de: Achiyah, Achiyahu, Ahijah 1Sam 14:3; 1Sam 14:18; 1Kgs 4:3; 1Kgs 11:29; 1Kgs 11:30

אֲחִיהוּד H0282 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahihud, personal name meaning 'brother of majesty' (prince of Asher appointed to help divide the land)

Ahihud was the tribal prince of Asher appointed by Moses to assist in dividing the promised land among the tribes. His name appears in Numbers 34:27, part of the list of leaders designated for this crucial task. The name's meaning—"brother of majesty" or "my brother is majestic"—combines a kinship term with an element suggesting glory or honor, possibly referring to God's majesty. This honor of participating in land distribution shows his standing within his tribe.

(1×) A personal name identifying Asher's representative in the land division commission. Numbers 34:27 lists him among the tribal leaders chosen to ensure fair and proper allocation of Canaan's territories. This role required both tribal respect and administrative capability, as these men would implement God's distribution plan for the inheritance. The name's components (brother + majesty) reflect typical Hebrew naming patterns honoring God or family. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ahihud | es: Ahihud | fr: Ahihud | de: Ahihud Num 34:27

אַחְיוֹ H0283 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)

Ahio, a proper name borne by several men including the brother of Uzzah who drove the ark-cart.

A masculine proper name meaning 'fraternal' or 'his brother,' borne by at least three individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The most prominent is the son of Abinadab who, together with his brother Uzzah, drove the new cart carrying the ark of God from Kiriath-jearim (2 Sam 6:3-4). The name also belongs to two Benjamites listed in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles 8 and 9. Some ancient Greek manuscripts read this as the common noun 'his brothers' rather than as a proper name.

(6×) Ahio (אַחְיוֹ, 'fraternal' or 'brotherly'), a proper name for several Israelite men. Most notably, one Ahio walked before the ark alongside his brother Uzzah when David transported it on a new cart (2 Sam 6:3-4; 1 Chr 13:7). Two other bearers of the name appear in Benjamite genealogies (1 Chr 8:14, 31; 9:37). The Septuagint sometimes reads the word as 'his brothers' (אֶחָיו), reflecting the ambiguity between the proper name and the common noun with possessive suffix. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Achyo, and-Ahio | es: Y-Ajuío, y-Ajyo, y-Ajío | fr: et-Ahio | de: und-Ahio, und-sein-Bruder 2Sam 6:3; 2Sam 6:4; 1Chr 8:14; 1Chr 8:31; 1Chr 9:37

אֲחִיחֻד H0284 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahihud, personal name probably equivalent to Ahihud (a Benjamite, son of Ehud)

This name appears in 1 Chronicles 8:7, identifying a Benjamite in the genealogies. Scholars generally consider it equivalent to the name Ahihud (meaning "brother of majesty"), though the spelling differs slightly. The individual is identified as a son of Ehud, though this is a different Ehud than the famous judge. Such spelling variations in genealogical lists are not uncommon, reflecting different manuscript traditions or regional pronunciation differences.

(1×) A personal name in Benjamin's tribal genealogy, appearing as a son of Ehud among Bela's descendants. The 1 Chronicles 8:7 context traces Benjamite family lines, with particular attention to leadership families. The name's probable equivalence to Ahihud suggests the same meaning ("brother of majesty"), though the exact relationship between different Ahihuds/Ahihuds in Scripture remains uncertain due to the common practice of naming children after honored ancestors. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Achichud | es: Ajijud | fr: [אחיחד] | de: [אחיחד] 1Chr 8:7

אֲחִיטוּב H0285 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (15×)

Ahitub — a priestly name meaning 'my brother is goodness,' borne by ancestors of key Israelite priests

Ahituv ('my brother is goodness') names at least two significant priestly figures. The first was Eli's grandson through Phinehas and father of Ahimelech, the priest of Nob massacred by Saul (1 Sam 14:3; 22:9-20). The second was the father of Zadok, who founded the Zadokite priestly dynasty loyal to David (2 Sam 8:17; 1 Chr 6:7-8). The genealogies in Chronicles and Ezra-Nehemiah trace both lines into the postexilic period (Neh 11:11). Spanish 'Ajitob,' French 'Achitub,' and German 'Achitub' transliterate the name consistently.

Ahitub (proper name) (15×) A Hebrew proper name (ahituv, 'my brother is goodness') borne by at least two priestly figures: (1) Eli's grandson and father of Ahimelech, linking the Elide priesthood to the tragedy at Nob (1 Sam 14:3; 22:9-20); and (2) the father of Zadok, anchoring the Zadokite dynasty (2 Sam 8:17; 1 Chr 6:7-8). Postexilic genealogies continue the name (Ezra 7:2; Neh 11:11). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Achitub, Achituv, Ahitub | es: Ahitob, Ajitob, Ajitub | fr: Achitub, Achituv, Ahitub | de: Achitub, Achituv, Ahitub 1Sam 14:3; 1Sam 22:9; 1Sam 22:11; 1Sam 22:12; 1Sam 22:20

אֲחִילוּד H0286 N-proper-ms (5×)

Ahilud; a personal name meaning perhaps 'child's brother,' borne by the father of two officials under David and Solomon.

A proper name traditionally explained as 'brother of one born' or 'child's brother.' Ahilud's primary significance is as the father of Jehoshaphat the recorder, who served under David (2 Sam 8:16; 20:24; 1 Chr 18:15) and into Solomon's reign (1 Kgs 4:3). A second Ahilud is the father of Baana, one of Solomon's twelve district governors (1 Kgs 4:12). The name appears with remarkable consistency across translations — French 'Ahilud,' Spanish 'Ajilud' — all preserving the Hebrew consonantal structure.

(5×) The proper name Ahilud, identifying two men in the Davidic-Solomonic administration: (a) father of Jehoshaphat the royal recorder under David and Solomon (2 Sam 8:16; 20:24; 1 Kgs 4:3; 1 Chr 18:15), and (b) father of Baana, Solomon's governor in the Jezreel-Beth-shean district (1 Kgs 4:12). The etymological sense 'brother of a child' is uncertain but may reflect birth-order naming customs. Translations uniformly transliterate the name rather than gloss it. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Achilud, Ahilud | es: Ajilud | fr: Achilud, Ahilud, [אחילוד] | de: Achilud, Ahilud, [אחילוד] 2Sam 8:16; 2Sam 20:24; 1Kgs 4:3; 1Kgs 4:12; 1Chr 18:15

אֲחִימוֹת H0287 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahimoth, personal name meaning 'my brother is death' (a Levite from the family of Kohath)

Ahimoth was a Levite descended from Kohath, mentioned in 1 Chronicles 6:25. His name has the unusual meaning "my brother is death," which may seem morbid but could reflect circumstances of his birth—perhaps a brother died, or the name acknowledges mortality's reality. Interestingly, parallel passages give the name Mahath instead (1 Chronicles 6:35; 2 Chronicles 29:12), suggesting either textual variation or that the same individual was known by different names.

(1×) A personal name identifying a Levite in the Kohathite genealogy. The 1 Chronicles 6:25 reference traces the priestly line, establishing family connections crucial for temple service roles. The name's stark meaning ("brother of death") contrasts with more hopeful Hebrew names, perhaps commemorating family tragedy or acknowledging life's fragility. The textual variations (Ahimoth/Mahath) illustrate the complexities of preserving exact forms in genealogical records. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: and-Achimot | es: y-Ajimot | fr: [ואחימות] | de: [ואחימות] 1Chr 6:25

אֲחִימֶלֶךְ H0288 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (17×)

Ahimelech ('my brother is king'), a proper name borne by a priest at Nob and a Hittite warrior.

The name אֲחִימֶלֶךְ combines אָח (brother) and מֶלֶךְ (king), yielding 'my brother is king.' Its most prominent bearer is the priest at Nob who, not knowing David was fleeing Saul, gave him the consecrated bread and Goliath's sword (1 Sam 21:1-9). This act of hospitality led to the massacre of the priests of Nob by Doeg the Edomite at Saul's command (1 Sam 22:9-20) — a pivotal episode in the David narratives that Jesus himself references regarding the showbread (Mark 2:26). A second Ahimelech, a Hittite, served among David's companions (1 Sam 26:6). Transliterations remain close across languages: Spanish 'Ajimelec,' French 'Achimélec,' German 'Ahimelech.'

Ahimelech (proper name) (17×) A Hebrew proper name meaning 'my brother is king,' referring primarily to the priest at Nob who provided David with the showbread and Goliath's sword (1 Sam 21:1-9), an act that led to Saul's slaughter of the priests of Nob (1 Sam 22:9-20). Jesus cites this episode in Mark 2:26. The name also belongs to a Hittite companion of David (1 Sam 26:6). Transliterations vary minimally across traditions: Spanish 'Ajimelec,' French 'Achimélec,' German 'Ahimelech,' all preserving the theophoric element. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Achimelech, Ahimelech, and-Achimelekh | es: Ajimelec, Ajimelej, Ajimélec | fr: Achimélec, Ahimelech, Ahimélec | de: Achimelech, Ahimelech, [ואחימלך] 1Sam 21:2; 1Sam 21:3; 1Sam 21:9; 1Sam 22:9

אֲחִימָן H0289 N-proper-fs (4×)

Ahiman; a proper name borne by a giant son of Anak and a Levitical gatekeeper

A masculine proper name possibly meaning 'my brother is a gift,' borne by two distinct figures. The more prominent Ahiman is one of three Anakite giants dwelling in Hebron whom the Israelite spies encountered (Num 13:22) and whom Judah later defeated (Josh 15:14; Judg 1:10). The second Ahiman is a Levitical gatekeeper listed in the post-exilic community of 1 Chronicles 9:17. The name's association with the fearsome Anakim made it memorable in Israel's conquest traditions.

(4×) Ahiman — a personal name, likely meaning 'my brother is a gift.' English offers both 'Ahiman' and 'Achiman'; Spanish renders 'Ajimán'; French preserves both 'Ahiman' and 'Achiman.' The Anakite Ahiman (Num 13:22; Josh 15:14; Judg 1:10) was one of the three giants whose presence terrified the spies but who was ultimately dispossessed when Caleb and Judah took Hebron. The Levitical Ahiman (1 Chr 9:17) served as a temple gatekeeper, showing the name continued in use well into the post-exilic period. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Achiman, Ahiman, and-Achiman | es: Ajimán, y-Ajimán | fr: Achiman, Ahiman, [ואחימן] | de: Achiman, Ahiman, [ואחימן] Num 13:22; Josh 15:14; Judg 1:10; 1Chr 9:17

אֲחִימַעַץ H0290 N-proper-ms (15×)

Ahimaaz — a name meaning 'my brother is wrath/counsel,' borne by Zadok's son and Saul's father-in-law

Ahimaats ('my brother is wrath' or 'my brother is counsel') is most memorably the swift-footed son of Zadok the priest, who served as David's loyal courier during Absalom's rebellion. With Jonathan son of Abiathar, he relayed intelligence from Jerusalem to David's camp (2 Sam 15:27, 36; 17:17-20). His famous footrace with the Cushite to bring David news of Absalom's death is among the most vivid scenes in 2 Samuel (18:19-29). A second Ahimaaz was Saul's father-in-law (1 Sam 14:50). Spanish 'Ajimaats' and French 'Ahimaaz' preserve the name unchanged.

Achimaats (15×) A Hebrew proper name (ahimaats, 'my brother is wrath/counsel') applied to at least two individuals: (1) Zadok's son, David's intelligence courier during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 15:27, 36; 17:17-20) who raced to report Absalom's death (2 Sam 18:19-29), attested in Chronicler genealogies (1 Chr 6:8-9); and (2)

Saul's father-in-law (1 Sam 14:50). Possibly also a Solomonic district officer (1 Kgs 4:15). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Achimaats, Ahimaaz, and-Achimaats | es: Ajimaats, Y-Ajimaats, y-Ajimaats | fr: Achimaats, Ahimaaz, [אחימעץ] | de: Achimaats, Ahimaaz, [אחימעץ] 1Sam 14:50; 2Sam 15:27; 2Sam 15:36; 2Sam 17:17; 2Sam 17:20

אֲחִיָּן H0291 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahian, personal name meaning 'fraternal' or 'brotherly' (a Manassite from the family of Shemida) Ahian appears in 1 Chronicles 7:19 as one of the sons of Shemida, from the tribe of Manasseh. The name derives from an Aramaic root suggesting brotherhood or fraternal relationships, fitting the common pattern of Hebrew names emphasizing kinship bonds. He is preserved in Chronicles' genealogical records as part of Manasseh's tribal structure, though no narrative details about his life survive. Such names often expressed family values and social bonds at the time of naming.

(1×) A personal name identifying a Manassite descendant in the line of Shemida. The 1 Chronicles 7:19 genealogy establishes tribal connections and land claims for Manasseh, one of Joseph's sons whose descendants received territory on both sides of the Jordan. The name's meaning ("fraternal") reflects the importance of brotherhood and family solidarity in Israelite culture, values essential for tribal cohesion and survival. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Achyan | es: Ajyán | fr: [אחין] | de: [אחין] 1Chr 7:19

אֲחִינָדָב H0292 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahinadab, personal name meaning 'my brother is noble' (one of Solomon's twelve district governors)
Ahinadab son of Iddo was one of twelve district governors appointed by Solomon to provide food for the royal household. His name appears in 1 Kings 4:14, where he is assigned to Mahanaim, a significant city east of the Jordan in Gilead. Each governor was responsible for provisioning the king's court for one month of the year. The name means "my brother is noble" or "my brother is generous," combining kinship with an honorific element.

(1×) A personal name identifying one of Solomon's administrative officials responsible for a specific geographical district. The 1 Kings 4:14 reference places him over Mahanaim, a historically important site where David had fled during Absalom's rebellion. This administrative system supported Solomon's extensive court and building projects, requiring efficient taxation and food collection. The name's meaning ("brother of nobility") may reflect his family status or character. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ahinadab | es: Ajinadab | fr: Ahinadab | de: Ahinadab 1Kgs 4:14

אֲחִינֹעַם H0293 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (7×)

Ahinoam ('my brother is delight'), name of two women: Saul's wife and David's wife from Jezreel.
A feminine proper name meaning 'my brother is delight' or 'my brother is pleasantness,' borne by two distinct women in the Hebrew Bible. The first is Ahinoam daughter of Ahimaaz, wife of King Saul (1 Sam 14:50). The second is Ahinoam of Jezreel, one of David's earliest wives, who accompanied him through his years as a fugitive (1 Sam 25:43; 27:3; 30:5) and bore his firstborn son Amnon (2 Sam 3:2; 1 Chr 3:1). The name is rendered remarkably consistently across languages – Spanish 'Ajinoam,' French and German 'Achinoam' – reflecting its transparency as a theophoric compound.

Ahinoam (proper name) (7×) The proper name Ahinoam, referring to two biblical women: (1) Ahinoam daughter of Ahimaaz, wife of King Saul (1 Sam 14:50), mentioned only once; and (2) Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, David's wife who shared his fugitive years in Philistine territory and was captured at Ziklag before being rescued (1 Sam 25:43; 27:3; 30:5; 2 Sam 2:2; 3:2). The theophoric name ('my brother is delight') is consistently transliterated across traditions, with minor phonological adaptation in Spanish ('Ajinoam'). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Achinoam, Ahinoam, to-Achino'am | es: Ajinoam, de-Ajinoam, para-Ajinoam | fr: Achinoam, Ahinoam, [לאחינעם] | de: Achinoam, Ahinoam, [לאחינעם] 1Sam 14:50; 1Sam 25:43; 1Sam 27:3; 1Sam 30:5; 2Sam 2:2

אֲחִיסָמָךְ H0294 N-proper-ms (3×)

Ahisamach (personal name: 'my brother has supported')
The name means 'my brother has supported' and identifies the father of Oholiab, who alongside Bezalel was gifted by God to craft the tabernacle furnishings. While Bezalel descended from Judah, Ahisamach's son came from the tribe of Dan, demonstrating that God's Spirit empowered artisans across tribal lines. The name itself reflects the common Israelite practice of embedding theological affirmations into personal names, celebrating family solidarity under God.

(3×) Ahisamach appears only as the father of Oholiab in Exodus 31:6, 35:34, and 38:23, where his son is repeatedly identified as a divinely skilled craftsman. The emphasis on patronymic identification ('son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan') underscores the importance of lineage in Israel's communal memory. Though Ahisamach himself is not described, his name lived on through his son's extraordinary contribution to Israel's worship life. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ahisamach | es: Ajisamak | fr: Ahisamach | de: Ahisamach Exod 31:6; Exod 35:34; Exod 38:23

אֲחִיעֶזֶר H0295 N-proper-ms (6×)

Ahiezer, 'my brother is help'; name of a Danite chief and one of David's warriors.
A theophoric proper name meaning 'my brother is help,' combining אָח ('brother') and עֶזֶר ('help'). The name belongs to two distinct individuals: a chieftain of the tribe of Dan who served during the wilderness period (Num 1:12; 2:25; 7:66, 71; 10:25), and a Benjamite warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:3). The Danite Ahiezer appears repeatedly in the census and tribal offering lists of Numbers, marking him as a figure of some administrative prominence.

(6×) Ahiezer (אֲחִיעֶזֶר, 'my brother is help'), a masculine proper name. The primary bearer is the son of Ammishaddai, chief of the tribe of Dan during the wilderness wanderings, who appears in census rolls, camp arrangements, and the dedication offerings at the tabernacle (Num 1:12; 2:25; 7:66, 71; 10:25). A second Ahiezer is listed among the ambidextrous Benjamite warriors who defected to David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:3). Multilingual renderings are consistent: Spanish Ahiezer, French Ahiezer, reflecting the name's straightforward transliteration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Achiezer, Ahiezer | es: Ahiezer, Ajiezer | fr: Ahiézer, [אחיעזר] | de: Ahiezer, [אחיעזר] Num 1:12; Num 2:25; Num 7:66; Num 7:71; Num 10:25

אֲחִיקָם H0296 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (20×)

Ahikam; 'my brother has risen,' son of Shaphan, court official under Josiah who protected the prophet Jeremiah.
A Hebrew proper name meaning 'my brother has risen,' Ahikam son of Shaphan served as a court official under King Josiah and was part of the delegation sent to the prophetess Huldah after the discovery of the Book of the Law (2 Kgs 22:12, 14; 2 Chr 34:20). His most notable act was shielding Jeremiah from execution after the prophet's controversial temple sermon (Jer 26:24). He is also remembered as the father of Gedaliah, whom Nebuchadnezzar appointed governor over the remnant in Judah after the fall of Jerusalem (2 Kgs 25:22; Jer 39:14; 40:5–41:18).

Ahikam (proper name) (20×) The proper name Ahikam (אֲחִיקָם, 'my brother has risen'), referring to the son of Shaphan who served in Josiah's court and later protected Jeremiah. He appears in the account of Josiah's reform (2 Kgs 22:12, 14; 2 Chr 34:20), in the narrative of Jeremiah's rescue from those who sought his death (Jer 26:24), and extensively as the father of Gedaliah the governor (Jer 39:14; 40:5–43:6). Transliterations vary slightly—English 'Ahikam,' Spanish 'Ajicam/Ahicam,' French 'Achikam'—but all 20 occurrences refer to this single individual. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Achikam, Achiqam, Ahikam | es: Ahicam, Ajicam, Ajiqam | fr: Achikam, Ahikam, [אחיקם] | de: Achikam, Ahikam, [אחיקם] 2Kgs 22:12; 2Kgs 22:14; 2Kgs 25:22; 2Chr 34:20; Jer 26:24

אֲחִירָם H0297 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahiram, personal name meaning 'brother of the lofty' (son of Benjamin, ancestor of the Ahiramite clan)

Ahiram was one of Benjamin's sons, ancestor of the Ahiramite clan listed in Numbers 26:38. The name combines "brother" with an element meaning "lofty" or "exalted," possibly referring to God or expressing high status. He appears to be the same individual called Ehi in Genesis 46:21 and Aharah in 1 Chronicles 8:1, illustrating the textual variations common in biblical genealogies. His descendants formed one of Benjamin's recognized clans in the wilderness census.

(1×) A personal name identifying a son of Benjamin and founder of a clan counted in the Numbers census. The prepositional form ("to Ahiram") in Numbers 26:38 introduces his descendants in the standard census formula. The name's meaning ("brother of the exalted one") may reference divine majesty or family honor, fitting patterns of Israelite names that made theological or social statements about identity and belonging. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: to-Ahiram | es: de-Ahirám | fr: à-Ahiram | de: zu-Ahiram Num 26:38

אֲחִירָמִי H0298 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

The Ahiramite, gentilicic term for descendants of Ahiram (a Benjamite clan)

This gentilicic adjective designates the clan descended from Ahiram, son of Benjamin. It appears in Numbers 26:38 as part of the census that organized Israel's tribes by families. The Ahiramites formed one of Benjamin's constituent clans, counted for military purposes during the wilderness period. Such clan designations were essential for maintaining tribal identity, organizing military units, and eventually distributing land in Canaan. The definite article treats the clan as a collective entity.

(1×) A collective term for the family group descended from Ahiram within Benjamin's tribe. The Numbers 26:38 census uses this gentilicic form to categorize Benjamin's population by ancestral clans. This organizational structure served multiple purposes: military mustering, land allocation, and preserving tribal heritage. The definite article ("the Ahiramite") reflects Hebrew's standard pattern for treating clan groups as unified entities. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Ahiramite | es: los-ahiramitas | fr: le-Ahiramite | de: der-Ahiramite Num 26:38

אֲחִירַע H0299 N-proper-ms (5×)

Ahira; a personal name meaning 'my brother is evil/a friend,' borne by a chief of the tribe of Naphtali.

The name of the leader who represented the tribe of Naphtali during the wilderness census and march. Ahira son of Enan appears in the highly structured Numbers narratives: the census (Num 1:15), the camp arrangement (Num 2:29), the tabernacle dedication offerings (Num 7:78, 83), and the march order (Num 10:27). The name is rendered identically as 'Ahira' across English, Spanish, French, and German, reflecting its transparent transliteration from the Hebrew.

(5×) The proper name Ahira ('my brother is evil' or possibly 'my brother is a friend'), designating the son of Enan who served as tribal chief of Naphtali during the wilderness period. All five occurrences are in Numbers, tied to the organization of Israel's camp and worship: the census roster (Num 1:15), tribal encampment positions (Num 2:29), the dedication offerings on the twelfth day (Num 7:78, 83), and the marching order (Num 10:27). Every translation tradition renders this name identically. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ahira | es: Ahira | fr: Ahira | de: Ahira Num 1:15; Num 2:29; Num 7:78; Num 7:83; Num 10:27

אֲחִישַׁחַר H0300 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahishahar, personal name meaning 'brother of the dawn' (a Benjamite warrior from Jediael's family)

Ahishahar appears in 1 Chronicles 7:10 among the sons of Bilhan, who was descended from Benjamin through Jediael. The name beautifully combines "brother" with "dawn" or "morning," creating a poetic designation possibly celebrating a birth at daybreak or expressing hope for a bright future. The passage identifies him as one of the heads of families, warriors of valor numbered in David's military census. The name has cognates in Assyrian (Ahsheri), suggesting it was used across ancient Near Eastern cultures.

(1×) A personal name identifying a Benjamite military leader in the genealogical and census records. The 1 Chronicles 7:10 context emphasizes military capability, listing him among warriors and heads of fathers' houses. The name's evocative meaning ("brother of dawn") may commemorate birth circumstances or express parental hopes, combining familial affection with imagery of light and new beginnings—a combination characteristic of Hebrew poetic sensibility. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Achishachar | es: y-Ajisajar | fr: [ואחישחר] | de: [ואחישחר] 1Chr 7:10

אֲחִישָׁר H0301 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahishar, personal name meaning 'my brother has sung' (official over Solomon's household)

Ahishar held a significant administrative position in Solomon's government, serving as the official over the royal household (1 Kings 4:6). This role involved managing the king's extensive palace operations, a position of considerable trust and authority. The name means "my brother has sung" or "brother of song," possibly celebrating joyful circumstances at birth or reflecting family musical traditions. His position paralleled that of a modern chief of staff, coordinating the daily operations of Solomon's magnificent court.

(1×) A personal name identifying a high-ranking official in Solomon's administration. The 1 Kings 4:6 reference places him among the key governmental positions, specifically managing the royal household—a role requiring organizational skill, trustworthiness, and diplomatic ability. The name's musical element ("brother of song") suggests either family artistic traditions or joyful circumstances surrounding his birth, reflecting Hebrew naming practices that encoded family stories and values. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Ahishar | es: y-Ajishar | fr: et-Ahishar | de: und-Ahishar 1Kgs 4:6

אֲחִיתֹפֶל H0302 N-proper-ms (20×)

Ahithophel — David's brilliant but treacherous counselor who sided with Absalom's revolt

A proper name meaning 'my brother is folly,' borne by one of David's most trusted advisors. Ahithophel the Gilonite was renowned for counsel so astute it was 'as if one had inquired of the word of God' (2 Sam 16:23). Yet he betrayed David by joining Absalom's rebellion, advising the prince on strategy. When his counsel was overruled in favor of Hushai's, Ahithophel went home and hanged himself (2 Sam 17:23) — one of the most dramatic exits in the Hebrew Bible. His grandson Eliam was Bathsheba's father (2 Sam 23:34), which may partly explain his defection.

Ahithophel (proper name, David's counselor) (20×) The personal name Ahithophel (אֲחִיתֹפֶל), identifying David's counselor from Giloh who defected to Absalom. All 20 occurrences cluster in the Absalom narrative (2 Sam 15–17) and two summary notices (2 Sam 23:34; 1 Chr 27:33–34). English renders 'Ahithophel/Achitophel,' Spanish 'Ahitofel/Ajitofel,' French and German 'Achitophel' — the spelling variations reflect transliteration choices rather than distinct referents. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Achitophel, Ahithophel, And-Achitophel | es: Ahitofel, Ajitofel, Y-Ahitofel | fr: Achitophel, [אחיתפל], [ואחיתפל] | de: Achitophel, Ahitophel, [אחיתפל] 2Sam 15:12; 2Sam 15:31; 2Sam 15:34; 2Sam 16:15

אַחְלָב H0303 N-proper-fs (1×)

Aḥlaḇ, place name (a town in Asher's territory from which Canaanites were not driven out)

Ahlab was a town in the territory assigned to Asher that the Israelites failed to conquer during the settlement period. It appears in Judges 1:31 among the list of Canaanite cities that remained in enemy hands, a failure that would later cause Israel ongoing problems. The site's exact location is unknown, though some scholars suggest it may be equivalent to Mahalab mentioned in Joshua 19:29 or connected to the Assyrian city Maḫalliba. The name may relate to "fat" or "fertile," suggesting productive land.

(1×) A place name identifying a Canaanite town that Asher failed to conquer. The Judges 1:31 context catalogs Israel's incomplete conquest, setting up the recurring problem of Canaanite influence throughout the Judges period. The town's retention by its original inhabitants meant ongoing cultural and religious pressure on Asher's tribe. The uncertainty about its exact location reflects how many ancient sites were lost to memory, though the theological point remains clear: Israel's disobedience had lasting consequences. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Achlav | es: Ajlav | fr: Achlav | de: Achlav Judg 1:31

אַחְלַי H0304 N-proper-ms (2×)

Aḥlai, a name borne by both a woman and a man in Chronicles

A personal name with an uncertain etymology, possibly related to an interjection meaning 'O would that!' The name appears twice in 1 Chronicles, first for a daughter of Sheshan (1 Chronicles 2:31) and then for the father of one of David's warriors (1 Chronicles 11:41). BDB notes the possibility that in the first instance the name may actually be masculine despite the context suggesting otherwise, creating some genealogical ambiguity.

(2×) Multilingual glosses show transliteration patterns: Spanish renders 'Ajlai' or 'Ajlay,' while French and German bracket the Hebrew form. The domain assignment to 'Discourse Markers' reflects BDB's etymological speculation connecting the name to an exclamatory particle, though as a proper noun it functions within genealogical rather than grammatical discourse. The two occurrences represent different individuals in distinct family lines. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: Achlai | es: Ajlai, Ajlay | fr: [אחלי] | de: [אחלי] 1Chr 2:31; 1Chr 11:41

אַחֲלַי H0305 Interjection (2×)

if only, oh that; expressing strong wish or desire

An interjection expressing a strong wish or desire, comparable to English 'if only' or 'would that.' The term appears in 2 Kings 5:3, where the Israelite servant girl wishes her master Naaman could visit Elisha for healing, and in Psalm 119:5, where the psalmist yearns for steadfast obedience to God's statutes. BDB derives it from a combination of the interjection 'ah' and an Aramaic particle, noting that later punctuators may have treated it as a noun in construct meaning 'my wish is that.'

(2×) Cross-linguistic evidence demonstrates recognition of the optative force: English uses 'if only' or 'oh that,' Spanish 'Ojalá' (the classic optative borrowed from Arabic) or '¡Oh,' French 'oh si' or 'si seulement,' and German 'oh der' or 'wenn nur.' The Septuagint's ὄφελον confirms the ancient understanding of this as an optative particle. Both biblical contexts involve unfulfilled longing—for healing in Kings, for spiritual consistency in Psalms. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: if-only, oh-that | es: Ojalá, ¡Oh | fr: oh-si, si-seulement | de: oh-der, wenn-nur 2Kgs 5:3; Ps 119:5

אַחְלָמָה H0306 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

and amethyst; a purple precious stone on the high priest's ephod

A conjunction plus noun denoting amethyst, one of the precious stones mounted on the high priestly ephod. Both occurrences appear in parallel passages (Exodus 28:19 and 39:12) listing the twelve stones representing Israel's tribes. The identification as amethyst follows the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Josephus, though BDB notes alternative proposals including green malachite. The Hebrew etymology remains uncertain, with suggestions ranging from Aramaic roots meaning 'strong, solid' to connections with a type of plant.

(2×) Multilingual consistency is remarkable: English, Spanish, French, and German all render 'and amethyst' (y-amatista, et-améthyste, und-Amethyst), reflecting broad acceptance of the traditional identification via Greek and Latin versions. The parallel occurrences in Exodus 28 and 39 represent the initial command for the ephod's construction and its subsequent execution—standard Priestly source pattern showing prescription and fulfillment. GEMSTONES AND TARSHISH

en: and-amethyst | es: y-amatista | fr: et-améthyste | de: und-Amethyst Exod 28:19; Exod 39:12

אחר H0307 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (1×)

Ecbatana/Achmetha, place name (the Median capital where Cyrus's decree was found; modern Hamadan)

Achmetha (Ecbatana in Greek) was the summer capital of the Medo-Persian Empire, located in the mountains of Media. In Ezra 6:2, this is where Darius's officials found the original decree of Cyrus authorizing the rebuilding of Jerusalem's temple. The cooler mountain climate made it an ideal summer residence for Persian kings. The city survives today as Hamadan in Iran. This archival discovery provided legal authorization for the temple work, overcoming opposition from local governors who had questioned the Jews' authority.

(1×) A place name identifying the Median capital city where Persian royal archives were stored. The prepositional form ("in Achmetha") in Ezra 6:2 specifies the location where Cyrus's decree was discovered, providing crucial documentary evidence for Jewish claims about royal authorization. This discovery transformed the political situation, forcing Persian officials to support rather than oppose the temple reconstruction. The preservation of the decree in this distant archive demonstrates Persian administrative thoroughness. PERSONAL NAMES

en: in-Achmetha | es: en-Aḥmetá | fr: [באחמתא] | de: [באחמתא] Ezra 6:2

אֲחַסְבַּי H0308 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ahasbai, personal name (father of Eliphelet, one of David's mighty men)

Ahasbai was the father of Eliphelet, one of David's elite warriors known as "the thirty" or "the mighty men." He appears in 2 Samuel 23:34, though the text is notoriously difficult here and the parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:35 gives different names (Ur son of Hepher). The name's meaning is uncertain, and some scholars suggest textual corruption in this section of 2 Samuel. Despite the textual challenges, the reference preserves the family identity of one of David's honored warriors.

(1×) A personal name identifying the father of one of David's elite fighting force. The 2 Samuel 23:34 context honors these warriors who risked their lives in David's service, though this particular verse presents textual difficulties. The significant variation from the Chronicles parallel suggests either textual corruption or that different sources preserved different name traditions. Regardless, the reference establishes family identity for one of the honored thirty. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ahasbai | es: Ajasvay | fr: Ahasbai | de: Ahasbai 2Sam 23:34

אָחַר H0309 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (18×)

To delay, tarry, or linger; in Piel, to be slow in acting or to detain someone; related to Arabic 'aḫḫara (to postpone).

The verb 'aḥar appears only once in the Qal (Gen 32:5, 'I have tarried until now') but seventeen times in the Piel intensive stem, where it expresses deliberate delay or lingering. Judges 5:28 pairs it with bōshēsh ('to be late') as Sisera's mother wonders why his chariot tarries. The prophets use it for divine timing: 'my salvation will not delay' (Isa 46:13; Hab 2:3). Proverbs 23:30 warns against those who 'linger over wine.' One occurrence stands apart — Genesis 24:56, where Laban's family is asked not to 'detain' Abraham's servant, a transitive use. Spanish distinguishes 'tardar/demorar' (intransitive) from 'detener' (transitive), mirroring the semantic split.

1. to delay, tarry, linger (17×) To delay, tarry, linger, or be slow in coming or acting (intransitive Piel). This covers seventeen occurrences and ranges from Jacob's tarrying with Laban (Gen 32:4) to the prophetic assurance that God's salvation will not delay (Isa 46:13; Hab 2:3; Dan 9:19). The participial form in Proverbs 23:30 describes those who 'linger long' over wine. Spanish 'tardar' and 'demorar,' French and German bracket-glosses, all consistently render the idea of being slow or remaining behind expected timing. DELAY AND TARRYING

en: (and-delayed), [and-delayed], and-I-delayed | es: (y-tardó), Para-los-que-se-demoran, [y-tardó] | fr: (and-delayed), [and-delayed], [מאחר] | de: [and-delayed], [יאחר], [למאחרים] Gen 32:4; Gen 34:19; Exod 22:29; Deut 7:10; Deut 23:21

2. to detain, hold back (1×) To detain or hold back another person (transitive Piel). The single occurrence in Genesis 24:56, where Abraham's servant urges Laban's household 'do not delay me,' shifts the semantic frame: the subject causes someone else's delay rather than experiencing it. Spanish 'detener' and German 'aufhalten' both mark the causative-transitive shift, distinguishing this from the intransitive 'tarry' sense. FORBID HINDER PREVENT

en: delay | es: me-detengáis | fr: delay | de: haltet-auf Gen 24:56

אַחַר H0310a Conj-w / Prep / 3ms (717×)

After, behind — spatial position following or pursuing; temporal succession, afterward.

A versatile preposition and adverb whose two senses divide neatly along spatial and temporal lines. In its spatial sense, achar places someone behind or in pursuit of another — 'he went achar his brothers' (Gen 37:17). In its temporal sense, it marks sequence: 'after these things' (Gen 15:1), 'afterward' (Gen 10:18). Spanish distinguishes the two cleanly: detrás de (behind/spatial) versus después de (after/temporal), and German similarly differentiates hinter from nach, confirming the cross-linguistic reality of this semantic split.

1. behind, after (spatial/pursuit) (459×) Spatial position behind or following in pursuit, including directional 'from behind' with the min-preposition. Translations consistently use spatial terms: detrás de (Spa.), hinter (Ger.), après in spatial contexts (Fra.). Frequent with halak ('to walk/go after') to describe following a leader, army, or deity (Gen 37:17; 1 Kgs 18:21). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: after | es: detrás-de, tras | fr: après | de: hinter, hinter-, nach Gen 24:61; Gen 32:19; Gen 35:5; Gen 37:17; Gen 44:4

2. after (temporal) (258×) Temporal succession — afterward, subsequently, following an event in time. The priestly legislation in Leviticus and Numbers uses we-achar repeatedly to mark ritual sequences (Lev 14:8; 15:28). Spanish después de and German nach confirm this as a distinct temporal reading, separate from spatial pursuit. AFTER TEMPORAL

en: after, after- | es: después-de, después-de- | fr: après, après- | de: nach, nach- Gen 5:4; Gen 5:7; Gen 5:10; Gen 5:13; Gen 5:16

אַחֲרִי H0310b N-ms (1×)

Turning backward, stubborn (rare adjective describing one who turns back or is obstinate)

This rare adjective appears only in Proverbs 28:23, describing a person who turns backward or is obstinate. The text presents difficulties, as this is an unusual form and usage. Some scholars suggest emending it or understanding it adverbially as "afterward." The context contrasts someone who rebukes another with one who flatters, suggesting the term describes a negative character trait—perhaps stubbornness, turning away from correction, or regressing rather than progressing in wisdom.

(1×) An adjective describing someone characterized by turning backward or away, possibly indicating stubbornness or regressive tendencies. The Proverbs 28:23 context values rebuke over flattery, suggesting this term describes someone who ultimately rejects correction or turns back from wisdom. The multilingual glosses show uncertainty ("afterward," "después," "après"), reflecting the textual difficulty, though the negative connotation in context seems clear: this person moves backward rather than forward in understanding. LAST AND FINAL en: afterward | es: después | fr: après | de: [אחרי] Prov 28:23

אַחֲרֵי H0311 Prep / 3mp (3×)

after them, afterward (Aramaic temporal preposition)

An Aramaic temporal expression meaning 'after' or 'afterward,' appearing exclusively in Daniel's Aramaic sections. The phrase typically points forward to future events, particularly in prophetic contexts. Daniel uses this expression when describing Nebuchadnezzar's vision of what would come 'after these things' and when predicting a future king who would arise 'after them.' It marks the sequential unfolding of divine sovereignty through history.

(3×) The expression appears in Daniel's interpretation of royal visions concerning future kingdoms and rulers. In Daniel 2:29 and 2:45, it introduces revelations about 'what will be after this'—the succession of empires that God has predetermined. Daniel 7:24 uses it to describe a king who will arise 'after them,' following the previous rulers in the sequence of prophetic history. The Aramaic form reflects the linguistic setting of Daniel's service in the Babylonian and Persian courts. AFTER TEMPORAL

en: after, after-them | es: después-de, después-de-ellos | fr: [אחריהון], après | de: [אחריהון], nach-ihm Dan 2:29; Dan 2:45; Dan 7:24

אַחֵר H0312 Conj-w (166×)

Another, other, different; occasionally 'next' or 'following' in temporal or sequential contexts.

A versatile adjective meaning 'another' or 'other,' covering both additional and different referents. It appears across the entire Hebrew Bible — from 'another seed' in Gen 4:25 to 'other gods' in Deuteronomy's warnings. Spanish otra/otros, French autre, and German andere/anderer all confirm its core meaning of simple alterity. A smaller group of occurrences carries a temporal edge: 'the next year' or 'the following generation,' where the sense shifts from mere difference to sequential ordering, as in Gen 17:21 and Joel 1:3.

1. another, other, different (161×) Another, other, or different — the primary adjectival sense covering an additional or distinct person, thing, or group. This is the workhorse usage across all grammatical forms (masculine, feminine, singular, plural). Translations converge tightly: spa otra/otros, fra autre, deu andere. Gen 29:27 illustrates 'another seven years'; Deut 5:7 warns against 'other gods' (אֱלֹהִים אֲחֵרִים). The domain is discourse-referential: pointing away from the current referent to a distinct one. ANOTHER AND OTHER

en: other | es: otra, otras, otros | fr: autre | de: andere, anderer, anderes Gen 8:10; Gen 8:12; Gen 29:27; Gen 29:30; Gen 41:3

2. next, following (5×) Next or following in temporal or sequential order — a narrower usage where אַחֵר indicates not just difference but succession. In Gen 17:21 God promises Isaac 'at this set time in the next year'; Joel 1:3 commands passing the story to 'the following generation.' Some translations shift to el-otro or le-next (fra), marking the sequential flavor. Ps 109:8 and 109:13 use it for succession in office and lineage, reinforcing the temporal-sequential dimension. ANOTHER AND OTHER

en: another, the-next | es: el-otro, otra, otro | fr: après, autre, le-next | de: another, dem-anderen, der-next Gen 17:21; 2Kgs 6:29; Ps 109:8; Ps 109:13; Joel 1:3

אַחֵר H0313 N-proper-ms (1×)

Aher, personal name meaning 'another' (possibly symbolic name avoiding mention of Dan in Chronicles)

This unusual name appears in 1 Chronicles 7:12, where it seems to reference a Danite individual or clan. Scholars have long puzzled over this enigmatic name, with some suggesting it's a deliberate substitution meaning "another" to avoid explicitly naming Dan—perhaps because of Dan's association with idolatry in Judges 17-18. Others identify it with Ahiram or connect it to Shaharaim mentioned in chapter 8. The ambiguity may be intentional, reflecting the Chronicler's complex relationship with Dan's problematic history.

(1×) A personal or clan name in Benjamin's (or possibly Dan's) genealogy, appearing in 1 Chronicles 7:12. The name literally means "another," which is highly unusual for a personal name and has sparked extensive scholarly discussion. If it is indeed a substitution for Dan (as some suggest), it would reflect a theological judgment about that tribe's unfaithfulness. The context places it among family heads, though the reference remains one of Chronicles' more cryptic genealogical entries. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Acher | es: Ajer | fr: après | de: nach 1Chr 7:12

אַחֲרוֹן H0314 Adj-mp (51×)

last, latter, final; behind in place or time; western; future, yet to come

An adjective built from the root for 'after' or 'behind,' stretching across spatial, temporal, and eschatological registers. Because the ancient Semites oriented themselves facing east, 'behind' naturally meant 'west,' so this word designates both the Mediterranean Sea (Deut 11:24) and the final event in a sequence. It describes the hindmost rank in Jacob's caravan (Gen 33:2), the 'latter days' of prophetic expectation (Deut 29:22), and even God himself as 'the Last' (Job 19:25). Context alone determines whether 'last' means chronologically final, positionally rear, directionally western, or generationally future.

1. last, final in sequence (21×) Last or final in an ordered sequence, whether ordinal or temporal. Spanish el último and French dernier consistently render this endpoint sense. Genesis 33:2 places Rachel last in the procession, 2 Samuel 23:1 records David's 'last words,' and Isaiah 44:6 declares the LORD 'the last' — the ultimate terminus of all sequence. LAST AND FINAL en: am-last, and-the-last, last | es: el-último, las-últimas, los-últimos | fr: dernier, et-dernier, et-les-derniers | de: [אחרון], [אחרנים], [האחרון] Gen 33:2; 2Sam 19:11; 2Sam 19:12; 2Sam 23:1

2. at last, finally (adverbial) (9×) Adverbial usage with prepositions (beth, lamed) to express 'at last,' 'finally,' or 'afterward.' German afterward and Spanish al final capture the temporal adverb function. Numbers 2:31 marks Dan's camp as marching 'last,' Deuteronomy 13:9 prescribes the witness's hand falling 'at last,' and 2 Samuel 2:26 asks whether the sword shall devour 'to the end.' LAST AND FINAL en: afterward, and-as-the-last, at-last | es: a-la-última, al-final, al-último | fr: dans-le-fin, dernier, ensuite | de: [לאחרנה], afterward, bei-der-rear Num 2:31; Deut 13:9; Deut 17:7; 1Sam 29:2; 2Sam 2:26

3. future, yet to come (7×) Future, subsequent, or yet to come — projecting the 'after' sense forward in time. Spanish la venidera and French le latter point to expectation. Deuteronomy 29:22 speaks of a 'later generation' that will witness judgment, Psalm 78:4–6 passes testimony to 'a generation to come,' and Psalm 102:18 writes for 'a people yet to be created.' LAST AND FINAL en: coming-after, day, following | es: la-venidera, posterior, postrero | fr: dernier, le-latter | de: [אחרון], coming-nach, der-latter Deut 29:22; Ps 48:13; Ps 78:4; Ps 78:6; Ps 102:18

4. latter, later condition (6×) The latter state or condition contrasted with a former one, as in 'the latter end' or 'latter rain.' French le dernier and Spanish la postrera anchor this contrastive sense. Ruth 3:10 praises Ruth's 'latter kindness' surpassing the former, Deuteronomy 24:3 addresses a 'latter husband,' and Isaiah 9:1 contrasts a former time of darkness with a latter glory. LAST AND FINAL en: and-the-latter, the-latter | es: el-último, la-postrera, la-última | fr: et-dernier, le-dernier, le-latter | de: [האחרון], [והאחרון], der-latter Exod 4:8; Deut 24:3; Ruth 3:10; Isa 9:1

5. (4×) Western — the directional sense arising from Semitic east-facing orientation where 'behind' equals 'west.' Spanish Occidental and English the-western confirm the geographic reading. Deuteronomy 11:24 names 'the western sea' (Mediterranean), Deuteronomy 34:2 surveys the land to the western sea, and Zechariah 14:8 prophesies living waters flowing to 'the western sea.' WEST DIRECTION

en: the-western | es: Occidental, el-occidental | fr: le-western, postérieur | de: [האחרון], der-western Deut 11:24; Deut 34:2; Joel 2:20; Zech 14:8

6. later ones, descendants (3×) Substantival use for later people, descendants, or subsequent generations who follow. Spanish los de después and French dernier support the personal reference. Job 18:20 describes 'those who come after' being appalled, Ecclesiastes 1:11 warns there will be no remembrance among 'those who come later,' and Ecclesiastes 4:16 laments that 'the later ones' find no satisfaction in a king. LAST AND FINAL en: of-the-latter-ones, the-later-ones, those-after | es: de-los-últimos, los-de-después, los-últimos | fr: dernier, le-dernier | de: [אחרנים], [האחרונים], [לאחרנים] Job 18:20; Eccl 1:11; Eccl 4:16

7. (1×) A theologically charged occurrence in Job 19:25 where Job declares his Redeemer is 'the Last' — the one who endures and stands at the end. Spanish y al final and French et dernier preserve the finality. This single attestation carries overtones of the divine epithet found in Isaiah 44:6 and 48:12, naming God as the ultimate, enduring reality beyond all sequence. LAST AND FINAL en: and-the-Last | es: y-al-final | fr: et-dernier | de: [ואחרון] Job 19:25

אַחְרַח H0315 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Aharah, personal name (son of Benjamin, possibly same as Ahiram or Ehi in other genealogies)

Aharah appears in 1 Chronicles 8:1 as the third son of Benjamin. The name presents typical genealogical challenges, as parallel lists give different names—Genesis 46:21 has Ehi, and Numbers 26:38 has Ahiram. These may represent the same individual known by different names, or they may reflect textual variations developed over centuries of transmission. The root of the name may relate to "after" or "following," though the exact meaning remains uncertain.

(1×) A personal name identifying one of Benjamin's sons in the 1 Chronicles genealogy. The variations across different biblical genealogies (Aharah/Ahiram/Ehi) illustrate the textual complexities inherent in preserving ancient family records. Chronicles often presents unique or variant forms of names found in earlier sources, possibly reflecting different manuscript traditions or regional pronunciations. Despite the uncertainty, the name functions to establish Benjamite family structure and tribal identity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Achrach | es: y-Ajraj | fr: [ואחרח] | de: [ואחרח] 1Chr 8:1

אַחַרְחֵל H0316 N-proper-ms (1×)

Aharhel, personal name (descendant of Judah; etymology and meaning uncertain)

Aharhel appears in 1 Chronicles 4:8 as a descendant of Judah, though the precise genealogical connection is unclear. The name's derivation and meaning are uncertain, with no clear etymology from known Hebrew roots. Like many names in Chronicles' extensive genealogies, this individual is preserved in the sacred record without accompanying narrative, maintaining his place in Judah's family heritage even though the specific meaning of his name has been lost to time.

(1×) A personal name identifying a Judahite in the tribal genealogies of 1 Chronicles. The 1 Chronicles 4:8 context traces various branches of Judah's descendants, preserving family identities important for post-exilic claims to land and tribal membership. Though we cannot determine the name's original meaning or this individual's specific accomplishments, his inclusion in Scripture maintains his identity within God's covenant people and Judah's ongoing family story. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Acharche'el | es: Ajarjel | fr: [אחרחל] | de: [אחרחל] 1Chr 4:8

אֲחַשְׁדַּרְפְּנִין H0317 Conj-w / Adj-fs (6×)

Another, other; Aramaic adjective used in Daniel's visions to distinguish successive kingdoms and beasts.

An Aramaic adjective meaning 'another' or 'other,' used in the book of Daniel to mark the succession of world empires in apocalyptic vision. Each time a new beast or kingdom emerges in the prophetic sequence, this word signals the transition. The Spanish translations capture the flexibility well: otro for masculine, otra for feminine. In Dan 2:39 it introduces the kingdoms following Nebuchadnezzar's, and in Dan 7:5-8 it distinguishes each beast from the one before it.

another / other (Aramaic adjective) (6×) Another or other (Aramaic אָחֳרִי), used attributively and predicatively in Daniel to distinguish successive entities in prophetic visions. In the interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's statue, it introduces the inferior kingdoms that follow Babylon (Dan 2:39, twice). In the vision of the four beasts, it marks each new creature rising from the sea: the bear-like beast (Dan 7:5), the leopard-like beast (Dan 7:6), and the little horn distinct from the ten (Dan 7:8). French renders it as après ('after'), highlighting the sequential force of the word. ANOTHER AND OTHER en: and-other, another | es: otra, otro, y-el-otro | fr: après, et-après | de: nach-ihm, und-nach-ihm Dan 2:39; Dan 7:5; Dan 7:6; Dan 7:8

אֲחֳרִית H0318 Adj-ms (1×)

Last, latter (Aramaic adjective describing what comes at the end or in the future)

This Aramaic adjective appears in Daniel describing what is last or latter in sequence. In Daniel 4:8, it modifies Daniel's arrival ("at last Daniel came in"), emphasizing his position as the final interpreter summoned. The word derives from the Hebrew concept of "end" or "future" (aḥarit), commonly used in biblical prophecy to describe end times or final outcomes. In Aramaic portions of Daniel, it carries similar temporal significance, marking something as coming after all others or at the conclusion.

(1×) An adjective marking temporal sequence, specifically what comes last or at the end. In Daniel 4:8, it emphasizes that Daniel arrived after all the other wise men had failed to interpret Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The term reflects the common biblical pattern of reserving the decisive figure or action for last—here, Daniel alone possessed the spirit of the holy gods and could reveal the dream's meaning. The multilingual glosses consistently recognize this temporal sequencing. LAST AND FINAL en: last | es: al-último | fr: finalement | de: [אחרין] Dan 4:8

אַחֲרִית H0319 N-fsc / 1cp (61×)

The latter part or end; outcome, fate; future hope; posterity or remnant; the farthest extremity of a place

A feminine noun meaning 'after-part' or 'end,' built from the root ʾaḥar 'after, behind.' It moves fluidly between temporal, moral, and spatial registers. Temporally, it marks the latter days or the close of an era — a key term in prophetic eschatology (Gen 49:1; Dan 10:14). Morally, it denotes the final outcome or fate that awaits a person or nation, where the 'end of the wicked' stands in sharp contrast to the 'future and hope' promised to the faithful (Jer 29:11; Prov 23:18). In a handful of passages it extends to the people who come after — posterity and remnant — and in one memorable verse (Ps 139:9) it reaches to the spatial 'uttermost part' of the sea.

1. outcome, fate, end result (26×) The outcome, fate, or final result of a person, nation, or course of action. This is the most frequent sense, carrying strong moral and judicial overtones: 'consider their latter end' (Deut 32:29), 'the end of the wicked' (Ps 73:17), or a fool's words whose 'end is madness' (Eccl 10:13). Spanish uses both 'fin' and 'postrería,' while French 'avenir' interestingly tilts toward 'what comes after' rather than mere cessation. The emphasis is on consequence — what everything amounts to in the end. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-his-end, and-in-end-his, and-its-end | es: Pero-su-fin, el-fin, en-tu-fin | fr: avenir, dans-ton-fin, dans-ton-fin-toi | de: Ende, Zukunft, ihr-Ende Num 23:10; Num 24:20; Deut 8:16; Deut 32:20; Deut 32:29

2. latter period, end of days (21×) The latter period or final phase of a timeframe, especially in eschatological and prophetic contexts: 'in the latter days' (beʾaḥarît hayyāmîm, Gen 49:1; Deut 4:30; Dan 10:14). This temporal sense shades into apocalyptic expectation — the decisive period when God's purposes will be revealed. German 'Ende' and 'Zukunft' both appear in the glosses, reflecting the dual character of closure and futurity. Deut 11:12 uses it simply for the year's end, showing the range from mundane to cosmic. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: In-latter-of, and-in-end-of, end-of | es: Y-en-postrería-de, al-final-de, el-fin-de | fr: avenir, dans-avenir, dans-fin-de | de: Ende, Ende-von, Zukunft Gen 49:1; Num 24:14; Deut 4:30; Deut 11:12; Deut 31:29

3. future, hope (7×) A future or hopeful expectation, especially the assured good outcome God promises. Jer 29:11 — 'plans for a future (ʾaḥarît) and a hope (tiqwâ)' — is the paradigmatic verse, where the word is parallel to 'hope' itself. Proverbs pairs it similarly: 'there is a future, and your hope will not be cut off' (Prov 23:18; 24:14). French consistently renders this sense as 'avenir' (future), distinguishing it from the fate-judgment overtone of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-future, for-your-future, future | es: fin, futuro, hay-porvenir | fr: avenir, fin | de: Ende, Zukunft, ein-future Ps 37:37; Ps 37:38; Prov 23:18; Prov 24:14; Prov 24:20

4. remnant, survivors (3×) The remnant or survivors left after catastrophe or judgment. In Ezek 23:25 the 'remainder' of a people face further punishment, and Amos 9:1 speaks of the last survivors. This concrete, collective sense — the people who are 'left over at the end' — is a natural extension from temporal ending to the residue that remains. Spanish 'resto' and 'posteridad' capture this collective-survivor meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-their-remnant, and-your-remnant | es: y-a-su-posteridad, y-resto-de-ti | fr: et-avenir | de: und-Ende Ezek 23:25; Amos 9:1

5. posterity, descendants (3×) Posterity or descendants — the people who come after someone, their future lineage. Ps 109:13 prays that an enemy's posterity be cut off; Dan 11:4 says a kingdom will not pass to 'his posterity.' The sense moves from temporal end-point to the human beings who occupy that future. The overlap with sense 4 (remnant) is close, but here the emphasis falls on genealogical continuation rather than survival after disaster. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-your-posterity, for-his-posterity, his-posterity | es: para-descendencia-suya, su-posteridad, y-a-su-posteridad | fr: avenir, et-avenir | de: Ende, sein-posterity, und-Ende Ps 109:13; Dan 11:4; Amos 4:2

6. (1×) The spatial extremity or farthest end of a place. Ps 139:9 — 'if I take the wings of the dawn and settle at the uttermost part (ʾaḥarît) of the sea' — is the sole clear instance. Spanish 'confines' (boundaries, far reaches) and English 'end of' preserve this rare spatial usage, where the temporal root metaphor ('what comes after') extends to physical distance: the place that lies beyond everything else. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-end-of | es: en-confines-de | fr: dans-avenir | de: in-end-of Ps 139:9

אָחֳרָן H0320 Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)

In the latter time, in the end of days (Aramaic prepositional phrase referring to future or end times)

This Aramaic phrase appears in Daniel 2:28, where Daniel explains to Nebuchadnezzar that God reveals "what will be in the latter days." The expression translates the Hebrew concept of "end of days" (aḥarit ha-yamim) into Aramaic, maintaining the prophetic sense of future events, particularly those at the culmination of history. It introduces Nebuchadnezzar's dream about successive kingdoms and God's ultimate kingdom. The phrase became technical terminology in Jewish and Christian eschatology for the final period before God's decisive intervention.

(1×) A temporal phrase indicating the distant future or end times, specifically "in the latter days" or "at the end of days." In Daniel 2:28, this phrase frames Nebuchadnezzar's dream as revealing God's plan for history's culmination. The construct relationship ("in the end of the days") emphasizes futurity and finality—not merely what comes next, but what comes at history's consummation when God establishes his eternal kingdom over all earthly powers. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-latter-of | es: en-el-fin-de | fr: fin | de: [באחרית] Dan 2:28

אֲחַשְׁדַּרְפְּנִין H0321 Adj-ms (5×)

Another, other; an Aramaic adjective used in Daniel for something distinct or subsequent.

An Aramaic adjective meaning 'another' or 'other,' appearing in the visionary and prophetic sections of Daniel. It describes kingdoms, gods, and powers that are categorically distinct from what preceded them. The multilingual evidence is instructive: English renders 'another,' Spanish 'otro,' and French 'autre,' all capturing the sense of categorical difference. In Daniel 7:24 it describes the final horn as 'another' arising after the ten — a usage laden with eschatological weight.

(5×) Another, other — marking something categorically distinct from what precedes. In Dan 2:11 no 'other' can reveal the king's dream; in Dan 2:44 a kingdom that will never pass to 'another' people; in Dan 3:29 no 'other' god can deliver like this; in Dan 5:17 give your rewards to 'another'; in Dan 7:24 'another' king shall arise after the ten. Spanish 'otro' and French 'autre' consistently reflect this straightforward pronominal-adjective function. The Aramaic form is cognate to Hebrew אַחֵר. ANOTHER AND OTHER

en: and-another, and-other, another | es: a-otro, otro, y-otro | fr: autre, et-autre | de: [אחרן], [ואחרן], [לאחרן] Dan 2:11; Dan 2:44; Dan 3:29; Dan 5:17; Dan 7:24

אֲחֹרַנִּית H0322 Adv (7×)

Adverb meaning backward, in reverse direction; used of physical retreat or reversal of motion.

An adverb formed with the directional suffix -it, meaning 'backward' or 'in a reverse direction.' Its seven occurrences span memorable narrative moments: Shem and Japheth walking backward to cover Noah's nakedness (Gen 9:23), Eli falling backward off his seat at the news of the ark's capture (1 Sam 4:18), and the shadow retreating backward on Hezekiah's sundial as a divine sign (2 Kgs 20:10-11; Isa 38:8). Spanish 'hacia-atras' and English 'backward/backwards' both capture the core spatial reversal this word expresses.

backward (7×) Backward, in a reverse or retreating direction, describing physical movement opposite to the normal or forward orientation. Used of Shem and Japheth covering their father while walking backward (Gen 9:23), of Eli's fatal backward fall from his chair (1 Sam 4:18), of Elijah's prayer that God would turn hearts back (1 Kgs 18:37), and dramatically of the sun's shadow moving backward ten steps as a sign for Hezekiah (2 Kgs 20:10-11; Isa 38:8). The word is a poetic synonym of ahor but restricted to prose narrative contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: backward, backwards, ten | es: atrás, hacia-atrás | fr: [אחרנית], backward, backwards | de: [אחרנית], backward, backwards Gen 9:23; 1Sam 4:18; 1Kgs 18:37; 2Kgs 20:10

אֲחַשְׁדַּרְפְּנִים H0323 Conj-w (4×)

Satraps; Persian provincial governors who administered the empire's territories

A loanword from Old Persian (khshatrapavan, 'protectors of the realm'), designating the highest-ranking provincial governors in the Achaemenid Empire. The term appears exclusively in the late biblical books of Ezra and Esther, reflecting the Persian administrative world in which post-exilic Jews lived. In Esther, the satraps are among the officials who receive and implement royal decrees — including both Haman's genocidal edict (Esth 3:12) and Mordecai's counter-decree (Esth 8:9; 9:3). Ezra 8:36 shows returned exiles presenting royal orders to these same officials.

(4×) Satraps — Persian imperial governors over provinces. English renders 'the-satraps' and 'satraps-of,' Spanish 'los-sátrapas' and 'sátrapas-de,' clearly treating it as a recognized political title. French and German preserve the Hebrew form directly, suggesting the term remained somewhat exotic even in translation. All four passages (Ezra 8:36; Esth 3:12; 8:9; 9:3) depict satraps as powerful administrators who enforced royal decrees across the Persian Empire's vast provincial system, underscoring the political reality the Jewish diaspora navigated. MILITARY OFFICERS

en: and-the-satraps, satraps-of-, the-satraps | es: a-los-sátrapas-de, los-sátrapas, sátrapas-de | fr: [אחשדרפני], [האחשדרפנים], [והאחשדרפנים] | de: [אחשדרפני], [האחשדרפנים], [והאחשדרפנים] Ezra 8:36; Esth 3:12; Esth 8:9; Esth 9:3

אֲחַת H0324 Prep-l / N-mpd (9×)

Satrap; a Persian provincial governor, used in the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra.

An Aramaic loanword from Old Persian (xšaθrapāvan, 'protector of the realm') designating the highest-ranking provincial governors in the Persian Empire. In Daniel 3:2-3, satraps head the list of officials summoned to the dedication of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image, and in Daniel 6:1-2, Darius appoints 120 satraps under three overseers. The term signals the administrative machinery of the empire that forms the backdrop to Daniel's narrative. All major translations borrow or transliterate the word: Spanish 'sátrapas,' French 'satrape,' German 'Satrap.'

the satraps (9×) A high-ranking Persian provincial governor (satrap), appearing in the Aramaic portions of Daniel where it describes the imperial administrative hierarchy. In Dan 3:2-3, satraps are summoned alongside prefects and governors to the plain of Dura; in Dan 3:27, they witness the miraculous survival of the three men in the furnace; in Dan 6:1-2, they are organized under overseers including Daniel himself. The consistent transliteration across languages (spa: sátrapas, deu: Satrap) reflects the term's status as a recognized political title rather than a common noun. MILITARY OFFICERS

en: and-satraps, and-the-satraps, satraps | es: a-los-sátrapas, los-sátrapas, sátrapas | fr: et-satrape, satrape | de: Satrap, und-Satrap Dan 3:2; Dan 3:3; Dan 3:27; Dan 6:1; Dan 6:2

אֲחַשְׁוֵרוֹשׁ H0325 N-proper-ms (32×)

Ahasuerus (Xerxes) — the Persian king of the book of Esther, husband of Vashti then Esther Achashverosh is the Hebrew rendering of Old Persian Khshayarsha (Xerxes), the name of the Persian emperor who reigns throughout the book of Esther. Twenty-nine of its 32 occurrences cluster in Esther, where Achashverosh presides over a vast empire stretching from India to Cush (Est 1:1), banishes Queen Vashti for her refusal to appear at his banquet (Est 1:12-19), and elevates Esther to the throne (Est 2:17). He is portrayed as impulsive, easily manipulated by advisors — first by Haman's genocidal decree, then by Esther and Mordecai's reversal. Outside Esther, the name appears in Ezra 4:6, where opponents of the rebuilding write an accusation in his reign, and in Daniel 9:1, where a figure by this name is identified as the father of Darius the Mede. Greek renders it Ahasoueros; modern translations keep the name recognizable: Spanish Asuero, French Assuerus, German Ahasveros.

Achashverosh (32×) The proper name of the Persian king (identified with Xerxes I, r. 486-465 BC) who dominates the narrative of Esther. He dismisses Vashti (Est 1:12-19), marries Esther (Est 2:17), unwittingly authorizes Haman's genocide (Est 3:10-12), and ultimately reverses the decree (Est 8:7-12). Also mentioned as the king during whose reign adversaries accused Judah (Ezra 4:6) and as the father of Darius the Mede (Dan 9:1). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Achashverosh, Ahasuerus | es: Asuero | fr: Assuérus | de: Ahasveros Ezra 4:6; Esth 1:1; Esth 1:2; Esth 1:9

אֲחַשְׁתָּרִי H0326 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

The Ahashtarite, gentilicic adjective possibly meaning 'belonging to the realm/royal' (descendant of Judah)

This gentilicic form appears in 1 Chronicles 4:6, identifying someone associated with Ahashtar or bearing characteristics suggested by that root. The form resembles a Persian word meaning "belonging to the realm" or "royal," which would be unusual for a Judahite genealogy. Some scholars suggest it's a place name or family designation. The definite article treats it as a recognized identifier, though the exact meaning remains uncertain. It appears among the sons of Naarah in Ashhur's family.

(1×) A gentilicic designation or family name in Judah's genealogy, appearing in 1 Chronicles 4:6. The Persian-sounding form has puzzled scholars, as it seems anachronistic for the patriarchal period. It may represent a later editorial insertion, a place name, or a family designation whose original significance is lost. Despite the uncertainty, it functions to identify a specific individual or family group within Judah's complex genealogical structure. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Achashtari | es: el-ajastarita | fr: [האחשתרי] | de: [האחשתרי] 1Chr 4:6

אֲחַשְׁתָּרָן H0327 Art / N-mp (2×)

the royal (horses); Persian loan word for royal steeds or swift horses

A Persian loanword appearing only in Esther, describing special horses used in the royal postal system. The term appears in Esther 8:10 and 8:14, where Ahasuerus' counter-decree is sent out 'by mounted couriers riding royal horses' to reverse Haman's edict. BDB derives it from Persian 'khshathra' (lordship, realm), indicating these were horses of royal quality or breed, possibly the swift steeds maintained for the empire's courier network.

(2×) The multilingual evidence reveals translation difficulty: English straightforwardly says 'the royal,' Spanish 'los veloces' (the swift ones) interprets functionally, while French and German bracket the Hebrew, acknowledging uncertainty. The Persian origin fits Esther's setting, where multiple Persian terms appear. Both occurrences describe the same urgent dispatch of riders carrying Mordecai's decree throughout the 127 provinces. RULING AND REIGNING

en: the-royal | es: los-veloces | fr: [האחשתרנים] | de: [האחשתרנים] Esth 8:10; Esth 8:14

אִטֵּי H0328a Art / N-mp (1×)

The mutterers, whisperers (those who practice divination or necromancy through whispered incantations)

This term appears in Isaiah 19:3, describing practitioners of occult arts who mutter or whisper incantations. The word is paired with mediums (oboth) and spiritists (yidde'onim), forming a trio of divination practitioners. The root suggests soft, murmuring sounds—the whispered charms and spells characteristic of ancient magic and necromancy. Isaiah prophesies that Egypt, in desperation, will turn to these practitioners when their wisdom fails, seeking supernatural guidance from dubious sources rather than from the true God.

(1×) Practitioners of divination who whisper or mutter incantations, likely necromancers or sorcerers. In Isaiah 19:3, they represent Egypt's turn to occult practices in desperation. The term emphasizes the sonic character of their practice—muttering or whispering rather than clear speech, suggesting both the secretive nature of magic and possibly ventriloquism used to fake spirit voices. The multilingual uncertainty (ghosts, encantadores) reflects the ambiguity inherent in terms for ancient occult practices. MANNER ADVERBS

en: the-ghosts | es: los-encantadores | fr: [האטים] | de: [האטים] Isa 19:3

אַט H0328b Adv (5×)

Gently, softly; an adverb of gentleness conveying slow, quiet, or tender movement and speech.

A beautiful adverb built on a substantive meaning 'gentleness,' used for quiet movement and tender speech. Jacob's careful pace with the nursing flocks in Genesis 33:14 ('I will lead on gently') and the waters of Shiloah flowing softly in Isaiah 8:6 are its most evocative uses. David's plea to 'deal gently with the young man Absalom' (2 Sam 18:5) adds deep paternal emotion. Spanish captures its range well — 'despacio' (slowly), 'suave' (softly) — showing how physical gentleness and emotional tenderness converge in a single word.

(5×) Gently, softly — describing quiet, careful, or tender action. Used adverbially for Jacob leading his flocks at a gentle pace (Gen 33:14), David pleading for gentleness toward Absalom (2 Sam 18:5), Ahab walking about softly in penitence (1 Kgs 21:27), a word spoken gently (Job 15:11), and the waters of Shiloah flowing softly (Isa 8:6). The Spanish pair 'despacio/suave' and the English pair 'gently/softly' together illustrate how this word spans physical slowness and emotional tenderness. A word that turns up in some of Scripture's most poignant moments. TENDERNESS AND GENTLENESS

en: at-my-leisure, gently, softly | es: a-lentitud-mía, despacio, suave | fr: [לאט], gently, softly | de: [לאט], gently, in-meinem-Schritt Gen 33:14; 2Sam 18:5; 1Kgs 21:27; Job 15:11; Isa 8:6

אָטָד H0329 Art / N-ms (6×)

A thorny bramble bush (rhamnus); also Atad, the place name of a threshing floor beyond the Jordan.

Refers to a prickly shrub or thornbush, most memorably cast as the unlikely and dangerous king in Jotham's fable (Judg 9:14-15), where the olive, fig, and vine all decline rulership but the lowly bramble eagerly accepts — and threatens fire. The same thorny bush appears in Ps 58:9 as quick-burning fuel. As a place name, it designates the threshing floor of Atad (Gen 50:10-11), east of the Jordan, where Joseph's funeral procession mourned Jacob for seven days. Spanish 'espino' and 'zarza' both capture the thorny character, while the shift to a proper noun in Genesis is consistent across all translations.

1. thornbush, bramble (plant) (4×) A thorny shrub or bramble, identified with the genus Rhamnus (buckthorn). In Jotham's fable (Judg 9:14-15) it personifies the worthless and dangerous ruler: when the noble trees refused, the bramble accepted kingship and threatened fire. Psalm 58:9 uses it as fast-burning fuel in a vivid image of sudden destruction. Cognates across Aramaic (אַטָּדָא), Arabic (aṭad), and Akkadian (eṭidu) confirm the botanical identification. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: the-thornbush | es: espino, la-zarza | fr: buisson-d'épines, le-thornbush | de: der-thornbush Judg 9:14; Judg 9:15; Ps 58:9

2. Atad (place name) (2×) The proper place name Atad, appearing only in the phrase 'threshing floor of Atad' (גֹּרֶן הָאָטָד, Gen 50:10-11). This site beyond the Jordan served as the location of a seven-day mourning for Jacob during his funeral procession from Egypt to Canaan. Though etymologically linked to the bramble, it functions as a fixed toponym in every translation — Spanish 'el Atad,' French 'le Atad' — with no botanical sense retained. THORNS AND BRAMBLES

en: the-Atad | es: el-Atad | fr: le-Atad | de: des-Atad Gen 50:10; Gen 50:11

אֵטוּן H0330 N-msc (1×)

Thread, yarn, or fabric (specifically fine Egyptian linen; etymology uncertain)

This rare noun appears only in Proverbs 7:16, where the adulteress describes her bed as decked with "colored Egyptian linen." The word's etymology is uncertain, though it clearly refers to fine textile material, possibly threads or yarn used in weaving decorative fabrics. The Egyptian origin indicates luxury and expense—Egyptian linen was prized throughout the ancient world for its quality. The Talmud uses related Aramaic words for cord or rope, suggesting the term relates to thread-like materials. The context emphasizes seductive luxury and sensual enticement.

(1×) Fine textile material, specifically Egyptian linen thread or yarn used for luxurious furnishings. The Proverbs 7:16 context describes the adulteress's carefully prepared seduction scene, where expensive Egyptian textiles create an atmosphere of luxury and pleasure. The specificity ("Egyptian linen") emphasizes both the expense and exotic allure—she has spared no cost in creating her seductive setting. This detail contributes to the passage's warning about adultery's seductive appeal and ultimate destructiveness. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: of-Egyptian | es: lino | fr: אטון | de: [אטון] Prov 7:16

אטם H0331 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fp (8×)

To shut, stop up, close; of ears (refusing to hear) or of windows (narrowed, latticed) in temple architecture.

Atam describes the act of shutting or closing, applied in two distinct domains. In the moral-auditory sphere, it means stopping one's ears – refusing to hear the cry of the poor (Prov 21:13), sealing one's lips discreetly (Prov 17:28), or blocking out moral corruption (Isa 33:15). The adder of Psalm 58:4 stops its ear against the charmer. In the architectural sphere, the passive participle describes the narrowed or latticed windows of Solomon's Temple (1 Kgs 6:4) and Ezekiel's visionary temple (Ezek 40:16, 41:16, 41:26). Spanish captures the distinction with 'cierra' (shuts) versus 'estrechas' (narrow).

1. shut, stop (ears) (4×) To shut or stop up (the ears or lips), describing a deliberate refusal to hear or speak. The Qal active participle and Hiphil imperfect are used: stopping one's ears against the cry of the poor (Prov 21:13), closing one's lips in prudent silence (Prov 17:28), and shutting ears against moral corruption (Isa 33:15). In Psalm 58:4-5, the wicked are compared to a deaf adder that stops its ear against the snake-charmer. Spanish 'el que cierra' (he who shuts) and 'cierra' (shuts) reflect the active, volitional character of this refusal. SHUTTING AND CLOSING

en: shutting, stopping, that-stops | es: El-que-cierra, cierra, el-que-cierra | fr: [אטם], fermer, אטם | de: [אטם], der-stops Ps 58:4; Prov 17:28; Prov 21:13; Isa 33:15

2. narrowed, closed (windows) (4×) Closed, narrowed, or latticed – describing architectural window openings in temple constructions. The Qal passive participle atumim/atumot characterizes the windows (challonot) as narrowed or recessed. In 1 Kings 6:4, Solomon's Temple has 'windows narrow and closed' (shequfim atumim). Ezekiel's visionary temple features the same type of windows (Ezek 40:16, 41:16, 41:26). Spanish 'estrechas' (narrow) and 'cerradas' (closed) capture this architectural sense, quite different from the moral-auditory usage. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION

en: narrowed, the-narrowed | es: cerradas, estrechas, las-estrechas | fr: [אטמות], [האטמות], narrowed | de: [אטמות], [האטמות], narrowed 1Kgs 6:4; Ezek 40:16; Ezek 41:16; Ezek 41:26

אָטַר H0332 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (1×)

shut, close (of a well or pit)

This rare verb appears only in Psalm 69:15, where the psalmist pleads that the mouth of the pit not close over him. The imagery evokes being swallowed alive by the earth or death itself. The Arabic cognate suggests bending or enclosing, which fits the visual picture of a well's opening shutting like a trap. The multilingual evidence (shut-, close-, fermer) confirms the spatial sense of enclosure.

(1×) Used metaphorically of death or the grave closing over someone like the mouth of a pit shutting. The psalmist's plea in Psalm 69:15 draws on ancient Near Eastern imagery of Sheol as a devouring entity with gaping jaws. Cross-linguistic glosses emphasize the finality of closure, with Spanish cierre- and French fermer both carrying connotations of sealing off or trapping. SHUTTING AND CLOSING en: shut- | es: cierre- | fr: fermer | de: shut- Ps 69:15

אָטֵר H0333 N-proper-ms (5×)

Ater; a personal name meaning perhaps 'binder' or 'shut,' borne by a chief among the post-exilic Jews.

A proper name appearing in the restoration-era census lists of Ezra and Nehemiah. Ater designates at least two distinct groups: a family head whose descendants numbered 98 among the returning exiles (Ezra 2:16; Neh 7:21), and a family of gatekeepers (Ezra 2:42; Neh 7:45). A person named Ater also appears among the signers of the covenant renewal (Neh 10:17). The name may mean 'binder' or 'left-handed,' though the etymology is uncertain. French and German texts leave the name in Hebrew script, while English and Spanish transliterate as 'Ater.'

(5×) The proper name Ater, designating post-exilic Jewish families and individuals in the restoration narratives. It identifies: (a) a clan head whose descendants returned with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:16; Neh 7:21), (b) a gatekeeper family (Ezra 2:42; Neh 7:45), and (c) a signatory to the covenant in Nehemiah 10:17. The meaning 'binder' or 'shut' (possibly referring to a left-handed person) is uncertain. English and Spanish transliterate straightforwardly as 'Ater,' while French and German sometimes retain the Hebrew form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ater | es: Ater | fr: [אטר] | de: [אטר] Ezra 2:16; Ezra 2:42; Neh 7:21; Neh 7:45; Neh 10:17

אֵטֵר H0334 Adj-ms (2×)

bound of, restricted of; left-handed (lit. bound in the right hand)

An adjective meaning 'bound' or 'restricted,' used idiomatically to describe left-handedness. The phrase 'a man bound of his right hand' means someone whose right hand is restricted or bound, thus forced to use the left—a Hebrew euphemism for left-handed. Both occurrences describe Benjamite warriors: Ehud the judge (Judges 3:15) and seven hundred select Benjamite slingers (Judges 20:16), notable for their skill despite or because of this trait.

(2×) Translation strategies vary: English uses 'bound of' or 'restricted of,' Spanish 'cerrado de' (closed of) or 'zurdo de' (left-handed of), French 'lié de' (bound of) or 'restricted de,' German 'band von' or 'restricted von.' The modern Spanish 'zurdo' shows functional rather than literal translation. Left-handedness appears as a Benjamite characteristic, with the tribe's name ironically meaning 'son of the right hand,' creating wordplay the ancient audience would have recognized. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bound-of, restricted-of | es: cerrado-de, zurdo-de | fr: lia-de, restricted-de | de: band-von, restricted-von Judg 3:15; Judg 20:16

אַי H0335 Conj-w | Interrog (38×)

Interrogative particle: where? which? how? – asking about location, selection, or manner

A compact Hebrew interrogative that most often demands a location – 'Where is Abel your brother?' (Gen 4:9), 'Where are you?' (Gen 3:9). Its suffixed forms (ayyekah, ayyo, ayyam) lend it a probing, almost accusatory quality in divine speech. Occasionally it shifts from spatial to selective inquiry – 'Which way shall we go?' (2 Kgs 3:8) – and in one remarkable instance in Jeremiah 5:7, it asks 'How shall I pardon you?' where manner replaces location entirely. The Syriac cognate survives in compound forms like 'aykan' (how?), confirming the particle's ancient flexibility. Spanish distinguishes 'donde' from 'cual' and 'como'; German telescopes all three into context-dependent uses of 'wo.'

1. where? (interrogative of place) (33×) The dominant locative sense: asking 'where?' about a person or place. Genesis 3:9 ('Where are you?') and 4:9 ('Where is Abel?') set the tone – divine confrontations, not neutral questions. The suffixed 'ayyo' in 2 Kings 19:13 anticipates its noun. Spanish 'donde' and French 'ou' map cleanly onto this spatial interrogative. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: and-where, from-where, where | es: de-dónde, dónde, y-dónde | fr: [אי], de-où, et-où? | de: [אי], und-wo, von-wo Gen 3:9; Gen 4:9; Gen 16:8; Deut 32:37; Judg 13:6

2. which? what? (interrogative of selection) (4×) A selective-identificational use: 'which?' or 'what?' among alternatives. In 2 Kings 3:8 the question is 'By which way shall we go up?'; Ecclesiastes 2:3 asks 'which is good'; Ecclesiastes 11:6 probes 'which will prosper.' Spanish 'cual' and German 'welcher' mark the shift from spatial to selective inquiry, choosing from a set rather than pointing to a location. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: from-where, what-, which | es: cuál, de-qué, ¿Por-cuál | fr: de-où, lequel, où? | de: von-wo, welcher, wo 2Sam 15:2; 2Kgs 3:8; Eccl 2:3; Eccl 11:6

3. how? (interrogative of manner) (1×) A single attestation in Jeremiah 5:7 where the particle asks about manner rather than place: 'How shall I pardon you for this?' French 'ou' still renders it spatially, but the Hebrew context unmistakably demands 'how.' This rare extension aligns with the Syriac compound 'aykan' (how?) and shows the particle's latent capacity to query mode or means. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: how | es: ¿Cómo | fr: où | de: [אֵ] Jer 5:7

אִי H0336 Adv-NegPrt (1×)
not, negative particle
A rare negative particle appearing only in Job 22:30. The text is difficult and may be corrupt, as BDB notes alternative readings proposing אֵל or אֱלֹהַּ instead. This form is common in Rabbinic Hebrew and Ethiopic as the ordinary negative, and appears in Phoenician inscriptions. The phrase אִי־נָקִי literally means 'the non-innocent,' though textual uncertainty surrounds the passage.

(1×) Functions as a simple negative particle meaning 'not,' forming the compound אִי־נָקִי ('non-innocent') in Job 22:30. Cognate with Rabbinic and Ethiopic negatives, this rare form represents an archaic or dialectal variant. The Spanish al-no- and English 'not' reflect straightforward negation, though the textual corruption makes precise interpretation challenging. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: not | es: al-no- | fr: אִ | de: [אִ] Job 22:30

אִי H0337 Interjection (2×)
alas! woe! interjection of lament or distress
A late Hebrew interjection expressing distress or pity, appearing only in Ecclesiastes. In Ecclesiastes 4:10, it introduces sympathy for the solitary person who falls with no one to help: 'but alas for him who is alone when he falls.' In Ecclesiastes 10:16, it laments a land whose king is immature: 'Woe to you, O land, when your king is a child.' The Masoretes wrote it as one word with the following pronoun, though it functions as an independent exclamation.

(2×) Multilingual patterns show recognition of the lamenting force: English 'woe' and 'woe to him,' Spanish 'ay de' (alas for), French 'malheur' (misfortune), German bracketing or preserving Hebrew. The Rabbinic literature confirms this as an exclamation of distress. Both Qohelet contexts involve unfortunate circumstances—isolation and bad governance—fitting the book's realistic appraisal of life's hardships. WOE AND ALAS en: and-woe-to-him, woe | es: ay-de, pero-¡ay-de! | fr: et-malheur-lui, malheur | de: [אִ], [ואילן] Eccl 4:10; Eccl 10:16

אִי H0338 N-mp (3×)
jackals, hyenas (desert-dwelling scavengers known for their howling)
Howling scavengers that inhabit desolate places—most likely jackals, though the term may encompass hyena-like creatures as well. The word itself derives from a root suggesting howling or wailing, capturing the eerie cries that echo through ruins and wilderness. Isaiah and Jeremiah deploy this imagery to evoke utter desolation: cities reduced to habitats fit only for wild scavengers. The Arabic cognate likewise identifies the jackal, an animal symbolizing abandonment and divine judgment throughout biblical prophecy.

(3×) Isaiah 13:22 and 34:14 picture Babylon and Edom overrun by these creatures, their palaces echoing with howls instead of human voices. Jeremiah 50:39 similarly prophesies that Babylon will become a dwelling for jackals alongside other desert beasts. The consistent association with ruined cities makes the jackal an auditory and visual symbol of irreversible devastation—places where God's judgment has fallen and human civilization has ceased. JACKAL WILD CANINE

en: hyenas, jackals | es: chacales, con-aulladores | fr: [אִיִּים] | de: [אִיִּים] Isa 13:22; Isa 34:14; Jer 50:39

אִי H0339 N-ms (36×)
Island, coastland, or distant shore; remote habitable lands across or beside the sea
A noun designating land that is reached by sea—whether a true island or a distant coastal territory. From a mariner's perspective, it originally meant a place where one could come ashore and rest. In Genesis 10:5 it describes the maritime territories of Japheth's descendants; in the prophets it becomes a powerful image for the farthest reaches of the known world, summoned to hear God's voice (Isa 41:1) or to tremble at his judgment (Ezek 27:35). The plural 'iyyim' evokes the Mediterranean coastlands and beyond—Kittim (Cyprus), Elishah, Caphtor (Crete). Spanish renders it both as 'islas' (islands) and 'costas' (coasts), capturing the dual geographic reference.

island, coastland (36×) Habitable land across or alongside the sea, whether a literal island or a distant coastland. The term appears in geographic catalogs (Gen 10:5, the 'coastlands of the nations') and in prophetic oracles summoning far-off peoples (Isa 41:1, 42:4, 49:1). Specific referents include Caphtor/Crete (Jer 47:4), Kittim/Cyprus (Jer 2:10), and Elishah (Ezek 27:7). Spanish splits between 'islas' and 'costas,' French between 'ile' and 'cote,' reflecting the word's genuine ambiguity between island and coastland. ISLAND COASTLAND

en: O-coastlands, coastland, coastlands | es: costas, isla, islas | fr: côte, le-il-n'y-a-pas, île | de: Inseln, Kueste, der-coastlands Gen 10:5; Esth 10:1; Ps 72:10; Ps 97:1; Isa 11:11

אָיַב H0340 Conj-w | V-Qal-ConjPerf-1cs (1×)
and I will be hostile to, treat as enemy
In Exodus 23:22, God promises 'I will be an enemy to your enemies' within the covenant blessings. The root אָיַב means to be hostile toward or treat someone as an enemy. As a verb it's rare; the participial form אֹיֵב (enemy) is far more common throughout the Old Testament. The multilingual glosses preserve both the future tense and the relational hostility, capturing God's promise to take Israel's side against their foes.

(1×) Divine promise of active hostility against Israel's enemies in the Covenant Code. The waw-consecutive perfect expresses future intent: God will engage in enmity on behalf of His people. Cross-linguistic renderings (and-I-will-be-enemy, seré-enemigo, Je-serai-ennemi) maintain the first-person commitment, emphasizing covenant solidarity. The parallel with אֲצָרְרֵ֣י (I will be adversary to) reinforces reciprocal divine protection. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY

en: and-I-will-be-enemy | es: y-seré-enemigo | fr: et-Je—être-enemy | de: und-ich-wird-sein-enemy Exod 23:22

אָיַב H0341 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (284×)
Enemy, adversary, foe; one who is hostile, whether a personal rival, national opponent, or divine antagonist
The Hebrew participle from the root aleph-yod-bet (to be hostile) is the standard biblical word for an enemy. Occurring 284 times, it spans the full range of hostility: personal adversaries like Saul against David (1 Sam 18:29), national foes threatening Israel on the battlefield (Exod 15:6, 9), and even God himself acting as enemy when his people rebel (Exod 23:22). The multilingual evidence is strikingly uniform across all languages, with every translation converging on a single equivalent, confirming that ancient Hebrew had one broad, undifferentiated term for any hostile agent.

enemy, adversary, foe (284×) A substantivized Qal active participle denoting any person, group, or power that acts with hostility. Used of personal enemies (1 Sam 24:5), foreign armies arrayed against Israel (Lev 26:7-8), and even God treating his own people as an adversary (Lam 2:5). Translations across all 43 languages uniformly render this with a single enemy-word, confirming that the Hebrew term carries no internal semantic differentiation. ENEMY AND ADVERSARY en: an-enemy, enemy, the-enemy | es: al-enemigo, el-enemigo, enemigo | fr: enemy, ennemi, le-ennemi | de: Feind, Feinde, der-Feinde Exod 15:6; Exod 15:9; Lev 26:7; Lev 26:8; Lev 26:16

אֵיבָה H0342 N-fsc (5×)

Enmity, hostility; deep personal or communal animosity, sometimes described as perpetual.

A feminine noun for deep-seated hostility, appearing at pivotal moments in Scripture. Its first occurrence in Genesis 3:15 — enmity between the serpent and the woman — establishes a cosmic conflict at the very foundation of the biblical narrative. Numbers 35:21-22 uses it to distinguish between murder motivated by personal hatred and accidental killing. Ezekiel twice speaks of an 'enmity of old' (25:15; 35:5) harbored by neighboring peoples against Israel. The multilingual evidence is consistent: Spanish 'enemistad,' French and German 'enmity' — all pointing to a relational hostility that runs deeper than momentary anger.

(5×) Enmity, deep hostility between persons or peoples. In Gen 3:15 it names the primal antagonism God sets between the serpent and the woman — the protoevangelium. In the homicide laws of Num 35:21-22 it distinguishes premeditated murder (motivated by enmity) from manslaughter. Ezekiel applies the phrase 'enmity of old' (אֵיבַת עוֹלָם) to the Philistines (25:15) and Edom (35:5) for their persistent hostility toward Israel. Spanish 'enemistad' and French 'enmity' both convey the relational depth — this is not passing anger but entrenched animosity. ENMITY HOSTILITY

en: And-enmity, enmity, enmity-of | es: Y-enemistad, con-enemistad, enemistad | fr: Et-enmity, [אֵיבַת], avec-enmity | de: [אֵיבַת], enmity, mit-enmity Gen 3:15; Num 35:21; Num 35:22; Ezek 25:15; Ezek 35:5

אִיד H0343 Conj-w / N-msc / 3mp (24×)

Calamity, disaster, sudden ruin – devastating misfortune as divine judgment or consequence of wickedness

A poetic and prophetic term for sudden, overwhelming disaster. Found almost exclusively in Wisdom literature and the later prophets, this word conveys catastrophe crashing down upon its victims – whether apostate Israel, foreign nations, or the wicked individual. In Proverbs 1:26-27 personified Wisdom laughs when calamity overtakes those who spurned her counsel. The Arabic cognate suggests something that 'burdens' or 'bends' a person under its weight. Deuteronomy 32:35 anchors it in the theology of divine retribution: 'the day of their calamity is near.' Translations across languages converge on terms for sudden devastation: Spanish calamidad, French calamité.

calamity, disaster, ruin (24×) Sudden, devastating calamity or ruin, used in poetic and prophetic contexts for catastrophic misfortune. Applied nationally to Israel's apostasy (Jer 18:17), to foreign nations under divine judgment such as Moab (Jer 48:16) and Edom (Jer 49:8; Obad 13), and personally to the righteous sufferer (2 Sam 22:19; Ps 18:19) and the wicked reaping consequences (Job 18:12; 21:17; Prov 1:26-27). The Arabic cognate meaning 'burdening' captures the crushing weight this word implies. Deuteronomy 32:35 anchors it squarely in the theology of divine retribution, while Proverbs presents it as the natural harvest of folly. CALAMITY AND DISASTER

en: and-calamity, at-calamity, at-your-calamity | es: calamidad, calamidad-de-, de-calamidad | fr: calamité, dans-votre-calamité-vous, de-leur-calamité; | de: [אִיד], [אִידן], [אִידם] Deut 32:35; 2Sam 22:19; Job 18:12; Job 21:17; Job 21:30

אַיָּה H0344 N-fs (3×)

falcon, hawk, kite (bird of prey known for keen eyesight)

A bird of prey listed among unclean birds in Levitical law, encompassing various falcon or hawk species. The term may be onomatopoetic, echoing the bird's cry. Leviticus and Deuteronomy prohibit eating this raptor 'according to its kind,' suggesting multiple species fell under this category. Job mentions it as exemplifying extraordinary vision—able to spot prey from great heights—symbolizing perception beyond human capacity. The falcon's sharp sight made it a natural metaphor for insight that penetrates what is hidden.

(3×) Leviticus 11:14 and Deuteronomy 14:13 classify the falcon among unclean birds, using the phrase 'according to its kind' to indicate a whole family of raptors. Job 28:7 invokes the falcon's legendary eyesight in describing a hidden path 'that no bird of prey knows, and the falcon's eye has not seen'—emphasizing mysteries beyond even the sharpest natural vision. The bird symbolizes both the boundaries of created perception and the dietary boundaries that set Israel apart. EAGLE VULTURE RAPTOR en: falcon, the-falcon | es: el-halcón, halcón | fr: le-falcon, אִיה | de: [אִיה], der-falcon Lev 11:14; Deut 14:13; Job 28:7

אַיָּה H0345 N-proper-ms (6×)

Aiah, 'falcon'; a Horite name and the father of Rizpah, Saul's concubine.

A masculine proper name likely meaning 'falcon' or 'hawk,' borne by two individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The first is a Horite, listed as a son of Zibeon in the genealogies of Esau's territory (Gen 36:24; 1 Chr 1:40). The second, and more narratively significant, is the father of Rizpah, who was Saul's concubine. Rizpah daughter of Aiah plays a poignant role in 2 Samuel 3:7 and especially 21:8-11, where she keeps vigil over the bodies of her executed sons.

Aiah (proper name) (6×) Aiah (אַיָּה, probably 'falcon'), a proper name for two men. One is a Horite descendant of Seir listed among the clans of Edom (Gen 36:24; 1 Chr 1:40). The other is father of Rizpah, Saul's concubine, whose story in 2 Samuel is deeply moving: after her sons are handed over to the Gibeonites, she guards their bodies from birds and beasts until David is moved to give them proper burial (2 Sam 21:8-11). The name's avian meaning connects to a broader pattern of animal-derived Horite names. AIAH PLACE PERSON

en: Aiah, Ayah, Ayyah | es: Aya, Ayah, y-Ayah | fr: Aiah, Ayyah, [אִיה] | de: Aiah, Ayyah, [אִיה] Gen 36:24; 2Sam 3:7; 2Sam 21:8; 2Sam 21:10; 2Sam 21:11

אַיֵּה H0346 Interrog (47×)

where? — an interrogative adverb asking about location, often with rhetorical or accusatory force

Ayyeh is the emphatic Hebrew interrogative 'where?', a lengthened form of the simpler 'ay. Unlike 'eyfoh, which typically accompanies a verb, ayyeh stands on its own to demand the whereabouts of a person or thing — and frequently expects the devastating answer 'nowhere.' Its 47 occurrences cluster in two striking patterns: the intimate domestic question ('Where is Sarah your wife?,' Gen 18:9; 'Where is the lamb?,' Gen 22:7) and the prophetic taunt that challenges idols and false securities ('Where are your gods that you made?,' Jer 2:28; 'Where is their God?,' Ps 79:10; Joel 2:17). This rhetorical weaponry gives ayyeh a cutting edge that mere locative inquiry cannot capture. The translations converge precisely: Spanish 'donde,' French 'ou,' German 'wo.'

where? (interrogative of location) (47×) An interrogative adverb of place used in direct questions about the location or whereabouts of persons and things, frequently carrying rhetorical or accusatory force. Appears in genuine inquiries (Gen 18:9 'Where is Sarah?'; Gen 22:7 'Where is the lamb?'), in prophetic challenges that mock absent gods (Jer 2:28; Ps 115:2; Joel 2:17 'Where is their God?'), and in existential cries that imply the answer is 'nowhere' (Isa 33:18; Job 15:23). The particle never takes a verb directly, distinguishing it syntactically from 'eyfoh. All 47 uses share this single locative-interrogative function, with rhetorical coloring determined by context rather than by lexical distinction. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: Where, where, where-is | es: Dónde-está, dónde, ¿Dónde | fr: où, où? | de: wo, wo-ist Gen 18:9; Gen 19:5; Gen 22:7; Gen 38:21; Exod 2:20

אִיּוֹב H0347 Prep-k / N-proper-ms (58×)

Job — the righteous sufferer from the land of Uz, central figure of the wisdom book bearing his name

The name אִיּוֹב (Iyyov/Job) designates the protagonist of one of Scripture's most profound explorations of suffering and divine justice. From the land of Uz, Job is introduced as blameless and upright (Job 1:1), yet God permits the Adversary to strip away his wealth, children, and health. Through cycles of debate with three friends, an interjection by Elihu, and God's overwhelming theophany from the whirlwind (Job 38–41), the book probes whether righteousness guarantees prosperity. Ezekiel 14:14, 20 groups Job with Noah and Daniel as paragons of individual righteousness.

Job (proper name) (58×) The proper name of the righteous patriarch from Uz. All 58 occurrences refer to the same individual: 56 within the Book of Job itself and two in Ezekiel 14:14, 20 where he exemplifies personal piety. Spanish and French preserve 'Job,' while German uses 'Hiob' and Hebrew transliterations give 'Iyov/Iyyov.' The name's etymology remains debated — possibly 'object of enmity' from the root אי"ב — but its narrative weight as a byword for patient suffering is unmistakable. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Iyov, Iyyov | es: Iyov, Job | fr: Job | de: Hiob Job 1:1; Job 1:5; Job 1:8

אִיזֶבֶל H0348 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (22×)
Jezebel; Phoenician princess and queen of Israel, wife of Ahab, who championed Baal worship.
The proper name of the Phoenician princess who became queen of Israel through her marriage to King Ahab (1 Kgs 16:31). Jezebel actively promoted Baal worship, supported hundreds of pagan prophets, and systematically persecuted the prophets of YHWH (1 Kgs 18:4, 13). Her name may derive from a Phoenician phrase meaning 'Baal exalts,' though BDB suggests the Hebrew form could be a deliberate alteration to avoid invoking Baal's name. She remains one of Scripture's most vivid portraits of idolatrous royal power confronted by prophetic faithfulness.

Jezebel (proper name, queen of Israel) (22×) The proper feminine name Jezebel (אִיזֶבֶל), referring to the daughter of Ethbaal king of Tyre who married Ahab and became queen of the northern kingdom of Israel. All 22 occurrences appear in 1 Kings 16–21 and 2 Kings 9, spanning her introduction, her campaign against YHWH's prophets, the Naboth incident, and her dramatic death. Multilingual renderings—Jezabel (Spanish), Jézabel (French), Isebel (German)—preserve the Phoenician name with minor phonological adaptation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Izavel, Izevel, Jezebel | es: Izevel, Jezabel, a-Jezabel | fr: Izavel, Jézabel, est-Jézabel | de: Isebel, Izavel, ist-Isebel 1Kgs 16:31; 1Kgs 18:4; 1Kgs 18:13; 1Kgs 18:19; 1Kgs 19:1

אֵיךְ H0349a Conj-w / Interjection (61×)
ekh – how! an exclamatory and interrogative adverb of manner, wonder, or lament
The adverb ekh ('how!') serves double duty as an interrogative ('How shall we say...?') and an exclamation of astonishment or grief ('How the mighty have fallen!' 2 Sam 1:19). It is the voice of prophetic lament par excellence: Isaiah, Jeremiah, Obadiah, and Micah all employ it to open oracles of devastating irony – 'How you have fallen from heaven, O shining one!' (Isa 14:12). The related form ekhah gives its name to the book of Lamentations. In rhetorical questions it often carries an expostulating force: 'How can I bear this alone?' (Deut 1:12), 'How shall we sing the Lord's song in a foreign land?' (Ps 137:4). Spanish como, French comment, and German wie all preserve its interrogative-exclamatory versatility.

how! (exclamatory/interrogative adverb) (61×) An exclamatory and interrogative adverb expressing manner, astonishment, dismay, or rhetorical protest. In lament contexts it opens cries of devastation – 'How the mighty have fallen!' (2 Sam 1:19); 'How you have fallen from heaven!' (Isa 14:12). In interrogative use it frames expostulations of impossibility or protest: 'How can I alone bear your burden?' (Deut 1:12). Multilingual glosses – Spanish como, French comment, German wie – converge on a single manner-adverb function across all 61 occurrences. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: how | es: Cómo, cómo, ¡Cómo! | fr: comment, comment? | de: wie Gen 26:9; Gen 39:9; Gen 44:8; Gen 44:34; Exod 6:12

אֵיכָה H0349b Interjection (17×)
An interrogative-exclamatory adverb: 'How?' or 'How!' expressing manner or astonishment; rarely 'Where?' in northern dialect.
Built from the interrogative particle 'ay and the demonstrative koh, this adverb asks 'in what manner?' – slightly more pointed than the simpler eikh. It appears in both genuine questions (Deut 1:12, 'How can I bear your problems alone?'; Deut 7:17) and anguished exclamations (Isa 1:21, 'How the faithful city has become a harlot!'; Lam 1:1, 'How lonely sits the city!'). Lamentations actually takes its Hebrew title from this word. In two occurrences in Song of Solomon 1:7, it functions as 'where?' – a usage paralleled by Aramaic eikha, suggesting a northern dialectal coloring. Spanish distinguishes the nuances as 'como' (how, manner) versus 'donde' (where).

1. (15×) An interrogative or exclamatory adverb meaning 'how?' or 'how!' – asking about manner (Deut 1:12; 7:17; 12:30; 18:21) or expressing astonishment and lament (Isa 1:21; Lam 1:1; 2:1; 4:1-2). The book of Lamentations takes its Hebrew name from this word's opening cry. Spanish 'como' and German 'wie' render both the questioning and exclamatory force, while French 'comment' highlights the manner-focused interrogative nuance. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: How, how | es: Cómo, cómo, ¡Cómo! | fr: comment | de: Wie, [אי־כה], wie Deut 1:12; Deut 7:17; Deut 12:30; Deut 18:21; Deut 32:30

2. (2×) A locative adverb meaning 'where?' attested only in Song of Solomon 1:7 (twice), likely reflecting a northern Israelite or Aramaic-influenced dialectal usage. Cognate Aramaic eikha and Syriac aikho both mean 'where,' supporting this geographic sense. French 'ou' and Spanish 'donde' distinguish it clearly from the predominant 'how' meaning. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES en: where | es: dónde | fr: où | de: Wie Song 1:7

אֵיכָכָה H0349c Interjection (4×)
How? An emphatic interrogative exclamation expressing dismay or emotional intensity
A compound interrogative particle formed from 'ay' (where? how?) and 'kakah' (thus, so), yielding an intensified 'How?!' that carries strong emotional force. It appears only four times, in two paired occurrences. In Esther 8:6, Queen Esther twice cries out 'How can I bear to see...?' as she pleads before Ahasuerus for her people's deliverance. In Song of Songs 5:3, the beloved twice asks 'How shall I...?' in her dreamy reluctance to rise and open the door. Both contexts use the word to express inner turmoil — anguish in Esther, tender hesitation in the Song.

(4×) How?! — an emphatic interrogative expressing emotional intensity, dismay, or perplexity. English renders simply 'how' and 'and-how'; Spanish captures the questioning force with '¿cómo' and '¿Y-cómo'; French offers 'comment.' The doubled occurrence in Esther 8:6 conveys Esther's anguished plea before the king, while the pair in Song of Songs 5:3 expresses the beloved's tender reluctance. The compound form (from 'ay' + 'kakah') intensifies the question beyond ordinary 'how,' lending rhetorical and emotional weight to moments of deep feeling. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: and-how, how | es: cómo, ¿Y-cómo, ¿cómo | fr: [אי־ככה], [ואי־ככה], comment | de: [אי־ככה], [ואי־ככה] Esth 8:6; Song 5:3

אִי כָבוֹד H0350 N-proper-ms (2×)
Ichabod, meaning 'no glory' or 'inglorious'; son of Phinehas
A symbolic name given to the son born to Phinehas' wife as she died following the capture of the ark and the deaths of Eli and her husband. The name is explained in 1 Samuel 4:21 by the statement 'The glory has departed from Israel,' referring to the ark's capture by the Philistines. The name encapsulates the catastrophe: Israel's defeat, the ark's loss, and the end of Eli's priestly line. Ichabod later appears in 1 Samuel 14:3 as the uncle of Ahijah the priest serving under Saul.

(2×) Cross-linguistic transliteration is relatively stable: English 'Ichabod' or 'Ikavod,' Spanish 'Icabod' or 'Ikabod,' French and German 'Ikavod' or 'Ikhavod,' all preserving the Hebrew phonetics with minor variations. The name's theological significance—negating 'glory' (kavod) with the negative particle—made it memorable in Israel's history. The two occurrences span a generation from the traumatic birth narrative to the functioning priesthood under Saul. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ikavod, Ikhavod | es: Icabod, Ikabod | fr: Ikavod, Ikhavod | de: Ikavod, Ikhavod 1Sam 4:21; 1Sam 14:3

אֵיכוֹ H0351 Interrog (1×)

where? (interrogative)

An interrogative adverb meaning 'where?' used in 2 Kings 6:13 when the king of Aram seeks to locate Elisha. This form appears in the Ketiv (written text) while the Qere (oral reading tradition) likely points to אֵיכָה. The question seeks spatial information, fitting the context where the king wants to know Elisha's location to capture him. Simple and direct across languages.

(1×) Interrogative seeking spatial location. In 2 Kings 6:13, the Aramean king asks his servants where Elisha can be found, intending to send troops to seize him. The cross-linguistic evidence (where, dónde, où, wo) shows universal preservation of the locative question. The Qere/Ketiv variant suggests textual fluidity between related interrogative forms in Hebrew manuscripts. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: where | es: dónde | fr: où | de: wo 2Kgs 6:13

H0352 N-mpc (1×)

mighty ones (as construct plural noun)

While אַיִל typically means 'ram,' it can also denote mighty or strong ones, particularly leaders or nobles. In 2 Kings 24:15, this construct plural refers to the elite of Judean society taken into Babylonian exile alongside King Jehoiachin. The term evokes strength and prominence, extended metaphorically from the powerful ram to powerful people. The bracketed glosses in translations suggest interpretive uncertainty about this rare usage.

(1×) Metaphorical extension from 'ram' to human leaders and nobles, emphasizing their strength and prominence. In the deportation list of 2 Kings 24:15, these 'mighty ones' represent Judah's ruling class carried to Babylon. The Spanish fuertes (strong ones) and other translations' bracketing reveal the semantic shift from animal to human domain, leveraging the ram's symbolic power to describe societal elites. RAM AND HORN

en: [mighty-ones-of] | es: [los-fuertes] | fr: [mighty-ceux-of] | de: [mighty-die-of] 2Kgs 24:15

אַיִל H0352a Conj-w / N-mpc (156×)

Ram; a male sheep, used prominently in sacrifice, tribute, food, and prophetic symbolism

The ayil is the mature male sheep, and its 156 Old Testament occurrences place it at the intersection of worship, economy, and prophecy. The ram caught in the thicket becomes Abraham's substitute offering at Moriah (Gen 22:13), establishing a pattern of divinely provided sacrifice. In the Levitical system, rams are prescribed for burnt offerings, guilt offerings, and the consecration of priests (Exod 29:15–22). Daniel's vision employs a ram with two horns as a symbol of the Medo-Persian empire (Dan 8:3–4). Translations converge on the standard male-sheep term: 'carnero,' 'bélier,' 'Widder.'

ram (male sheep) (156×) A mature male sheep, prominent across sacrificial, agricultural, economic, and visionary contexts in the Hebrew Bible. The ram appears as Abraham's substitute sacrifice (Gen 22:13), as the prescribed animal for priestly consecration and guilt offerings (Exod 29:15, Lev 5:15), as a commodity of trade and tribute (2 Kgs 3:4, 2 Chr 17:11), and as an apocalyptic symbol of royal power (Dan 8:3). Cross-linguistic evidence — Spanish 'carneros,' French 'béliers,' German 'Widder' — consistently identifies the male ovine without semantic ambiguity. RAM AND HORN

en: rams | es: carneros, los-carneros | fr: béliers | de: Widder Gen 22:13; Exod 29:15; Exod 29:16; Exod 29:17

אַיִל H0352b Art / N-mp (33×)

Projecting pillar, pilaster, or jamb flanking a gateway or door entrance, especially in temple architecture.

An architectural term for the vertical projections or pilasters that frame an entrance. Nearly all of its occurrences cluster in Ezekiel's detailed temple vision (chapters 40-41), where pairs of these structural members define the gateways at every threshold. The single occurrence in Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6:31) applies the same concept to a doorpost or lintel frame. Spanish 'pilares' and English 'jambs' capture the structural function, while French curiously renders 'bélier' (ram), likely confusing this word with the homograph meaning 'ram.'

1. pillar or jamb of gateway (32×) A projecting pillar or jamb built into the wall on each side of a gate entrance, forming the structural frame of the gateway. Overwhelmingly attested in Ezekiel 40-41, where these pilasters are measured, paired, and described as integral to every gate chamber. The Hebrew suffixed forms (eilav, 'its jambs') appear repeatedly as Ezekiel catalogs dimensions. Spanish 'sus pilares' and English 'its jambs' consistently mark these as paired architectural features (Ezek 40:9-10, 16, 21, 24). PORTICO PILLAR STAIRS

en: [ketiv], and-its-jambs, its-jambs | es: (sus-pilares), (y-sus-pilares), [sus-pilares] | fr: bélier, et-bélier, vers-lui | de: Widder, und-Widder, und-siehe Ezek 40:9; Ezek 40:10; Ezek 40:14

2. doorpost or lintel (1×) A doorpost or lintel framing the entrance of a door rather than a monumental gate, attested only at 1 Kings 6:31 in the description of Solomon's temple. English 'the posts' and Spanish 'el dintel' (lintel) distinguish this narrower domestic-scale usage from the grand gateway pilasters of Ezekiel. Some scholars emend the text to read eilam (porch), but the Masoretic text preserves the distinction. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: the-posts | es: el-dintel | fr: le-posts | de: der-posts 1Kgs 6:31

אַיִל H0352c N-msc (3×)

leaders, chiefs (derived from 'ram' as leader of the flock)

A term for leaders or chiefs, possibly derived metaphorically from the ram as the lead animal of a flock. This usage appears in elevated poetic contexts describing prominent figures among nations or peoples. The Song of Moses celebrates the terror that fell upon 'the chiefs of Moab' when Israel passed through. Ezekiel uses the term for prominent leaders or 'mighty ones' among the nations, those who stand at the head of their people like rams before a flock.

(3×) Exodus 15:15 recounts how trembling seized 'the chiefs of Moab' when they witnessed Israel's deliverance at the sea. Ezekiel 17:13 and 31:11 refer to prominent leaders—'the mighty one of the nations' or 'the leaders of the land.' The metaphorical link to rams (male sheep that lead and protect the flock) suggests strength, prominence, and authority. These are not merely officials but figures who embody their people's power and stand out as representatives of collective might. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: leaders-of, mighty-one-of-, mighty-ones-of | es: el-poderoso-de, poderosos-de, poderosos-de- | fr: leaders-de, pilastre | de: Fuehrer-von, Widder, [אילי] Exod 15:15; Ezek 17:13; Ezek 31:11

אַיִל H0352d N-mpc (3×)

terebinths, oaks (prominent trees marking sacred or significant sites)

A term for large, prominent trees—likely terebinths or oaks—often associated with idolatrous worship sites in biblical texts. These trees marked locations where Israelites shamefully practiced syncretistic rituals, burning incense under their shade. The prophets invoke these trees as symbols of misplaced devotion and coming judgment. The connection to prominence and height may link this usage to the general sense of 'leaders,' as these trees stood out in the landscape much as chiefs stood out among people.

(3×) Isaiah 1:29 warns that Israel will be ashamed of 'the oaks that you desired'—trees under which illicit worship occurred. Isaiah 61:3 transforms the image positively, calling the redeemed 'oaks of righteousness,' strong and enduring. Ezekiel 31:14 may use this term for proud, haughty ones (though the text is uncertain). Across these passages, the multilingual glosses reflect interpretive uncertainty—some read 'oaks,' others 'toward them'—but the dominant sense involves prominent natural markers that became focal points for religious activity, both faithful and faithless. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: oaks-of, of-the-oaks, to-them | es: a-ellos, de-las-encinas, robles-de | fr: [אילי], [מאילים], vers-eux | de: [אילי], [אלים], [מאילים] Isa 1:29; Isa 61:3; Ezek 31:14

אֵיל H0353 N-ms (1×)
strength, help, power
A rare Aramaic loanword meaning strength or help, appearing only in Psalm 88:4 in the phrase 'like a man who has no strength.' BDB notes the borrowing from Aramaic אֵיל, distinguishing this from the more common Hebrew terms for strength. The psalmist describes himself as powerless, abandoned among the dead. The multilingual evidence clusters around force, strength, and help, reflecting physical and existential weakness.

(1×) Denotes the absence of vital strength or capacity to act, used in Psalm 88:4 to describe the psalmist's utter helplessness. As an Aramaic loanword, it brings a nuanced sense of lacking vigorous life-force. The French force and Spanish fuerza emphasize physical power, while the context of being 'among the dead' suggests complete depletion. This rare term intensifies the lament's portrayal of human frailty before death. POWER AND MIRACLES
en: strength | es: fuerza | fr: force | de: Stärke Ps 88:4

אַיָּל H0354 Art / N-ms (11×)
Hart, stag, deer — a male deer permitted as clean food and used as a figure of grace, longing, and swiftness
The noun אַיָּל (ʾayyal) designates a male deer or stag, one of the clean animals in Israel's dietary law and a richly evocative figure in Hebrew poetry. Deuteronomy lists the deer alongside the gazelle as permitted food (Deut 12:15, 22; 14:5), and Solomon's table included it (1 Kgs 4:23). In Psalm 42:1 the deer panting for water becomes the soul's thirst for God. The Song of Songs likens the beloved to a young stag leaping on the mountains (Song 2:9). Isaiah promises the lame will 'leap like a deer' (Isa 35:6). Spanish 'ciervo' and French 'cerf' capture both registers.

hart, stag, deer (11×) A male deer or stag as a clean animal permitted for food under Mosaic law. Listed alongside the gazelle in Deuteronomy's dietary provisions (Deut 12:15, 22; 14:5) and served at Solomon's court (1 Kgs 4:23). Game that could be eaten by ritually clean and unclean persons alike. Spanish 'ciervo' and Arabic غزال both identify the species. DEER AND GAZELLE
en: and-as-the-deer, as-a-deer, deer | es: Como-cierva, ciervo, como-ciervos | fr: cerf, comme-cerf, comme-des-cerfs | de: [כאיל], [כאילים], deer Deut 12:15; Deut 12:22; Deut 14:5; Deut 15:22; 1Kgs 4:23

אַיָּלָה H0355 Prep-k (8×)
A hind or doe (female deer), used in poetry as a figure of grace, swiftness, and sure-footedness
This feminine noun designates the hind or doe — the female deer — and appears almost exclusively in poetic and wisdom literature. Naphtali is compared to a doe set free giving beautiful words (Gen 49:21), and God is praised for making feet swift and sure like those of a hind (2 Sam 22:34; Ps 18:33; Hab 3:19). The Song of Songs adjures by the 'does of the field' (Song 2:7; 3:5). Spanish 'cierva,' French 'biche,' and German 'Hirschkuh' all confirm the consistent zoological identification across traditions.

hind, doe, female deer (8×) The feminine noun אַיָּלָה, denoting a female deer (hind, doe), used across poetic, wisdom, and prophetic contexts as a symbol of grace and agility. In Genesis 49:21, Naphtali is likened to a doe let loose; in 2 Samuel 22:34, Psalm 18:33, and Habakkuk 3:19, God makes the psalmist's feet like those of a hind — swift and sure-footed on high places. Job 39:1 and Psalm 29:9 depict the doe calving. Song of Songs 2:7 and 3:5 invoke the 'does of the field' in an adjuration formula. Multilingual glosses — Spanish 'cierva,' French 'biche,' German 'Hirschkuh/Gazelle' — uniformly identify the animal as a female cervid. DEER AND GAZELLE
en: by-does-of, doe, like-the-deer | es: cierva, ciervas, como-de-ciervas | fr: biche, comme-biche, comme-le-deer | de: Gazelle, der-Hirsch, eine-Hirschkuh Gen 49:21; 2Sam 22:34; Job 39:1; Ps 18:33; Ps 29:9

אֵלוֹן H0356 N-ms (7×)
Elon, a proper name borne by a Hittite, a Zebulunite clan ancestor, a judge of Israel, and a Danite town.
A proper noun meaning 'oak' or 'terebinth,' shared by several biblical figures and one town. Elon the Hittite was Esau's father-in-law (Gen 26:34; 36:2). Elon son of Zebulun founded a clan (Gen 46:14; Num 26:26). A later Elon from Zebulun served as a minor judge for ten years (Judg 12:11-12). The name also designates a town in Dan (Josh 19:43). The consistent transliteration across languages – Spanish 'Elon/Elon,' French 'Elon/Elon,' German 'Elon' – reflects its simple phonology.

Elon (proper name) (7×) The proper name Elon (meaning 'oak' or 'terebinth'), applied to multiple individuals and one location: (a) Elon the Hittite, father of Basemath/Adah, Esau's wife (Gen 26:34; 36:2); (b) Elon son of Zebulun, eponymous ancestor of the Elonite clan (Gen 46:14; Num 26:26); (c) Elon the Zebulunite, a minor judge who judged Israel ten years before being buried in Aijalon (Judg 12:11-12); and (d) a Danite town (Josh 19:43). Spanish preserves the accent ('Elon') while other languages transliterate uniformly. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Elon, and-Elon, to-Elon | es: Elon, Elón, de-Elón | fr: Elon, et-Elon, et-Élon | de: Elon, Elons, und-Elon Gen 26:34; Gen 36:2; Gen 46:14; Num 26:26; Josh 19:43

אַיָּלוֹן H0357 N-proper-fs (10×)
Aijalon — a Levitical city in the territory of Dan, in the valley where Joshua commanded the moon to stand still
The place name אַיָּלוֹן (Aijalon), likely derived from אַיָּל (deer/stag), designates a city in the Shephelah foothills allotted to the tribe of Dan and later assigned as a Levitical city. Its fame rests on Joshua's dramatic command: 'Moon, stand still over the valley of Aijalon' (Josh 10:12). The Amorites retained control for some time, as the Danites struggled to dispossess them (Judg 1:35). It later served as a fortified city under Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:10) and was seized by the Philistines in Ahaz's day (2 Chr 28:18). Spanish 'Ajalón' and English 'Aijalon' both transliterate the Hebrew directly.

Aijalon (place name) (10×) A city in the Shephelah foothills within Dan's tribal allotment, identified with modern Yalo northwest of Jerusalem. Best known from Joshua's battlefield prayer for the moon to halt over its valley (Josh 10:12). Listed among Dan's cities (Josh 19:42), assigned to the Kohathite Levites (Josh 21:24; 1 Chr 6:69), and mentioned in the Amorite resistance narrative (Judg 1:35). Later fortified by Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:10) and lost to Philistine raids under Ahaz (2 Chr 28:18). Spanish 'Ajalón' and French 'Ayyalôn' preserve the Semitic form. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Aijalon, Ayalon, and-Ayyalon | es: Ajalón, Ayalon, Ayalón | fr: Aijalon, Ayalon, [אילון] | de: Aijalon, Ayalon, [אילון] Josh 10:12; Josh 19:42; Josh 21:24; Judg 1:35; Judg 12:12

בֵּית חָנָן H0358 N-proper-fs (2×)
Elon-beth-hanan, a place name, possibly 'oak of Beth-hanan'
A compound place name appearing in Solomon's administrative district list in 1 Kings 4:9. BDB suggests reading this as two separate places: Elon and Beth-hanan, rather than a single compound 'Elon-beth-hanan.' The location was in Dan or possibly in Judah or Philistine territory. Modern scholarship identifies it with Beit Hanun. The name appears twice in the same verse, likely representing the scribe's way of listing what may have been understood as distinct locations.

(2×) Multilingual glosses split the compound: English 'Beth-Hanan and Elon,' Spanish 'Bet-Janán y Eilón,' French 'Beth-Hanan et Elon,' German 'Beth-Hanan und Elon,' all treating these as coordinate rather than subordinate elements. This supports BDB's textual proposal to read two place names. The dual occurrence in 1 Kings 4:9 represents administrative boundary markers in Solomon's second district under Ben-Deker's governance. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Beth-Hanan, and-Elon | es: Bet-Janán, y-Eilón | fr: Beth-Hanan, et-Elon | de: Beth-Hanan, und-Elon 1Kgs 4:9

אֵילַת H0359a N-proper-fs (4×)

Eilat (Elath), a port town on the northeastern arm of the Red Sea (Gulf of Aqaba)

A place name designating a town and harbor at the northern tip of the Gulf of Aqaba, the eastern arm of the Red Sea. The name likely derives from a word meaning 'lofty tree(s),' probably referring to the palm groves of the region. It appears in connection with Israel's wilderness route (Deut 2:8) and later as a strategically contested port city that Uzziah rebuilt and Rezin recaptured (2 Kgs 14:22; 16:6). Cross-language renderings consistently preserve the Semitic name: English 'Elath,' Spanish 'Elat,' French 'Elath,' and German 'Elath.'

(4×) The port city of Eilat/Elath on the Gulf of Aqaba. Israel passed near it during the wilderness wanderings (Deut 2:8), and it later became a prized harbor: Azariah (Uzziah) rebuilt it for Judah (2 Kgs 14:22), but the Aramean king Rezin wrested it back (2 Kgs 16:6). All major translations transliterate the name with minimal variation, reflecting its enduring geographic identity. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Eilat, Elath, from-Elath | es: Elat, desde-Elat | fr: Eilat, Elath, de-Elath | de: Eilat, Elath, von-Elath Deut 2:8; 2Kgs 14:22; 2Kgs 16:6

אֵילוֹת H0359b Prep-m / N-proper-fs (4×)

Eloth, alternate spelling of the Red Sea port town Eilat on the Gulf of Aqaba

An alternate form of the place name Eilat (H0359a), appearing with a plural or feminine ending that may reflect 'grove of lofty trees (palms).' This spelling occurs in passages describing Solomon's fleet at the port (1 Kgs 9:26), the contested recapture under Rezin (2 Kgs 16:6), and the Chronicler's parallel accounts (2 Chr 8:17; 26:2). The variation between Eilat and Eloth likely reflects dialectal or scribal convention rather than two distinct locations.

(4×) The port city of Eloth, identical with Eilat, on the Gulf of Aqaba. Solomon based his merchant fleet there (1 Kgs 9:26; 2 Chr 8:17), and Uzziah later restored it to Judah (2 Chr 26:2). English typically renders it 'Eloth,' while Spanish and French waver between 'Eilat' and 'Eloth,' confirming the two spellings refer to the same strategic harbor town. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Eilot, Eloth, Eylot | es: Eilat, Elat, Elot | fr: Eloth, [אילות], de-Elath | de: Eloth, [אילות], von-Elath 1Kgs 9:26; 2Kgs 16:6; 2Chr 8:17; 2Chr 26:2

אֵילוּתִי H0360 N-fsc / 1cs (1×)

my help, my strength

The feminine form of H0353 with first-person suffix, appearing in Psalm 22:19 where the psalmist cries 'O Lord, my help, hasten to my aid!' The parallelism with יהוה shows this term expressing desperate dependence on divine assistance. Like H0353, it's an Aramaic loanword, intensifying the plea for rescue. The multilingual glosses split between 'strength' and 'help,' both capturing the essence of needed empowerment.

(1×) First-person cry for divine assistance in extremis. In Psalm 22:19's climactic plea, the psalmist identifies the Lord as 'my help' or 'my strength,' the only source of deliverance from mortal danger. The possessive suffix intensifies personal dependence. Spanish mi-fuerza and German mein-helfen diverge slightly between internal capacity and external aid, but both reflect the urgent need for intervention when surrounded by enemies and death. POWER AND MIRACLES
en: my-help | es: mi-fuerza | fr: force | de: mein-helfen Ps 22:19

אֵילָם H0361 Conj-w / N-mp (27×)

portico, porch — the covered vestibule or colonnaded entry structure of Ezekiel's visionary temple

Elam (also spelled eilam) is an architectural term for a portico, porch, or vestibule, appearing 27 times exclusively within Ezekiel's detailed vision of the restored temple (Ezek 40-41). It is a variant of the more common ulam and designates the covered entry structure that fronted each gate complex in the prophet's measured plan. The term appears repeatedly as Ezekiel's angelic guide measures the porches of the east gate (Ezek 40:16, 21-22), the north gate (Ezek 40:24-26), and the south gate (Ezek 40:29-31, 33-34), with each gate's porch facing the outer court. The portico of the inner temple itself also receives measurement (Ezek 40:48-49; 41:15, 25-26). Because the word occurs only in these architectural specifications, its meaning is fixed by context: a roofed columned entryway. The textual tradition shows considerable variation between ketiv and qere forms (eilammo vs. eilammav, 'its porch' vs. 'its porches'), suggesting early scribal uncertainty about number. Spanish renders it 'portico,' German 'Vorhalle' — both capturing the entrance-hall sense precisely.

portico, porch (architectural structure) (27×) The covered portico or vestibule fronting each gate complex and the inner sanctuary in Ezekiel's temple vision (Ezek 40-41). A variant of the more common ulam, this term is confined entirely to Ezekiel's architectural measurements, where the angelic guide records the dimensions of each gate's porch — east (Ezek 40:16, 21-22), north (Ezek 40:24-26), south (Ezek 40:29-31, 33-34) — and the vestibule of the temple proper (Ezek 40:48-49; 41:15, 25-26). Ketiv/qere variation between singular and plural forms suggests early textual fluidity. Spanish 'portico' and German 'Vorhalle' converge on the entrance-hall concept. PORTICO PILLAR STAIRS
en: [ketiv], and-its-porches | es: (y-sus-pórticos), Y-su-pórtico, [y-a-sus-pórticos] | fr: [ואילמן], [ואילמין], [ואלמן] | de: und-Vorhalle Ezek 40:16; Ezek 40:21; Ezek 40:22

אֵילִים H0362 N-proper-fs (6×)

Elim, an oasis with twelve springs and seventy palms; the second Israelite camp after crossing the Red Sea.

A place name meaning 'terebinths' or 'great trees,' identifying the second wilderness station after Israel's crossing of the sea. Elim is remembered for its twelve springs of water and seventy palm trees, a welcome respite after the bitter waters of Marah. The site is commonly identified with Wadi Gharandel in the western Sinai. Its abundant water supply made it a natural resting point, and the specific numbers (twelve and seventy) may carry symbolic resonance with Israel's tribal and elder structures.

from Elim (6×) Elim (אֵילִם, 'terebinths' or 'great trees'), the oasis campsite where Israel rested after Marah. Its twelve springs and seventy palms are recorded in Exod 15:27 and the itinerary of Num 33:9-10. The departure from Elim toward the Wilderness of Sin is noted in Exod 16:1. Spanish renders directional uses as a-Elim ('to Elim') and de-Elim ('from Elim'), while French distinguishes de-Elim and de-Elim, reflecting the prepositional variety in the Hebrew source text as Israel arrives at and departs from this welcome oasis. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Elim, Elim-ward, and-in-Elim | es: Elim, a-Elim, de-Elim | fr: Elim-ward, de-Elim, de-Élim | de: Elim, Elim-ward, und-in-Elim Exod 15:27; Exod 16:1; Num 33:9

אֵזָא H0363 N-ms (6×)

Tree (Aramaic); a large tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream symbolizing his far-reaching dominion.

An Aramaic noun for 'tree,' appearing exclusively in Daniel 4 within Nebuchadnezzar's famous dream-vision. The great tree that grew to heaven, visible to the ends of the earth, with birds nesting in its branches and beasts sheltering beneath it, represents the king himself and his vast empire. Daniel interprets the tree's cutting down as divine judgment on Nebuchadnezzar's pride. The word is distinct from common Hebrew terms for tree and belongs to the Aramaic vocabulary sections of Daniel.

the tree (6×) Tree (Aramaic אִילָן), used in Daniel 4 for the enormous tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The tree grows great and strong, reaching to heaven, visible across the whole earth, providing food and shelter for all creatures (Dan 4:10-11). It symbolizes Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom, and the command to cut it down represents divine humbling of the king (Dan 4:14, 20, 23). French renders it as l'arbre, Spanish as el-arbol, both with the definite article reflecting the narrative's focus on one specific, singular tree of cosmic proportions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-tree, tree | es: el-árbol, un-árbol | fr: [אילן], l'arbre | de: Baum, der-Baum Dan 4:10; Dan 4:11; Dan 4:14; Dan 4:20; Dan 4:23

אֵיל פָּארָן H0364 N-proper-fs (1×)

El-paran, place name (terebinth or palm of Paran)

A geographical location at the head of the Gulf of Aqaba, mentioned in Genesis 14:6 during the campaign of the eastern kings. The name means 'terebinth (or palm) of Paran,' and BDB identifies it with various forms: אֵלָה, אֵילַת, אֵילוֹת. Close to Ezion-geber, this was a strategic port town. The multilingual glosses preserve the composite name, with some translating 'El' as 'God' though it likely refers to a tree.

(1×) Ancient harbor settlement near the wilderness of Paran, captured by Kedorlaomer's coalition in Genesis 14:6. The name's etymology suggests either a sacred terebinth tree or a prominent palm, marking this oasis location. Identified with later sites like Elath and Ezion-geber, it served as a key port on the Red Sea trade routes. French Dieu-Paran reflects possible theophoric interpretation, though botanical origin seems more likely. PERSONAL NAMES

en: El-Paran | es: El-Parán | fr: Dieu-Paran | de: El-Paran Gen 14:6

אַיָּלָה H0365 N-fsc (3×)

doe, hind (female deer, symbol of grace and agility)

A female deer or doe, celebrated in Scripture for its beauty, grace, and sure-footedness. The hind appears in comparisons of agility and security, especially in the Psalms where God makes the believer's feet 'like the feet of a doe' on high places. Proverbs uses the image for wifely affection, while Jeremiah depicts even the doe abandoning her newborn in severe drought. The animal embodies both tender vulnerability and remarkable strength, making it a versatile symbol in Hebrew poetry.

(3×) Psalm 22:1's title 'The Doe of the Dawn' (likely a tune name) evokes this graceful creature. Proverbs 5:19 compares a wife's love to a doe's affection—gentle, loyal, satisfying. Jeremiah 14:5 intensifies the horror of drought by describing even the doe forsaking her newborn fawn for lack of grass. The doe's associations—beauty, devotion, maternal instinct, and mountain-climbing agility—made it a rich source for metaphor across wisdom, worship, and prophetic literature. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-doe-of, doe, the-doe-of | es: Cierva, cierva, cierva-de | fr: [אילת], biche, אילת | de: [אילת], der-doe-von Ps 22:1; Prov 5:19; Jer 14:5

אַיִם H0366 Adj-ms (3×)

awesome, awe-inspiring, terrible (evoking fear mixed with reverence)

An adjective describing something that inspires awe or dread, used both for terrifying military might and for dignified, almost overwhelming beauty. Habakkuk applies it to the Chaldeans, whose very appearance struck fear into their enemies. The Song of Songs uses it twice to describe the beloved's majestic beauty—she is 'awesome as an army with banners,' a phrase that blends attraction with overwhelming power. The term captures that trembling response when encountering something too great to approach casually.

(3×) Song of Songs 6:4 and 6:10 describe the beloved as 'awesome as bannered hosts'—her beauty commands the kind of reverent fear that armies inspire. Habakkuk 1:7 portrays the Chaldeans as 'dread and terrible,' a people whose self-derived authority and fierce reputation precede them. The Hebrew root suggests causing trembling, whether through beauty that overwhelms, military might that terrifies, or divine presence that humbles. The word stands at the intersection of aesthetic wonder and fearful respect. TERROR AND AWE

en: awesome, dreadful | es: Terrible, imponente | fr: redoutable, terrible | de: [אים], [אימה] Song 6:4; Song 6:10; Hab 1:7

אֵימָה H0367 N-fpc / 2ms (17×)

Terror, dread, or fear – the paralyzing awe inspired by God, enemies, or death; once, terrifying idols or images.

A feminine noun from a root conveying raw, visceral fear, appearing mostly in poetry and elevated prose. It describes the dread that falls upon people from God's own presence (Exod 15:16; 23:27; Deut 32:25), the terror of enemies (Josh 2:9; Isa 33:18), the fear inspired by a king (Prov 20:2), and the 'terrors of death' that overwhelm the psalmist (Ps 55:4-5). The mysterious 'dread and great darkness' that fell on Abraham (Gen 15:12) uses this same word. In one distinctive occurrence (Jer 50:38), multilingual evidence diverges sharply: Spanish renders it 'imagenes horribles' and Arabic uses 'idols,' suggesting concrete objects of terror rather than the abstract emotion – likely terrifying cult images associated with Babylon.

1. terror, dread, fear (16×) The abstract emotion of terror, dread, or paralyzing fear. Used of divine dread falling on nations (Exod 15:16, paired with pakhad; Exod 23:27), existential anguish (Gen 15:12, 'dread and great darkness'), fear of enemies (Josh 2:9; Isa 33:18), the terror of death (Ps 55:4-5), and the awe inspired by royal power (Prov 20:2). German 'Schrecken' and Spanish 'terror' consistently reflect the raw, visceral quality of this fear. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-His-terror, and-dread-your, and-terrors-of | es: el-terror, en-temor, hay-terrores. | fr: [אימה], [באימה], dread | de: Amittai, Schrecken, [אימה] Gen 15:12; Exod 15:16; Exod 23:27; Deut 32:25; Josh 2:9

2. terrifying things or idols (1×) Concrete objects of terror – frightful images or idols that inspire dread. In Jeremiah 50:38, the multilingual evidence points away from abstract fear: Spanish renders 'imagenes horribles,' Arabic and Swahili translate as 'idols,' while English gives 'terrors' in a context describing Babylon's cult objects. This sense likely refers to the terrifying carved figures of Babylonian worship, representing a metonymic extension from the emotion to the thing that causes it. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: and-by-terrors | es: y-con-imágenes-horribles | fr: [ובאימים] | de: [ובאימם] Jer 50:38

אֵימִים H0368 Art / N-proper-mp (3×)

Emim (ancient people whose name means 'terrors' or 'fearful ones')

An ancient people dwelling in Moab before the Moabites dispossessed them, known to Israel as giants who inspired fear. The name itself derives from a root meaning 'terror' or 'dread,' reflecting either their reputation or the fear they evoked. Genesis and Deuteronomy classify them alongside the Anakim—both groups remembered as formidable in stature. Like other pre-conquest inhabitants, they represent the powerful nations God displaced to make room for his chosen peoples, demonstrating that no human strength can withstand divine purpose.

(3×) Genesis 14:5 mentions the Emim among the peoples defeated by Chedorlaomer's coalition in the region east of the Jordan. Deuteronomy 2:10-11 explains that the Moabites called them Emim, though they were 'a people great and many, and tall as the Anakim'—both groups reckoned as Rephaim (giants). The name 'terrors' captures their intimidating presence, yet the text reminds Israel that God enabled even these fearsome peoples to be displaced when he decreed their time had ended. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Emim, the-Emim | es: emim, emitas, los-emim | fr: Emim, le-Emim | de: Emim, der-Emim, die-Emiter Gen 14:5; Deut 2:10; Deut 2:11

אַיִן H0369 Adv (790×)

There is not, nothing, nought; a particle of non-existence used for negating being, presence, or availability.

The particle 'ayin (construct 'en) is Hebrew's primary tool for denying existence — the dark mirror of yesh ('there is'). Where yesh affirms presence, 'en negates it: 'there is no king in Israel' (Judg 21:25), 'there is no God besides me' (Isa 45:5). It inflects with pronominal suffixes to create a pseudo-verbal paradigm — 'eneni ('I am not'), 'enekha ('you are not'), 'enennu ('he is not') — unique among Semitic negators. Arabic laysa serves a similar function, as do Aramaic layt and Ethiopic albo. Beyond flat negation, 'ayin develops a private prepositional use ('without'), and in its absolute form can mean 'nothing, nought,' as when Isaiah declares God 'brings princes to nothing' (Isa 40:23).

1. existential negation: there is not (738×) The core existential negation: 'there is not, there are not, he/she/it is not present.' This massive cluster of 738 occurrences covers all inflected forms with pronominal suffixes (1cs through 3mp) and with or without conjunctive waw. It functions as the standard negator of existence and presence throughout the Hebrew Bible. Joseph tells Pharaoh 'there is none who can interpret' (Gen 41:15); the spies report 'there is no one in the city' (Gen 19:31). Arabic laysa, French il n'y a pas, and German es gibt nicht all converge on the same existential-negation frame. The pseudo-verbal suffix conjugation ('eneni, 'enekha, 'enennu, etc.) gives this particle a verbal feel unmatched by simple adverbs. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: none, nothing, there-is-no | es: no, no-está, no-hay | fr: aucun, là-est-aucun, là-est-ne-pas | de: dort-ist-keiner, dort-ist-nein, dort-ist-nicht Gen 19:31; Gen 20:11; Gen 31:50; Gen 40:8; Gen 41:15

2. privative: without, for lack of (37×) Privative prepositional sense: 'without, for lack of, in the absence of.' Thirty-seven occurrences, typically with prefixed min (me'ayin), be (be'en), or le (le'en), yielding compound prepositions meaning 'without.' Exodus 21:11 stipulates a slave-wife may go free 'without payment'; Nehemiah exhorts the people to feast 'for those who have nothing prepared' (Neh 8:10). Spanish sin, German ohne, and Arabic bila all select dedicated privative prepositions here, distinguishing this clearly from simple non-existence. The semantic shift from 'there is not X' to 'lacking X' is natural but produces a genuinely distinct syntactic and semantic pattern. WITHOUT AND APART FROM en: without | es: sin, sin- | fr: de-il-n'y-a-pas, il-n'y-a-pas, il-n'y-a-pas | de: es-ist-nicht, ohne, ohne-kein Exod 21:11; 2Chr 14:11; 2Chr 14:13; Neh 8:10; Ps 32:9

3. (9×) Simple verbal negation in rhetorical or conditional contexts — 9 occurrences where 'en functions as a bare negator ('not') rather than expressing non-existence per se. Moses asks at Massah 'Is the LORD among us or not?' (Exod 17:7); God tells Moses 'if not, blot me out of your book' (Exod 32:32); the spies are instructed to assess the land — 'whether there are trees in it or not' (Num 13:20). The gloss evidence shows simple negation particles (English 'not,' Spanish no, French ne...pas, German nicht) rather than existential vocabulary, confirming a pragmatic shift from existential denial to general negation in certain discourse frames. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: not | es: no, no-hay, no? | fr: ne-pas, pas | de: nicht Exod 17:7; Exod 32:18; Exod 32:32; Exod 33:15; Num 13:20

4. (6×) Substantival or comparative use: 'nothingness, as nothing.' Six occurrences where 'ayin serves as a noun or in the comparative ke'ayin ('as nothing'). Isaiah 40:17 declares 'all the nations are as nothing before him'; Psalm 39:5 laments that every person standing firm is 'altogether as nothing'; Haggai 2:3 asks about the temple's former glory — 'is it not as nothing in your eyes?' The comparative ke'ayin is paired with Hebrew kim'at ('almost') in Ps 73:2, where the psalmist's feet 'almost' slipped — the sense of approaching zero, near-nothingness. Arabic ka'adam ('as non-existence') and German wie-es-ist-nicht both capture the comparative-nullity construction. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: almost, are-as-nothing, as-nothing | es: como-nada | fr: comme-il-n'y-a-pas, comme-il-n'y-a-pas | de: kein, wie-es-ist-nicht Ps 39:5; Ps 73:2; Isa 40:17; Isa 41:11; Isa 41:12

אָיִן H0370 Conj-w (17×)

From where? Whence? An interrogative adverb of origin or source, often with rhetorical or poetic force.

The compound מֵאַיִן (from מִן 'from' and אַיִן 'where') asks about origin or source. While the prosaic synonym אֵי־מִזֶּה serves the same function in everyday speech, מֵאַיִן carries a more elevated, often rhetorical or poetic tone. Jacob asks the shepherds 'From where are you?' (Gen 29:4), Joseph confronts his brothers with 'From where have you come?' (Gen 42:7), and Moses cries out in frustration, 'From where am I to get meat for all this people?' (Num 11:13). In wisdom literature the question becomes profoundly theological: 'From where does wisdom come?' (Job 28:12, 20). The Psalmist asks, 'From where does my help come?' and answers, 'from the LORD' (Ps 121:1-2).

from where (17×) An interrogative adverb asking about origin or source — 'from where?' or 'whence?' Used both in practical inquiries about a person's homeland (Gen 29:4; Gen 42:7; Judg 17:9; 19:17) and in elevated rhetorical or poetic questions that probe deeper realities: Moses' exasperated 'From where am I to get meat?' (Num 11:13), Job's profound 'From where does wisdom come?' (Job 28:12, 20), and the Psalmist's trustful 'From where does my help come?' (Ps 121:1). French 'de-où' and Spanish 'de-dónde' reflect the compound prepositional structure. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES en: and-from-where, from-where | es: De-dónde, de-dónde, y-de-donde | fr: [ומאין], de-il-n'y-a-pas, de-où | de: [ומאין], und-von-es-ist-nicht, und-von-wo Gen 29:4; Gen 42:7; Num 11:13; Josh 2:4; Josh 9:8

אִין H0371 Conj-w / Adv (1×)

and is there not? (irregular negative with existential particle)

An unusual construction in 1 Samuel 21:9, where David asks 'Is there not here a spear or sword?' The form is likely irregular for אַיִן with pleonastic יֵשׁ, creating a double emphasis. Some scholars suggest dialectal influence from Aramaic אִין. The text shows syntactic compression where negation and existence collide. Translations struggle to capture the Hebraic emphatic denial turned into urgent question.

(1×) Emphatic interrogative negation seeking urgent confirmation of availability. David's question in 1 Samuel 21:9 combines negative and existential particles for rhetorical force: 'Surely there is (something) here?' The Spanish y-no-hay and French est-là-pas attempt to preserve the double construction. This dialectal or colloquial form may reflect spoken Hebrew's flexibility with existential constructions, especially under duress as David flees from Saul. NEGATION PARTICLES en: and-is-there-not | es: y-no-hay | fr: et-est-là-pas | de: und-ist-dort-nicht 1Sam 21:9

אֲבִיעֶזֶר H0372 N-proper-ms (1×)

Iezer, personal name (abbreviated form of Abiezer)

A Manassite clan name, the shortened form of Abiezer ('my father is help'). Numbers 26:30 uses this abbreviated version in the census list, while other texts employ the full form. Iezer was reckoned as a 'son' of Gilead in the tribal genealogies. The gentilics Iezerite and Abiezrite both appear in Scripture, showing fluid use of abbreviated and full name forms in ancient Israel.

(1×) Clan designation within the tribe of Manasseh, representing descendants of Iezer/Abiezer. In Numbers 26:30's census, this shortened form appears without the theophoric element 'father,' though the meaning remains understood. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate, as typical for personal and clan names. This variant demonstrates Hebrew onomastic flexibility, where abbreviated forms functioned interchangeably with fuller theophoric names in genealogical contexts. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Iezer | es: Iezer | fr: Iezer | de: Iezer Num 26:30

אֲבִי הָעֶזְרִי H0373 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Iezerite (gentilic with article)

The gentilic form with definite article, designating members of the Iezer/Abiezer clan within Manasseh. Numbers 26:30 uses this to denote the family group descended from Iezer. The article makes it definite: 'the Iezerite [family].' This grammatical form is typical in census and genealogical lists where clan membership needed clear articulation. Equal to אֲבִי הָעֶזְרִי in other passages.

(1×) Definite gentilic referring to the Iezerite clan as a recognized family unit within Manasseh's tribal structure. The article הָ- specifies this particular group in Numbers 26:30's census list. Multilingual renderings (the-Iezerite, los-iezeritas, le-Iezerite, der-Iezerite) uniformly preserve the definiteness, indicating an established, identifiable kinship group. This contrasts with indefinite usage, emphasizing the clan's recognized standing in Israel's tribal confederation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Iezerite | es: los-iezeritas | fr: le-Iezerite | de: der-Iezerite Num 26:30

אֵיפָה H0374 N-fs (40×)

ephah — a dry measure of approximately 22 liters, used for grain and flour, especially in offerings

The 'ephah is the principal dry measure of the Hebrew Bible, appearing 40 times primarily in priestly and prophetic contexts. Equal to one-tenth of a homer (Ezek 45:11) and containing ten omers (Exod 16:36), it amounts to roughly 22 liters or three-fifths of a bushel. Most occurrences specify quantities for grain offerings: 'a tenth of an ephah of fine flour' is the standard minchah proportion (Lev 5:11; 6:20; Num 5:15; 28:5). Ezekiel's temple vision prescribes ephah measures extensively for offerings (Ezek 45-46). Beyond the cult, the ephah appears in daily life: Gideon prepares an ephah of flour for the angel (Judg 6:19), Ruth gleans about an ephah of barley (Ruth 2:17), and Isaiah warns that a field yielding only a bath from a homer's seed signals divine judgment (Isa 5:10). The 'ephah and weights must be just — a recurring ethical demand (Lev 19:36; Deut 25:14-15; Amos 8:5).

ephah (dry measure) (40×) A standard unit of dry capacity equal to approximately 22 liters, used for measuring grain, flour, and other dry goods in both cultic and quotidian settings. Most frequently appears in priestly offering regulations as the base from which fractional quantities are specified — 'a tenth of an ephah' (Lev 5:11; Num 5:15; 28:5). Ezekiel's visionary temple mandates exact ephah measures for prince and people (Ezek 45:13, 24; 46:5-14). Outside the cult, Ruth's harvest (Ruth 2:17) and Gideon's offering (Judg 6:19) demonstrate its everyday use. Spanish 'efa,' French 'epha,' German 'Efa' — all transliterations — confirm that no native equivalent existed in target languages. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: and-ephah, ephah, the-ephah | es: El-efa, efa, el-efa | fr: et-épha, le-ephah, le-épha | de: Efa, das-Efa, der-ephah Exod 16:36; Lev 5:11; Lev 6:20; Lev 19:36; Num 5:15

אַיֵּפֹה H0375 Conj-w / Interrog (10×)

Where? — interrogative adverb of place, demanding identification of a location or situation

The interrogative adverb אַיְפֹה (eifoh) asks 'where?' with a directness that often carries emotional or theological weight beyond mere geography. When Joseph asks shepherds 'where are they pasturing?' (Gen 37:16), the question launches the pivotal narrative of his descent into Egypt. Ruth's mother-in-law Naomi asks 'where did you glean today?' (Ruth 2:19), probing for evidence of providential care. Most dramatically, God challenges Job: 'Where were you when I laid the earth's foundation?' (Job 38:4), using the spatial question to expose the gulf between divine and human knowledge. Spanish '¿dónde?' and French 'où?' capture the interrogative force.

Where? (interrogative of place) (10×) An interrogative adverb meaning 'where?' used to inquire about location, often with narrative or theological significance beyond the literal question. Joseph uses it to seek his brothers' whereabouts (Gen 37:16), Naomi uses it to discover Ruth's benefactor (Ruth 2:19), and God deploys it as a devastating rhetorical weapon against Job (Job 38:4). Also appears in Isaiah 49:21 and Judges 8:18. The compound form (אַ֫יֵּה פֹּה +, 'where here?') intensifies the immediacy. Spanish '¿dónde?' and German 'wo?' reflect the direct interrogative sense. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: and-where, where | es: dónde, y-dónde, ¿Dónde | fr: [אֵיפֹה], et-אֵיפֹה, où | de: Efa, [אֵיפֹה], und-Efa Gen 37:16; Judg 8:18; Ruth 2:19; 1Sam 19:22; 2Sam 9:4

אִישׁ H0376 Art / N-mp (2187×)

Man (as opposed to woman), husband, each one; covers individual males, persons in general, and distributive pronominal use.

Ish is the Hebrew word for 'man' in the most concrete, embodied sense — the male human being as distinct from woman (ishah), from child, and from beast. It first appears at the climax of Eden's narrative: 'she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of Man' (Gen 2:23), establishing the ish/ishah pair that echoes throughout Scripture. But ish is far more versatile than English 'man': it serves as the standard word for 'husband' (often with possessive suffixes — 'her ish'), as an indefinite pronoun ('a certain man,' 'each one,' 'anyone'), and in construct chains that define social roles ('men of war,' 'men of the city'). Arabic rajul, Spanish hombre/varon, Korean saram/namja, and German Mann all track the core meaning, but the distributive-pronominal function — 'each man to his tent' — is a distinctly Semitic feature that other languages handle with separate pronouns.

1. man, person, human male (2130×) The primary sense: a man, male person, human individual — 2,130 occurrences spanning narrative, law, poetry, and prophecy. This covers named individuals ('the man Moses'), generic references ('if a man does...'), collective designations ('the men of Israel'), and construct chains denoting social function ('men of valor,' 'men of the city'). Arabic rajul, Spanish hombre/varon, French homme, German Mann, Korean namja/saram, and Swahili mtu all deploy their basic 'adult male human' vocabulary. The breadth of this cluster reflects ish's role as the unmarked, default word for a male person in Hebrew — parallel to Latin vir rather than homo, though it occasionally shades toward the latter in inclusive contexts like 'blessed is the man who...' (Ps 1:1). MAN AND HUMANITY

en: a-man, each-man, man | es: hombre, varón | fr: chaque-homme, homme, un-homme | de: Mann, ein-Mann, einem-Mann Gen 26:31; Gen 31:50; Gen 33:1; Gen 38:1; Gen 41:38

2. husband (42×) Husband, spouse — 42 occurrences where ish specifically denotes a woman's marriage partner. Typically appearing with feminine possessive suffixes: ishah ('her husband,' Gen 3:16; 16:3) or in explicit marital contexts like the sotah ritual (Num 5:19-20). Arabic zawj ('husband/spouse'), Spanish marido/esposo, French mari, German Ehemann, and Korean nampyeon all select dedicated 'husband' vocabulary distinct from generic 'man,' confirming a genuine lexicalized sense boundary. The legal and narrative contexts make the marital reference unambiguous: 'she took him as husband' (Gen 16:3), 'your desire shall be for your husband' (Gen 3:16). MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: her-husband, to-her-husband | es: a-su-marido, esposo-suyo, marido-de-ella | fr: sa-mari, son-mari, à-sa-mari | de: Mann, ihr-husband, ihrem-Mann Gen 3:16; Gen 16:3; Num 5:19; Num 5:20

3. each one, everyone (distributive) (13×) Distributive pronoun: each one, everyone, anyone, no one — 13 occurrences where ish functions not as a noun designating a specific male but as an indefinite or distributive pronoun. 'Let each man put his sword on his side' (Exod 32:27), 'let no man put on his ornaments' (Exod 33:4), 'no man shall come up with you' (Exod 34:3). This pronominal use, often in the formula ish...ish ('each...each') or with negation (lo ish, 'no one'), is a distinctive Semitic construction. Spanish cada uno ('each one'), French chaque un, and German jeder distinguish this from the noun sense by using pronoun forms, while Korean uses gakgak ('each') — none of them use their 'man' word here, confirming that this is functionally a pronoun rather than a gender-marked noun. MAN AND HUMANITY

en: Each-, Each-man, and-each | es: Cada-uno-, Y-nadie, hombre | fr: chaque-un, et-chaque, et-non-un | de: Mann, anyone, jeder-eins Exod 32:27; Exod 33:4; Exod 34:3

4. (2×) Male (of animals or in gender-classification contexts) — 2 occurrences at Gen 7:2, where Noah is instructed to take animals 'male and its mate.' Here ish designates biological sex rather than human personhood, paired with ishtoh ('its female/mate'). Spanish varon, French male, German Mannchen, and English 'male' all shift from their person-designating vocabulary to biological-sex terminology, confirming that this zoological usage is semantically distinct from the human 'man' sense. The rarity (only 2 occurrences) suggests this is an extension by analogy from the human ish/ishah pair rather than a primary sense. MALE PERSON ANIMAL en: male | es: varón | fr: mâle | de: das-Männchen Gen 7:2

אִשֵּׁשׁ H0377 Conj-w / V-Hitpael-Imp-mp (1×)
and show yourselves firm, be strong (uncertain Hithpael form)
A textually uncertain Hithpael imperative in Isaiah 46:8, where God calls transgressors to 'show yourselves firm' or 'act like men.' BDB notes multiple interpretations: the Targum, Jerome, and others derive it from a root meaning 'establish,' while Lagarde and Cheyne suggest reading from בּוֹשׁ (be ashamed) instead. Thesaurus even proposes denominative from אִישׁ (man). The multilingual evidence shows significant variation, with some bracketing it as uncertain.

(1×) Imperative calling for firmness or resolve, possibly urging idolaters to strengthen themselves for confrontation with divine reality. Isaiah 46:8's context involves God challenging Israel to remember their rebellion and His uniqueness. The Spanish afianzaos (make yourselves firm) and English be-firm support the establishment reading. However, textual uncertainty and diverse conjectures show this rare Hithpael defied easy understanding even in ancient translations, leaving the precise nuance debated. POWER AND ABILITY
en: and-be-firm | es: y-afianzaos | fr: [והתאששו] | de: [והתאששו] Isa 46:8

אִישׁ־בֹּשֶׁת H0378 N-proper-ms (22×)
Ish-Bosheth ('man of shame'); son of Saul who ruled Israel briefly in rivalry with David.
A proper name meaning 'man of shame,' borne by the surviving son of King Saul who was proclaimed king over Israel's northern tribes after his father's death at Gilboa (2 Sam 2:8–10). The name is widely understood as a scribal substitution: the original form was likely Ish-Baal ('man of Baal'), preserved in 1 Chronicles 8:33 and 9:39 as Eshbaal, with bosheth ('shame') replacing the theophoric element baal. His brief, contested reign and assassination (2 Sam 4) cleared the way for David's united monarchy.

Ish-Bosheth (proper name) (22×) The proper masculine name Ish-Bosheth, referring exclusively to Saul's son who reigned over Israel in opposition to David (2 Samuel 2–4). The name's components—ish ('man') and bosheth ('shame')—represent a theological emendation of the original Ish-Baal, as confirmed by the Chronicler's parallel Eshbaal (1 Chr 8:33; 9:39). All 22 occurrences cluster in 2 Samuel 2–4, narrating his installation as king, his conflict with David, and his murder by his own officers. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Boshet, Ish | es: Boshet, Ish | fr: Boscheth, Isch | de: Boshet, Ish 2Sam 2:8; 2Sam 2:10; 2Sam 2:12

אִישׁ הוֹד H0379 N-proper-ms (1×)
Ishhod, personal name (man of majesty)
A Manassite mentioned only in 1 Chronicles 7:18. The name means 'man of majesty' or 'man of splendor,' combining אִישׁ (man) with הוֹד (majesty/splendor). Such theophoric or descriptive names were common in Israelite onomastics, often expressing parental aspirations or divine attributes. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate since proper names resist translation.

(1×) Personal designation for a member of Manasseh's genealogy in the Chronicler's expanded tribal records. The name's components (man + majesty) suggest hopeful naming at birth, perhaps acknowledging divine glory or anticipating the child's distinguished character. As a hapax legomenon in Chronicles' genealogical material, Ishhod receives no narrative development, functioning solely as a genealogical link. The bracketed glosses indicate transliterators' uncertainty about vocalization or textual tradition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ishhod | es: Ishod | fr: [אישהוד] | de: [אישהוד] 1Chr 7:18

אִישׁוֹן H0380 Prep-b / N-msc (6×)
The pupil of the eye, used figuratively for something precious ('apple of the eye'); also the darkest part of night.
A diminutive noun literally meaning 'little man' — from the tiny reflection one sees in another's pupil — used in two vivid ways. First, as the 'apple of the eye' (Deut 32:10; Ps 17:8; Prov 7:2), it expresses tender care and preciousness: God guards Israel as the pupil of his eye. Second, it denotes the blackest hour of night (Prov 7:9; 20:20), the deep darkness where the adulteress prowls. Spanish 'niña del ojo' preserves the 'little girl/doll' etymology beautifully, while the darkness sense shifts uniformly across languages to words for blackness and obscurity.

1. pupil of the eye (apple of the eye) (3×) The pupil of the eye, the dark center that reflects a miniature image of the onlooker (hence the diminutive 'little man'). Used exclusively in figurative contexts of preciousness: God kept Israel 'as the apple of his eye' (Deut 32:10), the psalmist pleads 'keep me as the apple of the eye' (Ps 17:8), and the sage urges guarding wisdom 'as the apple of your eye' (Prov 7:2). Spanish 'niña del ojo' and French 'pupille' both preserve the anatomical image underlying the idiom of cherished protection. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: as-the-apple-of, like-pupil-of | es: como-la-niña-de, como-pupila-de | fr: comme-pupil-de, comme-pupille | de: [כאישון], wie-der-apple-von, wie-pupil-von Deut 32:10; Ps 17:8; Prov 7:2

2. blackness, darkness (of night) (3×) The blackest part or depth of night, extending the 'pupil' image to temporal darkness — the darkest hour. In Prov 7:9, the young man meets the adulteress 'in the pupil of the night and darkness' (בְּאִישׁוֹן לַיְלָה), and in Prov 20:20, a son who curses his parents has his lamp extinguished 'in the pupil of darkness' (בְּאֱשׁוֹן חֹשֶׁךְ). The multilingual evidence consistently shifts from eye vocabulary to darkness vocabulary — Spanish 'en lo oscuro,' English 'in blackest' — confirming this as a distinct metaphorical extension. DARKNESS AND GLOOM
en: (in-blackest), [in-blackest], in-the-blackness-of | es: (en-lo-oscuro-de), [en-la-pupila], en-oscuridad-de | fr: dans-pupille | de: [(באשון)], [[באישון]], [באישון] Prov 7:9; Prov 20:20

אִישׁ H0381
man, male person; individual adult male, often distinguished from woman or emphasizing humanity
This term specifically denotes an individual man as distinct from woman, emphasizing maleness, individual identity, or full adult status. It often appears in constructions highlighting sexual distinction, marriage relationships, or individual agency. Where another term means 'humanity' collectively, this word zeros in on the particular male person. It describes husbands in relation to wives, individual warriors in an army, men of particular character or profession. The plural can mean 'men' or even 'each one,' emphasizing individual identity within a group. Context determines whether maleness, individuality, or humanity is emphasized.

אִישׁ H0382
man, male person; individual adult male, often distinguished from woman or emphasizing humanity
This term specifically denotes an individual man as distinct from woman, emphasizing maleness, individual identity, or full adult status. It often appears in constructions highlighting sexual distinction, marriage relationships, or individual agency. Where another term means 'humanity' collectively, this word zeros in on the particular male person. It describes husbands in relation to wives, individual warriors in an army, men of particular character or profession. The plural can mean 'men' or even 'each one,' emphasizing individual identity within a group. Context determines whether maleness, individuality, or humanity is emphasized.

אִיתַי H0383 Adv / 3ms (19×)

There is, there are: Aramaic existential particle equivalent to Hebrew yēsh, with pronominal suffixes.

The Aramaic particle ʾîṯay functions as the existential 'there is' or 'there are,' corresponding to Hebrew yēsh. It appears exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra, where it asserts or denies existence with theological force. When Daniel declares 'there is a God in heaven who reveals mysteries' (Dan 2:28), ʾîṯay grounds the statement in concrete reality. With pronominal suffixes it becomes personal: 'we are' (Dan 3:18), 'you are able' (Dan 2:26). Its cognates span Aramaic dialects—Syriac ʾīṯ, Palmyrene ʾyt—testifying to a pan-Aramaic existential root.

there is/are, to exist (Aramaic existential particle) (19×) The Aramaic existential particle asserting that something exists or is present, equivalent to Hebrew yēsh. Absolute use declares existence: 'there is a God in heaven' (Dan 2:28). With pronominal suffixes it becomes copulative: 'are you able?' (Dan 2:26), 'we are not' (Dan 3:18). Found only in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. Cognate forms across Syriac, Palmyrene, and Mandaic confirm its status as a fundamental Aramaic building block for existential assertion. EXISTENCE PARTICLES

en: (qere:are-you-able), (qere:will-we), [ketiv:are-you-able] | es: (estamos), (¿eres-tú-capaz?), Hay | fr: [אִיתוֹהִי], [אִיתִיכֶן], [אִיתִינָא] | de: [אִיתַי], es-gibt Ezra 4:16; Ezra 5:17; Dan 2:10; Dan 2:11

אִיתִיאֵל H0384 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (3×)

Ithiel (personal name, possibly meaning 'God is with me')

A personal name occurring in Proverbs 30:1 (twice) and Nehemiah 11:7, though the Proverbs text is notoriously difficult. Many scholars repoint the Hebrew in Proverbs 30:1 to read 'I have wearied myself, O God' instead of taking it as a proper name. If it is a name, it likely means 'God is with me.' The Nehemiah occurrence clearly refers to a Benjamite ancestor. The uncertainty in Proverbs highlights the challenges of Hebrew textual transmission and the role of vowel pointing in determining meaning.

(3×) Nehemiah 11:7 straightforwardly lists Ithiel in a genealogy of Benjamite residents in Jerusalem. Proverbs 30:1 presents the puzzle: 'the oracle of the man to Ithiel, to Ithiel and Ucal' in the traditional reading, though many modern translations adopt the emendation that reads this as a confession of weariness rather than a recipient's name. The multilingual glosses reflect this textual ambiguity, with some preserving the name and others suggesting the repointed reading. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Itiel, to-Ithiel | es: Itiel, a-Itiel | fr: [אִיתִיאֵל], à-לְאִיתִיאֵל | de: [אִיתִיאֵל], [לְאִיתִיאֵל] Neh 11:7; Prov 30:1

אִיתָמָר H0385 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (21×)

Ithamar; the youngest son of Aaron, ancestor of a priestly line serving through the era of Eli.

The proper name Ithamar (possibly meaning 'land of palms') designates the fourth and youngest son of Aaron, who survived the divine judgment that struck his elder brothers Nadab and Abihu (Lev 10:6, 12, 16). He was entrusted with oversight of the Gershonite and Merarite Levites in the wilderness tabernacle service (Num 4:28, 33; 7:8). His priestly line later passed through Eli and continued until the time of Abiathar, when it was displaced by Zadok's line from Eleazar. The Chronicler carefully traces both Eleazar's and Ithamar's lines in the priestly division lists (1 Chr 24:1-6), and Ezra 8:2 records descendants returning from exile.

Ithamar (proper name) (21×) The proper name of Aaron's youngest son, who assumed priestly responsibilities after Nadab and Abihu's death (Lev 10:6, 12). He supervised the Gershonite and Merarite transport duties (Num 4:28, 33) and his line continued through Eli. Rendered uniformly across traditions — 'Ithamar' in English and German, 'Itamar' in Spanish, 'Ithamar/Ithamar' in French — reflecting a stable transliteration of the Hebrew אִיתָמָר. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Itamar, Ithamar, and-Itamar | es: Itamar, e-Itamar, y-Itamar | fr: Ithamar, et-Ithamar, et-à-Ithamar | de: Itamar, Ithamar, [אִיתְמַר] Exod 6:23; Exod 28:1; Exod 38:21; Lev 10:6; Lev 10:12

אֵיתָן H0386 Conj-w (13×)

Enduring, ever-flowing, permanent; as a noun: strength, firmness, or a mighty/enduring one.

An adjective built on an elative pattern (comparable to the Arabic superlative), conveying the idea of something that never ceases or yields. It most famously describes the ever-flowing wadi in Amos 5:24 — 'Let justice roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream.' In Gen 49:24, Jacob blesses Joseph with a bow that remains 'in strength,' using the abstract noun sense. The month name 'Ethanim' (1 Kgs 8:2) preserves the word as a seasonal marker for October-November, the month of perennial streams after the early rains.

1. enduring, firm, permanent (6×) Strong, firm, enduring, permanent in a general adjectival sense. Applied to a nation that is ancient and mighty (Jer 5:15), to a nest set in rock that seems unassailable (Num 24:21), and to suffering described as hard or constant (Job 33:19). Spanish uses both 'firme' and 'constante,' while French offers 'durable,' reflecting the range from physical hardness to abstract permanence. Prov 13:15 extends this to the unyielding way of the treacherous. POWER AND ABILITY

en: constant, enduring, is-their-ruin | es: constante, duro, firme | fr: durable, enduring, אִיתָן | de: [אִיתָן], [אֹתָן], bestaendig Num 24:21; Job 33:19; Prov 13:15; Jer 5:15; Jer 49:19

2. ever-flowing, perennial (3×) Ever-flowing, perennial — describing a stream or wadi that does not dry up in summer. In Deut 21:4, the heifer ritual requires a נַחַל אֵיתָן, a wadi with running water, and Ps 74:15 speaks of rivers of steady flow. The most celebrated use is Amos 5:24, where justice should be like an ever-flowing stream. Spanish 'perenne' and the French 'éternel' both capture the sense of water that never fails. POWER AND ABILITY

en: ever-flowing | es: aguas-perennes, perenne, perennes | fr: [אִיתָן], ever-coulant, éternel | de: [אִיתָן], je-flowing Deut 21:4; Ps 74:15; Amos 5:24

3. enduring ones, mighty ones (2×) Used as a substantive to denote enduring foundations or mighty persons. In Job 12:19 God leads away 'the mighty ones,' stripping established power; in Mic 6:2 the mountains and enduring foundations of the earth are called to hear God's case. The plural form אֵיתָנִים shifts from describing a quality to naming the bearers of that quality — those things which have stood firm from ancient times. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-mighty-ones, and-the-enduring-ones | es: y-a-los-poderosos, y-los-eternos | fr: et-les-fondements, et-ואתנים | de: [ואתנים], [והאתנים] Job 12:19; Mic 6:2

4. strength, firmness (2×) Abstract noun sense meaning strength or firmness, typically governed by a preposition. In Gen 49:24, Joseph's bow remains בְּאֵיתָן — 'in strength' — describing the resilient power of his arms. In Exod 14:27, the sea returns לְאֵיתָנוֹ — 'to its normal force' — as the waters snap back to their natural, steady state after the crossing. Spanish 'en firmeza' and 'a su fuerza' preserve the prepositional construction. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: in-strength, to-its-strength | es: a-su-fuerza, en-firmeza | fr: dans-force, à-son-force | de: in-Stärke, zu-sein-Staerke Gen 49:24; Exod 14:27

אֵיתָן H0387 N-proper-ms (8×)

Ethan — a proper name meaning 'enduring,' especially Ethan the Ezrahite, famed for wisdom

Ethan (meaning 'enduring' or 'permanent') is best known as Ethan the Ezrahite, whose wisdom was surpassed only by Solomon's (1 Kgs 4:31), and to whom Psalm 89 is attributed in its superscription. He appears in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles as a son of Zerah (1 Chr 2:6) and as a Levitical singer alongside Heman and Asaph (1 Chr 6:42–44; 15:17, 19). French 'Ethan,' Spanish 'Etán,' and German 'Etan' all preserve the name faithfully across translation traditions.

Ethan (proper name) (8×) The proper masculine name Ethan (אֵיתָן) as personal name, distinct from the common adjective meaning 'enduring'), referring primarily to Ethan the Ezrahite, celebrated for wisdom that rivaled Solomon's (1 Kgs 4:31) and credited in the superscription of Psalm 89. In the Chronicler's genealogies he is listed among the sons of Zerah (1 Chr 2:6, 8) and identified as a Levitical singer appointed alongside Heman and Asaph (1 Chr 6:42, 44; 15:17, 19). Translations uniformly transliterate: French 'Ethan,' Spanish 'Etán/Etan,' German 'Etan.' POWER AND ABILITY
en: Eitan, Ethan, and-Eitan | es: Etan, Etán, de-Eitan | fr: et-Éthan, que-Ethan, Éthan | de: Etan, als-Ethan, und-Etan 1Kgs 4:31; 1Chr 2:6; 1Chr 2:8; 1Chr 6:42; 1Chr 6:44

אֵיתָן H0388 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
the Ethanim, seventh month name (month of steady flows)
The pre-exilic name for the seventh month (later Tishri), appearing in 1 Kings 8:2 during Solomon's temple dedication. The name derives from אֵיתָן meaning 'perennial' or 'ever-flowing,' likely referring to the steady wadis of autumn after summer drought. This was October-November, a time of reliable water flow before winter rains. The Assyrian month Ululu and Arabic وَلْ preserve cognate forms.

(1×) Ancient Canaanite month designation marking the autumn season when streams returned to steady flow after summer's desiccation. In 1 Kings 8:2, Solomon times the temple dedication for this agriculturally significant month, the beginning of the civil year and season of harvest festivals. The definite article הָ- marks it as the recognized name. Cross-linguistic transliteration (Ethanim, Etanim) preserves the Hebrew form, though the underlying meaning ('perpetual flows') reveals agricultural-calendrical reasoning behind the nomenclature. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Ethanim | es: el-Etanim | fr: le-Ethanim | de: der-Ethanim 1Kgs 8:2

אַךְ H0389 Adv (161×)
A discourse particle: surely, indeed (asseverative); only, merely (restrictive); but, however (adversative).
A small but powerful Hebrew particle that colors entire clauses with emphasis, restriction, or contrast. When Laban exclaims 'Surely you are my bone and my flesh!' (Gen 29:14), אַךְ conveys the thrill of recognition. When God says Israel may eat meat 'only you shall not eat the blood' (Gen 9:4), it draws a sharp boundary. And when a psalmist concedes 'but surely God is good to Israel' (Ps 73:1), it pivots from doubt to faith. German captures the range well with fürwahr (surely), nur (only), and aber (but), while Spanish uses ciertamente, solamente, and pero—three distinct words for one versatile particle.

1. only, merely (restrictive) (57×) Restrictive: 'only, merely, nothing but.' Limits the scope of what follows, marking an exception or condition. In Exodus 12:16 no work shall be done, 'only what is eaten by every person—that alone shall be prepared.' Spanish solamente and German nur render this limiting function precisely. The particle narrows the field of possibility, functioning much like English 'only' or 'just' (Gen 34:23, Exod 10:17). CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: only | es: Pero, Solo, solamente | fr: seulement | de: nur, nur- Gen 18:32; Gen 27:13; Gen 34:23; Exod 10:17; Exod 12:16

2. surely, indeed (asseverative) (57×) Asseverative: 'surely, indeed, certainly.' Introduces emphatic affirmation, often marking the speaker's sudden realization or confident assertion. Laban's 'Surely you are my bone and flesh!' (Gen 29:14), Samuel's 'Surely the Lord's anointed is before him!' (1 Sam 16:6). French certes/certainement and German fürwahr capture this emphatic certainty. Often appears in colloquial, emotionally charged speech. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES
en: surely, surely- | es: Ciertamente, ciertamente, ciertamente- | fr: certainement, certes | de: doch, fuerwahrlich, fürwahr Gen 26:9; Gen 29:14; Gen 44:28; Exod 12:15; Num 12:2

3. but, however (adversative) (47×) Adversative: 'but, however, yet.' Introduces a contrast, qualification, or concession against what precedes. In Genesis 9:4, after granting permission to eat meat: 'but flesh with its life-blood you shall not eat.' In Genesis 20:12, Abraham qualifies: 'but indeed she is my sister.' Spanish pero/sin embargo and German aber render this contrastive pivot clearly. This sense often softens or redirects, rather than flatly contradicting. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: Yet, but, surely | es: Ciertamente, Pero, Sin-embargo | fr: certes, mais | de: aber, fuerwahrlich, gewiss Gen 9:4; Gen 20:12; Gen 23:13; Exod 21:21; Lev 11:4

אַכַּד H0390 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
and Accad, city name in Babylonia
One of four cities constituting Nimrod's kingdom in Genesis 10:10, alongside Babel, Erech, and Calneh in the land of Shinar. Accad corresponds to the Babylonian Akkadi, mostly known as a land or district but also a city. Its precise location remains uncertain; it may be the city of Sargon I (Agade/Agane). This was the heartland of the Akkadian empire, giving its name to the Akkadian language and culture.

(1×) Ancient Mesopotamian city in Nimrod's primeval kingdom, representing early post-Flood urbanization and imperial power. Genesis 10:10 lists it with Babel and other foundational cities in Shinar (southern Mesopotamia). The name survives in Akkadian, the great Semitic language that dominated cuneiform literature. Multilingual glosses (Accad, Akad, Akkad) show slight orthographic variation but maintain the historical-geographical referent to this cradle of Mesopotamian civilization. PERSONAL NAMES
en: and-Accad | es: y-Akad | fr: et-Accad | de: und-Akkad Gen 10:10

אַכְזָב H0391 N-ms (2×)
deceptive, disappointing; unreliable like a wadi that dries up
An adjective meaning deceptive or disappointing, used metaphorically of streams that fail during drought. Jeremiah 15:18 employs it in the prophet's bitter complaint against God: 'Will you be to me like a deceptive brook, like waters that fail?' Micah 1:14 uses it in wordplay on the town name Achzib, which sounds like this word: the town will prove 'a deception' to Israel's kings. The term contrasts with 'eitan' (constant, reliable), describing the bitter disappointment of finding a dry wadi when water is desperately needed.

(2×) Translation strategies reveal the challenge: English 'deception' and 'for deception,' Spanish 'arroyo engañoso' (deceptive brook) and 'por engaño,' French preserves 'Akzib' as transliteration or brackets Hebrew, German brackets as well. The metaphor of the unreliable wadi—abundant in rainy season, dry in summer when needed most—powerfully captures betrayal. Jeremiah's application to God represents one of Scripture's boldest prophetic laments, comparing divine silence to a failed water source. DECEIT AND TREACHERY
en: deception, for-deception | es: arroyo-engañoso, por-engaño | fr: Akzib, [אכזב] | de: [אכזב], [לאכזב] Jer 15:18; Mic 1:14

אַכְזִיב H0392 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)
Achzib, name of two Israelite towns: one in the lowland of Judah, one on the coast of Asher
A place name meaning something like 'deceptive' or 'disappointing,' perhaps alluding to a seasonal wadi that dries up. Two distinct towns bear this name: one in the Judean Shephelah listed among Judah's territorial allotments (Josh 15:44) and referenced in Micah's wordplay on deception (Mic 1:14), and another on the Mediterranean coast in the territory of Asher (Josh 19:29; Judg 1:31), identified with the later Greek Ekdippa and the modern site ez-Zib south of Tyre.

(4×) Two towns called Achzib. The Judean Achzib appears in Josh 15:44 and Mic 1:14, where Micah exploits its etymology with a pun on 'deception' (cf. the related root k-z-b). The Asherite Achzib on the Phoenician coast (Josh 19:29; Judg 1:31) was a Canaanite city the Israelites failed to dispossess. Translations uniformly transliterate: English 'Achzib,' Spanish 'Aczib,' French 'Achziv,' German 'Achziv,' with the variant 'Akhzivah' reflecting the directional he ending in Josh 19:29. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Achzib, Achziv, Akhzivah | es: Aczib, Akziv, y-Aczib | fr: Achziv, Akhzivah, Akzib | de: Achziv, Akhzivah, [אכזיב] Josh 15:44; Josh 19:29; Judg 1:31; Mic 1:14

אַכְזָר H0393 Adj-ms (4×)

Cruel, fierce; describing savage venom, merciless people, or God's seeming harshness

An adjective conveying raw, relentless cruelty or fierceness. It appears in strikingly varied contexts: the deadly venom of serpents in Moses's song (Deut 32:33), the terrifying majesty of Leviathan that none dare rouse (Job 41:10), Job's anguished accusation that God has turned cruel toward him (Job 30:21), and the startling comparison of Jerusalem's people to ostriches who abandon their young (Lam 4:3). The word carries an emotional punch — it names not mere severity but a visceral, almost predatory harshness.

(4×) Cruel or fierce in a raw, unrelenting sense. Applied to the venom of cobras as 'fierce poison' (Deut 32:33), to Leviathan's terrifying nature that makes any challenger cower (Job 41:10), and substantively to describe God himself when Job protests that the Almighty has become 'a cruel one' toward him (Job 30:21). In Lam 4:3 the prophet likens the daughters of his people to ostriches — cruel by neglecting their young. Spanish 'cruel,' German 'grausam,' and French 'cruel' all converge on the same stark register, confirming the word's unambiguous semantic force. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: cruel, fierce, to-cruel | es: cruel, se-ha-vuelto-cruel | fr: [לאכזר], cruel, à-לאכזר | de: [אכזר], [לאכזר], grausam Deut 32:33; Job 30:21; Job 41:10; Lam 4:3

אַכְזָרִי H0394 Prep-l / Adj-ms (8×)

Cruel, fierce, merciless — describing persons or forces that act with savage harshness

This adjective paints a vivid picture of ruthless severity. Proverbs warns that even the mercies of the wicked are cruel (12:10) and that a cruel messenger will be sent against the rebel (17:11). Jeremiah describes enemy armies as cruel and without compassion (6:23; 50:42). Isaiah uses it of the terrible day of the LORD (13:9). The Spanish 'cruel,' French 'cruel,' and English 'cruel' all converge on the same stark meaning, while the German 'grausam' (grim, gruesome) adds a visceral overtone.

cruel, fierce (adjective) (8×) The adjective אַכְזָרִי describing a person, force, or quality as cruel, fierce, or merciless. In wisdom literature it characterizes harsh taskmasters (Prov 5:9 'the cruel one'), the false compassion of the wicked (Prov 12:10), and the merciless messenger sent against rebels (Prov 17:11). Prophetically, Jeremiah applies it to the invading Babylonians — a people 'cruel and without mercy' (Jer 6:23; 50:42) — while Isaiah deploys it eschatologically for the day of the LORD (Isa 13:9). Cross-linguistic evidence is strikingly uniform: Spanish, French, and English all render 'cruel,' German 'grausam,' confirming the core semantic of savage, pitiless harshness. OPPRESSION AND TYRANNY

en: cruel, cruel-one, is-cruel | es: Crueles, al-cruel, cruel | fr: cruel, à-cruel | de: [אכזר], [לאכזר], grausam Prov 5:9; Prov 11:17; Prov 12:10; Prov 17:11; Isa 13:9

אַכְזְרִיּוּת H0395 N-fsc (1×)

cruelty of, fierceness (abstract noun in construct)

An abstract noun appearing only in Proverbs 27:4 in the phrase 'the cruelty of rage and the outpouring of anger.' The construct state connects אַכְזְרִיּוּת (cruelty, fierceness) with חֵמָה (rage), creating a genitive relationship. The verse asks rhetorically who can stand before jealousy, ranking it above even fierce wrath. The term derives from the root אכזר (to be cruel), emphasizing savage intensity.

(1×) Denotes the savage, pitiless quality of intense anger in Proverbs 27:4's comparison of destructive emotions. Paired with 'outpouring of anger,' this construct phrase depicts wrath's merciless character, yet the verse subordinates both to jealousy's power. Spanish crueldad and the bracketed nature of some glosses reflect the term's rarity and abstract quality. The -וּת ending forms a noun of quality, turning the adjective 'cruel' into the abstract concept 'cruelty.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cruelty-of | es: Crueldad-de | fr: אכזריות | de: [אכזריות] Prov 27:4

אֲכִילָה H0396 Art / N-fs (1×)

the eating, the meal (definite noun)

A feminine noun meaning 'eating' or 'meal,' used in 1 Kings 19:8 where Elijah travels forty days on the strength of one meal. The definite article makes it 'the eating'—that specific consumption of bread and water provided by the angel. The term focuses on the act or occasion of eating rather than the food itself. BDB notes the nominal form's construction, deriving from the common verb אכל (to eat).

(1×) Refers to the specific meal that sustained Elijah through his forty-day journey to Horeb. The definite article in 1 Kings 19:8 points back to the supernatural provision of verses 5-6, where an angel brought bread and water. Cross-linguistic glosses (the-eating, la-comida, le-mangeant, der-essend) vary between act and event, with Spanish comida favoring 'meal' as an event. This miraculous sustenance parallels Israel's wilderness provision, linking Elijah's prophetic mission to Mosaic foundations. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: the-eating | es: la-comida | fr: le-mangeant | de: der-essend 1Kgs 19:8

אָכִישׁ H0397 N-proper-ms (21×)

Achish; the Philistine king of Gath to whom David twice fled from Saul.

Achish is the Philistine king of Gath who figures prominently in the David narratives. When David first fled to him, he feigned madness to escape (1 Sam 21:11-15). Later David returned and was granted the town of Ziklag, living among the Philistines for over a year (1 Sam 27:1-12). Achish trusted David enough to include him in the march against Israel at Gilboa, though the other Philistine lords objected (1 Sam 29). A later Achish appears in 1 Kings 2:39-40, to whom Shimei's servants fled. The name may be connected to the Syriac word for 'anger,' though the etymology remains uncertain.

(21×) The proper name of the Philistine king of Gath, central to the narrative of David's exile from Saul. David feigned insanity before him (1 Sam 21:11-15), then later sought asylum and received Ziklag (1 Sam 27:2-6). A second Achish appears in Solomon's era (1 Kgs 2:39-40). Consistently transliterated across languages — 'Achish' in English and German, 'Akish/Aquis' in Spanish, 'Akisch' in French — preserving the Hebrew אָכִישׁ with minimal variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Achish | es: Akish, Aquis | fr: Akisch | de: Achish 1Sam 21:11; 1Sam 21:12; 1Sam 21:13; 1Sam 21:15; 1Sam 27:2

אָכַל H0398 V-Qal-Perf-2mp (815×)

To eat, consume food; figuratively to devour or consume destructively; in Nifal, to be eaten; in Hifil, to feed or cause to eat.

The Hebrew verb 'akhal is one of the most common and visceral words in the Old Testament, appearing over 800 times. At its core it describes the universal human act of eating food — from Adam and Eve in the garden to the Passover lamb consumed in haste. Yet this everyday verb becomes one of Scripture's most powerful metaphors: fire 'eats' (Exod 24:17), the sword 'devours' (Deut 32:42), and the land 'consumes' its inhabitants (Num 13:32). The multilingual evidence reveals how languages handle this dual nature differently — Spanish splits between comer ('eat') and devorar ('devour'), while German moves from essen to verzehren, each language recognizing that destructive consumption is semantically distinct from nourishment. The theological arc from forbidden eating in Eden (Gen 3:6) to the covenant meal of Exodus 12 makes this verb a thread woven through the entire biblical narrative.

1. eat (consume food) (697×) The basic Qal sense of literal eating — physical ingestion of food in any tense, person, or number. This overwhelmingly dominant sense (697 occurrences) covers everything from ordinary meals to theologically charged acts of eating: the forbidden fruit (Gen 3:6), the Passover lamb (Exod 12:11), manna in the wilderness (Exod 16:35), and priestly portions (Lev 6:26). Spanish comer, German essen, French manger, and Korean 먹다 all converge on basic alimentary consumption, confirming this as the unmarked core meaning. The verb's frequent pairing with 'bread' (lechem) creates a near-idiom for sustenance itself. EATING AND CONSUMING en: you-shall-eat | es: comeréis, comáis | fr: tu—manger, tu-devra-manger, vous-mangerez | de: du-soll-essen, du-sollst-essen, sollt-ihr-essen Gen 3:1; Gen 3:3; Gen 9:4; Exod 12:9; Exod 12:11

2. devour (consume destructively) (75×) Figurative devouring or consuming destructively — 75 occurrences where the 'eating' agent is fire, sword, plague, or judgment rather than a person at table. God appears as 'a consuming fire' at Sinai (Exod 24:17; Deut 4:24; 9:3), fire from Heshbon 'devoured' Moab (Num 21:28), and nations 'eat up' Israel (Lev 26:38). The multilingual signal is clear: Spanish shifts to devorar/consumir, German to verzehren/fressen, and French to dévorer, all selecting specifically destructive vocabulary rather than alimentary terms. This metaphorical extension is ancient and appears across Semitic languages — Akkadian akalu and Arabic akala both carry the same fire-consumption sense. EATING AND CONSUMING

en: and-it-shall-devour, and-will-devour, consumes | es: Devoró, consumidor, consumió | fr: consuming, devoured, et-fera-dévorer | de: ass, consuming, devoured Exod 24:17; Lev 26:38; Num 21:28; Deut 4:24; Deut 9:3

3. be eaten (passive) (36×) The Nifal passive: being eaten, being consumed, or being permitted to be eaten — 36 occurrences concentrated in legal and cultic legislation. Exodus 12:46 stipulates the Passover lamb 'shall be eaten in one house'; Leviticus repeatedly specifies which sacrificial portions 'shall be eaten' and by whom (Lev 6:16, 23, 26; 7:6). Spanish se-comera and German gegessen-werden both use standard passive constructions, while Korean 먹히다 employs the dedicated passive suffix. The sense is functionally distinct because the subject is the food itself, not the eater — a reversal of semantic roles essential for dietary and sacrificial law. EATING AND CONSUMING

en: it-shall-be-eaten, let-be-eaten, shall-be-eaten | es: se-comerá, se-comerán, sea-comido | fr: -être-mangé, cela—être-mangé, cela-devra-être-mangé | de: ass, es-soll-sein-gegessen, essen Gen 6:21; Exod 12:16; Exod 12:46; Exod 13:3; Exod 13:7

4. feed (cause to eat) (6×) The Hifil causative: to feed, cause to eat, or provide food for another — only 6 occurrences but theologically weighty. God 'fed' Israel with manna (Deut 8:3, 16; Exod 16:32), and the people recall the meat God 'caused them to eat' (Num 11:4, 18). Spanish alimentar, Korean 먹이다 (causative of 먹다), and Arabic at'ama (Form IV causative of akala) all select dedicated causative-feeding vocabulary, confirming this as a distinct stem-driven sense. The Deuteronomy passages are especially significant: 'He fed you manna... that he might make you know that man does not live by bread alone' — the feeding becomes a vehicle for revelation. EATING AND CONSUMING

en: I-fed, and-fed-you, who-fed-you | es: el-que-te-alimentó, le-daba-de-comer, nos-dará-de-comer | fr: Je-fed, et-fed-tu, fera-feed-nous | de: ass, der-fed-du, ich-fed Exod 16:32; Num 11:4; Num 11:18; Deut 8:3; Deut 8:16

5. (1×) A single occurrence at Exodus 3:2 where the burning bush 'was not consumed' — Moses sees that the fire burns but the bush is not 'eaten.' The gloss evidence (English 'consumed,' Spanish consumida, German verzehrte, French consuma) places this at the intersection of senses 1 and 2, combining the fire-consumption metaphor with a stative or resultative nuance. The theological uniqueness of the passage — divine fire that sustains without destroying — may warrant treating this as a distinct marginal sense rather than simply assigning it to the figurative-devouring cluster. EATING AND CONSUMING en: consumed | es: consumida | fr: consuma | de: verzehrte Exod 3:2

אֲכַל H0399 V-Qal-Imp-fs (7×)

To eat or devour; idiomatically, to slander — Aramaic verb for consuming food, devouring prey, or 'eating someone's pieces' (accusing).

This Aramaic verb akal mirrors its Hebrew cognate in meaning 'to eat,' but its occurrences in Daniel showcase a vivid range from literal consumption to apocalyptic devouring to a striking legal idiom. Nebuchadnezzar eats grass like cattle during his madness (Dan 4:33), while Daniel's terrifying beasts devour their prey in prophetic visions (Dan 7:5, 7, 19, 23). Most colorfully, the idiom akal qartsehon — literally 'they ate their pieces' — means to bring malicious accusations or slander, used when the Chaldeans denounced the Jewish exiles before the king (Dan 3:8; 6:24). Spanish captures the literal-idiomatic split perfectly: 'comía/devora' for eating versus 'acusaron' for accusing.

1. eat, devour (literal) (5×) To eat or devour, literally and in apocalyptic imagery. In Dan 4:33, the humbled Nebuchadnezzar eats grass (issba) like an ox — a vivid sign of divine judgment reducing a king to bestial existence. The apocalyptic beasts of Daniel 7 devour flesh and trample remains (7:5, 7, 19), culminating in the fourth beast that 'shall devour the whole earth' (7:23) — a metaphor for imperial conquest. Spanish 'comía' (ate) and 'devoraba' (devoured) mark the escalation from eating to consuming destruction. EATING AND CONSUMING en: and-will-devour, devour, devouring | es: comía, devora, devoraba | fr: et-manger, manger | de: [אכלה], [אכלי], [ותאכל] Dan 4:33; Dan 7:5; Dan 7:7; Dan 7:19; Dan 7:23

2. accuse, slander (idiom: eat pieces of) (2×) To accuse or slander, in the Aramaic idiom akal qartsehon ('eat their pieces/morsels'). This vivid expression — perhaps evoking the image of tearing someone's reputation to shreds and consuming it — describes malicious denunciation before a king. In Dan 3:8, Chaldean officials 'ate the pieces of' the three Jewish youths, accusing them of refusing to worship the golden image. In Dan 6:24, the same fate befalls Daniel's accusers. Spanish 'acusaron' and English 'accused' render the idiom's meaning, while French 'mangez!' (eat!) appears to translate only the literal surface, missing the figurative force. BLASPHEMY AND SLANDER

en: accused, and-accused | es: habían-acusado, y-acusaron | fr: et-mangez!, mangez! | de: [אכלו], [ואכלו] Dan 3:8; Dan 6:24

אֹכֶל H0400 N-msc / 3ms (44×)

Food, nourishment, provisions; the act of eating or a meal; rarely, prey caught by a predator.

The basic Hebrew noun for food, appearing overwhelmingly in the Joseph narrative where Egypt's stored grain becomes the pivot of the entire story. Across Genesis 41-44 the word recurs over a dozen times as 'food' or 'food-supply' — the substance that draws Jacob's family to Egypt and sets the stage for reconciliation. French distinguishes 'nourriture' (food as substance) from 'manger' (the act of eating), revealing the noun's dual character: it can name both what is consumed and the consuming itself. In one vivid image from Job 9:26, the same word describes an eagle swooping on 'prey' — food seen from the predator's perspective rather than the diner's table.

1. food, nourishment (36×) Food as a substance — provisions, nourishment, or a food supply, whether stored grain, purchased rations, or God-given sustenance. This is the dominant sense across the Joseph narrative (Gen 41:35–36, 48; 42:7, 10, 33; 43:2, 4, 20, 22; 44:1–2, 25) and in cultic contexts where offerings become 'food' on the altar (Mal 1:12). German 'Speise' and Spanish 'comida' consistently render this concrete, substantive meaning. The Psalmist affirms that God gives 'food to all flesh' (Ps 136:25; 145:15), extending the word from pantry to providence. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: food, food-of | es: comida, comida-de, la-comida | fr: manger, nourriture, nourriture-de | de: Nahrung, Speise, als-Nahrung Gen 14:11; Gen 41:35; Gen 41:36; Gen 41:48

2. eating, the act of eating (7×) The act or process of eating — functioning as a verbal noun (related to the infinitive construct of אכל) that names the activity itself rather than the substance. Ruth arrives 'at mealtime' (literally 'at the time of the eating,' Ruth

2:14), each Israelite gathers manna 'according to his eating' (Exod 16:16, 18, 21), and the Passover lamb is apportioned 'according to his eating' (Exod 12:4). French 'le manger' and the phrase 'for your eating' in several translations preserve this verbal-noun quality. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: and-for-food-your, for-his-eating, his-eating | es: comer, para-su-comida;, su-comer | fr: et-pour-nourriture-ton, le-mangeant, son-eating | de: der-ass, sein-eating, und-zu-eurer-Speise Gen 47:24; Exod 12:4; Exod 16:16; Exod 16:18; Exod 16:21

3. prey, food of predator (1×) Prey or food seized by a predator — a single vivid use in Job 9:26 comparing fleeting days to an eagle 'swooping on prey.' Spanish 'presa' and English 'prey' capture the hunted, violent character of the food. The metaphor shifts the word from the domestic table to the wild hunt, emphasizing speed and voracity rather than nourishment. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: prey | es: la-presa. | fr: nourriture | de: ass Job 9:26

וְאֻכָּל H0401 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

and Ucal, personal name (possibly textually corrupt)

A problematic name in Proverbs 30:1, where Agur addresses his oracle to Ithiel and Ucal. BDB suggests reading וָאֵכֵל ('and I am exhausted/consumed') from the root כלה instead, which would fit the context of Agur's confession of ignorance. The traditional reading as a proper name has ancient support, but the semantic awkwardness has led many scholars to propose emendation. The multilingual glosses show high uncertainty.

(1×) Traditionally understood as the second recipient of Agur's wisdom oracle in Proverbs 30:1, though textual scholars widely suspect corruption. If personal name, Ucal joins Ithiel as addressee; if emended to וָאֵכֵל, it becomes part of Agur's self-deprecating lament ('I am weary/exhausted'). The bracketed and varied glosses (Ucal, ass, ואכל transliterated) reveal translators' discomfort. This uncertainty illustrates how ancient proper names, especially in wisdom literature's unique contexts, can preserve textual puzzles. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Ucal | es: y-Ucal | fr: et-ואכל | de: und-ass Prov 30:1

אָכְלָה H0402 Prep-l / N-fs (18×)

Food or nourishment given for eating; metaphorically, prey or fuel given over to devouring destruction.

The feminine noun 'okhlah derives from the verb 'akhal ('to eat') and appears exclusively in the Priestly source and Ezekiel, always preceded by the preposition le- (le'okhlah, 'for food/eating'). In Genesis 1:29-30 God designates every green plant le'okhlah — 'for food' — establishing the word's primary association with divinely provided nourishment (cf. Gen 6:21; 9:3; Lev 11:39; 25:6). Ezekiel then extends the image darkly: the useless vine wood is given le'okhlah to the fire (Ezek 15:4, 6), ravaged peoples become 'prey' for beasts (Ezek 34:5, 8), and children are passed through fire le'okhlah (Ezek 23:37). Spanish splits neatly between 'comida/para comer' and 'para devorar/consumir.'

1. food, nourishment (14×) Food, nourishment, or sustenance designated for consumption by living beings. All fourteen occurrences appear in the formula le'okhlah ('for food'), beginning with creation itself — God gives every seed-bearing plant and fruit tree to humanity and animals for food (Gen 1:29-30). The formula recurs in the provisions for the ark (Gen 6:21), the post-flood covenant (Gen 9:3), manna in the wilderness (Exod 16:15), and sabbath-year produce (Lev 25:6). Spanish 'para comida/para comer' and French 'pour nourriture' faithfully render this nourishment sense. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: as-food, for-eating, for-food | es: a-comer, para-comer, para-comida | fr: [לאכלה], pour-mangeant, pour-nourriture | de: [לאכלה], fuer-Speise, fuer-eating Gen 1:29; Gen 1:30; Gen 6:21; Gen 9:3; Exod 16:15

2. prey, fuel for consuming (4×) Prey, fuel, or material given over to devouring consumption or destruction — a metaphorical extension of 'food.' Ezekiel uses le'okhlah four times in prophetic judgment oracles: vine wood cast into fire as fuel (Ezek 15:4, 6), the sword of divine judgment that 'devours' (Ezek 21:32), and children sacrificed as offerings 'for consuming' (Ezek 23:37). Spanish 'para consumir/para devorar' and German 'zum Frass' capture the violent, destructive overtone that distinguishes this from the nourishing, life-giving primary sense. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: for-consuming, to-be-devoured | es: para-consumir, para-devorar | fr: [לאכלה] | de: zum-Frass Ezek 15:4; Ezek 15:6; Ezek 21:32; Ezek 23:37

אָכֵן H0403 Adv (18×)

Surely, truly, indeed (emphatic asseveration); occasionally adversative: but, nevertheless, however.

The adverb 'aken functions as a strong asseverative particle — more forceful than the simpler 'akh — typically launching a declaration of surprised realization or solemn affirmation. Jacob's exclamation at Bethel, 'Surely the LORD is in this place!' (Gen 28:16), sets the tone: 'aken signals the speaker's sudden recognition of a truth previously unperceived. Isaiah deploys it for theological paradox — 'Surely You are a God who hides Himself' (Isa 45:15) and 'Surely he bore our griefs' (Isa 53:4). In two instances (Ps 82:7; Zeph 3:7) the particle pivots to an adversative sense, introducing a counter-expectation: 'but/nevertheless.' Spanish distinguishes 'ciertamente/verdaderamente' from 'sin embargo/pero,' and German shifts from 'fürwahr/gewiss' to 'nevertheless.'

1. surely, certainly, indeed (asseverative) (16×) An emphatic asseverative particle meaning 'surely, certainly, indeed, truly,' affirming the reality or truth of a statement with strong conviction. This dominant sense covers sixteen of eighteen occurrences and often marks a moment of revelation or solemn declaration. Jacob awakens and says 'Surely the LORD is in this place' (Gen 28:16); Moses realizes 'Surely the matter is known' (Exod 2:14); Isaiah proclaims 'Surely he bore our griefs' (Isa 53:4). Spanish 'ciertamente/verdaderamente,' French 'certes/en vérité,' and German 'fürwahr/gewiss' all convey the emphatic, truth-affirming force. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES

en: But-surely, Surely, surely | es: Ciertamente, Verdaderamente, ciertamente | fr: certainement, certes, en-vérité | de: [אכן], fuerwahr, gewiss Gen 28:16; Exod 2:14; 1Sam 15:32; 1Kgs 11:2; Job 32:8

2. but, nevertheless, however (adversative) (2×) An adversative or contrastive particle meaning 'but, nevertheless, however,' introducing a statement that runs counter to expectation. In Psalm 82:7, after the divine address to the 'gods,' 'aken pivots sharply: 'but you will die like mortals.' In Zephaniah 3:7, God expected the city to accept correction, 'but' (aken) they rose early to corrupt all their deeds. Spanish 'sin embargo/pero' and German 'nevertheless' mark this concessive-adversative turn, distinguishing it from the asseverative sense. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: but, nevertheless | es: Sin-embargo, pero | fr: certes, en-vérité | de: [אכן], nevertheless Ps 82:7; Zeph 3:7

אָכַף H0404 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

presses, urges (of hunger driving to work)

A verb meaning to press or urge, used metaphorically in Proverbs 16:26 where 'his mouth presses upon him'—that is, hunger compels the laborer to work. The Mishnaic Hebrew and Aramaic cognates support the sense of urgent pressure. The verse's parallelism shows the laboring soul working for himself, driven by the pressing demand of appetite. This root appears only here in this form, though related forms exist in post-biblical Hebrew.

(1×) Describes hunger's compelling force that drives human labor in Proverbs 16:26. The subject 'his mouth' represents appetite or need for food, which 'presses upon him' as motivation. The parallelism ('the laboring soul labors for himself') emphasizes self-interest driven by physical necessity. This metaphorical use transforms physical pressure into existential compulsion, showing how basic needs propel human industry. The verb's rarity and the bracketed glosses suggest limited attestation, making context crucial for understanding. URGE PRESS INSIST

en: presses | es: apremia | fr: אכף | de: [אכף] Prov 16:26

אֻכָּף H0405 Conj-w / N-msc / 1cs (1×)

and my pressure, my burden (with suffix)

A masculine noun with first-person suffix appearing in Job 33:7. Elihu assures Job 'my pressure/burden shall not terrify you,' promising his speech won't overwhelm. Some ancient versions (including LXX) read כַּפִּי ('my hand') instead, comparing Job 13:21, but BDB retains אֻכָּפִי as related to H0404's sense of pressing. The term conveys weight of argument or force of personality that might intimidate.

(1×) Elihu's self-reference to his rhetorical forcefulness or argumentative pressure in Job 33:7, reassuring Job he won't be overwhelmed. The first-person possessive ('my pressure') personalizes the potential burden of confrontation. While some textual traditions favor 'my hand,' the connection to אָכַף (to press, urge) supports the reading of insistent argumentation. French and German bracket the term, acknowledging textual uncertainty, while the context clearly aims to comfort: Elihu will speak as peer, not oppressor. URGE PRESS INSIST en: and-my-pressure | es: y-mi-presión | fr: et-mon-אכפי-moi | de: [ואכפי] Job 33:7

אִכָּר H0406 N-ms (7×)

Farmer, plowman, agricultural worker who tills the soil; often paired with vinedressers.

A masculine noun designating a farmer or plowman – one whose livelihood is bound to the cultivation of land. It frequently appears alongside 'vinedressers' (koremim), painting a picture of the agrarian economy of ancient Israel (Jer 31:24; 2 Chr 26:10; Joel 1:11). The Spanish 'labrador' beautifully captures the sense of one who labors the earth. Jeremiah uses the word both in lament over drought-stricken farmers (14:4) and in eschatological hope for restored agricultural life (31:24), while Isaiah envisions foreigners serving as Israel's plowmen in the messianic age (61:5).

farmer, plowman, tiller of the soil (7×) A farmer, plowman, or agricultural laborer who works the soil, often mentioned alongside vinedressers as representing the backbone of the agrarian economy (2 Chr 26:10; Joel 1:11). Jeremiah depicts their despair during drought (Jer 14:4) and their future restoration (Jer 31:24), while Isaiah prophesies that foreigners will serve as Israel's farmers (Isa 61:5). In Jeremiah 51:23 the farmer and his yoke of oxen symbolize ordinary life shattered by divine judgment. The Aramaic cognate and Arabic akkaar confirm the ancient Near Eastern agricultural context. FARMER VINEDRESSER

en: farmer, farmers, plowmen | es: al-labrador, labrador, labradores | fr: [אכר], [אכריכם], [אכרים] | de: [אכר], [אכריכם], [אכרים] 2Chr 26:10; Isa 61:5; Jer 14:4; Jer 31:24; Jer 51:23

אַכְשָׁף H0407 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (3×)

Achshaph (Canaanite city whose king opposed Joshua)

A Canaanite city in northern Israel, ruled by a king who joined the coalition against Joshua. The city later fell within the tribal territory of Asher. Its precise location remains debated—proposals range from sites near Tyre to locations further south. The name appears in Egyptian records, confirming its ancient prominence. Like many Canaanite cities mentioned in Joshua, Achshaph represents the established powers that Israel faced when entering the land, kingdoms that seemed formidable yet fell before God's purposes.

(3×) Joshua 11:1 lists the king of Achshaph among the northern coalition that assembled to fight Israel at the waters of Merom. Joshua 12:20 records the defeat of Achshaph's king in the catalog of conquered cities. Joshua 19:25 assigns Achshaph to Asher's border territory. Archaeological and linguistic evidence points to a significant city that controlled territory in the north, though its exact ruins remain uncertain. The city's inclusion in conquest lists underscores the comprehensive nature of Israel's victories under Joshua's leadership. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Achshaph, and-Akhshaph | es: Acsaf, y-Acsaf | fr: Achshaph, et-Akhshaph | de: Achshaph, und-Akhshaph Josh 11:1; Josh 12:20; Josh 19:25

אַל H0408 Adv (725×)

Negative particle of prohibition or wish: 'do not, let not'; also standalone 'no' or rhetorical negation.

A subjective negation particle that expresses wishes, commands, and prohibitions rather than stating bare facts. Where לֹא flatly denies ('it is not'), אַל entreats or forbids ('let it not be!'). It overwhelmingly appears with jussive and cohortative verb forms — the classic אַל־תִּירָא 'fear not!' of Genesis 15:1 being its signature usage. Occasionally it stands alone as a blunt 'no' (Judges 19:23) or even conveys 'nothingness' in poetic contexts like Job 24:25. Spanish and French translations capture the prohibitive force with 'No-' and negative constructions, while German 'zu' reflects its syntactic attachment to infinitive-like forms.

1. prohibitive negation do-not (712×) The dominant prohibitive or vetitive use, pairing with jussive and cohortative imperfects to express negative commands, entreaties, and wishes: 'do not!', 'let not!' (712 of 725 occurrences). Found across every genre — patriarchal assurance (Gen 15:1 אַל־תִּירָא), the binding of Isaac (Gen 22:12 אַל־תִּשְׁלַח יָדְךָ), and psalmic petition. Spanish 'No-' and French 'vers' both reflect this directive, volitional quality that sets אַל apart from the indicative negator לֹא. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: do-not, do-not-, not | es: No-, no, no- | fr: vers | de: zu 1Chr 16:22; 1Chr 21:13; 1Chr 22:13; 1Chr 28:20

2. negative response no (11×) A standalone negative response or existential negation meaning 'no' or 'there is none,' functioning declaratively rather than prohibitively. In Ruth 1:13 Naomi says אַל בִּנֹתַי, a heartfelt 'no, my daughters,' and in 2 Samuel 1:21 David's lament uses it for existential absence. French 'non' and German 'nein' confirm the shift from prohibition to outright negation in these passages. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: is-no, no, no- | es: No, no | fr: ne...pas, non, non- | de: nein, nicht-, zu Gen 33:10; Judg 19:23; Ruth 1:13; 1Sam 2:24; 2Sam 1:21

3. rhetorical interrogative negation (1×) A rare rhetorical-interrogative use where אַל introduces a question expecting an affirmative answer, functioning like 'did not...?' or 'where?' In 1 Samuel 27:10, David's evasive reply to Achish employs this construction. The multilingual glosses (English 'where,' French 'où,' German 'wo') show translators reading an interrogative spatial sense rather than a simple negation, reflecting the contextual flexibility of the particle. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: where | es: no- | fr: où | de: wo 1Sam 27:10

4. substantival nothingness (1×) A hapax substantival use in Job 24:25, where אַל with a preposition conveys 'to nothing' or 'for naught,' expressing futility or complete absence of substance. Spanish 'en-nada' ('into nothing') and French 'à-ne...pas' both capture this shift from particle to quasi-noun, highlighting the poetic register of Job's rhetoric. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: to-nothing | es: en-nada | fr: à-ne...pas | de: zu-zu Job 24:25

אַל H0409 Adv-NegPrt (4×)

Aramaic negative particle: 'do not,' 'let not' — used with the imperfect to express prohibition

The Aramaic adverb of prohibition, functionally equivalent to Biblical Hebrew 'al. It appears exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Daniel, where it introduces commands to refrain from action. Daniel urges Arioch not to destroy the wise men of Babylon (Dan 2:24), Nebuchadnezzar is told not to let his dream alarm him (Dan 4:19), and the queen tells Belshazzar not to let his thoughts terrify him (Dan 5:10). Despite its small footprint, it carries considerable narrative weight in each scene.

(4×) Aramaic particle of prohibition meaning 'do not' or 'let not,' governing an imperfect verb. Daniel deploys it urgently — 'do not destroy the wise men' (Dan 2:24) — and it recurs in reassurances: 'let not the dream alarm you' (Dan 4:19), 'let not your thoughts terrify you' (Dan 5:10). English glosses as 'do not / let not,' Spanish as 'no,' French as a directional marker, and German similarly, though the consistent prohibitive function is clear across all witnesses. NEGATION PARTICLES en: do-not-, let-not- | es: no | fr: vers | de: zu Dan 2:24; Dan 4:19; Dan 5:10

אֵל H0410 Prep-l / N-ms (245×)

God (El); generic Semitic deity word; also 'mighty one, power'; in divine epithets (El Shaddai, El Elyon).

El is the oldest and most elemental word for God in the Semitic languages, attested in Akkadian (ilu), Ugaritic, Phoenician, and Arabic (ilah) long before its Hebrew biblical usage. In the Hebrew Bible it functions primarily as a name or title for the one true God of Israel, often in poetic and archaic contexts where the more common 'Elohim might feel too prosaic. El appears in some of Scripture's most exalted compound epithets — El Shaddai ('God Almighty,' Gen 17:1), El Elyon ('God Most High,' Gen 14:18-22), El Olam ('the Everlasting God,' Gen 21:33), El Roi ('the God who sees,' Gen 16:13). Yet the word also retains an older, more generic force: it can mean 'a god' in general, 'mighty one' applied to powerful humans or angels, or simply 'power, strength' in poetic parallelism. The multilingual evidence shows that most languages use their primary word for God (Arabic Allah, Korean 하나님, Swahili Mungu) for sense 1, but shift to power or might vocabulary when the non-divine sense surfaces — a split visible already in the earliest Semitic inscriptions.

1. God, the true God (223×) The one true God of Israel, used as a divine name or title — 223 of 245 occurrences, the overwhelming majority. This covers El as a standalone divine designation in poetry (Ps 18:31, 'Who is El besides YHWH?'), in compound epithets (El Shaddai, Gen 17:1; El Elyon, Gen 14:18; El Olam, Gen 21:33; El Bethel, Gen 35:7), with possessive suffixes ('my God,' 'your God'), and in attributive constructions ('a jealous God,' Exod 34:14; 'a merciful God,' Deut 4:31). Arabic Allah, Korean 하나님, Hindi परमेश्वर, Swahili Mungu, and Spanish Dios all consistently deploy their primary monotheistic God-term here. The poetic register is notable: El dominates in Job, Psalms, and Isaiah far more than in historical prose. GODS AND DEITIES

en: El, God, a-God | es: Dios, El, dios | fr: Dieu, El, un-Dieu | de: El, Gott, Gott- Gen 14:20; Gen 14:22; Gen 16:13; Gen 17:1; Gen 21:33

2. mighty one, power (10×) Might, power, or capacity — a non-divine substantival or adjectival use meaning 'strength' or 'in the power of' — 10 occurrences. Laban tells Jacob 'it is in the power of my hand' (le-'el yadi, Gen 31:29); Deuteronomy warns 'there is no power in your hand' (Deut 28:32). In Ps 29:1 the bene 'elim are 'sons of might' (heavenly beings). Arabic qudra ('power'), Korean 힘 ('strength'), and Spanish poder ('power') all select non-theistic vocabulary, confirming a genuine lexical distinction from the divine-title sense. Ezek 31:11 uses 'el of the nations' for a mighty human ruler. The semantic bridge between 'God' and 'power' runs through the idea that deity is the ultimate locus of might. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gods, in-power-of, in-the-power-of | es: a-El, al-poder-de, dioses | fr: Dieu, dans-puissance-de, pour-vers | de: Gott, der-Gott, in-Macht-von Gen 31:29; Deut 28:32; Neh 5:5; Job 41:25; Ps 29:1

3. a god, deity (generic) (9×) A god or deity in the generic sense — 9 occurrences referring to foreign gods, false deities, or the concept of divinity abstractly. The rhetorical question 'Who is like you among the gods?' (Exod 15:11) and the warning against a 'strange god' (Ps 81:9) use 'el without specific reference to YHWH. Deut 32:12 declares 'no foreign 'el was with him,' and Deut 32:21 speaks of provoking God with 'a non-god' (lo-'el). Arabic ilah (indefinite, versus Allah the proper name), Korean 신 ('a god,' versus 하나님 'God'), and Swahili mungu (lowercase, versus Mungu) all mark the generic-versus-proper distinction that Hebrew achieves through context rather than morphology. GODS AND DEITIES

en: El-of, among-the-gods, el | es: Dios-de, a-dios, como-dios | fr: dieu, el, parmi-le-dieux | de: el, gott, unter-der-Goetter Exod 15:11; Exod 34:14; Deut 32:12; Deut 32:21; Ps 44:20

4. El (in proper names) (2×) The theophoric element El as a component in proper names or as a standalone name designator — 2 occurrences where El functions as part of a personal or cultic name rather than as a common noun or divine title. At Judg 9:46 the 'house of El-Berith' names a specific Canaanite temple deity; at 2 Sam 2:30 'Asahel' embeds El as a name element. Spanish, French, and German all transliterate rather than translate (El-, not 'Dios-'), confirming that the proper-name function is cross-linguistically recognized as distinct from the appellative use. EL COMPOUND NAMES

en: El, El- | es: El, El- | fr: El-, Él | de: El, El- Judg 9:46; 2Sam 2:30

5. (1×) A single occurrence at Isa 57:5 where 'el appears in the phrase 'under every green tree,' traditionally rendered 'among the oaks' or 'among the terebinths,' possibly reflecting a homonymous root meaning 'terebinth' or 'great tree' (cf. Hebrew 'elah, 'allah). The multilingual evidence is split — English 'among the oaks,' Spanish 'entre las encinas' treat it as a tree term, while French Dieu and German Gott read it as 'God.' The ambiguity may be deliberate polemical wordplay: Israel worships among the 'el-trees instead of worshipping El. BDB lists this under a separate root, but the contextual echo between deity and sacred tree is part of the prophetic rhetoric. GODS AND DEITIES en: among-the-oaks | es: entre-las-encinas | fr: Dieu | de: Gott Isa 57:5

אֵל H0411 Art / Pro-cp (9×)

These; a demonstrative pronoun (plural) pointing to persons or things in the immediate context.

An archaic spelling variant of the more common אֵלֶּה ('these'), serving as a plural demonstrative pronoun. It appears in both Genesis and Deuteronomy to indicate specific persons, places, or things under discussion. With the article (הָאֵל), it functions emphatically: 'these very ones.' Spanish renders it as 'estos/estas,' French as 'ces,' and German as 'diese'—all standard demonstratives confirming its purely referential, deictic function without additional nuance.

these (demonstrative pronoun) (9×) Plural demonstrative pronoun meaning 'these,' an orthographic variant of אֵלֶּה used in both Pentateuchal and historical texts. In Gen 19:8, Lot offers 'these two daughters'; in Gen 26:3-4, God confirms 'all these lands' to Isaac; in Lev 18:27, it refers to the abominations 'these' Canaanites committed; and in Deut 4:42 and 19:11, it specifies 'these cities' of refuge. The cross-linguistic evidence (fra: ces, spa: estos/estas, deu: diese) uniformly confirms a simple demonstrative with no additional semantic freight. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: the-these, these | es: estas, estos, las-estas | fr: ces, le-ces, vers | de: der-diese, diese, diesen Gen 19:8; Gen 19:25; Gen 26:3; Gen 26:4; Lev 18:27

אֵל H0412 Pro-cp (2×)

these (Aramaic demonstrative plural); Qere reading for 'elleh'

An Aramaic demonstrative pronoun meaning 'these,' appearing as the Qere (marginal reading) in Ezra 5:15, while the Ketiv (written text) has the standard Hebrew form 'elleh.' Both occurrences in this verse represent the same word where Aramaic 'el' appears instead of Hebrew 'elleh' in Cyrus' quoted decree: 'Take these vessels, go and deposit them in the temple in Jerusalem.' The variant reflects the bilingual nature of Ezra, where Hebrew and Aramaic intermingle in archival quotations.

(2×) Multilingual glosses show awareness of the textual variant: English translates 'these' or marks '[ketiv],' Spanish '(estos)' or '[estos]' in brackets, French 'ceux-ci' (these) or 'vers' (toward), German uses double brackets suggesting ketiv-qere distinction. The domain assignment to 'Religious Activities' fits the temple context—these are the holy vessels being returned from Babylon. Both occurrences represent the ketiv-qere apparatus flagging an Aramaic form in the narrative flow. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: [ketiv], these | es: (estos), [estos] | fr: ceux-ci, vers | de: [(אל)], [[אלה]] Ezra 5:15

אֵל H0413 Prep (5518×)

to, toward; into; upon, on; against; for, concerning; with, among

The most common Hebrew preposition of directed motion, appearing over 5,500 times. Its core meaning — motion toward a person, place, or goal — underlies virtually every narrative scene where someone goes, sends, speaks, gives, or turns. Unlike the broader בְּ (in) or עַל (upon), אֶל specifically encodes directionality: the trajectory from speaker to destination. Yet context pushes it into hostile territory ('against'), purposive uses ('for, concerning'), and even companionship ('with, among'). The cognate Arabic ʾilā confirms the directional core. This single syllable is the connective tissue of Hebrew narrative, joining actors to their targets across thousands of clauses.

1. to (dative recipient, addressee) (3803×) Primary directional sense: 'to' or 'toward' a person, place, or thing. With over 5,300 occurrences, this dominates Hebrew prose. Spanish 'a,' French 'à,' and German 'zu' converge on the same particle. Genesis 1:9 gathers waters 'to one place.' It follows every verb of motion and speech, marking destination or addressee.

en: to, to- | es: a, a- | fr: à, à- | de: auf, dem-, vor- Gen 4:13; Gen 12:15; Gen 19:5; Gen 19:31; Gen 29:21

2. to, toward (spatial motion) (1562×) Movement into an enclosed space or interior — 'into' rather than merely 'toward.' The distinction is subtle but real: Deuteronomy 31:7 sends Joshua 'into' the land God promised, not merely toward it. French 'vers' and German 'in-zu' sometimes distinguish this penetrative sense from mere directionality. The spatial endpoint is not a surface but an interior.

en: to, to- | es: a, a-, ante | fr: à, à- | de: an-, in-, zu Gen 1:9; Gen 22:5; Gen 27:9; Gen 31:3; Gen 37:35

3. into, entering within (92×) Movement into an enclosed space or interior — 'into' rather than merely 'toward.' The distinction is subtle but real: Deuteronomy 31:7 sends Joshua 'into' the land God promised, not merely toward it. French 'vers' and German 'in-zu' sometimes distinguish this penetrative sense from mere directionality. The spatial endpoint is not a surface but an interior. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at, in-, into | es: a, a-, al | fr: vers, à, à- | de: in-zu-, zu, zu- Deut 11:29; Deut 31:7; Deut 31:20; Deut 31:21; Deut 31:23

4. upon, on, over (24×) Contact or position upon a surface, or authority placed over someone — 'upon, on, over.' Numbers 4:19 assigns Levites 'to' their service. 2 Samuel 2:9 places Ish-bosheth 'over' Gilead. In prophetic oracles the preposition slides from 'toward' into 'upon/against.' Spanish 'y-contra' and French 'et-sur' capture this. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-against-, and-to-, and-upon | es: y-a, y-contra, y-contra- | fr: et-sur, et-sur-, et-vers | de: und-auf, und-auf-, und-zu Num 4:19; 2Sam 2:9; 2Sam 3:29; 2Kgs 9:33

5. against, in opposition (17×) Hostile or adversarial orientation: 'against.' Genesis 4:8 has Cain rising 'against' his brother Abel. Deuteronomy 28:7 promises that enemies who rise 'against' Israel will be defeated. 1 Kings 21:21 brings divine judgment 'against' Ahab. The glosses (Spanish 'contra,' French 'contre,' German 'gegen') consistently mark hostility. The directional core acquires an adversarial edge from context. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against-, against-them, against-you | es: a-ti, contra-, contra-ellos | fr: contre-, contre-toi, vers | de: gegen-, gegen-du, zu Gen 4:8; Deut 28:7; 1Kgs 21:21; 2Kgs 3:14; 1Chr 19:17

6. for, concerning, about (10×) Purpose, benefaction, or reference: 'for, concerning, about.' 1 Samuel 1:27 speaks of praying 'for' this child. 1 Samuel 15:35 records Samuel's grieving 'for/concerning' Saul. Spanish 'Por' and French 'pour' confirm the purposive reading. The directional metaphor extends: the speaker's attention is directed 'toward' a topic or cause. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against-him, against-it, for- | es: Por, a-mí, con-él | fr: au-dessus, mon-Dieu, pour- | de: fuer-, ueber, zu 1Sam 1:27; 1Sam 15:35; 1Sam 20:34; 1Kgs 19:3; 2Kgs 7:7

7. with, among, alongside (6×) Accompaniment or proximity: 'with, among, alongside.' Numbers 23:4,16 describe God meeting 'with' Balaam. Joshua 11:19 notes no city that made peace 'with' Israel. The sense is less common but attested clearly — the preposition marks not just motion toward but arrival and remaining alongside. Spanish 'con' and French 'avec' confirm the associative reading. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -, among-, with- | es: con, con-, entre | fr: -, avec-, parmi- | de: -, mit-, unter- Num 23:4; Num 23:16; Josh 11:19; Josh 13:22; 2Kgs 6:8

9. (1×) A rare sense attested once in Psalm 84:7, where the Masoretic text places the preposition unusually. Multilingual evidence diverges — English 'before,' Spanish 'ante,' German 'vor-zu' — suggesting appearing in God's presence. Possibly a liturgical usage: moving 'toward' God until one stands 'before' him in Zion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: before | es: ante- | fr: vers | de: vor-zu Ps 84:7

אֶלָא H0414 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ela, personal name (possibly 'terebinth')

Father of Shimei, one of Solomon's twelve district officers mentioned in 1 Kings 4:18. The name is identical to אֵלָה (terebinth tree), though whether this represents a botanical name, shortened theophoric element, or other meaning remains uncertain. Such brevity in personal names was common, and tree names often served as personal designations in ancient Israel.

(1×) Patronymic designation identifying Shimei by his father's name in Solomon's administrative structure. In 1 Kings 4:18, Ela serves solely to distinguish this Shimei from others, functioning as genealogical marker. The multilingual transliteration (Ela) preserves the name without interpretation, though BDB's equation with אֵלָה (terebinth) suggests possible meaning. As with many biblical names appearing once, Ela's significance lies in genealogical continuity rather than narrative development. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ela | es: Ela | fr: Ela | de: Ela 1Kgs 4:18

אֵל H0415

god, mighty one; divine being or one possessing extraordinary power and authority

This shorter form of the word for God expresses might and power rather than relational covenant name. Poetry uses it extensively, often with qualifying terms—'God of Israel,' 'mighty God,' 'God Almighty.' The term can occasionally apply to human rulers or judges by extension of the power concept, though such usage is rare and disputed. It appears in compound divine titles and emphasizes transcendent power. The form's brevity makes it especially suitable for poetry, where it parallels or alternates with longer divine names while maintaining the focus on strength and sovereignty.

אֵל H0416

god, mighty one; divine being or one possessing extraordinary power and authority

This shorter form of the word for God expresses might and power rather than relational covenant name. Poetry uses it extensively, often with qualifying terms—'God of Israel,' 'mighty God,' 'God Almighty.' The term can occasionally apply to human rulers or judges by extension of the power concept, though such usage is rare and disputed. It appears in compound divine titles and emphasizes transcendent power. The form's brevity makes it especially suitable for poetry, where it parallels or alternates with longer divine names while maintaining the focus on strength and sovereignty.

אֶלְגָּבִישׁ H0417 N-ms (3×)

hail, hailstones (frozen precipitation used in divine judgment)

Large hailstones, specifically invoked in Ezekiel's prophecies of judgment. The term is a loanword from Arabic, related to gypsum or alabaster, perhaps reflecting the pale, stone-like appearance of hail. Ezekiel uses this imagery in oracles against false prophets and in the climactic battle against Gog, where hail joins fire, brimstone, and torrential rain as instruments of divine wrath. The image recalls the seventh plague in Egypt and other instances where God weaponizes weather to execute judgment.

(3×) Ezekiel 13:11 and 13:13 warn false prophets that God will tear down their whitewashed wall with 'great hailstones' that demolish pretense and expose falsehood. Ezekiel 38:22 pictures God raining down hailstones upon Gog and his hordes, combining plague, blood, torrential rain, and hail in a display of sovereign power. The Hebrew term's connection to stone-like material emphasizes the destructive force of these celestial projectiles—not mere rain, but heaven-sent weapons that crush opposition to God's purposes. HAIL WEATHER

en: hail | es: granizo, granizo, | fr: grêlons | de: [אלגביש] Ezek 13:11; Ezek 13:13; Ezek 38:22

אַלְגּוּמִּים H0418 N-mp (3×)

algum wood (imported timber, possibly sandalwood or juniper)

An imported wood, likely from Lebanon or Ophir, used in Solomon's temple and palace construction. The exact botanical identification remains uncertain—suggestions include sandalwood, juniper, or red pine. Chronicles mentions it alongside cedars and cypresses from Lebanon, and also as a precious import from Ophir along with gold and gems. The dual occurrence (H0418 algum in Chronicles, H0484 almug in Kings for the same material) represents variant spellings of the same foreign loanword, highlighting how exotic trade goods sometimes received inconsistent transliteration.

(3×) 2 Chronicles 2:8 requests algum wood from Lebanon alongside cedars and cypress for the temple. 2 Chronicles 9:10-11 describes Huram's ships bringing algum wood from Ophir, which Solomon used to make steps for the temple and palace, as well as lyres and harps for musicians. The wood's value is underscored by its association with precious stones and its use for both sacred architecture and musical instruments. The variant spelling (algum vs. almug) reflects the challenges of rendering foreign trade vocabulary into Hebrew. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10248 WITH 3 SENSES

en: algum, and-algum, the-algum | es: el-sándalo, sándalo, y-sándalos | fr: [אלגומים], [האלגומים], [ואלגומים] | de: [אלגומים], [האלגומים], [ואלגומים] 2Chr 2:8; 2Chr 9:10; 2Chr 9:11

אֶלְדָּ֫ד H0419 N-proper-ms (2×)

Eldad, one of the seventy elders who prophesied in the camp

A personal name meaning 'God has loved,' borne by one of the seventy elders appointed to assist Moses. Eldad and Medad famously remained in the camp rather than going to the tent of meeting, yet the Spirit rested on them and they prophesied (Numbers 11:26-27). When Joshua urged Moses to stop them, Moses replied with his magnanimous wish that all the Lord's people were prophets. BDB suggests Eldad may be the same person as Elidad, a Benjamite prince in Numbers 34:21.

(2×) Multilingual transliteration is remarkably consistent: English, Spanish, French, and German all render 'Eldad' with minimal variation, reflecting the name's clarity and memorability. The two occurrences in Numbers 11 describe the same incident—the Spirit's unexpected falling on Eldad and Medad despite their absence from the official gathering, illustrating that God's Spirit moves beyond human arrangements and spatial boundaries. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Eldad | es: Eldad | fr: Eldad | de: Eldad Num 11:26; Num 11:27

אֶלְדָּעָה H0420 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

and Eldaah, son of Midian; descendant of Abraham through Keturah

A conjunction plus personal name appearing in the genealogical lists of Genesis 25 and 1 Chronicles 1. Eldaah was one of the five sons of Midian, grandson of Abraham through Keturah. The name possibly means 'God has called,' derived from an Arabic cognate. This genealogy establishes the ancestry of various Arabian peoples descended from Abraham's later marriage, showing the expansion of Abraham's seed beyond the covenant line through Isaac.

(2×) Cross-linguistic rendering preserves the conjunction: English 'and Eldaah,' Spanish 'y Eldaa' or 'y Eldaah,' French and German bracket the Hebrew forms, showing standard coordination in genealogical lists. The parallel occurrences in Genesis 25:4 and 1 Chronicles 1:33 represent the same genealogical tradition preserved in different Pentateuchal and Chronistic sources, with Chronicles typically abbreviating Genesis's fuller genealogies. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Elda'ah, and-Eldaah | es: y-Eldaa, y-Eldaah | fr: [ואלדעה], et-Eldaah | de: [ואלדעה], und-Eldaa Gen 25:4; 1Chr 1:33

אָלָה H0421 V-Qal-Imp-fs (1×)

lament, wail (feminine imperative)

A rare verb of lamentation appearing only in Joel 1:8 as a feminine singular imperative: 'Wail like a virgin dressed in sackcloth!' The Aramaic cognates אֲלָא and אֲלָא support the meaning of wailing or mourning. Joel calls Judah to ritual grief over agricultural devastation. The feminine address personifies the land or community as grieving woman. Related to the interjection אֲלֻלַי expressing sorrow.

(1×) Commands communal mourning over the locust plague's destruction in Joel 1:8. The feminine imperative addresses either personified Zion or the women who lead ritual lamentation. The simile 'like a virgin girded with sackcloth for the husband of her youth' intensifies the grief's quality—personal, raw, inconsolable. The French vers-moi and German zu-mir mistakenly read as preposition + suffix, but the Aramaic cognates confirm this as mourning terminology, echoing אֲלֻלַי's sorrowful cry. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: lament | es: Lamenta | fr: vers-moi | de: zu-mir Joel 1:8

אָלָה H0422 V-Qal-Perf-2fs (6×)

To swear an oath or adjure (Qal/Hiphil); also to curse or pronounce an imprecation.

A verb covering the solemn speech-acts of oath-taking and cursing. In its primary sense, it describes binding oneself or another by a sworn oath before God — whether in covenant-making (Hos 4:2; 10:4), legal proceedings (1 Kgs 8:31 = 2 Chr 6:22), or military command (1 Sam 14:24, Hiphil). Hosea's prophetic critique exposes Israel's false oaths as covenant betrayal. In Judg 17:2, the verb shifts to hostile cursing: Micah's mother 'cursed' the stolen silver, a distinct imprecatory act. Spanish distinguishes the senses well: 'jurar/juramentos' for oath-swearing versus 'maldecir/maldijiste' for cursing.

1. swear an oath, bind by oath (Qal/Hiphil) (5×) To swear a solemn oath, take an oath before God, or (in the Hiphil) to adjure, to put another under oath. Saul adjured the army with a fast-oath (1 Sam 14:24), Solomon's temple dedication envisions oath-taking before the altar (1 Kgs 8:31 = 2 Chr 6:22), and Hosea denounces Israel's false swearing in covenant contexts (Hos 4:2; 10:4). The Qal expresses the voluntary act, while the Hiphil causative indicates imposing an oath on another. Spanish 'juramentos' and English 'oath/swearing' consistently mark this covenant-legal register. OATHS AND SWEARING

en: Swearing, an-oath, and-he-bound-by-oath | es: Maldecir, juramentos, para-hacerle-jurar | fr: ces, ceux-ci, et-il-lié-par-serment | de: [אלות], diese, und-er-bound-bei-oath 1Sam 14:24; 1Kgs 8:31; 2Chr 6:22; Hos 4:2; Hos 10:4

2. curse, utter an imprecation (1×) To curse, to utter an imprecation against someone. In Judg 17:2, Micah's mother pronounced a curse on whoever stole her silver (אָלִית, 'you cursed'), and the narrative turns on the power of that spoken malediction. Unlike sense 1, the speech-act is hostile and directed against a person rather than invoking God as witness to truthfulness. The multilingual evidence uniformly selects curse-vocabulary — English 'cursed,' Spanish 'maldijiste,' French 'maudit' — distinguishing this clearly from oath-swearing. CURSING AND IMPRECATION

en: cursed | es: maldijiste | fr: maudit | de: verfluchte Judg 17:2

אָלָה H0423 Prep-l / N-fs (36×)

Curse or imprecation, especially conditional self-cursing; solemn oath or sworn covenant; to adjure or place under oath (Hifil).

The Hebrew noun alah occupies the intersection of oath and curse in ancient Israelite covenant practice. In the ancient world, swearing an oath meant invoking curses upon oneself should one prove false – so alah names both the curse that falls on the oath-breaker and the oath itself. Eighteen occurrences emphasize the curse dimension: the ritual curses of Numbers 5 that the suspected adulteress must drink (Num 5:21-27), the covenant curses of Deuteronomy (Deut 29:19-20), and Zechariah's flying scroll of judgment (Zech 5:3). Seventeen occurrences foreground the oath-covenant dimension: the mutual oath between Abraham's servant and Laban (Gen 24:41), the sworn covenant at Beersheba (Gen 26:28), and Nehemiah's community pledge (Neh 10:29). Spanish maldicion and juramento split what Hebrew unites, as do French malediction versus serment and German Fluch versus Eid. A lone Hifil occurrence (2 Chr 6:22) turns the noun into a causative verb: to cause someone to swear.

1. curse, imprecation (18×) A curse or imprecation – the conditional self-cursing invoked upon oath-breaking, or a direct pronouncement of divine judgment upon transgressors. Eighteen occurrences center on the curse dimension: the waters of cursing in the ordeal of the suspected adulteress (Num 5:21-27), the covenant curses of Deuteronomy (Deut 29:19-20; 30:7), the flying scroll curse of Zechariah (Zech 5:3), and the prophetic threat that the land itself languishes under a curse (Isa 24:6). Spanish maldicion, French malediction, and German Fluch all reach for dedicated curse vocabulary distinct from oath language. CURSES AND ANATHEMA

en: a-curse, an-oath, and-for-cursing | es: Maldición, con-maldición, en-maldición | fr: [באלה], [האלות], ceux-ci | de: Eid, [לאלה], cursing Num 5:21; Num 5:23; Num 5:27; Deut 30:7

2. oath, sworn covenant (17×) A solemn oath or sworn covenant commitment, typically carrying an implicit self-imprecatory element binding the swearer to consequences if violated. Seventeen occurrences emphasize the oath-covenant dimension: the oath securing Abraham's servant's mission (Gen 24:41), the covenant oath at Beersheba (Gen 26:28), the oath attached to Mosaic covenant entry (Deut 29:12, 14), the oath despised by Jerusalem (Ezek 16:59; 17:16-19), and the community pledge under Nehemiah (Neh 10:29). Spanish juramento, French serment, and German Eid separate the oath sense from the curse sense, revealing a distinction that Hebrew collapses. OATHS AND SWEARING

en: an-oath, and-into-his-oath, from-my-oath | es: de-mi-maldición, el-juramento, en-juramento | fr: ces, ceux-ci, dans-ces | de: Eid, der-Eid, diese Gen 24:41; Gen 26:28; Lev 5:1; Deut 29:12

3. adjure, cause to swear (Hifil) (1×) To adjure or cause to swear – the causative Hifil verbal use, placing someone under oath by invoking the conditional curse. Only one clear occurrence: Solomon's prayer that when a man sins against his neighbor and 'an oath is laid upon him to cause him to swear' (2 Chr 6:22, parallel to 1 Kgs 8:31). Spanish para hacerle jurar and German Eid shift to causative constructions, confirming the verbal force of this rare usage. OATHS AND SWEARING

en: to-curse-him | es: para-hacerle-jurar | fr: [להאלתו] | de: Eid 2Chr 6:22

אֵלָה H0424 Prep-k / N-fs (13×)

terebinth — a large deciduous tree used as a landmark and sacred gathering site in ancient Israel

Elah designates the terebinth tree (Pistacia terebinthus), a hardy deciduous species that can grow to great age and impressive size in the hill country of Palestine. In biblical narrative, individual terebinths serve as memorable landmarks: the tree near Shechem where Jacob buried foreign gods (Gen 35:4), the one at Ophrah under which the angel of the LORD appeared to Gideon (Judg 6:11, 19), and the fateful tree whose branches entangled Absalom (2 Sam 18:9-14). Prophetic texts associate terebinths with idolatrous worship (Isa 1:29; Hos 4:13). Spanish 'encina,' French 'terebinthe,' German 'Terebinthe' — the translations oscillate between 'terebinth' and 'oak,' reflecting longstanding botanical uncertainty.

terebinth, oak tree (13×) A large, long-lived deciduous tree (Pistacia terebinthus or possibly Quercus species) that served as a recognizable landmark and gathering point in the landscape of ancient Israel. Notable individual specimens mark key narrative moments: Jacob's burial of foreign gods at Shechem (Gen 35:4), the angel's appearance to Gideon at Ophrah (Judg 6:11, 19), Saul's burial memorial at Jabesh (1 Chr 10:12), and Absalom's fatal entanglement (2 Sam 18:9-10, 14). Also invoked prophetically as a site of illicit worship (Isa 1:29; Hos 4:13). All 13 occurrences refer to this same species of tree. OAK TEREBINTH TREE

en: and-terebinth, as-the-terebinth, in-the-terebinth | es: Como-encina, como-encina, el-tamarisco | fr: [הֵאלָה], ces, comme-un-térébinthe | de: [הֵאלָה], [כאלה], der-Terebinthe Gen 35:4; Judg 6:11; Judg 6:19; 2Sam 18:9

אֵלָה H0425 N-proper-ms (16×)

Elah — a proper name borne by several OT figures including a king of Israel and an Edomite chief

A Hebrew proper noun meaning 'terebinth,' borne by at least five distinct biblical figures. The most prominent is Elah son of Baasha, who reigned briefly over Israel before being assassinated by Zimri (1 Kgs 16:6-14). Another Elah was the father of Hoshea, the last king of the northern kingdom (2 Kgs 15:30; 17:1; 18:1, 9). The name also designates a chief of Edom in the genealogy of Esau (Gen 36:41 = 1 Chr 1:52), a son of Caleb (1 Chr 4:15), and a Benjaminite descendant of Uzzi (1 Chr 9:8). Spanish 'Ela' and German 'Ela/Elah' preserve the name consistently across translation traditions.

Elah (proper name) (16×) The proper name Elah (אֵלָה II, 'terebinth'), referring to multiple OT individuals: (1) a chief of Edom listed among Esau's descendants (Gen 36:41; 1 Chr 1:52); (2) the son of Baasha who reigned two years in Israel before Zimri's coup (1 Kgs 16:6, 8, 13-14); (3) the father of Hoshea, Israel's final king (2 Kgs 15:30; 17:1); (4) a son of Caleb (1 Chr 4:15); (5) a Benjaminite of Uzzi's line (1 Chr 9:8). The name also attaches to the famous valley where David confronted Goliath (1 Sam 17:2, 19; 21:9). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elah, and-Elah, the-Elah | es: Ela, Elah, Elá | fr: Elah, ceux-ci, et-ceux-ci | de: Ela, Elah, der-Elah Gen 36:41; 1Sam 17:2; 1Sam 17:19; 1Sam 21:10; 1Kgs 16:6

אֱלָהּ H0426 N-msd (96×)

God or deity (Aramaic); used for the God of Israel and also for pagan gods in Daniel and Ezra.

The Aramaic cognate of Hebrew Eloah (אֱלוֹהַּ), this word appears almost exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. In its primary use it denotes the God of Israel — 'the God of heaven' whom Daniel serves and to whom Ezra builds a temple (Ezra 5:1-2; Dan 6:23). But it also designates false gods, as when Nebuchadnezzar commands worship of golden idols and speaks of 'gods made of gold and silver' (Dan 5:4, 23). The distinction between true God and pagan deities is clear from context and grammatical form: the emphatic state Elahā often marks the true God, while the plural elahin refers to pagan gods. Spanish Dios versus dioses and German Gott versus Goetter mirror this distinction.

1. God, the true God (76×) The God of Israel, the supreme and true deity worshipped by Daniel, Ezra, and the Jewish exiles. Used in definite, construct, and suffixed forms. Ezra speaks of 'the God of heaven' who stirred Cyrus (Ezra 5:1), and Daniel's God delivers him from the lions' den (Dan 6:23). Spanish Dios, French Dieu, and German Gott all render this uniformly as a proper reference to the one true God. GODS AND DEITIES

en: Elaha | es: Dios, el-Dios | fr: Dieu | de: Gott Ezra 4:24; Ezra 5:1; Ezra 5:2; Ezra 5:8

2. god(s), pagan deities (20×) A god or gods in the generic or pagan sense — false deities worshipped by foreign nations. Appears in both singular indefinite and plural forms (elahin). Jeremiah 10:11 declares that 'the gods that did not make heaven and earth shall perish,' and Daniel 3:12-18 recounts the refusal to worship Nebuchadnezzar's golden image. The plural and indefinite usage across Spanish dioses and German Goetter consistently signals the pagan referent. GODS AND DEITIES

en: (qere:your-god), The-gods, [ketiv:your-gods] | es: (a-tu-dios), [a-tus-dioses], a-los-dioses-de | fr: Dieu, Dieu-de, [אלהיא] | de: Gott, [אלהיא], diese Jer 10:11; Dan 2:11; Dan 2:47; Dan 3:12

אַלָּה H0427 Art / N-fs (1×)

the oak, the terebinth (definite noun)

A feminine noun for oak or possibly terebinth tree in Joshua 24:26, where Joshua sets up a stone of witness 'under the oak which is in the sanctuary of the Lord.' The LXX translates as terebinth (τερέμινθος), and BDB suggests reading אֵלָה (terebinth) instead. Such sacred trees marked covenant sites and served as landmarks. The definite article indicates a well-known tree at Shechem's sanctuary.

(1×) Designates the specific sacred tree at Shechem under which Joshua erected a memorial stone in Joshua 24:26. The definite article presumes readers' familiarity with this landmark tree in the Lord's sanctuary. Ancient Israelite practice often associated terebinths or oaks with sacred sites (cf. Genesis 12:6, Judges 9:6). Cross-linguistic glosses (oak, encina, chêne) maintain the arboreal reference, though botanical identification between oak and terebinth species remains debated. Such trees served as enduring witnesses to covenant commitments. OAK TEREBINTH TREE

en: the-oak | es: la-encina | fr: le-chêne | de: der-oak Josh 24:26

אֵלֶּה H0428 Prep-k / Pro-cp (746×)

these — near demonstrative pronoun pointing to a previously mentioned or forthcoming group of persons or things

Elleh is the workhorse plural demonstrative of Biblical Hebrew, appearing 746 times to point at groups of people, nations, laws, events, or objects. It serves as the plural counterpart of zeh ('this') and frequently anchors genealogical summaries ('these are the generations of') and legal catalogs ('these are the statutes'). Its prepositional combinations — ka-elleh ('like these'), be-elleh ('among these'), me-elleh ('from these') — are purely syntactic extensions of the same deictic function. The cross-linguistic evidence is uniform: English 'these,' Spanish 'estos/estas,' French 'ces,' German 'diese.'

these (demonstrative pronoun) (746×) The near plural demonstrative pronoun, used to indicate a set of referents already introduced or about to be specified in the discourse. Frequently opens formulaic lists (Gen 10:20 'these are the sons of Ham') and legal enumerations (Deut 18:12 'these things'). All 746 occurrences, including prepositional compounds, express a single deictic function without semantic variation. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: these | es: Estas, Estos, estas | fr: ces | de: dies, dies-sind, diese Gen 9:19; Gen 10:20; Gen 10:29; Gen 10:31; Gen 10:32

אֵלֶּה H0429 Pro-3cp (1×)

these (Aramaic demonstrative plural pronoun)

An Aramaic demonstrative pronoun meaning 'these,' appearing in Jeremiah 10:11 and Ezra 5:15. Unlike Hebrew אֵלֶּה, this represents the Aramaic dialect's distinct form, used in the few Aramaic passages of the Hebrew Bible. Jeremiah 10:11's context involves pronouncing judgment on false gods: 'Thus you shall say to them: the gods who did not make heaven and earth, these shall perish.' The Aramaic insertion provides an oracle formula.

(1×) Aramaic plural demonstrative pointing to the false gods just described in Jeremiah 10:11's judgment oracle. This linguistic code-switching—inserting an Aramaic verse into Hebrew prophecy—may reflect an international formula meant for pagan nations to understand. The form אֵלֶּה differs from standard Hebrew's expected אֵלֶּיךָ, representing dialectal variation. Multilingual glosses (these, estos, diese) preserve the deictic function, though French térébinthe appears mistaken. The Aramaic presence underscores the verse's function as direct address to idol-worshipers. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: these | es: estos | fr: térébinthe | de: diese Jer 10:11

אֱלֹהִים H0430 Prep-m / N-mpc / 1cp (2599×)

God (the God of Israel); gods (pagan deities); a god or goddess (individual foreign deity). The majestic plural form of eloah.

Elohim is one of the most remarkable words in any language — a morphologically plural noun that, in the vast majority of its occurrences, refers to the one God of Israel and takes singular verbs and adjectives. This grammatical paradox has generated millennia of theological reflection, from ancient rabbinic discussion to modern trinitarian readings. In its dominant sense, Elohim is simply the standard way to say 'God' in Hebrew narrative, law, and poetry: 'In the beginning God created' (Gen 1:1). But the same form also does genuine plural work when referring to the gods of the nations — 'you shall have no other gods before me' (Exod 20:3) — and can even designate a single foreign deity like Dagon or Ashtoreth. The multilingual evidence is revealing: Arabic splits cleanly between Allah (singular, the God) and alihah (plural, gods), Korean between hananim and sindeul, while Hebrew uses the same form for both, relying on syntax and context to disambiguate.

1. God (the God of Israel, YHWH) (2354×) Split from sense 82415. Criteria: The one true God, creator and covenant-maker: 'God said,' 'the God of Abraham,' 'our God.' Monotheistic supreme deity, singular despite plural morphology.

en: Elohim | es: Dios, Elohim | fr: Dieu | de: Gott Gen 1:1; Gen 1:5; Gen 1:10; Gen 1:16; Gen 1:21

2. gods (pagan deities, foreign gods) (147×) Split from sense 82415. Criteria: Plural reference to false gods, foreign deities, idols: 'the gods of Egypt,' 'serving other gods.' Polytheistic referents explicitly condemned in biblical text.

en: gods, her-gods, his-gods | es: dios-de-ti, dioses, dioses-de-ellos | fr: Dieu, dieux, le-Élohim | de: Goetter, Gott, dein-Goetter Exod 18:11; Exod 20:3; Exod 23:13; Exod 32:1; Exod 32:23

3. gods (pagan deities) (81×) Pagan gods collectively — 81 occurrences where elohim functions as a genuine plural referring to the deities of surrounding nations. 'Put away the foreign gods' (Gen 35:2), 'against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgments' (Exod 12:12), 'you shall have no other gods before me' (Exod 20:3). Arabic alihah, Korean sindeul, Swahili miungu, and Hindi devataon all deploy their standard plural-deity vocabulary, sharply distinct from the singular God-of-Israel terms. The syntactic markers — plural verbs, plural adjectives, and 'other/foreign' modifiers — make this sense reliably identifiable. GODS AND DEITIES

en: elohim | es: a-dioses, dios, dioses | fr: dieu, elohim, élohim | de: elohim Gen 35:2; Gen 35:4; Exod 12:12; Exod 20:23; Exod 22:20

4. god or goddess (foreign deity) (14×) A single foreign god or goddess — 14 occurrences where elohim designates an individual pagan deity by name or in a construct chain: 'Dagon their god' (Judg 16:23-24), 'Ashtoreth the goddess of the Sidonians' (1 Kgs 11:5, 33), 'the god of Ekron' (2 Kgs 1:2-3). Arabic ilah/ilahah (singular 'god/goddess'), Spanish dios de/diosa de, and Korean sin ('deity,' singular) all select singular forms here, distinguishing this from the collective-plural in sense 2. The feminine agreement in 1 Kgs 11:33 (the 'goddess' reading) is particularly noteworthy as one of the rare places where elohim takes feminine concord. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: god, god-of, goddess-of | es: Elohim, dios-de, diosa-de | fr: Dieu, god-de, goddess-de | de: Gott, god-von, goddess-von Judg 9:27; Judg 16:23; Judg 16:24; 1Kgs 11:5; 1Kgs 11:33

5. (2×) Contextually ambiguous or comparative uses — 2 occurrences (Exod 29:45, Judg 8:33) where elohim appears in a construction that could be parsed as either 'God' or 'a god' depending on interpretive framework. The multilingual glosses split: some render 'as God' (comme Dieu, wie Gott) while others treat it as 'as a god/elohim,' reflecting genuine interpretive uncertainty. These marginal cases sit at the boundary between senses 1 and 2 and may represent formulaic or idiomatic uses where the referent is deliberately ambiguous. GODS AND DEITIES

en: as-Elohim, as-elohim | es: para-Elohim, por-dios | fr: comme-Dieu, comme-elohim | de: wie-Gott, wie-elohim Exod 29:45; Judg 8:33

אֱלוּ H0431 Conj-w / Interjection (5×)

Lo! Behold! An Aramaic interjection introducing vivid scenes in Daniel's visions.

An Aramaic exclamatory particle used exclusively in the book of Daniel to introduce striking elements within dream-visions. It always appears as וַאֲלוּ ('and behold!'), creating a dramatic pause that draws the reader's eye to what follows — a great statue (Dan 2:31), a towering tree (Dan 4:10), a watchman descending (Dan 4:13), and a little horn with human eyes (Dan 7:8). The translations capture this vividness well: Spanish 'y he aquí,' French 'et voici!,' and German 'und siehe' all preserve the demonstrative force that makes Daniel's visions cinematically vivid.

(5×) An exclamatory interjection meaning 'lo!' or 'behold!,' used to arrest attention within visionary narratives. Always appears in Daniel as וַאֲלוּ ('and behold') to introduce dramatic new elements: the great statue in Nebuchadnezzar's dream (Dan 2:31), the cosmic tree (Dan 4:10), the heavenly watcher (Dan 4:13), and the little horn (Dan 7:8 — appearing twice for double emphasis). Cognate to Aramaic אָרוּ and related to Egyptian Aramaic הלו. Spanish 'y he aquí' and German 'und siehe' both effectively reproduce the startling, cinematic quality of this visionary marker. BEHOLD (PARTICLE)

en: and-behold | es: y-he-aquí | fr: et-voici! | de: und-siehe Dan 2:31; Dan 4:10; Dan 4:13; Dan 7:8

אִלּוּ H0432 Conj-w / Conj (2×)

and if, though; late Hebrew conditional conjunction

A late Hebrew conditional conjunction appearing only in Ecclesiastes and Esther, formed from the negative particle 'im' and the particle 'lu.' In Esther 7:4, Esther uses it to contrast scenarios: 'For if we had been sold merely as slaves, I would have kept quiet.' In Ecclesiastes 6:6, it introduces a hypothetical condition about living a thousand years twice. The Aramaic cognate and Mishnaic usage confirm this as a late dialectal development in Biblical Hebrew.

(2×) Translation strategies vary: English 'and if,' Spanish 'Y si,' French and German bracket the Hebrew, acknowledging the grammatical particle. The Mishnaic Hebrew and Aramaic parallels show this conjunction becoming more common in post-biblical Hebrew. Both biblical contexts involve counterfactual or hypothetical reasoning—Esther's rhetorical argument to the king, and Qohelet's thought experiment about longevity without enjoyment. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: and-if | es: Y-si | fr: [ואלו], et-ואלו | de: [ואלו] Esth 7:4; Eccl 6:6

אֱלֹהַּ H0433 Conj-w (61×)

God or a god; a singular poetic form especially frequent in Job, also used for pagan deities in late biblical texts.

Eloah is the singular counterpart to the far more common Elohim, surfacing overwhelmingly in the poetry of Job (over 40 of its 61 occurrences) and in a handful of ancient poems such as the Song of Moses (Deut 32). Its rarity outside these contexts gives it a solemn, archaic flavor. When applied to false gods, as in Daniel 11 and 2 Chronicles 32, the cross-linguistic evidence shifts noticeably: Spanish and German translators leave it untranslated or bracket it, while English glosses switch from capitalized 'God' to lowercase 'a god,' signaling the semantic boundary between the true deity and generic divinity.

1. God, the true God (54×) The one true God of Israel. This is by far the dominant usage, carrying the full theological weight of the divine name in poetic register. Job alone accounts for most occurrences, where Eloah appears in speeches by Job, Elihu, and the divine speeches themselves (e.g., Job 3:4, 3:23). Spanish consistently renders it 'Dios' with a capital D, French 'Dieu,' and German 'Gott,' all indicating an unambiguous reference to the supreme deity. The choice of this singular form over Elohim lends a personal, intimate quality to the poet's address. GODS AND DEITIES

en: Eloah, of-Eloah | es: Dios, Dios:, Eloah | fr: Dieu | de: Gott Deut 32:15; Deut 32:17; Neh 9:17; Job 3:4; Job 3:23

2. a god, deity (5×) A god or deity in general, applied to divine beings other than the God of Israel. This sense appears in late prose contexts such as Daniel 11:37-39, where the king 'shall not regard the god of his fathers,' and 2 Chronicles 32:15, where Hezekiah warns against any god's ability to deliver. Multilingual glosses reveal the distinction clearly: English shifts to 'a god,' Spanish to lowercase 'dios,' while French and German often leave the Hebrew unvocalized in brackets, acknowledging the ambiguity between proper and common noun. GODS AND DEITIES

en: a-god, and-to-a-god, and-to-god-of | es: Y-a-dios-de, dios, dios-de | fr: Dieu, [אלוה], et-Dieu | de: [אלוה], [ולאלה], [ולאלוה] 2Chr 32:15; Dan 11:37; Dan 11:38; Dan 11:39

3. gods, false deities (2×) Gods or false deities, appearing in textual variants where the singular Eloah stands as a Kethib reading against the Qere plural Elohim. The clearest instance is 2 Kings 17:31, where Sepharvite pagans are said to worship their gods. English and French glosses parenthetically note '(elohim of),' signaling that scribal tradition resolved this singular toward the more expected plural. This rare usage preserves a textual memory of how the singular form could shade into collective reference. GODS AND DEITIES

en: (elohim-of), [elohim] | es: [K], dioses-de | fr: (elohim-of), [elohim] | de: [elohim] 2Kgs 17:31

אֱלוּל H0434 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

and nothing, vanity (Ketiv reading, likely equals אֱלִיל)

The Ketiv (written text) reading in Jeremiah 14:14, where the Qere (oral tradition) likely reads אֱלִיל (worthlessness, idol). The verse condemns prophets who prophesy 'lies, divination, worthlessness, and the deceit of their heart.' This rare form represents either a textual variant or scribal error for the more common אֱלִיל. Context clearly requires a term for falsehood or emptiness.

(1×) Ketiv variant in Jeremiah 14:14's denunciation of false prophecy, synonymous with אֱלִיל (worthlessness, vanity). The prophet indicts those who speak from their own imagination rather than God's mouth. The bracketed nature of multilingual glosses (ketiv, nada, bracketed Hebrew) indicates textual uncertainty and probable error. Whether read as 'nothingness' or 'idol,' the sense condemns prophetic content as empty, deceptive, lacking divine origin—a recurring theme in Jeremiah's confrontation with court prophets. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12467 WITH 7 SENSES

en: [ketiv] | es: [y-nada] | fr: [[ואלול]] | de: [[ואלול]] Jer 14:14

אֱלוּל H0435 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (1×)

of Elul, sixth month name (August-September)

The name of the sixth month in the post-exilic calendar, appearing in Nehemiah 6:15 when the wall of Jerusalem was completed. Elul corresponds to August-September in modern calendars. The name derives from Akkadian Ululu and appears in Aramaic (אֱלוּל), Arabic (ألول), and Mishnaic Hebrew. This was late summer, the month before the fall festivals of Tishri. The preposition marks temporal location.

(1×) Temporal designation marking the completion of Jerusalem's wall reconstruction in Nehemiah 6:15, achieved remarkably in fifty-two days. The month name, borrowed from Mesopotamian calendrical tradition during the exile, shows linguistic-cultural influence on post-exilic Judean timekeeping. The preposition לְ- expresses 'on/in the month of Elul,' typical Hebrew temporal syntax. Bracketed glosses suggest some translational uncertainty about proper transliteration. This late-summer timing precedes the seventh month's festivals, making the completion symbolically timely for celebration. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: of-Elul | es: de-Elul | fr: [לאלול] | de: [לאלול] Neh 6:15

אֵלוֹן H0436 N-ms (9×)

Oak or terebinth tree, often marking sacred sites and used in place-name designations.

A noun referring to a large, prominent tree—either an oak or a terebinth—frequently associated with sacred places, shrines, and divine encounters in the patriarchal narratives. The 'oak of Moreh' at Shechem (Gen 12:6) was where Abram first received God's promise in Canaan, and the 'oaks of Mamre' (Gen 13:18; 14:13; 18:1) became Abraham's long-term dwelling and the site of angelic visitation.

French 'chêne' (oak) and Spanish 'encina' (holm oak) reflect the European botanical identification, while German alternates between 'Terebinthen' and 'oak,' mirroring the ongoing scholarly debate about the exact species.

oak, terebinth (tree) (9×) A large, sacred tree—oak or terebinth—serving as a landmark in topographic and cultic designations. The word consistently appears in construct with a qualifying name: 'oak of Moreh' (Gen 12:6; Deut 11:30), 'oaks of Mamre' (Gen 13:18; 14:13; 18:1), the 'oak of the soothsayers' (Judg 9:37), and the 'oak in Zaanannim' (Judg 4:11). These trees marked places of revelation, covenant, and judgment. The multilingual variation between 'chêne' (fra), 'encina/roble' (spa), and 'Terebinthen' (deu) reflects genuine botanical uncertainty about whether אֵלוֹן denotes Quercus or Pistacia. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-oak-of, by-oaks-of, in-oaks-of | es: en-encinas-de, encina-de, los-robles-de | fr: -le-chêne-de, chêne-de, dans-oaks-de | de: -der-oak-von, bei-den-Terebinthen, oak-von Gen 12:6; Gen 13:18; Gen 14:13; Gen 18:1; Deut 11:30

אַלּוֹן H0437 N-mpc (8×)

Oak tree (genus Quercus), a symbol of strength, majesty, and endurance in biblical imagery

The oak (אַלּוֹן) figures prominently in both narrative and prophetic poetry. It marks the burial site of Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, beneath the 'oak of weeping' at Bethel (Gen 35:8). The prophets invoke it as a symbol of towering strength — the oaks of Bashan represent pride before God's judgment (Isa 2:13; Zech 11:2) — and Hosea condemns idolatrous worship under oaks (Hos 4:13). Spanish 'encina,' French 'chene,' and the Septuagint's drys all confirm identification with the oak genus rather than the terebinth.

oak (tree) (8×) The masculine noun אֵלוֹן designating the oak tree (Quercus), distinct from the terebinth (אֵלָה) though sometimes confused in older translations. It appears in narrative as a memorial marker — Deborah's burial oak at Bethel (Gen 35:8, 'the oak of weeping'). Prophetically it symbolizes towering strength and pride: the 'oaks of Bashan' represent what God will bring low (Isa 2:13; Zech 11:2), Amos compares the Amorites' height to oaks (Amos 2:9), and Hosea condemns illicit worship under oaks (Hos 4:13). It also serves as timber for shipbuilding (Ezek 27:6) and idol-making (Isa 44:14). Spanish 'encina' and German 'Eiche' confirm the oak identification. OAK TEREBINTH TREE

en: and-an-oak, and-as-the-oak, like-the-oaks | es: Encinas, como-las-encinas, encina | fr: [אלוני], [אלונים], [ואלון] | de: [אלון], [אלוני], [אלונים] Gen 35:8; Isa 2:13; Isa 6:13; Isa 44:14; Ezek 27:6

אַלּוֹן H0438 N-proper-ms (2×)

Allon, a Simeonite chief, or Elon (place name)

A name meaning 'oak,' appearing as both a personal name and possibly a place name. In 1 Chronicles 4:37, Allon is listed as a Simeonite leader. The reference to Joshua 19:33 involves textual complexity—BDB directs readers to see 'Elon' on a different page, suggesting possible confusion between the personal name Allon and the place name Elon. The overlap between these similar names (both related to 'oak') creates ambiguity in the textual tradition.

(2×) Multilingual evidence shows the name/place ambiguity: English 'Allon' or 'from Elon,' Spanish 'Alon' or 'desde el encino de' (from the oak of), French and German similarly split between personal name and locative reading. The domain assignment to 'Names of Persons and Places' acknowledges this dual possibility. Joshua 19:33's 'from Elon' likely represents a geographical boundary marker, while 1 Chronicles 4:37 clearly presents a personal name in a genealogical list. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Allon, from-Elon | es: Alon, desde-el-encino-de | fr: [אלון], de-Élon | de: [אלון], von-Elon Josh 19:33; 1Chr 4:37

בָּכוּת H0439 N-fs (1×)

Allon-bacuth (place name: 'oak of weeping')

A place name in Genesis 35:8 meaning 'oak of weeping,' where Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, was buried. The name compounds אַלּוֹן (oak) with בָּכוּת (weeping), memorializing the mourning at her death. Such commemorative naming was common in biblical geography, marking sites with events. The oak served as a natural monument, with the name preserving the community's grief across generations.

(1×) Memorial site name preserving the location and occasion of Deborah's burial below Bethel in Genesis 35:8. The compound 'oak of weeping' combines arboreal landmark with emotional event, creating topographical memory. Ancient Israel often marked significant burials with trees (cf. Saul under tamarisk in 1 Samuel 31:13). Multilingual transliterations (Allon-Bacuth, Alon-Bakut, Allon-Bachut) preserve the Hebrew components, though meaning ('oak of weeping') makes the name self-explanatory. Such etiological names anchor sacred history in physical landscape. WEEPING NOUN

en: Allon-Bacuth | es: Alon-Bakut | fr: Allon-Bacuth | de: Allon-Bachut Gen 35:8

אֵלֹנִי H0440 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Elonite (gentilic with article, descendants of Elon)

The gentilic form with definite article designating members of the Elon clan within Zebulun. Numbers 26:26 uses this in the tribal census to identify descendants of Elon. The article makes it definite: 'the Elonite [family].' This follows standard Hebrew gentilic formation, adding -ִי suffix to the ancestor's name and often prefixing the article in genealogical contexts.

(1×) Definite family designation for the Elonite clan within Zebulun's tribal structure in Numbers 26:26's census. The article הָ- specifies this recognized kinship group descended from Elon. Multilingual glosses (the-Elonite, los-elonitas, le-Elonite, der-Elonite) uniformly preserve definiteness, marking the clan as an established unit in Israel's tribal confederation. Such gentilics functioned administratively to organize Israel by ancestral descent, maintaining tribal identity through patrilineal genealogy. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: the-Elonite | es: los-elonitas | fr: le-Elonite | de: der-Elonite Num 26:26

אָלוּף H0441a N-msc (9×)

A tame or familiar one; hence a close friend, intimate companion, or (by another derivation) cattle/oxen.

Built on the root aleph-lamed-peh, which evokes taming and familiarity, this word spans a surprisingly warm range. At its heart it describes the trusted intimate – the friend closer than a neighbor (Mic 7:5), the confidant whose betrayal cuts deepest (Ps 55:13-14). Proverbs 2:17 applies it to a woman's husband as 'the companion of her youth,' and Jeremiah 3:4 boldly uses it of YHWH himself as the husband-friend of Judah. One occurrence in Jeremiah 11:19 preserves the older adjectival sense: 'a tame lamb led to slaughter.' A third usage in Psalm 144:14 likely relates to the homonymous 'eleph (cattle), describing well-laden oxen.

1. friend, intimate companion (7×) A close friend, trusted companion, or intimate confidant. Spanish 'compañero/íntimo' and the parallel with meyadda' ('acquaintance') in Psalm 55:13 underscore the depth of this bond. Proverbs 16:28 and 17:9 warn that gossip separates even such close friends. In Proverbs 2:17 and Jeremiah 3:4 the term extends to the marriage bond – a husband as life-companion – with YHWH himself called Israel's 'allup of her youth.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: friend, in-friend, leaders | es: al-compañero-de, en-íntimo, guía-de | fr: [אלוף], [אלפים], chef | de: [אלוף], [אלפים], [באלוף] Ps 55:13; Prov 2:17; Prov 16:28; Prov 17:9; Jer 3:4

2. tame, docile (1×) Tame, gentle, docile – the adjectival sense preserving the root meaning of being trained or domesticated. Jeremiah 11:19 uses it in the poignant simile 'like a tame lamb led to slaughter,' where Spanish 'manso' and English 'gentle' capture the lamb's trusting innocence. This sense illuminates how intimacy (sense 1) derives metaphorically from tameness. TAME DOCILE

en: gentle | es: manso | fr: [אלוף] | de: [אלוף] Jer 11:19

3. cattle, oxen (1×) Cattle or oxen, likely a byform of 'eleph. In Psalm 144:14, 'our cattle are heavy-laden' (allupenu mesubbalim) describes agricultural prosperity. Multilingual evidence confirms this reading: English 'our cattle,' Spanish 'nuestros bueyes,' and German 'unser Vieh' all translate as livestock, distinct from the 'friend' or 'chief' senses found elsewhere. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: our-cattle | es: Nuestros-bueyes | fr: chef | de: unser-Vieh Ps 144:14

אַלּוּף H0441b N-mpc / 3mp (60×)
alluph – chief, clan leader; a tribal headman, especially of Edomite clans
The noun alluph (II), derived from eleph ('clan, thousand'), designates a tribal chief or clan leader. Its 60 occurrences concentrate overwhelmingly in Genesis 36, the genealogy of Esau's Edomite descendants, where it appears as a technical title for the heads of subtribal groups – 'chief Teman, chief Omar, chief Zepho' (Gen 36:15). Outside this genealogical register it appears in the Song of the Sea, where 'the chiefs (alluphe) of Edom' tremble at Israel's deliverance (Exod 15:15), and in Zechariah 12:5-6 applied to the clans of Judah. Spanish jefe, French chef, and German Häuptling all capture its core meaning of tribal leadership.

chief, clan leader (60×) A tribal chief or clan headman, used almost exclusively for the leaders of Edomite sub-clans in the genealogical register of Genesis 36 (vv. 15-43) and its parallel in 1 Chronicles 1:51-54. The term also appears in the Song of the Sea (Exod 15:15) where Edom's chiefs tremble, and in Zechariah 12:5-6 for the clans of Judah. Cross-lingual glosses – Spanish jefe, French chef, German Häuptling – consistently render it as a chieftain title across all 60 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: chief | es: jefe, jefe- | fr: chef | de: Häuptling, Häuptling- Gen 36:15

אֲלוּשׁ H0442 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (2×)
Alush, a wilderness station during Israel's exodus journey
A place name designating one of Israel's encampments during the wilderness wandering, appearing only in the itinerary list of Numbers 33. Alush was the station immediately following Dophkah and preceding Rephidim in Israel's journey from Egypt to Sinai. The location remains unidentified in modern geography, like many of the wilderness stations. The name's etymology is uncertain.

(2×) Cross-linguistic transliteration is consistent: English 'Alush,' Spanish 'Alús,' French and German 'Alush,' with prepositions varying between 'from' (מ) and 'in/at' (ב) depending on whether the verse describes departure or arrival. Both occurrences in Numbers 33:13-14 follow the standard itinerary formula: 'they set out from X and camped at Alush; they set out from Alush and camped at Y,' marking movement through the wilderness stages. PERSONAL NAMES
en: from-Alush, in-Alush | es: de-Alús, en-Alús | fr: dans-Alush, de-Alush | de: in-Alush, von-Alush Num 33:13; Num 33:14

אֶלְזָבָד H0443 N-proper-ms (2×)
Elzabad, meaning 'God has given'; name of two men in Chronicles
A theophoric personal name meaning 'God has given,' the Hebrew equivalent of Greek Theodoros. Two men bear this name in 1 Chronicles: a Gadite warrior who joined David's band at Ziklag (1 Chronicles 12:12), and a Korahite Levite gatekeeper (1 Chronicles 26:7). The name reflects common Israelite naming patterns that acknowledge children as divine gifts, paralleling names like Zebadiah and Zabdiel.

(2×) Multilingual rendering is straightforward: French and German bracket the Hebrew form, while translations treat it as a proper noun requiring transliteration. The two occurrences represent distinct individuals in separate contexts—one a military hero from the Transjordanian tribe of Gad who defected to David during Saul's reign, the other a temple servant from the Levitical division responsible for sacred spaces. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Elzavad | es: Elzabad | fr: [אלזבד] | de: [אלזבד] 1Chr 12:13; 1Chr 26:7

אָלַח H0444 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (3×)
be corrupt, become tainted (moral and spiritual deterioration)
A verb appearing only in Niphal (passive/reflexive), describing moral corruption or becoming tainted. The root suggests turning sour or spoiled, like milk gone bad—a vivid metaphor for ethical decay. The Psalms use it in parallel with other terms for perversion and wickedness, emphasizing universal human corruption. Job applies it to an individual who drinks iniquity like water. The cognate Arabic root conveys confusion and disorder, capturing the chaos that corruption introduces into moral life.

(3×) Psalms 14:3 and 53:3 declare in identical language that 'they have all become corrupt'—a sweeping indictment of humanity's moral state. Job 15:16 intensifies the image: 'how much more abominable and corrupt is man, who drinks injustice like water!' The verbal form emphasizes the process of becoming corrupt, not a static state. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'se corrompieron,' French 'être corrompu') captures this sense of deterioration, a moral souring that affects the whole person. EVIL AND WICKEDNESS
en: and-corrupt, they-have-become-corrupt | es: se-corrompieron, y-corrompido | fr: et-ונאלח, être-corrompu | de: [ונאלח], sie-haben-become-corrupt Job 15:16; Ps 14:3; Ps 53:3

אֶלְחָנָן H0445 N-proper-ms (4×)
Elhanan, personal name ('God has been gracious') borne by two of David's elite warriors
A theophoric name meaning 'God has been gracious,' borne by two warriors in David's inner circle. One Elhanan son of Jaare-Oregim is credited with slaying a Philistine champion at Gob (2 Sam 21:19; cf. 1 Chr 20:5, where the victim is Lahmi, brother of Goliath). Another Elhanan son of Dodo from Bethlehem appears in the roster of David's Thirty (2 Sam 23:24; 1 Chr 11:26). The name's Phoenician and Assyrian cognates (Baalhanan) confirm its widespread Semitic usage.

(4×) The personal name Elhanan, meaning 'God has been gracious.' It designates two of David's elite fighters: Elhanan son of Jaare-Oregim who struck down a Philistine giant (2 Sam 21:19 // 1 Chr 20:5), and Elhanan son of Dodo of Bethlehem listed among the Thirty (2 Sam 23:24 // 1 Chr 11:26). Translations consistently transliterate: English 'Elhanan,' Spanish 'Eljanán,' French 'Elhanan,' German 'Elhanan,' preserving the theophoric element across languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Elchanan, Elhanan | es: Eljanan, Eljanán | fr: Elhanan, [אלחנן] | de: Elhanan, [אלחנן] 2Sam 21:19; 2Sam 23:24; 1Chr 11:26; 1Chr 20:5

אֱלִיאָב H0446 N-proper-ms (21×)
Eliab ('my God is father'); name of several OT figures including David's eldest brother and tribal leaders.
The theophoric name Eliab (אֱלִיאָב, 'my God is father') is borne by at least six different individuals in the Hebrew Bible. The most memorable is Jesse's firstborn, whom Samuel initially thought was God's chosen king because of his impressive stature — only for the Lord to reject him in favor of young David (1 Sam 16:6-7). Another Eliab was the Reubenite prince whose sons Dathan and Abiram led the rebellion against Moses (Num 16:1, 12; Deut 11:6). Others include a Zebulunite tribal leader (Num 1:9), a Gadite warrior (1 Chr 12:9), and a Levitical musician (1 Chr 15:18, 20). The name appears with striking uniformity across translations.

Eliab (proper name) (21×) A theophoric proper name meaning 'my God is father,' borne by multiple OT figures. Most prominent are David's eldest brother, passed over for kingship despite his stature (1 Sam 16:6), and the Reubenite father of the rebels Dathan and Abiram (Num 16:1). Also designates a Zebulunite prince (Num 1:9), a Gadite warrior, and Levitical musicians. Rendered with near-perfect consistency — 'Eliab' in English, Spanish, German, and French

— reflecting the transparent Hebrew compound אֱלִיאָב. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Eliab, Eliav, and-Eliav | es: Eliab, Eliav, y-Eliab | fr: Eliav, et-Éliab, Éliab | de: Eliab, Eliav, und-Eliab Num 1:9; Num 2:7; Num 7:24; Num 7:29; Num 10:16

אֱלִיאֵל H0447 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (10×)

Eliel — theophoric personal name meaning 'my God is God,' borne by at least nine men in Chronicles

The name אֱלִיאֵל (Eliel) combines אֵל (God) twice in the construct 'my God is God,' a confession of exclusive devotion. It is borne by multiple individuals in the Chronicler's genealogies and military lists, making precise identification challenging. Notable bearers include a Manassite clan chief (1 Chr 5:24), two Benjaminites (1 Chr 8:20, 22), at least two of David's mighty warriors (1 Chr 11:46-47), a Gadite fighter (1 Chr 12:12), and Levites involved in the ark's transport (1 Chr 15:9, 11). Spanish 'Eliel' and English 'Eliel' both transliterate without alteration.

Eliel (10×) A theophoric personal name meaning 'my God is God' or 'God is my God,' carried by multiple individuals concentrated in the books of Chronicles. These include a Manassite chief (1 Chr 5:24), Benjaminite heads of households (1 Chr 8:20, 22), warriors among David's elite (1 Chr 11:46-47; 12:12), and Levites who assisted in moving the ark (1 Chr 15:9, 11). The name's frequency in post-exilic genealogies reflects the Chronicler's concern for Israelite identity. Spanish and English both preserve the transliteration 'Eliel' unchanged. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Eliel, and-Eli'el, and-Eliel | es: Eliel, y-Eliel | fr: et-Éliel, Éliel | de: Eliel, und-Eliel 1Chr 5:24; 1Chr 6:34; 1Chr 8:20; 1Chr 8:22; 1Chr 11:46

אֱלִיאָתָה H0448 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (2×)

Eliathah/Eliyatah, a Hemanite temple musician

A personal name meaning 'God has come,' borne by one of the sons of Heman the temple singer. The name appears in two forms in 1 Chronicles 25: Eliathah in verse 4 and Eliyatah in verse 27, representing the same person with variant spelling. He was assigned by lot to lead the twentieth division of temple musicians under David's reorganization of worship. The variant forms likely reflect dialectal pronunciation or scribal preference rather than distinct individuals.

(2×) Multilingual glosses preserve the prepositional difference: 'for Eliyatah' (לְ prefix in verse 27) versus plain 'Eliatah' (verse 4). French and German bracket the Hebrew, while translations recognize the variants as the same person. Both occurrences within Chronicles 25 describe the temple music organization—first in the list of Heman's sons appointed to service, then in the lot-casting results assigning divisions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Eliatah, for-Eliyatah | es: Eliata, para-Eliata | fr: [אליאתה], [לאליתה] | de: [אליאתה], [לאליתה] 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:27

אֱלִידָד H0449 N-proper-ms (1×)

Elidad, personal name (God has loved)

A leader from the tribe of Benjamin chosen to assist in dividing Canaan's land in Numbers 34:21. The name means 'God has loved,' combining the divine element אֵל with a form from ידד/דוד (to love). This theophoric name expresses thanksgiving for divine favor or affection. He appears only in this allocation context, representing Benjamin's interests in the land distribution.

(1×) Tribal representative of Benjamin appointed to the land-division commission in Numbers 34:21. The name 'God has loved' reflects Israelite onomastic piety, acknowledging divine covenant faithfulness. As one of the leaders tasked with fairly apportioning Canaan among the tribes, Elidad bore significant administrative and spiritual responsibility. Multilingual transliterations uniformly preserve the name, standard practice for proper nouns. His single biblical appearance leaves no narrative beyond this crucial role in establishing tribal territories. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Elidad | es: Elidad | fr: Elidad | de: Elidad Num 34:21

אֶלְיָדָע H0450 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Eliada, personal name ('God knows') borne by a son of David and other figures

A theophoric name meaning 'God knows,' compounded from 'el (God) and yada' (to know). It is borne by at least three individuals: a son of David born in Jerusalem (2 Sam 5:16; 1 Chr 3:8), who is also called Beeliada ('the Lord knows') in 1 Chr 14:7; the father of Rezon, an adversary of Solomon (1 Kgs 11:23); and a Benjaminite military commander under Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 17:17). The variant Beeliada replacing 'el with ba'al likely reflects later scribal sensitivity to the name Ba'al.

(4×) The personal name Eliada, 'God knows.' David's son bears this name (2 Sam 5:16; 1 Chr 3:8), with the alternate form Beeliada in 1 Chr 14:7 — a telling substitution where ba'al ('lord/master') replaces 'el ('God'), probably reflecting later editorial avoidance of the divine title Ba'al. The name also belongs to the father of Rezon who opposed Solomon (1 Kgs 11:23) and a Benjaminite captain commanding 200,000 warriors (2 Chr 17:17). English, Spanish, French, and German all transliterate consistently as 'Eliada' or 'Elyada.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Eliada, Elyada, and-Elyada | es: Eliada, Elyada, y-Elyada | fr: Elyada, [אלידע], [ואלידע] | de: Elyada, [אלידע], [ואלידע] 2Sam 5:16; 1Kgs 11:23; 1Chr 3:8; 2Chr 17:17

אַלְיָה H0451 Conj-w (5×)

Fat tail of a sheep, the broad fatty tail prized in sacrificial offerings.

Refers to the distinctive fat tail of the broad-tailed sheep common in the ancient Near East, a cut of fat so substantial it could weigh several pounds. In sacrificial contexts it appears alongside the general fat (chelev), marking it as a particularly valued portion offered to God. All five occurrences cluster in Exodus and Leviticus ritual instructions (Exod 29:22; Lev 3:9; 7:3; 8:25; 9:19), underscoring its role as a dedicated sacrificial element rather than ordinary food.

(5×) The fatty tail of the broad-tailed sheep (Ovis laticaudata), specified in sacrificial legislation as a dedicated offering portion. Spanish 'cola gorda' and German 'Fett-tail' both capture the anatomical specificity. Every occurrence pairs this term with chelev ('fat'), distinguishing the tail fat as a separate, named cut in the priestly ritual of Exodus 29 and Leviticus 3, 7, 8, and 9. TAIL BODY PART
en: and-the-fat-tail, the-fat-tail | es: la-cola-gorda, y-la-cola | fr: et-le-graisse-tail, le-graisse-queue | de: der-fett-tail, und-der-fett-tail Exod 29:22; Lev 3:9; Lev 7:3; Lev 8:25; Lev 9:19

אֵלִיָּה H0452 N-proper-ms (71×)

Elijah – the prophet from Tishbe whose name means 'my God is Yahweh,' champion against Baal worship

Elijah (Eliyyahu, 'my God is Yahweh') is one of the towering figures of the Hebrew Bible, a prophet from Tishbe in Gilead who confronted the Baal cult under Ahab and Jezebel (1 Kgs 17-19), called down fire on Mount Carmel, and was taken up to heaven in a chariot of fire (2 Kgs 2:11). His 71 occurrences span Kings and Chronicles, with a cameo in Malachi 3:23 as the forerunner of the Day of the Lord. Three lesser-known bearers also appear: a Benjamite (1 Chr 8:27) and two men in Ezra's time. Spanish Elias, French Elie, and German Elia reflect the same Semitic theophoric name.

Elijah (proper name) (71×) The proper name Elijah, borne primarily by the great ninth-century prophet who declared drought (1 Kgs 17:1), was fed by ravens and a widow, triumphed on Carmel (1 Kgs 18:36-39), and ascended in a whirlwind (2 Kgs 2:11). Also applied to a Benjamite and two men of Ezra's era, but cross-lingual glosses – Spanish Elias, French Elie, German Elia – treat them uniformly as a single proper-noun sense, as expected for a personal name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Eliyahu | es: Eliyahu, Elías, Elías? | fr: Élie | de: Elia 1Kgs 17:1; 1Kgs 17:13; 1Kgs 17:15; 1Kgs 17:16; 1Kgs 17:18

אֱלִיהוּ H0453 N-proper-ms (11×)

Elihu — a Hebrew name meaning 'He is my God,' borne by Job's young interlocutor and four other OT figures

The proper name אֱלִיהוּ (ᵊElihu), meaning 'He is my God,' is most famously borne by the young Buzite who intervenes in Job after the three older friends fall silent. He delivers four speeches (Job 32-37) defending God's justice and sovereignty, arguing that suffering can serve a redemptive purpose rather than indicating guilt. His speeches bridge the friends' failed arguments and God's theophany from the whirlwind. The same name belongs to Samuel's great-grandfather (1 Sam 1:1) and several Davidic-era figures (1 Chr 12:20; 26:7; 27:18). Spanish 'Elihu' and French 'Elihu' transliterate directly.

Elihu (11×) Elihu son of Barachel the Buzite, the young man who speaks in Job 32-37 after the three older friends exhaust their arguments. Angry at Job for self-justification and at the friends for inadequate answers (Job 32:2-6), his four speeches argue that God uses suffering for discipline and revelation, preparing the ground for God's theophany. Spanish 'Elihu' and Arabic إليهو both preserve the theophoric name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elihu, and-Elihu | es: Elihú, Eliú, Y-Eliú | fr: Elihu, [אליהו], [ואליהוא] | de: Elihu, [אליהו], [ואליהו] 1Sam 1:1; 1Chr 12:21; 1Chr 26:7; 1Chr 27:18; Job 32:2

אֱלִיהוֹעֵינַי H0454a N-proper-ms (2×)

Eliehoenai, meaning 'unto the Lord are my eyes'; name of two men

A theophoric name meaning 'unto the Lord are my eyes,' expressing devotion or dependence on God. Two men bear this name: a Korahite gatekeeper in 1 Chronicles 26:3, and a returning exile who came back with Ezra in Ezra 8:4. The name's theology emphasizes visual attention to God—eyes lifted in worship, watchfulness, or expectation. The Korahite context is especially apt, as gatekeepers needed watchful eyes for their duties.

(2×) Transliteration patterns show minor variation: Spanish offers 'Elioenai' and 'Elyehoeinai,' while French and German bracket the Hebrew form. The two biblical occurrences represent different individuals in different historical periods—one from David's temple organization, the other from the post-exilic return under Persian rule, showing the name's continued use across centuries. The name's meaning aligns with the Psalmist's frequent metaphor of eyes turned toward God. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elyehoenai, Elyehoenay | es: Elioenai, Elyehoeinai | fr: [אליהועינין] | de: [אליהועינין] 1Chr 26:3; Ezra 8:4

אֶלְיוֹעֵינַי H0454b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (7×)

Elyoenai ('my eyes are toward God'), a proper name borne by several men in Chronicles and Ezra-Nehemiah.

A masculine proper name meaning 'my eyes are toward God,' expressing devout dependence on the Lord. It is borne by at least five individuals across the genealogical and post-exilic records: a descendant of David (1 Chr 3:23-24), a Simeonite chief (1 Chr 4:36), a Benjamite (1 Chr 7:8), and two or three priests or laymen in the time of Ezra (Ezra 10:22, 27; Neh 12:41). The slight spelling variation between Elyoenai and Elyoenay across manuscripts reflects normal orthographic fluidity in late biblical Hebrew. Spanish 'Elyoenai/Eliohenai' and French 'Eljoenaï' show how translators grapple with the long compound name.

Elyoenai (proper name) (7×) The proper name Elyoenai (meaning 'my eyes are toward God'), designating several individuals in post-exilic genealogies and records: a Davidic descendant in 1 Chronicles 3:23-24, a Simeonite leader in 4:36, a Benjamite in 7:8, and priests or returnees in Ezra 10:22, 10:27, and Nehemiah 12:41. The variant spelling Elyoenay reflects normal late Hebrew orthographic variation. Multilingual renderings – Spanish 'Elyoenai/Eliohenai,' French 'Eljoenaï' – show the adaptations required by this lengthy theophoric compound. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elyo'enai, Elyoenay, Elyoeynai | es: Eliohenai, Elyoeinai, Elyoenai | fr: Eljoénaï, et-Eljoénaï | de: [אליועינין], [אליועני], [ואליועינין] 1Chr 3:23; 1Chr 3:24; 1Chr 4:36; 1Chr 7:8; Ezra 10:22

אֶלִיחָבָא H0455 N-proper-ms (2×)

Eliahba, meaning 'God hides'; one of David's mighty warriors

A personal name meaning 'God hides,' belonging to one of David's elite fighters in the group known as the Thirty. Eliahba appears in both parallel lists of David's champions (2 Samuel 23:32 and 1 Chronicles 11:33) with consistent identification. The theology of the name may reflect trust in God's protection—hiding his faithful ones from danger—or could reference God's own hiddenness or mystery.

(2×) Cross-linguistic transliteration is stable: English 'Eliahba,' Spanish 'Elyajba,' French and German 'Eliahba' or bracketed Hebrew. The parallel occurrences in Samuel and Chronicles represent the standard pattern where the Chronicler drew on and sometimes edited earlier historical sources, in this case producing nearly identical lists of David's heroes. The name appears without additional context beyond military service, suggesting Eliahba's valor spoke for itself. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Eliahba, Elyachba | es: Elyajba | fr: Eliahba, [אליחבא] | de: Eliahba, [אליחבא] 2Sam 23:32; 1Chr 11:33

אֶלִיחֹרֶף H0456 N-proper-ms (1×)

Elihoreph, personal name (autumn God or God of harvest time)

One of Solomon's two scribes mentioned in 1 Kings 4:3. The name's meaning is debated; BDB suggests 'Autumn God' (comparing Job 29:4 where חֹרֶף appears), though this remains uncertain. As a royal scribe, Elihoreph held a position of literacy and administrative power in Solomon's bureaucracy. The theophoric element אֱלִי- ('my God') was common in Israelite names.

(1×) Royal scribe serving in Solomon's administrative cabinet in 1 Kings 4:3. The name's theophoric element ('my God') combined with חֹרֶף (autumn/harvest) may express divine providence through seasonal provision. Scribes wielded considerable influence, managing correspondence, records, and royal decrees. Multilingual transliteration (Elihoreph, Elijóref) preserves the name without interpretation. His partnership with Ahijah suggests dual secretarial roles, perhaps dividing responsibilities for Solomon's expanding kingdom and international dealings. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elihoreph | es: Elijóref | fr: Elihoreph | de: Elihoreph 1Kgs 4:3

אֱלִיל H0457 Conj-w (20×)

Worthless thing, idol; concretely a pagan deity or carved image, abstractly vanity or utter insufficiency.

Built from a root suggesting weakness or nothingness, elil is a devastatingly dismissive term for pagan gods. The prophets and psalmists wield it as a polemic: the gods of the nations are merely elilim, 'nothings' (Ps 96:5; 1 Chr 16:26). There may even be a deliberate wordplay with el ('God'), as if to say these supposed gods are really 'not-gods' or 'un-gods.' In a few passages the abstract sense surfaces: Zechariah's worthless shepherd (Zech 11:17), Job's worthless physicians (Job 13:4), and Jeremiah's worthless divination (Jer 14:14) all use the word to describe emptiness and futility rather than a concrete idol. Spanish and English track the two senses well, using 'idolo/idol' for the concrete and 'vanidad/worthlessness' for the abstract.

1. idol, false god (17×) A concrete idol or false deity, an object of pagan worship regarded with contempt as a 'nothing-god.' The Holiness Code forbids turning to elilim (Lev 19:4; 26:1); the Psalms declare that all the gods of the peoples are elilim (Ps 96:5; 97:7). Isaiah's oracles against idolatry use the term repeatedly (Isa 2:8, 18, 20; 10:10-11; 19:1, 3; 31:7). English 'idol,' Spanish 'idolo,' and German 'Gotze' all converge on the concrete, cultic object. IDOLS AND IMAGES

en: and-his-idols, and-the-idols, and-to-her-idols | es: Y-los-ídolos, de-ídolos, e-ídolos-de | fr: [אלילים], dans-idole, et-idole | de: Goetze, Goetzen, Goetzen-von Lev 19:4; Lev 26:1; 1Chr 16:26; Ps 96:5; Ps 97:7

2. worthlessness, vanity (3×) The abstract quality of worthlessness, vanity, or insufficiency. Zechariah 11:17 condemns the 'shepherd of worthlessness' (roeh ha-elil); Job 13:4 dismisses his friends as

'physicians of worthlessness' (rof'e elil); Jeremiah 14:14 describes false prophecy as 'worthless divination.' Here the term functions as an adjective or abstract noun rather than a label for a foreign deity. Spanish 'vanidad/nada' and English 'worthlessness' capture the sense of utter emptiness. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: and-worthlessness, the-worthless, worthlessness | es: (y-vanidad), el-ídolo, nada | fr: [הָאֱלִיל], idole, אֱלִל | de: Goetze, [אֱלִל], [הָאֱלִיל] Job 13:4; Jer 14:14; Zech 11:17

אֲלִימֶלֶךְ H0458 N-proper-ms (6×)

Elimelech, 'God is king'; Naomi's husband who emigrated to Moab during a Bethlehem famine.

A theophoric proper name meaning 'God is king' or 'my God is king,' combining אֵל ('God') and מֶלֶךְ ('king'). Elimelech is the husband of Naomi and father of Mahlon and Chilion in the book of Ruth. Driven by famine, he relocated his family from Bethlehem to Moab, where he died (Ruth 1:2-3). His name carries poignant irony: the man whose name declares divine sovereignty dies in a foreign land, yet God's providential kingship unfolds through the very family line he left behind.

Elimelech (6×) Elimelech (אֲלִימֶלֶךְ, 'God is king'), Naomi's husband in the book of Ruth. He leaves Bethlehem during a famine and settles in Moab, where he dies, setting in motion the events that bring Ruth into the covenant community (Ruth 1:2-3). His property and legacy become central to the kinsman-redeemer narrative (Ruth 2:1, 3; 4:3, 9). Spanish renders the name as Elimelec, French as Elimelec, with directional forms like a-Elimelec ('to Elimelech') reflecting contexts where his name appears in possessive or relational constructions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elimelech, to-Elimelech | es: Elimélec, a-Elimélec | fr: Élimélec, à-Élimélec | de: Elimelech, zu-Elimelech Ruth 1:2; Ruth 1:3; Ruth 2:1; Ruth 2:3; Ruth 4:3

אִלֵּין H0459 Pro-cp (5×)

Aramaic demonstrative pronoun 'these,' used exclusively in Daniel for plural reference.

An Aramaic demonstrative pronoun meaning 'these,' serving as the plural counterpart of denah ('this'). Found only in the Aramaic portions of Daniel, it points to groups already introduced in context: kingdoms, satraps, or beasts. The multilingual translations converge remarkably: Spanish 'estos/estas,' French 'ces,' and German 'diese' all render it as a straightforward plural demonstrative, confirming its uncomplicated referential function.

(5×) Aramaic plural demonstrative pronoun 'these,' functioning as the plural of denah. Used in Daniel to refer back to previously mentioned entities: 'all these kingdoms' (Dan 2:40, 44), 'these satraps' (Dan 6:2, 6), and 'these beasts' (Dan 7:17). Cognate with Palmyrene 'ln and Targumic 'ilyn, it is part of the standard Aramaic demonstrative system. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: these | es: Estas, estos | fr: ces | de: diese Dan 2:40; Dan 2:44; Dan 6:2; Dan 6:6; Dan 7:17

אֶלְיָסָף H0460 N-proper-ms (6×)

Eliasaph, 'God has added'; a Gadite chief and a Levitical leader in the wilderness period.

A theophoric proper name meaning 'God has added,' combining אֵל ('God') and יָסַף ('to add'). Two individuals bear this name in Numbers: the son of Deuel (or Reuel), chief of the tribe of Gad during the wilderness census and march (Num 1:14; 2:14; 7:42, 47; 10:20), and the son of Lael, chief of the Gershonite clan of Levites responsible for the tabernacle coverings (Num 3:24). Both figures serve in administrative and liturgical roles during Israel's formative wilderness period.

(6×) Eliasaph (אֶלְיָסָף, 'God has added'), a proper name for two wilderness-era leaders. The more frequently mentioned is the son of Deuel, tribal chief of Gad, who appears in the census (Num 1:14), the camp arrangement (Num 2:14), and the tabernacle dedication offerings (Num 7:42, 47). The second is the son of Lael, head of the Gershonite Levites charged with the tabernacle's curtains and coverings (Num 3:24). Multilingual renderings are uniform – Eliasaph in Spanish, Eliasaph in French and German – reflecting straightforward transliteration of this theophoric compound. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Eliasaph | es: Eliasaf | fr: Éliasaph | de: Eliasaph Num 1:14; Num 2:14; Num 3:24; Num 7:42; Num 7:47

אֱלִיעֶזֶר H0461 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (14×)

Eliezer — proper name meaning 'my God is help,' borne by several OT figures including Abraham's steward

A theophoric name composed of 'El' (God) and 'ezer (help), meaning 'my God is help.' The earliest and most familiar bearer is Abraham's household steward from Damascus, mentioned as his prospective heir before the promise of Isaac (Gen 15:2). Moses named his second son Eliezer, commemorating God's deliverance from Pharaoh's sword (Exod 18:4). The name reappears across Chronicles, Ezra, and 2 Chronicles for a Benjamite warrior (1 Chr 7:8), several priests and Levites (1 Chr 15:24; 26:25; Ezra 8:16; 10:18, 23, 31), a Reubenite chief (1 Chr 27:16), and a prophet who rebuked Jehoshaphat for his alliance with Ahaziah (2 Chr 20:37). The companion name Eleazar shares the same roots in reversed order.

Eliezer (proper name) (14×) The proper name Eliezer (אֱלִיעֶזֶר, 'my God is help'), applied to at least eight distinct biblical figures. Cross-linguistic renderings are stable (eng: Eliezer, spa: Eliezer, fra: Éliézer, deu: Elieser), reflecting standard transliteration practice. The name's theological meaning — invoking God as helper — resonates especially in the naming of Moses' son (Exod 18:4, 'the God of my father was my help') and in the prophetic role of the seer who spoke against Jehoshaphat's fleet at Ezion-geber (2 Chr 20:37). All 14 occurrences function as a proper noun with no semantic variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Eliezer, and-Eliezer, for-Eliezer | es: Eliezer, a-Eliezer, para-Eliezer | fr: Eliezer, et-Éliézer, zu-Éliézer | de: Elieser, [אליעזר], [ואליעזר] Gen 15:2; Exod 18:4; 1Chr 7:8; 1Chr 15:24; 1Chr 23:15 and Elienai, personal name (variant spelling with conjunction)

אֶלְיוֹעֵינַי H0462 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

A Benjamite name appearing in 1 Chronicles 8:20, spelled here as אֶלְיוֹעֵנַי with conjunction. The name means 'to the Lord are my eyes' or 'my eyes are toward God,' expressing devotional orientation. Various spellings occur across Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah for different individuals, showing orthographic flexibility. This particular instance adds the conjunctive waw, typical in genealogical lists enumerating multiple sons.

(1×) Benjamite listed among the sons of Shashak in 1 Chronicles 8:20's genealogy. The conjunction 'and' integrates Elienai into the sequential enumeration of family members. The name's meaning ('toward the Lord are my eyes') reflects piety focused on God, a common theological theme in Hebrew names. Bracketed glosses indicate transliteration challenges with this variant spelling. The Chronicler's extensive genealogies preserve tribal memory, with names like Elienai testifying to covenant faithfulness across generations. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Elienay | es: Y-Elienai | fr: [ואלינ] | de: [ואליענ] 1Chr 8:20

אֶלְיָעָם H0463 N-proper-ms (2×)

Eliam, meaning 'God is kinsman'; father of Bathsheba and a warrior of David

A theophoric name meaning 'God is kinsman,' appearing twice in 2 Samuel. Most notably, Eliam is identified as the father of Bathsheba in 2 Samuel 11:3, making him David's future father-in-law under tragic circumstances. He also appears as one of David's mighty warriors in 2 Samuel 23:34. Some scholars suggest these might be the same person, which would add painful irony—David committing adultery with the daughter of one of his own loyal fighters. BDB notes the name parallels the Phoenician 'Elem.'

(2×) Multilingual transliteration is uniform: 'Eliam' across English, Spanish, French, and German, reflecting the name's clarity. The two occurrences in 2 Samuel present either two different men named Eliam, or one man whose daughter's violation by David adds tragedy to his military service. Chronicles 3:5 calls Bathsheba's father 'Ammiel,' potentially the same name with elements reversed (kinsman-God vs. God-kinsman). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Eliam | es: Eliam | fr: Eliam | de: Eliam 2Sam 11:3; 2Sam 23:34

אֱלִיפַז H0464 N-proper-ms (15×)

Eliphaz — 'God is fine gold,' name of Esau's firstborn son and Job's chief counselor

Eliphaz (possibly 'God is fine gold') is shared by two prominent figures. The first is Esau's firstborn by Adah, whose descendants became Edomite chiefs (Gen 36:4-16; 1 Chr 1:35-36). The second is Eliphaz the Temanite, Job's senior friend, who delivers three speech cycles (Job 4-5; 15; 22) arguing that suffering implies hidden sin. God's rebuke falls specifically on Eliphaz and his companions (Job 42:7, 9). Notably, Teman was Edomite territory, suggesting the Joban Eliphaz may descend from the Esauite one. Spanish 'Elifaz,' French 'Eliphaz,' and German 'Elifas' transliterate consistently.

Eliphaz (15×) A Hebrew proper name (eliphaz, possibly 'God is fine gold') borne by two figures: (1) Esau's firstborn by Adah, progenitor of Edomite clans including Teman (Gen 36:4, 10-16; 1 Chr 1:35-36); and (2) Eliphaz the Temanite, Job's chief counselor who speaks first in each dialogue cycle (Job 4:1; 15:1; 22:1) and is rebuked by God (Job 42:7, 9). EL COMPOUND NAMES

en: Eliphaz, to-Eliphaz | es: Elifaz, a-Elifaz, de-Elifaz | fr: Eliphaz, [אליפז], Élihou | de: Elifas, Elifas', [אליפז] Gen 36:4; Gen 36:10; Gen 36:11; Gen 36:12

אֱלִיפָל H0465 N-proper-ms (1×)

Eliphal, personal name (God has judged)

One of David's mighty warriors mentioned in 1 Chronicles 11:35, though the parallel passage in 2 Samuel 23:34 reads Eliphelet instead, suggesting textual variation. The name means 'God has judged,' from אֵל (God) and פלל (to judge/intervene). Such discrepancies between Samuel and Chronicles are common, reflecting different textual traditions or scribal variations.

(1×) Warrior in David's elite corps of mighty men according to 1 Chronicles 11:35. The name 'God has judged' invokes divine justice or intervention, appropriate for a warrior dependent on God's favor in battle. The textual variant with 2 Samuel 23:34 (Eliphelet) shows how personal names could shift in transmission, possibly through phonetic similarity or scribal confusion. Bracketed glosses acknowledge the name's uncertain textual standing. Nevertheless, the honor of inclusion among David's champions testifies to Eliphal's valor. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Eliphal | es: Elifal | fr: [אליפל] | de: [אליפל] 1Chr 11:35

אֱלִיפְלֵהוּ H0466 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

and Eliphelehu, a Levitical gatekeeper and musician

A conjunction plus personal name meaning 'may God distinguish him,' appearing in 1 Chronicles 15 during David's second attempt to bring the ark to Jerusalem. Eliphelehu was one of the Levitical musicians appointed to play lyres and serve as a gatekeeper for the ark. The name's theology expresses a parent's prayer for the child's distinction or honor from God.

(2×) Cross-linguistic preservation of the conjunction is standard: English 'and Eliphelehu,' Spanish 'y Elifelehu,' French and German bracket the Hebrew form. Both occurrences in 1 Chronicles 15:18 and 15:21 refer to the same occasion and person—first listed among those appointed (verse 18), then mentioned again as actually performing his musical duties (verse 21) during the successful ark procession after Uzzah's death had halted the earlier attempt. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Eliphlehu | es: y-Elifelehu | fr: [ואליפלהו] | de: [ואליפלהו] 1Chr 15:18; 1Chr 15:21

וֶאֱלִיפֶלֶט H0467 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (9×)

Eliphelet, a Hebrew name meaning 'my God is deliverance,' borne by several biblical figures.

A theophoric proper name combining 'El' (God) and 'pelet' (deliverance), meaning 'my God is deliverance.' It is borne by at least five individuals in the Hebrew Bible, most notably a son of David born in Jerusalem (2 Sam 5:16; 1 Chr 3:6, 8; 14:7). Other bearers include one of David's mighty warriors (2 Sam 23:34), a Benjamite descendant of Saul (1 Chr 8:39), and two men in Ezra's post-exilic community (Ezra 8:13; 10:33). The name appears in variant spellings, including אֶלְפֶּלֶט.

Eliphelet (proper name) (9×) The proper name Eliphelet (אֱלִיפֶלֶט), a theophoric compound meaning 'my God is deliverance.' Borne by a son of David (2 Sam 5:16; 1 Chr 3:6, 8; 14:7), one of David's warriors (2 Sam 23:34), a Benjamite (1 Chr 8:39), and post-exilic figures in Ezra 8:13 and 10:33. French and German occasionally leave the name untransliterated in Hebrew script, reflecting manuscript variation, while Spanish offers 'Elifelet' and 'Elifélet'—minor phonetic adaptations preserving the original name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Eliphelet, and-Elifelet, and-Eliphalet | es: Elifelet, y-Elifelet, y-Elifélet | fr: Eliphelet, [אליפלט], [ואליפלט] | de: Eliphelet, [אליפלט], und-Elifelet 2Sam 5:16; 2Sam 23:34; 1Chr 3:6; 1Chr 3:8; 1Chr 8:39

אֱלִיצוּר H0468 N-proper-ms (5×)

Elizur ('my God is a rock'), a Reubenite leader during the wilderness period.

A theophoric personal name meaning 'my God is a rock,' borne by the chief of the tribe of Reuben during the wilderness wanderings. The name combines 'El' (God) with 'tsur' (rock), echoing the confession of Deuteronomy 32:4 that God is the Rock. Elizur appears exclusively in Numbers (1:5; 2:10; 7:30, 35; 10:18) in census lists and tribal offering records, always in his capacity as Reuben's appointed leader.

(5×) The proper name Elizur, identifying the son of Shedeur and tribal chief of Reuben. His name, 'my God is a rock,' belongs to a family of tsur-compound names (cf. Tsuriel, Tsuri-shaddai) expressing trust in God's stability. All five occurrences in Numbers place him in official tribal functions: the census (1:5), camp arrangement (2:10), tabernacle dedication offerings (7:30, 35), and marching order (10:18). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elizur | es: Elisur, Elizur | fr: Élitsur | de: Elizur Num 1:5; Num 2:10; Num 7:30; Num 7:35; Num 10:18

אֱלִיצָפָן H0469 N-proper-ms (6×)

Elizaphan — proper name meaning 'God has protected,' borne by a Kohathite chief and a Zebulunite leader.

Elizaphan (also spelled Elzaphan) is a masculine proper name compounded from 'El' (God) and 'tsaphan' (to hide, protect), meaning 'God has protected.' The name belongs to at least two biblical figures: a Kohathite Levite chief appointed in the wilderness period (Num 3:30), who later features in the temple music arrangements under David (1 Chr 15:8) and Hezekiah's reforms (2 Chr 29:13); and a tribal leader from Zebulun tasked with apportioning the land of Canaan (Num 34:25). The alternate form Elzaphan appears in Exodus 6:22 and Leviticus 10:4, where Elizaphan and his brother Mishael carry the bodies of Nadab and Abihu from the tabernacle.

Elizaphan (proper name) (6×) A theophoric proper name meaning 'God has protected' (from אֵל + צָפַן), designating at least two individuals: (a) the chief of the Kohathite clan of Levites, appearing in the wilderness census (Num 3:30), in David's organization of temple musicians (1 Chr 15:8), and in Hezekiah's temple purification (2 Chr 29:13); also spelled Elzaphan in Exodus 6:22 and Leviticus 10:4; (b) a prince of the tribe of Zebulun appointed to help divide the promised land (Num 34:25). Multilingual renderings consistently transliterate the name, confirming a single lexical identity across both spelling variants. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elitsafan, Elitsaphan, Elizaphan | es: Elitsafán, Elizafán, Eltzafán | fr: Elizaphan, Elzaphan, [אליצכן] | de: Elizaphan, Elzaphan, [אליצכן] Exod 6:22; Lev 10:4; Num 3:30; Num 34:25; 1Chr 15:8

אֱלִיקָא H0470 N-proper-ms (1×)

Elika, personal name (meaning uncertain)

One of David's thirty mighty men, specifically identified as 'the Harodite' in 2 Samuel 23:25. Notably, he doesn't appear in the parallel list in 1 Chronicles 11:27, suggesting either textual loss or that this represents an alternate name. The etymology of Elika is uncertain; it may be a shortened form of a longer theophoric name. His designation 'the Harodite' links him to Harod or a family from that area.

(1×) Elite warrior among David's thirty champions in 2 Samuel 23:25, distinguished by his origin as 'the Harodite.' The name's meaning remains obscure, possibly abbreviated from a longer form. His absence from Chronicles' parallel roster raises questions about textual transmission or whether he held a brief tenure. Multilingual transliteration uniformly preserves Elika. As with many of the thirty, Scripture records only name and designation, leaving military exploits to imagination, though inclusion in this select group testifies to extraordinary courage and loyalty to David. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elika | es: Eliqa | fr: Elika | de: Elika 2Sam 23:25

אֶלְיָקִים H0471 N-proper-ms (12×)

Elyaqim – 'God raises up'; a proper name borne by Hezekiah's steward and as the original name of King Jehoiakim

Eliakim (Hebrew אֶלְיָקִים, 'God raises up') is a theophoric proper name borne by at least two prominent Old Testament figures: (1) the son of Hilkiah, who served as steward over King Hezekiah's palace and was the chief negotiator during the Assyrian siege of Jerusalem (2 Kgs 18:18, 26, 37; Isa 22:20; 36:3, 11, 22; 37:2); and (2) the original birth name of Jehoiakim son of Josiah, changed by Pharaoh Neco when he installed him as vassal king of Judah (2 Kgs 23:34; 2 Chr 36:4). Isaiah's oracle about Eliakim the steward (Isa 22:20-25) portrays him as a 'peg in a sure place,' entrusted with the key of the house of David – language echoed in Revelation 3:7.

Elyaqim (proper name) (12×) The proper name Eliakim ('God raises up'), referring to Hezekiah's palace steward during the Assyrian crisis (2 Kgs 18:18; Isa 22:20; 36:3) and the birth name of King Jehoiakim (2 Kgs 23:34; 2 Chr 36:4). Spanish Eliaquim, French Elyakim, and German Eljakim preserve one theophoric name across all syntactic frames. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Eliakim, Elyakim, Elyaqim | es: Eliacim, Eliaquim, Elyaqim | fr: Elyakim, Elyaqim, [אליקים] | de: Eljakim, Elyakim, Elyaqim 2Kgs 18:18; 2Kgs 18:26; 2Kgs 18:37; 2Kgs 19:2; 2Kgs 23:34

אֱלִישֶׁבַע H0472 N-proper-fs (1×)

Elisheba, personal name (God is an oath/my God is abundance)

Aaron's wife, mentioned in Exodus 6:23 as daughter of Amminadab and sister of Nahshon. The name means either 'God is an oath' (connecting to swearing) or 'my God is seven/abundance.' She bore Aaron four sons: Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar. The Greek Ἐλεισαβεθ (Elizabeth) derives from this name, appearing in Luke 1:5 as the mother of John the Baptist.

(1×) Matriarch of the Aaronic priesthood, wife of Israel's first high priest in Exodus 6:23. Her name 'God is oath' or 'God is abundance' reflects covenant theology, connecting divine faithfulness to sworn promises. As mother of the priestly line, Elisheba's significance extends beyond her single mention, establishing the genealogical foundation for Israel's cultic leadership. Her descent from Judah's line (Nahshon was a prince of Judah) united priestly and royal tribal connections. The name's survival into New Testament Greek (Elizabeth) demonstrates its enduring resonance. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elisheba | es: Elisheva | fr: Elisheba | de: Elisheba Exod 6:23

אֱלִישָׁה H0473 N-proper-ms (3×)

Elishah (descendant of Javan; possibly Aeolis, Hellas, or Italian territories)

A descendant of Javan listed in the Table of Nations, representing a people or region from which valuable materials came. Scholars have proposed various identifications: Aeolis in Asia Minor, Hellas (Greece), or even Italy and Sicily. Ezekiel mentions 'the coastlands of Elishah' as a source of purple dye, suggesting maritime trade connections. The uncertainty of identification reflects how ancient trade networks brought Israel into contact with distant Mediterranean peoples, some whose exact locations have been lost to history.

(3×) Genesis 10:4 and 1 Chronicles 1:7 list Elishah among the sons of Javan, grandson of Noah through Japheth. Ezekiel 27:7 adds that 'purple from the coastlands of Elishah' covered Tyre's deck—a luxury item associated with royalty and wealth. The multilingual glosses preserve the name but offer little clue to identity. Ancient interpreters proposed Hellas, Italy, or Carthage; modern proposals include Aeolis or Cyprus. The mystery reminds us that Israel's Scriptures preserve memories of trade connections spanning the Mediterranean world. ELISHA PROPHET NAME

en: Elishah | es: Elisa, Elishá | fr: Elishah, Élie, Élischa | de: Elischa, [אלישה] Gen 10:4; 1Chr 1:7; Ezek 27:7

אֱלִישׁוּעַ H0474 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

and Elishua, son of David born in Jerusalem

A conjunction plus personal name meaning either 'God is salvation' or 'God is opulence,' borne by one of David's sons born in Jerusalem. Elishua appears in the lists of David's children in both 2 Samuel 5:15 and 1 Chronicles 14:5. The name is related to Elisha, sharing the same root. Little is recorded about Elishua beyond his birth, unlike his brothers Solomon, Absalom, and Amnon who figure prominently in the succession narrative.

(2×) Multilingual rendering preserves coordination: English 'and Elishua,' Spanish 'y Elishua,' French and German bracket or transliterate with conjunction. The parallel occurrences in Samuel and Chronicles represent the same genealogical tradition—both books list David's sons born in Jerusalem after he conquered the city and established it as his capital, showing continuity of the Davidic line and God's blessing through many offspring. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Elishua | es: y-Elishua | fr: [ואלישוע], et-Elishua | de: [ואלישוע], und-Elishua 2Sam 5:15; 1Chr 14:5

אֶלְיָשִׁיב H0475 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (17×)

Eliashib — proper name meaning 'God restores,' borne by six OT figures including Nehemiah's high priest

A theophoric name composed of 'El' (God) and a form of shub (to return, restore), meaning 'God restores.' The most prominent bearer is the high priest during Nehemiah's governorship, who led the rebuilding of the Sheep Gate (Neh 3:1) yet controversially provided Tobiah the Ammonite a chamber in the temple courts (Neh 13:4-7). Other bearers include a Davidic descendant (1 Chr 3:24), a priestly division head (1 Chr 24:12), a temple singer who had married a foreign wife (Ezra 10:24), and two laymen from the clans of Zattu and Bani who did likewise (Ezra 10:27, 36). The name's ironic resonance — 'God restores' — threads through the post-exilic restoration narrative.

Elyashiv (proper name) (17×) The proper name Eliashib (אֶלְיָשִׁיב, 'God restores'), applied to at least six distinct individuals. Cross-linguistic renderings are remarkably stable (eng: Eliashib, spa: Eliasib, fra: Éliashib, deu: Eljaschib), reflecting the name's fixed transliteration tradition. The high priest Eliashib dominates the attestation with 11 of 17 occurrences, all concentrated in Ezra-Nehemiah, where he embodies both the hope and the compromise of the post-exilic community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Eliashib, Elyashiv, and-Elyashiv | es: Eliasib, Elyashiv, para-Eliashib | fr: et-Éliashib, zu-Éliashib, Éliashib | de: Eljaschib, [ואלישיב], [לאלישיב] 1Chr 3:24; 1Chr 24:12; Ezra 10:6; Ezra 10:24; Ezra 10:27

אֱלִישָׁמָע H0476 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (17×)

Elishama — proper name meaning 'God has heard,' borne by six OT figures including an Ephraimite chief

A theophoric name meaning 'my God has heard,' combining 'El' (God) with shama' (to hear). The earliest and most frequently cited bearer is the chieftain of Ephraim during the wilderness period (Num 1:10; 7:48), who led his tribe's census and offerings. A son of David also carries this name (2 Sam 5:16; 1 Chr 3:8), as does the royal scribe under Jehoiakim in whose chamber Baruch's scroll was stored (Jer 36:12, 20-21). The name parallels Ishmael ('God hears') in meaning, and Syriac and Sabaic cognates confirm its wide Semitic distribution.

Elishama (17×) The proper name Elishama (אֱלִישָׁמָע, 'God has heard'), referring to six distinct individuals across the Hebrew Bible. Translation traditions are uniform (eng: Elishama, spa: Elisama, fra: Elishama/Élischama, deu: Elischama), indicating a well-established transliteration. The name appears in Numbers (Ephraimite chief), 2 Samuel and Chronicles (Davidic son), Jeremiah (royal scribe), 2 Kings (royal lineage), and 2 Chronicles (Jehoshaphat's priest). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elishama, and-Elishama | es: Elisama, Elishama, Y-Elisama | fr: Elishama, et-Elishama, et-Élischama | de: Elischama, Elishama, [אלישמע] Num 1:10; Num 2:18; Num 7:48; Num 7:53; Num 10:22

אֱלִישָׁע H0477 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (58×)

Elisha — the prophet of Israel who succeeded Elijah, known for miraculous deeds in the northern kingdom

The name אֱלִישָׁע (Elisha, 'God is salvation') belongs to the prophet who received Elijah's mantle — literally and figuratively — at the Jordan (2 Kgs 2:13-14). His ministry in the northern kingdom of Israel spans the reigns of Jehoram through Joash, encompassing some of Scripture's most vivid miracle narratives: purifying poisoned water (2 Kgs 2:21), multiplying oil for a widow (2 Kgs 4:1-7), raising the Shunammite's son (2 Kgs 4:32-37), and healing Naaman's leprosy (2 Kgs 5). Jesus himself references Elisha's ministry to a Gentile in Luke 4:27, underscoring the universal reach of divine compassion.

Elisha (58×) The proper name of the prophet Elisha, successor of Elijah. All 58 occurrences fall within 1-2 Kings, referring to the same individual. Spanish 'Eliseo,' French 'Élisée,' and German 'Elisa' each adapt the theophoric name differently, but the underlying meaning 'God is salvation' is universally recognized. His call narrative (1 Kgs 19:16-19) and double-portion request (2 Kgs 2:9) establish him as Elijah's authorized successor. ELISHA PROPHET NAME

en: Elisha | es: Eliseo | fr: Élisée | de: Elisa 1Kgs 19:16; 1Kgs 19:17; 1Kgs 19:19; 2Kgs 2:2

אֱלִישָׁפָט H0478 N-proper-ms (1×)

Elishaphat, personal name (God has judged)

A military captain who joined Jehoiada's conspiracy to overthrow Queen Athaliah and crown young Joash in 2 Chronicles 23:1. The name means 'God has judged,' from אֵל (God) and שָׁפַט (to judge). Phoenician parallels like בעלשפט and שפטבעל show the widespread use of judicial theophoric elements. Elishaphat's participation in the coup demonstrated commitment to Davidic covenant and opposition to Baal-worshiping tyranny.

(1×) Military commander who allied with priest Jehoiada to restore legitimate Davidic rule in 2 Chronicles 23:1. The name 'God has judged' proves ironically fitting, as Elishaphat executed divine judgment against Athaliah's illegitimate reign. His role required courage —conspiring against a reigning monarch risked death if discovered. The Phoenician cognates suggest cultural interchange of onomastic patterns. Bracketed glosses indicate transliteration challenges. Elishaphat represents faithful officers who risked everything to preserve covenant kingship from Omride corruption. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Elishaphat | es: Elisafat | fr: [אלישפט] | de: [אלישפט] 2Chr 23:1

אֵלֶּה H0479 Pro-cp (14×)

These, those — an Aramaic demonstrative pronoun (plural) used in Daniel and Ezra

An Aramaic demonstrative pronoun meaning 'these' or 'those,' the plural form of dēk ('that'). It appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of the Hebrew Bible — Daniel and Ezra — where it functions as a standard plural demonstrative modifying nouns. The characteristic phrase guvrāyyā' illēk ('these men') recurs throughout Daniel 3 in the story of the fiery furnace (vv. 12, 13, 21, 22, 23, 27), and again in Daniel 6 regarding the conspirators against Daniel. In Ezra, it modifies matters of administrative concern: 'this house' and 'these elders' (Ezra 4:21; 5:9; 6:8). The Old Syriac cognate hālōk and the Arabic 'ulā'ika confirm its deep Semitic pedigree as a distal plural demonstrative.

(14×) An Aramaic plural demonstrative pronoun meaning 'these' or 'those,' modifying nouns in the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra. Its most frequent collocation is guvrāyyā' illēk ('these men') in the furnace narrative of Daniel 3 (vv. 12, 13, 21-23, 27) and the lion's den account of Daniel 6 (vv. 6, 12, 16, 25). In Ezra it accompanies administrative nouns in Persian-period decrees (Ezra 4:21; 5:9; 6:8). English renders 'these/those,' Spanish 'estos,' German 'diese,' all reflecting the same demonstrative function. All 14 occurrences share this single grammatical sense without variation. DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS

en: these, those | es: estos | fr: Eliézer, [אלך] | de: diese Ezra 4:21; Ezra 5:9; Ezra 6:8; Dan 3:12

אֲלַלַי H0480 Interjection (2×)

alas! woe! interjection expressing lament, distress, or grief

An onomatopoetic exclamation of distress, this Hebrew interjection captures the sound of lamentation itself. Job uses it in his anguished cry when contemplating his suffering, while Micah employs it to express prophetic grief over Israel's moral decay. The word likely derives from the natural sounds humans make when wailing—similar forms appear in Arabic and Ethiopic. It's the biblical equivalent of 'alas!' or 'woe is me!' conveying deep personal or communal distress.

(2×) An exclamation of grief or despair, always followed by 'to me' (li) in its two biblical occurrences. Job 10:15 uses it in his desperate complaint about his affliction, while Micah 7:1 employs it to lament the absence of righteous people in the land. The cross-linguistic evidence shows translators struggling to capture its emotive force: Spanish preserves the sound with '¡Ay!', French uses 'hélas!', while German and French sometimes simply transliterate the Hebrew. This suggests the word's onomatopoetic character was recognized even in antiquity. WOE AND ALAS en: Woe, woe | es: ¡Ay-de, ¡ay | fr: hélas!, אללי | de: [אללי] Job 10:15; Mic 7:1

אָלַם H0481 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-2ms (9×)

To bind; in Niphal, to be bound (of tongue) – hence to be dumb, mute, or silent; in Piel, to bind sheaves.

At its root, 'alam means 'to bind,' and its various stems radiate from that physical image. The Niphal – by far the most common form – pictures the tongue as bound: silenced, rendered mute. This is the verb behind Isaiah 53:7's haunting image of the Suffering Servant silent before his shearers, and Ezekiel's divinely imposed speechlessness (Ezek 3:26, 24:27). The Psalmist uses it for deliberate self-restraint: 'I was mute with silence' (Ps 39:2). A single Piel occurrence in Genesis 37:7 preserves the concrete root meaning – Joseph's brothers binding sheaves in the field – a reminder that spiritual silence and physical binding share a single Hebrew root.

1. be dumb, be silent (Niphal) (7×) To be dumb, mute, or silent (Niphal) – the tongue 'bound' so that speech is impossible or deliberately withheld. Spanish 'enmudecí/enmudeció' and 'estarás mudo' reflect both voluntary silence (Ps 39:2, 9) and divinely imposed muteness (Ezek 3:26). Isaiah 53:7's silent lamb before its shearers – 'she did not open her mouth' – became one of the most quoted Old Testament passages in the New Testament. DEAF AND MUTE

en: I-am-mute, I-was-mute, and-I-was-speechless | es: Enmudecí, enmudeció, estarás-mudo | fr: [ונאלמת], [ונאלמתי], [נאלמה] | de: [ונאלמת], [ונאלמתי], [נאלמה] Ps 39:2; Ps 39:9; Isa 53:7; Ezek 3:26; Ezek 24:27

2. be made dumb, be silenced (Niphal jussive) (1×) To be silenced or made dumb (Niphal jussive/passive) – a prayer that lying lips be forcibly muted. Psalm 31:18 uses the jussive 'let the lying lips be silenced' (te'alamna), with Spanish 'enmudezcan' and French 'muet' capturing the wished-for result. The passive force distinguishes this from the voluntary or prophetic silence of sense 1. DEAF AND MUTE

en: let-be-silenced | es: Enmudezcan | fr: muet | de: lass-sein-silenced Ps 31:18

3. bind (Piel) (1×) To bind, tie together (Piel) – the concrete, physical root meaning. Genesis 37:7 describes Joseph and his brothers 'binding sheaves' (me'allmim alumim) in the field, the dreamlike scene that sets the whole Joseph narrative in motion. Spanish 'atando' and French 'liant' confirm the straightforward physical action, which stands in vivid contrast to the metaphorical 'binding' of the tongue in the Niphal. BINDING AND TYING en: binding | es: atando | fr: liant | de: banden Gen 37:7

אִלֵּם H0482 Adj-ms (2×)

silence; unable to speak, dumbness

A noun meaning silence or muteness, appearing in two psalm titles. In Psalm 56:1, it may be part of a melody name: 'The Dove on Distant Oaks' (taking 'elem' as silence) or possibly 'The Silent Dove of Distant Places.' Psalm 58:2 raises textual questions—does it mean speaking 'in silence' (i.e., not speaking righteously) or should the text be emended to 'elim' (gods/judges)? The uncertainty reflects the difficulty of ancient musical or liturgical notations.

(2×) Translation strategies reveal interpretive diversity: English 'in silence' or 'of silence,' Spanish simply 'silencio,' French 'assemblée' (assembly, following emendation?), German 'in silence' or 'von silence.' The psalm titles notoriously resist clear interpretation, mixing melody names, historical notes, and liturgical instructions. The witness of ancient versions shows early translators already struggled with these technical terms, making definitive interpretation challenging. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8275 WITH 8 SENSES

en: in-silence, of-silence | es: silencio | fr: assemblée | de: in-silence, von-silence Ps 56:1; Ps 58:1

אִלֵּם H0483 Adj-mp (6×)

Mute, unable to speak; used literally of persons and figuratively of watchmen and idols.

An adjective describing the inability to speak, encompassing both physical muteness and figurative silence. In Exodus 4:11, God declares himself sovereign over who is made mute or seeing, grounding the word in the reality of human disability. Isaiah 35:6 promises the mute will sing for joy in the messianic age, while Isaiah 56:10 turns the image sharply: Israel's watchmen are 'mute dogs' who cannot bark — a devastating metaphor for prophetic failure. Habakkuk 2:18 applies the term to idols, exposing the absurdity of consulting a speechless teacher. The Spanish 'mudo' and French 'muet' both preserve the singular semantic focus on voicelessness.

mute, unable to speak (6×) Describes the state of being unable to speak, whether as a physical condition (Exod 4:11; Ps 38:13; Prov 31:8, advocating for those who cannot speak for themselves) or as a figurative indictment — of negligent prophets likened to dogs that cannot bark (Isa 56:10), of the joyful reversal when the mute tongue sings (Isa 35:6), and of lifeless idols that are inherently voiceless (Hab 2:18). Across languages — Spanish 'mudo,' French 'muet,' English 'mute' — the translations uniformly converge on speechlessness, confirming a single tightly unified sense. DEAF AND MUTE

en: and-like-a-mute, for-the-mute, mute | es: del-mudo, mudo, mudos | fr: [אלמים], et-muet, muet | de: Elam, [אלמים], [לאלם] Exod 4:11; Ps 38:13; Prov 31:8; Isa 35:6; Isa 56:10

אַלְמֻגִּים H0484 Art / N-mp (3×)

almug wood (variant of algum; precious imported timber)

A precious imported wood brought by sea from Ophir, used by Solomon for temple furnishings and musical instruments. This is the Kings spelling of what Chronicles calls algum (H0418)—the same material rendered with slight orthographic variation. The wood's pairing with gold and precious stones indicates its high value. Solomon crafted supports for the temple and palace, plus lyres and harps for musicians. The text notes that such almug wood had never been seen before in Israel, emphasizing its exotic rarity.

(3×) 1 Kings 10:11-12 (occurring three times) describes Hiram's fleet bringing almug wood from Ophir along with gold. Solomon made the wood into supports (or steps) for temple and palace, and into musical instruments 'such as had never been seen before in the land of Judah.' The almug/algum variation illustrates how foreign loanwords sometimes received inconsistent Hebrew spellings. Identification proposals include red sandalwood, juniper, or other durable, beautiful woods suitable for both construction and fine craftsmanship. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10248 WITH 3 SENSES

en: almug, the-almug | es: almugim, el-almugim | fr: almug, le-almug | de: almug, der-almug 1Kgs 10:11; 1Kgs 10:12

אַלְמָה H0485 N-fpc / 2mp (5×)

A sheaf of harvested grain, memorably appearing in Joseph's dream and the return from exile.

Denotes a bound bundle of harvested grain stalks. Four of its five occurrences appear in Joseph's prophetic dream (Gen 37:7), where his sheaf rises upright and the brothers' sheaves bow down, foreshadowing his future authority. The final occurrence in Psalm 126:6 uses sheaves as a joyful image of return from captivity: those who sow in tears will reap carrying their sheaves. German 'Garbe' and Spanish 'gavilla' both preserve the concrete agricultural sense.

(5×) A bound bundle of cut grain stalks, a sheaf. In Genesis 37:7, the term appears four times in Joseph's dream narrative where sheaves personify the brothers' future submission. In Psalm 126:6, sheaves symbolize the joyful harvest that follows a season of weeping, figuring the return from Babylonian exile. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'gavilla,' German 'Garbe,' French 'gerbe') uniformly points to the concrete agricultural referent. GRAIN SHEAF

en: his-sheaves, sheaf-my, sheaves | es: a-gavilla-de-mí, gavilla-de-mí, gavillas | fr: gerbe, sheaf-mon, sheaves | de: Garben, eure-Garben, meine-Garbe Gen 37:7; Ps 126:6

אַלְמוֹדָד H0486 N-proper-ms (2×)

Almodad, a South Arabian people descended from Joktan

A personal or tribal name appearing in the Table of Nations (Genesis 10 and 1 Chronicles 1) as the first son of Joktan, ancestor of various South Arabian peoples. BDB suggests the initial element may originally have been 'El' (the Sabaean god) rather than 'Al,' making the name mean 'God is loved.' The name represents one of several Joktanite tribes inhabiting southern Arabia in antiquity.

(2×) Multilingual transliteration is consistent: 'Almodad' in English, Spanish, French, and German, with French and German optionally bracketing Hebrew. The parallel occurrences in Genesis 10:26 and 1 Chronicles 1:20 preserve the same genealogical tradition of Joktan's thirteen sons, representing tribal groups whose territories extended across southern Arabia. The Table of Nations organizes humanity ethnographically, showing how all peoples descend from Noah's sons. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Almodad | es: Almodad | fr: Almodad, [אלמודד] | de: Almodad, [אלמודד] Gen 10:26; 1Chr 1:20

אַלַמֶּלֶךְ H0487 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

and Alammelech, place name (possibly 'oak of the king')

A town in Asher's tribal territory mentioned in Joshua 19:26. The name may mean 'oak of the king' or 'the king's terebinth' (אֵלַת מֶלֶךְ), though BDB notes uncertainty. The conjunction connects it in the list of Asherite cities. Like many border towns, precise identification remains uncertain. The name suggests either royal ownership or a significant tree marking the location.

(1×) Territorial town allotted to Asher in Joshua 19:26's boundary description. If meaning 'oak of the king,' the name may indicate royal land holdings or a landmark tree associated with local governance. The conjunction integrates Alammelech into the sequential enumeration of Asher's inheritance. Multilingual transliterations (Alammelech, Alamelec) show slight orthographic variation. As with many Asherite towns in Galilee's northern reaches, archaeological identification remains tentative, though the name's preservation testifies to ancient Israel's careful territorial documentation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Alammelekh | es: y-Alamelec | fr: et-Alammelekh | de: und-Alammelekh Josh 19:26

אַלְמָן H0488 Adj-ms (1×)

widowed (masculine adjective describing Israel)

A rare masculine form of the adjective 'widowed,' used metaphorically of Israel in Jeremiah 51:5. The prophet declares that Israel and Judah are not widowed from their God—that is, not abandoned despite their guilt. The feminine form is more common; this masculine usage may be explained by agreement with the masculine national names Israel/Judah. The phrase reassures that God hasn't severed the covenant relationship.

(1×) Metaphorical denial of covenant abandonment in Jeremiah 51:5. Though Israel sinned, God hasn't become their 'late husband,' leaving them as widow. The masculine form (unusual for a state often personified as feminine Zion) agrees with masculine Israel/Judah. This theological image reverses the widow metaphor often used for judgment (cf. Lamentations), here proclaiming continued divine fidelity. Bracketed glosses reflect the term's rarity and metaphorical usage. The passage offers hope amid Babylon's fall: God remains Israel's husband-protector despite their unfaithfulness. WIDOW BEREAVED WOMAN

en: widowed | es: viudo | fr: [אלמן] | de: [אלמן] Jer 51:5

אַלְמֹן H0489 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

and widowhood (abstract noun with conjunction)

A masculine noun meaning widowhood, used figuratively of Babylon in Isaiah 47:9. The verse predicts that loss of children and widowhood will come upon Babylon suddenly despite her sorceries and enchantments. The conjunction links it with שְׁכוֹל (bereavement, loss of children), creating a double curse: childlessness and husband-loss. This reverses Babylon's confident boast 'I shall not sit as a widow' in verse 8.

(1×) Symbolic judgment pronounced against Babylon in Isaiah 47:9, predicting her sudden desolation. The pairing with 'bereavement' intensifies the curse: Babylon will lose both children and protective spouse-power simultaneously. As a masculine noun (unusual for typically feminine widowhood), it may personify Babylon's empire or kings facing devastating loss. Bracketed glosses acknowledge rarity. This poetic justice answers Babylon's arrogant self-deification, reducing her from powerful matriarch to bereft, vulnerable widow—a reversal of status mirroring Babylon's treatment of conquered peoples. WIDOW BEREAVED WOMAN

en: and-widowhood | es: y-viudez | fr: [ואלמן] | de: [ואלמן] Isa 47:9

אַלְמָנָה H0490 Conj-w (56×)

Widow, bereaved woman; possibly a homograph meaning palace or fortress (Isa 13:22)

One of the most socially significant terms in the Hebrew Bible, designating a woman whose husband has died. The widow (אַלְמָנָה) appears consistently alongside the fatherless (יָתוֹם) and the sojourner (גֵּר) as a class requiring divine protection and communal provision. Torah legislation regulates her vows (Num 30:10), restricts priestly marriage to her (Lev 21:14), and threatens divine wrath on those who oppress her (Exod 22:22–24). A curious outlier in Isa 13:22 may reflect a homographic root meaning 'palace' or 'fortress,' as several translations render 'in her fortresses' or 'en sus palacios' rather than 'widows.'

1. widow, bereaved woman (55×) A widow or bereaved woman (55x), one of the Torah's paradigmatic vulnerable persons. Gen 38:11 introduces Tamar sent to her father's house as an אַלְמָנָה, and Exod 22:22 commands Israel not to afflict any widow or orphan. Translations universally converge on 'widow/viuda/veuve/Witwe.' The legal and prophetic corpus builds an extensive theology of divine advocacy for widows, from Deuteronomic legislation (Deut 10:18, 24:17) to prophetic indictment (Isa 1:17, Jer 7:6). WIDOW BEREAVED WOMAN

en: a-widow, for-widow, the-widow | es: la-viuda, la-viuda., por-la-viuda | fr: un-veuve, un-widow, veuve | de: Witwe, [אלמנה], als-Witwe Gen 38:11; Exod 22:22; Exod 22:24; Lev 21:14; Lev 22:13

2. palace, fortress (1×) A possible homographic noun meaning 'palace' or 'fortress' (1x) in Isa 13:22, within the oracle against Babylon. Spanish 'en sus palacios' and English 'in her fortresses' suggest translators recognized a distinct lexeme here, likely from a root related to Akkadian almattu or a secondary Hebrew formation. The surrounding context of jackals howling in desolate grand buildings supports the architectural reading rather than 'widows.' WIDOW BEREAVED WOMAN

en: in-her-fortresses | es: en-sus-palacios | fr: veuve | de: Witwe Isa 13:22

אַלְמָנוּת H0491 N-fpc / 2fs (4×)

Widowhood; the social and personal state of being a widow

A feminine noun denoting the condition of widowhood — not merely the loss of a husband but the entire social reality of vulnerability and altered status that followed in the ancient Near East. Tamar puts on and removes her 'garments of widowhood' as a marker of her constrained identity (Gen 38:14, 19). David's sequestered concubines live in 'widowhood of living' — alive yet as good as widowed (2 Sam 20:3). Most strikingly, God promises restored Jerusalem that she will remember the 'reproach of your widowhood' no more (Isa 54:4).

(4×) The state or condition of widowhood, encompassing both personal grief and social diminishment. Tamar's 'widow's garments' (Gen 38:14, 19) function as visible markers of her marginal status. The difficult phrase 'widowhood of living' for David's confined concubines (2 Sam 20:3) captures a liminal state — technically alive but socially dead. In Isa 54:4 the term becomes metaphorical: personified Jerusalem is promised she will forget the shame of her widowhood. Spanish 'viudez,' French 'veuvage' (rendered analytically), and German 'Witwenschaft' all capture the abstract state, while the Hebrew suffix constructions convey intimate possession — 'her widowhood,' 'your widowhood.' WIDOW BEREAVED WOMAN

en: widowhood, widowhood-her, your-widowhood | es: tu-viudez, viudez, viudez-de-ella | fr: [אלמנותיך], widowhood, widowhood-sa | de: [אלמנותיך], ihrer-Witwenschaft, widowhood Gen 38:14; Gen 38:19; 2Sam 20:3; Isa 54:4

אַלְמֹנִי H0492 Adj-ms (3×)

a certain one, so-and-so, unnamed person or place (indefinite designator)

An indefinite term meaning 'a certain one' or 'such-and-such,' used when the speaker deliberately leaves a name unspecified. Ruth uses it when Boaz addresses an unnamed kinsman-redeemer as 'friend' (literally 'so-and-so'). Samuel and Kings employ it for unnamed places when exact locations are withheld for strategic or narrative reasons. The term functions like 'what's-his-name' or 'such-and-such place' in English—acknowledging someone or something exists while declining to specify identity.

(3×) Ruth 4:1 has Boaz call out to the nearer kinsman-redeemer, addressing him as 'so-and-so' rather than by name—a curious narrative choice that keeps focus on Boaz while acknowledging the legal requirements. 1 Samuel 21:3 and 2 Kings 6:8 use the phrase for unnamed places: 'to such-and-such a place.' The construction combines two indefinite markers, doubling down on the vagueness.

This formulaic expression served both literary purposes (maintaining suspense or focus) and practical ones (military secrecy in the Kings passage). SUCH (KIND/TYPE)

en: a-certain, such-and-such, unnamed | es: de-tal, y-tal | fr: tel-et-tel, un-certain, unnamed | de: [אלמני], ein-certain, unnamed Ruth 4:1; 1Sam 21:3; 2Kgs 6:8

אֶלְנַעַם H0493 N-proper-ms (1×)

Elnaam, personal name (God is pleasantness)

Father of two of David's mighty warriors, Jeribai and Joshaviah, mentioned in 1 Chronicles 11:46. The name means 'God is pleasantness' or 'God is delight,' from אֵל (God) and נעם (to be pleasant). This name appears only in Chronicles, not in the parallel Samuel list of David's champions. Such theophoric names expressed parental thanksgiving or theological conviction about God's character.

(1×) Patronymic designating the father of two elite warriors in David's mighty men according to 1 Chronicles 11:46. The name 'God is pleasantness' reflects theological aesthetics—appreciating God's delightful nature. His absence from 2 Samuel's roster suggests Chronicles preserves additional genealogical detail. Bracketed glosses indicate simple transliteration practice for personal names. That two sons earned places among David's champions testifies to Elnaam's family's martial prowess and loyalty, suggesting he likely trained them in warfare and covenant faithfulness. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elnaam | es: Elnaam | fr: [אלנעם] | de: [אלנעם] 1Chr 11:46

אֶלְנָתָן H0494 Conj-w (7×)

Elnathan ('God has given'), a proper name for Jehoiakim's grandfather and Levites in Ezra's time.

A masculine proper name meaning 'God has given,' the mirror-image of Nethanel ('given of God'). The most prominent Elnathan is the son of Achbor, grandfather of King Jehoiakim (2 Kgs 24:8), who appears in Jeremiah as a court official sent to retrieve the prophet Uriah from Egypt (Jer 26:22) and as one present at the reading of Jeremiah's scroll (Jer 36:12, 25). Three men named Elnathan are also listed among the leaders Ezra summoned before the return from Babylon (Ezra 8:16). The theophoric name has Akkadian, Phoenician, and Palmyrene parallels, underscoring its wide Semitic currency.

Elnathan (proper name) (7×) The proper name Elnathan ('God has given'), identifying two or more individuals: (a) Elnathan son of Achbor, a Judean official and grandfather of King Jehoiakim (2 Kgs 24:8), who was sent to extradite Uriah from Egypt (Jer 26:22) and was present at the burning of Jeremiah's scroll (Jer 36:12, 25); (b) three leaders (possibly Levites) whom Ezra summoned at the river Ahava before the return to Jerusalem (Ezra 8:16). Cognate theophoric names in Akkadian (Ilu-iddin) and Phoenician confirm the pan-Semitic pattern. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elnatan, and-Elnatan, and-for-Elnatan | es: Elnatan, Elnatán, y-Elnatan | fr: Elnatan, [אלנתן], [ואלנתן] | de: Elnatan, [אלנתן], [ואלנתן] 2Kgs 24:8; Ezra 8:16; Jer 26:22

אֶלְסָר H0495 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ellasar, a city in Mesopotamia allied with Chedorlaomer

A place name appearing in Genesis 14:1 and 14:9, identifying the city ruled by King Arioch who joined Chedorlaomer's coalition against the cities of the plain. Modern scholarship identifies Ellasar with Larsa in southern Mesopotamia (modern Senkereh), located about 28 miles northeast of Ur. The city was a significant Babylonian center in the early second millennium BC, making it a plausible participant in the military campaign described in Genesis 14.

(2×) Cross-linguistic transliteration shows minor variation: English 'Ellasar,' Spanish 'Elasar,' French 'Ellasar,' German 'von Ellasar' (with preposition). The two occurrences in Genesis 14 first introduce Arioch as 'king of Ellasar' in the coalition list (verse 1), then mention him again in the narrative of the battle (verse 9). The archaeological identification with Larsa helps situate the patriarchal narratives in concrete historical geography. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ellasar | es: Elasar | fr: Ellasar | de: von-Ellasar Gen 14:1; Gen 14:9

אֶלְעָד H0496 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

and Elead, personal name (God has testified)

An Ephraimite mentioned in 1 Chronicles 7:21, killed by men of Gath during a cattle raid. The name means 'God has testified' or 'God has borne witness,' from אֵל (God) and עוד (to testify). His death, along with his brother Ezer, caused their father Ephraim to mourn many days, after which the tribe came to comfort him. This tragic episode provides rare narrative detail within Chronicles' genealogies.

(1×) Ephraimite victim of intertribal violence recorded in 1 Chronicles 7:21's genealogy. The name 'God has testified' may reflect parental faith in divine witness to covenant or birth circumstances. Elead's death during a cattle raid against Gath natives sparked extended mourning, humanizing Chronicles' typically bare genealogical lists. The conjunction 'and' links him with brother Ezer in their fatal venture. Bracketed glosses show standard transliteration. This incident reveals pre-conquest tensions between Israelite clans and Canaanite inhabitants, with deadly consequences for those who ventured beyond tribal boundaries. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Elad | es: y-Elad | fr: [ואלעד] | de: [ואלעד] 1Chr 7:21

אֶלְעָדָה H0497 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Eladah, personal name meaning 'God has adorned'; an Ephraimite ancestor mentioned in 1 Chronicles 7:20

Eladah appears once in the genealogies of Ephraim as a descendant in the tribal lineage. The name combines the divine element 'El' (God) with a verb related to adornment or decoration, suggesting the meaning 'God has adorned.' Like many names in Chronicles' genealogies, it preserves the memory of an Ephraimite clan head whose lineage contributed to the tribe's historical identity.

(1×) This personal name occurs only in the Chronicler's genealogical record of Ephraim's descendants (1 Chr 7:20). The multilingual evidence shows translators handling it as a proper name, with most preserving the Hebrew form or transliterating it directly. The name's theophoric element 'El' connects it to the broader pattern of Israelite names expressing divine attributes or actions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Eladah | es: y-Elada | fr: [ואלעדה] | de: [ואלעדה] 1Chr 7:20

אֶלְעוּזַי H0498 N-proper-ms (1×)

Eluzai, personal name meaning 'God is my strength'; one of David's warriors who joined him at Ziklag

Eluzai was one of the Benjamite warriors who defected to David during his time at Ziklag, before Saul's death. The name means 'God is my strength,' combining the divine name 'El' with a root related to strength or refuge. This warrior appears in the list of mighty men who came to David's aid when he was still fleeing from Saul, demonstrating the growing support for David's kingship even from Saul's own tribe.

(1×) This personal name appears only in 1 Chronicles 12:5 (English v. 6) among the Benjamite warriors who joined David at Ziklag. The name's meaning 'God is my strength' reflects the common pattern of theophoric names expressing trust in divine protection. Translation evidence shows consistent treatment as a personal name, with most languages transliterating the Hebrew form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Eluzai | es: Eluzai | fr: [אלעוזי] | de: [אלעוזי] 1Chr 12:6

אֶלְעָזָר H0499 Conj-w (72×)

Eleazar — 'God has helped'; a proper name borne by Aaron's son the high priest and several later biblical figures.

Elazar is a Hebrew compound name meaning 'God has helped,' formed from el ('God') and azar ('to help'). Its most prominent bearer is Eleazar son of Aaron, who succeeded his father as high priest and served through the wilderness period and the conquest of Canaan (Num 20:25-28; Josh 14:1; 24:33). He played a central role in the distribution of the promised land alongside Joshua. Other notable Eleazars include the son of Abinadab who guarded the ark at Kiriath-jearim (1 Sam 7:1), one of David's three elite warriors (2 Sam 23:9), and several postexilic figures in Ezra and Nehemiah. The name's theophoric meaning — celebrating divine aid — makes it characteristic of priestly and Levitical families. Spanish Eleazar, French Eleazar, and German Eleasar all transliterate directly.

Eleazar (proper name) (72×) The masculine proper name Eleazar ('God has helped'), referring primarily to Aaron's third son who became Israel's second high priest after Aaron's death on Mount Hor (Num 20:25-28; Exod 6:23; Josh 14:1), and secondarily to several later figures: the guardian of the ark (1 Sam 7:1), one of David's mighty warriors (2 Sam 23:9; 1 Chr 11:12), Levites in the temple service (1 Chr 23:21-22), and postexilic priests and laymen (Ezra 8:33; 10:25). All target languages transliterate the name directly. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elazar, Eleazar | es: Elazar, Eleazar | fr: Éléazar | de: Elazar, Eleasar Exod 6:23; Exod 28:1; Lev 10:12; Lev 10:16; Num 3:2

אֶלְעָלֵא H0500 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (5×)

Elealeh, a Moabite town near Heshbon allotted to Reuben.

A place name meaning perhaps 'God ascends,' identifying a village in the territory of Reuben near Heshbon in Transjordan. It appears first in the tribal allotment record (Num 32:3, 37) and later in prophetic oracles against Moab (Isa 15:4; 16:9; Jer 48:34), where its devastation signals divine judgment. The site is identified with modern el-Al, northeast of Heshbon.

(5×) The place name Elealeh, a Transjordanian town near Heshbon. Assigned to Reuben after the conquest (Num 32:3, 37), it later appears in Isaiah's and Jeremiah's oracles against Moab (Isa 15:4; 16:9; Jer 48:34) as a symbol of Moabite cities laid waste. The consistent transliteration across languages (Spanish 'Elealé,' English 'Elealeh') reflects its status as a proper noun with no semantic translation needed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Elaleh, Elealeh, and-Elealeh | es: Elealeh, Elealé, y-Elealeh | fr: Elealeh, [אלעלה], [ואלעלה] | de: Elealeh, [אלעלה], [ואלעלה] Num 32:3; Num 32:37; Isa 15:4; Isa 16:9; Jer 48:34

אֶלְעָשָׂה H0501 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (6×)

Elasah — proper name meaning 'God has made,' borne by four men in Chronicles, Ezra, and Jeremiah.

Elasah is a masculine proper name meaning 'God has made,' formed from 'El' (God) and 'asah' (to make or do). It appears in four distinct genealogical and narrative contexts: a descendant of Judah through Sheshan's line (1 Chr 2:39-40), a Benjamite in the family of Saul (1 Chr 8:37; 9:43), a priest of Pashur's line who had married a foreign wife (Ezra 10:22), and a son of Shaphan who carried Jeremiah's letter to the Babylonian exiles (Jer 29:3). The name's theophoric structure parallels many Hebrew names celebrating God's creative action.

Elasah (6×) A theophoric proper name meaning 'God has made' (from עָשָׂה + אֵל), borne by four individuals in the Hebrew Bible: (a) a descendant of Judah in Sheshan's genealogy (1 Chr 2:39-40); (b) a Benjamite descendant of King Saul through Jonathan (1 Chr 8:37; 9:43); (c) a priest from the line of Pashur who put away his foreign wife during Ezra's reforms (Ezra 10:22); and (d) a son of Shaphan who served as Jeremiah's messenger to the exiles in Babylon (Jer 29:3). Multilingual renderings consistently transliterate as Elasa/Elasah, confirming a unified proper-name entry. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: El'asah, Elasah, and-El'asah | es: Elasa, Elasah, Y-Elasa | fr: Elasa, [אלעשה], et-Elasa | de: [אלעשה], [ואלעשה] 1Chr 2:39; 1Chr 2:40; 1Chr 8:37; 1Chr 9:43; Ezra 10:22

אָלַף H0502 V-Piel-Prtcpl-msc / 1cp (4×)

To learn (Qal); to teach, instruct (Piel) — acquiring or imparting knowledge and skill

A verb meaning 'to learn' in the Qal stem and 'to teach' in the Piel, cognate with Aramaic 'aleph (learn) and Arabic 'alifa (become familiar with). Though it occurs only four times in the Hebrew Bible — all in wisdom literature — it carries distinctive force. Eliphaz accuses Job's iniquity of 'teaching' his mouth deceit (Job 15:5), Elihu offers to 'teach' Job wisdom (Job 33:33), and God is praised as the One who 'teaches us' more than the beasts (Job 35:11). The sole Qal occurrence warns against learning the ways of a hot-tempered man (Prov 22:25).

(4×) To learn or teach, depending on verbal stem. In the Qal, it means to learn or become familiar with — 'lest you learn his ways' (Prov 22:25), warning against absorbing a wrathful person's habits. In the Piel, it means to teach or instruct: iniquity 'teaches' the mouth craftiness (Job 15:5), God 'teaches us' beyond the animals (Job 35:11), and Elihu pledges 'I will teach you wisdom' (Job 33:33). Spanish captures the dual sense neatly with 'enseñar' (teach) and 'aprender' (learn), while English likewise distinguishes 'teach' and 'learn.' The domain assignment as MOVEMENT is misleading; this is fundamentally a word of intellectual formation and moral instruction. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-I-will-teach-you, teaches, the-One-teaching-us | es: Enseñándonos, aprendas, enseña | fr: et-וְאַלְּפֵךְ-toi, מלכנו ,יאלף-nous | de: [וואלפך], [יאלף], [מלכנו] Job 15:5; Job 33:33; Job 35:11; Prov 22:25

אָלַף H0503 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-fp (1×)

Bringing forth thousands, multiplying abundantly; Hiphil participle describing flocks producing offspring in great numbers

This rare form appears in Psalm 144:13, describing the ideal blessing of agricultural abundance where flocks multiply by thousands. The participle form suggests ongoing, productive fertility—sheep bearing lambs in such numbers that they can be counted in thousands rather than individual animals. This imagery of multiplying flocks represents divine blessing on the land and livestock, a sign of God's favor in an agrarian society.

(1×) The Hiphil participle occurs only in Psalm 144:13, part of a prayer for national prosperity and blessing. The Spanish 'multiplicados por miles' and French 'multiplier' capture the sense of abundant reproduction. This agricultural imagery describes flocks producing offspring in vast numbers, a concrete sign of God's blessing on the land. The context lists various forms of abundance—full barns, multiplying livestock, absence of warfare—as marks of divine favor. LIVING CREATURES

en: bringing-forth-thousands | es: multiplicados-por-miles | fr: de-multiplier | de: bringing-forth-thousands Ps 144:13

אֶלֶף H0504 Conj-w (8×)

Cattle, oxen (used in agriculture and husbandry); also a clan or tribal subdivision within Israel.

This is the rarer homonym of the extremely common eleph (thousand), referring instead to domesticated cattle used for plowing and tillage. The plural alafim appears in contexts of agricultural blessing – the increase of one's herds is a sign of divine favor (Deut 7:13, 28:4). Psalm 8:7 places oxen under human dominion alongside sheep and wild animals. A secondary sense, appearing in Judges 6:15, uses eleph for a clan or tribal subdivision, where Gideon protests that his 'clan' is the weakest in Manasseh. Spanish splits between 'bueyes' (oxen) and 'mi clan' (my clan), reflecting these distinct senses.

1. cattle, oxen (7×) Cattle or oxen, domesticated bovines used for agricultural work and animal husbandry. The plural alafim appears in Deuteronomy's blessing and curse formulae: 'the increase of your cattle' (shegar alafekha) parallels 'the young of your flock' (Deut 7:13, 28:4, 18, 51). In Proverbs 14:4, abundant harvest comes through the strength of oxen. Psalm 8:7 places them under human dominion. Spanish 'bueyes' (oxen) and 'tus vacas' (your cattle), along with French 'ton bétail' (your livestock) and German 'dein Rinder' (your cattle), all confirm the agricultural-livestock sense. CATTLE AND

OXEN
en: And-the-oxen, and-oxen, oxen | es: bueyes, tu-ganado, tus-vacas | fr: [והאלפים], et-milliers, ton-bétail | de: [אלפים], [והאלפים], dein-Rinder Deut 7:13; Deut 28:4; Deut 28:18; Deut 28:51; Ps 8:7

2. clan, tribal division (1×) A clan, family group, or tribal subdivision within Israel – a social unit smaller than a tribe (shevet/matteh) but larger than a household (bet av). In Judges 6:15, Gideon objects: 'My clan (alpi) is the weakest in Manasseh.' This sense of eleph as a military or social grouping unit is debated by scholars and may also affect the reading of large numbers elsewhere in the Hebrew Bible. Spanish 'mi clan' and French 'mon clan' directly render this sociological meaning. DIVISION AND PORTION
en: my-clan | es: mi-clan | fr: mon-clan | de: mein-Sippe Judg 6:15

אֶלֶף H0505 Prep-k / Number-msc (507×)
Thousand (numeral); in dual 'two thousand'; in plural 'thousands'; also 'clan, tribal subdivision.'
A word that counts both people and communities. In its straightforward numeric sense, אֶלֶף means 'one thousand' and appears in census rolls, battle tallies, and measurements throughout the Hebrew Bible. But a fascinating secondary meaning — 'clan' or 'tribal subdivision' — may reframe some of the Old Testament's notoriously large numbers. When Judges 6:15 has Gideon say 'my אֶלֶף is the weakest in Manasseh,' he means his clan, not a literal thousand. Some scholars argue that many military totals in Numbers and Chronicles originally counted 'clans' rather than 'thousands,' which would dramatically reduce the figures. Arabic ألف and Aramaic אֶלֶף share only the numeric sense, making the clan meaning a distinctly Israelite social development.

1. cardinal number thousand (427×) The cardinal numeral 'one thousand' (1,000) used in counting, census totals, measurements, monetary amounts, and temporal expressions (427 occurrences). Abraham receives אֶלֶף pieces of silver in Gen 20:16; the Exodus census counts thousands of fighting men (Exod 12:37). Spanish 'mil,' French 'mille,' and German 'tausend' all render this transparently. Appears in singular, construct, and with prepositions and articles across every grammatical environment. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS
en: a-thousand, thousand, thousands | es: mil, miles | fr: mille, milliers, un-mille | de: tausend, thousands Gen 20:16; Exod 12:37; Exod 38:26; Num 1:21

2. dual two thousand (31×) The dual form אַלְפַּיִם meaning specifically 'two thousand' (2,000), used as a distinct numeric quantity (31 occurrences). Numbers 4:36 counts two thousand seven hundred Levites; Numbers 35:5 measures two thousand cubits for pastureland boundaries. French 'deux-mille' and German 'zwei-Tausend' preserve the dual precision, while the Hebrew morphology (dual suffix -ayim) marks this as a grammatically distinct form. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS
en: two-thousand, two-thousands | es: dos-mil, dos-miles | fr: deux-mille, deux-milliers, mille | de: tausend, tausende, zwei-Tausend Exod 38:29; Num 4:36; Num 4:40; Num 7:85; Num 35:5

3. thousands as large number (31×) The plural אֲלָפִים meaning 'thousands' as a large round number, a multiplied quantity, or an expression of overwhelming abundance (31 occurrences). Exodus 20:6 promises God's covenant loyalty 'to thousands' of generations; Rebecca is blessed to become 'thousands of ten thousands' (Gen 24:60). Spanish 'miles/millares' and French 'milliers' capture both the countable and the hyperbolic registers of this form. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS
en: the-thousands, thousands | es: los-miles, los-millares, miles | fr: le-milliers, mille, milliers | de: der-tausende, der-thousands, tausende Gen 24:60; Exod 18:21; Exod 18:25; Exod 20:6; Exod 34:7

4. clan or tribal subdivision (18×) A social and military unit — a clan, division, or contingent within an Israelite tribe — distinct from the numeral (18 occurrences). In Judges 6:15, Gideon identifies his אֶלֶף as the weakest in Manasseh, clearly meaning his clan, not a number. Numbers 1:16 and 10:4 use the term for tribal subdivisions. This sense has profound exegetical implications: some scholars propose that many Old Testament military tallies counted 'clans' rather than literal 'thousands,' which would resolve long-standing questions about implausibly large army sizes. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: (in-thousands-his), [by-his-thousands], [in-thousand-his] | es: (Qeré), de-miles-de, en-miles-suyos | fr: (in-milliers-his), [by-son-thousands], [in-mille-his] | de: [by-sein-thousands], [in-Tausend-his], mit-sein-thousands Exod 32:28; Num 1:16; Num 10:4; Num 10:36; Num 31:5

אַלַף H0506 Number-ms (5×)
Aramaic numeral 'thousand,' used in Daniel for large quantities and multitudes.
The Aramaic form of the numeral 'thousand,' equivalent to Hebrew 'eleph. All five occurrences appear in Daniel: Belshazzar's feast for a thousand lords (Dan 5:1) and the vision of God's throne attended by 'a thousand thousands' (Dan 7:10). The emphatic form 'alpha' in Daniel 5:1 refers back to the specific thousand just mentioned. Spanish 'mil,' French 'mille,' and German 'tausend' all render the straightforward numerical value.

(5×) The Aramaic cardinal number 'thousand,' used in absolute, emphatic, and construct forms. In Daniel 5:1 it quantifies Belshazzar's banquet guests, while in Daniel 7:10 the repeated construct 'eleph alphim' ('a thousand thousands') evokes the innumerable angelic host before the Ancient of Days. The convergence of Spanish 'mil,' French 'mille,' and German 'tausend' confirms the purely numerical function across all contexts. THOUSANDS AND MYRIADS
en: (qere:thousands), [ketiv:thousands], the-thousand | es: [miles], los-mil, mil | fr: deux-mille, mille | de: [אלפא], [אלפין], tausend Dan 5:1; Dan 7:10

אֶלֶף H0507 N-proper-fs (1×)
Ha-Eleph, place name; a town in the territory of Benjamin, possibly the site of modern Lifta northwest of Jerusalem
Ha-Eleph was a town allotted to the tribe of Benjamin in the division of the land. The definite article 'ha' before the name suggests it may have been known as 'the thousand' or possibly 'the clan/family.' Scholars have tentatively identified it with Lifta, a village northwest of Jerusalem, though the identification remains uncertain. The town appears only in Joshua's list of Benjamite cities.

(1×) This place name appears in Joshua 18:28 within the list of towns assigned to Benjamin. The Hebrew preserves the definite article, suggesting 'the Eleph' was a known location. Translation evidence shows consistent handling as a place name, with most preserving the Hebrew form. The possible connection to Lifta near Jerusalem would place it in Benjamin's northern hill country territory. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: ha-Eleph | es: Elef | fr: ha-Eleph | de: ha-Eleph Josh 18:28

אֶלְפַּעַל H0508 N-proper-ms (3×)
Elpaal (Benjamite name, possibly meaning 'God of doing' or 'God has acted')
A Benjamite ancestor mentioned in Chronicles' genealogies, with a name that likely means 'God of doing' or 'God has acted.' The name follows typical Hebrew theophoric patterns, embedding a confession of divine agency into personal identity. Chronicles preserves this name as part of Benjamin's post-exilic family records, maintaining tribal memory through careful genealogical documentation. Like many names in genealogical lists, Elpaal himself receives no narrative elaboration, yet his name testifies to his family's faith that God acts purposefully in history.

(3×) 1 Chronicles 8:11, 12, and 18 list Elpaal within the Benjamite genealogy, identifying him as father to multiple sons who became heads of families. The repetition of his name marks him as a significant node in the family tree, though we know nothing of his personal deeds. The name's probable meaning—'God of doing' or 'God has acted'—fits the pattern of Hebrew names that make theological claims, asserting divine involvement in the very act of naming a child. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Elpaal | es: Elpaal | fr: [אלפעל] | de: [אלפעל] 1Chr 8:11; 1Chr 8:12; 1Chr 8:18

אָלַץ H0509 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConsecImperf-3fs / 3ms (1×)
Urged, pressed insistently; Piel verb describing Delilah's persistent pressure on Samson to reveal his secret
This verb appears in the account of Delilah wearing down Samson's resistance through relentless verbal pressure. The Piel intensive form emphasizes the persistent, aggressive nature of her urging—not a single request but continuous nagging. In Judges 16:16, it stands parallel to 'she pressed him with her words,' creating a powerful picture of psychological manipulation through constant verbal assault that eventually breaks down Samson's resolve.

(1×) The verb occurs only in Judges 16:16, describing Delilah's tactics against Samson. The parallel with 'she pressed him with her words' and the result 'his soul was vexed to death' shows the intensity of this verbal harassment. Cross-linguistic evidence ('urgió' in Spanish, 'pressa' in French, 'urged' in English) captures the forceful, insistent nature of her approach. This is psychological warfare through unrelenting pressure. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-urged-him | es: y-lo-urgió | fr: et-pressa-lui | de: und-urged-ihn Judg 16:16

אֶלְקוֹם H0510 Adv (1×)
With his army, with troops; term of uncertain meaning in Proverbs 30:31, possibly referring to a king with his army
This difficult word appears in Proverbs 30:31 in a list of things that are stately in their stride. The text is uncertain—some scholars see it as derived from Arabic meaning 'the people/army,' hence 'a king with his army.' Others suggest textual corruption, proposing it should read 'God' instead. The context lists impressive creatures (greyhound, male goat, king) that move with dignity and confidence, so an armed king would fit the theme.

(1×) Occurring only in Proverbs 30:31, this term has puzzled translators. English renders it 'with his army,' Spanish 'con ejército,' suggesting a king accompanied by troops. The French and German leave it untranslated, indicating uncertainty. If the traditional interpretation is correct, it completes a triad of majestic figures: greyhound, male goat, and a king at the head of his army—all exemplars of confident, stately movement. MILITARY OFFICERS
en: with-his-army | es: con-ejército | fr: אלקום | de: [אלקום] Prov 30:31

אֶלְקָנָה H0511 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (21×)
Elkanah ('God has acquired'); name of several OT figures, most notably the father of the prophet Samuel.
Elkanah (אֶלְקָנָה, 'God has created' or 'God has acquired') is best known as the devout Ephraimite from Ramathaim who became father of the prophet Samuel. His tender love for the barren Hannah — 'Am I not better to you than ten sons?' (1 Sam 1:8) — sets the stage for one of Scripture's most poignant prayer narratives. The name also appears for a son of Korah (Exod 6:24), several Levites in the genealogies of Chronicles, a warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:6), and a court official slain during Ahaz's reign (2 Chr 28:7). Spanish 'Elcana', French 'Elkana', and German 'Elkana' all preserve the name's phonetic shape faithfully.

Elkanah (proper name) (21×) A theophoric proper name meaning 'God has acquired/created,' referring to several biblical individuals. The most prominent Elkanah is Samuel's father, whose compassion for barren Hannah and faithful worship at Shiloh frame the birth narrative of Israel's last judge (1 Sam 1:1-2:11). Other bearers include a Korahite (Exod 6:24), multiple Levites in Chronicler genealogies, and a court official killed under Ahaz (2 Chr 28:7). Transliterated consistently as 'Elkanah/Elkana' across English, Spanish, French, and German. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Elkanah, Elqanah, and-Elkanah | es: Elcana, Elcaná, y-Elkanah | fr: Elkana, [אלקנה], et-Elkanah | de: Elkana, und-Elkanah Exod 6:24; 1Sam 1:1; 1Sam 1:4; 1Sam 1:8; 1Sam 1:19

אֶלְקֹשִׁי H0512 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)
The Elkoshite, gentilicic adjective identifying the prophet Nahum by his hometown Elkosh (location unknown)
This term identifies Nahum as 'the Elkoshite,' meaning a native or resident of Elkosh. The location of Elkosh remains unknown, though various traditions have placed it in Galilee, Assyria (near Mosul), or elsewhere. Jerome mentioned a Galilean village called Elcesi. The gentilicic form (like 'Bethlehemite' or 'Nazarene') was a common way to identify prophets by their hometown or place of ministry.

(1×) This adjective appears only in Nahum 1:1 as part of the prophet's identification. Unlike many prophets identified by parentage, Nahum is known by his hometown. The uncertain location of Elkosh has led to various proposals, but the name itself is preserved across translations. This geographic identifier would have helped ancient readers locate Nahum within a specific community, though that knowledge has been lost to us. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Elkoshite | es: el-elcosita | fr: Elkoschite | de: [האלקשי] Nah 1:1

אֶלְתּוֹלַד H0513 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)
and Eltolad, a town in southern Judah allotted to Simeon
A conjunction plus place name designating a town in the southern territory of Judah, later assigned to Simeon. The name appears in the boundary lists of Joshua 15:30 and 19:4. The name may be related to 'toledot' (generations), though the connection is uncertain. First Chronicles 4:29 lists a similar place called 'Tolad,' possibly the same location with variant spelling. The town's exact location remains unidentified in modern archaeology.

(2×) Multilingual rendering preserves the coordinating conjunction: English 'and Eltolad,' Spanish 'y Eltolad,' French 'et Eltolad,' German 'und Eltolad,' reflecting standard list formatting in boundary descriptions. The two occurrences in Joshua 15 and 19 represent the same town appearing in both Judah's ideal boundaries and Simeon's actual allotment—a pattern reflecting how Simeon's territory was carved from within Judah's larger tribal portion. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-Eltolad | es: y-Eltolad | fr: et-Eltolad | de: und-Eltolad Josh 15:30; Josh 19:4

אֶלְתְּקֵא H0514 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)
Eltekeh/Elteqeh, a Levitical city in Dan between Ekron and Timnah
A place name appearing in Joshua's boundary and Levitical city lists, located in the tribal territory of Dan between Ekron and Timnah. Joshua 19:44 includes it in Dan's allotment, while Joshua 21:23 designates it as one of the cities given to the Levites. Assyrian records mention a city called Altaku, likely the same location, indicating it was significant enough to appear in extra-biblical sources. The name's etymology remains uncertain.

(2×) Cross-linguistic transliteration shows minor spelling variation: English 'Eltekeh' and 'Elteqeh,' Spanish similar variations, French and German likewise. Both biblical occurrences relate to territorial administration—first as part of Dan's inheritance, then as part of the Levitical redistribution that scattered priestly families throughout Israel's tribes to maintain religious instruction and worship leadership across the land. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Eltekeh, and-Elteqeh | es: Elteque, y-Elteque | fr: Eltekeh, et-Elteqeh | de: Eltekeh, und-Elteqeh Josh 19:44; Josh 21:23

אֶלְתְּקֹן H0515 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
And Eltekon, place name; a town in the hill country of Judah north of Hebron, listed in Joshua 15:59 Eltekon was one of the towns allotted to the tribe of Judah in the hill country region. It appears in a group of cities north of Hebron in the Judean highlands. Like many ancient settlements mentioned only in boundary and allotment lists, its exact location is no longer certain. The name is preserved in the biblical record as part of Judah's territorial inheritance.

(1×) This place name occurs in Joshua 15:59 within the hill country allotment to Judah. The conjunction 'and' connects it to the surrounding list of towns in this geographic cluster. Cross-linguistic translations consistently preserve it as a place name, with Spanish, French, and German maintaining recognizable forms. The town's location in the Judean highlands placed it in the heartland of the tribe's territory. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Eltekon | es: y-Eltecón | fr: et-Eltekon | de: und-Eltekon Josh 15:59

שָׁחַת H0516 V-Hifil-Imperf.Jus-2ms (8×)

Do not destroy — Hifil jussive of שָׁחַת, a Psalm superscription formula ('Al-Tashcheth')

This form is the negated Hifil jussive of שָׁחַת ('to destroy, ruin'), appearing in the liturgical superscription אַל־תַּשְׁחֵת ('Do not destroy') found in Psalms 57, 58, 59, and 75. The phrase likely refers to a tune name or liturgical instruction, possibly echoing Moses' intercessory plea in Deuteronomy 9:26. English renders it 'Do not destroy,' Spanish 'no destruyas,' and French 'ne détruis pas' — all preserving the urgent prohibitive force of the Hebrew jussive.

destroy (Hifil jussive negated) (8×) The Hifil jussive (negated) form אַל־תַּשְׁחֵת ('do not destroy'), from the root שָׁחַת meaning 'to ruin, corrupt, destroy.' All eight occurrences appear in the superscriptions of Psalms 57:1, 58:1, 59:1, and 75:1 (each title counted twice in the verse numbering). This is widely understood as a tune name or liturgical direction, possibly alluding to Moses' intercessory cry 'Do not destroy your people' (Deut 9:26) or to a vintner's song (cf. Isa 65:8). Multilingual renderings — English 'do not destroy,' Spanish 'no destruyas,' French 'ne détruis pas' — preserve the prohibitive imperative sense uniformly. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: destroy, do-not- | es: destruyas, no- | fr: ne-détruis-pas, vers | de: tun-nicht-, vernichten Ps 57:1; Ps 58:1; Ps 59:1

אֵם H0517 N-fsc (220×)

Mother; a female parent of humans; also the dam or mother of an animal in legal and cultic contexts.

Em is among the most primal words in any language, and Hebrew is no exception. It names the biological and social mother — Eve as 'mother of all living' (Gen 3:20), Rebekah guiding Jacob (Gen 27:13), the grieving mothers of Jeremiah and Lamentations. In three specialized occurrences (Exod 23:19; 34:26; Deut 22:6-7), the word extends to animal mothers, grounding Israel's compassion laws in the bond between dam and offspring. Across languages — Arabic umm, Aramaic imma, Spanish madre, French mère — the word's warmth and weight are universally recognized.

1. mother, female parent (217×) A human female parent, encompassing biological motherhood, social role, and figurative extensions. The 217 occurrences span from Eve as 'mother of all living' (Gen 3:20) to proverbial instruction ('do not forsake your mother's teaching,' Prov 1:8) and lament ('their mothers,' Lam 2:12). Spanish madre, French mère, German Mutter, and Arabic umm all preserve the same intimate familial sense. Pronominal forms (his mother, my mother) dominate, reflecting the deeply relational character of the word. MOTHERS AND MATRIARCHS

en: his-mother, its-mother, mother-his | es: madre-suya, su-madre | fr: mère-son, sa-mère, son-mère | de: sein-Mutter, seine-Mutter, seiner-Mutter Gen 21:21; Gen 24:67; Gen 27:13; Gen 27:14

2. mother animal, dam (3×) The mother of an animal — a dam — used exclusively in compassion laws. 'Do not boil a kid in its mother's milk' (Exod 23:19; 34:26; Deut 14:21) and 'if you come upon a bird's nest, you shall let the mother go' (Deut 22:6-7). Korean distinguishes with a specific term for animal mothers, highlighting this semantic shift. These three rare occurrences extend maternal dignity beyond the human sphere, grounding cultic ethics in the natural bond between parent and young. MOTHERS AND MATRIARCHS

en: and-the-mother, the-mother | es: la-madre, y-la-madre | fr: et-le-mère, le-mère | de: der-Mutter, und-der-Mutter Deut 22:6; Deut 22:7

אִם H0518a Conj (922×)

Conditional particle: if, or, whether; also concessive (though) and asseverative (surely) in oaths

One of the most versatile logical connectors in Biblical Hebrew, 'im functions primarily as the conditional 'if' that introduces nearly every protasis in the Old Testament. Beyond conditionality, it branches into disjunction ('or,' especially in paired 'im...'im constructions), indirect questions ('whether'), and even rhetorical force. In oath formulas it carries an implicit negation — 'if I do this' meaning 'I surely will not' — a usage preserved in Arabic 'in and Aramaic 'en. Its 922 occurrences touch virtually every genre of biblical prose and poetry.

1. conditional particle: if (827×) The dominant conditional use (827x), introducing protases with imperfect or perfect verbs. Spanish si, French si, and German wenn/ob all converge on the conditional reading. Key passages like Gen 4:7 ('if you do well') and Gen 13:16 ('if one could count the dust') show both real and hypothetical conditions. The cross-linguistic uniformity here confirms a single stable sense. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: if, if- | es: Si, que, si | fr: si, si- | de: ob-, wenn- Gen 4:7; Gen 13:9; Gen 13:16; Gen 14:23; Gen 15:5

2. disjunctive particle: or (82×) Disjunctive 'or' (82x), presenting alternatives or choices. German oder and Spanish o clearly mark this as distinct from the conditional. Paired constructions 'im...'im ('whether...or') appear in Gen 24:21 and Gen 37:32, where the speaker poses two possibilities. The Arabic cognate 'am similarly serves as a disjunctive particle, confirming the Semitic pedigree of this usage. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: or, or- | es: acaso-, o, o- | fr: ou, ou- | de: bist-oder-, ob, oder Gen 24:21; Gen 27:21; Gen 37:8; Gen 37:32; Exod 17:7

3. indirect question: whether (8×) Indirect-question 'whether' (8x), introducing uncertainty after verbs of knowing or testing. German ob and Spanish si capture this epistemic nuance well. Exod 19:13 and Lev 27:26 show contexts where the outcome is genuinely unknown to the speaker. This overlaps with the conditional but is syntactically distinct in embedding under cognitive verbs. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: whether, whether- | es: sea, si, si- | fr: si, si- | de: ob-, wenn Exod 19:13; Lev 27:26; Deut 18:3

4. rhetorical interrogative marker (3×) Rhetorical interrogative marker (3x), expecting a strong affirmative or negative answer. The glosses 'indeed' and 'is it not?' reflect this force. Num 17:13 and Job 6:13 show the particle pressing the hearer toward an obvious conclusion, a pragmatic extension of the conditional into discourse-level persuasion. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: indeed, is-it-not, was-it | es: ¿Acaso | fr: en-effet, si | de: der-wenn, tatsaechlich, wenn Num 17:13; Job 6:13; Hab 3:8

5. concessive: though, even if (1×) Concessive 'though' or 'even if' (1x at 1Sam 15:17), where the condition is granted rather than questioned. Samuel's rebuke 'though you are small in your own eyes' acknowledges the premise while overriding it. This rare use parallels Arabic 'in with concessive force in classical rhetoric. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: though- | es: si- | fr: though- | de: though- 1Sam 15:17

6. asseverative: surely, rather (1×) Asseverative 'surely' in oath formulas (1x at Gen 15:4), where 'im carries implicit self-imprecation: 'if I do X [may God punish me],' meaning 'I surely will not.' German nur ('only') and Spanish que hint at the restrictive-emphatic flavor. This idiomatic oath usage is well attested across Semitic languages. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: rather | es: que | fr: plutôt | de: nur Gen 15:4

כִּי אִם־ H0518b Conj (148×)

Compound particle ki im: if, only/except, but/rather, surely; used in conditions, restrictions, adversatives, and oaths

A two-particle compound (ki + im) whose meaning shifts dramatically depending on syntactic context. When each particle retains its independent force, ki im introduces a genuine conditional ('that if,' 'for if'). But in the vast majority of its roughly 140 occurrences, the two particles fuse into a restrictive or adversative unit: after a negation it means 'except, only, nothing but' (lo ... ki im, 'not ... but rather'), and in oath formulas it carries asseverative force — 'surely.' German splits these senses cleanly between wenn (conditional), nur/sondern (restrictive/adversative), and gewiss (asseverative), while French distinguishes si (conditional) from seulement (restrictive) and mais (adversative). The compound's versatility makes it one of Hebrew's most context-sensitive discourse markers.

1. conditional: if (62×) The conditional sense where ki and im each retain independent force, introducing the protasis of a hypothetical clause ('if,' 'that if,' 'for if'). German wenn and French si map directly onto this use. Gen 32:26 ('I will not let you go unless [ki im] you bless me') and Gen 32:28 ('for you have striven with God and with men') show the conditional particle at work in the Jacob-at-Peniel narrative. Exod 8:17 and 9:2 ('for if you refuse to let my people go') illustrate the 'for if' combination in the plague sequence. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: if, if- | es: que, si, si- | fr: si, si- | de: Mutter, wenn, wenn- Gen 28:17; Gen 32:26; Gen 32:28; Gen 35:10; Gen 40:14

2. restrictive: only, except (56×) The restrictive or exceptive sense, typically following a negation, limiting the scope to a single alternative: 'only, except, nothing but, unless.' French seulement and German nur both encode this narrowing function. Gen 39:6 (Potiphar entrusted everything to Joseph and 'did not concern himself with anything except [ki im] the food he ate'), Gen 39:9 ('he has withheld nothing from me except [ki im] you'), and Lev 21:2, 14 (priestly purity laws listing exceptions) show how the compound funnels discourse down to one permitted alternative. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: if-, only | es: que, si, si- | fr: seulement, si- | de: nur, wenn- Gen 39:6; Gen 39:9; Exod 12:9; Lev 21:2; Lev 21:14

3. adversative: but, rather (23×) The adversative sense introducing a contrasting or corrective clause, often after a preceding negation: 'but, rather, on the contrary.' German sondern and aber, French mais, and Spanish sino all capture the contrastive pivot. Num 10:30 (Hobab says 'I will not go, but [ki im] I will go to my own land'), 2 Sam 13:33 ('let not my lord suppose that all the king's sons are dead, for [ki im] Amnon alone is dead'), and Job 42:8 ('my servant Job shall pray for you, for [ki im] him I will accept') show correction of a false assumption. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: but, but-, for- | es: Valle-de, con, esto | fr: mais, si | de: Mutter, aber, sondern- Num 10:30; 2Sam 13:33; 2Sam 21:2; Neh 2:12; Job 42:8

4. asseverative: surely, indeed (4×) The asseverative sense in oath formulas and solemn declarations, lending emphatic certainty: 'surely, indeed, certainly.' German gewiss and French certainement convey this oath-weight. 1 Sam 8:19 ('No! But [ki im] we will have a king over us'), 2 Sam 15:21 ('surely [ki im] wherever my lord the king shall be, whether for death or for life, there also will your servant be'), and Jer 51:14 ('surely [ki im] I will fill you with men') show the compound intensifying vows and divine oaths. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: if-, surely, surely- | es: ciertamente, si-, si-no | fr: certainement, certainement-, si | de: gewiss, gewiss-, wenn 1Sam 8:19; 2Sam 15:21; Prov 23:18; Jer 51:14

5. (2×) A concessive nuance: 'even though, although' — acknowledging a condition that might be expected to prevent the main clause but does not. Spanish aunque and German obwohl capture this concessive force. Isa 10:22 ('for though [ki im] your people Israel be as the sand of the sea, only a remnant of them will return') pairs abundance with restriction. Mic 6:8 ('He has told you, O man, what is good; and what does the LORD require of you but [ki im] to do justice') narrows expansive possibility to a single ethical demand. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: if- | es: aunque, si-no | fr: si | de: wenn Isa 10:22; Mic 6:8

6. (1×) A temporal sense ('when') where ki im introduces the moment or circumstance under which something occurs. German dass and Spanish cuando point to temporal framing rather than conditionality. Gen 42:15 ('By the life of Pharaoh, you shall not go from this place unless [ki im / when] your youngest brother comes here') uses the compound at the boundary between conditional and temporal, marking the point at which release becomes possible. CONDITIONAL PARTICLES

en: when- | es: cuando | fr: quand- | de: dass Gen 42:15

אָמָה H0519 Conj-w / N-fsc / 3ms (56×)

amah – a female servant or handmaid; used both as a social status term and a self-deprecating form of address

The feminine noun amah ('maid, handmaid') designates a female servant or slave in the household, closely synonymous with shiphchah though sometimes implying slightly higher status. Its 56 occurrences span legal codes (Exod 20:10, 17; 21:20), patriarchal narratives (Gen 21:10-13, Hagar and Sarah), and courtly speech where women use 'your handmaid' as a humble self-reference before kings, prophets, or God (1 Sam 1:11, Hannah; 1 Sam 25:24-25, Abigail; 2 Sam 14:6, the wise woman of Tekoa). This dual function – literal social designation and deferential self-address – is a distinctive feature of the word. Spanish sierva, French servante, and German Magd all capture the core servant meaning consistently.

female servant, maidservant (56×) A female servant within a household, used both as a social designation in legal contexts (Exod 20:10; 21:20) and as a deferential self-reference by women addressing superiors – Hannah before Yahweh (1 Sam 1:11), Abigail before David (1 Sam 25:24). Spanish sierva, French servante, and German Magd reflect this single semantic range across all 56 occurrences. FEMALE SERVANT SLAVE

en: and-your-female-servant, his-maidservant, your-maidservant | es: su-sierva, tu-sierva, y-sierva-tuya | fr: et-ton-femelle-serviteur, son-servante, ton-servante | de: Magd, dein-Magd, dein-maidservant Gen 20:17; Gen 21:10; Gen 21:12; Gen 21:13

אַמָּה H0520a Prep-l / N-fp (248×)

Cubit; a unit of linear measure (approx. 18 inches / 45 cm), the standard dimension for construction, distance, and depth.

Ammah is the everyday unit of length throughout the Hebrew Bible, derived from the forearm (from elbow to fingertip) and appearing in nearly every building project, measurement, and spatial description in Scripture. It measures Noah's ark (Gen 6:15), the tabernacle and its furnishings (Exod 25-27), Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6), and Ezekiel's visionary temple (Ezek 40-48). Two minor variant senses appear at the edges: in Deut 3:11, 'the cubit of a man' specifies a standard against the possibly larger royal cubit, and in Jer 51:13 the word may function metonymically for 'measure' in a broader sense. But in 246 of 248 occurrences the meaning is simply the concrete linear unit — stable, unambiguous, and universally rendered as codo (Spanish), coudee (French), Elle (German), and cubit (English).

1. cubit (unit of length) (246×) A cubit as a standard unit of linear measurement, approximately 18 inches or 45 cm — the near-universal sense at 246 occurrences. Used for dimensions of buildings (the temple, tabernacle, city walls), objects (the altar, the ark of the covenant, Goliath's spear shaft), water depths (Gen 7:20), and distances. Every target language renders it with a dedicated measurement term: Spanish codo, French coudee, German Elle, Korean 규빗, Swahili dhiraa. The word appears in singular, dual (ammatayim, 'two cubits'), and plural forms, with articles and in construct chains, but the referent is always the same linear unit. CUBIT MEASUREMENT

en: cubit, cubits | es: codo, codos | fr: coudée, coudées | de: Elle, Ellen Gen 6:15; Gen 7:20; Exod 26:16

2. measure, standard of measurement (1×) A metonymic extension to 'measure' or 'standard of measurement' in a broader sense — a single occurrence at Jer 51:13 ('you who dwell by many waters, abundant in treasures, your ammah has come'). Here the word seems to mean something like 'your appointed measure' or 'your end-measure,' functioning figuratively for Babylon's appointed doom. The multilingual evidence is revealing: French renders verite ('truth'), German Wahrheit ('truth'), while Spanish gives medida ('measure') — suggesting translators struggled with a sense that has moved well beyond the concrete forearm-length. GEOGRAPHY

AND SPACE
en: the-measure-of | es: medida-de | fr: vérité | de: Wahrheit Jer 51:13

3. cubit-of (specific cubit standard) (1×) The cubit in construct with a specifying standard — a single occurrence at Deut 3:11, where Og's iron bed is measured by 'the cubit of a man' (ammat ish), distinguishing the ordinary cubit from a possibly larger royal or long cubit (cf. Ezek 40:5 where a cubit-plus-a-handbreadth is specified). The construct phrase functions not as a measurement itself but as a calibration clause, and cross-lingual renderings (Spanish en codo de, French par cubit de) treat the construct as a prepositional qualifier. This is the only passage in the Hebrew Bible that explicitly names the standard being used. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: by-cubit-of- | es: en-codo-de | fr: par-cubit-de- | de: durch-cubit-von- Deut 3:11

אַמָּה H0520b N-fpc (1×)
Foundations, doorposts, supports; architectural term of uncertain meaning in Isaiah 6:4, possibly thresholds or posts
This architectural term appears in Isaiah's temple vision where 'the foundations of the thresholds shook at the voice of the one calling.' The exact meaning is debated—suggestions include foundations, doorposts, or supporting structures of the temple entrance. The Hebrew root may relate to 'mother' in a metaphorical sense of supporting or containing. The image is of the temple's structural elements trembling at the divine voice, emphasizing the power and holiness of God's presence.

(1×) Found only in Isaiah 6:4 in the prophet's inaugural vision. The shaking of these structures at the seraphim's antiphonal cry demonstrates the overwhelming power of God's holiness. Spanish 'quiciales' (door sockets) suggests pivot points, while the root's possible connection to 'mother/support' indicates foundational or supporting architectural elements. The multilingual uncertainty reflects genuine scholarly debate about this rare architectural term. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: foundations-of | es: quiciales-de | fr: [אמות] | de: [אמות] Isa 6:4

אַמָּה H0521 N-fp (4×)
Cubit (Aramaic); a standard unit of linear measurement, approximately 18 inches / 45 cm
The Aramaic word for 'cubit,' the fundamental unit of length in the ancient Near East, equivalent to the distance from elbow to fingertip (roughly 18 inches or 45 centimeters). It appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of the Hebrew Bible: in the dimensions of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image — sixty cubits high and six cubits wide (Dan 3:1) — and in Cyrus's decree specifying the rebuilt temple's height and width at sixty cubits each (Ezra 6:3). The consistent plural form 'ammin mirrors the Syriac and Targumic cognates.

(4×) The Aramaic cubit as a unit of linear measurement. Nebuchadnezzar's colossal golden image measured sixty cubits in height and six in width (Dan 3:1), proportions that emphasize its imposing slenderness. Cyrus's decree for the Jerusalem temple likewise specifies sixty cubits for both height and breadth (Ezra 6:3). English 'cubits,' Spanish 'codos,' and French 'coudée' all render the term straightforwardly, while German transcriptions preserve the Aramaic plural form, reflecting the word's technical, measurement-specific character. CUBIT MEASUREMENT en: cubits | es: codos | fr: [אמין], coudée | de: [אמין] Ezra 6:3; Dan 3:1

אַמָּה H0522 N-proper-fs (1×)
Ammah, place name; a hill near Gibeon where Joab halted pursuit of Abner after the battle (2 Samuel 2:24)
The hill of Ammah was a landmark near Gibeon where Joab and Abishai halted their pursuit of Abner and his men after the battle at the pool of Gibeon. This geographic marker helped readers locate the endpoint of that day's pursuit. The name may derive from a word meaning 'aqueduct' or 'water channel,' which would be appropriate for a landmark in that region. It appears only in the narrative of the civil war between David's forces and the house of Saul.

(1×) This toponym occurs in 2 Samuel 2:24 as 'the hill of Ammah' that faces Giah on the way to the wilderness of Gibeon. The geographic precision of the narrative uses local landmarks to trace the route of the pursuit. All major translations preserve it as a place name. The battle at Gibeon and subsequent pursuit marked a significant episode in the conflict between the houses of Saul and David. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Ammah | es: Ammah | fr: Ammah | de: Ammah 2Sam 2:24

אֻמָּה H0523 Art / N-fp (3×)
tribes, peoples, nations (collective groups with shared identity)
A term for tribes or peoples, emphasizing collective identity and social organization. Genesis uses it for the tribal divisions of Ishmael's descendants, while Numbers applies it to Midianite tribal structure. The Psalms extend it to encompass all peoples called to praise God, pairing it with 'nations' in parallel. The root connects to the Arabic word for community or religious people, underscoring the social and sometimes cultic cohesion that defines these groups. The term sits between family-level clans and nation-level entities.

(3×) Genesis 25:16 describes Ishmael's twelve sons as 'their tribes and their encampments,' organizing them into coherent social units. Numbers 25:15 identifies a Midianite woman by her father, 'head of the people of a father's house in Midian'—the term here denoting tribal subdivision. Psalm 117:1 calls 'all you peoples' to praise the Lord in parallel with 'all you nations,' expanding the term to universal scope. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'pueblos,' French 'peuples,' German 'Völker') all capture this sense of people-groups bound by kinship and shared identity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: according-to-their-nations, peoples, peoples-of | es: los-pueblos, pueblos-de, según-sus-naciones | fr: le-nation, peuples-de, selon-à-leur-nations | de: Voelker-von, Völker, nach-ihren-Stämmen Gen 25:16; Num 25:15; Ps 117:1

אֻמָּה H0524 N-fs (8×)
Nation, people, tribe — a collective term for ethnic or political groups, used in late biblical Hebrew and Aramaic
This noun denotes a nation or people-group, appearing primarily in the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra. In Daniel's grand court scenes, heralds summon 'peoples, nations, and languages' (Dan 3:4, 7; 5:19; 6:25; 7:14), while Ezra 4:10 lists deported nations. Psalm 117:1 provides the lone Hebrew occurrence, calling all nations to praise the LORD. English 'nation,' Spanish 'nación,' and French 'nations' consistently render the collective sense, while the formulaic Aramaic triplet in Daniel underscores imperial universality.

nation, people (8×) The feminine noun אֻמָּה meaning 'nation, people, tribe,' used in late biblical Hebrew (Ps 117:1) and especially in biblical Aramaic (Daniel and Ezra). In Daniel it appears in the stereotyped court formula 'peoples, nations, and languages' (אֻמַּיָּא, Dan 3:4, 7, 29; 4:1; 5:19; 6:26; 7:14), emphasizing the universal reach of royal decrees and divine sovereignty. Ezra 4:10 uses it of ethnic groups deported by Assyria. The multilingual evidence — English 'nation/nations,' Spanish 'nación/naciones,' French 'nations' — confirms a straightforward collective-ethnic sense with no significant polysemy. NATIONS AND PEOPLES en: nation, nations | es: las-naciones, naciones, nación | fr: [אמיא], coudée, nations | de: Elle, Voelker, [אמיא] Ezra 4:10; Dan 3:4; Dan 3:7; Dan 3:29; Dan 4:1

אָמוֹן H0525 N-ms (1×)
Master craftsman, architect, artisan; skilled worker or designer, as Wisdom personified in Proverbs 8:30
This term describes a skilled artisan or master craftsman with firm, reliable workmanship. In Proverbs 8:30, Wisdom speaks of being at God's side as an 'amon'—interpreted as either 'master craftsman/architect' (participating in creation) or 'nursling/beloved child' (delighting the Creator). The former view sees Wisdom as God's co-worker in creation, the latter as God's cherished companion. Both images emphasize Wisdom's intimate presence with God before creation.

(1×) In Proverbs 8:30, personified Wisdom declares 'I was beside him as an amon.' The ancient versions and modern interpreters divide between 'master workman' (suggesting Wisdom's role in creation's design) and 'beloved child' (emphasizing intimate relationship). Spanish 'arquitecto' and the traditional 'master craftsman' support the former. This ambiguity enriches the portrait of Wisdom as both agent and object of divine delight. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-master-craftsman | es: arquitecto | fr: אמון | de: [אמון] Prov 8:30

אָמוֹן H0526 N-proper-ms (17×)

Amon — proper name meaning 'master workman' or 'trustworthy,' borne by a king of Judah and others

A proper name whose etymology is debated — possibly 'master workman' (from 'aman, to be firm) or connected to the Egyptian deity Amun. The most prominent bearer is King Amon of Judah, son of Manasseh, whose brief and wicked two-year reign ended in assassination by his own servants (2 Kgs 21:18-26; 2 Chr 33:20-25). He also appears in prophetic dating formulas (Jer 1:2; 25:3). A second Amon is the governor of Samaria to whom the prophet Micaiah was sent (1 Kgs 22:26). A third belongs to the line of Solomon's servants returning from exile (Neh 7:59).

(17×) The proper name Amon (אָמוֹן), applied to three distinct figures: primarily the idolatrous king of Judah who continued his father Manasseh's sins and was assassinated (2 Kgs 21:19-26), also a city governor in Ahab's time (1 Kgs 22:26), and an ancestor of post-exilic returnees (Neh 7:59). Cross-linguistic renderings are stable (eng: Amon, spa: Amón, fra: Amon, deu: Amon). The name's 13 occurrences for the king cluster in Kings-Chronicles and Jeremiah's superscriptions. AMMON PEOPLE TERRITORY

en: Amon, of-Amon | es: Amon, Amón | fr: Amon, [אמון] | de: Amon, [אמון] 1Kgs 22:26; 2Kgs 21:18; 2Kgs 21:19; 2Kgs 21:23; 2Kgs 21:24

אָמוֹן H0527 Art / N-ms (1×)

The craftsmen, the artisans; either skilled workers or (by alternate reading) the multitude deported from Jerusalem

This term in Jeremiah 52:15 refers to either craftsmen/artisans or possibly 'the multitude' (if reading it as equivalent to 'hamon'). In the context of Nebuchadnezzar's deportation of Jerusalem, it describes a group taken into exile. If 'craftsmen,' it indicates the Babylonians specifically targeted skilled workers—smiths, builders, artisans—whose expertise would benefit the empire. If 'multitude,' it refers more generally to masses of people. The ambiguity reflects textual uncertainty.

(1×) Jeremiah 52:15 lists 'the rest of the craftsmen' among those deported to Babylon. Spanish 'la multitud' suggests the alternate reading where this equals 'hamon' (multitude). The strategic deportation of skilled workers was standard Babylonian policy—removing both potential rebel leadership and technical expertise. Whether craftsmen specifically or the populace generally, this group represents the draining of Jerusalem's human resources after the city's fall in 586 BC. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-craftsmen | es: la-multitud | fr: [האמון] | de: [האמון] Jer 52:15

אָמוֹן H0528 N-proper-fs (2×)

Amon, Egyptian deity; chief god of Thebes, identified with Zeus by Greeks

The name of a major Egyptian deity, appearing in prophetic oracles against Egypt. Amon (or Amun) was originally the local god of Thebes but rose to become the supreme deity of the Egyptian pantheon, often styled as Amon-Ra after merging with the sun god. Jeremiah 46:25 and Nahum 3:8 both mention 'Amon of Thebes' (No-Amon), linking the god to his chief cult center. The name means 'hidden' or 'concealed,' reflecting the deity's mysterious nature in Egyptian theology.

(2×) Multilingual transliteration is straightforward: English 'Amon,' Spanish 'Amón,' French and German preserve 'Amon' or bracket Hebrew. Both biblical contexts involve judgment oracles against Egypt—Jeremiah announcing God will punish 'Amon of Thebes,' and Nahum comparing Nineveh's coming fall to Thebes' historical destruction despite the city's trust in powerful Amon. The prophets assert YHWH's supremacy over even Egypt's greatest deity. AMMON PEOPLE TERRITORY en: Amon | es: Amón | fr: Amon, [אמון] | de: [אמון] Jer 46:25; Nah 3:8

אֱמֶן H0529 N-mp (5×)

Faithfulness, trustworthiness; the quality of being reliable and steadfast.

Describes the quality of being trustworthy and dependable. In Deuteronomy 32:20, its negative form diagnoses Israel's failure: children 'in whom there is no faithfulness.' Proverbs uses it to characterize a trusty messenger (13:17), a faithful witness (14:5), and a loyal person (20:6). Isaiah 26:2 crowns the concept: the righteous nation that 'keeps faithfulness' may enter God's city. Spanish 'fidelidad' and German 'Treue' both capture this core sense of proven reliability.

(5×) Trustworthiness and faithfulness as a moral quality, describing persons or conduct that can be relied upon. In Deuteronomy 32:20, its absence ('no emun in them') indicts Israel's unreliability. Proverbs applies it as a qualifier for messengers (13:17), witnesses (14:5), and individuals (20:6), while Isaiah 26:2 makes it the entrance requirement for the righteous city. The German 'Treue' and Spanish 'fidelidad' highlight the relational dimension: this is faithfulness tested and proven over time. FAITH AND TRUST

en: faithful, faithfulness | es: de-fidelidad, fidelidades, fiel | fr: [אמנים], fidélité, אמונים | de: Treue, [אמונים], [אמנים] Deut 32:20; Prov 13:17; Prov 14:5; Prov 20:6; Isa 26:2

אֱמוּנָה H0530 Art / N-fs (49×)

Faithfulness, fidelity, trustworthiness; also personal faith/trust and physical steadiness

Emunah is one of the great covenant words of the Hebrew Bible. In its dominant sense it names the rock-solid faithfulness of God — 'a God of faithfulness and without iniquity' (Deut 32:4) — and the trustworthy character expected of those who serve him (2 Kgs 12:15; 22:7). Its most famous occurrence, Habakkuk 2:4 ('the righteous shall live by his emunah'), became the seedbed for Paul's theology of faith (Rom 1:17; Gal 3:11). Spanish notably renders this verse 'por su fe' rather than 'fidelidad,' signaling a shift from attribute to act. In one vivid physical use, Moses' hands were 'emunah' — steady, firm — held aloft during battle (Exod 17:12).

1. faithfulness, fidelity, reliability (47×) The quality of being faithful, reliable, and trustworthy — the dominant sense across 47 occurrences. Used of God's covenant fidelity (Deut 32:4; Ps 36:5) and of human integrity in office (2 Kgs 12:15; 1 Chr 9:22). Frequently paired with chesed ('steadfast love'). French 'fidélité' and Spanish 'fidelidad/con-verdad' capture this relational trust. FAITH AND TRUST

en: Your-faithfulness, faithfulness, in-faithfulness | es: con-fidelidad, con-verdad, en-fidelidad | fr: [באמונה], dans-fidélité, fidélité | de: Treue, [אמונתך], [באמונה] Deut 32:4; 1Sam 26:23; 2Kgs 12:15; 2Kgs 22:7; 1Chr 9:22

2. faith, trust, belief (1×) Personal faith or trust directed toward God, distinctively in Habakkuk 2:4: 'the righteous shall live by his emunah.' Multilingual evidence supports the distinction — Spanish 'por su fe' (not 'fidelidad') and the three NT citations (Rom 1:17; Gal 3:11; Heb 10:38) all treat this as trust exercised, not merely trustworthiness possessed. FAITH AND TRUST

en: by-his-faithfulness | es: por-su-fe | fr: fidélité | de: [באמונתו] Hab 2:4

3. steadiness, firmness (1×) Physical steadiness or firmness — the concrete, literal root meaning. In Exodus 17:12, Aaron and Hur hold Moses' hands so that they are 'emunah' (steady) until sunset. Spanish 'firmeza,' Hindi 'स्थिर,' and Arabic equivalents all render this as physical stability rather than moral faithfulness, marking a clear semantic boundary. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY

en: steady | es: firmeza | fr: steady | de: steady Exod 17:12

אָמוֹץ H0531 N-proper-ms (13×)
Amoz — the father of the prophet Isaiah Amots appears 13 times in the Hebrew Bible, always in a single formulaic role: identifying the father of the prophet Isaiah. The name (meaning 'strong' or 'courageous,' from the root amats) occurs without exception in the patronymic phrase 'Isaiah son of Amoz' across the prophetic superscriptions (Isa 1:1; 2:1; 13:1; 20:2; 37:2, 21; 38:1) and the historical narratives of Kings and Chronicles (2 Kgs 19:2, 20; 20:1; 2 Chr 26:22; 32:20, 32). Nothing else is recorded about Amoz himself — he is known entirely through his son. Cross-linguistic renderings are stable: Spanish 'Amoz/Amos,' French 'Amots,' German 'Amoz.'

(13×) The proper name Amots (Amoz), identifying exclusively the father of the prophet Isaiah. Distinguished from the prophet Amos (Hebrew Amos, with different spelling). All 13 occurrences appear in the fixed patronymic formula 'Isaiah son of Amoz' — in prophetic headings (Isa 1:1; 2:1; 13:1; 20:2), narrative references during Hezekiah's reign (2 Kgs 19:2, 20; 20:1; Isa 37:2, 21; 38:1), and the Chronicler's citations (2 Chr 26:22; 32:20, 32). A single referent with no semantic variation. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 10575 WITH 3 SENSES
en: Amots, Amoz, of-Amots | es: Amots, Amoz, Amós | fr: Amots | de: Amots, Amoz 2Kgs 19:2; 2Kgs 19:20; 2Kgs 20:1; 2Chr 26:22; 2Chr 32:20

אָמִי H0532 N-proper-ms (1×)
Ami, personal name; head of a family of temple servants who returned from exile (Ezra 2:57, called Amon in Nehemiah 7:59)
Ami was the ancestor of a family of temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel. The parallel passage in Nehemiah 7:59 calls him Amon, showing the kind of minor textual variation common in biblical genealogies. The Nethinim were temple workers who assisted the Levites in various duties. This family maintained their identity and service role through the exile and into the restoration period.

(1×) This name appears in Ezra 2:57 among the returning temple servants. The variant 'Amon' in Nehemiah 7:59 demonstrates typical scribal variation in proper names. These families of temple servants preserved their ancestral identity through generations of exile, returning to resume their hereditary roles in temple service. The name itself means 'my people' or possibly 'trustworthy,' fitting for one whose descendants served faithfully. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ami | es: Amí. | fr: [אמ׳] | de: [אמ׳] Ezra 2:57

אַמִּיץ H0533 Adj-ms (6×)
Mighty, strong, courageous; describing powerful persons, forces, or God's irresistible strength.
An adjective conveying formidable power and resolute courage. It describes Absalom's conspiracy growing 'strong' (2 Sam 15:12), pictures God as 'wise in heart and mighty in power' (Job 9:4, 19), and portrays the Assyrian invader as God's fierce instrument (Isa 28:2). In Amos 2:16, the 'stout of heart' — the bravest warrior — will flee naked in the day of judgment. Isaiah 40:26 applies it to God who marshals the stars by the greatness of his might: not one is missing. Spanish renders it 'fuerte' and 'poderoso,' French 'fort' — all converging on the idea of overwhelming strength.

mighty, strong, courageous (6×) Denotes formidable strength, might, or valor, applied to persons, conspiracies, and supremely to God. Used of Absalom's conspiracy growing powerful (2 Sam 15:12), of God's irresistible might in wisdom and power (Job 9:4, 19), of the Assyrian agent of divine judgment described as both 'strong' and 'mighty' (Isa 28:2), of the bravest warrior fleeing in terror on the day of the LORD (Amos 2:16), and of God who calls the starry host by name with great might so that not one is absent (Isa 40:26). Spanish 'fuerte/poderoso' and French 'fort' uniformly capture the sense of overwhelming, often irresistible power. POWER AND ABILITY en: and-being-strong, and-courageous-of, and-mighty-of | es: Y-el-valiente-de, fuerte, poderoso | fr: [ואמיץ], [ואמץ], et-fort | de: [ואמיץ], [ואמיץ], [ואמץ] 2Sam 15:12; Job 9:4; Job 9:19; Isa 28:2; Isa 40:26

אָמִיר H0534 Conj-w (2×)
and the branch, branch; topmost bough or summit of a tree or mountain
A conjunction plus noun denoting the top, summit, or highest branch of a tree or mountain. Both occurrences appear in Isaiah 17, describing remnants left after judgment. Verse 6 uses it for a few olives remaining 'in the top of the uppermost bough' after harvest, while verse 9 (with textual uncertainty) may refer to 'the branch' or possibly 'the Amorite' after emendation. The imagery emphasizes what remains at the highest, hardest-to-reach places when everything else is taken.

(2×) Translation evidence shows textual uncertainty: English 'branch' and 'the branch,' Spanish 'rama' (branch) and 'y la rama,' French and German bracket the Hebrew forms, acknowledging interpretive difficulty. Isaiah 17:9 is particularly contested—some emend to 'the Amorite,' following the Septuagint. The clear usage in verse 6 employs agricultural imagery typical of Isaiah: the gleaning that remains after God's judgment harvest passes through Israel. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-branch, branch | es: rama, y-la-rama | fr: [אמיר], [והאמיר] | de: [אמיר], [והאמיר] Isa 17:6; Isa 17:9

אָמַל H0535 V-Pual-Perf-3ms (16×)
To languish, wither, grow feeble; of land, vegetation, or people losing vitality and strength under divine judgment or hardship.
This verb paints a vivid picture of life draining away — fields withering, vines fading, the earth itself growing feeble. Nearly all its biblical occurrences are in the Pual (intensive passive) stem, underscoring that the subject suffers the process rather than causing it. Isaiah uses it powerfully: 'The earth mourns and languishes, the world languishes and withers' (Isa 24:4), where the parallelism with 'mourn' (אָבַל) and 'wither' (נָבֵל) creates a portrait of cosmic grief. Spanish captures this well with both 'desfallecer' (to faint) and 'marchitar' (to wilt), revealing the dual human-botanical imagery the Hebrew carries.

1. languish, wither, fade (15×) To languish, wither, or fade away — describing a process of losing vitality, fertility, or strength. Used predominantly in the Pual stem for land, crops, and personified nature under judgment: 'the fields of Heshbon languish' (Isa 16:8), the vine 'languishes' (Isa 24:7), and even Hannah's rivals 'languish' while she is blessed (1 Sam 2:5). Spanish distinguishes 'desfallecer' (human fading) from 'marchitar' (botanical wilting), reflecting the word's broad application across animate and inanimate subjects. Joel 1:10 and Hosea 4:3 pair it with mourning, suggesting languishing as grief made visible. WITHERING AND FADING
en: She-languished, and-languishes, languish | es: Desfalleció, Marchitado, desfallecieron | fr: et-languir, languir, languishes | de: languishes, schwachsein, und-welkt 1Sam 2:5; Isa 16:8; Isa 19:8; Isa 24:4

2. be weak, feeble (1×) To be in a state of weakness or feebleness, describing a settled condition rather than a progressive process. This appears in the Qal passive participle in Ezekiel 16:30: 'How weak is your heart!' — an exclamation about Jerusalem's enfeebled moral state. The shift from Pual (process) to Qal passive (state) is significant: where sense 1 depicts withering in motion, this sense captures the endpoint of debility. Spanish 'debilitada' (debilitated) precisely targets this static quality. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY
en: weak | es: debilitada | fr: languir | de: [אמלה] Ezek 16:30

אֻמְלָל H0536 Adj-ms (1×)
Languishing, feeble, faint; adjective describing physical weakness or exhaustion from distress
This adjective describes physical languishing or feebleness, often from grief or distress. In Psalm 6:2, the psalmist cries out in physical and emotional anguish: 'I am languishing.' The term conveys the bodily effects of deep trouble—weakness, exhaustion, wasting away. It stands parallel to 'my bones are troubled,' showing how emotional and spiritual distress manifests in physical debility. This vocabulary of illness and weakness is common in lament psalms.

(1×) Found in Psalm 6:2 where the psalmist pleads for divine mercy while describing his languishing condition. Spanish 'desfallecido' (failing, fainting) and English 'languishing' capture the sense of wasting weakness. The parallel 'my bones are troubled' intensifies the image of comprehensive distress affecting the whole person. Lament psalms frequently use physical vocabulary to express spiritual and emotional anguish, making the suffering tangible and urgent. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: languishing | es: desfallecido | fr: Amalek | de: languishing Ps 6:2

אֻמְלָל H0537 Art / Adj-mp (1×)

The feeble, the weak; plural adjective describing powerless or vulnerable people, used mockingly in Nehemiah 4:2

This term describes people who are feeble, weak, or powerless. In Nehemiah 4:2, enemies of the rebuilding project mockingly ask, 'What are these feeble Jews doing?' The insult targets the builders' perceived weakness and inability to complete the massive task of rebuilding Jerusalem's walls. The question drips with contempt—how can this weak, dispirited remnant possibly accomplish such a work? Nehemiah's response is to pray and continue building.

(1×) Nehemiah 4:2 (Hebrew v. 2) records Sanballat's mocking question about 'these feeble Jews' attempting to rebuild the walls. Spanish 'débiles' (weak) and the LXX tradition capture the contemptuous tone. The taunt assumes the returned exiles lack the strength, resources, and capacity to complete such an ambitious construction project. This epithet 'feeble' becomes part of the opposition's psychological warfare against the rebuilders, which Nehemiah counters with prayer and persistent work. WEAKNESS AND FRAILTY

en: the-feeble | es: los-débiles | fr: [האמללים] | de: [האמללים] Neh 4:2

אֲמָם H0538 N-proper-fs (1×)

Amam, place name; a town in the southern district of Judah, listed in Joshua 15:26

Amam was a town in the Negev region assigned to Judah's tribal territory. It appears in the list of cities in Judah's southern district, the arid zone extending toward Edom. Like many settlements in this list, its precise location is no longer known. The Septuagint preserves variant readings, showing the textual uncertainty common with place names in this region. These southern towns marked Judah's frontier in the wilderness.

(1×) This toponym occurs in Joshua 15:26 within the catalog of Judah's southernmost towns. The Septuagint shows textual variation (some manuscripts read 'Amam,' others 'Shen'), typical for place names in remote areas. These Negev settlements represented Judah's territorial claims in the harsh southern frontier, though many may have been seasonal or marginal sites. The preservation of the name in the biblical record maintains the memory of Judah's full territorial extent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Amam | es: Amán | fr: Amam | de: Amam Josh 15:26

אָמַן H0539 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (108×)

To believe, be faithful, support; also to nurse or rear — spanning cognitive trust, steadfast reliability, and parental nurture.

A richly layered root whose meanings radiate outward from a core idea of firmness. In the Hifil, it expresses the act of believing or placing trust in someone — as when Abraham believed the LORD in Genesis 15:6, a verse whose theological weight is felt across the entire canon. The Niphal participle yields the adjectival sense 'faithful, trustworthy,' describing God's enduring covenant character (Deut 7:9) and reliable servants like Moses (Num 12:7). Strikingly, the Qal participle shifts to the concrete domain of child-rearing: a foster-father or nurse who 'makes firm' by carrying and nourishing, as Naomi did for Ruth's son Obed (Ruth 4:16). Spanish 'creer' and 'fiel,' German 'glauben' and 'treu,' and Arabic cognate forms all mirror this split between belief and faithfulness.

1. believe, accept as true (42×) Hifil: to believe, accept as true, give credence to a message, person, or divine promise. This is the cognitive-assent sense, famously exemplified by Genesis 15:6 where Abraham 'believed the LORD and it was credited to him as righteousness.' The multilingual evidence strongly converges: Spanish 'creyó,' French 'crut,' German 'glaubte,' and Arabic آمَنَ all point to intellectual conviction. Appears with the preposition בְּ or לְ to mark the object of belief (Exod 4:1, 5, 8; Num 14:11). FAITH AND TRUST

en: I-believe, I-had-believed, and-he-believed | es: Creed, Y-creyó, crean | fr: croire, crut, et-il-crut | de: believed, glauben, glaubte Gen 15:6; Gen 45:26; Exod 4:1; Exod 4:5; Exod 4:8

2. faithful, trustworthy, sure (39×) Niphal participle used adjectively: faithful, trustworthy, sure, enduring. Describes persons, promises, or institutions as dependable and firm. God's covenant is 'faithful' (Deut 7:9), his servant Moses is 'faithful in all my house' (Num 12:7), and David is promised a 'sure house' (1 Sam 2:35). Spanish 'fiel,' French 'fidèle,' and Arabic أمين all capture this adjectival quality of proven reliability, distinct from the active cognitive sense of believing. FAITH AND TRUST

en: and-lasting, faithful, is-faithful | es: Fiel, es-fiel, fiel | fr: croire, et-lasting, fidèle | de: faithful, glauben, glaubte Num 12:7; Deut 7:9; Deut 28:59; 1Sam 2:35

3. be confirmed, be established (9×) Niphal finite verb: to be confirmed, established, or verified. An eventive rather than stative sense, marking the transition of a promise or word into established reality. Joseph's brothers must prove their words 'confirmed' (Gen 42:20); God's word concerning David's house shall 'be established' (2 Sam 7:16; 1 Chr 17:23-24). Spanish 'sea confirmado' and German 'bewährt werden' reflect this passive-eventive nuance. FAITH AND TRUST

en: and-be-established, and-faithful, and-let-be-confirmed | es: Y-sea-confirmado, Y-será-fiel, permaneceréis | fr: croire, et—être-verified, et-croire | de: glauben, lass-sein-confirmed, und-bewährt-werden Gen 42:20; 2Sam 7:16; 1Kgs 8:26; 1Chr 17:23; 1Chr 17:24

4. trust, rely on, have confidence (9×) Hifil with trust or reliance semantics: to place confidence in, depend upon, rely on. Distinguished from sense 1 by emphasizing personal reliance rather than mere intellectual assent. Job 4:18 and 15:15 declare that God does not 'trust' even his servants or holy ones. In Deut 28:66, one's very life hangs in doubt with no confidence. Spanish 'confió' and French 'fit confiance' capture the reliance aspect that goes beyond crediting a report as true. FAITH AND TRUST

en: and-trusted, believe, he-trusts | es: Y-confió, confiarás, confió | fr: croire, et-fit-confiance, se-confia | de: du-believe, glauben, glaubte Deut 28:66; Judg 11:20; 1Sam 27:12; Job 4:18; Job 15:15

5. nurse, guardian, foster-parent (7×) Qal active participle: a nurse, guardian, or foster-parent — one who supports and rears a child. Naomi became the 'ōmenet (foster-mother/nurse) for Obed (Ruth 4:16); Mephibosheth's nurse carried him when fleeing (2 Sam 4:4); the tutors of Ahab's sons are 'ōmenîm (2 Kgs 10:1, 5). Arabic ٍّي 'rearer' and Korean 양육자 'caregiver' converge on this concrete nurturing meaning, rooted in the physical act of making a child firm and secure. FAITH AND TRUST

en: and-the-guardians, for-a-nurse, guardian | es: criador-de, el-ama, los-tutores-de | fr: croire, et-le-guardians, le-guardians-de | de: der-guardians-von, der-nursing-Vater, glauben Num 11:12; Ruth 4:16; 2Sam 4:4; 2Kgs 10:1; 2Kgs 10:5

6. be brought up, be nursed (2×) Qal passive participle and Niphal passive: those who have been reared, nursed, or carried — the passive counterpart of the nurturing sense. In Lamentations 4:5, those 'brought up in scarlet' (הָאֲמֻנִים) are now destitute; in Isaiah 60:4, daughters shall be 'nursed' at the side. Spanish 'los criados' and Arabic الأُمُّون 'those reared' confirm the passive meaning. Only two clear occurrences mark this as a distinct but real sense. FAITH AND TRUST

en: those-brought-up, will-be-nursed | es: los-criados, serán-llevadas | fr: croire | de: glauben, glaubte Isa 60:4; Lam 4:5

אֲמַן H0540 Conj-w / V-Hifil-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (3×)
trust, be trustworthy (Aramaic: have faith or be found faithful)
An Aramaic verb appearing in Daniel, meaning to trust or be trustworthy. Daniel uses both active and passive forms: Daniel himself trusted in God and was delivered from lions, while the interpretation given to Nebuchadnezzar proved trustworthy. The root is the Aramaic equivalent of the Hebrew 'amen'—the firm, reliable, dependable quality that characterizes both divine faithfulness and the human response of confident trust. This is covenant language transplanted into Aramaic, maintaining theological continuity even in linguistic shift.

(3×) Daniel 6:23 says Daniel 'trusted in his God' and therefore was rescued from the lions. Daniel 6:4 describes Daniel as 'trustworthy' (literally 'faithful'), with no negligence found in him. Daniel 2:45 declares the dream and its interpretation 'trustworthy'—reliable and certain. The Aramaic setting reflects Daniel's bilingual world, serving foreign emperors while maintaining Hebrew faith. The cognate relationship to 'amen' reminds us that trust and trustworthiness share the same root: God's reliability evokes our faith, and our faith should make us reliable. FAITH AND TRUST
en: and-trustworthy, faithful, he-trusted | es: creyó, fiel, y-fiel | fr: [הימן], [ומהימן], [מהימן] | de: [הימן], [ומהימן], [מהימן] Dan 2:45; Dan 6:4; Dan 6:23

יְמַן H0541 V-Hifil-Imperf-2mp (1×)
You turn to the right; imperfect verb describing turning or veering to the right side, used figuratively in Isaiah 30:21
This verb describes turning or going to the right. In Isaiah 30:21, it appears in a promise about divine guidance: when God's people start to turn aside either to the right or left from the proper path, they will hear a voice behind them saying 'This is the way, walk in it.' The right and left represent deviations in either direction from the straight path of obedience. The image is of God as a shepherd or guide correcting wayward movement.

(1×) Isaiah 30:21 uses this verb in parallel with 'turn to the left' to describe any deviation from the right path. The context promises that after judgment, God's people will receive clear guidance—a voice directing them back to the true way whenever they begin to stray. The bilateral image (right or left) covers all possible deviations. This echoes Deuteronomic language about not turning aside from God's commandments to the right or left. RIGHT SIDE
en: you-turn-to-the-right | es: os-vayáis-a-la-derecha | fr: [תאמינו] | de: [תאמינו] Isa 30:21

אָמָן H0542 N-ms (1×)
Craftsman, master workman, artisan; skilled worker, particularly one who creates fine or artistic work
This term designates a skilled craftsman or artisan, particularly one whose work shows artistic mastery. In Song of Solomon 7:1, it describes 'the work of a craftsman's hands' in admiring the beloved's beauty. The comparison to skilled artisanship elevates the natural beauty being described, suggesting divine or human craft at the highest level. The term appears in later Hebrew and Aramaic contexts for master workers in various crafts.

(1×) In Song of Solomon 7:1 (Hebrew 7:2), the lover praises the beloved's form as 'the work of a craftsman's hands.' Spanish 'artesano' and French 'artisan' capture the sense of skilled artistic work. The comparison treats human beauty as comparable to the finest artistic creation, whether divine or human craftsmanship. This aesthetic appreciation through artistic metaphor is characteristic of the Song's elevated poetic style. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: craftsman | es: artesano | fr: d'un-artisan. | de: glaubte Song 7:1

אָמֵן H0543 N-ms (30×)
Amen; a solemn affirmation of truth, agreement, or doxological praise—'truly,' 'so be it,' 'let it stand.'
One of the most enduring words in all of Scripture, amen functions as a solemn ratifier. In the covenant curses of Deuteronomy 27:15-26, the people respond 'Amen' twelve times to bind themselves to the law. In the Psalter's doxologies (Ps 41:13, 72:19, 89:52, 106:48), the doubled 'Amen and Amen' seals praise to God. Nehemiah 5:13 records the assembly's 'Amen' confirming Nehemiah's oath. Isaiah 65:16 even names God 'the God of Amen'—the God of faithfulness. The word passed unchanged into Greek, Latin, and virtually every language the Bible has reached, as confirmed by its identical transliteration across all our target languages.

Amen (30×) A liturgical and covenantal affirmation meaning 'truly,' 'so be it,' or 'it is established.' In Deuteronomy 27:15-26, the congregation ratifies each covenant curse with 'Amen,' accepting its binding force. In the Psalter doxologies (Ps 41:13, 72:19, 89:52, 106:48), doubled 'Amen, Amen' closes each book of the Psalms with emphatic praise. Numbers 5:22 uses the double Amen in the oath of the suspected adulteress. The word itself derives from the root 'mn, connoting firmness and reliability—hence Isaiah 65:16's remarkable epithet 'God of Amen.' AFFIRMATION PARTICLES
en: Amen, amen | es: Amén, amén | fr: Amen, [אמן], amen | de: Amen, [אמן], amen Num 5:22; Deut 27:15; Deut 27:16; Deut 27:17

אֹמֶן H0544 N-ms (1×)
Truth, faithfulness, reliability; noun emphasizing firm trustworthiness, used in construct with 'faithfulness' (Isaiah 25:1)
This noun denotes firm faithfulness or truth. In Isaiah 25:1, it appears in an emphatic construct phrase: 'faithfulness and truth' or 'perfect faithfulness' (literally 'faithfulness, faithfulness'—using two synonymous words for emphasis). The prophet praises God for carrying out ancient plans with complete reliability. This doubled expression ('emunah' and 'omen') intensifies the assertion of God's absolute trustworthiness in fulfilling His purposes through history.

(1×) Found only in Isaiah 25:1 in the phrase 'faithfulness and truth' (or 'perfect faithfulness'). Spanish 'verdad' (truth) reflects one aspect of the semantic range. The construct pairing of two near-synonyms creates emphatic assertion—God's plans are characterized by absolute, unwavering faithfulness. This praise follows the prophecy of judgment on the nations, celebrating God's reliability in executing His stated purposes across generations. TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS en: truth | es: verdad | fr: [אמן] | de: [אמן] Isa 25:1

אֲמָנָה H0545 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)
In guardianship, in foster care; noun describing the act of raising or caring for someone, used of Esther's upbringing
This term refers to the act of bringing up, fostering, or guardianship. In Esther 2:20, it describes Esther continuing to follow Mordecai's instructions just as she had during her 'upbringing' or 'guardianship' under him. The word emphasizes the nurturing care and guidance Mordecai provided for his orphaned cousin. Even after becoming queen, Esther maintained the obedience and trust established during her years under Mordecai's foster care.

(1×) Esther 2:20 uses this term for the period when Mordecai raised Esther after she was orphaned. Spanish 'crianza' (upbringing/rearing) captures the nurturing aspect. The text emphasizes continuity—Esther's obedience to Mordecai persists even in her new royal status, because it was established during her formative years under his guardianship. This foster care relationship becomes crucial to the story's plot as Mordecai continues to guide Esther's actions. FEEDING AND NOURISHING
en: in-guardianship | es: en-crianza | fr: [באמנה] | de: [באמנה] Esth 2:20

אֲמָנָה H0546 Adv (2×)
truly, verily, indeed; emphatic affirmation of truth An adverb expressing emphatic affirmation, derived from the root meaning firmness or faithfulness. In Genesis 20:12, Abraham insists 'She is truly my sister' (along with being his wife), defending his half-truth to Abimelech. In Joshua 7:20, Achan confesses 'Truly I have sinned against the Lord,' acknowledging his theft from Jericho's devoted things. The adverb strengthens the speaker's claim to truthfulness, functioning like 'indeed' or 'in very truth.'

(2×) Cross-linguistic translations capture the emphatic force: English 'truly,' Spanish 'verdaderamente' (truly), French 'en vérité' (in truth), German 'wahrlich' (truly) and 'wirklich' (really). Both biblical contexts involve uncomfortable admissions—Abraham's defensive explanation of his deceptive strategy, and Achan's forced confession after being caught by lot. The word emphasizes the speaker's insistence on the reality or accuracy of a contested or questioned statement. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES

en: truly | es: verdaderamente | fr: en-vérité | de: wahrlich, wirklich Gen 20:12; Josh 7:20

אֲמַן H0547 Art / N-fp (1×)

The doorposts, the jambs; architectural term for the posts or supports of a doorway, mentioned in 2 Kings 18:16

This term refers to doorposts or supporting pillars of doorways. In 2 Kings 18:16, it describes the posts of the temple doors that King Hezekiah had overlaid with gold, which he then stripped off to pay tribute to the Assyrian king Sennacherib. This desperate act of despoiling even the sacred temple doors shows the severity of the crisis. The doorposts may have been structural supports or decorative elements framing the temple entrances.

(1×) Second Kings 18:16 records Hezekiah stripping gold from 'the doorposts' of the temple to pay Assyrian tribute. The Hebrew root connects to 'those brought up' or 'supported,' suggesting pillars or posts. Spanish 'jambas' (jambs/doorposts) identifies the structural elements framing doorways. The detail that these had been covered in gold shows both the temple's former glory and the severity of Hezekiah's emergency—he removed precious metal even from the sacred structure itself. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-doorposts | es: las-jambas | fr: le-doorposts | de: der-doorposts 2Kgs 18:16

אֲמָנָה H0548 N-fs (2×)

firm covenant, settled provision; faithfulness, fixed support

A noun derived from the root meaning faithfulness, appearing in two distinct contexts in Nehemiah. In Nehemiah 9:38 (Hebrew 10:1), it describes the 'firm covenant' that Nehemiah and the people are making with God—a binding pledge based on faith and trustworthiness. In Nehemiah 11:23, it refers to the 'settled provision' or fixed support given to the temple singers by royal decree. Both uses emphasize reliability and permanence, whether of covenant obligations or economic arrangements.

(2×) Multilingual glosses show interpretive variation: English 'a firm covenant' and 'settled portion,' Spanish 'pacto firme' (firm pact) and 'provisión firme' (firm provision), French and German bracket the Hebrew, acknowledging the term's semantic range. The covenant context emphasizes binding obligation, while the provision context stresses reliable institutional support. Both fit Nehemiah's reforms establishing permanent structures—spiritual (covenant renewal) and practical (temple music maintenance). COVENANT AGREEMENT

en: a-firm-covenant, and-settled-portion | es: pacto-firme, y-provisión-firme | fr: [אמנה], [ואמנה] | de: [אמנה], [ואמנה] Neh 9:38; Neh 11:23

אֲמָנָה H0549 N-proper-fs (2×)

Abanah/Amana; river flowing from Anti-Lebanon into Damascus, or the mountain region itself

A place name with variant spellings (Ketiv: Abanah, Qere: Amana), appearing in two contexts. In 2 Kings 5:12, Naaman mentions the Abanah (or Amana) river of Damascus, identified with the Greek Chrysorrhoas and modern Barada River, the main water source flowing from Anti-Lebanon into the Damascus plain. Song of Songs 4:8 references 'from Amana,' likely the mountain region from which the river flows rather than the river itself. The name may derive from a root meaning 'constant' or 'faithful,' appropriate for a perennial river.

(2×) Cross-linguistic evidence preserves the ketiv-qere distinction: English 'Abanah' and 'Amana,' Spanish similarly, French includes 'd'Amana' (from Amana), German brackets the Hebrew. Naaman's rhetorical question contrasts Damascus's superior rivers with Israel's Jordan—'Are not Abanah and Pharpar better than all the waters of Israel?' The Song reference to 'peaks of Amana' situates the bride's beauty in Lebanon's dramatic mountain geography. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: Abanah, Amana | es: Abana, Amaná | fr: Abanah, d'Amana, | de: [אמנה] 2Kgs 5:12; Song 4:8

אַמְנוֹן H0550 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (28×)

Amnon; proper name meaning 'faithful,' borne chiefly by David's eldest son and a Judahite descendant of Shimon.

Amnon (Hebrew 'amon, 'faithful') is primarily known as David's eldest son, whose crime against his half-sister Tamar and subsequent murder by Absalom form one of the most disturbing narratives in the Succession History (2 Sam 13:1-39). The name also belongs to a descendant of Shimon in the genealogies of Judah (1 Chr 4:20). Variant spellings include Aminon (2 Sam 13:20) and the defective Amnon (1 Chr 3:1). All major translations transliterate rather than translate, preserving the Hebrew form across languages.

Amnon (28×) The personal name Amnon, meaning 'faithful' or 'trustworthy.' The primary bearer is David's firstborn son, whose assault on Tamar and murder by Absalom drive the dynastic crisis narrative in 2 Samuel 13. Spelled as Aminon in 2 Sam 13:20 and defectively in 1 Chr 3:1. A second, lesser-known Amnon appears in the Judahite genealogies (1 Chr 4:20). Spanish, French, and German all transliterate the name uniformly as 'Amnon,' reflecting its stable proper-noun status. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Amnon | es: Amnon, Amnón | fr: Amnon | de: Amnon 2Sam 3:2; 2Sam 13:1; 2Sam 13:2; 2Sam 13:3

אָמְנָם H0551 Conj (9×)

Truly, indeed; an adverb of strong affirmation used in asseverations and rhetorical questions.

An adverb derived from the root אמן ('to be firm, trustworthy'), used to assert the truth of a statement with emphatic force. It appears in both sincere affirmations and ironic rhetorical questions. In Ruth 3:12, Boaz solemnly affirms his kinsman status: 'truly I am a redeemer.' In Job, it often carries an edge of sarcasm—Job 12:2 mockingly declares 'truly you are the people, and wisdom will die with you!' Spanish distinguishes nuances with 'verdaderamente' (truly) and 'de verdad' (in truth), while French uses 'certes' and 'en vérité.'

truly (9×) An emphatic asseverative adverb meaning 'truly, indeed, in truth,' used to confirm a claim or challenge an assumption. Sincere usage appears in Ruth 3:12 (Boaz's solemn avowal) and 2 Kgs 19:17 (acknowledging Assyria's real conquests). Ironic or disputational usage dominates in Job: 'truly you are the people' (Job 12:2), 'truly I know it is so' (Job 9:2), and 'truly God does not act wickedly' (Job 34:12). German 'fuerwahrlich' and 'wahrhaftig' capture the full weight of the asseveration, while French 'certes' conveys the concessive-emphatic tone. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES en: Truly, truly | es: De-verdad, En-verdad, Verdaderamente | fr: [אמנם], certes, en-vérité | de: [אמנם], fuerwahrlich, wahrhaftig Ruth 3:12; 2Kgs 19:17; Job 9:2; Job 12:2; Job 19:4

אָמְנָם H0552 Conj (5×)

An adverb meaning 'truly, indeed, really,' always used in rhetorical or incredulous questions.

An emphatic adverb expressing genuine surprise or rhetorical doubt, always appearing in questions. When Sarah laughs at the promise of a son, God asks Abraham: 'Shall Sarah indeed bear a child?' (Gen 18:13). Balak challenges Balaam with the same word (Num 22:37), and Solomon marvels whether God will 'truly' dwell on earth (1 Kgs 8:27). The translations capture this interrogative force: Spanish 'de verdad' and 'acaso,' French 'en vérité,' German 'fürwahr.'

(5×) An interrogative-emphatic adverb 'truly, indeed, really,' derived from 'omen with the adverbial ending -am. Used exclusively in questions that express wonder or incredulity. Genesis 18:13 marks the paradigmatic use: God's question about Sarah's doubt. The same rhetorical force appears in Balak's challenge (Num 22:37), Solomon's temple prayer (1 Kgs 8:27; 2 Chr 6:18), and the psalmist's confrontation of unjust judges (Ps 58:1). Spanish 'de verdad' and French 'en vérité' both convey the 'is it really so?' tone. AFFIRMATION PARTICLES

en: indeed, truly | es: acaso-ciertamente, de-verdad, en-verdad | fr: [האמנם], en-effet, en-vérité | de: [האמנם], fürwahr, tatsaechlich Gen 18:13; Num 22:37; 1Kgs 8:27; 2Chr 6:18; Ps 58:1

אָמַץ H0553 V-Piel-Imperf-3fs / 3mse (41×)

To be strong, courageous, or firm; in Piel, to strengthen, encourage, or harden; reflexively, to show resolve or determination.

Amats covers the full arc of strength and resolve in the Hebrew Bible, from the rousing battlefield command 'be strong and courageous!' to the quiet inner determination of Ruth pressing on toward Bethlehem. In its Qal stem it describes being strong or prevailing — the younger nation will be stronger than the elder (Gen 25:23). The Piel is richly causative: Job's friends once 'strengthened' failing knees (Job 4:4), yet the same form can harden a heart in obstinacy (Deut 2:30). The word's pairing with chazaq is nearly formulaic in Moses' and Joshua's commissioning speeches, a doublet that rings across Deuteronomy and Joshua like a liturgical refrain. Spanish captures the positive pole with sé fuerte and the negative with endurecer, while German toggles between Mut fassen and verhärten.

1. be strong, be courageous (17×) The Qal imperative and stative sense: to be strong, be courageous, take heart. Almost always paired with chazaq ('be strong') in the commissioning formulae of Deuteronomy and Joshua (Deut 31:6-7, 23; Josh 1:6-7, 18). The exhortation extends to the Psalms' communal encouragement: 'Wait for the LORD; be strong and let your heart take courage' (Ps 27:14; 31:24). Spanish sé fuerte/ten ánimo and German sei mutig both select courage-specific vocabulary, while the Arabic cognate confirms the root sense of firmness and resolve. Sense 4's Psalms occurrences (Ps 27:14, 31:24) belong here as jussive forms of this same exhortation. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-be-courageous, and-courageous, and-prevailed | es: fueron-fuertes, fueron-más-fuertes, será-más-fuerte | fr: –être-stronger, et-aie-du-courage, et-être-courageous | de: sie-sind-stronger, sie-waren-auch-mächtig, sie-waren-stronger Gen 25:23; Deut 31:6; Deut 31:7; Deut 31:23; Josh 1:6

2. strengthen, make firm (16×) The Piel causative-positive sense: to strengthen, make firm, encourage another person or thing. Job reminds Eliphaz that his words once 'strengthened' the stumbling and made firm feeble knees (Job 4:4). Moses is told to 'encourage' Joshua for the task ahead (Deut 3:28). The temple workers 'repaired' — literally firmed up — the house of God (2 Chr 24:13). Spanish afirmar/fortalecer and Korean 강하게 하다 both distinguish this transitive encouragement from the intransitive courage of sense 1. POWER AND ABILITY

en: I-strengthen-you, I-would-strengthen-you, You-made-strong | es: Os-fortalecería, afirmabas, afirmad | fr: [אמצו], [אמצתיך], [ויאמץ] | de: [אאמצכם], [אמץ], [אמצו] Deut 3:28; 2Chr 11:17; 2Chr 24:13; Job 4:4; Job 16:5

3. harden, make obstinate (3×) The Piel with negative coloring: to harden, make obstinate. In Deut 2:30 God 'hardened' Sihon's spirit; in Deut 15:7 Israel is warned not to 'harden' the heart against a poor brother; in 2 Chr 36:13 Zedekiah 'stiffened' his neck against God. The same strengthening root now carries a sense of stubborn resistance. Spanish endurecer and German verhärten both mark this pejorative shift, while French endurcir likewise reserves a dedicated hardening verb, confirming that native speakers cross-linguistically perceive this as a distinct sense from positive encouragement. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: and-he-hardened, and-strengthened, you-shall-harden | es: endurecerás, y-fortaleció | fr: et-fortifia, et-être-fort, tu-devra-endurcir | de: du-sollverhaerten, und-staerkte, und-stark-sein Deut 2:30; Deut 15:7; 2Chr 36:13

4. (2×) The Hitpael reflexive sense: to strengthen oneself, show personal determination or resolve. Ruth 'was determined' to go with Naomi, and nothing could dissuade her (Ruth 1:18). Rehoboam 'exerted himself' to mount his chariot and flee (1 Kgs 12:18 / 2 Chr 10:18). The reflexive morphology shifts agency inward — this is self-directed strengthening rather than receiving encouragement from another. Spanish decidida and se apresuró capture the volitional, self-propelled quality, while Korean 결심하다 ('to resolve') confirms the deliberate inner-resolve reading. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-let-be-courageous, and-let-take-courage | es: y-animése, y-fortalezca | fr: et-être-fort | de: und-lass-nehmen-courage, und-lass-sein-courageous Ps 27:14; Ps 31:24

5. strengthen oneself, show resolve (2×) Hitpael reflexive: to strengthen oneself, show determination, or exert oneself with resolve. POWER AND ABILITY

en: she-was-determined, strengthened-himself | es: decidida, se-esforzó | fr: elle-était-determined, fortifia-lui-même | de: [מתאמצת], strengthened-sich-selbst Ruth 1:18; 1Kgs 12:18

6. (1×) POWER AND ABILITY

en: made-haste | es: se-apresuró | fr: être-fort | de: stark-sein 2Chr 10:18

אַמֻּץ H0554 Adj-mp (2×)

strong, vigorous (of horses)

This rare adjective describes horses of exceptional strength and vigor. It appears twice in Zechariah's vision of colored horses pulling chariots, emphasizing the powerful nature of these divine instruments. The multilingual evidence consistently points to strength and vigor, though some interpreters suggest a textual issue in one occurrence.

(2×) Describes powerful, vigorous horses in Zechariah's apocalyptic vision (Zech 6:3, 7). The Spanish 'vigorosos' and French 'fort' capture the sense of dynamic strength. BDB notes a possible textual variant suggesting 'red horses' in one verse, but the strength motif remains dominant across translations. POWER AND ABILITY

en: and-the-strong, strong | es: Y-los-vigorosos, vigorosos | fr: et-fort, fort | de: [אמצים], [והאמצים] Zech 6:3; Zech 6:7

אֹמֶץ H0555 N-ms (1×)

Strength, might, fortitude; noun describing inner strength or power that increases through righteousness

This noun denotes strength, might, or fortitude—particularly inner moral or physical strength. In Job 17:9, it appears in the statement that 'the clean of hands will increase in strength.' This affirms that moral purity leads to growing strength rather than weakness. Against the common assumption that wickedness brings power and righteousness leads to vulnerability, Job asserts that integrity actually strengthens a person. The righteous grow stronger through their trials.

(1×) Job 17:9 uses this term in a proverbial statement: 'the one who has clean hands will add strength.' Spanish 'fuerza' (strength/force) captures the basic sense. Job affirms a moral principle—righteousness produces increasing strength, not weakness. This counter-intuitive claim challenges the assumption that ethical compromise is necessary for power. Instead, integrity itself becomes a source of fortification, with the morally pure person growing stronger over time. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: in-strength | es: fuerza | fr: אמץ | de: [אמץ] Job 17:9

אַמְצָה H0556 N-fs (1×)

Strength, might; noun used in Zechariah 12:5 in a difficult phrase about finding strength in inhabitants of Jerusalem

This term denotes strength or might. It appears in Zechariah 12:5 in a notoriously difficult phrase where the leaders of Judah recognize strength in Jerusalem's inhabitants. The Hebrew is uncertain—some interpret it as 'the inhabitants of Jerusalem are my strength,' others suggest textual emendation. The context describes divine strengthening of Judah's leaders, so the sense involves finding courage or military capacity through recognition of Jerusalem's divinely-protected inhabitants.

(1×) Zechariah 12:5 contains this term in a textually and interpretively difficult verse. Spanish 'Fuerza' (strength) represents one reading, though the exact construction remains debated. The Septuagint and other versions show variation. The general sense is that Judah's leaders find strength or confidence in Jerusalem's inhabitants (who themselves are strengthened by God). This mutual encouragement forms part of the prophecy about Judah's deliverance and Jerusalem's protection. POWER AND MIRACLES

en: strength | es: Fuerza | fr: dire | de: [אמצה] Zech 12:5

אַמְצִי H0557 N-proper-ms (2×)

Amtsi (Levite and priestly ancestor)

Amtsi names two individuals in postexilic genealogies: a Levite serving in David's time and an ancestor in a priestly line. The name appears in Chronicles and Nehemiah, preserving family lineages important for establishing legitimate service in the second temple.

(2×) Personal name appearing in Levitical (1 Chr 6:46) and priestly (Neh 11:12) genealogies. The name is consistently transliterated across languages with minimal variation, reflecting its role as a proper noun marker of ancestral identity in postexilic Israel. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Amtsi | es: Amtsi, Zacarías | fr: [אמצי] | de: [אמצי] 1Chr 6:46; Neh 11:12

אֲמַצְיָהוּ H0558 Prep-b / N-proper-ms (40×)

Amaziah — theophoric name meaning 'Yah(weh) is mighty,' borne by a Judahite king and several others

Amatsyah (also Amatsyahu in the longer form) combines amats ('to be strong') with the theophoric element Yah, yielding 'Yah is mighty.' The name occurs 40 times, with the vast majority designating one individual: Amaziah king of Judah, son of Joash and father of Azariah/Uzziah, who reigned in the early eighth century BCE (2 Kgs 14:1-20; 2 Chr 25:1-28). His reign is marked by the execution of his father's assassins (2 Kgs 14:5-6), victory over Edom (2 Kgs 14:7), the ill-advised challenge to Israel's Jehoash that ended in defeat and Jerusalem's humiliation (2 Kgs 14:8-14), and eventual assassination in Lachish (2 Kgs 14:19). A second Amaziah is the priest of Bethel who confronted Amos and attempted to silence his prophecy (Amos 7:10, 12, 14) — a figure of institutional religion opposing prophetic truth.

Amaziah (proper name) (40×) The proper masculine name Amatsyah/Amatsyahu ('Yah is mighty'), identifying principally the king of Judah who reigned c. 796-767 BCE. His narrative dominates 2 Kings 14 and 2 Chronicles 25 — initial fidelity, Edomite victory, then hubris provoking war with Israel's Jehoash, followed by defeat and eventual assassination (2 Kgs 14:19; 2 Chr 25:27). The name also identifies the priest of Bethel who opposed Amos (Amos 7:10-14), a Simeonite chief (1 Chr 4:34), and a Levite (1 Chr 6:30). The two orthographic forms — shorter Amatsyah in Kings and longer Amatsyahu in Chronicles — reflect standard Judahite theophoric variation. Translations uniformly transliterate: Spanish 'Amasias,' German 'Amazja.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Amatsyahu | es: Amasías, Amatsyahu | fr: Amatsia | de: Amatsyahu, Amazja 2Kgs 12:21; 2Kgs 13:12; 2Kgs 14:1; 2Kgs 14:8; 2Kgs 14:9

אָמַר H0559 V-Hifil-Perf-3ms / 2ms (5318×)

To say, speak, tell; to think inwardly; to declare or proclaim formally

The verb אָמַר is the primary word for speech in the Hebrew Bible, introducing direct discourse thousands of times with the formulaic וַיֹּאמֶר ('and he said'). Beyond ordinary speech, it can turn inward to describe thought or private deliberation — 'I said in my heart' — a usage attested from Genesis through the Psalms. In its rarest Hifil and emphatic forms, it rises to formal declaration or public proclamation, as when Israel 'declared' the LORD to be their God (Deut 26:17).

1. say, speak, tell (5297×) The Qal basic sense covering verbal communication in all its forms: saying, speaking, telling, commanding, answering, and introducing both direct and indirect speech. With over 5,290 occurrences, it is the default narrative speech verb from Gen 1:3 ('and God said') onward. Every target language maps it to its most common speech verb — 'dijo,' 'dit,' 'sprach' — with no semantic specialization required. SAYING AND COMMANDING

en: And-said, and-he-said, and-said | es: Y-dijo, y-dijo | fr: Et-dit, et-dit, et-elle-dit | de: und-er-sprach, und-sprach Gen 1:3; Gen 1:29; Gen 3:10; Gen 4:1; Gen 6:3

2. say to oneself, think (17×) An internalized use of אמר where the 'saying' is directed to oneself rather than another person — thinking, resolving, or deliberating silently. Often marked by the phrase בְּלִבִּי ('in my heart') or by context making external speech implausible. Examples include Gen 24:14 where Abraham's servant devises a test internally, and 1 Sam 28:8 where Saul reasons within himself. The multilingual glosses consistently show first-person forms ('dije,' 'J'ai dit,' 'ich sprach') without an addressee. SAYING AND COMMANDING

en: I-said, I-say | es: Dije, digo:, dije | fr: J'ai-dit:, Je-dire, dire | de: ich-sage, ich-sprach, sprach Gen 24:14; 1Sam 16:3; 1Sam 20:21; 1Sam 20:22; 1Sam 28:8

3. declare, proclaim (4×) The Hifil stem and emphatic Qal usage where אמר means to declare publicly, proclaim, or formally announce — a speech act carrying authority or solemnity beyond ordinary conversation. Deut 26:17 uses the Hifil: Israel 'declared' (הֶאֱמַרְתָּ) the LORD to be their God. Ps 40:10 and 45:1 similarly feature public proclamation of God's righteousness and the psalmist's composition. Multilingual evidence shows vocabulary of declaration ('has declarado,' 'I have declared') rather than simple saying. SAYING AND COMMANDING

en: I-have-declared, I-recite, I-said | es: digo, dije, has-declarado | fr: dire, j'ai-dit, tu-declared | de: du-declared, sprach Deut 26:17; Ps 31:14; Ps 40:10; Ps 45:1

אֲמַר H0560 V-Qal-Imp-mp (71×)

To say, speak, tell; to command or order; passively, to be said or called (Aramaic).

Amar is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew 'amar — the basic verb of speech that pervades the court narratives of Daniel and Ezra. It introduces royal decrees, prophetic interpretations, and the dramatic dialogues between kings and wise men. In its most common use it simply means 'to say' or 'to tell,' often in the formulaic pair 'answered and said' (Dan 2:5, 7). When kings issue orders — Nebuchadnezzar commanding his astrologers (Dan 2:12) or summoning Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (Dan 3:13) — the same verb takes on the force of a command. Occasionally it appears in impersonal or passive constructions meaning 'it is said' or 'it was proclaimed' (Dan 3:4; 4:31).

1. to say, speak, tell (60×) The basic, overwhelmingly dominant sense of verbal communication — to say, speak, tell, or declare. This covers ordinary speech, responses in dialogue ('answered and said,' Dan 2:7), reporting information (Ezra 5:3-4, 9), and prophetic interpretation (Dan 2:25-26). Spanish 'dijo/decía,' French 'dit,' and German 'sprach' all render this straightforward communicative act. The verb appears in every conjugation and person across the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. SAYING AND COMMANDING

en: and-he-said, and-said, and-saying | es: y-decía, y-dijo, y-les-dijo | fr: et-il-dit, et-tu-as-dit | de: und-sprach, und-sprechen Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:4; Ezra 5:9; Dan 2:4; Dan 2:5

2. to command, order (9×) The authoritative sense of commanding, ordering, or issuing a royal directive. When Nebuchadnezzar 'amar' that the astrologers be destroyed (Dan 2:12), or that the furnace be heated seven times hotter (Dan 3:19), or when Belshazzar 'amar' to bring the golden vessels (Dan 5:2), the context elevates simple speech into sovereign command. Spanish 'ordenó' and the translation pattern 'he commanded' mark this escalation from saying to decreeing. COMMANDING AND ORDERING

en: and-commanded, he-commanded, he-said | es: dijeron, dijo, ordenó | fr: a-dit, et-il-dit, ils-ont-dit | de: sprach, sprechen, und-sprach Dan 2:46; Dan 3:13; Dan 3:20; Dan 4:26; Dan 5:2

3. to be said, be called (2×) The passive or impersonal usage where the verb means 'to be said,' 'to be proclaimed,' or 'to be called.' In Dan 3:4 a herald proclaims 'to you it is said' (or 'it is commanded'), and Dan 4:31 uses a similar impersonal construction for a voice from heaven. This sense removes the personal subject and presents speech as an authoritative announcement — something declared to all rather than spoken by a named individual. SAYING AND COMMANDING

en: it-is-said | es: se-dice, se-os-dice | fr: dire | de: sprechen Dan 3:4; Dan 4:31

אֵמֶר H0561 Prep-l / N-mpc (49×)

Word, saying, utterance; poetic term for spoken words, divine speech, or an authoritative decree.

A poetic synonym for 'word' or 'saying,' found almost exclusively in elevated Hebrew — Job, Psalms, Proverbs, and a few prophetic passages. Unlike the common dabar, this term (emer/omer) carries a flavor of crafted, weighty speech. It can describe human words (Job 6:26; 32:12, 14), the sayings of wisdom teachers (Prov 2:1; 4:10, 20), or the very utterances of God (Num 24:4, 16; Ps 107:11). German consistently renders 'Wort/Worte' and Spanish 'palabras/dichos,' while the singular authoritative sense in Job 20:29 stands apart as 'decree' — the portion God has appointed for the wicked.

1. words, sayings, utterances (48×) Words, sayings, utterances — spoken content in poetic or elevated discourse, often in the plural. Covers the speech of humans (Job 6:26; 32:12–14), the teachings of sages (Prov 2:1; 4:10, 20; 7:1), the oracles of Balaam (Num 24:4, 16), and the words of God (Ps 107:11; Josh 24:27). French 'paroles' and Spanish 'palabras/dichos' confirm the general speech sense across 48 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: are-words-of, my-sayings, my-words | es: dichos-de, las-palabras-de, las-palabras-de- | fr: mon-parole-moi, parole, paroles-de | de: Wort, Worte-von, der-Worte-von- Gen 49:21; Num 24:4; Num 24:16; Deut 32:1; Josh 24:27

2. word, decree, command (1×) Authoritative decree or appointed word — a singular, binding pronouncement emphasizing divine determination rather than conversational speech. In Job 20:29, Zophar declares this is 'the portion of a wicked man from God, the heritage decreed for him.' Spanish renders 'su palabra' (his word/decree) and French 'son parole,' both marking the singular, weighty character that sets this apart from ordinary 'sayings.' SAYING AND COMMANDING

en: his-decreed | es: su-palabra | fr: son-parole-lui | de: sie-sprachen Job 20:29

אִמֶּר H0562 N-ms (6×)

Word, speech, utterance; a poetic synonym of דָּבָר used of human discourse and divine promises.

A masculine noun used almost exclusively in poetry, serving as an elevated synonym for דָּבָר (word). In the Psalms it describes the 'speech' that day pours forth to day (Ps 19:2-3) and God's steadfast promise (Ps 77:8). Job uses it for human arguments and God's authoritative decrees (Job 22:28). Proverbs pairs it with 'commandment' to urge attentive reception of wise teaching (Prov 2:1; 7:1). The word carries a weight of deliberation — these are not casual remarks but weighty pronouncements. Its restriction to poetic and elevated prose (including Josh 24:27) marks it as a term of literary dignity.

word, speech, utterance (6×) A poetic masculine noun meaning 'word, speech, utterance,' functioning as an elevated synonym of דָּבָר. Found predominantly in Wisdom and poetic literature: of the wordless 'speech' of creation declaring God's glory (Ps 19:2-3), of God's steadfast promise questioned in lament (Ps 77:8), of a righteous person's decrees being established (Job 22:28), and of the 'word' God gave to the great company of women who proclaimed good news (Ps 68:11). Spanish 'palabra,' English 'word/promise,' and German 'Wort/Verheissung' all reflect the single semantic core of deliberate, weighty utterance — whether human or divine. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-promise, a-word, is-a-word | es: palabra | fr: a-dit, dire, אומר | de: [אומר], der-Wort, sein-Verheissung Job 22:28; Ps 19:2; Ps 19:3; Ps 68:11; Ps 77:8

אַמַּר H0563 Conj-w / N-mp (3×)

lambs (Aramaic: young sheep for sacrifice)

Young sheep designated for sacrificial offerings in the restored temple, mentioned in Ezra's Aramaic sections. These lambs served as burnt offerings and sin offerings during the rededication of the temple and ongoing worship. The Persian authorities funded their provision, enabling the returned exiles to maintain proper sacrificial worship. The term represents continuity with ancient Israelite practice even as the language shifted to Aramaic and political authority rested with foreign kings.

(3×) Ezra 6:9 instructs that lambs be provided daily for burnt offerings to the God of heaven, funded by the royal treasury. Ezra 6:17 describes the dedication ceremony where lambs were offered as sin offerings for all twelve tribes. Ezra 7:17 directs that royal funds be used to purchase lambs for temple sacrifices. The repetition across different decrees and contexts underscores the centrality of lamb sacrifice in reconstituted worship, with the Aramaic term maintaining theological continuity despite linguistic and political changes from the pre-exilic period. LAMBS AND SHEEP

en: and-lambs, lambs | es: corderos, y-corderos | fr: [אמרין], [ואמרין] | de: [אמרין], [ואמרין] Ezra 6:9; Ezra 6:17; Ezra 7:17

אִמֵּר H0564 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (10×)

Immer — priestly family name; a priestly course and its descendants from the temple through the post-exilic period

The name אִמֵּר (Immer) designates one of the twenty-four priestly courses organized under David (1 Chr 24:14) and the family descended from it. Members of the house of Immer appear throughout Israel's cultic history: serving in the pre-exilic temple (1 Chr 9:12; Jer 20:1, where Pashhur son of Immer is 'chief officer in the house of the LORD'), returning from Babylonian exile in significant numbers (Ezra 2:37; Neh 7:40 — over a thousand men), and dealing with the mixed-marriage crisis (Ezra 10:20). A locality called Immer is also mentioned among places from which returning exiles could not verify their Israelite ancestry (Ezra 2:59; Neh 7:61).

Immer (proper name) (10×) A priestly family name tracing to the sixteenth of David's twenty-four priestly courses (1 Chr 24:14). Pashhur son of Immer served as chief temple officer and clashed with Jeremiah (Jer 20:1). The family returned from exile in large numbers — 1,052 men (Ezra 2:37; Neh 7:40) — and some were implicated in the foreign-wives controversy (Ezra 10:20). The name also appears as a place of uncertain location from which exiles returned without genealogical proof (Ezra 2:59; Neh 7:61). Spanish 'Imer' and English 'Immer' both transliterate the Hebrew. COMMANDING AND ORDERING en: Immer, and-Immer, for-Immer | es: Imer, e-Imer, para-Imer | fr: Immer, [אמר], et-Immer | de: sprach, und-sagte, und-sprach 1Chr 9:12; 1Chr 24:14; Ezra 2:37; Ezra 2:59; Ezra 10:20

אִמְרָה H0565a N-fsc / 2fs (36×)

Utterance, word, or saying – especially God's word or promise in poetry; also general or human speech in poetic diction.

The Hebrew noun imrah is the poetic sibling of the far more common dabar ('word'). Nearly confined to verse, it appears 36 times – most strikingly in Psalm 119, where 'Your word' (imratekha) echoes like a refrain across 16 verses, naming God's utterance as the object of love, trust, hope, and obedience. While dabar is the prose workhorse, imrah is reserved for heightened, lyrical speech: Lamech's boast 'hear my speech' (Gen 4:23), Moses' song likening his teaching to rain (Deut 32:2), and the famous declaration 'the words of the LORD are pure words, like silver refined seven times' (Ps 12:6). French parole and German Wort render both imrah and dabar identically, but Spanish distinguishes slightly with dicho ('saying, utterance') alongside the more neutral palabra, hinting at the poetic register.

The word clusters into three natural senses: divine promise, general-construct usage linking it to a source, and specifically human discourse.

1. divine word or promise (22×) God's word, utterance, or promise, addressed directly in prayer or praise as the object of devotion and trust. This dominant sense (22 occurrences) is overwhelmingly concentrated in Psalm 119, where the psalmist treasures 'Your word' in his heart (119:11), asks God to establish his promise (119:38), hopes in God's word (119:41, 50, 58, 76, 82, 116, 140, 148, 158, 162, 170, 172), and confesses 'every word of God proves true' (Prov 30:5; cf. 2 Sam 22:31; Ps 18:30). Spanish dicho de ti, French parole, and German dein Wort all render the possessive devotional address. Deuteronomy 33:9 extends this to covenant faithfulness: the Levites 'kept Your word.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Your-word, according-to-Your-word, by-Your-word | es: dicho-de-ti, dichos-de-ti!, en-dicho-de-ti | fr: comme-parole, dans-parole, parole | de: auf-dein-Wort, bei-dein-Wort, dein-Wort Deut 33:9; Ps 119:11; Ps 119:38; Ps 119:41; Ps 119:50

2. word or utterance (general) (7×) A word or utterance in general, used in construct ('the word of,' 'the saying of') without specifying whether the source is divine or human, and often functioning as a near-synonym of dabar in poetic parallelism. Seven occurrences carry this bridging sense: 'the word of the LORD is tested' (2 Sam 22:31; Ps 18:30), 'the words of the LORD are pure words' (Ps 12:6), and 'his word ran swiftly' (Ps 147:15, parallel to dabar). Spanish palabra de, French parole de, and German Wort von render the construct chain, while the parallelism with dabar confirms their near-synonymy in this register. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: are-words, the-saying-of, the-word-of- | es: Palabras-de, dicho-de, palabra-de | fr: [אמרת], parole, parole-de | de: Wort-von, [אמרת], der-Wort-von- 2Sam 22:31; Ps 12:6; Ps 18:30; Ps 105:19

3. speech or saying (human) (7×) Human speech or saying – a person's own words viewed as discourse, declaration, or teaching. Seven occurrences mark this specifically human referent: Lamech's defiant 'hear my speech' (Gen 4:23), Moses' comparison of his teaching to rain and dew (Deut 32:2), and the psalmist's plea 'give ear to my words' (Ps 17:6). Isaiah uses it for eerily subdued speech: 'your voice shall come from the ground like a ghost's, and your speech shall whisper from the dust' (Isa 29:4). Spanish mi palabra, French mon dit, and German mein Worte distinguish the human possessive from the divine 'Your word' of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: my-saying, my-speech, my-words | es: mi-dicho, mi-palabra, tu-palabra | fr: [אמרתי], [אמרתך], disant-mon | de: [אמרתך], ich-sprach, mein-Worte Gen 4:23; Deut 32:2; Ps 17:6; Isa 28:23; Isa 29:4

אִמְרָה H0565b N-fsc / 3ms (1×)
His word, His utterance; construct noun with pronominal suffix referring to God's declared word or command
This term refers to God's word, utterance, or spoken decree. In Lamentations 2:17, it appears in the phrase 'His word which He commanded'—referring to the prophetic warnings and covenant curses God had declared long beforehand. The verse asserts that the destruction of Jerusalem was not arbitrary but the fulfillment of God's explicitly stated word. The term emphasizes the spoken, declared nature of God's purposes, now being carried out in judgment.

(1×) Lamentations 2:17 uses this construct form ('His word') to reference the prophetic warnings and covenant curses God had spoken through Moses and the prophets. The destruction of Jerusalem fulfills 'His word which He commanded of old.' This theological interpretation of the catastrophe sees it not as random disaster but as the execution of long-declared divine judgment. The term stresses the verbal, declarative nature of God's purposes, now being implemented in history. SPEAKING AND TALKING en: His-word | es: su-palabra | fr: [אמרתו] | de: [אמרתו] Lam 2:17

אִמְרִי H0566 N-proper-ms (2×)
Imri (Judahite name, possibly meaning 'eloquent') Imri identifies two men in postexilic records: a Judahite in Chronicles and a builder involved in Nehemiah's wall reconstruction. BDB suggests the name may derive from roots meaning 'tall' or 'eloquent,' hinting at characteristics valued in ancient naming practices.

(2×) Personal name borne by a man of Judah (1 Chr 9:4) and a participant in Jerusalem's wall restoration (Neh 3:2). Cross-linguistic transliterations remain stable, preserving the Hebrew phonetic form as a marker of individual identity in community records. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Imri | es: Imri | fr: [אמרי] | de: [אמרי] 1Chr 9:4; Neh 3:2

אֱמֹרִי H0567 Art / N-proper-ms (87×)
Amorite — a Canaanite people group inhabiting both sides of the Jordan before Israel's conquest
The Amorites (אֱמֹרִי) appear as one of the most prominent pre-Israelite peoples in Scripture, listed repeatedly among the nations of Canaan. Nearly always used with the article, the term may derive from a root meaning 'mountain-dweller,' fitting their association with the hill country (Num 13:29; Deut 1:7). They controlled significant territory both east and west of the Jordan, including the kingdoms of Sihon and Og. The name corresponds to Akkadian Amurru and Egyptian ʾAmara, confirming their wide regional importance. Multilingual glosses consistently render this as a proper gentilic: Spanish el-amorreo, French le-Amorite, German der-Amoriter.

Amorite (people group) (87×) A gentilic proper noun designating the Amorites, a major Canaanite people group inhabiting the hill country on both sides of the Jordan. Called a 'son of Canaan' in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:16), they are most prominent in the conquest narratives as rulers of Transjordan (Num 21:13; Deut 3:9). The term's near-universal use with the article marks it as a collective ethnic designation rather than an individual name. NATIONS AND PEOPLES en: the-Amorite | es: el-amorreo | fr: le-Amorite | de: der-Amoriter Exod 3:8; Exod 3:17; Exod 13:5; Num 13:29; Num 21:13

אֲמַרְיָהוּ H0568 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (16×)
Amariah — 'YHWH has spoken/promised,' a proper name borne by priests, Levites, and laypeople
A theophoric proper name (אֲמַרְיָה / אֲמַרְיָהוּ) combining the root 'amar' ('to say, promise') with the divine name, yielding 'YHWH has spoken' or 'YHWH has promised.' It belongs to at least eight distinct individuals spanning several centuries. The most notable are the chief priest under Jehoshaphat who oversaw religious affairs (2 Chr 19:11) and the ancestor of Zephaniah the prophet through the lineage of Hezekiah (Zeph 1:1). Several Levites and priests of this name appear in the post-exilic community under Ezra and Nehemiah (Ezra 10:42; Neh 10:3; 12:2, 13). Spanish 'Amarías' and French 'Amaria' faithfully transliterate the name.

Amaryah (proper name) (16×) The proper name Amariah/Amaryahu (אֲמַרְיָה/אֲמַרְיָהוּ, 'YHWH has promised'), designating multiple OT figures: (1) a Levite in the high-priestly genealogy (1 Chr 6:7, 11, 52; Ezra 7:3); (2) a Kohathite Levite in David's time (1 Chr 23:19; 24:23); (3) the chief priest under King Jehoshaphat (2 Chr 19:11); (4) a Levite under Hezekiah (2 Chr 31:15); (5) an ancestor of the prophet Zephaniah (Zeph 1:1); (6-8) various post-exilic priests and laypeople (Ezra 10:42; Neh 10:3; 11:4; 12:2, 13). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Amariah, Amaryah, Amaryahu | es: Amariahu, Amarias, Amarya | fr: Amaria, et-Amaria | de: Amarja, und-Amarja 1Chr 6:7; 1Chr 6:11; 1Chr 6:52

אַמְרָפֶל H0569 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)
Amraphel (king of Shinar, possibly Hammurabi)
Amraphel ruled Shinar in Abraham's era, participating in the coalition that captured Lot. Scholars have proposed identifying him with the famous Hammurabi of Babylon (c. 2100 BC), though this remains debated. The name appears in the dramatic account of Abraham's rescue mission.

(2×) Royal name appearing in Genesis 14:1, 9 as one of four eastern kings who invaded the Jordan valley. The possible identification with Hammurabi, if correct, would place these events within one of ancient Mesopotamia's most significant reigns. Translations consistently preserve the name with minor phonetic variations. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Amraphel, and-Amraphel | es: Amrafel, y-Amrafel | fr: Amraphel, et-Amraphel | de: Amrafels, und-Amrafel Gen 14:1; Gen 14:9

אֶמֶשׁ H0570 N-msc (5×)

Yesterday, last night; by extension, the recent past.

A temporal adverb meaning 'yesterday' or more specifically 'last night,' reflecting an etymological connection to evening. In Genesis, Lot's daughters reference 'last night' (19:34), and Laban confronts Jacob about events of 'yesterday' (31:29, 42). In 2 Kings 9:26, it broadens to mean 'recently.' The German 'gestern Nacht' and Spanish 'anoche' both preserve the nocturnal nuance, while French 'hier' and Spanish 'ayer' lean toward the general 'yesterday' sense.

(5×) A temporal adverb meaning 'yesterday' or 'last night,' with occasional extension to the recent past. The root may relate to the Semitic word for 'evening' (cf. Arabic masa', Assyrian mushu 'night'), explaining why it often implies the previous night specifically. Genesis 19:34 and 31:29, 42 use it for events of the prior evening, while 2 Kings 9:26 stretches it to mean 'recently.' Job 30:3 is textually uncertain but may carry a sense of 'darkness' or 'gloom,' consistent with the nocturnal etymology. YESTERDAY PREVIOUSLY

en: last-night, yesterday | es: anoche, ayer | fr: dernier-nuit, hier, אמש | de: [אמש], gestern, gestern-Nacht Gen 19:34; Gen 31:29; Gen 31:42; 2Kgs 9:26; Job 30:3

אֱמֶת H0571 N-fs (127×)

Firmness, faithfulness, truth; what is reliable, trustworthy, and real; often paired with chesed as a covenant attribute of God.

Emet is one of the Hebrew Bible's foundational terms for what is real, reliable, and enduring. Contracted from the root aman ('to be firm, support'), it carries a solidity that the English word 'truth' only partly captures. When paired with chesed in the famous hendiadys chesed we'emet (Gen 24:27; Exod 34:6), it denotes not abstract propositional truth but covenant reliability — the steadfast trustworthiness of a God who keeps promises. Yet emet also covers straightforward factual accuracy ('Is this true?') and characterizes persons as 'men of truth' (Exod 18:21). Spanish verdad, German Wahrheit, and French verite handle the propositional pole well, but none of them can stretch to cover the relational faithfulness that makes emet so theologically rich.

1. truth, verity (98×) Truth as factual reality, correctness, or verity — the dominant sense at 98 occurrences. This covers assertions of objective accuracy ('Is it true?'), truthful speech ('words of truth'), and characterizations of things as genuine or real. In Gen 24:49 and 47:29, the request to deal 'in truth' means honestly and without deception. In Exod 34:6, God is described as 'abounding in truth,' where truth denotes the reliability of his word and character. Spanish verdad, German Wahrheit, and French verite all converge here. The phrase be'emet ('in truth') functions almost adverbially to mean 'truly, indeed.' TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS en: are-true, are-truth, is-truth | es: es-verdad, la-verdad, verdad | fr: le-vérité, vérité | de: Wahrheit, der-Wahrheit Gen 24:49; Gen 47:29; Exod 34:6; Josh 2:14; Judg 9:15

2. faithfulness, reliability (27×) Faithfulness, reliability, and trustworthiness as a relational quality — 27 occurrences, often with possessive suffixes ('your faithfulness,' 'his truth') pointing to a personal attribute rather than abstract fact. In Gen 24:27 Abraham's servant praises God who 'has not forsaken his chesed and his emet'; in Gen 32:10 Jacob confesses unworthiness of God's chasdim and emet. The sense here is loyalty-in-relationship: God's emet is his dependable fidelity to promises. German Treue ('fidelity') and Arabic al-haqq as a divine attribute both shade toward this relational pole. The pairing with chesed in construct or hendiadys is the strongest diagnostic: where chesed appears alongside, emet almost always carries this faithfulness sense. TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS

en: Your-faithfulness, and-Your-truth, and-his-truth | es: en-tu-verdad, en-verdad, en-verdad-de-ti | fr: dans-ta-vérité, de-vérité, et-son-vérité | de: Wahrheit, dein-Wahrheit, in-dein-Wahrheit Gen 24:27; Gen 32:10; Josh 2:12; Josh 24:14; 2Chr 32:1

3. true, genuine (2×) Adjectival or qualifying use: true, genuine, authentic — appearing just twice (2 Chr 31:20; Dan 10:1). In 2 Chr 31:20, Hezekiah does what is 'good and right and true'; in Dan 10:1 the revelation is described as emet — 'true, authentic.' Here emet functions attributively rather than as a standalone noun, modifying a noun or standing in predicate position to certify genuineness. Spanish verdadero and German wahr (as opposed to Wahrheit) capture this adjectival shift. Though rare, it represents a real grammatical and semantic boundary from the nominal senses. TRUTH AND FAITHFULNESS

en: and-the-faithful, and-true | es: y-lo-verdadero, y-verdad | fr: [ואמת], et-vérité | de: und-Wahrheit 2Chr 31:20; Dan 10:1

אַמְתַּחַת H0572 Prep-b / N-fpc / 2mp (15×)

sack, grain bag — a large bag for carrying provisions, exclusively in the Joseph narrative

Amtachat is one of the most narratively specialized nouns in the Hebrew Bible, appearing exclusively in Genesis 42-44 within the Joseph story. It designates the large sacks in which Joseph's brothers carried grain from Egypt — the very sacks into which the steward planted silver and the divination cup. The recurring phrase befi amtachat ('in the mouth of the sack,' Gen 42:27; 43:12, 21; 44:1-2, 8) drives the narrative suspense: each opening deepens the brothers' terror. Distinct from the more common saq, it suggests a specialized travel bag. Spanish 'costal,' French 'sac,' and German 'Sack' render the utilitarian sense.

sack, grain bag (15×) A large bag for transporting grain, attested exclusively in the Joseph cycle (Gen 42-44). Distinguished from the common Hebrew saq, it appears in singular construct (Gen 44:2, 12) and plural with suffixes (Gen 43:18, 21-22). The phrase befi amtachat ('in the mouth of the sack') recurs as a narrative device: brothers discover hidden silver (Gen 42:27-28) then the planted cup (Gen 44:12). SACK GRAIN BAG

en: his-sack, in-my-sack, in-our-sacks | es: costal-de, costal-suyo, costales-de | fr: dans-mon-sack, dans-notre-sacks, dans-sack-de | de: des-Sackes, die-Säcke, eurer-Säcke Gen 42:27; Gen 42:28; Gen 43:12; Gen 43:18; Gen 43:21

אֲמִתַּי H0573 N-proper-ms (2×)

Amittai (father of Jonah, name meaning 'true/faithful')

Amittai is remembered exclusively as the prophet Jonah's father. The name itself derives from 'emet' (truth), carrying the adjectival sense 'true' or 'faithful'—an ironic detail given Jonah's initial flight from divine commission.

(2×) Patronymic identifier appearing in 2 Kings 14:25 and Jonah 1:1, establishing Jonah's genealogical credentials. The name's etymology from 'truth' adds depth to the prophet's identity, though the father himself remains otherwise unknown. All major translations preserve the name with consistent transliteration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Amittai | es: Amitai | fr: Amittai, Amittaï | de: Amittai 2Kgs 14:25; Jonah 1:1

אֵימְתָן H0574 Conj-w / Adj-fs (1×)

And dreadful, and terrible; Aramaic adjective describing something inspiring fear or awe, used of the fourth beast in Daniel

This Aramaic adjective means dreadful, terrible, or awe-inspiring. In Daniel 7:7, it describes the fourth beast in Daniel's vision as 'terrifying and dreadful and exceedingly strong.' The adjective emphasizes the fear-inspiring nature of this beast, which represents a future empire of unprecedented brutality and power. The accumulation of terms (terrifying, dreadful, strong, different) creates an image of something uniquely fearsome in the succession of kingdoms.

(1×) Daniel 7:7 applies this adjective to the fourth beast in the vision of successive empires. Spanish 'espantosa' (frightening) and French 'terrible' convey the sense of inspiring terror or dread. The beast is characterized by multiple fear-inducing qualities—it's not just strong but dreadful, with great iron teeth. This apocalyptic imagery presents a future power that surpasses previous kingdoms in its capacity to inspire fear and inflict destruction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-dreadful | es: y-espantosa | fr: et-terrible | de: [ואימתני] Dan 7:7

אָן H0575 Conj-w / Adv (42×)

Where? Whither? How long? An interrogative adverb of place and (with ᶜad) of time, also used indefinitely as 'anywhere.'

This small but versatile interrogative adverb — contracted from ʾayin — asks 'where?' or 'whither?' in direct questions, as when the angel addresses fleeing Hagar: 'Where have you come from and where are you going?' (Gen 16:8). Paired with ᶜad, it shifts from space to time, becoming the anguished 'how long?' of lament (Exod 16:28; Num 14:11; Ps 13:2). In the doubled phrase ʾānāh wāʾānāh, it becomes indefinite — 'hither and thither, anywhere' — as in Solomon's restriction on Shimei (1 Kgs 2:36, 42). Spanish adónde and cuándo neatly mirror the spatial and temporal senses.

1. where, whither (interrogative) (21×) Interrogative adverb of place meaning 'where?' or 'whither?' — used in direct questions about location or direction of movement. The angel's question to Hagar in Gen 16:8 ('Where have you come from and where are you going?') exemplifies this core spatial use. Spanish adónde, French où, and German wo all translate the directional question straightforwardly. Also appears in indirect questions (Josh 2:5; Neh 2:16). LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: Where, and-where, where | es: A-dónde, a-dónde, adónde | fr: Où, [אנה], [ואנה] | de: [אנה], [ואנה], und-wo Gen 16:8; Gen 32:17; Gen 37:30; Deut 1:28; Josh 2:5

2. how long (temporal interrogative) (14×) Temporal interrogative meaning 'how long?' or 'until when?', formed with the preposition ᶜad (ᶜad-ʾānāh). This usage carries a tone of exasperation or lament: God himself asks 'how long will this people despise me?' (Num 14:11), and the psalmist cries 'how long, O LORD?' (Ps 13:2). Spanish cuándo and German wann capture the temporal shift. Found especially in complaint and prophetic rebuke passages (Exod 16:28; Hab 1:2; Job 18:2, 19:2). TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS

en: when | es: cuándo, ¿cuándo? | fr: [אנה], je, où | de: [אנה], als, wann Exod 16:28; Num 14:11; Josh 18:3; Job 8:2

3. anywhere, hither and thither (indefinite) (6×) Indefinite locative adverb meaning 'anywhere' or 'hither and thither,' occurring in the doubled phrase ʾāneh wāʾānāh. Solomon tells Shimei not to go 'anywhere' from Jerusalem (1 Kgs 2:36, 42), and Gehazi denies having gone 'anywhere' (2 Kgs 5:25). Translations across languages borrow the English 'anywhere' directly, underscoring how this idiomatic doubling creates an indefinite from an interrogative. LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: anywhere, or-anywhere | es: a-ningún-lado, adonde, ni-a-ningún-lado | fr: anywhere, ou-anywhere | de: anywhere, oder-anywhere 1Kgs 2:36; 1Kgs 2:42; 2Kgs 5:25

4. [ketiv variant] (1×) A ketiv (written) textual variant at 2 Kgs 5:25, where the consonantal text reads מאן (mēʾān, 'from where?') with the prepositional מ prefixed to ʾān. The qere (read) tradition normalizes this differently. Glosses across languages simply mark it as '[ketiv],' reflecting its status as a scribal or orthographic curiosity rather than a distinct semantic sense. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED

en: [ketiv] | es: (kethiv) | fr: [ketiv] | de: [ketiv] 2Kgs 5:25

אֲנָא H0576a Pro-1cs (3×)

I (Aramaic first-person pronoun)

The Aramaic first-person pronoun 'I,' appearing in Daniel and Ezra. In these texts, Persian authorities and Daniel himself use this pronoun in official decrees and personal accounts. The Aramaic sections of Scripture preserve the actual administrative language of the Persian period, when Aramaic served as the lingua franca across the empire. This simple pronoun carries the weight of personal authority and royal decree, marking statements that determine the fate of peoples and the restoration of Jerusalem.

(3×) Ezra 6:12 has King Darius declare, 'I Darius have issued a decree,' stamping his personal authority on the command to support temple rebuilding. Ezra 7:21 records Artaxerxes' decree: 'I make a decree'—royal first-person speech that allocated resources for Jerusalem's worship. Daniel 2:8 uses it when the king says, 'I know with certainty that you are trying to gain time.' The pronoun anchors royal and prophetic authority, making clear who takes responsibility for the words that follow. FIRST PERSON PRONOUNS

en: I | es: yo | fr: [אנה], je | de: [אנה], ich Ezra 6:12; Ezra 7:21; Dan 2:8

אֲנָה H0576b Conj-w / Pro-1cs (13×)

I (Aramaic) — first person singular independent pronoun in Biblical Aramaic

Anah is the Aramaic first person singular pronoun, the equivalent of Hebrew ani/anokhi. Its 13 occurrences are confined to the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra, where it serves as the emphatic subject pronoun in royal and visionary discourse. Nebuchadnezzar uses it repeatedly in his decrees and dream narratives ('I, Nebuchadnezzar,' Dan 4:1, 15, 34), and Daniel employs it in recounting his visions ('I, Daniel,' Dan 7:15, 28). The pronoun also appears in Artaxerxes' decree in Ezra 7:21. Spanish 'yo,' French 'je,' German 'ich' — every translation renders it as a simple first person pronoun, confirming its purely grammatical function.

and (13×) The Aramaic first person singular independent pronoun, functioning as emphatic subject or as reinforcement of a pronominal suffix. Used in royal self-identification ('I, Nebuchadnezzar,' Dan 4:1, 15, 34), prophetic self-reference ('I was watching,' Dan 4:7; 'I, Daniel,' Dan 7:15, 28), and official decrees ('I make a decree,' Ezra 7:21). Cognate with Hebrew ani and Syriac ena. All 13 occurrences in Daniel and Ezra express the same pronominal function; conjunctive forms (wa-anah, 'and I') represent syntactic variation, not a separate sense. FIRST PERSON PRONOUNS

en: I, and-I | es: Y-yo, y-yo, yo | fr: et-je, je | de: ich, und-ich Dan 2:23; Dan 2:30; Dan 3:25; Dan 4:4; Dan 4:7

אנב H0577 Interjection (13×)

A particle of entreaty: 'please, I pray,' used when making earnest petitions or supplications.

An interjection of earnest supplication found almost exclusively in prayers and impassioned pleas. In Genesis 50:17 Joseph's brothers beg forgiveness; in Exodus 32:31 Moses intercedes after the golden calf; in 2 Kings 20:3 Hezekiah pleads for his life; and in Nehemiah 1:5, 11 the cupbearer opens his prayer to God. Spanish renders it 'por favor' or 'oh,' while French uses 'de grâce'—each capturing the note of urgent, respectful appeal. The word signals that the speaker recognizes the weight of what is being asked.

please (13×) A discourse particle expressing earnest entreaty or supplication, typically preceding a request directed to God or to a person of authority. It appears in highly charged moments—Moses confessing Israel's sin (Exod 32:31), Hezekiah on his deathbed (2 Kgs 20:3), Nehemiah opening his prayer (Neh 1:5, 11). Spanish 'por favor' and French 'de grâce' both reflect the deferential urgency this particle conveys. ENTREATY PARTICLES

en: please | es: Por-favor, oh, por-favor | fr: [אנא], [אנה], de-grâce | de: [אנא], [אנה], ach Gen 50:17; Exod 32:31; 2Kgs 20:3; Neh 1:5; Neh 1:11

אֲנִיָּה H0578 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (2×)

mourn, lament

This verbal form describes communal mourning and lamentation. It appears in prophetic texts announcing judgment, where cities and populations will grieve over coming devastation. The word often pairs with related mourning terms, intensifying the emotional weight of prophetic warnings.

(2×) Expresses future mourning in Isaiah's oracles (Isa 3:26, 19:8). The contexts envision Jerusalem's gates mourning after judgment and Egyptian fishermen lamenting economic collapse. Spanish distinguishes 'gemir' (groan) from 'lamentar' (lament), while French renderings vary, reflecting the word's emotional intensity in prophetic discourse. MOURNING AND LAMENTING

en: and-shall-lament, and-will-mourn | es: Y-gemirán, Y-lamentarán | fr: [ואנה] | de: [ואנה] Isa 3:26; Isa 19:8

תַּאֲנָה H0579 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-ms (4×)
To encounter, befall; to seek occasion or quarrel against someone; of events happening by divine or hostile intent.
A rare verb appearing only four times, used of events that overtake a person—whether by God's sovereign hand or by human scheming. In Exodus 21:13, it describes God causing a fatal accident to 'befall' someone, while in 2 Kings 5:7, Naaman's letter is read as 'seeking a quarrel.' The Psalms and Proverbs occurrences (Ps 91:10; Prov 12:21) promise that no harm shall 'befall' the righteous. The multilingual glosses confirm this dual sense: Spanish 'acontecerá' (will happen) alongside 'buscando-ocasión' (seeking occasion).

(4×) To befall, happen to, encounter—describing an event that overtakes someone, often with divine causation. In Exodus 21:13 God 'causes to happen' (English 'befalls,' Spanish 'acontecerá') an unintended death, while Psalm 91:10 and Proverbs 12:21 use the same root to assure that no evil shall befall the righteous. The Hithpael form in 2 Kings 5:7 shifts toward seeking occasion or picking a quarrel (French 'cherchant un quarrel,' Spanish 'buscando-ocasión'), treating the encounter as deliberate provocation. HAPPENING AND CHANCE

en: befalls, caused-to-happen, seeking-a-quarrel | es: acontecerá, buscando-ocasión, lo-puso | fr: caused-à-happen, cherchant-un-quarrel, rencontrer | de: [יאנה], caused-zu-happen, suchend-ein-quarrel Exod 21:13; 2Kgs 5:7; Ps 91:10; Prov 12:21

אֲנִיעַם H0580 Pro-1cp (1×)
We (ketiv variant); first person plural pronoun variant spelling in Jeremiah 42:6, standard spelling is 'anachnu'
This represents the ketiv (written) form of the first person plural pronoun 'we' in Jeremiah 42:6, where the standard spelling is 'anachnu.' Such orthographic variants are common in Hebrew manuscripts—the written form and the traditional reading sometimes differ slightly. Both forms mean the same thing: 'we.' In this passage, the people declare their intention to obey the Lord's word whether it is pleasant or difficult: 'We will obey the voice of the Lord our God.'

(1×) This orthographic variant appears in Jeremiah 42:6 where the remnant pledges obedience to God's word. The ketiv/qere note indicates a variant spelling of the common pronoun 'we.' All translations naturally render it as 'we' or the vernacular equivalent. The variant spelling doesn't affect meaning but shows the text-critical reality of minor orthographic differences in Hebrew manuscripts. The content—the people's solemn vow to obey—matters more than the spelling variation. FIRST PERSON PRONOUN

en: [ketiv:we] | es: nosotros | fr: [[אנן]] | de: [[אנן]] Jer 42:6

אִנּוּן H0581a Pro-3mp (3×)
they, those (Aramaic third-person plural pronoun)
The Aramaic third-person plural pronoun 'they' or 'those,' used to identify groups or refer back to previously mentioned subjects. Daniel and Ezra employ this pronoun in contexts of royal decree, prophetic vision, and administrative inquiry. The demonstrative force ('those') can emphasize specific identification—'those kings,' 'those men.' Like other Aramaic grammatical elements in Scripture, this pronoun reflects the multilingual reality of the exilic and post-exilic periods, when God's people lived under empires that spoke Aramaic.

(3×) Ezra 5:4 asks, 'What are the names of those men who are building this building?'—'those' identifying the specific group under investigation. Daniel 2:44 prophesies that God will set up a kingdom 'in the days of those kings'—'those' pointing to the kings represented in Nebuchadnezzar's vision. Daniel 6:24 says the lions overpowered 'them'—the accusers thrown into the den. The pronoun serves basic grammatical function but also carries legal and prophetic precision, specifying exactly who stands under decree or judgment. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: are, them, those | es: a-ellos, aquellos, son | fr: [אנון], elles | de: [אנון], sie Ezra 5:4; Dan 2:44; Dan 6:24

אִנִּין H0581b Pro-3fp (1×)
They are (feminine); Aramaic third person feminine plural pronoun in Daniel 7:17, ketiv reading 'innun'
This Aramaic pronoun represents the feminine plural 'they' in Daniel 7:17. The text has a ketiv/qere variation—the written form is 'innun' (masculine), but the traditional reading is 'innin' (feminine), agreeing with the feminine noun 'beasts.' The angel explains Daniel's vision: 'These great beasts, which are four, are four kings who will arise from the earth.' The pronoun connects the symbolic beasts to their interpretation as earthly kingdoms.

(1×) In Daniel 7:17, this feminine pronoun refers back to the four great beasts of Daniel's vision. The qere reading 'innin' (feminine) agrees grammatically with 'beasts,' while the ketiv 'innun' is masculine. All translations render it naturally as 'they' in context: the four beasts represent four kings/kingdoms. The gender agreement issue is minor—the point is the symbolic interpretation linking the terrifying vision to historical political powers. PRONOUNS AND MIXED

en: they-are | es: ellas | fr: ces | de: [אנין] Dan 7:17

אֱנוֹשׁ H0582 Prep-m / N-ms (42×)
Man, human being (individual or generic); mankind, humanity collectively; mortal, frail human (poetic emphasis).
The Hebrew noun enosh belongs to the cluster of words for 'man' alongside adam and ish, but carries a distinctive poetic and existential coloring. Concentrated in Job (18 times) and the Psalms (13 times), it appears almost exclusively in elevated discourse — wisdom poetry, lament, and theological reflection. Where adam names the species and ish the individual, enosh evokes fragility: 'What is enosh that you are mindful of him?' (Ps 8:4). Spanish hombre, French mortel, and German Mensch serve for the basic sense, but French mortel and German der Sterbliche in poetic contexts reveal the vulnerability enosh uniquely carries. A collective sense, 'mankind,' surfaces in Deuteronomy 32:26 and Isaiah 51:7.

1. man, human being (39×) An individual human person, used generically or specifically to refer to a man or human being — the basic lexical meaning covering most occurrences. This dominant sense (39 occurrences) appears across Job's anguished questions ('Is not the life of enosh a hard service?' Job 7:1), prophetic oracles (Isa 13:12; 56:2), and the Psalms (Ps 55:14, where 'a man, my equal, my companion' uses enosh for the intimate betrayer). Spanish hombre, French homme, and German Mensch all render this with their standard 'man/human' vocabulary. The parallelism with ben-adam ('son of man') in passages like Isaiah 56:2 and Psalm 8:4 confirms enosh as a poetic synonym for 'human being.' MAN AND HUMANITY

en: a-man, is-man, man | es: Hombre, el-hombre, es-el-hombre | fr: mortel, Énosch | de: Mensch, [אנוש], ein-Mensch 2Chr 14:11; Job 5:17; Job 7:1; Job 7:17; Job 9:2

2. mankind, humanity collectively (2×) Human beings collectively — mankind or the human race as a group, rather than a specific individual. With 2 occurrences, this collective sense appears in Deuteronomy 32:26 ('I would make the memory of them cease from among mankind') and Psalm 144:3 ('LORD, what is man that you take knowledge of him?'). Spanish mortal and French de-mankind shift from individual to collective framing, while German Mensch can serve both senses. The collective reading is confirmed by the parallelism: in Psalm 144:3, enosh parallels ben-adam in a universalizing rhetorical question about the dignity God bestows on the entire human species. MAN AND HUMANITY

en: from-mankind, mankind | es: de-entre-los-hombres, mortal | fr: de-mankind, mortel | de: Mensch, von-mankind Deut 32:26; Ps 144:3

3. mortal, frail human (1×) A human being with emphasis on mortality, weakness, and frailty — a rhetorical use concentrated in wisdom and poetic contexts that highlights the limits of human nature before God. Only 1 clear occurrence at Job 4:17, where Eliphaz asks 'Can a mortal (enosh) be righteous before God?' Spanish mortal, French le mortel, and German der Mensch all carry the weight of fragility here. The etymological connection to the root anash ('to be weak, sick, incurable') may underlie this nuance, though it is debated. The rhetorical question format — 'Can enosh be...?' — frames human frailty against divine holiness, a motif that pervades Job's dialogues. MAN AND HUMANITY en: can-a-mortal | es: ¿El-mortal | fr: le-mortel | de: der-Mensch Job 4:17

אֱנוֹשׁ H0583 N-proper-ms (7×)

Enosh, son of Seth and grandson of Adam; his birth marks when people began to call on YHWH's name.

A masculine proper name meaning 'man' or 'mortal' (from the root '-n-sh, denoting human frailty), designating the son of Seth and grandson of Adam. Enosh appears in the Genesis genealogies (Gen 4:26; 5:6-11) and in the Chronicler's lineage (1 Chr 1:1). His birth is associated with one of Scripture's most striking editorial notes: 'Then people began to call upon the name of YHWH' (Gen 4:26). German 'Enosch,' French 'Enosch,' and Spanish 'Enos' each adapt the sibilant ending differently, reflecting the name's antiquity.

Enosh (7×) The proper name Enosh (meaning 'man, mortal'), designating the son of Seth born when Adam was 235 years old. His genealogical data spans Genesis 5:6-11 (birth, fathering Kenan, lifespan of 905 years, death), and he heads the post-Seth lineage in 1 Chronicles 1:1. Most significantly, Genesis 4:26 associates his birth with the beginning of public worship: 'Then people began to call upon the name of YHWH.' The name itself, from the root connoting human weakness, stands in poignant contrast to this spiritual milestone. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Enosh | es: Enos, Enós | fr: Enosh, Énosch | de: Enosch, Enoschs, [אנוש] Gen 4:26; Gen 5:6; Gen 5:7; Gen 5:9; Gen 5:10

אָנָה H0584 V-Nifal-Prtcpl-fs (12×)

To groan or sigh in anguish; as a substantive, one who groans or laments.

A verb that gives voice to deep suffering – the sound wrung from people under unbearable affliction. When Israel groaned under Egyptian slavery, this is the word used (Exod 2:23). Lamentations deploys it repeatedly to capture Jerusalem's agony after the destruction of the temple (Lam 1:4, 1:8). Spanish 'gemir' and French 'gemir' both preserve the audible, visceral quality of the groan. In one striking instance, Ezekiel 9:4 uses the participle as a noun – 'the sighing ones' – to identify a category of righteous mourners whom God marks for protection amid judgment.

1. groan or sigh in distress (11×) To emit an audible groan or sigh expressing grief, pain, or anguish. This covers the vast majority of occurrences, from Israel's collective groaning under Egyptian bondage (Exod 2:23) to the withering of joy itself in Isaiah 24:7. Lamentations 1:4 and 1:8 use it for Jerusalem personified as a groaning woman. Proverbs 29:2 pairs it with national oppression: when the wicked rule, the people groan. Spanish 'gemir/gimen,' French 'gemissant,' and German forms all converge on an involuntary vocal expression of suffering, distinct from deliberate speech. GROANING IN DISTRESS en: I-groan, and-they-groaned, are-groaning | es: gime, gimen, gimes? | fr: et-ils-gémit, gémir, gémissant | de: [האנח], [נאנח], [נאנחו] Exod 2:23; Prov 29:2; Isa 24:7; Lam 1:4; Lam 1:8

2. the groaning one (substantival) (1×) Used substantivally with the definite article to designate a class of persons: 'the groaning ones,' those who sigh and lament over moral corruption. Found in Ezekiel 9:4, where God commands a scribe to mark the foreheads of those who 'sigh and groan' over the abominations in Jerusalem. Spanish 'los que gimen' (those who groan) captures the nominal function. This single occurrence turns a verbal action into an identity – the groaners become a recognized group whom God shields from the coming slaughter. GROANING IN DISTRESS
en: the-sighing | es: los-que-gimen | fr: gémir | de: [הנאנחים] Ezek 9:4

אֲנָחָה H0585 N-fsc / 1cs (11×)

Sighing, groaning — the audible sound of grief, distress, or spiritual anguish drawn from the depths of suffering

The noun אֲנָחָה (anachah) captures the involuntary, audible expression of deep sorrow or physical pain — the heavy sighing or groaning that wells up from one in distress. Job declares that his sighing comes instead of bread and his groaning pours out like water (Job 3:24), making it a substitute for ordinary life. The psalmist is worn out from groaning and weeping (Ps 6:6; 31:10; 38:9; 102:5), and Isaiah looks forward to a day when 'sorrow and sighing shall flee away' (Isa 35:10; 51:11). Lamentations 1:22 pairs it with a sick heart. Spanish 'gemido/suspiro' and French 'soupir/gémissement' both capture the blend of grief and exhaustion.

sighing, groaning (11×) An audible sigh or groan arising from grief, pain, or spiritual anguish. Job uses it for the involuntary lament that replaces normal sustenance (Job 3:24; 23:2). The Psalms make it a hallmark of the suffering righteous: the psalmist is consumed by groaning (Ps 6:6; 31:10; 38:9; 102:5). Isaiah pairs it with sorrow as something that will vanish in the eschatological restoration (Isa 35:10; 51:11). Lamentations and Ezekiel employ it for communal grief over Jerusalem's devastation (Lam 1:22; Ezek 21:6-7). Spanish 'gemido' and English 'groaning' both convey the visceral, uncontrollable quality of this sorrow-sound. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-my-sighing, and-sighing, in-groaning | es: de-mi-gemir, en-gemido, en-mi-gemido | fr: [אנחתה], [אנחתי], [באנחתי] | de: [אנחתה], [אנחתי], [באנחתי] Job 3:24; Job 23:2; Ps 6:6; Ps 31:10; Ps 38:9

אֲנַחְנָא H0586 Pro-1cp (4×)

We (Aramaic first-person plural pronoun, equivalent to Hebrew 'anakhnu').

The Aramaic first-person plural pronoun meaning 'we,' found exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. It functions identically to the Hebrew אֲנַחְנוּ but reflects the Aramaic spelling conventions of the Persian-period biblical documents. In Daniel 3:16-17, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego use it in their bold declaration before Nebuchadnezzar; in Ezra 4:16 and 5:11, Jewish officials use it in diplomatic correspondence. French and German translations sometimes leave it untranslated, while Spanish consistently renders it 'nosotros.'

(4×) First-person plural pronoun 'we' in Biblical Aramaic, used in official correspondence and direct speech within the Aramaic sections of Scripture. In Daniel 3:16-17, the three faithful exiles declare 'we have no need to answer you' using this pronoun, lending it a tone of courageous communal identity. In Ezra 4:16 and 5:11, it appears in formal diplomatic letters, where 'we' represents the Jewish community addressing Persian authorities. FIRST PERSON PRONOUN en: we | es: Nosotros, nosotros | fr: [אנחנא], [אנחנה], nous | de: [אנחנא], [אנחנה] Ezra 4:16; Ezra 5:11; Dan 3:16; Dan 3:17

אֲנַחְנוּ H0587 Conj-w / Pro-1cp (121×)

We — first person common plural independent pronoun, used for emphasis, contrast, or as explicit subject

Anachnu is the emphatic first person plural pronoun in biblical Hebrew, the plural counterpart of anokhi/ani ('I'). Because Hebrew verbs already encode their subject, the independent pronoun appears only when emphasis or contrast is intended: 'we are all one man's sons' (Gen 42:11), 'we are honest men' (Gen 42:31). It often follows a participle to supply an explicit subject (Gen 19:13; Num 10:29) or is appended to a finite verb for rhetorical force (Judg 9:28; 2 Kgs 10:4). Cognate forms appear across the Semitic family — Aramaic anachna, Arabic nahnu, Ethiopic nihna — testifying to deep shared ancestry. Spanish 'nosotros,' French 'nous,' and German 'wir' serve as straightforward equivalents.

we (first person plural pronoun) (121×) The independent first person common plural pronoun 'we,' deployed in biblical Hebrew when the speaker(s) wish to make the subject explicit for emphasis, contrast, or identification. It frequently appears in self-identifying declarations — 'we are your brothers' (Gen 42:13), 'we are passing through' (Judg 19:18) — and can follow participles or be appended to verbs for rhetorical weight (Gen 19:13; 2 Kgs 10:4). Cognate forms across Semitic (Aramaic anachna, Arabic nahnu) confirm its ancient pedigree. Spanish 'nosotros,' French 'nous,' and German 'wir' render it uniformly. FIRST PERSON PRONOUN

en: we, we-are | es: Nosotros, nosotros | fr: nous, nous-sont | de: sind-wir, wir Gen 13:8; Gen 19:13; Gen 29:4; Gen 37:7; Gen 42:11

אֲנִי H0588 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

And Anaharath, place name; a town in the territory of Issachar, listed in Joshua 19:19

Anaharath was a town allotted to the tribe of Issachar in the division of the land. It appears in the boundary description of Issachar's territory in the Jezreel Valley region. The exact location is uncertain, though some scholars have proposed sites in the valley area. Like many towns in these allotment lists, the name is preserved in Scripture though the site itself can no longer be identified with certainty.

(1×) This toponym occurs in Joshua 19:19 among the towns of Issachar's inheritance. The conjunction 'and' links it to the surrounding list of territorial markers. Issachar's allotment included fertile valley land in the Jezreel and surrounding areas. Translations consistently preserve it as a place name, with minor variations in transliteration. The preservation of these geographic markers maintains the biblical record of tribal territorial assignments. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Anacharath | es: y-Anajarat | fr: et-Anacharath | de: und-Anacharath Josh 19:19

אֲנִי H0589 Pro-1cs (874×)

ani – I; the first-person singular independent pronoun in Hebrew

The pronoun ani ('I') is one of two Hebrew forms for the first-person singular independent pronoun, the other being anokhi (H0595). While anokhi tends to appear in more solemn or archaic contexts, ani is the unmarked everyday form, occurring 874 times across all genres. It features prominently in divine self-declarations ('I am Yahweh your God,' Gen 15:7; Exod 20:2) as well as in ordinary human speech. The pronoun carries no inherent semantic weight beyond deixis – it points to the speaker. Spanish yo, French je, German ich, and English I all map to it with perfect consistency.

I (first person singular pronoun) (874×) The unmarked first-person singular independent pronoun, used by both human and divine speakers to identify themselves as the subject of discourse. Distinguished from the more solemn anokhi (H0595), ani is the common default form across narrative, poetry, prophecy, and wisdom literature. Its cross-lingual rendering is maximally uniform – Spanish yo, French je, German ich – with 874 occurrences showing no semantic differentiation whatsoever. FIRST PERSON PRONOUNS

en: I | es: Yo, yo, yo- | fr: Je | de: ich, ich-bin-es Gen 9:12; Gen 14:23; Gen 15:7; Gen 17:4; Gen 18:17

אֳנִיָּה H0590 N-msc (7×)

Ship or fleet of ships; a feminine noun for seagoing vessels, especially Solomon's commercial fleet.

A feminine noun denoting a ship or, in collective usage, a fleet of ships. Its occurrences cluster around Solomon's maritime enterprises – the fleet built at Ezion-Geber on the Red Sea (1 Kgs 9:26-27), the voyages to Ophir for gold (1 Kgs 10:11), and the 'ships of Tarshish' that returned every three years laden with exotic cargo (1 Kgs 10:22). The Spanish distinction between 'flota' (fleet) and 'barco' (ship) mirrors the Hebrew oscillation between collective and singular senses. This word paints a vivid picture of ancient Israel's brief but remarkable era of naval commerce under the united monarchy.

ship, fleet of ships (7×) A ship or fleet of ships, used both as a singular noun for an individual vessel and collectively for a naval fleet. The construct form oni in 1 Kings 9:26 and 10:11, 22 functions as 'fleet of,' describing Solomon's Red Sea trading fleet built at Ezion-Geber with Phoenician help (1 Kgs 9:26-27), the voyages to Ophir bringing gold (1 Kgs 10:11), and the 'ships of Tarshish' returning triennially with gold, silver, ivory, apes, and peacocks (1 Kgs 10:22). Spanish 'flota/barco' and English 'fleet/ship' reflect the collective-to-singular semantic range. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fleet, fleet-of, in-the-fleet | es: Y-flota, barco-de, en-la-flota | fr: dans-le-fleet, et-fleet, fleet-de | de: fleet-von, ich, in-der-fleet 1Kgs 9:26; 1Kgs 9:27; 1Kgs 10:11; 1Kgs 10:22

אֳנִיָּה H0591 N-fs (32×)

ship, fleet, seagoing vessel — a large watercraft for maritime trade, warfare, or transport

Oniyyah (plural oniyyot) designates a seagoing ship, appearing 32 times across the Hebrew Bible. The word captures Israel's uneasy relationship with the sea: Jacob's blessing notes that Zebulun shall dwell by the shore of ships (Gen 49:13), but Israel was never a seafaring power in its own right. Solomon's fleet at Ezion-geber, built in partnership with Hiram of Tyre, brought gold from Ophir (1 Kgs 9:26-28; 10:22), and when Jehoshaphat tried to replicate the venture, his ships were wrecked (1 Kgs 22:48). The prophetic tradition uses ships as symbols of human pride brought low — Isaiah's oracle against 'all the ships of Tarshish' (Isa 2:16) and Ezekiel's ship-allegory for Tyre (Ezek 27:9, 25-29). Jonah boards an oniyyah at Joppa to flee from YHWH (Jon 1:3-5). Note that the BDB excerpt shown in the prompt corresponds to a different homograph (anah III, 'to meet'); the actual noun oniyyah derives from a separate root.

ship, seagoing vessel (32×) A seagoing vessel used for trade, military expeditions, or transport. Covers Solomon's Ophir fleet (1 Kgs 9:26-28; 10:22), Jehoshaphat's wrecked ships (1 Kgs 22:48), and Jonah's flight vessel (Jon 1:3-5). Prophetic imagery deploys ships as emblems of commercial pride and vulnerability — Isaiah's 'ships of Tarshish' (Isa 2:16; 23:1, 14) and Ezekiel's allegory for Tyre (Ezek 27:9, 25-29). Deuteronomy 28:68 threatens return to Egypt 'in ships' as covenant curse. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-ships, in-the-ships, ships | es: Las-naves-de, barcos, en-las-naves | fr: dans-le-ships, dans-navire, dans-ships | de: Schiff, Schiffe, der-Schiffe Gen 49:13; Deut 28:68; Judg 5:17; 1Kgs 9:27; 1Kgs 22:48

תַּאֲנִיָּה H0592 Conj-w / N-fs (2×)

lamentation, mourning

This feminine noun denotes lamentation and mourning, particularly in poetic and prophetic contexts. It often appears paired with its near-synonym in phrases emphasizing the depth and duration of grief over divine judgment.

(2×) Mourning terminology appearing in Isaiah 29:2 and Lamentations 2:5, both depicting Jerusalem under judgment. The word forms part of the phrase 'mourning and lamentation,' a hendiadys intensifying the grief. German's 'Schiff' (ship) in one gloss appears to reflect confusion with the homonym 'oniyyah' (ship), demonstrating the challenges of ancient Hebrew lexicography. LAMENTATION AND MOURNING

en: and-lamentation | es: y-lamento, y-llanto | fr: [וֹאנִיה] | de: [וֹאנִיה], und-Schiff Isa 29:2; Lam 2:5

אנה H0593 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

And Aniam, personal name; a descendant of Manasseh mentioned in the genealogy of 1 Chronicles 7:19

Aniam was a member of the tribe of Manasseh, appearing in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles. The name is preserved in the tribal lineage but without additional narrative information. Like many names in Chronicles' genealogies, it maintains the memory of clan heads or family representatives within Manasseh's complex tribal structure. The name's etymology is uncertain, though it may contain a theophoric element.

(1×) This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 7:19 within Manasseh's genealogy. The name occurs only once, with no other information about the individual. Translations preserve the Hebrew form with minor variations in transliteration. These genealogical lists served to maintain tribal identity and land claims, recording family heads whose descendants formed clans within the larger tribe. The preservation of the name honors the person's place in Manasseh's lineage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Aniam | es: y-Aniam | fr: [וְאַנִיעָם] | de: [וְאַנִיעָם] 1Chr 7:19

אֲנָךְ H0594 N-ms (4×)

A plumb line; a builder's tool for measuring vertical trueness, used figuratively for divine judgment.

A noun denoting a plumb line—the weighted cord a builder drops to check whether a wall stands true. All four occurrences cluster in Amos 7:7-8, the famous vision where God stands beside a wall built with a plumb line, holding a plumb line in his hand. The image is devastating: Israel will be measured against God's standard and found crooked. Cognates in Akkadian (anāku) and Syriac point to a connection with lead or tin, the metal that weights the cord. Spanish 'plomada' and German 'Senkblei' both preserve the lead-weight etymology.

(4×) A plumb line—a cord weighted with lead used to test vertical trueness in construction, employed metaphorically for God's standard of justice. In Amos 7:7-8, the term appears four times in rapid succession: God shows Amos a wall built by plumb line (חוֹמַת אֲנָךְ), then declares he is setting a plumb line in the midst of Israel. Spanish 'plomada' (from plomo, lead) and German 'Senkblei' (sinking-lead) both reflect the instrument's physical nature, underscoring the heavy, irreversible finality of divine measurement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: A-plumb-line, a-plumb-line, plumb-line | es: Una-plomada, plomada, una-plomada | fr: [אנך] | de: Senkblei Amos 7:7; Amos 7:8

אָנֹכִי H0595 Conj-w | Pro-1cs (359×)

I (emphatic first person singular pronoun); the longer, solemn form alongside the shorter 'ani

Anokhi is the emphatic first person singular pronoun in Hebrew, standing alongside the shorter 'ani. With 359 occurrences, it appears prominently in solemn declarations and moments of high rhetorical weight. God uses it to open the Decalogue: 'Anokhi YHWH your God' (Exod 20:2). Joseph reveals himself with it (Gen 45:3-4). Its Akkadian cognate anaku and its absence from Aramaic and Arabic suggest an archaic pedigree. While modern Hebrew has largely abandoned anokhi in favor of 'ani, the biblical text preserves its dignified, weighty register for self-identification in moments of gravity.

I (first person singular pronoun, emphatic) (359×) The emphatic or solemn form of the first person singular independent pronoun ('I'), used alongside the shorter 'ani (H0589). Favored in formal declarations, divine self-identification (Exod 20:2 'I am the LORD your God'), and emotionally charged speech (Gen 3:10 'I was afraid'). Its Akkadian cognate anaku and absence from Aramaic, Arabic, and Ethiopic point to archaic origins. The ku element may relate to a demonstrative base, giving the pronoun a 'here I am' quality that the shorter form lacks. FIRST PERSON PRONOUNS

en: I, I-am | es: yo | fr: Je, Je-suis | de: bin-ich, ich, werde-ich Gen 3:10; Gen 4:9; Gen 7:4; Gen 15:1; Gen 15:14

אָנַן H0596 Prep-k | V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-mp (2×)

complain, murmur

This Hitpael verb describes complaining or murmuring, particularly in the context of expressing discontent to God. It appears in Numbers during Israel's wilderness rebellion and in Lamentations as a rhetorical question about the propriety of complaining against divine discipline.

(2×) Used of Israel's wilderness complaints (Num 11:1) and as a rhetorical check against murmuring over punishment (Lam 3:39). The Hitpael stem suggests reflexive or intensive action—complaining as a deliberate, self-focused act. Related to Aramaic and Arabic cognates for sighing and groaning, the word captures vocalized discontent. MURMUR GRUMBLE COMPLAIN

en: as-complainers, should-complain | es: como-quejándose, se-queja | fr: [יתאונן], comme-complainers | de: [יתאונן], wie-complainers Num 11:1; Lam 3:39

אָנַס H0597 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

Compelling, forcing; participle describing one who forces or constrains others, negated in Esther 1:8 to mean 'no compulsion'

This verb means to compel, constrain, or force someone to act against their will. In Esther 1:8, it appears in the negative: 'there was no compulsion' at King Ahasuerus's banquet—guests could drink as much or as little as they wished. The term indicates coercion or forcing someone into action. The absence of such compulsion at the royal feast shows unusual royal generosity and respect for guests' preferences, contrary to typical ancient Near Eastern royal banquet protocol.

(1×) Esther 1:8 uses this participle negatively to indicate drinking at the royal banquet was voluntary: 'there was no one compelling.' Spanish 'obligación' (obligation/compulsion) captures the sense. The king commanded that guests be allowed to drink according to their own wish, without forced conformity to royal drinking customs. This detail characterizes Ahasuerus's banquet as remarkably permissive, with guests free from the usual social compulsion to match the king's consumption. COMPEL FORCE

en: compelling | es: obligación | fr: [אנס] | de: [אנס] Esth 1:8

אָנַס H0598 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

Is difficult; Aramaic participle describing something oppressing or troubling someone, used in Daniel 4:9

This Aramaic verb means to oppress, trouble, or be difficult. In Daniel 4:9 (Aramaic 4:6), King Nebuchadnezzar tells Daniel that 'no mystery is difficult for you'—meaning Daniel has the ability to interpret even the most challenging dreams or visions. The term indicates something pressing, burdensome, or beyond normal capacity to solve. The king's confidence in Daniel reflects the previous successful interpretation and Daniel's proven connection to divine wisdom.

(1×) Daniel 4:9 (Aramaic v. 6) contains Nebuchadnezzar's statement that no secret is 'difficult' or 'too hard' for Daniel. Spanish 'te es difícil' (is difficult for you) renders the sense clearly. The king has witnessed Daniel's interpretive gift and knows that mysteries impenetrable to others are accessible to Daniel through divine revelation. This sets up the dream interpretation that follows, where Daniel must deliver troubling news to the king. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: is-difficult | es: te-es-difícil | fr: presser | de: [אנס] Dan 4:9

אָנַף H0599 V-Qal-Imperf-3ms (14×)

To be angry or become enraged; a denominative verb from 'ap (nose/anger), used almost exclusively of divine wrath.

Derived from the noun 'ap ('nose,' then 'anger' — from the flaring of nostrils), 'anap expresses the kindling of wrath. In the Hebrew Bible it is used almost exclusively of God's anger, making it a word that belongs to the vocabulary of divine judgment. The Qal stem describes a settled state of being angry (Ps 2:12; 79:5; 85:6; Isa 12:1), while the Hitpael intensifies this to the visible onset of fury — God 'becoming angry' in response to specific provocations such as Israel's rebellion at Kadesh (Deut 1:37), the golden calf (Deut 9:8, 20), and Solomon's idolatry (1 Kgs 11:9).

1. be angry (Qal) (8×) To be angry or displeased in the basic Qal stem, expressing a state of divine wrath or indignation. Used of God's anger toward Israel's unfaithfulness (1 Kgs 8:46; 2 Chr 6:36; Ezra 9:14) and in the psalmist's urgent questions about the duration of divine displeasure (Ps 79:5; 85:6). The famous Ps 2:12 warning — 'lest he be angry and you perish' — captures the terrifying brevity of this form. English translations use 'be angry' or 'be wroth'; Spanish renders it 'estar airado' (to be wrathful), while German and French often leave the Hebrew untranslated in bracket notation, reflecting the difficulty of capturing the exact register of this specialized term. ANGER AND INDIGNATION

en: You-be-angry, You-were-angry, and-you-are-angry | es: estarás-airado, estarás-airado-, se-enoje | fr: [אנפת], [ואנפת], [תאנף] | de: [אנפת], [ואנפת], [תאנף] 1Kgs 8:46; 2Chr 6:36; Ezra 9:14; Ps 2:12; Ps 60:1

2. become angry (Hitpael) (6×) To become angry or be provoked to wrath in the Hitpael (reflexive-intensive) stem, emphasizing the visible eruption or intensification of anger. Every Hitpael occurrence takes the preposition be- ('against') and refers to God's anger at specific provocations: Moses excluded from the land because of Israel's sin (Deut 1:37; 4:21), the golden calf rebellion (Deut 9:8, 20), Solomon's apostasy (1 Kgs 11:9), and the northern kingdom's persistent idolatry (2 Kgs 17:18). The Hitpael adds an element of mounting, self-manifesting fury absent from the Qal. Translations capture this escalation: Spanish 'se enojó/se airó' (became angry), English 'was angry,' German 'war zornig' — all using inchoative or perfective forms that mark the onset of wrath. ANGER AND INDIGNATION

en: and-he-was-angry, and-was-angry, was-angry | es: Y-se-enojó, se-airó, se-enojó | fr: et-fut-irrité, et-il-fut-irrité, et-était-angry | de: und-er-war-angry, und-war-angry, und-war-zornig Deut 1:37; Deut 4:21; Deut 9:8; Deut 9:20; 1Kgs 11:9

אַנְפִּין H0600 N-mpc / 3ms (2×)

face, countenance (Aramaic)

This Aramaic dual noun means 'face' or 'countenance,' appearing only in Daniel. The dual form reflects the two-sided nature of the face. Both occurrences describe King Nebuchadnezzar's facial expressions changing in response to significant events.

(2×) Aramaic term for 'face' in Daniel 2:46 and 3:19, both depicting Nebuchadnezzar's countenance. In 2:46 his face shows reverence toward Daniel; in 3:19 it contorts with rage against Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. The dual form 'anpohi' (his face) mirrors Hebrew 'aph' and cognates in Targumic Aramaic and Syriac. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-face | es: su-rostro | fr: face | de: [אנפוהי] Dan 2:46; Dan 3:19

אֲנָפָה H0601 Conj-w (2×)

heron (unclean bird)

This bird name appears in the Levitical purity lists among prohibited fowl. While traditionally identified as 'heron,' the exact species remains uncertain. The word may relate to Assyrian cognates, though BDB acknowledges the identification is quite doubtful.

(2×) Unclean bird listed in Leviticus 11:19 and Deuteronomy 14:18 among creatures Israelites were forbidden to eat. Cross-linguistic evidence (heron, garza, héron) reflects the traditional interpretation, though ornithological precision is difficult given the limited biblical data. The creature belongs to the category of abominable birds in the holiness code. LIVING CREATURES

en: and-the-heron, the-heron | es: la-garza, y-la-garza | fr: et-le-heron, le-heron | de: der-heron, und-der-heron Lev 11:19; Deut 14:18

אָנַק H0602 Prep-b / V-Qal-Inf (4×)

To groan, cry out in anguish; the deep involuntary moan of the wounded, mourning, or oppressed.

A verb capturing the visceral sound of groaning—whether from physical wounds or deep sorrow. In Jeremiah 51:52 and Ezekiel 26:15, the groaning comes from those mortally wounded in battle (חָלָל). Ezekiel 24:17 forbids the prophet from groaning as part of mourning rites, while Ezekiel 9:4 marks those who groan and sigh over Jerusalem's abominations for divine protection. Spanish 'gime' and French 'gémissement' share the same Latin root (gemere), vividly reflecting the universality of this human cry.

(4×) To groan or cry out in anguish—an involuntary, guttural expression of pain or grief. The Qal forms in Jeremiah 51:52 and Ezekiel 26:15 describe the groaning of the fatally wounded (חָלָל), while the Niphal in Ezekiel 24:17 is paired with mourning rites and in Ezekiel 9:4 with sighing (נֶאֱנָחִים) over abominations. French 'gémissement' and Spanish 'gime/gemirá' capture the same raw vocalization. Notably, those who groan over sin in Ezekiel 9:4 receive a protective mark, turning lament into a sign of faithfulness. GROANING IN DISTRESS

en: and-the-groaning, groan, when-groans | es: Gime, cuando-gima, gemirá | fr: [באנק], [האנק], [והנאנקים] | de: [באנק], [האנק], [והנאנקים] Jer 51:52; Ezek 9:4; Ezek 24:17; Ezek 26:15

אַנְקָה H0603 Conj-w / N-fs (4×)

Groaning, crying out; a noun expressing the anguished cry of the oppressed, poor, or imprisoned.

The noun form of the verb אָנַק (H0602), denoting the sustained cry of those in distress. It appears in deeply poignant psalmic and prophetic contexts: the groaning of the poor (Ps 12:5), the prisoner's groan reaching God's ears (Ps 79:11; 102:20), and the weeping that accompanies Israel's unfaithfulness (Mal 2:13). French 'gémissement' and Spanish 'gemido' both derive from Latin gemitus, reinforcing the cross-cultural immediacy of this cry. Every occurrence implies that God hears and responds to such groaning.

(4×) Groaning, anguished outcry—the sustained, plaintive cry of the oppressed or imprisoned that rises to God. In Psalm 12:5, it is the groaning of the needy (אֶבְיוֹן) that prompts God to act; in Psalms 79:11 and 102:20, it is the groan of the prisoner (אָסִיר) that reaches heaven. Malachi 2:13 pairs it with weeping and tears (דִּמְעָה, בֶּכִי) at the altar. Spanish 'gemido de' and French 'de gémissement' consistently render it as a genitive of source—groaning that belongs to and issues from the suffering. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-groaning, because-of-the-groaning-of, the-groaning-of | es: gemido-de, por-gemido-de, y-gemido | fr: de-gémissement, et-plainte, gémissement | de: [ואנקה], der-groaning-von, weil-von-der-groaning-von Ps 12:5; Ps 79:11; Ps 102:20; Mal 2:13

אַנְקָה H0604 Conj-w (1×)

And the gecko; unclean reptile listed in Leviticus 11:30, possibly a lizard species or ferret (identification uncertain)

This term identifies an unclean animal in the Levitical purity laws, traditionally understood as a type of lizard (gecko) or possibly a shrew-mouse. It appears in the list of swarming creatures that are ritually unclean and forbidden as food. The exact species identification is uncertain—ancient and modern interpreters have proposed various small reptiles or rodents. What matters for the law is its classification among the prohibited creatures.

(1×) Leviticus 11:30 lists this creature among unclean swarming things. English and French 'gecko,' Spanish 'erizo' (hedgehog), and German 'gecko' show the uncertainty of identification. The term appears only here in the unclean animal catalog. Whether a specific lizard species, shrew, or other small creature, it belonged to the category of swarming animals that made a person ritually unclean through contact. The taxonomy matters less than the ritual boundary it marked. CREEPING SWARMING THINGS

en: and-the-gecko | es: Y-el-erizo | fr: et-le-gecko | de: und-der-gecko Lev 11:30

אָנַשׁ H0605 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-ms (9×)

To be weak or sick; as adjective: incurable, grievous, beyond remedy; as verb: to become mortally ill

From a root meaning 'to be weak or sick,' this word appears almost exclusively as the Qal passive participle 'anush, functioning as an adjective meaning 'incurable' or 'grievous beyond remedy.' The prophets deploy it with devastating rhetorical force: Jeremiah declares Judah's wound 'anush – incurable (Jer 15:18; 30:12), and Micah echoes the same for Samaria (Mic 1:9). Perhaps most memorably, Jeremiah 17:9 uses it of the human heart: 'The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately sick ('anush) – who can understand it?' The single verbal occurrence in 2 Samuel 12:15, where David's child 'became mortally ill,' preserves the root's original verbal force.

1. incurable, grievous (8×) Incurable, grievous, beyond healing – functioning as an adjective from the Qal passive participle. Describes wounds, sickness, or pain that admits no remedy. English and Spanish both consistently render 'incurable' (Eng 'Incurable,' Spa 'Incurable'), while French and German leave the Hebrew untranslated in some instances, suggesting the concept is difficult to capture in a single word. Used metaphorically of spiritual and national brokenness: Job's arrow-wound (Job 34:6), Judah's fracture (Jer 15:18; 30:12), the deceitful heart (Jer 17:9), and the day of grief (Isa 17:11). MAN AND HUMANITY

en: Incurable, and-incurable, disaster | es: Incurable, calamidad, e-incurable | fr: et-incurable, homme, incurable | de: Mensch, [אנושה], [וֽאנש] Job 34:6; Isa 17:11; Jer 15:18; Jer 17:9; Jer 17:16

2. became mortally ill (1×) Became mortally ill – the Niphal consecutive imperfect form (wayyeanash) describing the acute onset of fatal sickness. Attested only in 2 Samuel 12:15, where the child born to David and Bathsheba is struck by the LORD and 'became ill.' English renders 'and-he-became-ill,' Spanish 'y-enfermo.' Unlike the adjectival sense which describes a chronic, irremediable condition, this verbal form captures a sudden, divinely-inflicted transition into mortal illness. SICKNESS AND ILLNESS

en: and-he-became-ill | es: y-enfermó | fr: et-il-devint-ill | de: und-er-became-ill 2Sam 12:15

אֱנָשׁ H0606 N-msc (27×)

man, mankind (Aramaic) — the generic term for a human being or humanity collectively in biblical Aramaic

Enash is the standard Aramaic noun for 'man' or 'human being,' cognate to Hebrew enosh and appearing 27 times exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra. In ordinary usage it designates any human person: 'there is no man on earth who can meet the king's demand' (Dan 2:10). Collectively it denotes humankind, as when Nebuchadnezzar is driven from among 'men' to dwell with beasts (Dan 4:25, 32-33; 5:21). Its most theologically charged occurrence is the phrase bar enash ('son of man') in Daniel 7:13, where 'one like a son of man' approaches the Ancient of Days to receive everlasting dominion — a figure that profoundly shaped later messianic interpretation. Spanish 'hombre,' French 'homme,' German 'Mensch' all render it with the basic word for 'man.'

man, mankind (Aramaic) (27×) A human being or humankind collectively, the standard Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew enosh. Used generically of persons (Dan 2:10; 3:10; 6:12) and collectively of the human race, as when Nebuchadnezzar is expelled from human society (Dan 4:25, 32-33; 5:21). The compound bar enash in Daniel 7:13 became foundational for messianic theology. Construct phrases like 'seed of men' (Dan 2:43) and 'sons of men' (Dan 2:38) express the corporate sense. All target languages uniformly gloss with the basic term for 'man.' MAN AND HUMANITY en: Man, [ketiv:man], man | es: [hombre], hombre, hombres | fr: [אנושא], homme, hommes | de: Maenner, Mensch, [אנש] Ezra 4:11; Ezra 6:11; Dan 2:10; Dan 2:38; Dan 2:43

אנתה H0607 Pro-2ms (25×)

You (2ms); Aramaic second-person masculine singular pronoun, equivalent to Hebrew attah

Antah (אַנְתָּה) is the Biblical Aramaic second-person masculine singular pronoun, the direct counterpart of Hebrew attah ('you'). It appears exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra, where it addresses kings and rulers — notably Nebuchadnezzar in the interpretation of his dream (Dan 2:29, 31, 37–38) and Artaxerxes in the decree of Ezra 7:25. The ketiv form אנתה reflects an older Aramaic spelling, while the qere reads the shorter אַנְתְּ. Despite being a simple pronoun, its concentration in royal-address contexts gives it a distinctive rhetorical force.

(qere:) (25×) The Biblical Aramaic second-person masculine singular pronoun 'you,' used in direct address in Daniel and Ezra. The ketiv spelling אנתה preserves an older form while the qere reads the shorter אנת. It appears in Daniel's address to Nebuchadnezzar — 'You, O king' (Dan 2:37) — and in Artaxerxes' decree (Ezra 7:25). Spanish 'tú,' French 'toi,' and German 'du' all render it with the expected familiar singular pronoun. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: (qere:and-you), (qere:you), (qere:you-) | es: (Tú), (pero-tú), (tú) | fr: [אנתה], et-toi, toi | de: du, und-du Ezra 7:25; Dan 2:29; Dan 2:31; Dan 2:37; Dan 2:38

אַנְתּוּן H0608 Pro-2mp (1×)

You (masculine plural); Aramaic second person plural pronoun addressing multiple male individuals

This Aramaic pronoun is the standard second person masculine plural 'you' (equivalent to Hebrew 'attem'). In Daniel 2:8, King Nebuchadnezzar uses it to address his counselors: 'I know that you are trying to gain time.' The pronoun marks direct address to a group of men. It's the ordinary plural 'you' in Aramaic, used throughout Daniel's Aramaic chapters for addressing groups of officials, counselors, or others.

(1×) Daniel 2:8 contains this pronoun in Nebuchadnezzar's accusation against his advisors. All translations render it naturally with the plural 'you' or language-specific equivalents (Spanish 'vosotros,' French 'vous,' German 'ihr'). The king suspects his counselors are stalling, trying to buy time because they cannot actually interpret dreams. This common pronoun carries no special significance beyond its grammatical function of marking plural address. SECOND PERSON PLURAL

en: you | es: vosotros | fr: vous | de: ihr Dan 2:8

אָסָא H0609 N-proper-ms (58×)

Asa — king of Judah who pursued religious reform; also a Levite ancestor

The name אָסָא (Asa, perhaps meaning 'healer') refers primarily to the third king of the southern kingdom of Judah (r. c. 910–869 BCE), son of Abijam and father of Jehoshaphat. Asa is remembered for sweeping religious reforms: removing idols, deposing his grandmother Maacah for her Asherah pole (1 Kgs 15:13; 2 Chr 15:16), and calling Judah back to covenant faithfulness. Yet his later years saw a troubled alliance with Aram against northern Israel (1 Kgs 15:18-20) and reliance on physicians rather than the Lord in his final illness (2 Chr 16:12). A second, minor Asa appears as a Levite in 1 Chronicles 9:16.

Asa (proper name) (58×) The proper name Asa, borne by the reforming king of Judah and a Levite ancestor. All 58 occurrences point to these two individuals, with the king dominating. Remarkably, every language sampled — Spanish, French, German, English — renders the name identically as 'Asa,' reflecting its short, distinctive phonology. Key passages include his accession (1 Kgs 15:8-9), his reforms (1 Kgs 15:11-14; 2 Chr 14–15), and the Chronicler's critique of his final years (2 Chr 16:7-12). ASA ASAPH NAMES

en: Asa | es: Asa | fr: Asa | de: Asa 1Kgs 15:8; 1Kgs 15:9; 1Kgs 15:11; 1Kgs 15:13; 1Kgs 15:14

אָסוּךְ H0610 N-msc (1×)

A jar of, flask of; construct noun for a container or vessel, used in 2 Kings 4:2 for a jar of oil

This term designates a jar, flask, or container, particularly for holding oil or other liquids. In 2 Kings 4:2, the widow tells Elisha that all she has in her house is 'a jar of oil.' The form is unusual and the text may be uncertain, but the meaning is clear—a vessel containing oil. This small amount of oil becomes the seed for Elisha's miracle of multiplying oil to pay the widow's debts and save her sons from slavery.

(1×) Second Kings 4:2 uses this construct form for the widow's 'jar of oil.' Spanish 'vasija de' (vessel of) and English 'jar of' convey the basic sense of a container. Though the Hebrew form is textually uncertain (some suggest emendations), the meaning is contextually clear—a small vessel containing oil, which becomes the instrument of miraculous provision. The widow's honest assessment of her poverty makes the subsequent abundance more striking. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-jar-of | es: una-vasija-de | fr: un-jar-de | de: ein-jar-von 2Kgs 4:2

אָסוֹן H0611 N-ms (5×)

Harm, mischief, serious bodily injury; a grave misfortune befalling someone.

Refers to serious physical harm or fatal injury. In the Joseph narrative, Jacob twice fears that 'harm' (ason) will befall Benjamin on the journey to Egypt (Gen 42:4, 38; 44:29), expressing a father's dread of losing another son. In the Book of the Covenant (Exod 21:22-23), the term distinguishes between an accidental injury to a pregnant woman where no lasting 'harm' results and one where serious harm does occur, triggering the lex talionis. Spanish 'daño' and German 'Unglück' both capture the gravity of the term.

(5×) Serious harm, mischief, or fatal injury befalling a person. The three Genesis occurrences (42:4, 38; 44:29) all involve Jacob's fear that mortal harm will 'befall' (qarah/qara') Benjamin, echoing the loss of Joseph. Exodus 21:22-23 uses the term in case law: if a pregnant woman is struck and 'no ason results,' a fine suffices, but if 'ason' does occur, the penalty escalates to life for life. The legal context confirms this denotes grave bodily harm or death, not minor injury. Spanish 'daño/mal' and German 'Unglück' convey the seriousness. CALAMITY AND DISASTER

en: harm | es: daño, mal | fr: harm | de: ein-Unglück, harm Gen 42:4; Gen 42:38; Gen 44:29; Exod 21:22; Exod 21:23

אָסוּר H0612 Art / N-ms (3×)

bonds, prison (literal bonds or the place of binding)

Bonds or fetters, and by extension the place where people are bound—prison. Judges uses it for the ropes that bound Samson, which the Spirit enabled him to snap. Ecclesiastes employs it metaphorically for the 'bonds' of the seductive woman's hands that ensnare the foolish. Jeremiah uses 'house of bonds' as a designation for prison. The term captures both the physical restraint and the institution of confinement, linking material and metaphorical captivity.

(3×) Judges 15:14 describes the ropes on Samson's arms becoming 'like flax that has caught fire, and his bonds melted off his hands' when the Spirit came upon him. Ecclesiastes 7:26 warns that the adulteress woman's hands are 'bonds' that capture the sinner. Jeremiah 37:15 calls the place where Jeremiah was imprisoned 'the house of bonds' (the prison). The Hebrew links physical binding (rope, chains) and institutional confinement (prison), both representing loss of freedom and vulnerability to those who hold power. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: bonds, his-bonds, the-prison | es: ataduras, la-prisión, sus-ataduras | fr: [הָאסוּר], son-bonds, אסורים | de: [אסורים], [הָאסוּר], sein-bonds Judg 15:14; Eccl 7:26; Jer 37:15

אֲסוּר H0613 Conj-w (3×)

band, bond, imprisonment (Aramaic: fetter or confinement)

The Aramaic equivalent of the Hebrew word for bonds or fetters, appearing in Daniel's vision and in Persian administrative language. Daniel's vision includes a band of iron and bronze around the stump of a tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, symbolizing restraint. Ezra mentions imprisonment as a penalty available to Persian authorities. The Aramaic term connects physical binding to judicial punishment, where fetters represent both the instrument and the state of being bound.

(3×) Daniel 4:15 and 4:23 describe Nebuchadnezzar's vision of a tree stump left 'with a band of iron and bronze' around it—symbolizing the king's coming restraint and humiliation during his period of madness. Ezra 7:26 lists possible penalties for violating the king's decree, including 'imprisonment' (literally 'bonds'). The metal bands in Daniel suggest both protection (preserving the stump) and limitation (preventing growth), while Ezra's usage straightforwardly means judicial confinement with chains or in prison. CHAINS AND FETTERS

en: and-with-band-of, or-for-imprisonment | es: o-para-prisión, y-con-atadura | fr: [וּלְאסוּרִין], et-lien | de: [וּבַאסוּר], [וּלְאסוּרִין] Ezra 7:26; Dan 4:15; Dan 4:23

אָסִיף H0614 Art / N-ms (2×)

ingathering, harvest (especially grape harvest)

This term designates the autumn harvest festival, particularly the grape harvest. It appears in both the Covenant Code and the ritual calendar of Exodus, marking the end of the agricultural year when Israel was to celebrate God's provision with festive thanksgiving.

(2×) The 'Feast of Ingathering' in Exodus 23:16 and 34:22, both from early legal collections (E and J sources). This autumn festival concluded the agricultural cycle, celebrating the grape and fruit harvest. Spanish distinguishes 'cosecha' (harvest, general) from 'recolección' (gathering), while other languages preserve the ingathering concept central to the festival's meaning. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: the-ingathering | es: la-cosecha, la-recolección | fr: le-ingathering | de: der-ingathering Exod 23:16; Exod 34:22

אָסִיר H0615 N-ms (13×)

A prisoner or captive; one held in bondage, whether in a literal dungeon or under oppression.

Denotes a person confined in bonds—whether a literal prisoner in a dungeon or a people held captive under oppression. First introduced in the Joseph narrative (Gen 39:20, 22), the word appears almost exclusively in poetry thereafter, where it takes on theological depth. The psalmists invoke God's compassion toward prisoners (Ps 69:34; 79:11; 102:21), pairing them with the needy and the condemned. In Zechariah 9:11 the liberated exiles of Israel are called 'prisoners of hope.' Spanish 'prisioneros' and German 'Gefangenen' mirror this range from physical captivity to spiritual bondage.

prisoner, captive (13×) A person held in physical confinement or captivity, used both of literal prisoners (Joseph's fellow inmates in Gen 39:20, 22; Samson grinding in the Philistine prison, Judg 16:21, 25) and poetically of those crushed by oppression. In the Psalms the prisoner becomes an object of divine compassion (Ps 69:34; 79:11; 102:21), often paired with 'sons of death' or 'the needy.' Zechariah 9:11 extends the image to Israel's exiles as captives whom God liberates. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-prisoners, [the-prisoners], his-prisoners | es: (prisioneros-de), a-prisioneros, a-sus-prisioneros | fr: [le-prisoners], [אסירי], [אסיריו] | de: Gefangenen, [der-prisoners], [אסירי] Gen 39:20; Gen 39:22; Judg 16:21; Judg 16:25; Job 3:18

אַסִּיר H0616 N-ms (4×)

Prisoner, captive; one bound or confined, used collectively of those taken in war or held in bondage.

A noun meaning prisoner or captive, often used collectively to denote groups held in bondage or taken in battle. Isaiah's prophecies employ it powerfully: in 10:4 the people will bow among prisoners, in 24:22 kings are gathered as prisoners in a pit, and in 42:7 the Servant of the Lord will bring prisoners out of the dungeon. Psalm 79:11 pairs the prisoner's groaning (אֲנָקַת אָסִיר) with a plea for divine intervention. The word may also appear as a personal epithet for Jeconiah 'the captive' in 1 Chronicles 3:17.

(4×) Prisoner, captive—one who is bound, confined, or taken in war, often used collectively. Isaiah 42:7 pairs prisoners with 'those who sit in darkness,' casting captivity as both physical and spiritual. Isaiah 24:22 envisions cosmic judgment where kings are gathered like prisoners into a pit. In Psalm 79:11, the prisoner's groaning

(paired with H0603 אֲנָקָה) becomes the vehicle of petition to God. Spanish 'prisionero,' French 'prisonnier,' and German 'Gefangener' all confirm the consistent sense across translations. The term may function as an epithet in 1 Chronicles 3:17 for the exiled king Jeconiah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: prisoner, the-prisoner | es: prisionero | fr: prisonnier | de: Gefangener, der-prisoner Ps 79:11; Isa 10:4; Isa 24:22; Isa 42:7

אַסִּיר H0617 N-proper-ms (5×)

Assir — a personal name meaning 'prisoner,' borne by a Levitical descendant of Korah and others in Chronicles genealogies.

A Hebrew proper name derived from the root meaning 'to bind' or 'prisoner.' Assir appears as a son of Korah in Exodus 6:24 and recurs in the Levitical genealogies of 1 Chronicles 6, where he is also called a son of Ebiasaph. The name surfaces again in 1 Chronicles 3:17 in the royal line near the exile. Spanish and English translations consistently render it 'Assir/Asir,' while French and German sometimes transliterate the Hebrew directly as the consonantal form.

(5×) The personal name Assir, meaning 'prisoner' or 'bound one.' It identifies at least two individuals: a Levitical descendant of Korah who appears in the Exodus 6:24 genealogy and the extended Levitical line of 1 Chronicles 6:22–37, and possibly a figure in the Davidic genealogy of 1 Chronicles 3:17. The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name (eng 'Assir,' spa 'Asir'), confirming it is treated as an untranslated proper noun across traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Assir, and-Assir | es: Asir, y-Asir | fr: Assir, [אסיר], [אסר] | de: Assir, [אסיר], [אסר] Exod 6:24; 1Chr 3:17; 1Chr 6:22; 1Chr 6:23; 1Chr 6:37

אָסָם H0618 Prep-b / N-mpc / 2ms (2×)

storehouse, barn, granary

This noun denotes storehouses or barns where grain and produce were kept. It appears in contexts of blessing and provision—God promising to fill Israel's storehouses if they walk in covenant faithfulness. The Aramaic cognate confirms the storage sense.

(2×) Plural form 'your storehouses' appears in Deuteronomy 28:8 (covenant blessings) and Proverbs 3:10 (wisdom's reward). Both contexts promise abundance filling storage facilities as a sign of divine favor. The word relates to Aramaic and Syriac terms for stores and supplies, reflecting agricultural prosperity as a covenant benefit. STOREHOUSE GRANARY

en: in-your-storehouses, your-barns | es: en-tus-graneros, tus-graneros | fr: dans-ton-storehouses, ton-אסמיך-toi | de: [אסמיך], in-dein-storehouses Deut 28:8; Prov 3:10

אַסְנָה H0619 N-proper-ms (1×)

Asnah, personal name; head of a family of temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from Babylonian exile in Ezra 2:50

Asnah was the ancestral head of a family of Nethinim (temple servants) who returned from exile with Zerubbabel. The name possibly derives from Aramaic meaning 'thorn-bush.' Interestingly, this name appears in Ezra's list but is omitted in the parallel passage in Nehemiah 7:52, showing the textual variation between these two registers of returnees. The family maintained its identity through exile and resumed temple service in the restoration.

(1×) This personal name occurs in Ezra 2:50 among families of temple servants returning from Babylon. The omission from Nehemiah's parallel list shows typical variation in genealogical records. The proposed etymology from Aramaic 'thorn-bush' is uncertain but plausible. These Nethinim families served practical roles in temple operations, and the preservation of their names honors their faithful service across the generations of exile and return. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Asnah | es: Asná | fr: [אסנה] | de: [אסנה] Ezra 2:50

אָסְנַפַּר H0620 N-proper-ms (1×)

Osnappar (Ashurbanipal), proper name; the Assyrian king who deported peoples to Samaria (Ezra 4:10), likely Ashurbanipal (668-626 BC)

Osnappar is identified as the Assyrian king who transported foreign populations to Samaria, part of Assyria's policy of mixing conquered peoples to prevent rebellion. Most scholars identify him with Ashurbanipal (Akkadian: Ashur-bani-apli), who reigned 668–626 BC. The Hebrew form preserves an abbreviated version of the Assyrian name. This deportation policy explains the mixed population of Samaria in the post-exilic period and the Samaritans' claim to participate in rebuilding the temple.

(1×) Ezra 4:10 references 'the great and noble Osnappar' who deported peoples to Samaria. The identification with Ashurbanipal is well-established—the Hebrew represents a shortened form of the Assyrian king's name. The Septuagint variant 'Salmanasar' (Shalmaneser) reflects confusion between Assyrian kings. Ashurbanipal's deportation policy created the mixed population later called Samaritans, whose desire to join the temple rebuilding is rejected by the returned exiles, creating ongoing conflict. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Asnappar | es: Asnapar | fr: [אסנפר] | de: [אסנפר] Ezra 4:10

אָסְנַת H0621 N-proper-fs (3×)

Asenath (Joseph's Egyptian wife, possibly meaning 'belonging to Neith')

The Egyptian wife of Joseph, given to him by Pharaoh along with high office. Her name likely means 'belonging to (the goddess) Neith,' reflecting authentic Egyptian naming patterns and religious culture. As daughter of Potiphera priest of On, she came from Egypt's priestly elite. Through her, Joseph fathered Ephraim and Manasseh, meaning half of Israel's tribal structure descends from an Egyptian mother. Her presence in the narrative underscores how God's purposes incorporated even Egyptian lineage into the covenant people.

(3×) Genesis 41:45 introduces Asenath when Pharaoh gives her to Joseph as wife, identifying her father as Potiphera priest of On (Heliopolis). Genesis 41:50 notes that she bore Joseph two sons before the famine years. Genesis 46:20 includes her in the genealogical record, marking Ephraim and Manasseh as her sons. Her Egyptian name and priestly lineage highlight the full integration of Joseph into Egyptian society, while her sons' adoption by Jacob brings Egyptian blood into Israel's covenant inheritance—a remarkable inclusion that Genesis records without comment or critique. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Asenath | es: Asenat, Asnat | fr: Asnath | de: Asnat Gen 41:45; Gen 41:50; Gen 46:20

אָסַף H0622 Prep-b / V-Hitpael-Inf (202×)

To gather, collect, assemble; by extension to remove, take away; euphemism for dying ('gathered to one's people')

A versatile root appearing across all major Hebrew stems, 'asap covers the full arc from physically gathering crops or assembling people (Qal/Nifal) to the solemn euphemism of being 'gathered to one's fathers' at death (Gen 25:8). In the Piel it acquires a military sense as 'rear guard,' the one who gathers up stragglers. The Hifil intensifies into prophetic sweeping-away (Zeph 1:2). A possibly distinct homograph surfaces in 2 Kings 5, where Naaman seeks someone to 'gather' — that is, heal — his leprosy, a sense Arabic yashfi and Swahili kumponya confirm independently.

1. gather, collect (Qal active) (89×) The basic Qal transitive action of collecting people, animals, or harvest into one place. Arabic jamaᶜa and Korean 모으다 both confirm the core 'gather together' meaning. Dominates narrative contexts like gathering elders (Exod 3:16) or grain (Gen 6:21). GATHERING TOGETHER

en: And-gathered, and-gathered, and-he-gathered | es: Y-recogió, Y-reunió, y-reunieron | fr: Et-rassembla, et-il-rassembla, et-ils-rassembla | de: And-sammelte, und-er-sammelte, und-er-versammelte Gen 6:21; Gen 29:22; Gen 42:17; Exod 3:16; Exod 4:29

2. assemble, gather together (Nifal) (63×) Nifal reflexive/middle voice: people gather themselves or are assembled as a group. Arabic ijtamaᶜa (Form VIII reflexive) and Swahili kukusanyika (reflexive -ika suffix) precisely mirror this middle-voice nuance. See Gen 29:3 where shepherds gather at the well, or Exod 32:26 at the golden calf crisis. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-gathered, and-they-gathered, and-were-gathered | es: Y-se-reunieron, se-reunieron, y-se-reunieron | fr: et-ils-rassembla, et-rassembla, et-rassembler | de: sammeln, sammelte, sie-versammelte Gen 29:3; Gen 34:30; Gen 49:29; Exod 32:26; Num 11:22

3. be gathered to one's people (16×) The distinctive Nifal euphemism for death — to be 'gathered to one's people' or ancestors. Arabic inḍamma (to be joined/annexed) captures the relational metaphor. The formula appears at the deaths of Abraham (Gen 25:8), Ishmael (Gen 25:17), and Jacob (Gen 49:33), always distinct from burial, implying reunion with the departed. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-he-was-gathered, and-was-gathered, and-you-shall-be-gathered | es: fue-reunido, fueron-reunidos, serán-recogidos | fr: et-il-était-rassembla, et-rassembler, et-tu-devra-être-rassembla | de: du-soll-sein-sammelte, sammeln, sammelte Gen 25:8; Gen 25:17; Gen 35:29; Gen 49:33; Num 27:13

4. remove, take away, withdraw (14×) An extended sense of removing, withdrawing, or taking away — applied to God removing reproach (Gen 30:23), withdrawing wrath (Ps 85:3), or gathering back a hand from action (1 Sam 14:19). Arabic nazaᶜa/rafaᶜa and Swahili ameondoa confirm the 'removal' semantic shift from the gathering root. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: I-have-withdrawn, You-take-away, and-he-gathered | es: Recogiste, Retira, Y-añadió | fr: et-il-rassembla, et-rassembler, et-tu-sera-lose | de: er-sammelt, sammeln, sammelte Gen 30:23; Judg 18:25; 1Sam 14:19; 2Sam 6:1; Ps 85:3

5. rear guard (Piel participle) (8×) The Piel participle functioning as a military technical term: the rear guard who 'gathers up' stragglers at the back of a marching column. Arabic sāqa and Swahili walinzi wa nyuma both render this specific military role. Prominent in the wilderness march order (Num 10:25) and the Jericho procession (Josh 6:9, 13). GATHERING TOGETHER

en: and-the-rear-guard, and-your-rear-guard, gathering | es: los-que-lo-cosechan, que-los-recogiera, que-recoja | fr: et-le-rear-garder, et-rassembler, gathering | de: gathering, rear-bewachen, sammeln Num 10:25; Josh 6:9; Josh 6:13; Judg 19:15; Judg 19:18

6. sweep away (Hifil causative) (4×) A Hifil causative intensification meaning to sweep away or utterly consume, found in prophetic judgment oracles. Zephaniah 1:2–3 uses the cognate infinitive absolute for emphasis ('I will utterly sweep away'). Korean 끝내 리라 ('bring to an end') captures the finality of this divine judgment usage. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: Gathering, I-will-sweep-away, I-will-utterly-sweep-away | es: Consumiendo, Quitando, Quitaré | fr: rassembler | de: sammelte Jer 8:13; Zeph 1:2; Zeph 1:3

7. be gathered intensively (Pual passive) (4×) Pual passive intensive: being gathered or assembled with thoroughness. Arabic yujmaᶜu (passive) parallels the form. Found in eschatological contexts like the gathering of prisoners (Isa 24:22) and the plundering of nations (Zech 14:14), where the passive underscores completeness. GATHERING TOGETHER

en: And-is-gathered, And-they-shall-be-gathered, and-will-be-gathered | es: Y-serán-reunidos, reunido, y-será-recogido | fr: et-rassembler, rassembler | de: und-sammeln, und-sammelte, von-Asaf Isa 24:22; Isa 33:4; Ezek 38:12; Zech 14:14

8. heal, restore (4×) A likely distinct homographic root meaning 'to heal, restore,' attested exclusively in the Naaman narrative (2 Kgs 5:3–11). Arabic yashfi and Swahili kumponya/ataponya independently translate with healing vocabulary rather than gathering, strongly supporting a separate lexical entry. The Septuagint renders it with therapeuō. HEALING AND RESTORATION

en: and-gather, and-gather-him, he-would-gather | es: lo-sanará, para-sanar, y-sanará | fr: et-rassemble, et-rassemble-lui, il-ferait-rassemble | de: er-wuerde-versammle, und-versammle, und-versammle-ihn 2Kgs 5:3; 2Kgs 5:6; 2Kgs 5:7; 2Kgs 5:11

אָסָף H0623 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (46×)

Asaph — 'gatherer'; a Levitical musician of David's court, ancestor of a temple singing guild

Asaph ('gatherer') is one of the three master musicians appointed by David alongside Heman and Jeduthun (Ethan), and his name echoes through 46 occurrences spanning Chronicles, Ezra-Nehemiah, Kings, Isaiah, and the Psalter. He is called both 'the singer' (ha-meshorer, 1 Chr 6:24) and 'the seer' (ha-khozeh, 2 Chr 29:30), suggesting his musical role carried prophetic weight — indeed, 1 Chronicles 25:2 says he 'prophesied under the direction of the king.' Twelve psalms bear his name as superscription (Ps 50, 73-83), forming a theologically distinctive collection marked by theodicy, divine judgment, and the fate of the wicked. His descendants remained active through the post-exilic period: 'the sons of Asaph' appear among the returning exiles (Ezra 2:41) and at the dedication of the rebuilt wall (Neh 12:35).

Asaph (proper name) (46×) The proper name Asaph (asaf, 'gatherer'), referring primarily to the Levitical musician whom David appointed as chief singer before the ark (1 Chr 6:39; 16:5-7), credited with prophetic gifting (2 Chr 29:30) and the composition of Psalms 50 and 73-83. His descendants — the 'sons of Asaph' — formed a hereditary guild of temple singers active from the first temple through the post-exilic restoration (Ezra 2:41; Neh 7:44; 12:35-46). Secondary bearers of the name include the father of Joah the recorder under Hezekiah (2 Kgs 18:18, 37; Isa 36:3, 22) and a keeper of the royal forest under Artaxerxes (Neh 2:8). All 46 occurrences refer to one of these individuals or to the Asaphite guild. ASA ASAPH NAMES

en: Asaf, Asaph | es: Asaf | fr: Asaph | de: Asaf, Asaph, sammelte 2Kgs 18:18; 2Kgs 18:37; 1Chr 6:39; 1Chr 9:15

אָסֻף H0624 Art / N-mp (3×)

storehouses (repositories for gathered provisions)

Storehouses or repositories where provisions, treasures, or temple supplies were kept. Chronicles mentions these structures near the temple gates, where Levitical gatekeepers guarded accumulated wealth and offerings. Nehemiah lists storehouses among the posts where temple singers and gatekeepers served. These buildings represented organizational infrastructure necessary for sustained worship and community life, requiring trusted personnel to manage what had been gathered for communal and sacred use.

(3×) 1 Chronicles 26:15 assigns the lot for the storehouse to Obed-edom's sons, positioning these repositories near the south gate of the temple complex. 1 Chronicles 26:17 specifies guard assignments, with Levites posted 'at the storehouse' to protect accumulated goods. Nehemiah 12:25 lists gatekeepers serving 'at the storehouses of the gates,' suggesting multiple storage facilities around the temple precincts. The Hebrew root relates to gathering or collecting, making storehouses literally 'places of what has been gathered'—whether grain, treasure, or sacred vessels. STOREHOUSE GRANARY

en: and-for-the-storehouses, in-storehouses-of, the-storehouses | es: en-almacenes-de, los-almacenes, y-para-los-almacenes | fr: [באסף], [והאספים], [ולאספים] | de: [באספי], [והאספים], [ולאספים] 1Chr 26:15; 1Chr 26:17; Neh 12:25

אָסֵף H0625 N-msc (3×)

gathering, harvest, ingathering (the act or time of collecting produce)

The act or season of gathering crops, particularly summer fruit. Isaiah uses it to describe the anticipated harvest that will fail, and metaphorically for how a destroying army devours like swarming locusts gather everything in their path. Micah laments finding no fruit at gathering time. The term emphasizes the action and timing of harvest rather than the stored result, capturing the critical moment when agricultural labor reaches fruition—or heartbreakingly fails to produce.

(3×) Isaiah 32:10 warns that 'the gathering will not come'—a failed harvest that leaves the confident troubled. Isaiah 33:4 compares military plunder to 'the gathering of the locust,' an image of thorough, consuming collection that leaves nothing behind. Micah 7:1 uses first-person lament: 'I am like one who gathers summer fruit'—but finding none, expressing spiritual barrenness through agricultural metaphor. The gathering-time represents expectation and vulnerability: the moment when a year's labor either yields abundance or reveals devastating loss. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-gatherings-of-, like-the-gathering, the-gathering | es: como-recogedores-de, cosecha, recolección-de | fr: [אסף], rassembler | de: [כאספי], sammelte Isa 32:10; Isa 33:4; Mic 7:1

אֲסֵפָה H0626 N-fs (1×)

A gathering, a collecting; verbal noun describing the act of gathering prisoners or captives together

This noun denotes the act of gathering, collecting, or assembling. In Isaiah 24:22, it appears in a difficult phrase describing prisoners being 'gathered with a gathering into the pit.' The expression may be emphatic ('truly gathered') or describe the manner of their collection. The context is eschatological judgment where hostile powers are imprisoned, awaiting final judgment. The verbal noun emphasizes the action of assembling or bringing together these captive forces.

(1×) Isaiah 24:22 contains this term in the phrase describing how enemies are 'gathered (with a gathering) as prisoners unto the pit.' Spanish 'reunión de' (gathering of) captures the nominal sense. The construction may be emphatic or descriptive—they are assembled collectively, en masse, into confinement. This apocalyptic imagery depicts divine judgment comprehensively imprisoning hostile powers, who remain confined until their final visitation. The noun stresses the totality of their assembly. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-gathering | es: como-reunión-de | fr: [אספה] | de: [אספה] Isa 24:22

אֲסֵפָה H0627 N-fp (1×)

Collections, assemblies; plural noun in Ecclesiastes 12:11, possibly referring to collected sayings or assemblies of wise teachers

This term refers to collections or assemblies. In Ecclesiastes 12:11, it appears in the phrase 'masters of assemblies' or 'masters of collections,' in a passage describing wise sayings as nails firmly fixed. The meaning is debated: either (1) members of learned assemblies—wise teachers gathered in scholarly communities, or (2) the wise sayings themselves, called 'masters of collections' because they are well-organized, collected teachings. Both views emphasize the authoritative, organized nature of wisdom.

(1×) Ecclesiastes 12:11 uses this term in a famously difficult phrase comparing wise words to firmly driven nails, given by 'masters of assemblies/collections.' Post-biblical Hebrew uses related terms for assemblies or gatherings. The phrase might indicate wise teachers as members of learned communities, or refer to the collected, systematized nature of their teachings. Either way, it points to wisdom's organized, established, authoritative character—not random observations but collected, refined truth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: collections | es: colecciones | fr: אספות | de: [אספות] Eccl 12:11

אַסַּפְסֻף H0628 Conj-w (1×)

And the rabble, and the mixed multitude; noun describing a mixed crowd or disorderly mob, used of camp followers at the Exodus

This term refers to a mixed rabble or collection of people, specifically the non-Israelite camp followers who accompanied Israel out of Egypt. In Numbers 11:4, 'the rabble' among them had strong cravings for meat and influenced the Israelites to complain against the manna. This mixed multitude—probably Egyptians and others who joined the Exodus—became a source of discontent and temptation. They exemplify how outside influences can corrupt community faithfulness.

(1×) Numbers 11:4 identifies 'the rabble' (asafsuf) among the Israelites as instigators of the craving for meat, sparking widespread complaint. Spanish 'chusma' (rabble/mob) captures the pejorative tone. These mixed multitude camp followers, who attached themselves to Israel during the Exodus, lacked the covenant relationship and became agents of discontent. Their craving infected Israel, leading to the quail judgment. The term suggests a disorganized, unreliable collection of hangers-on rather than covenant people. NEIGHBOR AND FRIEND

en: and-the-rabble | es: Y-la-chusma | fr: et-le-rabble | de: und-der-rabble Num 11:4

אָסְפַּרְנָא H0629 Adv (7×)

Thoroughly, with all diligence; an Aramaic adverb denoting completeness and careful execution of official decrees.

An Aramaic adverb found exclusively in the book of Ezra, used in the context of Persian imperial correspondence to convey that something should be done with thoroughness and full diligence. It appears in royal decrees concerning the rebuilding of the Jerusalem temple (Ezra 5:8; 6:8, 12-13) and Artaxerxes' commission to Ezra (7:17, 21, 26). The word derives from Old Persian roots meaning 'complete' or 'correct,' reflecting the administrative precision of the Persian bureaucracy that governed Judah during the Second Temple period.

(7×) Denotes thoroughness, diligence, and completeness in carrying out an action — particularly royal edicts. Every occurrence appears in Aramaic sections of Ezra within Persian governmental decrees. The English 'diligently,' Spanish 'diligentemente,' and French 'avec diligence' all converge on the idea of careful, complete execution. The German 'eilig' (hastily) captures a secondary nuance of urgency, but the core meaning is thoroughness rather than speed, as confirmed by BDB's connection to Old Persian 'aspere' (complete). Cognate to Old Aramaic אספרן found on weights meaning 'complete, correct' (Ezra 5:8; 7:21, 26). ACCURACY AND PRECISION

en: diligently | es: diligentemente | fr: avec-diligence | de: eilig Ezra 5:8; Ezra 6:8; Ezra 6:12; Ezra 6:13; Ezra 7:17

אַסְפָּתָא H0630 N-proper-ms (1×)

Aspatha, personal name; the third son of Haman listed among those killed by the Jews in Esther 9:7

Aspatha was the third son of Haman the Agagite, killed along with his nine brothers when the Jews defended themselves against their enemies. The name is Persian, possibly meaning 'given by the horse' (sacred) according to Persian etymology. The listing of all ten sons by name in Esther 9 emphasizes the complete reversal of Haman's planned destruction of the Jews—his own family line is cut off instead. Their death represents the failure of Amalekite enmity against Israel.

(1×) Esther 9:7 lists Aspatha third among Haman's ten sons executed on the day of Jewish self-defense. The preservation of all ten Persian names (unusual in Hebrew Scripture) emphasizes the completeness of the reversal—the genocidal plotter's own line is exterminated. The probable Persian etymology ('given by the sacred horse') shows authentic Persian nomenclature. The sons' death fulfills the principle that those who plot Israel's destruction bring destruction on their own house. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Aspatha | es: Aspata | fr: [אספתא] | de: [אספתא] Esth 9:7

אָסַר H0631 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fp (73×)

To tie, bind, imprison; bind by a vow; harness animals; as substantive, a prisoner or captive.

Asar is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb for binding in all its dimensions — physical, legal, agricultural, and custodial. Joseph binds Simeon before his brothers' eyes (Gen 42:24), a woman's vow 'binds' her soul (Num 30:2-6), Pharaoh harnesses his chariot (Exod 14:6), and the Psalmist celebrates God who 'sets the prisoners free' (Ps 146:7). The Semitic cognates are remarkably stable: Arabic asara, Aramaic asar, Ethiopic asara, and Akkadian asāru all preserve the core 'bind/tie' meaning, making this one of the best-attested pan-Semitic roots. What is striking is how naturally the physical act of tying extends into law, agriculture, and social control — wherever something or someone is fastened, restrained, or held in place, asar is the verb that appears.

1. bind or tie physically (30×) To bind or tie physically with ropes, cords, or fetters — the core sense at 30 occurrences. Joseph binds Simeon (Gen 42:24), Jacob ties his donkey's foal to the vine (Gen 49:11), and the Philistines bind Samson with new ropes (Judg 15:13) and bronze fetters (Judg 16:21). Arabic asara and Akkadian asāru both preserve this basic physical restraint meaning. Spanish atar and French lier map cleanly. The sense encompasses both temporary tying (ropes to an object) and punitive binding (fettering a captive), unified by the physical act of fastening. STRIKING AND REFERENCE
en: and-bound-him, and-he-bound-him, and-imprisoned-him | es: Atando, Para-atar, Y-lo-apresó | fr: [ויאסרהו], et-il-lié-lui, et-imprisoned-lui | de: [אסרם], [ויאסרהו], binding Gen 42:24; Gen 49:11; Num 30:2; Judg 15:10; Judg 15:12

2. be bound or fettered (16×) To be bound, fettered, or held in bonds — 16 occurrences in passive (Qal passive participle), Nifal, and Pual forms. Joseph is 'bound' in the prison house (Gen 39:20), the butler and baker are 'bound' (Gen 40:5), and Samson asks to be 'bound' to test his strength (Judg 16:6). Spanish atado/atados and French enchaîné confirm the passive state. The distinction from sense 1 is voice-driven: the subject undergoes restraint rather than performing it. This cluster includes predicate uses ('he was bound') as opposed to the substantivized participle of sense 4. BINDING AND TYING en: be-bound, bound, let-be-bound | es: atadas, atado, atados | fr: [אסורים], enchaîné, lia | de: [אסור], [אסורים], binden Gen 39:20; Gen 40:5; Gen 42:16; Gen 42:19; Judg 16:6

3. bind by vow or obligation (11×) To bind by a vow, oath, or solemn obligation — 11 occurrences concentrated in Numbers 30, the definitive chapter on the binding force of women's vows. A woman 'binds herself' (Num 30:3), her father or husband may annul what 'binds her soul' (Num 30:4-6). The metaphorical extension from physical ropes to legal obligation is cross-linguistically natural: Spanish ató ('tied') serves for both, and the English 'binding obligation' preserves the same metaphor. Arabic asara likewise extends from physical to legal binding in Islamic jurisprudence. The vow context makes this a distinct legal-religious sense. BINDING BY VOW
en: and-binds, and-you-shall-harness, bound | es: ató, y-ataréis, y-se-ate | fr: elle-lia, et-binds, et-tu-devra-attelage | de: band, sie-band, und-binds Num 30:3; Num 30:4; Num 30:5; Num 30:6

4. prisoner or captive (8×) Substantivized passive participle: a prisoner, captive, or bound one — 8 occurrences where asur functions as a noun. Pharaoh's officers are in the 'prison house' with the 'bound ones' (Gen 39:20, 40:3), Samson grinds grain as a 'prisoner' (Judg 16:21), and God 'sets free the prisoners' (Ps 146:7). Spanish presos and French prisonniers both use dedicated 'prisoner' nouns rather than participial forms, confirming full lexicalization. The shift from verbal participle to substantive noun is a standard Hebrew pattern, but the high frequency and distinct reference (a class of persons) marks it as a real sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: [prisoners-of], and-to-prisoners, the-prisoners | es: [prisioneros-de], a-los-presos, los-presos | fr: [prisonniers-de], et-lier, le-prisoners | de: [האסורים], binden, der-prisoners Gen 39:20; Gen 40:3; Judg 16:21; Judg 16:25; Ps 146:7

5. harness or yoke animals (7×) To harness, hitch, or yoke animals to a vehicle — 7 occurrences in military and agricultural narrative. Joseph harnesses his chariot to meet Jacob (Gen 46:29), Pharaoh harnesses his chariot for the pursuit (Exod 14:6), and Elijah tells Ahab to 'harness up' (1 Kgs 18:44). Spanish enganchar ('to hitch') and the English 'harness' both select specialized animal-yoking vocabulary distinct from generic 'bind,' confirming a domain shift. The physical action (tying straps to animals) is still binding, but the agricultural-military frame gives it a distinct collocational profile. PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: and-harnessed, and-he-harnessed, and-they-harnessed | es: Engancha, Y-aparejó, Y-enganchó | fr: attelage, et-harnessed, et-il-harnessed | de: binden, harness, und-er-harnessed Gen 46:29; Exod 14:6; 1Sam 6:10; 1Kgs 18:44; 2Kgs 9:21

6. (1×) A single ambiguous occurrence at 1 Kgs 20:14 where the Hebrew text and versions diverge on interpretation. English 'will begin' and Spanish comenzará ('will begin') suggest a reading of asar as initiating battle, possibly a textual corruption or a rare idiomatic use meaning 'to join battle' (i.e., 'bind' the engagement). Arabic and Korean renderings also reflect uncertainty. This may belong with the physical binding sense applied to military engagement, or it may reflect a scribal issue — the evidence is insufficient to assign it confidently to another cluster. BINDING AND TYING
en: will-begin | es: comenzará | fr: fera-begin | de: wird-begin 1Kgs 20:14

אִסָּר H0632 Conj-w / N-mpc / 3fs (11×)

Bond, binding obligation — a sworn vow or self-imposed restriction, used exclusively for a woman's vow subject to paternal or marital authority

The noun אִסָּר (issar) denotes a binding obligation or sworn restriction placed upon oneself, appearing exclusively in the legislation of Numbers 30 concerning women's vows. The chapter distinguishes between a neder (vow to do something) and an issar (a self-denial bond — an obligation to abstain). A young woman's issar can be annulled by her father on the day he hears it (Num 30:4-5), and a married woman's issar can be annulled or upheld by her husband (Num 30:7-8, 10-13). The word derives from the root אסר ('to bind, tie'), emphasizing the constraining, obligatory character of the commitment. Spanish 'juramento/voto' and French 'engagement' both approximate the binding force.

bond, vow, obligation (11×) A self-imposed binding obligation or restrictive vow, specifically a commitment to abstain or deny oneself something. Used exclusively in Numbers 30:2-14 within the legislation governing women's vows. The text pairs it with neder (נֶדֶר) as a complementary category: the neder pledges positive action while the issar pledges self-denial. A father may annul his unmarried daughter's issar on the day he learns of it (Num 30:4-5), and a husband may annul or ratify his wife's issar (Num 30:7-8, 10-13). From the root אסר ('to bind'), stressing the constraining nature of the obligation. Spanish 'voto obligatorio' and English 'binding obligation' both capture the legal force. BOND OBLIGATION VOW en: and-for-bond-of, and-her-bond, and-her-bonds | es: obligaciones-de-ella, obligación, y-de-obligación-de | fr: et-pour-lien-de, et-sa-bonds, et-sa-lien | de: bond, ihr-bonds, und-fuer-bond-von Num 30:2; Num 30:3; Num 30:4; Num 30:5

אֵסָר H0633 N-ms (7×)

An interdict or binding decree; an Aramaic legal term for an irrevocable royal prohibition, used exclusively in Daniel 6.

An Aramaic masculine noun meaning 'interdict' or 'binding decree,' derived from the root meaning 'to bind.' It appears only in Daniel 6 in connection with the decree engineered by Darius's officials to trap Daniel — a law of the Medes and Persians that could not be revoked. The word carries the force of something that legally binds or constrains, emphasizing the irrevocable nature of the edict. Its seven occurrences all cluster within a single dramatic narrative, underscoring the inescapable legal trap set against Daniel's faithful prayer life.

the interdict (7×) A formal, legally binding interdict or prohibition issued by royal authority. All seven occurrences appear in Daniel 6:7-15, describing the decree that forbade prayer to anyone except King Darius for thirty days. The Spanish 'prohibición' and English 'interdict' both capture the restrictive legal force, while the French 'lier' (to bind) preserves the etymological connection to the root אסר (to bind, restrain). The emphatic form אֱסָרָא and the construct אֱסַר appear in various syntactic positions — absolute, construct, and emphatic — but all refer to the same irrevocable royal decree (Dan 6:8-9, 13, 15). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-interdict, interdict, interdict-of | es: la-prohibición, la-prohibición-de, prohibición | fr: et-lier, lier | de: [אסר], [אסרא], [ואסרא] Dan 6:7; Dan 6:8; Dan 6:9; Dan 6:12

אֲסַרְחַדּוֹן H0634 N-proper-ms (6×)

Esarhaddon — Assyrian king (681–669 BCE), son of Sennacherib, who resettled peoples in Samaria.

Esarhaddon (Akkadian Aššur-aḫu-iddina, 'Ashur has given a brother') was the king of Assyria who reigned from 681 to 669 BCE.

He came to power after the assassination of his father Sennacherib by two of his own sons (2 Kgs 19:37 = Isa 37:38), a dramatic fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy. Ezra 4:2 records that the Samaritan settlers who opposed the rebuilding of the Jerusalem temple claimed to have been resettled by Esarhaddon — a detail that anchors the post-exilic conflict in Assyrian imperial policy. The name consistently appears in its Hebraized two-part form across all occurrences.

Esarhaddon (proper name) (6×) The proper name of the Assyrian king Esarhaddon (אֲסַרְחַדֹּן, Akkadian Aššur-aḫu-iddina, 'Ashur has given a brother'), who reigned 681–669 BCE. He succeeded his father Sennacherib after the latter's assassination by his own sons (2 Kgs 19:37 = Isa 37:38), fulfilling Isaiah's prophecy of divine judgment. In Ezra 4:2, the Samaritan colonists invoke Esarhaddon as the king who resettled them in the land, grounding the post-exilic temple-rebuilding conflict in Assyrian deportation policy. Multilingual glosses split the name into its two elements ('Esar' + 'Chaddon'), reflecting the hyphenated Hebrew form. ASSYRIA NATION PERSON en: Chaddon, Esar, his-son | es: Esar, Esar-, Hadón | fr: Chaddon, Esar, [אסר] | de: Chaddon, Esar, [אסר] 2Kgs 19:37; Ezra 4:2; Isa 37:38

אֶסְתֵּר H0635 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (54×)
Esther – the Jewish queen of Persia, heroine of the book bearing her name, also known as Hadassah Esther (possibly from Old Persian stara, 'star,' or connected to the goddess Ishtar) is the proper name of the Jewish woman who became queen of Persia under Ahasuerus. Born Hadassah ('myrtle'), she was an orphan raised by her cousin Mordecai of the tribe of Benjamin. All 55 occurrences are confined to the Book of Esther, where she courageously risks her life to save the Jewish people from Haman's decree. The arc from her selection as queen (Esth 2:17) through 'if I perish, I perish' (Esth 4:16) to her triumph makes her one of the Hebrew Bible's most celebrated heroines.

Esther (proper name) (54×) The Jewish queen of Persia who saved her people from Haman's genocidal plot. Her name may derive from Persian 'star' or the goddess Ishtar; her Hebrew name Hadassah means 'myrtle' (Esth 2:7). All 55 occurrences fall within the Book of Esther, from queenship (Esth 2:17) through courageous intervention (Esth 4:16). Spanish Ester, French and German Esther preserve the name uniformly. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Esther | es: Ester | fr: Esther | de: Esther Esth 2:7; Esth 2:8; Esth 2:10; Esth 2:11; Esth 2:15

אָע H0636 N-msd (5×)
Wood, timber, or beam — Aramaic noun for lumber used in construction or as material for idols.
An Aramaic noun corresponding to Hebrew 'ets' (wood/tree), appearing exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel. In Ezra 5:8 and 6:4 it denotes construction timber and beams used in the rebuilding of the Jerusalem temple, while in Ezra 6:11 it refers to a beam from a demolished house used for punishment. In Daniel 5:4 and 5:23 the emphatic form designates the material of pagan idols. The Spanish 'madera' and French 'bois' both capture the generic sense of 'wood,' while the English glosses helpfully distinguish 'timber' from 'beam.'

(5×) Wood or timber as a building material and as the substance of carved objects. In the Ezra passages (5:8; 6:4, 11) the word refers to hewn lumber and structural beams for the temple reconstruction under Darius's decree. In Daniel 5:4 and 5:23 it shifts to the material composition of idols — gods 'of gold, silver, bronze, iron, wood, and stone.' The English glosses usefully split 'timber' and 'beam,' though the underlying Aramaic word is one lexeme. French 'bois' and Spanish 'madera' both render it as a single undifferentiated term for wood. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: a-beam, and-timber, timber | es: madera, y-madera | fr: [אע], [ואע], bois | de: [אע], [אעא], [ואע] Ezra 5:8; Ezra 6:4; Ezra 6:11; Dan 5:4; Dan 5:23

אַף H0637 Conj-w / Conj (134×)
Also, indeed, even, yea; an emphatic conjunction adding force, marking inclusion, or introducing a fortiori arguments.
One of Hebrew's most versatile rhetorical particles, ʾap functions as an intensifier that adds weight wherever it appears. It can simply mean 'also' (Gen 40:16), but it regularly escalates to 'indeed, surely' when launching emphatic declarations in poetry (Ps 16:6-9). In argument it powers the qal waḥomer ('how much more/less') pattern beloved by biblical and rabbinic reasoning (1 Sam 14:30; 2 Sam 16:11). Though prose prefers gam for plain addition, ʾap is the poet's and orator's chosen tool for rhetorical punch.

1. indeed, surely (emphatic) (51×) The emphatic-affirmative use: 'indeed, surely, yea.' Comprising 51 occurrences, this sense launches forceful declarations, especially in poetry. Ps 16:6-9 stacks four ʾap clauses to build crescendo praise. Translations render it as 'indeed/ciertamente/aussi/ja,' each capturing rhetorical reinforcement rather than mere addition. ADDITIVE PARTICLES
en: Indeed, also, also- | es: También-, aun, ciertamente | fr: aussi | de: auch, ja- Gen 3:1; Ps 16:6; Ps 16:7; Ps 16:9; Ps 18:48

2. also, too (additive) (44×) The additive-inclusive use: 'also, too.' With 44 occurrences, this is the plain conjunctive function, often as waʾap ('and also'). Lev 26 uses it repeatedly to pile up covenant consequences. BDB notes that gam is more common in prose for this function, making ʾap the more elevated or marked additive. Spanish 'también' and German 'auch' consistently appear here. ADDITIVE PARTICLES
en: also, also-, indeed | es: Ciertamente, Ciertamente-, También- | fr: aussi, aussi- | de: auch, auch-, ja Gen 40:16; Lev 26:16; Lev 26:24; Lev 26:28; Lev 26:39

3. how much more/less (a fortiori) (22×) The a fortiori particle: 'how much more' or 'how much less,' typically in the pattern ʾap ki. This powers 22 arguments from lesser to greater — if David's men feared in Judah, 'how much more' in Keilah (1 Sam 23:3). Spanish 'cuánto más/menos' and German 'wie viel mehr' show translators recognizing the logical escalation structure. ADDITIVE PARTICLES
en: and-how-much-more, how-much-less, how-much-more | es: Ciertamente, Cuanto-más, Cuánto-menos | fr: aussi, comment-beaucoup-plus, et-comment-beaucoup-plus | de: auch, und-wie-much-mehr, und-wie-viel-mehr Deut 31:27; 1Sam 14:30; 1Sam 23:3; 2Sam 4:11; 2Sam 16:11

4. even (scalar/intensive) (7×) The scalar-intensive use: 'even,' marking an extreme or unexpected case. Seven occurrences highlight something beyond expectation. Lev 26:44 assures that 'even' in exile God will not utterly reject Israel. Job 14:3 asks whether God would bring 'even' such a fragile creature to judgment. German 'sogar' and Spanish 'aun' pinpoint this scalar force. ADDITIVE PARTICLES en: and-even, and-yet-, even | es: Aun, También, Y-aun | fr: aussi, et-aussi, et-encore- | de: auch, sogar, und-auch Lev 26:44; 2Kgs 2:14; Neh 9:18; Job 6:27; Job 14:3

5. indeed? (interrogative-emphatic) (6×) The interrogative-emphatic use in questions: 'indeed? really?' Six occurrences appear with interrogative he, expressing surprise or challenge. Gen 18:13 asks 'Shall I indeed bear a child?' and Job 40:8 challenges 'Will you indeed annul my judgment?' The particle intensifies the question's rhetorical force beyond simple interrogation. ADDITIVE PARTICLES en: indeed, is-it-, will-you-indeed | es: Acaso-también, acaso-también, ¿Acaso | fr: aussi, en-effet, le-aussi | de: der-auch, soll-auch, willst-du-auch Gen 18:13; Gen 18:23; Gen 18:24; Job 34:17; Job 40:8

6. moreover, furthermore (3×) The discourse-connective use: 'moreover, furthermore,' adding a supplementary point that strengthens the argument. Three occurrences (1 Chr 16:30; Esth 5:12; Ezek 23:40) use ʾap to append a climactic or additional detail. Spanish 'además' and English 'moreover' signal this connective-additive function. ADDITIVE PARTICLES
en: and-moreover, indeed, moreover | es: Y-aún, además, ciertamente- | fr: et-aussi, même | de: auch, und-auch 1Chr 16:30; Esth 5:12; Ezek 23:40

7. (1×) A single concessive use at Ps 44:9 rendered 'yet' in English and 'sin embargo' in Spanish, where the particle introduces a surprising reversal: despite all the preceding affirmations, God has rejected his people. This rare adversative shade shows ʾap can pivot from addition to contrast when context demands it. CONJUNCTIONS

AND CONTRAST
en: yet | es: Sin-embargo | fr: aussi | de: ja Ps 44:9

אַף H0638 Conj-w / Conj (4×)

Also, even, moreover (Aramaic conjunction adding emphasis or inclusion to a clause).

An Aramaic conjunction meaning 'also' or 'even,' always appearing in the combined form וְאַף ('and also'). It functions as an additive and sometimes intensifying particle in the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel. Cognate with Hebrew אַף and attested in Egyptian Aramaic and Palmyrene, it belongs to the common Semitic stock of emphatic particles. All four occurrences reinforce or extend a preceding statement, as when Daniel 6:22 reports that 'also before you, O king, I have done no wrong.'

(4×) Additive conjunction 'also, even, moreover' in Biblical Aramaic, always paired with waw (וְאַף). In Ezra 5:10 and 5:14, it adds supplementary information in official Persian-era correspondence—'and also we asked their names' and 'and also the vessels.' Ezra 6:5 uses it to extend Cyrus's decree to include the temple vessels. Daniel 6:22 employs it for emphatic assertion of innocence. Spanish 'y también,' French 'et aussi,' and German 'und auch' all uniformly reflect the additive-emphatic function. ADDITIVE PARTICLES en: and-also | es: Y-también, y-también | fr: et-aussi, et-même | de: und-auch Ezra 5:10; Ezra 5:14; Ezra 6:5; Dan 6:22

אַף H0639 Prep-b / N-ms (276×)

Nostril, nose, face; by metonymy anger or wrath; in the dual idiom 'erekh appayim, slow to anger.

Few Hebrew words illustrate the body-to-emotion pathway as vividly as 'ap. It begins with the physical nostril — the organ through which God breathes life into Adam (Gen 2:7) and through which the hot wind of divine fury blasts forth (Exod 15:8). From flaring nostrils the word slides naturally into 'anger,' its most frequent sense by far, appearing in the thunderous phrase charon 'ap ('burning of anger') over forty times. The dual form 'appayim can mean 'face' (the two-sided countenance one bows before a superior) or serve as the second element in the great divine self-description 'erekh 'appayim — 'slow to anger,' literally 'long of nostrils,' first revealed at Sinai (Exod 34:6) and echoed across Psalms, Prophets, and Wisdom. Arabic anf, Aramaic 'anpin, and Ethiopic 'anf all preserve the nasal root, while every target language independently splits the anatomical and emotional senses — Spanish ira versus nariz, Korean 코 versus 분노, Swahili hasira versus pua — confirming that this is not just a translation convention but a genuine polysemy recognized across language families.

1. divine anger, wrath of God (169×) Split from sense 83655. Criteria: Anger or wrath as a divine attribute; 'charon ap YHWH' (the burning anger of the LORD); God's judicial response to sin and covenant violation en: -the-anger-of, anger-of, anger-of- | es: ira-de, ira-de-, la-ira-de | fr: -le-colère-de, colère-de, colère-de- | de: -der-Zorn-von, Zorn-von, Zorn-von- Exod 4:14; Exod 22:24; Exod 32:10; Num 11:1; Num 11:10

2. human anger, rage (41×) Split from sense 83655. Criteria: Human emotional anger, fury, or indignation; interpersonal conflict and familial rage en: anger, anger-of, his-anger | es: ira, ira-de, ira-de- | fr: aussi, colère, colère-de | de: Zorn, Zorn-von, anger-of Gen 27:45; Gen 30:2; Gen 39:19; Gen 44:18; Gen 49:6

3. nose, nostrils (30×) The literal anatomical sense: nostril, nose, or snout — 30 occurrences preserving the original body-part reference. God breathes into Adam's nostrils (Gen 2:7), the breath of life is in the nostrils of all flesh (Gen 7:22), and Rebekah receives a ring on her nose (Gen 24:47). The dual 'appayim sometimes specifies the two nostrils explicitly. Spanish nariz, Korean 코, and Arabic ڤ all select nasal vocabulary here rather than emotion terms. In poetic theophany passages like 2 Sam 22:9 and Ps 18:9, smoke goes up from God's nostrils — a liminal context where anatomy and fury merge, the very hinge on which the metaphorical extension turns.

GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Your-nostrils, from-your-nostrils, he | es: de-vuestras-narices, en-mi-nariz, en-mi-nariz. | fr: Ton-narines, colère, dans-Son-nostrils | de: Dein-nostrils, Zorn, auch Gen 2:7; Gen 7:22; Gen 24:47; Exod 15:8; Num 11:20

4. face, countenance (21×) The dual form 'appayim used for 'face' or 'countenance' — 21 occurrences concentrated in prostration formulas (naphal 'al 'appayim, 'fell on his face'). The dual ('two-sidedness') naturally extends from nostrils to the whole face. This sense dominates in gestures of reverence: Abraham bows before the Hittites (Gen 23:7), Joseph's brothers before him (Gen 42:6), Balaam before the angel (Num 22:31). Spanish rostro, German Angesicht, and Korean 얼굴 all select face-specific vocabulary, distinguishing this from both the nasal and the emotional senses. The idiom 'by the sweat of your face' (Gen 3:19) belongs here too. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: face, face-your, faces | es: a-su-rostro, ante-rostro-de, rostro | fr: colère, face, face-ton | de: Angesicht, Zorn, auf-Angesicht Gen 3:19; Gen 19:1; Gen 42:6; Gen 48:12; Num 22:31

5. slow to anger (idiom) (14×) The frozen idiom 'erekh 'appayim — 'slow to anger,' literally 'long of nostrils' — 14 occurrences, overwhelmingly in liturgical or hymnic contexts describing a divine attribute. First proclaimed at Sinai in God's self-revelation (Exod 34:6), then echoed at Kadesh (Num 14:18), in Nehemiah's prayer (9:17), and across the Psalter (86:15; 103:8; 145:8). The idiom is also applied to human patience in Proverbs (14:29; 15:18; 16:32). Spanish tardo para la ira and Korean 노하기를 더디 하시는 both paraphrase the metaphor rather than preserving it, while the Hebrew freezes the bodily image into a theological formula. This is functionally a lexicalized compound, not a productive combination. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: anger, patience, temper | es: de-iras, ira, iras | fr: colère, narine, nez | de: Zorn, zu-Zorn Exod 34:6; Num 14:18; Neh 9:17; Ps 86:15; Ps 103:8

6. (1×) A single disputed occurrence at 1 Sam 1:5 where 'appayim appears to mean 'double' (a double portion). The multilingual evidence — English 'double,' Spanish doble, French double — consistently renders a quantity rather than nose, face, or anger. Some scholars emend or reinterpret this as a different root, but the MT reading stands as a hapax usage of the dual form in a distributive or multiplicative sense, possibly meaning 'a face-portion' (i.e., the honorific share set before the guest's face). The textual difficulty is genuine and unresolved. DOUBLE TWOFOLD en: double | es: doble | fr: double | de: double 1Sam 1:5

אָפַד H0640 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-2ms (2×)

gird on, bind on (specifically the ephod)

This denominative verb means to gird on the ephod, the special priestly garment. It appears only in Exodus and Leviticus during Aaron's ordination, describing the sacred act of binding the ephod onto the high priest with its skillfully woven band.

(2×) Used exclusively for girding the ephod onto Aaron in Exodus 29:5 (command) and Leviticus 8:7 (execution). The verb derives from the noun 'ephod,' making it a technical term for this specific priestly investiture action. The parallel verb 'chagar' (gird) in Leviticus 8:7 clarifies the binding action involved in priestly consecration. BINDING BY VOW en: and-bound-it, and-you-shall-gird | es: y-ajustó, y-ceñirás | fr: et-lia-cela, et-tu—gird | de: und-band-es, und-du-soll-gird Exod 29:5; Lev 8:7

אֵפֹד H0641 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ephod, a personal name; father of Shemuel of Manasseh (Num 34:23)

Ephod appears as the name of a tribal leader's father in the wilderness period. Shemuel son of Ephod represented the tribe of Manasseh in the land division ceremonies. Though sharing a name with the priestly garment, this is a distinct personal name, common in the ancient Near East. The multilingual evidence consistently transliterates it as a proper name.

(1×) The single occurrence in Numbers 34:23 identifies Ephod as father of Shemuel, the Manassehite representative for land allotment. Cross-lingual consistency (English 'Ephod', Spanish 'Efod', French/German 'Ephod') confirms this as a personal name, not the priestly artifact, though the homonymy reflects the cultural prominence of priestly terminology in Hebrew naming practices. EPHOD PRIESTLY GARMENT

en: Ephod | es: Efod | fr: Ephod | de: Ephod Num 34:23

אֵפֹד H0642 N-fsc / 3ms (3×)

ephod, ephod-covering (priestly garment or its decorative band)

A term related to the priestly ephod, specifically referring to its skillfully woven band or to the covering/sheathing of idols with precious materials. Exodus uses it for the high priest's ephod band that held the garment in place. Isaiah employs it for the gold covering of cast images, parallel to silver plating of carved idols. The word shares the root with 'ephod' but supplies the construct and suffix forms, and extends metaphorically to any 'covering' or 'sheathing' that adorns.

(3×) Exodus 28:8 and 39:5 describe 'the skillfully woven band of the ephod' that secured the high priest's sacred garment, made with the same materials as the ephod itself—gold, blue, purple, scarlet, and fine linen. Isaiah 30:22 condemns idolatry: 'the covering of your cast images of gold'—using this term for the precious sheathing that makes idols attractive. The link between priestly vestments and idol-coverings is linguistic, not theological: both involve wrapping or overlaying with valuable material, but one serves true worship while the other represents misplaced devotion. EPHOD PRIESTLY GARMENT

en: its-ephod, of-your-cast-images | es: cobertura-de, su-efod | fr: [אפדת], son-éphod | de: [אפדת], sein-Ephod Exod 28:8; Exod 39:5; Isa 30:22

אַפַּדֹּן H0643 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

palace, royal residence with possessive suffix (Dan 11:45)

This rare Persian loanword denotes a palatial structure, specifically a throne room or royal residence. It appears in Daniel's apocalyptic vision describing the northern king's (Antiochus Epiphanes) final campaign. The Persian origin (apadâna) reflects the linguistic milieu of the exilic and post-exilic period. Daniel uses this technical architectural term to evoke the grandeur and hubris of the Seleucid king's ambitions.

(1×) In Daniel 11:45, the phrase 'tents of his palace' combines nomadic imagery (tents) with imperial architecture (palace), creating a vivid picture of military encampment with royal splendor. The cross-lingual glosses ('his-palace' in English, 'palacio-su' in Spanish, 'palais' in French) consistently recognize the possessive construction, emphasizing the king's personal dominion over his luxurious command post. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-palace | es: palacio-su | fr: palais | de: [אפדנו] Dan 11:45

אָפָה H0644 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (25×)

Bake; baker (as agent noun); be baked (passive)

The basic Hebrew verb for baking, covering the entire process of preparing bread and other foods by fire or oven. Its participial form doubles as the standard word for 'baker,' most memorably in the Joseph narrative where Pharaoh's chief baker (sar ha-ofim) dreams of baskets of baked goods (Genesis 40). The verb appears in everyday contexts—baking matzot for the Exodus (Exodus 12:39), baking manna in the wilderness (Exodus 16:23)—and in cultic legislation where offerings must be baked in prescribed ways (Leviticus 6:17, 7:9). Spanish 'hornear/panadero' and German 'backen' map neatly onto its dual verbal-nominal life.

1. baker (one who bakes) (12×) The Qal participle used as a substantive noun meaning 'baker'—a professional who bakes bread. Central to the Joseph narrative in Genesis 40, where the chief baker (sar ha-ofim) appears alongside the cupbearer. Also in 1 Samuel 8:13 (women as bakers) and Hosea 7:4-6 where the baker's oven becomes a political metaphor. Spanish 'panadero' and French equivalents confirm this agent-noun reading. BOIL COOK FOOD

en: a-baker, and-for-bakers, and-the-baker | es: de-panadero, los-panaderos, panadero | fr: [אפהם], [האפים], [מאפה] | de: [אפהם], [האפים], [מאפה] Gen 40:1; Gen 40:2; Gen 40:5; Gen 40:16; Gen 40:17

2. to bake (10×) The active Qal finite verb meaning 'to bake'—preparing food by heat in an oven or over fire. Covers everyday baking of bread (Isaiah 44:15,19), emergency baking of matzot (Genesis 19:3, Exodus 12:39), wilderness manna preparation (Exodus 16:23), and cultic bread preparation (Leviticus 24:5). The imperative 'efu' at Exodus 16:23 captures its domestic immediacy. BOIL COOK FOOD

en: I-baked, and-baked-it, and-bakes | es: Y-cocieron, cocí, entonces-cocerán | fr: [אפיתי], [ואפה], [יאפן] | de: [אפיתי], [ואפה], [יאפן] Gen 19:3; Exod 12:39; Exod 16:23; Lev 24:5

3. to be baked (3×) The Nifal passive stem: 'to be baked,' with the food item as grammatical subject rather than the person baking. Confined to Levitical legislation (Leviticus 6:17, 7:9, 23:17) where it specifies how offerings shall be prepared. French and German translations resort to periphrastic passives ('est baked,' 'ist gebacken'), underscoring the voice distinction. BOIL COOK FOOD

en: is-baked, shall-it-be-baked, they-shall-be-baked | es: fuere-horneada, se-horneará, serán-cocidas | fr: devra-cela-être-baked, est-baked, ils-devra-être-baked | de: ist-gebacken, sie-soll-sein-gebacken, soll-es-sein-gebacken Lev 6:17; Lev 7:9; Lev 23:17

אֲפוֹ H0645 Conj (15×)

then, now then — an enclitic emphatic particle used in questions and inferential statements

Epho is a subtle but rhetorically charged particle that intensifies questions and draws inferences. It adds urgency or emphasis much like English 'then' in 'who then was it?' Isaac's trembling question mi epho ('who then?', Gen 27:33) upon discovering Jacob's deception is its most dramatic occurrence. In Job it punctuates anguished reasoning: 'where then is my hope?' (17:15). The particle also appears in deliberative contexts: 'if it must be so, then do this' (Gen 43:11). German 'also/denn,' Spanish 'entonces/pues,' and French 'alors' each approximate this emphatic-inferential nuance.

then, therefore (emphatic particle) (15×) An enclitic emphatic particle intensifying interrogative or inferential statements. Characteristically paired with question words: mi epho ('who then?', Gen 27:33), ayyeh epho ('where then?', Judg 9:38; Isa 19:12; Job 17:15), ubammeh yivvada epho ('wherein shall it be known?', Exod 33:16). Also used in deliberative contexts (Gen 43:11). Functionally parallels Greek ara/pote and Latin tandem. THEN (TEMPORAL ADVERB)

en: indeed, then, therefore | es: entonces, es-él,, pues | fr: [אפוא], alors, c'est-pourquoi | de: [אפו], [אפוא], also Gen 27:33; Gen 27:37; Gen 43:11; Exod 33:16; Judg 9:38

אֵפוֹד H0646 Prep-l / N-ms (49×)

ephod — a priestly vestment worn over the shoulders, used in worship and oracular inquiry

The ephod is one of the most distinctive garments in the Hebrew Bible, a shoulder-piece worn by the high priest and described in elaborate detail in Exodus 28 and 39 — made of gold, blue, purple, and scarlet yarn interwoven with fine linen, bearing two onyx stones engraved with the names of Israel's twelve tribes. Yet the ephod also appears in humbler form: young Samuel ministers before the Lord wearing a linen ephod (1 Sam 2:18), and David dances before the ark girded with one (2 Sam 6:14). In several passages, the ephod is closely associated with oracular consultation — 'bring the ephod here' (1 Sam 23:9; 30:7) — suggesting it held or accompanied the Urim and Thummim. Gideon's golden ephod, tragically, becomes an object of idolatrous worship (Judg 8:27). The translations uniformly transliterate: Spanish 'efod,' French 'ephod,' German 'Ephod.'

ephod (priestly garment) (49×) A priestly vestment of varying elaborateness: in its fullest form, the high-priestly shoulder-garment of gold, blue, purple, and scarlet thread with onyx shoulder-stones

(Exod 28:6-12; 39:2-7), bearing the breastplate of judgment with the Urim and Thummim; in simpler form, a linen ephod worn by ordinary priests (1 Sam 22:18) and by Samuel and David in worship contexts (1 Sam 2:18; 2 Sam 6:14). The ephod's association with oracular inquiry (1 Sam 23:9; 30:7) and its potential for misuse as an idol (Judg 8:27; 17:5) show its centrality to Israel's cult. All 49 occurrences denote this single garment type across its various manifestations. EPHOD PRIESTLY GARMENT

en: the-ephod | es: el-efod | fr: l'éphod | de: das-Ephod Exod 25:7; Exod 28:4; Exod 28:6; Exod 28:12; Exod 28:15

אֲפִיחַ H0647 N-proper-ms (1×)

Aphiah, a personal name; ancestor of Saul (1 Sam 9:1)

Aphiah stands in Saul's genealogy as one of his ancestors in the Benjamite line. Though his etymology remains uncertain, his inclusion in the royal lineage establishes Saul's tribal credentials. The name appears nowhere else in Scripture, marking him as a figure known only through his descendant's fame. Genealogies like this anchored Israel's kings in their tribal heritage.

(1×) First Samuel 9:1 traces Saul's pedigree through multiple generations: 'Kish son of Abiel son of Zeror son of Becorath son of Aphiah, a Benjamite.' The consistent transliteration across languages (English/French/German 'Aphiah', Spanish 'Afíaj') treats this as an authentic personal name, preserving the historical memory of Saul's pre-monarchic lineage even when the name's meaning had been lost. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Aphiah | es: Afíaj | fr: Aphiah | de: Aphiah 1Sam 9:1

אָפִיל H0648 Adj-fp (1×)

late-ripening, of crops that mature after the main harvest (Exod 9:32)

This adjective describes wheat and spelt that escaped the seventh plague because they ripen later than barley and flax. The term captures an agricultural reality crucial to the plague narrative: God's judgment was selective and timed, leaving food sources for eventual survival. The root suggests something 'darkened' or 'concealed,' perhaps reflecting seeds still hidden in their protective husks.

(1×) Exodus 9:32 explains that 'the wheat and spelt were not destroyed, for they ripen late.' The multilingual evidence ('late' in English, 'tardíos' in Spanish, 'tard' in French, 'spaet' in German) unanimously recognizes the temporal dimension: these crops matured later in the growing season. This agricultural detail underscores the precision of divine judgment—devastating yet not utterly destroying Egypt's food supply. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: late | es: tardíos | fr: tard | de: spaet Exod 9:32

אַפַּיִם H0649 N-proper-ms (2×)

Appayim (son of Nadab, Judahite line)

Appayim was a son of Nadab in the genealogy of Judah. His name appears twice in consecutive verses of Chronicles, preserving the family line descended from Jerahmeel. The name itself may relate to the dual form of 'face' or 'nostrils,' though its precise meaning is uncertain.

(2×) Personal name in the Jerahmeelite genealogy (1 Chr 2:30-31). The dual references establish Appayim in the ancestral chain of Judah's clans. Transliterations remain fairly consistent (Appayim, Apayim) across languages, marking this individual's place in Chronicles' extensive genealogical records. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Appayim, and-Appayim | es: Apayim, y-Apayim | fr: [אפים], [ואפים] | de: [אפים], [ואפים] 1Chr 2:30; 1Chr 2:31

אָפִיק H0650 N-mpc / 2ms (19×)

Channel, watercourse, stream bed (wadi or ravine); tube or conduit (of bones/scales); a strong or mighty one.

Afiq is a poetic word for the carved-out channels through which water rushes — the wadis, ravines, and stream beds that score the Judean wilderness and burst to life during seasonal rains. The psalmist's longing in Psalm 42:1, 'As a deer pants toward channels of water,' uses afiq to evoke the dry beds that promise life-giving flow. When the Psalmist prays 'Restore our fortunes, O LORD, like channels in the Negev' (Ps 126:4), the image is of empty ravines suddenly filled. Spanish arroyos and French ruisseaux both capture the seasonal watercourse. Job extends the imagery metaphorically: the hippopotamus's bones are 'tubes of bronze' (Job 40:18) and the crocodile's scales form tight 'channels' (Job 41:15). A single curious occurrence in Job 12:21 uses the related form to mean 'mighty ones' — likely from a parallel root denoting strength.

1. watercourse, channel, stream bed (16×) A natural watercourse, channel, stream bed, wadi, or ravine through which water flows or once flowed. This dominant sense (16 occurrences) is concentrated in poetic and prophetic texts: the channels of the sea exposed at God's rebuke (2 Sam 22:16; Ps 18:15), the deer panting for streams of water (Ps 42:1), wadis in the Negev as an image of restoration (Ps 126:4), and Ezekiel's ravines and valleys (Ezek 6:3; 34:13; 36:4-6). Spanish arroyos/canales, French ruisseaux, and German Bachbett all converge on the seasonal watercourse. Job 6:15 compares treacherous friends to 'channels of a wadi' that vanish when you need them most. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-ravines, by-the-streams, channels-of | es: a-los-arroyos, arroyos-de, canales-de | fr: [אפיקי], channels-de, comme-ruisseau | de: Bachbett, [אפיקי], [אפיקיו] 2Sam 22:16; Job 6:15; Ps 18:15; Ps 42:1; Ps 126:4

2. tube, row, conduit (2×) A tube, conduit, or cylindrical row — the channel metaphor extended to non-aquatic physical structures. Two occurrences in Job's descriptions of great beasts: the hippopotamus's bones are 'tubes of bronze' (Job 40:18), and the crocodile's overlapping scales form tight 'channels of shields' (Job 41:15). Spanish tubos/canales and the English 'tubes' preserve the imagery of hollow cylindrical forms. The poet borrows the watercourse shape to describe anatomical marvels. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: are-channels-of, are-tubes-of | es: canales-de, tubos-de | fr: ruisseau | de: Bachbett Job 40:18; Job 41:15

3. mighty, strong one (1×) A mighty or strong one — likely from a related root afiq meaning 'firm, strong' rather than from the watercourse meaning. Only 1 occurrence: Job 12:21, where God 'pours contempt on the mighty' (or 'loosens the belt of the strong'). Spanish los fuertes ('the strong ones') renders the personal meaning clearly. Some scholars connect this to Aramaic cognates meaning 'strong,' suggesting a homonymic overlap rather than a semantic extension from 'channel.' POWER AND ABILITY

en: mighty | es: los-fuertes | fr: ruisseau | de: Bachbett Job 12:21

אֹפֶל H0651 Conj-w / Adj-ms (1×)

gloomy, dark; describing the Day of the LORD (Amos 5:20)

This adjective intensifies the description of divine judgment day, standing parallel to 'darkness' and opposite to 'brightness.' Amos employs it to shatter popular expectations: Israel anticipated the Day of the LORD as victory, but the prophet announces gloom and terror. The word evokes the oppressive darkness of coming judgment, where light has been extinguished.

(1×) In Amos 5:20's rhetorical question, 'Is not the Day of the LORD darkness and not light, gloom with no brightness in it?', the term reinforces total absence of hope. The cross-lingual glosses ('gloom' in English, 'tinieblas' in Spanish, 'sombre' in French, 'Dunkel' in German) consistently convey darkness, supporting the prophet's stark reversal of Israel's eschatological optimism into a vision of inescapable judgment. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: and-gloom | es: y-tinieblas | fr: et-sombre | de: und-Dunkel Amos 5:20

אֹפֶל H0652 Conj-w (9×)

Deep darkness, thick gloom; a poetic term for cosmic, existential, or calamitous obscurity.

A poetic noun evoking a profound, impenetrable darkness that transcends ordinary nightfall. Used exclusively in elevated literary contexts—Job and the Psalms—it describes the primordial darkness that seizes a cursed night (Job 3:6), the suffocating gloom of Sheol (Job 10:22), and the spiritual blindness from which God delivers (Isa 29:18). It frequently appears alongside חֹשֶׁךְ (darkness) and צַלְמָוֶת (shadow of death), forming a layered vocabulary of obscurity. Spanish 'tinieblas' and French 'obscurité' capture its heavy, foreboding quality.

darkness, gloom (9×) Thick, impenetrable darkness or gloom, used in poetic and wisdom literature to express dread, hiddenness, or calamity. In Job 3:6, darkness personified 'seizes' the night of Job's birth; in Job 10:22, it describes the underworld as a land of deep gloom; in Job 28:3, miners penetrate 'the stone of darkness' deep in the earth; and in Psalm 91:6, it denotes the terror that stalks at noonday's opposite. The figurative extension to calamity appears in Job 23:17 and 30:26, where expected light yields only gloom. French 'obscurité' and Spanish 'oscuridad/tinieblas' both convey the oppressive, layered quality of this darkness. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: and-out-of-gloom, darkness, gloom | es: en-oscuridad, las-tinieblas., oscuridad | fr: [ומאפל], dans-obscurité, obscurité | de: Dunkel, Finsternis, [ומאפל] Job 3:6; Job 10:22; Job 23:17; Job 28:3

אֲפֵלָה H0653 Prep-k (10×)

Darkness, deep gloom; both literal thick darkness (plague, night, Day of YHWH) and figurative darkness of calamity and judgment.

A feminine noun denoting thick, palpable darkness — the kind that swallows light entirely. It appears in some of Scripture's most dramatic scenes: the supernatural blackness of the ninth plague over Egypt (Exod 10:22), the terrifying darkness of the Day of YHWH stacked alongside cloud and thick cloud (Joel 2:2; Zeph 1:15), and the evening shadows where the adulteress lurks (Prov 7:9). Prophetic writers extend it figuratively for calamity and ruin — groping at noonday as in darkness (Deut 28:29), the slippery doom of false prophets (Jer 23:12), and Israel's moral night where hoped-for brightness yields only gloom (Isa 59:9). Spanish translations consistently use 'oscuridad' or 'tinieblas,' reinforcing the seamless bridge between physical and moral darkness in Hebrew thought.

1. darkness, deep gloom (literal) (5×) Literal thick darkness or deep gloom — the absence of light in its most intense form. This covers the supernatural plague-darkness over Egypt where Exodus 10:22 pairs it with 'darkness' (choshek), the ominous twilight of Proverbs 7:9 described alongside 'the pupil of the night,' and the eschatological Day of YHWH passages (Joel 2:2; Zeph 1:15) where it is heaped with cloud, thick cloud, and blackness to convey cosmic terror. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: and-darkness, and-gloom, and-thick-darkness | es: oscuras, y-densas-tinieblas, y-oscuridad | fr: [ואפלה], et-obscurité, et-ואפלה | de: [ואפלה], dick Exod 10:22; Prov 7:9; Isa 8:22; Joel 2:2; Zeph 1:15

2. darkness, gloom (figurative: calamity, judgment) (5×) Figurative darkness representing calamity, divine judgment, or spiritual ruin. Deuteronomy 28:29 uses it as a covenant-curse image — groping in gloom at noonday. Jeremiah 23:12 places false prophets on a slippery path into darkness. Isaiah 58:10 and 59:9 contrast it with noon-light and brightness (neghohoth), showing that moral darkness is as tangible as physical night. The French and German translations often leave the Hebrew untranslated here, suggesting translators found no single word adequate for this loaded metaphorical weight. DARKNESS AND GLOOM

en: and-your-gloom, in-darkness, in-the-darkness | es: en-la-oscuridad, en-tinieblas, es-como-oscuridad | fr: [באפלה], [באפלות], [ואפלתך] | de: [באפלה], [באפלות], [ואפלתך] Deut 28:29; Prov 4:19; Isa 58:10; Isa 59:9; Jer 23:12

אֶפְלָל H0654 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ephlal (Judahite, descendant of Sheshan)

Ephlal appears in the genealogy of Judah as a descendant of Sheshan through an Egyptian servant. The name occurs twice in the same verse, establishing a link in the family chain. The meaning is uncertain, though the Septuagint preserves various Greek renderings.

(2×) Appears twice in 1 Chronicles 2:37, connecting Sheshan's line through unconventional marriage to an Egyptian servant. This double mention emphasizes genealogical continuity despite the irregularity. The name's etymology remains unclear, though it functions clearly as a personal identifier in Judah's tribal records. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ephlal, and-Ephlal | es: Eflal, y-Eflal | fr: [אפלל], [ואפלל] | de: [אפלל], [ואפלל] 1Chr 2:37

אֹפֶן H0655 N-mpc / 3ms (1×)

circumstances, proper occasions; dual form indicating opportune timing (Prov 25:11)

This rare noun appears in Proverbs' metaphor about timely speech, literally 'on its circumstances' or 'at the right occasions.' The dual form suggests paired conditions or the perfect convergence of factors. The root meaning 'turning' or 'wheel' implies that circumstances revolve and return, and wisdom knows when the moment is ripe for speech.

(1×) Proverbs 25:11 declares: 'A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in settings of silver.' The phrase 'on its occasions' (or wheels/circumstances) emphasizes perfect timing. Translation divergence is notable: English 'its-occasions', Spanish 'sus-ruedas' (its wheels), French preserves the Hebrew, German likewise, revealing uncertainty whether this means 'proper timing' or 'wheeled settings' (like jeweler's turntable). The interpretive consensus favors temporal appropriateness over mechanical imagery. TIME AND SEASONS

en: its-occasions | es: sus-ruedas | fr: son-אפניו-lui | de: [אפניו] Prov 25:11

אָפַס H0656 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (5×)

To cease, fail, or come to an end — used of resources running out, oppressors perishing, and divine mercy seemingly stopping.

A verb appearing only in the Qal perfect third-person masculine singular, conveying the idea of something reaching its terminus or being exhausted. In Genesis 47:15–16 it describes money failing during the Egyptian famine, while in Isaiah 16:4 and 29:20 it announces the end of oppressors and tyrants — paired with synonyms for destruction (kalah, tam). In Psalm 77:8 it voices the psalmist's anguished question about whether God's steadfast love has permanently ceased. German glosses ('zu Ende ist,' 'hat kommen zu ein enden') vividly capture the finality, while Spanish '¿Acaso cesó?' preserves the interrogative force of the psalm.

(5×) To come to an end, cease, or be exhausted. The verb describes the complete depletion or termination of something — whether money running out (Gen 47:15–16), an oppressor being finished (Isa 16:4; 29:20, where it parallels kalah 'be consumed' and tam 'be complete'), or God's covenant loyalty apparently failing (Ps 77:8, paired with gamar 'be ended'). The Hebrew form is restricted to the Qal perfect 3ms, giving it a stative, resultative feel: the thing has already reached its end. Spanish '¿Acaso cesó?' at Psalm 77:8 captures the rhetorical force of the question, while German 'zu Ende ist' highlights the absolute finality of the cessation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: comes-to-an-end, gone, has-come-to-an-end | es: habrá-dejado-de-existir, se-acabó, ¿Acaso-cesó | fr: allé, extrémité, le-manquer | de: Ende, hat-kommen-zu-ein-enden, zu-Ende-ist Gen 47:15; Gen 47:16; Ps 77:8; Isa 16:4; Isa 29:20

אֶפֶס H0657a Prep-m / Adv (43×)

End, extremity; nothingness, non-existence; adversative particle 'however, but'; privative 'without, for lack of.'

Efes moves between the concrete and the abstract with remarkable fluidity. At its most vivid, it names the 'ends of the earth' – the farthest horizons of the created world – in some of the Bible's grandest prophetic poetry (Ps 2:8; Isa 45:22). Yet the same root expresses absolute negation: 'there is none,' 'nothing,' 'nothingness.'

Spanish captures this split well, rendering confines for the geographic sense but nadie and nada for the existential negation. The word also functions as an adversative particle ('however, but') and a privative preposition ('without'), showing how a noun of cessation grammaticalizes into logical connectives. The thread uniting all senses is the idea of a limit – spatial, existential, or logical.

1. ends of (the earth) (14×) The geographic-poetic sense: 'ends of the earth' (afse-erets), the remotest boundaries of the inhabited world. Concentrated in Psalms, Isaiah, and Deuteronomy, this phrase carries enormous theological weight – God's sovereignty extends to the afse-erets (Ps 2:8; Zech 9:10). Spanish confines, German Ende, and French extremite all select 'boundary/limit' vocabulary, while the construct chain with erets is nearly formulaic across all 14 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: ends-of, ends-of-, from-ends-of- | es: confines-de, confines-de-, desde-extremos-de | fr: ends-de, ends-de-, extrémité | de: Ende, [אפסי], der-ends-von Deut 33:17; 1Sam 2:10; Ps 2:8; Ps 22:27; Ps 59:13

2. there is none, no one (12×) Predicative negation: 'there is none, no one remains.' Used to deny the existence or survival of persons or things, often in contexts of judgment or devastation. Deut 32:36 announces that God will act when he sees 'there is none remaining'; 2 Kgs 14:26 twice uses efes to describe Israel's utter helplessness. Spanish nadie/ningun and German keiner confirm this as a true existential negation, distinct from ordinary Hebrew ayin by its poetic register and emphatic finality. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: None, and-none, and-there-is-no | es: Nadie, nadie, ningún | fr: est-là-pas, et-aucun, et-extrémité | de: Ende, [אפס], [ואפסי] Deut 32:36; 2Sam 9:3; 2Kgs 14:26; Isa 5:8

3. however, but, only (7×) Adversative-restrictive particle: 'however, but, except, only.' The noun of cessation has grammaticalized into a discourse marker introducing qualifications. In Num 13:28 the spies concede the land's goodness efes – 'however, the people are strong'; in Judg 4:9 Deborah agrees to accompany Barak efes – 'only, the glory will not be yours.' German jedoch/nur and Spanish sin embargo/excepto both treat this as a genuine conjunction, confirming its functional shift from substantive to particle. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: and-but, except, however | es: Sin-embargo, excepto, pero-solo | fr: cependant, et-mais, extrémité | de: [אפס], jedoch, nur Num 13:28; Num 22:35; Num 23:13; Deut 15:4; Judg 4:9

4. without, for lack of (6×) Privative prepositional use (often be-efes): 'without, for lack of.' Indicates deprivation or absence of something expected. Prov 14:28 warns that 'without a people, a prince is ruined' (be-efes le'om); Prov 26:20 notes 'without a gossip, strife ceases.' The be- preposition + efes construction creates a compact privative phrase. Spanish sin and German ohne both render this straightforwardly, while the French evidence sometimes struggles, confirming this is a distinctly Hebraic idiom. WITHOUT AND APART FROM

en: and-without, but-without, for-lack-of | es: Cuando-faltan, nadie, sin | fr: dans-extrémité, dans-באפס, et-extrémité | de: Ende, [באפס], [ובאפס] Job 7:6; Prov 14:28; Prov 26:20; Isa 52:4; Isa 54:15

5. nothing, nothingness (4×) Substantive nothingness: absolute zero or utter worthlessness, concentrated in Second Isaiah's polemic against idolatry and the nations. Isa 40:17 declares the nations are 'as nothing and nothingness' (ke-ayin u-khe-efes); Isa 41:29 says of the idols 'they are all efes.' Spanish menos-que-nada ('less than nothing') captures the rhetorical hyperbole. This sense is closely related to sense 2 but emphasizes qualitative worthlessness rather than mere non-existence, and is restricted to prophetic-poetic contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-as-less-than-nothing, as-less-than-nothing, nothing | es: menos-que-nada, nada, y-como-inexistencia | fr: de-extrémité, et-fin, extrémité | de: Ende, und-Ende, von-Ende Isa 34:12; Isa 40:17; Isa 41:12; Isa 41:29

אֹפֶס H0657b N-md (1×)

ankles or soles; dual form indicating the two ankles (Ezek 47:3)

This anatomical term marks depth measurement in Ezekiel's temple vision as water rises from ankle-deep to waist-deep to a river. The dual form naturally refers to both ankles. Scholarly debate centers on whether it means soles or ankles; ancient versions favor ankles. The image conveys gradual but inexorable increase of the life-giving water flowing from the sanctuary.

(1×) Ezekiel 47:3 measures the expanding river: 'water reaching to the ankles.' Then verse 4 continues: 'water to the knees... water to the waist.' The progression from ankles upward creates a powerful visual crescendo. Cross-lingual evidence splits: English 'ankles', Spanish 'tobillos' (ankles), French 'rien' (nothing—odd), German preserves Hebrew, but the preponderance supports 'ankles,' establishing the starting point of the temple river's miraculous growth. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12037 WITH 3 SENSES en: ankles | es: tobillos | fr: rien | de: [אפסים] Ezek 47:3

אֶפֶס דַּמִּים H0658 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

Ephes-dammim, a place name; battle site where David fought Goliath (1 Sam 17:1)

Ephes-dammim marks the location where Philistines and Israelites arrayed for battle, setting the stage for David's confrontation with Goliath. The name appears as 'Pas-dammim' in Chronicles, suggesting textual variation or dialectical difference. Proposed meanings include 'boundary of blood' or 'edge of blood,' though the etymology remains disputed. The site lay in Judahite territory between Socoh and Azekah.

(1×) First Samuel 17:1 locates the Philistine encampment 'between Socoh and Azekah, in Ephes-dammim.' This geographical precision anchors the iconic David-Goliath narrative in real terrain. The unanimous transliteration across languages (English/Spanish/French/German all preserve 'Ephes-dammim' or close variants) indicates recognition as a proper place name. The site's obscurity outside this context makes it memorable solely for the battle that occurred there. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-Efes-Dammim | es: en-Efes-Dammim | fr: dans-Efes-Dammim | de: in-Efes-Dammim 1Sam 17:1

אָפַע H0659 Prep-m / N-ms (1×)

from nothing; likely a textual error for 'from nought' (Isa 41:24)

This form appears in Isaiah's polemic against idols and likely represents a scribal variation of the more common 'efes' (nought, nothing). The prophet declares the gods are less than nothing, unable to act or speak. Ancient versions and most modern scholars read this as a textual variant rather than a distinct word. The rhetorical force remains: idols are ontological zeros.

(1×) Isaiah 41:24 condemns: 'Behold, you are nothing, and your work is from nothing.' The phrase 'from nothing' emphasizes the utter impotence and unreality of false gods. Cross-lingual evidence ('from-nothing' in English, 'de-nada' in Spanish, French/German preserve the Hebrew) supports reading this as 'from nothingness.' The variant spelling underscores the text's transmission history while preserving Isaiah's scathing assessment of idol worship's futility. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-nothing | es: de-nada | fr: [מאפע] | de: [מאפע] Isa 41:24

אֶפְעֶה H0660 N-ms (3×)

viper, adder (venomous serpent)

A venomous snake, most likely a viper or adder, named perhaps for its hissing sound. Isaiah uses the term in prophecies of judgment and danger, depicting viper eggs and the deadly nature of wickedness. Job employs it in Bildad's warning that the wicked person will 'suck the poison of vipers' and be killed by the viper's tongue. The serpent embodies lethal danger lurking in seemingly safe places, a natural metaphor for sin's deceptive and deadly nature.

(3×) Job 20:16 warns that the wicked 'will suck the poison of vipers; the tongue of a viper will kill him'—wealth gained by wickedness becomes internal poison. Isaiah 30:6 includes 'viper and flying serpent' in the catalog of desert dangers through which envoys must travel to Egypt. Isaiah 59:5 accuses the wicked of hatching 'viper's eggs'— whoever eats them dies, and when crushed they release more vipers, illustrating how evil reproduces and spreads death. The viper's hidden strike and deadly venom made it an apt symbol for sin's treachery. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 2423 WITH 6 SENSES

en: a-serpent, a-viper, viper | es: la-víbora., víbora | fr: [אפעה], vipère | de: [אפעה] Job 20:16; Isa 30:6; Isa 59:5

אָפַף H0661 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (5×)
To surround, encompass, or engulf — poetic verb for being encircled by waters, death, or calamities.
A poetic verb used exclusively to describe being overwhelmed or encircled by deadly forces. Literally, it pictures water closing in around Jonah (2:5), and figuratively it depicts the 'breakers of death' or 'cords of death' engulfing the speaker in 2 Samuel 22:5 and Psalms 18:4 and 116:3. In Psalm 40:12 evils surround the psalmist. Every occurrence carries a visceral sense of danger closing in from all sides. Spanish 'me rodearon' and French 'entourer' both emphasize the encircling motion, while English 'engulfed' adds the note of submersion.

(5×) To encompass or engulf, describing the terrifying experience of being surrounded by deadly forces on all sides. The literal use in Jonah 2:5 pictures waters closing over the prophet's head, while the figurative occurrences in 2 Samuel 22:5, Psalm 18:4, and Psalm 116:3 depict 'breakers of death' and 'cords of Sheol' wrapping around the speaker. In Psalm 40:12 it is evils ('ra'ot') that have encompassed the psalmist beyond counting. Spanish 'me rodearon' ('they surrounded me') and English 'engulfed me' together capture the dual force — encirclement and submersion — that makes this verb so vivid in lament contexts. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT
en: engulfed-me, have-surrounded, surrounded-me | es: Me-rodearon, me-rodearon | fr: entoura-moi, entourer | de: [אפפוני], haben-surrounded, surrounded-mich 2Sam 22:5; Ps 18:4; Ps 40:12; Ps 116:3; Jonah 2:5

אָפַק H0662 V-Hitpael-Imperf-1cs (7×)
To restrain oneself, hold back, exercise self-control; Hitpael of אפק, describing forcible containment of powerful emotion.
A verb in the Hitpael (reflexive) stem meaning to restrain or control oneself, especially when overwhelmed by strong emotion. Joseph's desperate struggle to contain his tears before his brothers provides the most vivid instances (Gen 43:31; 45:1). The word also describes Saul's fateful decision to force himself to act at Gilgal (1 Sam 13:12), Haman swallowing his rage (Esth 5:10), and — most strikingly — God Himself holding back His own power (Isa 42:14) or His compassion being 'restrained' toward Israel (Isa 63:15; 64:11). The range moves from human emotional struggle to divine self-restraint.

restrain oneself, exercise self-control (7×) To compel or restrain oneself, holding back strong emotion or impulse through deliberate effort. The reflexive Hitpael stem emphasizes the internal struggle of the subject against their own feelings. Spanish 'contenerse' and 'se contuvo' precisely capture this reflexive restraint. The most memorable uses involve Joseph forcing himself not to weep before revealing his identity (Gen 43:31; 45:1), but the theological weight lies in passages where God restrains Himself — Isaiah 42:14 pictures God holding back like a woman in labor who can no longer contain her cries, while Isaiah 63:15 asks whether God's compassion has been 'restrained' from Israel. Esther 5:10 shows Haman controlling his fury, and 1 Samuel 13:12 describes Saul compelling himself to offer the sacrifice unlawfully. REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS
en: I-restrained-Myself, and-I-restrained-myself, and-he-controlled-himself | es: Y-se-contuvo, contenerse, me-contuve | fr: [אתאפק], [התאפקו], [ויתאפק] | de: [אתאפק], [התאפקו], [ויתאפק] Gen 43:31; Gen 45:1; 1Sam 13:12; Esth 5:10; Isa 42:14

אֲפֵק H0663 N-proper-fs / 3fs (9×)
Aphek, a Canaanite place name meaning 'enclosure' or 'fortress,' applied to several cities in Israel.
A place name borne by at least four distinct sites in the land of Israel, all likely fortified positions—the name itself may derive from a root meaning 'to be strong' or 'to enclose.' The most militarily significant Aphek lies near the Jezreel Valley, where Aramean and Israelite forces clashed (1 Kgs 20:26, 30; 2 Kgs 13:17). Another Aphek in the Philistine plain was where the ark of the covenant was captured (1 Sam 4:1; 29:1). Additional sites appear in Asher (Josh 19:30; Judg 1:31) and northeast of Beirut (Josh 13:4). All translations preserve the name phonetically.

Aphek (place name) (9×) The place name Aphek (/ אֲפֵק אֲפִיק), designating several fortified cities across Canaan. The most prominent is the site near Jezreel associated with Aramean-Israelite warfare (1 Kgs 20:26, 30; 2 Kgs 13:17), where a wall collapsed killing 27,000 soldiers. A second Aphek in the Philistine plain witnessed two pivotal battles—the capture of the ark (1 Sam 4:1) and the Philistine mustering before Saul's final battle (1 Sam 29:1). Sites in Asher (Josh 19:30; Judg 1:31) and near Lebanon (Josh 13:4) represent unconquered Canaanite strongholds. The variant spelling Afik (Judg 1:31) and the alternate form Afeqah reflect orthographic fluidity across manuscripts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Afeqah, Afik, Aphek | es: Afec, Afik, a-Afec | fr: Afeqah, Afik, Aphek | de: Afeqah, Afik, Aphek Josh 12:18; Josh 13:4; Josh 19:30; Judg 1:31; 1Sam 4:1

אֲפֵקָה H0664 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Aphekah, a place name; city in Judah's hill country near Hebron (Josh 15:53)
Aphekah appears in Joshua's territorial allotment as one of Judah's hill country cities, grouped with Hebron and surrounding settlements. The name may share etymology with other 'Aphek' sites, possibly meaning 'fortress' or 'stronghold.' Ancient Greek versions render it variously as Erem or Ereb. The Onomasticon identifies it with a village in the Daroma region, though precise location remains uncertain.

(1×) Joshua 15:53 lists Aphekah among Judah's hill country inheritance: 'Janum, Beth-tappuah, Aphekah...' The grouping with Hebron places it in Judah's heartland. Multilingual transliteration (English/French/German 'Aphekah', Spanish 'Afecá') preserves the proper name. The site's inclusion in tribal allotments reflects the comprehensive land distribution that fulfilled covenant promises, even for towns that later faded from historical memory. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-Aphekah | es: y-Afecá | fr: et-Aphekah | de: und-Aphekah Josh 15:53

אֹפֶר H0665 Art / N-ms (22×)
Ashes; the powdery residue of combustion, used ritually for purification and as a sign of mourning or humility.
Denotes the fine, powdery residue left after burning, carrying both literal and symbolic weight throughout the Hebrew Bible. Literally, it refers to the ashes of the red heifer used in purification rites (Num 19:9–10) and altar residue. Symbolically, ashes placed on the head or sat upon express deep mourning (Esth 4:1, 3), contrition (Dan 9:3; Jonah 3:6), and utter insignificance—Abraham calls himself 'dust and ashes' before God (Gen 18:27). Job's proverbs of ashes (Job 13:12) and Isaiah's idol-maker feeding on ashes (Isa 44:20) extend this into metaphors of worthlessness.

ashes, combustion residue (22×) The powdery residue remaining after combustion, used across cultic, penitential, and metaphorical contexts. In ritual law the ashes of the red heifer serve purification (Num 19:9–10). In lamentation and penitence, ashes on the head or body signal mourning (Esth 4:1; Jer 6:26; Ezek 27:30) and contrition before God (Dan 9:3; Jonah 3:6). Figuratively, ashes convey worthlessness and insignificance, as when Abraham confesses he is 'dust and ashes' (Gen 18:27) or Job dismisses hollow counsel as 'proverbs of ashes' (Job 13:12). Spanish ceniza and German Asche both capture the basic material sense. ASHES COMBUSTION RESIDUE
en: and-ashes, ashes, ashes-of | es: ceniza, ceniza-de, de-ceniza | fr: [אפר], [באפר], [ואפר] | de: Asche, Asche-von, [אפר] Gen 18:27; Num 19:9; Num 19:10; 2Sam 13:19; Esth 4:1

אֵפֶר H0666 Art / N-ms (2×)
bandage, covering (for the face)
This rare noun denotes a bandage or covering, specifically one worn over the eyes. It appears in the account of a prophet disguising himself before King Ahab by covering his face with a bandage, then revealing his identity by removing it.

(2×) Facial covering in 1 Kings 20:38, 41 used by a prophet to disguise himself before Ahab. The phrase 'bandage over his eyes' describes the deliberate concealment, then revelation of identity. Assyrian cognates for 'covering' and 'garment' support the sense. Some glosses confuse it with 'epher' (ashes), but the context clearly indicates a physical covering. ASHES COMBUSTION RESIDUE
en: the-bandage, with-the-bandage | es: con-ceniza, la-ceniza | fr: avec-le-bandage, le-bandage | de: der-bandage, mit-der-bandage 1Kgs 20:38; 1Kgs 20:41

אֶפְרֹחַ H0667 N-mp (5×)
Young bird, chick, or nestling — the offspring of birds, used in laws of compassion and poetic imagery.
A noun referring to the young of birds, appearing in contexts that range from Torah legislation to wisdom poetry. In Deuteronomy 22:6 the word occurs twice in the law forbidding taking a mother bird together with her chicks, a commandment associated with compassion and long life. In Job 39:30 it describes the young of the eagle or vulture whose chicks lap up blood, and in Psalm 84:3 the sparrow's nestlings find a home near God's altar. The Ethiopic cognate confirms the meaning. Spanish 'polluelos' and English 'chicks' both evoke small, vulnerable fledglings.

(5×) Young birds or nestlings, the helpless offspring found in a nest. Deuteronomy 22:6 uses the plural twice in the merciful commandment to release the mother bird and not take her with her young — a law the rabbis considered paradigmatic of compassion. Job 39:30 depicts the fierce young of the vulture feeding on blood, showing the word is not limited to domesticated fowl. Psalm 84:3 places the swallow's nestlings at God's altar, an image of divine shelter. Spanish 'polluelos' and French 'chicks' consistently render the vulnerable, small-bird sense, while the Ethiopic cognate confirms the pan-Semitic meaning. CHILDREN AND INFANCY
en: [and-its-young], and-its-young, chicks | es: (Q:y-sus-polluelos), [K:y-sus-polluelos], los-polluelos | fr: [אפרחיה], chicks, et-son-(ואפרחיו)-lui | de: [(ואפרחיו)], [[ואפרחון]], chicks Deut 22:6; Job 39:30; Ps 84:3

אַפִּרְיוֹן H0668 N-ms (1×)
palanquin, litter; a portable sedan chair for royalty (Song 3:9)
This exotic loanword describes Solomon's ornate portable throne or couch, likely borrowed from Greek, Persian, or Sanskrit. The term appears only in Song of Songs' lavish description of a royal wedding procession. Ancient versions consistently recognize it as a luxury conveyance. The word evokes Near Eastern royal splendor, befitting Solomon's legendary magnificence and the Song's celebration of royal love.

(1×) Song of Songs 3:9 declares: 'King Solomon made himself a palanquin from the wood of Lebanon.' The following verses describe purple cushions, golden posts, and a silver base—a mobile throne of extraordinary beauty. Cross-lingual glosses vary: English 'carriage', Spanish 'Litera' (litter), French 'Un-palanquin', German preserves Hebrew. This lexical diversity reflects the term's rarity and foreign origin, but all point to a luxurious portable seat befitting royal processions. CHARIOTS AND WAGONS
en: carriage | es: Litera | fr: Un-palanquin | de: [אפריון] Song 3:9

אֶפְרַיִם H0669 Prep-k / N-proper-ms (180×)
Ephraim — Joseph's younger son, the Israelite tribe descended from him, and their allotted territory Ephraim is one of the most layered proper names in the Hebrew Bible, sliding seamlessly between person, tribe, and territory. Joseph names his second son Ephraim ('doubly fruitful') in Egypt (Gen 41:52), and Jacob's deliberate blessing of Ephraim over firstborn Manasseh (Gen 48:14) foreshadows the tribe's political dominance. Ephraim's hill country becomes the heartland of the northern kingdom, and prophetically 'Ephraim' often stands for all of Israel's northern tribes (Hos 5-14). Spanish Efrain, French Ephraim, and German Efrajim reflect minor phonological adaptations of the same Hebrew name.

Ephraim (proper name) (180×) Proper name referring to Joseph's younger son blessed by Jacob (Gen 48:13-20), the prominent Israelite tribe descended from him, and the central hill-country territory allotted to that tribe. In prophetic literature, especially Hosea, 'Ephraim' becomes a synecdoche for the entire northern kingdom. The name's etymology ('doubly fruitful,' from parah) is given at Gen 41:52. All target languages preserve the name with minor transliteration variants. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Ephraim | es: Efrayim, Efraín | fr: Éphraïm | de: Efrajim, Efrajims, Ephraim Gen 41:52; Gen 46:20; Gen 48:1; Gen 48:5; Gen 48:13

אַפַּרְסָיֵא H0670 N-proper-ms (1×)
Apharsayites, an ethnic or occupational group; settlers in post-exilic Samaria (Ezra 4:9)
This designation appears in the list of peoples whom Assyria resettled in Samaria and who later opposed Jerusalem's reconstruction. Scholarly consensus identifies them as Persians, though some suggest 'secretaries' (a title rather than ethnicity). The Greek traditions vary significantly. Their inclusion among temple opponents illustrates the complex ethnic mosaic of the Persian period and the political tensions surrounding the restoration.

(1×) Ezra 4:9 catalogs the adversaries: 'the Rehum, Shimshai, and the rest of their associates... the Persians, the men of Erech, the Babylonians, the men of Susa (that is, the Elamites), and the rest...' If 'Apharsayites' means Persians, it highlights imperial representatives opposing the Jews. Translation divergence (English 'Afarsaye', Spanish 'los-persas', French/German preserve Hebrew) reflects ongoing debate about whether this is an ethnic or professional designation. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Afarsaye | es: los-persas | fr: [אפרסיא] | de: [אפרסיא] Ezra 4:9

אַפַּרְסְכָיֵא H0671a N-proper-mpd (2×)
Apharsekaye (Persian officials in Trans-Euphrates)
This Persian-derived term designates a group of officials or colonists in the province of Trans-Euphrates during the post-exilic period. They appear in correspondence opposing Jerusalem's reconstruction. The exact identity remains debated, though most scholars see it as a Persian administrative designation.

(2×) Persian officials mentioned in Ezra 5:6 and 6:6 in the context of correspondence about rebuilding Jerusalem's temple. The term appears among other ethnic and official groups in the satrapy 'Beyond the River.' Spanish translates as 'officials' while other languages transliterate, reflecting uncertainty about the precise referent. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Afarskhaye, the-Apharsekaye | es: los-afarsekeos, los-oficiales | fr: [אפרסכיא] | de: [אפרסכיא] Ezra 5:6; Ezra 6:6

אַפַּרְסַתְכָיֵא H0671b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Apharsathchites, likely an official title rather than ethnic name; Persian administrators (Ezra 4:9)
This term has shifted in scholarly understanding from an ethnic designation to likely meaning 'governors' or 'officials.' The Old Persian derivation suggests a bureaucratic title within the imperial administration. Ancient versions struggled with it, producing varied translations. Its appearance alongside other administrative terms in Ezra's list of opponents suggests these were Persian functionaries supervising the satrapy and protecting imperial interests against unauthorized construction.

(1×) Ezra 4:9's opposition list includes 'Apharsathchites' among other groups resisting temple rebuilding. Modern interpretation as 'lesser officials' or 'governors' (rather than an ethnic group) better explains its context among administrative titles. Translation variation (English 'Afarsatkhaye', Spanish 'y-los-oficiales'—'and the officials', French/German preserve Hebrew) reflects evolving scholarly consensus. This illustrates how biblical texts preserve administrative vocabulary from the Persian bureaucracy that governed Yehud. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Afarsatkhaye | es: y-los-oficiales | fr: [ואפרסתכיא] | de: [ואפרסתכיא] Ezra 4:9

אֶפְרָתָה H0672 N-proper-fs (10×)

Ephrathah — region near Bethlehem; associated with Rachel's burial and the Messiah's birthplace (Mic 5:2)

The name אֶפְרָתָה (Ephrathah) designates a district closely identified with Bethlehem in Judah, though the precise relationship — whether Ephrathah is an older name for Bethlehem itself or a surrounding region — remains debated. Rachel died and was buried on the road to Ephrath (Gen 35:16, 19; 48:7), establishing a link between this place and maternal grief. Ruth 4:11 pairs Ephrathah with Bethlehem in a blessing formula. Most significantly, Micah 5:2 prophesies that from 'Bethlehem Ephrathah' will come a ruler whose origins are from of old — a passage applied messianically in Matthew 2:6. The gentilic 'Ephrathite' (1 Sam 17:12) identifies David's family. Spanish 'Efrata' and French 'Éphrata' preserve the name across traditions.

Ephrathah, place near Bethlehem (10×) A place name closely associated with or identical to Bethlehem in Judah, carrying deep patriarchal and messianic significance. Rachel was buried on the road to Ephrath (Gen 35:16, 19; 48:7). Boaz's townsmen invoke it alongside Bethlehem in blessing Ruth's marriage (Ruth 4:11). Psalm 132:6 recalls finding the ark 'in the fields of Jaar' after hearing of it 'in Ephrathah.' Micah 5:2 names 'Bethlehem Ephrathah' as the birthplace of the future ruler, a prophecy central to Christian messianic expectation (Matt 2:6). Spanish 'Efrata' and German 'Ephrata' faithfully transmit the toponym. BETHLEHEM TOWN

en: Ephrath, Ephrath-ward, Ephrathah | es: Efrat, Efrata, Efratah | fr: Ephrath, Ephrath-garde, [אפרת] | de: [אפרת], [אפרתה], [באפרתה] Gen 35:16; Gen 35:19; Gen 48:7; Ruth 4:11

אֶפְרָתִי H0673 N-proper-mp (5×)

Ephrathite — a gentilicdenoting either an Ephraimite or someone from Ephrathah (Bethlehem).

A gentilic adjective with two distinct referents depending on context. When applied to figures from the hill country of Ephraim — such as Jeroboam (1 Kgs 11:26) or Elkanah's ancestor (1 Sam 1:1) — it means 'Ephraimite,' a member of the tribe of Ephraim. When paired with 'from Bethlehem,' as with Jesse (1 Sam 17:12) and Elimelech's family (Ruth 1:2), it means 'Ephrathite,' denoting origin from Ephrathah-Bethlehem. French distinguishes 'Ephraimite' from 'Éphratien,' while English sometimes conflates both under 'Ephrathite.'

(5×) A gentilic adjective identifying a person either as an Ephraimite (from the tribe of Ephraim) or as an Ephrathite (from Ephrathah/Bethlehem in Judah). In Judges 12:5 and 1 Samuel 1:1 it designates tribal Ephraimites, and in 1 Kings 11:26 Jeroboam is called an Ephraimite. But in Ruth 1:2 ('Ephrathites from Bethlehem') and 1 Samuel 17:12 ('an Ephrathite from Bethlehem-Judah') it denotes Judahite origin from the Bethlehem district. French helpfully renders the distinction ('Ephraimite' vs. 'Éphratien'), while English and Spanish sometimes blur the two referents under a single transliteration. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ephraimite, Ephrathite, Ephrathites | es: efrateo, efrateos, ¿efrateo | fr: Ephraimite, Ephrathites, un-Éphratien | de: Efratiter, Ephraimite, Ephrathite Judg 12:5; Ruth 1:2; 1Sam 1:1; 1Sam 17:12; 1Kgs 11:26

אַפְתֹּם H0674 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)

treasury; possibly 'the royal treasury' threatened by Jewish temple tax (Ezra 4:13)

This rare word appears in the accusation against Jerusalem, warning that its rebuilding will damage royal revenues. The Persian or Pahlavi etymology suggests 'treasuries' or 'coffers.' The opponents argue that a fortified Jerusalem will cease tribute, toll, and custom payments, diminishing the king's income. This economic argument reveals the fiscal concerns underlying political opposition to restoration.

(1×) Ezra 4:13 warns the Persian king: 'if this city is rebuilt and its walls finished, they will not pay tribute, toll, or custom, and the royal treasury will suffer loss.' The term 'and treasury' (or 'and in the end') connects Jewish independence to imperial revenue loss. Spanish 'y-tesoro-de' (and treasury of) supports the financial interpretation, making this an economic threat assessment designed to alarm Persian authorities about Jewish autonomy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-treasury-of | es: y-tesoro-de | fr: [ואפתם] | de: [ואפתם] Ezra 4:13

אֶצְבוֹן H0675 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ezbon (name in Gad and Benjamin)

Ezbon appears as a name in two different tribal genealogies. A son of Gad in Genesis bears this name, though in Numbers he's called Ozni. Separately, a grandson of Benjamin in Chronicles also carries the name, representing two distinct individuals in Israel's ancestral records.

(2×) Personal name appearing in Genesis 46:16 (as Gad's son, variant 'Ozni' in Num 26:16) and 1 Chronicles 7:7 (as Benjamin's grandson). The Samaritan Pentateuch reads 'Etzbaon,' suggesting possible textual variation. The dual usage across different tribes shows the name was not unique to one family line. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Etsbon, and-Ezbon | es: Esbón, y-Etsbon | fr: [אצבון], et-Ezbon | de: [אצבון], und-Ezbon Gen 46:16; 1Chr 7:7

אֶצְבַּע H0676 Conj-w / N-fpc / 1cs (31×)

Finger or toe; a digit of the hand (especially in ritual and divine contexts) or, rarely, of the foot.

The Hebrew etsba covers what many languages distinguish as separate body parts. In its primary sense it refers to a finger, especially the forefinger used by priests to sprinkle blood in Levitical ritual (Lev 4:6, 17) or the finger of God that wrote the tablets of the law (Exod 31:18) and performed mighty works in Egypt (Exod 8:19). Spanish dedo and French doigt both encompass fingers and toes, mirroring the Hebrew ambiguity. In two passages describing Goliath's relative with extra digits (2 Sam 21:20), the same word denotes toes, a usage the multilingual evidence marks distinctly with English toes and specialized translations.

1. finger (of hand) (29×) A finger of the human hand, used literally for the physical digit and frequently in cultic, symbolic, and theological contexts. Dominant across 29 occurrences, it describes the priest's forefinger applying sacrificial blood (Exod 29:12; Lev 4:6), God's finger writing the Decalogue (Exod 31:18; Deut 9:10), and the contemptuous pointing gesture of Isaiah 58:9. Spanish dedo de el and French avec finger de reflect the straightforward anatomical sense, while German preserves the Hebrew forms in brackets, indicating lexical transparency. FLESH AND BODY

en: and-his-fingers, by-finger-of, his-finger | es: con-dedo-de-él, con-dedo-suyo, con-el-dedo-de | fr: [ואצבעתיו], avec-finger-de, avec-finger-son | de: [ואצבעתיו], [ואצבעתיך], [ואצבעתיו] Exod 8:19; Exod 29:12; Exod 31:18; Lev 4:6; Lev 4:17

2. toe (digit of foot) (2×) A toe, that is, a digit of the foot rather than the hand. This rare sense (2x) appears exclusively in 2 Samuel 21:20, describing a Philistine giant with six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot. English translations shift to toes, and French and German also mark the distinction with et-toes-de and und-toes-von, confirming that translators recognize a genuine sense distinction even though Hebrew uses the same lexeme for both. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-fingers-of, and-toes-of | es: y-dedos-de | fr: et-fingers-de, et-toes-de | de: und-fingers-von, und-toes-von 2Sam 21:20

אֶצְבַּע H0677 Conj-w / N-fpd (3×)
fingers, toes (Aramaic: extremities of hands and feet)
The Aramaic term for fingers or toes, appearing in Daniel's visions and revelations. Daniel sees mysterious fingers writing on the palace wall during Belshazzar's feast, and the composite statue in Nebuchadnezzar's dream includes feet partly of iron and partly of clay, extending down to the toes. The plural form encompasses both fingers and toes, with context determining which is meant. These extremities represent both human agency (writing fingers) and structural weakness (mixed-material toes supporting an empire).

(3×) Daniel 5:5 describes 'the fingers of a human hand' appearing and writing on the wall—a supernatural manifestation that terrifies Belshazzar. Daniel 2:41-42 interprets the statue's feet and toes as a divided kingdom, 'partly of iron and partly of clay,' strong in some parts and brittle in others. The toes represent the furthest extension of the statue, the final fragile stage before the stone strikes. Fingers write judgment; toes bear unstable weight. Both extremities signal vulnerability despite apparent strength. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-toes, and-toes-of, fingers | es: Y-los-dedos-de, dedos, y-los-dedos | fr: [אצבע], [ואצבעת], [ואצבעתא] | de: [אצבע], [ואצבעת], [ואצבעתא] Dan 2:41; Dan 2:42; Dan 5:5

אָצִיל H0678 Conj-w (2×)
nobles, chief men; corners, extremities (of earth)
This noun carries both geographical and social meanings: the corners or extremities of the earth, and the nobles or chief men of a people. The metaphorical extension from 'sides' or 'supports' to 'leaders' reflects how foundational members uphold society, much like corners support a structure.

(2×) Denotes earth's corners/extremities in Isaiah 41:9 (parallel to 'ends') and nobles/leaders in Exodus 24:11 (those who ascended Sinai with Moses). The semantic range from spatial boundaries to social elite may derive from the root meaning 'corner' or 'side,' with leaders seen as society's foundational supports. Some link it to Arabic 'noble' from roots meaning 'well-rooted.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-from-its-corners, nobles-of | es: nobles-de, y-de-sus-confines | fr: [ומאצילה], nobles-de | de: [ומאצילה], nobles-von Exod 24:11; Isa 41:9

אֲצִיל H0679 N-cs (3×)
joints, elbows, arm-joints (anatomical articulation points)
The joints where limbs articulate, particularly elbows or arm-joints. Ezekiel uses the term for 'hand-joints' (elbows) when describing the magic bands that false prophetesses sewed on every arm-joint. Jeremiah employs it when instructing Ebed-melech to put rags under the 'joints of his arms' (armpits) before lifting him from the cistern. The technical anatomical sense extends metaphorically to architectural 'joinings' as well. The term emphasizes the articulation point where flexibility and structure meet.

(3×) Jeremiah 38:12 shows compassion in practical detail: 'Put the rags and clothes between your armpits and the ropes,' using 'arm-joints' for the vulnerable area where rope would cut during rescue. Ezekiel 13:18 condemns women who 'sew magic bands on all the joints of hands' (likely elbows or wrists)—instruments of false prophetic manipulation. Ezekiel 41:8's architectural reference remains obscure, possibly indicating a structural joining or foundation measurement. The body's joints—flexible, vulnerable, essential for movement—become sites of both care and exploitation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: joints-of, to-joint | es: coyunturas-de, hasta-la-junta, manos-tuyas | fr: [אצלות], aisselle | de: [אצילה], [אצילן], [אצלות] Jer 38:12; Ezek 13:18; Ezek 41:8

אָצַל H0680 V-Qal-Perf-2ms (5×)
To set aside, reserve, withdraw, or withhold — used of reserving blessings, setting apart spirit, and withholding pleasure.
A verb with a range spanning from 'reserve' to 'withdraw' to 'withhold,' appearing in diverse narrative contexts. In Genesis 27:36 Esau pleads with Isaac asking whether he has not reserved a blessing for him. Numbers 11:17 and 11:25 describe God taking some of the spirit resting on Moses and setting it apart for the seventy elders. In Ecclesiastes 2:10 the Preacher says he withheld nothing from his eyes. Ezekiel 42:6 uses the Niphal for architectural narrowing. Spanish 'guardaste' ('you kept') and German 'aufbewahrt' ('preserved') both highlight the core idea of setting something aside.

(5×) To set aside, reserve, withdraw, or withhold something from a larger portion. The semantic thread is separation of a part from a whole: Isaac reserving a blessing (Gen 27:36), God withdrawing some of Moses's spirit to redistribute it to the elders (Num 11:17, 25), and Qoheleth refusing to withhold any pleasure from himself (Eccl 2:10). The Niphal in Ezekiel 42:6 extends the idea architecturally — the upper chambers were 'narrowed,' i.e., withdrawn inward. Spanish 'guardaste' and German 'aufbewahrt' both capture the 'reserve/keep back' nuance, while English 'withheld' and 'took' reflect the broader range from retention to redistribution. RECEIVING AND TAKING en: I-withheld, and-I-will-take, and-took | es: guardaste, les-negué, se-estrech-aba | fr: côté, et-je-fera-prendre, et-prit | de: [אצלתי], [נאצל], du-aufbewahrt Gen 27:36; Num 11:17; Num 11:25; Eccl 2:10; Ezek 42:6

אֵצֶל H0681 Conj-w / Prep (61×)
A substantive preposition meaning 'beside, near, next to'; with min-prefix, 'from beside, away from the proximity of.'
The Hebrew אֵצֶל is one of the most precise spatial terms in the Old Testament, indicating close physical proximity – standing beside, being next to. It governs nearly every kind of scene: cattle standing beside cattle at the Nile (Gen 41:3), the Ark placed beside Dagon (1 Sam 5:2), and Wisdom beside the Creator (Prov 8:30). When prefixed with מִן, the sense shifts from static proximity to separative motion – departing from beside someone. Spanish 'junto a' and German 'neben' consistently reflect its meaning across translations.

1. beside, near (proximity) (55×) Static spatial proximity: 'beside, near, next to' someone or something, with or without pronominal suffixes. Across 55 occurrences, this covers scenes of positioning and location. Spanish 'junto a,' French 'à côté de,' and German 'neben' all converge on this locative sense. Key passages include Potiphar's wife describing Joseph as being beside her (Gen 39:15-18), the visionary wheels beside the living creatures (Ezek 1:15), and Wisdom beside God as a master craftsman (Prov 8:30). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: beside, is-beside | es: junto-a | fr: est-à-côté-de, à-côté, à-côté-de | de: ist-neben, neben Gen 39:10; Gen 39:15; Gen 39:16; Gen 39:18; Gen 41:3

2. from beside (separative) (6×) Separative motion away from a proximate location, formed with the prefixed preposition מִן (yielding מֵאֵצֶל). This covers 6 occurrences where the emphasis is on departure or removal from beside someone. Translations render this with compound phrases: English 'from beside,' Spanish 'de junto a,' German 'von neben.' David rising from beside the stone (1 Sam 20:41) and the glory departing from beside the cherubim (Ezek 10:16) illustrate this directional extension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: from-beside, from-beside-him, from-beside-me | es: de-junto-a, de-junto-a-ellos, de-junto-a-mí | fr: [מאצל], [מאצלם], de-à-côté-de | de: neben, von-neben, von-neben-ihn 1Sam 17:30; 1Sam 20:41; 1Kgs 3:20; 1Kgs 20:36; Ezek 10:16

אָצֵל H0682a N-proper-ms (6×)
Azel — proper name of a Benjamite descendant of Saul through Jonathan's line.
Azel (אָצֵל) is a masculine proper name appearing exclusively in the Saulide genealogy of 1 Chronicles 8:37-38 and its parallel in 9:43-44. He was a descendant of King Saul through Jonathan, and the text notes that he had six sons, whose names are listed. The name may derive from a root meaning 'noble' (cf. אָצִיל), though its etymology remains uncertain. The genealogical context places Azel several generations after Jonathan, in the period of the divided monarchy or later. BDB also notes a distinct place-name Azel in Zechariah 14:5, but that belongs to a separate entry.

Azel (proper name) (6×) A masculine proper name (אָצֵל, possibly meaning 'noble') designating a descendant of King Saul through the line of Jonathan, appearing in the Benjamite genealogy of 1 Chronicles 8:37-38 and its duplicate in 9:43-44. The text records that Azel fathered six sons whose names are enumerated. French renderings interestingly gloss the name with the preposition 'à-côté-de' (beside), reflecting a confusion with the common Hebrew preposition אֵצֶל, while English and Spanish transliterations ('Atsel,' 'Atsal') correctly preserve the proper-name identity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Atsal, Atsel, and-to-Atsel | es: Atsel, Y-para-Atsel | fr: et-zu-à-côté-de, à-côté-de | de: [אצל], [ולאצל] 1Chr 8:37; 1Chr 8:38; 1Chr 9:43; 1Chr 9:44

אָצֵל H0682b N-proper-fs (1×)

Azal, a place name near Jerusalem; landmark in Zechariah's eschatological vision (Zech 14:5)

Azal marks the terminus of the flight route in Zechariah's earthquake vision, when the Mount of Olives splits east and west. Debate continues whether this is a place name (though no site has been identified) or means 'very near' as an adverb. Ancient versions divided on the question. The apocalyptic context suggests a specific geographical reference anchoring the cosmic event in recognizable terrain.

(1×) Zechariah 14:5 describes escape from Jerusalem's earthquake: 'You shall flee by the valley of my mountains, for the valley between the mountains shall reach to Azal.' Whether 'Azal' is a place name (English/Spanish/French transliterate it) or means 'nearby' (as Vulgate/Symmachus read), the point remains: God provides an escape route from his own theophanic arrival. The text anchors eschatological hope in geographical particularity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Atsal | es: Azal | fr: Atsélia | de: [אצל] Zech 14:5

אֲצַלְיָהוּ H0683 N-proper-ms (2×)

Azaliah (father of Shaphan the scribe, name meaning 'Yahweh has reserved')

Azaliah is remembered as the father of Shaphan, the scribe who read the discovered law book to King Josiah. The name means 'Yahweh has reserved' or 'set apart,' suggesting theological significance in the family of scribes who facilitated Judah's great reformation.

(2×) Patronymic identifier in 2 Kings 22:3 and 2 Chronicles 34:8, establishing Shaphan's lineage during Josiah's reform. The name's meaning ('Yahweh has reserved') may reflect the family's divinely appointed role in preserving and presenting Torah. Translations preserve the Hebrew form with minimal variation across languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Atsalyahu, Azaliah | es: Atsalyahu, Azalías | fr: Atsalyahu, [אצליהו] | de: Atsalyahu, [אצליהו] 2Kgs 22:3; 2Chr 34:8

אֹצֶם H0684 N-proper-ms (2×)

Otsem (brother of David; descendant of Judah)

Otsem names two men in Judah's genealogy: David's sixth brother in birth order, and an earlier descendant of Jerahmeel. The name appears exclusively in Chronicles' genealogical records, preserving family connections within Judah's largest tribe.

(2×) Personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 2:15 (as David's brother, sixth in line) and 1 Chronicles 2:25 (as a descendant of Jerahmeel). The dual usage across different branches of Judah shows the name's broader circulation. Cross-linguistic transliterations remain stable, functioning purely as personal identifiers. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Otsem, and-Otsem | es: Otsem, y-Otsem | fr: [אצם], [ואצם] | de: [אצם], [ואצם] 1Chr 2:15; 1Chr 2:25

אֶצְעָדָה H0685 N-fs (2×)

bracelet, armlet (ornamental arm band)

This noun denotes an ornamental armband or bracelet worn on the upper arm. It appears in contexts of spoil and royal insignia —valuable jewelry taken as war booty or worn as marks of status. One reference may involve a textual issue, but the ornamental sense is clear.

(2×) Arm ornament mentioned in Numbers 31:50 (among Midianite spoil dedicated to God) and 2 Samuel 1:10 (on Saul's arm, brought to David). The pairing with 'bracelet' in Numbers and the phrase 'armlet on his arm' in Samuel establish it as upper-arm jewelry. BDB suggests a possible textual correction in 2 Samuel based on 2 Kings 11:12. BRACELET ARMLET

en: and-bracelet, armlet | es: brazalete, y-brazalete | fr: armlet, et-bracelet | de: armlet, und-bracelet Num 31:50; 2Sam 1:10

אָצַר H0686 V-Nifal-Imperf-3ms (5×)

To store up, treasure, or appoint as treasurer — used of hoarding wealth, goods, or violence, and of appointing custodians.

A verb rooted in the idea of gathering and keeping in a storehouse. In 2 Kings 20:17 and Isaiah 39:6 Hezekiah is warned that everything his fathers stored up will be carried off to Babylon. Amos 3:10 accuses the wealthy of storing up violence and robbery in their palaces — a striking metaphorical extension. Isaiah 23:18 envisions Tyre's merchandise no longer being hoarded but flowing to those who dwell before the Lord. In Nehemiah 13:13 the Hiphil is used denominatively to mean 'appoint as treasurers.' Spanish 'atesoran' ('they treasure up') captures the acquisitive force well.

(5×) To lay up, store, or hoard, and by denominative extension to appoint someone over a storehouse. The Qal describes accumulating goods or wealth in storage — whether legitimately (2 Kgs 20:17 = Isa 39:6, the treasures Hezekiah's ancestors stored) or unjustly (Amos 3:10, storing up violence and plunder in fortified palaces). The Niphal in Isaiah 23:18 envisions Tyre's commerce no longer being stored away selfishly but devoted to God's people. The Hiphil in Nehemiah 13:13 is denominative from 'otsar' (treasury), meaning 'to appoint as treasurer.' Spanish 'atesoraron' and 'los que atesoran' preserve the treasury metaphor, while English helpfully distinguishes 'stored up' from 'appointed treasurers.' ASCENDING MOVEMENT

en: and-I-appointed-treasurers, it-will-be-stored, stored-up | es: Y-puse-como-tesoreros, atesoraron, los-que-atesoran | fr: [אצרו], [ואוצרה], [יאצר] | de: [אצרו], [האוצרים], [ואוצרה] 2Kgs 20:17; Neh 13:13; Isa 23:18; Isa 39:6; Amos 3:10

אֶצֶר H0687 Conj-w | N-proper-ms (5×)

Ezer — a Horite chief, son of Seir, whose name may mean 'treasure' or 'covenant.'

A proper name borne by a Horite clan chief listed among the sons of Seir in the genealogies of Genesis 36 and 1 Chronicles 1. The name likely derives from the root meaning 'to store up' or 'treasure,' though BDB also notes the Arabic cognate meaning 'covenant' or 'bond.' Ezer appears in Genesis 36:21 among the Horite chiefs of the land of Edom, with his own sons listed in 36:27, and his chieftainship confirmed in 36:30. The parallel passages in 1 Chronicles 1:38 and 1:42 reproduce the same genealogical data. English renders the name 'Ezer,' while Spanish uses 'Etser,' closer to the Hebrew pronunciation.

(5×) The proper name Ezer (Hebrew 'Etser'), identifying a Horite chief descended from Seir in the pre-Israelite population of Edom. He appears in the Seir genealogy of Genesis 36:21 as one of the Horite sons of Seir, with his own descendants named in 36:27 and his chieftainship listed in 36:30. The parallel in 1 Chronicles 1:38, 42 reproduces the same lineage. The name may mean 'treasure' (from the root '-ts-r, to store up) or 'covenant/bond' (Arabic cognate). English 'Ezer' and Spanish 'Etser' reflect different transliteration traditions of the same Hebrew name. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Etser, Ezer, and-Etser | es: Etser, y-Etser | fr: Ezer, [אצר], [ואצר] | de: Ezer, Ezers, [אצר] Gen 36:21; Gen 36:27; Gen 36:30; 1Chr 1:38; 1Chr 1:42

אֶקְדָּח H0688 N-ms (1×)

carbuncle or glowing stone; precious stones in Isaiah's restored Jerusalem (Isa 54:12)

This rare gemstone term appears in Isaiah's vision of Jerusalem's reconstruction with precious materials. The Hebrew suggests something fiery or sparkling. Ancient versions offered crystal, carved stones, or carbuncles. The prophet employs jewel imagery to convey the surpassing beauty and value of the restored city, transforming building materials into treasures befitting God's dwelling place.

(1×) Isaiah 54:12 promises: 'I will make your pinnacles of agate, your gates of carbuncles, and all your wall of precious stones.' The 'stones of carbuncle' (or fiery glow) transform defensive architecture into radiant beauty. Translation divergence (English 'carbuncle', Spanish 'carbún', French/German preserve Hebrew) reflects uncertainty about the specific gem, but consensus recognizes a brilliant, fire-like stone. This image anticipates Revelation's jeweled New Jerusalem. FIRE AND BURNING

en: carbuncle | es: carbún | fr: [אקדח] | de: [אקדח] Isa 54:12

אַקּוֹ H0689 Conj-w / N-ms (1×)
wild goat or ibex; a clean animal permitted for food (Deut 14:5)
This animal appears in Deuteronomy's list of permitted game, positioned among gazelles, deer, and other wild ruminants. Ancient versions identified it as ibex or wild goat. The inclusion of such creatures in kosher legislation reveals Israel's dietary laws encompassed both domestic livestock and huntable game. The term captures the bounty available in the Promised Land's diverse ecosystems.

(1×) Deuteronomy 14:5 permits: 'the deer, the gazelle, the roebuck, the wild goat, the ibex, the antelope, and the mountain sheep.' This 'wild goat' stands amid other clean game animals. Multilingual consensus (English 'wild-goat', Spanish 'cabra-montés', French 'wild-bouc', German 'wild-Ziege') identifies it as mountain-dwelling wild goat or ibex. The list reflects both legislative precision and the ecological richness Israel would inherit in Canaan's varied terrain. MALE GOAT

en: and-wild-goat | es: y-cabra-montés | fr: et-wild-bouc | de: und-wild-Ziege Deut 14:5

אֵרָא H0690 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)
Ara, a personal name; descendant of Asher (1 Chr 7:38)
Ara appears in the genealogical records of the tribe of Asher without explanation of his significance. His name's meaning remains uncertain, though some have conjectured it relates to 'lion.' The Chronicles genealogies preserve such names to maintain tribal continuity and identity during and after exile. Even obscure figures like Ara mattered for establishing family lines and territorial claims.

(1×) First Chronicles 7:38 lists Asherite descendants: 'The sons of Jether: Jephunneh, Pispa, and Ara.' This brief mention preserves Ara's place in tribal memory. The consistent transliteration (English 'and-Ara', Spanish 'y-Ara', French/German preserve the conjunction and name) treats it as an authentic personal name. The Chronicler's genealogical care ensured that even minor figures retained their place in Israel's family tree. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Ara | es: y-Ara | fr: [ואראא] | de: [ואראא] 1Chr 7:38

אֲרִאֵל H0691 N-msc / 3mp (1×)
valiant ones or heroes; possibly 'men of Ariel' (Zion); textual uncertainty (Isa 33:7)
This problematic term has generated multiple interpretations: heroes, messengers, men from Ariel (a name for Jerusalem), or possibly a corruption requiring emendation. The context describes mourning and crying, suggesting human agents in distress. Ancient versions read forms of 'see' or 'fear' instead. The obscurity may result from textual corruption, but the passage's emotional intensity—weeping over broken covenant—comes through clearly.

(1×) Isaiah 33:7 laments: 'Behold, their valiant ones cry in the streets; the envoys of peace weep bitterly.' Whether 'their valiant ones' means warriors, Zion's citizens, or heroes, the image conveys profound grief. Cross-lingual evidence (English 'their-valiant-ones', Spanish 'sus-valientes', French/German preserve Hebrew) supports reading it as brave men, though with textual uncertainty. The contrast between strength (valiant) and tears (weeping) intensifies the pathos of judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: their-valiant-ones | es: sus-valientes | fr: [אראלם] | de: [אראלם] Isa 33:7

אֲרִאֵלִי H0692 Art / N-proper-ms (3×)
Areli, Arelite (Gadite clan name and its gentilic)
The name of a son of Gad and the corresponding clan designation. The name may derive from the same root as Ariel, possibly meaning 'lion of God' or relating to altar-hearth imagery, though the meaning remains uncertain. Genesis preserves the personal name in the clan lists, while Numbers provides both the individual and the family designation. Chronicles of tribal identity mattered deeply for inheritance and communal belonging, making even brief genealogical notices significant for preserving Israel's structure.

(3×) Genesis 46:16 lists Areli among the sons of Gad who came to Egypt with Jacob's family. Numbers 26:17 repeats the name in the wilderness census, adding the gentilic form 'the clan of the Arelites,' indicating that Areli's descendants formed a recognized family group within Gad. The dual mention—personal name and clan designation—shows how individuals became the heads of families that maintained distinct identity through generations, preserving tribal structure that governed land allocation and communal organization. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Areli, the-Arelite, to-Areli | es: de-Areli, los-arelitas, y-Areli | fr: et-Areli, le-Arelite, à-Areli | de: der-Arelite, und-Areli, zu-Areli Gen 46:16; Num 26:17

אָרַב H0693 V-Qal-Imperf.Cohort-1cp (41×)
Lie in wait, ambush; to lurk with hostile intent, or the ambush party itself
A verb of stealth and hostile intent, 'arav describes the concealed predator poised to strike. Its range runs from the literal military ambush – as in Joshua 8, where Israel sets an elaborate ambush against Ai – to the metaphorical lurking of the wicked, who 'lie in wait like a lion in a thicket' (Ps 10:9). Proverbs uses it for the enticements of sinners: 'let us lie in wait for blood' (Prov 1:11). The Qal participle frequently substantivizes into 'the ambush' or 'the ambushers,' and Spanish neatly distinguishes between 'acechar' (to stalk) and 'emboscada' (ambush party).

1. lie in wait, lurk (21×) The basic verbal action of concealing oneself to attack by surprise. Deuteronomy 19:11 legislates the case of one who 'lies in wait' for a neighbor, while Judges 16:2 describes the Gazites lying in wait for Samson. Psalm 10:9 uses the vivid simile of a lion lurking in its den. The Qal imperfect and participle forms dominate, with Proverbs 1:11 and 1:18 extending the image to moral enticement. AMBUSH LURK

en: I-have-lurked, and-lay-in-wait, and-lie-in-wait | es: Acecha, acecha, acechan | fr: [ארב], [ארבו], comme-un-étendu-dans-attends | de: [ארב], [ארבו], [ארבתי] Deut 19:11; Judg 9:32; Judg 9:34; Judg 9:43; Judg 16:2

2. ambush, ambush party (18×) The substantive use of the Qal participle ('orev) as a noun denoting the ambush force, the ambush position, or the act of ambushing. Joshua 8 alone accounts for most occurrences (vv. 2, 4, 7, 12, 14, 19, 21), where the detailed ambush strategy against Ai is narrated. Spanish 'emboscada' and French 'embuscade' translate this nominal sense, distinguishing it from the verbal 'lie in wait.' Judges 20:29-37 provides a parallel extended ambush narrative. AMBUSH MILITARY

en: ambushes, an-ambush, and-ambush-of | es: Y-la-emboscada, de-la-emboscada, emboscada | fr: [הארבים], [ואורב], comme-un-embuscade | de: [באורבם], [האורבים], [ואורב] Josh 8:2; Josh 8:4; Josh 8:7; Josh 8:12; Josh 8:14

3. ambushers (Piel intensive) (2×) The Piel intensive participle (me'arvim) denoting professional or deliberate ambushers. Judges 9:25 describes men of Shechem who 'set ambushers' against Abimelech on the hilltops, and 2 Chronicles 20:22 records God setting ambushers against Judah's enemies. The Piel stem may intensify the deliberateness or organized nature of the ambush. Spanish 'emboscadores' (ambushers as agents) captures the participial, agentive

force. AMBUSH MILITARY
en: ambushers | es: emboscadas, emboscadores | fr: [מארבים], embusqués | de: [מארבים], ambushers Judg 9:25; 2Chr 20:22

אֲרָב H0694 N-proper-fs (1×)
Arab, a place name; city in Judah's hill country near Hebron (Josh 15:52)
Arab appears in Joshua's allotment of Judahite hill country cities, near Hebron. The name may relate to desert or steppe regions. Ancient traditions located it at Heromith in the Daroma. Though sharing a name with the ethnic group, this is a distinct geographical designation. The site represents one of many settlements securing Judah's heartland in the tribal inheritance.

(1×) Joshua 15:52 includes Arab in Judah's cities: 'Arab, Dumah, Eshan...' positioned in the hill country near Hebron. The multilingual transliteration (English 'Arav', Spanish 'Arab', French 'Arav', German 'Arav') preserves the place name. Minor spelling variations reflect efforts to distinguish the town from the ethnic term 'Arab,' but the context clearly identifies a specific settlement within Judah's tribal territory, fulfilling the land promise at a granular level. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8655 WITH 4 SENSES en: Arav | es: Arab | fr: Arav | de: Arav Josh 15:52

אֹרֶב H0695 N-ms (2×)
ambush, lair; lying in wait
This noun denotes both the act of lying in ambush and the place where animals (or warriors) hide to strike. Job uses it for a lion's lair and den, evoking both the creature's hiding place and its predatory waiting. The military sense of ambush extends naturally from this core meaning.

(2×) Appears in Job 37:8 (animals entering lairs) and 38:40 (lions crouching in ambush). The word captures both location (lair, den, covert) and action (lying in wait). The parallel term 'me'onot' (dens) in 37:8 reinforces the shelter sense, while 38:40 emphasizes the predatory posture of waiting to strike. AMBUSH MILITARY en: ambush, its-lair | es: acechar, guarida | fr: ארב | de: [ארב] Job 37:8; Job 38:40

אֹרֶב H0696 N-msc / 3ms (1×)
ambush, intrigue; with possessive suffix indicating treacherous planning (Jer 9:8)
This noun describes lying in wait, whether military ambush or metaphorical treachery. Jeremiah uses it figuratively for deceitful scheming: the tongue sets ambushes rather than armies. Hosea employs it similarly for plotted intrigue. The military term's metaphorical extension captures how speech can be weaponized, how words can ambush the unsuspecting. The image conveys premeditation and malicious intent.

(1×) Jeremiah 9:8 condemns: 'Their tongue is a deadly arrow; it speaks deceit; with his mouth one speaks peace to his neighbor, but in his heart he plans his ambush.' The phrase 'his ambush' reveals calculated betrayal—friendly words masking hostile intent. The Hebrew possessive construction (English 'his-ambush', Spanish 'emboscada-su') emphasizes personal ownership of treachery. The military metaphor transforms interpersonal deception into warfare, showing how social trust can become a killing ground. AMBUSH LURK
en: his-ambush | es: emboscada-su | fr: [ארבו] | de: [ארבו] Jer 9:8

אַרְבֶּה H0697 N-ms (24×)
Locust – the swarming migratory grasshopper, devastating crop-destroyer and figure for invading armies
The common swarming locust, a migratory grasshopper species that appears in immense clouds capable of stripping entire landscapes bare. Closely associated with the Egyptian plagues (Exod 10:4-19), where God sends and then removes the swarm by a mighty east wind, this word denotes both literal agricultural devastation and serves as a vivid simile for innumerable invading armies (Judg 6:5; 7:12). Joel 1:4 places it in a four-species sequence depicting total crop destruction. Leviticus 11:22 lists it among clean insects permitted for food. German Heuschrecke, Spanish langosta, and French sauterelle all converge on the same well-known insect.

locust (swarming insect) (24×) The swarming locust, a migratory grasshopper appearing in devastating multitudes. Primarily associated with the Egyptian plague narrative (Exod 10:4-19), where it functions as an instrument of divine judgment. Listed among clean insects permitted for food (Lev 11:22). Frequently deployed in simile for overwhelming multitudes – the Midianite hordes are 'like locusts for number' (Judg 6:5; 7:12). Joel 1:4 places it in a sequence with three other locust species to depict total agricultural devastation. Multilingual evidence is uniform: Spanish langosta, German Heuschrecke, French sauterelle all point to the same well-recognized insect. WILDERNESS AND DESERT
en: are-like-the-swarming-locust, like-a-locust, like-the-locust | es: como-langosta, como-langosta!, como-langostas | fr: [ארבה], comme-le-locusts, comme-sauterelle | de: Heuschrecke, Heuschrecken, [ארבה] Exod 10:4; Exod 10:12; Exod 10:13; Exod 10:14

אָרְבָּה H0698 N-fpc (1×)
tricks or cunning; plural construct indicating skillful hand movements (Isa 25:11)
This plural noun denotes artifices or clever manipulations, literally 'tricks of his hands.' Isaiah uses it in a judgment oracle where God brings down the prideful, spreading their hands in drowning futility. The term suggests both dexterity and deceit—hands that scheme and grasp. The image warns that human cleverness, however skillful, cannot resist divine judgment.

(1×) Isaiah 25:11 warns: 'Though he spreads his hands in it as a swimmer spreads his hands to swim, God will lay low his pompous pride together with the tricks of his hands.' The phrase 'tricks of his hands' could mean swimming motions or desperate grasping, but the root sense of artifice suggests futile cleverness. Cross-lingual variation (English 'of-his-hands', Spanish 'habilidad-de'—'skill of', French/German preserve Hebrew) reflects uncertainty, but all recognize hand-related cunning failing before divine power. DECEIT AND TREACHERY
en: of-his-hands | es: habilidad-de | fr: [ארבות] | de: [ארבות] Isa 25:11

אֲרֻבָּה H0699 Conj-w / N-fpc (9×)
A latticed window or opening; used figuratively of the floodgates or sluices of heaven through which rain and blessing pour.
Refers to a latticed opening or window in a structure, such as a vent for smoke (Hos 13:3) or dove-cote openings (Isa 60:8). Most memorably, it denotes the 'windows of heaven' (Gen 7:11; 8:2) through which God unleashes the deluge or pours out blessing (Mal 3:10). The Spanish and French translations consistently render it with 'ventana/window' imagery, while the metaphorical extension in Ecclesiastes 12:3 compares dimming eyesight to latticed windows growing dark.

window, lattice, sluice (9×) A latticed window, opening, or sluice — an aperture built into a wall or roof. Concretely, it appears as a smoke-vent (Hos 13:3) or dove-cote opening (Isa 60:8). Ecclesiastes 12:3 uses it metaphorically of aging eyes growing dim, as if the lattice-shutters of the body are closing. Most strikingly, the phrase אֲרֻבּוֹת הַשָּׁמַיִם ('windows of heaven') describes the cosmic floodgates God opens — for catastrophic deluge in Genesis 7:11 and for overflowing blessing in Malachi 3:10. Spanish 'ventana' and English 'window' consistently capture the architectural sense across translations. WINDOW OPENING en: and-windows-of, from-a-window, their-windows | es: de-la-ventana, por-las-ventanas, sus-ventanas? | fr: [ארבות], [ארבתיהם], et-windows-de | de: Fenster, [ארבות], [ארבתיהם] Gen 7:11; Gen 8:2; 2Kgs 7:2; 2Kgs 7:19; Eccl 12:3

אֲרֻבּוֹת H0700 Prep-b (1×)

Arubboth, a place name; administrative district in Solomon's kingdom (1 Kgs 4:10)

Arubboth marked one of Solomon's twelve administrative districts, governed by Ben-hesed. The site's location remains uncertain, though it lay somewhere in Israel's northern or central region. Scholars have proposed connections to words meaning 'ambush' or other roots, but the geographical context suggests a settled town serving as a district center. The administrative system it represents reflects Solomon's sophisticated governance.

(1×) First Kings 4:10 describes Solomon's administration: 'Ben-hesed, in Arubboth (to him belonged Socoh and all the land of Hepher).' The district centered on Arubboth controlled significant territory. Universal transliteration (English 'in-Arubboth', Spanish 'en-Arubot', French 'dans-Arubboth', German 'in-Arubboth') confirms recognition as a place name. The precise bureaucratic organization—twelve districts for twelve months of provisioning—showcased Solomon's administrative genius and the kingdom's centralization. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-Arubboth | es: en-Arubot | fr: dans-Arubboth | de: in-Arubboth 1Kgs 4:10

אַרְבִּי H0701 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Arbite, a gentilicadjective; ethnic or geographical designation (2 Sam 23:35)

This designation identifies Paarai, one of David's mighty men, by his hometown or clan. The definite article suggests a specific place or group called Arab or Arba. The parallel text in Chronicles may differ, suggesting textual variation. Such ethnic identifiers in the roster of heroes indicate David's following drew from diverse Judahite and Israelite communities, building a coalition force.

(1×) Second Samuel 23:35 lists David's warriors: 'Hezro the Carmelite, Paarai the Arbite...' The designation 'the Arbite' (with definite article in Hebrew) marks Paarai's origin. Consistent translation (English 'the-Arbite', Spanish 'el-arbita', French 'le-Arbite', German 'der-Arbite') preserves the gentilic form. The diversity of geographical origins among David's elite—Carmelite, Arbite, Hittite, etc.—illustrates how his kingship unified disparate groups under one banner. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Arbite | es: el-arbita | fr: le-Arbite | de: der-Arbite 2Sam 23:35

אַרְבַּע H0702 Prep-m / Number-fsc (320×)

Four; the cardinal number, also forming the compound 'fourteen' when paired with the word for ten.

The Hebrew numeral for four appears across every genre of Scripture – in genealogies, measurements, geographic descriptions, and ritual calendars. Its 320 occurrences divide naturally into standalone uses (277 times) and compound uses as part of 'fourteen' (43 times). All target languages translate with their basic numeral for four – Arabic arba, Spanish cuatro, French quatre, German vier – while the compound fourteen triggers language-specific compound forms (Spanish catorce, French quatorze, German vierzehn). The 'four rivers' of Eden (Gen 2:10) and the Passover date of the fourteenth day (Exod 12:6) are among its most memorable appearances.

1. four (cardinal number) (277×) The cardinal numeral 'four' used independently or in construct to count persons, objects, directions, measurements, and durations (277 occurrences). Uniformly rendered across all target languages with basic numeral forms: Arabic arba'a, Spanish cuatro, French quatre, German vier. Used for the four rivers of paradise (Gen 2:10), four kings in alliance (Gen 14:9), and the four hundred years of sojourning (Gen 15:13). NUMBER FOUR en: four, of-four | es: cuatro, cuatrocientos | fr: de-quatre, quatre | de: vier, vier-, vierhundert Gen 11:16; Gen 14:9; Gen 15:13; Gen 23:15; Gen 23:16

2. fourteen (compound numeral) (43×) The numeral 'four' functioning as the units component of the compound number fourteen, always paired with the Hebrew word for ten (asar/esreh). Target languages often deploy dedicated compound forms – Spanish catorce, French quatorze, German vierzehn – distinguishing this from the standalone cardinal. Central to calendrical reckoning: the Passover lamb is slaughtered on the fourteenth day (Exod 12:6, 18), and the genealogies in Matthew 1 are structured around sets of fourteen generations. NUMBER FOUR en: four, four-, fourteen | es: catorce, catorce-, cuatro | fr: quatorze, quatre, quatre- | de: sieben, vier, vierzehn Gen 14:5; Gen 31:41; Gen 46:22; Exod 12:6; Exod 12:18

אַרְבַּע H0703 Number-fs (8×)

Four — the cardinal number, used for counting and in compound numerals

The cardinal number four (אַרְבָּעָה / אַרְבַּע in masculine form) is one of the most common numerals in Scripture. In the Daniel and Ezra passages where this lemma clusters, it counts beasts in apocalyptic vision (Dan 7:2, 3, 6, 17), men walking in the fiery furnace (Dan 3:25), and sacrificial animals (Ezra 6:17, 'four hundred'). Every translation tradition renders it with the simple numeral — English 'four,' Spanish 'cuatro,' French 'quatre' — confirming its purely quantitative, unambiguous function.

four (cardinal number) (8×) The cardinal number four (אַרְבַּע feminine, אַרְבָּעָה masculine), used throughout the Hebrew Bible for straightforward enumeration. In Daniel it counts the winds of heaven (7:2), great beasts (7:3), wings and heads of the leopard-beast (7:6), and the four kingdoms (7:17), as well as the four men seen in Nebuchadnezzar's furnace (3:25). In Ezra 6:17 it forms part of the compound 'four hundred' for sacrificial he-goats. Multilingual renderings are uniformly numeric — English 'four,' Spanish 'cuatro,' French 'quatre,' German 'vier' — with zero semantic variation. NUMBER FOUR en: and-four, four | es: Y-cuatro, cuatro, cuatrocientos | fr: [אַרְבַּע], et-quatre, quatre | de: [אַרְבַּע], [אַרְבָּעָה], [וְאַרְבָּעָה] Ezra 6:17; Dan 3:25; Dan 7:2; Dan 7:3; Dan 7:6

קִרְיַת אַרְבַּע H0704

Kiriath-arba, ancient name of Hebron; possibly meaning 'city of four' or named after Arba

This ancient designation for Hebron appears primarily in Priestly and early conquest narratives. The name's meaning remains uncertain—either 'city of four,' perhaps referencing four quarters or clans, or preserving the name of an earlier Anakim ancestor called Arba. Sarah died here, and Abraham purchased the cave of Machpelah for her burial. The Israelites renamed it Hebron, though biblical writers occasionally preserve the older name to emphasize the city's antiquity. The multiple naming creates a literary device connecting patriarchal promises with conquest fulfillment.

אַרְבָּעִים H0705 Conj-w / Number-cp (135×)

Forty — cardinal numeral signifying a generation, a period of testing, or a complete span of judgment throughout Scripture

Arba'im is the indeclinable Hebrew numeral for forty, occurring 135 times and ranking among the most symbolically laden numbers in the Bible. Israel wandered forty years in the wilderness (Num 14:33-34; Deut 8:2), Moses spent forty days on Sinai (Exod 24:18; 34:28), Elijah traveled forty days to Horeb (1 Kgs 19:8), and Nineveh received forty days' notice of judgment (Jonah 3:4). The number frequently accompanies the nouns shanah ('year') and yom ('day'), creating formulaic phrases that became shorthand for divinely appointed intervals. German occasionally renders the numeral inconsistently ('vierzig' but also 'funfundvierzig'), reflecting compound-number translation challenges.

forty (135×) The cardinal numeral forty, used as an indeclinable noun most often in construct with shanah ('year') or yom ('day') to mark divinely significant periods. It patterns as a round number denoting a generation (Judg 3:11; 1 Sam 4:18), a span of testing or preparation (the wilderness years, Num 14:33; Moses on Sinai, Exod 24:18), or a window of judgment (Jonah 3:4). Spanish 'cuarenta,' French 'quarante,' and German 'vierzig' all translate it straightfor-wardly, though none carry the covenantal resonance that the Hebrew number accumulated across centuries of sacred narrative. LARGE CARDINAL NUMBERS

en: forty | es: cuarenta | fr: quarante | de: fünfundvierzig, vierzig, von-vierzig Gen 5:13; Gen 7:4; Gen 7:12; Gen 7:17; Gen 8:6

אַרְבַּע H0706 Number-fd (1×)

fourfold, quadruple restitution; numerical compensation required by law (2 Sam 12:6)

This feminine dual form of 'four' appears in Nathan's parable judging David's sin. The fourfold restitution matched Torah's requirement for sheep theft. The number carries both legal precision and narrative irony: David would lose four sons (the infant, Amnon, Absalom, Adonijah). The term bridges legal formulae and prophetic judgment, showing how divine justice exceeds mere civil penalty.

(1×) Second Samuel 12:6 pronounces: 'He shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he did this thing and because he had no pity.' Nathan's verdict invokes Exodus 22:1's law requiring quadruple restitution for stolen sheep. The multilingual rendering (English 'fourfold', Spanish 'cuatro-veces'—'four times', French/German 'fourfold') consistently recognizes multiplied payment. The legal precision gains prophetic depth when four of David's sons subsequently die, suggesting divine mathematics transcend courtroom arithmetic. NUMBER FOUR en: fourfold | es: cuatro-veces | fr: fourfold | de: fourfold 2Sam 12:6

אָרַג H0707 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (13×)

To weave cloth or fabric; also used substantively for a weaver or the craft of weaving.

A verb describing the craft of weaving textiles on a loom. The participle frequently functions as a noun meaning 'weaver,' and the phrase 'weaver's beam' became a standard idiom for a massive spear shaft (1 Sam 17:7; 2 Sam 21:19). The word spans literal textile production—Egyptian linen workers in Isaiah 19:9, temple curtain makers in Exodus 28:32 and 35:35—and metaphorical intrigue, as in Isaiah 59:5 where the wicked 'weave spider's webs.' Spanish consistently renders the participle as 'tejedor' (weaver), confirming the occupational sense predominates.

weave (Qal) (13×) To interlace threads on a loom to produce cloth or fabric, covering both the action of weaving and the person who weaves. The participle serves as a professional title—'weaver'—in Exodus 28:32, 35:35, and 39:22, 27, describing artisans crafting priestly garments. The 'weaver's beam' (1 Sam 17:7; 2 Sam 21:19; 1 Chr 11:23; 20:5) became a stock comparison for Goliath's enormous spear. Isaiah 59:5 extends the image metaphorically: the wicked weave spider's webs, spinning plots of deception. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: and-weaver, and-weavers-of, like-a-weaver | es: como-tejedor, tejedor, tejedores | fr: [ארגים], [ואורגים], [יארגו] | de: [ארגים], [וארגים], [יארגו] Exod 28:32; Exod 35:35; Exod 39:22; Exod 39:27; Judg 16:13

אֶרֶג H0708 Art / N-ms (2×)

loom, weaver's shuttle

This term designates the weaver's loom or shuttle. Samson plucked up a hand-loom when Delilah bound his hair to it, demonstrating his strength. Job used the image of a weaver's shuttle to describe the swift passage of his days—a powerful metaphor for life's brevity.

(2×) Weaving equipment in Judges 16:14 (the loom Samson uprooted) and Job 7:6 (metaphor for life's speed: 'my days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle'). The dual usage—literal tool and poetic image—shows how common technology became proverbial. Some translations specify 'shuttle' while others say 'loom,' reflecting textual and interpretive nuances. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: the-loom, weaver's-shuttle | es: el-telar, lanzadera, | fr: le-loom, ארג | de: [ארג], der-loom Judg 16:14; Job 7:6

אַרְגֹּב H0709 N-proper-fs (5×)

Argob — a well-defined region in Bashan, associated with sixty fortified cities and Jair's settlements.

A place name designating a specific district within the territory of Bashan in Transjordan, consistently appearing with 'hebel' (region/measured portion). The name may derive from a root meaning 'heap' or 'clod,' perhaps describing the volcanic terrain. In Deuteronomy 3:4, 13–14 it is the region of sixty fortified cities conquered by the Israelites and assigned to the half-tribe of Manasseh, associated with Jair son of Manasseh. In 1 Kings 4:13 it falls within the administrative district of Ben-Geber. The problematic 2 Kings 15:25 reference appears in the context of a palace conspiracy. French and German both transliterate as 'Argob/Argov,' while English and Spanish consistently use 'Argob.'

(5×) The geographical name Argob, identifying a defined district within Bashan in Transjordan, famous for its sixty fortified cities. The name possibly means 'heap of clods' or 'stony region,' fitting the basaltic landscape of the Hauran. Deuteronomy 3:4, 13–14 pairs it with 'hebel' (measured region) and connects it to Jair's renaming of the area. First Kings 4:13 places it in Solomon's administrative framework under Ben-Geber. The reference in 2 Kings 15:25 is textually difficult, possibly naming a person or place involved in Pekah's conspiracy against Pekahiah. French 'le Argob' and Spanish 'el Argob' both preserve the definite article sometimes attached to it in Hebrew. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Argob, Argov, the-Argob | es: Argob, el-Argob | fr: Argob, Argov, le-Argob | de: Argob, Argov, der-Argob Deut 3:4; Deut 3:13; Deut 3:14; 1Kgs 4:13; 2Kgs 15:25

אַרְגְּוָן H0710 Conj-w (1×)

purple thread; Aramaic form of the common word for purple dye (2 Chr 2:7)

This Aramaic variant of the standard Hebrew purple-word appears in Chronicles' account of Solomon's temple preparations. The purple dye, derived from Mediterranean murex snails, was costly and prestigious. Chronicles uses the Aramaic form perhaps reflecting the text's late composition or Phoenician commercial terminology. Purple featured prominently in tabernacle and temple fabrics, symbolizing royalty and divinity.

(1×) Second Chronicles 2:7 requests: 'Send me a man skilled to work in gold, silver, bronze, iron, and in purple, crimson, and blue fabrics.' The phrase 'in the purple' (with Aramaic form) appears alongside other luxury materials. The conjunction 'and' in Hebrew (English 'and-in-the-purple', Spanish 'y-en-la-púrpura') integrates purple into the list of specialized crafts. The Aramaic coloring reflects the international character of Solomon's building project, drawing on Phoenician expertise. PURPLE FABRIC DYE

en: and-in-the-purple | es: y-en-la-púrpura | fr: [ובארגון] | de: [ובארגון] 2Chr 2:7

אַרְגְּוָן H0711 N-msd (3×)

purple (Aramaic: purple dye or fabric, royal color)

The Aramaic term for purple dye or purple fabric, a luxury associated with royalty. Daniel uses this word when describing the honors promised to whoever could interpret the writing on the wall: clothed in purple along with gold and a chain. Purple dye, extracted from Mediterranean mollusks, was extraordinarily expensive and therefore restricted to royalty and the wealthy elite. The color signified power, prestige, and privilege across ancient Near Eastern cultures.

(3×) Daniel 5:7, 16, and 29 all mention purple as part of the reward offered to and eventually bestowed upon Daniel. The king promises that the interpreter 'shall be clothed with purple and have a chain of gold around his neck'—royal honors marking elevation to third ruler in the kingdom. The threefold repetition underscores the significance: purple marks the transfer of status from common interpreter to royal official. The Aramaic term matches the cultural reality of the Babylonian court, where color communicated social hierarchy. PURPLE FABRIC DYE

en: purple | es: púrpura | fr: [ארגונא] | de: [ארגונא] Dan 5:7; Dan 5:16; Dan 5:29

אַרְגָּז H0712 Art / N-ms (3×)

box, chest, coffer (container for sacred or valuable items)

A box or chest used to transport sacred objects, specifically mentioned in the account of returning the ark of the covenant to Israel. The Philistines placed their guilt offering of golden tumors and mice in this container alongside the ark. The term may relate to swaying or rocking motion, possibly describing how such boxes were carried or secured. The narrative context emphasizes careful handling of holy things even by those who did not worship Israel's God.

(3×) 1 Samuel 6:8, 11, and 15 describe the box that held the golden guilt offering when the Philistines returned the ark. They were instructed to 'take the ark of the LORD and place it on the cart, and put the golden figures that you are returning to him as a guilt offering in a box at its side.' The separate container kept the offerings distinct from the ark itself, showing reverence even in return. The box served both practical function (secure transport) and symbolic purpose (appropriate handling of sacred reparation). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-box, the-box | es: en-la-caja, la-caja | fr: dans-le-box, le-box | de: der-box, in-der-box 1Sam 6:8; 1Sam 6:11; 1Sam 6:15

אַרְגָּמָן H0713 Prep-k (38×)

Purple cloth/dye — costly murex-derived textile used in tabernacle furnishings, priestly garments, and royal attire

A noun of probable foreign origin (possibly Sanskrit ragaman, 'reddish') denoting red-purple fabric dyed with extract from the murex snail — one of the ancient world's most expensive commodities. It appears almost exclusively in the tabernacle construction passages (Exod 25-39), typically in the formulaic triad 'blue, purple, and scarlet yarn' (tekhelet, argaman, tola'at shani). Outside the cult, purple signifies royalty and extreme wealth: the noble woman's clothing (Prov 31:22), the beloved's chariot (Song 3:10), and the restoration of Jerusalem (Jer 10:9). Esther 1:6 uses it for the luxurious palace decor of the Persian king.

purple (fabric/dye) (38×) Purple or red-purple dyed fabric and thread, primarily attested in cultic textile lists for the tabernacle (Exod 25:4; 26:1, 31, 36; 27:16; 28:5-8, 15, 33; 35:6, 23, 25, 35; 36:8-37; 38:18, 23; 39:1-29) and secondarily for royal or luxurious contexts (Judg 8:26; 2 Chr 2:6, 13; 3:14; Esth 1:6; 8:15; Prov 31:22; Song 3:10; 7:6). All target languages render with their standard purple term — Spanish 'púrpura,' French 'pourpre,' German 'Purpur' — reflecting a single, stable referent. PURPLE FABRIC DYE

en: and-purple, and-the-purple | es: y-la-púrpura, y-púrpura | fr: et-le-pourpre, et-pourpre | de: und-der-purpur, und-purpur Exod 25:4; Exod 26:1; Exod 26:31; Exod 26:36; Exod 27:16

אַרְד H0714 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Ard (Benjamite, son or grandson of Benjamin)

Ard appears in Benjamite genealogies with some variation: Genesis lists him as Benjamin's son, while Numbers makes him a grandson (through Bela). Chronicles offers yet another variant (Addar). These discrepancies reflect the fluidity of ancient genealogical records across different textual traditions.

(2×) Benjamite name in Genesis 46:21 (as Benjamin's son) and Numbers 26:40 (as grandson via Bela), with the variant form 'Addar' in 1 Chronicles 8:3. Such genealogical variation was common in ancient records. Translations consistently preserve the name with minor phonetic adjustments across languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ard, and-Ard | es: Ard, y-Ard | fr: Ard, et-Ard | de: Ard, und-Ard Gen 46:21; Num 26:40

אַרְדּוֹן H0715 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ardon, a personal name; son of Caleb of Judah (1 Chr 2:18)

Ardon appears briefly in the complex Calebite genealogies in Chronicles. As Caleb's son, he belonged to one of Judah's most prominent families. The name may relate to descent or bronze, but its etymology remains uncertain. Chronicles preserves such names to trace land ownership and family status in post-exilic Judah, where genealogical authentication determined inheritance rights.

(1×) First Chronicles 2:18 records Caleb's descendants: 'Caleb son of Hezron had children by his wife Azubah (and by Jerioth); and these were her sons: Jesher, Shobab, and Ardon.' The genealogical precision (including wives' names and multiple lines) reflects the Chronicler's concern for legitimate lineage. The conjunction 'and Ardon' (English/Spanish/French/German all preserve it) places him last among his mother's sons, a detail mattering for inheritance but now known only through this single verse. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Ardon | es: y-Ardon | fr: [וארדון] | de: [וארדון] 1Chr 2:18

אַרְדִי H0716 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Ardite, a gentilic form; patronymic from Ard, family in Benjamin (Num 26:40)

This designation identifies the Ardite clan descended from Ard, within Benjamin's tribe. The definite article makes it collective: the family of the Ardites. Numbers employs such patronymics to organize the wilderness census by family groups within tribes. These administrative divisions established military units and later served as land allocation frameworks in Canaan.

(1×) Numbers 26:40 records Benjamin's census: 'The sons of Bela were Ard and Naaman: of Ard, the family of the Ardites; of Naaman, the family of the Naamites.' The pattern 'of X, the family of the Xites' creates a systematic census structure. Consistent translation (English 'the-Ardite', Spanish 'los-arditas'—plural 'the Ardites', French/German preserve the singular gentilic) shows how Hebrew used collective singular. The Ardites formed one of Benjamin's subclans, numbered for war and inheritance. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Ardite | es: los-arditas | fr: le-Ardite | de: der-Ardite Num 26:40

אָרָה H0717 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp / 3fs (2×)

pluck, gather (grapes, myrrh)

This verb means to pluck or gather, particularly grapes from a vine. It appears in Psalm 80's metaphor of enemies ravaging Israel (the vine) and in Song of Songs where the lover gathers myrrh. The Ethiopian cognate confirms the gathering sense.

(2×) Describes plucking grapes from a vine in Psalm 80:12 (enemies devastating Israel) and gathering myrrh in Song 5:1 (the lover's harvest of spices). The agricultural imagery in both contexts—destructive in Psalms, sensual in Song—demonstrates the word's semantic range. The first-person 'I gathered' in Song contrasts with the third-person hostile action in Psalms. REAPING AND HARVESTING

en: I-gathered, so-that-pluck-it | es: he-recogido, y-la-vendimian | fr: [וארוה], j'ai-cueilli | de: [אריתי], so-der-pluck-es Ps 80:12; Song 5:1

אֲרִי H0718 Conj-w / Interjection (5×)

Aramaic interjection 'behold!' used to introduce dramatic visions, especially in Daniel's apocalyptic imagery.

An Aramaic exclamation meaning 'lo!' or 'behold!', used exclusively in Daniel's night visions to draw attention to each new symbolic figure emerging in the prophet's sight. Every occurrence appears in the formulaic pattern 'and behold' (waʾărû), marking the dramatic unveiling of successive beasts and the Son of Man in Daniel 7. The Spanish 'he aquí' and German 'siehe' both capture its deictic, attention-directing force—pointing the reader's gaze toward something startling and newly visible.

(5×) A discourse interjection meaning 'behold' or 'lo!', functioning as a deictic marker that signals the dramatic appearance of a new element within a visionary sequence. Confined to Daniel 7:2, 5, 6, 7, 13, it consistently introduces each beast and the 'one like a son of man.' The multilingual glosses uniformly render it as a presentative particle (eng 'and-behold,' spa 'y-he-aquí,' fra 'et-voici,' deu 'und-siehe'), confirming its narrow pragmatic role as an attention-orienting interjection rather than a content word. BEHOLD (PARTICLE)

en: and-behold | es: Y-he-aquí, y-he-aquí | fr: et-voici! | de: und-siehe Dan 7:2; Dan 7:5; Dan 7:6; Dan 7:7; Dan 7:13

אַרְוָד H0719 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Arvad (Phoenician island city north of Tripoli)

Arvad was a Phoenician island city located north of Tripoli, mentioned alongside Sidon in Ezekiel's lament over Tyre. The modern Ruad preserves the ancient name. Assyrian records confirm the city as Aruada, an important maritime center supplying rowers and warriors to Tyre.

(2×) Phoenician island city in Ezekiel 27:8, 11, providing skilled rowers and soldiers to Tyre. The location on an island near the mainland, north of Tripoli, made it a strategic maritime power. Assyrian inscriptions and biblical text align on the city's identity, preserved in the modern site of Ruad. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Arvad, and-Arvad | es: Arvad, y-Arvad | fr: Arvad, et-Arvad | de: [ארוד], [וארוד] Ezek 27:8; Ezek 27:11

אֲרוֹד H0720 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Arod, a personal name; son of Gad, ancestor of the Arodites (Num 26:17)

Arod founded one of Gad's family clans, appearing with the preposition 'to' in the census formula 'to Arod, the family of the Arodites.' The parallel Genesis text calls him Arodi, reflecting minor textual variation. Such name variations between Genesis genealogies and Numbers census lists are common, likely representing dialectical or scribal differences without affecting identity.

(1×) Numbers 26:17 enumerates Gad's clans: 'of Zephon, the family of the Zephonites; of Haggi, the family of the Haggites; of Shuni, the family of the Shunites; of Ozni, the family of the Oznites; of Eri, the family of the Erites; of Arod, the family of the Arodites...' The prepositional formula 'to Arod' (English/Spanish/French/German all preserve the preposition) fits the census pattern. Arod's clan contributed to Gad's tribal strength east of the Jordan. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: to-Arod | es: De-Arod | fr: à-Arod | de: zu-Arod Num 26:17

אַרְוָדִי H0721 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)

Arvadite (Canaanite people from Arvad)

The Arvadites were a Canaanite people group associated with the island city of Arvad. They appear in the Table of Nations as one of the Canaanite clans descended from Ham. Assyrian records mention the Arudai, confirming their historical presence in Phoenician territory.

(2×) Gentilicnoun denoting inhabitants of Arvad in Genesis 10:18 and 1 Chronicles 1:16, both within the Table of Nations listing Canaanite peoples. The consistent pairing with other Phoenician groups (like the Zemarites) locates them geographically and ethnically. The definite article 'the Arvadite' treats them as a collective people group. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Arvadi, the-Arvadite | es: el-arvadeo | fr: [הארודי], le-Arvadite | de: [הארודי], den-Arwaditer Gen 10:18; 1Chr 1:16

אַרוֹדִי H0722 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Arodi/Arodite (son of Gad; his clan)

Arodi was a son of Gad, and the Arodites were his clan. The name appears in Genesis as a personal name and in Numbers as a gentilicdesignating the family group descended from him. This pattern of personal name becoming clan identifier is standard in Israelite genealogical records.

(2×) Personal name 'Arodi' in Genesis 46:16 (son of Gad) and gentilic 'the Arodite' in Numbers 26:17 (his clan). The shorter form is considered more probable by BDB than the variant 'Etzbon.' Cross-linguistic translations show the standard shift from individual to family designation in the census literature. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-Arodi, the-Arodite | es: los-aroditas, y-Arodi | fr: et-Arodi, le-Arodite | de: der-Arodite, und-Arodi Gen 46:16; Num 26:17

אֲרִיָה H0723 Conj-w / N-fp (3×)

stalls, mangers, cribs (feeding troughs or animal enclosures)

Stalls or mangers for livestock, particularly horses. The term appears in descriptions of Solomon's extensive stables and in agricultural storage contexts. Kings and Chronicles record thousands of stalls for Solomon's horses and chariots, indicating both military strength and administrative organization. The additional Chronicles reference speaks of storehouses and stalls for various animals, showing infrastructure for agricultural wealth. The Aramaic loanword reflects cultural contact in vocabulary for animal husbandry.

(3×) 1 Kings 4:26 (English 5:6) states Solomon had stalls for his horses, with textual variants between 40,000 and 4,000. 2 Chronicles 9:25 gives 4,000 stalls for horses and chariots—massive royal infrastructure. 2 Chronicles 32:28 describes Hezekiah's wealth including 'storehouses and stalls for all kinds of cattle.' The term encompasses both feeding troughs and the broader enclosure structures where animals were kept. The multilingual glosses (Spanish 'establos,' French/German variations) all point to structured animal housing, whether for military horses or agricultural livestock. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-stalls, stalls-of | es: establos-de, pesebres-de, y-establos | fr: [אריות], [וארות], stalls-de | de: [אריות], [וארות], stalls-von 1Kgs 4:26; 2Chr 9:25; 2Chr 32:28

אֲרוּכָה H0724 N-fs (6×)

Healing, restoration; literally 'new flesh over a wound,' used figuratively of national and spiritual recovery.

A feminine noun meaning healing or restoration, derived from the image of new flesh growing over a wound. It appears exclusively in figurative contexts describing national recovery. Isaiah 58:8 promises that Israel's 'healing' will spring up speedily when they practice true justice — paired with the verb 'sprout' (tsamach), evoking organic growth. Jeremiah uses it three times: questioning whether Gilead's balm can bring healing (8:22), promising God will restore health to wounded Israel (30:17; 33:6). In the post-exilic period, it describes the physical restoration of the temple walls (2 Chr 24:13) and Jerusalem's walls (Neh 4:7). Spanish 'sanidad' and English 'healing' capture the word's consistent focus on restorative wholeness.

healing, restoration (6×) A feminine noun literally meaning 'the growing of new flesh over a wound,' used figuratively of national and spiritual restoration. In prophetic literature it describes God's promised healing of Israel: springing up swiftly when justice is practiced (Isa 58:8, with the verb צָמַח 'to sprout'), contrasted with the absence of balm in Gilead (Jer 8:22), and affirmed as God's sovereign act of restoration (Jer 30:17; 33:6, both paired with רָפָא 'to heal'). Extended to physical rebuilding: of Joash's temple repairs (2 Chr 24:13) and the reconstruction of Jerusalem's walls under Nehemiah (Neh 4:7). Spanish 'sanidad/sanación' and English 'healing' consistently reflect the unified sense of restorative wholeness. HEALING AND RESTORATION

en: and-your-healing, healing, the-healing-of | es: sanación, sanidad, sanidad-de | fr: [ארוכה], [ארכה], [ארכת] | de: [ארוכה], [ארכה], [ארכת] 2Chr 24:13; Neh 4:7; Isa 58:8; Jer 8:22; Jer 30:17

אֲרוּמָה H0725 Prep-b (1×)
Arumah, a place name; Abimelech's residence near Shechem (Judg 9:41)
Arumah served as Abimelech's base during his conflict with Shechem. Located near that city, it may be identical with Rumah in 2 Kings. Proposed identifications include el-Ormah, southeast of Shechem. The name possibly means 'height' or 'citadel.' From Arumah, Abimelech could monitor Shechem and mount his final devastating attack. The strategic location enabled his brutal suppression of the rebellion.

(1×) Judges 9:41 reports: 'Abimelech lived at Arumah, and Zebul drove out Gaal and his relatives so they could not live in Shechem.' The phrase 'in Arumah' establishes Abimelech's base outside but near Shechem. Uniform transliteration (English/Spanish/French/German all use 'Arumah' or close variants with preposition) confirms it as a distinct settlement. The geographical detail shows how the fratricide king ruled through strategic positioning rather than residing among his subjects. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: in-Arumah | es: en-Arumá | fr: dans-Arumah | de: in-Arumah Judg 9:41

אֲרַמִּי H0726 Conj-w / N-proper-mp (1×)
Arameans (Ketiv); textual variant reading 'Edomites' as 'Arameans' (2 Kgs 16:6)
This represents a famous textual crux where the written text (Ketiv) reads 'Arameans' but the reading tradition (Qere) corrects to 'Edomites.' Context favors Edomites recapturing Elath from Judah during the Syro-Ephraimite war. The confusion arose from the graphical similarity between Hebrew resh (Aram) and daleth (Edom). Modern translations follow the Qere, recognizing scribal error.

(1×) Second Kings 16:6 states: 'At that time Rezin king of Aram recovered Elath for Aram and drove the Judahites from Elath, and the [Arameans/Edomites] came to Elath where they dwell to this day.' The Ketiv 'Arameans' conflicts with the context (Edomites retaking their ancestral port makes better sense). The bracketed English '[and-Arameans]' signals textual uncertainty. This illustrates how manuscript transmission occasionally created confusion between similar letters, requiring text-critical judgment to recover original meaning. TEXTUAL VARIANTS MIXED en: [and-Arameans] | es: [K] | fr: [and-Arameans] | de: [and-Arameans] 2Kgs 16:6

אָרוֹן H0727 Art / N-cs (202×)
Chest or box; the Ark of the Covenant, a money-collection chest, or a coffin for burial.
A remarkably versatile word for a rectangular container, appearing overwhelmingly as the Ark of the Covenant – the sacred chest housing the tablets of the Law, carried by the Levites through the wilderness and eventually placed in Solomon's temple. The same word serves for the collection chest Jehoiada set beside the altar for temple repairs (2 Kgs 12:10), and in a single poignant use, for the coffin in which Joseph's embalmed body was placed in Egypt (Gen 50:26). Cognates across Phoenician, Aramaic, Assyrian, and Arabic all point to a basic meaning of 'chest' or 'box,' showing the sacred connotation was an Israelite development layered onto an everyday object-word.

1. ark (covenant vessel) (197×) The Ark of the Covenant, the gold-overlaid wooden chest that held the stone tablets, Aaron's rod, and a jar of manna. Nearly every occurrence of this lemma (197 of 202) refers to this sacred object. Multilingual translations consistently distinguish it: English 'ark,' Spanish 'arca,' French 'arche,' German 'Lade' – all reserving a special term for this unique cultic vessel. Key passages include its construction (Exod 25:10-22), its role in crossing the Jordan (Josh 3:6), and its capture by the Philistines (1 Sam 4:11). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: ark-of | es: arca-de, el-arca-de | fr: arche-de | de: Lade-von Exod 25:22; Exod 26:33; Exod 26:34; Exod 30:6; Exod 30:26

2. chest (money box) (4×) A chest used for collecting monetary offerings, specifically the temple-repair fund box established by the priest Jehoiada during Joash's reign. The same root word shifts from sacred to fiscal context in 2 Kings 12:10-11 and 2 Chronicles 24:8-11. Spanish and German translations ('el arca,' 'die Lade') keep the same base term but context alone disambiguates, while some languages use a distinct word for a money-box. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-the-chest, into-the-chest, the-chest | es: el-arca, en-el-arca | fr: [לְאָרוֹן], dans-le-chest, l'arche | de: die-Lade, fuer-die-Lade, in-der-chest 2Kgs 12:10; 2Chr 24:10; 2Chr 24:11

3. coffin (burial container) (1×) A coffin or sarcophagus, used only once in Genesis 50:26 for Joseph's burial container in Egypt. The Phoenician cognate similarly means 'sarcophagus,' suggesting this funerary sense is the oldest layer of meaning. English renders it 'coffin,' Spanish 'ataúd,' and German 'Sarg' – each language switching to a specifically funerary term, highlighting how distinct this sense is from the sacred-vessel usage. TOMBS AND BURIAL
en: in-the-coffin | es: en-el-ataúd | fr: dans-le-coffin | de: in-einen-Sarg Gen 50:26

אַרְוָנָה H0728 N-proper-ms (11×)
Araunah — a Jebusite landowner whose threshing floor David purchased as the site for the future Jerusalem temple
Araunah (אַרְוָנָה) was a Jebusite resident of Jerusalem whose threshing floor on Mount Moriah became one of the most theologically significant pieces of real estate in Scripture. When a plague struck Israel following David's census, the angel of the LORD halted at Araunah's threshing floor (2 Sam 24:16). The prophet Gad instructed David to build an altar there, and Araunah generously offered his oxen, threshing sledges, and the floor itself as a gift — but David insisted on paying the full price, declaring 'I will not offer burnt offerings to the LORD my God that cost me nothing' (2 Sam 24:24). This site became the location of Solomon's temple (2 Chr 3:1). The name appears as Ornan (אָרְנָן) in Chronicles.

Araunah (11×) A Jebusite inhabitant of Jerusalem who owned the threshing floor on Mount Moriah where the angel of the LORD stopped the plague during David's census (2 Sam 24:16-18). Araunah offered his threshing floor, oxen, and equipment as a free gift for sacrifice, but David purchased them at full price — fifty shekels of silver (2 Sam 24:20-24) — establishing the principle that true worship requires personal cost. This site became the location of Solomon's temple (2 Chr 3:1). The name appears as Ornan (אָרְנָן) in 1 Chronicles 21:15-28. Spanish 'Arauna' and English 'Araunah' both transliterate the name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Araunah, [k] | es: (Aravnah), Aravnah, [Aravnah] | fr: Arauna, [k] | de: Araunah, [k] 2Sam 24:16; 2Sam 24:18; 2Sam 24:20

אֲרֻז H0729 Conj-w / Adj-mp (1×)
made of cedar; adjective describing trade goods or perhaps 'firm/strong' (Ezek 27:24)
This adjective in Ezekiel's Tyre oracle either means 'cedar' (describing valuable wood products) or 'firm/strong' (describing tightly-bound merchandise). The context lists luxury trade goods, so cedar chests or panels fits well. The root connects to cedar trees, renowned for durability and fragrance. Tyre's maritime commerce included such premium materials from Lebanon's forests.

(1×) Ezekiel 27:24 inventories Tyre's merchandise: 'In your market these traded with you in choice garments, in clothes of blue and embroidered work, and in carpets of colored material, bound with cords and made secure; in these they traded with you.' The phrase 'and made of cedar' (or 'and firm/secure') describes either the materials (cedar chests) or quality (firmly made). Cross-lingual evidence (English 'made-of-cedar', Spanish 'de-cedro', French 'cèdre', German preserves Hebrew) supports reading cedar as a luxury commodity in Phoenician trade. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY
en: and-made-of-cedar | es: y-de-cedro | fr: et-cèdre | de: [וארזים] Ezek 27:24

אֶרֶז H0730 Prep-b (73×)

Cedar — the cedar tree (Cedrus libani), famed for its height, fragrance, and prized timber; a symbol of majesty and pride.

Erez denotes the cedar, above all the celebrated cedar of Lebanon, which towers through the Hebrew Bible as both a practical building material and a potent literary symbol. Solomon's temple and palace were constructed with Lebanon cedar (1 Kgs 5:6-10; 6:15-18), making the tree virtually synonymous with royal architecture. As a growing tree, the cedar figures in poetry as the emblem of stately grandeur — 'the trees of the LORD are well watered, the cedars of Lebanon that he planted' (Ps 104:16) — yet also of doomed pride when the prophets announce that God will fell the tallest cedars (Isa 2:13; Ezek 31:3-14). In the Levitical purification ritual, cedarwood appears alongside hyssop and scarlet yarn (Lev 14:4, 49), suggesting symbolic associations with cleansing. Arabic arz ('pine/cedar'), Syriac arza, and Ethiopic arz confirm the ancient Semitic pedigree. Spanish cedro, French cedres, and German Zedern all point to one meaning.

cedar tree or wood (73×) The cedar tree (Cedrus libani), encompassing the living tree growing on Lebanon (Ps 104:16; Judg 9:15; Isa 2:13), its harvested timber used for temples, palaces, and ships (1 Kgs 5:6-10; 6:15; Ezek 27:5), and its ritual use in purification ceremonies alongside hyssop (Lev 14:4, 49-52). Figuratively, the cedar represents towering majesty (Ezek 31:3-14; Num 24:6) and, when felled by God, the humbling of human pride (Isa 2:13; Zech 11:1-2). Cognates across Aramaic, Arabic, and Ethiopic confirm a shared Semitic term. FOREST WOODLAND en: cedar, cedars | es: cedro, cedros, cedros? | fr: cèdres | de: Zedern, [ארזים] Lev 14:4; Lev 14:6; Lev 14:49; Lev 14:51; Lev 14:52

אַרְזָה H0731 N-fs (1×)

cedar paneling; collective noun for cedarwood used in construction (Zeph 2:14)

This feminine singular collective denotes cedar panels or woodwork, appearing in Zephaniah's judgment oracle against Nineveh. The prophet envisions the great city's palaces exposed to the elements, their fine cedar paneling laid bare as birds nest in the ruins. Cedar represented luxury construction; its desolation symbolizes complete devastation. The image reverses Assyrian imperial grandeur into wilderness.

(1×) Zephaniah 2:14 predicts Nineveh's desolation: 'Herds shall lie down in her midst, all kinds of beasts; even the owl and the hedgehog shall lodge in her capitals; a voice shall hoot in the window; devastation on the threshold; for the cedar is laid bare.' The phrase 'the cedar' (collective for cedar paneling) contrasts palace splendor with coming ruin. The unified translation ('the-cedar', 'cedro', 'cèdre') recognizes expensive building material now exposed and decaying—a bitter reversal of Assyrian architectural pride. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: the-cedar | es: cedro | fr: cèdre | de: [ארזה] Zeph 2:14

אָרַח H0732 Art / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (5×)

To wander or journey; as a participle, a traveler or wayfarer passing through without permanent ties.

A verb meaning to travel, journey, or go along a path, with the participial form functioning as a noun denoting a traveler or wayfarer. In Judges 19:17 the participle describes a man journeying through Gibeah, while in 2 Samuel 12:4 Nathan's parable contrasts the traveler (ʾōrēaḥ) with the settled host—a distinction preserved in the Spanish 'el viajero' and the English 'traveler.' Jeremiah 14:8 poignantly asks why God should be like a wayfarer who merely turns aside for the night, and Job 34:8 uses the verb figuratively for keeping company with evildoers.

(5×) To journey or go along, used both literally of physical travel and figuratively of association or companionship. In Job 34:8 ʾāraḥ describes Elihu's charge that Job 'goes in company with' workers of iniquity. The participial form serves as a substantive meaning 'traveler' or 'wayfarer'—one who passes through a place without permanent residence. In 2 Samuel 12:4 the traveler (ʾōrēaḥ) stands alongside hēlek ('one who comes') in Nathan's parable, and Jeremiah 14:8 likens God to a wayfarer who turns aside only briefly, highlighting transience and impermanence. The multilingual glosses (spa 'el viajero,' eng 'the traveler') consistently emphasize the itinerant, passing-through quality of this figure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-he-goes, and-like-traveler, for-the-traveler | es: Y-anda, el-viajero, para-el-viajero | fr: [ארחים], [וכארח], et-ארח | de: [ארחים], [וארח], [וכארח] Judg 19:17; 2Sam 12:4; Job 34:8; Jer 9:2; Jer 14:8

אֹרַח H0733 N-proper-fs (4×)

Arah; a personal name borne by an Asherite clan leader and a family of returning exiles.

A proper name meaning possibly 'traveller' or 'wayfarer,' borne by at least two individuals in the Old Testament. The first is a man of the tribe of Asher listed in the genealogy of 1 Chronicles 7:39. The second heads a family of returning exiles numbered at 775 in Ezra 2:5 and 652 in Nehemiah 7:10—a discrepancy common in post-exilic census records. Nehemiah 6:18 may reference the same family through a marriage connection to Tobiah. Spanish renders it 'Ara' and 'Araj,' reflecting variant transliteration traditions.

(4×) Arah—a proper noun identifying (a) a descendant of Asher in 1 Chronicles 7:39 and (b) the ancestor of a family that returned from Babylonian exile (Ezra 2:5; Neh 7:10). The name possibly derives from the root ארח 'to travel,' suggesting 'traveller.' The family appears again in Nehemiah 6:18, where Meshullam son of Berechiah married a daughter of this clan, creating a political alliance with Tobiah the Ammonite. Spanish alternates between 'Ara' and 'Araj,' while French and German leave the Hebrew form untranslated. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Arach, Arah | es: Ara, Araj | fr: [ארח] | de: [ארח] 1Chr 7:39; Ezra 2:5; Neh 6:18; Neh 7:10

אֹרַח H0734 N-cpc / 2ms (60×)

A path or road, literally or figuratively; way of life, moral conduct; a traveler or caravan (by metonymy)

A predominantly poetic noun for 'path' or 'way,' cognate with Akkadian urḫu and Aramaic ʾoraḥ. Unlike the more common derek ('road, way'), ʾoraḥ tends toward intimate, personal paths — the narrow trail rather than the highway, the individual's moral course rather than the nation's. It appears most densely in Job, Psalms, and Proverbs, where it serves as a master metaphor for how one lives before God: 'the path of the righteous is like the dawning light' (Prov 4:18). Judges 5:6 preserves the vivid literal sense — in Deborah's time 'the paths ceased' and travelers took winding byways. By extension, the word occasionally denotes the traveler who walks the path (Job 31:32) or the caravan that traverses it (Job 6:19).

1. path, road, way (28×) A literal path, road, or route for travel. This covers physical thoroughfares: the highways that ceased in the days of Shamgar (Judg 5:6), the snake lying 'beside the path' (Gen 49:17), the road blocked by God (Job 19:8), and the route the sun traverses across the sky (Ps 19:5). German 'Pfad' and French 'sentier' consistently mark this concrete sense. The word often appears in parallel with derek or mesillâ, but ʾoraḥ tends toward narrower, less-trafficked ways. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-caravans, -the-paths-of, The-path | es: En-senda-de, Mi-camino, Senda | fr: -le-caravans, -le-sentiers-de, dans-sentier | de: -der-Pfade-von, -der-caravans, Pfad Gen 49:17; Judg 5:6; Job 16:22; Job 19:8

2. way of life, moral conduct (28×) The figurative way of life or moral conduct one follows. This is the most theologically rich sense, dominating Proverbs, Psalms, and Job: 'the path of the righteous' (Prov 4:18), 'the paths of the wicked are crooked' (Prov 2:15), God watching 'all my paths' (Job 13:27; 33:11). Spanish alternates between 'senda' (path) and 'camino' (way), while French uses 'sentier' for both literal and figurative, reflecting how the metaphor lives in the word itself. Ps 119:15 — 'I meditate on your paths' — shows the word carrying the full weight of divine instruction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [his-path], are-the-paths-of, but-the-path-of | es: Pero-la-senda-de, [sus-caminos], caminos | fr: et-sentier, leur-sentier-eux, mon-sentier-moi | de: Pfad, der-Pfade-von, der-Wege-von Job 6:18; Job 8:13; Job 13:27; Job 30:12; Job 33:11

3. (1×) By metonymy, a traveler or wayfarer — the person who walks the path. Job 31:32 says 'to the traveler (ʾoraḥ) I opened my door,' where the path-word stands for the one who travels it. Spanish 'viajero' and English 'traveler' make the metonymic shift explicit. This is a natural semantic extension found across Semitic languages, where road-words frequently denote those who use them. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-the-traveler | es: al-viajero | fr: sentier | de: Pfad Job 31:32

4. (1×) A caravan or traveling company — another metonymic extension, this time collective. Job 6:19 speaks of 'the caravans (ʾorḥôt) of Tema,' where the plural paths become the merchant trains that traverse them. The multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'caravans' across English, Spanish, and German, distinguishing it from the individual traveler of sense 3. Sheba's caravans in the same verse reinforce the commercial-journey connotation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: caravans-of | es: caravanas-de | fr: sentier | de: Pfad Job 6:19

5. (1×) The natural way or course of things — used idiomatically in Gen 18:11 where Sarah had ceased to have 'the way (ʾoraḥ) of women,' meaning menstruation. English 'way,' Spanish 'camino,' and French 'chemin' all deploy their most general path-words here, reflecting a euphemistic idiom where the regular course of nature is called a 'path.' This is neither literal road nor moral conduct but biological regularity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: way | es: camino | fr: chemin | de: der-Weg Gen 18:11

6. (1×) One's personal life-path or daily course, viewed intimately. Ps 139:3 — 'you search out my path (ʾorḥî) and my lying down' — uses the word for the totality of the psalmist's daily movements and habits under God's omniscient gaze. While close to sense 2, the emphasis here is not moral evaluation but intimate knowledge: God knows every step. The possessive 'my path' and the parallel with 'lying down' give this a biographical, almost domestic warmth. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: my-path | es: Mi-caminar | fr: sentier | de: mein-Pfad Ps 139:3

אֹרַח H0735 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3ms (2×)

ways, paths (Aramaic)

This Aramaic noun means 'ways' or 'paths,' appearing in Daniel in contexts of divine sovereignty and human conduct. The term occurs in Nebuchadnezzar's praise of God's righteous ways and Belshazzar's failure to honor the God in whose hand his ways lie.

(2×) Aramaic term for 'ways' in Daniel 4:37 (God's ways are just) and 5:23 (your ways are in God's hand). The word parallels Hebrew 'derekh' and 'orach,' denoting both literal paths and metaphorical courses of life. Nebuchadnezzar's doxology and Daniel's rebuke to Belshazzar both employ 'ways' theologically—divine ways are true, human ways subject to divine sovereignty. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-His-ways, your-ways | es: tus-caminos, y-sus-caminos | fr: et-sentier, sentier | de: [ארחתך], [וארחתה] Dan 4:37; Dan 5:23

אֹרְחָה H0736 N-fpc (2×)

caravan, traveling company

This feminine noun denotes a caravan or traveling company—merchants or traders moving together for safety and commerce. It appears describing the Ishmaelite caravan that purchased Joseph and the Arabian caravans in Isaiah's oracle. The word is technically a participle of the verb 'to travel,' hence 'those traveling.'

(2×) Trading caravans in Genesis 37:25 (Ishmaelites carrying spices to Egypt who bought Joseph) and Isaiah 21:13 (Arabian caravans lodging in the wilderness). The commercial context in both passages emphasizes the traveling merchants' role in ancient Near Eastern trade networks. The construct forms link the caravans to their cargo or ethnic identity (Ishmaelites, Dedanites). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-caravan-of, caravans-of | es: caravana-de, caravanas-de | fr: [ארחות], un-caravane-de | de: [ארחות], eine-Karawane Gen 37:25; Isa 21:13

אֲרֻחָה H0737 N-fsc (6×)

A portion or allowance of food, especially a regular ration; also a meal or dinner in a general sense.

Denotes a measured portion of food, most often an official ration granted regularly. Its most poignant usage describes the daily food allowance that Evil-Merodach king of Babylon gave to captive King Jehoiachin — a 'continual allowance' (2 Kgs 25:30; Jer 52:34) — a tiny glimmer of grace at the close of the exile narrative. In Jer 40:5, Gedaliah receives a similar provision. Proverbs 15:17 uses the word differently for a humble domestic meal: 'a dinner of herbs where love is' is better than a fattened ox with hatred. Spanish helpfully contrasts 'ración/provisiones' for the official sense and 'comida' for the household meal.

1. regular food allowance (5×) A regular food allowance or official ration, typically granted by royal decree. In 2 Kgs 25:30 and the parallel Jer 52:34, the exiled King Jehoiachin receives a 'continual allowance' (אֲרֻחָה תָּמִיד) from the Babylonian king — a recurring daily provision that closes the book of Kings on a note of cautious hope. Jeremiah 40:5 likewise records provisions given to Gedaliah. Spanish 'ración' and 'provisiones' capture the institutional, measured character of this sense. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: a-provision, allowance, an-allowance | es: Y-su-ración, porción, provisiones | fr: [ארחה], [ארחת], [וארחתו] | de: [ארחה], [ארחת], [וארחתו] 2Kgs 25:30; Jer 40:5; Jer 52:34

2. meal, portion of food (1×) A meal or serving of food in a general, domestic context. In Prov 15:17, 'a dinner of herbs where love is' (אֲרֻחַת יָרָק) presents the modest meal as a wisdom proverb, contrasting simplicity with abundance. Unlike the official ration sense, this usage carries no institutional overtones — it is simply a meal set before guests or family. English 'dinner' and Spanish 'comida' both reflect this everyday meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-dinner-of | es: comida-de | fr: ארחת | de: [ארחת] Prov 15:17

H0738 N-ms (1×)

lion; symbol of strength and fierceness, often in similes for warriors (1 Chr 12:9)

The lion throughout Scripture symbolizes strength, courage, and ferocity. In Chronicles' description of David's elite Gadite warriors, it serves as the ultimate martial comparison. These desert fighters had 'faces like lions,' conveying fearlessness and formidable presence. The image evokes both the predator's power and its untamed nature, appropriate for describing wilderness-hardened soldiers who crossed the Jordan in flood to join David.

(1×) First Chronicles 12:9 describes David's Gadite warriors: 'Of the Gadites there went over to David at the stronghold in the wilderness mighty and experienced warriors, expert with shield and spear, whose faces were like the faces of lions, and who were swift as gazelles upon the mountains.' The simile 'like faces of lions' combines with gazelle swiftness to create a portrait of ideal warriors—powerful yet fast, fierce yet agile. This lion imagery became Israel's standard for martial excellence. LIONS AND CUBS

en: lion | es: león | fr: [אריה] | de: [אריה] 1Chr 12:9

אֲרִי H0738a Prep-k (34×)

Lion; a large predatory feline symbolizing strength, royalty, courage, and divine judgment

The lion — apex predator of the ancient Near East and one of Scripture's most potent symbols. It appears in vivid narrative (Samson tearing a lion, Judg 14:5–6; David defending his flock, 1 Sam 17:34–37), in royal imagery (carved lions on Solomon's throne, 1 Kgs 10:19–20), and in prophetic metaphor (Balaam's oracle likening Israel to a lion, Num 23:24; 24:9). Spanish 'león,' French 'lion,' and German 'Loewe' all preserve a single referent. This is the shorter Aramaic-influenced form alongside the more common אַרְיֵה, both denoting the same animal throughout.

lion (large predatory feline) (34×) A lion (Panthera leo), whether literal or figurative — the powerful predatory cat used across Scripture as an image of strength, danger, and royal authority. Narrative uses include Samson's encounter (Judg 14:5) and David's defense of his sheep (1 Sam 17:34, 36–37). Figurative uses include Balaam's blessing of Israel as a crouching lion (Num 23:24; 24:9) and decorative lion carvings on Solomon's throne and temple furnishings (1 Kgs 7:29, 36; 10:19–20). All target languages render it with their standard word for lion. LIONS AND CUBS

en: are-lions, lions, the-lion | es: de-leones, el-león, leones | fr: [האריות], [האר], des-lions, | de: Loewe, Loewen, [אריות] Num 23:24; Num 24:9; Judg 14:5; Judg 14:18; 1Sam 17:34

אַרְיֵה H0738b N-ms (46×)

lion — the Asiatic lion as predator, royal symbol, and metaphor for power, courage, and divine judgment

Aryeh is one of several Hebrew words for the lion (alongside kefir 'young lion,' lavi' 'lioness,' shakhal 'fierce lion'), and its 46 occurrences make it the standard prose and poetic term for this apex predator. The Asiatic lion (Panthera leo persica) roamed ancient Israel into the medieval period, and its presence pervades biblical imagery. Literally, lions appear in narrative — Samson tears one apart (Judg 14:5-8), a prophet is killed by one (1 Kgs 13:24-28), and Benaiah slays one in a pit on a snowy day (2 Sam 23:20). In simile and metaphor, the lion represents tribal power (Gen 49:9 'Judah is a lion's whelp'; Deut 33:22 'Dan is a lion's whelp'), military ferocity (2 Sam 17:10), and divine wrath (Lam 3:10; Hos 11:10). The cognate Aramaic aryeh and Syriac arya confirm the pan-Semitic root.

lion (46×) The Asiatic lion as both a real animal encountered in the biblical landscape and a pervasive metaphor for strength, royalty, and divine power. Used literally of lions in narrative encounters (Judg 14:5-8 Samson; 1 Kgs 13:24-28 the disobedient prophet; 2 Sam 23:20 Benaiah's exploit). Used figuratively in tribal blessings to symbolize warrior prowess (Gen 49:9 'Judah is a lion's whelp'; Deut 33:22 Dan), in prophetic speech to represent invading enemies (Jer 4:7; 5:6) or God's own terrible judgment (Lam 3:10; Hos 11:10), and in wisdom literature to illustrate the futility of death (Eccl 9:4 'a living dog is better than a dead lion'). All 46 occurrences share the single referent of the lion, with context determining the literal or figurative register. LIONS AND CUBS

en: a-lion, as-lion, lion | es: León, como-león, león | fr: comme-lion, lion, un-lion | de: Loewe, der-Löwe, ein-Loewe Gen 49:9; Deut 33:22; Judg 14:8

אֲרִיאֵל H0739 N-msc (2×)

Ariel (name for Jerusalem; Moabite heroes; altar-hearth)

Ariel carries multiple meanings: a poetic name for Jerusalem ('lioness of God'), heroes of Moab (literally 'lions of God'), and possibly altar-hearths. Isaiah uses it five times for Jerusalem in chapter 29. The cryptic reference to Moabite 'Ariels' in Samuel may denote warriors or cultic objects.

(2×) In 2 Samuel 23:20 and 1 Chronicles 11:22, Benaiah defeats 'two lions of Moab' (or 'two Ariels of Moab'). Interpretations vary: personal names, heroic warriors, or altar-hearths. The parallel accounts and the ambiguous Hebrew allow multiple readings. Some see it as metaphorical ('lion-like heroes'), others as literal objects (altar structures), reflecting the semantic complexity of 'ariel.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ariel, lions-of | es: Ariel-de, héroes-de | fr: [אריאל], lions-de | de: Loewen-von, [אריאל] 2Sam 23:20; 1Chr 11:22

אֲרִיאֵל H0740 Prep-k / N-proper-fs (6×)

Ariel — 'lion of God'; a prophetic name for Jerusalem, also a personal name and possibly an altar-hearth term.

Ariel is a richly layered name meaning 'lion of God' (or possibly 'hearth of God'). Isaiah 29:1-7 uses it as a poetic designation for Jerusalem, the city where David encamped, with God warning that he will besiege Ariel until it becomes like an actual altar-hearth — a devastating wordplay connecting the city's proud name to the fires of judgment. In Ezra 8:16, Ariel is simply a personal name, one of the chief men Ezra summoned to recruit Levites for the journey to Jerusalem. The dual meaning — civic pride and sacrificial fire — makes this one of the more theologically charged proper nouns in the Hebrew Bible.

Ariel (6×) A name meaning 'lion of God' (from אֲרִי 'lion' + אֵל 'God'), used with overlapping senses: (a) as a prophetic epithet for Jerusalem in Isaiah 29:1-2, where God addresses the city as 'Ariel' yet threatens to make it truly like an 'ariel' (altar-hearth) — a striking wordplay on civic pride and sacrificial fire; (b) as a personal name of a chief man whom Ezra dispatched to recruit Levites for the return from exile (Ezra 8:16). The multilingual evidence — Spanish 'Ariel,' French 'Ariel,' English 'Ariel' — preserves the Hebrew form unchanged, while prepositional glosses ('for-Ariel,' 'like-Ariel') reflect Isaiah's varied syntactic uses across the passage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ariel, for-Ariel, like-Ariel | es: Ariel, a-Ariel, como-Ariel | fr: Ariel, [לאריאל], comme-Ariel | de: [אריאל], [כאריאל], [לאריאל] Ezra 8:16; Isa 29:1; Isa 29:2

אַרְאֵיל H0741 Conj-w (3×)

altar-hearth (the upper platform of the altar where fire burned)

The altar-hearth or upper burning surface of the altar in Ezekiel's temple vision. The term appears with spelling variants (ketiv/qere), possibly meaning 'hearth of El/God' or derived from a root meaning 'lion of God.' Ezekiel uses architectural precision in describing the altar's components, and this term designates the top platform where sacrificial fires consumed offerings. The lion/hearth wordplay may suggest the altar's consuming power, devouring sacrifices like a lion.

(3×) Ezekiel 43:15-16 describes the altar's structure in Ezekiel's visionary temple, using this term for the altar-hearth that measured four cubits high, with four horns projecting upward from it. The text presents both 'harel' and 'ariel' forms, possibly representing dialectical variants or deliberate wordplay. The hearth represents the culminating point of the altar, where offerings met divine fire. Its elevation above the base and ledges creates a vertical structure symbolizing approach to God, with the hearth as the final burning surface where sacrifice becomes smoke ascending to heaven. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 4906 WITH 3 SENSES

en: [ketiv], and-from-the-altar-hearth, and-the-altar-hearth | es: [kethiv], y-desde-el-hogar, y-el-hogar | fr: [והאראיל], [והאריאל], [ומהאראיל] | de: [והאראיל], [והאריאל], [ומהאראיל] Ezek 43:15; Ezek 43:16

אֲרִידַי H0742 N-proper-ms (1×)

Aridai, a personal name; son of Haman executed with his father (Esth 9:9)

Aridai was one of Haman's ten sons killed in the Jews' defensive action in Susa. The name appears to be Persian, possibly meaning 'delight of Hari.' The execution fulfilled divine justice, extending punishment to the entire household of the would-be genocidaire. The list of names, though some are textually uncertain, emphasizes the completeness of the reversal: the enemies of the Jews perished.

(1×) Esther 9:9 lists the executed: 'Parshandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha, Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha, Parmashta, Arisai, Aridai, and Vaizatha, the ten sons of Haman son of Hammedatha, the enemy of the Jews.' Aridai stands ninth in the sequence. The consistent transliteration across languages (English 'Aridai', Spanish 'Ariday', French/German preserve the Hebrew form) treats all ten names as authentic Persian personal names, even where textual traditions vary, preserving the historical memory of Haman's complete downfall. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Aridai | es: Ariday | fr: [ארדי] | de: [ארדי] Esth 9:9

אֲרִידָתָא H0743 N-proper-ms (1×)

Aridatha, a personal name; son of Haman executed with his brothers (Esth 9:8)

Aridatha appears sixth in the list of Haman's ten sons executed during Purim. The Persian name possibly means 'given by Hari.' The Greek tradition renders it differently (Pharadatha), showing textual transmission variations. The execution of all ten sons prevented vendetta cycles and demonstrated the totality of divine reversal—those who plotted annihilation were themselves annihilated, root and branch.

(1×) Esther 9:8 records: 'They killed Parshandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha, Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha...' among Haman's sons slain in Susa. The positioning of Aridatha (sixth) in this carefully ordered list reflects the narrative's attention to detail and completeness. Translation consistency (English 'Aridatha', Spanish 'Aridata', French/German preserve Hebrew) maintains the Persian nomenclature. The naming of each son personalizes the judgment while emphasizing the comprehensive nature of the enemies' defeat. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Aridatha | es: Aridata | fr: [אריתא] | de: [אריתא] Esth 9:8

אַרְיֵה H0744 N-mpd (10×)

Lion (Aramaic) — the great predatory feline, appearing in Daniel's lion-den narrative and apocalyptic visions

The Aramaic noun אַרְיֵה (aryeh) is the cognate of Hebrew אַרְיֵה and denotes the lion, the apex predator of the ancient Near East. All ten occurrences cluster in the book of Daniel. The lion-den narrative (Dan 6:7-24) uses the word repeatedly as Daniel is cast among lions whose mouths God shuts, then as those same lions devour his accusers — a vivid demonstration of divine sovereignty over nature's most fearsome beast. In Daniel 7:4, the first of four apocalyptic beasts rising from the sea is 'like a lion' with eagle's wings, symbolizing the Babylonian empire. Spanish 'león/leones' and French 'lion(s)' render the term directly.

lion(s) (10×) The lion as a literal animal in the Aramaic portions of Daniel, appearing exclusively in two contexts: the den of lions into which Daniel is thrown by royal decree and from which God delivers him by sending an angel to shut the lions' mouths (Dan 6:7, 12, 16-17, 19-20, 22, 24, 27), and the apocalyptic vision where the first beast resembles a lion with eagle's wings (Dan 7:4), widely understood as representing Babylon. Spanish 'león,' French 'lion,' and Arabic 'asad' all map to this apex predator of the ancient Levantine world. LIONS AND CUBS

en: like-lion, lions, the-lions | es: como-león, los-leones, los-leones? | fr: comme-un-lion, lion | de: Loewe, Loewen Dan 6:7; Dan 6:12; Dan 6:16; Dan 6:19; Dan 6:20

אַרְיֵה H0745 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Aryeh, possibly a personal name or textual corruption; associated with Pekahiah's assassination (2 Kgs 15:25)

(1×) Second Kings 15:25's assassination account includes 'the Aryeh' alongside Argob, creating interpretive difficulty. Are these men killed with Pekahiah, or Pekah's co-conspirators, or place names, or architectural features? The definite article (English 'the-Aryeh', Spanish 'Arié', French 'le-Aryeh', German 'der-Aryeh') suggests a known referent. The textual ambiguity illustrates how violent regime changes left fragmentary, confused records—appropriate for a blood-soaked period of northern instability. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: the-Aryeh | es: Arié | fr: le-Aryeh | de: der-Aryeh 2Kgs 15:25

אַרְיוֹךְ H0746a N-proper-ms (2×)

Arioch (king of Ellasar, ally of Chedorlaomer)

Arioch ruled Ellasar and joined Chedorlaomer's coalition in the campaign against Sodom and Gomorrah that led to Lot's capture. Scholars tentatively identify him with Rim-Aku (or Eri-Aku), an Elamite king of Larsa, though this equation remains debated.

(2×) Royal name in Genesis 14:1, 9, one of four eastern kings who invaded the Jordan valley in Abraham's time. The possible identification with Rim-Aku of Larsa (= Ellasar) would connect biblical narrative to known Mesopotamian history, though scholars debate the equation's validity. Translations preserve the name consistently across languages. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Arioch, and-Arioch | es: Arioc, y-Arioc | fr: Arioch, et-Arioch | de: Arjochs, und-Arjoch Gen 14:1; Gen 14:9

אַרְיוֹךְ H0746b N-proper-ms (5×)

Arioch, the captain of Nebuchadnezzar's royal guard in the book of Daniel.

A Babylonian proper name borne by the captain of the king's bodyguard under Nebuchadnezzar. Arioch appears exclusively in Daniel 2, where he is tasked with executing the wise men of Babylon but instead brings Daniel before the king after the prophet offers to interpret the royal dream. All five occurrences cluster within this single episode (Dan 2:14–25), making Arioch a minor but pivotal narrative figure who facilitates Daniel's access to the throne.

(5×) The proper name Arioch (ʾaryôk), identifying the captain of Nebuchadnezzar's royal guard in Daniel 2. He is commanded to destroy the wise men of Babylon (Dan 2:14–15) but relays Daniel's request for an audience, ultimately escorting the prophet to the king (Dan 2:24–25). The name may derive from a Sumerian or Akkadian original. Across translations (spa 'Ariok,' fra 'Ariok,' eng 'Aryokh'), the name is consistently transliterated with minimal variation, indicating its well-established place in the biblical onomasticon. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Aryokh, to-Aryokh | es: Ariok, a-Ariok | fr: Ariok | de: [אריוך], [לאריוך] Dan 2:14; Dan 2:15; Dan 2:24; Dan 2:25

אַרְיסַי H0747 N-proper-ms (1×)

Arisai, a personal name; son of Haman killed during Purim (Esth 9:9)

Arisai was the eighth of Haman's ten sons executed in Susa. The name's Persian etymology remains uncertain, though it follows the pattern of other Iranian names in Esther. His death with his brothers completed the reversal of Haman's genocidal plot. The meticulous listing of all ten names emphasizes both historical specificity and the thoroughness of divine justice.

(1×) Esther 9:9 continues the execution list: '...Parmashta, Arisai, Aridai, and Vaizatha, the ten sons of Haman...' Arisai occupies the eighth position. The transliteration pattern (English 'Arisai', Spanish 'Arisay', French/German preserve Hebrew forms) maintains the Persian nomenclature across all ten names. The narrative's insistence on naming each son individually personalizes the judgment while demonstrating that anti-Jewish plotting brought comprehensive destruction not just on the perpetrator but his entire line. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Arisai | es: Arisay | fr: [אריסי] | de: [אריסי] Esth 9:9

אָרַךְ H0748 Conj-w / V-Hifil-ConjPerf-2mp (34×)

Be long, prolong; to extend in time or space — especially lengthening days, stretching cords, or delaying action

Built on a root shared with Aramaic and Akkadian cognates for length, this verb appears overwhelmingly in the Hifil (causative) stem with the meaning 'prolong' or 'make long.' Its most characteristic use is the Deuteronomic promise that obedience will 'lengthen your days in the land' (Deut 5:33; 6:2), a formula appearing over a dozen times in Torah and Prophets. Beyond lifespan, the word stretches into physical space — lengthening tent cords (Isa 54:2), extending the poles of the ark (1 Kgs 8:8) — and into the patience of waiting, as when God declares 'for my name's sake I will defer my anger' (Isa 48:9).

1. prolong life or days (16×) The Hifil causative meaning to prolong life or extend one's days, especially in the covenantal formula 'that your days may be long upon the land' (Deut 4:40; 5:33; 6:2). Spanish 'prolongará' and French equivalents consistently reflect this temporal-life sense. This is the dominant usage of the root, appearing throughout Deuteronomy, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes. PROLONG CONTINUE DELAY

en: and-I-shall-lengthen, and-you-prolong, and-you-will-prolong | es: alargará, prolongará, prolongaréis | fr: [יאריך], et-je-devra-lengthen, et-tu-fera-prolong | de: [יאריך], [מאריך], du-prolong Deut 4:26; Deut 4:40; Deut 5:16; Deut 5:33; Deut 6:2

2. continue or persist in duration (7×) The Hifil sense of continuing or persisting in duration — drawing out an action, sound, or state over time rather than referring to lifespan. In Numbers 9:19,22 the cloud 'prolonged' its stay over the tabernacle; in Joshua 24:31 and Judges 2:7 Israel served the Lord 'all the days' that the elders who outlived Joshua 'prolonged' their influence. The distinction from sense 1 lies in emphasizing ongoing duration of events rather than length of life. PROLONG CONTINUE DELAY

en: and-prolongs, and-when-prolonged, are-long | es: Y-al-prolongar, al-prolongar, durará | fr: et-prolonger, et-quand-prolonged, prolonged | de: [ומאריך], [יאריך], als-prolonged Exod 20:12; Num 9:19; Num 9:22; Josh 24:31; Judg 2:7

3. extend or stretch physically (5×) The Hifil causative sense of physically stretching or extending a concrete object in space. Isaiah 54:2 commands 'lengthen your cords'; in 1 Kings 8:8 and 2 Chronicles 5:9 the poles of the ark were 'extended' so their ends could be seen. Psalm 129:3 uses the image of plowmen who 'made long their furrows,' and Isaiah 57:4 asks 'against whom do you stretch out the tongue?' — all involving spatial, not temporal, extension. STRETCHING AND EXTENDING en: and-they-extended, do-you-stick-out, lengthen | es: Y-alargaron, Y-eranlargas, alarga | fr: [והאריכו], [האריכי], [ויאריכו] | de: [האריכי], [ויאריכו], [תאריכו] 1Kgs 8:8; 2Chr 5:9; Ps 129:3; Isa 54:2; Isa 57:4

4. delay or defer (3×) The Hifil sense of delaying, deferring, or exercising patient restraint. Proverbs 19:11 teaches that discretion 'makes a person slow to anger'; in Isaiah 48:9 God says 'for my name's sake I will defer my anger'; Job 6:11 asks what strength he has that he should 'prolong' or endure further. Multilingual evidence shows Spanish 'prolongue' and German renderings reflecting forbearance and postponement. PROLONG CONTINUE DELAY

en: I-delay, I-should-prolong, makes-slow | es: alarga, prolongaré, prolongue | fr: [אאריך], prolonger | de: [אאריך], [האריך] Job 6:11; Prov 19:11; Isa 48:9

5. be long (stative) (3×) The Qal stative sense describing something as being or becoming long, used for both temporal and physical extension. Genesis 26:8 notes that 'the days were long' (i.e., much time had passed); Ezekiel 12:22 quotes the proverb 'the days are prolonged'; Ezekiel 31:5 describes branches that 'were long.' This is the basic intransitive state from which the causative Hifil senses derive. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-grew-long, they-shall-be-long, were-long | es: Se-alargan, se-prolongaron, y-se-alargaron | fr: et-être-long, étaient-long, être-long | de: [ותארכנה], [יארכו], lang-wurden- Gen 26:8; Ezek 12:22; Ezek 31:5

אַרִיר H0749 Adj-ms (1×)

fitting, proper; what is appropriate or suitable (Ezra 4:14)

This Aramaic adjective (passive participle form) means 'fitting' or 'proper,' appearing in the letter opposing Jerusalem's reconstruction. The opponents argue it is not fitting for them to witness the king's dishonor while receiving his patronage. The term carries ethical weight—what is appropriate, decorous, or right. It reveals the rhetoric of loyalty these adversaries deployed to stop Jewish restoration.

(1×) Ezra 4:14 states: 'Now because we eat the salt of the palace and it is not fitting for us to witness the king's dishonor, therefore we send and inform the king...' The phrase 'not fitting' combines with the salt-covenant metaphor to present opposition as loyalty. The Aramaic term (English 'fitting', Spanish 'conviene'—'it is fitting/proper', French/German preserve Hebrew) denotes propriety and obligation. The adversaries weaponize decorum, framing obstruction of Jewish hopes as proper service to the empire. PROPRIETY AND FITTINGNESS en: fitting | es: conviene | fr: [אריך] | de: [אריך] Ezra 4:14

אֶרֶךְ H0750 Adj-msc (15×)

Long, slow (of anger); long-suffering, patient — adjective describing forbearance or physical extent

The adjective אֶרֶךְ appears almost exclusively in the construct phrase אֶרֶךְ אַפַּיִם, literally 'long of nostrils,' the Hebrew idiom for patience or slowness to anger. This phrase is the backbone of one of Scripture's most foundational theological formulas: 'The LORD, the LORD, compassionate and gracious, slow to anger and abounding in lovingkindness' (Exod 34:6). Repeated in Joel, Jonah, Nahum, and multiple Psalms, it becomes the defining portrait of God's character. Outside this idiomatic usage, אֶרֶךְ appears twice in its straightforward physical sense — 'long of pinion' (Ezek 17:3) and 'patient of spirit' (Eccl 7:8).

1. slow (of anger), long-suffering (13×) Slow to anger, long-suffering, patient — the overwhelmingly dominant use, occurring 13 times in the construct phrase אֶרֶךְ אַפַּיִם (literally 'long of nostrils,' since the nose was the seat of anger in Hebrew anthropology). This is the standard divine epithet in the great theophanic formula first revealed at Sinai (Exod 34:6) and echoed across the canon: Num 14:18, Neh 9:17, Ps 86:15, 103:8, 145:8, Joel 2:13, Jonah 4:2, Nah 1:3. Multilingual glosses converge on patience vocabulary — Spanish 'lento de,' English 'slow' — confirming a single unified sense. When applied to humans (Prov 14:29, 15:18, 16:32), it describes the wise person who restrains anger, contrasted with the short-tempered (קְצַר רוּחַ). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: but-one-slow, in-length-of, slow | es: Lento-de, lento, lento-de | fr: [ארך], [לארך], et-ארך | de: [ארך], [וארך], [לארך] Exod 34:6; Num 14:18; Neh 9:17; Ps 86:15; Ps 103:8

2. long (of physical extent) (2×) Long in the physical or spatial sense, describing extent or dimension. In Ezek 17:3, the great eagle is אֶרֶךְ הָאֵבָר, 'long of pinion,' a vivid metaphor for Nebuchadnezzar's imperial reach. In Eccl 7:8, אֶרֶךְ רוּחַ ('long of spirit') bridges physical and temperamental length, meaning patient endurance. Spanish 'largo de' and English 'long of' confirm the spatial-dimensional reading, distinct from the anger-idiom of sense 1. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: long-of, long-of- | es: larga-de, largo-de | fr: longueur, ארך | de: Laenge, [ארך] Eccl 7:8; Ezek 17:3

אֶרֶךְ H0751 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Erech, a place name; ancient Sumerian city in Babylonia (Gen 10:10)

Erech (Sumerian Uruk, modern Warka) was one of humanity's first great cities, located in southern Mesopotamia. Genesis lists it among the cities of Nimrod's kingdom in Shinar. The archaeological site reveals millennia of urban civilization. By including Erech in primeval history, Genesis connects biblical narrative to the ancient Near Eastern world's most prestigious urban centers, grounding salvation history in real geography.

(1×) Genesis 10:10 describes Nimrod's kingdom: 'The beginning of his kingdom was Babel, Erech, Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar.' Erech stands second in this list of foundational cities. The consistent transliteration (English/Spanish/French/German all preserve 'Erech' or very close variants like 'Érej') recognizes it as the famous Sumerian city. The Table of Nations thus anchors Israel's origins within the broader Near Eastern cultural matrix, not in mythic isolation. BABYLON CITY EMPIRE

en: and-Erech | es: y-Érej | fr: et-Erech | de: und-Erech Gen 10:10

אָרֹךְ H0752 Adj-fs (3×)

long, lengthy (extended in time or space)

An adjective meaning long or lengthy, applied to both temporal and spatial dimensions. It describes the prolonged war between Saul's and David's houses that gradually weakened one and strengthened the other. Jeremiah uses it for the exile that will be long, not short. Job extends it metaphorically to God's wisdom, which is longer than the earth and broader than the sea—infinite in scope. The term captures extension beyond normal measure, whether in duration or dimension.

(3×) 2 Samuel 3:1 notes that 'the war was long between the house of Saul and the house of David,' a drawn-out conflict that slowly shifted power. Jeremiah 29:28 quotes the false prophet Shemaiah warning that exile 'will be long,' contradicting Jeremiah's message. Job 11:9 declares God's wisdom has 'a measure longer than the earth and broader than the sea'—immeasurable vastness. The feminine form fits the nouns it modifies (war, wisdom's measure), describing duration that tries patience or dimensions that exceed human comprehension. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Long, long, longer | es: Larga, Más-larga, larga | fr: [ארכה], long, ארכה | de: [ארכה], lang 2Sam 3:1; Job 11:9; Jer 29:28

אֹרֶךְ H0753 Prep-l / N-msc / 3fs (95×)

Length; spatial measurement or dimension; duration of time ('length of days'); forbearance, patience ('length of anger').

The Hebrew noun אֹרֶךְ appears almost exclusively in contexts of precise measurement — the length of the ark, the tabernacle curtains, the temple courts, Ezekiel's visionary city. Over 90 percent of its occurrences are architectural, forming part of the formulaic 'the length of X and the breadth of X' that structures Priestly and Ezekielian blueprints. Yet two metaphorical extensions deserve attention: אֹרֶךְ יָמִים ('length of days,' Ps 21:5; Prov 3:2, 16) promises longevity as divine blessing, while the rare אֹרֶךְ אַפַּיִם ('length of nostrils,' Prov 25:15) — rendered in Spanish as largura de ánimo and in German as Langmut — denotes patient forbearance, the slow expansion of breath before anger ignites.

1. spatial length, measurement (87×) Physical length or spatial dimension of an object, overwhelmingly used for architectural and construction measurements (87 occurrences). This is the sense that pervades Exodus 25-27 (the tabernacle), 1 Kings 6-7 (Solomon's temple), and Ezekiel 40-48 (the visionary temple). The formulaic pairing with רֹחַב ('breadth') appears scores of times. Spanish longitud/largo, French longueur, and German Länge all translate this uniformly, confirming a stable, cross-linguistically basic dimensional term. MEASURE MEASUREMENT

en: length, length-of | es: Longitud-de, de-largo, largo | fr: [ארך], longueur | de: Laenge Exod 25:10; Exod 25:17; Exod 25:23; Exod 27:1; Exod 27:9

2. duration, longevity (4×) Temporal duration or longevity, appearing in the fixed phrase אֹרֶךְ יָמִים ('length of days'). In Psalm 21:5 the king receives 'length of days forever and ever,' and Proverbs 3:2, 16 promises that Wisdom's right hand holds 'length of days.' The metaphor maps spatial extent onto the time axis — a long life is a life stretched out. Korean 장수 (longevity) and Hindi दीर्घायु (long life) confirm that translators consistently reach for specialized temporal vocabulary here rather than spatial terms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-length, length-of | es: Largura-de, largura-de, por-largos | fr: [לאורך], long | de: Laenge, Länge-von Ps 21:4; Prov 3:2; Prov 3:16; Lam 5:20

3. forbearance, patient endurance (4×) Figurative forbearance, patience, or self-restraint, found in the expression אֹרֶךְ אַפַּיִם ('length of nostrils/anger,' Prov 25:15) and in contexts like Psalm 91:16 and 93:5 where enduring divine presence is in view. The body metaphor is vivid: patience is the slow, extended breath before the nose flares in anger. French long (patience) and German Langmut capture this compound sense. Only a handful of occurrences, but lexicographically distinctive as an idiom frozen from the spatial root. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: by-length-of, for-length-of, with-length-of | es: Con-largura-de, Largura-de, por-largura-de | fr: dans-long, long, à-long | de: Laenge, für-Länge-von, mit-Länge-von Ps 23:6; Ps 91:16; Ps 93:5; Prov 25:15

אַרְכָה H0754 N-fs (2×)

lengthening, prolonging (of time/life)

This Aramaic noun denotes a lengthening or prolonging, specifically of time or life. It appears in Daniel when the prophet urges Nebuchadnezzar to extend his tranquility through righteousness, and when other beasts have their dominion prolonged for a season.

(2×) Aramaic term for temporal extension in Daniel 4:27 ('lengthening of your tranquility' through repentance) and 7:12 ('prolongation of life' granted to beasts after their dominion ends). Both contexts involve divine sovereignty over time—God can extend blessing or existence. The root relates to Hebrew 'arak' (be long). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-prolongation, lengthening | es: prolongación, y-prolongación | fr: [ארכה], [ואורכה] | de: [ארכה], [וארכה] Dan 4:27; Dan 7:12

אַרְכֻּבָה H0755 Conj-w / N-fpc / 3ms (1×)

knees (Aramaic noun denoting the knee joints as bodily organs)

This Aramaic term appears uniquely in Daniel's vision of Belshazzar's feast, describing the king's physiological terror. The phrase "his knees knocked together" captures the visceral fear that overtook him when divine writing appeared on the wall. Cognates across Aramaic dialects and Arabic confirm this straightforward anatomical reference to the knee joint.

(1×) Anatomical designation for the knee joints. The Daniel 5:6 context depicts involuntary physical collapse under supernatural dread, where the knees—normally supporting upright posture—fail. Spanish and English translations uniformly render this as "knees," reflecting the transparent cross-linguistic recognition of this body-part term. KNEE BODY PART

en: and-his-knees | es: y-sus-rodillas | fr: et-divertissement | de: [וארכבתה] Dan 5:6

אַרְכְּוָי H0756 N-proper-ms (2×)

Archevites (people from Erech)

The Archevites (or Urukites) were people from the ancient city of Erech (Biblical Hebrew: Erekh; modern Uruk in Iraq). They appear among the foreign settlers in Samaria opposing Jerusalem's reconstruction. The Kethiv/Qere variation reflects scribal tradition preserving two textual readings.

(2×) Ethnic designation in Ezra 4:9 (appearing twice due to Kethiv/Qere variants) for colonists from Erech settled in Samaria by Assyrian policy. The city of Erech (Uruk) was one of ancient Mesopotamia's great urban centers. The dual citation reflects the Masoretic practice of noting variant readings, both pointing to the same referent. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: Arkhevaye, [ketiv] | es: (los-erequitas), [los-erequitas] | fr: [ארכוי], [ארכויא] | de: [(ארכויא)], [[ארכוי]] Ezra 4:9

אַרְכִּי H0757 Art / N-proper-ms (6×)

Archite — a gentililic adjective denoting origin from the town of Erech/Arkah, applied chiefly to Hushai, David's counselor.

The Archite (הָאַרְכִּי) is a gentililic adjective identifying someone from the town of Erech or Arkah, a settlement near Bethel whose territory is mentioned in Joshua 16:2. Its primary bearer is Hushai the Archite, David's trusted 'friend' and counselor who played a pivotal role during Absalom's rebellion. When David fled Jerusalem, Hushai met him at the summit of the Mount of Olives and was sent back to counter Ahithophel's advice (2 Sam 15:32). His strategy of delay — urging Absalom to gather all Israel before attacking — proved decisive and saved David's life (2 Sam 17:5-14). He also appears in David's court roster as a royal adviser (1 Chr 27:33).

the Arki (6×) A gentililic adjective meaning 'the Archite,' denoting origin from the town of Erech or Arkah near Bethel, whose border is noted in Joshua 16:2. Applied almost exclusively to Hushai, David's loyal counselor and 'friend of the king,' who served as a covert agent during Absalom's revolt: he met David on the Mount of Olives (2 Sam 15:32), infiltrated Absalom's court (2 Sam 16:16), and successfully countered Ahithophel's counsel with a strategy of delay that saved David's life (2 Sam 17:5, 14). Also listed among David's officials (1 Chr 27:33). The consistent definite article in Hebrew (הָאַרְכִּי) is reflected in multilingual renderings: English 'the Archite/Arkite,' Spanish 'el arquita,' French 'le Archite.' PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Archite, the-Arki, the-Arkite | es: el-arquita | fr: [הארכי], le-Archite, le-Arki | de: [הארכי], der-Archite, der-Arki Josh 16:2; 2Sam 15:32; 2Sam 16:16; 2Sam 17:5; 2Sam 17:14

אֲרָם H0758 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (133×)

Aram — proper noun for a Semitic people and their territory in upper Mesopotamia and Syria, also a personal name in genealogies

Aram appears 133 times as both a personal and geographic name. In the Table of Nations it is the fifth son of Shem (Gen 10:22), and 'Aram' also names a grandson of Nahor (Gen 22:21). Far more often, however, the word designates the Aramean people and their territories stretching from the Euphrates bend through Damascus and into northern Syria — the persistent neighbor, rival, and sometimes overlord of Israel and Judah. The compound expressions Aram-Naharaim ('Aram of the two rivers,' Gen 24:10), Aram-Damascus, and Aram-Zobah identify specific Aramean kingdoms. The wars between Israel and Aram dominate much of Kings and Chronicles (1 Kgs 20; 2 Kgs 5-8). The Septuagint typically renders it Syria.

Aram (proper noun: person/place) (133×) The proper noun Aram, designating both a person (fifth son of Shem, Gen 10:22-23; also a grandson of Nahor, Gen 22:21) and the Semitic people and territory known as Aram, spanning upper Mesopotamia and Syria. In historical narrative it refers primarily to the Aramean kingdoms — especially Aram-Damascus — that were Israel's frequent military adversary through the monarchic period (1 Kgs 20:1-34; 2 Kgs 5-8; 2 Chr 18:30). Spanish and German transliterate as 'Aram,' French follows suit, while the Septuagint characteristically substitutes 'Syria,' a practice reflected in the NT compound 'Syrophoenician.' ARAM REGION PERSON
en: Aram | es: Aram, Aram-de- | fr: Aram | de: Aram, Arams Gen 10:23; Gen 22:21; Num 23:7; Judg 3:10; Judg 10:6

אַרְמוֹן H0759 N-mpc / 3fs (32×)

A fortified structure: palace or royal residence; citadel or defensive stronghold.

Appearing almost exclusively in the prophets (especially Amos and Jeremiah), this noun evokes the imposing fortified buildings of ancient Near Eastern cities — structures that combined royal splendor with military defense. The prophets single out these buildings precisely because they symbolize both the wealth and the false security of nations under divine judgment: 'I will send fire upon the palaces of...' becomes a prophetic refrain (Amos 1:4, 7, 10, 12). The semantic range stretches from opulent royal residences (Isa 25:2; Ps 122:7) to military citadels where kings made their last stand (1 Kgs 16:18). German 'Palast' and Spanish 'palacios' favor the palace sense, while French 'forteresse' and Spanish 'ciudadela' preserve the fortification nuance.

1. palace, royal residence (21×) A grand palace or royal residence, emphasizing splendor, wealth, and the seat of ruling power. The psalmist prays for peace 'within your palaces' (Ps 122:7), and Isaiah prophesies that the palace of foreigners will be reduced to rubble (Isa 25:2). Spanish 'palacios' and German 'Palast/Paläste' consistently render this as a dwelling of prestige. The prophetic use often carries irony — these magnificent buildings will become heaps under God's judgment (Isa 32:14; 2 Chr 36:19). FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES
en: and-palace, her-palaces, in-her-palaces | es: en-nuestros-palacios, en-palacios-nuestros, en-palacios-tuyos | fr: dans-forteresse, et-palais, forteresse | de: Palaeste, Palast, ihre-Palaeste 2Chr 36:19; Ps 122:7; Isa 23:13; Isa 25:2; Isa 32:14

2. citadel, fortified stronghold (11×) A citadel or fortified stronghold, emphasizing defensive military function. Zimri died in the citadel of the king's house (1 Kgs 16:18), and Pekahiah was assassinated in the citadel of the palace (2 Kgs 15:25). The proverb compares a brother offended to a city barred, with contentions like 'the bars of a citadel' (Prov 18:19). French 'citadel-de' and 'forteresse' highlight this defensive sense. In prophetic contexts of siege and conquest, the fortress meaning comes to the fore (Ps 48:3, 13), because these structures were the final line of defense. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES
en: and-his-palaces, citadel-of, fortress | es: ciudadela-de, en-palacio-de, en-sus-palacios | fr: citadel-de, dans-citadel-de, dans-forteresse | de: Palast, citadel-von, ihr-citadels 1Kgs 16:18; 2Kgs 15:25; Ps 48:3; Ps 48:13; Prov 18:19

אֲרָם H0760 N-proper-fs (1×)

Aram-Zobah (compound proper name combining Aram with the Syrian kingdom Zobah)

This compound geographic designation appears in the superscription of Psalm 60, marking David's campaign against the Aramean kingdom centered at Zobah. The name identifies a specific political entity among the diverse Aramean tribal confederations inhabiting ancient Syria. Historical records confirm multiple Aramean settlements, making such compound names necessary for precision.

(1×) Proper name denoting the Aramean kingdom of Zobah, encountered by David in military conflict. The Psalm 60:1 superscription anchors this reference in a specific moment of Israel's royal expansion. Translations preserve the compound form to maintain geographical specificity, distinguishing this from other Aramean territories. ARAM REGION PERSON en: Aram-Zobah | es: Aram-Sobah | fr: Aram | de: Aram-Zobah Ps 60:1

אַרַמִּי H0761 N-proper-ms (11×)

Aramean — a person from Aram (Syria), used as a gentilic adjective for the people and region northeast of Israel

The gentilic adjective אֲרַמִּי (Arami) designates a person from Aram, the broad region of upper Mesopotamia and Syria. Its most theologically charged occurrence is Deuteronomy 26:5, where the Israelite confesses at the firstfruits offering: 'A wandering Aramean was my father' — referring to Jacob (or Abraham), rooting Israel's identity in their Aramean ancestry. The patriarchal narratives call Laban 'the Aramean' repeatedly (Gen 25:20; 28:5; 31:20, 24), locating the family's origins in Paddan-Aram. In the historical books, it designates the people of the Aramean kingdoms, especially Damascus (2 Kgs 5:20; 8:28-29). Spanish 'arameo' and French 'araméen' serve as both ethnic and linguistic designations.

Aramean, person from Aram (11×) A person from Aram (Syria/upper Mesopotamia), used as a gentilic adjective. Applied to Laban as 'Laban the Aramean' throughout the patriarchal narratives (Gen 25:20; 28:5; 31:20, 24), establishing the family connection between Israel and Aram. The liturgical confession of Deuteronomy 26:5 — 'A wandering Aramean was my father' — makes Aramean identity foundational to Israelite self-understanding. In the historical books, it designates subjects of the Aramean kingdoms, particularly Damascus: Naaman's servant Gehazi refers to 'Naaman this Aramean' (2 Kgs 5:20). The feminine form designates Aramean women (1 Chr 7:14). Spanish 'arameo' and English 'Aramean' both serve as the standard rendering. ARAMEAN ARCHERS
en: an-Aramean, the-Aramean, the-Arameans | es: Arameo, arameos, el-arameo | fr: [הארמיה], le-Aramean, le-Arameans | de: [הארמיה], dem-Aramäer, der-Aramean Gen 25:20; Gen 28:5; Gen 31:20; Gen 31:24

אֲרָמִית H0762 N-proper-fs (5×)

Aramaic (language); an adverbial designation specifying the Aramaic tongue as a medium of speech or writing.

An adverb meaning 'in Aramaic,' used to identify the language of communication in diplomatic and royal contexts. In 2 Kings 18:26 and Isaiah 36:11, Judean officials plead with the Assyrian envoy to speak in Aramaic rather than Hebrew so the common people on the wall will not understand. Ezra 4:7 twice notes that a letter was written and translated 'in Aramaic,' and Daniel 2:4 marks the famous transition point where the Chaldeans address the king in Aramaic, after which the biblical text itself switches to that language.

(5×) An adverbial form meaning 'in Aramaic' or 'in the Aramaic language,' designating Aramaic as the medium of communication.

In 2 Kings 18:26 (= Isa 36:11), the term marks a sociolinguistic boundary: Judean officials request Aramaic as the language of diplomacy to keep the Rabshakeh's threats from the Hebrew-speaking populace. Ezra 4:7 uses it twice to note that official correspondence was composed and rendered in Aramaic. Daniel 2:4 famously marks the transition from Hebrew to Aramaic narrative. Multilingual glosses (spa 'arameo,' fra 'Araméen,' eng 'Aramaic') all render it as a language designation rather than an ethnic term. ARAM REGION PERSON

en: Aramaic, Aramit, for | es: arameo, en-arameo, en-arameo. | fr: Aramit, Araméen, [ארמית] | de: Aramit, [ארמית] 2Kgs 18:26; Ezra 4:7; Isa 36:11; Dan 2:4

אֲרָם H0763 N-proper-fs (5×)

Aram-Naharaim, 'Aram of the Two Rivers,' the Mesopotamian region between the Euphrates and its tributaries.

A compound place name meaning 'Aram of the Two Rivers,' designating the region of upper Mesopotamia between the Euphrates and Habor (or Balikh) rivers—roughly corresponding to the Paddan-aram of the patriarchal narratives. Abraham's servant journeys there to find a wife for Isaac (Gen 24:10), and it is the homeland of Cushan-rishathaim, the first oppressor of Israel in Judges 3:8. The psalm superscription at Psalm 60:1 recalls David's campaigns in this region, while Deuteronomy 23:4 and 1 Chronicles 19:6 reference its connection with Balaam and the Ammonite wars respectively.

(5×) The geographic name Aram-Naharaim ('Aram of the Two Rivers'), referring to the Mesopotamian territory in the upper Euphrates region. Genesis 24:10 identifies it as the destination of Abraham's servant seeking a bride for Isaac, anchoring it in patriarchal geography. Judges 3:8 names Cushan-rishathaim as king of this region, while 1 Chronicles 19:6 records the Ammonites hiring chariots from there. The dual form naharayim ('two rivers') is preserved across translations (spa 'Aram-Naharaim,' fra 'Aram-Naharaim,' deu 'Aram-Naharajim'), consistently pointing to the riverine geography that defined this ancient territory. ARAM REGION PERSON

en: Aram-Naharaim | es: Aram-Naharaim, Aram-Naharayim, de-Aram-Naharaim | fr: Aram, Aram-Naharaim, [ארם נהרים] | de: Aram-Naharaim, Aram-Naharajim, [ארם נהרים] Gen 24:10; Deut 23:4; Judg 3:8; 1Chr 19:6; Ps 60:1

אַרְמֹנִי H0764 N-proper-ms (1×)

Armoni (personal name, son of Saul delivered to the Gibeonites)

This name belongs to one of Saul's sons by his concubine Rizpah, handed over to the Gibeonites for execution as blood satisfaction. The name may derive from a root suggesting "palatial" or royal connection. The tragic narrative in 2 Samuel highlights Rizpah's maternal devotion as she guards the exposed bodies from scavengers.

(1×) Personal name of a son of Saul mentioned in the grim account of covenant satisfaction (2 Samuel 21:8). Seven of Saul's descendants were executed to atone for his violation of Joshua's treaty with Gibeon. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration of this proper name, with no semantic translation attempted. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Armoni | es: Armoni | fr: Armoni | de: Armoni 2Sam 21:8

אֲרָן H0765 Conj-w / N-proper-md (2×)

Aran (Edomite, descendant of Esau)

Aran was a descendant of Esau through Seir the Horite. He appears in both Genesis and Chronicles as part of Edomite genealogies. The name may relate to an Aramaic word for 'wild goat,' though this etymology is uncertain.

(2×) Personal name in Edomite genealogy (Gen 36:28, 1 Chr 1:42), descendant of Seir the Horite who inhabited the land Esau's line would come to dominate. The possible connection to 'wild goat' in Aramaic fits the wilderness geography of Edom. Translations preserve the name with minimal variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Aran | es: y-Aran | fr: [וארן], et-Aran | de: [וארן], und-Aran Gen 36:28; 1Chr 1:42

אֹרֶן H0766 N-ms (1×)

pine/fir/cedar (a coniferous tree used in idol-carving, exact species uncertain)

Isaiah mockingly catalogues the woods available to idol-makers, and this term denotes one type of coniferous tree—possibly pine, fir, or cedar. The prophet's satire reaches its peak as he describes someone planting such a tree, nurturing it with rain, then using part for fuel and part for fashioning a god to worship. The Assyrian cognate suggests a valuable timber species.

(1×) Designation for a coniferous tree among those listed in Isaiah 44:14 as materials for idol-making. Appearing alongside oak, cypress, and other forest trees, this word denotes a specific timber variety prized for durability. Spanish renders it simply as "pine," while scholarly editions leave it untranslated, acknowledging botanical uncertainty. FOREST WOODLAND

en: a-pine | es: pino | fr: [ארן] | de: [ארן] Isa 44:14

אֹרֶן H0767 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Oren (personal name meaning "fir-tree," descendant of Judah)

This name, meaning "fir-tree," belongs to a descendant of Judah listed in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles. Such arboreal names were common in Hebrew naming practices, often conveying strength, longevity, or beauty. The genealogy traces royal and tribal lineages crucial to Israel's identity.

(1×) Personal name appearing in the tribal genealogy of Judah (1 Chronicles 2:25). The name's botanical etymology connects it to the coniferous tree term, suggesting either a family characteristic or a commemorative naming. Cross-linguistic renderings preserve the transliteration without attempting semantic equivalents. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Oren | es: y-Oren | fr: [וארן] | de: [וארן] 1Chr 2:25

אָרְנֶבֶת H0768 Art / N-fs (2×)

hare, rabbit (unclean animal)

This noun denotes the hare or rabbit, listed among unclean animals in Levitical dietary law. Though the hare chews cud-like movements, it lacks split hooves, making it ritually prohibited. The creature appears in both Leviticus and Deuteronomy's purity codes.

(2×) Unclean animal in Leviticus 11:6 and Deuteronomy 14:7, classified as forbidden food because it 'chews the cud but does not part the hoof.' Modern zoology notes hares practice refection (eating partially digested pellets), which ancient observers may have seen as cud-chewing. The consistent identification across translations reflects the traditional understanding. LIVING CREATURES

en: the-hare | es: la-liebre | fr: le-hare | de: der-hare Lev 11:6; Deut 14:7

אַרְנוֹן H0769 N-proper (25×)

Arnon; river (modern Wadi Mujib) forming the boundary between Moab and Amorite territory in Transjordan

The Arnon (אַרְנוֹן) is a river and deep wadi — modern Wadi Mujib in Jordan — that served as a critical boundary marker in ancient Transjordan. Numbers 21:13 identifies it as the border between Moab and the Amorites, and it recurs throughout the conquest and settlement narratives (Deut 2:24, 36; Josh 12:1–2; Judg 11:18–22). The name possibly derives from ranan ('to rush, roar'), describing the sound of water in its steep gorge. The phrase nachal Arnon ('wadi of Arnon') emphasizes its character as a seasonal torrent cutting through deep ravines. The Moabite Stone (Mesha Inscription) also references it as ארנן.

Arnon (river/place name) (25×) The proper name of the river and wadi (modern Wadi Mujib) that marked the northern boundary of Moab and the southern limit of Amorite and later Israelite Transjordanian territory. Frequently paired with nachal ('wadi/torrent-valley') in Deut 2:24, 36 and Josh 12:1, emphasizing the deep gorge. The Moabite Stone confirms its significance as a territorial marker. Translations uniformly transliterate: Spanish 'Arnón,' French 'Arnon,' German 'Arnon.' RIVERS AND STREAMS

en: Arnon | es: Arnón | fr: Arnon | de: Arnon Num 21:13; Num 21:14; Num 21:24; Num 21:26

אַרְנָן H0770 N-proper-ms (1×)

Arnan (personal name, post-exilic descendant of David)

Among the post-exilic descendants of David chronicled in 1 Chronicles, Arnan represents the continuation of the royal line after the monarchy's collapse. These genealogies served vital functions in maintaining tribal identity and messianic hope during and after Babylonian exile. The name's etymology remains uncertain.

(1×) Personal name of a Davidic descendant listed in 1 Chronicles 3:21, part of the extended royal genealogy tracing the house of David through the exile period. The French translation shows slight variation (Ornan), but most traditions preserve the standard Hebrew form. These names maintained connection to messianic promises. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Arnan | es: Arnan | fr: Ornan | de: Ornan 1Chr 3:21

אָרְנָן H0771 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (12×)

Ornan – the Jebusite who owned the threshing floor David purchased as the site for the future temple

Ornan (Hebrew אָרְנָן) is the Jebusite who owned the threshing floor on Mount Moriah that David purchased after the plague was stayed by the angel of the LORD (1 Chr 21:15-28). This site became the location of Solomon's temple (2 Chr 3:1). Ornan is called Araunah (אַרַוְנָה) in the parallel account of 2 Samuel 24:16-24, reflecting either dialectal variation or a different transcription tradition. The Chronicles narrative records that Ornan was threshing wheat when the angel appeared, that he offered the site freely, and that David insisted on paying full price – six hundred shekels of gold (1 Chr 21:22-25). All twelve occurrences in Chronicles refer to the same individual.

Ornan (12×) The Jebusite who owned the threshing floor on Mount Moriah, purchased by David as the future temple site (1 Chr 21:15-28; 2 Chr 3:1). Called Araunah in 2 Samuel 24. Spanish Ornan, French Ornan, and German Ornan preserve the name uniformly. All twelve occurrences designate the same person with only syntactic variation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ornan, and-Ornan, to-Ornan | es: Ornán, a-Ornán, y-Ornán | fr: Ornan, et-Ornan, zu-Ornan | de: Ornan, fuer-Ornan, und-Ornan 1Chr 21:15; 1Chr 21:18; 1Chr 21:20; 1Chr 21:21

אַרַע H0772 N-fsd (21×)

Earth, land (Aramaic); the physical ground or inhabited world, cognate of Hebrew 'erets'.

This Aramaic noun (אַרְעָא, emphatic state אַרְעָא) is the direct cognate of Hebrew erets and carries the same dual sense of 'earth' as physical ground and 'land' as political territory. It appears almost exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel and Ezra, where it features in Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the stone that fills the whole earth (Dan 2:35), the decree that every people on earth must tremble before Daniel's God (Dan 6:26), and the vision of four kingdoms arising from the earth (Dan 7:17). Ezra 5:11 uses it in the phrase 'God of heaven and earth.' The directional form ar^{c}a can mean 'earthward, downward,' yielding 'inferior' in Dan 2:39.

earth, land (Aramaic) (21×) The Aramaic noun for 'earth' or 'land,' functioning as the exact cognate of Hebrew erets. Found predominantly in Daniel's apocalyptic visions — the stone filling the whole earth (Dan 2:35), dominion extending over all the earth (Dan 4:1; 6:26) — and in Ezra's correspondence about the God of heaven and earth (Ezra 5:11). The emphatic state אַרְעָא dominates, while the directional form yields 'earthward/inferior' (Dan 2:39). Spanish 'tierra', French and German renderings confirm the straightforward earth/land semantic range. EARTH AND LAND

en: and-earth, from-the-earth, in-the-earth | es: de-la-tierra, en-la-tierra, inferior | fr: [ארעא], [מארעא], dans-la-terre | de: Erde, [ארעא], [מארעא] Ezra 5:11; Jer 10:11; Dan 2:35; Dan 2:39

אַרְעִי H0773 Prep-l / N-fsc (1×)

bottom (Aramaic term for the lowest part or base, from root meaning "earth")

This Aramaic word describes the bottom of the lions' den into which Daniel's accusers were thrown. The term derives from roots associated with earth and lower regions, cognate with Aramaic words for ground. Daniel's miraculous preservation contrasts sharply with the immediate destruction of those who plotted against him when cast into the same pit.

(1×) Designation for the bottom or lowest part of a structure. In Daniel 6:24, it specifies where the conspirators landed when hurled into the den—before they even reached the floor, lions overpowered them. Spanish and English translations render this as "bottom" or "fondo," capturing the spatial reference to the pit's lowest point. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: bottom-of | es: al-fondo-de | fr: fond | de: [לארעית] Dan 6:24

אַרְפַּד H0774 N-proper-fs (6×)

Arpad, an Aramean city-state in northern Syria conquered by Assyria, always paired with Hamath in prophetic oracles.

An important Aramean city-state located about fifteen miles north of Aleppo in northern Syria, identified with modern Tell Erfad. In every biblical occurrence Arpad appears alongside Hamath as a cautionary example of Assyrian conquest, whether in the Rabshakeh's taunt (2 Kgs 18:34; Isa 36:19), in Isaiah's oracle against Assyrian arrogance (Isa 10:9), or in Jeremiah's prophecy against Damascus (Jer 49:23). The consistent pairing across languages – Spanish 'Arfad,' English 'Arpad,' French and German retaining the Hebrew – underscores how universally recognized this city was as a symbol of fallen resistance to imperial power.

Arpad (city name) (6×) The proper name of a city-state in northern Syria (modern Tell Erfad), appearing exclusively in contexts of Assyrian military triumph. Every occurrence pairs Arpad with Hamath and sometimes other conquered cities, functioning rhetorically to demonstrate the futility of resisting Assyria (2 Kgs 18:34; 19:13; Isa 10:9; 36:19; 37:13; Jer 49:23). The Assyrian records know it as Arpadda, confirming its prominence as a regional power before its fall. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Arpad, and-Arpad, as-Arpad | es: Arpad, como-Arpad, de-Arfad | fr: Arpad, [ארפד], [וארפד] | de: Arpad, [ארפד], [וארפד] 2Kgs 18:34; 2Kgs 19:13; Isa 10:9; Isa 36:19; Isa 37:13

אַרְפַּכְשַׁד H0775 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (9×)

Arpachshad, third son of Shem and ancestor in the genealogical line from Noah to Abraham.

A proper name designating the third son of Shem, listed in the Table of Nations (Gen 10:22) and the genealogy connecting Noah to Abraham (Gen 11:10-13). Arpachshad is a key link in the chosen lineage through which the covenant promises flow. The name likely has a geographic origin — possibly connected to the Chaldean region or Arrapachitis near Nineveh. Multilingual renderings are remarkably consistent: Spanish 'Arfaxad/Arpajsad', French 'Arpachshad/Arpacschad', reflecting the phonetic challenges of this ancient Semitic name.

Arpachshad (proper name) (9×) Arpachshad — the proper name of Shem's third son and a patriarch in the direct genealogical line from Noah to Abraham. Appearing exclusively in Genesis 10-11 and 1 Chronicles 1:17-24, this figure anchors the post-Flood lineage through which the Abrahamic covenant descends. The name may derive from a geographic referent (possibly Babylonia or the region of Arrapachitis). Cross-linguistic evidence shows near-universal transliteration with minor phonetic adaptation: Spanish 'Arfaxad', French 'Arpacschad', German 'Arpachschad'. PROPER

NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Arpachshad, Arpakhshad, and-Arpachshad | es: Arfaxad, Arpajsad, Y-Arfajshad | fr: Arpachshad, Arpacschad, et-Arpachshad | de: Arpachschad, [ארפכשד], [וארפכשד] Gen 10:22; Gen 10:24; Gen 11:10; Gen 11:11; Gen 11:12

אֶרֶץ H0776 N-fsc / 2ms (2508×)
earth, land, ground; the world, a nation's territory, or physical soil
A foundational Hebrew noun anchoring biblical geography, cosmology, and theology. In the creation account, אֶרֶץ pairs with שָׁמַיִם (heaven) to denote the cosmos, but throughout the historical books it narrows to specific territories—'the land of Egypt,' 'the land of Canaan'—making geography inseparable from covenant theology. The multilingual evidence is decisive: when referring to nations, translations use territorial vocabulary (Swahili nchi, Hindi देश), but when describing the created cosmos, they employ world-level terms (Swahili dunia, Hindi पृथ्वी). The ground-sense appears with verbs of falling or bowing, where physical surface is in view.

1. land, country (geopolitical territory) (1708×) Split from sense 84316. Criteria: Nation-states and territories with political/ethnic identity: 'the land of Egypt,' 'the land of Canaan,' 'his land' (a king's territory). Distinguished by cultural or political boundaries.
en: the-land | es: la-tierra | fr: la-terre, le-pays | de: Land, das-Land, der-Land Gen 13:6; Gen 13:15; Gen 23:7; Gen 24:7; Gen 27:46

2. earth, ground (physical surface, soil) (615×) Split from sense 84316. Criteria: Physical soil, ground surface, or earth as material: 'dust of the ground,' 'tilling the earth,' 'creatures of the earth.' Focus on physical substrate rather than political entity.
en: the-earth, the-ground | es: el-suelo, la-tierra | fr: la-terre, le-pays | de: Erde, das-Land, der-Erde Gen 1:1; Gen 1:12; Gen 1:24; Gen 1:28; Gen 2:6

3. physical ground, soil, surface beneath feet (83×) Split from sense 84324. Criteria: The immediate surface one stands on, falls to, or bows upon; local earthen surface; consistently glossed with 'ground/soil' vocabulary (chini, bhumi, ardh, 땅에)
en: earth-ward, ground, ground-ward | es: a-tierra, en-tierra, tierra | fr: moulu-garde, pays, sol | de: Boden-ward, Erdboden, Land Gen 18:2; Gen 19:1; Gen 24:52; Gen 33:3; Gen 37:10

4. earth, world, created order (73×) Physical ground or soil, the surface beneath one's feet where things fall, are cast down, or upon which one bows. Swahili ardhini (on the ground) and Hindi भूमि (soil) mark this tactile, immediate sense. EARTH AND LAND
en: anything-on-the-earth, in-the-earth, in-the-land | es: en-la-tierra, en-tierra | fr: dans-la-terre, dans-le-terre, terre | de: Erde, auf-der-Erde, auf-der-Erde-ist Gen 1:22; Gen 2:5; Gen 4:12; Gen 4:14; Gen 6:4

5. lands, territories (plural) (21×) Plural lands or multiple territories, denoting scattered regions or nations. Arabic أي (broken plural), Korean 땅들, and Swahili nchi za (plural agreement) all signal the morphologically and semantically plural sense. EARTH AND LAND
en: against-the-lands, among-the-lands, in-lands-of | es: en-las-tierras, en-sus-tierras, en-tierras | fr: dans-les-pays, dans-leur-terres, dans-pays-de | de: Laender, in-Laender, in-Laender-von Gen 10:5; Gen 10:20; Gen 10:31; Lev 26:36; Lev 26:39

6. the earth, the world, created order (5×) Split from sense 84324. Criteria: The entire earth as part of the 'heaven and earth' merism (Gen 1:1); cosmic/universal scope; glossed with world vocabulary (dunia, पृथ्वी, al-ard with universal scope)
en: earth, to-earth, to-the-earth | es: a-la-tierra, a-la-tierra,, a-tierra | fr: pays, terre | de: Erde, Land, zum-Land Job 12:8; Ps 147:15; Lam 2:1; Dan 8:10; Dan 8:12

אַרְצָא H0777 N-proper-ms (1×)
Artsa (personal name, chamberlain in whose house Zimri assassinated King Elah)
This official served as steward or chamberlain during the brief reign of Elah, Israel's fourth king. His house became the scene of regicide when Zimri, commander of half the chariots, struck down the drunken king. The name appears only in this dark moment of Israel's turbulent monarchical succession.

(1×) Personal name of the royal chamberlain mentioned in 1 Kings 16:9, whose residence witnessed King Elah's assassination. The narrative emphasizes Elah's vulnerable state—drunk in Artsa's house while the army besieged Gibbethon. All translations preserve the proper name through transliteration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Artsa | es: Artsa | fr: Artsa | de: Artsa 1Kgs 16:9

אַרַק H0778 Conj-w / N-fsd (1×)
earth (Aramaic word for earth/land, appearing in Jeremiah's judgment oracle)
This Aramaic term for earth appears within Jeremiah's Hebrew text—a brief Aramaic oracle declaring judgment on false gods. The verse pronounces that gods who did not make heaven and earth shall perish from the earth. The Aramaic insertion may reflect liturgical usage or represent an ancient creedal formula against idolatry.

(1×) Aramaic word denoting earth or land in Jeremiah 10:11, part of the oracle condemning manufactured deities. The phonetic shift (ק for ע) represents a dialectal variant of the standard Aramaic term. Cross-linguistic renderings uniformly translate this as "earth" or "tierra," maintaining the cosmic scope of the judgment pronouncement. EARTH AND LAND en: and-the-earth | es: y-la-tierra | fr: [וארקא] | de: [וארקא] Jer 10:11

אָרַר H0779 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc (63×)
To curse or pronounce a malediction; as passive participle, to be in a state of being cursed or accursed.
Arar is the Hebrew Bible's weightiest curse-word — not the casual slight of qalal but the formal, binding malediction that alters destinies. Its most recognizable form is the passive participle arur ('cursed'), which thunders through Genesis and Deuteronomy like a judicial sentence: the serpent is arur (Gen 3:14), the ground is arur (Gen 3:17), Canaan is arur (Gen 9:25). Yet the verb also carries an active voice of real power, as when Balak hires Balaam to 'curse' Israel (Num 22:6). The symmetry with barak ('bless') runs throughout — to curse is blessing's dark mirror, and the two are often paired together (Gen 12:3; 27:29).

1. cursed (state/condition) (40×) The dominant passive-participial sense: the state of being under a divine or authoritative curse, functioning almost as an adjective. This is the arur of covenant curses (Deut 27:15-26), primeval judgments (Gen 3:14, 17; 4:11), and patriarchal pronouncements (Gen 9:25). Spanish maldito, French maudit, and German verflucht all preserve the participial-adjectival force. With 40 occurrences, this is overwhelmingly how the word appears — not as an action but as a pronounced condition, a status declaration that marks its object as standing outside blessing. CURSING AND IMPRECATION en: cursed | es: Maldita, Maldito, maldita | fr: maudit | de: seien-verflucht, verflucht, verflucht-sei Gen 3:14; Gen 3:17; Gen 4:11; Gen 9:25; Gen 27:29

2. to curse (pronounce a curse) (14×) The active verbal sense: to pronounce a curse upon someone, covering finite forms (imperfect, perfect, imperative), active participles meaning 'one who curses,' and the emphatic infinitive absolute. Balaam is summoned to 'curse this people for me' (Num 22:6), and God promises Abraham 'the one who curses you I will curse' (Gen 12:3). The Spanish los que te maldicen and French maudire both capture the performative speech-act quality. The infinitive absolute construction oru aror in Judges 5:23 ('curse bitterly!') intensifies the utterance to its highest pitch — Meroz is condemned for failing to join Yahweh's battle. CURSING (VERBAL ACT)
en: I-have-cursed-it, I-will-curse, and-I-will-curse | es: Maldigan, las-maldije, los-que-te-maldicen | fr: Je—malédiction, amèrement, cursing-tu | de: [ארותיה], [ארר], [וארותך] Gen 12:3; Gen 27:29; Exod 22:28; Num 22:6

3. to curse intensively (Piel) (7×) Piel intensive stem indicating emphatic, repeated, or ritual cursing, often tied to formal ceremonial contexts. The waters of the bitter curse in Numbers 5:18-27 employ this stem, as the priest administers the oath that 'brings a curse' upon the suspected adulteress. Genesis 5:29 uses it of the ground that God 'has cursed' — Lamech names Noah hoping for relief from this ongoing, intensified malediction. Spanish maldijo and German verflucht-hat both attempt to capture the heightened force, though no target language cleanly distinguishes Piel from Qal in a single word. CURSING AND IMPRECATION

en: cursed-it, the-cursing | es: las-que-maldicen, maldijo-ella | fr: le-cursing, maudit-cela | de: der-cursing, verflucht-hat Gen 5:29; Num 5:18; Num 5:19; Num 5:22; Num 5:24

4. to be cursed (passive) (2×) Passive stems (Nifal and Hofal) denoting the experience of being cursed or made accursed by an external agent. In Num 22:6 Balak acknowledges that whomever Balaam curses 'is cursed' — the passive result of the active speech-act. Malachi 3:9 warns that the whole nation 'is cursed' for robbing God of tithes. Spanish será maldito and French maudit render the passive well. Only 2 occurrences, but the voice distinction is lexicographically real: the subject suffers the curse rather than pronouncing or embodying it. CURSING AND IMPRECATION en: are-cursed, cursed | es: malditos, será-maldito | fr: maudire, maudit | de: [נארים], verfluchte Num 22:6; Mal 3:9

אֲרָרַט H0780 N-proper-fs (4×)

Ararat; the mountainous region in eastern Armenia where Noah's ark came to rest after the Flood.

A geographical name referring to the mountainous territory of Urartu in eastern Armenia, between the Araxes River and Lakes Van and Urmia. Best known as the landing place of Noah's ark (Gen 8:4, 'the mountains of Ararat'), the name also appears in historical narratives: in 2 Kings 19:37 and Isaiah 37:38, the sons of Sennacherib flee to the 'land of Ararat' after assassinating their father. Jeremiah 51:27 summons the 'kingdoms of Ararat' alongside Minni and Ashkenaz against Babylon, reflecting its status as a recognized political entity in the ancient Near East.

(4×) Ararat—a geographical territory corresponding to ancient Urartu in eastern Armenia, used both as a place of divine deliverance and as a political entity. Genesis 8:4 names 'the mountains of Ararat' as where the ark rested, making it a symbol of God's preservation through judgment. In 2 Kings 19:37 and Isaiah 37:38, it is the refuge of Sennacherib's regicidal sons. Jeremiah 51:27 enlists Ararat as a military power summoned against Babylon. Spanish 'Ararat' and German 'Ararat/Ararats' preserve the name unchanged, while Akkadian Urarṭu confirms the toponym's antiquity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ararat, and-reigned | es: Ararat, de-Ararat | fr: Ararat, [אררט] | de: Ararat, Ararats, [אררט] Gen 8:4; 2Kgs 19:37; Isa 37:38; Jer 51:27

אָרַשׂ H0781 V-Piel-Perf-3ms (11×)

To betroth, engage in marriage; in the Piel the man actively contracts the betrothal, in the Pual the woman is described as betrothed.

A verb reserved exclusively for the formal act of betrothal – the legally binding commitment that preceded marriage in ancient Israel. In the Piel stem, the man is the active party who secures the bride, often with a stated price (2 Sam 3:14: 'whom I betrothed to myself for a hundred foreskins'). Hosea transforms this transactional language into breathtaking covenant theology: God betroths Israel 'in righteousness, in justice, in lovingkindness, and in mercy' (Hos 2:19-20), where the bridal price is divine character itself. The Pual passive describes the woman's resulting status as betrothed, a condition carrying serious legal weight in Deuteronomic law (Deut 22:23-28). Spanish 'desposar' and French 'fiancer' both reflect this formal engagement sense.

1. betroth (Piel: active betrothing) (6×) The Piel (active) sense: to betroth, to contract a marriage engagement. The subject is always the man who secures the bride, sometimes specifying the price paid (2 Sam 3:14) or the covenant gifts given (Hos 2:19-20). Deuteronomy 20:7 exempts from battle a man who has betrothed a wife but not yet married her, highlighting the legal distinction between betrothal and consummation. The multilingual glosses consistently use active engagement terms – Spanish 'desposar,' French 'fiancer' – confirming this as a deliberate, formal act rather than a general word for marriage. BETROTHAL ENGAGEMENT

en: I-betrothed, and-I-will-betroth-you, has-betrothed | es: Y-te-desposaré, desposarás, desposé | fr: a-fiancée, et-je-te-fiancerai, je-betrothed | de: du-betroth, hat-betrothed, ich-betrothed Deut 20:7; Deut 28:30; 2Sam 3:14; Hos 2:19

2. be betrothed (Pual: passive state) (5×) The Pual (passive) sense: to be betrothed, describing the woman's status as one who has been formally engaged. Concentrated in Deuteronomy 22:23-28, where the law distinguishes carefully between a betrothed woman and one who is not – the betrothed woman is legally bound, and violating her carries the same penalty as adultery. Also appears in Exodus 22:16 regarding a virgin who is not betrothed. The passive form underscores that betrothal was a binding legal state, not merely a social expectation. BETROTHAL ENGAGEMENT

en: betrothed, is-betrothed, the-betrothed | es: desposada, está-desposada, la-desposada | fr: est-fiancée, fiancée, le-fiancée | de: betrothed, der-betrothed, ist-betrothed Exod 22:16; Deut 22:23; Deut 22:25; Deut 22:27; Deut 22:28

אֲרֻשַּׁת H0782 Conj-w / N-fsc (1×)

request/desire (what the lips ask for, parallel to heart's longing)

The Psalmist celebrates God's generous response to the king's petitions, using this term for the spoken request of the lips in parallel with the heart's inner desire. Both Hebrew and Assyrian cognates confirm the meaning of request or petition. The verse affirms that Yahweh does not withhold what the righteous king asks.

(1×) Designation for a verbal request or petition, specifically what is articulated by the lips. Psalm 21:2 pairs this with the heart's desire, emphasizing God's comprehensive response to both spoken prayer and internal longing. Spanish renders this as "petición" and German as "request," both capturing the formal aspect of asking. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-the-request-of | es: y-petición-de | fr: et-demande | de: und-der-request-von Ps 21:2

אַרְתַּחְשַׁשְׂתָּא H0783a N-proper-ms (10×)

Artaxerxes — Persian royal name; the Achaemenid king(s) under whom Ezra and Nehemiah served

The name אַרְתַּחְשַׁשְׂתָּא (Artachshasta), rendered 'Artaxerxes' following the Greek form, identifies one or possibly two Persian monarchs who authorized Jewish restoration projects. Artaxerxes I Longimanus (465-424 BCE) is most commonly identified: he commissioned Ezra's mission to restore Torah observance (Ezra 7:1, 7, 11-12) and granted Nehemiah leave to rebuild Jerusalem's walls (Neh 2:1; 5:14; 13:6). The name also appears in the correspondence of Ezra 4:7-23, where opponents appeal to the king to halt rebuilding. Spanish 'Artajerjes' and French 'Artaxerxès' both derive from the Greek intermediary rather than the Aramaic original.

Artaxerxes (Persian king, form I) (10×) The Persian royal name Artaxerxes, referring primarily to Artaxerxes I Longimanus (465-424 BCE), the Achaemenid emperor who authorized both Ezra's priestly-scribal mission to Jerusalem (Ezra 7:1, 7, 11-12, 21) and Nehemiah's governorship and wall-building project (Neh 2:1; 5:14; 13:6). Also appears in the adversarial correspondence of Ezra 4:7-8, 11, 23, where provincial officials persuade the king to suspend Jewish construction. Spanish 'Artajerjes,' English 'Artaxerxes,' and German 'Artaxerxes' all derive from the Greek Ἀρταξέρξης rather than the Semitic form. PERSIA EMPIRE NAME

en: Artachshashta, Artachshasta, [ketiv] | es: (Artajerjes), Artajerjes, Artaḥshashta | fr: Artaxerxès, zu-Artaxerxès | de: Artahsasta, [(ארתחשׁשת)], [[ארתחשׁשתא]] Ezra 4:7; Ezra 7:1; Ezra 7:7

אַרְתַּחְשַׁשְׂתָּא H0783b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (7×)

Artaxerxes; the Aramaic form of the Persian king's name appearing in Ezra's correspondence sections.

The Aramaic spelling of the Persian royal name Artaxerxes (אַרְתַּחְשַׁשְׂתְּא), appearing in the Aramaic documentary sections of Ezra. This form, with its characteristic Aramaic emphatic ending, identifies the Persian emperor who authorized Ezra's mission and the rebuilding work in Jerusalem. The name likely represents Artaxerxes I Longimanus (465-424 BCE), whose decrees were pivotal for the restoration of Jewish life in the post-exilic period. The Septuagint renders it as Artaxerxes, confirming the identification across all translation traditions.

Artaxerxes (Persian king, form II) (7×) The proper name of the Persian king Artaxerxes in its Aramaic orthographic form. This variant (אַרְתַּחְשַׁשְׂתְּא / אַרְתַּחְשַׁסְתְּא) appears in the Aramaic portions of Ezra dealing with official Persian correspondence about the temple rebuilding project. Multilingual evidence is unanimous — Spanish 'Artajerjes,' French 'Artaxerxès,' German 'Artahsasta,' and English 'Artaxerxes' all identify the same royal figure. The occurrences span the letter of Rehum (Ezra 4:8, 11, 23), the summary of temple completion under royal patronage (6:14), and Artaxerxes' own decree commissioning Ezra (7:12, 21). The form differs slightly from the Biblical Hebrew spelling (H0783a) but denotes the same king. PERSIA EMPIRE NAME

en: Artachshasht, Artachshasta, [ketiv] | es: (Artajerjes), Artajerjes, Artaḥshashta | fr: Artaxerxès, et-Artaxerxès, zu-Artaxerxès | de: Artahsasta, [(ארתחששת)], [[ארתחששתא]] Ezra 4:8; Ezra 4:11; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 6:14

אֵשׁ H0784 Prep-b (378×)

Fire; physical flames and burning; also fire as divine presence, instrument of judgment, and celestial lightning.

Esh is the primary Hebrew word for fire in all its manifestations — from the campfire roasting Passover lamb (Exod 12:8) to the terrifying pillar of fire guiding Israel through the wilderness. Few words carry as much theological weight while remaining so concrete. Fire is the element God repeatedly chooses for self-revelation: the burning bush that is not consumed (Exod 3:2), the glory atop Sinai that looks like 'devouring fire' (Exod 24:17), and the fire that falls to consume Elijah's sacrifice (1 Kgs 18:38). The multilingual evidence confirms the word's range: Arabic nar and Korean 불 both serve as the unmarked word for physical fire, yet languages consistently add modifiers or shift vocabulary when the fire becomes divine — Hindi agni takes on sacred connotations, and Swahili moto wa Bwana ('fire of the Lord') adds an explicit theological marker.

1. fire (ordinary, physical) (207×) Split from sense 84435. Criteria: Literal fire for cooking, sacrifice, warmth, signal, destruction in warfare (Gen 15:17, Judg 15:4-5, Josh 6:24).

en: a-fire, fire | es: Fuego, fuego | fr: feu, un-feu | de: Feuer, ein-Feuer Exod 12:8; Exod 12:9; Exod 22:6; Exod 35:3; Lev 1:7

2. fire of divine presence/judgment (138×) Split from sense 84435. Criteria: Fire as theophanic manifestation of God's presence (burning bush, pillar of fire) or instrument of divine judgment (fire from heaven, consuming fire). Theological sense.

en: a-fire, fire | es: fuego | fr: feu, un-feu | de: Feuer, ein-Feuer, von-Feuer Gen 15:17; Exod 3:2; Exod 9:23; Exod 13:21; Exod 14:24

3. fire as divine theophany (18×) Fire as divine theophany — the visible manifestation of God's presence, glory, or supernatural power. The burning bush (Exod 3:2), the pillar of fire (Exod 13:21), the glory on Sinai described as 'devouring fire' (Exod 24:17), and God appearing 'in the fire' at the temple dedication. These 18 occurrences share a distinctive profile: the fire is described but does not consume what it should, or it appears without natural cause. Korean renders several of these with 불꽃 (flame, with a luminous emphasis) rather than plain 불, and Hindi agni carries Vedic-sacred overtones that parallel the Hebrew shift from mundane to numinous fire. Deuteronomy 4:36 is paradigmatic: 'from heaven he let you hear his voice... and on earth he showed you his great fire.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: His-fire, as-fire, as-the-fire | es: Como-fuego, como-fuego, como-fuego-de | fr: Son-feu, comme-feu, à-feu | de: Sein-Feuer, wie-Feuer, wie-Feuer- Exod 24:17; Deut 4:36; Ps 83:14; Ps 118:12; Prov 16:27

4. fire of judgment or wrath (10×) Fire as an instrument of divine judgment, wrath, or consuming punishment. God's anger 'burns like fire' (Jer 4:4; Ezek 21:31-32); Jerusalem will be consumed 'in fire' as judgment (Ezek 22:21); 'unquenchable fire' becomes a figure for inescapable divine retribution (Isa 66:24). These 10 occurrences are distinguished from physical fire by their metaphorical or hyperbolic character and their pairing with vocabulary of divine anger (qetseph, chemah, qin'ah). Arabic nar al-ghadab ('fire of wrath') and Korean 진노의 불 ('fire of fury') both add explicit wrath vocabulary, confirming the judgment coloring is not merely contextual but lexically marked in translation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-their-fire, his-fire, in-fire-of | es: con-fuego-de, en-fuego-de, su-fuego | fr: et-feu, feu, par-le-feu | de: Feuer, im-Feuer, und-Feuer Job 18:5; Isa 50:11; Isa 66:24; Ezek 21:31; Ezek 22:21

5. lightning or celestial fire (5×) Lightning, celestial fire, or fire sent from the sky as a supernatural meteorological event. The fire that 'fell from heaven' at Elijah's contest (1 Kgs 18:38), the fire of God that consumed Job's flocks (Job 1:16), and the fire that came down on those who sought Elijah (2 Kgs 1:10-12). Distinguished from sense 2 (theophany) because here the fire is destructive and from sense 1 (physical fire) because it has no natural ignition source. The 5 occurrences at Num 11:1-3 are definitional: 'fire of the LORD burned among them.' Arabic nar min al-sama ('fire from heaven') and German Feuer vom Himmel both specify celestial origin, marking these as perceived differently from ground-level flames. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fire-of, fire-of- | es: fuego-de | fr: feu-de, feu-de- | de: Feuer-von, Feuer-von- Num 11:1; Num 11:3; Deut 33:2; 1Kgs 18:38; 2Kgs 1:12

אֶשָּׁא H0785 N-fs (1×)

fire (Aramaic term for fire in Daniel's apocalyptic vision)

Daniel's night vision of the Ancient of Days includes a fiery throne with wheels of blazing fire, and a river of fire flowing from before him. This Aramaic word for fire appears in that cosmic courtroom scene where books are opened and the beast is slain. Fire imagery pervades apocalyptic literature as symbol of divine presence, judgment, and purification.

(1×) Aramaic noun denoting fire in Daniel 7:11, part of the theophanic vision of God's throne room. The context emphasizes fire as manifestation of divine glory and instrument of judgment against the blasphemous beast. All translations render this transparently as "fire/fuego/feu," recognizing the universal symbol of divine power. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fire | es: fuego | fr: feu | de: [אשא] Dan 7:11

אֵשׁ H0786 Adv (2×)

is there? there is (softer form of yesh)

This particle is a softer dialectal form of the common 'yesh' (there is/are), appearing only twice. It functions as an existential marker asking or affirming existence. The form shows phonetic softening from 'ye' to 'i,' documented in Aramaic and Arabic cognates.

(2×) Existential particle in 2 Samuel 14:19 (rhetorical question: 'Is there anyone who can turn...?') and Micah 6:10 ('Are there yet treasures of wickedness...?'). Both contexts involve rhetorical questions expecting affirmative answers. The softer form represents dialectal variation, with cognates in Aramaic 'itay' and Arabic 'aysa.' EXISTENCE PARTICLES

en: are-there, one-can | es: hay | fr: le-feu, un-peut | de: das-Feuer, eins-kann 2Sam 14:19; Mic 6:10

אֵשׁ H0787 N-mpd (3×)

foundation (Aramaic loanword from Assyrian uššû); architectural base or supporting structure

An Aramaic term borrowed from Assyrian, appearing exclusively in Ezra's account of the Jerusalem temple reconstruction. The word refers to the foundational structure of a building, particularly the temple. All three occurrences cluster in Ezra 4-6, where Persian officials and Jewish leaders dispute the legitimacy of rebuilding work. The multilingual evidence (Spanish cimientos, English foundations) confirms the architectural meaning.

(3×) The structural foundations of a building, specifically the Jerusalem temple. Used in official Persian-period correspondence about the temple's reconstruction (Ezra 4:12, 5:16, 6:3). The consistent rendering as 'foundations' across European languages reflects the architectural specificity, while some translations preserve the Aramaic form, indicating its technical register in administrative documents. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-foundations, and-its-foundations, foundations-of | es: cimientos-de, y-los-cimientos, y-sus-fundamentos | fr: [אשי], [ואשוהי], [ואשיא] | de: [אשיא], [ואשוהי], [ואשיא] Ezra 4:12; Ezra 5:16; Ezra 6:3

אַשְׁבֵּל H0788 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Ashbel, second son of Benjamin; personal name meaning possibly 'man of Baal' or similar compound

A personal name borne by Benjamin's second son, appearing in genealogical lists across Genesis, Numbers, and Chronicles. The name's etymology remains uncertain—possibly a compound with Baal (Eshbaal) or related to oath-taking. The Septuagint shows variation (Asbel, Asuber, Saba), suggesting scribal uncertainty about the name's pronunciation. Descendants formed one of the Benjamite clans counted in the wilderness census.

(3×) The personal name of Benjamin's second son and the clan descended from him. Listed in the genealogy of Jacob's family going to Egypt (Genesis 46:21), in the wilderness census of Benjamite clans (Numbers 26:38), and in the Chronicles genealogy (1 Chronicles 8:1). The name appears with slight variations in Greek manuscripts, pointing to transmission challenges with proper names. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ashbel, and-Ashbel, to-Ashbel | es: Asbel, de-Asbel, y-Ashbel | fr: [אשבל], et-Ashbel, à-Ashbel | de: [אשבל], und-Aschbel, zu-Ashbel Gen 46:21; Num 26:38; 1Chr 8:1

אַשְׁבֵלִי H0789 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Ashbelite (gentilics denoting descendants of Ashbel, son of Benjamin)

This collective designation identifies the clan descended from Ashbel, Benjamin's second son according to the genealogies. The Numbers census lists the Ashbelites among Benjamin's tribal divisions, part of the systematic enumeration preparing Israel for Canaan's conquest. Gentilics served crucial administrative and inheritance functions in tribal organization.

(1×) Gentilic noun denoting the Ashbelite clan within Benjamin's tribe (Numbers 26:38). The census context indicates this represents a significant family group counted among Israel's military-age males. Spanish pluralizes the reference ("los asbelitas"), appropriately reflecting the collective nature of this clan designation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Ashbelite | es: los-asbelitas | fr: le-Ashbelite | de: der-Ashbelite Num 26:38

אֶשְׁבָּן H0790 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (2×)

Eshban (Edomite chief, descendant of Seir)

Eshban was a chief among the Horites of Seir, appearing in Edomite genealogies. His name occurs in both Genesis and Chronicles, preserving the leadership structure of pre-Israelite Edom. The etymology is uncertain, with Septuagint offering various Greek renderings.

(2×) Edomite personal name in Genesis 36:26 and 1 Chronicles 1:41, listed among the sons of Dishon and chiefs of the Horites. The name's meaning remains unclear, though it functions clearly as an identifier in Seir's clan structure. Cross-linguistic transliterations preserve the Hebrew phonetic form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Eshban | es: y-Esban, y-Eshban | fr: [ואשבן], et-Eshban | de: [ואשבן], und-Eschban Gen 36:26; 1Chr 1:41

אַשְׁבֵּעַ H0791 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ashbea (personal name, head of a Judahite family of linen workers)

This name appears in Judah's genealogical records, identifying the ancestral head of a guild specializing in fine linen work. The Chronicles preserve details of craft families and their occupational heritage, suggesting organized labor specializations within the tribal structure. The name's etymology remains uncertain.

(1×) Personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 4:21 within Judah's extensive genealogy, specifically associated with the families of the house of linen workers. Such occupational notes in genealogies indicate hereditary craft specializations. Cross-linguistic evidence shows consistent transliteration, with some translations leaving the name in brackets due to textual uncertainties. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ashbe'a | es: Asbea | fr: [אשבע] | de: [אשבע] 1Chr 4:21

אִישְׁבַּעַל H0792 N-proper-ms (2×)

Eshbaal (son of Saul, also called Ish-bosheth)

Eshbaal was Saul's son, better known as Ish-bosheth in Samuel's narratives. The name means 'man of Baal,' later altered to 'man of shame' to avoid pronouncing the Canaanite deity's name. Chronicles preserves the original form, revealing how scribal tradition sometimes censored theophoric elements.

(2×) Original name of Saul's son in 1 Chronicles 8:33 and 9:39, preserved where Samuel substitutes 'Ish-bosheth' (man of shame). The 'Baal' element in the name reflects pre-deuteronomic usage when 'Baal' could simply mean 'lord' without exclusively pagan connotations. Later tradition found the name theologically problematic, hence the euphemistic replacement. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Eshbaal | es: Esbaal | fr: [אשבעל] | de: [אשבעל] 1Chr 8:33; 1Chr 9:39

אֶשֶׁד H0793 Conj-w / N-csc (1×)

slope/bottom (the lower part or descent of wadis/ravines)

This geographical term describes the sloping descent or bottom portion of ravines in the wilderness itinerary. The poetic fragment in Numbers 21:15 refers to the slope of the wadis extending toward the settlement of Ar. Whether denoting foundations, slopes, or valley floors, the term indicates lower topographical features in the Transjordan highlands.

(1×) Topographical term for the slope or lower part of ravines mentioned in Numbers 21:15. The context involves Israel's journey through Moabite territory, where wadi systems defined the landscape. Spanish and German render this as "slope/Abhang," while the Assyrian cognate suggests foundation or base, both emphasizing the lower aspect of landforms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-slope-of | es: Y-pendiente-de | fr: et-slope-de | de: und-Abhang-von Num 21:15

אַשְׁדָּה H0794 Conj-w (6×)

Mountain slopes or watershed ravines, used in geographic descriptions of Canaan's terrain, especially the slopes of Pisgah.

A feminine noun referring to the sloping terrain on a mountainside, particularly the areas where water runs down in channels. Found only in the plural, it appears in the standard geographic formulae of Deuteronomy and Joshua that catalog the regions of the Promised Land – hill country, Negev, lowland, and slopes. The phrase 'the slopes of Pisgah' (Deut 3:17; 4:49; Josh 12:3; 13:20) became a fixed expression. Spanish renders it 'laderas' (hillsides), German 'Abhaenge' (descents), and English 'slopes,' all capturing the sense of descending terrain that channels water toward lower ground.

slopes/ravines (6×) Mountain slopes or watershed terrain, used in geographic inventories of the land of Canaan. The word appears only in plural form, either absolute (Josh 10:40; 12:8) to denote the slopes as one of Canaan's four terrain zones alongside hill country, Negev, and lowland, or in construct with Pisgah (Deut 3:17; 4:49; Josh 12:3; 13:20) to identify the specific eastern escarpment overlooking the Dead Sea. The multilingual evidence – Spanish 'laderas,' German 'Abhaenge,' English 'slopes' – consistently renders it as descending terrain rather than flat ground. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-the-slopes, and-slopes-of, and-the-slopes | es: laderas-de, y-en-las-laderas, y-las-laderas | fr: et-dans-le-pentes, et-le-pentes, et-pentes-de | de: Abhaenge-von, und-Abhaenge-von, und-der-Abhaenge Deut 3:17; Deut 4:49; Josh 10:40; Josh 12:3; Josh 12:8

אַשְׁדּוֹד H0795 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (17×)

Ashdod — a major Philistine city on the Mediterranean coast, one of the five cities of the pentapolis

The name of one of the five principal cities of the Philistine confederation, situated on the Mediterranean coastal plain west of Jerusalem (modern Isdud/Ashdod). It enters the biblical narrative as a city where Anakim remnants survived (Josh 11:22), was allotted to Judah but never fully conquered (Josh 15:46-47), and became infamous as the place where the captured ark of God was set before Dagon, whose idol toppled and broke (1 Sam 5:1-7). Prophets pronounced judgment against it (Amos 1:8; Zeph 2:4; Zech 9:6), and Uzziah dismantled its walls (2 Chr 26:6). The Assyrian form 'Asdudu' confirms its ancient Near Eastern attestation.

Ashdod (Philistine city) (17×) The proper place name Ashdod (אַשְׁדּוֹד), designating one of the five Philistine city-states on the Mediterranean coast. All major translation traditions preserve a close transliteration (eng: Ashdod, spa: Asdod, fra: Asdod, deu: Ashdod), while the directional he form (אַשְׁדּוֹדָה, 'toward Ashdod') appears in 1 Sam 5:1 and Isa 20:1. Its 17 occurrences span conquest narratives, ark narratives, prophetic oracles, and Chronicles, underscoring its strategic and symbolic importance. ASHDOD PLACE NAME

en: Ashdod, against-Ashdod, and-in-Ashdod | es: Asdod, Ashdod, a-Asdod | fr: Asdod, Ashdod, [אשדוד] | de: Ashdod, [אשדוד], [אשדודה] Josh 11:22; Josh 15:46; Josh 15:47; 1Sam 5:1; 1Sam 5:5

אַשְׁדּוֹדִי H0796 Art / N-proper-mp (6×)

Ashdodite, a gentilic adjective for inhabitants of the Philistine city of Ashdod, used as noun or modifier.

The gentilic adjective derived from Ashdod, one of the five chief Philistine cities on the Mediterranean coast. It appears both as a collective singular with the article – 'the Ashdodite' meaning the Ashdodite population (Josh 13:3) – and in the plural for the inhabitants who suffered when the ark was among them (1 Sam 5:3, 6). In Nehemiah's time the term takes on cultural significance: the 'Ashdodite women' whom Jewish men married (Neh 13:23) and the people of Ashdod who opposed the wall-rebuilding (Neh 4:7). Spanish uses 'los de Ashdod' (those of Ashdod), capturing the collective ethnic sense.

Ashdodite, of Ashdod (6×) A gentilic designation for the people or things associated with the Philistine city of Ashdod. Used as a collective singular with the article to denote the entire population (Josh 13:3), as a plural noun for the city's inhabitants during the ark narrative (1 Sam 5:3, 6), and as a feminine adjective modifying 'women' in Nehemiah's account of intermarriage (Neh 13:23). The term also appears in Neh 4:7 where Ashdodites join the coalition opposing Jerusalem's rebuilding. Spanish renders it collectively as 'los de Ashdod,' while English uses the standard gentilic 'Ashdodites.' ASHDOD PLACE NAME

en: Ashdodite, Ashdodites, [Ashdodite] | es: (asdoditas), [asdoditas], los-de-Ashdod | fr: Ashdodites, [אשדדיות], [אשדודיות] | de: Ashdodites, [(אשדדיות)], [[אשדודיות]] Josh 13:3; 1Sam 5:3; 1Sam 5:6; Neh 4:7; Neh 13:23

אַשְׁדּוֹדִית H0797 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ashdodite (language spoken by inhabitants of Ashdod, distinct from Hebrew)

Nehemiah confronted the disturbing reality that children of mixed marriages spoke the language of Ashdod rather than Hebrew, representing cultural and religious assimilation. This adverbial phrase denotes speaking in the Philistine dialect of Ashdod, one of the five major Philistine cities. The loss of Hebrew language threatened covenant identity in the restoration community.

(1×) Adverbial designation for the language or dialect of Ashdod in Nehemiah 13:24. The reformer's concern centered on children who could not speak Hebrew, having adopted their mothers' Philistine tongue. This linguistic shift symbolized deeper covenant erosion through intermarriage with pagan peoples, threatening Israel's distinct identity as God's people. ASHDOD PLACE NAME

en: Ashdodite | es: asdodeo | fr: [אשדודית] | de: [אשדודית] Neh 13:24

פִּסְגָּה H0798

Pisgah, mountain summit in Moab; peak from which Moses viewed the Promised Land

This mountain in Moab, likely a peak of the Abarim range, granted Moses his only glimpse of Canaan before his death. The 'top of Pisgah' served as Balak's final attempt to have Balaam curse Israel. Its 'slopes' or 'springs' marked territorial boundaries. The name possibly derives from a word meaning 'cleft,' suggesting a distinctive geological feature. Jewish tradition often identifies it with Mount Nebo, though the exact relationship between these names remains uncertain. The summit's theological significance far outweighs its geographical precision—a place of divine revelation and human longing.

אֵשׁ H0799 N-fsc (1×)

fire (construct form of fire, appearing in Moses' blessing with textual variants)

This construct form of the common word for fire appears in the poetic imagery of Moses' blessing in Deuteronomy 33. The context envisions the Lord coming from Sinai with holy myriads and fiery law. Textual variants and ancient versions show uncertainty about the precise phrase, but fire imagery pervades Sinai theophanies throughout Scripture.

(1×) Construct form denoting fire in Deuteronomy 33:2, within the majestic description of Yahweh's appearance from Sinai. The poetic context recalls the original law-giving accompanied by fire, smoke, and divine glory. Cross-linguistic evidence shows careful preservation of this construct relationship, though Spanish uniquely marks it as ketiv, reflecting awareness of textual variants. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: fire-of | es: [ketiv] | fr: feu-de | de: Feuer-von Deut 33:2

אִשָּׁה H0800 Prep-m / N-fsc / 3mp (1×)

from their fire (ketiv reading in Jeremiah's refining metaphor, qere: from perfect fire)

This textual variant appears in Jeremiah's extended metallurgical metaphor describing Judah's stubborn refusal to be purified. The ketiv reads "from their fire" while the qere suggests "from perfect fire." Either way, the imagery depicts a failed refining process—the bellows blow fiercely, the fire consumes the lead, yet the wicked remain unrefined.

(1×) Prepositional phrase involving fire in Jeremiah 6:29, part of the prophet's smelting metaphor for divine judgment. The ketiv suggests "from their fire," perhaps implying Israel's own combustion or consumption. Spanish preserves both readings, acknowledging the textual complexity. The failed refining process illustrates the people's intractable wickedness despite intense disciplinary heat. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: [ketiv] | es: [de-fuego] | fr: [[מאשתם]] | de: [[מאשתם]] Jer 6:29

אִשָּׁה H0801 Art / N-ms (65×)

ishshah – a fire offering; a sacrifice presented to Yahweh by burning on the altar

The masculine noun ishshah designates an offering made by fire – a sacrifice consumed on the altar before Yahweh. The term is essentially restricted to the Priestly legislation of the Pentateuch, appearing most densely in Leviticus and Numbers in connection with burnt offerings, grain offerings (minhah), and the showbread with its frankincense (Lev 24:7). Its etymology was traditionally linked to esh ('fire'), though some scholars relate it to a root meaning 'gift' or 'tribute.' Outside the Pentateuch it occurs sparingly in Deuteronomy 18:1, Joshua 13:14, and 1 Samuel 2:28, always in reference to the priestly share of sacrificial offerings. Spanish ofrenda-de-fuego, French offrande-par-le-feu, and German Feuer-Opfergabe all preserve the fire-sacrifice concept transparently.

fire offering, offering by fire (65×) A technical cultic term for a sacrifice presented to Yahweh by fire upon the altar, used predominantly in the Priestly legislation of Leviticus and Numbers. It covers various offering types: animal burnt offerings (Lev 1:9, 13, 17), grain offerings (Lev 2:11), and even the showbread's frankincense memorial (Lev 24:7, 9). Outside the Pentateuch, Deut 18:1 and 1 Sam 2:28 reference the priests' entitlement to these fire offerings. Spanish ofrenda-de-fuego, French offrande-par-le-feu, and German Feuer-Opfergabe all render it with transparent fire-sacrifice imagery across 65 occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-fire-offering | es: ofrenda-de-fuego, ofrenda-encendida | fr: un-feu-offrande, une-offrande-par-le-feu | de: ein-Feuer-Opfergabe Exod 29:18; Exod 29:25; Exod 29:41; Exod 30:20; Lev 1:9

אִשָּׁה H0802 Conj-w / N-fs (781×)

Woman, wife, female; a female human being whether unmarried, married, or as a female animal's mate.

Standing alongside 'ish ('man') as one of the most fundamental words in Scripture, 'ishsha appears 781 times spanning the primary social identities of women in the ancient Near East: a woman in her own right, a wife, and — in two formulaic uses — a female animal's mate. The word's first appearance is programmatic: Adam exclaims 'she shall be called ishsha because she was taken from ish' (Gen 2:23), a folk etymology linking male and female at the level of language. The plural nashim (from a different root) serves for both 'women' and 'wives,' and context alone determines which sense is meant.

1. woman, female person (519×) A woman, a female person — 519 occurrences where 'ishsha denotes a female human being without primary reference to marital status. This is the generic, unmarked sense covering women in narrative, law, prophecy, and wisdom literature. Pharaoh's daughter sends 'a woman' to fetch the basket (Exod 2:7); the Israelite women contribute to the tabernacle (Exod 35:29); the wise woman of Abel speaks to Joab (2 Sam 20:16). French femme, Spanish mujer, and German Frau all serve double duty for both 'woman' and 'wife,' while Korean distinguishes 여자 ('woman') from 아내 ('wife'), and Arabic uses imra'a ('woman') versus zawja ('wife'), helping to confirm where this generic sense operates independently. WOMAN AND WIFE

en: a-woman, woman | es: Mujer, mujer, mujer-de | fr: femme, une-femme | de: Frau, ein-Frau, eine-Frau Gen 2:23; Gen 12:11; Exod 2:7; Exod 3:22; Exod 19:15

2. wife, spouse (255×) A wife, a married woman — 255 occurrences where the marital relationship is primary, typically marked by construct forms ('eshet PN'), possessive suffixes ('ishto, 'his wife'), or explicit marriage contexts. Abram takes Sarai 'his wife' to Egypt (Gen 12:5); the law governs how a man relates to 'the wife of his neighbor' (Lev 18:20). The multilingual signatures split clearly here: Spanish shifts to esposa, Korean to 아내, Arabic to zawja, and Swahili to mke, all selecting dedicated spousal vocabulary. This distinction matters for translation — rendering 'ishsha as 'woman' where 'wife' is meant (or vice versa) can distort entire narratives. WOMAN AND WIFE

en: his-wife | es: mujer-de-él, su-esposa, su-mujer | fr: sa-femme, son-femme | de: sein-Ehefrau, sein-wife, seine-Frau Gen 12:5; Gen 12:11; Gen 12:12; Gen 12:20; Gen 19:16

3. (5×) Distributive 'each one' — 5 occurrences where 'ishsha functions as a distributive pronoun meaning 'each' in the context of paired or grouped items. All five appear in Exodus 26 describing the tabernacle curtains: 'five curtains shall be coupled to one another' (Exod 26:3), and loops set 'each opposite its counterpart' (Exod 26:5). This mirrors the masculine 'ish used distributively ('each man'). French chaque, Spanish una, and German jeder all select distributive-pronoun glosses rather than 'woman/wife,' confirming a genuine grammaticalized use distinct from the core nominal senses. ONE AND UNITY

en: each-woman | es: una | fr: chaque-femme | de: jeder-Frau Exod 26:3; Exod 26:5; Exod 26:6; Exod 26:17

4. (2×) Female mate of an animal — 2 occurrences, both at Gen 7:2, where Noah is commanded to take animals aboard the ark 'a male and his female' ('ish ve'ishto). English 'mate,' Spanish hembra, and German Weibchen all shift to animal-specific female vocabulary. This zoological extension parallels how 'ish can mean 'male' of an animal, and the pair formula 'ish ve'ishto applied to animals is a vivid reminder that the Hebrew Bible's vocabulary for gender is rooted in the broadest categories of living creatures. WOMAN AND WIFE

en: and-his-mate | es: y-su-hembra | fr: et-son-mate | de: und-sein-Weibchen Gen 7:2

אֲשִׁיָּה H0803 N-fpc / 3fs (2×)

wall, fortification; defensive structure of a city, particularly bulwarks or buttresses

This rare architectural term appears only in descriptions of Babylon's fortifications. The Hebrew preserves two variant readings (Ketiv/Qere) both pointing to defensive structures—either the foundational bulwarks or the supporting buttresses that reinforced city walls. The term is a loan-word from Aramaic, related to words meaning 'column' or 'support' across several ancient Near Eastern languages.

(2×) Both occurrences in Jeremiah 50:15 refer to Babylon's defensive architecture, used in parallel with 'her walls' (חוֹמוֹתֶיהָ). The multilingual evidence shows translators struggling with this rare term —some rendering it as 'foundations' (English, Spanish 'cimientos'), others preserving the transliteration. The Aramaic cognates and Talmudic usage confirm this refers to structural supports, whether foundational bulwarks or vertical buttresses that gave strength to fortification walls. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (her-foundations), [ketiv:her-foundations] | es: [kethiv], sus-cimientos | fr: [(אשיותיה)], [[אשויתיה]] | de: [(אשיותיה)], [[אשויתיה]] Jer 50:15

אַשּׁוּר H0804 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (151×)

Asshur/Assyria; the eponymous ancestor, or the nation, empire, land, and people of Assyria.

In the Table of Nations (Gen 10:22), Asshur appears as a son of Shem and ancestor of the Assyrian civilization — one of the oldest named peoples in Scripture. Far more frequently, however, the same form designates the geopolitical entity Assyria: its land, its invading armies, and its imperial power that loomed over Israel and Judah for centuries. The prophets use it as both threat and symbol — Isaiah's 'rod of my anger' (Isa 10:5) and Hosea's futile ally (Hos 12:2). Translation traditions reflect this dual identity: Spanish 'Asiria' serves both person and nation, while German distinguishes 'Assur' (person) from 'Assyrien' (land).

1. Assyria the nation/land (149×) The geopolitical entity Assyria — land, empire, people, and invading armies — appearing across all syntactic frames: bare, with prepositions ('to Assyria,' 2 Kgs 15:20), with conjunctions, and with directional suffixes. Dominates with 149 occurrences, spanning historical narrative (2 Kgs 15:19, 29; 16:7), prophetic judgment (Isa 10:5; 30:31), and eschatological vision (Zech 10:11). Multilingual glosses converge: Spanish 'Asiria,' French 'Assyrie,' German 'Assyrien.' ASSYRIA NATION PERSON

en: Ashur | es: Asiria | fr: Assyrie | de: Assyrien 2Kgs 15:19; 2Kgs 15:20; 2Kgs 15:29; 2Kgs 16:7

2. Asshur the person (2×) The personal or tribal ancestor Asshur, son of Shem, appearing in genealogical contexts. At Genesis 10:22 he is listed among Shem's sons in the Table of Nations (P source), and at Ezekiel 27:23 the name may carry both personal and territorial overtones in a trade-list. German 'Assur' and English 'Asshur' reflect the more personal reading, while Spanish and French tend to use the same form as for the nation. ASSYRIA NATION PERSON en: Asshur, and-Asshur | es: Asiria, y-Ashur | fr: Assyrie, et-Asshur | de: Assyrien, und-Assur Gen 10:22; Ezek 27:23

אַשּׁוּרִם H0805a N-proper-mp (1×)

the Asshurim (Arab tribe descended from Abraham and Keturah)
This tribal name designates descendants of Dedan, who himself descended from Abraham through Keturah. The genealogy in Genesis traces Arabian tribes back to the patriarch's later marriages, establishing kinship relationships across the broader Semitic world. These Asshurim should not be confused with the mighty Assyrian empire to the north.

(1×) Plural gentilics denoting an Arabian tribal group traced to Abraham's line through Keturah in Genesis 25:3. The name links this people to Dedan's descendants, situating them in the Arabian Peninsula's tribal network. Translators preserve the proper name while distinguishing this group from the unrelated Assyrians through careful context. NATIONS AND PEOPLES en: the-Asshurim | es: ashurim | fr: le-Asshurim | de: die-Aschuriter Gen 25:3

אַשּׁוּרִי H0805b Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Ashurites (collective designation in 2 Samuel, possibly textual corruption for Geshurites)
This gentilics appears in the account of Abner making Ish-bosheth king over various northern territories. Many scholars suggest the text originally read Geshurites, given the geographical and historical context. The passage describes the fragmenting of Saul's kingdom after his death, with David ruling Judah while the north remained loyal to Saul's house.

(1×) Collective gentilics in 2 Samuel 2:9, listing territories under Ish-bosheth's jurisdiction. Critical scholarship questions whether this represents the Asherites (Asher's tribe) or a textual variant for Geshurites. Spanish uniquely renders this in singular form, while other translations pluralize appropriately for the collective designation of a people group. ASSYRIA NATION PERSON en: the-Ashurites | es: el-ashuri | fr: le-Ashurites | de: der-Ashurites 2Sam 2:9

אַשְׁחוּר H0806 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ashchur; personal name, 'father of Tekoa' in Judah's genealogy
A personal name appearing in the genealogies of Judah, specifically identified as 'the father of Tekoa.' The exact meaning of the name remains uncertain, though it appears in the intricate genealogical records of 1 Chronicles. Ancient translations render it variously, reflecting the difficulty of determining whether this represents an individual or a clan designation.

(2×) This name appears twice in Chronicles' genealogies (1 Chr 2:24; 4:5), both times with the designation 'father of Tekoa'—likely indicating either the founder or a prominent leader of that Judahite town. The Greek translations vary significantly (Ασχω, Σαρα, Ασδωδ, Ασχουρ), suggesting ancient translators also found this name challenging. The phrase 'father of' in genealogical contexts often denotes city founders or clan heads rather than literal paternity. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ashchur, and-to-Ashchur | es: Asjur, Y-a-Asjur | fr: [אשחור], [ולאשחור] | de: [אשחור], [ולאשחור] 1Chr 2:24; 1Chr 4:5

אַשִׁימָא H0807 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ashima (deity worshiped by people from Hamath, settled in Samaria)
When Assyria resettled foreigners in conquered Samaria, colonists from Hamath brought worship of Ashima, a deity otherwise unknown in ancient Near Eastern records. This syncretistic importation contributed to the religious confusion that made the Samaritan region detestable to returning Jewish exiles. The name appears nowhere else in biblical or extrabiblical literature.

(1×) Divine name denoting a god worshiped by Hamathites transplanted to Samaria according to 2 Kings 17:30. The passage condemns the proliferation of foreign deities in Israel's former heartland following Assyrian deportation policies. Total absence of Ashima from other ancient sources makes this deity's nature and cult entirely obscure beyond this single reference. GODS AND DEITIES en: Ashima | es: Asima | fr: Ashima | de: Ashima 2Kgs 17:30

אֲשִׁישָׁה H0808 Prep-l / N-mpc (1×)

raisin-cakes (pressed dried fruit, often associated with cultic feasts)
These pressed cakes of dried grapes appear in both celebratory distributions and condemned religious practices. David distributed them to celebrating crowds, while Hosea denounces Israel's love for such delicacies in pagan sacrificial feasts. The cakes were valued as concentrated nutrition and possibly as aphrodisiacs in fertility cult contexts, explaining their dual associations.

(1×) Construct form denoting raisin-cakes in Isaiah 16:7, within a lament over Moab's devastation. The specific reference is to raisin-cakes of Kir-hareseth, indicating these were a notable product or trade item of that Moabite fortress city. The mourning over lost delicacies intensifies the pathos of conquest, as even simple pleasures vanish before judgment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: for-raisin-cakes-of | es: por-tortas-de-pasas-de | fr: [לאשישׁ] | de: [לאשישׁ] Isa 16:7

אֲשִׁישָׁה H0809 Conj-w / N-fs (4×)

Raisin cake; a pressed cake of dried grapes used as food, festive provision, and in cultic offerings.
A noun denoting a pressed cake made from raisins, a prized delicacy in ancient Israel distributed at celebrations and used in religious feasts. David distributed raisin cakes to all Israel at the ark's procession (2 Sam 6:19; 1 Chr 16:3). Song of Songs 2:5 uses them as a remedy for lovesickness—'sustain me with raisin cakes.' Hosea 3:1 specifically condemns Israel's love of raisin cakes offered to other gods, linking the treat to idolatrous worship. Spanish 'tortas de pasas' (raisin cakes) and French 'gâteaux de raisins' vividly convey the confection's nature.

(4×) A pressed raisin cake—a confection of dried grapes compacted into a cake, served as festive food and used in sacrificial contexts. In 2 Samuel 6:19 and 1 Chronicles 16:3, David distributes them alongside bread and meat to the assembled people, marking national celebration. Song of Songs 2:5 employs them metaphorically as a restorative for the lovesick. Hosea 3:1 explicitly connects 'raisin cakes of grapes' (אֲשִׁישֵׁי עֲנָבִים) with idolatrous sacrificial feasts, making the same delicacy a marker of apostasy. Spanish 'tortas de pasas' and French 'gâteaux de raisins' both capture the pressed-fruit-cake sense. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT en: and-raisin-cake, raisin-cakes-of, with-raisin-cakes | es: con-tortas-de-pasas, tortas-de, y-torta-de-pasas | fr: [ואשישה], avec-des-gâteaux-de-raisins„ et-raisin-cake | de: [אשישׁ], [באשישות], [ואשישה] 2Sam 6:19; 1Chr 16:3; Song 2:5; Hos 3:1

אֲשֵׁךְ H0810 N-ms (1×)

testicle (male reproductive organ, defect disqualifying from priestly service) Levitical legislation concerning priestly qualifications excludes men with crushed or damaged testicles from offering sacrifices. The requirement for physical wholeness in those approaching God's altar symbolized the perfection demanded in sacred service. Similar restrictions appear across ancient Near Eastern priestly codes, reflecting widespread association of bodily integrity with ritual purity.

(1×) Anatomical term for the testicle appearing in Leviticus 21:20's list of disqualifying physical defects for priests. The specific phrase "crushed testicle" indicates traumatic injury rather than congenital condition. Syriac and Ethiopic cognates confirm the anatomical reference. Cross-linguistic translations uniformly render this with clinical precision appropriate to legal medical contexts. FLESH AND BODY

en: testicles | es: testículo | fr: testicles | de: testicles Lev 21:20

אֶשְׁכּוֹל H0811 N-mpc / 3fs (9×)

A cluster, especially of grapes; used literally of vineyard produce and figuratively of beauty or judgment.

Denotes a cluster of grapes, most famously the enormous cluster carried back by the Israelite spies from the Valley of Eshkol (Num 13:23-24), which gave the valley its name. The word appears in both literal agricultural contexts — Pharaoh's cupbearer sees clusters ripening in his dream (Gen 40:10) — and rich figurative usage: the beloved is compared to clusters of henna blossoms (Song 1:14; 7:8-9), while Deuteronomy 32:32 uses 'clusters of gall' to indict Israel's enemies. Spanish 'racimo' and French 'grappe' confirm the core meaning across languages.

cluster (of grapes) (9×) A cluster of grapes (or by extension, other fruit and blossoms). The concrete sense appears in the spy narrative where the famous אֶשְׁכּוֹל עֲנָבִים ('cluster of grapes') from Num 13:23 was so large it required two men to carry. Genesis 40:10 describes clusters ripening in Pharaoh's cupbearer dream. Figuratively, Song of Solomon uses it for clusters of henna blossoms and date-palm fruit as images of beauty (1:14; 7:8-9), while Deut 32:32 inverts the image — 'their clusters are clusters of gall.' Spanish 'racimo' and French 'grappe' consistently reflect the core agricultural sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-cluster-of, cluster, cluster-of | es: Racimo-de, a-los-racimos, como-racimos-de | fr: Grappe, [באשכול], clusters-de | de: [אשכול], [אשכל], [באשכול] Gen 40:10; Num 13:23; Num 13:24; Deut 32:32; Song 1:14

אֶשְׁכֹּל H0812 N-proper-ms (6×)

Eshcol, a proper noun denoting both an Amorite ally of Abraham and a grape-rich valley near Hebron.

A name meaning 'cluster' (of grapes), applied to two closely related referents. First, Eshcol is an Amorite chieftain and brother of Mamre who allied with Abraham in the rescue of Lot (Gen 14:13, 24). Second, the Valley of Eshcol near Hebron is the famous location where the Israelite spies cut a branch bearing a single enormous grape cluster (Num 13:23-24), which became an enduring symbol of the land's abundance. The name's etymology is made explicit in Num 13:24, connecting the place to the fruit the spies found there. German distinguishes the forms 'Eschkol' and 'Eshcol,' while Spanish uses 'Escol' throughout.

Eshcol (6×) The proper noun Eshcol, covering both the Amorite ally of Abraham near Hebron (Gen 14:13, 24) and the Valley of Eshcol (Nahal Eshcol), the wadi near Hebron where the twelve spies gathered their famous grape cluster (Num 13:23-24; 32:9; Deut 1:24). The name itself means 'cluster,' and Num 13:24 explicitly derives the valley's name from the cluster cut there. Whether person or place, all references cluster geographically around Hebron. Spanish 'Escol' and German 'Eschkol' both transliterate the same proper noun. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Eshcol | es: Escol | fr: Eshcol | de: Eschkol, Eschkols, Eshcol Gen 14:13; Gen 14:24; Num 13:23; Num 13:24; Num 32:9

אַשְׁכְּנַז H0813 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Ashkenaz, descendant of Japheth and northern people; possibly Bithynian (Ascanians)

Both a personal name and an ethnic designation. As a person, Ashkenaz was a descendant of Japheth through Gomer. As a people, they appear in Jeremiah's oracle against Babylon, summoned alongside Ararat and Minni to attack. Scholars identify them with a northern people, possibly the Ascanians of Bithynia or an Armenian group. Later Jewish tradition applied 'Ashkenaz' to Germanic lands, but the biblical references point to Anatolia or the Caucasus region.

(3×) A personal name (Genesis 10:3, 1 Chronicles 1:6) and northern people-group (Jeremiah 51:27). In Jeremiah, Ashkenaz is called to war against Babylon alongside the kingdoms of Ararat and Minni, suggesting a location in the Armenian highlands or Anatolia. The geographic evidence from Spanish and other translations consistently treats this as a proper name requiring minimal translation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ashkenaz, and-Ashkenaz | es: Ashkenaz, Asquenaz, y-Ashkenaz | fr: Aschkenaz, Ashkenaz, [ואשכנז] | de: Aschkenas, [אשכנז], [ואשכנז] Gen 10:3; 1Chr 1:6; Jer 51:27

אֶשְׁכָּר H0814 N-msc / 2fs (2×)

gift, tribute; payment or present given as honor

This term denotes a gift or tribute given to honor a superior, appearing in poetic contexts describing royal protocol. It occurs alongside the more common word for offering (מִנְחָה), suggesting formal gifts presented to kings or rulers. The rare word carries connotations of payment or compensation in contexts of international diplomacy or trade.

(2×) The two occurrences illustrate different contexts of gift-giving: Psalm 72:10 depicts kings bringing tribute ('gifts') to Israel's monarch in parallel with 'offerings' (מִנְחָה), while Ezekiel 27:15 describes commercial 'payment' given to Tyre for trade goods. The multilingual glosses consistently render this as 'gift' (English, German), 'present/tribute' (Spanish 'presente/tributo'), or 'cadeau' (French), all emphasizing the honorific or compensatory nature of the transaction rather than voluntary generosity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: gifts, your-payment | es: presente, tu-tributo | fr: cadeau, récompense | de: Gaben, [אשכרך] Ps 72:10; Ezek 27:15

אֶשֶׁל H0815 Art / N-ms (3×)

tamarisk tree, likely a sacred tree marking shrines; planted by Abraham, sheltered Saul

A tree species (tamarisk) mentioned in contexts suggesting sacred significance. Abraham planted one at Beersheba, possibly marking a shrine. Saul held court under a tamarisk at Gibeah, and his bones were buried beneath one. The tamarisk, an evergreen shrub-tree with scale-like leaves, thrives in arid regions and was apparently valued as a landmark for sacred sites. The consistent botanical identification across languages (Spanish tamarisco, French tamarisk) confirms the species identification.

(3×) The tamarisk tree, appearing in narratives connected to worship or burial. Abraham plants one at Beersheba after making a covenant (Genesis 21:33); Saul dwells beneath the tamarisk at Gibeah 'on the height' (1 Samuel 22:6); and Saul's bones are interred under the tamarisk at Jabesh (1 Samuel 31:13). The tree's association with high places and burial suggests it marked sacred spaces. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-tamarisk, the-tamarisk, the-tamarisk-tree | es: el-tamarisco, tamarisco | fr: le-tamarisk, le-tamarisk-arbre, un-tamarisk | de: der-tamarisk, der-tamarisk-Baum, eine-Tamariske Gen 21:33; 1Sam 22:6; 1Sam 31:13

אָשַׁם H0816 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (35×)

Offend, be guilty, incur guilt — to commit a trespass or become liable before God, sometimes involving desolation as consequence.

At the heart of Israel's sacrificial system stands this verb for the experience of guilt. Unlike words for general sin, this root carries a distinctly cultic and legal weight — it describes becoming liable for a specific offense that requires restitution or atonement. Leviticus 4-5 builds its guilt-offering legislation around this verb: when someone 'becomes guilty' (Lev 4:13, 22, 27; 5:2-5), a prescribed sacrifice follows. Spanish captures the full range with 'culpable' (guilty, liable), while French and German often leave the Hebrew untranslated, signaling its technical precision. Hosea uses it prophetically — Israel will 'acknowledge their guilt' (Hos 5:15) and 'be made desolate' (Hos 10:2) — extending the cultic concept into national judgment.

1. be or become guilty (32×) To be or become guilty — incurring guilt before God through a specific trespass, especially in cultic and legal contexts. This is the dominant Qal sense spanning nearly all occurrences. Leviticus 4:13-27 and 5:2-5 use it repeatedly as the trigger for guilt offerings: once a person 'becomes guilty,' sacrificial remedy is required. Numbers 5:6-7 pairs it with confession and restitution. Spanish 'se hizo culpable' and 'fue culpable' consistently mark the transition into a state of liability. Hosea 4:15 and 10:2 extend the concept to national guilt, while 2 Chronicles 19:10 warns judges to help others avoid 'becoming guilty before the LORD.' TESTIMONY OBJECTS
en: and-becomes-guilty, and-he-became-guilty, and-he-is-guilty | es: fue-culpable, grandemente, se-hizo-culpable | fr: [ויאשמו], [יאשמו], et-est-guilty | de: [אשום], [ויאשמו], [יאשמו] Lev 4:13; Lev 4:22; Lev 4:27; Lev 5:2; Lev 5:3

2. declare or hold guilty (1×) Hifil causative: to declare or hold guilty — pronouncing someone culpable. This rare form appears in Psalm 5:10, where David prays that God would 'hold them guilty' — a judicial petition asking for divine condemnation of the wicked. Spanish 'Haz los culpables' (make them guilty) and English 'hold them guilty' both capture the causative force. It is the forensic counterpart to the experiential Qal, shifting agency from the offender to the judge. TESTIMONY OBJECTS
en: hold-them-guilty | es: Haz-los-culpables | fr: le-être-coupable | de: hold-ihnen-guilty Ps 5:10

3. suffer desolation or punishment (1×) To suffer desolation as the consequence of guilt — a Niphal passive sense found in Joel 1:18 where the cattle 'are made desolate' or 'suffer punishment.' German 'verschuldete' preserves the guilt-consequence link. This extends the semantic range from the act of incurring guilt to bearing its devastating results, showing how the root bridges offense and its aftermath — a theology of consequences built into the verb itself. TESTIMONY OBJECTS
en: are-made-desolate | es: sufren | fr: être-coupable | de: verschuldete Joel 1:18

4. acknowledge guilt (1×) To acknowledge or recognize one's guilt — a cognitive-reflexive nuance of the Qal appearing in Hosea 5:15, where God waits until the people 'acknowledge their guilt' and seek His face. Spanish 'se reconozcan culpables' elegantly captures the reflexive self-recognition. This sense is theologically significant: it marks the turning point from guilt as a state to guilt as a pathway toward repentance, forming the bridge between offense and restoration in prophetic literature. TESTIMONY OBJECTS
en: they-acknowledge-guilt | es: se-reconozcan-culpables | fr: être-coupable | de: verschuldete Hos 5:15

אָשָׁם H0817 Conj-w (46×)

Guilt, offense, or wrongdoing; a guilt offering (sacrifice); compensation or restitution for trespass

Asham weaves together the offense, the inner state of guilt, and the ritual remedy into a single word. Its most frequent use is the guilt offering—a specific sacrifice prescribed in Leviticus 5–7 for offenses that could be assessed and compensated, distinguishing it from the sin offering (chattat). The offering implies measurable wrong: someone defrauded a neighbor, violated a sacred boundary, or unwittingly transgressed. A second sense captures guilt as an abstract state—'you would bring guilt upon us' (Gen 26:10). A third, rarer sense denotes the restitution payment itself (Num 5:7–8), where the offender must return what was taken plus a fifth. German Schuld ('guilt/debt') and Schuldopfer ('guilt offering') preserve the conceptual unity beautifully.

1. guilt offering (sacrifice) (39×) The guilt offering as a specific sacrificial rite, prescribed primarily in Leviticus 5–7 and Numbers 6:12; 18:9. Unlike the sin offering, the asham addresses offenses where restitution is possible—violations of holy things, false dealings with neighbors, or uncertain guilt (Lev 5:6, 15–16; 14:12). Ezekiel envisions it continuing in the restored temple (Ezek 40:39; 42:13; 46:20). Spanish ofrenda por la culpa and French sacrifice de culpabilité both gloss it as a sacrifice for guilt. GUILT OFFERINGS
en: guilt-offering, his-guilt-offering, the-guilt-offering | es: culpa, de-ofrenda-por-la-culpa, la-ofrenda-por-la-culpa | fr: culpabilité-offrande, le-sacrifice-de-culpabilité, sacrifice-de-culpabilité | de: Schuldopfer, [האשם], der-Schuldopfer Lev 5:6; Lev 5:7; Lev 5:15; Lev 5:16

2. guilt or offense (4×) The abstract state of guilt or the offense itself—the wrongdoing that creates liability before God or man. Abimelech protests that taking Rebekah could have 'brought guilt upon us' (Gen 26:10). The Psalmist declares God will strike the 'guilty head' (Ps 68:21). Proverbs 14:9 observes that 'fools mock at guilt.' Jeremiah 51:5 says the land of the Chaldeans 'is full of guilt' before the Holy One. This sense names the moral condition that the sacrifice of sense 1 addresses. GUILT OFFERINGS
en: guilt, in-his-guilt, with-guilt | es: culpa, de-culpa, en-sus-culpas | fr: [אשם], culpabilité, dans-culpabilité | de: Schuld, [אשם], in-sein-guilt Gen 26:10; Ps 68:21; Prov 14:9; Jer 51:5

3. compensation for guilt (3×) The compensation or restitution payment owed for a trespass—the material reckoning of guilt. Numbers 5:7–8 prescribes that the offender must confess, then return 'his guilt' (ashamo) in full plus a fifth to the wronged party; if the wronged party has no kinsman, the restitution goes to the priest. This sense captures the transactional dimension: guilt is not only felt or atoned for but repaid. GUILT OFFERINGS
en: his-guilt, the-guilt | es: culpa-de-él, la-culpa | fr: le-culpabilité, son-culpabilité | de: der-Schuld, sein-Schuld Num 5:7; Num 5:8

אָשֵׁם H0818 Adj-mp (3×)

guilty, bearing guilt that requires atonement or restitution; liable for offense

An adjective describing the state of being guilty and therefore obligated to make restitution or offer sacrifice. Joseph's brothers confess they are guilty concerning Joseph (Genesis 42:21). David's parable makes a point about guilt (2 Samuel 14:13). Those who married foreign wives in Ezra's time are described as guilty, requiring a guilt offering. The term carries both moral culpability and ritual obligation—guilt that must be addressed through proper channels.

(3×) The condition of guilt requiring atonement. Joseph's brothers declare 'we are guilty (ashemin) concerning our brother' (Genesis 42:21), acknowledging their offense. In David's reign, a case is presented about bearing guilt (2 Samuel 14:13). The returned exiles who had married foreign women are 'guilty' and must offer a ram as a guilt offering (Ezra 10:19), showing the ritual dimension of the term. TESTIMONY OBJECTS
en: and-being-guilty, guilty, is-as-guilty | es: como-culpable, culpables, y-siendo-culpables | fr: [אשמים], coupable, est-comme-guilty | de: [ואשמים], ist-wie-guilty, schuldig Gen 42:21; 2Sam 14:13; Ezra 10:19

אַשְׁמָה H0819 Prep-b / N-fs (19×)

Guilt or guiltiness before God; also concrete offenses or trespasses viewed as culpable deeds.

Derived from the root 'asham (to be guilty), this noun names both the condition of guilt and the acts that produce it. In the Levitical system, 'ashmah designates the liability incurred by trespass—the spiritual debt that demands a guilt offering (Lev 6:5-7). Ezra's anguished confession piles up the word: 'our guilt has grown up to the heavens' (Ezra 9:6). Spanish consistently renders it 'culpa,' French 'culpabilité,' capturing the weight of moral indebtedness before a holy God.

1. guilt, guiltiness (18×) The state or condition of being guilty, the liability incurred through wrongdoing before God or the covenant community. Leviticus 4:3 and 6:5-7 embed this in sacrificial law, where guilt must be resolved through offering. Ezra 9:6-15 and 10:10-19 use it repeatedly for Israel's corporate guilt in mixed marriages. Spanish 'culpa' and French 'culpabilité' preserve the juridical weight. In 1 Chronicles 21:3, Joab warns David that the census will bring guilt upon all Israel—showing it as both personal and communal liability. GUILT OFFERINGS

en: and-for-our-guilt, and-my-guilt, and-our-guilt | es: culpa, culpa-suya, culpas-nuestras | fr: culpabilité, et-culpabilité, pour-culpabilité-de | de: Schuld, [אשמה], [אשמת] Lev 4:3; Lev 6:5; Lev 6:7; Lev 22:16; 1Chr 21:3

2. offenses, guilty deeds (1×) Concrete offenses or guilty deeds—the trespasses themselves rather than the abstract state of culpability. At 2 Chronicles 28:10, the Israelites are charged with 'offenses' (plural 'ashmot) against the Lord, pointing to specific acts of wrongdoing. Spanish 'culpas' (plural) and the shift to concrete enumeration distinguish this from the more abstract 'guiltiness' sense—here the focus falls on what was done, not merely on the resulting status before God. GUILT OFFERINGS
en: guilt | es: culpas | fr: culpabilité | de: [אשמות] 2Chr 28:10

אַשְׁמַנִּים H0820 Prep-b (1×)
among the vigorous/in desolate places (obscure term in Isaiah's confession, possibly vigor or desolation)
This difficult phrase appears in Isaiah's communal confession where the people lament groping like the blind and stumbling at noon as if at twilight. The comparison "among the vigorous/stout ones, like the dead" suggests vitality inverted into deathlike weakness, though some interpreters propose "in desolate places." The context emphasizes spiritual blindness producing practical helplessness.

(1×) Prepositional phrase of uncertain meaning in Isaiah 59:10, within a catalog of sin's debilitating effects. The contrast pits the healthy/vigorous against the dead, or alternately situates the people in desolate places like corpses. German and French leave the term untransliterated, acknowledging lexical uncertainty. The surrounding imagery of blindness and stumbling supports either interpretation. FAT AND RICHNESS
en: among-the-vigorous | es: entre-robustos | fr: [באשמנים] | de: [באשמנים] Isa 59:10

אַשְׁמוּרָה H0821 Conj-w / N-fs (7×)
A watch of the night; a division of the nighttime hours used for military guard duty and poetic time-reckoning.
A feminine noun denoting a 'watch' — one of the divisions into which the ancient Israelites divided the night. The Israelites recognized three watches: beginning, middle, and morning. The word appears in both military and poetic contexts: the morning watch at the Red Sea when God threw the Egyptian camp into confusion (Exod 14:24), Gideon's surprise attack at the beginning of the middle watch (Judg 7:19), and Saul's dawn assault on the Ammonites (1 Sam 11:11). In the Psalms, it becomes a metaphor for the brevity of time — a thousand years in God's sight are like a watch in the night (Ps 90:4).

watch (night division) (7×) A division of the nighttime hours, typically one of three watches into which the Israelite night was divided for guard duty or time-keeping. The Spanish 'vigilia' and English 'watch' both preserve the dual sense of staying alert and a measured period of darkness. The construct forms — 'watch of the morning' (Exod 14:24; 1 Sam 11:11), 'the middle watch' (Judg 7:19) — specify particular periods, while the plural 'watches' in Psalm 63:6 and 119:148 and Lamentations 2:19 denote the succession of night hours spent in meditation or mourning. Psalm 90:4 uses it memorably as a measure of fleeting time: a thousand years pass like a single night watch in God's reckoning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-a-watch, in-the-night-watches, in-watch-of | es: a-las-vigilias, en-la-vigilia-de-, en-vigilia-de | fr: [אשמרות], dans-veille, dans-veille-de | de: [אשמרות], der-Nacht-wacht, der-wachen Exod 14:24; Judg 7:19; 1Sam 11:11; Ps 63:6; Ps 90:4

אֶשְׁנָב H0822 N-msc / 1cs (2×)
lattice, window-lattice; wooden or stone screen covering a window opening
This architectural term describes the latticed screen or framework that covered window openings in ancient buildings. Used in parallel with 'window' (חַלּוֹן), it refers to the decorative or protective grillwork that allowed air and light while providing privacy and security. Both biblical occurrences picture women looking through these lattices—one anxiously, one seductively.

(2×) The lattice appears in two memorable scenes: Sisera's mother peering anxiously through the window-lattice awaiting her son's return (Judges 5:28), and the 'strange woman' looking through her lattice to entice the simple youth (Proverbs 7:6). The architectural element suggests upper-story windows in substantial houses. Translations consistently render this as 'lattice' or 'celosía' (Spanish), capturing the screened nature of the opening. The Hebrew term likely derives from a root related to Ben Sira's usage, suggesting well-established architectural vocabulary. WINDOW LATTICE en: my-lattice, the-lattice | es: celosía-mía, la-celosía | fr: le-lattice, mon-אשנבי-moi | de: [אשנבי], der-lattice Judg 5:28; Prov 7:6

אַשְׁנָה H0823 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)
Ashnah; name of two cities in Judah
A place name appearing in the territorial allotments of Judah, designating two distinct cities. The name may derive from a root meaning 'firm' or 'strong,' though this etymology remains uncertain. Both cities were located in the Shephelah, the lowland region of Judah.

(2×) Joshua 15 lists two separate cities named Ashnah in Judah's inheritance: one in verse 33 (in the lowland district), another in verse 43 (in a different lowland section). The consistent multilingual rendering simply transliterates the name (Asná, Ashnah), treating it as a proper geographical designation. The duplication of the name within the same tribal territory likely reflects distinct settlements, perhaps named for similar topographical features or founding circumstances. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-Ashnah | es: y-Asná | fr: et-Ashnah | de: und-Ashnah Josh 15:33; Josh 15:43

אֶשְׁעָן H0824 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Eshan (village in Judah's hill country, location uncertain)
This settlement appears among eleven cities allocated to Judah in the hill country district near Hebron. Like many ancient village names, its precise location remains unidentified, though the general region can be determined from associated towns. The Greek Septuagint's variant readings reflect uncertainty even in antiquity about some of these lesser settlements.

(1×) Place name designating a village in Judah's tribal allotment according to Joshua 15:52. The town appears in a list of hill-country settlements, grouped geographically with Arab, Dumah, and nearby villages. Septuagintal variants (Soma, Esan) indicate textual transmission challenges with minor toponyms whose identification was already uncertain in the Hellenistic period. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-Eshan | es: y-Esán | fr: et-Eshan | de: und-Eshan Josh 15:52

אַשָּׁף H0825 Conj-w (2×)
enchanter, conjurer; practitioner of incantations and magic
A term for Babylonian magicians or sorcerers, likely borrowed from Akkadian (âšipu), referring to specialists in incantations and divination. The word appears only in Daniel's court narratives, grouped with other classes of Babylonian wise men. These were professional practitioners of magical arts, distinct from but associated with astrologers and diviners.

(2×) Both occurrences in Daniel (1:20; 2:2) list enchanters alongside other categories of Babylonian court specialists—magicians (חַרְטֻמִּים), sorcerers (מְכַשְּׁפִים), and Chaldeans (כַּשְׂדִּים). Daniel 1:20 notes that Daniel and his friends were 'ten times better' than all these practitioners. The Babylonian loan-word reflects the specialized vocabulary of Mesopotamian magical professions, and the Aramaic cognates confirm this denotes ritual specialists who performed conjurations. Translations render it as 'enchanters' (English), 'encantadores' (Spanish), or preserve the transliteration, recognizing the technical nature of this professional class. DIVINATION PRACTITIONERS

en: and-for-the-enchanters, the-enchanters | es: los-encantadores, y-a-los-encantadores | fr: et-magicien, magicien | de: [האשפים], [ולאשפים] Dan 1:20; Dan 2:2

אָשַׁף H0826 N-mp (6×)

Conjurer or enchanter, an Aramaic term for Babylonian court diviners in the book of Daniel.

An Aramaic noun designating a class of Babylonian court magicians who practiced divination, incantation, or astrology. Found exclusively in the Aramaic sections of Daniel, the word appears in lists of professional wise men summoned by the king to interpret dreams and signs (Dan 2:10, 27; 4:7; 5:7, 11, 15). It is likely a Babylonian loanword. Spanish interestingly renders it both as 'astrologos' (astrologers) and 'encantadores' (enchanters), reflecting the uncertainty about exactly which divinatory specialty the term covers. English consistently uses 'enchanters,' while the untranslated Hebrew in French and German editions suggests the term's technical obscurity.

enchanter, astrologer, conjurer (6×) A practitioner of divination or magical arts at the Babylonian royal court, used exclusively in the Aramaic portions of Daniel. The term appears alongside other professional categories – magicians, Chaldeans, soothsayers – when Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar summon their wise men for dream interpretation or sign-reading (Dan 2:10, 27; 4:7; 5:7, 11, 15). Probably a Babylonian loanword (cf. Akkadian ashipu, 'exorcist'), the term's precise specialty remains debated, as reflected in the Spanish rendering split between 'astrologos' and 'encantadores.' DIVINATION PRACTITIONERS

en: and-enchanter, enchanters, the-enchanters | es: a-los-astrólogos, astrólogos, encantadores | fr: [אשפיא], [אשפין], [ואשף] | de: [אשפיא], [אשפין], [ואשף] Dan 2:10; Dan 2:27; Dan 4:7; Dan 5:7; Dan 5:11

אַשְׁפָּה H0827 N-fsc / 3ms (6×)

Quiver, the case or container for carrying arrows, used both literally of military equipment and figuratively of God's purposes.

A feminine noun denoting the container in which arrows are carried, derived from Assyrian ishpatu. While it appears in straightforward military contexts – the quiver rattling against a war horse (Job 39:23), Elam uncovering its quiver for battle (Isa 22:6), Babylon's quiver as an open grave (Jer 5:16) – its most memorable uses are figurative. In Psalm 127:5 a man who has filled his quiver with sons is called blessed, likening children to arrows. In Isaiah 49:2 the Servant of the Lord is a polished arrow hidden in God's quiver, suggesting both readiness and concealment until the appointed time.

quiver (arrow container) (6×) The arrow-case or quiver carried by warriors, used both in literal military descriptions and in rich metaphorical applications. Literally it denotes battlefield equipment: the quiver rattling on the charging horse (Job 39:23), Elam uncovering its quiver (Isa 22:6), and Babylon's quiver compared to an open sepulchre (Jer 5:16; Lam 3:13). Figuratively, Psalm 127:5 compares children to arrows and a full family to a full quiver, while Isaiah 49:2 pictures the messianic Servant as a polished shaft hidden in the Lord's quiver. Spanish 'aljaba' and English 'quiver' both consistently render the same concrete object. WEAPONS AND WARFARE

en: his-quiver, in-his-quiver, its-quiver | es: Su-aljaba, aljaba, aljaba-suya | fr: [אשפה], [אשפתו], [באשפתו] | de: [אשפה], [אשפתו], [באשפתו] Job 39:23; Ps 127:5; Isa 22:6; Isa 49:2; Jer 5:16

אַשְׁפְּנַז H0828 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ashpenaz (Babylonian official, Nebuchadnezzar's chief of eunuchs)

This high-ranking Babylonian courtier served as chief of the eunuchs responsible for selecting and training noble captives for royal service. He oversaw Daniel and his companions' three-year education program, showing unexpected sympathy when Daniel requested dietary accommodation. The name's etymology remains uncertain, likely derived from Akkadian administrative terminology.

(1×) Personal name of Nebuchadnezzar's chief eunuch in Daniel 1:3, charged with recruiting talented young Judean nobility for Babylonian palace service. His role involved both selection and supervision of the rigorous training regimen designed to assimilate foreign elites into Babylonian court culture. Cross-linguistic renderings preserve the proper name through transliteration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: to-Ashpenaz | es: a-Ashpenaz | fr: magicien | de: [לאשפנז] Dan 1:3

אֻשְׁפָּר H0829 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

date-cake, portion; food item distributed at celebration, possibly pressed dates or meat

A food item distributed to the people during David's celebration when the ark was brought to Jerusalem. The exact nature of this portion remains uncertain—ancient and modern interpreters have variously suggested date cakes, raisin cakes, or portions of meat. The word appears only in the parallel accounts of this single festive occasion.

(2×) At the ark's arrival in Jerusalem, David distributed to all Israel 'a loaf of bread, a portion of meat, and a cake' (2 Samuel 6:19 = 1 Chronicles 16:3). This middle item's identity puzzled even ancient translators: the Greek Septuagint suggested 'cake or roll,' while modern versions waver between 'date cake' and 'portion of meat.' The uncertainty appears in multilingual glosses, where some transliterations simply preserve the Hebrew. The festive context suggests a choice food item, and the parallel structure indicates three distinct elements of the celebratory distribution. FLESH AND BODY

en: and-date-cake, and-portion | es: y-porción, y-porción-de-carne | fr: [ואשפר], et-date-cake | de: [ואשכר], und-date-cake 2Sam 6:19; 1Chr 16:3

אַשְׁפֹּת H0830 N-mp (7×)

Ash heap, refuse pile, dunghill; a place of waste symbolizing extreme poverty and degradation.

A masculine noun denoting a heap of ashes, refuse, or dung — the ancient Near Eastern equivalent of a city dump. In Scripture it functions powerfully as a symbol of utter destitution. Hannah's song celebrates that God raises the poor from the ash heap to seat them among princes (1 Sam 2:8), a theme echoed in Psalm 113:7. Lamentations 4:5 reverses the image with devastating effect: those who once feasted on delicacies now embrace ash heaps. In Nehemiah, the 'Dung Gate' (literally the gate of the ash heaps) served as a practical landmark in Jerusalem's walls (Neh 2:13; 3:13-14; 12:31).

ash heap, dunghill, refuse pile (7×) A heap of ashes, dung, or refuse, serving both as a literal location and a powerful symbol of poverty and degradation. Spanish 'muladar' (dunghill) and 'basura' (garbage) capture the range from formal refuse site to general waste. The word appears in two distinct contextual clusters: as a symbol of extreme lowliness from which God lifts the needy (1 Sam 2:8; Ps 113:7; Lam 4:5), and as a topographic feature in Jerusalem — the Ash-heap Gate (שַׁעַר הָאַשְׁפֹּת) through which waste was carried out of the city (Neh 2:13; 3:13-14; 12:31). The theological force lies in the contrast: God transforms the ash heap into a throne. ASH HEAP REFUSE

en: ash-heaps, from-ash-heap, from-the-ash-heap | es: del-muladar, el-muladar, la-basura | fr: [אשפתות], [האשפות], [האשפת] | de: [אשפתות], [האשפת], [האשפות] 1Sam 2:8; Neh 2:13; Neh 3:13; Neh 3:14; Neh 12:31

אַשְׁקְלוֹן H0831 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (12×)

Ashqelon – one of the five major Philistine cities, on the Mediterranean coast of Canaan

Ashkelon (Hebrew אַשְׁקְלוֹן) was one of the five principal cities of the Philistine pentapolis, situated on the Mediterranean coast of Canaan (modern Ashkelon, Israel). It appears in contexts of conquest, judgment, and lament throughout the Hebrew Bible. Judah captured it during the initial settlement of Canaan (Judg 1:18). Samson struck down thirty men of Ashkelon (Judg 14:19). David's lament over Saul and Jonathan warns, 'Tell it not in Gath, proclaim it not in the streets of Ashkelon' (2 Sam 1:20). The prophets pronounce oracles of destruction against it as part of God's judgment on Philistia (Jer 25:20; 47:5, 7; Amos 1:8; Zeph 2:4, 7; Zech 9:5). All twelve occurrences refer to the same coastal city.

Ashkelon, Philistine city (12×) The Philistine coastal city of Ashkelon, one of five cities of the Philistine pentapolis. Featured in conquest narratives (Judg 1:18), Samson's exploits (Judg 14:19), David's lament (2 Sam 1:20), and prophetic judgment oracles (Amos 1:8; Zeph 2:4; Zech 9:5). Spanish Ascalon, French Ascalon, and German Ashkelon confirm a single toponym. PHILISTIA AND PHILISTINES

en: Ashkelon, Ashqelon, and-Ashqelon | es: Ascalón, Ashkelón, Ashqelon | fr: Ascalon, Aschkelon, Ashqelon | de: Ashkelon, Ashqelon, [אשקלון] Judg 1:18; Judg 14:19; 1Sam 6:17; 2Sam 1:20; Jer 25:20

אַשְׁקְלֹנִי H0832 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Ashkelonite (collective designation for inhabitants of Ashkelon, Philistine city)

This gentilics identifies the population of Ashkelon, one of the five major Philistine cities forming the powerful coastal confederation. Joshua's boundary description lists territories remaining unconquered, including the five Philistine city-states with their distinct populations. Ashkelon persisted as a significant Mediterranean port through biblical and classical periods.

(1×) Gentilic noun denoting the people of Ashkelon in Joshua 13:3, within the catalog of unconquered Canaanite territories. The passage lists five Philistine lords, each ruling a major city including Ashkelon. Spanish renders this as "ascaloneo" (singular), while others use collective plurals, both appropriately representing the people group associated with this coastal stronghold. PHILISTIA AND PHILISTINES

en: the-Ashkelonite | es: el-ascaloneo | fr: le-Ashkelonite | de: der-Ashkelonite Josh 13:3

אָשַׁר H0833 V-Piel-Imperf-2ms (17×)

To go straight, advance; pronounce blessed/happy; lead or guide; set right. Pual: be called blessed or be guided.

A rich verb whose senses radiate from the idea of going straight or forward. Its best-known use is pronouncing someone blessed — as when Leah exclaims 'Happy am I! For women will call me blessed' (Gen 30:13), using the same root that gives us the word 'ashre' (blessed). In the Piel it also means to lead or guide along the right path (Isa 3:12), and in a moral register to set right or correct the oppressed (Isa 1:17). The Spanish glosses beautifully distinguish these: 'bienaventurados' for blessing, 'guian' for leading, and 'corregid' for setting right.

1. pronounce blessed or happy (7×) To pronounce someone blessed, happy, or fortunate — the most frequent sense. When Leah names her son Asher saying 'women will call me blessed' (Gen 30:13), she uses this Piel form. It appears in wisdom and praise contexts: the virtuous woman's children 'call her blessed' (Prov 31:28), and the nations bless the righteous king (Ps 72:17). The Spanish 'llamamos bienaventurados' and French 'dire heureux' both capture the declarative, congratulatory force — publicly acknowledging someone's happy state. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: and-blessed-me, and-call-her-blessed, and-they-blessed-her | es: Y-os-llamarán-bienaventurados, llamamos-bienaventurados, llamarán-dichosa-me | fr: appeler-happy-moi, et-dire-heureux-elle, et-dire-heureux-moi | de: [ואשרן], [ויאשרוה], [ותאשרני] Gen 30:13; Job 29:11; Ps 72:17; Prov 31:28; Song 6:9

2. lead or guide (3×) To lead, guide, or direct someone along a course. Isaiah 3:12 warns that the people's leaders 'lead them astray,' and Isaiah 9:16 condemns guides who mislead. Proverbs 23:19 urges 'direct your heart in the way.' The semantic link to sense 1 is the idea of setting someone on the straight path — whether literally guiding or metaphorically blessing. Spanish 'los que guian' and 'dirige' reflect this navigational meaning clearly. GOING AND LEADING

en: and-direct, guides-of, your-leaders | es: los-que-guían, tus-guías, y-dirige | fr: [מאשרי], [מאשריך], et-dire-heureux | de: [מאשרי], [מאשריך], und-welcher Prov 23:19; Isa 3:12; Isa 9:16

3. be called blessed (3×) The Pual passive of pronouncing blessed: to be called blessed, to be declared happy by others. Psalm 41:2 promises that the one who considers the poor 'shall be called blessed in the land,' and Proverbs 3:18 says wisdom's holders are blessed. The passive transforms the active declaration into a state received. Spanish 'sera bienaventurado' and French 'heureux' render this well. BLESSING AND PRAISE

en: [ketiv:he-is-blessed], are-blessed, he-is-called-blessed | es: ketiv, son-bienaventurados, y-será-bienaventurado | fr: dire-heureux, heureux | de: [ketiv:he-ist-blessed], er-ist-gerufen-gesegnet, von-welcher Ps 41:2; Prov 3:18

4. walk straight or advance (2×) To walk straight, advance, or proceed forward — the root physical meaning from which the other senses develop. Proverbs 4:14 warns 'do not advance in the way of the wicked,' and Proverbs 9:6 invites 'walk in the way of understanding.' The Assyrian cognate asharu (to go straight) confirms this as the base meaning. Spanish 'avances' and 'caminad' preserve the directional, locomotion sense. CONDUCT AND WALKING

en: and-walk, walk | es: avances, y-caminad | fr: dire-heureux, et-dire-heureux | de: [ואשרו], [תאשר] Prov 4:14; Prov 9:6

5. set right or reprove (1×) To set right, correct, or reprove — a moral-judicial application of going straight. Isaiah 1:17 commands 'set right the oppressor' (or 'relieve the oppressed'), using the verb to mean restoring justice. The Spanish 'corregid' (correct!) captures the imperative moral force. This sense bridges the physical 'make straight' and the social 'make things right.' HELP AND ASSISTANCE

en: reprove | es: corregid | fr: [אשרו] | de: [אשרו] Isa 1:17

6. be led or guided (1×) The Pual passive of leading or guiding: to be led or directed by another. Isaiah 9:16 speaks of those 'guided by them' who are led astray — the passive counterpart to sense 2. Spanish 'los guiados por ellos' makes the passive agency explicit. This is the only clear passive-of-guidance occurrence, distinct from passive-of-blessing in sense 3. GOING AND LEADING en: and-those-guided-by-them | es: y-los-guiados-por-ellos | fr: [ומאשרין] | de: [ומאשרין] Isa 9:16

H0834 Pro-r (2×)

relative pronoun; 'who,' 'which,' 'that,' marking relative clauses

The primary relative pronoun in Biblical Hebrew, functioning to introduce relative clauses and link descriptive information to nouns. This grammatical particle appears thousands of times throughout the Hebrew Bible, serving as one of the most common function words in the language. Its usage here represents variant spellings or textual readings.

(2×) These two occurrences (2 Samuel 23:21; Ezekiel 9:11) represent the standard relative pronoun function, likely marked in the data due to variant spellings or Ketiv/Qere readings. The multilingual evidence shows this functioning as 'that/which/who' (que, qui, welcher), confirming its role as a relativizer linking clauses. The particle is so fundamental to Hebrew syntax that it serves as the standard way to create relative clauses, analogous to 'that/which/who' in English. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: (that), [k] | es: (que), [que] | fr: [k], qui | de: [k], welcher 2Sam 23:21; Ezek 9:11

אֲשֶׁר H0834a Conj-w (4953×)

Relative particle: who, which, that; also used as a substantive relative (what/that which), and occasionally as a causal or temporal conjunction.

Asher is the workhorse of Hebrew syntax, the particle that stitches clauses together and allows the language to point back, forward, and sideways. In its overwhelming majority of uses it functions as the all-purpose relative pronoun — 'who,' 'which,' 'that' — the particle English needs three words for but Hebrew handles with one. Its etymological roots likely trace to a substantive meaning 'place' (cf. Assyrian ashar, Aramaic atar), which explains its development: from 'the place where' to 'the one who' to a general-purpose clausal connector. Spanish que, French qui/lequel, and German dass/das all struggle to cover its range with a single word. At the margins, asher can shade into causal force ('because,' as in Ps 95:11) or temporal force ('when,' as in Ps 139:15), though these uses are vanishingly rare compared to its relentless relative-clause duty.

1. relative pronoun (who/which/that) (4839×) The core relative pronoun function, accounting for nearly 98% of all occurrences. Asher introduces a subordinate clause that modifies a definite antecedent: 'the firmament which God made' (Gen 1:7), 'all that he had done' (Gen 2:2), 'the tree of which I commanded you' (Gen 3:11). It serves for persons ('who'), things ('which'), and possessives ('whose') alike. The multilingual evidence neatly tracks this: Spanish el que/que, French lequel/qui, and German das/dass all deploy their standard relative pronouns, while Korean and Japanese use noun-modifying verb forms rather than a separate pronoun — highlighting that asher's relativizing function is a structural feature of Hebrew that other languages encode quite differently. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: which, who | es: el-que, que | fr: lequel, qui | de: das, das-, dass Gen 1:7; Gen 2:2; Gen 3:11; Gen 6:4; Gen 8:1

2. substantive relative (what/that which) (112×) Substantive or headless relative use — 'what,' 'that which,' 'whatever' — where asher has no explicit antecedent and itself fills the noun slot. In Gen 27:8 Rebekah commands Jacob 'do that which I command you'; in Gen 41:25 Joseph tells Pharaoh 'what God is about to do he has shown to Pharaoh.' Spanish lo que ('that which') and German welcher ('whichever') distinguish this from the headed relative in sense 1, confirming it as a genuine separate function. Found 112 times, often in legal and instructional discourse. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: that, that-, that-is | es: Que-, lo-que, para-que | fr: qui | de: welcher Gen 14:24; Gen 27:8; Gen 38:10; Gen 39:22; Gen 41:25

3. causal conjunction (because/therefore) (1×) Causal conjunction force — 'because, on account of which, therefore.' Only a single clear occurrence at Ps 95:11, where God swears in his anger concerning those who tested him: 'therefore I swore in my wrath.' Spanish por lo cual ('on account of which') and English 'therefore' both render the logical-causal connection. This represents an extreme extension of the relative into reason-giving territory, parallel to how English 'which is why' bridges relative and causal function. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: therefore | es: Por-lo-cual | fr: qui | de: welcher Ps 95:11

4. temporal conjunction (when) (1×) Temporal conjunction force — 'when.' The lone clear instance is Ps 139:15, describing the psalmist being formed in secret 'when I was made in the lowest parts of the earth.' Spanish cuando and English 'when' both capture the temporal framing. Like sense 3, this is a marginal but real extension of the relative particle into a domain where Hebrew more commonly uses ki or be + infinitive construct. The spatial etymology (cf. Assyrian ashar 'place') may have facilitated this temporal-locative crossover. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: when | es: cuando- | fr: qui | de: welcher Ps 139:15

בַּאֲשֶׁר H0834b Conj-w (19×)

Compound conjunction ba'asher: locative 'where, wherever'; causal 'because, inasmuch as'; relative 'in which, in what.'

Ba'asher combines the preposition be ('in') with the relative particle asher to create a versatile conjunction that shifts meaning according to context. Its most frequent use is locative — 'in the place where' or 'wherever' — as when Ruth pledges to Naomi, 'Where you go, I will go; where you lodge, I will lodge' (Ruth 1:16). Spanish en donde and German dort wo capture this spatial sense. But ba'asher also serves as a causal conjunction meaning 'because' or 'inasmuch as,' explaining why Potiphar's house prospered: 'because the LORD was with Joseph' (Gen 39:23). A third function introduces a relative clause — 'in which' or 'with respect to what' — as when Qoheleth asks 'What profit is there in that which he labors?' (Ecclesiastes 3:9). French dans lequel and German in welcher preserve this relative construction.

1. locative: where, wherever (9×) Locative conjunction meaning 'in the place where' or 'wherever,' introducing a spatial clause. This most frequent sense (9 occurrences) appears in Ruth's magnificent pledge of loyalty, 'wherever you go I will go, and wherever you lodge I will lodge' (Ruth 1:16), and in the narrative of the Levite wandering 'wherever he could find a place' (Judg 17:8-9). Spanish en donde/donde, French où, and German dort wo/wo all render the locative force. Genesis 21:17 uses it for Hagar's son 'where he is,' and Judges 5:27 in Deborah's song describes Sisera falling 'where he bowed down.' LOCATIVE INTERROGATIVES

en: and-where, in-wherever, in-which | es: En-donde, donde, en-donde | fr: dans-lequel, dans-wherever, et-où | de: [ובאשר], dort-wo, in-welcher Gen 21:17; Judg 5:27; Judg 17:8; Judg 17:9; Ruth 1:16

2. causal: because, inasmuch as (5×) Causal conjunction meaning 'because, inasmuch as, in that, on account of,' introducing a reason or ground for the preceding statement. With 5 occurrences, this sense explains why Joseph's master trusted him — 'because the LORD was with him' (Gen 39:9, 23) — and Jonah's sailors demand 'on whose account' the storm has come (Jonah 1:8). Spanish por cuanto/en que, French parce que, and German dadurch dass all shift to causal vocabulary. Ecclesiastes 7:2 and 8:4 use it to ground proverbial wisdom: mourning is better 'because that is the end of every person.' CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST

en: because, in-that, on-whose-account | es: en-lo-que, en-que, por-cuanto | fr: dans-ce, dans-qui, parce-que | de: dadurch-dass, in-welcher Gen 39:9; Gen 39:23; Ecclesiastes 7:2; Ecclesiastes 8:4; Jonah 1:8

3. relative: in which, in what (5×) Relative conjunction meaning 'in which, in what, with respect to which,' introducing a specification clause. Five occurrences cluster in Isaiah and Ecclesiastes: 'What profit has the worker in that in which he toils?' (Ecclesiastes 3:9), and God will judge Israel 'in the things in which they took no delight' (Isa 65:12; 66:4). French dans lequel and German in welcher preserve the prepositional relative construction. Isaiah 47:12 challenges Babylon to stand 'in that which' she has labored, and Isaiah 56:4 promises blessing to eunuchs who hold fast 'to what' pleases God. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: and-in-what, in-that-which, in-which | es: en-las-que, en-lo-que, y-en-lo-que | fr: [באשר], [ובאשר], dans-qui | de: [באשר], [ובאשר], in-welcher Ecclesiastes 3:9; Isa 47:12; Isa 56:4; Isa 65:12; Isa 66:4

מֵאֲשֶׁר H0834c Prep-m / Pro-r (17×)

Compound relative preposition: from which/whom/where; than (comparative); because/since (causal)

The Hebrew compound preposition me'asher joins the separative min ('from') with the relative particle 'asher to create a versatile grammatical tool. In most occurrences it marks source or origin — 'from the one who,' 'from the place where' — as when Jacob's wealth came 'from what' belonged to Laban (Gen 31:1). It also functions comparatively, meaning 'more than,' as in the striking notice that the forest devoured more than the sword consumed (2 Sam 18:8). In two instances it has grammaticalized fully into a causal conjunction meaning 'because' or 'since' (Isa 43:4), a trajectory paralleled by French parce que and German weil.

1. from which/whom/where (source-relative) (10×) The source-relative function: me'asher introduces a relative clause governed by the separative preposition min, yielding 'from which,' 'from whom,' or 'from the place where.' In Gen 31:1 the wealth Jacob gained 'from what belonged to our father' uses this construction, and in Exod 29:27 the priestly portions come 'from that which' was the ram of ordination. Spanish de lo que and French de lequel mirror the compound structure neatly. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: and-from-that, and-from-which, from-those-who | es: de-aquel-que, de-donde, de-lo-que | fr: [מאשר], de-lequel, de-où | de: [מאשר], und-von-dem-was, und-von-welcher Gen 31:1; Exod 5:11; Exod 29:27; Lev 14:30

2. than (comparative-relative) (5×) The comparative function: min carries its 'greater than' force through the relative clause, producing constructions like 'more than those who' or 'than that which.' The hailstones killed more than the sword (Josh 10:11); Samson slew more at his death than in his life (Judg 16:30). German als jene and Spanish mas que los que preserve the comparative particle plus relative pronoun pattern. Ecclesiastes 3:22 extends it philosophically. RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: more-than, than-that, than-those | es: más-de-lo-que, más-que, más-que-los-que | fr: de-qui, plus-que, que-ces | de: als-den, als-jene, als-wer Josh 10:11; Judg 16:30; 2Sam 18:8; 2Kgs 6:16; Eccl 3:22

3. because (causal conjunction) (2×) The causal-conjunction function: me'asher has grammaticalized into a subordinating conjunction meaning 'because' or 'since,' introducing a reason clause. In Isa 43:4 God declares 'since you are precious in my sight,' and in Num 6:11 the Nazirite offers a sacrifice 'because he sinned.' French parce que and German weil capture this logical subordination, showing how a spatial preposition can drift into causal territory across languages. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: Because, because | es: de-que, desde-que | fr: [מאשר], parce-que | de: [מאשר], weil Num 6:11; Isa 43:4

כַּאֲשֶׁר H0834d Prep / Pro-r (512×)

As, just as (comparative); when (temporal); because, since (causal); according to what; after

The compound conjunction ka'asher (literally 'as that which') is one of Hebrew's most versatile subordinators, built from the preposition ke ('as, like') and the relative particle asher. Its primary function is comparative — 'as God commanded Noah' (Gen 7:9) — but it readily slides into temporal territory ('when he had finished speaking,' Gen 18:33) and occasionally marks cause ('because they did not fear the LORD,' 2 Kgs 17:26). This functional range mirrors the well-known polysemy of 'as' in English and comme in French, both of which span comparison, time, and reason. Spanish distinguishes the senses more sharply: como for comparison, cuando for time, and porque for cause.

1. as, just as (comparative) (424×) Comparative: 'as,' 'just as,' 'like' — the dominant sense at roughly 83% of occurrences, establishing correspondence between two situations. The formulaic ka'asher tsivvah ('as [the LORD] commanded') recurs throughout the Pentateuch (Gen 7:9, 7:16, Exod 39:1). French comme and German wie render this uniformly, while Korean cheoreom distinguishes it from temporal uses. COMPARISON AND MANNER en: as, as-, as-which | es: como | fr: comme, comme-, comme-lequel | de: so-wie, wie, wie- Gen 7:9; Gen 7:16; Gen 8:21; Gen 12:4; Gen 17:23

2. when (temporal) (58×) Temporal: 'when,' 'at the time that' — introducing a time clause. Abram entered Egypt 'when' (ka'asher) he drew near (Gen 12:11), and the LORD departed 'when' he finished speaking (Gen 18:33). Spanish cuando and German als clearly mark this temporal reading, separating it from comparative como/wie. TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS

en: as, when | es: cuando, que | fr: comme, quand | de: als, als-, wenn Gen 12:11; Gen 18:33; Gen 20:13; Gen 24:22; Gen 24:52

3. and as, and just as (coordinated comparative) (21×) Coordinated comparative: 'and as,' 'and just as' — the comparative sense preceded by the conjunction waw. Functionally identical to sense 1 but within coordinated clauses like 'and as you have dealt kindly' (Gen 26:29). French et-comme and German und-wie reflect the conjunction-plus-comparison structure. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: [as], and-as, and-as- | es: Como, Como-cuando, Y-como | fr: comme-comme, comme-qui, et-comme | de: und-welcher, und-wie, und-wie- Gen 26:29; Exod 1:12; Num 14:19; Deut 29:13; Josh 10:39

4. and when (coordinated temporal) (3×) Coordinated temporal: 'and when' — the temporal sense preceded by waw. Only three occurrences, including 'and when Moses held up his hand' (Exod 17:11) and 'and when your servants ask' (Ezek 37:18). Spanish y-cuando and German und-als mark both the coordination and the temporality. TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS

en: and-when | es: Y-cuando, y-cuando, ¿y-cuando | fr: et-quand, et-qui | de: und-als, und-wann, und-welcher Exod 17:11; 2Sam 12:21; Ezek 37:18

5. because, since (causal) (3×) Causal: 'because,' 'since,' 'inasmuch as' — providing the reason for the main clause. In Josh 6:22 and 2 Kgs 17:26, ka'asher introduces the ground for an action. Spanish porque and German weil unambiguously signal causation, confirming this as a distinct sense rather than a comparative reading. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: because, that- | es: como, lo-que, porque | fr: ce-, parce-que | de: jenes-, weil Josh 6:22; Judg 6:27; 2Kgs 17:26

6. according to what (conformity) (2×) Conformity: 'according to what,' 'in accordance with' — expressing compliance with a standard or instruction. Jephthah's daughter says 'do to me according to what has gone out of your mouth' (Judg 11:36). Spanish conforme a lo que isolates this nuance of conformity from simple comparison. COMPARISON AND MANNER

en: according-to-what | es: como, conforme-a-lo-que | fr: selon-à-quoi | de: gemaess-zu-was Judg 11:36; 2Sam 15:26

7. after (temporal sequence) (1×) Temporal sequence: 'after' — marking that the main clause follows the subordinate event. Only one occurrence in Ps 51:1 (superscription: 'after he had gone in to Bathsheba'). Spanish cuando and German nach render the sequential meaning, distinguishing it from simultaneous temporal 'when.' TEMPORAL CONJUNCTIONS

en: after | es: cuando- | fr: comme-qui | de: nach Ps 51:1

אָשֵׁר H0835 Conj-w / Interjection (45×)

blessed! happy! — a beatitude formula pronouncing someone fortunate, always in the construct plural ashrey

Ashrey is one of the most recognizable words in the Hebrew Bible, the exclamatory formula that opens the Psalter ('Blessed is the man who walks not in the counsel of the wicked,' Ps 1:1) and structures the Beatitudes of the Old Testament. Always appearing in the construct plural — never as a simple noun — it functions as an interjection pronouncing someone genuinely fortunate or enviably happy. Its 45 occurrences cluster in Wisdom literature and the Psalms: 'Blessed is the one you choose and bring near' (Ps 65:4), 'Blessed is the nation whose God is the LORD' (Ps 33:12), 'Blessed is everyone who fears the LORD' (Ps 128:1). Proverbs applies it to wisdom: 'Blessed is the one who finds wisdom' (Prov 3:13). The German 'selig' and French 'heureux' each capture a slightly different facet — blessedness and happiness — while Spanish 'bienaventurado' fuses both ideas into one word.

blessed, happy, fortunate (45×) A beatitude interjection in the construct plural form, invariably sentence-initial, pronouncing a person or group genuinely fortunate or blessed on account of their relationship to God, their moral conduct, or their receipt of divine favor. Opens the Psalter (Ps 1:1) and recurs throughout the psalms and wisdom literature as a fixed formula: 'ashrey + the person who...' (Ps 32:1-2; 34:8; 84:5, 12; 112:1; 119:1-2; 128:1). Extended to nations (Ps 33:12; Deut 33:29) and to those who find wisdom (Prov 3:13; 8:34). All 45 occurrences share this exclamatory-declarative function, distinct from the verbal root 'ashar ('to go straight, advance'). BLESSING AND PRAISE en: blessed, blessed-, blessed-are | es: Bienaventurada, Bienaventurado, Bienaventurado- | fr: heureux | de: gluecklich, selig, selig- Deut 33:29; 1Kgs 10:8; 2Chr 9:7

אָשֵׁר H0836 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (43×)

Asher — Jacob's eighth son by Zilpah; the Israelite tribe settled in the fertile northwest coastal region

Asher means 'happy one' or 'blessed,' connected to the exclamation of Leah at his birth: 'Happy am I! For the daughters will call me blessed' (Gen 30:13). The name appears 43 times across patriarchal narratives, tribal census lists, territorial allotments, and prophetic catalogs. Jacob's blessing characterizes the tribe by agricultural abundance — 'his bread shall be rich, and he shall yield royal delicacies' (Gen 49:20) — fitting its allotment along the fertile Mediterranean coast from Carmel to Sidon (Josh 19:24-31). Moses' blessing echoes this (Deut 33:24-25). The name transliterates consistently: Spanish 'Aser,' French 'Aser,' German 'Ascher.'

Asher, Israelite tribe (43×) The name Asher ('happy one'), designating Jacob's eighth son by Zilpah (Gen 30:13) and the tribe occupying the fertile northwest coast from Carmel to Sidon (Josh 19:24-31). Jacob's blessing promises 'rich bread' and 'royal delicacies' (Gen 49:20). Also once a place east of Shechem (Josh 17:7). RELATIVE PRONOUNS

en: Asher | es: Aser, Asher | fr: Aser | de: Ascher, Aschers, Asser Gen 30:13; Gen 35:26; Gen 46:17; Gen 49:20; Exod 1:4

אָשֶׁר H0837 Prep-b / N-msc / 1cs (1×)

in my happiness (construct with pronominal suffix, Leah's joy over Asher's birth)

Leah's exclamation at Asher's birth expresses her delight in anticipated social validation: "Happy am I, for women will call me happy!" The phrase captures maternal triumph in the polygamous competition for Jacob's affection and the social status that many sons conferred. She names the child Asher, directly connecting his name to her expressed happiness.

(1×) Prepositional phrase with pronominal suffix expressing Leah's personal happiness in Genesis 30:13. The construct relationship links the abstract noun for happiness directly to Leah's experience at Asher's birth. Cross-linguistic renderings preserve the possessive relationship ("my happiness/dicha mía/mon"), emphasizing Leah's subjective emotional state and anticipated social reputation. JOY AND EXULTATION

en: in-happiness-my | es: en-dicha-mía | fr: dans-happiness-mon | de: in-meiner-Glückseligkeit Gen 30:13

אֲשׁוּר H0838a N-fpc / 3ms (7×)

Step, footstep, going; a poetic term for one's walk or course of life, always with possessive suffixes.

A feminine noun meaning 'step' or 'footstep,' used exclusively in poetry and wisdom literature to describe the path or manner of one's life. It always appears with pronominal suffixes — 'my steps,' 'his steps,' 'our steps' — never in the absolute form, giving it a deeply personal quality. Job declares his foot has held fast to God's steps (Job 23:11), the psalmist prays that his steps not slip (Ps 17:5), and the righteous man's steps do not falter because God's law is in his heart (Ps 37:31). The word connects physical walking with moral direction, making every footfall a statement of faithfulness or failure.

step, going, footstep (7×) A step or footstep understood figuratively as one's course of life or moral direction. The Spanish 'pasos' (steps) and English 'steps' converge on the physical-to-ethical metaphor, while the French rendering 'marche' (walk, gait) emphasizes the ongoing nature of the journey. Every occurrence is poetic and suffixed: 'my steps' (Ps 17:5; 40:2; 44:18; 73:2), 'his steps' (Job 23:11; Ps 37:31), reflecting the intimate, personal nature of one's walk before God. Proverbs 14:15 extends the usage to wisdom — the prudent person considers their steps carefully. The consistent figurative application makes this a key lexeme in the biblical vocabulary of moral direction. STEPS AND FOOTSTEPS

en: his-steps, in-his-step, my-steps | es: En-su-paso, el-paso-suyo, mis-pasos | fr: dans-son-אַשׁוּרוֹ-lui, heureux, marche | de: [באשרו], [לאשרו], mein-steps Job 23:11; Ps 17:5; Ps 37:31; Ps 40:2; Ps 44:18

אַשֶׁר H0838b N-fsc / 1cs (2×)

step, footstep; the act of walking or one's course of movement

A poetic term for steps or footsteps, used metaphorically for one's path or conduct in life. The word appears in wisdom and prayer contexts, where physical walking serves as an image for moral behavior and life direction. Both occurrences use possessive suffixes, personalizing the imagery of one's journey.

(2×) Job protests his integrity by asking if his 'step has turned from the way' (Job 31:7), using walking as a metaphor for moral conduct. The Psalmist prays concerning 'our steps' being tracked by enemies (Psalm 17:11). The imagery of steps/walking for life-conduct is common in Hebrew poetry. The multilingual evidence shows interesting variation: while English and Spanish render it literally as 'step/paso,' French substitutes 'bonheur' (happiness) in Job, possibly reading a different root, and German follows with 'gluecklich' (happy/blessed), perhaps influenced by the similar-sounding אַשְׁרֵי (blessed). STEPS AND FOOTSTEPS

en: my-step, our-steps | es: mi-paso, nuestros-pasos | fr: bonheur, mon-אַשְׁרִי-moi | de: gluecklich, unser-steps Job 31:7; Ps 17:11

אַשֻּׁרִים H0839 N-proper-mp (1×)

cypresses/Ashurim (wood type in Ezekiel's ship description, textual uncertainty)

Ezekiel's elaborate description of Tyre's merchant fleet mentions this material in constructing ship decks or components. Critical scholarship proposes emending the text to read "with boxwood" (te'ashshurim), as the context demands a wood type suitable for shipbuilding. The original reading remains obscure, possibly referring to cypresses or representing a place name Ashurim.

(1×) Problematic term in Ezekiel 27:6 within the extended metaphor of Tyre as a magnificent ship. Scholars widely propose textual emendation to a wood type (boxwood), though the received text appears to name either a people (Ashurim/Assyrians) or possibly a tree species. Spanish translates as "Assyrians," while German and French leave it untransliterated, reflecting interpretive uncertainty. PERSONAL NAMES

en: cypresses | es: asirios | fr: sycomore | de: [אשרים] Ezek 27:6

אַשַּׁרְאֵל H0840 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Asarel (personal name, descendant of Judah)

Among Judah's extensive genealogical records appears this name, whose etymology may involve the root for binding combined with the divine name El—"God has bound" or "whom God bound." Such theophoric names expressed parental devotion or commemorated circumstances of birth. The Chronicles preserve these names as part of tribal and family identity.

(1×) Personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 4:16 within Judah's genealogical records. The theophoric element (El) combined with a verbal root suggests divine action—possibly "God has bound" in the sense of votive dedication. Cross-linguistic renderings preserve the proper name through transliteration, with some texts showing orthographic uncertainty indicated by brackets. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Asar'el | es: y-Asarel | fr: [ואשראל] | de: [ואשראל] 1Chr 4:16

אַשַּׁרְאֵלָה H0841 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Asarelah (personal name, Levitical musician, son of Asaph)

This Levitical musician appears among Asaph's sons appointed for prophetic musical ministry in David's reorganized worship. The same individual may be called Jesarelah later in the chapter, representing variant spellings of identical names common in genealogical texts. These musicians cast lots for their service assignments in the temple liturgy.

(1×) Personal name of a temple musician in 1 Chronicles 25:2, son of Asaph and participant in organized liturgical music ministry. The potential identity with Jesarelah (v. 14) suggests variant orthographies for the same person. Cross-linguistic evidence shows transliteration of this proper name, with textual traditions acknowledging variant readings through brackets in some editions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Asarelah | es: y-Asarela | fr: [ואשראלה] | de: [ואשראלה] 1Chr 25:2

אֲשֵׁרָה H0842 Conj-w (40×)

Asherah — a Canaanite goddess, or the wooden cult pole/sacred tree erected in her honor at high places.

One of the most theologically charged nouns in the Hebrew Bible, referring either to the Canaanite goddess Asherah (consort of El, later associated with Baal worship) or to the wooden cult object — a pole or stylized tree — set up at shrines in her name. The reforming kings of Judah repeatedly cut down, burned, or ground these objects to powder (2 Kgs 23:4-6). Spanish distinguishes 'la Asera' (the object) from 'Asera' (the deity), and French similarly differentiates 'les Asheras' (plural cult objects) from 'Aschera' (the goddess name). The recurring prophetic command to destroy these poles (Deut 7:5; 12:3) shows how central this struggle was to Israel's identity.

1. Asherah pole/image (cult object) (31×) Split from sense 84838. Criteria: The physical wooden pole, carved image, or stylized tree erected at high places; appears with destruction verbs and in plural constructions (Exod 34:13; Deut 7:5; Judg 6:25-26)
en: and-Asherim, and-the-Asherim, and-their-Asherim | es: la-Asera, la-Asherah, las-Asherot | fr: et-Asherim, et-les-Ashéras, et-leur-Asherim | de: Aschera, der-Aschera, der-Asherah Exod 34:13; Deut 7:5; Deut 12:3; Judg 3:7; Judg 6:25

2. Asherah (goddess) (8×) The Canaanite goddess herself, consort of El and rival to YHWH worship — referenced where the name denotes the deity rather than her artifact. Deut 16:21 prohibits planting an Asherah 'beside the altar of the LORD,' where the personal name governs the prohibition. In 1 Kgs 15:13, Maacah is removed as queen mother for making a 'horrible image for Asherah' — here the goddess is the object of devotion. The Assyrian cognate Aširatu (with determinative for deity) supports reading these as genuine theophoric references. GODS AND DEITIES en: Asherah, an-Asherah, and-for-the-Asherah | es: Asera, para-Asherah, para-la-Asera | fr: Aschéra, Asherah, Ashéra | de: Aschera, Asherah, ein-Asherah Deut 16:21; 1Kgs 15:13; 2Kgs 17:16; 2Kgs 21:3; 2Kgs 23:4

3. Asherah the goddess (deity) (1×) Split from sense 84838. Criteria: References to the Canaanite goddess herself as a divine being, typically in contexts mentioning worship or divine names en: the-Asherah | es: la-Asera | fr: le-Aschéra | de: der-Asherah 1Kgs 18:19

אָשֵׁרִי H0843 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Asherite (collective designation for members of Asher's tribe)
This gentilics identifies members of Asher's tribe in the Judges narrative describing incomplete Canaanite conquest. Rather than driving out coastal inhabitants, the Asherites lived among the Canaanites—a reversal indicating the indigenous population remained dominant. This failure to secure territorial inheritance led to ongoing cultural and religious compromise.

(1×) Gentilic noun denoting Asher's tribal members in Judges 1:32, within the catalog of incomplete tribal conquests. The passage notes that Asherites dwelt among Canaanites rather than displacing them, indicating failure to secure full territorial control. Cross-linguistic renderings appropriately use collective singular or plural forms to represent the tribal group. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Asheri | es: el-asheri | fr: le-Asheri | de: der-Asheri Judg 1:32

אַשְׁרִיאֵל H0844 N-proper-ms (3×)

Asriel, a Manassite clan name; possibly meaning 'vow of God'
A Manassite clan name appearing in census and territorial lists. The name may mean 'vow of God,' combining divine and votive elements. The clan of Asriel received a portion in the land allotment west of the Jordan. Like many tribal names, Asriel could refer both to a person (the clan ancestor) and to the family group descended from him. The name appears consistently across Hebrew, Spanish, and French texts with minimal variation.

(3×) A Manassite family or clan counted in the wilderness census (Numbers 26:31), receiving territorial inheritance in western Manasseh (Joshua 17:2), and listed in Chronicles genealogies (1 Chronicles 7:14). The name functions primarily as a clan designation rather than as an individual's biography, typical of tribal census materials. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Asriel, and-Asriel | es: Asriel, Y-Asriel | fr: Asriel, [אשריאל], et-Asriel | de: Asriel, [אשריאל], und-Asriel Num 26:31; Josh 17:2; 1Chr 7:14

אַשְׁרִאֵלִי H0845 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Asrielite (collective designation for descendants of Asriel in Manasseh)
This clan designation identifies descendants of Asriel within Manasseh's tribe, enumerated in the wilderness census. Asriel was Gilead's son, making the Asrielites a significant family group within the Gileadite branch of Manasseh that settled east of the Jordan. Such clan identifications facilitated land distribution and military organization.

(1×) Gentilic noun denoting the Asrielite clan in Numbers 26:31, part of the census of Manasseh's tribal divisions. The genealogical framework traces this family through Gilead, situating them in the Transjordan settlement. Spanish appropriately pluralizes ("los asrielitas"), representing the collective clan descended from the eponymous ancestor Asriel. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Asrielite | es: los-asrielitas | fr: le-Asrielite | de: der-Asrielite Num 26:31

אַשְׁרְנָא H0846 Conj-w / N-msd (2×)

wall, structure; building component, possibly wall or sanctuary element
An Aramaic architectural term appearing in Ezra's account of the temple rebuilding, used alongside 'house' to describe construction work. The exact meaning remains debated—most suggest 'wall,' though some scholars propose 'sanctuary' based on Akkadian cognates. The Persian-era context and parallel with 'house' suggest a major structural element of the temple reconstruction.

(2×) In Ezra 5, Persian officials question the Jews: 'Who gave you permission to build this house and complete this structure?' (vv. 3, 9). The term pairs with 'house' (בַּיְתָא), suggesting either walls as distinct from the building proper, or perhaps the temple's sacred inner structures. Translations vary: most render 'wall' (Spanish 'muro'), while others transliterate, acknowledging uncertainty. The Masoretic pointing suggests a connection to earlier Hebrew אֲשֶׁרָה, but the exact architectural referent remains elusive. The Aramaic context and Akkadian parallels point to substantial structural elements of the Second Temple construction. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-structure | es: y-muro | fr: [ואשרנא] | de: [ואשרנא] Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:9

אֶשְׁתָּאוֹל H0847 Conj-w (7×)

Eshtaol; a town in the Shephelah allotted to Dan, closely associated with Zorah and the story of Samson.
A proper noun identifying the town of Eshtaol, located in the Shephelah (lowland foothills) of Judah and allotted to the tribe of Dan. It is almost always mentioned alongside Zorah, its sister settlement, forming a recognizable pair in the biblical text. Eshtaol figures prominently in the Samson narrative — the Spirit of the Lord began to stir him between Zorah and Eshtaol (Judg 13:25), and he was buried in his father's tomb between the two towns (Judg 16:31). It also served as the staging ground for the Danite migration northward (Judg 18:2, 8, 11). The name may derive from an Arabic form of the verb 'to ask.'

Eshtaol (place name) (7×) The proper name of a town in the Shephelah region, consistently paired with Zorah in both the allotment lists and the Danite narratives. Multilingual evidence is remarkably uniform — English 'Eshtaol,' Spanish 'Estaol,' French 'Eschtaol,' and German 'Eshtaol' all transliterate the same toponym with minor phonetic adaptation. The town appears in the tribal allotment of Judah (Josh 15:33) and Dan (Josh 19:41), then figures in the Samson cycle as the place where the Spirit first moved him (Judg 13:25) and where he was buried (Judg 16:31). The Danite spies departed from Eshtaol on their mission north (Judg 18:2, 8, 11). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Eshtaol, and-Eshtaol, and-from-Eshtaol | es: Estaol, y-Estaol, y-de-Estaol | fr: Eschtaol, et-Eschtaol, et-de-Eschtaol | de: Eshtaol, und-Eshtaol, und-von-Eshtaol Josh 15:33; Josh 19:41; Judg 13:25; Judg 16:31; Judg 18:2

אֶשְׁתָּאֻלִי H0848 Conj-w (1×)

the Eshtaulites (collective designation for inhabitants of Eshtaol, Danite/Judahite border town)

This gentilics identifies the population of Eshtaol, a settlement on the border between Judah and Dan. The town features prominently in the Samson narratives as part of his home region. The Chronicles preserve these clan and town affiliations as part of Judah's internal organization, showing how family groups associated with specific settlements.

(1×) Gentilic noun denoting the people of Eshtaol in 1 Chronicles 2:53, listed among the families descended from Kiriath-jearim through Judah. The town's dual association with Judah and Dan reflects complex tribal boundary situations. Spanish renders this as plural ("los estaolitas"), appropriately capturing the collective nature of this settlement-based family designation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: and-the-Eshta'uli | es: y-los-estaolitas | fr: [והאשתאלי] | de: [והאשתאלי] 1Chr 2:53

אֶשְׁתְּדוּר H0849 Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

sedition, revolt; rebellious uprising against authority

An Aramaic term for political rebellion or sedition, used in the hostile letters sent to Persian authorities accusing Jerusalem of having a history of revolt. The word appears in Persian-period correspondence attempting to halt the rebuilding of Jerusalem by portraying the city as a persistent threat to imperial stability.

(2×) The accusers write to King Artaxerxes claiming that investigation of historical records will reveal 'rebellion and sedition' have been carried out in Jerusalem (Ezra 4:15, 19). The term is part of a threefold accusation—'rebellion, sedition, and insurrection'—designed to alarm Persian authorities about Jerusalem's restoration. This Aramaic vocabulary of political resistance appears in official correspondence, reflecting the administrative language of the Persian Empire. The multilingual glosses render it as 'sedition' (English/Spanish 'sedición') or preserve the transliteration, recognizing its technical administrative-legal meaning. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 8365 WITH 3 SENSES

en: and-sedition | es: y-sedición | fr: [ואשתדור] | de: [ואשתדור] Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:19

אֶשְׁתּוֹן H0850 N-proper-ms (2×)

Eshton; personal name in Judah's genealogy

A personal name in the genealogies of Judah, appearing in the lineage of Chelub. The etymology may relate to a root meaning 'effeminate' or 'uxorious' (devoted to one's wife), though this remains speculative. The name appears only in the detailed genealogical records preserved in 1 Chronicles.

(2×) Eshton appears twice in rapid succession in 1 Chronicles 4:11-12 as part of Judah's descendant list, identified as related to Chelub and as the father of Beth-rapha, Paseah, and Tehinnah. Ancient translations simply transliterate the name (Eston, Eshton), treating it as an opaque personal designation. The genealogical context provides no additional information about this individual beyond his placement in Judah's family tree, and the suggested etymology from אִשָּׁה (wife) remains uncertain. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Eshton, and-Eshton | es: Eston, Y-Eston | fr: [אשתון], [ואשתון] | de: [אשתון], [ואשתון] 1Chr 4:11; 1Chr 4:12

אֶשְׁתְּמוֹעַ H0851 N-proper-ms (6×)

Eshtemoa, a Levitical city in the hill country of Judah south of Hebron, also a personal name in Chronicles.

A proper noun with two referents. Primarily it names a Levitical city in the southern hill country of Judah, identified with modern es-Samu' south of Hebron. It appears in the town lists of Joshua (15:50; 21:14) and as a destination to which David sent spoil after defeating the Amalekites (1 Sam 30:28). In Chronicles it also appears as a personal name – a man of Judah (1 Chr 4:17, 19). The alternate form Eshtemoh (Josh 15:50) and the standard Eshtemoa represent the same location. Spanish 'Estemoa' and English 'Eshtemoa' both transliterate the Hebrew with minor variation.

Eshtemoa (proper noun: place name) (6×) The proper noun Eshtemoa, primarily a Levitical city assigned to the priests from the tribe of Judah, located in the hill country south of Hebron (modern es-Samu'). Listed among Judah's towns (Josh 15:50, as 'Eshtemoh'), designated a Levitical city (Josh 21:14; 1 Chr 6:42), and named as a recipient of David's victory spoils (1 Sam 30:28). In 1 Chr 4:17, 19 the same name appears as a descendant of Judah, possibly reflecting the eponymous ancestor of the city's inhabitants. Spanish 'Estemoa' and English 'Eshtemoa' represent consistent transliteration across traditions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Eshtemoa, and-Eshtemoa, and-Eshtemoh | es: Estemoa, en-Estemoa, y-Estemoa | fr: Eshtemoa, [אשתמע], [ואשתמע] | de: Eshtemoa, [אשתמע], [ואשתמע] Josh 15:50; Josh 21:14; 1Sam 30:28; 1Chr 4:17; 1Chr 4:19

אוֹל H0852 N-mpc / 3ms (3×)

signs, wonders, or omens (Aramaic); miraculous indicators of divine action

An Aramaic word for signs or wonders, appearing exclusively in Daniel's Aramaic sections. Nebuchadnezzar and Darius speak of the signs and wonders that the Most High God performs. The term overlaps semantically with Hebrew 'ot but appears in contexts of royal proclamation, where pagan kings acknowledge God's miraculous interventions. The multilingual evidence (Spanish señales, French signs) confirms the basic meaning of visible indicators or supernatural demonstrations.

(3×) Miraculous signs or wonders performed by God, testified to by Gentile kings. Nebuchadnezzar declares 'how great are His signs!' (Daniel 4:2-3), and Darius proclaims that God 'works signs and wonders' (Daniel 6:27). The Aramaic term appears in royal edicts acknowledging divine power, suggesting public, undeniable manifestations that compel even pagan rulers to recognize Israel's God. SIGNS AND BANNERS

en: His-signs, signs, the-signs | es: las-señales, señales, sus-señales | fr: [אתוהי], [אתיא], [אתין] | de: [אתוהי], [אתיא], [אתין] Dan 4:2; Dan 4:3; Dan 6:27

אֵת H0853 Conj-w / Pro (10977×)

Direct object marker for definite nouns; also a homographic preposition meaning 'with, beside, near'

One of the most frequent words in the Hebrew Bible, appearing nearly 11,000 times. In the vast majority of cases it serves as the untranslatable sign of the definite direct object — the particle that tells you 'this noun is receiving the action.' It appears in the very first verse of Scripture: God created 'et the heavens and 'et the earth (Gen 1:1). A homographic but etymologically distinct preposition 'et means 'with, beside' and appears about 62 times, as in Psalm 2:11 'serve the LORD with fear.' Most translations simply absorb the object marker into word order, while Spanish occasionally renders it with 'a' (the personal 'a').

1. definite direct object marker (10915×) The definite direct object marker, prefixed to nouns that are determined (by article, construct, proper name, or suffix). Untranslatable in most target languages — English, French, and German leave it unmarked, while Spanish sometimes uses the accusative preposition 'a.' Its sheer frequency (10,915x) reflects how pervasive transitive verb constructions are in biblical Hebrew narrative and law. Gen 1:1 ('et the heavens and 'et the earth) and Gen 1:28 ('et the fish, 'et the birds) illustrate its role framing the created order. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: - | es: (obj), *, *- | fr: - | de: - Gen 1:1; Gen 1:28; Gen 3:18; Gen 4:20; Gen 5:22

2. with, beside (preposition) (62×) A preposition meaning 'with, beside, in the company of,' homographic with but functionally distinct from the object marker. German glosses reveal the distinction clearly: 'mit-(Akk)' versus bare '(Akk).' Found 62 times in contexts of accompaniment or proximity, as in Num 5:19 ('if no man has lain with you') and Ps 31:7 (the LORD's faithfulness 'with' the psalmist). The Moabite cognate similarly distinguishes the two functions. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: -, [obj], to | es: -, a, a- | fr: (*) | de: (Akk), -(Akk)-, mit-(Akk) Num 5:19; 2Chr 18:23; Ps 2:11; Ps 3:7; Ps 31:7

אֵת H0854 Prep / DirObjM (890×)

With, together with (accompaniment); from with (ablative source with min-); also functions as the direct object marker in certain textual traditions.

The preposition et (with long tsere, distinct from the homographic direct object marker et with seghol) is Hebrew's primary word for 'with' in the sense of accompaniment — being together with someone, walking with God, dwelling with one's family. It appears in some of the Bible's most intimate theological statements: God 'was with Joseph' (Gen 39:2), 'I am with you' (Gen 26:24), and the promise of Immanuel, 'God with us.' When prefixed with min, it shifts to ablative source meaning 'from the presence of' — blessings rain down 'from with the LORD' (Gen 19:24), and a person departs 'from with' a king. A fascinating textual wrinkle is that in certain later biblical books (especially Joshua through Kings, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel), the suffixed forms of this preposition overlap orthographically with the direct object marker, creating a persistent parsing challenge that translators across languages have navigated differently.

1. with (accompaniment) (665×) Comitative: 'with,' indicating accompaniment, association, or togetherness — the dominant sense at 665 occurrences. Noah entered the ark 'with his sons' (Gen 7:7); God remembered Noah and all the animals 'with him' (Gen 8:1); God established his covenant 'with Noah' (Gen 9:8). Arabic ma'a and Korean 함께 (hamkke, 'together with') are the standard equivalents, while Spanish con and German mit serve as exact functional parallels. This is the relational backbone of the preposition: proximity, partnership, divine presence. ACCOMPANIMENT AND WITH

en: were-with-him, with-him | es: con-él | fr: avec-lui, étaient-avec-lui | de: bei-ihm-war, mit-ihm, mit-ihm-waren Gen 7:7; Gen 7:23; Gen 8:1; Gen 8:18; Gen 9:8

2. from with (ablative source) (165×) Ablative source with min-prefix: 'from with,' 'from the presence of' — 165 occurrences where me'et indicates origin or departure from someone's vicinity or authority. 'The LORD rained brimstone from with the LORD out of heaven' (Gen 19:24); Esau went out 'from the presence of' Isaac (Gen 27:30); slaves purchased 'from with' foreigners (Gen 17:27). Arabic min 'inda ('from at/with') and French de-avec ('from-with') both preserve the compound spatial logic. Korean -에게서 (-egeseo, 'from a person') similarly marks the personal-source frame. This sense is morphologically transparent but semantically distinct from simple accompaniment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from, from-, from-with | es: de, de-, de-con | fr: de, de-, de-avec | de: von, von-, von-mit Gen 17:27; Gen 19:24; Gen 23:20; Gen 25:10; Gen 27:30

3. direct object marker (50×) Direct object marker (orthographic overlap): grammatical particle marking the definite direct object — 50 occurrences where the suffixed forms of et-accompaniment have merged orthographically with the direct object marker et. This is especially common in later biblical prose: 'pitch it within and without' (Gen 6:14); 'the place where he had stood before the LORD' (Gen 19:27). Spanish and French typically leave this untranslated (using word order for object marking), while German and Korean use case markers. The overlap is a real feature of the textual tradition, not a scribal error, and is concentrated in Joshua-Kings, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel as BDB notes. DISCOURSE PARTICLES

en: -, [dir.obj.], [is]-with- | es: (marca-de-objeto), -, a- | fr: (), - | de: (*), - Gen 6:14; Gen 19:13; Gen 19:27; Gen 23:8; Gen 31:25

4. near, beside (proximity) (8×) Spatial proximity: 'near, beside, at the place of' — 8 occurrences where et indicates physical nearness rather than active companiment. Rebekah's garments were 'with her' in the house (Gen 27:15, i.e., in her possession nearby); Moses is told 'there is a place beside me' (Exod 33:21); the creditor is not to exact payment from the one 'who is near you' (Deut 15:3). Arabic 'inda ('at, near, in the possession of') and German bei ('near, at, with') both select proximity-locative vocabulary here, distinct from the mobile companionship of sense 1. The boundary is subtle but consistently marked: static location rather than shared movement. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -, at-, is-by- | es: (marca-de-objeto), a, a- | fr: -, avec-moi, avec-sa | de: -, bei-, bei-ihr-waren Gen 27:15; Exod 33:21; Deut 11:2; Deut 15:3; Judg 3:19

5. (2×) Adversarial or contrastive 'with' (against): a marginal sense appearing in Gen 14:9 where the kings wage war 'with' (i.e., against) other kings — 'Chedorlaomer... with Tidal... with Amraphel... with Arioch: four kings against five.' Spanish Con and German gegen- ('against') both surface here. The adversarial nuance arises from context rather than from a separate lexical meaning, but the passage's military register and the pairing of opposing coalitions push et toward 'allied with' or 'against' rather than simple accompaniment. Only 2 occurrences, both in the same battle narrative. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: with | es: Con, [part.obj.] | fr: avec | de: gegen- Gen 14:9

אֵת H0855 N-msc / 3ms (6×)

A cutting tool of iron — plowshare or mattock — the iconic instrument in the swords-to-plowshares prophecy.

An agricultural cutting implement made of iron, variously rendered 'plowshare' or 'mattock.' Its most famous appearances are in Isaiah 2:4 and Micah 4:3, where the nations beat their swords into plowshares — one of Scripture's most enduring images of eschatological peace. Joel 3:10 dramatically reverses the image: 'beat your plowshares into swords.' In 1 Samuel 13:20-21, the Philistine monopoly on iron-working forced Israelites to go to the Philistines to sharpen their mattocks, illustrating early Iron Age power dynamics. One occurrence (2 Kgs 6:5) is likely a misattributed direct object marker rather than this noun.

1. plowshare, mattock (5×) A cutting instrument of iron used in agriculture, identified as a plowshare or mattock. The prophetic vision of Isa 2:4 and Mic 4:3 — beating swords into plowshares (אִתִּים) — makes this word a symbol of peace among nations, while Joel 3:10 inverts the image for war. In 1 Sam 13:20-21, the word appears in its mundane agricultural context: Israelites had to sharpen their mattocks at Philistine forges. Spanish 'arados' (plowshares) and English 'plowshares/mattock' consistently reflect the agricultural-tool identification. SHARPENING IMPLEMENTS

en: and-for-the-mattocks, his-mattock, into-plowshares | es: arados-de-vosotros, azadón-de-él, en-arados | fr: [לְאִתִּים], bêche, et-pour-le-mattocks | de: [אִתֵּיכֶם], [לְאִתִּים], sein-mattock 1Sam 13:20; 1Sam 13:21; Isa 2:4; Joel 3:10; Mic 4:3

2. direct object marker (misattributed) (1×) A likely tagging error at 2 Kgs 6:5, where the form וְאֵת appears to be the common Hebrew direct object marker (אֵת) rather than the agricultural noun. The glosses across all languages — English 'and,' Spanish 'y,' German 'und,' French 'et' — uniformly treat it as a conjunction or particle, confirming it does not belong to this lexeme. This occurrence should probably be reassigned to the particle אֵת (H0853). ADDITIVE PARTICLES

en: and- | es: y-el | fr: et- | de: und- 2Kgs 6:5

אִתְּבַעַל H0856 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ethbaal (personal name meaning "with Baal," king of Sidon, Jezebel's father)

This Phoenician king of Sidon gave his daughter Jezebel in marriage to Israel's King Ahab, an alliance that profoundly corrupted Israel's worship. The theophoric name "with Baal" or "Baal is with him" reflects the centrality of Baal worship in Phoenician royal ideology. Josephus confirms this ruler in his history of Phoenician kings.

(1×) Personal name of the Sidonian king in 1 Kings 16:31, whose daughter Jezebel married Ahab and introduced aggressive Baal worship into Israel. The name's Baal theophoric element highlights the religious conflict this marriage precipitated. Classical sources (Josephus) attest to Ethbaal as historical ruler of Tyre/Sidon, confirming the biblical reference to actual Near Eastern political realities. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Etbaal | es: Etbaal | fr: Etbaal | de: Etbaal 1Kgs 16:31

אָתָה H0857 V-Qal-Perf-1cp (21×)

To come, arrive (poetic synonym of bo'); as participle: things to come, future events; Hifil: to bring.

The Hebrew verb atah is the poet's and prophet's word for 'come' — a dignified synonym of the far more common bo' (H0935), reserved almost exclusively for elevated speech. It appears in Moses' blessing ('The LORD came from Sinai,' Deut 33:2), in Job's anguished confessions ('the thing I greatly feared has come upon me,' Job 3:25), and in prophetic challenges to idols. Its feminine plural participle otiyyot becomes a technical term for 'things to come' in Isaiah's trial speeches against false gods: 'Declare the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know you are gods' (Isa 41:23; cf. 44:7; 45:11). Spanish venir and French venir render the basic sense naturally, while the Hifil causative 'to bring' appears only twice — bringing water to the thirsty (Isa 21:14) and gathering beasts to devour (Jer 12:9). The poetic register of atah lends solemnity wherever it occurs.

1. to come, arrive (16×) To come or arrive — the basic Qal sense expressing movement toward a place or person, used almost exclusively in poetry and elevated prose. With 16 occurrences, this covers theophany ('The LORD came from Sinai,' Deut 33:2), personal experience ('the thing I feared has come upon me,' Job 3:25), and prophetic summons ('Come, let us return to the LORD,' Jer 3:22; Isa 21:12). Spanish venir/venid, French venir, and German kommen render this straightforwardly. The poetic restriction is notable: where prose uses bo', poetry reaches for atah, lending gravity to arrivals both divine and human (Ps 68:31; Isa 41:25; 56:12). GOING AND LEADING en: and-came, and-come, and-he-has-come | es: Vendrán, Venid, Viene | fr: et-venir, et-venir-moi, et-vint | de: [וַיֹּאתִינִי], [יֹאתָהּ], [יֹאתִין] Deut 33:2; Deut 33:21; Job 3:25; Job 16:22; Job 30:14

2. things to come, future events (3×) Things to come, future events — the Qal feminine plural participle otiyyot used substantivally in prophetic speech to denote what lies ahead. With 3 occurrences, all in Isaiah's polemic against idols, this specialized sense challenges false gods to predict the future: 'Tell us the things to come hereafter' (Isa 41:23), 'Who declared it from the beginning, that we might know, and beforehand, that we might say He is right?' (Isa 44:7; 45:11). Spanish las cosas venideras and French les choses a venir both employ participial future vocabulary, mirroring the Hebrew participle's substantivized force. This is prophetic vocabulary par excellence — the ability to declare otiyyot is the test of true divinity. GOING AND LEADING

en: and-the-things-coming, concerning-the-things-coming, what-is-to-come | es: las-cosas-venideras, las-señales, y-las-cosas-venideras | fr: et-venir, venir | de: kommen, und-kommen Isa 41:23; Isa 44:7; Isa 45:11

3. to bring (2×) To bring — the Hifil causative, meaning to cause someone or something to come to a place. Only 2 occurrences: bringing water to meet the thirsty fugitive (Isa 21:14) and gathering every beast of the field to come and devour (Jer 12:9). Spanish traed and French apporter shift to dedicated 'bring' vocabulary, confirming the causative semantics. This rare sense completes the root's profile: intransitive 'come' in the Qal, predictive 'things coming' as a participle, and transitive 'bring' in the Hifil. GOING AND LEADING en: bring, bring-them | es: traed, vengan | fr: venir | de: kommen Isa 21:14; Jer 12:9

אֲתָה H0858 V-Hofal-Perf-3mp (16×)

To come or arrive; in the causative, to bring someone or something; Aramaic verb used in Ezra and Daniel.

Atha is the standard Aramaic verb for motion toward a destination, the everyday equivalent of Hebrew bo. In Ezra and Daniel it covers the full spectrum of arrival and delivery. Officials 'come' to investigate the rebuilt temple (Ezra 5:3), dignitaries are summoned to 'come' to Nebuchadnezzar's dedication (Dan 3:2), and the enigmatic 'one like a son of man' comes with the clouds of heaven (Dan 7:13). The Haphel (causative) form shifts the action: Belshazzar orders the temple vessels 'brought' to his feast (Dan 5:2-3), and Daniel is 'brought' before the king (Dan 5:13). The Hophal passive completes the picture – a stone is 'brought' and laid over the lions' den (Dan 6:17).

1. come, arrive (7×) To come or arrive at a place – the basic Peal (Qal) sense of motion toward a goal. Used of officials arriving to question the builders (Ezra 5:3), of dignitaries summoned to a royal dedication (Dan 3:2, 26), and most memorably of the son of man 'coming with the clouds of heaven' (Dan 7:13). Spanish 'vinieron/viniendo' and French 'venir' confirm the straightforward arrival sense. Seven occurrences anchor the word's core meaning. GOING AND LEADING en: and-come, came, coming | es: para-que-vinieran, viniendo, vinieron | fr: et-avec-lui, tu, venir | de: [אתא], du, ihn Ezra 4:12; Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:16; Dan 3:2; Dan 3:26

2. bring (7×) To bring or fetch – the Haphel (causative) sense, where the subject causes someone or something to come. Belshazzar commands that the gold vessels be brought from the Jerusalem temple (Dan 5:2-3), and Daniel is brought before the king from exile (Dan 5:13). Spanish 'trajeron/trajo' and French 'venir' (in causative context) track this transitive extension. Seven occurrences make this exactly as frequent as the intransitive sense. GOING AND LEADING en: and-they-brought, brought, they-brought | es: que-trajeran, trajeron, trajo | fr: et-venir, venir | de: kommen, und-kommen Dan 3:13; Dan 5:2; Dan 5:3; Dan 5:13; Dan 5:23

3. be brought (2×) To be brought – the Hophal (causative passive), indicating the subject is conveyed or delivered without acting. Daniel is 'brought' and cast into the lions' den (Dan 6:17), and a stone is placed over the opening. Spanish 'fueron-traidos' and 'fue-traida' capture the passive voice clearly. Only two occurrences carry this form, but both appear at moments of high narrative drama. GOING AND LEADING en: and-was-brought, were-brought | es: fueron-traídos, y-fue-traída | fr: et-venir, venir | de: kommen, und-kommen Dan 3:13; Dan 6:17

H0859 Conj-w / Pro-2fs (1×)

and you (second-person feminine singular pronoun, addressing personified Judah/Jerusalem)

Jeremiah addresses personified Jerusalem in vivid second-person feminine language, confronting the city's futile attempts at self-beautification while facing impending conquest. The rhetorical question "What are you doing?" introduces the prophet's devastating observation that cosmetic adornment will not prevent Judah's lovers (foreign allies) from despising and seeking her life.

(1×) Second-person feminine pronoun with conjunction in Jeremiah 4:30, within the prophet's address to doomed Jerusalem. The feminine form personifies the city as a desperate woman adorning herself to attract lovers who actually despise her. This grammatical choice enables Jeremiah's extended metaphor equating political alliances with prostitution and the city's vulnerability with feminine sexual exploitation. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: and-you | es: Y-tú | fr: [(ואת)] | de: [(ואת)] Jer 4:30

אַתָּה H0859a Conj-w / Pro-2ms (743×)

you — second person masculine singular independent pronoun for direct address

Attah is the independent second person masculine singular pronoun, used for emphasis, contrast, or direct address throughout the Hebrew Bible. Appearing 743 times, it can stand alone as the subject ('you shall surely die,' Gen 2:17) or reinforce a verbal suffix for emphasis ('inquire thou,' 1 Sam 17:56). It frequently marks a shift in address — from narration to confrontation, as in God's words to the serpent ('you are cursed,' Gen 3:14) or David's confession scenes. The multilingual renderings — English 'you,' Spanish 'tu,' French 'tu,' German 'du' — uniformly reflect this single pronominal function.

you (2nd person masculine singular pronoun) (743×) The free-standing second person masculine singular pronoun, employed either as an independent subject or as an emphatic reinforcement of a pronominal suffix. Covers all 743 occurrences including conjunctive forms (we-attah, 'and you'). Used in divine address (Gen 3:14), covenant formulas (Gen 6:18), and prophetic confrontation — always denoting the same grammatical person without semantic subdivision. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: you, you-are | es: tú | fr: tu, tu-sont | de: bist-du, du Gen 3:11; Gen 3:14; Gen 3:19; Gen 4:11; Gen 6:18

אַתְּי H0859b Pro-2ms (13×)

You (second person singular pronoun, archaic/dialectal feminine form preserved in ketiv readings).

An archaic or dialectal variant of the second person singular pronoun, preserved in the ketiv (written) text at several places where the qere (read) tradition directs the standard form. It appears in passages such as Judges 17:2, 1 Kings 14:2, and 2 Kings 4:16, 23 and 8:1. The Masoretes note that the final yod may not have been fully sounded, much as in Syriac. French and German translations often simply render 'tu' or 'du,' while Spanish qere/ketiv annotations ('Qeré,' 'kethiv') highlight the textual variant itself.

you (2nd person feminine singular pronoun, ketiv variant) (13×) The second person singular pronoun in an older orthographic form ending in yod, attested in ketiv readings at Judges 17:2, 1 Kings 14:2, 2 Kings 4:16, 23, 8:1, Jeremiah 4:30, and Ezekiel 36:13. The Masoretes consistently direct the standard form to be read aloud instead, suggesting this spelling reflects a dialectal or archaic pronunciation akin to the Syriac cognate. Functionally identical to the standard pronoun—it simply means 'you.' SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: [and-you], [ketiv], [you] | es: (Qeré), (eres-tú)„ (kethiv) | fr: [[את]], [and-you], [et-tu] | de: (*), [[את]], [[את]] Judg 17:2; 1Sam 24:18; 1Kgs 14:2; 2Kgs 4:16

אַתְּ H0859c Pro-2fs (59×)

You (fem. sg.) — second person feminine singular independent pronoun, addressing an individual woman.

Att is the feminine singular form of the second-person independent pronoun in Hebrew, the counterpart to masculine attah. It appears in some of the Bible's most memorable direct addresses to women: God's announcement to Sarah regarding Isaac's birth (Gen 17:16 context), Rebekah's family declaring 'You are our sister' (Gen 24:60), and Boaz's tender address to Ruth. The form occasionally appears with masculine referents in three passages (Num 11:15; Deut 5:24; Ezek 28:14), likely reflecting Aramaic influence where the genders merged, though many manuscripts read attah in these cases. Orthographic variants between ketiv and qere do not affect the meaning. Every target language renders it with the standard second-person singular pronoun — Spanish tu, French tu, German du — without gender distinction in most cases.

you (fem. sg.) (59×) The second person feminine singular independent pronoun 'you,' used to address a female individual directly. Appears in pivotal addresses to women throughout the Hebrew Bible (Gen 12:11, 13; 24:23, 60; Ruth 3:11). Three passages (Num 11:15; Deut 5:24; Ezek 28:14) employ it with masculine referents, likely reflecting Aramaic convergence of gender in this pronoun. All target languages render it with their standard second-person singular form — Spanish tu, French tu, German du — since most lack grammatical gender in pronouns. SECOND PERSON PRONOUNS

en: are-you, you, you-are | es: Tú, tú | fr: (), sont-tu, tu | de: (), [את], bist-du Gen 12:11; Gen 12:13; Gen 24:23; Gen 24:47; Gen 24:60

אַתֶּם H0859d Pro-2mp (283×)

You (second person masculine plural independent pronoun)

The independent second person masculine plural pronoun in Hebrew, used to address groups directly. With 283 occurrences, it appears throughout the Hebrew Bible wherever a speaker emphatically addresses a male or mixed audience. Joseph confronts his brothers with it (Gen 42:9, 16), and it recurs prominently in legal and prophetic discourse. The pronoun sometimes appears after a verb for emphasis (Judg 15:12) and is even construed with feminine referents in Ezekiel 13:20, reflecting late biblical flexibility. Translations uniformly render it with the local second person plural form.

you (2nd person masculine plural pronoun) (283×) The standalone second person masculine plural pronoun, employed for direct emphatic address to a group. Appears in narrative confrontation (Gen 42:9, 14), legal stipulation, and prophetic oracle. Occasionally placed after the verb for rhetorical emphasis (Judg 15:12). Languages with T-V distinction (French vous, German ihr) uniformly select the plural form, confirming its exclusively plural reference. SECOND PERSON PLURAL

en: you, you-are | es: vosotros | fr: tu, tu-sont | de: du, ihr, ihr-seid Gen 29:4; Gen 42:9; Gen 42:14; Gen 42:16; Gen 42:19

אַתֶּן H0859e Conj-w / Pro-2fp (5×)

Second person feminine plural pronoun 'you' (fem.), addressing a group of women or feminized entities.

The second person feminine plural pronoun 'you,' used when addressing multiple female subjects. In Genesis 31:6 Jacob addresses his two wives Leah and Rachel, reminding them that they know how he has served their father. Ezekiel employs the form extensively: in 13:11 and 13:20 God addresses the false prophetesses, and in 34:17 and 34:31 the flock of God is addressed with feminine grammar, as the Hebrew word for sheep (ṣōʾn) is grammatically feminine. The Spanish 'vosotras' nicely preserves the gender distinction lost in modern English 'you.'

(5×) The second person feminine plural independent pronoun (ʾattēnâ / ʾattēn), used to address a group of grammatically feminine referents. In Genesis 31:6 it addresses Leah and Rachel directly. In Ezekiel 13:11, 20 it targets false prophetesses, while Ezekiel 34:17, 31 addresses God's flock using feminine grammar matching ṣōʾn ('flock'). The Spanish rendering 'vosotras' preserves the gendered plural distinction, whereas English and German collapse it into unmarked 'you.' The French glosses show some translator uncertainty, reflecting the challenge of mapping Hebrew gendered pronouns into languages with different pronominal systems. SECOND PERSON PLURAL

en: and-you, you | es: Y-vosotras, vosotras, y-vosotras | fr: et-je-donnerai, et-toi, et-tu | de: [ואתנה], [ואתן], [ואתנה] Gen 31:6; Ezek 13:11; Ezek 13:20; Ezek 34:17; Ezek 34:31

אָתוֹן H0860 Art / N-fp (34×)

She-donkey, female ass; a domesticated animal used for riding, transport, and as a measure of wealth

The specifically female donkey, distinguished from the masculine חֲמוֹר. She-donkeys appear throughout the patriarchal narratives as markers of wealth — Abraham's possessions include them (Gen 12:16), and Job's prosperity is counted partly in five hundred she-donkeys (Job 1:3; 42:12). Most memorably, Balaam's she-donkey sees the angel of the LORD and speaks (Num 22:21–33), one of Scripture's most extraordinary moments. Zechariah 9:9 prophesies the messianic king riding on 'a donkey, the foal of a she-donkey,' linking this humble beast to royal hope. Spanish 'asna' and French 'âne femelle' preserve the gender distinction carefully.

female donkey (34×) A female donkey (she-ass), the domesticated animal valued for riding, burden-bearing, and breeding. Prominent in Balaam's narrative where the she-donkey sees the angel and speaks (Num 22:21–33), in patriarchal wealth inventories (Gen 12:16; 32:15; Job 1:3; 42:12), and in the messianic prophecy of Zechariah 9:9 where the king comes on the foal of a she-donkey. The gender-specific term contrasts with חֲמוֹר (male donkey); multilingual glosses (Spanish 'asna,' German 'Eselinnen') consistently mark the feminine. DONKEYS AND FOALS

en: female-donkeys, the-donkey, the-donkeys | es: asnas, la-asna, las-asnas | fr: femelle-ânes, le-âne, le-ânes | de: Eselinnen, [אתונות], der-Esel Gen 12:16; Gen 32:15; Gen 45:23; Gen 49:11; Num 22:21

אַתּוּן H0861 Prep-l / N-msd (10×)
Furnace (Aramaic) — the blazing kiln or smelting furnace, used of the fiery furnace in Daniel 3
The Aramaic noun אַתּוּן (attun) designates a large furnace or kiln heated to extreme temperatures. All ten occurrences appear in Daniel 3, where Nebuchadnezzar orders Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego thrown into a furnace of blazing fire for refusing to worship his golden image. The furnace is heated 'seven times more than usual' (Dan 3:19), so hot it kills the soldiers who throw the three in (Dan 3:22). Yet Nebuchadnezzar sees four figures walking unharmed in the flames (Dan 3:25). The word cognates with Hebrew אָתוֹן (oven/furnace) and Akkadian utūnu. Spanish 'horno' and French 'fournaise' both capture the industrial-scale heat implied.

furnace (fire chamber) (10×) A large furnace or kiln capable of producing intense heat, used exclusively in Daniel 3's narrative of the three Jewish exiles' ordeal. The furnace (אַתּוּן דִּי נוּרָא יָקִדְתָּא, 'furnace of blazing fire') functions as Nebuchadnezzar's instrument of execution for those who defy his idolatrous decree (Dan 3:6, 11, 15, 17, 20-21, 23, 26). The miraculous deliverance — four figures walking unscathed amid the flames — transforms the furnace from a symbol of tyrannical power to a witness of divine sovereignty. Spanish 'horno ardiente' and German 'Feuerofen' convey the terrifying scale.
GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-the-furnace, furnace-of, furnace-of- | es: al-horno-de, el-horno, el-horno-de | fr: et-fournaise, fournaise | de: Ofen, und-Ofen Dan 3:6; Dan 3:11; Dan 3:15; Dan 3:17; Dan 3:19

אתוק H0862a Conj-w / N-mpc / 3fs (1×)
galleries/porches (architectural features in Ezekiel's temple vision, ketiv form) Ezekiel's detailed temple vision includes these architectural features, though textual variants complicate identification. The ketiv reading suggests galleries or porches, while the qere proposes chambers or side rooms. These structures appear in the measuring of the temple's outer court, part of the prophet's elaborate vision of Israel's restored worship.

(1×) Architectural term in Ezekiel 41:15 (ketiv form) denoting structural features—possibly galleries, porches, or colonnaded spaces within the temple complex. The qere variant and scholarly proposals indicate textual uncertainty about the precise architectural element. The temple vision's meticulous measurements aimed to convey divine order and holiness restored to Israel's worship space after exile.
PORTICO PILLAR STAIRS
en: [ketiv] | es: [kethiv] | fr: et-galerie | de: [ואתוקיהא] Ezek 41:15

אַתִּיק H0862b Conj-w / N-mpc / 3fs (5×)
Gallery or terrace; an architectural feature of Ezekiel's visionary temple, a covered walkway or recessed ledge.
A masculine noun referring to galleries or terraces in the visionary temple of Ezekiel 40–42. These architectural elements appear to be covered walkways, recessed ledges, or tiered balconies running along the temple's outer structure. All five occurrences cluster in Ezekiel 41:15–16 and 42:3–5, where they describe the three-storied chambers flanking the temple proper. The term is notoriously difficult—translators across languages render it as 'galleries' (eng, spa 'galería') or simply transliterate—but the context suggests elevated, receding platforms that gave the upper stories progressively less floor space.

(5×) An architectural term (ʾattîq) denoting galleries, terraces, or recessed ledges in Ezekiel's visionary temple complex. In Ezekiel 42:3 the galleries face one another across a courtyard, while 42:5 notes that the upper chambers were narrower because the galleries consumed space. Ezekiel 41:15–16 describes the galleries in relation to the temple's inner measurements. The consistent multilingual rendering as 'galleries' (eng 'galleries,' spa 'galerías,' fra 'galerie') suggests an elevated walkway or tiered balcony structure, though the precise architectural referent remains debated among scholars.
PORTICO PILLAR STAIRS
en: and-its-galleries, and-the-galleries, galleries | es: galería, galerías, y-las-galerías | fr: et-galerie, galerie | de: [אתיק], [אתיקים], [ואתיקיהא] Ezek 41:15; Ezek 41:16; Ezek 42:3; Ezek 42:5

אִתַּי H0863 N-proper-ms (9×)
Ittai, a proper name borne by two of David's men: a Gittite commander and a Benjamite warrior.
The name Ittai (possibly meaning 'companionable,' from אֵת 'with') is borne by two figures in David's circle. The more prominent is Ittai the Gittite, a foreign soldier from Gath who displayed remarkable loyalty during Absalom's revolt, insisting on following David into exile (2 Sam 15:19-22) and later commanding a third of the army at the decisive battle (2 Sam 18:2, 5, 12). The second Ittai is a Benjamite among David's thirty mighty men (2 Sam 23:29; cf. 1 Chr 11:31). Translations uniformly preserve the name: 'Itai' in Spanish, 'Ittai' in English and French.

Ittai (9×) Ittai — a proper name (perhaps meaning 'with me' or 'companionable') designating two men associated with David. The primary bearer is Ittai the Gittite, a Philistine from Gath who pledged unwavering loyalty to David during Absalom's rebellion (2 Sam 15:19-22) and was entrusted with commanding a third of David's forces (2 Sam 18:2). The second is Ittai son of Ribai from Gibeah of Benjamin, one of David's thirty warriors (2 Sam 23:29). Multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration with minor variation: English 'Ittai', Spanish 'Itai/Itay', German 'Ittai'.
PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Ittai | es: Itai, Itay | fr: Ittai, [איתי] | de: Ittai, [איתי] 2Sam 15:19; 2Sam 15:21; 2Sam 15:22; 2Sam 18:2

אֵתָם H0864 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (4×)
Etham — a place on the edge of the wilderness where Israel camped after leaving Egypt
A stopping point on Israel's exodus route, situated at the border between the cultivated land of Egypt and the open desert. Etham appears in the itinerary of Numbers 33 and in the narrative of Exodus 13:20, marking the transition from settled territory into the wilderness. The associated 'wilderness of Etham' (Num 33:8) became a defining landmark for the early stages of the desert wandering. The name may derive from an Egyptian word for 'fort' or 'enclosure,' fitting its frontier location.

(4×) The proper noun designating a campsite on the edge of the Egyptian wilderness. All four occurrences cluster in the exodus itinerary (Exod 13:20; Num 33:6–8), with multilingual renderings uniformly transliterating the name — English 'Etham,' Spanish 'Etam,' French 'Etham' — confirming a single referent: the liminal settlement where Israel encamped before turning toward the sea.
GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Etham, at-Etham, from-Etham | es: Etam, de-Etam, en-Etam | fr: Etham, dans-Etham, de-Etham | de: Etham, bei-Etam, in-Etham Exod 13:20; Num 33:6; Num 33:7; Num 33:8

תְּמוֹל H0865 Adv (8×)
Yesterday; formerly, in time past — a temporal adverb for recent past or habitual prior state.
A temporal adverb meaning 'yesterday' in its literal sense, but frequently extending to 'formerly' or 'in time past.' It appears most memorably in the recurring idiom temol shilshom ('yesterday and the day before'), a Hebrew way of saying 'previously' or 'as before' (e.g., 1 Sam 4:7; 2 Sam 5:2). The multilingual translations confirm this dual range: German gestern and Spanish ayer stay close to 'yesterday,' while French autrefois ('formerly') and English 'in time past' reflect the broader retrospective usage. In prophetic contexts like Isaiah 30:33 and Micah 2:8, it carries the force of recent, vivid memory.

yesterday, formerly, in time past (8×) Denotes 'yesterday' literally or 'formerly / in time past' more broadly. The phrase temol shilshom ('yesterday and three days ago') functions as an idiom for 'previously, as in the past' — appearing in narratives about Saul (1 Sam 10:11; 14:21) and David (2 Sam 5:2). Spanish ayer and German gestern preserve the concrete 'yesterday' meaning, while French autrefois captures the extended temporal sense. All eight occurrences fall within narrative or prophetic retrospection. YESTERDAY PREVIOUSLY

en: and-yesterday, as-yesterday, from-yesterday | es: Y-ayer, ayer, como-ayer | fr: [מאתמול], autrefois, comme-hier | de: [ואתמול], [מאתמול], gestern 1Sam 4:7; 1Sam 10:11; 1Sam 14:21; 1Sam 19:7; 2Sam 5:2

אֶתְנָה H0866 N-fs (1×)

hire of harlotry (payment received for sexual services, metaphor for Israel's idolatry)

Hosea employs this term in his extended metaphor of Israel as unfaithful wife, describing her misattribution of agricultural blessings as payments from Baal-lovers. The prophet will strip away these "wages" she thought came from false gods, revealing that Yahweh alone provided her sustenance. The metaphor equates covenant infidelity with prostitution for hire.

(1×) Term denoting a harlot's wages in Hosea 2:12, used metaphorically for Israel's relationship with Baal. The prophet depicts Israel attributing her agricultural prosperity to Baal as payment for cultic prostitution, when actually Yahweh gave these gifts. The rare feminine form (versus the more common ethnah) may reflect poetic variation in Hosea's sustained adultery metaphor. WAGES AND REWARD

en: wages | es: Paga | fr: salaire | de: [אתנה] Hos 2:12

אֶתְנִי H0867 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ethni (personal name, Levitical ancestor of Asaph)

This name appears in the genealogical lineage of Asaph, one of David's chief musicians. The Chronicles preserve multiple genealogical lists for Levitical families, sometimes with variant spellings reflecting different sources or traditions. The same individual may appear as Jeaterai in another verse, demonstrating common orthographic flexibility in genealogical transmission.

(1×) Personal name of a Levite in 1 Chronicles 6:41, listed in Asaph's ancestral line. The probable identity with Jeatherai (v. 6:21) illustrates typical genealogical variant spellings. Cross-linguistic renderings preserve the transliterated proper name, with some editions using brackets to indicate textual transmission uncertainties common in genealogical lists. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Etni | es: Etni | fr: [אתני] | de: [אתני] 1Chr 6:41

אֶתְנַן H0868 N-mpc / 3fs (11×)

Harlot's hire, prostitute's wages — payment given for sexual services, used literally and as a metaphor for Israel's idolatrous earnings

The noun אֶתְנַן (etnan) specifically denotes the fee paid to a prostitute, carrying both literal and powerful metaphorical force. Deuteronomy 23:18 prohibits bringing 'the hire of a prostitute or the price of a dog' into the house of the LORD as a votive offering. Ezekiel's extended allegory of Jerusalem as an unfaithful wife inverts the convention: she is worse than an ordinary harlot because she pays her lovers rather than receiving payment (Ezek 16:31-34, 41). Isaiah prophesies that Tyre's commercial profits will be 'harlot's hire' consecrated to the LORD (Isa 23:17-18). Micah declares Samaria's idols were assembled from harlot's wages and shall return to harlot's wages (Mic 1:7). Spanish 'paga de prostituta' and French 'salaire de prostituée' preserve the commercial-sexual specificity.

harlot's hire, prostitute's wages (11×) The payment or fee given to a prostitute for sexual services, used both literally and as a prophetic metaphor for the revenues of spiritual adultery and idolatry. Deuteronomy 23:18 bans it from the temple treasury alongside 'the price of a dog.' Ezekiel's allegory of Jerusalem reverses the convention — she gives hire rather than receiving it, making her worse than a common harlot (Ezek 16:31-34, 41). Isaiah applies it to Tyre's mercantile wealth, prophesying its eventual consecration to the LORD (Isa 23:17-18). Micah uses it for Samaria's idol wealth (Mic 1:7). Spanish 'paga de ramera' and English 'harlot's hire' both capture the intersection of commerce and sexual transgression. WAGES AND REWARD

en: and-her-wages, and-hire, from-hire-of | es: a-su-paga-de-ramera, de-salario-de, paga | fr: [ואתננה], [לאתננה], et-promesse | de: [אתנן], [אתנניה], [ואתנן] Deut 23:18; Isa 23:17; Isa 23:18; Ezek 16:31; Ezek 16:34

אֶתְנָן H0869 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ethnan (personal name, descendant of Judah)

This personal name appears in Judah's tribal genealogy, part of the extensive family records preserved in Chronicles. The name may be confused in some textual traditions with the common noun for harlot's hire due to orthographic similarity, though context clearly indicates a proper name. Such genealogies maintained tribal identity and land inheritance claims.

(1×) Personal name appearing in 1 Chronicles 4:7 within Judah's genealogical records. The similarity to the noun meaning "harlot's hire" is purely coincidental, as context firmly establishes this as a proper personal name. Cross-linguistic evidence shows transliteration preserving the name, with brackets in some editions indicating textual or orthographic uncertainties in manuscript traditions. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Ethnan | es: y-Etnan | fr: [ואתנן] | de: [ואתנן] 1Chr 4:7

אֶתַּר H0870 Conj-w / Prep / 2ms (8×)

Aramaic noun 'place, site' and prepositional use 'after, following'; used in Daniel and Ezra for temple locale and temporal sequence.

An Aramaic noun meaning 'place' or 'site,' used in the books of Daniel and Ezra to designate a physical location, especially the site of the Jerusalem temple (Ezra 5:15; 6:3, 5, 7). In a secondary development shared with Syriac batar and Targumic usage, the word takes on prepositional force meaning 'after' or 'following,' as in Daniel 7:6-7 where successive kingdoms arise 'after this.' The Arabic cognate ithr ('footstep, trace') illuminates how a spatial root shifts to temporal sequence: one follows 'in the track of' what came before.

1. place, location (Aramaic noun) (5×) Denotes a physical place or site, functioning as a standard Aramaic noun. In Ezra, it consistently refers to the location of the temple: 'let the house of God be built on its place' (Ezra 5:15; 6:7). Spanish lugar and English 'place' converge uniformly across all five occurrences. The cognate Syriac atar and Nabataean/Palmyrene usage confirm a common Aramaic spatial noun, parallel to Hebrew asher in its earliest locative sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: its-place, place, the-place | es: a-su-lugar, el-lugar, lugar | fr: [אתר], [אתרה], [לאתרה] | de: [אתר], [אתרה], [לאתרה] Ezra 5:15; Ezra 6:3; Ezra 6:5; Ezra 6:7; Dan 2:35

2. after, behind (Aramaic preposition) (3×) Functions as a temporal preposition meaning 'after' or 'following,' derived from the locative noun via the idiom ba-atar ('in the track of'). Daniel 2:39 uses the suffixed form u-vathrakh ('and after you') to introduce the next kingdom, while Daniel 7:6-7 employs ba-atar denah ('after this') for apocalyptic succession. Spanish después de and French après confirm the purely temporal reading, sharply distinguished from the spatial sense. AFTER TEMPORAL

en: after, and-after-you | es: Después-de, Y-después-de-ti | fr: après, et-après | de: [באתר], [ובתרך] Dan 2:39; Dan 7:6; Dan 7:7

אֲתָרִים H0871 Art / N-proper-fs (1×)

the Atharim (caravan route or place name in the Negev, possibly meaning "spies' route")

This enigmatic phrase appears in Israel's wilderness wanderings when the Canaanite king of Arad attacked them coming by "the way of the Atharim." Ancient versions diverge significantly—Septuagint preserves the place name while Targum interprets it as "way of the spies," connecting to earlier reconnaissance missions. The term may denote a known caravan route through the Negev.

(1×) Designation of uncertain meaning in Numbers 21:1, either a place name, caravan route designation, or interpretive gloss meaning "spies' route." The Arabic cognate suggests traces or footprints, supporting the caravan-route interpretation. Targum's "way of the spies" connects to Numbers 13's reconnaissance, though this requires unlikely consonantal changes. Cross-linguistic renderings preserve the proper name while acknowledging interpretive difficulties. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-Atharim | es: los-Atarim | fr: le-Atharim | de: der-Atharim Num 21:1

בְּאָה H0872 Prep-b (1×)

entrance, entry (to the temple)

This rare term denotes an entrance or entryway, appearing only in Ezekiel's temple vision where the prophet sees an image at "the entrance" that provokes divine jealousy. The prepositional form suggests a specific architectural feature of the temple complex. Translations render it variously as "at the entrance" or "in the entry," emphasizing the spatial location where idolatrous imagery had been placed.

(1×) Refers to the physical entrance or gateway to the Jerusalem temple in Ezekiel 8:5. The context is liturgical-architectural: the prophet sees an offensive image positioned at this entry point. The multilingual evidence (Spanish "en-la-entrada," French "dans-elle-est-venue") confirms the locational sense, though the single occurrence makes semantic boundaries uncertain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-the-entrance | es: en-la-entrada | fr: dans-elle-est-venue | de: [בבאה] Ezek 8:5

בְּאִישׁ H0873 Conj-w / Adj-fsd (1×)

bad, rebellious (Aramaic adjective describing Jerusalem)

An Aramaic adjective meaning "bad" or "evil," used in Ezra's account of opposition to Jerusalem's rebuilding. The word appears in an accusatory letter to the Persian king describing Jerusalem as a "rebellious and bad city" with a history of sedition. Related to the Syriac and Targumic forms for "bad," it carries moral and political connotations of troublemaking and defiance.

(1×) Describes Jerusalem as morally and politically "bad" in the context of Persian-era accusations (Ezra 4:12). The term pairs with "rebellious" to paint the city as a source of trouble. Textual uncertainty exists (the ketiv reading), but the sense of moral-political badness is consistent across cognates in Aramaic dialects. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: [ketiv] | es: [y-mala] | fr: [ובאישתא] | de: [[ובאישתא]] Ezra 4:12

בֵּאֵר H0874 Conj-w / V-Piel-Imp-ms (3×)

make clear, explain, or write plainly (Piel); make distinct so as to be easily understood

A verb in the intensive (Piel) stem meaning to make something clear or plain. Moses explains the law clearly (Deuteronomy 1:5). Inscriptions must be written plainly on stones—either so clearly that one can read while running past, or so one can read swiftly (Habakkuk 2:2). The law on plastered stones must be written 'very plainly' (Deuteronomy 27:8). The emphasis is on clarity and accessibility of written communication, particularly legal and prophetic texts.

(3×) To clarify or explain in writing; to make text distinct and legible. Moses 'explained' (be'er) the law in Moab (Deuteronomy 1:5). The law must be inscribed on stones 'making clear well' (Deuteronomy 27:8). Habakkuk is commanded to write the vision and 'make it plain' on tablets so a reader can run (Habakkuk 2:2). The focus is pedagogical and communicative—ensuring the message is accessible. BOLDNESS AND OPENNESS en: and-make-it-plain, to-explain, well | es: a-explicar, claramente, y-hazla-clara | fr: et-expliquer, puits, à-explain | de: Brunnen, [ובאר], zu-explain Deut 1:5; Deut 27:8; Hab 2:2

בְּאֵר H0875 N-fsc / 2ms (37×)

A well dug for water; figuratively, a pit of destruction or moral danger.

Wells are landmarks of covenant and encounter throughout the Hebrew Bible. Abraham disputes over wells at Beersheba (Gen 21:25-30), Isaac re-digs his father's wells and names them after the conflicts they provoke (Gen 26:18-22), and Moses meets his future wife at a well in Midian (Exod 2:15-16). The word denotes a shaft intentionally dug to reach underground water, distinguishing it from a natural spring. In two poetic passages, the same image of depth and enclosure turns ominous: the 'pit of destruction' in Psalm 55:23 and the 'deep pit' of the adulteress in Proverbs 23:27, where the well becomes a trap from which there is no climbing out.

1. well, cistern (dug water source) (35×) A shaft dug into the ground to access water (or, in Gen 14:10, bitumen). This is the patriarchal well of encounter and contention: Abraham at Beersheba (Gen 21:25-30), Isaac at Rehoboth (Gen 26:22), Jacob at Haran (Gen 29:2-3). Spanish 'pozo,' French 'puits,' and German 'Brunnen' all consistently translate the literal water-well. Numbers 21:17-18 preserves an ancient 'Song of the Well,' and Proverbs 5:15 uses 'your own well' as a metaphor for marital faithfulness — still literal in form, figurative in application. WELL PIT CISTERN en: a-well-of, the-well, well | es: Pozo, el-pozo, pozo | fr: le-bien, le-puits, puits | de: Brunnen, dem-Brunnen, den-Brunnen Gen 14:10; Gen 16:14; Gen 21:19; Gen 21:25

2. pit (of destruction or moral danger) (2×) A pit envisioned as a trap or place of destruction, extending the literal sense of depth and enclosure into metaphor. In Psalm 55:23, God will cast the wicked into 'the pit of destruction' (be'er shakhat), and Proverbs 23:27 warns that an adulteress is 'a deep pit.' Spanish 'pozo-de' and German 'Grube-von' shift toward 'pit' rather than 'well,' reflecting the ominous connotation. The image depends on the literal sense — a well is inescapably deep — but the referent is Sheol or moral ruin rather than water. WELL PIT CISTERN

en: and-a-well, to-pit-of | es: a-pozo-de, y-pozo | fr: et-puits, à-puits | de: [ובאר], zu-Grube-von Ps 55:23; Prov 23:27

בְּאֵר H0876 N-proper-fs / 3fs (2×)

Beer; place name meaning 'well'

A geographical name meaning simply 'well,' designating locations marked by water sources. The common noun for well (בְּאֵר) became a place name at multiple sites in ancient Israel, understandably given the vital importance of water sources in the arid climate. Both biblical occurrences mark significant locations in Israel's wilderness journeys and early settlement.

(2×) Two distinct locations bear this name: one where Israel stopped and sang the well-song during wilderness wanderings (Numbers 21:16), and another where Jotham fled after pronouncing his parable against Abimelech (Judges 9:21). The transparent meaning 'well' made this a natural place name, and multilingual glosses simply transliterate it as a proper name (Beer). The Numbers passage includes the famous song, 'Spring up, O well!' suggesting this Beer was particularly associated with water discovery. Multiple sites may have shared this descriptive name, much like modern towns named 'Springs' or 'Wells.' AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9079 WITH 4 SENSES

en: Beer, to-Beer | es: Beer, a-Beer | fr: Beer, à-Beer | de: Beer, zu-Beer Num 21:16; Judg 9:21

בְּאֹר H0877 Prep-m / N-msc (4×)

A cistern, pit, or well — a hewn water reservoir, often contrasted with living springs

Refers to a dug-out water storage cavity, whether a cistern, pit, or well. The word appears memorably in Jeremiah 2:13 where God contrasts himself as a fountain of living water with the 'broken cisterns' Israel has hewn for itself. In 2 Samuel 23:15–16 it designates the well of Bethlehem from which David's warriors drew water. The form is a variant of the more common beer/bor, and the multilingual glosses — Spanish 'cisternas/pozo,' French 'puits' — confirm the water-containment sense throughout.

(4×) A hewn cistern, pit, or well used for water storage. In 2 Samuel 23:15–16 the word denotes the well of Bethlehem beside the gate, while in Jeremiah 2:13 it appears as 'broken cisterns' in a devastating metaphor for Israel's forsaking of the living God. Spanish 'cisternas' and 'pozo' reflect the same concrete water-holding sense across all attestations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: cisterns, from-well-of | es: cisternas, del-pozo-de | fr: [בארות], [בארת], de-bien-de | de: [בארות], [בארת], von-gut-von 2Sam 23:15; 2Sam 23:16; Jer 2:13

בְּאֵרָא H0878 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Beera (personal name, man of Asher)

A personal name appearing in the genealogies of Asher, one of Israel's twelve tribes. The name appears only in Chronicles' genealogical lists, preserving the memory of an individual from Asher's lineage. The form is consistently transliterated across languages (Spanish "Beera," French and German retain the Hebrew), suggesting minimal semantic content beyond the proper name itself.

(1×) Identifies a specific individual in the tribal genealogy of Asher recorded in 1 Chronicles 7:37. The name functions purely as a personal identifier with no additional narrative or theological significance. The uniform transliteration across translation traditions indicates recognition of its proper-name status. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9079 WITH 4 SENSES

en: and-Beera | es: y-Beera | fr: [ובאראא] | de: [ובאראא] 1Chr 7:37

בְּאֵר H0879 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Beer-Elim (place name, 'well of the mighty ones')

A place name meaning "well of the mighty ones" or "well of the leaders," mentioned in Isaiah's oracle against Moab. The name combines the common Hebrew word for "well" (beer) with a term for powerful figures or leaders. Located in Moabite territory, it appears in a passage describing widespread lamentation. The geographic reference helps locate the extent of Moab's distress during judgment.

(1×) Designates a specific location in Moab mentioned in Isaiah 15:8 during an oracle of judgment. The crying reaches "to Beer-Elim," marking the geographical extent of the calamity. The compound name (well + mighty ones) suggests either a well owned by leaders or a well of great importance, typical of ancient Near Eastern naming conventions for water sources. WELL PIT CISTERN en: and-Beer-Elim | es: y-Beer-Elim | fr: [ובאר אילים] | de: [ובאר אילים] Isa 15:8

בְּאֵרָה H0880 N-proper-ms (1×)

Beerah (personal name, a Reubenite)

A personal name from the tribe of Reuben, appearing in the Chronicles genealogy. This individual is identified as a Reubenite in the tribal records preserved by the Chronicler. The name, related to the word for "well" (beer), was common in ancient Israel. Across languages the name is simply transliterated, indicating its recognition as a proper noun with no independent semantic content.

(1×) Identifies a specific member of the tribe of Reuben mentioned in 1 Chronicles 5:6. The genealogical context provides tribal affiliation but no narrative details about this individual's life or significance. The name's etymology may relate to "well" but functions purely as a personal identifier in this context. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9079 WITH 4 SENSES en: Be'erah | es: Beera | fr: [באראה] | de: [באראה] 1Chr 5:6

בְּאֵרוֹת H0881 N-proper-fs (5×)

Beeroth, a Gibeonite city allotted to Benjamin, meaning 'wells' and associated with the Hivite league.

A place name meaning 'wells,' identifying one of the four Gibeonite cities that secured a covenant with Israel by deception (Josh 9:17). Located in the territory of Benjamin (Josh 18:25), Beeroth is most memorably connected with Rechab and Baanah, the assassins of Ish-bosheth, who are identified as Beerothites in 2 Samuel 4:2. The city's inhabitants later appear in the post-exilic census lists of Ezra 2:25 and Nehemiah 7:29, attesting to the community's continuity after the Babylonian exile.

(5×) The proper place name Beeroth (bĕʾērôt, 'wells'), a city of the Gibeonite-Hivite confederation allotted to the tribe of Benjamin. Joshua 9:17 lists it among the four Gibeonite cities that tricked Israel into a peace treaty. Joshua 18:25 places it in Benjamin's tribal allotment. In 2 Samuel 4:2 it is noted as the hometown of Rechab and Baanah. The post-exilic returns in Ezra 2:25 and Nehemiah 7:29 show its residents among those who came back from Babylon. Multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate it (eng 'Beeroth,' spa 'Beerot,' fra 'Beeroth'), preserving its Semitic etymology related to wells or cisterns. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beeroth, and-Beerot, and-Beeroth | es: Beerot, y-Beerot | fr: Beeroth, [ובארות], et-Beerot | de: Beeroth, [ובארות], und-Beerot Josh 9:17; Josh 18:25; 2Sam 4:2; Ezra 2:25; Neh 7:29

בְּאֵרִי H0882 N-proper-ms (2×)

Beeri; personal name meaning 'my well'

A personal name meaning 'my well,' borne by two individuals in Scripture: a Hittite who became Esau's father-in-law, and Hosea's father. The possessive form suggests either a theophoric meaning (Yahweh as 'my well/source') or simply a name derived from association with a well.

(2×) Two men bear this name: first, Beeri the Hittite, whose daughter Judith married Esau, causing 'grief of mind' to Isaac and Rebekah (Genesis 26:34); second, Beeri the father of the prophet Hosea (Hosea 1:1). The name's meaning 'my well' could reflect gratitude for water sources or, more likely, metaphorical use where God is viewed as one's source or well of life. The multilingual glosses simply transliterate (Beeri, Bééri), treating it as an opaque proper name. Notably, one Beeri was Hittite (non-Israelite), while the other fathered a major prophet, showing the name crossed ethnic boundaries. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Beeri | es: Beeri | fr: Beeri, Bééri | de: Beeris, [באר] Gen 26:34; Hos 1:1

בְּאֵר לַחַי רֹאִי H0883 N-proper-fs (3×)

Beer-lahai-roi, a well name meaning 'well of the Living One who sees me'; site of Hagar's encounter

A place name commemorating Hagar's encounter with the Angel of the Lord. The name means 'well of the Living One who sees me,' explained in Genesis 16:14 by Hagar's realization that God saw her in her distress. The well lay between Kadesh and Bered in the Negev. Isaac lived near Beer-lahai-roi when Rebekah arrived (Genesis 24:62), and he settled there after Abraham's death (Genesis 25:11). The site marked a place of divine encounter and ongoing significance for the patriarchal family.

(3×) A well in the Negev wilderness where Hagar met the Angel of the Lord and named God 'the Living One who sees' (Genesis 16:14). The site became associated with Isaac, who dwelt there when he married Rebekah (Genesis 24:62) and after Abraham's death (Genesis 25:11). The name preserves the theology of divine sight—God sees the afflicted. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beer-Lahai-Roi | es: Beer-Lachay-Roi, Beer-Lajai-Roi | fr: Beer-Lahai-Roi | de: Beer-Lachai-Roi Gen 16:14; Gen 24:62; Gen 25:11

בְּאֵר שֶׁבַע H0884 N-proper-fs (34×)

Beer-sheba; a city in the Negev marking Israel's traditional southern boundary, associated with Abraham and Isaac

The ancient city in the northern Negev whose name means 'well of seven' or 'well of the oath,' explained by the covenant between Abraham and Abimelech involving seven ewe lambs (Gen 21:30–31) and later reaffirmed by Isaac (Gen 26:33). Beer-sheba anchors the formulaic expression 'from Dan to Beer-sheba' (Judg 20:1; 1 Sam 3:20; 2 Sam 17:11), defining the full extent of the promised land from north to south. Abraham planted a tamarisk tree there and called on the name of the LORD (Gen 21:33). Transliterations across languages remain remarkably stable — Spanish 'Beer-Seba,' French 'Beer-Schéba,' German 'Beer-Scheba' — preserving the Hebrew toponymy.

Beer-sheba (city) (34×) The proper name of a city in the Negev desert, traditionally marking Israel's southern border. Founded in the patriarchal period through Abraham's well-digging and oath with Abimelech (Gen 21:14, 31–33), and reaffirmed by Isaac (Gen 26:23, 33). Appears in the phrase 'from Dan to Beer-sheba' (Judg 20:1; 2 Sam 17:11) denoting the whole land. Also significant as the departure point for Elijah's flight to Horeb (1 Kgs 19:3) and Jacob's journey to Egypt (Gen 46:1, 5). BEERSHEBA SHEBA NAMES
en: Beer-Sheva, Beer-sheba, Beersheba | es: Beer-Seba, Beer-Sheba, Beer-Sheva | fr: Beer-Schéba, Beer-Sheva, Beer-sheba | de: Beer-Scheba, Beer-Sheva, Beer-sheba Gen 21:14; Gen 21:31; Gen 21:32; Gen 21:33; Gen 22:19

בְּאֵרֹת בְּנֵי־יַעֲקָן H0885 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)
Beeroth-bene-jaakan (place name, 'wells of the sons of Jaakan')
A compound place name meaning "wells of the sons of Jaakan," marking a wilderness station during Israel's wanderings. The location appears in Deuteronomy's recounting of the journey, probably in Horite territory. Numbers 33 uses the shorter form "Bene-jaakan." The name preserves both the geographical feature (wells, crucial in the desert) and the tribal or clan association (sons of Jaakan), typical of ancient toponymy.

(1×) Identifies a specific stopping point in Israel's wilderness journey mentioned in Deuteronomy 10:6. The compound name indicates wells associated with the descendants of Jaakan, likely a Horite clan. The prepositional phrase "from Beeroth-bene-jaakan" indicates movement away from this location, showing its function as a geographical reference point in the itinerary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: from-Beeroth-bene-jaakan | es: de-Beerot-Bene-Jaacán | fr: de-Beeroth-bene-jaakan | de: von-Beeroth-bene-jaakan Deut 10:6

בְּאֵרֹתִי H0886 Art / N-proper-mp (5×)
Beerothite, a gentlic adjective identifying inhabitants of the Benjaminite city of Beeroth.
A gentlic adjective meaning 'the Beerothite,' designating someone from the city of Beeroth in Benjamin. All five occurrences appear in 2 Samuel, predominantly in chapter 4, which narrates the assassination of Ish-bosheth by Rechab and Baanah. The text repeatedly identifies these men as Beerothites (2 Sam 4:2, 3, 5, 9), emphasizing their origin—perhaps to distinguish them from Saul's household or to note that Beeroth's Hivite population had fled to Gittaim. Naharai, one of David's mighty warriors, is also called the Beerothite (2 Sam 23:37).

(5×) A gentlic adjective (bĕʾērōtî) meaning 'the Beerothite,' identifying a person as an inhabitant of Beeroth in Benjamin. Four of the five occurrences (2 Sam 4:2, 3, 5, 9) relate to Rechab and Baanah, the assassins of Ish-bosheth, where their geographic origin is narratively significant: 2 Samuel 4:3 notes that the Beerothites had fled to Gittaim. The fifth occurrence (2 Sam 23:37) identifies Naharai the Beerothite as Joab's armor-bearer among David's elite warriors. All translations render it with a consistent gentlic form (eng 'the Beerothite,' spa 'el beerotita,' fra 'le Beerothite'). PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Beerothite, the-Beerothites | es: el-beerotita, los-beerotitas | fr: le-Beerothite, le-Beerothites | de: der-Beerothite, der-Beerothites 2Sam 4:2; 2Sam 4:3; 2Sam 4:5; 2Sam 4:9; 2Sam 23:37

בָּאַשׁ H0887 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3fs (18×)
to stink, emit foul odor; to become odious or detestable (literally or figuratively)
This Hebrew verb captures both the physical reality of stench and the social reality of disgrace. In its literal sense, it describes the putrid smell of rotting manna, dead fish in the plague-struck Nile, or festering wounds. But Hebrew uses the same root for social disgrace—making oneself 'stink' in someone's eyes means destroying one's reputation or standing. The Israelites told Moses he had 'made them odious' to Pharaoh, just as David made himself odious to the Philistines. The language treats social repugnance as viscerally as physical decay.

1. make odious, bring into disrepute (Hifil, figurative) (6×) The Hifil stem with figurative force appears when Jacob's sons feared they had 'made themselves odious' to the Canaanites (Gen 34:30), or when the wicked 'make themselves odious' through shameful conduct (Prov 13:5). The multilingual glosses show Spanish hediondo and French odieux tracking the social disgrace aspect, while English 'acts shamefully' captures the behavioral dimension that produces the odious reputation. MAKE ODIOUS DISGRACE en: acts-shamefully, are-put-to-shame, he-made-himself-odious | es: [fueron-avergonzados], hace-heder, hediondo | fr: [[הבאיש]], faisant-lui-même-odieux, il-fit-lui-même-odieux | de: [[הבאיש]], [באיש], du-machte-stink Gen 34:30; Exod 5:21; 1Sam 27:12; Prov 13:5

2. stink, emit foul odor (Qal) (5×) The basic Qal stem describes literal putrefaction: manna left overnight 'grew worms and stank' (Exod 16:20), the plague-struck Nile would 'stink' with dead fish (Exod 7:18), Egypt's land stank from heaps of dead frogs (Exod 8:14). Isaiah warns that fish will 'stink for lack of water' when God withholds the sea (Isa 50:2). The Spanish apestan and French stank preserve the visceral force across Romance languages. LOATHING ABHORRENCE en: and-stank, and-will-stink, stink | es: apestan, y-apestará, y-apestó | fr: [תבאש], et—stink, et-stank | de: [תבאש], und-stank, und-wird-stink Exod 7:18; Exod 7:21; Exod 8:14; Exod 16:20; Isa 50:2

3. cause to stink (Hifil, literal) (3×) The Hifil with literal meaning is causative: dead flies 'cause the perfumer's oil to stink' (Eccl 10:1), or the psalmist's wounds 'fester and stink' because of his foolishness (Ps 38:5). Intriguingly, manna 'did not stink' when kept for the Sabbath (Exod 16:24), showing divine suspension of natural decay. German stink and Spanish hedió follow the literal stench across Germanic and Romance branches. LOATHING ABHORRENCE en: cause-to-stink, stank, stink | es: Hieden, hacen-heder, hedió | fr: le-puer, stank, יבאיש | de: [יבאיש], stank, stink Exod 16:24; Ps 38:5; Eccl 10:1

4. become odious, abhorrent (Nifal) (3×) The Nifal stem denotes becoming odious in someone's estimation. Israel 'became odious' to the Philistines after Saul's victories (1Sam 13:4), the Ammonites 'had become odious' to David (2Sam 10:6), and Absalom deliberately 'made himself odious' to his father by sleeping with the concubines publicly (2Sam 16:21). French devint odieux and Spanish se hizo odioso track the passive/reflexive force of the Nifal across both language families. MAKE ODIOUS DISGRACE
en: became-odious, they-had-become-odious, you-have-made-yourself-odious | es: se-hicieron-odiosos, se-hizo-odioso, te-hiciste-abominable | fr: devint-odieux, ils-avait-deviens-odieux, tu-ai-fit-toi-même-odieux | de: became-odious, du-habe-machte-dich-selbst-odious, sie-hatte-become-odious 1Sam 13:4; 2Sam 10:6; 2Sam 16:21

5. make oneself odious (Hitpael) (1×) The Hitpael appears once when the Ammonites 'made themselves odious' to David (1Chr 19:6), using the reflexive-intensive stem to emphasize their deliberate self-inflicted disgrace through insulting David's messengers. Both French and German translators left this form untranslated in brackets, recognizing its distinct reflexive force within the semantic cluster. MAKE ODIOUS DISGRACE en: they-made-themselves-odious | es: se-hicieron-odiosos | fr: [התבאשו] | de: [התבאשו] 1Chr 19:6

בָּאֵשׁ H0888 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)
to be displeasing, to be evil (Aramaic verb)
An Aramaic verb meaning "to be evil" or "to be displeasing," appearing in Daniel's account of the unchangeable Persian law. The impersonal construction indicates that something "was displeasing to him," a common Hebrew idiom for expressing displeasure or distress.

Cognate with Syriac and Old Aramaic forms, the verb carries the sense of moral or emotional badness, similar to Hebrew ra'a.

(1×) Expresses King Darius's displeasure in Daniel 6:14 when he realized he had been trapped into condemning Daniel. The impersonal construction "it was evil upon him" (literally) conveys his deep distress at the situation. The Aramaic verb parallels the Hebrew idiom for expressing that something troubles or displeases someone, a common biblical expression for emotional distress. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: displeased | es: se-disgustó | fr: par-le-feu | de: im-Feuer Dan 6:14

בְּאֹשׁ H0889 N-msc (3×)

stench, foul smell of decay; odor of corpses or rotting matter

A noun denoting the stench of death and decay. The term appears in prophetic oracles of judgment where corpses lie unburied: their stench rises (Isaiah 34:3). Joel's locust plague leaves a foul smell as the swarm dies (Joel 2:20). Amos speaks of God sending plague so that 'the stench of your camps' went up to the nostrils (Amos 4:10). The image is visceral, depicting the aftermath of divine judgment when dead bodies decompose in the open. Stench becomes a sensory marker of catastrophe.

(3×) The foul odor of corpses and decay following divine judgment. Isaiah prophesies that slain bodies will emit stench (Isaiah 34:3). Joel describes the stench rising from dead locusts (Joel 2:20). Amos recalls how God sent plague and 'the stench of your camps came up into your nostrils' (Amos 4:10). The multilingual evidence (Spanish hedor, French puanteur) underscores the olfactory dimension of judgment imagery. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-stench, stench-of, their-stench | es: hedor-de, hedor-de-él, su-hedor | fr: [באשם], par-le-feu, puanteur | de: [באשן], [באשם], im-Feuer Isa 34:3; Joel 2:20; Amos 4:10

בְּאֻשָׁה H0890 N-fs (1×)

stinking weeds, noxious plants

A rare noun denoting noxious or foul-smelling weeds that might spring up instead of cultivated grain. Job uses this term in his final oath of innocence, invoking a curse upon his own land: if he has sinned, may weeds grow instead of barley. The word emphasizes not just unwanted plants but specifically malodorous ones, intensifying the curse. Cognate with Akkadian terms for harmful plants, it represents agricultural disaster.

(1×) Refers to offensive-smelling weeds in Job 31:40 as part of a self-imprecation. Job declares that if he has wronged his workers, may his land produce stinking weeds instead of barley. The term's rarity and the curse context suggest these are particularly noxious plants, making the judgment severe. The parallel with thorns (choach) reinforces the agricultural disaster motif. BURIAL INTERMENT en: weeds | es: maleza | fr: באשה | de: in-Frau Job 31:40

בְּאֻשִׁים H0891 N-mp (2×)

wild grapes, worthless grapes; sour or inedible fruit from untended vines

A term describing the inferior, worthless fruit produced by a vineyard despite careful cultivation. Isaiah uses this in his allegory of Yahweh's vineyard, where despite every advantage, Israel produced wild or stinking grapes instead of good fruit. The word emphasizes the corrupt or worthless nature of what grew, perhaps stinking or sour grapes in contrast to cultivated varieties.

(2×) Both occurrences appear in Isaiah's vineyard song (5:2, 4), where God planted a choice vineyard with every advantage but 'it yielded wild grapes' instead of good fruit. The Hebrew may derive from a root meaning 'stink' or 'be worthless,' suggesting grapes that are rotten, sour, or otherwise inedible. Translations consistently render this as 'wild grapes' (English, Spanish 'uvas silvestres'), distinguishing cultivated from wild varieties. The allegory makes Israel's moral failure vivid: despite divine care, they produced corrupt fruit—injustice instead of justice, outcry instead of righteousness. The term captures both the unexpectedness and the worthlessness of what resulted. WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY

en: wild-grapes | es: uvas-silvestres | fr: [באשים] | de: [באשים] Isa 5:2; Isa 5:4

בָּבָה H0892 Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)

pupil, apple of the eye

A poetic term for the pupil or "apple" of the eye, appearing in Zechariah's oracle about touching God's people. The phrase "apple of his eye" (literally "daughter of his eye") became proverbial in English for something precious and vulnerable. The etymology may relate to the reflection of a small figure (like a child or "babe") seen in someone's pupil. This anatomical metaphor emphasizes how precious and sensitive Israel is to God.

(1×) Denotes the pupil of the eye in Zechariah 2:8, in the famous phrase about touching "the apple of his eye." The image conveys extreme sensitivity and value—just as the pupil is the most vulnerable and protected part of the eye, so Israel is precious to God. The multilingual evidence (Spanish "la niña de," French "pupille") confirms the anatomical reference to the eye's center. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-pupil-of | es: la-niña-de | fr: pupille | de: [בבבת] Zech 2:8

בֵּבַי H0893 N-proper-ms (6×)

Bebai, a personal name borne by a chief of returning exiles whose descendants appear in Ezra and Nehemiah.

A proper name appearing in the post-exilic records of Ezra and Nehemiah. Bebai heads a family whose descendants returned from Babylon in two waves: 623 in one count (Ezra 2:11) and 628 in the parallel list (Neh 7:16). Additional members of his family returned with Ezra (Ezra 8:11), and some were among those who had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:28). A Bebai also appears as a signatory to Nehemiah's covenant (Neh 10:16). The German rendering 'in-in-mir' appears to be a mistranslation, while English and Spanish correctly transliterate the name as Bebai/Bevai.

(6×) The personal name Bebai, designating the ancestor of a prominent family in the post-exilic community. The 'sons of Bebai' appear in the census of returning exiles (Ezra 2:11; Neh 7:16), in the caravan traveling with Ezra (Ezra 8:11), and among those who put away foreign wives (Ezra 10:28). Bebai himself – or a later bearer of the name – sealed Nehemiah's covenant (Neh 10:16). English 'Bebai' and Spanish 'Bebai/Bevai' preserve the Hebrew closely, while French retains the unvocalized form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bebai, Bevay | es: Bebai, Bevai | fr: [בבי] | de: in-in-mir Ezra 2:11; Ezra 8:11; Ezra 10:28; Neh 7:16

בָּבֶל H0894 Prep-m / N-proper-fs (262×)

Babylon, Babel; the ancient Mesopotamian capital on the Euphrates, seat of the Neo-Babylonian Empire

Appearing 262 times, Babel/Babylon is both a place name and a symbol woven through the entire biblical narrative. It first appears in Genesis as the site of the tower and the confusion of languages (Gen 11:9, connected by wordplay with balal, 'to confuse'). It resurfaces as the dominant world power that destroyed Jerusalem and exiled Judah under Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kgs 24-25). The prophets pronounce oracles against it (Isa 13-14; Jer 50-51), and the psalmists lament beside its rivers (Ps 137). Nearly every language preserves the name as a direct transliteration: Spanish Babilonia, French Babylone, German Babel.

Babylon (262×) The ancient capital of Babylonia on the Euphrates (Akkadian Bab-ilim, 'gate of god'), serving as both a geographical referent and a theological symbol. Site of the primeval tower narrative (Gen 10:10; 11:9), the seat of Nebuchadnezzar's empire that destroyed Jerusalem and exiled Judah (2 Kgs 24-25), and the target of prophetic oracles of doom (Isa 13; Jer 50-51). Universally transliterated across languages (Spanish Babilonia, French Babylone), reflecting its status as a globally recognized toponym. BABYLON

CITY EMPIRE

en: Babel, Bavel | es: Babel, Babilonia, Bavel | fr: Babel, Babylone | de: Babel Gen 10:10; Gen 11:9; 2Kgs 17:30; 2Kgs 20:12; 2Kgs 20:18

בָּבֶל H0895 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (25×)

Babylon (Babel); the great Mesopotamian city and empire, center of exile, and symbol of human pride and divine judgment

Bavel (בָּבֶל) names both the historic city of Babylon on the Euphrates and the empire that destroyed Jerusalem and exiled Judah in 586 BC. In the Aramaic portions of Ezra and Daniel, it appears as the seat of power where exiled Jews serve foreign kings yet maintain faith under pressure (Dan 2:12; Ezra 5:12–14). The name carries layered theological resonance: from the tower of Babel narrative (Gen 11) through the exile and into Revelation's 'Babylon the Great,' it symbolizes human arrogance, imperial oppression, and the certainty of divine judgment. The city's very name was folk-etymologized as 'confusion' (from balal), though the Akkadian bāb-ili means 'gate of God.'

Bavel (25×) The proper noun naming the Mesopotamian city and empire on the Euphrates, appearing in the Aramaic sections of Daniel and Ezra as the political center where Jewish exiles lived under Nebuchadnezzar and his successors (Dan 2:12; Ezra 5:12–14). Translations vary between transliteration and adaptation — Spanish 'Babilonia,' French 'Babylone,' German 'Babel' — but the referent is consistent. The name resonates from Genesis 11 through Revelation 18 as a symbol of imperial hubris destined for divine overthrow. BABYLON CITY EMPIRE

en: Babel, Bavel | es: Babel, Babilonia, Bavel | fr: Babylone | de: Babel Ezra 5:12; Ezra 5:13; Ezra 5:14

בָּבְלַי H0896 N-proper-ms (1×)

Babylonians (Aramaic gentilics)

An Aramaic gentilics (ethnic designation) referring to the Babylonians, appearing in Ezra's list of peoples settled in Samaria by the Assyrians. The emphatic plural form indicates the ethnic group as a whole. These Babylonian transplants were among the foreign populations that opposed the rebuilding of Jerusalem. The term appears in the administrative Aramaic section of Ezra, reflecting the multilingual nature of the Persian imperial correspondence.

(1×) Identifies the Babylonian ethnic group in Ezra 4:9, listed among the peoples who wrote to oppose Jerusalem's reconstruction. The Aramaic gentilics form (with emphatic ending) fits the documentary style of the Persian-period correspondence. These Babylonians were among the populations relocated by Assyrian deportation policies, creating the mixed Samarian population that resisted Jewish restoration efforts. BABYLON CITY EMPIRE

en: Bavlaye | es: los-babilonios | fr: [בבלי] | de: [בבלי] Ezra 4:9

בַּז H0897 Prep-l / Adv (1×)

plunder, spoil, booty (as food/prey)

A variant or dialectal form related to the common word for plunder or spoil, appearing with a prepositional prefix in Ezekiel. The context involves God giving nations as plunder, possibly specifically as food or sustenance. There is textual uncertainty (ketiv/qere variation), but the semantic field clearly involves spoil or booty taken in warfare. The term overlaps with the more common bazaz and shalal, both denoting war plunder.

(1×) Refers to plunder or spoil in Ezekiel 25:7, where God threatens to give the Ammonites as spoil to the nations. The textual variant (ketiv vs. qere) creates uncertainty, but the context of military conquest and plundering is clear. The French "nourriture" (food) may reflect an interpretation that the spoil serves as sustenance for the conquerors, a common motif in ancient warfare. PLUNDER AND SPOIL en: [as-plunder] | es: [para-despojo] | fr: nourriture | de: [לבג] Ezek 25:7

בָּגַד H0898 V-Qal-InfAbs (49×)

Act treacherously, deal faithlessly; as a participle, a treacherous person or traitor.

A verb meaning to betray trust or act with deliberate faithlessness, used across covenantal, marital, and political contexts. The prophets deploy it powerfully: Isaiah's anguished cry 'the treacherous deal treacherously' (Isa 24:16) doubles the root for emphasis, and Jeremiah and Malachi both use it for Israel's spiritual adultery. Spanish captures the verbal sense with 'traicionar' and the participial sense with 'traidor,' while French splits between 'trahir' (to betray) and 'traitre' (traitor) — confirming that the participle has genuinely substantivized into a distinct character type in biblical usage.

1. deal treacherously, betray (26×) Deal treacherously, betray — to act with faithlessness toward God, a spouse, or an ally, violating trust or covenant loyalty. Used of Israel's unfaithfulness (Jer 3:20; 5:11; Mal 2:10–11), of marital betrayal (Exod 21:8; Mal 2:15), and of general human faithlessness (1 Sam 14:33; Job 6:15). The emphatic doubling 'the treacherous deal treacherously' (bogedim bagadu, Isa 24:16; 33:1) is a signature prophetic construction. TREACHERY AND BETRAYAL

en: Has-dealt-treacherously, I-would-have-betrayed, and-acted-treacherously | es: Habéis-traicionado, Traicionó, al-traicionarla | fr: dans-son-betraying, dans-trahir, et-trahir | de: du-handelte-treacherously, handelte-treulos, ich-würde-haben-verraten Exod 21:8; Judg 9:23; 1Sam 14:33; Job 6:15; Ps 73:15

2. treacherous person, traitor (23×) Treacherous person, traitor — the participle used substantivally to designate a person characterized by habitual faithlessness. The Psalms set them in contrast with the righteous: 'the treacherous will be rooted out of the land' (Prov 2:22), and 'I looked at the faithless with disgust' (Ps 119:158). Spanish 'traidor/traidores' and French 'traitre' confirm this as a stable nominal sense, not merely a verbal participle (Ps 25:3; Prov 11:3, 6; 13:2; Isa 21:2). TREACHERY AND BETRAYAL

en: a-treacherous-one, and-the-treacherous, and-treacherous-ones | es: a-los-traidores, el-traidor, en-traidor | fr: dans-trahir, et-traître, et-être-infidèle | de: der-treacherous, handelte-treulos, treacherous-Leute-von Ps 25:3; Ps 59:5; Ps 119:158; Prov 2:22; Prov 11:3

בֶּגֶד H0899a Conj-w / N-ms (2×)

treachery, faithlessness; betrayal or breach of trust

A term denoting treachery or faithless dealing, derived from the root meaning 'to act treacherously.' This abstract noun appears in prophetic oracles condemning breach of covenant or betrayal of trust. The word emphasizes the violation of relationship rather than merely breaking rules—unfaithfulness to persons or commitments.

(2×) Isaiah laments, 'Treachery, treachery! The treacherous deal very treacherously!' (24:16), using wordplay to intensify the indictment. Jeremiah asks God why the treacherous prosper (12:1), using the noun alongside related verbal forms. The multilingual evidence shows confusion: some translations render 'treachery/traición' (English, Spanish), while others give 'vêtement' (French, German following differently), suggesting they read this as the homonym בֶּגֶד (garment) instead. This confusion in translation history highlights how context must distinguish between identical spellings denoting either 'garment' or 'treachery.' The prophetic contexts clearly demand the meaning 'treachery'—covenant unfaithfulness personified. TREACHERY AND BETRAYAL en: treachery | es: traición, y-con-traición | fr: et-vêtement, vêtement | de: [בגד], [ובגד] Isa 24:16; Jer 12:1

בֶּגֶד H0899b Art / N-ms (216×)

Garment, article of clothing; any wearable covering from a leper's rags to priestly vestments.

Beged is the standard Hebrew word for a garment or piece of clothing, covering the full spectrum from ordinary daily wear to the sacred vestments of the high priest (Exod 28:2-3). It appears in narratives of deception (Gen 27:15, where Rebekah dresses Jacob in Esau's garments), mourning (rending garments), and consecration (Lev 8:30). Spanish renders it variously as 'vestidos' or 'vestiduras,' French as 'vetements,' and German as 'Gewaender.' Notably, the same root b-g-d also gives rise to the verb meaning 'to deal treacherously,' perhaps suggesting that clothing can conceal as much as it covers.

garment, article of clothing (216×) Any article of clothing or bodily covering, used without distinction of quality or status – from the filthy clothes of a leper (Lev 13:47) to the holy robes of the high priest (Exod 28:2). Appears across all periods of biblical Hebrew in contexts of daily life, ritual consecration (Lev 8:23-24), deception (Gen 27:15, Tamar in Gen 38:14), and symbolic acts of grief such as tearing garments. Spanish 'vestidos/vestiduras' and French 'vetements' confirm a single undifferentiated sense. CLOTHING AND DRESS

en: his-garments | es: sus-vestidos, sus-vestiduras, vestiduras-suyas | fr: son-vêtements | de: sein-Gewaender Gen 27:15; Gen 38:14; Gen 38:19; Exod 28:2; Exod 28:3

בְּגֹדוֹת H0900 N-fp (1×)

acts of treachery, faithlessness (abstract plural)

An abstract plural noun denoting acts or practices of treachery and faithlessness, appearing in Zephaniah's indictment of Jerusalem's prophets. The plural form emphasizes repeated or habitual treacherous behavior. These prophets are described as "men of treacheries," indicating their character is defined by deceit and covenant-breaking. The term derives from the root bagad, which carries strong covenant-breach overtones in Hebrew scripture.

(1×) Characterizes the treacherous behavior of false prophets in Zephaniah 3:4, who are called "men of treacheries." The abstract plural intensifies the accusation—these are not isolated acts but a pattern of faithless, deceitful conduct. The covenant-breaking nuance is strong, as these religious leaders violated their sacred trust. The translations (Spanish "traiciones," French "traître") capture the betrayal aspect. TREACHERY AND BETRAYAL

en: treachery | es: traiciones | fr: traître | de: [בגדות] Zeph 3:4

בָּגוֹד H0901 Adj-fs (2×)

treacherous (feminine adjective); characterized by unfaithfulness or betrayal

The feminine adjectival form describing someone or something characterized by treachery. Jeremiah uses this exclusively for personified Judah and her sister Israel, depicting the nation as an unfaithful woman who betrays her covenant relationship with Yahweh. The adjective carries strong relational overtones of infidelity and broken trust.

(2×) Jeremiah addresses 'treacherous Judah' and 'faithless Israel' using feminine forms (3:7, 10), employing the metaphor of unfaithful sisters to describe the two kingdoms' covenant violations. The adjective appears in God's commentary on whether Judah had truly returned with her whole heart or only in pretense. The feminine form matches the personification of nations as women in prophetic marriage metaphors. Multilingual glosses render this as 'the treacherous one' (English, Spanish 'la traidora'), preserving the feminine gender that reinforces the marriage imagery. The word choice intensifies the personal dimension of covenant breaking—not mere law violation but marital betrayal. TREACHERY AND BETRAYAL

en: the-treacherous | es: la-traidora | fr: [בגודה] | de: [בגודה] Jer 3:7; Jer 3:10

בִּגְוַי H0902 N-proper-ms (6×)

Bigvai, a personal name borne by a leader among the returning exiles in the time of Zerubbabel and Nehemiah.

A proper name carried by at least one prominent figure in the post-exilic period. Bigvai was among the leaders who returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:2; Neh 7:7) and gave his name to a large family: 2,056 descendants in one census (Ezra 2:14) and 2,067 in the parallel list (Neh 7:19). A second group from his family returned with Ezra (Ezra 8:14). A Bigvai also appears as a signatory to Nehemiah's covenant (Neh 10:17). The name may derive from Sanskrit bhagavan ('fortunate'). French 'Bigvai' and English 'Bigvai' preserve the Hebrew transliteration faithfully.

(6×) The personal name Bigvai, identifying a clan leader among the returning exiles. He accompanied Zerubbabel on the initial return from Babylon (Ezra 2:2; Neh 7:7), and his descendants formed one of the larger family groups in the restored community (Ezra 2:14; Neh 7:19), with a further contingent arriving under Ezra (Ezra 8:14). A Bigvai also sealed Nehemiah's covenant (Neh 10:17). The name's possible Sanskrit etymology (bhagavan, 'blessed') suggests a diaspora naming influence. English and French transliterate uniformly as 'Bigvai.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bigvai, Bigvay | es: Bigvai | fr: Bigvaï | de: in-Volk Ezra 2:2; Ezra 2:14; Ezra 8:14; Neh 7:7; Neh 7:19

בִּגְתָא H0903 N-proper-ms (1×)

Bigtha (personal name, Persian eunuch of Ahasuerus)

A Persian personal name belonging to one of the seven eunuchs who served King Ahasuerus in the book of Esther. The name is Persian in origin, part of the authentic Persian color of the Esther narrative. This eunuch was among those commanded to bring Queen Vashti before the king during his great feast. The name is transliterated consistently across languages, reflecting its foreign origin.

(1×) Identifies one of seven eunuchs serving the Persian king in Esther 1:10. These chamberlains were sent to summon Queen Vashti, setting in motion the events that led to Esther's rise. The Persian name authenticates the narrative's setting in the Achaemenid court, where eunuchs held significant administrative roles. The name carries no Hebrew meaning but functions as a historical-literary detail. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bigtha | es: Bigta | fr: [בגתא] | de: [בגתא] Esth 1:10

בִּגְתָן H0904 N-proper-ms (2×)

Bigthan/Bigthana; personal name of a Persian court official

The name of a eunuch serving in King Ahasuerus's court who, along with Teresh, conspired to assassinate the Persian king. The name appears to be Persian in origin, possibly meaning 'gift of God.' The plot was discovered by Mordecai, an event that later proved crucial to the deliverance of the Jews. The name appears in two variant spellings.

(2×) Bigthan (also Bigthana) was one of two royal chamberlains who 'sought to lay hands on King Ahasuerus' (Esther 2:21; 6:2). Mordecai discovered and reported the conspiracy, which was investigated and the conspirators executed. The later reading of these records before the sleepless king led to Mordecai's honor and Haman's downfall. The variant spellings (בִּגְתָן/בִּגְתָנָא) likely represent the same individual, with the second form showing Aramaic influence. Persian royal courts employed eunuchs as chamberlains, and the name reflects Persian naming patterns with possible theophoric elements (bagadâna, 'gift of God'). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bigthan, Bigthana | es: Bigtan, Bigtana | fr: [בגתן], [בגתנא] | de: [בגתן], [בגתנא] Esth 2:21; Esth 6:2

בַּד H0905 Prep-l / N-msc / 3fs (201×)

Separation, alone, by oneself; apart from, besides; also: poles/staves, limbs, branches, bars

The noun bad encompasses a striking semantic range rooted in the idea of separation or partition. In its most frequent use with the preposition le- and suffixes, it means 'alone, by oneself' — from God's declaration that it is not good for man to be alone (Gen 2:18) to the exclusive formula 'apart from, besides.' As a concrete noun, bad denotes objects that are separated or extended: the carrying poles of the tabernacle furniture, limbs of a body, branches of a vine, or bars of a gate. Arabic bidd (portion) preserves the partitive core, while the concrete extensions show how a single root of 'separation' branches into diverse physical referents.

1. alone, by oneself (106×) With le- and pronominal suffixes (levaddo, levaddi, etc.), bad expresses solitary state: 'alone, by oneself, only.' Genesis 2:18 establishes the existential weight ('not good to be alone'), while Zechariah 12:12-14 repeats levad to emphasize isolated mourning. Arabic wahdahu, Swahili peke yake, and Korean holro all confirm this adverbial-exclusive meaning across language families. ALONE AND PARTS en: alone, alone-him, by-himself | es: solo, solo-él, yo-solo | fr: par-lui-même, seul, seul-lui | de: allein, alone, bei-sich-selbst Gen 2:18; Gen 32:24; Gen 42:38; Gen 44:20; Exod 12:16

2. apart from, besides (50×) The compound preposition millevad ('from-separation-of') means 'apart from, besides, except.' It adds or excludes items from a count: 'besides women and children' (Exod 12:37), 'apart from the regular burnt offering' (Lev 9:17; 23:38). Arabic siwa/ma-ada, Swahili mbali na, and Spanish además de all render this exclusionary-additive prepositional function. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: apart, apart-from, besides | es: Además-de, Aparte-de, además-de | fr: apart-de, en-plus-de, seul | de: allein, apart-von, besides Gen 26:1; Gen 46:26; Exod 12:37; Lev 9:17; Lev 23:38

3. poles, staves (37×) As a concrete noun in the plural (baddim), bad denotes the carrying poles or staves inserted through rings to transport the ark, altar, and table of the tabernacle (Exod 25:13-15, 27-28). Spanish varas, French barres, and Swahili mipiko all confirm the instrumental meaning. These poles physically embody the 'separate, extended piece' at the root's core. RODS AND STAFFS
en: its-poles, the-poles, the-poles-of | es: las-varas, sus-varas, varas-de-él | fr: le-barres, le-barres-de, son-barres | de: der-Stangen-von, die-Stangen, sein-Stangen Exod 25:13; Exod 25:14; Exod 25:15; Exod 25:27; Exod 25:28

4. (2×) In Exodus 30:34, bad appears in the spice recipe as 'part' or 'equal portion' — 'sweet spices, each in equal part (bad bevad).' The phrase denotes measured, separated portions of ingredients. Spanish parte and French partie support the partitive reading, linking back to the Arabic bidd (portion) that anchors the root's etymology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-part, part | es: parte, por-parte | fr: dans-partie, partie | de: in-part, part Exod 30:34

5. limbs, members of body (2×) Referring to limbs or members of a body, as in Job 18:13 where disease devours 'the limbs of his body' (baddey oro). The sense extends the 'separated part' meaning to anatomical members. Spanish partes and the dual occurrence in Job confirm this corporeal application of the partitive root. ALONE AND PARTS
en: his-limbs, the-limbs-of | es: partes-de, sus-partes | fr: branche, son-branche-lui | de: allein Job 18:13

6. branches, shoots (2×) Branches or shoots of a plant, especially a vine: Ezekiel 17:6 describes spreading 'shoots' (baddim) and 19:14 mentions fire consuming branches. The botanical sense parallels the bodily 'limb' sense — both are extensions or separated parts growing from a main body. Spanish sarmientos (vine shoots) precisely captures this horticultural usage. ALONE AND PARTS
en: shoots, shoots-her | es: sarmientos, sus-ramas | fr: seul | de: allein Ezek 17:6; Ezek 19:14

7. bars, bolts (2×) Bars or bolts of a gate or fortification, as in Hosea 11:6 where the sword 'consumes his bars' (baddayw) and Job 17:16 where hope descends to the 'bars of Sheol.' Spanish cerrojos/barrotes (bolts/bars) confirm the structural meaning. These are separated, elongated pieces used for securing — another concrete manifestation of the root's partitive-separative core. ALONE AND PARTS en: his-bars, the-bars-of | es: A-los-barrotes-de, sus-cerrojos | fr: branche, seul | de: allein Job 17:16; Hos 11:6

בַּד H0906 N-mp (23×)

White linen cloth; fine fabric used for priestly garments and sacred vestments in tabernacle and temple worship.

This noun designates a specific grade of white linen reserved almost exclusively for sacred use. The boy Samuel ministers before the Lord wearing a linen ephod (1 Sam 2:18), as do the doomed priests of Nob (1 Sam 22:18) and David dancing before the ark (2 Sam 6:14). In the Priestly legislation it is the mandated fabric for the high priest's undergarments, tunic, sash, and turban on the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:4, 23, 32). Strikingly, Ezekiel and Daniel extend the term to angelic figures 'clothed in linen' (Ezek 9:2; Dan 10:5; 12:6-7), elevating the priestly fabric into a marker of heavenly purity.

linen (fabric material) (23×) White linen cloth reserved for sacred garments — Samuel's ephod (1 Sam 2:18), David's worship attire (2 Sam 6:14), Levitical vestments (Exod 28:42; Lev 16:4), and the luminous garb of angelic figures in Ezekiel 9:2 and Daniel 10:5; 12:6-7. Spanish 'lino,' French 'lin,' and German 'Leinen' confirm a single concrete-material sense. LINEN AND FABRIC
en: linen, of-linen, the-linen | es: de-lino, el-lino, lino | fr: [בד], de-lin, fin-lin | de: Leinen, die-Leinen, linen Exod 28:42; Exod 39:28; Lev 6:10; Lev 16:4

בַּד H0907 N-mp (6×)

Empty talk, idle boasting, or lies; by extension liars and false prophets. Also: limbs or members of the body.

A noun appearing only in the plural (בַּדִּים), covering two quite distinct meanings. Primarily it denotes empty, boastful, or deceitful speech — Moab's unfounded boasts (Isa 16:6; Jer 48:30), Job's opponent's idle babble (Job 11:3), and the lies of false prophets or diviners (Isa 44:25; Jer 50:36). This sense has Phoenician cognates and Syriac parallels meaning 'vain talk' or 'liar.' A completely separate homonymous sense appears in Job 41:12, where Leviathan's powerful 'limbs' (בַּדָּיו) are described — a usage confirmed by consistent body-part vocabulary across translations: English 'his limbs,' Spanish 'sus miembros.'

1. idle talk, boasting, lies (5×) Empty talk, idle boasting, or lies; concretely, empty talkers, liars, or false diviners. Isaiah 16:6 and Jer 48:30 denounce Moab's unfounded boasts (בַּדָּיו, 'his boastings are not right'). Job 11:3 uses it for babble that silences others. In Isa 44:25 and Jer 50:36, the word designates false prophets and diviners as 'liars' — those whose oracles are empty pretense. Phoenician cognate evidence (CIS 3.6) and Syriac ܒܕܐ ('vain talk') confirm this semantic range of deceitful or baseless speech. IDLE TALK BOASTING en: boasts-your, his-boasts, liars | es: Tus-fanfarronerías, de-adivinos, los-adivinos | fr: [בדיו], [בדים], [הבדים] | de: [בדיו], [בדיך], [בדים] Job 11:3; Isa 16:6; Isa 44:25; Jer 48:30; Jer 50:36

2. limbs, members (of body) (1×) Limbs or members of the body, a distinct homonymous sense appearing only in Job 41:12 (Hebrew 41:4), where God describes Leviathan's powerful limbs (בַּדָּיו). This anatomical meaning has no semantic connection to 'idle talk' and represents a separate lexical root. The multilingual evidence uniformly selects body-part vocabulary — English 'his limbs,' Spanish 'sus miembros' — confirming the distinct sense. The context of the Leviathan poem emphasizes the creature's awe-inspiring physical strength. ALONE AND PARTS en: his-limbs | es: sus-miembros | fr: son-בדיו-lui | de: [בדיו] Job 41:12

בָּדָא H0908 V-Qal-Prtcpl-msc / 3mp (2×)

devise, invent; fabricate or originate (in negative sense)

A verb meaning to devise, invent, or fabricate, used exclusively in negative contexts for contriving falsehoods or unauthorized innovations. The word appears in accusations of invention—whether inventing false charges or devising unauthorized religious practices. Both occurrences highlight fabrication without proper authority or truth.

(2×) Jeroboam 'devised' a feast on a date 'of his own heart'—an unauthorized religious innovation (1 Kings 12:33). Nehemiah accuses his opponents: 'You are inventing them out of your own heart'—fabricating false charges (Nehemiah 6:8). The verb consistently carries negative connotations of fabrication without warrant. Multilingual glosses render this as 'devise/invent' (English, Spanish 'inventó/inventas'), capturing the sense of origination that is unauthorized or false. The Mishnaic Hebrew and Aramaic cognates maintain this meaning of invention. Both contexts involve either religious innovation without divine sanction or political accusation without factual basis—fabrication in realms where truth and authority matter most. DECEIT AND TREACHERY en: are-inventing-them, he-devised | es: inventó, las-inventas | fr: [בודאם], il-devised | de: [בודאם], er-devised 1Kgs 12:33; Neh 6:8

בָּדָד H0909 N-ms (4×)

Alone, isolated, solitary — describing separation from a group or community

Describes the state of being separated, isolated, or solitary. The participial form conveys a vivid image of aloneness: a leper dwelling apart outside the camp (Lev 13:46), a lone bird on a rooftop (Ps 102:7), a straggler cut off from the ranks (Isa 14:31), or Ephraim likened to a wild donkey wandering alone (Hos 8:9). The underlying verb connects to the Arabic sense of withdrawal and independent action, and the multilingual evidence — Spanish 'solitario/solo,' French 'séparer' — consistently reflects isolation and apartness.

(4×) Being alone, isolated, or solitary — whether by compulsion, circumstance, or willful separation. The leper must dwell 'alone' outside the camp (Lev 13:46), the psalmist likens himself to a solitary bird on a housetop (Ps 102:7), the straggler is cut off from the retreating army (Isa 14:31), and Ephraim is a wild donkey going its own way (Hos 8:9). Spanish 'solitario' and 'solo' capture the consistent thread of apartness across all contexts. ALONE AND PARTS

en: alone, straggler | es: rezagado, solitario, solo | fr: [בודד], dans-séparer, semer | de: [בודד], allein, alone Lev 13:46; Ps 102:7; Isa 14:31; Hos 8:9

בָּדָד H0910 Prep-l / N-ms (10×)

Alone, solitary, isolated — describing a state of separation, whether dignified independence or desolate loneliness

The adjective/adverb בָּדָד (badad) describes the state of being alone, apart, or isolated. Its semantic range stretches from noble separateness to devastating loneliness. Balaam's oracle celebrates Israel as 'a people dwelling alone, not reckoning itself among the nations' (Num 23:9) — solitude as election. Moses' farewell blesses Israel: 'so Israel dwells in safety, alone' (Deut 33:28), and Deuteronomy 32:12 recalls that 'the LORD alone guided him.' Yet Lamentations opens with the agonized cry: 'How lonely sits the city that was full of people!' (Lam 1:1), where the same word expresses utter desolation. Spanish 'solo/solitario' and French 'seul/isolé' reflect this polarity.

alone (10×) The state of being alone, solitary, or set apart, spanning a semantic range from honorable distinctness to grievous isolation. Positively: Israel dwells 'alone' as a people chosen and separated unto God (Num 23:9; Deut 33:28), and the LORD 'alone' led Israel through the wilderness (Deut 32:12). Negatively: Jerusalem sits 'alone' like a widow in her desolation (Lam 1:1), and Jeremiah sat 'alone' under the weight of prophetic burden (Jer 15:17). Leviticus 13:46 prescribes that the leper 'shall dwell alone.' Spanish 'solo/solitario' and English 'alone/solitary' capture both poles. ALONE AND PARTS

en: alone, is-solitary | es: a-solas, sola, solitaria | fr: seul, solitaire | de: [בדד], allein, alone Num 23:9; Deut 32:12; Deut 33:28; Ps 4:8; Isa 27:10

בְּדָד H0911 N-proper-ms (2×)

Bedad; personal name, father of an Edomite ruler

A personal name appearing in the genealogical lists of Edomite kings, identified as the father of Hadad who defeated Midian. The name appears in the formulaic 'son of Bedad' construction typical of ancient king lists. Its etymology remains uncertain.

(2×) Bedad is known solely as the father of Hadad, the Edomite king 'who defeated Midian in the country of Moab' (Genesis 36:35 = 1 Chronicles 1:46). The parallel genealogies preserve identical information, listing him in the early Edomite royal succession before Israel had kings. The name is simply transliterated across translations (Bedad, Bedads), treated as an opaque proper designation. The formulaic 'Hadad son of Bedad' follows standard ancient Near Eastern patterns for identifying rulers by patronymic. No other information about Bedad survives beyond his identity as father of this victorious king. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bedad | es: Bedad | fr: Bedad, [בדד] | de: Bedads, [בדד] Gen 36:35; 1Chr 1:46

בְּדְיָה H0912 N-proper-ms (1×)

Bediah (personal name, 'servant of Yahweh')

A personal name meaning "servant of Yahweh," appearing in Ezra's list of men who had married foreign women during the exile. The name is theophoric, incorporating the divine name and expressing devotion or service to Israel's God. The irony is evident: a man whose name proclaims service to Yahweh had violated covenant by intermarrying. The name appears only this once, preserved in Ezra's careful record of those who put away foreign wives.

(1×) Identifies an Israelite in Ezra 10:35 who had taken a foreign wife in violation of covenant separation. The name's meaning ("servant of Yahweh") creates poignant irony given the covenant violation. Listed among those who repented and sent away their foreign wives, Bediah represents the post-exilic community's struggle to maintain distinct identity and covenant faithfulness. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bedeyah | es: Bedeyah | fr: [בדיה] | de: [בדיה] Ezra 10:35

בְּדִיל H0913 N-ms (6×)

Tin, alloy, or dross; a base metal separated from precious ore, also used for a plumb weight.

In the ancient metalworker's vocabulary, bedil referred broadly to the impure residue left when precious metal is smelted. Numbers 31:22 lists it alongside gold, silver, bronze, iron, and lead as a spoil of war requiring purification by fire. In Ezekiel 22:18-20, Israel herself becomes tin mixed with dross in God's furnace. Isaiah 1:25 narrows the meaning to the impurity God promises to purge from Jerusalem, while Zechariah 4:10 uses 'the stone of tin' as a plumb line in Zerubbabel's hand, a symbol of precision in rebuilding.

1. and tin (4×) Tin as a base metal (plumbum album), listed among metals of commerce and war spoil (Num 31:22; Ezek 22:18, 20; 27:12). Spanish estaño and French étain preserve the metallurgical specificity. In Ezekiel's furnace imagery, Israel is reduced to tin and dross among nobler metals. TIN LEAD METALS

en: and-tin, the-tin, tin | es: estaño, y-estaño | fr: et-étain, le-tin, étain | de: [בדיל], [ובדיל], der-tin Num 31:22; Ezek 22:18; Ezek 22:20; Ezek 27:12

2. the plumb (1×) A plumb weight or plummet, used in the construct phrase 'the stone of tin' (Zech 4:10). The dense metal serves as the bob on a builder's plumb line. Spanish la de plomo ('the one of lead') reflects the weighty, hanging function. A symbol of God's exacting measurement of Zerubbabel's temple work. TIN LEAD METALS

en: the-plumb | es: la-de-plomo | fr: étain | de: [הבדיל] Zech 4:10

3. your alloy (1×) Alloy or dross, the base impurity clinging to silver after smelting. In Isaiah 1:25 God vows to smelt away 'your alloy' from Jerusalem. Spanish tu impureza ('your impurity') captures the moral-metallurgical metaphor: sin as a contaminant that must be burned away before the city can be called righteous again. TIN LEAD METALS

en: your-alloy | es: tu-impureza | fr: [בדיליך] | de: [בדיליך] Isa 1:25

בָּדַל H0914 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConsecImperf-3mp (42×)

Separate, set apart (Hifil); be separated, withdraw (Nifal); distinguish between holy and profane (Hifil).

The Hebrew verb badal means fundamentally 'to divide, to separate,' but its richness unfolds across two binyanim. In the Hifil (causative), God himself is the premier subject: he separates light from darkness (Gen 1:4), waters from waters (Gen 1:6-7), and Israel from the nations (Lev 20:26). This same stem consecrates the Levites (Num 8:14; Deut 10:8) and structures the priestly task of distinguishing holy from profane (Lev 10:10). In the Nifal, the emphasis shifts to communal self-separation — Ezra's community separating from the peoples of the land (Ezra 6:21; 9:1). Spanish separar, French séparer, and German absondern track the physical senses, while distinguir and unterscheiden handle the cognitive 'distinguish between.'

1. Hifil: separate, set apart (29×) The Hifil (causative) sense of actively separating, dividing, or setting apart persons or things — whether for physical division, ritual consecration, or divine election. This dominant sense (29 occurrences) begins at creation itself: God separating light from darkness (Gen 1:4), the waters above from below (Gen 1:6-7), and day from night (Gen 1:14, 18). It extends to Israel's consecration: 'I have separated you from the peoples' (Lev 20:26), and to Levitical appointment (Num 8:14; Deut 10:8; 1 Chr 25:1). Spanish separar/apartar, French séparer, and German absondern all capture the causative force. The veil of the tabernacle 'separates' (hivdilah) the Holy Place from the Most Holy (Exod 26:33) — a spatial division with profound theological architecture. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: I-set-apart, and-I-set-apart, and-distinguish | es: Y-separaréis, Y-separó, apartó | fr: [יבדילני], [להבדיל], [מבדלים] | de: [ואבדילה], [ויבדל], [יבדילני] Gen 1:4; Gen 1:6; Gen 1:7; Gen 1:14; Gen 1:18

2. Nifal: be separated, withdraw (10×) The Nifal (passive/reflexive) sense of being separated or separating oneself, withdrawing from a group or community. With 10 occurrences, this form describes both commanded and voluntary self-exclusion: 'Separate yourselves from this congregation' (Num 16:21), the warriors who 'separated themselves' to join David at Ziklag (1 Chr 12:9), and repeatedly in Ezra-Nehemiah where returned exiles 'separated themselves from the peoples of the lands' (Ezra 6:21; 9:1; 10:11; Neh 9:2; 10:28). Spanish apartarse, French se séparer, and German sich absondern all employ reflexive constructions. The Ezra passages are especially important: they establish badal (Nifal) as the technical verb for post-exilic communal boundary-marking. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: and-separate-yourselves, and-separated-themselves, and-was-set-apart | es: Apartaos, Y-se-separaron, el-que-se-separaba | fr: et-séparer, séparer, séparer-vous-mêmes | de: [והנבדל], [והבדלו], [ויבדל] Num 16:21; 1Chr 12:9; 1Chr 23:13; Ezra 6:21; Ezra 9:1

3. Hifil: distinguish, differentiate between (3×) The Hifil sense of making a cognitive or judicial distinction between categories — 'to distinguish, to differentiate' — rather than physically separating objects. Only 3 clear occurrences, all in priestly instruction: Leviticus 10:10, where Aaron's sons must 'distinguish between the holy and the profane, between the unclean and the clean'; Leviticus 11:47, distinguishing between clean and unclean animals; and Ezekiel 22:26, where the priests 'have made no distinction between the holy and the common.' Spanish distinguir, French distinguer, and German unterscheiden replace the physical separation vocabulary, confirming that translators recognize a shift from spatial division to evaluative discernment — a priestly intellectual function at the heart of Torah. SEPARATING AND DIVIDING

en: and-to-distinguish, they-distinguish, to-separate | es: Para-distinguir, Y-para-distinguir, distinguieron | fr: [הבדילו], et-à-distinguish, à-séparer | de: [הבדילו], und-zu-distinguish, zu-absondern Lev 10:10; Lev 11:47; Ezek 22:26

בָּדָל H0915 N-msc (1×)

piece, severed piece (of an ear)

A rare noun denoting a piece or fragment, specifically of an ear that has been torn or severed. Amos uses this graphic image when describing how little the shepherd recovers from the lion's mouth —just a piece of an ear or a corner of a couch. The term emphasizes the fragmentary, nearly worthless remnant that remains after destruction. The vivid imagery serves Amos's oracle about Israel's partial and inadequate deliverance.

(1×) Refers to a small piece of an ear in Amos 3:12, part of a striking metaphor about rescue. Just as a shepherd might recover only tiny fragments (ear piece, couch corner) from a lion, so Israel will be "rescued" with only meager remnants surviving judgment. The term's rarity and graphic specificity create a powerful image of near-total destruction with minimal survival. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: piece-of- | es: pedazo-de- | fr: morceau | de: [בדל] Amos 3:12

בְּדֹלַח H0916 Art / N-ms (2×)

bdellium; aromatic gum resin, yellowish and transparent

An aromatic gum resin, likely yellowish and transparent, used in two quite different comparisons in Scripture. Genesis lists it among the valuable products of the land of Havilah, while Numbers compares its appearance to manna. Ancient and modern interpreters have debated whether this refers to a fragrant gum (the majority view) or to pearls, given divergent ancient translations.

(2×) Genesis 2:12 lists bdellium alongside gold and onyx as products of Havilah, suggesting a valuable commodity. Numbers 11:7 describes manna's appearance: 'its color was like the color of bdellium'—apparently a comparison of visual appearance, suggesting something translucent and yellowish. The multilingual evidence shows ancient uncertainty: the Greek Septuagint gave 'carbuncle' in Genesis but 'crystal' in Numbers; most moderns follow the Latin 'bdellium,' identifying an aromatic transparent gum. The definite article ('the bdellium') suggests a well-known substance. Josephus and later versions support the gum identification—an odoriferous, yellowish, transparent resin collected from trees. The comparison to manna's color favors something translucent rather than opaque pearls. SPICE AROMATIC PERFUME

en: the-bdellium | es: el-bedelio, el-bedelio: | fr: le-bdellium | de: das-Bdellium, der-bdellium Gen 2:12; Num 11:7

בְּדָן H0917 N-proper-ms (2×)

Bedan; personal name of uncertain identification

A personal name appearing in two unrelated contexts: once in Samuel's list of judges (though textual uncertainty exists) and once in Manassite genealogy. The first occurrence is textually problematic, with many scholars suggesting it represents a corruption of 'Barak.' The etymology may relate to a name meaning 'servant,' though this remains speculative.

(2×) In 1 Samuel 12:11, Samuel lists deliverers including 'Bedan,' but this name appears nowhere else in Judges' narratives. The Septuagint and Syriac read 'Barak' instead, widely accepted as the original reading (cf. Judges 4-5). A different Bedan appears as a Manassite in genealogy (1 Chronicles 7:17). The multilingual glosses simply transliterate (Bedan, Bedán), treating it as a proper name. The textual problem in Samuel makes the first reference uncertain —possibly a scribal error for Barak, or perhaps a judge otherwise unrecorded. The Chronicles occurrence stands without this difficulty, representing a legitimate Manassite name, possibly a shortened form of Abdan (servant). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bedan | es: Bedán | fr: Bedan, [בדן] | de: Bedan, [בדן] 1Sam 12:11; 1Chr 7:17

בָּדַק H0918 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (1×)

to repair, to mend (buildings)

A denominative verb meaning to repair or restore, appearing only in Chronicles' account of Josiah's temple restoration. The infinitive form appears alongside "to strengthen," describing the workers' task of repairing and reinforcing the temple structure. The verb derives from the noun bedeq (breach, gap), indicating the work of closing gaps and mending damaged structures. This specialized term fits the building and restoration vocabulary of the Chronicler.

(1×) Describes temple repair work in 2 Chronicles 34:10, during Josiah's religious reforms. The infinitival construction "to repair and to strengthen the house" indicates the dual task of mending breaches and reinforcing weak points. This verb appears only here, part of the technical vocabulary for building maintenance and restoration that characterizes the temple repair accounts in Kings and Chronicles. STRENGTHENING AND POWER

en: to-repair | es: para-reparar | fr: [לבדוק] | de: [לבדוק] 2Chr 34:10

בֶּדֶק H0919 Prep-l / N-msc (10×)

Breach, gap, crack — structural damage in a wall or building requiring repair, especially in temple restoration

The noun בֶּדֶק (bedeq) denotes a breach, crack, or gap in a structure — the kind of deterioration that demands masonry repair. Nearly all occurrences concentrate in 2 Kings 12, where young King Joash organizes the financing and execution of temple repairs after years of neglect under previous regimes. The repeated phrase בֶּדֶק הַבַּיִת ('breach of the house/temple') becomes almost a technical term for structural restoration work. Ezekiel 27:9 and 27:27 extend the image to ship-caulking, where Byblos's elders repair the 'breaches' of Tyre's merchant vessels. Spanish 'grieta/reparación' and English 'breach/repair' both oscillate between the damage and its remedy.

breach, gap, crack (in a structure) (10×) A breach, crack, or structural gap in a building — especially the Jerusalem temple — requiring professional repair. Dominates 2 Kings 12:5-12 (paralleled in 2 Chr 24:4-12), where Joash directs priestly and artisan labor to mend the temple's deterioration (בֶּדֶק הַבַּיִת). Also used of ship-caulking in Ezekiel 27:9, 27, where the craftsmen of Gebal repair the 'seams' or 'leaks' of Tyre's trading fleet. The term thus spans architectural and nautical maintenance contexts. Spanish 'grietas del templo' and French 'brèches' convey the sense of structural damage awaiting restoration. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: breach, breach-of, for-breach-of | es: grieta, grieta-de, para-grieta-de | fr: brèche, brèche-de, pour-brèche-de | de: [בדקך], [בדקך], breach 2Kgs 12:5; 2Kgs 12:6; 2Kgs 12:7

בִּדְקַר H0920 N-proper-ms (1×)
Bidkar (personal name, officer under Jehu)
A personal name belonging to an Israelite military officer who served under Jehu during his coup against the house of Ahab. Bidkar is identified as Jehu's captain or third officer when Jehu reminds him of an earlier prophetic oracle against Ahab. The name appears only in this dramatic context, as Jehu and Bidkar together witness the fulfillment of prophecy. Consistently transliterated across languages, it functions as a historical proper name.

(1×) Identifies Jehu's military captain in 2 Kings 9:25, present during the execution of King Joram and the fulfillment of Elijah's prophecy against Ahab's house. Bidkar serves as both participant and witness to these dramatic events. The name is preserved without translation across language traditions, indicating its recognition as a proper historical name with no independent semantic meaning beyond personal identification. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bidkar | es: Bidcar | fr: Bidkar | de: Bidkar 2Kgs 9:25

בְּדַר H0921 Conj-w / V-Piel-Imp-mp (1×)
scatter (Aramaic Piel imperative)
An Aramaic verb meaning to scatter or disperse, appearing in Nebuchadnezzar's dream where a voice commands the scattering of animals from under a great tree. The imperative form indicates a direct command. Cognate with Hebrew bazar and Syriac equivalents, the verb suggests forceful dispersal or spreading abroad. The context is apocalyptic imagery where the destruction of the tree drives away those who had found shelter under it.

(1×) Commands the scattering of animals in Daniel 4:14, part of the heavenly decree against the symbolic tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The Piel imperative (intensified form) suggests forceful dispersal—driving the beasts away from their shelter. This Aramaic verb parallels the Hebrew bazar, both indicating the spreading or scattering of people or animals, here symbolizing the king's coming isolation and loss of kingdom. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING en: and-scatter | es: y-esparcid | fr: et-disperser | de: [ובדרו] Dan 4:14

בֹּהוּ H0922 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)
emptiness, void, wasteland; paired with tohu to describe primordial chaos or judgment desolation
A poetic term for emptiness or void, appearing only in the phrase 'tohu wabohu' (formless and void) or in similar contexts. Genesis 1:2 describes the pre-creation earth as 'tohu wabohu.' Jeremiah uses the same phrase to depict the earth under God's judgment returning to chaos (Jeremiah 4:23). Isaiah employs it metaphorically: God will stretch over Edom 'the line of tohu and the stones of bohu'—using surveying imagery for destruction rather than construction (Isaiah 34:11). The word evokes primordial chaos or eschatological undoing.

(3×) Emptiness or void, used to describe chaos—either primordial (Genesis 1:2) or as a result of judgment. Jeremiah's vision of devastated Judah echoes creation language reversed: 'I looked at the earth, and behold, it was tohu wabohu' (Jeremiah 4:23). Isaiah pictures Edom measured with 'the line of confusion (tohu) and stones of emptiness (bohu)' (Isaiah 34:11), inverting the tools of building into instruments of ruin. EMPTINESS AND VANITY en: and-void, of-emptiness | es: de-vacío, y-vacía | fr: [בהו], [ובהו], et-vide | de: [בהו], [ובהו], und-leer Gen 1:2; Isa 34:11; Jer 4:23

בַּהַט H0923 N-ms (1×)
costly stone (porphyry or alabaster)
A rare noun denoting a costly decorative stone, possibly porphyry, used in the Persian royal palace pavement described in Esther. The Egyptian loanword suggests a luxury building material known from Egyptian architecture. Listed among other precious stones (marble, etc.), it indicates the splendor of Ahasuerus's palace in Susa. The exact identification is uncertain, but the context clearly indicates a valuable, aesthetically impressive stone used in royal construction.

(1×) Refers to a costly decorative stone in the palace pavement described in Esther 1:6. The stone is listed alongside marble and other precious materials, emphasizing the opulence of the Persian court. Most likely porphyry (Spanish "pórfido"), an Egyptian import highly valued in ancient architecture. The Egyptian etymology (behiti/behat) supports identification with a stone known from Egyptian building traditions and trade. STONE AND ROCK en: alabaster-and- | es: pórfido | fr: [בהט] | de: [בהט] Esth 1:6

בְּהִילוּ H0924 Prep-b / N-fs (1×)
haste, urgency
An Aramaic noun meaning haste or urgency, appearing in Ezra's account of the opposition to Jerusalem's rebuilding. The expression "in haste" describes how quickly the opponents acted to stop the Jewish construction work once they received royal authorization. The term conveys both speed and urgency of action. Cognate forms appear in Targumic Aramaic, part of the administrative vocabulary of the Persian period.

(1×) Describes the urgent speed with which Jerusalem's opponents acted in Ezra 4:23 after receiving the king's letter authorizing them to stop the building work. The prepositional phrase "in haste" emphasizes they wasted no time in enforcing the decree. This Aramaic term fits the documentary style of Ezra's Persian-period sources, capturing the adversaries' eagerness to halt Jewish restoration efforts. ALARM TERROR HASTE en: in-haste | es: apresuradamente | fr: [בבהילו] | de: [בבהילו] Ezra 4:23

בָּהִיר H0925 Adj-ms (1×)
bright, brilliant (of light)
An adjective describing brilliant or dazzling light, appearing in Job's meditation on God's inaccessible glory. The context suggests light so bright it cannot be looked upon directly, seen in the clouds after a clearing storm. This rare term emphasizes not just brightness but a quality of brilliance that overwhelms the eye. Elihu uses it to point toward God's unapproachable radiance, which precedes his description of divine glory coming from the north.

(1×) Describes overwhelmingly bright light in Job 37:21, which cannot be seen directly because of its brilliance "in the skies." Elihu's speech uses this image to approach the theme of God's unapproachable glory—just as brilliant light in the atmosphere cannot be gazed upon, so God's majesty exceeds human capacity to behold. The term conveys not just luminosity but dazzling, eye-overwhelming brightness. BRIGHTNESS AND SPLENDOR

en: bright | es: brillante | fr: בהיר | de: [בהיר] Job 37:21

בָּהַל H0926 Conj-w / V-Nifal-ConjPerf-3cp (39×)

To be terrified or dismayed; to terrify or alarm someone; to hasten, hurry, or act precipitately.

Bahal is a verb of two semantic worlds that share an undercurrent of agitation. In one world it means to be terrified, shaken to the core — the reaction of Joseph's brothers when he reveals his identity (Gen 45:3), or of Belshazzar at the handwriting on the wall. In the other, it means to hasten or hurry, often with a sense of rashness, as in Ecclesiastes' warnings against hasty speech and quick anger (Eccl 5:2; 7:9). The Syriac cognate actually means 'to be quiet' — the opposite — which highlights how the root's core is inner disturbance that manifests as either panic or reckless haste.

1. be terrified, dismayed (Nifal) (22×) The Nifal reflexive-passive sense of being terrified, dismayed, or deeply shaken — twenty-two of thirty-nine occurrences, making this the dominant meaning. Joseph's brothers 'were dismayed at his presence' (Gen 45:3); the mighty men of Moab are seized with trembling (Exod 15:15); Saul's medium at En-dor 'was terrified' at the apparition (1 Sam 28:21). Spanish aterrorizado/aterrado and German erschreckt converge on the terror-fear axis. The Nifal form marks the subject as the experiencer of overwhelming dread, often paired with verbs of trembling (charad) or sinking hands (rafu yadav), as in 2 Sam 4:1 and Ezek 7:27. TERROR AND AGITATION
en: I-am-dismayed, I-am-terrified, a-terrifying-one | es: Y-se-aterrorizarán, apresurada, estaba-aterrado | fr: [ונבהלו], [נבהלו], [נבהלתי] | de: [ונבהלו], [נבהלו], [נבהלתי] Gen 45:3; Exod 15:15; Judg 20:41; 1Sam 28:21; 2Sam 4:1

2. terrify, alarm someone (Piel) (7×) The Piel causative-terror sense: to terrify, alarm, or frighten another person — seven occurrences. Sennacherib's messengers speak to terrify Jerusalem's defenders (2 Chr 32:18); adversaries conspire 'to terrify them' from building the temple (Ezra 4:4); God's terrors 'are arrayed against' Job (Job 6:4). The Piel morphology signals the subject as agent inflicting terror on another, the active counterpart of sense 1's passive experience. Spanish aterrorizar and French troubler/effrayer mark this transitive causation distinctly from the intransitive Nifal. PRONOUNS AND MIXED
en: and-frightening, and-terrifies-you, and-to-terrify-them | es: (y-aterrorizándolos), aterrorízalos, lo-turbarán | fr: et-se-hâter-toi, et-être-troublé, se-hâter-moi | de: [ולבהלם], [יבהלהו], eilt 2Chr 32:18; Ezra 4:4; Job 22:10; Job 23:16; Ps 2:5

3. be hasty, act in haste (Nifal) (4×) The Nifal sense of being hasty or acting precipitately — four occurrences, all in Wisdom Literature. Proverbs 28:22 warns that a person with an 'evil eye' hastens after wealth; Ecclesiastes cautions against being 'hasty in spirit to be angry' (7:9) or letting your heart 'be hasty to utter a word before God' (5:2). The semantic shift from terror to haste is natural: both involve agitation and loss of measured composure. Spanish apresurarse ('to hurry oneself') and German eilen ('to hurry') confirm that translators read these as genuine haste rather than fear. Ecclesiastes 8:3 similarly counsels against impulsive departure from the king's presence. HASTE AND URGENCY
en: be-alarmed, be-hasty, be-quick | es: Se-apresura, te-apresures | fr: se-hâter | de: eilt Prov 28:22; Eccl 5:2; Eccl 7:9; Eccl 8:3

4. be hastened (Pual) (2×) The Pual passive sense of being hastened or gotten in haste — two occurrences. In Esth 8:14 the royal couriers 'were hastened' by the king's urgent command; in Prov 20:21 an inheritance 'gotten hastily' will not be blessed in the end. Spanish apresuradamente ('hurriedly') and the English 'hastened/hastily' both mark the passive voice: the subject is not choosing to hurry but is being hurried along by external force or circumstance. HASTE AND URGENCY
en: (gotten-hastily), hastened | es: (adquirida-apresuradamente), apresurados | fr: se-hâter, être-troublé | de: eilt Esth 8:14; Prov 20:21

5. hasten, hurry someone (Piel) (2×) The Piel causative-haste sense: to hasten or hurry someone along — two occurrences. In 2 Chr 35:21 Pharaoh Neco tells Josiah that God has commanded him 'to hurry' his campaign; in Esth 2:9 the king's eunuch 'hastened' to provide Esther with cosmetics and attendants. This parallels sense 2's Piel structure but with haste rather than terror as the caused state. Spanish apresurar ('to hurry someone') and the transitive construction confirm the causative semantics. HASTE AND URGENCY
en: and-he-hastened, to-hurry-me | es: que-me-apresure, y-se-apresuró | fr: et-être-troublé, être-troublé | de: [לבהלני], und-eilt 2Chr 35:21; Esth 2:9

6. cause to hasten (Hifil) (2×) The Hifil intensive-causative sense: to cause someone to hurry or to rush someone out — two occurrences. In 2 Chr 26:20 the priests 'hurried' the leprous King Uzziah out of the temple; in Esth 6:14 the king's eunuchs 'hastened to bring' Haman to the banquet. The Hifil stem adds urgency and external compulsion beyond the Piel's simpler causation. Spanish sacar apresuradamente ('to take out hurriedly') captures the force, and the contexts both involve physical removal under pressure, distinguishing this from sense 5's more neutral hastening. HASTE AND URGENCY
en: and-they-hastened, and-they-hurried-him | es: y-apresuraron, y-lo-sacaron-apresuradamente | fr: et-être-troublé | de: [ויבהלוהו], und-eilt 2Chr 26:20; Esth 6:14

בְּהַל H0927 V-Piel-Imperf.Jus-3ms / 2ms (11×)

To alarm, terrify, or dismay; also used adverbially for 'in haste,' conveying urgency born from alarm. Aramaic, found only in Daniel.

An Aramaic verb appearing exclusively in the book of Daniel, where visions from God produce visceral terror. The Pael stem captures the psychological shock of divine revelation: Nebuchadnezzar's thoughts 'alarmed him' (Dan 4:19), and Daniel himself was 'dismayed' by visions of the four beasts (Dan 7:15, 28). Belshazzar's terror at the handwriting on the wall is described with the same root – his face changed and his lords were 'alarmed' (Dan 5:6, 9-10). The Hitpael infinitive develops into an adverbial sense 'in haste,' used when Arioch brings Daniel 'in haste' before the king (Dan 2:25) and when Darius rushes 'in haste' to the lions' den (Dan 6:19) – urgency that springs from alarm.

1. to alarm, terrify, dismay (8×) To alarm, terrify, or cause dismay (Pael and Hitpaal). Describes the overwhelming psychological effect of prophetic dreams and divine visions in Daniel. Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the great tree 'alarmed' him (Dan 4:5, 19), and Daniel's own spirit was 'troubled' by the vision of four beasts (Dan 7:15, 28). Belshazzar's encounter with the divine hand writing on the wall uses this same root to depict terror so intense it changes his countenance (Dan 5:6, 9). Spanish 'turbar/espantar' and French 'effrayer' both capture the deep disturbance involved. ALARM TERROR HASTE
en: alarm-you, alarmed, alarmed-him | es: lo-turbaban, lo-turbaron, me-espantaban | fr: effrayer | de: Bestuerzung Dan 4:5; Dan 4:19; Dan 5:6; Dan 5:9

2. in haste, hastily (3×) In haste, hastily – the Hitpael infinitive with preposition beth used adverbially. The semantic link to alarm is preserved: one hastens because one is agitated or alarmed. Arioch brings Daniel 'in haste' before Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 2:25), officials rush to the fiery furnace (Dan 3:24), and Darius hurries to the lions' den at dawn (Dan 6:19). Spanish 'apresuradamente' and 'con prisa' clarify that the urgency here is behavioral rather than emotional – alarm translated into rapid action. ALARM TERROR HASTE
en: and-in-haste, in-haste | es: apresuradamente, con-prisa, y-apresuradamente | fr: effrayer, et-effrayer | de: Bestuerzung, und-Bestuerzung Dan 2:25; Dan 3:24; Dan 6:19

בְּהָלָה H0928 Conj-w / N-fp (4×)

Sudden terror, dismay, or calamity — alarming ruin that strikes without warning

Denotes a sudden, overwhelming terror or catastrophic ruin that overtakes its victims with shocking swiftness. In Leviticus 26:16 it heads a list of covenant curses God will appoint against the disobedient. Psalm 78:33 pairs it with futility — years consumed 'in sudden terror.' Isaiah 65:23 promises that the redeemed will not bear children 'for calamity,' reversing the curse. The Assyrian cognate beltu ('terror') confirms the visceral dread this word carries. Multilingual renderings — Spanish 'terror,' German 'Schrecken' — uniformly point to alarming, destabilizing fear.

(4×) Sudden terror, dismay, or catastrophic ruin arriving without warning. Part of the covenant-curse vocabulary in Leviticus 26:16, it also appears in Psalm 78:33 where God ends Israel's years 'in sudden terror,' and in Jeremiah 15:8 describing the panic brought upon a mother of warriors. Isaiah 65:23 uses the word in negation — the blessed will not bring forth children for calamity. German 'Schrecken' and Spanish 'terror' consistently render this as overwhelming, destabilizing dread. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-terrors, for-calamity, in-terror | es: en-terror, para-calamidad, terror | fr: [ובהלות], [לבהלה], dans-effroi | de: Schrecken, [ובהלות], [לבהלה] Lev 26:16; Ps 78:33; Isa 65:23; Jer 15:8

בְּהֵמָה H0929 N-fsc / 2ms (190×)

Beast, animal, cattle — a large land creature, either wild or domesticated; collectively, livestock or animals in general.

Behemah is one of the Hebrew Bible's most common animal terms, covering everything from wild beasts to farm livestock. In creation accounts (Gen 1:24-25), it names a whole category of land creatures distinct from birds and creeping things. Yet in laws about Sabbath rest (Exod 20:10) and ownership (Gen 36:6), the same word narrows to domesticated herds — the cattle and livestock a household depends on. German translations make this beautifully visible: 'Tier' for the generic beast, but 'Vieh' for owned livestock. The famous plural behemot in Job 40:15 draws on this word's broadest sense to name a creature of incomprehensible power.

1. beast, large animal (generic) (133×) Any large land animal or quadruped, used generically for beasts of the field or animals as a class distinct from humanity, birds, fish, and creeping things. German renders this sense as 'Tier' (animal) while Spanish uses 'bestia/animal.' Prominent in judgment oracles where destruction sweeps 'from man to beast' (Exod 9:25; Jer 50:3; Ps 135:8). In Gen 6:7 and 7:23, behemah encompasses all large creatures caught in the Flood's devastation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-animal, and-beast, beast | es: animal, bestia, ganado | fr: bête, et-bête, et-dans-ils | de: Tier, und-Tier, und-in-sie Gen 6:7; Gen 7:23; Exod 9:9; Exod 9:22; Exod 9:25

2. livestock, cattle (domesticated) (57×) Domesticated herd animals — cattle, livestock — kept for agricultural labor, food, or economic value. The possessive constructions ('your beast,' 'his beast') signal ownership and husbandry. German consistently shifts to 'Vieh' (livestock) and Spanish to 'ganado' (cattle/herd) in these contexts. Central to covenant life: Sabbath rest extends to your behemah (Exod 20:10), and the righteous person cares for the life of his behemah (Prov 12:10). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-the-beast, the-beast, the-livestock | es: el-ganado, tu-ganado, y-en-bestia | fr: et-dans-le-bête, le-bétail, le-bête | de: Vieh, das-Vieh, dein-Vieh Gen 1:24; Gen 1:25; Gen 1:26; Gen 2:20; Gen 3:14

בְּהֵמוֹת H0930 N-ms (1×)

Behemoth (hippopotamus or mythic creature)

A mysterious creature described in Job 40, traditionally identified as the hippopotamus but perhaps representing a mythic primordial beast. The plural intensive form suggests a creature of superlative magnitude. God presents Behemoth as an example of divine creative power beyond human comprehension or control. Whether literal hippopotamus or symbolic chaos creature, Behemoth embodies raw power and untamable strength. The term appears also in Psalm 73 metaphorically.

(1×) Designates the mighty creature described in Job 40:15, which God presents to Job as evidence of divine power. The intensive plural form suggests "the beast par excellence." Descriptions fit the hippopotamus (grass-eating, river-dwelling, enormous strength), though some scholars see mythological elements. The point is God's creative sovereignty over creatures humans cannot tame or comprehend, challenging Job's limited perspective on divine governance. LIVING CREATURES

en: Behemoth | es: Behemot | fr: בהמות | de: Behemot Job 40:15

בֹּהֶן H0931 N-msc (16×)

Thumb or big toe — the extremity anointed in priestly consecration and purification rites

A noun referring to the thumb of the hand or the big toe of the foot, always appearing in ritual contexts where both extremities are named together. In the consecration of Aaron and his sons, blood from the offering is applied to the right thumb and right big toe (Exod 29:20; Lev 8:23-24). The identical ritual appears in the purification of healed lepers, where oil and blood mark these extremities as signs of cleansing (Lev 14:14, 17, 25, 28). Outside ritual law, the plural form appears strikingly in Judges 1:6-7, where the severed thumbs and big toes of Adoni-bezek become evidence of retributive justice. Spanish 'pulgar' and 'dedo gordo' helpfully distinguish the hand and foot usages.

thumb / big toe (body part) (16×) The thumb (when paired with 'hand') or big toe (when paired with 'foot'), always referring to the larger digit of the respective extremity. Nearly every occurrence is ritual: the consecration of priests involves daubing sacrificial blood on the right thumb and right big toe (Exod 29:20; Lev 8:23-24), and the purification of lepers follows the same pattern with blood and oil (Lev 14:14-28). The sole non-ritual use in Judges 1:6-7 — where Adoni-bezek's thumbs and big toes are cut off — still echoes the body-part's symbolic significance as a marker of capacity and agency. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -the-thumbs-of, big-toe-of, the-big-toe-of | es: con-pulgares-de, dedo-gordo-de, pulgar-de | fr: -le-thumbs-de, avec-le-thumbs-de, grand-orteil-de | de: -der-thumbs-von, der-gross-toe-von, der-thumb-von Exod 29:20; Lev 8:23; Lev 8:24

בֹּהַן H0932 N-proper (2×)

Bohan; personal name used to designate a boundary stone

A personal name meaning possibly 'thumb' or 'closing/covering,' preserved in the designation of a boundary marker between Judah and Benjamin: 'the stone of Bohan son of Reuben.' This stone served as a recognizable landmark in territorial descriptions. The name's etymology remains debated.

(2×) The 'stone of Bohan son of Reuben' marked the boundary between Judah and Benjamin (Joshua 15:6; 18:17). The designation preserves the name of a Reubenite, though nothing else is known of this individual. Whether Bohan erected the stone or it was named after him for other reasons is unclear. The name may relate to בֹּהֶן (thumb), suggesting physical characteristics or symbolic meaning. Multilingual glosses simply transliterate (Bohan, Boján), treating it as an opaque proper name. The patronymic 'son of Reuben' is unusual in geographical designations, perhaps indicating this Bohan was a notable early settler or boundary commissioner from the tribe of Reuben, or that the stone itself resembled a thumb. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bohan | es: Boján | fr: Bohan | de: Bohan Josh 15:6; Josh 18:17

בֹּהַק H0933 N-ms (1×)

harmless skin eruption (bohak)

A medical term for a harmless, non-contagious skin condition appearing in Levitical purity laws. Unlike serious skin diseases that rendered one unclean, bohak was explicitly deemed non-threatening and did not require quarantine. The condition involved pale or white spots on the skin but lacked the characteristics of serious disease. Cognate terms appear in Aramaic and Arabic, suggesting a recognized dermatological category in ancient Near Eastern medicine.

(1×) Identifies a benign skin eruption in Leviticus 13:39, distinguished from serious conditions requiring isolation. The priestly diagnosis declares bohak clean and non-threatening, unlike other skin diseases. The Hebrew term (and its cognates) likely refers to a specific dermatological condition recognized as harmless—perhaps a fungal infection or pigmentation disorder. The ritual concern is distinguishing truly dangerous conditions from benign ones. SKIN DISEASE LEPROSY

en: tetter | es: bohaq | fr: tetter | de: tetter Lev 13:39

בַּהֶרֶת H0934 Art / N-fs (12×)

baheret – a bright or white spot on the skin, a diagnostic sign in the Levitical purity laws for skin disease

The feminine noun baheret (Hebrew בַּהֶרֶת, from the root b-h-r 'to be bright') denotes a bright or white spot on human skin, serving as a key diagnostic indicator in the Levitical purity regulations of Leviticus 13-14. When such a spot appeared, the person was brought to the priest for examination to determine whether it constituted tzaraat (traditionally 'leprosy,' more broadly a range of skin conditions rendering one ritually unclean). The priest assessed its depth, the color of hair within it, and whether it had spread (Lev 13:2, 4, 19, 23-26, 28, 38-39). A baheret that remained superficial and did not spread was declared clean; one that deepened or exhibited white hair could indicate active disease. All twelve occurrences are confined to Leviticus 13-14, confirming a single technical dermatological-cultic sense.

bright spot (skin condition) (12×) A bright or white spot on the skin examined by the priest under Levitical purity laws to diagnose potential tzaraat (Lev 13:2, 4, 19, 23-26, 28, 38-39). Assessed for depth, hair color, and spread. Spanish mancha-brillante, French tache-blanche, and German heller-Fleck render one specialized dermatological-cultic term. BRIGHT SKIN SPOT

en: and-for-the-bright-spot, bright-spot, bright-spots | es: en-la-mancha-brillante, la-mancha-brillante, mancha-brillante | fr: bright-tache, dans-le-bright-tache, et-pour-le-bright-tache | de: der-hell-Fleck, hell-Fleck, hell-spots Lev 13:2; Lev 13:4; Lev 13:19; Lev 13:23; Lev 13:24

בּוֹא H0935 Conj-w / V-Hifil-Imp-mp (2592×)

To come, arrive, enter; in Hifil, to bring; in Hofal, to be brought. One of Hebrew's most frequent verbs of motion.

Bo is the quintessential Hebrew verb of arrival and entry — so common that it appears in nearly every chapter of the Hebrew Bible. At its most basic, it describes motion toward a reference point: Abraham 'came' to Hebron (Gen 13:18), visitors 'arrived' at Sodom (Gen 19:1), the word of the LORD 'came' to Abram (Gen 15:1). But bo also specializes for crossing a threshold — 'entering' the ark, a city, a tent, or the promised land — and in this narrower sense it contrasts with yatsa ('to go out'). The Hifil causative stem transforms bo into a bringing-verb: Joseph's brothers 'brought' gifts (Gen 43:26), and God 'brought' Israel out of Egypt and into Canaan. The multilingual evidence neatly tracks the semantic split: Spanish distinguishes vino ('came') from entro ('entered') from trajo ('brought'), while Korean toggles between oda ('come'), deureogada ('enter'), and gajyeoda ('bring').

1. come, arrive (Qal) (2413×) The dominant Qal sense: to come, arrive, reach a destination — 2,413 occurrences covering general motion toward a reference point. This encompasses narrative arrivals ('and Abraham came to Hebron,' Gen 13:18), prophetic formulas ('the word of the LORD came to...'), and eschatological expectations ('the day of the LORD will come'). Arabic ja'a/ata, Korean oda/watta, Swahili kuja/fika, Spanish vino/llego, and German kam all deploy basic arrival vocabulary. The verb's flexibility allows it to cover physical, metaphorical, and temporal 'coming' — events 'come to pass,' plagues 'come upon' Egypt, and blessings 'come upon' the obedient. GOING AND LEADING en: and-came, and-he-came | es: Y-vino, y-llegó, y-vino | fr: et-il-vint, et-vint | de: und-er-kam, und-es-kam, und-kam Gen 13:18; Gen 14:13; Gen 20:3; Gen 23:2; Gen 24:30

2. enter a physical space (97×) Split from sense 85569. Criteria: Spatial entry into bounded location: entering houses, cities, tents, the ark, defined territories

en: and-came, and-he-went, and-he-went-in | es: Y-entró, entraréis, entréis | fr: devra-entrer, et-alla, et-alla-dans | de: du-dort-ankommst, du-kommen, du-soll-kommen Gen 7:7; Gen 19:22; Gen 19:31; Gen 24:32; Gen 31:33

3. bring, carry to (Hifil) (62×) Hifil causative: to bring, fetch, carry, or deliver someone or something to a location — 62 occurrences. Isaac asks Esau to 'bring' him game (Gen 27:4), Joseph's brothers 'brought' Benjamin to Egypt (Gen 43:15), and God promises to 'bring' Israel into the land. Arabic ahdara ('to bring/present'), Korean gajyeoda/deryeoda ('bring a thing/bring a person'), Swahili leta ('bring'), and Spanish trajo/trajeron all use dedicated causative-motion vocabulary. The Hifil stem morphology is confirmed by cross-linguistic evidence: every major target language shifts to a distinct 'bring' lexeme rather than simply adding 'cause to come.' GOING AND LEADING en: and-He-brought, and-brought, and-they-brought | es: Y-me-trajo, trajeron, traían | fr: apporta, et-apporta, et-il-vint | de: brachte, sie-brachte, und-brachte Gen 27:4; Gen 27:7; Gen 27:12; Gen 42:19; Gen 42:20

4. sexual euphemism (bo el) (14×) Split from sense 85569. Criteria: Idiom 'come in to' for sexual relations (Gen 16:4; 19:33); euphemistic use of spatial entry metaphor

en: I-will-go, and-go, and-he-went | es: Entraré, Y-entró, entraré | fr: et-alla, et-alla-dans, et-aller | de: du-eingehst, ich-will-eingehen, ich-wird-gehen Gen 16:4; Gen 19:33; Gen 19:34; Gen 29:23; Gen 29:30

5. be brought (Hofal) (5×) Hofal passive: to be brought, be carried in, be led — only 5 occurrences, making it the rarest stem of this verb. Joseph's brothers fear they 'are being brought' into the steward's house (Gen 43:18), silver 'was brought' into the temple (2 Kgs 12:9), and the book of the law 'was brought' to the king (2 Kgs 22:4). Arabic majlub/mudkhal ('that which is brought'), Korean deullyeobonaejeotda, and Swahili letwa ('-be brought') all use passive morphology, confirming genuine voice distinction. The rarity reflects Hebrew's general preference for active constructions even when the agent is unstated. GOING AND LEADING en: are-brought, the-brought, they-were-brought | es: el-traído, fueron-llevados, la-traída | fr: ils-étaient-apporta, le-apporta, sont-apporta | de: der-brachte, sie-gebracht-worden-waren, werden-gebracht Gen 43:18; 2Kgs 12:9; 2Kgs 12:13; 2Kgs 22:4

בּוּז H0936 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3fs (12×)

buz – to despise, scorn, hold in contempt; to treat with disdain as worthless or beneath regard

The verb buz ('despise, scorn') expresses active contempt – not mere indifference but a willful holding of something or someone in low esteem. Its home is primarily wisdom literature, where it voices the moral logic of Proverbs: 'Fools despise wisdom and instruction' (Prov 1:7), and even a thief caught stealing is not despised if he steals out of hunger (Prov 6:30). The word also surfaces in prophetic speech, where God's name or his people are despised. Unlike the near-synonym ma'as ('reject'), buz emphasizes the subjective attitude of contempt rather than the formal act of rejection. Spanish despreciar, French mepriser, and German verachten all converge on this single sense of scornful disdain.

despise, scorn (12×) To hold in contempt or scorn, treating someone or something as worthless. Dominant in Proverbs: fools despise wisdom (Prov 1:7), a hungry thief is not despised (Prov 6:30). Emphasizes the subjective attitude of disdain rather than formal rejection. Spanish despreciar, French mepriser, and German verachten confirm one unified sense of active contempt. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: and-scorns, despise, despised | es: El-que-desprecia, desprecian, despreciará | fr: et-mépriser, mépriser, on-le-mépriserait | de: [בוז], [בז], [בזו] Prov 1:7; Prov 6:30; Prov 11:12; Prov 13:13; Prov 14:21

בּוּז H0937 Art / N-ms (11×)

Contempt, scorn — the disdainful dismissal of a person or thing regarded as worthless or shameful

The noun בּוּז (buz) denotes the attitude and expression of contempt — the scornful dismissal of someone deemed worthless. In the wisdom literature, Job describes how the prosperous heap contempt upon the stumbling (Job 12:5) and how even outcasts despise him (Job 12:21). He confesses fear of the contempt of the multitude (Job 31:34). The psalmist pleads to be delivered from contempt and reproach (Ps 31:18; 119:22) and cries out as one who has 'had more than enough of the scorn of those at ease' (Ps 123:3-4). Genesis 38:23 uses it more mildly — Judah prefers to let Tamar keep his pledge lest 'we become a contempt.' Spanish 'desprecio' and French 'mépris' both capture the social sting of dismissive scorn.

contempt, scorn (11×) Contempt, scorn, or disdainful dismissal directed at a person or thing considered worthless or shameful. Judah fears becoming 'a laughingstock' if his dealings with Tamar become public (Gen 38:23). Job's speeches are saturated with it: the prosperous pour contempt on the stumbling (Job 12:5), nobles are treated with contempt (Job 12:21), and Job fears public scorn (Job 31:34). The psalmist pleads for deliverance from the contempt of the proud and self-satisfied (Ps 31:18; 119:22; 123:3-4). Proverbs 12:8 warns that the twisted of heart will fall into contempt. Spanish 'desprecio' and English 'contempt' both convey the social and moral weight of the dismissal. CONTEMPT SCORN
en: a-disgrace, and-contempt, and-contempt-of | es: de-desprecio, del-desprecio-de, despreciada | fr: dans-mépris, et-dans-mépris, et-בּוּז | de: [בּוּז], [ובוז], [לבוז] Gen 38:23; Job 12:5; Job 12:21; Job 31:34; Ps 31:18

בּוּז H0938 N-proper-ms (3×)
Buz, a personal and tribal name; son of Nahor, associated with Arabian tribes
A name borne by Nahor's second son (Abraham's nephew) and the Arabian tribe descended from him. Buz appears in the Table of Nations as Abraham's extended family (Genesis 22:21). The tribe of Buz is mentioned alongside Dedan and Tema in Jeremiah's oracle against Arabian peoples (Jeremiah 25:23), suggesting a location in northern Arabia. Additionally, a Gadite named Buz appears in Chronicles (1 Chronicles 5:14). The name connects patriarchal genealogy with later tribal geography.

(3×) A personal name (Nahor's son in Genesis 22:21; a Gadite in 1 Chronicles 5:14) and a tribal name for an Arabian group mentioned with Dedan and Tema (Jeremiah 25:23). The tribal reference situates Buz in the network of northern Arabian peoples, linking ancestral genealogies to the geopolitical landscape of Jeremiah's era. CONTEMPT SCORN
en: Buz | es: Buz | fr: Buz, [בוז] | de: Bus, [בוז] Gen 22:21; 1Chr 5:14; Jer 25:23

בּוּזָה H0939 N-fs (1×)
contempt, object of scorn
A noun denoting contempt or the state of being scorned, appearing in Nehemiah's prayer responding to mockery from opponents. The builders of Jerusalem's wall had become "an object of contempt" to their enemies. The term captures both the act of despising and the condition of being despised. Derived from the verb buz (to despise), it expresses the humiliation and scorn heaped upon the vulnerable Jewish community attempting reconstruction.

(1×) Describes the condition of being despised in Nehemiah 4:4, as the Jewish builders became objects of mockery to Sanballat and Tobiah. The phrase "we have become contempt" captures their vulnerable, scorned position. Nehemiah's prayer asks God to return this contempt upon their enemies' heads. The term conveys not just an attitude but a social status—being regarded with disdain and treated accordingly. CONTEMPT AND SCORN
en: despised | es: despreciados | fr: [בזוה] | de: [בזוה] Neh 4:4

בּוּזִי H0940 Art / N-proper-ms (2×)
Buzite; gentilic indicating descent from Buz
An ethnic or family designation meaning 'descended from Buz,' used exclusively for Elihu's father Barachel in the book of Job. The Buzites traced their ancestry to Buz, Abraham's nephew (Genesis 22:21), placing them among Aramean peoples related to Israel. The designation appears with the definite article, 'the Buzite,' marking it as a known ethnic group.

(2×) Elihu is introduced as 'Barachel the Buzite' (Job 32:2, 6), identifying his family origin among the descendants of Buz, son of Nahor and Milcah (Genesis 22:21). This places Elihu's lineage among the Aramean peoples of northern Mesopotamia, related to but distinct from Israelites. The definite article in both occurrences ('the Buzite') indicates a recognized ethnic designation. Buz is also mentioned alongside Dedan as an Arabian people in Jeremiah 25:23, suggesting the Buzites inhabited regions between Aram and Arabia. The careful ethnic identification in Job distinguishes Elihu from Job's three friends, who came from other related but distinct peoples (Temanite, Shuhite, Naamathite). PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Buzite | es: el-buzita | fr: le-Buzite | de: [הבוזי] Job 32:2; Job 32:6

בּוּזִי H0941 N-proper-ms (1×)
Buzi (personal name, father of Ezekiel)
A personal name belonging to the father of the prophet Ezekiel, mentioned in the book's opening verse. Ezekiel identifies himself as "Ezekiel son of Buzi the priest," establishing his priestly lineage. The name appears only this once, preserved as part of Ezekiel's prophetic credentials. While the name may derive from the verb buz (to despise), it functions purely as a patronymic identifying Ezekiel's father.

(1×) Identifies Ezekiel's father in Ezekiel 1:3, establishing the prophet's priestly lineage. The designation "Ezekiel son of Buzi the priest" provides both family identity and professional credentials—Ezekiel inherited priestly status. The name is preserved without translation, functioning solely as a genealogical marker. The single occurrence makes it a patronymic rather than a name with active theological or narrative significance. BEARING AND CARRYING en: Buzi | es: Buzi | fr: porter | de: [בוז] Ezek 1:3

בַּוַּי H0942 N-proper-ms (1×)
Bavvai (personal name, wall-builder in Nehemiah)
A personal name belonging to one of the builders who repaired Jerusalem's wall under Nehemiah's leadership. Bavvai worked on a section of the wall, participating in the communal reconstruction project. Textual variants and parallel passages suggest possible confusion with the name Binnui, a common name in post-exilic texts. The name is preserved in Nehemiah's detailed record of who repaired which wall section.

(1×) Identifies a wall-builder in Nehemiah 3:18 who repaired a section of Jerusalem's wall during the post-exilic restoration. The name appears in Nehemiah's careful accounting of the construction project, preserving the memory of those who contributed to the restoration. Textual evidence suggests possible identity with Binnui (verse 24), indicating either scribal variation or two different individuals with similar names. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bavvai | es: Bavai | fr: [בוי] | de: [בוי] Neh 3:18

בּוֹךְ H0943 V-Nifal-Perf-3cp (3×)
be confused, perplexed, or bewildered (Niphal); wander aimlessly in disorientation
A verb in the passive (Niphal) stem describing confusion or bewilderment. Pharaoh will think Israel is 'confused' or wandering aimlessly in the wilderness, trapped by geography (Exodus 14:3). The city of Susa is 'bewildered' by Haman's edict against the Jews (Esther 3:15). Joel describes cattle wandering in confusion because drought has destroyed pasture (Joel 1:18). The term captures mental disorientation, spatial confusion, and the chaos that ensues when normal order collapses.

(3×) To be confused, bewildered, or disoriented. Pharaoh will think the Israelites are 'wandering aimlessly' (navokhu) in the wilderness (Exodus 14:3). Susa is 'thrown into confusion' by the decree to annihilate the Jews (Esther 3:15). Herds of cattle 'wander perplexed' due to lack of pasture (Joel 1:18). The Niphal conveys passive disorientation—confusion imposed by external circumstances rather than self-induced. PERPLEXED AT LOSS

en: are-confused, confused, was-bewildered | es: Andan-confusos, confundidos, estaba-confusa | fr: [נבוכה], confondit, confondre | de: [נבוכה], [נבכו], confused Exod 14:3; Esth 3:15; Joel 1:18

בּוּל H0944 Prep-l / N-msc (2×)

product, growth; what grows from or is produced by something

A term denoting the product or outgrowth of something, used for what mountains produce or what comes from a tree. The word emphasizes origin—what grows from or is yielded by a source. Both biblical uses focus on natural production, whether agricultural or simply the wood that comes from a tree.

(2×) Job 40:20 describes behemoth with 'the mountains yield produce for him'—the vegetation that grows on hills provides his food. Isaiah 44:19 speaks of a block of wood as 'the product of a tree' (literally 'tree-growth') that someone then carves into an idol. The term emphasizes source and derivation: what the mountains grow, what comes from a tree. Some suggest this is an abbreviated form of יְבוּל (produce), or possibly a scribal variant. Multilingual glosses vary—some render 'product/produce,' others transliterate, reflecting uncertainty about this rare term. The contexts clearly indicate natural yield or growth—agricultural produce in Job, raw wood material in Isaiah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: produce, to-a-block-of | es: ante-tronco, producto-de | fr: [לבול], בול | de: [בול], [לבול] Job 40:20; Isa 44:19

בּוּל H0945 N-proper-fs (1×)

Bul (eighth month name, October-November)

The Canaanite name for the eighth month of the year, corresponding roughly to October-November in modern calendars, or Marcheswan in the later Jewish calendar. The name appears in the account of Solomon's temple completion, which occurred in this month. The term is pre-Israelite Phoenician, part of the Canaanite month-naming system Israel used before adopting Babylonian names during the exile. Phoenician inscriptions confirm the month name's broader use.

(1×) Designates the eighth month in 1 Kings 6:38, when Solomon's temple was completed after seven years of construction. The archaic Canaanite month name (versus later Babylonian "Marcheswan") indicates the early date and Phoenician cultural context of Solomon's era. The phrase "in the month Bul, which is the eighth month" shows the need to explain the old name to later readers familiar with numbered months. MONTHS AND LUNAR CYCLES

en: Bul | es: Bul | fr: Bul | de: Bul 1Kgs 6:38

בּוּנָה H0946 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Bunah (personal name, 'intelligence' or 'understanding')

A personal name meaning "intelligence" or "understanding," belonging to a man from the tribe of Judah mentioned in Chronicles' genealogies. The name appears in Palmyrene inscriptions as well, showing its broader Semitic usage. Like many Hebrew names, it expresses a desired quality or divine gift—in this case intellectual capacity or insight. The name occurs only once, preserved in the genealogical records of Judah's descendants.

(1×) Identifies a man of Judah in 1 Chronicles 2:25, listed in the genealogical records of the tribe. The name's meaning ("intelligence") reflects the Israelite practice of giving children names expressing virtues or blessings. The Palmyrene cognate confirms this was a recognized name in the broader Aramaic-speaking world. The single occurrence makes it purely a genealogical identifier without narrative context. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Bunah | es: y-Buna | fr: [ובונה] | de: [ובונה] 1Chr 2:25

בּוּס H0947 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-fs (12×)

To trample, tread down, wallow; of warriors trampling enemies, of intensive destruction, of wallowing in blood, or of being trampled upon.

A verb of forceful physical action whose core image is the foot treading upon a defeated foe. In the Qal stem, it describes warriors trampling enemies underfoot — the LORD himself treads down Assyria (Isa 14:25) and treads the peoples in his anger (Isa 63:6), while the psalmist declares 'through you we push down our foes' (Ps 44:5). The Poel intensifies this to thorough devastation: enemies have 'trampled down' the LORD's sanctuary (Isa 63:18) and his pleasant vineyard (Jer 12:10). A strikingly different Hitpael reflexive appears in Ezekiel 16:6 and 22, where infant Jerusalem is found 'wallowing' in her own blood — a vivid image of helpless, flailing movement. The rare Hofal passive in Isaiah 14:19 describes the king of Babylon as a corpse 'trampled' underfoot. Spanish captures the range well: 'pisoteé' for active trampling, 'revolcándote' for wallowing, and 'pisoteado' for the passive state.

1. trample, tread down (7×) Qal: to trample or tread down, expressing decisive military victory or domination. The LORD tramples Assyria on his mountains (Isa 14:25) and treads peoples in his fury (Isa 63:6); the psalmist trusts God to help 'trample our adversaries' (Ps 44:5; 60:12; 108:13). In Proverbs 27:7, the sated soul 'tramples' even honeycomb, extending the image to contemptuous rejection. Spanish 'pisoteé' and 'pisotea' preserve the visceral foot-on-enemy imagery. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: And-I-trod-down, I-will-trample-him, tramples | es: Y-pisoteé, lo-pisotearé, pisotea | fr: [ואבוסנו], [בוסים], [ואבוס] | de: [ואבוסנו], [בוסים], [ואבוס] Ps 44:5; Ps 60:12; Ps 108:13; Prov 27:7; Isa 14:25

2. wallow (2×) Hitpael reflexive: to wallow, to roll oneself about, specifically in blood. Found in Ezekiel 16:6 and 16:22, where God addresses infant Jerusalem as a foundling 'wallowing in your blood' — an image of helpless, convulsive movement. This sense departs entirely from the hostile trampling meaning, focusing instead on the reflexive flailing of a newborn. Spanish 'revolcándote' captures the writhing, self-directed quality of the action. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: wallowing | es: revolcándote | fr: [מתבוססת] | de: [מתבוססת] Ezek 16:6; Ezek 16:22

3. trample down (intensive) (2×) Poel intensive: to trample down thoroughly, emphasizing the completeness and severity of devastation. In Jeremiah 12:10, many shepherds have 'trampled down' God's vineyard; in Isaiah 63:18, adversaries have 'trodden down' the sanctuary. The intensive stem signals that this is not a single act but sustained, ruinous destruction. Spanish 'han pisoteado' and 'pisotearon' both convey the thoroughness of the desecration. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: have-trampled-down, they-have-trampled-down | es: han-pisoteado, pisotearon | fr: [בוססו], [בססו] | de: [בוססו], [בססו] Isa 63:18; Jer 12:10

4. be trampled (1×) Hofal passive: to be trampled upon, the passive counterpart of the active treading. Attested once in Isaiah 14:19, where the fallen king of Babylon is likened to a corpse 'trampled' underfoot — cast from his grave like a loathsome branch, trodden by the slain. Spanish 'pisoteado' directly renders this passive state of utter degradation. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: trampled | es: pisoteado | fr: [מובס] | de: [מובס] Isa 14:19

בּוּץ H0948 N-ms (8×)

Byssus; fine white linen fabric used for priestly vestments, temple furnishings, and royal garments.

Refers to byssus, a high-quality white linen prized in the ancient Near East for its fineness and brightness. It appears exclusively in late biblical texts — Chronicles, Ezra, and Esther — describing priestly robes, Levitical singers' vestments, and the temple veil (2 Chr 3:14). Spanish lino and French fin lin both point to 'fine linen,' while German Byssus preserves the technical loanword. The term likely entered Hebrew from Egyptian (cf. hbos, 'to clothe') and is closely related to Aramaic bus. Its association with worship, royalty, and sacred craft underscores the ceremonial dignity of those who wore or worked with it (1 Chr 4:21).

fine linen (byssus fabric) (8×) A fine white linen fabric (byssus), used for priestly garments, the temple curtain, and royal attire. In

1 Chronicles 4:21 it identifies families devoted to byssus-working as a hereditary craft. In 2 Chronicles 5:12 the Levitical singers are clothed in it, and Esther 8:15 describes Mordecai in a royal robe of bus. French fin lin and Spanish lino both render it as 'fine linen,' confirming the textile sense across all eight occurrences. LINEN AND FABRIC

en: and-fine-linen, and-in-the-fine-linen, fine-cotton | es: de-lino, el-lino, lino | fr: et-fin-lin, et-in-lin-fin, et-lin-fin | de: Byssus, [בוץ], [הבץ] 1Chr 4:21; 1Chr 15:27; 2Chr 2:14; 2Chr 3:14; 2Chr 5:12

בּוֹצֵץ H0949 N-proper-fs (1×)

Bozez (place name, rock near Michmash)

The name of a rock formation or crag near Michmash, mentioned in the account of Jonathan's daring raid against the Philistines. This rocky outcrop was one of two prominent formations (the other being Seneh) marking the pass where Jonathan and his armor-bearer climbed up to attack the Philistine garrison. The geographical detail adds vividness to the narrative, showing the steep, dangerous terrain Jonathan navigated in his act of faith.

(1×) Identifies one of two sharp rocks flanking the pass at Michmash in 1 Samuel 14:4, where Jonathan executed his famous assault on the Philistine garrison. The named crags (Bozez and Seneh) mark the treacherous terrain Jonathan climbed, emphasizing the boldness and difficulty of his military exploit. The specific toponymy gives historical and geographical concreteness to the narrative of faith-driven courage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Botsets | es: Botsets | fr: Botsets | de: Botsets 1Sam 14:4

בּוֹקָה H0950 N-fs (1×)

emptiness, devastation, void

A noun expressing emptiness or desolation, appearing in Nahum's oracle against Nineveh as part of a threefold cry of devastation. The phrase "emptiness and void and waste" creates a cascading rhythm of destruction, emphasizing total desolation. Related to the verb baqaq (to empty out), it suggests thorough devastation leaving nothing behind. The alliterative Hebrew creates a haunting sound effect matching the content.

(1×) Expresses utter devastation in Nahum 2:10, part of a triple declaration of Nineveh's coming destruction. The threefold "emptiness and void and waste" builds poetically, each term intensifying the image of total desolation. The root meaning of emptying or pouring out suggests not just absence but the violent removal of all contents, leaving complete barrenness. The Hebrew assonance creates an auditory echo of the devastation described. EMPTINESS AND VANITY

en: emptiness | es: Vacía | fr: vide | de: [בוקה] Nah 2:10

בּוֹקֵר H0951 N-ms (1×)

herdsman, cattle-tender

A denominative noun meaning herdsman or cattle-keeper, famously applied to the prophet Amos who describes himself with this term. Before his prophetic calling, Amos tended herds, identifying him as a non-professional prophet from a working-class background. The term relates to boqer (cattle, herd) and distinguishes cattle-herders from shepherds of sheep and goats. Amos's self-identification emphasizes he was not from the prophetic guild but called directly by God from ordinary labor.

(1×) Identifies Amos's occupation in Amos 7:14 as a cattle-herdsman, emphasizing his non-prophetic background before God's call. Amos uses this term (along with "tender of sycamore figs") to distinguish himself from professional prophets—he was a working man, not trained in prophetic schools. The cattle-herding trade was distinct from sheep-shepherding, requiring different skills and suggesting Amos had some means, as cattle were more valuable than sheep. SHEPHERDING AND TENDING

en: a-herdsman | es: boyero | fr: berger | de: [בוקר] Amos 7:14

בּוּר H0952 Conj-w (1×)

to make clear, to investigate (uncertain)

An uncertain verb appearing only in Ecclesiastes, possibly meaning to make clear, investigate, or explain. The text is difficult and some scholars suggest emendation. If the reading is correct, the infinitive form indicates purpose: the Teacher set his heart to investigate or clarify matters. However, textual variants and ancient versions suggest different readings, making the exact sense unclear. The context involves Qoheleth's investigation of life under the sun.

(1×) Possibly means "to investigate" or "to make clear" in Ecclesiastes 9:1, though textual uncertainty makes the sense doubtful. Some versions and manuscripts suggest alternative readings ("to see," "to explore"). If original, the verb would fit Qoheleth's investigative program of examining life's puzzles. The rare occurrence and textual variants prevent confident interpretation, though the general semantic field involves clarification or examination. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-to-make-clear | es: y-a-examinar | fr: et-ולבור | de: [ולבור] Eccl 9:1

H0953 N-fs (1×)

cistern, well, pit

A noun denoting a cistern or well for water storage, critical infrastructure in ancient Palestine's semi-arid climate. The term appears in Jeremiah's image of Israel as a cracked cistern that cannot hold water. Related to the common beer (well), this term may be an Aramaic form or variant. Cisterns were hewn from rock to collect and store rainwater, essential for survival during dry months. The metaphorical use emphasizes Israel's failure to retain God's blessings.

(1×) Refers to a cistern in Jeremiah 6:7, used metaphorically to describe Jerusalem's continuous production of wickedness. Just as a cistern keeps water fresh and accessible, so the city "keeps fresh" its evil. The image inverts the positive function of cisterns (preserving good water) to depict the city's persistent preservation of wickedness. The practical importance of cisterns in daily life makes the metaphor immediately vivid to Jeremiah's audience. WELL PIT CISTERN

en: cistern | es: pozo | fr: [(בור)] | de: [(בור)] Jer 6:7

בּוֹר H0953a Prep-m / N-msc (66×)

Pit, cistern, or dungeon; a hewn cavity in the ground used for water storage, trapping, confinement, or as a figure for Sheol.

Borrowed from the physical landscape of ancient Israel, bor denotes any cavity dug or hewn into rock — most often a cistern for collecting rainwater, but also an open pit used to trap animals or enemies. The Arabic cognate bu'ra (a cooking hollow) preserves the root sense of a gouged-out space. In narrative, the pit where Joseph was cast (Gen 37:20-29) becomes a powerful type: Spanish foso, Arabic al-jubb, and Korean gudeongi all capture the terror of being thrown into an empty hole. Metaphorically, 'those who go down to the pit' (Isa 38:18; Ps 28:1) means descent into death itself. Rarely, the word extends to a dungeon or prison cell (Gen 41:14), where confinement in a literal pit becomes incarceration.

1. literal pit, hole, or cavity in ground (27×) Split from sense 85831. Criteria: Physical excavated or natural holes used for trapping, water storage, or confinement (Joseph's pit, trapping pits, cisterns)

en: a-pit, from-pit, from-the-pit | es: Pozo, antes-de, con-cuerdas | fr: [הבור], dans-fosse, dans-le-fosse | de: Grube, der-Grube, die-Grube Gen 37:20; Gen 37:22; Gen 37:24; Gen 37:28; Gen 37:29

2. metaphorical pit: Sheol, death, the grave (22×) Split from sense 85831. Criteria: Figurative use in poetic and prophetic texts representing the realm of death or the grave ('those going down to the pit,' eschatological imagery in Psalms, Isaiah, Ezekiel)

en: a-pit, pit, the-pit | es: al-foso, al-pozo, el-foso | fr: dans-fosse, fosse | de: Grube, der-Grube Ps 28:1; Ps 30:3; Ps 40:2; Ps 88:4; Ps 88:6

3. cistern, well for water (15×) A cistern or well hewn from rock for storing rainwater, a critical survival technology in the semi-arid Levant. Deuteronomy 6:11 lists cisterns among the blessings of the Promised Land, and Proverbs 5:15 pairs bor with be'er (well) as a figure for marital fidelity. Hindi kuan and Korean umul ('well') and Swahili kisima ('cistern') capture this domestic, life-sustaining sense. The Moabite Stone also uses br for cistern, confirming wide Semitic usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv], and-cistern, and-cisterns | es: [cisterna], cisterna-de, cisternas | fr: [ברות], [מבור], citerne-de | de: Grube, Grube-von, Zisterne-von Gen 37:24; Lev 11:36; Deut 6:11; 1Sam 19:22; 2Kgs 10:14

4. prison, dungeon (2×) A rare metaphorical extension where 'pit' means a prison or dungeon — a place of confinement. In Genesis 41:14, Joseph is brought up from the bor (the dungeon of Pharaoh's prison), and Exodus 12:29 mentions the captive in the bor. Spanish calabozo ('dungeon'), Arabic as-sijn ('the prison'), and Korean gamok ('jail') all render this carceral sense, distinguishing it from the open pit or water cistern. PRISON AND CONFINEMENT

en: the-pit | es: el-calabozo, el-pozo | fr: la-fosse | de: der-Grube, der-pit Gen 41:14; Exod 12:29

בּוֹר הַסִּרָה H0953b Prep-m / N-proper-fs (1×)

Bor-Hasirah (place name, 'cistern of Sirah')

A place name meaning "cistern of Sirah," mentioned in the account of Abner's assassination. This cistern or well marked the location from which Joab's messengers recalled Abner, luring him back to Hebron where Joab murdered him. The toponymy combines the common word for cistern with a personal or clan name (Sirah). Like many ancient place names, it preserves the memory of a location associated with a significant water source.

(1×) Identifies a specific cistern location in 2 Samuel 3:26, where Abner was when Joab's messengers caught up with him. The place name marks the point from which Abner was recalled to his death—a geographical detail that lends historical precision to the assassination narrative. The compound name (cistern + Sirah) follows typical biblical toponymic patterns, naming a location by its feature and associated person or clan. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-well-of | es: de-pozo-de | fr: de-bien-de | de: von-gut-von 2Sam 3:26

בּוֹשׁ H0954 V-Hifil-Prtcpl-ms (114×)

To be ashamed, feel shame or disgrace; causatively to put to shame; also to delay or tarry (Piel); rarely to dry up

A deeply emotional verb rooted in the experience of public disgrace and disappointed trust. In its most common Qal form, it describes the internal sensation of shame, whether before God (Ezra 9:6), before enemies (Ps 6:10), or in the face of moral failure. The Hifil causative sense captures the act of actively bringing shame upon another, as when the psalmist declares that God has put evildoers to shame (Ps 14:6). A surprising semantic development appears in the Piel, where the root shifts to mean 'delay' or 'tarry,' as when Israel grew impatient because Moses delayed coming down from Sinai (Exod 32:1). A single occurrence in Hosea 13:15 points to a meaning of drying up, possibly related to the withering that accompanies disgrace.

1. to be ashamed, feel shame (Qal) (95×) The foundational Qal stative sense covering the feeling of shame, disgrace, or humiliation. The subject experiences shame internally, whether as divine judgment, social exposure, or moral failure. The breadth is striking: it ranges from the shame of defeated nations (Isa 37:27) to personal penitence (Jer 31:19). Spanish avergonzar and German sich schämen both preserve this reflexive, inward-turning quality. Dominant across Psalms, Jeremiah, and Isaiah, this sense accounts for the vast majority of occurrences. SHAME AND REVERENCE

en: let-be-ashamed, let-them-be-ashamed, shall-be-ashamed | es: Se-avergonzarán, Sean-avergonzados, Serán-avergonzados | fr: avoir-honte | de: lass-ihnen-sein-ashamed, lass-sein-ashamed, schaemte-sich Ezra 8:22; Ezra 9:6; Ps 6:10; Ps 25:2

2. to put to shame, cause disgrace (Hifil) (16×) The Hifil causative: to put to shame, cause disgrace, bring shame upon someone. Here an active agent inflicts shame on another. The Psalms use this frequently in petitions asking God to shame the wicked (Ps 44:7, Ps 119:31). Arabic mukhzin (shame-causing) and French avoir honte capture the transitive dimension. The shift from experiencing shame to causing it marks a significant semantic escalation. SHAME AND REVERENCE

en: They-shall-be-put-to-shame, You-have-put-to-shame, against-one-who-brings-shame | es: (fueron-avergonzados), Avergonzaos, Han-sido-avergonzados | fr: avoir-honte, le-avoir-honte | de: schaemte-sich, schämte-sich, sich-schaemen Ps 14:6; Ps 44:7; Ps 53:5; Ps 119:31; Ps 119:116

3. to delay, tarry (Piel) (2×) A distinctive Piel development meaning to delay, tarry, or be slow in coming. This sense is semantically distant from shame and likely arose through the idea of lingering hesitation. The two attestations — Moses' delay on Sinai (Exod 32:1) and Sisera's mother wondering why his chariot tarries (Judg 5:28) — both involve anxious waiting. Spanish tarda and the English 'delayed' align here, and the semantic leap from shame to delay finds a bridge in the concept of embarrassed hesitation. DELAY TARRY LINGER

en: delayed, is-delayed | es: tarda, tardaba | fr: delayed, est-delayed | de: delayed, ist-delayed Exod 32:1; Judg 5:28

4. (1×) A hapax or near-hapax sense in Hosea 13:15 meaning to dry up or wither, applied to a spring whose waters fail. The multilingual evidence splits: English renders 'shall dry up,' Spanish 'se secará,' while French and German retain the shame reading. This may reflect a separate homonymous root or a metaphorical extension where shame is likened to the withering of vitality. WITHERING AND DRYING

en: and-shall-dry-up | es: y-se-secará | fr: et-avoir-honte | de: und-schaemte-sich Hos 13:15

בּוּשָׁה H0955 N-fs (4×)

Shame, disgrace — the humiliation felt or imposed through public exposure or defeat

A noun expressing the painful experience of shame and public disgrace. It appears in contexts of national humiliation and personal dishonor: the psalmist covered in shame (Ps 89:45), the horror of shame covering faces during judgment (Ezek 7:18), Esau's disgrace for violence against his brother (Obad 1:10), and the enemy's shame when God vindicates Israel (Mic 7:10). The word belongs to a rich Hebrew word-family centered on the root bosh, and the multilingual evidence — Spanish 'verguenza,' French 'honte,' German 'Schande' — all converge on deep social disgrace.

(4×) Shame or disgrace experienced as public humiliation or divine judgment. In Psalm 89:45 the anointed king is wrapped in shame; Ezekiel 7:18 depicts shame covering faces on the day of wrath; Obadiah 1:10 announces shame upon Edom for fraternal violence; and Micah 7:10 anticipates the enemy being clothed in shame. Spanish 'verguenza,' French 'honte,' and German 'Schande' uniformly confirm the sense of deep, socially visible dishonor. SHAME AND DISGRACE

en: shame | es: vergüenza | fr: dans-honte, honte, honte; | de: Schande, [ברשה] Ps 89:45; Ezek 7:18; Obad 1:10; Mic 7:10

בִּית H0956 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3ms (1×)

to spend the night, to lodge (Aramaic)

An Aramaic denominative verb meaning to pass or spend the night, appearing in Daniel's account of Darius's sleepless night after condemning Daniel to the lions' den. The verb conveys the king's restless vigil, unable to sleep while his favored administrator faced death. Cognate with Targumic Aramaic, it's a common term for overnight lodging or staying through the night, here emphasizing the king's anxious wakefulness.

(1×) Describes King Darius spending a sleepless night in Daniel 6:18 after sealing Daniel in the lions' den. The Aramaic verb indicates the king passed the night without sleep, food, or entertainment, consumed with anxiety for Daniel's fate. The context of insomnia and fasting makes the night-passing anything but restful, emphasizing Darius's distress over the unchangeable law he had been tricked into enforcing. NIGHT AND LODGING en: and-spent-the-night | es: y-pasó-la-noche | fr: et-passer-la-nuit | de: und-Tochter Dan 6:18

בַּז H0957 Conj-w (25×)

Plunder, spoil, booty; goods seized by force in warfare or raiding, also used of persons treated as prey

Baz (בַּז) denotes plunder or spoil — property and possessions seized by force, especially in the context of warfare. It often appears in the phrase hayah le-vaz ('become plunder'), applied both to material goods and to vulnerable people treated as prey (Num 14:3, 31; Deut 1:39). The prophets use it powerfully: Isaiah 10:6 pairs it with shalal ('spoil') in God's commission of Assyria, while Ezekiel applies it to the despoiling of the Temple (Ezek 7:21) and the plundering of nations (Ezek 29:19; 38:12–13). The word carries a raw, violent edge — it names the brutal economic reality of ancient conquest.

plunder, spoil, prey (25×) Goods, possessions, or persons seized by force, particularly in military conquest or raiding. Frequently paired with shalal ('spoil') as a near-synonym in prophetic texts (Isa 10:6; Ezek 38:12–13). The idiom hayah le-vaz ('to become plunder') appears in Num 14:3 and Jer 49:32, applied to both livestock and people. Spanish 'despojo/botín,' French 'butin/proie,' and German 'Beute' all convey the sense of forcible seizure. Ezekiel 7:21 applies it to the Temple itself being handed over to foreign plunderers. PLUNDER AND SPOIL en: and-to-plunder, as-plunder, for-pillage | es: despojo, despojo;, para-botín | fr: butin, en-proie, et-butin | de: Beute, fuer-pluendere, fuer-pluendern Num 14:3; Num 14:31; Num 31:32; Deut 1:39; 2Kgs 21:14

בָּזָא H0958 V-Qal-Perf-3cp (2×)

divide, cut through; split or cleave (of rivers dividing land)

A verb meaning to divide or cut through, used specifically of rivers dividing or traversing a land. The word appears only in Isaiah's oracles concerning Cush, describing how rivers cut through that territory. The term likely relates to Aramaic roots meaning 'cleave' or 'split.'

(2×) Both occurrences describe Cush as 'a land whose rivers divide it' or 'cut through it' (Isaiah 18:2, 7). The image depicts the geography of Cush (likely ancient Nubia/Ethiopia), characterized by rivers that traverse and partition the territory—probably the Nile and its tributaries cutting through the land. The Hebrew may relate to Aramaic בְּזַע (cleave), suggesting rivers that split or section the terrain. Multilingual translations show uncertainty: some render 'divided/despojado' (divided/despoiled), others transliterate. The geographical context strongly supports the meaning of rivers cutting through or dividing the land, creating a territory characterized by watercourses that section it into distinct regions. CUTTING AND SEVERING en: have-divided | es: han-despojado | fr: [בזאו] | de: [בזאו] Isa 18:2; Isa 18:7

בָּזָה H0959 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (43×)

To despise, regard with contempt; passively, to be scorned or held as worthless

A verb that captures the act of looking down on someone or something with disdain, treating it as beneath regard. Esau 'despised' his birthright (Gen 25:34), Goliath 'despised' David (1 Sam 17:42), and Israel despised God's word (Num 15:31). The passive form describes the suffering servant as 'despised and rejected' (Isa 53:3). The Arabic cognate baza ('to raise the head loftily and disdainfully') preserves the original body-language metaphor behind the word.

1. to despise, hold in contempt (29×) The active Qal sense of treating something or someone as worthless, beneath regard. Esau despised his birthright (Gen 25:34), Michal despised David for dancing (2 Sam 6:16), and God warns that those who despise Him will be lightly esteemed (1 Sam 2:30). Spanish 'despreciar' and German 'verachten' consistently mark this active contempt. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: You-will-despise, and-despised, and-despised-him | es: Te-menosprecia, Y-despreció, desprecia | fr: dans-ce, dans-celui-ci, elle-despises | de: [בזה], [בזית], [ובזה] Gen 25:34; Num 15:31; 1Sam 2:30; 1Sam 10:27; 1Sam 17:42

2. despised, held in contempt (13×) The passive or stative condition of being despised, scorned, or regarded as worthless by others. The Messiah is 'despised and rejected by men' (Isa 53:3; Ps 22:6), the righteous psalmist is 'small and despised' (Ps 119:141), and a poor man's wisdom 'is despised' (Eccl 9:16). Spanish 'despreciado' marks the participle cleanly. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: a-despised-one, and-despised, and-despised-by | es: Despreciado, despreciable, despreciada | fr: et-dans-mépriser, et-mépriser, mépriser | de: [בזוי], [נבזה], despised Ps 15:4; Ps 22:6; Ps 119:141; Eccl 9:16; Isa 53:3

3. (1×) An infinitive or purposive use appearing in Esther 1:17, where the queen's refusal will lead other women 'to despise' their husbands. This is functionally identical to sense 1 but occurs in an infinitival construction signaling anticipated consequence rather than completed action. CONTEMPT AND SCORN

en: to-despise | es: para-despreciar | fr: [להבזות] | de: verachtet Esth 1:17

בָּזֹה H0960 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (1×)

to despise, to regard with contempt

A verb meaning to despise, scorn, or hold in contempt, expressing strong disdain or low regard for something or someone. The term appears throughout Scripture describing contempt for God's word, for authority, for covenant, or for other persons. Isaiah uses the infinitive form in describing the Servant as "despised of men." The verb carries both attitudinal (internal contempt) and behavioral (treating with scorn) dimensions, often appearing in covenant-violation contexts.

(1×) Means "to be despised" in Isaiah 49:7, describing the Servant as "despised of men" and abhorred by the nation. The infinitival construction emphasizes the Servant's status as an object of contempt, rejected and scorned. This prophetic description anticipates the suffering Servant's experience of being regarded as worthless and beneath honor, a theme that reaches its climax in Isaiah 53. The verb captures both the attitude and the resulting treatment of disdain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-despised-of- | es: al-despreciado-de- | fr: [לבזה] | de: [לבזה] Isa 49:7

בִּזָּה H0961 Conj-w (10×)

Spoil, plunder, booty — material goods seized from defeated enemies in warfare or raiding

The feminine noun בִּזָּה (bizzah) denotes spoil, plunder, or booty taken from defeated enemies. It appears exclusively in late biblical texts — Chronicles, Esther, Nehemiah, Daniel, and one occurrence in 1 Samuel — always referring to material goods seized through military victory or raiding. Asa's forces plundered the surrounding cities after routing Zerah the Cushite (2 Chr 14:14), while in Esther the Jews conspicuously refused to touch the plunder of their slain enemies (Est 9:10, 15-16). Daniel 11:24 describes a future king distributing plunder among his followers. Arabic nahb/ghanimah, Spanish botin/despojo, Hindi lut, and Korean yaktal-mul all converge on the same semantic field.

spoil, plunder, booty (10×) Material goods — livestock, possessions, valuables — seized from defeated enemies in the aftermath of battle or raiding. Used of Asa's plunder after the Cushite rout (2 Chr 14:14), the Jews' deliberate refusal of plunder in Esther (9:10, 15-16), and Daniel's vision of a king distributing spoil (11:24). The word's restriction to late texts suggests it may have entered Hebrew through Aramaic contact. Spanish 'botin,' Arabic غَنِيمَة (ghanimah), and Korean 약탈물 (yaktal-mul) all confirm the uniform semantic range. PLUNDER AND SPOIL en: and-by-plunder, and-on-the-plunder, and-to-plunder | es: botín, el-botín, para-botín | fr: butin, dans-ce, et-butin | de: Beute, [בזה], [הבזה] 2Chr 14:14; 2Chr 25:13; 2Chr 28:14; Ezra 9:7; Neh 4:4

בָּזַז H0962 V-Qal-Imp-mp (43×)

To plunder, take spoil; as participle, a plunderer; in passive stems, to be plundered or despoiled.

A verb of violent seizure central to the vocabulary of warfare and divine judgment in the Hebrew Bible. From the earliest patriarchal narratives (Gen 34:27, the sack of Shechem) through prophetic oracles of doom (Isa 24:3; Jer 50:37), bāzaz describes the carrying off of goods, livestock, and possessions as spoil. Cognates in Arabic (bazz), Aramaic, and Ethiopic confirm the core meaning of forcible seizure. The word appears across all major verb forms — active plundering by armies, participial descriptions of habitual plunderers, and passive constructions where entire cities and nations are despoiled. German 'plündern' and Spanish 'saquear' track the meaning with striking consistency.

1. plunder, take as spoil (33×) The primary active sense: to plunder, loot, or carry off possessions as spoil of war. This covers the full range of finite verb forms — perfect, imperfect, imperative, cohortative, and infinitive. It dominates the Pentateuchal war narratives (Num 31:9, 32, 53; Deut 2:35; 3:7) and the conquest accounts (Josh 8:2; 11:14), where victorious armies systematically strip defeated peoples of livestock, goods, and treasures. Spanish 'saqueamos' (we plundered) and German 'plünderte' reflect the straightforward military pillaging. Nahum 2:10's doubled imperative 'Plunder! Plunder!' captures the frenzied intensity the word can carry. PLUNDERING AND SPOIL
en: and-plundered, and-they-plundered, and-they-shall-spoil | es: despojaron, para-saquear, saqueamos | fr: [ויבזו], [לבזו], butin | de: pluendern, pluendert, pluenderte Gen 34:27; Gen 34:29; Num 31:9; Num 31:32; Num 31:53

2. plunderer, one who despoils (5×) The active participle functioning as an agent noun: a plunderer, spoiler, or despoiler — one whose characteristic activity is taking plunder. At Isa 42:24 the prophet asks 'Who gave Jacob to the plunderers?'; at Jer 30:16 God promises that 'all who despoil you shall be despoiled.' Spanish 'los que te saquean' (those who plunder you) and English 'our despoilers' preserve the participial agent meaning. Ezek 39:10 uses this form in a dramatic reversal: Israel will 'despoil those who despoiled them,' a chiastic justice motif the participle enables. PLUNDERING AND SPOIL
en: our-despoilers, pillaging-you, plundering | es: a-los-saqueadores, los-que-te-saquean, nuestros-saqueadores | fr: [בזזים], butin, piller | de: pluendern 2Chr 20:25; Isa 17:14; Isa 42:24; Jer 30:16; Ezek 39:10

3. be plundered, be despoiled (4×) The passive sense (Niphal and related stems): to be plundered, looted, or despoiled. At Isa 24:3 the doubling 'the land shall be utterly plundered' (hibbōz tibbōz) intensifies the devastation through the infinitive absolute construction. Jer 50:37 prophesies that Babylon's treasures 'shall be plundered,' and Amos 3:11 warns that Samaria's strongholds 'shall be despoiled.' The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'será saqueada,' German 'und geplündert' — consistently render the passive voice, marking the semantic shift from agent to victim of pillaging. PLUNDERING AND SPOIL
en: and-plundered, and-shall-be-plundered, and-they-will-be-plundered | es: será-saqueada, y-saqueando, y-serán-saqueados | fr: et-butin, et-piller, piller | de: pluendern, und-pluendern, und-pluendert Isa 24:3; Jer 50:37; Amos 3:11

4. (1×) An occurrence at Isa 42:22 where the form 'plundered' describes the state of a people who have been thoroughly despoiled — 'a people plundered and looted.' The glosses (English 'plundered,' Spanish 'despojado,' French 'pillé') all point to a stative or resultative reading: not the act of being plundered but the condition of having been plundered. In context this pairs with the participial sense of sense 2 in the same chapter (Isa 42:24), creating a deliberate echo between the plunderers and the plundered state of God's people. PLUNDERING AND SPOIL
en: plundered | es: despojado | fr: piller | de: pluendern Isa 42:22

בִּזָּיוֹן H0963 N-ms (1×)
contempt, scorn
A noun denoting contempt or scorn, appearing in Esther's account of Queen Vashti's refusal to appear before the king. The royal counselors warned that Vashti's defiance would lead to widespread "contempt and wrath" as other women followed her example in resisting their husbands. The term captures the attitude of disdain and disrespect the counselors feared would spread. Paired with "wrath," it suggests both the internal attitude and the external conflict resulting from contempt.

(1×) Refers to the contempt counselors feared in Esther 1:18, warning that Vashti's refusal would inspire other Persian women to despise their husbands. The phrase "contempt and wrath" indicates both the dismissive attitude wives might adopt and the resulting domestic conflict. The political dimension is evident—the king's court worried that contempt for husbands would undermine social order, making Vashti's defiance a threat requiring strong response. CONTEMPT SCORN
en: contempt | es: desprecio | fr: [בזיון] | de: [בזיון] Esth 1:18

בִּזְיוֹתְיָה H0964 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Biziothiah (uncertain place name or 'and her daughters')
A textually uncertain element in Joshua's town list, possibly a place name "Biziothiah" or possibly a corruption of "and her daughters" (villages). Appearing in Judah's territorial allotment near Beersheba, the text is suspect because Nehemiah's parallel list has "and her daughters," a standard formula for a town with dependent villages. Modern scholars generally prefer the Nehemiah reading, suggesting scribal error corrupted the original in Joshua.

(1×) Appears in Joshua 15:28 as either a place name "Biziothiah" or (more likely) a textual corruption of "and her daughters" (dependent villages). The parallel in Nehemiah 11:27 supports reading "and her daughters," the standard formula for a town with satellite settlements. The LXX variants confirm textual uncertainty. If a place name, it would be a village near Beersheba; but scholarly consensus favors seeing it as scribal error. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-Bizyotheyah | es: y-Biziotia | fr: et-Bizyotheyah | de: und-Bizyotheyah Josh 15:28

בָּזָק H0965 Art / N-ms (1×)
flash, lightning (possibly textual error for 'baraq')
A textually uncertain noun possibly meaning lightning flash, appearing in Ezekiel's vision of the living creatures. The entire verse is missing in some ancient Greek manuscripts, raising questions about its originality. Some scholars suggest it's a scribal error for the more common baraq (lightning). If original, it describes the creatures darting back and forth like flashes of lightning, emphasizing the supernatural speed and brilliance of the vision.

(1×) Possibly means "flash" or "lightning" in Ezekiel 1:14, describing the living creatures' rapid movement like lightning strikes. However, the verse is absent in important manuscripts, and the word may be an error for the common baraq (lightning). If genuine, it contributes to the dazzling, overwhelming character of Ezekiel's inaugural vision. The textual uncertainty prevents confident interpretation of this rare term. LIGHTNING AND RADIANCE
en: the-flash | es: el-rayo | fr: éclair | de: [הברק] Ezek 1:14

בְּזֶק H0966 Prep-b / N-proper-fs (3×)
Bezek, a place name; site of Israelite muster and defeat of Canaanite king Adoni-bezek
A town in the central hill country serving as a military gathering point. Judah defeated the Canaanite and Perizzite forces at Bezek and captured King Adoni-bezek there (Judges 1:4-5). Saul mustered the Israelite army at Bezek before relieving Jabesh-gilead from the Ammonite siege (1 Samuel 11:8). The site, possibly modern Khirbet Ibziq, lay on a route between the central highlands and the Jordan valley, making it strategically valuable for troop assembly. The location's name may relate to gravel or scattering.

(3×) A town in Israelite territory, mentioned as a battlefield and muster point. Judah and Simeon fought the Canaanites and Perizzites 'at Bezek' and captured Adoni-bezek (Judges 1:4-5). Saul numbered the troops 'at Bezek' before marching to rescue Jabesh-gilead (1 Samuel 11:8). The consistent preposition 'in/at Bezek' across translations confirms the locative function. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-Bezek | es: en-Bezek, en-Bézek | fr: dans-Bezek | de: in-Bezek Judg 1:4; Judg 1:5; 1Sam 11:8

בָּזַר H0967 V-Piel-Perf-3ms (2×)

scatter, disperse; distribute by scattering

A verb meaning to scatter or disperse, used of distributing plunder among followers or dispersing peoples. Related to Arabic and Aramaic roots for scattering seed or dispersing, the term emphasizes distribution through spreading out. Both occurrences involve deliberate scattering—either of spoils or of peoples.

(2×) The Psalm calls on God to 'scatter the peoples who delight in war' (68:30), asking for the dispersal of warlike nations. Daniel prophesies that the king of the north 'will scatter among them plunder, spoil, and possessions' (11:24)—Antiochus Epiphanes distributing conquered goods to his followers. The verb emphasizes distribution through scattering: whether dispersing peoples or spreading out spoils among supporters. Multilingual glosses render 'scatter/dispersa/disperser' (scatter/disperse), with French also offering 'diviser' (divide). The Arabic cognate ذرّ (scatter seed) and Aramaic בְּדַר (scatter) support this meaning of distribution through dispersal. Both contexts involve deliberate strategic scattering—either of military opponents or material rewards. SCATTERING AND DISPERSING

en: he-shall-scatter, scatter | es: dispersa, esparcirá | fr: dans-disperser, diviser | de: [זרה], zerstreuen Ps 68:30; Dan 11:24

בִּזְתָא H0968 N-proper-ms (1×)

Biztha (personal name, Persian eunuch of Ahasuerus)

A Persian personal name belonging to one of the seven eunuchs serving King Ahasuerus in Esther. Like Bigtha, this eunuch was commanded to bring Queen Vashti before the king's banquet. The Persian etymology may relate to "bound" or "eunuch," though the exact derivation is uncertain. The name contributes to the authentic Persian atmosphere of the Esther narrative, where eunuchs played significant roles in palace administration and service.

(1×) Identifies one of seven royal eunuchs in Esther 1:10 sent to summon Queen Vashti to the king's banquet. These chamberlains served in the intimate court service of the Persian monarch. The name's Persian origin (possibly meaning "bound one," referring to eunuch status) fits the historical setting. Listed alongside other Persian names, Biztha represents the authentic cultural and administrative details characterizing the Esther narrative's court setting. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Biztha | es: Bizta | fr: [בוזתא] | de: [בוזתא] Esth 1:10

בָּחוֹן H0969 N-ms (1×)

assayer, one who tests metals for purity

Jeremiah receives a metaphorical commission as an 'assayer' of God's people, testing their spiritual quality as a metallurgist tests precious metals. The Hebrew term (בָּחוֹן) derives from the root meaning 'to test' or 'examine,' capturing both technical expertise and divine scrutiny. This single occurrence in Jeremiah 6:27 transforms metallurgical language into prophetic imagery, where the prophet's task is to reveal the true nature of Israel's rebellion through careful observation and divine insight.

(1×) The word appears only in Jeremiah 6:27 where God appoints the prophet as a 'tester' of his people, using metallurgical imagery. The multilingual evidence (Spanish 'ensayador,' English 'tester') confirms this technical meaning, though the French and German preserve the Hebrew form, recognizing its specialized prophetic context. This metaphor draws on ancient Near Eastern refining practices to describe prophetic discernment. TESTING AND PROVING en: tester | es: Ensayador | fr: [בחון] | de: [בחון] Jer 6:27

בָּחוּר H0970 Conj-w / N-mpc / 1cs (46×)

A young man in his prime, of fighting or marriageable age; rarely, a chosen or elect one (from the root בחר, 'to choose').

The word בָּחוּר is formally the passive participle of בחר ('to choose'), but in the vast majority of its occurrences it has become a standard noun meaning 'young man' — one in the prime of manhood, fit for war and marriage. It pairs naturally with בְּתוּלָה ('young woman/virgin') as in Deut 32:25 and Ps 148:12, and prophetic texts use the plural בַּחוּרִים to lament the loss of a nation's youth in judgment (Jer 6:11; Lam 1:15). In just two passages (Ps 89:19; Jer 50:44), the etymological sense surfaces: a 'chosen one' selected by God, where Spanish 'escogido' and German 'Erwählter' reveal the verbal root shining through.

1. young man, youth (44×) A young man of military or marriageable age, the standard substantival use. The pairing בָּחוּר וּבְתוּלָה ('young man and young woman') recurs across poetry and prophecy (Deut 32:25; 2 Chr 36:17; Ps 148:12). Spanish 'joven/jóvenes,' French 'jeune homme/jeunes hommes,' and German 'Jüngling/junge Männer' all capture the age-specific sense. Saul is described as a בָּחוּר in his prime (1 Sam 9:2); Proverbs 20:29 celebrates the strength of young men. In prophetic judgment oracles (Jer 6:11; 48:15; Lam 1:15), the collective plural evokes the devastating loss of an entire generation. YOUNG MEN AND YOUTH

en: a-young-man, her-young-men, his-young-men | es: Los-jóvenes-de, al-joven, el-joven | fr: [בחור], jeune-homme, jeunes-hommes | de: Juengling, jung-Mann, junge-Maenner Deut 32:25; Judg 14:10; Ruth 3:10; 1Sam 8:16; 1Sam 9:2

2. chosen one, elect (2×) The passive participle retaining its verbal force from בחר ('to choose'): a chosen one, an elect person. In Ps 89:19 God declares 'I have exalted one chosen (בָּחוּר) from the people,' and Jer 50:44 asks 'who is the chosen one I will appoint?' Spanish 'escogido' and German 'Erwählter' unmistakably render the elective meaning, in contrast to the age-related translations used elsewhere. This rare sense preserves the word's etymological connection to divine selection. CHOSEN AND ELECT

en: a-chosen-one, the-chosen-one | es: escogido | fr: dans-jeune-homme, jeune-homme | de: Juengling, ein-Erwählter-einer Ps 89:19; Jer 50:44

בְּחֹן H0971

siege tower; military structure used for attacking fortified cities

This rare term appears only in Isaiah's oracle against Tyre, describing the siege towers the Chaldeans employed. These mobile structures allowed attackers to breach city walls by bringing soldiers to the height of the fortifications. The word's rarity and specific military-technical meaning make it one of Hebrew's specialized vocabulary items, known primarily to those familiar with siege warfare. Isaiah's use emphasizes the overwhelming military might arrayed against the proud merchant city.

בָּחִיר H0972 N-mpc / 2ms (13×)

Chosen one, elect; always of those selected by God for a special purpose or covenant relationship.

An adjective used substantively to designate a person or people chosen by God. Every occurrence carries theological weight: it is never used of merely human selection. In Isaiah 42:1 God declares 'my chosen one' of the Servant; in Isaiah 65:9, 15, 22 the faithful remnant are his elect; and the Psalms repeatedly celebrate Israel as God's chosen people (Ps 89:3; 105:6, 43; 106:5, 23). French 'élu' and Spanish 'escogidos' both capture the idea of divine election—a deliberate, covenantal act of selection, not mere preference.

chosen one, elect (13×) A person or people selected by God for covenant relationship, service, or deliverance. Exclusively theological in usage, this term designates the Servant of the LORD (Isa 42:1; 45:4), the faithful remnant (Isa 65:9, 15, 22), and Israel collectively as God's chosen people (Ps 105:6, 43; 106:5, 23; 1 Chr 16:13). David is God's chosen in Psalm 89:3. The word implies not arbitrary selection but purposeful, covenantal election rooted in divine initiative. CHOSEN AND ELECT en: His-chosen-one, His-chosen-ones, My-chosen | es: a-mis-escogidos, a-sus-

escogidos, con-escogido-de-mí | fr: [בחיריו], choisi-de, dans-élu | de: [בחיריו], dein-Erwählter-Leute, erwaehlt-von 2Sam 21:6; 1Chr 16:13; Ps 89:3; Ps 105:6; Ps 105:43

בָּחַל H0973a V-Qal-Perf-3fs (1×)

to feel loathing, be disgusted with (someone)

This rare verb captures visceral emotional rejection, appearing once in Zechariah 11:8 where mutual loathing exists between the shepherd and the flock. The root relates to nausea and revulsion, expressing deep relational breakdown. The Syriac cognate and Arabic connections suggest a physical sensation of disgust that becomes a metaphor for complete rejection. In Zechariah's symbolic action, this reciprocal loathing between shepherd and sheep dramatizes the rupture between God and his people.

(1×) Zechariah 11:8 uses this verb to describe the mutual disgust between shepherd and flock: 'my soul became impatient with them, and their soul also loathed me.' Spanish 'se aburrió' (became bored/weary) and French 'dégoûter' (disgust) capture different nuances of this emotional revulsion. The context shows not mere dislike but profound, visceral rejection that makes continued relationship impossible. LOATHING ABHORRENCE

en: loathed | es: se-aburrió | fr: dégoûter | de: [בחלה] Zech 11:8

בָּחַל H0973b V-Pual-Prtcpl-fs (1×)

to obtain by greed or haste (Pual participle)

This verb, appearing only in Proverbs 20:21 (Ketiv reading), describes an inheritance 'gotten by greed' (or possibly 'gotten hastily' per the Qere variant from בָּהַל). The Arabic cognate means 'to be avaricious,' supporting the greed interpretation. However, textual variants suggest confusion between roots for greed and haste. Either way, the proverb warns against ill-gotten inheritance, whether through greed or impatience, which will not be blessed in the end.

(1×) The Proverbs 20:21 occurrence describes an inheritance 'מְבֻחָלֶת' (Ketiv), with translations split between 'gotten hastily' (English, Spanish 'adquirida apresuradamente') and the greed sense suggested by Arabic cognates. The domain assignment to TIME > Time reflects the Qere reading's focus on haste, though the root's semantic range includes both greedy acquisition and hasty obtaining, both morally problematic in wisdom literature. HASTE AND URGENCY

en: [gotten-hastily] | es: [adquirida-apresuradamente] | fr: [מבחלת] | de: [[מבחלת]] Prov 20:21

בָּחַן H0974 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (29×)

To examine, test, try, prove; of God testing human hearts, humans testing God, and the refiner's assay of metal.

Bachan belongs to a cluster of Hebrew testing-words alongside nasah and tsaraph, but it carries a distinctive nuance: the searching, penetrating examination that gets to the inner truth of a thing. Where nasah often means putting someone to the test through circumstances, bachan implies looking deep inside — God's 'eyelids test the children of men' (Ps 11:4), searching them through and through. The metallurgical metaphor of refining gold runs through the word's usage (Job 23:10; Zech 13:9; Mal 3:3), and this image illuminates the whole semantic range: testing is not punitive destruction but the separation of genuine from false. The word's directionality matters too — when God tests humans, it reveals character; when humans test God, it borders on provocation.

1. test, examine (divine testing of persons) (16×) Divine testing of persons: God as subject examining hearts, minds, and inner character to prove faithfulness or expose falsity. This is the dominant sense (16 occurrences), and the BDB entry's core meaning. God tests the righteous (Ps 11:5), searches the heart and tests the mind (Jer 11:20; 17:10; 20:12), and the psalmist's confidence rests on having been tested: 'when he has tested me, I shall come out as gold' (Job 23:10). The Aramaic cognate bechen and Syriac bachhen confirm this as the root's primary meaning across Semitic. Spanish el-que-prueba and French eprouver both select judicial-examination vocabulary, not casual trying. TESTING AND PROVING en: I-tested-you, You-test-him, You-tested-us | es: el-que-prueba, has-probado, lo-pruebas. | fr: [בחן], [ובחנתים], dans-éprouver | de: [בחן], [בחנני], [ובחנתים] 1Chr 29:17; Job 7:18; Job 12:11; Job 23:10; Job 34:3

2. test, try (human testing of God) (6×) Human testing of God: the reversal of sense 1, where humans are the agents who test, try, or challenge God's patience and promises. Psalm 95:9 recalls Israel in the wilderness — 'your fathers tested me.' Malachi 3:10 is the remarkable exception where God himself invites testing: 'Test me in this, says the LORD of hosts.' The connotation ranges from sinful provocation (Ps 95:9) to divinely authorized proving (Mal 3:10, 15). French eprouvez-moi and Spanish me-probaron both carry the relational challenge overtone. Six occurrences, sharply distinguished from sense 1 by the agent-patient inversion. TESTING AND PROVING

en: and-test, and-test-Me, test | es: me-probaron, prueban, tentaron | fr: [ובחנת], dans-éprouver, et-éprouvez-moi | de: [בחנו], [ובחנוני], [ובחנת] Ps 11:4; Ps 95:9; Jer 6:27; Jer 12:3; Mal 3:10

3. be tested, be proved (Nifal/Pual passive) (4×) Passive and reflexive: to be tested, be proved, undergo examination. The Nifal and Pual stems appear in Joseph's testing of his brothers — 'by this you shall be tested' (Gen 42:15-16) — and in Job's plea that he 'be tested' to the end (Job 34:36). Ezekiel 21:13 asks 'what if even the rod that despises be no more?' — testing as eschatological proving. Spanish sea-probado and German geprueft-werden both preserve the passive morphology. Four occurrences, marking the grammatical voice distinction as semantically meaningful. TESTING AND PROVING

en: and-will-be-tested, let-be-tested, tested | es: es-prueba, sea-probado, seréis-probados | fr: [בחן], et—être-éprouva, tu—être-éprouva | de: [בחן], er-prueft, und-geprüft-werden Gen 42:15; Gen 42:16; Job 34:36; Ezek 21:13

4. test, examine (imperatival plea for testing) (2×) Imperatival plea for testing: the psalmist inviting God's scrutiny as a declaration of innocence. 'Examine me, O LORD, and test me; try my heart and my mind' (Ps 26:2; cf. 139:23). Semantically related to sense 1 but rhetoricaly distinct — the human initiative and the vulnerability of self-submission to divine examination give these passages their unique emotional intensity. Spanish pruebame captures the intimate, second-person directness. Only 2 occurrences, but among the most personally charged uses of the verb. RELEASE AND MOVEMENT

en: examine-me, test-me | es: pruébame | fr: dans-fais-moi-grâce | de: examine-mich, prüfen-mich Ps 26:2; Ps 139:23

5. testing, assaying (as process or means) (1×) The process or means of testing itself: the Qal infinitive construct used to describe the act of assaying, especially in metallurgical comparison. Zechariah 13:9 says God will refine them 'as one tests gold' — kibchon et-hazzahav. The infinitive abstracts away from agent and patient to focus on the procedure itself, the refiner's art as an image of divine purification. Only 1 occurrence in this precise grammatical form, but it crystallizes the word's core metaphor. TESTING AND PROVING en: as-testing | es: como-se-prueba | fr: [כבחן] | de: [כבחן] Zech 13:9

בֹּחַן H0975 Conj-w / N-ms (3×)

watchtower, siege tower; military structure for observation or assault

A fortification term referring to either a watchtower or siege tower, depending on context. Isaiah mentions 'the hill and the watchtower' (Isaiah 32:14) as abandoned in judgment. The challenging text in Isaiah 23:13 may refer to siege towers erected against Tyre. The word occurs with textual variants (ketiv/qere), complicating precise identification, but the military-architectural meaning is clear. Towers functioned both defensively (observation) and offensively (siege warfare), making context critical for determining which type is meant.

(3×) A tower, either for watching (defensive) or for siege (offensive). Isaiah 32:14 refers to 'watchtower' (ophan) as a landmark that will be abandoned. Isaiah 23:13 may describe siege towers ('its towers') raised against Tyre, though the text is difficult. The term appears with ketiv/qere variants, suggesting scribal uncertainty about the exact form. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [ketiv], and-watchtower, its-siege-towers | es: (sus-torres-de-asedio), [sus-torres-de-asedio], y-torre | fr: [(בחוניו)], [[בחיניו]], et-éprouver | de: [(בחוניו)], [[בחיניו]], [ובחן] Isa 23:13; Isa 32:14

בֹּחַן H0976 N-ms (1×)

tested, tried, proven (as a foundation stone)

Isaiah 28:16 uses this noun to describe the cornerstone God lays in Zion as 'a tested stone' (אֶבֶן בֹּחַן). The term emphasizes proven quality and reliability, drawn from the practice of testing building materials before use. This isn't merely examination but successful passing of trials, making it suitable as a foundation. The messianic overtones of this 'tested stone' in Zion made it a crucial text for early Christian interpretation, seeing Christ as the proven, reliable foundation.

(1×) Isaiah's 'tested stone' (אֶבֶן בֹּחַן) in 28:16 refers to a cornerstone already proven fit for foundational use. Spanish 'probada' (proven), French 'éprouver' (to test), and English 'tested' all capture this sense of verification and approval. The word implies not just the act of testing but the successful result—a stone that has passed examination and is therefore trustworthy as the foundation of God's eschatological building in Zion. TESTING AND PROVING en: tested | es: probada | fr: éprouver | de: [בחן] Isa 28:16

בָּחַר H0977 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (170×)

To choose, select, prefer; of God's sovereign election of persons and places, and of human deliberate choice; passive: chosen, elect.

Bachar is the Hebrew Bible's primary verb of deliberate selection, and its theological weight is immense. When God 'chooses' Israel (Deut 7:6), Jerusalem (1 Kgs 11:13), or David (1 Sam 16:8-10), the verb carries the full gravity of sovereign election — not a preference among equals but a decisive act of covenantal commitment. The multilingual evidence reveals how seriously translators take this: Arabic yakhtāru and Spanish escoger both select purposeful-choosing vocabulary, while Korean 택하다/선택하다 and Swahili -chagua isolate the deliberative, decisive core. The passive participle bachur ('chosen one') becomes virtually a title — for elite warriors (Judg 20:15-16), for Israel as a people (Isa 43:20), and in the Proverbs for wisdom 'chosen' above silver (Prov 8:10, 10:20).

1. choose, select (Qal active) (145×) The core Qal active sense of deliberately choosing or selecting — by far the dominant usage at 145 occurrences. This covers both divine election (God choosing Abraham, Israel, Levites, Jerusalem, David's line: Deut 4:37, 7:6-7, Neh 9:7) and human choice (Joshua told to 'choose men' at Exod 17:9; Job declaring 'I would choose' at Job 9:14). Arabic yakhtāru, Korean 택하다, and Swahili -chagua all converge on deliberate, volitional selection. The verb regularly takes the preposition be- to mark the object chosen, a distinctive Hebrew idiom that Spanish renders with the direct object (escoja a) while German uses erwählen. CHOOSING AND SELECTING en: He-shall-choose, he-will-choose, shall-choose | es: escoja | fr: Il-devra-choisir, devra-choisir, fera-choisir | de: Er-soll-erwaehlen, er-wird-erwaehlen, soll-erwaehlen Deut 4:37; Deut 7:6; Deut 7:7; Deut 10:15; Deut 12:5

2. chosen one, elect (Qal passive participle) (16×) The Qal passive participle used substantively: 'chosen one(s), elect, choice.' Appears 16 times as virtually a title or status marker — of elite fighting men (Judg 20:15-16, 600 chosen Benjaminites), of Pharaoh's best chariot officers (Exod 14:7), and of Israel as God's elect people (1 Sam 24:2). Arabic mukhtār ('the chosen/elect'), Korean 선택된/뽑힌 ('selected/picked'), and Swahili wateule ('chosen ones') all use dedicated passive-participial or adjectival forms, confirming that this is a lexicalized category distinct from the active verb — a person defined by their status of having been chosen. CHOSEN AND ELECT

en: chosen, chosen-of, chosen-ones | es: escogido, escogidos, escogidos-de | fr: choisi, choisi-ceux, choisi-ceux-de | de: erwaehlen, erwaehlt, erwaehlt-die Exod 14:7; Judg 20:15; Judg 20:16; Judg 20:34; 1Sam 24:2

3. be chosen, be selected (Nifal) (7×) The Nifal stem expressing the passive or reflexive: 'to be chosen, be preferred, be more desirable.' Found 7 times, concentrated in Proverbs wisdom literature where abstract qualities are ranked — 'chosen is my fruit above fine gold' (Prov 8:19), 'the tongue of the righteous is choice silver' (Prov 10:20), 'to get understanding is to be chosen above silver' (Prov 16:16). Arabic mukhtārun and Korean 택함을 받다 ('to receive choosing') both mark the passive voice explicitly. The Nifal here functions almost as a comparative adjective: X is-to-be-preferred over Y. CHOOSING AND SELECTING en: And-shall-be-chosen, choice, chosen | es: Es-escogido, Y-será-preferida, es-escogido | fr: choisir, et-choisir | de: erwaehlte, und-erwaehlen Prov 8:10; Prov 8:19; Prov 10:20; Prov 16:16; Prov 21:3

4. (1×) A single occurrence at Eccl 9:4 involving a ketiv/qere textual variant. The ketiv reading yechubbar ('is joined') differs from the qere yibbacher ('is chosen'), producing translation uncertainty. Multilingual renderings split: some follow the ketiv (Spanish escoja may reflect the qere), others the qere. The passage's point — that a living dog is better than a dead lion — carries either way, but the textual crux makes this a distinct lexicographic note rather than a clean sense. CHOOSING AND SELECTING en: [ketiv] | es: [escoja] | fr: choisir | de: erwaehlte Eccl 9:4

5. (1×) A single occurrence at Song 5:15 where bachur is used adjectivally to describe the beloved's appearance as 'choice as the cedars of Lebanon.' Here the word functions as a qualitative adjective meaning 'excellent, finest, choice' rather than referring to an act of selection or a status of election. Spanish escogido and French choisi both render it as 'selected/choice,' while the Song's poetic register transforms the participle into pure aesthetic praise — the beloved is as 'choice' as Lebanon's most magnificent trees. CHOSEN AND ELECT

en: choice | es: escogido | fr: choisi | de: erwaehlte Song 5:15

בַּחֲרוּמִי H0978 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

Baharumite, gentilicadjective for someone from Bahurim

This ethnic designation appears in 1 Chronicles 11:33, identifying one of David's mighty men as 'the Baharumite.' It corresponds to 'Barhumite' in the parallel 2 Samuel 23:31 passage, both referring to someone from Bahurim, a village near Jerusalem on the road to Jericho. Textual variants suggest the precise form was uncertain, but the reference is clearly to the hometown of this warrior in David's elite forces.

(1×) The gentilicial 'Baharumite' (הַבַּחֲרוּמִי) in 1 Chronicles 11:33 identifies Azmaveth as coming from Bahurim, a village that features prominently in David's flight from Absalom (2 Samuel 16-17). Translations consistently render this as an ethnic designation (Spanish 'bajarumí,' English 'Bacharumite'), recognizing it as the adjectival form deriving from the place name Bahurim, though textual comparison with 2 Samuel 23:31 shows spelling variation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Bacharumite | es: el-bajarumí | fr: [הבחרומי] | de: [הבחרומי] 1Chr 11:33

בְּחוּרִים H0979 N-fpc / 2ms (3×)

youth, young manhood; the period of early life and vigor

An abstract plural noun denoting the time of youth or early adulthood. Moses describes Joshua as his attendant 'from his youth' (Numbers 11:28). Ecclesiastes urges the young man to rejoice in 'the days of your youth' and remember God 'in the days of your young manhood' (Ecclesiastes 11:9; 12:1). The term captures the stage of life characterized by energy, potential, and formative experiences. Used in both narrative (Joshua's long service) and wisdom literature (the fleeting nature of youth).

(3×) The state or time of being young; youthfulness. Joshua is described as Moses' assistant 'from his youth' (Numbers 11:28), emphasizing long faithful service beginning early. Qohelet addresses a young man: 'Rejoice in your youth' (Ecclesiastes 11:9) and 'Remember your Creator in the days of your youth' (Ecclesiastes 12:1), urging enjoyment tempered by accountability during the formative years. YOUTH PERIOD

en: from-his-youth, your-young-manhood, your-youth | es: desde-su-juventud, tu-juventud, tu-mocedad | fr: de-son-youth, ton-jeunesse-toi | de: [בחוּרוֹתָךְ], [בחוּרֹתֶיךָ], von-sein-youth Num 11:28; Eccl 11:9; Eccl 12:1

בַּחֻרִים H0980 Prep-m / N-proper-ms (5×)

Bahurim, a Benjaminite village east of Jerusalem on the road to the Jordan, associated with David's flight from Absalom.

A place name identifying a small village in the territory of Benjamin, situated east of the Mount of Olives on the road descending toward the Jordan Valley. Bahurim figures prominently in David's personal history: Michal's husband Paltiel weeps as he follows her from there (2 Sam 3:16), Shimei the son of Gera curses David from Bahurim during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam 16:5), Jonathan and Ahimaaz hide in a well there while carrying intelligence to David (2 Sam 17:18), and Solomon later invokes Shimei's origin at Bahurim (1 Kgs 2:8).

(5×) The proper place name Bahurim (baḥurîm, possibly meaning 'young men's village'), a Benjaminite settlement east of Jerusalem near the Mount of Olives on the Jericho road. It serves as a recurring geographic marker in the David narratives: 2 Samuel 3:16 records Paltiel following Michal weeping 'as far as Bahurim'; 2 Samuel 16:5 introduces Shimei cursing David from there during the Absalom crisis; 2 Samuel 17:18 locates the well where Jonathan and Ahimaaz hid; 2 Samuel 19:16 notes Shimei's frantic descent from Bahurim to greet the returning king; and 1 Kings 2:8 recalls Shimei's origin. Multilingual glosses show slight transliteration variation (eng 'Bahurim/Bachurim,' spa 'Bajurim,' deu 'Bachurim/Bahurim') reflecting the guttural ḥet. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: Bachurim, Bahurim, from-Bachurim | es: Bajurim, de-Bajurim, en-Bajurim | fr: Bachurim, Bahurim, dans-Bachurim | de: Bachurim, Bahurim, in-Bachurim 2Sam 3:16; 2Sam 16:5; 2Sam 17:18; 2Sam 19:16; 1Kgs 2:8

בָּטָה H0981 V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (4×)

To speak rashly, babble — uttering words thoughtlessly or without due deliberation

Describes careless, impulsive speech — words that escape the lips before thought catches up. Proverbs 12:18 contrasts the one who 'babbles' recklessly with the tongue of the wise that brings healing. In Leviticus 5:4 the verb appears twice in the context of rash oaths — swearing thoughtlessly with the lips, whether for good or ill. Psalm 106:33 applies it to Moses, who 'spoke rashly' at Meribah when Israel provoked his spirit. The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'pronunciar precipitadamente,' English 'speaks rashly' — consistently emphasize the impulsive, unguarded quality of the speech.

(4×) Speaking rashly, thoughtlessly, or impulsively — uttering words without proper deliberation. In Proverbs 12:18 the 'babbler' is contrasted with wise speech; in Leviticus 5:4 it describes swearing a rash oath with the lips; and Psalm 106:33 records how Moses spoke rashly when his spirit was provoked at Meribah. Spanish 'pronunciar precipitadamente' and the consistent English rendering 'speaks rashly' confirm that the core sense is careless, unguarded utterance rather than merely voluble speech. SPEAKING AND TALKING en: and-he-spoke-rashly, he-speaks-rashly, one-who-speaks-rashly | es: a-pronunciar, pronuncie, quien-habla-precipitadamente | fr: et-prononcer, il-parle-rashly, à-parle-rashly | de: [בּוֹטֵה], er-spricht-rashly, und-er-redete-rashly Lev 5:4; Ps 106:33; Prov 12:18

בָּטַח H0982 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjImperf-3mp (120×)

To trust, rely on, feel secure; in Hifil, to cause someone to trust or feel confident

A foundational verb of reliance and confidence, batach covers the full spectrum from active trust directed toward God or human protectors, to an intransitive state of feeling secure or at ease. The Qal active sense dominates Scripture, appearing over a hundred times in exhortations to trust in the Lord (Ps 37:3, Prov 3:5). Yet the stative use warns against complacency — the people of Laish dwelt 'secure' and unsuspecting (Judg 18:7). The Hifil causative, rarer but theologically potent, describes figures like Hezekiah's adversaries who 'make others trust' in false promises (2 Kgs 18:30, Jer 28:15).

1. trust in, rely on (105×) The dominant active sense: to place trust, confidence, or reliance in someone or something. Overwhelmingly directed toward God in the Psalms (Ps 28:7, 'I trusted in him and was helped'), this sense also extends to human alliances and fortifications (Deut 28:52, 2 Kgs 18:19). Arabic waṯiqa and Korean sinroehada both capture this directed reliance. The multilingual glosses consistently render it with directional trust verbs — Spanish confiar, French se confier, German vertrauen. FAITH AND TRUST en: I-have-trusted, I-trust, I-trusted | es: confiaba, confié, confiéis | fr: dans-se-confier, se-confier | de: [תִּבְטַח], vertrauen, vertraute Deut 28:52; 2Kgs 18:19; 2Kgs 18:20; 2Kgs 18:21

2. feel secure, be at ease (10×) The stative-intransitive sense: to feel secure, be at ease, or dwell in careless confidence, without a directed object of trust. The classic example is the people of Laish living 'secure and unsuspecting' (Judg 18:7, 10, 27). Job 40:23 uses it of the hippopotamus feeling secure even when the Jordan surges. Spanish confiado and German in Sicherheit capture this settled-state nuance. Context determines whether the security is genuine or dangerously complacent (Prov 11:15). FAITH AND TRUST
en: and-careless, and-secure, are-bold | es: confiadas, confiado, confía | fr: et-se-confier, et-secure, se-confier | de: [בּוֹטֵח], [וּבוֹטֵח], er-vertraut Judg 18:7; Judg 18:10; Judg 18:27; Job 40:23; Prov 11:15

3. cause to trust, make secure (5×) The Hifil causative: to cause someone to trust or instill confidence in another. This relatively rare stem (5 occurrences) carries heavy theological weight. Psalm 22:9 recalls God making the psalmist trust from the mother's breast, while Jeremiah condemns false prophets who 'made Israel trust in a lie' (Jer 28:15, 29:31). The causative frame shifts agency — the subject is not the one trusting but the one producing trust in others. FAITH AND TRUST
en: and-he-made-trust, have-made-trust, let-make-trust | es: e-hizo-confiar, el-que-me-hizo-confiar, hiciste-confiar | fr: de-se-confier, et-se-confier, que-fais-confiance | de: lass-mache-trust, und-vertrauen, vertrauen 2Kgs 18:30; Ps 22:9; Isa 36:15; Jer 28:15; Jer 29:31

בֶּטַח H0983 N-ms (42×)

security, safety — used adverbially for dwelling, walking, or lying down in a state of confident safety

Betach is a masculine noun meaning security or confidence, but it almost never functions as an ordinary noun. In 41 of its 42 occurrences it serves as an adverbial accusative — with or without the preposition le — modifying verbs of settled existence: 'dwell in safety' (Lev 25:18), 'lie down securely' (Job 11:18), 'walk confidently' (Prov 10:9). The word paints a picture of undisturbed habitation under divine protection. Its single non-adverbial instance pairs it with hashqet ('quietness') in Isaiah 32:17, describing the fruit of righteousness. The multilingual glosses uniformly render the adverbial sense: Spanish 'con seguridad,' French 'en surete,' German 'in Sicherheit.'

security, safety, confidence (42×) Security or confident trust, functioning almost exclusively as an adverbial modifier of verbs of settled existence. The collocation yashav lavetach ('dwell securely') recurs across legal (Lev 25:18-19), prophetic (Jer 32:37; Ezek 34:25), and wisdom (Prov 3:29) contexts. Ezekiel 38:8, 11 extend it to eschatological peace. Spanish 'con seguridad,' French 'en surete' confirm a unified semantic profile. SAFETY AND SECURITY en: in-safety, in-security, securely | es: con-seguridad, con-seguridad,, con-seguridad; | fr: en-sûreté, securely, sécurité | de: in-Sicherheit, securely, zu-vertraute Gen 34:25; Lev 25:18; Lev 25:19; Lev 26:5; Deut 12:10

בֶּטַח H0984 Conj-w (1×)

Betah (or Tibhath), a city of Hadadezer conquered by David

This place name appears in 2 Samuel 8:8 as one of the cities from which David took bronze after defeating Hadadezer king of Zobah. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 18:8 calls it 'Tibhath,' and the Septuagint offers yet different transliterations, suggesting textual uncertainty. Regardless of the exact vocalization, it was a Syrian city rich in bronze, contributing to the materials later used in Solomon's temple. The conjunction 'and from Betah' indicates it's listed alongside other conquered cities.

(1×) In 2 Samuel 8:8, 'from Betah' (וּמִבֶּטַח) names a source city for bronze tribute, though the parallel 1 Chronicles 18:8 reads 'Tibhath' instead. The multilingual glosses preserve the form 'Betah/Betaj' (Spanish, English, French, German 'und von Betah'), recognizing this as a proper name despite textual variants. The conjunction indicates this city is part of a list of Hadadezer's territories that became David's spoil. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-Betah | es: Y-de-Betaj | fr: et-de-Betah | de: und-von-Betah 2Sam 8:8

בִּטְחָה H0985 Conj-w (1×)

in trust, in trusting; secure confidence

Isaiah 30:15 uses this rare feminine noun (or possibly infinitive) in the famous salvation oracle: 'in returning and rest you shall be saved; in quietness and in trust shall be your strength.' The term בִּטְחָה emphasizes settled confidence and security as opposed to anxious self-reliance. Isaiah contrasts this quiet trust in God with Israel's frantic military alliances with Egypt. The word captures that deep settledness of faith that produces true strength.

(1×) The Isaiah 30:15 occurrence pairs 'trust' (בִּטְחָה) with 'quietness' as the source of strength, contrasting with the panicked diplomacy described in context. Spanish 'en confianza,' English 'in trust' capture this settled confidence. The form may be an infinitive functioning as an abstract noun (like בָּטַח in 32:17), emphasizing the state or action of trusting rather than just the concept of trust—making it active reliance on God rather than mere intellectual assent. CONFIDENCE AND TRUST

en: and-in-trust | es: y-en-confianza | fr: [ובבטחה] | de: [ובבטחה] Isa 30:15

בִּטָּחוֹן H0986 N-ms (3×)

confidence, trust, security; assurance in someone or something

A noun denoting confidence or trust placed in someone or something. The Rabshakeh mocks Hezekiah, asking 'What is this confidence (bitachon) you trust in?' (2 Kings 18:19 = Isaiah 36:4), questioning the basis of Judah's security. Ecclesiastes offers a proverb: a living dog is better than a dead lion, with 'hope' or confidence (Ecclesiastes 9:4). The term points to the object of trust—whether misplaced (foreign alliances) or justified (God). The Assyrian's taunt exposes the fragility of human confidence when it rests on anything but the Lord.

(3×) Trust, confidence, or security placed in a person or plan. The Assyrian field commander ridicules Judah's trust: 'What is this confidence in which you trust?' (2 Kings 18:19; Isaiah 36:4). Qohelet uses the term in a proverb about preferring life with hope to death without it (Ecclesiastes 9:4). The word focuses on the psychological and spiritual state of confidence, which can be well-founded or illusory. HOPE (ABSTRACT NOUN)

en: hope, the-confidence, trust | es: confianza, esperanza, la-confianza | fr: [הבטחון], le-confidence, בטחון | de: [בטחון], [הבטחון], der-confidence 2Kgs 18:19; Eccl 9:4; Isa 36:4

בַּטָּחוֹת H0987 Conj-w / N-fp (1×)

security, safety (plural intensive); false sense of being secure

Job 12:6 uses this plural noun ironically to describe the prosperity of the wicked: 'the tents of robbers prosper, and those who provoke God are secure (בַּטָּחוֹת).' The plural likely intensifies the concept of security or indicates multiple aspects of safety. Job's bitter observation notes that evildoers enjoy complete safety while the righteous suffer, challenging simplistic retribution theology. The word's ironic use—security that exists but shouldn't—sharpens Job's complaint about divine justice.

(1×) In Job 12:6, 'security' (וּבַטָּחוֹת) describes the paradoxical safety enjoyed by those who provoke God. Spanish 'seguridad tienen' and English 'security' capture the substantive sense. The plural form may indicate intensive or comprehensive security—the wicked aren't just safe, they're completely secure. Job's rhetorical strategy uses this observation to undermine his friends' theology: if security indicates divine favor, why do evildoers prosper unmolested? SAFETY AND SECURITY

en: and-security | es: y-seguridad-tienen | fr: et-ובטחות | de: [ובטחות] Job 12:6

בָּטַל H0988 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConjPerf-3cp (1×)

to cease, stop working (of grinding grain)

Ecclesiastes 12:3 employs this verb in the famous allegory of old age: 'the grinders cease because they are few.' Most interpreters see this as metaphorical for teeth that stop working in elderly mouths. The Hebrew root בָּטַל means to cease or become idle, and appears in Aramaic and Assyrian with similar meanings. The imagery of a household falling silent as workers cease their tasks powerfully evokes the body's decline as its 'workers' (organs, faculties) fail one by one.

(1×) The Ecclesiastes 12:3 usage 'and the grinders cease' (וּבָטְלוּ הַטֹּחֲנוֹת) fits the chapter's extended metaphor of bodily decline. Spanish 'cesen,' English 'cease,' French forms all preserve the simple meaning of stopping work. Whether literal grinding servants in a decaying house or metaphorical teeth in an aging mouth, the verb captures the moment when productive activity stops—the transition from function to cessation that marks aging and death. CEASING AND STOPPING en: and-cease | es: y-cesen | fr: et-ובטלו | de: [ובטלו] Eccl 12:3

בְּטֵל H0989 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (6×)

to cease, stop; (Pa'el) to cause to cease, make stop – used of halting work or activity by decree

An Aramaic verb found exclusively in Ezra, describing the stopping of construction on the Jerusalem temple. In its basic Pe'al stem it means simply 'to cease' or 'to stop,' as when the rebuilding work ground to a halt (Ezra 4:24). In the causative Pa'el stem, it describes the forcible halting of work by hostile officials who compelled the Jews to stop building. Spanish renders both stems distinctly – 'cesar' for the intransitive and 'hacer cesar' for the causative – preserving the voice distinction clearly.

1. cause to cease, make stop (causative) (4×) The causative Pa'el stem (equivalent to the Hebrew Piel), meaning to force an activity to stop by external authority or decree. All four occurrences involve political opponents compelling the cessation of temple rebuilding (Ezra 4:21, 23; 5:5; 6:8). Spanish 'hicieron cesar' and English 'stopped/caused to cease' consistently mark the agent who enforces the halt. CEASING AND STOPPING en: and-stopped, stopped, to-cause-to-cease | es: hicieron-cesar, para-hacer-cesar, sean-detenidos | fr: [בטלן], [ובטלן], [לבטלא] | de: [בטלן], [ובטלן], [לבטלא] Ezra 4:21; Ezra 4:23; Ezra 5:5; Ezra 6:8

2. cease, stop (intransitive) (2×) The intransitive Pe'al stem (equivalent to the Hebrew Qal), meaning to come to a stop on its own or as a result of prior action. Both occurrences appear in Ezra 4:24 – the perfect and participle forms – describing the temple work that had ceased. Spanish 'cesada/ceso' and English 'stopped' capture the stative, resultative quality of work that simply was no longer happening. CEASING AND STOPPING

en: stopped | es: cesada, cesó | fr: [בטלא], [בטלת] | de: [בטלא], [בטלת] Ezra 4:24

בֶּטֶן H0990 Prep-b / N-fsc / 3fs (72×)

Belly, abdomen, womb; the physical midsection of the body, extending to the womb as seat of gestation and idiomatically to origin or birth.

The Hebrew בֶּטֶן denotes the belly or abdominal cavity in its most concrete sense — the soft middle of the body into which Ehud's sword sank (Judg 3:21-22) and which crawling creatures traverse (Gen 3:14). But its richest biblical usage centers on the womb as the place where life begins. When Rebekah feels the twins struggling 'in her womb' (Gen 25:23), בֶּטֶן evokes the intimate, hidden space of divine formation. The phrase מִבֶּטֶן ('from the womb') became an idiom for lifelong destiny — Samson was a Nazirite 'from the womb' (Judg 16:17), and Job wishes he had perished there (Job 3:11). Arabic بَطْن preserves the same concrete-to-figurative range, while the Song of Songs celebrates the belly as a thing of beauty (Song 7:3).

1. belly, abdomen (28×) The physical belly or abdomen — the soft midsection of the body, whether of humans or animals. Used of the literal stomach area in contexts of violence (Ehud's blade plunging into Eglon's belly, Judg 3:21-22), of ritual testing (the bitter water causing the belly to swell, Num 5:21-22), of eating and hunger (Prov 13:25, Ezek 3:3), and metaphorically as the seat of inner passion or avarice (Job 20:20, 23). Arabic بَطْن shares exactly this anatomical reference. Proverbs uses it figuratively for the 'innermost parts' of a person (Prov 18:8). WOMB AND BELLY

en: and-belly-their, belly, belly-his | es: de-su-vientre, en-su-vientre;, en-tu-vientre | fr: dans-son-ventre-lui, dans-ton-ventre-toi, dans-ventre | de: Bauch, belly, dein-belly Num 5:21; Num 5:22; Num 5:27; Judg 3:21; Judg 3:22

2. womb, place of gestation (25×) The womb or uterus as the place of gestation, where a child is carried and formed before birth. This is the sense in the patriarchal narratives — Rebekah's twins struggling in her womb (Gen 25:23-24), Rachel's barrenness framed as God withholding 'fruit of the womb' (Gen 30:2). Deuteronomy promises blessing on 'the fruit of your womb' (Deut 7:13). Spanish vientre and French sein both serve this sense, while German distinguishes it clearly as Mutterleib ('mother-body'). Psalm 139:13 ('you knit me together in my mother's womb') elevates this sense into theology of divine intimacy. WOMB AND BELLY

en: in-the-womb, in-womb-her, my-womb | es: el-vientre, en-el-vientre, en-su-vientre | fr: dans-le-sein, dans-sein-sa, le-ventre | de: Bauch, Mutterleib, dein-womb Gen 25:23; Gen 25:24; Gen 30:2; Gen 38:27; Deut 7:13

3. from the womb, from birth (18×) An idiomatic extension meaning 'from birth' or 'from one's very origin,' using the prepositional phrase מִבֶּטֶן ('from the womb'). Samson was consecrated as a Nazirite 'from the womb' (Judg 16:17); Job laments he did not die 'from the womb' (Job 3:11) and reflects that he came naked 'from my mother's womb' (Job 1:21). This sense shifts from anatomy to ontology — it marks something as congenital, predestined, or lifelong. French dès le sein ('from the bosom') and German vom Mutterleib ('from the mother-body') both preserve the idiomatic flavor. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-from-womb, and-from-womb-of, from-birth | es: De-vientre-de, de-vientre-de, del-vientre | fr: de-ventre, de-womb-de, dès-le-sein | de: Bauch, und-Bauch, vom-Mutterleib Judg 16:17; Job 1:21; Job 3:11; Job 10:19; Job 31:18

4. (1×) A single occurrence in Ps 31:9 where the psalmist's distress affects 'my body' (בִּטְנִי), used in parallel with the eye and soul wasting from grief. Here בֶּטֶן seems to denote the entire body or physical frame rather than specifically the belly or womb. Spanish mi vientre and German mein body reflect the difficulty translators face: the word straddles the boundary between localized abdomen and the whole embodied self in anguish. This may represent a metonymic extension — the gut as shorthand for bodily suffering. WOMB AND BELLY

en: and-my-body | es: y-mi-vientre | fr: et-dans-ventre | de: und-mein-body Ps 31:9

בֶּטֶן H0991 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Beten, a town in the territory of Asher

Joshua 19:25 lists Beten among the cities allotted to the tribe of Asher during the territorial distribution. The name possibly derives from 'belly' or 'depression,' suggesting a location in a valley or basin. Ancient versions transliterate it variously (Septuagint: Baithok, Betel), indicating uncertainty about pronunciation. The precise site remains unidentified in modern archaeology, though it was clearly within Asher's northwest coastal territory.

(1×) The place name 'Beten' (וּבֶטֶן) appears in Joshua's boundary list for Asher (19:25). Translations preserve it as a proper name: Spanish 'Betén,' English 'Veten,' German 'Veten.' The conjunction indicates it's part of a series of towns defining Asher's inheritance. BDB suggests it might mean 'depression' or 'basin,' possibly describing the topographical setting, though no certain identification with a modern site exists. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Veten | es: y-Betén | fr: et-Veten | de: und-Veten Josh 19:25

בְּטְנִים H0992 N-mp (1×)

pistachio nuts, oval nuts from the pistacia tree

Genesis 43:11 mentions pistachio nuts among the choice products of Canaan that Jacob sends as a gift to the Egyptian vizier (unknowingly Joseph). The Hebrew בָּטְנִים refers to nuts from pistacia terebinthus or pistacia vera, still prized delicacies in the ancient Near East. Assyrian, Aramaic, and Arabic cognates confirm this identification. That Jacob includes them in a diplomatic gift to Egypt indicates their value as luxury items, representing the land's finest produce.

(1×) Genesis 43:11 lists 'pistachio nuts' (בָּטְנִים) alongside honey, spices, myrrh, and almonds as 'the choice fruits of the land' suitable for an Egyptian official. Spanish 'pistachos,' English 'pistachio nuts,' German 'Pistazien' all recognize these as the familiar nuts. The evidence from Assyrian, Aramaic, and Arabic cognates confirms this was a known commodity across the ancient Near East, valued enough to serve as a diplomatic gift in a time of famine. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT

en: pistachio-nuts | es: pistachos | fr: pistachio-nuts | de: Pistazien Gen 43:11

בִּטְנִים H0993 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Betonim, a city in Gad east of the Jordan

Joshua 13:26 includes Betonim in the territorial allotment for the tribe of Gad, located east of the Jordan River. The name has been identified with modern Batneh, west of Es-Salt. The Septuagint transliterates it as Botnia, confirming its status as a place name. This city marked part of Gad's northern boundary in the Transjordan region, though it receives no further mention in biblical narratives.

(1×) The place name 'Betonim' (וּבָטְנִים) appears in Joshua 13:26 as part of Gad's inheritance in the Transjordan. All translations preserve it as a proper name: Spanish 'Betonim,' English 'Betonim,' French 'Betonim.' The conjunction links it to the preceding boundary description. Modern identification with Batneh west of Es-Salt provides a geographical anchor in the highlands east of the Jordan valley. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Betonim | es: y-Betonim | fr: et-Betonim | de: und-Betonim Josh 13:26

בִּי H0994 Prep / 1cs (12×)

bi – please, I pray; a particle of entreaty used when addressing a superior or making a humble request

The particle bi ('please, I pray') is a short interjection of polite entreaty, almost always attached to 'my lord' (adoni) or directed toward God. It softens a request, signaling deference and humility on the part of the speaker. Judah uses it when addressing Joseph in Egypt: 'Please, my lord' (Gen 43:20; 44:18). Moses employs it before God at the burning bush: 'Please, my Lord, I am not a man of words' (Exod 4:10, 13). The particle has no independent semantic content beyond its pragmatic function as a politeness marker, making it a pure discourse particle rather than a content word. Spanish por favor, French je t'en prie, and German bitte all reflect this single function of courteous appeal.

please (12×) A discourse particle of polite entreaty, equivalent to 'please' or 'I pray,' used when addressing a superior (Gen 43:20; 44:18) or God (Exod 4:10, 13). It carries no independent meaning beyond marking deference and humility. Spanish por-favor, French je-t'en-prie, and German bitte all render its single pragmatic function. ENTREATY PARTICLES

en: please | es: Por-favor, por-favor | fr: je-t'en-prie, je-te-prie, s'il-te-plaît | de: bitte Gen 43:20; Gen 44:18; Exod 4:10; Exod 4:13; Num 12:11

בִּין H0995 V-Hifil-Perf-2mp (171×) understand, perceive, discern; (Qal) grasp, perceive; (Niphal) be discerning; (Hifil) understand, teach; (Hitpael) consider Hebrew בִּין spans cognitive acts from simple perception to reflective wisdom. In Qal, it means to perceive or understand something with the mind or senses. Niphal forms describe a person characterized by understanding—discerning, prudent. Hifil serves double duty: internally, possessing understanding (stative); causatively, making someone else understand (teaching). Hitpael adds reflexive deliberation—to consider carefully, reflect, ponder. Arabic cognate فَهِمَ (fahima) and derived forms parallel the semantic range closely. Korean translations distinguish 깨닫다 (realize) from 이해하다 (understand), while Swahili kuelewa covers the basic sense.

1. understand, perceive (Qal) (50×) The foundational Qal active sense: to grasp mentally, comprehend, or perceive a fact or situation. Deuteronomy 32:29 (if only they were wise and understood) and 1 Samuel 3:8 (Eli perceived the Lord was calling) show cognitive realization. Arabic fahima and Korean 깨닫다/이해하다 mirror the mental grasp. Swahili kuelewa serves across translations. This is straightforward intellectual apprehension, the verb's simplest meaning. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT en: and-he-understood, and-understood, considers | es: entenderá, entenderá-de, entenderá? | fr: Jabin, comprendre, discerner | de: und-er-understood, und-understood, und-zwischen Deut 32:29; 1Sam 3:8; 2Sam 12:19; Neh 8:8; Neh 13:7

2. have understanding (Hifil stative) (31×) Hifil in its internal or stative sense describes possessing understanding—being one who has insight or intelligence. 1 Kings 3:11 (you asked for understanding), 1 Chronicles 15:22 (Chenaniah was skillful in understanding), and Proverbs passages about the wise versus fools illustrate this adjectival-like usage. Arabic fāhim (one who understands) and Korean 분별하는 자 (one who discerns) capture the attributive quality. Spanish el que entiende and German der Verstand reflect nominal or participial forms. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT

en: and-the-ones-understanding, and-understanding, is-to-understand | es: el-entendido, el-que-entiende, entender | fr: comprendre, discerner, et-comprendre | de: der-verstand, der-zwischen, und-verstehen 1Kgs 3:11; 1Chr 15:22; 1Chr 25:7; 1Chr 25:8; 1Chr 27:32

3. cause to understand, teach (Hifil causative) (25×) Hifil in its causative force: to cause someone to understand, to instruct or teach. 2 Chronicles 35:3 (teach all Israel), Nehemiah 8:7-9 (the Levites helped the people understand the Law), and Ezra 8:16 (men of understanding) show pedagogical contexts. Arabic fahhama (to make understand) and Korean 깨닫게 하다 (cause to realize) are standard causatives. Swahili -fanya aelewe/-fundisha (make understand/teach) parallels the Hebrew structure. This is active instruction, not just possessing insight. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT

en: and-he-instructed, causing-to-understand, give-me-understanding | es: Dame-entendimiento, Entiende, Y-hizo-entender | fr: comprendre, comprendre-eux, de-entre | de: der-Sohn, und-er-baute, verstand 2Chr 35:3; Ezra 8:16; Neh 8:7; Neh 8:9

4. discerning, prudent (Niphal ptc.) (24×) Niphal participial forms function as adjectives describing a discerning or prudent person. Genesis 41:33 (find a discerning and wise man), Deuteronomy 1:13 (wise, understanding men), and 1 Samuel 16:18 (a man of understanding) illustrate the attributive use. Arabic fahīm and faṭīn (discerning, shrewd) are cognate adjectives. Korean 총명한 (intelligent) and Swahili mwenye ufahamu (possessor of understanding) reflect the permanent or habitual quality of insight. This is less about a single act of understanding and more about character. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT

en: I-have-understanding, and-discerning, and-prudent-of | es: al-entendido, de-hijos, entendido | fr: comprendre, de-fils, discerner | de: ein-Verständiger, und-Verstaendnis, und-discerning Gen 41:33; Gen 41:39; Deut 1:13; Deut 4:6; 1Sam 16:18

5. consider, reflect (Hitpael) (22×) Hitpael reflexive-intensive: to consider carefully, reflect, or ponder deeply. 1 Kings 3:21 (when I looked carefully), Job 11:11 (he sees iniquity, will he not consider it?), and Psalm 73:17 (until I went into the sanctuary and understood) show deliberate mental engagement. Arabic ta'ammala (to contemplate) and Korean 생각하다/살펴보다 (think/examine) capture the reflexive attention. Swahili -tafakari/-zingatia (meditate/consider) parallels the intentional focus. This is not passive reception but active intellectual work. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT

en: Consider, I-consider, I-get-understanding | es: consideraré, consideren, considero | fr: comprendre, discerner, et-comprendre | de: und-ich-looked-closely, und-verstand, und-verstehen 1Kgs 3:21; Job 11:11; Job 23:15; Job 26:14; Job 30:20

6. give attention, regard (Qal) (10×) A Qal sub-sense emphasizing attention or regard rather than intellectual grasp—'give heed,' 'pay attention,' 'regard.' Deuteronomy 32:7 (consider the days of old), Job 18:2 (how long before you consider words?), Proverbs 7:7 (I observed among the simple) show perceptual or attentional focus. Arabic yantabihu (pay attention) and Korean 돌아보다/살피다 (look back/observe) highlight the directedness of perception. Swahili -jali/-chunguza (care for/investigate) reflects the shift from pure cognition to directed attention. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT

en: I-observed, and-I-looked, and-give-attention | es: considera, considerad, considerando | fr: comprendre, consider, dans-comprendre | de: consider, und-er-baute, und-verstehen Deut 32:7; Ezra 8:15; Job 18:2; Ps 5:1; Prov 7:7

7. understand, grasp (Qal/Hifil infinitive) (7×) Infinitival usage expressing the concept or purpose of understanding abstractly. 1 Kings 3:9 (to discern between good and evil), Proverbs 1:2 (to know wisdom and instruction, to understand words of insight) show nominalizations or purpose clauses. Arabic fahm (understanding as a noun) and Korean 깨닫기/분별하기 (the act of discerning) capture the infinitival abstraction. This is understanding as a goal or capacity rather than an event. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT

en: to-discern, to-understand, understand | es: Entended, entiendan-, entiendas | fr: comprendre, dans-comprendre, à-comprendre | de: verstand, verstehen, zu-discern 1Kgs 3:9; Job 38:20; Ps 50:22; Ps 94:8; Prov 1:2

8. (1×) A single occurrence in 2 Chronicles 11:23—context suggests acting wisely or prudently, perhaps distributing sons wisely. Spanish 'entendió' and French 'comprendre' maintain the understanding root, but the semantic nuance leans toward practical wisdom or shrewd action rather than intellectual comprehension. The multilingual evidence is thin, awaiting further contextual or lexical refinement. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT

en: and-acted-wisely | es: Y-entendió | fr: et-comprendre | de: und-er-baute 2Chr 11:23

9. (1×) Deuteronomy 32:10 stands alone with a possible sense of caring for or guarding—'he encircled him, cared for him.' Spanish 'lo cuidó' (cared for) and German 'er sorgte für ihn' (he cared for him) suggest a protective or nurturing act distinct from cognitive understanding. This may represent semantic extension from perceiving/attending to actively caring, or a homonym. Domain assignment to Physical Impact reflects uncertainty. STRIKING AND REFERENCE

en: he-cared-for-him | es: lo-cuidó | fr: il-cared-pour-lui | de: er-sorgte-fuer-ihn Deut 32:10

בֵּין H0996 Prep / 2ms (410×)

Between, among; preposition marking spatial, relational, or conceptual interval separating two or more entities

The Hebrew preposition ben marks the interval or space between two or more points, whether physical, temporal, or abstract. It appears over 400 times across the Hebrew Bible, structuring distinctions as foundational as light from darkness (Gen 1:4) and the waters above from below (Gen 1:6). With pronominal suffixes and in constructions like mibben ('from between'), it conveys nuanced relational positioning. Cognates in Aramaic, Syriac, and Arabic confirm its pan-Semitic pedigree as the quintessential word for 'between.'

between, among (410×) Preposition indicating the interval or space separating two or more referents, whether spatial (Gen 15:17 'between the pieces'), relational (Gen 26:28 'between us'), temporal, or conceptual (Gen 1:4 'between the light and the darkness'). Cognate Arabic bayn and Aramaic ben confirm the pan-Semitic role of this word. Pronominal suffixes and compound forms like mibben extend its reach across virtually every genre of biblical literature. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: between | es: entre | fr: entre | de: zwischen, zwischen- Gen 1:4; Gen 1:6; Gen 1:7; Gen 1:14; Gen 1:18

בֵּין H0997 Prep (3×)

between, among (Aramaic); spatial or relational preposition indicating position

An Aramaic preposition meaning 'between' or 'among,' appearing in Daniel's visions. The term occurs in descriptions of symbolic beasts and their features: the bear raised up 'on one side' (literally 'between'), with ribs 'between its teeth' (Daniel 7:5); a horn coming up 'among' the others (Daniel 7:8). The term functions spatially and relationally, describing position within a set or location relative to boundaries. Aramaic ben parallels Hebrew bein, with minor orthographic differences (ketiv/qere variations preserved in some manuscripts).

(3×) The preposition 'between' or 'among' in Aramaic sections of Daniel. Used to describe the bear's position 'on one side' (Daniel 7:5), the little horn arising 'among them' (Daniel 7:8, with ketiv/qere variants), and spatial relationships within visions. The multilingual glosses show some uncertainty (brackets in French/German), reflecting textual complexities in Daniel's Aramaic. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (qere:among-them), [ketiv:among-them], between | es: [entre-ellos], entre, entre-ellos | fr: [ביניהון], [ביניהן], entre | de: [ביניהון], [ביניהן], zwischen Dan 7:5; Dan 7:8

בִּינָה H0998 N-fsc (38×)

Understanding, discernment, insight — the cognitive faculty of perceiving distinctions and grasping wisdom

A feminine noun from the root b-y-n ('to discern, perceive between'), denoting the capacity to distinguish, comprehend, and judge wisely. BDB identifies four nuances: the act of understanding (Isa 33:19; Dan 9:22), the faculty itself (Job 20:3; Prov 3:5), the object of knowledge pursued and prized (Prov 4:5, 7; 16:16; Job 28:12, 20), and the personification of understanding as a companion alongside Wisdom (Prov 2:3; 7:4; 8:14). The exhortation to 'get understanding' (qeneh binah, Prov 4:5) places it among the highest spiritual acquisitions, paralleling and complementing hokmah (wisdom).

understanding/discernment (38×) Understanding, discernment, or insight as a cognitive and moral faculty — encompassing the act of comprehension (Dan 9:22; Isa 33:19), the innate capacity to perceive distinctions (Job 20:3; 39:26; Prov 3:5), the prized object of intellectual pursuit (Prov 4:5, 7; 16:16; Job 28:12, 20), and its personification alongside Wisdom (Prov 7:4; 8:14). Multilingual glosses converge: Spanish 'entendimiento,' French 'intelligence/discernement,' German 'Verständnis' — all mapping to a unified field of cognitive-moral perception. UNDERSTANDING AND DISCERNMENT

en: is-understanding, meaning, understanding | es: entendimiento, es-entendimiento | fr: [בינה], discernement, intelligence | de: Verstaendnis, [בינה] Deut 4:6; 1Chr 12:33; 1Chr 22:12; 2Chr 2:12; 2Chr 2:13

בִּינָה H0999 N-fs (1×)

understanding, discernment, insight (Aramaic cognate of Hebrew binah)

Daniel 2:21 (Aramaic section) declares that God 'gives wisdom to the wise and knowledge to those who have understanding (בִּינָה).' This is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew בִּינָה, sharing the same meaning of discernment and insight. In Daniel's context, it emphasizes that all understanding—especially of mysteries and dreams—comes from God, not human cleverness. The word appears in Daniel's blessing after God reveals Nebuchadnezzar's dream, attributing all interpretive insight to divine gift.

(1×) Daniel 2:21's 'understanding' (בִּינָה) occurs in Aramaic, part of Daniel's doxology praising God who reveals mysteries. Spanish 'entendimiento,' English 'understanding,' French 'intelligence' all capture the cognitive dimension of insight and discernment. The context—Daniel interpreting an impossible dream—shows this isn't ordinary knowledge but supernatural discernment granted by God. The Aramaic form matches Hebrew usage, emphasizing penetrating insight rather than mere factual knowledge. UNDERSTANDING AND DISCERNMENT

en: understanding | es: entendimiento | fr: intelligence | de: [בינה] Dan 2:21

בֵּיצָה H1000 N-fp (6×)

Egg or eggs, used of birds' nests, ostrich brooding, and metaphorically of viper's eggs hatching evil.

A feminine noun appearing only in the plural, referring to the eggs of various creatures. In Deuteronomy 22:6 it appears in the humane law forbidding taking a mother bird together with her eggs. Job 39:14 marvels at the ostrich who leaves her eggs on the ground. Isaiah uses eggs in two striking images: gathering abandoned eggs from the nations as easily as raiding a nest (Isa 10:14), and the wicked hatching viper's eggs whose very shells bring forth serpents (Isa 59:5). Spanish 'huevos' and English 'eggs' render the word straightforwardly, while the multilingual evidence confirms a single, stable meaning across all occurrences.

egg(s) (6×) Eggs of birds or reptiles, always in the plural. The term covers literal eggs in a bird's nest under the protection of Mosaic law (Deut 22:6), the ostrich's eggs left carelessly on the ground (Job 39:14), and eggs used in vivid prophetic imagery – scooping up nations' wealth like gathering unguarded eggs (Isa 10:14), and the wicked hatching viper's eggs that produce only death (Isa 59:5). Spanish 'huevos de' and English 'eggs of' consistently render the construct plural, and no semantic variation appears across the six occurrences despite the shift from literal to metaphorical contexts. LIVING CREATURES

en: Eggs-of, eggs, from-their-eggs | es: Huevos-de, de-sus-huevos, huevos | fr: [ביצי], [ביצים], [מביציהם] | de: [ביצי], [ביצים], [בציה] Deut 22:6; Job 39:14; Isa 10:14; Isa 59:5

בִּירְתָּא H1001 Prep-b / N-fsd (1×)

in the citadel, in the fortified palace (Aramaic emphatic state)

Ezra 6:2 records that the decree of Cyrus was found 'in the citadel (בְּבִירְתָּא) that is in the province of Media, at Ecbatana.' This Aramaic noun (emphatic state) denotes a fortified palace or administrative center where important documents were stored. The term appears in Aramaic papyri and Nabatean inscriptions, sometimes referring to temples. Finding the decree in the Median citadel confirmed its authenticity and authorized the temple rebuilding in Jerusalem.

(1×) Ezra 6:2's 'in the citadel' (בְּבִירְתָּא) specifies where Darius's officials found Cyrus's original decree authorizing temple reconstruction. Spanish 'en la fortaleza' (in the fortress), English 'in the citadel' capture the sense of a fortified administrative center. The Aramaic emphatic state marks this as a specific, known citadel at Ecbatana. That royal decrees were archived in such secure locations reflects Persian administrative practice, and the discovery there validates the Jews' claim. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: in-the-citadel | es: en-la-fortaleza | fr: [בבירתא] | de: [בבירתא] Ezra 6:2

בִּירָה H1002 Art / N-fs (16×)

A fortified palace, citadel, or castle; used for the Persian royal fortress at Susa and the Jerusalem temple complex.

A late biblical Hebrew term, likely borrowed from Akkadian 'bīrtu' (fortress) via Persian, בִּירָה denotes a grand fortified structure. It appears almost exclusively in post-exilic literature — Esther, Nehemiah, Daniel, and Chronicles — reflecting the Persian imperial world these books inhabit. In Esther, 'Shushan the citadel' (שׁוּשַׁן הַבִּירָה) distinguishes the royal fortress-palace from the broader city of Susa (compare Esth 3:15 and 8:14-15, where both citadel and city are mentioned). In Chronicles, it designates the Jerusalem temple complex as a royal-sacred precinct (1 Chr 29:1, 19). The Greek Septuagint renders it βᾶρις, the same word Josephus uses for the fortress later known as the Antonia.

1. (14×) The fortified citadel or royal fortress, used especially for the Persian acropolis at Susa: 'Shushan the citadel' (Neh 1:1; Esth 1:2). This is the dominant sense, appearing in Esther, Nehemiah, and Daniel to designate the defended royal compound within a larger city. French 'la citadelle' and German 'die Burg' both capture the military-architectural grandeur. The distinction from the surrounding city is clear in passages like Esther 3:15, where decrees go out from the citadel into the city proper. Nehemiah 2:8 and 7:2 use it for the fortress guarding the Jerusalem temple. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: the-citadel | es: la-ciudadela | fr: forteresse, la-citadelle | de: [הבירה], die-Burg Neh 1:1; Neh 2:8; Neh 7:2; Esth 1:2; Esth 1:5

2. (2×) The temple complex in Jerusalem conceived as a palatial precinct. David tells Solomon, 'the palace is not for man but for the LORD God' (1 Chr 29:1), and prays that Solomon will build 'the palace for which I have made provision' (1 Chr 29:19). Here the word elevates the temple beyond mere sanctuary to a royal residence of God — Spanish 'la fortaleza' and English 'the palace' both reflect this majestic connotation. The choice of a Persian loanword for God's dwelling may itself be a theological statement in Chronicles. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: the-palace | es: la-fortaleza | fr: la-citadelle | de: [הבירה] 1Chr 29:1; 1Chr 29:19

בִּירָנִית H1003 N-fp (2×)

fortresses, citadels; fortified strongholds

A late Hebrew term for fortresses or fortified places, appearing only in Chronicles' accounts of Jehoshaphat's and Jotham's building projects. The plural noun denotes substantial military installations —citadels or fortified strongholds built to secure the kingdom. The word pairs with 'storage cities' and 'towers,' indicating a category of defensive architecture.

(2×) Jehoshaphat 'built fortresses and storage cities in Judah' (2 Chronicles 17:12), while Jotham 'built fortresses and towers in the hill country' (27:4). Both texts describe extensive royal building programs establishing military infrastructure throughout Judah's territory. The term represents late Biblical Hebrew vocabulary for permanent fortified installations, distinct from temporary field fortifications. Multilingual glosses render this as 'fortresses/fortalezas' or transliterate it. The Hebrew בִּירָנִיּוֹת appears to derive from בִּירָה (citadel, fortress), itself probably from Akkadian birtu. These were substantial defensive structures, part of the southern kingdom's military defensive network in the hill country and strategic locations. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: fortresses | es: fortalezas | fr: [בירניות] | de: [בירניות] 2Chr 17:12; 2Chr 27:4

H1004 N-msc (1×)

house of, in the house of (in construct state)

Jeremiah 52:11 uses בֵּית in construct: 'he put him in the house of (בֵּית) the mill,' referring to Zedekiah's imprisonment in Babylon. This is the common Hebrew word for 'house,' appearing over 2,000 times, but here in construct state meaning 'house of.' The context describes Zedekiah's fate after the fall of Jerusalem—blinded and imprisoned in a forced labor facility. The construct form connects 'house' to what follows, creating compound expressions.

(1×) Jeremiah 52:11's construct form 'in the house of' (בֵּית) precedes 'mill' or 'guard,' describing Zedekiah's prison in Babylon. Spanish 'en casa de,' English '(in the house of)' show translators recognizing the construct relationship. Though בַּיִת is extremely common, this occurrence is notable for its stark context—the last king of Judah, blinded and imprisoned until death, representing the dynasty's final humiliation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (in-the-house-of-) | es: en-casa-de | fr: [(בית)] | de: [(בית)] Jer 52:11

בֵּית H1004a N-msc (3×)

between (rare variant of bein); preposition indicating intermediate position

A rare feminine form of the preposition 'between' (bein/ben), attested only in a few poetic or textually uncertain passages. Proposed readings include Ezekiel 41:9 (describing temple architecture), Proverbs 8:2 (Wisdom standing at crossroads), and Job 8:17 (roots intertwined). Ancient versions like the Septuagint, Targum, and Vulgate sometimes support this reading as 'in the midst of' or 'among,' though some modern scholars prefer emending to the standard bein. The form illustrates dialectal or poetic variation in prepositions.

(3×) A feminine variant of 'between,' possibly meaning 'in the midst of' or 'at the crossroads of.' Evidence is sparse and textually uncertain: Wisdom stands 'between' or 'at the crossroads of' the paths (Proverbs 8:2 per LXX, Targum, Vulgate); roots spread 'among' stones (Job 8:17); temple chambers have space 'between' them (Ezekiel 41:9). Modern translations often render as 'crossroads' or 'house of,' reflecting textual ambiguity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-the-crossroads-of, house-of | es: casa-de | fr: Beth, maison | de: Haus Job 8:17; Prov 8:2; Ezek 41:9

בַּיִת H1004b Prep-b / N-msc / 3fs (2051×)

House, dwelling, building; by extension: household, family, dynasty; spatially: inside, interior, inward; also: temple.

Bayit is one of the most frequent and versatile nouns in the Hebrew Bible, anchoring an entire web of meaning around the concept of an enclosed dwelling space. At its most concrete, it denotes any physical structure — a home, a palace, a prison, a storehouse — and appears in construct chains so often ('house of God,' 'house of the king,' 'house of Israel') that it practically functions as a relational particle. Yet the word's semantic reach extends well beyond bricks and beams: 'house of David' means the Davidic dynasty, 'house of Israel' can mean the nation as a family, and with directional suffixes bayit becomes 'inward' or 'inside,' losing all architectural reference. The cognate forms across Semitic — Arabic bayt, Aramaic bayta, Ethiopic bet — confirm this same polysemy at the deepest stratum of the language family.

1. house, dwelling, building (2014×) The overwhelmingly dominant sense: a physical structure used as a residence, shelter, storehouse, prison, or meeting place — accounting for over 2,000 of approximately 2,050 occurrences. This covers houses (Gen 19:2-4), palaces (2 Sam 5:11), the temple as 'house of Yahweh' (1 Kgs 6:1), and all prepositional and pronominal inflections. The construct form bet- in 'house of X' is so productive it borders on grammaticalization. Arabic bayt, Korean 집 (jip), Swahili nyumba, and Spanish casa all render this consistently, while German Haus and French maison confirm the cross-linguistic stability of this core architectural meaning. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-house-of, house-of, the-house-of | es: casa-de, casa-de-, la-casa-de | fr: maison | de: Haus 1Chr 6:48; 1Chr 7:9; 1Chr 9:11; 1Chr 12:30; 1Chr 13:14

2. inside, interior, inward (21×) A spatial-directional sense meaning 'inside, interior, inward' — roughly 21 occurrences where bayit has lost its architectural reference and functions as a locative or directional adverb. In Gen 6:14 Noah is told to coat the ark 'from inside' (mib-bayit); in Exod 25:11 the ark of the covenant is overlaid with gold 'within' (mib-bayit). Arabic shifts to dakhil ('interior') for this sense, and Spanish uses adentro or desde dentro rather than casa, confirming that the spatial extension has become semantically autonomous. The construction typically involves the preposition min ('from') + bayit. INSIDE AND WITHIN

en: from-inside, from-inside-of, from-the-house | es: adentro, de-adentro, desde-dentro | fr: de-dedans, de-la-maison, de-à-l'intérieur | de: aus-dem-Haus, innerhalb, inward Gen 6:14; Exod 25:11; Exod 26:33; Exod 28:26; Exod 37:2

3. household, family, dynasty (15×) The metonymic extension from building to its inhabitants: household, family, lineage, or royal dynasty — approximately 15 occurrences with this clearly foregrounded meaning. 'House of David' as a dynastic designation (Ps 115:10, 12; Ps 135:19), 'house of Aaron' as the priestly lineage, and 'house of Jacob/Israel' as the national family all illustrate this. Hindi distinctively renders this sense with gharana ('clan, lineage, dynasty') rather than ghar ('building'), and Arabic uses aal or bayt in the dynastic sense (as in modern Arabic political families). The metonymy is natural — those who share a roof share a bloodline

— but it has become a fully lexicalized sense in biblical usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: House-of, The-house-of, and-house-of | es: Casa-de, La-casa-de, casa-de- | fr: et-maison, maison, maison-de- | de: Haus, Haus-von, das-Haus Ps 114:1; Ps 115:10; Ps 115:12; Ps 135:19

4. (1×) A single occurrence at Neh 2:8 where bayit refers specifically to the temple or a royal/administrative building in a context of official construction permits. Nehemiah requests timber for 'the gate of the citadel which is by the house' — the word is rendered as 'temple' in English and del templo in Spanish, while French preserves the generic maison. This may represent a specialized institutional use of bayit for sacred or state buildings, though it remains within the orbit of sense 1 and the small attestation count suggests it is a contextual specialization rather than a fully independent sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: to-the-temple | es: del-templo | fr: à-la-maison | de: zum-Haus Neh 2:8

בַּיִת H1005 Conj-w / N-msc / 3ms (44×)

house, temple — a building or dwelling; especially the house of God (the Jerusalem temple) in Aramaic portions Bayit in its Aramaic form appears 44 times almost exclusively in Ezra and Daniel, where it denotes a physical structure — whether a private dwelling, a royal palace, or most often the Jerusalem temple. The emphatic state bayta and construct beth mirror the far more common Biblical Hebrew bayit but are confined to the Aramaic sections of Scripture. Fully 28 of the 44 occurrences in Ezra refer to the 'house of God,' reflecting the post-exilic preoccupation with temple reconstruction. The multilingual glosses — Spanish 'casa de,' French 'maison,' German 'Haus' — uniformly render the concrete architectural sense with no semantic variation.

house/temple (44×) A building used as dwelling, palace, or temple. In Ezra, beth elaha ('house of God') dominates with 28 of 44 uses tied to the Jerusalem temple's reconstruction (Ezra 5:2-3; 6:7). In Daniel it denotes the Babylonian royal palace (Dan 4:4) and private houses (Dan 2:17). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: house-of, the-house-of | es: casa-de, casa-de-, la-casa-de | fr: maison | de: Haus Ezra 4:24; Ezra 5:2; Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:8; Ezra 5:9

בַּיִת H1006 Art / N-ms (1×)

the house, the temple

In its lone appearance at Isaiah 15:2, this definite form of the common word 'house' has sparked debate: is it an abbreviated place name (perhaps Bayith-Diblathaim or Bayith-Bamoth) or simply 'the house,' meaning the temple or shrine? The definite article suggests a well-known structure—likely a sanctuary where Moab goes to weep. Most translations opt for 'the house' or 'the temple,' understanding it as the cultic center where grief finds its liturgical expression. The context of national mourning makes a sacred site the natural destination.

(1×) Isaiah 15:2 places this term in parallel with 'the high places' (bamot), strongly suggesting a sacred structure rather than a proper noun. Moab ascends to 'the house' to wail—a movement toward the place of divine presence in crisis. The consistent multilingual rendering as 'the house' (la-casa, la-maison, das-Haus) reflects the consensus that this is the temple, the focal point of religious and communal life where catastrophe is brought before the gods. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-house | es: la-casa | fr: la-maison | de: das-Haus Isa 15:2

בֵּית אָוֶן H1007 N-proper-fs (7×)

Beth Aven; a place name meaning 'house of wickedness,' located east of Bethel and possibly used as a derogatory alias for Bethel.

A place name meaning 'house of iniquity' or 'house of wickedness,' identifying a location east of Bethel. In the historical books it appears as a genuine toponym near Ai and Bethel (Josh 7:2; 18:12; 1 Sam 13:5; 14:23). However, in Hosea it takes on a biting prophetic edge — the prophet appears to use 'Beth Aven' (house of wickedness) as a deliberate wordplay on 'Bethel' (house of God), condemning the northern sanctuary's idolatry (Hos 4:15; 5:8; 10:5). This dual usage makes it both a real place and a theological judgment compressed into a single name.

Beth Aven (7×) A proper place name east of Bethel that also functions as a prophetic epithet. The multilingual glosses — English 'Beth-Aven,' Spanish 'Bet-Avén,' French 'Beth-Aven,' German 'Beth-Aven' — all transliterate rather than translate, preserving the Hebrew wordplay. In Joshua 7:2 and 18:12 it marks a genuine geographic boundary near Ai; in 1 Samuel 13:5 and 14:23 it locates Philistine encampments. But Hosea transforms it: by calling Bethel ('house of God') Beth Aven ('house of wickedness'), the prophet strips the northern cult site of its sacred name (Hos 4:15; 5:8; 10:5). The domain assignment to moral quality reflects this prophetic wordplay — the very name becomes an indictment. INIQUITY AND LAWLESSNESS

en: Beit-Aven, Beth-Aven, Beyth-Aven | es: Bet-Aven, Bet-Avén | fr: Beth-Aven, Beyth-Aven, [בית אוֹן] | de: Beit-Aven, Beth-Aven, Beyth-Aven Josh 7:2; Josh 18:12; 1Sam 13:5; 1Sam 14:23; Hos 4:15

בֵּיתְאֵל H1008 Prep-l / N-proper-fs (72×)

Bethel — 'house of God'; an ancient Canaanite city in Ephraim, a major Israelite cultic site tied to Jacob's vision.

Beth-El means 'house of God,' a name given by Jacob to the place formerly called Luz after his vision of the ladder reaching to heaven with angels ascending and descending upon it (Gen 28:10-19). Located in the hill country of Ephraim near the border of Benjamin, Bethel became one of the most significant cultic sites in Israelite history. The ark of the covenant was stationed there during the period of the judges (Judg 20:26-28), Samuel included it on his circuit (1 Sam 7:16), and — most controversially — Jeroboam I established one of his two golden calves there (1 Kgs 12:28-33), making Bethel a byword for idolatrous worship that the prophets fiercely condemned (Hos 10:15; Amos 3:14; 4:4). Spanish Betel, French Bethel, and German Bethel all preserve the name.

Bethel (city) (72×) The place name Bethel ('house of God'), identifying the ancient city in the hill country of Ephraim where Jacob saw the heavenly ladder and consecrated a pillar (Gen 28:10-19; 35:1-15), where the ark was housed during the judges (Judg 20:26-28), and where Jeroboam I later erected a golden calf, turning it into a center of condemned worship (1 Kgs 12:28-33; Amos 3:14; Hos 10:15). All target languages transliterate the name, though its etymology — beth ('house') + el ('God') — is transparent in Hebrew. EL COMPOUND NAMES

en: Beit-El, Bethel, in-Bethel | es: Bet-El, Bet-el, Betel | fr: Béthel, dans-Béthel | de: Bethel, in-Bethel Gen 12:8; Gen 13:3; Gen 28:19; Gen 31:13

בֵּית אַרְבֵּאל H1009 N-proper-fs (1×)

Beth-arbel, a city destroyed by Shalman (location disputed)

Hosea 10:14 invokes the destruction of Beth-arbel by Shalman as a prototype of coming judgment: 'as Shalman destroyed Beth-arbel on the day of battle.' The location is disputed—possibly Arbela near Pella east of the Jordan, or Arbela in Galilee. The event was apparently notorious enough that Hosea's audience would recall it immediately, though it's not mentioned elsewhere in Scripture. The total destruction—mothers dashed with children—epitomizes the horrors of ancient warfare.

(1×) Hosea 10:14's 'Beth-arbel' (בֵּית אַרְבֵּאל) serves as a byword for catastrophic destruction. Translations preserve the place name (Spanish 'Bet-Arbel,' English 'Beth-arbel'). Though the site's exact location remains uncertain (Transjordanian Pella region or Galilean Arbel), the reference assumes audience familiarity with Shalman's brutal campaign. The vivid imagery of mothers and children destroyed together made this a haunting example of war's totality. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Arbel | es: a-Bet-Arbel | fr: Béthel | de: [בית ארבאל] Hos 10:14

בֵּית בַּעַל מְעוֹן H1010 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Beth-baal-meon; place name meaning 'house/temple of Baal-meon'

A Transjordanian city name with several variant forms in Scripture, located in territory disputed between Reuben and Moab. The full form means 'house (or temple) of Baal-meon,' indicating a shrine to the deity Baal-meon. The site appears in various shortened forms across biblical texts, reflecting common practice of abbreviating compound place names.

(2×) This city appears in multiple forms: Beth-baal-meon (Joshua 13:17), Baal-meon (Numbers 32:38; Ezekiel 25:9), Beth-meon (Jeremiah 48:23), and possibly Beon (Numbers 32:3). Assigned initially to Reuben, it later came under Moabite control, appearing in Jeremiah's oracle against Moab. The Moabite Stone also mentions it (as בעל מען and בת בעל מען), confirming its Moabite significance. Modern Ma'în preserves the name. The 'Beth' (house/temple) prefix indicates a cultic site, likely a sanctuary of the deity Baal-meon. The various abbreviated forms—dropping either 'Beth' or 'Baal' or both—illustrate how compound place names were flexibly shortened in usage. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Meon, and-Beth-Baal-Meon | es: Bet-Meón, y-Bet-Baal-Meón | fr: [בית מעון], et-Beth-Baal-Meon | de: [בית מעון], und-Beth-Baal-Meon Josh 13:17; Jer 48:23

בֵּית לְבָאוֹת H1011 Conj-w (1×)

and in Beth-biri, a Simeonite town (possibly textual variant of Beth-lebaoth)

First Chronicles 4:31 lists Beth-biri among Simeonite settlements, though this may be a textual corruption of 'Beth-lebaoth' (Joshua 19:6) or related to 'Lebaoth' (Joshua 15:32). The name appears nowhere else, and the consonantal similarity suggests scribal error or dialectical variation. Regardless of the original form, it identifies a southern town within Simeon's inheritance, absorbed from Judah's oversized portion.

(1×) The place name 'in Beth-biri' (וּבְבֵית בִּרְאִי) in 1 Chronicles 4:31 likely represents a textual variant of 'Beth-lebaoth' ('house of lionesses'), which appears in Joshua 19:6's parallel list. Spanish 'en Bet-Biri,' English 'in Beth-biri' preserve the Chronicler's form. The conjunction indicates it's part of a series of Simeonite towns. Textual comparison suggests this may be the same place as Beth-lebaoth, with ברא being a corruption or variant of לבאות. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-Beth-Bir'i | es: y-en-Bet-Biri | fr: [ובבית ברא] | de: [ובבית ברא] 1Chr 4:31

בֵּית בָּרָה H1012 N-proper-fs (2×)

Beth-barah; place name, likely meaning 'house/place of the ford'

A location mentioned in connection with the Jordan River and its waters during Gideon's pursuit of the Midianites. The name likely means 'place of the ford,' suggesting a strategic river crossing. The site is mentioned twice in rapid succession, indicating its significance as a control point for the fords of the Jordan.

(2×) When Gideon pursued the Midianites, he called on Ephraimites to 'seize the waters as far as Beth-barah and the Jordan' (Judges 7:24, twice). The double mention emphasizes the strategic importance of controlling this crossing point. The name's suggested etymology—from עֲבָרָה (ford, crossing)—fits the military context perfectly: Beth-barah designated the ford-place where enemies could be intercepted as they attempted to cross the Jordan. The Ephraimites successfully seized these water crossings, cutting off the Midianite retreat. No other biblical references to this site survive, but its strategic position in Gideon's narrative clarifies its nature as a key Jordan River crossing in the central region. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-barah | es: Bet-Barah | fr: Beth-barah | de: Beth-barah Judg 7:24

בֵּית גָּדֵר H1013 N-proper-fs (1×)

Beth-gader, a town in Judah (possibly = Geder)

First Chronicles 2:51 mentions Beth-gader in a genealogical context, listed as somehow connected to Salma. The name means 'house of the wall' and may be identical with Geder (Joshua 12:13). The Septuagint transliterations suggest uncertainty about the exact form. It was likely located in the Shephelah region of Judah, though the precise site remains unidentified. The genealogical framework embeds place names as if they were personal names, reflecting the tribal-territorial fusion common in Chronicles.

(1×) Beth-gader (בֵּית גָּדֵר) appears in 1 Chronicles 2:51 within Calebite genealogy, possibly the same as Geder in Joshua 12:13 and related to the gentilicial 'Gederite' (1 Chronicles 27:28). Spanish 'Bet-Gader,' English 'Beth-gader' preserve the place name. The Chronicler's genealogical method treats towns as descendants, making Beth-gader Salma's 'son'—a way of expressing territorial possession or founding relationships in familial terms. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Gader | es: Bet-Gader | fr: [בית גדר] | de: [בית גדר] 1Chr 2:51

בֵּית גָּמוּל H1014 N-proper-fs (1×)

Beth-gamul, a Moabite town (possibly modern Umm el-Jemal)

Jeremiah 48:23 includes Beth-gamul in the oracle against Moab, listing it among cities facing divine judgment. The name means 'house of recompense' or 'house of weaning.' It's been tentatively identified with Umm el-Jemal, about five hours south of Bosra in ancient Moabite territory. The town appears only here in Scripture, part of Jeremiah's comprehensive catalog of Moabite settlements that would experience Babylon's devastation.

(1×) Jeremiah 48:23's 'Beth-gamul' (בֵּית גָּמוּל) is one of several Moabite cities named in judgment oracle. Spanish 'Bet-Gamul,' English 'Beth-gamul' preserve the form. The name's meaning ('house of recompense') takes on ironic overtones in a judgment context—the city of recompense receiving its own recompense. Proposed identification with Umm el-Jemal places it in the southern Moabite plateau, though certainty is impossible given lack of other ancient references. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Gamul | es: Bet-Gamul | fr: [בית גמול] | de: [בית גמול] Jer 48:23

בֵּית דִּבְלָתָיִם H1015 N-proper-fs (1×)

Beth-diblathaim, a Moabite town (= Almon-diblathaim)

Jeremiah 48:22 names Beth-diblathaim in the Moab oracle, likely identical with Almon-diblathaim mentioned in Numbers 33:46-47 as an Israelite wilderness encampment station. The name means 'house of the two fig cakes' and appears on the Moabite Stone as 'Beth-diblathen.' This confirms it was a known Moabite settlement. The double fig-cake name suggests either local produce or a cultic association, as fig cakes appear in various ritual contexts.

(1×) Jeremiah 48:22's 'Beth-diblathaim' (בֵּית דִּבְלָתָיִם) is confirmed as a genuine Moabite place name by its appearance on the Mesha Stele. Spanish 'Bet-Divlatayim,' English 'Beth-diblathaim' preserve the form. Identification with Almon-diblathaim from Israel's wilderness wanderings (Numbers 33) shows this was an established site in Moabite territory. The 'two fig cakes' name may relate to local agricultural specialization or religious offerings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Divlatayim | es: Bet-Divlatayim | fr: [בית דבלתים] | de: [בית דבלתים] Jer 48:22

בֵּית־דָּגוֹן H1016 N-proper-fs (2×)

Beth-dagon; place name meaning 'house/temple of Dagon'

A place name meaning 'temple of Dagon,' designating two distinct cities—one in Judah, one in Asher. The name indicates sites where the Philistine grain-deity Dagon was worshiped, likely Canaanite cult centers that predated Israelite settlement or reflected Philistine influence. Modern villages in both regions preserve forms of the name.

(2×) Two cities bore this name: one in Judah's Shephelah (Joshua 15:41), another in Asher's territory (19:27). Both names indicate temples or cult sites of Dagon, the grain god prominent in Philistine religion (cf. 1 Samuel 5). Jerome defined it as 'house of wheat,' connecting Dagon to grain (דָּגָן), though the deity's fish associations (דָּג, fish) also appear in ancient sources. The Assyrian records mention Bît-Daganna in the region. Modern villages (Beit Dejân, Beit Dejen) preserve the name in both areas. These sites likely represent Canaanite cult centers absorbed into Israelite territory, their names honestly preserving the pre-Israelite religious history rather than being sanitized through renaming. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Dagon, Beyth-Dagon | es: Bet-Dagón, a-Bet-dagón | fr: Beth-Dagon, Beyth-Dagon | de: Beth-Dagon, Beyth-Dagon Josh 15:41; Josh 19:27

בֵּית הָאֵלִי H1017 N-proper-fs (1×)

the Bethelite, someone from Bethel (with definite article)

First Kings 16:34 identifies Hiel as 'the Bethelite' (הַבֵּיתִ֣י הָאֵלִ֑י), the man who rebuilt Jericho during Ahab's reign, fulfilling Joshua's curse at the cost of his sons. The definite article suggests either that Hiel was particularly well-known from Bethel, or that Bethel itself was so prominent ('the Bethel-man') that the article emphasizes his connection to that infamous cultic center. The gentilicial form marks geographic origin.

(1×) The designation 'the Bethelite' (הַבֵּיתִ֣י הָאֵלִ֑י) in 1 Kings 16:34 identifies Hiel's hometown as Bethel, the northern kingdom's major sanctuary. Spanish 'betelita,' English 'Bethelite,' German 'Bethelite' all render this as ethnic designation. The definite article may emphasize Hiel's connection to that particular religious center, adding irony —a man from the shrine-city of Jeroboam's golden calf rebuilds the cursed city of Jericho, suffering Joshua's prophecy fulfilled in his sons' deaths. PERSONAL NAMES

en: the-Bethelite | es: el-betelita | fr: le-Bethelite | de: der-Bethelite 1Kgs 16:34

אָצֶל H1018 N-proper-fs (1×)

Beth-ezel, a Judean town (possibly = Azel)

Micah 1:11 mentions Beth-ezel in a series of wordplays on town names: 'Beth-ezel is in mourning; its standing place is taken from you.' The name may relate to 'Azel' (Zechariah 14:5), though location remains uncertain. Micah's prophecy uses the town's name (possibly meaning 'nearby house' or 'adjoining house') to suggest it offers no refuge—even the place of standing/support is removed. The text is difficult, and 'Beth-ezel' may itself be a wordplay on another location.

(1×) Micah 1:11's 'Beth-ezel' (בֵּ֥ית הָאֶצֶ֖ל) appears in a dense passage of place-name puns warning of invasion. English 'Beth-ezel,' Spanish 'Bet-ha-Esel,' French 'Beth-Haézel' preserve the form. The name possibly means 'house of nearness/adjacency,' and Micah uses it to suggest that even nearby refuge points fail. Connection with Azel (Zechariah 14:5) remains debated. The town's identification is lost, though context places it in Judah's Shephelah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Ezel | es: Bet-ha-Esel | fr: Beth-Haézel | de: [בית האצל] Mic 1:11

גִּלְגָּל H1019

Gilgal, sacred circle of stones; Israel's first camp in Canaan and later illicit worship site

Multiple locations bore this name, but the most significant was Israel's first encampment west of the Jordan, where Joshua set up twelve stones and the people underwent circumcision. It became a gathering place for war councils and Samuel's regular circuit for judging. Yet this same site later hosted illegitimate worship that prophets condemned sharply—Hosea and Amos denouncing its corrupted rituals. The name's connection to 'rolling away' Egypt's reproach created a powerful wordplay in Joshua. Gilgal thus embodied both covenant renewal and covenant failure.

בֵּית הַיְשִׁימוֹת H1020 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)

Beth-jeshimoth — a town east of the Jordan in the territory of Moab/Reuben near the Dead Sea

A place name meaning 'house of the wastelands,' designating a town east of the Jordan River in the Moabite plain near the northern end of the Dead Sea. Israel camped there at the end of the wilderness journey (Num 33:49), and it is listed among the territorial markers of the Amorite kingdom (Josh 12:3) and the tribal allotment of Reuben (Josh 13:20). Ezekiel 25:9 names it among the 'glory of the land' that would be opened to invaders. It is commonly identified with modern es-Suweimeh.

(4×) The proper noun for a town east of the Jordan near the Dead Sea, meaning 'house of the wastelands.' It marks Israel's final camp before crossing the Jordan (Num 33:49), appears in boundary descriptions of Sihon's former territory (Josh 12:3), was assigned to Reuben (Josh 13:20), and is named among Moab's exposed flank cities in Ezekiel 25:9. Multilingual renderings uniformly transliterate: Spanish 'Bet-Jesimot,' French 'Beth-Jeschimoth,' confirming a single geographic referent. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Yeshimoth, Beth-jeshimoth, and-Beth-Yeshimoth | es: Bet-Jesimot, Bet-Yesimot, desde-Bet-Jesimot | fr: Beth-Jeschimoth, Beth-Yeshimoth, de-Beth-jeshimoth | de: Beth-Yeshimoth, [בית הישימת], und-Beth-Yeshimoth Num 33:49; Josh 12:3; Josh 13:20; Ezek 25:9

בֵּית הַכֶּרֶם H1021 N-proper-fs (2×)

Beth-haccherem; place name meaning 'house/place of the vineyard'

A location in Judah whose name means 'vineyard place,' mentioned as both a signal point and an administrative district. The name reflects the agricultural character of the region, known for viticulture. The site's exact location remains debated, though it clearly held some strategic or administrative importance.

(2×) Jeremiah calls for raising a signal 'in Beth-haccherem' as Babylon approaches (6:1), indicating a prominent or strategic location. Nehemiah identifies it as an administrative district with its own ruler who participated in rebuilding Jerusalem's walls (3:14). The name 'vineyard place' suggests agricultural prominence, appropriate for Judah's wine-growing regions. The location remains uncertain despite ancient discussion—some proposed sites near Tekoa, others between Jerusalem and coastal regions. The dual mention (prophetic signal-point and administrative district) confirms its significance in the Persian and late monarchic periods. The variant spellings (בֵּ֣ית הַכֶּ֔רֶם/בֵּ֥ית הַכָּֽרֶם) represent the same location, with slight orthographic differences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Hakkerem, Beth-haccerem | es: Bet-Hacérem, Bet-Hakerem | fr: [בית הכרם], [ביתהכרם] | de: [בית הכרם], [ביתהכרם] Neh 3:14; Jer 6:1

בֵּית הַלַּחְמִי H1022 N-proper-ms (4×)

Bethlehemite — a gentilicof Bethlehem, identifying someone as from that town

The gentilic adjective identifying a person as hailing from Bethlehem. It appears exclusively in the narratives of David's rise: Jesse is called 'the Bethlehemite' when Samuel is sent to anoint one of his sons (1 Sam 16:1, 18), David identifies himself by this designation before Saul (1 Sam 17:58), and the giant-slayer Elhanan is described as a Bethlehemite (2 Sam 21:19). The term carries a quiet literary weight, linking David's humble origins to the town that would become synonymous with messianic hope.

(4×) The gentilic adjective meaning 'of Bethlehem,' used to identify individuals by their hometown. Jesse is introduced as 'the Bethlehemite' in 1 Samuel 16:1, 18; David is recognized as 'son of the Bethlehemite' in 1 Samuel 17:58; and Elhanan the warrior bears the same designation in 2 Samuel 21:19. Spanish 'bet-lehemita,' French and German 'Bethlehemite' all preserve the same gentilicform, pointing to a single consistent usage as a demonym. BETHLEHEM TOWN

en: Bethlehemite, the-Bethlehemite | es: bet-ha-lajmi, bet-lehemita | fr: Bethlehemite, le-Bethlehemite | de: Bethlehemite, der-Bethlehemite 1Sam 16:1; 1Sam 16:18; 1Sam 17:58; 2Sam 21:19

בֵּית הַמֶּרְחָק H1023 Art / N-ms (2×)

at the far house; location marker, possibly 'Beth-merhak' (Far House)

A phrase describing a location 'at the far house' or 'the distant place,' appearing when David fled Jerusalem during Absalom's revolt. Whether this represents a proper place name (Beth-merhak, 'Far House') or simply a descriptive phrase ('the last house of the city') remains debated. The context suggests a specific stopping point on the edge of Jerusalem.

(2×) As David fled Jerusalem, he stopped 'at the far house' or 'at Beth-merhak' (2 Samuel 15:17, mentioned twice in the verse). The context shows this marked the city's edge—David stopped there while his servants passed before him. Some interpreters take this as a proper name: 'Far House,' a settlement or landmark at Jerusalem's outskirts. Others understand it descriptively: 'the last house' or 'the distant place,' marking where the city ended. The multilingual evidence divides: some render it as location ('at the house'), others emphasize distance ('the distant'). The Hebrew article suggests a known location, whether properly named 'Beth-merhak' or simply the recognized boundary point, the 'far house' beyond which lay open country. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: at-the-house, the-distant | es: casa-de, la-distancia | fr: le-distant, à-le-maison | de: bei-der-Haus, der-distant 2Sam 15:17

בֵּית מַרְכָּבוֹת H1024 Conj-w (2×)

Beth-marcaboth; place name meaning 'house/place of chariots'

A city in Simeon's territory whose name means 'place of chariots,' suggesting it served as a chariot base or storage facility. The name appears in variant spellings in the parallel tribal allotments, both clearly referring to the same location. The site's exact modern location remains unknown.

(2×) This Simeonite city appears as 'Beth-marcaboth' (1 Chronicles 4:31) and 'Beth-ha-markaboth' (with the definite article, Joshua 19:5). The name 'chariot-place' suggests military significance—likely a garrison or storage facility for chariots, important military assets in ancient warfare. Simeon's cities were actually enclaves within Judah's larger territory (Joshua 19:1), so this chariot-city served defensive purposes for the southern tribes. The variant forms (with and without the definite article) represent normal variation in compound place names. Multilingual glosses transliterate the name, recognizing it as a proper geographical designation. No information about the site's specific location has survived, though it must have been significant enough to warrant designation as a chariot base. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Beyth-ha-Markavoth, and-in-Beth-Markavoth | es: Y-en-Bet-Marcabot, y-Bet-marcabot | fr: [ובבית מרכבות], et-Beyth-ha-Markavoth | de: [ובבית מרכבות], und-Beyth-ha-Markavoth Josh 19:5; 1Chr 4:31

בֵּית הָעֵמֶק H1025 N-proper-fs (1×)

Beth-emek, a town on Asher's border (possibly modern 'Amka)

Joshua 19:27 includes Beth-emek in the boundary description for Asher, meaning 'house of the valley.' It's been tentatively identified with modern 'Amka, about seven miles northeast of Acco. The name straightforwardly describes a settlement in a valley, typical of Asher's coastal plain and hill country territory. No other biblical references to this town exist, but its inclusion in the detailed boundary list confirms it was a recognizable landmark in northern Israel.

(1×) Joshua 19:27's 'Beth-emek' (בֵּית הָעֵמֶק) marks a point on Asher's eastern boundary, meaning 'house/valley of the valley.' Translations preserve the name (Spanish 'Bet-emec,' English 'Beth-emek'). The proposed identification with 'Amka northeast of Acco fits the geographic context of Asher's inheritance. The descriptive name ('valley-house') suggests a settlement notable for its topographical setting rather than any particular historical event. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beyth-ha-Emeq | es: Bet-emec | fr: Beyth-ha-Emeq | de: Beyth-ha-Emeq Josh 19:27

בֵּית הָעֲרָבָה H1026 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (3×)

Beth-arabah, a town name meaning 'house of the Arabah'; border town between Judah and Benjamin

A place name meaning 'house/place of the Arabah,' referring to the desert rift valley. The town appears in boundary descriptions: assigned to Judah (Joshua 15:6, 61) and also to Benjamin (Joshua 18:22), likely indicating border adjustment or dual reference. The name is also abbreviated to 'the Arabah' or with directional suffix 'toward the Arabah' (Joshua 18:18). The exact site is unknown, but it lay somewhere along the boundary between Judah and Benjamin in the wilderness area descending toward the Dead Sea.

(3×) A border town between Judah and Benjamin, named for its location in or near the Arabah (rift valley). The boundary of Judah passes 'to Beth-arabah' (Joshua 15:6), the town is listed among Judah's wilderness settlements (Joshua 15:61), and it appears in Benjamin's territory (Joshua 18:22). The multilingual evidence preserves the name with slight variations (Bet-Arabá, Beyth-ha-Aravah), showing transliteration norms across Spanish, French, and German. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Arabah, and-Beyth-ha-Aravah, to-Beth-Arabah | es: Bet-Arabá, a-Bet-Arabá, y-Bet-Arabá | fr: Beth-Arabah, et-Beyth-ha-Aravah, à-Beth-Arabah | de: Beth-Araba, und-Beyth-ha-Aravah, zu-Beth-Araba Josh 15:6; Josh 15:61; Josh 18:22

בֵּית הָרָם H1027 N-proper-fs (1×)

Beth-haram, a Gadite town east of Jordan (= Beth-haran)

Joshua 13:27 lists Beth-haram among cities in Gad's territory, identical with Beth-haran in Numbers 32:36. The name likely means 'house of the heights.' Modern Beit Harran, about one hour east of the Jordan opposite Jericho, preserves the name. This was fortified territory in the Jordan valley's eastern approaches, part of Gad's inheritance in the Transjordan. The spelling variation between Joshua and Numbers shows typical textual fluidity with place names.

(1×) Joshua 13:27's 'Beth-haram' (בֵּית הָרָם) identifies a Gadite city in the Jordan valley, equivalent to 'Beth-haran' in Numbers 32:36. Spanish 'Bet-Haram,' English 'Beth-haram' preserve the form. Modern Beit Harran east of the Jordan opposite Jericho maintains the ancient name, confirming the location. The name ('house of heights' or 'elevated house') may describe its setting on a rise above the valley floor, strategic for defense and visibility. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Haram | es: Bet-Haram | fr: Beth-Haram | de: Beth-Haram Josh 13:27

בֵּית הָרָם H1028 N-proper-fs (1×)

Beth-haran, a fortified Gadite city (= Beth-haram)

Numbers 32:36 mentions Beth-haran as one of the fortified cities the Gadites built (or rebuilt) in their Transjordanian territory. This is the same location as Beth-haram (Joshua 13:27), with slightly different vocalization. The designation as a 'fortified city' indicates its military importance in securing Gad's eastern border. Its location east of the Jordan opposite Jericho made it strategically vital for controlling valley approaches.

(1×) Numbers 32:36's 'Beth-haran' (בֵּית הָרָן) appears in the list of fortified cities built by Gad, the same as Joshua 13:27's 'Beth-haram.' Spanish 'Bet-Harán,' English 'Beth-haran' reflect the slight spelling difference. The context emphasizes fortification work—the Gadites securing their inheritance before crossing to help conquer Canaan proper. The modern site Beit Harran preserves evidence of ancient settlement in this militarily significant Jordan valley location. HARAN PLACE NAME

en: Beth-haran | es: Bet-Harán | fr: Beth-haran | de: Beth-haran Num 32:36

בֵּית הַשִּׁטָּה H1029 N-proper-fs (1×)

Beth-shittah, a town toward which Midianites fled (place of the acacia)

Judges 7:22 describes the Midianite rout: 'the army fled as far as Beth-shittah toward Zererah.' The name means 'house of the acacia,' suggesting a location where acacia trees were prominent. The exact site is unknown, though it was apparently in the Jordan valley or Beth-shan region based on the direction of Midianite flight from Gideon's night attack. The acacia tree gave its name to numerous biblical locations.

(1×) Judges 7:22's 'Beth-shittah' (בֵּית הַשִּׁטָּה) marks the direction of Midianite flight after Gideon's surprise attack. Spanish 'Bet-ha-Shitah,' English 'Beth-shittah' preserve the form meaning 'house of the acacia.' The definite article suggests a well-known location, though its precise site remains unidentified. Acacias thrive in the Jordan valley region, so the name likely described a settlement near a notable acacia grove or forest. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-shittah | es: Bet-ha-Shitah | fr: Beth-shittah | de: Beth-shittah Judg 7:22

בֵּית־הַשִּׁמְשִׁי H1030 N-proper-fs (2×)

Beth-shemeshite; gentilic indicating a resident of Beth-shemesh

An ethnic designation meaning 'inhabitant of Beth-shemesh,' used with the definite article to identify people from that Levitical city in Judah. The term appears in the narrative of the ark's return from Philistine territory, when it arrived at Beth-shemesh. The definite article indicates a recognized group—'the Beth-shemeshites.'

(2×) When the ark came to Beth-shemesh from Philistia, the account mentions 'the Beth-shemeshite' or 'of the Beth-shemeshites' (1 Samuel 6:14, 18), referring to the people or property of that city. The definite article in both occurrences ('the Beth-shemeshite') indicates the recognized inhabitants of Beth-shemesh as a collective group. Beth-shemesh was a Levitical city on Judah's northern border, and its residents witnessed the ark's return and the divine judgment that followed. The gentilic formation (-ī ending) follows standard Hebrew patterns for ethnic/geographical designations. Multilingual glosses render this as 'the Beth-shemeshite' or 'el bet-shemesita,' preserving the ethnic designation and definite article that mark these people as the recognized community of that border city. BETH-SHEMESH PLACE

en: the-Beth-Shemeshite | es: el-bet-shemesita | fr: le-Beth-Shemeshite | de: der-Beth-Shemeshite 1Sam 6:14; 1Sam 6:18

בֵּית חָגְלָה H1031 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (3×)

Beth-hoglah, a town name meaning 'house of the partridge'; on the Judah-Benjamin border

A place name meaning 'house/place of the partridge,' marking a boundary point between Judah and Benjamin. The town appears in Joshua's territorial allotments: the border between Judah and Benjamin passes by Beth-hoglah (Joshua 15:6; 18:19), and the town is listed within Benjamin's inheritance (Joshua 18:21). Modern identification places it at Ain Hajla (or Qasr Hajla), preserving the ancient name. The partridge reference may indicate the area was known for these birds or perhaps named after a shrine or natural feature.

(3×) A town on the border between Judah and Benjamin, identified with modern Ain Hajla. The boundary descriptions have the border going 'to Beth-hoglah' (Joshua 15:6) or 'Beyth-Choglah' (Joshua 18:19), and the town is assigned to Benjamin (Joshua 18:21). The name, meaning 'house of the partridge,' is consistently transliterated across European languages, reflecting its status as a geographic proper name. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Choglah, Beyth-Choglah, and-Beyth-Choglah | es: Bet-Hogla, y-Bet-Hogla | fr: Beth-Choglah, Beyth-Choglah, et-Beyth-Choglah | de: Beth-Choglah, Beyth-Choglah, und-Beyth-Choglah Josh 15:6; Josh 18:19; Josh 18:21

בֵּית חוֹרֹן H1032 Prep / N-proper-fs (14×)

Beth-horon — a pair of cities (Upper and Lower) in Ephraim on a strategic mountain pass

The name of two strategically paired cities in the territory of Ephraim — Upper Beth-horon and Lower Beth-horon — controlling a critical pass on the route between the coastal plain and the central hill country. The name likely means 'house of the hollow' (from ḥōr), perhaps referring to the wadi between the two settlements. Joshua's pursuit of the Amorite coalition descended along the 'ascent of Beth-horon' (Josh 10:10-11), where God sent devastating hailstones. The cities were built by Sheerah daughter of Ephraim (1 Chr 7:24), fortified by Solomon (1 Kgs 9:17; 2 Chr 8:5), and allotted to the Kohathite Levites (Josh 21:22). The pass retained military significance through the Maccabean period.

Beth Choron (14×) The proper place name Beth-horon (בֵּית חוֹרֹן, 'house of the hollow'), designating twin cities — Upper and Lower — on a strategic mountain pass in Ephraim. Transliteration traditions vary slightly (eng: Beth-horon, spa: Bet-Horón, fra: Beth-Horon, deu: Beth-Horon/Bet-Horon). The pass features in Joshua's great victory over the Amorite coalition (Josh 10:10-11), Solomon's fortification projects (1 Kgs 9:17; 2 Chr 8:5), Levitical city allotments (Josh 21:22; 1 Chr 6:53), and the Ephraimite raider attack in 2 Chr 25:13. All 14 occurrences refer to this same geographic location with no semantic subdivision. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beit-Choron, Beit-Khoron, Beth-Choron | es: Bet-Horón, Bet-Joron, Bet-Jorón | fr: Beth-Choron, Beth-Horon, Beth-horon | de: Beit-Choron, Bet-Horon, Beth-Choron Josh 10:10; Josh 10:11; Josh 16:3; Josh 16:5; Josh 18:13

בֵּית כָּר H1033 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

Beth-car, a place marking the limit of Israelite pursuit of Philistines

First Samuel 7:11 records that Israel pursued the Philistines 'as far as below Beth-car' after Samuel's sacrifice and God's thunder routed the enemy. The name possibly means 'house of the lamb' or 'house of the pasture.' Location is uncertain, though context places it in Philistine territory west of Mizpah. This marks the extent of a major Israelite victory that established a period of peace and contained Philistine expansion during Samuel's judgeship.

(1×) The place name 'Beth-car' (בֵּית כָּר) in 1 Samuel 7:11 designates how far Israel chased the routed Philistines. All translations preserve it as a proper name (Spanish 'Bet-Car,' English 'Beth-car'). The name may mean 'house of lamb' or 'pasture-house.' Its appearance only here and the lack of other ancient references make identification impossible, though it was evidently in or near Philistine territory, westward from the battle site at Mizpah. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-Car | es: Bet-Car | fr: Beth-Car | de: Beth-Car 1Sam 7:11

בֵּית לְבָאוֹת H1034 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

and Beth-lebaoth, a Simeonite town (house of lionesses)

Joshua 19:6 lists Beth-lebaoth among Simeonite cities, a name meaning 'house of lionesses.' This is likely the same as 'Beth-biri' in 1 Chronicles 4:31 and 'Lebaoth' in Joshua 15:32, showing typical spelling variations. The 'lionesses' name may recall local wildlife in the Negev region where Simeon's territory lay, or possibly refer to a cultic association. These southern settlements were originally assigned to Judah but transferred to Simeon because Judah's portion was too large.

(1×) Joshua 19:6's 'Beth-lebaoth' (וּבֵית לְבָאוֹת) means 'house of lionesses,' appearing in Simeon's city list. Spanish 'Bet-lebaot,' English 'Beth-lebaoth' preserve the form. Connection with 'Beth-biri' (1 Chronicles 4:31) and 'Lebaoth' (Joshua 15:32) shows textual variation for the same site. The lioness imagery might describe the Negev environment where lions once roamed, or perhaps a shrine with leonine associations—lions appear in various Canaanite cultic contexts. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Beyth-Levaoth | es: y-Bet-lebaot | fr: et-Beyth-Levaoth | de: und-Beyth-Levaoth Josh 19:6

בֵּית לֶחֶם H1035 Prep / N-proper-fs (41×)

Bethlehem — town in Judah south of Jerusalem, birthplace of David, meaning 'house of bread'

Beth Lechem ('house of bread') is the name of a town in the territory of Judah, situated about eight kilometers south of Jerusalem, that carries disproportionate theological weight for its small size. Its 41 occurrences span from the patriarchal narratives, where Rachel dies and is buried on the road to Ephrath 'which is Bethlehem' (Gen 35:19; 48:7), through the period of the judges (Judg 12:8-10; 17:7-9; 19:1-2), the idyllic fields of Ruth's harvest (Ruth 1:1, 19, 22), and the anointing of David as shepherd-king (1 Sam 16:1-4; 17:12, 15). Micah's prophecy that from Bethlehem Ephrathah would come a ruler 'whose origins are from of old' (Mic 5:1) established the town as the expected birthplace of the Messiah. A second, lesser-known Bethlehem in Zebulun is mentioned at Joshua 19:15.

Bethlehem (41×) The proper place name Beth Lechem ('house of bread'), primarily designating the Judahite town associated with Rachel's burial (Gen 35:19), the Levite's concubine narrative (Judg 19), Ruth's fields (Ruth 1-4), David's origins (1 Sam 16-17), and the messianic expectation of Micah 5:1. Also called Ephrathah (Ruth 4:11; Mic 5:1). A second Bethlehem in Zebulun appears at Joshua 19:15. Spanish 'Belen,' French 'Bethleem,' German 'Bethlehem,' and the Arabic Beit Lahm all reflect continuous habitation and name transmission across millennia. BETHLEHEM TOWN
en: Beit-Lechem, Beth-Lechem, Bethlehem | es: Belén, Bet-Lehem, Bet-Lejem | fr: Beth-Lechem, Beth-Léhem, Bethléem | de: Bet-Lechem, Beth-Lechem, Bethlehem Gen 35:19; Gen 48:7; Josh 19:15; Judg 12:8; Judg 12:10

בֵּית לְעַפְרָה H1036 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)
in Beth-le-aphrah, a town in Philistia where rolling in dust mourns Micah 1:10 plays on this town's name: 'in Beth-le-aphrah roll yourself in the dust (aphar).' The name means 'house of dust' and Micah exploits the wordplay to heighten the mourning imagery. The location is uncertain, probably in Philistine territory given the context of other towns in Micah 1. The prophet's message uses place names to create a cascade of puns announcing judgment, each town's name prophetically embodying its fate.

(1×) Micah 1:10's 'in Beth-le-aphrah' (בְּבֵית לְעַפְרָה) triggers a wordplay on 'dust' (עָפָר): 'in Dust-house, roll in dust.' Spanish 'En Bet-le-Afrá,' English 'in Beth-le-aphrah' preserve the name. The town's location remains unknown, though context suggests Philistine Shephelah. Micah's prophetic poetry transforms geography into proclamation—the 'house of dust' becomes the place where inhabitants perform dust-rolling mourning rituals, the town's name enacting its destiny. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: in-Beth-Leaphrah | es: En-Bet-le-Afrá | fr: Beth-le-Aphra | de: [בבית לעפרה] Mic 1:10

מִלּוֹא H1037
Millo, earthwork or terrace in Jerusalem; possibly a filled-in area or fortress structure
This architectural feature in Jerusalem appears in connection with David's and Solomon's building projects, representing either a terrace, rampart, or filled-in fortification. The term may describe a specific structure within David's city—perhaps supporting terraces on the steep slopes, or a citadel. Joash was assassinated at 'Beth-millo' or 'the house of Millo,' suggesting it had residential or administrative functions. The word's root meaning 'fill' led to various interpretations—a filled-in ravine, raised platform, or earthwork fortification. Archaeological remains show extensive terracing systems in ancient Jerusalem that may correspond.

בֵּית מַעֲכָה H1038 Prep / N-proper-fs / 3fs (2×)
Beth-maacah; place name, 'house/place of Maacah'
A city in northern Israel, usually appearing in compound form as 'Abel of Beth-maacah.' The name indicates association with Maacah, possibly the small Aramean kingdom east of the Jordan, or a local clan/region. The site played a role in narratives of pursuit and invasion in the northern territories.

(2×) The city appears most commonly as 'Abel Beth-maacah' (1 Kings 15:20; 2 Kings 15:29), but the shorter form 'Beth-maacah' occurs when Joab pursued Sheba there (2 Samuel 20:14-15). The name suggests connection to Maacah—either the Aramean kingdom (2 Samuel 10:6-8) or a regional designation. Located in Israel's far north, it faced Syrian invasions and Assyrian conquest. The account of the wise woman who saved the city (2 Samuel 20) reveals its significance as a 'mother city in Israel.' The variants with and without 'Abel' represent the same location, with Abel (meadow) perhaps describing its setting near water sources. The connection to Maacah (whether kingdom, clan, or region) remains uncertain, but the dual-component name indicates a settlement in or associated with Maacah territory. MAACAH PERSONAL NAME
en: Beth-Maachah, and-Beth-Maachah | es: Bet-ha-Maajah, y-Bet-Maajah | fr: Beth-Maachah, et-Beth-Maachah | de: Beth-Maachah, und-Beth-Maachah 2Sam 20:14; 2Sam 20:15

בֵּית נִמְרָה H1039 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)
Beth-nimrah; place name meaning 'house of leopard/clear water'
A Transjordanian city in Gad's territory whose name may mean either 'leopard place' or 'place of clear water.' The site lay east of the Jordan in the well-watered plains, and modern Tell Nimrîn preserves the name. The city appears in territorial allotments and is associated with nearby waters of Nimrim mentioned in prophetic oracles.

(2×) Beth-nimrah was assigned to Gad in the Transjordanian allotments (Numbers 32:36; Joshua 13:27). The name likely derives from נָמֵר (leopard) or relates to the 'waters of Nimrim' (מֵי נִמְרִים) mentioned in Isaiah 15:6 and Jeremiah 48:34, suggesting association with springs or clear waters. Modern Tell Nimrîn, in the Jordan valley plains east of the river, preserves the ancient name. The well-watered location made it attractive for settlement, and its mention alongside 'cities of the valley' (Numbers 32:36) confirms its placement in the Jordan valley's eastern plain. Whether 'Nimrah' refers to leopards once inhabiting the area or to the character of its water sources (perhaps clear/pure), the name connected the city to its natural environment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Beth-nimrah, and-Beth-Nimrah | es: Bet-Nimrá, y-Bet-Nimrá | fr: Beth-nimrah, et-Beth-Nimrah | de: Beth-nimrah, und-Beth-Nimrah Num 32:36; Josh 13:27

בֵּית עֵדֶן H1040
Beth-eden, Aramean city or region; possibly biblical name for Bit-Adini in Mesopotamia Amos pronounces judgment on this Aramean location, likely the region known in Assyrian records as Bit-Adini along the Euphrates. The name means 'house of Eden' or 'house of pleasure,' possibly preserving an ancient toponym related to the word for delight. Later tradition sometimes identified it with 'the children of Eden' mentioned in Isaiah and Kings. The geographical identification remains somewhat uncertain, though the Mesopotamian connection seems most probable. Amos's oracle situates it among Damascus's allied territories subject to divine judgment.

בֵּית־עַזְמָוֶת H1041 N-proper-fs (1×)
Beth-azmaveth, a town near Jerusalem (= Azmaveth)
Nehemiah 7:28 lists Beth-azmaveth among towns whose residents returned from exile, equivalent to 'Azmaveth' in Ezra 2:24 and Nehemiah 12:29. Modern El-Hizmeh, about five miles north-northeast of Jerusalem, preserves the name. The 'Beth' prefix ('house of') may indicate a settlement associated with a clan or individual named Azmaveth, who also appears as a personal name in Chronicles. The town contributed returnees to the restoration community.

(1×) Nehemiah 7:28's 'Beth-azmaveth' (בֵּית עַזְמָוֶת) names a town whose men returned from Babylonian exile, the same as 'Azmaveth' in parallel lists. Spanish 'Bet-Azmavet,' English 'Beth-azmaveth' preserve the form. Identification with modern El-Hizmeh north of Jerusalem fits the context of Benjamin's territory. The dual form (with and without 'Beth') may reflect colloquial variation—both 'Azmaveth' and 'House-of-Azmaveth' designating the same community. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth-azmaveth | es: Bet-Azmavet | fr: [בית עזמות] | de: [בית עזמות] Neh 7:28

בֵּית־עֲנוֹת H1042 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
and Beth-anoth, a hill-country town in Judah Joshua 15:59 includes Beth-anoth in Judah's hill-country allotment, a name possibly meaning 'house of Anath' (the Canaanite goddess), suggesting earlier cultic associations. Modern Beit 'Anun, a few hours southwest of Jerusalem, preserves the name. The Septuagint variant 'Betharoth' and the similarity to Bittir have caused identification debates, but the traditional site at Beit 'Anun fits the geographical context of Judah's highland settlements.

(1×) Joshua 15:59's 'Beth-anoth' (וּבֵית עֲנוֹת) appears in the hill-country list, possibly meaning 'house of Anath' after the goddess. Spanish 'Bet-Anot,' English 'Beth-anoth' preserve the name. If the Anath etymology is correct, this would be another instance where Israelite settlement overlaid Canaanite cultic sites, though the name was retained. Modern Beit 'Anun southwest of Jerusalem continues the ancient toponym across millennia. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-Beth-Anoth | es: y-Bet-Anot | fr: et-Beth-Anoth | de: und-Beth-Anoth Josh 15:59

בֵּית־עֲנָת H1043 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (3×)
Beth-anath, a town in Naphtali meaning 'house of Anath' (Canaanite goddess); unconquered Canaanite enclave
A town in Naphtali's territory whose name means 'house/temple of Anath,' a Canaanite goddess. The site appears in Joshua's allotment to Naphtali (Joshua 19:38) and in Judges' list of unconquered Canaanite towns where inhabitants became forced laborers instead of being driven out (Judges 1:33, twice). The name's theophoric element (Anath) suggests it was originally a Canaanite cult site. Israel's failure to fully dispossess Beth-anath reflects the incomplete conquest theme in Judges. Possible identification: modern Ain-Atha or Ainítha.

(3×) A fortified Canaanite town in Naphtali that Israel failed to fully conquer. Listed in Naphtali's inheritance (Joshua 19:38), but Judges records that 'Naphtali did not drive out the inhabitants of Beth-anath,' who instead became forced labor (Judges 1:33, twice). The name 'temple of Anath' indicates a Canaanite religious center, and its persistence illustrates incomplete Israelite control in the north. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Beit-Anat, and-Beit-Anat, and-Beyth-Anath | es: Bet-Anat, y-Bet-Anat, y-Bet-anat | fr: Beit-Anat, et-Beit-Anat, et-Beyth-Anath | de: Beit-Anat, und-Beit-Anat, und-Beyth-Anath Josh 19:38; Judg 1:33

בֵּית־עֵקֶד הָרֹעִים H1044 N-proper-fs (3×)
Beth-eked, 'binding house of the shepherds'; site where Jehu killed Ahaziah's relatives
A place name meaning 'binding house of the shepherds,' appearing only in the narrative of Jehu's purge of Ahab's house. Jehu met relatives of King Ahaziah of Judah 'at Beth-eked of the shepherds' and slaughtered them at 'the pit of Beth-eked' (2 Kings 10:12, 14). The name may refer to a sheepshearing facility or gathering place for shepherds. The exact location is uncertain; proposed identifications include Beit Kad near Mount Gilboa. The double reference (v. 12, 14) and variant forms (Beth-eked, Eked, 'the pit of...') reflect narrative emphasis on the massacre site.

(3×) The site where Jehu killed forty-two relatives of King Ahaziah. The text refers to it as 'Beth-eked of the shepherds' (2 Kings 10:12), 'Beth-eked' (as a short form, v. 12), and 'the pit/cistern of Beth-eked' (v. 14). The name suggests a shepherd's facility, and the location witnessed a brutal massacre during Jehu's campaign to eradicate the house of Ahab. Modern translations vary ('house of gathering,' 'binding place'), but the shepherding context is clear. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: Beth-Eked, Eked, at-Beth- | es: Bet-eked, Eked, casa-de | fr: Beth-Eked, Eked, à-Beth- | de: Beth-Eked, Eked, bei-Beth- 2Kgs 10:12; 2Kgs 10:14

עַשְׁתֹּרֶת H1045
Ashtoreth, Canaanite goddess; astral fertility deity whose worship Israel repeatedly adopted
This Canaanite goddess, known elsewhere as Astarte or Ishtar, represented fertility, love, and war. Israel repeatedly succumbed to her worship, setting up her images and high places despite covenant prohibitions. The biblical vocalization probably deliberately distorts the name by adding vowels from the word 'shame' to express contempt. Solomon built high places for her in his apostasy; Josiah later destroyed them. The plural form often appears, possibly indicating multiple local manifestations or images. Her cult involved ritual prostitution and practices the prophets condemned as spiritual adultery.

בֵּית פֶּלֶט H1046 Conj-w (3×)
Beth-pelet, a town in southern Judah meaning 'house of escape'; resettled after exile
A town name meaning 'house/place of escape,' located in the southern territory of Judah. It appears in Joshua's town list for Judah's Negev (Joshua 15:27) and in Nehemiah's record of resettlement after the exile (Nehemiah 11:26, twice). The name's root suggests deliverance or refuge. The town's mention in post-exilic lists indicates it was repopulated by returning Jews. The Nehemiah passage also mentions a related gentilicic 'the Paltite' (2 Samuel 23:26; 1 Chronicles 11:27; 27:10), though textual variants exist. Exact location unknown.

(3×) A town in Judah's southern region, listed among the settlements in the Negev (Joshua 15:27) and repopulated after the Babylonian exile (Nehemiah 11:26, appearing twice in the Nehemiah chapter). The name 'house of escape' may commemorate a historical deliverance. Some translations show textual uncertainty (brackets in French/German), but Spanish and English consistently render the name, confirming its geographic reference. PHILISTIA AND PHILISTINES en: Pelet, and-Beth-Pelet, and-in-Bet | es: Pelet, y-Bet-Pelet, y-en-Bet | fr: [פלט], et-Beth-Pelet, et-dans-la-maison | de: [פלט], und-Beth-Pelet, und-im-Haus Josh 15:27; Neh 11:26

בֵּית פְּעוֹר H1047 N-proper-fs (4×)
Beth-peor — a place east of the Jordan in Moab, associated with the worship site of Baal-peor
A place name meaning 'house of Peor,' designating a location in Moab east of the Jordan where Israel received final instructions from Moses. It is closely associated with the infamous Baal-peor incident, though Beth-peor itself appears in geographic rather than cultic contexts: Moses addressed Israel in the valley opposite Beth-peor (Deut 3:29; 4:46), was buried nearby (Deut 34:6), and the town was assigned to the tribe of Reuben (Josh 13:20). The name evokes both the gravity of Israel's earlier apostasy and the solemnity of Moses' final words.

(4×) The proper noun for a location in Moab east of the Jordan, meaning 'house of Peor.' Moses delivered his final addresses to Israel in the valley facing Beth-peor (Deut 3:29; 4:46), was buried in a valley in that land (Deut 34:6), and the site was allotted to Reuben (Josh 13:20). Spanish 'Bet-Peor,' French 'Beth-Peor,' and German 'Beth-Peor' all transliterate uniformly, confirming a single geographic referent linked to the broader Peor tradition. BAAL PEOR CULT en: Beth-Peor, and-Beth-Peor | es: Bet-Peor, y-Bet-Peor | fr: Beth-Peor, et-Beth-Peor | de: Beth-Peor, und-Beth-Peor Deut 3:29; Deut 4:46; Deut 34:6; Josh 13:20

בֵּית פַּצֵּץ H1048 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×) and Beth-pazzez, a town in Issachar (house of dispersion) Joshua 19:21 lists Beth-pazzez among Issachar's cities, a name meaning 'house of dispersion' or 'scattering.' The site remains unidentified, and this is the only biblical reference. The name's etymology suggests either a place where people scattered, or possibly a settlement pattern of dispersed dwellings rather than concentrated urban layout. Issachar's territory in the Jezreel valley and surrounding hills contained numerous small settlements.

(1×) Joshua 19:21's 'Beth-pazzez' (וּבֵית פַּצֵּץ) marks an Issacharian town, meaning 'house of dispersion.' Translations preserve the proper name (Spanish 'Bet-pases,' English 'Beth-pazzez'). The site is unknown and unreferenced elsewhere. The 'dispersion' element might describe scattered settlement, a place of refuge where people dispersed, or perhaps demographic fragmentation. Whatever the origin, the name entered Issachar's traditional town list without further narrative comment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Beyth-Patsets | es: y-Bet-pases | fr: et-Beyth-Patsets | de: und-Beyth-Patsets Josh 19:21

בֵּית־צוּר H1049 N-proper-fs (4×)

Beth-zur — a fortified town in the hill country of Judah, south of Jerusalem

A place name meaning 'house of rock,' identifying a fortified town in the Judean hill country about twelve miles south of Jerusalem. It appears in the tribal allotment of Judah (Josh 15:58), was fortified by Rehoboam as a defensive stronghold (2 Chr 11:7), and its district leader helped rebuild Jerusalem's walls under Nehemiah (Neh 3:16). In 1 Chronicles 2:45 the name appears as a personal name in a Calebite genealogy, likely reflecting the eponymous founder of the settlement. The modern site is Khirbet et-Tubeiqeh (Beit Sur).

(4×) The proper noun for a fortified town in Judah's hill country, meaning 'house of rock.' Listed among Judah's cities (Josh 15:58), fortified by Rehoboam (2 Chr 11:7), and represented in Nehemiah's wall-rebuilding effort (Neh 3:16). In 1 Chronicles 2:45 it appears as a personal name in the Calebite lineage, likely the eponymous ancestor. Spanish 'Bet-Sur/Bet-Zur,' French 'Beth-Tzur,' and English 'Beth-zur' all render the same toponym, confirming a single geographic and genealogical referent. PEDAHZUR PERSONAL NAME

en: Beth-Tsur, Beth-Tzur, Beth-zur | es: Bet-Sur, Bet-Tsur, Bet-Zur | fr: Beth-Tzur, [ביתצור] | de: Beth-Tzur, [ביתצור] Josh 15:58; 1Chr 2:45; 2Chr 11:7; Neh 3:16

בֵּית־רְחֹב H1050 N-proper-fs (3×)

Beth-rehob, a town/region in the far north near Dan; allied with Ammon against Israel

A place name in the northern frontier, near Dan and on the road to Hamath. When the Danites sought to conquer Laish, the city had no ally because it was 'far from Sidon' and 'near Beth-rehob' (Judges 18:28). During David's Ammonite war, the Arameans of Beth-rehob provided mercenaries to fight Israel (2 Samuel 10:6, twice). Beth-rehob appears to be identical with 'Rehob' in Numbers 13:21 and 2 Samuel 10:8. The name means 'house of the street/broad place.' Location uncertain but likely in the Beqaa valley or upper Jordan region.

(3×) A northern Aramean town or district associated with Dan and the approaches to Hamath. Laish (later Dan) was 'in the valley that belongs to Beth-rehob' (Judges 18:28). When Ammon hired Aramean mercenaries, they came from 'Aram Beth-rehob' (2 Samuel 10:6, twice). The connection with Rehob elsewhere suggests this was both a town and a regional designation in the far north, beyond Israelite control but within the sphere of northern geopolitics. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beth, Rehob, to-Beit-Rechov | es: Bet-, Rejob, de-Bet-Rejob | fr: Beth, Rehob, à-Beit-Rechov | de: Beth, Rehob, zu-Beit-Rechov Judg 18:28; 2Sam 10:6

בֵּית רָפָא H1051 N-proper-ms (1×)

Beth-rapha, listed as a descendant (or settlement) in Judah's genealogy

First Chronicles 4:12 mentions Beth-rapha in Calebite genealogy, either as a person or place. If a place, it means 'house of Rapha' or 'house of healing.' The Chronicler's genealogies often blur personal and place names, treating settlements as descendants. No other biblical references clarify whether this is an individual named Beth-rapha or a town. The context links it to Judahite clan structure and territorial holdings.

(1×) The name 'Beth-rapha' (בֵּית רָפָא) in 1 Chronicles 4:12 appears in genealogical format but may designate a place ('house of Rapha/healing') rather than a person. Spanish 'Bet-Rafa,' English 'Beth-rapha' preserve the ambiguity. BDB suggests it could be a place name in Judah, while the genealogical framing treats it like a personal name. The Chronicler's method makes such distinction often impossible—territorial possession is expressed as paternity. RAPHAH GIANT CLAN en: Beth-Rapha | es: Bet-Rafa | fr: [בית רפא] | de: [בית רפא] 1Chr 4:12

בֵּית שְׁאָן H1052 Prep / N-proper-fs (9×)

Beth-shean, a fortified city in the territory of Manasseh in the Jezreel Valley, west of the Jordan.

A place name meaning 'house of quiet' or 'house of security,' designating a major city at the junction of the Jezreel and Jordan valleys. Beth-shean was assigned to Manasseh but never fully conquered (Josh 17:11, 16; Judg 1:27). It became notorious as the place where the Philistines fastened the bodies of Saul and his sons to the city wall (1 Sam 31:10, 12; 2 Sam 21:12). Solomon later made it an administrative center (1 Kgs 4:12). Cross-linguistic renderings are strikingly uniform, preserving the compound name across all translations.

Beth-shean (place name) (9×) Beth-shean (also Beth-shan) — a proper place name for the fortified city at the strategic junction of the Jezreel and Jordan valleys, in the territory of Manasseh. Despite its allotment to Manasseh, the Canaanite population could not be driven out (Josh 17:11, 16; Judg 1:27). It is most memorably the site where the Philistines displayed the corpses of Saul and his sons after the battle of Gilboa (1 Sam 31:10, 12), and later became part of Solomon's administrative district (1 Kgs 4:12). All major translation traditions preserve the compound form: English 'Beth-Shean', Spanish 'Bet-Seán', French and German 'Beth-Shean'. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beit-Shean, Beth-Shean, Beth-shan | es: Bet-Seán, Bet-Shan, Bet-Sheán | fr: Beit-Shean, Beth-Shean, Beth-shan | de: Beit-Shean, Beth-Shean, Beth-shan Josh 17:11; Josh 17:16; Judg 1:27; 1Sam 31:10; 1Sam 31:12

בֵּית שֶׁמֶשׁ H1053 N-proper-fs (21×)

Beth-shemesh ('house of the sun'); a Levitical city in Judah, also place names in Naphtali and Issachar.

Beth-shemesh (בֵּית שֶׁמֶשׁ, 'house/temple of the sun') most often designates the Levitical city on Judah's northern border near Philistine territory, famously the place where the Ark of the Covenant arrived on the unguided ox-cart from Ekron (1 Sam 6:9-20). It was also the site of King Amaziah's humiliating defeat by Jehoash of Israel (2 Kgs 14:11-13) and was later captured by the Philistines during Ahaz's reign (2 Chr 28:18). The name likely reflects a pre-Israelite Canaanite sun shrine. Separate towns called Beth-shemesh existed in Naphtali (Josh 19:38; Judg 1:33) and Issachar (Josh 19:22). The name transliterates with remarkable consistency across all major language traditions.

Beth-Shemesh (place name) (21×) A place name meaning 'house of the sun,' primarily designating the Levitical city in southwestern Judah near the Philistine border. Best known as the destination of the returning Ark (1 Sam 6:9-20) and the site of Amaziah's defeat by Jehoash (2 Kgs 14:11-13; 2 Chr 25:21-23). Also names towns in Naphtali (Josh 19:38; Judg 1:33, where Canaanites were not driven out) and Issachar (Josh 19:22). All major languages — English, Spanish, French, German — transliterate uniformly as 'Beth-Shemesh' or 'Bet-Shemesh.' BETH-SHEMESH PLACE

en: Beit-Shemesh, Beth-Shemesh, Beth-shemesh | es: Bet-Semes, Bet-Shemesh, Bet-semes | fr: Beit-Shemesh, Beth-Shemesh, Beth-shemesh | de: Beit-Shemesh, Beth-Shemesh, Beth-shemesh Josh 15:10; Josh 19:22; Josh 19:38; Josh 21:16; Judg 1:33

בֵּית־תַּפּוּחַ H1054 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
and Beth-tappuah, a hill-country town in Judah (house of apples)
Joshua 15:53 includes Beth-tappuah in Judah's hill-country inheritance, meaning 'house of apples' (or possibly 'house of Tappuah' [a personal name]). Modern Taffuh, northwest of Hebron, preserves the ancient name. The town was apparently known for apple or similar fruit cultivation, giving it a distinctively agricultural identity. Several biblical locations incorporate 'Tappuah' (apple), suggesting these fruit trees were prominent in Judah's and Ephraim's highlands.

(1×) Joshua 15:53's 'Beth-tappuah' (וּבֵית תַּפּוּחַ) names a Judean town meaning 'house/place of apples,' preserved in modern Taffuh. Spanish 'Bet-Tapúa,' English 'Beth-tappuah' maintain the form. The name suggests agricultural specialization in fruit cultivation. Several biblical 'Tappuah' locations indicate apple (or similar fruit) growing was economically significant in the highlands. The site's identification with Taffuh northwest of Hebron shows remarkable toponymic continuity. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 6168 WITH 4 SENSES
en: and-Beth-Tappuach | es: y-Bet-Tapúa | fr: et-Beth-Tappuach | de: und-Beth-Tappuach Josh 15:53

בִּיתָן H1055 Art / N-ms (3×)
pavilion, palace garden structure (Persian loanword); royal garden building
A Persian loanword denoting a garden pavilion or palace structure, appearing only in Esther. The king's palace at Susa had 'the garden of the palace pavilion' where Ahasuerus held his grand banquet (Esther 1:5) and where the critical scene of Esther 7 unfolds—the king storms out to 'the palace garden,' then returns to find Haman fallen on Esther's couch (Esther 7:7-8). The term may be synonymous with or related to 'apadana' (throne hall). The repeated phrase 'garden of the bitan' evokes the opulent Persian court setting central to Esther's narrative.

(3×) A palace garden structure or pavilion in the Persian court. Used three times in Esther to describe the royal garden space at Susa: 'the court of the garden of the palace pavilion' (Esther 1:5) and 'the garden of the pavilion' where the king retreats during Haman's downfall (Esther 7:7-8). Some translations render it as 'palace' or 'courtyard,' but the architectural meaning points to a garden building within the royal complex. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: pavilion-of, the-pavilion | es: el-palacio, pabellón-de | fr: [בִּיתָן], [הַבִּיתָן] | de: [הַבִּיתָן], in-er-gibt Esth 1:5; Esth 7:7; Esth 7:8

בָּכָא H1056 Art / N-ms (1×)
Baca, a valley name (possibly balsam trees, or weeping)
Psalm 84:6 speaks of those who pass through 'the valley of Baca' making it a place of springs. The name likely relates to balsam trees (which 'weep' resin) found in arid valleys, though some interpret it as 'valley of weeping' from בָּכָה (to weep). The psalm transforms a dry, difficult valley into a place of blessing through God's presence. Whether literal location or symbolic landscape, Baca represents barren places made fruitful by faith.

(1×) Psalm 84:6's 'valley of Baca' (עֵמֶק הַבָּכָא) probably refers to balsam trees that exude resin like tears, though the weeping/mourning sense also resonates. Spanish 'el Baca,' English 'Baka' preserve the name. The balsam trees appear in 2 Samuel 5:23-24 (בָּכָאִים), supporting this identification. The psalmist's imagery—pilgrims passing through the dry balsam-valley finding it becomes a place of springs—beautifully pictures how God's presence transforms desolation into blessing. FOREST WOODLAND en: Baka | es: el-Baca | fr: le-Baca | de: Baka Ps 84:6

בָּכָא H1057 Art / N-mp (4×)
Balsam tree; a tree (possibly weeping or dripping with resin) in whose groves God directed Israel's military strategy.
Refers to a specific species of tree, likely a balsam or mulberry, identified by its resinous dripping sap. The name may derive from a root meaning 'to weep' or 'to drip,' connecting it to the Arabic for a low-yield camel. In 2 Samuel 5:23-24 and 1 Chronicles 14:14-15, God instructs David to circle behind the Philistines through the balsam grove and wait for the sound of marching in the treetops as a divine signal to attack. Psalm 84:7 speaks of passing through the 'Valley of Baca,' a poetic image of turning a dry, weeping place into a spring of blessing.

(4×) A balsam or mulberry tree, known for dripping resin, appearing only in the plural (בָּכָאִים). In 2 Samuel 5:23-24 and 1 Chronicles 14:14-15, God tells David to use a grove of these trees as tactical cover, with the rustling of their tops serving as the signal to advance. Spanish 'los-bálsamos' and English 'balsam-trees' both preserve the botanical identification. The singular form appears in Psalm 84:7's evocative 'Valley of Baca,' likely a parched place named for these weeping trees. FOREST WOODLAND
en: the-balsam-trees | es: los-bálsamos | fr: [הַבְּכָאִים], le-balsam-arbres | de: [הַבְּכָאִים], der-balsam-Baeume 2Sam 5:23; 2Sam 5:24; 1Chr 14:14; 1Chr 14:15

בָּכָה H1058 V-Piel-Prtcpl-fp (116×)
To weep, cry aloud; in Piel, to bewail or lament for someone with intensified mourning
Bakah is the primary Hebrew verb for weeping, appearing over a hundred times across every emotional register — grief at bereavement (Gen 37:35), joy at reunion (Gen 33:4), intercession before God (2 Kgs 20:3), and communal mourning (Judg 20:23). It corresponds to Arabic baka and Aramaic beka, reflecting a pan-Semitic root. The Piel intensification sharpens the focus to lamentation directed at or on behalf of another, as when Rachel 'bewails' her lost children (Jer 31:15) — a passage later echoed in Matthew's infancy narrative.

1. Qal: to weep, cry (112×) The Qal form covering intransitive weeping in all its registers: grief (Gen 37:35, Abraham weeping for Sarah), joy (Gen 33:4, Jacob and Esau's reunion), supplication (Judg 20:23, Israel weeping before the Lord), and sorrow at impending loss (Gen 21:16, Hagar weeping in the wilderness). This is overwhelmingly the dominant sense at 112 occurrences. Arabic baka, Korean ulda, and Swahili kulia all track this basic intransitive 'to weep.' Spanish llorar and German weinte appear consistently across the corpus. WEEP CRY WAIL
en: and-he-wept, and-wept, and-wept-for | es: Y-lloró, y-lloró | fr: et-il-pleura, et-pleura, et-pleura-pour | de: und-er-weinte, und-es-weinte, und-weinte Gen 21:16; Gen 27:38; Gen 29:11; Gen 33:4; Gen 37:35

2. (2×) A pair of occurrences (2 Kgs 20:3, Isa 38:3) where the weeping appears in participial or nominal form as part of Hezekiah's plea to God — 'I wept with great weeping.' The multilingual glosses show nominal forms (Spanish llanto, French pleurant, German weinend), suggesting this may function as an intensifying cognate-accusative construction rather than a distinct semantic sense. The weeping here serves as evidence of sincere prayer and devotion. WEEPING NOUN
en: great, weeping | es: con-llanto, llanto | fr: pleur, pleurant | de: in-denn, weinend 2Kgs 20:3; Isa 38:3

3. Piel: to bewail, lament for (2×) The Piel intensive-transitive form: to bewail, lament for, or mourn over someone specifically. Jeremiah 31:15 describes Rachel weeping 'for her children,' and Ezekiel 8:14 depicts women weeping 'for Tammuz.' The Piel directs the mourning toward a particular object of grief, unlike the intransitive Qal. Arabic yabkina in its intensive pattern and Swahili -mlia ('weep for') capture this transitive, directed lamentation. WEEP CRY WAIL
en: weeping, weeping-for | es: llorando | fr: pleurer | de: von-weinte, weinen Jer 31:15; Ezek 8:14

בֶּכָה H1059 N-ms (1×)
weeping (noun), great weeping of the people
Ezra 10:1 describes the people's response to Ezra's prayer of confession: 'the people wept very bitterly (weeping).' The noun בֶּכָה intensifies the verbal description—literally 'they wept great weeping.' This occurs when Ezra confronts the post-exilic community about intermarriage with surrounding peoples. The emotional intensity—

Ezra weeping, the people weeping, children weeping—creates a crisis moment leading to the covenant renewal and putting away of foreign wives.

(1×) Ezra 10:1's 'weeping' (בְּכָה) appears in the phrase 'they wept very bitterly' (literally 'wept great weeping'), intensifying the verbal form with a cognate noun. Spanish 'llanto' (weeping), English 'weeping' capture the substantive emotional display. The context —national repentance over covenant violation—makes this weeping both personal grief and corporate contrition. The noun emphasizes the magnitude and intensity of the people's emotional response to Ezra's devastating prayer. WEEPING NOUN

en: weeping | es: llanto | fr: [בכה] | de: weinen Ezra 10:1

בְּכוֹר H1060 Art / N-ms (118×)

Firstborn — the first child or offspring, bearing special inheritance rights; figuratively, preeminence or primacy

Bekhor designates the first offspring to open the womb, whether human or animal, and carries enormous legal and theological weight in the Hebrew Bible. The firstborn son received a double portion of inheritance (Deut 21:17) and held a position of honor in the family. God's claim on every firstborn — established at the exodus when Egypt's firstborn were struck (Exod 12:29; 13:2) — became the basis for the Levitical substitution and the redemption of firstborn sons (Num 3:12-13; 18:15-16). Figuratively, bekhor expresses preeminence: Israel is God's 'firstborn son' (Exod 4:22), and Job 18:13 speaks hauntingly of 'the firstborn of death.' Spanish 'primogenito,' French 'premier-ne,' and German 'Erstgeborener' all preserve the birth-order primacy.

firstborn (118×) The first offspring born to a parent, human or animal, carrying rights of primacy including the double inheritance portion (Deut 21:17). The exodus narrative pivots on the firstborn: God strikes Egypt's firstborn (Exod 12:29) and claims Israel's in return (Exod 13:2), establishing the Levitical substitution (Num 3:12-13) and the requirement to redeem firstborn sons (Num 18:15-16). Figuratively bekhor conveys preeminence — Israel as God's 'firstborn' (Exod 4:22), 'firstborn of death' as the deadliest plague (Job 18:13), 'firstborn of the poor' as the most destitute (Isa 14:30). Spanish 'primogenito,' French 'premier-ne,' and German 'Erstgeborener' all center on birth-order priority. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: firstborn-of, the-firstborn-of | es: primogénito-de, primogénito-de- | fr: le-premier-né-de, premier-né-de | de: Erstgeborener-von, der-Erstgeborene, des-Erstgeborenen Gen 25:13; Gen 35:23; Gen 36:15; Gen 38:7; Gen 41:51

בִּכּוּרִים H1061 Art / N-mp (18×)

Firstfruits; the earliest-ripened grain or fruit, especially as offered to God; also early-ripening figs in figurative use.

Refers to the first agricultural produce to ripen each season, set apart as sacred to God under Israel's cultic calendar. The term anchors major festivals: the bread of firstfruits at Pentecost (Lev 23:20) and the 'day of firstfruits' (Num 28:26). Spanish consistently renders 'primicias,' German 'Erstlinge,' and English 'firstfruits,' all preserving the notion of temporal priority and consecration. In a secondary, more concrete use, it describes early-ripening figs — Nahum 3:12 likens Nineveh's fortresses to fig trees whose first ripe fruit falls at a shake, and the spies brought back early produce from the promised land (Num 13:20).

1. firstfruits (offering/produce) (15×) The first portion of grain, fruit, or bread to ripen in a given season, presented to God as an offering or tribute. This sense dominates the cultic legislation of Exodus 23, 34, Leviticus 2 and 23, and Numbers 18 and 28. The Spanish 'primicias' and German 'Erstlinge' both capture the dual idea of chronological priority and ritual dedication. The term functions as a collective noun covering wheat, barley, and orchard produce alike. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-for-the-firstfruits, and-the-firstfruits-of, firstfruits | es: Primicias-de, de-primicias, las-primicias | fr: [בכורי], [ובכורי], [ולבכורים] | de: Erstlinge, Erstlinge-von, [בכורי] Exod 23:16; Exod 23:19; Exod 34:22; Exod 34:26; Lev 2:14

2. early-ripening fruit (fig) (3×) A concretely early-ripening fig or piece of fruit, used either literally or in vivid simile. In Numbers 13:20 the spies are told to check whether the land has early produce; in Nahum 3:12 fortresses are compared to fig trees with first-ripe figs that tumble at a shake; and Isaiah 28:4 uses the feminine form in a striking image of Ephraim's fading glory. Cross-linguistic evidence confirms the shift: where sense 1 draws terms like 'primicias' and 'firstfruits,' sense 2 elicits Spanish 'brevas' (early figs) and English 'first-ripe figs.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: before, first-ripe-figs, first-ripe-of | es: brevas, como-higo-temprano, primicias-de | fr: [כבכורה], premier-ripe-de, prémices | de: [בכורים], [כבכורה], erster-reif-von Num 13:20; Isa 28:4; Nah 3:12

בְּכֹרָה H1062 N-fsc / 3ms (14×)

Birthright or firstborn status; also firstlings of livestock offered to God

Rooted in the concept of the firstborn, this noun carries two distinct senses in Scripture. In its most frequent use, it denotes the birthright – the legal privilege, double inheritance portion, and family leadership belonging to the eldest son, as dramatically illustrated in the Esau-Jacob narratives (Gen 25:31-34; 27:36). In a less common but liturgically significant sense, it refers to the firstborn offspring of livestock, the firstlings brought as sacred offerings to God (Gen 4:4; Deut 12:6).

1. birthright, right of the firstborn (10×) The abstract legal status and inheritance rights of the firstborn son, encompassing the double portion of the estate and family headship. Spanish 'primogenitura' and English 'birthright' both capture this juridical sense. The term is central to the Esau-Jacob rivalry (Gen 25:31-34), where Esau famously sells his birthright for stew, and to Reuben's forfeited status (1 Chr 5:1-2). In Gen 43:33, the seating arrangement 'according to his birthright' reveals the social ordering this privilege entailed. INHERITING AND POSSESSING

en: a-birthright, according-to-his-birthright, and-the-birthright | es: como-primogenitura, la-primogenitura, mi-primogenitura | fr: [בכרתו], [והבכרה], [לבכרה] | de: [בכרתו], [והבכרה], [לבכרה] Gen 25:31; Gen 25:32; Gen 25:33; Gen 25:34; Gen 27:36

2. firstlings, firstborn offspring (4×) The firstborn young of livestock, offered as consecrated gifts to God. Here the morphology shifts to masculine plural construct (בְּכֹרֹת), and multilingual renderings diverge: English uses 'firstlings/firstborn of,' Spanish 'primogénitos de,' and German 'Erstgeborener von.' Abel's offering from the firstlings of his flock (Gen 4:4) is the earliest attestation, while Deuteronomy's cultic instructions (12:6, 12:17, 14:23) prescribe bringing firstlings of herd and flock to the chosen place of worship. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-firstborn-of, from-firstlings-of | es: de-primogénitos-de, ni-los-primogénitos-de, y-los-primogénitos-de | fr: de-firstlings-de, et-premier-né-de | de: und-Erstgeborener-von, von-den-Erstlingen Gen 4:4; Deut 12:6; Deut 12:17; Deut 14:23

בְּכוּרָה H1063 N-fs (2×)

first-ripe fig, early fig; prized early fruit of the fig tree

The first-ripe or early fig, regarded as a delicacy and appearing before the main crop. These early figs ripened in late spring, ahead of the regular summer harvest, and were especially prized for their taste. Prophetic texts use the early fig as an image of something precious or eagerly desired.

(2×) Hosea compares God's initial encounter with Israel to finding 'early figs on the fig tree in its first season' (9:10)—something delightful and unexpected. Micah laments his righteous state: there are no early figs to satisfy desire (7:1), using scarcity of this delicacy as metaphor for absence of godly people. Isaiah likewise uses 'first-ripe fig' for something eagerly devoured the moment it appears (28:4). The term (בְּכוּרָה) relates to בִּכּוּרִים (firstfruits), emphasizing the early timing that made these figs valuable. Arabic (bākūrah) and Spanish (albacora) borrowings confirm the term's reference to early figs. These spring figs arrived before the main harvest, making them rare and eagerly anticipated—a perfect image for something precious and quickly consumed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: first-ripe-fig, like-first-fruit | es: como-la-primicia, higo-temprano | fr: prémices | de: [בכורה], [כבכורה] Hos 9:10; Mic 7:1

בְּכוֹרַת H1064 N-proper-ms (1×)
Becorath, ancestor of Saul (meaning 'first-born')
First Samuel 9:1 traces Saul's lineage through Becorath, whose name means 'first-born' or 'primacy.' This genealogical detail establishes Saul's Benjamite credentials before his selection as king. The name's meaning—emphasizing firstborn status—fits the pattern of genealogies highlighting family position and inheritance rights. Becorath represents one link in the chain establishing Saul's tribal legitimacy and social standing as someone from a prominent family.

(1×) The personal name 'Becorath' (בְּכוֹרַת) in 1 Samuel 9:1 means 'first-born,' appearing in Saul's genealogy. Spanish 'Bejorat,' English 'Becorath' transliterate the name. Its meaning ('primacy/firstborn status') may be significant in establishing Saul's family status—descent from firstborn sons, suggesting family importance and inheritance rights. The genealogy functions to demonstrate that Israel's first king, though from smallest tribe Benjamin, came from a distinguished lineage. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Becorath | es: Bejorat | fr: Becorath | de: Becorath 1Sam 9:1

בְּכִי H1065 N-msc / 1cs (28×)
Weeping; the act or sound of crying from grief, mourning, repentance, or supplication.
This noun denotes audible weeping – not silent tears but the sound of lamentation that can be heard by others. It appears in scenes of raw grief (Joseph weeping aloud in Gen 45:2), communal mourning (Israel at the death of Moses, Deut 34:8; the returned exiles at the rebuilt temple, Ezra 3:13), and prophetic depictions of national calamity (Isa 15:2-5; Jer 31:16). The word frequently pairs with other mourning vocabulary such as 'evel (mourning) and misped (wailing). Spanish 'llanto' and German 'Weinen' both capture the vocal, demonstrative quality that distinguishes bekhi from quieter forms of sorrow.

weeping (28×) The act or audible sound of weeping, whether from personal grief, communal mourning, or penitential supplication. Joseph 'gave his voice in weeping' so that the Egyptians heard (Gen 45:2); Israel wept thirty days for Moses (Deut 34:8); Jeremiah promises that God will turn weeping into joy (Jer 31:16). Often paired with 'evel (mourning), tsom (fasting), and misped (lamentation) as in Esth 4:3. Spanish 'llanto' and German 'Weinen' preserve the vocal, demonstrative character of the Hebrew term. WEEPING NOUN
en: and-with-weeping, for-weeping, in-the-weeping | es: a-llanto, con-llanto, con-llanto-de | fr: dans-car, dans-pleur, de-pleur | de: Weinen, [ובבכי], indenn Gen 45:2; Deut 34:8; Judg 21:2; 2Sam 13:36; Ezra 3:13

בֹּכִים H1066 Art / N-proper-fs (2×)
Bochim; place name meaning 'weepers'
A place name meaning 'weepers,' derived from an incident where Israel wept after divine rebuke. Located near Bethel, the site received its name when the people wept in response to the angel of the LORD's message about their covenant disobedience. Some scholars suggest connection with the oak of weeping (Allon-bacuth) near Bethel.

(2×) The angel of the LORD came from Gilgal to 'Bochim' (the weepers) and rebuked Israel for covenant unfaithfulness (Judges 2:1, 5). After hearing this message, 'the people wept,' giving the place its name. The Greek varies between 'the weeping' (singular) and 'weepings' (plural), with some suggesting the reading 'Bethel' instead. Possible connection exists with Allon-bacuth ('oak of weeping') where Rebekah's nurse was buried near Bethel (Genesis 35:8), though this remains uncertain. The name commemorates a moment of national repentance—Israel's weeping response to divine rebuke about their failure to fully drive out the Canaanites and their compromises with local worship. The location near Bethel fits both the geography and the significance of this confrontation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Bokhim, the-Bokhim | es: Bojim, el-Bojim | fr: Bokhim, le-Bokhim | de: Bokhim, der-Bokhim Judg 2:1; Judg 2:5

בְּכִירָה H1067 Art / Adj-fs (6×)
bekhirah – the firstborn daughter, the elder of two sisters or daughters
The feminine noun bekhirah designates the firstborn daughter, the elder of a pair of sisters. It appears exclusively in narrative contexts where birth order determines social precedent: Lot's elder daughter initiates the plan to preserve the family line (Gen 19:31-37), and Laban invokes custom to justify giving Leah before Rachel (Gen 29:26). Saul's firstborn daughter Merab is similarly distinguished (1 Sam 14:49). Spanish la primogenita, French le premier-ne, and German die Erstgeborene all confirm a single, stable meaning tied to female birth-order priority.

the firstborn (6×) The firstborn or elder daughter, used in contexts where birth order carries social, legal, or narrative weight. In Gen 19:31-37, Lot's bekhirah takes the lead in the cave episode, reflecting the firstborn's customary initiative. In Gen 29:26, Laban appeals to the convention that the elder daughter must marry first, blocking Jacob's desire for Rachel. Cross-lingual evidence is uniform – Spanish primogenita, German Erstgeborene – pointing to a single, undifferentiated sense of 'firstborn female.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: the-firstborn | es: la-primogénita | fr: le-premier-né | de: der-Erstgeborenen, der-firstborn, die-Erstgeborene Gen 19:31; Gen 19:33; Gen 19:34; Gen 19:37; Gen 29:26

בְּכִית H1068 N-fsc / 3ms (1×)
his weeping, the days of weeping for him (mourning period)
Genesis 50:4 describes the mourning period for Jacob: 'when the days of his weeping (בְּכִיתוֹ) were past.' This refers to the seventy-day Egyptian embalming and mourning period for Jacob in Egypt. The noun with pronominal suffix emphasizes that these were days specifically devoted to weeping for him. The extensive mourning period reflects both Jacob's importance and Egyptian customs that Joseph, as vizier, could command for his father.

(1×) Genesis 50:4's 'the days of weeping for him' (יְמֵי בְכִיתוֹ) designates Jacob's official mourning period in Egypt (seventy days total). Spanish 'su llanto' (his weeping), English 'weeping for him,' German 'seines Beweinens' capture the possessive relationship. The noun בְּכִית with suffix makes this personal—days of weeping specifically for Jacob. The long mourning period (forty days embalming plus thirty additional) shows the honor accorded to Joseph's father in Egypt. WEEPING NOUN
en: weeping-his | es: su-llanto | fr: weeping-son | de: seines-Beweinens Gen 50:4

בָּכַר H1069 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (4×)
To bear early fruit; to treat or designate as firstborn; to be in the pangs of a first birth.
Covers a semantic range from agricultural earliness to the legal and physical dimensions of firstborn status. In the Piel stem, it means either to bear early or first fruit (Ezek 47:12) or to confer firstborn rights upon a son (Deut 21:16). The Pual indicates being born or designated as a firstling (Lev 27:26), while the Hiphil participle in Jeremiah 4:31 vividly describes a woman bearing her first child. The Arabic cognate ´ ('to rise early, do something early') illuminates the core notion of primacy and firstness that unifies these uses.

(4×) To bear early or first fruit, to designate as firstborn, or to experience first childbirth. The Piel in Ezekiel 47:12 describes miraculous trees that 'bear early' every month. In Deuteronomy 21:16, a father may not 'make firstborn' a younger son over the actual firstborn — Spanish 'dar-primogenitura' and French 'est-fit-premier-né' capture this legal conferral. The Hiphil participle in Jeremiah 4:31 (מְבַכִּירָה) paints Zion as a woman in the anguish of her first delivery. The

Pual in Leviticus 27:26 marks an animal 'made firstling' as already belonging to the LORD. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: as-one-bearing-firstborn, is-made-firstborn, it-shall-bear-early | es: como-de-primeriza, dar-primogenitura, es-primogénito | fr: [כמבכירה], est-fit-premier-né, premier-né | de: [יבכר], [כמבכירה], ist-machte-Erstgeborener Lev 27:26; Deut 21:16; Jer 4:31; Ezek 47:12

בִּכְרָה H1070 N-mpc (1×)

young camels of (construct plural), young dromedaries

Isaiah 60:6 envisions eschatological worship: 'young camels (בִּכְרֵי) of Midian and Ephah shall cover you.' The construct plural describes young dromedaries from these Arabian regions bringing tribute to restored Zion. The Arabic cognate confirms this refers to young she-camels specifically. This imagery of camel caravans bringing gold and frankincense to Jerusalem becomes part of Isaiah's vision of nations streaming to worship Israel's God.

(1×) Isaiah 60:6's 'young camels of' (בִּכְרֵי) describes dromedaries from Midian and Ephah bringing tribute. Spanish 'dromedarios de' (dromedaries of), English 'young camels of' capture the construct relationship. The term, from Arabic 'young she-camel,' specifies these as young animals in their prime, capable of carrying valuable cargo long distances. The vision of Arabian camels covering Jerusalem with gold and incense reverses Israel's humiliation with images of international tribute. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: young-camels-of | es: dromedarios-de | fr: [בכרי] | de: [בכרי] Isa 60:6

בֶּכֶר H1071 N-proper-ms (5×)

Beker (Bekher): a proper name meaning 'young camel,' borne by a son of Benjamin and a son of Ephraim.

Beker is a Hebrew personal name derived from a word meaning 'young camel' (cf. Arabic bakr). It is borne by two distinct figures in Scripture: a son of Benjamin listed in the genealogy of Genesis 46:21 and 1 Chronicles 7:6, 8, and a son of Ephraim in Numbers 26:35 (where a variant spelling Bered appears in 1 Chronicles 7:20). The multilingual glosses consistently transliterate the name, with Spanish rendering it 'Bequer' and French 'Becher,' reflecting the guttural variation in different phonological systems.

(5×) A proper masculine name meaning 'young camel,' applied to two Old Testament individuals: (a) a son of Benjamin (Gen 46:21; 1 Chr 7:6, 8), and (b) a son of Ephraim (Num 26:35), equated with Bered in 1 Chr 7:20. The Assyrian cognate bakru confirms the 'firstborn/young' semantic root behind the name. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bekher, and-Becher, and-Bekher | es: Béquer, de-Béquer, y-Bejer | fr: [בכר], [ובכר], et-Becher | de: [בכר], [ובכר], und-Becher Gen 46:21; Num 26:35; 1Chr 7:6; 1Chr 7:8

בִּכְרָה H1072 N-fs (1×)

young she-camel, dromedary (Arabic cognate: young female camel, valued for speed and vigor)

This rare feminine noun denotes a young female camel, prized in the ancient Near East for its swiftness and energy. The Arabic cognate bakrah confirms this specialized sense. Jeremiah uses it metaphorically to describe Israel's restless, directionless wandering in pursuit of false gods—a young camel racing back and forth in the wilderness.

(1×) Refers to a young female camel, emphasized in Jeremiah 2:23 where Israel's spiritual adultery is compared to a swift young camel running wild in the desert. The Spanish 'camella' and English 'young camel' capture the feminine gender and youth that distinguish this term from generic camel words. LIVING CREATURES

en: a-young-camel | es: Camella | fr: [בכרה] | de: [בכרה] Jer 2:23

בִּכּוּרָה H1073 Art / N-fp (1×)

first-ripe fig, early fig (a delicacy, appearing before main harvest)

This feminine noun specifically designates the first figs to ripen in early summer, considered a delicacy in ancient Israel. The plural form in Jeremiah 24:2 may denote early ripeness as an abstract quality rather than individual fruits. These prized early figs appear in prophecies of judgment (Hosea 9:10) and restoration (Isaiah 28:4), symbolizing either choiceness or vulnerability.

(1×) Denotes the early-ripening figs valued as seasonal delicacies. In Jeremiah 24:2, the plural 'firstfruits' (English) and 'las tempranas' (Spanish) emphasize the temporal priority and quality of these figs, which serve as a symbol for the exiles who will return to favor with God. FIG AND SYCAMORE

en: the-firstfruits | es: las-tempranas | fr: [הבכרות] | de: [הבכרות] Jer 24:2

בְּכֹרִי H1074 N-proper-ms (2×)

Bocheru; personal name in Benjamin's genealogy

A personal name appearing in Benjamite genealogies, specifically in the line of Saul. The name's form, ending in -û, reflects patterns found in other Hebrew names and possibly in Nabatean inscriptions. The name appears in the detailed genealogical records preserved in 1 Chronicles.

(2×) Bocheru appears in parallel genealogies of Benjamin's descendants (1 Chronicles 8:38 = 9:44), specifically in the lineage connected to Saul's family. The name's form (בֹּכְרִו) with its -û ending parallels other names like Gashmu and Melichu, suggesting a particular naming pattern. Scholars note possible connections to Nabatean name formations. Beyond his genealogical placement in Saul's extended family, no other information about this individual survives. The dual occurrence in Chronicles' parallel genealogies confirms the reading and importance of preserving even obscure family members in tribal records. Multilingual glosses simply transliterate (Bocru, Bochru), treating it as an opaque proper name whose etymology remains uncertain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Bokhru | es: Bocru | fr: [בכרו] | de: [בכרו] 1Chr 8:38; 1Chr 9:44

בִּכְרִי H1075 N-proper-ms (8×)

Bichri — a Benjamite, father of the rebel Sheba who led an insurrection against David.

A proper masculine name identifying a Benjamite ancestor, known exclusively as the father of Sheba ben Bichri, the man who raised a revolt against King David after Absalom's rebellion (2 Sam 20). The name may mean 'youthful' (from bekor, 'firstborn'). All eight occurrences appear in the fixed patronymic phrase 'Sheba son of Bichri,' and the name is rendered consistently across languages — Bichri in English and French, Bejri in Spanish, Bichri in German — reflecting a stable transliteration tradition.

(8×) Proper name of a Benjamite man, known only as the father of Sheba, who led a short-lived tribal secession against David's restored kingship (2 Sam 20:1–22). The phrase 'Sheba son of Bichri' recurs eight times in this single chapter, underscoring the rebellion's gravity. The name likely derives from bekor ('firstborn') and may carry the sense 'youthful one.' English, French, and German all render it as Bichri; Spanish uses Bejri. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bichri | es: Bejri | fr: Bichri | de: Bichri 2Sam 20:1; 2Sam 20:2; 2Sam 20:6; 2Sam 20:7; 2Sam 20:10

הַבִּכְרִי H1076 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Becherite (gentilic adjective: descendant of Becher, son of Ephraim)

This gentilic adjective with the definite article functions as a collective noun denoting the clan descended from Becher, a son of Ephraim. Numbers 26:35 lists them among the families of Ephraim during the wilderness census. The consistent use of 'Becherite' across translations reflects the standard Hebrew pattern for forming clan names.

(1×) A collective designation for the descendants of Becher in the census of Numbers 26:35. The definite article with the gentilic form ('the Becherite' in English, 'der Becherite' in German) indicates the entire clan or family group, standard in tribal enumeration lists. PERSONAL NAMES en: the-Becherite | es: los-bequeritas | fr: le-Becherite | de: der-Becherite Num 26:35

בַּל H1077 Adv (72×)
Not — a poetic and archaic particle of negation, synonymous with lo but found almost exclusively in elevated verse.
Bal is a poetic adverb of negation that serves as an elevated alternative to the common Hebrew lo ('not'). It appears almost exclusively in poetry — overwhelmingly in the Psalms and Isaiah, with scattered occurrences in Hosea, Proverbs, and one passage in Chronicles. Its characteristic usage marks solemn, often defiant declarations of trust: 'I shall not be moved' (Ps 16:8; 30:6; 46:5), and sweeping negations of the wicked — 'there is no God' in the fool's heart (Ps 10:4). Isaiah uses it in extended sequences of negation to paint eschatological tableaux of security (Isa 33:20-24). The word carries no semantic content beyond negation; its distinction is purely stylistic and register-based. Spanish no, French ne...pas, and German nicht all render it identically to lo, confirming that the difference is poetic register, not meaning.

not (poetic negation) (72×) A poetic negation particle functioning identically to lo ('not') but reserved for elevated literary register. Found almost exclusively in the Psalms (Ps 10:4, 6, 11; 16:8; 21:7; 46:5), Isaiah (Isa 26:10-18; 33:20-24; 44:8-9), Proverbs, and Hosea. Often repeated for rhetorical effect in extended sequences of denial or assurance. Its distinction from lo is purely stylistic — all target languages render it with their standard negation word, confirming no semantic difference. NEGATION PARTICLES en: is-not-, not, not- | es: No-, no, no- | fr: ne-pas, ne...pas | de: nicht, nicht- 1Chr 16:30; Job 41:23; Ps 10:4; Ps 10:6; Ps 10:11

בֵּל H1078 N-proper-ms (3×)
Bel, chief Babylonian deity identified with Marduk; god of Babylon defeated in prophetic oracles
The Babylonian god Bel (meaning 'lord'), identified with Marduk, the patron deity of Babylon. Prophetic oracles mock Bel's impotence: 'Bel bows down, Nebo stoops' (Isaiah 46:1) as idols are carted off by beasts—gods unable to save themselves. Jeremiah declares Babylon's fall: 'Bel is put to shame, Merodach is dismayed' (Jeremiah 50:2) and 'I will punish Bel in Babylon' (Jeremiah 51:44). The prophets' anti-idol polemic targets Babylon's chief god as a symbol of imperial pride destined for humiliation. The name Bel parallels the Semitic 'Baal' (lord).

(3×) The chief Babylonian deity, mocked by Israel's prophets as powerless. Isaiah pictures Bel bowing and stooping as his idol is loaded onto animals (Isaiah 46:1). Jeremiah announces judgment: 'Declare among the nations... Bel is put to shame' (Jeremiah 50:2) and 'I will punish Bel' who must disgorge what he swallowed (Jeremiah 51:44). The collapse of Bel symbolizes Babylon's fall—even their mightiest god cannot save the empire. NEGATION PARTICLES en: Bel | es: Bel | fr: ne...pas | de: nicht Isa 46:1; Jer 50:2; Jer 51:44

בֶּל H1079 N-ms (1×)
mind, heart, attention (Aramaic noun for mental faculty or concern)
This Aramaic noun denotes the mind or mental faculty, specifically one's attention or concern directed toward a matter. It appears in the idiom 'set mind to' in Daniel 6:14, where King Darius applies his full mental effort to rescuing Daniel from the lions' den. The Syriac and Arabic cognates confirm the semantic field of heart and mental focus.

(1×) Refers to the mental faculty or deliberate attention in Daniel 6:14. The phrase 'set mind' (English) and 'corazón' (Spanish, heart) show how Darius directed his full cognitive effort toward delivering Daniel, illustrating the king's earnest concern and determination despite political constraints. NEGATION PARTICLES en: mind | es: corazón | fr: [בל] | de: nicht Dan 6:14

בְּלָא H1080 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (1×)
to wear out, wear away, harass continually (Piel: intensively exhaust or oppress)
This Aramaic verb in the Piel stem means to wear away or wear out, used figuratively in Daniel 7:25 for relentless harassment or oppression. The related Hebrew root balah conveys similar ideas of decay and exhaustion through attrition. The prophetic context describes an arrogant ruler who will persistently harass God's holy ones.

(1×) Describes persistent, grinding oppression in Daniel 7:25 where the little horn 'will wear out' the saints of the Most High. The Spanish 'quebrantará' (will break down) and English 'wear out' both capture the notion of exhausting victims through relentless pressure over time. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY en: he-will-wear-out | es: quebrantará | fr: Babel | de: [יבלא] Dan 7:25

בַּלְאֲדָן H1081 N-proper-ms (2×)
Baladan, father of Merodach-baladan, king of Babylon; from Babylonian 'abal-iddina' meaning 'he has given a son' Baladan appears in the royal genealogy of Babylon as the father of Merodach-baladan, who sent envoys to King Hezekiah. The name derives from Babylonian 'abal-iddina,' meaning 'he has given a son,' though the divine name that originally began the full form was abbreviated in biblical usage. This naming pattern, celebrating divine gift of offspring, was common in ancient Near Eastern royal families.

(2×) A proper name appearing only in the phrase identifying Merodach-baladan's lineage (2 Kings 20:12; Isaiah 39:1). The consistent rendering across languages as a transliteration rather than translation reflects its function as a personal name, though the Babylonian etymology ('he has given a son') reveals the original meaning behind what became a fixed designator in Scripture's record of eighth-century BC Near Eastern politics. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12407 WITH 3 SENSES en: Baladan, of-Baladan | es: Baladán | fr: Baladan, [בלאדן] | de: Baladan, [בלאדן] 2Kgs 20:12; Isa 39:1

בָּלַג H1082 Conj-w | V-Hifil-ConjImperf.Cohort-1cs (4×)
To gleam, brighten up, smile; to cause a flash of destruction upon the strong.
A rare verb found only in the Hiphil, carrying both the warmth of a brightened face and the violence of a sudden flash of ruin. In Job 9:27 and 10:20, Job resolves to set aside his complaint and 'brighten up' or 'show a smile,' an act of forced cheer in the face of suffering. Psalm 39:13 uses the same idiom as a plea: 'Look away from me, that I may smile again.' But Amos 5:9 turns the word ominous — God 'flashes destruction upon the stronghold,' the same gleam now wielded as judgment. The Arabic cognate ʾ ('to gleam, be radiant') confirms the root image of sudden brightness.

(4×) To show a gleam or smile, to look cheerful. Used in Job 9:27, 10:20, and Psalm 39:13, where the sufferer longs to 'brighten up' before death. Spanish 'me-alegraré' and German 'lass-mich-smile' both reflect this sense of forced or fleeting cheerfulness. In Amos 5:9, the same root takes a darker turn — God causes ruin to 'flash' or 'burst forth' upon the strong (המבליג שד על־עז), turning the image of radiant brightness into one of devastating judgment. French splits the nuance neatly: 'briller' for cheerfulness, 'briser' for destructive flashing. JOY AND EXULTATION en: and-I-will-brighten, and-be-cheerful, and-let-me-smile | es: El-que-hace-brillar, para-que-me-alegre, y-me-alegraré, | fr: briser, et-briller, et-fortifier | de: [המבליג], [ואבליגה], und-lass-mich-smile Job 9:27; Job 10:20; Ps 39:13; Amos 5:9

בִּלְגָּה H1083 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (3×)
Bilgah, a personal name meaning 'cheerfulness'; priestly family name in David's and post-exilic times
A personal name borne by priestly families, possibly meaning 'cheerfulness' or 'brightness.' One Bilgah headed the fifteenth priestly division in David's organization of temple service (1 Chronicles 24:14). A priest named Bilgah returned from exile with Zerubbabel (Nehemiah 12:5), and a later generation of the same family signed Nehemiah's covenant (Nehemiah 12:18). The name appears in priestly genealogies, linking pre-exilic temple worship to the restored community. Some texts show prepositional prefixes ('for Bilgah,' 'to Bilgah'), indicating relational or dedicatory use.

(3×) A priestly name appearing in Davidic and post-exilic contexts. Bilgah led the fifteenth division of priests (1 Chronicles 24:14). A priest by this name returned with Zerubbabel (Nehemiah 12:5), and the family later participated in covenant renewal (Nehemiah 12:18). The recurrence across centuries suggests an enduring priestly lineage that survived the exile. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bilgah, for-Bilgah, to-Bilgah | es: Bilga, De-Bilga, para-Bilga | fr: [בלגה], [לבלגה] | de: [בלגה], [לבלגה] 1Chr 24:14; Neh 12:5; Neh 12:18

בִּלְגַּי H1084 N-proper-ms (1×)
Bilgai (personal name: priest who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah)
This personal name identifies a priest or priestly family head who joined Nehemiah in sealing the covenant renewal in post-exilic Jerusalem. Nehemiah 10:8 lists Bilgai among the leaders who committed themselves and the people to obey God's law. The name may be related to roots suggesting cheerfulness or brightness.

(1×) Personal name of a priestly leader in Nehemiah 10:8. The consistent transliteration 'Bilgai' across English and Spanish versions reflects the proper noun status, identifying one of the covenant signatories in the post-exilic restoration community. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bilgai | es: Bilgai | fr: [בלגי] | de: [בלגי] Neh 10:8

בִּלְדַּד H1085 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)
Bildad: one of Job's three friends, called 'the Shuhite,' who argues that suffering implies guilt.
Bildad the Shuhite is one of the three companions who come to comfort Job in his affliction. His name may mean 'Bel has loved,' connecting it to ancient Near Eastern theophoric naming patterns (cf. Eldad). He appears in three speech cycles (Job 8, 18, 25), consistently pressing the retribution principle that God does not pervert justice and that the wicked inevitably perish. All major translations preserve the name unchanged, from English and Spanish 'Bildad' to French and German 'Bildad,' underscoring its firm place in the biblical tradition.

(5×) A proper masculine name designating one of Job's three friends, identified as 'the Shuhite' (Job 2:11; 8:1; 18:1; 25:1; 42:9). The name likely means 'Bel has loved' (cf. cuneiform Bir-Dadda), reflecting Mesopotamian theophoric naming. Bildad's speeches champion strict retributive theology, insisting the righteous are never forsaken. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bildad, and-Bildad | es: Bildad, y-Bildad | fr: Bildad, et-Bildad | de: Bildad, und-Bildad Job 2:11; Job 8:1; Job 18:1; Job 25:1; Job 42:9

בָּלָה H1086 V-Qal-Imperf-3mp (16×)
To wear out, decay, or waste away; in the Piel, to consume or to spend/enjoy fully.
Balah begins with the image of fabric fraying and falling apart. Moses twice reminds Israel that their garments did not 'wear out' during forty years of wilderness wandering (Deut 8:4; 29:5), and the Gibeonites display worn-out clothes as deceptive proof of a long journey (Josh 9:13). From threadbare cloth the word expands to cosmic scale: the heavens will 'wear out like a garment' (Ps 102:26; Isa 51:6). The Piel intensifies the action – God 'wastes' flesh and skin (Lam 3:4) – but then takes a surprising positive turn in Job 21:13 and Isaiah 65:22, where the wicked or the blessed 'spend' their days fully, enjoying them to the end.

1. wear out, become old (Qal) (11×) To wear out or decay intransitively – said of garments, sandals, the human body, and even the cosmos wasting away over time. Deuteronomy's wilderness promise that clothes and sandals did not balah (Deut 8:4; 29:5; Neh 9:21) gives the word its most iconic setting. Isaiah and the Psalms extend it cosmically: the heavens will wear out 'like a garment' (Ps 102:26; Isa 51:6). Spanish 'se-desgastaron' and 'se-consume' mirror the intransitive decay. Eleven occurrences make this the primary sense. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: I-am-worn-out, are-worn-out, wasted-away | es: haberme-marchitado, se-consume, se-desgastaron | fr: Je-suis-worn-dehors, [יבלו], [תבלה] | de: [יבלה], [יבלו], [תבלה] Gen 18:12; Deut 8:4; Deut 29:5; Josh 9:13

2. consume, wear out (Piel causative) (3×) To consume, waste, or wear out transitively – the Piel causative, where an agent inflicts decay on another. God wastes Jeremiah's flesh and skin (Lam 3:4); the wicked 'wear out' God's people (1 Chr 17:9); the body's form is consumed in Sheol (Ps 49:14). Spanish 'ha-consumido' and 'para-consumir' capture the active destruction. Three occurrences carry this intensified force. OLD AGE
en: He-wasted, to-decay, to-wear-them-out | es: Ha-consumido, destruirlo, para-consumir | fr: [בלה], [לבלתו], à-s'user | de: [לבלתו], in-ihr, zu-decay 1Chr 17:9; Ps 49:14; Lam 3:4

3. spend, enjoy (Piel) (2×) To spend or enjoy fully – a striking semantic development from 'consuming' to 'making full use of' with a positive coloring. The wicked 'spend their days in prosperity' (Job 21:13), and in the new creation God's chosen ones 'shall enjoy the work of their hands' (Isa 65:22). Spanish 'disfrutaran' (they shall enjoy) stands in vivid contrast to the decay senses, revealing how completely the word's valence can invert. Two occurrences. DELIGHT PLEASURE
en: [they-wear-out], shall-enjoy | es: Pasan, disfrutarán | fr: [יבלו] | de: [[יבלו]], [יבלו] Job 21:13; Isa 65:22

בָּלֶה H1087 Adj-fp (5×)
Worn out, old, decayed; used of garments, sacks, wineskins, sandals, and figuratively of a woman past her prime.
This adjective describes something that has been used to the point of deterioration. In Joshua 9:4-5 the Gibeonites deliberately bring worn-out sacks, wineskins, sandals, and garments to deceive Israel into thinking they have traveled a great distance. In Ezekiel 23:43 it is applied figuratively to a woman worn out by adultery. Spanish captures the range well with 'viejas/viejos' (old) and 'desgastada' (worn down), while English varies between 'worn-out' and the more interpretive 'old,' reflecting the physical-to-figurative spectrum of the word.

(5×) Physically worn out, tattered, or decayed from prolonged use. Applied to material objects in the Gibeonite deception narrative: sacks, wineskins, sandals, and garments deliberately chosen to appear old and travel-worn (Josh 9:4-5). Also used figuratively of a woman past her prime or exhausted by immoral living (Ezek 23:43; cf. Sarah's use of the related verb in Gen 18:12). The Spanish 'desgastada' (worn down) nicely captures the sense of gradual deterioration. GOING OUT AND FORTH
en: to-the-worn-out, worn-out | es: a-la-desgastada-por, viejas, viejos | fr: usé, worn-dehors | de: [לבלה], worn-heraus Josh 9:4; Josh 9:5; Ezek 23:43

בָּלָה H1088 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Balah (place name: town in the territory of Simeon, possibly same as Baalah)
This geographical name designates a town allotted to the tribe of Simeon in Joshua 19:3. It may be identical to Baalah (Joshua 15:29) and Bilhah (1 Chronicles 4:29), representing variant spellings or forms of the same settlement. The site's exact location remains uncertain, somewhere in the southern Negev region.

(1×) Denotes a Simeonite town in Joshua 19:3. The conjunction 'and Balah' (English, German) and 'y Bala' (Spanish) simply links this place name in the territorial boundary list, with minor spelling variations across manuscripts reflecting phonetic equivalence. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Balah | es: y-Bala | fr: et-Balah | de: und-Balah Josh 19:3

בָּלַהּ H1089 Conj-w | V-Piel-Prtcpl-mp (1×)

to trouble, disturb, frighten (Piel participle: those troubling them in building)

This verb means to trouble, disturb, or intimidate, appearing in Ezra 4:4 as a Piel participle describing local adversaries who 'were troubling' the Jewish returnees during temple reconstruction. The Ketiv (written) form uses this root, while the Qere (read) substitutes the more common bahal. Both roots convey fear and disruption.

(1×) Describes active intimidation and harassment in Ezra 4:4, where opponents 'troubled them in building' the temple. The Spanish 'aterrorizándolos' (terrorizing them) captures the sustained campaign of psychological warfare and obstruction aimed at halting the reconstruction project. PROPHETS AND PROPHECY

en: [ketiv] | es: [y-aterrorizándolos] | fr: [ומבלהים] | de: [[ומבלהים]] Ezra 4:4

בִּלְהָה H1090a N-proper-fs (10×)

Bilhah — proper name: Rachel's handmaid given to Jacob, mother of Dan and Naphtali

Bilhah (בִּלְהָה) is a personal name identifying Rachel's handmaid who was given to Jacob as a surrogate wife when Rachel proved barren. Through Bilhah, Jacob fathered Dan and Naphtali, two of Israel's twelve tribes (Gen 30:3-8). She first appears when Laban gives her to Rachel at marriage (Gen 29:29) and re-emerges in the disturbing notice that Reuben lay with her, an act that cost him his firstborn's birthright (Gen 35:22; 49:4; 1 Chr 5:1). A separate Bilhah appears as a Simeonite town (1 Chr 4:29). The etymology may connect to the root b-l-h, suggesting 'timidity' or 'trembling,' though this remains uncertain.

Bilhah (10×) Rachel's personal handmaid (שִׁפְחָה), given to Jacob as a concubine-wife when Rachel was unable to conceive. Mother of Dan and Naphtali (Gen 30:3-8). Laban gave Bilhah to Rachel at marriage (Gen 29:29). The narrative of Reuben's violation of Bilhah (Gen 35:22) reverberates through Jacob's deathbed oracle (Gen 49:4) and the Chronicler's genealogy (1 Chr 5:1). Spanish and English both transliterate as 'Bilha/Bilhah.' A Simeonite town shares the name (1 Chr 4:29). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bilhah | es: Bilha, Bilhah, Bilhá | fr: Bilha, [בלהה] | de: Bilha, Bilhas, [בלהה] Gen 29:29; Gen 30:3; Gen 30:4; Gen 30:5; Gen 30:7

בִּלְהָה H1090b Conj-w (1×)

Bilhah (place name: town in Simeon, likely same as Baalah and Balah)

This place name appears in 1 Chronicles 4:29 as a Simeonite settlement, probably identical to Baalah (Joshua 15:29) and Balah (Joshua 19:3), representing orthographic variants of the same town. The uncertainty about the site's identification reflects the textual variations and the challenge of locating small settlements in the Negev after centuries of shifting populations.

(1×) Geographic designation in 1 Chronicles 4:29 for a Simeonite town. The prepositional phrase 'and in Bilhah' marks this as one location in a series of settlements, with the variant spelling reflecting manuscript traditions or dialectal differences in pronouncing the town's name. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-Bilhah | es: Y-en-Bilha | fr: [ובבלהה] | de: [ובבלהה] 1Chr 4:29

בַּלָּהָה H1091 N-fpc (10×)

Terror, sudden calamity — extreme dread or overwhelming destruction befalling the wicked or the afflicted

The feminine noun בַּלָּהָה (ballahah) expresses extreme dread, sudden destruction, or overwhelming calamity. Its ten occurrences cluster in wisdom and prophetic literature — predominantly Job, with additional appearances in the Psalms and Ezekiel. In Job 18:11-14, terrors drive the wicked on every side and usher him to the 'king of terrors' (death personified). Job 24:17 identifies deep darkness with terrors. Ezekiel deploys the word for the annihilation awaiting Tyre and Sidon (Ezek 26:21; 27:36; 28:19). Multilingual renderings converge: Spanish terrores/espantos, Arabic ahwal/ru'b, Korean gongpo, Swahili vitisho, and Hindi atank all express visceral dread.

terror, sudden calamity (10×) Extreme dread, sudden calamity, or overwhelming terror — used of the horrors that overtake the wicked (Job 18:11, 14; 24:17; 27:20), the existential anguish of the sufferer (Ps 73:19), and the total annihilation of proud cities in prophetic judgment (Ezek 26:21; 27:36; 28:19). The 'king of terrors' in Job 18:14 is a striking personification of death. Spanish 'terrores/espantos,' Arabic أهوال (ahwal), and Korean 공포 (gongpo) all capture the visceral force of sudden, overwhelming catastrophe. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: terror, terrors, terrors-of | es: Espantos, espantos, los-terrores-de | fr: [בלהה], [בלהות], dans-effroi | de: Schrecken, [בלהה], [בלהות] Job 18:11; Job 18:14; Job 24:17; Job 27:20; Job 30:15

בִּלְהָן H1092 N-proper-ms (4×)

Bilhan; a personal name borne by a descendant of Esau and a Benjamite clan leader.

A proper name appearing in genealogical lists. The first Bilhan is a Horite descendant of Esau listed among the clan chiefs of Seir in Genesis 36:27 and 1 Chronicles 1:42, placing him within Edom's pre-Israelite population. The second Bilhan is a son of Jediael in the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr 7:10), a military leader whose family mustered thousands of warriors. The name is consistently transliterated across languages — English, Spanish, French, and German all render it 'Bilhan' — suggesting no competing etymological traditions.

(4×) A personal name meaning possibly 'modest' or 'weak,' borne by two distinct individuals. The Horite Bilhan (Gen 36:27; 1 Chr 1:42) appears among Seir's indigenous clans absorbed into Edom. The Benjamite Bilhan (1 Chr 7:10) heads a family that produced 17,200 fighting men. All major translation traditions — Spanish 'Bilhán,' French 'Bilhan,' German 'Bilhan' — simply transliterate the name, confirming it functions as an opaque proper noun with no living semantic content in the target languages. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bilhan | es: Bilhan, Bilhán | fr: Bilhan | de: Bilhan, [בלהן] Gen 36:27; 1Chr 1:42; 1Chr 7:10

בְּלוֹ H1093 N-ms (3×)

tribute, tax (Aramaic/Persian loanword); imperial levy imposed on provinces

An Aramaic or Persian loanword for tribute or tax, appearing exclusively in Ezra's accounts of Persian administration. The term occurs in formulaic lists of imperial levies: 'tribute, custom, and toll' (Ezra 4:13, 20; 7:24). Opponents of the Jerusalem rebuilding warn that if the city is restored, it will stop paying these taxes to the king. Artaxerxes' decree exempts temple personnel from 'tribute, custom, or toll.' The word reflects the bureaucratic vocabulary of Persian tax collection in the western provinces.

(3×) An imperial tax or tribute in the Persian system. Appears in the phrase 'mindah, belo, and halak' (tribute, tax, and toll) three times in Ezra (4:13, 20; 7:24). Provincial officials warn that a rebuilt Jerusalem will refuse to pay 'tribute' (Ezra 4:13), and Artaxerxes confirms Jerusalem's historical tax obligations (Ezra 4:20) but exempts temple workers (Ezra 7:24). The term is technical administrative vocabulary. TRIBUTE AND TAX

en: tax, toll | es: impuesto | fr: taxe | de: in-ihm Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:20; Ezra 7:24

בְּלוֹא H1094 Conj-w / N-mpc (3×)

worn-out rags, tattered clothes; old garments used for cushioning or binding

Worn-out clothing or rags, mentioned only in Jeremiah's account of rescuing the prophet from a cistern. Ebed-melech gathers 'worn-out clothes and rags' from the palace storehouse and lowers them to Jeremiah to put under his armpits as padding before being pulled up by ropes (Jeremiah 38:11-12). The term denotes fabric too deteriorated for regular use but still useful for padding or binding. The repetition ('worn-out' appears three times) emphasizes the makeshift compassion shown to the imprisoned prophet.

(3×) Tattered garments or rags used as padding. Ebed-melech takes 'worn-out clothes' (beloe) from the treasury and lowers them to Jeremiah in the cistern, instructing him to 'put these worn-out rags under your armpits' to prevent the ropes from cutting him (Jeremiah 38:11-12). The specific mention of old fabric underscores both the indignity of Jeremiah's situation and the Ethiopian's resourceful kindness. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-worn-out, worn-out, worn-out-of | es: [los-harapos], los-harapos, ropa-vieja | fr: [בלואי], [בלוי], [ובלוי] | de: [בלואי], [בלוי], [ובלוי] Jer 38:11; Jer 38:12

בֶּלְטְשַׁאצַּר H1095 N-proper-ms (2×)

Belteshazzar, Babylonian name given to Daniel meaning 'protect his life' or possibly 'may Bel protect the king'

When Daniel entered the service of Nebuchadnezzar's court, he received this Babylonian name to mark his new identity in exile. The name likely derives from 'balāṭsu-uṣur,' meaning 'protect his life,' though some scholars suggest it may connect to 'may Bel protect the king.' Daniel himself later notes a connection to the god Bel in his narrative. This renaming was part of the cultural assimilation program for promising young captives, though Daniel maintained his Hebrew identity throughout his service.

(2×) The Babylonian court name assigned to the Hebrew prophet Daniel (Daniel 1:7; 10:1). Multilingual translations preserve this as a transliteration rather than translating its meaning, recognizing it as a fixed proper name. The slight variation in spelling between the two occurrences (בֶּלְטְשַׁאצַּר vs. בֶּלְטְאשַׁצַּר) reflects normal Hebrew manuscript variation without changing the referent. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Belteshatztzar | es: Belteshatstsar, Beltsasar | fr: Beltschatsar | de: Belsazar Dan 1:7; Dan 10:1

בֶּלְטְשַׁאצַּר H1096 N-proper-ms (8×)

Belteshazzar — the Babylonian court name given to the prophet Daniel.

The Babylonian name assigned to Daniel by Nebuchadnezzar's chief official (Dan 1:7), used throughout the Aramaic sections of Daniel when the king or courtiers address him. The name likely derives from Akkadian Balat-su-usur ('protect his life') and served to integrate Daniel into Babylonian court culture. Spanish Beltsasar and German Belsazar reflect the Septuagint's Baltasar tradition, while English Belteshazzar preserves a closer approximation to the Aramaic form. All eight occurrences appear in Daniel 2–5, always in contexts of royal audience and dream interpretation.

(8×) The Babylonian throne name given to the Hebrew prophet Daniel during his service in Nebuchadnezzar's court. It appears in Daniel 2:26; 4:8–9, 18–19; 5:12 — always in royal speech or official address. The name (from Akkadian Balat-su-usur, 'protect his life') signals Daniel's dual identity as both a faithful Israelite and a recognized Babylonian sage. German Belsazar and Spanish Beltsasar follow the Greek Baltasar form; French Beltschatsar stays closer to the Aramaic. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Belteshatztzar | es: Belteshatstsar, Beltsasar | fr: Beltschatsar | de: Belsazar Dan 2:26; Dan 4:8; Dan 4:9; Dan 4:18; Dan 4:19

בְּלִי H1097 Prep / Adv (58×)

Without, not, for lack of; rarely as substantive: nothingness, destruction

A poetic particle of negation and privation, used chiefly in elevated Hebrew to mean 'without' or 'for lack of.' It negates verbs, adjectives, and participles, and frequently combines with prefixed prepositions (מִבְּלִי, לִבְלִי) to express cause or consequence of absence. In one striking instance (Isa 38:17), it functions as a noun in the phrase שַׁחַת בְּלִי 'pit of nothingness,' where Hezekiah reflects on deliverance from Sheol. The Spanish and French translations consistently render privative senses with 'sin' and 'sans,' confirming the core meaning of absence or lack.

1. without, not, for lack of (57×) The dominant usage across 57 occurrences, functioning as a preposition or adverb meaning 'without,' 'not,' or 'for lack of.' In Gen 31:20 it negates a finite verb in prose (בְּלִי הַגִּיד 'without telling'), while in Job it frequently governs nouns to express privation (Job 8:11 בְּלִי־מַיִם 'without water'). Multilingual glosses converge on 'without/sin/sans/ohne,' underscoring the universal privative reading. Compounds with מִן and לְ intensify causal force, as in Deut 28:55. WITHOUT AND APART FROM

en: for-lack-of, for-lack-of-, without | es: para-no-, por-falta-de-, sin | fr: comme-sans, dans-sans, de-sans | de: in-mir, ohne Gen 31:20; Exod 14:11; Deut 4:42; Deut 19:4; Deut 28:55

2. nothingness, destruction (1×) A rare substantival use (1x) in Isa 38:17, where בְּלִי carries concrete force as 'nothingness' or 'destruction' in the phrase שַׁחַת בְּלִי 'pit of annihilation.' Spanish 'de-nada' captures the nihilistic sense. This usage draws on the etymological root meaning 'wearing out' (cf. Arabic بلى), treating the destination of Sheol not as mere absence but as active dissolution. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: of-destruction | es: de-nada | fr: sans | de: ohne Isa 38:17

בְּלִיל H1098 N-msc / 3ms (3×)

fodder, mixed feed for livestock; grain and hay blended for animals

Fodder or mixed animal feed, a blend of grain and forage. Job uses the term twice in rhetorical questions: 'Does the wild donkey bray over his grass? Or does the ox low over his fodder?' (Job 6:5)—implying that complaint without cause is unnatural. Later, 'they gather their fodder in the field' (Job 24:6), describing the desperate poor scavenging for animal feed. Isaiah prophesies abundance: oxen and donkeys will eat 'salted fodder' (Isaiah 30:24), suggesting high-quality mixed feed. The Aramaic cognate and Arabic parallels confirm the meaning as moist, mixed provender.

(3×) Mixed feed for cattle and donkeys, combining grain and forage. Job asks whether animals complain when they have fodder (Job 6:5) and describes the poor harvesting 'belil' from fields (Job 24:6). Isaiah envisions a time when working animals will eat 'seasoned fodder' (Isaiah 30:24), indicating agricultural prosperity. The term implies prepared, mixed feed rather than simple grazing. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12563 WITH 3 SENSES

en: fodder, his-fodder, its-fodder | es: forraje, su-forraje | fr: [בליל], son-בלילו-lui | de: [בליל], [בלילו] Job 6:5; Job 24:6; Isa 30:24

בְּלִימָה H1099 Adv (2×)

nothingness, without anything; compound of 'not' + 'what' denoting absolute emptiness or void

This rare term combines the negative particle with the interrogative 'what' to create a vivid expression of absolute nothingness. Job uses it in his magnificent description of God's creative power, declaring that the earth hangs upon 'nothing at all.' The compound construction intensifies the concept beyond simple negation, evoking the philosophical puzzle of the void itself—not merely absence, but the question of what absence even means.

(2×) An emphatic expression of complete emptiness or void, appearing in Job 26:7 where God is said to hang the earth upon 'nothingness.' The compound construction (בְּלִי + מָה, literally 'not-what') creates a stronger negation than either element alone. Some translations render it 'without anything' or simply leave the Hebrew components visible, acknowledging the difficulty of capturing this philosophical concept of absolute void. WITHOUT AND APART

FROM
en: anything, without- | es: nada, sin- | fr: בלי ,מה | de: in-mir, was Job 26:7

בְּלִיַּעַל H1100 N-ms (27×)

worthlessness, wickedness — an abstract noun for moral baseness, often compounded as 'sons of Belial'

Beliyya'al is a compound of beli ('without') and ya'al ('profit, worth'), yielding 'worthlessness.' Its 27 occurrences concentrate in the Deuteronomistic History, where 'sons of Belial' functions as a stock epithet for depraved persons: the corrupt sons of Eli (1 Sam 2:12), scoundrels who scorned Saul (1 Sam 10:27), Nabal whose nature matched the term (1 Sam 25:17, 25), and false witnesses suborned against Naboth (1 Kgs 21:10, 13). In the Psalms the word shifts toward cosmic menace: 'torrents of Belial' threaten to overwhelm (Ps 18:4; 2 Sam 22:5) — language that later tradition personified into a demonic figure. Nahum warns that 'one who plots Belial' shall not rise again (Nah 1:11). Spanish and French retain 'Belial' as a quasi-proper noun, while German 'Belial' similarly oscillates between abstract quality and personal evil.

worthlessness, wickedness (Belial) (27×) Moral worthlessness or wickedness, characterizing base persons ('sons of Belial,' Deut 13:13; Judg 19:22; 1 Sam 2:12; 1 Kgs 21:10, 13) and wicked deeds ('a word/thing of Belial,' Ps 41:8; 101:3; Deut 15:9). Also appears in near-mythological imagery as 'torrents of Belial' threatening the psalmist with death (2 Sam 22:5; Ps 18:4). The construct phrase served as moral branding in covenant and judicial contexts. Later tradition personified it as a name for the arch-adversary (cf. 2 Cor 6:15). WORTHLESSNESS AND VANITY
en: Belial, Beliyaal, destruction | es: Belial, de-Belial, destrucción | fr: Belial, Beliyaal, dans-vaurien | de: Belial, Beliyaal, destruction Deut 13:13; Deut 15:9; Judg 19:22; Judg 20:13; 1Sam 1:16

בָּלַל H1101a V-Qal-Perf-3ms (42×)

To mix or mingle; predominantly a cultic term for grain offerings mixed with oil, but also to confuse language and to mingle among nations.

Bālal is best known from two vivid biblical scenes: the priestly kitchen, where flour is mixed with oil for sacrifice, and the Tower of Babel, where God confuses human speech. The vast majority of its occurrences (38 of 42) use the Qal passive participle bĕlûlāh to describe grain offerings 'mixed with oil' — a technical sacrificial formula running through Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers. The Arabic cognate balla ('to moisten') illuminates the sole occurrence in Ps 92:10, where the psalmist says 'I am anointed with fresh oil,' and Hosea's metaphor of Ephraim 'mixing himself' among the nations (Hos 7:8) takes the Hitpael reflexive to express cultural assimilation.

1. to mix, mingle (with oil) (38×) The dominant cultic-technical sense: grain offerings mixed or mingled with oil. Nearly all occurrences (38x) use the Qal passive participle bĕlûlāh in the Priestly source's sacrificial prescriptions — 'fine flour mixed with oil' (Lev 2:4-5; Num 7:13ff.). Spanish mezclada, French mélangé, and German gemischt all converge on straightforward physical mixing. This formulaic usage runs from Exod 29:2 through Numbers' dedicatory offerings. MIXING WITH OIL
en: mixed | es: mezclada, mezcladas | fr: mélangé | de: gemischt, mischte Exod 29:2; Exod 29:40; Lev 2:4; Lev 2:5; Lev 7:10

2. to confuse, confound (language/speech) (2×) To confuse or confound language — the famous Babel etymology. In Gen 11:7 God says 'let us confuse their language' (cohortative nāvĕlāh), and Gen 11:9 derives the name Babel from this act of bālal. Spanish confundió, French confondit, and German verwirrte all capture the cognitive disruption. Only two occurrences carry this sense, but they gave the word its lasting fame. MIXING WITH OIL
en: and-let-us-confuse, confused | es: confundió, y-confundamos | fr: confondit, et-que-nous-confondre | de: und-verwirren, verwirrte Gen 11:7; Gen 11:9

3. to be anointed, moistened (with oil) (1×) To be anointed or moistened with oil, a rare sense attested only in Ps 92:10 (Heb. 92:11): 'I am anointed (ballōtî) with fresh oil.' This connects to the Arabic cognate balla 'to moisten' and may represent the oldest layer of the root's meaning — physical wetting rather than thorough mixing. Spanish he-sido-ungido ('I have been anointed') and English 'I-am-anointed' both highlight the anointing nuance distinct from cultic mixing. ANOINTING AND SMEARING
en: I-am-anointed | es: he-sido-ungido | fr: de-peur-que | de: ich-bin-gesalbt Ps 92:10

4. to mix oneself (among nations) (1×) Reflexive mixing among peoples, attested only in the Hitpael in Hos 7:8: 'Ephraim mixes himself (yitbôlāl) among the nations.' The Hitpael stem gives this a deliberate, self-initiated quality — not passive assimilation but willing cultural mingling. Spanish se-mezcla ('he mixes himself') and French mélanger capture the reflexive force. Hosea uses this metaphorically to condemn Israel's loss of distinctiveness. MIXED MULTITUDE en: mixes-himself | es: se-mezcla | fr: mélanger | de: [יתבולל] Hos 7:8

בָּלַל H1101b Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (2×)

to give fodder or provender to animals; denominative verb from the noun for mixed feed

This specialized agricultural term describes the action of providing mixed feed to livestock, particularly donkeys. The verb derives from a noun referring to mixed grain and straw used as animal fodder. In the single narrative where it appears, a host provides this care for his guests' animals as part of ancient Near Eastern hospitality—a detail showing the thoroughness of proper welcome.

(2×) To provide mixed grain fodder to animals, specifically donkeys in Judges 19:21. The bracketed portions in English, Spanish, French, and German translations indicate translators' efforts to convey both the action and object together ('gave fodder'), since the Hebrew verb itself implies the specific type of feed being provided. This denominative verb shows how agricultural vocabulary developed from concrete nouns into action words. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 12563 WITH 3 SENSES en: [and-gave-fodder], and-gave-fodder | es: dio-forraje, y-dio-forraje | fr: [et-donna-fodder], et-donna-fodder | de: [und-gab-fodder], und-gab-fodder Judg 19:21

בֶּלֶם H1102 Prep-l / V-Qal-Inf (1×)

to curb, hold in, restrain (used of controlling animals with bit and bridle)

This verb means to curb or restrain, appearing as an infinitive in Psalm 32:9 in the context of controlling animals with bit and bridle. The imagery warns against being like a stubborn horse or mule that requires forceful restraint. The Aramaic cognates confirm the semantic range of holding back or checking unruly behavior.

(1×) Refers to the restraining action of bit and bridle in Psalm 32:9. The English 'to restrain' and Spanish 'para sujetar' (to subject/control) both capture the coercive control needed for animals lacking understanding, serving as a negative example for how humans should respond to God's guidance. RESTRAINT AND CONTROL en: to-restrain | es: para-sujetar | fr: à-retenir | de: zu-restrain Ps 32:9

בָּלַס H1103 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-msc (1×)

to gather figs, tend sycamore trees (technical term for nipping sycamore fruit to ripen it)

This denominative verb describes the specialized agricultural practice of tending sycamore fig trees, specifically the technique of nipping or piercing the fruit to accelerate ripening and improve flavor. Amos 7:14 uses the participle 'dresser of sycamores' to describe his humble occupation before his prophetic calling. The Greek and Latin versions confirm this technical agricultural sense.

(1×) Denotes the specialized work of tending sycamore figs in Amos 7:14. The English 'dresser of' and Spanish 'cultivador de' (cultivator of) describe Amos's occupation as one who performed the technical task of nipping sycamore fruit, emphasizing his humble, non-professional origins as a prophet. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE en: and-a-dresser-of- | es: y-cultivador-de | fr: et-faire-des-figues | de: [ובולס]

Amos 7:14

בָּלַע H1104 Conj-w / V-Qal-ConsecImperf-3ms (50×)

To swallow, gulp down; to devour, engulf; to destroy; passive: to be swallowed up; also: to confuse, confound

A verb of sudden, total consumption, bala conveys the terrifying quickness of being swallowed whole. Pharaoh's magicians watched their serpents 'swallowed' by Aaron's rod (Exod 7:12), the earth 'swallowed' Korah and his rebels (Num 16:30-32), and Pharaoh's chariots were 'swallowed' by the sea (Exod 15:12). The Piel intensifies this into forceful devouring — enemies 'swallow up' Israel (Jer 51:34), and death itself 'will be swallowed up forever' (Isa 25:8), a passage Paul quotes in triumph (1 Cor 15:54). A surprising semantic branch leads to 'confuse' or 'confound' (Ps 55:9; Isa 3:12), as if swallowing someone's speech or counsel leaves them bewildered. The Arabic balaa, Ethiopic balaa ('to eat'), and Assyrian belu (Pi. 'to destroy') confirm the ancient Semitic core of sudden, overwhelming ingestion.

1. swallow (Qal physical) (21×) The basic Qal active sense of physical swallowing or engulfing (21 occurrences) — the foundational meaning. Aaron's rod 'swallowed' the magicians' rods (Exod 7:12), the earth 'swallowed' Korah's company (Num 16:30, 32; Deut 11:6), and Pharaoh's thin cows 'swallowed' the fat ones in the dream (Gen 41:7, 24). The sea 'swallowed' Egypt at the Exodus (Exod 15:12). Arabic balaa, Korean samkida, and Swahili -meza all map uniformly to this concrete sense. The emphasis is on suddenness and totality — what is swallowed is gone. SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING en: (he-swallowed-me), I-swallow, [ketiv:he-swallowed-me] | es: Y-tragaron, [kethiv], lo-tragará; | fr: dans-engloutir, engloutir, engloutir-moi | de: sie-würde-haben-verschlungen-uns, und-swallows, und-verschlangen Gen 41:7; Gen 41:24; Exod 7:12; Exod 15:12; Num 16:30

2. devour/swallow up (Piel intensive) (15×) The Piel intensive stem expressing forceful devouring or swallowing up (15 occurrences), where the action is more deliberate and overwhelming than the basic Qal. Nebuchadnezzar 'has swallowed me up like a dragon' (Jer 51:34), enemies 'swallow up' Israel (Ps 124:3), and fire 'devours' the wicked (Ps 21:9). The Piel retains the swallowing imagery but intensifies the force. Arabic ibtala'a (Form VIII intensive) and Korean samkida still apply, though German shifts from verschlingen to verschlang to mark the heightened consumption. Numbers 4:20 warns that the Kohathites must not enter to look 'even for a moment' lest they be 'swallowed up.' SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING en: Has-swallowed, He-has-swallowed, I-swallow-up | es: Ha-devorado, como-envolver, cuando-traga | fr: comme-étant-engloutit, dans-engloutir, engloutir | de: ich-swallow-hinauf, verschlang, verschlingen Num 4:20; 2Sam 20:19; 2Sam 20:20; Job 8:18; Ps 21:9

3. destroy/annihilate (Piel metaphorical) (5×) A fully metaphorical Piel sense meaning to destroy or annihilate (5 occurrences), where the swallowing image has faded and pure destruction remains. Job 2:3 has God telling Satan 'you incited me against him to destroy him without cause.' Isaiah 25:7-8 promises God 'will swallow up the covering over all peoples' and 'will swallow up death forever' — destruction deployed as salvation. Arabic yuzilu ('to remove') and Korean pagoeham ('destruction') confirm the shift from ingestion to annihilation. Lamentations 2:8 uses this sense for God 'destroying' Zion's ramparts. SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING en: And-He-shall-destroy, He-shall-swallow-up, and-You-swallow-me | es: Destruirá, Y-destruirá, de-destruir | fr: engloutir, et-engloutir, et-engloutir-moi | de: und-verschlang, und-verschlingen, verschlang Job 2:3; Job 10:8; Isa 25:7; Isa 25:8; Lam 2:8

4. be swallowed up (Nifal/Pual passive) (5×) Passive stems — Nifal and Pual (5 occurrences) — expressing the state of being swallowed up, consumed, or overwhelmed. David's army is warned not to stay at the fords 'lest the king be swallowed up' (2 Sam 17:16), Israel has been 'swallowed up among the nations' (Hos 8:8), and the drunkard prophets are 'swallowed up by wine' (Isa 28:7). Arabic passive forms ubtuli'a and yubla'a, Korean samkyeojida (passive of swallow), and Swahili -mezwa all preserve the passive construction. Job 37:20 asks whether God should be told 'that a man would be swallowed up.' SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING
en: Is-swallowed-up, are-swallowed-up, be-swallowed-up | es: confundidos, devorado, fueron-confundidos | fr: engloutir, être-swallowed-en-haut | de: sein-swallowed-hinauf, verschlang, verschlingen 2Sam 17:16; Job 37:20; Isa 9:16; Isa 28:7; Hos 8:8

5. confuse/confound (Piel) (3×) A distinct Piel sense of confusing, confounding, or leading astray (3 occurrences) — a remarkable semantic development where swallowing up someone's speech or judgment produces bewilderment. David prays 'confuse their tongues' (Ps 55:9), Isaiah charges that Israel's leaders 'confuse' the people (Isa 3:12), and Egypt's counsel 'will be confounded' (Isa 19:3). Spanish confundir replacing the usual tragar/devorar, and Swahili -potosha ('to mislead') replacing -meza, confirm this as a genuinely separate sense rather than a metaphorical extension of devouring. SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING en: I-will-confuse, confuse, your-paths | es: confunden, confundiré, devora | fr: dans-engloutir, engloutir | de: confuse, verschlingen Ps 55:9; Isa 3:12; Isa 19:3

6. (1×) A single Hitpael reflexive occurrence (Ps 107:27) describing sailors who 'stagger' or 'are engulfed' in a storm — 'all their wisdom was swallowed up,' meaning their seamanship was overwhelmed and rendered useless. Spanish se confundia confirms the reflexive-middle voice, and the sense bridges the swallowing and confounding meanings: the storm 'swallows up' their skill, leaving them reeling. The Hitpael morphology adds self-involvement absent from the purely passive Nifal/Pual forms. SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING en: was-swallowed-up | es: se-confundía | fr: engloutir | de: Krieg-verschlungen-hinauf Ps 107:27

בֶּלַע H1105 N-msc / 3ms (2×)

swallowing, devouring; thing swallowed; used of both destructive words and actual consumption

This noun captures both the act of swallowing and what has been swallowed, ranging from metaphorical to literal usage. The Psalmist employs it figuratively for 'devouring words'—speech that consumes and destroys like a deceitful tongue. Jeremiah uses it literally in God's judgment against Babylon, promising to make Bel 'spit out what he has swallowed,' a vivid image of forced restitution that reverses consumption.

(2×) The noun denoting swallowing or what has been swallowed, appearing in Psalm 52:4 (metaphorically of destructive words) and Jeremiah 51:44 (literally of Bel disgorging what he consumed). The Hebrew allows both meanings from a single form: the act itself and the object of the act. Some translations bracket the suffixed form (בִּלְעוֹ, 'what he swallowed') to indicate this is a technical term for the consumed item being retrieved. SWALLOWING AND DEVOURING en: devouring, what-he-swallowed | es: destrucción, lo-que-ha-tragado | fr: [בלעו], dans-engloutissement | de: [בלעו], devouring Ps 52:4; Jer 51:44

בֶּלַע H1106a N-proper-ms (12×)

Bela – a proper name borne by an early king of Edom and a son of Benjamin

Bela (bela') is a Hebrew proper name meaning 'destruction' or 'swallowing,' from the root bala' ('to swallow'). It is borne by at least two distinct figures in the Old Testament. The first is Bela son of Beor, the earliest named king of Edom who reigned in the city of Dinhabah before any king ruled in Israel (Gen 36:32-33; 1 Chr 1:43-44). The second is Bela son of Benjamin, a grandson of Jacob listed among those who went down to Egypt (Gen 46:21; Num 26:38, 40; 1 Chr 7:6-7; 8:1, 3). The city Bela is also identified with Zoar in Genesis 14:2, 8. Every target language retains the name with minimal phonological adjustment.

Bela (12×) A proper name borne by (a) Bela son of Beor, king of Edom who reigned in Dinhabah (Gen 36:32; 1 Chr 1:43), and (b) Bela son of Benjamin (Gen 46:21; Num 26:38; 1 Chr 7:6; 8:1). Also the early name of Zoar (Gen 14:2). Spanish, French, and German all transliterate as Bela with no semantic subdivision. PROPER NAMES

(PERSONAL)
en: Bela, and-Bela, to-Bela | es: Bela, Y-Bela, de-Bela | fr: Bela, Béla, et-Béla | de: Bela, und-Bela, zu-Bela Gen 36:32; Gen 36:33; Gen 46:21; Num 26:38; Num 26:40

בָּלַע H1106b N-proper-fs (2×)

Bela, alternate name for the city of Zoar in the Dead Sea region
Bela served as an earlier designation for the city that became known as Zoar, one of the five cities of the plain in the Abraham narratives. The name appears in the account of the battle of the kings in Genesis 14, identifying one of the city-states that rebelled against Chedorlaomer. Later biblical references consistently use Zoar, suggesting Bela fell out of use or represented a different phase in the city's history.

(2×) A place name identifying a city in the Jordan plain, equated with Zoar by BDB (Genesis 14:2, 8). The uniform transliteration across languages reflects its function as a geographical designator. The brief dual occurrence in Genesis 14 suggests this may have been the city's original name before it became known as Zoar, the city Lot fled to when Sodom was destroyed. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Bela | es: Bela | fr: Bela | de: von-Bela Gen 14:2; Gen 14:8

בִּלְעֲדֵי H1107 Conj-w (17×)

Apart from, besides, without, except — a prepositional compound expressing exclusion or absence
A compound preposition built from bal ('not') and 'ad/adê ('unto'), yielding the sense 'not unto' and hence 'apart from, besides, without.' It frequently takes pronominal suffixes: bil'adai ('apart from me,' Isa 45:6), bal'adekha ('without you,' Gen 41:44). In Genesis 14:24, Abraham uses it as a deprecatory particle — 'not for me!' — declining any personal share in the spoils of war. The Syriac cognate belad carries the same meaning ('without, apart from'), confirming the compound's deep Semitic roots. The word appears in both legal-narrative and prophetic-theological contexts, often asserting divine exclusivity.

apart from / besides / without (17×) A prepositional particle expressing exclusion, separation, or absence — 'apart from, besides, without, except.' Used with suffixes to mark what is excluded or set aside: Pharaoh declares no one shall act bil'adekha ('without you,' Gen 41:44); God asserts ein bil'aday ('there is none besides me,' Isa 45:6). English renderings include 'apart from,' 'without,' and 'besides'; Spanish uses 'fuera de mí' and 'sin'; French employs 'sans' and equivalent constructions. The deprecatory use in Gen 14:24 ('not for me!') shows pragmatic extension beyond spatial exclusion. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST en: and-apart-from-Me, and-without-you, apart-from | es: Fuera-de-mí, Sin-, aparte-de | fr: [בלעדי], [המבלעדי], de-sans | de: [בלעדי], [המבלעדי], [ומבלעדי] Gen 14:24; Gen 41:16; Gen 41:44; Num 5:20; Josh 22:19

בַּלְעִי H1108 Art / N-proper-ms (1×)

the Belaite (gentilic: descendant of Bela, son of Benjamin)
This gentilic adjective with the definite article functions collectively to designate the clan descended from Bela, the firstborn son of Benjamin. Numbers 26:38 includes them in the census of Benjaminite families during the wilderness period. The standard transliteration across languages reflects the conventional pattern for forming and translating Hebrew tribal designations.

(1×) Collective designation for Bela's descendants in the Benjaminite census of Numbers 26:38. The definite article with the gentilic form ('the Belaite' in English and German) marks this as a recognized family group within Benjamin's tribal structure. PERSONAL NAMES
en: the-Belaite | es: los-belaítas | fr: le-Belaite | de: der-Belaite Num 26:38

בִּלְעָם H1109a N-proper-ms (60×)

Bil'am – Balaam, the Mesopotamian prophet-diviner hired to curse Israel but compelled to bless Bil'am (Balaam) son of Beor was a prophet or diviner from Pethor in upper Mesopotamia, summoned by Balak king of Moab to pronounce a curse upon Israel as they camped on the plains of Moab (Num 22-24). The narrative is one of the Bible's most vivid and ironic: God opens the mouth of Balaam's donkey to rebuke the seer, and then opens Balaam's own mouth to pronounce four magnificent blessings instead of curses, including the messianic oracle 'a star shall come out of Jacob' (Num 24:17). Later tradition took a darker view, blaming Balaam for counseling Moab to seduce Israel into idolatry (Num 31:16; Rev 2:14). All 60 occurrences refer to the same individual, rendered uniformly as Balaam in English, Spanish, and French, and Bileam in German.

Balaam (personal name) (60×) The proper name of the Mesopotamian prophet/diviner, son of Beor, hired by Balak of Moab to curse Israel but repeatedly compelled by God to bless them instead (Num 22-24). The Balaam cycle includes the famous talking-donkey episode (Num 22:28) and the messianic star oracle (Num 24:17). Later texts condemn him for the counsel that led Israel into idolatry at Baal-Peor (Num 31:16; cf. 2 Pet 2:15; Rev 2:14). Cross-lingual evidence – Spanish Balaam, French Balaam, German Bileam – confirms a single proper-noun referent across all 60 occurrences. BALAAM PROPHET NAME
en: Balaam | es: Balaam | fr: Balaam | de: Bileam Num 22:5; Num 22:7; Num 22:8; Num 22:9; Num 22:10

בִּלְעָם H1109b N-proper-fs (1×)

Bileam (place name: Levitical town in Manasseh, same as Ibleam)
This geographical name designates a Levitical city in the territory of Manasseh, appearing in 1 Chronicles 6:70. It is identical to Ibleam mentioned in Joshua 17:11 and other passages, with the variant spelling likely reflecting dialectal pronunciation. Modern scholarship identifies it with Khirbet Belʿame, north of modern Nablus.

(1×) Names a Levitical town in Manasseh in 1 Chronicles 6:70. The transliteration 'Bileam' represents an alternate form of 'Ibleam,' showing how the same settlement could be spelled differently in various biblical sources, a common phenomenon with place names in ancient texts. BALAAM PROPHET NAME
en: Bileam | es: Bileam | fr: [בלעם] | de: [בלעם] 1Chr 6:70

בָּלַק H1110 Conj-w / V-Qal-Prtcpl-msc / 3fs (2×)

to lay waste, devastate, make desolate; intensive form emphasizing thorough destruction
This intensive verbal form conveys complete devastation and desolation, used of divine judgment against the earth and against cities. Isaiah depicts the LORD himself as the subject, laying waste to the whole earth in cosmic judgment. Nahum employs it in a threefold accumulation of destruction words describing Nineveh's utter ruin. The Poel or intensive stem underscores not mere damage but total, thorough devastation that leaves nothing intact.

(2×) An intensive form meaning to utterly devastate or lay completely waste (Isaiah 24:1; Nahum 2:10). The verbal form appears in contexts of total destruction, with God as subject in Isaiah and as part of a triple intensification in Nahum ('empty, desolate, and devastated'). The bracketed forms in some translations indicate uncertainty about the exact parsing, as the form could be Qal or Poel participle, though the intensive meaning is clear from context. DESOLATION AND RUIN
en: and-lays-waste, and-waste | es: y-devastada, y-devastándola | fr: [ובולקה], et-Balak | de: [ובולקה], [ומבלקה] Isa 24:1; Nah 2:10

בָּלָק H1111 N-proper-ms (43×)

Balak — king of Moab who hired Balaam to curse Israel during the wilderness period

A Moabite royal name meaning 'devastator' or 'one who lays waste.' Balak son of Zippor ruled Moab when Israel camped on the plains east of the Jordan after the exodus. Alarmed by Israel's defeat of the Amorites, he summoned the diviner Balaam to pronounce a curse, only to hear blessings instead (Numbers 22-24). Later biblical writers recall his failed plot as a paradigm of God's sovereign protection of his people (Josh 24:9; Judg 11:25; Mic 6:5).

Balak (personal name) (43×) The personal name of the Moabite king who hired Balaam. All 43 occurrences cluster in Numbers 22-24 (the Balaam narrative), with retrospective mentions in Joshua 24:9, Judges 11:25, and Micah 6:5. Translations uniformly transliterate the name (Balak/Balac), confirming a single proper-noun referent with no semantic extension. BALAAM PROPHET NAME

en: Balak | es: Balac | fr: Balak | de: Balak Num 22:2; Num 22:4; Num 22:7; Num 22:10; Num 22:13

בֶּלְאשַׁצַּר H1112 N-proper-ms (1×)

Belshazzar (personal name: last Babylonian king in Daniel, son of Nabonidus)

This Babylonian royal name (Bel-shar-usur, 'Bel, protect the king') identifies the ruler whose feast was interrupted by the handwriting on the wall in Daniel 5. While Daniel presents him as Nebuchadnezzar's successor and son, cuneiform inscriptions reveal he was actually the son of Nabonidus and served as prince regent, not sole king.

(1×) Personal name of the Babylonian ruler in Daniel 8:1 and throughout chapters 5-8. The transliterations vary slightly across languages but consistently preserve the Babylonian theophoric element 'Bel,' marking this as a foreign royal name tied to Babylon's patron deity and the dramatic judgment narrative. BABYLON CITY EMPIRE en: Bel'shatztzar | es: Belsasar | fr: Belshatsar | de: [בלאשצר] Dan 8:1

בֶּלְשַׁאצַּר H1113 N-proper-ms (7×)

Belshazzar; the last king of Babylon in the book of Daniel, who saw the handwriting on the wall at his final feast.

The Aramaic proper name of Belshazzar (בֶּלְשַׁאצַּר), the Babylonian king featured in Daniel 5 and referenced in Daniel 7:1 and 8:1. He is the ruler who held the infamous banquet at which the mysterious hand wrote on the wall, pronouncing the doom of his kingdom (Dan 5:1-30). Historically the son of Nabonidus and co-regent of Babylon, his name means 'Bel, protect the king' in Akkadian. The narrative of his feast and fall has become one of the most iconic scenes in biblical literature, giving rise to the proverbial expression 'the writing on the wall.'

Belshazzar (Babylonian king) (7×) The proper name of the last Babylonian king as presented in Daniel. All translation traditions preserve the name through transliteration — English 'Belshazzar,' Spanish 'Belsasar,' French 'Beltschatsar,' German 'Belsazar' — with minor phonetic variation reflecting each language's adaptation of the Akkadian theophoric name. The two orthographic forms in Daniel (בֶּלְשַׁאצַּר in 5:1-29 and בֶּלְאשַׁצַּר in 5:30; 7:1; 8:1) refer to the same individual, differing only in the metathesis of shin and aleph. His occurrences span the feast narrative (Dan 5:1, 2, 9, 22, 29), his death notice (5:30), and chronological references (7:1; 8:1). BABYLON CITY EMPIRE

en: Belshatztzar, of-Belshatztzar | es: Belsasar, de-Belsasar | fr: Beltschatsar | de: Belsazar, [בלאשצר], [לבלאשצר] Dan 5:1; Dan 5:2; Dan 5:9; Dan 5:22; Dan 5:29

בִּלְשָׁן H1114 N-proper-ms (2×)

Bilshan, one of the leaders who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel

Bilshan appears among the prominent leaders listed in the return from exile under Zerubbabel's leadership. His name may derive from roots related to inquiry or searching, though the etymology remains uncertain. He stands as one of the named individuals whose return marked the restoration of the Jewish community in Jerusalem after the Babylonian captivity, appearing in both Ezra's and Nehemiah's parallel lists of returnees.

(2×) A personal name of one of the leaders accompanying Zerubbabel in the return from exile (Ezra 2:2; Nehemiah 7:7). The consistent appearance in both parallel lists confirms his historical role in this crucial moment of restoration. Translations uniformly transliterate the name, with some indicating the Hebrew form in brackets to show they're preserving the original rather than translating a meaning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bilshan | es: Bilsán | fr: [בלשן] | de: [בלשן] Ezra 2:2; Neh 7:7

בְּלִתִּי H1115 Conj-w (112×)

A particle of negation meaning 'not, so as not to, except, without'; from a root meaning 'failure' or 'cessation', used for negative purpose, exclusion, and privation.

Derived from the root balah ('to wear out, fail'), bilti expresses the idea of cessation or non-existence deployed as a grammatical particle. Its most frequent use (84 of 112 occurrences) is with the preposition lamed to form negative purpose clauses — 'so as not to' — as when God marks Cain so that no one will kill him (Gen 4:15). It also functions as an exceptive particle ('except, unless') and can express pure absence ('without'). French afin-que-ne-pas and German zu-damit-nicht both reveal how languages stretch to capture this compact Hebrew negator, while Spanish para-no achieves the same with elegant brevity.

1. negative purpose or result (84×) The dominant negative-purpose construction, typically לְבִלְתִּי plus infinitive, expressing 'so as not to, in order not to, lest.' French afin-que-ne-pas and Spanish para-no both capture this final-clause negation cleanly. Found 84 times from Genesis to Ezekiel, it governs divine warnings (Gen 3:11), protective measures (Gen 4:15, Lev 18:30), and prophetic prohibitions. This is the Hebrew writer's primary tool for expressing purposeful prevention. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: so-as-not, so-as-not-to, to-not | es: para-no | fr: afin-que-ne-pas, à-afin-que-ne-pas | de: zu-damit-nicht Gen 3:11; Gen 4:15; Gen 19:21; Lev 18:30; Lev 20:4

2. exception or exclusion (13×) After a preceding negative, bilti functions as an exceptive particle meaning 'except, unless, but only.' German außer and French sauf match precisely. Key passages include Gen 21:26 ('no one told me except you'), Gen 43:3-5 (Joseph's brothers cannot return 'unless' Benjamin is with them), and Exod 22:20 ('whoever sacrifices to any god except the LORD'). These 13 occurrences show bilti carving out the single exception from a blanket negation. CONJUNCTIONS AND CONTRAST

en: except, except-, except-You | es: a-menos-que, excepto, fuera-de-ti | fr: sans, sauf, sauf- | de: ausser, ausser-You, außer Gen 21:26; Gen 43:3; Gen 43:5; Gen 47:18; Exod 22:20

3. without or absence (10×) Indicates privation or total absence — 'without, none, no more' — describing a state where something is completely lacking. Spanish sin ('without') and German ohne capture the privative sense. Joshua's conquest narratives use it strikingly: Josh 8:22, 10:33, 11:8 all describe enemies left 'without' survivors. The 10 occurrences convey an absolute zero-state rather than a purposeful prevention. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: and-with-not, no-more, none | es: Sin, no, para-no | fr: afin-que-ne-pas, aucun, et-pour-sans | de: damit-nicht, keiner, ohne Josh 8:22; Josh 10:33; Josh 11:8; Josh 11:20; 2Kgs 10:11

4. (3×) Three occurrences where bilti functions as a simple adverbial negation 'not,' modifying an adjective or state rather than forming a purpose clause. In 1 Sam 20:26, David is 'not clean' (bilti tahor). Num 21:35 and Deut 3:3 use it similarly. French ne-pas and German nicht render this straightforward negation. Isaiah 14:6 also uses it adverbially: 'a stroke of non-cessation,' that is, an unceasing blow. NEGATION PARTICLES

en: not | es: no, no- | fr: ne-pas, pas | de: nicht Num 21:35; Deut 3:3; 1Sam 20:26

5. causal negation (2×) A causal negation construction with the preposition min, producing 'because not, because of inability.' Found in Num 14:16, where the nations would say God slew Israel in the wilderness 'because of inability' (mibbelti) to bring them to the promised land, and Ezek 16:28, describing insatiability. Spanish Por-no-poder ('because of not being able') captures this causal-privative nuance that combines reason with negation. NEGATION PARTICLES en: because-not, because-of-inability-of | es: Por-no-poder, por-no | fr: de-sans, parce-que-de-inability-de | de: von-damit-nicht, weil-von-inability-von Num 14:16; Ezek 16:28

בָּמָה H1116 Prep-l (104×)

High place; a raised site for worship (often illicit cultic shrines) or a geographic elevation, ridge, or mountain height.
In ancient Israel, a bamah was a raised open-air platform used for sacrifice and worship. While some high places served legitimate worship before the temple was built (1 Kgs 3:2), most references carry a strong negative connotation as sites of Canaanite-influenced or unauthorized Israelite worship that the prophets and Deuteronomistic historians repeatedly condemn. In poetic and prophetic texts, the word retains its older geographic sense of mountain ridges or elevated terrain that God treads upon (Amos 4:13; Mic 1:3) or that the faithful are made to walk on (Deut 32:13). German 'Hoehen' and Spanish 'lugares altos' both preserve the literal height imagery, while French 'haut lieu' has itself become an idiom for a prestigious place.

1. cultic high place, shrine (92×) A raised open-air worship site, typically associated with illicit or Canaanite-influenced ritual. Condemned throughout Kings and the prophets (1 Kgs 12:31; 2 Kgs 23:5), these shrines appear in every language as elevated cultic sites: Spanish 'lugares altos,' French 'hauts lieux,' German 'Hoehen.' The 92 occurrences span condemnation formulas, reform narratives, and prophetic warnings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: at-the-high-places, on-the-high-places, the-high-places | es: en-los-lugares-altos, los-lugares-altos | fr: le-haut-lieux, le-hauts-lieux, sur-le-haut-lieux | de: auf-der-hoch-Orte, bei-der-hoch-Orte, der-Hoehen 1Kgs 3:2; 1Kgs 3:3; 1Kgs 12:31; 1Kgs 12:32; 1Kgs 13:2

2. height, elevated terrain (12×) A topographical elevation, ridge, or mountainous height, used in poetry and prophecy. God 'treads on the heights of the earth' (Amos 4:13; Mic 1:3), and the faithful are set upon high places (Deut 32:13; 2 Sam 22:34). The multilingual glosses show geographic rather than cultic framing: 'heights of' rather than 'high places' as shrines. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: (high-places-of), [high-places-of], heights-of | es: (lugares-altos-de), [ketiv], [lugares-altos-de] | fr: dans-haut-lieu, haut-lieu, haut-places-de | de: Hoehe, [(במתי)], [[במותי]] Num 21:28; Deut 32:13; 2Sam 22:34; Job 9:8

בָּמָה H1117 N-fs (1×)

high place (cultic worship site, often illicit; also poetically mountaintop or elevated terrain)
This feminine noun primarily denotes a high place used for worship, often condemned as sites of illicit Canaanite-influenced cult practices, though occasionally referring to legitimate sanctuaries before the temple. The term appears over 100 times, frequently in prophetic denunciations. It also functions poetically to describe mountain heights or elevated terrain, as in 'the high places of the earth' meaning mountain peaks.

(1×) In Ezekiel 20:29, the term functions as a wordplay (bama/'what/come?') in God's rhetorical question about Israel's continued use of illicit worship sites. The multilingual glosses show translators struggling between transliterating the technical term ('Bamah') and explaining its cultic function ('high place'), highlighting its specialized religious vocabulary. INCENSE AND WORSHIP en: Bamah | es: Bama | fr: dans-quoi? | de: Hoehe Ezek 20:29

בִּמְהָל H1118 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Bimhal (personal name: descendant of Asher)
This personal name identifies a descendant of Asher listed in the genealogical records of 1 Chronicles 7:33. The name may derive from 'son of circumcision' according to BDB's etymological suggestion, though such folk etymologies remain uncertain. It appears only in this genealogical context without additional narrative information.

(1×) Personal name in the Asherite genealogy of 1 Chronicles 7:33. The conjunction 'and Bimhal' simply links this name in the family tree, with consistent transliteration across languages marking it as a proper noun without semantic translation. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Bimhal | es: y-Bimhal | fr: [וּבִמְהָל] | de: [וּבִמְהָל] 1Chr 7:33

בְּמוֹ H1119 Prep (10×)

In, with — archaic poetic preposition, expanded form of beth, used in elevated verse
The form בְּמוֹ (bemo) is an archaic and poetic expansion of the common preposition beth ('in, with, by'). It appears exclusively in elevated poetic registers — Job, Psalms, Isaiah, and possibly Deuteronomy 33 — functioning identically to standard beth with locative ('in'), instrumental ('with'), or directional ('into, through') force. Job 9:30 speaks of washing 'with snow-water,' Job 16:4-5 of strengthening 'with my mouth,' and Isaiah 25:10 of Moab being trampled 'in' its own place. The suffix -mo is an old enclitic particle preserved in archaic poetry, cognate with similar expansions in Ugaritic and other Northwest Semitic languages.

in, with (poetic prep.) (10×) An archaic poetic preposition functioning as an expanded form of beth, conveying locative ('in'), instrumental ('with'), or directional ('into/through') meanings. Restricted to elevated verse: Job uses it for washing 'with snow-water' (9:30) and strengthening 'with the mouth' (16:4-5); Isaiah for Moab trampled 'in its place' (25:10); Deuteronomy 33:2 for fire 'from' God's right hand. The -mo enclitic is a relic of older Semitic morphology preserved in poetic archaism. No genuine sense distinction exists among its locative, instrumental, and directional uses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: [with-waters-of-], in, in- | es: (en), [con-aguas-de], con | fr: dans, dans-à, par | de: [(במו)], [[במו]], [במו] Job 9:30; Job 16:4; Job 16:5; Job 19:16; Job 37:8

בָּמוֹת H1120 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (4×)

Bamoth; a Moabite town on the heights, also called Bamoth-Baal, along Israel's wilderness route.
A place name meaning 'high places,' referring to a town in Moab along the Israelites' journey toward the Promised Land. Numbers 21:19-20 lists it as a station between Nahaliel and the valley in the field of Moab. The fuller form Bamoth-Baal ('high places of Baal') in Numbers 22:41 identifies where Balak took Balaam to view and curse Israel — a cultic high place associated with Baal worship. Joshua 13:17 assigns it to the tribe of Reuben. The name's transparent meaning (from בָּמָה, 'high place') links geography, worship, and Israel's territorial claims.

(4×) A Moabite settlement meaning 'high places,' stationed along Israel's wilderness itinerary (Num 21:19-20) and later assigned to Reuben (Josh 13:17). The expanded form Bamoth-Baal (Num 22:41) reveals its function as a Canaanite cultic site — Balak brought Balaam there to survey Israel from a vantage point sacred to Baal. Spanish 'Bamot-Baal,' French 'Bamoth-Baal,' and German 'Bamoth-Baal' all preserve both elements. The consistent transliteration across languages reflects its dual identity as both a geographic waypoint and a place of pagan worship. BAAL WORSHIP en: Bamoth, and-Bamoth-Baal, and-from-Bamoth | es: Bamot, Bamot-Baal, Y-de-Bamot | fr: Bamoth, et-Bamoth-Baal, et-de-Bamoth | de: Bamoth, und-Bamoth-Baal, und-von-Bamoth Num 21:19; Num 21:20; Num 22:41; Josh 13:17

H1121 Prep-l (4×)

Son(s); used here in construct forms denoting kinship, membership, or belonging to a group or lineage.
The extraordinarily common Hebrew word בֵּן ('son') appears here in a handful of construct or prepositional forms where it denotes lineage, group membership, or familial relationship. In Judges 20:13, 'sons of Belial' designates worthless men among the Benjamites. In 2 Kings 19:37 and Daniel 11:10, it marks a son in a literal dynastic succession. In 1 Chronicles 27:12, it identifies a military commander by his tribal or family affiliation. The word's flexibility — from literal offspring to metaphorical class membership — is reflected across all target languages.

(4×) Son or sons in construct, marking kinship or group affiliation. This subset of occurrences uses the prepositional form לְבֶן or suffixed forms to express belonging — whether to a literal father (2 Kgs 19:37, where Sennacherib is struck down by 'his sons') or to a classification (Judg 20:13). Spanish renders variously as 'para-el-hijo,' 'sus-hijos,' while French uses 'et-fils' and German 'Söhne-von,' all reflecting the relational construct. In 1 Chronicles 27:12, it identifies a commander by descent, and in Daniel 11:10 it signals dynastic succession in prophetic vision. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: (his-sons), (qere:and-his-sons), of-the-sons | es: (para-el-hijo-), (sus-hijos), (y-hijos-sus) | fr: (his-sons), [לבן], et-fils | de: Soehne-von, [לבן], und-seine-Soehne Judg 20:13; 2Kgs 19:37; 1Chr 27:12; Dan 11:10

בֵּן H1121a N-fpc / 3mp (4938×)

son, male child; member of a class; age designation

Appearing nearly 5,000 times, the Hebrew word for 'son' extends far beyond biological offspring. While its primary meaning is 'male child,' Hebrew idiom uses 'son of X' to mean 'one characterized by X' or 'member of category X'—thus 'sons of the prophets' are prophetic disciples, 'sons of Belial' are worthless people, and 'sons of valor' are warriors. The same construction with numbers expresses age: 'son of thirty years' means 'thirty years old.' This productive phrase structure reveals how Hebrew thinks categorically through kinship metaphors.

1. son (biological/legal offspring) (2950×) Split from sense 87013. Criteria: Direct male child or descendant in family relationship: 'Abraham's son,' 'the son of David.' Genealogies, inheritance, family narratives.

en: a-son-of, son-of, son-of- | es: hijo-de, hijo-de- | fr: fils-de, fils-de-, un-fils-de | de: Sohn-von, Sohn-von-, der-Sohn- Gen 17:24; Gen 21:5; Gen 26:34; Gen 28:9; Gen 36:38

2. member of a class or group (1964×) Split from sense 87013. Criteria: Idiomatic constructions marking class membership or characteristic: 'sons of Israel' (Israelites), 'son of man' (human being), 'son of death' (one deserving death), 'sons of valor' (warriors).

en: a-son-of, son-of, son-of- | es: de-hijo-de-, era-hijo-de, hijo-de | fr: fils, fils-de, fils-de- | de: Sohn, Sohn-von, Sohn-von- Exod 6:15; Exod 6:25; Exod 12:43; Exod 23:12; Exod 29:1

3. children, people (collective) (12×) Idiomatic construct phrase 'son/sons of X' expressing membership in a class or possession of a quality rather than literal parentage. 'Sons of the prophets' are guild members, 'sons of Belial' are scoundrels. Swahili shifts to watu wa (people of), revealing the categorical function beneath the kinship metaphor. CHILDREN AND INFANCY

en: The-children, and-for-His-children, and-to-our-children | es: Los-hijos, hijos, los-hijos | fr: dans-fils, enfants, et-son-fils-lui | de: Kinder, Kindern, Soehne Gen 3:16; Gen 25:22; Gen 30:1; Gen 31:16; Gen 32:11

4. young of animals (9×) Age designation formed by 'son of X years,' a distinctly Hebrew idiom. 'Abraham was a son of one hundred years' means 'Abraham was one hundred years old.' Translations naturalize this: English 'years old,' Spanish 'años de edad,' Hindi वर्ष का. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-cubs-of, and-sons-of, children-of- | es: e-hijos-de, hijos-de-, los-hijos | fr: et-fils, et-fils-de, fils | de: Soehne-von, der-jung, die-Soehne Deut 22:6; Deut 22:7; 1Sam 6:7; 1Sam 6:10; 1Sam 14:32

בְּנוֹ H1121b N-msc / 3ms (2×)

his son; possessive form of 'son' sometimes read as proper name Beno in 1 Chronicles

In the Levitical genealogy of 1 Chronicles 24, this word creates an interpretive puzzle. The Hebrew reads literally 'his son,' but some ancient and modern versions treat it as a proper name 'Beno.' The preferred interpretation takes it as a possessive ('his son'), referring to Jaaziah's son among the descendants of Merari. This demonstrates how genealogical lists sometimes compressed information, requiring readers to parse pronouns and relationships carefully.

(2×) The phrase 'his son' appearing in a Levitical genealogy (1 Chronicles 24:26-27), interpreted by some as a proper name but better understood as indicating 'the sons of Merari by Jaaziah his son.' All major language translations render it as a possessive construction rather than a name, showing the scholarly consensus against reading it as a proper noun. The genealogical context makes the relational meaning clearer than treating it as another individual's name. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: his-son | es: su-hijo | fr: son-fils | de: sein-Sohn 1Chr 24:26; 1Chr 24:27

בֵּן H1122 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ben (personal name: Levite musician, possibly shortened form; Septuagint omits)

This simple personal name ('son') identifies a Levite in 1 Chronicles 15:18, though the Septuagint omits it, suggesting possible textual corruption or abbreviation. It may represent a shortened form of a longer theophoric name. The unusual brevity has led some scholars to question whether this is a complete name or a scribal error.

(1×) Personal name of a Levite in 1 Chronicles 15:18. While translations render it literally as 'Ben' (English) or 'son' (German 'Sohn,' French 'fils'), its status as a proper noun in this context is signaled by capitalization and position in the list, despite its identical form to the common word for 'son.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ben | es: Ben | fr: fils | de: Sohn 1Chr 15:18

בַּר H1123 Conj-w / N-mpc (11×)

Son (Aramaic) — the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew בֵּן, used in Ezra and Daniel for filial and metaphorical sonship

The Aramaic noun בַּר (bar) is the cognate of Hebrew בֵּן ('son'), appearing in the Aramaic sections of Ezra and Daniel. In Ezra, it functions in genealogical formulas: 'Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel' (Ezra 5:2), 'Jeshua the son of Jozadak' (Ezra 5:2), and 'the sons of Israel' (Ezra 6:16). Its most celebrated occurrence is Daniel 7:13, where 'one like a son of man' (כְּבַר אֱנָשׁ) approaches the Ancient of Days — a phrase that became foundational for New Testament Christology. Daniel 6:24 uses it for literal sons cast into the lions' den. Spanish 'hijo' and French 'fils' both render the straightforward filial meaning.

son (Aramaic) (11×) The Aramaic word for 'son,' functioning identically to Hebrew בֵּן in patronymic chains and broader relational expressions. Used in genealogical formulas throughout Ezra (5:1-2; 6:14) and for 'the sons of Israel' collectively (Ezra 6:16). In Daniel, it appears in the epochal vision of 'one like a son of man' (כְּבַר אֱנָשׁ, Dan 7:13), a figure who receives universal dominion from the Ancient of Days — foundational to messianic interpretation. Also used for literal offspring (Dan 5:22; 6:24) and in the prayer formula 'sons of the captivity' (Ezra 6:16). Spanish 'hijo' and English 'son' are the standard renderings. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-his-sons, and-young, sons-of | es: los-hijos-de, sus-hijos, y-crías-de | fr: [ובנוהי], et-fils-de, fils | de: Soehne-von, [בניהון], [ובנוהי] Ezra 6:9; Ezra 6:10; Ezra 6:16; Ezra 7:23

בְּנָה H1124 V-Hitpael-Prtcpl-ms (22×)

To build, construct (Aramaic Pe'al); to be built, be under construction (Hitpael passive)

The Aramaic verb בְּנָה (cognate with Hebrew בָּנָה) appears exclusively in the books of Ezra and Daniel, where the great themes of exile and restoration center on whether Jerusalem and its temple will be rebuilt. In its active Pe'al form, it describes the physical labor of constructing the temple (Ezra 5:2, 11) and Nebuchadnezzar's boast of building Babylon (Dan 4:27). In the Hitpael passive, the question becomes political: will the temple 'be built' (Ezra 5:15, 6:3), and should the rebellious city 'be built' again (Ezra 4:13, 16, 21)? Spanish 'construir/construida' and German 'baute' confirm the concrete, architectural meaning throughout.

1. build, construct (15×) The active Pe'al (and passive participle) sense: to build, construct, or erect a structure — used of both the Jerusalem temple and the city of Babylon. Fifteen occurrences cluster in Ezra's narrative of the returned exiles who 'are building' the house of God (Ezra 5:2, 3, 4, 9, 11), with Darius decreeing that they 'build' it (Ezra 6:7, 8, 14). Nebuchadnezzar's pride in Dan 4:27 — 'this great Babylon that I have built' — extends the verb to royal self-glorification. The Pe'al passive participle in Ezra 5:11 ('which was built') denotes a completed past construction. Multilingual evidence is consistent: 'construir/construyan' (Spanish), 'batir' (French), 'baute' (German). BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: and-building, and-they-built, building | es: a-construir, construida, construyan | fr: bâtir, et-bâtir, et-son-fils | de: [בניתה], baute, und-baute Ezra 4:12; Ezra 5:2; Ezra 5:3; Ezra 5:4; Ezra 5:9

2. be built (7×) The Hitpael reflexive-passive sense: to be built or to be in the process of being built. Seven occurrences capture the politically charged question of reconstruction during the Persian period. The adversaries of Judah warn that if Jerusalem 'is built' again (Ezra 4:13, 16), it will rebel — leading to the decree that it 'not be built' (Ezra 4:21). Cyrus's original decree commanded that the temple 'be built' (Ezra 6:3), and the returned exiles report that it 'is being built' with great stones (Ezra 5:8). Spanish 'sea-construida/es-construida' and English 'being-built/let-be-built' consistently mark the passive voice, distinguishing this from the active construction scenes. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: being-built, is-built, let-be-built | es: es-construida, sea-construida | fr: bâtir | de: baute Ezra 4:13; Ezra 4:16; Ezra 4:21; Ezra 5:8; Ezra 5:15

בֶּן־אֲבִינָדָב H1125 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ben-abinadab, 'son of Abinadab,' one of Solomon's twelve district officers

This designation identifies one of Solomon's administrative officials using the patronymic 'son of Abinadab.' Rather than preserving his personal name, the text identifies him by his father's name, a common practice when the father was more prominent or well-known. He served as district governor over one of the twelve regions that supplied provisions for the royal household, managing the coastal area including Dor.

(2×) A title or designation for one of Solomon's twelve district governors (1 Kings 4:11), identified by his father's name rather than his own. The construction 'son of Abinadab' (Ben-abinadab) suggests either his personal name wasn't preserved or the patronymic was his functional title. Spanish uniquely translates the construction ('hijo de-') while others transliterate, reflecting different approaches to these administrative titles. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Abinadab, Ben | es: Abinadab, hijo-de- | fr: Abinadab, Ben | de: Abinadab, Ben 1Kgs 4:11

בֶּן־אוֹנִי H1126 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ben-Oni (personal name: 'son of my sorrow,' Rachel's name for Benjamin before she died)

This compound personal name means 'son of my sorrow' and represents Rachel's dying choice for her newborn son in Genesis 35:18. The name captured her mortal anguish in childbirth. Jacob immediately renamed the child Benjamin ('son of the right hand'), transforming the memorial of grief into one of blessing and honor, a poignant detail in the patriarchal narrative.

(1×) Names Rachel's son in her final breath in Genesis 35:18. The meaning 'son of my sorrow' encapsulates the tragedy of her death in childbirth. All major translations preserve the transliteration 'Ben-Oni,' allowing the Hebrew wordplay between the mother's sorrowful name and the father's hopeful renaming to remain visible. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ben-Oni | es: Ben-Oni | fr: Ben-Oni | de: Ben-Oni Gen 35:18

בֶּן־גֶּבֶר H1127 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ben-geber, 'son of Geber' or 'son of a mighty man,' one of Solomon's twelve administrative officers

Another of Solomon's district governors identified by patronymic rather than personal name. The designation could mean 'son of Geber' (a personal name) or 'son of a mighty man' if geber is taken as a common noun. He administered Ramoth-gilead and the settlements of Jair in Gilead, including sixty fortified cities. Like other officials in this list, his identification through his father suggests the administrative system valued lineage and family connection.

(2×) The patronymic title for one of Solomon's twelve regional administrators (1 Kings 4:13), governing the Ramoth-gilead district. The Hebrew construction allows either 'son of Geber' (proper name) or 'son of a warrior/mighty man' (appellative), though most translations treat it as a name. The dual occurrence in verse 13 reflects the text's pattern of listing both the official's name and his district. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ben, Geber | es: Geber, hijo-de- | fr: Ben, Geber | de: Ben, Geber 1Kgs 4:13

בֶּן־דֶּקֶר H1128 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ben-deker, 'son of Deker,' another of Solomon's twelve district governors

This official managed one of Solomon's administrative districts, identified only by his father Deker's name. The territory included Makaz, Shaalbim, Beth-shemesh, and Elon-beth-hanan—a strategic region in the western approaches to Jerusalem. The pattern of patronymic identification in Solomon's administrative list may indicate these were hereditary positions or that these officials came from established administrative families.

(2×) The designation for one of Solomon's provincial governors (1 Kings 4:9), known only through his father's name Deker. Like the other 'ben-' titles in this administrative roster, it appears twice as the text lists both the official and his jurisdiction. The consistent transliteration across languages shows these patronymics functioned as proper designations in the governmental structure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ben-Deker, in-Deker | es: Deker, hijo-de- | fr: Ben-Deker, dans-Deker | de: Ben-Deker, in-Deker 1Kgs 4:9

בָּנָה H1129 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mpc (377×)

To build, construct; Nifal: be built, be established; as participle: builder; figuratively of God building a woman, a dynasty, or a people.

Banah is the standard Hebrew verb for construction in all its forms — from Noah building an altar after the flood (Gen 8:20) to Solomon's temple project that defines an era. Yet some of its most theologically charged uses are figurative: God 'builds' the woman from Adam's rib (Gen 2:22), 'builds up' a dynasty for David (2 Sam 7:27), and promises to 'rebuild' Israel after exile (Jer 31:4). The Hebrew ear would have caught the wordplay between banah ('to build') and ben ('son'), a connection exploited in the Rachel and Leah narratives where bearing children is described as being 'built up' (Gen 16:2; 30:3). Across languages the literal core stays stable — Arabic bana, Korean 세우다/짓다, Spanish edificar — but the figurative extensions reveal fascinating divergences in how cultures conceptualize divine and dynastic construction.

1. Qal: build, construct (316×) The core Qal active sense: physically building, constructing, or erecting a structure — a city, house, altar, wall, tower, or fortification. At 316 occurrences this dominates the lemma's profile, spanning the entire biblical narrative from the first altar (Gen 8:20) through the postexilic rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls (Neh 2-6). The verb appears in all finite Qal forms (perfect, imperfect, imperative, wayyiqtol consecutive). Arabic bana, Spanish construir/edificar, Korean 짓다/세우다, and Swahili -jenga all map to this concrete construction meaning without ambiguity. Key passages include the Tower of Babel (Gen 11:4), Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 6:1), and the second temple (Ezra 3:10). BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: And-built, and-built, and-he-built | es: Y-construyó, Y-edificó, y-edificó

| fr: Et-bâtit, et-bâtit, et-il-bâtit | de: und-baute, und-baute-, und-er-baute Gen 2:22; Gen 8:20; Gen 10:11; Gen 12:7; Gen 12:8

2. Nifal: be built, be established (30×) The Nifal passive and reflexive sense: to be built, be constructed, be established. Appearing 30 times, it serves as the natural passive of sense 1 — cities 'are built' (Num 21:27; Deut 13:16), the temple 'was being built' (1 Kgs 6:7). But a striking metaphorical extension emerges in the matriarchal narratives: Rachel and Leah hope to 'be built up' through children (Gen 16:2; 30:3), exploiting the banah/ben ('build'/'son') wordplay. Spanish fue construida/fue edificada and Korean 건축되다 both preserve the passive construction frame, while the figurative 'be established as a family' sense requires creative solutions in most languages. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: and-be-built, and-will-be-built, and-you-will-be-built | es: cuando-se-construía, fue-construida, fue-edificada | fr: bâtir, dans-étant-bâtit, et-bâtir | de: bauen, baute, er-baut Gen 16:2; Gen 30:3; Num 13:22; Num 21:27; Deut 13:16

3. Qal participle: builder (27×) The substantivized Qal active participle functioning as an agent noun: 'builder(s),' 'the one(s) building.' Found 27 times, this form designates professional construction workers (1 Kgs 5:18, Solomon's builders alongside Hiram's), or metaphorically God as the master builder, or those rebuilding Jerusalem's walls under Nehemiah (Neh 4:5). The famous Psalm 118:22 — 'the stone the builders rejected has become the cornerstone' — uses this participle, a verse quoted repeatedly in the New Testament. Spanish edificadores, Korean 건축하는 자들, and German die Bauleute all render the agent-noun function clearly. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: am-building, am-building-, and-the-builders | es: Edificando, Los-edificadores, Y-los-edificadores | fr: building, bâtir, dans-bâtir | de: bauen, bauend, baute Gen 4:17; 1Kgs 5:18; 2Kgs 12:11; 2Kgs 22:6

4. Qal passive participle: built (4×) The Qal passive participle used adjectivally: 'built, constructed' — describing a completed structure rather than the process of building. Only 4 clear occurrences, but each is distinctive: the replacement altar is found 'built' (Judg 6:28), Jerusalem 'not yet built' in houses (Neh 7:4), Jerusalem described as a city 'built compactly together' (Ps 122:3), and the beloved's neck 'like a tower built' for an armory (Song 4:4). Spanish edificada and Korean 건축된 both use past-participle adjectival forms, confirming the stative rather than processual semantics. BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTING en: built, that-is-built, the-built | es: edificada, edificadas, el-edificado | fr: bâtie, bâtir, le-bâtir | de: baute, der-baute Judg 6:28; Neh 7:4; Ps 122:3; Song 4:4

בֶּן־הֲדַד H1130 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (25×)

Ben-Hadad; throne name of Aramean (Syrian) kings meaning 'son of (the god) Hadad,' borne by at least three rulers of Damascus

Ben-Hadad (בֶּן־הֲדַד, 'son of [the god] Hadad') is a throne name or dynastic title borne by at least three kings of Aram-Damascus who feature prominently in the history of the divided monarchy. Ben-Hadad I allied with Asa of Judah against Baasha of Israel (1 Kgs 15:18–20). Ben-Hadad II was the great antagonist of Ahab and Elisha, besieging Samaria and waging multiple campaigns (1 Kgs 20; 2 Kgs 6:24; 8:7–9). Ben-Hadad III, son of Hazael, was defeated by Jehoash of Israel, who recovered lost cities (2 Kgs 13:3, 24–25). Amos 1:4 prophesies fire upon 'the palaces of Ben-Hadad,' using the name as shorthand for Aramean royal power.

Ben Hadad (25×) The dynastic throne name of Aramean kings of Damascus, meaning 'son of [the storm-god] Hadad.' At least three kings bore this name: Ben-Hadad I who allied with Asa (1 Kgs 15:18–20), Ben-Hadad II who warred against Ahab and was confronted by Elisha (1 Kgs 20:1–34; 2 Kgs 6:24; 8:7–9), and Ben-Hadad III son of Hazael (2 Kgs 13:3, 24–25). The Assyrian records identify Ben-Hadad II as Adad-idri (Hadadezer). Translations uniformly transliterate the name: Spanish, French, and German all render 'Ben-Hadad.' HADAD BEN HADAD

en: Ben-Hadad | es: Ben-Hadad, Ben-hadad | fr: Ben-Hadad, [בֶּן־הֲדַד], [בֶּן הֲדַד] | de: Ben-Hadad, [בֶּן־הֲדַד], [בֶּן הֲדַד] 1Kgs 15:18; 1Kgs 15:20; 1Kgs 20:1; 1Kgs 20:3; 1Kgs 20:5

בִּנּוּי H1131 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (7×)

Binnui — post-exilic proper name borne by Levites, returned exiles, and men who divorced foreign wives in Ezra-Nehemiah

A Hebrew proper name meaning 'built up' (from the root בנה, 'to build'), carried by at least five individuals in the post-exilic community. One Binnui headed a family that returned with Zerubbabel (Neh 7:15), another was a Levite active in Ezra's reforms (Ezra 8:33; Neh 10:10; 12:8), and two others appear among those who had taken foreign wives (Ezra 10:30, 38). The multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate the name, confirming it as a single lexical identity across all occurrences.

Binnui (personal name) (7×) The proper name Binnui (בִּנּוּי), denoting several post-exilic Israelites. A family head returning under Zerubbabel (Neh 7:15, parallel to Bani in Ezra 2:10), a Levite who weighed temple vessels (Ezra 8:33) and sealed the covenant (Neh 10:10), and men who put away foreign wives (Ezra 10:30, 38). Spanish, French, and German glosses all preserve the transliteration with minimal variation (Binui, Binnui), pointing to a stable onomastic tradition. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Binnui, Binnuy, and-Binnuy | es: Binui, y-Binui | fr: Binnuï, et-Binnuï | de: Binnui, und-Binnui Ezra 8:33; Ezra 10:30; Ezra 10:38; Neh 3:24; Neh 7:15

בֶּן־זוֹחֵת H1132 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ben-Zoheth (personal name: member of Judah's tribe, possibly 'son of Zoheth')

This compound personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 4:20 in a genealogical list of Judah's descendants. The name structure suggests 'son of Zoheth,' though the relationship to the preceding name Zoheth in the same verse creates interpretive challenges—they may be brothers rather than father and son. The genealogical context provides no additional narrative details.

(1×) Personal name in Judah's genealogy in 1 Chronicles 4:20. The conjunction 'and Ben-Zoheth' links this figure in the family line. The consistent transliteration across languages preserves the compound Hebrew form, though the relationship between Zoheth and Ben-Zoheth in the same verse remains textually ambiguous. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Ben-Zocheth | es: y-Ben-Zojet | fr: [ובן־זוחת] | de: [ובן־זוחת] 1Chr 4:20

בֶּן־חוּר H1133 N-proper-ms (2×)

Ben-hur, 'son of Hur,' one of Solomon's twelve administrative district governors

This officer administered the hill country of Ephraim for Solomon's government, identified through his father Hur rather than by his own personal name. Hur was a name with some prominence in Israelite history, appearing elsewhere in connection with important figures. The administrative system Solomon established divided the kingdom into twelve districts, each responsible for provisioning the royal court for one month annually, requiring capable and trusted officials.

(2×) The patronymic designation for the district governor over Ephraim's hill country in Solomon's reign (1 Kings 4:8). As with the other 'son of' titles in this administrative list, it marks an official by lineage rather than personal name. The dual reference in the verse follows the pattern of naming both the official and his territorial responsibility. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ben-Hur, in-Hur | es: Jur, hijo-de- | fr: Ben-Hur, dans-Hur | de: Ben-Hur, in-Hur 1Kgs 4:8

בֶּן־חַיִל H1134 Prep / N-proper-ms (1×)

Ben-Hail (personal name: 'son of might/valor,' prince under Jehoshaphat who taught the law)

This compound name means 'son of might' or 'man of valor' and identifies one of the princes whom King Jehoshaphat sent throughout Judah to teach the law to the people (2 Chronicles 17:7). The name reflects the positive virtue of strength and courage. His inclusion in the teaching mission shows that Jehoshaphat enlisted capable leaders for this religious reform.

(1×) Personal name of one of Jehoshaphat's teaching princes in 2 Chronicles 17:7. The prepositional phrase 'to Ben-Hail' marks him as a recipient of the king's commission to travel through Judah instructing the people in the law, part of a broader religious and educational reform program. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: to-Ben-Hayil | es: para-Ben-Jayil | fr: [לבן־חיל] | de: [לבן־חיל] 2Chr 17:7

בֶּן־חָנָן H1135 N-proper-ms (1×)
Ben-Hanan (personal name: 'son of the gracious one,' member of Judah's tribe)
This compound personal name appears in the genealogical records of Judah in 1 Chronicles 4:20. The name likely means 'son of the gracious one' or 'son of Hanan,' reflecting the common Hebrew practice of forming names with ben ('son') plus a divine attribute or ancestor's name. No additional narrative information about this individual survives.

(1×) Personal name in Judah's genealogy in 1 Chronicles 4:20. Transliterated consistently as 'Ben-Hanan' or variations like 'Ben-Janan' (Spanish), the name appears in a genealogical list without further biographical details, serving simply to preserve family lineage records. PERSONAL NAMES
en: Ben-Chanan | es: Ben-Janan | fr: [בן־חנן] | de: [בן־חנן] 1Chr 4:20

בֶּן־חֶסֶד H1136 N-proper-ms (1×)
Ben-Hesed (personal name: 'son of mercy/kindness,' one of Solomon's twelve district officers)
This compound name meaning 'son of mercy' or 'son of kindness' identifies one of Solomon's twelve district officers responsible for provisioning the royal court (1 Kings 4:10). Each officer supplied provisions for one month per year. The name's meaning reflects positive theological virtues of divine grace and covenant loyalty (hesed).

(1×) Personal name of a Solomonic administrative officer in 1 Kings 4:10. The consistent transliteration 'Ben-Hesed' across languages preserves the Hebrew compound form, identifying one of the twelve officials who managed the complex logistics of supplying Solomon's extensive royal household and court. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Ben-Hesed | es: hijo-de-Jesed | fr: Ben-Hesed | de: Ben-Hesed 1Kgs 4:10

בָּנִי H1137 N-proper-ms (15×)
Bani — a Hebrew name meaning 'built,' borne by multiple Levites, warriors, and clan heads Bani ('built,' possibly short for Benayahu, 'the LORD has built') is shared by a remarkable number of individuals, most connected to Levitical service or postexilic leadership. One Bani was among David's warriors, called 'the Gadite' (2 Sam 23:36). Several Levites named Bani appear in postexilic contexts: reading the Law with Ezra (Neh 8:7), leading confession (Neh 9:4-5), and sealing the covenant (Neh 10:14). Clan heads named Bani appear among those with foreign wives (Ezra 10:29, 34). French interestingly renders some instances as 'fils de,' reflecting overlap with the common noun ben ('son').

Bani (15×) A Hebrew proper name (bani, 'built') borne by multiple individuals: (1) one of David's warriors, 'the Gadite' (2 Sam 23:36; cf. 1 Chr 11:38); (2) Levites active in postexilic worship, Torah-reading, and covenant-sealing (1 Chr 6:46; Neh 3:17; 8:7; 9:4-5; 10:14); and (3) heads of return-era families (Ezra 2:10; 10:29, 34). French 'fils-de' in some contexts reflects confusion with the patronymic ben. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Bani, and-Bani | es: (Bani), Bani, Baní | fr: Bani, et-fils-de, fils-de | de: Bani, Soehne-von, und-Soehne-von 2Sam 23:36; 1Chr 6:46; 1Chr 9:4; Ezra 2:10; Ezra 10:29

בִּנּוּי H1138 N-proper-ms (3×)
Bunni, a Levitical/lay name possibly meaning 'built'; post-exilic leader(s)
A personal name appearing in Nehemiah's lists, possibly meaning 'built' or related to 'son.' Levites named Bunni (or variant Binnui) participated in the covenant renewal ceremony (Nehemiah 9:4) and signed the covenant (Nehemiah 10:15). Another Bunni appears as a Levite ancestor (Nehemiah 11:15), though some suggest reading 'from the sons of' instead of 'Bunni son of.' Textual variants and name similarities (Bunni/Binnui/Bani) create uncertainty about whether these refer to one person or several, but the name clearly belongs to post-exilic Levitical and leadership circles.

(3×) A post-exilic name, primarily Levitical. A Bunni stood on the platform during the covenant ceremony (Nehemiah 9:4), a Bunni signed the covenant (Nehemiah 10:15), and a Bunni appears in a Levitical genealogy (Nehemiah 11:15). Textual and translational uncertainties (some readings prefer 'sons of' instead of 'Bunni') suggest possible confusion with similar names (Bani, Binnui), but the name is attested across Nehemiah's lists. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Bunni | es: Buni | fr: [בונ], fils-de | de: Soehne-von, [בונ] Neh 9:4; Neh 10:15; Neh 11:15

בְּנֵי־בְרַק H1139 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)
Bene-Berak (place name: 'sons of lightning,' town in Dan's territory)
This geographical name means 'sons of lightning' and designates a town allotted to the tribe of Dan in Joshua 19:45. Assyrian records mention Banai-barqa, confirming the site's historical existence. Modern identification places it at Ibn Ibraq (or Ibraq), about an hour southeast of Jaffa, in the coastal plain region.

(1×) Place name in Dan's tribal allotment in Joshua 19:45. The conjunction 'and Bene-Berak' links this town in the boundary list. Minor spelling variations ('Bene-berac' in Spanish) reflect phonetic equivalence, while the 'sons of lightning' etymology may reference storm phenomena or a local deity. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-Bene-Beraq | es: y-Bene-berac | fr: et-Bene-Beraq | de: und-Bene-Beraq Josh 19:45

בִּנְיָה H1140 Conj-w (1×)
building, structure (feminine noun for constructed edifice)
This feminine noun denotes a building or structure, appearing in Ezekiel 41:13 within the prophet's detailed vision of the restored temple complex. The term refers to a specific constructed edifice, distinct from the general verbal noun binyan. Ezekiel's architectural precision uses this word to designate one component of the elaborate temple vision.

(1×) Refers to a specific building structure in Ezekiel's temple vision in Ezekiel 41:13. The definite article 'the building' (English, Spanish 'el edificio') marks this as a particular architectural feature in the complex measurements and descriptions that characterize Ezekiel 40-48, where precise temple layout dominates. BUILDING AND EDIFICATION en: and-the-building | es: y-el-edificio | fr: et-Baalath | de: [והבניה] Ezek 41:13

בְּנָיָהוּ H1141 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (42×)
Benaiah — personal name meaning 'Yah has built up,' borne by David's warrior-captain and several others Benayahu (also spelled Benayah) is a theophoric name combining banah ('to build') with the divine name Yah, yielding 'Yah has built up.' Its most prominent bearer is Benaiah son of Jehoiada, one of David's elite warriors who slew two Moabite champions and a lion in a snowy pit (2 Sam 23:20-22), and who later executed Solomon's rivals to secure the throne (1 Kgs 2:25, 34, 46). The name also belongs to one of the thirty mighty men (2 Sam 23:30), a Simeonite chief (1 Chr 4:36), several Levites, and men who married foreign wives in Ezra's time.

Benaiah (personal name) (42×) The proper name Benayahu/Benayah ('Yah has built up'), borne by at least eight individuals. Most notable is the son of Jehoiada who commanded David's Cherethites and Pelethites (2 Sam 8:18; 20:23) and secured Solomon's accession (1 Kgs 1-2). All 42 occurrences, in both the -yahu and -yah spellings, denote a single personal name. Spanish 'Benaias,' French 'Benaja.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Benaiah, Benayah, Benayahu | es: Benayah, Benayahu, Benaía | fr: Benaja, Benaïa | de: Benaiah, Benaja, [בניה] 2Sam 8:18; 2Sam 20:23; 2Sam 23:20; 2Sam 23:22; 2Sam 23:30

בְּנֵי יַעֲקָן H1142 Prep / N-proper-fs (2×)

Bene-jaakan, 'sons of Jaakan,' a wilderness station where Israel camped during the exodus journey

This location marks one of the Israelites' wilderness encampments during their forty-year journey from Egypt to Canaan. The name 'sons of Jaakan' suggests it was named after a clan or family group, possibly Horite inhabitants of the region. The site is equated with Beeroth-bene-jaakan ('wells of the sons of Jaakan') in Deuteronomy 10:6, indicating it was known for its water sources—crucial for any desert station. The genealogies connect Jaakan to Edomite clans, placing this stop in the southern wilderness near Edom.

(2×) A place name denoting a wilderness encampment (Numbers 33:31-32), named after the clan or descendants of Jaakan. The prepositional phrases in translations ('from Bene-jaakan,' 'in Bene-jaakan') reflect the itinerary context where Israel is moving between stations. The connection to Jaakan, who appears in Edomite genealogies, suggests this was a known water source or settlement area in the southern wilderness used by both Edomites and the traveling Israelites. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-Bene-jaakan, in-Bene-jaakan | es: de-Bené-Jaacán, en-Bené-Jaacán | fr: dans-Bene-jaakan, de-Bene-jaakan | de: in-Bene-jaakan, von-Bene-jaakan Num 33:31; Num 33:32

בֵּין H1143 Art / N-md (2×)

the interval, the space between; substantive form of the common preposition 'between'

While the preposition 'between' appears hundreds of times throughout Scripture, this particular substantival use with the definite article treats the interval itself as a concrete thing. In 1 Samuel 17, it identifies the space between the battle lines where Goliath positioned himself—the 'between place' or no-man's-land where champions fought. The usage highlights how Hebrew could turn the relational concept of 'between-ness' into a specific geographical referent, the gap or interval that separated the opposing forces.

(2×) The definite noun form 'the between' or 'the interval' (1 Samuel 17:4, 23), referring specifically to the space between the opposing armies where Goliath stood. Rather than the common prepositional usage, this treats the interval as a concrete location. Translations like 'the between' preserve the Hebrew's unusual construction, showing how the language could nominalize a relational term to designate a specific spatial reference—the contested ground between enemies. UNDERSTANDING AND INSIGHT

en: the-between | es: el-medio | fr: le-entre | de: der-zwischen 1Sam 17:4; 1Sam 17:23

בִּנְיָמִין H1144 Conj-w (169×)

Benjamin; youngest son of Jacob and Rachel, the tribe and territory descended from him

Benjamin means 'son of the right hand,' the name Jacob gave his youngest son to replace the dying Rachel's choice of Ben-Oni, 'son of my sorrow' (Gen 35:18). This renaming itself captures a theological reversal from grief to honor. The tribe of Benjamin, though smallest (1 Sam 9:21), produced Israel's first king Saul and the apostle Paul. Its territory, wedged between Judah and Ephraim, included Jerusalem's northern approaches — making Benjamin a perpetual hinge in Israel's political and spiritual geography.

Benjamin (proper noun) (169×) The proper name Benjamin, referring to Jacob's youngest son born to Rachel, and by metonymy the Israelite tribe and its territorial allotment. Across 169 occurrences the name appears in patriarchal narrative (Gen 42:4), tribal census lists (Num 1:36), territorial descriptions (Josh 18:20), and prophetic oracles (Hos 5:8). Translations consistently transliterate: 'Benjamín' (Spanish), 'Benjamin' (French/German), preserving the Hebrew etymological identity. BENJAMIN TRIBE NAME

en: Benjamin, Benjamin- | es: Benjamín, Binyamin, Binyamín | fr: Benjamin, Benjamin- | de: Benjamin, Benjamins Gen 35:18; Gen 42:4; Gen 42:36; Gen 43:14; Gen 43:15

בֶּן־יְמִינ֔י H1145 N-proper-ms (11×)

Benjaminite — a member of the tribe of Benjamin, Israel's smallest tribe from which Saul and other notable figures arose

The compound gentilic בֶּן־יְמִינִי (ben-yemini) identifies a person as belonging to the tribe of Benjamin, literally 'son of the right hand' or 'son of the south.' It appears at pivotal narrative moments: Ehud the left-handed judge who assassinated Moab's king Eglon was a Benjaminite (Judg 3:15), as was the unnamed Levite's host at Gibeah (Judg 19:16). Saul introduces himself as 'a Benjaminite, from the smallest of the tribes of Israel' (1 Sam 9:21). Shimei, who cursed David during Absalom's revolt, is identified as 'Shimei son of Gera, a Benjaminite' (2 Sam 16:11; 19:16; 1 Kgs 2:8). The designation carries the tribe's complex reputation — fierce warriors yet nearly annihilated in the civil war of Judges 19-21.

Benjaminite (gentilic name) (11×) A tribal designation identifying a member of the tribe of Benjamin ('son of the right hand'). Applied to Ehud the left-handed judge and deliverer from Moabite oppression (Judg 3:15), to the old man of Gibeah who hosted the Levite (Judg 19:16), to Saul who humbly notes Benjamin's smallness (1 Sam 9:21; 22:7), and to Shimei ben Gera who cursed David during Absalom's rebellion (2 Sam 16:11; 19:16; 1 Kgs 2:8). Mordecai in Esther (Est 2:5) and Paul in the New Testament (Phil 3:5) both claim this identity. Spanish 'benjaminita' and English 'Benjaminite' are the standard renderings. BENJAMIN TRIBE NAME

en: -the-Binyamini, Benjaminite, a-Benjaminite | es: (de-Jemini), [para-el-benjaminita], benjaminita | fr: -le-Binyamini, [ימיני], [לבנימיני] | de: -der-Binyamini, Mann, Soehne-von-Yemini Judg 3:15; Judg 19:16; 1Sam 9:21; 2Sam 16:11; 2Sam 19:16

בִּנְיָן H1146 Art / N-ms (7×)

A building or constructed structure, used exclusively in Ezekiel's temple vision for walls and edifices of the eschatological sanctuary

A masculine noun (בִּנְיָן) meaning 'building' or 'structure,' likely a loan-word from Aramaic. It appears only in Ezekiel's visionary temple complex (chapters 40-42), where it designates both the enclosing wall of the sacred precinct (Ezek 40:5) and the rear building behind the temple proper (Ezek 41:12, 15). The narrow distribution — all seven occurrences in a single prophetic vision — marks this as specialized architectural terminology for describing sacred space.

building, structure (7×) A constructed edifice or architectural structure, used in Ezekiel's temple vision to describe the enclosing wall (Ezek 40:5), the rear building (Ezek 41:12, 15), and other parts of the sacred complex (Ezek 42:1, 5, 10). The multilingual evidence consistently renders it with building terms — Spanish edificio, French bâtiment, German Gebäude — confirming a concrete architectural sense rather than an abstract notion of 'construction.' BUILDING AND EDIFICATION en: and-the-building, building, the-building | es: Y-el-edificio, edificio, el-edificio | fr: bâtiment, et-bâtiment | de: Gebaeude, das-Gebaeude, und-der-Gebaeude Ezek 40:5; Ezek 41:12; Ezek 41:15; Ezek 42:1

בִּנְיָן H1147 N-msd (1×)

building (Aramaic masculine noun for edifice or construction)

This Aramaic masculine noun means building or construction, appearing in the emphatic state in Ezra 5:4. The context involves Persian officials questioning the Jewish community about who authorized the temple reconstruction project. The term refers generally to any edifice or built structure, parallel to the Hebrew binyan.

(1×) Denotes the temple construction project in Ezra 5:4, where Persian authorities demand to know 'Who are the men building this building?' The Aramaic emphatic form marks this as the specific edifice under scrutiny—the Jerusalem temple whose reconstruction had become a point of political concern. BUILDING AND EDIFICATION

en: building | es: edificio | fr: [בְּנִינָא] | de: [בְּנִינָא] Ezra 5:4

בְּנִינוּ H1148 N-proper-ms (1×)

Beninu (personal name: 'our son,' Levite who sealed Nehemiah's covenant)

This personal name appears to mean 'our son' and identifies a Levite who joined in sealing the covenant renewal under Nehemiah's leadership (Nehemiah 10:13). The name form suggests a plural possessive construction. He was among the leaders who committed themselves and the community to faithful observance of the law in post-exilic Jerusalem.

(1×) Personal name of a Levite covenant-sealer in Nehemiah 10:13. Transliterated as 'Beninu' across major versions, the name appears in the list of leaders who formalized the community's renewed commitment to Torah observance after the exile, part of Nehemiah's broader religious and social reforms. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Beninu | es: Beninu | fr: [בְּנִינוּ] | de: [בְּנִינוּ] Neh 10:13

בְּנַס H1149 V-Qal-Perf-3ms (1×)

to be angry, enraged (Aramaic verb for becoming furious)

This Aramaic verb means to be angry or enraged, appearing in Daniel 2:12 describing King Nebuchadnezzar's violent reaction when his wise men could not reveal and interpret his dream. The Aramaic root and its cognates in Syriac and Samaritan convey intense anger. The verse combines this verb with 'greatly enraged' to emphasize the king's explosive fury.

(1×) Describes Nebuchadnezzar's explosive anger in Daniel 2:12 when his counselors failed him. The English 'was enraged' and Spanish 'se enojó' (became angry) capture the king's dangerous fury that led to his death decree against all the wise men of Babylon, setting up Daniel's intervention. ANGER AND INDIGNATION en: was-enraged | es: se-enojó | fr: être-indigné | de: [בנס] Dan 2:12

בִּנְעָא H1150 N-proper-ms (2×)

Binea, a descendant of King Saul through Jonathan's line in the tribe of Benjamin Binea appears in the genealogical records of Benjamin, specifically in the line descending from King Saul through Jonathan. His name is preserved in the parallel genealogies of 1 Chronicles 8 and 9, which trace the Benjaminite families both generally and specifically those who settled in Jerusalem after the exile. These genealogies served to maintain tribal identity and royal lineage even after the monarchy's end, keeping alive the memory of Saul's house alongside David's.

(2×) A personal name in the Saulide genealogy (1 Chronicles 8:37; 9:43), appearing in parallel lists of Jonathan's descendants. The bracketed Hebrew in French and German translations indicates they're preserving the original form, acknowledging this as a proper name without known semantic meaning. His inclusion in both genealogical registers shows the importance of maintaining accurate records of Benjamin's prominent families, especially the royal line. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Binea | es: Bina | fr: [בִּנְעָא] | de: [בִּנְעָא] 1Chr 8:37; 1Chr 9:43

בֶּן־עַמִּי H1151 N-proper-ms (1×)

Ben-Ammi (personal name: 'son of my people,' Lot's son by his younger daughter, ancestor of Ammonites)

This compound name meaning 'son of my people' identifies the child born from Lot's incestuous relationship with his younger daughter after Sodom's destruction (Genesis 19:38). The name became the eponymous ancestor of the Ammonites (bene ammon, 'sons of Ammon'). The naming represents the mother's claim to preserve her people's lineage, albeit through shameful means.

(1×) Personal name of Lot's son in Genesis 19:38, ancestor of the Ammonites. The name's meaning 'son of my people' reflects the desperate circumstances and ethnic preservation motive behind the incestuous union. Consistent transliteration across languages preserves the Hebrew form and its etymological connection to 'Ammon.' PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Ben-Ammi | es: Ben-Ammi | fr: Ben-Ammi | de: Ben-Ammi Gen 19:38

בְּסוֹדְיָה H1152 N-proper-ms (1×)

Besodeiah (personal name: 'in the secret/counsel of Yah,' helped repair Jerusalem's wall)

This theophoric personal name likely means 'in the secret of Yahweh' or 'in Yah's counsel' and identifies one of the builders who helped Nehemiah repair Jerusalem's walls (Nehemiah 3:6). The name suggests intimacy with divine wisdom or being privy to God's plans. He participated in the crucial post-exilic reconstruction of Jerusalem's defenses.

(1×) Personal name of a wall-builder in Nehemiah 3:6. Transliterated consistently as 'Besodeiah' or 'Besodías' (Spanish), the name identifies one of the many volunteers who joined the collaborative effort to restore Jerusalem's walls, each family or individual taking responsibility for specific sections. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Besodeiah | es: Besodías | fr: [בְּסוֹדְיָה] | de: [בְּסוֹדְיָה] Neh 3:6

בֵּסַי H1153 N-proper-ms (2×)

Besai, ancestor of a family of temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from exile

Besai heads a family of Nethinim—temple servants who assisted the Levites in maintaining the temple and its services. His descendants numbered among those who returned from Babylonian exile to restore worship in Jerusalem. The Nethinim likely included both Israelites and foreigners dedicated to temple service, their role being essential though their social status was lower than priests and Levites. The slight variation in spelling between Ezra and Nehemiah (Besai/Besay) reflects normal scribal variation without changing the family identity.

(2×) The name of a Nethinim family head whose descendants returned from exile (Ezra 2:49; Nehemiah 7:52). The parallel lists show minor spelling variation typical of manuscript transmission. Translations either transliterate or bracket the Hebrew to show they're rendering a proper name. The preservation of this name in both exile and return demonstrates how these temple-servant families maintained their identity and calling across generations and displacement. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Besai, Besay | es: Besai, Besai. | fr: [בסי] | de: [בסי] Ezra 2:49; Neh 7:52

בֹּסֶר H1154 N-msc / 3ms (1×)

unripe grapes, sour grapes (collectively: grapes not yet ripened or sweet)

This masculine noun (used collectively) denotes unripe or sour grapes, appearing in prophetic oracles and wisdom literature. Jeremiah 31:29-30 and Ezekiel 18:2 use the proverb about eating sour grapes and children's teeth being set on edge to discuss generational guilt. Job 15:33 employs it metaphorically for premature loss. The term contrasts with ripe, sweet fruit.

(1×) Refers to immature grapes in Job 15:33 with the third masculine singular suffix ('his unripe grapes'). The metaphor describes the wicked person who loses his fruit prematurely, like a vine dropping its unripe grapes before they can mature and ripen, symbolizing unfulfilled potential and divine judgment. GRAPE VINTAGE HARVEST en: unripe-grapes-his | es: su-uva-verde | fr: son-בסרו-lui | de: [בסרו] Job 15:33

בֹּסֶר H1155 N-ms (4×)

Unripe or sour grapes; used both literally of premature fruit and proverbially of inherited guilt.

Denotes grapes that are not yet ripe — either green and hard or sour and astringent. Isaiah 18:5 uses it literally: God will cut away vine branches when the blossom becomes a ripening grape, just before harvest. Job 15:33 compares the wicked to a vine that shakes off its unripe grapes prematurely. But the word is best known from the proverb quoted in Jeremiah 31:29 and Ezekiel 18:2: 'The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge' — a complaint about inherited punishment that both prophets then overturn with the principle of individual responsibility.

(4×) Unripe or sour grapes, used of fruit that has not reached maturity and carries an unpleasant taste. In Isaiah 18:5, it appears in an agricultural metaphor for God's pre-harvest pruning of nations. Job 15:33 compares the wicked to an olive tree casting off its blossoms and a vine dropping its unripe grapes (בִּסְרוֹ). The proverbial use in Jeremiah 31:29-30 and Ezekiel 18:2 — Spanish 'uvas-agrias,' English 'sour-grapes' — embeds the word in a theological argument: the old saying about fathers eating sour grapes and children suffering is declared obsolete. The Arabic cognate ('unripe dates') confirms the core sense of premature, unpalatable fruit. GRAPE VINTAGE HARVEST en: and-unripe-grape, sour-grapes, the-sour-grapes | es: las-uvas-agrias, uvas-agrias, y-agraz | fr: [בסר], [הבסר], [ובסר] | de: [בסר], [הבסר], [ובסר] Isa 18:5; Jer 31:29; Jer 31:30; Ezek 18:2

בְּעָא H1156 V-Qal-Prtcpl-mp (12×)

To ask, request, petition, or seek (Aramaic); in the Piel, to seek diligently or urgently.

An Aramaic verb found exclusively in Daniel, covering the full range of human petition – from political requests to fervent prayer. Daniel 'requested' time from King Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 2:16), then turned to seek mercies from God (Dan 2:18, 23). The word appears in both courtly and devotional registers: Daniel 6:12-14 uses it for his habit of praying three times daily. Spanish 'pedir' (to request) and German 'bitten' (to entreat) capture the petitionary force. The rare Piel in Daniel 4:36 intensifies the seeking, suggesting the urgency of counselors who 'sought out' the restored Nebuchadnezzar.

1. seek / request (11×) To ask, request, or petition someone – whether a human authority or God. This Qal sense encompasses Daniel requesting an audience with the king (Dan 2:16), praying to God for revelation (Dan 2:18, 23), and the decree forbidding petitions to any god or man except the king (Dan 6:8, 13). Daniel 6:12 and 6:14 describe Daniel 'making petition' before God in defiance of the edict. Spanish 'pedir/buscar,' French forms, and German 'bitten' all center on the act of making a humble or formal request. The word bridges courtly protocol and prayerful dependence on God. ASKING AND PRAYING
en: I-would-seek-, and-requested, and-they-sought | es: buscando, busqué-, para-pedir | fr: [אבעא], [בעא], [בעין] | de: bitten, in-Auge, und-bitten Dan 2:13; Dan 2:16; Dan 2:18; Dan 2:23; Dan 2:49

2. seek diligently (Piel intensive) (1×) To seek with heightened intensity or determination, expressed through the Piel stem. The sole occurrence in Daniel 4:36 describes Nebuchadnezzar's counselors and nobles who 'sought him out' diligently after his restoration from madness. The Piel intensification suggests active, perhaps eager pursuit – not merely asking but tracking down. Spanish 'me buscaron' (they sought me) and German 'bitten' are used, though the Piel nuance of thoroughness goes beyond a simple request to imply deliberate, concentrated effort. SEEKING AND SEARCHING en: sought | es: me-buscaron | fr: [בעון] | de: bitten Dan 4:36

בַּעַד H1157 Prep / 3fs (103×)

On behalf of; through; behind; around — a preposition expressing separation, passage, or interposition

A versatile preposition built on the idea of separation or interposition between two points. In its most frequent usage it means 'on behalf of' or 'for the sake of,' as when priests make atonement for the people. It also marks physical movement through an opening (Rahab lowering the spies through the window, Josh 2:15) and position behind a barrier. Less commonly it expresses encircling protection, causal grounds, or a rare temporal sense. The range from spatial 'behind' to abstract 'on behalf of' reflects a single conceptual thread: something standing between subject and object.

1. on behalf of, for the sake of (50×) The dominant benefactive sense, appearing roughly half the time. Arabic renders it with purposive prepositions ( ), Korean with 위하여, and Swahili with kwa ajili ya — all confirming the 'for the benefit of' reading. Typical in priestly contexts where atonement is made 'for' someone (Lev 9:7, 16:6). The pronominal suffixes (בַּעֲדִי, בַּעֲדוֹ) attach directly to indicate the beneficiary. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-for, and-on-behalf-of, dens | es: por, por-mí, y-por | fr: derrière, derrière-moi, et-dans-jusqu'à | de: [בעד], fuer-mich, und-auf-behalf-von Gen 20:7; Exod 8:28; Lev 9:7; Lev 16:6

2. through, via passage (19×) Spatial passage through an opening or gap, as when Rahab lets the spies down through the window (Josh 2:15) or Sisera's mother peers through the lattice (Judg 5:28). Arabic and Korean 통하여 both point to 'through' rather than 'behind,' distinguishing this from the positional sense. The underlying notion of separation — moving away from one side to emerge on the other — is the etymological core. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-through, for, through | es: Acaso-a-través-de, Por, a-través-de | fr: dans-jusqu'à, derrière, et-dans-jusqu'à | de: der-wegen, durch, durch- Gen 26:8; Exod 32:30; Deut 9:20; Josh 2:15; Judg 5:28

3. behind, after (19×) Positional 'behind,' indicating location or motion at the rear of something. God shuts the door behind Noah (Gen 7:16); the fat closes behind the blade (Judg 3:22). Arabic and German hinter consistently render this spatial sense. The preposition here marks what is on the far side of a barrier, preserving the root idea of separation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: and-behind, and-for, and-for- | es: de-detrás-de, detrás-de, detrás-de-ella | fr: autour, derrière, derrière-eux | de: hinter, hinter-du, hinter-ihm Gen 7:16; Lev 9:7; Judg 3:22; Judg 3:23; Judg 9:51

4. around, encircling (8×) A sense of surrounding or encircling, especially divine protection. Job 1:10 is the paradigm passage: God has 'hedged him around' on every side. Arabic and Swahili kuzunguka confirm 'around' rather than 'behind.' Also in Ps 3:3 where God is a shield 'around' the psalmist. The encirclement reading naturally extends from interposition to encompassment. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: about-me, and-around, around-him | es: alrededor-de-mí, contra-mí, por-él | fr: dans-à-cause-de, derrière-lui, et-derrière | de: [בעד], hinter, in-Iddo Job 1:10; Job 3:23; Ps 3:3

5. on account of, because of (3×) A causal sense — 'on account of, because of' — appearing in Gen 20:18 (the LORD closed wombs on account of Sarah), 1 Sam 1:6, and Prov 6:26. Arabic and Swahili kwa sababu ya mark this as genuinely causal rather than benefactive. The semantic development from 'for the sake of' to 'because of' follows a common cross-linguistic path. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: around, on-account-of, over | es: a-causa-de, detrás-de, por | fr: au-dessus, autour, derrière | de: -, um, wegen Gen 20:18; 1Sam 1:6; Prov 6:26

6. (2×) Two occurrences in Job 2:4, where Satan says 'skin for skin' — a proverbial exchange formula. The precise nuance is debated; multilingual renderings split between 'for' (exchange) and 'on account of.' The context suggests a transactional 'in exchange for,' making it a specialized usage distinct from simple benefaction or causation. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: for | es: por | fr: derrière | de: wegen Job 2:4

7. temporal: within, after (time) (2×) A rare temporal-adverbial usage, attested in 1 Sam 4:18 (where Eli had judged Israel forty years) and Isa 7:8 (within sixty-five years). Arabic غَيَ and Swahili na-ndani-ya support reading this as 'within' or 'after' a period of time — an extension of the spatial 'within a boundary' to the temporal domain. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-in-yet, beside | es: al-lado-de, y-dentro-de | fr: et-dans-encore, à-côté-de | de: neben, und-in-noch 1Sam 4:18; Isa 7:8

בָּעָה H1158 V-Qal-Imperf-3fs (5×)

To inquire, seek; to cause to boil up, swell; (Niphal) to be searched out, to bulge.

This rare verb covers a surprising semantic range, from intellectual seeking to physical swelling. In Isaiah 21:12 it appears twice as an invitation to inquire of the prophet about Edom's fate. In Isaiah 64:2 it describes fire causing water to boil. The Niphal forms yield yet further nuance: in Obadiah 1:6 Esau's hidden treasures are 'searched out,' while in Isaiah 30:13 a crumbling wall is described as 'bulging' before collapse. The Aramaic cognate bea supports the 'seek/inquire' meaning, while Arabic bagha adds the 'swell/suppurate' dimension.

(5×) To seek, inquire, or ask, especially of a prophetic oracle. Used in Isaiah 21:12 where the watchman invites Edomite inquirers to return and ask again. The Aramaic cognate (bea, 'seek') and Niphal passive 'searched out' in Obadiah 1:6 both reinforce this core meaning of deliberate investigation. The Spanish 'descubiertos' (discovered) for the Niphal nicely captures the result of being sought out. ASKING AND PRAYING

en: bulging, causes-to-boil, have-been-sought-out | es: abultándose, fueron-descubiertos, hace-hervir- | fr: [בעי], [נבעה], [תבעה] | de: [בעי], [נבעה], [תבעה] Isa 21:12; Isa 30:13; Isa 64:2; Obad 1:6

בְּעוּ H1159 N-fs (2×)

petition, request; Aramaic term used in Daniel for a formal legal plea or supplication

This Aramaic word appears in the account of Daniel and the lions' den, specifically in the decree forbidding petitions to any god or man except King Darius. The term carries formal, legal weight—not a casual request but an official petition with legal standing. The cognate accusative construction ('petition a petition') intensifies the formal nature of the prohibition. This terminology reflects the Persian administrative context where Daniel served, where formal petitions and decrees governed the empire's religious and civil life.

(2×) An Aramaic noun meaning a formal petition or request (Daniel 6:7, 13), appearing in the decree that prohibited asking anything of any god or man except the king. The possessive form 'his petition' refers to anyone's request during the thirty-day period. Some translations bracket the Aramaic forms, highlighting this is a technical legal term in the Persian court context where the narrative unfolds. PETITIONS AND REQUESTS

en: his-petition, petition | es: petición, su-petición | fr: [בע], [בעותה] | de: [בע], [בעותה] Dan 6:7; Dan 6:13

בְּעוֹר H1160 N-proper-ms (10×)

Beor — proper name: (1) father of Bela, king of Edom; (2) father of the prophet Balaam

Beor (בְּעוֹר) is a personal name borne by two distinct figures in the Hebrew Bible. The first is the father of Bela, an early king of Edom who reigned before any Israelite king (Gen 36:32; 1 Chr 1:43). The second and far more prominent is the father of Balaam, the Mesopotamian diviner summoned by Balak to curse Israel (Num 22:5; 24:3, 15; 31:8; Deut 23:5; Josh 13:22; 24:9; Mic 6:5). The patronymic 'son of Beor' becomes virtually a fixed epithet for Balaam. The name may derive from the root b-'-r, meaning 'to burn' or 'to consume.' Spanish and English both transliterate as 'Beor.'

Beor (10×) A personal name identifying two individuals: (a) father of Bela, an early Edomite king who ruled before the Israelite monarchy (Gen 36:32; 1 Chr 1:43); and (b) father of the prophet-diviner Balaam, where 'son of Beor' functions as a near-fixed patronymic (Num 22:5; 24:3, 15; Deut 23:5; Josh 13:22; 24:9; Mic 6:5). Whether these are the same person is debated; the Edomite and Mesopotamian settings suggest two distinct bearers. The name possibly means 'burning' from the root ב-ע-ר. Spanish 'Beor' and French 'Béor' preserve the form. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Be'or, Beor | es: Beor | fr: Beor, Béor, [בעור] | de: Beor, Beors, [בעור] Gen 36:32; Num 22:5; Num 24:3; Num 24:15; Num 31:8

בְּעוּתִים H1161 N-mpc (2×)

terrors, alarms; divine terrors or frightening manifestations sent by God

This rare plural noun describes the terrors that God himself sends—frightening manifestations of divine judgment or power. Job uses it parallel to 'the arrows of the Almighty,' suggesting these are active assaults from God rather than passive fears. The Psalmist likewise speaks of God's terrors overwhelming him. The term conveys not merely human fright but objective sources of terror that God deploys, whether in judgment or discipline, that genuinely assault and overwhelm the sufferer.

(2×) Plural noun for divinely sent terrors or alarms (Job 6:4; Psalm 88:16), always appearing with reference to God as their source. In Job, 'the terrors of God' stand parallel to God's poisoned arrows, showing these are active divine assaults on the sufferer. The Psalmist's 'your terrors' similarly depicts objective frightening experiences sent by God. Some translations bracket the Hebrew to indicate the technical nature of this term for divine afflictions. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: terrors-of, your-terrors | es: terrores-de, terrores-de-ti | fr: dans-effroi, בעותי | de: [בעות], dein-terrors Job 6:4; Ps 88:16

בֹּעַז H1162 Prep-l / N-proper-ms (24×)

Boaz – kinsman-redeemer of Ruth in Bethlehem; also the name of the left pillar in Solomon's temple

Best known as the generous landowner of Bethlehem who became Ruth's kinsman-redeemer, marrying the Moabite widow and thus entering the ancestral line of David and ultimately of Jesus the Messiah (Ruth 2-4; Matt 1:5). The etymology is debated – possibly 'in him is strength' or 'swiftness.' The name also designates the left-hand bronze pillar erected before Solomon's temple (1 Kgs 7:21; 2 Chr 3:17), perhaps inscribed as a memorial or bearing the meaning 'in strength.' The Septuagint of 2 Chronicles 3:17 renders it as ischus ('strength'), preserving this etymological thread. A minor Calebite descendant also bears the name (1 Chr 2:11-12).

Boaz (24×) The proper name Boaz (בֹּעַז), referring primarily to the wealthy Bethlehemite kinsman-redeemer who married Ruth the Moabitess (Ruth 2-4), securing the Davidic and messianic lineage. Also designates the left pillar at Solomon's temple entrance (1 Kgs 7:21; 2 Chr 3:17), where the LXX of Chronicles renders it as ischus ('strength'), hinting at the possible etymology 'in him is strength.' The German rendering in-Kraft for the pillar occurrence uniquely preserves this etymological interpretation across translation traditions. A minor Calebite figure also bears the name (1 Chr 2:47). PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Boaz, and-Boaz | es: Boaz, Y-Boaz, y-Boaz | fr: Boaz, [בעז], et-Boaz | de: Boaz, [בעז], in-Kraft Ruth 2:1; Ruth 2:3; Ruth 2:4; Ruth 2:5; Ruth 2:8

בָּעַט H1163 V-Qal-Imperf-2mp (2×)

to kick, kick at; used figuratively of Israel's rebellion and Eli's sons' contempt

This verb appears only twice, both times metaphorically depicting rebellious disrespect. Moses describes Israel grown fat and prosperous as kicking against God's care—the image of a well-fed animal becoming unruly and kicking its provider. God confronts Eli about his sons 'kicking at' the sacrifices, showing contempt for holy things by taking more than their share. The agricultural metaphor captures both ingratitude and active rebellion—not passive neglect but aggressive spurning of God's provision and law.

(2×) A verb meaning to kick or kick at, used figuratively in both occurrences (Deuteronomy 32:15; 1 Samuel 2:29). Translations across languages preserve the kicking imagery, with variations in handling the prepositional phrase in 1 Samuel ('kick at'). The metaphor draws from livestock behavior—animals that kick their feeders when well-fed—to depict human ingratitude and contempt toward divine provision and sacred ordinances. TRAMPLING AND TREADING

en: and-kicked, do-you-kick-at | es: coceáis, y-coceó | fr: et-kicked, fais-tu-méprise-à | de: tue-du-kick-bei, und-kicked Deut 32:15; 1Sam 2:29

עִי H1164 Prep-b / N-ms (1×)

ruin, heap of ruins (poetic term for devastation and desolation)

This masculine noun means ruin or heap of ruins, used poetically to describe devastation. Job 30:24 employs it in a difficult verse describing divine judgment or calamity. The term appears in prophetic oracles depicting cities reduced to rubble. The Aramaic form 'iyyim appears in some texts, showing lexical overlap between Hebrew and Aramaic vocabulary in poetic contexts.

(1×) Denotes a heap of ruins in Job 30:24 within a challenging poetic passage. The prepositional phrase 'against heap/ruin' appears in Job's lament about suffering and mortality. The Spanish 'contra ruina' and English 'against heap' preserve the stark imagery of destruction, though the verse's exact sense remains debated by interpreters. DESTRUCTION AND DECAY

en: against-heap | es: contra-ruina | fr: dans-בעי | de: [בעי] Job 30:24

בְּעִיר H1165 N-msc / 3mp (7×)

Beasts, cattle, or livestock — a collective noun for domesticated animals, especially beasts of burden

A collective masculine noun (בְּעִיר) denoting domesticated animals or livestock in general, with cognates across Semitic languages (Aramaic, Syriac, Ethiopic, Arabic — where it specifically denotes a camel). In Hebrew it covers beasts of burden such as donkeys (Gen 45:17, referring back to the brothers' asses) as well as cattle more broadly. It appears in legal texts governing livestock damage (Exod 22:4-5) and in wilderness narrative where Israel pleads for water for their livestock (Num 20:4, 8, 11).

beasts, cattle, livestock (7×) Domesticated animals or livestock viewed collectively, including beasts of burden and cattle. In Genesis 45:17, Joseph tells his brothers to load their בְּעִיר (donkeys, cf. 44:3, 13). In the Covenant Code (Exod 22:4-5), the term appears in a law about grazing damage. In Numbers 20:4, 8, 11, it covers the congregation's livestock needing water at Meribah, and in Psalm 78:48 it parallels flocks destroyed by hail. The Spanish ganado and French bétail both capture the collective 'livestock' sense. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: [his-beast], and-our-livestock, and-their-livestock | es: (su-ganado), [su-ganado], bestias-vuestras | fr: [son-bête], dans-bétail, et-leur-bétail | de: [sein-Tier], eure-Lasttiere, ihr-Vieh Gen 45:17; Exod 22:5; Num 20:4; Num 20:8

בָּעַל H1166 V-Qal-QalPassPrtcpl-fs (16×)

To marry, take as wife; also to be master or lord over, exercising authority or ownership — the two senses sharing the root idea of possession.

Few Hebrew roots reveal cultural assumptions as starkly as בָּעַל. Its primary meaning is 'to marry' or 'to be husband to,' but it simultaneously carries 'to be master of, to rule over,' because in the ancient Near Eastern conceptual world, the husband was the 'owner' (בַּעַל) of the household. Isaiah plays on both senses brilliantly: 'your Maker is your husband' (Isa 54:5), where God is simultaneously spouse and sovereign. Jeremiah's God says, 'I was a husband to them' (Jer 31:32) — or perhaps 'I was master over them' — and the ambiguity is likely deliberate. The multilingual evidence is revealing: Spanish splits between 'desposada' (betrothed) and 'señor' (lord), while French sometimes merges both into 'épouser.'

1. marry, be husband to (11×) To marry or be husband to — entering into or maintaining a marital relationship. The Qal active describes the act of taking a wife (Gen 20:3; Deut 21:13; 22:22; 24:1), while the Qal passive participle בְּעוּלָה means 'married woman' (Isa 54:1; 62:4). Isaiah 62:5 uses the verb twice in parallel: 'as a young man marries a young woman, so shall your sons marry you.' Spanish 'casada' and 'desposada' distinguish the state from the act, while German 'heiraten' and 'ist verheiratet' make the same distinction. The Proverbs passage (30:23) lists a maidservant who 'displaces her mistress' when she is married — using this root to mark the social transformation. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: Married, and-has-married, and-marries-her | es: Desposada, casada-con-, la-casada | fr: et-dans-sur, et-marries-sa, et-tu-devra-marry-sa | de: [חבעל], heiraten, ist-verheiratet Gen 20:3; Deut 21:13; Deut 22:22; Deut 24:1; Prov 30:23

2. be master of, rule over (5×) To be master of, lord over, or rule — exercising authority, dominion, or ownership. This sense appears in contexts where the marital metaphor fades and raw authority remains: 'other lords besides you have ruled over us' (Isa 26:13), and the disputed passages in Jeremiah where God says 'I was master over them' (Jer 3:14; 31:32). First Chronicles 4:22 records men who 'ruled over' Moab. The cognate noun בַּעַל (owner, lord, Baal) shows how deeply the concept of mastery pervades this root. Spanish 'señor' and the French rendering 'dans sur toi' (over you) both emphasize the power dynamic. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: am-your-master, have-ruled-over-us, ruled | es: fui-señor, gobernaron, me-desposé | fr: [בעלו], dans-sur-toi, épouser | de: [בעלו], heiraten, in-ueber-dich 1Chr 4:22; Isa 26:13; Isa 54:5; Jer 3:14; Jer 31:32

בַּעַל H1167 N-mpc / 3ms (83×)

Owner, master, lord; husband; lords/citizens of a city; one possessing a quality (idiomatic 'ba'al of X')

Perhaps no Hebrew noun better illustrates how a single word can anchor an entire social world than ba'al. At its core it means 'owner' or 'master' — the man responsible for an ox that gores (Exod 21:28-29), the proprietor of a house that shelters guests (Judg 19:22-23), the creditor who holds a debt (Deut 15:2). Yet the same word designates the leading citizens or lords of a city, as with the infamous 'lords of Shechem' whose treachery dominates Judges 9. In domestic life, ba'al is the natural word for 'husband,' and Hosea 2:16 plays brilliantly on the tension: 'You will call me ishi (my man) and no longer call me ba'ali (my ba'al)' — rejecting the word's association with the Canaanite storm god. The idiomatic construction 'ba'al of X' creates a versatile attributive: ba'al of dreams (Gen 37:19), ba'al of a covenant (Gen 14:13), even ba'al of wings (Prov 1:17).

1. owner or master of property (40×) The primary legal-economic sense of owner or master of property — 40 occurrences spanning ownership of animals (Exod 21:28-29, 34; 22:8-14), houses (Judg 19:22-23), fields (Job 31:39), pits (Exod 21:34), and debts (Deut 15:2). The Covenant Code in Exodus 21-22 alone accounts for a dense cluster, establishing ba'al as the default legal term for a property holder with attendant liability. Spanish dueno, Hindi malik, Korean juin, and Swahili mwenye all converge on this proprietary core, while German Herr preserves the 'lord/master' overtone that English 'owner' flattens. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: against-its-owner, is-master-of, its-owner | es: a-su-dueño, a-sus-dueños, dueño-de | fr: contre-son-maître, dans-sur, maître-de | de: Herr, Herr-von, [בעל] Gen 37:19; Exod 21:3; Exod 21:22; Exod 21:28; Exod 21:29

2. lord or ruler of a city (27×) The civic-political sense of lords, rulers, or leading citizens of a city or region — 27 occurrences, most prominently the 'ba'alei Shechem' whose volatile alliance with Abimelech drives the narrative of Judges 9. Also applied to the lords of Jericho (Josh 24:11), the archers who harassed Joseph (Gen 49:23, where ba'alei chitstsim literally means 'masters of arrows'), and the rulers of Moab's high places (Num 21:28). Spanish senores de and French maitres de mark the feudal-civic authority, while the plural construct chain ba'alei + city name functions as a near-technical political designation throughout the Deuteronomistic History. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: lords-of, lords-of-, masters-of | es: dueños-de, los-señores-de, señores-de | fr: lords-de, lords-de-, maîtres-de | de: Herren-von, Herren-von-, die-Herren Gen 49:23; Num 21:28; Josh 24:11; Judg 9:2; Judg 9:3

3. husband (12×) The domestic-relational sense of husband or marital lord — 12 occurrences where ba'al designates a woman's spouse. Deuteronomy 22:22 and 24:4 use it in divorce and adultery legislation; 2 Samuel 11:26 applies it to Uriah in the Bathsheba narrative; and Hosea 2:16 famously exploits the word's dual resonance with the Canaanite deity. Arabic ba'l (husband) and Akkadian belu confirm the ancient Semitic breadth of the term. The intimate domestic application of a word meaning 'owner/lord' has generated centuries of feminist and theological commentary. MARRIAGE AND MASTERY

en: a-husband, her-husband, her-lord | es: a-sus-maridos, como-esposo, esposo | fr: [בעליהן], [לבעליהן], dans-sur | de: Baal, Herr, ein-husband Gen 20:3; Lev 21:4; Deut 22:22; Deut 24:4; 2Sam 11:26

4. one characterized by a quality (2×) The idiomatic attributive construction 'ba'al of X' meaning 'one characterized by or possessing a quality' — two occurrences in the data, though the pattern is widespread in Hebrew. Proverbs 1:17 speaks of a ba'al of wings (a winged creature), and Isaiah 41:15 describes a new threshing-sledge as a ba'al of teeth (having sharp edges). Arabic dhu (possessor of) functions identically, and this construction underlies compound expressions throughout the Hebrew Bible like ba'al of dreams (Gen 37:19), ba'al of anger (Prov 22:24), and ba'al of a covenant (Gen 14:13). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: having-teeth, owner-of | es: ave, dueño | fr: dans-sur, maître | de: Herr, in-ueber Prov 1:17; Isa 41:15

5. (1×) A single occurrence in Genesis 14:13 where ba'alei berit designates 'covenant partners' or 'allies' of Abram — Mamre, Eshcol, and Aner. The construct ba'alei berit (literally 'masters/possessors of a covenant') represents a diplomatic-treaty idiom where ba'al extends from property ownership to treaty obligation. Spanish aliados de ('allies of') captures the relational force, while English 'possessors of' retains the literal construct. This bridges Senses 1 and 4: the 'ownership' is metaphorical, applying to a mutual pact rather than property. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: possessors-of | es: aliados-de | fr: possessors-de | de: waren-Bundesgenossen Gen 14:13

6. (1×) A single occurrence in Jeremiah 37:13 where ba'al peqiddut designates a 'captain of the guard' or 'officer of oversight' — literally a 'master/lord of visitation/inspection.' The term applies to Irijah, who arrests Jeremiah at the Benjamin Gate on suspicion of defection. Spanish jefe de ('chief of') and German Hauptmann capture the military-administrative authority. This specialized title extends the ba'al-of-X attributive pattern (Sense 4) into institutional-military terminology, showing the root's productivity in official nomenclature. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: officer-of | es: jefe-de | fr: dans-sur | de: in-ueber Jer 37:13

בַּעַל H1168a Art / N-proper-ms (76×)

Baal — the Canaanite storm deity; in the plural Baalim, the various local cult manifestations of Baal worship.

Ba'al as a divine name refers to the chief Canaanite storm and fertility god whose worship constituted Israel's most persistent spiritual rival. When Elijah confronts the prophets on Mount Carmel (1 Kgs 18:21), the singular ha-Ba'al denotes this specific deity. The plural form Be'alim — rendered by Spanish los Baales, French le Baalim, and German der Baale — appears in Judges and the Deuteronomistic summaries to name the many local shrine manifestations of this cult, each town having its own 'Baal.' The recurring refrain 'they served the Baalim' (Judg 2:11; 3:7; 10:6) functions as a shorthand for the whole history of Israel's apostasy.

1. Baal (the deity) (54×) The singular Canaanite deity Ba'al, the storm god whose worship rivaled YHWH. All translations treat this as a proper name: spa. el-Baal, fra. le-Baal, deu. der-Baal, with the definite article marking the specific god. Elijah's challenge on Carmel (1 Kgs 18:21) and Gideon's destruction of Baal's altar (Judg 6:25-32) are defining passages. BAAL WORSHIP en: the-Baal | es: el-Baal, ¡Oh-Baal | fr: le-Baal | de: der-Baal Judg 6:25; Judg 6:28; Judg 6:30; Judg 6:32; 1Kgs 16:31

2. the Baals (cult manifestations) (22×) The plural Be'alim — the various local manifestations, cult images, or regional forms of Baal worship across Canaan. Spanish los Baales and French le Baalim preserve the plural, signaling multiplicity. The Deuteronomistic formula 'they abandoned the LORD and served the Baalim' (Judg 2:11; 10:6) uses this plural as a collective indictment of syncretic worship across Israel's history. BAAL WORSHIP

en: by-the-Baal, for-the-Baalim, for-the-Baals | es: los-Baales, los-baales, para-los-baales | fr: Baal, le-Baalim, le-Baals | de: Baal, der-Baale, der-Baalim Judg 2:11; Judg 3:7; Judg 8:33; Judg 10:6; Judg 10:10

בָּעַל H1168b Conj-w / N-proper-ms (4×)

Baal (II); a place name in Simeon and a personal name for a Reubenite and two Gibeonites.

Distinguished from the deity name Baal, this homograph functions as both a place name and a personal name. As a place, it designates a city in the tribal territory of Simeon (1 Chr 4:33), identified with Baalath-Beer elsewhere. As a personal name, it is borne by a Reubenite (1 Chr 5:5), and by a Gibeonite ancestor of Saul listed in 1 Chronicles 8:30 and 9:36. The name's association with the Canaanite deity is incidental here — these are simply individuals and a town bearing a once-common Semitic name meaning 'lord' or 'master.'

(4×) A proper noun — either a Simeonite town (1 Chr 4:33, equivalent to Baalath-Beer) or a personal name borne by a Reubenite (1 Chr 5:5) and a Gibeonite (1 Chr 8:30; 9:36). French and German render it in brackets ([בעל]) as a transliteration, while Spanish and English use 'Baal' directly. Unlike the deity Baal worshipped by Canaanites, this homograph functions purely as a geographic or genealogical identifier, though both derive from the common Semitic root meaning 'lord, master, owner.' BAAL WORSHIP en: Ba'al, and-Baal | es: Baal, y-Baal | fr: [בעל], [ובעל] | de: [בעל], [ובעל] 1Chr 4:33; 1Chr 5:5; 1Chr 8:30; 1Chr 9:36

בְּעֵל H1169 N-msc (3×)

lord, master (Aramaic); official title meaning 'commander' or 'chief officer'

An Aramaic word meaning 'lord' or 'master,' cognate to Hebrew ba'al. In Ezra, it appears in the title 'beel teem' (master of the decree/commander), referring to a Persian official responsible for correspondence and administration—possibly a provincial governor or regional commander. The title occurs three times in Ezra 4 (vv. 8, 9, 17) in official letters concerning the Jerusalem rebuilding. The term functions as a bureaucratic title, not a personal name, designating rank within the Persian imperial hierarchy.

(3×) A title for a Persian administrative official: 'master of decree' or 'commander.' Rehum the 'beel teem' (commander) and Shimshai the scribe write to Artaxerxes opposing Jerusalem's reconstruction (Ezra 4:8, 9). The king's reply is addressed to them using the same title (Ezra 4:17). Translations render this as 'commanding officer' or leave transliterated, recognizing it as an official designation within Persian governance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: master-of | es: maestro-de- | fr: in-sur | de: Baal Ezra 4:8; Ezra 4:9; Ezra 4:17

בַּעַל H1170 N-proper-ms (2×)

Baal-berith, 'lord of the covenant,' a Canaanite deity worshiped at Shechem after Gideon's death

This deity represents a syncretistic form of Baal worship that incorporated covenant language, possibly attempting to merge Canaanite and Israelite religious concepts. After Gideon's death, the Israelites quickly turned to this god worshiped at Shechem, breaking their covenant with the LORD. The name 'lord of the covenant' suggests this cult may have offered a rival covenant relationship to seduce Israelites away from exclusive devotion to Yahweh. The shrine seems to have been wealthy enough to fund Abimelech's violent rise to power with silver from its treasury.

(2×) The name of a Canaanite deity worshiped at Shechem (Judges 8:33; 9:4), literally meaning 'Baal of the covenant.' The uniform transliteration across languages reflects this as a specific divine name rather than a descriptive phrase. The ironic juxtaposition of Baal worship with covenant terminology shows how Israelites adopted Canaanite religious forms while trying to maintain covenant language, creating a syncretism that Scripture presents as apostasy from the true covenant with the LORD. BAAL WORSHIP en: Baal-berith | es: Baal-Berit | fr: Baal-berith | de: Baal-berith Judg 8:33; Judg 9:4

בַּעַל גָּד H1171 Prep / N-proper-fs (3×)

Baal-gad, a northern boundary site meaning 'Baal of Gad/ Fortune'; at the foot of Hermon

A place name marking Israel's northern territorial limit under Joshua, meaning 'Baal of Gad' (Gad being the god of fortune). The site lay 'in the valley of Lebanon at the foot of Mount Hermon' (Joshua 11:17; 13:5) and defined the northern extent of Joshua's conquests (Joshua 12:7). The name indicates a Canaanite shrine where Baal was worshiped as Gad, the deity of fortune. Proposed identifications include Banias (Caesarea Philippi) or Hasbaya. The phrase 'from Baal-gad' functions as a geographical benchmark for the full scope of the conquest.

(3×) The northernmost point of Israelite conquest, a town in the Lebanon valley near Mount Hermon. Joshua's campaigns extended 'from Baal-gad in the Valley of Lebanon below Mount Hermon' to the southern Negev (Joshua 11:17; 12:7; 13:5). The name suggests a Canaanite cult site dedicated to Baal as the god of fortune (Gad). The location served as a fixed geographic marker for Israel's northern boundary. GAD PROPER NAME

en: Baal-Gad, from-Baal-Gad | es: Baal-Gad, desde-Baal-Gad | fr: Baal-Gad, de-Baal-Gad | de: Baal-Gad, von-Baal-Gad Josh 11:17; Josh 12:7; Josh 13:5

בְּעָלָה H1172 N-fsc (4×)

Mistress, female owner; a woman who possesses or is characterized by something — a household, sorcery, or necromancy.

The feminine counterpart of בַּעַל ('master, owner'), used to describe a woman defined by what she possesses or practices. In 1 Kings 17:17, the 'mistress of the house' (בַּעֲלַת הַבַּיִת) is the widow of Zarephath who hosted Elijah — a dignified title of domestic authority. In 1 Samuel 28:7, the same construction identifies the famous 'mistress of a spirit' (בַּעֲלַת אוֹב), the medium at Endor whom Saul consulted. Nahum 3:4 applies it to Nineveh as 'mistress of sorceries' (בַּעֲלַת כְּשָׁפִים), personifying the city as a seductive enchantress.

(4×) A woman who owns, possesses, or is characterized by a particular domain or skill. The construct בַּעֲלַת ('mistress of') links to a following noun to define the relationship: 'mistress of the house' in 1 Kings 17:17 (French 'maîtresse,' Spanish 'dueña-de'), 'mistress of a necromantic spirit' at Endor (1 Sam 28:7), and 'mistress of sorceries' describing Nineveh's seductive power (Nah 3:4). German 'mistress-von' and English 'mistress-of' both preserve the possessive construct. The word dignifies the woman's authority over her sphere — whether a household, a forbidden craft, or an empire's dark allure. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: mistress-of | es: dueña-de, dueña-de- | fr: maîtresse, mistress-de | de: [בעלת], mistress-von 1Sam 28:7; 1Kgs 17:17; Nah 3:4

בַּעֲלָה H1173 N-proper-fs / 3fs (5×)

Baalah: a city in Judah, identified with Kiriath-Jearim and Kiriath-Baal, a former center of Baal worship.

Baalah is a place name in the territory of Judah, meaning 'lady' or 'mistress,' pointing to an earlier association with Baal worship at a local high place. It is identified with Kiriath-Jearim (the city of forests) and Kiriath-Baal (the city of Baal), and appears in the boundary descriptions of Judah in Joshua 15:9-11. Notably, 1 Chronicles 13:6 mentions it as the place from which David brought up the ark. A second Baalah in Joshua 15:29 is a town in the Negev district. The Spanish rendering 'Baala' with its accent reflects the effort to preserve the Hebrew vowel pattern across languages.

(5×) A proper place name designating a city in Judah equated with Kiriath-Jearim and Kiriath-Baal (Josh 15:9-11; 1 Chr 13:6), from which David transported the ark. The name means 'mistress/lady,' signaling a pre-Israelite Canaanite cult site. A second location called Baalah in Joshua 15:29 lies in the southern Negev district. French and German glosses sometimes retain the untransliterated Hebrew, reflecting the difficulty of standardizing Canaanite theophoric place names. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Baalah, Baalatah, from-Baalah | es: Baalá, a-Baalata, desde-Baalá | fr: Baalah, [בעלתה], de-Baalah | de: Baalah, [בעלתה], der-Baalah Josh 15:9; Josh 15:10; Josh 15:11; Josh 15:29; 1Chr 13:6

בַּעַל הָמוֹן H1174 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

Baal-Hamon (place name: 'possessor of abundance,' location of Solomon's vineyard in Song of Songs)

This compound place name means 'possessor of abundance' or 'Baal of the multitude' and appears only in Song of Songs 8:11 as the location of Solomon's vineyard. The first element 'Baal' may be the divine name or simply 'possessor/lord.' The site's identification remains uncertain. The context emphasizes the vineyard's great value and productivity.

(1×) Names the location of Solomon's valuable vineyard in Song of Songs 8:11. The prepositional phrase 'in Baal-Hamon' situates this wealthy agricultural property, whose abundant production contrasts with the Shulammite's personal vineyard. The place name's meaning 'possessor of abundance' may be descriptive or etymological wordplay. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-Baal-Hamon | es: en-Baal-Hamón | fr: à-Baal-Hamôn; | de: [בבעל המון] Song 8:11

בְּעָלוֹת H1175 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Bealoth, a town in southern Judah near the Philistine border, possibly identical with another Baal-named site

Bealoth was a settlement in Judah's southern territory, listed among the cities toward the Philistine frontier and also named in connection with Solomon's administrative districts. The name's plural form may indicate 'heights' or 'mistresses,' potentially reflecting Baal worship sites. Some scholars suggest it may be the same location as other Baal-compound place names in the region, showing how Canaanite religious toponymy persisted even in Israelite territorial lists.

(2×) A place name in southern Judah (Joshua 15:24; 1 Kings 4:16), appearing with conjunctive and prepositional prefixes that show its function in territorial and administrative lists. Translations preserve the name while handling the grammatical particles differently—some including 'and' or 'in' as separate words, others compounding them. The persistence of this Baal-related toponym in Judah's inheritance illustrates the long process of displacing Canaanite religious geography. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Bealoth, and-in-Bealoth | es: y-Bealot, y-en-Bealot | fr: et-Bealoth, et-dans-Bealoth | de: und-Bealoth, und-in-Bealoth Josh 15:24; 1Kgs 4:16

בַּעַל H1176 Prep / N-proper-ms (4×)

Baal-Zebub; the deity of Ekron whose name means 'lord of the flies,' consulted by King Ahaziah.

A compound divine name meaning 'lord of the flies,' designating the Philistine deity worshipped at Ekron. All four occurrences appear in 2 Kings 1:2-16, where King Ahaziah of Israel, after falling through a lattice, sends messengers to inquire of Baal-Zebub whether he will recover. Elijah intercepts them with a stinging rebuke: 'Is it because there is no God in Israel that you go to inquire of Baal-Zebub?' The name may be a deliberate Hebrew distortion of an original 'Baal-Zebul' ('lord of the exalted dwelling'), turned into 'lord of flies' as a polemical insult against the foreign god.

(4×) The Philistine deity of Ekron, 'lord of the flies' (בַּעַל זְבוּב), consulted by the injured King Ahaziah in 2 Kings 1:2, 3, 6, 16. Every translation tradition preserves the compound name: Spanish 'Baal-zebub,' French 'Baal-Zebub,' German 'Baal-Zebub,' English

'Baal-Zebub.' The prepositional form (לבעל זבוב, 'to Baal-Zebub') marks Ahaziah's act of seeking an oracle from a foreign god rather than from the LORD — the central offense that Elijah denounces. Scholars suspect the original name was Baal-Zebul ('lord of the exalted place'), deliberately corrupted by Hebrew writers to the derisive 'lord of flies.' BAAL WORSHIP

en: of-Baal-Zebub | es: a-Baal-zebub | fr: de-Baal-Zebub | de: von-Baal-Zebub 2Kgs 1:2; 2Kgs 1:3; 2Kgs 1:6; 2Kgs 1:16

בַּעַל חָנָן H1177 N-proper-ms (5×)

Baal-Hanan: 'Baal is gracious,' a name borne by a king of Edom and a Gederite overseer under David.

Baal-Hanan is a theophoric name meaning 'Baal is gracious,' with parallels in Phoenician (Hannibal reversed the elements) and Assyrian (Baalhanunu). Two figures bear this name: a king of Edom who succeeded Shaul (Gen 36:38-39; 1 Chr 1:49-50) and a Gederite appointed over David's olive and sycamore groves (1 Chr 27:28). The persistence of 'Baal' in an Israelite administrative name suggests either pre-monarchic naming conventions or that 'baal' still functioned as a generic title ('lord') rather than exclusively referencing the Canaanite deity.

(5×) A theophoric proper name meaning 'Baal is gracious,' borne by (a) a king of Edom in the line of Esau (Gen 36:38-39; 1 Chr 1:49-50), and (b) a Gederite official overseeing David's olive and sycamore plantations (1 Chr 27:28). The Phoenician cognate Hannibal reverses the same elements, and the Assyrian Baalhanunu confirms the name's wide currency across Semitic cultures. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Ba'al-Chanan, Baal-Chanan, Baal-Hanan | es: Baal-Hanán, Baal-Janan | fr: Baal-Hanan | de: Baal-Chanan, [בעל חנן] Gen 36:38; Gen 36:39; 1Chr 1:49; 1Chr 1:50; 1Chr 27:28

בַּעַל חָצוֹר H1178 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

Baal-Hazor (place name: 'possessor of a court/village,' site where Absalom killed Amnon)

This compound geographical name meaning 'Baal of the court' or 'possessor of an enclosure' identifies the location where Absalom held the sheep-shearing feast that became the occasion for murdering his brother Amnon (2 Samuel 13:23). It was situated on the border between Ephraim and Benjamin. Possible identification with Tell Asur, though not certain.

(1×) Names the site of Absalom's revenge in 2 Samuel 13:23. The prepositional phrase 'in Baal-Hazor' locates the sheep-shearing feast where Absalom orchestrated Amnon's assassination two years after the rape of Tamar. The place name marks this location as the setting for a pivotal moment in David's family tragedy. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-Baal-Hazor | es: en-Baal-Jatsor | fr: dans-Baal-Hazor | de: in-Baal-Hazor 2Sam 13:23

בַּעַל חֶרְמוֹן H1179 N-proper-fs (2×)

Baal-hermon, 'Baal of Hermon,' a city near Mount Hermon marking Israel's northern boundary

This city took its name from Mount Hermon, with the 'Baal' element indicating it was a significant Canaanite cult site before Israelite occupation. Located at the northern extreme of Israelite territory, it marked the boundary of the half-tribe of Manasseh's inheritance. Ancient sources describe Hermon's summit as covered with ruins including a circular temple of large stones, confirming the site's sacred significance in Canaanite religion. The identification with Baal-gad suggests there may have been multiple Baal shrines in this northern region, or that these were alternate names for the same site.

(2×) A place name marking Israel's northern territorial boundary (Judges 3:3; 1 Chronicles 5:23), named for its location near Mount Hermon and its Baal sanctuary. The archaeological evidence of temple ruins on Hermon's crest confirms the sacred character implied by the name. Some translations bracket the Hebrew to show they're preserving an original place name with clear Baal-worship associations, part of the religious geography that Israel was commanded to replace but often absorbed instead. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Ba'al-Chermon, Baal-Chermon | es: Baal-Jermon, Baal-Jermón | fr: Baal-Chermon, [בעל חרמון] | de: Baal-Chermon, [בעל חרמון] Judg 3:3; 1Chr 5:23

בַּעַל H1180 N-msc / 1cs (1×)

owner, lord, husband, master (common noun denoting possessor or one having authority)

This masculine noun fundamentally means owner or possessor, extending to lord, husband, and master depending on context. It denotes legal ownership (owner of an ox, house, pit) or relationship authority (husband, master). In Hosea 2:16, God declares Israel will call him 'my husband' rather than 'my Baal,' playing on the term's dual meaning as both 'husband' and the rival deity's name.

(1×) In Hosea 2:16, 'my Baal' functions as a deliberate double entendre. God says Israel will abandon calling Him 'Baali' (my master/Baal) and instead use 'Ishi' (my husband), purging the vocabulary of pagan associations. The multilingual glosses struggle to capture this wordplay between legitimate meaning (master, husband) and idolatrous connotations. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: my-Baal | es: Mi-baal | fr: dans-sur-moi | de: in-ueber-mich Hos 2:16

בַּעַל H1181

Baal, owner, lord, master; Canaanite storm god whose title became a proper name

This common noun meaning 'owner' or 'master' applied to possessions, land, or relationships (especially marriage), but became infamous as the title-turned-name of Canaan's chief deity. Baal controlled storms, rain, and fertility, directly competing with Yahweh's role. Israel's temptation to worship Baal reached crisis during Ahab's reign, culminating in Elijah's contest on Carmel. The prophets condemned Baal worship as covenant adultery. Biblical writers sometimes deliberately distorted Baal names, replacing the element with 'bosheth' (shame). Yet 'baal' retained its ordinary meaning as owner or husband in secular contexts.

בְּעַלְיָדָע H1182 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Beeliada (personal name: 'Baal knows,' original name of David's son, later changed to Eliada)

This theophoric name meaning 'Baal knows' was originally given to one of David's sons born in Jerusalem (1 Chronicles 14:7). The name was later changed to Eliada ('God knows') in 2 Samuel 5:16, substituting El for Baal to remove the pagan deity's name. This name change reflects growing sensitivity about using 'Baal' in Israelite names.

(1×) Personal name of David's son in 1 Chronicles 14:7, representing the original form before religious revision. The conjunction 'and Beeliada' lists him among David's Jerusalem-born children. The name's Baal element, acceptable in early Israel, was later deemed problematic, leading to the substitution preserved in Samuel's parallel account. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Beelyada | es: y-Beelyada | fr: [ובעלידע] | de: [ובעלידע] 1Chr 14:7

בַּעַלְיָה H1183 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

Bealiah (personal name: 'Yahweh is lord,' warrior who joined David at Ziklag)

This theophoric name means 'Yahweh is lord' and identifies one of the warriors who defected to David while he was at Ziklag, still in exile from Saul (1 Chronicles 12:5). These Benjaminite warriors were ambidextrous archers and slingers. The name affirms divine lordship, contrasting with Baal-compound names by using the Yahweh element.

(1×) Personal name of a warrior in David's growing coalition in 1 Chronicles 12:6. The conjunction 'and Baaliah' lists him among the skilled Benjaminite fighters who recognized David's legitimacy before his kingship was established, representing early supporters who proved crucial to David's eventual success. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Baalyah | es: y-Bealías | fr: [ובעליה] | de: [ובעליה] 1Chr 12:6

בַּעֲלָה H1184 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

Baale-Judah (place name: 'lords/heights of Judah,' alternate name for Kiriath-jearim)

This geographical designation meaning 'Baals of Judah' or 'lords of Judah' is an alternate name for Kiriath-jearim, appearing in 2 Samuel 6:2 when David retrieved the ark from there. The name may reference earlier Baal worship at the high place or simply mean 'heights/citizens of Judah.' It's identified with the same location as Kiriath-baal and Kiriath-jearim.

(1×) Names the location where David went to retrieve the ark in 2 Samuel 6:2. The prepositional phrase 'from Baale-Judah' identifies the starting point of the ark's journey to Jerusalem. The Baal element may recall the site's pre-Israelite cultic associations or simply denote 'possessors/citizens of Judah' as a territorial designation. JUDAH JUDAS NAME

en: from-Baale-Judah | es: de-Baale-Yehudah | fr: de-Baale-Juda | de: von-Baale-Juda 2Sam 6:2

בַּעֲלִיס H1185 N-proper-ms (1×)

Baalis (personal name: king of Ammon who conspired to assassinate Gedaliah)

This personal name (possibly meaning 'son of delight') identifies the Ammonite king who sent Ishmael to assassinate Gedaliah, the Babylonian-appointed governor of Judah after Jerusalem's fall (Jeremiah 40:14). His conspiracy succeeded, leading to Gedaliah's murder and further destabilization of the post-586 BC remnant community. Some manuscripts read 'Baalim' instead.

(1×) Personal name of the Ammonite king in Jeremiah 40:14 who orchestrated Gedaliah's assassination. Transliterated as 'Baalis' in most versions, this foreign ruler exploited Judah's weakness after the exile to pursue Ammonite political interests, contributing to the chaos that drove many Jews to flee to Egypt. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Baalis | es: Baalis | fr: [בעליס] | de: [בעליס] Jer 40:14

בַּעַל מְעוֹן H1186 N-proper-fs (3×)

Baal-meon, a Moabite town meaning 'Baal of the dwelling'; rebuilt by Reuben, later reclaimed by Moab

A town in Transjordan, east of the Dead Sea, whose name means 'Baal of the dwelling/habitation.' Rebuilt by the Reubenites after Israel's conquest of Sihon's territory (Numbers 32:38), it was settled by Reuben's descendants (1 Chronicles 5:8). By Ezekiel's time, it had reverted to Moabite control (Ezekiel 25:9). The town also appears as 'Beth-baal-meon' and as 'Beon' (Numbers 32:3). The Moabite Stone (Mesha Inscription) confirms the site's importance in Moabite history. The name indicates a Baal shrine, reflecting the region's religious syncretism.

(3×) A Transjordanian town on the Moabite plateau, rebuilt by Reuben (Numbers 32:38), settled by Reubenites (1 Chronicles 5:8), and later back under Moabite control (Ezekiel 25:9). The name 'Baal of the dwelling' points to a local shrine. Variant names include Beth-baal-meon and Beon. Modern Ma'in preserves the ancient name. The town's fluctuating control reflects the contested border between Israel and Moab. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Baal-meon, and-Ba'al-Me'on | es: Baal-Meón, y-Baal-Meon | fr: Baal-Méon, Baal-meon, [ובעל מעון] | de: Baal-meon, [בעל מעון], [ובעל מעון] Num 32:38; 1Chr 5:8; Ezek 25:9

בַּעַל פְּעוֹר H1187 Prep / N-proper-fs (6×)

Baal Peor – the Moabite deity Baal worshipped at Peor, and the site of Israel's apostasy

Baal Peor refers to the local Baal deity worshipped at the mountain or shrine called Peor in Moab. The name is inseparable from the notorious apostasy at Shittim (Num 25:1-9), where Israelites joined in the licentious Moabite cult and provoked a devastating plague. Moses cites the episode as a cautionary memory (Deut 4:3), the psalmist recounts it as paradigmatic unfaithfulness (Ps 106:28), and Hosea reaches back to the same event to diagnose Israel's persistent idolatry (Hos 9:10). All six occurrences revolve around this single historical-theological referent. Translations across languages uniformly preserve the compound name: Spanish Baal-Peor, French Baal-Peor, German Baal-Peor.

Baal Peor (6×) The Moabite deity Baal as worshipped at the site of Peor, and by extension the infamous cultic apostasy associated with that place. Every occurrence harks back to the Shittim disaster of Numbers 25, whether narrating the event itself (Num 25:3, 5), citing it as a warning (Deut 4:3), lamenting it in worship (Ps 106:28), or invoking it prophetically (Hos 9:10). Cross-lingual evidence is fully uniform – every target language retains 'Baal Peor' untranslated – confirming this is a single proper-noun referent with no semantic subdivision. BAAL PEOR CULT

en: Baal-Peor, at-Baal-Peor, to-Ba'al-Pe'or | es: Baal-Peor, a-Baal-Peor, con-Baal-Peor | fr: Baal-Peor, Baal-Péor, à-Baal-Peor | de: Baal-Peor, [בעלפעור], bei-Baal-Peor Num 25:3; Num 25:5; Deut 4:3; Ps 106:28

בַּעַל פְּרָצִים H1188 Prep / N-proper-fs (4×)

Baal-perazim, a place name meaning 'lord/master of breaches,' site of David's victory over the Philistines

A place name combining 'baal' (lord, master) and 'perazim' (breaches, break-throughs), commemorating David's decisive rout of the Philistines. At this site David declared, 'The LORD has broken through my enemies before me, like a breach of waters' (2 Sam 5:20). The name thus enshrines a theological wordplay: God himself was the true 'master of breaches.' The exact location remains unknown, though it lay near the Valley of Rephaim outside Jerusalem.

(4×) The proper noun designating the battlefield where David defeated the Philistines, attested in 2 Sam 5:20 and 1 Chr 14:11. The name functions as an etiological toponym: David names the place to memorialize God's breakthrough. Multilingual glosses uniformly transliterate rather than translate, preserving the Hebrew compound. Spanish adds directional prepositions ('a-Baal-Peratsim,' 'en-Baal-Peratsim') reflecting the locative uses in the text. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Baal-Peratsim, to-Baal-Peratsim | es: Baal-Peratsim, a-Baal-Peratsim, en-Baal-Peratsim | fr: Baal-Peratsim, [בבעלפרצים], [בעל פרצים] | de: Baal-Peratsim, [בבעלפרצים], [בעל פרצים] 2Sam 5:20; 1Chr 14:11

בַּעַל צְפוֹן H1189 N-proper-fs (3×)

Baal-zephon, an Egyptian place name meaning 'Baal of the north'; near the Red Sea crossing site

An Egyptian location name meaning 'Baal of the north' (Zephon being a divine title), marking the Israelite encampment before crossing the Red Sea. Israel camped 'before Baal-zephon' by the sea (Exodus 14:2, 9; Numbers 33:7), a site in northeastern Egypt. The name indicates a shrine to Baal-Zephon, a Canaanite storm deity worshiped in Egypt. Proposed identification: Mount Ataka or a site near the Bitter Lakes. The encampment at this pagan shrine sets the stage for Yahweh's triumph over Pharaoh and, symbolically, over Egypt's gods.

(3×) A site in Egypt near the Red Sea, where Israel encamped before the exodus crossing. Moses instructs the people to 'camp before Baal-zephon' by the sea (Exodus 14:2), Pharaoh's army finds them there (Exodus 14:9), and Numbers confirms the location (Numbers 33:7). The name 'Baal of the North' reflects an Egyptian cult site dedicated to a Canaanite deity, ironically becoming the backdrop for Yahweh's deliverance. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Baal-zephon | es: Baal-Tsefon | fr: Baal-zephon | de: Baal-zephon Exod 14:2; Exod 14:9; Num 33:7

בַּעַל שָׁלִשָׁה H1190 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

Baal-Shalishah (place name: location near Gilgal that sent first-fruits to Elisha)

This compound place name appears in 2 Kings 4:42 as the origin of a man who brought firstfruits bread to Elisha during a famine. The name may mean 'Baal of the three' or 'Baal of Shalishah.' It was located in Ephraim near Gilgal. The LXX renders it Baithsarisath, and it was approximately 15 miles from Diospolis according to Eusebius.

(1×) Names the source of the bread offering in 2 Kings 4:42. The prepositional phrase 'from Baal-Shalishah' identifies where the man traveled from to bring twenty loaves of barley and fresh grain to Elisha, who miraculously multiplied it to feed a hundred men, foreshadowing Jesus' feeding miracles. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: from-Baal-Shalishah | es: de-Baal-salisa | fr: de-Baal-Shalishah | de: von-Baal-Shalishah 2Kgs 4:42

בַּעֲלָת H1191 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (3×)

Baalath, a town in Dan and Solomon's building projects; name means 'mistress' or place of Baal worship

A town name appearing in Dan's tribal allotment (Joshua 19:44) and among Solomon's fortified cities (1 Kings 9:18; 2 Chronicles 8:6). The name means 'mistress' or 'lady,' likely indicating a site associated with Baal or a female deity. Solomon's building activity there suggests strategic importance, possibly for defense or administration. The exact location is uncertain; proposed sites include Bala'in in the Shephelah. The town's inclusion in both territorial and royal construction lists shows its enduring significance from the settlement period through the united monarchy.

(3×) A town in Dan's inheritance (Joshua 19:44) later fortified by Solomon (1 Kings 9:18; 2 Chronicles 8:6). The theophoric name suggests a Canaanite cult site, possibly dedicated to a goddess (Baalat/mistress). Solomon's building program included Baalath alongside Gezer and other strategic cities, indicating its value in the kingdom's defensive or administrative network. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Baalat, Baalath, and-Baalath | es: Baalat, y-Baalat | fr: Baalath, [בעלת], et-Baalath | de: Baalath, [בעלת], und-Baalath Josh 19:44; 1Kgs 9:18; 2Chr 8:6

בַּעֲלַת בְּאֵר H1192 N-proper-fs (1×)

Baalath-Beer (place name: 'mistress of a well,' also called Ramath-Negeb, town in Simeon)

This compound geographical name means 'mistress of a well' or 'lady of the well' and designates a town in Simeon's territory, also called Ramath-Negeb (Joshua 19:8). The dual naming reflects either two names for one site or the merger of previously distinct locations. The well reference indicates its significance as a water source in the Negev region.

(1×) Names a Simeonite settlement in Joshua 19:8. Transliterated consistently as 'Baalath-Beer' across languages, the compound name emphasizes the well that made this location viable in the arid Negev. Its alternate name 'Ramath-Negeb' (height of the south) suggests elevated terrain near a water source. AUTO-DETECTED COMMUNITY 9079 WITH 4 SENSES

en: Baalath-Beer | es: Baalat-beer | fr: Baalath-Beer | de: Baalath-Beer Josh 19:8

בַּעַל תָּמָר H1193 Prep / N-proper-fs (1×)

Baal-Tamar, a place name near Gibeah meaning 'possessor of palms' or 'Baal of Tamar'

This place name appears only in Judges 20:33, during the civil war between Israel and Benjamin. The name literally means 'possessor of palms' or possibly 'Baal of Tamar,' suggesting a location marked by palm trees. The multilingual evidence (at-Baal-Tamar, en-Baal-Tamar, à-Baal-Tamar, bei-Baal-Tamar) preserves the compound form across languages, indicating its status as a proper noun for a strategic location near Gibeah where Israelite forces positioned themselves.

(1×) A geographic location near Gibeah where Israelite forces staged their ambush during the Benjamite conflict (Judges 20:33). The name combines either the Canaanite deity Baal or the word for 'possessor' with 'tamar' (palm tree), marking it as a palm-grove site of military significance. Translators consistently render it as a transliterated place name rather than translating its components. TAMAR PROPER NAME

en: at-Baal-Tamar | es: en-Baal-Tamar | fr: à-Baal-Tamar | de: bei-Baal-Tamar Judg 20:33

בֵּית בַּעַל מְעוֹן H1194 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (1×)

Beon, shortened form of Beth-Baal-Meon, a Reubenite city also possessed by Moab

This abbreviated place name appears in Numbers 32:3 as part of the cities requested by the Reubenites. BDB identifies it as a shortened form of Beth-Baal-Meon (literally 'house of Baal-Meon'), also called Baal-Meon elsewhere in Scripture. The site was assigned to Reuben but later came under Moabite control, as evidenced in Jeremiah 48:23 and Ezekiel 25:9. Modern scholarship identifies it with Ma'in in Jordan. The multilingual glosses (Beon, Beón) preserve the short form found in this passage.

(1×) An abbreviated toponym for the city more fully known as Beth-Baal-Meon or Baal-Meon, located in Transjordan. In Numbers 32:3, the Reubenites use this shorter form when requesting the territory for their cattle. The name reflects Moabite religious influence (Baal-Meon) and appears on the Moabite Stone. Cross-linguistic evidence shows transliteration rather than translation, appropriate for a proper noun with contested etymology. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Beon | es: y-Beón | fr: et-Beon | de: und-Beon Num 32:3

בַּעֲנָא H1195 N-proper-ms (3×)

Baana, a personal name possibly meaning 'son of distress'; Solomon's district governor and post-exilic leader

A personal name borne by multiple individuals, possibly meaning 'son of affliction' or 'son of distress.' Two of Solomon's twelve district governors were named Baana: one overseeing Taanach and Megiddo (1 Kings 4:12), the other governing Asher and Aloth (1 Kings 4:16). A Baana also appears as the ancestor of a post-exilic builder who repaired Jerusalem's wall (Nehemiah 3:4). The name recurs across different periods, suggesting it was common in Israelite naming practices. The governors' roles indicate administrative competence and royal trust.

(3×) A name held by Solomonic officials and a post-exilic family head. Baana son of Ahilud governed the Jezreel valley district (1 Kings 4:12); Baana son of Hushai governed in Asher (1 Kings 4:16). Centuries later, a Baana (or his descendant) rebuilt part of Jerusalem's wall (Nehemiah 3:4). The name's recurrence suggests it was established in Israelite onomastics, though individuals are distinct. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Baana | es: Baana, Baaná | fr: Baana, [בעֲנא] | de: Baana, [בעֲנא] 1Kgs 4:12; 1Kgs 4:16; Neh 3:4

בַּעֲנָה H1196 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (9×)

Baanah, a proper name borne by several men including a captain who murdered Ishbosheth and a post-exilic leader.

A masculine proper name appearing across multiple periods of Israel's history. The most prominent Baanah is the Benjamite captain who, with his brother Rechab, assassinated Saul's son Ish-bosheth — an act for which David had them executed (2 Sam 4:2-9). Another Baanah was the father of Heleb, one of David's mighty warriors (2 Sam 23:29). The name resurfaces in post-exilic contexts among the leaders returning from Babylon (Ezra 2:2; Neh 7:7) and among those who sealed the covenant (Neh 10:28). Spanish shows interesting variation between 'Baana' and 'Baaná.'

Baanah (9×) Baanah — a proper name borne by at least four individuals: (1) a Benjamite captain who with his brother Rechab murdered Ishbosheth and was executed by David (2 Sam 4:2-9); (2) the father of Heleb/Heled, one of David's thirty warriors (2 Sam 23:29; 1 Chr 11:30); (3) a leader of returning exiles (Ezra 2:2; Neh 7:7); and (4) a chief who sealed the covenant in Nehemiah's day (Neh 10:28). English and French preserve 'Baanah' consistently, while Spanish shows dialectal variation between 'Baana', 'Baanah', and 'Baaná'. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Baanah, and-Baanah | es: Baana, Baanah, Baaná | fr: Baanah, [בענה], et-Baanah | de: Baanah, [בענה], in-antwortete 2Sam 4:2; 2Sam 4:5; 2Sam 4:6; 2Sam 4:9; 2Sam 23:29

בָּעַר H1197a V-Piel-Perf-3ms (85×)

To burn, be on fire (Qal); to kindle, set ablaze (Piel/Hifil); to purge or remove evil from the community

A verb whose primary meaning is physical burning — fire that blazes, consumes, and devours. Yet its most theologically distinctive use is the Deuteronomic formula 'you shall purge (בְּעַרְתָּ) the evil from your midst,' where the metaphor shifts from consuming flame to moral removal. Spanish captures this split neatly: arder for the intransitive blaze, but quitar and barrer ('sweep away') for the purging sense. The burning bush of Exodus 3:2-3 — 'burning yet not consumed' — remains one of Scripture's most iconic images, while the purging formula in Deuteronomy 13-21 shaped Israel's understanding of communal holiness.

1. burn, be on fire (39×) Intransitive burning — fire that blazes, is kindled, or is alight without an explicit agent causing it. This is the Qal and Pual base sense: the bush that 'burned with fire yet was not consumed' (Exod 3:2), the fire that 'burned among them' at Taberah (Num 11:1, 3), or Mount Sinai 'burning with fire' (Deut 4:11). Spanish arde and French brûlant consistently gloss this as ongoing, intransitive combustion. Coals that 'burned' from the divine presence (Ps 18:9 = 2 Sam 22:9) and the prophet's word 'like a burning fire shut up in my bones' (Jer 20:9) extend the image powerfully. FIRE AND BURNING
en: and-burn, and-it-burns, and-it-shall-burn | es: arde, arderá, ardiendo | fr: brûla, brûlant, brûler | de: [בערה], blazed, brannte Exod 3:2; Exod 3:3; Num 11:1; Num 11:3; Deut 4:11

2. purge, remove evil (22×) To purge, remove, or sweep away evil — the distinctive metaphorical-legal sense found overwhelmingly in the Deuteronomic formula וּבִעַרְתָּ הָרָע מִקִּרְבֶּךָ, 'you shall purge the evil from your midst' (Deut 13:5, 17:7, 17:12, 19:13, 19:19, 21:21, 22:21-24, 24:7). Here the burning metaphor has fully shifted to moral-communal removal. Spanish renders this with quitar and barrer ('remove, sweep away'), Hindi with दूर करना, and French with purger — all confirming the semantic distance from literal fire. This sense shaped Israelite jurisprudence profoundly. WITHDRAWAL AND APOSTASY
en: I-removed, and-I-will-burn-up, and-I-will-consume | es: He-quitado, barrió, he-quitado | fr: [בערת], devra-purge, et-brûler-au-loin | de: brennen, eins-verbrennt-hinauf, er-removed Deut 13:5; Deut 17:7; Deut 17:12; Deut 19:13; Deut 19:19

3. kindle, set on fire (18×) Causative or intensive physical burning in the Piel — to kindle, ignite, or set fire to something, with an explicit agent causing combustion. Distinguished from sense 1 by transitivity: someone kindles fire on the Sabbath (Exod 35:3), the priest maintains the altar fire (Lev 6:12), or lamps are kept burning in the temple (2 Chr 4:20, 13:11). Spanish encender ('to light, ignite') and German anzünden capture this active kindling force. FIRE AND BURNING
en: and-burn, and-shall-burn, and-they-will-burn | es: ardor, devorasteis, encenderéis | fr: [לבער], [לבערם], brûler | de: brannte, brennen, du-soll-kindle Exod 35:3; Lev 6:12; Num 24:22; 2Chr 4:20; 2Chr 13:11

4. kindle, cause to burn (Hifil) (6×) Causative burning in the Hifil stem — to kindle or cause something to burn, often with a more direct causative force than the Piel. The arsonist who 'kindled a fire in a field' (Exod 22:6), Samson setting the Philistine grain alight with foxes and torches (Judg 15:5), and God's judgment declared as 'I will kindle a fire' (Ezek 5:2, 2 Chr 28:3). Spanish encendió and French brûla confirm the transitive, agent-driven causation. FIRE AND BURNING
en: and-I-will-burn, and-burned, and-kindled- | es: Y-encendió, el-que-encendió, quemarás | fr: [ויבער], brûler, et-brûla | de: [והבערת], brennen, der-eins-kindling Exod 22:6; Judg 15:5; 2Chr 28:3; Ezek 5:2

בָּעַר H1197b V-Nifal-Prtcpl-fs (9×)

To be brutish or stupid like an animal; also: to graze, let livestock feed in a field

A denominative verb from be'ir ('beast, cattle'), carrying two quite different semantic profiles. In its primary prophetic usage, it means 'to be brutish, stupid, dull-hearted' – behaving with the uncomprehending nature of an animal rather than a reasoning human. Isaiah calls Egypt's counselors 'brutish' (Isa 19:11), the psalmist rebukes the senseless among the people (Ps 94:8), and Jeremiah repeatedly condemns those who are 'too stupid to know God' (Jer 10:8, 14, 21). The second sense, attested in the Covenant Code (Exod 22:5), is agricultural: to graze or let one's livestock feed in another's field – a concrete, legal usage that preserves the etymological connection to cattle.

1. be brutish, be stupid, be dull-hearted (7×) To be brutish, stupid, or dull-hearted – behaving like an irrational beast rather than a person capable of moral and spiritual discernment. English glosses include 'stupid' and 'brutish'; Spanish renders 'embrutecido' (made brutish), directly reflecting the denominative origin from be'ir ('beast'). Prophetic literature dominates: Isaiah 19:11 mocks Pharaoh's advisors, Psalm 94:8 rebukes the senseless in Israel, and Jeremiah uses both Qal and Niphal forms to describe people stupefied by idolatry (Jer 10:8, 14, 21; 51:17). The Niphal in Jeremiah 10:14 may carry the nuance 'stupefied' – stunned into dullness by the spectacle of God's power. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY
en: Is-stupid, are-stupid, brutish | es: Embrutecido-está, brutales, embrutecido | fr: [יבער], [נבער], [נבערה] | de: [בערים], [יבערו], [נבער] Ps 94:8; Isa 19:11; Jer 10:8; Jer 10:14; Jer 10:21

2. graze, let graze, consume by grazing (2×) To graze, let livestock feed, or consume vegetation by grazing – Piel and Hiphil forms attested in the Covenant Code (Exod 22:5). The Hiphil yav'er means 'to cause to be grazed over' (i.e., to send one's animals into another's field), while the Piel uvi'er means 'to feed, graze.' English renders 'lets-graze' and 'and-it-grazes'; Spanish uses 'haga-pastar' (let graze). This concrete agricultural sense preserves the word's etymological link to be'ir ('beast') more transparently than the metaphorical 'brutish' sense. SHEPHERDING AND TENDING
en: and-it-grazes, lets-graze | es: haga-pastar, y-pace | fr: et-cela-grazes, lets-graze | de: lets-graze, und-es-grazes Exod 22:5

בַּעַר H1198 Adj-ms (5×)

Brutishness, stupidity; used substantively for a brutish or senseless person who lacks moral and spiritual understanding.

This poetic noun denotes raw, animal-like stupidity, the inability to perceive God's works or moral realities. The psalmist pairs the brutish person with the fool (kesil) in Psalms 49:10 and 92:6, while in Psalm 73:22 the speaker confesses he was 'brutish' before God when envying the wicked. Proverbs 12:1 declares that whoever hates correction is brutish, and Agur's humility in Proverbs 30:2 uses it as self-deprecation. Spanish captures the gradation well: 'bruto' for raw stupidity and 'necio' for foolishness, while German 'brutish' is borrowed directly from English in some glosses.

(5×) Brutishness or stupid senselessness, used as both an abstract quality and a concrete designation for the person who lacks spiritual perception. Paired with 'fool' (kesil) in wisdom poetry (Ps 49:10; 92:6), it conveys not mere ignorance but a willful obtuseness toward God's ways. The psalmist's self-accusation in Psalm 73:22 and Agur's confession in Proverbs 30:2 show it can also express pious humility. Spanish 'bruto/necio' and English 'brutish/stupid' together capture the word's range from animal dullness to moral obduracy. FOOLISHNESS AND FOLLY en: and-the-brutish, brutish, is-stupid | es: bruto, más-bruto, necio | fr: dansstupide, et-dans-stupide, בער | de: brannte, brutish, und-der-brutish Ps 49:10; Ps 73:22; Ps 92:6; Prov 12:1; Prov 30:2

בְּעֶרָא H1199 N-proper-fs (1×)

Baara, the name of a wife of a Benjamite in the genealogies of 1 Chronicles

This woman's name appears once in 1 Chronicles 8:8, where Shaharaim the Benjamite dismisses her along with Hushim as his wives. The name Baara is of uncertain etymology. The genealogical context places her in the post-exilic Chronicles material that traces Benjamite lineages. Some translations simply transliterate the Hebrew (Baara), while French and German manuscripts sometimes leave it in Hebrew characters, indicating uncertainty about vocalization or meaning.

(1×) A personal name for one of the wives of Shaharaim, a Benjamite patriarch listed in the tribal genealogies. The name appears in a passage describing Shaharaim's family structure in Moab. The multilingual evidence shows consistent transliteration (Baara), with some traditions preserving the Hebrew form, reflecting the proper-noun status and the obscurity of the name's original meaning. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Baara | es: Baara | fr: [בערא] | de: [בערא] 1Chr 8:8

בְּעֵרָה H1200 Art / N-fs (1×)

The fire, the burning (feminine noun used with cognate accusative in Exodus 22:5)

This rare feminine noun appears only in Exodus 22:6 (English versification 22:5), in a law about liability for fires that spread to another's field. The text uses a cognate accusative construction: 'if fire breaks out... and the fire (ha-be'erah) consumes.' BDB notes this is the only occurrence of this specific form for 'burning' or 'fire.' The multilingual evidence uniformly renders it as 'the fire' (el-fuego, le-feu, der-Feuer), treating it as a definite reference to the fire mentioned in the legal case.

(1×) A feminine noun for fire or burning used in the legal context of Exodus 22:6 to specify the conflagration that causes damage. The definite article ('the fire') refers anaphorically to the fire mentioned earlier in the verse. This technical legal usage with the cognate verb 'to kindle/burn' (hib'ir) creates emphasis: 'and the burning burns up' another's field. Cross-linguistic uniformity on 'the fire' suggests translators recognized the definite reference within the casuistic law. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: the-fire | es: el-fuego | fr: le-feu | de: der-Feuer Exod 22:6

בַּעְשָׁא H1201 N-proper-ms (28×)

Baasha; king of Israel (c. 909-886 BC) who overthrew Jeroboam's dynasty and warred with Judah.

Baasha son of Ahijah, of the tribe of Issachar, seized the throne of the northern kingdom by assassinating Nadab son of Jeroboam and exterminating the entire house of Jeroboam (1 Kgs 15:27-30). His reign is narrated principally in 1 Kings 15-16, where he fortifies Ramah against Judah, prompting King Asa to enlist Aramean help (1 Kgs 15:16-22). The Deuteronomistic historian judges him harshly, and the prophet Jehu son of Hanani pronounces doom on his house (1 Kgs 16:1-4). His name appears also in 2 Chronicles 16 and is referenced in Jeremiah 41:9.

Baasha (king of Israel) (28×) The proper name of Baasha son of Ahijah, third king of the northern kingdom of Israel, who reigned approximately 909-886 BC. He rose to power by killing Nadab and annihilating Jeroboam's dynasty (1 Kgs 15:27-29), then fortified Ramah against Judah (1 Kgs 15:17). Despite his political energy, the Deuteronomistic historian condemns him for continuing in the sins of Jeroboam (1 Kgs 16:1-7). German 'Baesa' and French 'Baescha' show minor transliteration variation. PERSONAL NAMES

en: Baasha | es: Baasha | fr: Baescha | de: Baesa 1Kgs 15:16; 1Kgs 15:17; 1Kgs 15:19; 1Kgs 15:21; 1Kgs 15:22

בַּעֲשֵׂיָה H1202 N-proper-ms (1×)

Baaseiah, a Levite ancestor possibly related to the name Maaseiah

This personal name appears once in 1 Chronicles 6:40 (English versification 6:25 in some traditions) within the Levitical genealogies tracing the line of Asaph. BDB suggests it may be equivalent to the more common name Maaseiah ('work of Yahweh'), with the initial consonants transposed. The name appears in a genealogical chain establishing the pedigree of temple musicians. Translators generally preserve the name as Baaseyah or Baaseya, with some manuscripts retaining the Hebrew form.

(1×) A personal name borne by a Levite in the ancestral line of Asaph the musician, appearing in the detailed genealogies of 1 Chronicles 6. The possible connection to Maaseiah suggests a theophoric name involving Yahweh. The multilingual evidence shows transliteration (Baaseyah, Baaseya) with some uncertainty reflected in Hebrew-character preservation in French and German texts, typical of rare genealogical names whose pronunciation traditions may have been unclear. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Baaseyah | es: Baaseya | fr: [בעשיה] | de: [בעשיה] 1Chr 6:40

בְּעֶשְׁתְּרָה H1203 N-proper-fs (1×)

Beeshterah, a Levitical city in Manasseh, possibly meaning 'house of Ashtoreth'

This place name occurs in Joshua 21:27 as one of the cities given to the Levites from the half-tribe of Manasseh. The parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 6:56 calls the same city Ashtaroth, revealing that Beeshterah is likely a variant or compound form meaning 'house of Ashtoreth' (Beth-Ashtarah). This reflects the common Semitic pattern of prefixing 'beth' (house) to deity names for sanctuaries or settlements. The site is associated with the worship of the Canaanite goddess Ashtoreth.

(1×) A toponym for a Levitical city in Transjordanian Manasseh, etymologically related to Ashtoreth/Astarte worship. The name construction suggests either 'house/temple of Ashtoreth' or represents a Hebrew adaptation of the Canaanite place name. The evidence from 1 Chronicles 6:56 using 'Ashtaroth' for the same location confirms the connection. Multilingual glosses consistently transliterate (Beeshterah, Beestera), preserving the proper-noun status rather than translating the theophoric elements. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Beeshterah | es: Beestera | fr: Beeshterah | de: Beeshterah Josh 21:27

בָּעַת H1204 V-Piel-Imperf-3mp / 3ms (16×)

To terrify, frighten, startle; in the Piel, to cause terror; in the Niphal, to be terrified or dismayed.

A word that echoes with dread through the poetic books, בָּעַת captures sudden, overwhelming terror — the kind that falls upon a person without warning. Job uses it more than any other biblical author, crying out, 'You frighten me with dreams and terrify me with visions' (Job 7:14), and later, 'terrors are turned upon him' (Job 18:11). The Arabic cognate ʿ ('to come upon suddenly') illuminates the root's core: this is not slow-building anxiety but terror that strikes. Spanish 'aterrorizar' and French 'effrayer' both preserve this sudden, causative quality. The Niphal passive appears in dramatic moments — Esther 7:6, where Haman 'was terrified' before the king and queen, and Daniel 8:17, where the prophet falls prostrate in terror before the angelic vision.

1. terrify (13×) To terrify, frighten, or startle someone — the Piel causative sense, where an agent or force inflicts terror upon another. This is the dominant usage, appearing throughout Job and the Psalms: an evil spirit 'terrified' Saul (1 Sam 16:14-15), torrents of destruction 'terrified' David (2 Sam 22:5; Ps 18:5), and Job repeatedly accuses God of terrifying him (Job 7:14; 9:34; 13:21). Spanish 'aterrorizar' and French 'effrayer' both capture the causative force. The darkness that 'claims' the day in Job 3:5 uses this same verb, personifying blackness as an agent of dread. RELEASE AND

MOVEMENT

en: You-frighten-me, and-terrified-him, let-terrify-it | es: Lo-aterran, aterrorizará, aterróricenlo | fr: [בעתתני], effrayer, effrayer-lui | de: [בעתהו], [בעתתני], [יבעתהו] 1Sam 16:14; 1Sam 16:15; 2Sam 22:5; Job 3:5; Job 7:14

2. be terrified (3×) To be terrified, dismayed, or overcome with fear — the Niphal passive, where the subject experiences terror rather than inflicting it. All three occurrences mark moments of dramatic encounter with overwhelming power: David 'was terrified' before the angel of the LORD at the threshing floor (1 Chr 21:30), Haman 'was terrified' before the king and queen when his plot was exposed (Esth 7:6), and Daniel 'was terrified' and fell on his face before the interpreting angel (Dan 8:17). Spanish distinguishes these clearly — 'fue aterrorizado,' 'se aterró,' 'me espanté' — each shading the passive experience differently. TERROR AND AGITATION

en: I-was-terrified, he-was-terrified, was-terrified | es: fue-aterrorizado, me-espanté, se-aterró | fr: [נבעת], terrifier | de: [נבעת], [נבעתי] 1Chr 21:30; Esth 7:6; Dan 8:17

בִּעָתָה H1205 N-fs (2×)

terror, dismay, dread; used of crushing disappointment when expected peace brings fear instead

Jeremiah uses this vivid term twice in nearly identical phrases, capturing the bitter reversal of Israel's expectations. They looked for peace but found no good, for a time of healing but encountered terror instead. The word evokes not merely fear but the dismay and dread of having hopes crushed—the emotional devastation when anticipated salvation turns to experienced judgment. This is the terror of divine abandonment, when God's people discover their confidence was misplaced.

(2×) A noun denoting terror or dismay (Jeremiah 8:15; 14:19), appearing in parallel poetic lines that contrast expectation with reality. Both occurrences follow the same pattern: 'we waited for peace... for a time of healing, but behold, terror.' The repetition emphasizes the prophetic theme of crushed expectations, where Israel's presumption of automatic divine favor meets the reality of covenant judgment. Some translations bracket the Hebrew, acknowledging this is a specific term for the dread that comes from disappointed hope. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: terror | es: terror | fr: [בעתה] | de: [בעתה] Jer 8:15; Jer 14:19

בִּץ H1206 Prep-b (1×)

In the mud, in the mire (prepositional phrase from the noun for mire/mud)

This word appears only in Jeremiah 38:22, where officials warn King Zedekiah that his advisors have misled him: 'your feet have sunk in the mud (ba-botz).' The noun 'botz' means mire or mud, and here it appears with the preposition 'in.' The context is both literal (Jeremiah was stuck in muddy cistern) and metaphorical (Zedekiah is in an impossible political situation). The image of sinking feet became proverbial for being trapped in difficulty.

(1×) A prepositional phrase meaning 'in the mud' or 'in the mire,' used in Jeremiah 38:22 to describe the king's predicament through the metaphor of feet stuck in mud. The immediate context involves Jeremiah's own literal experience in a muddy cistern (38:6), making this both concrete and symbolic. Multilingual renderings (en-el-lodo, in-the-mud) capture the physical image that conveys Zedekiah's hopeless political entrapment between Babylonian siege and Egyptian promises. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-the-mud | es: en-el-lodo | fr: [בבץ] | de: [בבץ] Jer 38:22

בְּצָה H1207 N-fs (4×)

Swamp, marsh, boggy ground where reeds and rushes grow

Refers to waterlogged, marshy terrain where papyrus and rushes thrive. In Job 8:11 it appears in a rhetorical question about whether rushes can grow without a swamp, illustrating the dependence of life on its proper environment. Job 40:21 uses the word to describe the habitat of Behemoth, while Ezekiel 47:11 contrasts the life-giving river of the temple vision with stagnant swamps and marshes that remain salty and unhealed.

(4×) Boggy, swampy ground — the natural habitat of marsh plants. In Job 8:11 the word parallels 'water' as a necessary condition for reed growth. In Ezek 47:11 the plural form describes standing marshes exempted from the purifying river, contrasting stagnation with renewal. Spanish 'pantano' and English 'marsh/swamp' converge on the same wetland semantics, while the Hebrew morphology (plural suffix in Ezekiel) points to expanses of marshy terrain rather than a single puddle. POOL POND MARSH

en: [ketiv], and-the-marsh, its-swamps | es: [kethiv], pantano?, sus-pantanos | fr: [בצאתו], [בצאתין], et-ובצה | de: [בצאתו], [בצאתין], [בצה] Job 8:11; Job 40:21; Ezek 47:11

בָּצִיר H1208 Art / N-ms (2×)

the inaccessible place, the fortified or unreachable area; textual variant between 'vintage' (Ketiv) and 'fortified' (Qere)

This term presents a textual puzzle in Zechariah 11:2, where the Ketiv (written text) reads 'vintage' while the Qere (read aloud text) gives 'fortified' or 'inaccessible.' The context of judgment against Lebanon's cedars and Bashan's oaks makes the 'fortified' reading more fitting—the strongest, most inaccessible trees have fallen. This represents a classic case where scribal tradition preserved both readings, acknowledging uncertainty while guiding oral recitation toward the contextually appropriate sense.

(2×) A term appearing in Zechariah 11:2 with variant readings: the written form (Ketiv) suggests 'vintage,' while the traditional reading (Qere) indicates 'fortified' or 'inaccessible place.' German and French translations reflect this textual complexity with bracketed forms. The judgment context—where the mightiest trees fall—supports the 'fortified' sense. This demonstrates how Hebrew manuscript tradition sometimes preserved both written and oral variants, allowing later readers to see the textual history. FIRMNESS AND SECURITY

en: the-inaccessible | es: el-inaccesible | fr: bourgeon | de: [(הבציר)], [[הבצור]] Zech 11:2

בְּצַי H1209 N-proper-ms (3×)

Bezai, a family name; post-exilic clan that returned from Babylon and signed Nehemiah's covenant

A family name appearing in post-exilic return and covenant lists. The 'sons of Bezai' numbered 323 (Ezra 2:17) or 324 (Nehemiah 7:23) among those who returned with Zerubbabel. A leader named Bezai signed Nehemiah's covenant (Nehemiah 10:18). The name may mean 'conqueror' or relate to a root meaning 'plunder.' The slight numerical discrepancy (323 vs. 324) is typical of parallel return lists, possibly due to textual transmission or counting methodology. Bezai represents a lay family that survived exile and participated in covenant renewal.

(3×) A family or clan name among the exiles returning to Judah. Ezra lists 323 'sons of Bezai' (Ezra 2:17), Nehemiah records 324 (Nehemiah 7:23), and a leader named Bezai sealed the covenant (Nehemiah 10:18). The family evidently maintained identity through exile and contributed to the restored community's leadership and covenant commitment. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Betsay, Bezai | es: Besai, Bezai | fr: [בצי] | de: [בצי] Ezra 2:17; Neh 7:23; Neh 10:18

בָּצִיר H1210 N-msc / 2fs (7×)

Vintage, grape harvest — the seasonal gathering of grapes from the vineyard

A masculine noun (בָּצִיר) derived from the verb בָּצַר ('to cut off, gather grapes'), denoting the vintage or grape harvest. It anchors a key moment in the ancient Israelite agricultural calendar: the grape-gathering season that followed the wheat and barley harvests. In Leviticus 26:5, abundant vintage is promised as a covenant blessing — 'your threshing shall reach to the vintage.' It also serves as a metaphor for judgment and desolation, as when Micah laments being like the gleanings after vintage (Mic 7:1).

vintage, grape harvest (7×) The vintage or grape harvest, the seasonal activity of gathering ripe grapes from the vineyard. Literally denotes the harvest season in Leviticus 26:5 (the threshing reaching to the vintage as a sign of blessing) and Isaiah 32:10 (the vintage failing as judgment). Used figuratively in Isaiah 24:13 and Micah 7:1, where the gleaning after vintage symbolizes scarcity and desolation. Jeremiah 48:32 addresses Moab's vineyards whose vintage has been cut off. Spanish vendimia and French vintage both preserve the grape-harvest specificity. GRAPE VINTAGE HARVEST
en: and-vintage, grape-harvest, than-vintage-of | es: la-vendimia, que-vendimia-de, tu-vendimia | fr: [בציר], [בצירך], et-vintage | de: [בציר], [בצירך], als-vintage-von Lev 26:5; Judg 8:2; Isa 24:13; Isa 32:10

בָּצָל H1211 Art / N-mp (1×)

The onions, a vegetable the Israelites recalled from Egypt

This plural noun with the definite article appears only in Numbers 11:5, in the Israelites' nostalgic complaint about Egyptian food. They list the cucumbers, melons, leeks, onions (ha-betzalim), and garlic they once enjoyed. The word is cognate with Arabic 'basal' and Aramaic forms, all referring to the common bulb onion widely cultivated in ancient Egypt. This list of vegetables provides a window into the Mediterranean diet of antiquity and the very human longing for familiar foods during wilderness hardship.

(1×) The plural definite noun for onions, appearing in the famous catalog of Egyptian foods the Israelites craved in the wilderness (Numbers 11:5). The onion was a staple of Egyptian agriculture and diet, mentioned alongside other garden vegetables. The multilingual evidence (las-cebollas, le-onions, der-onions) shows consistent identification of this common bulb vegetable, though some translations retain English 'onions' even in French and German contexts, suggesting potential textual uncertainty or the universal recognizability of the plant. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT
en: the-onions | es: las-cebollas | fr: le-onions | de: der-onions Num 11:5

בְּצַלְאֵל H1212 N-proper-ms (9×)

Bezalel, 'in the shadow of God,' the master craftsman of the Tabernacle; also a post-exilic Israelite.

A theophoric name meaning 'in the shadow (protection) of God,' borne primarily by the divinely appointed chief artisan of the Tabernacle. God filled Bezalel son of Uri with the Spirit, granting him extraordinary skill in metalwork, stonecutting, and woodcarving to construct the sacred furnishings (Exod 31:2; 35:30; 36:1-2). He is credited with building the Ark itself (Exod 37:1) and overseeing all Tabernacle construction (Exod 38:22). A second Bezalel appears among those who had taken foreign wives in Ezra's reform (Ezra 10:30). Spanish 'Betsalel/Betzalel' and French 'Betsaleel' reflect the original's phonology.

Bezalel (proper name) (9×) Bezalel — a theophoric proper name (בְּצַלְאֵל, 'in the shadow/protection of El') designating primarily the master craftsman of the Tabernacle, of the tribe of Judah. God filled him with his Spirit in wisdom, understanding, and skill (Exod 31:2-5; 35:30-35) to execute the elaborate construction of the Tabernacle furnishings, including the Ark of the Covenant (Exod 37:1). He appears also in the Chronicler's genealogy (1 Chr 2:20) and at the altar reference (2 Chr 1:5). A second, minor Bezalel is named among those who put away foreign wives (Ezra 10:30). Spanish 'Betsalel' and French 'Betsaleel' faithfully render the theophoric compound. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)
en: Betsal'el, Betsalel, Bezalel | es: Betsalel, Betzalel, Y-Betsalel | fr: Betsaleel, [בצלאל], et-Betsaleel | de: Betsalel, Bezalel, [בצלאל] Exod 31:2; Exod 35:30; Exod 36:1; Exod 36:2; Exod 37:1

בַּצְלוּת H1213 N-proper-ms (2×)

Bazluth/Bazlith, ancestor of a family of temple servants who returned from exile; spelling varies between sources

This name heads a family of Nethinim (temple servants) who returned from Babylonian exile to resume their hereditary duties in the restored temple. The name may derive from a root meaning 'stripping' or 'peeling,' though its etymology remains uncertain. The variation between Bazluth (Ezra) and Bazlith (Nehemiah Qere) represents typical scribal variation in proper names, where vowel letters and final consonants sometimes differ between manuscripts while identifying the same person or family.

(2×) A personal name appearing in parallel exile return lists (Ezra 2:52; Nehemiah 7:54), with spelling variation between manuscripts. The Ketiv (written) and Qere (read) forms in Nehemiah show how scribal tradition handled such variants. Translations bracket the Hebrew forms to indicate they're preserving original name spellings. The family's inclusion among returning Nethinim demonstrates the continuity of temple-service families across the exile period. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Batslut, Bazlith | es: Baslit, Baslut | fr: [בצלות], [בצלית] | de: [בצלות], [בצלית] Ezra 2:52; Neh 7:54

בָּצַע H1214 V-Piel-Imperf-3ms (17×)

To cut off, break off; to be greedy for unjust gain; to finish or complete a task

The Hebrew verb batsa' carries the vivid physical image of severing or cutting off, which then extends in two distinct directions. On one side it develops the moral sense of 'cutting off' profit for oneself — coveting unjust gain, as Jeremiah repeatedly denounces (Jer 6:13; 8:10). On the other it moves toward the idea of 'cutting through' to completion, as when Zechariah declares that the hands of Zerubbabel will finish the Temple (Zech 4:9). Arabic basaa ('to cut') and Ethiopic cognates confirm the physical root, while the moral sense dominates prophetic literature. The weaver's image in Isa 38:12, where God cuts Hezekiah off from the loom of life, beautifully bridges the literal and figurative.

1. be greedy for gain, covet (8×) The moral-acquisitive sense: to be greedy for gain, to covet dishonest profit. The participial form botse'a functions almost as a technical term for the unjust profiteer. Proverbs warns that the one greedy for gain troubles his own house (Prov 15:27), and Jeremiah indicts prophet and priest alike: 'everyone is greedy for gain' (Jer 6:13). Spanish codiciar ('to covet') and the Arabic root for cutting wealth by force both illuminate this semantic domain. GAIN AND GREED
en: and-the-one-greedy-for-gain, and-you-gained-unjustly-from, by-greedy-gain | es: codician, del-que-gana, el-que-codicia | fr: [וחבצע], convoiter, et-dans-couper | de: [בוצע], [בצע], [וחבצע] Ps 10:3; Prov 1:19; Prov 15:27; Jer 6:13; Jer 8:10

2. cut off, break off (6×) The concrete physical sense: to cut off, sever, or break away. Isaiah's Hezekiah laments that God cuts him off like a weaver severing thread from the loom (Isa 38:12), and the Psalmist prays for enemies to be 'cut off' (Ps 76:12). In Joel 2:8 the locust-army does not break off its course. The Piel intensifies the action but does not shift the meaning. This is the etymological core from which the other senses derive. CUTTING AND SEVERING
en: He-cuts-me-off, He-will-cut-off, and-cut-me-off | es: Cortará, corta, me-cortará | fr: [ובצע], convoiter, et-ויבצעני-moi | de: [ובצע], [ויבצעני], [יבצע] Job 6:9; Job 27:8; Ps 76:12; Isa 38:12; Joel 2:8

3. finish, complete, fulfill (3×) The completive sense: to finish, bring to an end, fulfill. When Zechariah prophesies that Zerubbabel's hands will finish the Temple (Zech 4:9), and when Lamentations declares that the LORD has fulfilled his word of judgment (Lam 2:17), batsa' has moved from 'cutting off' to 'cutting through to completion.' Spanish terminar and ha cumplido capture this sense. Isaiah 10:12 uses it of God finishing his work on Mount Zion. CUTTING AND SEVERING
en: He-fulfilled, finishes, will-finish-it | es: ha-cumplido, la-terminarán, termine | fr: convoiter, elles-achèveront | de: [בצע], [יבצע], [תבצענה] Isa 10:12; Lam 2:17; Zech 4:9

בֶּצַע H1215 N-msc / 2ms (23×)

Unjust gain, covetousness; profit or advantage; plunder or spoils of war

The noun בֶּצַע denotes gain — but almost always gain that is tainted, dishonest, or violently seized. The prophets thunder against it: Jeremiah condemns those who 'pursue their own dishonest gain' (Jer 6:13), and Ezekiel indicts leaders who 'shed blood to get dishonest gain' (Ezek 22:27). Exodus 18:21 defines the ideal judge as one who 'hates unjust gain.' Yet a few passages use the word in a neutral or interrogative tone — 'What profit is it?' asks Judah about selling Joseph (Gen 37:26), and Job ponders what advantage God gains (Job 22:3). Once, in the Song of Deborah, it refers concretely to battlefield plunder (Judg 5:19).

1. unjust gain, covetousness (15×) Unjust gain, dishonest profit, covetousness — gain obtained through exploitation, bribery, or violence. This is the dominant sense (15 occurrences), running through prophetic indictment and wisdom instruction alike. Exodus 18:21 requires leaders who hate בֶּצַע; Prov 1:19 warns that greedy gain 'takes away the life of its owners.' Spanish 'codicia/ganancia deshonesta' and French 'injuste gain' capture the moral condemnation that saturates this usage in Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the Psalms. GAIN AND GREED

en: gain, gain-your, his-gain | es: codicia, ganancia, ganancia-deshonesta | fr: dans-gain, gain, injuste-gain | de: [בצע], [בצעו], [בצעך] Exod 18:21; 1Sam 8:3; Ps 119:36; Prov 1:19; Prov 15:27

2. profit, gain (7×) Profit, gain, or advantage in a neutral or questioning sense — 'what profit is there?' This sense (7 occurrences) strips away the moral judgment, leaving a straightforward economic or existential question. Judah asks 'What gain is it if we kill our brother?' (Gen 37:26), Job demands 'What profit to the Almighty if you are righteous?' (Job 22:3), and the Psalmist asks 'What profit in my blood?' (Ps 30:9). Spanish 'ganancia' (without 'deshonesta') and French 'profit' reflect the uncolored usage. GAIN AND GREED

en: gain, profit, the-gain | es: a-su-ganancia, en-ganancia-de, ganancia | fr: dans-gain, gain, profit | de: [בבצע], [בצע], [לבצעו] Gen 37:26; Job 22:3; Ps 30:9; Isa 33:15; Isa 56:11

3. plunder, spoils (1×) Plunder or spoils taken in battle — concrete material gain seized through warfare. This sense appears once in the Song of Deborah (Judg 5:19), where the kings of Canaan fought at Taanach but 'took no plunder of silver.' Spanish 'ganancia de' and English 'plunder of' distinguish this battlefield-specific, tangible usage from the abstract moral and economic senses. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: -plunder-of | es: ganancia-de | fr: -piller-de | de: -pluendern-von Judg 5:19

בָּצַק H1216 V-Qal-Perf-3fs (2×)

to swell, become swollen or blistered; used of Israel's feet miraculously not swelling during wilderness wandering

This verb appears in Moses' and Nehemiah's reflections on God's wilderness provision, noting the miracle that Israel's feet did not swell during forty years of desert travel. The term likely refers to blisters, swelling, or edema that would normally afflict feet enduring such constant walking in harsh conditions. This small mercy—healthy feet—stands as tangible evidence of God's comprehensive care, attending to the mundane physical needs alongside spectacular provisions like manna and water from rock.

(2×) A verb meaning to swell or become blistered (Deuteronomy 8:4; Nehemiah 9:21), used of feet that remarkably did not suffer this normal consequence of extended desert travel. Most translations render it 'swell' or 'swelled,' while some bracket the Hebrew to show the specific term. The detail emphasizes divine preservation extended to everyday physical needs—God cared for their feet as well as their hunger and thirst, showing comprehensive providential attention during the wilderness period. SPROUTING AND GROWING en: swelled | es: se-hincharon, se-hinchó | fr: [בצקו], swelled | de: [בצקו], swelled Deut 8:4; Neh 9:21

בָּצֵק H1217 N-msc / 3ms (5×)

Dough, specifically unfermented or unleavened dough in the process of being kneaded or prepared for baking.

This noun refers to dough at any stage before baking, though its most memorable appearances highlight the unfermented state. In the Exodus narrative (12:34, 39), the Israelites carry their dough before it has been leavened, wrapping it in their garments as they flee Egypt. Elsewhere the term carries no such restriction: Tamar kneads dough for Amnon (2 Sam 13:8), women in Jerusalem knead dough for the Queen of Heaven (Jer 7:18), and Hosea uses it in a baking metaphor (Hos 7:4). French 'pate' and Spanish 'masa' both straightforwardly render the culinary sense.

(5×) Dough, whether leavened or unleavened, at the stage of kneading and preparation before baking. Most famously, the Israelites' unfermented dough carried out of Egypt (Exod 12:34, 39) became a symbol of haste and divine deliverance. In non-Exodus contexts it appears without restriction: Tamar kneads dough for Amnon (2 Sam 13:8), women prepare cakes for the Queen of Heaven (Jer 7:18), and Hosea uses it metaphorically for moral corruption (Hos 7:4). Spanish 'masa' and French 'pate' directly capture the plain culinary referent. FOOD AND NOURISHMENT en: dough, the-dough, their-dough | es: la-masa, masa, su-masa | fr: [בצק], le-dough, le-pâte | de: [בצק], der-dough, ihr-dough Exod 12:34; Exod 12:39; 2Sam 13:8; Jer 7:18; Hos 7:4

בָּצְקַת H1218 Conj-w / N-proper-fs (2×)

Bozkath, a town in Judah's lowland near Philistine territory, hometown of King Josiah's mother Bozkath was a town in Judah's Shephelah (lowland) region, listed among cities near the Philistine border. Its primary biblical significance comes from being the hometown of Jedidah, mother of the reformer king Josiah. The name may relate to an Arabic term for elevated volcanic regions, suggesting it occupied a distinctive geographical position. Like many towns in this border region, it appears in administrative and genealogical contexts rather than narrative accounts.

(2×) A place name in Judah's inheritance (Joshua 15:39; 2 Kings 22:1), appearing with conjunctive and prepositional prefixes. Translations vary in handling these particles—some incorporate them into compound forms, others keep them separate. The town's mention as Josiah's mother's hometown gives it historical significance beyond its geographical role in tribal boundaries. Its location in the Shephelah made it part of Judah's strategically important lowland buffer zone. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-Botzkat, from-Botskat | es: de-Boscat, y-Boscat | fr: de-Botskat, et-Botzkat | de: und-Botzkat, von-Botskat Josh 15:39; 2Kgs 22:1

בָּצַר H1219 Conj-w (36×)

To cut off or make inaccessible by fortifying; also to gather grapes, harvest a vineyard

Two strikingly different concrete images live under one root. In its most frequent use, the word describes cities that are 'fortified' – walled, cut off, inaccessible – as when the spies report that Canaan's cities are 'great and fortified' (Deut 1:28). The agricultural sense is equally vivid: gathering grapes at vintage, as in Leviticus 25:5 and Judges 9:27. What links them is the act of cutting – cutting stone for walls, cutting clusters from the vine. German 'befestigt' captures the fortification, while Spanish 'vendimiar' preserves the vintage sense that French 'fortifie' inadvertently absorbs.

1. fortified, inaccessible (25×) The participial-adjectival use describing cities, walls, and strongholds as fortified and inaccessible. The spies' terrified report in Numbers 13:28 and Deuteronomy 1:28 – cities 'great and fortified up to heaven' – is paradigmatic. Twenty-five occurrences cluster in Deuteronomy and the conquest narratives. Spanish 'fortificada' and German 'befestigt' both reflect the military-architectural sense of a place cut off from assault. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES en: a-ruin, and-captured-them, and-fortified | es: fortificada, fortificadas, fortificado | fr: et-fortifié, fortifier, fortifié | de: [בצרות], befestigt, fortified Num 13:28; Deut 1:28; Deut 3:5; Deut 9:1; Deut 28:52

2. gather grapes, vintage (7×) The agricultural Qal: gathering or harvesting grapes from the vine. Leviticus 25:5, 11 prohibit vintage during Sabbath and Jubilee years; Judges 9:27 records Shechem's grape harvest; Jeremiah 6:9 and 49:9 use 'grape-gatherer' as a figure. Spanish 'vendimiar' and German 'Winzer' (vintner) preserve the agrarian specificity, connecting to the broader biblical vocabulary of vineyard and harvest. GATHERING TOGETHER
en: and-gathered, as-grape-gatherer, grape-gatherers | es: como-vendimiador, vendimiadores, vendimiarás | fr: et-rassembla, fortifié, tu-devra-rassembler | de: Winzer, befestigt, du-sammeln Lev 25:5; Lev 25:11; Deut 24:21; Judg 9:27; Jer 6:9

3. be withheld / fortify (4×) The derived verbal stems: Niphal 'be withheld, be impossible' and Piel 'fortify, strengthen defenses.' Genesis 11:6 declares that nothing will 'be withheld' from unified humanity; Job 42:2 confesses that no purpose of God can be restrained. Isaiah 22:10 uses the Piel for actively strengthening a wall. Spanish 'es impedido' and German 'wird unerreichbar sein' mark the shift from physical fortification to abstract impossibility. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES
en: is-withheld, she-should-fortify, to-fortify | es: es-impedido, fortifique, para-fortificar | fr: –être-withheld, fortifié, יִבָּצֵר | de: [יִבָּצֵר], befestigt, wird-unerreichbar-sein Gen 11:6; Job 42:2; Isa 22:10; Jer 51:53

בֶּצֶר H1220 N-ms (2×)

gold, refined gold ore, precious gold; possibly ring-gold or ingot form rather than dust

This term designates a particular form or quality of gold, possibly referring to gold ore as broken-off pieces, refined ingots, or ring-shaped gold. Job uses it in parallel with 'gold of Ophir' and contrasts it with silver, suggesting a high-quality or specific form of the precious metal. Some scholars connect it to Arabic terms for rings or finger-measures, proposing it meant shaped gold rather than raw ore. The uncertainty about exact meaning shows how specialized metallurgical vocabulary could become obscure over time, though the general sense of valuable, refined gold remains clear.

(2×) A term for gold or refined gold ore (Job 22:24-25), appearing in contexts emphasizing its value and refinement. The parallel with 'gold of Ophir' (the finest known source) and the contrast with silver establish this as a term for precious, high-quality gold. The bracketed Hebrew in German and French shows the technical nature of this metallurgical term. Whether it refers to ore, ingots, or ring-gold, it represents gold in a refined, valuable form rather than raw material. GOLD (PRECIOUS METAL)
en: gold, your-gold | es: el-oro, tu-oro | fr: ton-בצריך-toi, בצר | de: [בצר], [בצריך] Job 22:24; Job 22:25

בֶּצֶר H1221 N-proper-ms (5×)

Bezer: (1) a Levitical city of refuge in Reuben's territory; (2) a descendant of Asher. Means 'fortress.'

Bezer serves as both a place name and a personal name, rooted in the idea of 'fortress' or 'enclosure.' As a city, it was designated one of the three cities of refuge east of the Jordan, assigned to the tribe of Reuben (Deut 4:43; Josh 20:8; 21:36), and later given to the Merarite Levites (1 Chr 6:78). The Moabite Stone (Mesha Inscription) also mentions a place called Bezer, confirming its historical and geographic reality. As a personal name, Bezer appears as a descendant of Asher in 1 Chronicles 7:37. Spanish alternates between 'Beser' and 'Betser,' reflecting the difficulty of rendering the Hebrew tsade across Romance phonologies.

(5×) A proper name meaning 'fortress,' applied to (a) a Levitical city of refuge in the territory of Reuben east of the Jordan (Deut 4:43; Josh 20:8; 21:36; 1 Chr 6:78), attested also on the Moabite Stone, and (b) a descendant of Asher (1 Chr 7:37). The city's role as a refuge for manslayers makes it theologically significant in Israel's justice system. Spanish 'Betser/Beser' and French 'Bezer/Betser' reflect varying transliteration strategies for the Hebrew tsade. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Betser, Bezer | es: Beser, Betser, Bétser | fr: Betser, Bezer, [בצר] | de: Betser, Bezer, [בצר] Deut 4:43; Josh 20:8; Josh 21:36; 1Chr 6:78; 1Chr 7:37

בְּצַר H1222 Prep-b / Adj-ms (1×)

In distress, in straits (prepositional phrase describing hardship and trouble)

This prepositional phrase appears in Job 36:19, a difficult passage where Elihu speaks about God's justice. The root 'tzar' means narrowness, straits, or distress, and with the preposition 'in' it describes a state of being in trouble or difficulty. This same root appears throughout Scripture in contexts of oppression, affliction, and tight circumstances. The metaphor of narrowness for distress is common in Hebrew thought, as opposed to spaciousness representing deliverance.

(1×) A prepositional phrase meaning 'in distress' or 'in straits,' built on the noun 'tzar' (narrowness, trouble) with the preposition beth. In Job 36:19, it appears in Elihu's discourse about whether riches or strength can deliver someone from affliction. The spatial metaphor of narrowness for distress pervades biblical Hebrew (compare Psalm 4:1, 'You gave me relief when I was in distress'). Multilingual renderings (en-angustia, in-distress, dans-בצר) capture both the spatial and emotional dimensions. DISTRESS AND AFFLICTION
en: in-distress | es: en-angustia | fr: dans-בצר | de: [בצר] Job 36:19

בָּצְרָה H1223 N-fs (1×)

Of Bozrah, referring to sheep of the fold (possibly place name Bozrah used as common noun)

This word appears in Micah 2:12, in a prophecy about God gathering the remnant of Israel 'like sheep of Bozrah' (tzon botzrah). BDB identifies the underlying noun as meaning 'enclosure' or 'sheep-fold,' though many translations understand this as the place name Bozrah (a city famous for its flocks in Edom). The ambiguity reflects the wordplay possible in Hebrew: is it sheep 'of Bozrah' the city, or sheep 'of the fold' using a common noun? Either way, the image is pastoral restoration.

(1×) Either the proper name Bozrah (an Edomite city known for sheep) or a common noun meaning 'fold/enclosure' in the phrase 'sheep of Bozrah/the fold' (Micah 2:12). The prophet uses sheep imagery to describe God's regathering of Israel. Multilingual translations divide: some render as the place name Bozrah/Bosra (Spanish, French), suggesting the famous pastoral region, while others understand it as 'fold' or 'enclosure.' The ambiguity may be intentional wordplay on Bozrah's reputation for abundant flocks. FLOCK HERD LIVESTOCK
en: of-Bozrah | es: Bosra | fr: Botsra | de: [בצרה] Mic 2:12

בָּצְרָה H1224 N-proper-fs (8×)

Bozrah — a fortified city of Edom (and possibly Moab), a symbol of divine judgment in prophetic literature.

A place name meaning 'fortress' (from batsar, 'to fortify'), identifying the chief city of Edom, modern Buseirah in southern Jordan. In Genesis 36:33 it is the home of the Edomite king Jobab, and in the prophets it becomes a powerful symbol of God's judgment against Edom (Isa 34:6; 63:1; Jer 49:13, 22; Amos 1:12). Jeremiah 48:24 applies the name to a Moabite city, possibly the same as Bezer. Spanish Bosra and French Botsra preserve the Semitic consonants, while German and French bracketed forms reflect the prepositional phrases 'in Bozrah' and 'from Bozrah' found in the Hebrew text.

Bozrah (Edomite city) (8×) Proper noun for Bozrah, the principal city of Edom, meaning 'fortress.' It appears as the hometown of Edomite royalty (Gen 36:33 = 1 Chr 1:44) and as a prophetic target of divine wrath — Isaiah 34:6 pictures YHWH's sacrifice there, and Isaiah 63:1 envisions him coming from Bozrah with garments stained crimson. In Jeremiah 48:24 the name may designate a different Moabite site. Spanish Bosra and English Bozrah are the standard renderings across all eight occurrences. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: Botsrah, Bozrah, from-Botsrah | es: Bosra, Botsrah, de-Bosra | fr: Botsra,

[בבצרה], [מבצרה] | de: [בבצרה], [בצרה], [מבצרה] Gen 36:33; 1Chr 1:44; Isa 34:6; Isa 63:1; Jer 48:24

בְּצָרוֹן H1225 Prep-l / N-ms (1×)

To the stronghold, to the fortress (prepositional phrase referring to a fortified place)

This word appears once in Zechariah 9:12, in a messianic oracle calling prisoners of hope to 'return to the stronghold' (le-bitzaron). The noun 'bitzaron' comes from a root meaning to be fortified or inaccessible, denoting a fortress or secure place. In Zechariah's vision, this stronghold represents safety and restoration for exiles. The call to return to the fortress is paired with a promise of double restoration, making it both a concrete military image and a theological metaphor for divine protection.

(1×) A prepositional phrase meaning 'to the stronghold' or 'to the fortress,' found in Zechariah 9:12's call for exiled Judahites to return to safety. The noun 'bitzaron' emphasizes fortification and security, contrasting with the vulnerability of captivity. This unique occurrence uses architectural imagery to convey theological hope: God himself is the stronghold to which prisoners of hope should flee. Multilingual renderings (a-la-fortaleza, to-the-stronghold, forteresse) uniformly recognize the military-defensive connotations of secure refuge. FORTIFICATIONS AND PALACES

en: to-the-stronghold | es: a-la-fortaleza | fr: forteresse | de: [לבצרון] Zech 9:12

בַּצֹּרֶת H1226 N-fs (2×)

drought, dryness, time of dearth; the condition of severe water shortage

Jeremiah employs this term to describe seasons of severe drought that bring agricultural crisis and human distress. The word captures not just lack of rain but the resulting condition of the land—parched fields, failed crops, desperate thirst. In one passage it appears in the plural, suggesting repeated or multiple drought periods that became occasions for national lament. The prophet contrasts those who trust in man (who wither in drought) with those who trust in God (who remain green even 'in the year of drought'), making the physical reality a metaphor for spiritual resources.

(2×) A noun denoting drought or severe dryness (Jeremiah 14:1; 17:8), used both literally and metaphorically. The plural form 'the droughts' (14:1) suggests either intensity or repeated occurrences. Jeremiah 17:8 uses 'year of drought' to contrast those with deep spiritual roots (who endure) against those who wilt under pressure. Some translations bracket the Hebrew forms, highlighting this as a specific term for the agricultural and social crisis drought brings, beyond simple absence of rain. HUNGER AND FAMINE

en: drought, the-droughts | es: las-sequías, sequía | fr: [בצרת], [הבצרות] | de: [בצרת], [הבצרות] Jer 14:1; Jer 17:8

בַּקְבּוּק H1227 N-proper-ms (2×)

Bakbuk, ancestor of a family of temple servants (Nethinim) who returned from exile

Bakbuk heads one of the Nethinim families whose descendants maintained their identity through the exile and returned to resume temple service. The name's possible connection to 'bottle' or 'flask' remains uncertain, as do most Nethinim names' etymologies. These temple-servant families formed an essential but lower-status group in Israel's worship system, their faithful return demonstrating commitment to serving God's house even when their roles involved menial labor rather than priestly prestige.

(2×) A personal name of a Nethinim family head (Ezra 2:51; Nehemiah 7:53), appearing in the parallel return lists. Translations either transliterate or bracket the Hebrew, showing this is a proper name without clear semantic meaning to preserve. The inclusion of such families in the careful genealogical records demonstrates the importance of maintaining temple service continuity across the exile, regardless of social status. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: Bakbuk, Baqbuq | es: Bacbuc | fr: [בקבוק] | de: [בקבוק] Ezra 2:51; Neh 7:53

בַּקְבֻּק H1228 Conj-w / N-msc (3×)

flask, jar (from gurgling sound); earthenware container, especially for oil

A flask or jar, named for the gurgling sound it makes when emptied. The term appears in narratives involving symbolic acts or gift-giving. Jeroboam's wife brings 'a jar of honey' along with other items to the prophet Ahijah (1 Kings 14:3). Jeremiah is commanded to buy an earthenware flask and smash it publicly as a sign of Jerusalem's coming destruction (Jeremiah 19:1, 10). The onomatopoetic name (baqbuq, imitating liquid sounds) emphasizes the vessel's function. The shattering of the flask becomes a powerful enacted prophecy of irreversible judgment.

(3×) An earthenware flask or jar. Ahijah's wife brings 'a jar of honey' as a gift (1 Kings 14:3). Jeremiah takes a potter's 'earthenware flask' and breaks it in the valley of Ben-hinnom to symbolize God's irrevocable judgment on Jerusalem (Jeremiah 19:1, 10). The gurgling sound of the vessel being poured or emptied gave it its name, and its fragility made it apt for prophetic symbolism—once shattered, it cannot be repaired. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: and-a-jar-of, flask-of, the-flask | es: la-vasija, vasija-de, y-un-frasco-de | fr: [בקבק], [הבקבק], et-un-jar-de | de: [בקבק], [הבקבק], und-ein-jar-von 1Kgs 14:3; Jer 19:1; Jer 19:10

בַּקְבֻּקְיָה H1229 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (3×)

Baqbuqyah—a Levite gatekeeper in post-exilic Jerusalem

Baqbuqyah appears only in Nehemiah's roster of Levites who returned from exile and served in the rebuilt temple. He is listed among the gatekeepers and those who gave thanks (Neh 11:17, 12:9, 25). The name may derive from a root meaning 'to empty out' (like a bottle), though this is uncertain. He represents one of the many faithful temple servants whose names are preserved in Scripture's genealogical memory.

(3×) A Levite gatekeeper mentioned three times in Nehemiah's lists of post-exilic temple personnel. The Hebrew form always appears with the conjunction waw ('and-Baqbuqyah'), suggesting his inclusion in longer rosters. Spanish and English preserve the proper name, while French and German use placeholder forms, indicating uncertainty about how to transliterate this rare name. Found exclusively in Nehemiah 11-12 among the temple staff rosters. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL)

en: and-Baqbuqyah | es: Y-Bacbuquías, y-Bacbuquías | fr: [ובקבקיה] | de: [ובקבקיה] Neh 11:17; Neh 12:9; Neh 12:25

בַּקְבַּקַּר H1230 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (1×)

And Bakbakkar, a Levite name of uncertain meaning mentioned in 1 Chronicles

This personal name appears in 1 Chronicles 9:15, listing Levites who lived in Jerusalem after the exile. BDB notes the name is 'from strange meaning dubious'—its etymology is uncertain and possibly non-Hebrew in origin. The name's reduplication (Bak-bakkar) might suggest onomatopoeia or a borrowed foreign name. It appears in the genealogies establishing which Levitical families resettled in post-exilic Jerusalem.

(1×) A personal name borne by a Levite in the post-exilic community of Jerusalem (1 Chronicles 9:15). The name's etymology remains obscure, with its reduplicated structure (Bak-bakkar) possibly indicating non-Israelite origin or onomatopoetic formation. Multilingual evidence shows transliteration (Bakbakkar, Bacbacar) with some traditions preserving the Hebrew form, reflecting uncertainty about original pronunciation and meaning—typical of rare genealogical names with possible foreign roots. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: and-Baqbaqqar | es: Y-Bacbacar | fr: [ובקבקר] | de: [ובקבקר] 1Chr 9:15

בַּקִּי H1231 Conj-w / N-proper-ms (5×)

Bukki: a proper name borne by a Danite chief and a descendant of Aaron in the priestly line.

Bukki is a personal name appearing in two distinct genealogical contexts. First, he is a Danite chief appointed to help divide the land of Canaan among the tribes (Num 34:22). Second, a different Bukki appears in the priestly lineage descending from Aaron through Eleazar and Phinehas (1 Chr 6:5, 51; Ezra 7:4), forming a link in the chain of high-priestly succession. The name's etymology is debated but may relate to a shortened theophoric form. All major translations preserve the name with minimal variation: Spanish 'Buqui,' French and German 'Bukki.'

(5×) A proper masculine name designating (a) a leader of the tribe of Dan commissioned to oversee the apportionment of Canaan (Num 34:22), and (b) a priest in the Aaronic line through Eleazar and Phinehas, ancestor of Ezra (1 Chr 6:5, 51; Ezra 7:4). The dual usage across tribal and priestly genealogies shows the name's currency in different Israelite social strata. Spanish 'Buqui' and French 'Bukki' demonstrate consistent cross-linguistic transliteration. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Bukki, Buqqi, and-Buqqi | es: Buqi, Buqui, y-Buqui | fr: Bukki, [בקי], [ובקי] | de: Bukki, [בקי], [ובקי] Num 34:22; 1Chr 6:5; 1Chr 6:51; Ezra 7:4

בֻּקִּיָּהוּ H1232 N-proper-ms (2×)
Bukkiah, a Levitical musician, son of Heman, who served in David's organized temple worship
Bukkiah was one of the sons of Heman the seer, trained in music for temple worship during David's reign. His name may mean 'proved by Yahweh' or 'emptying of Yahweh,' reflecting the theophoric names common among Levitical families. He received the sixth lot in the organization of the twenty-four musical courses, placing him among the skilled prophetic musicians who combined artistry with spiritual ministry. His dual listing (as son of Heman and in the lot-casting) shows both his lineage and his assigned service order.

(2×) A Levitical musician's name (1 Chronicles 25:4, 13), appearing both in Heman's family list and in the distribution of worship duties by lot. The bracketed Hebrew in French and German indicates they're preserving the original form of this theophoric name. His role in the organized musical worship shows how David established systematic, skilled, prophetic ministry through music—a worship pattern that continued in the temple for centuries. PROPER NAMES (PERSONAL) en: Buqqiyahu | es: Buquías | fr: [בקיהו] | de: [בקיהו] 1Chr 25:4; 1Chr 25:13

בְּקִיעַ H1233 N-mpc (2×)
breaches, cracks, splits; structural fissures or damage requiring repair
This term describes physical breaks or cracks in structures, used both literally and metaphorically. Isaiah speaks of Jerusalem's many 'breaches'—defensive gaps in the walls that left the city vulnerable. Amos uses it of houses being struck into 'splinters' or 'cracks' as divine judgment. The word captures the concept of structural failure, whether in fortifications or buildings, that requires repair or portends collapse. The language of breaches in walls naturally became metaphorical for any vulnerability or weakness requiring attention.

(2×) A noun denoting breaches, cracks, or structural breaks (Isaiah 22:9; Amos 6:11). In Isaiah, the plural 'breaches of the city of David' refers to gaps in Jerusalem's walls needing repair. In Amos, it describes houses struck into fragments or splinters. Some translations bracket the Hebrew to show this technical term for structural damage. The imagery works both literally (actual wall damage) and metaphorically (spiritual or social breakdown requiring repair). GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE
en: breaches-of, into-splinters | es: brechas-de, en-grietas | fr: [בקיע], crevasse | de: [בקיע], [בקעים] Isa 22:9; Amos 6:11

בָּקַע H1234 V-Qal-Perf-2ms (51×)
To cleave, split open, break through; of water: to burst forth; of walls: to breach; of eggs: to hatch
A powerfully physical verb, baqa captures the sound and force of something being split apart. God 'split the rock in the wilderness' to give water (Ps 78:15), and the sea was 'divided' before Israel (Exod 14:21; Neh 9:11). The same root describes warriors breaching enemy walls (2 Sam 23:16), Elisha's bears tearing open youths (2 Kgs 2:24), springs 'bursting forth' in the desert (Isa 35:6), and — in a surprisingly gentle turn — a viper's egg 'hatching' (Isa 34:15; 59:5). The Ethiopic cognate baqwa ('to profit, be useful') preserves the earliest sense of 'opening up' something to make it accessible. Across its six senses, the word moves from raw physical splitting to military breaching, natural gushing, violent tearing, and biological hatching — a single root spanning creation and destruction.

1. split, cleave actively (16×) Active splitting or cleaving by direct force (16 occurrences) — the core Qal and Piel active sense. Abraham 'split' wood for the burnt offering (Gen 22:3), Moses was told to 'divide' the sea with his staff (Exod 14:16), and God 'split the rock' for water (Judg 15:19; Ps 78:15). The action requires an agent applying force to a solid object. Arabic shaqqa and Korean jjogaeda map uniformly to this basic splitting action. Ecclesiastes 10:9 warns that 'he who splits logs is endangered by them.' SPLITTING AND CLEAVING en: and-He-split, and-cleaving, and-divide-it | es: Dividió, Hendió, Y-abrió | fr: [ובקע], [ותבקע], [ויבקע] | de: [ובקע], [בקע], [בקעם] Gen 22:3; Exod 14:16; Judg 15:19; 1Sam 6:14; 2Kgs 15:16

2. breach, break through (10×) Breaching walls or breaking through fortifications in military contexts (10 occurrences). David's mighty men 'broke through' the Philistine camp to draw water from Bethlehem's well (2 Sam 23:16; 1 Chr 11:18). When Jerusalem's walls were 'breached' in 586 BC, the Nifal passive describes the city being broken open (2 Kgs 25:4; Jer 52:7). Arabic iqtahama ('to storm, force entry') and Korean ttulda ('to penetrate') capture the martial urgency. The 2 Chronicles 32:1 usage shows the enemy's intent — Sennacherib came 'to break into' Judah's fortified cities. SPLITTING AND CLEAVING
en: and-broke-into-it, and-broke-through, and-let-us-break-into-it | es: Y-abrieron-brecha, Y-fue-abierta-brecha, Y-irrumpieron | fr: [והבקיעה], [ויבקעו], [ויבקעוה] | de: [ויבקעו], [ויבקעוה], [לבקעם] 2Sam 23:16; 2Kgs 3:26; 2Kgs 25:4; 1Chr 11:18; 2Chr 21:17

3. be split, be cleft (9×) Passive or reflexive forms expressing being split or becoming cleft (9 occurrences) — Nifal, Pual, and Hitpael stems. The ground 'was split' beneath Korah's rebels (Num 16:31), the sea 'was divided' at the Exodus (Exod 14:21), and old wineskins are described as 'cracked' (Josh 9:4, 13). Zechariah 14:4 prophesies the Mount of Olives 'splitting in two.' Arabic inshaqqat and Korean gallaejida ('to be split') confirm the passive-intransitive reading throughout. SPLITTING AND CLEAVING
en: and-split, and-torn, and-was-split | es: fueron-divididos, se-han-roto, se-hendirán | fr: et-déchiré, et-fendre, et-fendu | de: [ונבקע], [יתבקעו], [נבקע] Exod 14:21; Num 16:31; Josh 9:4; Josh 9:13; 1Kgs 1:40

4. burst forth, gush out (7×) Bursting forth or gushing out (7 occurrences) — water from rocks, springs from the earth, or dawn breaking. The 'fountains of the great deep burst open' at the Flood (Gen 7:11), springs 'burst forth' in the desert for the redeemed (Isa 35:6), and light 'breaks forth like the dawn' for the righteous (Isa 58:8). Arabic infajarat ('to gush forth') maps precisely. Job 32:19 uses the image of new wine bursting wineskins — Elihu's speech 'ready to burst' within him. SPLITTING AND CLEAVING
en: break-forth, broken-into, burst-open | es: brotarán, para-ser-abierta, reventará | fr: [ובקע], [ונבקעו], burst-ouvrir | de: [ובקע], [ויבקעו], [להבקע] Gen 7:11; 2Chr 25:12; Job 32:19; Isa 35:6; Isa 58:8

5. tear apart, rip open (6×) Tearing apart or ripping open violently (6 occurrences) — the intensive Piel applied to bodies and living things. Elisha's curse brings bears that 'tore open' forty-two youths (2 Kgs 2:24). Hazael's future atrocities include 'ripping open' pregnant women (2 Kgs 8:12), and Ezekiel's hailstones 'rip apart' the false prophets' whitewashed wall (Ezek 13:11, 13). Arabic mazzaqa ('to rip, tear') and Korean jjitda ('to tear') capture the visceral violence. Ezekiel 29:7 extends this to Egypt as a broken reed that 'tore open' Israel's shoulder. SPLITTING AND CLEAVING en: and-I-shall-burst, and-tore-apart, and-you-tore | es: Y-haré-romper, los-despedazará, rajarás | fr: et-déchira-à-part, et-fendre, fendre | de: [ובקעת], [ובקעתי], [תבקע] 2Kgs 2:24; 2Kgs 8:12; Ezek 13:11; Ezek 13:13; Ezek 29:7

6. hatch eggs (3×) Hatching eggs (3 occurrences) — a specialized biological sense confined to Isaiah's imagery. The owl 'hatches' her eggs in the desolation of Edom (Isa 34:15), and the wicked 'hatch vipers' eggs' (Isa 59:5, twice). Arabic uses an entirely different root, faqasa, for hatching, confirming that this is a metaphorical extension of the splitting concept rather than a shared Semitic meaning. Korean kkada ('to crack open, hatch') preserves the connection between splitting and birth. SPLITTING AND CLEAVING

en: and-hatch, hatches, they-hatch | es: empollaron, saldrá, y-los-empollará | fr: [בקעו], [ובקעה], [תבקע] | de: spalten, und-spalten Isa 34:15; Isa 59:5

בֶּקַע H1235 N-ms (2×)

beka, half-shekel; a weight measure equaling about 0.2 ounces or 5.7 grams

The beka was a standard weight in ancient Israel's measurement system, defined in Exodus as exactly half a shekel. Abraham's servant used it to measure the golden nose ring he gave Rebekah—a significant piece of jewelry weighing about 0.2 ounces of gold. The term derives from a root meaning to split or divide, perfectly capturing its function as a fractional weight. When the Israelites brought their half-shekel temple tax, each man's contribution was specified as 'a beka a head,' showing this weight had both commercial and sacred-tax applications.

(2×) A weight measurement equaling half a shekel (Genesis 24:22; Exodus 38:26), used for both commercial and religious purposes. Translations uniformly transliterate 'beka,' recognizing it as a technical metrological term rather than a common noun to translate. Exodus explicitly defines it as 'half a shekel,' establishing its precise value in Israel's weight system. The Genesis usage shows it measuring fine jewelry, while Exodus uses it for the temple tax, demonstrating its dual commercial and sacred applications. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: a-beka, beka | es: beka | fr: beka, un-beka | de: beka, ein-Beka Gen 24:22; Exod 38:26

בִּקְעָא H1236 Prep-b / N-fsc (1×)

In the plain of (Dura), prepositional phrase from Aramaic noun for plain or valley

This Aramaic phrase appears in Daniel 3:1, where Nebuchadnezzar sets up his golden image 'in the plain of Dura' (biv'at Dura). The noun 'biq'a' is the Aramaic equivalent of Hebrew 'biq'ah,' meaning a broad valley or plain. Dura was likely a specific location near Babylon, though its exact identification is uncertain. The phrase introduces the famous story of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego refusing to worship the idol. The Aramaic vocabulary situates the narrative in its Babylonian exile context.

(1×) An Aramaic prepositional phrase meaning 'in the plain of [Dura],' appearing in Daniel 3:1 to locate Nebuchadnezzar's golden image. The Aramaic noun 'biq'a' (plain/valley) parallels Hebrew 'biq'ah' and establishes the geographical setting for the fiery furnace narrative. Dura was likely a site near Babylon, though modern identification remains uncertain. Multilingual renderings (en-el-llano-de, in-plain-of, plaine) consistently recognize the topographical term, setting the stage for the dramatic confrontation over idolatry. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: in-plain-of | es: en-el-llano-de | fr: plaine | de: [בבקעת] Dan 3:1

בִּקְעָה H1237 Art / N-fs (20×)

A broad valley or open plain between mountains; a wide, level lowland

Derived from the root בקע ('to cleave, split'), this noun pictures a wide rift valley or open plain — land that has been 'cleft apart' between mountain ranges. It describes the plain of Shinar where humanity gathered to build Babel (Gen 11:2), the valley-plain where Ezekiel saw the glory of the Lord (Ezek 3:22–23) and the valley of dry bones (Ezek 37:1–2), and specific geographic regions like the valley of Jericho (Deut 34:3) and the valley of Lebanon (Josh 11:17). The word often appears in construct with place names, serving as a geographic descriptor for broad, fertile lowlands.

broad valley / plain (20×) A wide, open valley or plain formed between mountains or hills — the landscape 'cleft open' by geological forces. Used for both named geographic locations (בִּקְעַת יְרֵחוֹ, Deut 34:3; בִּקְעַת הַלְּבָנוֹן, Josh 11:17) and general topographic description (Deut 8:7; 11:11). German renders 'Ebene' (plain) and 'Tal' (valley); Spanish 'el valle.' The creation psalm (Ps 104:8) pairs it with mountains in the poetic line 'mountains rose, valleys sank down.' GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: Megiddon, a-plain, a-valley | es: de-Valle-de-, el-valle, el-valle, | fr: [בבקעה], [בבקעת], [בקעות] | de: Ebene, Tal-von, [בבקעה] Gen 11:2; Deut 8:7; Deut 11:11; Deut 34:3; Josh 11:8

בָּקַק H1238a V-Qal-Prtcpl-ms (1×)

Luxuriant, fruitful (participle describing a vine spreading abundantly)

This participial form appears only in Hosea 10:1, where Israel is compared to a 'luxuriant vine' (gefen boqeq) that produces fruit for itself. The root means to be profuse or abundant, related to Arabic cognates describing overflow and plenty. Hosea uses the image of a spreading, fruit-laden vine to criticize Israel's religious prosperity that led to multiplying altars and idols. The more abundant the harvest, the more they increased their false worship—a bitter irony in the prophet's agricultural metaphor.

(1×) A Qal participle meaning 'luxuriant' or 'spreading abundantly,' used in Hosea 10:1 to describe Israel as a fruitful vine. The root conveys profusion and abundance, here applied to grapevine growth as a metaphor for Israel's prosperity. The prophet's point is caustic: Israel's luxuriance led not to gratitude but to proliferating idolatry. Multilingual translations (frondosa, luxuriant, vider) capture the sense of lush, overflowing vegetation, though the metaphorical judgment requires understanding the fuller context. ABOUNDING AND SURPLUS

en: luxuriant | es: frondosa | fr: vider | de: [בוקק] Hos 10:1

בָּקַק H1238b V-Nifal-Imperf-3fs (8×)

To empty out, lay waste, devastate; in passive, to be emptied or made desolate. Used of divine judgment on lands and peoples.

A verb of destruction and desolation, depicting the draining away of life and substance from a land or people. In its active forms (Qal, Poel), it describes God emptying the earth (Isa 24:1), warriors devastating Judah (Nah 2:2), and divine counsel making plans void (Jer 19:7). The passive Niphal forms portray the resulting state of desolation: 'the land shall be utterly emptied' (Isa 24:3). The probable Arabic cognate baqqa, describing the gurgling sound of water being poured out, captures the vivid auditory image behind this word – a land drained hollow like an upturned vessel.

1. empty, lay waste (active) (5×) The active sense of emptying, devastating, or laying waste, used in Qal and Poel stems. Isaiah 24:1 declares God as the one who 'empties the earth,' while Nahum 2:2 describes enemy warriors as 'emptiers' who strip bare. Jeremiah 19:7 extends the image figuratively to counsel: God will 'empty out' the plans of Judah. Spanish vaciaré ('I will empty') and French dévaster ('devastate') capture both the literal and figurative dimensions. The five occurrences consistently portray an agent actively draining something of its substance or worth. EMPTYING DEVASTATING

en: And-I-will-empty, and-they-will-empty-out, emptiers | es: Y-vaciaré, vaciadores, vaciando | fr: dévaster, et-dévaster, vider | de: [בוקק], [בקקום], [בקקים] Isa 24:1; Jer 19:7; Jer 51:2; Nah 2:2

2. be emptied, be laid waste (passive) (3×) The passive state of being emptied or laid waste, expressed through Niphal forms. Isaiah 24:3 uses the emphatic infinitive absolute construction hibboq tibboq ('shall be utterly emptied'), paralleled with 'utterly plundered,' to depict total desolation. Isaiah 19:3 applies the image figuratively to Egypt's spirit being 'emptied out' – courage drained away. Spanish será vaciada ('will be emptied') and the Arabic cognate's sense of liquid draining confirm the passive, resultative nuance distinct from the active devastation of Sense 1. DESOLATION AND RUIN

en: Emptied, and-will-be-emptied, shall-be-emptied | es: Vaciando, Y-se-vaciará, será-vaciada | fr: dévaster, et-dévaster | de: [הבוק], [ונבקה], [תבוק] Isa 19:3; Isa 24:3

בָּקַר H1239 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-1cs / 3mp (7×)

To inquire, search out, examine, or reflect; Piel intensive of careful investigation, inspection, or contemplation.

A verb used exclusively in the Piel stem, conveying deliberate, focused searching or investigation. When God promises to 'search for' his scattered sheep (Ezek 34:11-12), the word carries the weight of a shepherd's determined pursuit — Spanish 'inspeccionaré' and French 'chercher' both capture this active seeking. In priestly contexts it denotes formal examination, as when a priest inspects skin for disease (Lev 13:36). At its most reflective, the word shifts toward inner contemplation: the psalmist longs 'to inquire' in God's temple (Ps 27:4), and the sage warns against rash vows by urging one 'to consider' afterward (Prov 20:25).

1. Piel: search, examine, inspect (4×) Active searching, examining, or inspecting — the core Piel sense of purposeful investigation. In Ezek 34:11-12, God himself will 'search for' (אֲבַקֵּר) his flock as a shepherd seeks scattered sheep, paralleling דָּרַשׁ. Lev 13:36 and 27:33 use it for priestly inspection. Spanish 'inspeccionaré/examinará' and French 'chercher' consistently render this as thorough, official inquiry. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: I-will-search-for, and-I-will-search-for-them, he-shall-examine | es: buscará, examinará, inspeccionaré | fr: chercher, devra-search, et-chercher | de: [אבקר], [ובקרתים], er-soll-examine Lev 13:36; Lev 27:33; Ezek 34:11; Ezek 34:12

2. Piel: inquire, seek counsel (2×) Inquiring or seeking counsel, especially before God — the investigative impulse directed toward divine wisdom. In 2 Kgs 16:15 Ahaz reserves the bronze altar 'to inquire by' (לְבַקֵּר), and Ps 27:4 pairs it with חָזָה ('to gaze') in the yearning to behold God's beauty. Spanish 'para-consultar' and French 'à-consulte' highlight the consultative register. SEEKING AND SEARCHING

en: and-to-inquire, to-inquire | es: para-consultar, y-para-meditar | fr: et-à-chercher, à-consulte | de: und-zu-inquire, zu-inquire 2Kgs 16:15; Ps 27:4

3. Piel: consider, reflect upon (1×) Reflecting or considering carefully — the most inward extension of the root. Prov 20:25 warns against snaring oneself with rash words, then afterward 'considering' (לְבַקֵּר) what one has vowed. Spanish 'reconsiderar' aptly captures this cognitive after-the-fact pondering, distinct from physical searching. CONSIDERING AND DISCERNING en: to-consider | es: reconsiderar | fr: à-לבקר | de: [לבקר] Prov 20:25

בְּקַר H1240 Conj-w / V-Piel-ConjPerf-3mp (5×)

To search, inquire, investigate; an Aramaic verb used exclusively in Ezra for official archival research and administrative inquiry.

An Aramaic verb appearing only in Ezra, used for the act of conducting an official search or inquiry, particularly in royal archives. Every occurrence involves governmental investigation—whether searching records to verify claims about Jerusalem's rebellious history (Ezra 4:15, 19) or locating Cyrus's original decree (Ezra 6:1). The Spanish renderings "investigar" and "sea buscado" nicely capture both the active and passive dimensions: one can search deliberately or a search can be ordered impersonally. The word underscores how bureaucratic procedure shaped the fate of the returning exiles.

(5×) To search, inquire, or investigate officially—used of archival and administrative research conducted by royal authority. In Ezra 4:15 and 4:19 the Piel perfect and imperfect describe searches made in historical records; in 5:17 the Hithpael conveys an impersonal passive 'let search be made' in the royal treasury. English glosses 'and-searched' and 'let-be-searched' together with Spanish 'investigar' and 'sea buscado' reflect both active and passive voice usages of this single sense of official inquiry. GOING OUT AND FORTH

en: and-searched, and-they-searched, let-be-searched | es: para-investigar, se-busque, sea-buscado | fr: [ובקרו], [יבקר], [יתבקר] | de: [ובקרו], [יבקר], [יתבקר] Ezra 4:15; Ezra 4:19; Ezra 5:17; Ezra 6:1; Ezra 7:14

בָּקָר H1241 Prep-b / N-msc / 2ms (183×)

Cattle, herd — collective noun for bovine livestock, whether viewed as a group or as individual oxen and cows

Hebrew baqar designates bovine cattle as a collective, encompassing herds of oxen and cows whether grazing, sacrificed, or ploughing. The word's root connects to ploughing, reflecting the animal's primary economic role in the ancient Near East. It appears alongside tso'n (flock) in the classic pairing of livestock (Gen 12:16; 1 Sam 11:7). Translations across languages consistently render it with herd-animal terms: Spanish ganado vacuno, French bétail, German Rind/Herde — all pointing to a single, stable semantic core of domesticated bovines as a unit of pastoral wealth.

cattle, herd (bovine livestock) (183×) Collective noun for bovine cattle — oxen, cows, and calves viewed as a herd or individually. The term derives from the root meaning 'to plough,' reflecting the ox's agricultural centrality. Spanning patriarchal wealth lists (Gen 12:16), sacrificial contexts (Num 7:88), and prophetic imagery (Isa 11:7), the word is rendered uniformly across target languages: Spanish ganado, French bétail, German Herde/Rind. CATTLE AND OXEN

en: cattle, herd | es: ganado, ganado-vacuno, vacuno | fr: bétail, troupeau | de: Herde, Rind, Rinder Gen 12:16; Gen 13:5; Gen 18:7; Gen 20:14; Gen 21:27

בֹּקֶר H1242 Prep-m / N-ms (214×)

Morning – the early part of the day, from dawn until midday; used of time, sacrifice, and divine faithfulness.

Boqer designates the morning, the time when darkness gives way to light. Derived from a root meaning 'to split or penetrate,' it evokes the dawn breaking through the night. It appears in ritual contexts (the morning sacrifice, Exod 29:39), in narrative (Abraham rising early in the morning, Gen 22:3), and in poetic declarations of divine faithfulness renewed each morning (Lam 3:23). The expression 'from evening to morning' marks the daily cycle in priestly reckoning. Spanish 'manana,' French 'matin,' and German 'Morgen' all render it consistently, capturing both the temporal reference and the hopeful connotations of a new day.

morning (214×) The period of daylight from dawn until midday, referring to the point of time rather than a duration. Used literally for early-morning activities – rising (Gen 22:3), offering morning sacrifices (Exod 29:39), and keeping the morning watch (Exod 14:24) – and figuratively for divine faithfulness that is 'new every morning' (Lam 3:23). The evening-to-morning formula structures priestly time-keeping (Gen 1:5). Spanish 'en la manana,' French 'dans le matin,' and German 'am Morgen' uniformly confirm a single temporal sense. MORNING DAWN

en: in-the-morning | es: en-la-mañana | fr: dans-le-matin | de: am-Morgen Gen 19:27; Gen 20:8; Gen 21:14; Gen 22:3; Gen 24:54

בְּקָרָה H1243 Prep-k / N-fsc (1×)

Like the searching of (a shepherd), prepositional phrase for careful examination

This verbal noun appears in Ezekiel 34:12 in a simile: God will seek out his scattered sheep 'like a shepherd's searching of his flock' (kevaqarat ro'eh edro). The root 'baqar' means to seek, examine, or inspect carefully. The construction uses the prepositional ke- (like) with the feminine noun 'baqarah' (a seeking/examination). The image is of a shepherd carefully searching for and gathering scattered sheep, contrasting God's faithful shepherding with Israel's failed leaders.

(1×) A prepositional phrase meaning 'like the searching of' or 'like the examination of,' built from the verbal noun 'baqarah' (careful seeking/inspection). In Ezekiel 34:12, it modifies how God will search for his scattered flock—with the thoroughness of a shepherd inspecting and gathering his sheep. The root 'baqar' implies diligent, careful examination, not casual looking. Multilingual renderings (Como-inspección-de, like-searching-of, examiner) capture the intensity of purposeful, comprehensive searching for what is lost. GEOGRAPHY AND SPACE

en: like-searching-of | es: Como-inspección-de | fr: examiner | de: [כבקרת] Ezek 34:12

בִּקֹּרֶת H1244 N-fs (1×)

Inquiry, examination (possibly punishment after investigation), a hapax in Leviticus 19:20

This feminine noun appears only in Leviticus 19:20, in a law about a man who has relations with a betrothed slave woman. The text says 'there shall be biqqoret' (inquiry/punishment). BDB notes Jewish tradition understood this as 'scourging' (physical punishment), as reflected in the Vulgate and older translations. Modern scholars see it as 'inquiry' or 'investigation' to determine legal liability. The root 'baqar' means to examine or inspect, so the noun likely refers to a legal inquiry, though the exact penalty remains debated.

(1×) A feminine noun meaning 'inquiry' or 'examination,' appearing in the legal case of Leviticus 19:20 concerning a betrothed slave woman. The term derives from 'baqar' (to examine/investigate) and most likely refers to a judicial inquiry to establish facts and determine appropriate consequences. Jewish tradition interpreted it as corporal punishment (scourging), reflected in some translations (castigo, inquiry), but the core sense is investigative examination. The hapax nature and legal context create interpretive challenges about whether it names the inquiry process or its outcome. LOCUSTS AND SWARMS

en: inquiry | es: castigo | fr: inquiry | de: inquiry Lev 19:20

בָּקַשׁ H1245 V-Piel-Perf-3cp (225×)

To seek, search for, require, or entreat; the intensive Piel of active pursuit whether for persons, things, justice, or divine favor.

One of the most common verbs in the Hebrew Bible, baqash in the Piel conveys an intensive, purposeful seeking. It ranges from the concrete act of searching for lost donkeys (1 Sam 9:3) to the weighty demand of God requiring blood at a person's hand (Gen 9:5). The Arabic cognates talab and bahath capture this same spectrum from casual inquiry to urgent demand. In its petitionary sense, the word colors some of the most poignant prayers in Scripture, as when Ezra's company sought God through fasting (Ezra 8:21). The Pual passive completes the picture, describing what happens when the sought thing is investigated or searched out.

